Taking over the reins of law enforcement in Stanton is a duo of 19-year-old twin brothers, Chris Becker, left, who works as a patrolman, and Curtis Becker, police chief.

Stanton police do 'double duty'

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

STANTON — "We're it," Stanton Chief of Police Curtis Becker says quietly as he hunches over a cup of coffee at the local Dairy Queen on a crisp Saturday morning.

Becker is referring to himself and his identical twin brother, Chris. At 19, the engaging, red-haired duo comprises the entire police force in this drowsy little community that's been shaped by oil and agriculture over the years.

Stanton serves as home to 3,000 law-abiding souls and "a few old soreheads" whose main interests, judging by the local newspaper, center on 4-H activities and high school football.

Becker may not be the youngest police chief in Texas, but he's unique in that he's still attending recruit school near Midland Regional Airport some 30 miles west of here. Brother Chris won't begin the 10-week cadet training program until the spring session opens in March.

Curtis joined the force in mid-June and was promoted to acting chief when former chief Jerry Register resigned in the heat of a political dispute four months later. Chris hired on as a patrolman in July.

"We're one man shy," Curtis says in a resonant voice that seems suited to his lean, muscular frame that stands just under 6 feet, 2 inches tall. "They're (the city council) taking applications for chief, but I understand they're looking at me, too.

"Most of the time it's pretty quiet around here. Every once in a while something happens, though. There's not a whole lot of fights, but we get a few people for public intoxication.

"Basically, all a chief does here is what a patrolman does — just a little more of it. It's mostly stuff that drifts over from Midland and Big Spring."

He and Chris — the sons of a Big Spring truck driver — did boot camp together at Fort Jackson, S.C. Both are corporals in the Army Reserves. Both are shy and polite. Both weigh 165 pounds. And both conduct themselves in an unassuming way that commands respect and gives them an air of maturity many older men would envy .

Each is utterly indistinguishable from the other — except in Curtis' mind. Glancing at his brother, who is parked alongside him now in the town's only other squad car as they wait for a funeral procession to get under way, Curtis says: "You can see he's uglier than I am."

They take turns doing nine-hour shifts and spell each other on call for the remainder of the 24-hour work day, seven days a week.

Walking into the Martin County Sheriff's Department, Curtis says: "We work pretty closely with them, especially at night when we're on alone.

"The city treats us fantastically, and the reception from the public has been great. If anything has been said (about their age), it's been said behind our backs. We get along fine with the kids especially. It's a neat little town."

Later, as he's back on routine patrol down streets lined with clipped lawns and coned shrubs, Becker waves to passing motorists and yawning residents who emerge from well-maintained homes into a chill Saturday wind.

"Most of the problems we have come from out-of-towners, mainly speeding," he says. "They don't pay attention to the speed laws. But basically, we don't have any trouble from people. Being in a dry county is pretty good. It keeps down the fights."

Tucking a pinch of snuff behind his lower lip, Becker laughs and adds, "But if somethin' big does happen, I may swallow my dip."

An elderly out-of-town motorist stops in the middle of the street and flags him down for directions to the Church of Christ. Instead of merely pointing out the way, Becker says: "You can just follow me, sir."

Has there ever been any excitement in a town whose sole movie house closed down several years ago? "Oh, I have had a couple high-speed chases," he says without expression. "One guy in a pickup truck got away on a dirt road I wasn't familiar with."

Has being named acting chief at such a tender age spoiled him? "I don't think so. You can't afford to let it go to your head."

It started as a 'Brink's job,' but ended with a big bang

By SCOTT KRAFT
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — It began as just another Brink's job.

But it blew the lid off the Weather Underground, a group of 1960s anti-war radicals and 1970s anti-establishment bomb-builders who managed to elude capture for 10 years.

In the 1960s, they protested the Vietnam War and fled from riot and assault charges. In the 1970s, they eluded a FBI manhunt and exploded a bomb in the U.S. Capitol.

When they tripped — their bomb factory blew up in 1970, killing three — they picked themselves back up. They were resilient, tough and slippery.

But last week the terrorist underground leaders were pushing 40 and pushing their luck. At their homes were lists of names, police station floor plans, guns and bomb-making equipment.

This time they made a mistake. And fingerprints, license plate numbers, search warrants — the clues that had rarely worked for police before, began working and working and working.

A week of dogged police effort netted five members of the Weather Underground, a fugitive Black Panther, and two other men with long police records. Authorities continued to search New York City and its suburbs for the remnants of a gang that killed two policemen and a Brink's guard Tuesday.

Finding the nest of radicals came as a "total surprise to everybody," said one federal official.

"They blew their whole (underground) operation," said the official with the Treasury Department's Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms agency in New York. He asked not to be identified.

"Their house of dominoes is falling down. I think before this is all over we'll solve a whole lot of bank robberies."

The FBI special agent in charge in New York, Kenneth Walton, said the arrests had strained, if not broken, the back of the Weather Underground.

"It's got to be in traction," said Kenneth Walton, FBI special agent in charge in New York.

William Kunstler, an attorney who has agreed to represent Katherine Boudin, said Friday authorities may use this incident to blame crime after unsolved crime on radical terrorists, making "it a self-fufilling prophecy that there is a widespread radical terrorist movement in the United States."

Figures from the country's radical past — Katherine Boudin, Judith Clark and David Gilbert — are being held on charges in connection with the death of the Brink's guard and two police officers and the heist of $1.6 million from an armored truck in Clarkstown, N.Y.

Two others — Jeffrey Carl Jones, 33, and Eleanor Stein Raskin, 35, — were arrested in the Bronx early Saturday morning and charged with unlawful flight to avoid prosecution in New Jersey, where they were arrested in 1979 on a charge of unlawful possession of explosives.

Police said there was no evidence Jones and Ms. Raskin had anything to do with the Brink's holdup.

Authorities said all five were members of the May 19 Coalition — a recently formed radical group named for the birthdays of Ho Chi Minh and slain black leader Malcolm X.

The crack in the underground first appeared Tuesday afternoon.

A Brink's armored car pulled up to the Nanuet National Bank at a mall in Clarkstown. Three men jumped out of a van behind the armored truck and a fourth sprang from a nearby bench. All opened fire. Peter Paige, a guard, died instantly. Two other guards were wounded.

Bags containing $1.6 million were grabbed. Five blocks away, the gunmen abandoned the van and jumped into three waiting vehicles, including another van.

The crack in the underground widened when the getaway vehicles ran into a police roadblock.

Radical movement 'in traction' as slain police officers buried

By EILEEN PUTMAN
Associated Press Writer

NYACK, N.Y. (AP) — Thousands of peace officers lined black-bannered village streets Saturday, offering final tribute to two policemen gunned down after a $1.6 million Brink's armored car holdup.

Meanwhile, police and FBI officials in New York City said the underground radical movement was "in traction" because of arrests and raids made since Tuesday's bungled heist.

Sgt. Edward O'Grady and Officer Waverly Brown were mourned Saturday at separate funeral services by friends, families and officers who filled streets and churches.

"They lived as brothers. They worked as a team and they were slain like heroes together," said the Rev. O.T. Moore Jr. in a service for the 45-year-old Brown at the Pilgrim's Baptist Church.

Brown and O'Grady, 32, became the first Rockland County officers killed in the line of duty when they were caught in a fusillade of automatic weapons fire after halting the robbers' getaway van at a roadblock outside Nanuet.

Services were also held Saturday in South River, N.J., for Peter Paige, the Brink's guard who was killed in the holdup in Clarkstown. He was buried in East Brunswick, N.J.

Three members of the Weather Underground — Katherine Boudin, 38, Judith Clark, 31, and David Gilbert, 37 — have been charged with murdering the two policemen and guard.

Authorities said Ms. Boudin, Ms. Clark and Gilbert were members of the May 19 Coalition, a recently formed radical group named for the birthdays of Ho Chi Minh and slain black leader Malcolm X. Another man, 41-year-old Samuel Brown, was also captured Tuesday and has been charged with murder.

Meanwhile, the search for those who escaped after the robbery continued after the arrests Friday of two more members of the Weather Underground and a fugitive Black Panther.

At a news conference in New York on Friday, Police Commissioner Robert McGuire refused to say if a conspiracy of radicals and terrorists was behind the robbery, but police officials said they have made 10 raids in the New York area.

"The whole (terrorist) operation's coming apart at the seams," said a police official who asked not to be identified. "They're panicking, and so far we're on top of it."

And an FBI official said Saturday the raids and arrests had strained, if not broken, the back of the Weather Underground.

"It's got to be in traction," said Kenneth Walton, FBI special agent in charge in New York.

In Nyack, officers from Virginia, New Jersey, Connecticut and New York City and State wore black bands across their shields as a tribute to Brown and O'Grady.

Brown's family, which filled three pews of the church at his funeral, wept as the choir sang "The Battle Hymn of the Republic." Nyack Police Chief Thomas Coffey read a poem entitled "A Part of America Died."

"Somebody killed a police officer today, maybe in your town or mine," he read. "While we slept in comfort behind locked doors, a cop put his life on the line...and a part of America died."

After the service, a single bugler played taps and mourners followed a group of bagpipers playing "Amazing Grace" to the cemetery.

On AWACS: Senators do 'no service'

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG and BARRY SCHWEID
Associated Press Writers

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, fighting to save his embattled arms package for Saudi Arabia, declared Saturday that senators who refuse to see the benefits in the sale for both the United States and Israel "are not doing their country a service."

Reagan also said he has no intention of withdrawing the AWACS sale proposal from Senate consideration, despite vote counts indicating the arms sale was headed for a congressional veto.

"I can say with all my heart we have guaranteed the security of the technology and the security of Israel," he told reporters at nearby Andrews Air Force Base after returning from the 22-nation summit meeting in Cancun, Mexico.

Asked how he thought Wednesday's Senate vote would go, Reagan replied: "I will repeat my cautious but optimistic statement, but say that is what I am back home to get busy with again." The president has scheduled individual meetings with 18 senators over the next three days.

"The greatest security for the United States and the greatest security for Israel rests with the sale of AWACS," Reagan declared. "Senators who refuse to see this I'm afraid are not doing their country a service."

He said those who vote against the AWACS are "not being realistic" about the Middle East, the threat of the Soviet Union there and the need for a U.S. presence to be felt in the region.

Veto of the $8.5 billion arms deal that includes five AWACS radar planes would be an embarassing defeat for the Republican president who, until now, has shown a remarkable ability to get his way in tough confrontations with Congress.

But White House spokesman Larry Speakes told reporters aboard Air Force One on Saturday that "the picture is still good."

"We think it is brighter than it appears," Speakes said during Reagan's return flight. "We believe these meetings next week will put us very close (to winning) in the vote tally."

He was referring to the individual meetings Reagan plans with seven senators on Monday, eight on Tuesday and three on Wednesday, the day of the climactic vote.

Speakes said Monday's sessions would include Sens. Edward Zorinsky, D-Neb.; William Armstrong, R-Colo.; David Boren, D-Okla.; Bob Kasten, R-Wis.; Charles Grassley, R-Iowa; Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas; and Howard Cannon, D-Nev.

Senate Republican leader Howard H. Baker Jr. of Tennessee, who is leading the fight to avert a Senate veto, also maintains that the battle "is still eminently winnable."

But the optimistic views are disputed by Senate opponents who appear to have the numbers on their side.

The latest Associated Press survey of the Senate found 52 opposing the sale, 36 supporting it and nine uncommitted. One senator is regarded as leaning toward supporting the package while two are leaning against it.

Just before Reagan left for the economic summit meeting in Cancun, it was looking as though he would pull out another victory on Capitol Hill. But his momentum was halted when Senate Democratic leader Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia declared his opposition to the sale.

The House already has voted against the deal by a 3-to-1 margin, but the sale will go through unless the Senate also votes against it. No president has ever been denied the power to sell weapons abroad by Congress.

MEXICO CITY — I like Mexico not only because it is a beautiful country with fabulous resorts like Acapulco and Puerto Vallarta on the Pacific coast, and the most recently developed one, Cancun, on the Caribbean side.

Additionally, my family has had friendly relations with and owned land in Mexico for over 100 years. Originally, my grandfather, George Hearst, was invited by Mexican ruler Porfirio Diaz to come to Mexico to locate ore deposits for the government. Because he was a geological genius, he discovered rich gold and silver deposits. Instead of paying him in cash for his services, Diaz gave him title to about a million acres of ranch land in Chihuahua, bordering on Texas. It was developed as a cattle ranch and visited frequently by my father and his family. Hence my sentimental attachment to the country.

Cancun, on the shores of the Yucatan peninsula, was the site of this week's so-called North-South summit meeting, attended by the governments heads of 22 nations. Actually, by North they mean the developed countries of North America, Europe plus Japan. The southern ones are those mostly below the equator whose leaders seem to feel the successfully developed countries of the North have an obligation to bring their standard of living up to ours.

They don't solicit charity. They go a step further and demand it, insin-

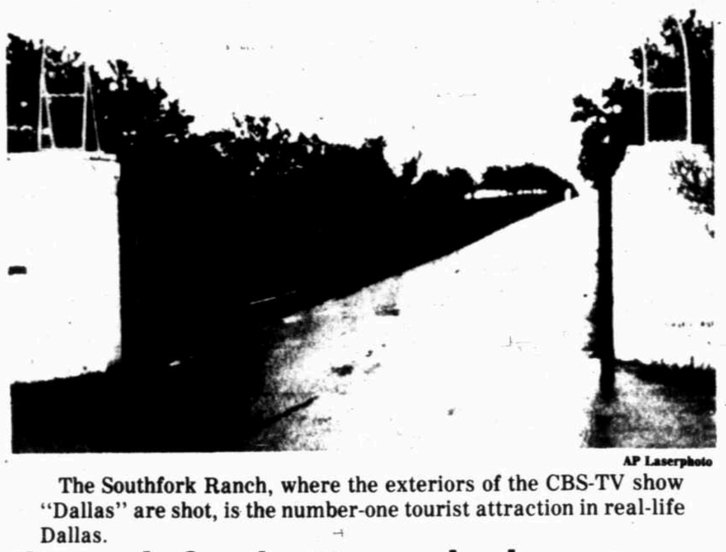
SOUTHFORK RANCH



AP Laserphoto

The Southfork Ranch, where the exteriors of the CBS-TV show "Dallas" are shot, is the number-one tourist attraction in real-life Dallas.

Southfork Ranch beats out Book Depository

EDITOR'S NOTE: For many years, Dallas was best known as the site of the assassination of President John F. Kennedy. But times change, memories fade. Now a Dallas resident is more likely to be asked about Southfork than the grassy knoll near the Book Depository.

By KATHY BAKER
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS (AP) — The recent exhumation of Lee Harvey Oswald's body renewed the controversy over who shot John F. Kennedy. But everybody knows who shot J.R.

The fantasy shooting of the evil TV oilman has pumped new life into the Dallas tourism market, eclipsing curiosity about the real-life shooting of an American president.

The TV show "Dallas" heads into its third season, once again copping the No. 1 spot in the ratings. And Southfork ranch — where the "Dallas" exteriors are shot — has become the No. 1 tourist attraction in real-life Dallas.

His own curiosity about the assassination of John Kennedy spurred John Sisson to open the Kennedy Museum 11 years ago, next door to the School Book Depository from which Lee Harvey Oswald is said to have fired the fatal shot in 1963.

Sisson stocked the building with his collection of Kennedy memorabilia, photographs and newspaper clippings. He said the privately owned museum attracted enough visitors to make it self-supporting after about five years.

He doesn't think the stream of visitors has fallen off noticeably.

But, he said, "some days we're extremely busy, but other days we're just happy to see the postman."

The Dallas tourist traffic has followed the times, and the real shooting of an American president has faded into history, the fantasy shooting of J.R. Ewing has sparked an upsurge in visitors to Southfork.

Ranchhand "Kelly" — he goes only by "Kelly," or if he's feeling formal, "Mr. Kelly" — said the ranch has drawn the curious since Lorimar Productions began using the ranch as the exterior setting of the Ewing's home in 1978.

"But it really started after the 'Who Shot J.R.?' episode," he said. "On Easter Sunday, we estimated 20,000, but that was just a guess. We stopped counting after 5,000."

The traffic on the two-lane farm road north of Dallas led to a lawsuit by neighbors. Kelly said the complainants have moved and dropped the suit.

Merle Foster, director of Visitor Development for the Dallas Chamber of Commerce, said he welcomes anything that draws people and money to Dallas.

"I couldn't tell you much about 'Dallas,' but it's done a world of good for tourism in Dallas," he said. "In the last two years, Southfork has become the No. 1 attraction in the city. It's sort of pushed the Kennedy assassination site into second place."

If Southfork pleases the Chamber, it's been even more of a boon to tour companies. Elizabeth Stewart, Director of Marketing for Grayline Tours in Dallas, said they've added another tour just to handle the Southfork traffic.

Kimberly Moore burst the defense attorney's bubble

By MIKE COCHRAN
Associated Press Writer

LIBERTY, Texas (AP) — One evening last week, before the bubble burst, the lead defense attorney for Vickie Daniel suggested the murder case against his client was no less flimsy than a Bo Derek movie plot.

He agreed that the one-time Dairy Queen waitress killed her husband, Price Daniel Jr., a former speaker of the Texas House.

But the blond defendant insisted it was an accident and the State of Texas had done precious little to prove otherwise.

"You've seen the state's case," lead defense lawyer Jack Zimmerman told dinner companions at Yvonne's, Liberty's one and only club-restaurant.

"That's it."

Zimmerman, 39, was fully convinced the prosecution had no case against his client, a conclusion enforced almost daily by the extensive media coverage.

Zimmerman, a stylish and witty associate of the state's reigning legal lion, Richard "Racehorse" Haynes, thought a rare judicial instructed verdict of acquittal was more than a remote possibility.

In fact, some trial figures close to State District Judge Leonard Giblin suspected that the Beaumont judge was seriously considering such a ruling.

An instructed verdict simply means prosecutors have failed, woefully, to prove their case even before the jury has heard a shred of defense testimony — which is scheduled to begin Monday.

"Carroll's got something, but I don't know what it is, " the judge confided the next evening, referring to District Attorney Carroll Wilborn.

"He's just not the kind to prosecute a case unless he believes that the evidence warrants."

For his own part, Wilborn maintained a certain stoic silence in the face of a relentless defense attack on the investigation of the Jan. 19 shooting.

He did, however, remind reporters he was a prosecutor, not an investigator, and wondered if perhaps they might be a bit les vitriolic.

"I can't help the fact that there were two witnesses to the killing and one of them is in the ground," he said.

"But we're not through yet. Give us a chance."

A reporter asked rather pointedly if he actually believed there was enough evidence to show that Vickie "intentionally and knowingly" killed her husband.

"I think there will be before the trial is over," he said. "Just don't sell us short until you hear the whole case."

Then, at midweek, Wilborn played his trump card. Her name was Kimberly Moore, she was 13 years old and she was Vickie's daughter by her first marriage.

Diverting from the story she had told previously, Kimberly tearfully testified that she saw her mother with a gun and twice heard her threaten Price moments before the shooting.

She said she neither saw nor heard shots fired but when the ambulances came, "I knew Momma shot Price."

Wilborn rested the state's case.

Collins plans to unseat Bentsen

DALLAS (AP) — Declaring that Texas voters want a conservative senator in Washington, Republican Rep. Jim Collins Saturday traveled to five parts of Texas to announce his intention to unseat Democrat Lloyd M. Bentsen Jr.

Collins announced his entrance into the 1982 U.S. Senate race in his hometown of Dallas, along with Houston, San Antonio, Midland-Odessa and Amarillo.

"The people of Texas have told me in my travels around the state that they have more government than they want, more regulations than they need, and more taxes than they can afford to pay," the congressman said in a prepared statement.

'What these Texans told me is that they want strong, conservative representation in Washington. It is that reason that I am today announcing my candidacy for the United States Senate."

Collins said the difference between him and Bentsen "is the difference between a conservative and a liberal" and declared Texans want a senator who "will vote conservative to end inflation and get back to lower interest rates."

"The incumbent has voted for more and more government spending. I have voted for less and less spending. Government spending is what is causing today's high interest and inflation rates. Talking conservative doesn't help the elderly on fixed incomes increase their purchasing power; you have to vote conservative. Bentsen's voting record during the past 10 years shows he voted against only two of 145 spending appropriations bills."

Collins said that during his eight terms in the House of Representatives, he has led fights against forced busing, to reduce massive growth of congressional staffs and to give Americans a "Taxpayers' Bill of Rights."

"Texans need to send a conservative to the Senate who will vote against spending bills," Collins said. "Young people today can't buy a house because the interest rates are too high. Young men and women can't start a business with a 20 percent interest rate and a 10 percent profit. This is the result of elected officials who vote liberal.

"Texans don't want a senator who will give away the Panama Canal and weaken our national defense. I believe I can give Texas the strong, conservative leadership it deserves," he said.

Texas area forecast

West Texas: Partly cloudy through Monday. Highs Sunday near 60 Panhandle to 82 extreme south. Lows 35 Panhandle and mountains to 45 in southern sections.

North Texas: Partly cloudy through Sunday. Clearing Monday. Lows in the 40s. Highs 60 northwest to 72 southeast. Highs Monday 68 to 75.

Temperatures are expected to rise

The sun's rays will squeeze through partly cloudy skies an hour earlier this morning with temperatures continuing to climb through Monday.

According to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport, today's high is expected to settle in the low 70s, but plunge into the low 40s tonight.

Temperatures are predicted to rise up to the high 70s on Monday. Winds are expected to travel northwest at 10-15 mph through Monday.

Saturday's 71-degree mark may not have reached the record high for the day of 92 set in 1933, but it made Midland one of the three cities in Texas with the highest reading for the day. The overnight 36-degree mark wasn't too far off from the 34-degree mark set 1955 for the record low.

Radical roundup began as robbery

the front out, three or four gunmen leaped from the back and fired automatic weapons. Two officers died and one was wounded.

Ms. Boudin was arrested at the scene. Ms. Clark, Gilbert, 37, and Samuel Brown, 41, with a New York City arrest record dating to 1958, were arrested later after their car crashed with police in pursuit.

Some of the money was found in the van and a car. A third car got away, but police got its license plate number.

The crack opened further Wednesday when officials traced the license plates to an East Orange, N.J., apartment where officers discovered bomb-making materials, floor plans of a half-dozen New York City police stations, two sawed-off shotguns and several 9mm automatic pistols like those used in the Brink's holdup.

The apartment belonged to Marilyn Jean Buck, a federal fugitive who has been described as the only white member of the Black Liberation Army, an underground group at war with police. She is at large.

Other searches yielded more leads, one of which led to a chase and shootout in Queens on Friday. Nat Burns, also known as Nathaniel Williams, a Black Panther and fugitive from 1968 bombing charges, was arrested. He was wearing a bullet-proof vest.

Samuel Smith, 37, was killed in the exchange of gunfire, police said. He was wearing a bullet-proof vest dented over a body bruise apparently suffered in a recent shooting — perhaps in the Brink's robbery, police said.

New York City police have been probing connections among radicals, black terrorists and the robbers of the armored truck. Some police sources have speculated that the Weather Underground might have forged an alliance with the militant Black Liberation Army, a faction of the Black Panthers.

Police Commissioner Robert McGuire said officials "have no hard information to link the Weather Underground to the Black Liberation Army."

The Weather Underground originally was known as The Weatherman, after the lyrics of a Bob Dylan song that went: "You don't need a weatherman to know which way the wind blows.'

The group, a spinoff of the Students for a Democratic Society, led the bloody "Days of Rage" anti-war demonstration in Chicago in 1969 and many of its members were indicted but skipped bail.

They claimed responsibility for bombing the U.S. Capitol in 1971, setting an explosion that damaged the office of the California attorney general in 1974 and other bombings. But in recent years, the group had fallen silent. It reportedly was split over a plan to abandon sabotage to concentrate on above-ground politics.

Its members took odd jobs or collected welfare, living in "safe" houses and using aliases. The frustration of life on the run was evident in poems Ms. Boudin, Cathlyn Platt Wilkerson and Bernardine Dohrn read on a radio show in 1975. One poem read:

"Underground is not the right word

It makes it seem too simple

As if there's any easy way to disappear

A place to go beneath the city streets

There is no passage."

Ms. Dohrn, 38, surrendered last year on charges of aggravated battery and bail jumping in connection with the Days of Rage.

Ms. Wilkerson, who disappeared with Ms. Boudin after the two fled from a Greenwich Village brownstone explosion in 1970, turned herself in last year and received a one-to-three year sentence on charges related to the explosion. Officials said the brownstone was a bomb factory; three radicals died in the blast.

Mark Rudd surrendered in 1977 after seven years as a fugitive on charges stemming from the 1968 riots at Columbia University and the Days of Rage. He got a fine and two years' probation.

The Weather Underground principals apprehended this week:

—Katherine Boudin, a magna cum laude graduate of Bryn Mawr College and daughter of civil rights lawyer Leonard Boudin. She skipped bail after the Days of Rage. Recently, she lived with her year-old baby on Manhattan's Upper West Side, collecting $354 a month in welfare.

—Judith Clark, 31, gave birth to a girl last spring. She was arrested by the FBI in 1970 and served time in prison on charges stemming from the Chicago protests. Her conviction was overturned because the FBI used burglaries, mail openings and illegal wiretaps. She also lived on the Upper West Side.

—David J. Gilbert graduated from Columbia College in 1966 with a degree in philosophy and attended the New School for Social Research. He was a longtime member of the SDS and the Weather Underground.

—Jeffrey Jones, 33, was a national officer of SDS and leader of the Weather Underground who dropped from sight in 1970, the FBI said. He was wanted on charges of making bombs and inciting riots.

—Eleanor Stein Raskin, who attended Columbia Law School, was charged with Jones of unlawful possession of explosives in New Jersey in 1979.

Summit was a 'substantial success'

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan returned from the Cancun, Mexico, summit of rich and poor nations Saturday and declared it had created "a spirit of new hope" that the United States will help transform into a revitalized world economy.

"We have an enormous opportunity now to advance mutually beneficial economic relations with our developing country partners," the president said at nearby Andrews Air Force Base where Air Force One was touched down.

"The exchange was direct, frank, wide-ranging and free of recrimination," said Reagan, who was initially reluctant to participant in the historic conference.

Calling the two-day summit "a substantial success," Reagan maintained that there had been "broad acceptance" of the approaches to economic development he outlined in a speech last week in Philadelphia.

In that address, Reagan said free enterprise, fiscal discipline and expanded global trade were the key elements to economic progress.

Reagan, who left the White House on Wednesday for the summit, said he was glad to be home "even though it was a beautiful place." Vice President George Bush met the president at Andrews.

Treasury Secretary Donald Regan told reporters aboard Air Force One that the administration had feared there would be confrontation at the conference. He said none of the participants "came out and told us we were wrong."

"I believe all those who attended found our expectations fulfilled and even exceeded," Reagan said in his arrival statment. "Together we succeeded in creating a spirit of new hope which we want to translate into progress to revitalize the world economy and accelerate the growth of developing countries."

The president did not mention what most participants considered the key achievement of the conference: an agreement to begin a process leading toward global negotiations on ways to reduce the income gap between rich and poor countries.

But he said that all of the participants at the summit, representing two-thirds of the world's population, recognized that prosperity depends both on the efforts of individual countries and on close international economic cooperation.

"We did not waste time on unrealistic rhetoric or unattainable objectives," he said. "We dealt with pragmatic solutions to the problems of growth, efforts to improve food security and agricultural devlopment."

Pres. Reagan talks with reporters Saturday at Andrews Air Force Base in Maryland after returning from the Cancun Summit. With the president is Vice President George Bush and Treasury Secretary Donald Regan.

"At Cancun, we made a good beginning toward more constructive and mutually beneficial relations among devloped and developing nations, and toward a more prosperous world," he said.

Reagan departed the island site of the historic North-South summit Saturday willing to join other nations in negotiations to alleviate poverty but without commiting himself to any major changes in the international economic system.

Reagan's aides appeared confident that the United States had engendered goodwill by attending the 22-nation summit and by tentatively embracing its call for negotiations to reshape the world economy.

"This could have been an extremely risky venture," Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. told reporters. "And it did pay off."

As Reagan and the other leaders were leaving the Caribbean resort island after two days of talks, Haig hailed the conference as having taken "an extremely successful step toward greater international cooperation."

The final agreement calling for global negotiations in the United Nations to alleviate poverty was worded vaguely, to the disappointment of some participants but to the pleasure of the Reagan administration.

Haig said Reagan had established "warm, cordial and respectful" relationships with each of the leaders, some of whom he met here for the first time. "Both found themselves devoid of horns."

The secretary of state said the summit was conducted in a spirit of "what we can do together" instead of "sterile" exchanges.

"None of the dialogue was 'we versus they,'" Haig added.

The key achievement of the conference, which ended late Friday, was to launch a process leading to global negotiations at the United Nations on economic relations between rich and poor countries.

The negotiations would be conducted "on a basis to be mutually agreed and in circumstances offering the prospect of meaningful progress."

However, Reagan served notice as the conference began Thursday that the United States would participate in such negotiations only if they did not point toward a fundamental restructuring of the international economic system and if the emphasis was on global economic growth and not redistribution of wealth from rich to poor countries.

Haig characterized Reagan's position as an "evolution" of the traditional U.S. stance toward such negotiations since the United States for several years has resisted demands by poor nations that major economic disputes between industrialized and developing countries be brought before the United Nations, where talks could change the basic international economic order.

Waldheim expected to capture third term as U.N. secretary general

By O.C. DOELLING
Associated Press Writer

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Kurt Waldheim, a cautious, 62-year-old Austrian diplomat, is favored to win an unprecedented third term as U.N. secretary-general. But he faces a tough Third World challenge.

The Security Council is scheduled to begin the two-stage elective process on Tuesday. Delegates, expecting a close contest, refuse to predict whether the council will be able to agree on their choice at a single meeting.

Waldheim's only declared opponent is Salim Ahmed Salim, Tanzania's ebullient, 39-year-old foreign minister.

But, according to Latin American diplomatic sources, Peru has informed the council that its veteran diplomat, Javier Perez de Cuellar, a former undersecretary-general for special political affairs, would be available as a compromise candidate if a deadlock develops.

Waldheim's current five-year term expires on Dec. 31. The last time out, in December 1976, he beat back a Latin American challenge by ex-President Luis Echeverria of Mexico.

To win re-election, Waldheim must receive the votes of at least nine members of the 15-nation council. Any of the five permanent council members — the United States, Britain, France, the Soviet Union and China — can veto a nomination.

A simple majority is needed in the 156-nation General Assembly, which can only vote on the candidate proposed by the Security Council.

Salim, who was a popular General Assembly president during its 1979 session, probably would be the favorite if that body, with its large Third World majority, were key in deciding who will be U.N. chief for the next five years.

The Tanzanian not only has the endorsement of the 51-nation Organization of African Unity but also of the 93-nation group of non-aligned countries.

Waldheim, on the other hand, is believed to have the backing of four of the five big powers in the Security Council. China, committed to supporting a viable Third World candidate, is expected to back Salim in the initial secret balloting but then — if past practice is any guide — switch to Waldheim should Salim's nomination be effectively blocked by the other permanent council members. Neither candidate is expected to receive the required votes on the first or possibly second ballot in the council.

Waldheim's supporters contend that opposition to his re-election is as soft as is Salim's support. This assessment is supported by some Third World diplomats upset by what they consider Algeria's steamrolling tactics in securing the non-aligned endorsement for Salim. That endorsement came in a resolution swiftly adopted without a vote at a non-aligned ministerial meeting here last month.

Sources close to Waldheim claim that a number of black African diplomats privately had informed the incumbent that they supported him irrespective of the OAU's blanket endorsement of Salim.

Reacting to such assertions, Salim said, "I think it would not be proper for me to dignify allegations which tend to question the integrity and the credibility of African leaders."

EDITOR'S REPORT

uating that somehow we are to blame and therefore must subsidize them until they are as well off as we.

Mind you, they don't say "Please." Rarely, if ever, do they say "Thank you," even though we, as a nation, have been subsidizing their bankrupt economies with more money than any other nation in the world.

For example, although the purpose of the conference was to discuss world economic problems, India's wicked witch, Prime Minister Indira Gandhi, whom Henry Kissinger once described as a "cold-blooded autocrat" and whose dictatorial regime has been accused of torturing and murdering political opponents, had the nerve to attack President Reagan in her first meeting with him for agreeing to sell advanced fighter aircraft to Pakistan.

Despite over $10 billion of American economic aid to India since the end of World War II, Mrs. Gandhi, like her father, the late Jawaharlal Nehru, has pursued a consistently anti-American policy.

She is one of the foremost leaders of the Third World countries who want a redistribution of wealth from the richer nations to the poorer nations.

In other words, they want the successfully developed Western countries to sacrifice our higher standards of living in order to subsidize development of their nations.

Not a word of gratitude from Mrs. Gandhi and her fellow travellers at the Cancun summit for the $500 billion in loans and credits which the Third World countries have received from the northern nations during the past 10 years. Not a word about the unwillingness of the Soviet government to attend the conference because it won't participate with the West in multilateral plans to promote economic progress in the Third World countries.

The Soviets give some economic assistance in the form of loans and credits to Third World countries, but it is infinitesimal compared to what the U.S. and other Western countries have given. When President Reagan said he preferred bilateral discussions to the "global negotiations" being demanded by the Third World group, and emphasized he wanted American aid to help promote the free enterprise system, he became what the N.Y. Times described as "the target" and "whipping boy" of hostile Third Worlders at Cancun. The lack of any protest by the latter about the Soviet position was another example of the despicable double standard they apply in their attitude toward America and Soviet Russia.

With cynical disregard for the West's economic difficulties, they want us to finance a vast Marshall Plan-type development program for them. They want cartels to increase the price of goods they sell the West. They want tariffs and quotas for those goods drastically reduced, even if it puts some of our weak industries out of business and increases our already high unemployment. They want a moratorium on their debts. They want veto power over conditions set by the World Bank and International Monetary Fund for loans to them.

They say we have a moral obligation to do all this for them because of past "colonial exploitation." Let me quote for you what former Secretary of State Dean Acheson said a decade ago:

"The Third World is motivated by militant ambition to be translated into the state of developed communities without the painful stages of training, learning, work and saving. This characteristic leads to another role, that of accuser.

"The Third World states are wont to hold the Western world responsible for their undeveloped state and liable for reparations to be paid in foreign aid. They invoke Western principles against the West -- democracy, individual liberty, peace, non-interference in the affairs of others -- but practice none of them."

That just about sums up their position at Cancun.

We can be proud of the way the president handled himself at his first international conference with Third World countries. He was both firm and conciliatory. Firm in his refusal to commit us to one of the Third Worlders' major demands -- a huge increase in American aid to them. Conciliatory in his willingness to participate in "preparations for a mutually acceptable process of global negotiations in circumstances offering the prospect of meaningful progress," but without creating "some gigantic new internaional bureaucracy."

He is also to be commended for having told the organizers of the conference -- Mexico and Austria -- that he would not attend if Castro did. As long as Castro continues to try to impose by revolution anti-American leftist regimes in Central America and maintains large numbers of Cuban troops in Africa, he will not sit at the same table with him. Bravo for our very American President.

Nine injured when jet hit air pocket

DALLAS (AP) — Nine people were injured Friday night when a USAir jetliner hit turbulence shortly before landing at Dallas-Fort Worth Regional Airport, airline officials said.

Six passengers and three flight attendants received minor bruises, lacerations and bumps when Flight 19 from Pittsburgh hit an air pocket at 11,000 feet, said USAir spokesman David Shipley.

Seven of the injured were taken to Hurst-Euless-Bedford Hospital in Hurst, and the other two were treated by paramedics at the scene. Hospital spokesman David Cox said one flight attendant suffered a broken collarbone and was hospitalized overnight. The rest were treated and released.

The injured were not identified.

Doctor sentenced in fraud case

DALLAS (AP) — A 59-year-old doctor was sentenced to a five-year probated term and fined $4,500 Friday for fraudulently collecting $625 in Medicaid funds.

Dr. Eugene Wade Dorsey was the first Medicaid provider to be found guilty of fraudently collecting benefits for treatment never administered, said officials of the Texas attorney general's office.

Dorsey was found guilty Oct. 11 of three counts of tampering with government records by falsifying insurance claims.

In addition to the fine, State District Judge Jack Hampton ordered Dorsey to repay the $625 to the state.

Three inmates die after testifying in lawsuit

DALLAS (AP) — At least three inmates died after testifying against the Texas Department of Corrections in a lawsuit that resulted in orders for sweeping changes in the state prison system, a newspaper reported Saturday.

The third inmate-witness to die was stabbed in the chest last weekend by a fellow inmate, The Dallas Morning News reported in a copyright story.

Stephen Dwight Thompson, 27, had argued with another inmate "over a television program," said TDC spokesman Rick Hartley in Huntsville.

Hartley said both men had knives and that the other inmate also was stabbed. A spokesman for the John Sealy Hospital in Galveston said the inmate was treated for a chest laceration and released.

"The investigation is not complete, but it's probably going to show him (the surviving inmate) acting in self-defense," Hartley told the News.

Thompson's mother, Mrs. Johnnie Witherspoon, said she believes it was highly unlikely her son would jeopardize his chances for a favorable review at his upcoming parole hearing by fighting about a matter so trivial.

Walker County sheriff's deputy Rick Berger said Friday it will be several days before his department completes its investigation. Berger said he planned to question TDC officials about a dleay of almost four hours between the time of the stabbings and the time TDC reported them to the sheriff's department.

Berger said his preliminary investigation showed the stabbings occurred at 9:30 p.m. Oct. 16 and his department received its first call at 1:15 a.m. the next day.

Hartley said the fight broke out "a little bit before midnight."

The News quoted a Justice Department source as saying that of about 100 inmates who testified against TDC during the year-long trial, 90 accepted the federal government's offer to move them to federal prisons for their own protection.

The trial ended in October 1979 with U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice ordering several changes to ease overcrowding and improve conditions in the Texas prison system.

Two of the 10 inmates remaining in Texas died within a few months of testifying.

Disaster centers to be opened in four North Texas counties

WASHINGTON (AP) — Disaster assistance centers will be opened this week in four North Texas counties declared disaster areas Saturday by President Reagan.

The declaration, approved late Friday by the Federal Emergency Management Agency, was flown to Cancun, Mexico for approval by Reagan, who is attending the economic summit conference there.

FEMA said 100 homes were destroyed and 1,400 damaged in Cooke, Parker, Stephens and Taylor counties, where up to 17 inches of rain caused severe flooding Oct. 12-16.

The declaration could be amended to include other counties hard-hit by flooding after their damage assessments are complete, said a spokeswoman for U.S. John Tower, R-Texas.

Federal disaster aid funds will be opened to the four counties under the declaration, which was sought by Texas Gov. Bill Clements. The aid includes temporary housing assistance, loans for families, farmers and businessman and grants for those with needs not met by other relief programs.

The declaration also makes available money from the President's Disaster Relief Fund to help state and local governments restore damaged public facilities in Cooke and Stephens counties. Federal funds will cover 75 percent of the costs, and state and local financing will cover the remaining 25 percent.

Females may dominate work force by 1990s

By CHARLES RICHARDS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Before the end of this decade, three of every four people seeking a job will be female, Sen. Lloyd Bentsen predicted Saturday.

If current trends continue, there will be more women than men in the U.S. work force before the turn of the century, the Texas Democrat added.

He cited the trend as one of many changes in the national job market that demand changes in economic policy.

"Since the 1940s, the percentage of men in the work force has steadily declined. The reverse has been true for women. You've had a substantial increase in the number of women in the work force," Bentsen said.

"Project that out into the '80s and you're going to see, of the jobs that are going to be sought, three out of four will be women seeking those jobs. By the end of the century, you'll have more women in the work force than you'll have men."

Bentsen's remarks were in a statement prepared for broadcast Saturday evening by Texas television stations.

Another startling development also is beginning to occur, Bentsen said.

"You take through the '70s — we had 27 million young people added to the potential work force. But you get into the 1980s, you're going to see something that approaches 16 million added. You're going to have a shortage of skilled workers. You're going to have a change of occupations."

Engine problems ground flying Colorado couple

DENVER (AP) — Grandparents Paul and Eddie Whistle, attempting to set a world flight record, had to make an unscheduled stop early Saturday in Indonesia because of engine problems, a family spokesman here said.

The Whistles are attempting to set a record for an around-the-world flight in a single-engine, piston-driven plane.

On Friday, they landed their 14-year-old Beechcraft Bonanza at Colombo, Sri Lanka, slightly ahead of schedule and past the halfway point of their 23,000-mile journey.

The next leg of the journey was to be to Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, an eight-hour, 1,600-mile flight, but spokesman Howard Ryan said the Whistles apparently had to set down at Medan, Indonesia, for some repairs, about 225 miles short of Kuala Lumpur.

He said they apparently stopped at Medan just after midnight MDTbut he was unable to contact them to find out when they would be ready to resume the flight.

The Wheat Ridge couple were three hours ahead of schedule when they reached Athens, but a lightning strike en route from Lisbon knocked out the electronic gyrocompass of the Flying Fez, the Whistles' name for their Beechcraft Bonanza V-35-TC. It took four hours to repair the gyrocompass.

In order to break a 1977 world record for a piston-driven single-engine airplane, the Whistles must return to Jefferson County Airport in Broomfield by 7:51 p.m. MST Tuesday.

It is the Whistles' second attempt to break the mark. Last year, they called off their record-breaking attempt because of fuel pump problems and bureaucratic red tape at various ports of call.

Shooting victim killed

GAINESVILLE, Fla. (AP) — A 24-year-old woman injured in a shooting was killed Saturday when the gunman burst into a hospital emergency room and pumped several bullets into her as she lay on an examining table, police said.

An attending physician also was injured in the attack.

The victim's estranged husband was arrested a few hours after Sharon Lawrence Reed died. Albert Reed also was accused of wounding Leonard Davis and Dr. Stephen Hill.

Davis, who was injured in the shooting at Mrs. Reed's home, tore the needles out of his arm and fled when he heard gunfire in the emergency room, said a spokeswoman at Shands Teaching Hospital.

He suffered no further injuries and was hospitalized in fair and stable condition, Virginia Hunt said.

Hill was shot in the hand as he attended to Mrs. Reed's injuries. He was treated and released.

Reed, 24, was held without bond in the Alachua County Jail on charges of first-degree murder and assault with intent to murder, sheriff's deputies said.

Detective Julie Denson said Reed, apparently wanting to reconcile, became upset and allegedly shot his wife and Davis, 31, at Mrs. Reed's home. The two were taken to Shands.

As doctors and nurses evaluated their conditions, a man who claimed to be Mrs. Reed's brother arrived at the front desk and asked to see her, Ms. Hunt said. The victim was apparently in shock, but was conscious and able to talk, she said.

"The nurse left the man there at the desk and went back to ask Mrs. Reed if she was willing to see him," she said. "She said no, he wasn't her brother, it was her estranged husband and she did not want to see him."

The nurse spotted the man talking to another patient and told him he was not allowed there, "and he pulled open the curtain where Mrs. Reed was and started shooting," the hospital spokeswoman fled.

The gunman fired at the fleeing Davis and missed, and then the man escaped through an unmarked back door, Ms. Hunt said.

Kansas fisherman drowns

WAURIKA, Okla. (AP) — A 66-year-old Kansas man drowned Saturday morning when the inner tube from which he was fishing capsized 200 feet from shore, the Oklahoma Lake Patrol said.

The patrol identified the victim as Arthur Klein Boyd, 66, of Iola, Kan.

Boyd was pulled from the 8-foot-deep water by his son, Richard Boyd of Wichita Falls, Texas, and taken to a Waurika hospital, where he was pronounced dead, the patrol said.

The accident occured at 10:30 a.m. on the east side of the lake, authorities said.

Elizabeth Dole: a highly active woman

EDITOR'S NOTE — She might have been the nation's First Lady. As it is, she is the highest ranking woman in the White House today. She is Elizabeth Dole, married to Sen. Bob Dole of Kansas. Together, they make one of the most powerful career couples in the country's seat of power.

By MAUREEN SANTINI
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — When the head of the Blind Veterans' Association wanted the White House to comply with a list of demands for his organization, he went to Elizabeth Dole.

When Lupe Angiano wanted to inform the White House about her program to help women get off welfare and into jobs, she went to Elizabeth Dole.

When women's groups sought more clout in the Reagan White House, they went to Elizabeth Dole.

And when President Reagan wanted business, labor, minorities, professional organizations and everyone else to support his economic package, he went to Elizabeth Dole.

Reagan, of course, didn't have to make a special trip. Persuading organizations of all stripes to support Reagan's policies — or at least not work against them — is Elizabeth Hanford Dole's job.

Since many of the organizations Mrs. Dole works with are traditionally Democratic, some people call her job "damage control," because it is hard to convince them to support Republican policies.

But Mrs. Dole, the highest ranking woman in the White House — her office is on the second floor in the West Wing — takes it seriously. That's her nature, according to someone who should know — her husband.

Since Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, married the North Carolina native in 1975, they have become one of the nation's most visible high-powered career couples. And their lifestyle reflects it.

"She leaves earlier than I do in the morning," says Dole, who helped the administration push its tax and budget cuts through Congress while his wife lobbied for support for the same economic package with labor, business and nearly every other organized group in the country.

"I leave about quarter to 8 and she leaves about quarter to 7. I think that's too early," he laughs. "I generally like to get home by 7 or 8 p.m. She'll get home about that time, sometimes later."

The 12-hour day Mrs. Dole regularly puts in is a hectic series of meetings with Reagan's other top aides, her own staff, and the varied organizations she tries to keep happy.

One recent day, for example, she spoke at an awards ceremony with Nancy Reagan. Later, she joined Mrs. Reagan and officials from Howard University at an exclusive lunch for eight served in the Rose Garden. On other days, she sits next to the president in the Cabinet Room while he meets with one of the groups she has been wooing.

In the evening, Mrs. Dole, 45, often attends work-related social activities in one part of town, while her husband wines and dines his constituents, visiting Kansans, in another.

Despite having two powerful careers, one based in the U.S. Senate and the other in the White House, under the same roof both Doles say they haven't yet had to keep secrets from each other to avoid conflicts of interest.

"We really don't have the opportunity to sit and talk at length on anything by virtue of the fact that we are both going 90 miles per hour," Mrs. Dole says.

They may see an issue differently on occasion, her husband concedes, but that's to be expected.

"She might raise it with me to indicate that people she works with have a different position, but she has to do her thing and I have to do my thing...I don't work for the White House. Sometimes we have different views and that's the way it is."

The busy pace of their lives "keeps us both alert," the senator says. "We've avoided any real conflicts." He says they make a point of spending Sundays together, have the same interests and, unlike some working couples, live in the same city.

If fate had taken a different turn, Mrs. Dole might now have been First Lady at the White House instead of an employee. Just eight months after their marriage, the senator ran for the vice presidency with former President Ford. In 1980, Dole made his own try for the nation's top office, but he dropped out in the primaries.

Mrs. Dole, a graduate of Duke University with a law degree from Harvard, quit her job as a member of the Federal Trade Commission in 1979 to campaign for her husband.

As the highest ranking woman at the White House, Mrs. Dole has taken it upon herself to lobby for hiring of women, even though that's not part of her job.

She relayed her belief that Reagan should use his first Supreme Court vacany to appoint a woman. "I felt this was an opportunity for him to demonstrate his desire to bring qualified women into the administration," she said after the nomination of Sandra O'Connor had been announced.

She has supported the Equal Rights Amendment, which Reagan opposes, but says she agrees "very much with the president that there is more than one way to reach equal rights for women."

She supports Reagan's plan to eliminate sex discrimination by changing laws and regulations, saying, "No state has ratified now in five years."

Reagan has been criticized for not appointing enough women to his administration and Mrs. Dole is known to be an active lobbyist inside the White House to do better.

"The way I look at it is that we continue to bring in qualified women at all levels. There will be changes as the administration moves along," she says, admitting she has sent the personnel office "a lot of resumes."

"She enjoys what she does," Dole says of his wife. "I think that's the key to it. It would be horrible to have one of the partners not enjoy. If neither of you did it would be terrible."

Libyan connection suspected

DENVER (AP) — Authorities believe they have a tape-recording linking Eugene Tafoya with the firebombing of a car owned by a Canadian with apparent ties to the Libyan government, a Denver newspaper reported Saturday.

The Rocky Mountain News reported in a copyright story that Tafoya, who is charged with attempting to kill a Libyan dissident in Fort Collins last year, also is suspected of bombing a sports car belonging to Robert Manina of Kitchener, Ontario.

Manina, now reported to be living in Ireland, was not hurt in the blast on May 28, 1979.

One of Manina's former neighbors, William Pernfuss, told the News that Manina was vice president and general manager of Leigh Instruments, Ltd., which manufactured top-secret surveillance equipment.

Authorities have linked Manina with Edwin P. Wilson, a former CIA agent who has been indicted om charges of running arms for the government of Libyan leader Moammar Khadafy, the News said.

Tafoya has said he worked for Wilson in Libya on military training missions.

He claims he was working for the CIA when he visited the Fort Collins home of Libyan graduate student Faisal Zagallai last October, and that he shot Zagallai in self-defense. Zagallai survived but lost an eye in the attack.

The Tafoya connection in the Canadian bombing surfaced when authorities found two tapes in a vehicle outside his home in Truth or Consequences, N.M., authorities in Fort Collins said.

On one of the tapes, a voice that prosecutors believe is Tafoya's assures a prospective employer that he followed orders to set the firebomb outside of Manina's home, the News said.

Reagan faces economic ills

By OWEN ULLMANN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Upon turning his attention from the plight of the world's poor nations, President Reagan faces a bundle of economic ills at home — a recession, renewed inflation, a mounting budget deficit and pressure to raise taxes.

Government figures within the past week have revealed a U.S. economy that is sinking into decline while still beset with high interest rates and high inflation.

As a consequence, Reagan's road to a balanced budget is being flooded by red ink, pushing his advisers and Congress into a reluctant search for new tax increases and spending cuts.

The budget problem was put on a back burner until Reagan's return this weekend from discussions with 21 other world leaders in Cancun, Mexico, on how to narrow the gap between the richest and poorest nations.

White House budget director David A. Stockman will ask Reagan this week to overcome his distaste for tax increases and press for an expanded list of revenue-raising measures to salvage his campaign pledge to balance the budget by 1984.

Reagan already has called for tax increases to raise $22 billion over the next three years. But Stockman contends more revenues are needed to help offset the loss of $280 billion from the three-year cut in individual and business taxes that Reagan won from Congress.

The administration acknowledged for the first time last week that the economy has slipped into a recession and that its hopes for balancing the budget by 1984 have been all but dashed by the weakening economy.

To Reagan's critics, both observations were late admissions.

Private economists have been saying for some time that the nation is in a mild recession that will likely worsen this fall. Their view was bolstered by the Commerce Department's report last week that economic activity declined at a 0.6 percent annual rate from July through September, the second quarterly drop in a row.

The president's Democratic opponents have said from the start that his plan to cut taxes, boost defense spending and balance the budget all at the same time would never work.

With new projections showing annual deficits that could approach $100 billion by 1984, House and Senate Republicans are considering new spending cuts and tax increases that, combined, would total $115 billion over the next three years.

Administration officials, conceding they can't find enough spending cuts to balance the budget, are considering a broad array of tax-increase proposals that include limiting deductions on interest and health insurance premiums and raising excise taxes on gasoline, cigarettes and alcohol.

The administration, however, says it will not consider postponing the second installment of Reagan's three-year, 25 percent cut in personal income tax rates, scheduled to begin next July.

Reagan's economists argue — and most private economists agree — that this month's 5 percent tax cut and a 10 percent reduction next summer will provide needed stimulus to nurse the economy back to robust health next year.

The administration also expects a $22 billion increase in defense spending in 1982 to help combat unemployment, which is expected to swell from a current 7.5 percent to 8 percent or higher. Those defense dollars, however, will not reach the auto and homebuilding industries, the sectors hurting the most.

Meanwhile, sharp increases in the cost of food, home mortages and transportation in September sent consumer prices up at a 14.8 percent annual rate and stalled progress on the inflation front.

After slowing to a 7.4 percent annual rate during the spring, inflation accelerated to a 13.5 percent rate over the summer in apparent defiance of conventional economic wisdom that prices increases cool during recessions.

Jerry Jordan, a member of the president's Council of Economic Advisers, blamed the new inflationary surge on a jump in food prices, which are relatively unaffected by recessions, and on persisently high mortgage rates just now beginning to recede.

Claiming there is a lag of several quarters between the start of a recession and an easing of inflation.

Solzhenitsyn warns U.S. about China relations

NEW YORK (AP) — Exiled Soviet writer Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn warns that the United States must not make the same mistakes in its dealings with China that it did in its policy toward the Soviet Union.

In a rare interview to be broadcast by NBC, Solzhenitsyn says economic and even military assistance to China "might postpone a world denouement" because China will provide a temporary "protection against the Soviet Union."

"But if you arm China," he warned, "you will give China the second half of the earth, the very half where America is situated, and there nothing will help you."

Solzhenitsyn, exiled from his homeland in 1974 and now a resident of Vermont, spoke with Rep. John LeBoutillier, R-N.Y., in an interview to be broadcast in two parts on NBC's late-night "Tomorrow Coast-to-Coast."

The interview will follow "The Tonight Show Starring Johnny Carson" on Monday and Tuesday nights.

Solzhenitsyn is author of "The Gulag Archipelago," a book about the Soviet network of prison camps, and other works. LeBoutellier recently wrote an article suggesting expansion of free-world communication to the Soviet Union.

Carter drops suit

By BARTON REPPERT
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former President Carter, having received a formal apology from The Washington Post, said Saturday he will not sue the newspaper for libel over a gossip column item saying he had bugged a government guest house while Ronald and Nancy Reagan were staying there.

In a statement issued by his attorney, Terrence B. Adamson, Carter said "preparations were nearly complete ... to file legal action for libel."

However, Carter said he was satisfied with a letter from Post publisher Donald Graham retracting the item and apologizing for its publication.

"Mr. Graham's letter, although tardy, has now included a complete and full retraction of the libelous news story, a public apology and clarification of a policy concerning the printing of unverified rumors.

"We have therefore decided to take no further action in this matter," Carter said.

The Post, in the Oct. 5 gossip column, had reported rumors that electronic surveillance at Blair House picked up remarks by Mrs. Reagan that the Carters should move out of the White House before Reagan's inauguration. The Reagans have denied that Mrs. Reagan made such remarks.

Graham's letter to Carter and his wife Rosalynn, published in Friday's Post, said: "I wish to retract the item that appeared in The Washington Post concerning the reports that Blair House was 'bugged' during President-elect Reagan's staa there."

"I also wish to apologize to both of you for its publication and regret any embarrassment that it caused you," Graham said.

Carter's statement noted that "this incident and the newspaper policy which caused it have been of considerable concern to us. Fortunately, because of my previous position, I had access to the public news media and could draw attention to my problem."

"Many victims of similarly false allegations do not enjoy this opportunity, but suffer just as severely," the former president added.

Carter criticized the Post's chatty "Ear" column in which the rumor about alleged bugging of Blair House had been reported.

"The decision by the publishers of a nationally and internationally influential newspaper like the Post to print a regular column which is widely known to be based on rumor and gossip adds unwarranted credence to its false reports," he said.

An editorial printed in the Post Oct. 14, Carter said, "seemed to claim the right to publish rumors that are damaging to innocent people even if the rumors are believed by the Post editors to be untrue."

Carter said the retraction letter from Graham "now makes clear that the Post does not claim the right to print rumors without verification of their accuracy."

Jody Powell, who served as White House press secretary during Carter's administration, said Saturday he was still concerned about the unanswered question of "who this person is and what their motives may have been."

"People should stick to one thing!"

Democrats are warming up for 1984 presidential drama

WASHINGTON -- Three years before the thundering climax of the 1984 presidential drama, the wings are crowded with Democrats awaiting a cue to step forward as serious contenders for the nation's prime political prize.

Some already have donned their costumes and their makeup and have begun sounding the themes they eventually will declaim before cheering partisan throngs. Others — more hesitant and wary — are merely watching the unfolding early scenes before making a final commitment to participate in the drama.

For all of them, the play is the thing which will determine whether they may capture the office of the king. If it turns out to be "The Rise and Fall of Ronald Reagan," the stage will be filled by the end of 1983, when the contest for the Democratic nomination begins in earnest.

If, however, it becomes "The Eternal Triumph of Ronald Reagan," many of the hesitant and wary will remain in the wings, awaiting possibly the presidential production of 1988.

The success or failure of Reagan's policies — especially those dealing with the national economy — will determine how many Democrats are eager to rush on stage in pursuit of the presidency.

In 1976, when the Democrats were convinced their nominee, whoever he might be, would topple Gerald Ford, they fielded an even dozen official and unofficial aspirants for the presidency as the caucuses and primaries began. Included in the pack were Hubert Humphrey, Henry Jackson, Morris Udall, Jerry Brown, Frank Church, Birch Bayh, Fred Harris, Lloyd Bentsen, Sargent Shriver, Terry Sanford, George Wallace and the eventual winner, Jimmy Carter.

Four years later, when the Republicans felt quite bully about ousting Carter, they too began the campaign with a host of hopefuls — Reagan, George Bush, Howard Baker, John Anderson, Robert Dole, Lowell Weicker, Phil Crane and even Ford. By the primaries of late spring, Reagan had the nomination under lock and key.

In the bidding for 1984, only the candidacy of Walter Mondale seems certain at this point. Mondale, 53, articulate, attractive and seemingly untarnished by his years of service as Carter's vice president, is the early frontrunner, among Democratic moderates and in the public opinion polls where he runs slightly ahead of Ted Kennedy. He is criss-crossing the nation, much as Reagan did before launching his official candidacy, making major policy pronouncements and shoring up his strength among voters.

Kennedy, 49, is concentrating much of his current activity on being re-elected in Massachusetts next year. If he wins a resounding victory, most of the top leadership of the Democratic party anticipates he will take off after the presidential nomination. But some Democrats continue to doubt that Kennedy will make another try for the prize so soon after his dismal, divisive effort to defeat Carter in 1980.

There also is some uncertainty about a presidential bid by John Glenn, 60, a highly articulate spokesman on national security matters and the one astronaut who became a genuine national hero. Glenn, a genuine moderate, runs well in public opinion polls, has good name recognition and won a tremendous victory in pivotal Ohio last year while Reagan was carrying the state for the Republicans. The question is whether Glenn, an inately decent and modest man, has the kind of gut-fighting instincts required of a presidential candidate.

Three highly personable younger senators -- Gary Hart, 43, of Colorado, Bill Bradley, 38, of New Jersey, and Joseph Biden, 38, of Delaware -- are considered as possible starters. So is the colorful, witty Daniel Patrick Moynihan, 54, if he wins re-election in New York in 1982.

California Gov. Jerry Brown, 43, who is pursuing a Senate seat next year, has indicated he will not run for the presidency as he did, unsucessfully, in 1976 and 1980. But Brown has been known to change his mind.

One former governor, Florida's Reubin Askew, 53, has indicated an interest in joining the fray and it is more than probable that New York's Hugh Carey, 62, will do the same if he can win a third term in Albany.

Then, of course, there is the ebullient, expansive former Democratic National Chairman Robert Strauss, 63, who manages to spur interest in his candidacy by denying that he is a candidate.

In the final analysis, of course, the names and number of contestants will depend on Reagan. If the president, nearing his 74th birthday, appears vulnerable, the crop of Democratic aspirants will be large. If he appears to have an unbreakable hold on the White House, it will be small as it was in 1956 when the immensely popular Dwight D. Eisenhower sought — and won — re-election. If Reagan is not the GOP nominee, the race will be wide open in both political parties.

Early though it may be, the great presidential pageant of 1984 already is beginning.

World marathon record holder Alberto Salazar is flanked by two of the top competitors he will face in the New York City marathon. Rodolfo Gomez of Mexico, left, and Scotland's John Graham joined Salazar at a Central Park press conference Friday. Salazar said he would like to erase all doubt about the world marathon record by finishing the New York run in under 2 hours, 8 minutes, 33.6 seconds.

Inconsistencies noted in EPA's toxic waste sites list

By ANDREW SCHNEIDER
Associated Press Writer

NEW CASTLE, N.H. (AP) — The government's new ranking of 115 toxic chemical dumps targeted for cleanup was hailed as a big step forward by some environmentalists.

But others are puzzled why certain sites made the list and others didn't, and one federal official says "some kind of games were played" in putting the list of hazardous waste sites together.

The list, released Friday, is considered a guide for disbursal of millions of dollars under the Environmental Protection Agency's Superfund cleanup program.

One of the puzzled experts is Hugh Kaufman, the EPA's chief hazardous waste site investigator, who has visited most of the sites.

"It's clear to anyone who knows the severity of the problems out there that some kind of games were played in compiling the list," Kaufman said. "There's no other plausible explanation."

He cited as examples the Hyde Park and Love Canal landfills at Niagara Falls, N.Y.

"Hyde Park landfill has the potential to be one of the most dangerous sites in the world, with enough dixoin to wipe out millions, but it wasn't on the list at all and Love Canal wasn't even in the top 20," he said. "I can't imagine what information they based the list on."

Elaine Stanley, executive officer for EPA's Superfund office, which prepared the list, says her office used a "hazard scoring model" to evaluate 282 sites nominated by state and regional EPA offices and to determine the ranking.

"Hyde Park simply didn't score high enough, I guess," she says.

On the other hand, the Woburn dump in Massachusetts has been on government cleanup lists for 105 years, and still is releasing poisons. The EPA included the 800-acre site as one of the country's 10 most perilous sites, with its pits of white arsenic and other poisons dumped by at least three major chemical companies.

"Lists don't mean much unless action is taken," says Rufin Harris of the Environmental Defense Fund, a leading private environmental group.

Harris also questioned how the sites were selected.

"It's a stange list," Harris said. He said the Motco dump at La Marque, Texas, "is a small site, no one lives nearby and no water supplies are endangered. Yet, EPA gave it a high priority."

On the other hand, he said, the North Hollywood dump in the middle of Memphis, Tenn., "is polluting a major river and is threatening to contaminate the city's aquifer, but it appears on the bottom of EPA's list."

Kaufman points to other "inconsistencies."

"Look at Smithfield, R.I. You've got two sites side-by-side with the same hazards, the same technical problems," Kaufman says. "Yet one's on the list and the other isn't."

Hundreds of people in EPA's regional and Washington offices prepared nominees for the list. Many privately admit there were pressures from outside and within the agency over which sites made the priliminary cuts.

Kaufman says much of the pressure "came from politicians who wanted their own pet dump added."

For example, within hours of release of the list, Sen. Robert Stafford, chairman of the Environment and Public Works Committee, stopped EPA Administrator Ann Gorsuch as she was getting on a plane at National Airport in Washington. She agreed to include a site from the Vermont Republican's home state, an aide to the senator said, to the original list of 114 sites.

Kaufman and Harris will be among the speakers addressing government and industry officials at a four-day Northeast Conference on Hazardous Waste, which begins here Sunday. Kaufman thinks the EPA will generate "a lot of fireworks" at the conference.

Suspect held in rape of New Yorknun

CHICAGO (AP) — Acting on a tip, police waiting at a bus station here Saturday seized a 22-year-old suspect in the rape of a Manhattan nun. Officials said the man admitted the attack, named an accomplice and was fleeing in fear of a rumored mob contract on his life.

Twenty-seven crosses were cut on the body of the 30-year-old nun, who was attacked by two men while alone in an East Harlem convent.

New York City offered a $10,000 reward in the case, but Chicago police said a rumor that organized crime had put a $25,000 bounty on the rapists' heads apparently prompted the suspect to flee Manhattan.

Police Sgt. Thomas Kelley of the Chicago violent crimes division said the suspect was being held for New York authorities, who were expected to arrive later in the day. No charges were filed by Chicago authorities.

The man, a former resident of Chicago, was taken into custody at 6 a.m. when he arrived by bus from the East.

He admitted raping the nun Oct. 10 at the Sisters of Charity Convent, according to Kelley. The nun was robbed of $50 and a watch.

Kelley said police seized the man after New York authorities called their Chicago counterparts to report they believed the suspect was headed for Illinois.

Kelley said the man was met by a relative at the bus station.

New York investigators said that late on the morning of Oct. 10, the nun heard noises on the third floor of the rectory. She went up the stairs and discovered two men had entered through a door on the roof.

She was raped and crosses were cut in her body with a knife. The two men fled.

The crime created a furor in New York. Mayor Edward I. Koch called the incident "a despicable act of depravity" and said, "I want to see the guy, figuratively, hung."

The nun was treated at St. Vincent's Hospital and released several days later.

Kelley said there was a rumor that a crime syndicate hit man had a $25,000 "contract" on the two men and the suspect fled New York City fearing for his life.

Kelley also said the man identified his accomplice and said the accomplice inflicted the wounds, and that both men raped the nun.

Sgt. Leroy Barr, New York City police public information officer, said officers tried to arrest the suspect at his Manhattan address but learned he had taken a bus to Chicago.

Barr said an assistant district attorney was flying to Chicago to determine if the suspect wanted to return voluntarily or face an extradition hearing.

In New York, the Rev. Terzo Vinci, pastor of Our Lady of Mount Carmel Church, adjacent to the convent, said news of an arrest in the case would give "a feeling of relief" to the community, which was shocked and saddened by the attack.

U.S. President Ronald Reagan and Japanese Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki exchange greetings prior to the third plenary session of the North-South Summit meeting in Cancun, Mexico Friday. In center is Mexican President Jose Lopez Portillo.

Meeting achieves Cancun 'spirit'

By CHARLES J. HANLEY
Associated Press Writer

CANCUN, Mexico (AP) — The advanced billing put the global economic conference here in the ranks of historic summits. But rather than a giant step for mankind, it produced a small step toward better understanding.

For 2½ days, among the beachfront palms and around a giant conference table, President Reagan and leaders of 21 other nations talked of tariffs, credits and currency, as well as the needs of fishermen, tea prices and cotton supplies, and the virtues and shortcomings of private enterprise and socialism.

What grew from the unusual and relatively informal dialogue was a "spirit of Cancun," concluded Mexican President Jose Lopez Portillo, a co-chairman of the summit.

"It is a spirit of solidarity, of conciliation, and of harmony," he said.

The spirit may prove fruitful over the long run. But the Cancun summit, which produced no major specific agreements, falls short of its original mandate.

Early last year, a special study commission on the economic issues that divide the developed and developing worlds called for the convening of a small meeting of presidents and premiers to "thrash out" the problems with "candor and boldness."

It called for particularly quick action on an "emergency program" to relieve world hunger, conserve and find more energy supplies in the Third World, and reform international financial institutions to give poorer countries greater say in their operations. Action must be taken by 1985, the Brandt Commission said almost two years ago.

But the Cancun summit's final statement either skirts around subjects in which disagreements run deep — as in energy and international financial reform — or offers such generalizations as "hunger must be eradicated."

A central task of the summit was to better define procedures for conducting negotiations among all nations on the full range of problems. But the final statement shrouded this subject in the obscurity of diplomatic language.

It said global negotiations were desirable but, Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau, the other co-chairman, later said, "We failed to get agreement on exactly what the next step will be."

The focus now shifts back to the United Nations, where years of backroom bargaining have produced no ground rules for such global economic talks.

There is little prospect for a swift agreement this time in the United Nations. At Cancun, Reagan set some pre-conditions for global negotiations that promise later confrontations with the Third World, including a rejection of major international financial changes.

With no hard decisions taken here, many leaders of the developing countries represented at Cancun followed Lopez Portillo's lead and embraced the "spirit' as the important thing.

Cancun "has succeeded in bringing developed and developing countries closer together," Indian Prime Minister Indira Gandhi said Saturday.

"I think the fact that people have attended the summit means they mean business," Nigerian Foreign Minister Ishiya Audu told reporters. "I think a good first step has been taken."

Egyptian 'treasure' hawkers are common tourist trap

EDITOR'S NOTE — Egypt's Nile Valley is a lovely lure for tourists anxious to see the tombs of the pharaohs, the Sphinx, the pyramids. The attractions have made tourism big business in Egypt. But then there are the hawkers, the profiteers and black marketeers.

By MAGDA EL-SANGA
Associated Press Writer

LUXOR, Egypt (AP) — The ancient monuments, sandy cliffs, and giant white sails floating by on the swiftly moving Nile all conspire to make this southern city beautiful, calm, relaxing and one of Egypt's top tourist attractions.

But the beauty wanes and the relaxation turns into frustration as the tourists, who come here by the thousands each year, run into the hawkers and con men who apparently believe that anyone who would come all this way to see some stones and get some sun must be rich and willing to share the wealth.

The pharaonic monuments and royal tombs are themselves off limits to the hawkers and black marketeers who unashamedly yell "want to change dollars?" at one and all, but they swarm around the entrance gates tugging at sleeves and obstructing passage.

At the doorway to the Valley of the Kings, where the treasures of Tutankhamun were discovered in 1922, vendors who swear that every piece of carved rock is a genuine antique are neatly lined up to one side.

The same is true at the gates of Deir el-Bahary, temple of Queen Hatshepsut; at the Valley of the Queens, and at the mortuary temple of Ramses II, where lies the fallen statue imortalized in Shelley's poem "Ozymandias."

A small boy runs up and grabs an arm, pulls to one side and slips out of a pocket a "very old, very old" painted stone taken from a tomb.

Even a cursory inspection reveals that the painting is simply a modern postcard of pharaonic design, stuck to a piece of limestone, suitably scratched around the edges and muddied over to give the impression of age and exposure.

Another boy stands with a long line of alabaster vases and figurines on show. One scratch of a fingernail across the vase sends soap flakes flying.

Egyptologists in Cairo say not one piece of stone sold by the various street vendors is an authentic antique. It is illegal for Egyptians or foreigners to own or export ancient artifacts in Egypt.

"Everyone is out for a piece of the action," says an Egyptian tour leader, "so people who come to Egypt for what they think is an inexpensive holiday, in fact spend a lot more than they expected."

While air travel from the United States to Egypt, for example, is not cheap (a regular ticket costs some $700), most tourists come on charters and organized tours that could bring the cost down to less than half.

Hotel rooms, when one can get them, are less than super-priced. A double room at the best hotel in Luxor costs $40 and in the smaller hotels about $30 or $35.

But the hotels in Luxor also create headaches. Vacationers may arrive at their chosen inn with what they think are confirmed bookings, only to find no room available for them.

A small gratuity may obtain a room. If not, there are always the lobby sofas.

Gratuities don't always work when the same thing happens with an airline seat. Egypt's national airline, Egyptair, is the only one permitted to fly domestically. At peak tourist season, September to May, seats to and from Luxor are difficult if not impossible to obtain.

Fights break out at the tiny Luxor airport, ill-adapted to dealing with the influx of tourists after serving as a military airfield for years. Airline officials yell at would-be-passengers, passengers threaten check-in clerks, fights break out and travellers spend days and nights sleeping on suitcases in the airport lounge.

Tips are just a small part of the extras the tourist was not told about that make the final bill quite high.

Some tour leaders are in league with guides, cab drivers and "antique" sellers, and whatever the tourist is surcharged is split down the middle, sources in the industry say.

The Ministry of Tourism says it is aware of the tourists' complaints, and Luxor has always been "the bottleneck of tourism in Egypt."

Adel Taher, first deputy minister of tourism, divides the blame evenly. He says the tourist police are not doing their duty by chasing hawkers away, or by arresting and bringing to trial crooked vendors. But while tourist police are in evidence at all the locations a sightseer may choose to visit, most speak only Arabic and have great difficulty understanding what a tourist is complaining about.

Hotels and airlines should respect reservations, Taher says, whether made by individuals or agencies, and should not overbook.

Taher also recommended that officials of the Antiquities Organization in Luxor should periodically patrol ticket sales' offices to ensure honesty and that the cost of hiring a guide or a car to tour the sites be clearly displayed in all hotel lobbies.

But he had no suggestions on when and how these recommendations would be carried out, or who would enforce them.

Minor quake strikes Indonesia

JAKARTA, Indonesia (AP) — A light earthquake struck parts of Bali's capital, Denpasar, the meteorological office here said Saturday. No damage was reported.

The epicenter of the quake, which registered 4.5 on the Richter Scale, was located 24 miles east of Denpasar, a spokesman said.

The island was severely damaged three years ago by an earthquake and about 200 people were killed.

The Richter scale is a measure of ground motion as recorded on seismographs. Every increase of one number means a tenfold increase in magnitude. An earthquake of 4 on the Richter scale can cause moderate damage.

Soviet actor named 'labor hero'

MOSCOW (AP) — Arkady Raikin, one of the Soviet Union's best-known satiric actors, was named a "hero of socialist labor" on his 70th birthday Saturday.

A decree, published on the front page of the Soviet Communist Party newspaper Pravda and signed by Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev, hailed Raikin's "great contribution" to Soviet art.

Kenya's money troubles cause unrest

By EDITH M. LEDERER
Associated Press Writer

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — A mounting economic crisis is stirring discontent in Kenya, long considered a bastion of stability in black Africa.

President Daniel Arap Moi on Oct. 14 observed the third anniversary of his inauguration with his nation facing the prospect of near-zero economic growth for the first time since independence from Britain in 1963.

Moi, who succeeded the country's founder, Jomo Kenyatta, in August, 1978, and was then elected president without opposition, has so far managed to keep the lid on a crisis spawned by high costs of imported oil and low prices for Kenya's main cash crops, especially coffee and tea.

One of America's staunchest allies in black Africa, Kenya has had one of the continent's most open political systems. In recent months, however, the press has come under increasing scrutiny and the few government critics in Parliament are either under police investigation or in jail.

The economic crunch, which has hit many other Third World countries, has sparked criticism of government policies, especially from the middle class. A new crackdown on imports is forcing some businesses to close and raising the prices of luxury goods still on store shelves.

Government doctors demanding increased pay and allowances went on strike this past summer, bringing the country's public health services to a halt. Moi closed the University of Nairobi after students demonstrated in support of the striking doctors.

One sign of political discontent was a recent government disclosure of an anonymous leaflet charging that "a new era of subjugation, suppression and degradation is emerging" in Kenya.

The leaflet, which drew front-page headlines in the local papers, accused Constitutional and Home Affairs Minister Charles Njonjo, one of the most powerful men in government and considered a possible successor to Moi, of manipulating the constitution to achieve his personal ambitions.

Minister of Local Government Stanley Oloitipitip, attacking the leaflet's authors, asked: "Why do people want to bring chaos to Kenya at the time when Kenyans are enjoying peace?"

The leaflet claimed Waruru Kanja, one of the government's strongest critics in Parliament who was recently jailed for three years on conviction of currency violations, was Njonjo's first victim.

It added that seven other members of Parliament are "to be attended to" — an apparent reference to seven of Kanja's outspoken colleagues who are under police investigation for mileage claims in their official expenses. A female member, Chelagat Mutai, has already been charged with making false mileage claims.

Moi, a member of the small Kalenjin tribal group, was the target immediately after Kenyatta's death of an alleged coup attempt by powerful politicians who wanted to keep the presidency in the dominant Kikuyu tribe.

At the time of his death, Kenyatta had his fellow Kikuyus in virtually every key government post. Moi has made a genuine effort to stamp out tribalism by abolishing the politically powerful tribal organizations and including members of various tribes in important government posts.

Despite its current economic woes, Kenya has made great strides since independence:

— Manufacturing production has doubled.

— Primary school education is now universal.

Restaurant business success for Hungarian

(EDITOR'S NOTE — Twenty-five years after the 1956 Hungarian revolution, the nation is experimenting with free enterprise in the small-business area. Here is an account of how one Hungarian free-enterprise manager is doing.)

By STEPHEN H. MILLER
Associated Press Writer

BUDAPEST, Hungary (AP) — For Julia Ferenczy, Hungarian communism's economic reforms mean a 17-hour working day and deciding whether or not to hire more Gypsy musicians. They also mean running her own restaurant, the Magyar Csarda on Jozsef Boulevard, and making more than the average wage.

"We are thinking about having folklore evenings on Tuesday nights," says the black-haired Mrs. Ferenczy during lunch at her 15-table restaurant.

The Magyar Csarda still actually belongs to one of Budapest's biggest state food enterprises, East Pest Catering. Mrs. Ferenczy bought the right to run it for three years and to make as much money as she can during the process.

Such turnovers began in Hungary this year in one of the latest moves in a 13-year program of loosening up the country's economy and trying to make it more responsive to the market.

Other economic tinkerings have helped turn Hungary into a producer of more food than it can consume and given unique freedoms to the country's economic enterprises.

The result, 25 years after the Hungarian revolution of October, 1956, is what many Western analysts consider the most efficient economy in the Soviet bloc, although one that still has its troubles.

The government says that over the next two years it wants to shift several thousand restaurants and at least 10,000 shops from state to private operation.

Few private operators are expected to get rich, since most if not all of the operations put up for lease have profit problems.

Private operators, according to the theory behind the plan, may be able to improve profits by initiative, family operation and freedom from some of the restrictions forced on a state operator.

"It's not so much the style of cooking but the way we could buy food," says Mrs. Ferenczy, who was deputy manager of the Magyar Csarda until she bid to take it over nine months ago.

As part of East Pest Catering, the restaurant had to buy its supplies through the enterprise at set prices. Mrs. Ferenczy still gets 70 percent of her supplies there but she also can go to the country to buy such things as veal and vegetables more cheaply.

Through a bidding system, enterprises still get roughly what the operations were making before they were rented out.

If the rented operations survive and prosper, the enterprises benefit when rentals are renewed because bids are automatically linked to profit levels and will be higher.

Mrs. Ferenczy pledged to pay East Pest 3.37 million forints (about $112,000) over 35 months. Like two other bidders, she also agreed to invest 250,000 forints (about $8,300) in East Pest's pots, pans and other equipment.

She says she did not have to pay a down payment, because she was already working for East Pest in the restaurant.

Since then, it's been business pretty much as might be usual for a non-socialist restaurant operator.

The restaurant, whose name means roughly Hungarian Inn, opens at noon and sometimes doesn't close until after 1 a.m. Mrs. Ferenczy, overseeing a staff of 10 which includes her mother and two Gypsy musicians, is up at 8 a.m. to start getting things ready.

She spent anxious weeks earlier this year waiting to see what would happen when a remodelled tavern down the street opened its doors after renovation. Little did.

Meat prices went up 10 percent during the summer but not the prices at the Magyar Csarda.

"I have to compete with the restaurants in the neighborhood," Mrs. Ferenczy says.

A well-worn establishment with warm yellowed wood and garlands of Hungarian peppers, the restaurant serves about 700 people a day including customers who just come in for a drink.

Mrs. Ferenczy says she even gets some customers from the luxurious Hilton Hotel far across town, searching for a neighborhood atmosphere and less luxurious prices.

She is reluctant to disclose the restaurant's income as well as her own, but she says her own personal earnings are well above Hungary's official average wage of about 4,000 forints (about $133) a month. She indicated, however, that it was not so much as those other self-employed Hungarians who are believed to be pulling down three to five times the official average.

Things have not gone as well for some of the other new restaurant owners. Newspapers have reported on renters who found themselves locked into unprofitable contracts, into neighborhoods with no customer potential and into bookkeeping and business chores for which they were not prepared.

Mrs. Ferenczy, however, figures winter weather will provide her with about 30 percent more customers and she is debating whether or not to encourage them by doubling her Gypsy music group.

Cairo filled with tension following Sadat's death

By STEVEN K. HINDY
Associated Press Writer

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Swarms of rifle-toting security men searching for armed Moslem fanatics reveal the tension and uncertainty that grips this overcrowded capital since President Anwar Sadat's assassination.

With the dawn of almost every hot, autumn day, the semi-official press announces new arrests — a total of 356 so far. And Western diplomats say many hundreds more have been detained for questioning throughout Egypt since the Oct. 6 murder.

The weekly October magazine reported Saturday that three people were arrested and 110 pounds of dynamite and 12 sticks of TNT confiscated in a graveyard in the Khalifa neighborhood, part of southeast Cairo's "city of the dead."

The magazine said Interior Minister Nabawi Ismail ordered a search of empty tombs and graveyards.

American reporters saw several hundred central security police wearing khaki fatigues and steel helmets and carrying Soviet-made rifles surround a "city of the dead" neighborhood at the foot of east Cairo's Moqattam hills on Saturday. Officials would not comment on what they were doing.

"The first problem I am facing now is the security of the country, the people and every citizen here," said new President Hosni Mubarak in an interview with Mexican television.

Security appears to be much tighter now than it was immediately after Sadat was killed, perhaps because of police clashes with Moslem fanatics in the southern city of Assyut and revelations that the assassination was part of a larger conspiracy to spark an Iran-style revolution.

In the television interview, carried Saturday by the Middle East News Agency, Mubarak blamed the assassination on "Islamic fanatics whom we consider the farthest from Islamic teachings, and who are closer to the teachings of (Iranian spiritual leader Ayatollah Ruhollah) Khomeini, whom we do not consider to be a Moslem by any means."

The television station on the shores of the Nile and other government buildings are guarded by soldiers sitting in sand-bagged machine gun nests. Armed security men in ill-fitting leisure suits are posted at the glass doors of the Sheraton Hotel and other haunts of rich Persian Gulf Arab and Western tourists.

Truckloads of central security police wearing khaki, and riot police wearing white, patrol every neighborhood in the city of 9 million.

At night, motorists are sometimes stopped at checkpoints and asked to show their identification papers.

Opium addicts and hashish smokers in Cairo's eastern Battaneya neighborhood complain that Mubarak's crackdown has dried up their drug sources.

At Ein Shames (Eye of The Sun) University in northeast Cairo, security men allow only registered students to enter the campus, which is patrolled by police for the first time in years.

In the surrounding Abbasia neighborhood, where Moslem fundamentalists violently protested Sadat's crackdown several times last month, many posters of Mubarak have been ripped down.

Sadat ordered the arrest of 1,536 people — mainly fundamentalists — last month, accusing them of inciting Moslem-Christian strife. Mubarak has said he will release those who are not charged after investigation — an apparent reference to detainees such as journalist Mohamed Hassanein Heikal, whose arrest drew protest in the West.

The semi-official press daily carries new details of the assassination, livening the conversations of laborers and peasants drinking sweet Arabic coffee and tea in Cairo's open air cafes. Curiosity seekers and tourists flock to the parade reviewing stand where Sadat was gunned down, pacing off the steps taken by the assassins and examining the patched up bullet holes.

Despite official explanations, Cairo residents still are asking how the assassins were able to sneak into the Oct. 6 parade, in military uniform, and kill Sadat.

Coca-growing Peruvian town has anti-American sentiments

BY KERNAN TURNER
Associated Press Writer

TINGO MARIA, Peru (AP) — The single paved street in this dusty town tucked in a jungle-clad valley resounds often these days with anti-Americanism. Townspeople demonstrate with "Go Home Yankees" banners and a Committee for the Defense of the Town has been formed.

The hostile attitude among the 80,000 people of Tingo Maria in the upper Huallaga Valley, 340 miles northeast of Lima, stems not from major foreign-policy decisions in Washington, but from a U.S. effort to eliminate one of the starting points of the Latin American cocaine trail to American streets.

The mainstay of the economy of Tingo Maria is the growing of coca, from which cocaine is made.

The U.S. State Department, through its Bureau of International Narcotics Matters and in conjunction with the Peruvian government, plans to spend $15 million to $20 million in the next five years to destroy the illegal cultivation of the crop.

At the same time, the U.S. Agency for International Development (AID) will spend at least $18 million on agricultural development of the valley in hopes farmers who now grow coca will switch to legal crops.

Narcotics agents estimate Peru produces about 50,000 metric tons of coca leaves a year, only 14,000 metric tons legally. (A metric ton is 2,204 pounds.)

The legal uses of coca include chewing by highland Indians to deaden hunger and fatigue, the extraction of soft drink flavorings and the production of legal pain killers.

The remaining 36,000 tons are converted into a paste resembling bread dough, which is smuggled to neighboring Colombia for processing into cocaine, which eventually reaches the United States.

Rough calculations based on figures provided by narcotics agents in Peru indicate the cocaine produced from 36,000 metric tons of leaves would have a street value in the United States of $35 billion to $52 billion.

Larry Thompson, the U.S. State Department's drug officer in Peru, said half the country's illegal coca leaves are grown near Tingo Maria.

The green-leafed coca bushes stand in neat, straight rows on the hills, easily visible from the Tourist Hotel on the bank of the Huallaga River or from the airport, where commercial airlines make the half-hour flight to Lima daily.

Bankers and merchants in Tingo Maria say coca supports the local economy, although most of the money stays in the pockets of drug traffickers from Colombia.

Luis Sin Laos, until recently the president of the regional Chamber of Commerce, said nearly all of the valley's 180,000 peasants are growing coca, most of it illegally, on about 148,000 acres of land.

"Of the farmers dedicated to coca, five percent have big farms and money and the other 95 percent are subsistance farmers," he said.

There is virtually universal agreement here that the peasants will never switch voluntarily from coca to food crops.

Agriculturists at the local university said a farmer can earn the equivalent of about $8,000 a year by growing one hectare (2.47 acres) of coca, compared with some $800 from cacao and even less from rice or corn.

On a recent Monday morning, a young man from the city who maintains a small, hidden coca crop in the verdant hills paused to catch his breath on the trail leading to his plot of land.

"I came here two years ago because I heard I could make big money growing coca," he said. "But if this eradication campaign continues for five years, I'll move to another valley and start over again and so will the rest of the growers."

The Peruvian government has been trying since 1978 to get rid of the illegal coca. Instead, the peasants, most of them recent arrivals from other regions of Peru, have increased their holdings.

The first police action was in March, 1980, when more than 1,000 soldiers and policemen spent 20 days making arrests, destroying coca crops, burning leaf-drying barns and blowing up the pits where the leaves are converted into coca paste.

Tingo Maria responded with a 24-hour protest strike.

Recently, the growers and merchants have begun meeting regularly to organize protests against the latest campaign, alleged police abuses and a state of emergency which since 1979 has restricted civil liberties in Tingo Maria.

The new campaign began last March when 75 special narcotics police trained and equipped with U.S. help established a base in Tingo Maria to enforce narcotics laws. An additional 75 men will reinforce the police contingent in January. The police, dressed in military-fatigue uniforms supplied by the United States — some of them with belts stamped "U.S. Army" — man roadblocks and patrol the mountain roads in U.S.-made, four-wheel-drive vehicles.

A parking lot across the street from police headquarters is filled with trucks and motorcycles confiscated from local residents without proper registration documents.

"The police came here with the mentality that all of us are drug traffickers and they treat us accordingly," one merchant claimed.

The government has declared all sales of coca in Tingo Maria illegal and has threatened to arrest anyone caught harvesting the crop or selling leaves.

"Any coca we find now is illegal," Capt. Vicente Fortunato, an intelligence officer with the Peruvian narcotics police, said in an interview.

Fortunato said police raids on farms are often greeted by a hail of bullets, adding that peasants also mine mountain trails with trip-line booby traps.

The main complaint in Tingo Maria is that the government, encouraged by the United States, began the eradication program before making technical and financial aid available to the farmers.

"If their crops are destroyed, what will the peasants live on this year? What will we live on?" said Carlos Cordova Santa Gadea, the manager of the local branch of the Amazon Bank.

Merchants and coca growers claimed the anti-coca campaign had been concentrated unfairly on Tingo Maria, while other producing regions continue as usual.

"It's as if the United States only wants a showplace, something it can point to and say, 'Look, we're fighting drugs,' " said Porfirio Munoz, owner of an import store and president of the Committee for the Defense of the Town. "The police action is similar to killing a dog to cure its rabies."

In Lima, Malcolm Butler, the U.S. AID director for Peru, said the eradication and agricultural projects were connected, but no AID money would be spent on police or efforts to kill the plants.

"The AID program stands on its own as a development project," in coordination with other rural development projects in the Peruvian jungle, he said.

Thompson said farmers will be given a short period to voluntarily quit growing illegal coca before police begin destroying the crops.

Tito Jaime Fernandez, president of the coca growers association, who was jailed for 40 days during the 1980 crackdown, said it would be better to spend the money directly on the peasants instead of trying to eradicate coca.

"We are protesting and taking forceful measures so the government will recognize the campaign is damaging the local economy and will pass a new law legitimizing coca," he said.

Munoz agreed. "If coca is eradicated from one day to the next, Tingo Maria will be a ghost town," he said. "Without coca, Tingo Maria is nothing."

Reagan unfamiliar with European problems, German official says

BONN, West Germany (AP) — President Reagan's statement about the possibility of a limited nuclear war shows that he is "not sufficiently well versed in European problems," a senior West German politician said Saturday.

Peter Glotz, executive secretary of the ruling Social Democratic Party, told a radio interviewer that Reagan's remarks did not signal a shift in U.S. doctrine.

Glotz said the remarks "showed ... that the American president is not sufficiently well versed in European problems in contrast to his secretary of state," Alexander M. Haig Jr.

He said said the controversy over Reagan's remarks also showed that millions of Western Europeans wanted to reconsider military strategy and that many people no longer supported "the logic of the generals."

The controversy stemmed from remarks Reagan made Oct. 17 to a group of American newspaper editors in Washington.

Asked if he could envision a limited war in Europe without U.S. intervention, Reagan said, "I could see where you could have the exchange of tactical (nuclear) weapons against troops in the field without it bringing in either one of the major powers pushing the button."

Critics of U.S. defense policy feared the remarks indicated the United States considered a limited nuclear war in Europe likely.

The Reagan administration said the remarks were simply a restatement of the longtime Western doctrine of flexible response to aggression.

Chancellor Helmut Schmidt said he was satisfied with the administration'sexplanation.

But the flap emerged as Schmidt's government faced growing opposition to NATO plans to station new U.S. nuclear missiles in Europe.

On Oct. 10, 250,000 people rallied in Bonn to protest the missile deployment plan. It was the largest anti-war rally in the country since the end of World War II.

Bavarian Premier Franz Josef Strauss, meanwhile, called on Schmidt to resign.

"The chancellor would do a great service to peace and to the German people if he would resign now," Strauss told a meeting of his Christian Social Union party at Bayreuth.

The conservative Strauss accused Schmidt of exploiting "the fear of war" in his Social Democratic Party's election campaign. Schmidt defeated the Bavarian premier in the race for the chancellorship during national elections last year.

With a few 'tricks,' it's easy to make Halloween a 'treat'

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

The traditional observance of All Hallow's Eve has become a night mostly for the younger set, and in Midland the tiny spooks and goblins are busy conjuring up their scary costumes in preparation for the big night next week.

Although Halloween has been tamed somewhat in recent years with many parents and schools organizing parties to replace the traditional neighborhood rounds, many children still opt for trick or treating.

According to the legend, Halloween, its name meaning hallowed or holy evening, has been around some 3,000 years. The night's festivities are rooted in Britain and Ireland with numerous superstitions and symbols still floating around from that annual affair.

In Britain, ancient Druids, an order of priests, believed that on the night of Oct. 31, the god of death summoned the souls of the wicked who had died the previous year. And in Ireland, the ol' familiar carved pumpkin — the jack-o-lantern — was originated.

The Irish tell of a man named Jack who was unable to enter heaven because he was a miser, nor could he enter hell because he played jokes on the devil. The Irish, as the legend goes, say that ol' Jack was doomed to prowl the earth with his lantern until Judgment Day

During early Christianity, the night became known as "All Hallow's Eve," the night before the feast of All Saints Day. And through the years, superstition prompted many to dress in weird and crazy costumes to hide from the evil spirts.

In the United States, Halloween became a night for harmless pranks. But in later years, those harmless pranks became dangerous with many small children the victims.

To make this year's Halloween safe for Midland's ghouls, goblins and ghosts, a cooperative effort of the Optimist Club of Midland and the Midland Crime Prevention Unit has produced a safety pamphlet — "There's No Trick to a Safe Halloween" — that will be distributed to the schools. In conjunction, Mayor Thane Akins has proclaimed this week as Halloween Safety Week.

Officer Robert A. Barnes of the Midland police department designed the pamphlet to point out safety hints for the youths. The flyers will be distributed to children from kindergarten through third grades.

Barnes recommends that trick-or-treaters stay in groups and always tell their parents where they go. He adds safety tips of staying clear of traffic by walking to and from houses on sidewalks, and to use the crosswalks when crossing the street, in addition to looking both ways first.

Other hints include wearing light-colored clothing, looking for a policeman if the trick-or-treaters get lost and having parents check all the treats before letting the childrem eat them.

The Texas Medical Association also offers helpful safety hints for the trick-or-treaters. Parents should encourage their children to haunt the neighborhood early in the evening before it gets dark. Reflective tape can be used effectively to spook up any costume and old make-up or grease paint is not only safer, but also creative for the little ones.

Above all, the TMA, as does the Midland Optimist and Crime Unit, stress forparents to convince the children not to munch-down on the goodies until they have been inspected by a responsible adult.

Although there have been only a few cases of "twisted individuals giving children fruit or candy with needles, razor blades, glass or drugs hidden within," the TMA suggests that the parents heed the warning of inspecting the treats.

Another danger parents should be aware of is that younger children could possibly choke on their candy.

The American Lung Association of Texas states that some children's chewing and swallowing abilities are not sufficiently developed to handle certain treats and choking could result.

"Halloween goodies also may 'go down the wrong way' and lodge in the lung instead of the stomach. This is called aspiration. A foreign object of any kind in the lung can cause life-long problems. At times, surgery for removal is required," according to the Lung Association.

If all of these safety hints are taken seriously, Midland's ghouls, ghosts and goblins should have a safe and happy Halloween.

All the spooks and goblins will be haunting the streets begging for treats Saturday and to make the evening a safe and happy Halloween several safety precautions should be taken. Spiderman tests his flashlight and carries a light colored bag so he may seen by the vehicles. Parents also should check masks for visibility and inspect the candy before their children eat the treats.

Kids favor ghoulish costumes this year

Remember rummaging through your parents discarded clothing to find that "special" costume for Halloween night?

Nowadays, in almost any store — department, discount or grocery — rows of plastic-type, non-flammable garments are displayed on cardboard hangers with masks of familiar cartoon and movie characters. Approaching the aisle or section devoted to the costumes, you can hear pleas from youngsters wanting to be Superman, Wonderwoman, Spiderman or Strawberry Shortcake for Halloween night.

Store managers are saying sales are good this year for the ready-made costumes. And while the super heroes are still "big," one Midland manager of a major grocery chain said there is a definite swing to the more traditional skeleton, devil and ghost costumes.

"However, Superman is definitely more in demand this year than Spiderman and Batman, and the girls are really going for Strawberry Shortcake," he said.

On the other hand, a discount chain-store manager claimed the "traditional Dracula and Wolfman are the best sellers."

"The kids are going back to the traditional costumes, but with educational TV, the kids are demanding a lot of Sesame Street characters," she said.

The department stores are reporting they are selling "a lot of super heroes and Star Wars and not many of the traditional costumes." But, one manager agreed that "the kids are leaning toward Sesame Street characters."

Overall, the biggest sellers besides the traditional costumes are Strawberry Shortcake for girls and Apple Dumplin' for boys.

Local fabric stores remarked that clown and witch patterns are popular for the handmade costumes. Some store managers noted that adults are buying material that isn't flame-retardent and warned that parents should be careful of these costumes.

And the saying "once a kid, always a kid" is proven true with the steady sales of the more sophisticated masks and costumes priced from $7.95 to $45.

Employees at two Midland novelty shops stated the big buys this year are Wolfman, Fangface, gorillas and Miss Piggy. Both stores' representatives said the majority of sales are to adults and that rainbow wigs and packaged re-useable synthetic spider webs are big items.

So, whether you are a goblin getting ready to go on the prowl or just young at heart, a variety of Halloween costumes can be found in Midland's orange and black decorated store aisles. But watch out — a few rows down, Thanksgiving has been set aside and "it's beginning to look a lot like Christmas."

The four R's: Reading, 'riting, 'rithmetic and relaxation

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

Thursday was a gloomy day. Wet and cold. It was the type of day that made adults want to forget about the office and stretch out on a couch with a good book in front of a blazing fire.

Those days are considered by children to be a little more dreary and a lot more boring.

There isn't much that seems worse to a child than to be cooped up in a classroom, unable to go out at recess to play and forced to listen to a teacher read a story.

But the atmosphere was different at Fannin Elementary School.

"Mr. Watkins," a smiling fifth grader called out to his principal. "Guess what? I made a B and a C on my papers."

Bob Watkins smiled down at the boy. "Hey, that's great! You've really brought 'em up. Don't you feel proud of yourself?"

The students at Fannin Elementary obviously do.

And they obviously regard both their principal and their teachers with respect.

THERE WAS NO pushing or shoving in the cafeteria line. In the classrooms, students worked busily on lessons and art projects.

There was no excessive or loud talking, no fights, no merciless teasing — no signs of the restlessness prevalent in most schools on a cold, rainy day.

Instead, it was, well, relaxing.

The reason, according to Watkins and his staff, is the assertive discipline program that is in effect.

Or, more simply, "a positive approach to good behavior."

Watkins said it all began when the administrators were tired of what he termed an "irritable discipline problem."

"Things like talking out loud, fighting — just behaving in an unappropriate behavior," Watkins explained. "It had gotten to where the teachers were spending too much time having to correct the students."

Although the discipline plan was instigated at Fannin last November, Watkins said it was more of a trial and error system than the thoroughly defined program in effect this year.

"THE PHILOSOPHY is that if a student is given the freedom and encouragement to manage themselves, with our guidance, then they are well on the way to maturity," Watkins said.

If they misbehave, they pay the consequences, he continued. If they act in the appropriate manner, they will receive rewards.

The rewards are not only tangible prizes, he stressed.

Besides rewards such as "rental passes" that allow a student to take home games, books and puzzles overnight, such coveted privileges as being the first in line, having special free time activity and choosing the next class story are also given.

"SunshineGrams," which are notes sent home to parents about special achievements the child has gained, also rate as a source of pride for the students.

Gone are the negative associations of a note sent home to the parents.

Watkins said that occasionally he will call the parents of students who have done something well.

Gone are the stigmas attached to notices from the principal to the parents.

According to Watson, a committee composed of one teacher from every grade set general behavior rules for the students to follow. And they know the consequences.

"FOR THE FIRST three weeks of school, we informed the students of what the rules were," he said. "We had 'role plays,' where if one kid was picking on another, we had two students get up in front of the class and demonstrate what had just happened. We clarified which types of behavior are appropriate and which aren't."

The next stage was a set of rules that were taken home to the parents specifying how the program dealt with those who abided by the rules and those who did not. The parents were requested to sign the sheet and the students brought it back to school.

Watkins said 99 percent of the responses from parents were favorable. "According to a recent survey, the number one concern of parents (related to the schools) is discipline," he said.

The sheet began with the introduction, "In order to guarantee your child, and all the students in my classroom, the excellent learning climate they deserve, I am utilizing the following Discipline Plan.... I believe all my students can behave appropriately in my classroom. I will tolerate no student stopping me from teaching and/or any student from learning."

The five class rules included following directions (bringing materials to class and finishing assignments on time), staying in their seat, raising their hand for permission to get up or speak, prohibiting teasing and bad language and keeping hands, feet and objects to themselves.

THE NEGATIVE consequences begin with the child's name being written on the board or a pink slip given as a warning, a check mark by the name or another pink slip which results in a 30 minute isolation period with academic work. The third offense will mean a visit with the principal.

Once the child reaches Watkins' office, the problem may be settled in several different ways. Paddling, a conference with the parents and the teacher, total isolation or expulsion are several alternatives.

And every student knows the consequences.

"No matter how good little Suzy usually is, (if she breaks one of the rules) she gets treated like everyone else (including those who habitually cause disruptions in the class)," Watkins said.

"There is none of the 'If I throw something across the room at John, I wonder what the teacher will do to me,' " Watkins said. "He knows."

Rules apply to lunchroom, playground and bus behavior. Watkins said that all teachers are authorized to hand out slips if the need arises, whether it is to one of their students or someone else's.

He said the program allows the teachers to support each other 100 percent, leading to a more relaxed atmosphere.

"TEACHERS DON'T go home beat," he said. "They're tired, but in a good way."

Fifth grade teacher Betsy Gowdey agrees. "Everyone works together and it's a team — the whole mood is positive."

In Patricia McElwrath's second grade class, the teamwork involves the students. She said that her students work hard to "earn their marbles."

When a student behaves exceptionally well in the lunchroom, for example, the child receives a marble, which he places in a jar with marbles other children in the classroom have earned. When the jar is full, the class is entitled to a "treat day."

Bob Watkins
Fannin Elementary Principal

"They've really been working hard to get those marbles," she said. "We've added a marble nearly every day."

With the assertive discipline program at Fannin, and the stress on the positive accomplishments of the students, the atmosphere for learning is pleasant.

And, according to teacher Carolyn Poer, "It gives us a chance to really enjoy what we're doing."

U.S. Rep. Jim Collins

Midland, Odessa supporters greet Collins at air terminal

LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

With the wind whipping the balloons and the airplane engines revving up in the background, U.S. Rep. Jim Collins of Dallas bellowed out his intentions Saturday to fight U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen for the senate seat in the 1982 race.

Collins, who made the initial announcement of his campaign early that day in Dallas, stopped at Midland Regional Air Terminal Saturday afternoon for a political mini-rally. Greeting his airplane outside Chaparral Aviation were supporters from Midland and Odessa, waving multicolored balloons in the chilly fall wind.

Collins, who is into his eighth term as a congressman from the metropolitan Dallas area, narrowed his talk to Bentsen and his liberal way of spending money.

However, he kept his comments about his opponent in the Republican primary, Walter Mengden of Houston, on the friendly level, calling the state senator "a nice man and a conservative." To beat Mengden, Collins estimated it would take only "$300,000 to $400,000. We don't think we will spend that much in the primary."

Once over the hump of the primary, victory in the general election will mean an all-out effort, according to Collins. He asserted that Bentsen is a jump ahead by gaining support of the special interest groups, which will be financing the incumbent's campaign.

"We have the middle class people," claimed Collins of his main support group.

Mengden, who was in Midland Tuesday to publicize his campaign efforts, remarked that Collins had been a do-nothing congressman. Collins countered that Saturday, saying that successfully getting "less government regulation is not a matter of do-nothing. The way the system works up there in Washington is that the Democrats won't let Republicans introduce a bill in the House."

Using Barry Goldwater of Arizona as an example, he said the longtime senator had been allowed to introduce only one bill and that was to create a gold medal for the late actor John Wayne.

The 1982 senate race "will be the most interesting race Texas has seen. It's a clear-cut bet between a conservative and a liberal," Collins said of himself and Bentsen.

"Bentsen is a big-spending liberal. He really should be the senator from Massachusetts. He shouldn't be representing Texas," said the congressman to a round of applause from his supporters.

Out of 145 spending bills, claimed Collins, Bentsen voted "no" on only two of them. When Bentsen was first elected to the Senate in 1970, the country's budget was $196 billion, he said in trying to explain the Democrat's high-spending habits. "This year the budget will be over $720 billion. These bills cost the American taxpayers $2.2 trillion."

These high-rolling habits of the federal government, claimed Collins, have contributed to the high interest rates and high inflation.

To clarify his point, Collins said that in 1976 "when Jimmy Carter came to Washington" the average house could be purchased for $316 a month. Today, the average house payment has jumped to $924 a month.

"Now who can afford $924 a month?" he asked rhetorically. "With 22 percent interest rates from banks, how can you operate a business?"

To point up the differences between the two men, Collins claimed he has "consistently voted to cut federal spending programs." And while the American Conservative Union gave Bentsen a 37 percent rating, Collins pulled out a 97 percent conservative rating, he said.

Turning to the issue of primary concern in the oil-producing Permian Basin area, Collins said he would explain the position of oilmen "over and over" in Washington.

He blasted Bentsen for voting to create the Department of Energy and for not only being in favor of the Windfall Profits Tax, but for upping the amount of revenue needed from that tax.

Collins paused for a few seconds while a Continental Airlines plane roared off the runway and into the sky, then continued, while "oil and gas is the future of Texas for the next 20 years," water then will become the next crucial issue. "We need to get water here."

The Dallas man referred to the Midland-Odessa area as one of the six key locations he would be visiting in the state because of its "Republican spirit."

"This is the greatest Republican center in the south," he noted. "You have the spirit. You have the future. You know what it stands for."

THIS WEEK IN GOVERNMENT

Filling vacancy on agenda

Who will take over the job of Robert Rendall, the county attorney who tendered his resignation Oct. 12 to enter private law practice, will be taken up by the Midland County Commissioners' Court in its Monday meeting.

Rendall, 27, who set his cut-off date from the county Nov. 1, will be joining an across-the-street law firm which specializes in oil, gas, real estate work and litigation.

The commissioners will be considering Rendall's replacement in their 10 a.m. meeting in the Midland County Courthouse.

Rendall, who was due for a $5,000 pay hike that would have boosted his salary to $35,000 in 1982, is the third lawyer on the county payroll to leave public service and enter the private sector this fall.

Rendall's first assistant, Woody Leverett, 28, bailed out to practice law. Vacating District Attorney Vern Martin's office was Rob Sutphen, an assistant prosecutor who also opted for a private law practice.

Rendall's successor likely will come from within his office, which now is staffed by three lawyers, J. Scott Henderson, the senior assistant prosecutor; Ruben Bustamante, and Mark Dettman.

Outside of prosecuting county misdemeanor criminal cases, handling juvenile matters and hot checks, the county attorney is the county's legal adviser. And with the demands of the Commissioners' Court, that latter job has almost worked up to a full-time chore.

In other matters, the commissioners are to:

—Hear a report by County Road and Bridge Superintendent Albert Stewart on conditions of the county roads.

—Be advised by Betty Sheeler on the Section 8 (federal rent subsidized) Existing Housing Program.

—Consider approving a plat in Irvin Addition South.

—Consider a resolution to allow the West Texas Higher Education Authority to operate in Midland County.

—Approve a preliminary plat in Longview Subdivision.

—Discuss no-truck traffic signs on County Road 1135 South.

—Consider increasing the monthly car-parking rate on the county-owned EZ Parking Lot at Baird Street and Texas Avenue.

—Consider Sheriff Dallas Smith's request to increase the manpower in the county jail and to repair patrol cars.

—Consider Constable Tom McGinnis's viewpoint on his office's personnel and new vehicles.

—Consider a resolution casting votes for the five nominees to the Midland County Tax Appraisal District's board.

—Consider appointees to the Midland City-County Joint Liaison Committee.

—Hear County Treasurer Dee Thompson's report on supplemental death-benefits program affecting the 250 to 300 county employees.

—Consider a resolution supporting passage of Proposition No. 4, a Texas constitutional amendment which would authorize use of state funds for development of water resources projects in Texas, in the Nov. 3 general election.

MISD Trustees

The Midland Independent School District Board of Trustees will hold its regular meeting at 1:30 p.m. Tuesday in the MISD Administration Building, 702 N. N St.

Action is expected to be taken on a request to extend a contract for the use of Goddard Junior High School by a church group, a request by the YMCA to use school facilities for recreational programs, an adoption of a resolution for the election of directors for the Midland County Tax Appraisal District, and consideration of alternative designs for the exterior walls of the Learning Resources Centers for the two new elementary schools.

Reports will be given on the SAT and ACT scores and the elementary school facility utilization in relation to enrollment projections.

Our firm intention is to have all advertised items in stock on our shelves. If an advertised item is not available for purchase due to any unforeseen reason, we will issue a Rain Check on request for the merchandise, one item or reasonable family quantity, to be purchased at the sale price whenever available or will sell you a comparable quality item at a comparable reduction in price.

Court upholds judgment supporting Upton County Water District

McCAMEY — The Texas Court of Civil Appeals has upheld a lower court judgment supporting the Upton County Water District's constitutionality, right to tax and to provide a source of water for the towns of McCamey and Rankin.

A group of Upton County farmers, ranchers and other residents and non-resident landowners filed suit in the 112th State District Court here in 1979 to have the water district declared unlawful and unconstitutional and disbanded. They failed.

Earlier, in October 1979, the landowners had filed a petition with the district to get their lands excluded from the district. The district's board directors balked.

The landowners had sought to prove that the act creating the district was unconstitutional. They were in fear of losing their water rights and of paying water district taxes but deriving no benefits.

The defendant, however, claimed that the municipalities it was to serve — Rankin and McCamey — had the right of eminent domain: the right of governments to appropriate private property, water in this instance, for public use. However, the municipalities were considering getting underground water south of the county.

The court ruled that the act creating the district was constitutional and that ad valorem taxation was right and legal and that the landowners were not necessarily due any benefits from the water district.

The Court of Civil Appeals ruled that court costs be recovered from the appellants, Robbie W. Davidson, et al, and their sureties, Belva Sue Neal Brusehan and Berniece Hill Grimes, an Upton County landowner who lives in Midland.

Restoration of cemetery sought

LAMESA — A Lamesa resident is seeking support from the Dawson County Commissioners' Court to restore Midway Cemetery, which, says Don Thompson, is weathered, plowed under and 95 percent destroyed.

"We would like your help to try to reconstruct the cemetery as nearly to its original state as possible," Thompson was quoted by the Lamesa Press-Reporter.

"...We must stop the plowing," he said, "because of the loss of markers. He said Dawson Countians interested in restoring the Midway community cemetery would build a fence around the cemetery if posts were provided. Midway is southeast of Lamesa.

I have recently been offered a job. They want me to be bonded if I accept the job.

What kind of investigating does the bonding company do on a person? Do they delve into the honesty of your relatives such as brothers, fathers, too? — M.M.

ANSWER: A spokesman with Charles R. Ervin Insurance Co. says that the requirements for being bonded include having the employee fill out an application form and the employer providing information on the form for employers.

The information needed requires the amount of money the employee will be responsible for and the amount of the bond to be requested by the employer.

There is no investigation of relatives of the employee. There usually is a request on the application form for references.

I read recently that if I borrow on my life insurance to invest in an All Savers Certificate, I can get a double tax break. First, up to $2,000 of the All Savers Certificate's interest earnings are tax free; and second, I can deduct from my income taxes the interest on the funds I borrowed. — Mr. K.G.

ANSWER: The American Council of Life Insurance announces a recent widely syndicated article on "All Savers" certificates contained a serious error on the tax treatment of funds borrowed to finance the purchase of these tax-free certificates.

The council says the interest earnings on All Savers Certificates are indeed income tax free. But the IRS has ruled that you may not deduct interest on money you have borrowed to finance the purchase. That includes life insurance loans.

What are the differences between Medicare and Medicaid? — Mrs. J.M.

ANSWER: Medicare is a national insurance program administered by the federal government. Generally, the following are eligible: People 65 years or older, disabled people under age 65 who have been entitled to Social Security disability payments for at least 24 consecutive months (or railroad retirement benefits based on disability for at least 29 consecutive months) or people insured under Social Security on the railroad retirement system who need dialysis treatment or a kidney transplant because of permanent kidney failure.

Medicaid is a public assistance program financed by federal, state and local governments. Generally, low income people who are 65 or older, blind, disabled or are members of families with dependent children, are eligible.

Each state designs its own program based on federal guidelines. With the exception of Arizona, all states, as well as the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands and Guam, have Medicaid programs.

If I told my two sons that I planned to transfer the money in my savings account to them, putting the account in their names, they might just tap the till. Is it possible for me to do this without them knowing about it? — Mrs. G.T.

ANSWER: Unless you open a joint account requiring dual signatures or unless you open a trust account with you as trustee, your sons would have unrestricted access to the funds, says the State Bar of Texas.

As an additional alternative, you could form a trust that would keep the money for the sons until you died or your sons reached the age at which you decided to give it to them.

In addition, under the Texas Uniform Gift to Minors Act, you may be able to retain control over moneys you have given away. Be certain that your tax planning and your will reflect this decision.

Computer age arrives at Midland stores, supermarkets

Swishing a carton of cigarettes over the scanning machine, which records the price on tape, is Rebecca Williams. The new checking machines are said to be quicker than the old manual cash registers, and utilize the computer markings on products.

Noticed something unusual going on at the checkout stand recently?

Wondered why the checkout person rolls a can of peaches across the small window imbedded in the counter, or seems to push a loaf of bread instead of handing it to the sacker?

No, the checker is not suffering from a case of fumble fingers, nor is the high pitched shriek you hear coming from the checker's larynx — they're just additional indications that the computer age is upon us.

In the past month, you may have noticed such scanner checkout devices more and more in Midland discount stores and supermarkets, as it's indicative of the "test market" which Midland has become for products.

These computer scanner devices which are replacing hand-keyed cash registers are a direct result of a Chicago corporation's attempts to ascertain why specific items appeal to the shopper while others are greeted with a turned-up nose.

International Resources Incorporated of Illinois is supplying local supermarkets with computer scanner systems at no charge to the companies, in exchange for allowing IRI to conduct tests on specified items. Thus far, Gibson's Discount Center, Albertson's, M System and Safeway have acquiesced, with Furr's Supermarket scheduled to have the system installed within the next couple of months.

The way the scanner system works is thus: About 80 percent of consumer goods carry a series of coded lines somewhere on the package. The checker passes the code over the scanner, which is imbedded in the counter, and a laser beam reads the code. The information is relayed to the in-house computer, which checks its files and flashes before the checker and customer the price. It all occurs within milliseconds.

However, items which are not coded, such as produce, are still keyed in by hand.

"There's several advantages," noted Gibson's store manager Steve Walker. "There's more accurate checkout for the customers, more speedy checkout for the customers, and less mistakes by the cashiers."

Furthermore, he said, sale prices can be initiated simply and checkers need no longer rely on memory or newspaper tearsheets.

"The system in general also makes for easier management-type reporting, (determining) what items are moving better than others so you can get rid of slow sellers and keep your inventory more accurate," added Walker.

However, any time a new system confronts people difficulties may present themselves. Some customers have complained that the system is delaying service — not speeding it up — because checkers must search the package for the coded bars, which sometimes require several passes over the scanner before a reading is obtained. And too, CB radios or other residential electronic equipment may cause disruption.

Walker, however, said the new system has not presented any major difficulties for checkers, though supervisory personnel have experienced some problems.

"We were pretty well versed with the scanning system already, but it was just a different computer program and we had to learn it," he said.

To a customer passing through the checkout stand and viewing the scanner for the first time, his initial impression may be, "Well, there goes the necessity for checkers in the future." But Walker says that stores "nearly always will have to have a checker," adding that it creates a couple of job openings: a programmer and someone to test products to see if the scanner is reflecting the correct price.

"The reaction (from the public) has been good so far," Walker said of the system which has been in operation since Sept. 20.

"We've had a smoother opening for this system here in Midland than we did for a prior scanning system in Odessa when I was manager there."

Midland twins to share 'dream cruise' on carrier

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

For a pair of twin brothers from Midland, today marks the fruition of a wish that has lingered for four decades since they first became assigned to different U.S. Navy ships during World War II.

In the Mediterranean Sea just off the coast at Malaga, Spain, Roy and Ray Reynolds are to board the aircraft carrier the U.S.S. America for a 10-day stint together at sea, marking the first time they have been aboard the same U.S. Navy vessel.

"To me, it's kind of like a fairy tale come true to go back aboard a U.S. Navy vessel with my twin brother," Roy noted shortly before they left Midland Friday on the first leg of their flight to Spain. He explained that a military rule prohibiting family members from serving aboard the same vessel during World War II was initiated after five brothers perished in the same ship disaster.

The excursion aboard the carrier came as a result of patriotic assistance last April to the helicopter squadron assigned to the U.S.S. America.

The chopper squadron, which is under the command of Roy's son Rick Reynolds, was en route across-country from San Diego, Calif., to Norfolk, Va., when one of the six crafts suffered engine failure and was forced to set down at Midland Regional Airport. Roy's son, in California at the time, called Midland and solicited his father's and uncle's assistance in the matter.

The twin brothers made quick arrangements for Aquila Aero to house the felled chopper while a new engine was flown in and repairs were conducted by the Navy. The two men also assisted the crews in personal matters, making themselves available for whatever assistance the Navy personnel required.

The acts of generosity did not go unnoticed. In September the brothers received a letter, lauding their assistance, from Commander O.C. Cannon, commanding officer of Helicopter Anti-Submarine Squadron 12 in San Francisco.

Shortly afterward, recall the brothers, they were in California and were invited to a party at Cannon's home.

"In the course of conversation, he issued an invitation for us to meet him at Malaga, Spain, and come aboard the U.S.S. America for a 10-day cruise through the straits of Gibraltar and back to Norfolk, Va.," said Roy.

Today's boarding of the ship will mark a truly family affair for Roy — his son Rick is stationed aboard the aircraft carrier.

Neither of the 55-year-old brothers has set foot on the deck of a Navy vessel since they were discharged in 1945. But that fond memories of their Navy days still are retained is evidenced by the photograph of Ray's ship and the world map which hangs in their office at Reynolds & Sons Reproduction Equipment and Supplies. The Tulsa, Okla., natives have run their own office supply and printing operation in Midland since 1951.

Ray Reynolds, left, and Roy Reynolds display photographs of the U.S. Navy helicopter squadron which they assisted last April, along with a copy of a letter of appreciation from Commander O.C. Cannon. At Cannon's invitation, the twins are to board an aircraft carrier today in Malaga, Spain, for a 10-day cruise.

To become a part of a U.S. Navy operation once again — even for a few days — has stirred up waves of patriotism and excitement inside the Reynolds.

"We were just a couple of old Oklahoma country boys who didn't think we'd ever get off the ground," said Ray.

Roy expressed much the same sentiments, but there was one thing that worried him.

"I just hope they don't go and start a war while we're aboard ship," he said.

For last time he was on deck, it was to fight. Now, he hopes, it is to enjoy.

Driver sues city for not busting him

ASPEN, Colo. (AP) — A man is suing the city of Aspen for $125,000, contending a policeman had a duty to arrest him rather than allow him to drive while intoxicated.

The lawsuit filed recently by John Rawlings in Pitkin County Court asks compensation for mental anguish and bodily injury that resulted from an accident last year in which a passenger in Rawlings' truck was killed.

Just 10 minutes before the accident, Officer Ed Stegall told Rawlings he could not sleep in his camper within city limits, according to court records.

Living museum of World War II air power flies into West Texas

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The Confederate Air Force's Desert Squadron will be bringing vestiges of World War II air power to West Texas Saturday and Sunday in an air show full of piston-popping warbirds from the 1939-41 era, flying aces, supersonic jet aircraft from today's military forces, bands, skydivers, aerobatic fliers and a Russian tank.

"This air show will bring home...the spirit of an era of our nation's history when Americans pulled together to defeat a common enemy," said CAF Col. Paul Erdmann, leader of the Midland-Odessa Desert Squadron. "Patriotism, idealism and American technology are all present and can be felt, as our 'living museum' of World War II aircraft" take to the air.

More than 70 warbirds, from the Curtiss P-40N Warhawk of Flying Tigers fame to the mammoth Boeing B-29 Superfortress which hailed in the Atomic Age, will be featured in the show at Midland Regional Airport.

Aircraft will be on display Saturday, but will be flying the next day in the 1-4:30 p.m. flying show. Tickets are $6 each in advance but go up to $8 on days of the show. Children age 12 and under will be admitted free.

"We're going to have one of the biggest CAF air shows outside of Harlingen (home of Rebel Field and CAF's Ghost Squadron headquarters)," said Col. Don Luttrell, the Desert Squadron's public information officer.

The line-up of other aircraft flying in the show will include the P-51D Mustang, B-17 Flying Fortress, the B-25 Mitchell, A-26 Invader, A-20 Havoc, B-24 Liberator, P-38 Lightning, P-39 Aircobra, F4U Corsair, the FM-2 Wildcat, the Luftwaffe's Messerschmitt Me.-108 and Fieseler Storch, SNJs, AT-6 Texans, Harvards and BT-13 Vibrator. There will be open cockpit antiques such as the biwing PT-17 Stearman and the mono-wing PT-23, and replicas of the Japanese Zeros, Kates and Vals from the CAF Ghost Squadron's "Tora! Tora! Tora!" act.

A CAF pyrotechnic team headed up by Cols. Tom Fryar and Pat Day will set off fiery, smoking explosions to simulate strafing and bombing runs, as the aircraft re-enact war times, including the Dec. 7, 1941, Pearl Harbor attack which brought the United States into World War II.

"There's going to be a lot of noise and smoke," promised Luttrell, "but no danger."

Scheduled for the show also are current U.S. Air Force, Navy, Marine and Army tactical jet aircraft, such as the F-14 Tomcat, F-15 Eagle, F-16, FB-111, F-4 Phantom, F-5 and A-10.

The "warring" aircraft and fly-bys will be preceded by a skydiving demonstration by the U.S. Army's Golden Knights and aerobatics by precision fliers Gene Beggs in his Pitts Special biplane, Buzz Hurt in his clipped-wing Taylorcraft, Jim Franklin in his vintage Waco, and Doug Warren in his DeHavilland Chipmunk.

Also featured will be Tex Hill, a P-40 pilot in Gen. Claire Lee Chennault's Flying Tigers group, and "Ensign" George Gay, the sole Torpedo 8 pilot to survive the Battle of Midway in 1943.

A novel and radical feature of the show, said Erdmann, will be Col. Joe Mabee in an antique dirigible.

"It has been rumored that Joe Mabee is going to show up in a Graf Zeppelin," announced Erdmann, who will be flying his "shotgun-fired" Royal Air Force DeHavilland Chipmunk.

Mabee, past leader of the CAF's West Texas Wing and a Midland rancher-oilman, will have at least four aircraft in the show: the Wildcat, A-26 Invader, P-51D Mustang and the P-40N Warhawk.

Next Sunday morning, the World War II aircraft will make an en masse "Dawn Patrol" flyover Midland and Odessa to awaken residents to the air fare that afternoon.

Though the Desert Squadron is sponsoring the show, many "prop jobs" from other CAF squadrons in Texas, New Mexico and Oklahoma will be participating.

Six trucks with 11 firemen extinguished the blaze with 600 gallons of water. The fire report stated two females were seen in a vehicle in the vicinity of the house just before the fire. There were no injuries reported.

17-year-old boy shot

NEW YORK (AP) — A 17-year-old doughnut shop delivery boy was shot to death Saturday by a gunman who roamed over two blocks of Manhattan, firing at random, police said.

Allen Spiegel of Westbury was shot in the back, chest and shoulder near his father's shop at 42nd Street and Madison Avenue.

The gunman fired a round to the boy's head as the victim lay on the sidewalk.

Local man in critical condition

Robert Eugene Alley, 18, of 3808 W. Kansas Ave. was listed in critical condition Saturday night at Midland Memorial Hospital.

Alley was apparently involved in a one-vehicle accident. His car hit a guard rail and overturned on Holiday Hill Road north of Highway 80, according to Midland Fire Department and Police Department reports. The accident occurred about 2:20 a.m. Saturday.

Road work approved

ODESSA — Work in Midland and Terrell counties is included in the 1981-82 Texas Farm to Market Road Program passed Oct. 21 by the State Highway and Public Transportation Commission.

District Engineer W.A. Lancaster of Odessa said the program includes extending FM 2886 in Terrell County a distance of 3.4 miles at an estimated cost of $527,000.

Additional financing in the amount of $233,000 is being provided for construction of FM 662 in Midland County. Previous authorizations bring the total amount allocated for FM 662 to $975,000. Length of this project will be 3.2 miles.

Lancaster said work may begin on the Midland County project in the spring of 1982, with work on the Terrell County project expected to start in early 1983.

Statewide, the two-year program includes $46.8 million for new construction or additional financing on 260 miles of FM roads in the state.

This includes funding for 133 miles of new construction and additional financing for another 113 miles. About 13 miles of new projects were authorized previously and included in this program.

The Texas Farm to Market Road system is one of the largest secondary road networks in the nation with some 41,000 miles designated since the program's inception shortly before World War II.

The system has been developed cooperatively by the counties and the state, with local governments securing the right of way and providing for utility adjustments. The state is in charge of construction and maintenance of the roads.

SS changes outlined

The recently enacted legislation affecting social security known as the "Omnibus Reconciliation Act of 1981" makes important changes in the provisions governing the payment of student benefits, according to Erven Fisher, manager of the Odessa Social Security office.

The new law will gradually phase out benefits to students attending college or other post-secondary schools. Under the old law, unmarried full-time students could get payments until they reached 22 if a parent who had worked long enough under Social Security retired, became disabled or died.

The new law provides that individuals who first become entitled to benefits for September 1981 or later and are full-time students at a college or other post-secondary school can receive payments only through July 1982. Those individuals still in high school also can receive benefits through July 1982 or until the age of 19.

After July 1982, student benefits after the age of 18 can continue only if the individual is still enrolled full-time in an elementary or secondary school and then only until the attainment of age 19. Student benefits on an ongoing basis beyond age 18 will not be paid based on attendance at a post-secondary school (college, trade or vocational school) after July 1982.

Anyone affected by these changes may contact the nearest Social Security office. The number can be found in the Midland telephone directory.

Contest deadline extended

The deadline for entries in The University of Texas of the Permian Basin Mindpower Essay Contest has been extended until 5 p.m. Monday.

Dr. John Frazee, assistant professor of literature and coordinator of the contest, said the deadline, which was formerly set for Saturday, was extended to Monday to allow contestants a chance to submit their essays during the week when weekday office hours are in effect and offices are more accessible.

Frazee said the essay topic is "The Idea of a University in the '80s." Each essay should not be more than 1,000 words, and may be delivered to the secretary for the College of Arts and Education on the third floor of UTPB's main classroom building.

The contest is open to all residents of the Permian Basin, not including UTPB employees. The winning essay will be printed in the Midland Reporter-Telegram and the Odessa American, he said.

Frazee said the contest, which was announced during the UTPB's recent Mindpower celebration, is an attempt to learn opinions concerning higher education.

"Since colleges and universities are observing Mindpower throughout the year, the faculty of literature at UTPB thought it would be appropriate to see how the community views higher education," he said.

Odessan files suit

An Odessa man who says he was fired as an operator for Dresser Industries Inc. because he complained about the company's alleged discrimination against Mexican-Americans has filed a class-action suit in federal court in Midland against Dresser.

The plaintiff, Johnny Joe Reschman, says in his petition that he was fired in March 1980 after he was denied a promotion to senior operator and then was critical of the company employment practices.

Reschman says that a less-experienced and a less-qualified Anglo operator got the job he wanted and that he was transferred from Sonora to Odessa apparently against his wishes.

The petition accuses Dresser of "excluding Mexican-Americans from equal opportunities" and of having "harassed and retaliated against" Reschman and others "for having grieved and complained" of Dresser's alleged policies.

Those policies allegedly have cost Mexican-Americans in Dresser's employ wage increases, promotions, transfers, benefits and privileges. Too, Mexican-Americans have been denied equal opportunities to learn skilled trades and have to pass more "burdensome" criteria in getting hired on by Dresser, the plaintiff contends.

Basis of the suit is that Dresser violated the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

Reschman's attorneys in the case are Filemon Ortiz Jr. and Luis M. Segura.

Concentration camp victims memorialized

By LAWRENCE L. KNUTSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — In April 1945, allied troops entering Nazi Germany from the West and East liberated thousands of Jewish prisoners from concentration camps and found that the camps had in fact been used as "extermination factories."

They found stacked bodies, mass graves and human cremation plants. General of the Army Dwight D. Eisenhower told British Prime Minister Winston Churchil that the discoveries "far surpass anything previously disclosed."

The names of the camps have long since passed into history — Auschwitz, Bergen-Belsen, Buchenwald, Dachau, Mauthausen, Ravensbrueck, Treblinka.

This week, military and civilian eyewitnesses to the events of 36 years ago will gather at the State Department to retell the stories and to memorialize the estimated 6 million Jews and other Nazi victims who died in the holocaust.

The conference, opening Monday and continuing through Wednesday, is sponsored by the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Commission, an official federal agency created last year.

Scores of former U.S. servicemen from across the country who helped liberate the camps will be joined by delegations from Belgium, Canada, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, France, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, the United Kingdom, the Soviet Union and Yugoslavia.

Some of the participants in the conference described what they saw in the spring of 1945 in letters to the commission:

— Llewellyn L. Zulinger, of Chambersburg, Pa., who took part in the liberation of a concentration camp at Ohrdrug, Germany: "Piles of bodies — starved, naked skin-and-bone bodies, stacked like cord wood in a shed near the human incinerator, and sprinkled with quicklime. I went through the camp taking pictures of the inhuman sights. What was unbelievable, the people in a small nearby town claimed they did not know the camp was there."

— Curtis Mitchel, Deland, Fla., a retired Army colonel who entered Bergen-Belsen one day after its liberation by the British: "I got where I could see inside the grave and then I walked ahead until I could look straight out over and down into it. And I didn't feel anything at all except, 'Jesus Christ, Jesus Christ, Jesus Christ,' and I kept saying that to myself because I couldn't think of anything else."

— Finis Wagoner, Longview, Texas, who was with the 7th Army when it freed prisoners at Dachau: "I'll never forget what I saw and felt and I'm sorry the whole world didn't see what happened. Some people still don't beleive what happened there and what might happen again if we are not careful."

The conference, the first international gathering of representatives of the allied nations that liberated the camps, will include eyewitness descriptions, panel discussions, a tribute ceremony and a diplomatic dinner.

New York Yankee Reggie Jackson twists as he misses a pitch from Los Angeles Dodger pitcher Bob Welch in the first inning Saturday. He ended up getting a single.

Dodgers square series, 2-2

Howe finally ends 8-7 dirt roller

By JOHN NADEL

LOS ANGELES (AP) — All week long, the participants in the 78th World Series have talked about the importance of experience in games of this magnitude.

So naturally, in one of the more bizarre contests in Series history on Saturday, it was a 23-year old second-major leaguer who nailed down an 8-7 victory for the Los Angeles Dodgers over the New York Yankees.

The long time rivals rolled in the dirt for over 3½ hours at Dodger Stadium. When it was over, when Dodger left-hander Steve Howe retired Willie Randolph on a drive to deep center, the Series was evened 2-2.

HOWE, THE National League Rookie of the Year in 1980, held the Yankees to one run in the final three innings, Reggie Jackson's two-out homer in the eighth. But he and his team were not without their anxious moments in the ninth.

"You want to talk about baffling them with bull?" asked the baby-faced Howe rhetorically. "My wife could have thrown better than I did.

"But I feel great about this. We're even now, it's a three-game playoff."

Howe made the last of what seemed like dozens of mistakes by both teams when he failed to touch first base after taking a throw from Steve Garvey who had fielded Bobby Murcer's grounder.

"I know myself that I touched the bag on that play," said Howe. "He (first base umpire Rich Garcia) said I missed the base."

RANDOLPH followed with his drive that Derrell Thomas pulled down near the fence.

"He hit the ball good, but I knew it wasn't going out," said Howe. "I don't give up many home runs, so when I do, I know. I knew Reggie's ball was going to break down the fence or go over it."

The Dodgers went ahead for good with two runs in the bottom of the seventh, giving them an 8-6 lead. The key hit of the inning was a double by Rick Monday on which New York center fielder Bobby Brown missed a shoe-string attempt.

"It wasn't your basic Picasso," said Monday referring to the mistake-filled game. "But it's exciting to win. This game would have been very draining if we had lost. If we do, we are down 3-1 and in big trouble."

Monday's blow put runners on second and third with nobody out. Losing pitcher George Frazier then walked Pedro Guerrero intentionally before the Yankees called Tommy John, the winner of Game 2, from the bullpen.

STEVE YEAGER was sent up to pinchhit for Mike Scioscia and came through with a sacrifice fly to right to drive in the go ahead run.

"I was trying to get it up in the air," said Yeager. "I wasn't going to try to pull him (John) in that situation because it's usually a ground ball. I've caught him enough to know that."

John and Yeager were teammates on the Dodgers for seven years before John signed with the Yankees following the 1978 season.

The Dodgers rallied from 4-0 and 6-3 deficits to earn the wild victory. A big blow was Jay Johnstone's one-out, two-run pinch homer in the sixth off New York reliever Ron Davis. That made it 6-5.

"In that situation, I'm thinking about cutting down my swing and hitting something in the strike zone," said Johnstone, who blasted a 1-2 pitch over the right field fence. "He throws the ball very well. All I'm trying to do is hit the ball. I hit a high pop up and the wind caught it."

In between his comments, Johnstone, reknowed as a flake, put on a show for writers in front of his locker. At one point, he yanked on a Halloween mask. When someone asked him to be serious, he pulled it off and replaced it with a space helmet.

"How can I be serious, we're in the World Series," he said. "If you can't have fun, what the hell?

"Somebody's going to win, but there are no losers in the World Series. We're all winners."

GARVEY HAD three hits, giving him eight in 16-at bats in the four games.

"Another day at the office," he said with a smile. "We haven't done things easy all year. Today, there were probably seven or eight key plays that melted together to give us the victory."

Jerry Reuss, the loser of Game 1, will pitch for the Dodgers in Sunday's fifth game against Ron Guidry, the winner of Game 1. Reuss has made his last three starts after only three days rest, he's getting the normal four this time.

"It should make a difference," said Reuss. "I hope so, anyway. We'll see what happens."

Mr. October strikes again, but this time for LA

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON

LOS ANGELES (AP) — In his first World Series appearance of 1981, Reggie Jackson was "Mr. October" at the plate Saturday with a home run, two singles and two walks. But, ironically, he lost a simple fly ball in the bright October sun that proved costly in the New York Yankees' 8-7 loss to the Los Angeles Dodgers.

The Dodgers, who trailed 4-0 after 2½ innings, had battled back within 6-5 on ex-Yankee Jay Johnstone's two-run homer off reliever Ron Davis in the sixth. Davey Lopes followed with a high fly to short right field.

Jackson was in obvious trouble from the start, running a broken-field pattern that would have done O.J. Simpson proud. The ball hit his chest and fell safely as Jackson tried to surround it and Lopes wound up at second. Lopes stole third as the shaken Davis forgot about him and then scored the tying run on Bill Russell's single.

"I saw the ball go up off the bat, but after that it was in the sun," Jackson said. "I tried to run from side to side, wiggly-like, to get the ball out of the sun. I was hoping it would hit in my glove. I didn't see it until it hit the ground."

After the game, there was some confusion between Jackson and second baseman Willie Randolph over who called for the ball.

"I thought I heard him call me off," Randolph said. "I probably could have had it, but the outfielder has command of the play. The outfielder has the last say. If he calls me off, I've got to get out of the way."

"I didn't call anybody off," Jackson insisted. "I'm the only one who could have caught the ball."

That wasn't the Yankees' only mistake. Bobby Brown, a defensive replacement in center field, tried for a diving catch on Rick Monday's drive in the seventh inning, only to have the ball roll past him for a double that set up the Dodgers' two decisive runs. And Aurelio Rodriguez subbing at third base for the injured Graig Nettles, tried to stretch a lead-off single in the seventh inning and was easily cut down at second.

"It hurts to lose this kind of game," Manager Bob Lemon said. "We were ahead and we had our No.2 stopper (Davis) in there. It didn't work out, one of the very few times that happened. Usually it's one or two innings out of Davis, then the Goose (Rich Gossage) and that's all she wrote."

And that's all she wrote.

George Frazier was the losing pitcher for the second game in a row and once again he was beaten on squib hits.

"I made good pitches both days," said Frazier, who became the first pitcher since Hugh Casey of the Brooklyn Dodgers in 1941, to lose consecutive World Series games. "They got about four cheap hits off me. They only hit one ball hard and that was a single by Bill Russell yesterday (Friday night.)"

Frazier also was upset with home plate umpire Doug Harvey, who called a borderline 1-2 pitch to Dusty Baker a ball just before his infield hit.

"He told me the pitch missed by three-eighths of an inch," Frazier said. "That's hard for me to imagine."

"I hope that (the Dodgers) have used up their quota of funny hits," Lemon said. "Those high choppers, you can't climb a ladder and get them. They know where the rocks are, I guess."

Ron Giudry, the first-game winner, will be the Yankees' pitcher Sunday in Game 5.

"Give the Dodgers credit," he said. "They've battled back, just like we did in 1978. Tomorrow? Somebody's going to win and somebody's going to lose.

Sims hogties Ponies as Texas ends SMU string

By DENNE H. FREEMAN

IRVING, Texas (AP) — Eighth-ranked Southern Methodist joined the graveyard of former unbeaten collegiate teams Saturday courtesy of a team still hurting from a similar experience.

Tenth-ranked Texas, smarting from a flogging by Arkansas last week that knocked the Longhorns out of the No. 1 ranking, beat the Mustangs 9-7 in a Southwest Conference showdown with defense.

It was All-America tackle Kenneth Sims who almost personally shackled the highly touted SMU running back.

And it was junior placekicker Raul Allegre who provided the Texas offense with three field goals.

"We just had too much defense and kicking and the results were as satisfying as any I can remember," said Texas Coach Fred Akers. "It was certainly a big win coming off last week."

Texas got only six first downs but held SMU to 13 and Craig James and Eric Dickerson to a combined total of under 100 yards. Quarterback Lance McIlhenny was sacked eight times.

The 'Horns joined a list of six other schools with their 600th collegiate victory.

Sims had 15 tackles, six of them for losses, to pace the Texas defenders.

SMU Coach Ron Meyer said "Sims was an awesome force for Texas...we saw truly a great defensive game."

Akers said of Sims: "I've said it all along, I think he's the finest lineman in the United States and he keeps reinforcing it every week."

Playing before a Texas Stadium crowd of 60,777, the Longhorns upped their record to 5-1 and 2-1 in the SWC. SMU dropped to 6-1 and 3-1.

Allegre kicked a pair of 32 yard field goals after Texas fumble recoveries and a 52-yarder after a short Mustang punt.

The Mustangs' potent ground game was held to less than two yards per carry by a bristling defense led by All-American tackle Kenneth Sims. SMU struck overhead for its only touchdown in the fourth quarter.

Sophomore quarterback Lance McIlhenny found wide receiver Jackie Wilson running free behind Texas defensive back Vance Bedford on a 70-yard pass-and-run touchdown.

Wilson took the ball at the Longhorn 35 and outraced Bedford to the end zone to close the deficit to two points with 10:03 to play.

Fumbles by Eric Dickerson setup both of Texas' 32-yard field goals. Texas led 3-0 at halftime and 6-0 at the end of the third period.

A short 20-yard punt by Craig James, subbing for the injured Eric Kaifes, put Texas in position for its third field goal, the 52-yarder.

Sims, who had six tackles behind the line of scrimmage, and his fired-up teammates held the tailback tandum of Dickerson and James to only 94 yards rushing.

Dickerson, the leading scorer in the nation who also was averaging 135 yards per game, gained only 38 yards on 18 carries. James could manage only 56 on 17.

Texas beat back a last-ditch Mustang rally when safety William Graham intercepted a desperation McIlhenny pass at the Texas 22.

Texas only made six first downs, but didn't need many because of its defense which limited the Mustangs to a total of 78 yards rushing.

The Longhorns, devastated by seven turnovers last week in a 42-11 loss to Arkansas, got a gift on SMU's third play from scrimmage.

Sims stripped the ball away from tailback Dickerson and recovered the fumble himself on the Mustang 21.

Two runs and an incomplete Rick McIvor pass set the stage for Allegre's 32-yard field goal.

Washington boots Red Raiders, 14-7

By MIKE CRUVER
Sports Writer

LUBBOCK — Washington rode the strong right leg of kicker Chuck Nelson and the generosity of Texas Tech a 12-7 intersectional win over the Red Raiders in Jones Stadium in front of 36,255 chilly fans Saturday.

Nelson, a junior, matched the Huskie school record of four field goals with boots of 26, 26, 36 and a 50-yarder into the teeth of a chilly 21 MPH breeze blowing in from the south.

While Nelson was doing the kicking, Tech was either getting into the Christmas spirit early or working on a new slapstick routine as they lost five fumbles,had two passes intercepted and committed several costly mental errors.

THE DEFENDING Pac-8 champion Huskies ran their season record to 6-1 with the win while the Raiders fell to 1-5.

Despite Tech's woes, they were in the contest until Ray Horton intercepted a Ron Reeves aerial at the Raider 21 and returned for a score with 21 seconds left. A clipping penalty nullified the touchdown, but the play was the straw that broke the Raider's back.

Washington hardly broke into a sweat in scoring its first six points. On the first offensive play of the game Robert Lewis took a pitch from quarterback Ron Reeves, was belted hard and his fumble was recovered by Fletcher Jenkins on the Raider 16.

Five plays netted seven yards and the Huskies settled for Nelson's first 36-yard field goal for a 3-0 lead with 12:58 left in the first quarter.

Washington picked up its second easy score after Dennis Mahr recovered Leonard Harris' fumble of a Jeff Partridge punt on the Tech 27.

SIX PLAYS advanced the ball to the Tech four where the Raiders forced a four and two. Husky coach Don James, playing with the wind, didn't hesitate and sent in Nelson for his second three-pointer. The 26-yard field goal pushed Washington ahead 6-0 with 5:41 left in the first stanza.

Tech finally turned the tables when Lewis Washington intercepted a Steve Pelluer pass at the Husky 37 and returned it the 19.

Anthony Hutchison picked up three yards to the 16 but two passes by Reeves were off the mark and the Raiders were forced to go for a field goal try. John Greve hustled in and tried a 36-yard attempt straight into the 21 MPH wind — the try fell short as the Huskies perserved their 6-0 lead.

Taking over the ball at the 20 after the miss, Washington could not move and were forced to punt from their own 16. Tech then made the committed a major blunder as the Raiders were caught with 12 men on the field.

Given new life, the Husky promptly moved to the 24 before the Raiders could stop the drive. On came Nelson. He calmly toed a 40-yarder into the the strong wind and right through the crossbars. Wait a minute, Washington was flagged for holding and the ball was moved back ten yards. Undaunted, Nelson stepped up and toed a 50-yarder true to the mark as the Huskies went up 9-0 with 14:07 remaining in the half.

TECH finally got a scoring drive going after Tate Randle picked off a Pelluer pass at the Tech 45 and returned it to the Washington 41.

Reeves immediately went to the air and hit tight end Curt Cole with a 17-yard strike to the 24. Two running plays by Hutchinson advanced the ball to the 13 before Reeves missed a pass. On second and 10, Hutchinson took a pitch from Reeves, bounced outside before being hauled down at the 2.

On the next play Reeves bobbled the snap but fell on the loose pigskin for a one-yard loss. Chris O'Connor then burst through and knocked Hutchinson down for a three yards loss. Facing third and goal from the six, Reeves dropped back and as he was about to be sacked, drilled a strike to Bryan Williamson for the touchdown. Greve toed the PAT.

Wilson runs wild for OU

Sooners romp 42-3

NORMAN, Okla. (AP) — Veteran Oklahoma fullback Stanley Wilson's 124 yards and two touchdowns in the first half helped shut out Oregon State 35-0 before the Sooner reserves finished off the Beavers, 42-3, Saturday in an intersectional college football game.

Wilson ended Oklahoma's first drive with a 26-yard touchdown run and started the Sooners' second effort with a 41-yard breakout. He scored the last touchdown of the half with an 8-yard sprint.

Wilson's 10 carries in Oklahoma's route moved him up two places to 15th among Oklahoma's best runners with a college total of 1,744 yards.

The scoring almost stopped after the intermission as Oklahoma coaches sent second- and third-string players to the field and Oregon State replaced starter Ed Singler with two other quarterbacks.

The Beavers' only score came when Darvin Malone, in his first carry during a college game, ran 57 yards and set up a 25-yard field goal by Chris Mangold.

Wyoming quarterback Phil Davis scrambles through snowstorm at Laramie as Cowboys rode herd on Brigham Young Saturday.

Kubiak's six TD passes raze Rice

HOUSTON (AP) — Texas A&M quarterback Gary Kubiak threw a Southwest Conference record-breaking six touchdown passes, including two each to tight end Mark Lewis and Mike Whitwell Saturday to lead the Aggies to a 51-26 Southwest Conference football victory over the Owls.

Kubiak, a junior from Houston, hit Whitwell with a 3-yard touchdown pass late in the fourth quarter to break the record of five touchdown passes set earlier this season by Texas Christian's Steve Stamp against UT-Arlington.

Kubiak's performance offset the fourth quarter heroics of Rice quarterback Michael Calhoun, who threw four touchdown passes for the third week in a row. Calhoun's fourth touchdown shot came with 1:06 left on a 26-yard pass to Vince Courville for his second score of the game.

Kubiak had tied the record in the third period on a 33-yard pass to Whitwell that ballooned the Aggies' lead to 37-7.

Kubiak did most of his damage in the first half, however, staking the Aggies to a 31-0 lead on touchdown shots of 27 yards to flanker Don Jones, 17 and 6 yards to Lewis and 4 yards to Jimmy Williams. David Hardy also kicked a 37-yard field goal.

The Owls, ending a three-game winning streak, did not make a first down until late in the second quarter when Calhoun ignited Rice's first touchdown drive that ended with a 22-yard strike to tail back Kevin Trigg.

Calhoun, playing despite a sprained ankle, and the Owls rallied in the fourth quarter. Calhoun added fourth quarter touchdown passes of 9 yards to Courville and Ricky Askew before Courville's second touchdown catch.

Kubiak added to his sparkling passing performance with a 43-yard touchdown run in the fourth quarter on a broken play. The Aggie quarterback finished the game with 18 completions on 25 attempts for 263 yards.

The victory boosted the Aggies to a 5-2 season and a 3-1 standard in SWC games. Rice dropped to 3-4 overall and 2-2 in the SWC.

Jeffrey directs Bears over Frogs, 34-21

WACO, Texas (AP) — Quarterback Jay Jeffrey operated Baylor's run-pass offense to near-perfection Saturday, guiding the Bears to a 34-21 Southwest Conference football victory over Texas Christian.

Jeffrey, a senior from Shawnee Mission, Kan., delighted a homecoming crowd of 40,000 — the largest gathering ever to see a Baylor-TCU game here — with his split-second pitchouts and passing strikes to Gerald McNiel.

QUARTERBACK STEVE Stamp of TCU, the nation's third-leading passer, went to a shotgun formation to offset Baylor's fierce pass rush and finished with two touchdown throws, including a 12-yarder to kicker Greg Porter on a fake field goal. Stamp also sneaked over from the 1 in the game's final minutes.

Stamp maneuvered without his favorite receiver, Stanley Washington — also ranked No. 3 in the nation — who was out with a cracked rib.

Sophomore Alfred Anderson scored Baylor's first two touchdowns on sweeps of 3 and 4 yards after Jeffrey had drawn in the defense and pitched to the swift 209-pounder.

Freshman Marty Jimmerson had Baylor field goals of 19 and 35 yards, his fifth and sixth in a row. The first came with Baylor facing fourth-and-goal from the 2 and 25 seconds remaining in the first half.

Walter Abercrombie, the SWC's fourth-leading all-time rusher, capped second-half Baylor drives of 69 and 80 yards by scoring from the 5 and, on another great pitch from Jeffrey, from the 12.

THE VICTORY extended Baylor's season record to 5-3. The Bears are 3-2 in the SWC. TCU fell to 2-4-1 and 1-3.

Abercrombie had 132 yards on 23 carries but his performance was flawed by three first-half fumbles. It was a Jeffrey fumble at the Baylor 21, however, that let TCU score its second touchdown as Stamp hit tight end Mike Johnson for the score.

Baylor fullback Dennis Gentry carried 21 times for 103 yards.

Shillings' last minute pass gives AC victory

SHERMAN, Texas (AP) — Larry Shillings hit Clay Oliphint for a 22-yard touchdown pass with a minute to play and Austin College rallied to knock Sul Ross State from the unbeaten ranks Saturday with a 17-14 TIAA victory.

Both teams now post 6-1 season marks.

Sul Ross had scored on a 13-yard Larry Stevens pass to Maurice Hill and a 1-yard run by Andrew Hill for a 14-10 lead, overcoming a 37-yard Gene Branum field goal and Shillings' 1-yard, first-quarter sneak.

Stevens whipped Sul Ross from its own 20 to the Kangaroo 17 but Mitch Pritchett missed a 35-yard field goal try with 10 seconds in the game to seal Austin College's win.

Tarleton 21, McMurry 10

ABILENE, Texas (AP) — Bill Bayless ran for one fourth-quarter touchdown and passed 37 yards to David Hagler for another as Tarleton State came from behind Saturday to spoil McMurry's homecoming with a 21-10 TIAA football win.

Cowboys tailback Ricky Bush carried 30 times for 199 yards and the third Tarleton TD. McMurry scored on a 32-yard pass from Parris Watson to Randy Tarrant and a 37-yard David Linn field goal.

The Cowboys improved to 5-2, the Indians fell to 2-5.

Cowboys strike in 2nd half to beat Louisville

STILLWATER, Okla. (AP) — Oklahoma State struck for two second-half touchdowns on the passing of quarterback John Doerner and got two more field goals from freshman sensation Larry Roach to subdue Louisville, 19-11, in college football Saturday.

Doerner, who had trouble with a swirling wind early, hit on seven straight passes after intermission as the Cowboys pulled away after the game was tied 3-3 at the half.

He hit on passes of 25 and 29 yards to Terry Young and Mark Cromer to set up a 1-yard touchdown plunge by Shawn Jones to give the Cowboys a 10-3 third period lead.

Doerner's 2-yard scoring toss to John Chesley and Roach's 18-yard field goal gave the Cowboys a 19-3 lead late in the final quarter.

UTA nips Eagles

DALLAS (AP) — Senior safety Melvin Ikner intercepted a Rusty Hill pass and raced 48 yards for a touchdown to give Texas-Arlington (3-4) a 7-6 win over North Texas State in a sloppy non-conference college football game before a sparse crowd at the Cotton Bowl.

Freshman place kicker Lonnie Green booted NTS (1-6) field goals of 35 and 23 yards.

North Texas turned the ball over six times during the contest, giving up three interceptions and coughing up three fumbles. Texas-Arlington lost one fumble and two interceptions.

A&I wins, 10-7

HUNTSVILLE, Texas (AP) — Mark James scampered 7 yards for the deciding touchdown and Texas A&I overcame five lost fumbles Saturday to turn back determined Sam Houston State for a 10-7 Lone Star Conference football win.

The win raised A&I to a 7-0 season mark, 3-0 in LSC play, while SHSU fell to 0-6 and 0-3.

SWT beats SFA, 38-6

STANFORD, Calif. (AP) — Arizona State's Mike Pagel passed for 466 yards and seven touchdowns, setting a pair of Pacific-10 records as the 17th-ranked Sun Devils beat Stanford 62-36 Saturday.

Arizona State led 27-24 at halftime after Luis Zendejas kicked a 31-yard field goal and Pagel tossed a 12-yard touchdown, his third, to Eric Rodenius. The Sun Devils took a 48-24 lead on two scoring passes by Pagel in the third quarter and rolled to the victory which left them 4-1 in the Pac-10 and 6-1 for all games.

UCLA buries Cal

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Sophomore tailback Kevin Nelson scored touchdowns for UCLA on runs of 14 and 15 yards before being injured in the second quarter as the Bruins swamped the California Bears 34-6 in their Pacific-10 football battle Saturday.

Nelson, who gained 97 yards on 11 carries, ran for touchdowns following a pass interception and a fumble as the Bruins scored all their points in the first half. UCLA ran its overall record to 4-2-1 and Pac-10 mark to 2-1-1 to remain in the Rose Bowl picture.

The loss was the sixth for the Bears in seven games and their conference mark fell to 1-3.

Wyoming upsets BYU

LARAMIE, Wyo. (AP) — Quarterback Phil Davis ran for three touchdowns and passed 81 yards to tight end James Williams for another, leading Wyoming to a 33-20 upset of 13th-ranked Brigham Young in a Western Athletic Conference football game played in a snowstorm Saturday.

The Cowboys, rallying from a 14-0 first-quarter deficit, drew into a 14-14 tie at halftime on Davis' 30-yard scoring run and fullback Doug Moore's 25-yard TD dash.

Wyoming raised its season record to 5-2 and WAC mark to 3-1,

Trojans edge Irish, 14-7

SOUTH BEND, Ind. (AP) — Todd Spencer's 26-yard touchdown run with 4:52 left in the game Saturday lifted fifth-ranked Southern California to a 14-7 victory Saturday over Notre Dame.

Spencer's run came shortly after Marcus Allen, the nation's leading rusher, had ripped off a 21-yard run.

The victory was the sixth against one loss this season for the Trojans, while Notre Dame's record fell to 2-4 for the worst start for the Irish in 18 years.

After a scoreless first half, Southern Cal struck for a touchdown midway in the third quarter. John Mazur, bottled up on a pass attempt, broke loose for a 24-yard run to the Irish 41-yard line.

Spencer ripped off a 27-yard run to the Irish 14-yard line and Allen broke off left tackle on the next play for the game's first touchdown and a 7-0 lead.

THE IRISH took the ensuing kickoff and went 80 yards in eight plays for the tying touchdown, with Phil Carter going around left end for the score.

The game had been errorless to this point, but following the kickoff Allen fumbled on the second play from scrimmage and Joe Johnson recovered for Notre Dame on the USC 33.

Blair Kiel completed an 18-yard pass to Carter before Carter gained a first down on the USC 5-yard line. But the Irish were stopped and Harry Oliver's 24-yard field goal attempt on the second play of the fourth quarter was wide.

The game turned into a punting duel until the Trojans put together the winning touchdown.

Allen, who had averaged nearly 215 yards a game, gained 147 yards in 33 carries while Carter gained 161 yards in 31 attempts for the Irish.

James leads Angelo over Howard Payne

SAN ANGELO, Texas (AP) — Fullback Jerry James ran for two touchdowns and Mike Thomas booted two field goals as Angelo State whipped Howard Payne 29-7 in a Lone Star Conference football game Saturday night.

The win raised Angelo State's record to 5-2 on the season and 2-2 in LSC play. Howard Payne slipped to 2-4 and 0-3 in the conference.

James, who rushed for 95 yards, scored on runs of 15 and one yard and Thomas kicked field goals of 21 and 32 yards. Dennis Green scored for Angelo State on an 11-yard pass from Doug Kuhlmann and defensive tackle Eddie Gill added two points when he trapped Howard Payne quarterback Andy Townsend for a safety.

Howard Payne's lone touchdown came on a one-yard run by fullback Carl Cooper.

Proffitt riddles East Texas

COMMERCE, Texas (AP) — Quarterback Loyal Proffitt engineered a 16-point second-half rally to lead Abilene Christian to a 19-14 Saturday night win over East Texas State and throw the Lone Star Conference race into a three-way tie.

ETSU, Abilene Christian and Angelo State are tied at the top of the LSC standings with 2-1 conference marks after Saturday's action.

Proffitt hit on 10 of 13 passes for 162 yards, including a 22-yard scoring toss to Quinton Smith, while Lembia Kinsler rushed 27 times for 131 yards and the other Wildcat touchdown. Martin Perry chipped in a pair of field goals.

The Lions led 14-3 at the half on a 14-yard Kyle Mackey pass to Frank Moore and Mackey's 1-yard sneak.

UTEP breaks 13-game slump

EL PASO—UTEP won 35-29 over Colorado State for its first win in seven games this season.

For CSU it was the seventh straight loss. The win broke 13-game losing streak for Miners. The 35 points is most made in one game since the opening of the game of the 1976 season when beat Texas-Arlington 38-15.

The Miners made a strong second half comeback after traling 21-14 at half. Brad McEachern sophomore quarterback passed for two touchdowns and ran for three. Tom Penell, CSU quarterback, passed for four touchdowns.

Cougars rock Razorbacks

Clendenen's kick beats Porkers, 20-17

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Barefoot kicker Mike Clendenen booted a 17-yard fourth quarter field goal as Houston rallied from a 10-point deficit to upset 12th-ranked Arkansas 20-17 Saturday night in a Southwest Conference game.

Clendenen's field goal with 5:16 left in the game came six plays after Butch LaCroix intercepted a Bill Pierce pass and returned it 20 yards to the Arkansas 30.

Sophomore quarterback Lionel Wilson set up the field goal when he rolled right and then reversed his field and gained 21 yards to the Arkansas 3. Arkansas led 17-7 at the half but could generate little offense with quarterback Tom Jones on the sideline nursing a sprained knee.

Jones, who threw the ball sparingly during practice this week because of a sore elbow, was in on two possessions and threw touchdown passes on both.

Houston and Arkansas are both 2-2 in the SWC. Arkansas is 5-2 overall and the Cougars are 4-3. The Razorbacks, who upset No. 1 Texas 42-11 a week ago, have never defeated the Longhorns and Cougars in the same season.

Clendenen's 30-yard field goal narrowed the lead to 17-10 in the third quarter and then Calvin Eason picked off a Pierce pass over the middle and returned it 40 yards to the Arkansas 9. Two plays lost 10 yards and then Wilson lobbed a pass that was intercepted by Billy Ray Smith.

Smith returned 19 yards and then fumbled and offensive guard Scott Marshall recovered the ball at the Arkansas 44. On second down from the 40, Wilson faked inside and threw down the right sideline for flanker David Roberson. Arkansas safety Kim Dameron went for the ball and missed and Roberson trotted in for his first collegiate touchdown on the first play of the fourth quarter.

Ironically, that was Arkansas' only interception. Wilson threw five last week in a loss to Southern Methodist.

It was the fourth straight victory for Houston over Arkansas and each time the Razorbacks have led.

Seminoles scalp LSU

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — Rick Stockstill tossed two touchdowns passes and freshman tailback Greg Allen ran for a school-record 202 yards and one touchdown Saturday night as No.20 Florida State crushed Louisiana State 38-14.

Billy Allen raced 97 yards with a third-quarter kickoff for another Seminole touchdown as Florida State ended its five-game road trip by bringing its record to 5-2 overall. LSU fell to 3-5, its worst start in six years.

Miami tumbles East Carolina

GREENVILLE, N.C. (AP) — Quarterback Jim Kelly and his backup, Mark Richt, accounted for four touchdowns to lead Miami, Fla., to a 31-6 non-conference college football victory over East Carolina Saturday.

Tulane routs Georgia Tech

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Junior fullback Reggie Reginelli returned a punt 58 yards for one touchdown and scored another on a one-yard plunge to lead Tulane to a 27-10 rout of Georgia Tech in a college football game Saturday night.

Senior tailback Marvin Lewis led all rushers with 105 yards on 16 carries, including another Tulane touchdown.

Temple topples Bearcats

CINCINNATI (AP) — Junior Jim Brown rushed for 172 yards and three touchdowns as Temple University toppled the University of Cincinnati 24-13 Saturday night in a non-conference football game.

SECOND MORTGAGE AND SELLER

If your home is for sale and economic conditions are rough, it is conceivable that you may have to help the buyer finance the purchase. For example, you have a low interest assumable mortgage on your home. The buyer can purchase but only by taking over the mortgage and having you provide a second mortgage for the difference. It might be financially superior for you, the seller-if you structure your second mortgage as if you were going to sell it to an investor.

Most second mortgage investors want a prepayment penalty. This is a bonus for the lender if the mortgage is paid off, as two-thirds are, before maturity. The shorter the Term, the more marketable it is. Of course, your buyer will want as long a term as possible, so you may have to compromise. To keep the buyer's payments low, consider an "interest only" mortgage.

The higher the interest rate, the more marketable your mortgage will be. And, with a very low take-over mortgage interest, you should be able to get a much higher second mortgage interest.

KENNY REDIN'S

Fin & Feather

I've never been to Africa to hunt the fleet-footed cheetah, but let me assure you one thing, if they are faster than the American Pronghorn Antelope, I don't know whether or not my body can stand the hunt.

I recently returned from a Texas Sportsman Club hunt in the Vaughn, N.M., region. Twenty-six club members participated and 22 of the 26 hunters got a nice buck antelope.

Being a skilled marksman is of utmost importance before venturing out on an antelope hunt. Yes, there times when you get a shot at a pronghorn buck not more than 50 yards away, but that's rare.Most shots come at a range of not less than 100-yards while the animal is moving more than 50-mph across the New Mexico prarielands.

What's more the antelope seems to have penetrating eyesight, enabling it recognize the man in the distance is carrying something that can be harmful to his (animal's) health. The antelope also must have a sense of distance. He seems to stand just out-of-effective rifle range.

THE CLUB was hunting about 25 miles SSW of Vaughn The rangeland is that of miles and miles of pure prarie grass. And this year the range was simply splendid. Recent rains has boosted grass growth to the knee-high level.

The animals we were tracking were slick, fat and sassy and the herds were plentiful. At an elevation of 3,000 feet, this fertile New Mexico rangeland is somewhat deceptive to the human eye. What appears to be 200 yards is 300. The two rolling hills of the two ranches was not like Texas Hill Country, but gentle minus trees. It you glassed a buck on a hightop just across the way and figured its distance at 200 yards, better rejudge.

HUNTING THE pronghorn is done in many fashions. Most hunters enjoy riding in a four-wheeled drive vehicle until a herd is spotted, then they step at least 30 feet from the car and fire. New Mexico hunting regulations read that hunters must be at least 30 feet away from their vehicles before firing.

More often a hunter had to take running shots.

Those shots are not for the majority of antelope hunters. Most shooting at running animals many yards away is usually a waste of effort and ammunition. And sometimes a wild shot might hit the running animal, wound him and leave him helpless for the coyotes.

OF THE 26 hunters, two were outstanding in their field. Talk about an actual stalk, two of these hunters were of the true Daniel Boone type. George Puckett of Houston and Mike Maynard of San Antonio played the Boone role to the end.

Puckett, who resembles Grizzly Adams, anyway, had stalked all day Saturday, but failed to bag an animal. On Sunday, this hunter was even more determined to bag a nice buck. Spotting about a 14-inch buck about 500 yards in the distance, just over two little hilltops, he began his stalk. He walked about 200 yards before he began bellying his way towards the antelope. He crawled on his belly more than 200 yards. That's the truth, too! His antelope was getting somewhat spooky. The animal knew something was wrong, but still didn't move enough that Puckett had to follow in pursuit.

Puckett positioned himself on this little hilltoop not more than 100 yards from the spooky old pronghorn. Taking a deep breath, he gently squeezed the trigger. Much to Puckett's surprise, the animal hit the dirt, back on his feet again and away he went. The animal ran about 100 more yards and fell dead still. Upon examining the animal, Puckett determined that he had made an excellent shot through the heart. But the animal still had more to give after his initial hit.

Mike Maynard almost did the same thing as Puckett, but had to walk up one hill and down another for two solid days before finally bagging his trophy.

It still amazes me, but how did Indians back in the olden days survive. If they had no guns, were not in buffalo country, only antelope lands, how did they ever get any meat?

I've seen just about everything in this country hunted at one time or another and I've hunted myself many times, but if there is a harder animal to bag than the North American Pronghorn Antelope, I don't want to tackle the chore!

Landry, Shula match wits again

IRVING, Texas (AP) — Two of the top four winningest coaches in National Football League history match strategy Sunday.

Dallas Coach Tom Landry trails only George Halas and Curly Lambeau in regular-season career victories with a 189-110-6 record. Miami Coach Don Shula is just a game behind in fourth place on the all time list with a 188-71-6 ledger.

SHULA'S 71.1 winning percentage is the best among the all-time top 10. However, Landry's 72.1 winning percentage is the best since the 1970 merger.

Landry and Shula have only matched wits three times. Shula has taken the two regular-season meetings but Landry prevailed in the 1972 Super Bowl.

There philosophies and psychological makeup are almost directly opposite.

Shula stalks the sidelines in a jacket or open-necked shirt while Landry is always resplendent in coat and tie.

SHULA'S offense is basic, fundamental football while Landry's features shifts and multiple formations. The Dolphin defense is a three-man front while the Cowboys' run their four-man front flex.

Both have great respect for each other.

"This year may be one of his best accomplishments since they are 5-1-1 when they weren't expected to be that," said Landry.

"Dallas will be well-prepared as always and extremely tough at home," said Shula.

Shula has done his homework. The Cowboys 68-15 since they moved to Texas Stadium in 1971.

DALLAS IS rated a six-point favorite.

The Dolphins lead the American Conference East while Dallas at 5-2 is a game behind the Philadelphia Eagles in the National Conference East.

The Cowboys come into the game after an emotional 29-17 victory over Los Angeles following two straight losses. The Dolphins nipped Washington 13-10 last week.

"We need to keep playing with intensity and enthusiasm," said Dallas' Tony Dorsett, the No.2 rusher in the NFL behind Earl Campbell. "I know emotion doesn't win or lose a football game but it creates an atmosphere for winning."

Lions maul W.Virginia

STATE COLLEGE, Pa. (AP) — A substitute for the nation's third-leading rusher triggered top-ranked Penn State to a 30-7 victory over West Virginia Saturday and kept the Nittany Lions unbeaten and untied through six games.

Coach Joe Paterno said he decided just before gametime to start sophomore Jon Williams in place of injured Curt Warner, who trailed only Marcus Allen of Southern California and Herschel Walker of Georgia in rushing this season.

Williams responded by gaining 140 yards on 27 carries and scoring one touchdown.

Warner suffered a hamstring pull in practice Tuesday.

West Virginia Coach Don Nehlen, whose team lost to second-ranked Pitt 17-0 earlier this season, said Penn State is "definitely the No.1 team in the nation. They're big and strong and they keep coming at you."

"Our biggest problem was that we put no pressure on the quarterback," Nehlen said. "(Todd) Blackledge had enough time to eat a cookie and then throw the football. You can't do that against Penn State and be successful."

Bobcats rally to defeat MHS Bullpups in fourth

The Midland High Bullpups had their chance for victory Saturday afternoon against the San Angelo Bobcats at Memorial Stadium, but couldn't hold on as they fell to defeat, 19-18 in junior varsity action.

San Angelo took the game's early lead when tailback Derrick Campbell broke free for a 73-yard touchdown run in the first quarter. The following point after attempt failed and the touchdown was the only score the Bobcats could come up with until the fourth quarter.

Midland came back in the second quarter with a 42-yard Terry McGowan touchdown run to tie the game but failed to take the lead on the run for two points. In the third quarter, the Bullpups added two more touchdowns, both by fullback Raymond Chambers. The first was a five-yard run and the second covered 30 yards.

On both touchdowns, the Bullpups tried for the two points but couldn't collect. The failure to convert the bonus proved costly in the end.

Flanker Kenneth Coleman broke San Angelo's scoring freeze in the fourth period with an eight-yard run and Scott Bingham booted the extra point to bring the score to 18-13. With 3:50 left to play in the game, the Bobcats got a second TD from Campbell on an eight-yard run but missed the point after pass.

The Bobcat defense then dug in to stop Midland in the final minutes to ensure the 19-18 victory and up their season record to 5-2. With the loss, Midland fell to 2-4.

Pitt passes Syracuse

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Dan Marino threw three touchdown passes as second-ranked Pittsburgh overcame six turnovers and an early 10-0 deficit to defeat Syracuse 23-10 Saturday.

The 1-5-1 Orangemen surprised a Pitt homecoming crowd by taking a 10-0 lead with 2:35 left in the first quarter on a 7-yard touchdown run by Joe Morris. Earlier, Gary Anderson had booted a 36-yard Syracuse field goal, making him 9-for-9 in field goal tries this season.

The 5-foot-7 Morris finished the game with 128 yards rushing on 31 carries against a Pitt defense that had been allowing an average of just 18 net rushing yards a game.

Syracuse also intercepted four passes by Marino and recovered two Pitt fumbles.

But Pitt took the lead to stay with a 17-point second quarter surge that began with a 32-yard field goal by Snuffy Everett.

Marino followed with a 13-yard touchdown pass to tight end John Brown to give Pitt a 10-10 tie with 3:54 left before halftime.

With about a minute left in the second quarter, Pitt cornerback Dan Short intercepted a pass by Dave Warner at the Syracuse 22-yard line.

Minnesota kicks Hawkeyes, 12-10

IOWA CITY, Iowa (AP) — Jim Gallery kicked four field goals, including the winning points with 2 minutes, 22 seconds remaining, to give Minnesota a 12-10 victory over No.6 Iowa in Big Ten football Saturday.

The victory pushed Minnesota to 5-2 overall and 3-2 in the league. Iowa, hoping for a victory which would have ensured its first winning season in 20 years, dropped to 5-2 and 3-1.

Iowa's offense sputtered in the first half, making just two first downs to Minnesota's nine as Gallery kicked three of his field goals in the second quarter.

The Hawkeyes came to life after halftime, and Tom Nichol gave the Hawkeyes their first points early in the third.

Tailback Ghil Blatcher scored the only touchdown of the game midway through the third quarter, giving Iowa a 10-9 lead.

Ohio State 29, Indiana 10

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Bob Atha kicked a school record five field goals and Jimmy Gayle rushed for a career high 186 yards Saturday, leading Ohio State to a 29-10 victory over Indiana that kept the Buckeyes alive in Big Ten football title contention.

The Buckeyes, 3-1 in the conference and 5-2 for all games, played before their 82nd straight home sellout of 87,182 that included scouts from six bowls.

Atha, a senior, kicked field goals of 25, 23, 41, 46, and 20 yards that broke the Ohio State single game record. Tom Klaban and Vlade Janakievski had shared the previous mark of four field goals in one contest.

Indiana is 2-3 in the Big Ten and 2-5 overall.

Illinois 23, Wisconsin 21

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. (AP) — Quarterback Tony Eason fired three touchdown passes Saturday to lead Illinois to a 23-21 Big Ten victory over Wisconsin.

The Badgers scored first, but Eason turned the game around with a dazzling 86-yard touchdown play that brought the sellout homecoming crowd of 67,413 to its feet.

The Illini controlled the Wisconsin running game early, but quarterback Jess Cole kept the Badgers in the game with two touchdown passes — to Michael Jones and Marvin Neal.

The Illinois victory gave both teams Big Ten records of 3-2.

Eason, who tied a conference record by passing for more than 300 yards in five games, found Darrell Smith for two scores, and hit Oliver Williams for the third.

Michigan 38, Northwestern 0

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (AP) — Michigan quarterback Steve Smith threw touchdown passes of 24 and 52 yards and ran 13 yards for another to lead the No.18 Wolverines to a 38-0 homecoming romp over Northwestern in Big Ten football Saturday.

Michigan tailback Butch Woolfolk rushed for 106 yards on 18 carries to become the leading ground gainer in the school's history. Woolfolk's 3,368 yards surpassed the career record of 3,317 yards set by Rob Lytle between 1973 and 1976.

The victory lifted Michigan to 3-2 in the Big Ten, 5-2 overall. Northwestern fell to 0-4 in the conference and 0-7 for the season.

Purdue 27, Mich. State 26

WEST LAFAYETTE, Ind. (AP) — Quarterback Scott Campbell passed for 237 yards and four touchdowns Saturday, including a 32-yard scoring toss to Joe Linville with 11 minutes remaining that lifted Purdue to a 27-26 Big Ten Conference football victory over Michigan State.

The Spartans, who had rallied earlier from a 21-6 deficit to take a 26-21 lead, had a final shot at victory end at the Purdue 39 when Morten Andersen, who earlier kicked two field goals, missed on a 56-yard try with three seconds remaining.

Campbell's first three touchdown passes to Steve Bryant opened up a 21-6 lead before sub quarterback John Leister led a Spartan rally that made it 21-19 at half. MSU took a 26-21 lead late in the third quarter after a pair of pass interference penalties put the ball on the one.

The victory lifted Purdue to 3-2 in the Big Ten and 5-2 overall. Michigan State dropped to 1-4 in the league and 2-5 for all games.

Michigan's Norm Betts (82) scores on 52-yard TD pass, dragging Northwestern's Mike Guendling into the end zone with him.

Huskers nip tough Mizzou

COLUMBIA, Mo. (AP) — Fullback Phil Bates rolled into the end zone from 3 yards out with 23 seconds left, shaking No. 15 Nebraska loose from 19th-ranked Missouri's defensive stranglehold and giving the Cornhuskers a 6-0 Big Eight triumph Saturday.

Nebraska, repulsed at every previous turn in the regionally televised battle, struggled until mounting a 10-play drive covering 64 yards in the last three minutes.

It was the third straight victory for the Cornhuskers and second loss in a row for Missouri.

Both teams are 5-2. Nebraska is 3-0 in the Big Eight, while Missouri fell to 0-2 in conference play.

Iowa State in squeaker

AMES, Iowa (AP) — Dwayne Crutchfield gained 168 yards and scored two touchdowns as 14th-rated Iowa State held on to beat Colorado 17-10 in Big Eight Conference football Saturday.

Crutchfield, who broke his own school record by carrying the ball 47 times, scored on a pair of 1-yard runs. The touchdowns were his 14th and 15th of the year to tie the school record of 15 for most touchdowns in a season.

Alex Giffords added a 20-yard field goal for the Cyclones, who increased their record to 5-1-1 overall and 2-0-1 in the Big Eight.

Colorado, playing without No. 1 quarterback Randy Essington and starting tailback Derek Singleton, fell to 2-5 and 1-2.

Crutchfield's second touchdown capped an 18-play, 61-yard drive and gave Iowa State a 17-3 lead with 2:06 left in the third quarter.

However, Colorado came right back with an 80-yard, 10-play march to cut the Cyclone lead to seven points.

Kansas slips by K-State

LAWRENCE, Kan. (AP) - Elvis Patterson intercepted a Darrell Dickey pass and returned it 18 yards, setting up Bruce Kallmeyer's 28-yard field goal with 1:33 left to give Kansas a hard-fought 17-14 Big Eight football victory over Kansas State Saturday.

Kansas went to 5-2 for the year by winning the fierce intrastate struggle, the 22nd victory by Kansas over K-State in the past 26 years.

ATHENS, Ga. (AP) — All-American tailback Herschel Walker and quarterback Buck Belue each scored on short touchdown runs and freshman Kevin Butler booted a pair of field goals as the sixth-ranked Georgia Bulldogs beat Kentucky 21-0 Saturday.

Walker, who had 130 yards on 33 carries, scored from one yard out and Butler kicked field goals of 37 and 40 yards to give Georgia a 13-0 lead at intermission in the Southeastern Conference game.

Belue scored on a 5-yard keeper in the third quarter to complete the scoring as Georgia raised its record to 6-1 and 4-0 in the SEC. Kentucky, which netted only 69 yards total offense in the first three quarters, fell to 1-6 and 0-3 in the league.

Mississippi State wins

AUBURN, Ala. (AP) — John Bond fired an 18-yard scoring strike to Danny Knight with one minute remaining Saturday to give ninth-ranked Mississippi State a 21-17 SEC victory over Auburn.

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Quarterback Steve Alatorre ran for one touchdown and passed for another as Tennessee swamped Memphis State 28-9 in college football Saturday.

Kicker Fuad Reveiz booted two field goals, one from 51 yards out, as the Volunteers picked up their fourth victory in seven games.

The Vols put the game out of reach in the final quarter with Reveiz's two field goals, a safety and an 8-yard touchdown pass from Jeff Olszewski to Anthony Hancock.

Vandy beats Ole Miss

OXFORD, Miss. (AP) — Tailback Van Heflin raced 49 and 13 yards for fourth quarter touchdowns Saturday that lifted Vanderbilt to a 27-23 football victory over Mississippi, breaking the Commodore's string of 33 straight Southeastern conference.

Heflin, a 211-pound speedster, fled around right end and cut back across the field on the 49-yard run that erased a 17-13 Mississippi lead with 11:12 to go.

Mississippi's Malvin Gipson fumbled the ball to Vanderbilt at the end of a 54-yard return on the ensuing kickoff and the Commodores drove for Heflin's second touchdown three minutes later to put the game out of reach.

Clemson stays unbeaten

Tar Heels fall, 31-13

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — South Carolina used the nearly flawless passing of quarterback Gordon Beckham to engineer a 31-13 upset of third-ranked North Carolina in college football Saturday.

Beckham connected on 16 of 17 passes for 195 yards and one touchdown, and the Gamecock defense held the Tar Heels' potent rushing attack to 176 yards while forcing five turnovers — three interceptions and two fumbles.

The loss dropped the Tar Heels to 6-1 and ended a 10-game winning streak.

North Carolina played catchup all game and lost starting quarterback Rod Elkins with a sprained ankle in the first half. The only offense the Tar Heels could manage was a scoring pass in the first half and a 70-yard touchdown run off a fake punt in the second.

After jumping out to a 14-7 lead at the half, the Gamecocks started the second half with a 53-yard pass from Beckham to Horace Smith. That put the ball on the North Carolina 5 and Beckham hit DeWayne Chivers with a scoring pass from the 3.

Clemson 17, NC State 7

CLEMSON, S.C. (AP) — Cliff Austin and Jeff McCall rushed for touchdowns as fourth-ranked Clemson defeated North Carolina State 17-7 in an Atlantic Coast Conference football game Saturday.

The Tigers used a balanced rushing attack to improve their overall record to 7-0 and their ACC mark 3-0.

The victory was not assured until McCall burst up the middle for a 15-yard touchdown with 8:30 left in the game.

N.C. State jumped to a 7-0 lead when tailback Larmount Lawson scooted off right tackle eight minutes into the game for a 13-yard touchdown.

Maryland 24, Duke 21

COLLEGE PARK, Md. (AP)-Tim Quander scored on a 92-yard kickoff return and Charlie Wysocki's touchdown runs of 17 and 54 yards staked Maryland to a 21-7 lead and the Terps held on to defeat Duke 24-21 Saturday.

Wake Forest nudges Cavaliers

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. (AP) — An early field goal by Phil Denfield and three touchdown passes by sophomore quarterback Gary Schofield carried Wake Forest's Deacons to a 24-21 Atlantic Coast Conference football victory over Virginia Saturday.

Schofield scoring passes of 11 yards to Tim Ryan, 24 yards to Kenny Duckett and a 12-yard game winner to Bill Ruffner that gave Wake Forest a 24-13 edge with 11:59 to play.

The Cavaliers closed to within 24-21 midway the fourth period as quarterback Gordie Whitehead threw to Henry Johnson for a 49-yard touchdown and then hit Mark Sanford for a 2-point coinversion. Sanford.

Joe Stampley is cut out to be a singer

"Do You Ever Fool Around?"

Joe Stampley certainly does, and he proved it in more than song Wednesday night at the Midland Stardust as he danced his way across the stage and joked with the packed-house crowd.

Those who had come to see and hear him perform weren't disappointed. He put on quite a show, demonstrating his ability to roll with the punches immediately as he mounted the stage.

As is the case with most guest artists, the performer's band quickly warms the crowd up to a fever pitch before announcing the artist. The announcement accompanied by the proper drum roll goes something like this, "And now here's ....." At this point the artist makes his grand entrance onto the stage singing amidst the applause and cheers. He then greets the crowd at the close of the opening number.

That's how it usually works. And that's how it was supposed to work Wednesday when Stampley came onstage. It didn't.

The tableau went according to plan until Stampley grabbed the mike as he was crossing the stage. When he gripped it, he was bounding across the stage at full speed. The cord was too short.

It's surprising he didn't suffer a whiplash injury because it certainly stopped him short.

He recovered immediately by saying something to the effect of "Stop the music, this'll never work." After joking briefly with the crowd, he picked up the next mike and started singing.

During an interview between sets and after he had finished signing autographs, Stampley talked about how disconcerting a situation such as that one can be.

Most of his band members have been with him for over five years and they know which mike he picks up and exactly how long the cord has to be to allow him the onstage freedom he wants. They know, but it didn't get done, he said, shaking his head.

For Stampley the worst part of being on the road "is getting there. If there was a time machine, I'd use it."

Stampley, who grew up in Springhill, La., talked his father into buying him a tape recorder when he was 13.

ENTERTAINMENT

"I'd sit up nights listening to others sing and taping them," Stampley said. "Some people are just cut out to be carpenters; they have a natural knack for it. Others are cut out to be, say, mechanics. I just wasn't good at any of that. Besides, I knew I wanted to be a singer."

Songwriter Merle Kilgore was a disc jockey in Springhill. Kilgore got to know Stampley when he was still a teen-ager.

"Merle got me a deal with records when I was 15. He had a friend, Al Gallico, and we started writing songs for him.

"Things fall into place, but it also goes back to this, 'If you don't have the get up and go in this kind of business, it will never happen.'

"I don't think anything was given to me. I cut my first record when I was 15 and that was 23 years ago. I've paid a lot of dues and I'm still paying," he said.

Dues paying includes the 200 days a year spent traveling.

Jo Lynn Stampley, his wife, travels with him and is his road manager. They are eager to have some time off.

This year, Stampley said he was taking off in mid-December and he won't reappear until around the 15th of February. His plans include "duck hunting and a lot of fishing."

Stampley has three children by a previous marriage. Nineteen-year-old Tony travels with them and is in charge of sound.

That's not all he does for his dad.

During his performance, Stampley sings the numbers he has recorded alone, as well as those he and Moe Bandy have recorded together, such as "Just Good Ol' Boys," "Holdin' the Bag, "Tell Old I Ain't Here" and "Honky Tonk Queen." In 1980, Stampley and Bandy were awarded the Academy of Country Music's "Vocal Group of the Year" award, while the Country Music Association awarded them it's "Vocal Duo of the Year" award.

Wednesday night Stampley looked out into the audience and said, "Hey, you in the white shirt come up here. No, not you. You," he said pointing into the crowd. After calling him a couple of mildly insulting names, Stampley insisted he come up to sing.

The guy acted quite shy, but he sang anyway. When they finished "Honky Tonk Queen," Stampley introduced his son.

The audience responded with applause.

Mallams' watercolors on display

The watercolors of Midland artist Paula Mallams are on display through Nov. 17 at the Theatre Midland Gallery, 2000 W. Wadley Ave.

Ms. Mallams has lived in New England, Pennsylvania and Kentucky during the last 10 years and her works reflect this background. She also is no stranger to Texas terrain as she is originally from Wichita Falls.

The subject matter she said she is most drawn to is that which is fast disappearing from the U.S. scene — old railroad stations, deserted barns and Victorian houses.

Ms. Mallams has an art history degree from the University of Kentucky. She has received additional training in painting and design at Transylvania University at Lexington, Ky., and at Adams State at Alamosa, Colo.

Her paintings have been exhibited in numerous national, regional and local juried shows including the 1981 Museum of the Southwest 15th annual Area Art Show and the annual West Texas Watercolor Exhibit at the Museum of Texas Tech University.

Mary Kay described as enthusiastic, friendly

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Staff writer

"Cut. OK. Everybody go back to the moment in the scene just as the two women walk to the table and sit down.

"Go back to the position where you were Mary Kay," Jan Wieringa, assistant director for "Waltz Across Texas," told Mary Kay Place, one of the two actresses being filmed Sunday in this closeup scene at The Bar. The other actress was Anne Archer.

Almost to herself, Mary Kay said, "I don't remember where I was." Then out loud, "Where was I?"

It had been a long day. At this point it was close to 5 p.m. and the projected wrap up of 7 p.m. was looking further and further away. They finally shut down the day's operations at 9 p.m.

Even though filming had started early that morning, the crew and cast members were in good spirits. Those close enough to hear Mary Kay's question laughed.

"Smoke (created by a bellows style machine). Quiet. Quiet in back."

To the extras Jan said, "Walk as lightly as you can walk. Try to avoid a lot of shuffling on the concrete floor.

"Roll Sound."

Once again Anne and Mary Kay went through the conversation they were having with Midlander Terry Jastrow, the male lead, who was standing just outside the camera's range.

"Cut. Let's take it again, from the top."

This was no place to do an interview.

Mary Kay, who is perhaps best known for her role of Loretta in television's "Mary Hartman, Mary Hartman," had Wednesday off. The decision was made to do the interview then away from the movie set.

Although people can't be cast into a one-word mold, with Mary Kay it is possible to describe her outward appearance in one word — enthusiatic. Not only did the cast and crew members seem to enjoy working with her, the extras commented on her friendliness.

And one was struck by her smile. It appeared spontaneous and genuine.

Interviewing her changed none of the first impressions; it only heightened them.

For her, working on this movie has been "one of the most pleasant experiences I've ever had in terms of working with people. I have never worked with a nicer group."

Mary Kay is involved in several projects at the present time.

"I'm working on writing a movie with Trisha Brock that centers around the camaraderie among women. It's about mothers and daughters, best friends, and about belonging to a group and yet wanting to be an individual.

"It focuses on sorority rush zeroing in on the behind closed doors, girl-to-girl talk," Mary Kay said. Wrinkling her nose and grinning while at the same time looking very intent, she added, "What do they talk about?" Then she laughed and said, "And of course they talk about boys.

"Hopefully, it will be very funny and very dramantic as well," she added.

The idea comes from a documentary Ms. Brock did at Old Miss entitled "Rush." Both have been spending a great deal of time there soaking in the essence they want to capture on film.

Besides acting and writing, Mary Kay also is interested in directing. She hopes to direct the movie she is writing with Ms. Brock.

"The American Film Institute has a Woman's Directing Workshop which offers women a chance to learn directing skills," Mary Kay said. From the applications the workshop receives, it "selects 10 women who are proficient in other areas of the film industry to participate." Mary Kay was among those selected.

"I made a little film which I still have to edit and I have $1,000 to spend in directing a short scene," she said. The scene will be from the movie she is working on.

In recent weeks, she has been working on this project at her Los Angeles home.

"I took a small break, a week, to come down here and do this. I'm so glad I did because I'd like to hire everyone on this crew.

"I'd like to do it independently (of any film studio), the way Terry (Jastrow) has; and I'm excited because now I know it can be done," she said.

"I want to make a movie that touches people — one that emotionally moves them in some way. I want it to have a feeling of hope, a feeling of faith that you can sur-

Anne Archer, left, and Mary Kay Place spent most of last Sunday filming this bar scene over and over at The Bar for "Waltz Across Texas," an independently financed movie currently being filmed in Midland. The two leads are Miss Archer and her husband, former Midlander Terry Jastrow. Miss Place, a native of Oklahoma, portrayed Loretta on television's "Mary Hartman, Mary Hartman."

'Waltz Across Texas' crew invades The Bar

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Staff Writer

On weekdays it is virtually impossible to forge downtown Midland intersections during rush hours whether one is a pedestrian or in a four-wheel vehicle. Weekends are a different story, especially Sundays.

It doesn't matter on Sundays if part of a street is blocked off, or that the lights are not synchronized. Midland becomes a sleepy, virtually deserted city.

The old expression of a town rolling up its streets aptly applies to Midland on Sundays, so much so that most residents, who have not escaped for the weekend, are bemoaning the lack of anything to do.

Last Sunday was an exception for at least 110 Midlanders. Crowded into The Bar, 606 W. Missouri Ave., from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m., these hardy souls were not drinking the day away. In fact, the bar at The Bar was closed.

They were working.

The job involved pretending over and over and over, almost ad infinitum, that they were socializing and partying.

For most, it was a long day — one spent in the activity commonly referred to by those who have done it as "hurry up and wait."

As extras, they were to provide the backdrop, so to speak, for several scenes in the movie "Waltz Across Texas," which is currently being filmed here.

"Waltz" is an independent production with most of the seed money coming from area investors. It stars former Midlander Terry Jastrow and his wife, actress Anne Archer. The filming is for them a dream come true.

They aren't alone. Many of those associated with the actual film production also have made it their dream.

The movie is being produced by Martin Jurow, whose production credits include "Breakfast at Tiffany's," and co-producer Scot Rosenfelt. The director is Ernest Day, who was a cameraman on such movies as "Doctor Zhivago" and "Lawrence of Arabia." Jurow, Rosenfelt and many of the others associated with the production worked together a year ago in Mobile, Ala., where they filmed "The End of August."

Those who happened to pass close to The Bar Sunday might have noticed the assorted trucks in the parking lots close by, the roped-off streets and the tables set up outside the club on both sides. A front view of The Bar might have led some to believe it was closed for repairs or in mourning since the entire outside of the club was draped in black.

Perhaps one of the most apt descriptions of an on-location movie crew and what it has to do came from one of the members of the production crew.

"It's an army," he said. Last year's location required "70 to 80 crew members." Midland's filming has "45 to 50, with 60 expected before it's all over."

These people have to be fed and housed. The above count doesn't include the extras or the actors, who also have to be fed and housed.

"It's like coordinating an army; every place you go, you have to take over," he added.

On Sunday they took over The Bar.

Norfolk bids its famous son adieu

NORFOLK, Neb. (AP) — The city of Norfolk said goodbye to its most famous son Saturday, as Johnny Carson called it a "wrap" and went back to Hollywood after filming a television special.

Carson and the community where he grew up and graduated from high school in 1943 spent the past week fondly remembering each other.

For "Johnny Goes Home," an NBC-TV special scheduled to air Jan. 6, Carson went back to his high school, drove his father's 1939 Chrysler around town and dangled from a railroad bridge over the Elkhorn River. As a train rumbled overhead and the cameras rolled, the "Tonight Show" host let go and splashed into the swimming hole where he and childhood friends spent their summers.

Crews filmed him inside the Granada Theater where he was an usher in the days of Greta Garbo and Clark Gable movies. He talked with the barber in the shop where he used to get a trim.

Carson's old bicycle also was found. He rode it through the town of 23,000, stopping traffic and apologizing to motorists.

In an editorial headlined, "Thanks Johnny," The Norfolk Daily News said Friday:

"For nearly a week now, this has been 'Carson City.' It has been fun for Norfolkans to see Johnny and to participate, though at a distance in most cases, with the filming that will later be seen by millions of television viewers. For him to be celebrating his 56th birthday on location in Norfolk...seems a fitting finale."

His class of 147 had a special reunion and Carson reminisced with teachers and friends.

And with tongue in cheek, townsfolk tried to make up for all the slights born by the young Carson, who stink-bombed his school at least once and forged notes for all-school assemblies that no teachers knew about.

His class gave him a special "Milestones" award, an honor he joked had been stolen from him by class co-president Gordon Farner, now a Cleveland physician.

Through it all came the ever-present Carson leer, the upraised brow and crinkly grin familiar to millions of Americans.

This time, it was for the folks at home.

vive," she said.

Mary Kay's face registers the gamut of human emotions when she speaks. At this point, it displays determination. Moving forward, she stresses her next statement, "No matter the pain, we can survive."

"Loretta (in "Mary Hartman") had a lot of tragedies; she survived them. One thing after another hit her, and she survived them all," Mary Kay said.

Referring to the fan mail she received during the show, she said she would get letters from people who were suffering real life tragedies that made such comments as "You make me laugh. Now I know I can make it."

Mary Kay said she knew at that time that "In life I wouldn't have been as strong as Loretta. She had a complete and total faith and she survived.

"Loretta believed 'I'm going to survive. I'm going to not be miserable.' A lot of people believed in that quality and it helped them. That taught me something about survival.

"Playing such a strong character taught me that in life we can be strong. It made me want to be a survivor, too."

Vandross is a credit to the 'Pepsi generation'

By DENNIS HUNT
Los Angeles Times

Soul singer Luther Vandross is immersed in three lucrative careers simultaneously.

One of them is singing commercials. To prove his prominence as a jingles singer, he volunteered a list of his "greatest hits": "For Juicy Fruit gum I sing this one: 'There's nothing like a roller-coaster ride...' That's mine. And I sing this one for Pepsi: 'You're the Pepsi generation, in the spirit of today, catch that Pepsi spirit...' That's me too."

Vandross, a 30-year-old New Yorker, is bombarded with offers to sing lead and background vocals in major commercials. He could easily limit himself to jingles and make bushels of money. "But that's not enough for me," he says. "I need to sing a whole song sometimes, not just a few lines."

To satisfy the need, Vandross has a career as a solo singer-songwriter. He's doing very well at that too. His fast-rising debut album for Epic, "Never Too Much," is in the Top 15 and his single of the title song is headed for the upper reaches of the pop singles chart.

Because he's probably this year's hottest new soul singer, Vandross landed a plum spot as opening act on the Commodores' tour.

But that's only his second career. Vandross also sings and arranges background vocals at recording sessions. His list of credits includes albums by David Bowie, Bette Midler, Roberta Flack and Quincy Jones.

Perhaps his most noteworthy achievement as a background singer-vocal arranger is the disco single, "No More Tears (Enough Is Enough)," by Donna Summer and Barbra Streisand, one of the biggest hits of 1979.

Singing and vocal arranging was his entree into the music business in 1974. At the time he was just another hopeful with a lot of talent but no musical training or experience. He had just quit a job filing defective merchandise forms for the S&H Green Stamp company and decided to devote all his time to developing his musical skills.

He was discovered by David Bowie — quite by accident. Vandross went to a Bowie recording session in Philadelphia to visit an old friend, Carlos Alomar, who had been hired as Bowie's guitarist.

" I was making up these little vocal arrangements just for fun," Vandross recalls. Bowie overheard us and said I should put it down on tape. That started me off."

PROPERTY PROTECTION

by JOE D. SWAN

A MOVE TO IMPROVE HOME SECURITY

Today the protection of life and property is a serious national problem.

Cities have become more crowded, population more transient, crime more rampant. Our homes are less secure.

Police are confronted with more burglaries and robberies than they can handle. More and more people are arming themselves to protect their homes.

Many police departments have set up special programs to show honest citizens how to make their homes secure against break-ins.

To supplement these official programs, this newspaper series is presenting specific tips on how you can improve your home security.

We hope this series will help homeowners restore their homes to their rightful role as havens of safety for families and possessions.

GEOLOGISTS
San Francisco and Alaska

We are Sohio, the largest domestic oil producer in the U.S. We're committed to a first-rate exploration effort throughout the U.S., and we're especially excited about our future in Alaskan exploration. But we are young (our exploration subsidary is less than 4 years old), and our success depends on our ability to attract Geoscientists possessing top technical talent and creative vision.

Our Western Region office has a current need for several experienced GEOLOGISTS. We would like to consider you if you have 4-10 years of broad exploration experience. We prefer that your experience be in Alaska or frontier areas, or in several basins. You must demonstrate a strong desire to make a leadership and technical contribution from the outset.

We offer you the excitement of a young, hungry, and aggressive organization backed by strong financial resources. And we offer the challenge of Alaskan exploration.

Our pay and benefits are competitive, our housing assistance policy is sensitive to today's housing market, and we're located in San Francisco, one of the world's most beautiful cities. If you'd like to join the Sohio adventure, send your resume to Frank Wood, Sohio Petroleum Company, #94109, 100 Pine Street, San Francisco, CA 94111.

FORD'S UP-FRONT MONEY

A better way to beat the high cost of financing.

Ford and your participating Ford dealers are offering money up-front on some of their best-selling, highest mileage new 1981 and 1982 cars. Money to help finance the new car you need. It means you can lower your monthly payments by applying the savings to your downpayment and borrowing less to begin with. Or get a check directly from Ford. It's your choice.

CASH UP-FRONT. Others make you wait up to four years to get your full money's worth. But Ford can put cash in your pocket sooner.

Not a reduced annual percentage rate, but cash up-front.

MAKE YOUR BEST DEAL. Then top it off with hundreds of dollars in savings. Save $700 on America's newest two-seater, front-wheel-drive Ford EXP. Save up to $500 on front-wheel-drive Ford Escort. And save $600 on America's most popular sports car, Ford Mustang. Dealer contribution may affect customer price. Amounts may be lower in Texas. Limit five per customer.

ORDER NOW. To get your share of Ford's Up-Front Money, see your Ford dealer and order between now and November 22.

MORE VALUE NEWS. Remember, if you're looking for a mid-size family car, Ford Fairmont Futura 4-door is actually sticker priced lower than last year.* On top of that, Ford is offering special value packages on many other popular models. So be sure to check out all the value news from Ford for 1982.

Hamsters used to study pancreatic cancer

By JOANN RODGERS
Hearst Feature Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Hamsters on a six-month binge of water laced with alcohol were completely protected from chemicals known to cause cancers of the pancreas.

That's the good news from surgeons at the University of Missouri in Columbia.

The bad news is that the amount of alcohol the animals drank, enough to keep blood alcohol at the three- highball level at all times, would have eventually damaged their livers. Whether any of this is good news or bad for humans, moreover, still is uncertain, said Dr. Howard A. Reber, associate professor of surgery at the university and chief of surgery at nearby Truman Veterans Administration Hospital.

"Right now, about all we can say is that this may he very interesting to hamsters," he told the American College of Surgeons meeting here. "But it may well have implications for humans someday."

It already is known that alcoholics develop chronic inflammation of the pancreas and precancerous conditions. Cigarette smoke and coffee have been implicated in cancer, but the link between alcohol and pancreatic tumors remains controversial. Because the incidence of this cancer has risen dramatically in the past 20 years and most of its 20,000 new victims each year die within 12 months, scientists are eager to know whether alcohol is a cause and if so, how it works.

To study the question, Reber's group studied three groups of hamsters. One group got an injection of a chemical nicknamed "BOP" in a dose known to produce pancreatic cancers within 28 weeks.

A second group got BOP and alcohol in their drinking water for the length of the study. The third group served as a control, getting neither the chemical nor alcohol.

After 24 weeks, the pancreases were examined for cancer. None of the 13 animals that drank alcohol got tumors. But nine of the 14 teetotalers did.

The scientists suspect that the ethanol protects the animals by changing the way cells in the pancreas break down the cancer-causing agent.

One interesting sidelight, Reber said, was that BOP is closely related to nitrosamines, chemicals found in cigarette smoke and in the stomach during digestion of certain foods.

That raises the question whether ethanol may protect smokers or eaters of smoked foods from pancreatic cancers if in fact either plays a role in their cause. It is not likely that downing a scotch with your cigarette will do any good.

The next step, Reber and his team said, is to see whether alcoholics have less pancreatic cancer, which substances in BOP ethanol reacts with, and whether the protective effect of ethanol would occur if BOP were given at different times during the hamster binge.

DEAR ABBY

Addicted son's mom searches for fix

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: My 39-year-old bachelor son is hooked on cocaine. He sold a very successful business 10 months ago and hasn't worked since.

He lives with me and pays me $200 a month. I don't want his money, Abby, I just want him to shape up. I haven't been nagging him to get a job because he blows up if I mention it, but I just can't take any more of his Jekyll-Hyde personality.

I've thought of giving him an ultimatum: Either go to work somewhere or get out.

I'm so desperate, I've even thought of suicide. I'm 62, I still work, and I feel like a complete failure as a mother. His father and I separated when he was 3. I never remarried or dated. I was a very religious person, but I don't even have the strength to pray anymore. I'm afraid if I ask him to leave he may end up even worse that he is now. Help me. — DESPERATE MOTHER

DEAR MOTHER: Find the strength to pray. There is power in prayer.

Don't turn your son away. You must get him into a drug rehabilitation program. Your clergyman or Family Service Association can direct you.

Since the thought of suicide has occurred to you, call your local suicide prevention center and ask for help. Please, don't give up. Write again after you have acted on my advice and let me know how you are. I care.

DEAR ABBY: Is there any way I can find out if the woman my father married has ever been married before? (I will call her Leona, which is not her real name.)

Leona is a terrible person, and I wouldn't believe her anyway, so asking her is out of the question. I wouldn't ask my father either.

Also, there is a girl my age living with my father and his horrible wife. Is there any way of finding out if she is really Leona's "kid sister" like they say she is, or is she possibly a child Leona had out of wedlock? How can I find out the facts? — WOULD LIKE TO KNOW

DEAR WOULD-LIKE: The "facts" are none of your business. However, if you are sufficiently curious to nose around, hire a private eye.

DEAR ABBY: I recently received an invitation to a bridal shower for the daughter of a friend, whom I haven't seen in a while. When I arrived at the party, I found a very pregnant bride-to-be (at least six months along) opening her bridal gifts in a maternity dress!

No one seemed to know anything about a wedding date, or if there is even to be a wedding.

I feel that I was ripped off. What is your opinion of this? — CAN'T BELIEVE IT

DEAR CAN'T: After writing this column for 25 years, I can believe anything. Life for some is one big, convoluted three-ring circus: the engagement ring, the wedding ring and the teething ring!

DEAR ABBY: Some time ago you had a letter in your column from a 52-year-old woman who had been married to a 60-year-old, well-to-do man for five years. She said the man knew he was impotent when he married her — a fact he did not tell her because he didn't want to lose her. She said he was a wonderful, generous man and she wanted for nothing except the physical side of marriage, but she had fallen in love with another man whom she'd marry in a minute, but she didn't want to hurt her husband.

Abby, if this woman ever leaves her husband, please put him in touch with me. I have searched for years for an impotent gentleman. I would greet him with open arms and love and cherish him forever. I am not an old maid. I'm a widow. My children are all on their own and are not in any way dependent on me. I'm free, white and 55. I'm also an R.N. and would dearly love to spend the rest of my life with a generous, well-to-do gentleman who can live without sex. So can I. — AVAILABLE IN ARIZONA

DEAR AVAILABLE: Wish I could help you. If there is an "I.A." (Impotents Anonymous), I haven't heard of it.

(Getting married? Whether you want a formal church wedding or a simple "do-your-own-thing" ceremony, get Abby's new booklet. Send $1 plus a long, self-addressed, stamped (35 cents) envelope to: Abby's Wedding Booklet, 12060 Hawthorne Blvd., Suite 5000, Hawthorne, Calif. 90250.)

Ultrasound exams recommended to detect abnormalities

By PAUL RAEBURN
AP Science Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Ultrasound examinations should be given to all pregnant women because the tests are sometimes the only way to discover abnormalities of the fetus, a researcher says.

Dr. Jason Birnholz of the Harvard Medical School says ultrasound, which bounces high frequency sound waves off tissues inside the body to make a picture, has become much more useful in the last few years.

"Anyone who can buy an ultrasound machine can do the examination," Birnholz said Wednesday. "There are no professional standards."

But he said, however, that some doctors are overlooking problems that an expert would find in interpreting the results.

Birnholz said he gives ultrasound exams to 8,000 or 9,000 patients a year and still sees something new every day. Interpretation "is not so simple," he said.

Eventually, he said, standards will be developed governing the training of doctors using ultrasound, but that will take some time.

He made his remarks at a seminar for science writers sponsored by the American College of Radiology and financed by the Eastman Kodak Co., a maker of X-ray films and developers.

He described research being done around the country that is helping doctors glean information from the moving television pictures of the fetus generated by ultrasound machines.

Birnholz has developed a way to predict babies' birthweights using ultrasound, and his predictions are almost always off by less than 60 grams — 2.1 ounces.

He is also using ultrasound pictures of fetal body movements — and even close-ups of fetal eye movements — to determine whether tiny fetal brains are working properly.

Ultrasound studies of fetal growth have enabled doctors to detect very small abnormalities in growth, and to make such discoveries early enough so that the problem might be corrected.

"We don't just make pictures," Birnholz said. "We try to examine the fetus in utero just the way we would examine a newborn.

"We look at all kinds of movements to see what they can do, and how they can be distorted in ways we can see. If we see a fetus in a deep sleep state at 32 weeks (after conception), we know that's not possible, so we know the patient is comatose," he said. "Then we have to make a decision."

Birnholz recommends all pregnant women be examined by ultrasound several times during their pregnancies. "Ninety-five percent of all pregnancies are going to be fine, no matter what," he said. "The question is how to find the smaller number that are going to have problems."

Ultrasound exams are the only way to find some of those problems, Birnholz said, and researchers have yet to find any risk associated with the procedure.

"Everybody asks what is the risk (associated with ultrasound,)" Birnholz said. "That's the wrong question. The question is what is the risk of not doing the procedure."

He said the test ought to cost about $30, but the average charge is around $100, a fee established several years ago when it took 30 or 40 minutes to do the exam.

An ultrasound expert can now examine a fetus in about five minutes, he said, and he hopes the charge will drop.

Aviva Hellman, 'double standards'

NEW YORK (AP) — Aviva Hellman remembers a troubling experience with a friend some time ago, a shared incident that eventually would contribute to her recently published novel, "Double Standards."

"I was walking with this friend of mine, who was divorced, when someone came up behind us and grabbed her purse and ran," the Brooklyn-born writer recalls. "When the police came, they asked her name. She was confused. Should she use her married name, or her maiden name, Mrs. or Miss?

"She couldn't say who she was," Mrs. Hellman says. "She couldn't say, 'Ms.'

"I guess what that means, is you have to be willing to take your own identity, pull your act together, even when it appears as if your life is falling apart."

She says the purse-snatching, and its aftermath, became "the clue that helped me finish the book."

"Double Standards" is the story of Beth Van Ess, a woman forced in middle age to reconsider her life after divorce, "a composite of most of the women I know," the writer says.

Though clearly commercial, the novel is a measure above the standard. "Hellman," one reviewer notes, "is a responsible writer, who cares about people, doesn't make fun of them or caricature their loneliness ...."

The novel is Aviva Hellman's third. The second — her first written alone — called "In Place of Love," was commercially successful, with sales reaching about 200,000.

"I am a person who writes novels," she says. "I'm quickly embarassed by literature because I respect it too much. I still feel uncomfortable when I am introduced as a writer.

"Don't get me wrong," she adds. "I think 'Double Standards' is a well-written, literate book. It's intelligent, has a good story, and characters you can care about."

Though she writes of characters whose lives are in upheaval, Mrs. Hellman herself has been married for 32 years and has two grown children.

"I think I'm able to write about these things without bitterness or rage and with a certain objectivity simply because it hasn't happened to me, thank God," she says. "But like most women, I've thought about it a lot. And I think of my mother who, when my father died, could not build a new life for herself."

Born in Brooklyn, her family moved to what was then Palestine when she was 2. When World War II began, they returned to this country where the young woman completed high school. She was attending finishing school in England when she met her husband-to-be.

She worked as a literary agent for MCA, the giant talent agency, and for a time headed the motion picture and TV literary department for General Artists Corp. She spent a year in public relations for Cosmopolitan magazine.

Her first book, published in 1978, was a collaboration with Jack Phelps called "Me, Me, Me." "It was about literary agents," she says. "I think we showed that as terrible as agents can be, untalented clients can be worse."

Refinishing a dining room chair

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

Q. — We have an old dining-room chair that I would like to refinish. Is it better to put on a clear finish or paint?

A. — No way to answer that unless some questions are answered. What kind of chair is it? What kind of finish does it have? Is the wood of good quality and appearance? What about the other chairs in the room? What is the general decor?

Q. — My husband's father says that the reason we and other people have so much trouble with humidity these days is because houses have too much insulation in them. He says there was never any such problem years ago when houses had little or no insulation in them. Is he right?

A. — Yes. The installation of insulation, weatherstripping and other devices to keep heat in and cold out has resulted in so-called "tight" houses. When moisture has no place to go, it condenses on cold surfaces. Sure, this means problems, but with the price of heating fuels and air conditioning being what they are, most of us could not afford to heat or cool our houses if they were not well insulated and weatherproofed. There are many steps we can take to keep a house airtight (reasonably airtight, that is) and yet provide enough ventilation to enable moisture to escape. One of these is a sufficient amount of sizable vents in the attic.

Q. — I live in an apartment where I can hear almost every noise in the apartment next door. If I attach panels of an absorbent material to the wall, will that help to keep out the noise?

A. — Not very much. You would have to build a separate wall away from the present one in order to provide a space for the noise to dissipate, an impractical idea for an apartment. Such a wall on the other side would do more good. So would some draperies or other absorbent material placed on the neighbor's wall. It's a lot easier to keep noise within an area than it is to keep it out.

Q. — I have to put some fence posts into the ground. I intend to set them into concrete. How can I keep the posts from rotting over a period of time?

A. — You can buy what is called pressure-treated wood or a wood that has been treated with a wood preservative in some other way. Or you can simply buy a wood preservative and apply it to the posts by soaking them in the liquid for a day or two.

HINTS FROM HELOISE

Ship cake in a can to avoid damage

DEAR HELOISE:

When my son, who is in the military, went overseas and asked for one of my homemade cakes, the cake arrived in crumbs.

Then I thought of the coffee cans I had been saving...

I made him another cake and, when it had cooled, cut the cake and wrapped each slice in plastic wrap. I packed them in coffee cans, then in sturdy boxes.

My son received his cake, very fresh and unbroken. Since it was already cut, it was very convenient for him to eat, as a knife and fork are not always available.

Hope this hint helps other mothers who want to send goodies to sons or daughters who are overseas.

Short of a disaster in transit, the cake will arrive undamaged! — Yvonne Turner

+ + +

Thanks for a timely tip! Servicemen and women everywhere look forward to receiving tasty treats from home. You moms might want to bake the cakes in coffee cans and send 'em that way. — Heloise

MOVING DAY TIP

Dear Heloise: When moving, I buy the most inexpensive rolls of paper toweling I can find, then use it to wrap my clean dishes before packing them.

After placing the dishes on a clean shelf in my new home, I smooth out each piece of paper toweling and place it in a drawer near the sink.

We use them to dry hands, mop up spills, etc. Economical and very convenient.

Best of all, though, there are no dishes to be re-washed in our new home. — Deborah Rasby

SHOE TYING

Dear Heloise: To teach a child to tie his shoes, start by crossing the strings and making a simple knot (the normal first step).

Then, make a loop in each shoe string, close to the knot. Cross the loops and tie them in the same manner as the first step.

At first, it may be clumsy, but it does work and it's much simpler for a child to do.

Our daughter even learned to double-knot a pair of shoe laces that wouldn't stay tied... it's just a repeat of step one. — Betty Jo Benz

LEAF-RAKING

Dear Heloise: When that lovely season of autumn ends and we spend hours raking leaves, my family finds big sheets of plastic, available in most hardware stores, save time and energy.

Simply rake the leaves in rows, laying the plastic next to them and raking the leaves onto it.

Pick up the plastic by the corners and dump the leaves onto your compost pile. — Gail James

DE-FOGGER

Dear Heloise: On a rainy day, the tour bus windows became covered with steam. The driver reached up to a compartment over his window and took down a dry cloth on which he put a supply of liquid shampoo.

He used this on the windshield, wiping it clean, then handed the cloth to the passengers who did the same thing to their windows.

The windows remained clear. The driver said, "Do this to your bathroom mirrors and they will stay clear too!"

He was right. I have used this process in my bathroom ever since. — M.L. Wagman

KNOB PROTECTORS

Dear Heloise: I've found another way to use the plastic lids of margarine containers and potato chip cans.

Any piece of furniture that has knobs on drawers or doors will stay clean and painted longer if you do this:

Remove the knob (which is usually attached by one screw), puncture a hole in the center of the plastic lid and place it between the knob and the painted surface.

Replace the screw and you have a shield against sticky fingers. Some lids come in colors or can be decorated with self-sticking paper or decals.

These are ideal for small children's rooms. — Nellita Pillers

ROOM FRESHENER

Dear Heloise: My secret's out!

For an instant room freshener when I'm expecting company, here's what I do: A few minutes before they arrive, I pop two slices of bread in the toaster, butter them when done and set them aside.

The house smells like fresh-baked bread and I'm always hearing, "Your house smells so good..."

Later, the birds get a treat. — Margaret Repko

Don't hoard a great household hint. Do send it to Heloise, P.O. Box 32000, San Antonio, Tx. 78216. She can't answer your letter personally but she'll read it with lovin' care.

FINGERTIP TIP

Dear Heloise: To make your fingernail polish more long-lasting, add two teaspoons of vinegar to a half cup of lukewarm water.

Dip your fingertips in this solution for a few seconds before applying polish. — Mrs. A.C. Trevillion

Send your favorite beauty-duty hint to Heloise, P.O. Box 32000, San Antonio, Tx. 78216. She can't answer your letter personally but, cross her happy heart, she promises to share the best beautifiers received with her readers.

Big, bold jewelry in fashion now

By MARY STANYAN
Hearst Feature Service

Big, bold jewelry has taken the spotlight away from those favorites of just a few seasons ago — the dainty little diamond heart, the thin gold chain, the delicate single strand of pearls.

To accent the more adventuresome fall fashion shapes — with the swirling longer skirts, the fitted jackets, the almost infinite variety of pants looks and lengths, and the tenty, tightly cinched toss-on coats — something that's definitely dramatic is much more effective. The smaller, subtler piece of jewelry can either be put way for the next time its turn comes — and it will — or be worn with couture-look sweaters, which already have their share of bold adornment.

At the top of the list this season we have chokers with beads nearly the size of Ping-Pong balls, bracelets that form wide cuffs or oversized bangles meant to be worn two and three at a time, and shiny rigid metal hand-crafted into deep "bibs."

Like everything else in the fall fashion picture — cosmetics included — metallics are the prevailing tones for jewelry. Real gold, of course, will do nicely for those who can afford it in the amounts necessary to count as high fashion. But there are other substances, including metals finished to resemble gold, silver, copper, bronze and pewter. The metallics go solo or are combined with other metallic shades or jet.

Jewelry materials needn't be metal at all, however. Some of the trendiest new pieces are made of metallic-surfaced leather, the same thing used for so many new belts, bags and even blouses. For bracelets, earrings and necklaces, the glove-thin skin, treated to resemble the chosen metal, is wound round a base or used to cover a stiffened foundation.

Another new kind of status jewelry is made of shells. Certainly, you say, you've heard of that before, but not as it's being done this year: Instead of the natural shell, which usually comes off looking like a gift shoppe tourist attraction, tiny shells are sculpted, then dipped in metallic paint and strung on a chain.

Also in addition to metal — real or stimulated — some of the most interesting chunky pieces are made of wood, combined with semi-precious stones and chains. And there is fabric jewelry: A short, puffy tube of gold lame, for example, is made into a choker, then set off with a bright gold silk tassel.

One enterprising young woman, Karen Callan of Southern California has come up with other materials for jewelry: Along with semi-precious stones, she uses big fruit seeds, carved bone and nuts.

Metals, silk, wood, shells, cord — almost anything goes as long as the pieces loom large enough against the background of an outfit. Whatever a designer of baubles and beads chooses, the fashion message is spoken in confident, bold tones.

Timidity, in jewelry as in other phases of the new fashion, is definitely out. For a time, at least.

Lung group to sponsor Family Asthma program

Children who have asthma and their parents can learn about managing asthma during Parents' Night of the Family Asthma Program sponsored by the American Lung Association of Texas.

At the meeting, which is open to the public free of charge, a physician will discuss what asthma is and how it affects the family. At that time, parents can register their children for the program.

Persons who are interested in the program should call Robin Matthews, clinical coordinator of the Cardio-Pulmonary Department at Midland Memorial Hospital. The number is 685-1623 and should be called between 8 a.m. and 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday. Matthews is currently taking a survey to assess what interest there is in the program here.

The Family Asthma Program offers children who have asthma and their parents education and self-help skills for dealing wih asthma. While emphasizing self-confidence and fun, the seven-week program teaches breathing techniques, improves general body condition and improves the knowledge and understanding of the disease.

"Confidence building rather than competition against others is the desired spirit for class activities," explained Athar Rana, M.D., of the Odessa Allergy Clinic.

"As the most common chronic disease of childhood, asthma is the number one cause of school absenteeism due to chronic illness. Flare-ups of asthma may account for 20-25 per cent of school absences," said Rana.

According to medical research, most asthmastics can benefit from a regular and progressive education program such as the "Family Asthma Program." By combining the development of education and breathing training, children can learn to manage their asthma. The Family Asthma Program serves as an adjunct to medical therapy and suprvision.

"In the program, parents are given helpul counseling as well as the opportunity to share their experiences with others in similar circumstances," said Rana. "The program also furnishes ways for teachers and school officials to include children who have asthma in many regular school activities while accommodating their individual limitations."

Cystic fibrosis bowling fundraiser scheduled

Bowl-for-Breath, a nationwide annual event to help combat cystic fibrosis, the most common genetic killer of children, will be Nov. 14 at area bowling centers in Midland.

Noreta Livergood, chairperson of the Midland wide Bowl-for-Breath urged area residents of all ages and skills to turn out and bowl the traditional three games that each player competes as his or her part of the event.

"Bowl-for-Breath has become a major source of funding for medical research to control and ultimately find a cure for cystic fibrosis," Ms. Livergood said. "It doesn't matter whether you're the local league champ or have never even picked up a bowling ball, you can come out on Nov. 14 and win prizes. So long as you're big enough to pick up a ball, we want you."

Ms. Livergood said that prizes for winners in Bowl-for-Breath are based on the amount of money participants raise, or the number of sponsors players sign up, rather than point scores. Under the rules, each player signs up sponsors—friends, relatives, co-workers, etc.—who pledge money to be donated to Cystic Fibrosis. Bowlers then go to participating centers on Bowl-for-Breath day and bowl three games. Afterwards, bowlers collect their pledges, turn them in, and receive prizes for their efforts.

"Cystic fibrosis, a degenerative respiratory and digestive disease, affects thousands of children and young adults in the country," said Ms. Livergood. "Every day, five children are born with cystic fibrosis, and every day, three die of it. The disease is inherited, non-contagious and incurable. It is caused by a defective gene that exists—symptomless and undetectable—on one out of every 20 Americans. While we still don't have a cure, or a test to detect carriers of the cystic fibrosis gene, rsearch funded by activities like Bowl-for-Breath has quadrupled the median life expectancy of children born with cystic fibrosis during the past 25 years."

To participate in Bowl-for-Breath, pick up entry forms at Air Park Lanes and Dellwood Lanes.

Lexicographer has a million words at his fingertips

By MARIANNE McGOWAN
Associated Press Writer

CLEVELAND (AP) — When it comes to choosing words, David B. Guralnik has about a million at his fingertips — literally.

New words and old words, from profound to profane.

They're written on slips of paper and stored in rows and rows of small file drawers outside his office with notes about where and how they're used.

Guralnik is a lexicographer. From a spacious, horseshoe-shaped desk looking out over one of Cleveland's busiests corners, he edits "Webster's New World Dictionary of the American Language."

The unadorned blue book is one of the four top dictionaries in the country and the one used as first reference by such august publications as The New York Times and The Wall Street Journal.

"I supervise an editorial staff that monitors the language and reports on it," Guralnik said. "Our emphasis is on the English language as spoken in America, and for that reason, we chose to call it the dictionary of the American language."

The dictionary is the only one of the top four to call the language American. "It does for the American language what the 'Oxford English Dictionary' does for the language as a whole," he said.

But it's not the only one to use the name Webster.

The G. and C. Merriam Co. of Springfield, Mass., bought the Webster dictionary from Noah Webster's heirs more than a century ago and uses the name for its Merriam-Webster dictionaries.

Neither company had any direct connection with Noah Webster, who published his first dictionary in 1806 and became known as the father of American dictionaries. Although Webster launched a campaign for copyright protection, there were no copyright laws when he published his dictionary, and Guralnik said the Webster name has become a generic term.

In addition to overseeing the entire New World line, which includes paperback and high school dictionaries, Guralnik, 61, is a vice president of Simon & Schuster, publisher of the volume for the past year and a half. The operation, begun as a book-binding firm in a Cleveland loft in 1906, has had several corporate owners over the years.

The grey-bearded editor, who has a master's degree in English, currently is at work on the Third College Edition, expected to be out by 1987. About 12 million copies have been sold of the First College Edition, printed in 1953, and the Second College Edition of 1970.

The dictionary is completely overhauled every 12 to 20 years, with updatings every two years, Guralnik said. It never gets bigger, so sometimes entries are deleted or definitions are rewritten to make room for new words.

New words are entered when they are cited in enough places that Guralnik and his staff consider them to have become part of the language. He and 10 assistants and volunteer citators all over the country monitor words and usage by reading scores of popular magazines, scholarly journals, and other material, and even by watching late-night TV talk shows.

Although an admitted lover of words, Guralnik takes a scientific approach to language, trying to keep his feelings out of the way.

"Change in language is like the growth of any other organism," he said. "You can't see it unless you have time-stop photography. A dictionary is a form of time-stop photography for language.

"Most changes in usage most often come about through ignorance or misuse. But when it happens, it happens."

Stuffy ideas about language have no place in the dictionary world, he said.

"We're going through one of the most productive periods in the history of the language," Guralnik said. "More changes are occurring right now ... in a relatively short period of time than at any other time since the Elizabethan era.

"In Elizabethan England, exploration just began to take place. People were coming to all parts of the world. There were social changes ... all this was reflected in a burgeoning of language.

"Now, explorers are reaching out into space and, in the other direction, into the core of the atom. Social and political change and technological advances are at a state the world has never known before. The exisiting language doesn't seem to be adequate to communicate that change," he said.

Recollections of a woman Indian chief

By JOHN PLATERO
Associated Press Writer

HOLLYWOOD, Fla. (AP) — Betty Mae Jumper doesn't consider herself a hero for the women's movement, even though she was the country's first female Indian chief.

However, this South Florida grandmother is proud of the benefits she's won for Indians, male and female.

"I've never fought with men and have no problems dealing with them," said Mrs. Jumper, a full-blooded Seminole, who has dedicated her life to helping her people. "I always sit down and talk things out with them."

Mrs. Jumper made history when she was elected in 1967 to a four-year term as chairwoman of the Seminole Indian Tribes. The Seminoles number about 1,410, and live on three reservations in South Florida.

"I ran against two men," recalled the 59-year-old Mrs. Jumper with a smile, "but the council was going broke, and I decided to see what I could do."

The council treasury had only $32, she said, when she took office, but had grown to more than $1 million when her term ended in 1971.

Mrs. Jumper put the Seminoles on sound financial footing, primarily by leasing out some of the tribe's land to farmers and citrus growers.

She also took time out from being a housewife and raising her three children to make frequent trips to Washington, where her perseverence paid off in federal aid and programs for her people.

She made such an impression on then-President Richard Nixon that he named her to the National Council on Indian Opportunities in 1971. With one other Indian woman and six men, she traveled extensively in the United States, counseling Indian tribes on how to improve themselves.

"It was the most wonderful experience," said Mrs. Jumper, a soft-spoken woman who is reluctant to talk about her accomplishments.

"She's special," said Max Osceola, acting superintendent of the Seminole Agency of the Bureau of Indian Affairs. "She's a very dedicated woman who has always wanted to help her people."

Osceola explained that the Seminoles are a matriarchal tribe, "but in Mrs. Jumper's case, our people have a special respect for her." Mrs. Jumper, he said, received no salary for the four years she served as tribal chairman.

"There was no money available in those days to pay tribe officials. Thanks to her efforts, all that has changed," he said.

Mrs. Jumper remembered the early days of her youth when women were not treated as equal to men. Education, she said, has changed that.

"In the olden days, women cooked and worked in the gardens," she said with no sign of bitterness. "Men did all the talking and women just listened."

Nor did the Seminoles have schools when she was a child, and her efforts to attend public schools in Dania and Fort Lauderdale were rebuffed.

"Indians weren't allowed to go to white people's schools in those days," she recalled.

Her thirst for knowledge remained, and when she was 14 she convinced her parents to send her to a Cherokee Indian school in Oklahoma, where she spent 8½ years.

Now that her children are grown, Mrs. Jumper continues to work full-time at the Seminole Clinic here. Her vocation updates that of her mother.

"She was an Indian medicine lady and she did so much as a midwife," she said.

After her formal education, Mrs. Jumper went on to the Kiowa Indian hospital in Lawton, Okla., where she became a public health nurse.

She returned to the Seminole land where she spent years traveling through the reservations to help the sick. "There were no roads in those days, so we walked."

She can be found almost daily in the Seminole clinic. And because she speaks the tribe's two dialects — Miccosukee and Creek — she serves as translator for many of the older Indians who speak no English. As in the past, she still has the chore of convincing some of them to accept modern medicines and treatments.

"Some Indians don't like the white man's medicine," she said. "You have to prove it to them that it is better than the old ways."

Antique or junque?

Dear Mr. McCollam: The mate to this clock is in the Ludwig Castle in Bavaria. It is over 25 inches high and has blue crossed swords on the back.

I would like to know when it was made and what it would sell for. — E.R.T., Saratoga Springs, N.Y.

Dear E.R.T.: The crossed swords indicate that this was made by the Konigliche Porzellan Manufacktur (Meissen). The style is typical of those made in the late 19th century.

It would probably sell for about $$5,000.

It is almost impossible to be positive about the vintage when the mark consists only of crossed swords. Any additional marking helps to establish a more definite date.

In the last year three Meissen clocks were sold at $$2,200, $$7,000 and $$8,000.

Dear Mr. McCollam: This oak chair is veey old with no traces of varnish; the wood and color are beginning to deteriorate. It appears to be hand-carved.

What can you tell me about its value and age? I have been told that it is over 100 years old. — S.D.F., San Diego

Dear S.D.F.: This chair was factory made and machine carved around the turn of the century. It is not old enough (100 years) to be an antique, but it is collectible.

It would sell, in good condition, for about $$100 to $$200.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 25, 1981

George Mraz is a study in concentration as he slides down the strings of his string bass.

Warren Vache, left, appears lost in his own musical world as he plays his cornet.

Jazzing it up

It was yesterday all week long for area jazz lovers during the fifth annual Midland Jazz Classic which has been playing the hearts of those gathered at the Midland Hilton ballroom since Tuesday.

It isn't over yet. And it won't be even after today's final performance. Those who've been listening nightly also have been storing the sounds until they meet again — same time, same place — next year.

Most of the musicians have played Midland before.

Exceptions this year include clarinetist and saxophonist Phil Bodner and trumpeter Jimmie Maxwell. Bodner has performed in Odessa before, whereas this is Maxwell's first West Texas engagement.

Others on the bill include Carl Fontana, trombone; Al Grey, trombone; Jake Hanna, drums; Milt Hinton, bass; Dick Hyman, piano; Gus Johnson, drums; Jack Lesberg, bass; Dave McKenna, piano; Johnny Mince, clarinet and baritone saxophone; Abe Most, clarinet and flute; George Mraz, bass; Red Norvo, vibes; Flip Phillips, saxophone; Bucky Pizarelli, guitar; Ed Polcer, cornet; Sue Raney, vocalist; Bobby Rosengarden, drums; Zoot Sims, saxophone; Ralph Sutton, piano; Warren Vache, cornet and flugelhorn; and Bill Watrous, trombone.

With their years of experience, these musicians can wind up and wind out the notes. All were quite good Tuesday night, giving the audience what it wanted to hear — jazz, jazz and more jazz. Even after starting at 8 p.m., they were still going strong at 11 p.m.

One of the nicest aspects of their performance is the love they feel for the music they play. Not only does their enthusiasm build with each set, it also increases as the week progresses.

And the audience isn't captive, it's captivated. Some are almost swept away with a heart wresting nostalgia when particular songs bring back memories thought to be safely tucked away, while those too young to remember are enjoying the songs for perhaps the first time.

A particularily touching scene during the second set Tuesday night occured when Warren Vache dedicated "It Had to be You" to Pee Wee Ervin who died this past May. Ervin had played the Midland Classic in previous years and was known by many of the audience members.

The only discordant note Tuesday was not struck by any of the players, but rather by the emptiness displayed at some of the sponsor tables at the beginning of the evening's entertainment.

A Midland Jazz Classic sponsor is, as one five-year Midland Jazz Classic veteran explained, "An original investor. They paid additionally to be sponsors." In other words, "they put up the seed money but they still have to buy tickets at the same price everybody else does.

"They support it financially by buying tickets, but don't show." The seats remain vacant because "often, they don't give their tickets away," the veteran added.

The theory that perhaps former President Gerald Ford's Tuesday night Midland dinner and speech had something to do with the lack of attendance at those tables was quickly refuted with "It happens each night, every year."

As the hour grew later, the sponsor tables began to fill up, but as the veteran pointed out again, "Some of those people have moved over from regular tables."

Sad. It's always easier to play with a full house.

Plus the Midland Jazz Classic sells out months ahead with virtually no difficulty.

There are those who would like to go, who would gladly split a ticket, but they don't have the chance. A ticket holder buys a seat which gets him into all performances. He then can split the cost of the ticket with someone else who occupies that seat on the nights he isn't there. Simple.

There's really no reason for many, if any, empty seats at a festival which has been sold out for months. At least this reviewer can't see one.

Good designs at modest prices

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

There are well-designed home furnishings at the upper end of the price scale and there also are plenty of inexpensive, mediocre products.

There is, however, a shortage of well-designed products at moderate prices, according to one designer.

Edward Secon, who enjoys creating functional furnishings that sell for modest prices, thinks he sees where the problem is. He says the home furnishings industry is so competitive that many of the niceties — the details that separate a mediocre product from a well-designed one — must be eliminated in the manufacturing process to pare costs.

The company making volume products is inhibited by the ability of competitors to copy a design very quickly and for less money by eliminating some of the steps that made the item worth copying in the first place. In this way, some manufacturers find integrity is a luxury rather than an advantage, as it is with more costly products where there is less competition based solely on price.

An example of his point may be seen in inexpensive all-foam seating, said Secon. A manufacturer taking pains to properly produce a chair with several densities of foam and the best sewing techniques might price it at $159. Another maker might offer a product that looked the same, but with only one density of foam and poor manufacturing techniques, for $99.

The chair for $159 would be the better value, although uninformed consumers would be likely to choose the $99 chair. Many consumers would think the $159 model was a rip-off when actually it is the other way around, said Secon. He added that better products will continue to suffer until consumers become more aware shoppers, and manufacturers become more adept at telling their product story.

Secon's studio, which specializes in home furnishings products and space planning for furniture stores, employs from 6 to 10 designers whose skills range from architecture and drafting to graphics and industrial design. The enterprise, which occupies part of an old basketball court in the former Bridgeport (Conn.) Boys Club, is a typical example of the sort of environment from which many of the new ideas for home furnishings products emerge.

The barn-like workshop is divided into a variety of areas with sections set apart for metalworking, woodworking and sewing operations. On a recent visit, one could observe models of completed jobs hanging from the walls and prototypes of new products in several stages of development.

"We like to work in three dimensions and construct a model as soon as possible," explained Secon. One such model was a chair in several stages of development. It will be introduced at the North Carolina Furniture Market by its manufacturer next April.

Like many of Secon's designs, the idea for the chair came to him from observing nature.

"The manufacturer asked for a less expensive outdoor chair and the idea of a leaf came to me because of the veining or skeleton of the leaf which supports a lot of weight for its size," he said.

Working from the leaf concept, he made a drawing and then a small doll-sized model, bending metal rods into the superstructure and cutting out a leaf-like piece of fabric for the seat.

The stages of development represented by several versions of the chair show a progression from a stiff, rather unbending shape to the final version — an undulating, graceful form that looks nothing like a leaf, yet has some of the characteristics of the leaf form.

Secon, who taught at Parsons School of Design in New York for 15 years, says the main products a designer has to offer are creativity and the ability to solve a problem.

As a teacher who helped many young people acquire the skills needed to become designers, he is convinced that the harnessing of creativity into problem-solving can be taught in school, even though that is not the way he did it.

Secon describes himself as an undisciplined individual who started attending college classes at night while still in high school. He dropped out of high school, finishing later while in the army. He studied display and commercial art, eventually going to work for an uncle in home furnshings retailing and later opened a cabinetry shop where he built the custom pieces he designed.

Secon opened his design studio about 20 years ago and since then has been steadily more fascinated by the process of translating ideas into usable products.

King of the road trucker has rolling palace

By ARNOLD ZEITLIN
Associated Press Writer

MEDFORD, Mass. (AP) — Long-haul trucker Harold Brown has thought for a long time that he was king of the road. Now he has a rolling palace to prove it.

Brown, a 6-foot, 3-inch, 220-pound former Army intelligence sergeant who regularly hauls delicate electronic equipment cross-country, has plunked down the initial payment on a $168,344.34 tractor, as costly as two Rolls Royce autos.

The 10-ton cab includes an 8-foot by 6-foot sleeping area containing twin beds with bearskin blankets, custom leather walls, a microwave oven, a refrigerator, hot-and-cold running water, a generator, color and black-and-white television sets, air conditioner, a stero system, two wardrobes, fluorescent lighting, a flush toilet and wall-to-wall carpeting.

Brown, 60, says he's thinking of installing a Telex machine so "the company and I can talk back and forth in case I'm running empty down the road and they want to reach me.

"I think I've got something that no one else has," says Brown, who estimates he drives about 100,000 miles a year in a career starting in 1945 when he left the Army after seven years.

"They tell me that the closest thing to it on the road is owned by the singer, Barbara Mandrell," he says. "It's a customized sleeper for her technicians. I've seen pictures of it. There's no comparison.

"They told me when I bought mine that I can thumb my nose when I go by hers," Brown says. "I've got a lot of fellows jealous. But the young ones, they say they wouldn't want one tractor like this yet because they don't deserve it."

Brown explains his investment simply. "I like the business, and if you're going to be in the business, you'd better be the best. The company once asked who I thought was the best driver on the road. 'It's me,' I told them. If I didn't answer that way, I wouldn't be worth putting on the road.

"I'm very good at what I do," Brown says. "I've always made money. I'm just a good man."

Brown, who modestly addresses younger men as "sir," doesn't come off as a blowhard; he just knows he is good.

"Brownie's always been the kind of guy who wants the best," says Howard Goldman, who runs the Milton, Mass., firm Brown works for as a driver-owner. "Now that he's got this, he's sort of the king of the road."

Brown says he first saw the tractor, with its 39 lights, $4,000 green and beige paint job, two emergency exits and two silver tanks carrying 150 gallons of diesel, on exhibition by the Milford, Conn., builder, Kenworth, five months ago.

"It was love at first sight," says Brown, a oourmet cook who says he plans to bake bread and biscuits in the microwave oven. "They didn't leave a thing out of the tractor. I'm still awed by it. They called my bank to see if I would handle it, and it took about three minutes to make up my mind to buy it."

The tractor he drove previously cost him $63,000. The new rig costs him a $3,000 payment each month.

"But it's changed my life," says Brown. "The company already wants me to go down to Tampa to exhibit it. I get calls from people I don't even know asking to come see it."

He insists the outsized tractor will be good business. He plans to sell it when he retires in five years. Its powerful engine with 15 speeds, including five lower reductions, gives him 6.5 miles to the gallon, compared to the 3.5 miles he got on his former rig. He and his partner now can live in the cab on the road.

"I figure I spent $16,000 last year on motels," says Brown. "I'll save that money now."

Getting longer use from clean carpets

By AL CARRELL

What has the oil shortage got to do with cleaning your carpets? Well since most carpets these days contain synthetics that use petroleum-based products, it's getting more and more expensive to replace carpets. Clean carpets will last much longer than dirty carpets. The reason is that dirt can act as an abrasive and actually wear away the fibers as you walk across the floor. The dirt moves against the surfaces just like sandpaper. So if you don't keep your carpets clean, they'll wear out faster.

Even if the dirt were not bad for carpets, a dirty carpet can make the entire room look bad. Any spots and spills should be cleaned as soon as they happen. However routine cleaning is needed for longer life and better appearance even if the dirt doesn't show.

It's a good idea to go over the carpet every day with one of those non-powered sweepers. Regular vacuuming is very important to your carpeting. Once a week is all right for normal use areas, but if you have kids or areas that get heavy traffic, vacuum twice a week. A whole lot of people run the vacuum cleaner every week, but never get the carpets clean. You have to use about six or seven passes over each carpet area to loosen and suck up embedded dirt.

We suggested getting on spills as soon as possible, but you should test any chemicals before use. They could discolor or damage the fibers. Test on a scrap or under some piece of furniture.

The time to deep clean your carpets is before they get dirty. There are rental units that you can use, or you can have carpets done by a pro. This is a very competitive business, and if you watch for specials you can often save some money. Be sure you hire a reputable cleaning outfit. Check them out as best you can. If you rent a shampooer or steam-type cleaning unit, be sure to follow all the directions. Usually they call for removing all the furniture from the room. Then a thorough vacuuming. In using the shampooing liquid, be sure that you don't use too much moisture or shampoo. If possible, wait until the carpet dries before moving the furniture back in.

Even clean carpets show wear and packing down along high traffic paths. If the carpets are tacked down, you may do well to rearrange the furniture from time to time so that you force the family to use different traffic patterns. If this isn't possible, maybe the idea of runners or throw rugs will help to take some of the punishment from the traffic. If you use rugs that are not fixed consider turning them about once a year to let other parts get used.

Furniture legs often leave indentations in the carpet. Usually you can raise these dents by holding a steam iron a couple of inches from the surfaces and letting the steam bathe the crushed pile. Then take a coin or a spoon and brush up the dented areas.

If you ever see a loose thread sticking up, never try to pull it out. You could unravel the entire carpet, and that's a very expensive way to get a ball of twine. Instead, use a sharp pair of scissors to snip the thread even with the carpet.

A burn in a carpet is unsightly. Be thankful the house didn't burn down. If the burn didn't go all the way down to the backing, use fingernail scissors to snip away the blackened fibers. With the black gone, you can rub fingers back and forth across the snipped place and probably never be able to notice the lower spot. If the backing shows, you can often snip fibers from a scrap and glue them individually into place. First put the glue into the hole and wait for it to get tacky enough to support the fibers. Place them upright into the glue. White glue that dries clean will be fine.

If there's a large damaged place or a spot that can't be removed, you may have to cut out a rectangular shaped place and put in a patch.

AT WIT'S END

Everyone's an author

By ERMA BOMBECK

Someone told me at a party awhile back that there was a man there who was not writing a book.

I didn't believe it at first. Everyone in the world is writing a book. Then I saw a small quiet man literally held captive by a group of people around him and figured it just might be true.

When the crowd had thinned out, I tested him. "Ever have a writer's block?" "Only a local anesthetic," he shouted back. "What's an agent?" I asked. "Someone who works for the FBI." "Ever heard of McGraw-Hill?" "Are they sex therapists?" he asked.

The man was obviously as clean as an 8 1/2-by-11 sheet of manuscript paper.

I could hardly wait to talk to him.

"What made you decide not to write a book?" I asked.

"When I realized I had nothing to say."

"How long have you been working at not writing?"

"Well," he said, "I got the idea about three years ago. All my friends talked about not writing a book, but no one ever really did it. They all warned me it would take a lot of discipline not to come home and sit down at a typewriter, but I was determined not to do it.

"They warned me when I would go out I'd have nothing to talk about with anyone. For a couple of years, they were right. People would say, 'How's your book coming?' and I'd say, 'I'm not writing one,' and they'd ask, 'You stuck on the title?' and I'd reply, 'I don't have a title,' and they'd move away."

I had to admire the sheer guts of the man.

"Isn't it a great temptation to write a book?"

"I fight it all the time," he said. "Especially when I run across a diet that works for me or I remember things from my childhood that I want to share."

I had to admit I had never known a man like him. In a world of cab drivers who had a manuscript in the glove compartment, 12-year-old children writing their memoirs, and Miss Piggy who was sitting comfortably on the N.Y. Times best-seller list, he was a breath of fresh air.

I hadn't thought about him at all until last week when I passed a row of paperbacks and saw, "I Am Not Writing a Book," by who else but my hero.

That devil. He had a title all the time.

More than 20,000 kids a year kidnapped by own parents

At least 20,000 and perhaps as many as 100,000 children a year are "stolen" from one parent by the other, officials estimate in a recent issue of Family Circle magazine.

The article tells of the trials and tribulations of one girl who was abducted by her father when she was 11-months old and reunited with her mother 21 years later.

According to the magazine, in at least 20 percent of the cases, the bereaved parent never hears from the child again. Usually, it's noted in the article, the abductor gets away with the kidnapping.

Laws on parental kidnapping vary from state to state and, often, says the article, whatever laws exist are not enforced.

Attaching laminated plastic

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

Attaching laminated plastic to a table top, counter or similar flat surface can transform a drab piece of wood into a colorful, smooth, eye-catching article.

The attachment is generally made with contact cement, although a variety of other adhesives can be used. What gave contact cement its instant popularity during the '40s and '50s was that it permitted bondings of this nature to be made without the use of clamps or other holding devices.

Suddenly, two pieces of wood — or a piece of wood and a sheet of laminated plastic — could be held together securely merely by pressing them together and applying a little pressure with the hands. For large items, a small roller, of the type used for wallpaper seams, worked even better than hand pressure.

There was no questioning the term contact cement. It bonded immediately on contact. That tremendous asset also had a disadvantage. When you brought two materials together, you had better be very certain the pieces were aligned properly. If they weren't, you couldn't get them apart again.

This propensity of contact cement to bond instantly and firmly is the very advantage that makes necessary a special technique when attaching a large sheet of laminated plastic to a table top, piece of plywood or similar surface. It is almost impossible to hold such a piece of plastic over a table top and lower it into position without being off a fraction of an inch, which is disastrous on that kind of project. The item that keeps you from such trouble is nothing but a piece of brown paper. You can buy special paper where you get the plastic, but I have used ordinary brown wrapping paper with good results.

Cement the two surfaces to be joined. Allow the adhesive to dry according to the directions on the container, usually 15 to 20 minutes. When it is dry, place the brown paper on the wood so that it covers it. Do this carefully and you will find that you can maneuver the paper without it sticking to the cement. Now lightly place the plastic into position. Again you will be able to get it exactly right without anything sticking.

Lift one end of the plastic. Bend down a corner of the paper and press down the plastic so that it fits perfectly on the wood. Now you will be able to slip out the brown paper from the bottom, just an inch or two at a time, as you press down the upper portion of the plastic. Within a few minutes, the attachment will be complete. Remember that it is important the first bonding at the top be correct. Once that has been done, the alignment can never be disturbed because of the ability of the adhesive to hold tightly on contact.

Once laminated plastic has been bonded properly to wood, it holds indefinitely. To prevent the wood from warping over a period of time, many woodworkers seal the side of it opposite the laminated plastic to prevent the entry of moisture. If that side is already finished, a sealer is generally unnecessary, but don't forget that moisture entering the edges of wood also can cause trouble. The edges can be painted, finished with a clear coating, covered with veneer tape or moulding, hidden with metal stripping or trimmed with edges of the same laminated plastic.

Woman organizes support group for mothers who don't have custody of their children

By MILDRED HAMILTON
Hearst Feature Service

SAN FRANCISCO — When Ellen Kimball told her suburban Boston neighbors that her small son and daughter had moved, permanently, to live with her ex-husband, they were aghast.

Her reasons weren't weighed, or even asked, in the almost automatic "how could you?" reaction.

Finding a few other women who had experienced this social stigma, Kimball reacted her way: She organized Mothers Without Custody.

Here with her second husband, "on our first vacation as a couple," the former Boston talk show host said, "This grass-roots organization is spreading rapidly across the country as women who live apart from their children, for any reason, are coming together for emotional support and understanding.

"Each one thought she was alone but there are thousands of us. Mothers Without Custody has become a national clearinghouse. All of those women who thought they had no one to talk to — even their own mothers often were disapproving — are reaching out to each other."

Kimball had medical reasons for giving up, after 10 years, full custody of her daughter, 12, and her son, 11. She said, "We ask only that society not prejudge the woman, not assume she is unfit because the kids happen to live with their father.

"We estimate today that one woman in 60,000 is living apart from one or more of her minor children. There will be more and more of this as the pressure from fathers to obtain custody — the men's rights movement — grows."

She divided members of Mothers Without Custody into four groups: those who lost custody hearings with former husbands; the voluntary exchange of custody; child-stealing by an ex-spouse; and state agency intervention cases.

"Eighty-five percent of the cases involve a voluntary exchange or the decision of a child to live with the father. A lot of these come from financial pressure, and it can't be arranged well unless the father is interested.

"The mothers who lose custody are often bitter and depressed because they have been conditioned by our culture to believe that the only mothering is around-the-clock-every-day mothering. But there are great rewards in being a part-time parent, and custody is never a closed issue until the child is grown. The mother can always be effective despite the difficulties of such a relationship."

Thirty-six groups of mothers, mostly in New England but dotted across the country, now meet monthly and informally in homes.

The organization is now a non-profit Massachusetts corporation, with all-volunteer operation and a small donation for mail and phone expenses. There is a crisis hotline in Boston, and the group hopes to be able to afford a national 800 number. Mothers Without Custody can be reached at P.O. Box 76, Sudbury, Mass. 01776; phone (617) 433-9681.

Although women joining the group have children as old as 27, most of the children involved are in the school years, ages 6 to 12, when the financial pressure increases.

Kimball and her first husband were divorced when their children were 2 and 1. She had sole physical custody and control. "Joint custody is not practical, particularly if the parents live in different towns. It looks good on paper, but it doesn't work in fact," she said.

Both Kimball, who is now in marketing research after an 18-year broadcasting career, and the children's father, a counselor, remarried. Each new spouse had children from a first marriage, and three teen-age stepchildren lived with Kimball and her second husband.

"I always knew my ex-husband wanted custody of our son and daughter, and once he told me, 'I'm helping my second wife raise her children while you raise our children with your second husband. I feel I have no children of my own.' That haunted me."

She had surgery, followed by a recurring medical problem. "Our household had five children there for 8 1/2 years. We weren't The Brady Bunch, but we lived together reasonably well. I think I was a good stepmother. Then the burden of the constant pain and parenthood — the Super-mom bit — put me back in the hospital. I decided that I needed time to recover.

"I first asked my ex-husband to take the children on a temporary basis. He said, 'No, I won't change my lifestyle for that, but I will take full custody.'

"I thought about that, and I went to the library and found an excellent help in Persia Woolley's 'The Custody Handbook.' I made an agreement with him. It upset my present husband, who tried to talk me out of it. But I felt we had done enough parenting. We were kind of burned out."

The wife of her ex-husband agreed. The children were told.

"My son said 'Ok, if I can take all my toys.' My daughter said 'I can't leave my friends.' I explained I would talk to them frequently — the phone bills are horrendous — and see them every third weekend and vacations and they would just belong to two different parents."

Kimball, who basically has her ex-husband's old visitation schedule, pays child support to him. "The children and I just had a super summer together. Our relationship has changed. I don't have to worry about new shoes or the carpool, and we can discuss their ideas and plans. And my husband's children are now either in college or on their own, and we are a couple on our own for the first time.

"I had expected to be a full-time mother always, but I had come to a place where I couldn't. In this situation a father is usually a perfectly good option. Maybe serial custody is a good thing. That's what Mothers Without Custody wants to do — look at options and help every mother cope with whatever she has to do."

Roller skating is good exercise

If you don't fall, or collide with something or someone, roller skating is one of the healthiest exercises going, according to the "Here's News in Medicine" column in a recent issue of Family Circle magazine.

The magazine cites the results of a University of California study of the effects of skating five hours a week for 10 weeks. Family Circle notes that among the skaters studied, there was an average 23 percent increase in leg strength, a decrease in cholesterol and triglyceride blood levels, a 9 percent improvement in protective HDL's (high density lipoproteins) in the blood and a 13 percent improvement in blood pressure. The subjects, aged 20 to 53, were all previously sedentary and non-skaters.

Another benefit of roller skating: It eats up calories. According to the magazine column, skating at 10 miles an hour uses up 10 calories a minute — roughly the equivalent of jogging at five miles per hour or cycling at 10 mph.

I still believe

BASEL, Switzerland (AP) — Anne Frank died of typhus in the Bergen-Belsen concentration camp in 1945 at the age of 15. Her diary described two years of hiding from the Nazis during World War II.

As Anne hid with her family in Amsterdam, she wrote in her diary, "In spite of everything, I still believe that people are really good at heart."

Her father, Otto Frank, who survived Auschwitz, was the sole survivor of the family when he died at 91 in 1980. He was decorated for bravery as a German officer in World War I.

Murphy attends seminar in Washington, D.C.

Cathy Murphy of Midland, president of Texas Jaycee-Ettes, attended a five-day Governmental Affairs Leadership Seminar (GALS) held in Washington, D.C. recently.

Seminar was sponsored by the U.S. Jaycee-Ettes to kick off its nationwide program on governmental involvement. As a women's leadership training organization, Jaycee-Ettes are encouraged to learn more about the workings of the U.S. government on local, state and federal levels. Through involvement in their communities, they are encouraged to fill positions in public office locally.

Cathy Murphy

Seminar included meeting with the only two U.S. women senators, witnessing senate debates and touring the city via a champagne cruise down the Potomac.

"After personally meeting the senators and congressmen, and then listening to their arguments for and against legislation now pending in Washington, my faith has been renewed in the integrity of our government officials," Mrs. Murphy noted.

Mrs. Murphy was presented with a U.S. flag flown over the nation's capitol in her honor.

At a recent meeting of the Midland Jaycee-Ettes, she stated, "I wish every American could experience the feeling of patriotic pride that emanates from that wonderful city."

The backyard gardener: It's time to take stock

By PATRICK DENTON
Copley News Service

Now that the heavy portion of the outdoor gardening season is past, this is a time for some relaxing pottering, doing a few pleasant jobs that will set things in order for our future operations.

It's an opportune time to take stock of your garden supplies and to place all the tools of your trade where you can find them when once again they'll be required.

For the outdoor gardener, the first place to start will be the garden shed or whatever place you use for garden supplies. Surplus fertilizers will need to be stored away so they'll be in good condition for use next spring. Some fertilizers tend to take up moisture if they are kept in a damp spot. Best to place them in plastic bags or some air-tight container.

Carefully label your fertilizers and as an added precaution place a label inside the package in case the outer label disappears. It's not a good idea to dispose of leftover bits of fertilizer by sprinkling any combination of oddments over the garden simply to get rid of them. In fact, certain chemical combinations could react in the soil to result in serious crop problems later.

Nitrogen fertilizers could be scattered on the compost heap to help in the rotting down process but do read all labels carefully and watch that no weed killers especially get thrown anywhere on the garden.

Check any bottles of liquid fertilizer to ensure they are well closed and store them to the back of the shelves for safety — indoors if there's danger of their being frozen. Insecticides and fungicides should be locked up or at least stored on the uppermost shelf if there are children about, especially if they are budding chemists.

Any seed trays, planters or pots not in use should be carefully cleaned, dried, stacked and stored. The apartment gardener might like to take this pottering time to renovate or establish a garden corner, with a potting table brightly painted. Wall shelving above the table can be utilized for string tools and other garden supplies, interspersed with trailing plants and gardening books. A garden center can thus become a highly decorative center of interest in an apartment.

Many backyard gardeners blessed with bumper crops of onions and winter potatoes this season may still be trying to find the most suitable place to store them and this can be a frustrating quest in modern homes that have all the rooms heated and perhaps have no basement, let alone a cold storage room.

While it is undeniable that great strides have been made in the field or residential architecture, the homes of our grandparents often had some most useful features lacking today. Remember the cool, off-kitchen pantries, for example, where Grandma kept her jams and jellies, fruits and vegetables? And those oh-so-handy cupboards that were vented to the outside with wire-mesh windows?

Lacking such facilities, you'll want to find a space in the basement or garage where there is good ventilation and very cool temperatures. It should also be dark and it should be dry. Boxes or sacks of potatoes, carrots or parsnips can be raised off the grounds on bricks, if necessary.

Perhaps one of the most satisfying of these late fall pottering tasks is the cleaning up of the outdoor gardening tools prior to hanging them up in their appointed places for the winter. A warm sunny day is a great time to hose them down, allowing them to dry off before applying an oily rag to the metal parts, sanding off any rough spots on the wooden handles and then wiping them down with a cloth soaked in boiled linseed oil.

You'll probably not have the time to do this when the spring garden season gets under way, so it's practical to get the job done now.

Offensive odor related to moisture

By GENE GARY
Copley News Service

Q. In the past three to four years, we have been experiencing an offensive odor. It was first noticed after using my bathroom, my wife's shower and then the washing machine. All the drains tie into the four-inch main drain under the house to the city system. I have no leaks under the house or in the house to the best of my knowledge and investigation shows no wet spots in any of the areas mentioned. This is not a sewer gas, nor does it have a sulfide odor. Heavy rains have caused flooding of the back area of the house, and water runs through the driveway to the street area. Adjacent houses suffer flooding of the entire crawl space. I am fortunate, I think, as the water does not congregate to any extent in my crawl space, but it is wet. The house is located over supposed springs. Can you give me any hope? We are at our wits end. — Joe McG., La Mesa, Calif.

A. I am not sure that I can give you any satisfactory advice. It appears to me that a personal inspection of the problem is needed by a competent plumber. However, I can give you some general suggestions. Excessive moisture, from whatever source, is probably the cause of your problem. To minimize water problems, the lot should be sloped away from the house. On low lots, the house should be set high and fill brought in around the house so that water will flow away from it. Where there is a heavy slope leading toward the house, an intercepting drainage ditch should be located at the base of the hillside to collect the water and divert it from the house area. (I note your letter said it was quite hilly at the back of your lot). Another suggestion: adequate air circulation and ventilation should be provided in the crawl space. Each wall should have louvers or vents intstalled of a size allowing one square foot of opening for each 300 square feet of ground area. The bare earth should be covered wth strips of polyethylene plastic or vaporproof building paper, overlapping the strips at least 6 inches, and sealing the seams with roofing cement to prevent escape of moisture from the ground. If moisture is not the cause of your problem then you definitely need a thorough inspection by a competent plumber to get at the source of the odor.

Q. The hardwood floors in our home are in need of complete refinishing. Our children are gone and we would like to restore the floors. We use only throw and area rugs and some of the wood has become much more worn than other areas. We have decided to sand the floor and then refinish the surface. We would appreciate your guidance and help. What do we do, once the sanding has been completed? Do we put on a sealer? Or is there just a good hard finish product? Please guide us through this big task. — John W.R., Hunker, Pa.

A. Happily, modern methods, equipment and materials make it possible for the average handyman to do a top-quality professional job in refinishing hardwood floors, with a minimum of fuss, bother and upset. To remove the old finish easily you'll need a power floor-sanding machine, an edger to sand close to walls, a hand scraper for corners and sandpaper. All of the power equipment can be rented. Also, pick up a paint brush or roller unless you have a good one at home. Then there's the finishing materials. Yu can choose from several types — shellac, varnish, floor seal or the new synthetic-resin chemical coatings. The properties of shellac and varnish are well-known. Shellac is fast drying, easy to use, wears well if waxed regularly and contact with water is avoided. Varnish dries slower, tends to scratch easily unless protected with wax but outranks shellac in water resistance and gloss. The new penetrating sealers soak directly into the wood , sealing it against dirt. And there's no surface coating to show scratches and wear marks. If you use these penetrating sealers, there is no need to use shellac or varnish. Two coats of any finish may be desirable. Follow container instructions carefully for whatever finish you choose.

Questions on building, home maintenance and repair may be sent to Here's How, Copley News Service, in care of this newspaper.

Asthmatic children don't have to give up exercise

Even though about 80 percent of asthmatic children develop breathing difficulties after vigorous exercises—including jogging, basketball and soccer—they needn't give up the physical and psychic benefits of participating in sports.

So says Dr. Mark Holbreich, of Denver's National Jewish Hospital and Research Center, in the column "Here's News in Medicine" published in a recent Family Circle magazine.

Some sports — including swimming, skiing, footbal and other intermittent activities, he notes in the magazine, tend to produce less bronchoconstriction than others.

Dr. Holbreich suggests in the magazine that certain drugs be used regularly before activities that produce bronchoconstriction and wheezing.

Corn sweetner sweeter than sugar

THOMSON, Ill. (AP) — The cornfields of America's Midwest will soon be supplying the nation's calorie-conscious consumers with a substance sweeter than sugar.

Production of pure crystalline fructose has been started by American Xyrofin, Inc., at a new $40 million plant here that uses dextrose extracted from the corn grown in Illinois, Iowa and other corn-belt states as the starting material in making fructose.

Fructose is a natural sweetner found in all fruits and vegetables.

While it has as many calories, 4 per gram, as common table sugar, fructose tastes much sweeter in acidic, cold foods and beverages.

AAUW names Outstanding Girl

Husband and wife manage cities far from home

EDINBURG, Texas (AP) — When City Manager Aaron Lam comes home after a day of headaches over street drainage, city commission meetings and tax rates, his wife easily can sympathize.

She probably has handled the same frustrations 10 miles away in her office as city manager of the small town of San Juan.

Aaron and Wai-Lin Lam could be the only pair of city managers in the country who also are husband and wife.

They were born and grew up in Hong Kong but met as graduate students in Stillwater, Okla., while planning a party for the Foreign Students Association at Oklahoma State University.

They have been at their respective positions less than a year. They talked about their careers and lifestyles during separate interviews because hectic schedules prevented a joint session.

"When my wife was named city manager in San Juan recently, everyone called me to congratulate us," said Lam, 34. "I told them, 'I wish one of us had a stable job.'"

City managers serve at the pleasure of elected officials, but the Lams said they're not too concerned about job security.

They have other things to worry about, like finding a baby sitter and spending time with each other and their 3-year-old son, Ranger.

"This job is really a minus as far as a family life," Lam said. "I normally have two to three night meetings."

Despite their similar duties, the Lams said they do not trade municipal secrets at home.

"Every so often, we talk philosophically about how to approach a problem, but because of ethics, we don't say, 'I'm having this specific problem,'" he said. "I feel like I work as hard as anybody else and I turn it off when I come home."

Both moved from Hong Kong to get an education.

"I came from a family of seven brothers and sisters. My parents always emphasized education," said Mrs. Lam, who has a doctorate in environmental design from Texas A&M University. Her speciality is urban planning.

She studied sociology at the University of Tulsa and planned to get a masters' degree in the subject at Oklahoma State. A classmate suggested she investigate urban planning. She switched majors and proposed the same field to her husband-to-be.

"The sociology background is good for me," said Mrs. Lam, 35. "Without that I don't know if planners look into human behavior enough."

Her husband received an undergraduate degree in biochemistry and mathematics from the University of Alberta in Edmonton, Canada.

"My wife opened my eyes to it (urban planning.) I decided I knew a lot about some things but I didn't know a single thing about getting along with people," he said.

As graduate students at Texas A&M, both served internships in city planning departments in the Rio Grande Valley.

They married in Houston nine years ago and soon returned to the Valley, a three-county region with many small towns.

"That's why we ended up staying here as long as we have. If we go to another big city, we're not going to get two jobs of the same type as easily," she said.

San Juan counts 7,800 residents, including many migrant farmworkers. The United Farmworkers Union, AFL-CIO, has state headquarters here. The city has a low tax base and an annual budget of approximately $1,345,000.

Edinburg is the Hidalgo County seat.

Lam said the city has unique problems, in addition to the low income population and drainage problems common to most Valley towns.

"We have a night time population of 24,000 but there are 42,000 who work here. You're producing services for 42,000 based on a tax base of 24,000. It's very challenging," he said.

The Lams applied for official immigrant status after finishing college. They are not United States citizens but that will come eventually, they said.

"This is our home," they both said separately.

French Revolution fashion returns

By MARYLOU LUTHER
Los Angeles Times

PARIS — On one side of town, in the shadow of those first guillotines, designers here are bringing back the French Revolution, with pantalooned soldiers and king-size frock coats.

On the other side, they're spiffing up the classics in what could be called the French Evolution — pretty, proven clothes that change, inch by inch, year after year.

One woman stands alone, between the two factions.

She's Sonia Rykiel, and she's proved once more that there is life beyond costumes from Central Casting and classic updates from Chanel and Balenciaga.

As the cameras from "60 Minutes" recorded every sweater and every see-through, Rykiel ass7red herself another championship season (she's No. 1 on European best-seller lists right now). As if to prove the point, she used rhinestones to spell out the word Champion, in English, on black knitted belts. These marked the waistline on white knit tennis sweater sets worn with shorts banded in black at the hem. When models turned around, the backs of theirover-sized cardigan jackets pelled out Champion again.

By taking sportswear ideas from the tennis court and jogging path and interpreting them for city streets and ritzy restaurants, Rykiel offers a brand of dressing that looks as new as tomorrow, as comfortable as yesterday. Consider, for instance, her day and night view of the jogger. By day, she's in sweater-knit running pants topped by panel-front sweaters, jackets or coats, mainly in black, off-white, rose or camel. By night, she runs the marathon from dinner table to dance floor in the most stylish sweatsuits ever to leave the locker room. They're see-through black lace, and they come with knitted black belts with the word fatale spelled out in rhinestones. Rykiel serves them with their own beaded tennis rackets.

She contin7es the sport theme by sending models out on the runways on bicycles. Their cyclist chic consists of loose cotton dresses printed with what looks like blowups of Japanese calligraphy. The dresses are slit to the waist on each side, where they meet wide jersey midriffs.

The Rykiel sports never look like authentic jockesses because the designer always manages her own signature touches. She gives 'on3 runner a pair of striped velour jogging pants and tops them with a black lace-trimmed, satin camisole. She covers many of her just-below-the-knee-length jogging pants with skirt-like panels. And she tops one pair of sweat pants with a sweater-cape that has loose panels to simulatesleeves.

If Rykiel is the Chanel of today — as she often ha been called — the Chanel of yesterday also proved her relevance for 1982. In a collection that is widely considered Philippe Guibourge's best-ever tribute to the late, great Coco, the news is in the mix of fabrics. Chanel's famous cardigan jacket, for instance, is interpreted in red or navy leather, then teamed with pleated wool crepe skirts and silk blouses. Similarly, a typical Chanel knit jacket is paired with a caramel leather skirt. All the skirts are, of course, knee covering, as Chanel considered the knee the ugliest part of a woman's anatomy.

In a season of excesses and exaggerations, the purity of this Chanel collection is making a big hit with retailers. Jack Miles of I. Magnin c8lls it the best Chanel ready-to-wear collection ever, and commends it not just for its wearability, but for its new pizazz.

Wearability and pizazz also are the hallmarks of Hubert de Givenchy's spring collection. While retailers have been assured that his well-above-the-knee dresses will be delivered to the stores in knee-covering lengths, Givenchy's north-of-the-knee view of spring could mak3 a believer out of women who sw3ar that they'll never bare their knees for fashion. Givenchy calls his loose, unfitted smock dresses new versions of the chemise. Many are offered in printed crepe de chine, silk madras and, for evening, chiffon. All have elbow sleeves -a trend evident throughout the collection, as Pari de igners turn up their noses at a wrist-length sleeves.

For those who were worried that there might not be a sane pair of pants offered here for next season, Givenchy offers classic trouser suits-with a twist. Instead of matching jackets and pants, he pairs such mixed media as a black and whit3 wool checked blazer with camel-colored gabardine pants-cuffed pants that just cover the ankles. There also are lots of culottes at Givenchy, usually shown about two inches above the knees, and worn with tuck-in blouses and wide belts.

The emerging blouse of th3 season seems to be the white silk crepe de chine T-shirt. Givenchy's are among the best, especially the ones piped in contrasting colors. His evening dresses range from ruffle-edged printed chiffons to those sprinkled with sequins.

Like Givenchy, Emanuel Ungaro sees the above-the-knee smock dress as the ideal expression of next year's leggy look. His ruffled-hemmed versions with elbow-length sleeves and mandarin collars are effected in some of the most exquisite fabrics ever to be used in a ready-to-wear collection. Always the master of assembling print , Ungaro m3rges them for spring in what could be called exquisite ecletics. An Art Nouveau printed cotton smock dre s, for instance, is worn over a full, horizontal striped mid-calf length skirt that evokes the colors of the smock. A printed silk jacquard tunic with cascade sleeves is combined with pleated trousers in a chiffon stripe worked in ombre panels. A bold, Gauguin-like floral-printed silk crepe de chine skirt is worn with a vest-like blouse interspersed with blurred circles, then topped with $ quilted silk crepe de chine jacket in multicolor stripes. It's all very luxe, day through night.

Valentino, the Rome-based designer who prefers to show in Paris, brought o7t more socialites than any of his French competitors. With Marie-Helene de Rothschild, Helene Rochas and actress Marie Bell watching every model, Valentino treated them to a young, bouncy collection based on balloons and bloomers.

How to drill an oil well

EDITOR'S NOTE: This story is one of an intermittent series of reports on the drilling of the wildcat oil well No. 1 Houpt, located south of Midland. The series is intended to explain some of the oil well drilling process to our many readers who are not familiar with it. The series began Sept. 27.

By DAVID C. SODAMANN
Oil Editor

The No. 1 Houpt is heading into the homestretch after passing another mile mile post last week. No one can say for sure now if the Houpt will turn out to be a winner, but it seems certain it will place or show.

Early last week, Sunday night and on into the morning Monday, the Houpt was "logged." That is, measurements were taken down in the hole, in an effort to determine the nature and properties of the formations around the well bore.

Logging is done by service companies speciallizing in the trade. Operators lower instruments down the hole on a "wire line" until they "tag bottom," and then the instruments are slowly reeled out of the hole, taking measurements from bottom to top. The readings are recorded as graphs on long charts. The recording equipment is housed in a specially designed truck, with room for the loggers, and their machines.

The logs made at the Houpt-1 indicate some of the formations penetrated may contain worthwhile quantities of petroleum.

"I would say now we've got enough to make a well," said David Butts, Dorchester's geologist working the Houpt. "It may not be very good, but atleast we've got enough to make a well."

The Houpt well bore has penetrated the Dean, Spraberry and Wolfcamp formations. All yield oil in this vicinity. Almost all the wells near the Houpt are producing from the Spraberry. It appears the Houpt may be an exception.

"The Spraberry dosen't look as good as we thought," said Butts. "I think we could make a well in the Spraberry, but I think we've got a better chance of completing in the Dean."

"Completing" is the part of the drilling operation that takes place after a producing formation is identified. It encompasses all the operations necesary to bring the petroleum to the surface. Sometimes oilmen refer to the operation as "tailing in," or by other terms common to a given locality.

Butts said "TD" or the total depth of the Houpt is expected to be 11,800 feet. "We're going to go below the Strawn (another commonly producing formation). We will be going through the Mississippian formation."

There is only one well in Midland County producing from the Mississippian formation, Butts explained. However, he said, "we have seen some shows (traces of oil) in other wells." Butts said the Mississippian rocks below the Houpt will be checked, just in case they may hold producable quanties of oil.

Butts "was well sitting," as geologists put it, or present at the Houpt when the logging ws done.

"We run a continuous electrical test on the formation," said Butts, defining the term "logging."

"Then my job as a geologist is to interpret those tests. When you're analyzing logs, you need to look at six or seven different things at the same time," Butts said.

ONE OF THOSE THINGS, Butts said, is a "nuetron density log." This is a measure of the porosity of rock.

Oil is trapped in rock pores. Knowing the porosity of rock is important. The greater the porosity, the greater the potential production.

Butts also looks at a Dresser-Atlas mini-log. This is a special measurement employed by the Dresser-Atlas company, the firm logging the Houpt.

"Its an indication of permeability — the way the pores are connected," Butts said. "If you had a rock full of holes (porosity), but none of it was connected (permeableness) you're no where. You're not going to make any oil."

Butts also looks at a resistivity log, a measure of rock's resistance to an electrical current. "The resistivity log is essentially measuring the quantity of water in the formation," he said.

"If it's got a lot of water in it, it doesn't have oil or gas. If it doesn't have water, then we hope it has oil or gas."

Butts also analyzed a gamma ray log. "It actually measures the gamma rays coming out of the formation," he said. "Shales have a very high gamma ray count, and sands have a low gamma ray count, so we can use the gamma rays to tell the difference between a sand and a shale."

SAND, SANDSTONES AND other porous rocks such as limestone, are the common petroleum reservoir rocks. It is important that the location of these rocks within a well bore be identified as precisely as possible.

A caliper log was also made at the Houpt. The caliper logging tool measures the diameter of the well bore. The caliper log is primarily used to determine the quantity of cement needed to set casing.

Log ananlysis can be a tricky business. The wavy lines on the graphs are often difficult to decipher. Geologists, like Butts, often ask the logging companies to provide an expert in the field to help with the analysis.

"When you're working with a well and land that runs $2 or $3 million, then two or three different opinions help," Butts said.

Logging at the Houpt has actually been going on almost from the beginning. A "mud log" is being made continuously. It started just below the surface. A mud log is a record of the hydrocarbons in solution within the drilling fluids. As formations containing oil or gas are drilled, minute quantites of the substances are mixed with the drilling fluid, or "mud." A measuring instrument on the surface records the amounts.

The mud logging machine can be fooled. Lubricating oils, motor fules, and even engine exhausts that might accidently enter the drill pipe, can cause the machine to indicate the presence of hydrocarbons where none actually exist. As a double, check mud loggers, or in some cases geologists, look at "samples" from the well bore.

Samples are rock cuttings washed to the surface by the drilling fluids. The are checked under a microscope, and often tested with several techniques, to see if they contain oil or gas.

IT TAKES A LITTLE less than 10 minutes for the cuttings to be washed 1,000 feet up the well bore. Knowing this, a mud logger can figure back in time, and estimate the depth from which a cutting originated. This knwoledge can be correlated with the mud log and the electronic logs, adding detail to what is known about conditions within the hole.

Refering to the Houpt logs, Butts said, "When we analyzed these, it was mostly for our information. We didn't have to make a casing decision on this one. We will on the next one. I'm going to have to decide out in the field whether to run casing or not."

Butts could be making the big decision sometime within the next two weeks. The bit was making progress Friday afternoon at the 9,843-foot mark — only a couple of thousand feet to go.

Logging was just part of the activity at the No. 1 Houpt last week. Another string of intermediate casing was also run. It all started last Saturday night.

Saturday evening, the hole had been stretched to 9,837 feet. It was time to log. The crew started pulling the drill pipe. They hadn't gotten far when, suddenly, the needle on the weight indicator took a jump toward the danger zone. A tight spot in the hole had grabbed the pipe. It meant a delay, as the problem had to be dealt with before anything else could be done.

The Houpt has been drilled right from the top with straight water as the drilling fluid. There have been no specially prepared muds mixed in. Drilling with water permits high rates of penetration. It also can lead to problems. One of them popped up Saturday night.

Shales and clays deep within the ground are compressed and the water is squeezed out of them. When a well bore is cut through them, they are exposed to water in the drilling fluid, and given room to expand. They start soaking up the water and expanding into the well bore, creating a restriction.

It appears that at the Houpt, a restriction had formed around the drill pipe a few hundred feet off bottom. When the "drill collars," extra heavy, large dirameter joints of pipe used to weigh down the bit, encountered the restirction they wouldn't pass through.

ALL THE PIPE was run back into the hole, the pumps "kicked in," or turned on, and fluid was circulated through the hole.

Mud was ordered and mixed with the dirty water circulating through the well. Bentonite clay or "gel" was the main ingrediant. The gel mixes with water, creatng a heavy soup, which performs several functions during the drilling process. In this case the primary function was to "condition the hole," or to coat the well bore with a slippery layer that would prevent the drill pipe from sticking in the tight spot.

All through the night, the crews worked "mudding up," mixing the gel and bringing it up to proper consistancy. Every once-in-a-while the drill pipe was raised and lowered, working the tight spot, making sure it hadn't gotten any tighter.

Early morning Sunday the crew started pulling pipe again. The restriction was encountered, and the long tedious process of pulling pumped at the proper time through a special tool inserted in the casing about half way down, creating two thick layers of cement within the well bore.

Once the casing was set, the nippling up process was repeated for a third time.

Twelve hours after the cement was put in place, a temperature survey was made to determine the height of the cement in the well bore, around the casing. As cement hardens it through was begun. Working a few inches at a time, the pipe was pulled into the tight spot until the weight indicator reading strated climbing too high, then the pipe would be rotated, wearing away the restriction, then pulled some more. It took hours to pull past.

Once clear of the gripping rocks, the pipe was pulled without additional problems. After it was all out, the process was reversed, and it was run in again, just to make sure the hole was open, so the logging tools wouldn't get stuck.

The pipe was pulled a last time and the logging process began.

THE LOGGING COMPLETED, the drill pipe was put back in the hole, the mud circulated again, and the drill pipe pulled once more.

The trip out took some time. The crews "came out laying down," that is, instead of pulling the pipe a stand at a time and placing it in the derrick, the pipe was pulled one joint at a time and laid back on the pipe rack.

The second intermediate casing was was put in place and cemented, much as the first string was. The job was a little more complicate, however. The cement had to be pumped down the hole in two stages. The weigh of almost 5,000 feet of cement in the hole would have been great enough to "break down the formation," or crush the rocks in the bottom of the hole. Some of it could have been lost into the formation. To prevent that from happening, the cement was set in two stages, part of it being gives off heat. By measuring the temperature within the casing, the level of the cement can be estimated. In this way, drillers determine whether or not the cementing had been properly completed or if more is needed.

Thursday, new drill pipe was picked up and lowered into the hole, a "cheap" bit on the end of the drill pipe. The tool used to set the second layer of cement was drilled out of the casing. More pipe was added, until the plug and float used in the first stage of cementing were ecountered, and they were drilled out. Then 60 feet of cement in the casing was drilled. Then the float shoe on bottom, and five feet of new formation. A bit trip was made, and an expensive, formation cutting bit was lowered and started turning to the right, Friday afternoon.

Going in the hole, the crew working Gene Sledge's Rig 4 at the No. 1 Houpt make a connection. The "spinning chain" is wrapped around the pipe hanging in the hole, and "thrown" around the new joint being connected to it. The rig motors are used to pull the chain, spinning the new pipe into place.

Rotary rig count still declining

A decrease was again noted in the number of rotary rigs working in the Permian Basin, according to a count made by Reed Rock Bit.

This week's total was 470, down three from last week's total of 473. The total for the same week a year ago was 342.

There were a total of 4,361 rotary rigs making hole in the United States, including 1,417 rigs in Texas and 142 in New Mexico, according to the International Association of Drilling Contractors.

Classical geophysics being improved on by Indesco

Researchers working for Indesco, a Midland-based petroleum exploration firm, have found a use for "oil field waste" that is creating a controversy within the scientific community.

The "waste" Indesco geophysists are using is scientific data generally regarded as useless. It shows up as a mass of squiggly marks on recording charts completed during the search for oil and gas. Explorationists call these squiggles "noise," and, by using computers, have it filtered from the data recorded in the field so that only "clean," smoothly curving lines appear on the final charts. Indesco has found a way to use the noise in the search for oil and gas.

But, to explain how the technique works, Indesco researchers have had to develop a new way to describe the subsurface composition of the earth. This scientific "model" conflicts with ideas commonly accepted as correct by other geophysical scientists. As a result, the Indesco system has become the center of controversy within the scientific community.

Indesco's researchers came to realize the value of "noise" while developing and refining a little used exploration technique.

"What we've seen," said Jack Jordan, Indesco's manager of field operations, "is a correlation between what appeared to be noise in the data and well logs. The only reason we noticed this is because we were doing our measurments so close — every 220 feet."

What Indesco does is force a direct electrical current to flow into the ground, and then measure the current at recievers spaced at 220 foot intervals over an area to be mapped. The measurements are recorded by computer and the result is a record of the earth's resistance to the flow of electricity.

The distance between the source of the current and the receiver determines the depth to which measurments are made. Readings made 220 feet from the source provide measurement to 220 feet of depth. Readings made at one mile, are used to measure rocks one mile deep.

These records are, in effect, synthetic well logs, Jordan said, made without first drilling a hole in the ground.

"It won't have all the detail of a well log, but it will pick up all the main horizons."

The data acquired by the Indesco system can be correlated with that gathered through a resistivity log made in an actual well bore, Jordan said. By combining the two sources of information, potentially good drillsites around an existing well can be selected with a fair degree of accuracy.

Actually what is measured, Jordan explained, "is called an electromagnetic eddy current residual."

The electromagnetic eddys are whirl pools of electricity in the rocks created by the rapid switching on and off of the current used in the test.

"Depending on how conductive the rock is, it has a different repsonse," Jordan said.

Using the electrical measurements, Jordan said, the Indesco researchers can actually map the porosity of rock, as rock's resistance to elctric current is controled by its porosity. The measurments also indicate whether or not the rock is fractured, pinching out, and the angle of dip. All of which can be important information to oilmen.

"We think that the eddy current residual will be a powerful tool in the future for finding oil because its telling us things about the rock we were not able to determine earlier," Jordan said.

"We're working in a area where the science has been misused in the past," Jordan said. "There are a lot of 'black box' people around who say they can put electricity in the ground and find oil. That's not possible. What is possible is mapping the resistivity variations of the earth's subsuface."

"Our whole approach is to do classical geophysics better than anyone else," Jordan said. "What we're doing can be done by anyone if they do as we do and combine all of the different parts of the science and put it all together in one package."

Indesco researchers have no secret Jordan, explained, they use nothing but standard physics in their work.

So what keeps kids in physics classes from competing with Indesco?

"The mathmatics is very complicated," Jordan responded.

The methods used by Indesco originated with the Schlumberger brothers in France, Jordan said. The Schlumbergers experimented with ways to analyze subsurface rocks from the surface, and published several scientific papers on the subject.

Today, the Schlumberger company, one of the world's largest oil field service companies, only does well logging, it does not use the technique of taking measurements from the surface developed by the brothers..

Others have built upon the Schlumberger research, Jordan said. "We've borrowed techniques from the Russians, and different workers in the field."

Members of the Indesco staff have had extensive experience with electrical meauring techniques, Jordan said. They have used the system while doing university research, and while working with other companies. Since Indesco's founding in 1979, Jordan said, the staff has been doing development work here in Texas.

"We felt there was a strong need for another tool in the oil exploration industry," he said. "There's still a lot of oil in subtle traps, or stratigraphic traps."

Traditional exploration tehniques typically don't reveal these subtle traps, Jordan said. This is especially true in problem areas.

There are a lot of areas were the common seismic surveying system doesn't work. Particularly in areas of volcanism, Jordan explained.

"Volcanic layers disperse seismic energy. It doesn't get down to the rocks the way it is supposed to."

In areas like Washington, Oregon, Nevada and most of Idaho, with a history of volcanic activity, Jordan said, seismic surveys don't work well, but Indesco's techniques do.

The same is true in overthrust areas in the Rocky Mountains, the Appalachians, and southwest Texas where broken layers of rock have slipped over one another.

"We don't try to compete with seismic in areas where it works," Jordan said, "it has better resolution than our tool."

Using present techniques, Jordan said, Indesco researchers can make measurements to 20,000 feet of depth. Measurements can be made with a 3 percent accuracy. At 10,000 feet, Jordan, explained, Indesco's system can detect formations 300 feet thick.

Though Indesco's system can't compete with seismic surveys, it is done like a seismic survey. Indesco's men "run lines," or do their surveys, using standard seismic cables and roll-along, 8-channel receivers, and a computer based recording system.

Permian Basin Petroleum Pioneers' reunion Friday

The 12th biennial reunion of the Permian Basin Petroleum Pioneers will spud in at 9 a.m. Friday, with the opening of the registration desk at the Midland Hilton, reunion headquarters. The desk will be staffed by members of the Medland Desk and Derrick Club.

Permian Basin Petroleum Pioneers are persons who, as of Oct. 30, 1981, were engaged in any phase of the oil business in the Basin 30 or more years ago. Widows of Pioneers also are eligible for membership.

Libya offering $2-a-barrel discount for crude oil

By ROBERT BURNS
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Libya, whose crude oil price of $40 a barrel is among the highest in OPEC, is offering a $2-a-barrel discount, industry sources said Friday.

The move underscores a downward trend in OPEC prices that many analysts believe will lead soon to a new pricing agreement by the oil cartel.

Earlier this week another OPEC member, Nigeria, offered a discount of $1.50 a barrel to bring its asking price down to $34.50 a barrel. Two months earlier it had cut its $40-a-barrel price to $36 a barrel.

Separately, a Venezuelan newspaper reported Friday that Venezuelan Oil Minister Calderon Berti had been invited to meet with Ahmed Zaki Yamani, the oil minister of Saudi Arabia.

It was presumed the two ministers would discuss a possible Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries agreement on a benchmark price of $34 a barrel, the English-language newspaper The Daily Journal in Caracas said.

Berti told the newspaper the meeting with Yamani would take place before a scheduled OPEC meeting next Thursday in Geneva, Switzerland. The Berti meeting with Yamani was viewed by one oil company executive as perhaps the first in a series Yamani will hold with other members of the oil cartel.

"My guess is Yamani will want to talk with all of them (oil ministers) before deciding whether they'll (the Saudis) even go" to the Geneva meeting, said the oil executive, who agreed to discuss OPEC pricing on the condition that he not be identified.

Many industry analysts believe Saudi Arabia, OPEC's most influential member because it accounts for about 40 percent of the cartel's production, will not attend the Geneva meeting unless other members agree in advance to a unified price.

Venezuela was one of the few OPEC nations to block a price agreement at $34 a barrel at the cartel's last meeting in August. Saudi Arabia had agreed to raise its price $2 to $34 a barrel if the others would lower their prices to a base price of $34. But Venezuela and others rejected the deal and the meeting ended in failure.

Last week, however, Berti indicated his country might be ready to accept a reduction in its $36-a-barrel asking price.

The Libya discount, which lowers its official price to about $38 a barrel, apparently received a lukewarm reception from the international oil companies that are its customers. One source called the discount "a token gesture" that is hot likely to spur much buying of Libya's high-quality crude.

Libya has been hard pressed to stem the drain on its export earnings. Its oil production has fallen to an estimated 600,000 barrels a day from a normal level of about 1.7 million barrels a day because of a lack of buyers.

Strippers add billions to economy

AMARILLO — Production of almost 142 million barrels of oil from stripper wells in Texs in 1980 added about $5 billion to the state's economy, G.E. Stahl, an Amarillo oilman and an area vice president of the National Stripper Well Association, said recently.

Stripper wells are those producing 10 barrels a day or less. There were 103,594 such wells operating in Texas at the outset of this year. Last year they produced 141,825,154 barrels of curde oil an increase of more than 5 million barrels over 1979 production.

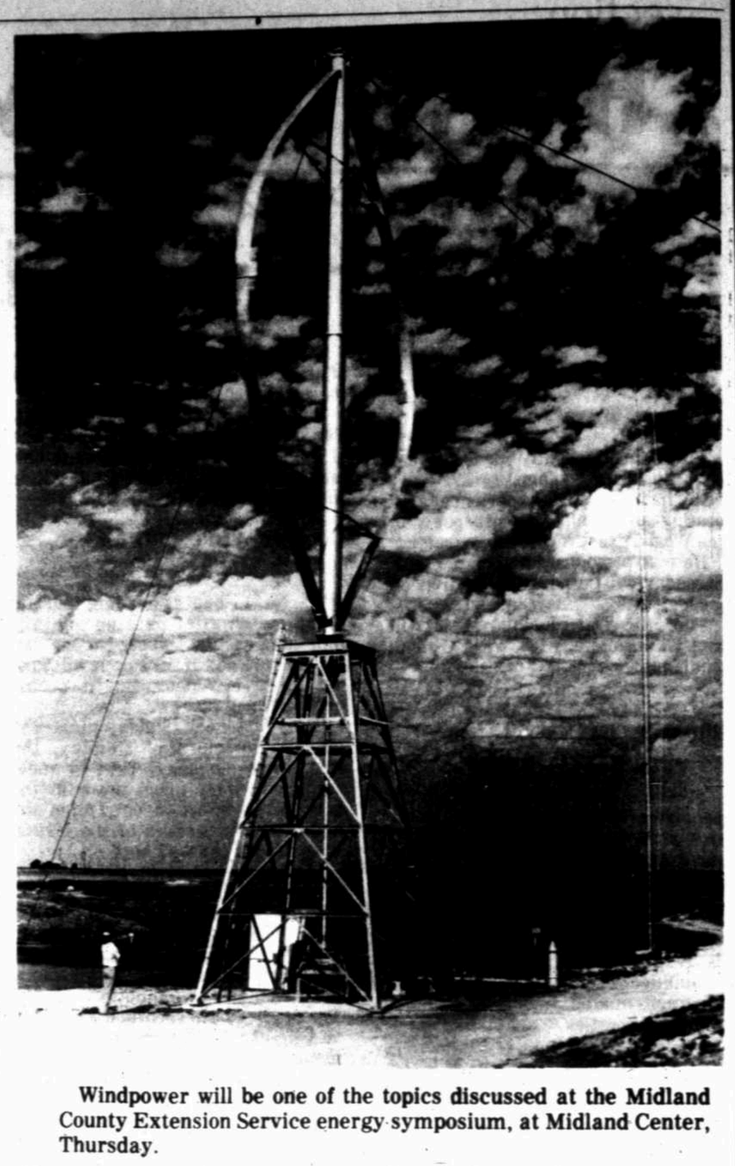
The figures for Texas are contained in the annual National Stripper Well Survey which was recently released at the association's annual meeting in Houston.Stahl said the continuing increase in stripper oil production which constitutes about 16 percent of the state's total output, stems from increaed incentives as world oil prices rose following the Arab oil embargo in the winter of 1973-74. Higher prices meant that existing wells could be kept in operation longer and old wells and old fields reopened and reworked.

"Critics of the oil industry have said that higher prices would not result in the production of more domestic crude oil," Stahl said. "Here in Texas we aree proving those critics are dead wrong."

He said the same trend holds true nationwide. "Before the embargo stripper production in the United States was declining annually by 15 million barrels. Now it is increasing each year by about 5 million barrels."

Stahl said the so-called oil windfall profit tax of 1980, which reduced the income of independent producers by about $6 a barrel, threatened to slow down stripper oil production once more. However, Congress this year amended the tax law to exempt stripper oil production by independents, effective Jan. 1, 1983. "This will help restore a high level of oil activity in Texas and elsewhere," Stahl said.

Regarding the economic benefit to Texas resulting from increased activity by the state's oil producers, Stahl noted that farmers, ranchers and other landwoners received about $625 million in oil royalties last year.



Windpower will be one of the topics discussed at the Midland County Extension Service energy symposium, at Midland Center, Thursday.

Energy symposium scheduled Thursday

The Midland County Extension Service will sponsor an energy symposium Thursday, October 29, at the Midland Center.

"Energy Dimensions — Today and Tomorrow" will emphasize energy across the U.S.A. and foreign lands; and will update, educate consumers, investors, business, industry, research and education communities.

Topics of the general sessions will be oil/gas, nuclear, solar, wind and coal. Concurrent sessions will include audits, maintenance, retro fitting, windows, interiors, ceiling fans, heating/cooling, earth shelters, fireplaces, landscaping and gasohol.

Speakers for the general sessions will be Arden Grover, president, Permian Basin Petroleum Association; G.D. Headrick, Texas Electric Service Co.; Dr. John D. Reichert, Texas Tech University; Dr. Noland Clark, U.S. Department of Agricultural Research Service; and Dr. Earl Hoskins, Texas A&M University.

The one day session will also include exhibits using the various types of energy resources including a solar-powered steam generator prototype from Texas Tech University, a gasohol prototype from Texas A&M and an infrared equipment display from Witte Energy Management.

The symposium will begin at 8 a.m. For further information call the Midland County Extension Service at 684-3481.

Nuclear work stopped

SEATTLE (AP) — Officials of the Washington Public Power System were expected today to finalize a $150 million plan to curtail work for 20 months on two nuclear power plants beset by cost overruns and construction delays.

The WPPS, consisting of 88 public utilities, late Thursday was putting final touches on an agreement reached .

Administration opposes oil legislation

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration joined the American Petroleum Institute today in opposing legislation which would prohibit major oil refiners from operating retail gasoline stations.

Former Attorney General Griffin Bell, representing the industry's 8,000-member institute, told the Senate Judiciary Committee that available evidence does not support the assumption upon which the proposed legislation is based: that refiners have used profits from producing operations to subsidize low pump prices at company-operated stations.

William F. Baxter, assistant attorney general for the Justiee Department's antitrust division, and Leonard Coburn, acting director of the Energy Department's office of competition, testified against the proposal for the administration.

Citing an Energy Department study released in January, Bell said major refiners who operate gas stations have neither subsidized low pump prices nor increased their share of the retail petroleum market.

He said the department concluded that the difficulties faced by most retail dealers during the past 10 years "were caused by external market phenomena beyond the control" of major refiners.

In concluding, Bell said he believes the proposal "represents an attempt to strike at a problem for reasons conveniently but mistakenly laid at the feet of the major integrated refiners."

A representative of Maryland, which became the first state to enact such legislation in 1974, encouraged passage of the measure, however.

"I firmly believe Maryland has lower prices and a more stable marketplace because of our divorcement law."

Tom Owens, Witte Energy Management, searches for energy losses. The infrared scanning device he holds is used to conduct energy audits of homes and businesses. The equipement will be on display at the energy symposium, Midland Center, Thursday.

Seeing black cats in coal bins, energy losses too

Witte Energy Management, a Midland-based energy and management consulting firm, recently acquired a wide range of sophisticated infrared measuring equipment, which the rapidly expanding energy management firm will put to use in a variety of ways.

"It's an exciting group of instruments," said company president Dick Witte. "Problems that can cost a company thousands of dollars in energy and equipment loss — as well as potential danger areas — can be detected with infrared scanners. We recently found and solved a costly electrical problem on a drilling rig using the infrared viewer and thermography."

"Thermography," Witte explained, "is a non-contact, non-destructive process that detects and measures heat radiation by an object.

"Thermal imanging systems, such as we use, detect the infrared emission from a given scene and forms a thermal or heat image, which is then converted to a visible image, giving us the ability to see in the infrared. The system allows us to see a black cat in a coal bin at midnight."

The Witte firm will be using the infrared imaging equipment to conduct energy audits of homes and businesses.

"In the days before energy awareness set in, many homes and office buildings were constructed in a way that would shock today's energy consciousness," Witte said. " The question that many of us have asked ourselves when we receive our electric and gas bills — and I am one of those — is, 'how can I determine what really needs to be done to plug the worst areas of heat or cooling loss without completely rebuilding my house?"

The infrared imaging system is the answer, Witte said. It can be used to measure heat or cooling losses through various parts of a structure. "The imaging device turns this inforamtion into a picture similar to a TV image," Witte said.

"Since infrared is a non-contact method, the inspection of buildings, large or small, can be done quickly.

Witte said, "The cost of a scan of an averaged-sized house can range from $90 to $200, depending upon what is included. Industrial structures or plant scans will typically be more expensive.

"In a plant energy audit, we survey not only insulation, but heat pipes and electrical equipment. Many electrical problems can be quickly isolated through an infrared scan.

"Thermographs of problem areas can be provided for specific corrective action. After the repairs or corrections have been made, a follow-up scan can quickly tell the home owner or plant manager if the job was done well, or as agreed to by the contractor."

Witte will be exhibiting the new scanners during the Midland County Extension Service's energy sumposium at Midland Center Thursday.

Presidents in groups

What Americans saw (via news reports) at Egyptian President Anwar Sadat's funeral was a rare sight likely to become somewhat more commonplace in future months: Three former American presidents at one location at one time.

While such gatherings undoubtedly give Secret Service agents ulcers and nervous twitches, those gatherings also hold the potential for political inroads in policy matters unseen in the lifetimes of most Americans.

And Ronald Reagan's administration stands a good chance to be the prime beneficiary.

American presidents wield an enormous amount of power even after leaving office. Witness the attention devoted to recent trips abroad by Richard Nixon, Jimmy Carter and Gerald Ford. Having held the United States' highest elective office, the men continue to enjoy friendships initiated in office.

Regardless of the opinions of editorial writers and the American public, former American presidents are sought out for their advice in international political matters. Press accounts indicate this is particularly true of Mr. Nixon, who is said to remain in constant touch with political figures both in the United States and abroad.

Gerald Ford maintains something of a low profile, but he, too, is said to remain in touch with various officials around the globe. Indications are that the same is true of Jimmy Carter.

A glimmer of what could transpire if the former presidents continue to meet periodically was seen when Ford and Carter noted on the return flight from Egypt that each favors negotiations with the Palestinian Liberation Organization in the interest of a Mideast peace. All three former presidents also have indicated they favor the AWACS sale to Saudi Arabia.

While neither of those bits of information may translate into political victory for Mr. Reagan, it's likely that the knowledge may sway public sentiment to some degree or, perhaps even more important, the stances of members of Congress on particular issues.

All three former presidents appear to be in good health and vigorous; all seem to be intensely involved in political matters, at least from an intellectual standpoint.

While the political clout of such consensus remains to be seen, there's little doubt that in coming months more of the same will be witnessed by the American people.

Mubarak's missions

Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak's first few days in office have been marked by a posture of calmness and expressions of confidence. If they portend his style of leadership he is off to a good start as Anwar Sadat's successor.

Mubarak's missions are many, abroad and at home.

— As he has been reminded constantly, even before taking office, his primary international chore is maintaining the momentum of the Egyptian-Israeli peace initiative. He has pledged, convincingly, that he will do his best.

— Also on his international agenda is Egypt's isolation from the Arab world. Mubarak does not want to court his Arab neighbors at the risk of good relations with Israel, but he would like to keep an open door whenever it is diplomatically feasible.

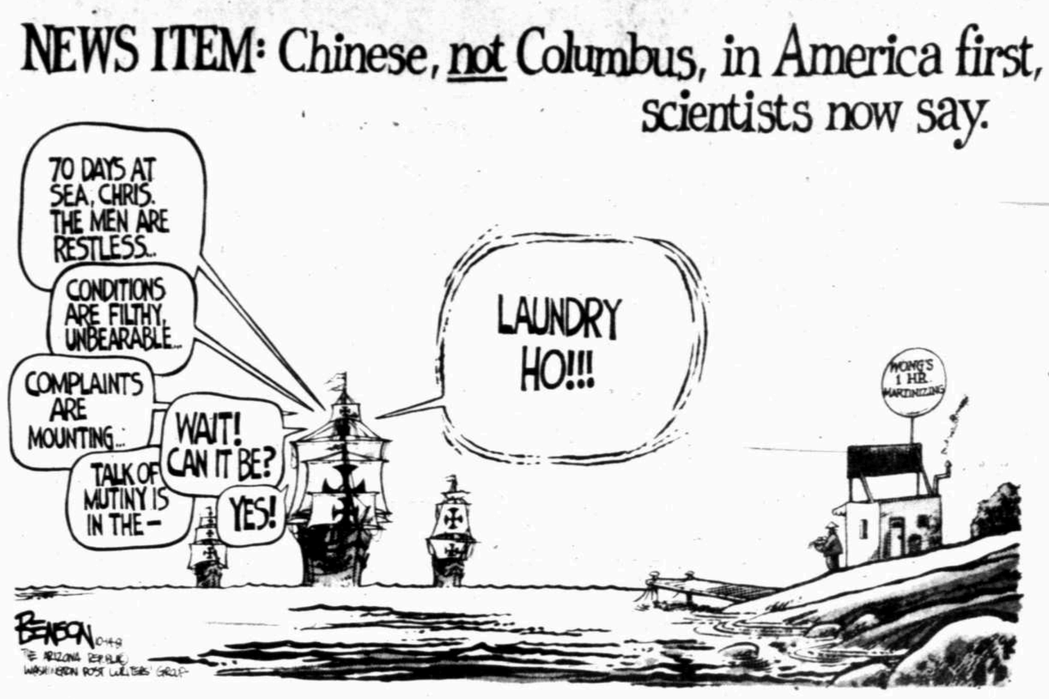
— At home, the economy is sick, and has been for years. One of President Mubarak's missions, and one of the most frustrating ones, is to raise the economic lot of millions of Egyptians above the poverty level.

— Also high on his "must" list is a campaign against violence. He moved swiftly after taking office to arrest extremists. He made his commitment clear by saying he would take "ruthless measures" against "anyone who thinks he can mess about with the rights of the people."

This is a large order, but no larger than the seemingly insuperable odds that faced Anwar Sadat when he took office.

The risk the world runs, as it watches Mubarak try to fill Sadat's shoes, is that it will expect too much, too soon. We need to have patience, and give him time.

As we are tempted to make comparisons, and say that Egypt's new president is less charismatic than the old, let us not forget the same thing was said when Harry Truman succeeded Franklin Roosevelt. Men of leadership qualities and persistence like Mr. Truman and, we trust, Mr. Mubarak, have a way of rising to presidential challenges in a statesmanlike fashion.



WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

State merits praise for protecting Libyans

WASHINGTON — I've never been shy about disclosing bureaucratic bungling, diplomatic blunders and foreign-policy wrongheadedness in what is sometimes referred to as Pettifoggy Bottom. But when the State Department does something right, I'm happy to give credit where it's due.

Jack Anderson

This was the case with the 4,000 Libyan students living in the United States. Some of them were outspoken opponents of their country's paranoid dictator, Muammar Qaddafi; many more kept their dissident views to themselves. But all felt threatened by Qaddafi and his international network of spies and assassins.

In a situation like this, it would have been easy enough for the State Department to turn a deaf ear to warnings that Qaddafi's killers were working on a hit list of Libyan students in this country. Instead, acting from humane considerations, Foggy Bottom officials worked quietly, resolutely and effectively to protect our Libyan guests from Qaddafi's assassination squads.

In the end, one Libyan student was murdered and another barely survived a would-be assassin's bullets. But the State Department's determined, low-key response to the threat probably saved the lives of many Libyan students and prevented retaliation against their families back home.

Here's the story:

Qaddafi's consuming fear of assassination is well-founded. In the old bumpersticker apothegm, just because he's paranoid doesn't mean his enemies aren't after him. They are. There have been several attempts on his life, one of which apparently caused a wound in his left shoulder or arm.

Like any dictator, Qaddafi has always been worried about his countrymen who live abroad, free of the iron-fisted control of his security police. Students in the United States, exposed to dangerous notions of democracy and human rights, were perceived by Qaddafi as especially threatening.

Convinced that some of these students were not above fomenting plots against him, the dictator had his agents in the United States issue clear warnings: Behave yourselves or else.

The State Department first got wind of these threats in February 1980. The first explicit case was that of Faisal A. Zagalli, a Libyan studying at Colorado State University. Zagalli was nearly killed in an assassination attempt later that year; but the department at first had no idea the situation would get that serious.

Officials at State listened with interest and concern to a university official who reported that some of CSU's Libyan students, particularly Zagalli, had received threats from Qaddafi's emissaries. If they failed to give wholehearted support to the Qaddafi regime, they were told, they would lose their scholarships and their families in Libya could be in trouble. There were also not-so-veiled threats of physical harm.

Not long after this early warning of possible trouble, Qaddafi himself added to the State Department's concern by openly calling for "physical elimination of the enemies of the revolution abroad."

More reports of threats reached Foggy Bottom, and officials asked the FBI to look into the situation. Until then, the G-men's efforts in this field had been focused on Iranian students, who had been harassed and threatened since the days of the shah.

As FBI agents interviewed Libyan students across the country, it didn't take long for them to conclude that the source of intimidation was the Libyan diplomatic mission in Washington.

Meanwhile, events moved swiftly in the wake of Qaddafi's call for extermination of his opponents overseas.

On March 21, 1980, the body of a Libyan businessman who had criticized Qaddafi was found stuffed in a car trunk in Rome.

"The situation was getting out of hand," recalled a State Department official. The department's response was to order two Libyan diplomats expelled by April 5.

"We had no solid proof" that those picked for expulsion had been involved in the threats to Libyan students here, a high-level department source told my associates Joe Spear and Dale Van Atta, adding: "But we didn't want to wait for the smoking gun. We wanted to do something very graphic and dramatic. We were sending a message."

Qaddafi was sending messages of his own — written in blood. On April 11, a Libyan expatriate journalist was shot to death outside a mosque in London. On April 21, another Libyan exile was gunned down in Rome. On April 25, a third Libyan dissident was killed in his London office. And on May 10, Qaddafi's hit men struck twice in Rome: a Libyan businessman was shot while sitting in a cafe, and a former Libyan official was fatally shot in the Saturday shopping crowds.

Meanwhile, threats to Libyan students here had been increasing. The State Department decided "to send a louder message," as one source put it. Four more Libyan officials were ordered to leave.

The Libyans argued that they were not diplomats, but private citizens, and could only be expelled by deportation — which could take years. The State Department stood its ground. The Libyans were diplomats and subject to immediate expulsion.

After a two-day standoff, the Libyans realized State wasn't going to back down. They left the country.

The threats to Libyan students decreased, but evidently not the plotting. In October, Zagalli opened the door of his apartment to an American who had phoned a few minutes earlier. He was shot, but survived. The man charged with the attempted murder is a former Green Beret with links to fugitive ex-CIA agent Edwin Wilson, a Qaddafi hireling.

Finally, last May, the State Department shut down the Libyan mission in Washington, citing "a wide range of Libyan provocations and misconduct, including support for international terrorism."

The danger to Libyans in the United States is still present. A college student, Nabil Abuzed Mansour, was found dead last July in Ogden, Utah, stuffed in the trunk of his car. Apparently, Qaddafi had struck again.

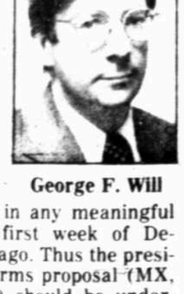
GEORGE F. WILL

United States' believability the only reason to support sale

WASHINGTON — Proof of the capacity of the proposed AWACS sales to cause dreadful developments is that it has awakened the sleeping pedagogue in me. The pedagogue thinks the nation should define its terms, especially those that denote the things it covets, such as "peace" and "moderation."



George F. Will

If "peace" means simply the absence of armed conflict, then peace is a clear-cut concept, but it is a classification that does not classify in a way compatible with common sense. The United States has not known peace in any meaningful sense since the first week of December, 40 years ago. Thus the president's strategic arms proposal (MX, B-1 and the rest) should be understood as another maneuver in what John Kennedy called a "long twilight struggle," countering maneuvers of arms by the enemy. The president's proposal — to deploy a new capacity for violence, for the purpose of countering the enemy's capacity — is not war, but it is indicative of a condition closer to war than to peace.

Similarly, Israel has never known a day of peace. Israel has suffered four wars but the intervals between have not been peace. Saudi Arabia, whose "moderation" is cited by proponents of the AWACS sale, is among the foremost contributors to the climate of war and, hence, to the destabilization of the region.

In his letter offering assurances to senators, the president says he would cancel the sale if "the Saudis adopt policies which are disruptive to prospects for stability of the region and detrimental to U.S. national interests." That statement implies that the Saudis have not hitherto adopted such policies. The statement is an example of the deceptions, including self-deceptions, the administration has been driven to in its search for rationalizations of the sale.

The Saudis have relentlessly excoriated the Camp David agreements. They have persistently undermined the peace process. They have financed the transformation of the foremost terrorist organization, the PLO, into a conventional army in Lebanon. They have called (in January) for a "holy war" against Israel. They have never denounced treaties of cooperation between the Soviet Union and Arab states such as Syria and Libya. They have vigorously opposed any military bases on the Arabian peninsula and the Gulf (although the Soviet Union has a substantial presence in Syria and South Yemen). They have pressured Oman to be less hospitable to the United States.

They denounced the hostage rescue mission in Iran as "American military aggression." They initiated the founding of, and are host to, the Gulf Cooperation Council that denounced as "piracy" the U.S. shooting down of the two Libyan aircraft that attacked U.S. aircraft. They raised the price of oil more than $20 a barrel between the end of 1978 and the beginning of 1981. Their oil minister recently threatened a $60-a-barrel price if oil companies would not reduce inventories. And they are the hosts of Idi Amin (who is not in Libya, as George Bush charged when reaching for definitive proof of Libya's immoderation).

Worse than what will happen when the president wins or loses is what already has happened: Our political language, and hence our capacity for clear thought and sensible action, has been damaged by the administration's need to ascribe moderation to Saudi Arabia. The administration also has manfully, but unconvincingly, celebrated the "stability" of Saudi Arabia, a nation undergoing pell-mell modernization, with low literacy and 75 percent of its labor force consisting of foreigners.

There has always been one, but only one, good argument for supporting the sale: The president (as distinguished from his aides, who concocted this misadventure) does not deserve, and the country cannot afford, another blow to the believability of U.S. undertakings. The argument is not "My country — or my president — right or wrong" (which, as Chesterton said, is like "My mother drunk or sober"). But there are times, and this may be one, when it is more important for the executive to be effective than correct.

The administration should be prepared, if it wins, to issue a statement that is both reassuring and admonitory. It should reassure Israel and should admonish the Saudis not to believe what is, by now, all too easy to believe: that the United States expects no reciprocity for its favors.

When the Senate Foreign Relations Committee was considering the sale, the Washington Post carried a large front-page photo of two of the president's supporters conferring: Sens. Larry Pressler (R-S.D.) and Charles Percy (R-Ill.). The president should wonder about a Middle East policy that depends on the perceptions of Percy, who thinks the PLO's Yasir Arafat is a moderate, and Pressler, who is not famous for constancy on behalf the president's, or other, foreign policy views.

ART BUCHWALD

MX game — Nevada's new thriller!

I don't want to second guess President Reagan's decision to bypass the Air Force's version of an MX system in favor of his modified plan, which is to put MX missiles in already-built Titan holes.

Art Buchwald

What the Pentagon wanted was an underground train system by which we could move our missiles around a 20-square mile area, so that the Soviets couldn't pinpoint where they were.

The Air Force described it as a giant "shell" game.

Before President Reagan's announcement that he was abandoning the idea for a cheaper, less sophisticated system, someone in the Pentagon had leaked the story that the MX complex would be built in the state of Nevada.

When it turned out this information was wrong, everyone from the Joint Chiefs of Staff to the Hawks in the Senate was infuriated with the White House decision.

I was, too. I always felt Nevada was the best place to put the MX system and I even had a good idea of how it could pay for itself.

As anyone who has been to Las Vegas knows, the main attraction of the state is gambling. High rollers from every part of the country, as well as those from Hong Kong and Abu Dhabi, fly in to throw their money away on slot machines, roulette, dice tables and any card game the plush casinos offer.

People will bet on anything in Nevada, as long as it moves, lights up or has green felt on it.

This was my idea:

The Air Force would be permitted to build its underground train system in the desert of Nevada as planned. There would be 100 live missiles, which could be moved around to a thousand stations, making it impossible for the Russians to know their locations.

After everything was in place, the whole thing would be covered with sand. Then, on top of it, they would construct a huge gambling casino, four times the size of Caesar's Palace. There would be hotel rooms, bars and an enormous dinner theater featuring the greatest nightclub acts in America.

No expense would be spared to make it the most magnificent pleasure dome in the country.

The entire ground floor of the casino would be devoted to a new gambling game called "MX."

Large tables would be constructed in the same shape as the MX missile system, and on the green felt would be numbered every underground hole where a missile could go.

Players would stand around the table, placing their chips on where they thought a live MX missile would wind up. (The minimum bet would be $100 to keep the riffraff out.)

Once all the bets were made, an Air Force colonel would push a button and start the missiles moving around on their tracks.

In 30 seconds, a board over the table would light up, indicating where the live missiles were and those gamblers who put their chips on the winning holes would be paid five chips for every one they bet.

As an added attraction, the Air Force could shoot off one of the missiles as a test. If you bet on that missile, you would get back a jackpot of 100-to-1.

The beauty of the new gambling game is that it would attract not only high rollers from the Free World, but the Soviets would send over KGB gamblers to bet huge sums of hard currency in an effort to figure out how to break the system.

Since the odds of guessing the right number would be 10-to-1, and the Air Force would only be paying off at 5-to-1, the MX system would pay for itself in three years. From then on, everything they made on the MX, which many people believe is the greatest crap game of them all, would be gravy.

Getting Jimmy Carter to pitch the AWACS to Congress was not one of Reagan's smarter moves. When it comes to getting the job done in Washington, Jimmy proved that the old magic is still there.

Another Texas tradition: It's time for a fight with 'feds'

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — It seems that at least every decade or so Texas has to engage with the federal government in a major dispute involving the state's offshore lands.

This time, the issue involves half a billion dollars or so in revenues from oil and gas development on the Outer Continental Shelf.

Attorney General Mark White is taking the federal government to court on the issue, a practice in keeping with the tradition of these disputes.

At issue is as much as $600 million which is being held by Washington officials in an escrow account established under the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act of 1953 (which was amended in 1978).

That act set up an offshore oil spill fund to be shared with the states with offshore lands.

The law provides for the escrow account to be set up with revenues from development along the Outer Continental Shelf where state and Federal lands join — but it doesn't set out how payments are to be made or how the money is to be divided.

It does say that the sharing should be on a "fair and equitable" basis.

Thus far, there have been no payments from the fund — and White thinks that's obviously neither fair nor equitable.

"Fair and equitable," White feels, means at least half of the money to Texas — perhaps more than half.

White, Gov. Bill Clements and Land Commissioner Bob Armstrong recently met in Dallas with U.S. Department of the Interior representativdes to discuss the disagreement.

"Basically," White says, "we wanted to see what their offer would be" in an effort to avoid a protracted court battle.

But, White adds, "they appeared to disregard what 'fair and equitable' meant in the law.... I think they don't understand the historical background."

Texas, White contends, "produced much of the wealth" in the fund "because we've developed our side of the line."

AUSTIN NOTEBOOK

Because of Texas' policies in encouraging development of offshore leases — with lower bonuses and higher royalties — development of Federal offshore leases has been stimulated, White argues.

And for that, he says, federal officials are "talking two, three, four percent...I think it (the meeting) was a waste of time for us."

During the 1940s and 1950s, Texas and the United States engaged in an extended dispute over the ownership of the 10-mile area off the Texas coast — the so-called "tidelands" controversy.

Drilling in the offshore area was in its infancy at the time the "feds" attacked Texas' ownership.

The state claimed it owned the offshore area out to the three marine league limit, due to the fact that that limit was the one claimed by the Republic of Texas — a claim defended by the Republic of Texas Navy — and a claim recognized by the U.S. under the treaty by which the Republic became part of the U.S.

At one point, Speaker Sam Rayburn and President Harry Truman had worked out an apparent compromise which would have given Texas 62.5 percent of the oil and gas revenues from within the three-league limit, and half the revenue from the rest of the Continental Shelf area.

But the agreement broke down, due in part to political maneuvering at the state level between then Gov. Allan Shivers and then-Attorney General Price Daniel, and although Rayburn passed the bill, it was vetoed.

Later, however, Rayburn got the measure through again — and it was signed — but the dispute ended up going to the U.S. Supreme Court.

On May 31, 1960, that court agreed with Texas' claim and upheld a congressional act affirming that ownership.

Gov. Price Daniel ordered a public holiday in celebration of the decision.

If Attorney General White wins his battle with the "feds," Gov. Clements might — although it's not likely — decide to have a holiday.

White says part of the reason for Washington's reluctance to share the money is that the Reagan administration would like to use it to balance the budget.

White feels it would be better to have the money for use in Texas, particularly with the shift of programs from the federal level to the states.

Texas, White insists, is just trying to get its "fair and equitable" share of the money it's helped create, while Washington is "still trying to take the pig's share of the thing."

So it appears that Texas and the U.S. will be writing another chapter in the offshore lands saga.

And it might be worth noting that in 1837 Texas officials wrote to Washington that the Republic "is not disposed to yield to any foreign nation the privilege of her coast, involving command of the Gulf of Mexico...."

That sentiment, obviously, isn't extinct.

Wicked words

To The Editor:

I read with increasing alarm, Page 8B of the Oct. 21 paper. I have excerpted wording from the several articles which I list below. The message is self evident!

Out of sheer awe, I scanned the remainder of the paper and found these words: flood, thieves, culprit, voodoo, pestilence, mean-spirited, misfortune, crop failures, ravages, decay, catastrophic, smuggling, head injuries, stab wounds, ailments, disease, bribery, prison, abuse, murder, slaying, fatal shot, electric-chair, victim, assault, shooting, death, imprisonment, abortion, suicide, threat, conspiracy, drugs, barbituates, relapse, amphetamines, death, marital problems, rape, convict, punishment, pornographic, misdeameanor, sick, cried, firing squad, danger, charred body, robbery, waste, problem drinker, suffering, layoffs, depression, unemployment, jobless, trauma, recession, frustrating, peptic ulcer, liars, hysteria, spastic colon, aggression, fighting, distrust, sadness, loss, attack, starved, funeral, cemetary, burial, hostile, blaze, critical condition, criminal, accident, fatal, conflict, diabetes, asthma, crisis, fear, depressed, fatigued, arthritis, pederast, deviate, molestation, nauseating, contaminating, choking, malpractice, pain, infection, damage, numbness, weakness, bleeding, cardiac arrest, measles, common cold, panic, hazards, defecit, ambush, bandits, killed, jail, guilty, penalty, fines, illegal, sentence, fires, punishment, injuries, broken arm, victims, headache, casualties, wounded, ban, violating, assailants, riot, threat, martial law, mobs, stoned, scared, protests, strikes, disputes, smashed, toiling, begging, accused, hostile, risky, bloodclots, pneumonia, epilepsy, seizure, disability, paralyzed, nerve gases, lethal, deadly, spasms, drowned, etc, etc....

Out of context, this listing reads like a "compendium of the negative." I challenge the paper to print this letter in its entirety to emphasize our "daily" preoccupation with all the negative aspects of living. Perhaps someone will attempt a rebuttal with a "compendium of the positive."

Is news bad, or is bad news?

We have feelings

To The Editor:

We were stranded on I-20 Wednesday, Oct. 14. We were loaded, and had a flat on the back of our pickup. We had three jacks. Two were faulty. The other one would only go so high, then slip off.

Three times a man would stop and offer his help, to no avail. Then after awhile, three men stopped in a winch truck. One was white, one, Mexican-American and one, black. The black said, "What is the trouble? We will help."

And help they did! There was perfect teamwork. In a very few minutes we were on our way to work. We were very grateful.

The next day we were at work in Midland. When a policeman (no doubt off duty and in a regular car), but wearing a uniform, very rudely asked who owned the pickup? When we said we did, he demanded to know where we got it. He acted very ugly. We knew he was not up on his facts. So we did our best to humor him out of respect for the uniform he was wearing.

To everyone that is reading this: Wouldn't it be wonderful, if people knew others had feelings too and treated each other like we would like to be treated? God grant each reader the patience to think even in trying circumstances! Proverbs 20:15 "The lips of knowledge are a precious jewel."

KINGSBURY-SMITH

Danger seen in Mediterranean

By JOSEPH KINGSBURY-SMITH
National Editor, The Hearst Newspapers

WASHINGTON — A serious new danger to American interests and Western security in the eastern Mediterranean looms as a result of the election victory in Greece of Andreas Papandreou's Socialist Party.

The new Greek leader, who fled to the United States as a young man after he was accused of betraying his Trotskyite comrades to the police, is considered by Western intelligence sources to be more of a Marxist-oriented, anti-democratic radical than a genuine socialist.

Long viewed as an unscrupulous political opportunist, he has a record of bitter anti-Americanism dating back at least to U.S. support of young King Constantine when the latter dismissed Papandreou's father as prime minister in 1965.

The elder Panandreou had long been an opponent of the monarchy and both he and his son were accused at the time of helping to organize a secret leftist group among young army officers.

When new elections were, about to be held in 1967, Andreas Papandreou publicly threatened that if his father's party was defeated, he, the son, and his followers would seize parliament.

It was that threat which precipitated the so-called "colonels' revolt" that led to a military dictatorship and the exile of Constantine, who had to leave the country after an unsuccessful attempt to crush the revolt and preserve democracy.

Andreas Papandreou campaigned on a platform calling for the closing down of four American military bases in Greece and pulling the country out of NATO, which it rejoined during the past year. It had withdrawn from NATO in 1974 in protest against what was considered American support for Turkey when the Turks invaded Cyprus to block a pro-Greek coup there.

Greece is the main port of call in the eastern Mediterranean for the U.S. Sixth Fleet. It is also used as an American surveillance base to track Soviet missiles. The loss of these facilities would be a serious setback for American defense efforts in the eastern Mediterranean area.

Pentagon officials doubt that Papandreou will move immediately to close the American bases or pull Greece out of NATO again. He has indicated he will seek to get the United States to sell Greece modern military equipment to strengthen its eastern borders against Turkey as the price for continuation of an American military presence in Greece.

However, Papandreou's Panhellenic Socialist Movement has, since its establishment in 1974, shown a strong inclination toward non-alignment and a revolutionary type socialism. If he succeeds in consolidating his power, Papandreou is expected to swing Greece more to the left.

A report issued by the Piraeus Young Scientists Association in Athens in 1967, when Papandreou was arrested for the second time and again fled to the U.S., described him as an "unscrupulous man" who instigated anarchy and subversive forces against democracy in Greece.

The report charged that when he was arrested at the age of 20 as a Trotskyist, he "betrayed his comrades in exchange for a passport to America."

After he first came to the U.S. in 1939, he studied at Harvard, the University of Minnesota and Stanford and later taught economy at the University of California at Berkeley. He also became an American citizen and married an American woman, the former Margaret Chant of Elmhurst, Ill. It was his third marriage. His second, according to th PYSA report, was to a communist student of Bulgarian descent.

He returned to Greece in 1959 at the invitation of then prime minister and now President Constantine Karamanlis. After his arrest at the time of the 1967 military revolt, he was allowed to leave for the U.S. He returned to Greece in 1974 when Karamanlis was called back from self-imposed exile in Paris to take over from the military. Karamanlis had promised ex-King Constantine that he would arrange for his return to the throne. Instead, Karamanlis proclaimed a republic and had himself elected president.

POSITIVE THINKING

'Practice these 'magic' principles

By NORMAN VINCENT PEALE

Is it possible to get on top of worry, depression and other negative emotions? Some have found that it is. A way that has proved successful for many is the use of twelve magic principles, magic because of the amazing way they work.

These dynamic principles were announced by psychologist Dr. Henry Knight Miller. I have passed these along to many defeated people who learned the secret of victorious living through their application. I am sure they can produce results for anyone who really tries them.

It is possible to do little more than suggest them, in the limited space of this column but even a fragmentary statement will give you the general idea. Their propoer use can help you gain freedom from those deadly destroyers, the negative emotions.

1. Think health, talk health, act health and you will go a long way toward being healthy — provided, of course, you observe the common laws of body control.

2. Be an actor, acting love instead of hate. What you act tends to become fact.

3. Shift your attention deliberately from the thing you are worrying about. The mind can only occupy itself with the object of its attention. So give attention to faith, not to worry.

4. Cultivate opposites. If fearful cultivate courage. If weak cultivate strength. If gloomy cultivate joy. Act "as if" and you tend to become that — the opposite of what you are.

5. Rationalize your worries, hates, jealousies. Put them on the dissecting table; ruthlessly take them apart. You'll find there is very little substance to them.

6. Get a sense of the perspectives of time and distance. How little our great worries seem, how unimportant our resentments, in the years after.

7. Cultivate optimism. Always look on the bright side. Keep the mouth lines up. Smile and be happy. William James claimed that we are happy because we smile rather than we smile because we are happy. In other words, the smile comes first. Well, maybe so, but it's still a fact that happiness in the heart puts a smile on the lips. If you cultivate optimism you are likely to develop a happy state of life.

8. Don't talk trouble. It only activates more of it. Talk life up, not down. Talking tends to create for it puts the immense power of thought to work. Don't practice negative autosuggestion by the use of destructive words. Always remember Emerson's warning that a word is alive. It can by repeated use either create of destroy.

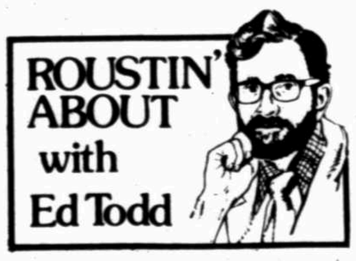
9. Develop exo-centric versus egocentric interests. Forget yourself, lose yourself in the great exciting world. One of the greatest of all laws is that he who forgets himself really finds himself. When you get outside your little constrictive self-world you grow bigger in the larger world.

10. Superimpose the positive on the negative. When a negative thought comes practice cancelling it with a positive thought and affirmation. Enough of this and you will become positive in your attitudes.

11. Practice great affirmations like: "Life is good." "I believe." "People are wonderful." "God loves me." Such affirmations lift you into the area of infinite power. Affirmations tend to reproduce in kind.

12. Assert and dwell on your Divine origin. Say to yourself every day, especially when things get dark and trouble stares you in the face, "I am a child of God." Doing this will perk you up for you will realize that whatsoever comes you have Someone watching over you and helping you.

Don't take the world serious



There's humor in trivia. And everybody's got both whether it's appreciated or not. Now, what people have too much of is inane seriousness. It's fine to be serious if you don't take yourself too seriously. Remember, you're not going to live forever in this dimension of life.

Some ol' fogeys have enough sense to disdain the sense of man.

"Forgive me of my nonsense, as I also forgive the nonsense of those who think they talk sense." That's Robert Frost's tidbit.

Bertolt Brecht tendered a ponderable proposition: "What happens to the hole when the cheese is gone?" A-plus for that one.

Ed Howe came out with a nugget that would give constitutionists and capitalists something to chew on: "American freedom consists largely in talking nonsense."

The witty Franklin P. Jones offered this observation: "The trouble with being punctual is that nobody's there to appreciate it."

Max Beerbohm imparted this advice, which is solace for the serious trivia buff: "Good sense about trivialities is better than nonsense about things that matter."

The astute (read what he says) William Pitt the Elder had the presence of mind to exhort: "Don't talk to me about a man's being able to talk sense; everyone can talk sense — can he talk nonsense?"

Thinker-philosopher Bertrand Russell found delight in nonsense: "There is so much pleasure to be gained from useless knowledge."

Alfred E. Smith, the "Happy Warrior" who lost the big race in '28 to HH, said what needs saying again and again: "No matter how thin you slice it, it's still baloney."

What Somerset Maugham wrote may be baloney but it makes sense: "People are never so ready to believe you as when you say things in dispraise of yourself; and you are never so much annoyed as when they take you at your word."

Finally, Samuel Johnson offered this encouragement for the TTB (true trivia buff): "The true, strong and sound mind is the mind that can embrace equally great things and small."

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, Oct. 25, the 298th day of 1981. There are 67 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Oct. 25, 1586, Mary, Queen of Scots was sentenced to death.

On this date:

In 1936, Germany and Italy formed the Rome-Berlin Axis.

In 1951, negotiations for a Korean War armistice resumed at Panmunjom.

In 1973, the United States ordered its military forces on world-wide precautionary alert because of overnight concern that the Soviet Union was planning to send troops to the tense Middle East.

And in 1977, the United States agreed in principle to support United Nations arms embargo against South Africa.

Ten years ago: A 76-to-35 vote of the United Nations General Assembly admitted Communist China as a U.N. member and expelled Nationalist China.

Five years ago: Fire swept through a social club in The Bronx, New York City, killing 25 people and injuring 24.

One year ago: A storm packing gale-force winds and heavy rain rolled northward along the East Coast, knocking out power to almost 200-thousand homes from New Jersey to Massachusetts.

Today's birthday: Singer Helen Reddy is 40.

Thought for today: Many waters cannot quench love, neither can the floods drown it. — The Bible.

Midland Stained Glass offers suncatcher classes

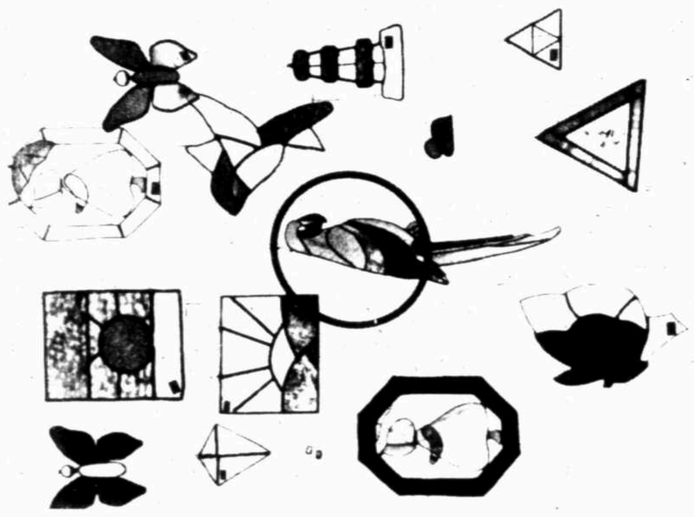
Wouldn't it be fun to make your own suncatchers, either those with a general theme such as are shown in the accompanying illustration, or styles especially designed around Christmas themes? You can, and soon! Midland Stained Glass Center, 4313-A West Illinois, is offering classes beginning the first week in November in construction of suncatchers. There will be both day and evening classes running for three weeks each, which will finish up in ample time for you to make some of these charming little accent pieces for yourself and others before Christmas. Call Valerie Lee, manager of Midland Stained Glass Center, for specific dates and times of the classes. The center's phone number is 697-0322.

Another glass-related hobby resulting in beautiful personanized gifts is glass etching. Etching classes are also being scheduled for early November and consist of 1 two-hour session each. Again, call Valerie for a specific time, either day or evening. The etching is done with a pattern or stencil and paste, giving professional results on almost any glass item at hand, and it's not nearly as difficult as the finished pieces would lead you to believe.

Midland Stained Glass Center is now open Tuesday evenings until 9:00 PM for those who may be lacking space in which to work and want to bring their projects to the center and work on them there.

The staff has begun making up glass items for sale. Custom personalized etched bowls, jewel boxes, and tree ornaments are available. Special order the see-through glass greeting card with poem or scriture and pictures, or commission a mounted wedding invitation or announcements of any kind for a friend or family member. Little treasures for sale include glass bees and butterflies to adorn plants and floral arrangements. Many of these glass things are also being prepared for the Starving Artists Show in Midland Park Mall later in November, where Midland Stained Glass Center plans to have working booth space.

The center continues to do commission work in doors, windows, mirrors, skylights, planters, lamps, etc. Glass repair is also available at Midland Stained Glass Center.



Suncatchers sparkle on the door of Midland Stained GLass Center at 4313-A West Illinois, in the Chaparral Plaza shopping center.

Autotas is a real plus

If "just an answering service" won't do for your firm's business image, contact Communications Plus, the professional answering service, at 684-7891. Formerly Cross Answering Service, Communications Plus is owned by Guy and Laverne Saunders. The Saunders have recently converted their equipment to the Bell System Autotas, newest answering service equipment to be developed in the past 40 years. Autotas is a real plus! It features automatic call distribution, assuring a customer of no more then a fifteen second wait if put on hold. Calls can be answered on any type of variable ring count to suit the customer's needs - calls being picked up after one, two, or three rings, and this can be altered hourly, daily or however necessary.

The Autotas system allows growing room to accomodate new customers at any time. There are no mileage charges to the exchange, no concentrator charges, no extra charges at all.

More than just an answering service, Communications Plus is an information center, passing facts and data from one hand to another. U.S. Navy is beginning biggest expansion since World War II

LONDON (AP) — The U.S. Navy is about to begin its biggest expansion since World War II in an effort to reverse a 12-year decline that has put it in a position where it can "barely respond" to international commitments, naval historian Samuel Morison writes in a new book.

"The expansion the Reagan Administration is talking about consists almost entirely of new ships and will result in a 600-ship Navy as a minimum. However, plans to increase the Navy to a 700-ship force within 15 years are seriously being considered," Morison wrote in an article in the authoritative Jane's 1981-82 Naval Annual, published Thursday.

He added that expansions to 1,139 ships during the Korean War and to 974 ships during the Vietnam War were almost entirely the result of reactivating reserve-fleet ships.

The American naval commander in Europe supported Morison's observations in another article in the book, claiming the U.S. Navy is overextended.

"It is half the size it was 10 years ago, yet it is being asked to cover twice the ocean area," Ronald J. Hays, U.S. commander-in-chief of Naval Forces Europe, wrote. "I am optimistic about the renewed will in the U.S. for a stronger, superior Navy."

Capt. John Moore, a retired British naval officer who edits Jane's Fighting Ships as well as the Naval Annual, wrote that the Soviet navy also has problems.

"Soviet manpower problems... must be of prime importance as the bigger ships with increased complements leave the building yards," he wrote. "Will the increasing proportion of less educated Asiatics reach the standard needed to operate these impressively complex ships?"

Jane's reference books, published annually, provide details about ships, planes, weapons and other related subjects on a country-by-country basis. They are widely studied by government defense departments, intelligence services and military analysts around the world.

Phillips Petroleum Co. is developing type of yeast as a food source

BARTLESVILLE, Okla. (AP) — The Phillips Petroleum Co. is developing a type of yeast as a food source and says a factory making the stuff could yield as much protein annually as beef fed on 1 million acres.

Company officials said Thursday the yeast can be produced much faster than meat and could help alleviate world food shortages. It is about 60 percent protein, compared with 35 percent or less in fish, meat and cheese. Tests of the product being done at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology are expected to be finished by the year's end.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Some surgery helps neurofibromatosis

Dear Dr. Solomon: I saw the play "The Elephant Man," and learned from your column about the disease, neurofibromatosis. Is there any treatment for this disease? — Mr. C.T., Milton, Pa.

Dear Mr. C.T.: Surgical removal of brain and spinal cord tumors is possible. Skin lesions may be removed for cosmetic reasons but may re-appear.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have always been close to one particular uncle. Lately he seems to be going downhill. Although he is only 60 years old, his mind is not as clear as it used to be, he is depressed, and he complains of a whole assortment of aches and pains. Would you recommend that I take him to see a psychiatrist? — Kim, St. Louis, Mo.

Dear Kim: Your uncle may or may not need psychiatric treatment, but the first order of business would seem to be a thorough physical examination. You appear to assume that the aches and pains he complains about are "all in his head;" it is well to remember, however, that even emotionally disturbed patients are subject to physical illnesses — one does not give immunity to the other. In some patients, in fact, the physical illness may contribute to the emotional disturbance.

If you really feel close to this uncle, arrange to have him see a doctor for a complete workup. You and the doctor will then be in a position to determine whether a referral to a psychiatrist is indicated.

Dear Dr. Solomon: The newspapers have had a number of articles lately dealing with the use of marijuana to control the nausea suffered by cancer patients. What I'm wondering is whether a person can't be trained to tolerate the treatments, something like biofeedback. Do you know whether this has ever been tried? — Shirley, New York, N.Y.

Dear Shirley: Something similar to what you suggest is being studied at the Duke University Medical Center. Some of the cancer patients there are being taught a procedure called progressive muscle relaxation; it involves some of the features of meditation and hypnosis. As the name implies, the goal is to try to reduce the nausea associated with chemotherapy by helping the patient learn to relax.

It has been reported that in some extreme cases, cancer patients have insisted on stopping chemotherapy because they felt the cure was worse than the disease. Some of these patients can be helped to avoid nausea through the use of medication. Moreover, the national Cancer Institute now makes THC, the active ingredient in marijuana, available for this purpose. However, some patients are not helped either by drugs or THC, and this, in turn, creates additional problems of poor nutrition and weight loss.

It is obvious that cancer patients, whether or not they suffer from nausea, are under a great deal of stress. If the technique of progressive muscle relaxation proves successful, at least some of their anxiety may be relieved, and they may be better prepared to tolerate treatment.

(If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.)

CONSUMER TIPS

Promoters sometimes take cut of charitable contributions

By LINDA TRUITT
Better Business Bureau of the Permian Basin, Inc.

Vacations are over. Everyone is back into a familiar routine of going to work or to school. Local civic and charitable organizations are taking advantage of this fact by sponsoring fund-raising events with the hopes of obtaining money for their various projects. While a few organizations use only volunteers to raise the needed funds, many use professional promoters who pocket a majority of each donation.

Professional promoters approach civic groups with offers of high-powered fund-raising assistance in exchange for a certain percentage of the proceeds. The offer is appealing because the members usually do not have to participate; the promoter handles all aspects of the fund-raising event. To receive the needed funds the organization only has to lend its name.

Carnivals, circuses, movies for children and gospel concerts are the usual fund-raising events handled by professional promoters. To solicit funds, the promoter will set up a bank of phones called boiler rooms. Businesses are then persuaded to purchase a block of tickets that supposedly will be given to needy children who cannot afford to attend.

When the telephone calls are made, the name of the organization is used in hopes of sparking an interest in donating. Businesses and individuals often assume that the majority of the donation will go to the worthy projects supported by the organization. In reality, the contract that is signed by both parties states the promoter will receive 70 to 90 percent of the total money that is collected. For each dollar that is given, the organization will only receive 10 to 30 cents.

It has been the experience of the Better Business Bureau that promoters who work on a commission basis, instead of a flat fee, sometimes make exaggerated or misleading claims about the organization's programs and achievements in an effort to increase contributions.

Percentage based fund-raising also can, and sometimes does, result in misrepresentations about the portion of funds going to the charitable group, and in harassing solicitation methods.

To keep your money from going into the wrong pockets ask the following questions when asked to donate:

—Is the caller a volunteer or employee of the charitable group, or a paid solicitor?

—Is the solicitor paid a percentage of the funds raised, or a commission on each sale rather than a flat fee?

—How much of the money raised will go to the charitable group? How much to the promoter or fund-raising firm?

Legitimate groups will be glad to answer your questions, so don't hesitate to ask. Unscrupulous solicitors, though, will be anxious to cut you off and get on to the next prospect. If you have unanswered questions about a telephone or door-to-door solicitation, get it in writing and then call your Better Business Bureau at 563-1880.

RINGING THE BELL

Aimless activites of youth feared

With BOB TIEUEL

Dear Bob: "In recent months, newspapers across the continent of Europe reported a growing army of aimless, often inarticulate and unemployable youth are spreading nihilistic revolt. They do not know what they want except self-gratification. 'Self Not Society' proclaim their protest posters. They drift casually from riot to riot.

"It is time we faced reality. Something is horribly wrong in cultures that produce purposeless, hopeless youth. These 'future people' (as they are known in West Germany) take over empty buildings, smoke marijuana and sally forth into violent street battles with police. National Occidental and Oriental report this alarming increase in crime and violence.

"The chief cause of criminal behavior is not poverty. Criminal problems now plague rural and well-to-do suburban areas as well as inner-city ghettos. Ghettos merely concentrate and aggravate the social conditions that encourage criminal behavior.

"Many blame lack of police, the easy availability of guns, the overburdened and crippled criminal justice system, or drug abuse, underemployment, violent entertainment or poverty. These situations contribute to the crime problem, but they are not the fundamental cause. The cause of crime is the lack of right character. The roots of juvenile crime develop when children — rich, poor or middle class — are allowed to think criminal thoughts or develop unsocial or criminal attitudes in their character.

"Vicious criminal behavior is mostly concentrated in inner-city ghettos of the United States and other nations of the world where the family structure is most greatly fragmented. There must be a new emphasis on rebuilding the home and family life if we are to solve the crime problem and not in jails or schools." D. D. Schroeder.

AIRCRAFT OWNERSHIP

There are may advantages to aircraft ownership which have developed over the last few months. Now is the best time of the year to capitalize on these advantages. Consider the following:

TAX SAVINGS
Have you sheltered your taxable income for 1981? President Reagan's 1981 Economic Recovery Tax Act has provided for liberalized Investment Tax Credit treatment and 100% depreciation with the Accelerated Cost Recovery System. This new system enables taxpayer to recover the full cost of the asset over a 5 year period. Cash flow requirements of aircraft ownership will be reduced substantially by these two changes in tax laws.

LEASEBACKS
Leaseback arrangements are available (on a limited basis) to help aircraft owners more fully utilize their aircraft through Basin Aviation's Charter and Air Ambulance Service, leaseback arrangements help further eliminate cash flow requirements of aircraft ownership.

AIRLINE SCHEDULING AND CONVENIENCE
Airline delays and inconveniences due to the Controllers strike have been minimal to date but will intensify with the Holiday Season and winter weather months TO COME. Also, flights to many hard to reach areas have been curtailed or totally eliminated.
Private ownership can help eliminate these problems by allowing you to set your own schedule and your own destinations.

FINANCING
Cessna Finance Corp. has special below prime financing available through December 31st. Interest rates running from 12.5% to 16.0%. Annual Percentage Rate depending on term and amount of down payment.

Below is a listing of aircraft we have for sale.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Figuring taxes on Treasury bills

By BILL DOYLE

Q. If we buy a 26-week U.S. Treasury bill now, it will mature in 1982. Will the gain on the T bill all be taxable in 1982? Or do we report part of that gain on our 1981 income tax return and part on our 1982 return?

A. You report it all on your 1982 federal income tax return—the one you will be required to file by April 15, 1983. But you won't have a "gain." You'll have interest income.

T bills are "discount securities." You buy a T bill at one price — a "discount" below face value — and redeem it at full ace value when it matures. The difference between the two prices is interest.

You pay federal income tax on that interest for the year in which the T bill matures. You don't, however, pay state and local income taxes on T bills or any other debt securities issued by the federal government — U.S. Savings Bonds and such.

Q. On July 31, I went to my bank and put $10,000 in a 182-day savings certificate. I asked to have the interest held until the certificate matures in January 1982. This would be to my advantage for tax purposes.

I was told the interest would have to be credited to my bank account either monthly or quarterly. Why can't the interest be paid in a lump sum when the certificate matures?

A. It can be. There's something strange here. Either your bank has odd ruls or you misunderstood what you were told. Most banks give customers with 182-day certificates the choice of either having the interest available monthly or getting it when the certificates mature.

Many banks are pushing the second choice. That way, you would not receive any taxable income from the certificate in 1981. All the interest would be taxable as 1982 income. Because federal income tax rates will drop next year, that's a big plus and undoubtedly the "advantage" you mention.

My suggestion is that you go back to the bank and ask some more qustions. It's also to the bank's advantage to hold on to your interest until the certificate matures.

Q. Recently, I transferred $10,000 from my savings account to a 182-day savings certificate at my local bank. But this bank pays only 12.3 percent interest on 182-day certificates. I see where other banks pay more than 16 percent.

Why does this bank not pay the high rate? Should I take the $10,000 out, after the certificate matures, and move it to another bank?

A. The answer to your first question is that each bank can decide what interest rate it pays on 182-day certificates, up to a limit. Federal regulators set the maximum rate all banks are allowed to pay on those certificates. But individual banks can pay less.

In these days of hot competition for savers' dollars, most banks pay the maximum interest ate allowed on 182-day certificates. Some, however, pay lower rates.

Your second questions answers itself.

Registration of securities sets record

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Registration of securities in Texas continues at a record pace, while municipal bonds continue struggling, although their situation has improved somewhat in recent weeks, officials here report.

Securities registered for public sale in Texas during the last fiscal year set another record — exceeding $28 billion, with over $12 billion of that representing money market funds, Securities Commissioner Richard D. Latham reports.

Even more impressive is the fact that the new offerings exceeded the record set in fiscal 1980 by more than $11 billion.

Latham reports that strong showing is continuing in fiscal 1982, with money market funds "coming in strong" still, and with sales of other types of offerings "also up tremendously."

The State Securities Board continues keeping a watchful eye on some problem areas, with a "substantial portion" of its new enforcement actions involving oil and gas offerings.

Latham says a "disproportionately large number of complaints on such securities have been received from the Dallas-Fort Worth area.

Those complaints, he says, have involved a promoter raising "expectations exceeding his ability to deliver," regarding the probability of finding oil and gas, or what would happen if no oil or gas should be found — and some cases of outright fraud, where the promoter never intended to meet his obligations.

While the Securities Board's activity has been increasing, the agency (which is up for review by the Sunset Advisory Commission) has come under a renewed effort to limit its authority over new issues.

The Board has agreed to publish a proposed rule to exempt from the merit regulations standard firmly underwritten issues of common stock if they are sold by a registered securities dealer and have a price of $5 per share or more.

A firmly-underwritten issue is an issue purchased by an underwriter, who then owns the stock, whether or not he or she can sell it to an investor.

That proposed change was drafted by a State Bar committee — which also has voted to proceed with drafting amendments to the Texas Securities Act for consideration by the 1983 Legislature.

Those proposals apparently would remove the merit regulation standard from the act, a change which would substantially lessen the board's control over securities issues.

Texas has been regarded as one of the tougher states for merit regulation of securities, and a similar effort to modify the board's control was made in 1969.

Danny Burger, Municipal Advisory Council of Texas, reports that "we're seeing improvement" in the municipal bond market — "at least it's more favorable than a month or six weeks ago."

On Sept. 10, the average interest rate for 20 general obligation bonds hit an all-time high of 13.21 percent, Burger notes, whereas the average had dropped to 12.53 percent by Oct. 15.

"It's kind of like having a 23-story building and taking off the top two floors — it's still pretty high," Burger admits.

Issues from Texas have not been immune to the market conditions, he comments, but most issuers have been able to place their offerings — even though it has been at higher interest rates.

Part of that ability is due to a change made by the 1981 Legislature, allowing up to 15 percent interest on most types of municipal issues.

"We were looking at quite a bit of financing that was in trouble," Burger comments, but the 15 percent limit seems to have solved that problem — although we worried for a while whether 15 percent would be enough."

Burger says he has a "better feeling" about the bond market for the future, but doesn't see a return to the long-term, low-interest bonds of a few years ago.

"Hopefully, this is the turn," he says of current conditions. "At least we don't have that absolutely chaotic market we did for a while."

The long-term outlook depends "on Reagan economics," he feels, including the question of how much financing the Federal government must do of its own debt.

There also has been "a lot of delayed financing," Burger comments, and it's uncertain how many of those issues will be coming into the market.

Some analysts are predicting that interest rates for municipal issues will go even higher in the future than in the past, Burger notes.

Another factor in the market may be investor reluctance, he adds — noting that "since so many investors have been hurt by buying long-term, buyers may be reluctant to buy long-term bonds...whatever the interest rate."

Variable rates may be the answer on that, he adds — but that change isn't likely to catch on in the immediate future.
