Haig to 'plague' conference with denunciation

By R. GREGORY NOKES
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. planned to leave today for Madrid in the latest U.S.-led drive to arouse global indignation over Soviet complicity in the repression in Poland.

Haig will deliver what is described as a major denunciation of events in Poland at a meeting of the 35-nation European Security Conference on Tuesday.

It was understood the United States may lead a walkout of its allies from the meeting later in the week to show allied disapproval of the imposition of martial law.

The Soviet Union, Poland and other East European countries also are represented at the conference, as are the NATO countries. While the allies will be represented by their foreign ministers, the Soviet-bloc nations are expected to send officials of lower rank.

"The West intends to use the Madrid meeting as a forum to express our sense of indignation at events in Poland," Max Kampelman, the head of the permanent U.S. delegation to the conference, told reporters Friday.

However, the disclosure by the State Department late Friday that U.S. taxpayers may eventually repay as much $2 billion in Polish government debts to American banks could cause the expression of indignation at Madrid to ring hollow in some quarters.

Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y., plans to introduce legislation Monday declaring Poland in default on its debts to U.S. lenders.

He specifically criticized the decision of the Reagan administration to pay $71 million to U.S. banks to save the Polish government from default. But a Treasury Department official said Friday the $71 million may only be a beginning.

Marc Leland, the assistant secretary for international affairs, said the U.S. government is obligated to pay between $500 million and $700 million in Polish debt in fiscal 1982 alone, and $1.9 billion over the next three years, if Poland fails to pay.

While that is a firm obligation of the U.S. government, the administration has decided against exercising its right to delare Poland in default, Leland said. While that would hurt Poland, it could hurt U.S. banks even more, he argued.

"A declaration of default might be used by the Polish government as an excuse to relieve itself of obligations to make repayments" on the rest of its debt, he said. "The only difference now is that Poland owes the money to the U.S. government instead of U.S. banks."

However, that argument has failed to persuade some members of Congress. Moynihan said Friday that, despite its tough talk, the "administration was putting into place, in secret, a policy requiring American taxpayers to pay the overdue bills of the Polish junta."

And the administration is not unanimous in its view Poland shouldn't be forced into default, which would deny it access to borrow in Western financial markets. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger has made it clear in recent days that he favors default.

Following three days in Spain primarily devoted to events in Poland, Haig will make overnight stops in Portugal, Morocco and Romania.

The budget: Is it too big on red ink?

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan sent Congress a $757.6 billion budget for 1983 that proposes the largest deficits in history — $273 billion over the next three years — along with a second broad swath of cuts through social programs and a record military build-up.

The election-year budget blueprint, which instantly triggered a furor among Reagan's congressional friends and foes, projects deficits of $98.6 billion in fiscal 1982, $91.5 billion in 1983 and $82.9 billion in 1984 — the year congressional Republicans were hoping would produce the first balanced budget since 1969.

A year after the administration identified deficits as the leading cause of inflation, and vowed a balanced budget by 1984, officials tried Saturday to downplay the significance of the massive red ink.

BUDGET DIRECTOR DAVID STOCKMAN acknowledged the deficits were being described "with words behind them like 'staggering, towering, gigantic, huge, etc.' But those terms are accurate only if you ignore the fact that there has been enormous change in the scale of numbers that we're working with over the last four or five years.

"They're not large in the context of a $3.3 trillion economy," Stockman said.

Others were not so sanguine.

Congressional Republicans who fully supported Reagan's budget plan last year appeared in a daze over the weekend and talked about the prospect of thoroughly rewriting the new budget.

DEMOCRATS SAID the record deficits Reagan is predicting now are still unrealistically low. They said the only way out is for Congress to reverse itself on part of the record three-year tax cut it approved in 1981.

"I was just sort of in a state of shock when I listenened to the (budget) briefing," said deputy Republican Senate leader Ted Stevens of Alaska.

Sen. Dan Quayle, Republican of Indiana and a strong backer of the presiden, said, "You'll see people starting to jump off the ship on Monday."

Bob Dole, R-Kan., chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, said "the Republicans I talk to ... are frightened about the deficits." Another Republican in Congress, who did not want his name used, lamented: "The deficits are enormous. And they're probably too low."

But Republican Rep. Jack Kemp of New York, who sponsored last year's tax cut bill, applauded Reagan for "not trying to fight the deficit battle by raising taxes, which I'm very encouraged about."

Democratic assistant Senate leader Alan Cranston of California called the budget "unworkable, unwise and unfair."

THE WHITE HOUSE RELEASED the budget Saturday after lifting a Monday embargo. It was already academic — major elements of the spending plan had long since been leaked to reporters.

In a message accompanying his budget, Reagan exhorted Congress to stand by his program of tax cuts for economic recovery. "Our task is to persevere; to stay the course; to shun retreat; to weather the temporary dislocations and pressures ..."

And while the president insisted his program would eventually return the nation to a path of strong growth and low inflation, his short-term outlook was not encouraging for the millions of Americans left unemployed by recession.

Reagan predicted the economy would begin to recover this spring, but said unemployment is expected to average near a post-World War II high of 9 percent for 1982 and remain above 8 percent for much of 1983.

The budget assumes that inflation will slow down and the gross national product, the broadest measure of economic activity, will grow after inflation by 0.2 percent this year and 5.2 percent next year.

THE BUDGET, the first Reagan has shaped from start to finish, sticks to the plan he launched a year ago for a massive rearmament, extensive cuts in domestic programs and personal income tax cuts.

Reagan avoided the further embarrassment of being the first president to project a $100 billion deficit by urging Congress to cut an additional $2.4 billion from domestic programs during the current fiscal year. Otherwise, the 1982 deficit would hit $101 billion.

Defense spending would jump 18 percent in 1983, diverting 29 cents out of every federal dollar to the Pentagon and other defense-related agencies.

Spending on Medicare, food stamps, job training, education and dozens of other domestic programs that were cut this year would be reduced by another $27 billion during the new fiscal year, which starts Oct. 1.

Facility would play dual role

MMH could expand health care, revenue base

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the first of a two-part series studying Midland Memorial Hospital's bid for a 50-bed, $3.4 million chemical dependency facility.

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Many hospitals across the nation are trying to expand their services to generate revenue.

And why not? Health care is profitable.

But, is profit a "dirty" word in health service?

Midland Memorial Hospital President Ray Branson believes "making a profit is not a dirty word except in the situation many health care providers get themselves into when they are in operation for the purpose of making a profit."

To keep up with the current trends of expanding health services to generate revenue, MMH has applied to the state health agency to construct a free-standing 50-bed behavioral health center, more commonly known as a chemical dependency facility which treats drug and/or alcohol abusers.

An analysis

BECAUSE TWO private hospitals have applied for similar facilities, there is controversy surrounding the proposed facility.

Many of the hospitals that provide treatment to the chemical abuser are private entities which make a profit from the service.

For six weeks, which is the average treatment period, a private hospital in Dallas charges its patients approximately $10,000, while a similar facility in Denver, Colo., charges $17,000.

If MMH should build its facility, the cost would be about $225 a day for approximately four to six weeks. A six-week stay would cost about $9,500.

Branson said this facility could make money for the hospital district because "all revenue exceeding expenses goes back into operations, as opposed to the shareholders in a private facility."

Prior to coming to MMH, Branson assisted with the initiation and operation of a 27-bed chemical dependency unit in Oklahoma in 1979.

BRANSON BELIEVES MMH would be able to provide a better facility for less cost than a private hospital, and would be able to take care of the needs of all patients, including the indigent.

Although MMH officials have stated this is their position on construction of the facility, Branson — backed in his beliefs by the MMH board of directors — said "we're in business to take care of health care needs of our patient-public first."

"Medical Center (hospital in Odessa) and Midland Memorial both provide psychiatric services," Branson said, adding the private facilities are mainly concerned with psychiatric services with patient beds set aside for the substance abusers.

"This is a well-documented need (chemical abuse patient beds in the Permian Basin), but it is also a way for a hospital to expand its revenue base," Branson said. "If I thought this behavioral health (service) would in any way jeopardize our ability to meet the needs of our patients or doctors at this site (the hospital), I'd recommend we not pursue the project.

"If we had the space, we could have provided it (the service) here. We provide the psychiatric services now — the chemical dependency unit is not

Communism in the Caribbean

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

NEW YORK — The battle for Central America has begun and the Reagan administration is in a tough tussle with the Congress to increase aid to the embattled government in El Salvador fighting off well-supplied communist-led guerrillas. Unfortunately, most people here at home don't appreciate the great stakes involved in the region of seven small republics at our backdoor bordering on the Caribbean, as does Florida and our Gulf states.

But these countries, which have been independent for 150 years or more, are of incalculable strategic value. One, Nicaragua, was detached from the mainstream by the Cuban-fomented revolution a couple of years ago. El Salvador is the most populous with nearly five million people. If it falls, all Central America is up for grabs. Even Mexico, with its enormous oil reserves, is under the aggressive revolutionary gun.

Refugee center helps Vietnamese feel at home

HOUSTON (AP) — Most Indochinese refugees living here know they can never go back. That, says Khoi Tien Bui, formerly a cabinet minister in South Vietnam, is one of the things that makes them so homesick — many suffer from severe depression.

But because of the efforts Houston Community College and others, the 35,000 refugees who settled here can visit a little bit of "the old country" at the school's recently opened refugee center.

Right now, the center doesn't look like much. It is little more than some filing cabinets and a glass case containing a few artifacts from the Orient. But refugees who come here can learn American customs, get job information or simply listen to the folk music of their native land.

HOUSTON HAS the second largest population of Indochinese people in the country. Most came here from Vietnam in the last seven years, and many have not yet recovered from the culture shock, Khoi said.

"The refugees came here looking for freedom but lost everything else," Khoi said. "Many are still fighting this. We are thinking about the emotional and cultural depression a lot.

"My people were coming from an underdeveloped country, a heart-oriented country, to a might-oriented country. They asked 'How can I adjust to the very high standards of living here?'" he said.

Khoi himself left his parents, a brother and sister behind when he fled a crumbling Saigon in 1975. His father died in 1978 and he only occasionally gets letters from his relatives in Vietnam.

He is a poet, a former cabinet minister in the department of agriculture and winner of his country's highest literary prize.

BUT THE center is not designed for people like Khoi, who spoke English fluently before he arrived, and was able to get a job quickly. Many of the refugees arrived here without command of the English language or any knowledge of American ways, he said.

The center tells them how to ride a bus, make change or use indoor plumbing. How to get a job, tell time, or use a stove. They can also learn how to start the process toward gaining U.S. citizenship.

Printed information is available in three languages — Vietnamese, Khmer and Lao. Pamplets tell the refugees about American history, its customs and legends.

They are told about Ben Franklin, George Washington and the first Thanksgiving. But they are also reminded of their own heritage at the center.

"The Indochinese refugees want to learn English and learn American customs but they don't want to forget their own ways and cultures," said Eli Zal, the college administrator who runs the school's refugee programs.

A SERIES OF slide presentations, record albums and oral history cassettes have preserved traditional dances, customs and folksongs as well as documenting the refugee's journey to this country.

The few artifacts on display — including woodcarvings and Buddahs — are, ironically, on loan from Americans.

The college also sponsors a weekly one-hour radio show in which the announcers speak in Vietnamese. It supplements the center's historical information with current news and features.

Jury recommends death by injection

DALLAS (AP) — A recommended sentence of death by injection has been returned for Fletcher Thomas Mann Jr., convicted of the execution-style slaying of a young North Dallas man.

The 21-year-old defendant showed no emotion as State District Judge Ron Chapman read the jury's recommendation at 11:35 p.m. Friday after deliberations of an hour and a half.

The jury Thursday convicted Mann of capital punishment for the September 1980 slaying of 22-year-old Christopher Lee Bates.

"Nobody else now has to go through what we went through," said the victim's father, Bill Bates of Tulsa, Okla. "No one likes to see a man die, but what else were we going to do for our son? We did this for Chris."

In a statement, Mann told police he shot Bates as he lay face down in a field. Bates' roommate, 24-year-old Robert Lee Matzig, was wounded in the neck and became the state's key witness in the trial.

Prosecutors said Mann and 23-year-old Martin Verbrugge broke into Bates' apartment, where they raped, choked and stabbed to death 22-year-old Barbara Hoppe. Bates and Matzig then were forced to drive from grocery to grocery, cashing checks, before being taken to the field and shot.

Verbrugge, charged with capital murder, rape, robbery and attempted murder, will be tried later.

In returning the death sentence, jurors had to answer three questions: whether Mann's conduct was deliberate, whether it was unreasonable and whether there was a probability he would murder again.

In closing arguments, Assistant District Attorney Jim Burnham called the defendant "a wicked man with a wicked heart."

"His calling card is violence," Burnham said.

Defense attorney Paul Brauchle said Mann should not die by such an uncivilized act as lethal injection.

"The 12 of you don't kill Tommy Mann," he told the jury. "Each one of you do it individually. That's your doing."

Mondale says Reagan favors rich

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Former vice president Walter Mondale says the Reagan administration's economic policies offer an "almost unbelievable devotion to the already well-off in America" and could spur him to run for president in 1984.

Before speaking to a regional gathering of the National Education Association Friday, the Democrat told reporters President Reagan's "dismal and appalling" education assistance cuts are among the reasons he may run for president.

"For some reason, this administration cannot seem to understand that most wealth in this country comes from the trained mind," he said. "Why they fail to understand that I don't know, but it's wrong, and it robs America of its future."

Planned cutbacks in federal education assistance and the elimination of the Education Department threaten the next generation's earning ability, he maintained.

"This administration has singled out children," Mondale said. "If they missed anything (to cut) that provided for children's needs, it was because (Budget Director) David Stockman was tired that day."

On the whole, Reagan's policies are causing "profound suffering" for the working class while catering to the rich, he added.

Mondale said he would propose eliminating tax loopholes and deferring 1983 tax cuts, along with less stringent Federal Reserve Board practices.

Houstonian, Princess Margaret reminisce

HOUSTON (AP) — The last time Salvatore Manzo saw Princess Margaret of Great Britain was when he helped her feed canapes to her dog.

Almost 33 years later, Manzo had the chance to see the princess again and, much to his surprise, she remembered him.

Manzo, director of executive development in the Jones Graduate School of Administration at Rice University, was one of about 500 guests who attended the opening of an exhibiton of 50 sketches drawn by artist Leonardo da Vinci more than five centuries ago.

The exhibition, on loan from the Royal Collection at Windsor Castle, was opened officially by the princess Friday at the Museum of Fine Arts.

Admitting he was anxious to see the sketches, Manzo was more enchanted with the opportunity to talk once again with the younger sister of Queen Elizabeth II.

THE LAST time the two met, Manzo was in the Air Force and was the first man to bring a B-29 bomber into Sculthorpe Air Base near the royal family's residence at Sandringham.

"It was Feb. 22, 1949, George Washington's birthday," he recalled. "But nobody mentioned that."

Then King George VI invited some of his neighbors, including Manzo, to a "sherry party."

"It was just like a cocktail party you'd have in your living room," Manzo said. "It was the first time that I ever had ice in my drink in England."

While impressed by the trappings of royalty, including the pheasants bearing the royal crest, the American serviceman said he was more taken by the royal family.

"THEY JUST acted like ordinary people. Someone told me to go in and talk with the king. I said, 'What can a say to a king?' and they told me just tell him a funny story," he said.

Though no funny stories came to mind, Manzo did sit with the British monarch and talked for about 15 minutes.

"They were just very nice people. The king, Elizabeth the Queen Mother and Princess Margaret, were just marvelous," he said.

But that was 33 years ago, and the princess has met many people at social gatherings since.

As her highness toured the da Vinci exhibit, wearing a peach dress and a gem-enrcusted broach, Manzo managed to edge closer and closer to her.

Between examining the delicate sketches and discussing them with the Royal Librarian Sir Robin Mackworth-Young, the princess paused to chat with bystanders and Manzo got his opening.

He carried with him a list of everyone who attended the Sandrigham gathering in 1949, introduced himself to the princess and was rewarded when she beamed recognition of the event.

"HERE, LET me see it," she said when he told her of his guest list. Scanning the guests, she noticed the parents of her lady-in-waiting, Lady Ann Tennant, were present and immediately called her over to introduce her to Manzo.

An evening that started with the faint hope of jarring a long-ago memory turned into another memorable event for Manzo.

staged a coup against a democratically-elected government in Hungary in 1947. Nearly all the important elected deputies were arrested first and shipped off to the U.S.S.R. Few were ever heard of again. Into their absent places communists and their stooges were moved. Presto! A so-called "people's government" was installed.

Chief salami slicer was austere Mikhail Suslov who, for 50 years, intrigued and plotted assassinations to preserve and expand power where the Russians had even a toehold. Suslov died in Moscow the other day but his macabre handiwork survives today around the world, including defiant Poland and in El Salvador.

As the chief theoretician of the Soviet party and mastermind of destabilizing governments abroad, Suslov gave unstinted encouragement to Fidel Castro and his brother, Raul, trained by the KGB. Suslov apparently was the only top member of the Politburo who urged the late Nikita Khrushchev to defy the U.S. during the missile crisis of 1962. Suslov lost — but didn't forget. He later swung the opposition against Khrushchev and in favor of present bigwig Leonid Brezhnev.

A grateful Brezhnev gave Suslov open-ended license to cement Soviet policy, particularly where it harmed U.S. interests. That's how the Kremlin persuaded Castro to dispatch Cuban foreign legions abroad — to Africa and the Middle East. Then, he encouraged both Castros and their trusted emissaries to become involved in Central America. It was an original Suslov suggestion that they help the Sandinistas revolt in Nicaragua first. The Castro brothers first opted for El Salvador but Suslov stuck to his salami tactics. Today, Fidel Castro is the revolutionary disease carrier, a sort of "Typhoid Mary," in the region.

As Professor Jeffrey Hart, of Dartmouth, proposed in a recent column for King Features, while Poland is in the Soviet sphere of influence, Cuba is in ours and very remote from the centers of Kremlin military muscle. Therefore, Hart reasons, and I heartily agree, why don't we put a real squeeze on Cuba? It has just received 63 tons of fresh Soviet armaments backed by several squadrons of new MiG-23s. Some of those MiGs, by the way, had the audacity to penetrate our own U.S. airspace on reconnaissance missions to spy out some of our maneuvers. They were escorted by Navy planes back toward their Cuban bases. The Caribbean region, in fact the entire Western Hemisphere, is essentially part of our "sphere of influence" and we should make our position in that regard clear to the athiests in the Kremlin.

Yet all the indications are that conditions in El Salvador are fast deteriorating. Secretary of State Haig told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, in a robust defense of President Reagan's urging of Congress for more assistance to El Salvador, that the U.S. intends to thwart the rebels. He hinted at "whatever means" may be necessary which promptly alarmed some critics to mean the use of our troops.

Haig asserted that he wasn't about to spell out options available to us and also refused to say whether we'd contemplate sending combat troops. The president, a few days earlier, certified that the civilian junta of President Jose Napoleon Duarte was making progress toward human rights.

For the El Salvadoran government, it's a time of terrible stress. Its preparations for democratic elections in March are underway even as guerrilla forces launch new offensives and have managed to destroy at least half the government's air force in a derring-do raid. President Reagan figures El Salvador needs an increase of $100 million now and an overall total of $300 million by 1983 in economic and military assistance to beat back forces supplied by Cuba, Nicaragua and behind them, the Soviet Union.

It's distressing that rightist governmental forces and some so-called private armies have resorted to wanton killings as they searched for guerrillas, who have preyed brutally on the fears of peasants and many townsfolk. Of course, a danger always lurks that our own government might become too deeply involved in El Salvador and lose out in the long run. Still, I believe it's a positive sign that the El Salvadoran government arrested six soldiers for slaying three U.S. nuns and a layworker. It tries, perhaps awkwardly, to avoid extremism while the guerrillas kill-at-will and blame the El Salvadoran government for extremism.

This kill and accuse the other guy ploy is part of the "salami slicing" method advocated and practiced so amorally by Suslov in furthering Soviet power positions. The application is a first cousin to the big lie invented by Hitler. It's very complicated to figure out in many of the ripped-up country's areas who is doing what to whom and why. I don't pretend to offer a solution. I'm only setting out some of the historical background and how this frightful mess came about to help you better understand when you read dispatches from the area.

What is clear to me, however, is that the encroachment by the Soviet Union through its surrogates must be excised in Central America as a surgeon would remove a cancerous growth.

Left alone, it will not wither or go away, but will, sooner than later, infect us all.

A fire Saturday evening caused heavy damage to the bathroom and attic and extensive smoke damage throughout the remainder of a house occupied by Doris Brockington, 1300 E. Industrial Ave. Source of the fire was a water heater vent, according to Midland Fire Department. Ten firemen fought the blaze for an hour and a half Saturday night. There were no injuries.

included, it is an off-site extension," he added.

SOME OF THE MMH directors were more hesitant than Branson to comment on the profitability of the chemical dependency unit, but they stood strong on the position of need.

"This (facility) is the first in a satellite operation," Martin Neill, MMH director, said. "The judgment for this was not made on a money-making basis, but from church groups and other organizations telling us that there is a great need for the medical service.

"I really don't know if this operation will make money to begin with. It may. Most others are private and not tax-supported," he added.

"Generating revenue is not a prime motive," Director Wanda Mohr said. "But we do not expect to lose money. A private facility sees it as a real money-making project, but it won't be for us — we will take indigents."

Mrs. Mohr emphasized that the hospital would have to educate the public about this kind of facility, if it expects to win a general obligation bond issue to fund the facility's construction.

"THIS IS NOT a moral issue," she said, referring to the type of patients the facility would be treating. "People who do not recognize this (substance abuse) as a disease have an ignorant, intolerant, uneducated attitude. This is an illness; it needs to be addressed."

Director Pat Estes agrees with the need for this kind of treatment in the Permian Basin, but "in justifying our position, I cannot, because I have not seen enough facts and figures on these facilities."

Director Ed Magruder said MMH would be able to do a "better job treating the patients."

"First, we can finance the facility at less cost," he said, referring to the cost of borrowing money and "therefore, the cost to the patient would be less."

Moreover, he explained that revenue generated in excess of expense "can be used to lower the cost."

"It doesn't have to go into dividends to the stockholders. Our stockholders are the public. The district was formed for the purpose of providing health care for the people in the district," he said.

"WE (HOSPITAL) are trying to be as competitive as we possibly can, having the taxpayers own a hospital they can be proud of."

According to the hospital's long-range planning study, "proprietary (private) hospitals would seriously impair the need for health care in Midland."

According to a hospital official, it would benefit the district if private hospitals are kept out of the community's health care, because if "MMH allows private entities in, it will leave MMH with only indigent care."

Dr. Henrie E. Mast, the hospital's fifth director, was out of town this weekend and could not be reached for comment on the chemical abuse facility.

Directors agree the project has been "rushed" because of the time factor involving the other applications.

One of the Texas Health Facilities Commission's functions is to prevent duplication; therefore, MMH had to submit its application in the same review period with the two private hospitals.

At a recent MMH board meeting, it was pointed out that many of Midland's physicians were concerned with the hospital administration's priorities.

MAGRUDER ASKED the hospital's planning commission to update the medical staff on the 102-bed expansion, referring to a pre-application for the expansion which was submitted in June 1981 at the same time as MMH submitted its pre-application for a chemical dependency unit.

"There are feelings around here that we are going into a new field (chemical dependency unit) without concern for the hospital expansion," Magruder said.

He added the chemical dependency certificate of need application was forced on the hospital because of a time factor.

"This was not our priority, but those priorities of others," he said.

John Dorn, MMH trustee and chairman of the planning commission, responded that the freestanding facility is "easier because it is away from us; however the expansion is more difficult. Architects are working as quickly as they can" on plans for the 102-bed expansion within the hospital.

Although some critics of the hospital say MMH has no business acquiring more beds when it can't fill or staff the ones it has, Branson denies the allegation.

He explained that there are people who need to be admitted to the hospital for elective surgery and tests but are waiting because of the lack of beds at MMH.

CONCERNING the staffing, Branson said recruitment programs are continuous. He added that the staffing for the chemical dependency unit would not be a problem.

"Specialized professionals are drawn to facilities such as these," he said.

Additionally, Branson believes the 102 beds, as proposed in the expansion of MMH, will be filled.

"We increased patient days in 1981 by 10 percent over 1980," Branson said. "We need more beds.

"Our first priority is to make available (on-site) additional beds," he said. "That is our highest priority to our medical staff and patients. Other programs and services come after that."

Although MMH officials said they hope to have the 102-bed certificate of need application completed within a couple of weeks, "those priorties of others" have forced MMH into the battle for the behavorial health center.

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan has submitted a defense budget to Congress that asks for more than $201 million worth of Texas military construction.

Carswell Air Force Base, Fort Bliss and Goodfellow Air Force Base are the largest recipients under the request, which is for the 1983 fiscal year beginning next Oct. 1.

FBI seeking witnesses

Copley News Service

WASHINGTON — Some 3,000 persons across the United States who might have been in Washington's National Airport terminal in the hours before an Air Florida jetliner crashed on takeoff last month have been contacted by the Federal Bureau of Investigation in the search for an explanation for the disaster.

Brad Dunbar, spokesman for the National Transportation Safety Board, which is investigating the Jan. 13 crash that killed 78 persons, said the FBI is helping the NTSB find persons who can tell the board something about ice on the ill-fated Boeing 737.

Dunbar said the scope of the FBI's search is unprecedented for an NTSB crash investigation.

He said the FBI has found that only 535 of those contacted were in the terminal between 1:30 p.m. and 4 p.m., when the plane took off in near-blizzard conditions and 30 seconds later crashed into the 14th Street Bridge.

The FBI now is re-interviewing the 535 to find those who may have seen Air Florida's Flight 90 as it waited for weather conditions to improve enough for the airport to reopen.

Dunbar said that those who saw the plane then will be interviewed more fully by NTSB investigators.

A buildup of ice on the aircraft's wings is suspected as the primary cause of the plane's failure to gain more than 300 feet of altitude before falling into the bridge and breaking apart in the Potomac River.

Seventy-four of the victims were passengers, and four were in vehicles struck by the plane on the bridge.

When the NTSB decided to seek more witnesses who might have noticed the plane parked outside the glass-walled terminal and observed the spraying of a de-icing fluid over its wings and fuselage, it asked the airlines that use that area of the terminal for the names and addresses of all passengers who were on flights that arrived or departed during the two and a half hours before Flight 90 took off.

American, Trans World, Northwest, Republic, Altair and Air Florida airlines provided a total of 3,000 names, Dunbar said.

But the FBI quickly discovered that only 535 had been in the terminal. The others had been on different legs of the flights that had originated or terminated at National, Dunbar said.

He noted that the FBI's normal role after a commercial airliner crashes is to immediately seek possible evidence of sabotage. None was found in the Air Florida crash, he added.

Reagan wants more for home

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite calling for spending cuts in many areas of the budget, President Reagan asked Congress on Saturday for a 17 percent increase in funds to run the White House in the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1.

The president requested $22,164,000 to run his executive office, compared with estimated outlays of $18,877,000 in the current fiscal year.

Most of the increase is for staff salaries.

For fiscal 1983, the White House payroll would be $13.3 million, compared with $11.9 million this year.

According to the budget, Reagan is shrinking the White House staff to 322 people in 1982, down from 351 when he took office. For 1983, the workforce would remain at 322.

The budget for official entertainment would be hiked by $5,000 — going from $15,000 to $20,000.

The president requested a $726,000 spending increase for "communications, utilities and other rent," a $47,000 budget hike for printing and reproduction costs and a $53,000 boost for supplies and materials.

The travel budget for the president and other persons would remain unchanged at $400,000, but the budget for "transportation of things" would be increased by $1,000 to a new total of $14,000.

The White House office account does not include Reagan's salary. That is listed separately in the budget. It is fixed by law and will remain unchanged in 1983 — $200,000. The president also receives a $50,000 expense allowance.

Under another budget account, Reagan requested a $351,000 increase to pay the bills for care, maintenance and repair of the White House. The funds would total $3.9 million for 1983.

Two firms prevented from using 'Polo'

DALLAS (AP) — A federal judge has issued a temporary restraining order preventing two companies from using the trademarks of Polo by Ralph Lauren.

U.S. District Judge Jerry Buchmeyer Friday also ordered federal marshals to accompany attorneys for Polo Fashions Inc. to seize merchandise believed to be counterfeit.

Allen Butler, attorney for Polo Fashions, and a U.S. marshal's office spokesman said they could not comment on whether any merchandise was seized from the offices of Taighmor Limited Inc. or DFW Sales Corp.

Polo Fashions has sued the two companies, claiming they manufactured, distributed and sold apparel and accessories bearing counterfeit Ralph Lauren trademarks and a polo player logo.

Paul C. Beasley, a private investigator, said in an affidavit filed with the suit that he bought 48 shirts from DFW Sales with counterfeit trademarks.

A salesman told him that "when the shirts were resold at retail, there could be no advertising because representatives of Polo Fashions Inc. would cause trouble if they were aware of DFW's sales of these shirts," Beasley said.

A preliminary injunction hearing has been set for Feb. 16.

Police wife arrested for popping tops

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — The wife of a Fort Worth police officer was arrested Friday after she was accused of popping tabs off discarded Coca-Cola cans at the bottling plant where she worked.

Some of the tabs, which were marked with cash amounts as part of a promotional drive, were turned in for money at local convenience stores, police said.

Police said the woman, who was fired from her job on a conveyor line at the bottling plant, removed the tabs from cans that had been contaminated or discarded.

"Sometimes the cans aren't completely full or are contaminated when they fall on the floor," said police Lt. A.M. Patterson. "She would pull the tab off if it had a cash amount on it and throw the can in the trash."

Another person turned the tabs in for money, police said.

Four injured by speeding stolen car

DALLAS (AP) — Three first-graders and a school crossing guard were injured Friday afternoon when they were struck by a stolen car that sped through an East Dallas intersection, police said.

The 24-year-old driver was arrested about 4 miles away and was being held on investigation of driving while intoxicated, auto theft, failure to stop and render aid, driving with a suspended license, failure to leave identification and giving a fictitious name.

One of the Oran M. Roberts Elementary School students suffered a broken leg and the others were not injured seriously, hospital officials said.

"I was walking with my flag up," said the crossing guard, 68-year-old Nathaniel Smith. "Either he didn't see it or he ignored it."

Town library is woman's dream

ANTHONY, Texas (AP) — When Peggy Davis was growing up, the way to experience new things and travel to faraway lands was through reading a book.

But nowadays, she said, too many youngsters — especially in this small town — are willing to close their minds to the outside world.

"There's a whole big world outside this little town and they don't know anything about it," she said. "It's like we have a wall around us."

Mrs. Davis has a plan to break that wall. She is trying to start a library and recreation center for young people.

"Right this second, it's a dream," she said. "But it's certainly more viable than it was a year ago."

In the past month, Mrs. Davis has been contacting private foundations around the country in an attempt to get funds for her project, called the Sunshine Library.

"These people say, 'You mean there's no library in this town?'" she said. "They can't believe it.

"We don't have anything for these kids to do, but we've got seven bars in three blocks. There are two video games at a restaurant and they stand in line to play them. This bubble has got to burst."

Anthony's problems are more complicated than just the slow pace of most small, rural towns.

One of the problems is that the Texas-New Mexico border runs through the middle of the town, making it hard for citizens from either side of the line to get aid from the states.

"When you meet somebody here, the first question they ask is what side of town you live on.

CRIME STOPPERS

Drug dealers earn easy money

Drug traffickers are robbing our kids of their future. Over 17,000 Texas high school seniors are daily drug users . . . an alarming statistic that merely scratches the surface.

Kids from age twelve to seventeen are the victims. Their innocence earns these criminals easy money. Now is the time to shut down this business in Texas. It won't be easy. Dealers are just the bottom of the drug dealing pyramid. These pushers get their drugs from the kingpins . . . those at the top of the network . . . the drug traffickers.

Drug dealing to minors is a hideous crime and these criminals must be stopped. A joint effort by law enforcement and concerned citizens is necessary in declaring war on drug traffickers.

There are no absolute answers but a major step has been taken. Governor William P. Clements and the Texas Legislature have created a statewide anti-crime hotline through the Crime Stoppers Advisory Council. This hotline is designed to aid law enforcement in a crackdown on drug traffickers.

For the month of February, the Crime Stoppers Advisory Council is focusing its statewide "Crime of the Month" on drug trafficking. Any citizen having information about major drug trafficking is asked to call the Texas Crime Stoppers Advisory Council at 1-800-252-TIPS. Cash rewards are available for information leading to the arrest and indictment of criminals. Citizens do not have to reveal their names, just their information, and they will be given a unique code number for identification purposes.

Texas Legislators and our Governor have helped provide the criminal justice system with the punch it needs to find drug traffickers and put them behind bars. But they can't do it alone. Call 1-800-252-TIPS today with any information on major drug trafficking in Texas. Help stop this growing menace to young people of our state.

Loan Le, a young widow from Vietnam, who works as a secretary in Dallas, was unemployed for a year and a half after fleeing her homeland.

Refugees risk life, loss of family to come to U.S.

DALLAS (AP) — Loan Le, a young widow, lost all her valuables to thieves when she fled Vietnam with her three children in 1980. But she survived the long journey by anticipating the freedom and opportunity she knew awaited her in the United States.

Freedom she found immediately. It was a year and a half before she found a job.

Ms. Le says learning English was the major barrier between her and employment. She had to depend on friends and refugee aid programs for survival until last October, when she began working as a secretary at Catholic Charities of Dallas.

Still she longs for a car, for an apartment with a dishwasher.

"I am so poor now," she said, "but I don't feel so bad about it because we throw away everything — but now we have freedom."

Ms. Le and the other Southeast Asians who overcome physical dangers to flee their battle-scarred homelands discover they still must struggle to survive in the United States.

"THEY'RE so unfamiliar with our culture and our ways," said Don Caassidy, administrator for migration and refugee services for Catholic Charities. "For example, just taking care of a house ... often becomes a very difficult challenge, especially for a man. And the children tend to tear things up a little more. They're used to living in an environment where it's kind of dirty, and everything's made out of bamboo."

An estimated 560,333 refugees from Vietnam, Laos, Cambodia and Thailand have settled in the United States since 1975, according to the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services.

They represent about a third of the number that fled Southeast Asia. Although many more petition for refugee status in the United States each month, 14,000 are accepted.

About 10 percent of the Indochinese — 50,546 — have settled in Texas, which is second only to California in number of refugee residents.

"MANY HAVE moved to Texas (after being settled elsewhere) apparently because of the favorable climate," said Linda Gordon of the Department of Health and Human Services in Washington. The government estimates at least 1,000 Indochinese have come to Texas through such secondary migration.

Sponsors provide the bridge that allows refugees to overcome the cultural difficulties that permeate even the smallest details of American life.

"Sometimes, it's just a matter of teaching a refugee how to use the bus system, or how to shop at a grocery store or use a Laundromat or even as simple as using a toilet or running the water in your home," said attorney Ralph Jones, a member of the Episcopal Church of the Incarnation's committee to oversee the resettling of a Cambodian family of six.

Jones said several parish members "volunteered just out of the blue" to show the refugees other aspects of American life by taking them to the library, the zoo and movies.

The key to survival, however, lies in mastering English. Most refugees learn rudimentary English in resettlement camps, but once they are in the United States, they tend to settle near other refugees where they are more likely to rely on their native languages.

Faced with a shortage of teachers who speak the languages of Southeast Asia, some local officials have created English immersion programs such as the one sponsored by the Dallas Independent School District.

Dr. Dam Trung Phap, the program's director and the former dean of linguistics at Saigon University, said about 260 Indochinese children had joined the program by the beginning of the spring semester, with more enrolling all the time.

Reagan budget cuts favored by some with the most to lose

By DAN BALZ
The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

ENNIS, Texas — On the wall of the drab main corridor in the municipal building of this little Texas town is a signed photograph of a politician. "I love Ennis," it says. "Phil Gramm."

Gramm is the congressman from here and it seems indeed as if he, or at least the federal government in which he serves, has been good to Ennis. The streets in the black and Mexican-American sections of town were paid for in part with federal funds; by later this year, the downtown sidewalks will be rebuilt, also with seed money from Washington.

THE RUNWAY at the little airport west of town was built with a federal grant; even the local fire department is partly supported by the federal Treasury. It plans to use revenue sharing money to buy a lawnmower later this year.

Yet Phil Gramm would like to change of lot of this. Last year he became one of the most prominent boll weevils in Congress by co-sponsoring President Reagan's budget cuts. If he and Reagan and others succeed, life in Ennis and almost every other community in the country will be dramatically changed. The question at the beginning of this newest battle of the budget is whether the people Phil Gramm represents will think those changes are for the better.

It is easy to lose sight of the reality of the federal budget at a time like this, when there is talk of new cuts, big deficits and a wholesale shift in programs to the states. Later on, when parliamentary words like "reconciliation" begin to slip into the lexicon of Washington again, that reality will fade even farther.

But there is a simpler way to look at the maze of numbers that has just been published. Think of it as just a series of checks mailed out from Washington to every corner of America. For example:

— A little west of Ennis, Joshua, Texas, is building a water treatment plant that is now the lifeblood for Joe Hook, a contractor for Venus Construction Co. The construction grant comes from the Environmental Protection Agency.

— In Venus, Texas, the local school district needed new kitchen equipment a few years ago. It found the $9,000 through a program in the Agriculture Department.

SOME OF THE checks that flow daily from Washington are large and the programs that underwrite them well known: Social Security, food stamps, veterans benefits, defense contracts.

Others are infinitesimal by federal standards and show up only as double asterisks in the budget document, too small to count. Oliver E. Meadows of Godley, Texas, is one of those asterisks. He was once a member of the American Battle Monuments Commission, and in 1980, the government spent something under $500 to bring him to Washington for a meeting.

Richard Wagner is a meat inspector at the Cleburne Meat Packing Co. in Cleburne, Texas. He works for the state of Texas, but Washington helps pay his salary through a subsidy to the state.

A dollar here, a dollar there, saves the government money

WASHINGTON (AP) — Forget the millions and the billions. Ronald Reagan has found lots of ways — 50 cents here, a dollar there — to save the government's money, but at a cost to the average American.

Take Supplemental Security Income, a program that helps people who are poor and aged, blind or disabled.

The average beneficiary gets $264.70 a month.

In his new budget, Reagan wants to round the payment off — round it off to $264. Government budget makers call that process "rounding down." It can save millions.

In scores of similar little ways, people in different circumstances — inventors taking out patents, big city kids getting summer meals, farmers trying to protect their herds from the bacterial disease known as brucellosis, buyers of FHA-insured homes — would get less from the government or pay more for what they get under the budget proposals Reagan sent to Congress on Monday. Congress may not necessarily go along.

In his message to Congress, Reagan explained his approach to budget making.

"THE FEDERAL government is the taxpayer's steward," he said. "It has the obligation to ensure that the resources surrendered to advance the public welfare are put to the most effective and proper uses."

With that philosophy, Reagan proposed imposing token fees on Medicaid clients — people, by government definition, who are too poor to pay for medical care. Reagan would charge $1 per outpatient visit and $2 a day for hospitalizations.

The fees, Reagan said, "would encourage more responsible use of resources."

They also, he noted, would bring in $329 million in fiscal 1983.

And so it goes.

The president proposed "benefit rounding adjustments" so that a family entitled to $235.60 worth of food stamps a month would get $235. And households entitled to $10 worth of stamps a month would get none. Reagan explained the cost of administering the program often exceeds $15.

Currently, a person who becomes eligible for SSI on the 10th of the month gets a check for a full month's benefits. Reagan proposes to prorate the first check to cover just the portion of the month for which the recipient is eligible.

He also proposed dropping 115,000 people who are expected to be disabled for more than 12, but less than 24, months. Unless two years' disability was expected, these people would not be classified as permanently disabled — and therefore ineligible.

Federal Housing Administration mortgage insurance premiums are paid in easy installments — 124th of 1 percent of the outstanding mortgage balance for the life of the mortgage.

Official says layoffs possible if Ford goes GM's way

DEARBORN, Mich. (AP) — Ford Motor Co.'s chief negotiator warned Saturday that layoffs could be ahead if contract concession talks with the United Auto Workers collapse as they did at General Motors Corp.

"I can't tell you that if we fail to reach an agreement, there won't be 10,000 or 12,000 people put on layoff in one form or another," Peter Pestillo said at a news conference. "Ultimately we run the business to make a living at it and that's one of the most cold-blooded facts of life.".

Asked whether there would be immediate layoffs if bargaining fails, Pestillo suggested that Ford might rely more heavily on outside parts suppliers instead of manufacturing its own components.

"We will be measuring product versus other opportunity all through our system," said Pestillo, "and the fact that we don't do anything (fail to reach agreement) will probably force us to make some decisions in ways we currently wouldn't favor."

Relying on outside suppliers, known as out-sourcing, is one of the central issues in the negotiations. The union wants limits on out-sourcing to protect the jobs of the UAW's rank and file.

Pestillo said the company has not threatened the union with plant closings and layoffs if negotiations fail. "We don't behave like that," he said.

Man who shipped friend's body parts around country relatively free now

CHICAGO (AP) — A man who killed his former girlfriend in 1977 and sent parts of her body to universities around the country has been released from a state mental institution under strict supervision.

Miguel Valdes, 41, who was acquitted by reason of insanity, was told Friday by a Circuit Court judge he may return to his family in suburban Melrose Park but must get psychiatric care and supervision for five years.

Valdes killed his lover, nurse Alicia Agsaoay, 36, and shot to death Jesus Lim, 40, a doctor Valdes thought was his rival. He then mailed parts of the nurse's body to her brother in the Philippines and to various universities in the United States and England. One package even was sent to then-President Gerald Ford.

Peace force training Mideast style

FORT BRAGG, N.C. (AP) — About 1,200 Fort Bragg soldiers are completing training in Middle Eastern weapons and lifestyles so they can join a multinational peacekeeping force in the Sinai Desert.

About 800 infantrymen from the 82nd Airborne Division will spend 179 days monitoring the withdrawal of Israeli forces from Egyptian territory captured by Israel in 1973.

The soldiers, expected to leave for the Sinai in mid-March, will be the United States' contingent in the Multinational Peacekeeping Force and Observers established under terms of the Egypt-Israel peace treaty and the Camp David accords.

They will patrol the largest sector of the occupied territory, a 130-mile strip extending south from Elath to Sharm el Sheik on the Gulf of Aqaba. Headquarters for the troops will be at Sharm el Sheik.

Doctor found liable in worker's death

BALTIMORE (AP) — The widow of a Bethlehem Steel Corp. employee who died of heatstroke has been awarded $112,000 by a state panel that found a company doctor liable.

The state Health Claims Arbitration Board ruled Dr. Mohammed R. Gheba did not follow proper medical procedures in treating Pleasant N. Sharpe for heat stroke suffered in 1978 while he was working at an open-hearth furnace at the company's Sparrows Point steel plant. The temperature that day reached 101 degrees.

The panel ruled Thursday that Sharpe fell into a coma because Gheba did not reduce his body temperature when he was admitted to the steel plant's hospital. Sharpe suffered brain damage and died July 6, 1980.

Evacuees returned to homes after fire

PERRY, Okla. (AP) — Residents evacuated from homes near an oil tank farm that erupted in flames were returned to their homes on Saturday, officials said.

Four tanks and an oil transport truck exploded at the O'Halloran Oil Corp. oil and gas storage plant Friday afternoon, spewing burning fuel but causing no injuries.

The fire was contained after three hours, although a warehouse and a railroad trestle were still smouldering Saturday.

Perry Police Chief Mike Wolfe said about 30 people were evacuated from homes and two motels soon after the fire was reported, but were allowed back Saturday.

Reagan says departments will close

WASHINGTON — President Reagan announced Saturday that the Department of Energy and the Department of Education will be abolished on Oct. 1.

Most functions of both cabinet departments, according to Reagan's new budget, will be transferred to other federal agencies, including a new Foundation for Education Assistance to channel grants to states and cities.

"The existence of the Department of Energy has sent the wrong signals to energy producers and consumers, deluding them into a sense of complacency and dependence upon central planning," the president's Office of Management and Budget said. "A Cabinet-level Department of Education symbolizes the preemption of appropriate state and local activities."

Social security left alone; Medicare doesn't fare as well

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan is keeping his hands off Social Security in the fiscal 1983 budget sent to Congress on Saturday but is seeking nearly $3 billion in Medicare cuts that are likely to force 26 million elderly Americans to pay more of their medical bills out of their own pockets.

Most of the cuts in Medicare, which is expected to cost $55.3 billion next year, are targeted against the hospitals and physicians that care for the aged.

But Democratic critics of Reagan's budget have already charged the elderly will ultimately pay the price in the form of diminished services and a refusal by providers to accept Medicare fees as full payment.

Reagan, in submitting his budget for the year starting Oct. 1, told Congress that later this year he will offer a health care "competition" plan to hold down costs by making both patients and providers more cost-conscious.

That plan is expected to provide Medicare protection against catastrophic illness, but according to government documents, it also could make patients pay a share of their hospital bills, up to $2,500 for the first 60 days. The net savings to the government starting in fiscal 1984 would be $1.4 billion.

Social Security's cash payments to 36.7 million retired or disabled workers, their dependents and survivors will climb from $155 billion to $173.5 billion in 1983. Reagan's budget provides for full projected cost-of-living increases of 8.1 percent this July and 6.5 percent in July 1983.

But the 1.1 million military retirees and 1.4 million civil service pensioners would not fare as well. Reagan wants to put limits on their cost-of-living increases and give no increase to those whose annuity is 120 percent higher than that of newly retired military or civilian workers of the same rank.

If their annuity was between 100 and 120 percent of the average, they would get only three-fourths of the cost-of-living hike.

The civil servants' retirement benefits will cost $21 billion and the military's $16.5 billion in fiscal 1983.

Reagan also proposed to "defederalize railroad retirement," shifting the nearly 1 million retired rail workers and their kin to the regular Social Security program and "restoring the rail industry's pension to the private sector" to save $248 million.

"Our administration has not and will not turn its back on our elderly or needy citizens," Reagan declared in his budget message to Congress.

Consumer agencies would feel budget bite

By G.G. LaBELLE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration is nibbling where it took big bites before — and biting where it nibbled — but overall it's still eating away at agencies intended to protect Americans against fraud and dangerous products.

In its budget proposals for fiscal 1983 announced Saturday, the administration called for a 10 percent drop in spending by the Federal Trade Commission and 6 percent decrease in that of the Consumer Product Safety Commission.

In the long run, the plan calls for a cut of almost 25 percent from the actual spending for the FTC between the last year of the Carter administration and fiscal 1987.

THE RATIONALE for this, the proposal says, is to further "President Reagan's continued effort to reduce government spending and to remove unnecessary regulatory burdens on the private sector."

The administration would have gone further: it asked last year to abolish the product safety commission as an independent agency and to dispatch the FTC's antitrust division to the Justice Department. Congress, however, would not go along with either move.

The 1983 cuts would leave spending at $60.8 million at the FTC and $32.2 million at the product safety commission.

The percentage cuts make the trade commission seem the more serious victim in the upcoming budget plan, but it lost little in the current fiscal year compared to the product safety agency.

The FTC — which has antitrust and economic duties along with consumer protection — had its budget trimmed by less than 3 percent this fiscal year. The safety commission had 16 percent whacked from its budget in fiscal 1982, meaning it lost more than 100 employees, many of whom did research on potentially dangerous products.

Kirke Harper of the safety commission said the agency had gone to the Office of Management and Budget and "made the case...that we'd already taken about all the cuts that were possible."

Edwin F. Tinsworth of the agency's budget office said only about 10 jobs will be lost because of the proposed cuts, leaving the agency with 636 positions. "With attrition, we'll be all right," he said.

AT THE FTC, the antitrust division that the administration wanted moved is taking cuts less deep than other areas of the agency. It would lose 8.9 percent, while consumer protection would lose 9.7 percent.

Another government agency, the Federal Communications Commission, will have to enlarge one of its offices because of an antitrust action.

The FCC's common carrier bureau will be responsible for overseeing proposals for breaking up the American Telephone & Telegraph Co.

Reagan budget proposes cuts in labor training programs

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite its own forecasts for widening unemployment, the Reagan administration is proposing a scaled-down, $2.2 billion employment and training program in fiscal 1983.

The program would turn over to the states the prime responsibility for preparing the poor for unsubsidized jobs in private business.

The centerpiece of the administration's manpower efforts in the budget year that starts Oct. 1 is legislation to phase out the once-popular Comprehensive Employment and Training Act, or CETA, programs and replace them with a $1.4 billion plan that includes block grants to the states.

The $900 million grant program would focus on job training and placement for the hard-core unemployed between the ages of 18 and 25. Consolidation of the various programs into block grants would save $1.9 billion.

Approximately $180 million would go to a "special targeted program" — a catch-all plan designed to replace a host of CETA programs with employment plans for special groups suffering high joblessness.

Much of that money would finance retraining and relocation efforts for skilled workers who lose their jobs because of depressed conditions in their industries.

Overall, the proposed 1983 Labor Department budget calls for outlays of $26.7 billion, of which $21.1 billion would be spent on entitlement programs such as unemployment insurance benefits, worker compensation and black lung disability benefits.

The administration has been briefing lobbyists on the new manpower program but has not yet sent the legislation to Capitol Hill.

Several leaders of organized labor said they will lobby against the budget cuts.

AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland said, "Now is not the time for further cuts in programs desparately needed for the jobless and the poor. These programs could be paid for by cutting back last year's excessive tax giveaways to the wealthy."

In a statement highlighting its budget request, the department estimated that 1.1 million hard-core unemployed would be served by the basic manpower program. It said no stipends would be paid to those participating in training.

Approximately $778 million of the $2.2 billion overall employment and training plan would be spent on various existing programs authorized under CETA.

Census Bureau gets budget cut share

By RANDOLPH E. SCHMID
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Already planning to eliminate one job in 10, the Census Bureau got more bad news Saturday in President Reagan's budget.

Proposed 1983 outlays are $148 million, down from a current figure of $154.9 million and sharply lower than the 1981 figure of $250.7 million.

The agency is still winding down from the massive 1980 national head count and Director Bruce Chapman recently announced a staff reduction of some 500 workers, about 10 percent of the staff.

Anticipating the cuts included in the new budget, bureau sources have indicated a further reduction will be needed. That may be done by requiring all census workers to take one day off without pay every two weeks for at least 20 weeks.

And reductions can be expected in the reports and statistics produced by the agency, material widely used in government, business and industry.

An early casualty, a set of social statistics organized by postal ZIP code, was rescued by a coalition of businesses that came up with $250,000 to cover the bureau's costs in issuing the material.

But Douglas C. Salter of National Planning Data Corp., who spearhaeaded that group, noted that "there are really only a few times that the data user community can fill this void...in no way can we be expected to assume the responsibilities of the statistical community in Washington."

Former Census Deputy Director Daniel Levine recently told American Demographics magazine that the planned cutbacks represent a "major disruption" of the bureau.

Lack of funds has already forced the bureau to drop plans for a 1985 national census, a large sample that had been proposed to update the 1980 head count.

Denver dentist Peter Emily performs his job on Denver Zoo's 21-year-old polar bear, Sophie. The normally less-than-friendly bear had to be knocked out in order for the dentistry to take place.

The bear facts of zoo dentistry

DENVER (AP) — Every dentist has to deal with nervous patients. And sometimes a patient has to deal with a nervous dentist, especially if the patient is a grouchy bear.

Dr. Peter Emily peformed a double root canal Friday on Sophie, a 21-year-old, 384-pound polar bear who lives at the Denver Zoo. Sophie is not famous for her pleasant disposition.

"We made sure Sophie was good and drugged up before the dentist started working on her mouth," zoo foreman Rex Williams said Saturday. "I wouldn't put my fingers in there while she's awake for anything."

Keepers took Emily to the zoo after they noticed Sophie had three discolored spots on her lower jaw and guessed they were tooth infections.

"You can't go right up to her and look in her mouth to find out, at least not if you want to keep your hand," Williams said. "You can get within a couple of feet of a polar bear, as long as you keep the bars between you and her. But that's it. Lets just say they're not the most even-tempered animals around."

Williams said the tooth problems were noticed when Sophie was released from the hibernation den Jan. 15. She is put in the den every fall in case she is pregnant, he said, but if she does not give birth she is released in early January.

Emily, whose patients generally are of the human variety but who likes to work on an occasional animal bicuspid, had no difficulty with the root canal — once Sophie was safely sedated, Williams said.

There were no complications in the operation, although "everything is so darn big in there, you have to use special tools," he said.

On Saturday, Sophie appeared to be recovering well, but zoo keepers were keeping their distance for a while.

"You don't mess with a polar bear," Williams said, "especially a hurting polar bear."

Draft budget grows

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, who once campaigned against peacetime draft registration, on Saturday proposed a modest budget increase for the Selective Service system.

Under the new budget, Selective Service would receive $23.5 million in fiscal 1983, up from $20.4 million in the current budget.

But the agency's spending would still be less than the $27 million of 1981, when it had large start-up costs in the first full year of registration.

Foreign aid increases in form of military outlays

WASHINGTON (AP) — Citing serious threats to U.S. global interests, the Reagan administration asked Congress on Saturday to approve $4.7 billion in security aid to friendly nations in its 1983 budget, an increase of $1.2 billion from this year.

It also wants $5 million to start a new anti-terrorism training program to help foreign law enforcement authorities "combat international terrorism more effectively."

The budget for the fiscal year that begins Oct. 1 continues the recent trend toward giving greater emphasis to military and security aid to other nations over traditional economic assistance. That means help is being oriented in the direction of friendly nations and that it may be harder for neutral countries to obtain assistance.

In addition to increased security assistance, there also would be an improvement in the financial terms of the aid, if Congress approves the administration's budget proposals.

The budget gave no breakdown of what countries would receive aid. That will be provided in a separate report to Congress later. However, there is little doubt that Israel and Egypt will continue to receive substantially more aid than other nations.

If Congress approves, the total foreign aid budget for fiscal 1983 would amount to $9.4 billion in budget authority, up from $8 billion in 1982. Actual outlays would total $8.2 billion, up from $7.8 billion.

The outlays are the money the administration actually wants to spend during the fiscal year, while budget authority includes funds to be spent in future years.

Most of the shift in emphasis from traditional economic aid to security assistance shows up in the requests for spending authority for future years.

The administration requested $4.7 billion in spending authority for international security assistance in fiscal 1983, and $3.8 billion in outlays, compared with $3.5 billion in authority and an identical $3.5 billion in outlays in fiscal 1982.

According to projections in Reagan's 1983 budget, the trend will continue and the outlays for security assistance will exceed outlays for traditional foreign economic aid in fiscal 1984 and again in 1985.

Winds blamed for crash

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — A military transport plane smashed into South Korea's highest mountain during war-game exercises, killing all 53 people aboard, the Defense Ministry said Saturday.

The government said it was the worst military crash in South Korea's history and blamed the accident on strong winds.

The U.S.-made C-123 propeller-driven transport crashed into the 6,450-foot Mt. Halla dormant volcano on the southern resort island of Cheju Friday afternoon, the ministry said. It gave no reason for the delayed report.

Rescue teams found pieces of the aircraft on Saturday, scattered 2.3 miles north of the mountain. All passengers and crew were confirmed dead, the ministry said.

The cause of the crash was under investigation, but a ministry spokesman said a sudden strong gale jolted the transport as it approached a landing strip on the island's north coast.

The plane was about to disembark 47 soldiers for practice in repelling a seaborne attack. The remaining six dead were crew members.

The previous worst crash involving a South Korean military aircraft was in 1967, when a transport plane crashed in a Seoul residential area, killing 63 people. Fifteen of the victims were aboard the plane and the other casualties were people on the ground.

Cheju island, about 220 miles south of Seoul, is a major tourist attraction that is also known for unpredictable weather.

News of the crash came hours after President Chun Doo-hwan dedicated a new 9,000-foot runway at Cheju international airport to help facilitate the landing of larger passenger jets.

Defense Minister Choo Young-bock, a former air force general, issued a statement to express condolences to families of the crash victims.

British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher told Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak that he should continue talks on Palestinian autonomy after Israel leaves the Gaza Strip and West Bank in April. Mubarak met with Mrs. Thatcher on her Checquers estate before leaving for Bonn, West Germany.

Thatcher seems behind autonomy

LONDON (AP) — British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher on Saturday urged Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak not to let up on Palestinian autonomy talks after the Israelis return the Sinai desert to Egypt April 25, officials said.

The two leaders met for 90 minutes at Mrs. Thatcher's Chequers country residence outside London and officials said the talks were "extremely friendly."

It was Mubarak's first visit here as president since he succeeded Anwar Sadat, who was assassinated Oct. 6.

"There was a very clear recognition that thereafter (April 25) there was a need for the Middle East peace process to be sustained," said a spokesman for Mrs. Thatcher's office at No. 10 Downing St. in London.

British officials said the two leaders talked about Israeli-Arab relations, including what they called the need to agree on some form of Palestinian self-rule in Israeli-occupied territories after the Sinai is returned to Egypt.

Israel seized the Sinai in the 1967 Middle East war and agreed to give it back under terms of the U.S.-sponsored 1978 Camp David accords.

Israel and Egypt have been trying without success to agree on a form of autonomy for the 1.3 million Palestinian Arabs living in the Gaza Strip and West Bank of the Jordan River, which Israel also seized in the 1967 war. It had been hoped agreement on the Palestinian issue could be concluded before the Israeli withdrawal.

Mubarak flew to Britain following his four-day visit to Washington, where he repeated Egypt's pledge to honor its commitment to Camp David. But he also urged the Reagan administration to make direct contact with Palestinian leaders, including the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Officials did not divulge whether Mubarak specifically asked Mrs. Thatcher to press Washington to agree to this.

Israel and the United States have refused to deal with the PLO, contending it is a terrorist group.

Mubarak, who visited France and Italy before Washington, was scheduled to hold a news conference Sunday morning before leaving for Bonn, West Germany, on the last leg of his tour of several Western capitals.

Pyke says accusation behind jailing

AMSTERDAM, Netherlands (AP) — British businessman Andrew Pyke said Saturday that the accusation of a disappointed job applicant led to his 518 days in Iranian prisons on suspicion of spying.

Pyke, released a week ago, arrived at Schiphol Airport here from Athens accompanied by his wife Tileke on the second leg of his freedom journey to his home in Britain.

Speaking to reporters at an impromptu news conference, Pyke, 42, said his arrest and imprisonment on Aug. 29, 1980, resulted from "the false accusation of a man who had a grudge against me...a person I refused to employ."

He gave no further details on the substance of the allegations or on the identity of his accuser, except to say that the individual was "not a European."

Apparently in good health, Pyke reaffirmed that he was not mistreated by his captors, and that an Iranian investigation of the allegations against him showed them to be false.

When he was arrested, he said, he was told by Iranian authorities that he would be charged with espionage but no charges were ever filed against him.

"In fact, I am not a spy," Pyke said, adding that his release coincided with "a slight improvement in the general political situation and the Iranian attitude toward Western Europe."

In comments on his prison life, Pyke said he was allowed to exercise at will and was given the same living arrangements as Iranian prisoners.

Asked about reports that he had complained to a fellow passenger on the plane taking him from Tehran to Athens after his release about having to sleep on the floor, Pyke said: "All Iranian prisoners slept on the floor, too."

Anti-crime staffs cut

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration, which has vowed to fight violent crime and narcotics traffic, is proposing to do it with fewer people in fiscal 1983.

The Justice Department budget, made public Saturday, "is essentially a current services budget," said Assistant Attorney General Kevin Rooney. That means that law enforcement agencies did not suffer the deep cuts made in areas like social services. But they will have minor personnel cutbacks.

The administration's 1983 request of $2,727,193,000 for the Justice Department is a 3.2 percent increase over the anticipated 1982 expenditure of $2,643,037,000. It will fund 283 fewer positions than the 1982 staff level of 54,387 people.

The FBI budget would increase from $740 million to $798 million. The authorized staff would be cut by 13 positions, a reduction that will not prevent the bureau from "maintaining its efforts in all priority investigation areas," Rooney said.

The Drug Enforcement Administration is slated to lose 100 positions, a cut it says will be spread proportionately among its programs.

Attorney General William French Smith has maintained that the administration can improve its crime-fighting programs without spending more money on them through greater efficiency. Smith has, for instance, recently told the FBI to share responsibility for narcotics enforcement with the DEA.

Other law-enforcement agencies taking cuts include the U.S. Marshal's Service, losing 50 positions, and the Antitrust Division, losing 40 employees.

But the department has found the funds for a few increases. Its public affairs office is adding a "speaker's bureau," which will arrange for administration spokesmen to give speeches informing the public about the Reagan administration's achievements in law enforcement.

Hello, Mickey

Chinese try out the U.S.-made Mickey Mouse phones on exhibit at the opening of the U.S. National Light Industry Exhibition held at the Peking Exhibition Center. China announced an increased trade agreement with Poland recently, despite President Reagan's request for sanctions against that country's martial-law government.

China to increase Polish trade

The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

PEKING — China has agreed to boost trade with Poland by about 30 percent this year, apparently ignoring President Reagan's appeal for economic sanctions against the Polish government for imposing martial law.

Some diplomats view the trade protocol and Peking's refusal to condemn the Polish government as tacit Chinese approval for the crackdown on the kind of labor strife that one day could surface in China.

"The picture of a communist government being overthrown by workers obviously disturbs a lot of Chinese leaders," said a Western diplomat.

Other foreign analysts believe the trade pact signed eight days ago had nothing to do with martial law but was part of Peking's continuing effort to expand economic relations with all East European countries.

CHINESE officials who met with Western diplomats this week continued to stress China's neutrality on the Polish crackdown and downplayed the trade agreement as "a routine thing," said a foreign analyst.

"There was no intent to snub Reagan," insisted a European diplomat. "Peking has its own domestic considerations, and it is serious about maintaining an independent and noncommittal posture on Poland."

China agreed under the $140 million trade pact to provide food, consumer goods and textiles to the beleagured Poles, according to an East European envoy, who said exchanges will rise between 25 percent and 30 percent during 1981.

The new agreement, however, falls far short of replenishing the 55 percent drop in trade between the two nations last year as compared to 1980, the diplomat said.

Publicly, Peking has held to a neutral course on the Polish crisis, calling on the Poles to settle their own problems and opposing outside intervention by the Soviets or the West.

Chinese officials who normally are very critical of Soviet diplomatic adventures have studiously refused to join Western nations in blaming Moscow for the crackdown in Poland.

PRIVATELY, Chinese officials say they are unclear how much responsibility Moscow bears for the imposition of martial law.

Three weeks after ordering economic reprisals against Warsaw, Reagan dispatched Assistant Secretary of State John Holdridge to Peking in part to enlist Chinese cooperation in the sanctions drive, according to informed diplomats.

Holdridge, whose chief mission was to explain Reagan's controversial plan to sell military aircraft to Taiwan, discussed the issue with Chinese officials but failed to inspire much interest from Peking, the diplomats said.

Recently, East European diplomats have touted the Polish trade pact as Peking's "answer to Washington," both defying Reagan on the sanctions effort and showing displeasure over the Taiwan aircraft sale.

These diplomats view China's handling of the Polish matter as evidence of a general move to soften its confrontation with the Soviets supported by Peking's secret proposal to double trade with Moscow this year and increase cultural exchanges.

U.N. asks that world 'end dealings with Israel'

UNITED NATIONS — The General Assembly adopted a resolution Friday in response to Israel's annexation of the Golan Heights calling on the international community to "end all dealings with Israel" and laying the groundwork for its expulsion from the United Nations.

Despite intensive U.S. lobbying against the draft, the resolution won 86 votes, with 21 nations opposed, 34 abstaining and 15 absenting themselves.

The United States and Israel were joined by most Western nations and Japan in voting against the text. Eleven African countries — including Egypt — were absent or abstained, along with 26 Latin American nations.

U.S. Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick attacked "this miserable resolution" for its vindictiveness toward Israel and its "barely veiled attack on the United States."

She said the resolution was "profoundly objectionable" because by damaging prospects for Middle East peace it leaves the United Nations weaker, undermining its integrity and its "very reason for existence." She warned that the "ominous" threat to Israeli representation, if carried out, could affect the health and "even the survival" of the United Nations.

Syrian Foreign Minister Abdul Halim Khaddam hailed the result as a "sweeping and overwhelming victory for freedom and a defeat for aggression." The special emergency session of the Assembly had been called to impose sanctions against Israel, after a U.S. veto blocked a far milder resolution in the Security Council last month.

But these sanctions — sweeping though they are — are not binding on governments, unlike Council actions.

Nevertheless, Israeli Ambassador Yehuda Blum launched a scathing indictment of the "shameless document," its 56 sponsors, whom he called "bigots, hypocrites and liars," and the United Nations itself, which he said had sunk "into moral bankruptcy."

The resolution condemns the Israeli legislation on the Golan Heights, declaring it an act of aggression and a threat to the peace. It calls on all nations to embargo military, economic and financial assistance to Israel, and sever diplomatic, trade and cultural relations. It also calls on all governments to "cease forthwith all dealings with Israel in order totally to isolate it in all fields."

Kirkpatrick pointed out that these provisions are not "at all meaningful" because the countries that might heed them do not deal with Israel anyway.

But what she did take seriously was the potential challenge to Israel's U.N. representation, which makes the resolution "more serious than a routine exercise."

Three Americans in group held by 'opium warlord'

BAAN HIN TAEK, Thailand (AP) — Three Americans and four other people who had been rafting in northern Thailand were released Saturday after three days' captivity by troops of a "Golden Triangle" opium warlord, a government spokesman said.

The seven had been held by the Shan United Army of narcotics trafficker Khun Sa. The Americans were identified as James Mace, Jeff Pratt and Gene Glaab. The other captives were identified as Australian Noel Battersby; Israeli Abraham Dubowsky; West German Brigitte Voges and Udom Pien of Thailand. Hometowns were not immediately available.

The seven arrived at this northern Thai village — not long ago the headquarters of Khun Sa — shortly after most reporters had left Baan Hin Taek where they had been taken on a one-day tour by Thai authorities.

The seven told local authorities that they had left the northern Thai resort city of Chiang Mai and had been rafting down the Mae Kok River when they were captured by Khun Sa's soldiers. They were released unharmed and trekked through rugged terrain to reach Baan Hin Taek.

There was speculation their release may have been an attempt by Khun Sa to gain some favor with Thai authorities. Thai forces attacked Baan Hin Taek Jan. 21 and drove out elements of the Shan United Army after sharp fighting.

Khun Sa, alias Chang Shi Fu, is regarded as the major narcotics trafficker of the "Golden Triangle"— the rugged tri-border area of Burma, Laos and Thailand, which is a major source of opium, from which heroin is refined.

The Thai operation against Khun Sa, who claims that his Shan United Army is waging a war against the central Burmese government, has been lauded by the United States and other nations. Officials have described it as a major blow against the world-wide narcotics traffic. Much of the heroin from the Golden Triangle finds its way to other parts of Asia, Western Europe and the United States.

Khun Sa is believed to be hiding along the Thai-Burmese border.

For years the Thais allowed Khun Sa virtual sanctuary, a fact sharply criticized by foreign narcotics officials. But the present government of Prime Minister Prem Tinsulanonda had earlier posted a warrant for his arrest and put a price on his head.

A military operation against him was considered difficult since Khun Sa's army is believed to number as many as 4,000 well-armed men. Khun Sa himself is said to be part Chinese but born in Burma's Shan states. He has often claimed that he was fighting for the independence of the Shan minority group in Burma.

Canadians investigating couple's sale of U.S.-made trucks to Libya

TORONTO (AP) — Canadian government officials are investigating allegations that a Toronto couple arranged a multi-million dollar sale of American-made trucks to Libya for military uses.

"We're examining the whole situation to determine whether or not permits were required, and if so, whether permits were applied for and issued," said Bruce Miller, an information officer in the department of external affairs.

Published reports Friday said the heavy-duty trucks, built by a Wisconsin truck manufacturer, were sold to Libya with the understanding they wouldlbe used in farming. U.S. law prohibits the sale of military equipment to Libya. Canadian regulations require an export permit for any product imported from the U.S. that is re-exported without significant changes or modifications.

Jacqueline and Ronald Pass of Toronto, who run the Swiss-registered company that purportedly engineered the deal, declined comment.

18 dead after Philippine fighting

PAGADIAN CITY, Philippines (AP) — Government militiamen and communist guerrillas clashed twice last week in the southern Philippines, leaving 15 rebels and three army men dead, a police official said Saturday.

Col. Jose P. Halcon, constabulary commander in Zamboanga del Sur province, 470 miles southeast of Manila, said 12 guerrillas of the Communist New People's Army and two militiamen were killed Wednesday in a 30-minute firefight in a village outside Dumingag.

Halcon said three guerrillas and one militiaman died Friday in fighting outside the town of Dumalinao in the same province. Three militiamen were injured.

Soviets seize Japanese vessel

TOKYO (AP) — A Soviet patrol boat seized a Japanese fishing vessel and its 16 crew members for allegedly operating in prohibited Soviet fishing grounds off Siberia, the Maritime Safety Agency said Saturday.

The 97-ton Kotoki Maru was operating about 52 miles south of Kamchatka's Lopatka point on Jan. 29 when it was seized, MSA officials quoted the Kotoki Maru's owner as saying. They said no further details were immediately available.

MSA officials said it was the first seizure of a Japanese fishing boat by the Soviet Union this year.

Last year, more than 16 Japanese fishing boats with 181 men aboard were seized by the Soviet Union.

Suit claims CIA drug experiments

MONTREAL (AP) — A former psychiatric patient has filed a $75,000 suit against the Royal Victoria Hospital, claiming he was used in 1959 for drug experiments funded by the CIA.

Jean-Charles Page, of St. Andre-de-Terrebonne just north of Montreal, alleges in a complaint filed Friday in Quebec Superior Court that the hospital staff used a variety of drugs on him to provoke observable reactions aimed at testing mind control.

Page said he was being treated for a neurotic condition at the time. The suit said Page suffered "devastating" consequences, including pain, inconvenience, mental anguish and family troubles.

Last summer, the hospital settled a similar suit out of court, paying $50,000 to a Canadian woman who claimed she had been subjected to brainwashing techniques.

Trudeau, premiers' relations worsening

By STANLEY MEISLER
The Washington Post-Los Angeles Times News Service

TORONTO — Relations between Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau and the premiers of Canada's 10 provinces have reached a new low point with the collapse of their economic conference this week amid bitter recriminations.

Even in the most heated moments of the political struggle with the provinces last year over his constitutional reform proposals, Trudeau had the support of two premiers, one of them from Ontario, a province with one-third of Canada's population. But when the economic conference came to a close in Ottawa on Thursday night, all 10 premiers denounced the federal government for its handling of the economy. Trudeau, in the nationally-televised closing session, was just as scathing in his denouncement of them.

As a result, questions are being raised about the sense of trying to tackle so many national issues by convening federal-provincial conferences, an institution that has developed out of the extraordinary powers possessed by the provinces under the Canadian federation. James Gillies, a professor who served as economic adviser to Conservative Joe Clark when he was prime minister of Canada in 1979 and 1980, argued on national television this week that the conferences are by nature too divisive to handle national economic issues.

In this case, few had expected much, if any, success. Federal officials, in fact, had wanted to postpone the conference. Nevertheless, observers were surprised at the depth of the bitterness that came with the failure.

"While the house is burning and the people are trying to save their own skins," Premier Rene Levesque of Quebec said in a flurry of imagery describing the Canadian recession, "and while the provincial governments are there with their fire trucks trying to put the fire down,...the federal government has its hand on the fire hydrant and won't let the water out."

Levesque often stands apart from the rest of the prvinces, but on this issue his tone was no more accusing than that of the English-speaking premiers. The usually mild-mannered Premier William Davis of Ontario, for example, described himself as leaving the conference "with a certain feeling of anger."

In reply, Trudeau, his words slowed with acrimony, lectured the premiers: "True political leadership...consists in more than pointing a finger at the other guy — in this case, the federal government — and saying it's all his fault."

Two main issues divided Trudeau and the premiers. The premiers demanded that the federal government abandon its policy of high interest rates and cut them below those of the United States, even if that would drive down the value of the Canadian dollar. Trudeau replied that an increasingly devalued dollar would drive up inflation. Furthermore, he said that the premiers, while free with advice to the federal government on interest rates, were unwilling to impose guidelines to hold down wage settlements for public employees of the provinces.

The second issue centered on transfer payments to the provinces. The premiers were angry because the federal government intends to reduce the payments. Under a system somewhat similar to that proposed by President Reagan in the United States, Ottawa turns over funds for health and higher education to all provinces and makes special grants to the poorer provinces.

Trudeau derided the complaint. "At every federal-provincial conference," he said, "the provincial cry is always the same: 'We've been robbed.' "

Costa Ricans wave flags and cheer during a recent political rally held in San Jose. Enthusiasm is running high as today's elections are hoped to bring an end to the country's current hard times.

Costa Rica hopes for election relief

By BOB RIVARD
The Washington Post-Los Angeles Times News Service

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica — The local currency has fallen 450 percent in the past 18 months, the government has exhausted its international credit and basic foods such as butter and sugar have disappeared from the stores.

Yet there is a strange buoyancy among the 2.2 million Costa Ricans as they prepare to elect a new president and 57-member legislative assembly Sunday, an optimism based on the belief that a new government means instant relief.

Pre-election street rallies have drawn thousands, and motorists steering with one hand and waving party flags with the other are a common sight.

This is the only real democracy in Central America, a country where the people are truly free and and where respect for human rights is real. Since the 1948 revolution established democracy, there has been no army — only a few thousand passive civilian guards.

THERE ARE AN estimated 1 million voters, and it is taken for granted that at least 80 percent of them will vote Sunday and then dip their middle finger in indelible ink to prevent a second trip to the polls.

The winner, however, can expect to be an unpopular man.

"The hardest day in this country's history will be the day after the elections," said Jose "Don Pepe" Figueres Ferrer, 75, the twice-elected former president, leader of the revolution and national hero. "There will be no easy way to solve our problems."

Inflation in 1981 surged above 100 percent and is climbing; unemployment doubled to 10 percent and the next few months are expected to bring a wave of business bankruptcies and more lost jobs.

The government has sold all its gold and spent its foreign reserves, and economists say the nation entered the first phase of a depression around Jan. 1.

Omar Hidalgo, the owner of Pescaderia Diamante, a fish stand at the Mercado Borbon in San Jose, surveyed his empty cutting boards, and said, "The only fresh fish has been shark. Everything else is being exported for the money. No fresh fish. There's nothing to eat in this country."

THAT IS AN exaggeration, but there is no doubt that anything — dairy cattle, fish, the best coffee — that can be shipped out for foreign exchange is not remaining on the shelves for Costa Rican consumption.

The roots of the problems are many: government overspending and excessive borrowing; the relative failure of the Central American Common Market because of political instability; and the drastic decline of coffee prices and the rise in oil prices.

Fully one of every five employed persons works for the government. Banking, medicine, education, utilities and even retirement pensions are socialized.

The U.S. government, alarmed that Costa Rica is Central America's only long-term example of a thriving non-fascist, non-communist political system, is increasing its aid package.

For this year, the Reagan administration has put together a $30 million emergency Food For Peace loan for basic grains and edible oils. Another $42 million in U.S. aid will be funneled into housing, development and private sector credits. But no aid package, say U.S. diplomats, can be of any real help until the local government becomes serious about controlling its own spending.

THE CURRENT administration of Rodrigo Carazo Odio is the only government in the hemisphere in default on its foreign debt. Not even token interest payments are being made.

Carazo, who is forbidden by law from seeking reelection, has been meeting his problems by printing money. The next president will not have that choice. The full economic impact of the disaster is expected to hit in the next few months.

Private enterprise is faring almost as badly. The private sector debt is estimated at $1.5 billion, and a recent study by the University of Costa Rica surveyed 200 of the nation's larger businesses and predicted one-third would close in the next six months unless some way to eliminate foreign debts is found.

These grim conditions are blamed solely on Carazo, and while government bureaucracy, excessive borrowing and political corruption are institutional problems, there is a consensus that Carazo's refusal to take advice, his own eccentric views and no-tomorrow fiscal decisions have brought the nation to the brink.

The irony is that Carazo was elected on an unprecedented campaign of trimming government fat and attacking official corruption. Four years later, he is widely viewed as having the worst record of any modern Costa Rican president in both categories.

U.S. officials have been relatively silent on the matter in deference to an ally, but an investigation by the Legislative Assembly here established that Carazo allowed neighboring countries, particularly Cuba, to use Costa Rica as a staging ground for arms shipments during the Nicaraguan revolution.

THE COMMON assumption is that the same routes remain open and are used to supply Salvadoran guerrillas to the north of Nicaragua, a point on which the Reagan administration has been silent.

"I think it would be fair to say Costa Rica has gotten a break in this regard because we are a friend of the United States," said one member of the National Liberation Party, whose candidate, Luis Alberto Monge, 56, is heavily favored to win the presidency Sunday.

"On the other hand, the common perception here is that the Reagan administration has punished Carazo for his role in arms traffic by not offering the new aid package until the Monge government is in."

Led away into the night

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the first of a two-part series telling the story of a Bulgarian pastor's "trial by fire" during 13 years' imprisonment behind the Iron Curtain.

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

The blackness of the night foreshadowed an ordeal of years' duration spawned by the spiritual forces of darkness.

The Rev. Haralan Popov slept peacefully in his Bulgarian home with his wife Ruth, his 9-year-old daughter and 4-year-old son. It was four o'clock on the morning of July 24, 1948. A knock sounded on the door. He was not to sleep peacefully again for a long while, and that echo of fist against wood would haunt him the rest of his life.

He was confronted at the threshold by a uniformed policeman and two members of the Communist government's secret police — the KGB. They stormed in and ransacked the house, leaving nothing unturned. When they were finished, one grasped Popov's upper arm.

"We're taking him for a short questioning," the officer told his wife.

They led him away into the night, the darkness swallowing him, consuming his individuality. He was not to see the light of freedom again for 13 years, during which he was to know for himself the ultimate degree of man's inhumanity to man.

POPOV, NOW 74, made recent appearances at churches in Midland-Odessa, recounting his story of beatings, torture, starvation and the faith which sustained him during his "trial by fire" at the hands of what he believes to be a "Satanic religion" — Communism.

He was born in Bulgaria in 1907, a product of the state-ruled Greek Orthodox Church which did not "preach the gospel" but rather sang passages from the Bible in old Slavic language. Because the language was foreign, the worship formalized, he never understood Christianity and rebelled against it.

"I was, like many, an ungodly person," he says.

But that changed in 1925 when a Protestant Christian explained to him the ultimate sacrifice made by Jesus Christ for man's sins. A confirmed atheist, Popov underwent a conversion experience and dedicated his life to serving Christ.

This dedication has seen him through many trials, great tribulations in the six decades since, but its initial effect was to lead him into the ministry. He attended a Bible institute in Danzig and did additional theological study in London, England, where an important event in his life occurred in 1937 — he met and married a Swedish girl named Ruth.

POPOV RETURNED to Bulgaria with his bride shortly thereafter and assumed the pastorate of Bulgaria's largest United Evangelical Church, a congregation of 600-800 persons encompassing four Protestant sects.

Bulgaria was caught in the straits between the Soviet Union and Germany during World War II, and upon the occupation of the country by Russian troops in 1944 the Communist Party subtly began to undermine political, religious and personal freedom.

"For four years they gave, relatively speaking, great freedom...because of the war," Popov recounts.

But then came the historic summit conference at Yalta between Franklin Delano Roosevelt, Winston Churchill and Joseph Stalin, and upon its conclusion the Russian leader left with sole control of much of eastern Europe — including Bulgaria.

And Communism, says Popov, began to overwhelm the country.

The citizens did not know how to react, for the first four years had been ones of "rejoicing," says Popov. Now, with full-scale colonization by the Soviet Union, they saw their political parties undermined.

"THEY KILLED or imprisoned all the leaders of the political parties, assimilated all the parties, put their Communists in every party," says

"It was incredible to stand facing the wall...If I fell they would kick me till I got up again."

Popov. "And after they controlled all the political power they started on the religious people."

Once the political parties began to fall, Popov knew the United Evangelical Church soon would come under fire, but he had no concept of how far the Communists would go in seeking to destroy the Bulgarian people's religious faith.

"I knew that the Communists were atheists, that they would persecute us," he says, "but I never realized they would charge us with espionage."

But they did. Popov and 60 other Protestant pastors were charged as spies — enemies of the nation. He was guiltless, of course — "I never talked about espionage in my life," he says — and believed initially that the Communists were sincere in their charges, that once his innocence was proven he would be released.

But as torture quickly followed his arrest, he suddenly realized it was all part of the Communists' plan to gain absolute control of the nation by discrediting those who preached the Christian faith.

"THEY WANTED TO paralyze this religious activity and to scare the Christians into ceasing the evangelization of the country," he says. "They knew we were not spies, but to (arrest) us for our religion would have given the impression they were anti-religious, that they were persecutors.... To have charged us for our religion (would have) meant to make us martyrs.

"And if you remember Christian history, the blood of the martyrs has always been the seed of the church. They create more Christians, and Communists know these things. That's why we had to be blackened, blotted, blamed for criminal things, for adultery, for espionage, to blacken us before the nation's people in order to destroy the churches."

While Bulgaria as a whole was subtly brainwashed to accept Communism and reject God through massive "indoctrination" in schools, factories, barracks and town meetings, he says, the method used on him was savage, torturous, inhumane — but completely effective.

"They use it only when they make a fabrication," says Popov, explaining that in his case it needed to be one of "espionage." "It is a scientific method — it is proven nobody can resist it. They call it 'breaking the will,' and when a person loses his own will, he's transformed into an animal."

In the 3½-month period following his arrest, that is exactly what Popov felt himself becoming in slow, brutal degrees at the hands of the KGB.

IT SEEMED simple enough, but its effects were profound. He was made to stand facing a wall, only inches from it. Just stand — hour upon hour, day upon day. He was given but 10 ounces of bread to eat daily, and was allowed to sit only long enough to consume eight spoonfuls of soup twice every 24 hours. Then it was back to the wall, to stare and think and feel the weakness of starvation and hallucination spawned by lack of sleep overwhelm him.

Every eight hours came a change in guards, but day and night, for 15 days Popov stood unyielding, never being allowed to sleep or seek restroom facilities for bodily functions. The legs became swollen, aching from lack of circulation, and the stress on his lower back worsened with each moment. The agony became intense, unbearable, and for a long while he struggled, fought, prayed. Had he once denounced his faith in God, he says, he would have been released, all charges of espionage against him dropped. But he steadfastly resisted and prayed until he could do neither any longer.

To have survived two weeks of such torture, he says, was "incredible," even to him. "I am a religious man," he says. "I took myself to God in prayer. I prayed constantly for God to keep me faithful because it is very easy to surrender. The first week I fought very bravely, but day after day the physical power left me, especially when night fell. It was incredible to stand facing the wall. Very often I would go to sleep as I was standing, especially at night, and if I fell they would kick me till I got up again."

The second week came after what seemed an eternity, and the KGB halted his daily allowances of bread and water — but still he fought to retain his dignity and faith.

DEHYDRATION BEGAN to overcome him, and then came the fever — so intense, he says, that it was as though his "insides were burning in fire." When he glanced about and saw his reflection in a window, he only half-

"I knew that the Communists were atheists, that they would persecute us, but I never realized they would charge us with espionage."

"I took myself to God in prayer. I prayed constantly for God to keep me faithful because it is very easy to surrender."

Staff Photos by Cody Bell

recognized himself, for his face was swollen, the skin broken and bleeding.

Finally, he collapsed, and the kicks no longer could rouse him, bring him back to his feet. A KGB doctor was summoned to examine him, and the diagnosis was plain: He was close to death.

For the first time since his torture began, he was given rest. They took him from the wall, fed him well, propped up his legs to reduce the swelling, allowed him to sleep. Little did he realize that his ordeal was not yet over, but was only beginning.

After a brief few days of partial recuperation, they took him to the wall again — and the hell was repeated until once more he collapsed from exhaustion, starvation, lack of sleep. Thereupon he was given rest — three to five days, depending on the severity of his condition — and then came his struggle against the powers of darkness in the form of the wall.

THIS VICIOUS, inhumane cycle went on without pause 3½ months before his will was broken, his power to resist crushed. It was only then that his wife was allowed to bring him another change of clothes and a bath permitted him — and by this time dead cells caked his body like flour, he says.

Popov went to trial with 14 other pastors Feb. 24, 1949. It attracted world-wide attention — but following months of torture the outcome was never in doubt.

Popov and the others "confessed" openly to all charges.

The forces of darkness had won the first battle — but the crux of the war was still to come.

City Council to discuss bond election proposals

Aiming toward a firm list of projects for a bond issue this spring, the Midland City Council will discuss the proposed projects during its regular session Tuesday in City Hall Council Chambers. The meeting starts at 10 a.m.

At the last meeting on Jan. 26, the council studied projects that totaled $48 million — a sewage disposal plan, improvements at Midland Regional Airport, street improvements, water and sewer line additions, and expansion of City Hall. The list has been sent to the city's bond counsel for review.

An ordinance amending the freight loading zone regulations will be reviewed by the council. The revisions came after it had been pointed out by police that some people were abusing the freight loading zone.

The changes call for allowing only freight-carrying vehicles to be issued permits for the zones and charging $25 for the first permit with each subsequent permit to be doubled in price.

The Yargar study on city personnel wages will be discussed and the council will consider payment for the study.

Also to be discussed is the Opticom proposal for control of street lights by emergency vehicles, a school zone report for 1981 and a request from Allied Roofing and Construction to extend a water line to serve 1409 Garden City Highway.

Plans by Muse Air to start operations at Midland Regional Airport will be reviewed. The airline currently serves travelers between Dallas and Houston, but is proposing adding Midland to the list.

Public hearings will be held on two requests for annexation. The first deals with a 322-acre tract at the northwest intersection of Midland Drive and Green Tree Blvd., while the second is a 93.34-acre tract east of Lamesa Road and south of Garden City Highway.

The council will consider an ordinance agreeing to adjust the Extra-Territorial Jurisdiction line between the cities of Midland and Odessa. The request came from HBF Corporation which is developing a tract of land that straddles the ETJ line. Adjusting the line would put the development all within the jurisdiction of Odessa.

An appeal from Harrell Feldt for a zone change on 1.134 acres in Porras Addition to an O-2 office district will be heard at 3:15 p.m.

County Commissioner's Court

Child care will be one of the foremost problems confronting the Midland County Commissioners' Court when the group meets at 10 a.m. Monday in the County Courthouse.

Michael Williams will talk to the commissioners on consideration of the lease of Taylor Park for construction and operation of a public multi-purpose recreational facility to include space for a child care center. The day care center is a vital ingredient to a county three-year project funded through the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

The commissioners also will consider incorporation of the Midland County Child Care Corporation.

Betty Sheeler, who operates the county's HUD rent-subsidy program, will ask the county to consider revising the owner-occupied housing rehabilitation policies and procedures concerning the fire and casualty insurance requirement.

Joe Reed with the hydrology firm of Ed Reed & Associates will request permission to conduct water sampling in county road rights of way.

Included on the agenda are:

—Authorizing the county auditor to advertise for bids for selling the old county barn on Front Avenue.

—Considering a policy change regarding rental of Midland County Exhibit Building.

—Discussing with George Singleton a computer system for the district clerk's office.

—Considering plat of Southern Flats.

—Considering authorizing county auditor to advertise for bids for new equipment for the Road and Bridge Department.

MISD Board of Trustees

Midland Independent School District trustees will have a busy meeting Tuesday as they are expected to take action on several major items. The regular board meeting will start at 1:30 p.m. in the school administration building, 702 N. N St.

Trustees are expected to approve policy revisions pertaining to child care hardship transfer applications, a recommendation to implement half-day kindergarten programs for all pupils except those under Title I, elementary school attendance boundary adjustments and reassignment of rural buses.

Approval of a request by the City Council PTA to designate March 22-26 as Public Schools Week, to be called MISD Spotlight Week, is also expected.

Other items on the agenda include revision of course offerings, adoption of the 1982-83 school year calendar and a call for the election of trustees.

Recommended budget allocations to be used in the preparation of the 1982-83 budget will also be considered.

Action will be taken on bids for public address systems at Burnet and Rusk elementary schools, a Ford Flail mower, athletic tickets and the replacement of cooling tower for the Lee Freshman High auditorium. Board members also will consider regular items and will meet in an executive session pertaining to a personnel and real estate matter.

Regional Planning Commission

The Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission Board of Directors will hold its regular monthly meeting at 1:30 p.m. Wednesday in the conference room of the PBRPC office.

The agenda includes an application for an application from the city of Big Spring for a continuation funding of the Retired Senior Volunteer Program. The application is requesting $23,000 from federal funds and will be matched with $8,500 from the state and $12,954 from the applicant.

The funding will be used for program operation/administration and capital costs. Budget justification and description of overall work plans are also covered in detail in the application.

The board will consider the appointment of five new Area Advisory Committee on Aging members and a resolution accepting the review and comment of the Human Resources Advisory Council.

CRMWD directors to discuss contracts

FORT WORTH — Directors of the Colorado River Municipal Water District will meet Friday to firm up the anticipated approval of new contracts with member cities — Big Spring, Odessa and Snyder.

Snyder has approved a new contract between it and the District, and Big Spring and Odessa are expected to compete their adoption Tuesday. Assuming this is done, the CRMWD then will authorize execution of the document.

The contract basically is the same as orginally signed by the three cities nearly three decades ago. It spells out that non-municipal water revenues may be used to modify municipal rates, and it permits a modification of the rate formula so cities will pay more for delivery of water (an amount equal to electric energy required to deliver it to a particular city), and less in monthly fixed charges.

The totals, however, are the same. Contract term would be for 50 years, or for so long as there are bonds outstanding which were issued within the term period.

Also, the board will consider how it can work with the city of Midland, if requested to finance certain water and sewer improvements. If this is done, it will be the first such action which was made possible by the amendment of the District's act by the last legislature whereby it can issued bonds on behalf of others to finance improvements required under the clean air and water acts.

The board also will consider establishment of a Contingency Improvement Revolving fund, which would permit continuing disbursements within authorized limits.

Military policies protested

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The chants of the peace movement echoed again through San Francisco's Union Square on Saturday as 6,000 people gathered to protest the international military buildup and U.S. involvement in El Salvador.

"We were protesting (President) Reagan's militarism, his racism, his cutbacks, his interventionist policies, especially in El Salvador," said Olga Talamante, a spokeswoman for the Peace and Justice Coalition.

Police estimated that 6,000 people gathered in Union Square, a historic rallying center for peace and labor groups for decades, after several hundred people marched about three-quarters of a mile from United Nations Plaza. There were no reports of arrests or other police problems.

"The reaction today shows the deep concern people have about a nuclear war," Ms. Talamante said.

City issues $5.3 million in permits

The city of Midland last week issued construction permits representing more than $5.3 million in investments.

Permits for construction of new residences accounted for almost $4 million of that total with permits going to B. J. Britt Construction, 4424 Seminole, $30,000; I. David Porras, 3300 N. Students, teachers plan Vocational Week activities

Midland vocational students and teachers will be participating in National Vocational Week along with students enrolled in vocational classes across the nation today through Saturday.

Presently, 1,112 Midland public school students are enrolled in vocational studies.

Special emphasis this year in Midland will be placed upon informing parents and students about the opportunities available for students that participate in the elective vocational education classes, especially in the area of career guidance.

During the week, vocational counselors, students and teachers will have a variety of displays in the schools; an open house for interested students, parents and business people; and an information booth in Midland Park Mall, next to Casual Corner.

The purpose of the booth is to inform all interested persons about the vocational opportunities available in the Midland school system, and to demonstrate the Vocational Education Department's computer terminals, the Guidance Information System (GIS). A computer terminal is located in each junior high, freshman and senior high school. The information from GIS is available to all students and teachers.

In the spring, the most popular computer searches usually concern information about colleges and technical schools. The computer makes available information about 1,639 community colleges and 1,751 four-year colleges. Financial aid also can be obtained concerning 513 available sources. Job descriptions of 875 careers are also available in the computer files.

Counselors, vocational teachers and students will be available to answer questions, discuss opportunities and give computer print-outs for any area of interest at the booth. The booth will be open on Thursday and Friday from 4-8 p.m., and on Saturday from noon to 8 p.m.

Terminal area switched to Bell's newest system

Telephone customers in the Terminal area now have at their fingertips all the advantages associated with Electronic Switching Systems, the latest in telephone switching technology.

Southwestern Bell's central office, near the Midland Regional Airport, converted Saturday to an ESS, according to Roy Allen, manager of network maintenance for the company in Midland. Allen said the Terminal ESS project was completed at a cost of approximately $6 million.

"Besides improving the quality of phone service, ESS provides customers with our popular Custom-Calling services," Allen explained. "These optional services enable customers to set up conference calls without the aid of an operator, dial with fewer digits, answer incoming calls even though the phone is already in use and forward calls to another number."

Due to the explosive growth occuring at Terminal and the entire Permian Basin area, Allen noted that the ESS placement had to be completed as quickly as possible. The company currently serves some 6,760 total telephones at Terminal, the majority of them busines phones. By the end of 1985, he added, company forecasts indicate that figure will double to approximately 14,000 total telephones.

"We began work on the ESS conversion in September of last year, and completed it in less than five months," Allen explained. "That's about twice as fast as the normal conversion time. It took a lot of hard work and cooperation from both Southwestern Bell and Western Electric employees to get the job done that fast."

In pure numbers, the growth in capacity of the central office is significant. Allen said the old central office had a capacity to terminate 4,500 telephone lines and 1,000 message circuits. With the ESS conversion, the office can now terminate 8,100 telephone lines and 2,500 message circuits.

At the heart of the Terminal ESS switcher is a computer-like No. 1-A processor which performs command functions and contains a memory bank. Allen said changes in the system can be easily programmed into the processor, reducing manual labor time which was required by previous electromechanical switching equipment.

The Terminal ESS conversion means approximately 95 percent of Midland-Odessa-Terminal customers now have access to the benefits that go along with electronic switching.

"Terminal telephone customers, and Midland-Odessa customers caling to and from the 563 exchange, can expect to see an immediate improvement in the quality of telephone service," Allen said. "We're now better prepared to handle the prolific growth that's going to occur in Terminal over the next several years."

Don Nedrud, left, a Western Electric supervisor, and Bob Hart, a network maintenance supervisor for Southwestern Bell, examine the control center of the company's new $6 million Electronic Switching System at the Terminal central office. The central converted to the ESS Saturday.

How safe is your car? Question has an answer

Report indicates safety related to size, nationality of vehicle

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

Your chances of escaping death or serious injury in a traffic accident are directly proportional to the size and nationality of the car you drive.

That's the conclusion of studies done by the Insurance Institute for Highway Safety and distributed in a Jan. 5 report titled, "How Safe Is Your Car?"

While researchers have known for several years that occupants of small cars suffer more injuries and more serious injuries than those in large vehicles, this is the first time hard statistics on the fatality rate of small cars have been compiled.

It's also the first time the relative death rates of foreign and domestic cars have been compared. Says the report:

"New evidence shows that people die in (small cars) more often than in larger vehicles. Statistics also indicate that small cars crash more often than large cars.

"Even among small cars, some models have a much worse injury and fatality experience than others. For example, people in most Japanese-built small cars are considerably more vulnerable than people in counterpart American-made vehicles."

The IIHS, which bills itself as a non-profit educational group whose funding derives from the insurance industry, studied government and other research data on five car-size categories ranging from the small subcompacts to full size vehicles and determined there were 1.6 occupant deaths per 10,000 registered full size cars in the years 1978 through 1980.

"For small subcompact cars, (however) the number of number of deaths is more than twice as high — 3.5 per 10,000 cars," says the report.

Cars used in the study were up to five years old and the figures were adjusted to eliminate the distortion potential of young drivers who generally have more accidents and drive different types of cars than older motorists.

Car size is determined by wheelbase, with small subcompacts having a wheelbase less than or equal to 96 inches. Full-size vehicles have wheelbases greater than 120 inches.

Japanese vehicles were chosen for comparison because they dominate the import market in this country. Also, the results of studies done on other foreign manufacturers are still being collated.

The main factors in a car's "crashworthiness" are: the extent to which occupants are not ejected from the vehicle; the extent to which it doesn't collapse on impact; and the extent to which force is absorbed by the vehicle, not by the driver and passengers.

While not comparing foreign cars with their domestic cousins, the Department of Transportation concurs with the IIHS on the higher fatality risk of small vehicles.

In a report issued last October, the DOT is predicting 10,000 more traffic deaths in the next decade than in the previous one. That projection is based solely on "the downsizing of all passenger cars and light trucks and an increase in the numbers and mileage of heavy trucks."

The DOT's anticipated hike in traffic fatalities caused by the use of small cars is twice as high as the 5,000 additional deaths expected over the next 10 years due to the ever-growing number of drivers on the road.

Noting that the first recorded American traffic fatality occurred in 1899 when a man named H.H. Bliss stepped off a New York City streetcar and was hit by a passing auto, the DOT points out that it took 52 years to record one million highway deaths.

From 1951 on, the rate has grown geometrically: "The two-millionth fatality occurred in 1974, less than 23 years after the one-millionth. Unless the current rate is significantly reduced, the three-millionth fatality will occur by 1990 — only 16 years after the two-millionth."

Although the DOT report focuses on "vehicle mix" — the growing percentage of smaller vehicles to larger ones — the IIHS study disputes a contention among some motorists that the maneuverablity of small cars makes them better able to avoid accidents, adding:

"Unfortunately, the hazards of small cars are not confined to crashes with larger vehicles. IIHS comparisons of car sizes show that occupants of small cars are more than twice as likely to be killed in crashes of all kinds than are people in large cars.

"Small cars are four times as likely to be involved in fatal single vehicle rollover crashes. In car-to-car crashes, the risk of death is three times as great in a small car as in a large one.

"Even when small cars crash with small cars, occupants are killed and injured more frequently than in crashes between two larger cars."

It's not so much poor quality or shoddy workmanship that accounts for the higher risk in small cars. Design shortcomings are more to blame, according to IIHS Vice President for Research Brian O'Neill.

Since all cars sold in this country must meet federal safety standards, why do American cars score better than Japanese cars?

Said O'Neill: "American cars are a little safer statistically. Statistics don't provide answers as to why. But it's not so much materials as it is design from the ground up."

As an example, said O'Neill, federal standards limit steering column movement in an accident. Specifically, the law refers to horizontal movement toward the driver's chest.

But some Japanese manufacturers got around the law by simply transferring the force upward — toward the driver's face - because vertical movement was not spelled out in the standard.

"American manufacturers paid more attention to the intent of the standard and went beyond its precise requirements," said O'Neill.

While there's little doubt small cars are here to stay and will continue to grow in number, there is hope for safer vehicles in the future. Several small, non-polluting "Research Safety Vehicles" have been built under government contract. They're lightweight, energy-efficient and crashworthy.

They feature energy-absorbing steel bodies, air bags, soft interior padding, non-lacerating glass and interior protrusions that have been removed, relocated or recessed.

"If mass-produced," said O'Neill, "they'd be comparable to the price of small cars today. That was a condition of the government contracts. One prototype was built from the ground up for under $8,000 - two or three years ago.

"Modifying a Simca added $1,000 to its price, yet you could walk away from a 50-mph barrier impact."

While American automakers have slowly begun adopting some new safety features, many of the improvements that could be made are gathering dust on Detroit's drawing boards, according to O'Neill.

Why?

"In my mind," he said, "Detroit never seems to give a good reason for anything — especially why they're not doing more about safety."

Seedlings need shoplight start

By CHARLES W. GREEN
Midland County Extension Agent — Agriculture

Gardeners who try to start vegetable seedlings in a sunny window usually complain about the pale green or purplish leaves on spindly stems of plants that lean toward the window. When these weak plants are transplanted to the garden, they often go into shock and are killed by the cold, wind and intense sunlight. These gardeners would have been wiser to buy their plants from a good garden center or greenhouse grower. But, what if the varieties you want are not sold by the plant growers? There's an easy answer. Grow your own seedlings indoors, but with a shoplight almost anywhere inside your home.

You can grow healthy, short-stemmed vegetable plants with dark green leaves using the light from an ordinary fluorescent shoplight as the only light source for those plants. The shoplight we're talking about is the kind with two 4-watt cool white fluorescent tubes housed in a white fixture suspended from chains from an overhead support. These fixtures are usually four feet long. The fixture can be suspended over a table or saw horses or step ladders will support the fixture for the few weeks required to start seedlings in containers on the floor. Be sure to lay down a sheet of plastic to protect the flooring from excess water that drains from the plant containers.

These inexpensive light units, usually costing from $12 to $15, will give plenty of light to the small plants only if the fluorescent tube is kept close, very close, and that is the secret. The tube surface must not be more than one or two inches above the leaf surface. Raise the light fixture often enough to maintain the leaf-to-tube distance in a range of one to two inches. To start with, hang the light fixture so that the tube surface is only an inch above the surface of the germinating medium or soil mix. The moderate heat given off by the fluorescent tube will warm the mix and the seed, thereby hastening germination. A thin film of plastic laid over the surface of the seed flat will prevent drying of the mix by the heat from the tube. Remove the plastic the instant you see the plant shoot breaking through the surface.

Try to place the seedling container in an area where the temperature will not fall below 55 to 60 degrees F. at night and where the temperature will rise to 65 to 70 degrees during the day. Turn the lights on when you arise in the morning and turn them off before going to sleep at night, to give a light period of at least 12 to 14 hours. Do not leave the lights on all the time.

If you already have a fluorescent light fixture and wish to use it for starting plants, replace the old bulbs with new ones to assure maximum light for your plants.

Most vegetable plants can be kept under the light until they are large enough to be transplanted to the garden. The same fixture can be used to start several successions of seedlings. The first crops to start would be those that can be acclimated to the subfreezing outdoor temperatures of early spring. Some of these are onion, lettuce, cabbage and broccoli. The second crop under the same lights can be tomato, pepper and okra seedlings which can be transplanted into your garden after the danger of frost. Finally, you can start seedlings of vine crops like cucumber, melon and squash in peat pots which can be planted directly to the garden in only two or three weeks from the day you sowed the seed.

There are many people who have moved into the Midland area in recent months who are interested in gardening. The areas from which they have come, in many instances, have entirely different soil, water and growing conditions.

The Extension Office has much free information on recommended plants (trees, shrubs, turf, vegetables, flowers) and procedures to use in insuring the best chances of success. I can't guarantee there won't be occasional crop failures even if recommended plants are used and proper procedures are followed, but the results overall, can be rewarding.

If you're interested in obtaining this gardening information, come by our office (in the Courthouse Annex, 218-W. Illinois) and browse through our bulletin racks or call 682-9481, Ext. 433, make your requests and information will be mailed to you.

FmHA workers pressured to collect delinquent loans

By WARD SINCLAIR
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — County-level employees of the Farmers Home Administration have been put on notice that their jobs may depend on how well they collect on delinquent operating loans to farmers.

The pressure on FmHA employees is apparently part of a wider effort at the agency to collect delinquent loans, which make up about 20 percent of the agency's portfolio.

FmHA's campaign apparently is producing results. Unpublished data at the Department of Agriculture indicate that through December 2,395 farm foreclosures were "in process" and that 13,318 acceleration letters, warning farmers to pay up or else, had been sent out.

USDA and FmHA officials have insisted that the lending agency is being lenient with farmers, citing 1981 statistics that showed only 300 foreclosures out of 300,000 loans. Since November, however, FmHA has sent out 6,000 acceleration letters.

Charles W. Shuman, FmHA administrator, denies that the aim is to force farmers out of business, but he has threatened to withhold new loan money from states with delinquency rates "higher than deemed appropriate." Each state has been assigned a "goal" for cutting delinquencies. The goal averages about 23 percent.

FmHA, which holds 11 percent of all U.S. farm debt, provides year-to-year operating loans to farmers who cannot get credit through commercial channels.

Secretary John R. Block, although refusing to put a moratorium on foreclosures as some farm leaders had urged, announced two weeks ago that the department would walk an extra mile to help farmers through "these cloudy times."

Falling farm prices, high interest rates and rising production costs have put many FmHA borrowers under severe operating pressure, and the Department of Agriculture insists that FmHA is making extraordinary efforts to help farmers in debt to FmHA get new crop loans for 1982.

But Shuman and Frank Naylor, undersecretary of USDA for small community and rural development, will be pressed to explain seeming discrepancies between FmHA policy and promise when they appear today before a House Agriculture subcommittee on rural credit.

Although less than 1 percent of FmHA's approximately 300,000 borrowers have what Naylor last month called "even potentially a serious problem," concern over a stiffening of the agency's attitude toward beleaguered farmers has rippled through agriculture for months.

"There is no question that there's a squeeze at the top, and something has to pop out at the bottom," said Rep. Byron Dorgan, D-N.D., a member of the credit subcommittee. "There is tremendous pressure to rein in those delinquencies.... The word 'foreclosure' is irrelevant. How many forced liquidations will there be? We're being given tranquilizers while they tighten the noose."

Dorgan said he was not mollified by assurances from Block and Naylor. He said that a standard FmHA letter to delinquent farmers in North Dakota advises them to cut back operations or to consider leaving farming.

'Austere' agriculture budget plan proposed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sharp cuts in food programs and rural housing are big money savers in President Reagan's proposed budget for the Agriculture Department.

The proposals sent to Congress on Monday would reduce the department's spending by more than 17 percent in the fiscal year that will begin Oct. 1 — to $23.5 billion from a record $29.4 billion this year.

Records show it would be the least spending by the Agriculture Department since outlays totaled $20.6 billion in fiscal 1978-79.

A senior department budget officer decribed the package — ranging from subsidy payments to farmers to lunches for school children — as "very austere" and devoid of any major new programs or innovations.

Few programs would increase significantly under the proposals. Agricultural research comes in for a $54 million increase; some $4 million would be added to export market development; and $155 million in additional money is sought to continue an expansion of the national crop insurance program.

The Farmers Home Administration, which wowld have its rural housing programs virtually gutted by the Reagan budget, would see a $135 million increase in farm mperating loans.

Answer Line

By Franchelle Moore

682-5311
P.O. Box 1650,
Midland 79702

In December of 1980 I wrote a letter to Answer ine asking how to start a petition for private tele- hone lines on FM Road S-175. You replied there as no need since Southwestern Bell was construct- g 1,500 lines on our road to be open by January 81.

We called Southwestern Bell in March or April nd were told they knew nothing about this. We lso called in September and November. Today we re still on a party line (13 months later).

They promise a waiting list. If there is a waiting st, what number are we and how long will we have wait?

We know Southwestern Bell is very busy, but addle Club got their lines. Will a petition help or urt us? We still need to know how to start a peti- ion.

Anyone else out there ready to get rid of party ines? — Sherry Carr Stanley

ANSWER: Again, Answer Line is told by a South- estern Bell Telephone Co. spokesman that a petition s not necessary. He also says that there has been able construction in the FM Road S-175 area. The able has been ordered, but has not arrived for instal- ation.

He says that as soon as the cable arrives, it will be pliced and installed so that everyone in that area who wishes should have private lines by "this summer." He dds that a petition would not help or hurt the situa- ion.

The priority of the company at the present is to provide everyone with some type of telephone service, private or otherwise. The spokesman also notes that heir is no discrimination by the company on one area having better service than another. The tremendous growth of Midland is causing delays, and the object is o get service to everyone as rapidly as possible.

If you would like confirmation of this information, you might contact Jay Allen at the telephone com- pany.

Could you give me the address for the American Medical Association? Also for the Arthritis Founda- tion? — J.T.

ANSWER: The American Medical Association's address is 535 N. Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill. 60610. For the Arthritis Foundation, it is 3400 Peachtree Road, NE, Atlanta, Ga. 30326.

I'm having trouble making ends meet right now. What will happen if I can't pay the premiums on my life insurance? — G.S.

ANSWER: Depending on the type of policy you have and how long it has been in force, your protection does not necessarily stop immediately, says The American Council of Life Insurance.

In the first place, the council continues, virtually every life insurance policy has a one-month grace period during which payment may be made without loss of any rights. After that, if it is a term policy, it normally will lapse — but if you have a permanent policy and it has been in force long enough to build up a cash value, your protection may continue well beyond the grace period. The cash value can auto- matically keep your insurance in force through pre- mium loans or conversion to extended term or to a reduced amount of paid-up insurance.

I would like to know when the first trans-Atlantic jet passenger service flight was made? — F.N.M.

ANSWER: The first such flight was Oct. 4, 1958, and was by BOAC from New York to London. Pan Ameri- can started daily service between New York and Paris on October 26, 1958.

Can a person who is not a lawyer probate a will? I am the executor and the sole beneficiary of the estate.

There are no other heirs. The estate consists of the home, cash and stock and no debts or mort- gages. — K.S.

ANSWER: Depending upon local practice, the court may allow probate of the will without an attorney, says the State Bar of Texas.

Probate provides a public and permanent disposi- tion, so you will want to observe all the requirements. Without a lawyer to handle re-registration of stock and transfers of title, both you and the estate may be exposed to claims or controversy in the future. It is best to consult your lawyer.

Social Security laws stricter on misuse

ODESSA — Stricter laws regarding the misuse of Social Security numbers or cards are now in effect, according to Ervin L. Fisher Jr., manager of the Odessa Social Security office.

A law signed by President Reagan in late December 1981 provides criminal penalties for:

—Using a Social Security card to obtain false infor- mation;

—Using someone else's Social Security number;

—Buying, selling or counterfeiting Social Security cards;

—Or possessing a regular or counterfeit card with intent to sell or alter it.

An unlawful act affecting the Social Security card or number is now considered a felony, rather than a mis- demeanor, added Fisher.

Penalties for conviction can be a fine of up to $5,000 or prison term of up to five years or both.

According to Fisher, individuals wishing to report misuse of Social Security cards or numbers should call the Social Security office listed in the telephone book or the hotline in Washington, D.C., at 202-472-4222.

Former House Speaker Albert in stable condition

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Former House Speaker Carl Albert was in stable condition Saturday after undergoing prostate surgery at Oklahoma Memorial Hospital, officials said.

The 72-year-old veteran Democrat underwent surgery Friday, his sister said.

Hospital officials refused to disclose why Albert was admitted. His sister, Catherine Peacock, who lives near her brother north of McAlester, confirmed that Albert underwent the operation.

"I talked to the doctor after surgery and he said he (Albert) was doing all right," she said. "He is expected to be in the hospital about a week."

Albert's surgeon, Dr. James Geyer, refused to comment on the operation.

Bill Anderson, a neighbor of Albert and a former aide, said the former speaker had complained of prostate trouble for some time and had expected to undergo an operation.

Albert was speaker of the U.S. House of Representatives from 1971 to 1977 and earlier served as majority leader.

Oilfiled service company damaged by fire after attempt to de-ice pipes

JACKSBORO, Texas (AP) — A fire that began as workmen tried to de-ice pipes at an oilfield service company caused an estimated $1 million damage to a building and four oil transport trucks Saturday.

Flames engulfed a storage facility at Geer Oilfield Service Co. about 10 a.m. when wall insulation surrounding the pipes caught fire. Workmen were trying to warm the pipes with a blowtorch.

The blaze destroyed four trucks and one trailer, and spread quickly inside the metal building that housed Gear's storage facility and offices. No injuries were reported.

They work on motors from those found in small lawnmowers to those found in diesel automobiles. They only charge for the parts, which are provided to them through a local business for less than retail cost. They also ask for a small donation to cover such expenses as oil, gaskets and gasoline.

Their only advertising consists of word-of-mouth praise from satisfied customers. They are encouraged to solicit their own work.

"Last year we got pretty well swamped under (with repair requests)," said "boss" Jerry "Chuck" Reynolds, who teaches the Small Motors Repair class at Midland Freshman High School.

The class is under the Coordinated Vocational Academic Education (CVAE) department, also established at Lee Freshman and both high schools.

AND THE CLASS is successful, as are all of Midland's vocational courses, both in on-the-job training and in teaching basic skills in school labs.

According to Dr. Charles Thompson, MISD director of vocation, between 1,400 and 1,500 students are enrolled in vocational classes in Midland secondary schools. Although the classes are limited, the demand for them is higher than ever, evident through the increasing number of students who are turned down when interviewing for the program.

"We've got fantastic teachers who combine their enthusiasm with their extensive knowledge of the field," Thompson said. "There is about a 50 percent drop-out rate at other schools and ours is down to almost nothing."

Interviews for prospective students are extensive and only selected students are allowed to participate in any of the programs.

A student must first fill out an application, which, along with the student's records, grades and aptitude scores, are reviewed by the vocational counselor and the respective teacher. The student is then called in for an interview in which he or she must convince the counselor and instructor that his or her interest in the class is aimed at a possible career in that field.

"THIS ELIMINATES the kid enrolling in auto mechanics just to have a chance to work on his car," Thompson said.

"We don't have enough students to fill all of the requests we receive from businesses for jobs," Thompson said. "We could have put 200 more students in jobs this year."

Due to a shortage of teachers, classes and shops, the program is always completely full, Thompson said.

And although the vocational department receives its share of criticism from parents who are worried that their children are not receiving a fair share of academic classes, Thompson is confident that the program is an excellent supplement to the course load for certain students.

Students participating in the work-study programs, such as Agriculture Occupations, CVAE, Distributive Education, Home Economics Cooperative Education, Industrial Cooperative Training and Vocational Office Education, attend three academic or elected classes in the morning, plus a vocational class and work three hours minimum per day at an approved job.

Thompson said vocational teachers encourage students to take academic classes instead of other electives while enrolled in the vocational program. "We want our students to do good in academic classes because it makes our students look that much better," Thompson said. He added that although vocational students receive both math and English instruction during the vocational class, "we also give them practical math instead of just theory of math."

ALTHOUGH HE said no recent study had been conducted, 58 percent of the vocational students went on to college after graduating from high school, according to a study done a little more than a year ago.

"A lot of the kids plan on going to college. They want to enroll in the vocational courses for training so that they can help their parents put them through school by getting a job (related to their vocational course) while in college," Thompson said.

"Students are given up-to-date training and they are getting paid at the same time," Thompson explained. "It's not only essential for kids entering the working field, but it also provides a way for the business community to be involved with the schools."

"We only try to place kids in the program that will benefit in a positive way through the courses," Joe Williams, vocational counselor for both of the freshman schools, said. The student's records and grades are checked and if the student is habitually truant he will not be allowed to participate in the program. "There are so many kids that really want to be in these classes that we don't want to waste the space (on students who are not interested)," Williams said.

THERE ARE different criteria for each of the departments under the vocational program. The purpose of the program, according to Thompson, is the basic training students receive, and not the pay. In fact, many of the vocational courses taken by students do not include employment. Cosmetology, Auto Mechanics, Machine Technology and Welding consist of two to three hours of instruction in a shop or lab located on the school campus or Midland College.

"The purpose is to give hands-on experience so that the students can enter the job market with the basic skills," said Reynolds. "We try to provide one-on-one training."

"It (vocational classes) can also serve as an alternative or at least training for students who might not continue in school only for the academics," Williams added. "If we can keep them in school, then we're doing a lot more than we were set up to do."

Programs in the areas of petroleum engineering and data processing are being looked at in terms of expanding the vocational department in the future, Thompson said. Also, solar energy and computer technology are being considered. A word processing machine will be incorporated in th VOE LAB program next year, Thompson said. "It all depends on the needs of our community.

THE TERM "cheap labor" in referring to vocational students in the work-study plan, is incorrect, Thompson said. "I don't mind students starting off by sweeping floors, because that's part of it. But no student will be allowed to continue with that chore. We want businesses that will teach the kids the way up."

The eager involvement of area businesses has been greatly appreciated, according to Thompson. Some businesses provide in-services for instructors to keep them up to date on the newest pieces of equipment and current trends. Different companies have also assisted the instructors in finding various pieces of equipment and by providing incentives for students, such as banquets, trophies, trips and tours.

Every six months, employers are requested to evaluate the student in their employment. Teachers also keep in contact with the employers about the student's progress or any problem that may arise. "They're under constant supervision," Thompson said.

Not only do vocational courses benefit from the company participation, but the company also benefits from the courses, Thompson said.

"If a decision to hire is between a student already possessing basic skills and one who is not, the employer will hire the one with background," Thompson said. "If someone walks in with some knowledge, then they (the company) can just upgrade his schooling. They don't have to stop what they're doing in order to teach him the basics."

Shootings, stabbing, theft among weekend activity probed by police

Criminal activity Friday and Saturday included two shootings, a stabbing and a theft.

According to police, Roy Lee Price, 304 S. Lee St., was shot in the right shoulder about 9:30 p.m. Friday at the Chat and Chew Bar, 307 N. Lee St., and transported to Midland Memorial Hospital.

Price was listed in satisfactory condition Saturday.

According to police reports, Price, in his late 20s, was in the bar's parking lot when he was shot by a man who had been in the bar. Police are continuing their search for the suspect.

Police also reported a shooting early Saturday at Eddie's Bar, 403 N. Lamesa Road.

Mitchell Lee Dunaway, 1403 Mulberry Lane, was shot in the neck at approximately 2:15 a.m. Police reports stated while Dunaway and a friend were in the bar, Marion got into a fight with another man. Dunaway saw the man pull a gun on his friend and attempted to stop the man.

The bartender apparently broke up the fight. But, according to the report, the three men fought again outside the bar and Dunaway was shot in the neck.

Dunaway drove himself to Midland Memorial Hospital where he was reported in stable condition late Saturday afternoon. Police have no suspects in custody.

In another incident early Saturday, police were called to the scene of a stabbing at the Executive Lounge, 3803 W. Wall Ave.

The report stated Phillip Leon Henderson, 22, 2603 Thomason Drive, was stabbed outside the lounge by another male. He was transported to MMH and treated and released.

On Friday night, Charles Ronald Knight reported to police he was robbed by a man who was giving him a ride.

According to the police report, Knight said he was at the bus station at 1308 W. Front St. when a man approached him and said he would give Knight a ride if Knight would pay for gas.

The report stated Knight wanted to get out of the car after a patrol officer had stopped the driver. The driver apparently pulled a knife on Knight. Although Knight's life was not threatened, he turned over $110 to the driver and reported the robbery to the police around 8 p.m.

Lighter criminal activity over the weekend included two reported thefts.

Elija Merrion, 100 S. Mineola St., reported a small green air compressor taken from the home valued at $800.

Gary Roberts, 1000 S. Midkiff Road, reported the theft of a silver chain and belt buckle. It was valued at $450.

Grand Prairie teen-ager dies after saving siblings from fire

GRAND PRAIRIE, Texas (AP) — A 15-year-old boy led his brothers and sisters to safety from a fire that destroyed his family's home early Saturday but died when he went back into the burning house to try to douse the flames, firemen said.

Robert Morse returned home from a friend's party to find the blaze already had started, neighbors said. The boy awakened his two brothers, 12-year-old Bill and 8-year-old Mike, and his sister, Heather, 6, and led them from the house.

He then went back into the house, according to witnesses. Firemen found him dead in a bathroom, an apparent victim of smoke inhalation.

"We're speculating that maybe he was trying to get some water and fight the fire," said Grand Prairie fire marshal Elmer Aamondt.

The children's parents, Gordon and Cheryl Morse, were visiting friends when the fire broke out. Aamondt said the blaze apparently was started by an unattended electric stove in the kitchen, where someone had been frying potatoes in a pan of oil.

The two-alarm fire caused $90,000 damage, fire officials estimated.

Correctional Services spokesman Lou Ganim said Officer Claude W. Cromie, a 21-year veteran of the department, was pronounced dead at 2:54 p.m. at Champlain Valley Physician's Hospital in Plattsburg, N.Y.

Eagles put dent in Pack's second half title bid

AHS bucket at the buzzer sends MHS reeling to 62-61 defeat

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Sports Writer

The image of Abilene High's 5-10 guard Brett Enzor hanging 10 in midair and twisting around the 6-5 frame of Midland High's Preston Robertson will be branded in the minds of Bulldog fans for a long time.

That was the scene as the final buzzer went off at Chaparral Center Saturday night. The only fact missing is that Enzor's contortionist shot was falling through the hoop to give Abilene High a 62-61 last gasp District 5-5A basketball victory over the Bulldogs.

Midland High's Scott Louderback (30) saves a ball from going out of bounds at Chaparral Center Saturday night, but Abilene High won a 62-61 decision with a shot at the buzzer.

From the outset, the shot was labeled by all who could see it as "can't possibly fall". But Mother Nature tossed out the rules by which she governs the world with this one and allowed the "miracle" to send MHS to the very near depths of despair.

The win lifted Abilene High to a 2-1 second half record and still in search of that second half title while MHS fell to 1-2 and needing a "miracle" of their own to stay in second half contention. AHS, MHS and Midland Lee all shared the first half crown, but the Bulldogs could now be left out of the playoff hunt if Abilene High was to win or share the second half without losing at least one other game. The Bulldogs no longer control their own destiny. AHS is now in the best position of anyone since Lee also lost to Abilene Cooper Saturday. The Eagles still have games left with Lee and San Angelo.

"This was a wild game," said a happy AHS coach Dub Pierce after Enzor's clinching buzzer bucket. "I can't figure out if we won it or if Midland High lost it. They had a chance at a couple of free throws late in the game that could have put us away, but they came up empty. Then I didn't think Enzor had a chance of going over Robertson there at the end. That's quite a mismatch and I don't know how he got the ball in. But one thing is for sure, I'm not going to look a gift horse in the mouth because this was a big win for us."

And for the Bulldogs, it was just another of those scary fourth quarter losses that has plagued the Pack three times in the last four games. The Bulldogs were leading by four, 53-49, heading into the final period, but the Eagles ripped off seven straight points of a 56-53 lead. That lead switched hands four times until Robertson canned a layup with 1:19 to give MHS a 61-60 lead.

Barr Bolger forced two AHS turnovers and the Bulldogs got to go to the charity line on both occassions with 21 and nine seconds left in the game. Bolger missed the front end of a one-and-one as did Don Sharnowski to give Enzor a chance at answered prayer. Enzor went the length of the court uncontested until he was face-to-knee with Robertson. David killed Golaith again.

But it was not only the ending that had its moments. This contest was a see-saw affair from start to finish. Midland High led 12 different times. Abilene High led 10 times and the score was knotted another 11 times.

Both teams played well enough to win, but the Eagle victory washed away the fine performance turned in by Robertson, who had a season high 31 points, 17 coming in the second period alone. Sharnowski added 15 to the Bulldog cause. Enzor led AHS with 18, but only two will be remembered and Mike Simmons had 14.

"I thought our kids played well and they have worked so hard this year, but I guess this is another part of what basketball is all about," said a disappointed MHS coach Jack Stephenson. "I just don't know what to say about this loss. I thought we would win it."

AHS got off to a fast start, hitting seven of 11 shots in the first quarter, for a 15-14 lead, but Robertson got red hot in the second period as the Bulldogs charged into halftime with a 37-33 lead. It was a 13-13 standoff in the fourth period and it was Enzor in the fourth.

The Bulldogs may now be in a no-win situation come next Tuesday when they host San Angelo at Chaparral Center. If the Bulldogs beat the Bobcats, MHS may ruin their own hopes of forcing a district playoff. If they play to lose, that won't sit well with anyone.

When asked if the Bulldogs have reached the point of playing to lose against San Angelo, Stephenson said, "I just don't want to comment on that right now because this loss is just now sinking in and I haven't thought about next Tuesday."

In the junior varsity game, Midland High took a 59-58 win over AHS after coming back from an eight-point fourth quarter defecit. Blake Liberty keyed the win with 20 points while Johnny Pannell and Jerry Johnson each had 12. Thomas Simmons led AHS with 16 while Kevin Robinzine and Dennis Reed each hit for 15.

Cooper survives Dunson's bomb scare

ABILENE — Alvin Dunson's 40-foot shot at the buzzer was on the right path here Saturday night, but it hit the back of the rim and fell away as Abilene Cooper held onto a 50-49 District 5-5A basketball upset over the Midland Lee Rebels.

The victory keeps Cooper in the second half running with a 2-1 record, but Lee is now 1-2 and hoping it can pull off victories against Abilene High and San Angelo down the stretch.

Dunson had put the Rebels in contention against Cooper with a 15-footer with 13 seconds left in the game and Cooper's James Mantooth missed two free throw attempts with five seconds left to give Dunson one more crack at pulling a win out of the fire. It was not to be.

Dunson, who had 15 points for the Rebels, tied the score at 45 with 2:13 left in the game, but Lee could never gain a lead as Greg Dusckas followed with two free throws and Scott Youngblut scored on a breakaway layup with 1:33 left.

A tip-in by Dusckas with 36 seconds left in the first period gave Cooper a 12-11 lead and Lee couldn't catch up until Dunson tied it in the fourth period. Cooper outscored Lee 16-8 in the second period and led by as many as 10 points twice in the third period before Lee made a run at the win. Lee trailed by seven going into the final period and came up just one point short.

Randy Pepper had 10 points for Lee while Dusckas led Cooper with 22. Youngblut had 10 for the Cougars.

In the only other 5-5A game played Saturday, San Angelo, now 3-0 in the second half, rolled over 0-3 Odessa High, 71-59 as Lorand White hit for 27, Hercules Miller for 14, Jack Carsner 12 and Jeff Kasner 10. Tommy Stahl led OHS with 22 while Jimmy Gilliland had 19.

Faust optimistic about Irish future

TED BATTLES
BATTLE SCENE

Last year was last year, as far as Notre Dame Coach Jerry Faust is concerned, it is the past and one of those experiences from which he hopes to benefit in the future.

In Midland last week to recruit Midland High's Blue Chip tight end Wally Kleine, Faust's review of his freshman year at South Bend was concise, "We were 5-6. I made some mistakes and I learned a lot last year, but looking back, it was a season we could have been 9-2."

But Faust declined to dwell on 1981 or discuss the state of Notre Dame under Dan Devine, who, despite a national championship, came under constant criticism during his six years under the Golden Dome. That, of course, is one of the built-in hazards of coaching at a college with a reputation for winning football teams and is compounded at Notre Dame by a "subway" alumni that just may be more critical and demanding than bona fide old grads.

BUT FAUST, whose enthusiasm is all you've read and heard about, is concentrating on the present and future.

"We had a great recruiting year last year," he bubbles over, "And it looks like this present recruiting year will be even better."

"We have 22 kids committed and we will take 28."

What are the Irish looking for to get back on the plus side of the .500 mark? "We need everything but a fullback. We didn't even recruit a fullback this year, but we will next year."

After his visit to Midland to see Kleine, a 6-8, 245-pounder whom they've been following for two years and is the type young player Faust is counting on to turn things around, he was off to Iowa the next day. Thursday it was Pueblo, Colo., Friday Virginia, Sunday, Louisiana and then to California Monday to touch bases with potential prospects before Wednesday's national signing date.

"I see most of the kids and their families personally," says Faust, who obviously believes in the personal touch. "I've visited all but five of the top 40 we are interested in."

It's a pace that is tough on the constitution and has prompted many coaches to give up college coaching because of the toll recruiting extracts, but for Faust, only in his second year, "I enjoy recruiting. It's hectic, but I meet a lot of fine families, and whether we sign the boy or not, I make a lot of new friends."

WHILE KLEINE is believed to be the first Midlander ever recruited to play football at Notre Dame and Texas, in the past, hasn't been heavily recruited by the Irish, Faust promises that will change.

"At one time we thought we couldn't successfully recruit Texas," he admitted, "But now there are so many transplants from other areas to Texas, we plan to recruit Texas more. We are a national school and don't concentrate on any particular region."

One of the problems Faust, who gained a national reputation by making Cincinnati Moeller the dominant force in Ohio prep football circles, encountered at Notre Dame was something called the "Irish Mystique."

Apparently, some recruits are awed by the Notre Dame reputation. "But we pull on our pants just like everybody else and we've got to convince them of that."

Another problem may be next year's schedule. It may be the toughest in several years. It opens with Michigan and Purdue and includes Michigan State, Miami, Fla., Arizona, Oregon, Navy and Air Force.

"We replaced Georgia Tech with Pittsburgh," says Faust, "which means we will close with three of our last four games against Pittsburgh, Penn State and Southern California."

BACK IN 1969 Notre Dame abandoned a long-standing policy against bowl games because of rising costs in supporting a complete athletic program to come to the Cotton Bowl against Texas. The Fighting Irish have been bowl regulars ever since.

Faust was asked, if in these inflationary times, Notre Dame might consider expanding its model 59,075 seat stadium.

"I suppose it's possible," he said. "But I don't think they would expand beyond 80,000. They want to keep it a college stadium. It's remarkable, but the crowd and traffic control is excellent. After a game, they can clear the area in 30 minutes and that's because of Rockne's foresight.

"Back when they were building the stadium in 1930-31, Rockne demanded that they include huge areas for parking 'all those cars we'll have'. At the time, cars and parking weren't that big a problem and he encountered opposition. But he was so adamant that he threatened to leave if they didn't include the parking areas. They've never regretted it."

Goldsberry, Cox added
Sports Banquet Tuesday

Gordon Goldsberry, new head of the Chicago Cubs' minor league and scouting departments, and former Midland Cubs General Manager John Cox, assistant to Chicago Cubs executive vice president and GM Dallas Green, will be representing the National League club at Tuesday night's celebrity-studded Sports Banquet.

The roster for the $35-a-plate dinner at Green Tree Country Club will be headed by master-of-ceremonies Bobby Bragan and include Johnny Rutherford and Al Unser, a couple of three-time Indianapolis 500 winners; Houston Astros' catcher Alan Ashby; Dallas Cowboys' assistant Ernie Stautner; Texas Rangers outfielder Billy Sample and pitcher Danny Darwin and San Diego Padres manager Dick Williams.

Gordon Goldsberry

John Cox

Goldsberry, a former major leaguer with the Chicago White Sox and St. Louis Browns, will have a lot to say about the Texas League club that will represent Midland this year as the Chicago organization undergoes a renovation under Green. Green was appointed Chicago GM by the The Chicago Tribune, now owners of the National League club, and in naming Goldsberry, said:

"The scouting department and the minor league department have been like separate houses and it's time to get these two houses back together. It is my opinion that Gordy is the man to do it."

Goldsberry, 54, lives in San Diego and since his playing days has had scouting associations with the Cubs (1967-69), Dodgers, Brewers and, for the last eight years, with the Phillies. With Philadelphia he has been responsible for the western region of the U.S. in the Phillies scouting department.

Of course, it was during this period that the Phils were building toward its 1980 World Series champions.

The effervescent Cox was GM of the Midland Cubs in 1973 and 1974 before moving up to the big club where he has served as staff assistant, 1975; assistant to the GM, 1976; farm director, 1977; assistant GM, 1978-1981.

John's playing career dates back to 1964 when he broke in as an infielder in the California Angels' organization, for whom he played for two years before moving on to the Cubs and Oakland A's farm systems. In 1967 he was named to the Northern League All-Star team.

By 1970, he had turned to the front office phase of the game, serving as GM at Burlington, Iowa, putting in another year with AAA Wichita, the Cubs AAA farm in the American Association at the time, before coming to Midland.

Tickets for the banquet are on sale at the Midland Cubs new home office at Cubs Stadium, where parking is unlimited. A social hour at 6:30 p.m. will precede the banquet proper.

DuPree faces Cowboy issues squarely

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Sports Writer

Billy Joe DuPree, the lengendary tight end of America's Team, made one of his rare off-season appearances in Midland Saturday as honorary chairman of the Big Brothers/Big Sisters' "Bowl for Millions" fund raising event at Dellwood Lanes, and the wily 10-year veteran didn't back off from the issues concerning the Dallas Cowboys, his future and the possibility of a players' strike in the National Football League.

DuPree has had time to assess the Cowboys' loss to San Francisco in the NFC championship game, a loss that kept the Cowboys out of the Super Bowl.

"Well, we got beat by an extremely lucky team," quipped DuPree. "The Cowboys have had some extremely lucky days, but this was the first time that it was turned around on us and it really hurts. And it was the first time ever in that situation that we lost twice to the same team. We usually turn it around when we lose the first time to a team, but we didn't captilize on that opportunity this time."

DUPREE FELT that the Cowboys had a lot of motivation to beat San Francisco. "We felt we had the best overall team in the NFL going into the game with San Francisco because after we lost to them badly the first time around, it brought us together as a team. It was a case of learning that we were not as good as we thought we were and that helped us the rest of the year."

But the thought riding with many pro football fans right now is the possibility of a players' strike during the 1982 season, like the one that crippled baseball last summer.

"A strike by the players is not out of the question at this point in time, but it isn't the only solution. The problem could be alleviated before the season starts," observed DuPree. "However, I don't think management is ready to accept our concept of revenue sharing and we (the players) are not ready to accept what management has at this time."

DuPree said that the National Football League Players Association is worried about what a strike might do to pro football. "I don't think a strike would hurt the NFL per se, but the fans might feel that they are not getting their money's worth after a strike. It would take time to heal that wound.

"Attendance might drop slightly, but the real money is from TV anyway and unless CBS or NBC goes on strike, it won't make that much difference. And our situation is much different than in baseball because the audience is more captivated. They come to see an organization play more than they do individuals as in baseball."

THE NFLPA is proposing that the players receive 55 percent of the revenues taken in by the NFL with the money to be provided between players according to position, length of service and other such factors.

"Our position is that if a guy is taking in a big revenue, there should be some sort of profit sharing. I know it's hard to get a ticket in Dallas, even for me," DuPree stated.

As for as DuPree is concerned, the possibility of a players' strike may be coming at the wrong time since he has already passed the majority of his earning potential as a 10-year veteran.

"I consider myself a man of my word and I'm signed through the 1983 season with the Cowboys," DuPree said. "After that, the Cowboys and I will have to make a decision on whether I can help the team or not. If I can, I'll continue to play. If not, there's a lot of other things out there in the world that a man can do."

DuPree already has a full life outside of football and that is one of the reasons that his off-season visits across the country have been limited.

"I came to Midland to do what ever I can for Big Brothers/Big Sisters," DuPree said. "I'm on the board in Arlington and I think it is a great organization. I got involved with this program some in college (Michigan State), but I dropped out of working with Big Brothers/Big Sisters when I came to the Cowboys because it took all my time getting adjusted to the NFL. Then I found out I had a cousin that needed help and I again became active again. I hope this will bring some exposure to the organization and if it helps one or two kids, it will be worth it.

"I would like to say that I'm laying by the pool and partying in the off-season, but I'm concentrating on my small industrial construction firm in Dallas, and I've really got my hands full with that. That is why this will probably be my only off-season appearance this year."

Husted wins first PBA crown

HOUSTON (AP) — Dave Husted of Milwaukie, Ore. averaged 252 Saturday as he roared from fourth place to take his first career championship on the pro bowling tour, winning the $131,000 Bowling Proprietors of America U.S. Open.

Husted, 21, opened with seven consecutive strikes in the championship match and routed top-seeded Gil Sliker 255-180. Husted had rolled 752 in his first three matches after qualifying for the finals in fourth palce.

His total pinfall of 1,011 for four games was ten short of the Professional Bowlers Association championship round record set by Larry Laub in Kansas City in 1974. Husted's victory was worth $21,000.

"I had a great shot on the lanes," said Husted. "The first game I had butterflies but got over them as soon as I started to throw some strikes. When I got past Earl (Anthony) I felt I had a great chance to go all the way."

Husted, started his march with a 269-200 win over Frank Ellenberg, throwing strikes on 10 of 12 shots. In the next game, Husted ran together seven straight strikes to whip Charlie Tapp, 258-189.

The second-seeded Anthony was the next victim 229-188. He could get no closer than 41 pins, and that still proved to be Husted's closest match of the day.

Sliker made $11,000 for second, his fourth runner-up finish in the last 11 months. "I'm dissapointed but it would have been worse if it had come right down to the end and I lost by a few pins."

Anthony earned $7,500 for third place. Tapp, who lead the tournament in the fourth through the sixth round, made $6,000 for fourth. Ellenberg collected $5,000 for fifth.

UTEP falls to NM St.

ALBUQUERQUE (AP) — Senior Larry Tarrance scored a career-high 19 points and pulled down 13 rebounds to lead New Mexico to a 63-49 Western Athletic Conference basketball upset of the University of Texas-El Paso Saturday.

With Tarrance dominating inside, New Mexico broke the way in the second half to raise its season record to 10-10 and its record in the conference to 3-6.

The loss severely hurt UTEP's chances in the WAC title chase. The Miners dropped to 14-7 overall and 5-4 in the conference.

Forward Fred Reynolds, with 14 points, and Terry White and Luster Goodwin, with 10 each, led the Miners.

New Mexico spotted UTEP a 6-0 lead, then battled back for a 28-23 halftime lead, scoring the final six points of the half. Tarrance hit two free throws and Alan Dolensky, who came off the bench to chip in 12 points, hit a 15-quarter to open the second half, and New Mexico steadily pulled away from there.

Arkansas stays on top of SWC with win over Longhorns

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. (AP) — Key steals by junior guard Darrell Walker and senior guard Tony Brown ignited 14th-ranked Arkansas for a 62-55 overtime victory over 12th-ranked Texas in Southwest Conference basketball action Saturday night.

After regulation ended in a tie at 51, Texas won the overtime tip. But, 48 seconds later Walker stole a pass and raced the length of the floor for a layup that put Arkansas in front for good.

Seconds later, Brown made a steal and was intentionally fouled. He hit both free throws. Texas didn't score in the extra period until sophomore guard Ray Harper swished two free throws with 14 seconds left.

Arkansas' victory was marred by a late game incident which resulted in Walker's ejection with 18 seconds remaining. Arkansas senior center Scott Hastings was going for a dunk shot when senior foward Virdell Howland fouled him.

Walker thought Howland's foul was intentional and took a swipe at Howland, Arkansas Coach Eddie Sutton said. The punch landed on Harper instead.

Texas Coach Abe Lemons protested even after Walker had been ejected and at one point went down to the Arkansas bench and yelled at Walker, according to reports. Hastings' hit both free throws on Howland's foul and Harper hit two on the flagrant technical by Walker.

After the game as Lemons and his team headed for the dressing room, Lemons and a Razorback fan apparently got into a jawing contest and some minor scuffling ensued, said Arkansas sports information director Rick Schaeffer.

Hastings led all scorers with 22 points while Walker added 15.

Sophomore guard Denard Holmes led Texas with 17 points while LaSalle Thompson, who had 19 rebounds, scored 13.

The victory kept Arkansas in sole possession of first place in the Southwest Conference with a 7-3 record. Arkansas is 16-3 overall. Texas fell to 15-4, including 6-4 in the SWC.

Texas Tech 71, TCU 65

LUBBOCK, Texas (AP) — Texas Tech guard Steve Smith thinks the Red Raiders were better prepared Saturday to cool the red-hot Texas Christian Horned Frogs in a Southwest Conference basketball rematch.

The Red Raiders lost an early lead but rebounded to snap a five-game TCU winning streak by a 71-65 count in a regionally televised contest. The loss knocked the Frogs out of a share of second place in the conference race.

TCU coach Jim Killingsworth blamed the loss on the rebounds and on the officials.

TCU had a 31-24 edge in rebounds, but turned the ball over 18 times to only seven for Tech. Both teams shot well with the Frogs hitting 54.2 percent and Tech an even 50 percent.

Officials called 11 fouls against Tech and three against TCU in the first half. In the second half, 11 miscues were called against the Frogs, while Tech was whistled down only three times.

Charles Johnson, scoring 14 of his game-high 18 points in the second half, led the Red Raiders while Doug Arnold canned 16 points for the Frogs.

The victory evened Tech's league record at 5-5 and 13-7 and dropped TCU to 6-4 and 11-8.

Taylor had 16 points, Smith had 14 and Swannegan 13 for the Raiders, while Darrell Browder had 14 and Joe Stephen had 10 for the Frogs.

Baylor 66, Rice 55

HOUSTON (AP) — Baylor's Terry Teagle scored 26 points, becoming the third player in Southwest Conference history to surpass the 2,000-point mark as he led the Bears to their 66-55 basketball victory over Rice Saturday night.

Teagle now has 2,005 career points and ranks third in all-time league scoring behind Texas Tech's Rick Bullock and Arkansas' Sidney Moncrief.

Teagle helped the Bears to a 32-30 halftime lead in a shooting duel with Rice's Ricky Pierce, who had 15 points at halftime but finished the game with only 17.

Renaldo O'Neal took up the scoring slack in the second half for the Owls. Pierce, the nation's No. 2 scorer, did not score in the second half until 7:58 remained in the game.

Pierce's basket tied the game at 45-45, but the Bears then outscored the Owls, 14-4, to ice the game.

The Bears evened their SWC record at 5-5, while the Owls dropped to 3-7. Baylor is 12-8 for the season, and Rice is 12-11.

Kenny Austin finished with 15 points for the Owls, and O'Neal added 11.

Houston 73, SMU 71

DALLAS (AP) — Michael Young hit a layup to send the game into overtime, then connected on an eight-foot jumper with one second left in the extra period as Houston defeated Southern Methodist, 73-71, Saturday in Southwest Conference basketball.

With the game tied at 71 and five seconds left on the overtime clock, SMU's Dave Piehler forced a 15-foot jump shot that fell short. Lynden Rose rebounded for Houston and passed to Young on the baseline for the game-winning shot at the buzzer.

Young had scored a layup to tie the game 69-69 at the end of regulation, after the Mustangs missed two critical late free throws.

Clyde Drexler and Larry Micheaux led the Cougars with 15 points each as the Cougars improved their SWC record to 5-5, good for a fifth-place tie with Texas Tech. For the season, the Cougars are 14-6.

SMU, led by John Briggs and Larry Davis with 19 points each, fell deeper into the league cellar, dropping to 1-9 in conference play and 6-14 overall.

The Mustangs trailed 60-55 with 10 minutes remaining before Davis and Briggs started the SMU rally. They hit 10 of 12 points to give the Mustangs a 67-66 lead with 5:04 to go.

Then 94-percent free throw shooter Chuck Anderson and Piehler each missed free shots inside two minutes with the Mustangs leading, 69-67 and Young hit the layup that made overtime necessary.

Nebraska stuns Missouri

COLUMBIA, Mo. (AP) — Forward Greg Downing scored 14 points and guard Jack Moore added 12 as defense-minded Nebraska stunned No. 1 and previously unbeaten Missouri 67-51 Saturday night in Big Eight basketball.

The loss dropped the Tigers to 19-1 in all games and 8-1 in the Big Eight, as well as snapping Missouri's 29-game winning streak at the Hearnes Multi-Purpose Center.

Nebraska, 12-8 and 4-4, hounded Missouri with a stingy man-to-man defense, blocking seven shots and causing the Tigers to shoot just 34.6 percent from the field, 20 percent below their season average.

Claude Renfro had 11 points for Nebraska, while Jon Sundvold and Steve Stipanovich led Missouri with 13 points apiece.

Virginia 80, Virginia Tech 66

Ralph Sampson scored 25 points, pulled down 21 rebounds and blocked seven shots Saturday night as the 7-foot-4 All-American led Virginia's third-ranked Cavaliers to a surprisingly easy 80-66 basketball romp over Virginia Tech's Hokies.

Freshman Tim Mullen added 13 points, freshman Jimmy Miller 12 and sophomore Othell Wilson 10 for the Cavaliers, who won their 10th straight game and upped their overall record to 22-1.

Sampson, 10 of 13 from the floor, also moved past Barry Parkhill into the No.5 spot on the Virginia career scoring list. He now has 1,460 points.

Tulsa 80, Wichita State 75

Paul Pressey and Greg Stewart combined for 34 points Saturday night to lead No. 11 Tulsa to an 80-75 come-from-behind win over Wichita State in Missouri Valley basketball.

The victory kept Tulsa in first place in the conference race with an 8-2 record. The Golden Hurricane is 16-3 overall.

Wichita State, led by Antoine Carr with a career-high 35 points, dropped to 6-4 in the conference and 16-6 in all games.

Kentucky 77, Tennessee 67

Jim Master and reserve Dickie Beal helped Kentucky hold off a frantic Tennessee rally in the second half and lead the ninth-ranked Wildcats to a 77-67 Southeastern Conference basketball victory Saturday night over the Volunteers.

The Wildcats led by 12 points at the half, 43-31, but the 16th-ranked Volunteers forged a 47-47 tie with 12 minutes to play before Beal and Master went to work.

Former Midland High and Midland College basketball standout Charles Johnson distracts TCU's Doug Arnold by jumping over the Horn Frog cager. Johnson, now playing at Texas Tech, led the Red Raiders to a 71-65 win over TCU Saturday in Lubbock with a game-high 18 points.

Lee coach David Whytlaw said, "It was a good meet for us. We had some good swims and I'm looking for us to improve each meet."

McEnroe tops McNamara to gain berth in Molson finals

TORONTO (AP) — John McEnroe, the world's No.1-ranked, tennis player, upended Australian Peter McNamara 6-2, 6-4 Saturday in the semifinals of the $350,000 Molson Tennis Challenge.

McEnroe, 22, will battle Ivan Lendl for the $125,000 first prize Sunday. The Czechoslovakian whipped defending champion Vitas Gerulaitis 6-2, 6-0 in less than an hour in the other semifinal Saturday.

Gerulaitis and McNamara, who started the tournament as the lowest-ranked player in his round-robin group, earned $45,000 for their efforts this week.

THE LOSING finalist will earn $75,000.

McNamara, 26, had upset Americans Jimmy Connors and Eliot Teltscher on the way to the semifinals.

The one player McNamara didn't beat in his group was Lendl, who tore apart Gerulaitis's game with an overpowering serve and steady ground strokes. Gerulaitis, ninth in the world, ruined his chances with five double faults and numerous unforced errors at critical situations.

"When you step on the court you have to expect a very difficult match, but if you get it easier, it's just what comes," said Lendl of his one-sided victory which some of the 12,568 fans found to be boring.

However, Lendl, ranked third internationally, had a word or two for those people.

"They have two options," he said. "They can come and see top players, but if one of the players is off that day, it won't be much of a match.

"Sometimes, you can go together with a friend and have an exciting match, but people aren't going to watch just anyone play. So I think it was a stupid comment."

Lendl, who complained of flu-like symptoms during his triumph over Connors on Thursday night, said he was feeling better.

"I'm coughing nicer and nicer," he said, adding his fever had passed.

Lendl said he hopes to return serve better against McEnroe Sunday. The two have split their six Grand Prix tour career matches with Lendl winning their latest confrontation — 6-4, 6-2 at the Masters in mid-January.

IT WAS a heart-breaking loss for McNamara, who showed flashes of brilliance early in the second set after being soundly thumped by McEnroe in the first set. McNamara, ranked 10th internationally, took a 3-1 lead, breaking McEnroe's serve by matching shots with the quick left-hander.

"I was starting to return a little better," McNamara said of his second-set resurgence. "But he was always so close to the net and he kept pressuring me that it was difficult to keep things going."

McNamara stretched the lead to 4-1 by holding his serve, but then McEnroe reeled off five straight to take the match. The turning point came in the seventh game when McEnroe broke on two unforced errors by McNamara.

"When I was up 4-1 I thought I was playing better, but then he pressured me," said McNamara. "You have to serve-and-volley better than I did to beat him and you have to stay with him.

"But it was so frustrating because what would be a passing shot against any other opponent, he gets a winning volley off it. At 4-4 I hit three deep shots to his backhand, but he up with it every time."

Singleton keeps 1-stroke lead

NORTH MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Vicki Singleton struggled on the back nine Saturday but recovered to retain a 1-stroke lead after three rounds of the $125,000 LPGA Elizabeth Arden Classic.

Singleton, who began the day with a 3-stroke lead, bogeyed the 14th and 15th holes on the 6,211-yard Turnberry Isle Country Club south course and settled for a 1-over-par 73 and a 6-under 210 total for 54 holes.

Brenda Goldsmith, JoAnne Carner, Pat Bradley and defending champion Sally Little, who trailed Singleton by 3 strokes heading into the third round, fired 1-under-par 71s to tighten the race.

Two shots further back, at 213, were Mary Dwyer, who had a third-round 69; Nancy Lopez-Melton, who carded a 70, and Jane Blalock and Betsy King, both with 73.

Joyce Kazmierski, Hollis Stacy and Patty Sheehan all were 4 shots behind Singleton at 214.

Singleton, an Arizona State graduate in her third season on the LPGA tour, has been in contention for a title only one other time.

She was tied for the lead through 11 holes of the final round at the Birmingham, Ala., stop during her rookie season. But she faltered down the stretch and eventually tied for 10th.

Singleton had only one birdie Saturday, a 4-footer at the 481-yard sixth hole, and almost lost command of the tournament when she recorded the consecutive bogeys.

At No. 14, she hooked her drive into a fairway bunker, came out short of the green, chipped up and lipped out a 15-footer for par. She 3-putted from 10 feet at No.15.

Pistons sign A&M's Smith

PONTIAC, Mich. (AP) — The Detroit Pistons have signed power forward Vernon Smith to a 10-day contract, a spokesman for the National Basketball Association team said Saturday.

Smith, a 6-foot-8, 220-pound free agent from Texas A&M, was drafted in June by Philadelphia and was one of the last two players cut by the 76ers prior to the start of the season.

Meanwhile, the Pistons announced that forward Edgar Jones has been placed on the injured reserve list because of tendinitis in his left knee. Jones has missed seven of Detroit's last nine games. The 6-10, 205-pounder out of the University of Nevada-Reno had started in 13 Pistons games this season.

Memphis State trips Louisville

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Freshman forward Keith Lee scored a game-high 30 points to carry No. 19 Memphis State to a 74-65 overtime victory over Louisville in a Metro Conference basketball game Saturday.

Lee, who got 18 of his points after the half, also was the game's leading rebounder with 13 and had four blocked shots and a steal.

The victory pushed Memphis State to a 15-3 record overall and a league-leading 6-1 mark in the Metro Conference. The loss dropped Louisville to 12-8 overall and 5-4 in the conference.

Fourteen years ago, Hertz began its equipment rental and leasing business.

Today, more than 50 corporate Hertz Equipment Rental locations comprise the only national operation of its kind.

Now, as part of a carefully planned expansion program, Hertz Equipment Rental Corporation, a wholly owned subsidiary of The Hertz Corporation, is offering investment opportunities in equipment rental franchises.

An investment opportunity from Hertz

The time is most opportune. In the past four years alone, the number of corporate Hertz Equipment Rental locations has grown by 30%. Today, private contractors, builders, non-construction industrial users as well as public agencies are utilizing more and more rented/leased equipment to free up capital. In the face of high interest rates, tight money and inflation, there is a concerted effort to substantially improve both cash control and cash flow. Capital expenditures have been successfully minimized through the rental or leasing of Hertz equipment ranging from mortar mixers to bulldozers.

And, of course, the Hertz reputation, combined with its experience in this vital business, is both impressive and unique.

A substantial investment in inventory is required, with access to adequate credit resources. The initial investment can run as high as $1,500,000. However, there is some degree of flexibility in terms of the composition of this investment.

For those seeking tax-sheltered investments, a Hertz Equipment Rental franchise could offer the types of special tax benefits that are available through equipment leasing operations.

The 1982 construction season starts in just a few short months. That makes this an especially appropriate time to find out how you can take advantage of this investment opportunity. If you believe you can meet the basic financial requirements, please call or write David Levy, Director of Franchising at 800-526-0697 for further information.

Gretzky hogs NHL Star light

LANDOVER, Md. (AP) — The spotlight will focus on Wayne Gretzky on the ice and Peter Gilbert off it as the National Hockey League takes its mid-winter break for the All-Star Game and Board of Governors meetings this week.

The All-Star Game, set for Tuesday night at the Capital Centre here, will offer the NHL's best players, all trying to keep up with Gretzky. Nobody has done it in the regular season.

"I'm just one of 20 players," says Gretzky, who has torn apart the NHL scoring race this season as he appears headed for a 200-point, 100-goal campaign. "One player doesn't make the difference in a game like the All-Star Game."

MAYBE NOT, but Campbell Conference Coach Glen Sonmor of the Minnesota North Stars certainly is glad to have the super center of the Edmonton Oilers on his side. Sonmor has plenty more firepower, too, with centers Denis Savard of Chicago and Bobby Smith of the North Stars, right wings Dino Ciccarelli of Minnesota and Dave Taylor of Los Angeles, and high-scoring defensemen Paul Coffey of the Oilers and Doug Wilson of Chicago.

Sonmor also has the game's only two rookies — Grant Fuhr of the Oilers, who will start in goal, and center Dale Hawerchuk of the Winnipeg Jets. They are two of the 20 players making their All-Star debuts — 13 of the newcomers are with the Campbells.

THE WALES Conference does not lack in scoring potency, either, led by centers Peter Stastny of Quebec, Bryan Trottier of the Islanders and Dennis Maruk of the host Capitals, right wings Mike Bossy of the Islanders, Rick Middleton of Boston and Blaine Stoughton of Hartford, and left wings Marc Tardif of Quebec and Bill Barber and Brian Propp of Philadelphia.

Al Arbour, who has led the Islanders to two consecutive Stanley Cups, will coach the Wales team and has Pittsburgh's Michel Dion as his starting goaltender.

On Monday and Tuesday, the NHL will hold its winter meetings. League President John Ziegler said he doesn't expect much to be accomplished at the meetings "because of the time limitations." But Gilbert might have other ideas.

The owner of the financially strapped Colorado Rockies is looking to move his franchise out of Denver and said during a recent trip to Ottawa — which he feels is a prime candidate as a home for his team, along with the new Meadowlands Arena in East Rutherford, N.J. — that he expected to sort out the situation at the Board of Governors meeting.

"THE COLORADO situation will be the main matter discussed," Ziegler said. "But we don't expect any formal reports. Of course, the league is very sympathetic to anyone who has lost as much money as fast as Peter has in Denver. We can't require people to keep losing money."

But it is unlikely that Gilbert can force a decision at the Governors meeting.

It would require unanimous consent of the 21 NHL teams to move the Rockies. And Colorado Governor Richard Lamm has said he will take an active role in trying to keep the Rockies in Denver by helping identify potential buyers of the team.

LEAGUE representatives and members of the executive board of the NHL Players Association also will meet "to review where we are" in negotiations for a new collective-bargaining agreement. The current contract has been terminated by the union, effective in September.

"Our players know what we want and can get but still be reasonable," said Sam Simpson, assistant to NHLPA Executive Director Alan Eagleson. "The owners have been pretty fair with us. I think we've been fair, too."

TRIM generally reports on money bills involving one billion dollars or more. On occasion we will select bills with a smaller price tag because of their importance, or bills that do not have a precise dollar figure but which nevertheless will have a significant economic impact. We usually select votes on final passage because the final vote determines how much a particular bill will cost, or save, taxpayers.

In addition to what is written on page four about the bills, there is additional information about some of them that you should know:

2. Legal Services Corporation: This agency has been labelled "welfare for lawyers," and properly so. Nearly 70 percent of LSC's budget goes for salaries, and only an extremely small number of people too poor to hire their own lawyer are helped. Indeed, Utah Senator Orrin Hatch has said that the LSC is one of those "playpens of social activism" which this country cannot afford. The LSC should be abolished.

4. Funding for HUD: Last July the House approved $62.6 billion in this bill. After ironing out differences between it and its companion bill in the Senate, the funding was cut by almost $2 billion. Even though that revised figure was $8.9 billion less than the 1981 appropriation, the House came within 12 votes of calling for even more cuts because the Reagan Administration said it was still too costly. As you will note in the article about HUD on page two, there are many reasons why that agency should be completely abolished.

6. Dept. of Education: Virtually every major newspaper in the country, as well as the American Federation of Teachers, was opposed to the creation of the DOE in 1979. President Reagan promised during the 1980 campaign to abolish the agency. But Liberals in Congress continue to keep it alive, despite the fact that there is no basis in the Constitution for such an agency, and despite the fact that it costs twice as much to educate children in government schools as it does in private schools.

7. Food Stamps: Almost 21.5 million Americans receive food stamps. Federal estimates indicate that perhaps a billion dollars are simply wasted in fraud and abuse. In Chicago (the third-largest distribution point, behind Puerto Rico and New York City) the situation is now so bad that the Secret Service and Federal Bureau of Investigation have joined in a probe of black market food stamps, counterfeiters and corrupt officials. According to one Justice Department official: "Employees are sticking them in their pockets and caseworkers are opening up phony files for non-existent recipients."

8. Foreign Aid: Opposition to this program had grown so strong that this was the first time in more than two years an authorization bill made it through the House. Unfortunately, scores of Congressmen who for years had consistently voted against foreign aid giveaways yielded to intense lobbying by President Reagan and Secretary of State Alexander Haig this time.

One Washington-based publication observed: "House Republicans who have been key foes of foreign aid in the past held their noses," and voted for the bill.

Let your Congressman know how you feel about the way he voted!

7. FOOD STAMPS. H.R. 3603 (Amendment). An amendment to the farm subsidies bill was offered that would require most food stamp recipients to pay for a modest portion of their stamps. It would save taxpayers about $1.4 billion, but it was defeated 147-251. (Congressional Record 10/22/81, pp. H7600-H7615.) Total Cost: $1.4 billion	$17		X	★			X
8. FOREIGN AID AUTHORIZATION. H.R. 3566. This bill authorized 12.1 billion for military, economic and development aid for 1982 and 1983. Government Creates Housing Crisis

One of the biggest problems facing millions of Americans is finding a house they can afford, and the problem is growing worse because of economic policies of the federal government. Herman J. Smith, president of the National Association of Home Builders has pointed out that "first-time buyers in particular have been priced out of the housing market by high interest rates." Each one percent increase in interest rates, reports Smith, puts a median-priced house out of reach of some 860,000 more families. "At the current mortgage interest rate of 17 percent," he continued, "a $60,000 mortgage carries a principal and interest payment of $855 per month. Other housing-related expenses bring the monthly expenditure to $1,070. This requires an annual income of $38,520 and fewer than 10 percent of all first-time buyers could qualify for this median priced home."

The National Association of Realtors has warned that "this country is currently in the midst of a housing depression that surpasses any downturn in recent memory."

What will bring interest rates down? No less an authority than Paul Volcker, chairman of the Federal Reserve System, told the National Association of Realtors at their meeting in Miami last November that further cuts in government spending will do more to help the ailing industry than increasing the money supply to force interest rates down. He added that "it's got to be done. It's got to begin. We need action to bring down the [federal] deficit, otherwise we won't make it. . . . I hope we can see it through."

THE SPENDING HABITS of the federal government are creating ever larger deficits (see Page 3). This will force it to borrow money to pay its bills, thus driving up interest rates. The answer, then, is to drastically reduce federal spending before the roof caves in. ■ ■

WASTE AND FRAUD IN FEDERAL HOUSING PROGRAMS

"Outright theft, political pressures, tax shelters and massive incompetence add to a debacle that has already cost taxpayers more than $600 million." So begins an article titled "The Great Giveaway At HUD" in Reader's Digest for December 1976. In a scathing indictment of the Department of Housing and Urban Development the Digest continued: "Like drunks on a spree, HUD began [in 1968] handing out billions in guarantees to practically anybody who asked. The results: at last count, HUD was holding $3.3 billion worth of mortgages on 2,071 projects from Bangor, Maine, to Ventura, California. More than half of those are in default or have already been foreclosed. . . ."

In 1980 Donald Lambro, a reporter for United Press International, wrote a monumental book called Fat City: How Washington Wastes Your Taxes. In a long chapter titled "HUD: The $76 Billion Disappointment" he lists numerous examples of waste and fraud. For example, a large chunk of HUD's billions is not benefiting the poor or even low-income groups, but instead is going to banks, private investors, and rich and influential consulting firms; HUD's $3.9 billion-a-year Community Development program has thrown its money lavishly at communities across the country whether they deserve such funding or not; and hundreds of millions of dollars have gone into pipe-dream housing schemes from Model Cities to New Communities, most of which have ended up either bankrupt or decaying into slum housing.

Many of HUD's programs, like Urban Renewal, Operation Breakthrough, Model Cities, New Communities, Urban Beautification — projects launched with high hopes and barrels of money — are now considered among the government's biggest bombs. Lambro quotes one congressional housing expert: "HUD has been a monumental experiment to see if the federal government could provide suitable housing for the nation's poor and make its cities a decent place to live. Yet many of its biggest projects have been abject and utter failures."

But HUD has been a haven for thousands of overpaid bureaucrats. There are about 17,000 employees soaking up your tax dollars on HUD's payroll. In 1979 at least 2,440 of them were earning more than $30,000 a year. When rents, utilities, and other overhead and administrative costs are added to salaries, HUD's yearly operating costs total more than $530 million. The department grew — from its creation in 1965 to 1979 — to such an extent that in that year it filled a fairly new $26 million, 10-story building — with no room to spare.

HUD is clearly following the pattern of other federal programs in demonstrating that massive infusions of tax money will not cure the social ills they are intended to meet. HUD is one way Washington wastes your taxes. ■ ■

Jack Nicklaus' body English comes through on his chip shot on the first hole as it ran into the cup for a birdie on the first hold at Pebble Beach during the third round of the Bing Crosby National Pro-Am Saturday.

Stadler surges to lead at Crosby National Pro-Am

PEBBLE BEACH, Calif. (AP) — Craig Stadler, gunning for a second early-season victory, swarmed out of the pack with an 8-under-par 64 and established a two-stroke command Saturday in the third round of the 41st Bing Crosby National Pro-Am Golf Tournament.

Stadler, a winner in the Tucson Open that kicked off the 1982 American tour, used the best round of the tournament to compile a 54-hole total of 206, 10 shots under par after one round over each of three Monterey Peninsula courses.

THIS ONE was at Cypress Point and represented a tournament record for that scenic, 6,506-yard layout.

Jim Simons, with a 71 at tough Spyglass Hill, held second at 208, followed by former amateur champion Hal Sutton, at 209 after a par-72 at Spyglass Hill.

Jack Nicklaus put himself in position to make a run at it, got to within a single stroke of the top spot with a birdie-birdie start, and then stopped.

"From then on, I just didn't make anything," said Nicklaus, who played with former President Gerald Ford as his amateur partner before a enormous gallery that took advantage of brilliant sunshine and warm temperatures at Pebble Beach.

He finished with a 71 and was tied at 210 — four strokes back — with Bobby Wadkins, who had a 71 at Cypress Point.

THE GROUP at 211 included Joe Inman, Scott Simpson and veteran Dave Stockton. Inman and Simpson each had a 69 at Spyglass Hill and Stockton shot 70 at Pebble Beach.

George Burns, the second-round leader, took a fat 77 at Spyglass and dropped back to 213.

Stadler, currently the year's leading money-winner at $61,596, shrugged off his spectacular effort that saw him play the par-5 holes five under.

An AP Sports Analysis
By DENNE H. FREEMAN

With the wierd way the Southwest Conference basketball season is going, it might not be too farfetched to see the following story in print sometime in early March:

BULLETIN

WACO, Texas (AP) — The Southwest Conference, spooked by the most mysterious basketball season in history, voted today to spirit its post-season tournament away from Reunion Arena in Dallas to Haunt O' Texas Coliseum.

Haunt O' Texas Coliseum was chosen in this most bizarre of campaigns because it would provide a more proper and eerie setting for deciding a championship.

Two visiting teams were sacrificed there during the regular season in pagan rituals involving the slick Tartan floor and voodoo hexes on the lights.

Texas A&M Coach Shelby Metcalf said his ballot was contingent on the arena being renamed the Heart O' Bermuda Triangle Asylum.

Texas Coach Abe Lemons said he would send his team if the place was called the Hindquarters O' Texas Court.

Arkansas Coach Eddie Sutton said,"They can even call it Heart O' Texas Coliseum if they want to but I ain't playing in no tournament there...in fact, my team ain't coming there next week to play Baylor."

SOMEHOW such a story wouldn't be out of place this witchcraft season in the SWC that has everyone driving to the basket on broomsticks.

Is it any weirder than preseason favorite Houston losing five out of six games?

Is it any creepier than Texas winning its first 14 games then going into a three loss coma after Mike Wacker's knee disaster in Heart O' Texas?

Is it any more garrish than the Killer Horned Frogs of Texas Christian inhabiting second place?

Is it any more ghostly than the two hours of darkness the Texas Aggies had to endure in Heart O' Texas Wednesday night before Terry Teagle drove a stake in their heart?.

Methinks not.

This is a great year for the cauldron crowd where you can stir a batch of bat eyelids and hummingbird tongues and produce a 31-point victory by Rice over Texas.

Whip up some raccoon earlobes and buzzard brains and watch Arkansas win two games against Houston and Texas A&M on last second shots too silly for the Twilight Zone.

Give me some armadillo toenails and a jackrabbit's navel and I'll fry up a batch of SMU beating Houston in Hofheinz Pavilion.

Heart O' Texas Coliseum would be a fitting torture chamber for the conference cookoff.

The lights are dim anyway and spiderwebs for nets would be a scary touch. Carved out jack o' lanterns would make neat rims.

ROD N. REELE

Bob Knox took first place in the men's division of the High Sky Bass Club's first tournament of the year Jan. 16. The one-day, lake-of-your-choice event was hampered by terrible weather conditions, but Knox took first with three pounds, 10 ounces.

Nine fish were caught with a weight of 13 pounds, four ounces. Bill Oglesby took second with 2-6 while Tom Allred was third with 2-4.

No women participated, but Jay Tarply caught 15 pounds, four ounces of African Perch in the youth division.

The top six standings for the year: 1. Knox. 2. Oglesby, 3. Allred. 4. Allan Blake, 5. Tarply and 6. Jim Crownover...

RAYMOND CASTILLO caught an 11 foot Marline with a 28-inch girth while fishing in Hawaii Jan. 29. It took one hour 45 minutes to boat the big fish...

Robby and Trisch Davidson, 2409 Bellechase Court, Midland, participated in the 47th Metropolitan South Florida Fishing Tournament which runs through May 9.

Robby landed a 284-pound blacktip shark and Trisch took a 38-pound barracuda and a 74-pound sailfish...

MR. AND Mrs. Terry Bland of Andrews had the thrill of a lifetime when a 19 pound 15 ounce striped bass hit their line while they were trolling at Lake E.V. Spence, highlighting some outstanding catches at the lake last week.

Midland's John and Dana Agee and Charles Rogers took 31 white bass to 1 1/2 pounds, using spoon slabs up river. Bob Sparkman, also Midland, took 30 and 35 pound yellow catfish.

Also, Joe Robertson, Odessa, landed two stripers at 5 1/2 and 7 pounds on a trotline, and Mr. and Mrs. Robert DeWoody, Odessa, took 25 whites on a model A bomber...

With spring striped bass and white bass spawning runs just around the corner, anglers may obtain a free leaflet explaining how to identify the fish by writing the Parks and Wildlife Department, 4200 Smith School Road, Austin, 78744. Illustrations include stripers, white bass and striped/white bass hybrid...

The hybrid striper is the state's most popular test-tube baby, a hatchery-produced cross between the striped and white bass and provides excellent winterime fishing, according to Roger McCabe of the TPWD. "They are especially popular in power plant lakes where they congregate in warm-water discharge areas during the winter."

Lake Ray Hubbard, east of Dallas, is a good lake for hybrid stripers. A December survey turned up 21 hybrids ranging from two to six pounds in weight.

Hybrid stripers do not reproduce, but grow rapidly and provide a strong sport fishery and an effective predatory control lfor forage fish. Hybrids are attracted by a variety of lures and livde bait such as minnows. When feeding schools are located, the fish will hit shad or chrome colored spoons, jigs or crankbaits...

Robby and Trisch Davidson of Midland display angling prizes caught aboard the Rave out of Castaway's Dock at North Miami Beach, Fla.

KENNY REDIN'S

You may or may not belong to a sportsman's club of some kind, but it can be good, if it's the proper one.

Basically, there are two types of sportsman's club. One is simple, well-defined as being a family-oriented sportsman's club. The entire family can enjoy the club's benefits on a single annual dues payment. The other offers benefits for a single membership that include a magazine, patches, decals, etc. Some give members discounts on specially organized hunting or fishing trips.

Watch these types of organizations. Most can't make it on membership alone and must overcharge for their so-called club-sponsored fishing and hunting trips. It might sound good, but think about it twice.

On most occasions you can go less expensively on your own or with an outdoor writer who arranges trips, or even go through a specialized travel agency.

WITH TODAY'S hunting prices soaring out of range from the average sportsman's budget, it might be wise to check out a group called the American Sportsman's Club, Inc. We've heard bad rumors about this club, but, I now firmly believe the rumors or bad reports you hear are probably from one percent of the membership. For instance, some guy who just had a bad hunt because conditions weren't proper or he didn't hunt the way he was supposed to.

Let me describe the American Sportsman's Club to you and you make your own decision.

The ASC is a private membership club for families who enjoy hunting, fishing and camping. Members enjoy private access to game-filled ranches here in Texas (over 750,000 acres) as well as over a million acres in Colorado, Utah, Nevada, California and Louisiana.

THE CLUB believes that it has the answer for a limited number of dedicated sportsmen and their families. The organization's sole objective is to provide the finest outdoor activities possible for its members. It does so by utilizing private lands secured by long-term leases and by posting, patrolling, and managing each property.

The reasons this organization was formed:

—Cost of hunting in Texas has reached an average of more than $450 to $1,500 per gun for a —Overcrowded and unsafe public properties.

—Renegotiating your lease each year and having to search for another.

—Providing a safe place where your wife and children are welcome.

How this club picks properties:

—Its Accessiblity.

—A survey of each property to determine the quality and quanity of game.

—Knowing it's one of the finest in the area.

How this club maintains its properties.

—Post property and improved game management on each property.

A patrolman lives on ranch during the hunting season, with the responsibilities to coordinate member hunting, assist the members and guard against tresspassers.

—Screened membership to assure good management and safety.

—Biologists survey, stock and determine game harvest on each property.

How do you know as a member about a certain ASC ranch:

—The variety of game offered on the ranch.

—General discription of terrain.

—Accomodations for camping (water, electricity, etc).

—Precise directions to ranch.

—Emergency numbers.

—Map of ranch.

How do you get on a ranch? the Reservations system assures you of a property that is not overcrowded, with 300 to 500 acres per gun for big game. The reservation system is simple and has a central location to accomodate members across the state.

Can you take guests? Unlike many private membership clubs, the ASC welcomes guests.

Exercise should be appropriate to age

Dear Dr. Solomon: I am 68 years old and my doctor says I should get more exercise. It seems to me that at my age it would be better for me to save my energy instead of jumping around like a kid. I always thought that "waste not, want not" was a pretty good slogan. Can I have your advice? — Mr. T.N., Detroit

Dear Mr. T.N.: First of all, exercise does not necessarily mean jumping around like a kid. Exercise should be appropriate to the individual's age and general physical condition. Walking and swimming, for example, are exercises that people of almost any age can participate in.

Second, energy is not like money in a bank. Sometimes the more energy you expend, the more you have. Dr. Robert N. Butler, director of the National Institute of Aging, says the body is not like a machine that wears out as it gets older. Rather, the human body can repair and improve itself the more it is used.

Appropriate exercise can be beneficial at any age. It can increase flexibility, reduce the risk of cardiovascular disease, and improve general physical fitness. You may not be a candidate for football, but there are a number of exercises that would prove both beneficial and enjoyable.

Instead of "waste not, want not," how about giving some thought to "use it or lose it?"

Dear Dr. Solomon: Whenever I watch a ball game on television and someone hurts a knee or an ankle, I see him sitting on the bench holding an icepack to the injury. Is ice good only when someone has been hurt, or can it be used at other times too? — Mike, Wilmington, Del.

Dear Mike: Icepacks have been used in the treatment of arthritic joint pain with some success, but until recently there were few actual studies of the effectiveness of this form of treatment. Now a team of researchers at the Germantown Medical Center in Philadelphia say that the treatment has been shown to work for patients who were not helped by heat or drugs.

Dr. Peter D. Utsinger reports that 24 rheumatoid arthritis patients used an icepack on one knee three times a day for four weeks. At the end of that time, all patients showed some improvement in pain-free movement in the treated knee. In addition, their sleep improved and they were able to decrease the amount of medication they were taking.

One of the obvious benefits of this form of treatment is that it is simple and inexpensive. However, I would caution arthritis patients not to undertake this or any other form of treatment without first discussing the advisability of doing so with their doctors.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Can an allergy develop because a person is under a great deal of stress and tension? — Mike, Chicago

Dear Mike: There is no hard evidence that a person's emotions can cause an allergy to develop. On the other hand, I have seen patients whose asthma was aggravated when they were subjected to stressful situations.

Men get disease from cats

ATLANTA (AP) — Domestic cats are believed to be the source of infection for two cases of tularemia — in Georgia and New Mexico — last year, the national Centers for Disease Control reported today.

Each of the patients recovered following antibiotic treatments, the CDC said.

Tularemia, an infectious disease normally associated with rodents and rabbits, causes sudden and dramatic chills and fever when contracted by humans. It is rarely fatal when treated.

Humans may contract the disease by the bite or scratch of a cat, although cases of human tularemia associated with cats are uncommon, the CDC said in its Morbidity and Mortality Weekly Report.

ABC's innovation paying off

Washington Post
News Service

ABC News has broken new ground in newscasting in recent months, with its expanded late-night news program, "Nightline," its troika anchor desk on "World News Tonight" and its experiment with David Brinkley on Sunday mornings.

It may be that the network initially had acted out of desperation and from a sense that it had nothing to lose, which often is the best way to accomplish anything worthwhile (it was last in the ratings for years, but is now pressing CBS News closely for first place). Whatever the reason, viewers have much for which to be grateful.

Its latest innovation has been on display when "Nightline" gives way from time to time to a program called "Viewpoint," which examines viewers' attitudes towards network news. What is unusual about the program is that it is shown live and often features ordinary citizens asking often uncomfortable questions of anchorman Ted Koppel and other television journalists. Most recently, the program originated in Pittsburgh, the one before that from Dallas.

I can't think of a similar format in the newspaper business which affords readers en masse the opportunity to question editors firsthand about how newspapers work. Which is too bad,

But as far as I know, few if any have ever done what ABC did.

Theater pushes membership drive

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Staff Writer

Midland Community Theater's season opened Friday with the musical "Funny Girl." It is during this production that MCT conducts the majority of its membership drive for the year.

As Ted Strickland, MCT's assistant director, explained, "Our volunteer support and our corporate support allow us to offer to the community, at a ridiculously low price, an entertainment package. It's cheaper than the movies and about the cost of HBO (if you divide what you spend by what you see)."

Memberships rates are $50 for a regular A membership, 18 admissions good any performing night; $40 for a regular B membership, good any performing night Sunday through Thursday; $30 for an individual A membership, nine admissions good any performing night; $20 for an individual B membership, nine admissions good any performing night Sunday through Thursday; $80 for a family membership, 28 admissions good any performing night; and $150 to $1,000 for a contributing membership, 36 to 48 admissions good any performing night.

"A PORTION of the contributing membership is a tax deductible item," Strickland said.

The individual memberships are not as they were in the past, only for singles. They may be purchased by married couples because often only one member of the couple enjoys theater, Strickland said.

"The only way it is possible to offer this is the hundreds of volunteers who give tens of thousands of manhours, and because we have corporate sponsors and private contributors. Of that, the volunteers are probably the greatest single contribution," Strickland said, explaining, "If we had to pay minimum wage for all of the time the volunteers put in, tickets to our shows would be as expensive as they are on Broadway and that's $18 to $30 a ticket."

This year MCT found it necessary to increase the ticket price by 10 percent, Strickland said, adding that the increase is low. "Inflation in our industry — our costs — has gone up by 17 percent."

Today's lowest rate for a show breaks down to $2.22 per ticket, Strickland said.

"MEMBERSHIPS are available through the second main stage production which will be in mid-April," he said.

Productions for the year and opening dates in Theatre I and Theatre II are, "The School for Scandal," March 26th; "Sly Fox," April 16th; "Talley's Folly," May 14th; "Whose Life is it Anyway?," June 11th; "Jesus Christ Superstar," Sept. 10th; the best available, which could be a recent Pulitzer or Tony Award, Oct. 1st; "Deathtrap," if available, Oct. 15th; and "Barefoot in the Park," Nov. 19th.

"Our goal is a 10 percent increase which would take us to 3,500 members which translates into 5,500 total members," he said.

IF YOU MUST RENT YOUR HOME

If you can't sell your home at the price you want because of high mortgage rates, or a bad market, you may have to consider renting out your present home until the economic situation turns around.

There are pro's and con's on the subject of renting. On the plus side, renting your home turns it into a business property. This entitles you to deduct operating expenses, maintenance, and repairs, and to depreciate the property. As a result, a $100,000 house with an estimated life (for tax purpose) of 40 years, yield an annual deduction of $2,500 for depreciation. Also, if you rent the house furnished, the furniture, too, is depreciable.

The main disadvantage is that most homeowners NEED the cash from the sale of their old home to finance the purchase of the new one. Your best bet is to sell and make a clean break with no problems left behind. Your realtor should be able to suggest a creative financing plan to solve your selling problem.

Two MC students win

ODESSA — Two Midland College students were among winners in the Second Annual Student Exhibition, which remains at The University of Texas of the Permian Basin third floor art gallery through Feb. 26.

The juried show features 55 pieces from UTPB, Midland College, Odessa College, Sul Ross State University, Angelo State University and Texas Tech University. More than 50 students competed in the show, which was juried by Joan Hellan, director of the Museum of the Southwest in Midland.

Paula Cox, exhibition committee chairman of the UTPB Art Association, which sponsored the event, said the competition was limited to college art students only. She said the annual show is designed to promote student art work throughout the area.

Winners in the three-dimensional category were Susan Budge of Texas Tech, first place for $150, and Vicki Hardin of San Angelo State University, with second place for $50.

Winners in two-dimensional art were Charles Bell of Sul Ross, first place for $200; D.G. Freeman of Midland College, second place for $150; and Susan Randle of UTPB, third place for $100.

Honorable mention awards of $25 each went to Deborah Hamilton of Midland College, Joyce Ritchey of Odessa College, Jean Thomas of Texas Tech and Brett Chomer of Texas Tech.

The exhibition is free and open to the public. Gallery hours are 9 a.m. through 5 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Ian Charleson, left, as Eric Liddel the Flying Scot and Ben Cross as Harold Abrahams, the man who was never beat running until he met Liddel, portray the two stars of the British 1924 Olympic team in the movie "Chariots of Fire," currently playing Midland Park Mall Cinema. Liddel is a Scottish missionary and Abrahams is a Jew from Cambridge University. Both do an outstanding job in this British film.

'Chariots' heats up screen but not theater

Most movies today don't have the scope, depth or stars with the personal magnetism to play the big screen. Many don't warrant any screen.

Such is not the case with "Chariots of Fire." It has it all.

It's a shame it has to be viewed on a small screen in a cubbyhole theater with sardine-packed seating. I know this is the trend of today and the future. I know it is economically feasible to have small theaters with many screens. I know it, but I don't have to like it.

ESPECIALLY when a movie comes along that is as well done, as powerful, as panoramic, as beautiful with characters that are in the same instance bigger than life and quite real, as "Chariots." To see a movie of this caliber in such an environment is, to me, a travesty.

To make matters worse, when I saw it Friday at 4:45 p.m., the projectionist at Midland Park Mall Cinema couldn't get it right. It seems the theater had similiar difficulties at 2 p.m. The problems Friday seemed to have been worked out by 7:30 p.m., all except for the heating dilemma. To say there was no heat and it was cold is an understatement; there was cold air blowing in the theater and it was miserable.

It is difficult to describe what went wrong during Friday's showing. Perhaps the easiest way to say it is the screen didn't seem big enough to get the entire frame of film on it. Since then I have found out the film was made for a small screen, but could be adjusted to fit a large one. The opposite seemed to be true Friday.

At the movie's inception, the listing of credits at the bottom right hand side of the frame was incomplete. Then during most of the showing, the heads at the top of the screen were continually cut off somewhere between eyebrows and chin. Suddenly at 6:30 p.m., the screen was adjusted. It was immediately evident that it hadn't been right until then.

BUT, AFTER no more than 5 minutes, the screen went blank. The audience was then treated to several lines from a country western song — something about knee-deep in love with you. I thought it was most appropriate because they were certainly knee deep in something.

Throughout the entire film the sound was too low. This movie centers around the lives of two British runners, one a Scot and the other a Jew, who competed in the 1924 Olympics. The photography is excellent and the viewer feels that the movie has captured the England of that time. Of course, in order to do so, the accents must also be accurate. They are. Thus this movie requires concentration. If one can't hear, it's hard to know what's going on.

When asked about the difficulties Friday, Weldon Givens, Midland Park Mall Cinema manager, said, "We have our problems like anybody else. I try to put on the best show out here. Sometimes things don't go right."

GIVENS said he had his hands full Friday and Saturday trying to get someone out to work on the heating. The people who service his cinema are backed up with work, too. He said he hopes to have it repaired as soon as possible.

"Something was wrong with the sound system," Givens said, adding that it has been repaired.

He wondered why no one came out and told him something was wrong with the screen, explaining that the projectionist has four screens to watch and not just one.

This movie is so spellbinding, that no matter how angry I got trying to see it knowing it surely couldn't be adjusted properly on the screen, I didn't want to miss a minute of it. The idea of leaving was out of the question. This movie has to be viewed from the very beginning to the end. It moves fast, covers a lot of territory and if you leave, even to get a drink, you have missed something.

IT IS THE job of the theater to ensure that its patrons are comfortable, not the patron's job. For instance, why weren't ticket purchasers told in advance by the ticket taker that there was no heat?

For a movie to be so obviously outstanding when it isn't on the screen right, it can't be heard, it's freezing in the theater, and there are kids crying in the audience that parents won't take outside, it must be truly excellent. In fact, I have not seen many shows that I would have sat through under those conditions. It was, in spite of all these obstacles, an uplifting experience.

It left those of us who went knowing we would go back to see it again. As one audience member said, "I have seen few shows that I would see twice. This one I will."

Dr. Lara Hoggard conducts the first Midland Adult Choir Festival Friday night at First Baptist Church. In spite of the inclement weather, close to 200 singers and musicians performed for a half-full house. Hoggard, previously conductor of the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale and currently director of orchestra and professor of choral music at Columbus College, also conducted the week-long festival which led up to Friday night's performance.

Choir concert brings back old memories

Midland's first Adult Choir Festival was a treat for those choir lovers who made it. Unfortunately bad road conditions Thursday night and Friday kept many at home Friday night.

The almost 200-voice choir was conducted by Dr. Lara Hoggard, former director of the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale. As he said at the concert's close Friday night, this performance at First Baptist Church really brought back memories for him. It was there, in the early 1960s, when he was conducting a similiar choir that he was asked by several ladies, "Can you conduct an orchestra?" His response was, "Yes."

He thought no more of the episode until he was called and asked to come and talk with the symphony board members. He agreed to take on the job only if the two towns, Midland and Odessa, would combine. It was agreed and the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale was born.

CURRENTLY Hoggard is director of orchestra and professor of choral music at Columbus College in Columbus, Ga.

Friday night's selections ranged from "Ain't That Good News," by William L. Dawson to Beethoven's Hallelujah, from "Mount of Olives."

Perhaps the most impressive number was the finale, "Personent Hodie," in which the choirs and musicians, especially the trumpeters, outdid themselves.

Jane Huddleston did a fine job singing Gabriel in "The Heavens are Telling" from "Creation," by Haydn. The other soloists, Ted Markle and Don McCartney, were good, but not as impressive as Ms. Huddleston.

However, it was during this number that the choir's timing seemed to get a little off, causing part of the selection to sound slightly garbled. And in the selection "Father, Lift Me Up," by Don-Cason Honeytree, the choir almost lost the high notes, but quickly recaptured the sound.

IN "HOW Lovely is Thy Dwelling Place" from "Requiem" by Brahms as in the Beethoven, the combined choir sound was not quite in tune part of the time. These two selections came very close to the end of the hour-long concert, which had been preceded by a rehearsal, and it is quite likely the participants' voices were tired.

The concert was sponsored by the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale, the American Guild of Organists and the choirs from Midland and Odessa churches. It followed a week-long music festival. Tom Roberts, minister of music at First Presbyterian Church, was the festival chairman.

Mickey Rooney: Small statue fails to hide superb talent

By DON FREEMAN
Copley News Service

HOLLYWOOD — Not long ago, in the wake of a press conference with Mickey Rooney and the assembled flower of American journalism, I tracked down the star of "Sugar Babies" and mentioned a comment once issued by Laurence Olivier.

"On some talk show," I said to Rooney, "Olivier said that you are a better actor than he is."

Rooney grinned. "No way," he said. "NO way."

Then he weighed this most extraordinary of compliments from the man considered by his peers to be the heavyweight champion of all the actors, with few contenders.

"No, no," Rooney said. "There's nobody like Olivier. I don't come close. But I'm grateful for the kind words."

And off he went, in his half-walk, half-gallop, wearing a grin whose candlepower could surely have brought light to a medium-size city for a week.

I thought of this the other night when "The Comedian" was reprised on PBS on "The Golden Age of Television" series of retrospectives. A "Playhouse 90" drama by Rod Serling, "The Comedian" starred Mickey Rooney as a megalomaniacal performer, Mel Torme as his toadying, weakling kid brother, and such people as Edmond O'Brien and Kim Hunter.

The cast was superb — Mel Torme was the big surprise in his portrayal — but it was Rooney who stunned the populace with a dazzling performance, at once explosive and subtle. Such a performance on the Broadway stage would have brought huzzahs from the high-dome critics and the acclaim of the multitudes. But this was only television and, moreover, the drama first came along on Feb. 14, 1957, which is just about 25 years ago.

And, just possibly, the Rooney watchers were unprepared for such a blockbuster of acting fireworks. Why is that? Well, if his name were Michael — Michael instead of Mickey — perhaps then his superior talents would have been recognized earlier.

Tenant awareness important concerning evictions

By LINDA TRUITT
Better Business Bureau
of the Permian Basin, Inc.

"I lost my job and couldn't pay the rent this month. When I came home today I found the locks had been changed. I haven't been able to find the landlord so, tell me, what can I do?"

Evicting tenants due to failure to pay rent or follow apartment complex rules seems to be on the increase in the Permian Basin. Landlords know that another tenant can easily be found. A tenant may keep from being evicted if he knows his rights.

A landlord may not use force or threaten to use force to remove a tenant. Furthermore, unless you have abandoned the housing, the landlord cannot remove your property. If he does, you have the right to move out without being liable for breaching the rental agreement and/or sue for actual damages, plus one month's rent, plus reasonable attorney fees, minus any delinquent rentals or other sums owed to the landlord.

The landlord may change the locks on the door if you are behind in the rent, but he must leave a written notice explaining where the new key can be obtained at all hours.

Under Texas law, only a justice of the peace can lawfully evict a tenant by physical force. According to Midland's Justice of the Peace, Charles Sprayberry, the first step a landlord must take to evict a tenant is to deliver a notorized letter to the tenant stating he has three (or more) days to move or be sued. The notice must be delivered to a tenant 18 years or older and the delivery must be witnessed by a third party.

If the tenant does not leave, the landlord must file a formal complaint (called a forcible entry and detainer) with the justice of the peace. The justice will prepare a citation stating the date, time and place the tenant must appear in court (no sooner than 5 days, yet no longer than 10 days). The papers will be delivered by the constable.

If the landlord files a possession bond, a notice that the bond has been filed must be served along with the complaint and the citation. This notice will warn the tenant that he has six days to leave unless, within that time, he posts a counterbond or demands and wins a trial (which must be held within 6 days).

Each party has the right to request a trial by jury and be represented by an attorney. They also have the right to have the justice of the peace, who presides at such trials, subpoena witnesses to testify.

If the tenant still chooses not to leave after losing the trial and the landlord has not filed a possession bond, then the justice can issue a writ or restitution, which instructs the constable to order the tenant to leave. If necessary, the constable can legally throw the tenant off the premises. If the landlord wants the tenant's property to be removed, he must pay to have the belongings packed and furnish a place to store them. He must also pay for a bond in case the belongings are lost or damaged.

Sprayberry states that each case is judged on its own merits. Past performance of both parties is a deciding factor in who will win the suit.

He also suggests that sitting down and talking about their differences may solve many problems between landlords and tenants without having to go to court.

TAX TIPS

Capital gains tax methods change in '82

This is the seventh in a series of tax tip articles sponsored as a public service by the Texas Society of Certified Public Accountants.

Q. I sold some stock at a capital gain in March of 1981. I sold some more at a gain in September of 1981. Does President Reagan's tax bill provide for any difference in the taxability of these gains?

A. President Reagan's tax bill provides for lower income taxes on capital gains after 1981 and certain gains are recognized in 1981. The top tax bracket of gains occurring on or before June 9, 1981 is 28 percent. For gains occurring after June 9, 1981, the maximum tax rate is 20 percent. These new rules do not cover gains received in 1981 from installment sales transactions entered into prior to June 10, 1981. However, proceeds received from those transactions in years after 1981 will qualify for the new lower rate.

For more information on this and other income tax questions, attend the "You and Your Income Tax" class sponsored by the Permian Basin Chapter of the Texas Society of Certified Public Accountants. The class, scheduled for Thursday from 6:30 to 10 p.m., is presented as a public service.

Classes will be held at Midland College in the Allison Fine Arts Building. A $2 per person fee will be charged. To register, mail $2, your name and address to Taxpayer Education, P.O. Box 151, Midland, Texas 79702 by Monday. Pre-registration is encouraged, but walk-ins will be accepted.

Crash rescue attempts lead to questions

By JOHN HARRIS
Hearst Feature Service

WASHINGTON — Military and civilian authorities have established a system of cooperation in emergency situations in many parts of the U.S., but not in the nation's capital, where an airliner crashed on Jan. 13 in a blinding snow storm a few blocks from the White House.

Three weeks after the crash, in fact, a picture is emerging of the swift but uncoordinated response to the event by helicopters belonging to the U.S. Park Police, the District of Columbia Metropolitan Police, a nearby army helicopter unit and an offer of helicopter assistance by the White House.

No integrated emergency plan involving various federal and local agencies apparently exists in the nation's capital, although such plans exist in many locations in the U.S. where the military-civilian system operates.

THE SYSTEM is "MAST," for "Military Assistance to Safety and Traffic." Begun in 1970 in San Antonio, MAST is in effect at 29 sites throughout the country and is a joint operation of the departments of Defense, Health and Human Services and Transportation.

One military spokesman said no MAST unit has existed in Washington, D.C., "since the army's 247th Medical Detachment moved to Fort Irwin, Calif., in October 1980." Another spokesman said no MAST operation has ever existed in Washington, D.C.

A typical MAST operation is that of the army's 571st Medical Detachment, based at Fort Carson, Colo. The unit fields six helicopters on "two or three-minute standby" during daylight and about 30-minute standby after dark.

"We are represented on a committee staffed by members of the local police force, the fire department and the area's hospitals," a spokesman for the unit said. "We're a military outfit and, technically, civilian agencies have to ask us to come in. But we're here on an on-call basis."

Last December, one helicopter of the unit rescued three survivors of a small plane that had crashed in a remote mountain area. In other actions, the unit's helicopters have landed on highways, sometimes during heavy storms, to evacuate persons injured in traffic accidents.

Each helicopter is equipped to carry four ambulatory patients and three in litters, a spokesman said. The helicopters' crews are trained in a wide range of first-aid and rescue techniques, he added.

THE QUESTION of military-civilian cooperation and other aspects of emergency rescue work have come under congressional scrutiny in the wake of the Jan. 13 crash, in which an Air Florida 737 airliner struck a bridge over the Potomac River and plunged into ice-covered water, killing more than 70 people.

The crash site is seconds in flight time from the White House, and even closer to the Pentagon.

Hearings on the crash being conducted by a House subcommittee on District of Columbia affairs reveal a major concern about the capital's ability to cope with an emergency situation, conceivably involving leading political, military and administrative personalities.

Critics particularly have noted that neither the U.S. Park Police helicopter that rescued five survivors of the crash nor the local D.C. police helicopter that was dispatched to the crash scene — and turned back — was equipped to land on water or rescue large numbers of survivors.

"Our helicopter is primarily an observation platform," a D.C. police spokesman said in explaining why the police helicopter was rejected by National Airport authorities. "We probably would have gone in the water ourselves if we had tried to do anything with it."

Despite its technical deficiencies, the Park Police helicopter was on the scene of the crash in remarkably brief time, records show.

National Airport reported a loss of contact with the airliner at 4:09 p.m. The Park Police — who have jurisdiction over federally-owned land adjacent to the airport — were notified at 4:12 p.m. The Park Police helicopter was above the crash site at 4:20 p.m.

Also notified of the crash was a helicopter unit at Davison Army Aviation Field at Fort Belvoir, a U.S. Army Engineers' station a few minutes away. A spokesman said the notification was received at 4:05 p.m. and that a Fort Davison helicopter was "on the scene" at 4:20. Four other Fort Davison helicopters went to National Airport, where they remained on stand-by alert.

THE HELICOPTER that reached the scene landed in the area, a spokesman said, and took one of the crash survivors to a Washington hospital. The unit sent, in addition, "doctors, medical personnel, military police and a firetruck," the spokesman said.

A source at the Park Police, who asked that his name not be used, disputed the timeliness claimed by the Fort Belvoir spokesman.

"The bottom line," he said, "is that the Fort Belvoir people didn't get to the scene until it was all over."

Also reportedly made available to rescue workers was the White House force of eight Marine Corps helicopters, based at the marines' officers' academy at Quantico, Va., also a few minutes from the scene by air. A White House spokesman said the helicopters, each seating eight persons, "were offered at the president's direction."

None of the presidential helicopters, like the army helicopters, was used in the rescue operation, which was carried out solely by the Park Police helicopter. A number of reasons were offered for this.

"Given the foggy weather and the small area in which we had to operate, I don't think more than one helicopter could have gotten in there," said a D.C. police spokesman, who noted that only 80 yards separated the bridge struck by the airliner and another bridge over the Potomac.

"Our small chopper was maybe the right size for the job," a Park Police source conceded. "Bigger choppers might have created too much downward prop wash and, in fact, might have actually pushed those people in the water down below the ice."

"In this particular case, there just wouldn't have been any room for another helicopter," an army helicopter pilot said. "Everything we say now is Monday morning quarterbacking."

Unwanted chimps given desert home

The Los Angeles Times-Washington
Post News Service

MESA, Ariz. (AP) — One played a drum in a circus. Another was with Holiday on Ice. And yet another was the star of a nightclub act.

Now they, and others like them, have retired to a patch of leased land on the Salt River Indian Reservation north of Mesa.

Africa is where their real roots are. But if they could speak, they all might say they are quite content to live in the desert with Paul and Jo Fritz.

Without the Fritzes, this group of squealing, barking, grunting chimpanzees would probably be dead.

With his stern countenance and dark, deep-set eyes, Paul Fritz doesn't look like a softie. But Pedro, Simba, Rodney and the others know that behind the thick German accent and silver-flecked beard is one of the best things ever to happen to a group of Pan troglodytes.

"They are very intelligent animals, the closest thing to humans," Fritz said. "To see their lives snuffed out ..."

SO, A LITTLE more than 10 years ago, when he was an animal trainer at the Phoenix Zoo, Fritz felt he had no choice but to adopt three chimps who had outgrown an acquaintance's circus act.

At first he kept them in his apartment building. That didn't work, so the chimp-saving operation moved to a Tempe chicken farm, where he and his wife looked after some 20,000 cluckers in exchange for room to house a growing contingent of chimpanzees.

As Mrs. Fritz explained, the chimp sanctuary was something many had been seeking. Across America, people wanted to unload chimps that hadn't turned out to be such great pets or had grown too strong or unruly for their show-biz careers.

The Fritzes provided a life raft in the Arizona desert for research animals whose only other alternative was to be destroyed.

The Primate Foundation of Arizona was incorported in 1970. The Fritzes moved to their present location two years later.

An abandoned hydroelectric plant was turned into a cellblock and three mobile homes were acquired for human office and living space. It's modest, but the Fritzes have to survive on contributions from foundation members and income from lending chimpanzees to a New York laboratory for hepatitis research.

There are nearly 40 chimpanzees in the colony.

Restrictions have been placed on the importation of chimps, and some states — including Arizona — have made it illegal to have one as a pet. But the Fritzes say there still are quite a few that someday will wear out their welcomes with their present owners.

One problem, the couple observed, is that too many people have seen chimpanzees as cute and cuddly. Most Americans are accustomed to seeing only baby chimpanzees — the performing animals are almost always very young.

BUT THE ANIMALS can live about 50 years in captivity, and many people change their minds about them as they mature. An adult male chimp can grow to a standing height of 5 feet and weigh nearly 150 pounds.

The Fritzes have a long-standing agreement with three Tempe grocery stores that allows them to take surplus produce at no cost. As a result, the chimps eat quite well.

H & R BLOCK SAYS MANY WILL OVERPAY

H&R Block, the income tax people, would like you to read a quote worth quoting. Recently a former IRS official said, "Many taxpayers will leave money on the table, will actually overpay their tax liability."

Taxpayers overpay their taxes because of a lack of tax knowledge and the fear of an audit. People file the form they receive without checking to make sure that they have taken all of their deductions and credits. H & R Block believes every client should have a complete personal interview and the return done while the client is with the tax preparer. Block knows taxes. Not only are they the world's largest tax firm, they also conduct the world's largest tax school.

Most Taxpayers feel their return is done correctly and to their advantage if they are not audited, and they receive the refund shown on their tax return. This is not always true. The IRS does not check every return to see if the taxpayer took all legitimate deductions, or if the taxpayer's financial circumstances have changed from year to year. H & R Block, using a thorough interview, makes the tax laws work for the client. Every return is then double checked for correctness in both math and theory.

H & R Block will make the laws work for you at any of their 3 Midland offices and outlying towns, including Odessa, Andrews, Big Spring, Crane, Ft. Stockton, Iraan, Kermit, McCamey, Monahans, Pecos, Rankin & Seminole.

Midland's offices are located at 114 Andrews Hwy., Tele. 684-6741; Dellwood Plaza Annex, Tele. 697-3681; Sears Midland Park Mall, Tele. 694-2581.

HONOR ROLL REPORT

THE CITY OF MIDLAND IS NOW 97 YEARS OLD. A few years prior to 1880, Lum Medlin, a hunter who was traveling alone, made to what was later to become Midland his home. Local history tells us that Lum was one of the first white men to settle in the area. Early in 1880, R.N. Garrett, arrived here with a flock of sheep destined for market. Like so many of those settlers who followed, Garrett took an immediate liking to the surroundings and made it his home. Soon, thereafter, his California family joined him.

In those early days the railroad people dropped off a box car to serve the growing community as a depot, post office and general store. On February 2, 1885 Midland County was established, 26 days later the City of Midland was founded.

The old, middle-aged and young enterprises of Midland have contributed immeasurably to the progress, pride and prosperity of our city. You will be interested in reading this list of leading firms and organizations whose names have been arranged by the number of years they have served Midlanders and other West Texas residents.

WILD RIVER CANYON IS FOR SALE

Bids are being sought for over 14 acres of C-3 zoned land, appraised at over $2,000,000, located near the southeast corner of Andrews Highway and Loop 250, and which contains Wild River Canyon theme park. Approximately 10 buildings are included in the sale, along with numerous water structures. Personal property and equipment are not included unless bids specifically state.

The property is ideal for continued use as a theme park, or for conversion to apartments, condominiums, townhouses or office and commercial use.

For two years, Wild River Canyon has employed over 300 persons in its construction, over 400 young men and women in its operation and entertained over 100,000 visitors from all over the world. The park has enjoyed the support of numerous civic organizations, church groups and private companies, as well as of the Midland City Government and the Chamber of Commerce. It has also received local and statewide media acclaim.

Inquiries are invited from civic groups, church groups and other organizations interested in its continued use as a theme park.

Plans are available for conversion of the park land and adjacent 30 acres, also zoned C-3, into an office complex. In addition the numerous landscaping improvements, waterways, and existing buildings make the site ideal for an architecturally pleasing apartment, condominium or townhouse development.

Separate bids are being solicited for personal property and equipment, including pumps, furniture, kitchen equipment, arcade equipment, architectural specialties and ride equipment. Minimum bid on any grouping of these items is $5000. Items will not be sold on a piecemeal basis.

Bids and inquiries from serious parties may be directed to:

Mrs. Roger Allen is all set to attend "The Paragon Gala" Thursday at the new Paragon Building. The black-tie affair will benefit the American Cancer Society and Hospice of Midland. The sable coat Mrs. Allen is wearing and the Rolls Royce behind her are two of the exclusive items to be auctioned at the event.

Gala to benefit Cancer Society, Hospice

Midland's new and elegant Paragon building will be the site for Thursday's "Paragon Gala," a black-tie affair to raise funds for the American Cancer Society and Hospice of Midland. The event will also serve as the official opening of the building.

"With the opening of the Allison Cancer Center in Midland, the American Cancer Society and Hospice of Midland have been extremely busy and need support and money from our community," said Judy Martin, publicity chairman for the event. "Many patients from local and outside areas have benefited greatly from the help of these two agencies."

Hospice of Midland is a non-profit, licensed home health care agency which provides nursing and counseling for terminally ill patients and their families in the home. The agency provides its services without charge, depending on gifts and grants to cover expenses.

Dinner for the evening will be catered by Don Strange of San Antonio and music will be provided by "First Crossing." Highlight of the evening will be the auction of ten exclusive items, listed here:

— A one-day football clinic (flag or tackle) for a boy and his friends led by Earl Campbell of the Houston Oilers. Campbell is also scheduled to appear at the "Paragon Gala."

— A three-day weekend trip for six persons to Colorado's Taylor River. Guests will be flown to Colorado by private jet. Accommodations also include a chef and and a special fishing instructor.

— A full-length sable coat.

— Private jet transportation for six to the Indy 500 Race on May 30, with tickets and pre-race pit passes included.

— An American 228-213-86 pumping unit with 15,300 No. effective counterbalance.

— Roscoe Tarner as a partner in a member-guest tennis tournament or as an instructor for three days.

— New Rolls Royce Silver Spirit.

— Private jet transportation for six persons to Washington, D.C. for two days. Trip includes a tour of the newly redecorated Vice Presidential House conducted by Barbara Bush.

— An original watercolor by one of America's best-known and most popular artists, Andrew Wyeth. Painting will be accompanied by a copy of "Wyeth at Kuerners," a book compiled and written by Betsy James Wyeth about her husband's works.

— Helicopter cook-out for six to Big Bend National Park or any location of the recipient's choice in the Permian Basin. Catered meal by recipient's choice of any Midland caterer.

Co-chairman for the affair are Mrs. Joe Gifford and Mrs. Bob Koziol. Other committee chairmen are Paul Rea and Mrs. Roger Allen, auction chairmen; Pomeroy Smith and Mrs. William Jowell, sponsor chairmen; Mrs. Roy Kimsey, decorations; Mrs. John Woodside, treasurer; Mrs. Ted Collins, food and beverage; Mrs. John Holman and Mrs. Mac Williams, ex officio; Mrs. William Sumner and Mrs. Glenn Rogers, invitations, and Mrs. C. D. Martin, publicity.

A city's true flavor can be found in its streets and alleys

By DOYLE MCMANUS (c) 1982, Los Angeles Times

NEW YORK — A city unveils itself in its streets.

The true flavor of Paris is its boulevards; of Hong Kong, its alleyways; of Los Angeles, its freeways. In Manhattan, it is the sidewalks. Streaming, jostling, full of lively disorder, they throw together beggars and sneak thieves, black-market peddlers and office clerks, some of the world's poorest and some of the world's richest.

Here are specialists in every kind of petty crime, from snatching gold chains off women's necks to luring the unstreetwise into betting on rigged card tricks.

Here is a strange army of homeless men and women, an estimated 36,000 derelicts and psychiatric patients who live in cardboard boxes or warehouse doorways, as much a part of the urban landscape as mailboxes or bus stops.

Here is a permanent floating bazaar with hawkers offering everything from synthetic sweaters ("Ten dollars, check it out!") to meat of uncertain origin ("Cheapest steaks in the world!") to marijuana of equally shaky quality ("Loose joints, one dollar!").

Yet here, too, are fleets of shining limousines, and discreet shops offering ladies' dresses at $800 and up, and the best indication of confident wealth: a minor boom in construction, with dozens of new office and apartment buildings rising pell-mell above the potholes. Behind graffiti-streaked walls, there is astounding private money, displayed elegantly in apartments that rent for as much as $7,500 a month — $90,000 a year.

To a foreigner — to anyone from outside New York — the juxtapositions can be jarring. They seem to ring of Rome in its decline, or the London of Charles Dickens; of modern Hong Kong, or Rio de Janeiro, or Beirut before the civil war. In fact, all of those places.

"One does sometimes feel as if one's in the Third World here," Robert Nicholson, a British executive who uses Manhattan as a base for business trips through Latin America, said. "On some streets, you'll see kids without shoes asking for money with their hands out. And then you'll see a young lady in diamonds being picked up by a limousine — all in the same vista."

It is a host of little things that make the world's richest city seem momentarily like Cairo or Calcutta: things like the bus driver's happy disregard of red lights, the shopkeeper's practice of forgetting the sales tax when a customer pays cash, and the eagerness of the young men at Pennsylvania Station who offer to carry a tourist's suitcase for a quarter — and then disappear with the bag.

At some intersections, a motorist who stops for a red light immediately finds his car surrounded by young men with dirty rags. "Wash your windshield," they command. Some make the suggestion with one hand tugging menacingly at a wiper blade. Almost every driver hands out 50 cents, whether his windshield is dirty or not; the gangs are said to have robbed some motorists who put up a fight.

On 59th Street, in front of the chic Bloomingdale's department store, a panhandler no more than 14 years old tries another approach: He walks up to a woman, puts his hand on her shopping bag and mutters, "Give me money or I rip your bag." Standing in front of a window display of French delicacies (a take-out order of coquilles St. Jacques for $24 a pound, imported chocolates for $21 a pound — food boutiques are the rage this year), the woman pays. "What's a quarter?" she explains at a bus stop nearby.

The remains of a dozen newspapers flutter by. The City of New York, still elbowing its way out of the fiscal crisis of the mid-1970s, cannot keep up with its own garbage. Mayor Edward I. Koch has proudly pointed out that the streets are getting cleaner, and they are: the Sanitation Department says 23 percent of Manhattan's blocks are "acceptably clean," up from less than 18 percent a few years ago. (The record in the city's other boroughs is better: citywide, 68 percent of all streets are "acceptable.")

Other public functions are deteriorating as well. The city's bridges are beginning to fall apart; last summer, a heavy cable on the graceful Brooklyn Bridge snapped, plunged to the walkway and killed a 32-year-old Japanese photographer. The giant tunnels that bring fresh water from distant reservoirs are leaking millions of gallons, but they cannot be taken out of service long enough for repairs. Sewer tunnels, some of them made of brick and more than 110 years old, are crumbling. Sections of the two highways that carry traffic around the island have simply collapsed. Several studies have suggested that the city needs to double its spending on repairs simply to keep up with natural decay.

The 709-mile subway system, long dogged by the problem of crime, now also faces a crisis of disrepair. A city audit last year reported that subway cars are breaking down twice as often as in 1975. When the Transit Authority's directors were taken on a tour of subway installations last year, one of them — an executive of Consolidated Edison, the public utility — said that he had seen electrical equipment that old only once before, in a museum.

Yet amid the public penury is ample private wealth. A dozen new office buildings are being built in already-crowded midtown and commanding record rents of up to $60 per square foot per year.

A new apartment building offering one-bedrocm flats for $1,920 a month, two bedrooms for $2,600 and three bedrooms for $4,400 proudly advertised itself as featuring "the most expensive apartments in the world" — but quietly dropped the claim after other candidates turned up, including the four-bedroom place that went on the market for $7,500 a month (utilities not included).

Less exalted quarters can be had, of course; a modest one-bedroom apartment on the "transitional" West Side rents for no more than $900 a month. There is no shortage of would-be renters: The vacancy rate of Manhattan apartments regularly dips below 1 percent.

Lesser amenities command equally lofty prices — but New Yorkers seem to have the money to pay. Garage space in Manhattan apartment buildings now costs tenants as much as $165 a month on top of their rent — and can be hard to find.

Broadway theaters are enjoying a banner season, even at $30 a ticket. And it is often difficult to get a reservation at the Four Seasons restaurant, where dinner can easily set a couple back $140.

Much of the new money is foreign, brought into Manhattan by wealthy exiles from the Middle East, Latin America and even France, real estate agents say. New York, for all its problems, is still a refuge of stability for many foreigners who have poured "flight money" into buying luxury apartments and driven prices upward.

One result, city officials say, is a shrinking pool of middle-class housing. Unless conditions change, former Chase Manhattan Bank chairman David Rockefeller warned, "only the very rich and the very poor will be able to live here."

For the most part, the rich and the poor do not actually live next to each other: There is a visible frontier across the island at 96th Street. Below 96th are the wealthy; above 96th the poor, the black and the Spanish-speaking.

The transition can be abrupt: At Park Avenue, the south side of 96th Street has a handsome apartment building with a smartly uniformed doorman; the north side has a grimy Puerto Rican grocery shop. "It may look as if they're close together," urban historian Richard Wade said, "but you might as well have 10 miles in between."

Workshop for women to be on enriched living

A workshop for women designed to help them live a life rich with meaning and purpose will begin Feb. 12 at Kelview Heights Baptist Curch, 407 W. Alta.

Biblically oriented, the Enriched Living Workshop is led by Verna Birkey of Seattle, Wash., a former teacher, counselor, and for seven years Dean of Girls at Ben Lippen School in Asheville, North Carolina. She has led over 350 similar series all over the United States, Canada and foreign countries.

The workshop grew out of a strong conviction by Mrs. Birkey that God can fulfill the women's needs, that wives will be happy as they know and live according to God's specific design, and that mothers can understand and meet the real needs of their children.

She says that the workshops seeks to carefully define practical steps women can take to create harmony in the home, accept others, develop a sense of self-worth, help others develop a sense of self-worth, keep the lines of communication open and to rest in God's goodness and love.

She adds that the sessions are vividly presented by a full-color, continuous motion film of her teaching, accompanied by graphically illustrated colorful visuals.

The workshop, presented by Christian ladies groups from various denominations, is open to all women—single, married, widows, older younger, homemakers, professional women, students. This nine-hour event will be Feb. 12 and Feb. 13.

For further information on registration and fee, call Pat Ochsner at 694-5708 or Sharon Sporer at 697-1736.

DEAR ABBY

Ladies' lingerie clothes man in life of crime

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: When I read the letter from "Light-Fingered in Iowa," the teen-aged shoplifter, I had to write because I have the same problem for a different reason.

I steal ladies' lingerie from stores, not because I can't afford to buy it, but because I am a male. If I were to buy ladies' lingerie, the saleslady would know that I am a transvestite, and that would be embarrassing.

I get most of my things by mail order to satisfy my compulsive cross-dressing habit, but when I see a pair of lacy nylon panties, a pretty garter belt or slip I really want to have, I find them much easier to steal than buy.

I have nightmares of being caught, which would be doubly worse for me because of what I steal. I've tried to fight these compulsions with everything that's in me and would gladly go to see a shrink, but I'm too embarrassed for that, too.

From appearances I am male in every way. I am definitely not gay, nor do I want a sex-change operation. I just love wearing feminine clothing in the privacy of my home. (I've done this for more than 20 years.)

I'm sure there are other men who steal ladies' undies from stores, friends and clotheslines, so perhaps a good piece of advice from you would help us all. — LIGHT-FINGERED TRANSVESTITE

DEAR LIGHT: Stealing for any reason is a crime. But wearing whatever brings you pleasure in the privacy of your home is not. So if you see something you want, buy it with confidence and without embarrassment. And don't worry about what the saleslady might think. She's there to make a sale, not a judgment.

DEAR ABBY: My husband was reassigned to the night shift some months ago. I work days. When he comes home at 2 a.m., he's wide-awake and ready for romance. I am already three hours into a deep sleep.

He can't understand why I don't wake up ready, willing and able. Our weekend love life is fine, but the weeknights are killing me!

So how can I keep him happy and get enough rest at the same time? No jokes. This is serious. — TOO TIRED FOR LOVE

DEAR TOO TIRED: The only viable solution is to synchronize your work schedules so you will both be ready, willing and able at the same time.

DEAR ABBY: My daughter is about to become engaged to a young man from a socially prominent family. We have never met his parents. His mother told my daughter that she is waiting for me to issue an invitation to her and her family for dinner or "something" so we can meet! Apparently she is under the impression that the parents of the bride should invite the parents of the groom over first.

I am amazed that a woman who travels in such a ritzy social circle doesn't realize that the parents of the groom are supposed to invite the parents of the bride first.

I don't want to start off on the wrong foot with my daughter's in-laws, so what do you think I should do? — WALKING ON EGGS

DEAR WALKING: Go ahead and issue the first invitation and never mind what is socially correct.

(Do you hate to write letters because you don't know what to say? Older people and medications

By SANDY ROVNER
The Los Angeles Times
The Washington Post
News Sevice

WASHINGTON — A woman in her 70s goes to her doctor.

"My right knee hurts me something awful," she tells him.

"Now, now," the doctor soothes. "I guess you just have to expect that at your age."

"Is that so," snaps the woman. "If that's the case, what happened to my left knee? It's just as old . ... "

Peter Lamy loves that story. "No patient," says the University of Maryland pharmacy professor, "should ever be satisfied when a physician says 'That's old age,' no matter the symptom."

Lamy, a Ph.D., department chairman at the university's School of Pharmacy and director of Institutional Pharmacy Programs, is a specialist in the effect of drugs on an aging population. Too much, he believes, can go wrong and too little attention is being paid by the medical community.

People over 65 currently account for about 11 percent of the population of the United States. They use, according to the American Geriatrics Society, about one-third of its medications.

A lot of older people take more than one kind of medicine every day. Plus they often take a lot of things that they don't even think of as medication — antacids, cold and cough medicines, analgesics, vitamins, for example.

And there are too often occasions where those latter over-the-counter medications can interact with certain prescription drugs or the prescription drugs can interact with each other or with something the patient is eating, all or any of which can produce symptoms that some doctors may dismiss as being part and parcel of "old age."

As more and more of us are getting older and older, this state of affairs becomes less and less satisfactory.

People, notes Lamy, change in many ways as they get older, and their reactions to medicines change as well. He suggests that at least some of the so-called symptoms of aging may well be drug-induced vitamin deficiencies.

Many drugs can induce mental confusion in older patients, or, after years of apparently satisfactory use, a drug-induced vitamin deficiency may produce symptoms, "like apathy, lethargy, restlessness, dizziness ... we expect old people to be dizzy, to be somewhat confused. We don't know yet how many of them are affected (in this way) but the potential for underdiagnosis or misdiagnosis is there," Lamy says, "when, indeed, it may be a vitamin deficiency induced by chronic drug use."

Something that drives Lamy right up the wall is to hear someone (often a physician) refer to "drug abuse among the elderly."

"The elderly," he maintains, "do not abuse drugs. It's either the pharmacist who dispenses it or the physician who prescribes it. I never hear older people say 'Give me a pill.' I only hear, 'Why do I have to take so many pills?' We put the elderly into a shady category, with all the other abusers. ... "

Here are some suggestions Lamy and his staff have provided for older patients and their families:

— Always tell a physician prescribing a new medicine everything else you are taking, down to your Tums.

— Try to fill all your prescriptions at the same pharmacy. Many pharmacists now keep computerized records of what drugs theiro customers are taking. They are the first line of defense against a dangerous interaction.

— Be sure that someone close to you knows exactly what medications you are taking. Your family or friends should have the name of someone to call if your behavior or condition changes. Toxic reactions can be arrested, even reversed, if recognized in time.

— Take the medicine exactly the way the physician instructs. If you do not understand, ask your pharmacist to go over it with you. If this interferes with your lifestyle or the medicine makes you feel sick, tell your doctor at once.

Lamy also worries about the thoughtlessness of the prescribing physician. He says, "I once asked a group of physicians about a new prescription analgesic that had just come on the market. About 75 percent said they had already prescribed it. I asked them if any of them knew how much it cost. They said, 'What do we need to know that for?"

What can happen, says Lamy, is that the older patient, unwilling to "bother" the doctor, will simply not take a medicine that costs too much. "One woman stopped taking her hypertension medicine. When she went back for a checkup and her blood pressure was still up, her physician doubled the dose. That would have been an overdose for her. But fortunately she didn't take that either."

Lamy also urges physicians to use common sense. Once at a lecture a man came up to him worried about his father.

"The old man, a Russian immigrant, loved his borscht and pickled herring. When he was 93, a doctor told him he'd have to give them up. Too much salt. 'That's a risk factor,' the doctor said. The old man stopped eating the soup and the herring, but he didn't like much of anything else and, the worried son said, wasn't eating at all.

"A risk factor," repeats an incredulous Lamy. "At 93?"

"'But what should we do?'" Lamy quotes the son as asking. Lamy's answer? "Get a new doctor.'"

Peter Lamy and his staff have prepared brochures on medicine and the elderly, how to pick a pharmacist and other useful subjects.

USDA using dogs to sniff out pests

By DONNA LEE
Hearst Feature Service

BOSTON — A friendly pooch wagging his tail as you come through customs may be tipping off agents that there's a sausage up your sleeve.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture is using dogs in some baggage-handling areas to sniff out food that might be carrying medflies or other pests.

The dogs now in action sniff luggage or mail in areas away from passengers. They get excited or start to attack a bag or package if it contains fruit, vegetables or meat. The program is being tested in Los Angeles, New York and New Jersey.

These chow-hounds are not the same as the German Shepherds used to sniff out drugs at border crossings and airports. "Dogs can't be trained to sniff both food and drugs," said Susan Hess of the Animal and Plant Health Department of the USDA. "They do one or the other. We've had all kinds of dogs doing this. No one breed is better than any other for sniffing out the food."

Other dogs are being trained to sniff carry-on luggage as passengers come off the plane. They'll be less aggressive than the behind-the-scenes sniffers.

"I don't know what they'll do, maybe wag their tail or give some other signal," said Betsy Adams of the USDA. The department doesn't want Benji to maul you just because you have a peach in your pocketbook.

The dogs now in use can detect anything from snails to mangos. "There are thousands of insects and diseases that can come in on food, not just the medfly," explained Hess. The dogs are used for flights coming in from foreign countries, Hawaii, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands.

Hess says that travelers go to amazing lengths to sneak food home with them. "They'll hide Polish sausages inside their clothes, putting food inside a coat lining. One man had sausages hung from a belt inside his clothes. Women will say they're pregnant, but it's not a baby inside the bulge. Sometimes their stomach will start wiggling and we'll find it's a live animal or a bird that they're trying to bring in."

Dogs easily detect such schemes.

La Colombe d'Or Hotel unique to Texas

By MICHAEL CARLTON
Dallas Times Herald

HOUSTON — Ralph Waldo Emerson thought that the worthy inn should provide " ... a little fire, a little food and an immense quiet." Ralph would have liked Houston's La Colombe d'Or.

It has immense quiet, for sure. It has superb food, no doubt. And it has a fireplace roaring away in a heavily paneled library. It also may be the smallest hotel in a state known for bigness.

La Colombe d'Or has only five rooms. Steve Zimmerman, a young Houston developer and restauranteur, has modeled this magnificent mansion on Montrose with an eye to the ambience of the great chateaux of France.

The five rooms are immense, with lavish bathrooms and dining rooms. Fitted with rich furniture and stuffed with comfort, the rooms remind one of living in one of those chateaux. The quiet is absolute and calming, even in booming Houston, and the decor is softly sensual, from the oriental rugs to the massive beds.

Once the home of Walter Fondren, a founder of the Humble Oil Co., the mansion has been transformed with care and delicacy (and about $300,000 of Zimmerman's money) into a hotel the likes of which the Southwest has never seen. If its spiritual roots are in France, its attraction for American travelers may be its similarity to the old country inns of New England.

Each guest room is loaded with fresh flowers, chocolates and fruit. The bathrooms brim with French toiletries and fat, snug bathrobes are furnished for each guest. If you wish your shoes shined overnight, just leave them outside the door. Not up to dining outside? The staff of La Colombe d'Or will be happy to serve a romantic dinner in the privacy of your suite.

Most guests opt to dine in the hotel's dining room, which is also open to non-guests. The hotel's restaurant is considered by locals to be one of Houston's best, despite some early problems. Zimmerman's strange combination of a Thai chef, and Chinese and Vietnamese staff, seems to have worked — the kitchen turns out some of the finest French-inspired cuisine in the South.

After dinner, guests drift into the library with its glowing fireplace, have a cognac and select a book for the night's reading. The next morning Zimmerman's driver will whisk them away in a Mercedes Benz for business appointments.

And, that night, when they return home from business appointments, or a shopping spree at the Galleria, they will feel like they are returning home, to their private chateau, for a restful and peaceful night. Just what Ralph would have ordered.

Rates at La Colombe d'Or are $200 a night. A special corporate rate of $150 is offered for prolonged or regular stays.

HINTS FROM HELOISE

Here's an easy way to make a bed

GOOD DAY!

Made your bed yet today? Too tempted to crawl back into it before you get around to making it up?

Well, since my college days, I've used a pretty quick and simple method of making my bed each morning.

We all have our little quirks about what makes a house look neat. Mine is a freshly made bed. Now, with the hectic schedule some of us have these days, between car-pooling, 9 to 5 office hours, and family duties, making a bed before dashing out the door can be a major chore.

That's where my trick comes in. I've found I can just give the sheet, blanket and spread a good yank to straighten them out, and throw them up over the pillows, tucking them down between the pillows and headboard.

A few swishes of the hand across the top makes a smooth looking bed. With a group of throw pillows against the bed pillows, I find you can't tell that the spread is not tucked neatly under the pillows in traditional fashion.

Now don't squawk until you at least give it a try. You may find you like it as well as I do. It's really great for children — not nearly so frustrating as trying to tuck and fold under the pillows. Look at it this way — at least the covers are straight and in some semblance of array.

I'll understand if your conventional upbringing just won't allow you to try this, but at least it's better than not making the bed at all. — Heloise

MEASURE UP

Dear Heloise: When measuring a hem on slacks or skirts, have the person stand on the stairs, about four steps up.

The person doing the measuring doesn't have to bend over or stoop. Much easier! — Mrs. Myrl Lewis

DOWN'S DOWN

Dear Heloise: In most cases, a down-filled jacket washes beautifully but, when it has to go in the dryer, it can come out with the down in bunches and a mess.

However, I've found that if you will put a couple of tennis balls in the dryer, along with the jacket, the jacket comes out real fluffy and the down is distributed evenly.

Sounds crazy but it works. I've salvaged two jackets this way. — Peggy Gaugh

Gotcha! You need that bouncing ball to beat that down back in place. Works with pillows too. — Heloise

VALENTINE PUZZLE

Dear Heloise: To add a little novelty to giving Valentine cards to classmates, have the children glue the Valentine onto a thin piece of cardboard, then cut the card into several pieces (not too small).

The recipient then has the mystery and fun of piecing his or her special message together. — Cheryl

CAKE CRUMBS

Dear Heloise: Did you ever bake a cake that fell and you hated to toss it out, but worse, hated to serve it?

Break up the cake and spread it onto a large pan. Place the pan in the oven to dry. You can just use the pilot light in a gas oven, though it might take a day or two for the cake to dry completely.

If using an electric oven, turn the temperature control to its lowest setting. Test often for dryness.

Once the cake is thoroughly dried out, pour the crumbs into a plastic bag and roll with a rolling pin.

Store in the fridge or freezer and use for crumb crust (mixing with graham crackers, if desired), or use along with nuts when making drop cookies. — Callie Pate

Never give up. You can always salvage mistakes somehow! — Heloise

Drug use a group activity, says A&M family specialist

Researchers have consistently found that adolescent drug use is not a solitary activity but rather an activity mainly carried out within a peer group, says Diane Welch, a family life education specialist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, The Texas A&M University System.

Scientist says goat meat nothing to kid about

By ARTHUR H. ROTSTEIN
Associated Press Writer

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — This is nothing to kid about. It may even get your goat. But enjoy those thick, juicy beef sirloin strips and T-bone steaks while you can find and afford them.

Goat may be a staple in your diet 10 or 15 years from now.

All it's going to take, says an expert on the bearded ruminants, is a steady, inevitable decline in the world food supply.

Hold on, you say. Goats? Those cute, furry, fuzzy, goateed little critters? The stuff of "Billy-Goats Gruff?" Those animals much-maligned in literature, associated with lechery, gluttony, lasciviousness and all that, reputed to eat anything? Not, you say, by your chin-whiskers?

Why not? It's already consumed by many people in other parts of the world.

Listen a minute to Clair E. Terrill, who makes some pungent arguments:

—"As we produce less meat from grain, we'll need to take up that slack."

—"If meat is rationed, you won't be nearly so fussy. Believe me, when that time comes, (the price of beef) will be far, far higher than it is now."

—"People eat any food on the basis of supply and price. If there's plenty of it and it's cheap they eat all they can get. That's the situation the U.S. is in now (with beef) and has been in since World War II, because of a surplus of grain."

Terrill says it won't stay that way.

The American grain surplus won't fade overnight, unless there is a worldwide drought — which is possible. But world food production, which increased during the 1960s relative to the number of people, leveled off in the last decade and, Terrill predicts, will decrease in the 1980s as world population grows.

Terrill, 71, a retired staff scientist who directed the study of goats and sheep for the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Agricultural Research Service, was in Tucson recently for an international conference on goat production. He says goats may become a primary food source in coming years as more marginal land comes into use for food production.

Why? Because goats — and sheep — don't have to eat grain. Goats, he says, are scroungers, browsers, eaters of brush and grass. The cud-chewers are hooves and horns ahead of cattle when it comes to feeding costs.

"They're pretty important in quite a few countries where meat production from grain is not possible," says Terrill. "Much of the meat has to be produced from land that we wouldn't even use. In some countries, over half the meat consumed is produced by meat goats. In the United States it's so different that it's difficult to assume."

Terrill says strangulating costs and steady loss of farmland to urban sprawl will continue to shrink agricultural acreage in this country. And that, he says, will contribute inexorably to a dwindling surplus of grain.

The number of farmers, particularly full-time, is shrinking because of the economy. Staggering interest rates for equipment, capital improvements and fertilizer, and knockout energy costs — besides the misfortune, from the farmer's perspective, of a bumper soybean and corn crop in 1981 that translates into depressed prices — have combined to tighten the wrench.

"I think sheep and goats are the most attractive thing a part-time farmer can have," he says. Raising them is low-cost, doesn't depend on maximizing production and offers a chance to use marginal land, areas with brush-type vegetation.

There are some 2 million to 4 million goats in the United States, including 1 million Angoras from which mohair fiber is produced, Terrill says, among a worldwide population he estimates at up to 400 million.

He predicts an eventual U.S. population of 40 million — about a 10-fold increase in terms of food — though he declines to put a dollar figure on what that would represent.

Terrill admits that goat meat isn't "generally thought of as desirable, but there's a heck of a lot of it eaten in other countries. It's even a delicacy in parts of Texas. Barbecued kid goat is a delicacy."

On the house

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

He spent the first seven years of his life in Letchworth, England, a city north of London that was built as an "ideal" community, with everything carefully planned, from the center of town to individual residences.

That may or may not have had something to do with Chris Fye's decision, during his undergraduate days at the University of Illinois, to become an architect. But he does remember, even at that early age, that the first thing that struck him when he moved to the United States was that the houses all looked alike, especially the ranch-styled homes in suburbia.

It is not surprising, therefore, to learn that the design that won him first prize in an architectural contest was a two-story house. Although only 1,500 square feet, very modest for a two-story, it achieves an illusion of grandness with a cathedral ceiling and a first floor that has an open plan.

"Not having dividing doors and walls makes the whole house seem bigger," Fye says.

The Department of Architecture at the University of Illinois sponsored the contest in cooperation with Woman's Day Magazine. Seniors at the university had to follow certain guidelines. The house had to be a single-family, detached structure and in the $70,000 area, exclusive of land costs. It had to take into consideration energy conservation, ecology and today's smaller lots and smaller families. The panel of judges included the magazine's decorating editor, John DeSantis, and Herman York, contributing architect to Woman's Day as well as to "House of the Week," an Associated Press Newsfeature.

Fye, 28, has seen his winning entry become a reality. The design has just been translated into an actual house in the Tipton Lakes section of Columbus, Ind. It's a city known for its outstanding architecture, is somtimes known as "the Athens of the Prairie" and is a place where buildings have been designed by the likes of Eero Saarinen, I. M. Pei and Harry Weese.

The Fye house makes maximum use of the sun's light and warmth, with strategically positioned glass window panels.

"Living in natural light," says Fye, "is very pleasing. Sunlight makes people feel better ... warm and happy. In winter, it's a great feeling to sit in the sun's warmth — and you can really do this in the Columbus house."

Fye is currently working for a small architectural firm in Stockton, Ill. Did he always plan to become an architect?

"I don't know. I really had no great exposure to the field. My dad designs machines and my mother is a librarian. But I have always been interested in buildings — their esthetic relationship to the landscape and their practical relationship to their surroundings. I sort of landed in architecture as a career choice in college. It's a broad-based field that combines creativity and practicality."

The young architect thinks housing will become more and more important to individuals as the '80s continue.

"More people will be working from their homes. That means spending more time there. So, it's important that a house be comfortable and a true reflection of you. I'd like to see a variety of housing styles come back during this decade, with all sorts of details."

(Do-it-yourselfers will find much valuable information in Andy Lang's handbook, "Practical Home Repairs," available by sending $1.50 to this paper at Box 5, Teaneck, NJ 07666.)

Path to puffing gradual for kids

WASHINGTON (AP) — With "peer pressure" long cited as a major reason teen-agers begin to smoke, a psychologist at the Catholic University of America here is trying a novel approach to understand how this peer-pressure process works.

Based on data collected from about 200 smokers, ages 12-18, Wade Martin says "one clear finding" has emerged: "Kids don't jump one day from being a non-smoker to being a regular smoker."

Prior research into adolescent smoking always compared smokers to non-smokers, an approach Martin calls "well-intentioned" but which ignored intermediate stages on the way to becoming "hooked" on cigarettes.

"A substantial proportion of all kids have smoked at least one cigarette by the time they reach ninth grade, but not everyone who smokes a cigarette becomes a regular smoker," says Martin, an assistant professor of psychology and associate of Catholic University's Boys Town Center for the Study of Youth Development.

"There's a gradual process in going from one day sitting there hating cigarettes and hating people who smoke cigarettes, to two years later going out and buying a pack of cigarettes and sitting around with people who smoke," he says.

For his research, the professor focused on "what kids think of themselves" — including in the study only teen-agers who classifed themselves as smokers and asking them, among other questions, to label themselves as "regular or habitual," "social or occasional" or "beginner or experimenter."

Data was collected on questionnaires and during interiews conducted by a group of high-school psychology students Martin trained as interviewers. Martin was also assisted by sociologist Douglas Sloane, a visiting professor at Boys Town Center, and psychologist Wendy Zevin, a Catholic University graduate.

While Martin only recently began analyzing his research data, the project has already yielded several findings, he reports. Among them:

—"Most teen-agers don't really have a good idea why they start smoking," Martin says. Assuming that teen-agers could fix a specific time and reason for when and why they started smoking has been a major fault with prior research into adolescent smoking, he adds.

—Social smokers, the label applied to teen-agers who smoke only occasionally or only in certain situations (such as with friends), consider themselves to be a "smoker" only part of the time.

—Intermediate smokers believe they can quit any time and that they are not really harming their health. "They've developed a positive identification of smoking and the negative ID hasn't caught up with them," Martin says.

—Social smokers aren't worried about the health hazards associated with smoking, although some regular smokers have noticed its effect on their health. "Everybody knows smoking is bad for your health, but teen-agers really aren't interested in whether they'll die from lung cancer when they're 45," Martin says.

—The enjoyment aspect of smoking, often cited by social smokers, diminishes once a teen-ager crosses the line to become a regular or habitual smoker.

—Teen-agers have noticed a group of "anti-smokers" emerging among their peers. This group, distinct from teen-agers who are simply non-smokers, refuses to associate with smokers.

Funded by the National Institute of Child Health and Human Development, Martin's research is a pilot project which he hopes will lead to further research into how smoking affects adolescents' identity.

"An issue that has been left unresolved in my research is whether these intermediate stages are a 'pipeline' that kids are moving through on their way to becoming regular smokers or if some kids become social smokers and that's all they ever will be," Martin says.

Pit boss confines gambling to her job

By MICHAEL BEZDEK
Associated Press Writer

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — There is one thing 30-year-old Mary Osgood hates about both Nevada and New Jersey — gambling.

That would not be strange except that Ms. Osgood spends about a third of each week of her life at the hub of casino action. She is a pit boss, one of few women to achieve that supervisory position.

But in her nearly 10 years in the gambling industry, she has always been on the house side of the table. She says she appreciates the lure legalized wagering has for others, but she would rather watch, and get paid for it.

"I was very young, just 21, when I started working at Harrah's (in Lake Tahoe, Nev.). I saw dealers there losing their paychecks night after night. It was painful to see. I wanted no part of it."

Ms. Osgood says she doesn't especially like dealing out pain either, but she says she has become inured to the ever-wavering fortunes of the players.

"You always hear those stories about the guy sitting there with his last dollar. I just don't believe it. They always pick themselves up. They know they can come back and win almost as easily as they can lose," said Ms. Osgood, who works for Harrah's Marina Hotel Casino.

She is coldly analytical on the job, an approach that also extends to the house. She says she knows enough about blackjack, for example, to realize that a table will just "dump," and that nothing can be done to prevent players from sometimes walking away with tens of thousands of dollars.

When she is overseeing play at blackjack, she rules over three assistants known as floorwalkers in a pit of between eight and 12 tables. She is also a roulette boss, which she finds more interesting because of the greater variety in betting.

Her routine is occasionally enlivened by a serious dispute over the play; by those trying to "sweeten" what looks like a good bet or "pinching" chips on a bad hand; or by spotting suspected card-counters, who are banned because of their advantage over the house.

She says her main sympathies lie with the management who gave her a chance to be a pit boss and with the dealers who work under her.

Born in Canada but raised in suburban Los Angeles, Ms. Osgood worked as a dealer for Harrah's and for Harvey's casinos in Nevada before she came to New Jersey.

She gained additional supervisory experience instructing aspiring casino workers when she left the casinos to teach at the Atlantic City Training Academy.

There are some compensations to being a pit boss, and foremost among them is the salary. She makes more than twice as much as the approximately $24,000 the dealers average in income and tips each year.

"I don't want to say that I never would have become a pit boss in Nevada but it would have been very difficult there. There are probably only a handful of women pit bosses right now in New Jersey and Nevada.

"The difference here is that they have stronger affirmative action and women have a better chance," she said.

Another difference in New Jersey is that casino workers are not allowed to wager in the casinos, which makes it an ideal workplace for Ms. Osgood.

Data collected on child nutrition

The Coordinated Nutrition Surveillance Program of the Centers for Disease Control, Atlanta, uses nutrition-related data collected by local health departments as part of the routine delivery of child-health services.

In 1980, data were submitted for more than 250,000 children aged 6 months to 10 years who were new patients at more than 1,300 clinics in 22 states.

Effectiveness of diet pills mired in controversy

By ELAINE WARREN
Hearst Feature Service

If you're like many people who want to lose weight, you've probably considered diet pills — or took them. The $200 million non-prescription diet aid market has grown fat on the sales of pills manufacturers say suppress the appetite.

Although there is a boggling array of capsules and pills at the drug store counter from which to choose — the most familiar are Dexatrim, Prolamine, Appedrine, Control, Dietac and Slim-Line—most are identical, containing one main ingredient: phyenylpropanolamine (known as PPA for short), a mild stimulant which has been around since the late 1930's. It is also a common component of nasal decongestants.

And while diet pill manufacturers and mail-order marketing firms grow fatter each year from profits, the effectiveness and safety of the pills remains dubious and mired in controversy, with the FDA yet to issue the final stamp of approval.

"I've never seen any convincing evidence that they were effective," says Dr Theodore Van Itallie, a professor of medicine at Columbia University and director of the Obesity Research Center at St. Luke's-Roosevelt Hospital in New York.

Despite glowing promotional claims by manufacturers, most experts say that at best, the pills may help encourage weight loss of a pound a week, and recent studies indicate that long-term effects may actually be negative.

Do they work any better for the grossly overweight? "Absolutely not," says Van Itallie. "I think to the contrary, they should not take it, because it's not a solution and it merely distracts from the real solution, which is a total change in lifestyle, eating behavior and exercise."

Much of the pills' popularity is directly related to the hard-sell promotion they've received since 1979, when an advisory panel to the FDA was asked to review the ingredients found in over-the-counter weight control products. The panel concluded that, with two exceptions, most ingredients had not been shown to be either safe or effective. The two exceptions were Benzocaine, a local anesthetic used as a diet aid in chewing gum, lozenges and before-meal candies and PPA.

But the FDA has not officially adopted the panel's findings, nor have the exact contents of the studies which the panel reviewed been made public. (The studies were submitted by the manufacturers). The government will not release the details until the FDA report is made final.

The latest bad news about the pills appeared in a recent issue of "Consumer Reports," which claims to have reviewed the FDA advisory panel's transcripts. "We reviewed them in detail, hoping to find convincing proof of PPA's value to dieters," the magazine reports. "Instead, we found only suggestive evidence of a modest benefit over short-term periods."

Since the panel issued its report three years ago, a number of accounts have appeared in medical journals reporting side effects of PPA ranging from hypertension to episodes of psychotic behavor. It is most commonly cited by critics as capable of elevating blood pressure among some people, and most pill packages contain a warning that persons who already have high blood pressure, diabetes, heart disease, thyroid conditions and other diseases or who are pregnant or lactating, should not use the drug. It is also recommended not to be used for more than three months at the most.

Accordingly, Ralph Nader's Center for Science in the Public Interest has declared war on the products, asking that they be banned as ineffective and hazardous, citing at least 11,000 episodes of dizziness, anxiety, and other reactions related to use of PPA.

Despite all this, the makers of the pills have launched an advertising blitz aimed at convincing the public that the pills are safe as pablum.

Too quiet

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. (AP) — Total quiet in an office is more distracting than some noise, a study by a maker of office furniture has determined.

Using a method called "distraction analysis," the Steelcase researchers found that stress levels among office workers increase when there is absolutely no noise, while the ability to concentrate improves when a moderate noise level, called "ambient sound," is introduced.

Ventilation systems or masking sounds using "white-noise" provide the proper level of ambient sound, the research indicates. They also screen out distracting sounds from adjacent offices.

It's child-appreciation time

By ERMA BOMBECK

Every year, a child who is sick and tired of a mother shoving this column into her face and shouting, "Read this! It's you!" will write and ask why I always take the parents' point of view and never the child's.

This year's writer is from Long Beach, Cal., and she says, "For so long you have written about children that do things that make their parents miserable, how about a few measly words to make parents feel like maybe they have done something right?" Signed: "T.H."

You're right, T.H. It must seem like there's no pleasing us. It's time for my yearly child-appreciation tribute.

Parents have done something right when they ask a child to bring them a glass of water from the kitchen and the child knows where the kitchen is.

They've done it when they get a birthday present on their birthday that their child has bought with his own money.

They've pulled it off when their child volunteers that she dropped the camera she borrowed and when the parents ask, "Have you any idea how much a camera like this cost and who is going to pay for it?" does . . . and will.

They've raised a winner when they point out to a son that his pants are ripped, his shirt is not ironed, the sole is coming off his shoe and his sweater is inside out, and he looks rotten . . . and he agrees with them.

It's a good day for any parent when their child speaks to them in public, when they put gas in the car after they've used it, ask if you're watching a TV show before they flip the dial, do dishes when it isn't their night, and thank you for anything.

It's a good time for parents when their children tell them the truth when you're gonna kill 'em for it . . . answer their parents without saying, "What do you want?" . . . shut the door in the winter because it makes their dad smile, or respect their mother's cold as they do their own.

Good kids are like sunsets. We take 'em for granted. Every morning they rise. Every evening they disappear. Most parents in a single lifetime will never imagine how hard they try to please us and how miserable they feel when they think they have failed.

Take a good look at your kids. I mean really look at them. You've done a lot better than you think you did. Now, tell them.

Inequality reported in Swedish education

By LILLIAN RYD
Associated Press Writer

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Despite ambitious reforms, the inequality gap in Swedish higher education is widening, a new report says.

Fewer young women study, and the upper classes are retaining or even tightening their grip on attractive high-salaried legal and medical professions, according to the report from the National Board of Universities and Colleges.

A far-reaching university reform in 1977, aimed at closing the gap between working-class and upper-class youth in education opportunities, has had no noticeable effect, says Allan Svensson, Dean of the Institute of Pedagogy at Goteborg University, in his report.

"The reform did not provide any real improvement for working-class youth," Svensson told the Associated Press.

In the early '70s, one's chances of becoming a doctor, a dentist or a lawyer were nearly 50 times greater if one was born into the upper echelons of society. Available figures indicate that the situation has not changed much, Svensson said.

The upper classes still supply some 70 percent of law and economics students, and 60 percent of students in medicine, social sciences and technology, he said.

By the same token working-class youth, and women particularly, dominate in studies that before the 1977 reform were not counted as university level, such as kindergarten teaching, nursing, youth-center managing, etc.

Ten years ago, women made up nearly half, or 47 percent, of the young student body in universities and other academic-level schools. During a decade of women's-rights campaigns, their share has shrunk to 45 percent, thus breaking a 70-year-old slow but steady trend toward education equality between the sexes, the report says.

Researcher Erik Tangden at the Central Bureau of Statistics pointed out, however, that Svensson's material does not include a number of older students, 25 and over, who have entered universities since the reform.

"With these included there is roughly a 50-50 balance between men and women and a better social distribution in the total student body," Tangden told the Associated Press.

Svensson defended his conclusions, claiming that many of the older students included in the "total student body" do not study for a degree but take only shorter courses, sometimes not longer than a few weeks, and seldom go on to postgraduate studies.

His material on freshmen up to 21 years old shows the trends among the majority of students who follow full courses toward a degree, he said.

The proportion of working-class girls aged 18 to 21 who start higher education went down to 4 percent in 1979, from 6 percent in 1969. Among working-class boys there was a corresponding loss from 7 to 6 percent.

Recession and prospects of unemployment have frightened off many gifted students, even among the well-to-do, the report says.

Myth and magic and the science of romance united in 'Love 1982-Style'

NEW YORK — At the same them that scientists are examining the chemistry of sexual attraction and social scientists are studying the nature of flirtation, there is new recognition that the ancient mysteries, myths and magic of love are part of its deepest reality and appeal, reports the February issue of McCall's magazine.

Romance is "in" in the 1980's and people everywhere are relearning that romance can "relax, charm, and entertain," says McCall's. Valentine's Day is the perfect time to delight, enchant and ensnare that special person — by hook or crook. McCall's has suggestions for and anecdotes on the joys of love — uniting new and old. Here is a small sampling:

— When a person is in love, the brain produces a chemical called phenylethylamine, which brings on the giddy response normally associated with love. chocolates are full of this chemical, and may actually help ease the pain of "breaking up" and the low feeling that comes with a broken heart.

— Bee pollen is a wonderful, natural food which tends to increase the body's production of sex hormones. Find it in any healthfood store. At the same time, pick up a jar of wild, unprocessed dark honey, also reputed to augment sexual potency.

— People who live almost entirely on shellfish are more ardent in love than all others — stock up on crayfish and lobsters! In fact, Casanova's friend Agnolo Torredano claimed that shrimp in ordinary paeilla was the "food of life that makes it possible for this cold old body to still enjoy the heat of passion."

— Science has gathered evidence in support of the idea that certain aromas heighten sexual responsiveness. "Body odors" really do send sexual messages. Because of this, perfume companies are now bottling a male pheromone (a chemical messenger of the animal kingdom) released by the boar and demonstrated to affect the sow's sexual receptivity — because it is also a component of human sweat.

— Aphrodisiacs that intensify sexual love include dishes made with rice and milk (especially rice pudding), beets, carrots and turnips, crayfish soup, celery, oysters and even . . . garlic!

— Musk, available in health food stores, rubbed all over the body treats sexual apathy.

— The Kama Sutra recommends this drink as a powerful aphrodisiac: sugar mixed in milk with the testicle of a ram boiled in it.

— Social scientists who studied flirting found that most people prefer modest, matter-of-fact opening lines, self-effacing rather than self-promoting. Among the least introductory lines used in bars was "Bet I can outdrink you!" Among the most liked lines was "It took a lot of nerve to approach you, so can I at least ask what your name is?"

— A woman who chews on licorice root will become immediately passionate.

— In cases of sexual exhaustion, raw oats, available at the supermarket, can behave as a valuable restorative. Immers four ounces of ground oats in a pint of brandy or whisky. Strain after 48 hours, and take from 15 to 40 drops per day.

— Homemade herb-stuffed dolls will insure love. Make the dolls — one for you and one for your potential mate — from any available scraps of material. Stuff them with things like apple blossoms to conjure up eroticism, jasmine for joy, and rosebuds for communication. Bind the dolls together with red ribbon and bury them in a dresser drawer. True love will soon follow.

Artist has exhibit despite earlier loss of many works

WINSTED, Conn (AP) — Almost a year after she had suffered a devastating professional loss, artist Emily Nelligan Bileck has opened a new exhibition — which she says is close to a rebirth.

Thirty-three new drawings of her favorite subject, Maine's Cranberry Isles, were put on display in the Landon Gan Internatioal Airport in Boston and never saw them again. They were the products of 30 years spent at the Maine coast, recording the scenes in charcoal, pen and ink and print.

Reproductions of 50 of them had been intended for a book which would have been published by Tidal Press. But the loss ended all plans for the book.

"For about two months I was just devastated," she said. "But finally, when I wasn't feeling so depressed, I felt I just had to go back there to work. I knew I would be all right if I could go back."

Mrs. Bileck, who draws under the professional name of Emily Nelligan, spent last summer revisiting a place she calls 'incredibly beautiful ... an eternally changing place. The light, the tide is different every minute."

Friends rented a place on the Cranberry Isles for her, according to her husband, Marvin Bileck, an art professor at Queens College in New York and the illustrator of "Rain Makes Applesauce," a children's book.

"Three times a day she would go out, starting early in the morning and she always came back with three or four drawings each day that were just marvelous things," Bileck said. "It is just encouraging that she could revisit those scenes that might have been quite haunting for some people in the same situation. The whole of the exhibit is quite profound."

Sculptor and Yale art professor Philip Grausman said he had admired Mrs. Bileck's work since he had first seen some samples of it in the Brooklyn Museum in 1960.

"I find it (her work) extraordinary. To me, she's a poet," Grausman said.

Fun ways with peaches

For an economical and fun breakfast, serve peach fritters! Drain a can of cling peach slices in light syrup (economy pack). Dip each slice in dry packaged pancake mix, then in lightly beaten egg. Fry quickly in hot oil; drain on paper towels.

•••

Cling peaches in light syrup help spice up any dinner. Mix cling peach slices (with their light syrup), ¼ teaspoon powdered ginger and a few cloves in a saucepan. Heat to boiling, simmer 10 minutes. Serve hot or cold with meat or poultry.

•••

An assortment of cheeses provides a happy prelude to dinner with a minimum of fuss and flurry. Just remember to remove cheese from the refrigerator 20 to 60 minutes before serving, depending on its size, so it can come to room temperature. Arrange three or four cheeses and a variety of crackers or thinly sliced bread on a large platter. Then let family and guests help themselves.

Heloise 'Hints' successful despite corny format

By LINDA YGLESIAS
Hearst Feature Service

In times when women's issues focus on careers instead of turkey leftovers, "Hints from Heloise" not only survives — it excels.

The 30-year-old columnist — full name: Ponce Kiah Marchelle Heloise Cruse Evans — whose mother began the household tips column 22 years ago, is just as syrupy sweet and deliberately corny as her predecessor. She, too, tells her readers how to combat mildew and use paper towels for coffee filters.

Each week, 2,000 to 3,000 readers write their thanks and offer their own housekeeping revelations. Each tip is chock full of "Hugs, Heloise," an abundance of exclamation points, and sayings — "Waste not, want not" — that would make good needlepoint plaques.

"Hints from Heloise" appears in more than 500 newspapers here and in 24 foreign countries. Depending on its circulation, a newspaper may pay from $3.75 to $25 a week for the several inches of type that tell mom to attract junior's interest in liver by calling it Texas steak.

"I don't know a woman who doesn't get into the kitchen now and then," Heloise says. "I know it sounds a little hokey to someone who doesn't read the column. I'm not writing to 75 million people, but to one woman in curlers. All that criticism of housewives is such a crock of cranberries. You do cook and handwash your nylons. There's nothing wrong with it."

Heloise's office is her home. No official testing force examines the "Hints from Heloise" tips. Heloise, two full-time and one part-time employees, family and friends experiment with their own tips and test those sent in by readers.

"I write the way I talk, like I'm talking to my best friend."

Her house in San Antonio has seven bathrooms. Her husband is a plumbing contractor. He met her when she was a secretary, and "saw me through the success."

"Hints from Heloise" began in 1959 when Air Force wife Cathie Heloise Cruse Bowles dyed her hair gray to make herself look older, walked into a Hawaii newspaper office and said she'd like a job.

The Bowles column began as a reader's exchange of ideas, but the tips' immediate popularity developed into the "Hints from Heloise" column that King Features Syndicate, the distributors, predicted would die at Bowles' death at age 58 in 1977.

"They had visions of this South Texas girl who didn't know what she was doing," Heloise says. "They told me to be prepared to lose at least one-third of the newspapers.

"Some paper in California ran a test to see, now that my mother was dead, if the readers wanted Polly's Pointers or Heloise," Heloise says. The results were 257 for Heloise, three for Polly's Pointers. During the transition from Heloise I to Heloise II, "We lost one paper."

The daughter now says laughingly that if it were up to her readers, there would already be Heloise III and IV.

The author's professed affinity for a simple life is believable, and that is what evidently counts to the millions of readers who turn weekly to their Heloise fix.

But Heloise acknowledges that, as "a woman of the '80s," she is "changing the column slowly.

"I can't do anything to stop world hunger, inflation or nuclear war. But I'm telling housewives to drop the 'just' in 'just a housewife.' To clean a dirty kitchen gives the satisfaction of signing a million dollar deal. If I help to fix dinner and make it a little easier, that's enough. And if (the column) makes you laugh, that's fine, too."

Cancer study to research links to environment

By DAVID ZINMAN
1982, Newsday

A $12 million cancer study involving 1 million Americans will be started this fall to try to learn how life-style and environment are related to cancer, the American Cancer Society has announced.

"Since we did the smoking study, so many things have been suggested as being linked to cancer that we thought it was time for a new look," said Lawrence Garfinkel, the cancer society's vice president for epidemiology and statistics. The society conducted several major population surveys from 1959 to 1972 that provided key evidence linking cigarette smoking to lung cancer and heart disease.

Now, it hopes to discover specific traits of lifestyle or environmental factors that may give some people cancer or protect them from it. The study, which the society says will be the largest of its kind, will extend through 1988 and involve 85,000 unpaid researchers.

Plans call for each volunteer to keep track of 10 families nationwide, asking questions about health and lifestyle habits. The volunteers, who will check back every two years, will focus on people who are 50 or older because the survey is essentially a mortality study.

When participants die, their death records will be obtained. To test suspected relationships, computers will screen the data and compare the category and frequency of death to questionnaire answers. Among areas cancer researchers will examine are:

—Long-term exposure to low-level radiation, the health effects of water and air pollution and the possibility that certain racial, religious, geographic or genetic groups are more susceptible to cancer.

—Diet. Researchers will see if they can find a cancer link with such things as coffee, saccharin, alcohol, obesity and a high-fat regimen. They will look at high-fiber diets, thought to be related to low cancer rates, and at vitamins A, C and E, believed by some to have possible protective effects.

—Passive smoking. Scientists want to find out if people who inhale the smoke of others have higher cancer rates.

—Low-tar and nicotine cigarettes. Researchers will test the suspicion that additives used to enchance the taste of these cigarettes may themselves have a deleterious effect.

—Medication. Scientists want to know if there is a higher death rate among people who depend on such widely used drugs as Valium. They also will look at the longevity of those who take high blood pressure pills, oral contraceptives and hormones to relieve the problems of menopause.

Studies from hospital research indicate a little alcohol is beneficial to one's health

By SARAH FRITSCHNER
The Washington Post

Abstinence may make the heart grow fonder. But in general, total abstinence from alcohol doesn't necessarily help the heart at all. In light of recent research, you may want to indulge occasionally in your favorite alcoholic beverage. All in the name of therapy, of course.

While modern-day Carrie Nations might find it sobering, studies prove that a little recreational drinking might actually benefit your health. From controlled research in an Oakland hospital to social hours in Boston homes for the aged, the research shows that booze might do more than give you a buzz.

Cocktail hour proved beneficial for some of Boston's aged and rehabilitating hospital patients. With a daily dose of beer, cheese and crackers, many invalids became ambulatory and all those taking Thorazine (a major tranquilizer) discontinued using it. Similar reductions in other prescription medicine followed. In addition, staff on the ward relinquished their own lunch breaks so they could spend cocktail hour socializing with patients.

Further episodes substantiate this experience. One doctor on a rehabilitation ward reports that his patients, dealing with chronic illness (such as recovering from strokes), became much less antisocial when the hospital established a cocktail hour for them.

Even after two martinis, a luncher can figure out that drinking — anything — to excess isn't great for your body. But several well-documented studies on tens of thousands of patients hint that a couple of drinks a day might help deter heart attacks. In those studies, moderate drinkers (two ounces of pure alcohol a day, the equivalent of two drinks with hard liquor or a couple of beers) showed less chance of dying from heart attacks than nondrinkers, ex-drinkers or heavy drinkers.

If you've begun to pop the corks, wait a moment. Drinking has been associated with increased chance of breast cancer in women, reports the British medical journal Lancet. Blood pressure increases with corresponding increases in liquor consumption when you tipple more than three drinks a day. The controversy over drinking while pregnant continues unabated — heavy drinking is associated with "fetal alcohol syndrome," otherwise known as birth defects. This leads many, including the March of Dimes, to recommend that pregnant mothers consume no alcohol whatsoever.

Don't forget that every gram of alcohol contains seven calories — more than carbohydrates and protein, but fewer than fat. Alcohol can fit into a weight-loss program, but the dieter should drink with care and be sure to consume proper nutrients. Liquor, with few exceptions, provides nothing but empty calories.

In addition alcohol reacts not only with such drugs as tranquilizers, but can interfere with the metabolism of anti-depressant drugs, coagulants and anti-hypertensive drugs. Alcohol can combine with aspirin to cause severe heartburn and can even increase drowsiness when taken with common over-the-counter type antihistimines.

While everyone knows that alcohol consumption slows reaction time, thus making drunk drivers a real menace, many don't know that it also lengthens "glare recovery time." That's why those oncoming car lights seem so bothersome.

"The substance goes everywhere in your body," says Dr. Ralph Ryback, medical officer at the laboratory of clinical studies, National Institute of Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism. "Alcohol itself has a harmful effect on the cell. It has to be 'detoxified' in the body. One wouldn't recommend it if you were on a health kick."

Then there's alcoholism. And alcohol abuse. While alcoholism often is considered a disease, alcohol abuse involves the mishandling of a drug, says Dr. Morris Chafetz, former director of the NIAAA. A proponent of drinking in moderation, he says the American society condones and even encourages alcohol abuse, by laughing at drunks, for instance. "Getting drunk means you've overdosed with a drug," he says. "What's funny about that?"

"Americans don't realize that there are dose-related differences" in drugs, he continues. Just because two or three daily drinks may improve cardiovascular fitness, doesn't mean 10 will help you live forever.

Social drinkers interested in maintaining some degree of sobriety should know that the average body metabolizes about one ounce of 80 proof whisky per hour (about 3 1-2 ounces of table wine). Chafetz advises having protein in the stomach (the old peanut butter sandwich routine) before drinking.

The alcohol in more diluted drinks — beer, wine and spirits mixed with something softer — is absorbed slower than the same quantity of alcohol in martinis or scotch on the rocks.

And ... for those of you who are always complaining about how "beer always goes straight through" you, here's a little tippling trivia. Ethyl alcohol — the kind that gives you a buzz — effectively inhibits the anti-diuretic hormone from the pituitary gland. That means, when the level of alcohol is increasing in your blood, your brain doesn't know that your bladder doesn't want to be full again.

Hormones 'flavor' brain structure

Hormones may do more than simply trigger external sexual characteristics. Many scientists now believe that hormones act to "flavor" a person of one kind of gender behavior or another by changing the very structure of the brain.

AMERICA INSIDE

The dark side of artificial light

By LOWELL PONTE
(Special from Reader's Digest)

In the quiet town of Cheshire, Conn., Annette Mara was pleased to learn that her children's elementary school had installed new energy-saving lighting. But when fall classes began in 1978, her son Timmy, 9, returned home each day close to tears. "My eyes hurt, Mommy," he told her repeatedly.

Timmy's eyes stopped hurting during the winter holiday, but the problem returned when he went back to school. Mara discussed the situation with his teacher, whose own eyes had become bloodshot and painful since installation of the new lighting. When questioned, 16 of the school's 18 teachers also reported unusual eyestrain and headaches.

Other problems were apparent. When the new high-pressure, sodium-vapor lights were first switched on, they gave off a greenish glow that one teacher, Louise Meusel, and others said made them feel nauseated.

Students seemed irritable and more easily distracted under the new lights. In July '79, Mara and Meusel rallied concerned parents in a successful effort to have the new lights replaced.

In the 103 years since Edison invented the light bulb, few have thought that this marvel might be harmful. Nonetheless, researchers are learning that living things use natural light in unexpected ways and that electric lights can upset a host of delicate natural balances.

What happens to people who spend most of their time indoors where the only light comes from electric bulbs? To find out, Richard J. Wurtman, director of the neuroendocrine laboratory at Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and Robert Neer, a medical researcher at Massachusetts General Hospital, studied elderly residents at the Chelsea Soldiers' Home near Boston. They found that as winter deepened, the men suffered a severely diminished ability to absorb calcium, a mineral vital to bones and teeth.

Wurtman and Neer then carried out an experiment in which roughly half the men spent eight hours a day in rooms where special fluorescent lamps simulated natural sunlight. Within a month, these men increased their calcium absorption by 15 percent. Fellow residents, who continued to live in the light of ordinary incandescent and fluorescent bulbs during the same period, LOST another 25 percent of their already impaired ability to absorb calcium.

These and other findings led Wurtman to conclude that "proper indoor lighting could serve as an important public-health measure to prevent the undermineralization of bones among the elderly and others with limited access to natural sunlight."

Scientists have long known that excessive exposure to ultraviolet radiation in sunlight can cause skin cancer. Fluorescent light also emits ultraviolet light. Last year F. Alan Andersen, a biophysicist at the Food and Drug Administration's Bureau of Radiological Health, warned that unshielded fluorescent lights may be increasing by five percent the weekly dose of ultraviolet radiation many office workers are receiving. For sensitive persons, he believes, that added dose may already be causing skin cancer.

Even more disturbing, research by Andersen's bureau and other scientists indicates that the potent unnatural wavelengths of fluorescent light can cause genetic mutation, cancer and death in the cells of many living things — including man — at a significantly high rate.

But even if our unnatural lights were of themselves harmless, their very presence may do harm. Living organisms have a "sixth sense" that perceives time. One key to that awareness of time is light. When unnatural light confuses our body's clocks, setting some rhythms out of harmony with others, the result may be what is called "light stress." Intense artificial light can cause biochemical changes in the human body similar to those caused by physical stress. Dr. Wurtman has measured such signs of stress in living things exposed to high-pressure, sodium-vapor light.

Unnatural light may already have altered the lives of millions of women throughout North America and Western Europe. Girls in these lands are now reaching sexual maturity months or years younger than their grandmothers. This new pattern in snowy northlands, scientists note, has always been the norm in sunny tropical nations where daylight varies little with the seasons. Several scientists suspect that by illuminating long winter nights, electric lights may be triggering a profound biological change in how women mature.

"Little has been done to protect citizens against potentially harmful or biologically inadequate light," says Wurtman. "Both government and industry have been satisfied to allow people to serve as the unwitting subjects in a long-term experiment on the effects of artificial-lighting environments on human health."

You can light up your life — safely

By LOWELL PONTE
(Special from Reader's Digest)

We are only beginning to understand how light affects our health. Here are some steps we can take to maximize safety in our use of both natural and artificial light:

Offices, factories and schools could minimize the hazards of lighting by using broad-spectrum fluorescent lamps instead of the narrow-spectrum "cool-white" fluorescent bulbs in common use. Light stress could be reduced by mixing fluorescent and incandescent light in the home, classroom or work place and, wherever possible, by providing skylights and windows to bring in sunlight.

The public should be informed of the potential hazards of artificial light. The FDA's tests have confirmed that radiation from fluorescent lamps can increase the risk of skin cancer in sensitive individuals. The government could reasonably require a warning label on fluorescent bulbs and could recommend measures to reduce the hazards — such as the use of solid plastic covers on lighting fixtures to filter out ultraviolet light.

We should take responsibility for our own health by spending some time in natural sunlight every day (unless medical problems dictate otherwise). Sunlight nourishes our bodies and helps harmonize us with the rhythms of nature. Until we have thoroughly researched the influences of manmade light, we should remember that we have been shaped for a million years by sunlight — that we are the sun's children and depend on its subtle light more than we know.

Bartender helps doctor solve hiccup dilemma

By HARVEY HAGMAN
Hearst Feature Service

BALTIMORE — Thanks to a 31-year-old pediatrician the medical profession now knows what bartenders have known for years — how to cure alcohol-induced hiccups.

Events leading up to this milestone began inauspiciously last summer. Dr Jay Howard Herman, David Nolan and his wife Serena, also a doctor, were drinking, eating and hashing out the problems of the world at a local cafe, as is their custom on Wednesday nights.

The booze flowed freely until Herman started repeating himself. Hiccup. Hiccup. Hiccup.

It dawned on Herman that medical science has largely overlooked the hiccup sufferer.

In desperation, Herman sought advice from Nolan who, as a bartender for 2 1/2 years, treated more cases of alcohol-induced hiccups than Herman probably will see in a lifetime.

Nolan's advice: Take a lemon wedge of the size commonly served in bars. Saturate it with angostura bitters and eat it rapidly, except for the rind. If that seems unpalatable, add granulated sugar to the lemon.

Herman was skeptical, but the hiccups soon ceased. "With all my medical expertise, I knew nothing about it. That got me," said Herman humbly.

"I said, 'David, would you like to get your name in the New England Medical Journal? He said, 'Yah, that would be great.' I said well, let's do it."

Pediatrician Herman's research revealed this hiccup cure had never been reported in medical literature. "The New England Medical Journal loves stuff like this," he said. "They go berserk over heavy wallet sciatica, pressure on the sciatic nerve (caused by a fat wallet in the back pocket). If you write it scientifically enough, they love it."

The remedy was tested on 16 cases, with a total cure rate of 88 percent. The researchers sent off their letter to the magazine, concluding with "further clinical trials are in progress."

The letter appeared just before New Year's. Since that time, the researchers have achieved fleeting fame. "Kook after kook has been writing us about their hiccups," Herman said.

Herman said, "Most home remedies work better than drugs for alcohol-induced hiccups. There's a reflex in the back of the throat that seems to dampen muscle contractions. I'm think bitters or the lemon stimulates the back of your throat enough to stimulate this reflex."

Exxon, others get cozy with Russians

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post Bureau

WASHINGTON — The $25 billion Soviet natural gas pipeline, a project opposed by the Reagan administration, is destined to benefit not only European consumers but also major multinational oil companies, including U.S.-based Exxon, which have signed up for large volumes of the gas under agreements reached with the Russians.

While administration officials have vowed to block or delay construction of the controversial pipeline, Exxon, Shell of the Netherlands and Britain's BP are busily planning to add their share of the new Soviet gas to the pool they use to supply industries and homes in West Germany.

The stake of the oil multinationals in the pipeline project adds a new dimension to the unresolved tensions within the Reagan administration on this issue. The administration has a basic pro-business inclination; it also is determined to stand up to the Soviets in the wake of the crisis in Poland. The two aspects of its policy are at war.

U.S. officials warn that the pipeline, the largest single East-West business deal in history, will drastically increase European dependence on Soviet energy and will provide Moscow with $10 billion a year in hard currency.

But the companies argue that the 40 billion cubic meters of natural gas a year from the West Siberian fields on the Yamal Peninsula, due to begin flowing in 1984, are needed to supplement new reserves in the North Sea as well as old ones in the Netherlands that are expected to decline sharply in the next decade.

"Reagan has absolutely no reason to forbid this business," said Wolfgang Oehme, chairman of Exxon's Hamburg-based German subsidiary, in the current issue of Der Spiegel magazine.

"We are working within the framework of a German government assessment that this project is good for Germany," said an Exxon spokesman in New York City. "It's not a question of whether we support or don't support the project. It's a question of our companies operating according to the desires of local government."

Mobil appears to be the only major oil company operating in West Germany opposed to the deal. Officials of that company have declared that the pipeline is not necessary and have said that its completion will undermine Mobil's efforts to develop non-Soviet natural gas reserves in the North Sea and West Africa.

The pipeline deal has become a major political issue in the Atlantic alliance. European governments look to the project to provide business and jobs for local firms in the short run and new energy supplies later. U.S. officials, aware that an all-out effort to block the project could split the alliance, are nevertheless considering new steps to delay it.

On Dec. 30, President Reagan revealed a list of economic sanctions against the Soviet Union in retaliation for the imposition of martial law in Poland. He indicated that there could be no "business as usual" with the Russians as long as the repression continued. The list covered U.S. companies with contracts to export pipeline equipment to the Soviet Union, such as General Electric and Caterpillar, but exempted grain shipments and made no mention of the oil companies' role in the gas deal.

Since then, however, events have been driving home the problems involved in using economic measures to achieve political objectives in a highly interdependent international economy dominated by the activity of multinational corporations.

West European firms with lucrative contracts to supply pipeline equipment have indicated they will try to go ahead with these sales despite Washington's restrictions; European banks are continuing with plans to finance the project, and on Jan. 23 France's state-owned Gaz de France signed a 25-year natural gas contract with the Soviets that will make the country dependent on Russia for a third of its imported gas needs.

On Feb. 15 the supervisory board of Ruhrgas, a huge West German utility in which the oil multinationals have a 65 percent equity interest, is expected togive final approval to the Soviet gas deal that will provide the country with 10.5 billion cubic feet a year starting in 1984.

Ruhrgas has signed up for half of the new gas. Another quarter of it will go to a company called Brigitta, jointly owned by Exxon and Shell. Two other companies, Thyssengas and Gelsenberg, will each get 10 percent. Exxon and Shell each have a 25 percent interest in Thyssengas, while Gelsenberg is wholly owned by BP. The remaining 5 percent is earmarked for small German companies.

The West German government, backed by leading industrialists, is strongly supporting the Soviet gas purchase with the proviso that the nation's dependence on Soviet gas go no higher than 30 percent of Germany's total supply. This allows for substantial growth in the Soviet share of the German natural gas market, now only about 11 percent.

One of the strongest backers of the East-West trade ties is industrialist Wolff von Amerongen, head of the West German chamber of commerce and a member of Exxon's board of directors.

Mannesmann, the huge West German steel company that has a contract to supply wide-diameter pipe for the Siberian gas line, owns a 7 percent interest in Ruhrgas, the largest German gas purchaser.

Italy, Austria, the Netherlands, Belgium and Switzerland are expected to follow up the French and West German lead with gas purchase deals of their own. France, Italy and Austria import gas through state companies. But Exxon and Shell are members of consortiums that import gas on behalf of the Netherlands and Belgium.

Senior administration officials are aware that U.S. multinationals are deeply involved in the West European natural gas industry but say they see no way, at this point, to apply pressure on the companies to line up behind the Reagan policy.

MEGAL, the major pipeline transporting Soviet gas from the Czechoslovak border to the West, is jointly owned by Ruhrgas and the French national gas company.

Exxon and Shell each own 30 percent of the huge Groningen field, Europe's largest natural gas resource.

The two companies together also have a half interest in Gasunie, the company that exports Groningen gas and distributes it within Holland.

Together, Exxon, Shell, Mobil and Texaco produce 81 percent of West Germany's natural gas. Exxon and Shell also have interests in north-south pipelines that carry North Sea and Dutch gas across West Germany to Italy.

Administration officials say that this system is now being redirected toward major dependence on the Soviet Union without adequate study of the feasibility of alternatives such as U.S. coal or accelerated use of the vast North Sea reserves.

How to know one when you see one

If not, here is the definition.

According the the Internal Revenue Service Code, "Paragraph 150.4994-1 (b) Independent producer defined. An 'independent producer' with respect to any quarter, is any person other than a person whom subsection (c) of section 613A does not aply by reason of paragraph (2) (relating to certain retailers) or paragraph (4) (relating to certain refiners) or section 613A (d) or to whom subsection (c) would not apply if sub section (d) (2) or (4) were applied on a quarterly rather than an annual basis."

With that in mind, you should have no trouble recognizing an independent next time you cross paths with one.

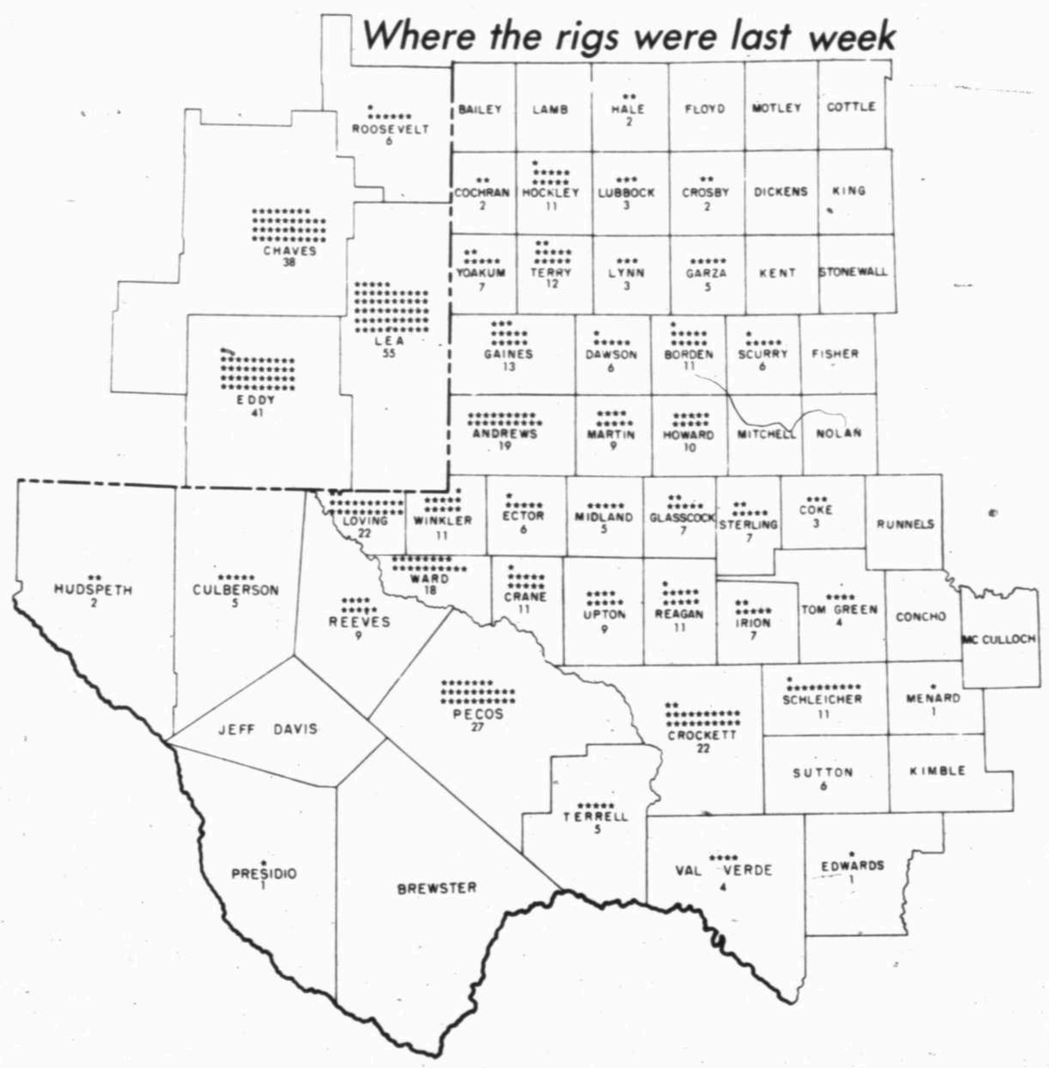
Where the rigs were last week



'Our' rig count down, 'theirs' up

The Permain Basin Rotary rig count held study last week after three weeks of decline, according to a survey by Reed Rock Bit Co. They counted 476 rotaries drilling the region.

One year ago the bit makers found 377 turning to the right.

The national rig count appears to be taking a nose dive. According to a survey by the International Association of Drillling Contractors, there were 4,276 making hole across the nation February 1. That's 80 less than the previous week, when 4,396 were tallied. The national count peaked at 4,530 December 28, 1981.

One year ago the figure was 3,451.

The number of rigs drilling in Texas has declined significantly, the IADC figures show. There were 1,315 land rigs in working in Texas Jan. 25, 1981. A week later, Feb. 1, there were 1,249.

The IADC found 148 rigs in New Mexico Feb. 1. That's four less than the previous week.

Internationally, the rig count is climbing. The IADC counted 210 rigs in Africa during December, 240 in Europe, 249 in the Far East, 536 in Latin America, 170 in the Middle East, and 41 in the South Pacific. Those totals equal, or excede by a few, the previous month's tally.

MGF completes dual oil, gas discovery

MGF Oil Corporation has announced completion of a discovery oil and gas well on its Southwest Norge prospect in Grady County, Oklahoma. The Methvin No. 1-12 flowed at a daily rate of 525 barrels of oil and one million cubic feet of natural gas with no water during a 24 hour test. Flowing tubing pressure was 350 psi through a 32/64 inch choke from the Deese-Charlson formation. The Deese-Charlson formation was encountered at 12,096 feet. Perforations from 12,106 feet to 12,276 feet indicate a net pay zone of 52 feet. The well was drilled to a total depth of 12,404 feet on the 633 acre leaseblock.

R. O. "Jack" Major, president of MGF, said that MGF plans to continue development of this field with the drilling an additional three wells. In addition, MGF owns additional acreage with varying working interests in two adjacent sections in which there are potential locations.

Bell Petroleum Services, Inc. has announced the purchase of Pioneer Machine and Tool Company of Athens for cash and notes. The acquisition becomes effective immediately.

Pioneer manufactures quality oil tools, including oil savers and other swabbing equipment related to production manufactured by Bell Petroleum's Bell Rubber Division.

Bell president, E.E. Runyan, in announcing the acquisition, said that Pioneer would be integrated into the Company's Bell Rubber Division. Pioneer's metal products are mechanically compatible with Bell Rubber's oil field rubber products. As a result, no retooling of the Company will be required.

The addition of Pioneer to Bell should increase the Company sales by approximately $1.5 million during the first year, Runyan said. This represents about 10 percent of Bell Petroleum's total sales in fiscal 1981, or about 20 percent of Bell Rubber's 1981 sales.

The blocks lie directly east of Kinsale Head gas field and are approximately 40 miles southeast of Cork, Republic of Ireland.

The terms of the agreement call for new seismic data to be acquired over the blocks within a twelve-month period, during which time the Texas Gas Group can elect to drill a well in any one of the blocks for a net 50 percent interest in such block. There are further options to drill a well in each of the two remaining blocks to earn similar 50 percent interests. The cost of all seismic and farm-in wells will be borne by the Texas Gas Group.

After drilling each well, the final ownership in the respective blocks would be: Texas Gas Exploration, 20 percent; Bula, 12 1/2 percent; Pogo, 10 percent; and Candecca, 7 1/2 percent. Marathon, which currently owns a 100 percent interest, would retain a 50 percent ownership.

If a definitive agreement is reached between the parties, Seagull and Resources will be equity participants in the initial phase of construction of the proposed Seagull Offshore System (SOS). SOS has obtained all of the necessary government approvals for the construction of a 24-inch diameter natural gas pipeline extending a total distance of 258 miles parallel to the texas coast in state waters. When completed, SOS will extend from a point offshore Cameron County, north of Brownsville, to a connection with Seagull's existing Shipwreck System offshore Galveston County.

The initial phase of the SOS will be 40 miles long with a construction cost of between $40-$50 million. This initial phase, located in the Matagorda Island Area, will provide a connection to a Seagull-operated gas processing plant near Port O'Connor, Texas. Seagull will be the project manager and operator of the pipeline. InterNorth has indicated that its affiliates have substantial proven and potential reserves in the area that could be economically transported through the initial segment of the SOS.

HOUSTON — Templeton Energy, Inc. has announced the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission has ruled that gas production from the Medina Sand within two western counties of New York State will qualify for higher prices under Section 107 of the Natural Gas Policy Act. The highest price for which such gas may be sold rises to over $5.14 per MMBTUs in January, 1982. One thousand cubic feet of gas contains approximately one million British Thermal Units of heat (MMBTUs). The tight sand gas price escalates monthly pursuant to statutory formulas contained in the Act.

The two counties in which production qualifies for the higher price are Chautauqua and Cattaraugus. Templeton currently has approximately 72,000 net undeveloped acres located within these two counties on which an estimated 600 additional wells could be drilled, based on one hundred and twenty (120) acre spacing.

Templeton currently has approximately 86 wells which immediately qualify for the higher price. Templeton has, for its own account, two drilling rigs active in these two counties, and will continue to dedicate them to development of this area. The success ratio in the area is approximately 90 percent.

The filing with the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission for the higher gas price was jointly sponsored by Templeton Energy, Inc. and Envirogas, Inc., a privately held company, but applies to any Medina Sand production within the two counties from wells drilled after July 16, 1979.

How to explain the sudden stock price rebound

By DAVID W. DEITCH
Hearst Feature Service

NEW YORK — How to explain the sudden rebound in stock prices? The fundamentalist view has it that the Federal Reserve Board's monetary policy has exhausted its depressing impact on the financial markets. A widely-expected discount rate hike was taken off the Fed's immediate agenda. Can you imagine the responsibility of raising interest rates while unemployment is climbing to the highest levels in a generation?

••••

An interest rate hike now would almost certainly transform the current recession into a depression, says chief economist Edward Yardeni of E.F. Hutton. The Reagan administration, the Fed and Wall Street may be beginning to run scared. Is the market recovery saying that the alternative to collapse is an inflationary boom — before the 1982 elections?

••••

Stan Weinstein, who heads the Professional Tape Reader, Hollywood, Fla., says the stock market had become "deeply oversold" and was looking for an excuse to rally. His advice: take profits when the Dow moves into the 880-890 range and then look out. He's still bearish for the longer term, believes that the market will break under its 1981 low, possibly in the March-May period. This will produce enough bad feeling to ultimately bring on the true-blue bull market.

••••

Did you see the report about Bendix Corp. wanting to keep its $500 million pool of cash in short-term investments instead of expanding its business? Bendix will make $74 million from this practice in its fiscal year ending next September, a lot more percentage-wise than it makes from producing things. One can't help but think of the pre-1929 period when corporations put their funds into the stock market rather than produce the goods.

John Schulz of Brean Murray Foster Securities says that the volatility of the bond market has made stocks much less speculative than fixed-income investments.

Although inflation has eased, the real rate of interest (the result of adjusting the actual yeild on a security for expected inflation) is at least double traditional levels. The Reagan administration has complained that "erratic" monetary policy is producing high rates, not the budget deficit. In some support of this contention, economists at Data Resources, Inc., say they have econometric evidence that increased volatility has been a significant factor in higher real rates.

The stock market, as measured by Standard & Poor's 500 index, has dropped less than industrial production in this business cycle. So far, at least.

The American Council for Capital Formation, a Washington lobbying group organized to raise the average rate of profit in corporate enterprise, is pushing to lower or eliminate the holding period for easy tax treatment on capital gains.

The rally in bonds certainly prodded the stock market in a similar direction. But utility stocks, often bought as a replacement for interest-sensitive bonds, was also a good harbinger of the rebound. Mutual funds specializing in gold shares did better than the market as a whole last week, a sign, perhaps misplaced, of confidence in the interest rate outlook.

Oil prices falling, oil producers might meet

NEW YORK (AP) — Wholesale prices of crude oil and refined products have fallen sharply recently, intensifying pressure on oil producers around the world to lower their selling prices and reduce production.

The decline also has prompted the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries — which accounts for nearly half the free world's oil producion — to consider a special meeting to review prices.

The drop, spurred by conservation and economic recession in the industrialized West, has little immediate effect on retail prices paid by consumers. Retail dealers often keep part of the savings to improve their profit margins and offset higher operating costs.

But if the trend continued, prices at all levels would be forced down.

To head off such a trend, Mana Said Otaiba, president of OPEC and the oil minister of the United Arab Emirates, said in London on Friday that he might call a special meeting of OPEC oil ministers to consider cutting prices and production.

The group was not scheduled to meet until May, but recent weakness in oil markets has made it increasingly difficult for member countries to sell as much oil as they would like. Industry sources say some OPEC members are offering customers disguised discounts to bolster their sales.

Stephen A. Smith, director of energy services at Data Resources Inc., an economic research firm, estimates that retail gasoline prices have fallen about 5 or 6 cents a gallon in the past year, to an average for all grades of about $1.33 a gallon, and that home heating oil prices are about 5 cents lower than a year ago, at about $1.22 a gallon.

On spot markets, where oil that is not under long-term contract is traded, Saudi Arabian Light crude is selling far below its official contract price of $34 a barrel. One trade source said at least two cargoes of Saudi Light were sold Thursday at a delivered price of less than $33 a barrel.

Although less than 5 percent of the world's oil is trade on spot markets, the market's trends influence the pricing decisions of major producers such as Saudi Arabia, which is the world's largest oil exporter.

Otaiba, in saying a special OPEC meeting may be convened soon, stressed that a reduction in Saudi Arabia's $34-a-barrel price — which is the benchmark for other OPEC prices — was "out of the question."

More likely is a substantial reduction in Saudi production, analysts say, aimed at drying up the excess oil awash on international markets and preventing further price declines. Saudi Arabia currently is producing an estimated 8.5 million barrels daily, or more than half of OPEC's totoal output.

The pressure to cut selling prices extends beyond OPEC. Sources in London said Friday that British National Oil Corp. had proposed a price cut of $1.50 a barrel to be applied to all grades of crude produced in the North Sea, where prices range from $36.10 to $36.60 a barrel.

Reading the fine print

Like a lot of others, when President Reagan announced his planned shift of more than 40 federal programs to state and local governments, it sounded like a dream come true. It sounded so good, in fact, that we didn't really bother with the fine print or, if you will, the bottom line.

But as U.S. Rep. Kent Hance of Lubbock has pointed out, this massive change in federalism would have to be paid for by someone and Texas, particularly the Texas oil man, will be paying more than a fair share. At least as things appear at this point.

Well, we've seen the gift horse's teeth and while we don't want to refuse the gesture, frankly we think the financing schedule of the president's program stinks. Of the $28 billion fund to finance the programs at the state and local levels, $16.7 billion would be generated by the windfall profits tax on crude oil. And Texas would end up paying nearly 22 percent of the $28 billion price tag.

We're 100 percent behind the president's proposal (except for the financing plan, of course), but this really isn't what we had in mind. The concept is beautiful. Return much of the control absorbed by the federal bureaucracy over the past couple of decades to the states and the local governments. Give those entities the "power" and the "responsibility" to administer the programs and toss in the cash to cover the cost of doing the job. What we think would result is more efficient programs at less cost, with a significant reduction in the "red tape" that strangles Americans when they come into contact with the Washington bureaucracy.

But that was before we really thought about the financing plan and what it would mean. That plan suggests that in addition to the $16.7 billion to be put into the fund from the windfall profits tax, another $6.1 billion be collected from taxes on alcoholic beverages, $2.7 billion from tobacco taxes and $300 million from telephone taxes.

What the plan doesn't specifically state is that Texas would wind up the "whipping boy" in this great federalism change, penalized because of the enormous energy wealth that lies beneath her land surface. Making the financing concept doubly dastardly is the fact that the oil industry gets to play the fall guy twice, once in getting put on the receiving end of an unfair excise tax and once in getting to finance a reduction in the power and scope of the federal government which is something the industry has sought quite some time.

Now most oil men would probably tell you they would be willing to do more than their share financially just to receive the good this federalism change would mean for all Americans. But the plan is a little too lopsided. Having Texans subsidize the fraud and waste of the rest of the nation to the tune of $16.7 billion is a little much to swallow.

No part of the nation should bear the brunt of bringing about this change. But even more than that, tying the change to the windfall profits tax means, in effect, making that tax permanent. And we'll take this opportunity to remind Mr. Reagan that his tune was a lot different concerning the WPT when he was just running for president.

We still support the president and his federalism plan. Financing it on the back of the oil industry simply will not fly.

Quotes to remember

Quotable quotations of late speak of the joyful rescue of Brig. Gen. James L. Dozier in Italy, and the joyless paralysis of the Iranian government under the dictatorship of the Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini.

An expert on terrorism, Brian Jenkins of the Rand Corporation rejoiced over the freeing of the American hostage and addressed himself to the skeptics who think everything goes wrong in Italy. He said:

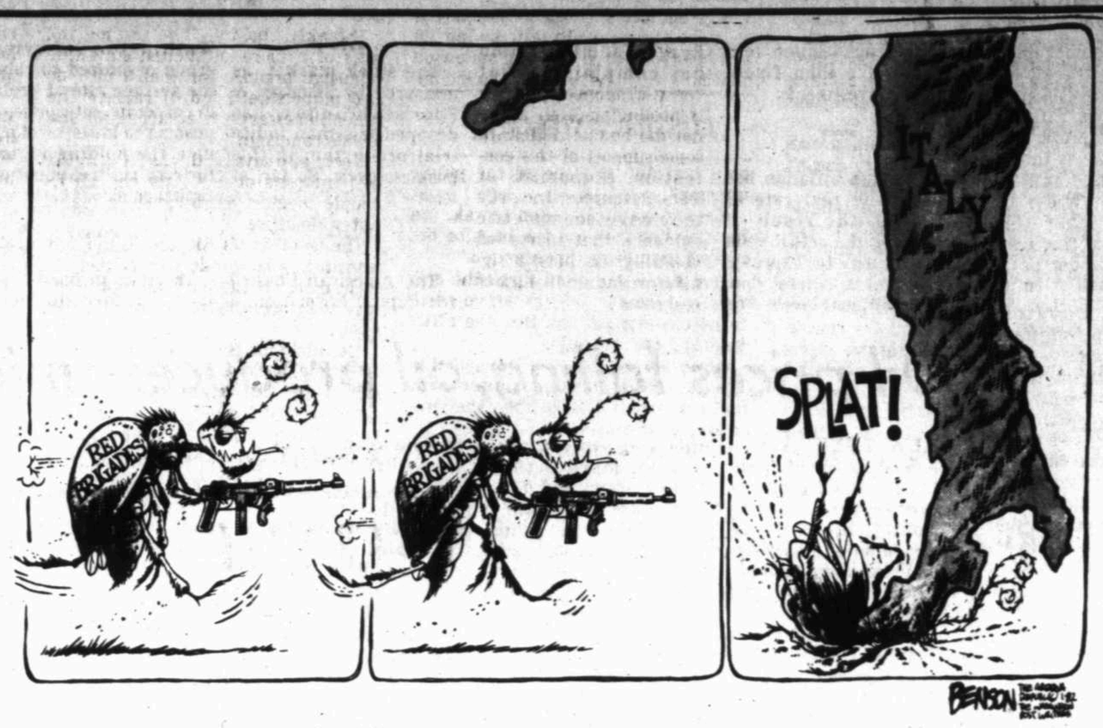
"Everybody has this unjustified tendency to think that nothing works in Italy, so why should the police? The truth is that there are 2,000 terrorists in jail — including the top leadership of the Red Brigades."

The estimate of the extent of Iranian chaos under Khomeini was made by one who should know, deposed President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr. He sits restlessly in a Paris apartment, cooling his heels until he gets a chance to go home. Said the banished Bani-Sadr of the man who banished him:

"If he had paid more attention to management and organization, he could have reigned for a century without opposition. But the state has no organization except one to carry out repression. There are only armed groups fighting other armed groups."

Bani-Sadr's gloomy conclusion about the Iran that ousted Shah Pahlevi in order to get the country moving again was:

"The country is simply paralyzed."



WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

New Zealand keeping Soviet Union at bay

WASHINGTON — While the Soviets have kept up their remorseless pressures from Afghanistan to Latin America, they have also not been idle in the vast reaches of the South Pacific. Fortunately, the free world's flank in this strategic region is protected by one of the United States' staunchest and quietest allies — New Zealand.

Jack Anderson

The Russians have done their best to gain a foothold in the tiny, defenseless island nations that have won their independence in recent years. The New Zealanders have made it their business to keep the Soviets out, and so far they have succeeded — no small feat for a nation of 3 million isolated from its powerful allies.

My associate Dale Van Atta went to New Zealand to get the story. He interviewed the outspoken prime minister, Robert D. Muldoon, and the chief of the Security Intelligence Service, Richard Molineaux. I have also had access to top-secret U.S. intelligence reports on the low-key power struggle between New Zealand and the Soviet Union in the South Pacific.

Muldoon explained that New Zealand, because of the necessary limitations imposed by its size, works most effectively through the 13-member South Pacific Forum. This covers the vast expanse from the Equator to the South Pole and Papua New Guinea on the west to the Cook Islands on the east.

"It's mostly water," he said drily, "but it's of very great strategic importance."

If New Zealand has one primary aim, "it's to see that the Soviet Union doesn't get a land-based presence in that area through some kind of association with one of the independent states."

New Zealand targets 70 percent of its foreign aid to the independent island groups. "As long as we keep the Forum cohesive," he said, "then none of these independent states is likely to become a satellite of the Soviet Union."

Several years ago, Muldoon said, the Soviets made a major effort to "get alongside one of the governments in the South Pacific, but without success." At the moment, he said, two new governments — in the Solomon Islands and Vanuatu (formerly the New Hebrides) — "are a little bit tentative about whom they're going to get close to."

But Muldoon added confidently: "I'm not greatly concerned about it, because the Forum now has a cohesiveness of its own." The members have close trade and political ties, and so far have seen no advantage in responding to overtures from the Kremlin.

In fact, the Russians suffered some embarrassing rebuffs in the region when they proffered development aid to some of the island groups. Western Samoa and Tonga rejected a Soviet offer of public works projects in return for port facilities for Russian trawlers. Some of the tiny nations even spurned a Soviet offer to provide a scientific ship for an ocean resources survey.

Most humiliating of all for the Kremlin, though, has been the refusal by the 11 independent island groups to allow the Soviets to establish resident embassies in their territory. The Soviet ambassador to Australia, for example, must handle his country's diplomatic representation to Fiji, and may soon have to expand his jurisdiction to Vanuatu as well. The Soviet ambassador to New Zealand was also accredited to Tonga and Western Samoa, while the Soviet presence in Papua New Guinea — if any — will be handled by the embassy in Jakarta, Indonesia.

As for New Zealand itself, the Soviets have been making a classic unsubtle attempt at subversion through the labor unions. Secret intelligence reports compare their infiltration techniques to those tried in the United States during the 1930s. They have made some strides: Members of the Soviet-oriented Socialist Unity Party have gained leadership positions in some unions.

There was at least one embarrassing backfire in the Kremlin's heavyhanded attempts at subversion. The last Soviet ambassador was kicked out of New Zealand two years ago when he was caught making an illegal $30,000 cash payment to one of his hirelings in the Socialist Unity Party.

SIS Chief Molineaux shrugged off this intelligence coup with the observation that "we have a little army, a little police force and a little security service."

He was being too modest. CIA sources said the New Zealand intelligence service is extremely capable for its size. And a number of top-secret U.S. documents show by their distribution list that they are shared with New Zealand on a routine basis.

The Pentagon also considers New Zealand a first-rate ally, and depends on its modest military force in future emergencies, just as it did in Korea and Vietnam. The importance of a dependable ally in the South Pacific is underlined by the fact that the United States has reduced its own strength in the region to respond to emergencies elsewhere, particularly in the Persian Gulf.

Close ties between the United States and New Zealand are likely to continue, according to intelligence reports, especially with Muldoon in power. As for his feelings toward Washington, Muldoon is high on President Reagan. "I like him," he said. "He's a very attractive personality, a very charming man. He keeps his word. He has given us certain assurances, and he has carried them out."

Although he recalled having "a first-class discussion" with Reagan at a White House lunch, what he remembered most about a similar meeting with Jimmy Carter was a pair of peanut cufflinks he was given as a souvenir.

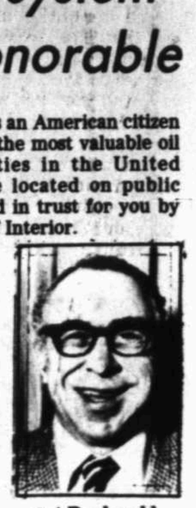
ART BUCHWALD

Indians think honor system not honorable

Did you know as an American citizen you own some of the most valuable oil and gas properties in the United States? They are located on public lands and are held in trust for you by the Department of Interior.



Art Buchwald

Did you also know that the oil companies you leased the lands to, shafted you out of an estimated $650 million dollars in oil royalties for 1981, and probably billions of dollars in previous years by underreporting how much of your oil they took out of the ground?

Were you also aware that anywhere from 2 to 6 percent of all your gas and oil was just stolen from the oil fields and tank farms, and no one has done a thing about it?

I didn't know about it until I read a recent report by a Reagan Commission which investigated fraud and mismanagement of the country's oil and gas reserves.

"What happened to my royalties?" you may be asking.

No one rightly knows, and if he or she does they're not making a big deal of it.

This apparently is how the system worked. Every once in a while when someone at the Interior Department had nothing better to do, he would call up one of the oil companies which had a lease on public land and say, "What's up?"

The oil company executive would say angrily, "What are you doing, checking up on us?"

"Of course not. I was just curious how much oil and gas you were taking out of the ground?"

"We're lucky to get three cups a day," the oil company executive would reply. "It's really tough drilling on public land. You never know when you are going to hit a rock."

"The secretary was wondering if you could give him any idea how much royalties we can expect from your operation this year?"

"You mean to tell me with all the government has to do, you're bugging me for a few lousy royalty bucks? We'll tell you at the end of the year. The way things are going you could owe us money."

"Don't you have any idea how much oil and gas you hope to take out of the ground?"

"Look, when we signed your lease, you put us on the 'honor system' and made each us responsible for our own reporting. When we know how much oil and gas we took out, we'll tell you."

"Don't get mad. We're not questioning your figures. But Congress says we're supposed to keep tabs on you people, and any figure you could give us is acceptable."

"I should hope so. The honor system is as sacred to the oil industry as it is to West Point."

"Just for my own information, how do you know how much oil and gas you take out a well?"

"It's a very complicated procedure. We have a guy who sits on a stool next to the well and he counts how much oil or gas comes out, with a pocket calculator. Then he turns those figures over to the foreman who subtracts any oil that spilled into the ground. The foreman sends these figures to the home office for verification."

"And what happens to them then?"

"The home office decides how much we should report to the government."

"That seems a fair way to do it. Are we allowed to audit your figures?"

"Sure you are, but that would mean you didn't trust us, and then the whole honor system would break down. Is that what you people want?"

"Of course not. We wouldn't be doing business with you guys if we didn't think you were honest."

"You got any other questions you want to ask?"

"No, you've satisfied me. Is there anything I can do for you?"

"Yeh, you could. Get the American Indians off our backs. They think they're not getting their fair share of royalties, and they want to do away with the honor system."

"That's unforgivable. I'll talk to the head of the Bureau of Indian Affairs right away."

BIBLE VERSE

Serve Jehovah with fear, and rejoice with trembling. Ps. 2:11

GEORGE F. WILL

Subsidizing Poland's generals isn't a measure of toughness

WASHINGTON — Everyone needs a hobby and Teddy Gleason's hobby is stiffening U.S. foreign policy. He is head of the International Longshoremen's Association, and if the Reagan administration will not seriously restrict trade with the Russian and Polish regimes that are brutalizing Poland's labor movement, Gleason's men may do it, as they have before.

George F. Will

Gleason's foreign policy would be a distinct improvement on the government's. The government has paid $71 million to U.S. banks in lieu of interest payments Poland owes on loans the U.S. government guarantees. The payment was contrary to the law, which requires prior notice of default. Indeed, the purpose of this surreptitious payment was to prevent Poland from being declared in default, which would disrupt East-West trade and efforts to resuscitate detente.

"The United States," says Secretary of State Alexander Haig, "has made it clear that we will not do business as usual with either Poland or the Soviet Union while repression in Poland continues." Indeed, it is highly unusual to ignore U.S. law in order to subsidize Poland's martial law. To do otherwise, Haig says, would "bring down the temple of Western unity." Temple? All that would be brought down would be the earnings of some foolish bankers.

Eastern Europe's economies, which help sustain Russia's war economy, have received Western loans four times the value of all American aid to Western Europe during the Marshall Plan. Russia is so pressed for hard currency it is asking Japanese and West German companies to stretch out payments for goods shipped to Russia. Yet, as the Wall Street Journal says, the administration is "slipping into tacit collaboration with martial law by making it easier for the Soviet bloc to finance repression."

Even before the $71 million payment, administration policy regarding Poland was dismally congruent with the general Western response, which The Economist magazine says will be remembered as the Great Handwringing of 1981-82. Democrats are noticing the opportunity to pluck from the administration's palsied grasp the falling flag of national honor, and to do so by opposing bankers on behalf of a large ethnic group.

Haig has had his way with the U.S. response to Poland's crisis and has become a hostage to fortune. He says the crisis has just begun and America must hold all serious measures in reserve for when the going gets rough. But what additional suffering by Poland could provoke action from people who worship at the "temple" of allied unity?

In Cuba, Russia long ago repealed the Monroe Doctrine and now, with the recent arrival of heavy bombers, advanced fighters and 63,000 tons of war material, it is shredding whatever is left of whatever agreement was reached at the end of the missile crisis 20 years ago. Haig is adamant, and correct, concerning the need for difficult decisions about El Salvador and the source of much other violence, Cuba. But he seems oblivious to certain problems inherent in the conduct of foreign policy in a democracy — oblivious to the practical consequences of symbolism, and to the demoralizing symbolism of America's policy regarding Poland.

Always, but especially when the president is preoccupied with domestic policy, the nation needs a secretary of state with some of Dean Acheson's attributes — someone articulate, intellectual, elegant, ironic, at ease with himself, and justifiably confident of his ability to argue America's case before skeptical elites at home and abroad. The Achesonian combination of attributes is rare, but Haig's lack of them is a problem compounded by a policy toward Poland that is certain to confuse and paralyze the nation's will. In the early 1970s, the rhetoric and other atmospherics of detente — the "end of the Cold War," "an era of negotiation, not confrontation," accords on "principles of conduct" — subverted public support for diplomatic and defense measures arduous enough to prevent detente from becoming what it became: a recipe for American retreat and an incitement to Russian expansionism. Haig then understood the problem and was a corrective force.

Today, administration policy regarding Poland is generating similar confusion and lassitude that will color defense and foreign policy debates generally. Haig argues that paying Poland's interest charges is really the "tough" policy because it keeps Poland under the burden of debt. That argument is entertainingly brassy, but it is too clever by half, which means it is not clever at all. Even if it were true, it would be politically unwise.

Someone who argues that subsidizing Poland's generals is toughness will find that when he turns to talking of other, more recognizable, forms of toughness in Central America, the public is not deferential, or comprehending, or even attentive.

For Harding, investigation hardly came at best of times

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — It would seem safe to say there's never a good time for being investigated by a grand jury.

It would seem even safer to say that for a politician, being investigated by a grand jury around the deadline for folks to file for office isn't a good situation.

And it would seen equally safe to say that State Treasurer Warren G. Harding would have been perfectly pleased to have avoided the attention of grand jurors and would have been quite happy to have been unopposed for the 1982 election.

Up until a few days before the Feb. 1 filing deadline, it appeared that Harding would be unopposed in the primary, or in the general election.

Harding appeared to have a great deal going for him — incumbency, great name indentification, and the ability to boast of earning the taxpayers almost $1 million a day in interest.

But suddenly, it came out that Harding was being investigated by a Travis County grand jury — and several folks decided to challenge Harding.

Now, remember, just because a man is investigated by a grand jury doesn't mean he's done anything wrong.

Grand juries can, and do, investigate many people who are never charged with having done anything remotely smacking of impropriety.

Unfortunately, however, such an investigation can damage folks' reputations — even when the grand jurors report that no problems of any kind were found.

What happens with Harding won't be known for a while — but it seems clear that his problem may have encouraged some of his opponents to go ahead and take on the incumbent.

Rep. Bill Keese, D-Somerville, started to make the race himself, saying he had been looking at "several statewide offices in which he believed the incumbent had not well served the public interest."

AUSTIN NOTEBOOK

Keese says he decided to take on Harding "partially on the basis of the current grand jury investigation."

But, Keese says, that wasn't the only reason — he also felt the office needs to be modernized, and that the office needed more leadership.

However, when Keese learned that Travis County Commissioner Ann Richards had decided to enter the race he decided to drop out.

Ms. Richards, he says, "shares many of my political and philosophical ideals and I have the greatest admiration for her."

"Frankly," he says, "she also has the basis of a more substantial statewide campaign organization than I now do and more likelihood of raising the funds necessary for a successful statewide campaign."

Keese also says he thinks "it is in the best interests of our state and all its people to elect a woman to a major statewide office."

The fact that Ms. Richards is the only woman in a statewide race is likely to focus more attention on the treasurer's race than would have occureed otherwise.

Ms. Richards isn't likely to have an easy time, because in addition to Harding, John Cutwright, Austin businessman, and former Rep. Wayne Denton, Waco, also are seeking the Democratic nod — and Millard Neptune of Austin has filed for the Republican nomination.

Neptune and Denton both have experience with statewide races. Denton has run for the Railroad Commission, and Neptune for Land Commissioner.

But Ms. Richards does indeed have statewide contacts, in good part due to her involvement with the Texas Women's Political Caucus — which honored her with a "Woman of the Year Award" last year.

In fact, Ms. Richards has been talked about as a potential candidate for state-side office for several years — including lieutenant governor.

Part of the interest in her campaign will be in the fact that she will be running eight years after the last statewide campaign by a man or woman candidate.

Corpus Christi Rep. Frances (Sissy) Farenthold outpolled incumbent Gov. Preston Smith in 1972, ending up in a run-off with Dolph Briscoe, who went on to win the governership that year.

Ms. Farenthold lost badly in 1974 to Briscoe, and since then — apart from some Socialist Workers and La Raza Unida candidates — Texas hasn't had a woman on the statewide ballot.

Ms. Richards' effort may end up being compared to Ms. Farenthold's, but the campaigns aren't likely to be very similar.

The treasurer's office is quite different from the governor's office in terms of powers and duties — and the issues in the campaigns for those offices will be very, very different.

And because of that, whether Ms. Richards is elected or not seems more likely to depend on how well she, Harding, Cutwright, Denton and Neptune campaign and how voters perceive their abilities — with Ms. Richards' gender a matter of interest but not great significance in the race.

Save the Canyon

To The Editor:

Today I was told that the park, Wild River Canyon, would be put up for sale due to circumstances beyond the control of the owners. We met for a while and discussed the different possibilities and then parted with a "dream and a prayer."

I don't know how many of you here in Midland realize what Wild River Canyon has meant to the city, or to West Texas for that matter. Those of you who complain about "lack of things for kids to do" should take note.

Here, in Midland, is without a doubt, the best recreational facility in West Texas and Eastern New Mexico. The public is afforded the privilege of a swimming lake, river ride, race cars, bumper boats and minigolf not to mention my own favorite Catfish Pond, at a reasonable rate. People from the entire area bring church groups, scouts, camps, YMCA, etc., and the kids have a great time. Perhaps one of the most unhearalded effots was to groups of underprivileged children given very special rates.

Let's save Wild River Canyon for our own sakes...for today and for tomorrow.

Worth the risk?

To The Editor:

I would like to inform the people of this area, and hopefully a few who can do something about it, of the new auto racetrack called Highway 80 between Midland and Odessa. There are speeders who actually get mad when another driver gets in the "fast" lane and they can not drive fast.

The Department of Public Safety should increase fines significantly to control the speeders. I think the public has the responsibility of providing the patrolmen with the support they need. Do not let your spouse and child die before you do something such as writing a simple letter.

After serving on the petit jury over the last four months and hearing speeders actually deny charges, I am amazed at their audacity. Some of the cases we heard were: 1) a driver going 85 mph blamed another car for following too close 2) a driver was upset for getting a ticket for pulling in front of another driver therefore causing a wreck 3) one person said his "beeper" did not sound off warning of radar so he could not have been speeding 4) more than one said the radar was wrong.

Speeders are not prejudiced. Some drive cars and others drive pick-ups. They drive old cars, new cars, Studebakers and Oldsmobiles. The people are young, old, male and female.

Driving 75 mph instead of 55 mph saves 3½ minutes between towns. To risk lives for 3½ minutes of time, there should be an awfully good reason. Personally, I do not like people risking my life or my family's life to gain 3½ minutes.

Another case

To The Editor:

I was glad to see in Sunday's Reporter-Telegram that the U.S. is taking the case of Polish martial law to the Human Rights Commission of the U.N. But for anyone who has the Jan. 25, 1982, edition of Newsweek on the treatment of the Bahai' religion and its people in Iran, it makes Poland look like the Promised Land.

Over a hundred of their leaders have been executed along with members, including women and children. The relatives must pay for the bullets before they claim the body. One woman, a non Bahai', was executed because she let a few Bahai's meet in her home.

Bahai's are, according to the article, the most peaceful of all religious people. They believe in the brotherhood and unity of man and one God, yet these harmless people are marked for death.

If we lived in Iran this would be our fate, for we too would be considered infidels.

So good people of Midland, Poland has been brought to the attention of the world and the United Nations. Let us see to it that the situation of this holocaust in Iran be stopped so that we have no regrets in the future, for doing nothing.

Unfair fare

To The Editor:

The front page of the Midland Reporter-Telegram on Tuesday, Jan. 26, 1982, was a study in contrasts. The article on the reorganization of the Midland Independent School District referred repeatedly to "Mailey" and "Baressi." Each has earned a doctorate, but other than the initial identification, no further usage of titles was made.

Likewise, the articles about the president of the United States, the speaker of the Texas House of Representatives and our state senator mentioned only "Reagan," "Clayton," and "Snelson." Midland's mayor was continually referred to only as "Akins."

And yet, in the report on the new personnel director for the city of Midland, it was "Ms. Westmoreland" in each case, seven times in all. And in the same story, "Ms. Shuffield" occurred four times. Although I cite only front page stories from one issue, this inconsistency is prevalent in your paper, day after day.

Editorials in your newspaper have repeatedly supported equal rights for all, but this practice makes hollow mockery of your preachments. How long does The Reporter-Telegram plan to continue this discriminatory policy on titles and appellations? Somehow, your catering to the fair sex seems less than fair in this era.

Thoughtless acts

To The Editor:

We live on a corner lot by a stop sign. It's not uncommon for us to have broken beer bottles, paper and even eggs thrown at our house and car. (The eggs resulted in a new paint job for a new car).

We would appreciate it if motorists would be a little more thoughtful where they put their garbage. These kinds of habits leave broken glass and impose a danger for others who use the sidewalks.

The final event was several weeks ago. A fire resulted when someone carelessly threw a match or burning cigarette onto our front lawn. I was unaware of the fire until Gerald Pitts took the time to stop and ask me if I knew my lawn was burning. I wish to thank him for his thoughtful service. A small incident could have resulted in a disaster for me and my family.

Honor due

To The Editor:

A young women's leadership training organization is being officially recognized during the week of February 7-13. The organization, the United States Jayceettes, is currently the fastest growing women's organization in America.

The Midland Jayceettes are members of the U.S. Jayceettes and have been active in the community of Midland with such programs as Multiple Sclerosis, Teen Challenge, Battered Women's Shelter and MARC. In addition, the Midland Jayceettes have donated to national programs such as St. Jude Children's Hospital, Muscular Dystrophy, Rocky Mountain Multiple Sclerosis Center, Cystic Fibrosis and others.

This year, the Midland Jayceettes have had monthly projects working with the elderly in three of our local nursing homes, provided new dresses for 30 local girls for Christmas, contributed food/toys/clothing baskets to 3 needy families at Christmas, and are currently conducting a "Pet Parade" for the benefit of the SPCA.

On behalf of the Midland Jayceettes, I would like to thank the citizens and the merchants of Midland for their continued support and help during the past 32 years.

Right ammunition

To The Editor:

In regard to your editorial of Monday February 11, 1982, "Super bullet is a threat" is yet another useless law that will be nearly impossible to enforce. I agree with the fact that the armor-piercing bullet has no usefulness or need in our society, except for special law enforcement and military areas.

In the editorial California State Police Chief Ken Risen said the bullet would be ideal for terrorists. Assemblyman Tom Bane, D-Tarzana, California, introduced in that state a bill making possession of this ammunition a felony. I find these two statements completely contradictory — since when have terroists been law-biding citizens?

FACT: 75 to 80 percent of violent crimes in the United States are committed by career criminals, most on some form of conditional or early release. Some 30 to 35 percent of career criminals are re-arrested with previous criminal charges still pending. (Statistics based on Department of Justice Victimization Survey).

Again I find this law useless when cities with strict gun laws continually have much higher rates or percentages of homicide and robbery than those with lenient gun laws. Bottom Line: Let's punish the people committing crimes with the laws we have.

Humane help

To The Editor:

Three cheers for the nice person who helped the hurt kitten! However, I am a member of Midland's Humane Society myself and know that NO one called US on the kitten so perhaps M. Dixon meant Animal Control or SPCA?

But Dixon needs to be careful about who is called by what name! Because the Humane Society needs all the help, donations and members we can get! Contact 697-7259 in the evenings if you're interested in helping us help more of the helpless ones.

Watt likely not helping his own cause

By SALLY K. FAIRFAX
Special to the Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

Secretary of the Interior James G. Watt would have been controversial no matter what he said or did. He is the ranking federal official in an administration that is proposing major shifts in national-resource policy. The response to Watt could have, but has not, produced meaningful public debate.

Watt obviously has not done all that he might to minimize distractions. If, for example, he wants to arm-wrestle in public with Rep. Morris K. Udall, D-Ariz., as he did over the Central Arizona Project, he is going to pay for it. It is understandable, if not wholly laudable, that Watt's adversaries and the news media would fan rather than ignore the sparks that he ignites. The problem for the rest of us is that we are focusing on the man when we should be thinking about land management, energy supplies, water policy and environmental protection. One does not have to agree with everything or anything that Watt advocates to recognize that many of the questions he is raising require discussion that is long overdue.

Conflict over how many people should have access to the parks and for what purposes is older than the National Park Service itself. Park policy appears to be a matter that many people — who may be baffled by the array of actors, institutions and ramifications of weightier issues in which the Department of Interior plays a major role — feel familiar with and qualified to speak out on. However, preservation advocacy has dominated policy discussion for so long that it is difficult for many to understand that these goals reflect the need of but one segment of the public and that Watt's concerns are legitimate and important.

WATT HAS SPOTLIGHTED a number of difficult questions about the relationship between park land acquisition and park protection and management. Historically, there has been little interplay between the two: Congress creates parks in response to public enthusiasm and political pressure that have not always acknowledged more mundane matters like park protection and maintenance. The preservation impulse for extending public ownership has been intensified in recent years by the apparent availability of a ready funding source for land acquisition. The Land and Water Conservation Fund, established in 1964, makes available up to $900 million annually for federal or state agencies to purchase lands for recreation. Although the fund has never approached its fully authorized level, it has encouraged Congress to designate for purchase enormous amounts of national park land that are clearly beyond the capacity of both the fund and the Park Service land acquisition budgets.

In May, 1980, even though the Park Service was approximately $3 billion in the hole in terms of funding acquisitions already authorized by Congress, the House passed legislation authorizing nine completely new parks and expanding 13 others. There has been no corresponding commitment to protection and management of the resources.

The Park Service no longer keeps figures on the backlog of investments needed by the parks, because collection of data is so expensive. However, in 1974, the last year for which estimates are available, development needs were approximately $2.5 billion. This creates enormous problems for the National Park Service, for park visitors encountering deteriorating resources and visitor facilities, and for property owners whose land may be placed in limbo by unconsummated park acquisitions. Watt's approach has been to increase the National Park Service budget, minimize land acquisitions and advocate changes in the Land and Water Conservation Fund that would permit using the money for capital investments and maintenance in the parks.

SUCH CHANGES would require legislation that has not been seriously considered because of the storm over Watt's position on acquisitions. Many preservationists believe, not without some merit, that we ought to buy all the land that we can while we can, and figure out how to manage it later. This approach may have made sense before extensive federal, state, regional and local park systems were established. However, even if one sets aside all the legitimate questions about which land and how much land we want to withhold entirely from development for preservation and recreation purposes, and considers only how best to preserve and enjoy these national parks, the wisdom behind establishing more and more parks with less and less care and management ought to be open to challenge.

This issue is complicated by the long-standing conflict over who shall have access to the parks and for what kinds of recreation. The Park Service has always wavered between preserving the parks' natural state while making them available as public playgrounds. This ambiguity has surfaced with renewed urgency in a battle between Watt, who advocates enhanced public access, and preservationists, who oppose roads in natural areas and other intrusions designed to accommodate the masses and their mechanized recreation.

THE QUESTION of who pays for the parks and who benefits when areas are designated for one type of access or another is an important component of another hornet's nest that Watt has stirred. The Park Service has always relied on private concessionaires to provide services for park visitors so as to keep government costs down. Confronted by short seasons of intense visitor use and frequently high maintenance costs due to harsh climate, these private entrepreneurs seek to maximize their income during the peak seasons. This commercialism in the parks understandably horrifies preservationists. At the same time, it appeals to Watt, who has a mandate to increase access to the parks in ways that are consistent with the Reagan administration's commitment to reduce federal spending and its philosophical preference for the private sector.

In confronting these issues, Watt is guilty of having taken on a whole herd of sacred cows. His proposals are not necessarily right; public opposition has forced him to modify or reject many of them. That's all well and good, but Watt is not necessarily wrong, either. The questions inherent in Watt's position are fundamental and important.

POSITIVE THINKING

Four steps to achievement

By NORMAN VINCENT PEALE

This man was failing, skidding from low to low. A long-time salesman, he really was having it rough. Or maybe he was making it tough. Anyway he could not sell, or at least was not selling. Buyer resistance and job stress were getting him down.

As I saw it, the main trouble was that he was letting difficulties frighten him. Concern for basic livelihood — grocers, to put it bluntly — was running him scared. We concentrated on helping him to strengthen faith in himself, in God and in his ability to sell. By getting his mind filled with faith he developed new heart and more positive attitudes. That was his turning point.

Someone showed him a plan for successful achievement formulated by William A. Ward. He decided this was for him; and it worked, sending him forward to solid accomplishment.

The rules which did so much for this man are called the "8 P Plan:" Plan purposively. Prepare prayerfully. Proceed positively. Pursue persistently. Let's take a look at this formula:

Plan Purposively. Planning means choosing the best approach to your objective; right timing; and of course knowing where you want to go. Planning must always be related to an objective. It is all too easy to lose sight of purpose or goal; and before you know it, thinking centers on small daily matters, simply getting through a day's work with the least exertion and unpleasantness. To really achieve, planning with purpose is basic. A goal cannot be fuzzy. It's got to be sharp, specific, clearly defined. You have to know precisely where you want to go, what you want to do.

Prepare Prayerfully. Know the techniques, have relevant information and equipment, then get yourself into proper mental condition for what you want to do. By preparing prayerfully you grow more alert, you get in tune with situations and people, you recognize opportunities more quickly, you become more receptive to guidance and insight.

Proceed Positively. That means to go forward confidently, energetically attacking problems, expecting favorable outcomes. When obstacles or difficulties arise, the positive thinker takes them as creative opportunities. He welcomes the challenge of a rough problem and looks for ways to turn it to advantage. This attitude is a key factor in impressive careers.

Stan Musial maintained a phenomenal batting average for a phenomenal number of seasons. The late Branch Rickey once asked "Stan the Man" the secret of his consistent hitting. Musial answered, "I like the tough pitch. A tough pitch has power in it. When I connect with it I knock it out of the ball park." How right he was. You do not become a star in any line by looking for the easy pitch. Hitting the tough pitch is what does it.

Pursue Persistently. Al Haake, past mayor of Park Ridge, Ill., started life with a terrible stutter. In school he often had to give up trying to answer questions. At play any small dispute or sudden excitement would make him stutter — and the boys made fun of him as words piled up on his tongue. He wondered miserably if he had to be that way all his life.

Then he heard a man speak at the YMCA who declared that anyone could achieve anything he wanted if he wanted it enough and had real faith in God and himself. Al Haake believed this and confided to his mother that what he wanted most was to overcome stuttering and become a public speaker. His mother wisely said, "To faith add something else — patience."

Having read of a Greek orator named Demosthenes who put pebbles in his mouth to make himself enunciate more clearly, Al Haake spent countless afternoons in deserted spots on the shore of Lake Michigan putting pebbles in his mouth and trying to speak. Then another idea came to him: "Don't be so tense."

He continued practicing and exercising, becoming increasingly confident that he would eventually overcome stuttering. Little by little it stopped. And in time he became a compelling speaker, widely known for his eloquence. He pursued persistently and it paid off. It always does.

Believe me that "8 P Plan" is entirely sound. Those four steps to achievement will get you somewhere — to the somewhere you want to go.

Economy ready to explode, recover or lurch

NEW YORK (AP) — Depending on who you listen to, the economy is either poised for explosive growth, on the verge of a lackluster recovery or destined to continue a lurching course.

High interest rates, which brought on the current recession, remain the key to the future.

Interest rates have been climbing for more than two months, and this past week, banks raised their prime lending rate for the first time since last July.

The prime rate, the base upon which banks compute interest charges on short-term business loans to their most creditworthy customers, jumped to 16.5 percent at most banks from the 15.75 percent rate set Dec. 1. But a few banks held the increase to 16.25 percent.

The Treasury auctioned $2.5 billion in 30-year bonds at a record average annual yield of 14.56 percent, compared with the 13.9 percent yield on those securities at the end of the previous week.

Following the prime rate hike, Treasury Secretary Donald Regan said the spurt in interest rates is a "temporary phenomenon" typical of the start of an economic recovery. He predicted interest rates will decline and that the economy will "come roaring back in the late spring" from its second recession in as many years.

The Congressional Budget Office agreed with the administration that there will be an early end to the recession and accelerated economic growth following income tax cuts scheduled to take effect July 1. But it warned of a weak recovery and a risk of yet another recession ahead.

CBO said the combination of stimulation of the economy through tax cuts and a restrictive monetary policy by a Federal Reserve Board attempting to wring inflation out of the economy could "produce either a flat, no-growth economy or a 'go-stop' economy with a spike in interest rates driving the economy into recession once again."

New York's Morgan Guaranty Trust Co., the nation's fifth-largest bank, says, "The upswing in interest rates makes it especially difficult to guage the end of the recession."

Morgan Guaranty predicts a further decline in the economy in the first three months of 1982, a recovery in the second quarter, but no overall growth for the full year.

Edward Yardeni, chief economist at the investment firm of E.F. Hutton & Co. Inc., is forecasting no growth until midyear.

"The Feb. 1 uptick in the prime rate may cause many businesses to reconsider their expectations of better sales and orders by spring," Yardeni says. "Many businesses are hanging on just on the hope of better times by spring. If that hope is dashed, many executives may be forced to close their shops."

The government's report that the unemployment rate fell to 8.5 percent in January from a revised 8.8 percent in December, provided little indication that a recovery has already taken hold.

The Labor Department said that along with a decline of 273,000 people from the ranks of the unemployed, the labor force was reduced by 300,000 in January. Harsh weather across much of the nation last month may have contributed to the shrinking labor force.

"While it is not possible to disentangle the extent to which the month-over-month changes were due to the business cycle or to the weather, the widespread nature of the nonfarm employment declines suggests that no real improvement in the labor market situation occurred in January," said Janet L. Norwood, commissioner of labor statistics.

One encouraging sign, however, was a Commerce Department report that manufacturers' stockpiles of unsold goods declined in December for the first time since June.

Companies are unlikely to step up production from depressed levels or recall idled workers until inventories are reduced.

In other business and economic developments this past week:

—Ford Motor Co., which earlier reported a loss of $715 million for the first nine months of 1981, said it expects the deficit to widen to more than $1 billion for the full year. General Motors Corp., the nation's leading automaker, reported a 1981 profit of $333 million compared with a $763 million loss in 1980. The nation's automakers reported sales of new cars fell 18.5 percent in January from the same month last year, dropping to their lowest January level in 21 years. Imports captured 30.9 percent of the sales last month, a record for January but down from a 31.7 percent share of the market in December, which was a record for any month. New or expanded rebate programs have been announced by GM, Ford and American Motors Corp.

—U.S. automakers reported the number of workers on indefinite layoff rose to 245,900 this past week from 243,500 a week earlier. American Motors said extended layoffs brought on by the industry-wide slump have depleted a fund to provide supplemental benefits to idled employees, forcing a reduction in payments. Earlier, Ford and Chrysler Corp. announced similar cuts in supplemental benefit payments to laid-off employees. The Motor Vehicles Manufacturers Association, an auto industry trade group, reported that auto production plunged 38.5 percent in January from the same month last year, reaching the lowest level for the month in 35 years.

—Leading retailers ended a disappointing fiscal year with severe weather, recession and high interest rates holding down sales in January. Sears, Roebuck & Co., the nation's largest retailer, reported sales rose 6.1 percent in January from the same 1981 month while sales for the 52 weeks ended Jan. 30 rose 8.6 percent from the same period a year earlier.

—The departments of commerce and of housing and urban development reported sales of new homes rose 10.9 percent in December, the third straight monthly gain of 10 percent or more. But the agencies said that for all of 1981, sales fell 20 percent to a total of 426,000, slipping to the lowest total since the government began keeping such records in 1963. High mortgage interest rates have been a major cause of the housing slump. The Federal Home Loan Bank Board said the average interest rate charged for new mortgages was 17.33 percent in January, marking the third consecutive monthly decline from the record 18.17 percent in October, but still high by historic measures. Presidential counselor Edwin Meese said the administration is considering a series of measures aimed at reviving the housing industry, and that President Reagan will outline specific proposals within the next three weeks. The Commerce Department said spending on all new construction fell 1 percent in December from the previous month, capping the worst year for builders since the 1975 recession.

—The Commerce Department said the nation's foreign trade deficit for non-military goods widened to $27.84 billion last year from $25.3 billion in 1980 despite a decline in oil imports. The record deficit of $33.8 billion was set in 1978.

Federal policies scaring off investors

Copley News Service

Bond trading was light yesterday (Friday) and sold off after the money supply figures came out in the afternoon. Traders had expected a decline between $2 billion and $4 billion where the actual figure was $1.4 billion.

This data, however, reflects benchmark revisions and new seasonal adjustments. Under the old seasonal adjustment, the decline in M1 would have been $3.2 billion, closer to industry expectations.

Dale Miller of Merrill Lynch in La Jolla, Calif., commented on the reactions of the financial futures markets.

"The erratic gyrations in the financial futures market have pushed many traders to the sidelines. The risk of being blind-sided by the Federal Reserve exceeds the potential reward.

"From a longer-term point of view, the money supply numbers on which the market focuses contain major distortions," said Miller. "By the use of below-target fourth quarter 1981 as a base for calculations of 1982 growth rates, the Federal Reserve is compounding its stringency in terms of allowable M1 levels."

Adding to the Fed's problem is the fact that it has ceased adjusting M1 for shifts from savings accounts into other checkable deposits, he said.

Miller continued his analysis:

"This is rather curious in light of the fact that other checkable deposits rose $2.2 billion in December and jumped a whopping $5.6 billion in early January.

"With regard to M2, it appears that the Fed is placing itself in an untenable situation by aiming for a 6 percent to 9 percent growth target. About half of M2 is composed of interest-earning components such as money market funds.

"As a result, at least a 7 percent rate of growth is already locked in on the basis of interest credited.

"What does all of this mean to the Treasury bill and Treasury bond markets? The public may be overreacting to the big money supply numbers recently released.

"M1 growth could be flat in February and even show a decline in March. If that turns out to be the case, then the recent surge in Fed funds rates may be about over. Sharply higher bond and bill prices should follow.

A near-term shakeout could set the stage for a major rally and sharply lower interest rates.

In other markets, prices were mixed with the metals and livestock contracts advancing while most other commodities declined, said Tracy Rodgers at the La Jolla office of Shearson-American Express.

The USDA's cattle inventory report, released last week, showed 1.5 million less cattle than generally expected, said Rodgers, adding another bullish statistic to the cattle complex.

As hog slaughter has been declining, so has average slaughter weight, continuing to support the pork futures complex.

Corn prices firmed on an announcement of a larger than expected 1982 acreage reduction program.

Wheat prices eased as traders viewed increased chances of a Soviet grain embargo.

Copper futures remained steady, despite an increase in the prime rate as current prices are already undervalued and have prompted cutbacks in output by principal domestic producers.

Lumber fell early in the week on interest rate pressure, then rallied on news that President Reagan would attempt to aid the housing industry.

Heating oil prices continued to slide because of the recent sharp decline in spot crude prices.

Tightness in deliverable supplies again acted as a price support for coffee futures.

Sugar futures eased on some technical selling.

Disappointment over last week's somewhat inconclusive International Consortium of Cocoa Producers' council meeting prompted a dramatic price decline.

Ths cotton market eased after the announcement of a government set-aside program, which had largely been discounted by the stronger price level of recent weeks.

Frozen orange juice concentrate prices declined on the probability that Brazilian imports will fill any shortfall in near-term supplies caused by the freeze.

The market is now awaiting the USDA crop report due Wednesday.

Gil Nyerges at the technical commodity desk in the Beverly Hills office of Bache, commented on action in the metals markets.

"The big winner this week is silver. We had a move from a low of $8.11 to a close at $8.68 on Friday. In previous weeks silver has been under $8. Very good buying came into the market when we moved above $8."

Nyerges said silver has had a good basing period at $8 and he projects silver easily moving to $10 and then, possibly to $12 by April. March silver could be bought at $8.55, he said.

At $390, April gold seems to be at a base, said Nyerges. "Should we approach $400, basis April, I would sell, expecting gold to move back to $375. I also would sell platinum at $385, basis April, looking for a down move to $350."

Copper has been forming a base, he said. Buy May copper at 75 cents for a move to 80 cents.

New highs have been seen this week in the pork belly market, he said. "My technical work shows that we have seen the top. I would sell March pork bellies at 73 cents for a correction to 63 cents."

In the grain markets, prices are still under pressure from lack of exports, said Nyerges. Sell March soybeans at $6.50 for a move to $6. Sell March wheat at $3.75, projecting a low of $3.50. Sell March corn at $2.76, looking for $2.50.

Potatoes continued to the upside, he said, projecting 10 cents for April potatoes within the next four weeks. Coffee made new contract highs. Buy coffee at $1.50 for a move to $1.65.

State-sponsored insurance idea revived

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — State savings and loan officials have resurrected the idea of state-sponsored insurance of accounts from state-chartered savings and loan associations — a proposal which has not found much acceptance amont past legislatures.

In its recommmendations to the sunset Advisory Commission, the Texas Savings andLoan Department suggests that "some thought should be given to granting the commisioner authroity to apporve a samings and loan charter for supervisory purposes as a means of expediting supervisory mergers, consolidations or acquisitions."

"In times past, the associations have been required to have insurance of accounts ... the prtesnt saving and loan act does not require it; however, for the benefit of the public, the ... commissioner, as amatter of policy ... has required newly chartered savings and loans to first secure insurance of accounts."

That policy has been upheld by the courts, the report notes.

At present, such insurance is available only though the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation.

"To meet the objective of safegurading the public's funds, consideration should be given to changes ... that would specifically authorize state-chartered associations to operate without insurance of accounts, thus placing them on an equitable basis with the money market funds, or in the alternative, to provide some means of state insurance of accounts," the report suggests.

Such changes "would help the State of Texas retsin control over its state-chartered associations, whereas of now, more and more state laws are falling by the wayside by federal preemption of state laws under guise of regulated the state associations through their Federal insurance of accounts," it continues.

The report also criticizes "duplicate supervisory authority" which it says "results in expensive, time-consuming compliance procedures required of the associations by state and federal authorites.

"This department," the report says, "is of the opinion the best interest of the citizens of Texas can best be achieved by strong state regulatroy authroity equipped with the necessary tools to provide a means of protecting the public and the investment of its monies.

"The public should be given the right to invest ... in uninsured or state-insured state-chartered savings and loans that devote their assets to help build a home ownership market ... rather than taking these funds out of the state and even into foreign countries."

That, it says, is what has happend with money market funds, "which are able to pay higher ratés simply because they are not subject to the same requiremtns impossed on savings and loans ... regarding resrves and insurance of accounts."

While the idea of a state-sponsored insurance system for savings and loan associations has come up seeral time swithin pas legislative sessions, the idea hasn't advanced very far - partly because a proposal fro a state insured plan for banks helped lead to the Sharpstown scandal of the early 1970s.

However, the idea has been studied by the State Finance Commission, and the Texas Credit Union Department has created a self-insurance plan for state-chartered credit unions, through the Texas Share Guaranty Credit Union — acredit union for credit unions, which is to make up any loss from failure of a member by an assesment plan.

****

The State Board of Insurance has approved rules and forms — some of which will result in rate changes — for auto mechanical breakdown insurance, effective march 1.

A separate hearing on the coverage was held by SBI at the request of Motors Insurance Co., New York, which reported it was unable to prepare the request in time for last fall's auto rate hearing.

Motors had asked for an over-all increase in rates but withdrew that request; SBI staff members recommended against any over-all rate increase.

****

Texas Credit Union Department reports that the number of state-chartered credit unions in Texas dropped from 518 to 506 during 1981, with six new charters (including one conversion from a Federal charter) during the year.

Liquidations rose from 10 to 14 over the prior year, while mergers dropped from 17 to 11.

One state-chartered credit union converted to a Federal charter.

New charters were issued to Allen-Bradley Credit Union, Houston; QSAC Employees Credit Union, El Paso; Fort Worth Area Central Credit Union; Carpenters Local No. 1266 Credit Union, Austin; Chilton Employees Credit Union, Dallas; and Pioneer Moslim Credity Union, Houston.

Inflation eased as worldwide oil prices fall

NEW YORK (AP) — Though the recent decline of oil prices has contributed to an easing of that old nemesis, inflation, stock market investors seem to be taking it as a mixed blessing at best.

Worldwide crude oil prices have been dropping intermittently since last fall. Even a nasty winter in much of the United States has done very little to reverse the trend.

In the past couple of weeks alone, crude oil prices are estimated to have fallen about 5 percent, and experts have predicted further declines to come.

Not all those reductions have worked their way through to the consumer. Still, moderating energy costs got a good share of the credit for the decrease in the rise of the consumer price index in 1981 to 8.9 percent from the two-digit pace of the two previous years.

The stock market has responded to all this with little enthusiasm, however. In the past week, the Dow Jones average of 30 industrials fell 20.07 to 851.03 for its fourth loss in five weeks so far in 1982.

Big Board volume averaged 49.89 million shares a day, against 55.64 million the week before.

Analysts say the response to the drop in oil prices has been muted in part by the recession that helped bring it about.

There is another problem too. Energy stocks make up one of the largest sectors of the market, and they have been under a siege of selling for more than a year.

Three of the 30 stocks in the Dow Jones industrial average, for example, are oils, and their poor performance lately has played a large part in depressing it.

The list of issues hitting 52-week lows in the past week brimmed with big energy names — Exxon, Mobil, California Standard, Indiana Standard and Cities Service among the oils themselves, and oil-service stocks like Halliburton, Smith International and Gearhart Industries.

Last month, William H. Furth, an analyst at Bear, Stearns & Co. recommended that investors give oil stocks "a major underweighting on a very selective basis in their portfolios."

At the same time, the firm dropped both Standard Oil of California and Standard Oil of Indiana from its recommended list.

In addition to flat prices, rising costs and other problems, Furth cited "the dilemma of how to make money in refining and marketing at a time when demand is falling."

In 1980, when the energy stocks ranked as leaders of a powerful bull market in stock prices, many Wall Streeters were confidently predicting a bright earnings future for the industry based on expectations of a steady rise in oil prices.

The Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries appeared to be able to raise prices almost at will. But now, said Furth, the price of oil has come to be considered "as vulnerable to the law of supply and demand as most other commodities."

In a recent report on the group, analysts at Standard & Poor's Corp.'s "The Outlook" concluded: "Oil stocks, which have been depressed for more than a year, may remain below-average market performers in the period immediately ahead."

The advisory letter said that industry profits this year "would do well to match those of 1981," when they were off an estimated 5 percent.

Though oil stock prices already reflect a lot of the adverse news, S&P said, "the group is not likely to return to the leadership position it enjoyed in 1979 and 1980 until oil prices start to move ahead again in real (inflation-adjusted) terms."

Midland area unemployment up during November

HOUSTON — Unadjusted unemployment in the Midland area jumped by more than four percent during November. Meanwhile, total construction during the month was nearly five times greater than the total of a year earlier.

Unemployment durning November stood at 9.5 percent, compared with 5.3 percent during the previous month and 4.2 percent during November 1980.

During the 12 months through November, the civilian labor fource grew 16.4 percent, outpacing 10.0 percent increase in total employment.

News from the construction front was more heartening: Midland-area construction during November totaled $39.7 million, compared with $8.4 million during November 1980.

For the 11 months through November, total construction climbed to $263.2 million, an 87.1 percent year-to-year increase.

KEEP MORE OF WHAT YOU MAKE. MAKE MORE ON WHAT YOU KEEP.

Beginning this year, anyone who has earned income will be entitled to his or her own Individual Retirement Account (IRA). That means even if you are already covered by another retirement plan, you will be eligible for IRA... and the tax deductions that go with it. The amount you may set aside each year is $2,000.

If you are self-employed you will be able to have an IRA account in addition to your Keogh Account and the money you may set aside in your Keogh Account has increased to $15,000-for a total of $17,000 you may set aside tax-deferred each year.

With so much at stake, there's even more reason to make sure your retirement money will get every possible chance to grow as fast as it can. That's why we strongly recommend you take full advantage of the Merrill Lynch IRA, Keogh and Simplified Employment Pension Plan (SEP) accounts with their unique investment flexibility. It's the Merrill Lynch Tax Defense—your all-out offense against the high cost of retirement. Because you not only enjoy a tremendous tax break, but an opportunity to build a substantial nest egg as well. So it makes more sense than ever to take a good, hard look at our IRA, Keogh and SEP Plans immediately. Just call or mail the coupon for complete information.

Midland National's
NEW IRA:
The difference between simply retiring, and retiring well.

Now you can invest up to $2,000 ($2,250 per couple with one working spouse; $4,000 with both husband and wife employed) in an IRA, and deduct this investment on your income tax return. By the time a 25-year-old reaches retirement at 65, for example, he or she could retire with over a million dollars.

Age You Begin IRA	$4,000/Yr. Until 65*	$2,250/Yr. Until 65*	$2,000/Yr. Until 65*
25	$3,436,569	$1,933,070	$1,718,285
30	$1,933,852	$1,087,792	$ 966,926
35	$1,081,170	$ 608,158	$ 540,585
40	$ 597,336	$ 336,001	$ 298,668
45	$ 322,795	$ 181,572	$ 161,397
50	$ 167,013	$ 93,945	$ 83,506
55	$ 78,618	$ 44,223	$ 39,309

Based on an average rate of 12%. Federal regulations require a substantial penalty for early withdrawal.
*Future value of dollars invested with annual deposits, annual compounding and annual interest rate of 12%. This table is for example purposes only. Actual rates, investment amounts, frequency of deposits and method of compounding interest may vary.

The Midland National Advantage.
To broaden your investment options, Midland National is introducing an 18-month time deposit for the New IRA. You simply open this IRA with a minimum of $500, and you may add to it with deposits of $100 or more without extending maturity. The floating weekly rate is tied to the 6-Month Money Market CD.

Real Security vs. Social Security
Midland National's New IRA, unlike Social Security, is insured by the FDIC. And it's a sure way to get the tax break you need now, while assuring yourself a comfortable retirement later.
