Republican Party delivers a turkey in time for holidays

At Thanksgiving, warm-hearted Republicans in the House of Representatives came up with a genuine turkey for the nation's taxpayers to swallow — a bill to ladle out a whopping $830 million to millions of Americans to pay for converting their TV sets to receive high-tech digital transmissions.

A bill passed before the members ran off to spend Thanksgiving at home and brag about how they are cutting spending (while bringing home the federal bacon to their districts), requires TV broadcasters to switch to all-digital transmissions by December 2008.

Some 21 million households are dependent on free, over-the-air TV, and will need converter boxes to keep receiving their television signals after the switch to all-digital TV transmission. The Associated Press says that cable and satellite customers will not be affected.

In the House, Republicans claimed they don't expect wealthier Americans to request coupons for the boxes, so they expect the $830 million would cover those homes that really need help.

In one fell swoop, these generous members of the party dedicated to restraining needless government spending have created a whole new category of welfare clients — people with the soon-to-be-outdated analog TV sets who are digitally impaired and unable to cough up the estimated $50 to $60 cost for a converter box. So the government will fork over $40 and the TV owners will have to come up with the other $10 or $20.

But it gets worse. With the transition from analog TV to digital TV three years away from reality, are there really people who can't afford to set aside about $7 a year for the next three years so they'll have the money to pay their share of the subsidized price of a $60 converter box by December 2008?

House Democrats appear not to think so. They want more money. According to the AP, Democrats are complaining that the GOP subsidy for converter boxes is too stingy. It would only pay for about 10 million households, half the number of homes that would need them. Moreover, consumer groups say the $830 million would cover only about a quarter of homes.

"The funding level provided is woefully inadequate to ensure that consumers aren't forced to reach into their wallets to facilitate the government's mandated transition to digital television," Jeannine Kenney of Consumers Union, the publisher of Consumer Reports whined to the AP.

But the House Republicans and their Democrat colleagues are mere pikers compared to their opposite numbers over in the Republican-controlled Senate. The AP reported that Senators want to lay out all of $3 billion to subsidize the cost of TV set conversion.

Who are these people? Where did they get the idea that every American has a right to digital television?

I've been trying to find a clause in the Constitution that decrees that the federal government is responsible for providing the kind of infotainment now available from television. I can't find it anywhere in that hallowed document.

My father used to say, "When they pay you not to work, why work?" By the same token, when they pay you to watch TV why pay for it yourself?

Happy holidays, America.

Today in History

By The Associated Press

Today is Monday, Dec. 5, the 339th day of 2005. There are 26 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On Dec. 5, 1933, national Prohibition came to an end as Utah became the 36th state to ratify the 21st Amendment to the Constitution, repealing the 18th Amendment.

On this date:

In 1776, the first scholastic fraternity in America, Phi Beta Kappa, was organized at the College of William and Mary in Williamsburg, Va.

In 1782, the first native U.S. president, Martin Van Buren, was born in Kinderhook, N.Y.

In 1791, composer Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart died in Vienna, Austria, at age 35.

'All our dreams can come true, if we have the courage to pursue them.'

—Walt Disney
(1901-1966)

In 1792, George Washington was re-elected president; John Adams was re-elected vice president.

In 1831, former President John Quincy Adams took his seat as a member of the U.S. House of Representatives.

In 1848, President Polk triggered the Gold Rush of 1949 by confirming that gold had been discovered in California.

In 1901, movie producer Walt Disney was born in Chicago.

In 1932, German physicist Albert Einstein was granted a visa, making it possible for him to travel to the United States.

In 1955, the American Federation of Labor and the Congress of Industrial Organizations merged to form the AFL-CIO under its first president, George Meany.

In 1994, Republicans chose Newt Gingrich to be the first GOP speaker of the House in four decades.

Ten years ago: In the first hint of movement at budget talks, White House officials and Democratic congressional leaders said they were preparing a seven-year budget-balancing plan.

Five years ago: Florida's highest court kept the presidential race on the legal fast track, agreeing to a speedy hearing of Al Gore's appeal of a ruling that in effect awarded George W. Bush the state's 25 electoral votes.

One year ago: Gunmen ambushed a bus carrying unarmed Iraqis to work at a U.S. ammo dump near Tikrit, killing 17. Egypt freed an Israeli Arab man convicted of spying in exchange for Israel's release of six Egyptian students who were suspected of trying to kidnap Israeli soldiers. Carlos Moya beat Andy Roddick 6-2, 7-6 (1), 7-6 (5) to clinch Spain's second Davis Cup title.

Today's Birthdays: Singer Little Richard is 73. Author Joan Didion is 71. Author Calvin Trillin is 70.

Education is a privilege, not a right

Societal changes come slowly and gradually so that many people don't realize how drastic the changes are.

One such change is the now-common practice of having armed police officers stationed in public schools.

It reminds me of my friend Tom Fleming telling an audience one day that nobody awakened one morning in 476 A.D. (the year historians assign to the fall of the Roman Empire) and said, "Gee, I'm in the Dark Ages." His point was that the regression from Roman civilization to the barbarism of the Dark Ages was a gradual process.

So it is with our own regression. It's hard to express how unthinkable and unacceptable putting cops in public schools would have been just 50 years ago. It would have struck people as being as crazy as suggesting that everybody attend the Sunday service at the Baptist Church nude.

Yet today when I Googled the subject "police in schools," it produced 3.5 million hits.

The 30 or so I examined were all in favor of the idea. Police in schools reflects an acceptance of bad behavior that was once unacceptable and should be again. It also reflects the trend toward behavior modification and the liberal tendency to criminalize everything under the sun.

If kids want to trade punches, for example, that should either be ignored or handled by hauling the two down to the gym, giving them boxing gloves and allowing them to flail away at each other. As long as no weapons are involved, there is no need to call the police. If I had been arrested every time I got into a schoolyard fight, I would have been classified as a career criminal by the ninth grade.

Keep in mind that public education is not going to be reformed. Between the politicians, the education bureaucrats and the unions, it will continue to deteriorate, cranking out a generous proportion of louts, sluts and functional illiterates. But if it were going to be reformed, the first step would be to repeal compulsory-attendance laws.

Far too many of today's generally sorry generation of parents look upon public schools as a free baby-sitting service. These parents need to be told in the most forceful way that education is a privilege, not a right. They need to be told that if they send a little barbarian to school, the school will send the brat right back home. The message should be: You rear an ill-mannered monster, you live with him.

Public schools need to flush out the emotionally disturbed, the mentally retarded and the juvenile delinquents. If you wish to build separate institutions for them, fine, but teachers cannot be expected to teach academic subjects if they have to also act as surrogate parents, bouncers, psychologists and psychotherapists. In recent decades, society has tended to dump too many social problems into the public schools.

Classroom discipline should be as tight as a Marine Corps boot camp. Under no circumstances should any pupil be allowed to display rude behavior or disrespect toward the teachers and the staff.

Schools and staff should be given sovereign immunity against lawsuits, and suspensions and expulsions should be irrevocable. There should be no appeal. Academic standards should be high, and those who can't cut it should be flunked.

The present public education system cannot sustain this nation. The floodwaters of ignorance and stupidity are rising inexorably. We have college graduates who don't know eighth-grade English grammar or even how many states were in the union in 1945. We have too many lawyers and too few engineers, scientists and doctors.

We have grown soft and irresponsible. We are afraid to condemn bad behavior. We are pathologically tolerant of everything and have abandoned all standards of performance and behavior.

We hire mercenaries to fight our wars (that is what an all-volunteer force is), and our attitude toward government is, "Gimme something and take care of me."

Unless we find the gumption to set and enforce higher standards, our best bet is to urge our grandchildren to learn Chinese. I once asked a former commander of the Strategic Air Command what he thought about the future of America. "I wouldn't give you 2-cents for it," he said.

Texas Thoughts

By The Associated Press

A sample of editorial opinion around Texas:

■ Nov. 27

Austin American-Statesman on school finance:

Whatever the merits of last week's Texas Supreme Court ruling on public school finance, it cannot compel Texas House Speaker Tom Craddick to compromise. Nor can it endow Lt. Gov. David Dewhurst with the moral authority (and political terror) that the late Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock could bring to solving knotty state problems.

And the court's ruling did not inspire Gov. Rick Perry to expand his ambition for public education beyond cutting school property taxes. As a result, the next special session of the Legislature called by the governor to deal, yet again, with public school finance likely will focus on tax cuts, not quality education. That might be OK if Texans could expect genuine, equitable reform of the state's antiquated tax system, but recent experience cautions against hope.

Lawmakers are likely to focus on financing because the court said the state-imposed $1.50 cap assessed on each $100 of property evaluation by local school districts effectively has become an unconstitutional state property tax. The Constitution bars a statewide property tax, but an increasing number of school districts have no choice but to set their property tax rate at the maximum allowed by the state. Thus, the only practical way to cut local school property taxes is for the state to raise other taxes and send the money to the districts. (The state could lift the cap, but Republicans ran on promises to lower property taxes, not raise them.)

However, the Supreme Court also said the amount of money the state puts into public education is enough to meet constitutional requirements, at least for now. Thus, the governor and the Legislature are not required by the court to boost spending on public education, but they have to slash the property tax.

They tried to do just that in a 2003 regular session, in a special session last year, in this year's regular session and in two special sessions afterward and they couldn't. The governor and Republican lawmakers who run the Legislature are eager to make politically popular cuts in property taxes. But too many of them still shrink at the responsibility of governing, which requires them to raise other taxes to make up the difference.

In general, the House, particularly Craddick, has been most solicitous of business complaints about proposed increases, while the Senate, led by Dewhurst, has paid closer heed to those with middle or low incomes. The court's ruling could help break that deadlock because it imposed a June 1 deadline to fix the property tax problem. If no solution is enacted by then, all state school funding will cease, effectively shutting down the schools.

The deadline, however, might not intimidate Craddick, who showed little interest this year in compromising with the Senate or the governor over public education or tax issues. The governor has not said when he will convene the special session, but few expect it before the March primaries. He has a special task force of business leaders trying to draft a tax reform plan, but with an income tax ruled out already, it still comes down to how much tax load to shift to business and how much to consumers.

The Legislature has about $3 billion in non-appropriated money, plus about $480 million freed from the governor's line-item vetoes in June. How much of that $3 billion will go to tax relief, how much to education and how much to other pressing needs will be the subject of intense legislative debate.

Court testimony in the original lawsuit brought by the school districts estimated it would take about $4.8 billion more per year in school spending to meet all state and federal standards for student education and testing. But Perry said it "is possible for the Legislature to implement new reforms that will improve student success without necessarily spending additional dollars."

That's something else the court ruling couldn't change: political promises of something for nothing.

Dear Abby...

By Pauline & Jeanne Phillips

DEAR ABBY: What is the official Dear Abby position on screaming children in restaurants? My husband took my mother and me to a family restaurant to celebrate our birthdays, and two children from different families were screaming their lungs out. One of them, a child about 3, alternately screamed, begged, whined and threw tantrums the whole time. The other child was much younger, but seemed to be keying off the other child. Abby, it was horrible! Our server could hardly hear us to take our order -- and I'm not exaggerating. We could not enjoy our dinner because of the piercing shrieks coming from both sides of the restaurant. Had I done that when I was little, my mother would have taken me outside, if only to make the atmosphere more pleasant for the other diners. The family with the older child ignored his behavior. This seems to happen more and more often, I've noticed. The family finally left, but both my husband and I had splitting headaches from the noise. What, if anything, could we have done? The other diners were as uncomfortable as we were. --

WISH I'D HAD EARPLUGS, DECATUR, ALA.

DEAR WISH: Your party should have canceled your orders and celebrated the occasion at another restaurant once you realized the parents had no intention of intervening. Something similar happened to my husband and me one night recently. The manager of the restaurant tolerated the disruption for approximately 10 minutes, then he approached their table and informed the parents they must stop the ruckus or take their large party and leave. When the door swung shut behind them, the entire restaurant broke into applause. Unless parents have completely abdicated their authority, Mommy or Daddy should know that when their child's behavior becomes disruptive, it's time for a "time-out."

That those parents inflicted their child's bad behavior on a restaurant full of people shows more about them than their kid.

DEAR ABBY: I have a problem with my boyfriend, "Don," that we can't settle. We both travel for work. He's happy to drive me to or from the airport, although I never ask him to. He feels it's a romantic gesture that couples do for each other when one is away for more than a few days. Personally, I prefer getting to and from the airport by taxi, bus or subway -- by myself. I don't care if he meets me at the airport, although he wants to. Don travels three or four times a year, but he often arrives at night. Driving to the airport is a stressful burden for me even during the day. I absolutely hate driving at night. Don was recently gone for two weeks. I refused to meet him because he was landing at night and he lives closer to the airport than I do. (Three subway stops and a cab ride.) He said it was the principle of the thing, and if I didn't want to drive, it would mean a lot to him if I took a cab or the subway and met him at the baggage claim. How do I handle this in the future and not feel like a bad person, because I strongly disagree with my boyfriend on this subject. --

STRESSED-OUT CITY DRIVER

DEAR STRESSED-OUT: Because this is important to him, if you love your boyfriend and care about his feelings, extend yourself and make the effort. It's called "giving." If you can't bring yourself to do so, tell him it's a deal-breaker and see if he is willing to lower his expectations. (Frankly, I agree with him. It IS a romantic gesture.

Pampa goes 1-2 at GM Tournament

By MICHAEL J. STEVENS
 Sports Editor

Pampa entered the 2005 Gene Messer Tournament of Champions filled with optimism. It had every right to. Undefeated going in, many felt it was the Harvester's tournament to lose.

Pampa (8-2) went 1-2, falling to Lubbock Trinity in the fifth place matchup Saturday, 80-71.

On his team's overall performance in the GM Tournament, Pampa head coach Dustin Miller said, "Overall we are not thrilled with the wins and losses. We did some good things but we went over there to win and we did not do that so we did not do what we set out to do so that does give us some incentive and some things to work on."

Both losses were tough ones for Pampa. Abilene Cooper forced the Harvesters to play at their level, while Lubbock Trinity did its best to take Jarrett Kotara out of the mix. In both games, the Harvesters had the chance to put the opponent away, but were unable to do so.

Said Miller afterward, "This was a tough loss. Lubbock Trinity is a very sound fundamental team that does everything well. We had them down and could not finish them off. We shot very poor from the free throw line, 13-24 and they were 29-34.

Sharod Young and Braydon Barker each had 24 points in the loss to the Lions. Kotara has 12. Miller points out that, though the three scored most of Pampa's points, the overall percentage was low.

Pampa will be in Amarillo Tuesday when both the boys and girls will face Tascosa.

BOWL-A-THON

Bowden vs. Paterno intriguing, but...

By MICHAEL J. STEVENS
 Sports Editor

One of the most overused phrases in the latter part of the college football season is 'bowl eligible'. For some, it means you can be rewarded for simply being mediocre. Still, all the blanks have been filled in and the college football bowl season is just around the corner, and though I still believe there are just way too many of these games some of the invites have me scratching my noggin. I know it's the season of giving but come on, 7-4 Florida State has the honor of facing 10-1 Penn State in the Orange Bowl?

OK, Paterno vs. Bowden is intriguing, but based on strength-of-schedule and overall season performance, this may not be the Orange Bowl some are expecting.

Of the four Seminoles losses, three came in succession prior to FSU's 27-22 weekend win over Virginia Tech in the ACC championship game. And they had to survive it. Three of the Seminoles' four losses came against ACC opponents (Virginia, North Carolina State and Clemson). The fourth came courtesy of Florida (SEC). Penn State's only blemish was an 'are-you-kidding-me' 27-25 loss to Michigan. The Nittany Lions dominated almost everyone else on their schedule.

Giants 17, Cowboys 10

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) - The New York Giants' defense bailed out the offense this time.

The Giants built a 17-0 lead Sunday and then hung on to beat the Dallas Cowboys 17-10 to take sole possession of first place in the NFC East.

Unlike in earlier losses to Dallas, Minnesota and Seattle, New York's defense held fast in the final minutes. Safety Gibril Wilson tipped Drew Bledsoe's pass intended for Keyshawn Johnson and Brent Alexander intercepted with 1:47 left. Dallas got the ball back once more but couldn't move past the Giants 44 at the final whistle.

"We felt like if they went down and scored on our defense, we lost the game," linebacker Carlos Emmons said. "I don't care what else happened."

In four games this season, New York (8-4) has rallied from deficits late in the fourth quarter behind the timely passing of Eli Manning. With the second-year quarterback struggling Sunday, the Giants relied on a defense that produced four sacks, two interceptions and two fumbles and pressured Bledsoe into a 15-for-39 performance.

Antonio Pierce returned one of the fumbles for a 12-yard touchdown on the first play of the second half to give New York a 17-0 lead. Defensive tackle Kendrick Clancy forced the fumble when he got into the backfield a split second after Bledsoe received the snap and attempted to hand off to Julius Jones.

The ball bounced out of the pile right into Pierce's hands and the middle linebacker ran into the end zone untouched.

"I didn't know he was in the end zone," Clancy said. "I didn't know the ball was fumbled or if he was just running. I saw it when I looked at the replay up on the screen."

Bledsoe had a different take on Clancy's play.

"It seemed like he was offside," he said. "He jumped the snap count pretty good. He almost took the handoff from me."

The play loomed huge when Dallas (7-5) closed within a touchdown in the third quarter on a 34-yard field goal by Billy Cundiff and a 7-yard touchdown pass from Bledsoe to Terry Glenn.

Cotton picks Tech's offense vs. Crimson Tides' defense

DALLAS (AP) - Alabama's stingy defense hasn't seen an offense as wild or as successful as Texas Tech's — and that's exactly why both teams are headed for the Cotton Bowl.

With the No. 18 Red Raiders an obvious pick from the Big 12, game officials could've made No. 10 LSU their SEC selection. The Tigers would've offered more of a regional rivalry and a higher-ranked team.

Instead, they took No. 13 Alabama, largely for the chance to promote the Jan. 2 game as a matchup of strength vs. strength: The defense that gives up the fewest points in the country against the offense that throws for the most yards.

"That was a part of it, a big part, because that gives the bowl game a special angle that not many other bowl games have this year," said Dan Petty, chairman of the selection committee.

The teams are so good at what they do that the Cotton Bowl could be hyped like a heavyweight fight, with "Something's Gotta Give" a fitting moniker.

Alabama (9-2) allows 10.7 points per game, more than a point better than anyone else. The Tide give up the second-fewest total yards (248.3) and the second-fewest yards passing (154.8).

Tech (9-2) throws for 403.6 yards per game, almost 20 better than anyone else. The Red Raiders also average 511 yards per game, second only to top-ranked Southern California, while scoring 42.1 points per game, fourth-best in the country.

"We know we're in for a tough one, maybe the toughest one all year," Alabama coach Mike Shula said.

He wasn't just being nice. The Tide's two losses were to teams that threw for the most yards and scored the most points of all its foes — and Tech throws for 177.3 more yards than LSU and scores 7.9 more points than Auburn. Alabama was 9-0 and ranked No. 4 until closing the season with those consecutive defeats.

Shula said his team has faced offenses with styles similar to Tech's, but none that run it as effectively.

Bowls

People made it clear Colorado (7-4 at the time) backed into the Big 12 Championship game where the Buffs were promptly stamped by Texas Saturday. Why then is the Orange Bowl even remotely interesting?

While Oregon (10-1) and TCU (10-1) will each face 7-4 opponents in bowls that will pay $2 million or less, Florida State will play in a bowl with a payout of $14-$17 million. Just doesn't seem right.

The BCS did get the National Championship game right, however. No.1 USC vs. No.2 Texas in the Rose Bowl Jan. 4. This game has the potential to be the most watched event on television ever. It has more 'in-game' stories worthy of the media hype it will no doubt receive in the weeks ahead. Should be a great one to watch. And so you know, USC is an early 6-point favorite.

Marlins, Mets close to deal for Lo Duca

NEW YORK (AP) — The Florida Marlins were close to a trade Sunday night that would send catcher Paul Lo Duca to the New York Mets.

Florida would receive minor league pitcher Gaby Hernandez and a second minor leaguer.

Lo Duca would be the fifth major Marlins player to be traded since the end of the season.

He hit .283 last season with six homers and 57 RBIs last season.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Shortstop Rafael Furcal and the Los Angeles Dodgers have reached preliminary agreement on a $39 million, three-year contract.

A switch hitter, Furcal batted .284 last season with 12 homers, 58 RBIs, 100 runs scored and 46 steals for Atlanta.
