Man kills two, self

CHICAGO — A former police officer on trial for eight bank robberies slipped free of his handcuffs in a courthouse garage Monday, wrestled a gun from a federal marshal and fatally shot two other guards before killing himself, the FBI said. Jeffrey Erickson, 34, who had been dubbed "the bearded bandit" before his arrest, had just sat through the sixth day of his trial. He was being taken from the court at the Dirksen Federal Building back to the Metropolitan Correctional Center when the shootings occurred.

Murphy vs. Quayle

NEW YORK — The producers of CBS' "Murphy Brown" plan to poke fun at Vice President Dan Quayle for lambasting their heroine's decision to have a child out of wedlock. The hard-charging TV journalist played by Candice Bergen will answer Quayle's remarks about her single-parenthood during a special, hourlong season premiere of the CBS-TV hit show, the show's creator, Diane English, told TV critics in Los Angeles Saturday. She wouldn't elaborate, since she's no longer connected with the show and only helped to outline the second season kickoff.

Oswald was 'weak'

MOSCOW — A Russian who said he knew Lee Harvey Oswald in the former Soviet Union recalled the assassin of President John F. Kennedy as a man of weak character and a poor marksman, a magazine reported. The Russian, identified as Pavel Golovachev made the comments in an interview to be published by the ITAR-Tass news agency. ITAR-Tass carried excerpts on Monday. The interview discloses nothing about the assassination, but offers glimpses about Oswald's time in the former Soviet Union from the late 1950s until 1962.

On mocking Hitler

DAYTON, Ohio — An historian is throwing a serious pie in the face at those who credit Charlie Chaplin as the first comic mocking Adolf Hitler. The Three Stooges beat him to it, says Don Morlan of the University of Dayton. "Most film historians — in fact, most of the film histories that you read — have given Charlie Chaplin credit in 'The Great Dictator' for being the first comedian . . . to take Hitler on," Morlan said. "Actually, Moe Howard was the first comedian to portray Hitler and to satirize him."

Humidity turns city into sauna

Residents sweat out gulf coast-type conditions

By Darren J. Waggoner
Staff writer

As the saying goes, it's not the heat, but the humidity that's causing much discomfort to Midland residents unaccustomed to the phenomenon.

One hundred percent humidity, conditions more reminiscent of the Florida Everglades than the south plains, greeted Midland residents early Monday. These conditions were perpetuated by a low dense cloud cover that lingered in the area until noon.

But temperatures that had hovered near 100 degrees for several days dropped to an unseasonable high of 83 degrees, which is more than 10 degrees lower than the average high temperature of 94, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

The humidity tapered off to 62 percent Monday afternoon despite a brief shower around 3 p.m., but it was still higher than the normal afternoon level of 35 to 40 percent, the NWS said.

"I'm glad this (humidity) is rare out here," said James Robson, an oil-field worker. "It can make 80 degrees feel like 110. I wouldn't want to live in a climate like that."

Expert: AIDS male, female gap shrinks

Associated Press

Women to be primary victims of epidemic by end of decade, official says.

AMSTERDAM, Netherlands — Women around the world are now catching the AIDS virus almost as often as men, and will probably become the primary victims by the end of the decade, an expert predicted Monday.

The fast spread of AIDS among women, especially in the world's poorest regions, is one of the dominant themes of the Eighth International Conference on AIDS, which began Sunday.

Acquired immune deficiency syndrome first came to world attention a decade ago primarily as a disease of homosexual men and male drug users in the United States and Europe. Since then, however, AIDS has spread around the world, and now 80 percent of new infections are in developing countries, where sex between men and women is the main means of transmission.

The Geneva-based World Health Organization estimates that between 11 million and 13 million people are now infected with HIV worldwide.

More than 6 million of those infected are in Africa. In some cities, a third of all adults carry the virus and 80 percent of hospital beds are filled with AIDS patients.

During heterosexual encounters, women are biologically more likely than men to catch the virus from infected partners. So "by the year 2000, more than half of all newly infected adults may be women," said Dr. Michael Merson, a New York City native who heads the WHO's Global Program on AIDS.

"With every passing year, the gap . . . between the sexes has narrowed, in both developed and developing countries, as heterosexual transmission has become more common," he said.

So far this year, he said, about 1 million people have caught HIV, the virus that causes AIDS, and almost half of them are women.

Dr. Jonathan Mann of Harvard University, the meeting's chairman, contended the growing number of infected females also reflects the subservient status of women in the world.

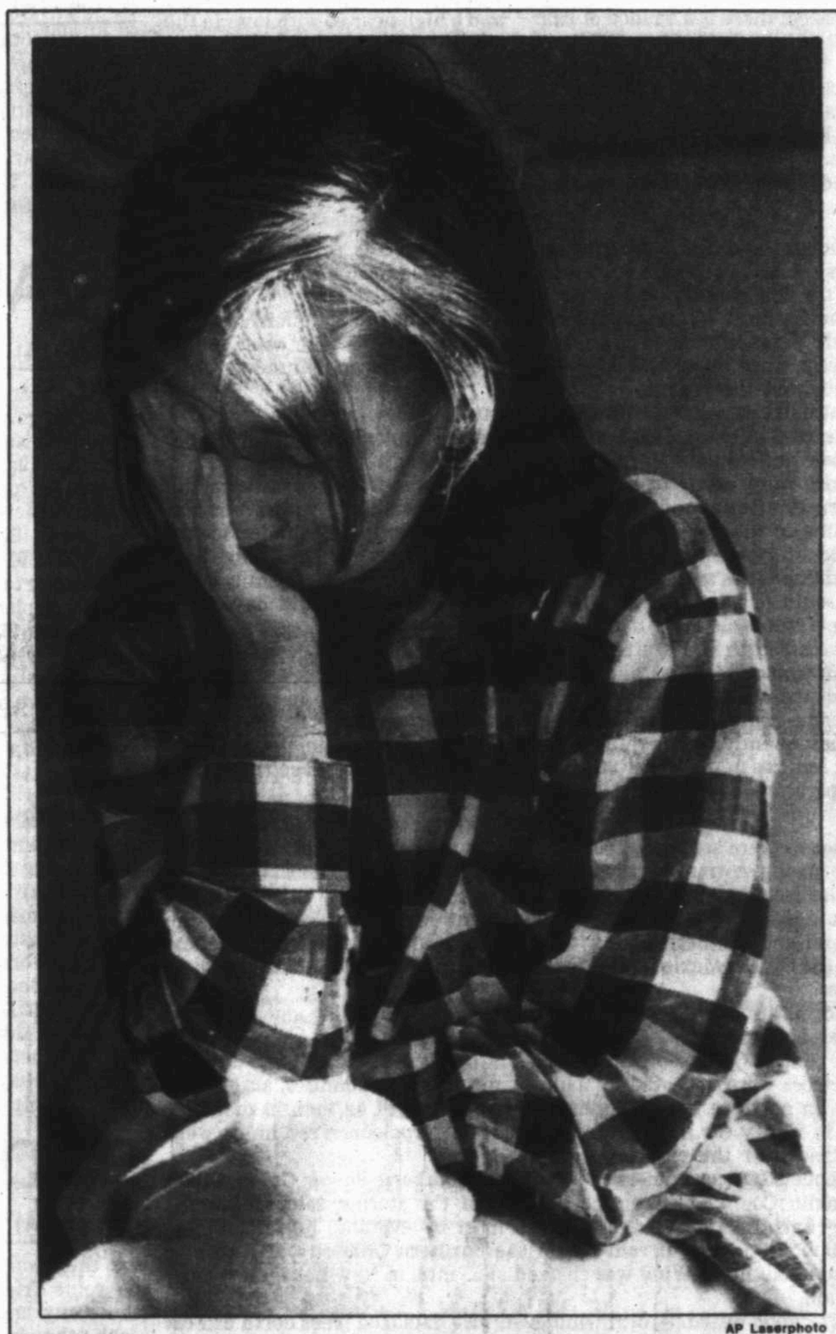

Men typically initiate sexual encounters, he said, and women often are unable to demand that their partners use condoms. Condoms are the primary way of preventing the spread of AIDS among sexually active men and women.

"Male-dominated societies are a threat to public health," Mann said.

Dr. Anke A. Ehrhardt of Columbia University in New York said women urgently need a means of prevention that is under their control.

The newly developed female condom is not yet approved for sale in the United States. She also urged development of a virus-killing cream that women can use without depending on men's cooperation.

Ranch rodeo rides spirit of Old West back to town

By Ed Todd

Want to work on a ranch?

Well, there are some West Texas ranch hands who will show you how next week at the fifth annual Midland Ranch Rodeo and Bit, Spur & Western Collectible Trade Show.

And if you ever had a hankering to watch some real cowboys and cowgirls go to work amid flying dust, the bawling of unsettled cattle and the sweat of hard work, then you might want to show up for the real ranch rodeo.

It won't be one of those high-falutin rodeos where cowboy circuit riders compete for money by hanging onto a raging bull or bucking horse or by trying to drive a galloping steer into the ground.

No, sir, and no, ma'am.

Come Aug. 1, Midland ranch-

Perot plan called for higher taxes, Social Security cuts

WASHINGTON (AP) — Ross Perot was prepared to outline an economic program that would have cut Social Security benefits and farm subsidies and imposed a 50-cent-a-gallon increase in the gasoline tax.

On foreign policy, he was ready to call for an overhaul of the State Department to make trade the main mission of U.S. embassies around the world. And his campaign was putting the finishing touches on a tough "zero tolerance" anti-drug policy.

Despite criticism that the Texas billionaire lacked specifics on issues, his campaign was in the process of preparing a highly detailed set of position papers when Perot abruptly abandoned the quest late last week.

Corpse provides startlingly vivid view of Stone Age man

By Brenda Fowler
N.Y. Times News Service

MAINZ, Germany — Last fall the mummified corpse of a late Stone Age man melted out of a glacier high in the Tyrolean Alps. That spectacular discovery is providing archaeologists with a startlingly vivid picture of how Stone Age man was clothed and equipped.

Yet with other archaeological material from the area so skimpy, there is almost no context in which to place this amazing individual, who stepped out of the ice nearly intact from the day he died some five millennia ago.

"We look at cultures, and here is an individual," said Dr. Markus Egg, a prehistorian at the Roman-Germanic Central Museum in Mainz, which is restoring and studying the equipment found with the man. "That means it's really a forensic case."

Study of the man's plentiful equipment, including a copper ax, quiver and arrows, is revealing a wealth of craft techniques. But larger questions, like who he was and where he came from, may not be answerable until more early Alpine settlements have been excavated and researched.

The evidence so far suggests that the man, who carbon-dating tests show died between 3500 and 3000 B.C., was probably a herdsman from a nearby valley settlement, whose culture was influenced both by contemporary settlements on Swiss lakes and by those in the Po River Valley in northern Italy, prehistorians and archaeologists say.

At the Mainz museum, Egg's team of three has been cleaning, preserving, documenting and, when possible, restoring the tools and clothing found near the body of the man, who is believed to have died between the age of 25 and 35. The uses of most of the tools have been determined, though not all the materials have been identified.

Woven fabrics from this age have long been known and studied, but this is the first time that remains of leather clothing have surfaced from the late Stone, or Neolithic, Age.

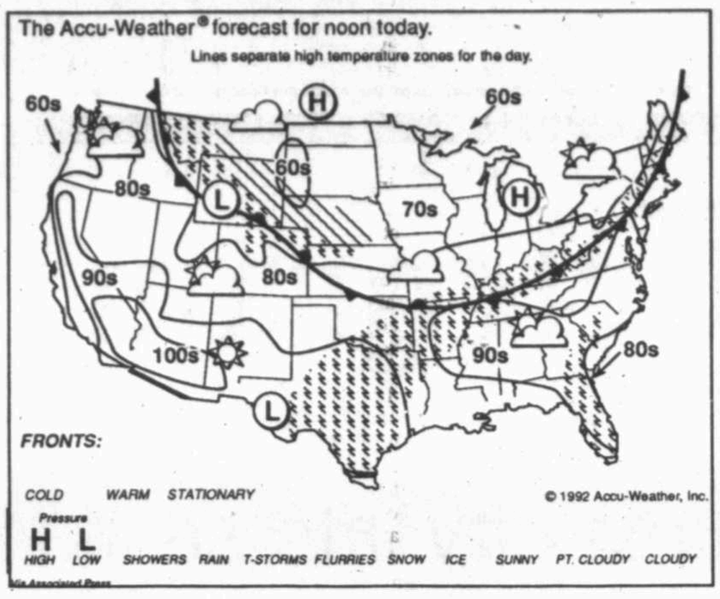

Made of many patches of leather expertly sewn together with sinew, the clothes were found in tatters, probably destroyed during his ungentle excavation with ski poles and ice picks by mountain climbers and a forensic scientist who did not realize who he was, Egg said.

Several pieces of the clothing have been preserved and are now as supple as

WEATHER SUMMARY

HUMIDITY: It's sticky outside

(From 1A)

Observers expect 100 percent humidity again this morning.

"This may not be all that uncharacteristic," said an NWS observer. "There's a lot of moisture in the air. So much so, in fact, that the lower morning temperatures and the hot ground are prime for humid conditions and perhaps fog. This also can cause a lot of storm activity."

Indeed, there is a chance of rain until at least Saturday in Midland due to a slowly developing low pressure system originating in Baja, Calif., said the NWS observer.

Today's forecast calls for mostly cloudy skies with a 30 percent chance of thunderstorms and a high of 85 to 90 with southeast winds at 10 to 20 mph. Tonight should be mostly cloudy with a 30 percent chance of thunderstorms and a low in the upper 60s, according to the NWS.

Wednesday should be partly cloudy with a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms and a high near 90.

The extended forecast calls for a slight chance of thunderstorms and showers, partly cloudy skies and a high near 90 with lows in the 60s.

After an overnight low of 65, Monday's high reached 83 compared with the record high for that date of 104 set in 1936. The record low for that date is 60 set in 1970.

STATE

Showers and thunderstorms were common across Texas on Monday. Heavy rains on already saturated ground caused flash flooding throughout the hill country and adjacent Edwards Plateau.

The National Weather Service said significant tropical moisture over South Texas combined with an upper level low in the west and a tropical wave along the coast to trigger showers and thunderstorms throughout the region.

Rainfall totals of 2 inches were reported Monday afternoon in several areas of Southeast Texas and parts of the upper coast. Most of the shower and thunderstorm activity was moving to the north.

Skies were partly to mostly sunny skies over the Panhandle in the afternoon. But abundant low-level moisture combined with afternoon heating in the development of scattered showers and thunderstorms.

Mid-afternoon temperatures across West Texas ranged from 78 at Guadalupe Pass and Marfa to 92 at El Paso. Winds were generally from the south or southeast at 5 to 15 mph. West Texas should have high temperatures in the 90s through Wednesday.

Across North Texas, afternoon heating again helped to destabilize the warm tropical air mass, and thunderstorms developed over a wide area.

Moist southerly flow around the eastern side of an upper level low pressure center continued to feed gulf moisture into the area.

Consequently, temperatures at mid-afternoon were in the 80s with heat indexes in the upper 80s and lower 90s. At 3 p.m., Waco reported a temperature of 90 with a heat index of 98.

NATION

Storms were scattered from the Plains to the East Coast on Monday, with strong storms over the Ohio Valley. Rain was scattered over parts of the Northwest.

At midday, showers and thunderstorms were scattered across the central and southern Plains, the lower and middle Mississippi Valley, and the Gulf of Mexico states to the southern half of the Atlantic Coastal states.

Storms also were scattered over the lower Ohio Valley and the lower Great Lakes.

In central Ohio, some power lines in Delaware County were downed and trees were uprooted in Madison and Franklin counties, authorities said. In northwestern Ohio, hail three-quarters of an inch in diameter fell in Henry County on the west side of Napoleon. Tree limbs were downed near the city.

About 35,000 customers of Columbus Southern Power Co. in Ohio's Franklin County lost service because of the storms, said spokesman Greg Earl. Service was restored to most by evening, he said.

About 1.3 inches of rain fell in the northern Ohio city of Huron in about a half hour. Wind was clocked at 55 mph in New Lebanon west of Dayton.

Afternoon thunderstorm wind gusts also damaged trees north of Fort Wayne, Ind., the weather service said.

Researchers sift possibility of new AIDS illness

ATLANTA (AP) — Researchers at the U.S. Centers for Disease Control are trying to determine why a few patients with AIDS symptoms test negative for the viruses known to cause the disease, a CDC official said Monday.

"We have not found a cause," said Dr. Harold Jaffe, the Atlanta-based CDC's acting director of HIV-AIDS. "Reports from elsewhere indicate it may be a new illness. We're trying to determine if it's a big problem."

Jaffe said there have been half a dozen reports in the United States during the past few years of patients who tested negative for the viruses HIV-1 and HIV-2 but had illnesses associated with AIDS, which suppresses a victim's immune system.

All had conditions that are found almost exclusively among people with AIDS, such as a cancer called Kaposi's sarcoma and the loss of a class of white blood cells called CD4 cells.

Thomas J. Spira, a CDC epidemiologist, described the cases in an abstract published in the Journal of Cellular Biochemistry.

Spira said in the paper, published in March, that five of the patients were men and one was a woman, and they ranged in age from 35 to 70. Three of the patients had a history of blood transfusions, he said, one had a history of intravenous drug use and one was a health care worker.

The evidence, he concluded, "suggest that HIV may not be the only infectious cause of immunosuppression in man."

Kent Sepkowitz, a researcher at Cornell University Medical Center in New York, said researchers must determine if the illnesses represent a new strain of the virus that causes AIDS.

"They need to somehow cultivate or grow the virus and then compare the new virus to HIV-1 or HIV-2," he said.

Researchers also must determine if the patients have the same virus.

"If they all have the same virus, that suggests HIV-3," a previously unknown strain, he said. If not, he said, the most likely reason the usually reliable tests failed is the normal "shift and drift" that viruses undergo in their genetic makeup.

The six are among more than 200,000 cases of AIDS reported so far in the United States. A few of the mysterious cases have been reported in Europe as well.

"Cases like this have been in the literature for some time," Jaffe said.

Newsweek reported on the illness in its July 27 issue. Spanish researcher Dr. Vincent Soriano told Newsweek three similar cases are being studied in Spain.

Jaffe said if other doctors have patients who had AIDS symptoms but tested negative for HIV, he hoped recent publicity would lead them to report it.

While the presence of undetectable viruses would raise questions about the safety of donor blood supplies, Anne Wilcox, a spokeswoman for the American Red Cross in Atlanta, said the organization goes beyond screening blood for diseases.

Elizabeth Taylor takes swipe at White House AIDS record

"I don't think President Bush is doing anything at all about AIDS," the actress said. "In fact I'm not even sure if he knows how to spell AIDS," she added.

Miss Taylor, chairwoman of the American Foundation for AIDS Research, spoke at a meeting of her organization that coincided with the AIDS conference. The Eighth International Conference on AIDS has drawn more than 10,000 experts, researchers and people with AIDS to the Dutch capital.

Miss Taylor anounced her organization was donating $300,000 to community groups in Argentina, but said the battle against acquired immune deficiency syndrome cannot be left to charities.

Her comment on AIDS came after a questioner remarked on basketball star Magic Johnson's criticism of President Bush earlier this month. Johnson said he might quit the National Commission on AIDS because Bush was not supporting the group's requests for funding AIDS research and treatment.

"If you do your bit with all of your heart, and I do my bit with all of mine, we will make a damn difference," she said.

GAP: Women catch virus almost as often as men

(From 1A)

Among other developments at the meeting:

■ Dr. Gerald Myers of the Los Alamos National Laboratories in New Mexico said five distinctly different strains of HIV are now spreading. That may complicate the search for a vaccine to prevent infection.

■ Dr. Renslow Sherer of the U.S. National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases said men and women infected with the AIDS virus go on to become sick at about the same rate. His study of nearly 3,700 men and women found "no clear evidence of a gender difference."

■ Dr. David Ostrow of the University of Michigan said a study shows that including a quick psychological assessment with AIDS testing pinpoints people likely to relapse into high-risk sexual behavior. Men who showed signs of depression or who said they lacked social support were more likely to continue to have many sexual partners and refuse to use condoms.

■ Dr. Helen Ward of St. Mary's Medical School in London said a five-year study of 304 prostitutes showed that 97 percent used condoms with all their clients. But two-thirds said they did not regularly use condoms with their non-paying lovers, which left them open to infection.

PLAN: Perot wanted to impose 50-cent gas tax

pleted Perot platform, according to associates and former campaign aides, was an $800 billion deficit-reduction plan that would have attacked the problem far more aggressively than advocated by President Bush or Democratic nominee Bill Clinton.

Intended to be the first plank of the Perot platform, the economic plan was to have been put out in late July or early August. Had the plan been presented, it likely would have generated considerable political opposition for its combination of new taxes and deep cuts in government programs.

"Our goal was to reduce the deficit to zero in five years and to do it by trying to be fair and spread the pain all across all programs, and that means all programs including entitlements," said John White, a former Eastman Kodak vice president and former federal budget official who served as Perot's issues director.

Entitlements are benefit programs including Social Security that are often viewed as sacred cows politically.

"I think politically it would have been a tough document to sell," former campaign co-manager Ed Rollins said of the Perot budget.

"And I think it would have taken the entire campaign effort from now until November to make Americans buy off on it. And I don't think he was prepared to do that," Rollins said on NBC's "Today" show.

According to those familiar with the still-uncompleted plan, the measure would have called for roughly a 10 percent cut in government programs and reductions in the budget deficit by close to $800 billion over five years.

It would have called for higher taxes on a wide range of items. In addition to sharply increasing the federal gasoline tax, now set at 14 cents a gallon, it would have raised taxes on tobacco and alcohol.

It also would have imposed higher fees for various government services, including new fees for boaters who use the nation's inland waterways and higher fees for timber companies for logging on public lands.

The plan envisioned deep reductions in some farm subsidies and elimination of others altogether.

At the same time, the plan was to advocate a reduction in capital gains tax rates, just as President Bush has proposed.

And, while not raising general income tax rates directly, it would have imposed higher taxes on the rich in the form of a possible limitation of mortgage deductions on homes worth over $200,000 and in requiring upper-income Americans to pay taxes on Social Security earnings.

"He wanted to campaign on the plan, but he knew that if he campaigned on the plan, he couldn't win (the election) outright," said James Squires, a top Perot aide.

Meanwhile, Perot's foreign policy program would have revamped the State Department and called for drastic reductions in foreign aid.

Relations between the United States and other countries would have been based on economics and trade in the future and not on military security.

"It's a new foreign policy based on fair trade," Squires said.

Under Perot's plan, embassies would "become economic emissaries for this country," Squires added.

Perot advisers had not made a final decision on how to curb Social Security benefits, according to the Wall Street Journal, which first reported details of the Perot plan in Monday's editions.

A top Perot adviser, who spoke on the condition of anonymity, said that the cuts would likely have been in the form of scaling back automatic cost-of-living benefits rather than slashing current benefits.

Perot earlier this year had rattled off what he said was a simple way to eliminate the budget deficit — rooting out waste in government programs, making Germany and Japan pay more for their own defense, catching more tax cheats and curbing Medicare and Social Security benefits for rich people.

However, the almost-finalized Perot budget did not rely on these items — widely criticized at the time as being overly simplistic.

RODEO: 5th annual ranching event begins Aug. 1

ers, their working hands and maybe some friendly neighbors will show city and country folks and each other how real cowboys and real cowgirls act on a ranch.

"These will be real ranch hands who are either employed by ranchers or are doing day work for ranchers in the Midland area," said Candi Cowen, a Midland rancher who is coordinating the ranch rodeo at Midland County Rodeo Arena east of town.

The ranch hands, in a competitive atmosphere, will demonstrate what working hands do on the ranch.

The ranch rodeo was organized on July Fourth five years ago by Midland ranchers who wanted to help preserve and promote the West Texas ranching heritage and to exhibit "the true cowboy spirit," Ms. Cowden said.

"Midland has a strong ranching heritage ... that goes way back into the 1800s," Ms. Cowden said.

On the eve of the rodeo, Jody Nix and the Texas Cowboys are to play at the Ranch Rodeo Dance from 8 p.m. to midnight on July 31 at Midland Center.

Advance dance tickets, which cost $7, may be purchased through Judy Jackson at 2420 W. Front St., or by calling her at 682-0227. At the door, tickets are $8.

Ranch rodeo events include ranch cutting, team penning, wild-cow milking, calf branding, and team roping.

Ranch rodeo events begin Aug. 1 at 10 a.m. and will continue until mid-afternoon.

Other events include the Bit & Spur Trade Show in the Midland County Exhibit Building from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. on Aug. 1, and from 8 a.m. to noon on Aug. 2; the Chuck Wagon Cookoff at noon Aug. 1; a pancake breakfast at 7:30 a.m. Aug. 2; Cowboy Church Services from 8:30 a.m. to 9:30 a.m. Aug. 2; and Team Roping at 9 a.m. Aug. 2.

The Midland Ranch Rodeo All-Around Championship teams and runners-up in past years were:

■ 1990, C (Chicago) Ranch and runners-up Anderson Ranch, Bird Ranch, Pevehouse Ranch.

■ Blast injures guards; Iraq standoff continues

MANAMA, Bahrain — A booby-trapped car exploded Monday outside U.N. offices in northern Iraq, slightly wounding two guards, while demonstrators marched in Baghdad to support the government in its standoff with U.N. weapons inspectors.

At the United Nations in New York, the inspectors' chief said he warned Iraq of "tragic consequences" if it doesn't cooperate. And Britain's U.N. ambassador raised the possibility of the renewed use of force.

David Hannay, asked if armed intervention in Iraq was ruled out, answered, "No, military action is not ruled out." Western diplomats, speaking on condition of anonymity, said it was likely that any military strike would be limited to one or two targets.

In Iraq, the car bomb blew up 15 minutes before a full 8 a.m. lineup of the U.N. guards at the headquarters in the city of Sulaymaniyah, U.N. spokesman Francois Giuliani said in New York.

■ Crash kills 25 dancers from Juarez troupe

GUATEMALA CITY, Guatemala — A bus carrying a troupe of teen-age dancers from the Mexico-U.S. border area plunged off a mountain curve, killing at least 25 people, officials said Monday.

Mexican and Guatemalan officials worked Monday to identify the dead, who had been taken to a morgue in Antigua, the city where the Ballet Folklorico Makahui of Ciudad Juarez had been due to perform Sunday night.

Amidst the wreckage and bodies, rescue workers discovered 2-year-old Italia Cardona unhurt in a tree that had apparently broken her fall when she was thrown from the bus, said Amarildo Herrera, a spokesman for the local volunteer firemen. The girl was apparently the child of one of the troupe's chaperones.

Herrera said 25 people were killed and 16 injured. The survivors were being treated at hospitals in the capital and in Antigua, some 15 miles west.

The bus had been traveling from Guatemala City to Antigua when it plunged off a cliff into a gulch about 300 feet deep at about 7 p.m. Sunday.

■ EC to oppose Yugoslav membership

BRUSSELS, Belgium — The European Community declared on Monday that it would oppose the membership of the Yugoslavia composed of Serbia and Montenegro in international bodies, sealing that federation's isolation in Europe.

The community, at its monthly meeting of foreign ministers here, accepted the opinion of its legal experts that the state formed by Serbia and Montenegro is not the successor state to the former Yugoslavia, and thus must be admitted anew to the United Nations, the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, and more than 40 other international bodies.

The new state had already been suspended by the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, and the Council of Europe. Each body has its own criteria and the European Community's opinion is not binding.

Douglas Hurd, the foreign secretary of Great Britain, which has the community's rotating presidency for the second half of 1992, reported to his colleagues on his four-day trip to Yugoslavia and Albania. "I talked to all the key actors in this tragedy," he said. "We cannot allow disappointment to deter us, to say this is too difficult and give up."

■ Havel resigns; country heads for breakup

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia — Vaclav Havel, the playwright who led the Velvet Revolution against Communism, stepped down as president Monday after failing to halt Czechoslovakia's disintegration.

The resignation left the country without a president as its Czech and Slovak regions move toward a formal dissolution of the 74-year-old nation. Unlike in Yugoslavia and parts of the former Soviet Union, a peaceful split appears certain.

Havel, one of eastern Europe's best-known dissidents under the Communists, was an increasingly lonely voice against ending the union of Czechs and Slovaks.

"I don't regard it as my personal failure," said Havel, who, like many of the spiritual fathers of the recent revolutions in the region, is being displaced by new breeds of nationalists or professional politicians. "As an individual, I could not have not saved the situation.

"As a citizen who believed in the federation and believes it is destined for demise, I am sorry," Havel added. "But I don't think a single person could have stopped what is historically necessary.

In a relaxed meeting with journalists at the castle at Lany, outside Prague, the summer home for Czechoslovakia's presidents since the country was born in 1918, Havel insisted that he was not saddened by the end of his tenure nor the expected imminent dissolution of the 74-year-old union between Czechs and Slovaks.

His re-election was blocked earlier this month in the Federal Parliament by deputies from the Slovak republic, the eastern region of the country.

Fighting forces Sarajevo Airport to close

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (NYT) — The first 24 hours of a cease-fire negotiated by the European Community passed on Monday amid such heavy fighting that the U.N. military commander here closed Sarajevo Airport and suspended the airlift of food and medicine that has been sustaining this besieged city.

Because of the airport closing, ordered by Maj. Gen. Lewis W. MacKenzie, of Canada, the U.N. commander, no relief aircraft flew in here for the first time in 23 days.

The U.N. airlift began immediately after France's President Francois Mitterrand visited here on June 28. Until Monday, it stood as virtually the only breakthrough for outside efforts to mitigate the bitter war that has engulfed this newly independent republic.

At dusk on Monday, artillery, mortar, and sniper fire continued to resound around Sarajevo, as it had from the moment the cease-fire was scheduled to take effect at 6 p.m. on Sunday. But the mortar battle across the airport that prompted MacKenzie to halt all aid flights appeared to have eased. U.N. officials said that if security in the airfield area continued to improve, they hoped to resume the 20 daily relief flights this morning.

The mood in this capital after a day of the most intense shelling in a month was grim. The attacks added to the distress of a population that has spent the last eight days with little or no electricity and running water as a result of Serbian attacks on the major power lines running to the city.

According to figures compiled from Sarajevo hospitals, the shelling, apparently originating from Serbian forces on the hills surrounding the city, killed at least 15 people and wounded more than 100.

Most of the casualties resulted from mortar attacks of the kind that have killed and wounded thousands of civilians in Sarajevo since the war began early in April. The effect was to turn what was to have been a peaceful day to one of terror, with people running in panic from explosions that left as many as 15 people at a time lying in pools of blood in the street, some mortally wounded and others with grievous injuries.

One mortar shell hit a narrow side street near the old military hospital at the center of the city shortly before noon, killing 2 people and wounding 12. David Turnley, a photographer for The Detroit Free Press, said that he followed the wounded to the hospital and saw a man of about 60 lying dead beneath a blanket in a corridor, still clutching two loaves of bread, bought at a bakery at a point near where the mortar hit.

He said a middle-aged woman who was severely wounded in the blast, on learning that her 9-year-old son had been killed, cried out repeatedly, "Bush! Bush!" apparently a plea of the kind frequently made here for American military intervention.

Other mortar attacks were spread around the city, one striking near the Magribia Mosque in the city center and another in front of the Presidency building, seat of the government. Still others fell in the western suburbs of the city, including Dobrinja, where 35,000 people have been entirely surrounded by Serbian forces for nearly 80 days.

One of the worst attacks, in Vojnicko Polje, a suburb close to Dobrinja, hit four teen-age girls taking the evening air on Sunday.

MacKenzie, announcing the airport shutdown at a news conference at the U.N. headquarters here, expressed a wearied view of the situation born of his own repeated frustrations in obtaining signed commitments to cease-fires that turned out to be meaningless.

Baker, Rabin near accord on loan guarantees

JERUSALEM (NYT) — A deal seemed to be shaping up Monday for housing loan guarantees from the United States to Israel, in which Washington would give the Israelis the guarantees they are seeking in exchange for broad limits on settlement-building activity, but not a total freeze.

A senior State Department official, briefing reporters after the second day of talks between Secretary of State James A. Baker III and Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, said he was now hopeful that an arrangement for loan guarantees could be worked out in a way that would "match their needs as well as ours."

Israel is seeking $10 billion in guarantees from Washington to help it provide housing and jobs for immigrants from the former Soviet Union.

The conclusion and announcement of a deal would be left for a meeting between Rabin and President Bush that is expected to take place at Bush's Kennebunkport, Maine, home some time early next month.

In an election year, Bush would presumably like to gain the greatest political benefit it can with Jewish voters by announcing a deal with Rabin at his side.

Baker seems to be trying to set up the basis of that deal on this trip, before his expected resignation as secretary of state and move to the White House to help steer Bush's re-election campaign and shape overall administration policies.

An announcement of Baker's job switch could come as soon as the end of this trip Sunday. After his swing around the Middle East, Baker will fly to Manila for a meeting of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations.

Neither Israeli nor American officials would provide details of the loan guarantee arrangement they are working on, but they said that in broad outline, it involves Israel announcing its intention to substantially limit all settlement activity in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip as a condition for the American guarantees.

The United States is apparently ready to allow the Israelis to finish a certain number of housing units under construction in the territories, as well as permit a limited degree of "natural growth" in existing settlements in the Jerusalem area and the Jordan River valley. Rabin considers both of these security regions where some building must be allowed.

The Jordan valley divides Israel and Jordan, and the Israelis have military installations there. Jerusalem has been reunited as the Israeli capital since East Jerusalem was captured from the Jordanians in the 1967 war.

Every Israeli government has insisted on building in and around Jerusalem to emphasize that the city will not again be divided.

Natural growth would involve either adding rooms to existing houses or constructing roads and bridges to accommodate growing families. Israeli and American officials stress that the exact numbers in these categories was still to be determined.

Rabin's officials are still sorting through the records of the previous government of Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir, trying to get a grip on what sort of building commitments it had undertaken in the West Bank and Gaza, Israeli officials said. The officials added that the records were a mess and that there was a lot of activity they were not yet fully aware of.

While Baker and Bush had told the previous government that they would allow it to finish housing units under way in exchange for loan guarantees, they were strict on the numbers involved and the limits on natural growth.

Given Rabin's intention to shift spending away from the territories, the Bush administration is ready to be somewhat more flexible with him.

Monday, Rabin had Finance Minister Avraham Shochat and the governor of the Bank of Israel, Jacob Frenkel, brief Baker on the general economic policies of his government.

Italian police crack down after assassination

PALERMO, Sicily (AP) — Authorities hustled imprisoned Mafia bosses to a remote island Monday and rushed paramilitary police to Palermo after the second assassination of a top investigator, a staggering blow to the battle against organized crime.

Impassioned calls for martial law in Sicily and imposition of the death penalty were sounded in Rome, after the blast Sunday on a Palermo street that killed investigating Judge Paolo Borsellino and five police escorts.

Borsellino's colleague, Judge Giovanni Falcone, was assassinated May 23 with his wife and three bodyguards by a bomb that blew away a stretch of highway outside Palermo.

"It's all over, it's all over," was the bitter comment of Antonino Caponnetto, a retired Palermo chief prosecutor who supervised both magistrates during the glory days of the early 1980s, when they were the driving force behind convictions of hundreds of mobsters.

Caponnetto helped carry Borsellino's coffin to a wake in Palermo's Hall of Justice, where Borsellino and Falcone had worked for years behind bulletproof windows.

"Caponnetto, stay strong!" and "We're with you!" a crowd cried out as he embraced Borsellino's widow and one of his daughters.

"I don't see absolutely any hope because with the loss of Borsellino, the state doesn't have any one else capable of galvanizing" other investigators, said Falcone's brother-in-law, Alfredo Morvillo, a deputy prosecutor in Palermo.

Justice Minister Claudio Martelli had been lobbying for Falcone to become Italy's first "super-prosecutor," a new Rome-based post to coordinate investigations by often rival police forces and magistrates as well as to press for tougher anti-Mafia laws.

After Falcone was killed, the minister had pushed for Borsellino to take the post.

"I ask myself, at this point, who will still have the courage?" said Milan's chief prosecutor, Francesco Borrelli.

More than 500 paramilitary police were rushed to Palermo's Ucciardone prison before dawn to help transfer 55 convicted Mafiosi to Pianosa, an island off the mainland's west coast, Italian news reports said.

At an emergency session of the lower Chamber of Deputies in Rome, the state was heavily criticized for moving ineffectively against organized crime, which has been spreading northward.

BODY: Mummified corpse provides new insights on Stone Age man

they must have been when the man died. When the preservation process is completed a restorer will begin trying to match the various pieces.

More progress has been made in conserving and reconstructing the man's shoes, which are unique.

One shoe, about a size 6, was almost destroyed when the man was extracted from the ice but enough remained of the second to begin a reconstruction, said Roswitha Goedecker-Ciolek, who is restoring the shoe.

The shoe appears to consist of three pieces: a bottom sole and an upper flap, both made of leather, and a sock-like net sewn onto the bottom sole. The man apparently stuffed the net full of grass and then wriggled his foot into it. Laces on the net then enabled him to tighten the grass around his foot to prevent it from slipping.

Ms. Goedecker-Ciolek says the upper leather also may have been held on with laces. Besides insulating his feet from snow and ice, the grass also would have protected them from the rough going in the mountains. Presumably he changed the grass when it got too dirty or matted.

"Probably he didn't take off his shoes very often because they were too delicate," Ms. Goedecker-Ciolek said, noting that the laces and the net were made out of grass rope and could not have withstood daily tying and untying for long.

She said the man must have spent time each day maintaining the shoes, which show signs of many repairs.

Another intriguing discovery is an oval-shaped birch bark box, about 7 inches across at its widest and more than a foot high. The box was found crushed under the weight of the glacier. Nearby was a mass of maple leaves.

At a conference held last month in Innsbruck, Dr. Sigmar Bortenschlager, a professor of botany from the University of Innsbruck, said the maple leaves were green at the time of the man's death.

The maple tree does not grow above 5,000 feet, but the man was found at twice that altitude. Most intriguing is the fact that wrapped inside the leaves, Bortenschlager found three grams of charcoal.

Egg said, "Could he have taken some glowing embers from his last fire, wrapped them in leaves and transported them in the box?" adding that this was only speculation. He said that native Americans also salvaged glowing charcoals from one fire and carried them along to the next camp to use in starting a new fire.

Several pieces of flint, were found among the man's objects, but none is of the type used for starting a fire.

A fire-starting flint will perhaps turn up at the site during a second excavation, which starts this month.

Certainly no one would want to be at that altitude without the ability to make a fire, not only for warmth but also to ward off predatory animals, Egg said.

Besides the birch bark box, the man also carried a small copper ax, the oldest of its type in Europe. At the end of the Stone Age, when copper was first being used in Europe, most axes made of copper were flat sided.

The man's ax, however, has edges that are slightly raised, since the flat sides are slightly concave, which lends stability to the ax head as it strikes.

Such a flanged ax became widespread only when bronze, an alloy of copper and tin, arrived in Europe shortly before 2,000 B.C. A few other flanged copper axes exist but their dates are younger, making the man's the oldest known in Europe.

Other tools found near the man were a dagger with a flint blade and a woven grass sheath, probably for the dagger, and a wooden frame that probably supported a type of rucksack.

His only decorative item is a small round marble or stone disk, through which is pulled a bunch of thin leather strips , knotted at one end and free on the other. Its use is not yet clear, but Egg said German archers used a similar type of tassle to clean their arrows.

The man had an unfinished longbow, which at exactly six feet long was about eight inches taller than he was, and a leather quiver in which he carried two arrows with arrowheads and feathers attached, 12 unfinished arrow shafts, several flint arrowheads and sinew.

Egg said one of the finished arrows consists of a long shaft stuck into a shorter one to which the arrowhead is attached.

With such a composite arrow, the longer shaft is supposed to break off if an animal tries to dislodge it, leaving the shorter shaft still embedded. This specimen is the earliest known composite arrow found in Europe.

"There are incredible ballistic characteristics in these arrows," said Dr. Konrad Spindler, the prehistorian at the University of Innsbruck who also is involved in studying the objects.

The feathers set into the ends of the shafts curve slightly around the shaft, a design that spins the arrow in flight and enhances its impact.

Sewn into what is thought to be a leather strap for carrying the quiver is a small pouch in which were found a sharpened flintstone, probably for cutting grass, a small drill-like piece of flint, a slender bone tool, probably for making holes in leather, and an as-yet unidentified black mass.

With such an array of tools and materials for repairing his equipment, the man presumably expected to be away from home for some many days. Egg and others suspect he was a herdsman, though he also was equipped to hunt.

Also of great interest were two mushrooms, each on a leather strap, and first thought to be kindling. Reinhold Poeder, a microbiologist at the University of Innsbruck who has studied one of the mushrooms, Piptoporus betulinus, said it was of a kind whose antibiotic effects had been recognized for at least 2,000 years.

That people had begun settling the Alps at this time is certain, because studies of pollens found in ancient bogs show that around 5,000 years ago parts of forests in the Tyrolean Alps were burnt, presumably by settlers, to create meadows for their livestock.

Just as they do today, herdsmen grazed their flocks in lower meadows in the spring and then drove them up to fresh fields as the summer progressed, Spindler said. Because of bears and wolves, the flocks had to be tended, and shepherds would leave their settlements near valley floors in June and return in late August or September.

■ Crews nearly extinguish California wildfires

ALPINE, Calif. — A new fire broke out north of Los Angeles on Monday even as firefighters claimed the upper hand over several other Southern California blazes. Oregon crews fought four major fires while a 6,300-acre blaze in Idaho was contained.

The West was bracing for a busy fire season after a rainy spring ended a six-year drought that killed off much of the chaparral. The underbrush and grass were renewed by the rain, then dried to tinder in the summer heat. Instruments recorded 6,800 lightning strikes in Oregon and Washington in 24 hours.

Flames in the Angeles National Forest, near Castaic Lake, were sparked by an early morning car accident. The fire blackened at least 400 acres and shut down Interstate 5, Los Angeles County Fire inspector Devin Trone said.

Hundreds of firefighters were hampered by high wind, but officials said they hoped to contain the flames by late Monday.

■ Child-support payments law causes furor

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — Child support payments are suddenly soaring under a new California law that has sparked fierce criticism from many lawyers, judges and fathers' groups.

The law, which became effective July 1, may eventually affect as many as 1.5 million child support orders. Support payments are expected to go up an average of 25 percent and more than 70 percent for some middle- and high-income earners.

In family law courtrooms, often the scene of raw emotional drama, fathers have exploded with anger upon learning that they will have to dig deeper into their pockets.

An Oakland garbage collector broke out screaming — and had to be hauled out in handcuffs — and a policeman begged for mercy early this month when Alameda County Superior Court Judge Roderic Duncan told them that their orders to support children from previous marriages would be increased by $300 and $140 a month, respectively.

The legislation was sponsored by an unlikely coalition of prosecutors and advocates for women and children, who protested that California's child support levels were among the lowest in the nation.

■ Buffalo Soldiers finally gain recognition

RICHMOND, Va. — When Jones Morgan ran away from home in 1897 to join the Army, he signed up with a group that only now is beginning to claim its place in history — the Buffalo Soldiers.

The cavalry and infantry units, made up solely of black soldiers, are being honored at their birthplace, Fort Leavenworth, Kan., decades after they first won acclaim by helping to settle the West.

Morgan, now 109, plans to be on hand Saturday for the dedication of a 13-foot statue of a black soldier, rifle in hand and riding a horse, on a tree-lined avenue leading to the base, in sight of where the soldiers first set up camp in 1866.

It pays tribute to the 9th and 10th Cavalry and the 24th and 25th Infantry regiments, whose bravery and toughness prompted Native Americans to name them after the fiercest animals on the Plains. Later, the 92nd Airborne also was given the nickname.

The first Buffalo Soldiers guarded the Western frontier against Indian attacks, winning 13 Medals of Honor during their early campaigns.

"Indians called them Buffalo Soldiers because of the big coats they wore in winter and their curly hair. And they fought so fiercely," said Bill Hunter, member and historian of the 24th Infantry Regiment Association.

■ Judge sentences fugitive 9 years after trial

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. — A man who fled during his trial nine years ago and was convicted of repeatedly raping three of his daughters was sentenced Monday to at least 36 years in prison.

Garrett Stone's wife, Elizabeth, who had fled with him, was sentenced to two years in jail for failing to stop the abuse of her daughters.

California police arrested the couple June 3 on a tip from a viewer who saw their story on Fox Broadcasting's "America's Most Wanted." They were brought back to Massachusetts on July 10.

Two of the daughters said after Monday's sentence they had been beaten, forced to live in an unfinished attic, and repeatedly raped during their childhood and teen-age years.

"Now he's going to know what it feels like to be in prison," said Eve Stone, 22. "We were in prison — a mental prison — and couldn't get away."

She wouldn't give her hometown, saying she feared retribution from her father.

Another daughter, Sharon Sullivan, 26, of Framingham, said of her father's sentence: "As far as I'm concerned, it never would have been enough, because the abuse we endured was horrific."

Judge William Simons sentenced Stone to state prison for 36 to 54 years, making him eligible for parole in 24 years.

Defense attorney Murray Shulman said Stone, who is 61, "might as well have been sentenced to death."

Elizabeth Stone, 58, was ordered to refrain from contacting the three women. The mother's conviction was for failure to provide care, a law that has been repealed since the trial.

■ Bush films ads as political activity steps up

WASHINGTON — President Bush spent two hours Monday filming political footage at the White House and his cash-flush campaign is considering releasing a barrage of ads during the Olympics, campaign aides said.

Bush's campaign has had a surplus of about $7 million for months and some have questioned why some of the money wasn't used for ads to help prevent Bill Clinton's recent surge in the polls. Republican strategists suggested the Bush campaign was waiting for the Summer Olympics, which begin this weekend.

"Timing is everything — when you want to get maximum exposure and when you want to move the numbers. . . . The Olympics present huge opportunities for both," said one top Bush campaign aide who asked not to be identified.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said the footage Bush shot Monday would be used for positive spots showing "the president talking about his program" rather than attacking Clinton.

■ Volunteer files lawsuit against Ross Perot

MIAMI — A Florida volunteer who donated time and money to get Ross Perot on the ballot filed a class-action lawsuit Monday in an attempt to force the Dallas billionaire back into the presidential race.

Michele Alexander's federal lawsuit, filed in Miami, seeks an order demanding that Perot run for president if he is placed on the ballot in all 50 states, said attorney Douglas Stein, Ms. Alexander's attorney.

Perot's name is on the presidential ballot in 24 states, including Texas and Florida.

The lawsuit says Perot's decision to pull out of the race was a "breach of his oral promise."

Ms. Alexander seeks "specific performance of Perot's promise to become a candidate for the office of president of the United States of America," the suit said.

"Millions of people, including my client, put forth thousands of dollars in an effort to have him placed on the ballot," her attorney added Monday.

Not all Perot's supporters in Florida agreed with the lawsuit.

Prototype plane crashes with seven aboard

QUANTICO, Va. (AP) — An experimental V-22 tilt-rotor aircraft crashed into the Potomac River near the Quantico Marine air station Monday and officials at the base said all seven aboard were believed killed.

The aircraft, which features tilting propeller units that let it fly either like an airplane or a helicopter, was making a routine final approach after flying here from Eglin Air Force Base, Fla., when the crash occurred.

"It seemed to be having no problem when it basically dropped right into the Potomac River," said Maj. Barry Moore, base public affairs officer. Moore said there were seven people on board and there were no known survivors of the 11:42 p.m. CDT crash.

He said he believed the craft, nicknamed the "Osprey," was making the transition from horizontal to vertical flight when the crash occurred.

"The final approach seemed to be error-free," Moore said. "Something happened at the last second."

Fishing guide Bill Kramer said he had watched the craft take off.

"It headed north about two miles and stalled out and hit the water. It was only in the air about five minutes, maybe less."

Kramer, fishing with two clients, said the Osprey "disintegrated when it hit the water. By the time we got to the wreckage, what was left of the main fuselage had already sank. It only took minutes for the fuselage to sink. It went down quick. . . . There was no explosion or anything like that."

He said it was at least 15 minutes before military rescue craft reached the scene. it.

Moore said there was no immediate indication why the crash occurred. A Marine Corps statement said the plane had experienced "unknown technical problems."

In Washington, Greta Creech, a spokeswoman for Rep. Pete Geren, D-Texas, said she had been told the plane was "two miles out on final approach to the runway. . . . All of a sudden there were two loud bangs or pops . . . and then the aircraft took a dive into the water."

She said she was relaying information from the Marine Corps and Bell Helicopter, one of the craft's manufacturers. Bell is headquartered in Fort Worth.

One military official who had been to the site said all that was visible of the plane was tiny pieces of debris.

Democrat surge jolts Bush into early campaign start

WASHINGTON (NYT) — President Bush, who had repeatedly vowed to wait until next month to fire up his re-election effort, has been jolted into what he calls "campaign mode" by a suddenly surging Democratic challenge.

The president this week begins a steady round of private and public campaign events, ranging from a teleconference with supporters in 34 cities Monday night to a Friday visit to Brookville, Ohio, for the tiny community's 42nd annual picnic.

The events are among several just announced by the White House amid growing pressure from Democratic nominee Bill Clinton, who has raced ahead by more than 20 points in some national polls. Bush heads today to Philadelphia, where he will hold an "Ask George Bush" session at a parochial school to discuss giving parents more choices in educating their children.

Moreover, the president, who repeatedly has said his campaign would begin in earnest only after he is officially renominated Aug. 19 at the Republican National Convention, spent two hours Monday taping TV ads. The spots are slated for airing before the Houston convention.

Over the next four weeks, the president will be on the campaign trail at least twice a week and probably more often, said presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater.

"We expected a drop" in Bush's popularity following the Democratic convention that ended last week, Fitzwater said.

Perot bails out, betrays followers

Ross Perot deserves high marks for throwing a healthy scare into both parties and energizing an army of Americans disaffected with the political system. He deserves failing marks for leaving that army in the lurch, deepening the very disillusion he claimed to be fighting.

His announcement last week that he would no longer pursue his presidential bid included a bizarre exhortation to his supporters to keep on collecting the signatures necessary to put his name on the November ballot. I'm bailing out, folks, but you keep working.

The inevitable outrage was neatly summarized by Matthew Lifflander, the chairman of Perot's New York campaign. He accused Perot of "breaking the hearts of some of the best people in America. You have betrayed our trust. You should be ashamed of yourself."

Well put: There was nothing shameful about Perot's effort but there was something cheesy about the way he ended it. He asked good questions about the deficit, America's declining competitiveness, governmental gridlock and the power of special interests.

That's precisely why he won the affection of all those volunteers. Yet in the end he trifled with their loyalty.

The reasons he gave for his abrupt departure, no matter how long one stares at them, are unconvincing. He said that his candidacy would throw the election into the House of Representatives and deprive a new president of precious time to organize a government. Baloney. A serious candidate would have his key players organized in anticipation of the House vote. He said he was satisfied that both parties had received his message and that the Democrats, in particular, had revitalized themselves. Overnight?

The likely truth is that Perot lost heart. He'd made some gaffes. One senior adviser, Ed Rollins, quit. The other, Hamilton Jordan, was rebellious. Perot had reneged on his promise to produce a platform in 60 days; he had abandoned a planned advertising campaign.

This was obviously a man with second thoughts about the hard profession of politics — a profession that invites abuse and embarrassment and requires a thick skin, imagination and a talent for compromise. But people who believe in their causes persevere, whatever the odds.

Perot's undeclared candidacy raised doubts from the start — about his reluctance to offer detailed proposals, his occasionally cavalier attitude toward the Constitution, his arrogance and his penchant for snooping.

That said, Ross Perot had a pretty good idea of what the problems are. He was at least willing to enter the political arena, and he inspired extraordinary enthusiasm.

Both Bill Clinton and George Bush would be foolish not to learn something from his initial example. Yet they and their followers persevere. Perot disappears, leaving caprice as his epitaph.

Boss Ross falls off his white charger

So. Just like that he walks away? Washes his hands of an enterprise in which millions have invested zeal and devotion? Says thanks, it's been fun, see you around?

H. Ross Perot, ex-folk hero — very "ex" at this point — may not ever recover from abruptly quitting the presidential race on July 16. As his fellow Texans say, he has ripped his britches proper.

Murchison

If Boss Ross was ever going to cut and run, better July than October, by which latter date his fans would have squandered even more zeal and devotion. But then if there ever entered his mind the slightest prospect of quitting, he should have held back from inviting the American people's help in launching his candidacy.

My guess is that sheer egoism and vanity propelled Perot into the race. People raised expectant eyes to him, confident in his abilities. The country needed an overhaul. He had taken on hard jobs before: rescued imprisoned employees, succored prisoners of war, instructed General Motors how the cow ate the cabbage. Why couldn't a non-politician — an eminently successful businessman — run the country better than the people who have been running it?

I have no doubt, knowing Perot, that in the beginning he believed sincerely in his ability to transform America. To the saddle of his charger he would mount. His lance he would lower. Charge! The people's enemies would scatter in all directions. Still mounted, he would circumambulate the battlefield. Cheers and plaudits would rain down on him. His armor would gleam in the sunlight.

Naive people do not normally amass fortunes of $3.5 billion, but Ross Perot committed naivete in the first degree. He thought politics was primarily a matter of offering critiques and pungent homilies with no accompanying obligation of presenting solutions. And he saw no harm in approaching a new challenge in that novel way.

No harm? No harm in exciting the expectations of people alienated from their government — in love with America but fearful of where America was going? Ross Perot gave these people something to believe in, something to hope for. He flith them, toyed with their affections. Then suddenly, when things weren't going as well as they had gone previously, he ducked out. That was as far as he was taking them down the garden path.

Hey, for the candidate himself, the campaign was "one of the great experiences of my life." Of course it was. He got to travel hither and thither, basking in adulation, criticizing the people whose show it was — the politicians.

What now for the real people, the voters? A more clear-cut choice — conservative Republicans against (for all their New York manners) liberal Democrats; intensive missionary work by both parties; lifeboats sent to pluck off survivors wondering where the captain was when the Good Ship Perot suddenly sank.

Which surviving candidate benefits more? Nobody can pretend right now to know. Conservatives will probably creep back to the Bush encampment, liberals to Clinton's establishment. Moderates could end up anywhere. Much depends on how the two parties court them.

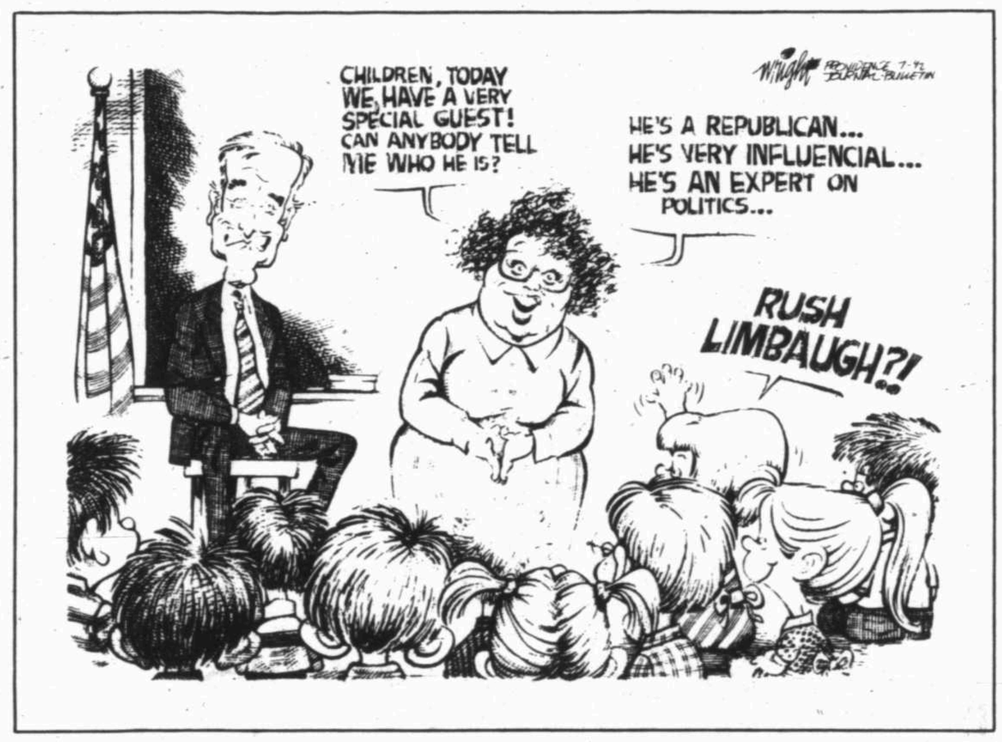

In truth, many Perot supporters may not go anywhere. The Perot debacle may finish them off politically. Which is deeply sad. The Perot supporters I know and have met strike me as patriotic, highly motivated folk, with much to offer their country.

The worst of it now is that members of the political priesthood are smiling smugly. See — they can say — the country can't do without us: our knowledge, our expertise. They are in some sense right; to run a country, you have to have some idea of what you are doing, as Clinton and Bush have and Perot never did, even when diagnosing most dogmatically.

On the other hand, Perot and his people were right. The political priesthood has mucked up politics to a fare-thee-well, exaggerating its importance in human affairs and frequently putting expediency over the public interest.

Someone needs to, and will ultimately, I think, take up the cudgels in their behalf. I just tell you who it won't be — some billionaire with all the answers. We've been down that road, thanks.

The national agenda is for national problems

I have discovered the underlying problem of America. It's 2-year-olds — 2-year-olds in adult bodies.

Now a 2-year-old in a 2-year-old body is cute and so we don't mind that, like all toddlers, they are 100 percent self-centered and selfish. But toddler-adults are a different, off-key tune.

Reese

Toddler-adults are self-centered and convinced the universe exists solely for their personal benefit. Therefore they think their personal problems, desires, likes and dislikes should be on the national agenda.

When they have a problem, they think it deserves the attention of the U.S. Congress, the Supreme Court, the president, the United Nations, and probably God himself.

Since there are an awful lot of toddler-adults concentrated in the news/entertainment media (it's hard to tell the difference these days), special interest groups, politics, and the legal profession, their personal problems do in fact dominate the national agenda.

As a result, the real national problems can hardly get a hearing. The adults trying to solve the real national problems can hardly find a forum in which to discuss them.

To sort things out (you always have to do that for toddlers), here are some things that definitely are not national problems.

When well-paid professional women do not receive the respect from their male peers they think they deserve, that is not a national problem. Abortion is not a national problem. Whether a junior high school does or does not have a prayer at its graduation ceremonies is not a national problem. Gay rights is not a national problem. Minor incidents involving immature students on college campuses which show prejudice against one group or another is not a national problem. The welfare of spotted owls or people wearing fur coats are not national problems.

Those are all either personal or minor problems or not problems at all.

Massive unemployment and the steady hemorrhaging of value-added manufacturing jobs —that's a national problem.

A continued high-level of immigration at a time when two-thirds of the states cannot meet the basic needs of their own citizens —that's a national problem.

A monetary system that puts control of money supply and credit into the hands of a private central bank that may inflate or deflate to suit is own private agenda — that's a national problem.

Hungry children, homeless people, mental patients living on the streets like stray dogs — that's a national problem.

The profiteering, patient-gouging health care system that gives Americans a choice between fiscal death or physical death — that's a national problem.

The corruption of the American political system by special interests and big money that has left a majority of Americans with no more government representation than a Palestinian refugee — that's a national problem.

The bought and paid for mediocrity occupying so many public offices — that's a national problem. The lack of any industrial or economic plan — that's a national problem. The crumbling of American infrastructure and the social and economic crisis in our urban areas — those are national problems.

U.S. Democracy Act, a misnamed proposal

Will it speed the development of democracy in Cuba to further impoverish the Cuban people by strengthening the U.S. embargo? Rep. Robert Torricelli, D-N.J., is wrong when he says yes.

Worse, Torricelli's misnamed proposal, the Cuban Democracy Act, is gaining momentum with the blessings of President Bush and Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton.

Attempting to further isolate President Fidel Castro's economically crippled Communist bastion helps neither Cuba nor the United States. Torricelli's odd bill would bar U.S. economic benefits to any country that subsidizes Cuba and would prohibit foreign-based U.S. subsidiaries from trading with Cuba. Ships that trade at Cuban ports would be barred from trading at American ports.

The legislation does offer humanitarian concessions: Medicine could be sold to Cuba, as could communications equipment to permit increased contact with exiles. It also would allow direct mail delivery and assistance for dissidents and democratic organizations in Cuba. The goal is to present Castro with a dearth of financial resources and extend a few carrots to the Cuban people.

But such a law would probably inspire more support for Castro in Cuba and would certainly complicate U.S. relations with trading partners. Sensing that Cuban communism may be on the ropes, opponents of Castro are hoping to deliver a knockout blow by stepping up U.S. economic warfare. But to starve Cubans in the name of democratic ideals would be politically foolish and ethically wrong.

Some people would rather back good ol' boys

It has long been my conclusion that if you happen to be a Straight Southern White Male (SSWM), as I happen to be, you're in a mess in the politically correct '90s.

Most of us are automatically branded as racist, sexist, anti-gay and it is often said that we drink beer and listen to Willie Nelson albums and sip expensive white wine while listening to Mozart's Opus No. 28 in G-flat out, Asia Minor.

Grizzard

None of that is necessarily so, except for the part about the beer and the Willie Nelson albums.

Willie singing the phone book would, in fact, be a symphony, and most wines are overpriced and overrated, and who among us would remember to bring a corkscrew to a stockcar race?

But look at this, will you:

The 1992 Democratic presidential ticket has two Straight (I assume) White Southern Males on it. Pass the butter beans.

Two good ol' boys ( a term Northerners, especially women with hyphenated last names who hate college football and pickup trucks, came up with) bidding for the White House.

I once saw Al Gore cooking barbecue in Memphis.

But how many of we SSWM's have a wife named "Tipper"? We marry women named "Bonnie Lou Ann Sue," "Dorris," and "Joe Betty Mavis."

Bill Clinton's wife is named "Hillary." Hillary? Once Prince Charles gets rid of Lady Di, he'll probably marry somebody named Hillary.

And both these guys went to Ivy League schools. Most little boys who grow up in Arkansas, as did Bill Clinton, want to go to the University of Arkansas, wear a silly hat and scream "Soooooie! Pig!" when the Razorbacks score a touchdown.

Al Gore didn't go to the University of Tennessee, either, where the mascot is a blue tick hound named "Smokey" and the band never stops playing "Rocky Top" from the opening kickoff to the final whistle.

What they do at Yale, where Bill Clinton went to school, is sing "Boola, Boola," which is translated loosely into Northern way as, "How 'bout them dawgs!"

Does either of these guys own a pickup truck and have a dog named "Tater" or "Rattler" or "Biscuit eater" that crawls under the truck in order to sleep in the shade and emerges with oil on its back?

Does either one of these guys know all the words to even one country music song? Does either one of these guys know King Richard Petty is going to retire this year from the stock car circuit, or care?

Can they use their mouths to blow gnats off their face, or do they try to swat them off with their hands?

Would either ask Congress to pass legislation outlawing instant grits? Do they say "wrestling" or "rasslin' "?

Did they have a problem pronouncing "Shiite" during the Gulf War? Do Hillary and Tipper still fry chicken, or serve it baked under some god-awful sauce? Do they still cook at all?

Before I make up my mind whether Bill Clinton and Al Gore are true SSWM's, I want answers to these questions.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Tuesday, July 21, the 203rd day of 1992. There are 163 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On July 21, 1961, Capt. Virgil "Gus" Grissom became the second American to rocket into a sub-orbital pattern around the Earth, flying aboard the Liberty Bell Seven.

On this date:

In 1831, Belgium became independent as Leopold I was proclaimed king of the Belgians.

In 1861, the first Battle of Bull Run was fought at Manassas, Va., resulting in a Confederate victory.

In 1925, the so-called "Monkey Trial" ended in Dayton, Tenn., with John T. Scopes found guilty of violating state law for teaching Darwin's Theory of Evolution.

U.S. restaurateur battles with German community

AHLBECK, Germany (AP) — A year ago, it seemed like a good match: A rich American with big ideas and an east German beach town loaded with tourist potential.

Alas, the romance has become a soap opera replete with skinheads, secret police, Lebanese militiamen, Polish bodyguards, conspiracy theories, veiled threats and loud music.

Dooley

Thomas J. Dooley III took over this town's showcase restaurant last year, ran it chaotically, alienated the locals — and then made a remarkable turnaround that has even drawn compliments from his enemy, the mayor.

But despite the fact that the food, service and crowds are now considered very good, the 28-year-old scion of a Boston garbage-hauling fortune remains locked in a scorched-earth struggle with this Baltic seaside community.

Last month, his father flew in with the family bookkeeper, surveyed the stormy local situation and said: Sorry, the cash box is now closed.

"He said, 'I'm not interested in spending any more money on this,'" said Dooley, who is short and stocky, with slicked-back hair, manicured nails and a T-shirt-and-blazer ensemble out of the early episodes of "Miami Vice."

But Dooley is undaunted, despite the town council's revocation of his contract and its vow to stop his plans to add a casino-and-boutique complex to his restaurant.

The restaurant is the 95-year-old Seebruecke, or Sea Bridge, a treasured landmark that sits on the end of a T-shaped pier off the broad beach in the heart of northeast Germany's Usedom Island.

For generations it was a playground for Communist Party hacks and secret police officials, and a sedate crowd of older couples and families.

'This was basically a beer hall. Everyone sat down at these long tables and a fat woman brought big mugs of beer.'

— Thomas J. Dooley III

"This was basically a beer hall," scoffs Dooley. "Everyone sat down at these long tables and a fat woman brought big mugs of beer."

Dooley discovered the establishment on a drive along the coast. Early last year, he was picked over 39 other bidders, got a 25-year lease and agreed to expand the pier.

Shortly after opening in May 1991, he was asked to organize a dinner for President Richard von Weiszaecker. The day before the dinner, 15 of his 20 workers struck for more money.

Dooley rushed in replacements from Berlin and pulled off the fete. But the ouster of the old staff was the beginning of snowballing local resentment.

Mayor Hans-Joachim Mohr and others contended that the quality of food and service slipped dramatically. Then Dooley turned the restaurant into a disco that drew a rowdy young crowd, frightening away the regulars who preferred oompah music on moonlit nights.

"We had problems with the service, the disco, the cleanliness," Mohr said. "The local people couldn't go there."

Dooley claimed Mohr and others told him that local skinheads were out to get him, and that he'd better leave the town and restaurant behind. Mohr contends he was only warning Dooley.

Several townspeople insist, however, that Ahlbeck has no skinhead problem.

Dooley responded anyway, hiring Polish security specialists, then Lebanese militiamen living in Berlin. His burly bodyguards did little to endear him to townsfolk.

The mayor finally voided Dooley's contract in November. Both sides hired lawyers and traded threats.

Dooley, meanwhile, brought in an experienced west Berlin manager during the off-season to whip the restaurant into shape. He said he invested $250,000 and got a line of credit from Beck's, the big brewery.

When the restaurant reopened May 1, even the mayor was impressed by the service and snazzy decor.

"Everything is quite good, the restaurant is no longer a problem," Mohr said recently, as he dined on creamed herring.

But Dooley plans to revive the disco, and there could also be a controversy in the works over his plans to extend the pier.

The city insists that it be a simple pier to which tourist boats can dock. Dooley plans a pier lined with boutiques, another restaurant and a casino.

Many townsfolk, are aghast at the clash during a period when tourism is off.

"Everyone thinks it's ridiculous," grumbled Joachim Kintzler, 37, who sells hot dogs near Dooley's restaurant.

Japanese create portable-phone etiquette

TOKYO (AP) — About 1 million portable phones are on Japan's streets, and it sometimes seems there's no escaping them. So the Japanese, masters of etiquette as well as technology, are now coming up with portable-phone manners.

"Use of portable telephones at your seat may be a disturbance to other passengers, so please use the vestibule even if it is inconvenient," runs the message that greets riders aboard Japan's super-efficient, super-fast bullet trains.

At restaurants in Tokyo's plush Imperial Hotel, diners are firmly asked to leave their tables to conduct urgent phone business.

The requests might seem calculated to irk portable phoners, who can pay from $700 to $1,500 up front and $100 a month for the privilege of being able to talk on the phone wherever and whenever they want.

But in a country where people are bombarded from infancy with lessons about not annoying others, the new etiquette standard seems to have caught on quickly.

"At the beginning I think maybe there were customers who wanted to show, 'Hey, I've got a cordless phone,'" said Yoshio Owaki, a manager at the Imperial Hotel. "But now customers have come to understand manners."

"The messages on the bullet train have been a good education for Japanese," he said.

Mobile telephones in Japan have more than tripled the last two years to 1.44 million units — about one for every 100 Japanese, the Posts and Telecommunications Ministry estimates.

Some of those phones are in cars, but an official at Japan Motorola estimates hand-carried models make up 70 percent to 80 percent of the total.

That means more and more Japanese are carrying their phones onto trains and into public places, where they're most noticeable — and potentially most bothersome.

But not to worry, said Hiroshi Sadoya, the chief of the phone company's Central Mobile Communications branch in Tokyo's business district.

"Recently almost everyone has been observing etiquette," he said. "It seems like etiquette when talking to people is in the Japanese bosom."

Armenia may be known for cognac

YEREVAN, Armenia (AP) — Thick, fragrant brandy, product of a wine industry that legend says began when Noah planted the first grapes on Mount Ararat, has been Armenia's national drink for generations.

Now, industry officials want it to be a major foreign currency earner for their newly independent country and are selling it outside the former Soviet bloc for the first time in decades.

The obstacles are great: an energy and economic blockade by neighboring Azerbaijan, France's claim to exclusive use of the term "cognac" and high taxes on foreign-currency profits.

"If we're going to describe nations by their traditional drink, for France it's very natural to drink wine, for Germany and Czechoslovakia maybe beer, and for Armenia it's cognac," said Edward Hakopian, director of the Yerevan Cognac Factory.

"Don't be surprised when we start our day in the morning with a cognac, and we serve it with any dish — with fish, with meat — and we finish the day with it as well."

"Cognac may become the main resource of Armenia," Hakopian said in an interview. "It has the potential of becoming the No. 1 export product" after more mundane goods such as clothing, granite and marble.

'Don't be surprised when we start our day in the morning with a cognac, and we serve it with any dish — with fish, with meat — and we finish the day with it as well.'

— Edward Hakopian, of the Yerevan Cognac Factory

"Often, people ask us what is the secret of the high quality of Armenian brandy," he said. "I always answer that there are no special secrets, simply Armenia is, let's say, one of the cradles of world-class vine-keeping."

Armenia grows about 200,000 tons of wine grapes annually, primarily in the Ararat Valley. Half are used for wine and half for cognac. Mount Ararat, where Noah's Ark came to rest after the flood, now is in Turkey but is visible from Yerevan, the Armenian capital.

Brandy production in Armenia began about 150 years later than in France. Officially, it dates to December 1887, when an excise document shows Armenia sold 1,200 pails of cognac spirits to Russia.

It survived the Bolshevik Revolution, the Great Depression, two world wars and Mikhail Gorbachev's anti-alcohol campaign, during which some of the finest vineyards were plowed under.

More recently, the industry dodged a legal battle with France over the use of the name cognac by marketing its brandy under the brand name Noyac, an amalgam of Noah and "ac," Armenian for spring water, which the Yerevan Cognac Factory uses instead of distilled water.

Far more difficult to get around are the economic blockade by neighboring Azerbaijan and a 40 percent tax on foreign currency earnings the Armenian government uses to pay its share of the former Soviet Union's foreign debt.

The blockade was imposed after fighting began more than four years ago for control of Nagorno-Karabakh, a predominantly Armenian enclave inside Azerbaijan.

Pipes froze in the factory's tasting room and destroyed the wooden floors, but the 5,000 bottles of cognac on display were not damaged.

They are part of the factory's collection of 30,000 bottles of brandy from around the world, for which Hakopian hopes to build a museum. Brandy from Azerbaijan has been removed from the collection.

Hakopian said about 60 percent of Armenia's brandy was exported before the 1917 revolution and was commonly found in exclusive London clubs.

Josef Stalin forbade exports to the West, but gave Winston Churchill a bottle of 10-year-old, 100-proof Armenian brandy before the 1943 Tehran Conference, hoping to soften him up, Hakopian said.

"Stalin studied his hobbies and his behavior and his likes, and knew Churchill was fond of strong beverages and whiskies," he said.

Most biographers say it was a Russian cognac, but Hakopian sniffed at that.

Britons abroad can read about the royals

By Alex S. Jones
N.Y. Times News Service

British expatriates have longings for home no less urgent than those of Americans abroad who savour Big Macs, the nectar of bourbon and the soothing titillation of People magazine.

For the British, the cravings are apt to be for room-temperature beer, Heinz baked beans on toast and the hottest scoop on royal scandal and cricket.

On that premise, in early May, Express Newspapers PLC of London began distributing The International Express, a weekly tabloid consisting of the juiciest tidbits from The Daily Express and The Sunday Express, which have a British circulation of about 1.6 million.

"The disasters that have befallen the royal family have absolutely been a godsend from our point of view," said Christopher Claxton, general manager of overseas development for Express Newspapers.

Indeed, since publication began May 7, Claxton said that sales dropped off only when editors foolishly did not lead with an article about "Princess Di" or "Fergie," whose troubled marriages to Prince Charles and Prince Andrew have been the obsession of the British press for weeks.

The British press spans a very wide demographic range, with national dailies for almost every taste and class. The Daily Express is a tabloid aimed at a market niche between the so-called quality newspapers — broadsheets like The Times, The Independent and The Daily Telegraph — and the so-called working man's papers — tabloids like Rupert Murdoch's Sun, which features a nude pin-up on page 3, and The Daily Mirror, the former flagship newspaper of the late Robert Maxwell's empire.

All of the big British papers are available in some large American cities. But only The Financial Times, a member of the quality press, is aggressively marketed here.

The Express and its archrival, The Daily Mail, are considered respectable while still being hardly serious. For instance, the front page of a recent issue of The International Express had two articles: one on Princess Diana, of course, and a second headlined "Boy From the House of Hell," about a 2-year-old who had survived six days trapped in a house with the body of his father, who had died, apparently of alcohol abuse.

The rest of the 64-page paper was devoted almost entirely to crime, celebrity gossip, sports and more than a dozen articles about the royal family.

"The Express allows you to wallow in a world of tabloid gossip nostalgia, somewhat akin to a British People magazine," said Andrew Stephen, Washington bureau chief of The Observer, a quality British Sunday newspaper.

In the United States, circulation is thus far limited to what Claxton described as "all the old 13 colonies, plus Florida."

Group opposes $2 million dam project

■ Permian Basin Underground Water Conservation District fears ground water will be harmed.

By Ed Todd
Staff writer

STANTON — The Stanton-based Permian Basin Underground Water Conservation District (PBUWCD) is protesting the building of a $2 million dam that would impound salt water in Martin County and — PBUWCD fears — possibly harm ground water.

The dam is being constructed by the Colorado River Municipal Water District (CRMWD), which has its headquarters in Big Spring.

PBUWCD directors, who voted unanimously to protest the project, contend that ground water in Martin County and northwest Howard County might be adversely affected by seepage or spillage from the impoundment.

Mark Hoelscher, PBUWCD manager, said in a July 15 letter to the Texas Water Commission and to CRMWD General Manager O.H. Ovie that his six-member board objects to the "building of a salt-water containment dam" on Sulphur Springs Draw in east-central Martin County.

CRMWD operates three lakes and supplies water to Midland, Odessa and other West Texas cities and towns. It is proposing the dam to trap Sulphur Springs Draw water, which is high in chlorides.

The plan is to cut down on salts flowing into CRMWD's Lake Spence near Robert Lee and into Lake Ivie near Ballinger and into the Highland Lakes, which serve the Lower Colorado River Authority in the Austin area.

The reservoir to be created by the proposed Martin County dam is to serve as a backup to Natural Dam Lake, a salt-water impoundment west of Big Spring.

If Natural Dam breaks, which was feared in 1986 amid heavy rainfall, disasters could include the "washing out of Interstate 20, the washing out of the Missouri-Pacific Railroad, and the flooding of the city of Big Spring," Ivie said.

"So far, we have been successful," Ivie said. "We just hope we get this thing built and never have to use it."

Hoelscher doesn't "think it will solve the problem."

But, "if this is something that has to be done," Hoelscher said on Monday, "then let's do it in such a way that it does not harm the ground water. And I don't even think the ground water is taken into consideration" in the dam proposal.

"The PBUWCD is very concerned that no ground water studies have been done in the area that would identify area water qualities and impacts that a dam would have" on underground water, Hoelscher wrote.

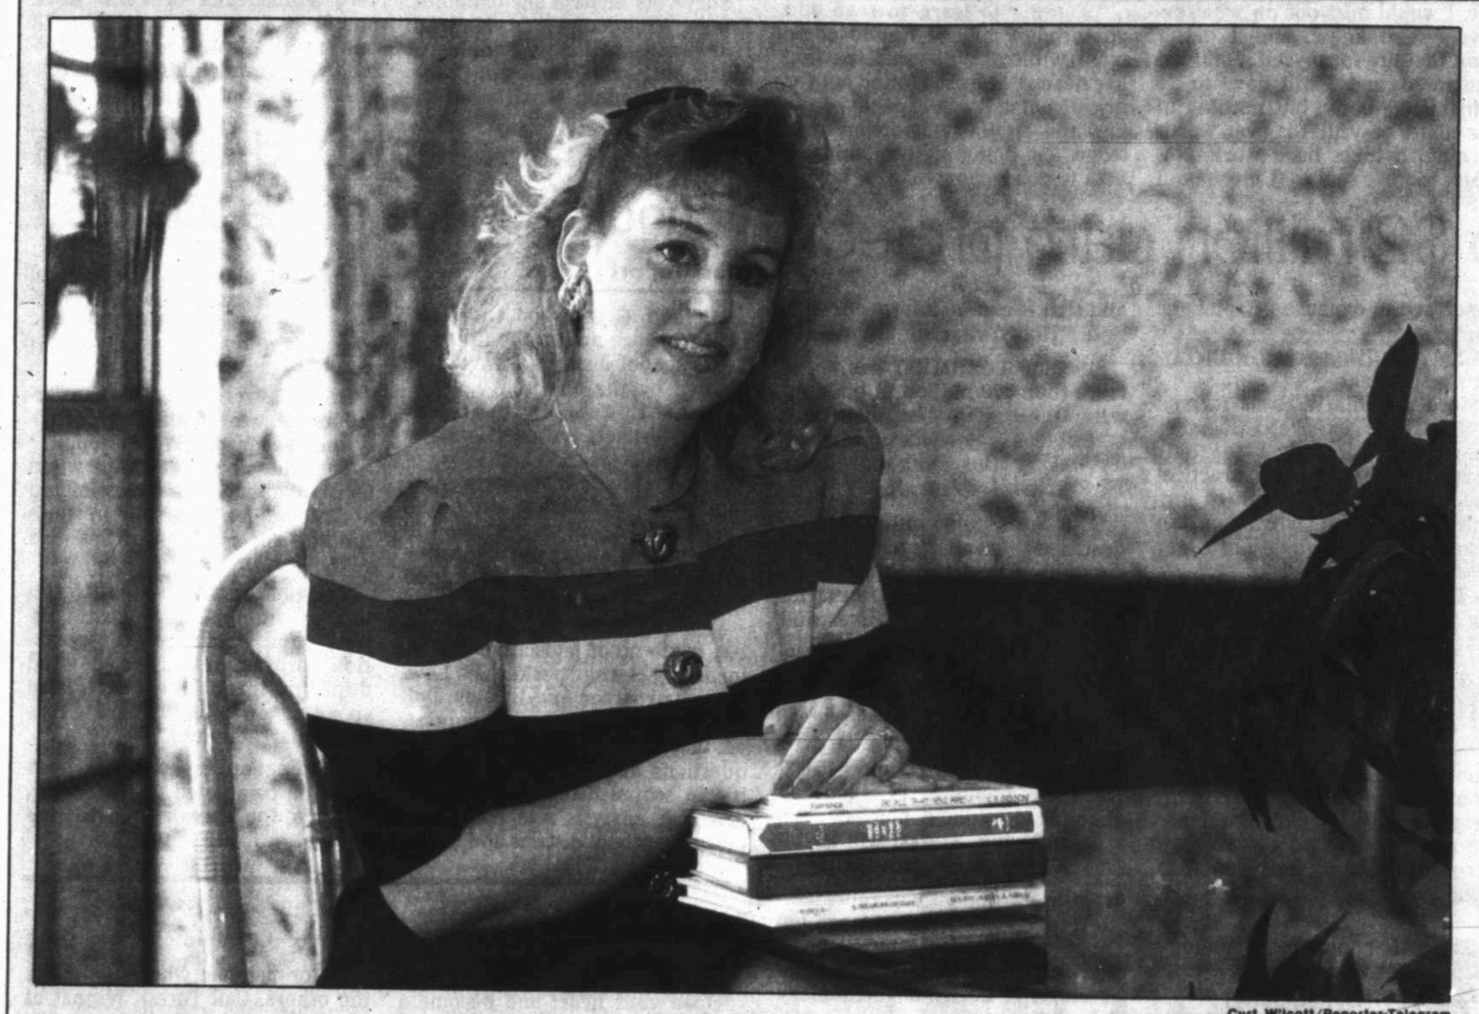

Further, Hoelscher said his board is "concerned that no plans have been made to locate and plug existing water wells in the area to be flooded."

"We have no idea if they (CRMWD) made studies or not," Hoelscher said. "No studies have been made available to us."

Hoelscher said he and his board "understand that there are serious problems with salts going into the lakes" owned and operated by CRMWD.

INTRODUCING ...

Curt Wilcott/Reporter-Telegram

Julie Henson, a Texas Tech student who has been diagnosed with dyslexia, has overcome academic obstacles in order to succeed in college.

Student focuses on own method of learning

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff writer

Julie Henson believes she can achieve anything she sets her sights on. She just may need to use different methods than the average person.

Julie has been diagnosed with dyslexia, and succeeding in high school — and now at Texas Tech University in Lubbock — has been a long, hard road fraught with academic obstacles.

She deals every day with dsylexia, an affliction that is described in the word itself, which consists of the Greek roots "dys" meaning "difficulty with" and "lexia" meaning verbal language.

It is a strange and potentially devastating condition that prevents millions of otherwise bright children from learning to read or write normally. Although it is unrelated to basic intellectual capacity, dyslexia causes a difficulty in handling words and symbols.

For Julie it meant years of frustration and graduating from Lee High School in 1986 with a fourth-grade reading ability.

During her grade school and secondary school years, timed tests were always a struggle, written exams were hellacious compared to verbal tests, and reading aloud to a classroom was a nightmare. So Julie coped the best way she could.

"I would pretend to be on the wrong page, and not know where we were when the teacher called on me to read," she said. "I had done everything I could with the resources I had. But it just wasn't enough."

Julie's parents, Doug and Carol Henson, also puzzled over their daughter's math papers with low grades when all the problems were answered correctly.

"It turned out Julie was copying the problems incorrectly off the (chalk) board," Ms. Henson said.

Julie had a problem with transposing letters and numbers. "I also would write down the wrong page numbers for homework assignments, go home and read the wrong pages for class," she said.

The college student said her most devastating moment came when she was reading aloud to a 4-year-old neighbor after she had graduated from high school. The toddler, who had apparently memorized the book she was reading, grabbed it from her hands and said, "If you can't read it right, don't read it."

Fortunately for Julie, an art teacher at a local art store — who was giving her painting lessons — noticed that she had impaired depth perception and other visual anomalies.

"I just fell apart," said Julie's mother. "This was the first person ever who said to me: 'I see a problem.' People told me I was worrying too much, overreacting — that Julie was a beautiful, darling child. They weren't seeing what I was seeing."

Ms. Henson said she and her

Council tentatively allocates grant funds

■ July 28 public hearing solicits community input, suggestions.

By Darren J. Waggoner
Staff writer

City Council members have tentatively allocated nearly $1 million for 14 community improvement programs, leaving four other programs with nothing.

The distribution breakdowns are preliminary and could change pending community input at a public hearing next week.

The money will be given to programs benefitting citizens in the Community Development Block Grant (CDBG) area, which includes generally everything south of Illinois Avenue, east of Midkiff Road and east of Big Spring Street.

The $856,000 grant, offered by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, is for fiscal year 1993, which starts in October. An additional $50,000, remaining from last year's grant, was included in the distribution.

The council cut more than 30 percent from the $1.3 million total requested.

The four programs denied CDBG funds include Project A.D.A.M., a program for abusive men; the Nonprofit Resource Center; E.P.I.C. Bilingual Program and the Boys and Girls Club.

"Most of these programs are receiving funds from another source already, such as The United Way. The council is trying to benefit the maximum number of people," said Rick Menchaca, assistant to the city manager.

The final decision on CDBG funding was delayed until Aug. 11 in order to include the two recently appointed council members, Juluis Brooks and Jose Cuevas, in the decision.

Rep. Smith wins award

Staff report

U.S. Rep. Lamar Smith, R-San Antonio, who represents much of Midland County, has received the U.S. Chamber of Commerce Spirit of Enterprise Award.

Smith

The Spirit of Enterprise Award was given to Smith for his support of free enterprise in America. Smith has won the award each year it has been given.

"I'm honored to receive this award once again," Smith said in a written statement. "This is a symbol of what I firmly believe is right with America. The federal government needs to provide tax and regulatory incentives for the private sector to create more jobs.

"Free enterprise is what has made this country great and keeps it from following the downward spiral of other nations' economies," he added.

In another development, Smith announced he is now accepting applications for nominations to the U.S. service academies. The deadline is Nov. 1 of this year.

"I encourage all high school juniors in the 21st Congressional District to apply for acceptance to our nation's military academies," Smith said.

To qualify, an applicant must be a U.S. citizen, reside in the 21st Congressional District, be between the ages of 17 and 21 by July 1 of the year of admission, and be unmarried without children.

Selection is based on SAT or ACT test scores, class rank, grade point, school records, extracurricular activities, leadership potential, motivation and recommendations. Those candidates who meet the minimum requirements will be asked to interview before the Academy Selection Board.

Interested students can write for an application to Karen Frey, c/o Congressman Lamar Smith, 10010 San Pedro, Suite 530, San Antonio, 78216. Ms. Frey also can be reached at (512) 229-5880.

Also, Smith appointed Anne Johnston of San Antonio as his new staff assistant.

"Anne's abilities were evident when she worked for us as an intern last year," Smith said. "She returned this year to look for a job after graduation and volunteered to help us while we searched for a new staff assistant.

"It didn't take long for us to see she was the ideal choice."

A graduate of the University of Texas at Austin, Ms. Johnston's duties will include working with constituents and helping the staff with special projects.

The political season can make you think . . . and laugh

More rambling thoughts from the exciting world of presidential politics:

— When I grow up I want to be as smart as Barbara Jordan.

Ott

— Politics is like a sporting event. There are winners and there are losers. There is drama and there is theater. The winners cry happy tears and the losers try to put their best foot forward. In the end, though, we the fans ask, "What have you done for me lately?"

— Although Bill Clinton's acceptance speech would have to be termed a success, he really needs to learn to be a bit more succinct with his remarks.

— I can't believe that four years ago today I thought Michael Dukakis had a good chance of winning.

— Ann Richards is one of the few people who can be a sassy smart aleck and delightfully funny at the same time. It is a rare talent.

— If the Republicans start slinging mud at Bill Clinton, I get the distinct impression he just might be mean enough to sling it right back at them.

— Watching Hillary Clinton and Tipper Gore hopping around on stage was like witnessing the liberal and conservative wings of the Junior League coming together.

— I still like Jimmy Carter.

— If the Democrats actually believe those recent polls showing them 20 percentage points ahead, they are incredibly naive and deserve to lose.

— President Bush will not dump Dan Quayle from the ticket because it will make him appear wishy-washy and disloyal.

— Ross Perot's "can-do" image has been tarnished forever.

— I'm not sure why, but I still think Ross Perot's withdrawal is going to help the Republicans more than the Democrats in the end, especially in key states like Texas, Florida and California.

— You may not like him personally, but you've got to admit that Bill Clinton is a darn good politician, and, as Ross Perot learned, you've got to be a politician to be successful in politics. Sorry, but that's the way it is in the real world.

— I sorta missed the fighting and squabbling that generally takes place at a "normal" Democratic convention.

— After about three minutes, Jerry Brown really starts getting on my nerves.

— What's Pat Buchanan doing these days?

— It's hard to believe that one man can make that much difference, but apparently James Baker III can, so don't be surprised if he takes a leave of absence from his job as secretary of state to head up the president's re-election campaign.

— During any presidential convention, Democratic or Republican, I still get a kick out of hearing some long-winded politician take the microphone and scream, "Madam secretary, the great state of Minnesota, known as the Gopher State, home of 900,000 milk cows, home of this great country's first national farm organization and home of the busiest freshwater port in North America proudly casts all 132 of its votes for the next president of the United States, (fill in the blank)." Then the Minnesota delegates — most of whom are wearing goofy-looking hats and appear as though they just got through milking one of those 900,000 cows — jump up and down and act silly while the TV cameras capture their foolish behavior.

— It must do wonders for your ego to stand at the podium in Madison Square Garden and gaze out at a sea of red, white and blue placards bearing your name as thousands of half-crazed lunatics roar their approval.

— I think it was Hillary Clinton, the liberal member of the Junior League, who compared it to being a rock star.

— I'd like to have a nickel for every miniature American flag that will be waved at the Republican convention next month in Houston.

— Do you get the feeling that the two political parties are having a contest to see which one can be perceived as the most "patriotic" in the eyes of the so-called "middle-class?"

— Does anyone here really believe that either candidate can balance the federal budget? If so, I've got some swamp land you might want to consider buying.

— I know it's all for show, but I rather enjoy seeing film clips of presidential candidates tossing around the football, or playing softball, or even throwing horseshoes. During times like that they let their guard down, and for just an instant they almost seem like "real people."

HENSON: Student plans to teach dyslexic children

husband spent years trying to figure out why Julie had so much trouble in school when she had a high IQ.

Later, a friend mentioned the Scottish Rite Children's Hospital in Lubbock, an institution that offers training programs tailored to the way dyslexics learn.

The hospital offers training in Alphabetic Phonics, a multisensory phonetic program that features decoding words for the sounds of single letters and combinations of letters, and encoding to fit letters together into words.

Julie attended the hospital's program one hour each week day over a period of three years. She learned to trace letters in the air, close her eyes and see them in her mind, and to sound out words phonetically.

The program gave her the tools to read better, and taught her tricks to differentiate between numbers, such as writing the number six using a curved line and a circle while using a straight line and a circle for a nine. So, no matter how she sees a nine or a six, she just has to look for the curved or straight line.

She also has a disability form she gives her college professors the first day of class. It outlines the considerations she needs, such as being supplied class notes or taking tests that don't have a time limit.

"I can do as well as everyone else, I'm just slower," Julie said. "I can do it. It just has to be different and that isn't necessarily bad. It's just the way things happen."

She said that once she received a score of 35 on a written test. "I went to my teacher at Tech and said: 'I know you don't believe me, but I know this material. Can you figure out another way to give me the test (other than written)?' "

So, the teacher gave her the entire test over again, verbally. "Then he said: 'You just got a 95 on the test.' "

"I know it's an inconvenience for teachers to do things differently for me," Julie said. "But it is my grade, and I am paying for my education, too. It may take me eight years to graduate. But, so what? I have to be fair to myself."

The student said her experience has strengthened her convictions that all children have a right to an education, and that teachers should take heed when their young charges tell them they are struggling.

"When a child says 'help me.' He is earnest. Don't say, 'I already explained it to you.' Too many kids fall through the cracks. There is a better answer. There is such a need. . . . Things are hard enough with drugs and such, students don't need the added fear and frustration of not being able to learn," she said.

Julie's experience has also taught her the need for instructors who teach Alphabetic Phonics.

"I want to teach or tutor dyslexic children when I graduate," she said. "And I don't want to do it in public schools where teachers are there to teach and students are there to learn, but the teachers are bombarded with paperwork and rules and regulations. They have 30 minutes to teach this and 45 minutes to teach that, and students who don't learn it (in the allotted time) get left behind."

Julie, who is earning a bachelor's degree in home economics, plans to become certified in teaching Alphabetic Phonics. Then she would like to teach it to children privately at home or with the Scottish Rite Hospital.

The aspiring teacher said she has come a long way from the student who was given the message "don't ask questions, don't embarrass yourself, don't cause any trouble."

"There have been times that I haven't wanted to see another book," she said. "But I knew giving up would mean I would never be able to read a book or a newspaper. I would miss out on what everyone else knew, and I didn't want that life for myself. I still get frustrated, and I still have to do things differently, but nothing in life comes easy that is ever worth earning. It takes hard work."

Her mother said that more than 92 percent of dyslexic children grow up to be high school dropouts. "They don't graduate or they become behavior problems because they feel so inadequate," she said.

Ms. Henson said when she attended her daughter's graduation at Scottish Rite, one speaker really touched them when he said: "Don't let what you think you can't do stand in the way of what you can."

Julie recently graduated from the program reading on a 12th-grade level. "I won't have to go through the rest of my life not knowing how to read," she said. "I also have to stand up for myself and say things like, 'I didn't quite get that. Can you repeat that?' I have to try harder and push harder and ask for help."

She plans to enroll in Scottish Rite's program that will certify her in teaching Alphabetic Phonics.

"If I give up on myself, the teachers will quit. It is an inconvenience for them. But it is an inconvenience for me too, especially when I spend 2½ hours on one test.

"Wanting to learn to read and go through college has to come from within," Julie said, patting her heart. "At least I found out for myself what I was capable of doing, and I found out on my own terms. I'm doing my best, and my best is good enough."

WATER: Group objects to $2 million dam project

(From 1B)

"And we have a strong desire to help those people solve their (salt-water) problems," Hoelscher said. "We do not want to be a roadblock. But we are charged by the 69th (Texas) Legislature to protect the ground water of Martin County and northwest Howard County. It is our duty to protect our ground water."

John Taylor, CRMWD board president, said the CRMWD is building the Martin County dam under an "emergency" permit from the Texas Water Commission.

"Prudence demands that we do something," Taylor said.

All the while, Taylor said CRMWD and PBUWCD should work toward the same purposes: to produce the "best-quality water that we can possibly have."

"We don't want to do anything to harm their underground water," Taylor said. "We are not in the business of cleaning up our water at the expense of someone else's."

CRMWD's Ivie agreed with Taylor's assessment.

Since the CRMWD was formed in 1949, the district's directors "have had uppermost in their minds doing whatever is practical and necessary to deliver to citizens of this west-central part of Texas . . . the best-quality of water possible," Ivie said.

CRMWD is dedicated to protecting "the water quality and to improve it to the extent that we can and that it can be improved," Ivie said. "That's what we are about."

Since 1951, CRMWD has spent more than $20 million in building salt-water containment dams and other means "to clean up this water" along the Colorado River, Taylor said.

Salt-water impoundments are designed to trap salts naturally occurring on land and to cut down on salts running into tributaries and into the Colorado River and into lakes.

FUNDS: July 28 hearing solicits community's input

vester Cantu, several groups, including the Federation of Citizens United to Serve (FOCUS), prepared their own preliminary funding drafts at the request of Mayor J.D. Faircloth last month.

Many Midlanders living in the CDBG area said during a June 1 community meeting that they were concerned about street paving. Many residents said their unpaved and unguttered streets are dangerous when vehicles lose control on the loose gravel. The City Council estimated street-work costs in the area to be as high as $300,000, but the council set aside $250,000 for the program.

About 15 miles of unpaved streets remain in the CDBG area. A volunteer street commission has already prepared a list of streets to be paved first.

"The streets (to be paved) are not known right now. The council will make that decision in December," Menchaca said. "Of course, they should be streets with a high number of residents."

Fifteen percent of the total CDBG money must go toward public service programs. Those programs and the money allocated include: the Southeast Senior Nutrition Program, $56,000 to feed 80 people every day; Citywide Community Services, $10,000 for a home-cleaning program; Goode Beginning Child Care Center, $7,500 for capital improvements; Northeast YMCA, $25,000 for the Senior Wellness Program, $10,000 for youth programs, including a summer camp, $9,900 for Youth Connection program, including program development at Chaparral Apartments; and the city will receive $10,000 to clear 200 abandoned city properties.

The other programs include: $250,000 for street paving, which includes curb and gutter work on at least 12 unidentified streets; $50,000 for a Homeownership Incentive Program, which helped provide down payments for nearly 100 families last year; $30,000 for Housing Emergency Repairs Program, which provides emergency repairs for gas lines, sewer lines, water heaters, etc. for low income, senior citizens who own their homes; $150,000 for improvements at Eastside Community Park; $35,000 for improvements at Martin Luther King Park and $45,000 for the demolition of about 45 abandoned Midland homes.

Additionally, $70,000 will go toward CDBG administration costs.

Groups or individuals representing the various programs are encouraged to attend a public hearing on July 28 at 7 p.m. in the cafeteria at DeZavala Elementary School.

"The council has decided to go into the community it serves and hold it at night so most people can attend," Menchaca said. "They've given the people the forum for them to come to us."

Anyone wishing to attend the meeting who is physically impaired or anyone needing additional information can call Sylvester Cantu at 685-7408.

Police investigate burned man

FORT WORTH (AP) — A Virginia man doused with gasoline, set ablaze and left to die in a trash bin has been unable to speak with police investigators about the case.

William Burge, 48, was listed in fair condition Monday at the Parkland Memorial Hospital burn unit in Dallas. He suffered second-and third-degree burns over 60 percent of his body.

Burge, of Madison Heights, Va., was found in the trash bin Saturday afternoon by a pool hall employee.

"The man came here to visit his children. While he was here, this happened," Police Lt. Burton Poe said.

Burge and his wife, whose name was not released, were separated several months ago, Poe said.

His wife had moved from Virginia to Fort Worth and began dating a man. She was killed in a car wreck in June, Poe said.

The boyfriend, whose name also was not released, won custody of the children. The boyfriend was questioned, but no charges have been filed, Poe said.

"We don't know whether there is a connection with the man that had been dating the victim's wife," Poe said.

DEATHS

Ival Williamson

Services for Ival Williamson of Midland have been set for 9 a.m. Thursday at the Ellis Chapel with the Rev. Clark Ford, pastor of Memorial Christian Church, officiating. Burial will follow at Resthaven Memorial Park with Ellis Funeral Home in charge of arrangements.

Mrs. Williamson died Monday morning at a local hospital.

She was born June 9, 1907, in Sullivan County, Mo., where she was reared and educated. She married Bryant "Red" Williamson in 1934 in Wewoka, Okla., where they resided. Mrs. Williamson worked there as a beautician.

Her husband died in 1978.

Mrs. Williamson moved to Midland in 1980 to be near her family.

She was active in the Eastern Star in Wewoka, where she served as Worthy Matron. She was a member of First Christian Church in Wewoka, and attended Memorial Christian Church in Midland.

She was preceded in death by her husband; an infant son; a brother, Duane "Abe" Fanning; and two sisters, Ina Fanning Bunch and Goldie Fanning.

Survivors include one daughter, Donna Montgomery of Midland; four brothers, Harvey Fanning of Milan, Mo., Arlo Fanning of Crane, Harold Fanning of Green City, Mo., and Lyndal Webb of Hope, Ark.; two sisters, Lovie Fanning Grisamer of Midland and Lois Fanning Webb of Hope, Ark.; two grandchildren, two great-grandchildren and a number of nieces, nephews, great-nieces and great-nephews.

Dorothy Smith

SAN ANGELO — Dorothy Nell Smith, 61, sister of a Midland woman, died last Thursday.

Services were Saturday in the Johnson Funeral Home Chapel in San Angelo with the Rev. C.L. Messer officiating. Burial followed at the Paint Rock Cemetery.

Mrs. Smith was born Sept. 10, 1930, in Sulphur Springs, and she married Andy Smith on June 18, 1957, in San Angelo.

She was a homemaker and a member of the Full Gospel Assembly Church.

Survivors include her husband; three daughters, Donna Pearcy, Brenda Whitesell and Kathy Tinney, all of San Angelo; two sons, Jack Thibodeaux of Paint Rock and Cleve Smith of Corpus Christi; one sister, Myrtle Jenkins of Midland; 16 grandchildren and one great-grandson.

Midland, Greenwood, Odessa schools escape state audit list

Staff report

Midland, Greenwood and Odessa schools are not on the list of 50 Texas school districts that will be audited by the end of August.

Crane County Independent School District, however, will be scrutinized.

A special team from State Auditor Lawrence Alwin's office and the Texas Education Agency will conduct the audits to determine expenditures and search for inefficiencies in public schools.

The Legislative Audit Committee, made up of legislative leaders including House Speaker Gib Lewis as chairperson and Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock as co-chairperson, requested the audit in order to resolve questions about excessive spending in school districts.

A risk analysis was completed on every school district and 50 districts were chosen, along with 20 region education centers, according to information from the Association of Texas Professional Educators.

Districts were selected that varied in size, wealth, ethnicity, density and geographical location.

The audits come at a time when legislative leaders have estimated a $250 million shortfall in state funding for school districts this year.

The auditors will study such factors as administrative costs, district fund balances, transportation, professional fees, bonded dept, maintenance costs, and spending on athletics and extracurricular activities.

The final audit report is expected to be completed in November, in time for the next legislative session.

Brahma bull gores man to death

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A 1,100-pound Brahma bull gored to death its 64-year-old owner, who had planned to sell the animal later in the day.

Cyrus Dudley Thigpen, a retired sheet metal worker, was working on a cattle pen Sunday in south Bexar County when he was hit from behind by his Brahma bull named "Bo," authorities said.

"The bull then continued to hook and maul Thigpen, dragging him down a net and barbed wire fence for approximately 15 feet," said Jim De Lesdernier, chief deputy with the Bexar County Sheriff's Department. "Up to this time, it had been considered a gentle bull."

A neighbor said the Thigpen family had owned the bull since it was newborn and had fed it by bottle when it was young.

"It was a freak accident," said neighbor Leroy Young.

De Lesdernier said Thigpen was reinforcing the pen in preparation for the bull's sale. The prospective buyer was to have picked up the bull about noon Sunday.

De Lesdernier said the family would decided what to do with the bull now.

Courthouse shooting claims woman's life

BEAUMONT (AP) — A Jefferson County sheriff's deputy was being held Monday in the shooting death of his ex-wife, killed in front of the county courthouse, Beaumont police said.

Kathy Lee Redeau Smith, who would have turned 34 today, was shot four to six times as she walked toward the courthouse's main entrance shortly before 4 p.m. Monday, Beaumont police officer Billy Blankenship said.

Justice of the Peace Vi McGinnis told the Beaumont Enterprise that Ms. Smith was on her way to a 4 p.m. appointment with the sheriff's department, where she was going to complain that the deputy — her ex-husband — had been harassing her.

Ms. Smith encountered the uniformed deputy as she walked toward the courthouse with her mother and other family members, Ms. McGinnis said. The two exchanged words, then the deputy shot Ms. Smith in the head, mouth, abdomen and hand, the judge said.

The woman was rushed to a local hospital, where she died just after 4:30 p.m., Blankenship said.

"Immediately following the shooting, a male suspect surrendered himself to the sheriff's deputies at the courthouse. He was a Jefferson County sheriff's deputy," Blankenship said.

The deputy was arraigned on an attempted murder charge and ordered held at the Jefferson County Jail on $50,000 bond. He was not expected to be formally charged until today, Blankenship said.

Blankenship said police would not release the name of the deputy, who still was being questioned Monday night, or detail any motive for the shooting. He referred further questions to the sheriff's department, where dispatcher Carolyn Rogers refused to release any further information.

Leaders seek to amend redistricting proposal

FORT WORTH (AP) — Hispanic leaders say a city council redistricting plan will improve minority representation — just not enough.

The council is expected to vote today on a plan reshaping one of nine districts into a 40 percent Hispanic region. But some area leaders want the district to be 42 percent Hispanic.

The number of Hispanics in Fort Worth grew from 12 percent to 20 percent between 1980 and 1990, based on U.S. Census figures. The city's population grew 16 percent, to 447,619, during the same time.

About 75 percent of the growth was among minorities, who comprise more than 41 percent of the population.

Carlos Puente, the lone Hispanic on the nine-member panel, said he hopes council members will consider making the district 42 percent Hispanic, although he's not optimistic that change will be approved.

Puente said a larger proportion of Hispanics is necessary because of the minority's traditionally low voter turnout in Fort Worth.

Hispanic leaders would "feel more comfortable with 42 percent," he said. "I think that's the general consensus I'm getting."

The council has spent extensive time preparing its redistricting proposal.

"I think we have come up with a very fair and equitable plan," councilman Bill Meadows said after the 40-percent program was finalized last week.

Renaldo "Renny" Rosas, chairman of the Hispanic 2000 redistricting committee, said his organization supports the 42 percent plan. He plans to lobby the council today.

David Vasquez, who participated in drawing Hispanic 2000's proposal, said "if you drop below 40 percent, the odds are going to be really high of a lawsuit."

Mayor Kay Granger said she expects the proposed map to satisfy residents and the federal Justice Department, which must review the plan under the Voting Rights Act.

If it receives federal approval, the map would be used for May council elections.

The council is composed of eight single-member districts and a mayor elected at-large. Hispanics currently hold one seat, while blacks represent two districts.

Judge to decide curfew by July 31

DALLAS (AP) — A federal judge received more evidence Monday regarding Dallas' new teen ordinance and said he expects to uphold the ordinance or overturn it by the end of next week.

On behalf of the ordinance, which requires youths under 17 to be off the streets by 11 p.m. weekdays and midnight on weekends, city attorney Sam Lindsay presented statistics on juvenile crime in Dallas as evidence the ordinance is needed.

But the American Civil Liberties Union, which filed a class-action lawsuit on behalf of an estimated 200,000 youths affected by the ordinance, challenged the city's interpretation.

U.S. District Judge Jerry Buchmeyer told both sides to come back to him Thursday with a further appraisal of the statistics. He said he should have his decision ready by July 31.

Joe Cook, North Texas regional director of the ACLU of Texas, told reporters at an afternoon news conference the ordinance is a waste of time and money.

Police already have the power to stop and arrest juveniles involved in unlawful activity at any hour of the day or night and should be encouraged to continue with such arrests, the ACLU official said.

Meanwhile, law-abiding citizens should not be stopped and questioned whenever they are out, no matter what the time, he said.

The city presented to Buchmeyer an analysis of 2,660 juvenile arrests between Jan. 1 and June 30 of this year. Of those, it said 482, or 18.1 percent, occurred during curfew hours. Of those arrests, 406, or 15.2 percent, occurred in public places covered by the curfew.

Of 450 arrest reports provided separately to the ACLU by the city, only 271 clearly fall under the curfew ordinance and 100 of those were runaways, who would not respond to a curfew anyway, Cook said.

The remaining arrests either occurred at the suspect's home, may have occurred during daylight hours, or were made when the juvenile was accompanied by an adult in whose charge the teen may have been placed, he said.

Despite arguments that the curfew would be vital in reducing juvenile gang activity, Cook said an ACLU analysis of the juvenile arrest reports "did not find one instance of juvenile gang activity."

The statistics "buttress our case that the ordinance is not needed," Cook said.

Comet answers 'button, button, who's got the button' query

Now you see them now you don't. In this article Comet Cleaners explains why buttons sometimes disappear in the dry cleaning process.

By Billie Jo Corbell

Have you ever gotten a garment back from the cleaners only to find that the buttons were gone? It's the "disappearing act" that all cleaners dread. It really isn't the cleaner's fault. Still, you, the consumers, are upset — as you have every right to be. But anger is often directed at the wrong people.

This is the year of the button — they come in all sizes, all colors, all shapes and all materials. Some will dry clean — others will not.

The law requires that garments manufactured today must have a care label revealing at least one method that can be used to clean that article. Unfortunately, the care labels are not always accurate. The care instructions, are meant to apply to all component parts of a garment, including any trims or buttons. The big problem for cleaners develops when the manufacturer has not taken the trim into account and the care label says "dry clean." The garment can be ruined when the color, or, in some cases, the plastic dissolves in dry cleaning. This is where the "disappearing act" occurs.

Some buttons have a separate center that was glued on. If the glue is not resistant to dry cleaning solvent it can dissolve.

Some buttons that look like pearls are quite fragile and can crack, chip and break. It is not possible to predict how this type of button will perform when dry cleaned. Some do beautifully, some do not.

Dyes used to color buttons, beads, sequins and surface designs do not always perform well and can result in general fading, dulling or even complete color transfers onto the garment itself.

Color loss or staining of buttons and trim can also occur during the finishing process or when the trim comes into contact with steam.

Garments with this kind of damage should be taken to the store where they were purchased. Retailers can then report the problem to the manufacturers. Garment makers have to hear from consumers, or they might not know there even is a problem. Remember, the Federal Trade Commission requires that garments be serviceable.

If you have any questions, speak to Comet's experienced dry cleaners and ask if you feel button or trim problems could develop.

Other Comet Cleaners special services include:

Lewellen Construction: Replacing siding pays in many ways

According to Remodeling Magazine, replacing siding is one of the most sensible of all remodeling projects. The publication says that new vinyl and aluminum siding with insulation is a big plus, with buyers welcoming it's maintenance-free protection.

The estimated national payback for vinyl and aluminum siding (the amount recovered at the time of the sale of a home) is 64 percent. Then add to that the cost benefits of low maintenance (never paint again). The siding pays for itself.

Another benefit of the home improvement project becomes obvious in a homeowner's tax return. "Anyone considering a home improvement loan to replace their siding should remember that the interest on such loans is still tax deductible. That, of course, is not true for the majority of other types of loans," says Bill Lewellen, owner of Lewellen Construction. "I've just recently talked to Am-West here in Midland. They are now offering home improvement loans at 9 to 12 percent interest depending on the size of the loan and the duration. They've also speeded the process up, so homeowners can get their loans quickly."

Lewellen has 16 years of experience in the siding, storm window installation and window replacement business. For the past 10 years, he has worked exclusively in the Midland-Odessa area. The craftsmen he employs have all been with him from between four and eight years. So it's no wonder area residents have come to trust and depend upon the skill, professionalism and longevity of Lewellen Construction.

Literally hundreds of area residents have turned to Lewellen Construction not only for siding, replacement and storm windows (which his company custom builds), but also for gutters and carport construction and installation.

One of the reasons homeowners depend on Lewellen Construction is the installation warranty that the company offers. The siding installed by Lewellen Construction not only carries a lifetime warranty on the material itself, but an installation warranty that lasts as long as the purchaser owns the home.

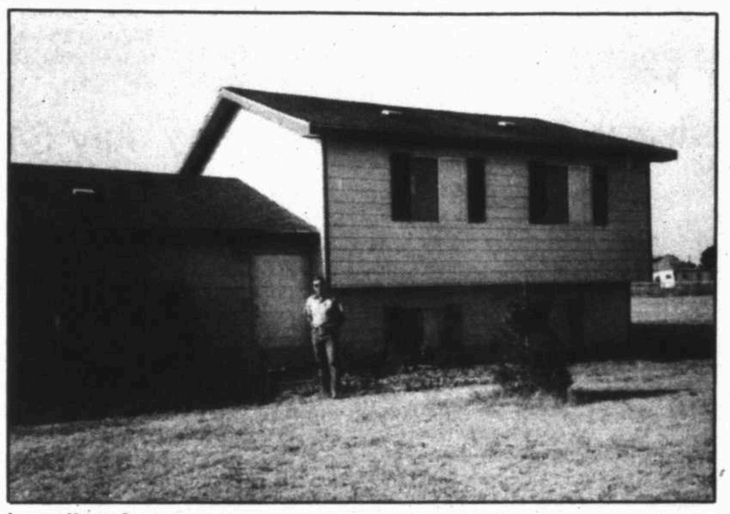

"Steel siding comes with a lifetime warranty," Lewellen said. "If it's properly installed, there's no reason it shouldn't last that long. That's why we've attached our own installation guarantee. I have absolute confidence in our experience and expertise."

Another Lewellen Construction enterprise is the seamless aluminum guttering that they manufacture themselves. "We build it right on the job site to custom lengths," Lewellen said. "The guttering is completely seamless from corner to corner — which, of course, eliminates leaking joints."

The guttering can be ordered in a large variety of colors to match or complement the home's color.

The benefits of guttering are obvious. It protects flower beds from too much rain and subsequent damage to plants. It protects the home itself from discoloration and deterioration.

For a free estimate on siding, replacement and storm windows, guttering and/or carport installation, call Lewellen at 686-8007 or 563-4520. Lewellen Construction is located at 410 East County Road 130 — just four miles south of downtown.

Lewellen Construction recently replaced all the siding, soffit and fascia to give this home, located on East County Road 139, a great, maintenance-free face lift.

Weigh of Life offers physician-managed reducing programs

The philosophy at Weigh of Life is that a long productive life is dependent on maintaining a proper diet and ideal weight, regular exercise and proper management of stress. There are many benefits to reaching ideal weight including lowering of blood pressure, reduction of cholesterol and triglycerides, and reduced work load for the heart. There are also the additional benefits of looking and feeling better.

"I'm a people person, but when I was fat I was very apprehensive, other people made me feel uncomfortable. I even felt like no one wanted to talk to me," says successful Weigh of Life dieter Cheryl Hollis. Since starting the Weigh of Life program five months ago, Ms. Hollis has lost 39 pounds and 17¼ overall inches.

"I was taking a prescription drug that made me put on about 10 pounds a year. I finally stopped taking that medicine but found myself 40 pounds overweight," Ms. Hollis said.

"When I decided to diet I chose Weight of Life because I could be under a doctor's care and that made me feel more comfortable," she said. "Also, the diet involves only regular foods and that appealed to me. I love to eat, and there are some foods you can have unlimited amounts of. Plus, because Weigh of Life is doctor supervised, I was able to get appetite suppressants that really helped. I couldn't have lost the weight if I'd felt hungry all the time."

When dieters enroll in the Weigh of Life program they are given an EKG, a series of blood tests and a general physical to rule out any abnormalities that would be adversely affected the weight reduction plan. A physician consultation is then carried out to review medical history and set the weight goal. Medication (FDA approved appetite suppressants) may or may not be prescribed depending on individual need and amount of weight to be lost.

The Weigh of Life promotes a minimum weight loss of four pounds per month. Most patients actually lose in the range of four to eight pounds per month, with the exception of the first month when patients lose a little more.

This is not a crash diet program. The program uses regular grocery store food and stresses gradual but steady weight loss.

"I'm so much happier now," Ms. Hollis said. "I know I look good and it's nice to get attention."

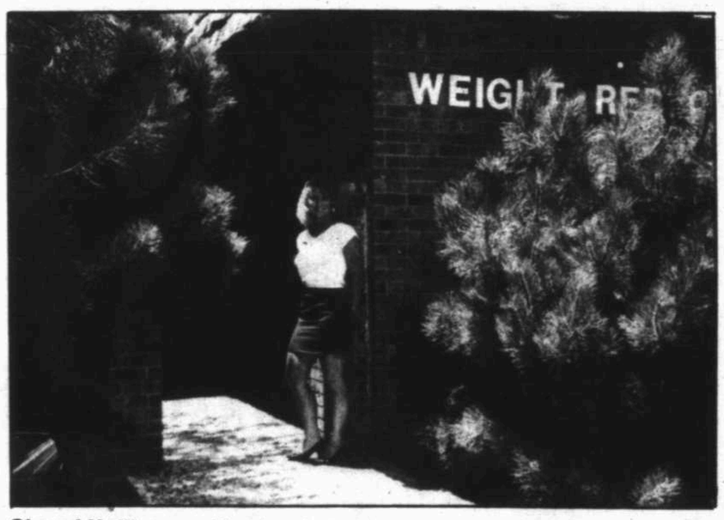

Included in the program is a monthly consultation with a physician to monitor the use of diet medication as well as examine monthly weight loss. This also allows the physicians to establish a standard of care followed at all Weigh of Life Clinics.

Weigh of Life Clinics also offer a maintenance program. And, previous dieters can reenter the program any time they want.

"It's nice to know they'll always be here for me," Ms. Hollis said.

The Weigh of Life Clinic was created by Drs. Gary Albertson and Bill Davison. "We wanted to develop a method of losing weight that used regular, grocery store bought food," Davison said. "After all, that's what the patients are going to be eating for the rest of their lives."

Weigh of Life has clinics in Midland, Monahans and San Angelo. Locally they can be found at 3107 N. Big Springs. Drop in or call 682-LIFE for more information.

Cheryl Hollis proudly stands in front of The Weigh of Life Clinic at 3107 N. Big Spring in Midland. She has lost 39 pounds and 17¼ overall inches in the last five months.

San Antonio's Boys Town produces success stories

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Accepting criticism was one of the first principles Alfonso Rodriguez learned when he walked through the doors of Boys Town in Nebraska in 1985.

The program's emphasis on politeness and good manners were difficult to grasp for a 12-year-old who had been abandoned by his parents in a Laredo orphanage six years earlier.

In 1990, Rodriguez came to San Antonio's version of Boys Town, where he still had some maturing to do.

"I almost got kicked out. ... We started going to some places we weren't supposed to," Rodriguez, now 18, said half-jokingly of the bars on St. Mary's Street. "They gave me a lot of chances."

Rodriguez, a robust and athletic-looking young man, is one of 84 youngsters cared for by San Antonio's Boys Town since it was founded in 1987.

The city's Boys Town chapter, the only one in Texas, operates five long-term residence homes for both boys and girls.

Troubled youngsters are referred to Boys Town by the courts, state and city agencies, or by private or voluntary placement.

One of the program's success stories is Rodriguez, a 1992 graduate of Marshall High School who plans to study languages and hotel management at UTSA this fall. He now helps younger residents cope.

"I try to be a role model, for them to do things right," he said.

To keep up with the demand for its services, Boys Town dedicated a new emergency youth shelter last month.

It stands out as a modern, spacious facility that serves as a short-term home for up to 16 youths at a time.

Opened last December, the former day-care center on 503 Urban St. near downtown was remodeled and styled to simulate a home.

Since December, the shelter has served 99 youngsters ages 10-18. Three hundred children are expected to use the facility each year.

"We try to make it as homelike and as less threatening as possible," said Rick Culp, Boys Town director for San Antonio.

The shelter's interior is painted with soft, peach colors. Brown sofas and tables line the walls along with a television, a Nintendo game set and a pool table. To give the staff a constant view of youngsters, few walls divide the interior or recreation rooms from the kitchen.

Michael, 13, arrived at the shelter more than a month ago after "not doing too good in school and getting in trouble with the police."

With a rapid-fire voice and a wide-eyed look, Michael began to relate his story. "I was involved with gangs and drug trafficking," he said, talking with street savvy. "I thought I wasn't good enough to get out of it."

Michael said he now can see things from a different perspective because of the skills he learned at Boys Town.

"I would find the best possible solution that I could come up with," he said, when asked whether he would return to the streets.

Another Boys Town program — parenting skills classes — aims to enhance and stabilize family relationships so that children can be reunited with their families.

Broadcast consultant prefers to remain behind the camera

DALLAS (AP) — For a dozen years, Lynn Wilford Scarborough has criticized her clients — and they keep coming back for more.

Ms. Scarborough has coached, primped and polished some of the best known in the broadcast field, including Paula Zahn of "CBS This Morning"; Debbie Norville, former co-host of NBC's "Today Show"; and Forest Sawyer of ABC's "Nightline."

She has worked with more than 150 news organizations nationwide and was the personal coach for all of the CNN anchors. Ms. Scarborough has been retained by all three network affiliates in Dallas, as well as stations in every major city in the state.

Once a freelance television reporter in the late 1970s, Ms. Scarborough now prefers to stay behind the camera helping others.

"The best part is making them better," she says of her clients. "It's so rewarding to see people grow and improve. You know that you made a difference."

As president of Dallas-based Wilford Scarborough Communications, Ms. Scarborough has worked with politicians, firemen, doctors and prominent sports figures including Tony Dorsett and Isiah Thomas. Although the projects and professions of her clients differ, their goal is the same — to improve their on-camera skills.

"I deal with both the qualified journalist and the non-professional. Each are at a different level of experience, but good communication is the same," she says. "Lawyers, doctors and politicians are the most difficult (to work with), but the harder they fight, the harder they fall."

'The best part is making them better ... It's so rewarding to see people grow and improve. You know that you made a difference.'

— Lynn Scarborough

Dr. David Winter, a medical news reporter for WFAA-TV in Dallas, said a fellow physician broadcaster led him to Ms. Scarborough.

"(He) said if you want to go anywhere in this business as a physician broadcaster, you need to contact Lynn Scarborough," said Winter, who was coached last summer. "She was very good. She helped me with presence in front of the camera."

Elliott Wiser, the news director for WTVR-TV in Richmond, Va., hired Ms. Scarborough in January and said she has assisted his entire on-air staff.

"We became No. 1 this year, and I think a lot of that is due to Lynn," Wiser said. "What Lynn does very well is she gets to understand each individual anchor. She understands their emotional, mental makeup and physical makeup, as well."

In addition to consulting, Ms. Scarborough of Fort Worth, produces corporate videos, commercials and feature films. Her latest project, which she created and produced, is a television show targeting families.

"Family Design" premiers Sunday on KDFW-TV in Dallas. The show, which includes programs on marital relationships, parenting skills and relationships with stepparents, will also air in San Antonio and five other cities this month.

"It's been something I've really wanted to do all my life," Ms. Scarborough says. "It's a show to build relationships within the family."

She is also creating "Mom's Corner," another family-oriented program that targets women with young children.

Ms. Scarborough says her direct involvement in television production gives her a unique insight when consulting.

"I am the only television news consultant in the country who has been doing it as long as I have who is an active producer, and that makes a big, big difference," she says.

Scooter's Plumbing: New law affects air conditioning repair cost

The Environmental Protection Agency's (EPA) 1992 Clean Air Act, which went into effect on on July 1, is having a widespread effect on air conditioning contractors and consumers.

In an effort to reduce depletion of the ozone, the act sets strict guidelines about refrigerant handling, cleaning and reusing. Beginning this month, intentional ventilation of refrigerants, such as Freon, is illegal. This means that all refrigerants removed from a system must be contained and properly disposed of, or recycled to required specification.

In the past, servicemen simply cut the refrigerant lines and let the refrigerant escape. Now, the serviceman must connect the refrigerant recovery equipment and capture all the refrigerant in the system. Only then can he begin to work on the equipment.

For the consumer, this will translate into higher prices for air conditioning repair, said Scooter's Plumbing air conditioning supervisor Tim Mabry. New recovery equipment has to be purchased and, since the technology is new, the cost of this equipment is high.

After the refrigerant is recovered, it must be put into a special Department of Transportation drum and returned to a depot that receives used refrigerant.

"We will no longer be able to add a little Freon to air conditioning systems," said Scooter's air conditioning technician Derek Rotan. "We have to empty all the Freon then find the leak. Obviously, it will take a great deal more time."

"Beginning next January the EPA will also require licensing and certification just to buy Freon," Scooter's supervisor Don Hughes said.

Although the cost of air conditioning repair will rise, consumers will ultimately benefit from cleaner, safer air.

Whether you require air conditioning, heating or plumbing repairs, consumers can count on the professionals at Scooter's plumbing. Like Scooter's supervisor Don Hughes, who has had 20 years plumbing experience. He said, "We're experienced, we've been here a long time, we'll be here every time you need us."

Then there's Tim Mabry, who specializes in service and repair of air conditioning and heating systems — he has nine years experience on the job. And you can also count on Derek Rotan, who has nine years experience in both plumbing and heating and air conditioning repair. Also, Cruz Sanchez, an excellent new construction and repair plumber, has recently joined Scooter's service team.

Besides repairing whatever problem caused a customer to call, the professionals at Scooter's will check to see if there are potential problems developing. By repairing them before they reach desperate proportions, Scooter's can save homeowners the price of a second service call. "Not to mention averting the difficulties of having something suddenly go wrong and causing even more damage, like flooding, in the future," Hughes said.

Plumbing, air conditioning and heating problems — be they large or small — are quickly and efficiently handled by the experienced professionals at Scooter's Plumbing.

And, Scooter's is available on a 24-hour-a-day, 7 day-a-week basis for emergency service. Why not give them a call at 682-5984. Scooter's Plumbing is located at 1101 W. Florida Avenue in Midland.

Standing behind their brand new refrigerant recovery system, which prevents Freon from leaking in the air and harming the ozone, are (from left) Derek Rotan, Tim Mabry and Don Hughes of Scooter's Plumbing. The EPA required the use of such equipment in air conditioning repair as of July 1 of this year.

DEAR ABBY

Many Orientals can't tell others' nationality

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: In reference to a problem you were asked to help with: I have a story that will make your correspondent feel much better about her inability to tell one Asian from another.

Van Buren

Chompoo, a sweet little Thai girl, lived in our apartment building while going to school in Washington, D.C. While shopping with her in one of the big department stores, we spied another Asian-looking girl, so we pointed her out and asked if that girl was also Thai.

Chompoo said she'd find out, so she went over to her and they exchanged a few pleasant words, introducing themselves. As it turned out, the other girl asked our Thai friend if she was Filipino.

Chompoo said that many times THEY can't tell one nationality from the other themselves, so how could we be expected to? We had people of all nationalities in our home nearly all the time and we enjoyed them all, but like you said, Abby, "Ask them — most of them are proud to tell you and will not take offense." — M.B.B. (RETIRED IN FLORIDA)

DEAR M.B.B.: Most, but not all. One reader wrote to say that she (out of curiosity) approached a gentleman with Oriental features and said, "My friend and I have a bet on. Where are you from?"

The gentleman replied, "Cincinnati."

DEAR ABBY: Several years ago, I saw a vase that caught my eye at a flea market, so I bought it for $20. It never seemed to fit anywhere in my home, so it ended up in the back closet.

Recently, while I was cleaning out the back closet, a couple of old friends stopped by. The wife saw the vase on the floor and admired it, so I gave it to her. She was very pleased and took it home.

A few days later, she called me — all excited. She said she had engaged a professional to come to her home to evaluate their possessions for insurance purposes, and the appraiser told her that the vase I had given her was worth several thousand dollars! She said that she and her husband had talked it over and decided that since I had given her the vase, they would leave it to me in their will — and if I predeceased them, it would go to my children. (I could tell by her tone that she thought she was being very generous.)

I am aware that I have no legal claim on the vase. Also, they did not have to tell me about the appraisal, or remember me in their will. However, had the situation been reversed, I would have returned the vase as soon as I learned of the appraisal.

Now I no longer feel friendly toward this woman. How would you have handled this? — JUST ASKING

DEAR JUST ASKING: I, too, would have returned the vase immediately upon learning its value.

AT WIT'S END

Not all women can wear what they see in the movies

By Erma Bombeck

All of you reading this column today have to make me a promise. If you should see me in public wearing a shiny, black catsuit a la Michelle Pfeiffer, have the decency to throw a rug over me.

Bombeck

Thanks to the popularity of "Batman Returns," retailers are reporting a buying surge of the one-piece apparel that adheres to the human skin like ugly wallpaper.

Why do American women do it? Why do they try to force buttered popcorn-fed bodies into outfits they see on the screen? This is not the first time movie fashions have spilled over into the mainstream.

I remember when Annie Hall appeared on film. Her fashion influence was felt everywhere. Women went home and rummaged through rag bags to retrieve clothes they had put aside and then wore them to parties.

Cybill Shepherd had us believing that wearing sneakers with dresses made a fashion statement. When she appeared in them at the Academy Awards, she gave women all over America permission to go around with ankles that looked like they could support bridges.

After viewing "Urban Cowboy," an entire nation of women marched out of the theaters and started to dress like the opening act of the Grand Ole Opry.

Remember the oversized, raggy T-shirt that wouldn't stay on both shoulders? That was introduced by Jennifer Beals in "Flashdance," and it's still with us.

Possibly the most extreme style to be lifted from the MTV screen was Madonna's bustier. I would have been willing to bet that wouldn't have played in Gary, Ind. I was wrong.

After "Basic Instinct" hit the big screen, I prayed that American woman would not look at Sharon Stone in her short, tight skirt and decide to copy it. Trust me when I tell you this is a style to be worn by a professional. Normal women should not try this in their own home. And yet, it is everywhere.

I don't remember women being such lemmings before. We sat through "Gone With the Wind" without rushing right out to buy dusty pairs of draperies and turn them into ugly dresses.

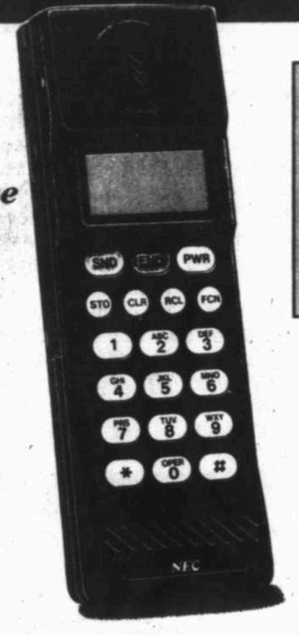

It's a strange world when women view "Batman Returns" and see themselves as Catwoman when most of them in the audience are built like the Penguin.

Fregosi safe

Fregosi, 50, replaced Nick Leyva on April 23, 1991, and led the team to a third-place finish. The Phillies are last in the National League East this season, 12 games out of first.

The Phillies, 74-75 under Fregosi last season, have slipped to 39-52 this season. They ended an 11-game losing streak Friday night and has won their last three games.

Fregosi, who had an 18-year major league career, had managed California from 1978-1981, Louisville in the American Association from 1983-86 and and the Chicago White Sox from 1986-88.

Schintzius cut

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — Center Dwayne Schintzius, who was sidelined much of last season by back problems, was cut from the Sacramento Kings roster Monday.

"It was a very difficult decision to make because we feel that Dwayne Schintzius was long-range potential," said Kings General Manager Jerry Reynolds.

The Kings acquired Schintzius last September after the 7-foot-2 center spent his rookie year with the San Antonio Spurs.

Betting relapse

CINCINNATI (AP) — The Cincinnati Rockers of the Arena Football League announced Monday that quarterback Art Schlichter, arrested last week for passing a bad check, has had a relapse of his compulsive gambling problem.

Rockers general manager Keith Sprunk said the team had been managing Schlichter's paycheck since late May, giving his wife $300 a week and putting the rest into an account to pay off Schlichter's gambling and other debts.

Barcelona still lazy - for now

By Rob Gloster
AP Sports Writer

BARCELONA, Spain — Sunbathers cavorted on the beach. Young friends read poetry in the shadow of the Sagrada Familia cathedral. Restaurateurs complained about a lack of tourists.

Though only five days remained until the start of the Olympics, life went pretty much as usual on a hazy, lazy Monday in Barcelona.

It was hard to tell the world's largest party was about to begin. There was no last-minute rush to complete construction, no final push to prepare for the onslaught of visitors.

"When the Olympics start, it will probably be much more noticeable," said Belen Mallou, a nurse. "There's lots of tourists now, but no more than usual."

Things were busiest at the 65,000-seat Olympic Stadium, where workers installed hundreds of lights and prepared the field for Saturday's opening ceremony. But elsewhere the pace was slower — workers cut grass, installed extra garbage cans and put the final touches on Olympic venues.

Barcelona could afford to relax because almost all stadium preparations were completed weeks ago. The 45,000 police and soldiers who will watch over Olympians and visitors also are in place.

Athletes continued to arrive Monday, but Olympic officials don't expect the real rush to begin until Wednesday. More than a third of the 10,000 athletes have been accredited so far.

The first of the 12 ocean liners that will be stationed in Barcelona's port were scheduled to float into place on Tuesday. They will house sponsors such as Coca Cola and provide housing for workers at NBC.

Almost all of Barcelona's hotels are putting out No Vacancy signs, but city officials said Monday they still have about 2,000 beds for youngsters available in public schools.

Most Barcelonans stuck to their normal routine Monday. At the modernistic Sagrada Familia, the unfinished Antoni Gaudi church that has become a symbol for the city, it was a typical summer day.

A bartender at the nearby La Palmera restaurant said things were slower this July than normal.

"There is less tourism and less work. It's very slow," said the bartender, who identified himself only as Carlos.

Barkley failing in manners

USA's Charles Barkley ...worth a quote anywhere

MONTE CARLO, Monaco — If Monaco's Olympic swimming team has an opening, Charles Barkley is ready to apply, although he may need to work on his royal protocol.

Barkley, whose colorful and controversial statements keep writers' notebooks full during the NBA season, has been in top form in Monaco's relaxed atmosphere.

Monaco's Prince Rainier, high prices and topless swimmers — not the U.S. Olympic basketball team — had Barkley's attention Monday.

"I'm quitting this team for the swim team," Barkley said. "I'm going to the pool as long as there are babes with no tops. You'll think I'm Mark Spitz before this week is over."

He was supposed to attend the team's practice in the afternoon but failed to appear.

"He didn't show up and I don't appreciate that, him standing us up," Barkley said. "They told us you can't touch him and you have to call him 'your majesty.' I haven't called anyone 'your majesty' since Harold Katz."

Barkley, however, did admit he had gotten some lessons in manners around royalty.

"They say you have to stop eating when he does," Barkley said. "But what if he's having a snack and you're starving? Do you have to eat fast?"

Barkley also remarked about the high prices in Monte Carlo.

"Twenty dollars for one beer," he said, shaking his head. "This is the place for alcoholics to come if they want to quit drinking."

Team USA, which is a prohibitive favorite to win the gold medal, plays its first Olympic game in Barcelona Sunday against Angola.

"All the guys have different levels of balancing vacation and playing," Johnson said. "Michael plays 36 holes or 18 holes of golf and it doesn't affect his game. I couldn't do that and still play.

"Whatever it takes for you to get ready, that's what you do. But we all need to understand that it's not just a vacation, it's work. It's business."

Cowboys' Emitt Smith ...gunning for 2,000 yards

Smith eyes 2,000 yards

By Denne H. Freeman
AP Sports Writer

AUSTIN — Run, Emmitt, run.

Emmitt Smith plans to do just that in 1992, all the way to 2,000 yards.

"That's my goal," said the NFL's 1991 rushing leader. "If I can average 125 yards per game for 16 weeks that's exactly 2,000 yards."

Smith rushed for 1,563 yards last year, becoming the first Dallas Cow-

Moon in camp, but without contract

■ Houston has its quarterback on the practice field, but not a name on the dotted line.

By Michael A. Lutz
AP Sports Writer

SAN ANTONIO — Warren Moon ended a 10-hour holdout early Monday and reported for the first Houston Oilers veterans' workout, setting aside a contract dispute that has lingered more than a year.

Moon, who arrived sleepy-eyed at 5 a.m., rested 30 minutes and went straight to the team's first full squad workout, surprising teammates and coaches.

Moon, who claims the Oilers still owe him $800,000 for a performance clause in his 1990 contract, said he decided to subjugate his personal problems for the team.

"If I was just going to play on the team it would be easy for me to sit home and take care of my own personal stuff," Moon said. "But I am a lot more important to the team than this individual stuff.

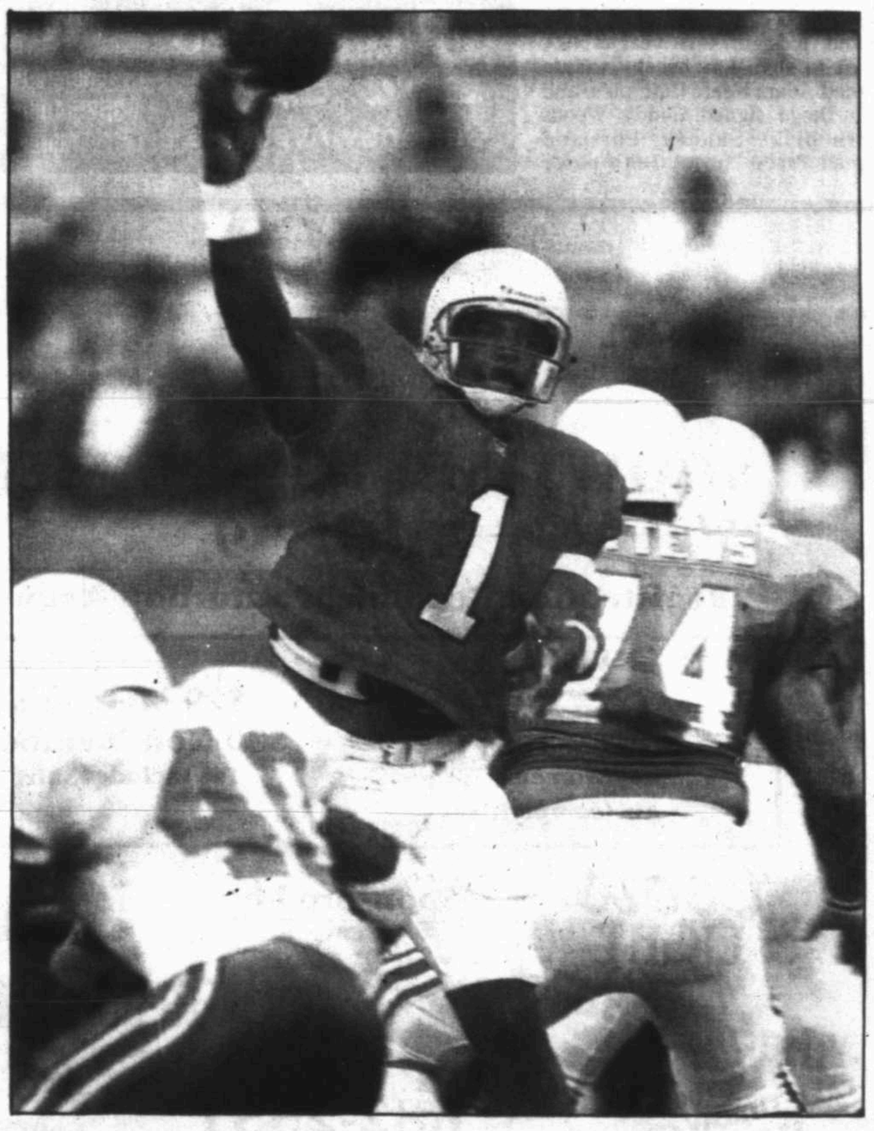

"I'm sacrificing my own personal situation for the good of the team. Hopefully the rest of it will work out."

Moon and the Oilers acknowledged that the dispute had not been resolved, but by mutual agreement, neither side would discuss the issue.

Although Moon has reported, six other Oilers, including five starters, became contract holdouts.

The list includes Pro Bowl performers, guard Mike Munchak, cornerback Cris Dishman and defensive end William Fuller. Starting free safety Bo Orlando, wide receiver Curtis Duncan and reserve linebacker Scott Kozak also missed the opening day of workouts.

Astros thump Pirates

Associated Press

HOUSTON — Rookie Eddie Taubensee hit his first major league home run, doubled, singled, drove in two runs and scored twice, leading the Houston Astros past the Pittsburgh Pirates 11-8 Monday night.

Ken Caminiti also homered, singled and drove in three runs as the Astros snapped a four-game losing streak. In its previous four games against Atlanta at home, Houston scored only four runs.

NL

There were six homers in the game, including three in one inning by Pittsburgh.

Trailing 7-6, Houston scored two sixth-inning runs off Roger Mason (2-5). Pete Incaviglia led off with his ninth homer to tie the score. Caminiti then walked, moved to second on a sacrifice, advanced to third on a single by Taubensee and scored the go-ahead run on Eric Anthony's fielder's choice grounder. Taubensee entered the game hitting .176.

Reds 5, Cubs 2

CINCINNATI — Bip Roberts' seventh-inning double tied the score and Barry Larkin's sacrifice fly put Cincinnati ahead, leading the Reds past Chicago for their fourth straight victory.

The rally spoiled a sharp comeback performance by Mike Harkey, who was making his first major league start since shoulder surgery in May 1991.

Harkey threw three-hit ball over five innings before giving up a leadoff triple and a walk in the sixth. Chuck McElroy (3-5) snuffed out that threat, but was charged with both runs in the seventh.

Expos 2, Giants 1

MONTREAL — Brian Barnes pitched three-hit ball over eight-plus innings and drove in a run with a sixth-inning single as Montreal beat San Francisco, sending the Giants to their fourth straight loss.

Barnes (2-2), who pitched at Triple-A Indianapolis until he was recalled June 20, struck out eight and walked two. John Wetteland got the last three outs for his 19th save.

Padres 2, Phillies 1

PHILADELPHIA — Fred McGriff's second-inning home run and ninth-inning RBI single gave San Diego Padres a victory over Philadelphia.

Tony Gwynn hit a one-out single in the ninth off Barry Jones (4-5) and raced to third on a single by Gary Sheffield. McGriff then singled scoring Gwynn with the go-ahead run.

Padres reliever Rich Rodriguez (5-2) pitched one inning for the victory. Randy Myers retired the Phillies in the ninth for his 16th save, getting Ruben Amaro to line out to second after loading the bases.

Dodgers 9, Mets 2

NEW YORK — Howard Johnson misplayed Mitch Webster's two-out fly ball to center field into a tiebreaking two-run triple in the eighth inning and Los Angeles beat New York, snapping a three-game losing streak.

Rangers fall to Brewers

Associated Press

MILWAUKEE — B.J. Surhoff hit a bases-loaded sacrifice fly in the bottom of the ninth inning Monday night, lifting the Milwaukee Brewers over the Texas Rangers 5-4.

Milwaukee, which scored three times in the eighth to tie it, won the game after Greg Vaughn, who homered earlier, led off with a walk from Edwin Nunez (1-3).

Robin Yount followed with a bloop single off second baseman Jeff Huson's glove. The hit moved Yount into sole possession of 18th place on the all-time hit list with 2,965.

The Brewers rallied in the eighth after Surhoff singled, finishing starter Bobby Witt. Scott Fletcher hit a fly ball that Gonzalez dropped for a two-base error and Pat Listach hit a two-run triple off Kenny Rogers. Nunez gave up Kevin Seitzer's sacrifice fly.

Yankees 1, Athletics 0

OAKLAND — Shawn Hillegas made his first complete game in 45 major league starts an impressive one, scattering five hits and leading the New York Yankees over Oakland.

Hillegas (1-3) had not won as a starter since Sept. 16, 1989, while with the Chicago White Sox. He walked two and struck out five in his third start of the season for the Yankees.

Ron Darling (8-8) was the hard-luck loser. He gave up seven hits, and has pitched three of Oakland's five complete games.

Indians 5, Twins 1

MINNEAPOLIS — Dennis Cook made a strong case for a permanent spot in Cleveland's starting rotation, pitching the Indians past Minnesota.

Cook (3-5) allowed one run on eight hits in 6⅓ innings. He struck out four and walked none.

Cook has bounced between the rotation and the bullpen throughout the season. He is 2-0 in his four starts since June 28.

Steve Olin pitched the final two innings for his 17th save. The Indians broke it open with three runs in the ninth against relievers Bob Kipper and Carl Willis.

American League

Orioles 3, White Sox 2

CHICAGO — Tim Hulett singled home the go-ahead run in the 12th inning and Baltimore beat Chicago.

Randy Milligan, whose RBI single capped a two-run rally in the ninth, drew a leadoff walk in the 12th from Roberto Hernandez (3-2). Joe Orsulak followed with a double and, one out later, Hulett singled.

Pat Clements (1-0) pitched 1⅔ scoreless innings for the victory. Gregg Olson got three outs for his 23rd save.

Charlie Hough, bidding for his 200th career victory, shut out Baltimore on four hits for eight innings. But Scott Radinsky and Bobby Thigpen could not hold a 2-0 lead in the ninth, and an error and hit batter set up RBI singles by Glenn Davis and Milligan.

Red Sox 5, Royals 3

KANSAS CITY — Tom Brunansky doubled, tripled and drove in three runs, helping Paul Quantrill win his major league debut as Boston rallied past Kansas City.

Quantrill, 6-8 at Triple-A Pawtucket, relieved starter Danny Darwin starting the sixth pitched 2⅔ scoreless innings. He gave up two hits and struck out three.

Tigers 6, Mariners 4

SEATTLE — Lou Whitaker's checked-swing single put Detroit ahead during a four-run seventh inning that led Walt Terrell and the Tigers past Seattle.

Terrell, making his first start since May 6 after 17 relief appearances, allowed three runs on seven hits in six innings. He struck out three and walked three.

Terrell improved to 11-4 lifetime against the Mariners, including five straight victories. Kurt Knudsen pitched the ninth inning for his fourth save.

Eckersley second best paid reliever

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Dennis Eckersley, who has the best statistics of any reliever, became only the second-highest paid closer when he agreed to a two-year extension with an option for a guaranteed $7.8 million.

Eckersley, who could have been eligible for free agency after this season, gets a $750,000 signing bonus and $3,375,000 in each of the 1993 and 1994 seasons under the deal announced Sunday. The Athletics have an option for 1995 at $4 million with a $300,000 buyout.

The deal trails the one agreed to March 13 between John Franco and the New York Mets. Franco gets $3.5 million for each of the 1993 and 1994 seasons and a $1 million signing bonus.

"Who knows what money is out there?" Eckersley said. "It doesn't really matter, though. I feel indebted to the A's because of what they did to my career."

An All-Star in four of the past five seasons, Eckersley has saved 215 games for Oakland since being acquired from the Chicago Cubs. Since 1988, he has saved 30 or more games in each season with a high of 48 saves in 1990, which may be the best season a relief pitcher has had.

In 1990, Eckersley went 4-2 with an 0.61 ERA. He gave up only 41 hits and walked only four batters in 73⅓ innings.

Oakland manager Tony La Russa has been careful to keep most of Eckersley's appearances to one inning or less, a factor the reliever considered when he decided to bypass the free agent market.

"If I go somewhere else, they might expect me to pitch two innings," Eckersley said with a smile.

NEW YORK (AP) — Contracts for relief pitchers with the highest average annual values. Figures were obtained by The Associated Press from player and management sources and include all guaranteed income but not income from potential incentive bonuses:

| Player, Club | Years | Avg. Salary |
|---|---|---|
| John Franco, NYM | 1993-94 | $4,000,000 |
| Dennis Eckersley, Oak | 1993-94 | $3,900,000 |
| Bryan Harvey, Cal | 1992-95 | $3,875,000 |
| Mark Davis, KC | 1990-93 | $3,250,000 |
| Dennis Eckersley, Oak | 1991-92 | $3,000,000 |
| Bobby Thigpen, WSox | 1991-93 | $3,000,000 |

Rockets sign No. 1 draft pick

HOUSTON (AP) — The Houston Rockets have signed their No. 1 draft choice, Alabama forward Robert Horry, to a 5-year contract, the NBA club announced Monday.

Contract terms for the 6-9, 220-pound Horry, taken with the 11th pick of the draft, were not released.

Horry became the fourth first-round pick in this year's NBA draft to sign. Last week, Atlanta signed Adam Keefe (10th pick) and San Diego signed Randy Woods (16th pick). Sunday, Portland signed Tracy Murray (18th pick).

Midlanders place second

TEMPLE, Tex. — Rainbow Carpets of Bryan came through the loser's bracket and defeated Midland's Ridgewood/George Brothers team twice to take the 1992 ASA Women's State Slowpitch crown.

Ridgewood/George Brothers was undefeated going into the finals after having beaten the Bryan team 8-7 in an earlier game. Rainbow Carpets used defense to win both games in the finals, 6-2 and 12-7.

Theresa Dickey, Sherry Stokes and Melissa Tollin of the Midland team were picked for the All-State team for their outstanding play.

By finishing second in the state tournament, Ridgewood/George Brothers runs its season record to 50-13. The Midland team also clinched a host team berth in the Women's Class A National Tournament, which will be in Midland Sept. 4-7.

The Odessa Aces placed third in the state tournament and calimed the other open berth in the national tournament.

SMITH: Pokes Emmitt's team

for 1,563 yards last year, becoming the first Dallas Cowboy ever to lead the league. He carried 365 times for an average of 4.3 yards per try.

For Smith to become the first NFL player to reach 2,000 yards since Eric Dickerson did it for the Los Angeles Rams in 1984, it would require 100 more carries for Smith at his current average.

"I only had two long runs last year and I think I can have more long ones, which would help my average," Smith said. "It's something I would like to accomplish because I set my goals high. If I stay healthy I think I have a good chance."

Reminded that too many carries have burned out some NFL backs, Smith said his running style prevents his body from taking a beating.

"Earl Campbell basically ran over everybody in his way," Smith said. "I try to avoid every contact possible. Tony Dorsett didn't give up any clean knockout shots.

"Jim Brown has scoffed at runners who run out of bounds and that was fine for him. But I intend to be great my own way and avoid contact."

Smith said he could recall only three solid hits on him last year, twice against Cleveland and once against Phoenix.

"Of course I would love to get spelled in some games because if I'm asked to carry 360 times or more I would be taking risks in shortening my career," Smith said.

"I want to be ready to retire some day when I'm ready, not when my body tells me I have to retire. But I'm ready to carry the ball as many times as they want me to."

Smith, in the last year of a three-year contract, hopes to get a giant pay raise commensurate with his status as the NFL's top runner.

"I hope they come to be before training camp and get it over," Smith said. "I don't want to have any contract squabbles. "

Owner Jerry Jones has yet to sit down at the negotiating table with Smith.

"We'll just have to see what happens," Jones said. "Right now we're trying to sign nine veterans and get them to camp."

Smith was the Cowboys catalyst to an 11-5 regular season and a playoff berth. He rushed over 100 yards in eight games and matched Dorsett's club record of 12 touchdowns in a season.

Dorsett still owns the Cowboys single-season rushing record of 1,646 yards

MOON: Oilers' players relieved

(From 1C)

Cornerback Richard Johnson didn't report on time because of a problem with a portion of his contract and defensive end Sean Jones has announced his retirement from football.

The disputed portion of Moon's bonus clause is activated if he is among the top three passers in the league at the end of the season as he was in 1990. The bonus is computed based on the salaries of the other two top quarterbacks.

The problem arose over the computation of the bonus. The Oilers paid Moon a $1.5 million bonus but Moon and his agent Leigh Steinberg, claimed the figure should have been about $2.3 million.

Moon's contract runs through the 1993 season. It is fully guaranteed at an average $2 million base salary plus bonuses.

The bonus disagreement surfaced throughout last season and Moon said at one point that it affected his performance.

"I experienced it last year and at times I didn't like the way I played during the season and I just don't want to go through that again," Moon said. "That's why I didn't want it to get to this point but it is and now I have to deal with it."

The Oilers won their first AFC Central Division title last season and reached the second round of the playoffs under Moon's guidance.

He earned his fourth straight Pro Bowl appearance last season after leading the NFL with 4,690 passing yards and set an NFL single-season record of 404 completions and 655 attempts. He ranked fifth in passing efficiency.

Bucky Richardson, an eighth-round pick from Texas A&M, and Mike Elkins of Wake Forest have been manning the quarterback position until Sunday's arrival of the veterans.

Offensive coordinator Kevin Gilbride was most relieved to see Moon trotting onto the practice field.

"When he suddenly appeared this morning, it was a great uplift," Gilbride said.

East All-Stars beat West

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Shreveport's Adell Davenport hit a three-run homer with two out in the bottom of the ninth to cap a seven-run rally and give the Eastern Division an 8-6 victory over the Western Division in the Texas League All-Star game Monday.

Davenport's hit came off Wichita's Mark Ettles, who was charged with the loss after giving up seven runs in the ninth.

Davenport, who has 16 home runs and 69 RBIs, was named the game's most valuable player. Davenport edged out San Antonio's Matt Howard, who had three hits and three runs for the Western.

The Eastern got its first run in the eighth on Jose Oliva's RBI single. The Tulsa fielder had three hits in the game, including a RBI single in the ninth before Davenport's home run.

Tulsa's Kevin Belcher drew a walk to open the Eastern's ninth and scored when Jackson's Scott Makarewicz singled. Orlando Miller of Jackson later drove in a run with a fielder's choice and Shreveport's Pete Weber had a RBI single.

Jackson pitcher Todd Jones posted the victory after pitching one inning with a strikeout. Jones was the sixth pitcher overall and the third from Jackson to throw for the Eastern.

The Western took a 1-0 lead in the first when Midland's Jeff Kipila hit a RBI single, the third straight hit for the Western.

El Paso's Troy O'Leary and Kipila each had RBI singles in the stretch.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

TUESDAY, JULY 21, 1992

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Set some specific goals for yourself and get to work. A new car may be a necessity, not a luxury. An older person plays a major role in your career or financial success this coming fall. A long-term romance is launched in December. Early 1993 features a heavy travel schedule. Adhere to the letter of the law when negotiating agreements. Early detection of a health problem leads to a favorable outcome.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: novelist Ernest Hemingway, actor Robin Williams, violinist Isaac Stern, musician Cat Stevens.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You will need a smart outfit to wear to a power meeting. If there is not one in your closet, go shopping. A quick phone conversation will save you time and trouble.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Keep a secret and you will be richly rewarded. Good timing and the ability to meet deadlines are the key to success. You can work on your own terms and still satisfy higher-ups.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): The long hours you put in at work could worry your family. They are correct to be concerned. You need and deserve more play time! A social event will affect your financial future.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Good news arrives related to overseas investments. Pass up the temptation to compete with wealthier friends. You can expect to receive a reward or honor for past services.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A burden is lifted when willing associates help you handle a hectic work schedule. Trust your intuition when dealing with influential people. You could still receive compensation for a past disappointment.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Accept the necessity of settling down to work. You can accomplish a lot by keeping up a steady pace. Attention to duty impresses someone special.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Help comes from someone behind the scenes. An influential person is on your side and will share vital information. Volunteer your services to help the disadvantaged.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A change in domestic arrangements could be very beneficial. Consult other family members; make this a cooperative project. Beautifying your home adds to its real estate value.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): The emphasis today is on romance and new enterprises. Join forces with an older person on a creative project. People will notice you wherever you go today — dress in bold, bright colors.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Real estate negotiations and property values are in the spotlight. Working at home can be very productive. Do not trust to luck; make sure financial figures are correct.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A romantic relationship intensifies. Your uncertainty is tied up with your desire to move ahead and prove yourself. Your advice could help a person who is under pressure.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Roll up your sleeves and get back to business as usual. Running away from hard work is not your style. Be careful not to ride roughshod over a loved one's feelings.

TODAY'S CHILDREN are experts at gaining and wielding authority. Do not be surprised if they attain a powerful position at a youthful age. A talent for problem-solving will win these Cancerians respect from peers and elders alike. Their generosity to those in need is legendary. Although these romantic Cancerians want to marry, they loathe the dating game. They will probably walk down the aisle with someone they got to know through their work.

Opening lead: Jack of ◇

Beware of heretical statements that follow. We are about to shatter two of those maxims you love to quote when you talk about the game.

The auction was straightforward. South showed the four-card spade suit in response to North's Stayman inquiry, and the latter made an overly aggressive raise to game. Had the queen of clubs been the queen of hearts, North's jump to four spades would have been automatic—its value in the short suit rated to be wasted.

The opening lead was covered by the queen and king and won by the ace. Unfortunately, West had the ace of spades and used the entry to cash three diamond tricks—down one.

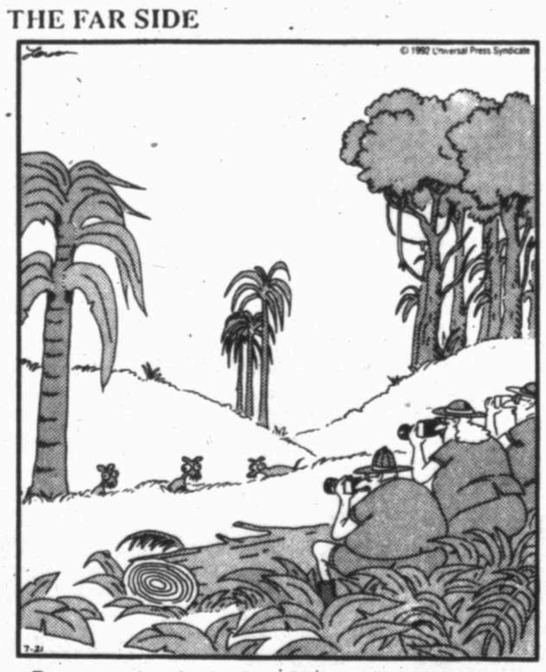

Now let's suppose that, at trick one, declarer forgets to "cover an honor with an honor." That fetches the king from East, declarer wins and leads a trump. West grabs the ace and reverts to the ten of diamonds. When declarer covers with dummy's queen, East will ruff away the winner and declarer must still concede two diamonds for down one.

Now let's toss another rubric into the flames. Since declarer can afford to lose two diamond tricks and a trump, suppose that South doesn't routinely "capture the king with the ace," but allows East's king of diamonds to hold. Sooner or later West will gain the lead with the ace of trumps and lead the ten of diamonds through the table's queen. Since the king of diamonds was a marked singleton (why else play it?), declarer simply follows low from dummy. If East ruffs, it's trumping declarer's losing diamond; if East does not, declarer wins the ace, draws trumps, maneuvering two club ruffs in dummy in the process, and loses only one more diamond.

Garth Brooks intends to spend time with his baby

PHOENIX — Garth Brooks says the birth of his newborn daughter may get him to retire, and certainly cut his touring schedule.

The 30-year-old country star, who was in Phoenix on Sunday for a concert, became a father on July 8 with the arrival of Taylor Pearl Brooks.

"The actual thought of retirement, just getting out for good, is very much in the picture right now because this daughter needs a father and my wife needs a partner to help raise her," Brooks said at a news conference before the show.

"The second that little girl popped out in this world ... the one thing that I hit on right away was, 'My God, all the things that you fought for, that you risked losing friends over, that you did all this stuff, you realize nothing is as important as human life,'" the country star said.

But he also told reporters and fans that, "next year, if there's a demand for GB, we'll be back."

For the time being, he said, he'll take more time off from touring, but gave no specifics.

Brooks' hits include "Friends in Low Places," and "Tomorrow Never Comes."

NEW YORK — Bobby Sherman, the singing teen-age heartthrob of the late 1960s, is now a certified emergency medical technician in Encino, Calif., and the father of teen-age sons who have a band of their own, People magazine reported.

In a special "Where Are They Now?" section in its July 27 issue, the magazine says Sherman, 47, is still recognized by fans when he's on the job as a paramedic.

He says his string of pop hits such as "Easy Come, Easy Go" and his work in TV shows like "Here Come the Brides" left him financially comfortable and he works by choice. Becoming a paramedic, he says, grew out of learning "what to do if one of my kids fell out of a tree."

Sherman, who was divorced in 1981, has two sons, Chris, 19, and Tyler, 18.

NEW YORK — Marla Maples' publicist, charged with stealing shoes from her bedroom, said he failed his client and her business tycoon boyfriend, Donald Trump.

"Donald and Marla — I love them both. As far as I'm concerned, I've failed them both miserably," Richard Jones told the New York Post.

Jones was freed on $5,000 bail Friday after pleading innocent to charges he stole at least 40 pairs of Maples' high heels.

He was arrested Wednesday after a video camera in Maples' bedroom closet — installed because shoes kept disappearing — allegedly recorded him taking the shoes, said Assistant District Attorney Jacqueline McCormick.

Police found some of the shoes in Jones' office, along with a copy of a pornographic magazine called "Spike," which caters to an audience with shoe fetishes.

The Post said Jones called the newspaper from his jail cell to admit he had taken the shoes and to beg forgiveness.

Jones had represented Maples for about seven years.

BATON ROUGE, La. — Gov. Edwin Edwards said he bought a 590-acre ranch in southern Mississippi as an investment.

In April, the governor bought the ranch, located about four miles north of Poplarville, from the estate of Bill Watson, a New Orleans car dealer.

Edwards

Edwards refused to disclose the price.

Edwards said he is keeping his ranch in west-central Texas, where he likes to hunt.

NEW YORK — "Pretty Woman" star Julia Roberts and her boyfriend, actor Jason Patric, have a new pet — a Chinese potbellied pig, according to People magazine.

The weekly says in its July 27 issue that the pig "was Jason's idea, and Julia went along with it." The animal lives in the couple's Hollywood bungalow, the magazine said.

The name of the pig was not immediately available, but sources close to the couple report it is housebroken, the magazine said.

LOS ANGELES — Sylvester Stallone was injured Monday doing his own stunts in Italy for the film "Cliffhanger," but the "Rambo" and "Rocky" movie star was stitched up and back to work in 90 minutes.

The actor was hurt on a studio stage while climbing atop a helicopter supposedly dangling upside-down over a cliff.

Stallone

"As he was climbing over to get on top of the bottom of the helicopter, he gashed his right hand and ended up going to the hospital and getting nine stitches," said unit publicist Peter Silberman. "It was a very deep gash. But he was back at work in an hour and a half."

Stallone returns to the action-thriller film genre in "Cliffhanger," which co-stars John Lithgow and is to be released next spring. "Die Hard 2" director Renny Harlin is calling the shots.

STOCKQUOTE HOTLINE

WHAT IS STOCKQUOTE HOTLINE?

Stockquote Hotline gives you the latest stock prices direct from the wires of the Associated Press. Over 9,000 stocks are listed from NYSE, AmEx, and OTC sources; all available 24 hours a day. You can receive up to 10 quotes with one easy phone call.

HOT TO USE STOCKQUOTE HOTLINE:

1) Call the Stockquote Hotline at 560-2400; enter the category number which is 9988.
2) You will be asked to enter your stock ticker symbol. These are based on industry-standard symbols, which can be found in a Standard & Poor's Ticker guide, or by calling your local stock broker.
3) Once you've entered the numerical code for the ticker symbol, press the Star Key (*) and you will hear the current price and net change from the last Associated Press update; which is a few minutes behind market activity.
4) After the stock is quoted, you will be asked to enter another ticker symbol. You now have 2 options:
   * You may request a quote for another stock by repeating steps 2 & 3.
   * You may request additional information on the stock just quoted by once more pressing the Star Key (*).

Now the volume, high and low will be given, and then you will be asked to enter another ticker code.
   * You may enter up to 10 ticker symbols per call.

5) To exit Stockquote Hotline, simply hang up the phone.

Oil prices rise

NEW YORK — Oil prices rose Monday, strengthened by U.N.-Iraqi tensions that intensified speculation about a military move against Saddam Hussein.

Traders who had gambled energy prices might weaken were forced to buy to limit their losses. The buying strengthened the market even more in what's known in trading parlance as a short-covering rally.

The August-delivery price of West Texa Intermediate settled at $21.79 a barrel on the New York Mercantile Exchange, up 21 cents from the Friday close. Refined products traded on the exchange also rose.

Bell earns more

ST. LOUIS — Southwestern Bell Corp. said Monday profits rose sharply in the second quarter, the fourth straight quarter of double-earnings growth.

For the three months ending June 30, net earnings were $305 million, or $1.01 a share, up 76 percent from $173 million, or 57 cents a share, for the same period a year ago.

Dollar climbs

NEW YORK — The dollar closed sharply higher Monday after the Federal Reserve and other central banks barreled into the market to stop the U.S. currency's decline.

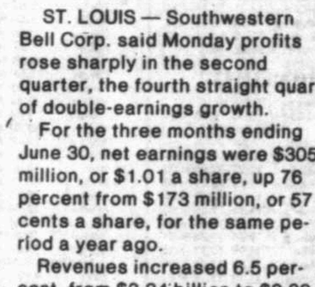

The greenback, which has plunged in recent weeks, dipped close to historic lows against the German mark Monday, prompting the Fed to buy dollars, dealers said. The U.S. central bank entered the market when the dollar had fallen to about 1.4525 marks, a pfennig above its record low of 1.4425 marks, set Feb. 11, 1991.

Market falls

NEW YORK — Stock prices fell again Monday, resuming last Friday's slide under pressure from worries about corporate earnings and political uncertainties.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials dropped 28.64 points to 3,303.00, on top of a 29.99-point loss on Friday.

Assessment unlikely to cheer Bush

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — When Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan delivers his midyear assessment of the economy today, no one will be listening more closely than George Bush.

But analysts said Monday that Greenspan's congressional testimony may provide little comfort to a president who has seen his standing in the polls plummet along with the economy.

Many of them said they expect Greenspan to deliver a rather somber forecast, predicting that the recovery will strengthen in coming months but that economic growth will remain anemic, at rates less than half of what is normal in a typical upturn.

"Greenspan will emphasize that he is trying to ease credit enough to keep the economy from going into a nosedive and achieve at least a modest amount of growth. Under the circumstances, that is the best he can do," said David Jones, an economist at Aubrey G. Lanston & Co.

Such a forecast is not likely to sit well with Bush as he faces an election less than four months away. The president has said he expects his standing in the polls to improve as the economy does, but recent economic news has been uniformly bad.

The unemployment rate — the most politically sensitive of all economic barometers — has shot up by 0.6 of a percentage point in the past two months, reaching an eight-year high of 7.8 percent.

When the latest bad jobless report was issued July 2, the Fed acted within minutes to cut its discount rate, the interest it charges banks, to a 29-year low of 3 percent.

Economists said they don't rule out further rate cuts, but only if the economic news remained on the gloomy side — not a pleasant prospect for Bush.

"The Fed will look like it has its head in the sand if Chairman Greenspan doesn't take serious note of the recent data that has been so negative," said Allen Sinai, chief economist of the Boston Co.

"There has been a distinct loss of momentum as we move through the summer, raising increasing questions over whether the economy is slipping back into recession," Sinai said.

Greenspan's comments will be made before the Senate Banking Committee as he releases the central bank's midyear report on the economy and monetary growth targets.

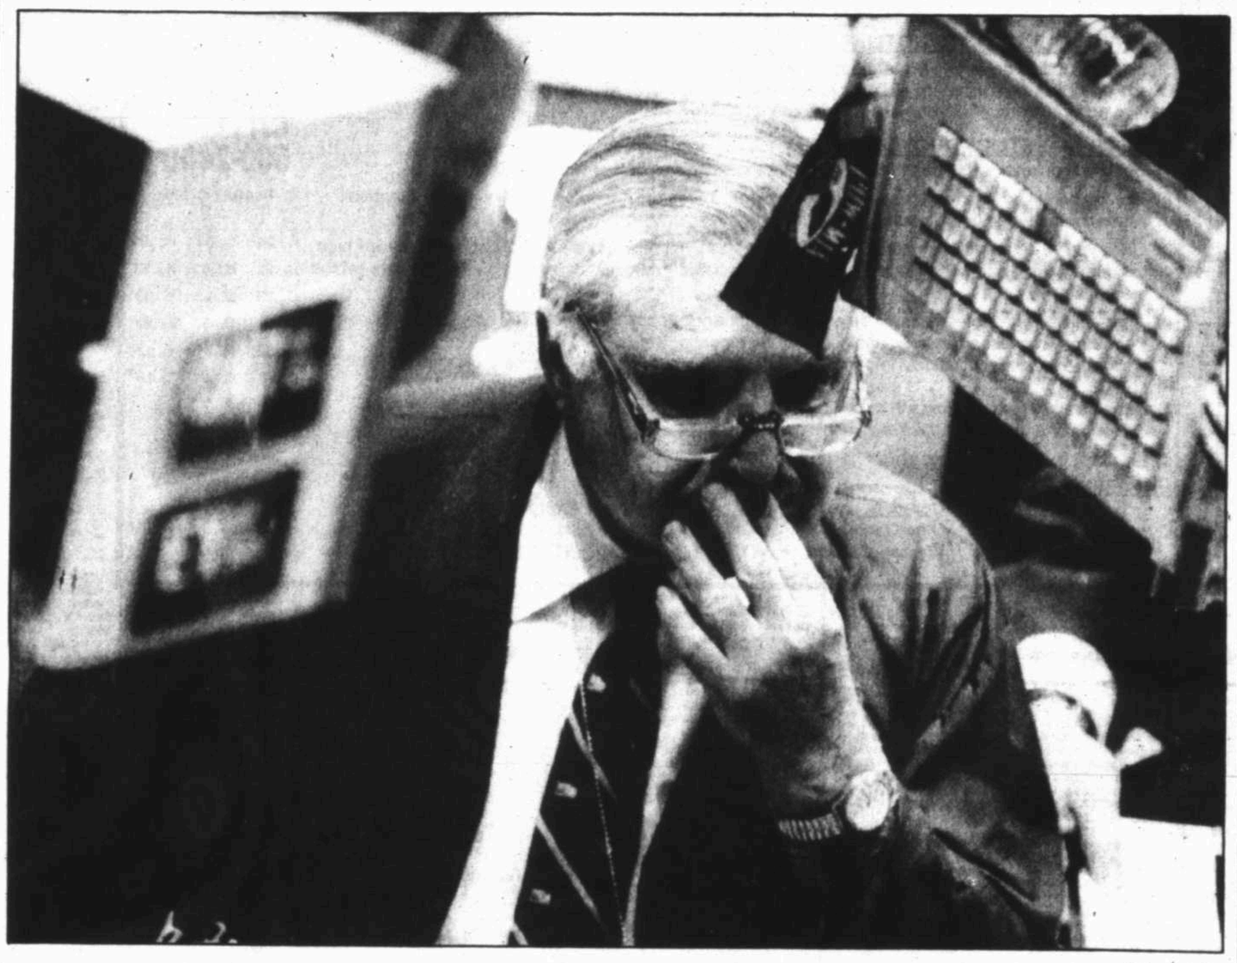

Analysts said one reason they believe Greenspan will avoid sounding too cheery is that events have not borne out his more optimistic forecasts of two previous appearances.

A year ago, Greenspan said he saw "compelling signs" that the economy was growing again. In fact, the recovery stalled out in the second half of last year. In February, Greenspan was a bit more subdued but still upbeat as he announced "we are beginning to see stirrings" of a recovery.

"Greenspan has lost a lot of credibility. I don't know how many times he can go before Congress and say things that are wrong," said Michael Evans, head of a Washington forecasting firm. "He has been forecasting a recovery for over a year and it hasn't happened yet."

Other analysts said the huge debt built up by consumers, businesses and the federal government during the 1980s limited the central bank's ability to turn things around simply by supplying cheaper credit.

Since the recession began in July 1990, the Fed has reduced interest rates 17 times but economic growth remains anemic.

State office holds 'hazard firm' program

By John Powers
Reporter-Telegram Austin bureau

AUSTIN — The Texas Workers' Compensation Commission temporarily has suspended its controversial Extra-Hazardous Employer Program after a reinterpretation of state confidentially laws by the state attorney general's office.

The suspension does not affect a separate but similar plan, called the "rejected risk" program, which identifies companies that have losses 25 percent greater than premiums paid into the state-run insurance pool.

Several West Texas employers were on the "rejected-risk" list of 776 companies with large workers' comp insurance losses in 1991. After the names were released in May, several companies complained that the criteria for being on the list was not representative of a company's safety record.

Legislators mandated the programs as part of the 1989 workers' compensation reform bill. They require employers identified by either program to hire a safety consultant and implement a comprehensive safety plan, or face large fines.

However, the attorney general's office has issued a re-interpretation of a state confidentiality statute to make it conform to the federal interpretation, the commission said.

The new interpretation stipulates that employer information may be released by the agency that gathered it only to the person or business that provided it.

The Extra-Hazardous Employers Program uses data from the Texas Employment Commission, and TEC uses federal funds in compiling the data. The national Bureau of Labor Standards has asserted that TEC's data is confidential under federal law.

Because of the potential problems created by using the confidential data, the 46 employers identified as extra-hazardous in May are not required to follow the program at this time, said Todd K. Brown, acting executive director of the commission.

However, the companies are "not altogether out of the extra-hazardous process," Brown said.

Mexican group fears effects of free-trade pact

By Debra Beachy
Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — Mexico is banking on a free trade agreement to attract foreign investment and create jobs, but some Mexicans are worried about the jobs and small businesses it could destroy.

The Red de Accion Frente al Libre Comercio, a network of community action groups, labor unions and women's groups, recently asked Mexico to suspend free trade negotiations until after the U.S. presidential elections.

The group fears that pressure to reach a deal quickly will force Mexico to give up too much in negotiations with the United States and Canada.

"We think that if Mexico keeps selling cheap labor, Mexican workers will have low salaries for years," said Berta Lujan, a union leader and director of the network. "We don't want the salaries of workers in Canada and the United States to come down. We want the salaries of Mexicans to go up."

Carlos Heredia, a public policy specialist for the Mexico City community action group Equipo Pueblo, said he worries free trade will speed up takeovers by large companies at the expense of small businesses.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Exercise caution when investing overseas

By Bill Doyle

Q: During a recent trip, I noted that banks in several foreign countries pay much higher interest on certificates of deposit and other accounts than is available in the United States.

Is it possible for me, a U.S. citizen, to invest in a foreign country? If so, would that be considered unpatriotic? What would be the shortcomings of such investments?

Doyle

A: You can invest in many foreign countries. Although some people might consider it unpatriotic, it's really not. After all, we do operate in a global economy. U.S. citizens have bank accounts and other holdings in foreign lands. And, as has been highlighted in the news, many foreign citizens, companies and national governments do the same thing here.

You're correct about interest rates being high in some — not all — foreign counties. Just remember the rule of thumb about higher interest usually carrying with it greater risk. Low interest normally entails less risk.

Let's say you invest $10,000 in U.S. dollars at 10 percent in a foreign CD. You will get $1,000 annual interest. But you will be paid in the currency of the nation where you have the CD. You will have to exchange that currency for dollars.

If the value of the U.S. dollar rises against the foreign currency, your annual interest will work out to less than $1,000 in U.S. dollars. And, when your CD matures, you will get fewer than 10,000 U.S. dollars back.

Of course, if the U.S. dollar falls in comparison to the foreign currency, just the opposite will happen and you will come out further ahead. You would receive more than 1,000 U.S. dollars as interest and get more and 10,000 U.S. dollars when the CD matures.

But the second outcome should be considered unlikely.

Another big risk of investing overseas is that most foreign countries do not have the equivalent of our Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. coverage and or U.S. securities laws.

If you go for foreign investments, be prepared for tax withholding on interest and/or dividends in many countries and complications in filing your U.S. income tax returns.

Q: In preparation for a trip to Europe, I went to the foreign exchange desk of a very large bank to swap U.S. dollars for currencies of the countries I plan to visit.

I did not receive the amount of those currencies shown in newspaper "foreign exchange" tables that morning. Can you explain why?

A: There are two basic reasons.

First off, foreign exchange rates can change day to day, hour to hour and, even, minute to minute. The rates of exchange printed in newspapers are for the previous business day's transactions.

More importantly, printed foreign exchange tables show the rates quoted by banks and other large currency dealers for amounts of $1 million and more. Smaller transactions result in fewer units of foreign currency per dollar.

So, unless you deal in huge amounts, you receive less than the posted numbers of French francs, German marks, Italian lira, Irish punt, etc., in exchange for your U.S. dollars.

Q: I have been entering sweepstakes run by magazine publishing houses and such. If I should be lucky enough to win $5 million, would it be best to take the money yearly or every three months?

A: In that more than unlikely event, get your hot hands on the money as quickly as the contest rules permit. You will probably learn you can't just take the money and run. Those sweepstakes regulations usually call for payments stretched over periods of time.

One more thing. Don't subscribe to or buy anything connected with any such contest. That's the only way to be sure of not losing anything other than the price of a postage stamp.

Group seeks Earth-friendly refrigerator

By David Dishneau
Associated Press

CHICAGO (AP) — The refrigerator bites the hand it feeds.

It sucks up 20 percent of the electricity used in a typical home, then refuses to go quietly to its grave.

Its innards and insulation contain ozone-destroying chlorofluorocarbons and its parts are made of an array of plastics and metals that bedevil recyclers.

Manufacturers have vastly improved the energy efficiency of refrigerators in the last two decades, but an environmental group and a national consortium of 23 electric utilities believe they can do much more.

They're offering a $30 million prize to the U.S. manufacturer that produces the leanest-running, Earth-friendliest fridge.

They hope to see on the market as early as 1994 a refrigerator that uses up to half the electricity of today's models, contains no CFCs and is more easily disassembled for recycling.

"The nice thing about this is that you can attack a number of areas of energy efficiency and environmental issues simultaneously," said Ralph Cavanagh, a co-director in San Francisco of the National Resources Defense Council's energy program.

The Super Efficient Refrigerator Program, conceived by his organization, is headed by Ray Farhang, product development manager of Southern California Edison Co., a $6 million contributor to the prize pot.

Cavanagh and Farhang said the super fridge would represent advances in four areas: electricity conservation, CFC reduction, recyclability and U.S. competitiveness.

Refrigerators consume 7 percent of the electricity produced in the United States, Farhang said. Any reduction in electricity production means less carbon dioxide and sulfur dioxide pumped into the atmosphere by coal-burning power plants.

"Finding ways to save electricity is the most powerful air pollution control strategy imaginable," Cavanagh said.

Fridge makers said that today's models use about half the electricity of those produced 20 years ago. Another 50 percent gain in energy efficiency would have a much smaller impact on the amount of electricity consumed.

"It's diminishing returns — the payback is not as great," said Tom Haenisch, manager of refrigerator product planning for Admiral, the Galesburg-based refrigerator-manufacturing division of Maytag Corp.

A CFC-free refrigerator by 1994 would beat by two years the federal government's deadline for phasing out those chemicals. But there is a cost involved.

Len Swatkowski of the Association of Home Appliance Manufacturers in Chicago said manufacturers are testing CFC substitutes that are as effective as the refrigerant CFC-12 but as much as 25 percent less efficient than CFC-11, a component of the insulating foam inside fridge walls and doors.

Manufacturers could compensate by adding more insulation but are limited by the size of the standard refrigerator slot in most homes.

Russian Embassy reflects changes

By Donald M. Rothberg
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The paintings on display in the embassy salon had religious themes and many of the artists were Russian emigres. During the bad old days, neither the artists nor their work would have made it past the heavy iron gate.

When the massive beige brick building on Sixteenth Street was the Soviet Embassy, religion was banned and emigres were traitors.

Boris N. Yeltsin is president of Russia and his country's embassy reflects the change that has occurred in the vast region that was the Soviet Union.

Some of the changes are cosmetic. The huge portrait of V.I. Lenin that dominated the stairway to the second floor is now in storage. The red hammer-and-sickle flag is gone, replaced by the red, white and blue Russian flag. The brass sign next to the door now reads, "Embassy of the Russian Federation."

Hardly cosmetic is the fact the country the embassy once represented has disappeared from the face of the earth.

Gone as well is its communist ideology and "we will bury you" attitude toward the West in general and the United States in particular.

When it was the Soviet Embassy, the staff handled all dealings for the several republics — 15 in all, one huge country.

Since the breakup of the Soviet Union, Ukraine, Armenia, and Belarus have opened their own Washington embassies.

Embassy Spokesman Georgi Oganov said the Russians help the other former Soviet republics on such matters as issuing visas and arranging official visits.

Two years ago, when Mikhail S. Gorbachev came to town as president of the Soviet Union, he followed tradition and stayed at the embassy, safe and secure Soviet territory in the capital of the Cold War enemy.

Not so Yeltsin. When he visited Washington last month, he stayed at Blair House, the U.S. government guest house just down Pennsylvania Avenue from the White House.

He hosted an embassy reception for Russian emigres. During the Soviet era, emigres were persona non grata. After all, they had fled oppression in their homeland.

"We were taught to be very, very cautious to those who once lived in our country," said Oganov. "The central understanding was they were all traitors."

All that has changed. The embassy regularly exhibits paintings by emigre artists.

Cellist Mstislav Rostropovich, who fled Russia and now is conductor of the National Symphony Orchestra, has performed at the embassy and was the first Russian living outside the country to receive the State Award of the Russian Federation.

"We want to bring these people closer to us," said Oganov.

It was the first and last Christmas party held by the Soviet Embassy.

That December night, Viktor Komplektov, the last Soviet ambassador, warmly greeted guests who included politicians, academics, journalists, businessmen, and even FBI Director William Sessions.

Less clear is whether another tradition survives — FBI surveillance of the embassy from an apartment across 16th Street. Asked if the apartment exists, the FBI responded with a firm, "No comment."

When the question was put to Oganov, he replied, "I think so."
