Gentry acquitted of complex fraud

James Gentry, longtime former resident, real estate broker and savings and loan official, was acquitted of all counts in a complex fraud conspiracy indictment in federal court at Amarillo Friday.

After a seven-day trial, the jury of four men and eight women deliberated almost four hours Friday before finding Gentry and W.W. "Doc" Taylor of Dallas innocent of conspiring to defraud Hi-Plains Savings & Loan Association of Hereford and misapplying some $3.8 million of its funds.

Gentry, 42, was reared in Hereford and was a farmer, real estate broker and president of Hi-Plains before moving to Quinlan several years ago.

He had been active in civic and church affairs and was a former school board president.

"The acquittal just means what I knew from day one–that I had no guilt," Gentry said immediately after the trial. "The only thing that got me through this ordeal was the 100 percent support of my immediate family and some close friends," he added.

Gentry told a Brand reporter that he nothing against the justice system, "because it's the best there is, but it's a sad situation when a man can be charged with serious crimes without substantial evidence."

Gentry said his reputation had suffered so much he will "never get over the scars." He added that "the damage was done five months ago, and I was guilty in the eyes of a lot of people–it was a long time before I could tell my story and be pronounced innocent."

The moment Judge Mary Lou Robinson recessed court, Gentry walked over and embraced his father and wife, both of whom started weeping for joy in the front row of the audience as soon as Gentry was declared innocent.

Taylor told reporters, "I said we were right all the time, all we tried to do was help them." He said the federal prosecutors are "the criminals because they made innocent people suffer." Taylor is currently facing an Aug. 1 trial date in New Mexico on state charges of racketeering, fraud and securities fraud relating to his business transactions with State Savings & Loan in Clovis.

Testimony in the trial had shown that Taylor and Gentry entered into an agreement with Hi-Plains in the fall of 1982, promising to give the financially-troubled S&L assistance in obtaining high-rate commercial loans.

Taylor opened up a $6.6 million line of credit in December 1982, allegedly to obtain loans, which later were to be assigned to the association. Gentry, who became a member of the S&L's board, authorized transferring $3.8 million to Taylor's Southwest Mortgage business, allegedly for purchase of such loans, testimony indicated.

Taylor later deposited collateral for loans and time-share paper with the association in attempts to compensate for the disbursements, witnesses said. But whether the collateral adequately compensated the S&L for its multi-million dollar disbursements became a pivotal issue in the case. Judge Robinson told jurors that to determine that the crime of misappropriation occurred, they must find that Gentry and Taylor had an "intent to defraud"

Alliance seeks better coordination of arms ideas

HALIFAX, Nova Scotia (AP) — The Western alliance, reportedly worried that it is losing a public relations war with the Soviet Union, has resolved to take "bold new steps" in East-West talks on non-nuclear arms control.

In a declaration Friday at the close of a two-day conference of NATO foreign ministers, the alliance said it would establish a task force to coordinate NATO's position in the various negotiations on conventional weapons.

"Within the alliance, we cherish the ideal that all the peoples of Europe from the Atlantic to the Urals should live in peace, freedom and security," said the ministers in their Halifax Statement on Conventional Arms Control.

"To achieve that ideal, bold new steps are required in the field of conventional arms control," the declaration said.

The move appeared to indicate a growing impatience, particularly in Western Eurogress in talks aimed at limiting the arms race.

In another statement offiSoviet Union to respond to the West's latest arms control proposals and reaffirmed their support for a total ban on production and use of chemical weapons.

They also underscored their support for freedom of movement in Berlin. This was an implicit reference to East Germany's announcement that foreign diplomats must show their passports at crossing points between East and West Berlin.

The United States, Britain and France, the three Western allied powers who, along with the Soviet Union, control the divided city, agreed in Halifax that they could not accept the East German action.

They said it amounted to converting the city's post-World War II dividing line into an international boundary.

Sir Geoffrey Howe, the British foreign secretary, said the North Atlantic Treaty Organization had failed to convince Western public opinion that the alliance is serious about reducing troop levels in Europe and curbing the arms race.

"We have to put our case more

Trade deficit narrows

By The Associated Press

Analysts are cautioning that the steep narrowing of the U.S. trade deficit last month as reported by the Commerce Department is not necessarily a sign of a true turnaround in the nation's trade deficit.

The government reported Friday that the foreign trade deficit fell to $12.1 billion in April from $14.5 billion in March on the strength of lower oil prices and a weakened U.S. dollar.

Separately, the Commerce Department also reported that new home sales in April declined from the previous month, but maintained a much brisker pace than in April 1985

Public and private analysts were mixed in their assessment of the trade report, noting that although the drop in the deficit indicated the beneficial effects of cheap energy and a weak dollar were beginning to take hold, it could be months before further improvement was seen.

The deficit still is running at an annual rate exceeding last year's record $148.5 billion imbalance.

The dollar has fallen roughly 30 percent against foreign currencies during the past year, making im-

We discovered an ironic twist on two news items last week. Our Sunday paper carried a Memorial Day photo of a headstone which had the name of William P. McMinn, a Confederate soldier who died in 1928, Our next issue on Tuesday carried an article and photo of Caudie Ola Brown, who was named Pioneer of the Year. We didn't know it, but McMinn was Mrs. Brown's grandfather.

Joy and sadness this week entered the lives of the graduates of Hereford High School, and of the lives of seniors across the land. They will feel the joy of achievement, of having reached an important milestone and of taking that giant step toward freedom and independence.

They will also feel the sadness of leaving behind a part of their lives–the carefree days of youth–that will soon become nostalgia. They may feel a bit apprehensive about facing a difficult world on their own. If we have prepared them for it, they know they are stepping into a world that they can make better or worse by their own efforts.

We believe our school system and parents have prepared most of them to meet the challenge. And, as we looked over the graduation pictures, the thought occurred to us that we are doing a better job in the education of minority students.

A check of the 40 honor students revealed that 10 of them had minority surnames. Some might say that 25 percent is not good when those with minority backgrounds represented 51 percent of the class(118 of 231). But he encouraging thing is that progress has been made.

We looked back at the class of 1985 and found that the class had 52 percent with minority surnames and 9 percent on the honor list. In 1984, there were only 2 minority students of the 48 on the honor list, and that class had 42 percent minority representation.

Education is the great equalizer. Perhaps, some day, we won't think about checking to see how many of the graduates are from minority backgrounds.

Book nets local painter fame in national art circles

By CINDY SMITH
Staff Writer

A hobby turned into BIG business for Helen Cavin.

"It's funny, I can't believe what's happening to me... it's selling- it's just unreal," said Cavin, author of a new art book.

Cavin, a housewife and art teacher for several years, has just published a book entitled, "A Sampler of Precious Folk", the first in a series of four. It has already sold out in America and Canada asked for three additional reprints.

The book is based on Cavin's technique of decorative painting, instructions, and patterns she designed herself. "It's a pot pourri of decorative art patterns of people, florals, country scenes, primitive country landscapes, fruits and herbs," she grinned.

Along with the book's popularity came bookings to teach, give lectures, and exhibit her work. Cavin now contracts her work through the National Society of Tole and Decorative Painting. Being booked solid for the next year, Cavin didn't believe such a thing would happen.

On a decorative chair in her Hereford home sits a delicate handpainted doll, one of her most cherished pieces. Cavin said she bought the doll from a famous artist. Cavin is now a famous artist and she laughed at the thought of anyone wanting to buy some of her pieces to adorn their living rooms.

Although she won't admit it, Cavin has "made it" with national acclaim. She is known among the art society and soon her pieces will be very expensive themselves as collector's items.

Recently, Cavin taught in Portland, Ore., at the national convention of the National Society of Tole and Decorative Painting at which more than 3,200 people attended.

She also had an exhibition area to display her work and promote her book and pattern packets. To date she has 24 pattern packets available and more are expected to be on the market. "This is just a form of national marketing," she grinned.

Cavin presently has two full-time staff women in Albuquerque who manage the marketing end of her new business.

Cavin will be teaching in 22 states in the next several months plus a stint at a U.S. Army base in Heideburg, Germany, where they will provide her with an interpreter.

Other places abroad where she will teach include Vancouver, British Columbia, Nova Scotia, and Hamilton, Ontario.

Cavin started painting the now-famed decorative art in oils but in recent years she said she had switched to acrylics and will be sticking with that.

What was supposed to be a time-consuming hobby and a break from the everyday has been a life long love for Cavin. "It was a hobby all my life. I've always loved it dearly and I've taught ever since college," she explained.

Cavin lost her husband to cancer about a year and half ago. "And it's just terribly important that I do something with my life," she said. "I taught a little bit here while he was going through his treatments".

Three years before her husband died, Cavin was teaching up to eight

Comedy reflects middle-age marriage

By CINDY SMITH
Staff Writer

In Country Squire's "Weekend Comedy", middle-aged Frank learns to bend over backwards to shoot a moon while his wife, Peggy gets rid of (or maybe just learns to appreciate) the housewife blues.

Taught by a young couple who have everything –a foreign car, lots of money, and even $18 gourmet frozen food entrees– the couple really lightens up in "Weekend Comedy".

Frank, for one, has a new meaning of what a "wife" is suppose to be. And Peggy, she realizes that all the romance in the world (or lack of it) could not change her love for Frank.

Frank, played by Art Kassul, is the man who comes home from work, sits in "his" chair, until Peg, played by Thea Ruth White, has his dinner ready. Then it's off to bed with flannel pajamas all year round.

Sound like a typical middle-aged marriage? It might be but there is lot more than meets the eye and Frank sets out to teach these two young whippersnappers just what marriage is all about.

The two act opposite of Tony, played by Dana Scott Galloway, and Jill, played by Laura Burch.

Zipping around the world, the young couple rents the cabin they first took their vacation in, but Peggy and Frank have also rented the cabin for the same weekend.

Performances of "Weekend Comedy", directed by Joe Barone, will be on Tuesdays through Saturdays at the Country Squire Dinner Theater. Dinner is served at 6:15 and the show begins at 8 p.m.

During a champagne reception after opening night of "Weekend Comedy" it was very evident, with cheering, laughing and hugging, that the two leading actors were being reunited with a third actress, who surprised Kassul and White.

The three had performed on stage together in the Squire's presentation of "Wally's Cafe".

White had explained that "this is the best part of acting– meeting old friends."

White is from a family of actors. Her mother began performing in vaudeville at the age of five and her grandmother scandalized her small Iowa hometown by running away at the age of sixteen to join a touring company of "Uncle Ben's Cabin."

"I've been acting professionally 25 years, but mind you, acting doesn't mean you act all the time," said White.

She commented that an actor wears a lot of different hats to make ends meet between roles. "The funniest job I ever had was being a Mrs. Santa Claus for a Kosher delicatessen," she laughed.

Her husband is a Scotland a drummer, who is going on tour with Anthony Newley. "which is unusual," added White, "he did the original production in London.

(Andy, her husband, also has the distinction of having played on the first two Beatles hit, "Please, Please, Me" and "Love Me, Do.")

Although this is not White's first time in Texas, she did say loved as she always had because the people are so kind here and, everyone's polite. "And I love that 'welcome, back ya'll," she giggled.

After the show White said it will be back home to New Jersey to hope for another role.

White travels around the country performing. She recently acted in the Shakespeare Festival and said she loved doing plays in repertoire.

"This is where you're acting in one play and rehearsing two others, and eventually acting all three on stage, and hopefully a fourth," she said.

She attended the Royal Acedemy of Dramatic Arts in London.

"We did everything, from speech to mime, to verse, even fencing which helps with the body language," she said.

"I thought the world academy was wonderful, but I was given advice by an old, old, friend, he is dead now, but he said 'don't go to a drama school. Go to college. Learn everything you can'.

"Learn history, art, language, philosophy, cooking, any skills that will get you a job," said White. "And he said all these things will enrich you as a person and therefore as an actress."

"For instance, in this show I have to embroidery and if my dear grandmother hadn't taught me, it wouldn't have looked real on stage in front of the audience.

"But these are not hard and fast rules to live by," said White, "people bring some of their own personality into every part.

"First of all be sure you love you acting and love it a lot," she said. "Because acting won't reward you financially. Also, learn to sing and dance because there will be a lot more work. You should also take care of yourself physically and mentally, because you never know what you'll have to do for a part."

White, like most actors, is in it because she likes what she's doing, not for the money- there is none. "It's just a lot of fun. You meet wonderful people. You get to share your own joys with the others that are in acting. But the main thing is, we are here to entertain the people who come and pay to see us," said White.

Art Kassul agrees. He was just a young 'un when he entertained the class, the family, anybody who would let him.

"I used the G.I. Bill to study acting after the WWII. When I got out, I thought I should go into something more stable. And one of my uncles said 'Gee, Art, I thought you'd be a performer of some kind,' " Kassul said.

"Even as a kid I told a lot of jokes. But it's a little easier to get the laughs from the family..." he chuckled. He said he loved to get a reaction when "puttin' on a show."

Getting people to laugh cued Kassul in that he was always interested in acting. "I was really somewhat retiring as a kid and just in order to have something to say I started telling jokes. I wanted to be a stand-up comedian," said Kassul.

Kassul noted that Red Skelton has always been his inspiration. "Back then, stand-up comedians meant being a standup actor playing in cheap clubs," he laughed.

Of many of the skits Skelton put on, Kassul has always been partial to the donut dunking routine. "When I had a party with my highschool buddies just before I went into the army, I did this donut dunking routine. One guy always pretended he dropped his donut..."

Recalling how long he's been in acting, Kassul said it took him a long time to achieve financial security. "I got married," he joked. "It was a big regret (due to acting he's gone a lot) I always wanted the traditional marriage- the picket fence, the kids...

"But it has its advantages. I got to work with one of the biggest beauty queens of the Silver Screen," said Kassul with a glimmer in his eye.

"Betty Grable was THE pinup girl of WWII and I actually got to play a love scene with her," he grinned. Kassul has acted in over 300 performances across the country with her.

Other well-known actors he has performed with include Elke Sumner, Janice Page, and Karen Valentine.

"At that particular company, I replaced Ed Asner and it was a company I knew well and they knew my work well and Ed had a conflict so I got the part," said Kassul.

"Business has changed," said this veteran of the stage. "The old advice used to be never go into theater but not by and large, it is now a rough business.

"It doesn't just happen for just being pretty like it used to. Acting is a lot of hard work, those cases are one in a million. And in most cases it hardly even makes a living," he said disappointedly.

"Most people who start in this business don't ever make a living wage and have to give it up, so you'd better enjoy it..." he said.

Goin' to the Show

Art Kassul who plays Frank, Thea Ruth White, playing his wife Peggy, and the young whippersnapper, Dana Scott Galloway who plays Tony, are goin' to the show since they are the actors in "Weekend Comedy" performing at Country Squire Dinner Theater. Director, Joe Barone, right, is laughing because the show really is a comedy. The play begins at 8 p.m. at the Squire in Amarillo Tuesdays through Saturdays with dinner being served at 6:15 p.m.

"A year ago Christmas I was invited to teach for a group of women in Amarillo and I didn't think I was quite ready, but I did and I haven't sat down since," explained Cavin.

"It was like this was a true blessing, I just experienced something in my life..." Cavin said.

"Few women get the opportunity to travel and I meet the dearest women," she said. The national society that discovered the newly acclaimed artist has an overwhelming membership of 30,000 and is one of the largest women's organizations in the United States.

Cavin has taught at the last four conventions and was one of 70 instructors for this year. "We're a jury group," said Cavin, "we are asked by the board to teach." Cavin said she had 100 students in her three classes – more than she's ever had before.

Tafton-Autry Printers of Amarillo recently published her new book and will be using her art work in a display advertisement for their national magazine. Cavin also has been featured in six articles printed about her technique.

Cavin in the meantime will be teaching at Columbus, Ohio, in August, which is the second biggest show sponsored by a chapter of the NSTPD. In October, she will be busy giving classes at Oklahoma City, Okla., at the third largest show. New books also will be introduced at both of these shows.

"I cannot even begin to estimate how many Hereford women I have taught but several of them will be in my Colorado seminars this summer," said Cavin. She said she missed the women here who helped her to get started and regrets not being able to teach classes here due to travel "I just miss the girls so much," she said. Cavin said she has two friends, Judy Mitts and Shirley Wyssmann, who she calls her "A-team".

"They do all the wood preparation for my shows. They get all the wood pieces together and seal them with a base coat to be boxed and sent on to location," smiled Cavin. She said she didn't have time to get her pieces together and that they were the ones that were in charge of this.

"I was a mother, a housewife, I raised my children and I adored painting," said Cavin. "I've always loved color... but I so feel like if you use your inspiration, you can make all your desires come true."

Her children are very supportive of her new career and she has had all of her books dedicated to her husband, Jim.

"Women do look at me and think 'she is so happy now'," commented Cavin. Her antidote for happiness in life: "To just set a strong goal that you want more than anything and go after it with prayers and determination, and love- I truly love what I'm doing."

Teaching in her class, Cavin's art sometimes acts as therapy. Cavin says she tells "the young ones to do something with their lives." She encourages them to learn everything they can, to study- whether it's painting or anything chosen.

"A hobby can turn into a real business," added Cavin. "I feel like I've really been blessed..."

But on Friday, the dollar continued to gain sharply against major foreign currencies on the trade deficit report and on Thursday's Commerce Department report that its Index of Leading Indicators rose an unexpectedly strong 1.5 percent in April That index is the government's main economic forecasting gauge.

A strengthening economy could push interest rates higher, making dollar-denominated investments more attractive and driving up the foreign exchange value of the currency.

On Wall Street, the stock market backed away from its record highs of the previous two sessions amid uncertainty over the direction of the economy and interest rates. The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials edged down 5.64 to 1,876.71 from Thursday's record close.

Low interest rates, which have pushed home mortgages to their lowest levels of the decade, have been credited for the current boom in the housing industry.

The new home sales report indicated sales at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 862,000 units in April. That was down 3.5 percent from the record 893,000 rate of the month before but still 33 percent above the April 1985 level.

Woman says

Police stole her privacy

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — A woman irked over what police saw as a favor has plastered signs on her car and front door protesting what she calls an invasion of privacy.

Since police entered her home April 25 to check on a possible burglary, Jann Haddad has put up signs including one that reads, "Officers of the El Paso Police Department are requested (since I have no rights) to refrain from searching my home without a search warrant."

Ms. Haddad's car has several signs reading, "Who can protect us from our police?" and "If you leave your home unlocked, the El Paso police believe they have the right to search."

But El Paso police are wondering what all the fuss is about.

The police officer who made the check, Scott Ogrey, said he was dispatched to the home when a neighbor reported its front door was open. Ogrey said he and another officer found the front door open and entered to search for burglars.

Ogrey said they opened closets and doors to make sure no burglar was hiding inside, and then left a message for Ms. Haddad that they had checked on a possible burglary.

"I followed Police Department procedure. I thought I was doing her a favor," Ogrey told the El Paso Times. "If I didn't close her closet doors, I apologize."

But Ms. Haddad, who has filed a complaint with the police department's Internal Affairs Division, said the officers entered her home when no one was there and that "they stole my privacy. They went all through my house."

Internal Affairs head Sgt. Brad Peevey said it is standard procedure for police officers to search and then secure a building where burglary is suspected.

"They got dispatched on a possible burglary call, and saw a door open. They went in and opened doors to make sure no one was hiding. There were never any allegations that they (police) stole anything," Peevey said.

"If we had to wait every time to get a search warrant when we saw a broken window, forget it," he added. "This is the first time someone has complained about police doing their job."

Expect worse, hope for best

Everyone agreed it was coming, but the announcement this week that Deaf Smith County has one chance in three of becoming the site of the nation's first high-level nuclear waste repository still had an impact on citizens of the county, as well as the area and state.

The local reaction ranged from anger and fear the project could ruin a rich agricultural area to optimism that it could provide a big boost to the economy of the region. And, of course, there are those who don't know what's going on and don't care.

Personally, I am against the siting of a repository in Deaf Smith County. Our view, from the beginning, has been–why put the repository under rich agricultural land, privately owned, when the government already owns a site on the edge of the Mojave Desert that is ranked as one of the top three?

Put another way, if states were fighting over the right to get the repository, I'd hate to be on a committee charged with trying to "sell" Deaf Smith County as the place. This is one of the top ag producing counties in the nation; it's an agricultural "showcase" for visitors from around the world; and underneath the land lies one of the best aquifers in the nation. It would be very difficult, it seems to me, to try to justify the selection of this county for the site.

Having stated that view, I might add that I don't agree with the gloom and doom pictures being painted by some of those who oppose the project. Should the repository wind up in Deaf Smith County, I can't believe it would ruin our ag economy, cause a mass exodus of people and business firms, or pose any serious radiation threat.

There is a natural fear of anything that has the word "nuclear" attached to it. But, I have to believe the government will take every precaution and will know what they are doing when the waste is finally, a dozen years away, deposited underground. And, who knows what changes could occur before then?

The decision on where the repository will be has not been reached. We don't want it and we must continue to resist, but not at the cost of telling the world we would be finished if it winds up in our back yard.

As my Uncle Bill used to say, "Expect the worst; hope for the best, and take what comes."

Bootleg Philosopher

Editor's note: The Bootleg Philospher on his Johnsongrass farm on Tierra Blanca Creek dosen't feel sorry about the tourist deficit facing Europe this summer.

oOo

Dear Editor

Millions of Americans, I understand, won't be going to Europe this summer on account of the threat of terrorists, and the airlines, European restaurants, hotels, bars, tour busses, taxis, trains, boats, knick-knack stores, post card people and possibly pickpockets are doomed to lose a lot of money.

I don't know haw many Americans had planned to travel abroad this summer, but they're in the millions. Say it costs each one $3,000. For every million staying home, Europe losses $3 billion.

This doesn't disturb me. It's about time Europeans came over here to look at us instead of us going over there to look at them.

There's plenty to see here. We've got beautiful rivers just as winding and polluted as theirs. Our houses aren't as old or as drafty as their castles and we don't allow tourists to traipse through at $5 a head to pay the upkeep, but they're worth staring at, especially those built by overpaid movie stars.

Our cities aren't as old as some of theirs-some of theirs are hundreds of years older-but it doesn't take a thousand years to produce a pothole. The earth under city streets in Hereford is exactly as old as the earth under the streets of Rome. The same sun that rises in Paris rises here, although I understand not at the same time, if you're looking at your watch here.

Many Americans I'm told go to Europe for the food, overlooking the fact they can gain just as much weight at restaurnats here at home, at prices just as high. Our menues, to Europeans, are prineted in foreign language, just as theirs are to Americans.

Our politicians, like theirs, can get away with promising more and delivering less, and both sets run their governments on borrowed money.

Let the Eoropeans come over here and gawk at us.

Yours faithfully,
J.A.

The Penultimate Word

I thought I had made it at last. A guy ran a stop sign and we almost had a push-and-shove match in the middle of the street.

I was planning my lawsuit and counting my money, but he missed me. At the last second, he saw me and hit his brakes. The worst part of the whole deal is the guy was an insurance salesman. It stands to reason that an insurance salesman has insurance.

Insurance is the ready-made ticket to wealth nowadays. The courts have developed their own version of instant millionaires by giving great settlements to folks who sue insurance companies. It beats the lottery. It beats the little envelope with Ed McMahon's picture on the front announcing that the recipient may have already won millions.

You are nobody til somebody sues you. I feel like a reject in society. It makes no matter if the suit is silly. The idea now is: when in doubt, sue. Matter of fact, sue even if you aren't in doubt!

There is a case where a man was in a phone booth making a call. A car went out of control, crashed through several barriers and hit the booth. The victim's family sued the phone company. That makes sense–the phone company had the most insurance coverage. They won the suit. The court held that the phone company could have had insurance to cover such an event. Whee!

The good old days of such suits may be about over. There is a ground swell of support(mostly from insurance companies) for Tort Reform. There is a wave of opposition(mostly from trial lawyers) against the idea. I don't know what torts are. I asked my brother-the-lawyer. Two hours later, I knew less than when I asked.

If there is to be tort reform, I must act fact. It will be my luck that the reform will go into effect about a week before I finally find someone to sue. Man, I wish that guy had hit me instead of his brakes!

Warm Fuzzies,
Doug Manning

The 'glue' that holds us together

By Richard L. Lesher, President

WASHINGTON – The integrity of our democracy depends upon many things, but few in my view are more important than the underlying sense of community and mutual respect that binds us together even in the midst of our most rancorous disagreements.

That all-important bond was on display recently in the nation's capitol when more than 2,000 distinguished guests convened to honor House Speaker Tip O'Neill who is retiring at the end of his current term after 34 years service in Congress.

On the surface, it would not have appeared an auspicious time for such an event. Congress was embroiled in a heated debate over providing aid to anti-communist rebels in Nicaragua. As champions of the two opposing camps, Speaker O'Neill and President Reagan were at their rhetorical best, pleading for key members of Congress to support them.

But the hostility, charges and countercharges that rang throughout Washington all that week were nowhere in evidence at O'Neill's retirement dinner. Reagan was there, full of smiles and good natured jokes, to show his respect for his political adversary. For his part, O'Neill was equally gracious and witty to the president.

Other political leaders representing both parties and all points of the political spectrum took their turns to acknowledge O'Neill's many years of dedicated service to our country. And they weren't putting it on either; they really meant it.

To confer respect upon one's adversaries is no simple thing, especially when the opposing view are in stark contrast and deeply held. It goes against human nature, which is one reason attempts at democracy in many parts of the world have disintegrated into chaos and anarchy.

That our democracy is stable is due in large part to the fact that our politicians can disagree vehemently without questioning each others' patriotism or good faith. Such comity is not required by the Constitution, but it is the oil that lets the machinery of government function; it is the glue that holds us together.

Two writers oppose nuke repository, compare danger to Russian tragedy

Dear editor:

As I read about the Russian nuclear accident, I feel a great deal of sympathy for the people involved, those who lived close by and will be suffering through the ill effects of this tragedy for years to come. Many of these people probably did not understand the dangers they were exposed to, and could not have relocated even if they had.

In this country, however, we have a choice. We can choose to fight the very real threat that DOE is trying to impose upon us. To those who say that the government would never charge full speed ahead on an idea that did not have all the experts' backing, and could possibly injure people, should talk to the families of the Challenger crisis.

Yes, our government is very different from the Russians. I can express my opinions freely without fear of reprisal. And if worse comes to worst, I can move from this area, of which I am a native. However, my husband and I are both involved in agriculture, specifically sorghum research and production. The Panhandle and South Plains are the best places for this, so where do we relocate?

If the DOE locates the repository here and an accident does occur, we will not be like the innocent victims of Chernobyl. We will be as responsible as the DOE itself, because we had a choice. We could have overcome our greed, our desire for growth and questionable economic benefits and foreseen the final cost that we might have to pay for such growth. We can still be heard, we are not dumb sheep being led to slaughter ... we are Texans, United States Citizens, with the right to speak out.

Concerned
Lisa Blakely

Dear editor:

Since the beginning of the nuclear waste repository issue I have felt a great and urgent responsibility to aid in defending ourselves against the placement of the repository in the Texas Panhandle, or anywhere, so long as the proposed solution to storage of nuclear waste was not sound. I wrote a lot of letters and attended a lot of meetings. And from the beginning it seemed we would only hear from the DOE what their officials wanted us to hear even if we fearfully could not believe in any truth of their statements.

Many documents from varied researchers independent of the DOE found their way into my hands and apparent, horrifying facts and possibilities produced dreadful nightmares of an endangered future with the repository in our midst. The possibilities seemed endless–highway or repository accidents; radioactive clouds transported by unrestrained and far-reaching West Texas winds; contaminated and unmarketable agricultural products; sterile land that had once been the most productive in the state, ranking tenth in the nation, and billed as The Salad Bowl, The Wheat Basket, and The Feedlot Capitol of the World; contaminated ground water and aquifers used for cities and agriculture across the Texas South Plains and reaching upwards to many states; animal and human deaths from the immediate to the long-suffering.

Maybe my memory is bad, but I thought that DOE had assured us that the repository would be safe (so what if it is necessary to leak a certain amount of radiation each day to prevent the whole business from blowing up on us). Our farm land and farm products are secure–no possible loss in marketing or valuable farm land will occur. Highway and rail accidents are unlikely and hardly even possible. Even so, affected areas would be small and damage negligible, and effects short-lived. Water supplies are secure, besides–it shouldn't mix if any radiation did leak into the aquifer. But if somehow it did it would only mean more people would get cancer and it would take them longer to die. Besides–look at all the MONEY we'll be making.

They had better be right, because my husband and I love this area so much that even though our desire to farm took us farther north to share our beloved occupation with my father, we spent three and a half years yearning to return to this so very special Eden on God's earth. And even though the economy and responsibilities of a young family forced us to stop farming, the love for this land is still a powerful force that flows in our veins.

How dare mere numbers determine the value of human life! And how dare they call my paradise a wasteland! where the wind cannot be reined, but drives ahead with real freedom owned by nothing else on this earth. Charging all the elements with life. Where your heart can join the dance of a tumbleweed or whirlwind as your eyes follow its wild, unabashed dance across the fields. Where lush fertile fields cover the expanse from horizon to horizon. Where sunsets and sunrises surely cannot be rivaled and are unspoiled in beauty by obstructions, and the soul can find soothing comfort in their cooling calm. Where moisture from an irrigated or freshly turned field refreshes and charms the senes with its emission of humid, earthy scents. Where quail and pheasant and rabbits bring sudden,unexpected delight to a quiet hiker. And the flight of geese can be turned golden by a setting sun.

But since the incident at the Russian nuclear power plant our DOE officials and nuclear experts are singing a different tune to a different audience, and world response reflects the nightmarish possibilities related to us from those OTHER sources.

Nucler accidents ARE possible. Radioactivity carried by a radioactive cloud canNOT be contained. Farm products CAN be contaminated and unmarketable. Levels of contamination CAN be so dangerous as to need to destroy and quarantine food products and treat people with iodine for possible adverse effects from consumption of such products. Ground water CAN be contaminated by a radioactive cloud. And effects from such a cloud CAN be far-reaching, even to the other side of the globe if the problem of a nuclear fire is not resolved in time. People CAN die. And the Russian plant will be dangerously radioactive for HOW MANY years?!?

Does anyone else feel like they've been lied to?

I'd rather believe the prophet Isaiah who relates–"For thus says the Lord, the creator of the heavens, who is God, the designer and maker of the earth who established it, NOT creating it to be a WASTE, but designing it to be lived in." I'm with you, Lord.

Sincerely,
Virginia Artho

Don't neglect self discipline

In Madison, Wis., a boy, age 11, watched the horror movie "Friday the 13th" on TV and then, imitating a scene in the film, removed his belt, went into the bathroom and hanged himself.

Is the television industry inviting censorship?

Self-government can't work without self-discpline.

Because a few hooks hide razors and needles in apples, whole states have had to outlaw Halloween.

They've taken away our Fourth of July fireworks – and threatened to take away our guns – because some misuse theirs.

Government in a dozen states now requires us to wear seat belts "in our own interest," of course.

As surely as federal health authorities now decree what goes into our mouths and noses, they can legislate what goes into our eyes and ears.

None of us wants more government snoopervision of television – certanly not censorship – yet we invite that when we neglect self-discipline.

In 1972 and again in an updated 1982 report, the United States surgeon general's office concluded there is a link between excessive exposure to TV violence and aggressive behavior.

The average viewer is exposed to 13 acts of violence per hour on television, ranging from pushing and shoving to murder and rape.

Thomas Radecki, chairman of the National Coalition on Television Violence, says the average child witnesses 18,000 televbision murders before he graduates from high school. "Murder is made to appear so easy that we accept the fact of violence in our lives. TV is tantamount to a permit for murder."

When Ronnie Zamora was on trial for murder in 1977 and his attorney was seeking to blame TV, a Miami psychologist named Arthur Stillman was employed by the state to refute that defense.

He testified that television could not cause a child to become a killer.

Dr. Stillman has since changed his mind. Now he says, "With enough exposure to TV some people cannot discern between reality and fantasy."

If you remember Ronnie Zamora at all it's because he was on trial for murder and his lawyer blamed television.

It came to be known as "The Kojak Defense."

In 1977 the boy, 15, killed the next-door neighbors boy in Miami and his attorney argues that the boy had "fantasized," had imagined himself to be one of his TV heroes ...

That the boy, play-acting Kojak, had stood over the lifeless body of his victim and said, "It's all right to get up now."

Tapes highlight prosecution's case

KERRVILLE, Texas (AP) — A death threat, tape-recorded torture sessions and allegations that could be part of the plot in a horror tale have combined to make a trial here more than ordinary.

Charged with violating the state's organized crime statute are Hill Country rancher Walter Wesley Ellebracht Sr., 55, son Walter Wesley Ellebracht Jr., 33, and former ranch worker Carlton Robert Caldwell, 21.

The three are accused of conspiracy to commit aggravated kidnapping and murder in the March 1984 death of Alabama drifter Anthony Bates.

Prosecutors claim Bates, like other hitchhikers, was lured with the promise of work to the Ellebracht ranch north of Kerrville.

He was forced to stay against his will, then eventually tortured to death with an electric cattle prod, the state alleges.

Prosecutors also claim Bates' body was drenched in gasoline and torched.

Forensic anthropologist Dr. Clyde Snow of Oklahoma City testified on videotape that of 166 charred bone fragments found on the ranch, he could say 11 definitely were human.

Snow, who helped identify the remains of Nazi war criminal Joseph Mengele, said the bones found on the ranch were that of a man between the ages of 10 and 50.

Prosecutors claim the bone fragments were those of Bates.

Some of the most sensational testimony during the trial, which enters its fourth week Monday, came when former ranch worker Daryl Hunsaker took the witness stand.

Hunsaker, who is charged with murder in Bates' death, testified the younger Ellebracht forced him to shock Bates with a cattle prod.

Hunsaker, 23, said there were about five torture sessions, all instigated by the junior Ellebracht.

Prosecutors also played a tape recording of one of the alleged torture sessions. Hunsaker identified the younger Ellebracht, Caldwell and Mark Hamilton, also indicted for organized crime, as the voices on the tape.

The tape, made at the insistence of the younger Ellebracht, carried screams and the buzzing sound of a cattle prod, Hunsaker said.

The recording, done in a radio show format, carried the introduction, "Live, from the bunkhouse. It's shock time."

Hunsaker, who drew applause from the gallery several times, told reporters outside the courtroom he would have to take drastic steps if the Ellebrachts were aquitted.

"I'd have to track them down and kill them," he said.

Hunsaker's attorney Joseph Turner has since said his client didn't know what he was saying.

Another witness, Travis Boyd, testified he was chained up with two other men after the three told the Ellebrachts they wanted to leave the ranch.

Boyd, 38, said the Ellebrachts picked him up on Interstate 10 and offered him a job the day before.

He said he decided to leave the next day, but the Ellebrachts responded by forcing him into a chain gang. Boyd said the younger Ellebracht shocked him with a cattle prod to make him work harder as he and the two other men dug a ditch.

Boyd said after he was released from the chain gang, the senior Ellebracht threatened to hang him from a tree limb. He said his life was spared on a coin toss and he later was released on the highway.

Defense attorneys have focused cross examination on discrediting the witnesses, many of whom have criminal records.

Attorney Richard "Racehorse" Haynes has been successful in drawing admissions from two state witnesses that they lied about various details while on the witness stand.

Olympics

The Olympic motto, "Citus, Altius, Fortius," meaning "faster, higher braver," or the modern interpretation, "swifter, higher, stronger," was coined by Father Didon, a French educator, in 1895. The Olympic flame symbolizes the continuity between the ancient and modern games.

Stars perform for Chernobyl relief

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet pop star Alla Pugacheva, declaring "we want to give our hearts," kicked off a benefit concert before 30,000 people to aid victims of the Chernobyl nuclear disaster and help pay for the vast cleanup now under way.

The concert, the Soviet Union's first rock benefit, was held in Moscow Friday night at an indoor stadium built for the 1980 Olympics.

The 2½-hour show mixed hard rock and some touches of the 1940s, and presented acts ranging from the new wave band Bravo to more typically Soviet variety numbers and a poetry recital by actor Mikhail Ulyanov.

Spectators in stands that began 80 yards from the multitiered stage were quiet in comparison with crowds at Western concerts. They remained in their places and applauded most performances warmly, but not wildly.

"Money is money, but we want to give our hearts," Ms. Pugacheva told the audience, then opened the evening with a song called "Twentieth Century."

The red-haired singer then introduced a Soviet journalist, Vladimir Svetov, who presided over a satellite television link with Kiev.

He presented a parade of people who had done cleanup work around the stricken nuclear power plant 80 miles north of the Ukrainian capital.

"Come on, let's applaud every time we hear the name of that town!" Ms. Pugacheva urged as miners, firemen and others sent greetings to the Moscow audience and performers.

A Chernobyl worker later expressed "our heartfelt thanks" to balladeer Alexander Gradsky, whose set won a long ovation from the Moscow audience.

An explosion and fire at the Chernobyl power plant on April 26 spewed a radioactive cloud into the air that ultimately worked its way around the world.

U.S. physician Dr. Robert P. Gale, in Moscow to help treat victims of the accident, said Thursday that 23 people had died, including two people killed instantly when the reactor was torn by the explosion.

Soviet authorities evacuated people from within an 18-mile radius of the plant, and began efforts to encase the damaged No. 4 reactor in concrete and decontaminate land or objects affected by radioactivity.

Also featured at the Moscow benefit were the hard rock groups Kruiz and Avtograf, the only act with experience in benefit shows.

Thank You

There are no words adequate to convey my deepest, most sincere appreciation to each of you who so earnestly remembered me in so many ways during my recent hospitalization and surgry, as well as many months before. We never know who our friends are until we need them; certainly you proved yourselves most valuable as my true friends. Let me thank each of you for your cards, gifts, visits, prayers, telephone calls, and the Prayer Chain of Avenue Baptist Church from Hrerford, formed in my behalf; for the deacons and Pulpit Committee members who took time from a busy schedule to visit me, not once but several times; for the Pastors of various churches who visited me; for my immediate family members who were always there. Also, to my piano students who never forgot me.

How proud and thankful we as Hereford citizens should be for our Hospital with all its members and various organizations, headed by our most capable, thoughtful administrator Jim Bullard.

Each shift of nurses; those in housekeeping dept., those in x-ray; those who prepared our meals; the therapy director; and the Auxiliary - each one did an outstanding job to satisfy the patients' comfort and welfare. And a big thanks to the assistanting doctors, (Drs. Mims & Rush), and to the nurses in surgery. Each did a great job.

Also my appreciation to the Piano Guild Chairman for assuming responsibility of my students entries.

Certainly Hereford and the surrounding area should feel most grateful and thankful for our latest surgeon: Dr. James Herbertson and his capable wife and assistants, Sandy - first in the orthopedic feild in Hereford. Words just don't describe such a skilled physician - both are Great! No job is too small or too large for thei wholehearted consideration and thoughtfulness for each person's recovery.

May God bless each of you as you have blessed me! My deepest gratitude and appreciation to one and all.

City of Taylor, Texas claims Celtics' K.C. Jones as native

By MARK WANGRIN
Austin American-Statesman

TAYLOR, Texas (AP) — The first tipoff is that there isn't a sign on the edge of town. No wooden posts with a Lions Club emblem here and a Kiwanis logo there and a big placard welcoming visitors to Taylor, Texas, home of 10,619, the Ducks and K.C. Jones.

Yeah, that K.C. Jones. The one whose Boston Celtics are ripping through the Houston Rockets toward the NBA title. Killer Celtics Jones. Or, as a popular new rumor would have it, Kid Canard Jones. Save yourself a trip to the dictionary. A canard is a duck. But it's also defined as a hoax, a fabricated report spread by a newspaper (you can look it up), which may explain this whole bit about K.C. Jones and Taylor.

The furor began several days ago, when the San Antonio Light reported Jones was born in Taylor. Seeking to uncover perhaps the only NBA playoff angle not already bled dry, the search for the truth commenced.

It started at the Taylor Chamber of Commerce. Director Camille Berry said Taylor boasts Rip Torn, and rodeo cowboy Bill Pickett and former Gov. Dan Moody. K.C. Jones? "I haven't heard that, but I've only been here three months," she said.

On to Maggie Campbell, more familiar with Taylor, who suggested a chat with Ruth Mantor, a Taylorite described as "as old as God" and who could write the book on Taylor. And did. She called it "Our Town: Taylor." Our town, maybe, but is it K.C. Jones'? "I've never heard that," she said.

Then it was on to Shirl Frazier, local insurance agent and former Duck coach.

"It seems to me back when he was playing with the Celtics I heard someone mention that once," he said. Frazier suggested L.D. Griffin, a young Taylorite who keeps abreast of the Taylor athletic scene, might know.

"I had heard that years ago, like when K.C. was playing," said Griffin. "I kind of followed it up, checked on it. There was another guy K.C., maybe Casey, who was a pretty good athlete in the 1950s. I think that may have led to it.

"I don't have any facts to prove the man was here or not. But it seems strange that through all these years nothing surfaced to substantiate it."

Ah, yes, substantiation. The Taylor city clerk's office had no record. "Check with Williamson County in Georgetown," they suggested. Williamson County had no records. "You might try the state," the lady there said. The sate said it can't divulge birth records.

The Celtic media guide lists no place of birth. The NBA said he was born in San Francisco. Shelley Paxson, a University of San Francisco information office employee who has done some biographical work on K.C., said he was, indeed, born in Taylor.

And Quanita Jones, a Taylorite who said she's related to K.C., confirmed Jones was born in Taylor and that a man who still lives there, James "Red" Wilson, is his uncle. Wilson said that was news to him.

So the quest continues. Does anyone know whether K.C. Jones can join the likes of former Rice halfback Dicky Maegle and 1975 College World Series MVP Mickey Reichenbach as celebrated fruit of Taylor's womb?

Jones can, but he was busy Friday plotting the demise of the Rockets.

"I hope to heck we find out the man was," said Griffin. "Then maybe I can claim he was a cousin or something."

SWC approves plan for detecting steroids

By DENNE H. FREEMAN
AP Sports Writer

DALLAS (AP) — For the first time, a major college athletic conference has approved a plan for random sampling of athletes to detect use of steroids with the approval of such a proposal by the Southwest Conference, a conference official said.

The SWC voted Friday night in a special session to begin the testing program beginning in the fall of 1986, said Dennis Robinson, assistant conference commissioner.

The program calls for 36 football players and 14 other athletes to be tested at each school sometime during the year, Robinson told The Associated Press.

Testing will be strictly educational the first year and no penalties will be contemplated until the 1987 season, Robinson said.

"We're the first conference to pass such a program and I believe it's a positive step," Robinson said. "Of course, will still have to write the procedures and consult our legal counsel." The vote was eight for the program with one abstention.

Robinson wouldn't divulge the one SWC school abstaining.

"That wouldn't be appropriate," he said.

Robinson said the program would be for steriods only.

"Conference schools have their own individual drug testing programs," he said.

Robinson said the names of the offenders would never be released because it wouldn't be in the best interest of the student-athlete.

TCU Athletic Director Frank Windegger said releasing the names would violate the Buckley Amendment, a federal statute that protects the student-athlete's right to privacy. The Buckley Amendment prohibits releasing personal information about an individual without that person's consent.

Jackie Sherill, Texas A&M football coach and athletic director, said he favors testing but doesn't think there should be a conference program.

"Each school should have their own tests and then a member of the conference should go to each institution to make sure it is being properly administered," Sherril said.

The steroid testing proposal was made in April by Texas athletic director DeLoss Dodds.

He proposed that the SWC test 50 football players for steroids two weeks into fall practice. That proposal was amended to include 36 football payers and 14 from other sports.

USFL expected to return to TV issue in suit

NEW YORK (AP) — The United States Football League is expected to return next week to the issue of television, the critical centerpiece of its $1.5 billion antitrust suit against the National Football League.

After Friday's second day of testimony by New York State officials, including Sen. Alfonse D'Amato, USFL Commissioner Harry Usher is expected to take the stand Monday. Usher is expected to discuss his unsuccessful attempts to obtain a television contract when the league decided to switch from a spring schedule to fall.

He may be followed by Jim Spence, a former ABC vice president who handled the network's sports negotiations.

One of the USFL's principal allegations in the suit is that the NFL exerted pressure on the networks not to provide the younger league with a TV contract. And one of its demands is that NFL games be barred from at least one of those networks.

Both Thursday and Friday were devoted to the USFL's "New York Conspiracy" charge — that the NFL led the state and city to believe that the Jets would return from the New Jersey Meadowlands in order to keep a USFL team out of New York.

In YMCA co-ed league

Wallyball playoffs started

Wallyball playoffs began Thursday night in the Hereford and Vicinity YMCA co-ed league, and the playoffs for the men's wallyball league will start on Monday.

Each league's playoffs have an "A" and a "B" division.

In Thursday's action of the co-ed "A" division, the Do-Gooders defeated the Animals, 15-3, 15-7. Other matches were won by forfeits–Church of Christ over Cardiac Kids, and Animals over Cardiac Kids.

Akeem says Rockets need inspiration

By MICHAEL A. LUTZ
AP Sports Writer

HOUSTON (AP) — Akeem Olajuwon thinks the Houston Rockets may need a little inspiration in their NBA championship playoff series with the Boston Celtics.

"When we're playing in front of our home crowd, we'll be more fired up, we'll be playing with full intensity," Olajuwon said. "We will be a different team for sure."

Houston's fans will have a chance to be a factor for the first time in the series Sunday at 2:30 CDT when the Rockets host the Celtics in the third game of the best-of-7 series at The Summit.

Boston leads the series 2-0 following Thursday night's 117-95 blowout victory in steamy Boston Garden. The fourth and fifth games of the series alo are scheduled in Houston Tuesday and Thursday.

"When we go home, we need to be confident," Houston's Ralph Sampson said.

"I feel good about playing at home. We play in our own gym, sleep in our own beds and eat our own food. What we need to do is play defense, rebound and run."

The Rockets have been blown out in the third quarter in each of the first two games of the series and the Celtics are starting to sense that they are taking control of the young Rockets.

"They'll have to beat us four of five games," Kevin McHale said. "That will be tough the way we're playing."

The Celtics have lost only three times in their last 33 games. They have lost only one playoff game to four playoff opponents and could become the winningest club in NBA history if they sweep the Rockets.

"We're not afraid to play in their building," Celtic forward Larry Bird said. "The pressure's on them. "If they lose that game, they're in trouble.

"I feel if we come in and win the game on Sunday, we probably can win another championship."

Trouble already is here for the Rockets. Only four teams in NBA history have recovered from an 0-2 start to win the NBA title.

"This was the worst game of the season," Olajuwon said of Thursday night's effort. "I am ashamed. We didn't look like the team that brought us here."

The Celtics have won 40 consecutive home games and had the best home record in the NBA for the regular season, losing only one of 41 home games. The Rockets were second in the NBA with a 36-5 home record.

"We've accomplished what we wanted, winning both games at home, now we've got to win at least one in Houston," Celtic Danny Ainge said. "Everyone in the locker room has a lot of respect for them, especially on the court."

Angels pitcher's goal is No. 300

Don Sutton aims to keep winning

By Murray Olderman

ANAHEIM, Calif. (NEA) — By the time the 1986 season is over, Don Sutton, assuming his 41-year-old arm retains its elasticity, will have started more big-league games than any pitcher except the legendary Cy Young.

Going into this season with the California Angels, he needed only 18 starting assignments to surpass Gaylord Perry's 690 for second place.

But Sutton's more immediate aim was to win victory No. 300, a hallowed plateau for his 20-year major-league career. He began the year with a lifetime record of 295-228, just five victories short of the magic total.

It is the only reason Don Sutton is still pitching for a living.

These are remarkable figures for a man who frankly doesn't put himself in the class of Sandy Koufax or Tom Seaver or Steve Carlton, all of whom have been his contemporaries.

"I am not in that category," says Sutton. "I know where I am. Seaver and I have both finished the Daytona 500. He just finished a few miles ahead of me. He's got a faster car and more powerful engine, but I'm going to get there.

"I'm in the category of good. There's a small category that's extra good. I don't fit in there, though I'm a very good pitcher."

That calls for some further introspection by a man who doesn't and has never had trouble putting words together (becoming a broadcaster or a baseball executive are his future ambitions).

Sutton explains: "I am an efficient control pitcher with good breaking stuff who knows how to change speeds very well. I throw that curve ball over on 3-and-0.

"I will give you a chance to win, but may not ever cause you to win. There are pitchers who will cause you to lose, pitchers who will cause you to win, pitchers who allow you to win. I will allow you to win because I won't beat myself."

Yet there must be times when his ego makes him feel like going mano a mano against hitters, trying to throw the ball by them.

"Sure," nods Sutton, "but I do it with a curve ball. Early in my career, with my curve I was a power pitcher. I would try to blow a guy away at times, get lit up, then say, 'Forget it. Let's go back to being me.'

"Being me is putting the ball where I want it. It's an efficient use of ability."

Sutton knows that winning his 300th game may some day lead to his election to the cherished Baseball Hall of Fame.

"I think it's probably the only way I could do it," he says. "There are very few people who realize I have (nearly) 3,400 strikeouts. They came about in a very non-spectacular way.

"I have 57 shutouts. At the end of this year, I'll have in the neighborhood of 700 starts and 5,000 innings.

"Somewhere, something had to turn on the neon light. Three hundred wins is the only way to do it."

Longevity in his case is the residue of design — he has been extremely durable.

"My delivery wouldn't make Tom Seaver's book," Sutton notes. "I'm not a drop-and-drive; I'm a tilt-and-topple pitcher. I stress the larger muscles in my back, the triceps. I don't really strain my elbow and shoulder."

In the normal course of events, he would have spent his entire career in Los Angeles, where he spent his first 15 seasons with the Dodgers. But after leading the National League in earned run average in 1980, he wanted more than a one-year contract — "Seeing as how I was the all-time record holder" (his 230 victories still tops all Dodger pitchers).

Spurned, he went the free-agent route and signed with Houston for 1981, feeling he didn't sacrifice results ("because I went to a pitcher's park").

Sutton was traded to Milwaukee late in '82 because the Brewers wanted pitching help in their drive to a pennant drive and World Series. He asked the Brewers to trade him to a West Coast team before the 1985 season, then he balked when it was Oakland. He drafted a letter saying he was through.

But that 300-goal was creeping up, and Sutton's wife and kids said, "Go ahead and play. It's too important for you."

A swap to the Angels last September put him within commuting distance of his home in Laguna Hills, Calif. Altogether, he won 15 games last year and lost only 10. This season he got off to a poor beginning in California's pitching rotation, going winless in April and giving up about one earned run per inning.

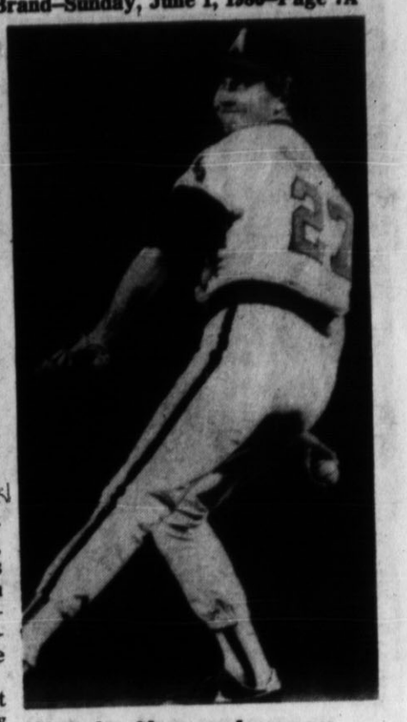

Does Sutton have any regrets about moving around over the past few years?

"If I could have planned it on the front end," he says, "I would have stayed with the Dodgers my whole career. On the back end, looking back, I wouldn't have traded the stops I've made since then for anything.

"The Dodger organization is an extrovert's delight. And I am not an extrovert. I want to be more appreciated for my product than loved for my personality. I was almost like a round peg in a square hole with the Dodgers."

—Don Sutton

The late Walter Alston, the manager of the Dodgers for more than two decades, had one time at bat in the big leagues. It was in 1936 and he struck out.

Red Auerbach, rated one of the top pro basketball coaches of all time, averaged only six points per game during his college days at George Washington University.

The 50,000-meter walk in the 1932 Olympics in Los Angeles was held in the streets of that city. Thomas Green of Great Britain won the event in 4 hours, 50 minutes, 10 seconds.

SWC approves sharing plan for football gate receipts

An AP Sports Analysis
By DENNE H. FREEMAN
AP Sports Writer

DALLAS (AP) — Sometimes you get the feeling the Southwest Conference should be headquartered in Lebanon where everybody is just naturally mad at everybody all the time.

Nobody likes anybody down here. Do unto your neighbor before he does unto you is the First Commandment in SWC country.

The SWC members keep turning each other into the NCAA for rules violations and two members are in the NCAA's jail. Others are being fitted for prison garb.

This league has turned into one long dark alley where back-stabbing is a fine art.

The recent spring meeting in San Antonio did little for SWC brotherly love, if there was any still around.

Some of the private schools came away thinking they had been stuck between the shoulder blades.

The topic this time wasn't cheating on recruiting that caused a rush of blood. All the sound and fury was over dividing the ticket take at football games.

The SWC approved a change in the formula for paying gate receipts to visiting football teams. Beginning this fall, schools will negotiate individual contracts with the other schools in the league for home and visitor shares.

The only stipulation: The visitors must get at least $75,000. Anything beyond that must come in one-on-one negotiations.

Under the plan, the big daddies of the SWC and their big stadiums like Texas, Texas A&M, and Arkansas could stand to prosper even more. They won't have to share as much of their lucrative home gate receipts in their cavernous stadiums.

The day of the 50-50 split is dead. Schools that do not draw well like Rice have no bargaining power.

As expected, Rice, Baylor, Texas Christian and Houston voted against the change to a straight, guaranteed payoff.

Texas, Arkansas, Texas Tech, Texas A&M, and Southern Methodist voted for the proposal.

SMU's vote settled the matter and Mustangs' Athletic Director Bob Hitch didn't make any buddies with his fellow private schools by voting with the SWC state big boys.

Hitch had a ready answer.

"We compete in a professional market against the Dallas Cowboys, Dallas Mavericks and the Texas Rangers," said Hitch. "We feel we must do more promotional things."

Under the old formula SMU had to pay $5.50 a ticket to the visiting school for EVERY ticket it gave away on a promotional night.

"It kept us from getting involved in promotional deals," said Hitch. "Now we can do public relations and promotional things. We have the freedom to work with charity groups and do other things."

Hitch said it's about time the SWC started waking up.

"We're in bad shape, financially," he said. "People think this is football country and everything is great. It isn't."

Hitch said the new SWC ticket money program forces schools to promote the product.

"I'm not popular with the other private schools right now but the way we had been going was not good," he said. "The problem right now is that six of the conference schools (Rice, Houston, TCU, Baylor, Texas Tech, and SMU) are in trouble and they had better get to work."

Hitch was right about not being popular.

Rice Executive Athletic Director Augie Erfurth told Mickey Humphrey of the Waco Tribune-Herald: "I feel the conference schools should support one another but that's not the case here."

At Baylor, Athletic Director Bill Menefee said his school will lose money on it. He even resubmitted his budget to the board of regents based on lower ticket receipt predictions.

"This deal could hurt SMU if I don't do a good job of promoting," said Hitch. "Rice has the opportunity to make as much as it can. This new ticket structure will force all of us to work harder."

Hurt feelings are the least of Hitch's worries.

In the competitive business of SWC sports, it's every school for itself.

No blood, no fun.

But still below level

Prices increased in May

WASHINGTON (AP) — Prices paid farmers for their raw products increased by 2.5 percent in May but still were 4.6 percent below the level of a year ago, the Agriculture Department says.

The report issued Friday by the department's Agricultural Statistics Board attributed the increase to higher prices for hogs, lettuce, cattle, apples, corn and oranges. The increase was partly offset by lower prices for wheat, cotton, sweet corn, milk and eggs.

According to preliminary May figures, based mostly on mid-month averages, the farm prices of livestock and livestock products dropped 4.5 percent from April and averaged 2.2 percent below a year ago. Crop prices rose 1.8 percent from April but still averaged 7.9 percent below a year ago.

Cattle prices averaged $51.50 per 100 pounds, up $1.20 from April, and hog prices shot up $6 per hundredweight to $45.70.

Vegetable prices rose 9.5 percent from a month earlier and averaged 42 percent more than in May 1985. Higher prices for lettuce more than offset lower prices for sweet corn and tomatoes.

Higher prices for apples, oranges and pears led a 7.5 percent increase in fruit prices, while the index of food grain prices dropped 5.9 percent in May to a point 7.3 percent below year-ago levels.

Department economists are projecting a moderate rise this year in consumer food prices, averaging 2 percent to 4 percent higher for all of 1986. Last year, retail food prices increased 2.3 percent.

Net farm income dropped sharply in 1985, probably totaling $29 billion to $32 billion, according to USDA estimates. For 1986, department economists project another decline to a range of $21 billion to $25 billion.

Overall, May farm commodity prices averaged 124 percent of a 1977 base used for comparison, according to the preliminary figures. That was down 3 percentage points from the revised April reading of 121 percent. In May 1985, the index was 130.

The revised April index was up 1 percentage point from the preliminary level announced a month ago.

Women rudely awakened

HOUSTON (AP) — An 81-year-old woman and her poodle woke up Thursday to find flying debris and a truck tire on her bed after an out-of-control pickup truck crashed into her home.

Louise Rogers, 81, of Houston, said she and her poodle, Sugar Bowl, were trapped in her bedroom about 20 minutes before authorities could tow away the truck.

Her 87-year-old sister, Geneva Cunningham, who had been sleeping in another room, was unable to reach Mrs. Rogers because of the rubble and flying dust.

She said the first words the truck driver, David Rodriguez, 28, said to her was: "Mrs. Rogers, my truck is in your bedroom. I don't know what to do."

"I told him to call 911," she said.

Rodriguez apparently suffered from a seizure and lost control of the vehicle, causing it to veer into the room where Mrs. Rogers and Sugar Bowl were sleeping, police said.

He escaped injury and Mrs. Rogers suffered only a minor scratch.

Uncovered well holes dangerous

With warm weather encouraging more outdoor activities both in work and play, the potential danger posed by open or improperly covered well holes or abandoned wells increases.

Open well holes pose a danger to humans and animals alike. Many times small animals fall into these holes and some holes are even large enough for people to fall into, especially children. In addition, there is also the potential for pollution. Open holes can provide a direct route for pollution to enter the Ogallala aquifer, which supplies municipal, industrial and irrigation water to much of the High Plains.

"If you have an open hole and someone decides to get rid of some old chemicals by dumping them in the hole, the chemical will go directly to the aquifer. Once the aquifer is polluted, it is very difficult, if not impossible, to clean it up," explains Obie Goolsby, Water District engineer technician.

Because many uncovered or improperly covered wells have been abandoned for some time, they are often hard to see and many have been forgotten. This factor adds to the danger of open wells. However, there are a few characteristics that can sometimes signal the location of an open hole.

Goolsby points out, "There are a lot of tell-tail signs of possible open holes. It used to be that almost all wells were drilled on a high point in the field. Now, there may be a clump of weeds that the farmer plows around at that location. There's usually a reason why a farmer doesn't plow in a certain location."

A lonesome tree is also a good sign of an old well, since most old wells used to have trees planted by them. Farmers normally keep the area around a producing well clean, but the area around an abandoned well may be weedy and the well may not be covered, Goolsby adds.

State law and Water District rules require that unused wells are properly covered. District rules define an open or uncovered well as any artificial excavation constructed to produce water from the aquifer, which is as much as 10 feet deep and not less than 10 inches nor more than 6 feet in diameter. A permanent covering must sustain a weight of at least 400 pounds by District rules and ideally a cover would lie flat against the old pumpbase, if present, to make the cover even more difficult to remove.

District personnel often discover open holes when performing various activities out in the field or checking permitted wells. The District also receives reports of abandoned wells from individuals.

"A lot of time surveyors will note these open holes, and hunters also are very conscientious about notifying the District of open holes they happen upon during hunting season," Goolsby notes.

When the District confirms an open hole, the well location is marked on a legal description map. The landowner and operator are then informed of the situation and allowed a reasonable amount of time, at least 30 days, to correct the problem. If the landowner or operator does not properly cover the well after repeated requests, then the District may take legal action to remedy the problem. However, legal action is pursued only as a last resort, Goolsby says.

People spending time outdoors should be on the lookout for open holes. They can be present in the city as well as outlying rural areas. Open holes present serious safety and health concerns, and any person having knowledge of an open hole or improperly covered well should notify the landowner or contact the Water District.

Advises USDA conservationist

Use conservation tillage

Burning stubble from an average wheat crop sends about $10 worth of nitrogen per acre in smoke. All nitrogen in residue is lost by burning.

Using conservation tillage, however, you can plant into that stubble and use the nitrogen that is tied up in the residue said Bob Perry, district conservationist for USDA's Soil Conservation Service at Hereford.

"The use of wheat residue is especially important in the Tierra Blanca Soil and Water Conservation District, where more that 200,000 acres of wheat are planted annually," Perry continued.

Depending upon the kind of equipment used, conservation tillage leaves from 90 to 30 percent residue on the ground after planting.

"When residue decomposes on the soil surface, the nitrogen is made available for the next crop. In addition to the nitrogen, decomposing stubble adds organic matter to the soil, helps control erosion, reduces soil moisture loss, and improves soil aeration, tilth, and permeability. The stubble also helps provide a habitat for such whildlife as pheasants, rabbits, and quail."

Perry siad to make the nitrogen in the residue available requires the activity of numerous soil organisims. They floourish in a soil rich in organic matter.

"One importqnt organism is the earthworm," Perry said. "Research has shown that earthworms increase when a dependable supply of crop residue is available.

They digest the organic matter and pass nutrient-enriched soil through their bodies. This recycles nutrients and makes the soil richer. in addition, their tunnels allow air and water to penetrate soil more rapidly. Burning stubble destroys organic matter."

Wigwagging is a method of signaling with one flag. The three motions used represent a dot, a dash and the end of a word or paragraph.

University of Missouri-Columbia nutritionist, Margaret Flynn, says people have an "unwarranted fear of food" because the news media puts out new stories in "too much of a hurry". Ms. Flynn says she is particularly upset with unwarranted concerns about cholesterol. She stresses "studies show that eggs, beef, chicken and pork don't affect serum cholesterol in those people who have a history of normal cholesterol levels in their blood". More than 85/ of the U.S. population have genes to control cholesterol. "For us, it's silly to avoid such foods as dairy products, eggs or beef". For the majority, "the best bet is to maintain our weight, eat in moderation and consumer a variety of foods".

Wildlife depends on lakes

LUBBOCK – Many forms of wildlife depend on West Texas playa lakes as islands of survival in a sea of agriculture.

Horn Professor Eric G. Bolen of range and wildlife management said playa lakes represent a naturally available wetland habitat for large numbers of ducks, geese and other waterbirds as well as numerous small animals.

"The Southern High Plains of Texas stretches across an area about four times the size of Massachusetts and contains about 19,000 playa lakes," Bolen said. "In fact, these playas are second in importance only to the marshes of the Texas Gulf Coast as habitat for waterfowl overwintering in the Central Flyway."

Bolen said more than 1 million ducks may spend four to six months between October and March on the playas of West Texas.

Playas also are important to farming in semi-arid West Texas. Bolen said the playas' ability to hold irrigation runoff water and rainfall make them an important resource for farmers.

As dropping water levels in the Ogallala Aquifer and increasing energy costs have made ground water pumping more expensive, Bolen said, the playas have enabled the farmers to use their irrigation water a second time.

"While the playas offer a convenient means of storing runoff water, it quickly evaporates from the shallow basins," he said.

To combat the evaporation problems many playas have been excavated to form steep-sided pits that can reduce evaporation as much as 90 percent.

"Today, almost 70 percent of the playas of 10 acres or more have been excavated for water storage," Bolen said.

While the steep-sided playas help cut irrigation costs and provide much of the water for wildlife during dry years, the excavation practice has destroyed some food sources of waterfowl and other animals.

The gently sloping areas covered with shallow water that naturally occur in playas, called littoral zones, easily convert energy into plant materials because sunlight can penetrate through to the bottom, Bolen said. The plants, in turn, form a food chain that supports many forms of animal life.

"Unfortunately, littoral zones in playas usually are drained when pits are excavated," he said. "Therefore, even with the influx of precious tailwater, the steep-sided pits often lack the vegetation, insects and other biological features that help maintain ducks and other wildlife."

Bolen and graduate student Paul N. Gray have experimented with devising artificial littoral zones on one side of the excavated pits.

The artificial zones consist of a series of terraces depending on the dimensions of each pit. Bolen said most of the terraces are 230 feet long and 25 feet wide with an 18-inch curb between.

"Because the terraces are arranged like a staircase, one or more terraces always will be covered with shallow water regardless of the irrigation cycle," he said. "Based on two years of research, ducks and other waterbirds have responded favorably to the artificial habitat. Besides more birds, a large number of different kinds of birds visited the terraces in comparison with our control pits that did not have terraces."

Bolen said the abundance and richness of the waterbird population on the terraces probably reflect the larger areas of littoral zones and greater biological production.

"The large areas of shallow water and mudflats produce a seed bank that will revegetate the area next season," Bolen said. "We think that the artificial terracing is an effective way to increase both the quality and quantity of habitat in tailwater pits for waterfowl and other birds without diminishing the agricultural importance of the sites for irrigation and water storage."

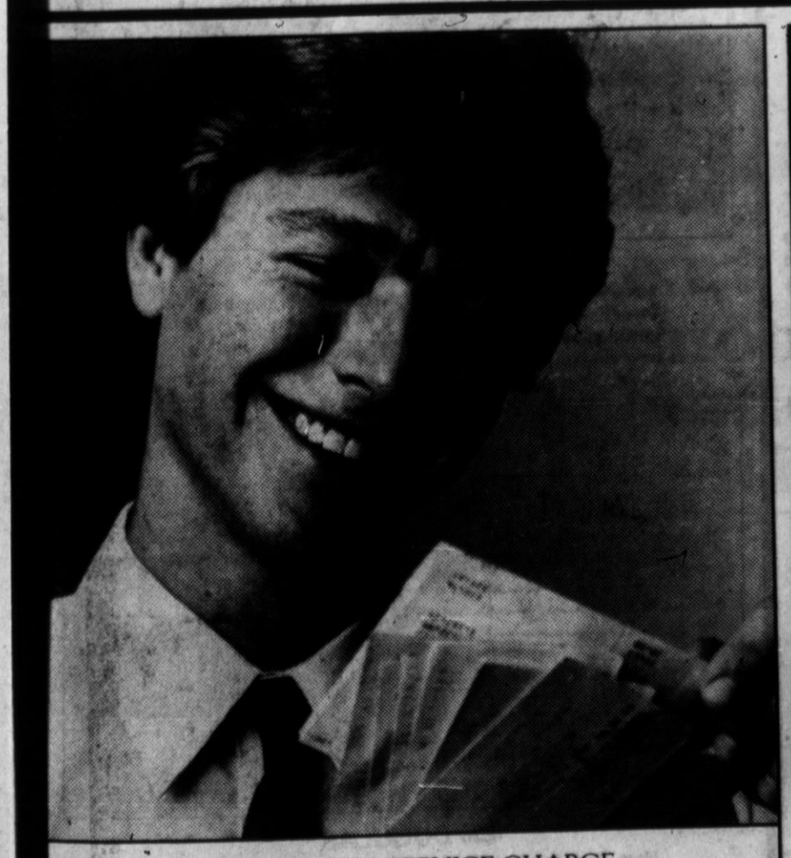

The Louvre Museum in Paris was opened to the public on Nov. 8, 1793. The construction of the Louvre, originally intended as a royal residence, was started in 1203 by King Philippe Auguste. Its fine art collection was begun by Francis I in the 16th century.

Hereford Girl Scouts attend weekend camp

Junior Girl Scout Troop 288 met recently at Girl Scout Camp Kiwanis near Amarillo where they spent the night in stone cabins.

The girls worked toward earning their dabbler and out-of-doors fun badges. They also participated in hiking tours where they were shown points of interest at the camp, including visiting the Great Hall where an outdoor flag ceremony was conducted.

The highlight of the trip was cooking the noon meal in large dutch ovens over the campfire.

Those attending included Kelli Brierly, Melissa Caraway, Vicki Carnahan, Tonya Castillo, Connie Castaneda, Bonnie Dauster, Michelle Emerson, Melody Hegwood, Kay Loveall, Jo O'lyn Lytal, Andrea Martinez, Kyla Matthews, Jill Reinauer, Jana Rogers, Latisha Ruiz, Tonya Ruiz, Sherry Vermillion, Chastidy Weddel, and Angela Zamora.

Accompanying the girls were Mary Alice Loveall, Oralia Castillo, Linda Vermillion, and Tammy Loveall from Cadette Girl Scout Troop.

Waco man to meet with Gorbachev

WACO, Texas (AP) — The president of a Waco insurance firm says he is traveling to Moscow this week with a group opposing President Reagan's Star Wars plan and will meet with Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev.

Bernard Rapoport, president of American Income Life Insurance Co., is a prominent Democrat and son of a Russian immigrant who says he is traveling with three members of the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers.

The 800,000-member union has lobbied against Reagan's Strategic Defense — Star Wars — Initiative, the MX missile and the B-1 bomber.

But Rapoport says he hopes the trip will help dispel Soviet misconceptions about capitalism and aid peace through urgings of a reduction in arms spending.

"I'd like to say to Mr. Gorbachev, 'You have problems in your country and we have problems in our country. But because our cultures are different, we take the same problem and view it differently,'" he told the Waco Tribune-Herald.

Rapoport, 68, said he and his fellow travelers are scheduled to meet with Gorbachev Friday and will speak through an interpreter. He said he did not know how long the meeting will last.

Rapoport said he plans to show Gorbachev a framed photograph of his father while he was imprisoned in Siberia.

David Rapoport was a Russian Jew who was found guilty of being a Socialist propagandist after the revolution of 1905. He was permanently exiled and sentenced to hard labor, but escaped in 1913 and started a new life in San Antonio, where Rapoport was born.

"I think I'll be the first American he has met whose father was in the Russian Revolution," Rapoport said.

Rapoport said he realizes that some visitors to the Soviet Union have been used as propaganda tools, but does not think that he will be.

"Some Americans make a terrible mistake when talking to top officials of state by agreeing with all the problems we have, like poverty and injustice," he said. "But those exist in every country. At least we start with freedom."

Rapoport said he won't bring up last week's decision by the Soviets to allow 117 citizens to emigrate to the United States to join relatives. But as a leader in Jewish circles, Rapoport said he hopes the subject comes up.

Gorbachev has met with a few American businessmen before, but the U.S. State Department does not keep record of such meetings.

MR. AND MRS. WILBURN AXE

Reception set June 8 to honor local couple

The public is invited to attend a reception 2-4 p.m. June 8 at Central Church of Christ to honor Mr. and Mrs. Wilburn Axe. The couple will be observing their 50th wedding anniversary.

The event will be hosted by their children and grandchildren as well as the church elders and their wives.

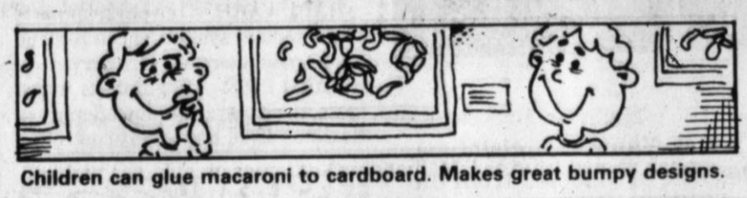

Wilburn Axe married Louise Goats May 15, 1936. He is a retired farmer and a member-at-large of the Lions Club. He also serves as church elder.

Mrs. Axe is a homemaker and member of Wyche Extension Homemakers Club and Garden Beautiful Club and teaches Sunday School. Both are members of Central Church of Christ.

Have you ever noticed that most of those who rave about the joys of gardening spend most of their daylight hours indoors sitting in front of a typewriter?

Baby fat, dull knife saved child's life

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Baby fat and a dull knife saved an infant from death after an intruder slashed the child's throat to keep him quiet during a break-in, police say.

The 13-month-old boy, John Lujan IV, was in good condition Saturday at the Santa Rosa Children's Hospital, where officials said his life was saved only because of the dull knife used in the attack.

"He lost a lot of blood," a hospital spokesman told the San Antonio Express-News. "But he had a lot of baby fjt under his chin. That's what saved him — fat and a dull knife."

The child's father — Bexar County Sheriff's Deputy John Lujan III, 23 — tackled his son's assailant after the Friday morning attack. And police said John Mitchell Stacy, 18, was jailed in lieu of a $100,000 bond on attempted capital murder charges.

Police said the Lujan and his wife, 24-year-old Rita Lujan, were asleep when an intruder broke into their home on about 2:20 a.m. Friday.

The infant's mother told police she got out of bed when she heard her son crying and walked into his bedroom to find a man standing over the crib.

"She just started screaming, 'He's trying to steal my baby,'" a police spokesman said.

Lujan was awakened by his wife's screams and ran outside in time to tackle a fleeing suspect and hold him for police, officers said. The intruder, who got inside through an unlocked sliding glass door, apparently was trying to silence the child, police theorized.

"He went into the bedroom and cut the baby on the throat," said a patrolman the News didn't identify.

"There's no doubt what he was trying to do."

Lujan, a jailer for the past three years, moved his family into the apartment complex a week ago to take a job as a part-time security guard. The deputy said he did not know his son's attacker.

"I've never seen him before in my life," the boy's father said. "He had no reason. Thank God I didn't have my gun. I would have shot him."

Computors create own language

By The Associated Press

The world of computers has created a language of its own, including the following terminology:

BASIC, or Beginner's All-Purpose Symbolic Instruction Code — the most popular language for personal computer use. It most resembles English in its commands to the computer.

BAUD — the number of bits per second that can be transmitted in a given computer system.

BINARY NUMBER — number system using only two digits, 0 and 1, to express all numeric values.

BIT - basic unit of computer memory, an abbreviation for binary digit.

BYTE — a group of eight bits usually treated as a unit, with one byte storing a unit of information such as the code for one character.

COBOL (COmmon Business Oriented Language) — High-level language used primarily on large or medium-sized computers.

CURSOR — a little flashing square on the CRT screen used as a position marker.

DATA BANK — a computer library, or electronic storehouse of information.

DATA PROCESSING — process of converting data into machine readable form so the computer can work on it.

DISK — A flat circular piece of plastic coated with magnetic material similar to phonograph records and used to store programs and data. Disks can be both "hard" or "floppy."

FLOPPY DISK — Nonrigid disks about the size of a 45 rpm record and the most commonly used to store computer information. Also called diskettes.

HARDWARE — the physical parts of a computer system, encompassing all the machinery and circuitry.

HARD DISK — Rigid disks which store much more data than floppy, or flexible, disks and used most often with mainframe computers.

LOGO — a general use language for use in educational settings.

MAINFRAME COMPUTERS — the largest computers, storing enormous amounts of data and used in places like NASA and major corporations.

MEMORY — the CPU's information storage ability, the size of which determines what the computer can do.

MICROCOMPUTERS or PERSONAL COMPUTERS — the smallest computers, with fewer capabilities than mainframe or minicomputers but very useful in small businesses and individual offices. When placed in a home they become known as HOME COMPUTERS.

MINICOMPUTERS — medium-sized computers, also found in large businesses, with less storage capacity than mainframe equipment.

MODEM — a modulator-demodulator, which links a computer to another computer via telephone lines. Essential for sending messages to other computer users or tying into a data bank or mainframe computer.

PASCAL — a language used on larger home computers for business and general purpose programs. Named after French philosopher-mathematician Blaise Pascal.

PC - Personal computer.

PERIPHERALS — usually hardware devices external to the computer itself, such as disk drives, modems, cassette-tape recorders and printers.

PILOT — (Programmed Inquiry Learning Or Teaching) — an easy-to-learn language designed for beginning programmers and for use on smaller personal computers.

PROGRAM — a group of instructions that tells the computer what to do.

SOFTWARE — programs that give instructions to the computer, without which the computer does nothing.

RAM, or Random Access Memory — temporary memory that stores specific instructions and data for any program that is being run.

ROM, or Read Only Memory — the computer's permanent memory, containing basic instructions the CPU follows in processing any kind of information.

WORD PROCESSING — means of creating, manipulating and storing text on a CRT screen.

Authorities retrieve body of drowning high school senior

LONGVIEW, Texas (AP) — Hours after underwater search teams retrieved an 18-year-old youth's body in Lake Cherokee, his fellow high school seniors wept as they honored him at their graduation ceremony.

"We come before you tonight as the graduating class of 1986, but we are incomplete," class valedictorian Derek Chamness, one of 43 seniors graduating from Tatum High School, said Friday night.

Stephen Allen's chair on the front row was empty, except for his green graduating cap and a red carnation.

Allen's body was found in the lake Friday afternoon, one day after he drowned while attempting to swim to shore from a ski boat during a senior class ski-and-swim party, officials said.

"Stephen was a young man of spirit, laughter and much joy, and I'm sure Stephen would tell us on this occasion to carry on with life and live it to the fullest," Chamness said. "With tragedy, we now know that life is too short and we must live it one day at a time."

Another of Allen's close friends, class president Chris Prine, dedicated the graduation ceremonies to Allen and described the senior as a person "who never met a stranger and was an important part of the 1986 senior class."

As choir director Virginia Pevey sang the class song — "That's What Friends Are For" — several of the graduating seniors wept. And when she sang the words, "in good times, in sad times, that's what friends are for ... " many of those on stage bowed their heads, closed their eyes and cried openly.

During the awarding of the diplomas, student Larry Centers, who was with Allen when he drowned and tried to save him, accepted his friend's diploma and presented it to members of Allen's family.

Allen drowned about 3 p.m. Thursday while he and about 40 other seniors were at Lake Cherokee for a private party to celebrate the end of school. His body was found at 4:05 p.m. Friday, said Gregg County sheriff's investigator Bill Drennan.

Justice of Peace Bob Robinson pronounced the senior dead, listing the cause of death as accidental drowning.

"Allen was found in about 15 feet of water and about 150 yards out from the dock," Drennan said.

Texas to go after new research money

WASHINGTON (AP) — Texas universities and the congressmen who represent them have decided it's time to starting "rattling that tin cup" for federal research money.

The state may be experiencing troubled economic times, with dropping oil prices and ailing agriculture, but it doesn't want a handout, says Sen. Lloyd Bentsen. It just wants its fair share — the piece of the pie it used to be able to afford to leave behind.

Bentsen, D-Texas, recently organized a luncheon to discuss strategy.

"One of the problems has been, we simply haven't been hungry enough," said Frank Vandiver, president of Texas A&M University, who attended the luncheon. "There's been a lot of state money put into research and a lot of industrial money, and we just haven't gone out and rattled that tin cup like we need to do now."

Bentsen's meeting was attended by his Republican counterpart Phil Gramm, Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, Dallas investor Peter O'Donnell, 22 of the state's 27 congressmen, presidents and chancellors of state universities and representatives of the governor's office.

"We got a commitment out of the delegation that we would all work together — Democrats and Republicans — for something that was for Texas in the way of research grants," said Bentsen. "You find that you get a lot more of those things accomplished as long as you don't worry about who gets the credit for it — which is not an easy thing to accomplish in this atmosphere up here."

Texas universities are among the first to feel the pinch of the state budget crunch because there is little else to cut from a state budget light in social programs. Faculty salaries are already lagging behind the national average.

In federal research money, Texas continues to trail California and even Massachusetts.

In 1984, according to the National Science Foundation, California received $9 billion in federal research and development money. Massachusetts received $2.9 billion. Texas got $1.5 billion.

Of university research paid for by federal dollars, Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore, Md., received more in 1985 than did the entire state of Texas — $318,374 to $250,655.

The University of California system received three times the federal R&D money that the University of Texas received.

Texas ranked 10th in the nation in defense R&D money in 1984, receiving $968 million. California was first, getting $6.3 billion.

Massachusetts is the success story to which Bentsen points for inspiration.

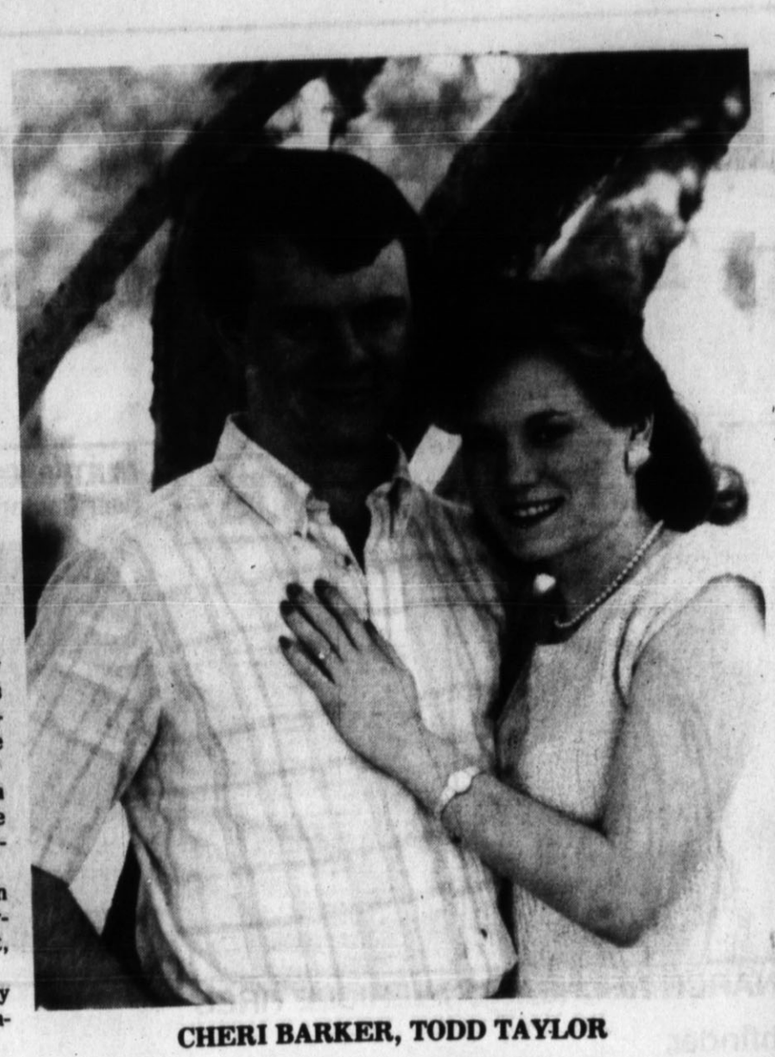

Ten years ago, when Texas, was in the bloom of the oil boom, Massachusetts had the highest unemployment rate of all the industrial states. It campaigned for research and technology and now has the lowest unemployment rate of the industrial states.

"Look at California at the end of World War II," Bentsen adds. "Didn't have a lot out in California. But you had some great universities. Those great universities and the research that went on there and the emphasis on it helped spawn Silicon Valley and the high tech.

"I'd like to see Texas in the '90s become the lead research state. That's a very tall objective, but you might as well have it, try for it," Bentsen said.

The first wall paper was used by the poor and consisted of painted imitations of tapestry and velvet hangings that decorated walls in Europe during the 1500s.

CHERI BARKER, TODD TAYLOR

Wedding date set

Cheri Barker and Todd Taylor plan to exchange wedding vows Aug. 23 in the Frio Baptist Church.

The bride-elect is the daughter of Douglass and June Barker of 235 Elm and the prospective bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. L. Dee Taylor of Route 2. Hereford, and Martha Thomas of Memphis, Tenn.

Miss Barker is a junior nursing student at West Texas State University and is presently employed at Haley Printing in Canyon.

Taylor is a senior student at WTSU majoring in ag-business. He is employed at Holley Sugar Corp.

Estimate announced

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Hands Across America's final estimate of the number of people who linked hands in the nationwide line to raise money for the poor is 5,442,960.

Another 1.5 million people participated in "off the line" events, such as Hands Across Boston. The Boston event drew 6,000 participants and raised about $100,000 in pledges, officials said.

Four days after the event, Hands organizers continued to use the same pre-event estimate of about $20 million in total contributions.

At least half the participants paid the minimum $10 to stand in line, according to Hands Across America spokesman Dave Fulton.

"There's nothing more specific than that," Hands deputy project director Jane Maggin said Thursday. "I'm sure you'll hear just as soon as we hear."

After expenses, all revenue is to be contributed to organizations who aid the homeless and hungry in the United States.

Mrs. Maggin said ham radio operators calling themselves Hams Across America, were stationed along every five-mile segment of the route for crowd counts.

In addition, each of the Hands Across America state offices sent "mile marshals" counting participants along every mile along the route.

DR. GOTT — Watch out when watching TV

By Peter H. Gott, M.D.

DEAR DR. GOTT — Can watching a color TV for two or three hours a day at a distance of three feet affect the eyes?

DEAR READER — I think three feet is a little close. I've found that eyestrain can be a problem when the viewing distance is less than six feet. Of course, the size of the screen makes an enormous difference; you'll have to sit closer to smaller screens. A good rule to follow is: If your eyes bother you after watching TV, you are either too close to the screen or watching too much TV.

DEAR DR. GOTT — I'm planning on having some facial plastic surgery that would take about an hour and a half. My surgeon is leaving the choice of a local or general anesthetic up to me. How do you feel about this?

DEAR READER — The choice of general or local anesthetic is a very personal one and depends on the type of proposed surgery, the length of the procedure and your tolerance to pain. I believe that this issue is best left to your discretion, with the advice and counsel of your surgeon.

DEAR DR. GOTT — I broke my leg skiing and have to use crutches. I've now got adhesive capsulitis, chronic bursitis and a frozen shoulder. There is further diagnosis of chronic neck strain, cervical brachial plexus thoracic pain syndrome, reflex dystrophy and TMJ syndrome. What does this all mean in simple terms? The pain is pretty bad. What can I do?

DEAR READER — I'm not clear about the relation of the accident to your multiple complaints, unless you used crutches in an improper manner and developed shoulder problems as a result. The diagnoses you mention pertain to a variety of neuromuscular malfunctions and pain syndromes. Frankly, I'm unable to put them all together. I think you would be best served by evaluation in the orthopedic or rheumatology clinic of a teaching hospital.

DEAR DR. GOTT — I am a 90-year-old ovo-lacto-vegetarian (I eat eggs and dairy products, but no meat or fish). Recently, after a prostate operation, I had a problem with constipation. Laxatives didn't help much. I've found that when I apply a warm compress to my rectum, I get a strong desire to move my bowels. Is there any medical reason why this should occur and is there any harm in the practice? My doctor thinks I'm nuts, but it works for me.

DEAR READER — The application of heat to the anal area can both relax the sphincter and promote peristalsis in some people. I am not aware of any reason the practice would be harmful. Isn't it amazing that, even in the face of obvious success, your doctor thinks you're "nuts"? What does it take to convince him?

DEAR DR. GOTT — Is chewing gum bad for you? Is there any food or habit I should avoid to keep my mouth healthy?

DEAR READER — Chewing gum is not harmful. However, the kind that contains sugar may promote tooth decay.

Couple united in marriage Saturday

Lori Li Fischer of Amarillo became the bride of James Allan Mongold of Hereford during an early afternoon cememony Saturday in the Atrium Room of the Federated Women's Club in Amarillo.

Officating was President Pat Parker of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in Hereford.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Fischer of Amarillo and the bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. J.W. Mongold of Borger.

Lisa Howell of Amarillo served her sister as matron of honor and Shawn Wyly of Canyon was best man.

Mrs. Pat Ellison of Austin was her sister's bridesmaid and David Fortenberry of Hereford was groomsman. Guests were escorted by Mike Reed of Amarillo and Kevin Huffaker of Hereford.

Cindy Morgan of Hereford played various piano selections during the ceremony.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore an ivory satin gown made by her mother. It was fashioned with lace sleeves and bodice.

The elbow-length bridal veil was attached to a hat decorated by the bride and her mother with silk flowers. She carried a bouquet of rose and ivory silk flowers that she also made.

The attendants' tea-length dresses, also made by the bride's mother, were of rose colored satin. They carried rose and ivory silk floral bouquets.

The groom's sister, Vicki Mongold of Hereford, invited guests to the reception held at the women's club.

Cake was served by Rayvonne Reed of Amarillo and Donna Tice of Hereford, the groom's sister. Michelle Eder of Canyon poured the punch and coffee.

The bride's cake, decorated by ivory and rose colored flowers, and the groom's cake made in the shape of a policeman's badge, were placed on a table covered by the bride's grandmother's lace cloth.

Leaving for a wedding trip to Durango, Colo., the bride was attired in a rose, ivory and green floral print dress designed with full sleeves, a gathered yoke and pleated back.

The couple will make their home after June 6 in Hereford.

The bride graduated from Tascosa High School in Amarillo and is attending West Texas State University. She is presently employed at casual corner in Amarillo as a selling supervisor.

The groom, a Hereford High School graduate, attended Brigham Young University. He is employed by the city of Hereford as a policeman.

Out-of-town family members attending included the bride's brothers, Mike Patterson of Beaumont and Larry and Karen Fischer and family; the bride's sister and family, Tom and Pat Ellison of Austin; the groom's uncles and aunt, Glenn Allan and Shirley Clements of Oklahoma; the bride's uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Fischer.

NURSING SCHOOLS SLOW IN RECRUITING MEN

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — While many traditional men's professions, such as engineering, law and medicine, have responded to pressures for affirmative action for women, there hasn't been a corresponding change in female-dominated fields, says a University of Rochester professor.

"Women now make up a third of the entering classes in medical schools, but in nursing schools the male entrants are still only 4 or 5 percent," says Jerome Lysaught, professor of education and pediatrics and an authority on health professions education.

Red Cross Update

A first aid class will begin Tuesday at 6:30 p.m. at the Red Cross office.

The class will finish Thursday at the Red Cross office. Those planning to take the class are asked to call the office and pick up a book before the class begins.

The annual membership meeting will be held Tuesday, June 17 at 7:30 p.m. at the Red Cross office. Everyone interested in Red Cross activities is invited to attend. Board of directors will be elected, reports will be given and the uniformed volunteers will serve refreshments.

The aims of the American Red Cross are to improve the quality of human life and to enhance individual self-reliance and concern for others. It works toward these aims through national and chapter services governed and directed by volunteers. American Red Cross services help people avoid emergencies, prepare for emergencies, and cope with them when they occur. The Deaf Smith County chapter is a United Way agency.

Officers Installed

During the recent meeting of the Pilot Club of Hereford, new officers were installed. From left, are Margaret Bell, director; Linda Minchew, director; Trish Workman, president-elect; Donna West, president; Vesta Mae Nunley, treasurer; and Jeane Dowell, director. Not pictured are Mildred Fuhrmann, who will serve as recording secretary, and Ann Carroll, corresponding secretary.

Division Leaders

New division leaders were installed by Margaret Bell when members of the Pilot Club of Hereford met recently. Yvonne Simpson, at left, will serve as projects leader; Lou Ann LaFever, internal affairs; Mary Edwards, outreach; and Mary Johnson, also internal affairs division leader. Simpson was named as Pilot of the Month in recognition of her outstanding service in the club.

Officers installed Tuesday

New officers assumed roles of leadership when the Pilot Club of Hereford met Tuesday morning. Installing officer Margaret Bell used the theme "In Tune With Tomorrow Today" in charging the new officers with their duties.

Serving as leaders for the next 15 months will be Donna West, president; Trish Workman, president-elect; Mildred Fuhrmann, recording secretary; Ann Carroll, corresponding secretary; Vesta Mae Nunley, treasurer; Linda Minchew, Jeane Dowell and Margaret Bell, directors.

Also, installed were the division leaders: Yvonne Simpson, projects; Mary Edwards, outreach; and Lou Ann LaFever and Mary Johnson, internal affairs. All work of the Pilot Club is carried out through this three-division structure.

The club voted to send a memorial gift to the Pilot International Foundation in honor of a former member, Peppy Blocker. Blocker was a charter member of the Pilot Club of Hereford and was the only woman who had held Pilot membership in another club.

Special recognition was given to Mary Edwards and Lou Ann LaFever, who have had perfect attendance for the past 12 months. Other members have made up absences with service hours, but these two Pilots have not missed a meeting for one year.

Pilot of the Month honors went to Yvonne Simpson in recognition of her outstanding service as a Pilot. She is the coordinator of the Lifeline and is responsible for all installations of Lifeline units in the homes of clients and for the telephone calling to assure that all units are in good working order. In addition, she is to be the coordinator of the projects division and has done extensive planning for the new club year which will begin on June 1.

Margaret Bell, as the retiring president, recognized all of the outgoing officers for their work since the club was chartered in the summer of 1984. She also expressed appreciation to Vera Threewit, the club chaplain; Margaret Schroeter, club musician; and Linda Vermillion, Lou Ann LaFever and Jeane Dowell, contact committee members.

Welcomed as a new member was Merle Clark, a speech therapist for the Hereford Independent School District.

During the installation ceremony, the new officers and directors were introduced by Irene McKinster, a retiring director. The Pilot Code of Ethics was read by Betty Sue Worthan. The club gavel and president's pin, received by the Pilot Club of Hereford on its charter night in September of 1984, were passed by Bell to the incoming president, Donna West. She, in turn, gave the outgoing officer a past president's pin.

The next regular meeting of the club will be held at the Caison House on Tuesday, June 10, at 7 a.m.

Elliott installs new club officers

Members of the Hereford Art Guild met Tuesday at noon for a covered dish luncheon in the home of Carrie Mae Doak with Nell Culpepper serving as co-hostesses.

Tables were decorated with place cards and potted plants furnished by the hostess.

Following the luncheon, a business meeting was conducted. Vernia Elliot installed new club officers. They included Hilda Haven who will serve as president; Lottie Wertenberger, first vice president; Eunice Peterson, second vice president; Leola Cook, secretary; Annie DeLozier, treasurer; Carrie Mae Doak, parliamentarian; and Nell Culpepper, reporter.

Members discussed a trip to the Art Gallery in Canyon on June 6.

Those present were Cook, DeLozier, Doak, Elliot, Marie Harris, Haven, Peterson, Jean Reinauer, Wertenberger, Culpeper and a guest, Margaret Young.

Museum toured by club

Members of Cultural Extension Homemakers Club met recently in the Deaf Smith County Library parking lot before traveling to Canyon.

The nine members and guests, Mary Dutton and Catherine Fairweather, toured the Panhandle Plains Historical Museum in which they were shown the sesquicentennial quilt display.

Following the tour, the group ate at the Railroad Crossing Restaurant for lunch and then went shopping.

The next meeting will be in September.

"Celebrate Texas" has something for everyone this summer. The activities for the children have been divided into three groups: preschool–K-5 will be under the supervision of Rebecca Walls; 1st-3rd graders will be under the supervision of Dianne Pierson; and 4th-6th graders will be under the supervision of Merlee McWethy. Adult volunteers are welcomed this year also.

The activities for children ages 3–K-5 include "Indian headdresses," designing a button for Texas, and Indian game relays. The activities for children in the 1st-6th grades include "Medicine pouches," "Celebrate Texas" kites, and a special "float" for the Hereford Jubilee parade. So get your summer together and let's read for Texas adventure!!!.

The Summer Reading Club is a program designed to encourage school-age children to read during the summer months. It is also designed for the pre-school child whose parent is willing to read to him. In order to participate, a child simply needs to come to the library (parents are encouraged to accompany their children) and register for the program. When the child registers, he will receive a "Texas" to be hung in the library, a log to record the books read, a calendar of "Celebrate Texas" events, an information sheet, and a bookmark.

The reading programs have been divided into two separate groups. Prizes for reading will be as follows for children pre-school age to 3rd grade:

For reading 5 books: Prizes are 1st star for your Texas, and "Celebrate Texas" ribbon.

For reading 10 books: Prizes are 2nd star for your Texas, an "I read Texan" sticker, and a one dip ice cream cone.

For reading 15 books: Prizes are 3rd start for your Texas, a "From Texas" sticker, and a Texas flag.

For reading 20 books: Prizes are 4th star for your Texas, a Texas sticker, a sheriff's badge, a certificate of achievement, and your Texas will be moved to "TEJAS JUNCTION."

Prizes for reading will be as follows for children in grades 4 and above:

For reading 2 books: 1st star for your Texas, and "Celebrate Texas" ribbon.

For reading 4 books: 2nd star for your Texas, an "I read Texan" sticker, and a one dip ice cream cone.

For reading 6 books: 3rd star for your Texas, a "From Texas" sticker, and a Texas flag.

For reading 8 books: 4th star for your Texas, a Texas sticker, a sheriff's badge, a certificate of achievement, and your Texas will be moved to "TEJAS JUNCTION."

All E books in the library will be marked with a red dot. All J books will be marked with a blue dot. Children in the 3rd grade will have an option of reading in the E or J reading program. This will be a decision of the child and parent.

Each Tuesday morning, a special program will be presented for reading club participants. The first program will be held June 10 at 10 a.m. in the Heritage and Bicentennial Rooms of the library.

A Flair for Design

Accessories, for the most part, are the final step in completing a room or space, and can frequently be the most difficult and time consuming step in the process. It takes practice and a trained eye to arrange unrelated objects effectively.

Persons who are "collectors" of objects of art and paintings or prints have a definite advantage, as they probably already own many things that may be used, and for them, it is a matter of sorting through these pieces to decide which to use in a given location. If a painting is not usable as it is, consider rematting or possible reframing to adapt the piece to its new surroundings.

For help in selecting frames and matting for any type of art work, please call FINISHING TOUCHES, at 364-8870 or come by 501 E. Park Ave. Monday thru Friday, and by appointment.

ANN LANDERS Physicians' fees

Dear Ann Landers: How strong is the AMA lobby with you? Are you brave enough to expose a perfectly legal, national doctor's scam? Check this one out with your M.D. authorities.

Patient goes to the doctor's office. Doctor's nurse draws the patient's blood for the needed (or unneeded) lab test panels. Doctor charges the patient $40. Later a commercial lab service picks up the blook specimen, performs the test, and charges the doctor about $10. Where does the $30 profit go? Where do you think? Right in the doctor's pocket! Most patients are unaware of this money-making scheme that doctors now use to beef up their shrinking incomes.

When will patients become consumers and start asking questions? It's time they started to shop around for the best buy in health care. Doctors have become slick business entrapreneurs. Patients should start becoming knowledgeable consumers.

DISGUSTED WITH DOCTORS

DEAR DISGUSTED: So the doctor charges $40 to do a lab test which costs $10 and you ask, "Where does the $30 profit go?"

Who pays the doctor's office rent, telephone and light bill? Who pays his nurses and the receptionist? Who pays for the medical supplies he uses in his office? Who keeps up the car he drives from the hospital to his office?

Most important, who pays for his malpractice insurance! I don't need any help from the AMA to answer this question. A moron I am not.

Dear Ann Landers: I've read your column for years. Enjoyed the meatloaf episode, lived through the discussion about the correct way to hang the bathroom tissue and comments concerning the toil seat–up or down?

But I have never noticed any dicsussion about dimples. Webster's Dictionary defines them this way: "Dimple; a small hollow spot or dent in the cheek or chin." My mother had a beautiful dimple in each cheek. However, none of her four children were so favored. Nor any of the grandchildren. Also, none of the flock of great-grandchildren. Evenidently dimples are not hereditary.

In the picture that heads your column, you seem to have one of these beauty spots in each cheek! Fess up, dearie, do yuh, huh? Where did you get them?

NO DIMPLES IN DIS FAMILY

DEAR N.D.: I plead guilty as charged. Dimples are indeed hereditary. I got them from my father. Although I have been accused of sleeping on collar buttons.

The best example of inherited dimples I know is in Kirk Douglas' family. Kirk has a marvelous dimple in his chin. His son Michael inherited that million-dollar beauty mark and Michael's baby son has it too. He said it was the second thing he looked for when the baby was delivered, and sure enough, there it was!

Dear Ann Landers: While going through my mother's personal papers I found this gem. (Mom was 93 and sharp as a tack.) Please print it, Ann. It certainly speaks to the problem of our times.

E.E.K. IN AKRON

DEAR A.K.: Right you are. Here it is:

A disgruntled schoolteacher handed in her resignation with the following comment: "In our public schools today, the teachers are afraid of the pincipals, the principals are afraid of the superintendents, the superintendents are afraid of the board members, the board members are afraid of the parents, the parents are afraid of the children and the children are afraid of nobody."

Got those wedding bell blue overcost ... guest list ... what to wear ... and other details? Ann Landers' "New Bride's Guide" will help. For a copy, send $2.00 plus a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope (39 cents postage) to Ann Landers, P.O. Box 11995, Chicago, Illinois, 60611.

AGRICULTURE COURSES ATTRACTING WOMEN

UNIVERSITY PARK, Pa. (AP) — Not only are many non-farm youths majoring in agriculture at The Pennsylvania State University, but women are increasingly preparing for a wide variety of agricultural occupations.

Today's enrollments are a far cry from 1859, when 69 young men studied science and practical agriculture, says Gene Love, associate dean for resident education in the College of Agriculture. Now, 40 percent of all agriculture majors at Penn State are women, studying everything from agronomy to wildlife science. And 80 percent of all the agriculture undergraduates are coming from suburban and urban areas.

'K' numbers

K imprinted on gold jewelry, with a number, assures a certain value of content: 14K indicates 14 parts gold and 10 parts alloy. The higher the K number, the purer the gold, and therefore more expensive. Sterling means no fewer than 925 parts pure silver to 75 parts copper.

Twenty-four-hour time is widely used in scientific work throughout the world. In the United States, it is also used by the armed forces. In Europe, it is commonly used in preference to the 12-hour a.m. and p.m. system.

By Polly Fisher

DEAR POLLY — Stash a clean blackboard eraser in the glove compartment to clean windshields on a rainy day.

If you notice a decrease in your feathered friends visiting the birdbath on the lawn, try dropping a few colored marbles in the water to attract them.

Velvet strips sewn inside the belt of pants or a skirt will prevent the blouse from slipping in or out. — MRS. D.S.

DEAR POLLY — My hint is for mock oyster casserole. Combine one cubed, peeled eggplant, one can minced clams, white cream sauce, and minced onion and top with buttered bread crumbs. Bake at 350 degrees until crumbs are brown and eggplant is tender. Tastes like real oysters. — VIRGINIA

DEAR POLLY — Stack the children's Easter baskets in a large garment bag hung in the attic or a closet. This keeps the baskets from getting broken and keeps both the baskets and Easter grass clean. You won't need to replace the grass every year. — MRS. E.M.

DEAR POLLY — When recipes call for fine sugar (such as meringue shells), I make my own by putting regular sugar in the blender. — MRS. A.M.S.

DEAR POLLY — I want to share with your readers what I do with all the special greeting cards that mean so much on Mother's Day, birthdays, etc. I fill photo albums with them and put the date on each card. This is as great as going back and looking over photos. It makes for happy moments and memories — and a few tears of joy. — V.C.

DEAR MEG — Guide dog sought for blind sibling

By Meg Whitcomb

DEAR MEG — My sister lost her sight because of a terrible car accident last summer. She is having problems adjusting to her handicap, and I'm helping as best I can.

The problem is, I work six hours a day so I have to leave her at home to care for herself. This worries me because she is afraid to go out, and listening to the radio for hours doesn't amuse her. I think she should have a guide dog, but she says she's too old to learn how to handle one. (She's 52.) I don't believe that, and I'd like to know how to find the people who train and sell these dogs, but I don't know where to start. Can you help? — LITTLE SISTER, MD.

DEAR SISTER — Glad to. There are several guide-dog schools and foundations throughout the country. The one nearest you is The Seeing Eye, Inc., P.O. Box 375, Morristown, NJ 07960. Phone: (201) 539-4425. Seeing Eye is a philanthropic organization that instructs the blind in the proper use and handling of a dog, and breeds and raises dogs as well. Not all blind people want the responsibility of a dog, so you should talk it over with your sister first. I suggest you write for the information and go over it with her. Good luck.

DEAR MEG — Last year my husband had an affair. He even moved in with the woman. But he came home four months ago when I told him I was taking our girls and moving back to Massachusetts.

Jed is good to me and calls me pet names, but I think he still loves the other woman. I don't think he's going to get over her any time soon. What should I do? — DON'T KNOW, MASS.

P.S. He hasn't told me he loves me in months.

DEAR DON'T — If Jed has put the affair behind him and is behaving himself, I'd let things be. But the next time he moves out should be the last.

Lonely? Meg's booklet "Breaking Out of the Loneliness Trap" will help. Send $1 to DEAR MEG, in care of this newspaper, P.O. Box 928, Cincinnati, OH 45201.

In 1912, Yaun Shi-Kai became the first president of the Chinese Republic.

The Newspaper BIBLE

There was in Damascus a believer named Ananias. The Lord spoke to him in a vision, calling, "Ananias!" "Yes, Lord!" he replied. And the Lord said, "Go over to Straight Street and find the house of a man named Judas and ask there for Saul of Tarsus. He is praying to Me right now, for I have shown him a vision of a man named Ananias coming in and laying his hands on him so that he can see again!"

"But Lord," exclaimed Ananias, "I have heard about the terrible things this man has done to the believers in Jerusalem! And we hear that he has arrest warrants with him from the chief priests, authorizing him to arrest every believer in Damascus!"

But the Lord said, "Go and do what I say. For Saul is my chosen instrument to take My message to the nations and before kings, as well as to the people of Israel. And I will show him how much he must suffer for Me."

So Ananias went over and found Saul and laid his hands on him and said, "Brother Saul, the Lord Jesus, who appeared to you on the road, has sent me so that you may be filled with the Holy Spirit and get your sight back."

Instantly (it was as though scales fell from his eyes) Saul could see, and was immediately baptized. Then he ate and was strengthened. He stayed with the believers in Damascus for a few days and went at once to the synagogues to tell everyone there the Good News about Jesus--that He is indeed the Son of God! All who heard him were amazed. "Isn't this the same man who persecuted Jesus' followers so bitterly in Jerusalem?" they asked. "And we understand that he came here to arrest them all and take them in chains to the chief priests."

Woman says she found 189th soldier

By SHEILA ALLEE
Associated Press Writer

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — History enthusiasts may never find concrete evidence of everyone who died in the battle of the Alamo, but Joyce Avery Moore is convinced a distant uncle of hers was among them.

After four years of research, Mrs. Moore and Helen Pettit have come up with evidence of a 189th Alamo hero.

The official death count, according to the Daughters of the Republic of Texas, for years has been 188.

A few days ago, Mrs. Moore and Mrs. Pettit presented documentation to the DRT that Washington Curtis died in the famous 1836 battle.

"I don't think there will ever be concrete proof — like a muster list of men who fought at the Alamo," Mrs. Moore said.

"If Travis or (James) Bowie had made a list, it has long since been burned," she said.

Mrs. Moore and Mrs. Pettit, both members of the Daughters of the Republic of Texas, have turned over their evidence to the Alamo Committee of the DRT.

The committee is researching the documentation and will make a recommendation to the state DRT board, which meets next in September.

If the state board verifies the find, the DRT will add Curtis' name to the official list of men who died in the historic battle against the Mexican army.

"From what I have seen, it looks awfully good," said Edith Mae Johnson, chairman of the Alamo Committee.

Mrs. Moore said she began research on her family tree about four years ago.

In her study, she said she and Mrs. Pettit discovered a common ancestry and that Washington Curtis was a distant uncle for both of them.

But they became curious about him when they could find no record of his existence after the battle of the Alamo.

Records showed Curtis had come to Texas from Alabama with his widowed father and six brothers and sisters in 1823.

He obtained a 550-acre land grant in Bastrop County in 1831 and had 65 head of cattle, Mrs. Moore said.

In early 1836, when Curtis was 31, a band of about a dozen men from Bastrop County went to the Alamo.

They went in response to a call for reinforcements from Alamo commander Col. William Travis.

Curtis was not among those dozen men who went, but Mrs. Moore said she believes he followed them a day or two later after he found someone to watch his property.

Mrs. Moore said she became convinced Curtis fought and died at the Alamo when she read a historical account of the battle at San Jacinto, where Texas defeated Mexico.

In the account she read — written by J. Frank Dobie — Curtis' father James Curtis is quoted as saying he fought at San Jacinto because the Mexicans "killed my son and son-in-law in the Alamo."

Curtis' son-in-law George Washington Cottle is among the official Alamo dead.

Mrs. Moore said there are records of the existence of James Curtis' other sons after 1836. But not of Washington Curtis.

"I was extremely surprised" at the discovery, which she made May 5 at the state archives in Austin.

Mrs. Pettit, she said, had suspected for some time Washington Curtis had died at the Alamo. But Mrs. Moore did not.

Several telephone calls from The Associated Press to Mrs. Pettit's home in Odessa went unanswered.

"He deserves every bit of credit that any Alamo defender has had," Mrs. Moore said.

Even if Curtis isn't made an official Alamo hero, Mrs. Moore said she will stand by her conviction he died in the battle.
