Reagan firm on sanctions

Speech on South Africa criticized by both parties

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's refusal to seek sanctions against the white-ruled South African government is being sharply criticized in Congress, with even Republicans saying legislation to cut most American economic ties with that country is now likely to pass.

Republicans and Democrats attacked Reagan's speech Tuesday in which he said sanctions "would destroy America's flexibility, discard our diplomatic leverage and deepen the crisis. To make a difference, Americans — who are a force for decency and progress in the world — must remain involved. We must stay and work, not cut and run."

Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and one of the chief congressional supporters of White House foreign policy, said, "I think the president needs to do more."

Lugar predicted guerrilla warfare in South Africa within the next "two or three months" unless Pretoria takes major steps toward ending apartheid, the system of legal segregation by which 5 million whites control the nation's 24 million blacks.

Lugar said he supports a limited package of sanctions. Those include refusing landing rights in the United States for South African commercial planes, freezing bank accounts of whites who try to move assets out of the country, and the closing of U.S. consular offices.

Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., said she was "deeply disappointed that the president chose not to announce a new direction for U.S. policy in South Africa."

Lugar said his panel will try to put together a sanctions bill in the next three weeks before Congress takes its August recess.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., called Reagan's speech "not only a disappointment but a disaster" and said the president gave "hope and sustenance to the forces of apartheid."

In the formal Democratic response, Rep. William Gray III, D-Pa., criticized Reagan's policy and said the president "protects Pretoria from the one weapon it fears most."

Just about the only support for Reagan was voiced by Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz., who said "the damage that can be done to the United States by these actions (sanctions) will far outweight any advantages that would come to both black and white people living in South Africa."

Whatever passes the Republican-controlled Senate will have to be reconciled with the bill passed by the Democratic-run House a month ago. The House bill imposes a total trade embargo and requires U.S. businesses to end their investments in that nation.

The House action came shortly after Pretoria imposed a state of emergency permitting arrest of blacks without charges for six months, strict press censorship and new restrictions on public meetings.

Reagan, as he has in the past, rejected the idea that sanctions will force Pretoria to change what he said is a system that is "morally wrong and politically unacceptable."

"Those who tell us the moral thing to do today is embargo the South African economy and write off South Africa should tell us exactly what they believe will rise in its place," he said in the speech to a White House audience of foreign policy experts.

"What foreign power would fill the vacuum if ties with the West are broken?" he said.

Car wash opposed

City defers zoning action

By LARRY HOLLIS
Staff Writer

With two commissioners absent, the Pampa City Commission deferred action Tuesday evening on a zoning change request regarding proposed construction of a new car wash in the north section of the city.

E. J. Hawkins has requested a zoning change from Retail District to Specific Use Permit for a 100 by 135 foot tract located north of the Wil-Mart convenience store in the North Crest Addition.

The property is under consideration for sale to Jack Bailey of Dalhart for construction of a $200,000 car wash.

During a public hearing at the regular commission meeting last night, Bill Apperson of Car Wash Systems at Fort Worth, said the car wash would be well constructed in a design that will be architecturally compatible with other businesses in the North Crest area.

Apperson said the car wash will feature brick walls, not the usual metal walls generally associated with car washes that often deteriorate over the years. The five-stall wash also would have a covered drying area that will be lighted at night, a spot free water system, a foaming brush to wash vehicles, mud pits and sand traps to keep debris out of the street and a turn-around for access back to the street.

He said Bailey has been in the car wash business for three years and "keeps (his buildings) spotless."

But representatives of the Western Sizzlin' steakhouse restaurant, located west of the proposed car wash site, opposed the construction.

Bill Gardner, who said he was the main owner of the local restaurant, said he doesn't "like a car wash at the front door." He claimed the car wash would not pay much in city property or sales taxes, while the restaurant pays $45,000 yearly in taxes.

Gardner also said he thought the car wash would hurt his business, adding he feared it would deteriorate over the years despite Bailey's present good intentions.

But Apperson said Bailey "makes his living from car washes" and is not likely "to let them go down." Apperson noted Bailey has a lot of money tied up in his businesses and the designs are better than the general car wash.

Jackie Young, operator of the Western Sizzlin', said she was "embarrassed" already by a nearby snow cone business and a motion video shop. She said such businesses, including the proposed car wash, are detracting aesthetically from other businesses in the area, adding that she preferred to keep the area "in a higher class."

It's rodeo time at White Deer

WHITE DEER — The beef is smoking in the earthen pit north of the rodeo grounds; the horses, calves steers and bulls are being rounded up and civic groups are planning their floats for a Saturday Parade.

It's rodeo time in White Deer and residents are already preparing for the three-day event which runs from Thursday through Friday. The performances will be held at 8 o'clock each night at the White Deer Rodeo Arena.

A pit barbecue, which includes some well-known industrial strength, fire-brewed black kettle coffee, will open the Thursday festivities at 5 p.m. Skydiving artists from Amarillo are expected to land in the rodeo arena at 7:30 p.m.

The Thursday rodeo will also include a pig scramble for the youngsters. Calves

Prince Andy takes a wife

LONDON (AP) — Prince Andrew married red-haired English commoner Sarah Ferguson today at Westminster Abbey to bugle fanfares, pealing bells and a nation's cheers in a spectacle that mustered the pomp and glory of Britain's 920-year-old monarchy.

To Britons, it was an invitation to put aside their troubles for a day and celebrate the sturdier values of their heritage, which is anchored by Europe's most popular and enduring monarchy.

Miss Ferguson, dressed in a beaded ivory silk satin gown, and Andrew, in full Royal Navy uniform, took their vows in firm, self-assured voices. She stumbled just once, on one of Andrew's four names.

Andrew, the queen's second son and fourth in line to the throne, gently slipped on his bride's finger a ring of gold from the same Welsh mine that provided the wedding ring for his grandmother in 1923.

"I pronounce that they be man and wife together," the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Most Rev. Robert Runcie, told the kneeling couple at 11.50 a.m. (6:50 a.m. EDT).

Then, with only their close relatives present, they signed the register and legally became Prince and Princess Andrew, the Duke and Duchess of York. The queen conferred the dukedom, usual title for a sovereign's younger son, on Andrew 90 minutes before the wedding.

The couple walked down the aisle, hands clasped, pausing for Sarah to curtsy to Queen Elizabeth II, while Andrew bowed to his mother. The new princess smiled broadly to her mother-in-law.

Church bells chimed as the newlyweds, both 26, approached the door, and a huge cheer went up as they emerged from the abbey and waved to the crowds. They mounted an open carriage — Andrew helped his bride gather up her 17½-foot train — and made a triumphal ride through London to Buckingham Palace.

More than an hour later, the newlyweds stepped onto the palace balcony and shared a tender kiss before hundreds of thousands of cheering spectators. During their brief appearance they smiled and waved, flanked by the queen and other members of the royal family and wedding party.

Andrew and Sarah reportedly were to jet to Portugal's Azores islands in the Atlantic later today for their honeymoon.

McLean discusses use of equipment

BY CATHY SPAULDING
Staff Writer

McLEAN — City officials learned Tuesday that it is legal, though bad policy, to allow city owned property to be used for private purposes.

At their regular meeting Tuesday, council members discussed whether a member of the McLean Volunteer Fire Department should have been allowed to use the city-owned fire truck to fill a local swimming pool.

Clarendon attorney Pat Slavin, who provides legal counsel for the city, said that filling a private swimming pool with a city fire truck is not illegal in itself, as long as the city allows other people to fill their pools with the truck and that it is not done as a "favor" to anybody. He added that such a practice should not compete with any area private business that may fill swimming pools.

"There is a statute keeping cities from competing with the private sector, but it is vague," Slavin said.

"Everything you do is somehow in competition with the private sector," he added, pointing out that even a city police force can be "in competition" with a private security company. "And there are lots of private roads in the area that are graded by county equipment because they're school bus routes. There is a public benefit."

"We assure you, that won't happen again," said Clifford McDonald, a member of the McLean Volunteer Fire Department.

Jim McDonald, who resigned as fire chief last week, could not be reached for comment this morning.

"He has resigned. That's all he has to say," a spokesman for McDonald said.

"If the city allows equipment to be used for personal use, the person must note that on their tax statement," Slavin added.

In other business, organizers of the city sponsored flea market reported that their first try this weekend was successful. Flea market organizer Mrs. "Sam" Green, reported that the city made $660 in booth rentals from the 29 exhibitors who participated. She reported that 1,300 people representing 12 states and 62 communities passed through the flea market doors.

City officials hope the flea market will be a successful monthly money raiser.

Members of the Pampa Army Air Field Renunion Association met for nearly three hours Friday, making plans for the event. The show is sponsored by the association in celebration of the 44th anniversary of the advanced twin-engine pilot training school opened here in 1942.

Over 40 World War II vintage planes are scheduled to fly in the show, with many other aircraft from that period on display. In addition, an aerobatic team will fly Christen Eagles and three B-25 Mitchell Bombers, including the Yellow Rose of Texas and The General, will fly in formation. Replicas of Japanese planes will make a simulated air attack.

The General received its name because it was chosen by U.S. Army Air Force Commander, Gen. Hap Arnold for his official use. It is the oldest B-25 still flying, the fourth one off the assembly line and the first one accepted for military service.

It was once owned by billionaire Howard Hughes and is now in the Fighting Air Command. B-25s were the only bombers used in every WW II combat zone and were Pampa Army Air Field advance trainers.

Organizations providing aircraft and support crews for the show include Mid-America Air Group, Fighting Air Command, Experimental Aircraft Association and Confederate Air Force units like the Razorback Wing, Cen-Tex Wing, West Texas Wing and the DEW Line Squadron. W.C. Ferguson Jr., a former Pampa air base pilot now of Magnolia, Ark., is coordinator of the show.

Representatives from each of these groups and the Federal Aviation Administration were on hand to answer questions at Friday's meeting.

Gates will open at 9 a.m. for display of the aircraft. Opening ceremonies are scheduled for 12:30 with a a flag raising ceremoney accompanied by a 100-member marching band. State Rep. Foster Whaley will be guest speaker.

For more information call 665-2526.

City commission

while not claiming specifically to be opposed to the car wash, said he hoped the city "can stem the way the area is being built up." He said too much variety of businesses are being allowed in the area.

The city should pay more attention to the types of buildings and businesses permitted in the area under zoning matters, Johnson said, to help keep property values up for those who have already located in the North Crest area.

Hawkins is having to request the specific use permit since car washes are not specifically permitted in a retail zoned area under present city ordinances.

Following the hearing, the commission approved the plat for the tract, listed as Lot 6-A, Block 1, of the Third Replat Section I North Crest Addition.

But Commissioner David McDaniel, noting the opposition and the absence of Commissioners Joe Reed and Bob Curry last night, moved to defer action on the zoning change request to allow for more study.

Commissioner Clyde Carruth, who seconded the motion, said he would like to view the site before making a decision. Mayor Sherman Cowan joined the two in the action to defer the matter to the next regular meeting.

Oil prices dip $2 a barrel

By The Associated Press

The drop in oil prices may mean American consumers will see some of the lowest heating bills in recent years when it comes time to put away their air conditioners in favor of sweaters and blankets, energy experts predict.

"We will see some of the lowest prices, not only from oil but from natural gas, too," Michael Smolinski, director of world oil service for Data Resouces Inc. of Lexington, Mass., said Tuesday.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, wholesale contracts for August delivery of West Texas Intermediate, the best-known U.S. crude, dropped $2 a barrel Tuesday to $11.07 per gallon. Home heating oil closed at 33.63 cents per gallon from the 35.56-cent closing Monday.

The 13-nation Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries will meet again July 28 to try to devise a system to limit production, estimated at between 19 million and 19.5 million barrels a day, to prop up prices.

Low-interest loans offered

AUSTIN (AP) — More than 1,000 buyers may land mortgage interest rates of $73 million for loans to low- and moderate-income homebuyers. The FHA-insured loans are 30-year fixed rate, said Melinda Magee, an agency spokeswoman.

To qualify for the program, an individual applicant must have an adjusted gross income for the preceding tax year of $33,000 or less, and a family can have a combined income of up to $42,000. The loans also require a minimum downpayment of 3 percent to 5 percent, officials said.

Borrowers in most of the state also must be first-time homebuyers or not have owned their principal residence in the past three years in order to qualify.

Ms. Magee said home price limits and maximum loan amounts are not available because they vary, depending on the provisions of the program.

Applications for the loans will be accepted at participating lenders starting Aug. 18, she said. Those interested in more information may call the housing agency at 512-472-7500 for more information, she said.

To file an application, a borrower must provide a copy of a valid sales contract on a house, copies of their 1983, 1984 and 1985 tax returns, credit information and pay a processing fee.

The last time the agency offered low-interest loans was November 1985, when it issued $111 million in tax-exempt bonds that guaranteed fixed-rate loans of 9.7 percent.

Ms. Magee said that in July 1985, the agency arranged for $176 million in financing for 3,000 loans at 9.75 percent. At that time, interest rates commonly available were about 13 percent.

She said that the participating lenders in that program took 10,000 applications in the first month.

The money for the home loans arranged through the Texas Housing Agency comes from the sale of tax-exempt bonds. The agency receives no state or federal appropriations, officials said.

According to the agency, since it was started six years ago the program has provided home loans to some 12,000 Texas families.

Christie Hefner says anti-porn report could lead to repression

DALLAS (AP) — The federal government's attempt to crack down on pornography contradicts the present administration's promise to reduce the role of government, Christie Hefner, president of Playboy Enterpises Inc. said.

"The Meese commission is not only wrong in its conclusions, but at odds with the mandate given by the voters to President Reagan to get the government out of people's lives," Ms. Hefner said Tuesday. "For what is more intrusive than to govern what people read, believe, see and practice in the privacy of their own homes," she said.

"The censorious effect that this report could have if many of us allow it to take its course, I think is only begun." Ms. Hefner, the daughter of Playboy founder Hugh Hefner, said before a group of Dallas lawyers.

The Attorney General's Commission on Pornography reported a link between sexually explicit material and sex offenses. In its July 11 report, it endorsed steps to crack down on the sale and distribution tf such material.

The panel had threatened to publish the names of stores selling materials the report listed as pornographic, and sent letters to companies it had planned to list.

The list was never issued.

Ms. Hefner's comments before the Dallas Young Lawyers came on the same day Playboy announced it would be decreasing guranteed circulation figures for advertisers because of slumping newsstand sales. Ms. Hefner said the commission's report is partly to blame.

Part of the problem with the commission's report, Ms. Hefner said, is it uses the word pornography to refer to all materials it studied.

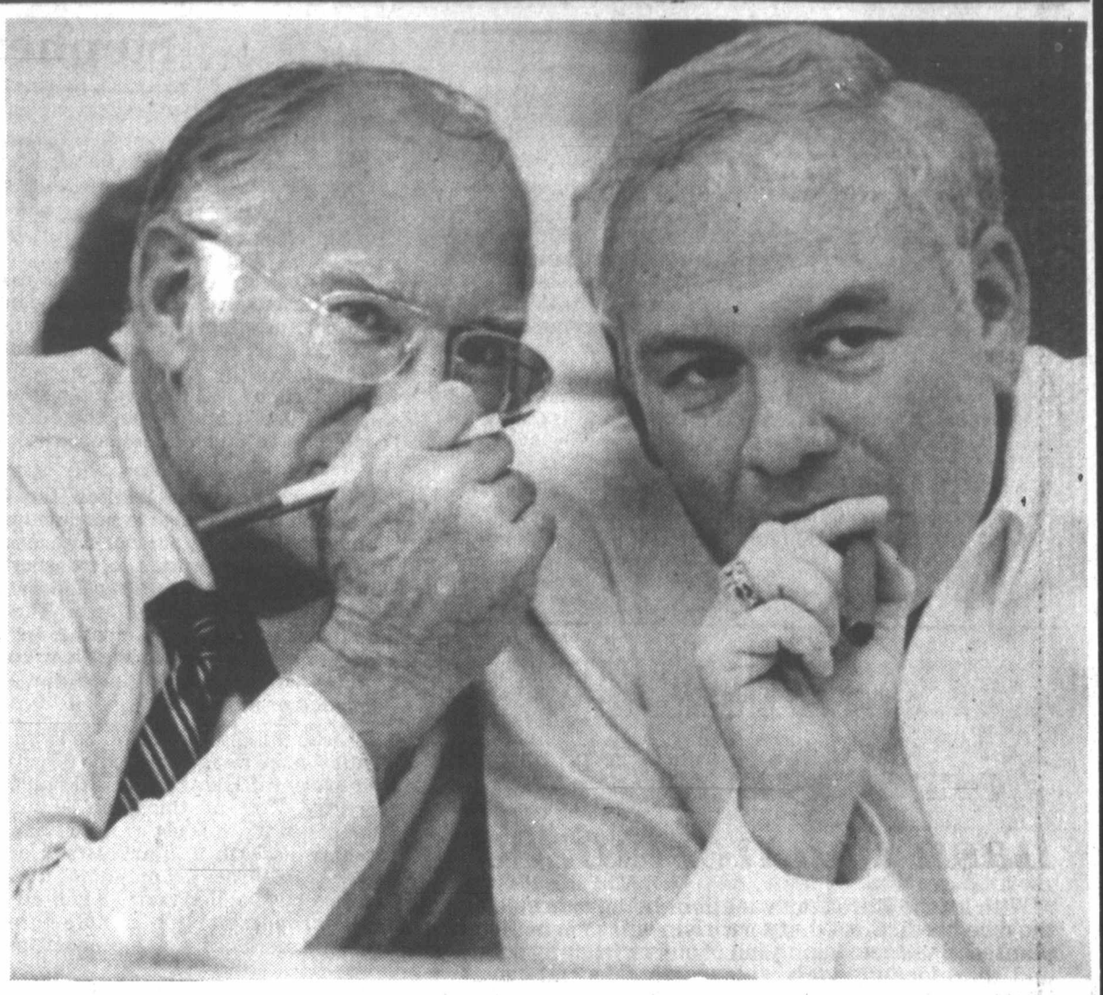
"Playboy is not pornography," she said.

Ms. Hefner said the commission ignored social scientists who said that gauging the correlation between sexual materials and sex crimes must also take into account poverty, alcoholism and outdoor magazines.

"If pornography turns people into sex fiends, then how come we had so much sexual violence before it was available," Ms. Hefner said.

She said Dallas-based Southland Corp., the parent firm of 7-Eleven convenience stores, had the "most responsible" policy of selling adult-oriented magazines. The publications were kept behind the counter and sold only to customers 18 and over.

But Southland's decision to stop selling the magazines in May was a response to pressure from the commission and fundamentalist Christian groups, Ms. Hefner said.



CUTTING THE BUDGET — State Representative Tom Uher, D-Bay City, confers with chairman of the House Appropriations Committee Jim Rudd, D-Brownfield, during Tuesday's budget hearing in Austin. Lawmakers are looking for ways to cut the expected revenue shorfall. (AP Laserphoto)

Lawmakers seek answers

AUSTIN (AP) — Some House members say they are waiting to see some leadership — preferably from the governor's office — on the delicate matter of making the cuts needed to balance the state budget.

The House Appropriation Committee today planned a fourth day of looking at possible cuts that could dent the projected $2.3 billion deficit. But Speaker Gib Lewis said the panel won't vote on any cuts until August, when the special session begins.

Gov. Mark White has summoned lawmakers to Austin Aug. 6 to work on the deficit. Comptroller Bob Bullock is expected to announce before then that the deficit could be more than $3 billion by Aug. 31, 1987 if no cuts are made.

Appropriations Committee Chairman Jim Rudd, D-Brownfield, earlier said the committee would vote on cuts this week. That changed Tuesday after he met with Lewis.

"I don't think there's anything to gain by having them vote," Lewis said, adding that the work will produce something for lawmakers to take home and study in preparation for the special session.

Some legislators said they don't want to propose cuts until they hear what White has in mind.

"The governor should provide us with a plan. He's the one that called the special session. What is it he wants us to do?" said Juan Hinojosa, D-McAllen, an appropriations committee member.

"I'm disappointed that we're up here and nobody really knows what it is that the governor wants," he said.

White has said he is working on a plan.

House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Stan Schlueter, D-Killeen, said Tuesday, "The cuts will be made as soon as the lieutenant governor, speaker and governor all agree on what they are."

Part of the problem is that Hobby has said tax hikes might be needed to balance the budget. White and Lewis are opposed to tax hikes.

"Realistically, it's impossible to make up the $2.3 billion deficit without raising taxes," Hinojosa said.

Schlueter said the appropriations committee might be trying to put some heat on White.

"I do not know for a fact that there is a strategy, but that would be a pretty good strategy. Hold the hearings, talk about how bad it is when you cut this, that and the other, and say, 'Well governor, here are the possibilities and you tell us which ones you want cut," Schlueter said.

One thing the appropriations committee has learned this week is that the cuts will hurt. The Legislative Budget Board staff has produced "impact statements" that show, in stark terms, what it means when the state reduces services.

Rudd talked Tuesday about finding $1.8 billion in cuts during the special session.

"This is the overall concept," the Brownfield Democrat said of the committee deliberations this week. "Any part of it or all of it, they can accept or reject."

Several lawmakers have asked White to open the special session to consideration of pari-mutuel gambling and a state lottery. Other legislators want him to allow action on a constitutional amendment that would bar a state income tax.

While the talking continues, many agencies are making voluntary cuts requested by White. Bullock announced Tuesday $11.2 million in layoffs and office closings.

Fifteen comptroller's field offices will be closed or merged and 134 employees will lose their jobs.

What's all the fuss about?

What's all this rigamarole about Prince Andy's and Fergie's wedding? For the life of me, I can't see everyone's fascination about royal weddings.

I wasn't around when Queen Elizabeth was married many long years ago, but I hear that was quite a fete. Surely it was surpassed, however, by Prince Charles and Lady Diana's wedding on July 29, 1981. I'll never forget the date. I was depressed all day long.

Now we have to go through it all again as Prince Andrew and Sarah Ferguson say their vows today in London. The American press, as much as the British press, has turned the whole affair into a carnival. Our own paper has run stories for weeks about the event, including a three column picture yesterday of Miss Peggy and Barbara Walters who will be on hand to give us a play by play account.

Why people use such things as this and our own celebration of the Statue of Liberty's birthday to make a buck are beyond me? All these cheap knickknacks commemorating the event make the whole thing seem tawdry. Then we have to see our own supposedly responsible reporters fawning over the British royalty as if they had something important to say. Come on!

Are we victims of delusions of grandeur? Is our preoccupation with the affairs of royalty an indication that we long for the days of monarchy? We fought a long time and lost many men just to shake Britain's hold on us, yet now we run back to the "Mother Country" like puppy dogs to see what their regal family is up to. Little is said of Queen Elizabeth's influence on Britain's politics. Charles, alone, could travel around the world and get no more than a token smattering of press coverage. But let Princess Diana accompany him and the press swarm to the sight.

And what do these journalists discuss in their reports? What Diana had to wear. Whether or not she looked too thin or too fat. How her hair was fixed. Whether her dress was too daring or too staid. Whatever innocuous statements she might make.

Now everyone's making a big deal because "Fergie," as the press affectionately calls her, decided to keep the word "obey" in the wedding vows. As if this is of earth shattering importance.

As a lifestyles editor I write about weddings every week. Admittedly, The Pampa News' rather dry reports sound a lot like Sergeant Friday on Dragnet — "Just the facts, ma'am, just the facts."

A person who previously held my position attended a workshop where it was suggested that so-called "society" editors should report on weddings as they really happen. We had quite a time coming up with some sample wedding stories to fit this way of thinking.

For example, we could say that the bride broke down in tears on the way from the dressing room to the sanctuary, flew back to the room, locked the door and refused to see anyone but her mama for a half hour while 500 guests waited patiently for the wedding to start.

We could tell how Uncle Bert and Aunt Patty sat on opposite sides and opposite ends of the church because they can't stand the sight of each other.

A truthful wedding account could say that the groom's knees were shaking together so hard that wedding observers were hardly able to hear the minister read the vows.

Instead of the standard description of the reception table, an actual account would tell that the wedding cake arrived slightly smashed, so it sat 20 degrees off center.

And, of course, we'd have to tell how the players on the groom's Little League baseball team raided the champagne fountain while everyone was busy congratulating the happy couple, guaranteeing an interesting baseball game later that evening.

Naturally, the festivities surrounding the newlywed's leavetaking would also have to be included. We'd tell how the friends gathered to wish them well, tossing rice into the air and giggling as thoughts of how the couple would react when they opened their suitcase to find it full of all kinds of unmentionable items.

We couldn't leave out how the get-away, I mean honeymoon, car was decorated, including choice and flowery phrases appropriate for the occasion. And certainly we would quote what the groom said when he grabbed the door handle and discovered it had been liberally greased with petroleum jelly.

Now why in the world do we have to cross the Atlantic and bother a bunch of "blue bloods" to come up with interesting wedding stories? My goodness, we have plenty right here at home. Just ask anyone who has ever gotten married.

Reagan campaigns for Clements

DALLAS (AP) — President Reagan's visit to Dallas will add the luster of the administration's backing to the campaign of former Gov. Bill Clements in his bid to unseat Mark White, an aide said.

The visit is especially important because of Reagan's strong profile in the state, Reggie Bashur, Clements' press secretary, said Tuesday.

Reagan was expected to tout Clements as a tough leader for tough times in Texas at a GOP rally and private luncheon today.

More than 100 tickets to the luncheon were sold and the figure could go as high as $750,000, Bashur said.

Clements is trying to regain the office he lost in 1982 to White.

"President Reagan is coming in and it represents the political ties between Reagan and Clements and their agreement on philosophy and the way government should be run," Bashur said.

The booming Texas economy has taken a hard punch as oil and gas prices plummeted and real estate markets softened, prompting state officials to wrestle with a predicted $3 billion-plus budget shortfall.

Bashur said Clements expects Reagan to campaign for him in Texas at least two more times before the November election. Vice President George Bush has offered to make several in-state stops, as have some other 1988 Republican presidential hopefuls.

More than 5,000 people were expected at the free GOP rally at Dallas' Apparel Mart, Bashur said. Organizers at Clements' Dallas headquarters saidnthey had fewer than 1,000 tickets left by midday Tuesday.

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Opinion

Terrorism in U.S. hasn't materialized

With all the European vacations being canceled and the dire predictions that terrorism will soon be firmly planted in the nourishing soil of our terrifically open — and therefore uniquely vulnerable — society in the United States, it may be worth noting that, although similar predictions have been bruited about for at least a decade, it hasn't happened yet.

The FBI recently issued a report from its Terrorist Research and Analytical Center. The news? Terrorist activity declined — again — last year. Of the seven bombings in 1985, four were attributed, perhaps tenously in the case of the murder of Arab-American activist Alex Odeh in Santa Ana, Calif., to Jewish "extremist" groups. All the incidents were, so far as the FBI knows, carried out by domestic political groups. None were linked to foreign terrorist groups or to foreign governments.

These facts are worth noting primarily because they are so at odds with the popular impression that terrorism is everywhere and constitutes a growing clear and present danger. During the past year, buildings in the nation's capital have been ringed with fences and increased security. High public officials have warned us about imminent dangers lurking just around the corner. Occasionally we'll hear far-out scenarios about how easily a terrorist might sneak across our border with an atomic weapon in the sole of his sandals...well, you get the picture.

It may well be prudent not to downplay the threat of terrorism. Certaily 1985 saw some tragic and lamentable incidents overseas, some of them involving Americans, some of them explicitly targeting Americans. And some of the scenarios invlving possible terrorist activities here are at least plausible.

But before we willingly surrender important rights and privacy to concern about terroristm, we should be aware of what the facts are. This nation may be vulnerable to terrorism, now or in the future. Foreign groups might be able to inflict great damager. Prudence, caution and foresight are warranted. Panic isn't. So far, except for isolated incidents, it hasn't happened here.

The price is too high

The Reagan administration's dispatch of American troops to Bolivia may be interpreted as a bold new blow against international drug trafficking. It really is an admission of failure that betrays the futility of the war on illicit drugs. Only by steadily expanding the war, both at home and abroad, can the administration hope to have much effect on Americans' drug use.

The expedition shows how far President Reagan is willing to go in his dubious crusade. Some 100 U.S. Army personnel were sent to Bolivia with six helicopters to transport Bolivian forces in an attack on drug laboratories in a major cocaine-producing area. The operation could last as long as two months, and the administration, according to the New York Times, "acknowledged that Americans could be wounded or killed."

This is the first action taken by the administration since Reagan signed a directive declaring drug trafficking to be a threat to national security. Well, anything can be pushed under that umbrella. It is not as if Bolivians are threatening us with military attack or anything comparable. They are only doing the same thing as Japanese automakers, Saudi oil producers and Taiwanese textile manufacturers — supplying Americans with a product they want.

The U.S. government may not want Bolivian cocaine coming onto our shores, but the danger it presents is of a wholly different character and magnitude from that posed by Soviet troops or Libyan terrorists. Despite ambitious law enforcement efforts, cocaine is in great demand. As long as Americans are willing to pay foreigners for cocaine and other drugs, some foreigners will be willing to take whatever risks are necessary to provide them.

That is what makes the use of American military forces such a bad idea. The lives of our soldiers should be risked only to protect us from our enemies — not to protect us from ourselves. Americans may think it sounds great to use our soldiers against foreign drug producers. They will probably feel differently when the first coffin comes home.

Mass raids like the one envisioned here rarely work. When the Bolivian government has tried it before, the culprits have mostly escaped into the jungle. But even if it does capture a lot of drug producers and destroy a lot of cocaine, the operation won't accomplish much.

If it substantially reduces the available supply of cocaine in the world, prices will rise, attracting more suppliers elsewhere. The more vigorous the government efforts to eradicate drug trafficking, the more financially lucrative it becomes for those traffickers who can elude the authorities.

To the extent it accomplishes its immediate objective, the raid finances the frustration of its ultimate purpose. Only through grotesquely excessive penalties and draconian invasions of citizens' liberties could Washington hope to dry up the demand that calls forth the supply.

The ultimate purpose, stamping out illicit drug use, is a mistaken one. Cocaine and other drugs may be dangerous, but the risk lies with those who choose to use them. It is not the proper role of the government to protect adults from the consequences of hazardous choices — whether they involve cocaine, cigarettes, overeating or mountain climbing. It ought to concentrate on the more realistic and worthy task of trying to keep these drugs out of the hands of minors.

When the effort to interfere with voluntary transactions among adults goes beyond prosecution of dealers and users to landing American soldiers in foreign lands, our anti-drug policies cry out for revision. The commitment required to enforce them in their current form will only continue to grow, demanding more money, manpower and risk. The Reagan administration may be willing to pay any price, but the price is already too high.

Hitler pulled his punches

"Hitler pulled his punches." I thought that would get your attention.

While public concern in the United States relates to the nuclear threat, the Soviets already have a more terrible weapon in their arsenal: lethal chemicals.

These are weapons which kill with brutal efficiency. Target populations are altogether as dead as from radiation — yet chemical weapons then dissipate, enabling the attacker to move in and take over.

The United States is poorly prepared for chemical warfare. Thomas O'Boyle, for the Wall Street Journal, did an audit — found our nation's chemical weapons outnumbered and aging.

Found that the Soviet arsenal of chemical weapons is three to four times larger than ours. Russia right now has chemical agents stored in 30 different locations in Eastern Europe.

The Soviet army has vehicles that shield their occupants from gas; has 20 times as many decontamination devices, 10 times as many troops in its chemical warfare corps.

Western Europe is highly vulnerable to chemical attack. It may well be that the only factor which has prevented chemical warfare there — or here — i our capability of nuclear retaliation.

Unless, of course, we let them talk us out of that.

In World War I chemical weapons — much less sophis' cated than today's — were used.

In January 1915, Germany launched a gas attack on Russia. Three months later, Germany was hurling gas grenades at us on the Western front.

April 22 in Belgium, Germany opened the valves on 5,000 cylinders of chlorine gas rolling in a boiling yellow cloud across our trenches.

In 40 minutes, 5,000 men died.

Gas 'nflicted heavy casualties during World War I and for years afterward. It was such a hideous weapon that in 1935, all nations voted to outlaw it.

It was not used in World War II.

German scientists produced the first "nerve gas" in 1936. Hitler could have used it. But he did not.

The Nazis assumed — incorrectly — that the United States had also developed nerve gas — and they feared that weapon more than any.

Because once upon a time in a war 20 years before...a German corporal had been rendered totally blind in a gas attack. And though he got over the blindness, he never outlived the terror of it. That corporal was Adolf Hitler.

So Hitler, in World War II, from sheer fear of retaliation in kind, pulled his punches.

You will be hearing that the United States, after a 16-year hiatus, has resumed producing chemical weapons, a second first in the face of any potential aggressor.

Reagan will influence Senate elections

By Ben Wattenberg

Until very recently the smart money in Washington was saying there was about a 50-50 chance that the Republicans would lose control of the U.S. Senate in this year's election.

Now the odds have shifted a bit. Pundits are saying that the Democrats have moved up in some of the close races, and it looks as if they will pick up the four seats necessary to gain a majority in the Senate.

The predicates behind this idea are three — two of which are valid. First is arithmetic. The Republicans have almost twice as many seats at risk as do the Democrats; 22 versus 12.

Second, congressional elections are essentially local, won or lost by the talents of the individuals running in given districts, by the issues they develop and by the funds they raise. Pollster Peter Hart says this will be the "year of character" for the Senate candidates.

Third: Because of the correct logic of the previous item, it is maintained by some that Senate elections can therefore not be "nationalized." It is noted that the Republican National Committee will not be buying national network television spots this year.

This means, so it is said, that Ronald Reagan will not be much of a factor. It's true, they say, he can raise money for Republican Senate candidates, but — so goes the argument — he won't be able to frame the issues that may push the voters one way or the other. Many Democrats make this case and so do some Republicans. They are wrong.

Ronald Reagan will "nationalize" this election. If, as is likely, Reagan travels to North Carolina to speak for Republican James Broyhill the national network news will be there with him. If, Reagan travels to Nevada to speak for Republican Jim Santini, the national network news will be with him, just as they will be with him in every state he hits.

Now, let us remember that Reagan is the most popular second term president since the advent of public opinion polling. His Gallup approval rating was 68 percent even before the big July Fourth blowout. It is now undoubtedly somewhere in the 70s. If it should fall back during the summer, remember that probably early in September there will be a big spectacle when the president signs a radically revised tax code. The new law is surely a bipartisan measure, but it will just as surely be known as the "Reagan tax bill." Furthermore, there is a good chance that between now and the election the date of the next summit will be announced, and well-publicized rumors will hang heavy in the air that Reagan and Gorbachev have cut an historic deal on arms control.

And what will Reagan say on the stump? Roughly this: "If you want the Reagan revolution to continue, vote Republican. I can't do it without a Republican Senate. If you want prosperity to continue, vote Republican. I can't do it without a Republican Senate. If you want America to be strong enough to negotiate from strength, vote Republican. I can't do it without a Republican Senate." All that will be reported on the networks night after night all over America.

How much is this worth in an election? Surely not 10 percentage points. Not even 5 percentage points. But in the last three Senate elections a swing of only 2 percent of the vote would have changed the results in 21 percent of the Senate seats.

Can Reagan move one or two percent of the vote? I think he can. He surely can if the Democrats keep repeating their new mantra: "All elections are local." Reagan's influence may be minimized only if Democrats — candidates and party alike — make their own "nationalized" case: that they are no longer soft on defense, that they are fiscally responsible, that they respect traditional values, and, in addition, by attacking Reagan in a reasonable way where he is vulnerable. I suspect they will be trying to do just that.

White House meeting tainted union election at Army base, agency says

WASHINGTON (AP) — The general counsel of the Federal Labor Relations Authority is seeking to overturn a union representation election at an Oklahoma Army base because of a White House-arranged, pre-election meeting between top Army officials and Teamsters representatives.

The Teamsters subsequently used the meeting in its successful campaign to oust a rival union representing 2,500 civilian workers at Fort Sill.

White House and Pentagon spokesmen denied Tuesday that the meeting was intended to influence the Oct. 17, 1985, election between the Teamsters and the National Federation of Federal Employees.

They said the only purpose of the meeting — held seven days before the election — and the only topic discussed was an Army plan to possibly contract out to private companies some of the work performed by the civilian employees at Fort Sill.

Those plans — and the fear that the contracts would produce layoffs among the civilian employees at the base — was a major issue in the union election.

While FLRA General Counsel John C. Miller formally dismissed a charge made last December by the NFFE that the Army deliberately intended to tilt the election in favor of the Teamsters, he said the White House meeting effectively "breached the requirement of neutrality" by the government.

However, documents that surfaced last month during a FLRA hearing in Lawton, Okla., on Miller's complaint indicate that at least some Army officials were aware before the Oct. 10 meeting that the Teamsters intended to use the White House session as a demonstration of its clout.

In an Oct. 9 briefing memo to Valeris O. Ewell, assistant secretary of the Army, one of Ewell's aides, Col. James M. Schroeder, said, "Your meeting is a show-the-flag meeting to impress Fort Sill's workers that the Teamsters can do more for them than the NFFE."

Oil price slide will cause industry to lose 142,000 jobs by end of the year

WASHINGTON (AP) — The slide in oil prices probably will wipe out 142,000 oil industry jobs by the end of this year and almost as many among supplier companies, the industry's largest trade group said Tuesday.

Jobs among suppliers ranging from machinery and steel manufacturers to advertising agencies probably will fall by 116,000, the American Petroleum Institute said.

A price of $15 a barrel would, by 1991, mean the end of almost 300,000 jobs from the 1.6 million provided by the industry in 1985, according to API figures. A $10-per-barrel price would eliminate 407,000 jobs, the institute said. These projections do not include jobs in supplier firms.

Oil prices averaged about $28 in the United States last year, according to API. On the New York Mercantile Exchange, contracts for August delivery of West Texas crude recently have been running around $13 after rebounding from about $10.

The institute presented a new study, based on a survey of 21 large member companies, that projected U.S. production in 1991 at 6.2 million barrels per day if the price is $15 and 5.1 million barrels at $10. Last year's production was 8.9 million barrels, a figure that would rise to 9.1 million barrels if the price remained at $28, API said.

This means imports would rise from about a third of U.S. consumption currently to more than 50 percent under either price scenario, Charles DiBona, institute president, told a news conference.

The institute study repeated earlier recommendations for accelerated leasing of the outer continental shelf, retention of favorable tax treatment for oil in5ustry investments, removal of restrictions on use of natural gas as a boiler fuel and continued purchases of crude oil for the strategic petroleum reserve.

It also repeated earlier predictions of price increases.

More rain for South, but not enough to end the drought

By The Associated Press

Rain has eased 2½ weeks of heat in the South, but brought no relief from the drought that's cost farmers at least $800 million, and a top U.S. agriculture official says he will recommend speedy federal assistance.

More help was coming today from the Midwest, where farmers have been donating hay since the weekend to help feed starving livestock in the South. Iowa prison inmates were to help National Guardsmen load 3,600 bales of hay on four military cargo planes bound for South Carolina, officials said.

Clouds and rain were expected to keep most of the South below 100 degrees today for the second consecutive day. Columbia, S.C., reached only 97 degrees Tuesday, breaking a record string of 15 days of triple-digit temperatures.

Tuesday's high in the South was 99 degrees in Macon, Ga.

The heat has been blamed for at least 38 deaths since early July.

Scattered thunderstorms were reported Tuesday evening from Maryland to Florida, with more than 3 inches falling on Valdosta, Ga., within six hours.

Despite rain, especially across southern and eastern Georgia and the South Carolina coast, "There's a lot of farm land that has remained dry through the period," said Pete Reynolds of the National Severe Storms Forecast Center in Kansas City, Mo. "So I seriously doubt that you can say the drought has been relieved."

A radio station in North Augusta, S.C., held a rain dance on its front yard Tuesday afternooon, but only a trace of rain fell there in the evening.

A federal task force on Tuesday completed a two-day inspection of farms in the drought-stricken South, and Assistant Secretary of Agriculture George Dunlop said he will recommend that federal assistance be expedited.

"I'm hopeful that the message I can take back to the secretary is it's time to move these along," Dunlop said during a tour in Elfand, N.C.

He said disaster assessments normally are not completed until the fall, but he will report to Agriculture Secretary Richard Lyng that there are severe farm losses in Alabama, Georgia, South Carolina and North Carolina.

"This is a terrible situation. It's almost unbelieveable to see the crops in this destroyed position," said Dunlop, who headed the task force.

But he added, "I can't make any promises. I have nothing to announce."

North Carolina Agriculture Commissioner Jim Graham, who accompanied the panel Tuesday, said although the tour showed concern for farmers' problems, he won't be satisfied until he sees federal aid pouring in. "All I want them to do is put up or shut up," he said.

Months of below-normal rain have withered crops and nearly dried up water supplies in parts of the Southeast despite scattered storms, like those that hit parts of the region Monday and Tuesday.

Some experts say $400 million of North Carolina's $4 billion annual farm income may already be lost, and South Carolina crop losses are estimated at $100 million. Crop losses in Virginia are estimated at $61.5 million, and the Georgia Department of Agriculture estimated damage at $140 million.

Vaccine will be first genetically made drug for humans

WASHINGTON (AP) — A new vaccine to prevent hepatitis B infections was expected to be approved by the government today, marking the first time a vaccine produced through genetic engineering has been cleared for human use.

Dr. Frank E. Young, head of the U.S. Food and Drug Administration, was expected to announce approval of the new vaccine at a news briefing.

The vaccine, developed by Chiron Corp. of Emeryville, Calif., is called Recombivax HB and will be marketed by Merck Sharp & Dohme of West Point, Pa., which also makes and markets the only other vaccine for hepatitis B.

The existing vaccine, which has been available since 1981, is produced from the blood plasma of people infected with the virus that causes hepatitis B, a chronic liver infection that can lead to cancer in that organ.

The new vaccine is made by a special type of brewers' yeast that has been genetically altered to produce a part of the hepatitis B virus that spurs a protective immune system response.

A major drawback of the currently approved vaccine has been its cost, which its manufacturer says stems from the expense of processing large quantities of blood plasma and other production costs.

A typical three-injection course of vaccination costs the consumer about $100, making it the most expensive preventive vaccine on the market, experts say. Since this expense is not covered by many insurance plans, cost has been a factor limiting use of the existing vaccine.

The new vaccine theoretically would be much cheaper to produce, but a spokesman for the manufacturers said that initially, it would be marketed at about the same p ce as the older vaccine.

Hepatitis B is the most serious of tree viral diseases causing inflammation of the liver, which can lead to cirrhosis and other damage. Research continues on ;accines for the other two, hepatitis A and nonA-nonB hepatitis.

An estimated 300 million people worldwide are carriers of hepatitis B, which is a particularly serious health threat in Asia and Africa. Between 800,000 and 1 million people in the United States carry the disease, and health officials estimate an additional 200,000 are infected annually, usually through contact with bodily fluids from a carrier.

Prohibition of Texas income tax urged

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Constitution should prohibit any personal or corporate income tax, says an anti-tax group urging Gov. Mark White to allow lawmakers to consider such a ban next month.

"It's a very traditional value that we have in this state. The people don't want an income tax," said Rep. Bill Blanton, R-Farmers Branch.

The group Texans Against State Income Taxes sent White a letter Monday encouraging him to include consideration of a constitutional amendment banning an income tax as part of his formal calling of the Aug. 6 special legislative session.

The group's chairman, Richard Ford, said that although White and other state leaders say they oppose any income tax, a constitutional prohibition is better.

"I don't believe they will be in office indefinitely. This is an issue that is so important that it needs to be put into the Constitution to protect the people," Ford said.

If approved in the special session, a proposed constitutional amendment could go before voters in November.

If approved by voters, a constitutional ban could only be repealed by a future general election vote, and backers of the idea said that's a big plus.

"This doesn't mean that we could never have a state income tax. It's going to make it harder ... and it means the people of Texas are going to get to decide the issue if we put this (ban) in the Constitution," said Rep. L.B. Kubiak, D-Rockdale.

The governor hadn't seen the request Tuesday, said his press secretary, Ann Arnold. She said the formal proclamation calling the special session isn't ready yet. The proclamation will include subjects the governor will allow to be considered during the 30-day House and Senate session.

With the state government facing a $3 billion deficit, Ford said an income tax would be a bad way to balance the budget.

He argued that an income tax would stifle creation of new jobs, reduce employment and make the state less attractive to companies sincome tax and a low tax burden," Ford said.

Joining him were Reps. Tom Waldrop, D-Corsicana, and Bill Ceverha, D-Dallas, who said the issue isn't a partisan one.

"It's an issue of the people," Waldrop said.

Ceverha said the 30-day special session is the best place for lawmakers to consider a tax ba xecause the only topics before them will be taxes and spending.

"The total focus of the Legislature, the people, the press and all is on the budget at this time and state spending. There is much more of a spotlight on the issues before us than there is in the regular session," Ceverha said.

July 24, 1986

There will be ample opportunity around you in the year ahead. However, in order to take advantage of all that is offered, you must see each matter through to completion.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Move cautiously in your business affairs today because if you get careless or miscalculate, the results could be a bit costly. Know where to look for romance and you'll find it. The Astro-Graph Matchmaker set instantly reveals which signs are romantically perfect for you. Mail $2 to Matchmaker, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 1846, Cincinnati, OH 45201.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Today, try to avoid the company of people who take you for granted. The harder you try to please them, the less you're apt to be appreciated.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) A veiled career opportunity might come your way today. If you fail to recognize it or act on it promptly, it'll be withdrawn.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) You should bring under control some unwarranted spending at this time. Stop wasting your resources.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Guard against impulsiveness or being a know-it-all today. Problems can be avoided if you'll listen to the advice of someone who's trying to help you.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Your vision may be rather limited today, in that you will only see negative results, where you should be seeing positive ones. Be more hopeful.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) There's a possibility that you might be careless with someone else's property today. If a friend lends you something, treat it respectfully.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) You must be persistent when pursuing an important aim today. Switching tactics will make you veer off course, away from success.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Do not expect others to bail you out of problems of your own making today. If you make a mess of something, you'll have to mop it up yourself.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Optimism is an excellent quality, provided you're practical as well. Be careful today not to bank your hopes on an unsound promise.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Chance and luck aren't apt to carry you through today in important career matters. Don't make the mistake of relying on these whimsical factors.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) If you have to deal with someone today who tends to exaggerate, don't try to top him. He may get away with his story, but you won't get away with yours.

Reagan's sanctions speech disappoints many supporters

By R. GREGORY NOKES
AP Diplomatic Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's speech opposing South African sanctions is raising questions even among Reagan's strong supporters whether he really knows what is at stake in the racial turmoil there.

Several predicted an intensification of the violence if the white government doesn't quickly begin dismantling apartheid and they warned that Reagan's approach may lull the white regime into thinking it can count on American backing even if they refuse any changes.

Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, predicted guerrilla warfare "within two or three months" unless the Pretoria government makes major changes.

"The president may see the future in a different way than I do," Lugar said. "He may see a quieter South Africa than I do."

The House has voted sanctions that would virtually end economic ties with South Africa, a.. i the Senate appears ready to vote sanctions of its own, although probably less severe. The United States is South Africa's largest trading partner and second largest investor, after Britain.

But Reagan, restating his strong opposition to sanctions, said the white government of P.W. Botha, while it has made some mistakes, has undertaken "dramatic change" to end apartheid. He even urged that American businesses consider stepping up their operations there.

"The international business community needs not only to be supported in South Africa, but energized," he said. Sanctions, he added, are "utterly immoral and repugnant" and would hurt blacks most of all.

He seemed to claim success for his much-maligned policy of constructive engagement, although a senior administration official said word had gone out it wasn't supposed to be called that anymore.

He had only mild criticism for the Botha government while strongly denouncing the "calculated terror by elements of the African National Congress," the outlawed black nationalist organization supported by many South African blacks.

The initial reaction showed the administration is losing credibility on its South African policy even among its supporters. The spectacle of Reagan and other conservative white Republicans contradicting moderate black South Africans on what is best for them after 40 years of apartheid always has seemed curious.

The reaction of moderate black leaders in South Africa was swift and negative.

"I found the speech nauseating," said Bishop Desmond Tutu, the 1984 Nobel Peace Prize winner and black clergyman who is head of the Anglican church in South Africa.

Alan Boesak, another prominent black clergymen whom the government has arrested in the past, said Reagan's speech was "nonsense and a grave mistake." By not imposing sanctions, he said the United States and Britain are giving the Botha regime "an escape route" so it can avoid ever giving justice to the black majority.

Even more significant was the criticism by key members of Reagan's own party, especially Lugar, who has publicly supported most of his policies.

New York Times correspondent expelled for entering military zone

PEKING (AP) — New York Times correspondent John Burns was expelled from China today after being accused by the government of illegally entering a military zone and taking pictures. He dismissed the accusations against him as "nonsense."

Burns, 41, was taken this morning from the barred, padded cell where he had been held for six days without charge, and put aboard a CAAC Chinese state airlines flight for Hong Kong, Times Executive Editor A.M. Rosenthal said.

Upon arrival in Hong Kong, Burns said accusations he had engaged in espionage while on a motorcycle trip through a closed area of central China earlier this month were baseless.

"It was nonsense from the start," he told reporters at Hong Kong airport. "I engaged in a quite legitimate journalistic activity."

Burns, a British national, had been detained by police since Thursday, when police at Peking Airport stopped him as he and his family prepared to leave for a vacation abroad.

Police questioned Burns about a trip he took in early July with an American attorney who has since left China and a Chinese man whose wherebouts are unknown.

The three had been detained for two days by police in remote Shaanxi province for entering a rural Chinese military zone off limits to foreigners. They were released only after writing lengthy letters of "self-criticism."

The official Xinhua news agency today quoted an unidentified official of the Peking State Security Bureau as saying Burns "engaged in activities incompatible with his status as a journalist by deliberately breaking into Chinese areas closed to aliens, thereby violating the law governing aliens' entry into and exit from the People's Republic of China."

The agency said that "after investigation of the case ... the Peking State Security Bureau (on Tuesday) decided to expel Burns from the territory of China."

According to Times Foreign Editor Warren Hoge, who also came to Peking to seek Burns' release, the Chinese told Rosenthal they acted with "great leniency" by expelling Burns before the investigation was complete, saying they were "taking into consideration their desire to maintain the friendly relations between the United States and China."

Today's editions of the Times quoted Publisher Arthur Ochs Sulzberger as saying in a statement, "We are grateful for the prompt resolution of the problem facing John Burns, though we regret his expulsion from China after so many years of distinguished reporting for The New York Times."

Try starting the day in the high fiber way

Mom was right. A good oatmeal breakfast is a nourishing way to start the day. Now Mom has another reason to serve oatmeal — as part of a healthy eating plan.

Results of a study by Northwestern University Medical School indicate that oats, when eaten by healthy individuals with normal blood cholesterol levels, can enhance the blood cholesterol - lowering effect of a fat - modiefied diet such as that recommended by the American Heart Association (AHA). Study participants who substituted two ounces of oatmeal or oat bran for part of their daily carbohydrates experienced an additional three percent fall in serum cholesterol beyond that which resulted from eating a fat - modified diet alone.

What's so special about oats? Oats contain water - soluble dietary fiber. Unlike the water - insoluble fiber which predominates in wheat, the water - soluble fiber in oats has been shown to lower blood cholesterol levels, thereby reducing one of the risk factors associated with heart attack and heart disease. Reducing the fat in the diet also can help lower blood cholesterol. Northwestern's study demonstrated that adding oats to a fat - modified diet can result in reductions in blood cholesterol levels that exceed those achieved by a fat - modified diet alone.

Cholesterol levels can be reduced two ways, diet and drugs. "Using diet rather than drugs to lower blood cholesterol conforms to the recommendations for the general population made by the National Institutes of Health advisory panel, and offers Americans a safe and easy way to reduce the risk of heart attacks — an approach that people can follow all their lives," says Linda V. Van Horn, Ph.D., R.D., principal investigator for the Northwestern study.

"Breakfast can easily lend itself to a high-fiber, modified-fat eating plan. Thus, this first meal of the day is an ideal beginning for those of us trying to adopt a healthier way of eating," notes Katherine E. SMith, vice president of consumer affairs for a major oat company.

Fruit and whole grain cereals and breads — breakfast basics — are naturally low in fat and cholesterol and are a good source of dietary fiber. Skim milk, low-fat yogurt and cheese made from skim or partially skim milk provide calcium and additional protein without much added fat.

If time's your worst enemy, sip your breakfast while getting ready for work or school, suggests Smith. Blender breakfast shakes made with fresh or frozen unsweetened fruit, low-fat yogurt or skim milk and oats are thick and rich like a milkshake, but low in fat. They're also a good source of fiber.

If you aren't hungry first thing in the morning, don't skip breakfast, brown - bag it instead. Oranges, peaches, bananas and other fruits which can be eaten out-of-hand, wholegrain muffins or crackers, low-fat cheese, and individual cartons of yogurt are nutritious and easy to carry.

Weekend breakfasting tends to be more relaxed and elaborate, making a return to old eating habits tempting. But there's no need to give up the pancakes, waffles and other breakfast fare you lived in the old days.

When breakfasting out, moderation is the key. At a brunch buffet, gravitate towards the fresh fruit and vegetable trays and the breads. If the breads are good, they don't need butter or other high-fat spreads. Look for poultry and fish dishes without rich sauces. As for the other goodies, keep portions small.

At home, rethink favorite breakfast foods. Even blintzes can be part of your new, healthier eating style.

Cheesy Breakfast Blintzes start with a high-fiber crepe using oat flour made in the blender or food processor. Skim milk and egg whites keep fat and cholesterol in check. Replacing the traditional calorie and fat-laden filling is ricotta cheese, lightly sweetened and flavored with vanilla. Gone is the sour cream and in its place is a more healthful topping. For fun, offer a "topping bar" featuring fresh fruit, unsweetened applesauce, yogurt, cinnamon-sugar, chopped nuts, granola, fruit preserves and - or honey.

CHEESY BREAKFAST BLINTZES

1 c. oats (quick or old fashioned, uncooked)
1 t. baking powder
¼ t. salt (optional)
1 c. skim or lowfat milk
2 egg whites or whole eggs, beaten
1 c. ricotta or dry curd cottage cheese
1 to 2 T. powdered sugar
½ t. vanilla

Place oats in blender or food processor; cover. Blend about 1 minute, stopping occasionally to stir. Combine oat flour, baking powder and salt; add milk and egg whites, mixing well. Heat 6 to 7-inch crepe pan or skillet over medium-high heat; oil lightly. Pour scant ¼ cup batter for each crepe into hot prepared pan; immediately tilt pan to coat bottom evenly with thin layer. Cook one minute or until top looks dry. Turn; cook an additional 45 seconds. Stack between sheets of wax paper. (See NOTE.)

Heat oven to 350 degrees F. Combine remaining ingredients; mix well. Spoon about two tablespoons filling into center of each crepe. Fold sides over filling; fold up ends to form a rectangle. Arrange blintzes in ungreased 11x7-inch glass baking dish. Cover with foil; bake about 15 to 20 minutes or until heated through. Serve warm with fresh or frozen fruit, yogurt or preserves, if desired.

NOTE: Crepes may be made ahead and frozen up to three months. Stack cooled crepes on paper plate with sheet of wax paper between each crepe. Wrap securely in foil or seal in moisture-proof bag; freeze. Thaw overnight in refrigerator.

Nutritional information: Each serving (two blintzes) provides 173 calories, 9g carbohydrate, 14g protein, 9g fat, 233mg calcium, 245mg sodium, 32mg cholesterol and 3g dietary fiber.

Other favorite breakfast foods can be modified, too. If French toast is a Sunday tradition, use wholegrain bread and skim milk. Substitute egg whites for one or more of the whole eggs and cook in just a small amount of polyunsaturated vegetable oil margarine. Oat pancakes or waffles topped with fruit start the day the high-fiber way as does a baked apple stuffed with granola you make yourself.

Taste of Texas

Add some Mexican spice

By ANN E. GRANQUIST
Dept. of Agriculture

Mexico's was the third flag to fly over the state of Texas. Mexican rule lasted from 1821 to 1836. Mexican dishes that we have come to know today have descended from the Aztecs. This Mexican flair makes for a special culinary language.

Mexican people have influenced the style of Texas cooking, particularly in the method of seasonings. Mexican seasonings have become THE seasonings of Texas style cooking today. Among the Mexican touches that are important in today's cooking are the generous use of fresh parsley as an ingredient.

Major Mexican spices that have become a basic in today's cooking are chili powder, cumin and chili peppers. These are potent spices to be used with care when added to your favorite dishes. How much spice should be added to a recipe? Here are a few helpful tips.

Cooks will find several classifications for small amounts when measuring spices or herbs. Pinch, dash or sprinkle are ways to refer to small amounts. A dash refers to less than ⅛ teaspoon of an ingredient. A pinch is as much substance as can be taken between the finger and thumb. A sprinkle generally refers to the method of scattering a small amount.

When trying out a new spice, specially a potent Mexican spice, it is best to start small. Afer all, it is easier to addmore flavor than it is to subtract.

When purchasing spices try to buy in small amounts, about what you would use in a year's time. Spices can lose flavor if stored too long. Store spices tightly capped in a cool dry place, away from direct sunlight.

Whole spices can be ground or grated as needed. They are more aromatic than the ground forms you buy. About 1½ times more whole spice will be needed when they are substitute for preground spice.

Dried herbs should be crushed between your fingers or in the palm of yourhand before using. Body heat intensifies the flavor. Be careful with garlic powder and juices; they get stronger the longer they are stored.

Fresh herbs are more fragrant than dried herbs. When substituting a fresh herb into a recipe you will need three to four times as much. Supermarkets are beginning to provide a greater variety of fresh herbs. Fresh or dried herbs can add extra spice to your recipes. Try out some new spices and give the salt shaker a rest.

CORN STUFFED PEPPERS

6 green bell peppers
3 c. cut cooked corn
¾ t. salt
1 t. chili powder
½ c. grated cheddar cheese
2 T. butter

Remove stem ends from peppers; parboil five minutes and drain. Combine remaining ingredients and fill peppers. Bake at 350 degrees F. for 10 to 15 minutes. Serves six.

TEX-MEX RICE

1 c. onion, chopped
1 c. green pepper, chopped
½ c. celery, chopped
3 T. butter
2 t. salt
2 t. chili powder
¼ t. garlic powder
1 (14½ oz. to 16 oz.) can tomatoes
2 cubes beef boullion
3 c. cooked rice

Saute onions, green peppers and celery in butter until vegetables are tender. Add seasonings, tomatoes and beef boullion. Add rice. Simmer, stirring occasionally until flavors are blended. Serves six.

Do-ahead chicken dishes free cook for summer fun

When summer fun and outdoors activity beckon, no one wants to spend unnecessary time in the kitchen.

Here's some do-ahead chicken dishes which can be prepared at a convenient time and refrigerated until ready to cook and serve.

Chicken is ideal for these save-the-cook meals requiring a mimimum of preparation and allowing flexible serving times. Get them ready for cooking early in the morning before the temperature rises. Or, in the evening if a busy day's ahead.

When you center your summer menus on chicken, there's no need to sacrifice good nutrition just because you had rather do other things than work in the kitchen. Chicken is easy on the budget, too, for both family meals and worry-free summer entertaining.

SAVORY HERBED CHICKEN

8 broiler-fryer chicken parts
1¼ t. salt, divided
½ t. pepper, divided
1 med. onion, thinly sliced
4 small summer squash, sliced
4 med. tomatoes, sliced
½ t. savory leaves
¼ t. paprika
1 T. butter
1¼ c. cocktail vegetable juice
2 T. grated Parmesan cheese

Sprinkle chicken with one teaspoon of salt and ¼ teaspoon of pepper. Break onion slices into rings and arrange half of rings in bottom of shallow glass baking dish. Place chicken on top and arrange remaining onion rings on chicken. Add sliced squash and then sliced tomatoes; sprinkle with savory, paprika and remaining ¼ teaspoon of salt and pepper. Dot butter on tomatoes and pour cocktail vegetable juice over all; sprinkle with Parmesan cheese.

Cover tightly with foil and refrigerate until ready to cook. At cooking time, place in 350 degree F. oven and bake one hour or until fork can be inserted in chicken with ease. (Extra liquid is delicious served with side dish of rice or thin noodles.) Makes four to eight servings.

Camp owner: teach kids to appreciate nature

WATTS, Okla. (AP) — For 35 summers, 71-year-old canoeist Katherine Pickle has operated Kamp Paddle Trails on the woody banks of the Illinois River. But this summer could be the last.

Kamp Paddle Trails, where hundreds of youngsters have grown tan and respectful of nature, is up for sale.

"I'm torn," said Mrs. Pickle, a widow. "I've put so much into it and it means a lot to me." But none of the eight Pickle children wants to assume the administrative and financial burdens of the 600-acre camp and Mrs. Pickle wants to retire.

It's not as easy to operate a camp as it used to be, she contends, and age has little to do with it.

It's that the 1980s have caught up with life in the wilderness. The Illinois has become polluted, the spiraling cost of liability insurance has forced the elimination of the horseback riding program, property taxes have doubled and Oklahoma's economic recession is playing havoc with camp enrollment.

"Giving up the riding program broke our hearts," she said.

Children, she's convinced, must be taught early to appreciate nature.

"Most children are born with a natural wonder for things in nature," she said. "You can see it the first time a child sees a butterfly or an ant running around. If this is encouraged when they're very young it can grow into a lifetime interest or hobby.

"I don't think anyone can be a good citizen without knowing something about nature," she said. "Those who don't appreciate nature are the ones who throw litter out and leave picnic areas a mess."

Mrs. Pickle became a nature enthusiast as a Girl Scout growing up in Mississippi and canoeing in Arkansas.

With extensive backgrounds in camping and water safety, Mrs. Pickle, a former home economics teacher, and her husband, the late Dr. John Pickle, who was dean of students at John Brown University in Siloam Springs, Ark., opened Kamp Paddle Trails in 1951.

All the eight Pickle children took turns being on the staff and became proficient outdoorsmen.

Daughter Pat Pickle Wolf, a Siloam Springs sixth-grade teacher, is the camp's program director and in charge of a new program for gifted children. Grandson Skipper Pickle, a University of Arkansas student, is a canoeing instructor. Granddaughter Susan Pickle, a student at Ouachita Baptist University in Arkadelphia, Ark., is a counselor and daughter-in-law Donna Pickle tends the horses. Son David Pickle is business manager.

Several more Pickles have nature-related careers, including a son with a Ph.D. in entomology and a grandson who directs a Texas camp for emotionally disturbed children.

Mrs. Pickle said the camping experience had been especially meaningful for children with troubled home lives.

Over the years, the country's changing sociology has become evident in the campers, she said.

"There are more behavior problems and junior high girls have gotten more aggressive toward the boys," she said.

But camp remains an annual high point for the 7-to 15-year-olds who come from a five-state area and in the past as far away as South America. Many are second-generation campers whose parents learned to paddle a canoe at Kamp Paddle Trails.

Older campers follow tradition in taking a three-day 75-mile canoe trip downstream to Tahlequah. Campers also participate in cookouts, swimming, arts and crafts, nature study, hikes and land sports.

There's little time, Mrs. Pickle said, for homesickness. She doesn't recall anyone going home early.

"We let them find a turtle or catch a fish or groom a colt," she said. "By then, they forget all about it."

Woman's longtime expertise in smoking fish is popular

LITTLE FALLS, Minn. (AP) — Anna Hamernick doesn't mind getting a little dirty. Not when there are fish involved.

These days, she can usually be found sauntering between her home in Little Falls and a tiny building "out back."

The building doesn't look like much from the road; just a tiny cement shack, worn with age. Puffs of smoke curl from the chimney and drift from behind the metal door.

But if you live in Morrison County, and have ever latched onto a Minnesota sucker, mullet or carp, you'll probably recognize the sweet smell of fish smoking. You'll probably recognize Hamernick, too. Local fishermen have been buying their bait from her and bringing their catch back for smokin' for almost 50 years.

"She is kind of a legend around these parts," said Louie Filippi, retired Little Falls school teacher and avid sportsman. "I don't think that anyone who has been around the county and did any fishing doesn't know her."

Hamernick isn't the kind of person who likes to talk about herself and doesn't put on her fanciest clothes for visitors — not when there is work to do. Smoking fish is messy business. Her tattered scarf and well-worn jacket reveal she has done her share of work.

"I know that they are 'ishy' fish, but they're good tasting after they are smoked," said Hamernick, as she carried a cardboard box filled with freshly smoked fish onto her porch. The pungent smell quickly filled the room.

Hamernick knows all about fish. People around these parts of the county describe her as the "spunky 86-year-old who always knows where they are biting." Hamernick and her husband seemed to always know where to drop a line. For more years than most people can remember, the couple bought and sold minnows and worms out of their home and shared a few secrets.

"I don't think I ate a meal in three months that was finished in one sitting when we were selling minnows," she recalled with a laugh. "People were always knocking at the door."

People liked the home atmosphere and the first-class service that Hamernick gave, according to Filippi. "Their home wasn't fancy but everyone was always welcome.

"They were close to the earth, respected water and lakes, loved the outdoors and never gouged anyone," he said.

"She always has information about where the fish are biting and is generally willing to share it," said Jerry Ray, a customer for more than 25 years.

The four large minnow tanks in the basement were the source of "the best minnows around," say the fishermen. Hamernick may have gotten a little irritated by the interruptions, but she was "always pretty easy to get along with," they said.

Hamernick first started smoking fish in 1947 after watching a man smoke some of her catch.

Dear Abby

Soldier's marriage views give wife battle fatique

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1986 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: I got married seven months ago to a soldier in the U.S. Army. When it came time for me to get my I.D. card, I found out that I married a man who already had a wife in Germany!

Now he tells me that the marriage that took place in Germany is not considered a legal marriage in the United States. Is this a line of bull or what? He lies so much I don't know where I stand with him. We've had some serious arguments over it. I'm not sure if I'm married or not.

He says he doesn't love me anymore and is bored. I would leave him, but I think I'm pregnant. Holy cow, what a mess!

Please tell me where I can get some straight answers. He's a sergeant and draws good pay.

DESPERATE ARMY WIFE

DEAR WIFE: See the Army chaplain and tell him exactly what you've told me. He will straighten out the mess, and your husband's commanding officer will straighten out the sergeant.

* * *

DEAR ABBY: I have a "gripe" I've never seen in your column. What do you think of a teen-ager sending a graduation announcement addressed to simply "Mary Brown," when Mary Brown is in her 80s?

One such girl just missed getting a nice graduation gift from me. Where has respect for the elderly gone?

B.B. IN VA.

DEAR B.B.: In this case it hasn't "gone" anywhere. It never existed. Children cannot be expected to know what they haven't been taught. You missed an opportunity to give that young lady a valuable gift that would serve her for a lifetime: a book on etiquette.

* * *

DEAR ABBY: I am fuming over your "advice" to "Unappreciated in Ohio": "Do what you can for your parents without thoughts of being repaid."

This is the most disgustingly hypocritical, sanctimonious, holier-than-thou nonsense I have ever come across in your or any other advice column! What utopian planet do you live on? Old people can be selfish, greedy and ungrateful — just like young ones. This ungrateful old mom has lived off two of her eight children and has amassed a small fortune, which she is now proposing to distribute equally between all eight children, including the six who never did more than send a plant for Mother's Day. Legally, this is her right, but morally it is deplorable.

Abby, this was your golden opportunity to read a lecture on gratitude to ungrateful parents who take advantage of the good-natured child who takes them in while doting on the ones who ignore them.

If I were "Unappreciated," I would tell Mom to either start paying for her room and board or divide the pleasure of her company between all eight of the beneficiaries of her "share-and-share-alike" will. And to please let me know which of the other six plant-senders she'd like to "visit" starting next month.

Old people deserve no special treatment just because they are old. They should take note of how their children treat them, and reciprocate accordingly in their wills.

Harsh advice? Yes, but fair. Anything else is garbage!

DISGUSTED IN BOSTON

DEAR DISGUSTED: Thus far the score: "Unappreciated in Ohio," 133; Abby, 27.

WARREN HASSE

FROM THE NOTEPAD: "I'm 15, going on 65," fun-loving BOB GIESE told his secretary last week. A couple of days later, the three-time Tri-State Seniors golf champion suffered a fatal heart attack. He got that 65, however, in the final round of last year's play and I've never seen a better round played. He joked with friends afterward that he thought he would just retire then, as champion. Representing the TSSGA at the services Monday were Association President E.V. PRICE of Childress and past president TOM MORRIS, along with secretary FLOYD SACKETT and four-time champion and past secretary J.R. BROWN, as well as many Association members and wives. Competitive play in the 52nd event began today, with the championship slated for Friday. Gallerying is free...Speaking of great performances, I never expect to see two more exciting and courageous than telecast last weekend. The talented Russian national basketball team, down nine points with 47 seconds left to play, and the 30-second shot clock running, rallied to win over Yugoslavia, a miraculous performance. And then two days later, in Mexico City, American Davis Cupper TIM MAYOTTE was down two games to one, serving two match points down, also called up enough inner strength, personal pride and stamina to give America a victory. Don't ever say tennis can't be exciting, even for someone who doesn't truly understand the tactical and psychological part of the sport...Wasn't that former West Texas State faculty representative LEON TREKELL I saw among the small crowd of Americans cheering for the USA at Mexico City?...If the Pentagon pulled all of the Army boxers off the Goodwill Games' USA team, how come DAVID ROBINSON (U.S. Naval Academy) got to play basketball? I'm glad he did; it was the difference in a gold medal and just a trip to Spain...Bumper sticker: "Don't mess with Texas; Mark and the Legislature have it messed up enough-"...Good thing the Cowboys will be in England when HARVEY MARTIN's book, Texas Thunder, is released. Additional information is the 12-year member of America's Team will have a much smaller circle of friends after they read it...KAREN CHRISTENSEN, former assistant sports information director at West Texas State, has been named women's SID at San Jose State...Thanks to the city for the immediate action repairing the dangerous street area at the intersection of Kentucky and Russell. Now, can we work on getting tree limbs and bushes cut so intersection STOP signs are visible. Your ever-observant patrolling police cars should be able to identify every one of them over one 24-hour shift...The Phoenix, Ariz. Stadium Commission has approved hiring a San Francisco developer to build a multi-sport stadium with retractable roof for that great desert metropolis longing for major league baseball and NFL football. With that roof pulled back, the NBA Phoenix Suns could become the Phoenix Stars-...Did you know former major league pitcher DICK BOSMAN, now pitching coach with the Chicago White Sox, puts on the catching gear and personally warms up the starting pitcher on the sidelines before each game?

Another former Harvester in a head coaching spot is DAWRENCE RICE, 1950's vintage, with a long and successful career at Porterville, California. And GREG WRIGHT, son of the late J.N. WRIGHT who was one of the all-time great effort-giving athletes at PHS, is coaching at Weatherford. Greg was an outstanding defensive back and student body leader at UT-Arlington, a tremendous asset to any athletic program...Even if the USFL loses it's life-support lawsuit against the NFL, will the New Jersey Generals survive as an expansionist team? I hope so, simply because of the Panhandle flavor; president is JERRY ARGOVITZ of Borger, while former Harvester JOHN JENKINS is offensive coordinator...All the fuss about the USSR bending various rules in the Goodwill Games is probably made by the same golfer who pads his handicap all week, then shoots a 69 in tournament play to win the prizes. I know a fellow who does that, and he should be ashamed...In the wake of announcing DICK VERSACE will not be rehired after the 1986-87 season ends, Bradley University is facing the same problem that plummeted a WTSU basketball program that was on the rise. Bradley's cream of the crop players, as they did at WT, are threatening to leave, saying they came to play for Versace. Dick, who signed a new one-year contract at 9 a.m. 10 days ago, then hopped a jet to Italy sixty minutes later, has publicly urged the players to stay with the school...Let me join the long list of sports fans upset with Channel 7's domineering attitude of refusing to carry Monday Night Baseball. Baseball is probably too wholesome, compared to the lousy rock fare presented. Ch. 7's program director is obviously not one of the Seven Who Care about the sports fans, or even the young people of the viewing area.

Boooooo!...The First National Bank of Spearman Tennis Open for juniors and adults will be held July 31-Aug. 1. Contact DON TOWNSON, 806-659-5544 to enter...The phone call wasn't really necessary, at 4 a.m. "This is a special tape recording for the Scholarship Opportunity Plan." Slam went my receiver. There oughta be a law!...SCOTT VERPLANK, whose Dad was an Amarillo native, has received the Hawkins Award as the top college golfer of the year, having captured the 1986 NCAA individual title...Don't know what it has to do with sports, but IVO (Mrs. Malcolm) DENSON of Pampa flew over the North Pole last week as part of a three-week Alaskan trip. Wonder if she spotted that golf ball I hit off the 18th tee at the Clarendon CC...How did you enjoy the World Cup matches? "Smashing, absolutely smashing," answered JOHN McCAUSLAND. The London-born former Pampan once coached the Pampa HS soccer team. Yes, PHS did field a team one year...And BETTY JOYCE SCOTT EWING, here visiting her No. 1 Aggie, father George, is just as lovely and vivacious as she was while serving as Harvester head cheer leader.

All-Stars lose to Childress

Pampa fell to Childress, 5-2, in the opening game of the District Little League baseball tournament Tuesday at Panhandle.

Pampa's only hit in the game came from Nacho Vargas.

Tarin Peet pitched a four-hitter in defeat while striking out five and walking three.

The score was tied 2-all going into the fifth inning when Pampa committed three errors and a Childress hit a home run.

Pampa's has to win tonight against Dumas to stay alive in the double-elimination tournament. Gametime is 6 p.m.

Canyon defeated Dumas, 11-7, in the other first-round game. Canyon and Childress play tonight at 8 p.m.

Brewers win over Angels

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — Cecil Cooper drove in four runs with a double and single and Rob Deer homered Tuesday night, giving the Milwaukee Brewers a 6-2 triumph over the California Angels.

Rookie Juan Nieves, 9-5, pitched five innings for the victory. Bryan Clutterbuck, making his second major-league appearance, shut out California on three hits for 3 1-3 innings and Mark Clear got the final two outs.

Cooper's two-run double capped a three-run fifth against Don Sutton, 8-7, that gave Milwaukee a 4-0 lead. Deer led off the inning with his 17th homer and Cooper's two-out double drove in Paul Molitor, who had doubled, and Ernest Riles, who walked.

Cooper rapped a two-run single in the ninth.

Eshleman Tri-State medalist again

By L.D. STRATE
Sports Editor

Harvey Eshleman of Kemp finds himself in a familiar position after Tuesday's first round of play in the Tri-State Seniors Tournament.

Eshleman toured the Pampa Country Club's 18 holes in 71 strokes, even par, to claim medalist honors for the second time. It was in 1984 that the 67-year-old Kemp golfer was medalist with another even-par 71.

Last year's medalist, Jack Williams, is second with a two-over-par 73. Williams was one under at the turn and leading Eshleman by one stroke, but the Plainview linkster quickly cut into his lead on the back nine. Williams surrended his advantage when he bogeyed the 12th hole and Eshleman dropped in a birdie. Williams closed within one twice, but his par on No. 18 just wasn't good enough as Eshleman dropped in his fourth birdie of the day. For the day, Eshleman, shot par or better on a dozen holes.

Williams, 58-years-old won the Tri-State title in the 1982 rain-shortened tournament while Eshleman is looking for his first championship.

Five players are tied for third at 74, including 1983 champion Jake Broyles of Lamesa. Others are Tommy Pletcher of Perryton, Charles Hefner of Dallas, Everett Gauldin of Vernona and Andy Manning of Richardson.

Among a threesome tied at 75 is Chester Darnell, who is looking to become the first Pampa golfer to win the tournament. Milton Kasch and Ray Hayes of Enid, Okla. join Darnell.

The championship flight consisted of 32 golfers and will be cut to 16 after today's round. The 16 golfers who fail to survive the cut will move into the president's flight. The championship flight will be medal play while the other flights, also consisted of 16 players each, will be involved in match play today and Thursday.

Friday, the four remaining unbeaten players will compete in an 18-hole medal-play final. Thursday's match-play losers compete in an 18-hole medal play consolation round.

Eshleman also led a four-man team to victory in a scramble. Eshleman, along with Terrill Sharp of DeLeon, George Beardsley of Dallas and Bob Curry of Dallas shot a 60 in the scramble competition. Championship flight players apply their scramble scores to the first round of the championship flight.

Randy White not worried about age

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (AP) — Randy White, who would rather do wind sprints than be interviewed, scrapes his lunch plate and ponders the question about his advancing age of 33.

"What's old for a football player?" White asks, fixing his questioner with a hard look. "The last I heard you're measured on performance, not on age."

White, the Cowboys' No. 1 draft pick in 1975, doesn't cotton to questions about his age or the longevity of the defensive line which has three starters over 30 — himself, Ed Jones and John Dutton.

"Everybody is looking good in practice," White said. "Where's all that age stuff start anyway?"

White, who had 10 sacks last year, is having one of his best training camps although he is just working once a day.

He had off-season surgery. Both knees were probed by an arthoscope.

"The knees feel real good," he said. "They are just a little sore."

White is an All-Pro but you'd never know it talking to him. He's low-key, almost bashful to a point.

He tells a questioner "my interviews aren't very exciting but they're the best I can do."

White says "What I've done in the past doesn't mean a thing. My philosophy is simple. I try as hard as I can and do the best I can on every play."

He has so frustrated opposition offenses that they know routinely double-and triple-team him.

"I don't mind that much," says White who has learned karate to deal with holders in the offensive line. "If they gang up on me that frees somebody else."

Coach Tom Landry said White "is the premier tackle in the business. He should remain at a Pro Bowl level for several more years."

He is so crazy about football he even loves practice.

"I don't think of it as drudgery," White said.

However, he did admit to one encroachment ofl advancing age. He's not as fond of training camp as he used to be.

"I enjoy training camp less every year," said White, who missed camp in 1985 over a contract dispute.

Landry said White always gives it 100 percent.

"When Randy lines up on you, he doesn't care whether you're All-Pro or whether you're a rookie, you're going to get the same treatment," Landry said.

Asked what he was going to do when he retired, White laughed "I won't be a fishing guide like a lot of people think. I might get in the furniture business. I'll give you a call."

Pampa Bambinos eliminated in state meet

Pampa was eliminated by Plainview, 1-0, in the Bambino State Tournament held last week in Plainview.

With the win, Plainview advances to the Southwest Regional Tournament in Little Rock, Ark. Saturday, July 26. They play the Arkansas state champions in the first round of play at 3 p.m.

Outstanding defense by both teams highlighted the game. Pampa played errorless ball while Plainview committed one error.

"It was the finest defensive performance by a Pampa team I've ever seen," said Pampa Coach Robert Morris. "It looked just like the big leaguers play."

The game's only run came on a homer by Euriquez in the second inning.

Ealvan pitched a two-hitter for the winners while striking out 16 and walking one. Cedrick Wilbon and Larry Reed combined to pitch a three-hitter for Pampa. They struck out three and walked five.

Donnie Medley and Troy Black had one base hit apiece. Euriquez had a homer and single for Plainview while teammate Rivera had a single.

Defensive standouts for Pampa were Dwight Nickleberry, Troy Black, Heath Stevens, Brandon Brashears and Brandon Wells.

Plainview defeated Pampa, 9-6, in the opening game of the tournament.

The winning pitcher was Albert Jimenez, who pitched a three-hitter while striking out 14 and walking three. Cedrick Wilbon, who took the loss, struck out six, walked six and yielded six hits.

Brandon Brashears had a single and double to lead Pampa's hitting attack. Monty Waters had a triple.

Erriquez, Morales and Brazier had two hits each.

Defensive standouts for Pampa were Joseph Yurich, Dwight Nickleberry, Brandon Wells, Jesse Hernandez and Brandon Brashears.

In its next game, Pampa bounced back to defeat Tulia, 15-0, on a three-hitter by Brandon Wells. Wells struck out seven and walked one.

Rivera was the losing pitcher, giving up ten hits while striking out seven and walking seven.

Dwight Nickleberry knocked in four runs with a pair of base hits for Pampa. Brandon Brashears had a double while Brandon Wells had two singles and a double. Joseph Yurich and Donnie Medley each had a single while and Troy Black had two singles.

Defensive standouts for Pampa were Donnie Medley, Buddy Plunk, Jesse Hernandez and Cederick Wilbon.

Yanks close in on Red Sox

NEW YORK (AP) — It is time, says Dave Winfield, to make a move.

The New York right fielder did his share of the heavy work Tuesday night as the Yankees pulled within four games of the American League East-leading Boston Red Sox by beating the Texas Rangers 9-1.

"You can't say we didn't play well in the first half," Winfield said. "We were 11 games over .500.

"But that was only good for second place. And after the second half, that's it. There are no more halves."

The Yankees equalled their season high with four home runs — by Winfield, Don Mattingly, Rickey Henderson and Claudell Washington — in ripping Texas. The Red Sox, meanwhile, lost their fifth straight, 4-2 to the Oakland A's, allowing the Yankees to pull within four games for the first time since June 24.

"We knew they (Boston) lost last night, and we knew they lost today," Winfield said. "And we knew we had the opportunity to be four back. We're creeping up on them."

For the second straight night, Texas' starting pitching failed. Bobby Witt went only 2 2-3 innigs in an 8-4 loss Monday night, and Ed Correa managed just 1 2-3 innings in Tuesday night's game. Correa gave up six runs on seven hits and three walks.

"Correa said he just grooved some fastballs," Texas Manager Bobby Valentine said. "He didn't use all his pitches."

The loss was the sixth straight for Texas, and Valentine was upset.

"I don't know what it is. Maybe the midseason blahs," Valentine said.

Baseball's tricks of the trade

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Just above the centerfield fence, just below the bleachers, almost invisible without close inspection, there used to be a television camera at Arlington Stadium.

When the Texas Rangers were home, the camera would focus on whomever happened to be catching for whatever team Texas was playing. There was only one viewer for this private, closed-circuit showing, a player sitting in manager Billy Martin's office.

When he had deciphered the catcher's signs, he would communicate to the dugout via walkie talkie. That allowed time for the batter to be alerted as to what pitch was coming.

If someone hollered from the dugout, for example, "Look for your pitch," it might mean fastball. "Take a good swing" could mean a breaking pitch was coming.

That sort of gamemanship ended at Arlington Stadium after Martin was fired, more than a decade ago.

"But," says current Rangers Manager Bobby Valentine, "not a game goes by where teams don't try to get a competitive edge."

Call it tricks of the trade. Call it cheating. Where do you draw the line? The general at7de toward stretching the rules, or at least being t3m to your advantage, seems to be that anything goes if you are cunning enough not to get caught.

The vast majority of the time, trying to get an edge is more mundane than electronic surveillance.

It is a first baseman coming off the bag just a little early on a close play.

It is a shortstop dancing over second base before he gets the ball on a double play.

It is a second baseman pretending to be waiting for a throw, hoping to trick an unwary runner into sliding, or at least slowing down.

It is a runner tagging up and leaving just a little early on a fly ball.

It is a pitcher who knows what he can get away with throwing to first, even if the move is technically a balk.

Grantland Rice once wrote that it's not winning and losing that counts, it's how you play the game.

In the big leagues, it's winning and losing that counts.

That's why there are pitchers around who will look for an edge when they need just a little something extra on a pitch. They will push off maybe six inches in front of the pitching rubber.

"Watch Phil Niekro," one American League official said of the Cleveland Indians knuckleballer. "Sometimes, with two strikes, he'll move up a few inches and throw the ball. And he's never been caught."

Pitchers, of course, have other ways of trying to get ahead of hitters. A scuffed baseball can be made to sink or sail. Some pitchers, such as Don Sutton, are suspected of carrying small pieces of sandpaper in their glove to make their mark.

Former Rangers lefthander Rick Honeycutt, then with Seattle, was suspended after a thumbtack was found bandaged to his thumb.

One time, the umpires came to the mound to search for sandpaper while Sutton was pitching. They didn't find any. They did find a note that Sutton had tucked into his glove. "Nice try. You're getting warmer," it read.

Sometimes pitchers don't even have to do their dirty work. Infielders can scuff a ball while throwing it around after an out. A catcher can sharpen a buckle on his shin guards to nick the cover.

A favorite trick of the late Elston Howard when catching for the New York Yankees was to pretend to lose his balance while squatting. He would put out his right hand, with the ball in it, to steady himself while grinding it into the dirt.

Gaylord Perry was best known for throwing a spitball. In Cleveland one night, though, he smuggled a special resin bag to the mound. It had flour in it, and on several occasions Perry got a handfull of it, then released his pitch into a distracting puff of white powder.

"First they say my pitches are too wet. Then they complaint they're too dry," he shrugged, innocently.

And how did Perry load up his wet one? A former catcher of his once confided that after Perry released a pitch, he would draw his hand back across whatever part of his anatomy was hiding his Vaseline that night. While everybody was watching the ball, Perry was loading up.

Flutie may switch to end

The Heisman Trophy winner who got a million-dollar ticket into pro football from the quarterback's slot, may switch to the receiving end to avoid sitting on the bench.

How well he catches the ball may decide his playing time with the New Jersey Generals.

Thanks to a merger between the Generals and the now-defunct Houston Gamblers, Flutie is on the same team with Jim Kelly, twice the United States Football League's leader in total offense and passing.

Kelly once threw for 4,623 yards and 39 touchdowns in one season with the Gamblers. Meanwhile, Flutie had something of a mediocre rookie year with the Generals. He completed 134 of 281 passes for 2,109 yards and 13 touchdown with 14 interceptions.

While Flutie isn't giving up that position, he isn't ruling out a switch. He's been catching passes during informal workouts this week in Houston.

"I'm not thinking about the competition now," Flutie said. "I'm just trying to learn the offense to the point I can be comfortable about it."

He still is in the running for the lead quarterback's position and will share practice time with Kelly and Todd Dillon, the second man in NCAA passing history with 3,587 yards, Coach Jack Pardee said.

"We're still counting on him being a quarterback, and he's a darn good one," Pardee said. "But if it came down to whether he sat on the bench or played, I think he probably would come and ask us to switch him somewhere he could play."

Flutie, who has a $5 million contract, agreed.

"If I was on this team and sitting the bench, I'd want to be doing something. I'd want to play somewhere," he said.

Howser's brain tumor malignant; can't be removed, doctors say

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Dick Howser's brain tumor is malignant, doctors have learned, and cannot be entirely removed.

The 50-year-old manager of the World Series champion Kansas City Royals underwent a three-hour operation Tuesday, in which parts of the tumor were taken out, officials said.

"A portion was sent to pathology for their diagnosis," said Dr. Charles Clough, the neurologist who performed the operation. "Our therapy as to where we go from here will depend on that pathology report."

Clough said the report should be ready in two or three days. Royals' team physician Dr. Paul Meyer said the tumor, on the left frontal lobe, could not be completely removed for fear of damaging healthy tissue.

Howser was admitted to St. Luke's Hospital last Thursday night, just 48 hours after managing the American League to a 3-2 victory over the National League in the All-Star Game at Houston. He had been complaining of headaches and a stiff neck and was showing signs of mental confusion.

Doctors said he was awake following surgery and was able to move his limbs.

"He was very alert and he knew (his wife) Nancy," Joe Burke, president of the Royals, said.

Clough declined to answer questions, but said in a statement he read to newsmen that the tumor "appeared to be a type of tumor called a glioma."

A glioma tumor, also called a primary tumor, is commonly treated with radiation therapy. Dr. Robert Morantz, a Kansas City neurologist, said in an interview last week that primary tumors are the most lethal and the most difficult to remove.

Clough told the Kansas City Times that he was able to see all of the tumor without the use of the ultrasound imaging devices often used to detect the exact location of tumors.

"I removed all I could, using a suction and cauterizing device," Clough said. "The operation went well."

The news stunned the team, currently in Baltimore for a series against the Orioles.

"We were all obviously hopeful and optimistic that the biopsy would indicate the tumor was benign," said General Manager John Schuerholz, who met with team members behind closed doors. "That was the worst news of all that we could have gotten out of this. We're just going to have to remain positive."

The Royals are under the direction of interin manager Mike Ferraro, Howser's close friend and third base coach — who lost a kidney to cancer surgery in 1983.

"I can't say anything. It's been enough trying to control myself for five days," Ferraro, 41, said as he wiped tears from his eyes.

Howser guided the 1985 Royals to one of the greatest post-season comebacks in baseball history. Only five times in the history of the best-of-seven World Series format had a team recovered from a 3-to-1 deficit to take the title. Yet, the Royals did it against Toronto in the best-of-7 American League playoffs and repeated the trick against the St. Louis Cardinals in the World Series.

Assets versus income

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — A new Census Bureau study has created a stir in political and economic circles because, among other things, it reveals a sharp disparity of assets between white and blacks.

But it does something more as well: It removes the focus from income, which long has been the primary measure of economic status, and shifts that focus to a more significant measure, the manner in which that income is used.

Why is it that two families of like income can live radically different lives, one accumulating assets, the other a pile of bills?

The consumer's dollar is the subject of a great battle every day of the week, with billions of stimuli constantly bombarding him and her to spend. To spend is easy, but to know what to spend on is not always easy.

For example, many families place home ownership at the top of the their list, and sacrifice in order to achieve the down payment. Some families prefer to have the use of their income immediately, and rent rather than buy.

While some families are better off renting, and conceivably can come out ahead by doing so, home-ownership is by far the biggest factor in the sharp diversity of assets noted in the Census study.

Home oweceives special treatment in the United States and in many other countries. Homeowners are allowed various tax deductions, whereas renters receive few. Homeowners also receive preferential treatment from banks.

Because part of their monthly paymenjo wobild equity, homeowners are automatic savers. They are investors too, since home prices generally rise, often sharply. Some, in fact, have doubled in the past four years.

In contrast, those who pay rent receive few, if any, tax benefits. And they build no equity. Moreover, they are often damaged badly by inflation, whereas homeowners sometimes benefit from that condition.

Oddly, assets as a determination of economic well-being — as opposed to income — has been all but ignored by public officials and sometimes even by bankers.

The granting of home-mortgage loans, for example, is often on the basis of income rather than assets — even today, when assets such as home equity are sometimes as available for spending as money in a checking account.

That is, equity that once was frozen in a house until the homeowner sold or took out a second mortgage can now be borrowed by the stroke of a pen. Unlike the situation just a decade ago, equity is now a liquid asset.

No wonder the Census Bureau study has created so much attention. It focuses on "permanent" assets, an objective measure, as a determinant of wealth — rather than on income, which can mean many things, depending on how it is used.

'Captain Midnight' pleads guilty

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (AP) — Investigators using a complicated process of elimination have unmasked "Captain Midnight," who admitted in court he overrode HBO's satellite delivery system to transmit a message.

John R. MacDougall, owner of a home satellite dish business in Ocala that officials said was hurt by cable companies' decisions to scramble their signals, agreed to plead guilty to illegal transmission of a satellite signal in exchange for a $5,000 fine and one year probation.

He could have faced a maximum $10,000 fine and a year imprisonment.

MacDougall, who was released on a $5,000 bond, and his attorney, John M. Green Jr., refused to comment as they left the federal court buildingh Tuesday after entering the plea before a U.S. magistrate.

Sentencing is set for Aug. 26 and MacDougall can retract his plea if the judge will not accept the arrangement.

Early on April 27, MacDoqgall was the only one working at a satellite transmission center called Central Florida Teleport with the kind of equipment needed to disrupt the HBO signal.

Although the video sneak attac was only a minor annoyance to HBO and its viewers, the Federal Communications Commission launched a big investigation because of the potential problems a less selective video hacker might cause.

"The potential fo damage to critical satellite frequencies cannot be underestimated," said Richard Smith, chief of the FCC's field mperations bureau. He noted that critical telephone calls, air traffic control, military data and medical information are sent by satellite and that even an accidental interruption of one of these messages could cause dire consequences.

On April 27, HBO viewers saw a message replace the movie "The Falcon and the Snowman." The message said:

"Goodevening HBO
"From Captain Midnight
"$12.95/month
"No way!
"(Showtime/Movie Channel beware.)"

The wording was an apparent reference to HBO's decision to scramble its satellite-delivered signal so it could not be watched by those not paying for HBO, officials said.

On Jan. 15, HBO became the first cable TV network to scramble its signal full time. Showtime and The Movie Channel scrambled their programming full time on May 27.

King Hassan will address nation

RABAT, Morocco (AP) — King Hassan II, who has been sequestered in a closed-door summit with Israeli Prime Minister Shimon Peres, will address the nation in a televised speech today, the official Moroccan news agency announced.

The news agency, Maghreb Arabe Presse, said the king would speak at 9:30 p.m. (4:30 p.m. EDT). It did not mention Peres' visit for the third straight day. Moroccan officials declined comment.

Western diplomats insisting on anonymity said Peres was planning to fly back to Israel later in the day, following 48 hours of talks with Hassan in the king's mountain retreat of Ifrane, 125 miles east of Rabat.

Peres, who arrived Monday, was the first Israeli prime minister in office to visit any Arab country other than Egypt. The sources said the two leaders discussed a possible new approach toward a Middle East peace settlement.

Hassan is chairman of the Arab League and president of the Jerusalem Committee of the Islamic Conference.

Consumer prices are down

WASHINGTON (AP) — Consumer prices, half-way through 1986, are down at an annual rate of 0.2 percent, their best performance in more than three decades, the government said today. The good news came despite a 0.5 percent increase in June.

Last month's increase, the steepest since November, followed a 0.2 percent May gain.

Yet, due largely to three months of falling prices earlier in the year, inflation at the retail level for all of 1986 is now expected to be 2 percent or less.

Both gasoline and food prices rose last month, the Labor Department said.

Gasoline prices, on the heels of a 2.5 percent May gain, picked up even further, rising 3.1 percent in June. Analysts note that, however, by the end of the month, pump prices had once more turned downward.

Food prices were up a tiny 0.1 percent after a 0.4 percent increase in the preceding month.

The year-to-date reading was the best since six-month showing since a 0.4 percent drop in 1955.

Despite the June gasoline price increase, overall energy costs this year have fallen an at annual rate of 40.2 percent.

Grocery store prices declined at an annual rate of 0.5 percent through June while restaurant meals increased 4.1 percent for the same period.

New A&M chancellor appointed

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — As the new chancellor of the Texas A&M University System, Perry Adkisson says he will continue to play a role in efforts to rejuvenate the sour Texas economy.

"We must develop the technologies that will give birth to the new industries needed to keep Texas economically competitive on national and global fronts," he said. "We must also educate the workforce that will be needed to staff the additional jobs that will be created by these industries."

Adkisson, 57, an entomologist, has been deputy chancellor since 1984 and has been an A&M faculty member since 1958.

He was named to the top position Tuesday by university officials who praised his experience and scholarship.

The apppointment is affective immediately.

"My first priority will be to maintain quality, stability and continuity in ou Adkisson said.

He also said the A&M system has an important role in revitalizing the economy of Texas.
