Dennis Lucas peers out of window at police

Armed standoff

Teenagers' kidnapper demands money, plane tickets

By JOHN NOLAN
Associated Press Writer

NEWPORT, Ky. — A gunshot-punctuated standoff dragged into the early morning hours today as a man who claimed to be a killer held two teen-age boys hostage and demanded $50,000 and plane tickets to England.

The man, whom police identified as Dennis Lucas, 20, of Dayton, Ky., seized his hostages around 5 a.m. Sunday in this northern Kentucky community across the Ohio River from Cincinnati.

He fired a handgun out a window several times during the standoff and initially set a 5 p.m. Sunday deadline for his demands, but the deadline passed without incident, police said. Police said Lucas had not threatened to kill anyone and was still barricaded inside the house early today.

WKRC-TV in Cincinnati reported that the man called the station Sunday night and said he gave authorities until noon today to give him the money and three plane tickets — one for him and two for his hostages. He did not say why he wanted to go to England.

Police spokesman Jimmy Kim said police talked to the man several times, but would not elaborate. "They have good communications. They are talking from time to time," Kim said Sunday night at a news conference.

"We'll do anything we can to peacefully settle the situation."

Police refused to reveal the names of the boys, ages 14 and 16, but said Lucas is an acquaintance and officials don't know why he took them hostage.

Officers cordoned off a four-block area around the house, and SWAT teams armed with rifles were stationed at various points.

Residents were evacuated from their homes in the block where the house is located, "plus other people who have done it on their own," Kim said.

The house is located in a neighborhood of row houses and small stores.

The gunman apparently called Cincinnati radio station WLW-AM Sunday afternoon and boasted of killing two people recently.

He said one of the bodies could be found in a wooded area in nearby Cincinnati across the Ohio River from Newport and that the other could be found in the Licking River near Newport.

Lucas also told WLW that he was on drugs.

Kim later confirmed that police found a body Sunday in the Licking River, about eight blocks from where that river joins the Ohio River at Newport, but did not link the death to Lucas.

Campbell County Coroner Dr. Fred Stine identified the body as that of James Cain, 15, of Covington. Stine said the boy, last seen Saturday night, apparently was stabbed five times in the back and slashed on the neck, and had been dead 12 to 18 hours when found.

Lucas had served time at an Indiana prison on two theft convictions, but there was no further information available on him, Kim said.

A neighbor, Lester Sebastian, shot himself in the left knee while he was loading a gun to defend himself and was treated at a hospital and discharged, authorities said.

November's economic gain barely noticable

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government's main gauge of future economic activity rose a tiny 0.1 percent in November, the smallest gain since June, the government reported today.

The Commerce Department said the advance for its Index of Leading Indicators was down sharply from the 0.4 percent gains registered in both September and October.

Without a big rise in stock prices during the month, the index would have shown a 0.3 percent decline.

The November gain matched a 0.1 percent rise in June and was the weakest change since a 0.5 percent decline in April.

The weak showing surprised many analysts who had been expecting a much better performance given the fact that the stock market hit record highs during the month.

But the slight advance was in line with expectations that the economy will continue growing next year, though at much the same sluggish rate as in 1985.

Many analysts feel that 1986 is shaping up to be a virtual replay of this year with modest growth, continued low inflation and further declines in interest rates.

While few analysts are predicting a recession, they aren't looking for very robust growth, either. One of the reasons for the pessimism is the fact that the economy is now in the fourth year of recovery from the 1981-82 recession, considered old age as recoveries normally go.

Many economists are predicting a modest advance in the gross national product of between 2.5 percent and 3 percent this year.

This would be only slightly better than the preliminary estimate that the economy this year grew at a 2.4 percent rate, down sharply from the robust 6.6 percent growth turned in last year.

The Reagan administration, however, is predicting much faster growth this year at a rate of around 4 percent. While this is definitely higher than the prediction of most private analysts, some economists share this optimism.

Michael Evans, head of Evans Economics, a Washington forecasting firm, said he believes the GNP will grow 4 percent this year as business investment improves.

Evans and economists in the administration cite the record-setting stock market advance and the big declines in interest rates of recent weeks as evidence that the economy is reviving.

The sharp rise in the stock market was the biggest positive contributor to the rise in the Leading Index for November.

It was one of only four indicators that showed increases for the month. Other indicators which contributed to the rise were net business formation, changes in raw materials prices and manufacturers' orders for consumer goods.

Five indicators had a negative effect on the index. The biggest negative influence came from a drop in the level of business and consumer credit followed by speed in filling orders, orders for capital equipment, building permits and weekly unemployment claims.

Two indicators, the average workweek and the money supply, showed no change in November.

The weakness in the November index was evidence, many analysts said, to support their belief that the economy will continue its sluggish growth in the new year.

These analysts contend that consumer and business spending, as well as government budget cuts, will all contribute to weak economic growth.

Airport terrorist quizzed as youngest victim buried

ROME (AP) — A judge today questioned the lone terrorist suspect who survived the bloody attack on Rome's airport that killed 15 people, and family and friends buried the youngest victim, an 11-year-old American girl.

Roman Catholic funeral services were held in Rome for Natasha Simpson, one of five Americans killed in the bloodbath at the Leonardo da Vinci terminal.

The daughter of Associated Press Rome news editor Victor Simpson was slain as her family prepared to fly to the United States for the holidays. Simpson and his 9-year-old son, Michael, were among the wounded.

Pope John Paul II sent Archbishop Justin Regali as his special representative to the funeral to "express his deep sorrow and solidarity."

Simpson has covered the Vatican for 13 years and frequently traveled with John Paul on his foreign journeys. Also attending the Roman Catholic service at the North American College was U.S. Ambassador Maxwell Rabb.

Three of the Palestinian commandos who staged the Friday massacre at Leonardo da Vinci airport died in a shootout with authorities. Italian police said Sunday the gunmen probably received support from accomplices still at large who were responsible for other attacks in Rome.

La Repubblica, a left-leaning Rome daily, quoted Adm Fulvio Martini, head of the Italian military secret service agency SISMI, as saying the terrorists had been trained in Iran and had stopped off in Syria before coming to Italy.

Nearly 80 people were injured when the four opened fire with automatic weapons and hurled hand grenades inside the Rome airport terminal, while a near-simultaneous assault near the El Al check-in counter at Vienna's Schwechat airport left three dead, including one suspected terrorist, and wounded 47.

Austrian officials said the two surviving suspects will be charged with murder. The only suspect to survive the Rome attack, identified as Mohammed Sarham, was questioned by investigating judge Domenico Sica, an anti-terrorist expert, on Sunday.

Judicial sources said Sarham told Sica he and the three slain gunmen belonged to a radical Palestinian faction headed by Abu Nidal, and that the group planned more terrorist actions in Italy and elsewhere in Europe.

Italy's ANSA news agency reported that Sica questioned Sarham for five hours, and told him he had been charged with participating in the airport killings, with illegal arms transport and other related charges.

The respected La Stampa daily newspaper of Turin reported today that Sarham repeatedly told Sica during the questioning: "I was supposed to die like the others."

The surviving suspects in the Vienna airport attack also claim to be led by Abu Nidal, the assumed name of Sabry Al-Banna, a leading opponent of Palestine Liberation Organization leader Yasser Arafat.

Terrorism, disasters biggest news of 1985

By JOHN BARBOUR
AP Newsfeatures Writer

The world's headlines in 1985 echoed hope and horror, each event, it seemed, so gripping as to erase what went before.

The top story of the year, as voted by member editors and broadcasters of The Associated Press, was the wave of terrorism that swept the Middle East from the air hijackings to the commandeering of the Italian liner Achille Lauro.

Second in the poll was the summit meeting and the change in leadership of the Soviet Union, and the promise therein.

But these top stories were pressed by natural disasters. A Colombian volcano erupted and left 25,000 dead in the muddy wake of melted snows cascading from the Andes into the valleys below.

No. 4 was the Mexico City earthquake that crushed or trapped at least 7,000 people in masonry tombs.

The fifth top story of the year had been with the world for a while, but it gained momentum in 1985. The AIDS epidemic has claimed 14,000 victims, but its most famous, movie star Rock Hudson, illuminated the insidious powers of the disease that frightened ordinary Americans and electrified the medical community.

From the mountain crash of a Japan airliner that left 520 dead to the tragic loss of 248 American GIs homeward bound for Christmas from keeping the peace in the Sinai, it was a horrific year for air travel. Editors and broadcasters voted the sequence of crashes that took some 2,000 lives the sixth top story of 1985.

The seventh-ranked story was the rescue of famine victims in Africa and the campaign that drew world attention to their plight — from official government efforts to the chorus of rock stars singing, "We are the world. We are the children."

In eighth place was the story about the nation's troubled farms — the failure of long-held family farms and the problems of the banks that lent them money. It was an irony in the polling that many of the journalists who listed the African famine followed those votes by citing the plight of the American farmer whose bountiful harvests in a hungry world sank him even deeper in debt.

The violent events around South Africa's racial policies were ranked ninth. The uncovering of American spies and the defection of a Russian was ranked 10th.

This year, 1985, incidentally marked the 50th AP poll of the top news stories. In the poll's first year, 1936, editors chose as top story the crisis in the British Empire stemming from the romance between King Edward VIII and Wallis Warfield Simpson.

In this year's poll the others in the top 20 were:

11. The U.S. economy — Inflation continues low as Congress and administration wrestle with imports, deficits and tax revision.
12. U.S. weather — Hurricanes buffet Louisiana, skim the East Coast, trigger floods in Virginia and West Virginia, leaving at least 54 dead and driving 22,000 from their homes.

13. Body buried in Brazil identified as Nazi war criminal Josef Mengele.

14. Artificial hearts — William Schroeder lives on, Jack Burcham dies. After eight transplants this year, doctors consider new strategies.

15. The president is operated on for cancer.

16. Drugs in major league sports. The Pittsburgh trial. Commissioner Ueberroth calls for stronger measures in baseball.

17. The MOVE firebombing in Philadelphia. A neighborhood destroyed in an attempt to evict troublemakers.

18. The space shuttles. They operate on a regular schedule as astronauts repair and fetch satellites, put new ones up and experiment with building a permanent space station.

19. Billion-dollar mergers and buyouts in corporate America.

20. Brussels soccer riot leaves 39 dead; British soccer stadium fire takes 55 lives.

City was involved in many activities during past year

By BOB HART
 Pampa City Manager

As we close 1985, I thought it might be appropriate to pause for a moment and reflect on some of the activities in which we have been involved over the past year.

It is difficult for me to believe that I will have been here for a year in mid-January.

Early in the year we conducted the City Logo contest. The new logo is on our stationery, utility bills, checks and most vehicles.

In the latter part of the year we were notified that we were one of five cities selected as an official 1986 Main Street City. The program will begin officially this week.

The Water and Wastewater Plants were contracted to a private firm for operation and maintenance. They have been working hard to upgrade the Wastewater Plant and are receiving good reports from the Environmental Protection Agency.

We embarked upon an ambitious and innovative program of combining our building inspection, code enforcement and fire prevention and suppression activities. We now have 15 fire personnel who are active in the program.

We continue to devote most of our time to training. However, we are the only city in the state undertaking such a program and we are being watched by a number of communities and state agencies.

We have restructured the utilities office and have been successful in decreasing the number of meter re-reads and in reducing the number of outstanding delinquent accounts.

Preventive maintenance schedules for vehicles and equipment have been implemented in most departments. According to our preliminary figures, this has reduced down time on equipment and vehicles, thereby lengthening the life of vehicles and equipment.

The Clean Up Campaign ran for most of the summer. We picked up 1,063 truck loads of trash and, with the end of the year, we were caught up on our special request list.

The Sanitation Department has also color-coded commercial dumpsters to improve our efficiency with commercial pickups. The landfill operation received four satisfactory ratings from the Department of Health. The Finance Department completed and implemented a new purchasing and petty cash procedures system.

We purchased and installed a telephone system for all city offices and facilities. We self-funded for employee health insurance rather than purchasing health insurance through a carrier.

The budget was restructured this year as we established a goals and objective format. Rather than doing a standard audit, we have prepared a comprehensive annual financial report and plan to make it available within 45 days.

Pampa has hosted a number of building code schools over the past several months. Communities represented in the schools include Dalhart, Canadian, Perryton, Dumas and Panhandle, in addition to our own personnel. Having the school here in Pampa has saved us several thousand dollars.

M. K. Brown Memorial

Auditorium is now staffed and is being promoted on a fulltime basis. The Green Room has been furnished and is utilized by performers. We now have a concession agreement to ensure concessions at all major events.

The Street Department seal coated 745,000 square yards of streets and reinstalled 401 driveway pipes. Seven blocks of dirt streets were completely graveled, as well as several alleys. The department also reconstructed the drainage in front of the Post Office, painted 50 crosswalks, installed 179 signs and marked 94 new intersections.

The Traffic Commission was restructured and regular meeting dates were set. The Parks and Recreation Advisory Board was created.

The redwood deck at M. K. Brown Municipal Swimming Pool was completed, and new wading pools were installed in three parks. The Pioneer Cottage was restored.

The Water Department replaced about 1,600 feet of sandcast water mains, repaired 171 water leaks and changed out 1,279 water meters. The Wastewater Department cleaned more than 82,000 feet of sewer lines and replaced about 600 feet of sewer lines.

The Pampa Police Department added 72 additional blocks in the Neighborhood Watch program; 2,270 children were fingerprinted during the year in the Ident-A-Kid program.

The Pampa City Commission changed its meeting time to 6 p.m. on the second and fourth Tuesday of each month. $1.8 million of certificate of obligation bonds were sold for the renovation of City Hall and street construction projects. Both activities will begin in early spring.

It's been an enjoyable and active year. I look forward to a prosperous 1986.

Facing death

Austin resident has second close brush

DALLAS (AP) — Whether damned to face death or blessed to escape it, an Austin chemist is just thankful to be alive, his father says.

Ronald Weindorf had a close brush with death 19 years ago when a University of Texas student sprayed the campus with gunfire from atop a tower, killing 13 people and wounding more than 30.

He stared death in the face again Friday when a terrorist pointed a gun at his head during a siege at the airport in Rome. The gunman was shot down by police officers before he could pull the trigger.

"It was the second bloodbath he has survived," Weindorf's father, Clemens Weindorf, told The Dallas Morning News on Saturday from his home in Hondo, N.M.

"This poor guy has been through this twice. The good Lord must be watching over him very closely," Weindorf said.

Fifteen people died and more than 40 were wounded in the massacre, in which Arab terrorists conducted a grenade and machine gun assault.

On Aug. 1, 1966, the elder Weindorf said, his son crouched behind a brick column for more than two hours while sniper Charles Whitman walked around all four sides of the top of the Texas Tower, firing randomly at people for blocks around.

Ronald Weindorf's wife, Joan, 47, was injured in Friday's attack on Rome's Leonardo da Vinci Airport when flying shrapnel lodged in her arm and right leg. She was released Saturday from a hospital.

Weindorf said his son, an IBM chemist, called him Friday afternoon to tell him he had survived the attack.

"He said he was waiting at a ticket counter when the shooting started. They hit the floor as quickly as they could," the father said.

His son and daughter-in-law had left for Europe on Dec. 7, Weindorf said. They had traveled to Rome and Frankfurt, West Germany, on a combination business trip and vacation and were about to fly to Brussels, Belgium, when the attack occurred.

"At one point, he looked up and saw one of the terrorists pointing at his head with a gun. Then he heard a big burst of gunfire. The officers had shot the terrorist before he could shoot my son. It was terrible. He was right in the middle of all those dead bodies."

Texas prisons

Violence decreases, but problems remain

HUNTSVILLE, Texas (AP) — Although Texas prison officials accomplished a goal of curbing inmate violence this year, they still must contend with other problems — overcrowding and financing for new prison facilities.

Officials must maintain a court-imposed population cap set as a result of a lawsuit brought against the Texas Department of Corrections by prison activist David Kunz.

The prison's population capacity, set by the state's new Prison Management Act, says the total number of inmates allowed within the system is 40,134. Once the population reaches 95 percent of that capacity, early releases are mandatory.

The Texas Board of Pardons and Paroles estimates that 27,600 convicts will be sent into the prison system in 1986, and balancing the influx of new prisoners with releases poses a problem.

During 1985, about 24,000 inmates were released, but the population has stayed at about 37,500 inmates, making Texas' prison system the nation's second largest.

To avoid releasing prisoners early, the Legislature earmarked money from the sale of 3,700 acres of land to go towards building more prison facilities. But the state hasn't been able to sell the land near Houston during two separate auctions.

The sale was expected to raise $125 million, which would pay for 10 trusty camps and a $60 million prison in Palestine.

TDC officials will meet next month to consider proposals from several companies for a lease-purchase deal for the new facilities.

William Bennett Turner, a San Francisco attorney who represents prisoners in the lawsuit, said the TDC "acted sensibly and responsibly in settling the overcrowding issues rather than putting the state and taxpayers through what would have been an expensive and embarrassing trial."

While officials still face overcrowding problems, TDC director O.L. McCotter is pleased violence has been curbed.

"This is certainly the best Christmas present that I could possibly have, and I pray that it continues," McCotter said.

TDC records show 213 inmates were stabbed this year, a decline from last year's 404. And although homicides increased from 25 in 1984 to 27 as of Sunday, there have been none since Sept. 23, prison officials said.

An outbreak of homicides within the prison system in early September led officials to lock prisoners in their cells.

Since then, authorities have been isolating violent inmates, resulting in a sharp decline in stabbings inside the sprawling 27-unit system.

McCotter, who took over the TDC in July after serving about a year as deputy director, says violent prisoners constitute about five percent of all inmates.

The other inmates "just want to do their time in a safe, positive way and get out of here as soon as they possibly can," he said.

Dallas smokers snuffed out by laws and business bans

DALLAS (AP) — Smokers in Dallas are having a more difficult time of it these days.

A new city ordinance recently was enacted here that restricts smoking in most large stores and restaurants, and a number of companies are taking steps on their own to ban or limit smoking on their premises.

Further, the group that pushed through the ordinance against smoking in stores or restaurants has a plan to seek a similar ban on smoking in Dallas office buildings.

There seems to be a very large number of people who would favor guidelines in the workplace about where smoking should and should not be allowed," said Joe Gorda, chairman of a non-smoking lobbyist group, the Joint Committee on Smoking in Public Places.

Gorda said his group will begin pushing for the new restrictions as soon as residents "are comfortable" with the new ordinance, which takes effect Feb. 1.

According to Action on Smoking and Health (ASH), a non-smoking lobby based in Washington, D.C., an estimated 200 companies nationwide have instituted some type of smoking restrictions.

A number of them are in Dallas. In recent weeks and months, various smoking bans or restrictions have been imposed at local businesses ranging from a cosmetics manufacturer to a shuttle van service.

American General Fire and Casualty Co. will remove ashtrays from offices and pay employees to attend smoking classes after its ban begins next month. "We anticipate some turnover as a result of it," a company spokesman told the Times Herald.

Lincoln National Life Insurance Co. will forbid smoking in its offices, effective Jan. 1, and has spent $20,000 to provide free nicotine-flavored chewing gum to workers trying to quit smoking.

Aetna Life & Casualty, which will prohibit smoking in all corporate offices as of Feb. 1, will offer to double life insurance for workers who quit.

Air traffic controllers at Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport voted by a 2-1 margin to ban smoking in the radar room and allow only two people at a time to smoke in the control tower.

Boeing Electronics Inc., a Dallas subsidiary of the Boeing

Corp., prohibits smoking within three feet of anyone with a no-smoking sign on the desk.

Corporate Express of suburban Irving, which operates 12 smoke-free airport shuttle vans and a limousine service, requires any employees who wish to smoke to retreat to an unheated service garage for cigarette breaks.

"I don't offer them any amenities," Corporate Express president Charles Tenney says. "In the summertime, the garage is plenty hot, and in wintertime, it's plenty cold. When I got to the point where I was the boss, I put in the danged policy."

Milt Dreskin, 65, treasurer of Adrian Development Co. of Dallas, and a smoker for 52 years, said he tried to work around his company's smoking ban, but finally gave in to constant bleating from co-workers and is giving up cigarettes.

He tried to get around the ban by going to the restroom for his cigarette breaks, but said he was caught redhanded after the odor wafted through a vent.

"I'm putting aside cigarettes so I don't get the hassle," Dreskin said.

Phillips folks are hoping to hear from Racehorse

PHILLIPS, Texas (AP) — Almost all residents polled in an informal neighborhood survey say they want to hear what attorney Richard "Racehorse" Haynes has to say about helping them keep their homes.

Phillips Petroleum plans to evict the residents from property they live on near a company refinery, and on Saturday, about 10 people went door to door in Phillips to canvass residents about their opinion on meeting with Haynes.

The group took a four-question survey to about 200 Phillips residents, and 97 percent indicated they want to hear what the Houston lawyer has to say, said Danny Howard, one of the residents spearheading the survey.

"I don't think anybody in this part of the country can go against Phillips Petroleum Co. and win, but Haynes says he can, and I don't think he'd take it if he thought he'd lose," Howard said.

Howard said Haynes offered to meet with the residents if at least half of them want him to come. He estimated that by Monday, the group will have contacted Haynes and set a date for him to speak to Phillips residents.

Haynes' home telephone number is not listed, and he did not return calls The Associated Press made to his office Sunday.

On Aug. 22, Phillips Petroleum sent eviction notices to 68 homeowners on its property near the refinery in the Hutchinson County community. The company offered $2,500 to homeowners for relocating.

A week later, MM Cattle Co., which leased land to 430 additional Phillips homeowners, told those residents they would have to move by Aug. 31, 1986, unless certain sewage problems were remedied.

Mexican money boosting deposits of Valley banks

HARLINGEN, Texas (AP) — Bank deposits in the Rio Grande Valley, an area hit hard by high unemployment and the peso devaluation, have soared because of nervous Mexican investors who continue to move their money, officials along the border say.

Deposits in 40 Valley financial institutions rose to $5.9 billion by Nov. 30, compared with $5.2 billion a year earlier and $4.3 billion on Nov. 30, 1983, the Valley Chamber of Commerce said.

Mexican deposits make up between 25 and 75 percent of the deposits at various border banks, said one Brownsville banker, who asked not to be identified.

"Yeah, there's a lot of money moving out of Mexico, no question. But it's not crazy, like in 1982 with the first devaluation. That's when all the big money moved," the banker told the Austin American-Statesman.

He was referring to the first major devaluation of the peso in February 1982, when the Banco de Mexico allowed the Mexican currency to float on the international market. The peso was selling that day for 27 to the U.S. dollar. A day later, it sold at 41 — a 52 percent devaluation.

The peso is now at 450 to 1, compared to the 510 pesos it took to get a dollar in early November.

"That's basically where quite a bit of it is coming from — Mexico," Bill Card, president of the InterFirst Bank in Harlingen, said of the influx of deposits.

Another factor in increased deposits is local merchants who are delaying purchases of inventory while waiting to see what the market does, Card said.

Card said his bank has $210 million on deposits now, compared with $170 million in 1984.

Money deposited by Mexicans at InterFirst has increased by 15 to 20 percent during that time, with most of his investors coming from the border towns of Matamoros and Reynosa, or from the industrial center of Monterrey, Card said.

The percentage of Mexican depositors is much higher at banks closer to the Rio Grande, Card said.

"There's a feeling by a Mexican investor that they want to see their banks right across the river," Card said.

In the last two years, despite an unemployment rate that is up 15 percent, banks in Brownsville increased their deposits from $867 million to $1.1 billion. Deposits in McAllen banks increased from $933 million in October 1983 to $1.2 billion in October 1985.

Card said Mexicans come to us and other Valley banks in hopes of preserving their money.

"Mexicans are very concerned about the economy in Mexico, and they want to feel there is some security in their life-long savings," Card said.

JOINT PROBLEM AND MUSCLE PAIN

If you've developed symptoms that make you think you have arthritis, it would be wise to have an examination to see if the muscles in the affected area are out of balance.

Muscles help keep a joint stable and assist it through its normal range of motion. But if the muscles on one side of the joint are weak, this puts a strain on the joint. It may also cause arthritic-like symptoms.

The doctor of chiropractic will test the muscles to determine their balance and strength. He will also evaluate nerve patterns and may take an x-ray to study the joint structure involved. Perhaps some laboratory procedures will also be needed.

If the problem is in the muscles around the joint, treatment can be given to strengthen and return them to proper balance. Once this is achieved, the arthritic-like pain and discomfort may be greatly relieved or eliminated.

EVER STRIVING FOR TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Opinion

Let's hope Burford was telling truth

Recently, we got some good news from former Environmental Protection Agency Administrator Ann Burford, who was hounded out of office nearly three years ago, allegedly for failing to move aggressively enough to protect the environment.

Burford announced on a national television program that the Reagan administration "really does not have a commitment to the environment," and that the federal government of the United States does not "have an environmental policy."

It is difficult to imagine any better news on government's role in the environment — unless it was the news that the EPA had been abolished entirely. After all, we have an education policy — and look at the mess our schools are in. We have a welfare policy — with the result that millions of poor Americans have been locked into a virtually inescapable cycle of dependence on government and tens of millions of American taxpayers are presented each year with a larger and larger bill for the privilege of making things even worse that they were before.

During the short period of its existence, federal environmental policy has not compiled any better record. It has wasted precious resources like water by giving them away at less than market value to privileged constituencies with political clout. It has made home ownership an impossible dream for millions of Americans by driving up the cost of home construction with devices like the Environmental Impact Report. It has increased the cost of every consumer product we purchase by imposing costly and ineffective pollution-control technologies on industry.

So if Ann Burford is right in contending that President Reagan now approaches the environment in a spirit of "benign neglect," the president it to be congratulated. With respect to any public issue, neglect is the most beneficial policy government can adopt.

It is to be hoped that state and local governments nationwide will follow the federal lead — if, as we somehow doubt, the administration is really doing nothing to enforce environmental laws — in this matter at their earliest possible convenience.

A realistic foreign policy

American foreign policy has been characterized in recent decades by inconsistency and confusion. The isolationism of the 1930s gave way to the war against Hitler and the postwar crusade to contain communism. That crusade was derailed by the Vietnam debacle, which fostered a new reluctance to intervene, even where clear U.S. interests were at stake. Now we have the Reagan administration's revival of globalism, which pledges support for anti-communist insurgencies wherever they arise.

The usual defect of the American approach is its substitution of moral themes for national interests. Likewise, the debate over international issues usually turns not on the value and cost of what may be achieved by a particular policy, but on whether it accords with our fundamental goodness.

But some important thinkers from different perspectives are urging a new realism in our relations with the rest of the world — mindful of our limited resources, skeptical of our habitual moralism, attentive to our real security requirements.

One is conservative scholar Robert W. Tucker, writing in the inaugural issue of the National Interest. He argues against open-ended campaigns to implant American values around the globe, as the Reagan administration proposes.

"The conservative interventionist," writes

Tucker, "believes in the rightness of American purposes in the world, just as he believes in our power to achieve those purposes. What we need, he insists, is the will to use our power." Established alliances are to be strengthened, and new ones, established with anti-communist insurgencies.

Tucker, however, sees "a very great difference between protecting the freedom of those who already have it, and who have a demonstrated capacity to maintain it, and extending it to those who do not have it, and who offer little assurance that they have the ability to sustain it."

Our commitment to Western Europe and Japan is not a gesture of morality but a recognition of national interest. For either to fall under Soviet domination would threaten our security. To say, however, that "the form of government Nicaragua has represents an issue of necessity for us" is absurd. U.S. power, he insists, "should be employed as sparingly as possible and only on behalf of well-defined and long-sanctioned interests."

Starting from a liberal point of view, diplomat George Kennan reaches similar conclusions. In the winter issue of Foreign Affairs, he laments Americans' "fondness for hurling (moral) challenges at their foreign counterparts, thereby placing themselves in a graceful posture before domestic American opinion." The latest cases — South Africa, the Philippines, Nicaragua — aren't hard to find.

What's wrong with such moral challenges? One problem, says Kennan, is that "even if a given situation is bad, the alternative to it might be worse" and that it is "not we who are going to have to live with the consequences."

Hypocrisy is another flaw: "Practices or policies that arouse our official displeasure in one country are cheerfully condoned or ignored in another." He is right. The U.S. has imposed economic sanctions on Pretoria while selling nuclear technology to Peking. It ridiculed the 1984 elections in Nicaragua, while hailing an equally dubious election in South Korea. Unfortunately, writes Kennan, "a lack of consistency implies a lack of principle."

The wise alternative is to concentrate on preserving this nation's "military security, the integrity of its political life and the well-being of its people." When — and only when — the actions of other nations damage "American interests, as distinct from political tastes, we have every right...to take retaliatory action."

Following this guidance will deprive those on both the Left and the Right on the opportunity or self-congratulation and for portraying their domestic critics as enemies of decent ideals. But it will minimize the cost of our global role and the risk of military intervention, while reserving the expenditure of American blood and treasure to those goals that are truly crucial to American welfare.

Trouble in delivery room

Of all medical specialties, "obstetrics," delivering babies, used to be the enjoyable one — initiating living rather than tending the dying.

But the OB's lot is not a happy one anymore. Nobody is more vulnerable to the plethora of malpractice lawsuits than the obstetrician.

For as long as 23 years after the delivery, the baby-doctor remains blamable for any imperfection in the offspring.

Dr. Joseph Marshall, Washington, D.C., says, "You have to look at every baby as a potential time bomb."

Sixty percent of all obstetricians have been sued three times or more.

Result: Malpractice insurance rates have multiplied. On Long Island premiums may run $82,000 a year. (In parts of New York, California and Florida premiums can run $60,000 a year.) Nationally, the average insurance premium is $20,800 — all of which has to be added to what the doctor charges the patient.

Time-consuming depositions and court appearances further rob the physician in ways he cannot recover.

So rather than chance any complication resulting from a normal delivery, more and more OBs are recommending Cesarean delivery. Cesarean births have increased from 5.5 percent in 1970 to more than 20 percent today.

Experience has demonstrated that a doctor is more likely to get sued for not performing a necessary Cesarean than for performing an unnecessary one, so why take the chance?

Another incalculable loss is the new relationship between many doctors and their patients, less caring and reassuring, more defensive and adversarial.

In the past two years half of all OBs quit obstetrics. Family practice physicians are quitting delivering babies for the same reason.

Dr. Jane Murray of the California Academy of Family Practice predicts that in her state within two years no family doctor will be delivering babies.

Perhaps the saddest irony in all this is that excessive damage awards in all this proliferation of lawsuits benefit mostly the lawyers — the lawyers are getting more than are the victims. In a California study, of 300 cases, the plaintiffs averaged only 27 percent of the award.

So — if doctors can no longer afford to deliver babies — who will?

In most states certified nurse midwives can deliver babies in hospitals or in birthing centers. These are registered nurses who have completed one-to-two additional years training in obstetrics.

Lay midwives, with varying degrees of training, can assist in home births in most states, rarely in hospitals.

Inevitably, however, these semi-professionals will also be legally liable and are having to cover themselves with insurance which is increasingly difficult and, in some instances, impossible to purchase at any price. Tomorrow's babies are in trouble.

Gorbachev and Gramm-Rudman bill

By Ben Wattenberg

There are more than initials that link the Gorbachev-Reagan diplomatic process with the new Gramm-Rudman budget process. In fact, the latter may emasculate the former.

You will recall that the first G-R process was featured recently in Geneva. President Reagan had said simply that America was strong again, and so we could negotiate — from strength — with the Soviets. It was simple, but probably accurate.

Apparently Gorbachev and the Soviets believed it. American military strength had increased. Then arms talks resumed; the summit occurred; two more summits were scheduled.

Perhaps something could come of it. Maybe we had forced the Soviets to behave reasonably.

Enter the second G-R. The Gramm-Rudman balanced budget bill, as you have probably heard, provides for a balanced budget by 1991, which, if you want a balanced budget, is a nice time to have a balanced budget by.

Have you been confused about Gramm-Rudman? Confused because it forces the president to make big budget cuts, which the Congress will then change, which will then go back to the White House where a computer will do the real cutting, which will then go back to the Congress for another shot at it, which at some point may or may not involve a tax increase, all of which may or may not sharply cut defense and social programs?

You are not alone in your confusion. I am confused, too. That's all right, I am not a budget expert. But I will tell you something: The experts are confused, too. No one knows how it will work out. Including Gorbachev.

Imagine you are Gorbachev. You have decided to negotiate seriously because your adversary has demonstrated that he is serious: big arms buildup, a real push for Star Wars. Now, suddenly, everyone is talking about big defense cuts. Will the cuts really happen?

My guru on congressional matters is the scholar Norman Ornstein, a colleague at the American Enterprise Institute. Ornstein guesses — and he is guessing — that when it's all over, defense spending will probably come in at a range between no increase and a 5 percent cut. Interesting: Recall that a year ago Reagan and Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger were still talking about 6 percent increases. And recall that the impact of Gramm-Rudman probably gets tougher and tougher each year until 1991, as the mandated deficit cuts go deeper and deeper.

I repeat: Imagine you are Gorbachev. What do you do? Negotiate? Or sit? Sit is not a bad strategy. You may well be able to let the United States give away for free what you were willing to trade for. The Soviet strategy has always been for America to unilaterally disarm.

In the end, Ronald Reagan will have to make a tough choice. Sen. Daniel P. Moynihan has described Gramm-Rudman as a "suicide pact." That's correct. It links defense spending to domestic spending. If one goes off the cliff — so does the other. If you save one, you have to save both.

It works out that if Reagan wants to preserve one of his dreams — promoting liberty via defense spending — he will have to give up another — cutting back the welfare state via domestic spending cuts. One assumes that after much bluffing back and forth, much confusion, incredible boredom as three-cushion budget strategies are debated by arcane pundits — Reagan will go with the "save both" decision. He will defend liberty and leave the welfare state alone.

Pentagon prepares to deal with new law

WASHINGTON (AP) — While much of the Pentagon is quiet during the holidays, budget planners are busy trying to figure out how the Defense Department will fare under the historic deficit-reduction passed by Congress and signed into law by President Reagan two weeks ago.

The consensus, according to congressional and defense officials, is that while Reagan's defense buildup is likely to be slowed, no major weapons systems are likely to be canceled.

Instead, weapons costs will probably rise as the Pentagon "stretches out" the purchases, buying the same number of weapons over a longer period of time. This would result in higher "per unit" costs for planes, tanks, and ships.

In the near future, the most likely area of cuts, the officials say, will be in the pay and "readiness" areas, including the stocks of ammunition, fuel and food needed to go to war.

An AP news analysis

Future cuts may include some of the major weapons still on the drawing boards or just getting ready to enter production, such as the radar-evading Stealth planes, the C-17 transport, the Navy's new generation of attack submarines, or the "Midgetman" nuclear missile.

The deficit reduction law is known in Washington as Gramm-Rudman after its two chief sponsors, Republican Sens. Phil Gramm of Texas and Warren Rudman of New Hampshire.

The deficit reduction law mandates a balanced budget by fiscal 1991 and requires a series of reductions in the annual deficits to meet that target.

The law says that if Congress can't agree on how to make the cuts, the task goes to Reagan. Should the White House and Capitol Hill still disagree, there would have to be equal reductions between domestic and defense spending with the exception of some programs such as Social Security and anti-poverty spending.

While Reagan approved the Gramm-Rudman proposal as it was working its way through Congress, Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger and other top Pentagon officials warned that it could mean reductions in Reagan's cherished goal of rebuilding the U.S. defenses he says were neglected throughout the 1970s.

Since the law has been enacted, William Howard Taft IV, Weinberger's chief deputy, has been holding daily meetings with top service officials to discuss the impact of the Gramm-Rudman cuts.

The Pentagon budget for the current fiscal year, approved by Congress shortly before Christmas, totalled $297.4 billion, slightly above last year's $292 billion and far under the $320 billion, or 5.9 per cent increase over inflation, originally sought by the White House.

Pentagon budget planners are expected to ask next year for an increase over inflation of about 5.2 percent, the officials said, speaking on condition they not be identified.

That would mean a request of about $323 billion and would be more than the 3 percent above inflation Reagan says is needed.

While the Pentagon may have to cut some programs this year, it still has about $6 billion approved by Congress to pay for expected inflation that didn't occur. Critics call it a "slush fund" that will be used to avoid the impact of Gramm-Rudman cuts and while Congress put some limits on how it can be used, the money is expected to help lessen the immediate impact of cuts.

'Ordinary' citizens of U.S., Russia conduct TV dialogue

SEATTLE (AP) — U.S. protesters pleaded with participants in a three-hour U.S.-Soviet satellite-TV dialogue to "ask the tough questions" and accused producers of the television special of "editing" the audience to avoid controversy.

Simultaneous translation was provided for taping of the "citizens summit" Sunday, moderated by talk show host Phil Donahue here and Soviet commentator Vladimir Pozner in Leningrad.

"What can your government do to ease the threat of nuclear war?" a Seattle questioner asked, drawing applause from the 200 people in the U.S. TV studio audience. There was an equal number in the Soviet audience.

A Soviet man answered with a call for a moratorium on nuclear testing, a reduction of nuclear arms and then cuts in all weaponry.

About 90 percent of the Soviet Union will see a 90-minute version of the program, probably on prime-time television, Donahue said he was told. The show is being aired at various times in most major U.S. cities in the next weeks, said Penny Rotheiser, who works for Donahue.

Before the taping, the program was criticized by Jewish, Latvian, Estonian and other activists who were barred from the U.S. audience.

"Please ask the tough questions," Jack Greenberg, one of about 40 protesters, called to participants filing into KING-TV studios.

Greenberg complained there had been an "editing out (of the audience) of anybody who was part of an organization."

Marilyn O'Reilly, a free-lance producer who selected the audiences for Donahue's Multimedia Entertainment, said she tried to avoid ideologues and to balance both sides with people in similar occupations.

She said she was free to choose whomever she wanted in Leningrad.

"Can you speak out without fear of reprisal?" Donahue asked.

"We express our views from the heart, and we listen to our government very carefully, and we support it because it's right. No one in the Soviet Union wants war," responded a Soviet teacher.

Asked about the treatment of dissenters in the Soviet Union, an audience member in Leningrad called Nobel Peace Prize winner Andrei Sakharov a "traitor" who "slandered the Soviet Union." Sakharov has been exiled to the closed city of Gorky.

A Seattle woman who said she had demonstrated against nuclear arms asked whether any of the Soviet citizens ever protested their government's policies.

"Of course we haven't protested, because our government is trying to do what our people want," a Soviet man replied.

That attitude gives "a blank check for a small group of men in the Soviet Union to do what they wish and an entire nation acquiesces in their decisions," Donahue said. "I don't know whether you fully appreciate the passion with which millions of Americans view the restricted lives of the Soviet people."

"How can we show you we're not all from secret service here or that we'd all go to the psychiatric ward?" said a Soviet teacher who argued that Soviets were allowed to speak their minds.

Several Americans criticized U.S. policy at home and in Vietnam, Central America and other parts of the world. No Soviet citizens complained about their government's policies, except a man who mentioned water pollution and others who referred generally to economic and social problems without elaborating, Donahue said.

The Soviets probably were not used to "robust" debate that "speaks volumes to American democracy," Donahue said, adding that aggressive questioning by the U.S. audience might have made the Soviets defensive.

He also said the U.S. audience was influenced by "a terrible prejudice against the Soviets in the media."

The program was produced by the Documentary Guild, an independent producer in Massachusetts, and KING, an NBC affiliate, with a satellite link to Gosteleradio, Soviet television.

Protesters march in opposition to Citizens' Summit

End to boycott urged

Tutu sets school reform deadline

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Bishop Desmond Tutu set a deadline for the government to make school reforms and withdraw soldiers from black townships, saying he will call for a school boycott and economic sanctions if the government does not act by March.

The Soweto Parents' Crisis Committee met Sunday behind closed doors and then urged black students to suspend a school boycott. They also issued a list of demands, including a single curriculum for all schoolchildren and the withdrawal of troops from riot-torn black townships.

After the parents' committee met at Johannesburg's mainly white University of the Witwatersrand, Tutu told reporters, "We give the government three months to meet these conditions."

The black Anglican bishop, who won the 1984 Nobel Peace Prize, said if the requests are refused, "then it must not only be the students who are laying down tools... teachers, parents, workers, church leaders, university staff must all combine in a concerted effort to say 'wotshai' (stop)."

Tutu, who also called for the lifting of a 5-month-old state of emergency and the release of political leaders, said he would urge "punitive economic sanctions" against South Africa if the white-led government did not heed the demands. Calling for economic sanctions can be a crime.

In other developments, Law and Order Minister Louis le Grange said two people were arrested in connection with the Dec. 23 bombing that killed five whites at the Amanzimtoti beach resort, near Durban.

Le Grange did not identify the those arrested, but said police confiscated a "large quantity" of foreign-made weapons. Reporters in Durban quoted police sources as saying one of those held was a doctor of Indian descent who also is a member of the United Democratic Front anti-apartheid coalition.

Lawyers for Winnie Mandela said the wife of imprisoned black leader Nelson Mandela planned to return today from Cape Town to her home in Soweto, defying a state order barring her from the black township and the rest of the Johannesburg region.

Mrs. Mandela has been ejected by police and arrested on previous trips to Soweto. Her husband, jailed on a conviction of plotting sabotage, is among the country's most popular black leaders.

In another weekend development, two of the country's best known white opponents of apartheid, Molly Blackburn and civil rights lawyer Brian Bishop, were killed in a car crash.

Although the victims regularly received death threats, Mrs. Blackburn's husband, Gavin Blackburn, said there were no indications of foul play in the accident.

First lady, right, on mercy mission

Bangladesh's first lady defender of women

By VICTORIA GRAHAM
Associated Press Writer

DHAKA, Bangladesh — When the army helicopter landed, the television cameras were rolling. A battered, humiliated peasant staggered out and into the arms of her protectress: Begum Raushan Ershad.

Mrs. Ershad, the elegant first lady of this poverty-stricken nation of 100 million people, embraced 22-year-old Anwara and helped her onto a stretcher and into an ambulance.

Later, the first lady bent over the peasant woman's hospital bed, promising justice and a better deal for women from her husband's 45-month-old martial-law regime, confronted by rising lawlessness and increasing crimes against women.

Mrs. Ershad's mercy mission, her most sensational to date, was front-page news and dominated state-run television and radio. The first lady rushed last month to a village near Amtali, about 210 miles south of here, to rescue Anwara, raped by four of her husband's relatives.

She addressed angry peasants, saying "The culprits will be severely punished. We must safeguard the honor and dignity of our womenfolk, otherwise our nation cannot prosper."

The second message escaped no one: The most powerful woman in Bangladesh is Mrs. Ershad, the defender of women, the poor and downtrodden, children and orphans, the crippled, the mentally retarded, all the country's have-nots.

A striking figure in her mid-40s, with her auburn hair, luxurious sari and over-sized designer sunglasses, Mrs. Ershad also advocates small families, condemns the evils of extortion and pushes for family courts at the grass-roots level.

She inaugurates regional festivals and calls for strong religious values to combat moral degeneracy and keep AIDS out of Bangladesh.

Earlier this month Begum Ershad (Begum is the Moslem title for Mrs.) officially was crowned with the government job of first lady, with her own office and staff in her husband's presidential palace.

"She is a mother with a heart and a head, she sees a need and does something about it," said President Ershad, who married "Daisy" in an arranged marriage in 1955. The couple has a son who is nearly 3.

"She doesn't go to fashion shows, she goes out among the people, then comes back and tells me to do something," said Ershad.

Dec. 31, 1985

Several major achievements are likely for you in the year ahead. Your imagination and creativity will be two of your strongest forces for bringing them into being.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) There may be some restrictions placed upon your personal plans today. But you'll still end up having a good time. Trying to patch up a romance? The Matchmaker set can help you understand what it might take to make the relationship work. Mail $2 to Matchmaker, c/o this newspaper, Box 1846, Cincinnati, OH 45201.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) All will work out better for you in the long run today if you don't mix business and pleasure. Put the deal you want to discuss on the back burner.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Get important tasks out of the way early today so that they won't infringe upon time you'll be wanting to spend with your friends.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) It's important today not to rely too heavily upon others. You'll be capable of doing whatever needs to be done without assistance.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) You should be able to fare rather well in your commercial dealings today, yet you won't get everything you expect if your demands are unreasonable.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) This may turn out to be an interesting day. A door might be closed to a source that is usually available, while an unexpected one suddenly opens up.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) In a joint venture today, make every effort to shoulder your share of the burden. If this is your objective, all will work out well.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Establish your terms in advance if you are performing work or service for another today. A proper understanding will eliminate future problems.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) In all of your involvements today, keep everything out in the open. You're bound to get tripped up if you try anything too cute or coy.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) A situation that you have been negatively anticipating is going to turn out OK. Don't waste time worrying about something that may never happen.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Have fun and enjoy yourself today, but also keep the financial cost in mind. You can have a ball without destroying your budget.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Everything will work out to your satisfaction today if you don't trip over your own feet. Let important events run their natural courses.

Smart Money

He can't pay, so she's stuck

By Bruce Williams

DEAR BRUCE — I was divorced three years ago, and was given custody of my two preschool children. During the divorce action, the judge ordered me to pay certain bills and ordered my former husband to pay others.

I met my obligations, but my husband did not meet his. Now the stores in which we had credit before our divorce have sued me and have garnished my wages since my former husband is not working and has no assets.

The judge clearly directed him to pay those bills and clearly directed me to pay the others. I did what the court ordered, and my husband didn't. It seems very unfair that I should now have to pay the bills that were his obligation. Can you help me? — C.G., FREEPORT, ILL.

DEAR C.G. — Unhappily, probably not. You must separate the two matters. You and your former husband ran up certain obligations, and the directive of divorce did not change your relationship with those creditors in any way.

The judge can hold your husband in contempt for failing to meet the directive, but he cannot relieve either you or your husband of responsibility for jointly incurred debts. And since your former husband has no assets and no job, he is effectively judgment-proof. That's why the creditors are going after the person with the "deeper pockets," who unfortunately happens to be you.

If you go back to court, I'm sure that the court will direct your husband to meet his obligations. But without assets, he cannot pay the bills, even if he is willing to. The creditors know that, which is why they're going after you.

DEAR BRUCE — You have said many times that every driver of an automobile should have at least $1 million worth of liability coverage. I couldn't agree more. What good is $100,000 when awards of $2 million and $3 million are common?

My wife and I have worked over 40 years and would like to protect our assets. We used to hold them jointly, but we now have half of our property in my name and half in her name. Will this be enough to protect our assets against litigation should we be involved in an action of some kind? — W.B., VENICE, FLA.

DEAR W.B. — The question you pose is partly legal and partly practical. You are wise to be aware of the fact that, little though we may like it, huge court awards are a fact of life.

But the answer is not to divide your assets and try to obscure who owns what and where things are. The answer is to carry an adequate amount of liability insurance.

Of course, "adequate" is difficult to define these days. A minimum of $1 million (perhaps going up to $2 million or $3 million depending on your circumstances) will protect you adequately in most cases.

DEAR BRUCE — A short time ago we invested $5,000 for three years with a company that is paying 16.5 percent. Our friends have been telling us that it must be a very high-risk investment because this is an extremely high interest rate.

The investor we deal with said that this is a lease type of investment and that our money is safe.

How safe is it? Our money is invested for three years. Thank you for your opinion. — M.S., CUMBERLAND, MD.

DEAR M.S. — Your friends are correct. I am not in a position to tell you how safe this particular investment is, but when someone goes to the open market place and pays 16.5-percent interest when the prime rate is a single-digit number, the risk must be enormous.

Your money may well be safe (high-risk investments have been known to pay off).

ACT I opens auditions for play

Auditions for the Area Community Theater Inc. production of the love story, "Same Time Next Year," is set for 2 p.m. Saturday, at the Heritage Room of M.K. Brown Auditorium with call-backs to follow on Sunday.

Director Paula Simpson said that although the cast calls for only two people — one man and one woman — a large backstage crew is needed to keep the production running smoothly. She said she is particularly looking for makeup, costume and lighting personnel.

The play focuses on the generation — long love affair between two people who meet at a cottage. They fall in love and agree to meet each other again at the same place each year, for a discreet annual rendezvous.

But "Same Time Next Year" is more than a love story. It is a look at the changes in American morality, politics and lifestyles over 25 years. Alan Alda and Ellen Burstyn starred in a film version of the popular play.

For more information, contact Simpson at 665-1617.

Self-taught artist paints in spite of poor vision

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Richard Yahzie sits hunched over a small canvas in his dormitory room, a palette of acrylic paints at his elbow.

He is painting. He works very quickly. He paints clouds and mountains. He paints water. He paints the sun and the moon and the stars.

In an hour or two of working this way, he will turn out a completed painting.

That might not seem so unusual, except for one thing: Richard Yahzie is legally blind.

"When I'm in school that's all I do — paint," said Yahzie, a 19-year-old Navajo student at the Arizona School for the Deaf and the Blind. "It helps me think of things. It helps me get rid of problems in my head. I just forget everything and get into my painting."

Born with albinism, a condition that left him with blond hair, very fair skin and no pigment in his retinas, Yahzie has 20-200 vision in one eye and 20-300 in the other, said James B. "Blue" Bickford, the school's principal for the visually handicapped.

Yahzie also has nystagmus, an involuntary twitching of the eyeballs.

Nevertheless, Yahzie has been drawing and painting since he was a child.

Despite his talent, Yahzie has never taken art classes. He taught himself, and since coming to Tucson has helped teach others.

He used to help sighted painters at the Tucson Museum of Art, and he is teaching his brother silversmithing. He has plans to do silkscreening and sand painting. "It seems like everything about my life is art," he said.

Asked if he can "see" his paintings in his head before he starts, Yahzie laughed. Everyone asks if I have it in my head.

"People don't believe I do paintings," Yahzie said. "They say, 'You can't do that.' They say a lot of people like us, handicapped people, can't do much. But it's not true. We can be creative. We can do a lot of things normal people can."

Dear Abby.

Woman's penmanship wrote her a ticket to happiness

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1985 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: The letter from "Marilyn," who wondered how many pen pal relationships developed into something more serious, makes me wonder if perhaps my parents may have set a record.

In 1919, Pfc. Ernest Kern was stationed in Hawaii when an Indianapolis newspaper printed a list of "lonely" American soldiers seeking pen pals. An Indianapolis girl wrote to the first name on the list. Eight sacks of mail were received. Many of the servicemen picked the letters with the best handwriting.

Kern said, "It's not always the best handwriting that counts," and he picked Mary Mortsoff's letter. (Hers may have been one of the worst.)

Ernest and Mary corresponded the remaining 2 1/2 years he was in service. Ernest sent Mary a diamond engagement ring and many gifts from Hawaii, which I now cherish. They met in 1921, and three days later they were married! Their marriage lasted for 53 years. I am their daughter. My mother died in 1976; my father in 1979.

I hope Marilyn and her husband (whom you brought together) will enjoy even more years together than my parents did.

PAULINE KERN, INDIANAPOLIS

DEAR PAULINE: Thanks for sharing a beautiful memory.

DEAR ABBY: In 1981 I read in your column that civilians should write to a serviceman overseas. I followed your advice and sent off a letter to the general commander stationed in Korea, in care of Operation Dear Abby.

Eventually my letter made it to Camp Casey, Korea, where it sat in a box in a small corner for almost two years before SP4 David Edrington found it.

To make a long story short, that letter was from me, Denise Boyd. David and I corresponded until he returned to the States on March 1, 1985.

On March 10, we were married. It was the answer to two prayers: his and mine. We are presently stationed with the U.S. Army at Fort Belvoir, Va., and are expecting our first child any day now. We will be eternally grateful to you, Dear Abby, for bringing us together. May God bless you and your wonderful column.

DENISE AND DAVID EDRINGTON

DEAR DENISE AND DAVID: I just telephoned Fort Belvoir trying to locate Denise and was told, "She just left for the hospital." Keep me posted, please.

DEAR ABBY: The letter about the freeloader who "rode along" to work and back with a co-worker brought back memories of my own experience of some years ago.

My husband and I worked at a large plant. One day while I was in the women's restroom, a smiling lady from a different department (I'll call her Alice) introduced herself, saying she had heard that I lived in her neighborhood and asked if she could ride to and from work with me. (I later learned that Alice had a new car.) I foolishly said yes.

My husband, who does the driving in our family, is a very kind and patient man, but after six months of going out of our way to pick up Alice and take her home, we decided we had had enough.

We never asked her for a cent, but she didn't offer anything. She talked constantly from the back seat, which bothered my husband because he doesn't like to converse while he's driving. There were times when we wanted to stop after work for groceries or go to dinner somewhere, but we always had to take Alice home first, which cut into our time.

After we invented a story telling her why we could no longer drive her, she was very cool to me whenever we met in the hallway, lavatory or lunchroom. It was very uncomfortable for me, and I was happy when I got transferred to another building away from Alice.

That was the last time we ever car-pooled.

NEVER AGAIN IN ST. PAUL

DEAR NEVER AGAIN: Fortunately, every rider is not an "Alice."

Catholic University of America. Although many parents assume that by the time children reach the seventh grade they can take care of themselves, Long says his study shows that many 12-to 15-year-olds need more "adult supervision" and "better access to adults" for self-care to be a realistic and safe choice.

"Because latchkey kids living with their mothers only feel more confined, frustrated and depressed, they are more likely to use drugs and drink hard liquor than are their two-parent peers," says Long.

His research also shows that latchkey adolescents living with their single mothers are absent from school more often and are more likely to use this time to sleep or have sex in the home.

Adolescents living in these households spend more time talking on the phone than do latchkey children living with two parents. The latter spend more after-school hours socializing at the homes of friends, or in outdoor activities.

"Many teen-agers living with their single mothers feel less loved by their fathers and are less attached to them than are teen-agers in two-parent households," Long explains.

"Adolescents living with their single mothers are not as close to their siblings and more likely to yell and spank them when supervising them," he adds.

K-Mart Dollar Days—Biggest Sale of Year

This biggest sale of the year, K-Mart's $$$Dollar Day sale which starts Jan. 1, 1986, and continues through Jan. 7, 1986.

At Pampa Mall K-Mart will be open New Year's Day from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Regularly K-Mart is open from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Everyone of K-Mart's 64 (sixty-four) departments will feature specials during this sale. Apparel, Automotive, Appliance, gift, drug and especially food and delicatessen departments.

K-Mart Manager Frederick Dilley reported that since 1962 K-Mart has featured first of the year Dollar Day Sales and they have been so enthusiastically received by customers that the sales have been expanded each year.

By quantity purchases K-Mart is able to offer customers buys from best suppliers (makers). Purchases in large quantities bring discounts that K-Mart passes on to consumers. That means quality at low prices.

Extra savings—for customers—are suggested by K-Mart pricing. As Frederick Dilley, store manager, suggested, the way to extra savings is to take advantage of the 2 for $1 or 3 for $5 invitations and buy in multiple units. That kind of pricing means extra savings.

Save Here — Frederick Dilley, manager of K-Mart in Pampa Mall, points out special savings in the candy department (above) and the pillow display. Only two of the 64 departments that offer special savings during the Dollar Days Sale Jan. 1-7.

Giants maul San Francisco

By TOM CANAVAN
AP Sports Writer

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — Lawrence Taylor didn't want to talk about refrigerators, stoves or any other variety of appliance. And he had no intention of entertaining suggestions the San Francisco 49ers had an off day against the New York Giants.

"Just because they lost doesn't mean they had an off day," Taylor said. "We kicked their butts and that's all there is to it. We played awesome."

The Giants certainly did on Sunday, defeating San Francisco 17-3 in the National Football Conference wild-card game, ending 49er hopes of becoming the first National Football League team this decade to win consecutive Super Bowls.

New York dominated all phases of the game in earning the right to meet William "The Refrigerator" Perry and the rest of the Chicago Bears in the NFC semifinals Sunday in the Windy City.

Joe Morris rushed for 141 yards and Phil Simms tossed touchdown passes to tight ends Mark Bavaro and Don Hasselbeck to keep the Giants offense in gear. The only thing that kept the margin of victory down was the misfiring of New York placekicker Eric Schubert, who failed on field goal attempts of 43, 36 and 39 yards.

However, the misses were of little consequence, the way the Giant defense manhandled Joe Montana and the rest of the 49er offense, ending a streak of five consecutive losses to San Francisco, including playoff defeats in 1981 and last year.

"What we did to them was something they do to defenses," Giant linebacker Gary Reasons said. "They give so many wrinkles out there, a lot of motion, bring different people in on any down. There is not pattern to their offense."

"What we did was have no pattern to our defense. We gave them a couple of things to think about and took away their wide-open play calling."

The Giants also took away Roger Craig from the 49er offense. The fullback who this season became the first NFL player to gain 1,000 yards apiece both running and receiving was limited to 23 yards rushing on nine carries and 18 yards on two receptions.

The usually reliable Craig also dropped six little swing passes from Montana. The 49ers dropped 10 for the game.

The Giants played with intensity and a lot of hitting.

"Coming into the game we wanted to be physical, more physical than we had ever been," Giant linebacker Harry Carson said. "There was a lot of hitting out there and people got hurt on both sides of the ball."

The Giants got ahead early, driving 34 yards in seven plays with Schubert kicking a 47-yard field goal, his longest of the season.

New York extended the lead to 10-0 in the second quarter following Terry Kinard's interception of a Montana pass that was tipped by Reasons.

Four plays later, Bavaro made a one-handed grab of an 18-yard pass from Simms in the end zone.

San Francisco mounted its best drive of the day late in the half, moving 85 yards in 16 plays with the aid of three Giant penalties. But the 49ers had to settle for a 21-yard Ray Wersching field goal after getting a first and goal at the New York 9-yard-line.

Simms took the Giants on a 77-yard scoring drive at the start of the second half, finding Hasselbeck all alone in the end zone for a 3-yard scoring pass. It was only the second TD reception for the veteran tight end this season.

San Francisco got close on a couple of possessions late in the fourth quarter, but couldn't get the ball into the end zone.

"San Francisco is an excellent football team," Taylor said. "They deserve to be overconfident, but they seemed a little too overconfident. San Francisco figured they could just get by the Giants and think about Chicago."

New York's Bart Oates (65) and Conrad Goode (62) hug an unidentified teammate during the Giants' 17-3 win over San Francisco.

Baylor to appeal NCAA's suspension of seven players

WACO, Texas (AP) — Baylor Coach Gene Iba says he will appeal the NCAA's decision to declare seven Bear basketball players, including its four top scorers, ineligible for undisclosed violations of NCAA rules.

Declared ineligible for various reasons and for various lengths of time, were senior guard Carlos Briggs, senior forward Edwin Mitchell, sophomore forwards Darryl Middleton, Frank Williams and Robert McLemore, and sophomore guards Michael Williams and Eric Johnson.

"This obviously will affect the performance. We've lost the heart of our team," Iba said Saturday in announcing the NCAA action.

The players were suspended earlier this month, but got a last-minute NCAA approval on Dec. 19 to play in a Tennessee tournament.

Iba said the seven have lost their first appeal and that a final plea for eligibility will be made in their behalf at the national NCAA convention next month in New Orleans.

"We hope this decision will be reversed or revised at that time," Iba said, declining further comment.

The subcommittee on eligibility is made up of five members of the NCAA Council. It is a different group than the one that reviewed Baylor's first appeal this month.

No disclosure was made of the reasons for the suspensions, pending the further appeals.

Iba's predecessor, Jim Haller, resigned under fire at the end of the 1984-85 season after revelations from a player — supported by a clandestine recording — that some players were provided extra benefits, including car payments and airplane tickets.

Even if the appeal is successful, the players will miss at least four games, three of them against Southwest Conference opponents, Iba said.

NCAA director of enforcement David Berst said any disclosure of Baylor's violations and punishment will come from the school until all appeals are exhausted.

"The penalties on individual athletes have been imposed. That information will be provided by the university. The announcement regarding the overall infractions case is probably still a week away before it will be made. The reason for that is there is still an aspect of the penalty that will have to be considered by the Committee on Infractions," Berst said.

Berst did not say what that aspect is.

Baylor has a 7-3 record this season. The Bears will take eight players, including walk-ons, into a game in Waco tonight against Texas-San Antonio, said Terry Tacker, assistant Baylor sports information director said.

'Horns, Falcons ready for Bluebonnet battle

HOUSTON (AP) — The Air Force Falcons and Texas Longhorns, winding down preparations for Tuesday's 27th Bluebonnet Bowl at Rice Stadium, each had a buffer to help them get over disappointing late-season losses.

Air Force had Hawaii and Texas had Christmas.

The only blemish on Air Force's 11-1 record was a disheartening 20-21 loss to Brigham Young, a game the Falcons led 21-7 at the half.

The following week, the Falcons traveled to Hawaii for a 27-20 victory.

"We had to go down there a week early to get accustomed to the climate," Air Force quarterback Bart Weiss joked. "It was good to have another game after BYU to get it out of our system."

Texas lost its regular season finale 42-10 to arch-rival Texas A&M, knocking the Longhorns out of a host berth in the Cotton Bowl.

The Longhorns, 8-3, are making their ninth straight bowl appearance and their 16th in 17 years.

"This is the first year in a long time for some of us to be able to go home for Christmas," Texas kicker Jeff Ward said. "I think it was good that we got away for awhile. Last year, we didn't take any time off."

The Longhorns were humbled 55-17 by Iowa in the Freedom Bowl last year.

"There was a lot of tension on our team last year," Ward said. "We started going downhill after the A&M game and got down on ourselves. This year, we took off and now I think we're real loose."

The Longhorns will be trying to end a three-game losing streak in post-season games dating back to a 10-9 loss to Georgia in the 1983 Cotton Bowl.

Buffaloes excited

Colorado, Washington meet in Freedom Bowl

By TIM LIOTTA
AP Sports Writer

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — The University of Washington football team, toppled from national prominence by a disappointing season, has a shot at a small dose of redemption in the Freedom Bowl.

The Huskies meet the Colorado Buffaloes in tonight's second edition of the game, to be played at Anaheim Stadium. Kickoff is set for 5:10 p.m.

"No doubt finishing up with a victory in a bowl game would shine a better light on our season," Washington's senior tackle Dennis Soldat said. "Things have not gone well for us at times this year."

"Everybody is pulling together for one final effort and we hope a victory will start things off better for next year's team."

Washington finished second in the national rankings a year ago and opened as the 12th-ranked team in the preseason poll.

The Huskies, however, opened the season with consecutive losses to Brigham Young and Oklahoma State and struggled to a 6-5 record, finishing in a fourth-place tie at 5-3 in the Pacific-10 Conference.

"Every player in the Pac-10 wants to go to the Rose Bowl. It's not a secret," senior quarterback Hugh Millen said. "Just because we didn't achieve our primary goal doesn't mean we can't be excited about this game."

Washington has been installed by oddsmakers as 4-point favorite over Colorado, a team making its first bowl appearance since 1977.

After suffering through six straight losing seasons, Colorado finished 7-4 overall and 4-3 in the Big Eight Conference this year.

"Of the 36 bowl-bound teams, we must be the most excited to be in a bowl," said Colorado Coach Bill McCartney, in his fourth year as head coach. "I guess we were the longest shots to get to one going into the season."

Allen named NFL's MVP

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Running back Marcus Allen of the Los Angeles Raiders says he's not concerned about statistics. His only individual goals involve being consistent and showing improvement.

Concerned or not, Allen rolled up such impressive numbers that he was selected National Football League Most Valuable Player and Offensive Player of the Year by The Associated Press.

Allen was selected in balloting by three writers or broadcasters who covered each of the NFL's 28 teams. He was a runaway winner in the offensive category and a narrow winner over running back Walter Payton of the Chicago Bears in the MVP balloting.

The only other players to receive significant support in either category were running back Roger Craig of the San Francisco 49ers and quarterback Dan Marino of the Miami Dolphins.

Allen finished the 16-game season as the NFL's leading rusher with 1,759 yards on 380 carries and 11 touchdowns as well as 67 pass receptions for another 553 yards and three TDs.

He rushed for more than 100 yards in each of his team's last nine games, tying an NFL record established by Payton earlier in the season. Despite handling the ball so many times, only three fumbles by Allen were recovered by the opposition.

"Everybody likes to attain certain things, I'm no different," Allen said. "Just as long as it brings a smile to the face of my parents..."

"I think I'm a lot happier for the guys around me. I'm just a representative of the work they do. So please don't forget the guys up front... that includes the fullback, too."

The awards are the latest on a growing list for the 25-year-old Allen, who won the Heisman Trophy during his senior year at Southern California.

"I don't think you really realize the significance of these awards until your playing days are over," he said. "The true measure of someone's ability is consistency. Hopefully, I can continue to play well for several years."

"I think each year as a player I've progressed, gotten better and better. Hopefully, the best is yet to come. I just want to be the best I can be."

Allen was the Most Valuable Player in the 1984 Super Bowl when he gained 191 yards to lead the Raiders to a 30-13 victory over the Washington Redskins.

Now he's pointing to what he hopes will be another Super Bowl appearance. The Raiders were 12-4 in winning the AFC West title.

Streaking Wheeler pounds Borger girls, 57-35

WHEELER — Borger's girls basketball team had its problems before coming here Saturday night and Wheeler only added to them.

The Mustangettes ripped the Lady Bulldogs 57-35 in a non-district contest that Borger entered with just six players.

"Borger had some tough luck," Wheeler coach Jan Newland said. "I think their leading scorer missed the bus, one was sick and one quit. But they had size and our kids were able to overcome it. I think they (the Mustangettes) played well."

Wheeler attacked the Lady Bulldogs early, jumping out to an 18-8 first quarter lead and a 32-16 lead at the half. The Mustangettes stretched their advantage to 20 points after three quarters and Borger couldn't make it close.

"The kids came out and played well early then continued to play,"

Newland said.

DeeAnn Jolly led the Wheeler assault with 21 points, three rebounds and four steals. Mario Hartman had 20 points, 10 rebounds and two blocked shots and Bridgett Wallace contributed 10 points, 11 boards and three steals.

The Mustangettes are now 11-2 on the season after having dropped two of their first four games.

Newland attributes their improvement to playing experience.

"We got off to an awful start," she said, "but we've gotten experience and come back and played well."

Wheeler hopes that improvement continues tonight when its varsity teams journey to Kelton for a pair of crucial makeup district games. The Mustangettes, who are 2-0 in the loop, start the action at 7 p.m.

Seminoles, Cowboys gear for Gator

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (AP) — Eleven bowl-seasoned seniors, the nucleus of the most successful class in Oklahoma State football history, will be starting for the 19th-ranked Cowboys in tonight's Gator Bowl clash with No. 18 Florida State.

It is no coincidence that the Cowboys, 8-3, started their school-record string of three straight bowl appearances when Leslie O'Neal, Harry Roberts and John Washington broke into the starting lineup as sophomores in 1983. Oklahoma State had been to only three bowl games in 24 previous years.

O'Neal, Roberts, Washington and eight classmates who grabbed starting spots later in their careers will be playing in their last game as Cowboys against the Seminoles.

Florida State, 8-3, has only seven senior starters, and the Seminoles rely heavily on four freshmen and six sophomores. But Oklahoma State Coach Pat Jones knows better than to expect Florida State to roll over.

"I know two years ago we beat Baylor in the Bluebonnet Bowl when this crew was sophomores and Baylor had a pretty potent team," he said. "I don't know how much a factor inexperience is."

It certainly doesn't hurt the Cowboys' chances that the seven starters across the defensive front line have earned a total of 22 varsity letters. That defense held opponents to an average of 14 points this season, and only Nebraska managed more than 19 points against the Cowboys.

"I don't know if they're the best (defensive unit) we've played, but they rank in there with Miami and Florida," Florida State Coach Bobby Bowden said. "Maybe they're not quite as strong, but they have a little more speed than either of those."

Bowden's Seminoles lost to both Miami and Florida this year.

While much of the pre-game hype has centered around Florida State's explosive offense — which averages 404 yards per game — and the running prowess of Oklahoma State's Thurman Thomas, the coaches expect a low-scoring affair.

"I'd be surprised if either team scores a lot of points unless there are a bunch of turnovers," Jones said. "Florida State's defense tends to get overshadowed, but they know what they're doing."

SWC basketball race gets underway Thursday

By The Associated Press

The battle for Southwest Conference basketball supremacy begins Thursday night with the Arkansas Razorbacks apparently the team to beat for the championship.

Arkansas ran its non-conference record to 8-2 on Saturday night with a 54-51 victory over Oral Roberts.

The Razorbacks will be off until Southern Methodist pays a visit to the Ozarks Thursday night. SMU, which was battered 92-69 by Oklahoma in the finals of the All-College Tournament in Oklahoma City, has lost only to the Sooners and Pepperdine.

Other matchups on Thursday night include Baylor at Texas

A&M, Rice at Texas Christian, and Texas at Houston.

The Razorbacks' clash against SMU will be the SWC debut for Arkansas Coach Nolan Richardson. Another SWC coach, Baylor's Gene Iba, will be making his conference debut under unenviable circumstances.

Seven Baylor players have been suspended by the NCAA pending a hearing before a subcommittee of the NCAA Council in New Orleans Jan. 10-11. Iba said the Bears will field eight players, including walk-ons.

The players were suspended indefinitely because of their involvement in various NCAA rules violations.

Lobbyists worked overtime during tax overhaul debate

By DAVID GOELLER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — The expensive lobbying fight over the tax overhaul bill went beyond the floor of the House of Representatives, extending to limousines, chartered jets and even the posh 21 Club in New York City.

Reporting lobbying expenses of $561,117 in the third quarter of 1985, the Association for a Better New York said it had used these locales in a so-far successful effort to preserve federal deductibility of state and local taxes.

The association, bankrolled principally by New York real estate and banking interests, said it spent $4,789 last July to charter a jet to fly House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., from Washington to Teterboro, N.J.

The group's report, somewhat unusual in that it contained the names of lobbying targets, listed $831 to provide limousine service in the New York area for O'Neill and Rep. Thomas Downey, D-N.Y., a member of the Ways and Means Committee.

The association also said it paid $5,206 in July to the 21 Club for a reception honoring O'Neill, Downey and Rep. J.J. Pickle of Texas, a senior Democrat on Ways and Means, which voted to retain the state and local tax writeoff.

The latest lobbyist spending reports released by the House clerk's office reflected 1985's big-buck battles over tax overhaul and legislation to protect U.S. textiles from increased foreign competition.

Leading all third-quarter spenders with $649,477 was the Coalition Against Double Taxation Inc., an alliance of labor unions that participated in the fight to retain deduction for state and local taxes in the House tax package that is awaiting Senate review in 1986.

The third biggest spender in the July-September period was the Fiber Fabric and Apparel Coalition for Trade, reporting outlays of $484,622 on behalf of legislation to restrict textile product imports.

This coalition of U.S. clothing manufacturers also had a well-heeled ally — domestic chemical companies whose Man-Made Fiber Producers Association Inc. spent $210,241 during the third quarter.

Through September, the two textile groups poured more than $1.8 million into their 1985 campaign for protectionist legislation, with much of the money attributed to advertising and public relations.

The textile forces won the battle on Capitol Hill but may have lost the war in Washington. Their bill was vetoed by President Reagan, and Congress is not planning to take override votes until next August.

The latest reports showed that lobbyist spending in the second quarter reached $11.05 million, up from $10.24 million in the first three months.

In complete third-quarter reports totaled $9.36 million — a rate that could make the July-September period the most costly for lobbyists in recent years. Final third-quarter figures and preliminary fourth quarter totals will not be available until at least February.

Africa holds key to the origin of AIDS

EDITOR'S NOTE — Researchers in Africa, where homosexuality is almost invisible, are studying the incurable disease AIDS, which in Western countries has stricken mostly homosexual men. They hope to pin down the disease's origin and determine whether it will spread beyond certain high-risk groups in the West. The first story of a two-part series, "AIDS in Africa," examines what scientists have learned on that continent.

By PAUL RAEBURN
AP Science Editor

BRUSSELS, Belgium — New reports on the nature and spread of AIDS among heterosexuals in central Africa are giving researchers a glimpse of the possible future of AIDS in the United States.

AIDS was first recognized in homosexual men in the United States, and although it has now spread beyond the gay community, it is still confined mostly to them and several other high-risk groups: intravenous drug abusers, hemophiliacs and the sexual partners of AIDS patients.

Some scientists contend that it will soon spread into the general heterosexual population.

If it does, it will be mimicking the course it has taken in Africa, where open homosexuality is almost unknown and AIDS is well established.

Research in Africa has already helped broaden a once-narrow view of the disease. The AIDS virus is now increasingly seen not as the cause of a single disease but as one of a family of dramatically different illnesses.

That was apparent from reports presented at the recent International Symposium on African AIDS, held in Brussels.

"This virus causes much more than AIDS," said Dr. Robert Gallo of the U.S. National Cancer Institute. "And most of it goes unreported."

In the United States, acquired immune deficiency syndrome can take several forms. It frequently causes Kaposi's sarcoma, an otherwise rare cancer. Or it can produce bizarre "opportunistic" infections, normally seen only in people with damaged immune systems. More recently doctors have identified mental disorders caused by AIDS virus infections in the brain.

In Africa, the spectrum of possibilities is even greater. Doctors in Uganda, for example, have seen rapid, unaccountable weight loss in an AIDS-related illness they've called slim disease. In Zambia, Dr. Anne Bayley, an AIDS researcher in Lusaka, Zambia, has identified a galloping form of Kaposi's sarcoma that is unresponsive to established treatments and is rapidly fatal.

Not all the news from Africa is bleak, however. Research in Senegal, on the westernmost tip of the continent, has uncovered an unusual benign AIDS-related infection that could be crucial to the development of a vaccine to prevent AIDS.

The infection is caused by an AIDS-related virus that may have originated in African green monkeys, according to Max Essex of the Harvard School of Public Health in Boston. The reason for excitement over the discovery is that people infected with the virus seem to be healthy.

Infection with this apparently benign virus might make people immune to subsequent infections with AIDS. If so, the monkey virus could form the core of an AIDS vaccine.

The smallpox vaccine, the world's first, was based on exactly that principle. Cowpox, an animal version of smallpox, protected humans against smallpox without making them sick.

Seven hundred scientists from 51 countries attended the Brussels symposium, held in late November. It was the first open meeting devoted to AIDS in Africa. (A World Health Organization meeting last October in Bangui, Central African Republic, was closed to the press.)

Dr. Nathan Clumeck, one of the symposium organizers, said some African governments had asked scientists working in their countries not to participate. "The big fear of the African governments is being made the scapegoats," said Clumeck, a researcher at St. Pierre Hospital in Brussels.

African officials have said that publicity surrounding AIDS might discourage tourism. Some researchers say laying the blame for AIDS on Africa is a kind of racial discrimination.

Nevertheless, some African scientists did take part, and a substantial amount of new information about African AIDS was presented by both African and Western scientists.

These were some of the findings: — AIDS in Africa is a disease of the cities, and prostitution makes an important contribution to its spread.

— Blood donations and the repeat use of needles and hypodermic syringes, a common practice in some areas in Africa, may also be a contributing factor.

— The jump in the number of AIDS cases in Africa occurred in the early 1980s, at approximately the same time it happened in the United States, even though the virus may have been present in Africa for several decades.

Many of the figures coming from Africa show very high rates of infection in certain populations. A collaborative AIDS project in Kinshasa, Zaire, reported 190 cases of AIDS in Kinshasa from July to November 1984. Almost half of the cases were in women, and none occurred in homosexuals.

Based on those findings and other research, Jonathan Mann of the U.S. Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta, a member of the Zaire AIDS project, estimated that AIDS strikes at least 300 of every million Zairians each year. Zaire has an estimated population of 32 million, and thus Mann's projection would translate into about 10,000 new cases a year.

Numbers of actual AIDS cases in other countries in equatorial Africa are sketchy, but several report high rates of exposure to the virus, Clumeck said.

Evidence of exposure has been found in 20 percent of those tested in Uganda, 5 percent in Kenya and 2 percent in Zambia, Clumeck said.

In the United States, about 10 percent of people exposed to the virus will develop AIDS, said Dr. John Ward of the Centers for Disease Control.

President at farm bill signing

President hears what he wants to

By MICHAEL PUTZEL

AP news analysis

WASHINGTON — President Reagan doesn't answer questions when he doesn't want to.

Sometimes he pretends not to hear or that he doesn't have time, using the sign language of a cupped ear or a finger pointing to his watch as an excuse for not stopping to talk with reporters when he walks to or from his helicopter on the White House lawn.

But he also has a variety of ways of making a polite escape.

This week, just after signing a controversial farm bill that will spend record sums as it seeks to wean farmers from government support, Reagan went to the Agriculture Department for what he called a "satellite news conference" with farm state reporters.

The president's popularity, high almost everywhere else, has sunk with the economy in the Farm Belt, which has yet to taste the recovery enjoyed throughout much of the country. The brief closed-circuit broadcast was set up in an attempt to burnish Reagan's image and offer farmers a measure of reassurance.

Bill Kilby of the Jacksonville,

Ill., Courier Journal was among five farm state journalists selected by the Agriculture Department's Agnet Farm Network to question the president about provisions of the farm bill he had just signed.

"Mr. President," Kilby said, "the big question bouncing around my area at the present time is: 'Will this farm legislation benefit the small family farmer or will it simply further subsidize the large-scale farming operations?'"

"We believe it will help the family farmer," Reagan replied, turning to Agriculture Secretary John Block for a nod of assent. That was all Kilby got in response to his question. But Reagan didn't stop there.

"Bill, I hope you'll forgive me a little nostalgia and a little reminiscence here," the 74-year-old president filibustered. "When I saw Jacksonville, Ill., as your home there and the Courier Journal — my last college football game was played against Illinois College in Jacksonville, on a very cold winter day with a frozen field. It isn't a happy memory, particularly because we lost."

And with that, he went on to the next question.

Reagan's staff, which has been trying in recent years to reduce the president's exposure to reporters while maintaining full photographic coverage, picked the 15-minute session at the Agriculture Department for a new skirmish over the issue of television coverage.

The major networks contend their camera crews and correspondents must be regarded as a single unit, and they resist attempts to separate the picture of an event from its editorial content. But under Reagan, the White House staff has had some success in severing that link.

Early in the first term, presidential spokesman Larry Speakes established a rule that permitted all television cameras to record picture-taking sessions in the Oval Office but barred all but one broadcast correspondent, who is selected by rotation to represent his or her colleagues.

Having succeeded in establishing separate sessions for "stills only," meaning news photographers without reporters or television cameras present, Speakes is now trying to eliminate from at least some events that last pesky TV correspondent, who almost always tries to interrupt with a question for the president.

At the Agriculture Department on Monday, Reagan, Block and the program host sat on a stage. Still-photographers and one CBS pool camera crew — without its correspondent — were slipped into the studio for a few pictures just before the show began.

Mark Weinberg, the assistant press secretary who accompanied White House reporters and photographers to the department and barred the television correspondent from the room, said the White House chose to interpret the event as "an Oval Office address" in which the president speaks to the nation on live television with no reporters or correspondents in the room.

CBS did not use the tape and did not distribute it to other networks.
