Bailout won't save benefits: Pension pros

WASHINGTON (AP) — Pension experts say the Social Security system is in more trouble than a $168 billion bailout plan can cure — an argument which may be backed up by revised government figures.

The House Ways and Means Committee and its subcommittee on Social Security ended seven days of hearings Wednesday on the rescue plan drafted by the National Commission on Social Security Reform.

After receiving a revised forecast from the Social Security Administration on the system's outlook for the rest of this decade, the subcommittee will begin drafting legislation next week.

Rep. J.J. Pickle, D-Texas, the subcommittee chairman, said that after taking testimony from more than 120 witnesses he was "pleased that so far no major national organization and no major national figure has come out against the package."

However, various organizations have protested certain parts of the plan, "which is understandable," Pickle said in an interview.

"But no one has said, 'Don't pass a bill unless our needs are met'," he added.

Some groups have complained that the House is moving too quickly on the rescue plan submitted to Congress late last month. House leaders have acknowledged that quick action is necessary to keep opponents from building up pressure against the measure. In addition, the government has said the system will be broke after June.

Pickle said that once the subcommittee begins drafting the legislation, "we'll move fast."

One issue the legislators must consider is whether the package goes far enough.

Several witnesses before the subcommittee on Wednesday warned that calculations on Social Security's debts did not tell the full extent of the system's problems.

Gerald D. Facciani, representing the American Society of Pension Actuaries, said he believes the reform commission and Social Security's actuaries have underestimated the retirement system's long-range deficit.

Other pension groups also expressed concern that the forecasts were too optimistic. The American Academy of Actuaries endorsed the compromise plan, but said Congress should raise the retirement age to 66 by 2015, then index it to longevity, as a majority of the reform commission suggested.

City's population climbs to 92,000

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Midland's population zoomed up to 92,000 by the end of 1982, according to Mayor G. Thane Akins. And that is one reason the city had difficulty keeping up with resulting problems, he told the Uptown Business & Professional Women during a luncheon Wednesday in Midland Center.

Admitting the council faced some bad experiences from a three-year fast growth period, the mayor explained operations of local government, sending out a plea for all people to get involved.

When the U.S. Census was taken in 1980, Midland's population was pegged at 70,525. When 1982 closed, the figure had been bumped up to 92,000 by the city's Planning Department, "and that's a conservative estimate," said the mayor.

"That represents a 12.5 percent growth per year since 1980. That's phenomenal growth. Most cities would consider 3 to 4 percent good growth. And with annexation, the growth was up to 15 percent some years," he said.

Continuing, Akins noted, "There's no way to stay up with it. I know we've had some bad experiences. Now, we're in a more reasonable growth period."

To illustrate the fast growth, Akins said the city's Planning and Zoning Department one year had more applications for zoning than did the city of Dallas.

One of the problems of city government, he contended, is the lack of involvement, or apathy, of the citizens.

"Whether you like it or not, politics is where it's at. Most everything that affects you in life many times is brought on by people in politics," said Akins, in his second term as mayor.

Midland's local government is organized under the manager-council concept, similar to many other cities with more than 5,000 population. That can be worked three ways: a weak city manager and strong council, a strong manager and weak council, equal work for both.

"Ours is written up where it's a strong council and weak city manager, but we operate coooperatively," Akins explained. "We try to separate ourselves as the policy-making group and the city manager handles day-to-day operations.

Cabinet expected to oust Sharon

JERUSALEM (AP) — The Israeli Cabinet convened today and a senior minister said he expected it would adopt the recommendations of the Beirut massacre commission calling for the resignation of Defense Minister Ariel Sharon.

More than 5,000 demonstrators marched toward Prime Minister Menachem Begin's home chanting "Arik Resign, Arik Resign," using Sharon's nickname. One banner they carried read: "You Are Not Above Justice."

Sharon was not present as the Cabinet assembled, but the army officers criticized in the report for failing to prevent the massacre were on hand to address the Cabinet and defend themselves against the commission's charges.

About 500 people gathered outside the building holding placards addressed to the government and army saying "the people are with you."

Interior Minister Josef Burg said he expected the Cabinet to adopt the recommendations of the Beirut massacre commission.

Burg told Israeli radio that his National Religious Party would urge that Begin form a new Cabinet within 24 hours without calling elections.

He told Israel radio his National Religious Party, a member of the Begin coalition, is among "a decisive majority of ministers (which) favors accepting the recommendations" of the Beirut massacre commission.

Sources close to Begin said he would not fire Sharon, but also would not accept Sharon's proposal that the Cabinet adopt only those recommendations concerning the government and reject those concerning the army.

Those recommendations urge the chief of military intelligence be fired and that Israel's commander in Beirut be stripped of his command.

Israel radio said it was no longer a question of whether Sharon would go, but how soon.

Sharon has been trying to build up a public movement to keep him in office and hopes it will be strong enough to sway the government in his favor.

A government-appointed special inquiry commission on Tuesday found Sharon partly to blame for the Sept. 16-18 massacre of hundreds of Palestinians and recommended he resign.

The Tel Aviv daily newspaper Maariv said leaders of Begin's Likud political bloc predicted the Cabinet would adopt the commission's recommendation and that Begin would resign soon and set elections.

Begin holds a substantial lead in political polls, and is believed to view early elections as a means of solidifying his government's position.

Israel Radio said Begin, who was criticized by the commission for "indifference" to the possibility of a massacre, was expected to announce his strategy at today's Cabinet meeting. The radio said Begin was likely to propose early elections.

The daily Yedioth Ahronoth said most Cabinet ministers believed the crisis had come down to a choice between Begin's resignation and Sharon's ouster.

Sharon was said to be insisting that Begin fire him because he believed that by resigning voluntarily he would be admitting guilt.

"I won't put a Mark of Cain on my forehead voluntarily," he was quoted by Yedioth as telling a meeting of the military high command.

Avraham Shapira, parliamentary chairman of Begin's ruling coalition, told reporters after a meeting with Begin Tuesday night that the prime minister would "absolutely not" dismiss Sharon, who is an important source of conservative support for him.

After the Cabinet met Wednesday night, a government official said most ministers were leaning toward accepting the commission's recommendation that Sharon quit and that senior Israeli officers be penalized for their failure to prevent the September massacre.

He said Sharon had asked the Cabinet not to order the soldiers punished.

Former sheriff's deputy indicted for auto theft

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

The Midland County grand jury has returned an indictment against a former deputy sheriff who was dismissed last fall during an investigation of an auto theft case that led to his indictment Wednesday.

In a press conference this morning, Sheriff Dallas Smith and District Attorney Vern Martin announced that a warrant has been issued for the former deputy's arrest, but it has not been served yet and they therefore could not release his name.

According to courthouse records, however, the man is identified as 41-year-old Joe Brownlee, who was hired by former Sheriff Ed Darnell in the mid-1970s and who worked as a sergeant in the patrol division at the time of his dismissal in November.

During today's press conference, Smith said: "It is my unpleasant task this morning to discuss the investigation and indictment of an ex-law enforcement officer. The investigation was conducted by the Midland County sheriff's office and the Department of Public Safety.

"The indictment is for (felony) auto theft. At the time of the alleged theft, the officer was an employee of the Midland County sheriff's office."

Brownlee is alleged to have taken a 1978 Ford Super Cab pickup truck belonging to the Rittenhouse Oil Co. of Midland. The "very complex case," said Martin, had been under investigation since Oct. 30 and didn't conclude until the latter part of January.

Smith said the former deputy was dismissed in mid-November for violating department policy by "providing erroneous information" during an internal investigation of the case, which is "more involved" than most auto theft cases "where someone simply takes a vehicle and drives off."

Smith also said, however, that the former deputy allegedly did not take the vehicle under "color of uniform" and that this is the first time in his memory that one of his officers has been indicted locally for a criminal offense.

Prior to coming to work for the Sheriff's Department, Brownlee worked as a trooper for the Department of Public Safety and as an officer for the Midland Police Department.

In outlining his reasons for calling a press conference on the matter, Smith said: "When we have something like this (a case involving a law enforcement officer), we work it just like we would any case on a private citizen. It's difficult to do, but it is public information and it's part of my responsibility to the taxpayers to let them know what's going on."

The punishment range in the case for which Brownlee has been indicted is up to 10 years in prison and a $5,000 fine.

EPA administrator Anne M. Gorsuch appears at a press conference to discuss recent developments at the agency.

Committee expands EPA investigation

WASHINGTON (AP) — A House subcommittee, expanding its probe of the Environmental Protection Agency's handling of a toxic waste cleanup program, today subpoenaed 37 EPA employees, including Administrator Anne M. Gorsuch, to testify before the panel.

Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., chairman of the House Energy and Commerce investigations subcommittee, said the demands for testimony, records, memoranda and diaries were included in three subpoenas approved by the panel on voice vote.

Besides Mrs. Gorsuch, the subpoenas also summon Rita Lavelle, the assistant administrator in charge of the $1.6 billion "superfund" program to clean up hazardous waste dumps, who was fired earlier this week by President Reagan.

"We intend to serve these (subpoenas) as quickly as we can," Dingell told reporters waiting outside the committee room.

The subcommittee arranged today's closed session after Mrs. Gorsuch attempted to restrict the right of House investigators to question EPA employees.

Dingell said Wednesday the panel wanted to question the workers about possible manipulation for political purposes of the $1.6 billion "superfund" program to clean up toxic waste sites.

Rep. James Scheuer, D-N.Y., said access to EPA personnel and documents "are absolutely indispensable for us to perform our oversight function. It is absolutely clear to us that there are some very dubious activities going on at EPA."

Access to EPA documents triggered another confrontation between the House and the Reagan administration, which ended in a contempt of Congress citation against Mrs. Gorsuch. The Justice Department had sought to resolve the issue short of prosecuting Mrs. Gorsuch, but lost its case in court.

The White House appeared today to be backing off its flat refusal to release those documents to the Public Works oversight panel. Rep. Elliott Levitas, D-Ga., the subcommittee chairman said White House Chief of Staff James Baker III had informed him that the administration will offer a proposed compromise Friday.

Baker did not disclose details of the offer, Levitas said, adding that he was optimistic that a solution might be in the making.

Dogcatcher regrets freeing dogs

Killing 11 pushed him 'off deep end'

ROSENBERG, Texas (AP) — A suspended dogcatcher who says he "went off the deep end" after killing 11 dogs in one afternoon says he wasn't thinking clearly when he freed three condemned mongrels.

"What I did was wrong, I know that. If I don't want to see a dog destroyed, I'll do my damnedest to find him a home. You can bet on that," said Dan Barnshaw.

"I just wasn't thinking clearly that day. It was a bad day all the way around," he said Wednesday.

Barnshaw, who let the animals out of his truck a mile from town last week, ended up having to kill two of the dogs later the same day because someone saw him release the animals and notified police. The third dog never was recaptured.

"This one particular dog was black and ginger and those are the same colors as mine," said Barnshaw, referring to his Doberman pinscher named Dobie.

Barnshaw was suspended without pay Tuesday and placed on six months probation.

Police Chief Dwayne Sparks said he understood what Barnshaw did.

"We're lucky to have someone in this job who likes animals. I don't think I could kill dogs myself. I guess Dan had just reached the saturation point in killing," Sparks said.

Barnshaw said he had kept the three mongrels a day longer than the 72 hours the rules of his job allow because he hoped to find homes for them. He said it was the first time he had ever freed animals he was supposed to kill.

He said he already had shot two dogs and killed nine others by injection, and could not stand to execute the three remaining in the kennel. So Barnshaw said he loaded the animals in his truck and drove outside this town 30 miles southwest of Houston.

"I opened the cage" on the back of the truck, Barnshaw recalled. "I said, 'Get out of here.' That's all. I had a sigh of relief when this happened."

The dogs bounded out of the truck, and Barnshaw said they knew they were being liberated.

"It's funny what an animal can sense," he said.

Shortly afterward, he said, he was ordered to go pick up the animals again. He said he found two, including the dog that reminded him of Dobie, but could not locate the third.

"They were very easy to catch," he said of the two. "They came back to me."

Barnshaw said killing the pair was doubly difficult after he had freed them earlier.

"But I just said, 'Well, it has to be done,'" he said. "It was better to do this than to have them running wild and turning into a vicious type of animal."

He said he was sorry he had failed to do his job.

"I went off the deep end, I guess," said Barnshaw, who has a mongrel in addition to Dobie. "I don't know what it was. I love animals. I love my work. I know what has to be done."

Lawyer shoots himself in funeral chapel

AUSTIN (AP) — Suicide has been ruled in the death of a 52-year-old Houston lawyer found shot to death in the funeral home where he arranged his final rites two months ago.

A Bible was found nearby, open to John 3:16-18, referring to everlasting life for believers. The verse was marked in black pen.

Police said Juliam Knox Lyles was killed Wednesday by a shot to his heart with a .357 Magnum pistol. An apologetic note was found on a chapel organ.

Lyles, who also operated a real estate business in Houston, was arrested last December in Houston and charged with two counts of sexual abuse of a child involving two 15-year-old boys, Houston police said.

A funeral home attendent said Lyles had come in at 10:30 p.m. Tuesday and asked to play the chapel organ. Police said the shooting occurred at 12:24 a.m. Wednesday.

Lyles' body was found in an anteroom to the chapel, lying face down.

Sunken ship's trouble-filled history related

GALVESTON (AP) — A Panamian-registered freighter resting on the bottom of the Gulf of Mexico is an old ship with a "number of problems," a Coast Guard port captain says.

The 259-foot Eaglescliffe, laden with 3,500 tons of grain, sank about two miles northeast of Galveston Island's north jetty early Wednesday, two days after springing a leak in a starboard hold.

Stormy weather hindered salvage plans Wednesday, but the 19 crewmen, the ship's captain and a pet dog were safely rescued from the boat the day before, officials said.

Coast Guard officials in Corpus Christi said they were familiar with the Eaglescliffe.

"She had been in a number of times and had a number of problems. She was just an old vessel," Coast Guard Port Captain Gerald Hinson told the Corpus Christi Caller-Times.

The freighter ran aground on the south jetty at Port Aransas in February 1979, blocking the Corpus Christi Ship Channel for two days, Hinson said. The ship had lost its steering and was driven by high winds into the jetty, where rocks pierced the engine room, he said.

Later that year, the ship was rescued while listing dangerously en route to Mexico, about 200 miles east of Corpus Christi, he said.

Crewmen discovered a crack Monday in the starboard side, said Petty Officer Don Hope. Water leaking into the ship could not be pumped out because grain in its hold was absorbing it, Hope said.

The cause of the crack was unknown, he said.

Cmdr. Arthur Whiting of the Marine Safety Office said the ship's superstructure was poking out of 24 feet of water but was too close to shore to obstruct shipping traffic.

The ship's owner was devising a plan to salvage the sunken ship, he said.

The grain, loaded at Interstate Grain Terminal in Corpus Christi, was purchased by Conasupo, a Mexican government purchasing agency, and bound for the port of Progreso in Mexico.

Judge to hear witness' changed story

WACO (AP) — A federal judge today will hear testimony from a witness who claims she lied during the 1978 capital murder trial of condemned killer Thomas Barefoot.

Barefoot, convicted of shooting a Harker Heights policeman, had been scheduled to die Jan. 25 by lethal injection.

His scheduled execution was stayed Jan. 24 by the U.S. Supreme Court, which said it wanted to use the case to decide how federal courts should handle emergency death penalty appeals.

U.S. District Judge Lucius Bunton today will hear a witness' claim that she lied during Barefoot's trial, which ended with his conviction on Aug. 7, 1978.

Barefoot, 42, of New Iberia, La., has maintained he did not kill officer Carl Levin.

Holding of Americans 'mistake'

DENVER (AP) — One of two Americans who arrived home to a greeting of flowers and champagne after spending 29 days in a Guatemalan jail says they were "just in the wrong place at the wrong time."

Michael Ernest and Maria Molenaar, both of nearby Golden, were held in Guatemala while government officials investigated a report that they had led guerrilla raids. They were released Tuesday and arrived home in time for dinner Wednesday.

"Everybody thinks it was a mistake...We were just in the wrong place at the wrong time," said Mrs. Molenaar, a Spanish citizen married to Craig Molenaar, of Golden.

She theorized that the length of their detention was due to "a very bad political moment for Guatemala." They were released by order of the Guatemalan Supreme Court.

Ernest said that while in jail, "every day about 3 o'clock" he concocted a new theory to explain their imprisonment.

He described as "much too dramatic" his supposed identification by a witness in the army camp where he and Mrs. Molenaar were taken after their arrest Jan. 11.

The witness seemed motivated by "a sense of revenge" as he identified Ernest as the "gringo" who led a sugar plantation raid in which an administrator was killed, Ernest said.

Ernest and Mrs. Molenaar said they went to Guatemala to study traditional Indian handicrafts. When asked about her relationship with Ernest, Mrs. Molenaar replied, "I think that's my own private life."

Shortly after arriving at the airport, Mrs. Molenaar left with her husband, in-laws, and her mother. However, after a quick reunion with his family, Ernest talked with reporters for nearly an hour.

He said he felt "real good, very excited" to be back home.

"I have a lot of people to thank...The politicians in Colorado...the press...the church. The Catholic church has been a real beacon," he said.

While talking, Ernest drank champagne from a cup, then from the bottle. He barely noticed a bundle of 80 letters being stuffed in his hand by his brother Bill, a Fort Collins teacher, who said, "Welcome back from all my seventh graders."

Ernest's sister, Laura Nieb, said he looked "still the same," but added, "He's pale. He has lost a lot of weight."

After leaving reporters Wednesday night, the Ernests went to Golden where they had a belated birthday party for Michael, who was arrested on his birthday. A cake made by his mother, Mary, highlighted the celebration.

Ironically, it was his search for a birthday cake in San Lucas Toliman, Guatemala, that led to their arrest.

"It was my birthday, and we were trying to find a birthday cake at the market," he told reporters. "When we returned (to a rented cottage), we were followed by about eight soldiers."

Reagan accepts nuke freeze petition

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, while saying he still opposes a nuclear freeze, has accepted a petition from a leader of the freeze movement in his home state where voters have endorsed the idea.

Reagan met with Harold Willens on Wednesday, more than three months after California voters backed the freeze, and personally accepted a letter petitioning for a bilateral, verifiable freeze on nuclear weapons by the United States and the Soviet Union.

Willens said the 10-minute meeting was a cordial one in which Reagan repeated his opposition to a freeze but did not mention any of his past criticisms that the movement is being manipulated by the Soviet Union.

"He said 'I understand your point of view, but if we did that we would be doing it at a time that the Soviets are clearly superior,'" Willens quoted Reagan as saying.

The Los Angeles businessman was the leader of the California movement that put the freeze on the Nov. 2 ballot and helped push for its passage. California was one of nine states that endorsed the freeze in voting last year, while one rejected it. The initiative mandated that a letter be sent to Reagan calling for the freeze.

The letter was dated Dec. 7 of last year and was signed by then-Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr.

Several other proponents of a freeze, such as Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., and Brown had tried unsuccessfully to get appointments with Reagan to deliver the letter, Willens said.

He added that he may have succeeded in seeing Reagan because he is a businessman, not a politician.

The millionaire activist said he requested the meeting through Deputy White House Chief of Staff Michael Deaver's office.

Deadline for finding MX home extended

WASHINGTON (AP) — The deadline for a presidential commission to come up with another home for the MX missile has been extended a month because the panel is unable to agree on a basing plan that Congress is likely to accept.

"The program has been in difficulty, is in difficulty," Brent Scowcroft, head of the Commission on Strategic Forces, said Wednesday at the White House.

"What we are trying to do is arrive at a solution which will achieve the kind of acceptability of the leadership of the government in both houses (of Congress) that will enable our strategic programs to go through," he told reporters.

Scowcroft and other commission members went to White House Wednesday for a 15-minute meeting with President Reagan.

Unable to agree on a basing system, the group sought and won a month-long extension from their Feb. 18 deadline.

The 11-member panel was appointed Jan. 3 by Reagan after Congress rejected the administration's request for money to build the first five of the 100 planned MX weapons, which Reagan has dubbed the "peacekeeper."

Lebanese politics bound in 'family ties'

By EARLEEN F. TATRO
Associated Press Writer

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Powerful families rather than organized parties dominate the political scene in Lebanon, where candidates are often groomed from the cradle.

Sometimes reluctantly, sometimes eagerly, the sons of the political godfathers pick up the reins of power and perpetuate a system of feudal fiefdoms.

They run for office or play kingmaker for others. Ensconced in mountaintop fortresses, ancestral mansions and modern apartments, they wheel and deal with each other over endless cups of bitter coffee — and sometimes with guns and bombs.

Built-in power bases rooted in a religious sect are passed from father to son, sometimes with a political party that revolves more around family ties and personal loyalties than ideology.

"My father was involved in politics, my grandfather was involved in politics, and my sons are going to be involved in politics," said Camille Chamoun, an 82-year-old former president of Lebanon who wears thick, tinted glasses but can still knock down more clay pigeons than his 48-year-old son, Dany, when they go skeet shooting.

Dany Chamoun, like other sons of the powerful fathers, polished his political credentials as a militia commander in the 1975-76 civil war when Christians led by the Chamoun, Gemayel and Franjieh families fought a coalition of mostly Moslem, Lebanese leftists and Palestinians.

Admitting to little interest in politics before the war, Dany Chamoun, a British-educated civil engineer, was a natural choice to lead the "Tigers" militia of his father's National Liberal Party.

"I want him to go into politics because it's the tradition of the family," said Camille Chamoun, seated beside his son in a small parlor in the elder Chamoun's apartment in Christian east Beirut.

"I don't have much option. I really want to be involved in the future of Lebanon," said the son, whose casual but imposing manner and sandy-haired good looks give him the appearance of a man Hollywood would cast to play a bright young senator.

On the Moslem side of the city, Tammam Salam, the 37-year-old son of two-time Prime Minister Saeb Salam, said he had been "poking my nose into politics" since childhood.

"I must have been naturally inclined to this kind of world, and I started getting more and more interested in it," said Tammam Salam, who last year succeeded his father, uncle and grandfather as president of the Makassed Islamic Philanthropic Association in Beirut, a traditional power base of the city's Sunni Moslems.

He works out of a chrome and velour-furnished office, overseeing Makassed's 53 schools and other social projects. A few blocks away in the family mansion, Saeb Salam, 78-year-old dean of Sunni politicians and mentor of Prime Minister Shafik Wazzan, holds court in a book-lined study under a photograph of his father, Selim Salam, who served in the parliament of the old Ottoman empire.

"It wasn't my helping Tammam that made him. He made himself," Saeb Salam said between telephone calls from ambassadors, Cabinet ministers and political cronies. "And now, perhaps, he is more popular than me."

While the sons climb the political ladders, the aging fathers do not relinquish their grip.

When Israeli Defense Minister Ariel Sharon wanted to complain about President Amin Gemayel's unwillingness to negotiate a normalization agreement, he went to see the 41-year-old president's 77-year-old father, Pierre, who is founder and head of the ruling Phalange Party.

The elder Gemayel was disappointed in his own bids for the presidency in 1964 and 1970 but lived to see both his sons elected head of state — and one of them assassinated before he could take office, the 34-year-old militia commander Bashir.

It was after that assassination, last September, that Israeli military forces allowed Lebanese Christian militiamen into Palestianian refugee camps in Beirut, resulting in the massacre of hundreds of refugees.

The Gemayels are the focus of some notorious Lebanese feuds, most notably with the Franjieh clan based in the northern mountain region of Zghorta and headed by 72-year-old former Christian President Suleiman Franjieh.

Franjieh's son, Tony, who had taken over his father's parliament seat, was massacred along with his wife, baby and 31 bodyguards and servants in 1978. The elder Franjieh blamed the Gemayels and vowed not to rest until Pierre Gemayel had seen his own sons die.

The Moslems have their own family feuds. The moderate Salams wage a bloodless political contest with the leftists grouped under Walid Jumblatt, leader of the secretive Druse sect.

Inside the Druse community, the Jumblatts and the Arslans have vied for power in between uniting to fight their traditional Maronite Christian foes.

In an attempt to stop the Druse power struggle, May Arslan was married to Kamal Jumblatt in 1948. Not only did the union fail to stop clan squabbles, the couple separated soon after the birth of their only child, Walid.

But in the Lebanese tradition, Walid Jumblatt succeeded his father as clan leader and head of the leftist coalition when his father was assassinated in 1977.

Walid Jumblatt has confided to friends and reporters that he took the reins reluctantly. Nonetheless, the skeleton-thin Jumblatt in his black leather jacket and blue jeans sits down as a political equal with the septuagenarians and octogenarians who head Lebanon's other political dynasties.

The Shiite Moslem Khalil family, in a country where tradition reserves the presidency for a Maronite Christian and the premiership for a Sunni Moslem, does not play a big role on the national scene. But for decades the Khalils have dominated their own bailiwick, the southern port of Tyre.

Kazem Al-Khalil, 82, has been a parliament deputy from Tyre since 1937. His elder son, Khalil, has been ambassador to Iran and West Germany. His younger son, Karim, recently set up an Israeli-backed militia in southern Lebanon.

"I belong to a traditional political family," the ailing Kazem Al-Khalil said in a bedside interview where he kept a cane at his left side and a Swiss-made machine gun at his right. "It was just natural for us to be involved when Lebanon started having a political life."

Israeli troops offer 'hope' for Lebanon

WASHINGTON (AP) — Israeli Ambassador Moshe Arens says Jerusalem does not want to keep troops in Lebanon for "an extended period of time," but can't remove them immediately because the Syrians would remain.

Denying U.S. accusations that the Israeli army is acting like an occupation force, Arens said in an interview Wednesday that "everybody knows if it had not been for Israel's military operation nobody today would be talking or hoping of Lebanon being free again."

In fact, Arens said, "were Israel to get fed up and move out of Lebanon tomorrow that would be the end of any hope of a free Lebanon. The Syrians would never get out."

The ambassador said Israel had urged the administration to stop "displaying such impatience with us," while the United States has little reason to suppose the Syrians would withdraw.

"They better start applying the pressure now because you are not going to shuttle them out in 24 hours," Arens said.

President Reagan, meanwhile, renewed his call for a withdrawal of all foreign forces from Lebanon — Israeli, Syrian and Palestinian. He said he could not gather support for his proposals for a Middle East settlement "until everyone withdraws to their own borders."

Reagan told a group of editors and broadcasters that a withdrawal was also essential for "the re-establishment of a government in Lebanon that will be sovereign over its own territory."

Earlier, on Monday, Reagan accused Israel of needlessly delaying a withdrawal from Lebanon, and said it was "technically in the position of an occupying force."

Without referring directly to the president, Arens said, "There is really a lot more to the picture than that and I think everybody knows that."

He said that as reservists the Israeli troops have to get back to their jobs and their university classrooms. "We cannot, we do not, want to keep our army there for an extended period of time," Arens said.

"The Syrians do not want to get out. It may just be possible to leverage them out, to force them out."

Israel invaded Lebanon last June in an attempt to root out Palestine guerrilla bases in Beirut and the southern part of the country.

At the same time, Arens said he doubted Israel's policy on a troop withdrawal or a settlement of the Palestinian issue would change if Defense Minister Ariel Sharon quit.

"Israeli policy is not and cannot be dominated by one member of the Cabinet," he said.

"Even in an important position like Sharon's, Israeli policy has been the policy of the Israeli government, it's been supported by a majority of the people in the Knesset (parliament), and there is every good reason to suppose the policy has been supported by a majority of the Israelis.

"So it's not going to change even if tomorrow Mr. Sharon were to resign," Arens said.

A special state investigating commission found on Tuesday that Israel's top civilian and military leaders bore "indirect responsibility" for the massacre of Palestinian refugees by Lebanese Christian militiamen in Beirut last September. The panel recommended Sharon's resignation or dismissal.

Without venturing an opinion on what Sharon should do, Arens said Israeli policy "has been far too personalized" by the American media. "It must come from an incomplete understanding of Israel and the working of Israeli democracy," he said.

From a strategic viewpoint, Arens said, Sharon "is one of the biggest assets the United States has out there because he is a very fine general."

Withdrawal talks reconvene in Israeli town

KIRYAT SHMONA, Israel (AP) — Negotiations between Israel and Lebanon resumed in this northern Israeli border town today, overshadowed for the moment by controversy surrounding the Beirut massacre inquiry.

The talks, under U.S. mediation, have centered on Israel's demand for security arrangements and normalization of relations with Lebanon in return for withdrawing its forces from that country.

During a brief meeting Wednesday, U.S. presidential envoy Philip C. Habib was believed to have presented Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin with a new proposal for withdrawing all foreign forces from Lebanon.

But the talks temporarily have dropped out of the Israeli political focus as the government wrestles with the recommendations of the judicial commission that investigated the Sept. 16-18 massacre of Palestinians in West Beirut.

The commission called for the resignations of Defense Minister Ariel Sharon and the head of military intelligence, Maj. Gen. Yehoshua Saguy. The Cabinet scheduled an emergency session today for the third time in three days.

Habib returned to the Middle East this week as President Reagan increased pressure on Israel to withdraw its forces from Lebanon. Reagan described the Israeli troops as an occupying force and blamed Israel for delaying the negotiations.

Israel wants to ensure that Palestinian and Syrian troops also withdraw from Lebanon.

Midland's population at 92,000, mayor tells professional women

"We have good people to work with here," he continued. "That's not true in all cities. Some of the biggest problems councils have are with trying to get along with the city manager or other council members."

Issues before the council may appear varied, but they boil down to economics. "We make decisions in regard to income and outgo. We have far more opportunities to spend money than to collect money."

Although elected by the people with the decree to represent their wishes, the council seems to operate in a vacuum. "No one tells us what they're thinking," he said.

Questioned about the at-large system of elections in comparison to election by districts, Akins said he preferred the former, which is how Midland is designed.

The problem with single-member districts, in his view, is that councilmen from one area represent only that part of town. "It has to result in a great deal of trade-offs. They don't work in a harmonious fashion and don't get a lot done." Of the current at-large system, he added, "If you have honest hard-working people, they'll make the system work."

Midland's municipal government is complex, he told the group, suggesting that more women get involved in the process, whether by running for the council or offering to serve on a board or commission.

"We have to depend more on volunteerism to make city government work," he said.

Anglican Church rejects call to unilaterally abandon nuclear arms

LONDON (AP) — The Church of England's governing body, after an emotional debate broadcast nationwide, today rejected a call for Britain to abandon its nuclear arsenal unilaterally.

The 554-member General Synod of bishops, clergy and laymen from the established church officially headed by Queen Elizabeth II, took the action by a show of hands after nearly five hours of intense discussion in an assembly hall adjacent to Westminster Abbey.

In a second show of hands, the General Synod approved a resolution urging the government to foreswear the first use of nuclear weapons in any form.

The meeting was televised at midday on BBC2, the secondary British Broadcasting Corp. station, but no estimate of the audience was available.

During the debate, which church leaders called their most important since World War II, Archbishop of Canterbury Robert Runcie, said "I cannot accept unilateralism as the best expression of a Christian's prime moral duty to be a peacemaker."

Runcie, spiritual leader of the world's 65 million Anglicans, said banning the bomb in Britain would leave NATO in disarray and sabotage Geneva arms talks between the United States and the Soviet Union.

The debate was prompted by a report from a church working group urging Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's Conservative government to adopt a phased program of unilateral nuclear disarmament.

Britain's renunciation of nuclear weapons would have a "traumatic effect ... on the alliance on which the peace and stability of Europe has rested since World War II," Runcie said, and would strengthen "advocates of isolationism" in the United States.

Runcie, in his last Christmas sermon, condemned the money and effort spent building "lunatic" nuclear arsenals. But he has not supported unilateral disarmament.

Mrs. Thatcher has rejected working group's recommendation as unrealistic. But her government was worried enough about its effect on the public to brief some of the speakers at the synod on her policies.

The group that prepared the report was headed by the bishop of Salisbury, John Baker, who says nuclear weapons are morally unacceptable, and Britain's aren't needed to deter the Soviets from attacking the West.

"Both East and West have far more weapons than they need for deterrence," he told the synod, "and either side could cut many sytems unilaterally without jeopardizing its security in the least.

"Our duty includes discussing how to put things right. Otherwise, moral judgments (on other issues) are so much pious irrelevance."

The meeting was held in Church House, where the British Parliament met during the German Blitz of World War II.

Leaders of truckers' strike called to capital for talks with officials

Leaders of striking independent truckers have been summoned to Washington to consider ending their shutdown, officials say, and one leader said the violence-marred strike has achieved its goal by drawing the attention of Congress.

The Los Angeles Times today quoted an unidentified spokesman for the Independent Truckers Association as saying ITA leaders would assemble this afternoon in Washington to decide whether to continue the strike.

And James R. Hart, an aide to Rep. Douglas Applegate, D-Ohio, said 39 ITA state presidents would take part in the vote. Hart said ITA President Mike Parkhurst called the assembly, but added, "It's a little bit premature to say the strike is over."

As the strike entered its 11th day today, police around the nation reported few acts of violence, and officials said few shortages of goods could be attributed to the shutdown.

Parkhurst called the strike Jan. 31 to protest future fuel tax and fee increases, contained in a law passed in December calling for a 5-cent-a-gallon tax increase on gasoline.

He could not immediately be reached for comment early today. There was no answer at the organization's telephones in Washington or at its suburban Los Angeles headquarters in Van Nuys, Calif.

ITA vice president Bob Scheffer said Wednesday that the strike had succeeded in its primary goal, focusing the attention of Congress on truckers' problems.

Meanwhile, four congressmen trying to end the strike began circulating a letter Wednesday urging hearings to consider changing the planned increases in highway fees and fuel taxes. But Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., said he opposed holding hearings on the truckers' problems, adding that he regarded the strike as "over."

"We do not seek to redesign such programs to suit any one group," said the letter circulated in the Capitol. "We can however take a closer look at whether the public interest is being served by these particular increases, some of which exceed 700 percent."

The "expression of concern" letter was signed by Applegate, Peter H. Kostmayer, D-Pa., and Ed Jenkins, D-Ga., who all met with Parkhurst on Tuesday. The fourth signer was Rep. Carroll Campbell, R-S.C.

The letter asked that Congress hold hearings "as soon as possible" to consider "reforms" to help the truckers.

There were only widely scattered incidents of violence against trucks Wednesday. The Ohio Highway Patrol reported four tire slashings, one truck burned and one object thrown at a truck. Near East St. Louis, Ill., one truck was struck with shotgun pellets, authorities said.

The violence was down sharply from last week when most incidents occurred. More than 1,700 trucks have been damaged, including 560 hit by gunfire, resulting in one death, 66 injuries and 95 arrests.

There were no reports of serious produce shortages at markets Wednesday although prices of some items were up.

Laurence Stern of Sunkist Growers Inc., a California-based citrus company, reported that freight rates were halfway back to normal after skyrocketing at the peak of the strike.

Dole, Republican chairman of the Senate Finance Committee and husband of newly appointed Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Dole, met Wednesday with Mark Perry, a leader of the Owner Operators Independent Drivers Association of America. That group claims to have 5,000 members and is a rival organization to Parkhurst's ITA, which claims 30,000 members.

After the meeting, Dole said he will not schedule hearings on the truckers' grievances.

Tom Blank, a spokesman for the Transportation Department, said Mrs. Dole has no plans to meet with any of the trucking groups, although other department officials will continue to be available to meet with any "responsible" representatives to hear their complaints.

Official says U.S. should aid talks, paper reports

WASHINGTON (AP) — A top State Department official has proposed the United States promote negotiations with leftist guerrillas in El Salvador while continuing to support the Salvadoran government, a published report said today.

The Washington Post, quoting unnamed administration officials, reported that the proposal was made by Thomas O. Enders, assistant secretary of state for inter-American affairs, in a working paper yet to be formally submitted to the National Security Council.

The Post said that United Nations Ambassador Jeane J. Kirkpatrick, who is on a Central American trip, was known to be skeptical of Enders' plan.

The plan calls for negotiations through a third country, such as Spain, Mexico or Venezuela, aimed at resolving the conflict in El Salvador, the newspaper said.

The Reagan administration has refused to endorse the idea that the guerrillas be given a share of power in El Salvador through negotiations and has called on them to seek their goals through democratic political means. The Salvadoran government has been trying to suppress the rebels.

The newspaper quoted administration sources as saying Enders is concerned that Congress will insist on talks to end the conflict in El Salvador if the administration does not encourage them.

Enders declined to comment on the report Wednesday night.

A State Department official involved in Latin American policy, who spoke on condition that his name not be used, said policy papers were often prepared in the department, that no change in policy toward El Salvador was contemplated and that the United States continued to reject talks aimed at "power sharing."

Prosecutor: Church funds used to make bombs

NEW YORK (AP) — Money and equipment traced to the Episcopal Church's National Commission on Hispanic Affairs was found at an FALN bomb factory in Queens in 1978, a federal prosecutor says.

The statement was made Wednesday in U.S. District Court in Brooklyn during questioning of a retired Episcopal bishop testifying as a character witness for one of five people on trial on criminal contempt charges.

U.S. District Judge Charles P. Sifton immediately ordered no further discussion of the subject and he rebuked prosecutor Charles Rose for making such a statement in front of the jury.

The defendants — Julio Rosado, 44, of Brooklyn, and his brother, Andres, 38, of Manhattan; Ricardo Romero, 46, of Alamosa, Colo.; Steven Guerra, 28, of San Francisco, and Maria Cueto, 38, of Los Angeles — have denied any direct connection with the FALN, a terrorist organization that seeks independence for Puerto Rico.

But the FBI has said the five are the "remaining unincarcerated leadership" of the organization.

The trial before Sifton centers on the defendants' refusal to appear before a Brooklyn grand jury investigating bombings attributed to the FALN. The inquiry began shortly after the 1978 explosion in a Queens apartment that led officials to the bomb factory.

The church commission often has been criticized by investigators as a "front" for the FALN. The Episcopal Church has denied any such connection.

In cross-examining retired Bishop Roger Blanchard of Massachusetts, who appeared as a witness for Ms. Cueto, Rose asked, "If you learned that funds and equipment purchased by the commission found their way into a Queens bomb factory in 1978 ...."

Sifton immediately interrupted Rose. After ordering the jury from the room, the judge criticized Rose for asking such a potentially inflammatory question in the presence of the jury.

Man charged with kidnapping in mall incident

LANDOVER, Md. (AP) — A 21-year-old man officials said suffers from a mental disorder was charged with kidnapping after holding 12 people hostage and threatening to blow up a shopping mall, Prince George's County police said.

The man, identified by police as Leonard Thomas Dunmore, held police at bay for five hours Wednesday afternoon before surrendering peacefully around 7 p.m., officers said.

County fire department bomb experts said they later dismantled five pipe bombs taken from a suite of offices that houses the vocational rehabilitation center at Landover Mall. The hostages were held in the suite.

No one was injured.

Fire department Capt. Jim Mundy said the bombs, dismantled in the mall parking lot, could have caused "minor structural damage and major fragmentation damage" to the office suite. He would not give further details about the explosives on the grounds that they were evidence.

Police Cpl. Ron Smith said the hostages were freed unharmed about 4:30 p.m. It was not immediately known if all the hostages were employees of the office. Smith said police learned of the incident when one of the workers in the office called at 2 p.m. to say she and her colleagues were being held.

Dunmore, of Landover, was charged with kidnapping and transported to the county detention center where bond was set at $150,000, police said.

Dunmore earlier had been diagnosed as suffering from a mental disorder and once had threatened the life of President Reagan, said Dr. Harvey Goldstein, director of psychological services for the Prince George's police.

"We considered him rather disturbed and violent," Goldstein said.

According to Smith, Dunmore demanded iced tea and that music by rock star David Bowie be played on a local radio station.

The principal police negotiator, William Hogwood, said Dunmore's "primary goal was immunity from prosecution."

"We told him he was not getting anywhere by doing this. We tried to reassure him," Hogwood said.

Dunmore, said Goldstein, had been arrested on drug charges in the past, had been confined at St. Elizabeths Hospital, a federal mental institution in nearby Washington, and had been diagnosed as a paranoid schizophrenic.

Goldstein said the Secret Service had told him Dunmore had once threatened Reagan's life.

Secret Service spokeswoman Mary Ann Gordon refused to comment.

Three men injured in 'Old West shootout'

EAST PALO ALTO, Calif. (AP) — Three men were recovering from bullet wounds today after an "old-fashioned, Old West shootout, like the OK Corral," officials said.

Ronald Conwell, 43, and James Johnson, 42, both of East Palo Alto, had an argument outside the Kunta Kinta Bar on Wednesday night and decided to settle their differences with .38-caliber pistols, Deputy Sheriff Len Gordon said.

They stepped off a few paces, drew their weapons and opened fire on each other. Conwell took two slugs in the chest. Johnson was hit in the eye and the chest.

Henry Butler, 43, also of East Palo Alto, watched the duel and was hit in the arm by a stray bullet, Gordon said.

All three were taken to Stanford University Medical Center and were in stable condition after surgery, a nursing supervisor said.

"It was just an old-fashioned, Old West shootout, like the OK Corral," Gordon said. "But it really wasn't anything special.

"This happens quite frequently down here, especially around that bar, but normally the guys are too drunk to hit anything," Gordon said. "These guys were drinking, too, but I guess their aim was a little better."

Gordon said he didn't know what started the argument. No charges had yet been filed in the shooting, Gordon said.

Connally: Economy will thrive

DENVER (AP) — Former Treasury Secretary John Connally says the national economy should be thriving by the spring of 1984, and he predicts President Reagan will be renominated and re-elected president as a result.

Connally, who also has held positions as secretary of the Navy and governor of Texas, addressed oil company officials in Denver on Wednesday.

He said the Reagan administration is in bad shape because of poor economic conditions during the past 18 months, but he expects that to change because interest rates and the inflation rate are going down and the unemployment rate is dropping.

The nation's economy will be on the road to recovery a year hence, he predicted. He estimated that the gross national product will grow 2.5 percent this year, not taking inflation into account. In 1984 the GNP will grow by 4.5 percent, and by 1985 GNP growth will be 5 percent, said Connally.

Nepalese warriors training in U.S.

By KATHY McCARTHY
Associated Press Writer

FORT LEWIS, Wash. — Gurkhas, the small but tough Nepalese warriors who have served the British army with legendary courage for more than 150 years, are training for the first time on American soil.

The 1st Battalion, 7th Duke of Edinburgh's Own Gurkha Rifles — 650 troops strong — arrived in early February and will train through March 10 before returning to England.

They came armed to the teeth — with $20 souvenir battle knives for sale and T-shirts bearing the legend, "Falkland Islands 1982."

So far their only problem has been outside the fort. When 70 Gurkhas headed into nearby Tacoma recently, they quickly were ushered to the door by tavernkeepers who discovered many are not yet 21, according to Lt. Col. David Morgan, battalion commander.

Gurkhas may enlist at age 17 and are usually 18 by the time they complete basic training in Hong Kong.

British army service is a prestigious career for the Gurkhas, whose homeland in the hill country of Nepal has changed little since the 16th century.

"If they don't join the army basically most of them stay at home and farm," said Capt. John Palmer, British commander of C Company. Others save their pay to buy a farm when they retire from the service.

When they serve in the Far East, they receive the equivalent of $215 per month. When they serve in Britain, that rises to about $495 per month, roughly equal to the pay of British army officers, said Sgt. Kharkbdr Rai.

British officers say the American exercises will give the Gurkhas more realistic training with live weapons firing than is usually available in England or other European countries.

While other units of the British army have trained in the United States for years as part of NATO exchanges, this is a first for the Gurkhas.

The Battalion's C Company, clad in camouflage fatigues, spent Wednesday lobbing live grenades into open-air "rooms" made from towering columns of stacked tires, and subduing an imaginary village constructed on the rolling terrain of this vast Army base.

A chill, steady rain did little to mar Cpl. Kumar Rai's concentration as he instructed three other Gurkhas in the proper use of submachine guns in skirmishes.

At 26, he is an eight-year veteran who operated antitank guided missiles in Britain's war with Argentina over the Falklands.

"I like America very much," said the corporal, adding the U.S. Army Rangers he has met so far have been "very friendly."

The Gurkhas have served the British army for 168 years and many have won the Victoria Cross, Britain's highest medal.

The British first encountered the diminutive fighters in the early 1800s after the Gurkhas had conquered most of what is now Nepal and worked their way into India.

After nearly two years of battle, British troops subdued the Gurkhas in 1815, but were so impressed with the Himalayan people they decided to enlist them.

Standing an average 5 feet 3 inches, the Gurkhas carry a trademark, razor-sharp, foot-long knife called the "kukri," which they use for "cooking, chopping wood and most of all, killing," said Palmer.

Iraqi army claims Iranians repulsed

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iraq claimed its forces today repulsed a fifth Iranian attempt to cross the border into southern Iraq and captured 1,000 soldiers in the attacking force.

But an Iranian communique issued earlier today reported the destruction of a brigade of Iraq's third division in a battle in the same area Wednesday night.

The conflicting reports, monitored in Cyprus, could not be verified because foreign correspondents are seldom allowed to visit the battlefronts.

Bagdad radio reported Iraqi forces captured 1,000 soldiers belonging to an Iranian armored brigade and other motorized units.

It quoted a military communique that the Iranian brigade had been completely surrounded and its communications and supply lines with the main Iranian force had been severed.

Iran's communique said an Iraqi fighter jet was shot down over the battlefront by anti-aircraft fire and its pilot captured. Iran claimed shooting down another four Iraqi jets the previous day.

The new Iranian thrust at the Iraqi province of Missan was the fifth since Iran announced the start of its "final offensive" to topple the Baghdad regime and end the 28-month-old war.

Poor countries say loans not enough

WASHINGTON (AP) — The world's poor countries are warning the industrial powers that a planned increase in emergency loans will not be enough to avert a debt crisis hanging over the world.

The urgent pleas from the Third World for more help are likely to be rebuffed, however, as finance ministers from the richest countries seek agreement today on a more modest package of expanded lending to debt-ridden developing nations.

Ministers from the 10 largest industrialized democracies were to confer in advance of a meeting of the 146-nation International Monetary Fund that gets under way today to approve an increase in the Fund's lending resources.

The governing board of the IMF, dominated by the United States and other industrial powers, is expected to settle by Friday on a plan for dealing with the world's worst debt crisis since the Great Depression of the 1930s.

A worldwide recession triggered by anti-inflationary policies pursued by the United States, Western Europe and Japan has left an increasing number of developing countries in dire straits, unable to pay their debts to foreign banks and governments.

Total debts of non-OPEC developing countries is estimated at $550 billion.

To avoid defaults, the debtor countries have been lining up for temporary loans from the IMF, which has seen its lending pool draining rapidly in the past six months.

The Fund, with a total lending pool of $66 billion, now estimates that it is down to $15 billion or less in hard currencies available for immediate lending.

The IMF is expected to approve an increase of between 40 percent and 50 percent in its lending pool, raising the total to just under $100 billion. That would be far short of the 100 percent increase sought Wednesday by a group of 24 finance ministers representing developing countries.

The industrial nations are the largest contributors to the Fund and account for virtually all the hard currency — money that is readily exchanged on world markets, such as U.S. dollars, West German marks or Japanese yen.

In a joint statement, the ministers from the developing countries said a doubling of the IMF lending pool and prompt action by the industrial countries to promote worldwide economic growth are essential "to avert the crisis now facing the international economy."

Caller tells Irish police 'horsenappers' ready to negotiate

DUBLIN, Ireland (AP) — Police searching for the kidnapped race horse Shergar today investigated an anonymous call in Belfast from a man claiming the thieves were ready to negotiate a safe return of the $18 million champion.

The Belfast Newsletter, a Protestant newspaper in the capital of Northern Ireland, said the telephone caller claimed Wednesday night that the thieves wanted any of three prominent British racing journalists to serve as intermediaries.

If the Aga Khan and other members of the 35-member syndicate that owns Shergar were willing to talk, the caller said, one or all of the three journalists should be at a Belfast hotel this evening.

A gang of at least six masked gunmen stole the 5-year-old horse from the Aga Khan's Ballymany stud farm 30 miles from Dublin on Tuesday night. Shergar, valued as a stud at $18 million, is a white-blazed bay who won both the English and Irish derbies in 81.

The caller said that if no one arrived at the hotel, the thieves would assume the syndicate was not interested in discussing the horse's return. The newspaper said the man hung up without hinting at Shergar's fate if no negotiations was genuine before any of the journalists would be advised whether to go to Belfast. Belfast police refused to comment on the situation.

Irish police sources said they believed the meeting was set for Belfast, in British-ruled Northern Ireland, because it was out of the jurisdiction of police in the Irish Republic where Shergar was stolen.

The British domestic news agency Press Association said John Fitzgerald, the head groom at the stud farm, stated the gunmen told him they wanted a ransom of almost $3 million. Fitzgerald was held by the gunmen for several hours before being released began.

The journalists named by the caller were Lord Oaksey of the conservative Sunday Telegraph in London, Peter Campling of the London daily tabloid The Sun, and television racing expert Derek Thompson.

Oaksey said that if both the horse owners and the police believe the call is worth pursuing, "naturally I'm prepared to go to Belfast."

Thompson said he also was willing to go to Belfast. The Sun said it was considering its response.

Dublin police said they wanted to determine if the call to the newspaper unharmed.

The man overseeing the hunt for Shergar, Chief Superintendent James Murphy of the Garda Siochana — the Irish Republic's police force — said Wednesday night that the thieves had talked of the possibility of a ransom demand.

But Murphy denied that any demand had been made and said he did not believe any ransom would be paid.

'Zero option' still objective of NATO

LONDON (AP) — Vice President George Bush said today the "zero option" proposal to eliminate U.S. and Soviet medium-range missiles in Europe remains a firm NATO objective even though the Soviets may never accept it.

Bush, who left London after a 12-day, seven-nation tour of Western Europe, indicated before departing that he would report to President Reagan on fresh suggestions made to him by allied leaders.

But he told a news conference there should be "no misunderstanding about the resolve of the NATO alliance" to start deploying Pershing 2 and cruise missiles in Western Europe later this year if arms negotiations with the Soviets are unsuccessful.

Reagan has proposed canceling the deployment if the Soviet Union dismantles its missiles already targeted at Western Europe. The Soviets have rejected this "zero option" proposal, and Bush has acknowledged it is not a "take-it-or-leave-it" offer.

When a reporter asked whether, in view of this, the zero option was "dead as a dodo," Bush replied:

"No, not as an objective. Certainly not. Now, I can't speak on the Soviet side whether they're ever willing to come that far forward."

Bush said he had asked allied leaders to suggest ways to break the apparent impasse at the Geneva arms talks.

"Are we missing something? That was the question that I had in my mind as I came around and talked to these various leaders," Bush said.

He said there are "no new proposals in our pockets." But he also said British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher had spoken recently of a solution that establishes a missile balance without going as far as the U.S. proposal.

AP Laserphoto

Police remove anti-nuclear protesters from Downing Street as Bush arrives at the residence of Prime Minister Thatcher.

Bush called on Soviet Communist Party chief Yuri V. Andropov, "who has been trying to convince us he is a man of peace," to "match his words with deeds."

"Join us in Geneva," Bush challenged. "Join us in negotiating in earnest — if not our proposal, then one of your own ... Men and women who seek peace are waiting for a Soviet answer that finally says yes."

On Wednesday, Bush forcefully insisted that Reagan's policies will prevent a U.S.-Soviet nuclear holocaust.

"I've got grandkids, I've got children. Do you think we don't want peace?" Bush said after he was pressed by one persistent questioner.

"Do you think we care less than others about nuclear war? We are trying to deter aggression. We are trying to keep balance. We are not trying to seek out conquest."

The vice president, speaking to the Royal Institute of International Affairs, said he found Western alliance leaders "united on behalf of the NATO alliance."

He was asked by Roman Catholic Monsignor Bruce Kent, head of Britain's Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament, how the United States could oppose a worldwide freeze on nuclear arms when East and West have more than enough weapons to "kill everybody so many times now."

Bush said the United States seeks to deter aggression and is "not trying to seek out conquest."

"If you could only help me get that across to those people," he told Kent. "We should be together on this."

"We feel the way to deter is through balance," Bush added. "We do not believe that for one side to have 1,200 warheads and for NATO to have zero is the way to deter war and keep the peace."

Lagos rated most expensive city for businessmen, survey reports

LONDON (AP) — Lagos, the capital of Nigeria, is the world's most expensive city for visiting businessmen, according to an annual survey published here today.

Employment Conditions Abroad Ltd. reported that the cost of a business stay in Lagos is $197 a day.

The survey covered the cost of a four-star hotel room and incidental expenses.

Manama, Bahrain, in the Persian Gulf, came in second in the list at $169 a day, followed by nearby Dubai at $163 and Jidda, Saudi Arabia, $152.

Next was New York City at $150, London $139, Hong Kong $135, and Sydney, Australia at $129, according to Employment Conditions Abroad Ltd.

Singapore was put at $119, Paris $113, Rio de Janeiro $107 and Madrid $85.

Residents of Palau cast ballots

KOROR, Palau (AP) — Turnout was heavy today as voters in the island Republic of Palau went to the polls under hot, steamy skies to decide their future political relations with the United States.

Dozens of voters lined up at open-air polling places as early as 7 a.m. (6 p.m. EST Wednesday) to vote on a proposed Compact of Free Association between the two governments.

If approved, the compact would give the islanders sovereignty, self-government and $1 billion in U.S. financial aid for the next 50 years. In return, the United States would have continued military control and provide defense for the strategically placed nation of 14,000 people.

Walesa testifies in sedition hearing

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Solidarity leader Lech Walesa showed up to testify at the military prosecutor's office today but vowed to avoid any action that would harm five union advisers charged with sedition.

Walesa was officially summoned to testify in the case.

The five advisers — Jacek Kuron and four other members of the Committee for Social Self-Defense — were arrested after the December 1981 declaration of martial law in Poland.

Belgium to buy 44 more F-16s

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — The Belgian government will buy 44 more U.S. F-16 jetfighters at a cost of $695 million, Prime Minister Wilfried Martens announced today after a Cabinet meeting.

The Belgian Air Force already has 67 F-16s in operation and has ordered 49 more. The decision to buy an additional 44 will give the air force a total of 160 planes to replace its aging French Mirage 5-B's.

Sicilian doctors ordered to work

PALERMO, Sicily (AP) — Nearly 1,000 doctors from the major Sicilian hospitals were ordered back to work on the first day of their "total general strike" demanding a new contract and better working conditions.

Palermo's prefect, Emanuele de Francesco, issued the order Wednesday after city and regional health officials predicted an immediate crisis in local health facilities.

The strike in Sicily is part of a national movement by doctors and hospital employees working for Italy's national health services.

Five die in Indian election protest

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Five people were reported killed in a fresh outbreak of violence in India's Assam state as bomb blasts, kidnappings, arson and strikes continued to stall election campaigning in the region.

Residents of Gauhati, Assam's main city, staged a blackout by turning off their lights Wednesday night after rumors spread that Prime Minister Indira Gandhi had secretly flown to the northeastern area, reports said.

Mrs. Gandhi rejected fresh appeals from opposition leaders to postpone state assembly elections, scheduled for Feb. 14-20.

Miners die in search for co-worker

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — A white supervisor of a gold mine and seven black miners have died of heatstroke underground while searching for a missing black miner, a spokesman for the Barlow Rand company said.

The men died Wednesday in an airway used to transfer heat from the underground works, where the missing miner had been on a repair operation.

Officials fear start of range war between U.S. ranchers, bandits

CARZALIA VALLEY, N.M. (AP) — Officials fear a range war could break out soon between New Mexican ranchers and Mexican border bandits who cut frontier fences, steal cattle and smuggle aliens annd drugs.

"We are living in a lawless frontier as far as the Mexicans are concerned," said Carzalia Valley rancher Ralph Johnson, whose land runs 11 miles along the border. "Drug smugglers, illegal alien smugglers and thieves use this area as if it were a thoroughfare."

Authorities say violence could erupt unless the United States steps in to ensure surveillance and law enforcement along the remote, 175-mile border.

"It's become serious enough that we've got to do something to prevent a situation where you have a range war," said Ray Sadler, head of the New Mexico Border Commission.

Mexican thieves recently stole a half-mile of water pipeline belonging to Cloverdale rancher Bill Cowan, and Johnson says he won't leave home now without making sure someone stays to protect the cattle and farm equipment on his 25,000-acre ranch.

DRUG COURIERS ALSO have been spotted scooting across the border in low-flying planes without lights to elude U.S. Customs radar, ranchers say.

Some land on isolated ranches, unload drugs, then pick up American electronics gear to smuggle back on their return flight to Mexico, U.S. Customs District Director Manny Najera said in El Paso, Texas.

"Smuggling electronics goods into Mexico and narcotics back here — that is something Customs is most interested in putting an end to," he said.

The problem with countering smuggling is that Reaganomics has caused Customs to lose funds and manpower, Najera said. But Customs will "find out who the dickens is responsible for repairing the (border) fences," he said.

Sadler said this week he would ask Gov. Toney Anaya to distribute surplus fencing to ranchers in the area so the fences along the border can be refurbished.

The International Boundary and Water Commission claims no responsibility for maintaining the five- or seven-strand barbed-wire fences that have in some cases been in place since 1916, Najera said.

AS MEXICO HAS fallen into economic throes and devalued its peso three times this past year, Mexicans living in ejidos (communes) built along the border have started stealing cedar posts from the U.S. fence for firewood, Johnson says.

Besides the matter of who will maintain America's side of the disappearing fence, ranchers fear their families could be hurt if they come upon a smuggling operation.

Two Rodeo, N.M., ranchers were slain about three years ago after they apparently happened upon an ongoing drug operation, officials say.

"We're afraid to leave anymore without making sure someone's here to protect the ranch," said Johnson, who recently had thieves cut a lock in his cotton mill warehouse and tote a $520 welder across the border.

Johnson knows: he followed the tracks of the truck that carried the welder across a cut section of fence and disappeared into Mexico.

Najera concurs with ranchers' fears of the worse along the border because Mexico is in its worst economic crisis in 60 years.

"I have no doubt something's going on. It certainly concerns us."

BUT NAJERA AND SADLER vow first to fix the hole-ridden fences along the U.S. border. They also hope Mexico will maintain its side of the fence.

The fence on parts of Johnson's land is down more than up and cut more than not; with it in such sad shape, diseased Mexican cattle can be driven illegally onto his land to graze, he said.

The Mexican cattle often infect his herds with scabies. If infected, his cattle must be dunked in a costly solution to cure them.

Also, his herd sometimes ambles into Mexico because the fence is down and disappear, Johnson said.

Concerned with reports of unrest with border ranchers, New Mexico Lt. Gov. Mike Runnels has suggested "better communications between state and government agencies is one of the problems we can help solve."

Among the options for ranchers suspecting illegal activities is to call the nearby Columbus, N.M., port of entry, which will telephone Customs officials in Houston, Najera said.

"THEY'LL CALL IN air support people," he said, which — if acted upon quickly — can reduce the chance of shootouts between ranchers and border runners.

"Knowing a rancher, he'll go investigate, more than likely with a gun," Najera said. "And he might shoot them, because they're rough and ready types."

Johnson says it's his land, and he'll do what it takes to protect it, even though he wants to avoid "an international incident."

But Mexicans continue to cross as if no border exists: "The traffic is just there all the time, and they have no cause to be here," Johnson said.

Najera says some ranchers may be encouraging traffic because they hire some Mexicans for low-paying farm work.

Declarer, was Esteban Casian of Chile. His redouble of three hearts, by agreement, showed first-round control of the suit, and his partner displayed touching faith when he leaped to the small slam in diamonds.

West led the king of clubs, taken by the ace in dummy. Declarer cashed the ace of diamonds and learned about the bad trump break. He finessed the ten of diamonds and then made the key play of surrendering a club.

West shifted to the queen of hearts. Declarer took the ace and ruffed heart, then hoped for the best as he cashed dummy's three high spades. When those tricks stood up, declarer was home. He ruffed a club in hand and a heart in dummy.

Everyone was down to two cards and the lead was on the table. Declarer simply led club from the table and East was trapped in a trump coup. Declarer held the K-J of trumps behind his queen and, no matter what East did, the last two tricks, and the slam, were in the bag.

Note that declarer must cash the high spades before he ruffs a club. If he does not, East will shed a spade on the third club and then ruff the third spade to defeat the slam.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Friday, February 11, 1983

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Inventor Thomas Alva Edison, Burt Reynolds and Eva Gabor were born on this date. Also sharing your birthday: music man Sergio Mendes and cable TV sportscaster Larry Merchant. Stop trying to be the life of the party! Those who settle down this year will make impressive financial and personal gains. Tackle creative projects one at a time. Starting a second major venture before the first is complete would be a big mistake. Be generous with mate, family. Lazy friends may tease you about a hard worker. Listen to their comments with a smile. You know exactly what you are doing.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A loved one inspires you to make the right decision today. Reject an offer that has too many strings attached. Look for a debate partner who is your equal.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You return to a former business and find you have a lot of catching up to do. Although technological changes seem intimidating at first, you learn fast. Persevere!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Your words will be convincing only if you back them up. Take a chance on someone who has been on the outside looking in. Be on time for appointments.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A friend reveals feelings of resentment that you never suspected. Spend more time with those who share your goals and dreams.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A roommate may be deceiving you. Financial juggling provides only a temporary solution. Contact creditors if you cannot make payments on time.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Travel gives you a new perspective. You also gain valuable insights from observing a child at play. A loved one needs reassurance.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Take a stranger's compliments with a grain of salt. A loved one will save you a lot of effort. Use any extra time to catch up on a backlog of work.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): The social scene gets busier. Give more thought to a domestic plan that has not worked in the past. A change of attitude could be the key to success.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Overtime means a fatter pay envelope but a limited social life. Tackle one thing at a time. A publisher could show interest in your writing.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Keep your promises. Do not let loved ones pressure you into spending more than you can afford. Entertaining at home appeals more than going out on the town.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Others take you at your word. Do not let them down. Complete current projects before starting new ones. Old friends may want to open a business. Keep in touch.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A real estate deal is in the spotlight. Do everything possible to finance it. Keep out of the way of difficult relatives. A one-to-one relationship leads to an exciting alliance.

Public Notice

In order to implement prior orders of the Public Utility Commission of Texas in Docket No. 3957, notice is hereby given of Southwestern Bell's proposal to implement a new schedule of intrastate long distance rates, effective April 1, 1983, unless otherwise determined by the Commission.

It is expected that the proposed rate schedule will not increase the company's net intrastate revenues, but rather, the increased rates will offset increased settlements paid to certain other telephone companies.

A complete copy of the new rate schedule is on file with the Public Utility Commission at Austin, Texas, and is available for inspection in each of the company's public business offices in Texas.

Notice to Customers of Other Telephone Companies

Changes in intrastate long distance rates would also affect customers of other telephone companies because such companies provide intrastate long distance service in accordance with rates specified in Southwestern Bell's tariffs.

Aviso Público

Southwestern Bell, con el objeto de cumplir con el decreto previo del Public Utility Commission (Comisión de Servicios Públicos) del Estado de Texas, Acta No. 3957, por la presente hace saber su intención de establecer un nuevo arancel de tarifas para servicio intraestatal de larga distancia, con vigencia a partir del 1o de abril de 1983, a menos que la Comisión haga otra determinación.

Se espera que el nuevo arancel de tarifas que Southwestern Bell se propone establecer no aumentará sus ingresos netos intraestatales, sino que servirá para compensar el aumento de los ajustes que se les paga a algunas otras compañías de teléfono.

Una copia completa del nuevo arancel de tarifas se ha archivado en las oficinas del Public Utility Commission (Comisión de Servicios Públicos) en Austin, Texas, y esta disponible para inspección pública en todas nuestras oficinas en el Estado de Texas.

Aviso a los Clientes de Otras Compañías de Teléfono

Cambios en las tarifas para servicio intraestatal de larga distancia tambien afectarían a clientes de otras compañías de teléfono porque dichas compañías proveen servicio intraestatal de larga distancia en conformidad a tarifas especificadas por Southwestern Bell.

Tale of two interests

Reporter-Telegram staff writer Richard Orr's story last Sunday on the oil industry's use of fresh water in secondary recovery operations made a significant point: Mankind needs oil and mankind must have fresh water. One should not be sacrificed for the other. So, a workable compromise must be forged.

Oil is Midland's bread and butter. Only a foolish person would support restrictions which would unduly impede the industry. But the same foresight needed to ensure the industry is able to meet energy demands also is needed by those who selfishly pollute fresh water supplies without thinking or caring about the consequences.

It's true that oil recovery operations require little fresh water, comparatively. Orr's story pointed out that 95 percent of the water drawn up from the vast Ogallala Aquifer is used for agricultural purposes on the High Plains and West Texas. That water returns to the eco-system basically unspoiled. But the water used in the oil industry is contaminated and that's the water that must be addressed.

Concern over the oil industry's use of fresh water has arisen because of the diminishing water supply of the Ogallala Aquifer and predictions that in the next 20 years or so, the aquifer won't be capable of supplying water for agricultural purposes on the High Plains.

State Rep. Tom Craddick's House Natural Resources Committee has recommended "legislation ... prohibiting the use of fresh water for enhanced recovery purposes, unless the Railroad Commission determines that it is the only fluid practicably available for injection."

That's a wise suggeston, but some believe rather than the Railroad Commission, the agency that should be granted the authority to approve or disapprove use of fresh water in enhanced recovery operations should be the Texas Department of Water Resources. The idea is not ludicrous. After all, isn't the logical choice in an effort to protect water resources the agency charged with that responsibility?

If the responsibility goes solely to the Railroad Commission or the Texas Department of Water Resouces, either water interests or oil interests will scream, claiming lack of adequate representation.

A better solution would appear to be a joint committee composed of representatives of both the Railroad Commission, oil industry and Texas Department of Water Resources. Such a committee could consider, in the proper perspective, questions of fresh water use in oil operations and rule in the interest of all the state's residents. One pitfall of such a grouping of interests is that committee members may find compromise distasteful. But compromise is the name of the game if the state's water interests and oil interests are to be adequately represented, as they should be.

After all, there are instances when fresh water is the only fluid practical for use and there are occasions when water needs will outweigh energy concerns.

The greater significance to the story, of course, was that every one of us has a vital interest in environmental — and energy — concerns and should get involved in such matters. This is, after all, the only world we have.

War in El Salvador

The following editorial appeared in Monday's Washington Post: The military news in El Salvador is the guerrillas' capture and holding for two days of Berlin, population 35,000, a city in an interior province remote from their strongholds near the Honduran border. Most American observers have reacted cautiously, aware perhaps of the exaggerated response to the communists' Tet offensive in Vietnam.

Still, Berlin was a serious embarrassment to the government. The guerrillas, relying on ambushes, sabotage and intimidation, do not seem to be near a country-wide military victory. Nor is there evidence that they have developed a mass following. But their pressure is constant and perhaps growing, and neither in San Salvador nor in Washington are the authorities certain what to do.

Some of the Salvadoran government's problems are familiar: Nicaragua continues to augment the guerrillas' locally obtained arms. The Reagan administration has not gotten from Congress all the military aid it has sought. Other problems arise directly within El Salvador.

The Salvadoran armed forces had a year, 1982, to use their new American aid and training to turn the corner, and did not. They have been slow to adopt the aggressive, small-unit patrols their American advisers feel are best suited to routing guerrillas. The Americans favor reform, but now say the armed forces have been "distracted" by politics (pushing land reform) and political infighting. Others note that Salvadoran commanders, uncertain of their troops, have preferred the safer tactic of large-unit sweeps, and that the government has been spread thin by having to defend economic targets.

Some officers have political associations on the feudal right. One of them, much admired by the Americans for his military record, Col. Sigfredo Ochoa, last month challenged the reform-minded chief of staff in what Georgetown University's Robert Leiken aptly calls an episode pitting "the Americans' darling against their right-hand man."

There is a sense of a new turning point. The Americans nervously ask for "a more dynamic approach" by the Salvadorans and the transfer of American advisers from training to brigade-level operations. Leiken suggests that anti-communist military groups in El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and the Nicaraguan opposition may join and launch their own combined regional offensive.

No doubt there is room for military improvement. But steps that give greater sway to the military foes of domestic reform, and that threaten to bring outsiders more directly into the struggle, are self-defeating. A time of frustration is the right moment to renew a search for a political solution on the middle ground.

SocSec chiefs need help spotting disabled

WASHINGTON — The Social Security Administration's zealous efforts to cut costs by lopping beneficiaries off the rolls has stripped many disabled Americans of legitimate payments.

Jack Anderson

Two months ago, Deputy Commissioner Paul Simmons acknowledged to a House subcommittee that there had indeed been some "seemingly senseless" terminations of benefits "despite glaringly obvious disabilities."

He assured the members that new standards for ascertaining disabilities had been issued to the field offices, but he declined to describe exactly what the standards are. I think I know why.

The agency has issued a training manual to help its bureaucrats spot obvious cases of disability. The trouble is, the symptoms it lists are so glaringly obvious it makes you wonder if the Social Security Administration thinks its field officials are themselves disabled by blindness or deafness.

Actually, it's a little scary that such prima facie evidence of disability has to be spelled out. A 5-year-old child would know there was something seriously wrong with people who exhibited the disabilities listed. Consider these examples from the manual, which was slipped to my associate Donald Goldberg:

An applicant qualifies as eligible for disability benefits if he or she:

— Has had a leg amputated at the hip;

— Is over 55 and has had any limb amputated;

— Has had two limbs amputated regardless of age;

— Suffers a heart attack, psychiatric disturbance or other seizure while in the Social Security office or on the way there;

— Arrives in a wheelchair and "is only able to move her head to the side and utter unintelligible sounds," or

— Reports that "his doctor just told him he will have to have his left foot amputated next month" because of a serious disease.

There is little guidance for judging those applicants whose disability may not be readily apparent. Unless, as mentioned, the individual throws an actual fit during or just before the interview, the bureaucrats are not told how to spot mental disability.

An attached memorandum explains: "We have tried to (give) an example that would fit all situations you may encounter, but we are unable to do so due to the variant nature of mental impairments. (There) will be cases in which the beneficiary demonstrates such gross aberrations in appearance, thought, mood and behavior that his/her case (is obvious)." The interviewing official is solemnly instructed to resolve any doubts by further interviews.

DID HE LIE?: Teamsters Union President Roy Williams is supposed to be sentenced today or tomorrow for his role in an unsuccessful attempt to bribe former Sen. Howard Cannon, D-Nev.

Testimony at Williams' pre-sentence hearing in Chicago this week has painted a picture of the union president as a man with close ties to organized crime, particularly Kansas City mob boss Nick Civella.

There is evidence that might help to balance this damning testimony. Unfortunately for Williams, it is not admissible in court.

The exculpatory evidence consists of lie-detector tests given to Williams by Raymond J. Weir, who used to be the National Security Agency's chief polygraph expert. Weir says Williams was telling the truth when he was asked about his alleged organized-crime connections and about Sen. Cannon.

The interrogation centered on the identity of a person with the code name "Rancher," which appeared in a mob ledger obtained by federal agents. The ledger indicated that "Rancher" was paid $1,500 a month by the mob. Federal investigators and the Senate permanent subcommittee on investigations have identified "Rancher" as Williams.

But on Feb. 4, 1981, Weir asked Williams: "To the best of your knowledge, have you ever used or been known by the nickname 'Rancher'? Were you ever offered or did you ever accept $1,500 per month from Nick Civella or any member of his organization?" Williams denied both suggestions.

"I'm very satisfied with my examination," Weir told my associate Tony Capaccio. "I'm satisfied that what I did was good and my results accurate."

Williams actually took two polygraph tests. He was judged to be telling the truth when he denied having offered the senator "directly or indirectly a bribe" and having tried to "improperly influence" Cannon.

At the government's insistence, the questions were reworded, substituting "anything of value" for "bribe" and dropping the adverb "improperly" from the second question. However, the judge in Williams' bribery case would not allow the results of the polygraph tests in evidence.

Williams' attorney suggested that the FBI's own polygraph experts retest their client. The bureau never responded to the offer.

UNDER THE DOME: Last week Congress began chewing on President Reagan's 1984 budget, amid widespread speculation that the document will be spit out, not swallowed — a procedure known as "budget busting."

Actually, the budget did a little busting of its own when it was delivered to the House Budget Committee office in an aging hotel on Capitol Hill. Too many copies of the budget were loaded onto the elevator, which dropped an inch or two and then stalled. It was out of commission for half an hour.

GEORGE F. WILL

Quality of journalism may shape history

WASHINGTON — Newsweek magazine, for which I toil, was born nine years before I was and will survive me (in several senses). It recently celebrated its 50th birthday, occasioning this reflection: Since 1933, the conditions of American life have changed radically; the great questions of American life have not.

George F. Will

Fifty years is a lot of the life of this Republic. In 1933, a few veterans still remembered their battles of 70 years earlier — Vicksburg and Gettysburg. "The Romance of Helen Trent" went on the air, "Tobacco Road" went on Broadway, "God's Little Acre" went on the best-seller list, sirloin steak was 29 cents a pound and your typical lawyer, overpaid as always, earned $4,200 a year.

Since then, the emancipation of women and the democratization of higher education have gone far toward opening careers to talents. The oral contraceptive, the jet engine, the cathode-ray tube and the silicon chip have done more than any election has done to change American life. We have compressed time by accelerating social change; we have obliterated physical distance by air travel; we have annihilated imaginative distance by communications technologies that make every sight and sound accessible to everyone.

But in doing do we have jeopardized a capacity that distinguishes us from oysters — the capacity for astonishment. It is a paradox — and a problem — that as we have become more prolific with wonders, we have felt less wonder, even about the miracle of democracy.

In late winter, 1933, politics became national in a new sense: Government acknowledged what conditions taught, that our lives are woven together by an industrial economy. Beginning then, the urgent question — still an open question — has been: Can a people devoted to the widest possible scope for self-interestedness — a nation of aggressive individualism — think and act collectively as much as is required to secure the public interests. The New Deal altered, fundamentally and irrevocably, the relation of the citizen to the government, which became a powerful engine of distributive justice, influencing the allocation of wealth and opportunity, not least by underwriting the rights of organized labor.

In 1933, Congress created the Tennessee Valley Authority to operate a power plant at Muscl Shoals, Ala. Today, urban Americans, whose idea of the pastoral is Central Park, can not imagine the increase of Amepican happiness wrought by rural electrification. In 1933, one in four Americans was working the land, and the land was blowing in the wind. But reclamation, irrigation, research — all sustained by government — turned agriculture into the most successful sector of American society in the subsequent half century. The bountifulness of California's central valley is a tribute to government's as well as nature's creativity.

It is perverse: After 50 years in which government has cushioned so many of life's sharp edges, it has fallen in esteem. A good shoe may be one you do not notice, but that is not true of good government. The accommodations required for an ameliorative state — the cost of public claims on private productivity — became the organizing questions of our domestic debate in 1933 and remain so in 1983.

Mobs lynched 42 persons in 1933. Baseball was white and the back of the bus was black, and nothing finer can be said of this 50 years than that in 1983 our children consider such social practices as bizarre and distant as we consider medieval medicine. In 1933 the problem of race was thought to be a problem of extending formal rights, especially the franchise. In 1983 we know that the task of enhancing equality of opportunity is staggeringly more complicated than that.

In 1933 Cole Porter was writing lyrics for a Broadway musical, "Anything Goes": "Good authors too who once knew better words Now only use four-letter words Writing prose, anything goes." Not anything, not then, but a judge did rule that a book published in Europe in 1922 could circulate here, four-letter words and all. The case was: United States vs. One Book Called "Ulysses."

But as Edmund Burke wrote at the time our Republic was born, "The effect of liberty to individuals is that they may do as they please: We ought to see what it will please them to do before we risk congratulations." These five decades have seen such dissolution of restraints, such coarsening of public expression, such flight from discipline, that civilized posterity — if there is one — will not congratulate us.

Newsweek's half-century coincides with the growth of journalism on a national scale. This nation's premise is that history is made not by impersonal forces but individuals' choices. However, since 1933 the choices have been becoming complicated faster than journalism has been becoming capable of clarifying complexities. Because history here is the history of the minds of free persons, the quality of the history we shall make in the next 50 years depends to an unprecedented, and perhaps dismaying extent, on the quality of journalism.

ART BUCHWALD

Planned Parenthood shouldn't call!

This column is about sex. Parental discretion is advised.

Art Buchwald

The Reagan administration seems to be going ahead with a rule requiring that any organization receiving federal funds for dispensing contraceptives to a minor must notify the parents within 10 days of the request.

The administration's heart is in the right place. But trying to put such a rule into effect presents problems. Many parents can't talk with their teen-agers about rock music, much less discuss with them the subject of sex.

Let's assume that the Wallingfords have just received a letter from Planned Parenthood, noting that their daughter Sue Anne has requested a prescription for the Pill.

Both are waiting for her when she comes home from school.

"Where were you?" Wallingford demands.

"I was in school."

"And what were you doing in school?"

"I don't know. I just went to class, and stuff."

"What kind of stuff?" Wallingford yells.

"You know, just stuff. What are you guys all excited about?"

"Are you sure you didn't sneak off in a clothes closet and do it with some boy?"

"Do what? And with what boy?"

"Any boy," Mrs. Wallingford says. "We know everything," she says waving the letter from Planned Parenthood.

"So what do you have to say for yourself?"

"I knew if I asked you for permission to buy the Pill you wouldn't give it to me."

"You're damn right we wouldn't give it to you. What kind of parents do you think we are?" Wallingford says.

"I know what kind of parents you are. That's why I went somewhere else to protect myself."

"To protect yourself from what?"

"Having a baby."

"What do you know about having babies?" Mrs. Wallingford says.

"Well, when the male's sperm fertilizes the woman's ovum... "

"That's enough of that kind of dirty talk," Wallingford shouts.

"Relax, Daddy-O. I haven't done it. But if I ever decide to, I want to be protected. They told us at the clinic, it's the woman and not the man who has to take precautions. Men couldn't care less about the consequences."

"I don't believe I'm hearing this," Mrs. Wallingford says. "We've raised a nymphomaniac."

"You seem to know a lot about sex, young lady," Wallingford says. "You certainly didn't learn any of this at home."

"I know. That's why I went to the clinic. Every time I brought up the subject you said it was none of my business."

"It isn't any of your business," Mrs. Wallingford says. "You're 17 years old and nice girls don't discuss such things with their parents."

"Well, if it isn't any of my business, how come I can get pregnant?"

"You can't get pregnant unless you do it," Wallingford shouts. "And your mother and I forbid you to do it."

"Anything you say, folks. Now can I go?"

"Where are you going?"

"To the basketball game with Jack."

"So that's where you're going to do it," Wallingford cries.

"How am I going to do it at a basketball game?"

"In the parking lot," Wallingford says. "That's where I used to do it."

"I can't take any more of this. Goodbye."

After Sue Anne leaves, Mrs. Wallingford wipes the tears from her eyes. "You know George, I think we both would be happier today if Planned Parenthood had never let us know."

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Thursday, Feb. 10, the 41st day of 1983. There are 324 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Feb. 10, 1763, France ceded Canada to England as the Treaty of Paris was signed, ending the French and Indian War.

On this date:

In 1828, South American revolutionary leader Simon Bolivar became ruler of Colombia.

In 1846, members of the Mormon faith began an exodus to the West from Illinois.

In 1962, the Soviet Union exchanged captured American U-2 pilot Gary Powers for a Soviet spy held by the United States.

In 1964, the House of Representatives passed the Civil Rights Act.

Ten years ago: U.S. envoy Henry Kissinger arrived in Hanoi to discuss America's postwar relations with North Vietnam.

Federal government to recoup money by docking wages of Illinois workers

CHICAGO (AP) — The federal government expects to get back $147,600 by docking the wages of up to 33 federal workers and 50 other northern Illinois residents in a crackdown on government loan deadbeats.

U.S. Attorney Dan K. Webb told a news conference Wednesday that one complaint filed in federal court was against a lawyer with the Federal Trade commission earning up to $30,000 a year who has defaulted on student loans totaling over $11,000.

He said his office was instructing seven federal agencies to begin deducting 25 percent from the pay of 16 federal employees, and will file similar complaints against 17 others, as well as about 50 non-federal workers.

Man's delusions make him incompetent

ROCKVILLE, Md. (AP) — Delusions of a worldwide conspiracy make Edward Thomas Mann incompetent to stand trial on murder and other charges from a siege at the IBM Building in suburban Washington, a judge has ruled.

Montgomery County Judge William Miller's decision Wednesday ran counter to the opinion of psychiatrists, who argued that the defendant could understand the proceedings against him.

Mann, 38, drove his car through the glass doors of the Bethesda, Md., building and, during a 7½-hour siege, fired 150 rounds from several weapons, killing three people, officials say. He pleaded guilty to 75 counts, but his lawyers say the plea was part of his delusions.

Adair, crew plug Michigan gas well

KINGSLEY, Mich. (AP) — Red Adair, an expert on well fires, and his crew plugged a leak from a natural gas well that had forced the evacuation of 100 people.

Adair rushed here from his base outside Houston on Tuesday after the well blew out as workers were trying to insert a pipe to begin production for Traverse Oil Co., officials said. The crew pumped drilling mud into the well to block escaping gas, and the leak was capped Wednesday.

About 100 people within a half-mile of the well were evacuated temporarily Tuesday, and school was canceled Wednesday in this town 1½ miles from the well.

Man pleads innocent to insurance fraud

SAN JOSE, Calif. (AP) — Richard Bowen, charged with trying to murder his wife and blame it on cyanide-laced medicine, has pleaded innocent to insurance fraud and grand theft in an unrelated case.

Bowen, 29, is accused of filing an insurance claim for stereo equipment he had hidden with a friend, and possessing radios stolen from a security company he once worked for. The charges arose from the investigation of the attempted murder of his 30-year-old wife, Susan.

Project speed-up won't add to deficit

WASHINGTON (AP) — Speeding up planned government building projects, an idea President Reagan says is being studied to help remedy unemployment, will not increase the federal budget deficit, according to a White House spokesman.

Larry Speakes, deputy White House press secretary, said Wednesday that no decision had been made on whether to proceed with a speedup.

The same day, Reagan said, "We are looking" at the proposal. Those comments followed remarks the president made Tuesday, indicating an order had already gone out to government offices to speed up the work.

"The president didn't mean what you thought he said," Speakes said of Reagan's initial remark. "The correct interpretation is he was authorizing a study. The president has not made a decision whether to go or no go," he said.

The spokesman added that he did not know how many jobs would be created by accelerating work on government projects, but he said it would not affect the federal budget deficit because no additional money would be spent.

Money that would be spent in fiscal 1984, which begins on Oct. 1, instead would be spent in the current fiscal year.

Reagan is under pressure from members of Congress to propose a government program to ease unemployment, which dropped last month to 10.2 percent from 10.8 percent. The 10.2 percent represents a new government formula that includes military as well as civilian workers. The January rate would be 10.4 percent if calculated under the old formula.

The president has balked repeatedly at backing what he calls "make-work" jobs, but there are some indications he may opt for speeding up government projects.

Meeting Wednesday with editors and broadcasters from around the country, Reagan was asked at a luncheon question-and-answer session about the jobs program.

He replied:

"What we do have in our budget already...is that we are looking at all the agencies and departments of government that have already built into the budget programs of construction, of maintenance, of upkeep and so forth that they need and with the idea of accelerating those and wherever they have them scheduled, doing them now."

He said that it was "pretty hard for a president to say" when the specifics of the program would be determined, but stated that his representatives were talking to members of Congress about it.

In his remarks on Tuesday, Reagan stated:

"What we have said to all of our agencies and departments is that the budgets for all of them, their maintenance work, construction, things of that kind that are called for, and what we've said, 'expedite it. Accelerate it. Don't wait if you've got in on schedule some place down the line. It's already in the budget. It won't add anything to the deficit to do it. Go to work on it and start doing it to help in the recovery.'"

The president also told the visitors Wednesday that the government was looking into the possibility of using military facilities for providing shelter to the homeless.

"Our military is already checking on military installations for barracks space that can be made available for shelter for those people," the president said.

"The president didn't mean what you thought he said...The president has not made a decision whether to go or no go."

Day care center grounds found to be contaminated

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Officials at a church day care center said they would keep children indoors after their grounds became one of seven new sites in Missouri found to have dangerously high levels of dioxin.

Test results released in Washington on Wednesday by the Environmental Protection Agency brought to 22 the number of confirmed sites in Missouri contaminated by dioxin, among the deadliest substances made by man.

A spokesman at suburban Manchester Methodist Church said officials found dioxin levels of 2 to 4 parts per billion in a grassy knoll at the front of the church.

Federal environmental authorities "are going to meet in Kansas City and get back to us by Friday with the specifics," said the spokesman, who asked not to be identified. "In the meantime, we'll just make sure the kids don't play there."

Besides the church property, new sites found to be contaminated included a residence in Fenton, a riding club in Jefferson County, a lumber yard in suburban Hazelwood and three truck yards in St. Louis.

Contamination levels ranged up to 80 parts per billion. The National Centers for Disease Control has said 1 part per billion is the acceptable level.

None of the sites disclosed Wednesday approached the levels of contamination found in recent months at two sites in Jefferson County and the St. Louis County community of Times Beach, where many residents have moved out.

Fred A. Lafser, director of the State Department of Natural Resources, said 32 new sites were tested. Seven were contaminated, 24 showed no traces of dioxin and one site required additional tests.

The home of Ruth Sullins and her family at Fenton was the most heavily contaminated of the group announced Wednesday, with 80 parts of dioxin per billion.

Soviet press focuses on gun control

MOSCOW (AP) — When a gang of hooligans disrupted a house party in a rural Soviet town, a guest grabbed his rifle and killed one of them and wounded three others.

A Ukrainian tribunal convicted the guest, V. Donchenko, of first degree murder and sentenced him to 15 years in prison, but an appeals court reduced his term to three years, ruling he had acted in self defense.

The case reported recently by the Young Communist League newspaper, Komsomolskaya Pravda, was the latest in the Soviet press dealing with the controversial issue of gun controls.

Other articles over the last 12 months have revealed the frequent use of firearms in crime and accidental slayings and demanded tighter controls of privately owned guns.

"All kinds of people, including drunks and hooligans, continue to amuse themselves with guns," commented the newspaper of the Communist Party Central Committee, Sovietskaya Kultura, referring to vandals who shoot at power lines and poachers of wild game.

The newspaper suggested that all privately owned firearms should be handed over for supervised storage and returned only for hunting season.

But Komsomolskaya Pravda presented the case for leaving guns in homes for self defense. It said Donchenko was justified in using his rifle against the intruders, who pelted the party guests with sticks and stones.

Although a warning shot probably would have sufficed to scare the ruffians away, the report said, judges who applied the harsh sentence against Donchenko created an "obstacle in the battle against hooligans by discouraging private citizens from reacting bravely."

Vigilante actions to stop crime have been widely praised in the Soviet press, and citizens who fail to intervene sometimes are singled out for harsh criticism.

At the same time, Soviet law provides tough penalties for illegal actions involving firearms, setting prison terms of up to five years for anyone who carries, keeps, makes or supplies firearms without a police permit.

Hunting rifles must be registered with authorities, but owners are permitted to keep the weapons at home providing they are taken apart and locked up.

Nevertheless, the regulations on private guns often go unobserved, especially in rural areas, where authorities rarely bother to monitor the safekeeping of guns.

In its report last July advocating stricter controls, Sovietskaya Kultura told of a third-grade boy who got hold of his father's gun and killed a visiting playmate. In another case, a 3-year-old girl was fatally wounded when a hunting rifle kept loaded under a bed in a farmer's house was accidentally discharged.

Numerous reports recently have told of firearms used in committing crime. In one case last summer, three men armed with a sawed-off rifle went on a month-long crime spree south of Moscow, committing robberies, rapes and a murder before they were caught. Two were sentenced to death by firing squad and the other got 15 years imprisonment.

In that case, police were criticized for inefficient pursuit of the bandits and private citizens assaailed for aiding the culprits or failing to intervene to help their victims.

Another newspaper told of a gunman on a motorcycle who halted a bank courier's auto on a highway near Moscow, killing a guard and wounding the driver, and then sped away with the money. The bandit was apprehended nearly eight hours later on a train after he was spotted by an alert conductor.

Mother Nature saves Americans money with mild winter weather

WASHINGTON (AP) — Mother Nature has been kind to most Americans this winter, particularly in the East, saving them more than a billion and a half dollars in heating bills.

January savings of $431 million nationwide meant that winter season energy expenses are $1.58 billion less than expected, according to the National Environmental Satellite, Data and Information Service.

Cumulative heating costs since last summer now total $25.29 billion. Based on the Census Bureau's most recent estimate that there are 233 million Americans, that means heating has cost each person $108.54 so far this season, $6.78 less than it would have in normal winter weather.

The East North Central states have had the most savings, with a season-long bill of $5.64 billion, $505 million below normal. That same area topped January's saving, with a heating bill for the month of $2.1 billion, $169 million below normal. That area includes Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Ohio and Wisconsin.

Bob Leffler, spokesman for the environmental service, said in a telephone interview that nationwide heating costs for January totaled $9.2 billion. If weather for the month had been normal, he said, consumers would have been expected to spend $9.6 billion.

The environmental satellite is under the jurisdiction of the Commerce Department.

Leffler explained that energy costs are adjusted for changes in the price of gas, oil and electricity, so normal spending for this year is different from normal for the same time a year ago. National energy costs for last January were not immediately available.

January was the second relatively mild month, following national energy savings of $1.37 billion in December.

But while December's good weather continued into early January, things changed at mid-month, and Americans had higher than normal heating costs for the last half of the month.

The Pacific states of California, Washington and Oregon saved $156 million in January, with a $795 million heating bill. For the whole winter season that region has had energy costs of $2.86 billion, $251 million less than normal. Alaska and Hawaii are not included in these calculations.

Telescope behind schedule

HUNTSVILLE, Ala. (AP) — Assembly of the $790 million Space Telescope, which was scheduled for a February 1985 launch date, is running behind schedule because of contractor problems, a newspaper reports.

Scientists hope to use the telescope to observe the passing of Halley's comet in 1986 and provide targeting information for Voyager 2's approach to Uranus.

The Huntsville Times said a top official of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration confirmed that a team of NASA managers from the Marshall Space Flight Center here will be sent to review problems at Perkin-Elmer Corp. in Danbury, Conn.

The NASA official, who asked not to be named, said the contractor had been unable to maintain test and development schedules for the telescope. The semi-automated laboratory will be placed in a low Earth orbit by the space shuttle.

The official said the launch is expected to be delayed several months from the February 1985 date.

Bateman's desire MJBA's command

TED BATTLES
BATTLE SCENE

Bill Bateman had Gene Motter pinned up against the wall over in the corner before the Midland Junior Baseball Association's "business" luncheon at Midland Country Club last week. It was an opportunity to make his point, and he was making it.

"Now that we are all together, it would be a good time to follow through on doing something about honoring some of those volunteers who have given so many years to the program," he impressed upon Motter. "We talked about it before, but we've never done anything about it.

As proof that the MJBA is a "get-it-done, and now" organization, Bateman was one of three longtime servants presented with a plaque during the ensuing meeting, swiftness that left Bill's jaw hanging loosely in the vicinity of his chest. "I wasn't thinking of me when I brought the subject up..." he protested.

The honoring of Harold Williams and Ed Blackaller along with Bateman also turned into a session of reminiscences. John Redfern, Jr., brought along some old team photos he had dug out of musty files and the memories flowed, how it all started and how far the program has come.

THE MJBA now provides organized baseball programs for youngsters ranging in age from six to 18.

Last year there were 1,300 players involved and 300 more adults. Broken down, 822 played in Little League, 230 in the (13-14) Sophomore leagues, 100 in the (15-16) Hi-Junior and 30 more in the Senior program. In addition, 200 participated in the newly-inaugurated T-Ball program for 6 to 8 year olds.

The budget last year for replacement uniforms alone was $19,000. In the old days, the late 1950s and 1960s, the budget for operating the entire program (uniforms, bats & balls, umpires, etc.) was only a few thousand dollars more.

IT ALL began in 1950 after John, now 70, read about Little League baseball in Saturday Evening Post. He wrote the magazine for details but was too late to start an official league. The first year turned out to be a catch-all program for all ages called the Shorthorn League. Midland, at the time, had a professional team in the Class C Longhorn League.

The first field was on what is now the Dennis the Menace Park south of Borden's, which, in turn, had been a gravel training area for the soldiers during WW II.

Little League baseball officially came to Midland in 1951. "It was still something special," recalls Redfern. "There were only 700 teams in the country. I was president, because I had the rules. Lewis Williams was secretary while Lee Holman, Bob Meyers and Bob Hillin (the dad of the Bobby Hillin who ran cars at Indy on the Longhorn cars logo) were other officers.

"We had our draft and then, I think, came one of the great moments in MJBA history when someone said, 'We have too many boys. We need to add another league'. It wasn't easy for those coaches to give up the talent they had so carefully scouted and drafted and start over again."

MIDLAND was one of the pioneers in expanding the LL program into minor leagues that broadened the opportunities for participation.

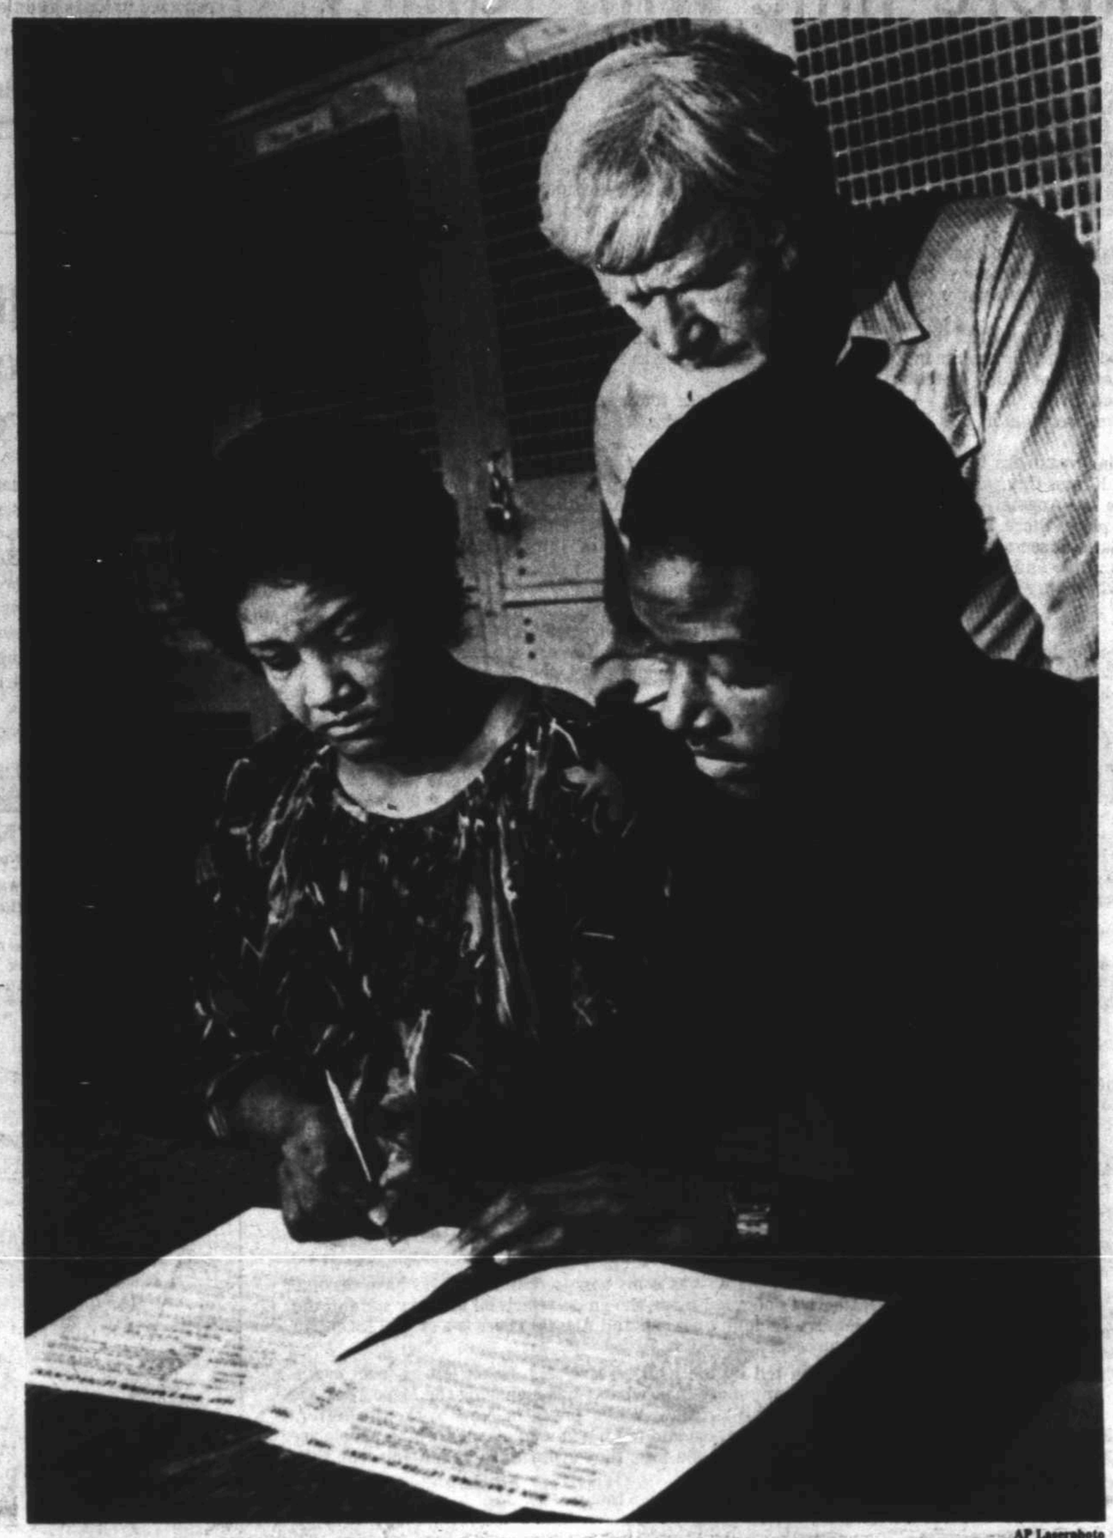

Redfern became a firm friend of Carl Stoltz, the founder of LL baseball. "He was 5-6 and as a kid couldn't lift a bat and you can picture his frustration when all all his children were girls. But he had a vision of scaled down baseball that would give every youngster a chance to play."

In the post war years it swept the land like a wind-fanned prairie fire. By the mid 1950s it was big business and others had elbowed in with their own ideas and pushed Carl out of his game.

"I visited him not long ago in his home at Williamsport, Pa., (where the LL Series is still held), and he holds no grudges or bitterness," John relates.

MIDLAND'S PROGRAM is unique in that it has been handled almost from its inception by the MJBA, which oversees the program, raises the funds and settles disputes. Most communities simply turn it over to the Parks Dept.

4-5A focus on battle for second

CHAD PUERLING
Sports Writer

With Midland Lee holding the District 4-5A girl's title in hand, attention turns to the second place finisher who will get a berth in the state playoffs for the first time in Texas high school history.

Midland High holds a one-game lead over San Angelo and Big Spring for the coveted spot, but the Bulldogs have to play the defending district champion Bobcats Thursday in the season finale.

A Bulldog victory would be the simplest solution to a puzzle that has several twists. With it Midland would walk away with second place and the school's first girls basketball post season invitation.

If San Angelo beats Midland and Big Spring upsets Midland Lee, however , Midland High, San Angelo and Big Spring would then have identical 10-4 records, forcing a coin-flip and a two-game playoff.

ACCORDING TO Gil Bartosh, director of athletics for the Midland Independent School District, the coaches from each school would toss a coin to determine which two schools play the first game and which has a bye.

The winner of the first-round game would then play the team that had the bye. The winner of that game would advance to the playoffs.

Shirley Stephenson, Midland Lee's head coach, will be doing her part to avoid a three-way tie when the Rebels travel to Big Spring.

"I think it would be real nice for Midland to have two representatives in the playoffs," she said. "It would be great for Midland and for our programs."

If San Angelo and Lee win, Big Spring will be eliminated, the Bulldogs and Bobcats will have identicle records and will have to play each other one more time.

JANE YOUNG, head coach at Midland High, is hoping she doesn't need to rely on her sister to win a game.

"I hope we can eliminate all of that," Young said refering to the playoff confusion. "All we have to do is get out their and get with it."

In the first meeting between the two schools the Bobcats eeked out a two-point victory after leading 28-17 at the half in San Angelo.

"We're playing better now than the first time we played San Angelo," Young said.

Asked if she had planned any changes for the Bobcats Young said, "I guarantee we're going to press." Nothing new for the Lady Bulldogs, but then she added, "I hope they'll be pressing too."

In the other season close-outs, Odessa Permian (7-6) will tangle with Abilene Cooper (4-9) and Abilene High (0-13) will have its best chance for a district win as the Eagles face 1-12 Odessa High.

SWC's newest coaches prove they can haul in big catches

By The Associated Press

Texas A&M Coach Jackie Sherrill and Southern Methodist Coach Bobby Collins haven't been around the Southwest Conference long, but they proved Wednesday they can recruit.

Cotton Bowl champion Southern Methodist and Sherrill's Texas Aggies bagged the league's biggest sack of schoolboy football bluechips on national signing day, with 2,000-yard running back Jeff Atkins making Collins' day complete.

SMU landed four Parade Magazine High School All-Americans, including Fort Worth Eastern Hills' Atkins, who signed late in the day after worrying Collins and his coaches half to death.

"To put one of his caliber on our class at the end of the day, makes this an excellent year," Collins said.

"He kind of topped it off. We had to be concerned because we hadn't talked to him since Sunday. We didn't know what to expect but we continued to believe he was coming until he told us otherwise."

COLLINS SAID when he sees Atkins "I'm going to hug his neck. He's the type of ruunning back you look for in the I. With our two graduating (Craig James and Eric Dickerson), he's the type we needed to recruit. He's one of the finest in the country."

Collins added "No doubt winning the Southwest Conference and playing in the Cotton Bowl was a big plus. It kept us in the news. I am very happy. We helped ourselves in areas we needed."

The Aggies landed the top two quarterbacks in Texas in Jay Hess of Eastland and Craig Stump of Port Arthur Jefferson. Hess and Stump made every national bluechip list.

SMU signed defensive lineman Terrance Mann of Detroit Cooley (Michigan) High School, tight end Albert Reese of Temple, and linebacker David Stanley of Angleton, first team schoolboy All-Americans, and then finally Atkins.

Also signing with SMU were Class 5A all-state fullback-linebacker Jerry Ball of champion Beaumont West Brook, and bluechip running back-wide receiver Ron Morris of Cooper.

TEXAS DID score by signing Edwin Simmons, the highly sought running back from Hawkins, and stealing James Lott, a bluechip defensive back from Refugio, away from the Mustangs.

Simmons rushed for 2,935 yards and 38 touchdowns last year.

"I decided in late January that I wanted to go to Texas," said Simmons. "The coaches are low key and won't holler at you. ... They've also got an offensive line that is awesome."

Texas A&M also went out of state, signing all-state defensive end Rod Saddler of Columbus, Ga., and the top running back in Louisiana, Keith Woodside of Vidalia.

Lineman Jay Fuller of Conroe, courted by most schools in the nation and a solid bluechip, joined the Aggies.

Woodside had 2,00 yards rushing despite missing two games with injuries.

Running back Rod Bernstine of Bryan, who rushed for more than 1,000 yards and was on the Dallas Times Herald and Texas Football Magazine bluechip list, also went with A&M.

"The key was that we had a whole year to organize and put our recruiting policies into operation," said a pleased Sherrill. "Our recruiting has been very good. These additions should get us going in the right direction."

'Taste Greats' play ball vs. 'Less Fillings'

LOS ANGELES (AP) — "Boom Boom" Geoffrion has a hole in his baseball mitt, and Rodney Dangerfield takes the mound with the score 15-1 between the "Taste Greats" and the "Less Fillings."

It's another epic episode of the Miller Lite "beer nuts" filmed in Encino, but it's not just another beer commercial. It's the eighth annual Lite Reunion.

Twenty-five of the 35-celebrity troupe, who have been making the screwball suds pitches since 1974, participated in the action Tuesday on a rain-sodden playground, worthy of Mudville. The 60-second ad, 90th in a series for Miller Brewing Co. by New York-based Backer & Spielvogel Advertising, will be coming soon to a TV screen near you.

Geoffrion, late of hockey, is on third base when the ball thrown by ex-major leaguer Bob Uecker zooms through the hole in his mitt and sails into left field. The game promises to grow longer when Dangerfield, the comedian who "can't get no respect," is called to pitch for the winning team.

Mystery writer Mickey Spillane is there in uniform, except of course for his private eye's fedora. His blonde is with him. Ex-footballers Ray Nitschke and Dick Butkus squabble about who was the toughest linebacker.

And re-re-hired New York Yankee manager Billy Martin, formerly of the Oakland A's, has on yet another uniform.

Chaps aren't lacking incentive against Amarillo

Badgers put only blemish on MC's 1982 Conference record, 71-65

Midland College may have a berth in the Region V tournament locked up and a firm three-game lead in the Western Junior College Conference race, but the Chaparrals won't lack for incentive at the Langford Chaparral Center at 8 p.m. tonight.

Amarillo College comes to the Tall City and the only thing that blemishes that glossy 12-1 WJCC record is that 71-65 loss to the Badgers at Amarillo last month.

If that isn't enough, the last WJCC team to beat Midland at the Center was Amarillo, way back in Dec. 10, 1981. It was the lone league defeat suffered by MC last season as the Chaps won their second straight conference title. The score in that one was 91-86.

Prior to that, the Badgers had beaten MC in the finals of the Amarillo Classic, 70-64, so AC has administered three of Midland's last six defeats.

The Badgers could revive a flicker of hope for a conference title by beating Midland tonight. Such an eventuality would reduce Midland's lead to two.

AC knocked off New Mexico Junior College Monday to remain tied for second. The Badgers are 18-6 for the season.

Monday night in Roswell, Midland won a "no-time-kept" decision over New Mexico Military Institute, 82-55. The scoreboard clock didn't work and the horn sounded at irregular intervals. So during the first half, a hand clock was used, but it didn't stop for anything—timeouts, fouls, out-of-bounds or substitutions. The ball was in play, by best estimates, only 11½ of the 20 minutes.

Six-six Chester Smith pumped in 32 points to pace the Chaps while Spud Webb had 13 points and Jerome Crowe 10.

MC faces another tough test Monday when the Chaps travel to Big Spring to play Howard College. MC is 0-1 against Howard in non-conference games and 1-0 against the Hawks in WJCC competition.

CHAPSTYQUES—Frank Phillips defeated Howard, 105-103, in 3 overtimes Saturday to seriously cripple the Hawks' hopes of making the Region V tournament. The loss came at Big Spring, especially following, as it did, on the heels of an 83-71 loss to Western Texas...In another shocker Clarendon beat Amarillo, 78-70...Robert Dickerson, third best scorer in the WJCC with a 21.5 average, will lead the Badgers into Midland. Dickerson also is the Badgers' top rebounder with 8.2 a game...Amarillo's Les Bolden is second in field goal percentage with .638 while Chester Smith, averaging 18.8 a game, is third at .591...Chester and Spud are both over 80 per cent from the line...

Tickets for the Region V National Junior College Athletic Association tournament at the Langford Chaparral Center March 3-5 go on sale at 7 p.m. tonight at the Chap Center box office.

The top four teams in the WJCC will qualify for the tournament along with four teams from the Eastern Conference. With a three-game lead in the WJCC, defending national champion Midland looks like a good bet to be there.

Reserve seat tickets are $12 each. General admission is $12 and individual game tickets are $4. Seven games will be played in four sesssions, afternoon and night on March 3, night on March 4 and the championship the night of March 5.

The tournament winner will play a bi-regional game for the right to go on to the NJCAA at Hutchinson, Kan., March 15-19.

Following tonight's game, regional tournament tickets will be on sale at Bill Williams Tire Center and the Chaparral Center.

Michaels retires from coaching to spend more time with family

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

Last week at Honolulu, New York Jets Coach Walt Michaels sat down for an in-depth interview with Larry Fox of the New York Daily News. He discussed the Jets' roller coaster National Football League season, the peaks and valleys that had taken the team one step away from the Super Bowl, an adventure that ended in the mud at Miami.

The interview concluded with Michaels saying, "At least we're winning. I'm not going to jump off a bridge after all these years ... we'll be drafting 24th. All what's in my mind now is what we can do in 1983."

Does that sound like a man who's getting ready to retire?

Michaels dropped that shocker Wednesday, and the next man to wear the Jets' coaching cap — peak pointed in the wrong direction since that is his fashion, headset planted firmly in place — is almost certain to be the club's offensive coordinator, Joe Walton.

Walton was a finalist for head coaching vacancies in Atlanta, where the job went to Dan Henning, and Kansas City, which hired John Mackovic. He was on the list of the Los Angeles Rams, who are hunting for somebody to pick up the pieces there. He is a man who is clearly in demand, and sooner or later, it seemed inevitable that Walton would walk away. That's understandable, because every assistant coach wants to be a boss somewhere. Now, Walton won't have to walk very far.

THE JETS would have been wounded by his departure. Not fatally, perhaps, but wounded nevertheless. He is credited with the blossoming of Richard Todd into a full-fledged NFL quarterback and the development of an offensive philosophy that made full use of weapons like the speedy wide receivers, Wesley Walker and Lam Jones, and league rushing champion Freeman McNeil.

Fox had asked Michaels about coaching burnout, that malady which brought down Dick Vermeil in Philadelphia and had Bill Walsh talking about leaving the sidelines in San Francisco. "What's that?" Michaels said, "A new word? I don't think it's anything."

Yet, three days after that interview appeared, Michaels released a prepared statement which, although it didn't use that fancy new phrase, suggested that he might be burned out.

"I have spent 32 years in this game and I have enjoyed them all. But in that time, I have never taken a vacation and never spent enough time with my family," it said. "Now I think it is time that I should. So I am retiring as head coach of the New York Jets."

NOW HERE is a team knocking on the Super Bowl door, equipped with the talent to peek over the top of the mountain it has been climbing for so long. And now the coach decides he needs time with his family? When the Jets were struggling to 3-11, 8-8, 8-8 and 4-12 seasons in Michaels' first four years and the pressure was on the coach in enormous quantities, he apparently didn't feel that pressing need for a break. Now, he does. Strange.

"I wish my assistant coaches, the players and the rest of the organization and the next head coach good luck in the future," Michaels' statement continued.

Then he added two more thoughts which were interesting.

"I am proud to say that I leave a much better team than the one I took over six years ago. The Jets are a team that I am proud to have personally chosen and developed."

Personally.

You can't take Torre out of the City

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

In Joe Torre's case, you can take the man out of the city but you can't take the city out of the man.

"I always enjoy coming back to New York," said the swarthy onetime manager of baseball's New York Mets, now head of the braintrust for the rich and pennant contending Atlanta Braves.

"I've still got strong roots here — a couple of brothers and a couple of sisters, a lot of pals going back to my Brooklyn boyhood days and baseball contacts that I still maintain.

"I've sold my restaurant but still do an ad for Ponte's, owned by a longtime friend, and keep certain commercial ties.

"But Atlanta is a great city. It's good to be with a winner. I am excited about the coming season."

TORRE BLEW into town with a snowstorm this week, a feathered cowboy hat sitting jauntily on his head, a fur-collared coat protecting him from the cutting winds and an eight-inch cigar sending up smoke like a factory chimney.

"No, I never have chewed tobacco as most of the guys do," he said, disdaining one of the game's most revered traditions. "I just smoke cigars."

In fact, Torre is the national spokesman for Friends of the Cigar, visiting key cities in behalf of the weed's marketing association.

"My brother, Frank, got me started when I was 19," he added. "I smoke half a dozen a day, maybe more when I am frustrated. I go crazy when I can't smoke in the dugout."

FRUSTRATIONS ARE coming fewer and farther between for the old National League slugger now that he has fled the five years of futility with the Mets and found a haven in the land of "Gone With the Wind," where TV tycoon Ted Turner's dollars cascade like a waterfall.

In his first year at Atlanta, he brought the Braves out of the gate with a 13-game winning streak, hit a mid-season slump, then rallied to gain the playoffs and challenge for the National League pennant, losing to the world champion St. Louis Cardinals but gaining Manager of the Year honors.

"No telling what would have happened if that first game (against the Cards) hadn't been rained out," he said. "We had Phil Niekro ready. When the game was postponed, the Cards took heart, knowing they wouldn't have to face Niekro twice."

Niekro is the 43-year-old ace of what was perhaps the softest bellied pitching corps in the league, now buttressed with free agent signings.

"Niekro was the only pitcher on our staff that didn't have to go to the bullpen," Torre said. "Our first three picks in the free agent draft were Floyd Bannister, Pete Falcone and Terry Forster. We got two of them, Forster and Falcone, and maybe it was a plus that we missed on Bannister (who went to the Chicago White Sox).

"The $6.6 million he was asking helped us keep key guys who otherwise might have got away."

THESE INCLUDED fence-busting Dale Murphy, recently signed for $8 million, and Bob Horner, $5.5 million, not to mention the $20 million or more used to renew contracts of Niekro, catcher Bruce Benedict and infielder Glenn Hubbard and pluck Forster and Falcone.

The Braves have one of the highest payrolls in baseball, matching if not exceeding the gold dust ledgers of George Steinbrenner's New York Yankees and Gene Autry's California Angels.

"Ted Turner is very intent on having a winner," Torre said. "He keeps close tab on everything that's going on but he's not what you would call a meddler. He is busy making a success of his TV operations (CNN, CNN2 and Super Station WTBS)."

Torre is aware — as is his boss — that the Braves have become America's adopted team, shown on television in every state in the country, including Hawaii and Alaska. There is a special incentive to succeed.

"I can tell by the mail," Torre said. "I get letters from everywhere, many more than when I was managing the Mets. They are also different in tone. When I was in New York, the letters tended to be critical and tell me how to manage. These people are very loyal. When you lose, they sympathize. When you win, they cheer you on.

"You can't let people like that down."

USFL looking to form union

WASHINGTON (AP) — Efforts are under way to organize a players union in the new United States Football League.

Representatives of a group called the United States Football League Players Association, Inc. have visited seven of the league's training camps.

Ron Baron, a New York attorney with the group, said in a story in today's Washington Post that response from players has been favorable. He said that 30 percent of the players on five of the teams visited had returned authorization cards.

Ramsey to sign with USFL's L.A. Express

LOS ANGELES (AP) — UCLA quarterback Tom Ramsey will announce that he has signed a contract with the Los Angeles Express of the United States Football League, the Los Angeles Times reported in today's editions.

Meanwhile, the Express called a news conference for today to announce what a spokesman called "a major signing."

Ramsey, UCLA's starting quarterback for most of the last three seasons, led the Bruins to a 10-1-1 record this past season, including a 24-14 victory over Michigan in the Rose Bowl.

Ramsey was a fifth-round draft selection of the Express, which opens its first season March 6.

Ramsey was the nation's top-ranked passer this past season. He completed 209 of 366 passes for 2,986 yards and was intercepted just 10 times.

Hawaiian Open short of players

HONOLULU (AP) — The $325,000 Hawaiian Open was to start today with a less-than-full complement of players, marking the first time in many years the PGA Tour had failed to fill the field for one of its events.

Three more players — Jim Thorpe, Tom Shaw and Bill Calfee — withdrew from the tournament Wednesday, leaving the event with 141 participants, three less than standard starting field of 144.

"I can't remember," Jack Tuthill, Tournament Director for the PGA Tour said when asked the last previous time a Tour event had gone with a short field. "Maybe '61. I don't know," said Tuthill, who has been on the Tour staff since 1960.

Thorpe and Shaw both told tournament officials by telephone they had injuries and would not be able to compete. Calfee, listed as the ninth alternate, did not come to Hawaii.

Nine players withdrew earlier in the week and the complete list of alternates was exhausted. When Thorpe, Shaw and Calfee pulled out, the tournament was forced to go with a short field.

"I think you'll see it happen at some other places," said former U.S. Open champ Hubert Green. He pointed to a regulation, which came into effect this year with the advent of the all-exempt Tour, requiring players to commit for a tournament no later than the Tuesday of the preceding week.

Houston closing in on first loop title

By The Associated Press

Houston Coach Guy Lewis says he can tell you in about six weeks how good his sixth-ranked Cougars are compared to the 1967-1968 outfit that won 31 in a row.

"If this team gets to the Final Four, I might compare 'em," Lewis said Wednesday night after the Cougars took another big step toward their first Southwest Conference basketball title with an 85-68 victory over Southern Methodist in Moody Coliseum.

Houston increased its SWC record to 10-0 and earned its 14th consecutive victory, the longest since the afore-'mentioned 1967-68 team's streak.

In other games Wednesday night, Texas Tech surged past SMU into sole possession of fifth place with a 67-61 victory over Texas Christian, the Red Raiders' 11th consecutive win over the Horned Frogs in Lubbock; and the Texas Aggies kept a grip on fourth place with a 51-45 victory over Rice.

Forward Michael Young scored 20 of his game-high 26 points in the second half as the Cougars upped their overall standing to 19-2.

HOUSTON HOSTS TCU Saturday. The Horned Frogs dropped to 7-3 in the conference with the loss to Tech but still own sole possession of third place.

"That was a very big win for us. This was the best team we have beaten this year," Tech Coach Gerald Myers said.

"In the first half, at one point, we played the best we have played all year. It probably was our best game, period. We had to have that kind of game to beat TCU," Myers added.

The Tech coach said he felt the Horned Frogs were still trying to recoup from the loss of starter Jeff Baker, sidelined because of a thumb injury in a practice incident last week.

Tech took a 10-point halftime lead, then sank 12 free throws in the final three minutes to hold off TCU.

"They outhustled us, took it to us, and outshot us. We were very flat and we didn't seem to have any quickness. Gerald's kids played awfully well," TCU Coach Jim Killingsworth said.

RICE COACH Tommy Suitts, whose team last week picked up its first SWC victory, smelled victory again Wednesday night.

"I thought we still were going to win down to the last two minutes. But they got the lead back about two minutes too soon or it could have been us ahead," Suitts said.

"What really cost us the game was our poor shooting in the early going when we were doing everything well but just not hitting. A&M has a fine team and nobody but the top teams have beaten them. If they can beat TCU this round, they have a shot at third place."

A&M Coach Shelby Metcalf said the Owls gave his players a scare.

"We were ready to play tonight, but we were nervous. They gave us everything we wanted," Metcalf said. "They're very well disciplined and aggressive. They've really improved over the first time we played them. They block out as well as any team we've played."

Connors, Mayer winners in Canada

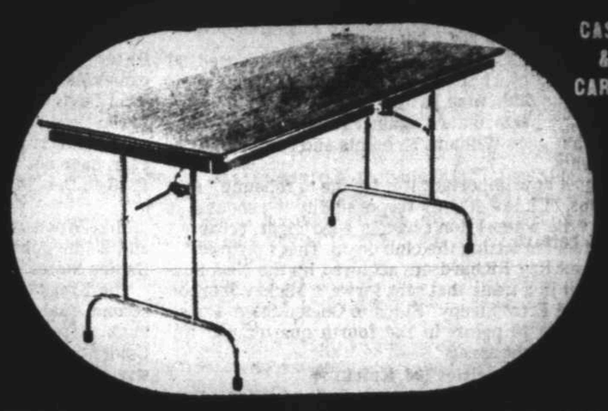

TORONTO (AP) — Jimmy Connors defeated Vitas Gerulaitis 6-0, 6-1 and Gene Mayer, a last-minute replacement for defending champion Ivan Lendl, downed Brian Gottfried 6-2, 6-0 in opening matches of the $250,000 Molson Tennis Challenge Tuesday night.

Sweden's Bjorn Borg was another top-name player to pull out of the eight-man event. Lendl failed to show because of a strained right shoulder and Borg had an infected little finger on his left hand.

In other preliminary matches Tuesday night, Peter McNamara topped Mats Wilander of Sweden 6-1, 3-6, 6-3, and Peter McNamara of Australia surprised American Gene Mayer, 6-3, 6-2.

Midland's operation envy of others

Midland's operation has become the envy of others. As a result, Redfern had a standard speech he gave in other communities on Midland's operation and the "four problem areas" of Little League baseball.

In fact, the University of Texas asked the MJBA's Redfern how it ran its program for its Adult Education program.

"One of the reasons for the success of the program over the years is that we have consistently attracted a good group of men, although it was only by chance the first time," says John.

Whenever the MJBA became bogged down in clashing ideaologies and personalties, Redfern said the one thing that resolved all disputes was the persisting philosophy over the years..."What's best for the boys."

SOME OF the past commissioners, overseeing the entire span of the program, were Max Christensen, Richard Sax, Larry Melzer, John Josephy, Fred Riley, Alton Brown, Carl Schreiner, Ed Blackaller, Bateman, Ed Stitt and Frank Taylor.

Other key people down through the years were Jack Cartwright, long time equipment manager who devised the method of accounting used by the MJBA. Curt Inman was a key promoter of money for many years. "At the end of the year, we were always short and usually wound up borrowing from the bank to pay off our bills."

One of the methods employed to help bail out the perennially "under water" MJBA was the Dad's Club, first organized in 1953. At $25 per Dad, the $3,000 to $4,000 raised was a life saver and remains one today.

Another problem of the early years was Jim Owens, who later went on to become a three-sport star at Midland High. "He was six feet tall and we carried his birth certificate where ever we went, especially in post season play."

The MJBA became Incorporated in 1954 and the directors that year included Redfern, Bill Kerr, Perry Pickett and George Bush. "Bush was a good baseball player at Yale, captained the team, but was a good-field, no hit first baseman," recalls John. And, who knows, it may have helped lead him where he is today.

FINANCIALLY, the turning point was the year "we decided to raise money by selling 10,000 chocolate bars," says Bateman. "It almost caused a rebellion among the managers. We did pretty well. Sold 3,000. But it was something we never tried again." Perhaps, the episode and the fear it would be suggested again had something to do with it.

"For one thing, we don't undertaking money raising ventures where someone other the MJBA shares in the money. And, the other, have you ever seen what the tenacious grip of a 9-year-old can do to a chocolate bar on a hot summer day?"

For Redfern, "The greatest satisfaction comes from seeing it (the MJBA) persist, especially after one of the early leaders in the program told me, it 'would never last'."

Williams adds hot shooting to rebounding in Nets win

By The Associated Press

Buck Williams considers himself a virtual blue-collar working man among National Basketball Association players.

"I'm just a man trying to make a living," says the New Jersey Nets' rugged forward.

The most important part of his job is rebounding. When he produces a high point total, as he did in Wednesday night's 105-90 victory over the Indiana Pacers, why, that's just a bonus.

Along with his 16 rebounds, Williams scored 26 points on 10 of 11 shooting to help the surging Nets win for the 20th time in the last 25 games. Coupled with a fine performance against Atlanta the previous night, that gave Williams 55 points and 32 rebounds in two nights.

"I know how important it is for me to rebound," said Williams. "I know it's my responsibility to rebound. It bothers me when I don't have a good night, because I really feel I'm letting the club down. That's my role."

Michael Ray Richardson, acquired by the Nets Sunday night in a trade that sent forward Mickey Johnson and guard Eric "Sleepy" Floyd to Golden State, scored eight of his 13 points in the fourth quarter and finished with eight assists.

Celtics 106, Knicks 96

Larry Bird scored 33 points, including nine in a two-minute span late in the third quarter, to lead Boston over New York. Boston snapped a two-game losing streak while New York had its five-game winning streak broken.

Boston opened a 68-55 lead midway through the third quarter, but the Knicks scored the next six points to close the gap to seven with 3:54 left in the period.However, the Celtics then erupted for a 15-4 spurt, led by Bird's nine points, to create an 83-65 advantage, their biggest of the game.

76ers 106, Hawks 93

Julius Erving scored 27 points, made nine assists and had nine rebounds to lead Philadelphia over Atlanta.Moses Malone scored 18 points and collected 13 rebounds for the 76ers, who never trailed in racking up their 42nd victory against seven losses.

Hawks Coach Kevin Loughery was thrown out of the game on his second technical foul with 6:26 remaining. Loughery now leads the league's coaches with 18 technicals.

Cavaliers 104, Bucks 94

World B. Free scored 12 of his 32 points in the fourth quarter and Cliff Robinson tossed in 30 as Cleveland beat Milwaukee. The victory was Cleveland's second straight — only the second time the Cavaliers, 11-39, have won two in a row this season.

Cleveland led by as many as 12 points in the third period before Milwaukee rallied to within 74-72 at the end of the quarter behind 12 points from Sidney Moncrief. Then Free hit six shots and Robinson added 10 points in the fourth quarter to keep the Cavaliers ahead.

THE NBA

Mavericks 122, Pistons 113

Jay Vincent scored 29 points to lead Dallas over Detroit for the Mavericks' 10th victory in 12 games.Mark Aguirre added 24 points for Dallas and Brad Davis hit a season-high 21 points as the Mavericks raised their record to 25-24.

The Mavericks, who were 16-33 at the same point last year, have not been over the .500 mark since they were 11-10 on Dec. 14.

Kings 103, Warriors 98

Mike Woodson came off the bench to score 21 points, and Eddie Johnson added 20 to lift Kansas City over Golden State.

The Kings led by as many as 18 points early in the second quarter, but blew the lead and had to come back. After a free throw by Mickey Johnson gave Golden State the lead at 96-95, the Kings ripped off six straight points in the next 63 seconds to take the lead for good. Steve Johnson had four points in the rally.

Denver 134, Seattle 125

Kiki Vandeweghe scored 37 points and Dan Issel had 31 to lead Denver over Seattle, continuing the Sonics' woes on the road.After winning 10 of their first 12 games on the road, the Sonics have now lost 12 of their last 13, and are 27-23 after opening the season with a dozen straight victories.

The Nuggets led the entire second half, but had to overcome a sensational performance by reserve guard Mark Radford in the fourth quarter.Radford, averaging just 3.8 points a game for the season, scored 18 of his career-high 22 points in the last period and almost brought the Sonics back single-handedly.

Lakers 113, Jazz 99

Kareem Abdul-Jabbar scored 16 points, including the 29,000th point of his NBA career, as Los Angeles routed Utah. Abdul-Jabbar, the second-leading scorer in NBA history, needed only four points to reach the 29,000-mark.

When he got his fourth point early in the game, play was stopped and he was given the basketball. The crowd of 13,656 at the Forum gave him a standing ovation.

Abdul-Jabbar also had game-high totals of 13 rebounds and eight blocked shots as the Lakers won their fourth game in a row and their 13th straight home game. Los Angeles is 22-2 at home this season, best in the league.

Arguello plans to keep promise

Alexis Arguello plans to retire from boxing in December to keep a promise to his 10-year-old son, even if it means giving up his goal of becoming the first fighter to ever win titles in four different weight classes. "I will probably have four more fights this year. In December, I will make the announcement. And when I quit, I'm not going to come back one year later like some other guys. I just want to quit once and for all. I've already promised my son that."...

Texas Rangers owner Eddie Chiles on Wednesday fired marketing director Jim Medick and his staff, the Fort Worth Star-Telegram has learned. The terminations of Medick and his three assistants, Al Charnish, Harry Campbell, and Diane Regian, come on the heels of the resignation of business executive vice president Sam Meason last week. Chiles would not confirm the report but it was learned that Larry Schmittou, president of the Nashville Sounds minor league baseball club, would be hired as the Rangers' new director of marketing. The change was partially promoted by the fact that the club's season ticket sales are running more than a 1,000 behind last year's total with opening day less than two months away...

Stress factor knocks Tabb out of remaining indoor season

NEW YORK (AP) — Mary Decker Tabb, the nation's premier woman's distance runner and multi-event record holder, will miss the remainder of the indoor track season because of a stress fracture of the left ankle, she said Wednesday.

"I could run, but I'm not looking just to run," Tabb said by phone from Eugene, Ore. "I hope that doesn't sound selfish. I just want to be able to run up to my capabilities."

Tabb, unbeaten on the track since 1980, had been scheduled to compete in two more indoor races this season — in the U.S. Olympic Invitational Saturday night at The Meadowlands in East Rutherford, N.J. and the in Michelob Invitational Feb. 18 at San Diego.

"It's a hard decision," said Tabb, who holds world indoor bests in the women's 1,000 yards, 1,500 meters, mile, 2,000 meters and 3,000 meters.

She said she has been unable to train properly this season because of the injury, although she has competed — the last time in the Dallas Times Herald meet last Saturday night.

However, her times have not been close to world bests, and that has been distressing, she said.

"I can't see them (the times) improving until the injury gets better," she said. "And the only way the injury will get better is if I give it some rest.

"I don't want to get a serious injury," added Tabb, who has been plagued by injuries throughout her career.

Sam Houston 75, S.F. Austin 61

HUNTSVILLE, Texas — Sam Houston's Roger Harris poured in 29 points as the Bearkats beat the Stephen F. Austin Lumberjacks 75-61 in a Lone Star Conference game Wednesday night.

The victory lifted Sam Houston, 14-8 on the season and 6-4 in LSC play, to a second-place tie with SFA behind league-leading Southwest Texas State.

SFA dropped to 13-9 and 6-4.

Lamar 62, Arkansas St. 47

BEAUMONT, Texas — Junior guard Tom Sewell scored 16 points as Lamar easily downed Arkansas St. 62-47 in a Southland Conference basketball game Wednesday night.

Senior forward Brian Kellybrew added 12 points as the Cardinals claimed their 64th consecutive home court win.

Lamar leads the SLC with a 6-1 mark and is 16-5 on the season.

Southern Mississippi 59, Pan American 45

EDINBURG, Texas — Curtis Green sank five straight long goals during the second half, and his 24 points rallied Southern Mississippi past Pan American 59-45 Wednesday night.

USM's Golden Eagles evened their record at 10-10. Pan Am fell to 4-16.

The lowdown on rent-a-car rates in Texas.

Every time you rent from Hertz, you get great rates and a great gift.

Whether you're traveling deep in the heart of Texas, or riding along its coastline, one of the most economical ways to get around the wide open spaces is in a Hertz rent-a-car.

With Hertz's Low-Down™ rates, you can rent any subcompact or compact for $15.99 a day on the weekends. Or a fuel efficient standard shift subcompact for $109 a week. Or pay more, and get a larger car. And at Hertz, there's never a charge for mileage.

And from now through June 30, 1983, you get your choice of a top quality gift every time you rent a compact or larger car from Hertz. Select anything from Cartier leather accessories to an RCA 19" color TV or a Texas Instruments home computer depending on the number of times you rent. And this offer is good whether you rent on a weekday or on a weekend at participating Hertz locations. Contact Hertz for details.

You don't need advanced reservations to take advantage of Low-Down rates, but all cars are subject to availability. Low-Down rates and no charge for mileage are available at all corporate locations in Texas. Gas is not included. And these rates are non-discountable. There may be a drop-off charge on some one-way rentals.

For more information and complete details call your travel consultant. Or Hertz at 1-800-654-3131. Because when it comes to renting a car in Texas, there's only one lone star. Hertz.

Cyr comes in to trigger Hawks to 5-4 victory over Devils

By The Associated Press

Denis Cyr will take his playing time when he can get it with the Chicago Black Hawks — and it doesn't matter where he sees action: left wing, right wing or center.

He's usually brought into a hockey game to "get our offense on track," as Chicago Coach Orval Tessier puts it.

Like Wednesday night, when he came in to trigger the Black Hawks to a 5-4 National Hockey League victory over the New Jersey Devils. Cyr scored the tying goal and then set up the eventual game-winner.

Billy Gardner, like Cyr, was involved in a pair of second-period goals. But it was Cyr "who turned the tide in the nick of time," according to Tessier.

Cyr's goal, his sixth of the season, came after Curt Fraser dug the puck out from behind the New Jersey net and passed in front to the onrushing Cyr, who wristed in a 14-footer.

After Steve Larmer had put the Hawks ahead midway in the final period, Cyr set up Fraser for the deciding goal. It was Fraser's goal, according to veteran New Jersey goalie Glenn Resch, "that really did us in."

THE NHL

"I saw Fraser take a pass from Cyr but he was falling to the ice and he lunged at the puck," Resch said. "I anticipated the move, but when Fraser lunged a second time he upset my concentration and he pushed the puck between my legs."

Larmer's rebound shot from point blank range midway in the final period broke a 3-3 tie and 66 seconds later, Fraser added his goal to lift the Black Hawks to their sixth straight win.

Elsewhere in the NHL, it was Vancouver 6, Pittsburgh 2 and Detroit 6, Hartford 5.

Canucks 6, Penguins 2

Doug Halward and Gary Lupul scored power-play goals to key a four-goal rally that lifted Vancouver over Pittsburgh, extending the Penguins' winless streak to 17 games.Pittsburgh has lost 10 straight and is 0-16-1 since a Jan. 1 victory over the New York Islanders.

Halward broke a 2-2 tie at 14:08 of the second period, tapping in a pass from Thomas Gradin. Lupul made it 4-2 at 3:52 of the third period. In addition to his goal, Halward had three assists.

Red Wings 6, Whalers 5

Murray Craven's goal with 6:52 remaining boosted Detroit over Hartford.Craven, lying on the ice in front of the Hartford net, batted at a loose puck and knocked the game-winner past Hartford goalie Mike Veisor. The goal had been set up by John Ogrodnick, who took a pass from Danny Gare in the corner and slid the puck in front of the goal.

The victory was only the fourth in 29 road games for the Red Wings and second in as many tries in Hartford this season. The setback was the fourth in a row for Hartford.

Two of Albuquerque's top players sign with Lobos

By The Associated Press

The University of New Mexico signed 14 high school football players to national letters of intent Wednesday, while New Mexico State received commitments from 25 players, including 21 high school seniors.

Among UNM's recruits were two of the top high school players in Albuquerque this past season. Eldorado quarterback Barry Garrison and Sandia lineman Fred Mady both signed with the Lobos.

The 6-foot-1, 190-pound Garrison passed for more than 1,000 yards this past season while Mady, a 6-foot, 234-pounder, was a two-way standout at Sandia. Both were first team Associated Press All-State selections.

The Lobos also signed two of the top players in Arizona in running back Glenn Rogers and wide receiver Chris Buford.

Rogers was named Arizona's AAA player of the year after rushing for 1,912 yards and 19 touchdowns at Agua Fria High in Phoenix. Buford led Arizona in receiving, averaging 24 yards a catch as a player for Phoenix St. Mary's.

NEW MEXICO State signed four junior college players and 21 from the high school ranks, including five from New Mexico. The five in-state recruits included the Carlsbad twosome of defensive end John McGough and wide receiver Sam Roberson; Eldorado lineman Steve Young, Alamogordo quarterback Val Puglise and Artesia tight end Jeff Mossman.

The 6-foot-4, 225-pound Young was rated one of the top linemen in New Mexico last season. McGough and Roberson were mainstays on a Carlsbad team that reached the quarterfinals of the Class AAAA playoffs. Roberson was the state's leading receiver.

The 6-foot-2, 210-pound Puglise was the offensive leader of the Alamogordo team that got to the state championship game while Mossman, 6-2, 217-pounds, was an All-State player for Class AAA champion Artesia.

Under National Collegiate Athletic Association rules, Wednesday was the first day the players could sign the letters.

Other Lobo recruits included wide receiver Kenneth Whitehead and defensive end Ty Jones both from Detroit; running back Chawn Hunter of Chandler, Ariz.; linebacker Randall Bell of San Antonio, Texas; and tight end Clyde Augustus, of Austin, Texas.

New Mexico also signed linebacker Donnie Gaesaway, of San Diego; David Lollie, a 6-foot-5, 320-pound tackle from Detroit; Joe Bibbo, a kicker from Chula Vista, Calif. and Tom Bradford, a center from Atlanta, Ga.

JUNIOR COLLEGE players joining New Mexico next season will be tight end Richard Cross from Laney Junior College, Oakland, Calif.; Jom Gomes, defensive lineman, from San Jose City College, Calif.; Tim Quinn, defensive lineman, from Saddleback Junior College, Mission Viejo, Calif.; and linebacker Frank Reina and defensive back Brice Bell, both from Foothills Junior College, Los Altos, Calif.

New Mexico State's other high school recruits included Mike Cade, running back-defensive back, from El Paso, Texas; Jon Dickens, offensive lineman, from Glendale, Ariz.; Dennis Owens, cornerback, Tempe, Ariz.; Jonathan Roberts, offensive lineman, Chandler, Ariz.; Joe Rowley, running back, Tucson, Ariz.; Eric Hellebrandt, defensive tackle, Covina, Calif.; Matt Kostrezewski, defensive tackle, Lansing, Mich.; Rodney Fields, linebacker, Dallas; Bobby Kinder, linebacker, Dallas; Curtis Shivers, defensive end, Lubbock, Texas; John Stewart, running back, Houston, Texas; James Terry, defensive end, Garland, Texas; Jerry Thomas, defensive lineman,, Slaton, Texas; Carey White, defensive tackle, Houston; Jason Young, quarterback, Richardson, Texas, and Calvin Henry, cornerback, Dallas.

The junior college players that will transfer to New Mexico State include place-kicker Vito Cangmi of San Jose, Calif.; Dewrell Jackson, cornerback, from Garland, Texas; Gary Isackson, wide receiver, from La Mesa, Calif.; and Greg St. Clair, defensive tackle from Millbrae, Calif.

BUSINESS BRIEFS

Installment debt growing

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans took on $2.19 billion more in new installment debt than they paid off in December, marking the second strong credit-spending month in a row.

Both months were paced by auto loans.

Total debt outstanding had risen $2.52 billion in November after declining slightly in October.

The December gain helped push outstanding consumer credit at the end of 1982 to $343.4 billion, an increase of about 3 percent over 1981, the Federal Reserve Board said Wednesday.

There had been an increase of over 6 percent in 1981 and less than 1 percent in 1980, a year in which spending was held down by credit controls as well as recession.

Consumers actually took on a bit less in new debt during December than during November — $30.5 billion compared with $31.6 billion — but the new figure was still much higher than those for most months during the long recession.

Though declining slightly, December's new loans were still far above the month's $28.3 billion in repayments of old loans. Repayments had totaled $29.1 billion in November.

More foreclosures expected

WASHINGTON (AP) — A depressed farm economy probably will force the federal government to foreclose on another 800 to 900 producers, Agriculture Secretary John Block said.

There were 844 foreclosures on producers holding federal farm loans during 1982, triple the number posted a year earlier, and Block said another 6,000 producers with federal loans left farming last year "for a variety of reasons, not only because they failed."

But Block, testifying Wednesday before a packed House Agriculture Committee, said the Farmers Home Administration, USDA's credit arm, has rescheduled, reamortized or deferred loan repayments for 40,000 of the most financially strapped FmHA borrowers to keep them operating during 1983.

Those efforts, he argued, prove that the government is fulfilling its promise to go the "extra mile" to provide farm credit to any producer with a reasonable chance of surviving the current extended slump in market prices. They also should dispel the need for the kind of moratorium on FmHA loan repayment that is being proposed by farmbelt congressmen.

FmHA, which holds about 14 percent of all farm credit, is the lender of last resort, serving the highest risk farmers who can no longer qualify for credit from commercial sources.

Plan to increase jobs studied

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan says his administration is studying plans to increase employment by speeding up scheduled government construction projects.

The president's spokesman added that no decisions had been made.

The president said Tuesday that government agencies and departments had been told to accelerate the work.

But on Wednesday, he said "we are looking at" such steps. His spokesman said Reagan "has made no decision to proceed."

Reagan, in a third day of interviews with journalists from outside Washington, said about the status of the administration's jobs program, "What we do have in our budget already ... is that we are looking at all the agencies and departments of government that have already built into the budget programs of construction, of maintenance, of upkeep and so forth that they need and with the idea of accelerating those and wherever they have them scheduled, doing them now."

He said that it was "pretty hard for a president to say" when the specifics of the program would be determined, but said his representatives were talking to members of Congress about it.

Air fare war takes new twist

MIAMI (AP) — In the latest twist in the airline fare wars, Pan American World Airways says it is offering a $99 fare on transcontinental and other routes while allowing a similar fare between Florida and the Northeast to expire today.

The carrier unveiled a mixed bag of $99 fares between New York and several points, including California, many central U.S. cities and Bermuda.

The new fares take effect Friday and are generally valid through early March to mid-April, depending on the market. One hitch is that seats may be limited on many flights, Pan American said Wednesday.

Miami-based Eastern has already announced $99 fares with various restrictions to several cities beyond today.

The other major carriers did not make announcements Wednesday but have said they will remain competitive in the markets that affect them.

The end of the South Florida-New York discounts means substantial increases on those flights beginning Friday.

Pan American had started the last round of fare cuts when it lowered the seat prices between many U.S. cities to $99 during the slack January period. Its competitors were critical of the discounts, saying no one could make money, but they quickly matched them.

GM recalling 1980 X-cars

DETROIT (AP) — General Motors Corp. will recall 240,000 of the 320,000 front-wheel-drive X-cars that the federal government was investigating for possible brake defects.

In a statement five days before a government-ordered hearing on the brake problems, the company said letters will be sent to owners of 208,000 1980-model Chevrolet Citation, Pontiac Phoenix, Oldsmobile Omega and Buick Skylark cars with manual transmissions built through the 1980 model year.

GM also said Wednesday it will recall 32,000 1980 models with automatic transmissions built in the early 1980 model year run. The repairs will be done free of charge, GM said.

The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration and GM have received several hundred complaints during the past three years from motorists who said the cars' brakes have a tendency to lock prematurely, causing vehicles to go into dangerous spins.

"We took the action voluntarily to go to a recall," said GM spokesman Harold Jackson. "However, the government did issue an initial determination of a safety-related defect, and I guess it would be fair to say that we agree with them."

Lawmen testify in bomb trial

HOUSTON (AP) — Two Colorado law enforcement officers have testified the man accused of masterminding a $15 million bomb-extortion scheme against Gulf Oil Chemicals Co. acted in "good faith" when he traded information about the plot for his wife's release.

FBI agent Brian Jovick said John Marvin McBride talked at length about the scheme and "basically lived up to the agreement."

Michael Bell, an undersheriff with the Durango County Sheriff's Department, also said Wednesday he believed law enforcement officers "got what we bargained for."

McBride's common-law wife, Jill Renee Bird, was promised immunity from prosecution and released Oct. 5, two days after the bargain was struck.

However, Texas authorities withdrew the agreement, contending McBride reneged on the deal, and Ms. Bird was indicted a month later.

The officers' testimony came in a hearing on 40 pretrial motions in case against the couple and three others accused of threatening to blow up Gulf's largest chemical refinery unless they were paid $15 million.

Recession brings opportunity to Japanese

EDITOR'S NOTE — "Recession ghost towns" can be found even in Japan. But the Japanese social and economic system shields that nation, the world's third-largest economy after the U.S. and the Soviet Union, from the recession's worst blows. This the fourth article in a five-part series.

By JIM ABRAMS
Associated Press Writer

TOKYO (AP) — For Akiyuki Aota, the world recession and its impact on the Japanese electronics industry was a lifetime opportunity.

Aota, a 41-year-old father of two, was the first to hand in his resignation when Akai Electric Co., the company to which he had devoted 20 years of his life, sought 200 voluntary retirements from its male staff last November to save the money-losing company from financial ruin.

With some 15 million yen (the equivalent of $63,000) in severance pay, Aota will pay off the mortgage on his house, has enrolled in a coffee shop management school, and plans to invest in his own cafe later this year.

"It would be a lie to say I don't regret leaving," he said in an interview. Had prospects for business been better, he said, "I would have stayed on with my colleagues, but I decided the recession will continue for a few years and that's why I decided to fulfill my longtime desire to strike out on my own."

The world recession has taken its toll on Japan's economy. Overall exports were down sharply last year, domestic demand is stagnant and such basic industries as steel and petrochemicals are in trouble. But in this nation where lifetime employment is part of the social structure, many like Aota are ensured a soft landing for the economic fall.

AKAI ELECTRIC, a maker of high-quality audio and videotape recorder equipment, has been in decline for several years. With 90 percent of production going for exports, mainly to Europe, sales have been undercut by recession and protectionism, and profits have vanished as larger Japanese makers muscled into its markets with cheaper, mass-produced items.

It had losses of about $25 million on sales of $379 million in the fiscal year ending last November, and auditors decided it was time for sharp personnel cuts.

But like most Japanese companies facing similar cutbacks, Akai did not lay off or release any worker. Public Affairs Manager Toshio Suzuki said 216 male workers out of 1,200, more than the original request, voluntarily left their jobs — induced in part by severance payments financed by Akai's borrowing $7 million.

Its financial backer, Mitsubishi Bank, also made leaving more attractive by arranging new positions in smaller companies affiliated with the huge Mitsubishi conglomerate. "About 130 already have new jobs, and by February everyone should be settled into their next position," Suzuki said.

He said that for those who chose to stay, management-level employees took salary cuts of 5 percent to 10 percent and the female staff will be cut by "natural attrition" from 1,000 to 700 this year.

AKAI'S CASE has received much local publicity as proof that even Japan's once-invincible electronics industry is subject to the ravages of recession. But its efforts to avoid layoffs and firings are typical.

Kawasaki Heavy Industries plans to "relocate" 573 workers with Kawasaki subsidiaries, many from its shipbuilding section, where orders were down 64 percent in the first half of 1982.

In the petrochemical industry, where production is expected to be cut by 38 percent by 1985, Mitsubishi Petrochemical plans to transfer 300 workers, one out of 10, to subsidiary firms by spring.

Sumitomo Metal Industries every day sends about 280 of its idle workers to "educational training" classes in which the government, as part of an assistance program for recession-hit industries, pays about half the worker's normal salary.

About 30 percent of Japan's manufacturing companies are carrying out some kind of employment adjustment, said Koichi Aritoshi, Deputy Director of the Labor Ministry Employment Policy Division. But only 1 percent, he said, have actually laid off workers.

THAT IS ONE reason Japan's unemployment rate in November stood at only 2.3 percent, up slightly from 2.1 percent in November 1981 but down from October's 26-year high of 2.48 percent, compared with more than 10 percent for both the United States and Western Europe.

These figures might be higher if U.S. or European formulas for determining employment were used, but Aritoshi said unemployment is kept low because the growing service industry more than takes up the slack in jobs lost in manufacturing.

Workers in small manufacturing firms and subcontractors to the industrial giants — the people first to suffer in a business downturn — have so far managed to switch quickly to service-related jobs.

In November, 56.78 million Japanese had work, up 690,000 from a year earlier, with the addition of 450,000 jobs in service industries and 440,000 in the wholesale and retail sector, offsetting the 240,000 positions lost in the manufacturing sector.

Japan has not totally escaped the upheavals of structural change and economic malaise without victims, however.

IN YUBARI, on the northern island of Hokkaido, about 2,200 people are still drawing unemployment benefits as a result of the October shutdown of the local Hokutan Yubari Coal Mine, a city official said.

The mining company, hit by low demand and a mine disaster in October 1981 that claimed 93 lives, shifted 500 tunnelmen to a different colliery, and the city hired 92 at a public hospital.

Even so, "the general mood in town is that we don't have much of a future," said city official Shinichi Tezuka. About 1,000 of the city's 38,000 residents have already drifted off in search of better fortune, he said.

Recent visitors to Niihama, in southwest Japan, say it "already has a look of deterioration," with boarded-up shops, as Sumitomo Chemical prepares to close its local ethylene plant. The workers will fare better than the town itself. A company spokesman said all plant employes have been guaranteed jobs at other Sumitomo plants or related companies.

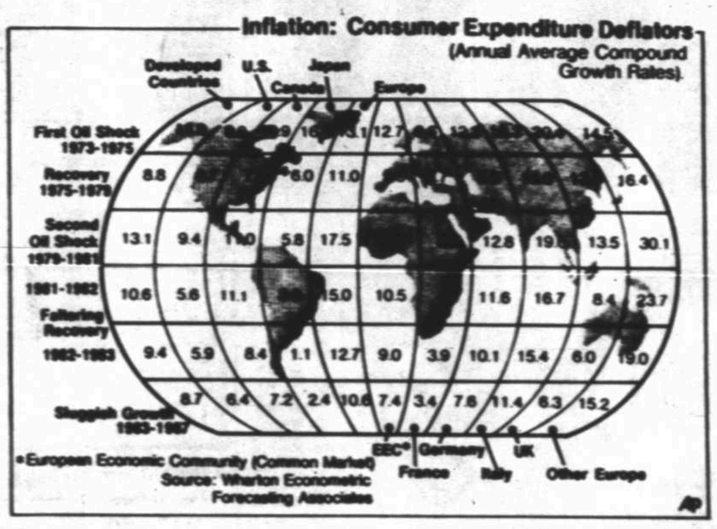

With the construction industry in a prolonged slump, more than 1,000 workers in the cement industry have been laid off temporarily. The furloughs usually last only a few days, but they are still unusual in Japan, where the layoff is a last resort.

"There is a limit to how much industry can adjust without cutting work forces," said the Labor Ministry's Aritoshi. "If Japan's economy continues to grow slowly, we could have a real employment problem."

Forecasters say the national output will grow little more than 3 percent in 1983, a near-standstill by Japanese standards.

Coalition urges natural gas price rollback, freeze

WASHINGTON (AP) — A consumer group, countering a Reagan administration plan for price decontrol, is urging Congress to roll back natural gas prices to their pre-winter levels and freeze them for two years.

The Citizen-Labor Energy Coalition said Wednesday that unless Congress acts, the average homeowner will see his bills increase by 55 percent over the next four years.

Those predicted increases come on top of hikes of 121 percent in residential bills that have occurred since 1978 when Congress began the current decontrol timetable.

In a study titled "Gas Prices Out of Control: The Price of Inaction," the coalition charged that the 1978 law has been a failure, subjecting consumers to stiff price hikes despite record oversupplies of gas.

"Phased decontrol is not working. All across the country, consumers are facing staggering price increases," said Robert Brandon, executive director of the energy coalition. "Gas prices will continue to soar unless Congress stops the decontrol process."

The coalition plan would freeze gas prices for two years at levels in effect before this winter began. Once prices were allowed to rise again, the coalition plan would scrap the current scheduled increases and put into effect hikes that would be kept below the level of inflation.

The coalition predicted that these changes would trim projected residential price increases over the next four years from 55 percent to 27 percent.

This would translate into a savings over four years of $640 for the average homeowner, who in 1982 paid $767 for natural gas. However, the coalition said the savings would be even greater in certain parts of the country. It predicted four-year savings of $1,306 in Hartford, Conn.; $1,151 in New York City, and $1,114 in Flint, Mich.

"We have already seen the damage caused by partial decontrol," Brandon said. "This study shows that the only solution is to stop decontrol."

The Reagan administration, however, wants to move in the opposite direction. President Reagan met with his Cabinet Tuesday and discussed a plan to remove price controls from all natural gas.

Currently, only about 60 percent of supplies are scheduled to be decontrolled by 1985 with the rest of supplies remaining under price controls forever. The administration would remove controls from all supplies of gas.

Energy Secretary Donald Hodel began a round of discussions Wednesday with members of Congress to work out details of a possible decontrol proposal. He said he hoped to reach a consensus on exact details within the next 10 days and present it to the president for his approval.

Earlier administration efforts to seek total decontrol have been sidetracked because of strong congressional opposition.

However, Hodel said the administration bill this time will have sections to protect consumers from sharp price increases.

One way of doing this, he said, would be to instruct the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission in the law not to allow higher costs to be passed through if pipelines could not show they were bargaining with producers to get the best gas price available.

The Natural Gas Supply Association, which represents producers, hailed the administration's decision to push for decontrol. It said removing all price controls would result in lower prices for consumers just as the decontrol of domestic crude oil did.

Nicholas J. Bush, president of the association, said he had not analyzed the energy coalition study but he called it the "latest doomsday scenario." He said previous predictions by the group have been flawed by using inflated estimates of the price of oil, the fuel natural gas competes with in the market place.

EDITOR'S NOTE: The Citizen/Labor Energy Coalition sometimes has trouble getting its facts straight. To illustrate the point, the American Petroleum Institute recently sent the following note to editors.

"For your information, the following statement was made today (Jan. 11) by Robert M. Brandon, executive director of the Citizen/Labor Energy Coalition (CLEC) during his appearance on the CBS Morning News:

'When oil was decontrolled, gasoline prices were at about 50 cents a gallon.'

The fact is that the average price for regular leaded gasoline, the least expensive gasoline sold at service stations, was $1.28 a gallon during the last week of January 1981 when President Reagan decontrolled crude oil and gasoline."

Dollar retreats

LONDON (AP) — The dollar retreated further on foreign exchange markets today in brisk trading. Gold bullion prices rose.

European currency dealers said the dollar fell on continued speculation of an imminent cut in the 8½ percent U.S. discount rate and the belief that the pro-business West German coalition government would remain in power.

Steel's claims face test

WASHINGTON (AP) — Claims by the specialty steel industry that imports have hurt domestic production and jobs are facing a test before the International Trade Commission, where foreign producers say they aren't to blame.

At least two European opponents, Belgium and France, contend unemployment rates approaching 50 percent at some U.S. plants are due not to imports but to overall economic conditions in this country.

"The recession and resulting decline in U.S. consumption of stainless steel and alloy tool steel products are a greater cause of injury to the domestic industries than any increase in imports," said a brief filed before today's hearing on behalf of the Association of French Specialty Steel Producers.

But economists testifying Wednesday for the domestic producers dismissed the European contention.

Paul Marshall, an economist with Marshall Bartlett Inc. of Lexington, Mass., used 36 pages of graphs and testimony to back his claim that imports are the culprit.

Decontrol effort may take step Saturday

By WILLIAM GARLAND
Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — A major step in the effort to decontrol natural gas occurred Tuesday when a cabinet-level council recommended that President Reagan introduce a deregulation bill.

The next step in the decontrol process may come, oddly enough, in Idaho Falls, Idaho, on Lincoln's Birthday .

Energy Secretary Donald Hodel, chairman of the Cabinet Council on Natural Resources and Environment, will be in Idaho Falls on Feb. 12 to address Idaho Republicans.

Introducing Hodel at that dinner will by Sen. James A. McClure, R-Idaho, chairman of the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee, considered a key player in the push for decontrol in the Senate.

When Hodel returns from that Idaho trip next week, he will undoubtedly have a clearer idea from McClure about the sentiment toward decontrol in the Senate and about the nature of the decontrol bill that would have the best chance of passage there, information that would find its way to Reagan.

SINCE MANY OBSERVERS say a bill would have to be introduced in Congress by March to have a chance of passage, that would leave a window of time for Reagan to prepare a bill and get it introduced.

A spokesman for DOE emphasized Wednesday that the cabinet council's recommendation to go ahead with a decontrol proposal was a progressive step toward decontrol. Last year, Reagan backed away from introducing such a bill in an election year.

"They're just waiting to figure out how best to go about this thing," said DOE spokesman Phil Keif. "I'm sure the president wants to decontrol and he wants to do it the right way. It's part of the process (the council's recommendation), and things are moving ahead."

At a Wednesday news conference, a spokesman for natural gas producers praised the cabinet council's proposal to Reagan.

Nicholas J. Bush, president of the Natural Gas Supply Association, said the council's decision is "welcome news for everyone," emphasizing that the price of gas possibly would decline without the complexities of the Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978.

IN ANSWER TO several skeptical reporters at the well-attended briefing, Bush said producers would be willing to sell gas at a lower price because some gas production is currently being squeezed out of the market by consumers and industrial users who are switching to other fuels.

"If you can't sell the product, and you've got a lot of it, you reduce the price," said Bush.

Bush criticized a report put out earlier Wednesday by the Citizen-Labor Energy Coalition. The report, titled "Gas Prices Out of Control: The Cost of Inaction," said that legislation should be passed to stop the phased decontrol under current law of about half the current amount of gas being produced.

Consumers would save $71 billion if the current gradual decontrol of gas flowing after April 1977 were stopped, the report said.

Even though the administration has not yet introduced a bill in Congress, the debate already has begun on the House floor. Congressmen on both sides of the issue Tuesday gave speeches in the attempt to gain support.

REP. TOM LOEFFLER, R-Hunt, along with Rep. Billy Tauzin, D-La., led the speakers in favor of decontrol.

"Those of us who have long warned of pending market disorders and pricing distortions because of the NGPA now feel vindicated," said Loeffler, who cited figures showing that Texas utilities paid more for gas than Kansas utilities in 1982.

He said the market for natural gas would suffer "constant chaos" until there is decontrol.

On the other side of the issue, Rep. Dan Glickman, D-Kan., said that corrections of current natural gas contracts between producers and pipelines would help put downward pressure on steeply rising gas costs to consumers.

Adult probationers pay county $47,772 in restitution in 1982

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Figures released by the Texas Adult Probation Commission show adult probationers in the probation department serving Midland County paid $47,772 in restitution in fiscal year 1982.

The TAPC also reports those probationers paid $20,679 in court costs; $96,018 in fines; and $4,236 in attorney's fees, for a total of $168,706.

The probation department for Midland County is made up of that county only.

TAPC reports that statewide, at total of $24,566,919 was repaid by adult probationers in 1982, compared to $17,604,327 in 1981.

By category, the 1982 figures were: restitution, $9,019,939; court costs, $2,876,834; fines, $12,022,926; and attorney's fees, $647,145.

TAPC spokesman Dick Lewis says the payments "increased over the previous year for a couple of reasons.

"First, the total number of adults on probation was greater than in 1981, something like over 20,000 more probationers.

"With that many more people, you obviously have a larger total amount assessed — resulting in a greater potential for higher collections."

Lewis also says local departments apparently "have intensified their supervision of the probationers and, as a result, collections have intensified as well.

"At the same time, I think the courts are placing more emphasis on restitution to victims than in the past," he says.

Lewis also notes that in 1978, some $3.8 million in restitution was paid by probationers, so that the increase in funds paid to victims has more than doubled.

"When you gather facts such as these, you begin to realize the economic benefits of having an offender pay back the victim and society," Lewis says.

Figures for Howard County show payments of $17,124 in restitution; $5,632 in court costs; $8,936 in fines; and $2,100 in attorney's fees, for a total of $33,792.

Appeals court affirms jury's conviction of Ector County man

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Court of Criminal Appeals Wednesday affirmed the conviction and 99-year sentence for aggravated rape assessed Donnie Ray Mosley by an Ector County jury.

In his appeal, Mosley aruged he had been put in jeopardy twice for the same offense because the prosecutor read the wrong indictment to a jury after its members had been impaned and sworn.

The trial court granted a mistrial.

The appeals court noted that Mosley "admits in his brief that at the time of the trial he was under indictment for several offenses."

The indictment which was read "was an indictment of appellant (Mosley) for the aggravated rape of a different woman, not the complainant in this case," the court said.

The appeals court said there was no showing of "intentional misconduct nor gross negligence on the part of the prosecutor."

The court also rejected Mosley's contention that a confession and a knife should not have been used in evidence against him because they were "fruits on an illegal arrest."

The court disagreed, and also rejected Mosley's argument that his confession was not voluntary because he "was under the influence of beer, marijuana, quaalude and brush cleaner at the time of the confession."

The court said police officers testified that Mosley did not appear to be intoxicated or under the influence of drugs.

The conviction was affirmed.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Woman shares choice of two-stage surgery

Dear Dr. Solomon: In reference to your recent column regarding single- or double-stage procedures for mastectomies, on Nov. 1, 1981, I discovered a pea-sized lump three inches under my left armpit. I initially investigated the area because I had developed a muscle-strain type pain after lifting my 8-year-old son. Two days later I saw a surgeon (female) who did an inconclusive needle biopsy. She told me to come back in three weeks and that if the lump was still there she would do a surgical biopsy and, if malignant, a mastectomy. Needless to say, I made some calls and located an oncologist for a second opinion a week later.

The oncologist checked my mammogram and examined me and referred me to another surgeon the following week. Each doctor assures me that the lump appeared to be pea-sized and was almost surely benign. When the second surgeon set up my biopsy I insisted that if it were malignant, that he NOT do a mastectomy at that time. He did the biopsy on Nov. 19, 1981, and found a peach-pit sized malignancy. The mastectomy was scheduled for the following Tuesday. I was allowed a weekend pass from the hospital so I could be with my family and work through the emotional problems of mastectomy with my husband.

This two-stage procedure was so valuable to both of us that by the time I went to surgery two days before Thanksgiving I was able to make up and affix to my biopsy bandage a note to the operating room personnel which informed them that they were only to take "one breast portion only, no drumsticks, wings, or back portions allowed." Being allergic to tape, I also informed them not to "baste this turkey with tape." I had also asked my surgeon to leave reconstruction tissue if possible, which he did. You may think my attitude a bit ghoulish, but it was a situation of laughing to keep from crying, as, I imagine, all mastectomy surgeries are.

Mainly, Dr. Solomon, I said all of the above to emphasize the need of the PATIENT to make the one- or two-step decision, if at all possible. I could not have tolerated the one-step biopsy and mastectomy procedure, but could approach the two-step procedure with confidence. Someone else may prefer to get it over and done with by going the one-step procedure, but the women should have the choice. Thank God I was near the Texas Medical Center and had access to some fantastic doctors who would give me that choice.- S.W., League City, Texas

Authority applauds good job

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

Midland's Housing Authority patted itself on the back for a job almost done Wednesday after learning that the $500,000 grant for its fiscal year 1981-82 housing rehabilitation program is stretching far beyond early expectations.

During a monthly meeting in City Hall, Horace Berry, the program's contractor, said repairs are complete on 56 homes while another 32 are being refurbished. Berry said the 88 homes will deplete $478,322.28 of the original grant, leaving enough money to complete work on an additional three or four houses.

When applying for a Community Development Block Grant from the Department of Housing and Urban Development, city officials estimated that about 45 homes could be repaired with the $500,000 grant.

Berry said contracts are in hand for the additional houses, and he estimated the work should be complete and the money spent by the end of March.

The City Council has received a $949,000 block grant for fiscal year 1982-83, and has indicated that $250,000 of the money will go to sustain the 1981-82 program.

Because of various delays, Midland's 1981-82 housing rehabilitation program did not get started until late in 1982, thus accounting for the overlap of the 1981-82 program into fiscal year 1982-83.

Chairman Gene Abbott said the housing authority should proceed with its rehabilitation work once it receives formal notice of the additional $250,000 funding from the City Council.

Susan Howell, program coordinator, said she will ask the council to amend its original 1981-82 program contract to include the $250,000.

Meanwhile, housing authority officials began laying the groundwork for using the $250,000 by receiving assurance from Gloria Ellis, executive director of Midland's Human Relations Council, that the HRC will continue in its role of accepting applications for the program.

Berry said that a smooth transition into the 1982-83 program would be helpful in keeping contractors involved in the rehabilitation work. Ms. Howell suggested that March 1 might be a good time to begin the application process.

Abbott said that once the council lends its approval, the 1982-83 program can begin.

New postmaster

"Bill" Williams, left, Midland's new postmaster, is sworn in Wednesday by Vernon Greggerson.

Midland's new postmaster sworn in

Customer service important to Williams

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

Midland's new postmaster, V.L. "Bill" Williams, took the oath of office and was officially sworn in during a Wednesday morning ceremony at the Main Post Office.

Vernon Greggerson, manager and postmaster of the El Paso Postal Service management sectional center, conducted the ceremony for Williams, 47, who left a postmaster job in Port Arthur to take the position.

Williams succeeds former postmaster David E. Holster, a 41-year veteran of the Postal Service who retired Dec. 31, 1982.

Williams was selected Jan. 20 by U.S. Postmaster General William Bolger after a review process that began in September and involved 57 applicants for the post.

Williams said his first priority will be to spend time familiarizing himself with Midland's postal employees and operations. "I'm pretty impressed with the caliber of the people in the office here so far," he said.

Although he doesn't expect to make any immediate changes in the local postal system, Williams said that any initial changes would likely be internal and would not affect service to customers.

He encouraged Midlanders to voice their complaints and comments concerning Midland's Postal Service.

"I would like to tell everyone that is a customer that if they have a problem, we'd like to hear about it," Williams said. "If they have a problem with a discourteous employee, I especially want to be made aware of it. One thing I will not tolerate is employees that are not courteous and helpful to our customers."

Williams grew up on a ranch near Georgetown and began his 26-year Postal Service career June 19, 1956, as a part-time mail carrier in Austin. He served in the Austin office as a carrier for 13 years and as a supervisor for two years before being appointed to the Pflugerville postmaster's position in March 1971. He was named Georgetown postmaster in June 1972 and served as officer in charge at Belton in 1975. He took over the Port Arthur postmaster job in January 1976.

Pipe bids under city estimate

City may save money on project

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

All 18 bids for a 15-mile pipeline came in under the $7.5 million estimate and the top four fell $3 million less than that figure in bid opening Wednesday morning in City Hall. Of those four, two came from out of state.

About 100 persons crowded into the Council Chambers to hear each company's bid as it was opened. Final decision will be made Feb. 22 by the City Council.

The pipeline, which will start at the sewage treatment plant and travel southeast to J. "Timber" Floyd's land, had been designed to be the largest expenditure in the $20 million sewage disposal plan, according to Utilities Director John Lowe.

Four top companies being considered for the contract — who gained that spot by submitting the lowest bids — are Key Enterprises of Odessa, $4.35 million; John Reynolds and Son of Paoli, Ind., $4.45 million; Stolaruk Corporation of Dallas, $4.48 million; and CFW Construction Co. of Fayetteville, Tenn., $4.5 million.

"We had a whole bunch under $5 million; it was very close, very competitive," Lowe said of the bids, which ranged up to a high of $6 million.

Normally, the city receives only five or six bids on such a project, according to Lowe.

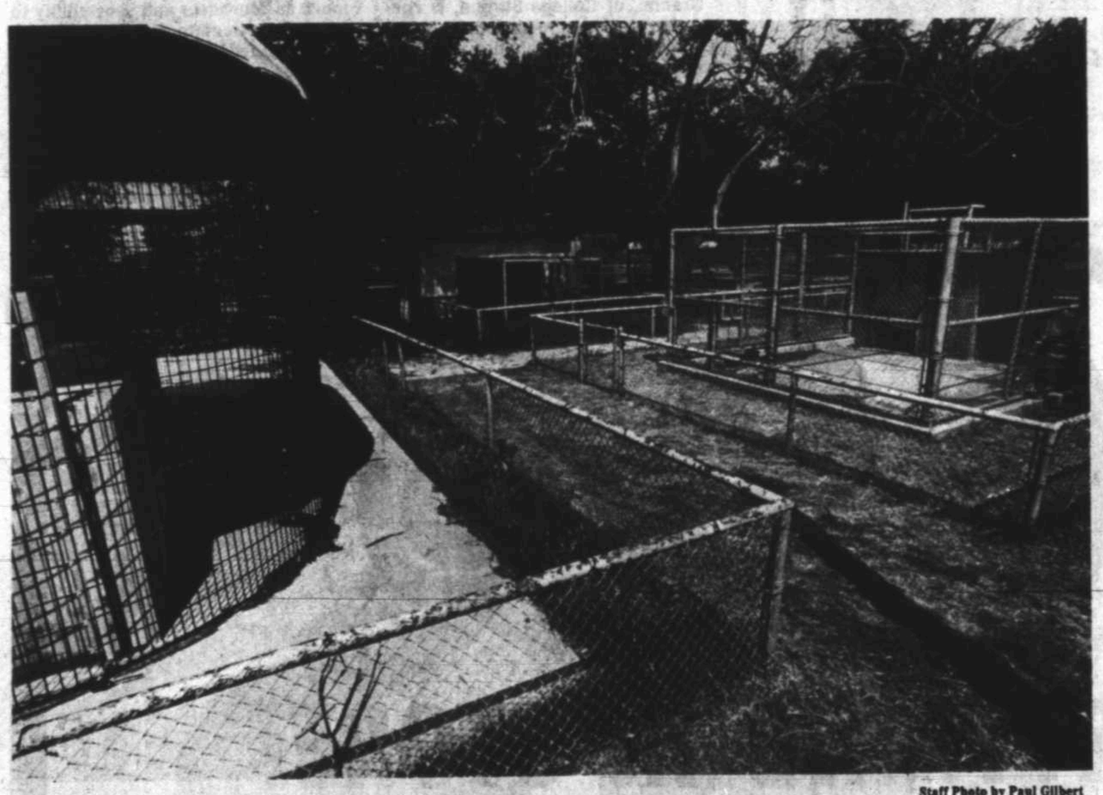

"We're going to save money on the pipeline," he said. But the savings may go into the holding pond and liner, which may have been underestimated.

Looking at the competitive bid situation that contributed to the low bids, Lowe said he hopes it continues into the time the city seeks a contract for the pond.

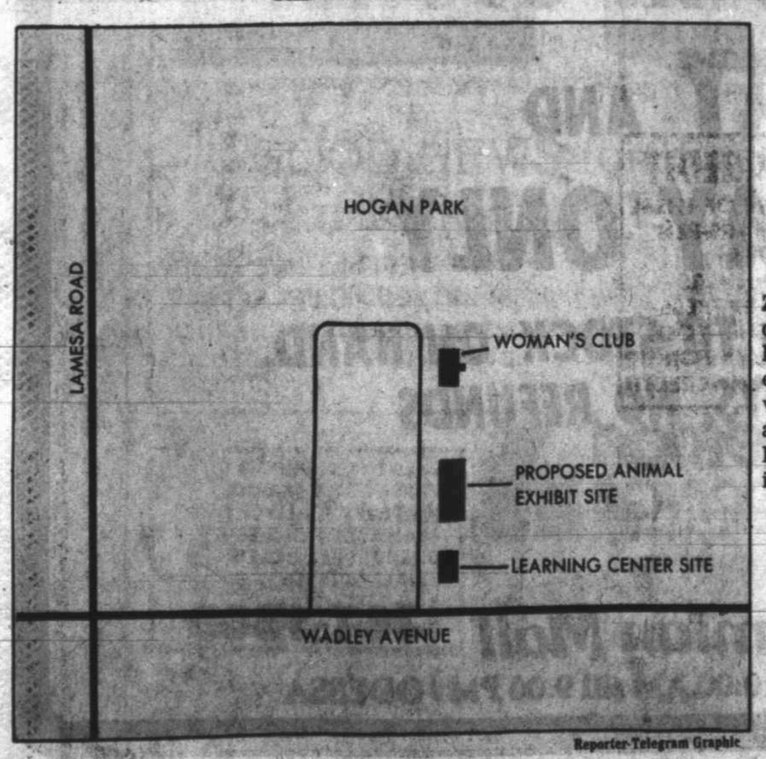

The pipeline is the first major part of the project. Lowe said bids also are out on the pumps and switching gear.

The plan calls for piping primary treated effluent out to a holding pond on Floyd's land, where it would then be used for irrigation.

"We're just delighted with the way the bids came in," said Lowe. "We paid a relatively high rate on the bonds when we sold them. These low bids help us to save some money."

The cages at the old Cole Park Zoo, above, will probably be torn down as the Parks and Recreation Department focuses its animal exhibit efforts on Hogan Park, where they hope to someday have an animal exhibit next to the Environmental Learning Center, indicated on the map, left.

Zoo advocates turn to Hogan

Park could be new zoo site

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

To the Navaho, a hogan was home, wherein existed shelter, life and hopes for the future.

Those same characteristics may someday be found in Midland's park of the same name by native West Texas animals and imported domesticated species — or so go the dreams of Parks and Recreation Director Wayne Kohout.

But dreams, in any city endeavor, always are tempered by financial realities.

"A lot is subject to change — we're in the process of upgrading our master plan," he noted.

For more than two decades beginning in 1956, a zoo for the city of Midland was more than mere hopes. Initially only a modest deer exhibit at Cole Park east of the city, it blossomed into an exotic species facility that met its ultimate downfall when a bond issue for its relocation and expansion suffered an overwhelming defeat in 1977.

In the six years since, the Parks and Recreation Department has been preserving the zoo facility at Cole Park pending an ultimate decision on initiation of another such facility. Now, however, Kohout says the Cole Park cages and other zoo-related buildings will be razed, as the Environmental Learning Center at Hogan Park has become the focal point of any potential animal exhibit.

"It does look like if we ever do have an outdoor exhibit it might be more feasible at the Environmental Learning Center," said Kohout, "at least until such time as the Permian Zoological Society is successful in getting a zoo going between Midland and Odessa. But that is so far down the road we can't even count on that being reality by the year 2000."

What Kohout would like to see at Hogan is an animal exhibit with a "farm theme," which more or less amounts to a facility with a petting zoo. Included would be various animal and bird species commonly found on farms which could be inexpensively maintained. An indigenous species exhibit also would be considered, though the inclusion of carnivores might present some care and feeding problems.

No exotic species such as lions, tigers or elephants would be included because of monetary and medical considerations.

"It's hard to find veterinary care for exotics," noted Kohout. "That was one big problem when we had the tigers and chimps. We had to fly in a veterinarian from the Houston area. We want our exhibit monitored by a local veterinarian."

The proposed site somewhere adjacent to the Environmental Learning Center just north of the intersection of Wadley and the east Hogan Park road has several advantages over Cole Park, said Kohout.

"It is more accessible, better known and surveillance would be easier," he explained. "When we had the zoo out at Cole Park, people would dump whole animal carcasses out behind the cages."

Kohout would like the animal exhibit at Hogan to be contained in a "miniature barn silo," be "humane and properly sized" and be overseen by individuals who would disseminate educational leaflets and answer questions from visitors.

Inflation and decreased sales tax revenue, however, may prove budgetary hindrances to implementation of such plans.

"We can't be strapped with a significant investment," said Kohout.

With such a reality looming over the heads of Parks and Recreation officials, the decision to consider Hogan Park rather than Cole Park may prove significant.

After all, the original hogan of the Navaho, while sturdy, transcended the problem of economics — constructed as it was from logs, sticks and mud.

Anti-Ozzie request in Midland

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Ector County, which is trying to block controversial British rock star Ozzy Osbourne's scheduled March 8 performance in Odessa, late Wednesday afternoon filed in federal court in Midland a request for declaratory judgment to determine the county's rights and to get the court's sanctions on terminating the Osbourne contract.

An agent for Ector County had booked Osbourne Jan. 10 for an 8 p.m. March 8 performance. Since then, citizens who call themselves Odessans for Decency and others have petitioned Ector County to cancel its contract with Osbourne, who does business as Blizzard Productions Inc.

Anti-Osbourne Odessans have alleged that the entertainer performs mutilations on stage and commits other "acts" which would offend many people of ordinary sensibilities, which are morally unacceptable to Odessa and which are illegal.

In the request, which was filed by Ector County Attorney Steve Groh on orders of the Ector County Commissioners' Court, the county is seeking an OK of its prohibiting the Osbourne performance on grounds that his purported past performances would indicate that his Ector County performance would be no different: that it would include "violations" of local ordinances and state laws.

If those allegations were proved true, then Osbourne's conduct would be "in violation of the agreement (contract) terms, city ordinances and state law."

The "controversy has ripened" to the point, says the request, that Ector County would be damaged were it to terminate the contract or by Osbourne's agents in their seeking an injunction against Ector County.

The contract was signed by Osbourne's promoter, Randy Shelton of Stardate Attractions.

Osbourne conflict in Midland court

Groh has told the Ector County commissioners that blocking Osbourne's performance might violate the performer's constitutional rights and could result in suits for damages against the Commissioners' Court, the individual commissioners and the county.

In reviewing the purpose of a declaratory judgment, the Ector County request cites a 1958 case, Paramount Pictures Corp. vs. William Holden et al., which noted that "the very object of the declaratory judgment is to seek a court's determinaion of the rights of the parties when a controversy exists, even before the acts of the parties result in damage."

A 1963 case considered a declaratory judgment an "intent to avoid delay and accrual of damages against one uncertain of his rights and to promote an early adjudication of the controversy" between the contesting parties "without waiting until one of them should see fit to begin suit for coercive relief."

In citing yet another case, the Groh-prepared request said "the court must look at the entire course of action and all of the defendant's relevant conduct, carefully weighing the business realities involved."

Ector County is seeking to terminate the Osbourne contract and, at the same time, avoid a breach-of-contract suit.

The request is to be considered by U.S. District Judge Lucius D. Bunton, who presides in Midland and elsewhere from Austin to El Paso but who lives in Odessa.

In the Ector-Osbourne two-page contract signed by Shelton, the promoter agreed to lease the Coliseum for $700 or, if it means more money, for 10 percent of the show's gross receipts. In turn, Ector County agreed to provide 15 security guards and one emergency medical technician during the performance.

In other provisions, Shelton agreed "to pay for any and all damage" to the coliseum during the performance and to carry a public liability insurance for bodily injury or death.

Further, the form contract provides for the "conduct of entertainers and show managers with young people's attraction" thusly:

—Entertainers are to sign no autographs or leave the backstage and dressing room areas except to appear on stage for performance.

—No souvenirs or novelty should be sold that lends itself to being thrown.

—Conduct of entertainers while giving their performance should not be such as to deliberately indicate or entice patrons to leave their seats or tend to create a hazardous, uncontrollable crowd situation.

In addressing any "illegal performance," the contract says that the lessee agrees that no coliseum performance, exhibition or entertainment shall be "illegal, indecent, obscene or immoral." The contract further states that the coliseum director shall have the right to demand that "illegal or indecent, obscene, lewd, immoral" or otherwise offensive acts that have received criticism be deleted from the performance "so that it will not be publicly offensive."

Midland Wage, Hour office to have full-time staff person

A compliance officer will be staffing the U.S. Labor Department's Wage and Hour office at the federal courthouse in Midland on a full-time basis starting today, it was announced Wednesday.

Martin J. Rosenthal, 34, has been with the government for the past four years and transferred here from Tulsa, Okla., to take over the office, which had been operating on a sporadic basis for the past several months due to the retirement of one compliance officer and the voluntary transfer of another.

Rosenthal said his basic duties are to enforce provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act — which include the minimum wage law, child labor laws, overtime and government contracts — in the 14-county Midland-Odessa region.

While he will be permanently assigned here, he said his duties require that he be away from the office on occasion but that a phone recording device will take messages and provisions will be made for "walk-ins" to also leave messages.

The office phone number is 561-8132.

Naturalization ceremony to be Friday

Approximately 40 aliens from several countries are to be brought into U.S. citizenship in a 2 p.m. Friday naturalization ceremony in federal court in the George Mahon Federal Building.

U.S. District Judge Lucius D. Bunton is to preside over the ceremony. Principal speaker for the occasion will be Bill Collyns, former editor of The Midland Reporter-Telegram and a community and civic leader.

Recession could hurt smaller colleges

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

Without jobs, many people turn back to education.

The trend of increased enrollments during difficult economic times applies to large and prestigious colleges and universities. That trend, however, does not apply to smaller state and private schools, according to Dr. Gene Budig, chancellor of the University of Kansas.

As the largest of the Big Eight universities, KU's enrollment is expected to continue increasing. But smaller state colleges and private schools may be hurting in enrollment over the next few years, Budig said.

In Midland Wednesday to attend a meeting of an expected 50 alumni in the area at a private home later that evening, Budig said, "Many young people unable to secure jobs opted to advance themselves through increased education. This is usually the case during difficult economic times.

"It is apparent that with the difficult economy, young people are trying to attend the very best institutions they can afford," Budig continued. "Thus, the more prestigious universities are at an advantage and I believe that will continue through the '80s.

"I do believe that some of the smaller state institutions and private institutions will be hurt," he added.

According to Budig, enrollment at large universities, especially those with significant land grants, "has not only held, but the quality of students has remained very high."

At the University of Kansas, for example, enrollment increased by more than 400 students this year; KU's average ACT scores are almost two points higher than the national average for doctoral-granting institutions.

However, academic standards at the university enjoy an unusual national reputation of extremely high quality.

Budig, who compares KU to The University of Texas at Austin, said The New York Times rated KU one of the top 10 public universities in a study of the 250 finest public and private academic universities.

Change magazine named KU one of the 50 best educational bargains in America, he said, adding there was no tuition increase this year. Tuition is adjusted every two years, he explained.

The University of Kansas also has the lowest tuition of 52 Association of American Universities public and private institutions, he continued.

Even with an open admission policy for Kansas residents, Budig said the university continues to attract quality students.

"I think it is comparable to the University of Texas at Austin in terms of quality," he explained. "We're smaller but not dissimilar."

He pointed out that while UT-Austin has about 100 distinguished professorships, KU has 45 — a large number compared to the enrollment of 28,000 students.

Citing KU as having one of the largest endowments of any public university in the nation, Budig said its portfolio is valued at more than $150 million.

In addition, the university has one of 24 Rhodes Scholars this year.

"That's the 21st (Rhodes Scholar) in the history of KU," Budig said. "That places us in the top 20 percent in America."

Budig said the university prides itself on efforts aimed at enhancement of programs. The scholarship fund has increased by more than $1.2 million in the last 14 months, he said.

"We've made a significent effort to see that outstanding young students at both undergraduate and graduate levels are not outpriced of a university education."

Budig, who received his bachelor's, master's and doctoral degrees at the University of Nebraska, was appointed chancellor of KU two years ago. Prior to that, he served on the faculty and staff at Nebraska for six years, as the president of Illinois State University for five years and as the president of West Virginia University for four years.

Presently he writes a column about once a month for the Kansas City Star and continues lecturing at the undergraduate and graduate levels in journalism, higher education and aerospace studies courses.

Budig was scheduled to appear in Dallas tonight for another alumni meeting during his tour of Texas, one of three alumni visits scheduled this year.

Midlander's board nomination OK'd

AUSTIN — Jack Russell of Midland is one of three men whose nominations to the Midwestern State University board of regents were approved Wednesday by the Senate Nominations Subcommittee.

Also named to the board were Edward Moran Jr. and Harold Rogers, both of Wichita Falls. Rogers is a reappointment.

Midwestern State University is in Wichita Falls.

Kemp: Party change won't effect Gramm

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — At least one House Republican leader believes that former Democratic Rep. Phil Gramm would be as effective as a Republican as he was previously as a Democrat.

But the controversy surrounding Gramm's two terms as a Democrat surfaced again Wednesday with a complaint from a leading House Democrat that Gramm was a Republican "spy."

Gramm, of College Station, is running for reelection to his former House seat following his resignation as a Democrat early last month. As a Republican, he is being challenged by nine Democrats and one Libertarian in the election to be held Saturday.

On the positive side toward Gramm was Rep. Jack Kemp, R-N.Y., chairman of the House Republican Conference:

"He may not be the sponsor of the alternative budget, but he will be equally effective because he's a man of ideas," said Kemp.

Gramm will regain his position on the House Budget Committee if he returns as a Republican. "I don't know if he'll come up with the budget, but he would be very active in shaping the budget," said Kemp.

"I don't consider leadership (in the Republican party) to be a formality as much as your ideas and your ability to express, articulate and implement," Kemp added. "You can be a backbencher and still be effective and I think he will be."

As a Democrat, Gramm was a leader in the last session in both drafting the Republican budget that carried his name and also in leading Democrats who crossed the aisle to vote for that budget.

Texas Tech program lets students plan for future

LUBBOCK — "Shake Hands with Your Future," a program for gifted and talented students in the fifth through twelfth grades, is offering three sessions this summer through the Texas Tech University Division of Continuing Education.

Designed to help bring bright, creative students together in an atmosphere of sharing experiences and stimulating each other's thinking and creativity, the 13-day program allows them to live on the university campus while participating in academic experiences including field trips, lectures, counseling-communication sessions, visits with mentors and recreational and social activities geared to the interests and ages of the those involved.

Session I, June 12-25; and Session II, July 10-23, are for students entering grades 5-9; Session III, July 24-Aug. 6, is for students entering grades 10-12.

Nominations for the program, due no later than March 1, may be submitted by parents or guardians, educators or the students themselves, and should be sent to Shake Hands with Your Future, Division of Continuing Education, Box 4110, Texas Tech University, Lubbock, TX 79409-4110.

The fee of $395 per session covers room, board, educational materials, instruction and recreation. The fee will not be accepted until the student has been selected for the program.

Accepted students will be notified by April 1.

Journalism awards grow

FORT SMITH, Ark. — The Donald W. Reynolds Foundation, Inc., has increased its journalism scholarship program from $80,000 to $100,000 for 1983.

The ten students selected for the scholarship will receive up to $5,000 during both their junior and senior years.

The scholarships are available to journalism and communication students at the following universities: Baylor University, The University of Texas at Austin, Brigham Young University, California State University at Fullerton, Oklahoma State University, University of Arkansas at Fayetteville, University of Hawaii at Honolulu, University of Missouri at Columbia, University of Nevada at Reno and University of Oklahoma.

Candidates for the scholarships apply at the participating universities, where complete details about the scholarship program are available. Each school nominates two finalists from which a panel of journalists selects the Donald W. Reynolds Scholars.

Doctor stays with 'Rick'

ODESSA — Dr. Edwin B. Kurtz, chairman of life science at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin, has been named to his 17th year on the editorial advisory board of the "Ranger Rick" magazine.

Kurtz says the 1 million children nationwide who read the adventures of the raccoon character known as Ranger Rick is one reason the program is one of the most rewarding activities with which he is involved.

Kurtz, who has been on the editorial board since the magazine's inception, serves with three others to provide suggestions for policies and articles and to review issues in advance of publication for readability and accuracy in areas concerning biology.

Kurtz has been on the UTPB faculty since 1972 and was on hand in the beginning stages of the university. He was involved in planning and in faculty recruitment before classes began. An avid environmentalist, he is active in a number of community activities and is a popular speaker for various clubs and organizations on health and environmental issues.

Midlander on honor roll

AUSTIN — Valerie Van Pelt, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lester Van Pelt Jr. of 1602 Gulf, was named to the Dean of the College of Education at the University of Texas at Austin Honor Roll Summa Cum Laude for the fall semester.

Miss Van Pelt is a senior majoring in English and speech.

Honor student named

PLAINVIEW — Brenda Coleman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Stewart of Midland, was named to the Dean's List for the fall term at Wayland Baptist University.

To be named to the Dean's List, students must be enrolled in a minimum of 12 semester hours and have a grade point average of 3.5.

She also was named to the National Dean's List which include students enrolled in 12 semester hours with a 3.5 grade point average who are nominated by the institution they attend.

Contest winners named

Four Midland students were announced as winners of the annual American History Essay contest sponsored by Lt. William Brewer Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution. The students, in fifth through eighth grades, participated in the essay contest, which is held each year to observe American History month in February and to stimulate interest in American History.

The general subject was "Comparison of Early American Life to Today." Winners and their essays were the following: Shauna Claiborne, fifth grader at Hillander School, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. Davidson Claiborne of 1702 W. Storey, "Churches and Religion"; Kathy MacDonald, sixth grader at Hillander School, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. Lloyd MacDonald of 1515 Community Lane, "Recreation"; Ginny Graham, seventh grader at Trinity School, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Graham, 1903 N. H St., "Travel and Transportation"; and Andrewa Comola, eighth grader at Trinity School, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wilson Comola, 14 Bristol Court, "Building a Log Cabin."

Winners received certificates and medals.

Suburban crash

An Arlington man died when his single-engine Beechcraft Bonanza crashed Wednesday night while approaching the airport in the Dallas suburb of Addison. The victim, Fred Lewis Franklin, 43, owned an airplane parts firm in Arlington and was flying alone. The plane landed in a commercial district of Addison about 7:51 p.m., but didn't hit any buildings. Franklin had taken off from Meacham Field in Fort Worth and crashed about a mile south of the Addison Airport, about 40 miles away, air traffic controller Stephen Gilbert said. "It appears he hit some power lines before going down," he said.

Eighty arrested in seizure of undocumented workers

LONGVIEW (AP) — Federal agents halted a roundup of undocumented workers after filling up a bus they brought to transport the 80 illegal aliens back to Mexico.

Immigration and Naturalization Service agents began arresting the aliens early Wednesday morning, according to Longview Police Sgt. Hal Braiser.

Most of the aliens had jobs, and were arrested as they left their homes to go to work, he said.

The workers were expected to be driven to the border and released after the INS finished processing the arrests at the Longview police station, Braiser said.

The alien roundup was the third made in this Northeast Texas city in the past 18 months because of numerous complaints in the area, Brasier said. He said 365 people were arrested in the first roundup and about 180 in the second.

Sharon Mendenhall, daughter of Dick and Diane Mendenhall of 1610 Winfield, has been selected as a Youth Merit Award Winner by the Downtown Rotary Club. A senior at Midland High, she is a member of the President's Cabinet and National Honor Society and serves as election chairman. She is active in Young Life, varsity basketball, Symphony Debs, United Girls Softball and 100 Club. Favorite courses include accounting, calculus and computer math.

Wichita Falls no longer dry city

WICHITA FALLS (AP) — Water service in this North Texas city was back to normal after workers filled a reservoir that almost emptied when a control panel short circuited.

City officials asked the city's industries and about 150,000 people to curtail water usage last weekend after the short circuit shut off pumps Saturday at the city's main water supply, Lake Arrowhead.

Pumps at Lake Kickapoo, a backup supply 25 miles to the southwest, were shut down for routine maintenance at the time.

The water shortage became so critical Tuesday that residents were asked to cut consumption by 80 percent to 90 percent.

Jerry Gross, acting public utilities director, said Wednesday that the city's staging reservoir was filled to within a foot of the top and that the city could resume unrestricted water use.

"Not only do I have three days (supply) in the system, I have a lake that is pumping more than I can use," he said.

Officials restarted the pumps at Lake Kickapoo Tuesday, then bypassed the control panel and restarted pumps at Lake Arrowhead.

Auction '83 evening held to raise funds for Museum of the Southwest

By LINDA ANDERSON
Lifestlye Writer

The bidding was as lively as the camaraderie when Midland donned its finest and gathered together to support the Museum of the Southwest at Auction '83. Approximately 630 Midlanders attended the diamond-studded, black-tie, $150-per-couple auction, which is held once every three years to raise money for the Museum.

Following a buffet dinner catered by Glorious Food of New York City — featuring seafood salad, rare roast beef, various kinds of breads and cheeses, and fresh strawberries — and music provided by Dow Jones Average combo, the bidding was begun at 9 p.m.

Among the items sold at Auction '83 were an Easter Egg Hunt for 50, which went for $2000, a Landscape Illumination which went for $2300, a ski trip to Colorado for $2500, an American miniature horse for $3600, a membership in the new Mission Country Club for $7500, an Old English Sheepdog puppy for $1350, an Arabian horse for $5500, and a party for 70, complete with bartending by Tom Brown, John Cox and Max Thomas for $21,000.

Other items included a Beauty Package, a San Antonio overnight, dinner with Roberta Peters, a wild goose hunt, trips to New York City, a hunting trip and box seats at the Kentucky Derby.

Bidding was also conducted by sealed bid and posted bid. Items sold by sealed bid included limited edition prints, make-over course, jewelry boxes, custom shirts, diamond earrings and French cyrstal bowl. Posted bidding included such items as a Colorado weekend, trip to the Swiss Riviera, color TV, Song Dynasty plate, a work-over week at the Greenhouse and a fur coat.

Over 120 items were auctioned off to the highest bidder during the evening.

The auctioneer was Larry Wooten, and Master of Ceremonies was George W. Bush. Callers were Ron Hughes, Bill Shaner and Charlie Welch. Chairman of the Auction '83 committee was Mrs. Sid Curle.

All proceeds raised by Auction '83 will go to the Museum of the Southwest.

Auctioneer Larry Wooten opened Auction '83 with bidding on the Old English Sheepdog puppy, which was sold for $1350. The three-month-old puppy was donated to the auction by Mr. and Mrs. Joseph I. O'Neill III.

Before the auction, the glittering crowd of 630 Midlanders enjoyed the buffet dinner catered by Glorious Food of New York City, and the music provided by Dow Jones Average combo.

Paris fashions great for girl-watchers

By CAROLYN LESH
AP Writer

PARIS (AP) — Judging from this year's Paris high fashion styles, spring and summer shape up to be seasons for girl-watchers.

Plunging necklines, bared knees, snug waists, spiked heels and slits sometimes as high as the thigh have been key themes among the 23 haute couture houses participating in the week-long collections that end today.

The revealing styles on Paris runways have brought loud cheers from men in the audience and more than one sigh from women with a few pounds to hide.

Recent showings were no exception. Collections by Yves Saint Laurent, Givenchy, Guy Laroche and Serge Lepage all emphasized the slim silhouette.

Saint Laurent kept his title as the king of Paris haute couture with 134 outfits stressing a well-defined feminine shape. The look was applauded repeatedly by an audience that included French actress Catherine Deneuve.

The 46-year-old bespectacled designer teamed pencil-thin skirts with double-breasted jackets that had wide shoulders and lapels.

The suits, sometimes in pin stripes with a white handkerchief for the upper pocket, were feminized with see-though blouses, cinched waists, derriere-hugging hips and skirts that showed off the leg.

Saint Laurent was fond of skirts and dresses that buttoned down the front, sometimes stopping around thigh level. He also put kangaroo-sized pockets on many of his dresses.

Another typical Saint Laurent daytime look was a long belted tunic over a straight skirt. One such outfit featured a burgundy leather skirt, turquoise jersey tunic and violet coat with accents of orange and red.

Saint Laurent also used vivid yellows, greens, purples and pinks in flowered prints for ruffled satin crepe afternoon dresses that hugged the derriere. Three-inch high heels in the same flowered pattern accompanied the dresses. Rhinestone ankle bracelets were de rigueur with all outfits.

Those low pinky heels that have been so popular in recent years seem to be on their way out along with romantic full-skirted evening gowns.

The general trend for the twilight hours has been short, sexy black cocktail dresses and glimmering slinky long gowns showing a lot of skin.

Four Midland women compete in annual contest

Four Midlanders will compete in the annual Young Career Woman contest at the Greentree Country Club at 6 p.m. The event is sponsored by the Uptown chapter of the Business and Professional Women's Club.

The Young Career Woman award is an annual project designed to recognize and honor women between the ages of 21 and 30, who are involved in business or professions. The program and its supporters encourage the young aspiring professionals to continue career achievement and personal development.

YCW recipients from each BPW chapter represent individual clubs at a district conference. The district honoree participates in a state YCW program and the state winner represents Texas at a national convention.

Judging is based on resumes, personal interviews, a brief prepared speech on any topic and on a round table discussion evaluation.

Melissa Hursch is secretary to the vice president of property management of HBF Corp. World champion rodeo star will take time out for college

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — A deal's a deal, and the one that Jan Hansen of Tucson made with her father a year ago turned out to be the deal of a lifetime.

Her father agreed to haul her around the country to compete in rodeos if she agreed to go to college when the season was over.

As a result of the pact, the 18-year-old barrel racer was crowned world champion during the National Finals Rodeo in Oklahoma City in December.

"I'll never have an opportunity like that again," she said, giving most of the credit for her success to her folks, who traveled with her and her horse, Bandit.

Three years ago, as a rookie, she said she passed up a lot of rodeos, opting to go fishing.

"It was dad who really wanted me to turn pro, but I just didn't want to leave my friends that first year," Miss Hansen said.

Even though she only entered 30 rodeos her rookie year, she finished the 1980 season ranked 16th in the world, just $120 short of qualifying for a chance at the world championship. Only the top of 15 places are eligible to compete in the National Finals Rodeo.

"I decided my second year that my goal was to at least qualify for the National Finals Rodeo. I saw the list of girls who I would be riding against, and I never dreamed I'd make it," she said.

But with her mind more on the business at hand and the support of her folks, Miss Hansen qualified and nearly won it all her second year.

By the end of the 1981 season, she was ranked second in the world.

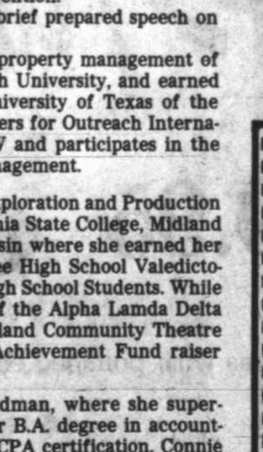

"Toward the end of that season, when I was winning a lot, I guess it kind of went to my head and I got a little over-confident. It just seemed too easy. Now I know it isn't," she said.

"I started out this year really terrible," she said. "I kept knocking over barrels and just couldn't get started. Then I relaxed a little and started to have fun, not even thinking about what place I was in the standings."

That was the key.

Going into the national finals competition, Miss Hansen had a comfortable lead over second-place contender, Lee Ann Guilkey of Glendale.

"But I didn't think I had it won until I took second place during the second go-around," Miss Hansen said.

Midland, Odessa AAUW to hold joint brunch meeting

Five women from Midland and Odessa will address the theme, "Women in the Eighties in West Texas," at a joint brunch meeting of the Midland and Odessa Branches of the American Association of University Women to be held from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. February 19 in the Midland Woman's Club.

Pam Leibrock, legislative chairman of the Midland Branch, states, "Each panel member will emphasize the activities and accomplishments of women in her profession, and discuss areas of current opportunities and problems, as well as potentials for growth."

Panel members will be Sara Ames, women's special services officer, Texas-American Bank; Janis Booth, director of counseling, Odessa College; Jan Fisher, Ector County judge; Sonja Haynie, owner of Sonja's Gallery in Odessa, and Isabel Rey, guidance parent trainer, bilingual program of the Midland Independent School District.

Ms. Ames is a graduate of Southern Methodist University with a B.A. in business and marketing. She has been with Texas-American Bank in Houston and Midland and also has worked as the bank's corporate services representative and marketing assistant.

Ms. Booth has a B.A. in history from Millsaps College, an M.S. in counseling psychology, University of Southern Mississippi, and has completed some graduate work in law at the University of Mississippi School of Law. She has led workshops in stress management, marriage enrichment, assertiveness training, career decision making and play therapy.

Ms. Fisher has a B.S. in speech from The University of Texas-Austin, M.A. in education, Texas Tech University and The University of Texas-Permian Basin, and a Juris Doctorate, St. Mary's University School of Law. In private practice she specialized in family law, business litigation and oil and gas law. She has been an assistant county attorney for Ector County.

Ms. Haynie received a B.A. in art from Texas Tech and completed her M.F.A. at Instituto de Allende, San Miguel, Mexico. She has been an art teacher in the Odessa public schools, Odessa College, UTPB and the Instituto de Allende.

Currently president of the Casa de Amigos board of directors, Ms. Rey has a degree in secondary education with English and Spanish as teaching fields from The University of Texas-El Paso. She is a member of the Child Welfare Board, Midland County, and steering committee of the 1980 Hispanic Woman's State Conference.

Jane Clancy Huddleston, director of the Children's Vocal Institute, director-member of the First Christian Church Choir, Trinity Belles and teacher of choir at Trinity School, will be performing "Songs of Spring and Love."

Members and prospective members may call 683-9807 for reservations, which must be made by Monday.

Any woman holding a baccalaureate degree from an accredited university or college is eligible for membership in AAUW. For information, call 694-0258.

Dress up favorite cheese fondu

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

SUPPER FARE
Fondu & Waldorf Salad
Brownies & Coffee

CHEESE FONDU

12 slices bread
½ pound cheddar cheese, sliced
½ pound cooked ham, diced (½ by ¼-inch squares)
4-ounce can chopped green chilies, drained
4 large eggs
2½ cups milk
½ teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon prepared mustard

Leave the crusts on the bread or cut them off, just as you like. Arrange 6 slices of the bread in the bottom of a buttered 2-quart baking dish (13½ by 8¾ by 1¾-inches). Cover with the cheese, then the ham and chilies, finally the remaining bread. In a medium mixing bowl beat the eggs slightly; add milk, salt and mustard and beat to combine; pour over the bread in the baking dish. Let stand 1 hour. Bake in a preheated 325-degree oven for 1 hour. Makes 6 servings.

Different, delicious sole recipe

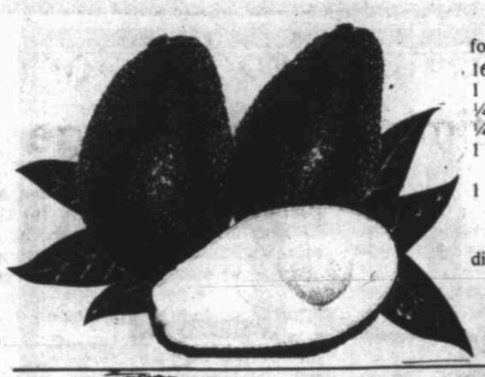

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

BAKED SOLE

2 skinless sole fillets, about 1½ pounds
Juice of ½ medium lemon
2 tablespoons butter
1 small onion, finely chopped (¼ cup)
¼ pound mushrooms, finely chopped
1-3rd cup heavy cream
2 tablespoons Parmesan cheese, grated

Sprinkle fillets with lemon juice, salt and pepper. In a 10-inch skillet, over medium heat in the hot butter, cook onions until wilted, stirring often. Add mushrooms; cook briskly, stirring constantly, until liquid evaporates. Stir in cream. In a shallow 1½-quart buttered baking dish arrange fillets in a single layer. Add cream mixture and sprinkle with cheese. Bake in a preheated 425-degree oven until fish flakes easily and is opaque — 10 minutes. Serve at once. Sauce will be thin. Makes 4 small servings.

Guacamole dip made from frozen pulp

Here is a simple, easy recipe for Guacamole Dip:

16 oz. tin avocado pulp
1 teaspoon seasoned salt
¼ cup frozen lemon juice
¼ teaspoon hot sauce to taste
1 medium tomato, chopped fine
1 small onion, grated (optional)

Combine and chill all ingredients. Serve with corn chips.

'Pac Man Epilepsy' cases no cause for alarm, doctors stress

By JOANN RODGERS
Hearst Feature Service

As word spread of the first U.S. cases of "Pac Man Epilepsy," a specialist in childhood seizure disorders said there is no cause for alarm among patients or their families.

"The solution is simple," according to Dr. John Freeman. "Those relatively few individuals with epilepsy who are susceptible to photic (light) stimulation should avoid the games or switch to games that transmit light at different frequencies."

Freeman, director of pediatric neurology at Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore and head of the Hopkins Seizure Clinic, scoffed at the notion of issuing warnings about the hazards of videogames at home or in arcades.

"I really can't see signs that say Pac Man may be hazardous to your health," Freeman said.

"Far less than 5 percent of the 2 million people with seizure disorders are sensitive to flickering or bright lights. And those who are generally know about it because flickering light probably precipitated their first seizure."

FREEMAN'S VIEWS were sought after the Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minn., reported epileptic seizures in two 15-year-old boys.

One of the boys had played video games for a year before one of games, Combat, left him dazed and with one hand twitching. Six weeks later, while playing PacMan at home, he had a full-blown seizure.

The other boy had a severe seizure while playing PacMan.

Mayo neurologists Donald Klass and James Mellinger were quoted as saying the flickering lights emitted on the screens by the games were responsible for the seizures.

Both boys were treated at the clinic and told to avoid the games in the future. Two similar cases have been reported in England.

FREEMAN SAID it has long been known that a small percentage of those with seizure disorders are especially sensitive to light that flickers at relatively slow frequencies.

Moreover, he said, different people are susceptible to different frequencies. Cases have been published in which epilepsy has been triggered by strobe lights in discos and on television screens.

The first scientific evidence of epileptic seizures sparked by light was published more than a century ago.

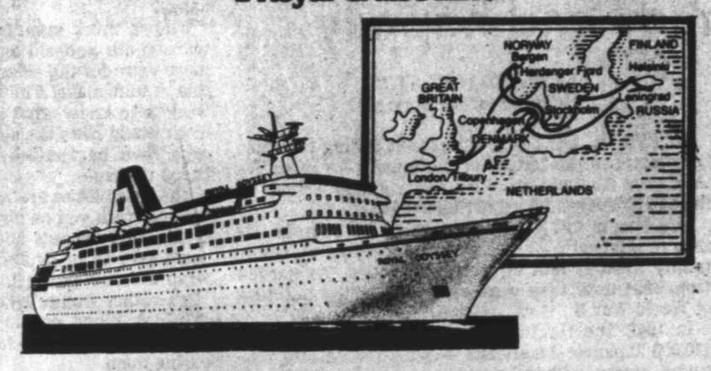

Today, neurologists believe the attacks occur because the light stimulates groups of cells in the brain to synchronize their action and "fire" off a large burst of electrical energy.

Those suspected of photic epilepsy are often advised to have the test done, Freeman said. For those who play PacMan and other video games, any unusual symptoms should be a signal to stop or switch to another type of game.

"Or," he concluded, "they might find something else to do beside play PacMan."

AT WIT'S END

Child-proofing impossible

By ERMA BOMBECK

There is a notation with my pharmacist that I not only prefer to have my prescription filled in a container where the cap screws on, but it is imperative to my mental health.

The child-proof safety cap combined with my mid-life crisis was just too much for me to handle. (Some say it's redundant.)

I can't think of anything that has caused the older generation more consternation during the past decade than these caps. It's one of the reasons why some women refused to have another child. They didn't mind the long exhausting days and the sleepless nights, the money, the stomach muscles that sagged around the knees. It was the thought of having to go through another period of asking their two-year-old to help them get the top off their Valium.

The biggest complaint came from the elderly who couldn't begin to get the child-proof caps off without running over them with a wheelchair.

Now, manufacturers are at work trying to perfect a one-size-fits-all cap.

Good luck.

In 30 years, I have never seen anything that is child-proof. The strength of a two-year-old is awesome. There is no couch that cannot be moved by them, given the incentive of a dust-covered sucker underneath it. There is no garage door too heavy that contains Daddy's electric drill and paint brushes that cannot be raised. There is no cupboard too high for them to scale with the promise of a banana on the top shelf.

I have seen small children pull bubblegum machines down to their level, lift an 80-pound dog on the dining room table or bend a roof TV antenna with their bare hands.

I don't think manufacturers will ever be able to serve youth and old age at the same time. It makes more sense for the elderly to Rent-a-Kid. What a union that would make! The senior group would have the wisdom to know what is safe and what isn't and the child would have the strength to open their revolving caps, their hermetically sealed combs and laminated bacon packages.

The possibilities are limitless. You could take a two-year-old with you on airline trips to open the package of unsalted peanuts and just think of the lives they could save by being able to start a new roll of plastic wrap without tearing it.

It's rather ironic, isn't it, that the ones who caused the high blood pressure, headaches, dizziness and blurred vision in the first place are now capable of curing them.

Tea Garden history may end happily

By DAVID JOHNSTON
Hearst Feature Service

SAN FRANCISCO — A bittersweet ending to a painful chapter in the history of the famous Japanese Tea Garden in Golden Gate Park may soon be written by the San Francisco Board of Supervisors.

The board will consider whether to compensate George Hagiwara, 78, and his 69-year-old sister, whose family lived at and virtually developed the garden from 1894 until they were evicted after the outbreak of World War II.

In 1942, the Hagiwaras — along with more than 110,000 Japanese-Americans — were forced into relocation camps without charges or hearings, although most were U.S. citizens. The Hagiwaras never recovered the garden nor their investment of toil, time and money.

This week, the supervisors' Civil Service and General Administration Committee approved a payment of up to $5,000 apiece for Hagiwara and his sister for the war years they spent in an internment camp in Utah.

"It's our way of saying what was done was wrong," said Supervisor Louise Renne, who introduced the compensation measure for the Hagiwaras. "We think the Japanese Tea Garden is important to San Francisco, and we think the Hagiwara family is, too."

Starting with the small Tea Garden built during the 1894 California Midwinter International Exposition, Hagiwara's grandfather supervised and paid for many plantings, dug and stocked the lakes and even built a 10-room house at the rear of the grounds.

When his grandather died in 1925, Hagiwara's father took over.

DEAR ABBY

Woman gets needle for gift

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: This year I decided to make my own Christmas gifts. Abby, I worked my tail off crocheting toilet-paper covers for some of my special friends.

I made one for a woman I used to work with, using the color scheme of her bathroom. I bought a roll of very nice toilet paper and put it inside the hand-crocheted cover, gift-wrapped it and gave it to her before Christmas.

She never mentioned it, so after Christmas I asked her how she liked my gift, and she said she didn't care for it and I should not have included the toilet paper. Plus, she said her mother could have made the same thing!

Abby, if I get something I don't like, I would not be so rude as to tell the giver I didn't care for it. I was hurt, disgusted and disappointed. Everybody else liked the covers but her.

Do you think it was wrong of me to have included the toilet paper with the cover? And since she said she didn't care for my gift, should I ask her to return it? I'm sure I could find someone else to give it to. — HURT

DEAR HURT: One as ungracious, ill-mannered and insensitive as your co-worker shows herself to be needs sympathy. To have included the toilet paper with your gift was, I think, a thoughtful gesture. Don't ask her to return it, but if the subject comes up, offer to take it off her hands.

DEAR ABBY: Sheldon and I have been married for three years. Every year our parents exchange Christmas gifts, so Sheldon and I carry the gifts from his parents to mine, and vice versa.

My mother-in-law always makes jam as her gift for my parents. And my mother sends homemade Christmas cookies to my in-laws. She packs them in very pretty cookie tins.

This year when my mother-in-law handed me the jam for my parents, she asked me when my mother was going to send "her" jam jars back. Abby, I didn't know you were supposed to return jam jars, did you? These jars were nothing special — just plain, ordinary mason jars.

My mother never expected to get her cookie tins back. Please let me know. — MRS. GO-BETWEEN

DEAR MRS.: It's my understanding that when one gives jam, the jar is part of the gift (same as the cookie tin). However, since your mother-in-law expects the jam jars to be returned, pass the word on to your mother.

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I are having a difference of opinion. This is the second Christmas we received a half-dead poinsettia plant from an out-of-state sender.

The plants were sent by my husband's boss, who is known for his generosity and grand style. Of course, we don't know how much he paid for the plant, but we are almost sure he is being ripped off.

My husband says we should thank his boss for the "beautiful" plant, and let it go. I say we should let the sender know that the plant was puny, wilted and definitely third-rate. What do you say? — POST-XMAS HASSLE

DEAR HASSLE: I vote with you. If you had been the sender, wouldn't you want to be told?

CONFIDENTIAL TO BETTY F. IN PRYOR, OKLA.: Yes, it's the glow from within that creates beauty. People are like stained glass windows; they sparkle like crystal in the sun. But when darkness falls, they continue to shine only if there's a light from within.

(You're never too old (or too young) to learn how to make friends and be popular. For Abby's booklet on Popularity, send $1, plus a long, self-addressed, stamped (37 cents) envelope to Abby, Popularity, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

Age discrimination

By DR. ADELE M. SCHEELE

Q — As a woman in her 50s with many years in law office administration, I am looking for a new job due to a merger. The problem is, I'm meeting up with age discrimination. How can I handle this?

A — Though the law says you can't be discriminated against because of your age, you know you can. One way to beat it (aside from actually bringing suit against someone), is to confront it. Say that your age provides you with years of terrific experience in working with lawyers, secretaries and paralegals, of all ages and egos, as well as with several different systems.

Explain that you are completely familiar with state codes, court procedures, and the sensitive lawyer-client relationship. Also define what new administrative procedures you have learned, say computerized methods. Then look your best, not necessarily your youngest. Get a new suit, new haircut, even go to a trustworthy cosmetic salon for a make-up lesson to be the most beautiful and gracious you can be.

Q — I have a gas station in a good business area and want to operate it more successfully. I offer what the average station does. What else should I do?

A — Don't be average. If no other station around provides a towing service, you do it. Borrow money to buy a tow truck, paint it a bright color, and advertise in the yellow pages. Inside a year you should have made good on your investment. Also, consider getting a terrific mechanic to service cars and promote him. If you are a franchise, ask headquarters for promotional ideas that the 20 best stations have used. Don't hold back.

Q — I am a 63-year-old secretary working for a school board. I have never supported union activities before, but I got caught up in our teachers' strike this year. I believe in their cause and have not crossed their picket line. I just found out that my retirement will be in jeopardy if I continue to stay out. I can't risk that but also don't want to betray them and be a "scab." What should I do?

A — Before you write everything off, go to the union officers and plead your case. Tell them that as a secretary you have supported the teachers' fight for higher salaries and improved conditions at some inconvenience to you.

But tell them that your staying out these last few years of working are the ones that will have a negative effect on your retirement. Ask if the union wins their settlement, will they pay the difference in your retirement? Chances are, of course, that they won't — but the act of asking may ease your own plight.

Tell some of the teachers on the picket lines your story, wish them luck, and protect yourself by going back to work.

Be prepared for the harsh words and unpardonable behavior, anything from insulting remarks to some totally ignoring you. Any act that makes us stand out is a risk.

Make tangy sauce

CRAB APPLE SAUCE

A tangy relish for meat.

½ pound crab apples (about 12)
½ cup water
¼ cup sugar

Remove stems and blossom ends from crab apples; do not pare; quarter. Bring to a boil with the water; cook over moderately low heat until mushy. Force through a food mill, discarding residue. Stir sugar into crab apple puree. Chill. Makes one cup.

Changes in medical teaching sought

By JOHN JACOBS
Hearst Feature Service

SAN FRANCISCO — A prestigious national medical commission has been told that pre-med students have become "nerds" who get terrific grades in science but don't know how to be human beings.

"They are seen by themselves and others as narrow, aggressive, anxiety-ridden, unfriendly and dishonest," said Dr. Robert Cutler, associate dean for medical education at Stanford Medical School, who was summarizing a recent study by Dr. Saul Rosenberg, a professor of medicine at the school.

"Are the long-term consequences, 'Once a nerd, always a nerd?' "

That question was posed dramatically at the University of California here, before an 18-member panel of physician-educators hearing testimony for a three-year study for the American Association of Medical Colleges. The hearing was the first of four the panel will conduct around the country.

AMONG THE questions the panel is examining are: Are the basic sciences too heavily emphasized? Are students taught to learn by rote, rather than by using conceptual skills? Is the whole medical system — from pre-med to residency — so stacked toward academic achievement, national quantitative exams and competition for grades, prized internships and sophisticated super-specialities that the broad humanity needed to practice medicine and relate to patients get squeezed out?

One of the most important things the panel will consider is how to prepare physicians for the explosion of technical knowledge that is happening in medicine.

"Thirty to 50 years ago, you could turn out a human being who was 'state of the art' and could stay there for the bulk of his career," said Dr. Steven Muller, chairman of the panel and president of Johns Hopkins University. "Today, that clearly is impossible — the frontiers of knowledge are being pushed back every few years. Part of the bigger problem is giving people the intellectual and professional tools to continue to learn what is new in their fields."

"With the scientific revolution," added Dr. Rudi Schmit, dean-designate for UCSF's school of medicine, "there has to be specialization; it's unavoidable. But it doesn't solve the problem that a human being is sick as a whole human being, not as a single tissue. And the more we specialize, the more the patient will suffer by not having the kind of physician he needs to take care of his sickness."

STANFORD'S Rosenberg said pre-meds in the first two years saw themselves as "more anxious, motivated, organized and harassed" than others. By their third and fourth years, he said, they began to see the negative characteristics described by non premeds:

"Less socially involved or politically aware, less kind, humane, creative, honest. They are forced into this behavior by factual perceptions and misconceptions that only grades and recommendation will get you in. It feeds on itself, so you create the most competitive application you can."

An alternate medical school was described by Dr. John Baumber, associate dean at the University of Calgary, Canada, where the average age of first-year med students is 25, where interviews and letters of recommendation are emphasized, rather than grades and test scores, and where courses in the humanities and social sciences are encouraged.

AT CALGARY, formal learning time has been reduced by half, to 24 hours a week. Class standing is not used in awarding grants or residency positions. Epidemiology, preventive medicine and medical ethics are part of the curriculum, and students are encouraged to spend 50 percent of their clinical time with ambulatory patients, rather than in a high-technology hospital setting.

'M*A*S*H's' cast in mourning over show's demise

Copley News Service

HOLLYWOOD — It has become not unlike the hype of a Super Bowl. What's going to happen in the finale? Who's going to win? Who's going to lose? What are the players saying about the spectacle? What's going to happen after the season ends?

Football? No, this is "M*A*S*H," which has become as much a part of American life as football. If they took away football, what would we all do on Saturday and Sunday afternoons? For many of us, Monday nights in autumn also would become desolate.

Alan Alda

Mondays will be more like a moonscape for millions of viewers after Feb. 28. That's the night the final episode of "M*A*S*H" will be aired. It has been expanded to 2½ hours for a couple of reasons. They have a lot of decent footage they want to use (no use saving it now), and CBS will be able to sell another 30 minutes of high-profit commercial time.

The "M*A*S*H" cast and executives have been talking about the death of their 11-year-old child, and there are lots of rumors floating around about the final episode and the future of Hawkeye Pierce and Company.

Alan Alda (Hawkeye): "When the war is over I'm going home and sleep for six months. Then I'm going to Europe and sleep for a year. Everybody on the set said they had trouble sleeping on our last night before the end (of shooting).

"It's changed my life. It's given me a chance to develop as a writer and an actor and a director. The 'M*A*S*H' legacy is 250 episodes. How much will I miss it? How much will I miss an arm?

"We're stopping before we reach a point where we have nothing more to say. Not every show was a gem, but we had a very high average. We're stopping out of respect for the work we've done until now."

Loretta Swit (Margaret Houlihan): "I'm not doing well (crying a lot). I remember the pilot. I remember before the pilot. We hugged each other a lot this week (the final week of work). We kissed a lot. We had difficulty all week, taking turns falling apart.

"We talked about what we were going to do when school was out. I think I need a mourning period."

Mike Farrell (B.J. Hunnicutt): "Obviously, you meet an occasion like this with great ambivalence. When it becomes manifest, you meet it with a feeling of relief. You want to find out what's going to happen next.

"We will all be in touch and will still be friends, but there are demands on time in this business. So it really will be goodbye. As for me, I may go fishing for now.

"I'm not interested in a series for a while. I won't say never — that's a long time. There are some things I'm looking at, but I'm not interested in carrying on the character of B.J.

"About the 'M*A*S*H' movie finale, we're not seeking a surprise or trick ending. But this is a story of the fate of seven people, so there will be seven endings.

"Today shows aren't given time to build an audience. If 'M*A*S*H' had been treated that way, it probably would have failed.

"We (the cast) had a vote a year ago on whether to end 'M*A*S*H.' I voted to quit. I felt the show had said what it wanted to say. We had explored every line possible. I won't tell you how the other six voted."

It's not much of a secret, B.J. The vote was 4-3 with Harry Morgan (Sherman Potter), Jamie Farr (Maxwell Klinger) and William Christopher (John Mulcahy) casting their ballots to keep "M*A*S*H" alive. The other four turned thumbs down, and the will of the majority ruled.

John Rappaport, supervising producer: "There will be spin-offs for the cast. There is at the moment a planned series by CBS and producers Larry Gelbart (who wrote for "Your Show of Shows") and Burt Metcalfe (a regular "M*A*S*H" writer).

Thouvenel String Quartet performs Czech music

A Review

THOUVENEL String Quartet

Conductor of the Goteborg, Sweden, orchestra from 1856 to 1861, Bohemian composer Bedrich Smetana became conductor of the National Theatre in Prague in 1866. He resigned this position in 1874, not out of choice but necessity. He went deaf.

Saturday the Thouvenel String Quartet treated its audience to an artistically fulfilling evening of Czech music featuring works by the founders of the Czech national school of music, Smetana and Antonin Dvorak.

Smetana's work performed, String Quartet No. 1 in E-minor, "From My Life," was written in 1876. It is an autobiographical piece, one which chronicles the composer's artistic desires in his younger days as well as a forewarning of what the future held in store in its first movement.

The second movement represents Smetana's cheerful reminiscences of his youth. The third is a lifetime love song dealing with the bliss of first love. In this case, Smetana's first love became his wife.

Smetana himself wrote program notes for this work. Of the fourth movement he writes, "Joy of achievement...until the terrifying high note rings in my ears as a premonition of my cruel fate — the deafness which has cut me off from the blessing of my art. Submission to fate...and a time ray of hope for a better future."

It would not be fair to review a performance of this work on its first hearing. Although a powerful work with passages which are quite moving, the piece contains certain dissonant sounds which must be heard more than once to be properly appreciated.

The listener does sense the range of feelings from melancholy to gaiety which the work expresses. The tiny ray of hope the composer refers to at the end was not heard. Instead, this listener was left with the sense of one without hope.

And in fact, Smetana's future included a mental breakdown followed by incarceration in an asylum where he died in 1884. He was 60 years old.

Born in 1841, Dvorak was much influenced by Smetana and Brahms during his life. His career began when he became a viola player in 1862 at the Czech National Theater, which was founded in that same year. It was at this time that he began composing. His own greatest critic, he burned the scores of most of the works he had composed in 1873.

In 1891, Dvorak became professor of musical composition at the Prague Conservatory until he was offered the job of director of the National Conservatory of Music in New York City. He held this position from 1892 to 1895. It was during the time he lived in the United States that he wrote his well-known symphony, "From the New World."

Dvorak's work performed by the Thouvenel was his Piano Quintet in A Major, Opus 81. Guest artist with the Thouvenel for this selection was Karen Follingstad.

Dvorak's first movement begins with abandoned sound and fury before melting into a sentimental vein. The second movement fluctuates rapidly between a fast, light and airy beat and a slower melancholy tone. At one transition point it seemed as if the players almost let the piece run away, but their recovery was so quick and complete that it then seemed the sensation had been merely an illusion.

The third movement, a quick dance in ¾ meter with changing rhythms, contains within its quick, vivacious notes, the sound of raindrops. The fourth movement carries the listener first to a yearning sensation, then benediction, before closing on an uplifting beat.

Miss Follingstad's performance was technically sound and artistically bright. The quintet's playing in this work was outstanding with all five complimenting one another.

Once again, we are fortunate to have this caliber of quartet based in Midland.

Artist to have one-man show at The Oaks

Western artist Raul Gutierrez of San Antonio will have a one-man show at The Oaks' grand opening today through Sunday.

The Oaks is the new real estate development at Green Tree. All festivities this weekend will be held in the development's show home at 4800 Oriole Drive.

Gutierrez's works sell in galleries throughout the Southwest. His private collectors include the late Lyndon B. Johnson, Barry Goldwater, John Connally and the former president of Mexico, Miguel Aleman.

Wildlife and Western scenes depicting the rugged yet serene beauty of Texas' landscapes are typical examples of Gutierrez's work. A former illustrator for the United States Army, Gutierrez has also worked as a political cartoonist for the San Antonio Light.

A percentage of the profits from the one-man show will go to the Museum of the Southwest. For more information on the show and The Oaks' grand opening call Langston/Monarch Associates at 682-9495.

110-year-old man believes in work ethic

ROGANVILLE, Texas (AP) — To talk with Lee Baltimore is to take a journey back in time to a Texas of illegal slavery, of toiling on the land and of happy memories.

Lee Baltimore remembers all that and more — not as detailed and accurately perhaps as he did 50 or 60 years ago, but at 110, it is his eyes that are failing, not his mind.

Baltimore was born Jan. 2, 1873, on a large farm near Woodville. The son of slave parents who were not married, Baltimore was sent away from what family he had, to live with another white family.

He took on the name of his father, John Baltimore, who was abandoned by his owner in East Texas and named after the city in Maryland believed to be his birthplace. Baltimore said he was almost grown before he was told who his parents were.

"They didn't like you to know your people," Baltimore said, resting his hands on his soil-weighted khaki pants. "They thought if you knowed where your people was, you'd run off, so they'd never tell you anything. Even after slave times, colored folks was traded like cattle."

Baltimore said although slavery was supposed to be abolished by the Civil War, it continued throughout East Texas.

"We wasn't free then," he said. "We weren't turned aloose (after the war). Fact is, we ain't got quite aloose yet."

The old man did not relate stories of abuse and mistreatment he received by his white owners during his time of servitude. For Baltimore, the worst aspect of the situation was not being allowed to worship God.

"In them days, colored folks didn't have no church. When the church (between Woodville and Jasper) first started, people came from 100 miles away," Baltimore said. Work was his life, "and if I had any time left to study, I studied God."

As a young man, Baltimore was free to leave his home to take a job as a waiter for timber baron John Henry Kirby. He then left for Silsbee, where he worked for a doctor. He became a nurse, tending to the local sick of all colors.

Longtime friend Frand Means of Jasper said Baltimore became so respected as a nurse that during World War I, he was sent to Houston to provide medical treatment to soldiers at the Veterans Hospital.

During his life, Baltimore has also been a logger, a baseball player, a farmer and a railroad hand. "I laid steel with four white men (working as subordinates). And I could lay a carload of (railroad) ties in one day. A colored man could work (as employer) with a white man, if he don't boss him."

Baltimore is a true believer in the work ethic. "You got to go to working 'cause if you sit around and do nothing, you'll soon die. Your blood will stop circulating," he said.

As by way of demonstration, Baltimore stands and begins flexing his shoulders and thrusting his arms downward. He then tenses and relaxes his fingers several times and smiles, his warm-up exercises completed.

The weathered old man then picks up his guitar — an old, battered instrument with an electrical pickup for a non-existent amplifier. He wails out "What Would I Do Without the Lord," hitting chords, sliding his strong fingers down the fret board and settling for slapping the face of the guitar when the proper chords won't come.

"At night, music will keep you from worrying. You can't have something on your mind and play," he said.

"I'm going to get me another (guitar) after a while," Baltimore said. He ambles over to the piano, sits down and closes his eyes, rocking side to side as he sings of the rewards of Heaven. The look of approval on the faces of his audience is all that is needed to prompt an encore.

"I started playing the piano when...I guess I was about 97," Baltimore said. "When I bought it, my children said an old man can't learn nothing. But I did," he said, a smile of satisfaction moving across his face. "When I went blind (from cataracts in 1981), they said I couldn't housekeep, but just go out there and look at that garden."

He has reason to be pleased with his garden. Baltimore's 50-acre tract at the end of a red-dirt road near Jasper is striped by rows of corn, peas, okra and potatoes. He works the fields with a horse-drawn plow — the way he learned to work them so many years ago.

He finds the less sophisticated way of the farmer more enjoyable.

AP Laserphoto

Lee Baltimore strums a guitar from the comfort of his bed on his farm near Roganville. Baltimore, 110, has held a variety of jobs during his long life.

"I like to plow. Somebody gave it (a tractor) to me, but I gave it back. It gets you down, you see, 'cause it gets down and tears up and you have to pay somebody more than it's worth to fix it," he said.

Baltimore had someone pick most of his crop last year because of his blindness. "My children wanted me to quit after they left. But I brought in five or six bales of cotton by myself the next year." He decided that the 1982 crop would be his last, however.

He gave away most of what he harvested each year, but not to just anyone. The spiritual satisfaction of giving varies "according to who you give it to. I don't fool with people who don't work, and I don't fool with sinners."

Across from the house and barn Baltimore built himself some 70 years ago stands an equally old building he plans to open this year as a school. "It will be a place to learn children how to plow and hoe," he said.

"You know, a panic (in the economy) is the worst thing in the world. If they (the children) can take the land and raise some peas and cornbread, they can live. It (the building) ain't going to be for dancing. It's for discussing."

Baltimore was married for more than 70 years to Emma Baltimore. He had seven children, five by his wife. "Colored people didn't know nothing about marrying back then. White folks got married; colored men had common-law wives."

His attitude about society speak of another era.

"Poor people can't have the same as rich people. The rich will be over the poor all the days of your life," Baltimore said. "A poor man doesn't have sense enough to make arrangements for you. Rich people will take care of you just like you was one of their own, as long as you stay in your place."

Baltimore said people understand and respect a working man.

"A man's got to keep going. If you let people take care of you, you stop doing things for yourself and then, before you know it, you're in a nursing home. And you know what people in nursing homes do; they grieve themselves to death."

Baltimore doesn't know the secret to long life, only to his own. "I taken what the Bible says — I obeyed my mother and father and I stayed out of bad company. I drank some, but I learned how to drink," he said, indicating he never overdid it. "And I smoked for about 70 years."

When he developed some respiratory problems a few years ago, he went to Beaumont doctors for treatment. After spending about $2,000, he overheard his doctor telling another that Baltimore was in better shape than either one of them.

"And you know, they both died," Baltimore said, almost surprised that not everyone gets to be 110.

Man spirits away mannequin to lovers' lane

EL PASO (AP) — Police are looking for what may be a very lonely man. He's wanted on burglary charges. And police spotted him this week, parked on one of the city's popular lovers lanes.

But the man got away.

The police said they were "laughing too hard" — and for good reason.

Seems the man is suspected of stealing a female mannequin from a local formal wear shop earlier this week, along with tuxedo coat, hot pants and a ruffled shirt — and a male mannequin. but that's not what got the cops laughing.

You guessed it: the man was parked on the lovers lane. And yes, say police, he was lying in the back seat of a car, embracing the female mannequin.

Officers say they released the man and his plaster-of-paris paramour because they thought it was a gag. They didn't know about the burglary.

Bionetics Corp. asks celebrities to make donation to sperm bank

Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — The day of the surrogate mother is all but over. Dawning is the day of the celebrity sperm-donor.

So says the founder of Bionetics Corp.

More than 400 women wishing to be surrogate mothers have registered with the non-profit group, according to its founder, 40-year-old aerospace engineer John Stehura.

However, according to Stehura, even though use of surrogate mothers is now generating headlines, such a service will become obsolete within a few years.

"It's pretty obvious we're in a stage of transition in regard to biology," explained Stehura, who's a consultant to Hughes Aircraft. He thinks advances such as "embyro transplants" will be possible in the not-so-distant future.

Stehura said his organization is shifting away from the use of surrogate mothers and toward sperm donors.

Indeed, says Stehura, Bionetics is now "pursuing well-known people who are in athletics and in recent films" to act as sperm donors.

Though he declined to provide any names, he did say that celebrities who agree to participate in the program will probably receive "a couple of thousand dollars" for their contributions.

And those who have paid for the service will be getting a "guaranteed number of attempts" at a pregnancy.

However, Stehura hastened to add, not every sperm donor will be a film star or sports hero.

In an upcoming issue of the newsletter that he plans to publish in about two months, black-and-white photos of six to 12 prospective sperm donors who are regular fellows will be included. The recruitment of these donors, according to Stehura, involves recommendations by other people.

Unlike the celebrity donors, these gents will probably be paid $200 to $1,000.

Still, this fee is considerably more than that paid by other facilities, claimed Stehura. He estimated, "Normally a donor gets $45 or $50."

One of the reasons Bionetics is shifting from surrogate mothers to sperm donors, said Stehura, is because the sperm-donating service doesn't appear to be "as volatile" a media issue as the surrogate service.

In most cases, a sperm donor is sought when a husband is infertile.

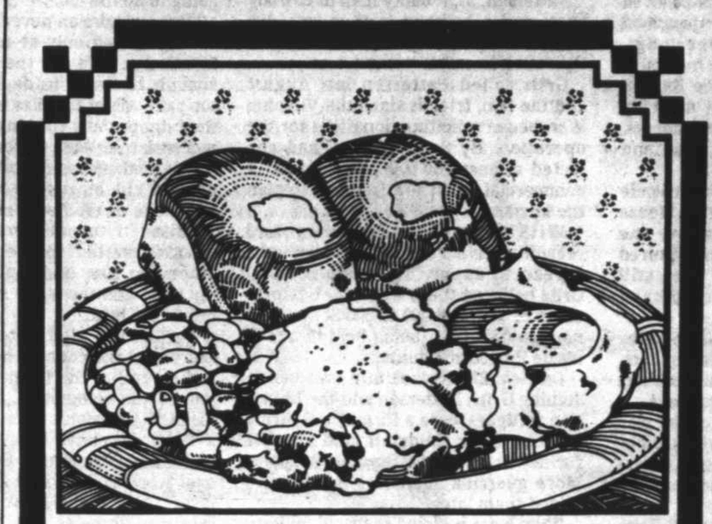

The surrogate mother listing service will not be completely phased out, Stehura said. In the issue containing photos of sperm donors, Stehura also is planning to run a few photographs of surrogate mothers.

But Bionetics will be moving away from serving as a source to serving as an information center, Stehura said.

Officers told to curtail arrests

HOUSTON (AP) — Police officers have been ordered to stop arresting citizens charged with minor offenses.

Police Chief Lee P. Brown told officers Tuesday to issue a citation, similar to a traffic ticket, requiring them to appear in Municipal Court.

Rescue mission thwarted by ambush

By The Associated Press

Four Americans in faded fatigues, carrying Uzi machine guns and 150-pound rucksacks, stood in the jungle of Thailand and looked across the Mekong River to Laos. A ragtag band of 15 Laotian refugees waited in the darkness for orders.

Abruptly at 11 p.m., the leader, a retired Green Beret who still wore a wrist bracelet bearing the name of an American POW, looked up.

"It's a good day to die," he said. "Let's go."

Operation Lazarus was under way.

Details of the November mission, designed to rescue Americans believed held prisoner in Laos, were described last week by ex-Green Beret Sgt. Charles Patterson, one of the four men. The operation, named for the Biblical character raised from the dead by Jesus, was financed by private donors, including actors Clint Eastwood and William Shatner.

It would have been a 14-day, 185-mile hike from Thailand through a dense forest to a cave in Laos, where the Americans thought 120 men captured during the Vietnam War were still being held by Laotian communist forces in Indochina.

But the mission ended the morning of the fourth day, in a clearing in Laos, when a platoon of communist soldiers ambushed the party, Patterson says.

The Pentagon was aware of the plan and had tried to dissuade the would-be rescuers, warning that the raid was illegal, the Defense Department has said.

Retired Lt. Col. James G. "Bo" Gritz, the leader of the raid, has acknowledged his participation and is reportedly back in Thailand planning a second mission.

Since the Vietnam war, the communist government in Hanoi has returned 591 American prisoners, but 2,494 other servicemen remain unaccounted for. U.S. officials believe most are dead, despite rumors since the end of the war that some were being held in Southeast Asia.

Similar rescue missions have been planned in the past. "Mission MIA," a novel written by Patterson's friend James C. Pollock, is based on two such attempts, one of which involved Patterson.

Patterson, 37, a bulky man in cowboy boots and a brushed leather vest, discussed the planning and execution of Operation Lazarus:

Gritz called Patterson last August and the two, friends since the Vietnam War, began soliciting donations for the operation. By Sept. 14 they had collected almost $50,000 and boarded a commercial flight for Thailand to plan the mission.

Within two months, they had recruited five guerrilla leaders, who agreed to supply 100 soldiers each. Gritz believed there were 120 U.S. prisoners of war and 400 to 500 South Vietnamese dissidents being held in a cave inside Phu Xun Mountain.

On Nov. 27, the trek into Laos began. Joining Gritz, Patterson and the 15 Laotian refugees were a former U.S. Army captain, Gary Goldman, and another former Green Beret, Dominic Zappone. More guerrilla fighters were to have joined them later.

They were wearing their old military uniforms, augmented by purchases from Army surplus stores. The crew also carried 50 first-aid kits for the POWs, $400,000 worth of communications equipment they said was donated by Litton Industries and cameras equipped for long-range and night photography.

"Our plan was to walk in and snatch the Americans," Patterson said. "Out of that 120 we only expected to get 12 out alive, due to their condition and the distance we would have to travel with them.

"President Reagan has said: 'You give me some hard facts and we'll go in and get 'em.' We were going to ask the U.S. government to come in and get them. But in the worst case, we were going to do the job.

"But our mission never got that far."

They moved only at night until the fourth day. "We felt the area was safe enough to travel in daylight," Patterson said. About 40 miles into the forest, they stopped at a clearing to make contact with their base in Thailand.

"We had no sooner sat down, and I popped the straps on my rucksack, when one of the Laotians yelled, 'communists!' I turned around and the shooting started. In the first burst of automatic fire, one round went over my head and the other stuck in a tree beside my head."

The group fled into the forest, regrouped and counted heads. Zappone and several of the Laotians were missing. In the commotion, Gritz had lost his POW bracelet.

Three days later, the group returned to Thailand. On Dec. 9, Gritz and Goldman went back to find Zappone. Gritz later paid $17,500 ransom for the return of Zappone, but Patterson said he did not know if Zappone had been freed.

Brown bears live on outskirts of Helsinki

HELSINKI, Finland (AP) — A diehard myth has it that you can bump into a polar bear at the Helsinki Bus Station.

That's fiction.

But wander a bit outside the Finnish capital, and your chances of coming across a big brown bear improve a lot.

Helsinki newspapers recently gave front-page coverage to reports of a bear roaming about the forest on the city's outskirts, less than 30 miles from the bus station, but experts said people shouldn't have been surprised.

"The stock of bears has strengthened in the past decade," said Dr. Erik Nyholm of the Finnish Game Research Institute. "Some of them have even been in the southernmost parts of the country all the time, but people haven't realized it.

"The problem is that it is very difficult to spot them. They move in a very wide area, and few people can read the marks they leave on the ground."

Experts estimate that about 350 bears live in Finland, at least 10 of them moving about in the forests of the urbanized south. Helsinki is on the country's southeastern Baltic coast.

Until the late 1960s, hunters could shoot bear from snowmobiles, which game officials blamed for serious depletion of the bear stock. The vehicles were banned for most hunting a decade ago, however, and the stock has increased steadily.

Nyholm told the Associated Press the animal never has been close to extinction in Finland, despite claims to that effect.

"Human attitudes have actually beset the bear most;there were those who demanded that all bears must live and those who said all of them must be killed," he said.

"Now, I think, we are getting closer to a more balanced situation, where the extremes are falling off and the bear is given a chance to thrive but not to proliferate."

Current rules allow hunting of all except she-bears with cubs along the Soviet border and in Lapland under certain conditions.

Bear used to be a delicacy in restaurants, but it generally disappeared from the table after discovery of strychnine-tainted bear meat a few years ago.

School system wants diner

BALTIMORE (AP) — If all goes as planned, Baltimore will have a "movie star" permanently stationed two blocks from City Hall.

Preparations are under way to move the 67-seat diner featured in the movie "Diner" from New Jersey, where it was taken after filming was completed.

Radio station WBAL bought the stainless-steel diner for $34,000 and plans to use it for vocational education students in Baltimore's school system. The diner would be run by students, giving them the opportunity to gain credits and experience in the restaurant field.

Planners say once a title search is completed to make sure the property is available and the project is approved by the mayor, it will take about six months to prepare the site and set up the diner.

The film "Diner" was based on the recollections of filmmaker and writer Barry Levinson, who grew up here and spent much of his youth hanging out at a diner.

Experience the Fine Art of Living

The long-awaited moment has arrived. We are ready to unveil The Oaks, Midland's newest luxury homes.

The Grand Opening celebration will go on strong all weekend long. An Open House from 1:00 to 6:00 p.m. each day marks the first public showing of these striking homes. You owe it to yourself to see them.

The Oaks are a portrait of casual elegance, offering every indulgence. Hot tubs, whirlpool baths, wetbars. The Oaks represent a masterpiece of modern architecture, distinguished by dramatic atriums, raised ceilings, impressive entry halls, plush master suites, indoor planters, island kitchens and more. And, just steps away is the Green Tree Country Club, with the assurance of a membership for each resident of The Oaks.

There is still something more for you to see and enjoy this weekend. Renowned Western artist Raul Gutierrez will conduct a one-man showing at The Oaks. An original oil painting will be raffled to benefit the Museum of the Southwest.

Come, experience the fine art of living at The Oaks.

Introducing...
Mission Square Plaza
Retail and Office Condominiums

Owning is better than renting.

If you're presently renting retail or office space, you already know some of the disadvantages-frequent cost-of-living rent increases, leases that give the landlord all the advantages, costly lease overrides on your retail sales. In short, you're not in control.

From a pure economic standpoint, ownership beats renting. Consider these advantages:

* Your mortgage payments are fixed and not subject to escalation or overrides to a landlord.
* You receive tax deductions for interest and tax payments.
* You get a tax deduction for depreciation over the next 15 years.
* You have control over your space, and no one can cancel your lease.
* You can buy enough space to meet your future growth plans and lease the expansion area until it's needed.
* All maintenance and upkeep is furnished through the Owner's Association.
* Your real estate investment gains value.

In addition to all this, Mission Square is strategically located in one of the city's fastest growing areas, North Big Spring and Loop 250, just northeast of Cordoba Plaza.

Mission Square is an ideal location for professionals, service businesses, and a variety of retails stores. Contact our office now, for a full color brochure and further details.

*The 1st year's payments and buyer qualification will be calculated equivalent to a rate of 8¼% loan to value +interest will be charge at a rate of 12 1/4% for the 1st 6 months of the loan. After the first 6 months interest will be charged at the most recent 6 months Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%. Payments on these mortgages are graduated so as to increase the principal and interest payment 7.50% each year for the next 4 years. At the end of the first 5 year pe d the graduation in payment will cease. A new payment schedule will be computed using a variable rate mortgage at amortize the remaining balance over the 25 years of the mortgage based upon the then current Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%. The 7 1/2% maximum increase can be more if the original loan principle exceeds 125. At each 5 year anniversary date, the payment may be adjusted to allow the remaining payments to fully amortize the loan. ANNUAL PERCENTAGE RATE APPROXIMATELY 12.750%.
