Animal rights

Oh, those wacky animal-rights crusaders: They dress as lobsters to protest cruelty to crustaceans. They persuade fashion models to bare all and proclaim "I'd rather go naked than wear fur." Last month in 10 cities, they showed their holiday spirit by hanging banners saying "Thanksgiving Is Murder On Turkeys." Like clowns in a convent, they succeed wildly in drawing attention to themselves. But do these far-out activists really think they'll ever influence mainstream America? Surprise: It appears they already have. Story page 13A

Clinton gives send-off to anxious U.S. troops

■ President gives orders to strike back if threatened with attack in Bosnia.

Associated Press

BAUMHOLDER, Germany — President Clinton gave anxious American troops reassuring orders Saturday, telling them to strike "immediately and with decisive force" if threatened with attack in Bosnia. Thousands of soldiers roared back their thanks.

On a cold, foggy afternoon, 4,000 troops of 1st Armored Division stood in formation in camouflage fatigues for a send-off from the commander-in-chief.

Many of them were combat-tested in the Persian Gulf War, and Clinton said, "America summons you to service again. This time, not with a call to war but a call to peace."

Facing a threatening mix of snipers, ethnic hatred and millions of mines planted under snow-covered fields, the troops are about to embark on America's riskiest military mission since the Gulf War. Their job is to police a peace agreement after Europe's bloodiest war in a half century.

German Chancellor Helmut Kohl, accompanying Clinton, said Bonn would send 4,000 troops to Bosnia, the first deployment of German troops outside their homeland

Midland was awash in Christmas spirit Saturday, with successful turnouts for the Midland Children's Christmas Parade and the downtown Christmas tree lighting celebration.

The 15th annual Children's Christmas Parade — organized by the Midland Shrine Club — included about 70 entries, said Shriner Rodney Wilson, who organized this year's parade.

"This is about three times the size of last year's," Wilson said. "One group has got about 200 people in it," he said.

An honor guard of boys from Cub Scout Pack 160 were in the vanguard as the parade left from Dennis the Menace Park at 4 p.m.

Hundreds of band members from Midland High School, Alamo Junior High, Lee Freshman High School and San Jacinto Junior High School participated.

Odessa man fights for his life following pipeline explosion

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

McCAMEY — An Odessa man continues to fight for his life in a Lubbock burn center, following an explosion and fire that killed two of his fellow workers.

Jimmie Jimenez is still listed in critical condition in the Burn Unit of University Medical Center Hospital, according to a hospital spokeswoman.

Two other Odessa men were killed Friday when a fire erupted on a pipeline valve they were installing at a tank farm operated by Shell Pipe Line Corporation. All three men were members of a contract crew with Muncy Construction Company of Odessa.

Robert Leroy Muncy of was pronounced dead on the scene. Another man, Liberato Martinez, died at 8:51 p.m. after being airlifted to the burn center along with Jimenez. Martinez suffered third-degree burns over 97-100 percent of his body.

Jimenez suffered second- and third-degree burns over 70 percent of his body.

Shell personnel have been joined by government agencies in investigating the accident, Shell official Greg Kaul said.

The Texas Railroad Commission, the Texas Department of Transportation and the Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) all have investigators on the scene.

"We're not finished with the investigation," Kaul said. "We're still trying to piece a lot of it back together," he said. At least another day will be needed to complete the investigation, he said.

Two other men reported to have received lesser wounds in the accident are expected to be released from the hospital soon, Kaul said. "They're doing fine," he said.

The accident occurred at approximately 1 p.m. with "an explosion and fire" at Shell's McCamey Tank Farm, located about 60 miles south of Midland. The tank farm is about two miles east of McCamey.

The explosion and fire occurred during the installation of a new valve that was being welded into the pipeline within the tank farm facility, Kaul said. He said the fire was extinguished quickly, within 30 minutes, by the McCamey Fire Department.

The tank farm gathers crude oil from several sources and distributes the crude oil to the east, primarily through Rancho Pipeline, a Shell spokeswoman said. Pipeline operations have not been affected, she added.

Issues split committee as they try to research integration

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

Midland public school's Citizen Advisory Committee to Study the Cluster System will videotape its meetings for a matter of record, and will pay for the process out of its budget at a cost of about $100 for a two-hour meeting. The issue of videotaping has divided the committee, even after a motion carried at a previous meeting in favor of videotaping.

Beleaguered with disagreements from the outset, temporary chairmen still refer to the two factions of the group as "your group" and "our group." The two groups — those appointed by the school board, and those appointed by the intervenors in the lawsuit that resulted in desegregated schools — are trying to work together to research integrated school systems.

The committee met Thursday night to discuss selecting a chairman for the group. Nominees added to the list at the Nov. 16 meeting include former school board trustee Gary Willis, attorney Victor Torres, Lydia Torres, Conrad Coleman, and Patrick Cordero, vice president of economic development for the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce.

Committee member Pete Ruiz motioned to close the nominations for chairman. His motion resulted in lengthy discussions and amendments to the motion as some members wanted to leave nominations open, but get on with the process of interviewing.

"How about if the motion is to discontinue nominations and begin the interviewing process?" Ruiz said. That motion carried with 12 in favor.

It also was suggested that a list of questions be drawn up and sent to chairman candidates so they would be prepared to be interviewed by committee members. The suggestion resulted in debate, but committee members worked together in selecting the questions.

It was decided that candidates be prepared to speak about their background in education, what they could

French rail: Nation's pride drowns in debt

By Pierre-Yves Glass
Associated Press

PARIS — France's pride — its modern, world-class national railway — has become its biggest nightmare.

In their crusade against belt-tightening cuts, rail workers are the engine of a nationwide walkout that has mobilized postal, utility and other public workers.

The strike, which has throttled the economy, entered its ninth day Saturday. And there's no end in sight: Teachers, bank and airline employees are joining Monday.

To slash a huge budget deficit, the government has prescribed wage freezes for all 5 million public workers and a 2 1/2-year extension of their social security payments before retiring.

For Robert Hue, head of the French Communist Party, which has a large following among public workers, that amounts to "ripping up the achievements of our civilization."

Rail workers have the most to lose. The nearly bankrupt National Railroad Company, or SNCF, is France's most indebted state firm.

At first glance, one wonders why.

French trains are ultra-modern, fast and used daily by millions in every corner of the country.

But the priority has been providing nationwide service, not profit. That has included running one-car trains rolling into the depths of rural France, carrying farming families on weekend visits and conscripts on leave.

The SNCF, which has 182,000 workers, is also weighed down by the pensions of 350,000 retirees, many of whom retire as early as age 50 — 10 years before private-sector employees.

French rail workers are the highest paid in the European Union. High Speed Train drivers earn up to $6,000 a month.

The conservative government doesn't dare suggest selling the SNCF. But Transportation Minister Bernard Pons said something has to give.

"They want me to promise that until the end of time, we won't touch anything," Pons said Saturday. "I can't promise that."

The state pumps $10 billion of taxpayers' money into the SNCF yearly to keep it going, almost as much as the SNCF earns in sales.

The government will keep doing so for now, and assume a fifth of the SNCF's $35 billion debt through next year. But in exchange, the SNCF has to clean up its finances.

That means turning over 3,800 miles of unprofitable lines — a fifth of the network — to regional governments. They could then close them, fire workers and contract private bus companies for some routes.

That has rail workers up in arms. Some economists agree, saying a public service should be allowed to run in the red.

"The fact is the SNCF is a success story. French railway is among the best in the world," said Jean-Paul Fitoussi, director of the Observatory of French Economic Performance, an independent think tank. "The investments were massive, especially with modernizations like the High Speed Train. Society has benefited so it's normal that society help pay the debts."

Railmen, called "cheminots," are legendary in France. Under Nazi occupation, they played a prominent role in the Communist-led Resistance, sabotaging locomotives and foiling German resupply efforts by misdirecting requisitioned trains. Many were shot.

"There is a sort of spontaneous public sympathy for the cheminots, which bolsters their bargaining power beyond their ability to be a nuisance," Fitoussi said.

Taiwanese voters cut ruling party's majority

TAIPEI, Taiwan (AP) — Unnerved by Chinese military threats, Taiwanese voters trimmed the ruling party's majority in legislative elections Saturday and boosted a new party that promises to work for peace with Beijing.

The election was held under the shadow of Chinese military maneuvers and threats widely seen as an attempt to scare voters from candidates who would make Taiwan independent and abandon the doctrine that it is a part of China.

The result confirmed the steady downward trend of the Nationalists, Asia's longest-ruling non-communist party, since they abandoned dictatorship and launched Taiwan on the road to democracy eight years ago.

Though the ruling Nationalists maintained their grip on the 164-member Legislature by winning 85 seats, their majority was cut by 11 seats from the previous election in 1992. The Democratic Progressive Party, which advocates Taiwanese independence, gained only four seats, to 54.

Most impressive was the New Party, which broke away from the Nationalists two years ago, accusing them of watering down their commitment to reunification with China. They captured 21 seats.

China claims sovereignty over the island, viewing it as a breakaway province. While no friend of the Communists in Beijing, the New Party says it can deal with China without provoking it.

"Taiwanese used their ballots to demand a more stable relationship" with China, said political scientist Chang Ling-cheng of National Taiwan University. "They felt their dreams should give way to reality."

He was referring to Taiwan's jubilation in June when President Lee Teng-hui unofficially visited the United States, crowning a drive to broaden Taiwan's international presence against a diplomatic blockade by China.

China saw Lee's U.S. visit as a tacit move toward independence, and began test-firing missiles near Taiwan, staging military exercises, vilifying Lee and floating hints of an invasion if Lee didn't recant.

Taiwanese business has taken fright. The stock market has plummeted, and money is being poured into the safety of foreign currencies.

But even without the Chinese threat, the Nationalists are facing their toughest challenge since 1949, when they fled the Communist takeover of China and set up their government in Taiwan.

They are seen as having grown rich and corrupt from 46 years of unbroken rule. The economy, although still thriving by Western standards, has slowed this year and Taiwan's economic indicators now lag behind many Asian countries.

President Lee also looks more vulnerable now. Not only is his majority weakened just months before presidential elections in March, but he faces an invigorated New Party, which will join the Democratic Progressive Party in eroding his clout.

WEATHER WATCH

Today to be sunny, high near 70

Staff Report

Today's forecast calls for mostly sunny skies and cooler with a high near 70 and north winds at 5-15 mph becoming east during the afternoon, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Tonight should be fair with a low in the mid-30s.

Monday should be mostly sunny with a high in the low 70s.

After an overnight low of 41, Saturday's high reached 80, tying the record high set in 1942. The record low is 17 set in 1985.

STATE

Unseasonable December heat toppled temperature records across Texas on Saturday as sunshine and southerly breezes cooked up a near-perfect day.

Highs reached into the 70s and 80s and ranged at 3 p.m. from 72 degrees at Dalhart in the northern Panhandle to 85 in McAllen in the Lower Rio Grande Valley.

Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport reached 81 degrees, breaking the old record of 80 degrees set in 1951; Waco reached 81, breaking the old record of 80 degrees set in 1970; Abilene reached 82 degrees, breaking the record of 81 set in 1916; Wichita Falls reached 83, eclipsing the 82 set in 1951; College Station's 83 broke the record of 82 set in 1922; Amarillo's 76 tied the record set in 1926; San Angelo's 83 tied the 1916 mark; Lubbock's 81 broke the record of 80 set in 1942; and Midland's 80 tied the 1942 high.

The warm temperatures were the result of plenty of sunshine across the western and central areas of North Texas and strong south to southwesterly winds of 15 to 25 mph. Skies across the eastern areas remained partly to mostly cloudy due to moisture continuing to flow north from the Gulf of Mexico. South Texas was mostly cloudy to cloudy while it was sunny in West Texas.

The North Texas forecast is for partly cloudy skies in central and western portions today and partly cloudy in the east. Cooler temperatures will prevail with highs from 65 to 70. It will be mostly clear in the west on tonight and partly cloudy elsewhere. Lows will range from 40 to 45. Monday will be mostly sunny in the west and partly cloudy elsewhere. Highs from 67 to 72.

South Texas is to have partly cloudy skies today with gusty winds. Highs will range from the mid 70s to the low 80s. Tonight will be clear and colder with lows from the 30s in the Hill Country to 50s along the coast. Monday will be sunny and mild with highs in the 70s.

NATION

Rain and snow were scattered across the northern states Saturday, and unseasonably warm air spread across the central Plains.

Mostly light snow and rain showers stretched across parts of the Pacific Northwest and through the Rockies to the upper Plains during the afternoon.

Rainfall in the Northwest had abated since heavier rain and melting snow caused extensive flooding earlier in the week. However, the National Weather Service said flooding continued on parts of several rivers, including the Skagit and Snohomish.

The Red Cross said its early damage estimate was that 1,680 homes were damaged by high water in Washington state.

Snow showers were likely in the mountains, and stiff wind was forecast along the eastern slopes of the Rockies in Montana and Wyoming, with a possibility of gusts to nearly 60 mph.

A weak area of low pressure was moving across the Great Lakes region, carrying snow and rain across the upper Midwest.

Light snow fell across the northern Great Lakes region, with up to 6 inches possible in spots.

Light rain fell across eastern Iowa, Illinois, Indiana and into northwestern Ohio, with a possibility of freezing rain and sleet across southern Wisconsin and south-central Michigan.

That weather system was expected to slide eastward into New England by this morning.

Elsewhere, afternoon temperatures warmed into the mid and upper 70s across the southern third of the country.

Unseasonably warm weather spread across parts of the Plains, with readings in the mid to upper 60s as far north as Nebraska.

ORDERS: Clinton encourages U.S. troops

since World War II. He said America's participation was "an absolute necessity and it is wise."

About 700 U.S. soldiers trained in communications and logistics will head for Bosnia in days, as soon as Clinton signs an authorizing order requested by Gen. George Joulwan, NATO's senior military commander. Officials said Joulwan would act soon, perhaps as early as today.

The main body of American troops will start moving out from bases in Germany after the Bosnian peace treaty is signed in Paris Dec. 14. By February, 20,000 U.S. soldiers are to be in Bosnia, headquartered in the northeast town of Tuzla, and 5,000 others will be deployed in Croatia and Hungary in support roles. Those in Bosnia will be joined by 40,000 troops from about 25 other countries.

During the visit, White House press secretary Mike McCurry said, Clinton and Kohl were briefed by U.S. military commanders and Clinton grilled them with questions concerning risks, training, resources and troop morale.

The officers "feel like it is going to be a very stable environment for the U.S. forces," he said.

Clinton said the troops are superbly trained and heavily armed, making any adversary think twice about attacking. And yet, Clinton said there will be risks. "There could be incidents with people who have still not given up their hatred," he said.

"But you will also have very clear rules of engagement that spell out the most important rule of all in big, bold letters: If you are threatened with attack, you may respond immediately and with decisive force."

The soldiers shouted "hooah," their traditional cheer.

Despite Clinton's assurances, soldiers admitted they were apprehensive but said they were ready to follow orders.

"I believe it's going to be very difficult," said Spc. Dustin Sanford of Cedar Rapids, Iowa. His assignment is to clear land mines. "One step at a time," Sanford said.

"Anybody who says they're not worried a lot is probably lying to you," said Sgt. 1st Class Ralph Granite of Clarence, Pa. "It's in the back of everybody's mind."

Tank crewman Spc. James Lenzner, from Antigo, Wis., stood with his wife Marina and their 8-month-old daughter Courtney to hear Clinton.

"Well, I volunteered for this job, (but) I don't want to leave my wife, and my baby doesn't want me to go," he said.

Clinton said their mission would be clear, realistic and "achievable in about a year." Some soldiers wondered whether he was hedging on Pentagon assurances that the mission would end in a year. But military planners expressed hope it might end sooner.

The soldiers' concerns are shared back home, where a skeptical Congress will vote soon on whether to support Clinton's deployment.

Nearing the end of a five-day European trip, Clinton detoured here to give the troops a personal send-off. Hillary Rodham Clinton accompanied her husband, pulling a wool army blanket over her lap during the president's speech. She also joined him at a mess hall lunch of turkey and stuffing with about 100 soldiers and family members.

Mindful of the hesitation of NATO military operations when they were controlled by the United Nation, Clinton said U.S. troops will take their orders from Joulwan.

In his weekly radio address, Clinton noted that the leaders of Bosnia, Croatia and Serbia have pledged in letters to take all possible measures to insure the safety of the peacekeeping force.

"They have made a serious commitment to peace but they can't do it alone," Clinton said. "They need our help, to help reestablish the conditions under which people can live in decency and peace."

In Belgrade, Serbian President Slobodan Milosevic promised a U.S. congressional delegation that American troops would be safe.

"We asked him point-blank: 'Do you assure us you're going to implement your guarantee as to the conduct of the Bosnian Serbs?'" said Rep. Sander Levin, a Michigan Democrat. "He gave us the answer, 'Yes.'"

Giving the Republican response to Clinton's radio address, Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., said Republicans oppose sending U.S. ground forces to Bosnia but would not try to stop it. To do so, he said, would discourage Americans serving in Bosnia and "would have very serious negative consequences."

From Germany, Clinton flew to Madrid, Spain, his last stop before his return to Washington today. The Clintons joined King Juan Carlos and Queen Sofia for a late dinner at the Royal Palace.

Today, Clinton will meet with Prime Minister Felipe Gonzalez and Jacques Santer, president of the 15-nation European Commission. Clinton wants European countries to pay at least one-third of the cost of the Bosnia peacekeeping mission, McCurry said. The United States' share is expected to be about $2 billion, about 20 percent of the total.

Poll: Most Texans oppose mission

DALLAS (AP) — Most Texans responding to a survey by The Dallas Morning News oppose sending U.S. troops to war-torn Bosnia.

In a poll published in Saturday's editions, 55 percent of the Texans surveyed said the were against sending the troops, 30 percent support the mission and 14 percent were undecided or declined to respond.

Texans' attitudes aren't much different from those expressed in recent national polls.

"It's not a popular idea in Texas, and in fact is not very popular nationwide," said Micheline Blum, whose firm conducted the poll.

The telephone survey of 813 Texans was conducted Tuesday through Thursday by the New York firm of Blum & Weprin Associates for the newspaper. The poll's margin of error was plus or minus 4 percentage points.

Fewer than a third of the Texans surveyed thought President Clinton's handling of the crisis had helped bring about peace. Almost half, 45 percent, didn't think he had had any effect, and seven percent said they thought the president has hurt the chances for a permanent peace.

In interviews, many said they fear the United States will wind up mired in Bosnia.

Mary Juarez of Brackettville worried that sending troops to Bosnia will create another Vietnam.

"I figure it will be like another Vietnam," said Ms. Juarez, 38, who supervises problem children for the local school district. "I feel like we're getting in too deep in something that is none of our business."

A cousin served in Vietnam, and her brother was among the hostages taken at the U.S. Embassy in Tehran, Iran, in 1979.

Benny Floyd said the nation's leaders need to remember the difference between the "United States Army and the Salvation Army."

The 37-year-old Austin electronics technician said the nation's leaders should be careful where they send its military, and why.

"It's one thing to provide weapons for people to fight for themselves," he said. "It's another entirely to get involved in an area where they have been killing each other for 1,000 years at least."

Floyd, who served in the Army from 1975 to 1985, also raised the specter of another Vietnam-like entanglement.

"The only way that it would not be another Vietnam is if the leadership doesn't allow that," he said. "If you get over there and try nation-building, or some other goody-goody thing that the military is not really set up for, then it's going to end up being that."

And he was worried that the United States is getting involved in a conflict in which identifying the enemy may be difficult.

"There's no way you can look through a rifle scope and say, 'Oh, that's a bad guy and that's a good guy,'" he said.

Rachel Prescott, a retired teacher in Lake Jackson, supported Clinton's decision to send in the troops.

Ms. Prescott, 70, said she is appalled by the carnage in Bosnia — not only at the soldiers who have died, but the women, children and older men. She is concerned about the disappearances of young Bosnian men.

"I feel like we don't have any choice," she said. "I'm a Republican, but I believe you should be supportive if the president is making sense."

"Someone has to help," she said.

ers, who were provided such sights as skating Christmas gifts, llamas, Shetland ponies, horses, hydraulic low riders, classic cars and Indian guides.

The parade proceeded north on Garfield Street, then east down Wall Street to Centennial Plaza, where Midlanders then gathered for Christmas tree-lighting festivities.

At Centennial Plaza, Mayor Bobby Burns announced the winners of the parade.

First place went to Calvary Christian Academy's entry, "Wise Men Still Seek Him." Second place went to Jams & Little Texas, with third place going to the Veterinary Technical Association's float called "Santa Dog."

The 42nd annual Christmas tree lighting festivities — organized by the Midland Jaycees and the city of Midland — began at 5:30 p.m. with the actual lighting at 6:15 p.m.

The tree was decorated with lights and "bird seed ornaments" made by Cub Scout pack 156, said Denise Burns, with Merry Merry Midland. The organization raised money last year for new decorations downtown.

In concert with the lighting of the tree and the activation of all downtown Christmas lighting, the Midland College Jazz Ensemble performed. Following the lighting, a dance troupe from Studio One Dance performed for the crowd of Midlanders at Centennial Plaza. The Midland-Odessa Symphony and Chorale then performed Christmas tunes.

Children visited with Santa and enjoyed hay rides, complete with hot chocolate and cookies.

South Korean officials arrest former president

■ Authorities take Chun Doo-hwan into custody for his role in 1979 coup in latest episode in power struggle.

Associated Press

SEOUL, South Korea — A former president was arrested early today for his role in a 1979 coup that was followed by the most violent crackdown in South Korea's modern history.

The arrest of Chun Doo-hwan comes a day after his refusal to submit to questioning over the savage 1980 crushing of a pro-democracy uprising in the southern city of Kwangju.

Chun was arrested in his rural hometown, Hapchon, where he remains a favorite son. Supporters scuffled briefly with thousands of police who surrounded his home as the warrant was served and he was taken away.

The arrest is the latest episode in a seething power struggle rife with scandal and backbiting. One newspaper has called it a "political civil war."

In one corner is Chun, president from 1980-88, whose opponents accuse him of masterminding a 1979 military coup and the 1980 massacre that left at least 240 civilians dead and 1,800 injured.

In the opposite corner is current President Kim Young-sam, accused of trying to make political capital out of a case that only months ago he said should be judged by history. He changed his mind after a money scandal involving another former president, Roh Tae-woo, threatened to engulf him.

The warrant charged Chun with violating the military criminal code by leading the 1979 coup. The six insurrection charges filed against him call for the death penalty.

Treason could be added later for the Kwangju incident after passage of a special law being pushed through the legislature at Kim's behest.

Roh, who already is in jail on charges relating to a $650 million slush fund and is expected to be indicted for bribery on Monday, has also been implicated in the crackdown.

Choi Kyu-ha — who served as a figurehead leader for eight months after a Dec. 12, 1979, military coup led by Chun and Roh — also might be questioned.

Prosecutors said their office was flooded with dozens of angry calls from citizens demanding Chun's immediate arrest. KBS TV conducted a telephone poll of 500 people over age 20 and said 69 percent felt the same.

And in several cities, hundreds of protesters and other dissidents threw firebombs at riot police and demanded harsh punishment for Chun and Roh.

Chun arrived in Hapchon, 150 miles outside Seoul, on Saturday and was greeted with banners and 500 villagers. Relatives spent the day cleaning up and preparing a feast for him.

Prosecutors, who obtained the warrant just before midnight, arrived a little more than six hours later, accompanied by 2,000 plain-clothes policemen.

About 100 villagers, who shivered around bonfires through the night, cursed at and briefly scuffled with police, who surrounded Chun's fenced compound and before prosecutors went inside to deliver the warrant.

With the pre-dawn scene illuminated by TV lights and 30 residents watching from their roofs, Chun finally emerged more than a half-hour later, looking grim but holding his head high.

He waved to his supporters before silently walking to a waiting car for the long drive back to Seoul. Protesters briefly blocked the motorcade, shouting: "Punish Chun Doo-hwan! Send him to prison!"

In a live nationally televised press conference just hours before he was to appear for questioning, Chun was defiant.

His chin held high, his back ramrod straight, Chun was unrepentant, unlike successor Roh, who tearfully owned up to amassing the slush fund during his term, and then went quietly to jail.

"I will not cooperate with the prosecutors' summons or with any other summons," Chun said in the 10-minute statement that stopped the nation in its tracks during the morning rush hour.

The former president also took a swipe at Kim, who has been trying to distance himself from his military predecessors. Chun reminded Kim that he embraced that group in a three-party merger in 1990 that led him to the presidency in 1993.

"If I am a criminal who brought confusion to society, then is it not reasonable that President Kim take due responsibility for having come together with such insurrectionists?" Chun asked, flanked by former Cabinet ministers outside his Seoul home.

He added that he is willing to take full responsibility for the 1979 massacre.

The opposition Democratic Party called Chun's statement "shameless and impudent" and said he would "not be able to avoid the anger of the people."

Chun faced corruption charges after he stepped down in 1988, was forced to apologize to the nation, donate millions of dollars to the government and go into self-imposed exile at a remote Buddhist temple.

In Oklahoma bombing case, John Doe No. 2 remains mystery No. 1

By Jo Thomas
N.Y. Times News Service

HERINGTON, Kan. — Seven months after Timothy McVeigh and Terry Nichols were arrested in the bombing of the Oklahoma City federal building, the prosecution's case against the two former Army friends is still haunted by the ghost of a mysterious third suspect who has never been found or identified.

In the days and weeks after a bomb shattered the building, killing 168 people, the shadowy figure that the authorities described then as John Doe No. 2 became the most hunted man in America, his features depicted in composite sketches circulated by the FBI.

But while federal officials are now saying little about John Doe No. 2 and are focusing their energies on building the case against the two men they have in custody, the mystery remains.

A half-dozen people said in interviews that they saw someone else in the company of McVeigh or Nichols, or both, in the days before the bombing on April 19.

These people, who said they also gave accounts to FBI agents, offered somewhat varied descriptions of a third man, reporting sightings both in Oklahoma City on the day of the bombing and in the two rural Kansas towns, Junction City and Herington, where McVeigh and Nichols spent time before the blast.

This man bore no resemblance to Michael Fortier, who has pleaded guilty to weapons charges and has agreed to be a government witness in the case.

It is unclear whether the man the witnesses have described is John Doe No. 2, who federal agents say was with McVeigh in Junction City when he rented the Ryder truck used in the bombing. It is also unclear whether the witnesses have described the same person, or whether their descriptions are of different people who looked broadly similar.

Prosecutors and investigators now say their inquiry has turned up little concrete evidence the man ever existed. But the existence of witnesses who swear there is someone else — coupled with the government's own determined efforts in the wake of the bombing to hunt and capture John Doe No. 2 — could have important consequences for the way the case against McVeigh and Nichols unfolds.

For defense lawyers, the suggestion of another suspect who has never been found offers an opportunity to poke holes in the government's case. The government's inability to explain away a suspect whom it introduced, lawyers say, raises questions about the possibility of a larger but as yet unseen conspiracy.

The prosecution's case against Timothy McVeigh and Terry Nichols is still haunted by the ghost of a mysterious third suspect who has never been found or identified.

While the FBI embarked on the biggest manhunt in U.S. history, received 10,000 telephone tips and interviewed dozens of look-a-likes, it could not identify John Doe No. 2. But the Justice Department has never officially disavowed him or the possibility of a wider plot, and the indictment names as yet unidentified co-conspirators.

Moreover, although the inquiry began with the assumption that several conspirators were involved, law-enforcement officials say the case has moved into a pretrial phase aimed at fortifying what the government believes is already a strong case against the two defendants.

Prosecutors are also preparing to counter likely defense maneuvers such as the assertion that the government may be trying to make McVeigh and Nichols into scapegoats because it has failed to explain the sightings of unidentified people in the company of the defendants.

Doubts have also been raised about the original eyewitness identification on which the composite sketches and manhunt for John Doe No. 2 were founded.

Pvt. Todd Bunting, posted at Fort Riley, next to Junction City, said in July that he had been in the rental office the day after prosecutors say McVeigh rented the truck. Bunting, who has no connection to the bombing, said it was his face that witnesses had recalled for the composite sketches.

Federal investigators acknowledged the sketch's resemblance to Bunting, who was wearing a black baseball cap similar to the one shown in two of the drawings.

But they have been careful not to disavow the witnesses who gave them the information for the sketches, because in a largely circumstantial case, prosecutors need the witnesses for their identification of McVeigh and for their testimony linking him to the truck.

But the authorities have additional reasons to believe there was another suspect. Early in the investigation, according to court papers, two witnesses at the federal building saw McVeigh and another man — not Nichols, who was in Herington that day — leaving the area of the building just before the blast.

In this part of Kansas, some residents have no doubt that another suspect exists, and is still at large. They saw him, they say, and they wonder why the government cannot find him.

COMINGS AND GOINGS AT THE DREAMLAND

On April 14, five days before the bombing, McVeigh checked into Room 25 of the Dreamland Motel in Junction City, 26 miles north of Herington. The next day, a Saturday, McVeigh used the name Bob Kling to call Elliott's Body Shop, a Ryder truck rental office in town, to reserve the truck that the government says carried the bomb.

That night, Shane Boyd, 23, a helicopter mechanic who was also staying at the Dreamland, said he saw a bushy-haired man, who resembled the sketches of John Doe No. 2, in the parking lot near McVeigh's room. The man, Boyd recalled, was smiling.

Shortly after midnight, Connie Hood, 29, who lives in the Junction City area, drove into the parking lot to visit David King, a guest at the motel.

All the motel rooms open directly onto a narrow parking lot at ground level, and just as Mrs. Hood parked her car near King's room, she said, a man flung open the door of Room 23, next to King's, as if he were expecting someone. The man startled her, she said. Then he stepped back, pulling the door almost closed while still looking at her.

He had thick, dark hair, brushed back, and an olive complexion, and was about 5 feet, 9 or 10 inches, Mrs. Hood recalled. Later, when the sketches of John Doe No. 2 were published, she saw the resemblance, but the face was not identical, she said. The man she saw had fuller features.

After questioning Mrs. Hood, the FBI took the hotel's records and dusted Room 23 for fingerprints. But Lea McGown, the motel owner who lives on the premises, said she was absolutely certain that Room 23 was neither rented nor occupied that night, although it is possible, she said, that someone might have taken a key to have a look at the room and was coming out when Mrs. Hood arrived.

On Monday, April 17, prosecutors say McVeigh and John Doe No. 2 went to pick up the Ryder truck McVeigh had reserved. At 3 p.m. Monday, Mrs. Hood again came to the motel to visit King, bringing her husband, Donald, 30.

Just as the Hoods were pulling into the parking lot, they said, they had to wait for a large Ryder truck that was also pulling in to park. Mrs. Hood recalled seeing both doors of the truck's cab open, and she watched the driver, who she said was not McVeigh, walk into the motel office.

The driver, she said, was "a dark-headed guy." She added, "He had the same look and weight as the guy who came out on Saturday night."

Mrs. Hood went into King's room, while Hood waited outside in the parking lot. Within minutes, Hood said, a man who resembled the sketches of John Doe No. 2 came out of the motel office and got into the driver's seat of the truck.

MYSTERY: Half-dozen people say they saw 3rd man with McVeigh, Nichols

At about the same time, McVeigh came out of a room at the motel and got into the passenger's seat, Hood said. The men then drove off.

Hood described the man as about 5 feet, 9 inches, with dark, brown hair brushed straight back and an olive complexion.

Court documents say a large Ryder truck was seen parked behind Nichols' house in Herington on Monday night.

AT THE COUNTER AT CARDIE'S CORNER

Shortly before 9 p.m. Monday, Larry Wild, 55, a former high school baseball coach and major league scout who grew up in Herington, had just finished pumping $5 worth of gas at Cardie's Corner, a gas station and convenience store in downtown Herington.

Wild said he saw a man whom he did not know waiting just inside the glass door and a man standing at the counter inside, his back to the door.

Just as Wild was going in to pay for his gas, the man at the counter turned around. That man, Wild said, was McVeigh. Wild said he did not see how the men left, by car or on foot. Nichols' house is only a few blocks away.

Wild told the police and the FBI that the likeness of McVeigh from a sketch was very good, but that the face of the other man was less like the sketch he had seen of John Doe No. 2, although it fit his general description.

Wild described the mystery person as 5 feet, 10 inches, with dark hair combed back and a dark complexion. His cheekbones were more prominent than they appeared in the sketch, Wild said, and his face was a little less full. He appeared to be part Hispanic, and part Indian, Wild said, and was wearing a light-blue denim jacket.

At about 3:30 Tuesday morning, back at the Dreamland in Junction City, King, who was drinking beer and watching movies with a friend, said he heard a noise, looked out at the parking lot and saw McVeigh sitting in the passenger seat of the Ryder truck. The dome light was on, King said, and the glove compartment open; McVeigh was examining a map.

When King left the motel just before dawn, he said he saw McVeigh still sitting in the Ryder truck, but when King returned at about 7 or 8 a.m., the truck was gone. Federal investigators have said in court that McVeigh, who had paid in advance, left the motel for good sometime before 5 a.m. Tuesday.

BREAKFAST TALK AT THE SANTA FE TRAIL

Barbara Whittenberg and her husband, Robert, own the Santa Fe Trail diner in Herington on Trapp Street, the main road into town from Highway 77, which leads to Junction City.

Mrs. Whittenberg said that early in the morning on Tuesday, the day before the bombing, McVeigh, Nichols and a third man ate in her restaurant. They had parked three vehicles in the parking lot, she said — a white car with an Arizona license plate, a Ryder truck and a pickup truck.

Mrs. Whittenberg, who is from Yuma, Ariz., said she noticed the arrival of the men because when they parked, her son, Charlie, pointed out the Arizona license plate. She struck up a conversation with the three men.

Nichols was familiar to Mrs. Whittenberg, she said, because he occasionally came in for coffee or dinner. She also recalled that McVeigh had stopped in at one time. But she had never seen the third man, who she said had a dark complexion and might have been Hawaiian.

Mrs. Whittenberg said that when the FBI sketches were published, she recognized the third man's resemblance to John Doe No. 2, although she said the man's face was slightly thinner, his cheekbones more prominent and his nose slightly wider than shown in the portrait.

Mrs. Whittenberg is the only person known to have actually spoken to the mystery man.

In Oklahoma City, Mike Moroz, 25, is a service manager for Jerry's Tire, at Tenth and Hudson Streets downtown. Moroz said that on April 19, the day of the bombing, two men in a large Ryder truck stopped between 8:25 and 8:35 a.m. to ask for directions to Fifth and Harvey Streets, the site of the federal building. The bomb exploded at 9:02 a.m.

The driver of the truck was McVeigh, Moroz said. "There was someone with him, a man wearing a hat."

Moroz and the others may not supply much detail. But as both sides prepare for trial, what he and other witnesses say they saw, even if imperfectly remembered, leaves the mystery unsolved.

Solar observatory Soho begins $1 billion mission

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — A solar observatory hurtled toward the sun Saturday after rocketing into space on a $1 billion mission.

An unmanned Atlas rocket carrying the Solar and Heliospheric Observatory, called Soho, blasted off at 3:08 a.m. from Cape Canaveral Air Station. Within a few hours, the spacecraft was boosted out of Earth orbit and heading toward the sun, with its power-generating solar panels and antennas fully extended.

Soho should reach its final destination in four months — a point nearly 1 million miles from Earth and 92 million miles from the sun. The gravitational pulls of Earth and the sun cancel each other at this point.

There, Soho will peer continuously at the sun and send back data for two years, longer if NASA and the European Space Agency can afford it.

It's considered the most complex observatory ever built to study the sun's deep interior as well as the corona, its outer atmosphere, and the ever-expanding solar wind.

Unlike the 5-year-old Ulysses spacecraft, which just completed a northern polar pass of the sun and now is headed out to Jupiter's orbit, Soho will remain between the sun and Earth, going round and round an imaginary point in a so-called halo orbit.

Fabrizio Felici, mission director for the European Space Agency, said Soho will provide a "special new look at the sun" from this unique vantage point. The 4,100-pound observatory has 12 telescopes and other science instruments — three from the United States and nine from Europe.

Scientists plan to probe the sun's mysterious interior by sound waves, exhibited on the solar surface by oscillations and variations in brightness. This new method, called helioseismology, is analogous to using earthquakes to study the Earth's interior.

"These experiments provide a new and really-exciting, we believe, chance to journey from the center of the sun all the way out to the surface," said Philip Scherrer, a Stanford University physicist in charge of one of the Soho instruments. "Soho will see the conditions out to the farthest limits of the heliosphere."

Other scientists will use Soho to study charged particles streaming into space from the sun's outer atmosphere. This solar wind, if strong enough, can disrupt radio communications and cause blackouts on Earth.

"Soho is poised to make major inroads into the understanding of our star," Felici said.

Ulysses, also a U.S.-European project, studied the solar wind sweeping past that spacecraft, 100 million to 200 million miles from the sun. Soho will observe these particles at their source as they accelerate away from the sun, said George Withbroe, director of NASA's space physics division.

About 200 scientists from 36 institutes in 15 countries are participating in the Soho project.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration and the European Space Agency are splitting the $1 billion cost of the Soho mission. That includes the observatory, rocket and two years of spacecraft operations.

Matra Marconi Space, based in France, built the observatory. Lockheed Martin Astronautics of Denver made the rocket.

Launch had been scheduled for Thanksgiving Day, but was delayed nine days so technicians could replace two fuel regulators in the rocket. Workers used the wrong material when making those two regulators, a potentially catastrophic problem.

Electrical problems with the rocket caused a half-hour delay Saturday morning.

Even false hopes are better than nothing for families of victims in unsolved cases

By Michael Fleeman
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Every week more tips come in. Every week more dead-end leads get crossed off the list.

And still Rose Markey keeps hoping and praying the next phone call to her Michigan home will lead to her missing daughter. Or to her body.

So when the latest lead developed — that her daughter's disappearance might be linked to a photographer charged in the headline-grabbing murder of a beautiful model in Southern California — Markey again felt hope, knowing it, too, might prove false.

For the families of victims in unsolved cases, even false hopes are better than nothing.

"I may not have as much hope as I used to, but I still have some," said Markey, whose 18-year-old daughter, Rosie Marie Larner, disappeared two years ago this week.

"I know we'll find her. That's all I want — to find her. Even her body. That's all. It's not knowing that makes it the hardest."

For Markey and other relatives of victims in unsolved cases, the last few weeks have been particularly trying as news accounts reported that not one, but two serial killers may have been stalking the nation, preying on women.

Charles Rathbun of West Hollywood was arrested in the murder of model Linda Sobek, whose body was found in a shallow grave in a forest north of Los Angeles. Rathbun led authorities to the body.

Rathbun was then named a suspect in a second Los Angeles-area model's murder, and police from Santa Barbara to Romulus, Mich., have reexamined unsolved case files looking for possible links.

The Rathbun case followed the arrest in Kentucky of Glen Rogers, suspected in the murders of four women and an elderly man in California, Louisiana, Mississippi, Florida and Ohio.

Just as in the Rathbun case, the Rogers arrest had police scouring old files. Authorities in the California cities of Ontario and Oxnard found reason to suspect Rogers in women's murders.

Police alleged that both Rathbun and Rogers targeted women, gaining their trust and then killing them. Rathbun has pleaded innocent to murder in the Sobek case and has not been charged in any other killing. Rogers is awaiting extradition to face murder charges.

For the families of missing or murdered women, the arrests bring the potential, however slim, that a case can finally be solved, that emotional closure can finally occur.

While authorities in Michigan are exploring a possible connection between the Larner disappearance and Rathbun, they acknowledge the chances are remote.

Rosie Larner was last seen the night of Dec. 7, 1993. She had left home to see her boyfriend but never arrived. She disappeared without a trace. Authorities searched basements and dredged ponds. But there was no body.

So far, police have announced only the most tenuous of links to Rathbun. They said Rathbun then lived in a mobile home less than a mile from Larner. They said Larner had thoughts of becoming a model; Rathbun was a photographer.

But that is the extent of it, according to police and family members. There is no indication Larner knew Rathbun or knew of him. Also, although Larner had spoken of wanting to become a model, she never did any modeling. The two victims Los Angeles authorities have linked to Rathbun — Sobek and Kimberly Pandelios — were professional models.

In California, police said they found similarities between the Sobek and Pandelios cases and the decade-old, unsolved slaying of Santa Barbara photography student Kym Morgan.

Gingrich counsels restraint on Bosnia mission

■ While no fan of mission, house speaker advises fellow Republicans not to undermine it.

By David Espo
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Shortly after a White House meeting on Bosnia with President Clinton, Speaker Newt Gingrich convened the House GOP leadership in his Capitol conference room.

One by one, from Majority Leader Dick Armey of Texas to New York's Rep. Gerald Solomon, an ex-Marine, the group expressed strong opposition to Clinton's decision to send American ground troops to uphold the peace agreement.

Phone calls from the public, they noted, were running against deployment by staggering margins of 50-to-1 or more, despite Clinton's speech the night before appealing for support. Armey had just said publicly that "getting a winning vote ... would be like pulling teeth through the back of your head."

Gingrich, while no fan of the operation, counseled caution in the Tuesday meeting. With the initial deployment of forces imminent, Republicans need to be careful not to undermine the thousands of troops who will eventually go there, he said, according to others in attendance.

These officials, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Gingrich added he was "not crazy about the idea, but the president's got a tough job when it comes to" making decisions on foreign policy issues such as Bosnia. He said he would not politicize the issue, according to several GOP lawmakers, and has spoken critically of former Speaker Tom Foley and the current Democratic Leader, Rep. Richard Gephardt of Missouri, both of whom opposed President Bush's call for congressional backing for the Persian Gulf War.

Also, according to these Republicans, Gingrich has made clear his view that the GOP "can't cut off money" for the troops who will soon be on the ground on the constitutionally valid orders of the commander-in-chief. Nor would he permit legislation to reach the floor that he can't vote for.

Despite calls from several lawmakers within the caucus to rally opposition to Clinton's policy, Gingrich has stayed silent thus far, although spokesman Tony Blankley said Friday the speaker may be ready to talk about the issue publicly this week.

In contrast to Gingrich's reserve on Bosnia, Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole is drafting legislation supporting the mission, with conditions intended to assure the safety of the troops and provide for a timely departure, including helping arm the Bosnians so they can defend themselves afterwards.

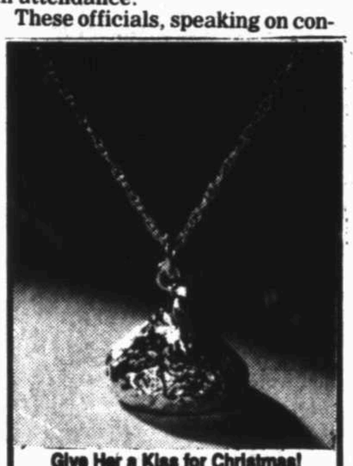

"It is time for a reality check in Congress," he said in a speech in the Senate, adding that Clinton has already made his decision.

Passage of the bill "is not going to be easy. It is not politically popular. But it is the right thing to do," said the leading contender for the Republican presidential nomination.

Jackson vows effort to oust house speaker from his chair

CHICAGO (AP) — The Rev. Jesse Jackson made an emotional return to his civil rights roots Saturday, promising a nationwide drive to help Democrats retake Congress and evict Newt Gingrich from the House speaker's chair.

Jackson credited his Rainbow Coalition political action group for the victory of his son, Jesse Jackson Jr., in a congressional primary last week. He said the coalition would focus next year on key House and Senate seats needed to re-establish Democratic control on Capitol Hill.

"The Rainbow is going to defeat Newt Gingrich in 1996," Jackson declared before about 400 people in a speech flavored with biblical rhetoric, underscored at times by an organist and heavily seasoned with Gingrich-bashing.

The occasion was Jackson's return to a church-like, gray-pillared structure on Chicago's South Side that for 24 years has been the headquarters of Operation PUSH (People United to Serve Humanity).

Jackson founded the civil rights group in the 1970s and led it for years, but left in 1984 to form the Rainbow Coalition in Washington. He announced Friday he is returning as PUSH's chief executive officer, although he will continue to live in Washington and lead the coalition.

PUSH has languished in recent years, and Jackson said one reason for his return is to revitalize it. Even so, there were many empty seats in the well-worn auditorium which in yesteryear was often packed on Saturday mornings with followers clapping to gospel music and drinking in Jackson's fiery civil rights oratory.

Jackson quickly raised several thousand dollars in checks, cash and pledges, crying, "Ushers! Ushers! Bring forth the baskets." And he ordered his organist to upgrade the musical fare by next week. "I want to hear you smoking," he declared.

Jackson said PUSH will focus on economic objectives, while the Rainbow Coalition will focus on politics.

At a news conference following the meeting, Jackson said the GOP was guilty of "the utter abandonment of urban policy" and had "made jails a growth industry."

He criticized Republicans for their opposition to national health legislation, job-training funds and measures "to level the playing field for the American worker."

Dole predicts there won't be another federal shutdown during Christmas

GREENVILLE, S.C. (AP) — Federal employees should not worry about another government shutdown ruining their holidays, Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole said Saturday.

"It's not going to happen," Dole, R-Kan., told reporters here before appearing in a Christmas parade. "If it does happen, I won't want to come back (to Washington) right away."

Federal agencies will lack authority to spend money unless President Clinton and Congress either get a budget deal by Dec. 15 or the two sides agree to extend that deadline.

Last month, the government shut down for four days as Clinton and the GOP-controlled Congress argued about balancing the budget and Medicare spending.

If no deal comes by Dec. 15, Dole said Congress and the president should agree to extend the deadline and keep the government running. "Around the holidays isn't the time to be closing down the federal government," he said.

Dole said he didn't know whether Clinton and Congress could strike a overall deal by the deadline or be forced to agree on another temporary spending bill to keep the government operating.

Animal-rights activists get message across to mainstream America

By David Foster
Associated Press

Grant this much to animal-rights activists: They don't just pick the easy fights. Peter Petersan went to the meat-eating heart of America to take on the Wienermobile, and he did it with relish.

On a sultry August morning in West Des Moines, Iowa, Petersan circled his target: a group of parents and children gathered outside a grocery store for an Oscar Mayer talent contest.

When a boy started singing "My bologna has a first name, it's O-S-C-A-R," Petersan made his move. Wearing a pig costume and a "Meat Is Murder" sign, he climbed aboard the hot-dog-shaped Wienermobile and refused to budge.

Police stepped up and threw the pig in the pokey. But not before Petersan got his message across. "They were exploiting children to sell their product — slaughtered animals," he says.

Oh, those wacky animal-rights crusaders: They dress as lobsters to protest cruelty to crustaceans. They persuade fashion models to bare all and proclaim "I'd rather go naked than wear fur." Last month in 10 cities, they showed their holiday spirit by hanging banners saying "Thanksgiving Is Murder On Turkeys."

Like clowns in a convent, they succeed wildly in drawing attention to themselves. But do these far-out activists really think they'll ever influence mainstream America?

Surprise: It appears they already have.

A new Associated Press poll has found wide support for beliefs usually identified with a tiny minority of radical animal-rights activists.

Two-thirds of the 1,004 Americans polled agree with a basic tenet of the animal-rights movement: "An animal's right to live free of suffering should be just as important as a person's right to live free of suffering."

Two-thirds also say it's seldom or never right to use animals in testing cosmetics; 59 percent say killing animals for fur is always wrong; and 51 percent say sport hunting is always wrong.

The poll was taken Nov. 10-14 by ICR Survey Research Group of Media, Pa., part of AUS Consultants. Its margin of sampling error is plus or minus 3 percentage points.

The AP poll reinforces other statistics that show declines in hunting, consumption of red meat, and use of animals in research.

"All you have to do is walk into a restaurant and open the menu to see how things have changed," says Ingrid Newkirk, co-founder of People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals, the nation's largest animal-rights group. "Even in steak houses, you find vegetarian items."

To be sure, America is still a killing nation. More than 6.5 billion animals die annually at human hands, mostly for food, says Stanford University researcher Linda Cork. And critics of animal-rights activists say our treatment of animals hinges not so much on dancing lobsters and naked models as on more mundane things like increasing urbanization and scientific advances.

But no matter how much credit they do or don't deserve, activists like Petersan are smiling inside their pig suits. A lot of things are going their way:

■ America now has more grazers than predators.

In the AP poll, 7.5 percent say they rarely or never eat meat. U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service records, meanwhile, show 5.9 percent of all Americans bought hunting licenses last year — down from a peak of 7.7 percent in 1975.

In the AP poll, opinions on sport hunting were almost evenly split, with 51 percent calling it "always wrong" and 47 percent saying it's OK. Hunting was OK with 60 percent of men, but only with 35 percent of women.

■ The number of animals used in scientific research has dropped by about half since 1968, says Andrew Rowan, a scientist at the Center for Animals and Public Policy at Tufts University.

Most Americans appear willing to accept justified uses of research animals. In the AP poll, 70 percent approve of using animals in medical research under at least some circumstances.

But only 31 percent believe it's right in testing cosmetics — and the cosmetics trade is listening.

■ Whom to believe? Furriers say sales are holding steady and need just a spell of cold weather for a big revival. Anti-fur protesters say the industry is fading like a fox in a leghold trap.

In the AP poll, 59 percent oppose killing an animal for its fur. That's up from a 1989 ABC News poll, worded exactly the same, which found 46 percent opposed.

■ Animal-rights activists say the best way to be kind to animals is to stop eating them. So far, they have few takers — despite the breathless articles in trendy magazines that imply vegetarianism is sweeping the nation.

In the AP poll, only 2 percent say they never eat meat, poultry or fish. Six percent eat meat rarely; 21 percent, occasionally; and 71 percent, frequently.

Animal-rights activists celebrate Americans' declining consumption of red meat, down from 126 pounds per capita in 1975 to 115 pounds this year, according to the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

But health concerns, not sympathy for suffering animals, seem to be behind the trend.

Artisan crafts Treaty Oak pens

Kenn Hill holds two sections of the Treaty Oak that he has been given to make pens from.

ODESSA — Kenn Hill is carving out a piece of history by creating commemorative handcrafted wooden pens out of the dead part of Austin's famous Treaty Oak.

"This is the most exciting project I've been involved in," Hill said.

The Odessa craftsman, who is the owner of Kenn's Penns, was selected to create handcrafted, commemorative writing pens from the famous Treaty Oak.

Hill has been making pens for two years from Texas native woods and certain exotic woods from all over the world. He said he only uses dead wood, never cutting down a live tree for his creations.

Hill was selected for the Treaty Oak Program after submitting a bid and samples of his work. He was awarded a contract to make the pens strictly for the city of Austin.

The Treaty Oak was poisoned in 1989 and efforts to preserve the historical tree saved one-third of it. The remaining two-thirds were trimmed and saved for projects such as the pens Hill is creating.

Hill said his brother, Tom, who owns T&G Pen Co. in Bedford, is helping him on the project.

The brothers have had joint projects in the past, including making handcrafted pens of wood from unusual things such as baseball bats autographed by Nolan Ryan and other historical trees such as the original Burkett Pecan tree that was established in 1900 and killed by lightning in 1993.

Kenn's Penns was born out of retirement, Hill said. His brother retired four years ago and began his pen-making business. He then taught the craft to Hill when he retired two years ago.

"I retired from a five-day-a-week job to work a seven-day-a-week job," Hill joked. "But, it's a labor of love that

Tree collectibles continue long life of Texas live oak

AUSTIN — One of the world's most famous trees is putting its roots down in the field of commemorative collectibles.

"Another chapter in the life of the 500-year-old Treaty Oak unfolds on Thursday when several products made from wood trimmed off this ancient symbol of justice and community spirit will be offered to the public," said Mark Wieland, city of Austin Treaty Oak coordinator.

In a program to raise funds for planting additional trees in public areas of Austin, artisans from throughout Texas have united with City Foresters to produce high quality pens, pen boxes, gavels and gavel striker plates.

The Treaty Oak gained its name from an 1830s boundary treaty agreement between Stephen F. Austin and Native Americans.

Wieland said the tree, which is located on Baylor Street between West Fifth and West Sixth streets, was in the center of a grove of trees that Native Americans called the Council Oaks.

Wieland said the trees were the site of Native American pow-wows and other ceremonies. In 1839, Stephen F. Austin signed the boundary agreement with the Indians for the settlement of Austin.

In 1927, the American Forestry Association pronounced the Texas live oak as the most perfect specimen of a North American tree and nominated it to its Hall of Fame for Trees in Washington, D.C.

Its crown stretched over 90 feet and covered a quarter of an acre.

The landowners threatened to cut down the tree in the 1930s, Wieland said.

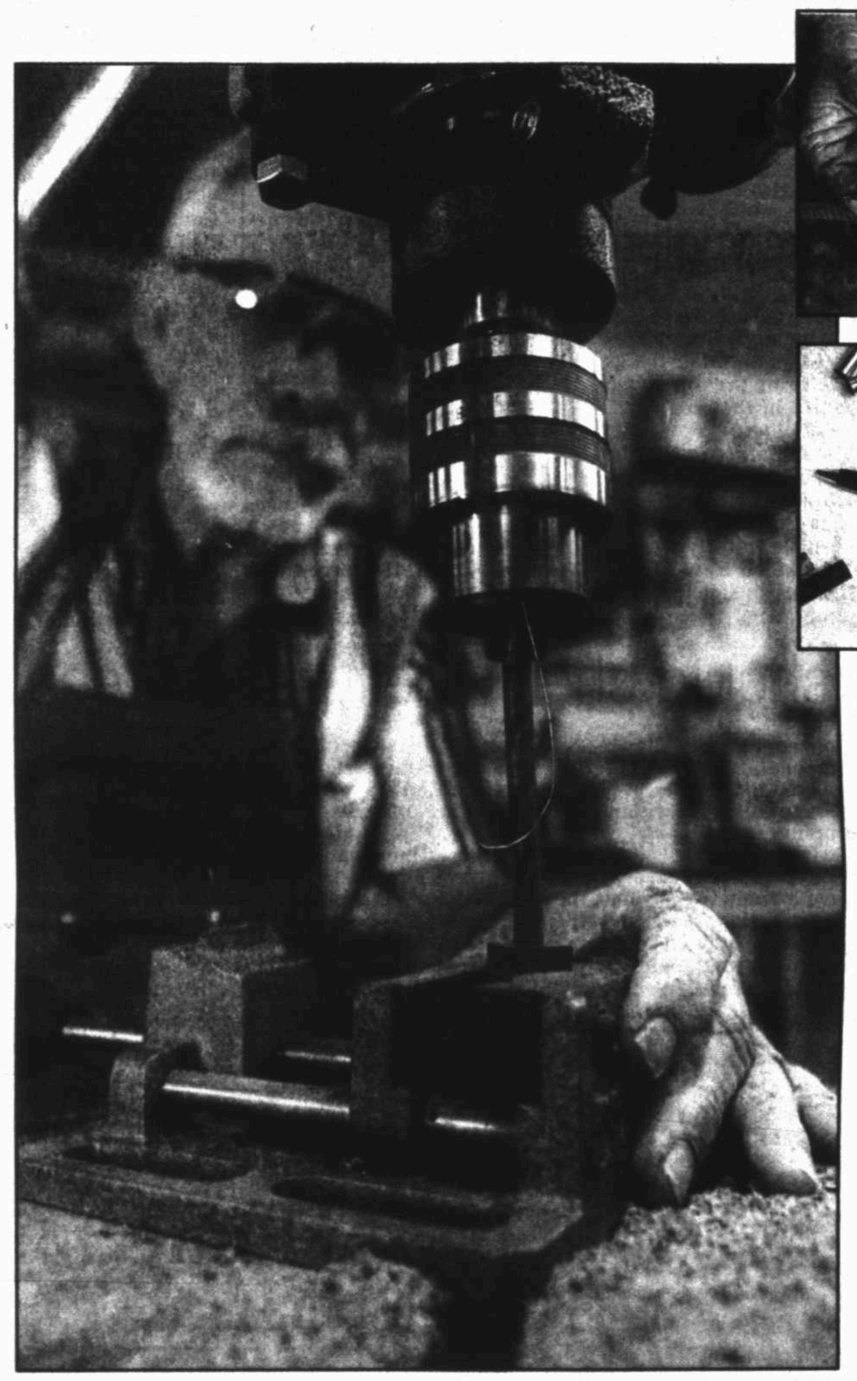

So in 1937, the tree and surrounding land were purchased by the citizens of Texas and donated to the city of Austin as park land.

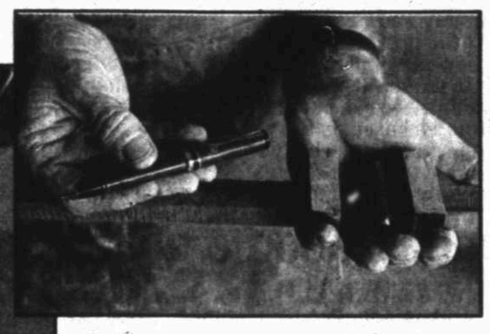

The tree was severely damaged in 1989 by malicious poisoning.

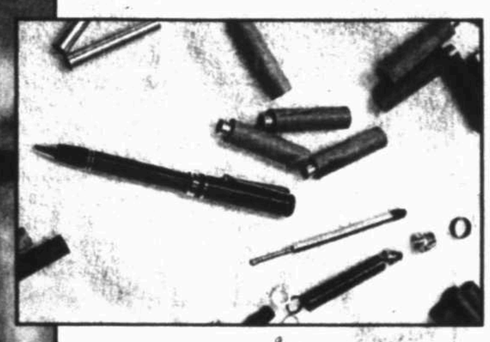

"A neighbor noticed the tree's leaves were wilting ... that's when we learned it had been poisoned," Wieland said.

After heroic efforts to save it, approximately one-third of the tree

ODESSA — Craftsman Kenn Hill plans to spend today working to complete his order of commemorative handcrafted pens so he can travel to Austin Tuesday to present the first pen to Gov. George W. Bush.

Hill, who owns Kenn's Penns of Odessa, was selected to handcraft the pens for the city of Austin's Treaty Oak Project using wood from the famous Treaty Oak.

Hill and his brother have been crafting the pens for the past two years.

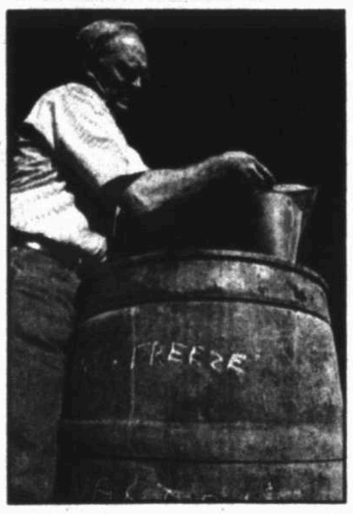

The design of the pen is similar to the trademarked Parker Executive and will have the finest mechanisms available, Hill said.

The exposed metal parts will be coated with a titanium gold finish, which according to the supplier, is the most durable finish made today.

Hill said he has several pieces of the Treaty Oak, which are numbered to reduce the chances of fraud.

He said the wood is cut into strips,

Proper antifreeze disposal prevents poisoning, doctor says

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

Just a few laps of ethylene-glycol antifreeze can make your dog or cat appear drunk and uncoordinated and can kill it.

And death surely will occur if the appropriate antidote is not administered immediately.

"Prevention is careful disposal," said Dr. Tom Green, a Midland veterinarian. "If your radiator boils over, you need to take a hose and flush it down, dilute it more. You may want to keep your pets out of the garage."

Preventive measures, however, often come too late.

Antifreeze poisoning, which happens relatively frequently, is "treatable if people are aware that it is a problem," Green said.

Ethylene glycol, which is a syrupy alcohol, tastes sweet. "Cats smell everything. It's sweet, and they just lap it up," he said.

Labels on plastic containers of the common ethylene-glycol antifreeze note that the "Solution is poisonous to animals" and carry this warning: "Harmful or fatal if swallowed or inhaled. Do not drink."

However, on the market is another antifreeze coolant, propylene glycol, which is touted as "essentially non-toxic to people and pets." Propylene glycol is a viscous hygroscopic fluid that also is used in hydraulic fluids.

An antidote for ethylene-glycol poisoning is induced vomiting.

"Within four hours (after ingestion), our success is good" in saving animals' lives, Green said. "After four hours we can very seldom save it."

However, the "vast majority of poisoning from antifreeze goes undetected, because people don't know what to look for."

The first symptom is intoxication. However, a drunken stupor could be indicative of diabetes, severe gastritis or pancreatitis.

"One effect of ethylene-glycol toxicity is dehydration," Green said.

Tests, which include looking for a lowered pH (acidity-alkalinity) in the

Visit with parents always includes acquaintance updates

It happens the same way every time I go home for a visit.

Ott

The three of us are seated at the dinner table — my dad to my left, my mother directly across from me. We have just finished the meal and are now "getting caught up on the comings and goings" of various family members.

When that ritual ends, which usually takes a good 45 minutes, we move on to other subjects ... generally the latest happenings involving my old friends and former classmates who still have family in town.

I throw out a name and my parents provide a brief rundown. It goes something like this:

"What's the latest on Rodney Pyatt?" I'll begin while picking at the last of the pecan pie and motioning for another cup of coffee.

"I think he's doing some kind of construction work right now," the response will come. "We ran into his daddy at the grocery story the other day."

"Really?" I say, trying to stifle a yawn. "How's Bob doing?"

"Fine. He's retired now, you know."

"Is that so?"

(NOTE: This is REALLY fascinating stuff we're talking about here, the kind of vital information that keeps a person on the edge of his seat.)

Thus, having adequately caught up on the various Pyatt family members, who used to live down the street from us, I move on to other names.

"Is Mart Hanna still with the Houston Police Department?"

"Yes," mother will say. "Last I heard he was a sergeant, I think. We ran into his mother, you remember her, don't you, at Sears a couple of weeks ago. She's looking real good these days."

"Great," I reply, unable to suppress a follow-up yawn. "So, is Thomas Moore still with Bordens?"

"No, I think he left them about a year or so ago. I'm not sure exactly what he's doing these days. We saw his dad the other day, though. He's as funny as ever. By the way, he asked about you."

"Good, good." I say, sneaking a glance at the TV screen. "Be sure and tell him hello for me next time you see him."

"We will, but you ought to call him sometime. He'd get a big kick out of that."

"I will," I say, knowing full well I won't.

And so and so forth.

TREATY: Retirement hobby is labor of love, pen craftsman says

(From 1B)

I do for myself. It is a different kind of job when you're crafting from wood doing something that you like."

Now, that retirement hobby is putting Hill on the pen-crafting map.

"Today, the suppliers we buy our mechanisms and gift boxes from told us we were the largest in the nation creating these kinds of pens," Hill said.

Hill said he and his brother have produced more than 40,000 pens.

For the regular pens he creates, Hill said he can produce 50 to 60 a day.

However, the Treaty Oak wood has a low tolerance so he has to be "more painstaking" in the production of those pens and creates only about 20 a day.

Hill said he and his brother began working on the Treaty Oak pens Thanksgiving Day and have set a goal to produce at least 200 by Tuesday.

This deadline is necessary so the city of Austin can have them laser-engraved with the Treaty Oak logo and put them on display Thursday and Friday.

"At the present time, I can't say how many pens we will be able to make. We intend to make them until we run out of tree. Estimates based on the wood we have in stock and what is still available to us, we calculate no more than a grand total of 2,500.

"Requests from all over the world were made for past Treaty Oak project items and I don't feel there will be enough pens available to meet the demand," Hill said.

He said those 2,500 pens will be the total amount available worldwide. He has already had requests spanning the globe from local folks to California and across the ocean in England.

Each pen will be part of a limited edition with a certificate of authenticity signed by the mayor of Austin and the chief forester of Austin, Hill said.

"This is the largest undertaking we've been involved in," Hill said. "It is a tremendous feeling of satisfaction to be honored to produce something of this wood to be handed down from generation to generation. It will be a true collectible for the collector."

The first 10 pens have been reserved for dignitaries. Hill will present the first pen to Gov. George W. Bush on Tuesday.

He said the city is allowing him to purchase back some of the pens to sell to his customers. All the pens will be sold for the same price.

Hill said he is already taking orders for the first 200 pens that he said will be available for Christmas.

The pens Hill is creating will be sold for $99.95 and can be purchased through the city of Austin at 1-800-537-2757 or from Hill directly at 362-3350.

Ambassador to go to Washington

NEW BRAUNFELS (AP) — U.S. Ambassador Bob Krueger, on leave from his post in bloody Burundi since September, said Saturday he has been summoned to Washington to discuss the situation.

Krueger told radio station KGNB in New Braunfels, his hometown, that he will meet Monday with national security adviser Anthony Lake and other Clinton administration officials about the ongoing tribal strife in the East African country.

Although he likened the ethnic bloodshed to atrocities in Bosnia, Krueger said he did not expect U.S. troop deployments to Burundi.

"I think there are other things we can do to bring pressure upon the murderers in that country," Krueger said.

He also said Saturday that he had received confirmation of what could be one of the worst single-site massacres in Burundi in the past year: 421 people, mostly women and children, killed Nov. 14 at a site just 12 miles outside the capital of Bujumbura.

POISON: Owners should check their pets, Green says

blood and checking for oxalate crystals in urine, may help discern if the pet is poisoned or is suffering from natural medical conditions.

If a pet owner notices that his animal is "acting funny," he should not wait to have it checked out because "tomorrow it (could be) dead," Green said.

He said there are three stages of antifreeze poisoning:

■ Alcohol intoxication, vomiting and diarrhea, "increased thirst just like after you have been drinking" alcoholic beverages, increased urine output and uncoordination.

This stage may be difficult to diagnose unless someone witnessed the pet lapping the antifreeze, Green said.

Treatment is to induce vomiting by forcing the animal to drink hydrogen peroxide, syrup of ipecac or water. The pet's stomach would then be pumped and the animal would be placed on intravenous fluids, such as pure ethanol or grain alcohol, including 190 proof Everclear, which would cause the body to counteract the effect of the ethylene-glycol poisoning.

The system first would metabolize ethanol and, thereby, the "body will excrete ethylene glycol," Green said. "They may have a hangover, but they will live."

The "toxicity of antifreeze is when the body starts metabolizing ethylene glycol," Green said. Once it is metabolized, ethylene glycol becomes an oxalate compound and is poisonous.

The first stage will set in within 30 minutes of ingestion.

■ About 12 hours after ingestion, the animal "appears to recover" but may have a rapid heart rate and rate of respiration. The body has metabolized the ethylene glycol to intermediate metabolites, which are not poisonous.

■ From 12 to 24 hours after ingestion, the kidneys shut down, Green said. End-stage or final metabolites are oxalates and are poisonous.

"So, you get an intoxication from ethylene glycol, a recovery during the intermediate metabolism and toxic reaction with the end-stage metabolites, probably 12 to 24 hours after ingestion, resulting in renal failure and death," Green said.

"In the first stage, you are producing large volumes of urine. In the last stage, generally there is very little or no urine produced. And then the animals really start acting sick: nauseated, lethargic, depressed, possibly seizures," Green said. "That is when we normally see these dogs. Very seldom are you going to save the dog once they are in the third stage."

COLLECT: Treaty Oak Program is fund-raiser

remains intact, Wieland said.

"To try and save it from dying we dug up all the dirt 3 feet deep and 10 to 15 feet around it. One-third of the tree remains," Wieland said. "Soon after there came the complicated process of tree-trimming."

He said the dead pieces of the tree were removed and numbered, then stored in a warehouse.

He said the pieces of wood were allocated to artisans by the numbered pieces to make sure there is no fraud committed. Each piece of artwork created will be accompanied by a certificate of authenticity, Wieland said.

The Treaty Oak Program is part of a larger fund-raising effort by the city to not only create public awareness, but historical preservation of the Treaty Oak.

Odessa craftsman Kenn Hill was selected to create pens from the famous tree's dead wood.

"Kenn made a very good proposal and was selected through a competitive bid process. He had the best bid and idea," Wieland said.

"These pens should become a true collectible for the serious collector. I feel honored to be involved in the making of something that might be handed down from generation to generation," Hill said.

The price range of the collectibles is from $24.95 to $995. They are being produced in Austin, San Marcos, Belton, Odessa and Bedford. The pens Hill is creating will be sold for $99.95 and can be purchased through the city of Austin or Hill directly at 362-3350.

For more information, call the city of Austin Forestry Program at 1-800-537-2757.

The city hopes to raise up to $100,000 from the project.

PENS: Craftsman uses extra caution to work wood

then into blocks.

He said the Treaty Oak wood is heavy and tight-grained, which is not uncommon to woodcrafting, but is harder to work with on the pens.

He said he drills a hole in the block to put the mechanism in. Then he bonds a brass sleeve inside to support and hold the mechanism.

The block is then turned from square to round on a lathe, then it is sanded and finish is applied.

When working on a normal pen Hill said he uses an electronic lathe which goes quicker, but with the Treaty Oak he is using a metal-working lathe to be more precise.

He said using it prevents some of the dangers of exploding wood and there is less chance of destroying the wood.

Hill said the wood is hard to work with because it has numerous cracks in it and it is "honeycombed."

In addition to the extra caution used in the creation of the pens, all the wood scraps must be saved.

"We are required by the city of Austin to save the smallest scrap pieces of the wood, even the sawdust, and return it to them for other uses in their Treaty Oak Project.

"The small pieces are going to be used by an artist in Austin to create an intarsia mural. The sawdust is for a ... future project," Hill said.

Each pen will have a certificate of authenticity issued by the city of Austin, Hill said.

OTT: Quarterly family updates need genuine excitement

(From 1B)

Over the next hour and a half, my parents and I will go down the list of everyone I remotely know who still has roots in the old hometown.

But the problem is, we do it each and every time I visit ... which is at least four times a year.

So if the people in question don't do something rather dramatic, like murder one another, then I pretty much know what they've been up to ... very little.

Which, I suppose, is to be expected. After all, most of us keep the same job for years at a time, maintain an uneventful lifestyle and basically go day to day with little or no break in the usual humdrum existence.

As a result, my quarterly updates have become equally humdrum.

What is needed here is some genuine excitement ... short of murder, of course.

For example, this conversation might be kind of fun:

"So," I could begin, "how's ol' Walter Van Slyke doing these days?"

An awkward silence would follow.

"Haven't you heard?" my mother would finally blush.

"No, I don't think so."

"Well, it seems that he recently came out of the closet. He's a transvestite."

"You're kidding?"

"No, but I hear he makes a real pretty girl," my mother, who always looks for something positive in even the worst of situations, would say.

"I can imagine," I would giggle. "How are his parents taking it?"

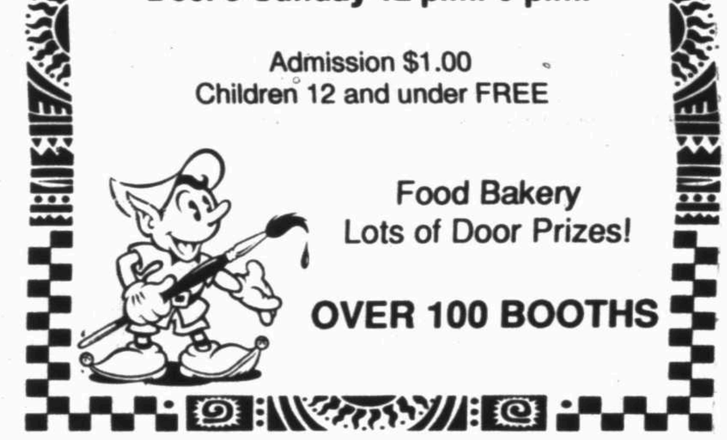

"Not too well. I think they have gone into hiding."

"Well if they ever re-emerge, tell them Gary says 'hey' to Walter."

It's the least I can do. After all, parents love for others to remember their kids.

Timber is popular target for Texas rustlers, Forest Service reports

By Katie Fairbank
Associated Press

LUFKIN — Skulking into the piney forest in the dead of night, they pick off their prey and cart it to market. Reminiscent of the cattle rustling once well-known in Texas, these thieves are taking trees.

Where once only cotton was king, 58 percent of all the timber produced each year in the U.S. now comes from Southern states, according to the U.S. Forest Service.

Those same Southerners who own lands graced by forests and smelling of pine needles are facing losses of $75 million each year from stolen hardwoods and Tall Southern Yellow pine, according to Bruce Miles, director of the Texas Forest Service.

The practice has become so rampant that the joke in this part of East Texas is it's gotten hard to see the forest for the thieves.

Rip-off artists have polished their scams because the price of logs has about doubled during the past two years and the number of absentee landowners has increased, said Alan Matecko, spokesman for the National Forests and Grasslands in Texas.

"Where sawlogs were bringing $30 a ton, they're now bringing $60 a ton," said Rep. Billy Clemons, D-Pollok, who lost about $5,000 when unscrupulous loggers harvested more than 50 pines, some hardwoods and a few small pulp wood trees from his land.

"I am a victim," he said, adding that natural disasters have added to the number of thefts. "The price of raw material has increased greatly. It's worth their effort to sneak onto somebody's property and steal some logs."

AP Laserphoto

State Rep. Billy Clemons, R-Pollok, kneels beside a tree stump outside his home in Angelina County o Tuesday. Clemons was a victim of theft in October 1993.

Many landowners are easy targets for the crooks because unlike livestock, trees aren't easily identifiable.

Unethical loggers have been known to clear-cut without permission, falsify sale bills and scale readings, break contracts and jump boundaries to cut trees on neighboring land.

"It's easier to get forgiveness than it is to get permission," Miles said of loggers who trespass for trees.

Shelby County timber farmer W.I. Davis, who has been in the timber business for 50 years, says he lost about $3,000 worth of his best trees last year when a logger claimed he didn't know the boundary.

"There's honest mistakes," Davis said, "and then there's mistakes on purpose."

Miles tells a story of a case in Cass County, where a thief stole the trees from a 160-acre tract but left a stand of pines along the perimeter. That way the owner wouldn't know when she drove past her land.

No one is safe. In November, a Louisiana timber buyer confessed to stealing timber from the Sisters of Providence in Indiana. The nuns lost around $100,000 when about three-fourths of their 104 acres was cut and sold, according to Harrison County Sheriff's Deputy Mike Alexander.

A hanging used to be the justice served up for rustlers in Texas. Today, landowners have trouble even getting a conviction for tree thievery.

"If you have good documentation of what happened it's not hard, but a lot of times people just go in in the dead of night and cut down timber without a trace," said Assistant District Attorney Art Bauereiss, who successfully prosecuted Clemons' case.

So, posses have been forming. Law enforcement, landowners and forestry officials have combined efforts to go after the tree rustlers. That's resulted in numerous lawsuits and convictions in Texas and across the country; three U.S. Forest Service workers being found guilty of stealing timber from the Sabine National Forest; and in March, leaders of 16 environmental groups asking Attorney General Janet Reno to investigate missing timber in the U.S.

Some milling companies, such as Purchase, N.Y.-based International Paper Co., have set up their own inspectors to check on boundary lines and logging sites. They also use surveillance.

"The loggers never know if or when we're doing surveillance, but the possibility that we might be and the paper trail we can follow does deter theft," said Randy Cofield, who handles timber security for International Paper. "... People are usually caught when they get greedy."

Arkansas, Oklahoma and Louisiana have passed laws that make a convicted thief pay the victim three to 10 times the value of the stolen timber. Texas has set up a public education program and Clemons says he'll introduce legislation next session.

Still, the laws won't protect people who don't know the scams.

"If you're ignorant about timber or brain surgery, you ought to have somebody who knows something about it help you," Miles said.

Prisons suspend use of electrified riot shield after employee death

HOUSTON (AP) — Following the death of a prison employee who collapsed after twice being jolted with an electrified riot shield, the Texas Department of Criminal Justice has suspended use of the device, a prison official said.

Harry Landis, 58, of Copperas Cove died at Coryell County Memorial Hospital, where he was taken after collapsing during a training exercise at the Hilltop Unit in Gatesville, said prison spokesman David Nunnelee.

Guards were undergoing routine training in the use of the clear, plasticlike shields, which have copper strips that deliver 3 milliamperes of electricity.

Since September, TDCJ guards have used the shields — designed to subdue violent inmates — when subduing or moving prisoners 59 times, Nunnelee said. No injuries linked to the shields have been reported, he said.

However, use of the so-called "electronic capture shields" has been suspended until an investigation into Landis' death on Monday is completed, he said.

Results of the preliminary autopsy indicate that it is "highly unlikely" the electric jolts caused Landis' death and attribute it to natural causes, Nunnelee said, adding Landis "was believed to have had heart problems."

John McDermit, the president of Nova Products Inc., which makes the shields, said they operate on the same theory as "stun guns" and have been medically tested and proven safe.

Prison systems in about half the states use the shields, which have been manufactured by the Cookeville, Tenn.-based company since the 1980s, McDermit said. The Texas incident is the first reported injury to occur while the shields have been used, he said.

McDermit said prison officials indicated to him that Landis "had a heart condition and was on the verge of a heart attack."

"We're very sorry this happened," McDermit is quoted as saying in Saturday editions of the Houston Chronicle. "But there certainly was no connection between his training" and his death.

Coryell County Justice of the Peace Jimmy Wood, who is performing the death inquiry, said there was "no indication (Landis) has been treated recently for heart trouble."

"I cannot find a history of heart trouble, but that doesn't mean he didn't have a history," he said.

Nunnelee said that before the training session got under way, Landis asked "a general question about how the shield might affect someone with heart trouble."

Landis did not tell trainers whether he had heart trouble, and trainers told employees that "literature from the manufacturer indicates that the shield should have no effect on anyone with heart trouble or a pacemaker," he said.

Nunnelee said the device delivers 40,000 volts of electricity in one to two seconds. During training, each employee is shocked twice, he said. The first jolt is self inflicted and the second is delivered during a simulated prisoner confrontation.

Landis collapsed after the second jolt, Nunnelee said.

Family Hospice acquires 2 area organizations

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — Family Hospice, Ltd., one of the largest and fastest growing hospice providers in the country, has purchased Odessa-based Hospice of the Southwest, Inc. and its affiliate, Home Health of the Southwest. Financial terms were not disclosed.

Sarah Beesinger, RN, CRNH, the acting director for Hospice of the Southwest, will continue as interim executive director of Family Hospice's offices in Odessa and Big Spring.

Currently serving 19 counties in West Texas, the former Hospice of the Southwest has an average daily census of 115 patients, including patients served by the Big Spring alternate delivery site. According to Ms. Beesinger, the acquisition will assure that quality hospice services will be even more accessible to the Permian Basin area in the future.

"With Family Hospice involved, we will be able to more efficiently deliver services to patients with a terminal illness," said Ms. Beesinger. "In addition, staff education programs implemented by Family Hospice will further enhance the quality of care provided to area communities and will allow the new company to play a greater role in the region's health-care industry."

Rocky Reese, chairman and chief executive officer of Family Hospice, Ltd., said the acquisition of Hospice of the Southwest presents an excellent growth opportunity for Family Hospice.

"From our own observation and from feedback we have received, we are encouraged with the level of patient services provided by the former Hospice of the Southwest staff," said Reese. "We are confident that by combining resources and expertise, we will be able to offer a greater level of professional service than was feasible before."

This week's Hospice of the Southwest acquisition follows a number of expansionary moves that Dallas-based Family Hospice has made. Recently, the company acquired Heart of Texas Hospice in Temple and opened a new office in Austin.

In addition to Odessa and Big Spring, Temple and Austin, Family Hospice now has offices in San Antonio, Kerrville, Dallas, Fort Worth, Greenville and Denton, Texas, and Oklahoma City, Norman and Tulsa, Okla.

All Family Hospice locations serve patients in and around the cities where they are located. The collective service area will now include 82 counties in Texas and Oklahoma.

Hospice-care funding is provided by Medicare, Medicaid, CHAMPUS, HMOs and other insurance plans. Family Hospice, together with those funding sources, typically pays 100 percent for medication, medical equipment and supplies as well as other costs related to a terminal illness.

In addition to providing advanced pain management and symptom control, professionals on staff also help patients and their families cope with the physical, emotional, social, financial and spiritual aspects of a terminal illness.

Hospice to donate $150,000

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — Dallas-based Family Hospice, Ltd., Friday announced its plans to donate $150,000 to charities in the Permian Basin area.

According to Rocky Reese, chairman and chief executive officer of Family Hospice, the donations will be made early next year as a sign of Family Hospice's "commitment to the Permian Basin community."

"With our acquisition of Hospice of the Southwest and its affiliate, Home Health of the Southwest, we're actively dedicated to the Permian Basin community," Reese said. "As a tax-paying corporate citizen, Family Hospice will not seek any contributions or charitable support for our hospice program here. Our goal is to become a positive force for growth in the community, and with input from the former Hospice of the Southwest board of directors, our management team will determine which charities will receive our charitable contributions."

Mexico's ruling party to decide fate of Salinas in 2 weeks, it says

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The ruling Institutional Revolutionary Party says it will decide within two weeks whether to expel former President Carlos Salinas and his elder brother Raul from its ranks.

The national president of the governing party known as the PRI, Santiago Onante Laborde, was quoted in capital newspapers on Saturday.

The push to expel the brothers began a little more than a week ago, when it was discovered that Raul Salinas had Swiss bank accounts totalling $84 million and authorities launched an investigation into the funds' origin.

Swiss authorities say they are looking into the possibility that the money is linked to drug trafficking. Salinas denies the money was obtained illegally and has said he will prove it was obtained by legitimate means.

Raul Salinas has been behind bars since February, when he was charged with masterminding the murder of the PRI's No. 2 man, Jose Francisco Ruiz Massieu. He also denies those charges.

Carlos Salinas has said that he has no idea how his brother got his fortune. But a former federal comptroller says she advised the president in 1992 that his brother was rumored to be involved in shady deals.

The former president, who was quite popular during much of the administration that ended a year ago, left Mexico in disgrace last March in the midst of a severe economic crisis.

Many blame Salinas' policies for last year's devaluation of the peso, which plunged the country into a recession. Opposition politicians are demanding that he be returned to Mexico to be tried for crimes against the Mexican people.

The former head of state is believed to be living in Canada.

Factions continue to create chaos in small Texas town

■ Gun Barrel City's local government is crippled by officials' feuding.

GUN BARREL CITY (AP) — You'd think that all the skulduggery, backbiting and finger-pointing would have cooled down when federal investigators got involved.

Think again.

The chaos choking the city government here continues to churn with no end in sight.

"I'm going to throw the towel in myself ... at least that's what I keep saying," Mayor Joe Agnes said Saturday. "Its a saga. There's so much going on."

Battling factions in the lakeside community of 3,500 people about 50 miles southeast of Dallas have all but started a civil war.

"It's just crazy," Agnes said. "It's misguided people who are not adhering to the will of the people."

By most accounts, the trouble started soon after Agnes was elected mayor last year.

After taking office, City Administrator Allan Taylor canceled a state grant to the city that he said Agnes had no authority to apply for.

The feud was on, and things boiled over in September, when in the course of two weeks:

■ Agnes kicked in the door to Taylor's office and told him to clean out his desk;

■ A judge reinstated Taylor;

■ Taylor returned to work with a phalanx of armed bodyguards;

■ Taylor fired police chief Tommy Smith and hired a new top cop and three other officers;

■ Taylor found a homemade bomb — a glass jar filled with gasoline and with nails taped to it — under his car, which prompted an investigation by the Texas Rangers and the federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms.

Then the lawyers got involved.

■ Taylor and three of the five City Council members considered his allies — B.J. Simmons, Emogene DeFord and W.C. "Bill" Brooke — sued Agnes, saying he overstepped the bounds of his job and calling him a "megalomaniacal tyrant dictating the law of Gun Barrel as his own police state."

■ Agnes filed a lawsuit against Taylor, alleging that Taylor placed the bomb under his own car to discredit Agnes and curry sympathy, an allegation Taylor denies. Agnes also claims that Taylor libeled and slandered him and intentionally inflicted emotional distress.

■ A lawsuit was brought by the Concerned Citizens of Gun Barrel City, the Gun Barrel Business Coalition and 15 individuals against Taylor and his three city council member allies. It seeks Taylor's termination and a halt to alleged closed city meetings.

■ Smith filed a lawsuit saying he was wrongfully fired,

■ Interim chief Brian Ingram, who had replaced Smith, filed a wrongful dismissal lawsuit after Taylor replaced him with Ron Ballew, whom Taylor has describes as interim "commanding officer."

On Thursday, Simmons, DeFord and Brooke, wanting to wipe out a scheduled election on a new city charter, tried calling a special council meeting for Monday. An agenda notice was prepared without Agnes' signature, which is required by law.

On Friday morning, Henderson County Attorney Larry Heffigton and City Attorney Barney Knight successfully got the meeting canceled after complaints by two newspapers, the Athens Review and the Cedar Creek Pilot.

But later Friday, another notice was posted. The newspapers are again protesting.

Meanwhile, a petition is circulating asking the FBI to investigate alleged civil rights violations and possible attempts to interfere with the election process.

Taylor, who was hired as dog catcher and building inspector in 1993 and promoted by the council to city administrator last year, has refused to talk to The Associated Press.

Twaine Walters, who owns the local Dairy Queen, is frustrated by the events.

"Everybody's suing everybody else — it's a mess," he said.

Hospital operator agrees to pay state $1.5 million to settle lawsuit

FORT WORTH (AP) — An operator of psychiatric hospitals has agreed to pay the state $1.5 million in a settlement stemming from allegations regarding patient referrals and admission practices, state officials said.

Charter Medical Corp., which operates facilities in Grapevine and Plano, admitted no wrongdoing as part of the settlement reached last week with the Texas attorney general's office. The deal also includes an agreement by Charter to provide 2,800 days of free inpatient care to children, officials said.

The settlement stems from allegations that Charter illegally paid employees to make patient referrals, and "inappropriately" admitted children and adolescents and then billed the state for their treatment through Medicaid, said Assistant Attorney General Ward Tisdale.

The agreement marks the third time in as many years that Charter has been fined by the state in arguments over the standards it uses to admit patients.

Said Gary Holmes, a spokesman for the Macon, Ga.-based Charter: "We've cooperated fully with the attorney general's office, and in order to resolve all of the outstanding issues between us, we reached a settlement with the state."

The agreement marks the third time in as many years that Charter has been fined by the state in arguments over the standards it uses to admit patients.

Among a dozen facilities named in the most recent action by Texas Attorney General Dan Morales are a now-defunct Charter facility in Fort Worth and Charter Hospital in Grapevine. Charter also operates a hospital in Plano.

In 1993, the attorney general's office accused Charter of making questionable claims for reimbursement from the Texas Crime Victim's Compensation Fund. The company, while admitting no wrongdoing, agreed to pay the state $550,000 for the costs of its investigation and to establish a compliance-review program.

Charter also agreed to withdraw $1.1 million in pending claims against the victim compensation fund and to refrain from unethical recruiting practices, which the state had said included placing counselors in public schools to make referrals.

Residents expect absence of 3rd Cavalry troops to hurt El Paso

By Eduardo Montes
Associated Press

EL PASO — The prospect of seeing thousands of soldiers marching permanently out of Fort Bliss in the coming months is understandably unsettling for David Collins.

Since Collins does business in the shadow of the Army post, the troops are special, major contributors to the success of his auto accessory shop, and their absence during deployments is always felt economically.

This is the first time in years, however, that large numbers are preparing to leave for good.

The 4,500-member 3rd Armored Cavalry Regiment, one of the post's largest units, has been reassigned to Fort Carson, Colo. The move is already under way.

"When I hear that I'm very concerned," said Collins, president of Automotive Design. "It does affect us very big. There's no doubt I'm set up primarily to serve the military."

It's a familiar story all along Dyer Street, one of El Paso's main drags and, because of its proximity to Fort Bliss, a micro-economy that is easily among the most visible beneficiaries of the Army's local presence.

Dozens of merchants on the strip — an eclectic mix of auto shops, restaurants, stores, motels and bars of dubious reputation — survive and thrive because of military customers.

At almost any given hour, camouflage-clad soldiers can be seen wandering into shops like Collins', eating at La Mexicana restaurant, or taking their laundry to The Desert Cleaners, where the racks are filled nearly to overflowing with freshly pressed fatigues and dress uniforms.

But the close ties with the military has a down side. During Operation Desert Storm, Dyer businesses were hurting when more than 11,000 Fort Bliss personnel were deployed to the Middle East.

"Business went down," said Tina Camarillo, an employee at La Mexicana.

They may stand to suffer again when the 3rd Cav finally ends its 23-year stint at Fort Bliss.

Dyer Street's typically small businesses are expected to experience disproportionate losses as a large segment of their customer base makes its way to Colorado in moves that are scheduled to continue into next spring.

Dipping revenues, shut downs and layoffs could all potentially be in the offing.

"Some of them may be seriously harmed," said Jim Holcomb, an economics professor at the University of Texas at El Paso who has studied the local economy.

As a whole, the city is expected to weather the 3rd Cav's departure well because the regiment will eventually be replaced by other units.

"Once it balances out, it's our understanding that there's just going to be a small net loss," said Javier Gadney, economic program analyst with the city of El Paso. "But it shouldn't affect us that much."

Internal Revenue Service audits city's investment practices

HOUSTON (AP) — The Internal Revenue Service is auditing the city's investment practices to determined whether money has been improperly retained after being earned through arbitrage.

Under federal law, all money earned through arbitrage must be paid to the federal government. Arbitrage is the practice of borrowing money at a low interest rate and investing it to achieve a higher return.

The law is intended to prevent cities and other issuers of tax-exempt bonds from exploiting that status for profit.

The IRS notified Houston Mayor Bob Lanier of the audit by letter in October. The letter requested records and information on bond issuances, unspent proceeds and arbitrage payments dating to 1990, and said the IRS had no record of arbitrage payments for the 1992-93 year.

If the IRS determines there was a violation of federal law, it could demand back payments from the city. It also could force holders of Houston municipal bonds to make the payments in the form of taxes on income earned through their investments, possibly eroding investor confidence in the city's bonds.

City officials insist they have abided by the law and characterized the IRS action as a "fishing expedition."

"I don't regard this as particularly threatening," Lanier said. "We have filed the proper returns and have been on the conservative side in terms of our compliance."

Lanier added that the audit is not unexpected given the volume of Houston bond issuances.

Local IRS spokesman Henry Holmes said federal law prohibited him from discussing the audit or even confirming that it exists.

The IRS is conducting about 300 audits nationwide relating to arbitrage payments.

Dallas Blockbuster Video store is tribute to success of nationwide chain

MIAMI (AP) — The Blockbuster Video store in a Dallas strip mall is starting to show signs of its age. The shelves are dirty and the carpet is soiled.

But Blockbuster Entertainment Corp. would be hard-pressed to find a better testament to its growth into the nation's biggest video retail chain than that relatively dreary store. The now 10-year-old outlet was the first of 4,300 video stores H. Wayne Huizenga opened as he built Blockbuster into one of the country's most sought-after media empires.

The Fort Lauderdale-based company boomed during the past decade, but with the video industry changing and Blockbuster itself undergoing a metamorphosis after its sale last year to Viacom Inc., it will be hard-pressed to continue its spectacular growth rate over the next 10 years.

The video rental market is fast becoming saturated and facing the possibility that pay-per-view movies and other forms of video-on-demand will one day replace a trip to Blockbuster.

Spending on video rentals, which increased $5 billion over 10 years to $8.1 billion this year, was only projected to increase another $1.3 billion in the next five years, according to the Video Software Dealers Association.

Like many other companies facing slower growth, Blockbuster is looking overseas to expand. It hopes to nearly triple its 1,400 international video stores by the year 2000.

"That's the real point of growth," said John Tinker, a Viacom analyst for Furman Selz & Co. in New York. "There are more video machines in the international market but the rentals are lower. It's far less saturated and there aren't any chains. It's the natural place to go."

The company has found ways to branch out through the merger with Viacom. The deal has given Blockbuster a new range of merchandise including electronic games and products tied to Viacom's MTV and Nickelodeon networks.

Blockbuster is also learning to grow without Huizenga. Rather than be No. 2 behind Viacom chief Sumner M. Redstone, Huizenga stepped down from Blockbuster to concentrate on his own company, Huizenga Holdings, and his three South Florida professional sports teams: the Miami Heat, the Florida Marlins and the Florida Panthers. He remains a Viacom vice chairman.

A Ho-Ho Whole Lotta Texas Goin' On!

Texans are among first to deal with farm bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — This holiday season is the worst kind for farmers, especially in the Deep South and Texas. They're making plans for next year's crops without knowing exactly what kind of farm program they'll get for Christmas.

Farm bill debates have lingered before in Congress, with bills not signed by the president until Christmas Eve. But this year the job is tougher because the major crop programs are locked up in a bigger dispute over how to end the federal deficit in seven years.

In addition, major crop programs face broader changes than before, making it harder to plan based on the past.

Farmers, meanwhile, must borrow money and rent land, not knowing for sure what their crops and land will be worth. This is especially true for such Southern crops as peanuts and rice that depend more on government programs. Field work also begins earlier in the South.

"It's the latest it's been in my lifetime," said Agriculture Secretary Dan Glickman, a former congressman who helped write the last four farm bills.

The delay affects all kinds of decisions. Texas cotton farmers start applying Treflan, a weed killer, this time of year. But if the farm program makes grain sorghum a more attractive crop, tough luck. The killer of cotton weeds poisons sorghum as well.

"It would be a lot nicer to know exactly what the farm bill is going to be so we can put the right chemicals on the right land and the right amount of land," said Bill Kubecka, who raises cotton, feed grains and rice on 4,500 acres near Palacios, Texas.

For Kubecka and others, some planning decisions were obvious. The market and common sense told them that corn and sorghum will bring high prices, so he's naturally planting more of those crops. Also, this year's acute shortages mean there's no way the Agriculture Department will force growers to keep any of that crop land idle.

"We're just doing it oblivious to what the farm program is," he said.

But for rice it's a different matter. "We cannot go out into the marketplace and contract our production for next year," he said. "To go into a season putting $500 an acre into the ground and not knowing what you're going to get for it is very risky."

In Georgia, peanut growers are trying to plan their crops without knowing absolutely how much their government support will be reduced.

Self-proclaimed capitals bring big money to state

By Ken Ellsworth
Abilene Reporter-News

ABILENE — The capitalistic impulse is alive and well in this portion of West Texas, and so is civic pride.

Call your community the capital of something or other and it could lead to cold, hard cash for zero investment — and an improved self-image.

Municipal and county entities in this area are learning quickly your good name, after all, does have value.

Take Coleman County, the self-proclaimed Hunting Capital of Texas, where literal big bucks attract green big bucks.

Years ago the county's populace dubbed themselves the Hunting Capital of Texas. The claim has not been disputed, though Coleman's Chamber of Commerce offers no hard statistics comparing itself to other Texas counties that promote hunting.

But, there is no question that Coleman County attracts a lot of hunters.

"There are so many hunters it is unreal," said Chamber of Commerce Executive Director Mary Griffis on the eve of deer hunting season. More than 600 hunters, she said, had already inquired at the chamber office about hunting leases in the county.

The estimated annual income related to hunting in Coleman County is $2.7 million, according to the county's extension office, and those are big bucks. In fact, income related to hunting amounts to more than $270 per each man, woman and child living in Coleman County.

The county is also home to several lakes and calls itself the "Land of the Lakes," even more so with the recent development of Lake O.H. Ivie.

But the county wants more. After all, why be restrictive when mere names are free for the taking?

Witness a recent chamber promotion. "We hope you enjoyed your stay in the 'Hunting and Fishing Capital of Texas,'" it says.

Who but the fish would argue?

There are at least two world capitals in this area of Texas that is also known as Texas Midwest. One of them is Knox County — The Seedless Watermelon Capital of the World.

Knox County's place in the world is truly unique. The county's melons go all over the United States, but their seedless seeds go all over the world. The seeds were developed by Dr. O.J. Eigsti, and come only from Knox County.

Israel is the county's best customer, and last year chamber manager Doris Crownover traveled there.

"I was eating breakfast and they were serving seedless melons," she said. "I was very proud to be able to tell them where those melons came from."

The Israelis must haved been duly impressed. After all, they were enjoying the fruits of the labor of a genuine international capital.

Baird, in the midst of a downtown economic revival, laid legal claim in 1993 to being "The Antique Capital of West Texas." The claim is legal because the Texas Legislature in its 1993 session passed a proclamation saying so. Now, no other Texas communities can claim that exact name.

The legislative proclamation is an easy thing to do for your community. Your state representative can probably get "capital" into the official legislative record in the blink of an eye, providing no other community has already laid claim to the exact same idea.

Actually, official community titles do not appear to be of more promotional benefit than unofficial ones, but for Baird there was a positive motive for going to the legislature.

"We (Baird) did it for the additional publicity," said Nicki Harle, executive director of Texas Midwest Community Network, who was correct in surmising that local media would announce the legislative proclamation.

The oldest known area claim to being a capital is Snyder's. At the turn of the century Snyder newspapers promoted the town as the "Capital of Scurry County." That handle passed away long ago. Snyder is now the county seat and the home of the White Buffalo Festival, but it does not claim to be a capital.

The oldest continuous claim in this area to being a capital is probably Throckmorton's. In the 1930s Lee Atkinson, then president of the Chamber of Commerce promoted the moniker "Capital of the Cow Country" and the name stuck, said former County Judge Byrd Thorp, 98.

Today the name appears on local Throckmorton bank checks and chamber literature. Chamber T-shirts also proclaim "Capital of the Cow Country" and show a cow sporting cowboy boots.

A local motel is named the Cow Country Motel, but is not certain how well that name promotes room occupancy.

Gorman has been known as the Peanut Marketing Capital of the Southwest since the end of World War II, said Ross Wilson, general manager of Southwestern Peanut Growers Association.

Gorman has been known as the Peanut Marketing Capital of the Southwest since the end of World War II, said Ross Wilson, general manager of Southwestern Peanut Growers Association.

The title is well-earned. A three-county area around Gorman produces $35 million worth of goobers annually, and peanuts from all over the southwest find their way to Gorman.

That's not peanuts, or chicken feed either.

Coleman County might be the Hunting Capital of Texas, but Fisher County would prefer that you come there and shoot at their coveys since Fisher County is the Quail Hunting Capital of Texas.

County extension agent Richard Spencer said quail hunters flock from all over the country, but especially from the southern states, bringing dogs, guns and money to the area.

A quail-hunting cooperative was formed in the late 1980s and the county adopted the quail hunting capital title informally, he said.

The quail capital title is well deserved, Spencer added, since Fisher County usually ranks second in the state in quail population, according to Texas Department of Parks and Wildlife statistics.

The county's melons go all over the United States, but their seedless seeds go all over the world.

McGriff re-signed

ATLANTA — Fred McGriff returned to the Atlanta Braves on Saturday night, agreeing to a four-year contract.

Keeping McGriff with the Braves for their World Series title defense had been had been the No. 1 priority of general manager John Schuerholz after center fielder Marquis Grissom re-signed with Atlanta last month.

In an effort to keep its championship roster together, the Braves increased their $46.4 million payroll, giving Schuerholz room to barter for McGriff.

"It took a long time, but it wasn't difficult," Schuerholz said, who declined to divulge the terms of the deal.

"I think it was a product of this new environment that is a reflection of the altered economic state of the industry. There's a realization that there's not as much money available in the the industry as a result of the strike. We didn't sell as many tickets, we didn't make as much money. We don't have quite as much money to play with in our operating budget as we id before the strike hit."

The power of McGriff's bat has given the Braves' offense a welcome boost.

The 32-year-old left-hander and three-time All Star hit .280 last season with 27 home runs and 93 RBIs. Possibly because of the strike-shortened season, he ended his string of seven consecutive seasons hitting 30 or more homers.

He has a .285 batting average with 289 homers and 803 RBIs.

McGriff, who earned $4.25 million last season, filed for free agency in November after his five-year, $19 million contract expired.

The New York Yankees had also expressed interest in the free agent first baseman.

REBS GET VIKING FUNERAL

■ Rebels get blitzed by 14-point third quarter and lose Region I semifinal to Arlington Lamar 26-8 at Texas Stadium.

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

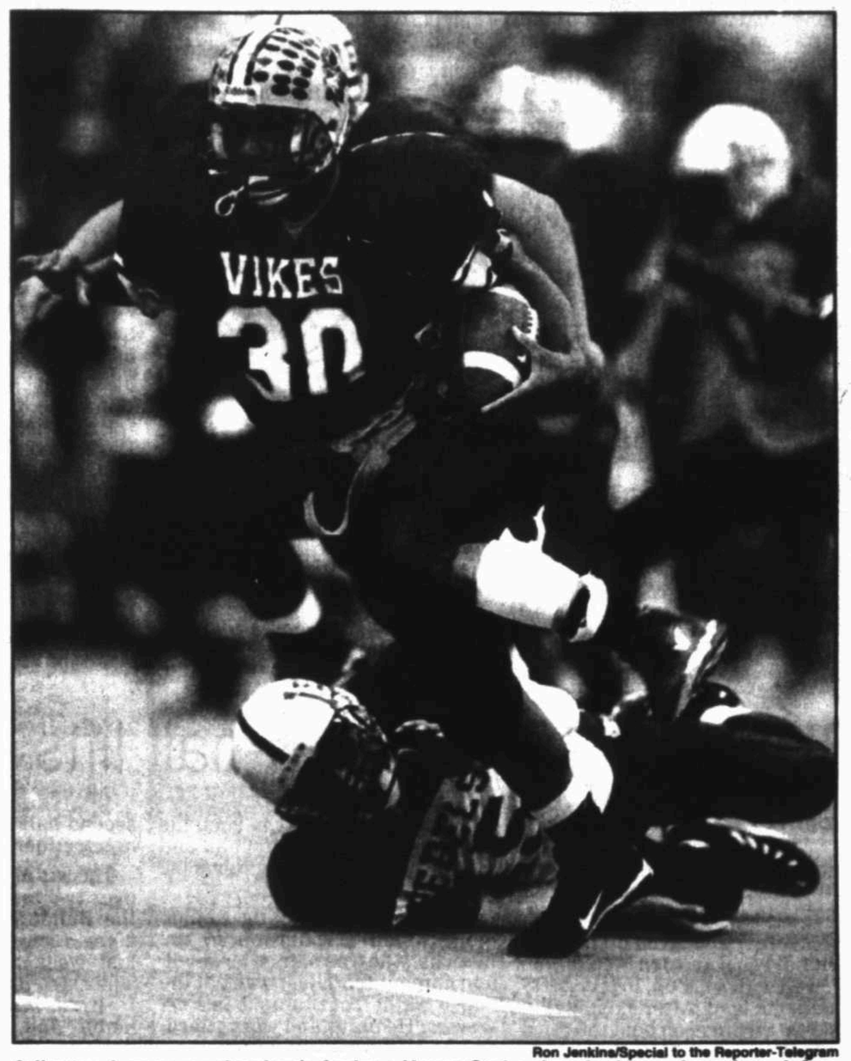

IRVING — Maybe it was that old Texas Stadium jinx, or maybe it was just those shocking jersies the Midland Lee Rebels showed up in at the home of the Dallas Cowboys Saturday afternoon.

At any rate, the Rebels won't have to travel back to this Irving palace anytime soon after dropping a 26-8 Class 5A region football loss to the Arlington Lamar Vikings in a game where Lee followed its game plan to perfection and still got kicked in the scoreboard.

With defensive injuries to linebacker B.J. Honeyman and cornerback Antwan Alexander, the Rebels had a patchwork crew on the field. So, the simple game plan was to keep the football away from people in Navy Blue uniforms all day.

And it looked like the ploy might work for a time. Lamar ran only three offen-

Horned Frogs win meet

College Station wasn't the only place a Texas university beat the Aggies Saturday.

Texas Christian topped New Mexico State in the first-ever college swimming and diving meet at Midland's Abell-Hanger pool. The result: another group impressed with the Abell-Hanger facilities and willing to make return visits.

And for Midland High graduate and senior Horned Frog Matt Houston, the meet was also a chance to show his teammates that West Texas isn't just pump jacks and mesquite trees.

"A lot of my teammates that are not from West Texas get the stereotype of Midland being in the middle of nowhere and a hole in the ground," said Houston, who won the men's 100-yard butterfly with a 50 and 73 one hundredths seconds swim. "They didn't think there would be this nice of a facility here and that swimming would be that big here. Now

Midland High comes back to beat Hanks

By Stewart Doreen

Just a hint to District 4-5A schools. If you have the Midland High boys basketball team down early, don't relax.

El Paso Hanks found that lesson out the hard way as Midland High battled back from a 11-point first quarter deficit to storm past Hanks and come away with a 76-63 win Saturday at Chap Center.

"We started off playing sluggish," said MHS senior guard James Whitfield. "Then we got it going and started pushing. Once we picked it up, it was hard for them to stay with us."

Midland High, 5-2 for the season, got the wake up call and outscored Hanks 61-37 the rest of the way. Defensive pressure and a good inside-outside game on the offensive side of the ball provided the momentum for the Bulldogs' comeback.

That was no more apparent than during a 22-4 run by the Bulldogs in the second half. During that span the Bulldogs' system started to click. It started inno-

'Boys' Bates ready for Washington

IRVING — Even in a normal year Bill Bates hates the Washington Redskins. This time, he's really mad at them.

The Redskins ambushed the Dallas Cowboys 27-23 in the fifth game of the season. Bates and the rest of his teammates feel they owe something to Norv Turner's club on Sunday at Texas Stadium.

"It's the team I love to beat the most," said the Cowboys safety-linebacker-special teams star. "We've had some classic games and confrontations with them in the past. I've had a lot of great memories in this rivalry."

But not such a good one back in early October.

■ Longhorns takes advantage of six Aggie turnovers as No. 9 Texas snaps A&M home winning streak with 16-6 win.

COLLEGE STATION — Texas can claim the 81st and last Southwest Conference football championship. It was a freshman running back from California who helped the Longhorns earn it.

Ricky Williams scored two touchdowns against the nation's top defense Saturday and the No. 9 Longhorns snapped No. 16 Texas A&M's 31-game home winning streak with a 16-6 victory.

"This was just my first year but it was a good feeling to end that streak," Williams said. "Coach (John) Mackovic realized who had the hot hand and kept me in there."

The Longhorns (10-1-1 overall, 7-0 SWC) will play in either the Orange or Sugar bowls while the Aggies (8-3, 5-2) get the consolation prize of meeting Michigan on Dec. 29 in the Alamo Bowl at San Antonio. The final bowl lineups will be announced Sunday.

Texas snapped a four-game losing streak to the Aggies and gave Mackovic his first win in the series after three losses. It was the first Texas triumph at Kyle Field since 1983. A&M had won 10 of the last 11 games.

"This is the finest hour in Texas football in a long time," Mackovic said.

It was the first 10-win season for Texas since 1990 when David McWilliams was the coach.

"Ricky really did it for us but he has been doing it all season," Mackovic said. "We wanted him in there because he is a bigger back and he can

Houston tops Rice on late TD

By Jaime Aron

HOUSTON — The once-glorious Southwest Conference closed its 81-year history in exciting fashion Saturday.

Houston scored 15 fourth-quarter points, then saw Rice miss a 38-yard field goal with 12 seconds left to give the Cougars an 18-17 victory.

In a game overshadowed by No. 9 Texas' 16-6 victory over No. 16 Texas A&M — jokingly referred to as the last SWC game that mattered — the Owls and Cougars played the league's true finale.

Rice officials intentionally scheduled kickoff 90 minutes after the start of Texas-Texas A&M to make sure it was the league's final game.

Only 28,400 people bothered coming to the 70,000-seat Rice Stadium for the finale and they were treated to plenty of hoopla.

Midland Christian wins fifth state crown

By Amy Wolfenbarger

WESTBROOK — Midland Christian gave coach James Blake his fourth-straight state title — and the schools' fifth straight — Saturday night and it couldn't have happened to a nicer guy.

Blake, who coached his last game at the helm of the Mustangs, saw junior Jerod Womack intercept a pass from Abilene Christian's John Estes IV and return it nine yards for a touchdown then watched as Josh Miller tacked on a two-point kick to give the Mustangs a 64-18 Texas Association of Private and Parochial Schools Six-Man win over the Panthers.

The win put the Mustangs over the top as far as national private schools go, winning their fifth-straight title. According to Blake, there were three other teams besides Midland Christian who had four state titles. The Mustangs are now in a class by themselves.

"It's family, it's teamwork and it's wonderful," said Blake. "This is some-

Love, Daniel lead JC Penny Classic

The Associated Press

TARPON SPRINGS, Fla. — Davis Love III and Beth Daniel combined for a 63 on Saturday and moved into a share of the lead with the team of Jay Delsing and Val Skinner after three rounds of the $1.3 million JC Penny Mixed Team Classic.

Love and Daniel were at 194, 19 under par for three rounds of competition over the par-71 Copperhead Course at the Innisbrook Resort. The women's course measures 6,330 yards and the men's is 7,054.

"We had a good day and hit the ball about the best we have all week," Love said. "I made a few birdies on the front, then Beth got going on the back. It was a good round that could have been better if we'd had any luck on the greens."

"We had an interesting day," Delsing said. "Both of us played well, but it was a day that came down to making putts."

Skinner made four for birdies while Delsing added two.

"We're looking forward to tomorrow," Skinner said. "There's obviously a lot of good team out there, but we're playing good and we'll just try to keep it going."

■ Golf Roundup

Love and Daniel supplied four birdies each to the score.

Delsing and Skinner combined for a 65 on Saturday under the best-ball format for a share of the lead and one-stroke advantage over four teams.

Michael Bradley and Katie Peterson-Parker shot 64 on Saturday to get to 195 for three rounds. The teams of Robert Gamez and Helen Alfredsson and Gene Sauers and Hollis Stacy each shot 65s and Mark McCumber and Laura Davies had a 67.

Billy Andrade and Kris Tschetter shot 65 and were at 17-under, two back of the lead.

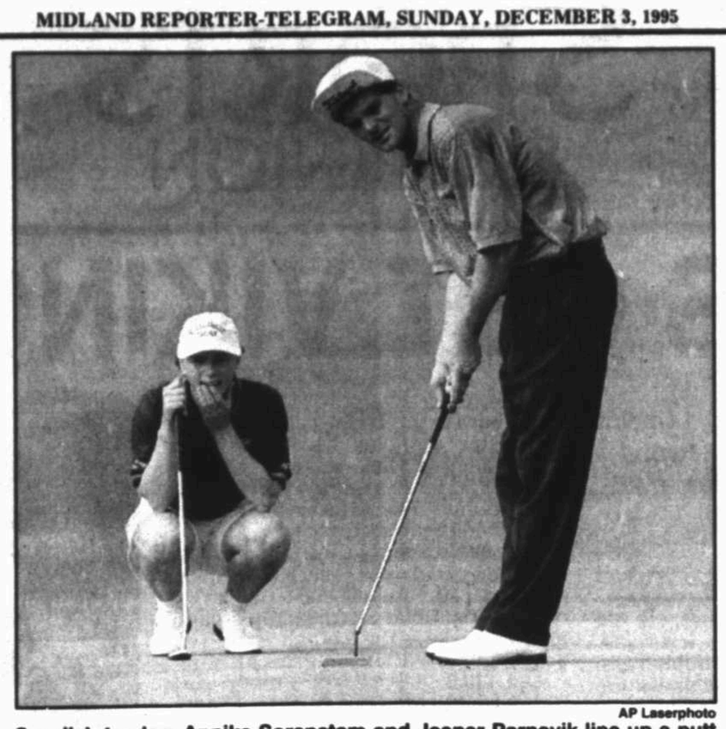

Among the teams at 16-under were Jay Haas and Cathy Gerring, who combined for a 63.

Gerring, severely burned in an accident in a hospitality tent in April 1992, is playing in her first tournament since the accident.

SUN CITY, South Africa — Zimbabwe's Nick Price lost his cool and a three-stroke lead, allowing Corey Pavin to tie for the lead in the Million Dollar Golf Challenge.

birdies at the third, seventh and 13th holes, fired a 69, also for 210.

Price led U.S. Open winner Pavin and Germany's Bernhard Langer by two strokes on the par-36 front nine but faltered badly in the sand, rough and trees from the 15th hole onwards.

"I was so mad," Price said. "I was so cross with myself. I made a couple of mental errors. I'm tied for the lead, and I hope the worst is over."

"I felt like I had a lot of control over my game today," Pavin said. "I was very determined to play this round a lot smarter than I did yesterday."

Langer and Scotland's Sam Torrance were tied for third at 212 and local hero Ernie Els was next at 213. Torrance fired a 2-under 70, Langer a 71.

"It's a fabulous course," Torrance said. "There's no respite. You have to hit the fairway every

Permian ties Arlington, goes on to semifinals

ARLINGTON — The Odessa Permian Panthers advanced to the state semifinals of the Class 5A Big School football playoffs.

The Panthers tied Arlington High 21-21 Saturday at Maverick Stadium, but their advantage (6-3) in penetrations gave Mojo a return trip to the Metroplex for the semifinal game with Klein High School.

Permian will take on Klein (12-1) Saturday at 3:30 p.m. in the Big-School semifinals.

Permian, 12-1-1 for the season, got 154 yards and two touchdowns from Ja'Quay Wilburn. Wilburn went in from 32 and 4 yards out for Permian's second and third scores of the day.

A 15-yard pass from Jason Prann to Jeremy Marin put Permian on the board and tied the game at 7-7.

Permian led twice during the game, but both times Arlington came back to tie the game. The last time occurring on Chet Soto's second touchdown of the day. Soto had one TD running and one on a pass from Michael Phillips.

BULLDOGS: Second-half lifts MHS

cently enough with minutes to go in the third quarter and Hanks clinging to 47-43 lead.

MHS' Terry Johnson hit a three-point field goal and Jon Stephenson followed with a lay up, to give MHS a one-point lead. After exchanging baskets, Stephenson beat the third quarter buzzer with a three of his own from the deep corner, giving the Bulldogs a four-point lead.

Then, MHS used talents of Whitfield, who scored the 9 of the team's first 13 points of the quarter. Whitfield drove for lay ups, hit key free throws, and knocked down a three from outside the arch. When it was all over the Bulldogs had a 65-51 lead and set the pace of the game ideal for a Jack Stephenson team.

"Once we got things going good, our teams screws it down and plays," said MHS' head coach. "We have a enough senior leadership, weapons and depth."

Another key cog throughout the game was sophomore Kirby Lemons. Lemons, who had 30 Friday night against El Paso Riverside, had a game-high 26 points, including key buckets to keep the Bulldogs close in the first half and to help the during the big run in the game's latter half.

"He's an outstanding sophomore," said Stephenson of the Lemons, who was named to the all-tournament team last week at the Super Eight Tournament in Fort Worth. "He plays and works hard, and he's only 15. I'm glad he's on my side."

The Bulldogs, who didn't shoot a free throw until the fourth quarter held off Hanks, who got as close as six (69-63) with less than a minute in the game, but MHS scored the last seven points of the game on free throws to seal the win.

The game was also a solid offensive performance for the Bulldogs, who shot 29 of 51 (57 percent) from the field. In addition to Lemons' 26 and Whitfield's 15, Josh Lane had 16 for MHS.

However, defensively is where the Bulldogs probably frustrated Hanks the most. After the first quarter when Hanks made 11 of 17 shots, the Bulldogs made it tougher, allowing only 16 of the next 42 shots (38 percent) to find the bottom of the basket. Hanks' 12 second-half turnovers didn't help much either.

The win also gives MHS a sweep over two tough El Paso teams in the Bulldogs' season openers at home. Especially after a tough trip last weekend, the return home was extra nice.

"It was important for us to come home and win our first two games," said Whitfield. "A lot of people lost faith in us after Fort Worth. There, we had a chance to play good teams that ran and made us realize we had to do to win." Midland High will play El Paso Eastwood Thursday at 6:00 p.m. at the Oil Man's Classic at Chap Center.

REBELS: Big plays by Lamar the key

sive plays in the first quarter to Lee's 22. The Rebels also held the ball 23 plays to Lamar's four in the third quarter. But what's wrong with this scenario? The Vikings led 17-0.

With all those offensive plays, Lee didn't have points to show for it. Not even a penetration. Lamar, even with its offense on the field in less time than it takes for a wet shower, had 17 points on just three huge plays. You might call it an efficient effort.

"I thought we did a good job of just what we intended to do in the game," said Lee coach John Parchman. "We had a patchwork defense on the field and we knew we would have to keep the ball on offense to give our kids a chance to win. We did that, but we just didn't match up with all the speed they had."

Lamar cracked the scoring in the second period on a 20-yard field goal by Matt McNew, who kicked a 48-yard field goal last week to beat Lewisville, 20-18. The kick was set up by a 42-yard run by Andrew Hayes-Stoker. That was Big Play No. 1.

"It looked like we would never get the ball," said Lamar coach Eddy Peach. "Then our defense got excited after making a couple of plays and we got the field goal. I'm so proud of our defense because it was out there all day, but didn't really give up much."

It was the third quarter where things fell apart for Lee. It took Lamar just two plays to spin the score to 10-0 as quarterback Joe Walker busted a simple bootleg wide and found an empty sideline for a 67-yard waltz to the end zone.

"Lee did a good job of keeping the football," Walker said, "But we weren't frustrated. We believe in our defense and they played a super game. We did it with big plays. We don't plan big plays, but you look for execution and if you get the big play, you take it."

But the big plays were just starting. After another and endless series of 12 plays by Lee, Lamar used two plays as Barry Jackson broke loose for 81 yards and a 17-0 lead. Lee then got backed up and a bad fourth down snap caused Lee punter Clay Boyd to kick his kick out of the end zone for a safety.

Lee came back with a blocked Lamar punt by Shae Jones, his second in as many weeks, to set up shop at the Viking 30. Lee finally punched it in with fullback Stephen Hunter getting the final yard and quarterback John Thurman then hit John Norman for a two-point conversion. It was 19-8 at the time, and that was Lee's last hurrah as Lamar's Jackson again went 56 yards four plays later. Game, set, match. "It's a lot of fun to get the big play," Jackson said. "I don't think I had anything if you don't count those two runs. Their defense is really pretty good."

Peach added, "Lee has so many great athletes that they can make you look bad, but if you can ever break their line of scrimmage, you have a shot at the big play. We knew that and wanted our kids to have patience. We told them something good was going to happen. It finally did."

Lee falls from the playoffs with a 10-1-1 record while Lamar climbs to 12-0-1. No. 9 ranked Lamar will face No. 4 Flower Mound Marcus, a 41-7 winner over Abilene Cooper, back in Texas Stadium this week. The Lee loss has some historic note. It is the first loss at Lee for Parchman, who is in his first year as head coach, replacing Earl Miller.

Lee senior running back Alex Strambler took the loss hard. He was sobbing after the game in which he ended his Rebel career with 118 yards rushing. He will also carry a bit of Lee history with him as he was the first tailback in Lee's new I-formation. He now passes that baton and it was a hard moment of truth for him and other seniors on the team, who shared tears in a quiet Lee post-game locker room.

American and the world's No. 1-ranked player Pete Sampras returns a volley from Russia's Yevgeny Kafelnikov in their Davis Cup doubles match in Moscow Saturday. Sampras teamed with Todd Davis to defeat Kafelnikov and Andrei Olhovskiy 7-5, 6-4, 6-3 to give the U.S. a 2-1 lead with the deciding singles matches today.

Super Sampras gives U.S. 2-1 lead in Davis Cup finals

By Christopher Clarey
N.Y. Times News Service

MOSCOW — The supporter walked up to Richey Reneberg after the Davis Cup doubles match Reneberg had been asked to sit out and said, "Sorry, Richey."

Reneberg laughed.

"Sorry? Sorry about what? I'm thrilled."

The American team member providing the thrills was once again Pete Sampras, who teamed with Todd Martin to defeat the very fine Russian doubles team of Yevgeny Kafelnikov and Andrei Olhovskiy, 7-5, 6-4, 6-3.

The victory gave the United States a 2-1 lead in this Davis Cup final heading into Sunday's decisive reverse singles matches. In the first, Sampras is scheduled to meet Kafelnikov; in the second, Jim Courier will face Andrei Chesnokov. The Americans need only one more victory to win the cup for the 31st time and the first time since 1992.

Anyone who questions whether that really matters did not watch Sampras Saturday. The most remarkable thing was not that he and Martin won so decisively but that Sampras played at all.

"To come back from the dead and perform like that is pretty amazing," said the American captain, Tom Gullikson.

Sampras was hardly close to death, but on Friday he collapsed on the court with severe cramps immediately after hitting the winning shot against Andrei Chesnokov. Sampras was quickly hustled off court by the team's medical staff for treatment and eliminated from Gullikson's thinking for the doubles.

The way Gullikson saw it, Reneberg, a fine doubles player and late replacement for the injured Andre Agassi, would team with Martin while Sampras and Courier rested and prepared for Sunday's singles matches.

But for all his apparent nonchalance and middle-aged aches and pains, Sampras has proven in the last two years that he has uncommon reserves of strength and uncommon combativeness.

Against Jaime Yzaga in the fourth round of the 1994 U.S. Open, he fought through fatigue and foot pain for five sets in a losing effort. In this year's Australian Open quarterfinals, he played through tears brought on by his coach Tim Gullikson's illness to beat Jim Courier.

"Obviously, I was pretty much spent physically yesterday," Sampras said after the victory. "But this is a Davis Cup final, and obviously come tomorrow, we really want to hold that cup up."

Wrong town named for torch run

By Kelly Kurt
Associated Press Writer

PRAGUE, Okla. — Townspeople were elated when they learned last summer of plans to honor Jim Thorpe by running the Olympic torch through his birthplace.

Now, some in Prague can only curse the Olympic committee that named the wrong town — a place the sports legend really only visited.

"You can pick up any encyclopedia and it always says, 'Jim Thorpe, Sac and Fox Indian, born near Prague,' " Corrine Long of the Prague Chamber of Commerce said.

Instead of the town of 3,000 or the nearby Sac and Fox Reservation, the 1996 Olympic torch honoring Thorpe will pass through Yale, some 40 miles to the north.

The Atlanta Committee for the Olympic Games said Yale was Thorpe's birthplace in an itinerary distributed in July. But spokesman David Emanuel said the committee knew all along Thorpe lived there only briefly.

"That (itinerary) was a simple error," he said.

That error has brought protest from residents in Prague, tribal leaders and a request from Gov. Frank Keating to change the 321-mile route through Oklahoma to include Prague.

Early last week, Emanuel said the committee would not make any changes. By Friday, he said committee members had planned a meeting with state leaders in the coming weeks to talk about the route.

"We want to listen to them and really find out what their desire is for the torch relay in the state," he said.

For certain, Yale proudly proclaims itself "Home of Jim Thorpe." The house he owned for five years while on the road playing professional football and baseball has been preserved as a historical landmark. Even a city park boasts his name.

Until a new marker bearing the words "Birthplace of Jim Thorpe" went up in Prague a few weeks ago, a sign stated the town's claim to fame as "Home of the Kolache Festival and National Czecho-Slovak USA Queen Stephanie Goodnight 1992-1993."

"We didn't know we needed to promote Jim Thorpe and have it in neon lights," said Sam Muzny, who grew up in the Czechoslovakian settlement located in rolling farmland between Oklahoma City and Tulsa.

A few miles south of town, Muzny points out a marker in a brush-choked fence row. Here, the Sac and Fox Indian called Wa-Tho-Huck, or "Bright Path," was born in 1887.

If a plaque noting Thorpe's accomplishments hadn't been swiped from the marker years ago, one could read: Winner of the decathlon and pentathlon in the 1912 Olympics in Stockholm. Played major league baseball 1913-1919 and professional football 1915-1929. First president of the National Football League. Voted world's greatest male athlete in the first half of the 20th century in a 1950 Associated Press poll.

Sweden's King Gustav V proclaimed Thorpe "the greatest athlete in the world," following his Olympic performance. A year later, in 1913, the Olympics stripped Thorpe of his medals after learning he once played minor league baseball.

The medals were returned to Thorpe's family in 1982, 30 years after his death. But some people in Prague are still fuming.

"It's like the Olympics has never gotten it right with him," Muzny said.

Emanuel says it would take an extra 10 hours for torch bearers to cross Oklahoma if Prague were added to the route. He also says the home in Yale is a fitting backdrop for a ceremony in Thorpe's honor and that people from Prague are being encouraged to participate.

Grace Thorpe, Thorpe's daughter, lives in Prague but was born in Yale. She says her father was on the road most of the time he owned the home in Yale.

The house was no more special to her father than the many other places he lived during his life, she said. He died in Los Angeles and his body is buried in the Pennsylvania town of Jim Thorpe, which changed its name in his honor.

Grace Thorpe says if the Olympic committee really wanted to honor him they would choose the Sac and Fox Nation, where he was educated about 13 miles north of Prague.

"Dad, of course, lived many places and when he passed on everyone claimed him as a native son," she said. "But if any place is special, it would be the tribe."

Prague or the Pennsylvania town where he is buried also might be more fitting than Yale, she says.

"If they're going through Yale to honor him, there are better places."

Norway's Kjus wins World Cup ski title

By John Mossman
AP Sports Writer

VAIL, Colo. — Negotiating an icy course with 39 gates and subtle changes in terrain was easy for Lasse Kjus compared to what loomed for him at the bottom of the course.

Kjus, denied victory so often during his seven-year World Cup skiing career, had posted the fastest time in a men's super-G Saturday, but he was far from convinced it would hold up.

So he waited ... and waited ... and waited — for about an hour until the last of 69 skiers came across, finally accepting congratulations for his first race victory.

"I feel sick," he said midway through his ordeal. "I can't stand this waiting. It's terrible to have to wait so long."

Kjus didn't have to wait so long. Skiing 21st, he could have felt secure after the last of the top 30 skiers had finished.

But his caution was understandable. His string of runner-up finishes had made Kjus wonder if he would ever win.

Kjus had finished second in four of the first six races this season, including Friday's downhill. During his career, he had been a runner-up a total of eight times.

He scored his breakthrough in the super-G on a relatively flat course that more closely resembled a downhill. Kjus was timed in 1 minute, 34.15 seconds — .29 seconds faster than Austrian Richard Kroell at 1:34.44.

"I attacked all the way," Kjus said.

Army slides by Navy with late scoring drive

By Dave Ivey
Associated Press Writer

PHILADELPHIA — John Conroy's 1-yard touchdown plunge with 1:03 left capped a 19-play, 99-yard drive and lifted Army to a 14-13 victory over Navy Saturday, its fourth straight win in the series.

It was the 96th meeting of the service teams and the fourth year in a row that the game was decided by 2 or fewer points.

Army (5-5-1) began the drive at its own 1 after Navy (5-6) elected to go for a touchdown on fourth and goal, leading 13-7. Chris McCoy's pass was off the mark in the end zone and the Cadets took over.

After Conroy, who carried 22 times for 74 of Army's 239 rushing yards, scored his second touchdown, making it 13-13, J. Parker made the extra point, giving Army the lead in front of 68,853 at Veterans Stadium.

A desperation pass by Ben Fay as time expired was intercepted by Donald Augustus. Navy failed to have its first winning season since 1982.

Navy scored on its second play from scrimmage on a 22-yard pass from Fay to LeBron Butts in the back of the end zone. The extra point by freshman Tom Vanderhorst was the first of his career.

The drive began at the 22 after Chad Holzapfel forced a fumble by Ronnie McAda that was recovered by Andy Person.

The Cadets tied the score 7-7 on a 1-yard run by Conroy on third and goal with 5:08 remaining in the first quarter. The 10-play, 52-yard drive was kept alive when McAda broke a tackle on third and 8 at the Navy 21 and threw a 15-yard throw to Abel Young. The ball bounced off Young and into the hands of John Graves.

Both teams missed excellent opportunities to score in the second quarter.

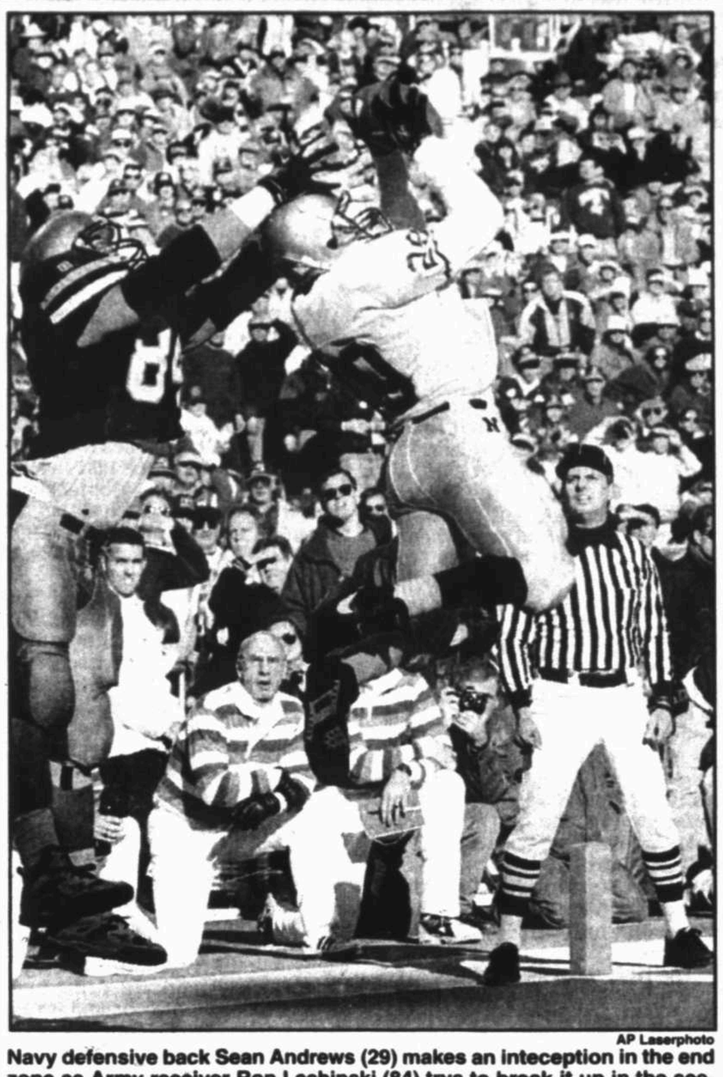

After the Cadets had gone 60 yards in 11 plays, Navy's Sean Andrews made a leaping interception of McAda's pass to Ron Leshinski in the corner of the end zone. It was Andrews' eighth interception this season — his third in the end zone.

Navy's Matt Scornavacchi dropped a 37-yard pass from Fay in the end zone as time expired.

Vanderhorst's first career field goal, a 39-yarder that made it 10-7 for Navy, capped a 16-play, 52-yard march to start the second half. Scornavacchi caught three passes on the drive for 33 yards.

Vanderhorst made it 13-7 in the fourth quarter with a 22-yard field goal. McCoy rushed for 59 yards on the 8-play, 79-yard march.

Fay completed 14 of 31 passes for 152 yards. McCoy was the leading rusher for the Midshipmen, with 78 yards on 12 carries.

Florida headed to Fiesta after SEC title game win

By Ken Berger
Associated Press Writer

ATLANTA — Arkansas had to play a perfect game to beat No. 2 Florida in the Southeastern Conference championship game. The No. 23 Razorbacks didn't even come close.

Arkansas entered Saturday's game with the best turnover ratio in the conference and fifth in the nation — plus-13. But the Razorbacks coughed the ball up four times and Florida (12-0) rolled to a 34-3 victory for its third straight SEC title.

"We didn't play perfect," Arkansas coach Danny Ford said. "But they forced us not to play perfect."

The key miscue came after Arkansas (8-4) drove to the Gators 3, when Ben Hanks picked off an errant pitch on fourth-and-1 and ran it back 95 yards for a touchdown for a 31-3 lead. It came just as the Razorbacks seemed determined to prove the know-it-alls wrong and make this one a close game.

"It was a big-time play," said defensive back Lawrence Wright, sporting a huge sombrero after the game to signify Florida's invitation to a Fiesta Bowl showdown with No. 1 Nebraska.

The romp down the sideline by Hanks seemed to rattle Arkansas, and awaken Florida.

"I'll always remember that play," Hanks said. "I broke on the ball, it went into my hands and I just kept running."

"If they score, it's a close game," Florida coach Steve Spurrier said. "But we got the big play right there, which got us the championship for sure."

Then, things really went bad for Arkansas. On the Razorbacks' next drive, Demetric Jackson intercepted a pass by Barry Lunney, leading to a Florida field goal and a 34-3 lead.

Hanks re-enacted the play of the game as he and Danny Wuerffel walked to the interview room.

"You got any Gatorade, Danny?" he shouted to the Gators quarterback.

Wuerffel turned and flicked a can of the thirst-quencher to Hanks, who made a shoe-string catch.

"Nice hands," Wuerffel said.

In the first quarter, an interception by Teako Brown led to a 1-yard touchdown run by Wuerffel. In the second, Anthone Lott knocked the ball loose with a jarring hit on Marius Johnson and immediately fell on it. That was the only Arkansas turnover the Gators didn't turn into points.

Arkansas' revival from last season's 4-7 record had a lot to do with protecting the ball. Last year, the Razorbacks had eight more turnovers than takeaways.

take some of those hits."

Both A&M and Texas join the Big 12 Conference next year and this was their last SWC meeting in a series that started in 1894.

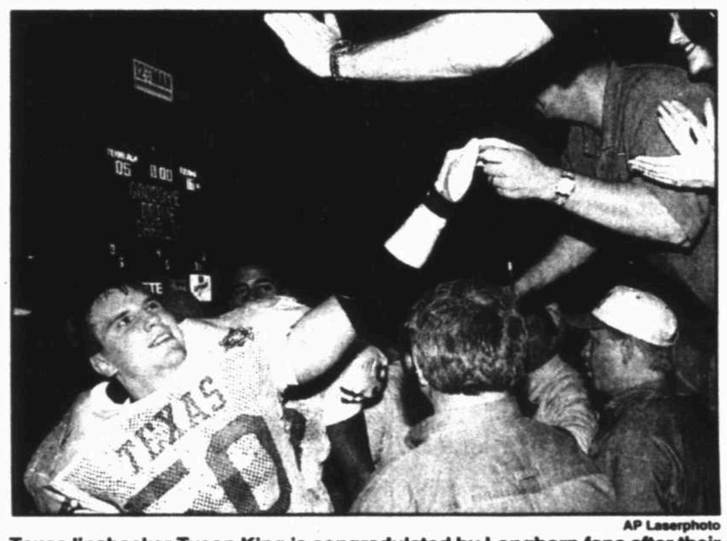

Williams, who broke Earl Campbell's school rushing record for freshmen, scored on a 21-yard run in the first half, then produced 62 of the 79 yards in a critical third-quarter scoring drive. He bolted 44 yards and then tore off a 17-yard run before Williams scored from 3 yards out.

In the fourth period, Williams got 23 yards on a screen pass to position Texas for Phil Dawson's 26-yard field goal.

The 6-foot, 225-pound Williams, one of California's top high school running backs two years ago in San Diego, rushed 24 times for 163 yards. He has 990 yards rushing to Campbell's 928 in 1974.

"I didn't know about Earl's record until about the fourth game of the season when I read a clip in the newspaper," Williams said. "That's great, too."

The Longhorns led 6-0 after a first half of lost fumbles, interceptions, penalties, and stirring defense.

Texas linebacker Tyson King is congradulated by Longhorn fans after their 16-6 win Saturday over Texas A&M at Kyle Field in College Station.

Texas finally cracked the Aggies defense, which had allowed only 244 yards per game, late in the second quarter, aided by a key pass interference penalty.

A 29-yard pass from James Brown to Justin McLemore got the 70-yard drive under way. Then cornerback Ray Mickens was flagged for interfering with receiver Mike Adams in the Aggies end zone.

The Longhorns then caught the Aggies in an all-out blitz as Williams escaped around right end behind the clearing block of Wane McGarity on a 21-yard touchdown run. Texas blew the extra point attempt when Jay Humphrey made a bad snap.

Texas lost out on two other long-range scoring attempts when Dawson was wide right on kicks of 48 and 58 yards.

Texas A&M's best first-half threat was spoiled when Leeland McElroy fumbled after being hit by Stonie Clark and Taje Allen recovered at the Texas 22.

McElroy gained 145 yards on 29 carries but couldn't find the end zone. He also caught four passes for 84 yards. A&M had two promising drives stall at the Texas 4 and 5 yards and had to settle for field goals of 20 and 22 yards by Kyle Bryant.

"We got close but we couldn't punch it in," McElroy said. "Turnovers and penalties killed us."

McElroy bruised a collarbone late in the game, but doctors said he is expected to play against Michigan.

The Texas defense produced six turnovers and was led by Tony Brackens, who caused two fumbles, and Cris Carter, who had two interceptions.

"Our offense just wasn't clicking and that was the difference in the game," said Texas A&M quarterback Corey Pullig.

Stephen F. Austin headed to Division I-AA semifinal round

The Associated Press

■ Texas Colleges

BOONE, N.C. — Stephen F. Austin made Appalachian State do two things out of the ordinary on Saturday. One was throw the football, and the other was lose a game.

On top of that, the Lumberjacks gave the previously unbeaten Mountaineers a dose of their own medicine with a potent ground game. Leonard Harris ran for two touchdowns in the fourth quarter Saturday, leading Stephen F. Austin to a 27-17 victory over the previously unbeaten Mountaineers in the NCAA Division I-AA playoffs.

The Lumberjacks (11-1) will travel to Montana for a semifinal meeting with the Grizzlies, who defeated Georgia Southern 45-0 in the quarterfinals.

It's the first time Stephen F. Austin has been to the semifinals since 1989, when it eventually lost to Georgia Southern in the championship game.

Stephen F. Austin's offensive line opened huge holes, helping Harris gain 180 yards on 25 carries. The Lumberjacks finished with 267 yards rushing and 436 overall.

"We can run the football. We've got a big offensive line and that's been a big plus for us also," Lumberjack coach John Pearce said. "But their defensive unit was so quick that we knew that we couldn't run outside. Almost everything we did was north and south because that was the only hope we had. We could not out-quick them on the perimeters."

In the meantime, the ground-oriented Appalachian State offense couldn't budge the Lumberjacks' defense, picking up just 72 yards on 34 carries. That's about a fourth of Appalachian State's average production.

Each team committed a turnover at the start of the third quarter, but it was the Mountaineers (12-1) who capitalized to take the lead.

Quarterback Scott Satterfield fumbled inside the Lumberjack 25 and defensive end Kevin Reynolds recovered. Six plays later, quarterback James Ritchey fumbled and Jason Hatcher fell on it for the Mountaineers at their 47.

Pittsburg State 28, Texas A&M-Kingsville 25, OT

KINGSVILLE — Quarterback Jeff Moreland scored on an 8-yard run in overtime Saturday, giving Pittsburg State a 28-25 win over Texas A&M-Kingsville in a NCAA Division II semifinal.

Pittsburg State (12-0) advanced to next Saturday's title game against North Alabama (13-0), which has won the last two championships.

Trailing 22-8, Kingsville (11-2) tied it in the fourth quarter on Norman Miller's 23-yard touchdown run and Larry Young's 5-yard TD run with 2:57 left in regulation.

The Javelinas got possession first in overtime, and scored on a 30-yard field goal by John Cortez. But, given a chance to tie or win under Division II overtime rules, Pittsburg State won it on Moreland's TD run.

HOUSTON: Coogs win SWC's finale

(From 1C)

featuring at least one notable representative from all current league teams except A&M and one from former member Arkansas.

And there was a unusual halftime show during which Rice's all-time team was honored before the school's band took over. They spelled out "SWC" then shuffled around to form "WAC" in honor of the school's new conference.

The show closed with eight people dressed as school mascots serving as pallbearers for the SWC, followed by a fat lady singing.

After the game ended, the scoreboard went blank. Then Dick Hudson of Katy, a fan drawn at random from about 1,800 entries, flipped a switch and the entire stadium went dark at 7:10 p.m.

Figuratively and literally, the lights were out on the Southwest Conference.

The darkness didn't last long, though, as flashbulbs began popping to capture the moment. An brief fireworks show set to music soon followed.

It turned out to be a decent show on the field, too, after three lackluster quarters.

Rice (2-8-1, 1-6) led 17-3 going into the fourth quarter behind two short touchdown runs by Jamey Whitlock.

Quarterback Chuck Clements began the Houston (2-9, 2-5) rally by hitting Damion Johnson on a 20-yard touchdown pass with 11:36 to play.

Then, with 1:19 left, Clements lobbed a pass down the right sideline that Larkay James ran under for a 43-yard touchdown.

Down two, Cougars went for two and Clements threw the ball to Johnson's right and he caught it to give Houston its only lead.

Quarterback Raphael Tillman, mostly a runner, completed three passes for 43 yards and the Cougars were penalized 15 yards for a personal foul, putting the Owls at the Houston 18.

Rice took a loss of three yards to stop the clock and prepare for a field goal by Mike Ruff, who had hit a 35-yarder in the first quarter.

But Ruff's kick went wide right and Houston began its celebrating a few seconds early.

It was a fitting finish for the SWC, which featured many games with similar, nailbiting endings.

There were plenty of reasons for the league's demise, from widespread cheating that led to nearly every school going on probation to increased competition from pro sports in Texas.

Kansas romps over UCLA

The Associated Press

LAWRENCE, Kan. — Jacque Vaughn and Billy Thomas triggered a second-half rally as No. 2 Kansas — trailing by 15 at the half — outscored UCLA by 30 after intermission and rolled past the Bruins 85-70 Saturday.

UCLA (2-3), the defending national champions who had never lost to Kansas in eight games, shocked and silenced the sellout crowd by seizing a 41-26 first-half lead over the cold-shooting Jayhawks behind Charles O'Bannon and Jelani McCoy.

But Kansas (3-0), winning its 23rd straight home opener, took charge at once in the second half and went ahead 55-54 with 10: 31 left on a layup by Vaughn that capped a 13-1 run. Vaughn, a junior point guard, had four points and two assists in the take-charge run and Thomas had five points.

The Jayhawks, who hit only four of eight free throws in the first half, drilled 14 straight down the stretch, handing UCLA its first loss to a Big Eight team since 1962, a span of 22 games. The rally also marked Kansas' 60th victory in its last 61 home games in November and December.

Kansas shot just 33 percent for the half but wound up shooting 47 percent for the game while thoroughly dominating the second half.

Kansas, unable to hit from either short or long-range and outrebounded in the first half, chopped 10 points off the lead with a 19-9 run. Thomas capped it with a long 3-pointer from the corner that left the Bruins ahead just 53-51 with 12: 51 left.

After O'Bannon answered with a UCLA basket and Jerod Haase, Kansas' leading scorer this season, sat down with his fourth foul, the Jayhawks triggered a deafening roar from the crowd with a 15-5 run that Scot Pollard capped with a short jumper to put Kansas on top 68-59 with 4: 36 to play.

The Bruins took control with a torrid first half in which they outrebounded the Jayhawks 27-16 and outscored them 41-26.

Raef LaFrentz, the 6-11 sophomore who averaged 13 points and nine rebounds in their first two games, did not score until he hit from the inside with 2: 10 left in the half when UCLA led 37-20. But LaFrentz worked inside in the second half and wound up with 12 points.

Vaughn led the Jayhawks with 22 points while freshman Paul Pierce had 14. O'Bannon had 22 for UCLA, which had never played in Lawrence before. McCoy had 14 and J.R. Henderson had 12.

#1 Kentucky 89, Indiana 82

INDIANAPOLIS — Kentucky is still No. 1, at least against Indiana.

Antoine Walker scored 24 points and Derek Anderson added 18 as the Wildcats, rebounding from a loss to Massachusetts, held off repeated Indiana surges and beat the Hoosiers 89-82 Saturday.

Kentucky (2-1) took leads of 14 points in the first half and 10 points in the second half. Indiana (2-3) closed within one point 10 times but couldn't take advantage of several oppportunities for the lead.

A basket by Walker and consecutive 3-pointers by Anderson pushed the lead to 71-64 midway through the second half, and Indiana never came closer than four points the rest of the game. The Wildcats scored 10 of their final 16 points from the free-throw line, including four by Anderson.

This time, though, the Wildcats presented Indiana with a non-stop, full-court press. And even when the Hoosiers broke the press, they couldn't make their early shots.

Indiana came within one point seven more times that half before a pair of free throws by Anthony Epps with four seconds to go gave Kentucky a 47-44 lead at the break.

Evans, who led Indiana with 28 points, did not score the first seven minutes of the second half. By that time, Kentucky already had built its lead back to 10 points before the second Hoosiers surge.

#22 Va. Tech 71, Wm. & Mary 66

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. — Damon Watlington scored 15 points and Virginia Tech repulsed a second-half rally to defeat William & Mary.

The Hokies (2-0) led 44-29 at the half after hitting 56 percent (19 of 34) from the field. With the Hokies leading 56-40 with 13: 07 left, William & Mary (1-3) went on a 13-1 run propelled by three 3-pointers by Bobby Fitzgibbons, cutting the margin to 57-53.

Keefe Matthews then sparked a 9-2 Hokies run with two field goals and two free throws for a 66-55 lead with 3: 44 left.

#20 Georgia Tech 89, Appalachian State 65

BOONE, N.C. — Matt Harpring scored 21 points as Bobby Cremins returned to his college coaching roots and led Georgia Tech to a whipping of Appalachian State.

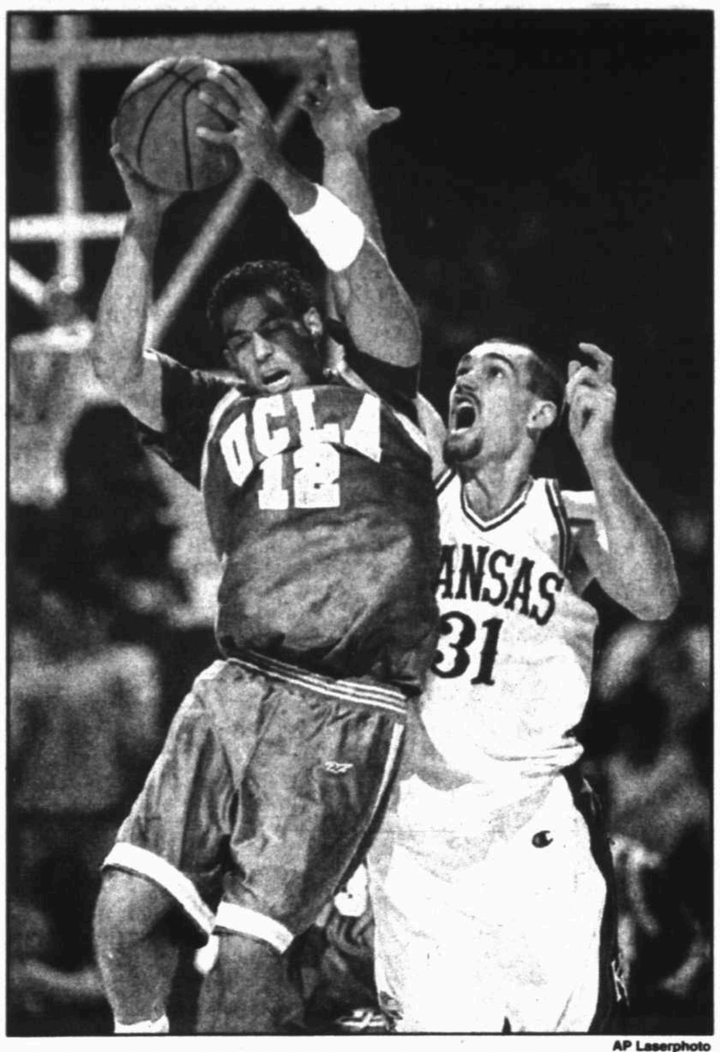

Cremins, along with assistant Kevin Cantwell, returned to Boone for the first time since 1981, when he left the Southern Conference school for Georgia Tech (5-1). At the time, the 27-year-old Cremins was the youngest coach in NCAA Division I basketball.

Cantwell, an assistant to Cremins at Boone, succeeded his boss at Appalachian State and coached there for five seasons.

Commemorative tickets with pictures of Cremins and Cantwell were printed for the game. Also, Mountaineer officials presented Cremins with an award prior to the jump ball. After that, they probably wanted it back although it wasn't entirely his fault the game turned into a blowout.

Appalachian State (1-2) missed its first 11 shots and got virtually no second shots from the offensive boards. As the shooting slump worsened, the Yellow Jackets had run up an 18-0 lead. Harpring had eight of those points, the last six in succession. The Mountaineers broke the drought at 13: 18 on a follow shot by Clint Crosston.

Harpring started Georgia Tech's next run with a 3-pointer.

Drexler hits for 41 in Rockets' win

The Associated Press

HOUSTON — Clyde Drexler scored a season-high 41 points as the Houston Rockets beat the Charlotte Hornets 113-98 Saturday night to climb into a first-place tie with Utah in the Midwest Division.

Charlotte, losing for the eighth time in 10 road games, never figured out how to stop Drexler, who finished 17-of-23 along with six assists and six rebounds. He also had five 3-pointers.

Drexler topped his previous season-high of 27 in the first half alone, scoring 28 and keying a 12-0 Houston run midway through the second period as the Rockets broke open a close game in the first half. Drexler was 8-for-8 in the second quarter, including two from 3-point range.

The Hornets, who were led by Larry Johnson's 23 points, rank last in the NBA in field goal percentage allowed at 49 percent and the Rockets added to that dubious statistic by hitting at a 57 percent clip for the game.

Spurs 101, Suns 93

SAN ANTONIO — David Robinson had 37 points and 15 rebounds as San Antonio let an 18-point third-quarter lead slip away before beating Phoenix.

Phoenix had the lead down to four points with nine minutes left in the game, but the Spurs answered with an 11-3 run and took a 88-76 lead with just under 6 minutes left. Sean Elliott, who finished with 22 points, hit the key shot, a 3-pointer with 6: 52 remaining to push the lead to 10 points.

The Spurs got two fast-break baskets in the final 40 seconds to maintain their lead and send the Suns to their third loss in four games.

Charles Barkley, who had 34 points and 18 rebounds, did his best to bring the Suns back. He scored 14 points in the fourth quarter while hitting 8-of-8 free throws in the last 7 minutes.

Chuck Person added 18 points for the Spurs.

Rookie Michael Finley had 17 points for the Suns, and John Williams had 11 points and 14 rebounds.

■ NBA Roundup

Pistons 104, Hawks 96

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. — Grant Hill had 24 points, 13 rebounds and 11 assists for his second career triple-double as Detroit won.

The Pistons started the fourth quarter with three rookies and two third-year players, then replaced Lindsey Hunter with Hill, last season's rookie of the year.

Craig Ehlo led the Hawks with 17, and Webb and Blaylock had 14 each.

Bullets 135, Celtics 107

BALTIMORE — Robert Pack scored 14 of his 26 points in the first quarter and Washington took advantage of 58 percent shooting for a victory over Boston.

Chris Webber added 21 points for Washington, which snapped a three-game losing streak. Juwan Howard had 17 points and 12 rebounds, and Tim Legler and Brent Price contributed 15 points each off the bench.

David Wesley had 17 points to lead Boston. Dana Barros added 16 points and Todd Day 14 for the Celtics, who have dropped four of their last five decisions.

Knicks 94, 76ers 85

PHILADELPHIA — Despite a nasty fall that required five stitches in his chin, Patrick Ewing scored 19 points and New York handed Philadelphia its10th straight loss.

Ewing fell face-first with 7: 58 left in the first quarter and was taken to the locker room, where he needed stitches to close a cut. He came back to start the second period.

The Knicks, who also got 18 points and 13 rebounds from Anthony Mason, have beaten the 76ers six straight times and have won 22 of the last 26 meetings, including eight of nine at the Spectrum.

Jerry Stackhouse had 23 points and Clarence Weatherspoon had 20 points and 14 rebounds for the 76ers. Sharone Wright, starting at center in place of recently traded Shawn Bradley, had 19.

Nets 79, Cavaliers 78

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Kevin Edwards hit a go-ahead jumper with 35 seconds left and New Jersey remained unbeaten at home.

The Nets defense was responsible for giving New Jersey its sixth straight at home and a season-high three-game winning streak. It held Cleveland to 28 second-half points and just five in the final 4: 46, when New Jersey closed the game with a 13-5 spurt.

Nuggets 109, Timberwolves 105

DENVER — Dikembe Mutombo had 22 points, 16 rebounds and 10 blocked shots Saturday night as Denver defeated Minnesota for the ninth straight time.

Defense lifts Texas over DePaul

The Associated Press

ROSEMONT, Ill. — Texas responded to a tough one-point loss to Utah with a defensive frenzy Saturday. The Longhorns started quickly and kept up the pressure, beating DePaul 88-84 behind a career-high 31 points from Reggie Freeman.

Sonny Alvarado and Carlton Dixon added 13 points each for Texas (2-1) while Jermaine Watts led DePaul (2-2) with 24 points, but only six in the second half after he was knocked down in a mid-court collision and had to leave the game for three minutes. Juan Gay scored 21 for the Blue Demons.

Texas Tech 71, Ark-LR 62

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — Jason Sasser scored 16 points and pulled down 13 rebounds and Koy Smith added 15 points Saturday to lead Texas Tech to a 71-62 victory over Arkansas-Little Rock.

■ SWC Hoops

The Trojans (2-1) trimmed a 13-point lead to just three points with 25 seconds left in the first half, but Texas Tech's Jason Martin hit a basket at the buzzer to leave Texas Tech (3-0) with a 38-33 lead at the break. Malik Dixon led the Trojans with 17 points.

Texas A&M 65, Columbia 39

MILWAUKEE — Dario Quesada scored 14 points as Texas A&M won the consolation title in the First Bank Classic tournament over Columbia, which converted only 35 percent of its field shots.

Columbia (2-2) got no closer than 16 points in the second half. Texas A&M (2-1), which shot 35 percent in a first-round loss to Wisconsin-Green Bay but finished with 52 percent against Columbia and a 30-22 rebound advantage.

Kent 86, Rice 76

KENT, Ohio — Nate Reinking scored 25 points to lead Kent to a victory over Rice.

Reinking became the 16th player in the school's history to surpass the 1,000-point career scoring mark.

Rice (2-2) led Kent 21-11 with 10: 08 remaining when Kent (3-0) went on a 10-0 run to tie the score with 6: 36 left in the half.

Nevada 88, Baylor 80

WACO — A stellar 36-point night by Brian Green, including nine baskets from three-point range, propelled Nevada to a win.

Green was good on 13 of 20 shots from the field, including nine of his 12 three-point tries, as four Nevada (1-1) players scored in the double digits. The Wolf Pack was deadly from behind the three-point arc, connecting on 13 of 27.

Cowboys receiver Michael Irvin and the rest of his Dallas teammates are ready for their long-time rivals in Washington in today's game at Texas Stadium. A win for the Cowboys can clinch the NFC East title.

DALLAS: Arch-rival Redskins in town

that game, and I was just happy we had a chance to play them again," Bates said. "This is a big revenge game as far as I'm concerned. But we have to play smart. Just because you're mad doesn't necessarily mean you're going to win."

The Dallas run defense went south in the loss to Washington. It was also the game where Troy Aikman suffered an early calf muscle problem and had to be replaced by Wade Wilson.

Terry Allen rushed 30 times for 121 yards and scored two touchdowns against the Cowboys the last time they met.

"We know Norv (a former Dallas offensive coordinator) will have something cooked up for us again," Bates said. "We're always a little uneasy going up against him. But we'll be OK this time if we can do a good job of controlling the run."

ON TV: Redskins at Cowboys 3 p.m., FOX

Linebacker Dixon Edwards added. "We owe the Redskins one. They embarrassed us the last time. We don't want anything like that to happen again."

The oddsmakers believe the Cowboys (10-2) will be able to win big with the return of defensive tackle Leon Lett and have made them a 17-point favorite over the Redkins (3-9). The Cowboys can clinch a playoff spot for the fifth consecutive season with a win.

"Our goal is to win three out of our next four games," said Dallas coach Barry Switzer. "If we do that we will have accomplished our goal to have a bye in the first round of the playoffs and the homefield advantage. It's not how many wins you have, but getting to your goal."

Should the Cowboys sweep the last four games it would give them their best regular-season record in franshise history.

A win would also give Dallas its 15th season with at least 11 victories.

The Cowboys are 21-6 in games played immediately after the Thanksgiving holiday.

Since 1991, the Cowboys are 25-6 in all games played after Thanksgiving.

"I know how tough the Cowboys can be anytime, but particularly the game after Thanksgiving, when they've had 10 days of rest," Turner said.

Turner is trying to get ready for next year by playing quarterback Heath Shuler, the third player selected in the 1994 draft. Turner started Shuler over Gus Frerotte last week. Shuler hurt his right shoulder in the season opener and missed four weeks. Frerotte then started ahead of a healed Shuler until a week ago.

"Offensively we haven't been going good and I don't care who the quarterback is," Turner said.

The Cowboys hope to get a full game of productivity from Emmitt Smith, who suffered a sprained left knee in the 24-12 Thanksgiving Day win over the Kansas City Chiefs.

Steelers farewell tour pulling into Houston

By Alan Robinson
AP Sports Writer

PITTSBURGH — Maybe they should call it the Pittsburgh Steelers' farewell tour.

Last week, it was the Steelers' final visit — at least if Art Modell gets his way — to nostalgic Cleveland Stadium. This week, it's the Houston (for now) Oilers in Three Rivers Stadium. Next week, it's the Raiders, not in Los Angeles, but back in Oakland.

Pardon the Steelers for thinking they're trapped in a time warp; 25 years ago, the Beatles split up and the AFC Central Division came together. Now, the Beatles are again atop the charts and the AFC Central is going its separate ways: Houston to Nashville, Cleveland to Baltimore and Cincinnati to ... check back in March.

This unprecedented franchise movement is unsettling to many, but coach Bill Cowher is more concerned about its effects on a Steelers team that already knows where it is going: To the playoffs.

Winners of five in a row, the Steelers (8-4) can clinch their third AFC Central title in four years by beating the Oilers (5-7) for the fourth consecutive time. Pittsburgh won 34-17 in Houston on Sept. 10 as Andre Hastings and Carnell Lake each scored on a return.

Cowher's concern is that one of these weeks, an opponent will take out its relocation frustrations on the one original AFC Central team that has no thoughts of switching cities.

"When we played Cincinnati, the talk was this was their season," Cowher said. "When we played Cleveland, they had a players-only meeting, and they came out and there almost was a fight at the coin toss. ... What you're getting now is Houston. I don't think they're lamed up by any stretch of the imagination. What we're getting is another team that cannot afford to lose."

From the Oilers' standpoint, they don't have much to lose in a stadium where they should be accustomed to doing exactly that. The Oilers have lost 19 of 26 in Three Rivers, but actually have been better on the road (3-3) than in the aging and usually half-empty Astrodome (2-4) this season.

Several Oilers said they will welcome playing in a noisy, enthusiastic atmosphere where the home crowd actually cares about its team.

ON TV: Oilers at Steelers noon, NBC

"We thrive on that type of crowd, because it really gets your adrenalin flowing," linebacker Michael Barrow said. "They're booing, making noise and they're playing football the way it's supposed to be played. You've got to love it."

In Houston, by contrast, it's been "Luv Ya, Blue" ... but, hey, get out of here. Cleveland is in near-revolt over the Browns' impending move, but the Oilers' possible relocation has met with so-what yawns of indifference.

"Our situation is a lot different than Cleveland," coach Jeff Fisher said. "All of this came up on the Cleveland Browns right in the middle of a game week, just out of the clear blue. Our situation really began in the preseason, and it has kind of crept up on us. I had an opportunity in the preseason to deal with it, discuss it and keep the players informed, to let them know the potential for distraction."

Buffalo, San Francisco finally meet

By Dave Goldberg
AP Football Writer

If it seems like Buffalo and San Francisco are always in the Super Bowl, they are. But they've never played each other there.

Too bad.

They meet Sunday for the first time since a game three years ago that would have been a great Super Bowl — the final score was 34-31 and nobody punted. But it couldn't have been a Super Bowl, because the Bills won.

Since then, some things have changed.

But both teams are still on top, leading their divisions at 8-4. The starting quarterbacks, now as then, are Steve Young and Jim Kelly. Jerry Rice, John Taylor, Thurman Thomas, Bruce Smith and a lot of the other principals are still around, too.

San Francisco's the hotter team.

Almost written off after consecutive losses to New Orleans and Carolina, the 49ers come in with three straight wins in which they've averaged 41 points per game, including a 38-20 win at Dallas with QB Elvis Grbac.

Kansas City (10-2)
at Oakland (8-4)

If Oakland had won at San Diego Monday night, this would have had more meaning for the Raiders. Now, unless the Chiefs totally fold, the Raiders will have to settle for the top AFC wild-card spot. Even if they pick up the two games, the Chiefs are in better tiebreaker position.

This is a classic AFC rivalry, made more classic by the Raiders' move back to Oakland.

It's also an odd one. Although the Raiders and Chiefs have been relatively even over the past half-dozen years, the Chiefs have won 11 of the last 12 meetings, including a 23-17 overtime win at Arrowhead in September.

■ Pro Football Today

Atlanta (7-5) at Miami (6-6)

Dan Marino is just about out of records to break, which may be a good thing. Every time he breaks one, the Dolphins lose.

The question is whether the Dolphins, who have lost six of eight, can get back up. Players are squabbling with each other and with the coaches, and their 19 first-round draft choices haven't meshed into a team.

Tampa Bay (6-6)
at Minnesota (6-6)

This amounts to an elimination game in the muddled NFC Central, where all five teams are between 8-4 and 6-6. Also, for the second straight week, there's a chance for history: the Bucs' second chance to avoid their 13th straight season of 10 or more losses.

Tampa Bay's remaining four games are with each of its other division rivals. Win them all and the playoffs are a lock; lose them all and — it's 10 losses again.

Cincinnati (5-7)
at Green Bay (8-4)

If there's a dominant team in the NFC Central, it's the Packers, who have won three straight. Assuming the weather at Green Bay is seasonal, it'll be four. Brett Favre is 11-0 in games he's started in freezing weather and has 26 touchdown passes and only six interceptions.

The Bengals are another of those curious teams that are only a game out of a playoff spot in the AFC, the result in part of playing in a division where only one team, the Steelers, is playoff-worthy.

Cleveland (4-8)
at San Diego (5-7)

The AFC defending champion Chargers are another team in that game-behind position at 5-7 thanks to their renewed aggressiveness on defense in the 12-6 win over the Raiders Monday night, the first game without a touchdown this season.

Their schedule gets easier, starting with the Browns, who have lost seven of eight and all four since their move became public knowledge. Bill Belichick took the team west Wednesday to get his players out of the negative atmosphere.

Indianapolis (7-5
at Carolina (5-7)

The Colts have quietly moved into position for their first playoff berth since 1987 and maybe even an AFC East title. And it's their own doing — their two wins over Miami are two key reasons for the Dolphins' demise.

But this won't be easy. Even with their loss at New Orleans Sunday night, the Panthers are pesky — 5-2 after an 0-5 start. The defense is good, and Kerry Collins is learning a little more each week about playing quarterback even without a running game.

Philadelphia (8-4)
at Seattle (5-7)

The Eagles keep plugging along toward a playoff berth because Ray Rhodes has fashioned one of the league's best defenses around a bunch of unheralded overachievers. This can be an easy game if the Seahawks play like they did last week in losing to the Jets, a harder one if Rick Mirer manages to locate Joey Galloway, who kept getting wide open and overthrown.

This is a key game for the Eagles in that they get the Cowboys next. They may still harbor hopes of the division title, but a wild card is more realistic.

Jacksonville (3-9)
at Denver (6-6)

Denver may be up (at home) and down (away), but the Broncos are still tied for the AFC's last wild-card spot, thanks in large part to rookie Terrell Davis, the sixth-round draft choice who's outshining all those first-rounders.

There's a little grumbling in Jacksonville because the Jaguars have two fewer wins than Carolina. It might have been one less had Tom Coughlin not gambled on a two-pointer instead of overtime at Tampa two weeks ago, but does it really matter?

New Orleans (5-7)
at New England (5-7)

These teams started dismally, but they're still on the cusp of playoff contention.

The Patriots are in better shape, a game out of the AFC picture like the rest of the conference's five 5-7 teams. The Saints have won five of seven, probably too late because the NFC is the 6-6 conference — three .500 teams in the NFC Central alone.

St. Louis (6-6)
at New York Jets (3-9)

That 4-0 start has turned into 2-6 in the last eight games for the Rams. That's just like Miami except that it's more like what was expected. Chris Miller, knocked out of the 41-13 loss at San Francisco, should be back.

Texans will benefit from speed bill

President Clinton's signing of a bill to abolish the federal 55 mph speed limit means that within the next few weeks Texans will be able to legally drive 70 mph on many of the state's highways for the first time since 1974.

While we share Clinton's concern that the higher speed limit and the fact that the measure also repeals a law encouraging states to enact motorcycle-helmet-use laws will likely lead to more traffic fatalities, less populated areas of the nation — such as West Texas — will be the primary beneficiaries. Here, where people traveling from Midland to El Paso or on similarly long jaunts, motorists who normally face hours in their cars traveling long distances will be able to significantly reduce their traveling time. Overall, the 55 mph speed limit has not been popular even though it has been credited with saving numerous lives that otherwise would have been lost in fatal car crashes.

In signing the bill repealing the 55 mph limit and permitting states to set their own limits, Clinton said, "My administration will redouble our efforts to protect those who travel on the nation's highways." He instructed the Transportation Department to develop an action plan to promote highway safety.

That and more likely will be needed to keep traffic fatality counts down. Fortunately, however, increased use of seat belts and heightened awareness about the dangers of driving while intoxicated should translate into fewer highway fatalities even with the increased speed limit.

Of course, it all comes down to personal accountability and to motorists being willing to reduce their speed on holidays when heavier traffic exists on the highways as well as when inclement weather makes road conditions more dangerous.

With responsible action on the part of motorists, traffic fatalities can be kept to a minimum and Texans can still get where they're going sooner.

Clean air provisions remain vital for future

Year's end will bring two landmark environmental anniversaries — the 25th anniversary of the Clean Air Act of 1970 and the fifth anniversary of the Clean Air Amendments of 1990.

The record is clear. These laws have charted the course for cleaner air. But today they're under sharp attack by the polluters and their allies in Congress.

The years since 1970 have been ones of unprecedented growth. Our gross domestic product has increased by 70 percent. The nation's population has grown by 60 million people. And the U.S. vehicle fleet has grown by 87 million cars and trucks.

Even with all this growth, we've managed to score clear gains in air quality. Smog levels are down in most places, and the federal Environmental Protection Agency estimates that overall air pollution is down by 24 percent.

Has the battle for clean air been won? Can we now declare victory and relax our efforts?

Not by a long shot. As former Sen. Edmund Muskie of Maine, principal author of the 1970 act, warns: "The deadly urban soup we breathe still shortens tens of thousands of lives each year, and diminishes the lives of millions."

Despite the criticisms directed at the 1970 law, it is still very much needed and must be kept in place. Nor should Congress yield to those who would weaken its provisions.

"Common sense," says Muskie, "tells us that we would not want to imagine an America without a Clean Air Act."

U.S. must prepare to use force in Bosnia

WASHINGTON — President Clinton's decision to send 20,000 American troops to Bosnia as part of a NATO peacekeeping operation has prompted a huge sigh of relief at United Nations headquarters in New York — a fact that should give the president great pause.

Anderson

Clinton believes the deployment will be a success, in part because the troops are there to enforce peace rather than stop a war. But some U.N. officials — who have watched their organization attempt to deal with the Bosnian crisis for more than two years — privately predict the worst.

"It's the world's biggest tar baby — you try to help and you get stuck there," one high-level American source at U.N. headquarters told us. "The more you struggle, the more you can't get away." The lesson of U.N. involvement is a depressing one if examined closely, and suggests that Clinton's decision could cost him the presidency.

While U.N. peacekeeping officials generally praise Clinton's decision to deploy troops, they uniformly warn that agreements by the warring factions in the former Yugoslavia have been frequently broken. "Only when the use of force occurred, like NATO attacks, did the Serbs capitulate," a U.N. official told our associate Dale Van Atta. "So the U.S. must be prepared to use force time and time again. There will be casualties. Perhaps many casualties."

There are other lessons to be taken from the U.N.'s missteps and misadventures in Bosnia — perhaps the most important being that leadership and commitment must begin at the top.

U.N. Secretary General Boutros Boutros-Ghali never wanted to get involved in Bosnia to begin with. He called Bosnia a "rich man's war" and wondered aloud why the U.N. didn't intervene in similar crises in war-torn African nations like Rwanda, Burundi and, initially, Somalia.

While Clinton appears committed to the cause, he must convince a congressional majority to follow him — or, at the least, refrain from making it a political issue that could damage troop morale and undermine the peace effort.

The second lesson is that mandates to the troops must be realistic and conclusive — traits not commonly associated with President Clinton. The General Assembly approved two dozen resolutions in the past four years mandating different tasks for the peacekeeping forces in Yugoslavia, collectively known as UNPROFOR (U.N. Protection Force).

"The U.N.'s General Assembly is like a big schoolroom filled with screaming children who occasionally all raise their hand in unison," one top UNPROFOR official complained. "It doesn't lead to anything. And then it has the Security Council, which manages to keep us twisting in the wind out here in Sarajevo."

Mandates were approved that were doomed to fail. Six U.N. "safe areas" were designated, two of which were overrun by the Serbs when they were good and ready. They fell because the U.N. forces wouldn't shoot back.

"We were never asked to do peace enforcement," Boutros-Ghali told us earlier this year. "We were never asked to impose peace. When (the Security Council) adds to the mandate certain additional obligations or objectives, without offering to us the equipment and the additional forces, then, by definition, we will not be able to solve the problem."

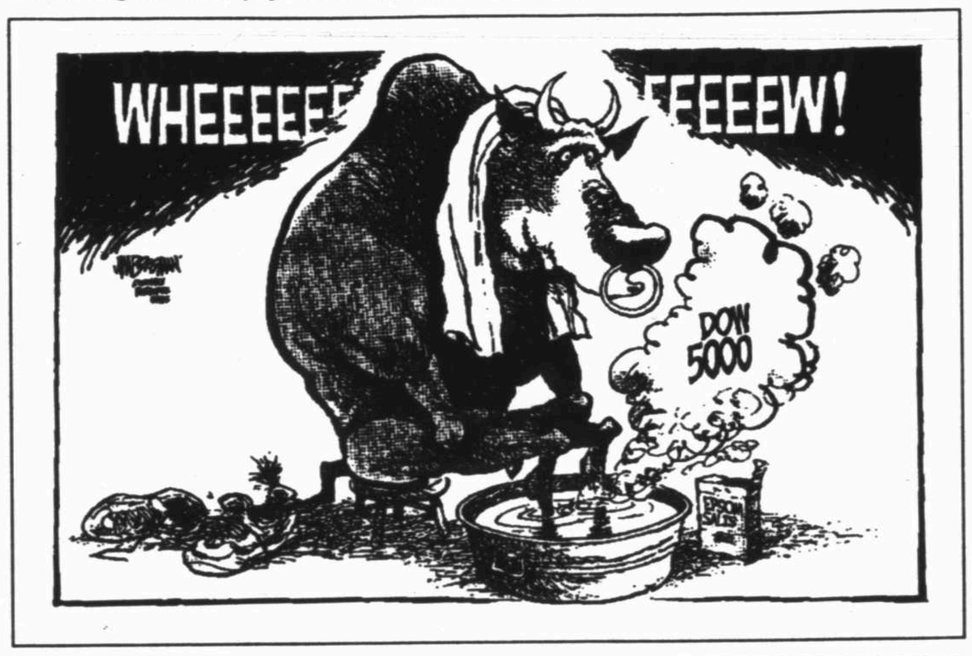

The United States was part of that vote and has already spent more than $2 billion supporting the U.N. peacekeeping efforts. An American U.N. delegate said he got so frustrated about this that, at one point, "I called our own American delegation 'a bunch of drunken sailors' going into the Security Council and voting for everything — especially when there was no money to pay for these things, and the Congress was pleading poverty. It was bizarre."

The third lesson is that soldiers must be prepared for Bosnian Serbs to break the peace — as Somalian warlord Mohammed Farah Aidid did during the American deployment in 1992-93. This means American soldiers should be ready to shoot back — and die — in Bosnia.

Many early indicators suggest the Bosnian experience may be similar to Somalia — which floundered after public opinion turned decisively against the well-intentioned relief mission.

Give English language books as presents

Put away that stack of catalogues; turn off the infomercials. Instead, if your friends and family have been good this year and are moderately literate, give them books about the English language. Here are a half-dozen to choose from, beginning with an updated dictionary:

Safire

Webster's New World College Dictionary, Third Edition ($22.95). The 1988 edition, first to be called "third," was published by Simon & Schuster; the 1994 edition was published by Prentice Hall; the new edition is by Macmillan. What's going on here? This is the dictionary of first reference of The New York Times and The Associated Press; nobody should be ashamed to put the company name on it. Why is it being handed around Publishers' Row like a plate of lexicographical cookies?

Here's the answer: Viacom owns everything. The megamediacorp owns Paramount, which owns Simon & Schuster as well as Prentice Hall and Macmillan. In an early shuffle, the S. & S. baby was handed off to Prentice Hall; booksellers thought of that imprint as too texty, so a new home was found at Macmillan, which has a trade-and-reference feel. I hope they've settled down at last; a dictionary shouldn't be out on the street.

The update has the soothing new sense of challenged as "handicapped" (baldies are "follically challenged"), and the addition of aroma therapy is not to be sniffed at. But why include didgeridoo (the Australian aborigine's wind instrument) when a popular coinage like digerati (the computer literate, on the analogy of literati) cannot be accessed? "Not having didgeridoo," says Michael Agnes, editorial director in Webster's New World Division of Macmillan's Consumer Information, General Reference and Publishing U.S.A. Groups, if I have that straight, "would be a glaring error."

America has four outstanding college-size dictionaries. (Merriam-Webster, which traces its lineage to Noah himself, has a trademark on the word collegiate, which means "about 1,500 pages.") Random House also uses the name Webster in its title, but American Heritage, the largest and most prescriptive of the group, finds its own initials are enough. They're all different, and all great; my own "favorite dictionary" is the Century of 1896, though the 12 volumes have given me this backache.

"The Describer's Dictionary," by David Grambs (Norton, not yet gobbled up by any other medium, trade paperback, $14.95). This is the modifier's book of the year, the only dictionary that tells you the word for "flashing occasionally or fitfully" is winking, "flashing regularly" is blinking, stroboscopic, and "flashing weakly or going out" is fluttering, guttering, sputtering.

Under "species adjectives," using reverse-dictionary technique, you can find the expected feline for "catlike" and leonine for "like a lion," but how about piscine, ichthyoid for "fishy," strigine for "owlish," murid for "like a rat or mouse" and suilline for "like a hog"? (When I told him he looked suilline, he gave me an ichthyoid handshake.)

"Action Grammar," by Joanne Feierman ($10, Fireside Book paperback, published by Simon & Schuster, sucked dry by Viacom, worried about a hostile takeover by ...). A straightforward, jargon-free usage book, somewhat overpriced. Under "Lies Your English Teacher Told You," she includes, "Sometimes periods and commas go inside the quotation marks and sometimes they go outside; it depends on the sentence." That's properly branded a lie: "In the United States, periods and commas always go inside quotation marks. ... This is the American system. The rest of the English-speaking world uses the more logical system. ... The only Americans who do not follow the American style in this matter are lawyers."

A Dictionary of Modern Legal Usage, Second Edition, by Bryan A. Garner (Oxford University Press, $65). Runners of tortious interference at the CBS Legal Department will be fascinated by the new split in the meaning of litigator. That originally was a needless variant of litigant, "party to a lawsuit," but then became "a lawyer who specializes in litigation as an alternate term for trial lawyer." Of late, however, Garner notes that "litigator has come to connote a lawyer who works in litigation but never sets foot in a courtroom. Trial lawyers try cases; litigators, it is sometimes said, merely prepare discovery requests." And here's a word I never knew, but can use: malversation, "official corruption." ("And what is the subject of your call?" "Just tell him I want to have a malversation.")

"The Random House English Language Desk Reference" ($18, and at least we know the publisher). A simple, basic book to have available if you are on a lifeboat with a notebook computer and room for only one book. The dictionary is so-so (watershed is defined as a drainage area, ignoring the present metaphoric sense of "time of transition or devision"), but the thesaurus of synonyms and antonyms is handy: robust is "sturdy, healthy, strong, hardy" and otherwise muscular, but the other sense is included: "rough, rude, coarse, boisterous, rambunctious, wild," which is the sense I think meant by Justice Brennan in his call for the press to be "uninhibited, robust and wide open."

Deficit spending destroys dollar's purchasing power

I like to read old books. That way, with hindsight, you can tell if the author knew what he was talking about.

When you read a lot you'll find that not much besides names and numbers change. Human nature seems constant and human problems have a way of just recycling themselves.

Reese

In "The Decline of the American Republic" by John T. Flynn, published in 1955, you find both a discussion of the federal deficit and an attempt to pass a balanced budget amendment — no more successful, of course, than the attempt this year.

"Next in order," writes Flynn in his prescription for saving the Republic, "should be the adoption of what is known as the Bridges-Byrd amendment to the Constitution to protect the people, their institutions, and their liberties from the outrageous abuses of power in the hands of a federal administration (Eisenhower's) armed not only with the immense power to tax without limit but to borrow without limit. It is that dangerous weapon that has been used to bring the government to the brink of bankruptcy."

When this was published, the total federal budget was $67.7 billion, the deficits were double digits, and the entire national debt was $277 billion — about what we pay today in annual interest on the $5 trillion national debt.

So, you can see, that in 40 years the federal government's budget has grown from $67 billion to $1.4 trillion and the debt has grown from $277 billion to $5 trillion. Part of this huge increase just reflects our devalued currency, an inevitable result of deficit spending. A dollar today is worth only about 5 cents in purchasing power compared to what a dollar would buy in 1955.

Only 30 years ago, I thought that if I could ever make $10,000 a year I'd be on easy street. Today, $10,000 a year puts you well below the poverty level.

So, the next time some guy says it's not important to balance the budget or someone wants to know what's wrong with deficit spending, you can tell them: It destroys the purchasing power of the dollar. It robs people of their savings through inflation.

That's how governments go bankrupt. They don't pay their bills — they just pay them in depreciated currency. Old Ernie Hemingway was dead right when he said, in the 1930s: "The first panacea for a mismanaged nation is inflation of the currency; the second is war. Both bring a temporary prosperity; both bring a permanent ruin. But both are the refuge of political and economic opportunists."

If we are going to avoid permanent ruin, then we will have to get a lot more serious about politics and start rooting out the political and economic opportunists no matter where we find them.

There is no secret, there is nothing esoteric about managing a government. It has to be done the same way a family or a small business manages their affairs. You must spend less than you take in and you must save rather than borrow.

Politicians by borrowing pretend to be giving the people something for nothing. "Look what I can give you and I don't have to raise your taxes," they say. But, of course, they lie, because eventually taxes will have to be raised, not only to pay the principal, but to pay the interest on the borrowed money.

As a nation, we're about at the end of the rope. We will have to decide soon if we are tired and wish to let go and fall or if we have the strength to start climbing back up the cliff to safety.

I have no crystal ball. I just have a hunch the American people, on the whole, are too gutsy and sensible to give up and let the opportunists take them all the way down. The American people always were in the past. A financier said it well: "You'll lose if you sell Americans short."

On this date:

In 1818, Illinois was admitted as the 21st state.

In 1828, Andrew Jackson was elected president of the United States.

In 1833, Oberlin College in Ohio — the first truly coeducational school of higher learning in the United States — opened its doors.

In 1925, "Concerto in F," by George Gershwin, had its world premiere at New York's Carnegie Hall, with Gershwin himself at the piano.

In 1947, the Tennessee Williams play "A Streetcar Named Desire" opened on Broadway.

In 1953, the musical "Kismet," featuring the song "Stranger in Paradise," opened on Broadway.

In 1960, the Lerner and Loewe musical "Camelot," which included the song, "If Ever I Would Leave You," opened on Broadway.

In 1964, police arrested about 800 students at the University of California at Berkeley, one day after the students stormed the administration building and staged a massive sit-in.

Drunken driving deaths are always preventable

Last year, 16,600 Americans lost their lives as a result of alcohol-involved crashes. That's one about every 30 minutes. This is unacceptable, as impaired driving deaths and injuries are 100 percent preventable.

This holiday season, hundreds of government agencies, law enforcement officials, community groups, local businesses and major U.S. corporations are banding together to recognize National Drunk and Drugged Driving (3D) Prevention Month and "Take a Stand Against Impaired Driving."

Taking a stand is simple, and there are a lot of ways to do it. First of all, don't drink and drive. Never serve alcoholic beverages to anyone under 21. If you drink, always plan ahead and designate a non-drinking driver.

If you are having a party this holiday season, be a responsible host. Serve a wide variety of beverages, including some that are non-alcoholic. Control the amount of alcoholic beverages served — no open bars. Ask alcohol-impaired guests to stay overnight or call a cab to assure them a safe ride home.

Amarillo is to thank for sentence of Ortiz

Midland shall forever be in Amarillo's debt for allowing Henry Ortiz to live after raping, strangling and stuffing the body of Julianne Powell into a filthy clothes hamper.

The message screaming from this verdict is that it is all right to commit the most heinous crime imaginable as long as you can have others bear witness that you are a Christian. It would appear to be that if a person is drunk, devious, evil and manipulative, he can rape, pillage and kill with impunity.

Jacqueline Allen said, "Someone once told me when I did something wrong that none of us are as bad as the worst thing we've ever done." Julianne never did anything wrong that is as bad as the worst thing Ortiz did to her. I would be interested to know what Ms. Allen and this jury are basing their hypocritical "sin-scale" on, because in God's eyes, sin is sin.

With the early release of inmates as one alternative to prison overcrowding, I pray that the "Friendly City" sleeps well at night knowing that Ortiz, a future danger to society, could possibly be granted freedom to again stalk the streets of Midland searching out our children for prey.

We shouldn't forsake foundational subjects

I read with interest the article in the Nov. 23 Reporter-Telegram, about a proposed multicultural program at Texas A&M University (TAMU). Even though it does not appear that the multicultural plan will be implemented anytime soon at TAMU, strong consideration and debate took place between President Ray Bowen, faculty and student groups. Even though this is just one example, the article went on to describe how similar programs also were rejected at other state colleges/universities over the last few years.

One also can point to examples of where multicultural programs have actually been implemented right in our own local school system with programs such as the Carver Cultural Center. As a taxpayer and former student of TAMU, I am concerned about the direction of our Texas educational system. It seems there are those in the educational system who are bent on having multicultural programs taught to our students. I have no objection to learning about the diverse cultures that exist in our world, nation, state and local community. In fact, learning about different races and ethnic populations is a worthwhile goal. Yet, to make room for these courses in the curriculum, what is being displaced?

Are we forsaking foundational subjects like reading, writing and math to make room for these "add-on" programs? Will our children's ability to excel later in school and successfully compete in the workplace hinge on how well they learn about other cultures? I think we all know the answer to this last question: definitely not. Maybe it is time some of our university faculty, administrators and local school district officials realized this.

We need to keep our troops, money home

The president's decision to send ground troops to Bosnia will be a disaster for our country. We need to take a leadership role but one of a humanitarian means at the negotiations table, not the battle front. This is a holy war between factions in Bosnia. Frankly, holy wars are dangerous and are not any of our business. We need to keep our troops and our money at home.

Helen G. Harrison
Midland

All Americans should back armed services

Should we be in Bosnia? Well, the question is moot. We are in Bosnia. The president, as commander in chief of the Army, Navy and the militia (when called into actual service) has so ordered. That being so, all dissension should cease.

Every American should stand behind our men who are called up. They have no choice but to do their duty as they are under the command of the commander in chief and the subordinate general and field officers. This is no time to subject them to differences of opinion about our foreign policy. Americans are not, for the most, isolationists. We have no "Remember the Alamo," no "Remember the Maine," no "Remember Pearl Harbor" this time to rally us around the flag, but that is what we most surely should do.

Our men who are going into combat in Bosnia, and they most surely will, (peacekeepers, yeah, sure) should not ever again be subjected to what our troops suffered at home from sorry ne'er-do-goods because they disagreed with our policy on Vietnam.

America, forget party politics. Don't take it out on our armed forces; unite behind them. Congress, shut-up, unless you can act in support. It is none of your business anyway unless you are called upon to declare war. Oh sure you control the purse, but if you rebel you should answer for it come election time. Abraham Lincoln had enough with your meddling and you are supposed to be on the same side.

Lowell E. Branum

We must succeed to protect reputation

President Clinton has behaved in a patronizing manner toward our nation by asking our support for a risky and questionable policy in Bosnia after it is too late for us to say no. Does he really expect us to swallow this as democracy? Over the past three years he could have made himself more accountable to Congress and Americans, and less accountable to the United Nations. Then he would not have been taken in by an "international government wanna-be" (the U.N.) as it tried to micro-manage ethnic slaughter. It was just as smart as having our own federal government try to micro-manage health care or welfare.

Now Clinton has finessed a house-of-cards peace treaty, but only by wedding it to the biggest asset that he as president could risk: American honor and commitment. If his commitment of our honor is ever perceived to be reneged upon, Clinton's commitment will have damaged our national security by making our military deterrence less believable. It also will render every American in uniform unsafe.

It likely will become a fact of increasing consequence that it is a man who would not himself wear an American uniform who has promised to back his commitment with other Americans' blood. Americans, if we so choose, have the ability to hold Clinton accountable for this in 11 months. However, in the meantime we must face the fact that protecting our national security and international reputation now likely will require us to robustly fulfill Clinton's commitments to NATO in Bosnia. And, given his track record of poll-driven decision making, Americans who are skeptical of his plan may end up having to be the very ones to hold him to his latest commitment of our nation's honor and reputation.

Readers' views on: Bicyclist's death

Laws against DWI need to be tougher

Our Midland County District Attorney Al Schorre appears to have failed in his attempt to prosecute a drunken driver who struck and killed a bicyclist last September. A grand jury apparently felt there was not enough evidence to indict Joel Munoz on intoxication manslaughter. Instead they passed down the lesser charge of DWI, a simple misdemeanor.

What kind of message does this send? Drunken drivers who kill had better look out — that slap on the wrist is some punishment.

I have often heard said that our laws protect the guilty and further victimize the victims. Did Schorre plead this case with every factual detail available and all the compassion of a person who has lost a loved one to this crime? Or are the laws written in a way that is letting drunken drivers who kill walk away?

How many of you know someone who has fallen victim to a drunken driver? In fatality cases, I wonder what percentage of those drunken drivers have gotten off with a misdemeanor.

We must have meticulous and thorough prosecution plus legislation of tougher laws to get drunken drivers off the road.

Clare M. Rietman

Charge in bicyclist's death seems wrong

Much to my surprise, the state of Texas and Midland County have chosen to file only misdemeanor DWI charges in the case of the death of bicyclist Eugene Goudeau.

I am a member of the Permian Basin Bicycle Association, an incorporated association of bicyclists mostly from Midland and Ector counties. We have approximately 150 members, and we ride about 300,000 combined miles per year, mostly on Midland and Ector county roads. We would like to be able to enjoy our cycling without worry about intoxicated drivers risking our very lives.

I did not know Eugene Goudeau. He was not a member of our organization. However, I am very upset that the driver will not even have to face a trial for killing him. And I am upset that he could possibly receive a sentence of only three days, possibly suspended, for the DWI that led to Eugene Goudeau's death. It just seems wrong.

SWC demise brings passing of era of responsibility

By Bob Darlington

R.I.P. Southwest Conference. Sadly, it's not just the end of an 81-year-old regional, amateur, athletic association. It's the passing of an era where sportsmanship, pride and moral responsibility meant something more valuable than greed and greater TV revenues.

It's the end of a time when leaders in high positions in academia could distinguish between fiscal and ethical values, and the need to set the right moral example — beyond the diffusion of knowledge in the arts and sciences.

The decision of the defecting SWC presidents to cheat the other SWC schools has blurred the line between the commercial purpose of professional athletics and the physical and character-building goals of collegiate sports.

I believe the difference can be expressed in two well-known quotes:

Vince Lombardi is reputed to have said, "Winning isn't everything; it's the only thing." He claimed he said, "Winning is not everything — but making the effort to win is." Whichever, I believe the first version represents a fair and reasonable credo for pro football.

Grantland Rice wrote, "For when the One Great Scorer comes to mark against your name, He writes — not that you won or lost — but how you played the game."

Bob Darlington is a retired U.S. Air Force colonel who was a fighter pilot for 30 years with combat tours in Korea and Vietnam. After a second career as an airline charter pilot in France, he now lives in Midland.

That's what the Judas university presidents should have had engraved on the backs of their watches.

I find that people often defend the SWC breakup by saying, "But there is just so much money involved!" That's like the young starlet who said, "Golly, yeah!" when the producer offered a million-dollar contract in consideration for sessions on the casting couch. Then he asked the price for just 30 minutes and she exclaimed, "What do you think I am?"

Well, of course, that had already been established, now they were just negotiating price.

I don't know or care what UT, A&M, Tech or Baylor thought was the right price, but surely they prostituted themselves when they betrayed their colleague schools and their own students and fans.

Nostalgia isn't what it used to be, as they say, but I can remember when I thought, with regional pride, that the SWC was the only conference that mattered. Everyone who had a car had a football-shaped Humble Oil sticker with "their" SWC team's color and game schedule printed on it. And you could catch a special train to go to and from the games. Well, I won't be buying airline tickets to see any "Dirty Dozen" games somewhere up in Yankeeland.

Look, I'm no paragon of virtue. When in Dallas, I dine at Hooters, and I love to rip "Do Not Remove" tags off mattresses.

But what really bothers me is, not only that three state-sponsored schools and one church-sponsored school turned out to be a bunch of mercenary hypocrites, but rather that none of you cared. Are we so desensitized by scandal in high places that we can't see it when it happens at home?

We have let our institutions of higher learning abrogate their responsibilities to our youth — all because you didn't care.

Our policy on letters

The Reporter-Telegram recognizes the "Letters to the Editor" format as an important forum for citizen opinion and encourages participation of all readers. To that end, we have set as few rules as possible. However, we must have some, and they are:

■ Letters must be signed and include a street address and daytime phone number for verification. Letters not including this information will not be considered for publication.

■ They should be no more than 350 words in length. While some lengthy letters are published, we reserve the right to edit when necessary due to space limitations. The briefer the letter, the better its chance of publication.

■ Only one letter per month per writer can be published.

■ Letters will be edited for length, taste and legal reasons and are accepted only on that basis. Letters which are difficult to reduce in length will be returned to the writer to be edited before being re-submitted.

■ We do not publish 'open' letters, copies of letters sent to others or multiple signatures.

Because we cannot research and verify all information in letters, by publishing them we neither imply nor guarantee the accuracy of information stated by writers.

Letters should be sent to: The Editor, Midland Reporter-Telegram, P.O. Box 1650, Midland, TX 79702.

MEET: Four ex-COM swimmers excel

(From 1C)

that they've seen it they think differently."

The TCU women outpointed NMSU's women 134-99 and the TCU men won 132-90.

Three other former City of Midland Aquatics (COM) swimmers besides Houston won individual events: Odessa Permian product Terah Gisolo won the women's 50-yard freestyle for NMSU and Stacy Fennell (women's 1,000-yard freestyle) and Jamie Bobo (women's 100-yard backstroke) won swims for TCU.

"I've been pretty excited every since the beginning of the year when I knew we were going to come out here," said Houston, a high school all-American who graduated from Midland High in 1992. "I wanted to make a good showing since this was the first time for me to swim competitively at home (for TCU)."

Horned Frogs head coach Richard Sybesma liked what he saw in Houston's swim and in the Midland pool.

"That 50.7 was his best ever unrested swim in the 100 fly," Sybesma said. "And I think that had something to do with his being here in his home pool."

Bobo, also a TCU senior, graduated from Permian in '92 and works out at the COM pool on visits home.

Her 1:02.12 in the 100 backstoke beat out TCU teammate and COM product Lindsay Bickley by 1.82 seconds.

"I was just here for Thanksgiving for a week and I worked out here," Bobo said. "It's a fast pool."

Both Sybesma and NMSU Aggie coach Mark McFarland said they would like to come back to Mabee each year for a dual meet.

"It's a great opportunity for us to meet halfway in a facility better than anything they have or we have," McFarland said. "We really ought to push for holding a small invitational (college) meet here." "This is one of the best facilities for 25-yard competition in the country," Sybesma said. "High school football players like to play in Texas Stadium and this place is like that for swimmers."

NMSU plays in the Big West conference and TCU will move to a newly-aligned Western Athletic Conference after this the final year of competition in the Southwest Conference.

Sybesma would like for the WAC swimming championships to be held at Abell-Hanger.

Ten of TCU's 45 swimmers and divers are from West Texas towns and Sybesma said parents of swimmers came to the meet from El Paso, Monahans and Pecos.

MUSTANGS: 46-point win 5th straight

thing they will always remember. This is a special group of kids. They all work hard all week long and they deserved this."

The Mustangs made their "Drive for Five." But changes wait around the corner for all the underclassmen on the team. Midland Christian will compete next year in TAPPS 4A 11-man because of a huge jump in student enrollment and Blake, 62, will try retirement for a second time.

"Yeah, it's sad," said junior Womack. "Especially since we'll be losing Coach Blake. He's been a great coach and everybody is going to miss him.

"But I feel like we're going to be good next year," continued Womack. "We've got the tradition and talent on our team, we just need to keep it going."

The Mustangs will lose only five seniors off the history-making team.

One of the returners, junior quarterback Alex Awtry, literally played his guts out for Blake, who the players honored by shouting "Blake, Blake, Blake, Blake..." after the trophy presentation.

Awtry, who was named the Most Valuable Player for the game, engineered the Mustang offense with 185 passing yards and 78 running yards and accounted for five of Midland Christian's nine touchdowns.

"It was great since I've been sick the last few days," said Awtry. "I woke up this morning and puked my guts out but I wasn't going to miss this. Next year will be interesting to see how good we will be.

"But mostly, I'd rather stay here in six-man," added Awtry. "It's a lot more fun."

Abilene rallied back to within 44-18 early in the fourth quarter, but MCHS put the game away with three touchdowns in the final eight minutes.

The gourmet kitchen offers interesting built-in features such as this plate rack. The recent remodeling has transformed the room into a stylish and practical room.

The master suite boasts this huge Jacuzzi tub - easily big enough for four people - masses of closet space and his and hers facilities.

The impressive center island/breakfast area form the focal point for the new kitchen. Designer fixtures, new tiles and accents have transformed this space.

Spanish design elements combine with contemporary features to produce an interesting home that is sure to please.

Serene and stately

Location will probably always be one of the most important factors in real estate. Where the house is, its proximity to work and recreational facilities and levels of noise pollution can all affect price as well as the quality of life for the homeowners.

Set on the outskirts of town a short hop from the new Wal Mart Super Center this home at 3916 North County Road 1243 is a large property that offers seclusion, peace and quiet and privacy coupled with easy access to shops and schools..

Set on its own private road on over three acres of land this is the perfect house for those seeking to get away from it all.

The house is currently undergoing an extensive renovation with many of the house's already interesting features being updated. A remodeled kitchen, new carpet throughout and a new redwood deck next to the heated pool are all in the final stages of construction.

There are a variety of different themes running through this property but the overall design element is Spanish. Whitewashed walls, arches and stucco all combine to create a very light and airy ambience. Many of the rooms, in particular the kitchen, have been opened up with the use of arches to create a flowing, dynamic movement through the house.

There are many interesting rooms in this three bedroom, three and one half bathroom family home but perhaps the most impressive is the kitchen. Fully equipped to handle any gourmet's needs with center island, double ovens, all built-in appliances this is a large, spacious room with masses of work an storage space.

Opening off from the kitchen is the dining room and family den. Tiled for convenience with inset carpets these are gracious rooms with attractive views. Elegant features such as the marble fireplace only add to the sense of chic.

There is an opportunity to view this interesting property, this afternoon between one and three p.m. this afternoon. Listed for $215,000 the house will be shown by the listing agent, Anna Crawford of Dene Kelly Realtors.

For more information about the house, or to arrange an alternative appointment to buy, call Ms. Crawford at 687-0595.

The dining room, with its large windows overlooking the secluded pool, is a stylish and chic room which benefits from its open plan design and light decor.

Stay in the market

While others are holiday shopping, don't overlook the possibility of shopping for the right mortgage to make you a homeowner this Christmas. Misconceptions could keep you from being a homeowner, according to the Mortgage Bankers Association of America. The association says that many would-be homeowners are missing out because they do not think that they would qualify for a mortgage.

Strong

One of the biggest misconceptions is the belief that it takes a 20 percent down payment. The reality is that it can take a fraction of that amount to get into a home by using some of the new mortgage products available.

Believe it or not, 100 percent financing is available in certain cases. Most lenders today have flexible credit history requirements and most first-time buyers are pleasantly surprised to find out how much of a mortgage they can qualify for.

In addition, the FHA recently eased their application guidelines - something that will be a great help to the first time buyer. In Midland the FHA will finance up to $115,900. The ratios are typically are 36/41. The house payment - principal, interest and taxes should not exceed 41 percent of gross income. In addition, house payments plus long term debts should also not exceed the 41 percent mark. One new change is that only debts that exceed ten months are used in this qualifying process.

Whether you are a first time buyer, or a seasoned pro, there is a mortgage program that is perfect for you if you will take the time to talk to a professional realtor and lender about your plans. Interest rates have gone down - and up - in recent weeks , but they are still at an affordable rate fluctuating between 7.5 and eight percent.

If you are contemplating buying or selling a home you will be pleasantly surprised how easy and convenient mortgage lending can be. In some cases loans can be processed in the record time of a couple of days.

This story was submitted by Peggy Strong of Chaparral Realtors.

Location primer

Location continues to be the single most important factor to consider when purchasing real estate. It plays a significant role in determining the value of the property (and the return on your investment) and can enhance or detract from your enjoyment of the home.

Sutton

Look for a location which is growing in terms of price appreciation. The community should be stable, in close proximity to shopping, schools, parks, churches and recreational centers. In addition, the neighborhood should be in a low crime area. The quality of the school system, along with the proximity of work is of prime importance. Check out the condition of routes you will have to take during high traffic hours.

Some guidelines for evaluating potential neighborhoods are to check if yards are well landscaped and maintained; look for a good balance in the population - are there older people as well as children? Minimize noise pollution by checking the proximity of airports and railroads and find out whether any public transport is close enough to be convenient, but far enough away to not to be a nuisance.

A TREASURE TROVE OF HISTORY

Mention history to most school students, and you will probably see their eyes glaze over with boredom.

Mention history to David C. Bartko, general proprietor of El Dorado Trading Co. in Midland, and his eyes light up.

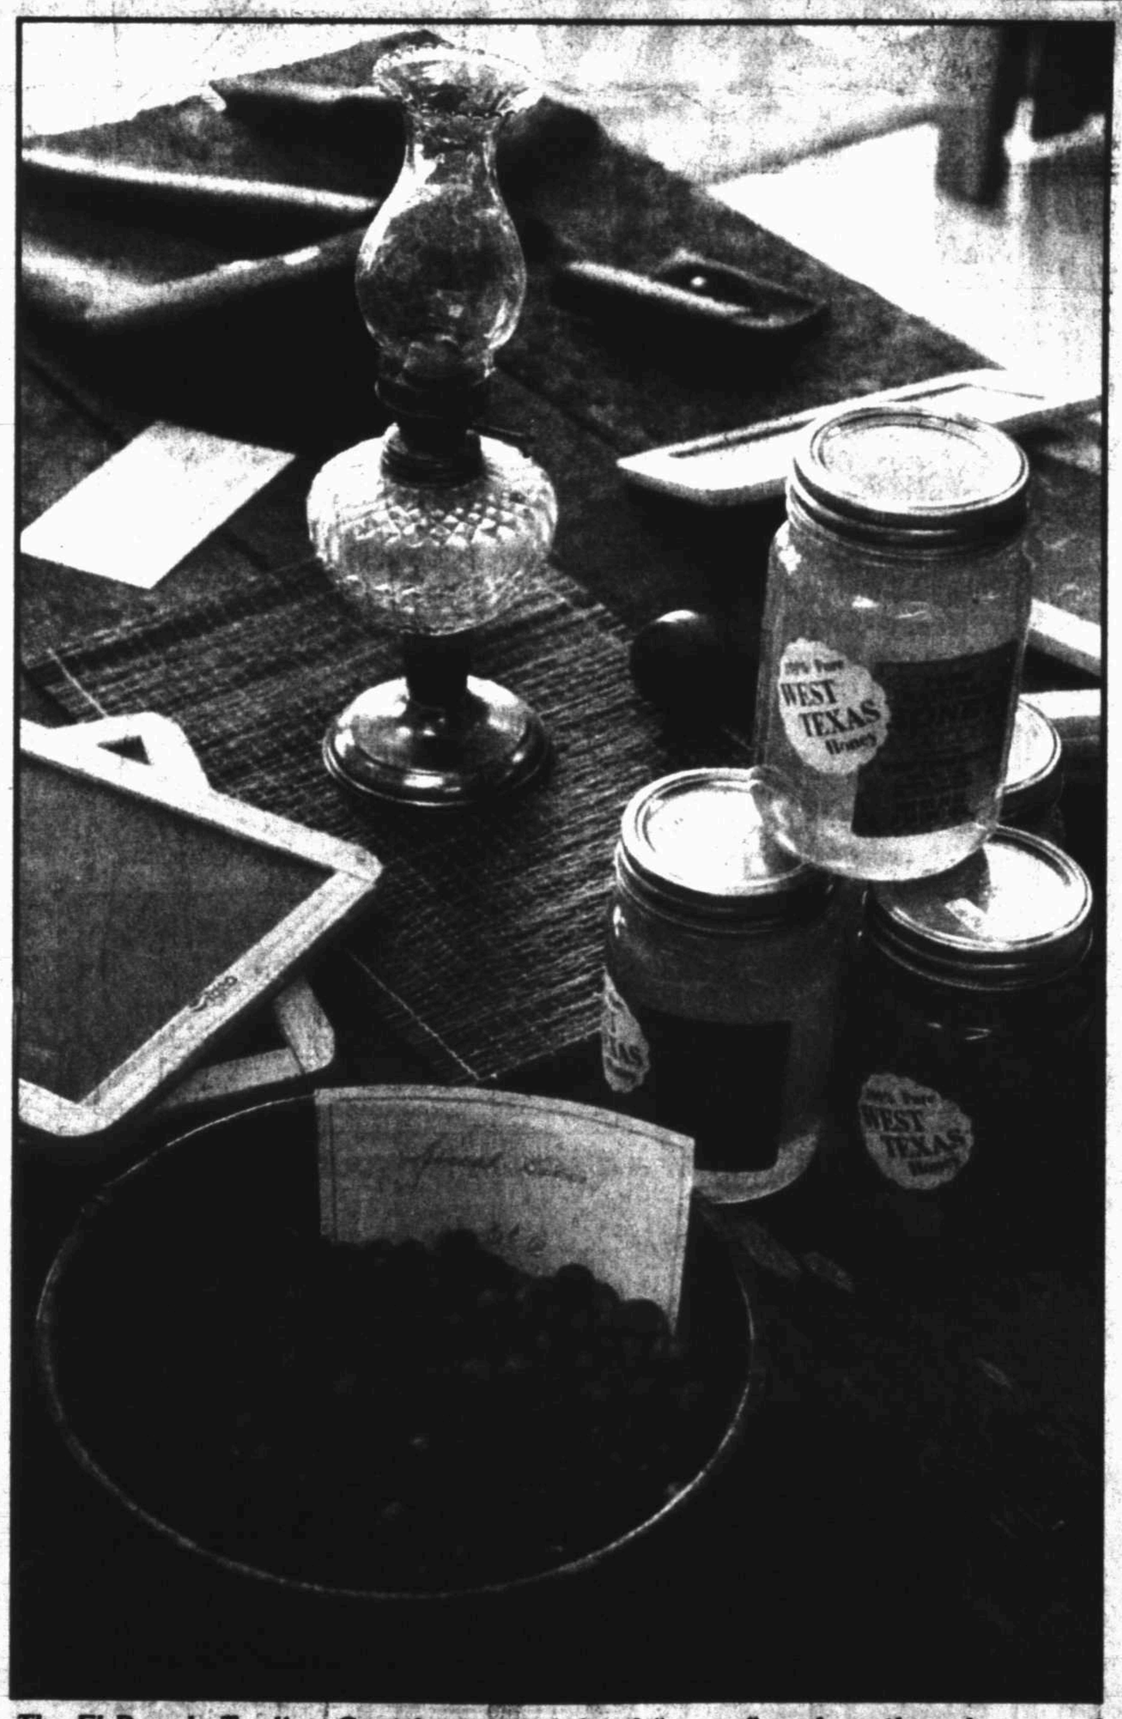

History, one of the least favorite subjects in most classrooms, is Bartko's favorite topic of conversation. In fact, his company is based on history and historical artifacts from the last 150 years or so — basically, "any time from the original Texas Republic to the 1880s, (but) generally from the Civil War," Bartko said.

His store is modeled on old-fashioned general stores. "We try to make this place look like old time trading posts looked," he said. Because it is an old-fashioned establishment, Bartko calls himself the "proprietor" instead of the owner.

And like all good general stores of 150 years ago, this one has a "customer-greeter," a dog named Samantha who greets anyone who comes in the door.

Inside the store, which is a treasure trove of all kinds of interesting — and aged — objects are replicas of "Wanted" posters and clothing from the 19th century, restored and rebuilt weapons, crafts made in the styles and

Auguishes entertain at MCT production of 'It Runs in the Family'

By Marilyn McKnight-Harrison

Nancy and Buddy Anguish entertained friends at a special presentation of Midland Community Theatre's production of the British farce, "It Runs in the Family," recently.

McKnight-Harrison

Held at Cole Theatre, the party began with cocktails and hors d'oeuvres in the lobby before the 7:30 p.m. curtain. Cast and crew members joined guests after the show for late night refreshments.

Prior to the performance, Buddy presented a special "door prize" to Leona Bryant Smith. Also receiving special recognition were Les Munson, who was celebrating his 40th birthday that evening, with his wife, Gloria, and the Anguishs' children, Nancy Anguish of Austin, Margaret (Anguish) and Robert Cobb of Coppell and Rod Steele of Dallas.

Among others seen in the audience were Sally and Bill Stella, Marion and John Kimberly, Sandy Landua, Marty Conine and former Midlander Brenda (Mrs. Jim) Shute of Atlanta, Ga., with her parents, Betty and Don Ewan.

TO CELEBRATE with Sarilyn and Bill Black on the completion of their new home in Racquet Club South, a host of friends were invited recently for parties held on two successive nights.

In the elegant surroundings, guests were served a lovely cocktail spread and an array of delicious desserts.

Among those joining in the festive occasion were the Blacks' daughter, Paige, and her husband, Leo Grumulaitis of Houston, Verneta and Dedric Baxter, Frances and Larry Stapp, Mary Margaret and Fred Byrom, Debbie and Al Spinks, Susan and Craig Atchison, Marietta Johnson and Albert Metcalfe III.

Having the distinction as the youngest guest was two-month-old MeKenzie Dean, along with her parents, Deborah and John Dean.

CELEBRATING the engagement of their daughter, Cally, and Bryan Lege, Carol Ann and Lynn Hunt hosted a Fiesta Mexicana last weekend in the Mabee Hall of the Junior League of Midland headquarters.

Guests enjoyed a delicious Mexican buffet. Chili pepper balloons, along with other brightly colored balloons, decorated the serving table and the round tables, where the partygoers were seated. The registry table held a floral arrangement accented with chili peppers, Precious Moments bride and groom figurines and a picture of the engaged couple.

Family members present were Bryan's parents, Veda and Ron Lege of Kingwood; his sister, Valerie Lege of Baton Rouge, La.; Cally's grandmother, Hazel Supple of Plaquemine, La.; her sisters and spouses, Sully and Cris Norris of Lubbock and Kippy and Jim Clapp of Dallas, and her sister and brother, Terry Lynn and Robert, both of Midland.

RONALD MEYER combined business with pleasure recently when he and his wife, Chita, traveled to Baltimore, Md., where he attended the national convention of the American Association of Marriage and Family Therapists.

Prior to the convention, the couple enjoyed sightseeing in and around the Washington, D.C., area, including a trip to Mount Vernon.

In Baltimore, the Meyers stayed at the Inner Harbor, which has been restored as a marvelous tourist attraction. While Ron was in meetings, Chita enjoyed a visit with several of her cousins and a day trip with them to Annapolis and the Eastern shore. They also spent some shopping time at historic St. Michaels, Md.

JAZZ LOVERS, take note! On Dec. 13, noted jazz pianists Ralph Sutton and Johnny Varro will be featured in concert at the Odessa Country Club. The West Texas Jazz Society is sponsoring the event, which promises to be a highlight of the holiday season.

A recent concert sponsored by the jazz society featured the John Pizzarelli Trio. Guitarist John and his brother, Martin, who plays bass, are sons of guitar great, Bucky Pizzarelli. Pianist Ray Kennedy completes the trio.

They played at the Yucca Theatre to a large and appreciative audience. Among those seen in the crowd were B Lee and John Dorn, Cordy and David Ritchie, Pat Paxton, Polly Luck and Sue (Mrs. Frank) Mullins.

Alice Moxey hosted a dinner for the musicians and members of the jazz society's board of directors after the performance.

The following day, the trio played for the Permian and Odessa High Schools' stage bands. Their appearance was sponsored by the Arts Assembly of Midland.

Think back not too many Christmases ago when selecting greeting cards was an easy process.

As the end of the November approached, you could go to the grocery story and find a bargain box of cards in about five minutes. The cards usually had a big picture of Santa or an angel on the front and "Merry Christmas and Happy New Year" in large letters on the inside.

No problem. That was the easy part. The hard part was getting the cards in the mail before Christmas morning.

If only it were that easy today.

Christmas cards have evolved from these impersonal creatures to tiny extensions of the messenger and recipient. There are cards for different ethnic groups, cards for the visually impaired, cards for the hard-to-buy for and even cards for photo collectors.

Before you make your selection, know your options. Boxed Christmas cards usually reflect the card-senders tastes, while individual cards are selected with the recipient's tastes in mind. Most people tend to mix and match at Christmas, sending boxed cards to co-workers and long-distance friends and personalized cards to immediate family.

Here are some of this year's offerings:

ALPHABET CARDS

Artifacts Inc. makes personalizing Christmas cards as easy as "ABC" with its cherub postcards. Each card has an angel surrounded by flowers and one letter of the alphabet. Using the postcards, customers can spell out words such as "LOVE," "DAD" and "MOM."

The messenger can write a note on the back or have them framed. The postcards are available in the framing department of Ambers Stores for under $1 per card.

ETHNIC CARDS

Messengers who want Christmas cards to be an extension of their cultures have lots of choices. American Greetings has the Baobab Tree line and Kwanzaa cards for African-Americans, the La Flor collection for Hispanics and a line of New Year cards for Chinese Americans.

In addition to its ethnic line of cards, Hallmark has an assortment of Hanukkah cards for people of the Jewish faith.

COLOR LASER CARDS

If you want to give relatives and friends an update on the happenings in your life since last year, try designing a color newsletter on a computer. Add pictures and have the finished copy mass produced at Bear Imprints or Kinko's Copies.

VISUALLY IMPAIRED

If you know someone who is blind or can't see as well as they used to, don't despair. American Greetings offers large-print Christmas cards for people with reduced vision. Hallmark offers two different designs of Braille cards for $1.95 each.

SEARS SLIMLINE CARD

For people who show off family photos, Sears offers a photo postcard. The cards take about two weeks to print. The first 20 cost $16. Every set of 10 after that costs $6.

SNAP SHOT GREETINGS

If you don't want to use a formal studio portrait for a Christmas card, try Snap Shot Greeting Cards from Eckerd Drugs. The company makes 3½ x 7-inch greeting cards out of color prints and negatives. The cards cost $15 for 25 cards, $29 for 50 cards and $55 for 100 cards. Customers must place their orders by today for guaranteed delivery.

CREATACARD

For the people who can't find a card that says what they want it to say, American Greetings offers CreataCards. Using computers located in a variety of stores, customers can select their own design and insert their names and messages. The cards cost around $3.50 and take about five minutes to make.

HISTORY: Items at Trading Post make history come alive

traditions of Native American crafts, and real antiques and books.

Often customers use objects from Bartko's store for Living History pageants, such as the ones presented at area historical sites and restored forts.

Bartko's love of history comes naturally. Some of his ancestors fought in the American Revolution. "I love living history," he said. "My family used to tell stories about the family. Originally they were from Connecticut. Three brothers fought in the Revolution. They were printers and got jailed (in 1776) for printing Thomas Paine's 'Common Sense.'"

The son of one of the three brothers/printers "gave up the business in 1815," took the authorities up on an offer of land in the west, and "that's how he ended up in Ohio," he added.

His own family history so intrigued Bartko that now, when he participates in Living History pageants, he tries to base his character on his own ancestors.

Originally from Cleveland, Bartko said he has been fascinated with history all his life, and opening a store like the one he has in Midland has been a long-time dream.

He came to Midland to work in quality control for a plastics company, and when that job ended, decided the time was right to fulfill his dream. Largely self-taught in several crafts, including gunsmithing and blacksmithing ("I collect and restore flintlocks," he said), Bartko said he learned a lot of his skills by spending time on some Indian reservations and absorbing information and traditions from Native Americans.

However, the dream of the store — although originally Bartko's — isn't just his anymore. Pat Terrill, who has known Bartko since 1988, followed him to Midland to be his business partner in the enterprise, and several other craftsmen contribute their work to the store.

Emmett Roch is a leather craftsman and gunsmith. "I do some gun repairs," he said.

"Not everyone, but a fair lot (of people) who spend a lot of time here (in the store) are history buffs," Roch said, "and love Texas history. I've been interested (in history) the better part of my life. When Dave moved here it was perfect because he was someone who was into the same stuff I was into."

Roch and his partner, Zack Casey, produce leather work for Bartko's establishment. "He and I work together on the stuff I bring in here."

Frank Sablan does bead work based on Native American styles. He has been working in his craft for about 15 years, he said, after becoming interested in it while he was in Boy Scouts. As an adult, he continues to work on his skills. "I've got an outfit fixed up with Lakota Sioux style," he said. "It's been a hobby of mine" for years.

"I kind of just learned on my own. I've been to powwows in Oklahoma" where he learned by watching Native Americans.

Sablan uses glass trade beads to make his breastplates, chokers and other items look as authentic as possible.

Because these craftsmen try to make their work as close to the original as possible, the setting for their work should be original too. That's why Bartko tries to make sure that items in his store are locally produced.

And that includes the ammunition for the old guns they restore, refurbish or rebuild. "We make bullets too," Bartko said. Not just any bullets — the guns are based on models that are 100 years old or better, so the bullets are too.

The old guns and old clothing come in handy for people like Sablan, who, besides being a beadworker, is a member of the Texas Army, "a group of living history reenactors" who specialize Texas history during the years 1836-46, he said. The goal of the group is to educate the public on the history of their state, he said.

In spite of the groans of schoolchildren who might think history is boring, it isn't a dull subject for many people. "We have a group of regular guys who come in at least once a week," Ms. Terrill said.

Most of them are probably history buffs who enjoy soaking up the atmosphere of their cultural past. Sometimes life is easier by getting out of the fast-paced late 20th century for a little while.

LONDON (AP) — One of England's greatest surgeons, Sir Astley P. Cooper (1768-1841), studied at St. Thomas Hospital here and later went to Guy's Hospital as surgeon. In 1813, Cooper became professor of comparative anatomy at the Royal College of Surgeons. He is best known for his historic operation in 1817 tying the abdominal aorta for aneurism, achieved in an era before antiseptic surgery.

Cooper also wrote "The Anatomy and Surgical Treatment of Hernia."

Hollies lovely in winter gardens

By Deborah A. Benge-Frost

Each season has its own unique beauty, and winter is no exception. With the right plant selection, the drab, dormant yard can be transformed into a colorful and interesting place. Pulling in evergreens, plants with exfoliating bark, plants with character or engaging silhouettes, and ornamental grasses can make the difference. Don't settle for dormant bermuda and the dead, dry refuse of leftover summer. Plan and plant the landscape so the winter garden is just as enchanting as the summer garden.

Benge-Frost

There are many plants that can be incorporated into the landscape that will bring exceptional sparkle to winter gardens. One group of plants that do this very well are hollies. Many hollies are exceptional as winter plants because of the fruit and/or the evergreen nature they possess. Yaupon, deciduous and Nellie R. Stevens are all good examples.

Yaupon holly, Ilex vomitora, is a well-known, well-used holly in area landscapes. This plant makes a good specimen plant, small tree or major accent, and is beautiful besides useful. It does well in the area, being tolerant of full sun or shade, and all soil types and moisture conditions. Reaching heights of 20 to 25 feet, it can easily be pruned into a single or multi-trunk tree shape or left as a large shrub. Texture is fine due to smaller evergreen leaves, dense growth and small berries, making it suitable in small areas such as a patio or courtyard. Yaupon hollies have a small, creamy-white bloom on separate male and female plants. Female plants set a small fruit that is berry-like and brightly colored, which really adds to the charm of the yaupon. If you want the berries (and who wouldn't?), choose specimens that are known female cultivars, such as Pride of Houston, or select plants after flowering and berry set has occurred. This time of year is a good time to look. There are a few foliage pests that can be a problem, but this isn't prevalent. Iron chlorosis or yellowing of leaves can sometimes be a severe, persistent problem that may require micronutrient fertilization or reevaluation of care practices.

Deciduous holy or possumhaw holly, Ilex decidua, can be the wintertime star in the garden. Very similar to yaupon in form, the plant's major difference is that it drops its leaves during the dormant season. Leaves are slightly larger, darker green and thinner (meaning it has less of the moisture conserving waxy covering and is not as drought tolerant as the yaupon holly). Just like the yaupon, the deciduous holly has separate male and female plants. Females set berries that range in color from a bright yellow-orange to a brilliant red. It's not until the possumhaw drops its leaves that the spectacular show begins. Be sure to select a female possumhaw, either by shopping after berries have set or buying a female cultivar such as Warren (with its deep red berries), Byer's Gold, yellow fruit or some of the other cultivars. Berries hang on through the winter and sometimes into the spring when cedar waxwings can show up to feast on the fruit. Berries show up well when there is a background of evergreen shrubs, blue sky or other suitable backdrop. Tolerating a wide range of soils but doing best with a moist soil, possumhaw needs a thick layer of mulch (actually all hollies need mulch). It will grow in shade, but as with all fruit-producing plants, it will fruit best in full sun. The fruited, bare limbs of the possumhaw holly are spectacular in the winter garden.

Nellie R. Stevens holly is a hybrid cross of Ilex aquifolium X cornuta. It is a female holly that produces a spectacular show of bright red berries that are larger than either of the previously mentioned hollies. Leaves are more typically holly-like — perfect for Christmas decorations. They are a dark green with three points at the tip, very glossy and attractive. This plant tolerates a wide range of exposures and soils, and can be extremely durable. Easily trained into an attractive single trunk, it grows to a height of 20 feet. The texture is medium and the plant grows in a more symmetrical, formal manner than the yaupon or possumhaw.

Other hollies that do very well include:

■ Chinese or horned holly, Ilex cornuta, has given rise to many excellent evergreen hollies. One in particular is a dwarf called Rotunda, which has a dark green, plastic-like leaves with several tapering, opaque spines. The spininess of the leaves can make this plant a good one for discouraging foot traffic through a landscaped bed or up to private windows. A sport of this cultivar is Carissa, which is similar in shape and size, but the leaf is very different, being cupped in upward and with only one spine at the tip. Both are very compact and low growing, reaching 4 feet with age. They rarely fruit. It is an excellent shrub for the landscape.

■ Burford holly, Ilex cornuta "Burfordi," is an excellent, well-adapted evergreen shrub that has only one spine at the tip of the leaf, making it a little friendlier in the landscape than some of the other I. cornuta hybrids. This tough, versatile shrub will grow in many exposures and soil conditions. It grows quickly and is excellent as a hedge or small tree, obtaining a height of 12 to 20 feet.

■ Dwarf Burford, Ilex cornuta "Burfordi Nana," is like the Burford but the leaf is more elongated and it is a more compact, slower grower. This shrub is excellent, especially when used as an evergreen shrub in the front yard landscape because of its smaller size. With age it can obtain heights of 6 feet and might best be used as corner plantings. Both Burford and dwarf Burford produce attractive red berries.

Mary Nell holly is a cultivar that grows to a height of 15 feet with a 10-foot spread, making it a good choice for specimen or small trees. It grows best in a full sun location and is evergreen.

■ Foster's holly, Ilex X attenuata "Fosteri," is a holly that will grow in many exposures, soils and moisture conditions. It grows in a pyramidal form and grows 9 feet tall with a 6-foot spread, making it a good choice for background, specimen and small tree forms. It has leaves that are blue-green with many shallow marginal teeth and a medium texture. Fruit are borne singly or in clusters and are bright red. This plant may have excellent potential for our area.

Hollies prefer moist soils and partial shade, but most will tolerate extremes. Fine, shallow roots are sensitive to salty conditions, and over-fertilizing with a quickly available fertilizer can blacken leaves and stunt or kill plants. Use light, frequent fertilizer applications — an organic or slow-release would best. Be sure to use a deep mulch, avoid cultivation and give occasional deep irrigations.

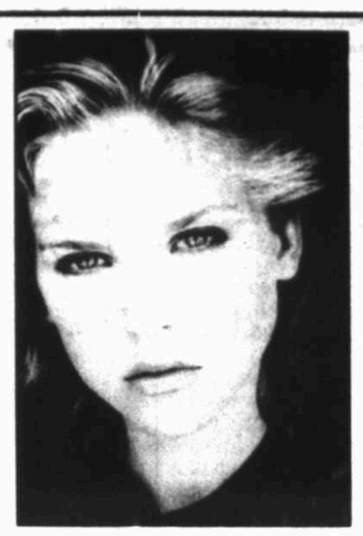

For a list of recommended hollies, contact the Ector or Midland County Extension offices for a copy of the Recommended Landscape Plant Materials List.

Mastering these ABCs allows you to learn life's lessons

By Abigail Van Buren

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am 14 years old and enjoy reading your column. Two years ago when I was in the seventh grade, the school counselor gave everyone in our class a copy of a poem in your column, "To Achieve Your Dreams, Remember Your ABCs." It helped me when I didn't know what else to do. I somehow lost my copy; would you please print it again? I know it will help others, too. — DEANNA EVERETT, DALLAS

DEAR DEANNA: You are a wise young lady. The author of the poem is Wanda Carter, who wrote it during a difficult time in her life. To help her cope, she began recalling positive phrases. Putting them in alphabetical order made it easier for her to remember a particularly appropriate one. The poem brought her comfort and has inspired many who have read it. Here it is:

TO ACHIEVE YOUR DREAMS, REMEMBER YOUR ABC'S

■ Avoid negative sources, people, places, things and habits.
■ Believe in yourself.
■ Consider things from every angle.
■ Don't give up, and don't give in.
■ Enjoy life today; yesterday is gone, and tomorrow may never come.
■ Family and friends are hidden treasures. Seek them and enjoy their riches.
■ Give more than you planned to give.
■ Hang on to your dreams.
■ Ignore those who try to discourage you.
■ Just do it!
■ Keep on trying. No matter how hard it seems, it will get easier.
■ Love yourself first and most.
■ Make it happen.
■ Never lie, cheat or steal. Always strike a fair deal.
■ Open your eyes, and see things as they really are.
■ Practice makes perfect.
■ Quitters never win, and winners never quit.
■ Read, study and learn about everything important in your life.
■ Stop procrastinating.
■ Take control of your own destiny.
■ Understand yourself in order to better understand others.
■ Visualize it.
■ Want it more than anything.
■ Xccelerate your efforts.
■ You are unique of all of God's creations. Nothing can replace you.
■ Zero in on your target and go for it!

WORTH QUOTING: "Jews wandered in the desert for 40 years because even in biblical times, men wouldn't stop and ask for directions." (Elayne Boosler)

Holiday season doesn't have to mean overeating

By M. Katherine Hoy
Associated Press

The holiday eating season is upon us, so it's time for people who are weight watching or have special dietary needs to make some preparations.

Much of the planning is psychological. Holiday gatherings often feature tables piled high with calorie-rich foods, hosts who urge their guests to have just a little bit more to eat, and a free flow of alcoholic beverages.

One preparation is to practice saying "no" in ways that won't offend the host or hostess who offers that extra helping. That can be done beforehand by visualizing the situation and the response to it. If the host is really insistent, it's possible to take only a few bites of the undesired food, leaving the rest on the plate.

Be prepared for buffet tables that are piled high with foods you'd rather avoid because of their calorie content. Again, visualize the temptation beforehand and determine how best to resist the temptations. One way is to take only small helpings of the highest-calorie foods and fill the rest of the plate with lower-calorie fruits and vegetables.

If you know the host well enough, you can ask to have low-calorie foods or even bring them yourself.

Alcohol complicates things. Drinking alcoholic beverages not only adds empty calories but also lessens inhibitions about many things, including eating. One solution is to drink nonalcoholic beverages as much as possible. As for alcoholic drinks, stretch them out as long as you can.

All these precautions apply doubly for the person who is the host at a party or dinner. Food and drinks shouldn't be pushed at guests and low-calories foods should be available. Doggie bags can be supplied for those guests who find the food irresistible and will help to prevent too many leftovers.

AT WIT'S END

Couple can't paper over differences in battle with news

By Erma Bombeck

Many people think the Bombecks have a stable marriage. In public we hold hands, laugh at each other's jokes and present a picture of tranquility.

It's a sham.

Once we are in the house behind closed doors, the controversy over the old newspapers that surround us rears its ugly head.

Because this is my column, this is my side of the story. I love newspapers. I started working for one when I was 15. I've been recording my words in them for more than 30 years. I read them, and then I discard them like dead fish and go on to a fresh one the next day.

Bombeck

My husband does not do this. He does a quick scan at breakfast, goes to the bathroom with the comics under his arm, and later at night falls asleep in his chair with the paper.

Now, here's the scary part. Does he admit there's more paper than hours in the day? No! He carefully scoops up the papers and puts them on a chair. When the stack can bear no more without toppling, he moves them to the floor, onto sofas, chests and tables, and anywhere he can store them.

I do not want a house decorated in Ancient Headlines. If you want to know what your horoscope was three years ago, we have it. If you have a burning desire to know what the weather was like in '91, we can find it for you. If you want to bet on what movie was No. 1 in 1957, we can settle the argument.

When people visit our home, they notice the stacks of newspapers right away. That is because they have to sit on them.

I have reasoned with him about the fire hazard of having piles of newspapers in the house. I have offered to summarize them in a page so he will feel he hasn't missed anything. I have awakened him from a sound sleep, shoved a newspaper under his nose and ordered, "Wake up and read!"

We were gone last summer for three months. He read a newspaper every day we were gone. When we came home, it was to a stack of newspapers he had ordered be saved.

The other night he looked up and said, "I wonder how this mess in Bosnia is going to be resolved."

"They'll probably assemble everyone in Dayton, Ohio, and try to make peace," I offered.

He shook his head. "That's absurd. The trouble with you is that you skip through the paper and get everything messed up."

Holiday cards celebrate joys of the season

Southwest News Wire

WASHINGTON — December is here, and that means a season of hustle and bustle — finding and decorating the perfect tree for Christmas, polishing the menorah and frying latkes for Hanukkah or preparing traditional African dishes for the seven days of Kwanzaa.

But one holiday tradition shared by virtually everyone is card sending. This year, Americans will exchange approximately 2.7 billion Christmas cards and 11 million Hanukkah cards, according to the Greeting Card Association (GCA), the national trade organization for the greeting card industry.

"Card sending is a way for people to step back from the hectic activities of the holidays and take time to share their joy with friends and family," said William Dustin, president of the Greeting Card Association. "Whether you are looking for traditional Christmas greetings, religious Christmas cards in Spanish, Hanukkah cards for children or holiday greetings decorated with Afro-centric art, the perfect cards for you are on the shelves this season."

The first Christmas card printed in England 152 years ago bore the message "A Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year to You." And while Christmas has grown into the most popular card-sending holiday of the year, that has remained the dominant sentiment for greetings of the season.

The Victorians also inspired the artwork on many of today's most beautiful Christmas cards. Reproductions of actual Victorian cards grace the shelves, along with cards featuring lace, gilding and die-cutting — all popular over 100 years ago.

Rich colors that recall the gowns and furnishings of Dickensian England give depth and warmth to traditional cards. Look for a palette of deep green, burgundy, plum, midnight blue and gold, as well as favorites red and green.

But nostalgia isn't limited to Victoriana. Scenes reminiscent of traditional American artists like Currier and Ives and Norman Rockwell appeal to those nostalgic for the spirit of an old-fashioned Christmas. And folk art themes also evoke this mood.

Americans are focusing more than ever on the spiritual side of Christmas, and religious cards featuring the Nativity, reproductions of paintings of the Madonna and child and images of churches are all popular. Angels represent the latest trend in religious cards, from stately reproductions of stained-glass Seraphim to cherubic children in wings and halos, heavenly hosts are spreading greetings of hope and joy this holiday season.

Diversity is the byword for holiday greetings in the 1990s.

CARDS SPECIFICALLY for African-American consumers have existed for decades, but these greetings have evolved far beyond depicting black families in traditional Christmas scenes. Illustrations by African American artists, designs based on African textiles and symbols significant in African and African-American culture are abundant this year. Holiday cards for African-Americans include designs for Kwanzaa, which celebrates traditional African community values from December 26 through January 1.

Hispanic consumers will find a wider array of Spanish language cards this season than ever before, including many religious designs that reflect the Hispanic culture's emphasis on the sacred aspects of Christmas.

And for America's growing Asian community there are now a variety of Chinese New Year cards celebrating the arrival of the Year of the Rat on January 19.

Because many Americans have recent immigrant roots — including family in the old country, and family members here who are still learning English — greeting card publishers offer Christmas cards in over one dozen languages.

This year's Christmas cards celebrate regional pride as well as ethnic influences. Consumers can find Santa in a Texas-sized cowboy hat or on water skis. And holiday landscapes now include the desert and palm-lined beaches as well as city and country snow scenes.

No one enjoys the holidays more than a child, and this year's cards are sure to add sparkle to every youngster's holiday.

Santa himself couldn't have designed a more fun-filled array of activity oriented cards, filled with puzzles, stickers and games that make them perfect gifts as well.

Children love Santa, reindeer and teddy bears — all popular figures on cards for the younger set. Also look for characters from television, books, movies and comics.

For young adults and nostalgic baby boomers, licensed characters like Elvis, Opus N' Bill and Opus and Rocky & Bullwinkle are hits.

Offbeat humor has been popular with young card senders ever since "studio cards" debuted in the 1950s, and this year is no exception. Look for cards that poke fun at the holiday hazards like over eating and over spending. Santa is another frequent target of these witty and whimsical cards.

Mature consumers usually take a more traditional view of Christmas, and keepsake cards allow them to send cards that are both traditional and unusual. These greetings feature opalescent and crystalline finishes and such unusual touches as three-dimensional pop-out designs and musical sound chips. Best of all, these ornate cards can serve as card and gift all in one.

Because one out of every 10 senior citizens is visually impaired (and one out of every 35 people between 18 and 44), card publishers now offer special large print Christmas cards. These cards have plain lettering, nonglare stock and a specialized color palette making them easy to read.

ANIMALS ARE a favorite theme on holiday cards this season. Virtually every breed of dog and cat is represented in both photographs and illustrations.

Prints and photographs of wildlife, from the traditional deer and ducks to exotic endangered species, also grace greetings this year. These natural beauties are often printed on recycled paper to help preserve the environment they celebrate.

Jewish Americans will celebrate Hanukkah Dec. 18-25 this year, and many sending cards as an important part of sharing the joy of this more than 2000-year-old holiday.

Hanukkah is especially popular with children, who receive gifts on each of the eight days and help light the candles on the menorah. Special Hanukkah cards feature stickers, a punch-out dreidel and other activities that help teach children about the holiday.

And special greetings are no longer for just Mom, Dad and the immediate family, but also for "blended" families and everyone from a favorite teacher to the mail carrier.

"We've come a long way from the original Christmas card, but the spirit of card sending is the same," says Dustin.

Where did the Christmas tree originate? Why are there eight candles in the Hanukkah menorah? Why do we wait for Santa? Who started the custom of card sending? Some fascinating facts and fancies form the history of our favorite holiday traditions.

Sir Henry Cole, a Londoner, began the custom of sending Christmas Cards in 1843 when he commissioned artist John Calcott Horsely to design a card that was then printed and delivered to friends and associates. It bore the message "Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year to you."

Hanukkah celebrates the Jews' victory over the Syrians in 165 B.C. The holiday also commemorates the rededication of the Temple in Jerusalem, when a sacred oil lamp burned for eight days — even though there was only enough oil for one day. Hanukkah is called the Festival of Lights because of the miracle of the lamp.

Santa is an American. He was created by Clement Moore in 1822 when he wrote "The Night Before Christmas." However, he was inspired by St. Nicholas, a 4th century Archbishop who devoted his life to children. In Europe, St. Nicholas has for centuries brought gifts and sweets to children.

The Christmas tree began as an ancient Germanic custom. In pagan times, German tribes are believed to have used evergreens in winter solstice celebrations. When the tribes converted to Christianity, they changed holidays — but kept their beloved trees. The custom was brought to England by Queen Victoria's German husband, Albert, in 1841.

We kiss under mistletoe because Druids in pre-Christian Britain believed it symbolized purity and love and used it in their sacred rites.

The tradition of a Christmas open house began in old England, when Saxon lords threw open their great halls to lords and peasants alike for feasting, dance and song once each year at Christmas time.

EDUCATION

Education in Brief/2F
Making the Grade/4F

What I learned about leadership ...
(from Lamar students)

"Leadership taught me what people do and how they do it. My favorite place was the Midland County Courthouse ... it (the visit) taught me about the judge's job and I got to sit in the judge's chair and see what it was like to be a judge."

— Emily Watkins

"I learned (at Susie's South 40 Confections) that you have to believe in yourself to do something, like own your own business."

— Katelin Filip

Midland Mayor Bobby Burns shakes the hand of Lamar Elementary School student Jarrod Fowler in the City Council chambers. The student participated in an eight-week leadership course which teaches leadership skills.

From visiting a candy factory and sampling taffy to quizzing the mayor on major issues in the city council chambers, 20 Lamar Elementary School students spent eight weeks exploring Midland, and learning about what it takes to become a leader.

Moss

Modeled after the city's Leadership Midland program for civic-minded adults, Lamar's Future Leadership class utilizes community leaders to teach about responsibility.

"The class helps students to become better prepared to be mediators, problem solvers, and models for other students," said Ron Moss, Lamar counselor and Future Leadership program sponsor.

Moss, along with fellow Lamar counselor Jan Markee, led fourth-grade students to Memorial Hospital and Medical Center, KWES-TV Channel 9 broadcasting station, the Midland County Courthouse, Midland Community Theatre, a veterinarian hospital, and a plastics maker.

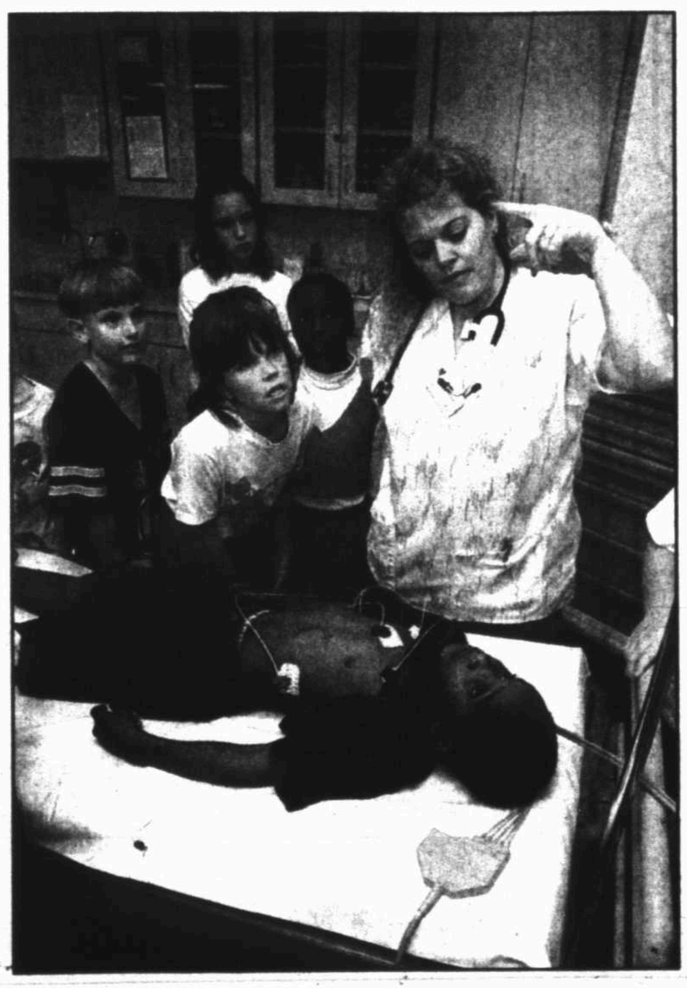

"We learned various things as we traveled to various places," Moss said.

Excitement was high at the end of the program, when students assembled in the council chambers to hear Midland Mayor Bobby Burns explain city operations.

Chamber seeks top educators

■ Parents, students, principals and educators can submit nominees for Teacher of the Year

From Staff Reports

Is there a teacher in your child's life who deserves to be recognized for above and beyond efforts? Is there a teacher who has made great strides with students? Parents, students, principals and teachers may nominate favorite local educators for Teacher of the Year.

The Midland Chamber of Commerce's Education Combination is accepting nominations for Teacher of the Year. Information packets with nomination forms have been distributed to the schools.

The Education Combination offers the awards in partnership with Midland Independent School District.

Each campus has a Teacher of the Year nominating committee which includes the school principal, the Parent Teacher Association president, teachers elected by the faculty and parents selected by the campus PTA.

All classroom teachers employed by an accredited school may be nominated. Candidates should take an active role in their community as well as in the school. They should have the ability to inspire the love of learning in students of all backgrounds and abilities. They should have the ability and willingness to work cooperatively with colleagues, a drive to initiate activities that improve instruction for students, the desire to stay informed of current educational theories and practices, make meaningful contributions to education, and demonstrate innovation in the classroom.

A chamber banquet in the spring will honoree all nominees. Each campus level winner will receive a framed certificate and a monetary award of $100. Teachers who are runners up to the winners will receive a plaque or framed certificate and a monetary award of $500. They will also receive $250 to be spent on classroom supplies.

Midland teachers of the year (one at the elementary and one at the secondary level) will receive up to $700 for professional travel of conference fees (to be used within one year), $75 for a book to be placed in the campus resource library, and $250 for classroom supplies.

The winners will also be the guest speakers at the chamber's annual pic-nic for new teachers in August.

The campus-level selection deadline is Dec. 15. All applications must be turned in at the chamber by Jan. 12.

Winners will be announced at Teacher of the Year reception 7 p.m. March 21. The location will be announced later.

OC registration closing

ODESSA — Registration for the midwinter session at Odessa College will continue through Thursday.

Advance registration for the 1996 spring semester ended Friday.

Midwinter session registration times are 8 a.m.-6 p.m. Monday through Thursday on the second floor of the Student Union Building.

Payment deadline for midwinter registration is 10:30 a.m. Dec. 27. Payment deadline for advance spring registration is 6 p.m. Jan. 3, 1996.

This year's midwinter session begins 1 p.m. Dec. 27 and ends Jan. 12, 1996.

The courses parallel those offered in the regular term, except they are compressed into a shorter time span. The courses are designed to allow students to complete a two- or three-semester hour course in a special short-term session. The courses receive full academic recognition, with the credit earned being equivalent to a regular session.

Students transferring from other college's for OC's midwinter session must submit an official transcript at registration to document their Texas Academic Skills Program (TASP) status and TASP scores.

For more information call (915) 335-6400.

EDUCATION POLICY

The Midland Reporter-Telegram publishes information on upcoming school-related events in the Education in Brief section and announces high school and college academic achievements in the Making the Grade section.

All articles are edited to Associated Press style and deadline for any articles is Monday at noon to be published in the following Sunday education section. Items will be published on a first-come-first-serve basis as space allows.

The Making the Grade section honors local students and former area students attending universities. Head-and-shoulder photographs may be submitted with articles for Making the Grade honorees.

Band and cheerleader competition results are published as they are received. Photos are published of All-State students and cheerleaders winning sweepstakes trophies, or state or national awards.

High school end-of-year award night honorees, junior high school honor roll lists, National Honor Society inductees, Duke Talent Identification honorees are provided to the newspaper from local schools. Duke Talent honorees and Who's Who Among American High School students are published twice a year as a group, and are not published individually.

Education needed for holiday mailing

From Staff Reports

It's time to put on your thinking caps to avoid delays in the holiday mail. The weather may be warm and sunny in Midland, but that doesn't mean snow storms across the United States won't be delaying the mail, according to information from the U.S. Postal Service.

It's just one more reason to mail packages as early as possible. Avoiding the Christmas rush is the best reason to mail early.

Other tips from the U.S. Postal Service follow:

■ Use computer peel-and-stick labels for addressing speed through the post office's automated equipment.

■ Use white envelopes or white peel-and-stick labels. Automated equipment has difficulty in reading print on dark colored envelopes.

■ Avoid sending odd shaped items which cause envelopes to be bulky. They can cause damage and loss.

■ Mail early in the month and early in the day to avoid the avalanche of last-minute mailings.

■ Keep address uniform, left justified, and all capitals with no punctuation.

■ Use complete address, including apartment numbers and office suites.

■ Print addresses in block style, not script, so they can be read by computers.

■ Never guess at zip codes.

■ Mail early. Mail early.

Midland Mayor Bobby Burns fields questions from Lamar Elementary School students at their visit to the City Council chamber. The discussion on city issues was followed by the mayor giving the fourth-grade students their certificates of completion for the school's Future Leadership course.

LEADERS: Students explore city

(From 1F)

"We've got about 99,000 people in a city with a budget of $78 million," Burns said. "Our city is changing and the city you knew two years ago is completely gone. Midland has changed that much."

"We have a great city. But, it's yours, not mine," Burns said. "It does not belong to me or the city council."

While he explained the operations of the water and sewer departments, students had other issues on their minds.

They wanted to know what was being done to cut down on crime and gangs, and why the city water still didn't taste good. "And what about the Bird Lady?" one youngster asked, referring to bird rehabilitator Midge Erskine who has been thwarted by city zoning battles. "You sure are asking some tough questions," Burns said before trying to explain complicated zoning laws to the elementary school students.

STUDENTS ALSO asked about the Midland's explosion of retail businesses.

"In the next nine months Midland is going to double the square footage of businesses that we got in the last 15 months," Burns said.

At the end of the mayor's discussion, Moss presented the graduating Future Leadership class to the parents in the audience. The mayor shook hands with all the young graduates and handed out their certificates.

'What you sow in your child's life today will be the world's harvest tomorrow.'
— Ron Moss, Lamar counselor

"You have learned the various forms leadership takes across the city," Moss said in an address to students. "You have learned what a leader is. Now you can go back to Lamar and be leaders on campus."

Moss told parents they were the primary leaders in the lives of their children. "There is no greater example to a child than parents," Moss said. "Students only spend one-third of their lives in school. We are often obsessed with the idea that our children's lives must be better than ours, so we set off to give them more material things when what they want is our time."

Moss told his young charges to "Forget about this fast food mentality. Everybody wants things quick and throwaway. Instead you need to stay the course. Your efforts will eventually pay off." To parents the school counselor said, "What you sow in your child's life today will be the world's harvest tomorrow."

Students involved in the program spoke of the things they learned from visiting offices in Midland they had never been to before. Whether it was sitting in the jury box of the Midland County Courthouse, meeting Sheriff Gary Painter or the mayor in the flesh, or walking into a veterinarian's office, students showed the same level of enthusiasm for all of the activities.

"I feel that I have become a leadership role model," said student Rene Garcia, writing about his experience. "I have gained trust by my teacher, counselor and class mates."

Student Isaac Galvan, in writing of his experience, thanked a leader in his eyes, Lamar counselor Ms. Markee. "If she did not take me home (after leadership trips), I could not have gone to leadership classes," Isaac wrote.

Katelin Filip said, "In leadership you have a choice. You can learn or you can play. I chose to learn."

Program combines classroom, work

Partnership between business, college provides extra training

■ "A taste of the real world" is the way MC automotive technology student Craig Tellinghusen describes the CWE program.

For Bill Hagee, service manager at Jack Sherman Chevrolet, supporting Midland College's Cooperative Work Experience (CWE) program makes good business sense. "Industry support of education is good for the school and good for the business," Hagee said of the program that is a partnership between students, Midland College and business.

CWE provides an educational program that combines classroom learning with work experience in a field related to a student's academic or career goals, according to program director Michael LaPlante.

At Jack Sherman Chevrolet, both Hagee and students praise the program for its practical value. "This is a taste of the real world," said automotive technology student Craig Tellinghusen, who combines classes at Midland College with work at Jack Sherman. Fellow student Claude Hendricks also is in the program. Bill Haase, who began the CWE program last February, is now a full-time employee in the service department.

"Twenty-five years ago it was easy to train someone to work on a car," Hagee said. Now, complex computer technology on new cars means that auto technicians need extensive electronics training.

Providing that extra training is the point of the co-op program. This is a chance for students to "walk in ahead of their peers," LaPlante said.

"Jack Sherman has done great things with CWE," LaPlante said. "It's been a real plus."

Students can earn co-op credit through any of Midland College's occupational/technical programs.

LaPlante pointed to the example of one student who began as a co-op student with the Midland Housing Authority and now is employed with that agency.

This semester, 30 students and 28 businesses are participating in the program. Enrolling in the CWE course at Midland College gives students a "capstone course," LaPlante said. All the students' classroom experience culminates in one course that gives them an opportunity to get real life work experience.

MC co-op student Craig Tellinghusen (left) and Bill Hagee, service manager of Jack Sherman Chevrolet look over the engine of a car in the service department.

To earn the three semester hours of CWE credit, students must work a minimum of 20 hours per week, attend 16 hours of seminars, complete a three- to five-page report, keep a time card and go through an evaluation process at the end of the semester.

"This is an educational forum," LaPlante said, stressing that CWE is not a way to find part-time employment. The student and the employer work as a team through CWE to achieve quality, on-the-job training, he said.

Aviation tech takes off with job opportunities

■ "Right now there are more jobs in the industry than graduates," according to an MC Aviation Maintenance Instructor.

> "People are going to keep flying and they need mechanics to keep the airplanes going."
> —Dennis Givens, Aviation Maintenance Instructor

Midland College's Aviation Maintenance Technology program is adjusting course to meet the needs of students looking for a career in aviation technology after a turnaround in the industry has opened up more job opportunities, according to MC instructor Dennis Givens.

"People are going to keep flying, and they need mechanics to keep the airplanes going," Givens said.

In the past, between 25,000-30,000 licensed airframe and powerplant aircraft mechanics across the country graduated each year. This year only 5,800 new mechanics will be licensed. This week, American Eagle in Lubbock announced plans to hire 30 new mechanics with another 70 being hired within a year.

"We're trying to get graduates out quicker," Givens said of the program that gives students hands-on experience in repairing all types of aircraft from single-engine planes to helicopters to jets.

The program has been redesigned to be completed in four semesters, which means that students will take an average of 16 hours a semester.

For instance, students who start the program in January 1996 can complete both the airframe and powerplant portions of the curriculum and be prepared to take the Federal Aviation Administration licensing exam in May 1997.

The college also will offer aviation maintenance classes at night beginning in January. Students in the night program can expect to complete the program in 42 months.

"Right now there are more jobs in the industry than graduates" Givens said, pointing to job openings in Odessa, Lubbock, Seminole and Abilene.

Givens anticipates that more jobs in Midland will become available as the industry continues to expand.

MC's program began offering classes in 1992 after more than $1 million in contributions from the community helped establish the state-of-the-art facility at Midland International Airport.

Angel Fire: Past and present

Angel Fire, NM: - In the 1700's the nomadic Moache Ute Indians came to the Moreno Valley and saw the fiery skies above Agua Fria Peak and took it as a blessing on their rituals, an Omen from the "Great Spirit." The Franciscan Friars were the next to travel the Moreno Valley, and they proclaimed the mountain to be "the place of the Fire of Angels" after seeing the alpenglow effect at dawn and dusk. In the 1860's, famed scout Kit Carson witnessed the alpenglow of the morning sunlight reflecting offthe frosted mountain top and called it "Angel Fire."

By 1870, more than 7,000 frontiersman had moved to the Moreno Valley in search of gold. It was reported that miners were extracting a million dollars a day in gold, copper and silver from local mines. In fact, the Moreno country became the most productive gold mining district in New Mexico, yielding over 6 million dollars in gold between 1866 and 1907. With the influx of wealth from mining came the notorious desperadoes of the time. Jessie James, Black Jack Ketchum and others were known to frequent the area and on more than one occasion were blamed for local robberies and murders. Desperadoes and priests, gamblers and visionaries have all staked their claim in the Moreno Valley, of which Angel Fire is the legendary crown jewel.

Angel Fire Resort was founded in the mid-1960's by the LeBus family of Wichita Falls, Texas. Afier a trip to Vail Ski Resort in Colorado, the family decided to turn years of ranching into a future of skiing and golfing. Roy and G.F. LeBus laid the foundation for Angel Fire in 1954 and the resort opened for skiing in the winter of 1966. The season ended with only 750 paid skier visits, but the groundwork had been laid for a resort that was to become one of the largest in New Mexico.

The same natural beauty that attracted the colorful characters of New Mexico's past is still here to be enjoyed by today's traveler. It has remained a charming part of the Enchanted Circle and boasts a wide variety of family activities amidst an "Angelic"

From Staff Reports

Cuchara, CO -Resort Area Management, Inc., which oversees operations at New Mexico's second-largest ski resort, SKI RIO, has taken over management of Colorado's Cuchara Ski Valley, a ski area located in the Sangre de Cristo Mountains 28 miles west of Walsenburg near Interstate 25.

Following a management consolidation trend in today's skiing industry, the merging of the two resorts allows the Resort Area Management team to offer season passes and frequent skier benefits at both resorts.

"This combined approach to lift tickets and season passes gives the local skier and the out-of-state visitor more variety and that adds value to the customer's skiing experience," says Cuchara Ski Valley Resort Operations Manager Bill Murphy. RAMI, Inc.'s Vice-President Lawrence Smith notes the merger creates other benefits as well.

"Resort Area Management brings a great deal of ski industry know-how to Cuchara Ski Valley," says Smith, who has 30 years of experience in the resort industry. "Economies of scale including shared marketing, personnel and resources all help to keep costs at the two resorts down and makes the Cuchara Ski Valley venture more profitable. "

Round the mountains, resort updates

Ruidoso, NM., - Over the years individuals and families have returned time after time to the Village of Ruidoso, New Mexico. Located high in the Sacramento Mountains the village offers excellent cultural and recreational facilities combined with an incomparable climate.

Ruidoso is truly the playground of the Southwest where the warm village atmosphere makes each day an exciting experience.

Horse racing with parimutual wagering begins May 12 and culminates with the world's richest quarter horse race on Labor Day with a $1,000,000 purse paid to the winner.

The Ruidoso experience includes the vibrant color of New Mexico sunsets -the crisp mountain air - the sounds of birds in towering pines - skies of startling blue - all with the relaxing casualness that allows you to truly enjoy yourself.

See the new Museum of the Horse, golf at the beautiful links at the Sierra Blanca Golf Course or try your luck at the new Casino Apache.

Throughout Ruidoso you will find friendly faces, quaint boutiques, art galleries, gourmet restaurants and much, much more.

Village Lodge is conveniently located in the middle of Ruidoso across the road from the Smokey Bear Ranger Station and between two of Ruidoso's finest golf courses in a beautiful setting among the tall pines.

Santa Fe, NM., - The Hotel Saint Francis is a three story historic inn with 82 guest rooms just one block from the old plaza in the heart of Santa Fe, New Mexico. The current structure was built in 1923 and has recently undergone a major renovation.

A unique ambience has been created with the combination of 1920s style and distinctly Southwestern elements such as clay tiles and wrought iron chandeliers. During the renovation careful attention to detail has been given to refurbishing existing antiques and purchasing reproductions. Other features include a lamp that originally hung in the old State Capitol building.

The Hotel Saint Francis is the only Santa Fe hotel to be listed in the National Register of Historic Places.

For more information call (505) 983-5700.

Costilla, NM., - The brave at heart now have it all at Ski Rio - SnowCat skiing, untouched powder and Double Black Diamond runs. Taking the downhill plunge guarantees many a moment of memory making, whether blasting your way through the thrilling steeps and deeps of Payback, making a dramatic escape Down the Hatch or savoring the daring defiance of Free Fall.

"Opening Carmello Peak has always been one of my goals," said Ski Rio CEO Lawrence Smith. "It has been a vision of mine since way back in the early 80s. Having the capability of experts only skiing is a real asset to any mountain and I am pleased we're able to make it available to our guests.

The logistics include an exhilarating SnowCat ride. For safety skiers are accompanied by one of Ski Rio's expert guides. Three of the six designated trails will be serviceable and are open to expert skiers only. The all mountain inclusive ticket is $50 for adults and $40 for juniors. Access will be enhanced in 1996.

THE YEAR IN REVIEW

BRIEFING

Independents such as Parker and Parsley face a CO2 future.

CO2 conference

Monday and Tuesday's CO2 conference and exposition at the Midland Center is designed to inform and excite producers as well as encourage independents to consider CO2 projects by providing a roadmap designed by the majors.

Please see CONFERENCE/2G

Drilling steady

Drilling activity was steady during a holiday-shortened week that ended November 22, according to Baker Hughes Inc.

In the Permian Basin, the rig count remained at 125 for a third week, above last year's count of 117.

Lea County, N.M. remained the most active in the Basin with 21 rigs, followed by Eddy County, N.M. with 18 rigs and Crockett County with 10 rigs.

The U.S. rig count dipped five rigs to 774 for the week, below the year-ago count of 842.

Among major producing states, Texas and North Dakota posted the largest gain, three rigs each. The largest decline was in Louisiana, four rigs.

Please see COUNT GRAPH/7G

Prices slip

Prices climbed above the $18 level at the beginning of last week and remained above that level, riding the coattails of gasoline prices that reached two-month highs on news that inventories had fallen to a 24-year low. Natural gas prices also climbed briefly during the week as a severe cold spell hit parts of the country.

Late in the week, January contracts for West Texas Intermediate closed at $18.18 on the New York Mercantile Exchange. The posted price held at $16.50 a barrel. Natural gas futures closed at $2.01 per thousand cubic feet.

Please see PRICE GRAPH/7G

Kiker honored

Robert (Bob) Kiker, executive vice president of the Permian Basin Petroleum Association, has been named by Texas Gov. George W. Bush to stand on one of the standing committees of the Interstate Oil and Gas Compact Commission. The 29-state organization hold its 60th anniversary meeting Monday through Wednesday in Houston. The IOGCC serves as the voice of governors on oil and gas issues.

Tubular acquisition

Frank's International Inc. and Frank's Tubular International Inc. announce Frank's companies' U.S. expansion into tubular inspection and related services through recent asset acquisitions from Tubular Inspectors Inc. and Thread-Tech Inc. The added technology, equipment and personnel expand Frank's Tubular into the domestic market.

Top, a worker vents CO2 at a header. Right, reservoir modeling, under consideration on a computer screen, will be a major factor in the new CO2 boom. Injection wells, bottom right, will become a common sight in more and more Basin fields, and CO2 will become a word used about as much as oil or gas.

CO2 could fuel boom in Basin

By John Paul Pitts
Oil Editor

Will the Permian Basin ride into the sunset of a prosperous future on the back of a CO2 boom? Some experts think so.

Studies indicate that 400 fields are potential candidates for CO2 floods, that 60 would be economical at current prices. Of the 60, about 30 are ready right now to go to CO2 because of demonstrated success in similar reservoirs.

"CO2 floods could do for the Permian Basin in the 90s, what waterfloods did for it in the sixties," said Stephen Marino, New Business Manager for Mobil.

Mobil estimates that the 60 fields in question, if flooded with CO2, could recover an additional 500 million barrels of oil that would not have been recovered otherwise. Some estimates have placed the recovery even higher — perhaps as high as one billion barrels. When Mobil began CO2 injection in its Salt Creek field in late 1993, oil production in the field more than doubled from 10,000 barrels a day to approximately 23,000 barrels.

Another factor that could send CO2 recovery numbers off the chart would be a higher oil price. Constant oil prices above $20 would both accelerate and expand CO2 development to less marginal projects, while putting a tighter squeeze on reservoirs already under flood. Also, reservoir profiles are expected to become even more sophisticated in the next few years as the CO2 boom moves into high gear and operators gain experience. And new tools like 4-D seismic and cross well tomography will help improve the sweep.

It is a recovery process that could result in the addition of thousands of new jobs in the Permian Basin, benefiting both high tech professionals and field personnel. Mobil estimates that 20,000 working owners and 250-plus operators would be involved in CO2 recovery under present economic parameters.

Service companies would stand to benefit big time from a CO2 boom. It would cost $1.50 a barrel to put the projects in place to recover the estimated 500 million barrels, and that alone would generate $750 million in new revenues. If the average new job associated with CO2 development is $60,000 annual salary, $750 million in development revenues alone could result in 12,000 new jobs.

That, however, does not include the jobs generated in the Permian Basin by the production of 500 million or so additional barrels of crude oil, nor the jobs created by an estimated $2.70 per barrel in operating costs. Neither does it include jobs generated by the sale and transportation of CO2.

Marino predicts that the CO2 boom will happen because CO2 recovery is the cheapest way to put a barrel of incremental oil in the tanks. Drilling for primary reserves, he says, costs in the neighborhood of $7 per barrel, while buying a barrel of oil in the acquisition market can go as high as $8.50 a barrel. "With CO2 the cost of an incremental barrel is only $6.50 a barrel. That's because we have gotten the operating cost of a CO2 project down below a waterflood."

As independents begin to move toward CO2 projects, Marino said they would be able to get for almost free the technology and lessons learned that the majors have spent 20 years and billions of dollars to learn.

Marino said the window of opportunity was open now for independents, that if they wait until the water cut becomes too high, some of the reservoirs may not make it to tertiary. He said the urgency of the situation should make a boom, if there is to be one, happen very soon.

Permian Basin served as laboratory to develop CO2 technology

By John Paul Pitts
Oil Editor

With a geological column that extends from 50 feet to five miles deep and produces from every single formation somewhere in the Basin, it is no wonder that the Permian Basin has become the CO2 capital of the world.

Geology, however, is only part of the reason. The fact that nearly all the CO2 technology was developed in the Permian Basin for the Permian Basin is another reason for the proliferation of the enhanced oil recovery projects in this oil and gas producing empire.

When many of the waterfloods initiated in the fifties began to decline in the late sixties and early seveties, Permian Basin operators began to look at a number of recovery options that would carry recovery to the next level. Among the options were: in situ fire floods, CO2 floods and caustic (soap) floods and polymer injection.

Gulf Oil Co., in 1975, had all of the above recovery techniques under study at once in its North Ward Estes. But in the end it was CO2 that prevailed, not only in the North Ward Estes, which was put under CO2 flood in 1989 and is expected to produce an additional 16.5 million barrels of oil, but in the entire Permian Basin.

The move from waterflooding to CO2 flooding was not a giant leap of faith for Basini operators because Chevron, in its SACROC Unit, had already demonstrated that gaseous recovery technique worked. And before that was RGS Petroleum's successful CO2 project in Union County, Arkansas. And, even before that, waterflood operators in the fifties reported that recovery seemed to improve when carbon dioxide gas was added to the water.

Nevertheless, SACROC became the world's first miscible flood when CO2 was injected into the Chevron-operated Canyon Reef field, which wraps around the eastern flank of Snyder in Scurry County. The gas was supplied through a pipeline (Canyon Reef Carriers) that brought CO2 from the Val Verde Basin which at that time was the closest source. The gas was supplied by four gas plants that stripped the gas from CO2-contaminated gas wells in the Brown-Bassett, Grey Ranch and Pucket fields. Despite the high cost of the 230-mile pipeline and CO2 installation, SACROC was profitable from the start.

One reason it was profitable, according to CO2 pioneer Wallace Stanberry, was because the new expensive technology allowed the operator to disregard allowables and produce the wells at their Maximum Efficiency Rate.

Even at that early date the beneficial effect of incentives were undeniable. If the Texas Railroad Commission had not had the wisdom to see that "incentives don't cost," the CO2 movement in the Permian Basin might not have happened for years to come.

Something should be said also of the fact that the new miscible technology allowed the operator of the 50,000 acre unit to recover more oil. It was estimated, at the time of injection in the world's first miscible project, that the SACROC would produce another 100 million barrels of oil as a result of CO2 flooding. At the time of discovery in 1948 it was estimated to contain 2.75 billion barrels of crude.

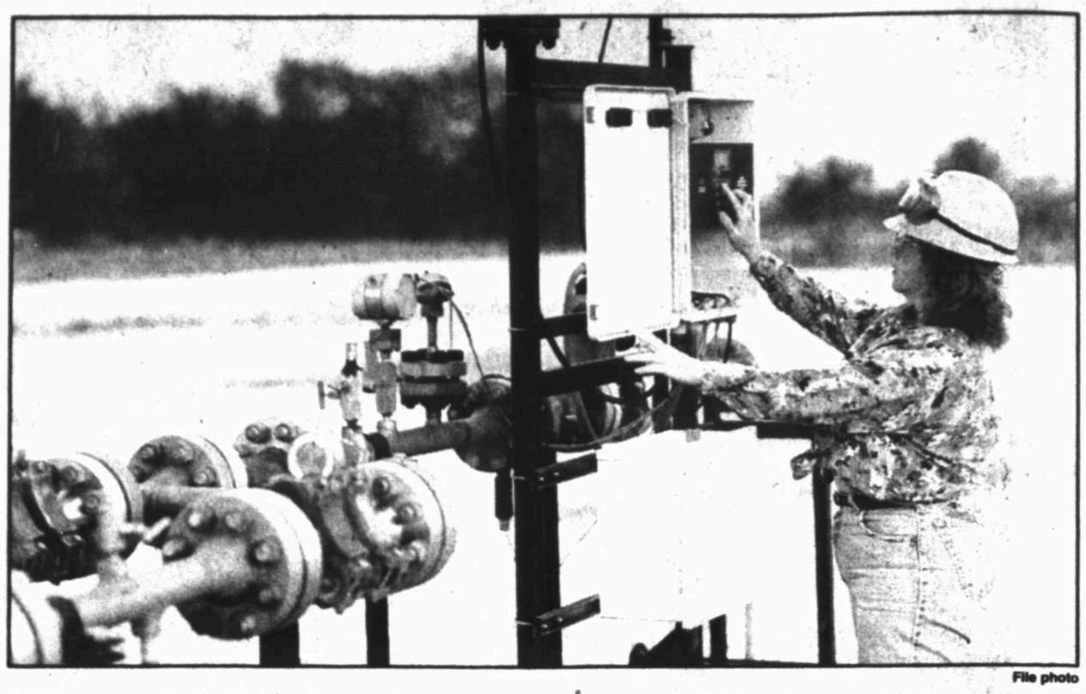

Shell's North Cross field was put on CO2 flood a few months later, and by the late seventies every major oil company in the Permian Basin had pilot projects going.

Despite the fact that the bottom fell out of the oil industry in 1982 and 1986, the eighties saw some of the largest fields begin taking CO2. Amoco's Slaughter District, which included the Central Mallet Unit, Frazier and Slaughter estate units and Wasson ODC, began receiving CO2 gas in 1984, even though its pilots in the Basin date back to 1972. That was the same year Shell's massive $900 million Denver Unit in the Wasson field began full scale CO2 injection.

Other major CO2 operations initiated in the 1980s were: Arco's Sable, Willard, and Empire Abo; Conoco's Ford-Geraldine, Exxon's Means, Corona Lake, and Wasson Cornell Unit; Mobil's GMK South, Slaughter, Wasson and Wellman; Amoco's Levelland Unit; Unocal's Dollarhide; Marathon's Yates field; Phillip's Maljamar, Leamex and Vacuum fields and Amerada Hess's Seminole Unit. Texaco's Mabee unit and Amoco's Cowden projects were not started until the early nineties.

Today half of all CO2 projects in the world (approximately 40) are located in the Permian Basin and that number is set to more than double over the next several decades. CO2 projects now account for 20 percent of the total Basin oil production today, that amount, over the next 10 years, could easily grow well beyond 50 percent, as a flurry of new projects are initiated.

If CO2 is the future of the Permian Basin, it is likely to be a long one. The National Petroleum Council has estimated that as much as 3.7 billiion barrels remain to be recovered in the West Texas and New Mexico using CO2 recovery techniques.

Upcoming CO2 conference meant to inform, excite industry participants

■ Sponsors hope conference will prompt operators to seriously consider opportunities.

By John Paul Pitts
Oil Editor

The Permian Basin CO2 Conference & Exposition will be the largest conference ever held in the U.S. to focus strictly on CO2 recovery. It could also become the pivot on which the whole Permian Basin turns — from secondary to tertiary recovery.

Some are hoping it will become a bundle of facts, experience, knowledge and science that will convince Permian Basin operators and producer to think seriously about the CO2 opportunity.

"For many oil properties in the Permian Basin, it is more a matter of now or never than opportunity," said Chuck Fox, in charge of CO2 marketing for Shell Oil Co. and one of the sponsors of the Conference.

He explained that many of today's waterfloods are nearing their economic limits and must decide soon to plug or take the tertiary road. For that reason Fox said the Conference was designed to inform and to excite.

Exhibits will feature many of the suppliers and services that have both the knowledge and products that operators will need to start new CO2 projects.

Steve Melzer, who has initiated vendor sponsored seminars at the Center for Energy and Economic Diversification, points out that vendors are often times the top source of information.

Melzer will also present a one day short course that will deal specifically with the installation of CO2 projects.

"This will hit on a lot of the technical aspects, of an actual installation," Melzer said.

The two day forums, on Monday and Tuesday, were designed by the Permian Basin Chapter of Society of Petroleum Engineers to provide Conference attendees with an overview of a wide range of factors involved in CO2 projects.

"The focus will be on sharing case history information on downhole and surface operations that have worked — and not worked," said Craig Moody, who along with Tim Schneider is coordinating the panels and presentations.

Two featured speakers during the Forums are Wallace Stanberry, president of Transpetco Petroleum of Shreveport, and a pioneer in the business of CO2 recovery. His efforts in the field go back to 1968 and an association with NAME, who is reported to be the father of the CO2 concept. Another featured speaker on Tuesday will be Jim Posey, manager of Amoco's Permian Basin Business Unit and leader of the transition team which is currently trying to shape the new Shell-Amoco Permian Basin oil company.

While major oil companies will continue to be a part of the CO2 scene in the Permian Basin, a larger share of the responsibility is expected to fall upon independent oil companies, many of who have bought properties from major oil companies.

Said Fox: "This conference will provide independents a road map for installing CO2 floods, and give them the benefit of 28 years experience by major oil companies. The conference will also dispel the myth that CO2 is too expensive for independents. Not only are the costs way down, but some majors are now willing to help finance CO2 projects, either through production payments or other means."

He said the "Cadillac" approach taken by majors may not have been the most cost efficient means of installing a CO2 tertiary project.

"This conference will bring together in one place the largest assembly of CO2 knowledge ever gathered, because we feel it is important that those who are considering CO2 projects make personal contact with the firms and individuals who have the necessary expertise and equipment."

He said suppliers and contractors to CO2 projects had learned many valuable lessons over the years and were anxious to pass them on.

Shell plans to spend $240 million to develop Gulf of Mexico prospect

HOUSTON —Shell Offshore Inc. (SOI) announced plans to develop the Enchilada prospect area in the Garden Banks area of the Gulf of Mexico. The Enchilada prospect area is a cluster of subsalt oil and gas discoveries located about 185 miles southwest of New Orleans. The cost to develop the discoveries as one integrated project is estimated at $240 million. Ultimate recovery from the five block prospect area is expected to exceed 100 million barrels of oil and gas equivalent.

Shell Offshore Inc. is operator of the project with Amerada Hess and Pennzoil Company as partners. Initial development of the area will be accomplished with a conventional production platform to be installed on Garden Banks Block 128 in late 1996. This platform will function as a transportation hub for this development and other industry projects in the Garden Banks and Green Canyon areas. A second platform will be installed later to complete development of the field. When fully developed, the field should produce up to 300 million cubic feet of gas and 40,000 barrels of oil and condensate per day.

Shell Offshore drilled the initial discovery well in early 1994 on Garden Banks Block 128. Additional discovery wells were drilled in early 1995 by Amerada Hess on Garden Banks Block 172 and by SOI on Garden Banks Block 127. Garden Banks Blocks 83 and 84 will be developed in conjunction with the Enchilada prospect area. SOI discovered oil above salt on these blocks in 1990.

Shell Offshore Inc. is an affiliate of Shell Oil Company, which is based in Houston.

HOW $CO_2$ LOWERS THE COST OF RAISING PROFITS

AN ENHANCED RECOVERY IDEA WHOSE TIME HAS COME

Today, the economics of $CO_2$ recovery have improved to the point that every producer can consider $CO_2$ floods in fields already worked beyond the limits of profitable waterflooding. We know, because we developed much of what helps make $CO_2$ flooding so affordable today – comprehensive reservoir characterization and analysis software, risk reduction and management programs, cost/benefit analysis, design and installation expertise, and creative financing and payment plans.

Along with today's advanced technologies and software, new equipment economies and lower $CO_2$ prices have brought the extraordinary benefits of $CO_2$ EOR within reach of virtually every producer in the Permian Basin. Cost through start-up – about half what it was 10 years ago.

DRAMATIC INCREASES IN PRODUCTIVITY

$CO_2$'s unique ability to dissolve in oil is the key to major productivity enhancements. At the Salt Creek Unit, for instance, oil production went from 9,000 bpd to 21,000 bpd in less than a year. Some of our operating floods in the Permian Basin have driven recoverable reserves from 35% of the original oil in place to more than 50% with some. In the Wasson field alone, we expect to recover 350 million barrels that would be unavailable by any other means, and add 20 years to the productive life of the field.

WHAT'S IN IT FOR YOU?

If you want more detailed information on the latest $CO_2$ flood technology, call Sal Gutierrez at Mobil (915 • 688-2285) or Chuck Fox at Shell (713 • 544-3840). Ask about the reservoir analysis that we can do for your field using our newest, most accurate and advanced screening program. We'll nail down the benefits and risks that $CO_2$ flooding holds for you.

Majors use expertise to bury remaining obstacles to CO2 future

By John Paul Pitts
Oil Editor

When you want something to happen, you increase the options, make it cheaper and remove the barriers. That's exactly the tack, major CO2 suppliers have taken in trying to open up the CO2 market to independents.

"We have worked out a whole 'cafeteria plan' to meet the needs of independents," says Chuck E. Fox, Shell's chief engineer in charge of CO2 marketing, who expects CO2 recovery to add another 800 milliion barrels of oil in the Pemian Basin.

So far the major hurdles to independents getting into tertiary CO2 projects have been technology, cost and financing. But now Shell, Amoco and Mobil say they are prepared to provide assistance on all three accounts to independents — or other majors to bring widespread CO2 opportunity to the Permian Basin.

Said Jim Posey, manager of Amoco's Permian Basin Business Unit: "There is plenty of CO2 potential in the Permian Basin, and Amoco intends to capitalize upon it by applying its experience to all facets of CO2 flooding — both in fields it operates and in fields operated by other majors or independents."

In one major venture in the El Mar field, the venture involved Amoco, providing CO2 and project technology and design; Enron, building a pipeline from the Dollarhide field in Winkler County to Loving County to supply the CO2. Tom McKnight, the independent operator of the El Mar field, arranged for financing from Norwest Bank, installed the project and worked out a production payment arrangement with Amoco.

A native of Odessa and a graduate of Texas Tech, Posey points out that Amoco was the first to negotiate production payments on a CO2 project with an independent. Posey expects partnerships, alliances, mergers, join ventures and other cooperative arrangements will dominate in the new CO2 environment.

Shell will take a royalty interest, working interest, or workout a production payment. "We are very flexible," said Fox, "and will do what it takes to meet the needs of independents." Some features of the of the cafeteria plan may include: a CO2 pricing structure where the price varies over time and response; oil price hedging; formation of tax partnerships; design and installation of CO2 projects and business and accounting services.

The key will be sharing the risk and reward. Fox said Shell might even finance the up-front cost of putting in a CO2 project or structure a deal so that an operator could get bank financing. "We see our role as a provider of CO2 as creating wealth for the industry. For the industry to prosper, all the stakeholders in the Permian Basin — operators, working interest owners, royalty owners, CO2 providers, and equipment and service providers must have acceptable rates of return and cash flow."

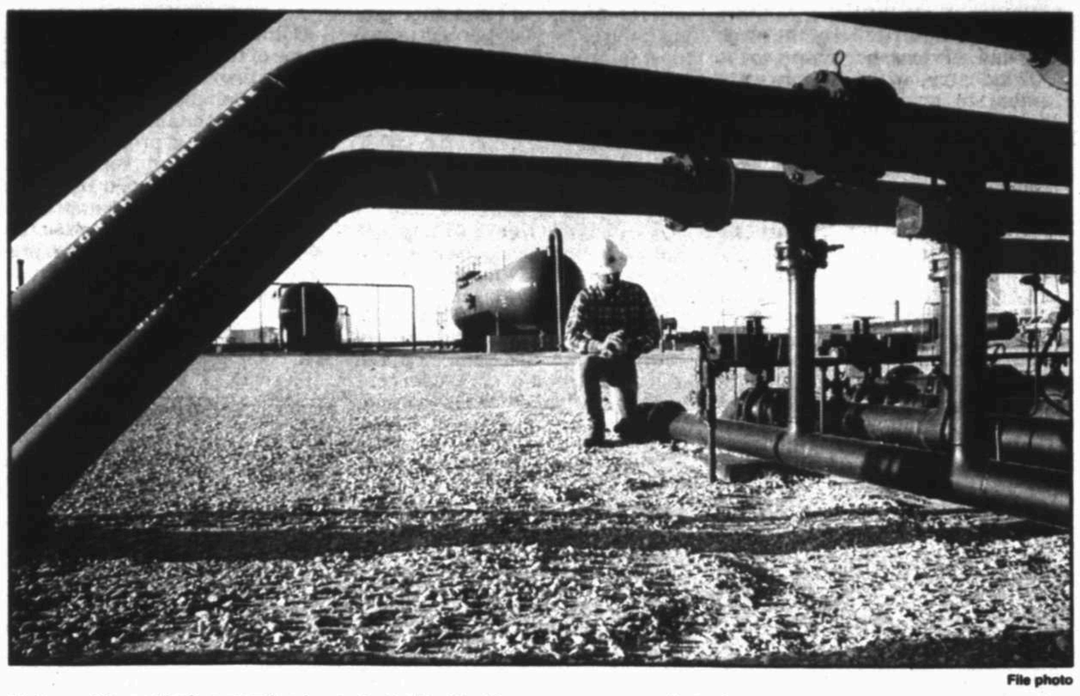

The typical criteria majors use for identifying prospective projects is those that can provide a return of greater than 10 percent with $16 oil.

So far, a survey conducted by ICF-Kaiser Consulting Group, has identified 50 Permian Basin field that account for 80 percent of the oil in place that would likely be profitable. A good percentage of those fields belong to independents. Mobil has studied 400 fields and says 60 are profitable at current prices.

"There is more potential out there for CO2 than anyone ever imagined," said Steve Marino, who heads Mobil's CO2 marketing effort.

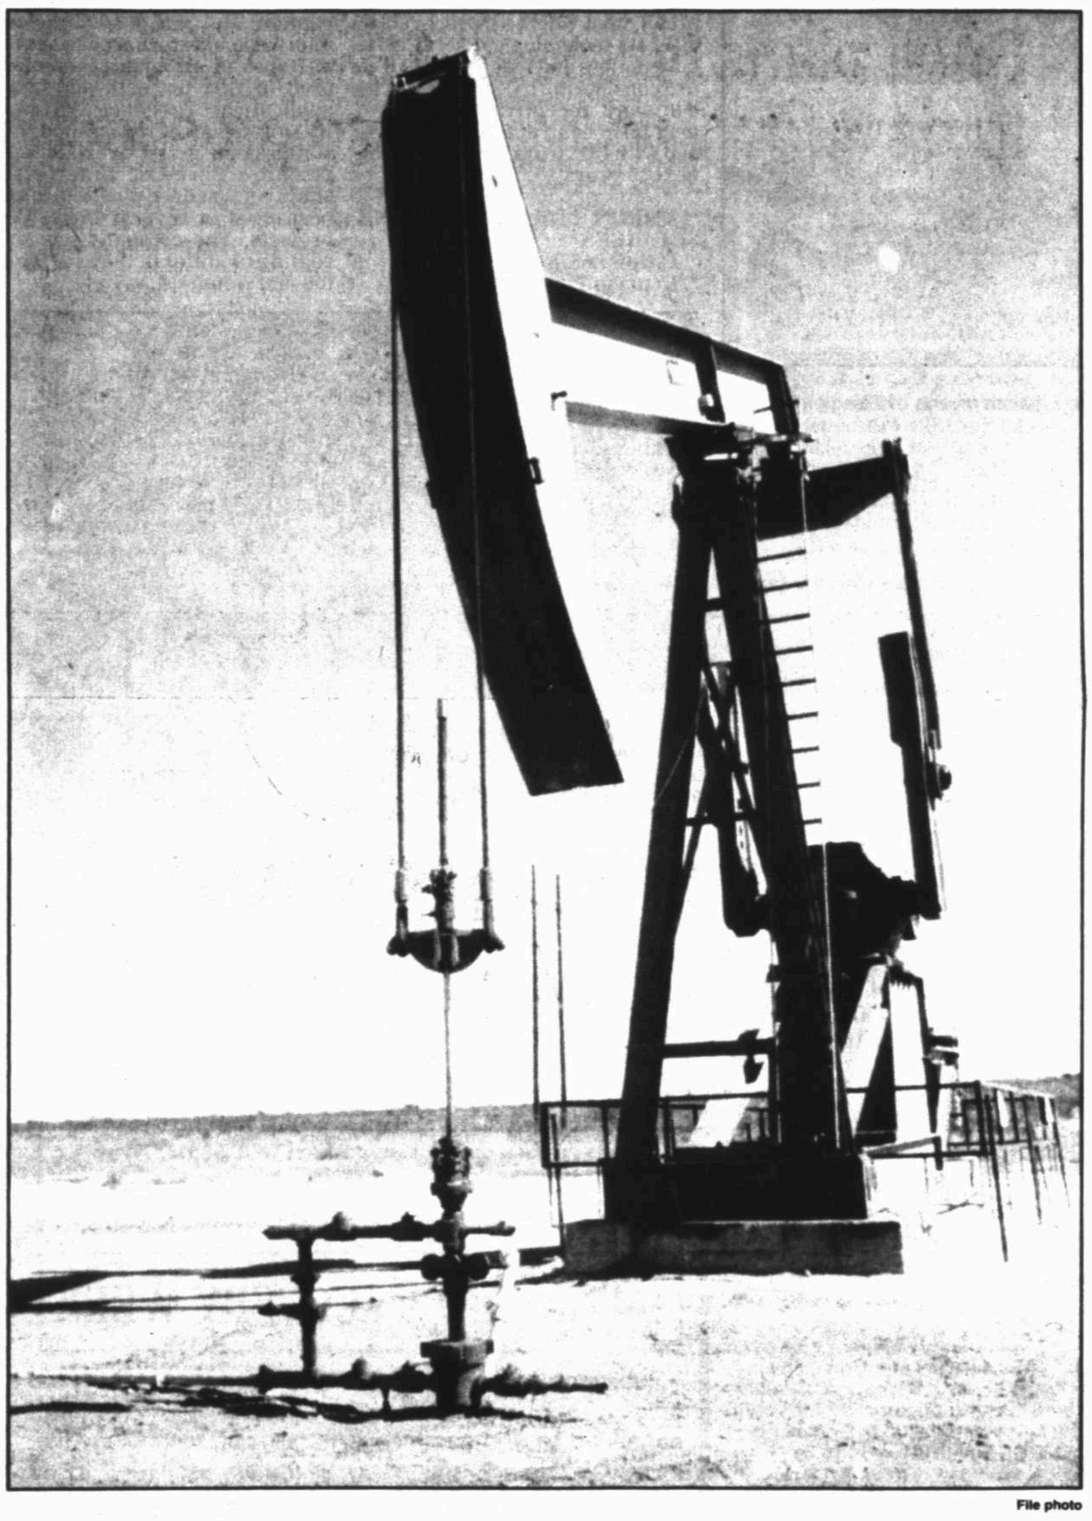

High cost is another obstacle that is coming down. In the last five years, CO2 costs have come down 40 percent, and installation costs are about one third what they were in the 1980's.

When Shell installed its Denver Unit tertiary project in 1984, the cost was approximatelyh $1 million per injection pattern. When it installed its Bennett Ranch flood, the cost was $300,000 per injection pattern. At the same time, better reservoir characterization has significantly reduced risk.

Majors will use their expertise in projects like the Bennett Ranch CO2 flood to help independent operators overcome obstacles.

CO2 alliances will fuel expansion

■ While independents gear up to take advantage of CO2 opportunities, major producers remain in game.

By John Paul Pitts
Oil Editor

The fact that the new CO2 opportunity is not just for independents, but majors too, was reinforced reinforced recently when Texaco announced that it would enter into a long term contract with Mobil to supply all its CO2 needs for the next 15 years.

Neither the term nor the volume of the contract were revealed, but Texaco Permian Basin Business Unit Manager Bill Johnson, says the gas will be used to flood properties owned by Texaco or properties in which the major oil company owns a working interest.

Johnson said he thought the time was right for Texaco, which has no CO2 supply of its own, to align itself with a large volume supplier at a very competitive price in order to minimize the effect of price fluctuations and to enhance long range planning.

Johnson said Texaco has two projects on the drawing board which could be approved in 1996 and is also involved in 50 projects of which 35 could be possible CO2 candidates in the future. "This arrangement will allow us to adequately plan all our future CO2 projects. A lot will depend on costs, and the stability of oil prices, as to which projects come on line," said Johnson.

He said that the present price and apparent stability had made it possible for Texaco to move forward on some of its potential CO2 projects.

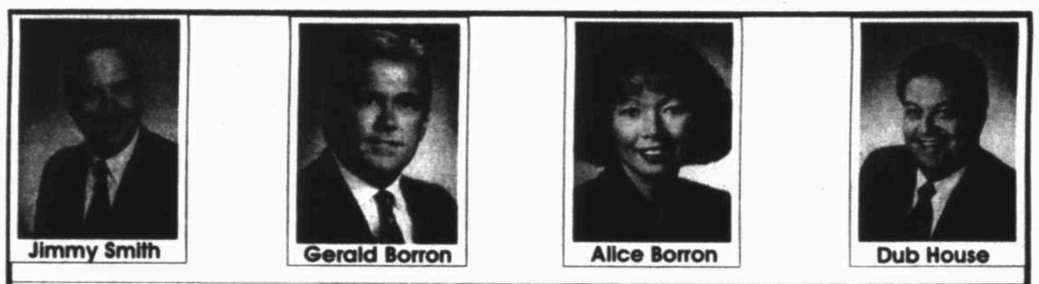

While the present trend is to minimize up front costs, Johnson said Texaco would not "poor boy" any project that would have to be around for the next 30-40 years. "We intend to install whatever is needed to property monitor and operate a CO2 flood, but we may not automate to the extend we have on other projects."

Johnson would capitalize on past experience to become a low cost developer of CO2 projects. Texaco currently operates two CO2 floods including the Mabee field and the Sundown Slaughter Unit in Hockley County, which was initiated in 1994.

But noted that the terms of the contract with Mobil, enabled the company to use CO2 as a component of future deals, but was not sufficient to allow Texaco to become a wholesaler of CO2.

"Many of the independents have properties that are excellent candidates for tertiary recovery and we would be willing to join with independents on cooperative projects, but it will have to be on the basis of shared risk." He said the task of being the banker for projects would probably have to fall to those majors oil companies who own CO2 supplies.

Jack Rathbone, Mobil's Light Oil/ CO2 Business Unit Leader in Midland, said that Mobil welcomed the opportunity to develop creative long term supply arrangements with operators in exchange for an interest in incremental production. "Mobil is also willing to provide technical expertise and take some of the risk on technically viable projects."

Freeport-McMoran completes Gulf well

HOUSTON— Freeport-McMoRan Oil and Gas Royalty Trust announced that Freeport-McMoRan Inc., the working interest owner of the Royalty Trust properties, has advised that the West Cameron Block 498 No. 5 well has been drilled to a total vertical depth of 9,838 feet and has discovered net hydrocarbon pays totaling approximately 274 net feet (true vertical thickness) consisting of 257 net feet of natural gas pays and 17 net feet of oil pays in multiple sand reservoirs. The No. 5 well discovery is in a fault block separate from the fault block where the previously announced No. 3 well discovered hydrocarbon pays and also separate from the fault block where the previously announced Nos. 2 and 4 wells discovered hydrocarbon pays. All four of the West Cameron Block 498 wells have been directionally drilled from the same surface location. The bottom hole location of the No. 5 well is approximately 5,500 feet southwest of the surface location and approximately 4,600 feet south of the No. 2 well bottom hole location, 3,500 feet south of the No. 4 well bottom hole location and approximately 2,500 feet southeast of the No. 3 well bottom hole location. The No. 5 well will be saved for future completion and production.

The operator of the lease will temporarily abandon the current West Cameron Block 498 drilling program and will demobilize and release the drilling rig. Over the next several months, mapping and analysis of the results of the current drilling program at West Cameron Block 498 will occur and future development plans will be formulated.

Working interest in the 5,000 acre West Cameron Block 498 lease are owned 57.4 percent by Amerada Hess Corporation (operator), 23.1 percent by Freeport-McMoRan Inc., 11.3 percent by Apache Corporation and 8.2 percent by Energy Development Corporation. Freeport-McMoRan Inc.'s working interest of 23.1 percent equates to a net revenue interest, after royalties, of 19.2 percent. The Royalty Trust holds a 90 percent net profit interest in Freeport-McMoRan Inc.'s 19.2 percent net revenue interest.

The drilling rig will be moved to a drilling site at the 5,000 acre Vermilion Block 58, where the working interests are owned 26.66 percent by Amerada Hess Corporation (operator), 22.50 percent by Freeport-McMoRan Inc., 6.67 percent by Energy Development Corp., and 44.17 percent by other owners. Freeport-McMoRan Inc.'s working interest of 22.50 percent equates to a net revenue interest, after royalties, of 18.75 percent.

Well-defined infrastructure

The map, left, shows the extent of the CO2 transportation infrastructure in the Permian Basin which now serves approximately 20 CO2 projects. The backbone of the infrastructure system is Enron's Central Basin Pipeline. From the Central BasinPipeline, dozens of new laterals are expected to be built to serve additional CO2 projects.

It works

The miscible CO2 flood which utilizes an alternating water-gas cycle is expected to become as familiar to the Permian Basin as waterfloods are today.

United signs agreement in Kentucky

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. —United Petroleum Corp. announced that its subsidiary, Jackson-United Petroleum Corp., signed a farmout agreement with Penn Virginia Oil & Gas Corporation covering approximately 525 acres in Pike County, Ky.

Said farmout acreage is adjacent to numerous existing natural gas wells owned by Penn Virginia Oil & Gas Corp. Under the terms of the agreement Jackson-United Petroleum Corp. is to drill and complete three (3) wells by March 31, 1996. In conjunction with the farmout agreement the companies have also executed agreements which will allow Penn Virginia Oil & Gas Corporation to purchase the natural gas from the wells drilled under the farmout agreement. In the event the first three wells drilled under the farmout agreement prove satisfactory to both companies Jackson-United Petroleum Corporation may be granted the opportunity to drill an additional three wells on the farmout properties.

The company further stated that Pike County is one of the largest producers of natural gas in the State of Kentucky. The total depth of the wells is expected to be approximately 4,000 feet.

Preliminary geological work performed on the farmout properties indicates the possibility of three producing zones being encountered: (1) Big Lime, (2) Berea and (3) Devonian Shale. Based on information related to existing wells near the farmout property, the company estimates that production from the wells to be drilled could range from 100 MCF per day to as much as 250 MCF per day, however, no assurance can be given that the wells drilled on the farmout property will be able to produce marketable quantities of natural gas.

United Petroleum Corporation operates 21 full service auto centers and convenience stores in Tennessee and Georgia through its Calibur Systems, Inc. subsidiary and owns natural gas and oil mineral rights to approximately 61,000 acres in central and eastern Kentucky through its subsidiary, Jackson-United Petroleum Corp.

CO2 complicates China gas discovery

By N.Y. Times News Service

For more than two decades, engineers have been trying to figure out how to tap a bountiful — but carbon dioxide-laced — natural gas field under the South China Sea without spewing up so much "greenhouse" gas that it degrades the entire Earth's atmosphere.

Believing they have finally worked out a solution, Exxon may begin drilling as early as 1997 into the gas field, which was discovered near the Indonesian island of Natuna in 1973. It could be worth $100 billion or more in revenues to Exxon and its Indonesian partners and yield enough natural gas to meet all of Japan's needs for 17 years.

But the riches come with a huge price: The CO2 contained at Natuna is equal to more than one-third of the carbon dioxide produced each year by the entire planet through both natural and human processes. "That would really show up in the global growth rate of CO2" if it got into the air, said Thomas Conway, a research chemist with the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

So Exxon and its development partner, the Indonesian state petroleum monopoly Pertamina, have been developing plans, unprecedented in scale, to draw off the carbon dioxide and pipe it back underground into a vast, escape-proof rock chamber 3,000 feet below the South China Sea floor.

The technology is not new; more than 100 underground carbon dioxide storage chambers have been built around the world. But the amount of carbon dioxide to be treated at Natuna, 150 trillion cubic feet, far exceeds that from any other source, and the potential impact on the global atmosphere intensifies thepressure on engineers to make sure everything succeeds.

The gas drawn from the ground will be 70 to 71 percent carbon dioxide by volume, according to Exxon. Most gas wells contain 15-20 percent or less. Dick Davison, a professor of chemical engineering at Texas A&M University, said "almost all" gas has to be treated to remove carbon dioxide and poisonous hydrogen sulfide, but the 70 percent figure is "extremely unusual."

Removing carbon dioxide produces a better-burning natural gas. Gas with a low concentration of carbon dioxide is often purified by passing it over chemicals like ethanolamine that effectively "grab" the CO2 molecules, or by using molecule-scale filter membranes, high pressure or refrigeration that segregate the carbon dioxide from saleable methane.

On the Natuna project, project officials said, $19.5 billion of the estimated $42 billion project cost will go to separate carbon dioxide, initially at treatment sites at the wellhead and again at Natuna Island when the natural gas is liquefied for shipment.

Because the separation plan involves trade secrets and proprietary processes, Exxon is releasing few details. But it is known the system will draw on some of the 17 established processes for eliminating CO2, some of which take advantage of the fact that when gas is chilled to well under 0 degrees and put under pressure, the carbon dioxide condenses before the methane and can be poured or dumped out.

A big problem with large-scale cryogenic (extremely low temperature) treatment, however, is that the carbon dioxide often goes directly from a gaseous state to solid, becoming chunks of "dry ice" that clog up the distillation apparatus, said Walt Braunlin, a Houston consulting engineer with a decade's experience on carbon dioxide removal.

"That project has raised a lot of eyebrows in the industry, but the only thing I can figure out is that the reserves must be so huge" the potential profits justify the massive treatment costs, Braunlin said.

According to industry sources, Exxon is believed to be developing a new process for use at Natuna under which the CO2 would freeze as tiny snowflakes, not chunks, making it far easier to eliminate.

Exxon says the undersea chamber where the carbon dioxide will be pumped, 3,000 feet below the ocean floor, could hold 100 times more carbon dioxide than will be injected over the project's 30-year life. The formation is like a stone sponge covered with a thick, solid layer of rock, filled with millions of crannies for the gas to settle into.

"Injection of gas into an aquifer is a well-understood and common industry practice with which Exxon has many years of experience," said an Exxon spokesman, E.L. Burwell.

In effect, the process is gas drilling in reverse: Locate by sonar or other geological analysis a rock formation of the type where gas likes to collect, then drill into it, install a seven-inch pipe thousands of feet into the ground and pump the CO2 down before sealing up the hole.

The Earth's atmosphere contains 76 percent nitrogen, 21 percent oxygen and only 0.032 percent carbon dioxide, produced by natural decay, human and animal breathing and burning of wood and fossil fuels.

But because CO2 traps solar heat, that tiny amount could have a large impact. If CO2 continues building up in the atmosphere, many scientists fear, global temperatures will rise. It could affect the growing climate and potentially flood coastal areas by melting polar ice caps and raising ocean levels.

Drilling off Natuna, an island about 375 miles east of Singapore, is not expected to begin before 1997, and it depends on Exxon and Pertamina finding buyers for the gas, most likely in Japan, Taiwan or Korea. Initial gas shipments would start in 2004 or 2005.

Virtually every number connected to the project is awesome. If markets develop for all the gas that could be produced, it could involve 200 wells scattered over 120 square miles. They would be serviced by 18 offshore drilling platforms, some of them 80 stories high. The ocean is 470 feet deep at the site.

The machinery offshore would able to develop 2.6 million horsepower for compression and power generation — enough to meet the electric needs of 970,000 average-sized homes.

Translated into Boston's needs, the Natuna field could supply the city for 737 years, according to Boston Gas statistics. At current prices, the field's 45 trillion cubic feet of methane could yield $70 billion to $100 billion, depending on future market conditions.

Natural gas develops underground in the same way petroleum does. The two are often found in the same wells. Both are the residue of plankton and other organisms that died millions of years ago and, as they decomposed, settled under layers of rock that gradually formed sealed chambers.

Depending on the vagaries of geology, natural gas at a given site may contain anywhere from 0 to nearly 100 percent carbon dioxide. In some places, including parts of Wyoming, Colorado and New Mexico, nearly pure carbon dioxide deposits have been exploited commercially by drillers who sell the gas to petroleum producers. They pump it underground to push out more oil.

The Natuna field easily ranks as one of the world's largest gas fields. The anticipated production there would be three times the combined yearly output of all gas fields on- and offshore in Texas, Louisiana and Oklahoma, the three biggest US gas producing states.

Atmos Energy outlines strategies

DALLAS — Atmos Energy Corp. is an efficient, low-cost natural gas provider and expects to continue its success in an increasingly competitive utility marketplace, President and Chief Operating Officer Robert F. Stephens said today in an address before the New York Society of Security Analysts. Executive Vice President and Chief Financial Officer James F. Purser reviewed the financial condition of the company.

"We're old hands at competition in the industrial market, particularly in our Kentucky service area, where 59 percent of our throughput is to large-volume customers. We're also accustomed to competition at the retail level from other energy sources, and compete for customers against some very low cost electric utilities," Stephens said. "For a low-cost, efficient provider like Atmos, competition brings more opportunity than concern."

Not only does the company have some of the most productive employees in the industry and lowest operating expenses, but also has lower net plant investment per meter than the industry average. The company reduced its already low average cost of gas per Mcf in 1995 to $2.46 per Mcf because its market-sensitive gas contracts allowed its customers to benefit from lower gas prices, thus further enhancing the company's competitiveness.

By operating efficiently to keep its service cost low, looking for ways to trim gas costs, and providing a valuable resource to its customers to reduce their total energy bills, Atmos has achieved a record of success in competitive markets.

The company is continuing its long-term corporate development strategy, including pursuing natural gas utility properties throughout the U.S. to acquire and operate to bring diversity in weather, economic conditions and regulatory climates. The growth resulting from this strategy has rewarded shareholders in the last 10 years, including a nearly 10-fold increase in market capitalization, nearly a four-fold increase in stock price and a 75 percent increase in the dividend.

The company continues to increase customers in its existing service areas, especially Colorado, where the company serves the hot growth areas of Durango, Steamboat Springs and Greeley. The company is developing the market for natural gas cooling and natural gas-engine driven equipment to commercial, industrial and agricultural customers, as well as natural gas as a vehicle fuel.

Purser presented financial highlights for 1995, including a 29 percent increase in earnings despite weather that was 10.1 percent warmer than normal; a 4.3 percent increase in the quarterly dividend announced Nov. 8, 1995, to $.24 per share; and rate increases totaling $2.8 million in fiscal 1995. Cash flow per share increased 40 percent in 1995 to $3.02 per share compared with $2.46 per share in 1994, and return on average shareholder equity increased to 12.3 percent. The company sold about 20 billion cubic feet of natural gas in its agricultural market to fuel natural gas-engine driven irrigation pumps, a unique source of spring and summer revenues for the company. The company also increased sales to industrial customers in spite of an increasingly competitive market.

"We believe that Atmos is an attractive investment for the long-term because of the company's advantages as a low-cost provider in a competitive environment, above-average prospects for internal growth and investment, and a unique corporate development strategy that has brought real rewards to our shareholders," Stephens concluded.

Atmos Energy Corporation provides natural gas service to more than 667,000 customers in Texas, Colorado, Kansas, Missouri, Louisiana and Kentucky through its operating companies - Energas Company, Greeley Gas Company, Trans Louisiana Gas Company and Western Kentucky Gas Company.

CNG, MetNorth form strategic alliance in Australia

PITTSBURGH—Consolidated Natural Gas Co. announced a strategic alliance with MetNorth Energy, Australia's largest electric utility. CNG will help MetNorth Energy develop its natural gas marketing capabilities in the restructured and more competitive Australian energy industry. The alliance also intends to jointly identify and develop energy infrastructure projects in Australia and Asia.

"MetNorth Energy is one of the most skilled electric utilities in the world," said George A. Davidson, Jr., CNG's chairman and chief executive officer. "Add to that CNG's knowledge of natural gas, as well as its experience in generating and marketing electricity, and you get a strong partnership able to participate in the integrated energy business."

Both companies will also work with MetNorth Energy's industrial and commercial customers to provide the electric or natural gas technological solutions to their individual energy needs.

"This alliance provides Australian energy users with access to technical and commercial skills — especially those needed in competitive electricity and natural gas markets — equal to any in the world," said Allan Gillespie, chief executive of MetNorth Energy.

Abraxas Petroleum reports Texas completions

Staff Reports

SAN ANTONIO - Abraxas Petroleum Co. has announced well results for west Texas and central Texas Gulf Coast fields.

In Ward County's ROC field Cherry Canyon formation, Abraxas drilled and completed the No. 98-2 Caprito in early March, its first exploratory well on company-owned acreage in Ward County. Drilled to approximately 7,100 ft. and completed in the Cherry Canyon formation between 6,6792 and 6,799 ft., the well initially flowed 237 barrels of oil and 180 Mcfd with 300 pounds flowing tubing pressure through a 9/64 inch choke. The well established discovery allowables of 200 barrels of oil per day and 400 Mcfd. The well is currently averaging 85 bopd and 340 Mcfd and as of October 31 had produced over 24,000 barrels of oil and 43 Mmcfd.

The second well in the field, the No. 3-98 Caprito was placed on production in early August. The well ran structurally high to the first well and on a 24-hour state potential test, flowed 46 barrels of oil and 900 Mcfd with 2600 psi flowing tubing pressure on a 10/64 inch choke. The well is restricted and is being produced in accordance with the discovery allowables and has produced over 675 barrels of oil and 32 Mmcfd as of October 31.

The third well, the No. 98-4 Caprito, was junked and abandoned on September 2 at 3,300 ft. after drill pipe became stuck and could not be retrieved.

The fourth well, the No. 9805 Caprito, was placed on production October 12. The well initially flowed 588 barrels of oil and 455 Mcfd with 300 psi flowing tubing pressure through a 20/64 inch choke. The well was restricted to comply with the discovery allowables and on a 24-hour state potential test flowed 200 barrels of oil and 211 Mcfd with 565 psi flowing tubing pressure on a 12/64 inch choke. The well has produced over 4,750 barrels of oil and 4 Mmcfd as of October 31.

The fifth well, the No. 98-6 Caprito, was placed on production November 6 and is still recovering load water from a fracture stimulation treatment and producing at rates over 100 barrels of oil per day wither with 150 Mcfd.

The sixth well, the No. 98-4R Caprito is the replacement well for the No. 98-4. The well is currently drilling at 4,200 ft. and it is expected that logging operations will begin on or before Thanksgiving Day.

Abraxas owns approximately 64 percent working interest and a 59 percent revenue interest in the Caprito 98 wells. Additionally the company has recently entered into a definitive agreement which will result in the acquisition of an additional 11 percent interest in 640 acres offsetting the Caprito 98 lease.

The company plans do drill 17 additional wells in the ROC field by the end of 1996 and owns an approximate 45 percent average working interest in 5,700 acres in the field, most of which is held by production from deep gas wells.

In the Portilla field of San Patricio County on the Texas Gulf Coast, which Abraxas acquired in April 1993, the company has completed 26 workovers and drilled seven new wells. As a result of this effort, net production from the field during October 1995 averaged 404 bopd and 93 barrels of natural gas liquid per day, together with net sales of 1.3 million cubic feet of natural gas per day. This represents an increase of 155 percent on a BOE basis from April 1993.

The No. 84 Welder was drilled and completed during the third quarter. The well was dually completed in the Frio 7100 ft. sand together with the Frio 8500 ft. sand. The upper zone is currently producing 500 Mcfd and 300 bopd. while the lower zone is shut-in pending gas lift valve installation. Additionally, the Frio 8100 ft. sand is also productive and remains behind pipe. One additional development well and six workover possibilities are planned for the remainder of 1995.

Over the next several quarters, Abraxas plans to review the field-'s gas lift design to increase production rates. The company has learned that more crude oil can be produced from this water drive field at high levels of water cut simply by moving more fluid. The company's efforts will be on raising fluid production rates through installation of electric submersible pumps.

As of October 31, the company has tested ESPs in four wells. For the 30 days ended October 31, the No. 49 Welder produced an average of 180 bopd and 273 Mcfd, an increase of 157 percent over its last producing rate prior to the ESP installation. Similarly, the No. 64 Welder produced an average of 85 bopd and 199 Mcfd, an increase of 88 percent over its last producing rate prior to the ESP installation. Equally encouraging results were also achieved with the two most recent wells to be equipped with ESPs as the No. 78 Welder produced an average of 173 bopd and 255 Mcfd for the 30-day period, compared to 59 bopd and 75 Mcfd prior to installation.

Likewise, the No. 68 Welder achieved average production increases of 80 bopd and 129 Mcfd following ESP installation. The company will continue to monitor results from these wells to determine if installation of additional ESPs is warranted.

Effective July 1, Abraxas, together with its 50 percent partner, acquired the remaining 50 percent interest in the Stedman (island field of Nueces County that had been held by another company. Cost was $1.35 million, $675,000 net to Abraxas. Based upon a reserve report prepared by the company's independent petroleum engineers, the acquisition added 631,000 BOE to proved reserves with a pretax PV 10 of $2.5 million at January 1.

Abraxas had identified an potentially significant exploratory location using seismic data in a horizon below current production in the field and plans to drill an exploratory well in the field in 1996. Post acquisition, Abraxas has a 50 percent working interest and 41 percent net revenue interest in the Stedman Island field.

In Young County, the No. 1 Jean Oil Unit, the first well drilled as a result of the Jean 3-D seismic project - was completed in the Mississippian formation at 4,800 ft. The well initially flowed 40-50 barrels of oil with 780 pounds of tubing pressure through a 5/64 inch choke. The Caddo formation also appears productive on electric logs and remains untested behind pipe. Abraxas owns a 25 percent working interest and an 18.75 net revenue interest.

Three-dimensional seismic interpretation on the Shanghai development project in Wharton County is expected to be completed with a week. Preliminary data is encouraging and the company expects to drill an exploratory well in the first quarter of 1996.

Effective July 1, Abraxas sold its interest - 8.28 percent working interest and 7.25 percent net revenue interest - in the C.S. Dean "A" Unit, Cochran County. The interest was sold to Apache Corp. for $2.559 million. Closing occurred October 10. Abraxas had acquired its interest in 1992 for approximately $390,000.

TransTexas commences production from new gas field

HOUSTON — TransTexas Gas Corp. announced it has discovered a third new gas field outside of the company's proven Lobo Trend reserves. The field is located in Webb County, South Texas and has been named "Cuba Libre."

Two wells have been completed in only the shallow Hinnant zones of the Upper Wilcox formation and are currently producing almost 11 million cubic feet of natural gas per day (MMcfd).

The Rosa V. Benavides A-1 is producing 5.9 MMcfd and the Bruni Marshall 2, located approximatley 3 miles to the south-west, is producing approximately 5 MMcfd. The initial discovery well, the Laurel No. 1 is in the process of being completed for production from the Hinnant sands only but encountered total pay sands of 155 feet in both the Hinnant and also the deeper Lower Wilcox formations.

TransTexas has been actively acquiring acreage in the area of this latest discovery and currently holds almost 38,000 acres, in which it holds a 95 percent working interest.

Company President Arnold Brackenridge commented, "We are very enthusiastic about this third discovery, which holds potential from both the Upper and Lower Wilcox. Based upon the information from just these first three wells, plus offset locations, Netherland, Sewell & Associates estimate over 150 billion cubic feet of proved reserves in the field. Since our 30-inch and 20-inch transmission pipelines cross this new area, we will be moving aggressively to develop this field and rapidly increase production." Additional confirmation drilling has commenced in order to determine the ultimate extent of the field using five rigs. Initial plans call for the drilling of 20 development wells.

TransTexas Gas is engaged in the exploration, production and transmission of natural gas in the Lobo Trend and other areas of South Texas. The company, including affiliates, was the fourth largest producer of natural gas in Texas in 1994, with average daily production in excess of 565 million cubic feet and over 600,000 net acres currently under lease.

the MTC In Line Thread Corrosion Barrier

Murphree Tool Company's 4 Step Installation Of The MTC In-Line Thread Corrosion Barrier

Step 1: Cut off the defective end of the connection, in the same manner, as it the tubing were going to be rethreaded; instead, we cut a welder's bevel on the end of the tubing.

Step 2: A stainless steel ring, normally 316L and also having a welder's bevel is pressed to the end of the tubing.

Step 3: The ring is then welded to the tubing.

NOTE:
Lab tests show that "no unusual pitting or accelerated corrosion occured at the 316L stainless-tubing interface on either the inside or the threaded side of the specimen." The welding procedure specification comes from a leading weld inspection and engineering firm located in this area.

Step 4: The joint is threaded and the welded area machine smoothed.

The thread will look and perform most like any other, but with one great exception. The chamfer and the first two full thread are stainless steel, which protects the connection from end area corrosion.

The MTC In Line Thread Corrosion Barrier can also be installed on new tubing that has not been threaded, following the same steps listed above.

CO2 technology has matured

By John Paul Pitts
Oil Editor

It was first observed in the 1950s that waterfloods seemed to do better when carbonated water was used. In the 20-30 years since, CO2 flood technology has become a mature technology.

Since CO2 was first injected in 1972 to create a miscible flood, many questions have been asked, and many lessons have been learned about how to use the gas to get more oil out of reservoirs.

Here are a few of the basic lessons and facts learned about CO2 floods:

■ CO2 acts as a solvent to overcome forces that trap oil in rock pores. CO2 swells oil and reduces viscosity, making it more mobile. Miscibility creates low interfacial tensions between CO2 and oil.

■ About 5 Mcf of CO2 is required to produce one barrel of oil.

■ A CO2 flood in a field that has been waterflooded will produce incremental oil of 8-16 percent of the original oil in place. A secondary CO2 flood will produce 40 percent incremental oil of the original oil in place.

■ CO2 is not initially miscible with oil, but it can be created at higher pressures. Therefore oil must be found at depths sufficient to allow for high pressure to produce miscibility.

■ Reservoirs shallower than 2,500 feet or with oil gravities less than 25 degrees API generally do not make good CO2 candidates because minimum miscibility cannot be obtained without fracturing the reservoir.

■ With improved screening techniques and a one page questionnaire, a field can now be evaluated for CO2 potential in under a week.

■ A reservoir must possess certain characteristics for a CO2 flood to be successful. Reservoir heterogenity, particularly layering, is the dominant factor controlling sweep efficiency.

■ The more detailed and accurate reservoir characterization one achieves, the better able they are to predict CO2 performance.

■ If all layers in a reservoir have similar properties, the more uniform the sweep will be. However, with extreme variations in porosity and permeability the sweep will be less efficient and breakthrough will occur faster, leading to increased CO2 costs.

■ Injectivity is critical to response. Continuous injection gets faster response, but results in higher gas production rates. Water-alternating-gas (WAG) injection gets a slower response, but better CO2 utilization rates.

■ The optimum utilization rate for CO2 is to be ready to inject it into a second phase as it is reclaimed.

■ CO2 contaminated gas can be reinjected into the reservoir to eliminate the high cost of cleaning up natural gas.

■ Some early projects were over designed with stainless steel facilities. Even though CO2 and water produce carbonic acid, it has now been learned that regular steel can be used in most installations. Stainless steel is required only where CO2 and water mix and corrosion cannot be inhibited.

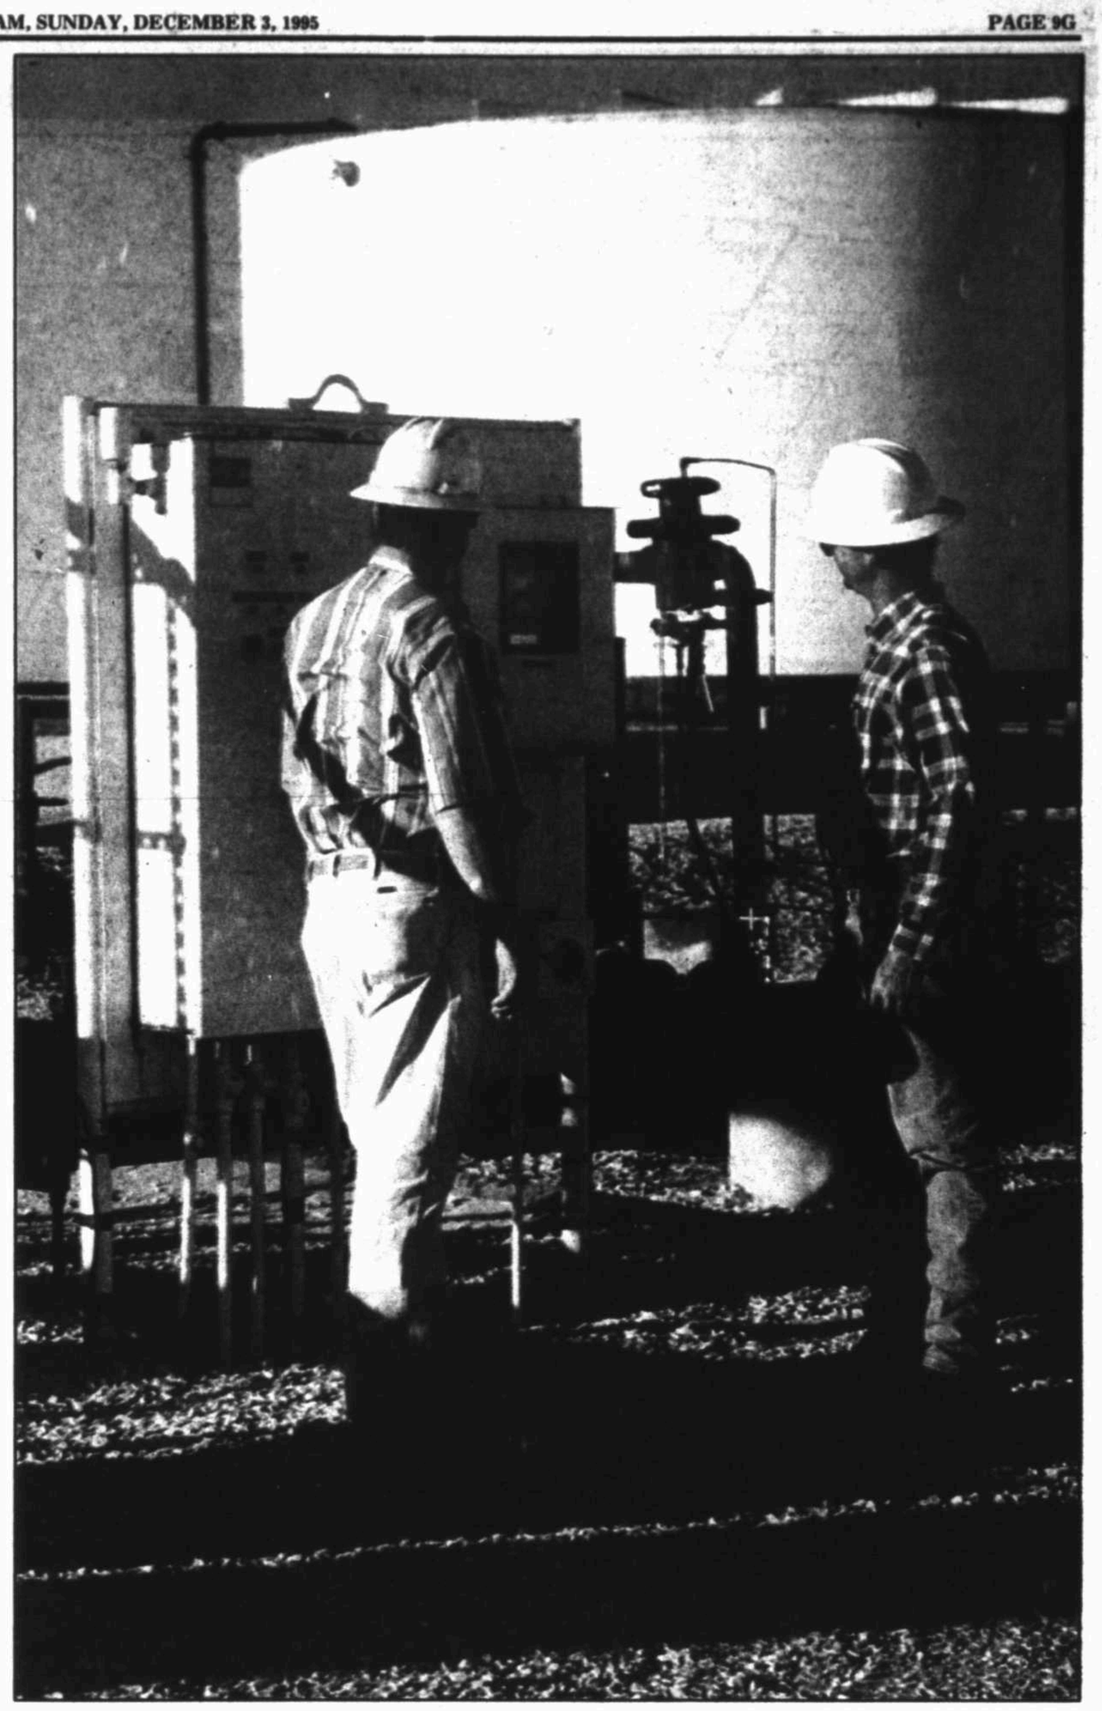

■ The cost of CO2 was $1 in the early 1980s, but has now dropped to 60 cents per Mcf. Operating costs for a CO2 flood are $2-$3 per barrel or only about 10 percent higher than a waterflood.

■ Water disposal in CO2 projects, which cannot be re-injected, can be injected in disposal wells or into injection wells on the edge of a field, where it will do no harm to the reservoir.

■ A CO2 contaminated gas stream usually needs only to be dehydrated through an adsorption/stripping process and reinjected into the reservoir.

■ The cost to develop a CO2 injection pattern is approximately $500,000, down from over $1 million in the 1980s, and projects are best-managed pattern-by-pattern.

■ There are 40 CO2 projects in the Permian Basin, accounting for 20 percent of the area's oil production.

Swift, Union Pacific form venture

HOUSTON — Swift Energy Co. and Union Pacific Resources Co. announced a joint development agreement for drilling a 19,500 acre area of mutual interest ("AMI") in Fayette County, Texas.

The AMI (North Fayetteville Prospect) will consist of acreage contributed by both Swift and UPR and will be developed on a 50/50 basis, allowing for the most efficient development of the prospect.

The development of the North Fayetteville Prospect will utilize UPR's significant technical experience and leadership in the drilling of over 1,100 horizontal Austin Chalk wells, along with the expertise of Swift which has built an outstanding record of operations in this section of Giddings Field.

The North Fayetteville Prospect is an offset to the prolific Swift/LCRA acreage block operated by Swift, and the UPR highly successful Rocky Creek block.

During the past three years, Swift has drilled 21 wells in this field realizing production rates above industry averages. Swift will operate the first well to be drilled on the prospect area adjoining its LCRA acreage.

Current plans call for a 2D seismic swath to be shot and interpreted by Swift and 4 to 6 wells to be drilled in the prospect area during 1996, with estimates of between 20 and 25 total well locations to be drilled alternately by Swift and UPR over the next few years.

Swift and UPR have previously participated in another successful well program in the Austin Chalk trend and continue to explore other joint development programs in this as well as other areas.

Swift Energy also reported today that it has completed and placed on production the Swift-LCRA-COA No. 6-H well in the aforementioned Swift/LCRA acreage in Fayette County, Texas, recording an initial production rate of 11.4 million cubic feet of natural gas and 329 barrels of condensate per day with a flowing tubing pressure of 4,700 psi on a 22/64 inch choke.

Swift Energy owns a 21 percent direct working interest in the well and another 5 percent interest as general partner of Swift Energy Drilling Ventures 1995-1 and 1995-2 partnerships, which each own a 12.5 percent working interest.

Swift is currently drilling two horizontal wells on this acreage and has four additional wells planned.

Based in Houston, Swift Energy Company is a 15-year-old independent oil and gas company engaged primarily in the exploration, development, acquisition and operation of oil and gas properties, with an emphasis on domestic natural gas.

Local lab revolutionizes safety testing

Rod hooks, rod elevators and other oilfield equipment take a lot of stress. If one of these breaks and drops its load, it's dangerous to lives and equipment.

Especially after being repaired, any equipment like this that carries loads over the heads of workers should be tested, said Joe Hensley, owner of Permian Basin Metallurgical Laboratories, referring to Federal guidelines.

Until recently, this testing was difficult, if not impossible, to accomplish. To remedy this, Metallurgical Labs has built a Pulling Machine capable of delivering up to 320,000 pounds of pull.

Especially after being repaired, any equipment that carries loads over the heads of workers should be tested.

Joe Hensley, owner
Permian Basin
Metallurgical Laboratories

George Brown, Vice President of Operations, explained that the machine is a modified lever, driven by two hydraulic pumps and a 3,000 psi, six-inch piston. The lever arm is divided into three sections to more accurately test different loads.

One section delivers zero to 60,000 pounds, the second section zero to 160,000 pounds and the third section zero to 320,000 pounds.

Hensley said this flexibility of load ranges allows the Lab to test a much wider range of objects than was previously possible in the Permian Basin.

The Pulling Machine can be set to reach the desired load quickly or to build it up slowly.

Once the desired weight is reached, it is held for one minute, decreased and applied for a second full minute.

Metallurgical Labs can test for a specific load, or they can continue to increase the load until the object breaks, to verify its maximum capability.

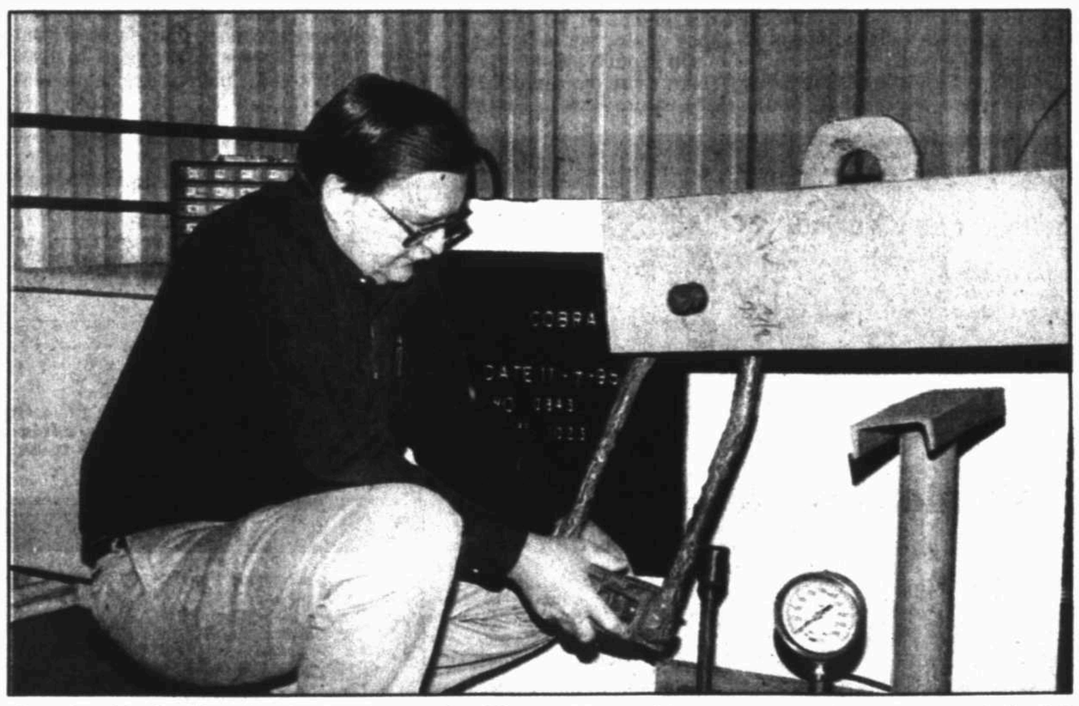

Every test is videotaped, Brown said, so Lab personnel can examine, in slow motion if necessary, exactly where the object failed. This tape can be reviewed with the customer at any time. The lab also graphs the procedure.

"When we test a failed part, we want to see exactly what happened so we can help our client prevent a similar failure in the future," said Hensley.

Rod hooks and rod elevators attach easily to super strength bolts on the Pulling Machine. Other objects present more of a challenge, said Brown. "Getting hold of the object can be more of a challenge than pulling it."

After conducting the test, Metallurgical Lab issues a certificate showing the weight to which the metal or equipment was tested, and the date of the test. This machine is also used to test metal samples for yield, tensile and percent elongation.

Permian Basin Metallurgical Laboratories was founded two years ago by Joe Hensley. They offer a wide array of testing for oilfield failure analysis and corrosion testing. They are located at 2600 I-20 East in Odessa, on the south service road. Their phone number is 580-3526.

Permian Basin Metallurgical Laboratories Vice President for Operations George Brown prepares a rod elevator for testing on their Pulling Machine. This machine can test equipment or metals for failure up to 320,000 pounds.

Parallel Petroleum completes Frio gas sand well for 14.7 Mmcf

MIDLAND — Parallel Petroleum Corp. announced the completion of a discovery well, the Cox & Perkins Skutca No. 1, in a Frio gas sand located in Wharton County, onshore the Texas Gulf Coast, utilizing data developed by three-dimensional seismic imaging.

The Skutca's open-flow potential was calculated to be 14.7 million cubic feet of natural gas per day. The well was flow tested at a rate of 662,000 cubic feet of gas per day with a flowing tubing pressure of 1,762 pounds per square inch using an 8/64-inch choke. The production is from perforations made from 4,840 to 4,852 feet in the Frio gas sand. Parallel owns a 20 percent working interest and a 15 percent net revenue interest in the well. Other working interest owners are DDD Energy, Inc., a wholly owned subsidiary of Seitel, Inc. (NYSE: SEI), 20 percent, and Tenneco Ventures, 10 percent. Privately held Cox & Perkins Exploration, Inc., Houston, and individuals own the remaining working interest.

During 1995, Parallel has participated in the drilling of 6 Yegua wells and 11 Frio wells in Wharton and Jackson Counties, Texas. As a result of this drilling, 4 Yegua wells and 8 Frio wells have been completed and placed on production. These wells are currently producing at a combined gross rate of 16.4 million cubic feet of gas and 397 barrels of condensate per day, with Parallel's net daily production being 2.4 million cubic feet of gas and 54 barrels of condensate. Based on equivalent barrels of oil, this represents 40 percent of the Company's current production.

Parallel plans to participate in the drilling of 8 Yegua wells and 7 Frio wells between now an0d March 1996. These wells have already been scheduled for drilling by the operators and are to be drilled on prospects identified using the same 3-D seismic interpretation as the previous wells.

British Gas, Argentine firm study Falklands

By N.Y. Times News Service

London — British Gas Plc and YPF S.A., the Argentine oil company, said they agreed to a joint study into the oil and natural gas deposits off the Falkland Islands and may bid for exploration rights.

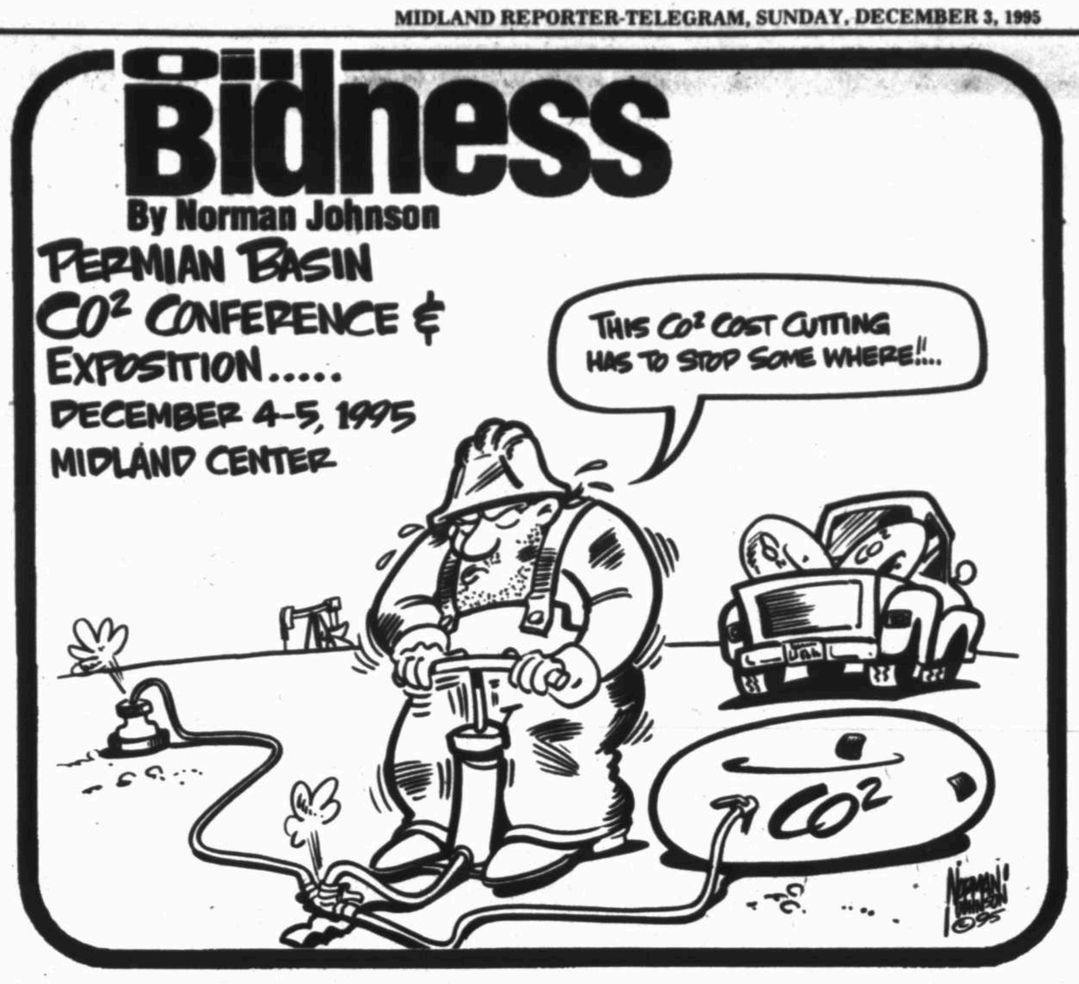

The Falklands government plans to award acreage to oil exploration companies in July.

British Gas said it would bring technology and expertise in exploration to the partnership while YPF of Buenos Aires brings a knowledge of the area, its geology and its politics.

"We see the southern cone of South America as a strategic development area," said Howard Dalton, executive director of British Gas. "We have been interested in assessing the hydrocarbon potential around the Falklands for some time."

Nobody knows how much oil could lie beneath the islands, because none in significant quantities has ever been tapped.

Both Britain and Argentina have made claims to revenue flowing from possible oil developments on the islands, though neither government recognizes the other's right to collect.

Cooper Cameron sells Wheeling

HOUSTON —Cooper Cameron Corp. has closed the sale of its Wheeling Machine Products division, based in Pine Bluff, Arkansas, to Nassau Holding Corporation for $15.0 million. Nassau Holding is a private company owned by the Bill Hines family of New Orleans, Louisiana.

Cooper Cameron President and Chief Executive Officer Sheldon R. Erikson said, "The sale of Wheeling reflects our decision to focus the marketing and manufacturing efforts of our Petroleum Production Equipment segment solely on the oil and gas pressure control equipment business. Further, the proceeds from the sale have been used to address another of our priorities, reducing debt." Erikson also noted that R. M. "Mike" Cote, General Manager of Wheeling since February 1994, will remain with the Cooper Cameron organization.

Wheeling manufactures threaded steel couplings for tubular products used in the completion of oil, gas and water wells. The couplings are used to connect lengths of well casing, production tubing and line pipe, and are manufactured to both industry and customer specifications. Sizes range from one inch to 20 inches, and a variety of steel grades and thread types are used.

Cooper Cameron is a leading international manufacturer of oil and gas pressure control equipment, including valves, wellheads, chokes, blowout preventers and assembled systems for oil and gas drilling, production and transmission used in onshore, offshore and subsea applications.

'A Christmas Carol'

'We would all like to think that we can be redeemed, and if Scrooge, the stingiest, meanest guy...in terms of Christmas, can be redeemed, then each and every one of us can be redeemed as well.'

—Don Bachmann

Charles Dickens' classic tale of a miser who learns the true meaning of Christmas returns to Midland Community Theatre this holiday season. "We've done very, very well with it," director Don Bachmann said of said the theater's productions for the past three seasons.

"Attendance has been very high.. We want it to be an annual event. We do special prices for kids because we want to reach as many people as we can with the piece."

The production, co-produced by Conoco, returns to MCT's Davis Theatre I stage Dec. 8-23. Tickets, priced at $12 for adults and $8 for children 12 and under, may be purchased through the box office at Cole Theatre, 2000 W. Wadley Ave., or by calling 682-4111.

"It's not really fair to call this show a musical," said Carl Moore, who plays Scrooge. "There are songs interjected through the whole show, but the songs are not tied to the plot. But there's a lot of music and wonderful singing."

Moore, who made his MCT debut in the 1993 production of "Breaking Legs," teaches theater arts at Greenwood High School.

'THE NUTCRACKER'

'For the dancers to be able to experience a live orchestra and to have New York City dancers as our soloists...is wonderful and such an opportunity for the dancers and for people in Midland to see.'

—Judy Coleman of the Coleman Academy

When the curtain rises on Midland Festival Ballet's "The Nutcracker," the performances represent years of work on the part of local students, their parents and teachers. "We've been doing variations of 'The Nutcracker' since 1987, and the girls wanted to do more and more until more meant doing the complete production," said director Judy Coleman of the Coleman Academy.

When Ms. Coleman was a child growing up in Midland, the opportunity to dance in "The Nutcracker" didn't exist. "We didn't have that at that time. It was only something that happened after I left."

Dancing in this ballet is important to a young dancer, Ms. Coleman said. "'The Nutcracker,' gives a lot to those dancers who are really serious and want to do more and go on with their dancing."

The ballet, with its music by Tchaikovsky, has become a holiday favorite in the United States.

Dancers, like audiences, find, Ms. Coleman said, 'The Nutcracker' magical. "Anthony Ferro and Susan Clark brought the magic of 'The Nutcracker' with them in Ballet Midland, and I just wanted to give that gift to the kids who didn't have the opportunity to work with those two wonderful people while they were here."

The ballet, set for performances at 8 p.m. Dec. 9 and 2:30 p.m. Dec. 10 at Lee High School, will feature 85 dancers from Midland and Odessa; the Midland-Odessa Symphony and singers from the Chorale, directed by Robert Hunt; and guest artists from the New York City Ballet.

"The way everything has come together is unbelievable," Ms. Coleman said. "Rob is so easy to work with and so congenial. For the dancers to be able to experience a live orchestra and to have New York City dancers as our soloists to compliment each of the groups is wonderful and such an opportunity for the dancers and for people in Midland to see."

HOROSCOPE

SUNDAY, DECEMBER 3, 1995

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Those in a position to go into business for themselves should do so. All signs point to fabulous results if you act quickly. Early in 1996, you change your personal plans in order to take advantage of a golden employment opportunity. A romantic relationship will heat up next spring. Be willing to compromise to make mate happy. Let offspring know what you expect from them. A younger person wants to make you proud.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DAY: actress Anna Chlumsky, auto racer Rick Mears,

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You have lots of imagination today. Think about ways to increase your income. Surrounding yourself with positive people will help you prosper. Steer clear of negative thinkers.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Memories of a long ago romance filter into your consciousness. You realize something that you overlooked back then. Love relationships have their ups and downs.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Do some comparison shopping before buying holiday gifts. A kind act will be repaid. Offer to babysit if a neighbor has an emergency. A major house cleaning project may take several days.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Watch your cash and your belongings, especially if you are on a shopping tour. Impatience and haste could lead to regrettable purchases. Your social life accelerates when you reach out to new people.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A quiet day at home will give you an opportunity to catch up on chores and decide what items to purchase as Christmas presents. A newspaper article or ad could provide a truly great gift idea.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You need to budget both time and money now. Go over your gift and greeting card list. Homemade goodies make wonderful presents. Try out a new cookie recipe.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Risky and expensive ventures should be avoided, even if your intentions are the best. Close friends may be indecisive today. Bear with them. Make helpful suggestions, but refrain from nagging.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Your social calendar looks more exciting as the holidays approach. Be sure to reciprocate your friends' hospitality. The phone lines will be humming this evening if you decide to host or arrange a Christmas party.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Look before your leap. Investing a risky proposition would be a mistake. Tact is required when dealing with someone who is eager to play a larger role in your life.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): So-called bargains can be deceptive. Refuse to follow someone who cannot offer a logical reason for their actions. Conquering an old fear brings a wonderful feeling of accomplishment.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A pleasant smile is a wonderful asset. Use it often. Someone turns to you for advice. Avoid sounding frivolous when discussing a serious issue.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Both physical labors and mental pursuits are favored today. Quietly determine the best way to provide for your financial future. Do not permit your enthusiasm to outweigh your common sense. Thoroughly investigate new proposals.

Opening lead: Two of ◇

"There is a time for labor and thought," wrote Swinburne. For the bridge player, that moment is before playing to the first trick.

East's jump to two diamonds was preemptive, and South stretched a little to bid two spades. North had ample to jump to game. Note West's restraint. With three, perhaps four sure defensive tricks in hand, West did not double for fear of revealing the trump position. It availed naught.

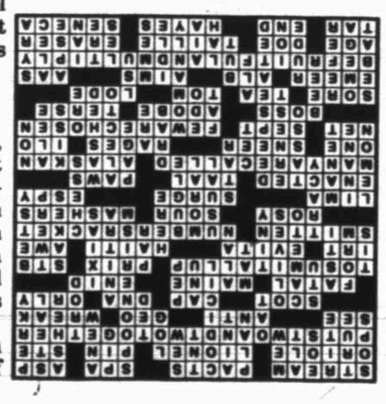

The opening diamond lead was won in dummy. Declarer realized that, because of East's preempt, there was the possibility of a poor trump break, and took some time to consider how to avoid losing control of the hand. A low heart was led at trick two, the king losing to West's ace.

The defender tried a tricky play, underleading the ace of clubs, but declarer had only one way to go, rising with dummy's king. The queen and jack of hearts were cashed for a club discard, and two club ruffs in hand combined within two diamond ruffs on the table brought South's total to eight tricks.

When declarer led the fourth heart and ruffed with the eight of trumps, West was helpless. After overruffing with the jack, West exited with a trump. Declarer won on the table, then crossed the last two tricks to land an aggressive game with an overtrick to boot.

Had West considered the hand more carefully, the futility of the club play might have become apparent. If West simply forced dummy to ruff a diamond each time the defender is on lead, South can still scrape home, but the task is more difficult.

San Francisco ballet lives up to top reputation

NEW YORK (NYT) — Once upon a time, there was little dance in the United States beyond New York. Indeed, anything outside the narrow confines of Manhattan by definition was regarded as regional, and therefore, insignificant.

But for the past decade, San Francisco Ballet particularly has been teaching New York the hard lesson that it is no longer the only place in America where important dance can prosper.

The San Francisco company, on its third visit to New York since 1991, danced first-class works in a first-class way at City Center last week. Next year, Seattle's Pacific Northwest Ballet will perform at this old temple of dance in mid-Manhattan.

"The great dance boom of the 1970s," said San Francisco Ballet artistic director Helgi Tomasson, "was in a way the start of dance gravitating away from New York. Kennedy Center, in Washington, D.C., was built, and companies began doing residencies throughout the United States. Interest in dance in general grew, companies were created and young dancers began to discover that great work was being done in cities other than New York."

The dance world continues to shift ground. Of the three big ballet companies in New York considered national in scope, only New York City Ballet has maintained some semblance of primary status. American Ballet Theatre and Joffrey Ballet — Tomasson's first company in the U.S. — have endured ongoing crises: Joffrey is now struggling for sheer survival and Ballet Theatre has a much reduced season.

PLAY: Christmas favorite comes to Midland

(From 1H)

Some of his students have questioned whether he's acting or not in his current role. "Of course, a lot of them accuse me of not having to act too much," Moore said. "We are right in the middle of a production right now, and I can be a pretty severe taskmaster when it comes close to production."

Scrooge is "a charming character to play because he goes through such a drastic change," Moore said. "He starts out as a very embittered old man who everybody just perceives as this disgusting old grouch.

However, as we come to know Scrooge, we come to know this attitude of his is one that came upon him through things that happened to him. We also discover that he's responsible for the things that happened to him because of his attitude and all he needs to learn is that the simple change of his attitude is what he needs to change his life."

To get into the role, Moore has used several techniques, including observing others and himself. "I remember things I've noticed in people that have been scroogish, and remembering my own self. There are times when I can be scroogish, but, I hope, I'm quick to recognize it and do something about it. But I am capable of being quite miserly.

"I think everybody is if they allow themselves to be. I think often times we forget ourselves. We forget what we're here for. I'm a big believer in the brotherhood of man. We're here to help each other and do for each other, and I think often times we get caught up in our own selfishness."

'I'm a big believer in the brotherhood of man. We're here to help each other and do for each other, and I think oftentimes we get caught up in our own selfishness.'

— Carl Moore plays Scrooge

Although this is his first time to play Scrooge, he has been in the holiday production before and played the ghost of Jacob Marley and Mr. Fezziwig.

Others in the cast include Michael Trost, who also plays Scrooge; Kristen Riek and Price Williams, Tiny Tim; Ronnie Williams, Bob Cratchit; Sarah Pietraszek-Mattner, Mrs. Cratchit; Johanna Mills as Nell, the mitten lady; Gary Hall, Jake, the soup peddler; David Balogh, the Ghost of Jacob Marley and Mr. Fezziwig; Martha Fentem and Patty Loftis, Mrs. Fezziwig; Jane Burgess, the ghost of Christmas Past; Bill Kersh, the Ghost of Christmas Present; Lauren Lary and Ellen Williams, Ebenezer Scrooge's sister, Fan; Jerrod Moore, the young Scrooge; Beau Dameron, the nephew, Fred; Heidi Hargrove, Heidi, Fred's wife; Charlotte Wornell, Lucy; and Anthony Peel, Topper.

Portraying the Cratchit children are Missy Williams, David Curtis, Caroline Corlee, Christen Alldredge, Katherine Avakian, Sarah Williams and Charlotte Wornell.

The Ghost of Christmas Future is played by the eerie Ghost of Christmas Future. Jeff Fentem is the musical director. Jan Collerd is the choreographer.

Traditional carols and dancing are performed by an ensemble that includes Anna Avakian, Tammy Carhart, Justin Evans, LaTisha Fletcher, Suzanne Hinterlong, Carilyn Johnson, Amber Kelly, Douglas Lawhon, Reid Merritt, Roxanne Mitchell, Ross Padgett and Tiffany Turner.

The children's ensemble includes Patrick Chetty, Amber Loftis, Kristin Loftis, Melanie Seanard, Doug Schmidt, Elizabeth Smith, Justin Tate, Aaron Timko, Lauren Vaughn, Margaret Webster and Samantha Watson.

Bachmann traces the popularity of "A Christmas Carol" to its underlying message of redemption. "Everybody knows the character of Scrooge, and everybody knows that he is going to be redeemed," Bachmann said. "I think that's a part of the fun of the things. I still see some teary eyes here and there. We would all like to think that we can be redeemed, and if Scrooge, the stingiest, meanest guy in all the world in terms of Christmas, can be redeemed, then each and every one of us can be redeemed as well."

DANCE: Ballet Midland to perform 'The Nutcracker'

(From 1H)

Those guest soloists include Bart Cook, who appeared as Father Drosselmier in the movie version of "The Nutcracker" with McCaully Caulkin; Maria Caleghari as the Sugar Plum Fairy and Cornell Crabtree as the Cavalier.

In addition, an area performance is planned for Big Spring Municipal Auditorium at 8 p.m. Dec. 16. Mary Beth Budd and Jose Beraca from New York Metropolitan Opera will be dancing as the Sugar Plum Fairy and the Cavalier, respectively, in the Big Spring performance.

Since Midland Festival Ballet is not a professional company, it could not use Ballancine's choreography, Ms. Coleman said. Choreography is by Cook and Crabtree. Costumes have been created locally.

"The parents have given so much and the costume people in particular," Ms. Coleman said, noting that the ballet will include a chorus and narration that weaves the story line for the audience.

Tickets, priced at $10 for adults and $7.50 for seniors and children, may be purchased at the customer service booths at Midland Park Mall and Permian Mall. For more information on the performances call 694-0358.

Sponsors include Midland American Bank, KMID-TV, KOCV-TV and the Reporter-Telegram. The performances will be taped under the supervision of John Gaston and televised on both channels the week of Christmas.

The performances are privately funded. "We have not gotten any grant money from anybody," Ms. Coleman said. "We're not eligible for grants — not yet."

Now that all the elements are in place for "The Nutcracker," Ms. Coleman finds herself somewhat amazed. "I never expected this to happen. I didn't plan it. It's been kind of one step after the other."

International business

Foreign trade is becoming reality

Foreign trade.

It's a reality for some, a promise for others and a pipe dream for even more.

Midland and Odessa manufacturers have been quietly exporting their products and know-how for years.

Companies such as Partech and Highland Pump are veterans in the oil fields of New Guinea, Russia, Brazil and Colombia.

High-tech firms such as Midland Certified Reagents are building international businesses on the strength of a shrinking world. Overnight express delivery gets the product distributed, while an Internet Web site, E-mail and a fax machine lessen the problem of disjointed time zones.

These intrepid businesses are unique, though, for their innovative approaches to time, space and international trade.

For international trade in the Midland/Odessa area to grow, the key is highway and air transportation.

Efforts are well under way in both areas.

La Entrada al Pacifico — the entrance to the Pacific — grows closer each day.

The proposal would link Midland and Odessa with Chihuahua City, Los Mochis and Topolobampo in Mexico. The plan connects West Texas and Mexico with Lubbock, Amarillo and points north via Interstate 27 and to Dallas and Interstate 35 via Interstate 20.

On Dec. 11, the Texas Department of Transportation (TxDOT) will hold an open house and public meeting in Lubbock to discuss the TxDOT Route Study to connect I-27 in Lubbock with I-20 and I-10.

Recommendations for a single freeway or three separate highways will be presented.

While those vital links are being determined, business and civic leaders from Midland and Odessa have been strengthening contacts with Mexican counterparts.

In late October, a delegation of Midland/Odessa Transportation Alliance (MOTRAN) representatives held a series of meetings in Chihuahua City and Los Mochis, Mexico, with officials from the states of Chihuahua and

Forum provides tips on doing business abroad

By Bruce Partain

Suppose you have a new business associate in Japan or Mexico.

You need to let them know about an important delivery date.

How do you contact them?

A. Phone call

B. Express mail

C. Fax

D. E-mail

If you chose C or D, you've got the right idea.

About 45 Midland business people gathered Oct. 26 at the Chamber's Small Business Council Luncheon Forum to discuss international trade.

"Faxes are easier for them to digest," said Don Cloud, who has imported and exported in Asia and Latin America.

"Of course, in Asia, the time zones work against you so faxes are a necessity, but even in Mexico with similar times zones to the U.S., there is less chance for misunderstandings when they've got the written word in front of them."

The Export/Import quarterly forum addressed a variety of subjects, including opportunities in foreign markets, unique financing requirements, partnering with foreign companies, planning and time lines and being aware of cultural differences.

American Toy's David Diaz, Teraco's Esther Tarango and Joanne Vliet with the International Trade Department of the Texas Department of Commerce, participated in a panel discussion.

Committee chairman Karl Painter moderated the panel.

Cloud said that published trade leads can help build business in foreign markets, but "50 percent are just price shopping by brokers. The real business is based on relationships built up over a period of time. If you know someone with an aunt or uncle in China, you can get an introduction and begin to build a relationship. Brokers are useful, because they can ship and receive for you."

Diaz's company manufactures plush toys and other products. American Toy trades primarily with Mexico through contracts with Kmart and Wal-Mart. Diaz said that brokers are important in shipping products across international borders, but a manufacturer has to proceed cautiously.

"The custom brokers move goods across border. For an importer/exporter that person is the most important person outside of his office. They make sure classification codes are correct and labeling requirements are met."

Diaz said finding a broker is not difficult. Chambers of Commerce along the border are helpful, and publications such as Twin Plant News list customs brokers.

Custom broker fees are typically $100 to $200 for a crossing, according to Diaz. "It doesn't matter if it's a pickup truckload or three 18-wheelers. It's the same amount of paperwork," he said.

If you plan to both import and export, Diaz advises choosing a broker with offices on both sides of the border. "If the broker has a receiving terminal at his dock, that is ideal," he said.

Also critical, is the length of time the broker has been in business. "You can tell this by checking their RFC number. The last numbers are the date they started in business."

If you are only importing from Mexico, "the U.S. broker is the most important," Diaz said. A Mexican broker is most important when you are exporting to that country.

"Mexican manufacturers usually have their own brokers already set up, and it is advisable for importers to use that manufacturer's broker," Diaz said. "He's familiar with the product."

Diaz also recommends buying goods freight-on-board (F.O.B.) Texas, rather than F.O.B. Mexico.

Peso devaluation can be overcome as well.

"If possible, try to deal only in dollars," Diaz said. "If they tell you they can only deal in pesos, have them give you the quote in pesos, but make all bids and quotes relate to an agreed exchange rate at time of payment. Otherwise you may be paid in very devalued pesos."

Mike Sawyer, vice president for Trans-Trade, a freight-forwarding and customs brokerage company with offices in Midland, said international trade regulations are specific, but not difficult.

For the neophyte trader, "it can seem kind of scary, with the duties, taxes, pro forma invoices and so on," Sawyer said.

Freight forwarders like Trans-Trade "set up trucking, air, and documents and can help with clearance on import or export shipments. We also assist with crating and packing," he said.

"We're fortunate to have an international airport here with a customs office, so local companies can clear customs in Midland," Sawyer said.

Brokers typically charge $75 to clear a shipment through customs, according to Sawyer. "If the item has a tremendous value, it could run another $50."

Sawyer said Trans-Trade also translates bids and forms into other languages.

Another resource for international trade is the Midland Chamber's Economic Development department.

"We provide manufacturers and Chamber members with international trade information," said Leticia Rendon, marketing specialist.

"Export Hotline and Amerafacts Caller are two fax capabilities the Chamber has to gather the most recent information dealing with trade in any part of the world," she said. "We can also provide leads on doing business with the Mexican companies we've contacted in Chihuahua and Sinaloa."

For further information on importing and exporting, contact Ms. Rendon at the Midland Chamber's Economic Development Department, 683-3381 or fax 682-9205.

Sinaloa and the port of Topolobampo.

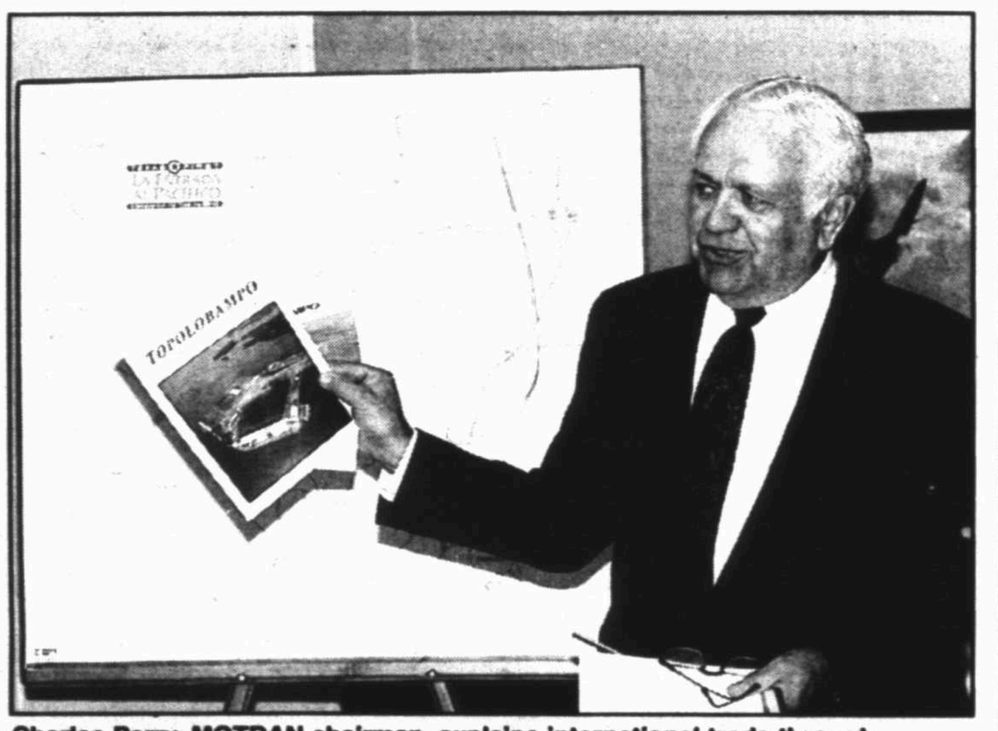

In late November, a contingent from the Chihuahua Chamber of Commerce visited Odessa and Midland, touring the Odessa Industrial Park, Midland manufacturers and Midland International Airport.

"Regardless of the outcome of the I-27 extension, these positive networking opportunities are building a relationship between West Texas and our friends in Mexico," said Marvin Wynn, Chamber president/CEO.

During the October visit, Mexican Federal Highway Department official Luis Hermosilla said of La Entrada, "It is a good project and we will follow the progress of the state. I will include this project on my priority list."

All indications are that the Mexican portion of the roadway would be completed in five to 10 years.

The U.S. portions would be built on a less aggressive schedule.

Migration in, out of state affects Texas' growth

By Kevin Skipper

Migration into and out of Texas dramatically affects our population growth. Between 1990-95, the state's population increased from 16,986,510 to 18,629,572, or 9.6 percent.

Much of this increase was caused by net "inmigration" or the positive difference between the number of persons moving into Texas and the number leaving. The balance of the growth was due to natural increase, which is the difference between the number of births and deaths. (Statewide, more persons are born than die in any given year).

The Internal Revenue Service has compiled data on state-to-state migration since 1980.

The latest data available come from tax year 1992. The IRS compiles these data from individual tax returns. The IRS accomplishes this by comparing the past and present residences of each taxpayer using unique Social Security identifiers.

Businesses throughout the state can use migration data to understand changing consumer preferences. Store purchases are made by natives, naturalized Texans, and newcomers. Invariably, the levels and types of purchases differ in each of these three groups. For example, picante sauce is widely used by native-born Texans and "persons who weren't born here, but who got here as quickly as they could" (naturalized Texans).

Persons new to the state may not yet appreciate the pleasure of serious picante sauce consumption. If a store's trade area contains many new migrants from outside the state, it may not make sense to stock shelves with the wide variety of exotic picante sauces (you know, the ones with "hotter than you-know-what" on the labels) typically found in areas containing higher concentrations of native-born and naturalized Texans. It's all part of understanding the demographics of local marketplaces and using this information to more precisely target store inventories.

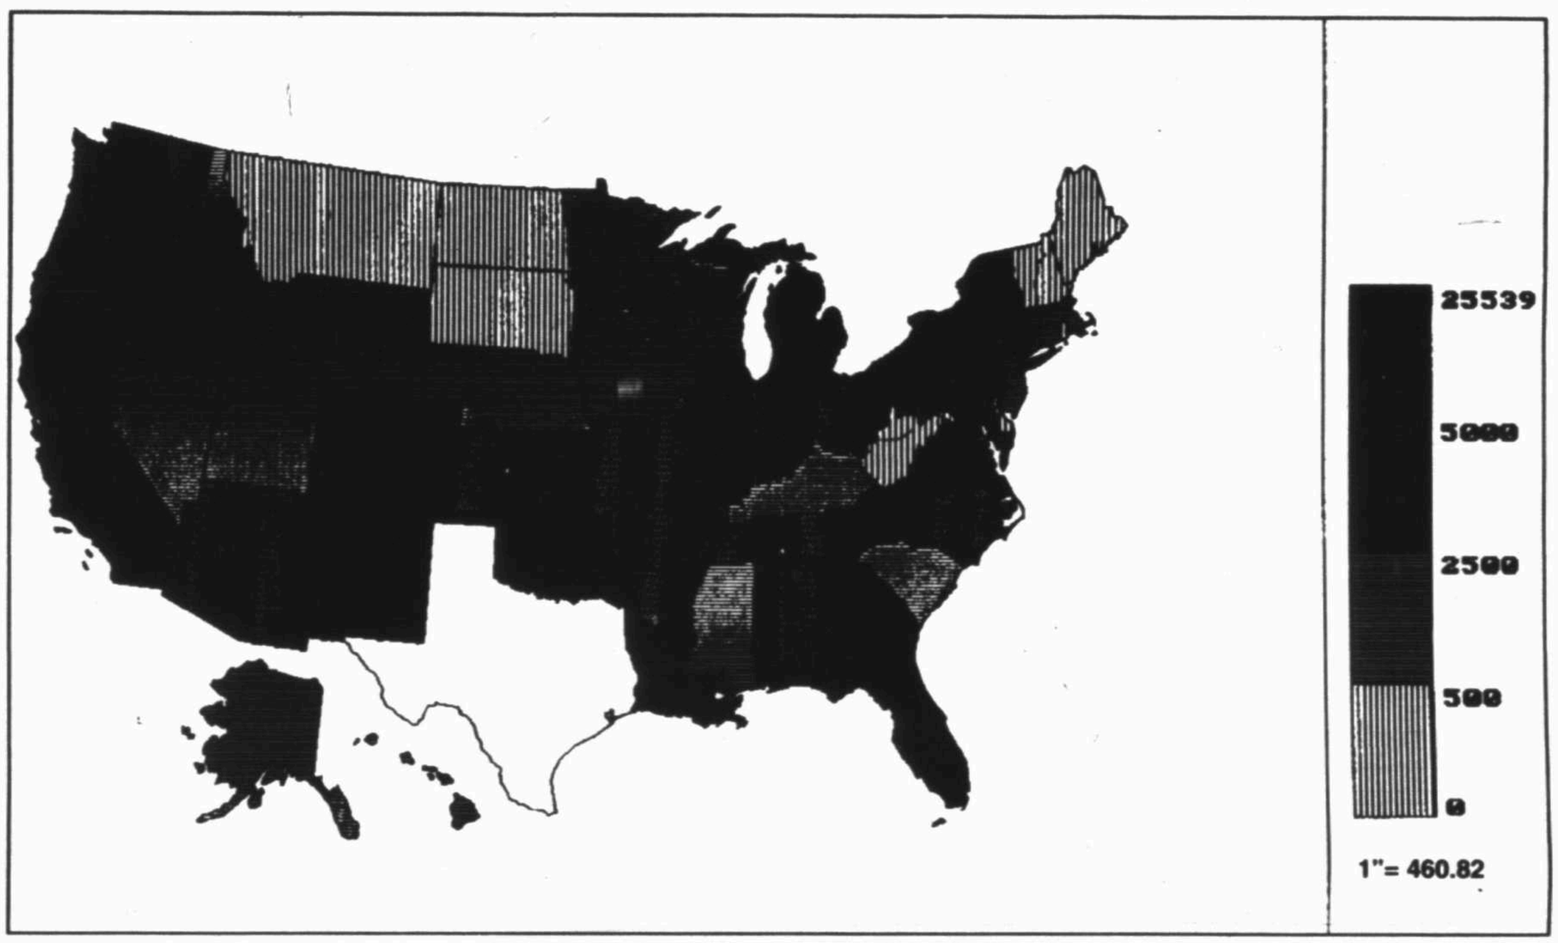

Table 1 shows the top 10 areas from which population flowed into Texas (inmigration) in 1992. California ranked first with 25,539 inmigrants, or 8 percent of the total of 318,619. Countries outside the United States contributed another 19,937 (6.3 perent).

Louisiana, Florida, and Oklahoma round-out the top five sources of inmigrants to the state.

Montana (454), New Hampshire (439), Delaware (392), Rhode Island (319) and Vermont (198) represent states losing the lowest number of persons to Texas (Table 2). This is not surprising, since these states have some of the smallest populations and are located farthest away.

Figure 1 shows inmigration patterns in map form. It's easy to see that states losing the highest numbers of residents to Texas (the two darkest levels) are located in either states surrounding Texas, the Ohio River Valley, the Southeast, or the industrial Northeast. Northern New England, the Upper Midwest, and much of the West (except California) lost the fewest residents to Texas (the two lightest levels).

Table 3 lists the top 10 areas where Texans migrated. These include California (14,593 or 8.6 percent of the total), foreign countries (11,045) and Florida (10,453).

Few Texans chose to move to Delaware (352), Maine (329), New Hampshire (324), Rhode Island (216), and Vermont (122) as these states offer relatively few job opportunities and are far from home (Table 4).

Many states losing high numbers of residents to Texas also received high numbers of persons from Texas (Figure 2). Likewise, states not contributing much to our population growth also do not attract many Texans.

Net migration is the difference between levels of inmigration and outmigration. A positive net migration level means that migration to Texas exceeds migration out of the state. California (10,946), foreign countries (8,892) and Louisiana (4,529) contributed most to net migration into Texas during 1992 (Table 5).

Outmigration exceeded inmigration (negative net migration) most in Tennessee (723), North Carolina (806), Arkansas (927), Colorado (1,031) and Georgia (1,031) (Table 6). In other words, more people moved to these five states from Texas than moved from them to the Lone Star State.

Figure 3 shows net migration patterns into Texas. Texas lost more people than it gained from much of the West (except Kansas, Oklahoma, and California) and the Southeast (except Louisiana and Florida). New York, Michigan, and Illinois lost more of their residents to Texas than they gained from the state.

Although these data describe state-level migration patterns and may not directly apply to local trade areas, merchants should become more acutely aware (using surveys or the U.S. Census of Population & Housing found at just about any library) of not only the current geography of their customers (where they reside or work), but also from where their customers originally migrated. After considering this, merchants can offer more goods and services (and possibly alter the manner in which they deliver goods and services) that appeal to their unique demographic mixes of consumers.

Economist thinks future bodes well for Midland

By Bruce Partain

Norwest Corp.'s chief economist sees good things for Midland's future.

"The Odessa/Midland Metropolitan Statistical Area has enjoyed a job growth rate better than the U.S. as a whole," said Sung Won Sohn. Sohn told a group of Midland business people about his views on the economies of the world, the nation, Texas and Midland/Odessa.

Sohn

Oil looks good long-term

Sohn recognized that the Midland/Odessa economy still relies heavily on the oil industry. Sohn said he doesn't expect any rise in oil prices in 1996.

Sohn noted non-OPEC members produce about 42 million barrels a day currently, while OPEC members produce about 25 million barrels daily. The combined total is slightly in excess of world demand.

Longterm, however, he expects demand to grow and oil prices to respond by rising to $27 to $30 a barrel in real terms by the year 2010.

Increased demand over the next 20 years will be from developing countries such as Thailand, China, eastern Europe and Latin America, not the traditional big importers Japan, the United States and Germany.

"Thailand and China already have real economic growth of 10 percent annually," Sohn said. "China has been an exporter, but could become a net importer of oil."

Permian Basin diversification

The Midland/Odessa economy has shown better job growth than the United States as a whole. That growth, however, has been in lower-paying trade jobs, such as retail, said Sohn.

The key for Midland/Odessa is diversification, especially growth in manufacturing. "Good progress has been made in this area, but more is needed," Sohn said.

Marvin Wynn, Midland Chamber president/CEO, said "the Midland Chamber of Commerce is working diligently in economic diversification for Midland. Since 1989 the Chamber has assisted 14 manufacturers to continue operations here, expand or relocate to Midland. More than 400 jobs are attributed to this effort, with more than $10 million per year in increased local expenditures every year."

Buying on time

For the United States, Sohn expressed concern that sometime in the second half of 1996 the national economy could slow.

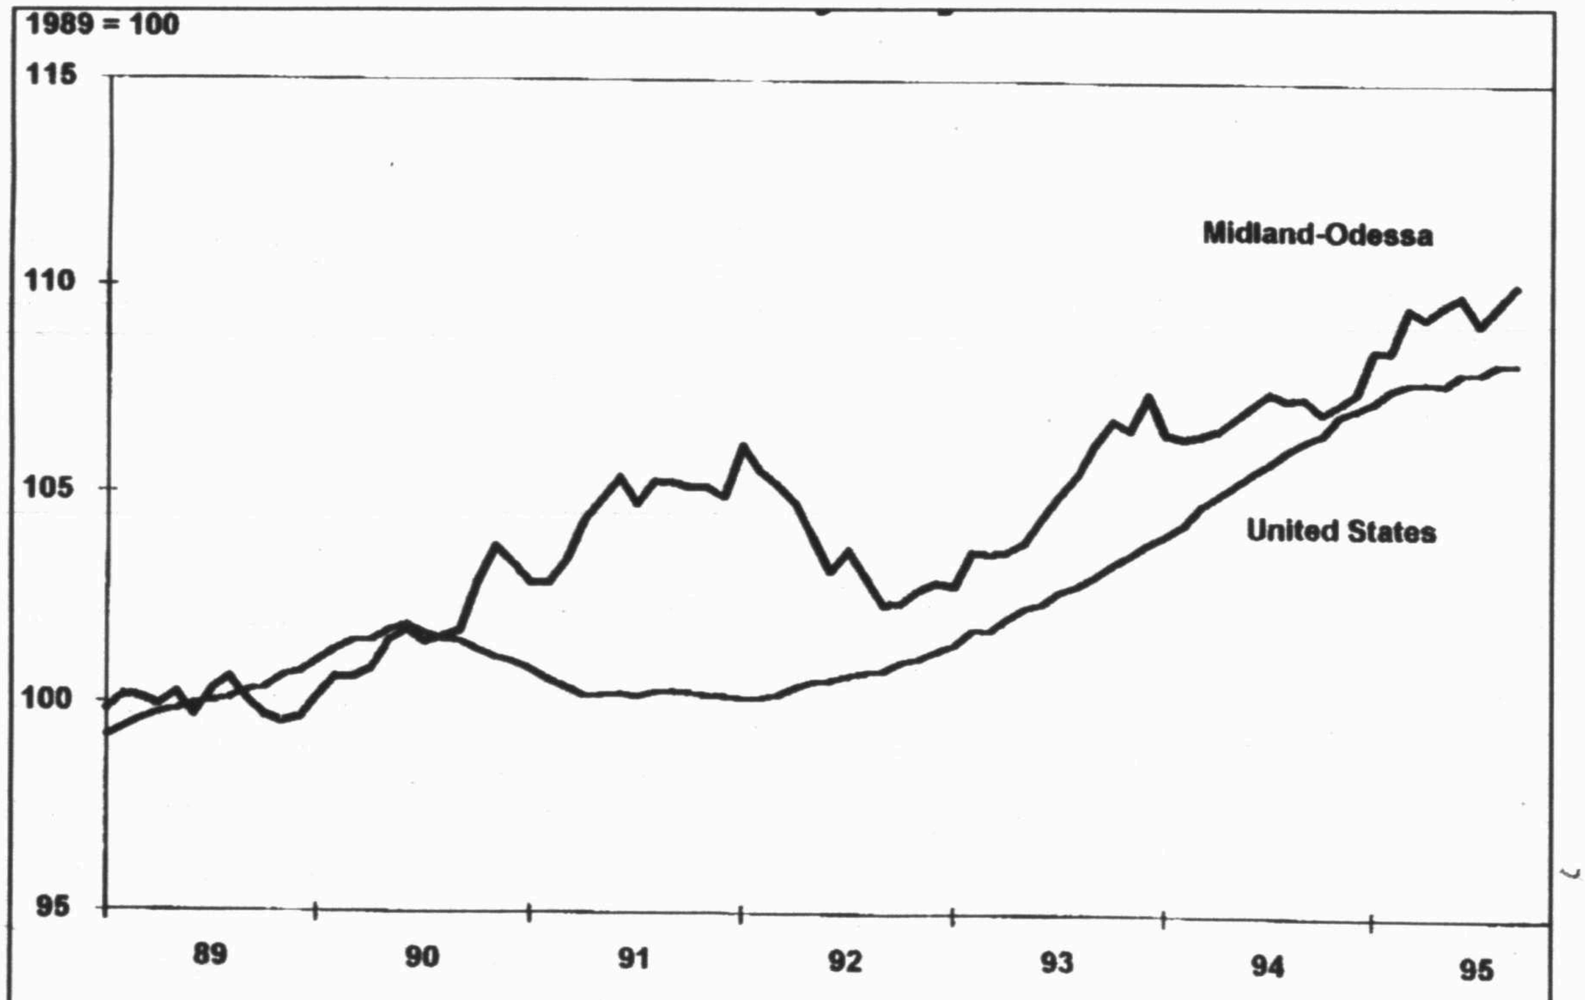

Sohn was quoted in the Wall Street Journal as being troubled by consumers' continued willingess to spend

Chamber members expect conditions to improve, survey indicates

A majority of Chamber members surveyed for Norwest Bank's Midland Business & Economic Pulse said they expect business conditions to improve in the near future.

Of the approximately 1,450 Chamber members surveyed, 460 responded.

Of those respondents 73 percent expect that business conditions in Midland will be "better" or "much better," while 23 percent anticipate "no change" during the next six months. A year ago, the Pulse survey reported 45 percent expected Midland business conditions to be "better" or "much better" with 40 percent expecting "no change."

"It is important to know what business people are thinking," said Wayne Merritt, president of Norwest Bank Texas, Midland. "Those opinions could be considered to be a leading economic

Graham

With the Chamber's fiscal year starting over in October, Grace Graham of Grace Graham Advertising came roaring out as the Top Achiever for the month. Ms. Graham sold five new memberships and assisted one member with a renewal.

Other volunteers active in October were Debbie Bergen with the CashBack Card with three new memberships and Sara St. Clair of TU Electric with one new membership. Also assisting current members with renewal were John Andrews, CPA, Scott Foster of AT&T, Dora Clardy of Bank One and Vicky Hailey of Southwestern Bell.

The President's Club is the Midland Chamber's volunteer committee for membership recruitment and retention.

Each month volunteers meet to discuss their efforts to invite businesses to be a part of Midland's oldest continuously active business organization.

President's Club volunteers remind Midland businesses that each new member receives a free ad, valued at $195, in the Midland Chamber Business Journal.

For more information about the President's Club or Chamber membership, call Jane Inskeep at the Chamber, 683-3381.

Chamber seeks club, agency information

If someone knows what you do, but doesn't know who you are, how do they find you?

"They call the Midland Chamber," said Chamber information secretary Carolyn Coleman.

Ms. Coleman urged Midland civic clubs and social agencies to send her basic information about their organizations.

"I keep a Rolodex with club names, meeting times and contact person," she said. "It is very helpful to everyone if the club will make a point of updating this information each year, either in January or when officer elections occur."

Business and professional organizations should also share their information with the Chamber, as well as performers such as barbershop quartets.

Ms. Coleman also refers many inquirers to local businesses.

"That's where being a Chamber member pays off," she said. "Because I always refer members first."

To send in club information, contact the Midland Chamber by mail at: P.O. Box 1890, Midland, TX 79702, or by fax at 682-9205.

indicator."

Merritt said that the responding Chamber member businesses were "not just start-up businesses.

"More than 75 percent have been in business more than five years," he said.

Local business profits are also expected to be "better" according to 58 percent of the survey respondents, compared to 42 percent responding in the fall 1994 Pulse survey.

Capital spending and hiring are also expected to improve among 33 percent and 22 percent respectively of the responding businesses.

"It is tough to find something in these survey results to be pessimistic about," Merritt said. "Overall, you could say business confidence is definitely up."

Merritt said that the Pulse survey is administered twice each year. "We normally put in a question of current community interest in addition to the regular economic questions," he said.

This most recent survey asked about Midland's downtown area.

Of those responding, 83 percent said that a revitalization effort would benefit the overall business environment of Midland, while 46 percent indicated it would directly benefit their own business.

The Midland College Business and Economic Development Center administered the survey for Norwest.

beyond their means by borrowing on their credit cards. "There is a near-record high in the credit card delinquency rate," he said.

Paychecks flatten

Sohn noted that two-thirds of the consumer price index is labor costs, and that real wages are actually down in all but health, auto and finance sectors. "Manufacturers can't raise wages because of competition," he said. "Consumers are buying more at discount stores, keeping prices stable."

Rosy balance?

Don't rely on the stock market to signal any future downturns, warned Sohn.

"As a leading economic indicator, the stock market has successfully predicted 11 out of the last nine recessions," he joked. When asked to comment on the balanced budget fray between President Clinton and congressional Republicans, Sohn said, "we were told we would have a balanced budget by 2002. We were promised a rose garden, but we haven't even seen a rock garden."

Breakfasts are means for business people to introduce themselves

Buyers and sellers are marking their calendars for 1996's Networking Breakfasts.

"These breakfasts are an excellent means for business people to introduce themselves, pass out business cards and brochures and generally remind the buyers who they are and what they sell," said Bruce Partain, Midland Chamber spokesman.

The breakfasts are usually held on the third Tuesday of the month, "but we have several exceptions, especially through May," Partain said.

The breakfasts cost $5. Registration begins at 7 a.m.; the meeting begins at 7:30 a.m. and concludes by 8:30 a.m. All meetings are held in the Roadrunner Room at the Midland College Student Center.

"Everyone present is introduced and buyers outline their current needs," Partain said. "Normally between 40 and 60 people attend. Minority and woman-owned businesses are especially encouraged to attend."

The event is sponsored by the Midland Chamber, the Midland Hispanic Chamber, the Black Chamber of Entrepreneurs, the Citizens' Coalition and the Small Business Development Centers of Midland College and UTPB.

Sonsilks offers variety of one-of-a-kind designs

Sonsilks became a reality in 1986 as a cottage industry engaged in home parties, by invitation only. With the help of her late husband, Bob, Ellen West began Sonsilks as an "extra curricular activity — a hobby," to satisfy a hunger for a new outlet for creative energy.

When home parties became more exacting, Sonsilks located for a time in Old Town Midland. As retail demands grew and inventory increased, an expanded Sonsilks moved to Midland Plaza. The business now has eight to 10 employees, all trained to help the customer pull things together for the home, for gifts, for fashion, or just for fun.

Sonsilks pampers customers who are interested in updating existing homes, new home buyers, individuals with a desire for creative expression both personally and in their homes, and those wanting fresh ideas for "giftable gifts."

This atypical and exceptional store keeps a wide variety of inventory, from one-of-a-kind designs, to recognizable name brands. You'll find a wide range of silk florals, Dreamcicle collectibles, candles by Root, brass by Copper Craft, throws by Kennebuck, potpourri by Naturscent and Aromatique, wind chimes by Woodstock and J.W. Stannard, sterling pins and pendants by Modar from Israel, and many more wonderful surprises such as a collection of Koala Bears from Creart.

Sonsilks is the authorized dealer for Jeep Collins jewelry. This extraordinary line is hand crafted in Fredericksburg, and is readily identifiable. If the piece you want is not in stock, Sonsilks will be happy to order it for you.

The store is especially enchanting at Christmas, with music by outstanding artists, including Newell Oler (available on tapes and CDs), a gorgeous assembly of angels in pins, ornaments and figurines from the Seraphim collection and a gathering of exquisite collectable Santas. Ellen loves buying Santas and says she chooses them by the twinkle in the eyes of each one.

Sonsilks shopping is notable for its amazing sensory satisfaction. Visually, the lovely display of merchandise is a treat. The sound of gentle, nostalgic background music stages a relaxed, unhurried atmosphere that makes shopping delightful. The fragrance of scented candles and varieties of potpourri enhance the pleasure of specialty-store browsing. Various textures of brass, crystal, tapestry, wood, and silk florals complete the pleasurable shopping experience.

Ellen says other things that make her business unique are individualized customer service, variety of selection, attention to details, the store's atmosphere and especially the exceptional proficiency of the staff.

Sonsilks pampers customers who want to redecorate their homes, are decorating new homes or are looking for unusual gifts.

Ellen is a retired fine arts teacher and accomplished musician. She was raised in her mother's flower shop in Kosciusko, Miss., and learned the basics of design at a very early age. She occasionally teaches silk floral design at Midland College, in the continuing education department.

Ellen says that she carefully and methodically researches and shops current market trends in order to maintain a superior merchandise mix of cutting-edge interior accents, decorative accessories, home fragrance, collectibles, fashion jewelry and gifts.

Sonsilks is located in Midland Plaza between Mervyn's and Service Merchandise.

For your shopping convenience the store is open extended hours through the holiday season. Hours are Mon.-Fri., 10 a.m. - 8 p.m. Saturday 10 a.m.- 6 p.m. and Sundays 1-5 p.m. Their telephone number is 694-1602.

Sonsilks is a joy to browse. The shop radiates friendliness and good taste. Around every nook is fresh excitement. The classic saying around the shop is: "Put us on your Runaround Trail! Look for us! We're worth it!"

Home health-care company offers Symphony of services

Sweeping reforms and the rise in costs throughout the health care industry have provided a thriving environment for the home health industry. Its popularity is also supported in that both medical professional and patient, alike, welcome the benefits and positive effects found in home care and its dramatic effects in both psychological and physical healing and restoration.

The shift away from lengthy traditional hospital stays and the energetic swing toward home health care has led to the development and ever-increasing number of companies providing such services. The demand is growing for solid organizations offering a broad base of services delivered by quality medical professionals. One such local entity is SYMPHONY HOME CARE SERVICES.

Symphony Home Care Services, now a division of IHS (Integrated Health Services), was begun in 1983 as "We Care." The founders were local registered nurses who had invested years in such settings as primary care and emergency medicine. The original plan of these professionals was that each would work at their leisure within their new venture, while catching up on other interests sometimes ignored in such a demanding career as nursing. The leisure time was not to be acknowledged, however, as the demand from local physicians and referral sources for their services became so forceful that the business thrived from the beginning and offered no leisurely pace.

"Our operation was so successful that the company was soon bought out," according to Jeanne Gilles, R.N., Symphony administrator.

So, the new company, CareTeam was born in 1988.

Although the name has changed from We Care to CareTeam to Symphony, the company retains the same excellent services and many of the same professional staff members who have served Permian Basin residents since 1983.

Symphony represents an impressive field of operations, providing all areas of home care delivered by a caring field staff of more than 150, supported by approximately 15 members of their local office staff (in both Midland and Odessa). Symphony also provides an expansive level and range of services — from new mom and baby care all the way to the sometimes more complicated care for a steadily growing senior citizen population, and "everything in between."

The careful orchestration of the delivery of these services that include obstetrics, pediatrics, oncology and disease management, is the basis for the "symphony" name.

Medicare supervisor Cathy Adair, left, and administrator Jeanne Gilles review charts at Symohony Home Care Services offices.

The services are performed by certified and trained personnel under a mission statement that emphasizes what should be the goal for the industry — quality patient care provided in what the patient knows best: the privacy and comfort of home and family.

In addition to the vast medical services, Symphony Home Care Services also offers a Personal Care Assistance program that provides patients with care assistants who prepare meals, do shopping and light housework and offer companionship.

For more information about Symphony Home Care Services and how they might be able to orchestrate your vital home health care needs, call their metro number, 561-8066, and learn more about "service spanning two decades of quality home care to the residents of the Permian Basin."

Baptist General Convention picks basin to host gathering in 2005

The Baptist General Convention of Texas will meet Nov. 14-15, 2005, in Midland and Odessa, according to Tom Brannon, director of communications for the group.

"This might seem like a long way off, but the extra lead time will help ensure this large event is properly accommodated," said Anita Rogers of the Midland Chamber Convention and Visitors Bureau (CVB). The CVBs of both the Midland and Odessa Chambers worked together to successfully bid for the convention.

"This will be one of the largest conventions to be held in our two cities," said Linda Sweatt, Odessa CVB director. "We are estimating 7,200 people and 4,200 hotel/motel room-nights."

Using conservative estimates of $103 per visitor a day, the direct economic impact will be an estimated $3 million.

The convention is the annual business meeting for the 2.6 million-member convention. During the convention, delegates — known as "messengers" — vote on issues, including budget, missions, church starts and evangelism. Reports from its 23 affiliate benevolent and education institutions and its two agencies are also heard. Worship and fellowship are also important aspects of the meeting.

"Every convention site we work with presents its own little challenges and opportunities," Brannon said. "Certainly we will face challenges in bringing the Baptist General Convention of Texas to the Midland/Odessa area. However, having looked at both meeting and housing facilities, coupled with sensing the spirit of the people of Midland/Odessa, I believe your cities are totally capable of hosting our 120th convention. Midland/Odessa is strong Baptist territory and I believe that the convention will be a great encouragement to the churches, as well as to these two fine cities."

The CVBs have worked together in the past to attract large meetings.

"We recently worked to win the Texas City Managers Association and the Texas Association of Mayors, Council Members and Commissioners conventions," Ms. Rogers said. "By combining our efforts, Midland and Odessa can compete for these large meetings. Of course, we do still compete head to head for the smaller groups."

The visitor industry is considered the "cream of the clean industries," according to Ms. Sweatt.

"Visitors come to your community, spend significant sums of money, then leave without putting much strain on the infrastructure," she said. "It's a terrific area of commerce for Odessa and Midland to cultivate."

Chamber's volunteer of the month

Community service helps business, Blackman says

EDITOR'S NOTE: Each month the Midland Chamber Business Journal will spotlight a person whose volunteer efforts for the Chamber are exemplary.

Kat Blackman, the Chamber's volunteer of the month for December, said she has put in so many years of volunteer work at the Chamber because "it's an opportunity to give back to the community that helps me make a living."

Blackman

Ms. Blackman, who has operated Career Path Inc., since 1980, said her Chamber connections "help me know what's going on. Whenever I become a little inactive, I start to lose touch."

Volunteering takes time, but it isn't necessarily time away from business, according to Ms. Blackman.

"Most of my clients don't need me all the time, but when they do, they want someone they know and trust. So I'm meeting business people all the time through the Chamber and eventually someone's likely to say, 'Oh, I know her and I know she cares, let's call her.'"

Ms. Blackman is the chairman of the Chamber's Membership Services Committee, directing plans for business after-hours mixers and new member receptions.

She also serves on M-Squad, the Chamber ambassador group, for which she was chairman in 1982.

Ms. Blackman chaired the Small Business Council's annual trade show (Expo) and served on the Convention and Visitors Bureau board. She is a charter member of the National Association of Chamber Ambassadors and chaired the NACA's first convention, held in Midland in 1986.

'Most of my clients don't need me all the time, but when they do, they want someone they know and trust.'

— Kat Blackman

She also completed the Leadership Midland curriculum and served as chairman of the Leadership Midland Alumni Association in 1985.

Her volunteerism has led some people to ask if she works for the Chamber.

"I tell them 'Any chance I get, and you should too.'"

When she is not running her business or volunteering for the Chamber and many other organizations, Ms. Blackman and her husband, Dorman, dote on their seven grandchildren.

Education Combination

Program aims to get parents, community, businesses involved with city's students

The Education Combination program of the Midland Chamber is a broad community-based project to get parents, businesses, the general community and students involved in the education of Midland's children.

Upcoming events include the Teachers of the Year Recognition Reception March 21 and the Texas Scholars Banquet April 23.

Texas Scholars must maintain at least a 2.5 grade average while taking a challenging curriculum of college-prep courses. Ten hours of community service are also required.

Results of the program have been heartening.

"Forty percent of the seniors graduating last May were Texas Scholars," said Linda Basham, co-chairman with Jane Carrens. "This is an excellent number considering that Midland is the only community requiring volunteer work as part of being a Texas Scholar. The kids really feel they have earned their honors, and the community benefits from a new generation of volunteers being formed."

Ms. Basham said seniors have to get their volunteer hours in before February.

"The recognition programs, Texas Scholars and Teacher Recognition, appear to be positively motivating both students and teachers," said volunteer Ernie Gilkerson. "Our efforts in assisting in the formation of Business/Education Partnerships is ongoing. Our program to emphasize the need for students to read on grade level by third grade has become more of a challenge than we expected, but we are determined to succeed or many of our students are doomed to failure."

All Education Combination programs are looking for volunteers.

"We'd like to invite people interested in being involved to contact the Chamber or to talk to the individual committee chairs," Ms. Basham said.

Those committees and the chairmen are:

- Texas Scholars — Tammy Williams, 687-4601; Karen Wentworth, 520-0075
- Reading on Grade Level — Marilyn Odum, 689-1810; Romeo Canales, 689-1430; G. Larry Lawrence, 688-5922

- Business/Education Partnerships — Peter Johnson, 688-2000
- Teacher Recognition —Martee Stuart, 520-9411; Kathy Tipton, 697-0680

For more information about volunteering for the Education Combination, call Ms. Basham, 684-1975, or Ms. Carrens, 689-1144.

Program to increase state's competitiveness

AUSTIN — The Smart Jobs Fund is a business incentive program designed to increase the competitiveness of Texas in the global economy.

Because of the program's overwhelming success and support from the Legislature, the funding level for fiscal year 1996 has greatly increased from $8 million in the previous biennium to more than $29 million. Without any increase in taxes, the Smart Jobs legislation provides for one-tenth of 1 percent of the Unemployment Insurance Trust Fund to be delivered into the Smart Jobs Fund after the solvency of the fund is established.

The program is designed to train the work force of the future and to provide financial incentives to create high-skill, high-wage jobs for Texans, said Richard Hall, Texas Department of Commerce's Growth & Retention director.

The Smart Jobs Fund provides direct grants to employers for customized training in occupations that are in demand, such as manufacturing. Employers determine what training is needed, so long as they meet the requirements set forth by the Legislature. All employers who have been in business for at least one year are eligible.

Fifty percent of Smart Jobs funds are targeted to small businesses; 20 percent are targeted to minority businesses. Businesses in rural areas and enterprise zones receive special priority. Consortiums with two or more employers applying together under a common training plan will also receive priority.

At least 60 percent of the funds must go to existing Texas businesses, and up to 40 percent to businesses new to the state.

The new Smart Jobs Fund application is designed so that any employer can easily apply for training funds, and all applications are reviewed within 10 working days. Call 800/8884511 for a complete Smart Jobs application packet and additional contact information.

State increases opportunities for private sector

By Mary Scott Nabers

The Council of Competitive Government has taken an aggressive role in opening the public sector to private enterprise... It is charged with identifying government services that can be performed more efficiently by private firms and opening those areas to competition.

In Texas, the state government spends more than $4 billion each year on a wide variety of goods and services. Purchases range from standard equipment such as computer software to the more obscure services like horse training. Almost every company offers something that the state govemment may want to purchase from the private sector.

In the past, enterprise with the state government was generally relegated to companies with considerable knowledge of the bidding system. Information about selling to the state was not readily available; therefore, smaller companies with fewer resources were usually excluded. State government now promotes outsourcing as a method of ensuring it acts in the most efficient manner possible.

The Council of Competitive Govemment (CCG) — made up of the governor, lieutenant governor, comptroller of public accounts, speaker of the House, chairman of the General Services Commission (GSC) board, and the Texas Employment Commissioner of Labor — has taken an aggressive role in opening the public sector to private enterprise.

The council aims to "encourage competition, innovation, and creativity in providing state services in order to improve the quality and cost-effectiveness of those services," according to a statement from the council.

The council is charged with identifying government services that can be performed more efficiently by private firms and opening those areas to competition.

Even without impetus from the CCG, government agencies regularly contract with private companies to obtain the goods and services they require. Most of this purchasing is handled by the General Services Commission, which has developed a centralized process making it easier for companies to keep up with future bidding. This allows even the smallest firms to compete.

In order to take part in the state contracting process, a company should make arrangements to be placed on a Centralized Master Bidder's List, which contains the names of all approved vendors. Both the CCG and the GSC use this list in their bidding process. A vendor obtains approval by filling out a Bid List Certification application and submitting it, along with a $100 fee, to the GSC. Once approved, the applicant's name will be added to the mailing list to receive bid invitations on a regular basis.

When a state agency is ready to purchase products over a certain minimum value, it will — in most cases — submit a purchase order to the GSC Central Purchasing Division. Those minimum values are $15,000 for material goods, $10,000 for consulting services and $100,000 for all other services.

After approval by the GSC, the purchase request is matched to the listed vendors that offer the requested product or service. Each of these vendors is issued an invitation for bid and may then submit a bid to the requesting agency. The bid that is most cost-effective to the state usually wins the contract. The law states, however, that the agency is mandated to accept the lowest and best bid, meaning the lowest bidder is not always assured of winning the contract.

If qualified, a firm can also become certified as an Historically Underutilized Business (HUB). Because numerous agencies must award a designated percentage of their contracts to HUBs, these firms often receive preferential treatment. A HUB must have at least 51 percent of the company ownership held by a woman or minority member who actively participates in the business operations.

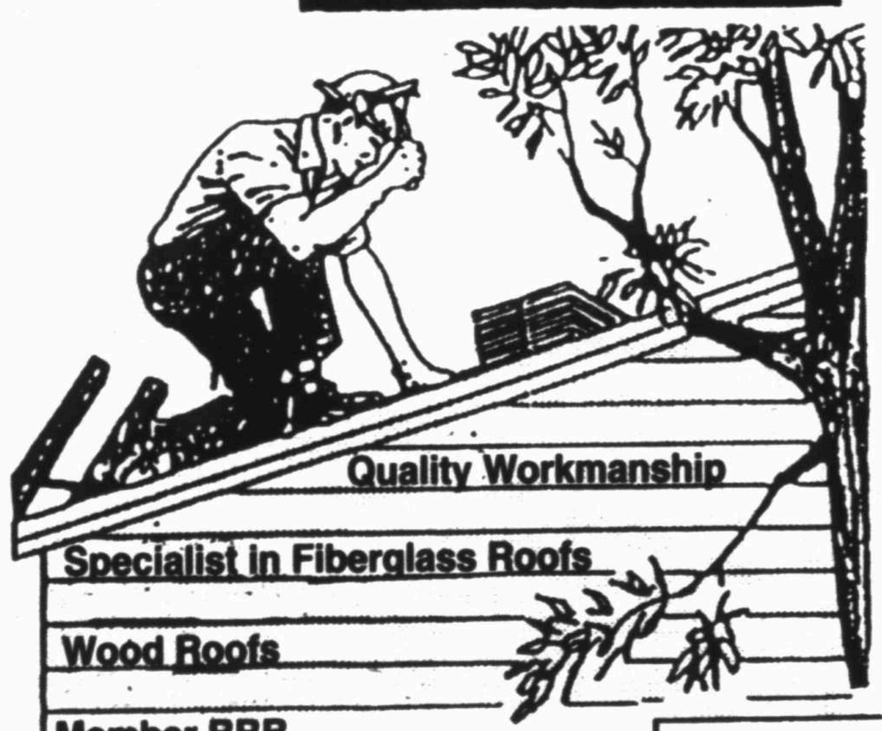

There are exceptions to every rule. In the case of the competitive bid process, products and services categorized as Automated Information Services (AIS) pose the exception. Companies selling goods or services related to AIS — essentially computers and telecommunications — can take a more direct approach to contracting with state agencies. These vendors may supply agencies with printed catalogs detailing the products and services they offer. Under the catalog process established by the Legislature, state agencies may choose to purchase these commodities from catalogs without any requirement for competitive bids.

Application requests and any other additional information may be obtained by writing General Services Commission, Bid Services Section, P.O. Box 13047, Austin, Texas, 78711-3047; 512-463-3416; fax, 512-463-7073.

Resolution Run 96

Hundreds of athletes to participate in race for United Way, downtown

Eight hundred human feet, some gliding effortlessly, some trudging hopefully, will hit the streets of Midland Saturday, Jan. 20, for the Resolution Run 96.

The half-marathon (13.1 mile) race is structured as a relay. Each of the four members making up a team will run a 3.275 mile loop.

"Our goal is 100 teams or 400 people," said one of the event's organizers, Thomas Schneider. "We expect at least 50 teams."

Schneider says half the entrants are likely to be from Midland and half from out of town. The event is directed by the Permian Basin Road Runners Inc., with help from the city of Midland and the Midland Chamber CVB.

Any funds in excess of overhead will go to benefit downtown revitalization and the United Way.

"We're encouraging groups and businesses to sponsor teams," Schneider said. "The goal is to promote fitness, especially through running."

The official Resolution Run logo shows a runner "melting" off his waistline as he jogs.

Spectators can get a good view of baton hand-offs along Loraine Street between the county courthouse and Midland Center.

A health fair will be open to the public from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. inside Midland Center with free admission. Activities include aerobics demonstrations, health screening including blood pressure and cholesterol testing, low-fat cooking demonstrations and more.

The race starts at 9 a.m., with packet pick-up from 7 - 9 a.m. at Midland Center. Awards will be given at noon. The race begins and ends just south of Midland Center.

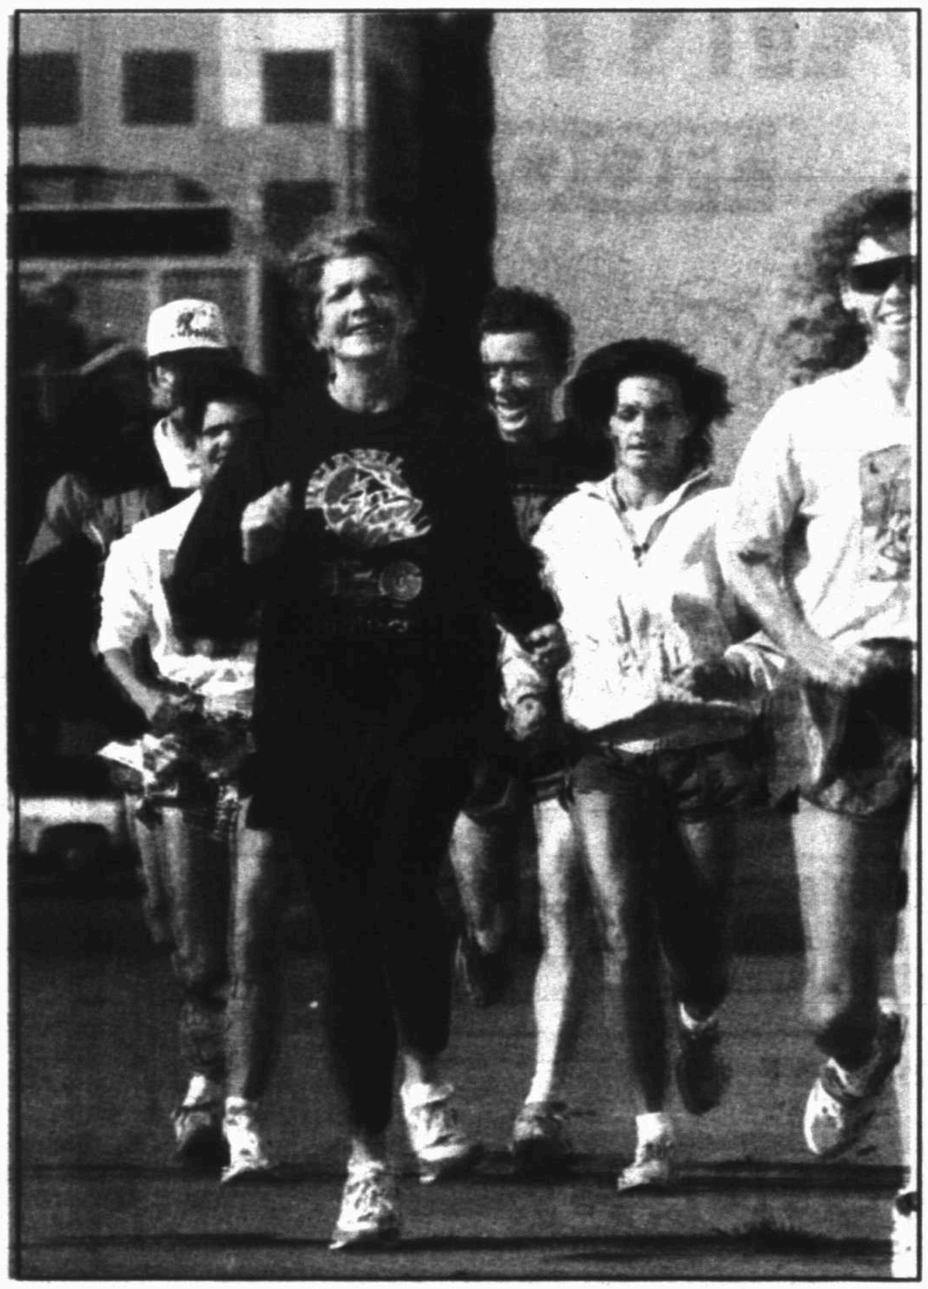

Divisions include men's, women's, mixed and corporate; age groups are 18 and under, 18-39 and 39-up.

Registration is $60 a team before Jan. 1 and $75 a team after that.

Cash prizes will be given to the top three teams in the men's, women's and mixed divisions as follows: first - $500, second - $300 and third - $200.

Contact Thomas Schneider, 520-7421, for race information and George Logan, 685-7354 for sponsorship information.

The Midland Hilton is the hotel headquarters. The Lexington, Holiday Inn and La Quinta are also offering special rates for the event.
