Making firebombs

Two young women in Yamit, Occupied Sinai, who oppose Israel's withdrawal from the area, prepare firebombs as tension mounts in the settlement. The Israeli army today is expected to begin the eviction and evacuation of some 2,000 settlers and squatters.

Israeli troops begin evacuating Sinai town

YAMIT, Occupied Sinai (AP) — The Israeli army launched its massive evacuation operation in this Sinai town today and ran into furious opposition from shouting and weeping opponents of Israel's withdrawal from the desert peninsula.

The thousands of troops in Yamit were under orders to use utmost restraint, and there was no immediate attempt to force any of the 2,000 settlers and squatters to leave. One family was seen leaving voluntarily, but the rest of Yamit's residents were resisting and a few threw objects at troops and police.

In Jerusalem, Prime Minister Menachem Begin's Cabinet, assured by letters from both Egypt and the United States, declared that Israeli soldiers and civilians would be evacuated from Sinai by Sunday as agreed in the Israel-Egypt peace treaty.

At the designated hour for starting the evacuation, hundreds of settlers mounted rooftoops that were strewn with tires, clubs, stones and bottles.

They set fire to the tires and shouted at troops massing in the gardens below to get away.

Police that knocked on one door to serve an eviction notice had a bottle and handfuls of sand thrown at them.

The anti-withdrawal activists sent up a chant of prayers and bellowed at the troops over a loudspeaker:

"Don't do this. Let Jews live in the land of Israel."

In another development, Israeli jets struck at Palestinian targets in southern Lebanon, shattering a nine-monty-old cease-fire that had been mediated by the United States.

In Jerusalem, the Cabinet discussed the intense U.S.-Egyptian-Israeli diplomatic contacts over Israel's charges of Egyptian violations of the treaty, and Cabinet Secretary Dan Meridor then read to reporters a statement outlining Egyptian and U.S. reaffirmations of the Camp David accords.

Meridor said Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak wrote to Begin that Egypt would take steps to prevent treaty violations, end arms smuggling across Sinai to Palestinian terrorists in the Gaza Strip and negotiate to realize the Camp David plan for Palestinian autonomy in the West Bank and Gaza Strip. Israel had feared Egypt was shifting to advocacy of Palestinian independence, which was not mentioned in the peace treaty.

"In view of these facts, the government of Israel has decided that it shall on its part carry out all its commitments in accordance with the treaty of peace and will evacuate the Sinai of Israeli forces and civilians by April 25," Meridor said.

The Cabinet statement read by Meridor said a letter from President Reagan to Begin was "of great significance." Contents of the letter were not disclosed, but Israeli news reports said it reconfirmed the American commitment to the Camp David treaty.

The return of the Sinai to Egypt had appeared threatened last week when Israel claimed Egypt was violating the peace treaty. But since then there has been a steady shuttle of American, Egyptian and Israeli officials between Jerusalem and Cairo, carrying assurances and admonitions back and forth.

Begin also talked with relatives of a dozen extremists who have locked themselves in a Yamit bunker, threatening to commit suicide if the troops tried to remove them. No attempt to do so was expected until after the holdouts talked with their leader, Rabbi Meir Kahane, founder of the Jewish Defense League, who arrived today from New York.

In Yamit, soldiers ran a pipe from the Mediterranean, apparently intending to use jets of water to help carry out the forced evacuation. They climbed onto rooftops while settlers and squatters appealed to them over loudspeakers to disobey orders and let them stay.

Persons set worth of 'golden years'

part four

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

Are the years beyond 65 truly life's "golden years"? Or the "not-so-golden?"

It's a topic studied by social workers and psychologists, and yet the definitive answer seems to lie within the individual. In actuality, that period of life, like any other, is a blend of good and bad qualities, with one or the other often proving dominant.

Loneliness exists, for sure, when one spouse dies before another. But joys superceding any of those of past years also may surface.

The wonderful thing about growing old, says Mrs. J.D. Baskin, 87, of Midland, is "having gone through the part of life where responsibilities were heavy, and now going through the part where you can enjoy the fruits of your children and grandchildren."

To many elderly persons, family occupies a lofty place in their esteems. "I think family's just as important, and growing even more important all the time," said 88-year-old Beth Neil.

In a reversal of role responsibilities, as many as 80 percent of the elderly rely largely on their children for physical, financial or spiritual support. And if the time comes that a retirement home or nursing facility would provide

Clements focuses on Texas' economy, 'new federalism'

By LANA CUNNINGHAM

Keeping illegal aliens from crossing the border into Texas not only isn't a feasible idea, but is a practice that would hurt the state's booming economy, according to Gov. William Clements, who is seeking re-election to the post he nabbed four years ago out of the hands of Democratic challenger John Hill.

Clements was in Midland Tuesday afternoon for a press conference and a meeting with the editorial board of The Reporter-Telegram. Although he is being challenged by Duke Embs for the Republican nomination for governor in the May primary, his winning outcome appears inevitable.

While not campaigning actively until after the primaries, Clements told the media he didn't care which of the Democratic contenders gets the "black bean." Top three frontrunners in that race are Mark White, Buddy Temple and Bob Armstrong.

While praising Texas' economy, which Clements claimed is probably the strongest in the nation, he also fingered the soft spots and advocated a higher gasoline tax. But he denounced President Reagan's new federalism concept, saying that because Texas is skimming the crest of the economic wave it would have to pay a large share to fund other states' programs.

Armstrong sees 'sameness' among Democrats

The Democratic Party's candidates for the Texas governorship "basically (are) the same on issues...if you listen to what they say," candidate Bob Armstrong said moments after he had plopped down in the barber's chair.

Barber Carl Berneathy already had groomed the politician's wind-bown hair and gave him that ready-for-a-take look.

"My hair is not geared for the wind," Armstrong candidly told reporters and photographers, who focused on the candidate in the crowded Lone Star Barber Shop in downtown Midland on Tuesday.

"Best barber shop in Texas," Harris Kerr, State Democratic Party committeeman had said, after he had ushered Armstrong into the barber shop with Texana markings: A 12-foot high tin ceiling, posters of armadillos racing in an "Armadillos Alympics," an adobe edifice at Lajitas on the Rio Grande, a well-endowed cowgirl packing a six-shooter and a set of K2 skis, $2 shoe shines ($3 for boots) and $16 fancy haircuts.

Temple continues attacks on Clements, White

Democratic candidate for governor Buddy Temple continued his attacks on two of his opponents, incumbent Gov. Bill Clements and Attorney General Mark White, at a press conference Tuesday in Midland following a meeting of the Texas Railroad Commission, of which Temple is a member.

Temple denied the RRC meeting was scheduled in Midland to coincide with his campaign, calling it purely coincidental. It was the first such meeting in Midland since 1966.

Temple repeated his call for an administration that will focus on excellence in basic areas of public service — education, law enforcement, the Texas road system and a clean environment.

"Texans don't ask much from their state government, but what they do ask for, they want done right — without

Education leads topics in LWV forum

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The impending need for fresh water, quality education and fast-and-sure justice came to the fore Wednesday night in a candidates' forum sponsored by League of Women Voters on the Midland College campus.

"I'm very much for education," said San Angelo rancher Bill Sims, a Democratic candidate for state senator in the May 1 primary. "In fact," Sims said, "I majored in freshman English in three of those (state) schools."

In response to a question by Leaguer Kathleen Gilluly on his approach to education, Sims replied "We certainly have to pay teachers a living wage." He noted that he has a "sister who teaches."

Ernest Angelo Jr., a Midland petroleum engineer and former mayor who is unopposed for the Republican Party's nomination for state senator, said "Education is right at the top of the list" in priorities and takes up more than 50 percent of the Texas budget.

"I have a great admiration for and faith in teachers," said Angelo, who noted his father was a teacher and a professor, his sister teaches and his wife once taught school.

But Angelo said it would be an "oversimplification" to say that raising salaries alone would be a panacea to the woes in education. He said teachers need "to feel what they are doing is constructive."

"CERTAINLY, salaries ought to be commensurate with responsibities and duties, (but) it's going to take some tough leadership, tough decision-making" to bolster the quality in state education. Angelo said it's time to "stop lipping and start acting like" quality in education is paramount.

The two candidates, who were among a dozen contenders for local offices at the forum, pretty well agreed on the three most important issues in the state.

Angelo listed quality education, stringent anti-crime and anti-drunken driving efforts and a long-range water plan.

Angelo mentioned "two things" which are not now in the criminal-justice system: "sure and fast" justice. And he suggested he could bring not just adequate but "superiority representation" ("if that's a word") to state government.

Sims said he views water as the "No. 1 thing" among state issues.

"Certainly, if we don't have water, we're not going to have people...If we don't have water, we don't have anything."

On the issue of education, Sims said he agrees "100 percent" with Angelo. And on law enforcement, the Democrat said, "We must maintain order."

IN GIVING his stance on the "new federalism," Sims allowed: "First of all, we don't know what the new federalism is."

Angelo, however, was more definite. "I think the new federalism of President of Reagan offers great opportunities, (though) we don't know what's going to come from it..." In large measure, the new federalism calls for

Reagan preparing for talks with Pym

WASHINGTON (AP) — With a threatened military showdown between Argentina and Great Britain perhaps just a few days away, President Reagan is gathering his top advisers to search for ways of breaking the negotiating stalemate in the Falklands crisis.

Reagan called a meeting today with Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. and other National Security Council members to explore new ideas in preparation for Thursday's visit here of British Foreign Secretary Francis Pym.

British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher said Pym will be carrying counterproposals in response to an Argentine peace plan that Britain rejected Tuesday.

The gloomy atmosphere was underscored Tuesday night when Argentine Foreign Minister Nicanor Costa Mendez said his government had no plans for new concessions.

Unofficial estimates say the British task force, which set sail on April 5, could begin arriving over the weekend in the Falkland Islands area 250 miles east of Argentina's coastline. The British Defense Ministry has refused comment on the arrival plans of the armada.

Despite London's hostile attitude toward the Argentine proposals, there was unrest reported in the Argentine military over the concessions agreed to by Gen. Leopoldo Galtieri, Argentina's president.

An Argentine official, asking not to be identified, said Galtieri "cannot offer any more."

Argentina's military junta issued a communique early today saying it is ready and willing to negotiate, but that current negotiations "have as their final and irrenounceable objective the consolidation and exercise of Argentine sovereignty over the islands, and the recognition of that sovereignty."

The communique also said it is willing to consider the wishes of the islanders, but said the "recovery" of the islands was backed by all Argentines.

"The real thing, the big thing, the thing we cannot and we won't move from is sovereignty on the islands," Costa Mendez told CBS News in Buenos Aires.

In London, meanwhile, Mrs. Thatcher told the House of Commons that the British fleet "continues steadily on its way" to the Falklands.

"We have to be true to our objective....," she said. "The Argentine proposals at present before us fall short in some important respects."

Asked whether Britain is "absolutely determined" to remove the 9,000 Argentine troops and their flag from the islands, Mrs. Thatcher said, "That is still our aim."

She said her government hopes to achieve that goal through a combination of diplomacy and the threat of military force against Argentina.

For his part, Reagan appealed to both sides Tuesday to exercise restraint in the crisis. Under questioning by reporters, he said it would be a "terrible thing" for him to say which side the United States would support in a shooting war.

Reagan spoke after Haig briefed him on his four-day visit to Buenos Aires.

Argentina, meanwhile, won diplomatic points in the Organization of American States Tuesday, offsetting somewhat the impact of an April 3 U.N. Security Council resolution demanding that Argentina withdraw its forces from the islands.

By an 18 to 0 vote, the OAS agreed to go along with Argentina's request for an OAS foreign ministers meeting next Monday to consider invoking the hemispheric self-defense Rio Treaty against Great Britain. The United States, Colombia and Trinidad abstained in that vote, and nine of the 30 OAS member nations could not vote because they never ratified the treaty.

Under provisions of the 1947 treaty, Argentina could seek diplomatic, economic and military sanctions against Great Britain.

But OAS analysts said they believe Argentina probably will limit itself to seeking OAS condemnation of Britain's threat to retake the islands by force. The purpose would be to pressure the British into a more flexible stand on the sovereignty issue.

William Middendorf, the U.S. ambassador to the OAS, said the United States questions whether Argentina's proposal for a foreign ministers conference "is either necessary or appropriate and whether, therefore, it may be appropriate to a peaceful settlement."

Application of the Rio Treaty at this point, he said, could put the activities of the OAS in an "unhelpful confrontational light."

Ford sees no choice for U.S.

HOUSTON (AP) — The United States will have to support Great Britain's bid to recapture its territory from Argentina if the Falkland Islands crisis cannot be resolved, former President Gerald Ford says.

Ford, speaking to reporters here Tuesday shortly after President Reagan's news conference, said the United States has "no choice" but to back its European ally.

"If our attempts to reconcile the differences fail ... there is no question our tilt has to be with Great Britian," Ford said.

Asked how the U.S. should respond if an inter-American defense pact was invoked, Ford said the agreement could be sidestepped because Argentina violated international law by invading the islands.

The Organization of American States voted Tuesday to convene a special meeting of foreign ministers next week to consider invoking the 1947 Rio Treaty — the western hemisphere equivalent of NATO.

The OAS Permanent Council acted at the request of Argentina, which said a British naval blockade around the Falklands and a threat to retake the islands by force represented a danger to the peace and security of the hemisphere.

Midlander suing Bell for service trouble

Midland lawyer Allen R. McFall, who contends that Southwestern Bell Telephone Co. tarried in installing telephones in his new place of business and in the meantime failed to implement a call-forwarding service, is suing the company for at least $15,000.

The case, which was filed March 19 in Midland's 238th State District Court, this week was transferred to U.S. Federal Court here on the motion of the defendant, Southwestern Bell.

McFall alleges that on March 9 he went to Bell's business office in Midland to request transfer of his business line to a new location, was told "there was no one he could talk to in person," and instead "had to call another telephone number" for service but had no success; the line "was continuously busy."

However, McFall says in the suit, the next day he reached a Bell agent, who agreed to have telephone service at the new business location by March 17 and in the meantime agreed to have his business calls forwarded to his home telephone. "The call-forwarding service was never provided," McFall claims.

"The same agent...said that an unreasonable and exorbitant charge would be applied for moving a phone," McFall says in the petition. Nevertheless, the laywer "agreed to pay this exorbitant fee."

Contrary to Bell's agreement, McFall contends, the new business connection was not made on March 17. Bell explained that "the man scheduled to install the phones was ill," McFall says he found out when he called Bell on that morning to confirm the new hook-up. But Bell, he says, told him that telephone service would be connected "late in the day or the next day...."

McFall says that a Bell installer did not come by the office that afternoon, though his secretary the next morning found a note which said that a Bell installer had stopped by the office at 4:45 p.m. on March 17 but that no one was in. "This note was a lie," says McFall's petition.

By not having office telephone service in mid-March, McFall claims he suffered "damages of $450" each day he was without telephone service, that his fiduciary duty to his clients in both civil and criminal matters was breached, and that his "peace and tranquility" was disturbed when clients, unable to reach him at the office, called him at home at nights.

McFall is seeking $5,000 in actual damages and asked that damages be trebled due to the "arbitrary and capricious" nature of Bell.

Clements talks special tax session

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements says he will discuss the possibility of a special legislative session to deal with state property tax when he meets next Monday with Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby and Speaker Bill Clayton.

The tax is the subject of a court fight initiated by Midwestern State University. Officials at the Wichita Falls university want the state to collect the tax, which has gone uncollected since 1979, when the Legislature tried to get rid of it.

Clements emphasized Tuesday that his meeting with Hobby and Clayton would be a "preliminary discussion."

"There is nothing inevitable about a special session. I have made no decisions. But if, how and when, the court should reinstate the 10-cent tax, I am going to call a special session," he said.

Jim Kaster, the governor's legislative aide, said an adverse ruling in the suit scheduled for trial in June in an Austin court could leave the state with a $420 million tax bill and prompt the governor to call a special session.

"The special session could pass a constitutional amendment that would be on the November ballot to keep any such tax from being collected," he said.

The suit, which has been pending since 1981, challenged the right of the 1979 Legislature to pass a state law reducing the state property tax from 10 cents per $100 property valuation to .0001 cents.

Toxic shock syndrome Odessa suit subject

A 20-year-old Odessa woman who claims she suffered toxic shock syndrome (TSS) in 1980 following her regular use of the Playtex tampon has filed a lawsuit in federal court in Midland for monetary damages against five companies, including International Playtex Inc., manufacturer of the tampon.

The woman, Shari Lynn Holliman Davis, is alleging that she "experienced nausea and severe abdominal cramping, along with high (105 to 106 degrees Fahrenheit) fever and diarrhea which caused her to be hospitalized" for 20 days in April 1980.

Ms. Davis, a secretary, also alleges she suffered "exfoliating dermatitis" (flaking of skin) of the arms and feet and, following her hospitalization, experienced a loss of hair. She alleges that the tampons were in a "defective condition" and that the label on the tampon box contained "no warning of dangers from use of the product."

Co-plaintiff in the suit is her husband, Steve Davis, whose damages, if any, are not mentioned in the original petition in the Midland-Odessa Division of federal court.

Defendants in the suit are International Playtex Inc. of Dover, Del.; Esmark Co. of Chicago; Procter & Gamble Co. of Cincinnati, Ohio, the Procter & Gamble Distributing Co., and Procter & Gamble Paper Products. The petition says that the tampons were manufactured, marketed and/or distributed by the defendants.

Attorney for plaintiffs, who seek a jury trial, is Bob Gibbins of Austin. Attorney for Procter & Gamble is Stephen B. Tatem Jr. of El Paso. International Playtex, which is an Esmark Company, is being represented by the law firm of Olwine, Connelly, Chase, O'Donnell & Weyher.

The defendants deny any liability in the case and contend that "any injuries or damages sustained by" Mrs. Davis were caused by her "misuse or abuse of" the tampons, or by "a totally unforeseeable disease or infection" or by an "idiosyncratic reaction" and not by Playtex.

The amount of damages sought in the case by Mr. and Mrs. Davis was not mentioned in the petition for a trial.

O'Neill not so sure about compromises

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite President Reagan's declaration that he will "go the extra mile" to reach a budget compromise with Congress, House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. says he has yet to find "any give" in Reagan's position.

"The president certainly has an idea that we're a lot closer than I believe we are," O'Neill, D-Mass., said Tuesday after a flurry of apparently non-productive budget activity on Capitol Hill and at the White House.

"It's apparent to me that he (Reagan) thinks the give is only on our side; he doesn't see the give on his own side," O'Neill said.

Reagan met at the White House with Republican congressional leaders Tuesday and then telephoned O'Neill to say he hoped administration and congressional negotiators could reach a 1983 budget compromise.

"It's my fervent plea and hope that from these meetings there will soon come a balanced, bipartisan package that will help to revive our economy," Reagan later told reporters. "I know of nothing that would be a greater tonic for the economy right now."

Republican leaders had earlier made optimistic statements about the progress of the budget talks, which are expected to continue today.

But a negotiating session Tuesday at the White House — which had been touted as climactic in the search for a bipartisan compromise — apparently fizzled.

One House Democratic source, who asked not to be quoted by name, called it "a non-session." Wwithout a break soon, the talks "could degenerate into an endless dance marathon," he said.

O'Neill, reacting to Reagan's telephone call and statements, said, "The president has taken the first step — he has admitted the need for change. Now, we want him to take the second step — to support a program that is fair and puts people back to work."

A number of Democrats have expressed concern that the administration is not sincere about the budget negotiations, preferring instead to maneuver the Democrats into a bad political position as the fall elections approach.

"There's no question in my mind that's the object and intent of what they are trying to do," O'Neill said Tuesday.

Reagan had indicated Tuesday that he would consider tax increases as part of a package to reduce budget deficits, but he remained firmly opposed to changes in the individual and business tax cuts enacted last year.

Reagan said he told the GOP leaders and O'Neill that "so long as we can reach consensus on a budget plan that is balanced and commands bipartisan support, I'm personally prepared to go the extra mile."

The president's remarks were his most conciliatory to date.

O'Neill, however, said the budget negotiators "have talked about many things but we haven't found any give" on the part of the president.

Water, sewer bonds on CRMWD meeting agenda

BIG SPRING — Capital expenditures approaching $100,000 and the issuance of water and sewer bonds for the cities of Midland and Odessa will be considered by directors of the Colorado River Municipal Water District when they meet here Thursday in district headquarters.

The board is due to act on a requested contract with Midland for a $23 million water and sewer expansion issue and will receive an initial request from Odessa that is expected to exceed that figure substantially.

Of the $23 million in Midland's request, $3 million will go to specific water and sewer expansion projects. The remaining $20 million will be used to build and install an effluent disposal project that involves piping treated sewage to J. "Timber" Floyd's land southeast of the city and using it for irrigation. This proposal is awaiting approval from the Texas Water Commission in Austin.

Such issues are permitted under the revised district act and are without liability to the district.

Directors will consider asking for bids for a heavy duty truck which may be used for transporting heavy equipment. Estimates are that the unit may cost upwards of $50,000. Appropriation of $45,000 from the Contingency and Improvement Funds will be sought for drilling an additional well in the Ward County well field. Authority also will be sought for drawing on this fund for major equipment purchases and repairs without being charged as budgetary operating items.

The board will be asked to consider the purchase of a 4.54-acre tract of land in Midland County which has been used for booster pump facilities.

Other agenda items include acting on a request by Sayres Operating Company to reduce its daily contract quantity of water for secondary recovery purposes from 6,000 to 3,000 barrels a day; granting an easement for power lines and considering a lease for a concession operation at Lake E.V. Spence.

Judge recesses gun trial

HOUSTON (AP) — A dissatisfied judge has given prosecutors until Monday to produce better evidence in the trial of two men charged in an alleged gun-running scheme.

U.S. District Judge John Singleton recessed the trial Tuesday to allow prosecutors to produce additional evidence proving the government's claim that the defendants were not licensed to sell weapons.

Joe Collins, 57, of Houston, and Ronald Mertens, 31, of Ottawa, Canada, are on trial for conspiring to sell $3 million in arms to federal agents posing as Central American guerrillas.

Earlier in the trial, prosecutors introduced a certificate showing that neither Collins nor Mertens were licensed to sell weapons during 1981 when the alleged plot occurred.

However, Singleton said, the government had not established the two men were intending to sell arms illegally.

He also expressed doubt the government has proved its claim that the defendants conspired to import arms into the country.

"I'm having difficulty finding an agreement to bring guns into the United States," the judge said.

returning "programs back to the states." He said that "waste, duplication and fraud, you name it,...corruption" would be cut out of government" in returning to the States' Rights concept.

Another question attacked by the senatorial candidates was their views on a law to prohibit the use of fresh water in secondary recovery of oil. "I don't think it's as simple a question as the person who asked it thinks it is.

"A blanket state law to prohibit fresh water in secondary oil recovery would, I think, be a mistake.... I would not be in favor of it at this time."

Sims said he agrees with Angelo that the fresh-water issue is "complicated," but fresh water "has to be protected to the utmost."

"I would love to see a law passed that it (fresh water) could not be used unless nothing else was available.... I think (however) it's a luxury we can no longer afford."

In response to their senatorial committee preferences, the candidates, who are seeking to succeed land commissioner aspirant Pete Snelson, were in virtual agreement: natural resources and finances. Angelo said he would be "happy" with any committee assignment and "would work to become an expert."

STATE REP. Tom Craddick, who is unopposed in his bid for re-election, said "the major item" before the Texas Legislature is "going to be money." And the dropping oil prices will convert to a proportionate decline in state revenue and possibly could lead to a state tax bill, opined Craddick.

Candidates and comments elicited from them include:

—Vann Culp, presiding judge of the 238th State District Court, on need for a district court administrator: "We have a court coordinator, Roberta Hurt, who basically does those things an administrator would do." He noted the recent assignment of secretaries to the three state district judges for Midland County and "wonder now how we did anything without a secretary." The secretaries were authorized by the Commissioners' Court.

—Angelo on his involvement in the private sector: "I think that it's an asset." Angelo said the old concept of a citizen-politician, as opposed to the full-time politician, is a "whale of a lot better" than career politicians who depend on re-election for their livelihood and well being. "We have the best of both worlds in Texas, and I want to keep it that way."

—Win Brown, Precinct 4 county commissioner, on county ordinances: "We (commissioners' courts in Texas) are right at the bottom (47th in the nation) in authority.... Right now, we can control rabies, and that's a about it." However, the Republican commissioner said the county is monitoring rural housing developments and attending problems, such as drainage, sewage, water and roads.

—Brown on a civil defense plan for Midland: "I think it has almost flopped on its face..... The general public, as a group, is going to have to be educated on where to go" in case of a disaster.

—Charlie Welch, a Democrat who is county commissioner of Precinct 2, on the civil defense plan: "The (mock) situation carried out very well when you (Angelo) were mayor...I could certainly support that (plan).

—C. Wallace Craig, Republican candidate for Precinct 2 commissioner, on the plan: "I don't know that much about the specifics." But he recalled the underground bomb shelter trend of the 1960s and its demise. "...We forgot it (stress on civil defense) until the next crisis. I think it's a serious enough matter that needs on-going consideration."

—Pat Cobb, Republican candidate for district clerk, on problems in the clerk's office: "The problems that I see are problems in personnel training in specific fields." She recommended specialization among the criminal and civil deputy clerks "rather than at-random" training.

—Vivian Wood, another GOP district clerk candidate: "I think the way to correct (problems) is cross-training" and somehow to create "more pride in the office as a whole."

—Madge Wallis, district clerk who is running for re-election on the Democratic Party ticket: "I do cross-train." She gave a breakdown of her deputies and their general assignments. The district clerk said that her office is in "dire need of ladies" to work in the criminal areas of the office.

Clements focuses on Texas' economy

The illegal alien, "is a very complex issue," he said. In answer to criticism from some of the Democratic opponents about his plan, Clements replied that the three top contenders "could be rolled up together and they wouldn't know what they're talking about." And whoever wins the primary he hopes will make illegal aliens an issue, said Clements.

Despite his efforts to get a handle on the situation, Clements said he realizes there isn't a universal attitude toward the illegal aliens.

"IT'S A HIGHLY sensitive, complex issue, and there are varying views in this across Texas," he noted.

Clements has met several times with Portillo to draw up the plan, and has been instrumental in organizing two border conferences involving four U.S. and six Mexican govenors.

"For the first time, we have the Mexican cooperation. The U.S. will issue a temporary work visa and Mexico will institute a system of exit visas. This is the first time Mexico has tried discipline," Clements told The Reporter-Telegram.

Keeping out the illegal alien "would not be desireable. Our Texas economy needs those people in certain disciplined numbers. That's why we need these work visas...to get some control on the system. By whatever means you block the border — a fence or a wall — you would have the construction industry in a terrible state. Highway construction would suffer. The restaurant industry and Texas agriculture would suffer. These people are performing functions that Texans won't do."

And these illegal aliens in the construction jobs are making on the average $1 an hour higher than mininum wage, he said.

The first task to a successful illegal alien program is to get a handle on how many undocumented workers are living in the U.S. While the federal government claims the number is about 700,000 to 900,000, Clements pegged it at 3 million.

"The important thing is that you're not going to stop it."

Even with the undocumented workers crossing the border illegally, Texas unemployment rate rose in the past year from 4.6 percent to only 5.5 percent, he said.

THE UNEMPLOYMENT TIDE washing over the rest of the country seems to have been shunted around Texas. "Any able-bodied person who wants to work in Texas can work. But there are some soft spots."

Areas feeling the seepage of the bad economic waters are:

—Electronics industry. "It's suffering from Japanese exports."

—Agriculture. "Farmers and ranchers probably are suffering as a group more than any other group."

Despite these indentions in the overall economic index, Clements said that the state should pull in an all-time record of tax receipts by Aug. 31, 1982.

"We have the strongest economy of any state in the country," he said in a matter-of-fact manner. "In Texas, we have a matrix of pieces that fit together and makes for a very, very good environmental condition."

As an example of that good environment, he cited no state income tax for corporations or individuals and the lowest gasoline tax of any state in the country.

However, what he praised as Texas "quality of life," could be destroyed in the near future without a water plan and some way to finance it.

"WE'RE LITERALLY in a water crisis right now because of the lead time it takes on some projects. For a reservoir, it takes 25 years from concept to completion," and that would put Texas past the year 2000. "By the year 2000 we'll have a very serious crisis.

During the next 20 years, Texas' population is expected to jump 50 percent from its current 14 million up to 21 million and demand for water will have to be met, according to the Republican.

A water plan on the constitutional amendments ballot last November was rebuffed by the voters, but Clements attributed it to the financing portion of the legislation. "We must convince all the people of Texas that water isn't just a High Plains or West Texas problem. It's an urban, metropolitan problem. Houston, for example, has the worst water problem in the state," he said.

Since the water bill's defeat, Clements assigned a water task force and natural resources committee to draw up another proposal. Jointly, the groups will "evolve a long-range water plan. They will come up with a set of recommendations that will include a financing plan." And he is confident the 1983 session of the State Legislature will adopt the plan.

Although he cited the lowest gasoline tax in the country as one of the state's attributes, Clements later admitted it might be a liability for the state Department of Highways and Public Transportation.

The 4-cent-a-gallon tax has been attached to gasoline for over 30 years now, he said. And while the price of gasoline increased, the tax has remained the same with consumption dropping. Thus, the Highway Department finds itself on the short end of the revenue stick.

CLEMENTS WAS CRITICAL of some Democrats' proposal to make the tax a percentage of the price of gasoline, saying, "The comptroller's office said gas stations don't want to collect a percentage of the tax. It needs to be a fixed amount but where it can be reviewed every year."

Even if the tax was raised by 3 cents, he said, Texas would barely be catching up with the revenues needed by the department. Each penny, he explained, brings in an estimated $100 million. And last year, the governor had to dip into the general revenue budget to the $300 million mark level to supplement the highway department.

A 20-year plan was devised five years ago for the Highway Department and for the past two years, it has been deficient, said the governor. "The intent of the tax is a user tax; it's not fulfilling that purpose. So, I would be in favor of raising the gasoline tax. You have to go up 3 cents just to get even."

While he backs such a move, Clements said he has tried to get such legislation considered at the 1979 and 1981 sessions, but legislators knocked it down.

"The problem is getting it through the Legislature; you need to make sure your state legislator represents you. They consider this (raising the gasoline tax) pure poison."

When Clements first heard of President Reagan's plan to turn block grants over to states to run their own social programs, the governor said he was in favor of the idea. But he soon realized that Texas' flourishing economy was being eyed by the federal government as a means of funding other states' programs, and for that reason he is wary of the new federalism program being written by Congress.

TO DATE, nothing concrete has appeared on how the program should be handled.

"President Reagan put forth a framework, or my word for it is concept. We want to decentralize the federal government and its programs and give states the responsibility for them."

During a national governors conference, he recalled, several of the state's top leaders were skeptical of the idea, saying they wanted to be assured the plan also meant less regulatory harassment from the federal government.

In reviewing how the program would be funded, Clements used the term "fiscal capacity," explaining it's the method used historically by Congress to figure in each state's ability, or capacity, to pay.

This new federalism, he said, will be funded "by the Windfall Profits Tax on oil and it means a continuation of that tax. Texas already is paying a third of the tax."

Continuing, Clements pointed to Texas receiving 40 cents out of every dollar it sends to Washington on the federal employees tax and 57 cents returned on every dollar sent as its share of the gas tax.

"I have a very damn dim view of it," he said of the plan for funding new federalism.

"It's a great idea. Philosophically, I agree totally. We can better run our own programs and fund more recipients. But we don't want to pay for the national program, too."

The barber shop, where traditionally political woes and solutions are aired, became a campaign platform for Democratic Party gubernatorial candidate Bob Armstrong. He was given a touch-up but no trim before cameras clicked and reeled in a rush-in-and-sit-down press conference in the Lone Star Barber Shop on Tuesday.

Temple attends RRC meeting here

"We can have good roads, good schools, clean water and clean air and less crime, and we can do it without bankrupting the taxpayer," Temple said.

His programs would be financed by the existing tax base, without any new taxes, he added.

Early projections show that in the next biennium, the state will have an additional $4 to $5 billion in revenue from normal economic growth, he said. If the price of oil suffers a serious decline, however, it will have a major impact on state revenues, Temple said, predicting the price eventually will rise.

Temple said White, who is also seeking the gubernatorial nomination from the Democratic Party, has a record of neglect and poor performance. "Texans are accustomed to, and deserve, better legal representation.

"He's spent nearly $1.5 million — four times as much as the man he succeeded — on outside legal counsel to do the job for which he was elected. He hired a Dallas attorney, who represents car dealers, to try to stop General Motors from selling cars to Texans at cheaper prices," through the rebate system.

Temple read a copy of a letter written by White to a consumer in Three Rivers, in which, according to Temple, White mixed up the roles of the RRC and the Texas Public Utilities Commission.

"I think it tells you something about the type of representation we're getting from the attorney general's office, when he doesn't even know who regulates utilities in this state."

Temple called the 32 percent increase in crime in Texas during the last four years "not acceptable." He termed Republican Governor Clements' "catchy anti-crime slogans" inadequate, saying they will not take the place of Temple's proposals "for more prosecutors, more police on the streets and more jails to lock up criminals."

Temple said public interest in the gubernatorial campaign has picked up since the first of April now that local city and school board elections have been held, and that voters are turning their attention to statewide races. He predicted that widespread voter concern over basic state serviees will benefit his campaign and spell defeat for Clements in the fall. Temple said the polls show that he will do well enough in the May 1 primary to face White in a run-off election afterwards.

Elderly individual decides worth of golden years

"Many of us here have children living (in Midland), and that helps," said Lila Carter, 86, a resident at Trinity Towers retirement center in Midland. "I'm happier now than I've ever been in my life. I have the greatest people around me I've ever known. Midland has the greatest people."

No longer shackled by overwhelming responsibilities, other aging persons sometimes share her enthusiasm and feel they are indeed in the midst of the "golden years."

"Life's beautiful," said 85-year-old Ethel Pyeatt, who moved to Midland from Dallas two years ago to be near her daughter and grandchildren. "When you get to this age in life you're happy. You get out of it what you put in it."

But the picture isn't all rosy, for anyone, for most of the elderly have seen their share of hardship and tragedy.

"I'm happier than I've been since I lost my husband," said Oklahoma City native Lula Duncan with a tinge of submerged tragedy in her voice. She came to Midland because a daughter resides in the city.

Lack of burdening responsibilty makes for pleasant latter years, says J.A. Davidson, 81, a resident at Trinity Towers. "I never had so much fun in my life," he said. "I can do what I want to. This is just headquarters. I can get up and walk where I want whenever I get ready." A native of Fort Collins, Colo., he was lured to the Tall City by the prescence of a daughter.

While some elderly persons may yearn for the days when they were younger, a surprising number seem entirely satisfied with their state of being. "I'm proud to be where I'm at (in life)," said John Bussey of Midland. "I've been here 94 years and I learn something new every day."

But 85-year-old Ruby Considine, like many others, does not see in the years of retirement the "golden years," not when physical ailments and personal tragedies strike.

"I've been in the hospital a lot," she said. "I've been in Texas 11 years and in the hospital four...I lost my husband three years ago, and that makes it hard to cope. That's why I say they're not golden. There's good and bad."

But then she reflected positively on the era of life in which she is passing.

"There's lots of beauty in the world," she noted. "That's what you've got to look at, what you should look at."

In many nursing facilities and retirement facilities, care is taken to provide residents with recreational activities to keep them occupied, interested in life, and to stimulate them mentally and physically. Three residents of Trinity Towers feel that such recreational programs indeed lead to betterment of their lives.

"We have lots of things that older people like to do," said Beth Neill.

Agnes Davis, 78, agreed. "They really try to make us feel at home," she said.

Hooper Sanders, an octogenarian, took a philosophical viewpoint. "When you get the right age, you gotta be somewhere," he said. "It's nice to have a place like Trinity Towers."

And what does or doesn't the elderly have compared to those younger?

"We've got everything everyone else does — except insurance for tomorrow," he said.

But, when reminded no one else ever has that guarantee either, he nodded his head.

Armstrong sees 'sameness' on issues

had allowed even before Armstrong and Kerr had arrived late due to Armstrong's airplane bucking headwinds in the flight for a noon-time press conference. "This is the best barber shop in town."

Whether it was or not wasn't the issue.

What was at issue was Armstrong, the candidate who says that his actions during his 12 years as Texas Land Commissioner and as a three-term Texas legislator before that are witness to his ability in the political arena.

Armstrong is going up against five other Democrats, including Attorney General Mark White and Texas Railroad Commissioner Buddy Temple, for the party's gubernatorial nomination in the May 1 primary. Winner of that contest will challenge the Republican Party's nominee, who likely will be Gov. William P. "Bill" Clements Jr., who is running against Duke Embs for the GOP nomination.

"I think we ought to have a governor we can be proud of..., one we don't have to apologize for," said Armstrong.

Armstrong, a lawyer-rancher, to date has said he is the leading choice for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination among newspaper endorsements. He boasts of seven endorsements and promptly noted that White has 1½ and Temple one.

And a sampling of absentee voters indicates that Armstrong is the No. 1 choice for governor among Democrats. "They like my records; they like what I have done (as Land Commissioner). I seem to be doing very well."

Armstrong, though obviously rushed in trying to puddle hop across West Texas in his vote-seeking tour, noted the symbolism of holding the press confernce in the barber shop.

"There's a lot of politics talked in barber shops amongst real folks," he said.

Armstrong, who as a legislator was cited by a colleague as a man who "won't compromise principle," said that his record as land commissioner backs up his promises to perform well as governor.

"If you listen to what they (the other candidates) say, we're all basically the same on issues," he said. "But look at my record."

Among Armstrong's "proud record" as a Texas legislator and as land commissioner included his fight against a sales tax on food, legislation to reform the bail-bond system, raising law enforcement standards, increasing revenue of the General Land Office from $62 million to $778 million, tripling the Permanent School Fund, developing prudent land management policies and lobbying Congress to exempt state lands from the Windfall Profits Tax.

"It's how we serve (that counts)," Armstrong said, "not what we say on the issues."

Chance of rain through Thursday

A 30 percent chance exists tonight and a 20 percent chance Thursday for rainfall to end the long dry spell in the Permian Basin.

Thus far, 1982 has yielded only 0.59 of an inch — while the average precipitation through March is 1.74 inches and through April, 2.59 inches.

Colder temperatures are expected tonight, while conditions should continue to be cool on Thursday. The mercury tonight should fall to the middle 40s and warm up to the low 60s on Thursday.

Tuesday's high of 63 was far below the record for the date of 93 set in 1964, while the low of 48 was 13 degrees above the record set in 1933.

Winds are expected to be easterly at 10-15 miles per hour tonight.

Woman complains of wallet theft

In a theft complaint, Eva Chandler of 1712 Navajo said a young man stole her billfold from the trunk of her car while she was getting gas at a North Big Spring Street convenience store Tuesday. Ms. Chandler told officers the man grabbed the billfold, which contained $100 in cash, and fled on foot. He was described as white, having bushy, dirty blond hair and a two- or three-day growth of beard. He was 18-20 years old, about 5-foot-10 and weighed 160 pounds.

Vera Loche of 1401 W. Kentucky Ave. reported the theft of $955 worth of jewelry from her home. The theft occurred sometime Monday.

A new house under construction at 1706 E. Pecan sustained $4,000 worth of damage Monday when someone entered it and kicked in several walls and cabinets, police were told.

Robert Smith Jr. of 2438 Whitmire told officers $800 worth of tools was stolen from his unlocked van while it was parked near his residence Tuesday.

And an employee of El Paisano Apts., 2400 Whitmire, said assorted tools, including an air compressor worth $1,330, were stolen from an office and storage room of the complex sometime Tuesday. Also taken were the keys to 17 apartments.

Police say no suspects

ODESSA — Police here reported they have no suspects in the murder of a Permian Mall cleaning woman whose body was found in a culvert behind the mall about 1 p.m. Monday.

The woman, 65-year-old Velma Nessett, lived in an apartment near the mall and did not show up for work Monday, according to police. Her throat had been cut and her undergarments were in disarray, indicating she may have been the victim of a sexual assault. No motive has been established yet, however.

LIFE IN THESE UNITED STATES

Cacciatore, anyone?

Special from Reader's Digest

We live in the Philadelphia area and recently entertained vacationing relatives with tours of Valley Forge, historic old Philadelphia, Brandywine Park and Washington Crossing.

I grabbed a casserole out of the freezer before the last day's tour and asked if chicken cacciatore sounded okay to everyone for dinner that night.

"Cacciatore," my husband intoned in his best tour-guide manner, "that was an old Revolutionary pastime."

One spring, we traveled to California to visit our daughter and to meet her second husband. On our return, friends asked how we liked our new son-in-law. My husband said, "Just fine — but we almost lost him one night." Shocked by the apparent near-tragedy, one friend said, "How dreadful! What happened?"

Replied my husband, "He spanked our granddaughter."

I was one of 200 people waiting to depart on an 11 a.m. flight from New York to Jamaica. Just before boarding time, departure was postponed several hours because of problems with the airplane. The disappointed passengers endured the wait only to be greeted by another postponement, then another. Finally, after a 24-hour delay, the long-awaited boarding announcement came.

As we passed through the security check, a passenger in front of me remarked, "You don't need to check us for weapons. If we'd had any, we'd have used them before now!"

At age 64, Uncle Wally had to have a wisdom tooth removed. What was supposed to be a simple extraction proved to be a four-hour ordeal. As my uncle, pale and a bit unsteady, prepared to leave the dentist's office, the attractive young receptionist expressed her concern. "Would you like me to walk home with you?" she asked.

He considered the offer carefully. "Not today," he said. "But maybe sometime when I'm feeling better."

Our family drove cross-country from Brooklyn, N.Y., to El Paso, Tex. The farther we got from home, the more intrigued we became with the sound of regional twangs and drawls — accents we had heard before only on TV westerns.

We never realized how strange we sounded until we stopped in Tulsa, Okla., to check into a motel. The woman behind the counter stared at us and said, "You must be from New York City. You sound just like those comedians on TV." Then she added in amazement, "I never knew real people talked that way!"

My fiberglass sailboat had a long white scratch on its blue hull. I spent hours filling the groove with special putty, sanding the damaged area and mixing paint until it approximated the original color. The match wasn't perfect, but from 20 feet away, the scar was almost invisible. At 10 feet, you could see it if you knew where to look. At five, the job seemed definitely amateurish.

I sought a neighbor's reassurance. "Well," he finally said, "the man who notices that has something else he ought to be doing."

Answering the doorbell one evening, I found my elderly neighbor standing in the hall with a piece of cake on a plate. "My wife is 86 years old today," he announced. "She wants you to have some of her birthday cake." I thanked him and sent my best wishes to his wife.

About 10 minutes later, he was back, wearing a sheepish grin. "Margaret," he said, "my wife is only 85 today."

Ship-overhaul policy controversial

By L. EDGAR PRINA
Copley News Service

WASHINGTON — The Navy wants Presidential Counselor Edwin Meese III to know that if homeport companies are to win greater numbers of ship-overhaul contracts they should increase capital investment and improve their facilities.

A memorandum proposed for the signature of the Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger stressed that the Navy has three main objectives in assigning overhaul work:

1. A quality job completed on schedule and within budget.

2. The job should be performed in or near the ship's homeport to promote the welfare and morale of the ship's crew.

3. Award of the contract should "tend to support and invigorate" the industrial base.

MEESE WROTE Weinberger a memo dated March 31 in which he noted several concerns — presumably voiced by Reps. Duncan Hunter, R-Coronado, and Bill Lowery, R-San Diego — about Navy ship overhaul policy. He requested a draft response. It could not be learned immediately whether he had received one.

A controversy over Navy policy flared open last month when the Navy awarded a contract for the overhaul of the San Diego-based destroyer Henry B. Wilson to a Portland, Ore., firm despite much lower bids from two San Diego yards.

The proposed memorandum to Meese explained that the trend since 1979 has been that more ships were being overhauled and repaired in homeports than elsewhere.

"The Navy is making every effort to continue this trend consistent with the priorities detailed above, but certain factors affect the Navy's ability to limit solicitations for overhaul contracts exclusively to the homeport areas," it said.

"Among these factors are concentrations of ships in a few homeports to reduce costs of ownership, the growing number of complex combatant ships being scheduled for overhaul in the private sector for the first time, the lack of capital facilities and trained work forces in some of our homeport areas to handle the increased complexity of these ships, and the serious continuing deterioration of our shipbuilding industrial base."

After noting that Norfolk was the largest homeport, with 112 ships based there compared to "over 100" in the San Diego area, the memo said local firms in the Virginia city were "pursuing vigorous capital improvement and facility expansion" and that the Navy was encouraged by it.

"The situation in San Diego, however, is not as encouraging," it added. "Only one shipyard, National Steel and Shipbuilding Company, has any appreciable industrial facilites, and even theirs do not include a drydock large enough to accommodate many of the ships expected to be overhauled.

"The other repair and overhaul contractors must use Navy facilities, including both Navy pier space and the Navy's single drydock in the area."

The memo went on to say that San Diego ship repair firms have "indicated an interest" in making capital improvements and expansions and that the Navy welcomes any such initiatives.

For fiscal 1981, Norfolkewport News got $338 million worth of Navy ship repair work while San Diego received $162 million, both figures for the private sector. The Navy expects to award more than 85 overhaul contracts in the private sector in fiscal years 1982-83, the memo said.

SAN ANGELO — Services for Bobby Jean Williams, 54, of Brighton, Colo., and sister of John M. Pierson of Midland, will be at 2 p.m. Thursday in Johnson's Funeral Home Chapel with the Rev. Grady Peters officiating. Burial will be in Fairmount Cemetery.

She died April 15 in Denver, Colo.

She was born Sept. 2, 1927 in San Angelo, where she was married to J. L. "Sonny" Williams Sept. 13, 1943. She was a member of Trinity United Methodist Church. She moved to Brighton in 1961.

Other survivors include her husband, three sons, a daughter, her mother, two sisters, two brothers and seven grandchildren.

Truman W. Gordin

Services for Truman W. Gordin, 55, of 4303 Nelson Drive, will be at 11 a.m. Thursday in the Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home chapel. Burial will be in Resthaven Memorial Park.

He was born May 6, 1926, in Coffeyville, Kan. He lived his early life in Nowatta, Okla., where he attended school. He entered the U.S. Army during World War II and served in the South Pacific. Upon discharge, he began his 35-year career with El Paso Natural Gas Co. at Jal, N.M. He lived in various places in the Permian Basin and spent three years in Algeria. He married Alice Tice in Carlsbad, N.M., in 1949. In 1981 he was transferred to Midland and at the time of his death he was serving as area plant supervisor. He was a member of the Sprayberry Masonic Lodge at Midkiff.

Mrs. Frank Miller

Services for Mrs. Frank (Clyde) Miller were to be at 2 p.m. today in the sanctuary of the First Presbyterian Church with Dr. R. Boynton Smith officiating. Burial was to be in Resthaven Memorial Park, directed by Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home.

Pallbearers were to be Leon York of Jamilton, Bill Coombes, George Van Husen, James J. Burford, Bill Collyns and Watson LaForce Jr.

Sherman Wheeler

ODESSA — Services for Sherman Lee Wheeler, 73, of Odessa, father of John Wheeler of Midland, will be at 2 p.m. Friday in the Hubbard-Kelley Funeral Home chapel in Odessa. Burial will be in Sunset Cemetery.

Wheeler died Tuesday at a Big Spring hospital.

He was born Jan 10, 1909, in Quitman. He married Nettie Ruth Richardson Oct. 31, 1931, in Quitman. He was a retired employee of the Hale Center Hospital. He was a member of the Church of Christ.

Other survivors include his wife, five daughters, a son, a sister, three brothers, 11 grandchildren and two great-grandchildren.

Scientists blame severe winter on sun

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — Nature's icy fury had America shivering through a winter of severe cold snaps and vicious blizzards that scientists hadn't foreseen and couldn't explain. Now a physicist says the sun may be to blame.

And, said Richard C. Willson of the Jet Propulsion Laboratory, more cold weather may lie ahead.

The flow of energy the sun, the ultimate source of warmth, sends earthward was slightly reduced, and although the reduction was small, it lasted for 18 months, Willson said Tuesday.

He said a solar satellite's measurements found the sun's energy output was down one-tenth of 1 percent from February 1980 to August 1981. By the time the most recent readings were obtained at the end of last year, he said, output was rising but was still short of normal.

The slight solar cooling could represent nothing more than a temporary change or a previously unnoticed part of the normal solar cycle. Or, Willson said, it may be the beginning of a long-term trend that could end with a new ice age in several thousand years.

THE SMALL change, "has great potential significance" and is likely to have contributed heavily to the winter's bitter weather, he said.

If so, it would be "the first direct observation of the cause-and-effect relationship between variability in the sun's energy output and changes in Earth's weather and climate," he said.

"The persistence of this decrease and its preceding this very harsh winter is a very suspicious climatological circumstance — it's almost the equivalent of a smoking gun," Willson said.

"But," he added, "it's not proven...It takes a long time for the Earth to respond to changes in solar output. The question is: Was this decrease long enough and large enough to account for the cold weather? There is good reason to believe it is."

Willson said the sun "is the real driving force" behind the climate and scientists are "abysmally ignorant" about its behavior.

Scientists believe a 1 percent dip in solar output could drop the average global temperature by more than 2 degrees, Willson said. The "little ice ages" of the 15th and 17th centuries occurred when average temperatures fell no more than 3 degrees and "the growing season was shortened in Europe and glaciers were observed to increase in size and begin moving down the mountains," he added.

THE POSSIBILITY of another full-scale ice age has been suggested by many scientists. The last ice age, about 18,000 years ago, buried parts of North America under miles-thick sheets of ice.

Willson said we are living through a warm period within a major glacial epoch.

"The last 10,000 years have been abnormally warm and the last 20 million years have been a major ice age," he said. "All the recorded history of mankind has been within this abnormally warm cycle," during which temperatures have been 5 to 10 degrees warmer than the 20 million-year average.

Even if a new ice age is coming, it's still a long way off since "this is very long-term stuff. These cycles are not going to produce a change of consequence within anybody's lifetime," Willson said.

"But you don't have to change the climate very much to shorten the wheat growing season in the Midwest or almost stamp out agriculture in the Soviet Union," he said.

Climate is a complex interaction between the sun's warmth and the atmosphere and ocean, which work as gigantic solar collectors to store and distribute energy and level out most short-term variations in solar activity.

UNTIL THE SOLAR satellite went aloft, he said, such subtle changes as the slight energy shift could not be detected because earthbound observations are hampered by the atmosphere.

Pulitzer Prize-winner MacLeish dead at age 89

BOSTON (AP) — Archibald MacLeish, a poet, statesman, librarian of Congress, winner of three Pulitzer Prizes and composer of verses hailing Americans and the "stars and expectations" that guide them, is dead at 89.

MacLeish helped plan the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization; he worked as a soldier, lawyer, editor, professor at Harvard, dramatist and farmer. He condemned McCarthyism, urged writers to rally against fascism, and explored theological questions in "J.B.," a play that won the Pulitzer Prize.

MacLeish

"There are all sorts of things I want to do that I haven't been able to," he said in his last published interview, which appeared six months ago.

MacLeish, who lived in Conway, Mass., and retired in 1970 as Boylston professor of literature at Harvard University, died Tuesday night in Massachusetts General Hospital, which he entered March 20 for treatment of an undisclosed illness. The cause of his death was not announced.

"Down to about two years ago, I was working my head in the usual way," MacLeish told the Greenfield (Mass.) Recorder in an interview published last November. "But I had a little heart business. I've been a lot slower."

In 1939 he published "America Was Promises," a strong and explicit social statement. He wrote:

"Tom Paine Knew.
"Tom Paine knew the People.
"The promises were spoken to the People.
"History was voyages toward the People.
"Americas were landfalls of the People.
"Stars and expectations were the signals of the People."

MacLeish exhibited his usual sharp opinions in the Recorder interview. He said President Reagan was "going to begin to think God talks to him," and aimed a dart at rock 'n' roll. "I'd like very much never to have to hear it again," he said.

MacLeish won a wide audience and his first Pulitzer Prize in 1932 for "Conquistador," a poem based on his trek by pack mule along the trail of the soldiers who conquered Mexico.

His second Pulitzer came in 1953 for "Collected Poems 1917-1952." "J.B.," which won the Pulitzer drama award in 1959, was a play in verse based on the Book of Job.

He spent much of his life on his 200-acre Uphill Farm in Conway, a small town in the Berkshire Hills of western Massachusetts where he lived with Ada, his wife of 65 years.

Born in Glencoe, Ill., on May 7, 1892, MacLeish graduated from Yale University, where he won a Phi Beta Kappa key, and received a law degree in 1919 at the head of his class at Harvard Law School. His schooling was interrupted by World War I, and he served in the field artillery, first as a private, then as a captain.

MacLeish was a writer and later an editor with Fortune magazine for nine years during the Depression. During World War II, he directed the Office of Facts and Figures and was assistant director of its successor organization, the Office of War Information.

MacLeish served as head of the Library of Congress for five years beginning in 1939, then became assistant secretary of state for cultural affairs, a post in which he helped develop UNESCO. He joined the faculty at Harvard in 1949.

Among his many awards were the Antoinette Perry Award in drama in 1959, the Bollingen prize in poetry and the National Book Award for poetry in 1953. A motion picture based on his book, "The Eleanor Roosevelt Story," won an Academy Award in 1966.

In addition to his wife, MacLeish is survived by a son, William H. of Woods Hole, Mass.; a daughter, Mary H. Grimm of Kensington, Md.; a sister, Ishbel Campbell of Geneva, N.Y.; nine grandchildren and five great-grandchildren.

Fundraisers honored at luncheon

A victory luncheon was held today at La Bodega Restaurant in honor of the volunteers in the "Vision for the 80's Campaign" for Midland Christian School.

Campaign chairman, Joe G. Roper of Tom Brown Inc., announced that total cash and pledges reached $1,360,878.40, exceeding the challenge goal of $1.3 million. Funds raised in this campaign will be used for capital expansion and renovation of facilities.

Roper was assisted in the leadership of the campaign by Windell Thomason, an independent oil operator, who served as honorary chairman. Other leaders included Jerry Carter, certified public accountant for W.R. Davis; Francis McDonald, vice president of MGF Drilling Co.; Randy Prude, independent oil operator; and Dwayne Casbeer, independent real estate developer.

"The response of the community toward this effort was excellent," stated Roper. "We truly appreciate every individual who made a gift and helped us reach our goal."

Colorado students protest with jellybeans

BOULDER, Colo. (AP) — Students at the University of Colorado plan to send 10,173 jellybeans — President Reagan's favorite candy — to the White House.

But the jellybeans aren't meant as a gift of good will.

At the university, each jellybean represents a student who is on some sort of financial aid. The school has 20,100 students.

CU student co-president Brad Blackwell said Tuesday the protest may be moot at this point, since it looks as though Reagan's proposed financial aid cuts won't be approved by Congress.

But, he said, the students want Congress to know they oppose any financial aid cut proposals that might surface in the future.

Tad Miller, another member of the CU student government, said the students are sending "cheap, scrawny, financial-aid-caliber jellybeans," rather than the first-class jellybeans that Reagan prefers.

The CU jellybeans are to be carried to Washington, along with letters and petitions from students throughout the country who are protesting proposed cuts in federal aid to students.

Some Irish more concerned with cattle prices than unification

By BERNARD D. KAPLAN
Hearst Feature Service

BALLINASLOE, Ireland — "Ireland is a small country," said Bishop Joseph Cassidy. "But the north often seems a long way off to me. I sometimes feel guilty about that."

In his rural diocese in the almost exact geographic center of the country, Northern Ireland's troubles — the IRA violence, the allegations of British tyranny — look different than they do in Belfast or even in U.S. newspaper headlines and TV footage.

"People here want a united Ireland," the 50-year-old bishop, a Galway man, said. "But they will have no truck with IRA gunmen. Nor do they hate the English. Many of our people have gone to live in England, after all. They have been treated well there."

In Ballinasloe, interest is greater in the price of cattle than in unification. Farm prices are an immediate concern in a district where a couple of decades of growing prosperity appears threatened by the European recession. By contrast, the "Northern question," as Bishop Cassidy said, seems a long way off.

LESS THAN two generations ago, Ballinasloe's farmers were tenants working the vast acres of a single "Anglo-Irish" aristocratic family, the Trenches, who owned everything hereabouts. The Trenches have gone, their stately home has become a Catholic college and Ballinasloe has metamorphosed into a thriving market town for freeholders who drive cars and possess TV sets. Prices in its shops often are higher than in Dublin.

> "People here want a united Ireland. But they will have no truck with IRA gunmen. Nor do they hate the English. Many of our people have gone to live in England, after all. They have been treated well there."

"We've had a social revolution here," the bishop explained. "The old Ireland really doesn't exist anymore. It's time for everyone to realize that."

He believes the church in Ireland has moved with the times. If fear of Catholic obscurantism fuels the hostility of the Northern Protestant majority to eventual unity, he asserted, that fear is unfounded.

It has been alleged that sectarian aspects of the Irish Republic's constitution — the ban on divorce, outlawing of abortion and remaining vestiges of religious influence on education — serve as decisive barriers to unity with the North where two-thirds of the population is Protestant.

Last year, the then Prime Minister, Garret Fitzgerald, announced plans to rewrite the constitution to make it acceptable to the Protestants. But he fell from power and his successor, Charles Haughey, has scrapped the idea.

CASSIDY DENIED the church stands in the path of Irish unity.

"As a Cathlic and a priest, I could never favor legal abortion and I believe that divorce is a violation of the sacrament of marriage and a social evil," he said. "But the church is not in politics in this country. If divorce was sanctioned by law, Catholics wouldn't accept it for themselves, but they would have no right to interfere with others."

Misunderstanding exists on both sides, he said. The IRA was, at best, a bunch of misguided nostalgics who have completely misread the situation.

But while the IRA was only a rump, the British and the Protestants were wrong to think they could overcome it by force because "the problem is a political problem, not a security problem."

He added that the political problem was unbelievably complex, stemming in part from the fact that, in its long history, Ireland was never a united nation, not even before the English conquerors arrived so long ago.

TWILIGHT CAST shadows across the sturdy Victorian furniture of Bishop Cassidy's study, as he and his visitors sipped sherry. Complex as it was, he was asked, did he expect to see a solution to the crisis in his lifetime?

He reflected for only a moment. "No," he replied.

the small society — by Brickman

Undeclared income costs nations money

WASHINGTON (AP) — An international economist says countries around the world are losing millions of tax dollars because of the flourishing underground economy.

Vito Tanzi, head of the fiscal affairs department at the International Monetary Fund, puts the value of the underground economy in the United States at between $120 billion and $140 billion each year.

The U.S. gross national product — the value of goods and services produced — is about $3 trillion a year, and Vanzi projects that between 4 percent and 8 percent of the GNP is unreported.

The underground economy is the term applied to income that is not reported to the federal government. It covers waitresses who pocket tips, baby sitters earning extra cash and people involved in illicit businesses such as narcotics dealers.

Tanzi made his estimate of the U.S.' underground economy in a book entitled, "The Underground Economy in the United States and Abroad."

Another economist, Edgar Fege, said Tanzi's figures are low. He estimated that the value of the American underground economy in 1978 was 33 percent of the GNP — nearly a trillion dollars.

In some countries, the underground economy is more active than in the United States, Tanzi said.

Two Colombians, Roberto Junguito and Carolos Caballero, estimated that in their country exports in the late 1970s were under-reported by between 23 percent and 41 percent.

This occurred partly because of $500 million sales of marijuana and cocaine and also because of false invoices, they said in a contribution to Tanzi's book.

But Tanzi quoted an Italian professor as saying the underground economy was Italy's "second economic miracle" because it allowed people to maintain a higher standard of living.

Peter Reuter of the Rand Corp. suggested that one-fifth to one-third of Italy's GNP is due to "irregular sector economy."

For example, official statistics show that nearly 1.5 million houses were built in Italy between 1971 and 1979. But the electric company made more than three million connections to new houses.

Germany's political future depends on Free Democrats

By ALISON SMALE

BONN, West Germany (AP) — Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's Social Democrats are losing voter support so fast that some political pundits are predicting Schmidt will fall this year.

Schmidt's coalition partners, the Free Democrats, and their party head, Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, hold the key to West Germany's political future.

In that event, President Karl Carstens would try under the nation's Basic Law to find a political leader capable of forming a new government. In practice, however, a collapse of the coalition under present circumstances likely would mean that Carstens in the end would have to call new elections.

The Social Democrats have been quarrelling among themselves and with their coalition partners ever since Schmidt and his government was re-elected with a thumping 45-seat parliamentary majority in 1980.

As splits have deepened in Schmidt's party on key defense, economic and foreign policy issues, so has the gloom.

There is a growing feeling that the party might be ready, after 13 years at the head of government and three years in the 1966-69 Grand Coalition, for political convalescence on the opposition benches.

TWO RECENT financial scandals tainting both the Schmidt government and the Social Democrats' traditional trade-union power base strengthened that conviction.

"How is the normal citizen supposed to feel any attachment to public institutions if we're all shown up as corrupt and divided?" asked one government member, a Social Democrat who asked not to be named.

In Lower Saxony last March 21, the public gave its first verdict. And that appeared to be that Schmidt and his party should go.

The Christian Democrats who oppose Schmidt on a national level did more than hold on to power in the state. They won an absolute majority — 50.7 percent of the vote.

The Social Democrats lost 5.7 percent of the 42.2 percent poll they won in the state four years before.

Rebellious youth lurched left, giving the Greens, an ecology party which has taken radical positions on several issues, entry to their 4th of 11 state parliaments.

EVEN FOR STRONG Social Democratic sympathizers and party members, it was a sign that the "Endzeit" — the end — had come.

But quitting is neither in Schmidt's character, nor is it his decision to make.

Under West German law, a government is elected for four years unless the chancellor loses a vote of confidence in parliament.

Schmidt asked for such a vote in February and won, with all 269 votes of Social and Free Democrat deputies.

The only way Schmidt could lose power, therefore, is if either his own party abandoned him, or the Free Democrats did.

It is thought unlikely a majority of Social Democrats will vote against his controversial pro-NATO, pro-free market economy policies, although leftists will dislike them as much as ever.

AP News Analysis

This turns the spotlight in the present disarray of West German politics on Foreign Minister Genscher, the Free Democrat.

HE HAS LATELY used speeches and news interviews to heat up the quarrel with the Social Democrats, threatening to break the latest patched-up compromise between the two.

Yet there is no sign a really crucial issue will emerge to force a split. And even if it came, it is not certain Genscher's party would support a coalition with the conservative Christian Democrats.

A recent meeting of party leftists in Cologne firmly declared they would not enter a coalition with the conservatives.

Another factor making any change of coalition uncertain is that it is not clear who would head a Christian Democrat government.

The current leader, Helmut Kohl, failed in his bid to oust Schmidt from the chancellorship in the 1976 elections.

His rival, Premier Franz-Josef Strauss of Bavaria, fared even worse in 1980, obtaining only 44.5 percent of the vote in the conservatives' poorest showing ever.

OTHER CANDIDATES for the leadership are Ernst Albrecht, the Lower Saxony premier who enhanced his chances with his March 21 result, and Gerhard Stoltenberg, a financial expert with an elder statesman image who is premier in Schleswig-Holstein.

There is no immediate prospect of a conservative government. But that may change after two state polls in Hamburg and in Hesse in September.

In Hamburg, Schmidt's hometown, political observers estimate the Social Democrats may lose more than 10 percent on their 1978 vote. In one Lower Saxony district bordering Hamburg the party dropped 11 percent in the March 21 elections.

The Greens will get 7 or 8 percent and some seats in the city's parliament for the first time, opinion polls show.

In Hesse, environmentalists are also strong, opposing nuclear-power stations and the third Frankfurt Rhein-Main Airport runway favored by the Social Democrat-Free Democrat state government, the last state government to mirror the ruling federal coalition.

LOS ANGELES — Add this to your list of unaffordable luxuries in the turbulent 1980s: "Well, back to the old drawing board."

Long the buzz-phrase for a job gone wrong, going "back to the old drawing board" means time wasted, and while it might have been shrugged off a few years ago — like a brief spell of bad weather — major design changes are now rung up on the developer's cash register in terms of weeks or even months.

And the time factor is critical. Last year's costs were going up an average of 1 1/2 percent a month, and while it has dropped down now to about eighth-tenths of 1 percent, delay is still intolerable.

Especially, Herman Chanen of Chanen Construction Co. adds, with the cost of money adding still another crushing layer of overhead to the building game. Construction loans are traditionally pegged 1 percent or 2 percent above the prime rate, currently standing at about 15 3/4 percent, down from last year's 21 percent.

All of which, the Phoenix, Ariz.-based contractor says, has made construction management a near-"must" in today's commercial and industrial development. "It's not a brand new idea, but it's really escalated in the past five years. There simply had to be a new approach to controlling costs," Chanen believes.

Traditionally, that is, the developer and the architect huddled and the contractor was brought in after the plans were drawn, "and then everything went out for bids," he said in elaboration. "The problem was that so many projects would come in so far over budget that they would have to go back and redesign the whole thing."

Breaking with this sort of tradition comes easily for the craggy, silver-thatched Chanen who effortlessly straddles state lines in the Sun Belt and who has almost become Warner Communications' "house" contractor in Burbank, Calif., with three building contracts totaling $37.1 million within the last three years. And all three of them — Warner Brothers' headquarters building, a new head office for Warner Elektra Atlantic and a new computer facility for the parent company — were products of the "fast track" construction concept that is the hallmark of construction management.

"Essentially, it's simply the team concept with the construction manager and the architect teaming up with the developer right at the concept stage. The preliminary work can be started even before the plans are finalized," Chanen added.

And preliminary work in this sense can mean, among other things, the foundation work and the ordering of such long-lead items as elevators, structural steel and mechanical equipment. "And so you can be building even while the final drawings are still in the works," he said.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Canned foods salted for flavoring

Dear Dr. Solomon: I never thought that canned vegetables could add very much to the amount of salt I took in until I started reading the labels on the cans. My question is why salt is used. If it is used as a preservative, why don't canned fruits contain salt? — Doris, Orlando, Fla.

Dear Doris: The primary reason for salt being added to canned vegetables is for flavoring. It is not needed as a preservative since heat processing serves that purpose. If you want to decrease the amount of your salt intake, you might want to try frozen vegetables, most of which are processed without the addition of salt.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My daughter is four months pregnant, and her obstetrician has prescribed iron for her. She has a good diet and I don't understand why she should need more iron. Is this something that is recommended for all pregnant women? — Mrs. A.Y., York, Pa.

Dear Mrs. Y.: The typical American diet ordinarily does provide a sufficient amount of iron. However, it may not be enough for pregnant women with an unusually heavy menstrual flow, and these women may need more than their diets provide.

Apparently your daughter's obstetrician has noted an iron deficiency. In such cases, a supplement is advisable.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have found your suggestions such as using skim milk instead of whole milk to be very helpful in controlling my weight. But what about using margarine instead of butter? I don't recall reading about this in your column, but they both taste the same to me. — Vivian, Durham, N.C.

Dear Vivian: Most margarines contain the same number of calories as butter, about 100 per tablespoon. If you want to save calories, you'll have to use whipped margarine or the diet-imitation kind. Since there are no calories in air, whipped margarine contains about 65 calories per tablespoon, while the diet-imitation product, which contains water, has about 50 calories.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have always believed in the saying that a little knowledge can be a dangerous thing, and I don't want to be guilty of that myself. But my mother's doctor prescribed a water pill for her but did not say anything about the fact that she needs potassium. Don't people who take water pills have to take potassium? — Ms. B.T., Chicago.

Dear Ms. T.: The fact that some patients on diuretics require a potassium supplement does not mean that all patients on diuretics require a potassium supplement. Some of these patients show a decrease in serum potassium early in the course of treatment, but the decrease may be small and often corrects itself spontaneously.

Abortion law results in more births

BOSTON (AP) — Hundreds of pregnant minors in Massachusetts have decided to have a baby instead of an abortion since passage of the state's informed consent law a year ago, according to both supporters and opponents of the year-old law.

But the two sides continue to disagree whether the state has the right to force a minor to obtain permission from both parents or a judge before having an abortion.

"It's been an absolute nightmare," says Bill Baird, the Boston abortion crusader who is still appealing the law. "It's just wrong for the state and judges to impose their moral position on these women."

"We're very pleased," said Marianne Rea-Luthin, president of Massachusetts Citizens for Life, "It has encouraged girls to consult with their parents and has really increased family guidance in this important question."

No complete figures are available since April 23, 1981 when the law took effect. But Planned Parenthood of Massachusetts, which also is challenging the consent law in court, surveyed abortions during the first two full months of the new law and found a major decrease.

About 866 abortions on minors were reported in May and June 1980, but only 437 during those two months in 1981, the survey found. The trend appears to be continuing, officials said.

"While out-of-state abortions rose dramatically at a few referral clinics, the increase does not begin to equal the decline in Massachusetts abortions," said Planned Parenthood spokesman Jeff Lubitz. "The law is achieving its purpose. It may have reduced abortions by 50 percent."

Last year Massachusetts became the only state to require that a pregnant, unmarried minor must receive written permission from both parents or a judge to receive an abortion. Since then, North Dakota has passed a similar statute, Lubitz said.

The U.S. Supreme Court struck down an earlier version of the state's informed consent law in 1979. The Legislature drafted a new law, following the court's guidelines.

While the law has been hailed by anti-abortion forces, it has upset the officials forced to play a major role in the abortion decision — the 53 trial judges designated to handle the appeals.

"What's happened here is the Legislature has given half a loaf to the anti-abortion forces and dumped the other half on us," Superior Court Judge Paul G. Garrity complained recently to the Boston Globe.

The judges have to decide whether the girl is "mature and capable of giving informed consent" to the operation. If she is not, the judge can still permit the operation if it is in the pregnant girl's best interest.

Happiness found in back yard

By CHRISTOPHER KNIGHT
Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — Gahan Wilson, whose wonderfully depraved, macabre cartoons are familiar to anyone who has perused the pages of Playboy, the New Yorker, National Lampoon and dozens of other magazines, was born dead.

"I arrived all blue and not breathing," says Wilson. "The doctor kept dunking me in hot water, then cold water, then hot, and slapping me in between. Finally I started breathing — or so I'm told."

Wilson, who doubts whether this unconventional delivery is responsible for his macabre sense of humor, recently promoted his 12th book, "Is Nothing Sacred?", acollection of mostly unpublished recent cartoons.

"People always ask me where I get my ideas," Wilson says, as if the bizarre nature of his cartoons were the product of some alien mentality. "My ideas come from the kinds of things you'd find in the newspaper."

He recalls a bona fide news item that described a lady digging a rock garden in her back yard and unearthing a dead body neatly wrapped in a blanket. The occurence may have been commonplace, but Wilson's take on it is typically askew. Happiness, he explains, is always found in our own back yard.

Wilson has a marked tendency to project himself into the situation of "the outsider."

Children, for instance, are a frequent subject of his cartoons, and they are drawn from a kid's-eye point of view in which adults are gargantuan, supernatural beings, while the children themselves exist in a nebulous parallel universe.

Like most popular art, cartoons revolve around cliches. Wilson exposes racial stereotyping by dressing it in the intergalactic guise of Martian creatures. His Irish leprechaun myth raises the logical question, "Do Little People have a mythology of even Littler People?" And he uses the classical grandeur of ancient civilizations as an example of classical incompetence as two archaeologists unearth an ancient sculpture that looks like a kindergartener's arts and crafts project.

One of the best works in "Is Nothing Sacred?" depicts a backyard Fourth of July barbecue in a suburb. Mom and Dad and Junior are joyfully lighting sparklers, rockets and cherrybombs in celebration of America's freedom, while in the neighbor's yard a giant mushroom cloud erupts. The caption reads: "The rockets red glare, the bombs bursting in air."

If the world that Wilson's cartoons create has the ring of asylum madness, his work addresses the audience inmate to inmate. "I try to take the audience seriously," he explains. "People — especially kids — are treated condescendingly all the time. But just getting through the day seems to me ennobling."

Mexican government's fear of English growing

Copley News Service

TIJUANA — In Baja California when young people dressed in "blue jeans" and "tennies" go out, they pile into "el carro" and drive to the "cine" where they park in "un parking," go see "un movie" and eat "un hot dog" or "un cheeseburger."

The same group of young people in Mexico City would be wearing "pantalones mezclillos" and "zapatos de tenis." They would ride in "un coche," park in "un estacionamiento," go see "una pelicula," and eat "perros calientes" and "hamburguesas con queso."

The obvious influence of English on the Spanish spoken from Tijuana to Matamoros is causing consternation in Mexico City and contributing to friction over the state of Mexican culture along the border.

While people from the capital decry American cultural encroachment, border residents bristle at the implication they are somehow less Mexican than their compatriots in the interior.

Mexico City-based writer and journalist Ricardo Garibay received a healthy round of boos from a Baja California audience when he suggested that, despite the nationalism of border residents, Mexican identity is fast slipping away here.

"National identity (along the border) is turning into a mere fiction, a meaningless remnant of a bygone era, a nuisance that everyone tends to get rid of. Each day, the people in these places look less and less like the rest of their countrymen," Garibay told a stunned audience of Baja California Institutional Revolutionary Party (PRI) supporters.

"Take a people's language away...and shortly that people will have lost its identity," Garibay continued. "Take a man's tongue away, his ability to organize words, and he will be left very much like an animal. Only a verb separates us from a strictly zoological species."

"They shouldn't let men like Garibay come to Baja California," said state deputy Franciscana Krauss, who was seconded by other leaders of the PRI women's organization.

Candidate de la Madrid also expressed concern about the state of Mexican culture along the border, but spoke more tactfully, demonstrating that the government in Mexico City has taken the threat to Spanish on the border seriously.

In fact, creeping Americanism has been taken so seriously that the government has created a Commission for the Defense of the Spanish Language.

"It's all over the country, but there's a special emphasis on the border," said Dr. Pablo Ornelas, director of civic action for Tijuana and head of the city's local defense committee.

Ornelas, who speaks perfect English as well as impeccable Spanish, said the government is afraid that much of the rich Mexican heritage could be lost if no move were made to defend the language.

"The impact that the American customs have had in the world is very great, even in places like Europe," said Ornelas. "But Europe is a long way away and we have a 2,000-mile border.

"There's a terrific economic, social and cultural pressure," he said. "We feel that...the invasion of foreign culture is more sophisticated and therefore has more impact in the long run than a military invasion.

"Mexico's culture is older by centuries than the American culture. It's probably one of the oldest living cultures in the world," he said.

While there are 56 separate Indian languages still spoken in the country, Spanish or Castilian is the national language, Ornelas said.

"What worries us Mexicans is that our young people are adopting many of these (American) customs and that endangers the national identity. The strongest element of identity is language, because that's how you communicate your culture."

Hospitals growing tired of payment problems

WASHINGTON (AP) — Hospitals, tired of battling with the government over Medicare payments after a patient is treated, want Congress and the Reagan administration to set up a system to pay them in advance.

The American Hospital Association, in unveiling the plan Monday, said pre-payments based on fixed rates could save the government $1 billion next year.

If hospitals were not satisfied with Medicare's fixed price, the plan would give them the option of billing Medicare patients for the excess amount. But no patient could be charged more than $1,000 extra per hospital stay.

Congress would have to approve any change in Medicare's payment methods.

AHA President Alex McMahon said the plan was conceived as an alternative to the administration's "thoroughly unacceptable" call for an across-the-board 2 percent cut in Medicare hospital reimbursement rates in 1983.

He complained that Medicare, Medicaid and, in some cases, Blue Cross have been "chipping away at the definition of cost."

"You just can't run a hospital or a railroad" like that, McMahon said at a news conference.

Hospital costs soared 18.8 percent, twice as fast as inflation generally, in 1981, and one-third of the patients admitted to hospitals are covered by Medicare. The program expects to spend $34.3 billion in fiscal 1982 and $40 billion next year for its 28 million elderly or disabled beneficiaries.

McMahon said the AHA plan would allow for a $4 billion, or 14.5 percent, increase in hospital costs in fiscal 1983, instead of the $5 billion, or 17.5 percent, increase likely if no action is taken.

Fraternity inductees honored

Forty-five Midland College students were inducted into Phi Theta Kappa, national honor fraternity for community college students, during ceremonies Sunday.

Extending congratulations to the new Phi Theta Kappa members were Dr. Jess H. Parrish, president of Midland College, and Dr. Tom O'Hara, president of the Midland College faculty council. Presiding at the installation were Kurt Krenik, president of the Midland College Phi Theta Kappa chapter, and Dr. David Caffey, chapter sponsor.

Phi Theta Kappa, which was founded in 1918, has been on the MC campus since 1974. It recognizes students who have completed at least 12 semester hours with a minimum grade point average of 3.5.

Students inducted for the 1982 spring semester include Felicia K. Adams, Rex Allen, Angela Bittick, Doug Blackwood, Polly K. Bowley, Jane B. Britt, Kenneth B. Brooks, Ruel Frank Brown Jr., Jerry Kent Burleson, Matt C. Carr, Douglas Wayne Carter, Lawrence K. Chan, David W. Clark Jr., David Cornelius, Kenneth R. Dawson, Dennis Lane Fletcher, Andrea M. Garner, Kevin F. Gillette, Sean E. Greenwood, Ronald K. Hall, Donald W. Higgins, Brad Hollis, Linda Joyce Hugly, Barbara Lorraine Jones and Cynthia Ann Kolander.

Also inducted were Mary Deann Leggett, Cecilia Parker Lyde, Richard E. Mathis, Lisa Taylor Meyer, Gene Franklin Miles, Lynda Marene Monroe, Patricia Dawn Moreland, Marcia Ann Norton, Eric D. Olssen, Robert A. Payne, Vickie J. Pickett, Melinda Moore Pilgrim, Slawomir Wasiluk, Terrence Ray Streun, Sheryl Swaim, Joe Tatsch, Susi R. Tucker, Bonnie C. Van Steenburg, Darrell W. Ward and M. Keith Williamson.

Lions Club kicks off fund-raiser

Midland Southside Lions Club is kicking off its sixth annual fund-raising drive today by calling on businesses to participate in publishing a fire prevention and safety book that will be distributed in the Permian Basin, according to Barbara Eakin.

The drive is being held in conjunction with the Lions' annual gospel concert.

Money from the fund-raising drive will enable the Lions to support Texas Crippled Children's Camp at Kerrville, District 2A-1 eye bank, Lions International Foundation (which supplies help to disaster areas), scholarships to students, medical help and eye glasses for those in need and Boy Scout Troop 108. This year some of the money will go to refurbish the Lions Club building at 111 E. New York.

Living with paranoia not easy but necessary

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

TEHRAN, Iran — In the failing light and spattering rain, the two women in black knelt at the grave and wept.

They were two among the thousands who each week clog the highway leading south from Tehran for the pilgrimage to the burial ground called Behesht Zahra, Place of the Martyrs.

The graves are only inches apart and the rows seem to stretch endlessly in all directions. At each gravesite is a picture of the martyr who had given his life for the Iranian revolution. They are young men, mostly, some of them in their early teens. A few were too young to have ever used a razor.

WHEN IRAN'S spiritual leader, the Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, made his triumphant return to Tehran from exile abroad more than three years ago, this was the first place he visited.

The cemetery is much larger now, with new plots being dug each day. Room must be made for Iranian soldiers killed in the 18-month-old war with Iraq. And room must be made for people assassinated by opponents of Khomeini's revolutionary regime.

These are the honored dead who, according to Islamic teaching, are guaranteed a place in Paradise because of their martyrdom.

But there are others who have received no such honors. Buried elsewhere, often in unmarked graves, they are Iranians who have been executed by the government because of the threat they posed to the new Islamic order.

Amnesty International estimates that about 4,000 people have been executed since Khomeini came to power; others in Tehran say that figure is much too low. Many were killed because they opposed the fundamentalist rule in Iran. But often, the executed person seems to have been guilty of nothing more than having triggered the paranoia of some official.

For those lucky enough to escape the firing squad, there are the prisons. Tehran's Evin Prison is said to be so full that inmates have to take turns sitting down because of the crush of people in the cells.

"Each day, I wait for my 15 minutes of horror," one diplomat said. "Sometimes I make it almost all the way through the day, but then someone comes up to me with a story about what happened to a friend or relative."

HERE ARE SOME of the stories:

—A young girl from a middle-class family went swimming in her family's backyard pool. A man in an adjacent building saw the girl in her bathing suit and told the local revolutionary committee that he had been sexually aroused. The girl was arrested and given a sentence of 60 lashes for her crime. She died after 30.

—A husband and wife were driving home one night when they were stopped by the Revolutionary Guards. The guards accused the woman of being a prostitute and ordered the husband to bring them proof of marriage while they held his wife.

The husband was involved in a traffic accident while returning with the marriage certificate and was taken, unconscious, to a hospital. The next day, he awakened to the news that his wife was missing. After two days of searching the trail finally led to Evin Prison. An official there said the woman had been executed that morning because no one claimed her.

—A 28-year-old schoolteacher was arrested because she was the friend of a woman who refused to wear the required head covering known as a chador. The teacher was taken to prison and her home was searched. Copies of books by Flaubert, Zola and Rousseau were found. The teacher was executed. Her family and friends believe that her only crime was being "too liberal."

"IT'S ONE THING to kill your enemy," the diplomat said, "but the cases reported to me are just examples of blind repression. From time to time, you go to see friends and find they have disappeared. Or you see one who has a strange look and find that he has been beaten or jailed."

Iran has become a place where paranoia is almost as rampant as the fervor that brought about the revolution. Iranians who are willing to talk to Western journalists say they do so at great risk because there is always the danger that someone will report them.

Khomeini himself said last year that family members should spy on each other as a safeguard against terrorism in the country.

The possibility of arrest is always present and open political discussion is rare. One woman, talking as she drove through the streets of Tehran, said there was never any way of knowing what might attract the attention of Revolutionary Guards or what would be considered an offense against the government.

"I always feel the threat," she said. "But I suppose sometimes you have to take the risk."

She said that after three years of revolution every family she knew had been affected by a violent death, either from the days of the shah or since Khomeini took over.

She, too, had stories of families being arrested and executed because of their suspected leftist leanings, and of prisons so full that prisoners stood shoulder to shoulder.

Grants for teen studies

NEW YORK (AP) — Death rates among teenagers and young adults are climbing, and a New Jersey foundation has donated $12 million to try and stop that trend.

The Princeton-based Robert Wood Foundation announced Monday that it had awarded the money to 20 institutions in areas with a high incidence of venereal disease, drug abuse, homicides, suicides and mental illness.

Federal government statistics show that there are 50,000 deaths a year among Americans 15 to 24 years old, foundation officials said. The death rate for that group has climbed 9 percent since 1960, making it the only age group to show an increase in death rates during that period, they said.

Foundation President Dr. David Rogers said the funds will be used to establish clinics in high schools and other community centers to battle such health problems.

Most clinics intended to help young people deal only with a single problem, Rogers said, such as venereal disease or drug abuse.

"Many people face multiple problems, but few are able to successfully manuever through this scattered system," he said in a prepared statement released Monday. "The result is that they fail to seek care until conditions are acute or lead to behaviour resulting in serious injury or death."

Quads and mom doing OK

WICHITA, Kan. (AP) — Quadruplets born 2½ months premature were "doing well," and so was the 26-year-old mother, hospital officials said.

The four girls were born Monday afternoon at Wesley Medical Center to Dotty and Steve Morgan of Wichita.

Doctors said they were expecting a multiple birth and a special delivery team was on hand to care for the premature babies.

Barrick Wilson, the hospital's public relations director, said the infants were placed in a neonatal intensive care unit.

They were the first quadruplets born at the facility, he said.

Coalition election favorite

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia (AP) — Prime Minister Mahathir Mohamed's National Front coalition is a strong favorite for re-election in the national elections Thursday, and arrangements are already being made for his victory address to the nation.

The national news agency and Television Malaysia reported today that Mahathir will address the nation as soon as the National Front wins a majority in the 154-seat Parliament. It now controls 133.

'Gateway to communism' looking like 'little Hong Kong'

By MICHAEL WEISSKOPF
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

SHENZHEN, China — After defending the gateway to communism for 30 years, this Chinese border town has surrendered without a fight.

Shenzhen used to be known for litchi nuts and easy escapes across the border to Hong Kong, but more significantly as the dividing line between the fleshpots of capitalism and the stark egalitarianism of Mao's China.

Now, as if ceded to the British colony, it is starting to look and act like a little Hong Kong, brash and busy. Shenzhen fell not by defeat, but by the decision of China's communist leaders to adopt capitalism as a development strategy there.

SHENZHEN IS THE LARGEST of China's "special economic zones" set up along the southeastern coast three years ago to lure foreign capital and technology in the hope of providing jobs, training workers and producing exports for precious foreign exchange.

The zones may the boldest experiment yet by the innovators running China today. Sleepy farm communities suddenly have exploded into industrial boom towns infused with capitalist principles and an unusual degree of social freedom.

Because mixing free will and Rockefeller economics still makes for uncertain chemistry in China, the laboratory is restricted to four towns fronting the South China Sea.

FOR YEARS, China tried to wall off its people from the social evils of Hong Kong by stationing soldiers along the fence that separates the British colony from Shenzhen.

Now Peking plans to spend more than $70 million to erect a high barbed-wire fence around Shenzhen to prevent Chinese living outside the special zone from entering this brave new world.

"It's as if China moved back its border a few miles to make room for Hong Kong's growth," quipped a recent visitor to Shenzhen.

Shenzhen, a quiet farming and fishing village just a few years ago, looks like a giant construction site today. Skyscrapers and tourist resorts are being built where there were rice paddies before. Where there was wasteland, factories are assembling tour buses, bottling Pepsi-Cola and making steel containers-all part of a building program that already has rung up $1.4 billion in foreign investment.

More startling in this once-frayed frontline of socialism is that Shenzhen's 160,000 residents — five times the 1979 population — are fast becoming a privileged class with higher salaries and greater personal liberty than Chinese citizens elsewhere.

A RECENT EVENING at Shenzhen's most popular nightspot, called Arts Garden, explains why an uninitiated traveler might think he mistakenly had got off the train in Hong Kong instead of southern China.

Teen-agers dressed in skin-tight Levis, floral shirts and Playboy Club sweatshirts — not a Mao suit in the crowd — bunched around electronic games, dropping coin after coin into Space Panic and Scramble.

An older crowd sat in an adjacent cafe, puffing Marlboros, sipping fruit frappes and listening to love ballads played on a huge tape-cassette recorder brought by one of the partygoers.

Outside, a motorcycle gang sporting long hair and black jackets with white English lettering saying "Rider Fellow" raced down streets only recently paved. In this city of big cars, taxis and motorcycles, the bicycle — ubiquitous in most of China — seems oddly out of place.

The Westernization of Shenzhen is extraordinary by the puritanic standards of Peking, but it is tolerated in the special zones by liberal officials who believe that Chinese who live more like foreigners will work harder like foreigners.

NOWHERE ELSE in China do workers have access to duty-free shops and watering holes normally reserved for foreigners. In Shenzhen, residents are allowed to hook up tall, fishbone antennas to their rooftops to pick up Hong Kong television, which is considered the devil's work in neighboring areas.

The relaxation of social controls has also given rise to a seamy underside of Shenzhen where prostitution, gambling, pornography and smuggling are unpleasant reminders of the foreign concessions in China earlier this century, when Western businessmen exploited the nation with little regard for Chinese social values.

"As soon as you get off the train, people rush up and offer black-market prices for Hong Kong currency," said an overseas Chinese woman with relatives in Shenzhen. "You can get twice the (official) rate on the black market."

Some of the most dramatic cases of official corruption revealed in the current nationwide crackdown have been found in Shenzhen, where it is said that negotiations on business deals go smoothly only after a color television changes hands.

"I could double production at my plant if I opened a Hong Kong bank account for the (Chinese) foreman and put in 2 percent of the profits every month," said a Hong Kong entrepreneur with Shenzhen investments.

WHEN CHINESE officials began planning special zones in the late 1970s, it was economic, not social, impact they considered.

Iranian opposition implicated

By The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post
News Service

TEHRAN, Iran (AFP) — In an affair considered the most serious in the short history of the Islamic republic, almost the entire spectrum of the Iranian opposition, including one top religious figure, has been publicly implicated in an alleged plot to assassinate Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini and seize power.

Monday night's peak-time television broadcast of the confession of former Foreign Minister Sadegh Ghotbzadeh is interpreted here as a governmental decision to "take things to their logical conclusion."

Some observers said the broadcast illustrates that the regime wants to guarantee the smooth transition of authority whenever Ayatollah Khomeini, Iran's revolutionary leader, abandons power, a view expressed by President Ali Khameini.

For the first time since the establishment of the Iranian Islamic republic in February 1979, a religious leader, Ayatollah Kazem Shariat-Madari, second in the Iranian Shiite hierarchy, has been implicated in the alleged plot to assassinate Khomeini.

Ghotbzadeh said on television Monday that, according to a third party Shariat-Madari knew of the plot. Legal authorities are still investigating this aspect of the affair.

Shariat-Madari's offices in the holy city of Qom, 100 miles south of Tehran, were occupied on Friday "by the people." His bodyguards were disarmed and his son-in-law arrested.

Shariat-Madari, generally considered a moderate reformist, is being kept isolated at his home in Qom, where he has lived since the end of 1979 following a split with Khomeini on the latter's role in political life.

At around the same time, clashes broke out in Tabriz, the capital of the province of Eastern Azerbaidjan, where Shariat-Madari is spiritual leader. The fighting was between Shariat-Madari supporters belonging to the Moslem People's Party and Revolutionary guards controlled by the Iranian authorities.

Shariat-Madari has not returned to Tabriz, where separatist feelings are historically strong, since then. The ayatollah, aged 78 according to his official biography, is apparently gravely ill, reliable sources say.

An investigation published by the authorities on April 10, which announced Ghotbzadeh's arrest, indicated the existence of various "dissident networks," according to military revolutionary court president Hodjatoleslam Mohammadi Reyshahri.

Reyshahri said all the details of the plot would be unveiled during a public trial that will take place at a later date. The conspirators face the death sentence for their part in the plot.

Ghotbzadeh, visibly nervous, said he would "willingly accept" the penalty awaiting him.

Ghotbzadeh was close to Khomeini in exile and played an important role in the early days of the revolution.

Budget bullet getting harder to bite

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — While Washington dawdles over the federal budget, governors and legislators in state capitals throughout the nation are biting a bitter fiscal bullet.

The result: Nearly half the 50 states may end up raising taxes this election year to cope with the recession and Reagan administration cuts in federal aid to states, counties and cities.

In varying degrees, most of the states are facing a fiscal crisis of one sort or another. More than 20 states raised gasoline taxes last year in an effort to keep up with deteriorating streets and highways. Two more have joined the list this year.

EVEN BEFORE the nation's governors sent their state-of-the-state messages and budgets to legislatures this year, two experts of the National Conference of State Legislatures wrote this grim outlook:

"With their revenues buffeted by the national recession, the majority of states entered 1982 either in deficit or teetering on the brink of deficit."

The experts, Steven D. Gold, director of the group's Intergovernmental Finance Project, and Karen M. Benker, a research analyst, said the situation was likely to turn even bleaker than expected because state budgets already in place did not account for a deep or prolonged recession.

"Fiscal stress can be found in all parts of the country, but New England, the Great Lakes states and the Southeast seem to be in the worst shape," Gold and Benker said.

As they face a blitz of fiscal pressures, state governments have had to eat into their budget surpluses, if they had them; cut back on programs; raise taxes and pare down on their own work forces.

The few states that do not have severe financial strains, including Wyoming, Montana and Texas, are those living off of the bounty of severance taxes on oil, coal, natural gas and minerals. But even there, all is not gravy. Recent cutbacks in domestic oil production and stabilization of petroleum prices have cut into expected revenues in some of those states.

THE POLITICAL IRONY of 1982 for governors and legislators is that their federal counterparts — members of Congress — can go home this year and tell their constituents they helped President Reagan cut their federal taxes.

Most state legislators up for election this year not only cannot make such claims, but they will have to face heat for raising state taxes merely to keep state services at accustomed levels, or worse yet, to maintain services at reduced levels.

Compounding the problem for state legislators this year was the requirement they reapportion both legislative and congressional districts in their states to account for population shifts as reflected by the 1980 census.

Reapportionment is always a controversial and painful chore for legislatures, but it was especially so this year in many states where financially strapped urban areas lost population to the suburbs.

This factor figured in a major battle just concluded in the Florida Legislature to raise the state sales tax from 4 percent to 5 percent.

Conservative rural legislators fought the tax. Cities and counties, also hit with federal cutbacks, wanted their share of any new funds. The tax hike finally got through, but only after sponsors agreed to share half the increase, an estimated $770 million a year, with cities and counties.

ALL IN ALL, toiling in state government these days is not a happy chore. Consider this:

—The recession has cut deeply into the revenues states get from their own taxes. This problem has been aggravated by the Reagan tax cut because many states "piggyback" their state personal and corporate income taxes onto the federal tax. Unless they took specific action this year, the Reagan tax cut triggered a corresponding state tax cut as well. Those states that refused to pass this bonus tax reduction on to their taxpayers face charges of undermining Reagan's economic recovery program.

—When the economy goes sour and taxes decline, the federal government has the luxury of running at a deficit until times get better. Most states cannot do this. They have strict laws and constitutional provisions requiring that their legislatures pass a balanced budget by a specific date, usually June 30. If the revenue is not there, the states normally have no other choice but to cut programs.

—Even before Reagan took office, states had lost a major source of aid from Washington, the federal revenue-sharing program first enacted under President Nixon. That action alone cost the states several billion dollars a year before Reagan cut federal aid to the states, by an estimated 25 percent in 1982 and a projected 37 percent in the 1983 budget. In Connecticut alone, the cuts amounted to $166 million in 1982 and $277 million in the budget year starting July 1.

TO COPE with a growing demand of their governments and shrinking tax sources, an extraordinary number of states are raising state taxes in an election year. Benker of the legislators' conference said eight states are considering sales-tax increases this year, three are debating higher personal income taxes, and at least 15 states have passed, or are considering, increases in other levies such as corporate income, cigarettes and tobacco, severance and gasoline taxes.

"Basically, it's just a shifting of the tax base," Benker said. "The cutbacks of federal aid are not the primary cause of state fiscal distress, but they exacerbate it. Those cutbacks could hardly have come at a worse time in view of the anemic state of state budgets."

It is a tenet of political life that you do not raise taxes in an election year, particularly in a year like 1982, when the majority of governors, 36 of them, and all or most members of 45 legislatures are up for re-election. So the rule is to anticipate new tax needs and get them out of the way at least a year before the elections.

Peking possible for Bush

WASHINGTON (AP) — Vice President George Bush, who is leaving for a tour of the Far East on Thursday, may make a stop in Peking, according to a Reagan administration official.

U.S. relations with China have been threatened by the administration's recent decision to sell $60 million in military spare parts to Taiwan — which China strongly opposes — but the official said on Monday that Bush's visit would deal with a wider range of foreign policy issues.

The sale can proceed unless both houses of Congress reject it by next month.

Bush's itinerary now includes Japan, South Korea, Singapore, Australia and New Zealand. Bush spokesman Peter Teeley said the Chinese have not extended a formal invitation to the vice president, who was chief of the U.S. Liaison Office in Peking in 1974 and 1975.

But the administration official, who asked not to be identified, said the Chinese have discussed the possibility of a visit to Peking with U.S. officials.

The source said that the most likely plan would be to add a stop in Peking after the scheduled tour ends in New Zealand.

Patching up any irritation caused by the pending arms sale to Taiwan would not be the sole purpose of the trip, he said.

The Chinese issued what was considered a strong public protest after the Reagan administration went ahead with plans to sell the spare parts, primarily for U.S.-designed aircraft that have been in Taiwan's inventory for many years.

Administration officials said they did not expect China to downgrade its ties with the United States or withdraw its ambassador, Chai Zemin, for purposes other than normal rotation of assignments.

Instead, they said, the reason that impelled China to accept closer ties with the United States in 1979 — fear of the Soviet Union — would block any early effort to downgrade relations.

Last week, China described the spare parts sale as "an infringement on China's sovereignty," and restated its claim that Taiwan is an integral part of Chinese national territory.

U.S. officials maintain that Taiwan has a legitimate need for the spare parts and that providing them is consistent with the Taiwan Relations Act of 1979, which guides U.S. relations with the offshore island in the wake of the declaration of normal diplomatic ties with mainland China.

The farming dilemma

When massive "tractorcades" rolled through the nation's capital a few years back, attention was drawn to the plight of American farmers, food producers caught in a price-cost crunch that is said to theaten the industry's very existence.

Well, in the years since those tractorcades the situation hasn't improved and daily farmers are being driven out of business. In fact, says U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Tex., American agriculture is facing a crisis.

"I get calls almost daily from farmers all over the state who are going broke or on the verge of going broke," said the senator recently. "What can I tell them? What do you say to a farmer who has already planted, as many in Texas already have, and is waiting on a Farmers Home Administration loan that will be necessary for him to survive until harvest?"

Bentsen recently introduced legislation calling for immediate implementation of the Farmers Home Administration Economic Emergency loan program that would make up to $600 million in emergency loans available to farmers throughout the nation. Statistics available indicate the need for such assistance. A recent U.S. Department of Agriculture 'Agricultural Price' report indicated the index of farm prices fell another 8 percent in March while farm costs of production rose .6 percent. That has been the trend and prices are now 7.7 percent lower than last year while prices farmers must pay are running 4 percent above last year.

The economic hardships of the last few years already have proven too great for many farmers, pushing many out of the industry. Family farms have been declining in number in recent years as the inflation spiral has combined with inclement weather and other factors to wreak misery on the nation's farm industry.

Finding a way to resolve the dilemma of skyrocketing production costs and weak return on investment (low crop prices) should be one of the priorities of the government because the availability of food affects everyone.

It's a sad fact of life that when a family farm goes out of business it typically cannot be reclaimed. Keeping that farm in business is the first order of business and the way to do that is to make money necessary, available to farmers.

The resolution supported by Sen. Bentsen and 23 other senators would accomplish that goal. It's long past time to take a close look at the future of the American farmer.

Philippine bases vital

The vital importance of U.S. bases in the Philippine Islands was marked recently by a visit to them by Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger.

The defense secretary toured Subic Bay Naval Station, across the Bataan Peninsula from Manila, and Clark Air Base, at Angeles in nearby Pampanga province. Both bases are vital links at this time to the American presence in the Indian Ocean and the Arabian Sea. They serve as major supply and maintenance points for ships and aircraft, cutting the distance in half from the Persian Gulf to the West Coast of the United States.

The bases, used by the 7th Fleet and the 13th Air Force, also stand guard against the growing Soviet influence in Southeast Asia and the buildup of Soviet strength in Cam Ranh Bay — a former American stronghold in Vietnam.

The United States has maintained operations at Subic and Clark Field since the turn of the century. Clark Field, once a U.S. cavalry post called Fort Stotsenberg, was acquired in 1902, at the end of the Filipino resistance to American colonization. Subic Bay was acquired by the U.S. Navy after it defeated the Spanish fleet in Manila Bay in 1898.

Both Clark Field and Subic Bay were retained by this country after the Philippines obtained independence in 1946 and when the bases came under Filipino jurisdiction in 1979. The United States will have use of the bases until 1984, when the use agreement will be reopened for review.

The bases are tangible symbols of America's friendly relationship with the Philippines despite the fact there are Filipinos who consider them hangovers from the colonial era and examples of American imperialism.

Subic Bay and Clark Air Base are important to this country's defenses. Care must be taken to insure that our friendship with the Philippines is kept intact so that our use of these bases can be extended.

Another View:

Sidestepping difficulty

Again we're told that the Social Security retirement fund is in danger of going broke — this time by June 1983 — as a result of payroll tax losses due to rising unemployment and recession. And again the Reagan administration and Congress intend to delay confronting the problem — this time until after the November elections.

Immediate assurance comes from Social Security Commissioner John Svahn that no one need worry about losing benefits next summer, that everyone in Washington recognizes the political dangers of allowing even the thought of that possibility to exist. Svahn knows that stop-gap answers like the current borrowing from other Social Security trust funds will keep the retirement checks flowing at least a few more years.

Yet every time the nation's political leadership sidesteps this obviously painful, probably no-win challenge, it risks making it harder to come to agreement on the unpalatable solutions. Continuing to hand the problem to special study commissions and postponing action until after one election or another has become a bad habit. Surely the measures required to assure the system's solvency, both short and long range, have been studied exhaustively; the hard choices have been clear for some time.

They include taxing Social Security retirement benefits at a set income level like any other private pension income; changing the index used to calculate cost-of-living increases from the Consumer Price Index to average annual increases in prices or wages, whichever is lower; reducing benefits at early retirement, increasing the retirement age, and creating incentives to work beyond that age; shifting Medicare from Social Security to the general fund; bringing federal workers into the system, and adjusting benefits for retirees receiving both government pensions and Social Security.

The first two alone — taxing benefits and changing the cost-of-living index — would add nearly $8 billion a year to the system's revenues, shoring up its stability in the near term. The others would address the program's longer-range solvency. And although all of them present varying degrees of political difficulty, that difficulty cannot excuse continued inaction. Waiting for the opportune political moment has resulted in the overlong delay to this point.

The chances of something being done before next November may be small; no one should be oblivious of the enormous problems entailed. Yet it's important to remind the leadership in Washington that the American people, whose support of Social Security is one of the certitudes of the political scene, expect that house to be put in order.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Nicaraguan 'smoking gun' backfired on Haig

WASHINGTON — The full story can now be told of how a 19-year-old Nicaraguan made a world-class monkey out of Secretary of State Alexander Haig. Incredible as it may seem, Haig was largely responsible for his own humiliation.

Jack Anderson

Though Washington officials would like to forget it, most of the world remembers the carefully staged appearance of young Orlando Jose Tardencilla at a State Department press conference on March 12. The Sandinista stripling was supposed to be living proof that Nicaragua was aiding and abetting leftist guerrillas in El Salvador.

Instead, of course, he told the world — live, on network TV, thoughtfully arranged by his American coaches — that his confessions incriminating the Nicaraguan regime had been wrung out of him by torture and were pure horsefeathers.

It was a bad day for Haig and his hardliners. All hands responsible for the fiasco attempted a hasty disengagement.

The State Department, caught red-handed, could only stammer and stutter in embarrassment. The CIA at first piously proclaimed its innocence of any involvement in the pathetic affair. When the absurdity of this line became obvious, the spooks judiciously leaked a secret document to a trusted reporter, which tended to show that Tardencilla's interrogation by CIA experts had been painstakingly thorough.

The truth of the matter is this: American intelligence people knew about Tardencilla almost as soon as he was captured in January 1981. Not only that, but some State Department officials greeted his confessions with open skepticism. "His story was a little shaky," one diplomatic source recalled. "That whole thing sounded phony."

What particularly turned off State Department people was Tardencilla's claim that he had received guerrilla training in Ethiopia. This made no sense: Nicaragua and Cuba have ample training facilities for El Salvador-bound guerrillas. Why send recruits all the way to Africa?

Eventually, the youth's supposed confession was filed and forgotten, as it should have been.

But early this year, Haig began claiming the United States had proof positive that the Sandinista regime in Nicaragua was deeply involved in El Salvador. He was challenged by Congress and the press to produce the "smoking gun."

It was at this point, apparently, that someone remembered the young Nicaraguan prisoner, whose confession so neatly matched the Haig theory of Sandinista involvement in El Salvador's civil war.

Fortunately for young Tardencilla, his Salvadoran captors had never quite given up hope of exploiting the confession they had extracted under torture. So they kept him alive against the day when his bizarre tale could be turned into useful propaganda.

My reporters Jon Lee Anderson and Lucette Lagnado reached Tardencilla by telephone in Nicaragua, where he is now a national hero. He told them what happened next:

Early in March, he was visited in his solitary prison cell by an American official. Tardencilla said the American told him he could either come to the United States and tell his story or be left to rot in jail.

It was an easy choice to make. The young Nicaraguan had been brutally tortured by the Salvadoran police and kept in solitary for virtually an entire year.

The day after the American's visit, Tardencilla was flown to Miami, then on to Washington. His new captors treated him better; they even took him to an optometrist for new glasses. He was interrogated by a series of experts and interviewed by a psychiatrist.

The 19-year-old soldier, eager to improve his lot, told the interrogators what they wanted to hear. He guessed at specifics and came close enough to satisfy them.

So his interrogators proudly presented the young Nicaraguan as the "smoking gun" that their boss so desperately needed. And it blew up in Al Haig's face.

Footnote: According to Radio Havana, Tardencilla was recently in Cuba to attend a communist youth congress. He was hailed as a hero.

STRIKE DOWN THE BANDS: It's not that Rep. Dan Glickman, D-Kan., has a tin ear. But he thought the $95.5 million Defense Department budget item struck a sour note. "At a time when program after program is being asked to take cuts," he wrote to the Pentagon's No. 2 man, Frank Carlucci, "the administration has seen fit to request nearly $100 million for military bands."

Glickman wanted to know why.

Carlucci replied that the new budget item, representing a 6 percent increase over last year's band expenditure and a 17 percent increase over the year before, was simply to give the band members pay raises and keep pace with inflation.

"Similar generosity has not been extended to programs elsewhere," Glickman grumbled.

WATCH ON WASTE: The Small Business Administration is forbidden to guarantee loans bigger than $500,000. So when Waterworld, U.S.A., an amusement park in Sacramento, Calif., wanted $996,800 to build a giant water slide, the openhanded SBA bureaucrats simply gave the entrepreneurs two loans.

A CHANGING WORLD

PLATO program brings hope to inmates

Computer technology has done a lot for a lot of people the world over. Now it is doing something substantial to ease the long and uncertain rehabilitation road faced by prison inmates.

John Pinkerman

"The whole thing is just great," were the words of Hoyt S. Chambless, supervisor of correctional education at the California Men's Colony at San Luis Obispo, Calif., as he described a program that is rapidly raising the education level of many of the minimum security inmates at that institution.

The program Chambless was so enthusiastic about is the PLATO basic skills learning program developed by Control Data Corp. At present there is a six-week wait for inmates to get into the computer 3rd to 8th grade learning experience. This interest contrasts vividly with that shown by inmates in the conventional schoolroom program normally made available.

There are several indications of the success of this learning that correctional officials hope will motivate inmates to divert from a life of crime after release from prison. First, men considered functionally illiterate have been able to learn basic skills in reading, mathematics and language in an amazingly short time.

For instance, in the traditional classroom environment at the men's colony, an inmate has required nine months to advance one grade level in those three basic subjects. When enrolled in the PLATO one-on-one computer program, the average achievement period has been 13 to 18 hours per subject, or 39 to 54 hours of study to advance that one grade.

This rate of progress has been of special value to inmates who are interested in going on to more advanced programs but must have a 3rd grade and higher reading ability in order to qualify for conventional elementary, high school and college courses (in or beyond prison days) plus vocational training in such skills as dry cleaning, landscaping, shoe repair, auto mechanics, baking, drafting, electronics and more.

At San Luis Obispo, even with a six-week waiting list for inmates to get to one of the eight computer terminals made available for the program there, interest remains high. But, most important, in the words of Keith Hayball, assistant chief of education of the California Department of Corrections, "We're reaching the men we wanted to reach — the hardest ones, the ones least interested in education of any kind. Even the older cons are interested. They tried to fool their way around with classroom teachers, but they can't manipulate the PLATO program, they can't play games, so they apply themselves."

Chambless, naturally, would like to expand the program at his facility, and future budget considerations will determine whether this will be possible. Both he and Hayball see opportunities for the same kind of learning at all levels of incarceration, and the program has been introduced at one of the California institutions for women, but Hayball admits with less success than at the men's colony.

While California may be doing the most with the PLATO learning process, it is being applied successfully in several other states and in the United Kingdom. Minnesota has a basic learning computer program, as do Michigan, Pennsylvania and Illinois.

"We can put this PLATO program in any level institution in the country," Robert Dease, spokesman for Control Data Corp., said. "And, it may save taxpayers a lot of money in the long run. Society seems to vote money for more police officers, for more prisons and the demands are always here for longer sentences. But, these people just pile up in jails. With better education, they just might be less apt to repeat their crimes once they get out and have the basic ingredients to hold a job."

One inmate, nearing parole and hoping for a job, agrees with the enthusiastic endorsement of the program.

"In six months," he said, "I went from a 1st grade to a 9th grade plus level, and if it wasn't for this class and the computer and the teachers, I couldn't have done it."

Crime is still a priority problem in America. But, even if the change is difficult to discern, an education program such as PLATO makes possible, as Dease says, "just might" cut down on the repeaters who are such a major aspect of the problem today.

ART BUCHWALD

Who says only kooks call talk shows?

If we are sincere about deterring the Soviets from starting aggression, I can't think of a better way to scare the hell out of them than by piping in a local radio talk show from any town in America. Nothing would convince the Russians more how much we mean business.

Art Buchwald

"Hi, folks, Jerry Dodge here and welcome to another four hours of 'Let It All Hang Out.' Tonight we're going to deal with the question I am sure has been bothering most of you this week, and that is, 'Should the United States freeze its nuclear missiles or should we continue our arms buildup until we're certain we can zap every commie in the world?' Let's hear from our first caller."

"Jerry, my name is David Umansky and my wife, Adrienne, thinks it would be real dumb to freeze our missiles now because we're on our own 20-yard line, and it's third down and if we don't come up with the big play, that means we'll lose the ball, and put the Russians in field-goal range. At this stage we can't afford to let them get three points on the board."

"How do you feel about giving up our first-strike nuclear capability, David?"

"Sick. Life is an Atari game. Once you've put in your quarter you've committed yourself. And even if you know you're going to be wiped out, you still want to take as many asteroids with you as you possibly can."

"Thanks, David. Hello there, you're on 'Let It All Hang Out.'"

"Jerry, this is Louise Royal of Princeton, and first I'd like to tell you how much I enjoyed your program yesterday advocating the death penalty for people who are late in filing their income tax returns."

"Thanks, Louise. How do you feel about nuclear disarmament?"

"My car pool is against it, except for Bobbie Fletcher who thinks that there are too many nuclear weapons now. But no one pays any attention to her because she believes nuclear war is unwinnable."

"What makes her think that?"

"She said she read somewhere that if we had a war, everyone would be blown to bits so it doesn't make any difference who starts it."

"Have you tried to straighten her out?"

"No, we just laugh at her."

"Thank heavens Bobbie is not in the government. Let's take another call. You're on the air."

"Jerry, this is Anne Kohlmeier. I have a brother-in-law named Marty and he says if you dig a hole five feet deep and cover it with a green garbage bag and then you put a foot of peat moss over it, you can protect yourself against an atomic attack. The garbage bag and peat moss keep the radioactivity from penetrating the hole."

"That's a good tip for our listeners. Why hasn't the government told the people about it?"

"They're afraid there would be a run on green garbage bags. But my brother-in-law says the civil defense people have been stockpiling them and will make the bags available as soon as the whistle blows."

"That's good news. Hello, you're on the air."

"Jerry, I'd just like to say that I think all the people calling in and talking about nuclear war are nuts."

"What do you do for a living, sir?"

"I'm a doctor and we predict 100 million people will be killed in the first 20 minutes if these weapons are used."

"Doctors have been known to be wrong."

"Maybe so. But if people think we're going to be around to make house calls after a nuclear holocaust they're kidding themselves."

"I'm sorry to cut you off, Doc, but you're not making any sense. Sorry about that last caller, folks, but every once in a while we get an idiot on the show, and there is nothing we can do about it. We've got time for one more call, and let's hope he can add something more intelligent to our discussion."

"Jerry, this is Fred from Finster. I listen to your program every night. In case we MARV the Soviets and then they MIRV us, will your show still be on the air?"

"It better be. If the balloon goes up, newspapers will be the first to go and our sponsors are going to need radio spots more than ever."

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Wednesday, April 21, the 111th day of 1982. There are 254 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On April 21, 753 B.C., Rome was founded — as tradition has it — by Romulus, the mythological son of Mars.

On this date:

In 1500, Pedro Alvarez Cabral landed in Brazil, which he claims for Portugal.

In 1509, Henry VIII became King of England on the death of Henry VII.

In 1966, surgeons in Houston made what was said to be the first implant of an artificial heart in a human.

And in 1975, South Vietnam's President Nguyen Van Thieu resigned, denouncing the United States as untrustworthy.

One year ago: The White House announced the Reagan administration had decided in favor of a controversial arms sale to Saudi Arabia that included five AWACS surveillance planes.

Local seniors named merit scholars

Wallace Van Gravitt, a senior at Robert E. Lee High School, and Paul A. Kowert, a senior at Midland High School, today were named winners of National Merit $1,000 Scholarships by the National Merit Scholarship Corporation (NMSC) of Evanston, Ill.

Gravitt, son of Mr. and Mrs. W.V. Gravitt of 2808 Auburn Drive, and Kowert, son of Mr. and Mrs. D.B. Kowert of 3209 N. I St., were among 1,800 students to be named winners of the national scholarships.

Two-thirds of the national scholarships were made possible by specified grants from some 200 corporations, company foundations and other business organizations that also sponsor four-year merit scholarships. The other third is underwritten by unrestricted merit program funds.

There were 13,500 finalists in the 1982 competition and all were considered for national awards which are allocated on a state representation basis. The number of winners in each state is proportional to the state's percent of the nation's total graduating high school seniors. A committee of college admissions officers and secondary school counselors judged the records of all finalists in the competition, considering their high school academic records, achievements outside the classroom, qualities of leadership, two sets of test scores and a recommendation and characterization of each finalist by a school official.

Winners of National Merit Scholarships are the finalists in each state who, in the committee's judgment, have the most distinguished credentials and show promise for future accomplishments.

The 1982 Merit Scholarship competition began about 18 months ago for over one million high school juniors who took the Preliminary Scholastic Aptitude Test/National Merit Scholarship Qualifying Test (PSAT/NMSQT). Some 15,000 high-scoring students qualified as semifinalists and were recognized publicly in the fall of 1981. The number of semifinalists designated in each of the 50 states represented about one half of 1 percent of the state's high school graduating class.

From the nationwide group of semifinalists, about 13,500 advanced to finalist standing by meeting requirements that included being endorsed and recommended by their high school principals, submitting school records that demonstrated high academic standing, and substantiating their performance on the qualifying test with equivalent scores on a second examination. Only finalists are considered for Merit Scholarships and every recipient is chosen from this highly able group of young men and women.

In addition to the merit scholars named today, about 3,500 others are being named this year. On April 8, winners of the corporate-sponsored four-year Merit Scholarships were announced and on April 29, the winners of the college-sponsored four year Merit Scholarships will be announced.

NMSC is an independent, non-profit organization established in 1955 to administer the National Merit Scholarship Program, which is an annual nationwide academic talent search in which over 21 million high school students have partidipated to date. NMSC's efforts are devoted exclusively to scholarship activities financed by grants from a diversified group of about 600 business organizations and educational institutions. By the time the 1982 competition is completed, NMSC's total expenditures and commitments for some 73,000 Merit Scholarships awarded since 1956 will amount to more than $210 million.

Grain elevator explosion kills 5

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Iowa (AP) — Firemen fighting a blaze in a shattered grain elevator where five men were feared dead today had to bring water through up to six miles of hoses following a blast that rocketed chunks of concrete a mile away.

Officials said they thought the explosion, which injured 22 people, sprang from grain dust ignited by a spark.

"It was like hell coming at you," said Chuck Leonard, 26, of Omaha, Neb., who was working nearby but was uninjured.

Firefighters struggling to battle flames fed by high winds complained of low water pressure, but were unable to approach the hydrants closest to the blazing structure because of heat and rubble. Hoses were hooked up to hydrants ranging from a half-mile to six miles away from the 50-year-old elevator, across the Missouri River from Omaha.

The fire was expected to take several days to extinguish. As relatives of the missing men sat in parked cars nearby, Council Bluffs police Capt. Gary Williams said it would be almost impossible to recover bodies from inside the elevator, where tons of corn and soybeans smoldered, and the search for the five men was called off Tuesday night.

"I would say anybody inside has no chance of surviving," said Council Bluffs Assistant Fire Chief Delbert Burdick. "It would be a miracle. Let's put it that way."

Pieces of clothing littered the ground up to 1,000 yards from the fire.

The grain elevator consists of seven tall, concrete storage silos about 100 yards apart clustered around an elevator house. The fire destroyed the elevator house, which was used to hoist up grain so it could be fed into the silos on chutes.

The missing men were working near the top of the elevator house at the time of the blast, and their bodies were believed buried under grain and rubble, officials said.

"I didn't hear the explosion, I just felt its impact," said Kelvin Dilwood, 25, who was laying railroad ties about 50 feet away.

"Once I stopped flying in the air and hit the ground, I got right back up and started running," Dilwood said from his Mercy Hospital bed. "That's when I realized the back of my uniform was on fire and I was running and trying to pull it off at the same time."

Bill may aid people exposed to radiation

WASHINGTON (AP) — The sponsor of a bill designed to help cancer victims who believe they got the disease from above-ground nuclear tests says the measure could get Senate approval before the July 4 recess.

Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, chairman of the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee, said Tuesday he was optimistic that the Judiciary Committee would pass the measure after his own panel approved it 14-1. Sen. Don Nickles, R-Okla., cast the lone negative vote because he was concerned about the cost.

Hatch said chances that the full Senate will approve the bill are good, but he added that time constraints could still frustrate passage.

"It's a race against the calendar," said Hatch. "We can get the votes in the Judiciary Committee to pass it out. I am optimistic we can get the votes on the floor. That would speed things along in the House.

"But those actions will take time, and it is growing late for new legislation, such as this bill, to clear all the hurdles before Congress adjourns."

The Senate Judiciary agency administration subcommittee is scheduled to take up the bill next Thursday. No action has been set in the House.

UTPB professor publishes book on Texas GOP

ODESSA — Dr. Roger Olien, associate professor of history at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin, is the author of a new book, "From Token to Triumph: The Texas Republicans Since 1920."

The book, recently published by the Southern Methodist University Press, describes the changes in the GOP in Texas from the days in which it offered nominal opposition to the Democratic party to the present time, with special attention to the development of grassroots and state-level organizations.

Olien, who was named UTPB's "J. Conrad Dunagan Fellow in History" in 1980 shortly after the university's first endowed professorship was established, has long been interested in Texas and Permian Basin history. He and his wife, Diana, have collaborated in researching and writing the history of the petroleum industry in the Permian Basin. They also have been working on manuscripts on the working man in the oil field and the independent oil operator.

Olien, a faculty member at UTPB since 1973, holds a bachelor's degree from St. Olaf College and a doctorate from Brown University. He also held several teaching positions, including terms at Brown University and Southern Methodist University.

His articles, essays and papers have been accepted for several magazines and historical associations.

The returns of the April 3 election were canvassed during the regular meeting of the Midland College Board of Trustees Tuesday. Hoyle McCright, Bill Kleine and Gloria Hinojosa, re-elected to six-year terms, were administered the oath of office.

Trustees also re-elected Fred Wright Jr., as president; Ken Peeler, vice president, and Mrs. Hinojosa, secretary of the board.

Board members voted to continue with Main, Hurdman and Cranstoun as the college's auditing firm for the 1982-83 year.

Robert R. Phillips, vice president of business affairs, was appointed to serve as the college's agent in matters dealing with Midland College tax shelter annuity.

A division presentation was made by Chuck Koepplin, data processing instructor, on the status and increasing enrollment of the division of technical studies.

Board members met in a two-hour executive session pertaining to a real estate matter. No action was taken.

Sweat, hurry, uncertainty

By EILEEN PUTMAN
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Deirdre MaGuire showed up in baggy gray sweatpants, a ragged T-shirt and sneakers. Who'd have guessed that 30 minutes later she'd be draped with $700 designer creations?

Mario Forte said he was calm. But everyone knew the designer for the Joseph Picone fall fashion show wasn't. He was wringing his hands and muttering, "I'm not very coherent."

Bo Pinder also had her moments. She would swirl and strut with all the confidence in the world in front of buyers who would determine the success of the Picone line. But in a practice run, she tripped over her feet and her curlers fell out.

Gian-marco was the calm one. He entertained himself with "The Mystery of the Shrinking House." But, then, Gian-marco — Forte's son — is nine.

The adults had business on their minds. Fall fashion shows are under way in New York, and what happens at each is critical to a designer's chunk of the city's $16 billion annual garment industry — a quarter of the U.S total.

At 5:15 p.m. — a fashionable 15 minutes late — Forte announced to dressers and models, makeup people and marketing agents: "This is the big moment."

"I think we should start," he said.

Behind a silver curtain, stage manager Rob O'Rourke looked through a peephole and spoke into a telephone headset.

"Warning on the lights. Bring the music up. Models one through five, go!" O'Rourke said, pushing Jennifer Houser into the showroom where 200 people sat elbow-to-elbow under bright lights in the silver and gray showroom.

Jennifer, a willowy blonde, pranced on high brown heels in a double-breasted Highland Tweed jacket and vented skirt. It was a conservative beginning. There would be no outrageous flashes here.

The sounds of a jazz piano filled the showroom. Behind the curtain, a metal chair crashed to the ground.

"No talking," O'Rourke barked. There were a few nervous giggles.

Isabel Oduber was next. The tall Venezuelan model, her brunette hair in tight curls, tossed off a glass of champagne and gave Forte a kiss. Then she went to face the quiet crowd.

No one clapped for the light gray wool pants in a muted plaid and the oversized gray and white scarf she wore wrapped around her shoulders and pulled up to her chin.

Backstage, Paulette Brooks supervised the bow-ties, accessories and a group of young women whose job was to assemble each new creation with lightning speed as models came off the runway.

All did not go smoothly.

As one model unwrapped her stunning belted leather jacket to display a silk blouse, she dropped the belt on the runway. She bent once to pick it up and missed. There was awkward silence. She got it on the second try.

"Eighty-nine! Sharon. Where's Sharon?" he asked frantically.

The crowd looked expectantly toward the curtain. The show went on — without her.

In the end, there was exuberance.

Backstage again, Forte mopped his sweaty face with a handkerchief and modestly professed himself well-pleased. How well-pleased will be decided when the orders come in — and that is weeks away.

Bo Pinder said some of the models got their signals crossed. "It was a little jittery," she said.

Miss Brooks bubbled with enthusiasm. "My girls had the best bows in town," she said with a grin.

Back in her sweatpants and sneakers, Miss MaGuire was unenthusiastic about the Picone's boxy jackets and straight skirts for successful women executives.

"It was very Nancy Reagan," the 19-year-old model said.

NEW YORK (AP) — The average man can make himself look better if he follows a few simple rules when he buys his wardrobe, says a clothing expert.

There are few men who look equally good in every garment they wear, according to Marvin A. Blumenfeld, head of a merchandising consulting firm that represents more than 200 men's stores around the country.

"Too many men are influenced by ads which show what celebrities are wearing," says Blumenfeld, president of April-Marcus Inc., who advises that the first thing a man buying a new item of clothing should do is determine what looks best on him.

"And," he adds, "the best way to determine what will look best is to assess your height, weight and coloring.

"For instance, stripes make you look thinner and checks make you look heavier. Dark colors will also tend to make you look thinner, while lighter ones will highlight stouter areas."

Another consideration, he points out, is build. If you are narrow-shouldered a padded look might make you appear broader, while a natural-looking shoulder will probably be a better bet for a man with broad shoulders.

Still on the subject of slim vs. stout, Blumenfeld advises heftier men to avoid the tapered European look in favor of the more conservative American styles.

"You'll look great in a tapered suit if you're tall and thin, but avoid them if you're short and heavy," he explains.

"A man's coloring also plays an important role in how well a garment looks on him. If you're blonde and fair skinned, then many shades of brown might be very flattering on you while certain darker shades of blue and navy may make you look pale."

On the other hand, he points out, men with darker hair and skin might look "washed out" in certain shades of brown or beige and look far better in darker blues and grays.

"Fit is obviously one of the most important considerations when you're buying a garment," he says. "If you fall in love with an item of clothing but it requires extensive tailoring the chances are you should leave it and find something that fits better and requires less work. Even the best tailors often have trouble reshaping an ill-fitting garment."

Another way that a person can sometimes determine how he looks in an outfit is by the comments he receives from others, Blumenfeld notes.

Flowers can be edible

By MARJORIE RICE
Copley News Service

Mother Nature got you down of late? There is a bright spot in the gloom when clouds scud over and the sky gets dark and blustery. All those showers bring bunches of flowers.

And not only are those flowers georgeous, but they're also edible.

That's right. Nibble a nasturtium, which has a peppery bite. Toss some of that ubiquitous sour grass (oxalis) into a salad, where it will perk up flavors. Top little canapes with delicate blue borage or rosemary flowers.

They won't form a foundation of nutrition for anyone's regualr diet, granted, but it's fun to play with your food now and then, and a lovely salad blooming with spring flowers will make a refreshing change from the usual greens and vinaigrette.

Blossoms also can be used to color and flavor vinegars and teas, and to make seasoned butters and sauces for vegetables. To make geranium butter, for example, stir together ¾ cup softened butter, 1½ teaspoon salt (or to taste — definitely less if you use salted butter) and 2 teaspoons minced geranium leaves. Lemon or rose geraniums may be used.

A herb sauce for vegetables may also be made with geraniums. Make a white sauce from ¼ cup butter and ¼ cup flour, stirring them together over moderate heat to form a bubbly but not brown roux.

All at once, stir in two cups milk, ½ teaspoon salt (optional), 8 whole geranium leaves and 8 tablespoons minced fresh parsley. Heat the mixture, stirring it constantly, until it thickens. Remove the geranium leaves before serving the sauce over vegetables.

The idea of cooking with flowers is nothing new. They have been used for centures to flavor teas, to make jellies and in folk medicine decoctions. According to Zack Hanle, author of "Cooking with Flowers," (Price-Stern-Sloan Publishers, Inc., Los Angeles 1971), the English in Shakespeare's time dined on stewed primroses, gillyflower (carnation) cordial and violet and rose water.

Carnations have a clovelike flavor. Chrysanthemums are familiar to Chinese cooks, who float petals on hot broth. Dandelion greens are familiar as salad ingredients, but the roots can be used in soups and the flowers made into dandelion wine.

DANDELION WINE

2 quarts dandelion flowers
4 quarts water
1 cup orange juice
3 tbsps. lemon juice
3 tbsps. lime juice
8 whole cloves.
½ tsp. powdered ginger
3 tbsps. coarsely chopped orange zest (colored part of peel)
1 tbsp. coarsely chopped lemon zest
3 lbs. grandulated sugar
¼ cake compressed, dried yeast
¼ cup warm water

Wash and pick over the blossoms. Combine them with the water,orange, lemonand lime juice. Add the cloves, ginger, orange and lemon zest and sugar. Bring the mixture to a boil, lower the heat and simmer it for 1 hour. Strain through a filter paper (such as coffee filter paper).

Let the mixture stand until it is just warm and stir in yeast. Let it stand overnight and pour into bottles. After 3 weeks, cork and store the wine in a cool place. Makes 8 pints.

EGGS MARIGOLD

6 hard-cooked eggs
¼ cup mayonnaise
Salt, pepper to taste
2 dried marigold petals, crushed
12 fresh marigolds

%Peel the eggs, cut them in half lengthwise and remove the yolks.Mash the ylks with mayonnaise, salt and pepper to taste. Stir in the crushed marigold petals. Refill the egg whites with the yolk mixture. Remove the petals from the fresh marigolds and tuck them into the centers of the stuffed eggs, arranging them so each egg half resembles a marigold.

Lemon Roll delicious with coffee

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

For cooks who are planning to ask guests to come for "coffee and", we have devised a delightful Lemon Roll. The base is made with a butter-type sponge cake batter. The filling has tangy lemon flavor — and its sunny color is just right. Because the amount of filling is modest in comparison to the thickness of the cake, we suggest you accompany the Lemon Roll with whipped cream.

LEMON ROLL

Lemon Filling, recipe follows
2-3rds cup all-purpose flour
¼ cup cornstarch
6 large eggs, at room temperature
¾ cup sugar
1 teaspoon vanilla
1 tablespoon grated lemon rind
3 tablespoons butter, melted and cooled
Confectioners' sugar
Whipped cream (sweetened to taste and flavored with vanilla)

Prepare the Lemon Filling. Line the bottom of a 15 by 10 by 1-inch jelly-roll pan with wax paper. Sift together the flour and cornstarch. In the large bowl of an electric mixer, at high speed, beat together the eggs, sugar and vanilla until tripled and ivory color — about 10 minutes. Sift the flour mixture, about 1-3rd at a time, over the egg mixture, gently folding it in with a rubber spatula after each addition. Fold in the lemon rind. Drizzle the butter over the batter and gently fold in. Turn into the prepared pan. Bake in a preheated 350-degree oven until surface springs back when lightly touched — 20 to 25 minutes. With a small metal spatula, loosen sides. At once turn out onto a tea towel well covered with confectioners' sugar; remove wax paper. Starting at long side, roll cake and towel together. Place cake, seam side down and rolled in the towel, on a wire rack; cool completely. Unroll cake and spread with lemon filling; roll up cake; cut in half crosswise and arrange on a serving plate. Cover and store in the refrigerator. Just before serving, sprinkle with confectioners' sugar and garnish with whipped cream. Makes 16 servings.

LEMON FILLING

½ cup sugar
2 tablespoons cornstarch
¾ cup water
2 large egg yolks
1 tablespoon butter
2 teaspoons grated lemon rind
¼ cup lemon juice

In a 1- or 1½-quart saucepan stir together the sugar and cornstarch. Gradually stir in the water, keeping smooth. Vigorously stir in the egg yolks until blended. Over medium-low heat, stir constantly until the mixture shows it is boiling because it bubbles and sputters, is at least as thick as mayonnaise and mounds slightly when dropped from a spoon. Off heat, stir in the butter, then the lemon rind and lemon juice. Very lightly place a sheet of saran over the mixture. Chill at least two hours. Makes about 1 and 1-3rd cups.

MARIGOLD CHEESE DIP

1 large pkg. cream cheese, softened
1 cup sour cream
1 tsp. sherry
1 tsp. minced fresh chives
1 tsp. summer savory, finely chopped
1 tbsp. fresh marigold (or calendula) petals, finely chopped

Blend the cheese, cream and sherry to form a smooth mixture. Addthe chives savory and marigold petals, stirring to make a smooth mixture. If desired, stir in salt and pepper to taste. Refrigerate the spread for at least 1 hour before serving.

Endive — elegant vegetable

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

These days the elegant vegetable, Belgian endive, is being used increasingly in the United States. We say this for several reasons. It is more available than ever before; you'll find it in quality markets all over the country. Cooks ask us how to use it. And our finest restaurants offer it in cooked dishes and in salads.

For example, Atlanta's Abbey Restaurant features endive in a delightful salad. Although we have not had the good fortune to visit the restaurant, we do have a copy of the newly published "The Abbey Cookbook" by Hans Bertram. Bertram is the restaurant's chef and his endive-salad recipe appears in the cookbook.

A reviewer whose opinion we value has accurately summed up his contribution: "Bertram features traditional French cooking that has obviously been influenced by nouvelle cuisine. His recipes are elegant and unusual, and will please seasoned cooks who want to diversify their company menus."

ENDIVE AND TOMATO SALAD

1 pound cream cheese, softened
4 tablespoons mayonnaise
4 tablespoons sour cream
2 teaspoons paprika
2 teaspoons curry powder
Minced parsley and fresh dill to taste
4 scallions, sliced
1 shallott, chopped fine (if on hand)
Salt and freshly ground white pepper
1 head romaine lettuce
6 large Belgian endives
3 tomatoes, sliced
Hard-cooked egg, in slices or wedges

Using a blender, food processor, or electric mixer, add mayonnaise, sour cream, paprika and curry powder to cream cheese and blend until smooth. Stir in the parsley, dill, scallion and shallot; season with salt and pepper. If mixture is too thick, add a little fresh cream to it.

On plates lined with romaine leaves arrange the endive leaves in a star pattern. Place slices of tomato in the center and top with the cheese mixture. Garnish with egg. Serves six. Adapted from "The Abbey Cookbook" by Hans Bertram (Harvard Common Press).

The body pays a high price for a bad habit!

There are myths about the use of tobacco and there are facts.
While commercialized aspects of tobacco associates it with a more masculine or feminine look of symbolic stature, the truth about tobacco is that the body pays a high price for a bad habit.
Many studies have indicated that one cigarette reduces the life of a habitual smoker by ten (10) minutes. That is an alarming fact!
Every time a person smokes a cigarette, his thinking process slows down, his teeth become more discolored, irritation of the gums and throat increases and the possibility of heart and circulation diseases become more prominent.
The potential of lung cancer is also increased, and fingernails become stained. With every cigarette, physical endurance and ability decreases.
The use of tobacco is the single most cause of death in the world today. Yet, it is extremely difficult for an individual to quit smoking.
This is where we can help!
Through the procedure of hypnosis, we have helped hundreds of people stop smoking. We can also help you.

Advertising for alcoholic beverages said to be sometimes 'deceptive'

By SARAH FRITSCHNER
Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Does a gorgeous woman in a slinky black dress appeal to you more than a printed label with some pithy product information?

It's supposed to, says Michael Jacobson, executive director of Center for Science in the Public Interest (CPSI), and it's a technique used by the liquor industry to promote what Jacobson refers to as an "addictive drug."

At a recent press conference, Jacobson — standing in front of a collage of "deceptive" magazine advertisements for liquor — announced that CSPI will join other groups to form "a broad alliance of organizations" asking "American producers of beer, wine and distilled spirits to adopt measures that would educate people about problems related to alcohol."

The coalition, described as "interesting" and "diverse" by one liquor industry representative, includes Rep. George Brown, D-Calif., who has introduced a bill in the House that would require a label on alcoholic beverages warning against drinking and driving, drinking while pregnant and other problems associated with liquor.

About 14 groups and sundry individuals have joined CSPI and Brown to begin a sort of consumer blitz campaign. Action for Children's Television, the Consumer Federation of America, Doctors Ought to Care, National Citizens Committee for Broadcasting and other organizations have pooled their efforts and energy to put pressure on the alcohol industry.

For many years, CSPI has fought to have nutrition information and ingredients included on the label of liquor containers. The center was briefly appeased when the Carter administration passed legislation that would require companies to disclose ingredient information upon request. The legislation was due to become effective in 1983. President Reagan rescinded the rules immediately upon taking office, however.

This labeling legislation would help identify products such as Miller's "Lite" beer — what Jacobson refers to as "imitation beer" — which contain preservatives or flavor enhancers. He maintains that such labeling would allow the consumer to choose a product with fewer additives if he wishes.

In addition to endorsing this labeling legislation, the coalition also asks manufacturers — in the spirit of voluntarism extolled by the Reagan administration — to follow the lead of Seagram's distillery, which promotes its brand-name liquor (but not its imported scotch and vodka) through magazine ads that advise readers, "And remember, use good judgment whenever you drink. You'll always enjoy it more."

The coalition wants liquor producers to clean up their advertising practices: to quit promoting their products on college campuses and to stop using ads that associate liquor with sexual, professional or athletic prowess.

But the industry's practices don't need cleaning up, counters Chris Valauri, spokesman for the U.S. Brewers Association. He says advertising serves only to differentiate between products, that people don't decide to drink because of advertising, they just decide what they'll drink because of the ads. About warning labels, he points to a joint study between the departments of Health and Human Services and Treasury which "did not recommend warning labels as an effective means to educate the public."

Valauri calls a new radio advertising campaign a "good first step" in getting involved in alcohol-abuse prevention. Featuring actress Kristy McNichol, the radio spots will be released by the Brewers Association to coincide with graduation and prom time to warn teen-agers about the hazards of drunk driving.

That doesn't satisfy the coalition, however, which asserts that liquor advertisements are far more prevalent than alcohol education advertisements. So the coalition requests that companies "contribute a significant fraction of their marketing budgets" to an independent foundation that would conduct prevention-oriented media campaigns and would not have members of the industry serving on its board.

Once again, Jacobson identified Seagram's as a leader in such efforts. The company contributed $5.8 million to Harvard Medical School two years ago to study the differences in the incidence of alcoholism in different ethnic groups.

Cameron Dunkin, spokesman for the Distilled Spirits Council of the United States (DISCUS), says that liquor distributors already do that kind of work, and that if Jacobson had done his homework there should have been mention of it at the press conference. Last week, for instance, DISCUS helped the Department of Transportation and the National Safety Council sponsor a national meeting to identify and discuss the problems associated with drunk driving.

The Wine Institute (representing California vintners) dissociates itself entirely from Jacobson's charges, according to Brian St. Pierre, director of public relations. Its advertising code, albeit a voluntary one, advises California winemakers not to use athletes or sexual implications in their ads and suggests that the wine always be associated with food. St. Pierre says that wine should go along with "gracious living and decent dining," adding that to drink too much wine wouldn't be "cost-effective. It would be plain dumb to go out and get crocked on chardonnay."

Problems with sexual and other "deceptive" implications, Jacobson concedes, show up more often in ads for foreign liquors, but he contends that a voluntary advertising code adopted for domestic liquor advertisements would set an example that would put pressure on foreign distributors.

The battle between liquor advertisers and consumer advocates is not a new one. Whether pressure from a coalition of consumer groups will convince industry it needs to provide more and better education to the American public remains to be seen.

Natural chemical properties make eggs useful

By HARVEY STEIMAN
Hearst Feature Service

Eggs are ubiquitous. Not only do they star in their own shows (omelets, scrambled, boiled, fried, baked and poached) but they play key supporting roles in cakes, pancakes, custards, cheesecakes, souffles, sauces, crepes, egg rolls and even consomme and red wine.

But concern over cholesterol content has pushed the egg's versatility as a cooking ingredient into the background. The latest evidence seems to indicate that cholesterol in eggs may be a worry only to those who are genetically predisposed toward high cholesterol levels. Nevertheless, there are those — the American Heart Association among them — who urge prudence and suggest limiting egg consumption to two or three a week.

That's too bad, because the egg is vital to an astonishing array of culinary creations. What's even more amazing is that these uses are often based on different properties. The egg yolk emulsifies to make a hollandaise smooth, coagulates to make a custard. The white puffs up to many times its original volume when beaten, perfect for souffles or mousses.

The chemistry of the egg is central to the chemistry of cooking, as Gary Reineccius points out. Reineccius, a professor of food chemistry at the University of Minnesota, wrote extensively about the egg in his article, "The Chemistry of Good Cooking," in the Encyclopedia Brittanica's 1982 yearbook.

"Eggs contain compounds called prospholipids, which resemble detergent molecules in that their structure allows them to bridge the worlds of oil and water," he writes. "Each phospholipid has a fatty end that avoids water and a phosphorous-containing segment that has an affinity for water and carries an electric charge.

"When water, egg yolk and butter are mixed, phospholipids accumulate at the surface of oil droplets, directing one end into the oil and the other end into the water to form a kind of membrane."

What happens is that a tiny shell of water forms around the butter droplet. The electric charge in the phospholipids repels nearby droplets, so the droplets of fat are kept from joining together and rising to the top of the sauce. They are in suspension.

The egg yolk also helps to stabilize hollandaise by making it thick. The thicker the sauce, the harder it is for the butter droplets to come together.

If the emulsion breaks down, the sauce separates. But that's easy to fix: simply form another emulsion by beating another egg yolk in another pan and slowly work in the "broken" sauce. The emulsion re-forms.

The same principle holds for mayonnaise that breaks. But there is a rather delicate range of temperatures at which this chemistry works in hollandaise. If the eggs are overheated, they curdle. Once they curdle, there is no going back.

What happens is that egg yolks begin to coagulate at 149 degrees F. By the time they reach 158 degrees F., they will not flow. In hollandaise sauce, the egg must be heated so that it starts to thicken but does not coagulate.

The reason hollandaise has a different texture from white sauce is that the thickening occurs differently. While hollandaise gets its texture by holding tiny droplets of butter in suspension with egg yolk, white sauce does it by developing the starchiness of flour.

In cold liquid, each flour granule absorbs only a little moisture. Hot water, however, breaks starch down into miscroscopic chains, which can absorb much more water. Eventually, they absorb so much water that the protein coating around the flour bursts and the starch chain spills out into the water, thickening the liquid further.

HINTS FROM HELOISE

Removing white water spots

DEAR HELOISE:

Water was accidentally spilled on my antique walnut table, and nobody noticed it until it had made a white water spot.

Is there any way I can remove the stain without having to refinish the furniture? — Margaret Ruker

If not, a dab of oil, such as lemon oil furniture polish or mayonnaise, sometimes works when rubbed into the stain.

Should none of these work, the damage may be too extensive and refinishing is your last resort.

Be persistent, but gentle, and you should be able to get rid of the ring without calling in a professional. — Heloise

TUMBLING THIMBLES

Dear Heloise: My thimble was always falling off my finger.

Now I moisten my finger and place the thimble on my wet fingertip.

It stays there until I remove it. — Mrs. Charles Bellas

BABY'S BOTTLE

Dear Heloise: As a busy farm wife and mother, I couldn't always find time to sit down and rock my infant son at bottle time (he was able to hold the bottle himself).

He didn't like holding a cold bottle, either, as I gave it to him out of the refrigerator. One day I took one of those wrist bands that tennis players wear and slipped it over the bottle.

No more cold fingers, and he can get a better grip on the slippery bottle.

Of course, it's always best, if at all possible, to take the time to sit and hold your child during this important time.

They grow up so fast, we need to enjoy them while we can. — Cindy Russelburg

RUSTY DRIVE

Dear Heloise: I have a new home with a concrete driveway. The moisture or water from the car muffler leaks onto the drive.

This moisture has left a reddish-orange spot wherever the car was parked on the driveway.

We've gotten no solution from auto mechanics on how to stop the leak, so do you have a solution for removing the stain from the concrete? — George Grant

If a commercial rust remover won't do the job, the only suggestion I have is to try muriatic acid. It's available at most hardware stores.

Now, it is an ACID, so treat it accordingly — with caution. Read the instructions on the label carefully, and be sure to keep it out of reach of unsuspecting hands! — Heloise

NAIL POLISH HOLDER

Dear Heloise: A dandy holder for a nail polish bottle can be made by simply filling a four-ounce jar (pimiento jar) with BBs or shot from shotgun shells.

These small beads permit you to tilt the fingernail polish bottle at any angle without danger of tipping it over. — Corine Marquis

COOKING OUT

Dear Heloise: Cooking out on the grill tonight?

Plan ahead and thaw out several pieces of meat the day before, and make a day of barbecuing. Got the coals going anyway, so why not make full use of them (especially if you can get Hubby to do it....). Then wrap and freeze for future use. — J.J.A.

+++

If you have a favorite barbecue secret you'd like to let others in on send it to Heloise, P.O. Box 32000, San Antonio, TX 78216. She'll pass the best ones along to readers, through her column, but won't be able to acknowledge yours individually.

DEAR ABBY

Crash diet dangerous to dog, too

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I live in a condo that has a rule: "No pets weighing over 17 pounds may live on the premises." When I moved here three years ago, Mimi, my French poodle, weighed 16 pounds, 4 ounces, so she was no problem.

Later Mimi put on a little weight, but not enough to make any difference (I thought) until the manager came to my door demanding to weigh her. I later learned that the reweighing of Mimi had been instigated by a neighbor who had a grudge against me because once or twice I broke the rule of smoking in the elevator.

Well, Mimi weighed 21 pounds, so I was told I couldn't keep her at the condo. I immediately took her to the vet, who assured me that he could get Mimi's weight down to 17 pounds in two weeks, so I left her there.

Two weeks later when I picked Mimi up, I almost didn't recognize her. She weighed 16 pounds, 2 ounces, and she looked sad-eyed and listless. When I got her home she followed me around and whined constantly. Also, she ate practically nothing.

To make a long story short, Mimi died two weeks later. The vet said it was her heart, but I know it was the diet. Now I blame myself for letting that vet put her on that crash diet. It's too late for Mimi, but please print this to let animal lovers know that it is cruel and inhuman to put a dog through what I did. I should have moved and taken my chubby little angel with me. — SELFISH AND SORRY

DEAR SORRY: You meant well, so don't blame yourself. Readers, crash diets are hazardous to your health, too!

DEAR ABBY: Can you settle an argument? My husband says that Zsa Zsa and Eva Gabor are twins. I say they are not. Who is right? — WANTS TO KNOW IN WISCONSIN

DEAR WANTS: You're right. I have always known that Zsa Zsa was the older, but I wanted to confirm it, so I asked Eva.

Eva replied, "I am younger than Zsa Zsa. But, unfortunately, by only two years."

DEAR ABBY: I agree with "For Equality," concerning the cost of the wedding. Yes, it certainly should be split 50-50 between the bride and the groom (or their families).

But how about the expense of courting? When the couple is dating, in almost every case the male pays for all of it. Shouldn't that be on a 50-50 Dutch-treat basis, too?

Let the feminist groups challenge the age-old tradition of the male always picking up the tab. — FAIR IS FAIR

DEAR FAIR: I'm all for the 50-50 split. Then gone will be the days when a guy buys a girl a chocolate malted and then tries to squeeze it out of her.

DEAR ABBY: I would appreciate it if you would give me an answer to a question that has been on my mind for years.

On what occasion does a person use "Excuse me" and "Pardon me"? Is there a difference between the two?

If there is, I would very much like to know the correct usage or application. — ED N.

DEAR ED: Some years ago, "Excuse me" was used when a person asked permission to leave the room, and "Pardon me" was the correct form of apology for some breach of etiquette. "Pardon" sounds a tad more elegant than "excuse" because of the French "pardonnez-moi."

Today, the terms are interchangeable, unless, of course, you are referring to what Gerald Ford did for Richard Nixon.

DEAR ABBY: I am a married woman in my early 20s. Am I still required to buy my mother a gift for Mother's Day?

Last year I sent her a Mother's Day card, and she seemed so disappointed. She said, "Three kids, and all I get is one little card — no flowers or anything!"

Granted, I love my mom, but we can't afford gifts for every holiday that comes along. — GOT THE MOTHER'S DAY BLUES

DEAR GOT: One is never "required" to send a gift or card. It's the thought that counts. As long as you remembered your mother on Mother's Day, you need not feel guilty.

Consumers have right to return defective clothing

After following all the instructions, what do you do when the garment you just purchased fades, shrinks, stretches or falls apart?

Take it back, says Bill Seitz. "By law, you have a right to expect every garment you buy to be serviceable. If it isn't, you're entitled to a refund."

Seitz, executive director of the Neighborhood Cleaners Association (NCA) — a group representing more than 3,000 dry cleaners in nine eastern states — says that if enough consumers would exercise their rights and return substandard goods, merchants would make sure they stock quality merchandise.

Seitz says every consumer is entitled by law to a permanent care label and an accurate care procedure on every garment, a guarantee that every garment purchased is serviceable and a refund from the store when the garment is unserviceable.

Seitz says that being trendy can be expensive. "High fashion generally doesn't wear well. The dyes used to create those beautiful, bright, fashionable colors won't hold up, and — unfortunately for the consumer — neither will many of the fabrics used," he says.

Take care when selecting brightly-colored silks. Many will fade from sunlight and even from fluorescent lighting.

Gastronomic glossary solves menu mysteries

By VINOD CHHABRA
Hearst Feature Service

You say your dining-out formula is foolproof: Just stay away from dishes you can't pronounce or don't understand. But that formula is losing its magic — and you're passing up a parade of delectable dishes.

ALFREDO, All': A style of preparing fettuccine; generally in America, mixed with butter, grated Parmesan cheese and heavy cream.

ALSACIENNE, A L': The cuisine of the Alsace region of France, just across the river from Germany, tends to be hearty. Alsacienne may indicate a garnish of sausages, ham, boiled potatoes or sauerkraut.

ANGLAISE, A L': Boiled, if it's vegetables. Fish in this style, though, is generally coated with egg and bread crumbs and sauteed in butter. But if it's sole Anglaise, it simply means English or Dover sole.

ANGUILLA, ANGUILLE: Eel.

ARMAGNAC: Brandy of the Armagnac region.

ASPIC: Jellied broth, used to glaze cold meat or vegetables, often molded. Chopped aspic is used as a pate garnish.

BISQUE: A thick soup; thickened with cream and sometimes egg yolk and garnished with pieces of the main ingredient, such as lobster.

CALAMARI: Squid; cuttlefish.

CAPONATA: Cubed eggplant cooked with peppers, celery, onion, tomatoes and olives in olive oil and generally served cold as an appetizer.

CARDINAL: A sauce of fish broth and bits of lobster and cayenne pepper, mixed into a white sauce or cream sauce, accompanying seafood.

DENTE, AL: Literally, "to the tooth." The way pasta should be cooked — until springy-firm, not soft and mushy. As in al dente pasta.

DIANE, STEAK: Created by Chef Nino at the Drake Hotel in New York City, it is a thin steak sauteed in butter with shallots. Sometimes, it is flamed tableside with cognac or brandy, and sherry occasionally is added to the sauce.

ESCALOPE: A boneless slice of meat, flattened.

FLAMBE: flamed with brandy or other liquor.

FRA DIAVOLO: A style of preparing lobster and other shellfish in an herb sauce, spiced with chopped parsley, oregano and crushed dried pepper.

FUME: Smoked.

GLACE: Glazed, candied or iced.

GNOCCHI: Dumplings made of flour — sometimes also bread crumbs — milk, eggs, Parmesan and nutmeg.

JEREZ: Sherry.

JULIENNE: A style of cutting vegetables or meat into matchstick-like strips.

KIEV, A LA: Chicken breasts prepared in the style of the city of Kiev — pounded, stuffed with butter, seasonings and herbs. Then, coated with flour, egg and bread crumbs and sauteed.

LAIT: Milk.

LANGOUSTE: Spiny lobster.

LANGOUSTINE: Dublin Bay prawn; saltwater crayfish.

LEGUMES, LEGUMI: Vegetables.

MISTO: Mixed.

MOELLE, A LA: Prepared with bone marrow.

MOUSSELINE: Hot or cold dishes enriched with whipped cream, such as mousse. Also a sauce of Hollandaise or mayonnaise with whipped cream.

MOUTARDE: Mustard. Also a Hollandaise sause spiced with mustard.

NEW ENGLAND-STYLE: In chowder — made with milk, as opposed to the Manhattan-style chowder, which calls for tomato.

NOIX: Nuts. But when referring to meat, it is a roast, usually rump or round.

PESCE: Fish.

PICCANTE: Piquant, spicy.

PIGNOLI: Pine nuts.

PIZZAIOLA, ALLA: A Neapolitan sauce made with tomatoes, oil, garlic, green peppers, onions, oregano, black pepper and, sometimes, bay leaf and basil.

POLONAISE, A LA: Polish style, as interpreted by the French. Usually a vegetable topped with browned bread crumbs and chopped hard-boiled eggs and parsley.

POMME: Apple.

POMME DE TERRE: "Apple of the earth" — potato.

RAGU: Rich meat sauce of Bologna: onions, carrots and celery cooked in oil with ground meat, stewed in white wine and broth and flavored with tomato paste and nutmeg. Usually served over pasta with grated parmesan cheese and occasionally enriched with heavy cream.

SALA: Sauce, gravy.

SPIEDINI: Spitted; broiled or grilled on skewers.

TOURNEDOS: A thick slice of tender beef from the filet or tenderloin, usually very quickly sauteed in butter, sometimes broiled.

VEAU: Veal.

VELOUTE: A velvety-sauce made with flour, butter and broth. Sometimes milk, cream or egg yolks enrich the sauce.

VENITIENNE: A French sauce named for Venice. It is made with shallots, chervil, tarragon, parsley, a little wine vinegar, flour, butter, broth and egg yolk. Sometimes, it contains a little pureed spinach.

VICHYSSOISE: Don't let the French name fool you. This is soup created in New York City's Ritz-Carlton, and is a variation of the classic French leek-potato soup. The mixture of leeks, potatoes, chicken broth and heavy cream is pureed and served chilled, with chopped chives.

XERES, AU: With sherry.

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

Q. — There are a lot of outside noises in our neighborhood that we would like to keep out of our house. It isn't too bad in the winter when the windows usually are closed, but gets very annoying in the warm weather when the screens are in place and the windows open. Is there any way to keep out this noise?

A. — This is a difficult problem to solve for the very reason you mentioned — noise can't be stopped if there is nothing in the way to stop it. You can only hope to make it less annoying once it gets into your rooms by having sound-absorbing materials there, such as drapes, rugs and upholstered furniture. These things keep the noises from bouncing around, but the overall effect is likely to be less than you want.

Q. — I found an old kitchen cabinet made of wood in our attic. It is in good condition structurally, but the white paint finish on it looks kind of messy. It has such a good design that we are thinking of using it in the living room if the wood is of good quality. Is there any way of finding out before we go to the trouble of taking off the old finish?

A. — None that I know. But you need not completely strip the cabinet to make that determination. Use paint remover to take off the finish on the top of it. When you do and decide it is wood that is pleasing to the eye, you can go ahead with the rest of the cabinet. However, be prepared for the possibility that a cabinet with a good top may have a lesser quality wood on the sides. After the finish is off, you can stain it, seal it and finish it with a clear finishing material. Should the removal fail to take off some of the coloring, try sanding and then, if necessary, bleaching. The bleaching will produce a uniform lightness which then can be stained to a desired tone. All of this is based on the assumption that you do not want to repaint the cabinet. If you do, then the staining and bleaching are not necessary.

The techniques of using varnish, shellac, lacquer, remover, stain, bleach, etc., are detailed in Andy Lang's booklet, "Wood Finishing in the Home," which can be obtained by sending 50 cents and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to Know-How, P. O. Box 477, Huntington, NY 11743.

Woman writes novel about war brides

By CAROL DEEGAN

NEW YORK (AP) — The letter was published in "Ladycom" magazine, a publication which covers military lifestyles. Submitted by Lois Battle, it told of her new novel, "War Brides," and asked real World War II war brides to send photographs and personal stories for inclusion in a press kit promoting the novel.

The letter said:

"If you have any mementos (newspaper clippings, photographs, etc.), or if you would be willing to share your reflections about your own experiences as a war bride, I would be most interested in hearing from you."

Ms. Battle, the daughter of an Australian war bride, said she received about 70 responses to the letter, and has answered each one of them.

"People sent me baby pictures, wedding pictures, their passports, their logs from the ship coming over ... Some of them sent me tapes ... And I really felt that I knew a great deal about many of these women and the things they went through," she said.

"War Brides" is the fictional story of three young women who marry American soldiers and who leave their native homeland of Australia to live with their husbands in the United States after World War II.

"I've gotten some letters from war brides that are mainly, 'gee, I, too, met my husband when I was a volunteer in a hospital,' or letters saying, 'I was also a widow who came over with a child,' that sort of similarity," Ms. Battle said.

"I got one very touching letter from a man who married a French war bride. She was now dead and he sent me a picture of her with their first baby and said how wonderful their marriage had been.

"I'm a sucker for sentiment anyway, when I read or go to the movies or something, I really like to laugh or cry, and I would get these letters and they would make me feel — I can't describe it, they were so touching."

Ms. Battle, now in her mid-30s, is a former actress living in New York City. She said her idea for the novel was sparked, in part, from stories her mother had told her about her own arrival in the United States after World War II.

"I knew I wanted to write about marriage, and not the true romance kind of thing. And it was so obvious that I would choose that sort of dramatic example of commitment to marriage ... like my mother for example. I asked myself, 'Who would leave a country and make a commitment like that?'

"The wife would not only be giving up her name, friends, family and job, but her entire country and background," she pointed out.

Ms. Battle said her mother, who lives in Ohio, enjoyed the book.

The author is now working on her third novel.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Thursday, April 22, 1982

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Actor Jack Nicholson and singer Glen Campbell share this birthday with you. Also born on this date: actress Charlotte Rae, the popular Mrs. Garrett on TV's "Facts of Life." Personal effort is the key to making more money in the months ahead. Close associates will exert considerable influence on how you fare. A business venture turns out better than you anticipated. Those looking for jobs meet with unusual success. Give credit where it is due and return favors. A natural flair for decorating could lead to a whole new career. A fulfilling love life does not happen by accident. Deliberate carefully before choosing mate.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Career progress is linked to your ability to make difficult choices. A casual flirtation could turn out to be something more. Approval is now possible for an old project; revive it.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Do not be too shy to ask for help if you find yourself in a jam. You must not neglect your intellectual growth. Do what you can to effect profitable changes.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Your intuition is highly accurate now. Follow it! You cannot continue to avoid a financial question. Unconventional relationships may bring happiness to some.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A lack of pressure is a blessing now as you attempt to finish a major project. Keep your priorities to yourself. A kindly gesture will be reciprocated by member of opposite sex.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): The spotlight is on fulfilling friendships and satisfying commitment. Much to your surprise, an old debt is paid. Simple activities hold special appeal.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Consult the experts if having difficulty in making a career or business decision. Someone pays you a delightful compliment. Welcome work methods that will boost profits.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You are not inclined to force issues. Humor a difficult individual and you win a valuable new business ally. Someone who appears to be snubbing you may be trying to attract your attention.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You are compensated for working overtime. A meeting takes you outside of your regular social circle. Avoid discussing politics or religion, or you could offend a friend.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Spending some time away from your job could sharpen your intellectual powers. Touch base with someone overseas who can help you increase profits.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You may need to augment your income with a second job. Contact friends for employment leads. Use logic when faced with an emotional tirade from a member of the opposite sex.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Your faith in a loved one is justified, but a colleague may not be completely honest with you. Merchandising a special skill could increase your income.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): The artistic touches you add to a dull project draw raves from both your colleagues and your boss. Your work is being watched and evaluated.

At this very moment, a creeping paralysis is attacking many bridge players throughout the world. This strange disease attacks declarers whenever they encounter a bad trump break!

North-South glided into four hearts on a perfectly normal auction. As the cards lie, however, three no trump is a superior contract. Eleven tricks can be made by finessing the eight of hearts once the 5-0 break is discovered.

West led a spade. Declarer correctly ducked in dummy and East won the queen. He shifted to the jack of clubs, won by the ace. Declarer led a trump to the jack. When East showed out declarer's thought processes went into a state of instant shock. He decided that he had to pick up West's trumps, so he came to hand with the queen of diamonds and led a trump to dummy's eight. Then he cashed the king of trumps.

Now all declarer had to do was get back to his hand to draw the remaining trumps. He tried to do so by leading a diamond to the jack. Unfortunately, West ruffed and returned a spade. Declarer was locked in dummy with the ace with no way to get to his hand. No matter what he played, the defenders were bound to score their black-suit kings and another diamond ruff for a two-trick set.

Declarer forgot that the main object in rubber bridge is to make your contract. Instead of worrying about West's five trumps, declarer should have concentrated on making ten tricks. The surefire line is to draw four rounds of trumps, leaving West with the master trump. Now declarer starts on diamonds. West is welcome to ruff whenever he chooses, but declarer will be able to discard one of his black-suit losers on dummy's fourth diamond — the ace of spades is still an entry to dummy. Declarer will lose only one trump trick and two in the black suits.

Rubber bridge clubs throughout the country use the four-deal bridge format. Do they know something you don't? Charles Goren's "Four-Deal Bridge" will teach you the strategies and tactics of this fast-paced action game that provides the cure for unending rubbers. For a copy and a scorepad, send $1.75 to "Goren-Four Deal," care of this newspaper, P.O. Box 259, Norwood, N.J. 07648. Make checks payable to Newspaperbooks.

Reagan home testament to past

By DEBORAH CAULFIELD
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

LOS ANGELES — In 1957, B-movie and TV actor Ronnie Reagan and wife Nancy moved into their sparkling new $100,000 home in the Pacific Palisades area of Los Angeles.

In 1980, President Ronald Reagan and first lady Nancy put that house on the market for approximately $1.9 million.

The 5,000-square-foot three-bedroom home finally sold earlier this year for a price reported at a little more than $1 million.

It had not been an easy sale. The house was judged to be overpriced in some news reports last year, leading one man to offer to buy it for a combination of cash and Blue Chip stamps. Earlier this year it was sold, then unsold when certain closing papers were reported as being forged.

Its association with the Reagans, however, may not be completely over. It may be remembered as an historical oddity.

The house has been a source of high amusement to audiences across the country who have seen a three-minute TV commercial starring the house and the Reagans.

The University of Southern California Cinema School graduate travels on the lecture circuit with his program. He has shown it in more than 40 cities.

The Reagan clip, according to Hall, elicits hilarity when shown. Not only does it feature the president and first lady giving a chatty tour of their home, but the object of their lavish attention — electricity and its myriad uses — could not be a more dated subject. It brings to mind the days when cereal ads screamed, "Shot with sugar — through and through!"

Why Reagan and electricity? Reagan served as host of "General Electric Theater" for nine years on TV. At the same time he acted as a GE spokesman. In fact, the Reagan house was reported to have 90 electrical circuits — roughly four times more than a normal house that size — to accommodate all the appliances and gewgaws that he received from the company. The house was considered a General Electric showcase home, and one electrical contractor has estimated the cost of the additional wiring for that purpose as $50,000 — in 1950 dollars.

HALL SAID he discovered the spot quite by accident on a reel of old commercials: "It interested me as a commercials archivist because it provided an example of a celebrity endorsement commercial where the celebrity was more prominently featured than the product."

Hall said it reminded him of the old Edward R. Murrow "See It Now" series on CBS — specifically when Murrow was taken for a room-by-room tour of the Kennedys' house when John F. Kennedy was still a senator. There are similar elements in the Reagan tour. The viewer becomes intimately acquainted with every light switch, dimmer and fixture in the house.

Some highlights of the action: Moment of high drama: After fiddling with a bank of dimmer switches, Ronnie wants to show the audience "the most exciting thing."

Hearing what Nancy did in her spare time: When Ronnie announces, "Now if this weren't a company night, you'd probably find Nancy in the bedroom...." Nancy fills in: "Reading...."

Or ostensibly what the view was. Some sources say that the spot wasn't shot at the Pacific Palisades house at all, but on a set made to look like their house.

Audiences also learn that Reagan read scripts by fluorescent lighting; that behind Nancy's bed was a switch that controlled every light in the house — and that she has been looking up at him when he is speaking in that classic Nancy Reagan gaze since 1957.

Hall does not feel the film is detrimental to the Reagans. "It's amusing, certainly. It's funny to see them talk with such gusto about such trivial things as light switches. But it is an honest view of their life — the way they wished to be seen at that time. It was also interesting to see things like how the first lady set the table in 1957."

The spot was run with a series of other celebrity endorsements of such products as refrigerators under the "Living Better Electrically" campaign. According to a spokesman for the Edison Electrical Institute, the campaign was sponsored by the electrical industry during the days when it was considered economical to promote all-electric homes. Electrical appliance manufacturers, electrical contractors and various electric companies contributed funds to produce the spots.

THE CAMPAIGN was stopped in the late 1960s, the spokesman said, "for obvious reasons."

Energy was becoming a scarce commodity and the trend was to urge people to conserve, rather than consume.

The Reagan house stands as a living testament to days past. One contractor figured that with its 90 electrical circuits the house could handle up to 200,000 watts. Most houses that size, he said, have a maximum load of 25,000 watts.

"That's a heck of a lot of circuits," he said.

However, a representative from the Los Angeles Department of Water and Power said the Reagans paid no more on their electricity bills than any other household of that size. He would not give the "average" figure.

Hall recently sold his "Mighty Minutes" concept to Carson Productions. The first in an anticipated series of specials will be aired in late May. The Reagan spot, according to Hall's manager Jay Levy, was not included in the first show. "We'll probably try to use it in the second or third show," he said during a phone interview.

Given continued White House reluctance to give permission for any old film clips of the president to be aired, "Living Better Electrically" will most likely continue as a cult classic — but off the air.

You'll like this ballet

NEW YORK (AP) — I've never liked ballet. It always seems to consist of thin, pale, serious souls either engaged in A Dance to Spring or carrying on like a swan with gastroenteritis.

That attitude changed after a pal whipped out a gun and made me see the American Ballet Comedie, seven classically trained leapers now lurking at the City Center. Now I like ballet, at least this kind.

It's hard to describe this kind. But it resembles the aftermath of a summit meeting attended by George Balanchine, Martha Graham, Jose Greco and Bob Fosse, and presided over by Ernie Kovacs.

You get "La Stampa De Feeta," a flamenco piece of toy guitars and a fierce battle between a senorita and her dress train. And a Russian folk dance where the Molotov Brothers shout "Nyet!" and "Brezhnev!" and such during high points in their hoofing.

There's also a starkly modern work where a woman, as Anguished Society, twists herself into a knot that won't come loose. And a tick-tock, hips-forward salute of sorts to Bob Fosse, "All That Pelvis."

All this tomfoolery, 15 numbers in all, springs from the brainpans of Bob Bowyer and JoAnn Bruggeman, proprietors of and dancers in the American Ballet Comedie, now in an extended-run engagement here.

"We've worked together since 1973 but we're still 19," explains Bowyer, a tall, bespectacled delegate from Los Angeles. Like his partner, he has mischief in his manner, the air of a freelance hotfoot artist.

"We started out very seriously," insists Miss Bruggeman, who's from the republic of Queens, N.Y., teaches at Adelphi University and has done time at such entrechat emporiums as Jacob's Pillow.

Program explains effects of media

NEW YORK (AP) — Studying one subject for "Media Probes" often suggested an idea for a second topic, a process filmmaker Mickey Lemle describes as "a little metaphysical — tough to put your finger on."

"You look at photography, the soap opera, TV news, language and so on, and you start to see similarities — the stories begin to feed on one another," Lemle says of the an eight-part series he made for Public Broadcasting Service.

"In researching the show on language," says Lemle, director, cameraman and editor for the series of half-hour programs, "I came across the work of a little-known classicist by the name of A.E. Haverlock, who'd written a book called 'Preface to Plato.'

"The book included an obscure dialogue between Plato and Socrates on the merits of writing. Socrates came out strongly against writing — that it ruined the memory of the young, that it was lazy and indulgent.

"Plato says, 'Yeah, you're right about that, except you need writing for the welfare of Athens — you need it to step back and analyze from a distance what's happening.'

"When I read that dialogue," Lemle recalls, "I said, 'Wait a minute, that sounds like my sister talking about the effects of television.'

"Any time a new media form comes along," he says, "the older generation is reluctant to accept it. The young take to it like fish to water, and it changes the way they think, the way they live."

That notion, Lemle says, suggested a theme for the last program in the series, "The Future."

"Media Probes," a magazine-style survey of the media and how they affect the way people live and think, was introduced by Kit Laybourne, the producer, and Lemle in pilot form, three years ago.

"We thought we'd show the pilot, take a week off, and come back and start work on the series," Lemle says. "A year and a half later, we'd put together a budget and were able to go to work. We still haven't found a corporate underwriter for the series."

Eventually, the series was produced for about $1.3 million, raised by the filmmakers from the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, three foundations, and public TV stations.

Each show includes documentary, animated and dramatized segments, with a different personality as host: model Cheryl Tiegs for "Photography," Ruth Warrick, the actress, for "Soap Operas," veteran anchorman John Cameron Swayze for "TV News," comedian Victor Borge for "Language," columnist Mark Shields for "Political Spots," designer Bill Blass for "Design," writer Tony Kahn for "Soundaround," and futurologist Peter Schwartz for "The Future."

"What we did was give ourselves a maximum amount of research time, more or less three months for each program," Lemle says. "To start with, we cast out a net, and looked at what we caught.

"One of the things we found, for sure, is that television really is about characters. People make the best television, and that's what the research process was all about — who were the people, and how did they fit in what we were trying to do?"

The important thing is to show the audience, Lemle says, that the different media affect people in different ways.

Clements paroles nine convicted in area

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Nine persons convicted of crimes in the Midland area have been paroled by Gov. Bill Clements, based on recommendations by the Texas Board of Pardons and Paroles.

In addition, Robert L. Sanders, on parole since June 1979, had his parole revoked because of a new conviction. He was initially sentenced to five years for burglary convictions in Tarrant and Midland counties.

Those receiving paroles recently were: Billy Harold Champion, convicted of robbery in Ward County Dec. 28, 1978, paroled to Smith County after serving and earning six years, three months of a 10-year sentence;

Wilson Jerome Chandler, paroled to Kerr County after serving and earning three years, two months of a five-year sentence for burglaries in Ector and Tom Green counties;

Margarito Hernandez, paroled to Midland County after serving and earning 15 years, seven months of a 30-year sentence for delivery of heroin, prior conviction, in Midland County Jan. 7, 1975;

John Grady Jones, paroled to Lubbock County after serving and earning two years, three months of a five-year sentence for conviction of forgery in Howard County Feb. 16, 1981;

Terri Lynn Kaufman, paroled to Midland County after serving and earning one year, five months of a 15-year sentence for conviction of forgery by passing in Midland County Aug. 4, 1981;

Gereado R. Mendoza, paroled to El Paso County after serving and earning seven years, one month of a 15-year sentence for conviction of robbery in Pecos County Sept. 7, 1978;

Frank Gillette Simpson Jr., paroled to Ector County after serving and earning one year, four months of a two-year sentence for conviction of felony DWI in Ector County Oct. 29, 1981;

Catarino Ybarra, paroled to Walker County after serving and earning 17 years, five months of a 50-year sentence for conviction of sale of heroin in Midland County Sept. 21, 1973.

And Robert Charles Henson was released on mandatory supervision after serving and earning all of a five-year sentence for burglary with intent to commit theft in Ector County July 24, 1978.

Social studies authority guest lecturer at UTPB

ODESSA — A leading authority on social studies education in the United States and abroad will be the guest lecturer at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin Thursday.

Richard E. Gross, professor of education at Stanford University, will speak on "What is an Ideal Social Studies Program?" at 8 p.m. in the UTPB student lounge.

Dr. Thomas L. Dynneson, associate professor of pedagogical studies at UTPB, said Gross is probably the most outstanding author in social studies today.

"He has been a key person in developing California social studies programs and helped write guidelines for California schools," Dynneson explained.

Dynneson noted the talk should be of interest to teachers, parents and school administrators as well as those involved in citizenship programs. "Dr. Gross will be available to both Midland and Odessa schools for consultation purposes while he is in the area," he said.

Gross, a senior faculty member at Stanford University, is the author of textbooks used throughout the United States on social studies, American citizenship and history. He also is a contributing author to such educational journals as "The Social Studies," "Social Education," "The School Executive" and "Scholastic Teachers."

Gross received a master of science degree from the University of Wisconsin in 1946 and a doctorate in educuation from Stanford University in 1951.

The program, co-sponsored by the Odessa Chamber of Commerce, is free and open to the public. For more information, contact Dynneson at 367-2389.

Improvement funds requested

Mayor G. Thane Akins has requested release of $150,000 in Community Development Block Grant funds for various improvements to neighborhood parks in south and east Midland.

The funds, which were requested Tuesday on behalf of the city of Midland, are part of a $1.094 CDBG program approved for the city by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development.

If approved, the initial phase of park improvements totaling an estimated $122,000 will provide for installation of sprinkler systems for Halff, Washington and Sparks Parks. All fall within Community Development Target Areas where improvements will principally benefit low to moderate income families as outlined by HUD.

Additional funds will be used to equip a tot lot area for Washington and playground equipment for Sparks Park.

Since all improvements are intended to enhance the environment, the projects and related construction have been determined to have no significant environmental impact on the area.

Suggestions and comments by interested citizens concerning the improvements may be submitted in writing by May 4 to the City Manager's Office, City of Midland, P.O. Box 1152, Midland, 79701.

Witnesses said to hurt case against 13 cops

HOUSTON (AP) — Witnesses who refused to testify "severely hampered" the case against 13 police officers who were fired or suspended without pay for allegedly harassing black hotel guests during a November raid, prosecutors say.

The Harris County grand jury did not find sufficient evidence of any criminal wrongdoing and took no action Tuesday against the seven fired and six suspended officers.

The panel's decision came less than a week after John Bales, on his last day as acting police chief, took the disciplinary action against the officers.

No witnesses testified before the panel during Tuesday's brief session. Several hotel guests testified in previous sessions, claiming they were harassed and beaten in the Nov. 4 election night raid on the Della Arpartment Hotel in the city's predominantly-black Fifth Ward.

Assistant District Attorney Terry Wilson said the witnesses' refusal to testify "severely hampered" the case. He declined further comment, saying he did not want to interfere with any appeals of the disciplinary action the officers may file with the City Civil Service Commission.

The officers have until Monday to appeal Bales' action.

Richard Cobb, the officers' attorney, said the grand jury's decision showed the police department's internal affairs division investigation was "a deliberate attempt...to get back at these 13 because they were members of the Houston Police Patrolmen's Union and eveyone know the union was a thorn in his (Bales') side."

Struggle puts man in jail

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Gubernatorial candidate Lowell "Duke" Embs, a retired insurance man, has been jailed following a scuffle with sheriff's deputies, officers said.

Embs, 52, was in Bexar County Jail on Tuesday after he jumped out of a patrol car, then was recaptured in a struggle in which a deputy was bitten, said Sheriff Joe Neaves.

Embs had earlier predicted he would beat Gov. Bill Clements in the May 1 primary, despite opening his campaign headquarters here just 11 days before the election.

Two deputies arrested Embs on a warrant at his headquarters at a flea market. The warrant stemmed from his alleged violation of a court order forbidding him to enter his former place of business.

The warrant ordered Embs to serve three days in jail for contempt in violating the order to stay away. Embs said he was merely gathering personal effects.

Deputies Danny Marques and Jim Bryant arrested Embs late Monday, Neaves said, but the man tried to escape from Marques' car en route to the jail.

Embs "said he thought he was being taken to the State Hospital," Neaves said. "The deputies handcuffed him with his hands in front of him."

But Neaves said Embs opened the car door and jumped out. A fight ensued as the deputies recaptured him.

"He kept saying he didn't want to be taken to the State Hospital," the sheriff said. "He began to fight and he bit Marques on the left arm and the right finger. The bites were serious. They drew blood."

Embs was charged with escape and was held under an $800 bond before magistrate Quon Lew. Neaves said assault charges also might be filed.

West Texas Chamber of Commerce will kick off its 64th annual convention here with a Wildcatter's Reception today at 6 p.m. in the Petroleum Club, 501 W. Wall St., and will conclude with Midlander Joe Kloesel taking over as president for the coming year.

The convention is being headquartered in The Midland Hilton. Featuring speakers on state legislation, the monetary policy and the future, events will conclude Friday night with a banquet in the Midland Country Club. All other events take place at The Hilton.

Registration for the 350-plus expected participants was to begin at 9 a.m. today at The Hilton. Starting at 11 a.m., a golf and tennis tournament was scheduled at Ranchland Hills Country Club.

At 10 a.m. Thursday State Rep. Gibson Lewis will give the conventioneers a perspective on state affairs. He has served as Tarrant County representative since 1971 and is being considered as the next Speaker of the House to succeed Billy Clayton.

Lewis was named one of the 10 best members of the Texas House by Texas Business magazine in 1979. He was chosen by the Texas Municipal League as Outstanding Legislator of the Year for 1979 and in 1981 he was honored by the Texas' War on Drugs Committee.

After his talk, Lewis will be honored at an informal coffee from 11 to 11:45 a.m. on the mezzanine at The Hilton.

FEATURED SPEAKER at the luncheon Thursday will be Everett J. "Ebb" Grindstaff of Ballinger, incoming president of Lions International and a WTCC director. In speaking on the challenges of the '80s, Grindstaff will combine the issues with insight, humor and inspiration.

Following Grindstaff will be a report on Texas 2000 by the director of that organization, Dr. Victor Arnold.

The study looks at growth in Texas between now and the year 2000 and should provide the state government and private sector with an insight to the needs and issues facing the state.

Highlighting the evening will be the Cultural Awards Banquet, which will start at 7:15 p.m. in The Hilton. Selected to receive the coveted awards are the Sixth Van Cliburn International Quadrennial Piano Competition at Fort Worth; the Old Jail Foundation and Art Center in Albany; Fine Arts Department at Cisco Junior College; and Gile Connell McCrary of Post.

THIS AWARD was set up in 1969 to elevate and recognize cultural achievements in West Texas, whether by an individual, an event or an organization.

Starting off Friday at 10 a.m. will be a Meet the Candidates forum, which is the first time the chamber has sponsored such an event. Candidates for the eight top statewide offices were invited.

Acknowledging they will be attending and the office they are seeking are the following Republican candidates: Lowell D. Embs, governor; Bill Meier, attorney general; Mike Richards, state comptroller; Raymond Frank, state comptroller; Al Gutierrez, land commissioner; Woodrow Glasscock Jr., land commissioner; Andrew Jackson, land commissioner.

Democratic candidates who will be attending are: David L. Young, governor; Troy Skates, lieutenant; John H. Hannah Jr., attorney general; Max R. Sherman, attorney general; John R. Cutright, treasurer; Lane Denton, treasurer; Warren G. Harding, treasurer; Ann Richards, treasurer; George Edwin Fore, land commissioner; Dan Kubiak, land commissioner, Garry Mauro, land commissioner; W.E. "Pete" Snelson, land commissioner; Reagan V. Brown, agriculture commission; and Ralph Pacheco, railroad commission.

At 2 p.m. that day, Charles Wood will give an updated look at the Texas Industrial Commission as its newly-appointed executive director. Wood worked on the general counsel's staff at the Public Utilities Commission for three years and in the office of the Secretary of State. He has been in private law practice for 10 years.

Featured speaker that evening at the 6 p.m. banquet in Midland Country Club will be Nancy Hays Teeters, a member of the board of governors of the Federal Reserve System. She will speak on "Monetary Policy and the Economy — Challenges of the '80s."

The regional chamber official is expecting 350 to 400 persons to attend the third convention that has been held in Midland during WTCC's history.

And while Midland has boasted of three past presidents of WTCC, it is getting ready to install its fourth — Joe Kloesel with Canyon Consolidated, Inc.

HE HAS SERVED as president of the Midland Chamber of Commerce, president of Junior Achievement, an advisor on Leadership Midland, advisor and conferee to Midland's Objectives for the '80s, director of the West Texas Chamber Foundation, vice president of Midland Industrial Foundation and vice president of the Texas State Chamber of Commerce. He currently is general campagin chairman for Midland United Way.

The public is invited to attend any of the events and should call the Midland Chamber office, 683-3381, to make reservations for the luncheon and banquet affairs. The afternoon sessions are open to the public at no charge.

Officials hope first-quarter decline marks last quarter of recession

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government is announcing new figures showing how low the national economy sank in the first three months of this year, a period officials hope will mark the last quarter of decline in the recession of 1981-82.

Today's Commerce Department report was to provide the first official figures — although still preliminary — for the quarter's overall economic activity as measured by "real," or inflation-adjusted, gross national product.

Department economists, in unofficial estimates last month before the quarter was over, said the economy seemed to be declining at about the same 4.5 percent annual rate as in the last three months of 1981.

By the government's account, the economy declined at an annual rate of 1.6 percent in the second quarter of last year, rose at a rate of 1.4 percent in the third, then fell at the rate of 4.5 percent in the fourth.

Most economists believe the recession actually started last July or August, noting that real GNP rose in that quarter only because of production that went into inventory stockpiles which businesses have been striving to whittle down ever since.

Even before the new figures were released today, officials and private economists were turning most of their attention to the current April-June period and beyond.

The Reagan administration and some private analysts had held out hope last fall that the economy could be reviving by the first three months of 1982. But by late last year, it was clear that real GNP — the total value at retail prices of all goods and services produced by the economy — would be down again for the first quarter.

The question in recent weeks has been whether the economy would show substantial recovery in the second quarter or the third.

Robert Ortner, chief Commerce economist, said Tuesday, "We're looking for a fairly flat second quarter" followed by at least some growth in the third. Real GNP could be up slightly in the second quarter, he and other officials say.

Allen Gutheim, an economist with the private firm Wharton Econometric Forecasting Associates, said much the same thing but in more brutal words, forecasting "a big zero," or no real growth for the current quarter.

"The third quarter should show some pickup" after the July tax-rate cut begins putting more money in American consumers' pockets, Gutheim said.

Many analysts — including those in the administration — are counting on the tax-rate cut to increase consumer spending. Greater spending should in turn encourage businesses to increase production from currently depressed levels and to begin hiring back laid-off workers.

Consumer spending had held up fairly well through the recession, keeping the economy from falling even lower in recent months.

Midlander to be initiated into history honor society

ODESSA — Barbara Bolden, a history major from Midland, will be initiated into the University of Texas of the Permian Basin chapter of Phi Alpha Theta international history honor society at 8 p.m. April 30 in the Devonian Room.

Dr. Frank Samponaro, associate professor of history and faculty adviser for the group, said initiation into the society serves as recognition of meritorious academic achievement in the study of history.

Michael Slagle, a literature senior from Andrews, also will be initiated into the society.

Hightower fights for 'little guys'

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — His scowl mirrors the bad-tempered demeanor of the Longhorn bull that stands behind him in the dusty West Texas field.

That skill helped win him 48 percent of the vote in his first political campaign, a 1980 run at Railroad Commissioner Jim Nugent. In that poster, Hightower's arms were folded. The logo was "Enough is Enough."

WHO IS THIS macho-looking man who's fed up and meaner than a West Texas bull?

At a news conference in a Safeway parking lot, Hightower prepares to talk about farmers in a depression and consumers who are depressed.

An elderly black woman driving by stops and asks a reporter what is going on.

"Oh, I've heard him on the radio," she says enthusiastically. "Which one is he?" Over there, in the brown suit and cowboy hat. "Oh. Oh, my. He's just a little fella!"

True, Jim Hightower is not a large man, but the macho posters are meant to symbolize not the physical candidate but the big plans he has for the office he now seeks — Texas commissioner of agriculture.

The only snag may be that Hightower the media man has taken on incumbent Reagan Brown, the media's darling.

A fighter of fire ants, Brown once dipped his hand into a fire ant mound for the benefit of a TV camera — then did it again when the crew hadn't gotten the shot.

"He's been saying I'm not qualified to be agriculture commissioner, but I don't go sticking my hand down fire ant holes," Hightower tells a group of delighted supporters before a session of door-to-door campaigning in San Antonio.

The Saturday morning visits caught much of the populace unprepared for company, much less television cameras.

HIGHTOWER RETURNED sheepishly from one house where he slipped campaign literature through a cracked door. "There are one million naked voters in San Antonio," he intoned. "That was one of them."

Most of the voters in a middle-class Hispanic neighborhood reacted enthusiastically to Hightower. The most negative response was simple confusion.

"What is it you're running for exactly?" one polite, but sleepy-eyed, young man asked.

The speech quickly became familiar.

"Hi. I'm Jim Hightower and I'm runnin' for agriculture commissioner. We're gonna try to do something about those ol' food prices. You'd be for that, wouldn't you?"

Eddie Ortiz first thought Hightower a representative from a religious organization, but warmed up immediately after the campaign speech.

"I'll vote for you. I'm all for that."

Brown says Hightower is leading people astray, that the agriculture commission is largely a regulatory agency, overseeing weights and measures and pesticides, selling Texas products and advising on policy.

Hightower says that's not so.

"Nobody's fighting back against them, and the agriculture department has the authority to fight back," he said in an interview at a restaurant after the day's campaigning. "It's been a sort of dormant office for the past five years, so I want to take it and put it to work for us."

Brown is using a tactic similar to Nugent in fighting Hightower, who gained a reputation among conservatives as a wild-eyed liberal during his stint as editor of the Texas Observer.

Hightower, 39, sees himself as an "old-time populist." He says he is eminently qualified to be agriculture commissioner. He served as agricultural aide to then-Sen. Ralph Yarborough and wrote two books on food policy.

"I think I'm going to win. Our easiest job is to get elected," he said. "Our hardest job is once we get elected, will we make any difference? Will life be better for the people we're appealing to?"

Brown has complained that Hightower is running a campaign financed by "socialistic punks back East."

"HE'S COUNTING people like (Dallas Congressman) Martin Frost, who wrote a check to our fundraiser on his Virginia bank account. But he (Brown) is going to say, 'Lookee here — Virginia money.'"

Hightower turns the "in bed with the liberals" charge around and faults Brown as an ineffective Washington advocate for Texas farmers.

MHS CHATTER

MHS' Senior Girls party at Hilton success

Midland High's Senior Girls Party was held this weekend at the Midland Hilton. Rabbit, an Austin band, entertained the crowd with a wide variety of music. Careful planning and hard work by all the senior girl hostesses was evident, as the party was successful. The girls would like to thank all parents and teachers who gave their support. Johnny Carter provided decorations for the event. Senior women would also like to thank senior men. Enjoy Padre Island all by yourselves.

Paul Kowert and Laura Wolf recently took great honors at MHS. As a result of outstanding performance on a two-day test and their remarkably high grade point averages, they have been chosen valedictorian and salutatorian of Midland High School. Paul Kowert holds the valedictorian and Laura Wolf is salutatorian.

MHS Bulldogs took an exciting victory this Saturday, starting off the second half of the District 5-5A baseball season with a 5-3 win over Permian. Congratulations to Coach Whalen and the entire MHS Bulldog team for an exciting performance.

Midland High School won the One-Act Play Contest this weekend at Texas Tech. "Wings" now advances to the state finals. For the third time in a row, Candy Baimbridge won the Best Actress award and Don Stroud and Paige Parker were selected for the All-Star Cast. Marta McNabb and Cindy Davis were selected for the Honorable Mention All-Star Cast.

On Friday, the MHS Boys' Golf Team completed their District Golf Tournament in Abilene. First team finished in fourth place and the second team finished 12th. Junior Reece Boudreaux took All-District honors, while sophomore David Pritchett received Honorable Mention honors.

When you can't pay bills

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

Your bills are up and your income is down.

What do you do when you can't pay your debts?

A growing number of families are asking themselves that question because of a recession that has pushed the unemployment rate to 9 percent and eliminated or reduced paychecks for millions of Americans.

LENDERS AND CREDIT counselors say there are several things you can take to minimize the problem of unpaid bills.

Start by explaining the situation to your creditors. "At this particular time they're exceedingly understanding," said Robert Gibson, head of the National Foundation for Consumer Credit, a non-profit organization which operates more than 200 counseling centers across the country.

Gibson explained that changes in the law have made it easier for people to escape their debts by going bankrupt; lenders would rather accept reduced or delayed payments than take the risk of never getting their money at all.

BORROWING MONEY to pay existing debts may or may not be a good idea. Consolidating what you owe into a single loan is usually helpful only if the interest rate on such a consolidation loan is lower than the interest you are paying on the money you already have borrowed.

A consolidation loan also may give you a false sense of security. "Most people can't handle them," said Gibson. Once they are relieved of the immediate pressure of overdue bills, they start spending again and wind up even deeper in debt.

James Kendall, a spokesman for the U.S. League of Savings Associations, said consumers should not ignore signs of trouble in the hope that the problem will solve itself.

"Take some steps early on to avert the panic," he said. "Take the initiative."

SUPPOSE YOU have lost your job. Or your working hours have been cut back. You know you're going to have trouble making next month's mortgage payment on time.

Explain the problem to the lender immediately; don't wait until the payment already is overdue. "Go to them before they come to you," said Kendall. "Lenders will look much more kindly on someone who tells them in advance (about a potential problem)."

Be completely frank. You will have to give the lender all the details of your financial situation — even if it makes you uncomfortable. Kendall conceded that this kind of disclosure just "adds to the stress" you already may be under, but said total honesty is essential.

"Depending on who you are and what kind of payment record you have, you may get a fair amount of forebearance" from the lender, Kendall added.

THE DEFINITION of "a fair amount" will vary from lender to lender, but you may, for example, be able to pay only the interest on your mortgage for several months or you may be able to cut your payments in half. You may even be allowed to skip a couple of months completely.

You will, of course, have to pay back the debt eventually. If you don't you could face the possibility of losing your house. State laws on foreclosure — and the amount of time that must elapse before you are forced to leave — vary widely and may affect a lender's willingness to let payments slide.

Kendall said, however, that "lenders will try to stay away from foreclosure." In today's market, they are reluctant to wind up as owners of houses they cannot sell. They also are human beings. "Lenders don't have horns and pitchforks," Kendall added.

Hopping good time planned

CONWAY, Ark. (AP) — There is a council of toads led by a head toad. They plan to crown a king and queen toad, have a jumping toad contest and try to eliminate the phrase "toadfrog."

It's all part of the first Toad Suck Daze regional celebration at a park near where the old Toad Suck ferry used to carry people across the Arkansas River between Faulkner and Perry counties.

"It's the first of what we intend to be an annual celebration," John Ward of Conway, who says he is the head toad, said Monday night. The festival is April 30 through May 2 at the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers' Toad Suck Park.

"We certainly want to preserve the memory and the legend and the romance of Toad Suck ferry," Ward said.

Legend has it that workers from the steamboats that traveled on the river would stop at a tavern in that area and "suck on the bottle until they swell up like toads."

Hence the name.

"It is a very unusual name," Ward said. "If you don't understand Toad Suck, then you perhaps have to take a dim view."

Ward said Toad Suck Daze evolved because Conway hasn't had a community or regional celebration before.

The council of toads — local people who are interested in preserving Toad Suck's memory — is supervising the festival.

Among the events planned are Toad Suck follies, blue grass music, a parade, the toad pageants and jumping toad contests.

The man who looks most like a toad and the woman who looks least like one are to reign as king and queen.

Bill Steed, who operates Croaker College in California to train frogs for jumping contests, is to supervise the jumping toads.

"Nothing will give me more pleasure than helping change the toad's poor self-image from ugly, dirty, clumsy, warty and stupid to handsome, clean-cut and swift," Steed said.

Ward said people are wrong when they say toadfrog. "A frog is one thing," he said. "A toad is another."

Toads live on land, not near the bank of a pond or creek like frogs, he said.

Study favors defense cuts

Copley News Service

WASHINGTON — President Reagan's five-year defense spending plan could be cut $130 billion without endangering national security, according to a new analysis released this week by the Brookings Institution.

Prof. William W. Kaufmann of MIT, a Brookings analyst, said nearly 10 percent of the projected $1.4 trillion in outlays could be safely saved by such decisions as canceling the B-1B bomber and two nuclear aircraft carriers; halting procurement of the MX missile; opting for a 525-ship Navy instead of one of 600 ships and holding the fiscal 1983 military pay raise to 5 percent instead of 8 percent.

Kaufmann said he would reduce proposed FY 1983 military outlays by $11.1 billion to $204.8 billion and total obligational authority (TOA) by $32 billion to $236 billion.

Brookings Institution is known as a liberal think tank. It is staffed substantially by former officials in Democratic administrations.

Kaufmann said he believes the MX missile is a good one, but until a viable basing system for it is devised he would not buy it. He would, instead, accelerate the submarine-based Trident II rocket, which will have approximately the same accuracy and hard-target capability capability as the MX.

He said he would force the Navy to take the bulk of the reductions in conventional arms spending over the five-year period.

Lender a little misled

By BILL MANDEL
Hearst Feature Service

Hard times got you down? Let's talk a fun subject — money, and lots of it. A New York bank is offering a $15,000 quickie loan to a San Francisco woman on welfare and food stamps.

Dorian G., a woman of very limited means, was looking through her mail recently, hoping to find a letter approving food stamp support for April. Food stamps are part of what Dorian G. lives on. Welfare is the other part.

She was hoping for food stamps, so imagine her delight when she found a letter from New York's Chase Manhattan Bank offering her a $15,000 loan — $14,999.98 better than mere pennies from heaven. The letter was from August J. Byllott (pronounced buy-lot), and it said:

"DEAR MS. G.: The enclosed certificate can be good for $15,000 if you want it to be. Chase has an ongoing program designed to establish and expand our relations with individuals like you — professional people of proven achievement and excellent credit worthiness."

Dorian G. understood why Chase chose her. She does have excellent credit worthiness — her credit is totally unextended. No one will lend money to a welfare-food stamp recipient.

The letter continued: "We believe an appropriate get-acquainted step is to provide you with an opportunity to obtain funds you may need right now. Many professionals tell us they experience a temporary cash-flow difficulty in the months around tax time."

CHASE SURE HAS that one right. Dorian G. is experiencing a cash flow problem at the moment. That moment has been going on for quite some time and promises to continue into the murky future.

Back to the letter: "Chase would like to help by offering you money to cover any temporary cash shortfall you expect at this time. Our goal is to send you the money by return mail, upon verification of your good credit standing."

Nothing to lose there. Maybe Chase will apply the same criteria in checking Dorian G.'s credit that it used in sending her the letter in the first place. Any bank that describes an indigent as a "professional of proven achievement and excellent credit worthiness" should have no problem approving her application for a loan.

The letter concludes: "Should you require less money, simply cross out the $15,000 and write in the amount you wish — minimum $3,500. That's it. In effect, the money can be yours just this simply. We think that's the way it should be."

WELL DONE, Mr. Byllott. You and Dorian G. see eye-to-eye. She also thinks that's the way banks should hand out money. Until now, banks have engaged in narrow-minded discrimination, reserving their loans for people who could most easily pay them back, thus proving they didn't need the money in the first place.

I tried to call August Byllott to congratulate him on Chase's new loose money policy, but he wasn't taking calls. When I told a spokeswoman for the bank why I was calling, she said, "No! Really? Someone on welfare and food stamps got that letter? Can you prove it? No!"

When I was finally routed to public relations, the receptionist there answered each of my three calls by saying, "Wait a minute," and placing the receiver on her desk, while returning to her typing.

Who said it's hard to love a bank?

Charges surprise neighbors

By RANDY BANNER
The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

FOREST HILLS, N.Y. — Those who knew Otto Gilbert and his mother say that the two were the oddest couple the neighborhood had ever known.

Their life style would belie that impression. Neighbors said that Gilbert, who was arrested Saturday in Georgia by FBI agents on espionage charges, was a well-dressed, intelligent man who kept to himself; his 79-year-old mother, a widow, was an outgoing woman whose overriding concern was her son's welfare. But neighbors said that they led a very strange kind of life. "He was a mysterious man and you never knew what he thought or even what he did," one said. "And she just seemed like a sweet old mother, like any other mother."

"I always thought he was a lawyer," one woman neighbor said Monday. "He was very bright and acted as if he were some kind of professional.... The mother was a very nice lady, very sweet. And her whole life was him. If he really is a spy, if he's done anything like that, I'm sure that she wasn't even aware of it."

ANOTHER NEIGHBOR said that Gilbert was "a very European man" who during his more than 20 years in the building had lived in several apartments on the third and fifth floors. Both he and his mother were natives of Hungary, a country that neighbors say he had longed to return to for many years. Last spring, according to the neighbor, he told a few people in the building that he had decided to finally leave the United States and return there. Although his mother wanted to remain in the United States, she said, she went to Hungary "so that Otto would not be alone."

"She wanted to stay here so badly," said the neighbor who lived down the hall from the Gilberts on the fifth floor. "She loved it here. But she also loved her son. Otto had two wives and I think that both left him. His mother moved in after his second marriage ended. When he said that he wanted to go back to Europe, she cried bitterly because she did not want to go. But she was a mother. And like any other mother, she wanted to take care of her child. So she left, much as she hated to."

THE NEIGHBOR said that Gilbert moved to the United States from Hungary following the unsuccessful anticommunist revolution there in 1956. Although she said that Gilbert often took his mother to that country to visit the health spas there for the treatment of arthritis, his decision to move there permanently seemed to make little sense, the neighbor said, because of his anticommunist views and because of his ever-present consideration of his mother's feelings.

According to the building's landlord, Halit Sadik, the Gilberts' move out of the building was as mysterious and private as the manner in which they had lived there.

"He called me one day and said that he was going to move," Sadik said. "A little while after that he brought a truck, put all of their things in it and moved out. They were here, and then all of a sudden, they weren't.

"He wasn't a bad man," Sadik continued. "But he always had a complaint. Either it was something wrong with the building or something wrong with the city or something with the country. He was always annoyed with everything."

THE GILBERTS' next-door neighbor, Laszlo Bajor, agreed with Sadik, saying that Gilbert was a man "who could not be satisfied.

"Nothing was ever good with him," Bajor said. "Of course, we didn't see him very much. He traveled a lot. But when he was home he always complained about something. He was basically a mean man."

MISD secretary proves love of life makes it lovely

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

There are two words that describe the woman and her attitude about her work.

Enthusiastic and optimistic.

Working in the Division of Instruction at the Midland Independent School District administration building is exciting, said Mrs. Freeman, who has been there about three years.

It also is a responsibility.

In the central school office, Mrs. Freeman witnesses the birth of new programs from the rough drafts she types at the beginning to the final booklets she binds together.

"There is a lot of tension and pressure and a lot of responsibility, but that's all right," she said. "That is a big part of the job.

"I'd much rather be out with people and have something interesting to do than sit around the house bored," Mrs. Freeman said. "I think it is very important that the older we get, the more we stay busy."

And busy is a an apt description of all of the secretaries at the MISD administration building.

"We live by the clock, calendars and the phones," she said, laughing.

She described the atmosphere in the office as congenial. "I feel like we have a super cooperative teamwork atmosphere. We all work together to get the job done."

Mrs. Freeman is secretary to the director of elementary education, the coordinator of secondary languages, arts and speech, the coordinator of foreign languages and social studies and the coordinator of elementary math and science.

"I continue to stay excited about my work because the field of education is so exciting," she said. "There is something new and different happening every day. We have a great staff of academicians in our city. Midland Independent School District is blessed with many outstanding teachers and administrators."

And enthusiastic secretaries.

"I love life and I love people, especially young ones," Mrs. Freeman said. "Every once in awhile, I get to go to the school campuses. You cannot help but get excited when you are on the school campuses. I always admire the spirit of the student bodies. They are always so friendly, they have a bright flashing smile, a pleasant 'hello' and sparkling eyes. This and the other qualities embodied within them constitute their personalities. At our schools, they all smile, they speak to people and they go out of their way to make friends.

"When you get down to the nitty-gritty in life," she added, "no one has ever liked a 'gloomy Gus.'"

Mrs. Freeman and her husband, John, have two children, Connie, a senior at Lee High School, and Johnny, an eighth grader at Goddard Junior High.

"I continue to be proud of my own two children, and of all of our youth today," she said. "We as adults pass them the torch, if you will, of continued learning and advancement in life, knowing that their future has great promises and dreams that will be and can be fulfilled."

Her love of the young extends to her love of youth.

"I feel if we stay out with people and work, we always stay young," the 45-year-old woman said, adding with a laugh, "I'm proud of every year I've lived."

"I think that successful people live longer, and the more successful you are at what you do, the more positive your outlook becomes toward yourself and others," she said.

"Everyone needs to be good at their job. Our attitudes in our jobs are the most important thing."

"Another important thing to me as a secretary is that you are truly constantly learning," she added. "By that, I feel that our mistakes are not failures but are opportunities to learn. There is tension, pressure and responsibility, but to be able to accept complete responsibility in your job, no matter what your profession is, is to me a great stress reducer. One sure way to grow is to keep learning."

Along the great Princes Street in Edinburgh, Scotland, a row of bronze monuments are erected to people in every field of endeavor who have made a contribution to Scotland.

Written on one monument, erected in memory of Dr. Thomas Guthrie, is a poem that Sherry Freeman said has served as her motto ever since she read it while strolling down that street years ago:

"I love for those who love me, for those who know me true. For the heaven that is miles above me and awaits my spirit, too. For the cause that lacks assistance, for the wrong that needs resistance. For the future in the distance and the good that I can do."

Longshoremen's union boycott Supreme Court action subject

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court, after settling one key issue in a longshoremen's union boycott of Soviet cargo, still must decide when federal courts can bar similar politically motivated union work actions.

The court ruled unanimously Tuesday that the International Longshoremen's Association is liable for monetary losses the boycott caused U.S. businesses.

The ILA members refused to handle cargo to and from the Soviet Union beginning Jan. 9, 1980, two weeks after Soviet military forces moved into Afghanistan. In April 1981, the ILA called an end to the boycott, which had extended from Maine to Texas and Puerto Rico.

That question is expected to be answered in a pending Supreme Court case that also grew out of the protest over Soviet cargo.

The case involves an unsuccessful effort by the Jacksonville, Fla., Bulk Terminals and Hooker Chemical, a subsidiary of Occidental Petroleum Corp., to quickly end the union boycott and force union dockworkers to load superphosphoric acid into three ships destined for the Soviet Union.

There is no indication of when the Supreme Court will rule in the Jacksonville case. A federal appeals court ruled that federal court help cannot be obtained until an arbitrator rules that the union's action violated some labor contract.

In Tuesday's decision, Justice Lewis F. Powell wrote that the dockworkers' action was an illegal "secondary boycott" under federal labor law.

"As understandable and even commendable as the (union's) ultimate objectives may be, the certain effect of its action is to impose a heavy burden on neutral employers," he said.

Tuesday's ruling allows Allied International Inc., a Boston-based wood products importer, to pursue its lawsuit against the union. Allied seeks damages for the disruption of its Soviet import shipments.

Allied lawyer Duane Batista in Boston said the wood products firm is seeking more than $15 million in monetary damages.

Club will accept female stockholders

LAFAYETTE, La. (AP) — Days before a scheduled federal appeals court hearing on its membership policy, the Petroleum Club has decided to admit women as members.

The head of the club said it appeared to be just "a matter of time" until courts ordered the change from an all-male facility.

The announcement was made Tuesday to a meeting of the board which runs the luxurious club, a center for business contacts. It marked a victory for five women who spent more than $20,000 on their legal fight to break the male-only barrier.

A lawsuit seeking the admission of women was to go before the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals at New Orleans on Thursday.

As of Monday, women are permitted in the "ol lounge" and dining room after 4:30 p.m., but a bar, a grill and a game room are still reserved for men.

Possible suspect sighted

ANDREWS — A man fitting the description of a suspect wanted in the killing of a convenience store clerk in a robbery here at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday was sighted late this morning hitchhiking west along Interstate 20 47 miles east of Van Horn.

The suspect, described as a 5-foot-7-inch, slenderly built, white male in his mid-20s, with dark frizzy hair, blue jeans, blue shirt and tan jacket, also was reported seen in Big Spring at 1 a.m. today.

The victim, Mark Wilson, 21, a native of Scottsburg, Ind. and a three-month resident of Andrews, died during surgery in a hospital after suffering a .22-caliber wound in the chest, according to a spokesman in the Andrews County Sheriffs Office.

"Shortly before the robbery there was a hitchhiker carrying a rolled-up bag or sleeping bag on a strap seen a short distance from the store," said Andrews County Sheriff Wayne Farmer. "We suspect from that we're possibly looking for a transient, a hitchhiker."

Farmer said investigators presume the weapon involved in the shooting was a pistol.

Wilson's body was taken to Odessa for an autopsy and will be transferred to Indiana for burial.

By ROBERT BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

Craig Ray and Chris Parker did a good job for Midland Lee on the mound and Barry Blackwell connected for an RBI double in the fifth inning to break a 1-1 deadlock to lead the Rebels to a 2-1 District 5-5A victory over San Angelo at Lee Field Tuesday.

It was also a game that saw Rebel starting catcher Scott Page knocked out of action in a collision at home plate.

Ray, who was sidelined for several weeks due to illness, was the surprise starter for the Rebels when he went to the mound in his first district appearance of the season. The sophomore southpaw went 5⅓ innings, giving up one run and two hits before Coach Ernie Johnson replaced him with senior short reliever Chris Parker.

The pitching change was more of a reflection on the situation in the game than on Ray's performance. With one out in the sixth inning, runners on second and third and a knowledge of San Angelo's desire for the suicide squeeze play, Johnson opted to go with experience and moved Parker to the mound from third base.

The strategy worked. Parker struck out the first two batters he faced and went on to finish the game, giving up only one hit and recording his first save of the season for the Rebels.

"He pitched good, excellent," said Johnson about his sophomore starter. "I was tickled to death with Craig coming off his illness and pitching the way he did. He's only pitched three times on JV since he was sick and he came up here and pitched well. He didn't throw a lot of strikes, but he stayed on top of the situation well.

"I brought Chris in there because I wanted a senior and a good fielder on the mound in case they tried the squeeze (again). They chose not to and I'm glad of that."

AND JOHNSON had a good reason for not wanting to see another squeeze play. The first one the Bobcats tried cost him his catcher. Page, who was taken to the hospital for x-rays because of a possible fractured cheek bone and a cut above his left eye.

The situation was nearly the same in the fifth inning as it was in the sixth. There were was one out, runners on second and third and one run already in.

— As Page was coming up with the ball, Smith collided into him and caught him with a knee to the face sending both players to the ground where they remained long after the play was over. Smith with the wind knocked out of him and Page holding an arm across his eyes.

Page had played the situation well and the runner would have been out except for umpire Larry Archer's call "foul ball." When the players got up, Smith went back to third and Page went to the hospital.

Coach Johnson didn't like the call.

"In high school rules, the guy is supposed to be sliding not coming in like that," he said. "This is not professional baseball. He (Page) had the guy out if it hadn't been called a foul ball. It was a hard play for the ump to call with all the action there. Archer is a good umpire, I respect him even though I disagree with the call. I was in a better position than he was."

Johnson also added, "I wish we caught him (Archer) more often. He's good. This is the first time we've had him this year."

And about Page's injury he said, "His jaw was sore, he couldn't close his mouth. We took him to have x-ray's taken to make sure it's not a fracture. He could have a fractured cheek. The guy (Smith) hit him with a knee or something. I hope it's not a fracture because he probably can't play if it is."

THE REBELS opened the scoring in the second inning when Scott Carrell connected for a single and went to second on a single by Dennis Matta and Carrell scored on a single by Page.

San Angelo came back to tie the game in the top of the fifth when Tal Jackson led off the inning with a single to left field and went to second when Smith walked. A throwing error by Parker to first base allowed Jackson to score.

In the bottom of the inning, San Angelo first baseman Grant Rhoden couldn't find the handle on the ball allowing Lane Marks to reach safely. Bart Ryan bunted Marks to second and Blackwell brought him home with his double down the left field line.

The 2-1 situation set up the pitching change in the sixth inning which saw Parker get the final two hitters two strike out and then gave up one hit in the seventh before retiring the next three batters to preserve the victory.

The win gives Lee a 2-0 record in the second half of the 5-5A race and upped their overall mark to 13-11 while San Angelo fell to 0-2 and 10-15.

Diablos prove to be the best penguins

BY TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

It was an exclusive Cubs Stadium winter fashion preview, restricted to a select gathering of penguins and some of their polar bear friends and, as they chanted "bring on the hockey pucks," a bunch of guys skated out masquerading in baseball uniforms.

And, believe it or not, that's what they played. The El Paso Diablos, behind the pitching of David Grier, who held Midland hitless the last seven innings, squared the Texas League series at 1-1 with a 7-2 win.

They announced the attendance was 156, but by the third inning only 46 blue noses could be counted in the stands. It was so cold nobody ever did win the season's first night of Baseball Bingo.

IT WAS one of those games when you don't care who wins. You just want them to get it over with. It's after a game like this when you wonder why those in charge of baseball schedule games in places like Midland and Amarillo this time of year when they could play in Boston, New York or Chicago where it's warm.

But they played anyway and no one heard any complaints out of Grier, who won his third game of the season with a three-hitter, the first route-going performance by an El Paso pitcher this year.

For the second night in a row, the wind blew in from centerfield, turning this hitter's heaven into a pitcher's paradise. After run-scoring singles by Carmelo Martinez and Carlos Lezcano gave Midland a 2-0 lead in the first, Grier didn't give the Cubs much of anything.

Dave Owen's lead off single in the second was the Cubs' last offensive gesture. After that Grier walked two in the third, another in the fourth, and fifth and sixth and that was it.

El Paso, which has been struggling for runs lately, got enough to win Tuesday with John Hanson knocking in three with a double and single. The Diablos have been in so deep a slump that their first four batters were a collective 7-for-last 41 at bats going into the game.

But the Diablos seized upon lefthander Mike King's wildness with timely hits to take a 3-2 lead in the third. King's third walk of the inning forced in one run and Hansen then doubled into the left field corner for two more.

THE DIABLOS clinched it in the fifth with four runs, driving King to the shower in the process. Once again walks were partially responsible for the woes of the one-time Morningside College southpaw. He walked Ron Koenigsfeld with one out, was nicked for a single to right by Dan Davidsmeier and then an errant pick off attempt at first let Koenigsfeld score.

A walk to Randy Ready and another run-scoring hit by Hansen finished off King and brought in Randy Clark who gave up an rbi single to Mark Schuster and uncorked a wild pitch that let in a fourth run before Clark retired the next eight in a row in his relief stint.

The win enabled the Diablos to keep Midland, now 4-8, at arm's length in the Texas League West. A victory would have moved the Cubs into a tie for second.

BRUIN BREWIN'S—The Cubs and Diablos will not do it again at 7 p.m. today. Garber just had that 'feeling'

ATLANTA (AP) — Gene Garber said he told his wife the Atlanta Braves would break the major league record for consecutive victories at the start of a season and that he would be on the mound when it happened.

"I just had that feeling," Garber said Tuesday night after he pitched the final three innings of Atlanta's 4-2 triumph over the Cincinnati Reds that stretched the Braves' winning streak to 12 games.

"I told my wife I'd be on the mound when we won 12," said Garber, who now figures prominently in in two streaks of baseball lore.

It was Garber who retired Pete Rose for the final time in the 1978 game that saw the former Cincinnati star's 44-game hitting streak end.

"That was a lot of fun," Garber said. "It brought back memories of another time.

"If you can't enjoy baseball in that kind of atmosphere, you don't enjoy baseball," he said, referring to a partisan crowd of 37,288 that roared on every Garber pitch as he retired the Reds in order in the ninth inning.

"This was more important than the Rose streak," he added. "That was more or less a personal confrontation."

TERRY WILLIAMSON

Maybe the powers that be, who allowed Midland to host the District 5-5A track meet Friday at Memorial Stadium, had a method to their madness — but probably not. Maybe the idea just came as the result of an afterthought.

The idea is that we're going to "fool" 'em all. Just a mere psych job, aimed at our Region I foes, who the top two winners in each 5-5A event Friday will face next week in Lubbock in an effort to win a trip to Austin for the Big One — the state meet.

AFTER ALL, records are not expected to tumble in great numbers Friday in the 5-5A run. The Memorial track — if one can call it that even in a fit of exaggeration — is slow to start with. And the talent is not awe inspiring to end with.

There is one theory on hand, however. If you can win at Memorial Stadium, you can win anywhere. There are no greater odds to compete against than the stadium itself. So what if the times are slow? It will just make all those other districts overconfident when they see the times from 5-5A. Right?

But who are we kidding anyway? Schools like Killeen and Killeen Ellison can't be fooled. They can't be beaten either — at Memorial Stadium, at Lubbock, on the road, on dirt or at Austin.

Those schools spit out opponents like an M-60 machine gun. They eat track spikes for breakfast, feast on high jump bars for lunch and dine on rubber surfaces for dinner. In between, they run 10 miles to practice without breaking sweat.

SO MUCH for "The Theory", which leaves us back at Memorial Stadium for so much needless pain. We will run on the cinders (most buried with ages past), run in the dark (where no night light has ever dared to shine), run with six lanes in the hurdles (with eight being used in the other events), measuring 36-inch lanes (when 42-inch is the regulation) and again letting the fans come out No. 2 (with a few well-placed splinters in the you know what). It will be a dumpy experience at best.

In a brief survey of five of the eight 5-5A track coaches, not one of them wants the meet of the year to be held in Midland. That's hardly news to shake the West Texas soil.

But these are men who try to find the best in any given situation. One said, "I don't want the meet run in Midland, but maybe we learned a lesson. Maybe we better not miss another Executive Committee meeting when they vote on this kind of thing."

Still, they will be running at Memorial Stadium Friday and some new track "techniques" may come to light.

Rumors have it that some of the kids will be wearing elbow pads to avoid scraping arms on the fence in lane eight while others may have elbow spikes to ward off attacks from other runners in the confined spaces that only 36-inch lanes can give. This event may more resemble a battle of Roman gladiators than a track meet.

IT'S SO dark on the north and south ends of the track at night that runners virtually disappear from the fans and officials. Some of the long distance runners probably could get away with "hiding out" for a lap or two without being missed and that sure would help a strong finish.

The relays may feature batons with flashlights so the runners can see who to make handoffs to, or miner's hats could be used.

What this really boils down to is that the runners with the best imaginations will win the Region I berths Friday — not necessarily the best talent. There are probably some competitors who can take heart in that. But these won't be races of glory, just a competition with an outmoded facility taking the lowest honors.

So no matter what theories are put forth — no matter how well intentioned any helping hand is — no matter about any district rule that says the track site must be alternated between competing cities — never, but please never ever, let Midland suffer this indignity again.

Midland has no inclination to build a new stadium. Memorial Stadium was good enough for our kids in 1940, so it is good enough for them now. But it is not good enough for the all-important District 5-5A meet.

The district needs to ban Memorial Stadium from use. Let Tall City teams play all road games. That would be the second best thing we could do for our kids, and that's one theory that will hold water.

Steers gore Bulldogs, 10-0

Williams may have spoiled the no-hitter, but he didn't help stop the shutout as the Steers improved their record to 2-0 in the second half of the District 5-5A race with a 10-0 victory over the Bulldogs.

The Steers jumped all over Bulldog starter Joel De La Garza in the first and third innings, scoring all 10 of their runs. De La Garza was replaced by reliever Wes Davis with no outs in the third and Davis stepped aside for Billy Miles two outs later.

Rubio retired the first 12 batters he face before MHS' Tim Davis reached first on an error by shortstop Blake Rosson in the fifth inning. But, he didn't stay on the base paths long as Peter Galindo hit into a double play. Hipolito Zarate then recieved the only walk allowed by Rubio and went to second on a balk, but couldn't go any further as Benny Ozuna grounded out.

In the top of the sixth, Williams connected on a one-and-one pitch for the double before Rubio closed the door by getting the final six batters out, three by strike out.

"Rubio is tough," said Bulldog head coach Tim Whalen. "He kept us off balance. We got on on a walk, on an error and on a hit and we can't score a hell of a lot of runs like that. We took a lot of good pitches and you've got to hit the ball well against a pitcher like Rubio or all you get is hot and sweaty."

Not only did the Bulldogs fail to hit the ball, they also committed six errors and Whalen wasn't too pleased with that either.

"We've been playing pretty good defense," he said. "We've been playing well here and there but today we came apart like a $2 suit case. Everything we screwed up was routine."

The victory gives Big Spring a 2-0 victory in the second half of the 5-5A race and a 19-8 record overall while MHS falls to 1-1 and 10-11.

On Saturday, the Bulldogs return home to face first half co-champion Abilene High at Memorial Stadium Field while Big Spring travels to Odessa to face the Permian Panthers. Both games are scheduled for 2 p.m.

Abilene schools rough up Odessans

Tuesday in District 5-5A play, it was Abilene 2, Odessa 0.

Abilene High took advantage of nine Mojo errors enroute to an 8-1 victory over Odessa Permian while Abilene Cooper outslugged Odessa High 13-3.

The Eagles scored two runs in the third, fourth, fifth and sixth innings to erase a 1-0 lead that Permian held after two frames. Shane Gravens led AHS at the plate with two hits in four trips for three runs and an RBI while Eddy Bizzell went two-for-two for the Panthers.

On the mound, Jeff Waits went the distance to improve his record to 5-1 while Bruce Hollander fell to 7-6 in taking the loss.

The win upped the Eagles' record to 1-1 in 5-5A play and to 16-6 overall while Permian fell to 0-2, 12-14.

After two innings of play, Abilene Cooper and Odessa High were tied 1-1. The Cougars came out in the top of the third scoring five runs while giving up two in the bottom of the frame to take a 6-3 lead. Four more Cooper runs in the fifth and three in the seventh put the game on ice.

Greg Galbraith went the distance for the victory for Cooper while Tommy Olivas suffered the loss. Seth McCann relieved Olivas in the third and was replaced by Tommy Stahl in the sixth.

Cooper is now 2-0 in the 5-5A second half (tied with Big Spring and Midland Lee) and is 18-8 overall. OHS is still looking for its first league victory and has a record of 0-2, 4-19.

On Saturday, Abilene High will be in the Tall City facing Midland High at Memorial Stadium Field while Cooper hosts Midland Lee. First half co-champion Big Spring will be in Odessa to face the Panthers and Odessa High is in San Angelo. All games are scheduled for 2 p.m.

Midland Alcor captures Garland tourney crown

GARLAND — Alcor of Midland won top honors in the USSSA Open Class B Slow Pitch Tournament here over the weekend, winning a berth in the national USSSA tournament in Moore, Okla., which will be held in September.

Alcor went into the double elimination finals undefeated, facing Greer & Snow of Longview. The Longview team, who was the Class C state champion last year, won the first game with a 22-21 decision in 10 innings, but Alcor came back for the title with a 17-5 victory.

Previously, Alcor had beaten Arlington, 17-12; Grand Central of Dallas, 23-15; House of Trophies of Dallas, 14-12; and Big D of Grand Prairie, 14-12.

Semall traded

NEW YORK (AP) — The Chicago Cubs sent former Midland Cubs pitcher Paul Semall to Denver of the American Association Tuesday to complete a trade that brought second baseman Bump Wills from the Texas Rangers earlier this year.

Semall was the player to be named later in the deal that sent pitcher Paul Mirabella and cash to the Rangers. Semall, 26, has never played in the major leagues. He came to the Cubs in 1979 from the New York Yankees, who traded him to Chicago for outfielder Bobby Murcer.

MHS, Lee girls shoot for Region I title

By CHAD PUERLING
Sports Writer

Ten girls from Midland High and Midland Lee will travel to Lubbock this week representing the best golf teams District 5-5A has to offer. In a area dominated by football there is little glory for these female athletes. But over this past semester they have worked long and hard hours to become the best golfers in the district.

Midland High, coached by Mary Baird, won the district title this year beating out Midland Lee. On the way to defending their title they produced the top two individual golfers in the district.

After three rounds of golf, Kelle Mobley and Janice Littlefield were tied for the Medalist title and had to play an extra two holes just to decide who would take home the honors for 1982.

THE SENIOR Littlefield finally won the title that escaped her last year with a dramatic 30 foot put on the second playoff hole. Last year Littlefield finished second in the Medalist competition.

For Shelley Parker and Kendra Cox golfing has been a relatively new experience, it was their first year on the MHS team. Parker finished tenth in district scoring and Cox was 13th.

Joining the foursome in Lubbock will be Karen Wagner, a transfer from Pacelli High School in Austin, Minnesota. Wagner moved to Midland in February and was not eligible to compete in any tournaments for 30 days.

WITH THAT kind of talent it is easy to understand why first year Lee Coach Chris Watson thinks MHS is the team to beat at regionals. "They have been the team to beat all year and they'll be the team to beat in Lubbock," she said.

"Roundrock should have a strong team. They have added two girls from last years' 3A State championship team, Kerrville," she said. "We also don't know what to expect from the El Paso teams because they're so far away we don't here much about them."

The key to the Rebels' play this year has been consistancy. The Lee squad has made a remarkable showing considering that there are no seniors on the team.

Although just a sophomore, Lesa Burnett may be a key for the Rebels at the Meadowbrook Municipal Course. Burnett has been the longest hitter off the tee this year, and according to Baird, the course plays very long.

Staci Childers missed a recent trip to the Amarillo Relays Tournament, but Watson said that Childers played at least nine holes every day while the team was away.

"She's a trojan, a real fighter," Watson said. "And that's why she's going to regionals with us."

"Strickland has been having trouble with her putting but she's been working on it and it seems to be coming around." Watson said.

Last year Fry played on the Graham High team and shot her best round when that team went to regionals. "This year she's going to do the same thing for us." said Watson.

IN PREPARATION for the long Lubbock course, both teams have been playing off the men's tees during their practice rounds at Hogan Park.

Both teams will leave early Wednesday and play a practice round on the course that day.

The first round will begin with a shotgun start Thursday morning, with each teams' top four scores counted toward the championship. Friday will be the second and final round and the format will be the same.

The top two teams and individuals will move on to the state championship to held in Austin.

Watson's season long optomism seems to have been curbed just a bit after finishing second to MHS for the district title. "Hopefully we'll come home Friday with something in our pockets." she said.

For Baird winning is just a matter of playing one shot at a time. "I'm not going to say we'll go up there and take it all." she said. "But we'll sure try."

Atlanta's Braves shatter record

By The Associated Press

The Atlanta Braves broke a major league record with 12 victories to start the 1982 baseball season and immediately leveled their sights at a goal they haven't reached in more than two decades.

"This doesn't mean anything if we don't go all the way," Braves right fielder Claudell Washington said.

The Braves have won their division only once, in 1969, since abandoning the city of Milwaukee 16 years ago. In fact, the Braves have not won an NL pennant since 1958, the year after Lew Burdette hurled a string of 24 scoreless innings in Milwaukee's seven-game World Series triumph over the New York Yankees.

"I'm pleased. I just hope it doesn't end here," Washington said after driving in the tie-breaking run with a triple and scoring on a wild pitch in Atlanta's 4-2 victory over the Cincinnati Reds Tuesday night.

The victory broke the modern major league record of 11 victories to open a season set by the 1981 Oakland A's. The Braves eclipsed the old National League mark of 10 in a row by the 1955 Brooklyn Dodgers and 1962 Pittsburgh Pirates on Sunday when they beat Hoston 6-5.

Cincinnati took a 2-0 lead in the second inning, giving the highly vocal crowd of 37,268 in Atlanta a brief scare. Reds pitcher Frank Pastore and Eddie Milner drove in the runs.

Chris Chambliss got Atlanta started with a homer in the bottom of the second to cut the Reds' lead to 2-1.

"We're not flukes, we're not fly-by-nighters," Chambliss said. "These games are not mistakes. We're good. I think we'll get a lot of respect now."

The Braves scored three runs in the third inning to take the lead and notch their fifth victory coming from behind. Rafael Ramirez started the rally with a homer, and, one out later, Glenn Hubbard walked. Hubbard scored on Washington's triple off the top of the center field fence, and Washington scored when Pastore threw a wild pitch.

Steve Bedrosian got the victory with 4⅓ innings in relief of Tommy Boggs, and Gene Garber pitched the final three innings for his third save.

"It's nice to break the record, but we're not about to relax now," Atlanta skipper Joe Torre said. "We're in a pretty good position now. We're after more things than a record. We want to play in October."

Cards 7, Pirates 4

Darrell Porter and Dane Iorg had two RBI each as the Cardinals stretched the league's second-longest winning streak to nine games. The Pirates, meanwhile, lost their third in a row.

John Martin pitched 7⅓ innings for the victory, allowing all four Pittsburgh runs on six hits. The loss went to Rick Rhoden, a traditionally fast starter who never had lost a game in April before.

Mets 3, Cubs 2

After giving up an unearned run in the first inning, right-hander Mike Scott threw seven shutout innings for New York, and Neil Allen earned his third save. Homers by Joel Youngblood and Dave Kingman provided the Mets' firepower.

Kingman's homer was his fifth and gave him a league-leading 14 RBI.

Padres 8, Giants 4

San Diego won its seventh in a row, mounting a 14-hit attack that included a homer and four RBI by Luis Salazar. The Padres now have pounded out 51 hits in their past three games.

Terry Kennedy also had two run-scoring hits for the Padres, who overcame a 1-0 San Francisco lead in the first inning with two runs in the second and four in the third.

Dodgers 10, Astros 2

Left-hander Fernando Valenzuela scattered eight hits and pitched Los Angeles' first complete game of the season as the Dodgers broke a six-game losing streak.

Ron Cey and Ken Landreaux each singled three times to lead Los Angeles' 19-hit attack. Valenzuela, 2-1, struck out seven and walked only one. One of the two g homer by Ray Knight.

Rick Monday homered for Los Angeles in the second inning, and the Dodgers chased Houston starter Vern Ruhle with three runs in the sixth.

Chicago White Sox come to earth with a thud

By The Associated Press

After flying high over the American League West, the Chicago White Sox finally came down to earth. It was quite a thud, too.

Shackled on one hit for six innings by Steve Trout, the New York Yankees broke through for seven runs in the seventh inning and went on to an 11-2 rout of the previously-unbeaten White Sox Tuesday night that stopped Chicago's winning streak at eight games.

"We didn't expect to get 16 hits on a cold night like this," New York's Lou Piniella said after a raw night in Comiskey Park. "But that's baseball. You can never tell."

TEMPERATURES dipped into the 30s and snow flurries dropped intermittently throughout the game.

"According to Chicago Manager Tony LaRussa, the White Sox were under no pressure to keep their streak going. "But," he said, "we're not happy we lost. It was a game we wanted to win, especially after we had a 2-0 lead."

That was wiped out by the Yankees' big seventh, which was highlighted by two-run singles by Rick Cerone and Willie Randolph. The Yankees sent 13 men to the plate in the seventh. They collected eight singles and then scored three more runs in the ninth.

Despite the defeat, Trout said, "I was extremely pleased with my performance. You can't go undefeated all year. Somebody had to get the first loss. We were just destined to lose. Maybe this defeat will bring us back to reality."

THE VICTORY went to Yankee starter Mike Morgan, but Morgan was unable to loosen up after the Yankee's 37-minute rally in the seventh and he gave way first to Shane Rawley and then Goose Gossage and George Frazier. "He'll be all right," Yankee Manager Bob Lemon said of Morgan. "It was too cold and he just couldn't get loose. It gave me a chance to give the other guys some work, especially Goose."

Mariners 6, Angels 4

Gaylord Perry moved closer to the 300-victory plateau as he struck out 13 California batters to lead Seattle past the Angels.

Manny Castillo and Todd Cruz each drove in two runs to back Perry, who gained his 298th career victory and snapped California's seven-game winning streak. The 43-year-old right-hander, recording a season-high strikeout total for the majors, earned his first victory in three decisions as a Mariner.

Perry struck out every batter in the Angels' starting lineup at least once with the exception of Tim Foli in the 7⅓ innings he worked before giving way to Mike Stanton.

"I had a great forkball, slider and fastball," Perry said. "My curveball wasn't as sharp as it has been, though."

The 13 strikeouts set a Mariner club record and increased Perry's career total to 3,359, number two on the all-time list. Walter Johnson had 3,508.

Tigers 8, Royals 0

Milt Wilcox, celebrating his 32nd birthday, pitched a one-hitter and rookie Glenn Wilson doubled twice and drove in two runs as Detroit defeated Kansas City. The only hit off Wilcox was Jerry Martin's one-out bouncer through the left side of the infield in the second inning.

Meanwhile, Detroit sent 10 men to the plate in its half of the second, scoring six runs off Kansas City starter Vida Blue. The rally included an RBI double by Wilson, who was called up from Detroit's Triple-A farm club at Evansville of the American Association last Wednesday.

Indians 9, Rangers 4

Andre Thornton drove in three runs with a double and a homer and Toby Harrah ignited a six-run fourth inning with a single as Cleveland pounded Texas.

Texas starter Charley Hough retired the first 10 Cleveland hitters, then gave up six consecutive base hits in the fourth, including Thornton's run-producing double. Harrah became the first Cleveland baserunner when his fourth-inning, one-out single stretched his hitting streak to nine games.

Red Sox 8, Orioles 3

Glenn Hoffman's two-run homer capped a three-run rally in the fourth inning and Boston went on to beat Baltimore and extend the Orioles' losing streak to seven games.

After the Orioles had gone ahead 2-0 with two unearned runs off Boston starter Bobby Ojeda in the top of the fourth, the Red Sox bounced back against Mike Flanagan.

A's 4, Mariners 3

Dan Meyer singled home the winning run with two out in the 16th inning to lead Oakland over Minnesota. Davey Lopes started the rally with a leadoff double and Twins pitcher Bobby Castillo intentionally walked Mike Heath and then walked Fred Stanley to fill the bases before Meyer came through.

Texan makes Tiger wave

DETROIT (AP) — When you're a youngster growing up in a small town like Channelview, Texas, you learn to make your own fun.

For Glenn Wilson, that frequently meant whacking a plastic ball around the backyard, which now has led him to the big leagues.

Wilson had two doubles and a single, drove in two runs and made two good running catches in right field Tuesday night to help the Detroit Tigers to an 8-0 victory over the Kansas City Royals. The night before, the 6-foot-1, 190-pound right-handed batter had a homer and a single to help the American League East-leading Tigers to a 3-2 victory.

"In Channelview, my brother was always always making me play plastic ball in the backyard, even when I didn't want to," the 23-year-old Wilson explained. "We threw it as hard as we could. It was great for eye and hand coordination."

Wilson, who attended Sam Houston State University, was the Tigers' first selection in the June 1980 draft.

He played third base during the 1980 season with the Tigers' Double A farm club at Montgomery, Ala., where he set a Southern League record with 33 errors. The following season, Wilson was converted into an outfielder — where his talents obviously lie.

Last year the team moved to Birmingham and Wilson led the club's regulars with a .306 batting average. He was promoted to the Tigers' top farm club at Evansville, Ind., on Aug. 18. He started this season at Evansville, too, but was called up last Wednesday after the Tigers were hit by a rash of injuries

"I've always thought I could hit the ball," Wilson said. "When I go to the plate, my goal is just not to strike out. I figure if you keep the ball in play, something good can happen. I'm not trying to kill the ball, but to hit it hard.

"The guy I've always patterned myself after is (Los Angeles Dodgers first baseman Steve) Garvey," Wilson continued. "He always swings hard."

Wilson says he's trying to stay down to earth and take his newfound major league success in stride.

"I read a book over the winter about positive thinking," Wilson said. "I know I can't do this forever. But if you play hard, good things are going to happen eventually."

Wilson, who came up with third baseman Howard Johnson — another prospect whom the Tigers yearbook calls a "base-hit machine" — knows that despite his instant success in Detroit he may still be shuffled back to Evansville.

"It won't bother me if I get sent back down when those guys come off the disabled list," Wilson explained. "I'm still young. If they send me down, I'll try to learn all I can and get back up here again — maybe to stay."

Site of SWC tourney still undecided

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — The Southwest Conference baseball tournament is to be played next month, but that's about the only detail that's decided.

Neither the site nor the dates for the four-team, double-elimination tournament have been determined. Athletic directors in the Southwest Conference voted 5 to 3 in a conference call Tuesday to have the tournament in Little Rock — if Texas A&M doesn't host it. The three who voted not to have it in Arkansas wanted it at Texas.

If the tournament is at A&M, it will be May 14 through 17. If Little Rock is the site, the likely dates are May 20 through May 23.

A&M, 8-9, was awarded the tournament before the season began, but now it's clear the Aggies may not qualify to play and A&M officials realize the potential financial drawbacks of playing a tournament in College Station if the Aggies aren't in it.

"We'll take the tournament even if we don't know until the day before," Farrell said.

Gretzky fears for own safety

TAMPERE, Finland (AP) — Hockey sensation Wayne Gretzky, reacting to news that Edmonton Oilers' millionaire owner Peter Pocklington had been held captive and wounded in his own home, says he "always" fears for his own safety.

And a teammate with whom Gretzky shares a home in Edmonton says the National Hockey League's greatest single-season point and goal-scorer has confided in him his worries about being the target of kidnappers or others dealing in crime.

"Sometimes at home, if there have been a lot of shootings, well, he worries about things like that," defenseman Kevin Lowe said today at the site of the World Hockey Championships in which both are playing for the Canadian national team.

"I slept about two hours last night," said Gretzky, who called Pocklington "more of a friend than an owner."

Pocklington, who also owns the Edmonton Drillers of the North American Soccer League and the Edmonton Trappers baseball team of the Pacific Coast League, was held captive Tuesday for 12 hours in Edmonton. Authorities said a masked man held Pocklington after freeing two Pocklington employees and demanding a $1-million ransom.

Both the suspect, whose identity cannot be revealed under Canadian law until he is formally charged, and Pocklington, whose fortune is estimated at $100 million, were hit by a police bullet. Authorities said a bullet passed through the suspect's arm and lodged in Pocklington's shoulder.

The suspect was hospitalized in stable condition and Pocklington was treated and released.

Bullets pull upset over Nets, 96-83

By The Associated Press

The Washington Bullets, who made the playoffs 12 years in a row with name players like Wes Unseld and Elvin Hayes, are starting a new era with a relatively unknown crew of broad-shouldered frontliners.

The Bullets, who didn't make the playoffs last year for the first time since 1968, returned to postseason action Tuesday night and whipped the New Jersey Nets 96-83 in the opener of their best-of-3 mini-series.

The heroes were 6-foot-11 rookie Jeff Ruland and 6-10 second-year man Rick Mahorn, unheralded compared to the experienced players the Bullets relied on for many years.

RULAND, WHO doesn't start although he was the Bullets' top rebounder and second-leading scorer in the regular season, scored a team-high 18 points and pulled down 20 rebounds against the Nets.

Mahorn added 16 points, all in the second half, sparking the Bullets back from a 10-point third quarter deficit.

Washington started the game by missing 15 of their first 22 shots and trailing 24-16 at the end of one quarter, and it took them until the end of the third period to catch the Nets.

"Mahorn played great in the second half and Ruland was sensational," said Washington Coach Gene Shue. "It was a typical Bullets game. It didn't look good for awhile, but we were playing good defense the whole time."

Mahorn scored four of his eight third-quarter points in the final two minutes as the Bullets got the last eight points of the period to tie the game 63-63, the first deadlock since 2-2. Mahorn then hit the first six Washington points of the fourth period to give the Bullets their first leads of the game. He got another basket to start a 20-4 spurt that broke open the game, giving the Bullets an 87-73 lead with 3:42 left.

"I'm really just a defensive clog," said Mahorn, who didn't take a shot in the first half, but was 7-for-10 the last two periods. "I try to help everyone else on defense. But I started taking my shots in the second half.

"My job is to take the shot when it's the last thing to do. Usually, I just do the dirty work underneath."

BUT WITH their 16-point first quarter and 41-point first half, the Bullets might not have been able to win if the the Nets' top scorer, Ray Williams, hadn't had a 4-for-19 shooting night.

Williams followed a career-high 52 points in New Jersey's final regular-season game against Detroit Saturday night with 11 against the Bullets, most of them when the game was out of reach.

"Maybe I should have stopped shooting in the third quarter of the Detroit game, and saved some for tonight," Williams said. "But what can you say? I got to be professional about it. You can't dwell on it because it's going to haunt you in the next ballgame."

Nuggets 129, Suns 113

Kiki Vandeweghe scored 29 points and led a third-quarter surge by Denver that carried the Nuggets past Phoenix.

Vandeweghe scored 11 points in the third period as the Nuggets turned a slim 62-59 halftime edge into a comfortable 102-82 advantage.

Despite Denver's pivotal 40-point third period, Suns center Rich Kelley said the Nuggets' defense was the key.

Rockets test Sonics tonight

SEATTLE (AP) — When Houston and Seattle launch their National Basketball Association mini-series here tonight, the Rockets will have a definite "advantage," their coach says.

In addition to Houston's unstoppable 6-foot-10 center, Moses Malone, that is.

"The advantage of playing Seattle is that we've beaten them the last two times," Coach Del Harris said. "And once we're past them, we get another shot at San Antonio and we'd like that."

Harris was referring to the fact that the winner of the Houston-Seattle series will face the Midwest Division champion Spurs.

Tonight's game will start at 8 p.m. PST.

"People seem to forget that we won the season series," countered Seattle Coach Lenny Wilkens. "I'm not going to forecast or predict anything, though. I'll leave that up to other people."

Seattle edged Houston three games to two in the teams' regular season series. But the Rockets, led by Malone, prevailed in the clubs' last two meetings.

Malone paced Houston to victories over Seattle Feb. 11 in Houston (117-100) and March 26 in Seattle (99-97). The unstoppable 6-foot-10 superstar had 38 points and 32 rebounds in game four between the teams and 46 points and 13 rebounds in game five.

St. Louis Blues look for good luck

By The Associated Press

Emile Francis says it takes two key ingredients to win the National Hockey League championship.

The coach and general manager of the St. Louis Blues, whose team is one of three on the brink of a long vacation as the NHL quarterfinal playoff series resume tonight, says, "To win the Stanley Cup, you've got to be both lucky and good. And, so far, our luck hasn't been too good."

The Blues trail the surprising Chicago Black Hawks 3-1 in the best-of-7 series that continues tonight in St. Louis. The rest of the schedule shows the two-time defending champion New York Islanders, ahead 3-1, at home against the New York Rangers; the Los Angeles Kings, down 1-3, traveling to Vancouver, British Columbia, to play the Canucks, and the Bruins and Quebec Nordiques, tied 2-2, colliding at Boston.

So far, the 1982 playoffs have produced some of the most competitive games in recent memory, with 22 of 50 games decided by one goal. And 11 of those victories came in overtime — a figure just two short of the record of 13 extra-period games set in 1980.

A year ago, there were only eight overtime games in the entire postseason schedule, and just 19 of the 68 games played were decided to one goal.

Islander defenseman Denis Potvin, who scored a goal in his team's 5-3 victory Monday night in New York, talked about the tightness of the series he is playing in, but the sentiment could have been shared by everyone.

"Nobody's getting a break; none of these games have been any fun," the Islanders' captain said. "Right from the opening whistle, there's been no coasting.

"And this is just the second of four series. It's a long road to go after this. We're going to have to be ready to play right until the final buzzer."

Murder trial has shades of soap opera

By JAMES ROWLEY

WESTMINSTER, Md. (AP) — It has the residents of this rural western Maryland community hooked — a murder trial involving an admitted bigamist, testifying against her latest spouse who is accused of hiring a hitman to kill a previous wife.

"It's like a soap opera," said Terry Burk, owner of "The Treat Shop," a restaurant where talk often turns to developments in the continuing saga of Robert Myers and his wife, Tina, who is expecting their second child in June.

"It's like the day after 'Dallas' or the day after 'Flamingo Road.' Everybody discusses what happens," Burk said.

Last month, before his wife and co-defendant became his chief accuser, Myers held her hand through two days of court hearings. But on the third day, he turned pale when it was announced that the 32-year-old Mrs. Myers, in exchange for complete immunity from prosecution, would testify against her husband.

MYERS, A 39-YEAR-OLD accountant and real estate investor, is accused of hiring Daniel Lee Chadderton to kill Myers' previous wife, Mary Ruth. The late Mrs. Myers was fatally shot by an intruder at the couple's home in Silver Run on Aug. 29, 1979.

Chadderton goes on trial this week in the western Maryland town of Oakland where the case was moved to avoid pre-trial publicity. Myers' separate trial is also scheduled to be held in the same Garrett County courthouse.

Carroll County State's Attorney Thomas Hickman's decision to grant Mrs. Myers immunity has stirred controversy in this rural county seat, where the Republican prosecutor campaigned against excessive plea bargaining.

"They see her as being the evil other woman with questionable connections," said Dean Minnich, managing editor of the Carroll County Evening Sun.

> "They see her as being the evil other woman with questionable connections ... It's an unusual case, it's the first contract murder in the history of the county."

Mrs. Myers' reputation was not enhanced by her guilty plea in Bermuda last fall to a charge that she was the wife of a Florida plumber when she married Myers less than a month after his last wife's death. Her guilty plea came shortly before she was extradited to Maryland to face the first-degree murder charge. Authorities say she has at least four ex-husbands. Myers has been married three times.

ACCORDING TO PROSECUTORS, Myers met Tina Layne, a waitress at a bar, just 20 days before Mary Ruth Myers died. The two became romantically involved and Tina Layne moved in with Myers the day he buried his slain wife, prosecutors say.

On the night of the murder, the two were allegedly staying in an Ocean City, Md., motel that Myers owned, according to investigators. The prosecution is prepared to submit evidence that Chadderton, a supermarket janitor, telephoned Myers and described the killing.

According to Phillip Sutley, her attorney, Tina Myers is expected to tell jurors what she heard during that telephone conversation.

"You'll hear the last two minutes of Mary Ruth Myers' life," Sutley said. "It was shocking and I've been around long enough to have heard a lot of these stories."

The two defendants and Mrs. Myers are in the Garrett County Jail. Despite immunity, Mrs. Myers chose to remain there until after the trials because she feels safe and gets good pre-natal care, Sutley said.

"WE HAVE A VERY low crime rate, we usually have an average of two murder prosecutions a year," said Hickman. "It's an unusual case, it's the first contract murder in the history of the county."

Before his indictment last fall, Myers ran a successful accounting firm, making $100,000 "in a bad year," Sutley said. Residents describe Myers as a flamboyant person who liked to talk about his successes in real estate.

"He was flamboyant, he liked to discuss making money, it was what he did best," said Burk, who recalled Myers as a frequent customer.

"The public has heard less than 20 percent of the story," Hickman said. "They are operating in the dark. When they know the whole story they will be satisfied."

After the trials, Hickman said, he will explain how he handled the case on his weekly five-minute radio show. "I'm sure it's going to take me a lot of weeks...to explain this one."

Eva Pocklington, wife of Alberta, Can. entrepreneur Peter Pocklington, stands outside her home with police after escaping from a gunman who held her husband hostage 12 hours. Also held hostage, but released before police entered the home and shot the gunman, were a housekeeper and babysitter. The gunman, unidentified pending the filing of formal charges, is described by police as in his 20s and extremely dangerous. He apparently cut the phone lines before entering the home and the friend Mrs. Pocklington was talking to called the police. Mrs. Pocklington told police she escaped from the gunman after he tried to force her into the trunk of a car in the garage.

Millionaire hostage freed, slightly injured

EDMONTON, Alberta (AP) — Peter Pocklington, the multimillionaire owner of Edmonton's hockey, soccer and baseball teams, was slightly wounded when police rescued him from a masked gunman who held him captive for 12 hours in an attempt to collect $1 million in ransom.

A spokeswoman said the police fired at the gunman and the bullet went through his arm and apparently lodged in Pocklington's shoulder. The gunman was reported in stable condition.

Publication of the gunman's identity was prohibited by law until he was formally charged. But the police said he was in his 20s, was armed with an M-16 automatic rifle and a knife and was extremely dangerous.

The police gave this account of the incident:

Wearing a ski mask, the man burst into the Pocklington home on the edge of the University of Alberta campus at 9:30 a.m. Tuesday and tied up the 40-year-old businessman-sportsman, his housekeeper and a male babysitter.

Pocklington

Pocklington's 5-year-old son, Zachary, was at school and his wife, Eva, was on the telephone with a friend. When the line went dead, the friend telephoned the police, and Mrs. Pocklington escaped barefoot from the house.

The police made contact by telephone with the gunman, who demanded $1 million in big bills and a safe escape route. Police negotiators persuaded him to release the housekeeper, a woman in her 50s, and the 21-year-old babysitter after four hours and told him they were getting the money together from local banks.

The housekeeper and the babysitter said their hands and feet had been tied with wire but they had been treated comparatively well.

After eight hours, Pocklington was permitted to speak with the police by telephone, and a police official reported: "He seems to be holding up well. There's no indication of ill treatment."

Meanwhile, Mrs. Pocklington told the police about a "secret entrance" to the house, and four police officers got in through it in the late afternoon. Several hours later the gunman was lured downstairs to collect the ransom, bringing Pocklington with him, and the police opened fire.

Deadline brings AT&T modification plans

WASHINGTON (AP) — Even though he can't order changes, a federal judge is being hit by all sides with pleas to modify the Justice Department's antitrust settlement with the American Telephone & Telegraph Co.

Responding to a Tuesday deadline for public comment, AT&T's competitors, federal and state regulators, consumer groups and large telephone users unveiled a host of recommendations for U.S. District Judge Harold H. Greene.

The agreement, settling a 1974 antitrust suit by the Justice Department against AT&T, must be approved or rejected by Greene.

The judge cannot order any changes, but he can suggest modifications that would put the Justice Department in the position of accepting them or facing the prospect of have to resume the antitrust trial.

The comments filed Tuesday were almost unanimous in suggesting changes.

The Federal Communications Commission said provisions restricting the local operating companies solely to providing local telephone service are too broad, "unnecessary and unwise."

A basic premise of the Justice Department's agreement was that local service is a monopoly function that should be strictly separated from long-distance and equipment markets that are soon to be competitive.

The FCC, however, said the local operating companies' re-entry into either the equipment or long-distance markets would spur competition "and hasten the erosion of AT&T's significant market position."

The American Newspaper Publishers Association and the National Cable Television Association argued that prohibition on local service companies from entering the electronic information or cable TV businesses should also be extended to AT&T.

AT&T, as long as it maintains monopoly power over the long-distance market, will "retain the power...and the incentive to discriminate against competing service providers such as electronic publishers," the newspaper publishers said.

Senators won't have to stay sitting

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senators may one day find themselves voting on television like their House counterparts — but they won't be doing it from their desks.

The Senate on Tuesday voted down, 51 to 46, a proposal by Sen. Jennings Randolph, D-W.Va., to restore what he called "Senate dignity" by requiring senators to vote quietly from their assigned desks.

Randolph said it would end the "disorder...and milling around" on the floor each time the roll is called.

He sought to attach his proposal to long-debated legislation to allow TV and radio coverage of Senate proceedings, as the House has done for the past three years.

At the same time, senators voted to keep on talking about the overall bill, rejecting by a 51-to-47 margin a debate-limiting "cloture" motion by Majority Leader Howard Baker, R-Tenn.

Rebuffed in his first attempt to end a filibuster on the bill, Baker filed another cloture motion to be voted on today. If that fails, Baker indicated he's ready to file another motion to be voted on Thursday.

He claims he has the votes to permit TV coverage of the Senate if he can ever break the filibuster — a move that requires 60 votes, or three-fifths of the Senate.

"Our hope is that we can get cloture by Thursday...We knew we weren't going to get it (Tuesday)," said Baker spokesman Tom Griscom.

Cloture usually fails in the Senate on the first attempt since some senators automatically vote against initial debate-limiting moves on general principle — regardless of the issue.

Griscom said it was not yet known how many senators fit into that category, but that a head count was under way.

"Television will come to the Senate one day because the country will demand it," Baker said during Senate debate on his motion.

Senate TV opponents, led by Sen. Russell Long, D-La., have used stalling tactics to keep the Senate from reaching a vote on the issue, which has been under debate since early February.

The opponents claim senators would spend too much time playing to the cameras if they were installed. Backers contend TV and radio coverage of floor sessions would be a logical extension of the public's access to Senate proceedings.

Baker claims installing a TV system in the Senate and hiring Senate employees to man it would cost taxpayers about $2 million this year. Foes put the pricetag at closer to $4 million.

As with the House, the Senate would control its own cameras, then making the signal available to broadcast media.

Although Baker lost the first cloture vote, rejection of the amendment to require senators to vote from their desks amounted to a parliamentary victory for him.

Iranian accused of threatening uncle

HOUSTON (AP) — An Iranian citizen has been accused of anonymously threatening by telephone and through the mail to kidnap an uncle he claims is "an American errand boy."

Shahram Akhavan, 32 and living in California, was indicted Tuesday on five counts of using the U.S. Postal Service to threaten his uncle, Nasser Esphahanian, of Houston.

Esphahanian is an American of Iranian descent who worked in the Iran's oil business before the revolution toppled the shah's government.

Prosecutors said Akhavan allegedly addressed five handwritten threats to Esphahanian, beginning in 1979, and signed them either "The Voice of Khomeini" or "The Iranian Student Revolutionary Council."

Murder trial has shades of soap opera

By JAMES ROWLEY

WESTMINSTER, Md. (AP) — It has the residents of this rural western Maryland community hooked — a murder trial involving an admitted bigamist, testifying against her latest spouse who is accused of hiring a hitman to kill a previous wife.

"It's like a soap opera," said Terry Burk, owner of "The Treat Shop," a restaurant where talk often turns to developments in the continuing saga of Robert Myers and his wife, Tina, who is expecting their second child in June.

"It's like the day after 'Dallas' or the day after 'Flamingo Road.' Everybody discusses what happens," Burk said.

Last month, before his wife and co-defendant became his chief accuser, Myers held her hand through two days of court hearings. But on the third day, he turned pale when it was announced that the 32-year-old Mrs. Myers, in exchange for complete immunity from prosecution, would testify against her husband.

MYERS, A 39-YEAR-OLD accountant and real estate investor, is accused of hiring Daniel Lee Chadderton to kill Myers' previous wife, Mary Ruth. The late Mrs. Myers was fatally shot by an intruder at the couple's home in Silver Run on Aug. 29, 1979.

Chadderton goes on trial this week in the western Maryland town of Oakland where the case was moved to avoid pre-trial publicity. Myers' separate trial is also scheduled to be held in the same Garrett County courthouse.

Carroll County State's Attorney Thomas Hickman's decision to grant Mrs. Myers immunity has stirred controversy in this rural county seat, where the Republican prosecutor campaigned against excessive plea bargaining.

"They see her as being the evil other woman with questionable connections," said Dean Minnich, managing editor of the Carroll County Evening Sun.

> "They see her as being the evil other woman with questionable connections ... It's an unusual case, it's the first contract murder in the history of the county."

Mrs. Myers' reputation was not enhanced by her guilty plea in Bermuda last fall to a charge that she was the wife of a Florida plumber when she married Myers less than a month after his last wife's death. Pocklington

Pocklington's 5-year-old son, Zachary, was at school and his wife, Eva, was on the telephone with a friend. When the line went dead, the friend telephoned the police; and Mrs. Pocklington escaped barefoot from the house.

The police made contact by telephone with the gunman, who demanded $1 million in big bills and a safe escape route. Police negotiators persuaded him to release the housekeeper, a woman in her 50s, and the 21-year-old babysitter after four hours and told him they were getting the money together from local banks.

The housekeeper and the babysitter said their hands and feet had been tied with wire but they had been treated comparatively well.

After eight hours, Pocklington was permitted to speak with the police by telephone, and a police official reported: "He seems to be holding up well. There's no indication of ill treatment."

Meanwhile, Mrs. Pocklington told the police about a "secret entrance" to the house, and four police officers got in through it in the late afternoon. Several hours later the gunman was lured downstairs to collect the ransom, bringing Pocklington with him, and the police opened fire.

Deadline brings AT&T modification plans

WASHINGTON (AP) — Even though he can't order changes, a federal judge is being hit by all sides with pleas to modify the Justice Department's antitrust settlement with the American Telephone & Telegraph Co.

Responding to a Tuesday deadline for public comment, AT&T's competitors, federal and state regulators, consumer groups and large telephone users unveiled a host of recommendations for U.S. District Judge Harold H. Greene.

The agreement, settling a 1974 antitrust suit by the Justice Department against AT&T, must be approved or rejected by Greene.

The judge cannot order any changes, but he can suggest modifications that would put the Justice Department in the position of accepting them or facing the prospect of have to resume the antitrust trial.

The comments filed Tuesday were almost unanimous in suggesting changes.

The Federal Communications Commission said provisions restricting the local operating companies solely to providing local telephone service are too broad, "unnecessary and unwise."

A basic premise of the Justice Department's agreement was that local service is a monopoly function that should be strictly separated from long-distance and equipment markets that are soon to be competitive.

The FCC, however, said the local operating companies' re-entry into either the equipment or long-distance markets would spur competition "and hasten the erosion of AT&T's significant market position."

The American Newspaper Publishers Association and the National Cable Television Association argued that prohibition on local service companies from entering the electronic information or cable TV businesses should also be extended to AT&T.

AT&T, as long as it maintains monopoly power over the long-distance market, will "retain the power...and the incentive to discriminate against competing service providers such as electronic publishers," the newspaper-publishers said.

Senators won't have to stay sitting

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senators may one day find themselves voting on television like their House counterparts — but they won't be doing it from their desks.

The Senate on Tuesday voted down, 51 to 46, a proposal by Sen. Jennings Randolph, D-W.Va., to restore what he called "Senate dignity" by requiring senators to vote quietly from their assigned desks.

Randolph said it would end the "disorder...and milling around" on the floor each time the roll is called.

He sought to attach his proposal to long-debated legislation to allow TV and radio coverage of Senate proceedings, as the House has done for the past three years.

At the same time, senators voted to keep on talking about the overall bill, rejecting by a 51-to-47 margin a debate-limiting "cloture" motion by Majority Leader Howard Baker, R-Tenn.

Rebuffed in his first attempt to end a filibuster on the bill, Baker filed another cloture motion to be voted on today. If that fails, Baker indicated he's ready to file another motion to be voted on Thursday.

He claims he has the votes to permit TV coverage of the Senate if he can ever break the filibuster — a move that requires 60 votes, or three-fifths of the Senate.

"Our hope is that we can get cloture by Thursday...We knew we weren't going to get it (Tuesday)," said Baker spokesman Tom Griscom.

Cloture usually fails in the Senate on the first attempt since some senators automatically vote against initial debate-limiting moves on general principle — regardless of the issue.

Griscom said it was not yet known how many senators fit into that category, but that a head count was under way.

"Television will come to the Senate one day because the country will demand it," Baker said during Senate debate on his motion.

Senate TV opponents, led by Sen. Russell Long, D-La., have used stalling tactics to keep the Senate from reaching a vote on the issue, which has been under debate since early February.

The opponents claim senators would spend too much time playing to the cameras if they were installed. Backers contend TV and radio coverage of floor sessions would be a logical extension of the public's access to Senate proceedings.

Baker claims installing a TV system in the Senate and hiring Senate employees to man it would cost taxpayers about $2 million this year. Foes put the price tag at closer to $4 million.

As with the House, the Senate would control its own cameras, then making the signal available to broadcast media.

Although Baker lost the first cloture vote, rejection of the amendment to require senators to vote from their desks amounted to a parliamentary setback for him.

Iranian accused of threatening uncle

HOUSTON (AP) — An Iranian citizen has been accused of anonymously threatening by telephone and through the mail to kidnap an uncle he claims is "an American errand boy."

Shahram Akhavan, 32 and living in California, was indicted Tuesday on five counts of using the U.S. Postal Service to threaten his uncle, Nasser Esphahanian, of Houston.

Esphahanian is an American of Iranian descent who worked in the Iran's oil business before the revolution toppled the shah's government.

Prosecutors said Akhavan allegedly addressed five handwritten threats to Esphahanian, beginning in 1979, and signed them either "The Voice of Khomeini" or "The Iranian Student Revolutionary Council."

Reagan should receive strategic arms proposal in 10 days

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's arms control chief says American proposals for joint U.S.-Soviet reductions in intercontinental nuclear weapons will be submitted to President Reagan within 10 days and that talks with Moscow will likely begin this summer.

Eugene Rostow, director of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, said the urgency of the talks is underscored by the fact that Reagan was "absolutely right" in saying the Soviets have achieved a definite margin of nuclear superiority.

Rostow, in an interview with The Associated Press, expressed fears that proposals to freeze the U.S. nuclear arsenal or adopt a policy of "no first use" of nuclear weapons on conventional battlefields will undermine arms control by removing the Soviet incentive to negotiate.

He said the freeze and "no first use" proposals are impelled by a "rising tide of isolationism in this country" that threatens to escalate the pace of worldwide nuclear proliferation by creating panic among U.S. allies.

Such policies, he said, would undermine or even "repudiate" the U.S nuclear guarantee to keep Europe and Japan safe from aggression.

But Rostow sought to reassure critics of U.S. nuclear policies that the administration, even while rejecting the proposals of some of its critics, is serious about arms control as a key component of U.S. foreign policy.

He made these assessments of the situation to date:

—The final, "carefully prepared" proposals on the U.S. negotiating position at strategic arms reduction (START) talks with Moscow will be on Reagan's desk by May 1. If approved, consultations with Congress and U.S. allies will begin almost immediately.

—If conditions are right, the Soviet Union would then be consulted on an opening date for strategic arms talks. "My own view is that I would expect them to start during the summer," he said.

—It is "very possible" that START will be merged at some point with what he described as the closely interrelated Geneva negotiations on reducing medium-range missiles in Europe.

—The medium-range missile talks will enter a new phase when they resume next month after an eight-week recess — building an agreed U.S.-Soviet data base that hopefully will form the underpinning of future agreements. The data includes types and capabilities of missiles and warheads and information from missile tests.

Some critics of U.S. nuclear arms policies have contended that Reagan was wrong when he said earlier this month that "on balance" the Soviets have achieved a "definite margin of nuclear superiority" over the United States.

In the interview Tuesday, Rostow chose not to follow the course of other key administration officials, who declined to endorse Reagan's estimate and said only that Moscow is headed in the direction of superiority.

"I say the president was right and that he explained it absolutely perfectly," Rostow said. "The point is that while all men may be created equal, all warheads are not equal. Some are bigger, more accurate, more susceptible to defense than others."

He said the Soviet nuclear arsenal is dominated by "very powerful, very formidible ballistic missiles," while the United States, though it has a possible numerical edge, has far fewer weapons of that magnitude.

"It is that disparity which is the basis for what the president said," Rostow said. "Because with a quarter of their arsenal, they could take out our ICBMs, our submarines in port, our planes on the ground and they would have such a reserve left as to cast grave doubt on any (U.S.) retaliation whatever."

"They could paralyze what's left of our force," he said. "And that's what the president said. And that's superiority."

Critics of the administration's nuclear weapons policies maintain that in the event of a Soviet first strike, the United States would still retain a devastating second-strike capacity from its missile-firing submarines at sea, a point Rostow did not address.

"The anxiety is that our force is retaliatory and theirs has the capacity also to be coercive and aggressive," Rostow added. "I don't believe the great danger is of nuclear war, but I do believe the great danger is of nuclear blackmail."

Europeans fear nuclear war, Queen Beatrix says

WASHINGTON (AP) — A growing awareness of the danger of nuclear war is causing Europeans to become increasingly vocal about their fears, says Queen Beatrix of the Netherlands.

The queen, who gave a speech at a National Press Club luncheon Tuesday and answered questions afterward, noted, "Fortunately we all live in countries where we can express these things, and I think that's a very valuable side of it."

"People in Europe and I think also elsewhere are becoming more and more aware of the danger of possible nuclear war, and with this awareness they are also becoming more worried and express their worries," she said.

As she continues her visit to the United States, the queen was scheduled this afternoon to address a joint session of Congress.

During her Press Club appearance, she emphasized the importance to her country of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, calling it "absolutely vital" to the Netherlands.

When questions came closer to controversial political issues, the queen called on Foreign Minister Max van der Stoel, pointing out that the Dutch monarch is required to be above politics.

Van der Stoel said the Dutch government has decided to put off the question of deploying new American nuclear missiles on its soil, pending the progress of discussions on the subject with the Soviet Union. His own Labor party, which the government needs for a majority, opposes the new American missiles and says it will not take part in a government that approves them.

In answer to a question, he said that although nuclear weapons cannot be altogether eliminated, perhaps there could be less dependence on them for the defense of Europe.

Bush tries to put Soviets on defensive

WASHINGTON (AP) — Vice President George Bush today accused the Soviet Union of spurning repeated attempts to end the atomic weapons race and insisted the United States "has nothing to apologize for in its efforts to bring this nuclear madness under control."

Trying to put Moscow on the defensive in the propaganda battle over nuclear weapons, Bush said the Kremlin has a "historic record of poor cooperation in reducing the nuclear threat," beginning with its rejection of a plan presented at the United Nations in 1946 for international control of atomic bombs.

In the 1950s, Bush said, President Dwight Eisenhower unsuccessfully tried to sell Russia numerous proposals to control nuclear weapons and divert atomic use to peaceful purposes.

"Eisenhower was not alone in his frustration," Bush said in a speech. "Every American president since has heard the resounding Soviet 'nyet' to U.S. appeals to control the growth of nuclear arsenals."

Bush's speech, before a National Public Radio audience, coincided with the fourth day of Ground Zero Week, a nationwide campaign of speeches and demonstrations organized by a Washington-based anti-nuclear lobby.

The vice president said the Reagan administration welcomed a national debate on arms control and the emergence of a nuclear freeze as part of that discussion.

"Not freezing, but reducing nuclear weapons is one of this administration's highest priorities," Bush said.

In rejecting a freeze, Bush said the United States first must increase its nuclear arsenal to attain "parity with the Soviet Union, so that any negotiated freeze will not result in a U.S. or Western European disadvantage."

"Some, of course, argue that any increase of U.S. nuclear weapons or delivery systems will only motivate the Soviets to produce more and more of their own weapons and delivery systems," he said. "I don't accept that."

Over the past 35 years, Bush said, the Soviet Union has moved steadily toward superiority in conventional forces and a nuclear force advantage "in some important areas" over the United States and its European allies.

"During the past decade the United States has reduced the number of nuclear weapons based in Western Europe," he said. "In fact, our nation's nuclear stockpile is at its lowest level in 20 years.

"In response to our decade-long, de facto freeze, the Soviets have deployed more than 250 multiple-warhead SS-20s since 1975 and have begun modernization of their tactical nuclear forces with an entire generation of shorter range missiles.

"It is precisely for this reason that European leaders don't want a freeze — and have told us exactly that," the vice president said.

Bush predicted that most members of the House and Senate would not support a proposal "to freeze the United States and our allies into a position of disadvantage."

A freeze proposal by Sens. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., and Mark Hatfield, R-Ore. has won support of 24 senators and 166 House members.

President Reagan, talking with reporters Tuesday, said he sympathized with people "talking about the horrors of nuclear war," but claimed he is the only person who has the facts necessary to make decisions intended to reduce the threat of such war.

Asked about the activities of the Ground Zero group, Reagan said, "I have to be heart and soul in sympathy with the people that are talking about the horrors of nuclear war and the fact that we should do everything we could to prevent such a war from happening."

Reagan said that "only in this position (the presidency) do you have all the facts necessary to base decisions on action.

"And, therefore," he said, "I would ask their trust and confidence that, feeling as sincerely as I do, the same as they do, that they would allow us to take the actions that we think are necessary to lessen this threat."

Weinberger calls military buildup 'signal to Soviets'

NEW YORK (AP) — Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger says the Reagan administration's record military buildup is "a clear signal to the Soviets" that they could not outlast the United States in a war.

But Weinberger acknowledged Tuesday that problems with Congress over the budget may necessitate "certain reductions" in proposed defense spending.

The United States "must be prepared to halt and seek to reverse the geographic expansion of Soviet control and military presence," particularly where vital interests of the United States and its allies are threatened, Weinberger said in a speech to the Council on Foreign Relations.

He did not say how the United States would go about reversing Soviet expansionism.

"Emboldened by America's post-Vietnam paralysis and its own increased military capabilities, the Soviet Union has pushed its traditional policy of global expansionism to a new dimension in recent years," Weinberger said.

His speech was aimed at countering what he called "misconceptions" about U.S. defense policy.

"We seek to deter Soviet aggression against the United States and its allies by maintaining the capability to respond effectively at the lowest possible level of violence," he said.

Defending the administration's defense buildup, Weinberger said, "The cost of countering the expansion of Soviet military power must inevitably reflect the magnitude of the Soviet effort."

The administration program, he said, sends "a clear signal to the Soviets that they cannot start a conflict in the hopes of outlasting the United States."

But in a news conference before his speech, Weinberger conceded that the administration's struggle with Congress over the budget means "it may well be we'll have to make certain reductions this year" in planned defense spending.

Californians oppose nuclear arms

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A campaign to halt the nuclear arms race produced more than double the number of signatures needed to put the initiative on California's ballot Nov. 2.

Nearly 750,000 signatures were taken Tuesday to county registrars. Only 346,119 were needed to put the nuclear freeze issue on the ballot, campaign officials said.

If a majority of Californians approve the initiative, the governor would be required to write to the president, the secretary of defense, the secretary of state and members of Congress urging them to seek an agreement with the Soviet Union for an immediate halt to "testing, production and further deployment of all nuclear weapons, missiles and delivery systems."

Similar proposals will be on the ballots this fall in seven other states and the District of Columbia, said Karen Fierke, co-director of the National Clearinghouse of the Nuclear Weapons Freeze campaign in St. Louis.

U.S. casts third veto in Israel's behalf

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The United States cast its third Security Council veto on Israel's behalf since January to kill an Arab resolution blaming "armed Israelis" for the Easter Sunday shooting at the Mosque of Omar, Jerusalem's holiest Islamic shrine.

The other 14 council members voted for the resolution Tuesday. But U.S. Ambassador Jeane J. Kirkpatrick said it implied responsibility for the incident "lies not with the individual who was responsible but with the Israeli authorities who unequivably denounced the act."

Israel is holding an American immigrant in the Israeli army for the shooting, in which two Arabs were killed. Israeli officials said the man was mentally disturbed.

These Salvadoran children, photographed at a farm house about 10 miles west of Divisadero, said army troops entered the village of Berrios by running and hiding. The children are being watched by a guerrilla who guided journalists to two mass graves reportedly containing 47 bodies.

47 Salvadoran peasants massacred

By SOLL SUSSMAN

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — El Salvador's army denied reports that one of its patrols massacred 47 peasants in a tiny village in the eastern part of the country. The U.S. Embassy said it couldn't prove who did the killing.

Peasants who said they survived the massacre and leftist guerrillas told a group of foreign journalists an army patrol entered Berrios, a village of seven houses 125 miles east of San Salvador, and killed more than half the population on Sunday, including 12 children between 4 and 11 years old, two pregnant women, two women who were raped and then shot, and a 90-year-old man.

The next day an army helicopter strafed the outskirts of the village and dropped a bomb, killing another man, the peasants said.

"We have said that is a lie," said an army spokesman in San Salvador. A spokesman for the national police in San Miguel, the country's third largest city 18 miles south of Berrios, said its reports indicated nothing had taken place in the village.

"What seems true is that a lot of people were killed," said a U.S. Embassy spokesman, asking that he not be identified by name. "I don't think that there is anything provable about who did it. ... Under what circumstances they were killed, we don't know."

Guerrillas took a group of foreign journalists to Berrios, produced peasants who said they survived the massacre and showed them four graves the villagers said contained the bodies of the victims.

They said there were 30 bodies in one grave, 16 in another, one in the third and the body of the man killed in the air attack in the fourth.

Maria de La Paz, 28, told the journalists the villagers had been giving food to the guerrillas because they were "helping the people." But because they also had been feeding the army patrols regularly when they came by, "we were not afraid," she said, when a patrol entered the village about 7 a.m. Sunday shortly after a firefight in the area that had the peasants ducking to avoid stray bullets.

This time, she said, the soldiers yelled, "'Leave! leave rapidly!' and they took the people and killed them in a dead-end street."

A 10-year-old girl, Mercedes, said she was making coffee when soldiers entered her house and "one told my father, 'Go, all of you get in line to be killed,' and the shooting started."

"At that moment I went crazy," the child continued. "I did not look at the people; I only looked that they were shooting. I saw that they were shooting at a group of children and I...went into the hills."

Marlene, 12, said two soldiers entered her house, and one of them told her father to "step to the center of the house."

"My father said no, that if it was his turn to die, he was going to die right there," the girl continued, and the soldier told him, "Well, then, it'll be here."

"I was off to the side a little bit when they killed him," she said. "A soldier shot two times. He was bathed in blood."

Marlene said one of the soldiers was a relative, and he got angry at the one who shot her father and hit him with his rifle.

The survivors fled to the hills, the journalists reported.

Since a leftist coalition launched the guerrilla war to overthrow the U.S.-backed civilian-military junta more than two years ago, the army has been accused a number of times of indiscriminately killing villagers suspected of supporting the guerrillas. The army either denies that there was any killing, says the victims were guerrillas who attacked the troops or says guerrillas killed the peasants.

Symms proposes force to halt Cuba

By ROBERT PARRY

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration, hardening its stance against Cuba, is backing a Senate proposal that calls on the president to use force if needed to halt Cuban subversion in the Western Hemisphere.

The proposal, sponsored by Sen. Steven Symms, R-Idaho, has been likened by critics to the 1964 Gulf of Tohkin resolution that President Johnson invoked to justify U.S. military intervention in Vietnam.

While declaring that President Reagan has no plans to send military forces into combat in Latin America, a senior State Department official announced Tuesday that the administration would back Symms' proposal.

Stephen W. Bosworth, deputy assistant secretary of state for inter-American affairs, also renewed administration charges that Cuba and leftist Nicaragua are supporting guerrilla groups in El Salvador and Guatemala — charges the two countries deny.

"In the case of Cuba, we continue to oppose fundamentally all efforts to export subversion and terrorism in Central America and the Caribbean," Bosworth told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

ON MONDAY, the administration announced new U.S. currency restrictions designed to block U.S. tourist and business travel to Cuba after May 15 and thus prevent the Cubans from obtaining U.S. dollars.

Together the two moves suggest a toughening of U.S. policy toward Fidel Castro's government despite recent statements by high-ranking Cuban officials indicating a willingness to begin negotiations with the United States toward easing tensions.

Only last week, the State Department supported efforts to table — or kill — the Symms resolution when it was proposed as an amendment to another bill before the Senate. The State Department said then its passage would not be "helpful" at a time of delicate diplomatic maneuvering.

The amendment was tabled 41-39 and sent back to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, where Chairman Charles Percy, R-Ill., has promised to hold hearings on it in the near future.

The Symms' resolution reaffirms a 1962 resolution enacted at the height of the Cuban missile crisis and calls on the president to use "whatever means may be necessary" to oppose Cuban "aggressive or subversive activities" in the hemisphere.

Critics, including Percy, contend that its approval now would grant the president nearly "open-ended" authority to commit U.S. troops to battle in the hemisphere. And they claim it could effectively waive the requirement in the 1973 War Powers Act that a president obtain congressional approval within 60 days of committing U.S. troops to a conflict or pull them out.

BOSWORTH EXPRESSED administration support for Symms' proposal as a continuation of long-standing U.S. policy.

"The resolution...reflects the policy of six administrations and certainly this one," he said. "While we supported the tabling motion on the Senate floor, we did so only because we believed it was appropriate the resolution be fully addressed in committee."

However, Symms accused the State Department of an "apparent flip-flop" on the issue, and Bosworth conceded that the wording of the department's letter supporting the tabling motion was "less than felicitous."

In other developments, Bosworth:

—Praised the new Guatemalan junta for reducing the level of political violence since it seized power one month ago.

"We hope that the new government of Guatemala will continue to make progress in these areas, and that we in turn will be able to establish a closer, more collaborative relationship with this key country."

—Reaffirmed U.S. opposition to negotiations with leftist Salvadoran guerrillas that would grant them a role in the government.

Car bombs kill two Irish

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Car bombs exploded in six cities and towns of Northern Ireland, killing two men and injuring at least six other people, police reported.

The bombs exploded early today in Magherafelt and during the Tuesday evening rush hour in Belfast, Strabane, Londonderry, Ballymena and Bessbrook. The mostly-Roman Catholic Irish Republican Army and its splinter groups were suspected although nobody claimed responsibility.

Two men were killed and three others including a policeman were wounded in Magherafelt, in County Londonderry, when a bomb went off in a car in the town square as police were clearing the area after a telephoned warning. One of those killed was walking nearby, and the other was sitting in his parked car, a police spokesman said.

Police said the car was stolen in Draperstown, eight miles away, and was left in the square by three armed, masked men.

All the other explosions occurred in parked cars in shopping districts between 5:20 and 7 p.m. Tuesday, but only three persons were reported injured, in Strabane.

Meanwhile, hundreds of Roman Catholics rioted in the Bogside district of Londonderry, Northern Ireland's second largest city, after the death in a hospital Monday night of 11-year-old Steven McConomy. The boy was wounded Friday night when British troops fired plastic bullets to drive off a gang stoning them.

A police spokesman said security forces fired two more plastic bullets Tuesday night to disperse gangs of youths pelting them with rocks and gasoline bombs. But the only casualties reported were a policeman and a woman who drove her car into a barricade thrown up by the rioters.

Security forces started using plastic bullets instead of lower-velocity, less-accurate rubber bullets against rioters in 1973. At least six people have been killed by them.

"We always give two or three warnings through a loudspeaker that we will fire plastic rounds if the rioters don't go home," a police spokesman said.

Korean troops exchange fire

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — North Korean troops fired across the demilitarized zone between North and South Korea for more than four hours early today, apparently to prevent four North Korean soldiers from defecting to the South, a South Korean spokesman said.

The spokesman, Brig. Gen. Park Jong-shik, said the bodies of the four were seen lying on the ground, either dead or wounded possibly by exploding mines. He said they were recovered by North Korean troops.

The South Koreans returned the fire but suffered no casualties, said Park.

North Korea's Radio Pyongyang confirmed that there were North Korean casualties but gave no details.

The U.N. Command protested to the Military Armistice Commission, accusing the North Koreans of a serious violation of the 1953 armistice. It was the most serious exchange of fire between the opposing force in many months.

North Korea's official news agency claimed the South Koreans started the shooting, firing on a routine patrol by North Korean "civil police, and the North Koreans were compelled to return the fire in self defense.

Commissioner Wallace says

Americans should demand energy security from Congress

By LESLIE HAINES
Energy and Business Writer

It's time for the American public to demand energy security from Congress, "to free ourselves strategically" from foreign energy producers, said Texas Railroad Commissioner Mack Wallace Tuesday in Midland. "We have allowed imported crude oil to severely hamper our national security, and Congress is afraid to take the energy steps necessary to correct this imbalance."

Wallace said he favors tax incentives for domestic energy producers, and opening up Federal lands to exploration and development, but hasn't yet decided whether or not he would support an import tax on foreign oil.

He made his remarks following a statewide RRC oil and gas hearing; held in Midland for the first time in 16 years.

"Since 1973, I have urged the development of a clear-cut National Energy Policy that would be beneficial to all Americans — a policy free of partisan bickering. It has not happened," said Wallace, a nine-year veteran of the RRC.

Wallace called the "alleged glut of oil" a popular misconception and a "lullaby to rock to sleep not only the Congress but the public as well.

"There's no oil glut. Storage tanks perhaps are full, but if you were walking across the Sahara Desert and you had a one-quart canteen, it wouldn't matter how many supplies you'd go by; you couldn't fill yourself up.

"There can be no fuel glut in America unitl we produce one ourselves."

The public must realize that more than 30 percent of the fuel we use comes from foreign sources, through "extremely vulnerable" supply lines, he said.

Quoting from a 30 year-old policy statement from the National Petroleum Council, Wallace said, "Imports in excess of our economic needs, after taking into account domestic production...will retard domestic exploration and development of new oil fields and the technological progress in all branches of industry which is essential to the nation's economic welfare and security."

While admitting a tax on oil imports might be used to encourage production and discourage importation of oil, Wallace said he would prefer a national security depletion allowance, similar to the depletion allowance in place several years ago.

"We need a mechanism to increase production. It (an import tax) would put money in the national treasury and it would decrease the deficit, but my problem is, would it increase the production of oil?"

Wallace said Congress has been "clever, innovative and assertive over the years," in side-stepping energy issues and in not taking measures he feels are needed to promote domestic production.

He also criticized the "trendy special interest groups," particularly the environmentalists, who have blocked energy projects such as the Long Beach to Midland Pipeline and the Northern Tier Pipeline.

The latter was "slapped down" recently by Washington Gov. John Spellman, who claimed the project would be an environmental risk to Puget Sound. The project would have transported crude from Port Angeles, Wash. to Clearbrook, Minn.

Calling the decision "poppycock"; Wallace said what the state of Washington is protecting "becomes pale when measured against this nation's energy needs, unemployment and national security.

"We have taken the risks in Texas — other states need to assume national citizenship, too.

"People in the interior of the U.S. depend on ports of entry for fuel and food, and one state should not have the right to say 'no'."

If Congress does not find the courage to override the decision on Northern Tier, "we will have lost one of the most important energy projects of this decade," Wallace said. "America's energy problems require resolution on an emergency basis."

If the United States can increase oil and gas production, its economic problems "will fade like a mist in the hot sunshine."

Most of the world's political events happening today relate to energy production, Wallace said, citing the present crisis between Great Britain and Argentina over the Falkland Islands.

"You name a hotspot in the world and I'll show you an oil field. You take the Falkland Islands. They're not concerned about a group of itinerant sheepherders. Argentina thinks Britain will develop another North Sea deposit there. That's what it's about."

100 percent allowable set

The Texas Railroad Commission has set the statewide market demand factor at 100 percent allowable for the 63rd consecutive month, following the commission's oil and gas hearing in Midland Tuesday. It was the commission's first meeting in Midland since 1966.

Nominations for Texas crude oil for May, 1982, totaled 2,452,598 barrels daily, an increase of 29,060 barrels when compared to the April, 1982, nominations. The May, 1982, nominations for the purchase of gas totaled 22,797,901 MCF daily.

Those fields on special market demand factors as established on March 18, and effective April 1, 1982, will remain the same, the commissioners said.

The total gas well purchasers' nominations received by the RRC as of April 16, 1982, was 19,989,851 MCF daily average , and 3,787,062 MCF daily average for casinghead gas purchasers' nomination, for a 6 percent decrease from the previous month.

The estimated allowable for crude oil in April, 1982, was 2,990,139 barrels and estimated actual production was 2,412,000 barrels of oil per day.

Crude and petroleum products imports into the United States were 4,504,000 barrels per day for the four-week average ending April 2, 1982. This amount is down 1.3 million barrels per day from the same period last year.

No comments were made by anyone representing any of the Railroad Commission Districts in the state. Several oil company representatives reported a decrease in their nominations from last month. They said the changes represented normal field decline or were made in order to bring their nominations in line with expected purchases or receipts.

Commission chairman Jim Nugent and Commissioners Mack Wallace and Buddy Temple announced the next statewide oil and gas hearing will be Thursday, May 20, 1982, at 9 a.m., at the Railroad Commission Building in Austin, Room 107.

Occidental drops oil shale project

DENVER (AP) — Occidental Petroleum Corp. has withdrawn as manager of a multi-billion-dollar, 5,000-acre oil shale project in western Colorado's Rio Blanco County, according to an official of Tenneco Inc.

C.W. Rackley of Houston, Tenneco's senior vice president, said he was named acting chairman of a new company that will manage the Cathedral Bluffs shale project. The new company, he said, will be run by four directors from Tenneco and an equal number from Occidental.

"We needed one voice, one identity," Rackley said Tuesday. He said the reorganization will result in "improved communications and the ability to make decisions more rapidly at a lower level."

He said that he and Bill Love, who was hired by Occidental two years ago for the shale project, will be making the top day-to-day decisions for the new company, known as Cathedral Bluffs Shale Oil Co.

However, Rackley said, major policy decisions still will be made by him, Tenneco chairman J.L. Ketelsen, Occidental President Robert Habboud, and Occidental Chairman Armand Hammer.

Occidental had been the operating partner and Tenneco the "overseer or onlooker" in the project, said Frank Reed, a Tenneco spokesman.

Fred Rogers says he's bothered that some parents see him as 'sissy'

Rogers

NEW YORK (AP) — Fred Rogers, the star of the children's television program "Mr. Rogers' Neighborhood," says it bothers him that some fathers think he's a "sissy" and too gentle to be a good role model for young boys.

"There's something in me that's able to accept a wide range of people," Rogers said in an interview in the May issue of Parents magazine.

"I wonder what it is within other people that doesn't allow them to do that. If a child needs what I have to give, it seems to me that that could be an important message to the parents," he said.

Rogers said he's aware that some parents resent him because he seems so "perfect," but he does not mean to be a father substitute for the young fans who watch him.

"I think I'm just somebody who comes to visit, who knows who he is, is accepting of feelings, and is prepared to talk about them honestly," he said.

Rogers, ordained as a Presbyterian minister in 1963, says it's his special charge to "serve children and their families through the media."

He said, "By jet-set standards, I live a pretty dull life."

Jones

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Country music singer George Jones has scheduled his first public performance after being hospitalized three weeks ago for alcoholism and drug abuse.

Jones' booking agent, the Shorty Lavender Agency, said Monday that the singer would perform at the Grand Ole Opry House April 28.

Jones, 50, was hospitalized March 29 in Birmingham, Ala., a day after he was involved in a car wreck in northeastern Mississippi and two days after he was arrested near Jackson, Miss., on charges of public drunkenness and cocaine possession.

"Naturally we had to reschedule several venues, but we feel he will be back to full health in time for these events and to commence his May mini-tour of the South, which will include an appearance in Birmingham, Ala., where he is currently hospitalized," said the statement by Dan Wojcik, president of Shorty Anderson Agency.

Jones, who is divorced from country singer Tammy Wynette, has hit the charts with such songs as "He Stopped Loving Her Today," "She Thinks I Still Care," "The Race Is On," "Take Me," "Things Have Gone to Pieces," "Love Bug" and "You Can't Get There From Here."

Dietrich

LONDON (AP) — Nostalgia buffs have walked away from Christie's auction house with two gowns worn by actress Marlene Dietrich during her heyday on the silver screen.

A movie theater in Cornwall, England, paid $885 for one dress worn by Miss Dietrich in the 1937 movie "Knight Without Armor." Another of her costumes, a full-length, fur-trimmed gown, went for $778.

Several articles worn by screen idol Rudolph Valentino also were sold. A cream-colored silk shirt the film idol wore in his final film, "Son of the Sheik," went for $673. A ribbed silk sash he wore in the same movie went to an unidentified Englishwoman for $974.

LONDON (AP) — Well-wishers greeted Prince Charles and Princess Diana as the royal couple began a brief holiday on the Scilly Isles off the southwest coast of England.

Space Needle construction divides Seattle's leaders

By DOUG ESSER
Associated Press Writer

Today's 20th anniversary of the Space Needle's opening finds workers renovating the Space Needle Restaurant, which has revolved in the UFO-shaped structure at the top for two decades.

Critics say the addition is about as attractive as a pot belly. Builders say it will mean a free elevator ride for tourists to a moderately priced restaurant.

The decision to add the lower level restaurant split the city when it was announced in January 1978.

"I thought it would be a rather unattractive addition to what has come to be a symbol of Seattle," City Councilman Paul Kraabel said before he saw it. And now that he's seen it?

"I think it's a rather unattractive addition to what has come to be a symbol of Seattle."

The City Council denied a permit needed for the expansion in 1978. The case went through the courts, and the state Court of Appeals came down on the side of the owners in January 1981.

"I think the new design enhances the Space Needle and gives it some equilibrium," said Heinz Hofmann, vice president and general manger of the Space Needle Corp. "It's a matter of taste."

The owners are giving taste a lot of thought in the $2 million Skyline level restaurant and the $2 million renovation at the top.

The upper level, scheduled to open May 17, will have two restaurant sections, like tourist and first-class sections on an airplane.

The Space Needle Restaurant will offer "middle-of-the-road" fare and will seat 180 customers. A Top of The Needle restaurant will have "fine dining" at higher prices for 40 customers, Hofmann said.

The Skyline level, scheduled to open in mid-July, will offer "quick service" for 200, although it won't be "fast food," Hofmann said.

Carlson, now chairman of UAL Inc., the parent of United Airlines and Westin Hotels, visited Stuttgart, Germany, in 1959 and dined in a restaurant in a 500-foot television tower. The next day he was eating alone and thinking about the coming world's fair in Seattle.

"I remember sitting down at breakfast and sketching it on a place mat and putting a ring around the top," he said.

Built at a cost of $4.5 million, the attraction has been profitable, but Hofmann won't say just how profitable.

Visitors who take the $2 elevator ride to the observation deck can get spectacular views of Seattle, Mount Rainier and Mount Baker in the Cascade Mountains, and Puget Sound.

RUMSON, N.J. (AP) — Piloting the same type of airplane used by Amelia Earhart, a flight instructor wants to complete the round-the-world journey on which the famed aviator disappeared nearly 45 years ago.

"I'm trying to duplicate the flight as nearly as possible," said Grace McGuire, 32. "I feel we owe her something."

Miss Earhart, the first woman flier to cross the Atlantic Ocean alone, was attempting a trip around the world when she disappeared somewhere over the South Pacific en route to Howland Island in 1937. Her fate remains a mystery.

"It sort of haunts me," said Ms. McGuire.

When she started flying in 1970, Ms. McGuire said, she didn't know anything about Miss Earhart, even though "lots of people told me I look like her."

Ms. McGuire said she then began reading about Miss Earhart, her trans-Atlantic solo flight in 1932, and her disappearance.

After a two-year search, she found an airplane collector in Florida who owned a Lockheed Electra 10E — a duplicate of the one flown by Miss Earhart — and she decided to make the trip in the aviator's memory.

Mechanics are reassembling the plane, which had been stored in pieces in North Carolina, and installing extra gas tanks and navigational devices for the trip, she said.

"Flying is my whole life. That's all I do. That's all I think about," said Ms. McGuire. "I used to play tennis and golf. I fell in love with flying and I haven't played tennis in 12 years."

Ms. McGuire, a freelance instructor at Marlboro Airport in Monmouth County, N.J., said she will start the trip at Lae, New Guinea and fly 2,600 miles east to Howland Island, a dot in the middle of the Pacific.

From there, she will fly 2,000 miles to Hawaii, 2,400 miles to Oakland, Calif., and 2,400 to Miami.

Ms. McGuire said she isn't afraid, although acknowledging that the Howland Island leg of the flight is risky.

"It's only a mile-and-a-half long and a half-mile wide and 10 feet high," she said. "It's like trying to find a needle in a haystack.

"It's not the sort of thing you can practice. You just keep your fingers crossed and hope you have enough gas to turn back if something goes wrong," Ms. McGuire said. "I'll be taking the same amount of gas she took, 1,150 gallons."

Ms. McGuire said she will be accompanied by a male navigator, as was Miss Earhart.

The flier said she had hoped to depart from Lae on July 2, the 45th anniversary of Miss Earhart's final takeoff. But she said she doesn't think she'll have enough sponsors lined up by then.

Her manager, Earl Tyree, president of a New York advertising agency, said the project will cost $400,000.

Group seeks to buy historic Brice House

ANNAPOLIS, Md. (AP) — A group is trying to raise enough money to make the winning bid when an 18th century mansion goes on the auction block Saturday.

Historic Annapolis, the preservation group, hopes to restore the 35-room Brice House with a $600,000 matching grant approved by the Maryland General Assembly. The mansion was declared a national historic landmark 12 years ago by the U.S. Interior Department.

In recent days, Historic Annapolis obtained commitments of about $200,000, a third of the sum it needs to fully match the state grant to purchase and restore the structure.

"We will be at the auction and we hope to be one of the bidders — if we get enough additional support before Saturday," said Mary Pringle-Symonds, president of Historic Annapolis.

Olympic committee critical of delays in minting of coins

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. Olympic Committee says congressional delay in passing legislation to permit the minting of commemorative coins already has cost the 1984 Olympics about $20 million.

F. Don Miller, USOC executive director, made the estimate in a letter to House Banking Chairman Fernand J. St Germand, D-R.I. If Congress stalls any more, the committee could lose an additional $10 million, he said.

A similar letter was sent to St Germain by representaives of the Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee in whose city the next Olympics will be held.

Miller, Robert F. Kanes, past Olympic Committee president, Peter V. Ueberroth, LAOOC president, and a panel of Olympic champions, were scheduled to testify before the House coinage subcommittee today.

St Germain released a letter from the Reagan Adminstration Tuesday in which the Treasury Department gave its support for a proposal to mint a range of coins.

The Olympic committee said that at least 17 coins must be minted to generate the revenues needed so the California games can be run without federal funds.

The House coinage subcommittee hearing is to chaired by Rep. Frank J. Annunzio, D-Ill., who opposes the 17-coin program, which would be sold private companies.

"I don't believe in private enterprise that exploits its citizens," said Annunzio. He claims the 17 coins would be too expensive for collectors to buy.

St Germand has introduced legislation to mint 17 coins, and his proposal is similiar to one passed by the Senate.

Collectors have complained the cost of the full 17-coin set would range from $2,000 to $5,000.

Annunzio has introduced legislation calling for the U.S. Mint to strike 50 million silver dollars bearing the Olympic theme.

POSITIVE THINKING

By NORMAN VINCENT PEALE

The couple's first child was a "blue baby" and had to have major heart surgery when only six days old. She survived it. Later, however, little Cathy developed mysterious high fevers. This condition persisted and the young parents were worried sick about it.

Then Harvey lost his job. Weeks passed. Still no job. And the small monthly unemployment check which he received was their sole subsistence. Came a day when he had exactly $47 to his name — sick baby, rent due, no job and only $47.

Harvey was a praying man. He had been asking, he says, for some sign of a plan for his life so that he would not be forced to take a low-paying stopgap job. But his prayers had failed to bring any help or answer. And he was feeling pretty bitter.

Then it occurred to him to pray differently. "I swallowed my enormous pride for a moment and cried, 'Take my life, Lord, and do with it what You will. I let it go!' Suddenly I felt a great peace and knew that I had finally turned myself over to God." And did he tune in on life?

The very next day came a letter from a lawyer informing him that a distant relative had bequeathed him a small sum of money. That relieved the immediate pressure. And on the following Sunday Harvey accidentally (or was it accidental?) opened the employment section of the newspaper to the wrong page. There he saw an ad which resulted in his getting an exciting job — one with a real future — in social work.

Sounds melodramatic, doesn't it? Not at all the way things ordinarily happen in real life. It shouldn't happen — but the fact is, it did. The next good thing to occur was that little Cathy's temperature suddenly went down to normal and stayed there.

I have heard many people say that you cannot expect to get material circumstances changed through prayer. I have even heard some religious leaders say this. Prayer, they maintain, has no effect upon materiality but only upon spiritual conditions. But the plain facts of human experience seem to contradict this view.

A great many persons have seen material circumstances improve rapidly once they got themselves spiritually tuned in. Such a grateful person is not likely to be impressed by any theory that it was just coincidence. He knows better. You cannot convince him that spiritual forces do not affect material things. And they also affect the quality of our relationships with other human beings.

"I was frustrated and unhappy," writes a girl of 18 from the Northwest. "For a long time I had sensed that we in our family were growing apart. It bothered me deeply," she had been disturbed by her parents' remarks that she should make something of herself. She felt obligated to go to college right from high school — even though she wanted first to try different kinds of work so she could define her objectives in life. She felt overpressured by her parents' attitude.

"I prayed for help," the letter continues, "I am sure it was somehow meant for me to read your books. I tried a few spiritual techniques and to my amazement they worked. This led to a long confidential talk with my parents and we found a new understanding between us. Then I regained the sense of harmony and peace in my world which I had when I was young.

"So I have rediscovered my parents and myself. Most important of all, I have discovered God. My faith has multiplied several times over. I love the moments when I sit in my room contemplating and praying and jamming God's wonderful strength into my heart and soul. It's really a groovy way to go!"

When faced with a tough situation, how foolish to start indulging in resentment or self-pity. Those emotions only make things worse. What if this hard situation did develop through no fault of your own? It is still a problem life has handed you — and an opportunity, for every problem contains bright possibilities for turning it to one's advantage. Get spiritually tuned in on life. Then your mind will begin detecting and acting upon those bright possibilities. You will develop the kind of attitudes that attract creative developments.

Doctors hopeful for leukemia breakthrough

BOSTON (AP) — Medical researchers in Boston have reported a breakthrough in the treatment of a deadly form of cancer, but they caution against terming the new method a cure.

The new chemical therapy strategy being used to combat acute myelogenous leukemia, or AML, involves two stages: eradication of up to 99 percent of the cancer cells, and then drug treatments aimed at eliminating the remaining cells.

Dr. Emil Frei 3rd, director and physician in chief of the Sidney Farber Cancer Institute, said 70 percent of AML patients being treated under the new method at three Boston hospitals go into near-complete remission, and many of those survive beyond three years.

AML victims, most of whom are adults, often succumb quickly, and may die within six weeks of diagnosis if the disease goes untreated. According to the American Cancer Society, approximately 11,800 people will be diagnosed as having AML this year, and approximately 9,300 will die from the disease in 1982.

Frei said that over the past 10 years, two new drugs — arabinosyl cytosine (ARA-C) and an antibiotic, daunarubicin — have been discovered that seem to work well in combination against AML.

Under the strategy of the new approach for fighting AML, if some cancer cells escape the effects of one drug, doctors feel those cells might be vulnerable to a second type of drug, or to a combination of drugs. Thus, leukemia patients are given several drugs in combination, with the hope that the effects of the various chemicals will overlap and destroy the leukemia cells.

With the continued destruction of the residual leukemia cells, the next major problem for long-term survival of the patient has been hemorrhaging and infections. Leukemia cells replace most of the normal cells in the bone marrow, leaving AML sufferers anemic, bleeding and subject to infections.

After a patient has been put into remission with drugs, Frei said, the cancer cells "essentially disappear from the bone marrow, the bone marrow begins to fill up again with normal cells and the white cells and platelets begin to increase toward normal levels."

Frei, who is working on the research with Drs. Robert J. Mayer, Howard J. Weinstein, David S. Rosenthal and David G. Nathan, said the treatment does not mean AML has been eliminated from a patient.

Annual UTPB alumni event set

ODESSA — "Night of Celebration," the annual event sponsored by the University of Texas of the Permian Basin Alumni Association to honor UTPB graduates and prospective graduates, has been scheduled for 6:30 p.m. May 14 in the UTPB student lounge.

Woody Kupper, director of student life and alumni director, said the annual event marks the homecoming of the university's alumni. New officers for the 1982-83 academic year will be elected and the Alumnus of the Year award will be presented.

Alumnus of the Year award, to be presented for the third time this year, recognizes achievement among the alumni through a scholarship award given in the recipient's name.

The $500 scholarship award will be made in the field of study in which the alumnus received his degree. The name of the alumnus of the year will be inscribed on a permanent plaque and the honoree will receive a plaque and a lifetime membership in the UTPB Alumni Association.

Guest speaker for the event will be Jim Reese, former mayor of Odessa, who is a candidate for District 28 of the Texas Senate.

Reese is a member of the "Friends of UTPB Committee," organized to promote UTPB to a four-year status. He will speak on "The Future of UTPB."

Current officers of the UTPB Alumni Association are President Curtis Pool, independent geologist from Midland; Vice President John Duncan of Odessa, Ector County Independent School District school teacher; Second Vice President Betty Mickle of Odessa; and Secretary Rosie Garza of Odessa, University Gardens tennis professional.

Ruling asked on identification

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — House Insurance Committee Chairman Rep. Bob Simpson, D-Amarillo, has asked Attorney General Mark White to rule on what evidence or identification motorists must give law enforcement officials to show they have auto insurance.

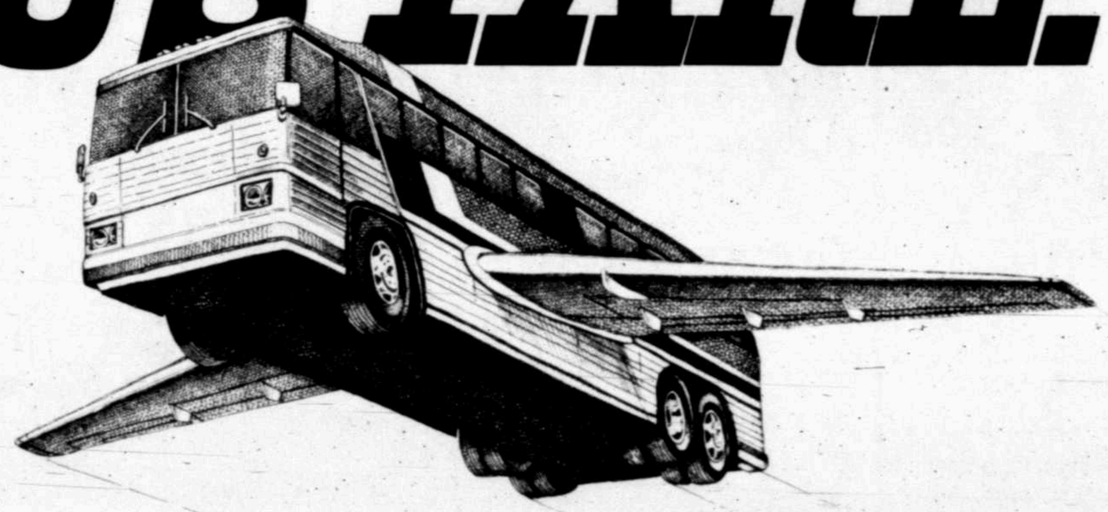
Simpson asked specifically that White rule on whether the regulations adopted by the Texas Department of Public Safety regarding such identification constitute an "exclusive definition" of what may be required.

In his letter to White, Simpson noted that hearings by a House Insurance subcommittee show "some confusion exists" as to what may be required by local officers.

The Department of Public Safety regulation provides that the "required evidence" include the name of the insured, effective date of coverage, insurance company, policy or certificate number, and a showing that the coverage meets or exceeds the minimum amount required by law.

Problems have been reported from a number of cities regarding local law enforcement officials requiring different types of proof or other information from that specified by DPS.

FLY FOR LESS THAN BUS FARE.



Thanks to Texas International, taking a plane is cheaper than taking the bus. We now offer lots of seats to most cities we serve for less than bus fare.

Of course, if you don't get one of our Bus Fares, you still save. Because the rest of our seats are available for the Guaranteed Lowest unrestricted Fares. In fact, you won't find a lower unrestricted fare on a comparable flight (non-stops compared to non-stops, one-stops to one-stops at an equivalent time or day of week).

NEW DAILY NON-STOPS TO HOUSTON AND AMARILLO.

Texas International now has three convenient non-stops to Houston. Fly there every business day at 7:44 a.m., daily at 4 p.m., or at 11:10 p.m. weeknights. Once you're at Houston, you can make the Texas Connection to many cities throughout the U.S. and Mexico.

Or take the only non-stop jet to Amarillo. We take off at 12:38 p.m. every day.

NEW DIRECT FLIGHTS TO DENVER.

Texas International leaves for Denver at 8:42 a.m. or 12:38 p.m. And we offer the only direct service to Cleveland daily at 4:00 p.m. Below is just a sample of our low fares. Take a look and see how much you can save on air fare.

	TEXAS INTERNATIONAL BUS FARES	BUS	TEXAS INTERNATIONAL GUARANTEED LOWEST UNRESTRICTED FARES

To fly for our low Bus Fares, just follow these simple rules:
1. Reserve and buy your seat at least 2 weeks before you fly.
2. Call early. We have lots of seats, but flights may fill up quickly. And for best service, call after 6 p.m. or on weekends. Or call your travel agent.
3. You must pay for your tickets when you make your reservations.
4. Tickets are only valid on Texas International and they're non-refundable.

FLY US INTO HOUSTON OR DENVER FOR A QUICK CONTINENTAL CONNECTION GOING OUT.

When you arrive in Houston or Denver, you can quickly change planes for a Continental flight. In fact, we share the same terminal in Houston. So now you can save time and make a Continental connection to New York, Orlando, Philadelphia, Salt Lake City and other destinations.

For reservations and more information about all our fares, call your travel agent. Or call Texas International at 563-1710. But call soon. Because at these fares, if you wait, you may have to take a bus.

The lives of Christian fundamentalists Phil and Phyllis Tobey and their children, Rebecca and Noel, are chronicled in "Community of Praise," an episode of the PBS series "Middletown." Some the of the Tobeys' neighbors in Muncie, Ind., have forced cancellation of another episode depicting the lives of several of the city's high school seniors.

PBS series captures 'too much' Muncie

By FRAN RICHARDSON
Associated Press Writer

MUNCIE, Ind. (AP) — The camera captured more of Muncie than some of its residents wanted the world to know, and the resulting controversy has forced cancellation of one episode of the six-part, $2.8 million public television series chronicling life in middle America.

Filmmaker Peter Davis spent nearly three years making "Middletown," which tells the story of an important high school basketball game, a mayoral contest, the struggles of a pizza parlor owner, a second marriage for two divorced people and the final year in high school for several Muncie teen-agers.

It was that episode, entitled "Seventeen," which drew the strongest response from those who participated in the documentary. They didn't like what they saw.

Their reaction was so negative that a five-man delegation, including the principal of Southside High School, traveled to Washington for a meeting with officials of the Public Broadcasting Service.

Armed with videotapes and affidavits of statements by students and parents — as well as the threat of a lawsuit if the episode weren't canceled — the group got what it wanted.

PBS asked Davis to make changes in the program, but Davis said he preferred to keep the show intact. The segment, peppered with profanity, includes a portion in which a teen-age boy describes sexual exploits in detail.

The Xerox Corp., which helped underwrite the series, was also critical of the episode and withdrew support for an advertising campaign.

On March 30, PBS canceled "Seventeen," which had been scheduled to be shown in late April. Now the last episode, dealing with the two people facing second marriages, will be televised Wednesday on most PBS stations.

"For PBS and Davis Productions to make that kind of decision, we must have had some legal basis for our clients," said Franklyn Brinkman Jr., a Muncie attorney who represents more than a dozen students and parents who threatened to sue.

"We feel like there were violations of certain constitutional rights, the right to privacy, and there may have been certain misrepresentations," Brinkman said.

"There are allegations that they (the students) were told some things wouldn't be shown and that they told them (filmmakers) not to film certain things," he said.

Although his clients have not dropped their legal proceedings, Brinkman said they have decided to put the suit on hold until they find out Davis' plans for the film.

"If he attempts to show, we will pursue" all the people in charge of production, Brinkman said.

Davis has denied any wrongdoing, said his filmmakers captured whatever was happening and didn't set up incidents.

PBS' action may have satisfied the unhappy delegation, which included James R. Needham, general manager of PBS' Muncie affiliate WIPB; John Beasley, attorney for Muncie Community Schools; James Hedge, principal of Southside High School; and Sam Abram, assistant superintendent for secondary schools. But they're not talking about PBS' action.

Beasley and Needham also refused to comment about the Washington trip or their reactions to the cancellation of the segment.

And school Supt. Donald Slauter said, "I only have two comments to make. One, we appreciate the fact that PBS was willing to meet with our people and receive information; and two, we appreciate the fact PBS made the decision not to show the program."

The agreement by PBS, Davis and the delegation not to make details of their agreement public has mystified some residents.

"Frankly, I thought it should have been shown," said Mayor Alan Wilson. "The film did have profanity throughout, and there were a couple of kids smoking grass, but I wasn't in any way offended by the film."

It "was kind of a sensitive portrayal of children struggling to grow up, to become adults as every adult has done, struggling through late adolescence and having a hard time of it," he said.

Charles Strow of the Muncie Chamber of Commerce said, "I think a lot of people have lost sight of what this series is supposed to do. They're studies of personalities of some people and some groups within a community. They could have filmed them anywhere in the United States and come up with same types of people and same types of activities."

Muncie, an industrial city of more than 77,000 residents located 60 miles northeast of Indianapolis, was the subject of well-known sociological studies done by Robert and Helen Lynd — "Middletown," published in 1929, and "Middletown in Transition," in 1937.

Ku Klux Klan becoming more active

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Ku Klux Klan is becoming more active, says the head of the Justice Department's civil rights division.

Assistant Attorney General William Bradford Reynolds said Monday that the department now is investigating nine or 10 cases of alleged KKK violence. Department spokesman John V. Wilson informed reporters of his remarks, which were made in a 1½-hour closed meeting with a group of 11 black and white women from Chattanooga, Tenn.

The women represented Women's Appeal for Justice in Chattanooga, a part of the National Anti-Klan Network, based in Atlanta. They sought the meeting to see what the department is doing about an alleged Klan shooting in Chattanooga two years ago and about the Klan nationally.

According to Wilson, Reynolds said, "We see an increase in Klan activity. We view this with as much alarm as you. We're doing everything we can to respond."

Vaccine's side effects cause disagreement

WASHINGTON (AP) — The benefits of the vaccine to prevent whooping cough far outweigh the risks and its use should be continued, says the government, despite a television station's report that it can cause serious side effects.

WRC-TV, a Washington, D.C., station affiliated with the NBC network, reported Monday on a year-long investigation of the diphtheria, pertussis and tetanus vaccine that is recommended for preschool children.

According to the report, the vaccine needs further study. Reporter Lea Thompson said government health officials have not aggressively investigated evidence that the pertussis (whooping cough) part of the vaccine can cause brain damage in some cases.

Dr. Alan Hinman of the federal Centers for Disease Control said on the broadcast that serious complications such as brain damage have been noted in some children after vaccination. But he said it is unclear whether the DPT vaccine was directly responsible in each case.

Hinman said whooping cough is still a serious disease and that the vaccination is less hazardous than the disease.

Responding to the report, the U.S. Public Health Service said there are fewer than 3,000 cases of whooping cough in the U.S. each year, resulting in five to 20 deaths. Before the vaccine, there were about 265,000 cases annually and 7,000 deaths, the service said in a statement.

Without immunization, it said, total cases would increase an estimated 70-fold and deaths would quadruple.

Pertussis is a highly contagious bacterial disease of children that can lead to pneumonia and brain damage. Victims are plagued with fits of coughing and gasp for air with a whooping sound.

Until doctors started using the vaccine about 30 years ago, whooping cough was a leading killer of children in this country, and still is a major cause of death in developing countries.

The WRC-TV report reviewed the controversy that has surrounded the pertussis vaccine for more than 20 years. Several countries, including Sweden, Great Britain and Japan, no longer recommend the vaccine because of its side effects, but all report occasional epidemics of the disease.

Perjury charges filed against man

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Joseph Marcello, brother of reputed Louisiana Mafia godfather Carlos Marcello, has been indicted by a federal grand jury at San Antonio, Texas, on perjury charges, a federal magistrate says.

U.S. Magistrate Ingard Johannesen said Tuesday he received notice of the indictment issued earlier in the day charging two counts of perjury and an arrest warrant was issued.

He said FBI agents had searched for Joseph Marcello for several hours without success. He said they would arrest him if he did not surrender first.

He said Marcello faces arraignment in Texas but that a hearing would be held in New Orleans to set bond.

Johannesen said he has prepared papers calling for a $50,000 personal recognizance bond for Marcello.

Marcello testified in 1980 before the grand jury investigating the sniper killing of U.S. District Judge John H. Wood Jr. in San Antonio.

Russell Schonekas, who represented Joseph Marcello at the time, said federal authorities told him, after last year's session, that they were satisfied that he was not involved in the slaying.

Sources familiar with the investigation said Marcello's testimony centered on a request he allegedly received to arrange bail for 17 people arrested in Hammond, La., on drug smuggling charges.

College options, choices tough for students

SCOTCH PLAINS, N.J. (AP) — They arrived in Saturday's mail: one yellow envelope and two white ones. She put them on the coffee table in her living room — the envelopes that would end months of suspense for Penni Freeman.

It was a suspense she had in common last week with thousands of high school seniors across the country who, depending on the what the mailman brought them from the colleges of their choice, now feel elated, heart-sick, or maybe just confused.

THE SECOND WEEK in April, infamous as tax time to adult Americans, brings its own agony for high school seniors. That's the traditional time each year that most competitive colleges send out their acceptances and rejections.

Penni bit her lip, considered the envelopes for a few seconds. Had it all been worth it? Winning citizenship awards at Fanwood-Scotch Plains High School, getting named to French National Honor Society, being picked Homecoming Queen, getting nothing but "A's" and "B's" throughout her high school years?

"The thinnest one's from Yale. I'll open that one first. The thin ones are always rejections," she said.

With her mother, Anne Freeman, pacing nervously in the next room — "God, I can't stand this!" she says — Penni opens the white envelope with "Yale University Admissions" emblazoned on it.

"The Admissions Committee," the letter starts, "has concluded its meetings, and I regret to report that we are not able to offer you admission to the Yale class of 1986."

Still, there were two unopened envelopes, both a bit thicker. A hopeful sign?

The University of Pennsylvania put Penni on their waiting list for admission to their next freshman class. So did Cornell College of Engineering. That one stung her, and her face turned down dejectedly. It was a long shot, but Cornell was her "dream school."

"OH WELL," she says, "that's OK because it makes my decision easier." She reminds herself that, after all, she's one of the lucky ones. She was accepted for admission earlier last week at Boston University and Penn State University.

If Penni is at all typical, a college degree from a top school is still a glittering prize, still the key to success — and, in her mind at least, still worth all the hard work of high school, still worth the small fortune that higher education now costs.

"I decided to shoot big," Penni says. "Go for the Ivy Leagues. When people hear you went to one of those, they say, hey, you can work for us tomorrow.

"Mostly my consideration was a job in the future — get some money, send it home, live on the rest."

But she still faced the problem: Boston University or Penn State?

The talk turns to money. It's harder for a middle class family like Penni's to pay for college since President Reagan made it more difficult for middle income students to qualify for federally guaranteed loans. Her parents have a combined income of $43,000. And she has a sister who will be a senior at Penn State next September.

Chances to make killing on rare coins quite rare

By LINDA TRUITT
Better Business Bureau
of the Permian Basin, Inc.

The advertisement begins my making you believe a limited supply of rare coins has just been discovered. The ad ends by stating if you don't buy before midnight tomorrow you will lose out on a timely investment. If you believed the advertised message and ordered the coins, unfortunately, you were gypped.

Some mail order outfits are misrepresenting by innuendo the value of coins in order to sell them for unusually high prices by mail. The operators design their ads to appear to be government offerings or last chance deals on a limited supply, conditions which are misleading. As a result, they charge more than double what local coin dealers charge for coins that actually are not rare.

According to Lawrence Culver, owner of Tejas Coin and Stamp Co., one ad offered 1943 uncirculated steel pennies for $11.25 (including postage and handling) when the pennies are actually worth 50¢. The ad claimed coins are increasing in value, but Culver states the uninformed can make decisions which prove to be unwise. Before you invest, consider the following:

—Know what type of coins you want to invest in. There are basically two types of investment coins — bouillon and collectibles (numisatic). Collectibles are primarily U.S. gold coins issued prior to 1933 and silver coins issued prior to 1964. Prices for these coins are determined by the metal content (gold or silver) and supply and demand. A rare coin wears a high price tag.

Bouillon, on the other hand, are coins issued by other countries as a way to market their precious metals. Prices for these coins are set daily by the gold and silver market. As an example, Canada's maple leaf, which is one ounce of gold, is trading at $378 (bouillon), while a U.S. $20 gold piece, which is .98 ounces of gold, is trading at $550 (numismatic). Culver suggests a novice investor begin by buying bouillon and then, as he gets more familiar with coins, start investing in collectibles.

—Don't get in a rush to sell. As with many investments, you are more likely to make a profit the longer you keep the coins. Culver recommends keeping the coins at least 2 to 5 years before selling, allowing the coins to appreciate in value.

—Know the dealer. There are many fly-by-night gold buyers and sellers who either charge enormous prices for the coins they sell or pay too little for the coins they buy. Compare prices with one or two local established dealers if you are interested in buying or selling coins. Also, check to see if the dealer is a member of the American Numismatic Association and/or the Society of Paper Money Collectors.

Investment schemes will often appeal to our desire to get "something for nothing" — by investing a little we will become rich. Before you invest in anything, whether it be coins or stocks, keep in mind the investor's golden rule — Don't invest any money you cannot afford to lose.

Who's 'jimmying' Ronnie's figures?

By WALTER R. MEARS
AP Special Correspondent

WASHINGTON (AP) — According to President Reagan, somebody has been jimmying the figures again.

Last time, he said it was Jimmy Carter's people, trying to make the inflation-control record look better than it really was during the last campaign.

Now he blames government statisticians, saying that their funny way of counting led to a report that unemployment rose when it actually declined.

Who's right and who's wrong depends on the method of computing the numbers. The Bureau of Labor Statistics says it produced the most accurate reports possible, in those and all the other economic indicators.

The president's complaint about the unemployment report stemmed from seasonal adjustment, a system designed to discount predictable changes in computing statistics that measure employment, prices and production.

"Over the course of a year, the size of the nation's labor force and the levels of employment and unemployment undergo sharp fluctuations due to seasonal events such as changes in weather, reduced or expanded production, harvests, major holidays and the opening and closing of schools," the Bureau of Labor Statistics explains. "Because these seasonal events follow a more or less regular pattern each year, their influence on statistical trends can be eliminated by adjusting the statistics from month to month."

Seasonally adjusted, unemployment was worse in March than in February — even though the number of people out of work declined.

So when an eighth-grade civics student in Geneva, Ill., asked the president when there will be more jobs for people, Reagan said there already are.

"...In spite of the fact that the reported...March unemployment went up — the statisticians in Washington have funny ways of counting, there are — there were in March, actually 88,000 fewer people unemployed than there were in February," he said.

He said later that government statisticians had projected that unemployment would decline by about 200,000 "and when the decrease in unemployment wasn't as big as their projection, even though it decreased, they called that an increase in unemployment."

The raw numbers bear him out. The BLS reported that there were 88,000 fewer people unemployed in March, and that there were 525,000 more people working than in February.

But when those numbers were adjusted to discount predictable late-winter fluctuations, there were 279,000 more people out of work, and 90,000 fewer people employed than in February.

Using the adjusted figures, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported that the unemployment rate rose from 8.8 percent to 9 percent in March.

BLS Commissioner Janet Norwood said anyone tracking trends would want seasonally adjusted data in order to see what really is happening in the economy. Economists generally agree on that.

Besides, the seasonal adjustments cut both ways. In January, for example, the BLS reported the unemployment rate down from 8.8 percent to 8.5 percent — even though the number of people unemployed actually went up.

The statisticians project a substantial end-of-the-year increase in unemployment was holiday season workers laid off, and the increase this year wasn't as big as anticipated.

The Consumer Price Index, the most commonly used gauge of inflation, also is seasonally adjusted. And in that case, it works to the advantage of the administration. With seasonal adjustment, the latest CPI works out to a 3 percent annual rate of inflation. Without seasonal adjustment, the rate would be 4 percent.

As the economic scorekeeper, the Bureau of Labor Statistics has been questioned and criticized before by administrations unhappy with the numbers.

"We are criticized when our data are too high and we are criticized when our data are too low," Mrs. Norwood said after candidate Reagan complained about the 1980 inflation reports.

The issue then was a change in the way wholesale prices were calculated. A month before the 1980 election, the bureau reported a .2 percent decline in prices at the wholesale level — explaining that the decrease stemmed from the inclusion of year-end discounts in automobile prices. Those discounts were included in the index for the first time in October 1980, and without them, the wholesale price reported would have been up by .4 percent.

"They have taken to making highly questionable uses of official government statistics to sugarcoat the bitter pill that has regularly come from Washington in the line of economic news," he said.

Personality not crime, judge says

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Just because a person is obnoxious or a bit of a smart-aleck doesn't mean he should be locked up, a judge has ruled.

Pima County Superior Court Judge Jack Arnold, while agreeing with the county attorney that "this is really a smart-aleck defendant," overturned a jury conviction against 26-year-old Michael Kern on Friday and set him free.

Kern was accused of using his pickup truck to chase a 1980 Peugeot operated by Joseph Myers, ramming the car from behind and causing the it to flip over several times. Myers was unhurt.

Election turnout predicted

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Secretary of State David Dean predicted only 29 percent of the state's eligible voters would turn out for the May 1 primaries.

He said his estimate of only 1,419,680 voters was based on a sampling of absentee voting patterns in 50 counties representing 72 percent of the state's population.

"The low voter turnout projections indicate that many of the state's voters are waiting until the November general election to cast their ballots because voting in the primaries no longer determines the outcome of the general election," Dean said in a statement released Tuesday.

In 1978 there was a voter turnout of 1,961,373 — 1,812,890 in the Democratic primary and 158,483 in the GOP primary.

Dean said the absentee voting patterns would continue to be monitored until May 1 to determine if the forecast should be changed.

The Newspaper BIBLE

WE WON! WE WON!

Then a great pageant appeared in heaven, portraying things to come. I saw a woman clothed with the sun, with the moon beneath her feet, and a crown of twelve stars on her head. She was pregnant and screamed in the pain of her labor, awaiting her delivery.

Then there was a war in heaven; Michael and the angels under his command fought the Dragon and his hosts of fallen angels. And the Dragon lost the battle and was forced from heaven. This great Dragon--the ancient serpent called the devil, or Satan, the one deceiving the whole world--was thrown down onto the earth with all his army.

Then I heard a loud voice shouting across the heavens, "It has happened at last! God's salvation and the power and the rule, and the authority of His Christ are finally here; for the Accuser of our brothers has been thrown down from heaven onto the earth--he accused them day and night before God. They defeated him by the blood of the Lamb, and by their testimony; for they did not love their lives but laid them down for him. Rejoice, O heavens! You citizens of heaven, rejoice! Be glad! But woe to you people of the world, for the devil has come down to you in great anger, knowing that he has little time." (Revelation 12:1-3, 7-12)

American life changing, census shows

By SPENCER RICH
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — About 23 million Americans age 5 or over speak a foreign language at home, most of them Spanish.

One of every eight Americans is poor.

There are 5.8 million single-parent families in the United States, and 18.2 million people living alone. But three-quarters of all Americans still live in "mom-and-pop" households.

Two-thirds of American workers drive to work alone in their cars every day, and the number of people using public transportation has dropped to 1 in 16 despite two fuel-short periods since the last census, when the figure was 1 in 12.

The number of mobile homes and trailers has skyrocketed.

These are among the provisional findings of the April 1, 1980, decennial census, showing the United States as a land of massive diversity, high living standards and educational attainments but slow economic growth since 1970.

The findings were released by the Census Bureau Monday in its first big report on the social and economic characteristics of Americans in the 50 states and the District of Columbia.

The census found that the total population of the nation was 226.5 million (up from 203 million in 1970), of whom 189 million were white, 26.5 million black, and 3.7 million of Asian and Pacific Island derivation. The category of "other," including Eskimo, Indian and Aleut, accounted for 7.2 million people. Persons of Hispanic origin, regardless of race, totaled 14.6 million. Females totaled 116.5 million.

There were about 80.4 million households in the United States in 1980, 18.2 million of them composed of single people living alone. Another 3.3 million households were made up of unrelated people living together. The growth of these non-family households over the decade 1970 to 1980 was huge — 72 percent — but there were still 48.6 million married-couple families (including remarriages).

And while there were 5.8 million single-parent families (19 percent of all families with children under 18, a big increase over 1970), about 74 percent of all the people in the United States lived in households headed by a married couple.

The District of Columbia had an unusually high percent of female-headed single-parent families: 28,369 out of the total of 63,403 families with children under 18. For Maryland, the figure was 105,569 of 573,598, and for Virginia, 118,289 out of 718,673.

Of the total U.S. population, 14 million were foreign-born, compared to 9.6 million in 1970. Some 23 million people aged 5 or older spoke a foreign language at home. For 48 percent of those people, the language spoken at home was Spanish.

About 62.3 million working Americans normally drove to work each day alone, while another 19 million carpooled. Only 6 million used public transportion, a rate of 6.4 percent and a drop in the 1970 rate of 8.9 percent. (The rest walked or worked at home.) The New York metropolitan area (including surrounding towns and suburbs) had the highest rate of public transport use, 43 percent. Other high users were the metropolitan areas (including surrounding suburbs) of Chicago (18 percent), San Francisco-Oakland (17 percent), Washington, D.C. (16 percent) and Boston (16 percent), all having subways or surface-rail systems.

For the first time in history, every state had a high-school completion rate of better than 50 percent for persons 25 and over. The national average was 66.3 percent, compared with 52.3 percent a decade ago. Persons of Asian ancestry led in the rate of high school graduates at 74 percent. For whites the figure was 69 percent, for blacks 51 percent and for Hispanics 43 percent.

There were 104.5 million people in the civilian labor force in 1980, compared with 80 million in 1970, and 44.6 million of them were women — a 46 percent increase over the decade. The number of men in the work force increased about 20 percent, to 59.9 million. Nearly half of women with children under the age of 6 were working.

About 1 in 8 Americans — 12.5 percent — lived in poverty, based on income in calendar year 1979. (The poverty figure was $7,400 for a family of four). The number of Americans living in poverty a decade earlier was 13.7 percent. For whites the figure was 9.4 percent, for blacks 30.2 percent, for Hispanics 23.8 percent and those of Asian-Pacific ancestry 13.9 percent.

Among large metropolitan areas (city plus suburbs), the highest poverty rate was New Orleans (18.7 percent), while New York's Nassau and Suffolk counties had the lowest rate, 5.5 percent. For the District of Columbia metro area the figure was 8.2 percent, but the District alone had 18.9 percent without counting the richer suburbs that raise the average. Mississippi had the highest state poverty rate, 24.5 percent.

Permanent home for bell sought

MELBOURNE, Fla. (AP) — Plans are under way to provide a permanent perch for a one-ton replica of America's Liberty Bell — six years after school kids raised $10,000 to buy it in London.

"We can't just have it sitting outside," said Joseph Brett, head of a patriotic organization which has announced another fund-raising drive to build a colonial-style tower for the bronze bell.

Except for rare occasions, Melbourne's contribution to the nation's Bicentennial has been sitting at the home of former Mayor Adger Smith since 1976.

Known as the Bicentennial Bell, it was bought from the same London foundry, Whitechappel, that cast America's first freedom ringer. The original is at Philadelphia's Independence Hall.

Design plans have been drawn for a scaled-down version of Independence Hall, where Melbourne's massive bell will hang in permanent display atop a 53-foot tower.

But Brett, president of the nonprofit Honor America Inc., says it will cost about $50,000, and it will require another money-raising effort, plus help from foundation grants and other contributions.

"We should have gotten this done in 1976, when patriotism was at its peak," Brett said, but added, "eventually we'll get it done."

The short history behind Melbourne's bronze bell is not as stormy as that of the original one, cast after the Revolutionary War. But it's had its problems.

After the money-raising campaign, the bell got to Florida in September 1976. In 1979, the bell was damaged while being transported for use by a veterans' organization.

Paper plans time change

LAREDO, Texas (AP) — Because surveys show The Laredo Times' readers want a morning newspaper delivered to their homes, the newspaper's officials have decided to make the change from afternoon delivery on July 1.

"If morning delivery is what our readers want, then morning delivery is what they will get. The Times is here to serve," said Mike Herrera III, president and publisher of The Times.

Herrera said The Times' principal home delivery will be in the morning each day of the week, but that the newspaper would continue publishing an afternoon newspaper Monday through Friday for updates on late-breaking news."

"The decision to change the deliver of The Times from afternoon to morning was not taken lightly or hastily," Herrera said. "It's not easy to depart from 100 years of tradition of The Times being Laredo's afternoon companion.

Refugees in doldrums awaiting decision

By RANDALL HACKLEY

MIAMI (AP) — A sweet tune drifts in the tropical breeze, but it is not a sweet song Vivian Montilus sings. The lyrics are about death.

"She believes she will die here," says Creole translator Joseph Philoxy.

BEHIND HER, the gates are locked and razor-sharp concertina wire tops two 10-foot fences that surround 15½ acres of dirt and concrete.

The camp is the focus of bitter controversy: Civil rights activists and Haitian exiles call it an inhumane prison for people who have done nothing more than what millions of immigrants have done before them.

Reagan administration officials reply that the Haitians are held because strict guidelines are needed to keep the nation from being overwhelmed by refugees who strain social services and worsen unemployment.

Since last year, the government has been detaining undocumented aliens until questions of asylum and deportation are resolved — a process which can take years. Previously, arriving Haitians were released into the South Florida community of an estimated 55,000 exiles.

A class-action suit seeking freedom for about 2,000 Haitians at Krome and other federal facilities is being tried in U.S. District Court in Miami. The suit, filed by the Haitian Refugee Center Inc., attacks the policy of detaining Haitians indefinitely as discriminatory, cruel and in violation of judicial due process.

The government argues that the Haitians are here illegally and that they came here not to flee political persecution, but to find work as "economic refugees."

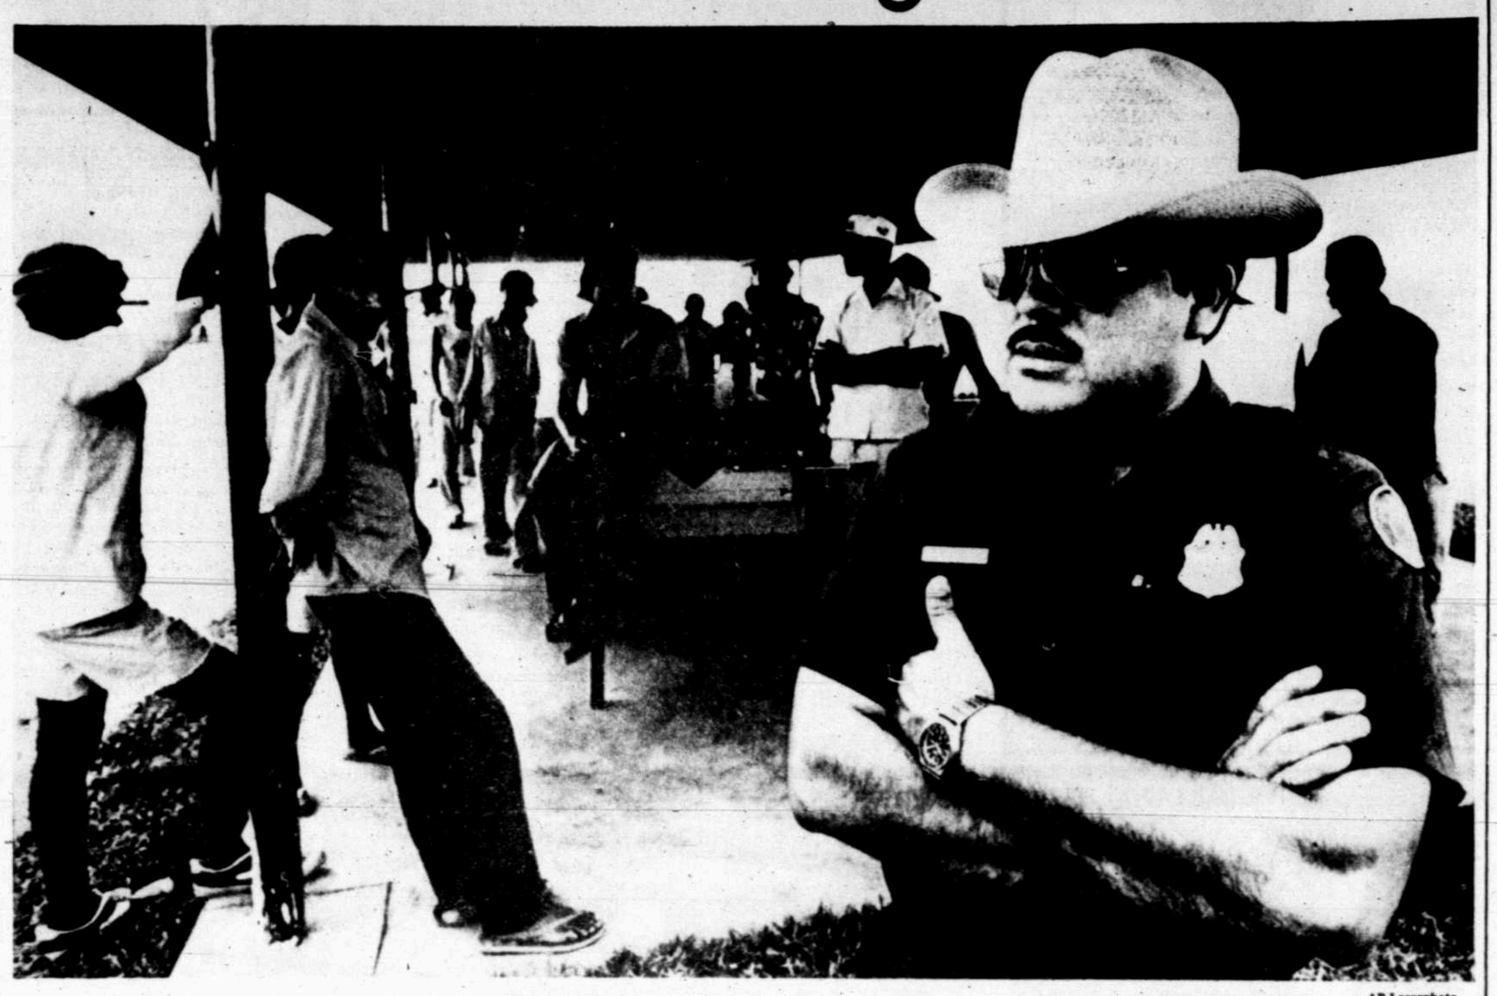
IF THERE IS a new exodus from Cuba like the 1980 boatlift that brought 125,000 Cubans here, they, too, will be put in camps, officials promise.

For the refugees, it is an ironic end to a desperate journey for which some paid smugglers their life's savings. Others were packed into homemade wooden sailboats for a 750-mile voyage in which at least 60 Haitians are known to have drowned, with rumors of hundreds more.

"I see lots of barbed wire — that's not what Haitians came to America for," said U.S. Sen. Christopher Dodd, D-Conn., after a tour.

Civil rights activist Rev. Jesse Jackson, U.S. Rep. Walter Fauntroy, D-Washington, D.C., and even Haiti's U.S. consul, refer to it as a "concentration camp."

"It isn't the Fontainebleau Hilton," says Beverly McFarland, spokeswoman for the Immigration and Naturalization Service. But she and other officials insist it's not inhumane.



AP Laserphoto

U.S. Border Patrol guard, J.R. Conejo, stands guard at Krome Avenue detention camp. Krome camp, formerly a Nike missile base25 miles west of Miami, houses nearly 600 Haitian refugees awaiting asylum pleas.

Krome camp director Cecilio Ruiz says the Haitians "have everything — they have sports, movies, television."

IN THIS PLACE, there are scenes that amuse, sadden and haunt:

—A married couple press fingers together through a wire mesh fence. The mesh is too small to allow them to hold hands. The camp is segregated by sex, and they are together only during Sunday church services.

—Several men sit around a color television, seemingly staring through it as soap operas depicting a strange culture and foreign language play on.

—At eight telephones inside the men's two-story, concrete-slab barrack, 24 men pool their quarters, and take turns calling friends in Miami. The INS hasn't allowed incoming calls since December, when more than 100 Haitians scaled fences and disappeared into the Everglades while camp guards battled demonstrators from Miami who rushed the front gates. Officials believe the escapees had advance word of the "spontaneous" demonstration.

To ease overcrowding here, the INS last fall began sending Haitians to other camps. The population here was once over 1,000.

THE QUESTION most often asked visitors is the obvious one from people who have been held for as long as 10 months: "When will we be free?"

"Liberty — what is that? Just something we thought we'd find in Florida," says Abner Ceant, 22, a former Haitian army officer who sailed last June from Port-de-Paix.

There are many complaints about the food, catered three times a day by a Miami company. There are no cooking facilities.

"What eat? We eat scrambled meat," says Gar Jean Claude, referring to baloney.

Breakfasts usually consist of juice and white bread; lunch is milk and a meat-based sandwich, and dinners are rice, meat and fruit.

Last December, the INS announced that $900,000 would be allocated for camp improvements. Haitians provide some of the labor. The volunteers are paid $1 a day — "slave wages," Haitian advocates in Miami say.

"WE THOUGHT we'd find more in Miami than this," says Alex Resilorme, strumming a guitar in the cafeteria during a break from clean-up work.

Wall erected to impede war-mongering Saharans

By MORT ROSENBLUM
AP Special Correspondent

EL AAIUN, Morocco (AP) — Safe behind a guerrilla-resistant great wall of Morocco, workmen hurry to build white-washed model cities in the Sahara, bases for a diplomatic war the wall cannot keep out.

El Aaiun is getting schools, hospitals, mosques, a stadium, government buildings and a zoo, along with thousands of little domed houses for slum dwellers. A railroad link to Casablanca is expected by 1984.

Smara, 120 miles west and just inside the new defense perimeter, has its first two-story building: a secondary school. The Beau Geste town of Dakhla, formerly Villa Cisneros, now bustles.

Morocco moved into the Spanish Sahara in 1976 after King Hassan II amassed 350,000 people on the border — the Green March — to press a claim. A second chunk was added in 1979, when Mauritania left.

SAHARANS WHO demand independence, the Polisario Front, waged war. With Algeria and Libya supplying Soviet weapons to the guerrillas, and rich phosphate deposits at stake, implications are major.

The 280-mile-long wall — the "berm" — was bulldozed in the rocky sand two years ago to stop hit-and-run Polisario raids. Bristling with dug-in artillery and protected by land mines, it describes a hemisphere around most populated centers in the 120,000-square-mile territory, the size of Colorado.

"If by war you mean control of the useful Western Sahara, Morocco has already won," said a Western military specialist who could not be named. "If you mean until the last Polisario guy somewhere in Brazil gives up, it could go on forever."

But a subsequent arms race, and the cost of keeping nearly 100,000 men in the disputed territory, drains heavily on an economy already weakened by drought, foreign exchange problems and social unrest.

In six years, perhaps 10,000 men have been killed on both sides.

Last October, guerrillas overran Guelta Zemmour, forcing Moroccan troops to withdraw behind the wall. Five Moroccan aircraft were shot down. Western specialists say the Polisario used SA-6 heat-seeking missiles, among the Soviets' most sophisticated.

MOROCCO DEPENDS on well over a billion dollars a year in Saudi military subsidies. Closer ties with the United States mean moral support but only limited new hardware.

The wall is no final solution. Its fire bases, blends of miniature Crusader castles and Mexican bandit hideouts, have radar that can spot a fox at 20 miles. But the terrain can hide a tank column. In places, the final warning system is a rusty tin can full of pebbles which a forward sentry rattles by pulling a string.

Recently, Polisario leaders have focused on legitimatizing their Saharan Arab Democratic Republic which claims the land on both sides of the wall.

"This Polisario business is artificial, concealing a subversive, destablizing movement, led by African activists," Moroccan Foreign Minister Mohammed Boucetta charged in an AP interview.

But 26 African nations recognize the Polisario government, and, in January, Organization of African Unity officials accepted it as a member. Morocco and others object, paralyzing the OAU until a solution is found.

Last June, King Hassan offered a referendum, based on a 1974 Spanish census that named 74,500 urban dwellers and nomads in the disputed area.

POLISARIO LEADERS count 150,000 Saharans in refugee camps at Tindouf, in southern Algeria, and claim another 750,000 legitimate Saharans live elsewhere.

Morocco says the Polisario is blocking a referendum, in fear of losing. But neutral political analysts suggest Saharans might choose independence, if given a fair choice.

People here don't talk politics. Journalists are kept under a careful, if friendly, eye. But conversations out of official earshot reveal some discontent.

"Things are so-so," allowed a Saharan shopkeeper, speaking in Spanish. "Moroccans now run most stores. Local people have moved out or to the outskirts." He cast a glance around and added: "They've ruined it."

In Smara, a young man also speaking in Spanish, while cutting carrots at the back of a coffee shop: "Most young people have gone." Asked if many joined the guerrillas, he replied: "Yes. Some."

Asked if he was Moroccan or Saharan — a distinction the government insists does not exist — he said with sudden force: "Saharan." Then, nervous, he went back to his carrots.

"THESE PEOPLE just live their lives," explained one veteran observer, who asked anonymity. "They waved the flag for Spain and for Mauritania. They'll wave it for Morocco."

The government takes few chances. Long-distance direct dialing has been put off so operators can listen in, engineers say. Visitors, though told they are in a province like any other, are carefully scrutinized.

Most nomads have moved to towns, along with their goats, and they need military permits to move. The wall keeps out infiltrators but also cuts off traditional flows across the desert.

Morocco spends nearly a billion dollars a year on development and government programs in the Sahara. El Aaiun Gov. Salah Zemrag says there is no special priority.

Escape from the dull. The commonplace. The uninspired. Use El Monterrey Enchilada Sauce Mix with Mexican food preparations and get a meal with spirit. El Monterrey is a unique blend of tropical Southwest herbs and spices created 45 years ago in a Clovis, New Mexico family restaurant. Here's the Enchilada escape plan in four easy steps:

1. Soften tortillas by briefly dipping them in cooking oil heated to medium/high and lay them flat on a cookie sheet.
2. Cover the tortillas with El Monterrey Enchilada Sauce on both sides.
3. Spread 1 to 2 Tbl. of chopped onion, 1/4 cup grated cheese and 1/4 cup browned ground beef diagonally on each.
4. Roll the tortillas and cover with El Monterrey Enchilada Sauce; sprinkle with additional grated cheese and bake at 350-400 degrees for approximately 15-25 minutes until the cheese is melted inside the enchilada and out.

Repeat offenders hit with stiff sentences

By JANET PLUME

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Jackson Monroe Martin slumped in his chair and stared at the floor. He couldn't believe he had been sentenced to 99 years in jail for indecent exposure.

"I don't think it's right for me to get that much time for that kind of crime," said Martin, whose 11 prior convictions for burglary enabled the prosecutor to ask for the long sentence.

"Maybe a fine and 30 days, or even a year in the county jail. But not 99 years!" the 42-year-old man complained at his sentencing hearing.

"People are just tired of crime," said Ron Stubblefield, the district attorney in Bryan County, Okla., where Martin received his long sentence. "And they want the repeat offenders off the streets."

Throughout the country, prosecutors are increasingly using habitual criminal codes to seek longer terms.

The stiffer punishment depends on the crime, but can range from the sentence for the next higher class offense — in South Dakota — to life without parole — in Louisiana and Arkansas.

Maine and Pennsylvania are the only states without laws or pending legislation for habitual or repeat offenders, according to a recent Justice Department study done at American University in Washington.

In Ohio, a measure by state Rep. Edward J. Orlett of Dayton calling for mandatory sentencing for some felonies unanimously cleared the state House earlier this month.

The proposed law would require judges to impose an "actual incarceration" period ranging from three to nine years on career criminals.

"Society has a right to protect itself against criminals for a specified period of time," said Orlett, who noted the bill is "the first major change in a decade in the state's criminal sentencing law."

"One reason for the increase in the use of the habitual criminal statute is that there was a realization that a 20-year sentence didn't mean 20 years," said Pete Adams, president of the Louisiana District Attorneys Association.

"It's a better bet to put them away, these people who are constantly costing the taxpayers money. People are realizing rehabilitation is not working. The answer is long sentences."

In 29 states, the habitual criminal charge can be considered on the second felony, according to a study by the Rand Corp. Nineteen states consider the charge upon a third offense, two states consider it on the fourth and three states have increased penalties for the fifth conviction.

Another study by the National Council on Crime and Delinquency indicates that at least 17 states have enacted or have introduced within the past five years legislation directed toward getting career criminals off the streets.

U.S. Sen. Arlen Specter, who was a district attorney in Philadelphia for eight years, has sponsored a bill that would make a third armed robbery or armed burglary conviction a federal offense punishable by at least 15 years in prison.

A study by the senator's staff revealed that robbers serve an average of three years behind bars, and a robber with prior convictions serves an average of only 3½ years.

Research based on interviews after arrest revealed professional lawbreakers individually commit 50-100 robberies or 200-400 burglaries a year, said Paul Michele, a spokesman for the Pennsylvania Republican.

Furthermore, 6 percent of those arrested for robbery and burglary commit 60 percent of those crimes, Michele added.

In Oklahoma, the Legislature this month approved a bill requiring a three-time armed robber be sentenced to a mandatory 10 years imprisonment.

Other approaches to putting away the career criminal also are being considered. David Armstrong, president of the National Association of District Attorneys, advocates truth in sentencing, in which 20 years means 20 years.

"The sentencing phase of a criminal trial has become a charade," Armstrong said from his Louisville, Ky., office.

"The habitual criminal law is a fair concept," Adams said from Baton Rouge, La. "Judges and district attorneys still maintain a fair amount of discretion in deciding whether or not there is any chance to rehabilitate this man or if the smartest thing to do is to put him away."
