OC president relates tale of woe involving derivatives investments

By Ron Hutcheson
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — In the early 1990s, Odessa College seemed to have hit the jackpot with a new type of financial investment. Then the bottom fell out.

Almost overnight, holdings that had cost the school $22 million plummeted in value to about $10 million, sending the West Texas junior college to the edge of financial ruin. Budgets were slashed, careers were cut short and students were forced to study in sweltering classrooms to hold down air-conditioning bills.

The riches-to-rags story in the Texas oil patch has made Odessa College a compelling poster child for advocates of tighter regulation over derivatives, the high-risk financial instrument that led to the school's undoing.

Swiss sift grisly scene

48 die in apparent mass murder-suicide by cult

■ Quebec fire kills two who were believed to be members of sect in Switzerland.

Associated Press

CHEIRY, Switzerland — Twenty-one bodies made a neat circle on the floor of a red, mirror-lined chapel hidden beneath the burning farmhouse.

Some were dressed in red, black and white ceremonial robes. Ten had plastic garbage bags tied around their necks with cords, and some had their hands bound. Twenty had bullets in their heads.

In three ski chalets 90 miles away, police discovered more bodies, badly burned by fires apparently set by remote control.

In all, authorities found 48 bodies on Wednesday, and indications of a mass murder-suicide by a cult they hadn't known existed. The scenes were reminiscent of last year's fiery standoff between U.S. federal agents and Branch Davidian cult members near Waco, in which more than 85 people died.

Clues led to Canada, where two bodies were found on Tuesday in the charred wreckage of an unexplained arson fire. Police said the owner of the burned duplex, Luc Jouret, led apocalyptic cults in both Canada and Switzerland and had rented one of the ski chalets where the bodies were found.

Investigators said the fires in both countries were set off by remote-controlled electrical devices triggered by a timer or a telephone call.

Officials said the Swiss cult was called the Order of the Solar Tradition, a group that draws on Roman Catholicism and predicts the end of the world. In Morin Heights, Quebec, it was called Order of the Solar Temple.

Jouret represents "an occult tradition with strong apocalyptic elements," said Johannes Aagaard, head of a European cult-monitoring organization

Bodies lengthen list of doomsday-sect casualties

By Beth Duff-Brown
Associated Press

NEW YORK — The 48 charred bodies in Switzerland are the latest additions to the grisly list of people who have died in doomsday cults whose leaders often promise to take them to "the other side."

There were the Jonestown, Guyana, deaths of more than 900 followers of the Rev. Jim Jones in 1978. Then the Branch Davidian standoff with the federal government last year that resulted in the deaths of about 85 followers of David Koresh in Waco, Texas.

On Wednesday, investigators in Cheiry, Switzerland, discovered bodies of 48 members of a religious sect called Cross and Rose in a concealed underground chapel and other buildings after apparently committing mass suicide.

"It's the largest number (of cult deaths) of its kind that I know of since Koresh and I think it points out that ... destructive cults are a growing problem in Europe," said Cynthia Kisser, director of the Cult Awareness Network in Chicago.

"In times of uncertainty or in the face of challenges to very traditional ways of life, people will seek ways to find

Jury convicts abortion protester of violating clinic law in killings

Associated Press

PENSACOLA, Fla. — A former minister was convicted Wednesday of violating the nation's new abortion clinic access law for a shotgun attack that killed an abortion doctor and his bodyguard.

Paul Hill showed no emotion as the verdict was read, but after the jury left the courtroom he smiled broadly and shook hands with his two standby attorneys. He could get life in prison sentenced Dec. 9.

A federal jury deliberated just over two hours before finding Hill guilty of three counts of violating the new law and one separate firearms charge. He was the first person tried under the law adopted earlier this year.

He also is awaiting trial in state court Jan. 30 on murder and attempted murder charges that

Southwestern Bell tosses line to homes without telephones

Having to run down the street to use a telephone during an emergency can cost vital time needed for police, ambulance or fire personnel to do their job.

Southwestern Bell Telephone hopes to reduce that possibility through a program aimed at bringing telephone service to low-income families by providing discount services.

"Most of us and our families take for granted the telephone . . . when we have an emergency," said Linda Basham, external affair manager for Southwestern Bell Telephone.

Work to tie Wadley Avenue traffic

By Katherine Poteet

The continuing construction on underground lines to a new hospital on Andrews Highway will tie up several blocks of traffic on Wadley Avenue during the next three weeks.

Midland police Sgt. Brian Bogart said construction will take place from Godfrey Street west to Greenbriar Drive. Eastbound traffic on Wadley Avenue will be reduced to one lane. Westbound traffic will not be affected.

The construction on Wadley is part of a 150-day project that will continue down Greenbriar Drive to McDonald Street through Neely Avenue to Andrews Highway.

"Construction on Wadley should take about three weeks, then it will start down the residential streets," Bogart said. "The next big traffic

Serbs push out dozens of Muslims, agree to reopen airport in Sarajevo

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — Bosnian Serbs on Wednesday pushed dozens of Muslims out of Serb territory into Sarajevo and denied the capital badly needed food supplies.

The capital has relied on the U.N. airlift, suspended two weeks ago, for about 80 percent of its food and other needs. But late Wednesday, the chief U.N. representative for the former Yugoslavia, Yasushi Akashi, said Bosnian Serbs agreed unconditionally to allow the airport to reopen Thursday.

The refugees, most of them women, children and the elderly, were expelled from the area around Rogatica, about 30 miles east of Sarajevo.

The expulsions temporarily disrupted an exchange of war prisoners. Bosnia's Muslim-led government initially said it was halting the swap. Later, groups of POWs, including civilians, were assembled for the exchange.

About 120 Muslims crossed the Brotherhood and Unity Bridge from the Serb to the government side of Sarajevo. Most appeared to have been rounded up during the night and were not on agreed-to lists of prisoners.

"This is not a prisoner's exchange. This is pure expulsion," said Amor Masic, head of the government exchange commission.

The Bosnian Serbs are trying to expel all non-Serbs from the 70 percent of Bosnia they control. Thousands of Muslims have been expelled from Serb-held areas in northern and central Bosnia in recent weeks.

The agreement to reopen the airport was reached after hours of negotiations between Bosnian Serb leaders and Akashi, who went to the talks armed with a NATO threat of expanded air power against the Bosnian Serbs.

NATO diplomats meeting in Brussels, Belgium, approved measures Wednesday for more aggressive use of air strikes against the Bosnian Serbs, as the U.N. permits.

"They seem to be extremely unhappy with NATO's strong stand," Akashi said.

Sarajevo airport has been closed because of veiled Serb threats to shoot at planes following a NATO air strike on a Serb tank Sept. 22 in retaliation for Serb assaults on French peacekeepers.

The Serbs had reportedly demanded the airport, handed over to the U.N. in July 1992, be put under joint U.N.-Serb control. Akashi dismissed the idea.

The city bakery has enough flour only until week's end, and food stocks can last only a few days longer, said Kris Janowski, a U.N. aid spokesman.

Akashi also said the Serbs were not holding their promise of Saturday for free movement for all U.N. truck convoys. Akashi said he had received new assurances, but added, "we have to test it on the ground."

Days in power slipping away, Haitian army strongman weeps at burial

By Anita Snow
Associated Press

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti — His days in power slipping away, Haiti's military strongman wept Wednesday at a funeral service for 10 of his men killed in a shootout with U.S. Marines.

Even as Lt. Gen. Raoul Cedras sat ramrod straight at the service, staring at the caskets draped with the red-and-blue Haitian flag, Haitians speculated on his imminent departure, along with that of fellow coup leader Philippe Biamby and the military-installed government of Emile Jonassaint.

Another leader of the September 1991 military coup, Lt. Col. Michel Francois, skipped town Tuesday for a new life in the neighboring Dominican Republic.

The army Wednesday named Col. Jodel Lesage as Francois' replacement.

The de facto leaders have until Oct. 15 to quit power under a U.S.-Haitian agreement being enforced by 20,000 American troops, including U.S. soldiers surrounding the white-domed Presidential Palace and Cedras' two-story headquarters across the street.

Cedras has vowed to remain in Haiti but under terms of the agreement worked out with former President Carter, he and Biamby will resign after elected President Jean-Bertrand Aristide returns to power next week.

As for the provisional president, U.S. Embassy spokesman Stanley Schrager said: "We have no word on what Jonassaint's plans are. ... It's clear he cannot continue to occupy the palace."

U.S. military authorities declared the Port-au-Prince international airport available to commercial traffic, and some airlines said regularly scheduled service could resume next week.

President Clinton on Monday lifted most U.S. economic sanctions against Haiti, including a ban on commercial flights. Air cargo service to Haiti was banned under a U.N. trade embargo that took effect May 21. The U.N. embargo won't be lifted officially until Aristide returns, probably on Oct. 15.

■ HAITI UPDATE: Call Cityline, 560-2400, enter 6201

Haitians, meanwhile, helped U.S. soldiers track down army-allied gunmen who had terrorized neighborhoods since the coup ousted Aristide from the presidency only seven months after Haiti's first freely democratic election.

The gunman, known here as an attache, was forced to face his victims Wednesday without his weapons. After Samuel Chery was detained by the U.S. soldiers and led away from a poor neighborhood in suburban Petionville, his victims vandalized his house and burned his motorcycle.

Aristide supporters also took control of a police-band radio, yelling political slogans to already demoralized police: "Where is your father (Francois) now?"

Since the ouster of Aristide, a Roman Catholic priest, Haitian soldiers had beaten and humiliated Aristide supporters by saying: "Where is your Father now?"

One employee of the Francois-controlled state telephone company fatally shot himself Wednesday, saying in a note that Francois' departure left him with no choice but to commit suicide.

At the funeral Cedras had to face his fellow soldiers, many of them suspicious that he would sell them out. He was in an audience of 300, some of them soldiers' relatives so carried away by grief that they had to be physically removed.

Cedras repeatedly buried his face in his hand during the service. Brig. Gen. Biamby stared straight ahead. Jonassaint clasped his hands together tightly and looked disturbed as the soldiers' relatives wailed in grief.

Col. Carl Dorelien, chief of army personnel, called for reconciliation and forgiveness to those who gathered for the funeral in the courtyard of the capital's military hospital.

The simple gray caskets were lined next to the stage where two Roman Catholic priests officiated.

Today to be partly cloudy, 80

Staff Report

Today's forecast calls for partly cloudy with a less than 20 percent chance of rain, a high between 80-85 and southwest to west winds at 15-25 mph. Tonight should be partly cloudy with a low in the mid-50s, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Friday should be partly cloudy with a high in the mid-70s.

After an overnight low of 65, Wednesday's high reached 89, compared to the record high for that date of 98 set in 1937. The record low was 41 set in 1932.

STATE

Mild temperatures and mostly clear to partly cloudy skies continued Wednesday across most of Texas in advance of a cool front that was expected to bring showers and thunderstorms.

A high pressure system kept high temperatures mostly in the mid-80s, with extremes ranging from 74 degrees at Dalhart to 92 at Waco and 95 at Wink.

Increasing cloudiness developed from the weather system moving in from the west, with winds gusting to 61 mph at Guadalupe Pass.

Widely scattered showers and thunderstorms were already moving over the Texas Panhandle and northern South Plains late Wednesday afternoon.

Winds elsewhere in the state were southeasterly to southwesterly at 10-25 mph, with occasional gusts to around 35 mph in the Permian Basin, South Plains and Panhandle.

Increasing cloudiness with a chance of thunderstorms, some severe in the South Plains and Panhandle, was forecast through today.

NATION

Snow and rain blew through the mountains of the West on Wednesday as a big low pressure system pushed eastward, and air circulating around the low drew thunderstorms across parts of the Plains.

Thunderstorms spread across parts of Utah during the morning, producing severe weather around the Salt Lake City area.

Utah Power reported electrical outages over a wide area. Water pooling along sections of the valley's freeways slowed traffic during the morning rush, but no serious accidents were reported.

Snow fell at higher elevations and hail the diameter of half-dollars fell at Salt Lake City's airport, with one-inch diameter hail at Cottonwood Heights.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

WOE: OC chief, others testify before panel

(From 1A)

Similar horror stories of multimillion-dollar losses in at least three dozen other private and public investment funds this year prompted the House Banking Committee to hold a hearing Wednesday on the possibility of a regulatory crackdown.

"We were in shock," Odessa College president Philip Speegle told lawmakers in presenting his tale of woe. "Yes, we should have known better. But nobody significantly understood the kind of risk that we were involved in."

Texas State Auditor Lawrence Alwin, who also appeared before the panel, assured House members that Odessa College's investment errors are not standard practice. Alwin, who launched a review of 209 state-supported schools and agencies in the wake of the Odessa collapse, said he has found little evidence of similar problems at other institutions.

Financial specialists at Tarrant County colleges and universities said they have shied away from derivatives and have not suffered major losses.

"We haven't purchased any directly. We've just always had a conservative investment policy," said Joe Ed Spencer, vice chancellor for business affairs at Tarrant County Junior College.

Officials from Texas Christian University and the University of Texas System, which handles investments for UT-Arlington, offered similar assessments of their portfolios.

Odessa College began its foray into the high-rolling derivatives market in 1990, at a time when most savvy investors were seeking alternatives to the poor return on certificates of deposit and other, more traditional investments.

Derivatives, which can offer spectacular returns, are anything but traditional.

While stock and most other investment instruments are linked to a tangible asset, the value of derivatives is tied to some agreed upon index. Some rise and fall on such obscure yardsticks as the relationship between the Swiss franc and the U.S. dollar.

Others derive their value from fluctuations in markets for stocks, bonds, commodities or home mortgages.

To critics, derivatives are the junk bonds of the 1990s, a high-risk game that is sure to end in financial disaster for unsuspecting investors. One skeptic likened derivatives to betting on how many clouds will be in the sky on a given day.

"It's a monstrously global-sized electronic Ponzi scheme," said Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez, chairman of the House banking panel. "Gambling, that's all it is."

Gonzalez and other advocates of more stringent regulation of the derivatives market contend that the trading frenzy has the potential to become the next savings and loan scandal as burned investors turn to Congress for relief.

The investment industry and its congressional allies counter stories of huge losses by noting that thousands of investors have profited from their involvement with derivatives. Many investment firms use low-risk derivatives to hedge against losses in other instruments.

"It's simply not possible to legislate away risk-taking," said Lewis Teel, who oversees Bank of America's derivatives trading. "It is part of the system that we live in, the entrepreneurial, capitalist system."

But Teel agreed with congressional critics that derivatives are far more complicated than most traditional investments.

When one member of Congress asked the investment banker to explain a certain type of derivative in simple terms, Teel replied, "That's a real challenge. It's been a challenge for me, and I've spent a lot of time on it."

He dodged a direct response by suggesting that he get back to the lawmaker with a written answer.

Alwin, the Texas auditor, stressed that not all derivatives are high-risk. In his view, Odessa College got into trouble by placing its entire investment portfolio in derivatives that were tied to the home mortgage market.

As mortgage interest rates increased, the school's holdings dropped. The college avoided bankruptcy by obtaining a loan and slashing overhead costs. Deep budget cuts earlier this year prompted nearly two dozen faculty and staff to take early retirement.

Alwin, who plans to complete his statewide audit late this month, said that he has found 15 agencies or state-supported schools that have significant investments in derivatives.

Although several Texas institutions have suffered "substantial declines" in the value of their derivatives, Alwin said most of the losses were at least partially offset by returns on more traditional investments. The auditor declined to name any of the agencies in question.

Alwin said the state's largest investors, including the State Treasurer's Office, have substantial derivative holdings, but have put most of the money into relatively low-risk versions.

"Our most important finding should provide reassurance to Texas citizens," he said. "On the whole, Texas agencies and institutions are prudently managing their investment portfolios."

As for Odessa College, Speegle, who gave up his $122,458 salary in the wake of the financial scandal, expressed confidence that the school will survive — "leaner and certainly wiser."

CONVICTS: Jury finds abortion protester guilty could get him the electric chair.

Hill, who acted as his own attorney, has said murder is justifiable if it stops abortions, but the judge barred him from presenting that defense at his federal trial.

His brief closing argument was almost identical to his opening statement: "This government is unjust because it does not protect innocent life. To the extent we take part in this evil, we must answer to God. May God help us all."

During his three-day trial he called no witnesses, cross-examined none of the prosecution's witnesses and presented no evidence.

Donna Bray, director of Defenders of the Defenders of Life, which has raised money for Hill, said she wasn't surprised by the outcome.

"The U.S. government protects the murder of unborn children," she said.

Eleanor Smeal, president of the Feminist Majority Foundation, which trains abortion clinic escorts, said from Arlington, Va., that she hoped the verdict would send "a very clear message that this extreme terrorist activity in the name of religion will not be tolerated."

Witnesses testified that Hill, 40, ambushed Dr. John B. Britton, James H. Barrett and Barrett's wife, June, with a 12-gauge shotgun as the three arrived July 29 at a Pensacola abortion clinic. Britton and Barrett were killed and Mrs. Barrett was wounded.

Mrs. Barrett declined to comment after the verdict. Her stepson, Bruce, said the decision showed the "system my dad spent his entire life protecting and his wife, June, spent her entire life protecting, is working for them now."

Earlier Wednesday, Mrs. Barrett testified that Hill stood in the parking lot of the clinic waving a pamphlet as she, her husband and the doctor arrived in a pickup. Hill moved to one side, then approached the parked truck, holding something, she said.

"I didn't identify it as a gun," she testified. "I said, 'Paul is pretending he is going to shoot us like kids do.'"

LINE: Program offers discount phone services

(From 1A)

County, there are another 4,600. And Texas leads the nation with half a million, or 8 percent, of homes without phones.

"We are promoting it (the program) this month to see if we can bring down that half-million without service," said Laura Melendez, service representative for Southwestern Bell's Lifeline Discount Telephone Service.

Telephone officials, along with fire and police representatives from Midland and Odessa, publicized the program at a news conference at an Odessa Fire Station on Wednesday.

To help get the word out locally, an aggressive campaign will include posters, tear-off flyers, radio and television public service announcements, and getting information into homes via school children.

In addition, the Hispanic Association of Communication Employees, Permian Basin Chapter, will begin a door-to-door campaign and organize community events to publicize the program.

To be eligible for the program, residents must have a household income at or below the federal poverty level, and receive social service benefits such as Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC), Food Stamps, Home Energy Assistance Program (HEAP), Medical Assistance Program (MAP), Supplemental Security Income (SSI) or Women, Infants and Children (WIC).

Those accepted into the program will get $7 off their monthly basic telephone charge and receive a 50 percent discount on installation fees.

People who have a telephone already but qualify for the program can also be granted the discounts.

With the monthly charge discount, low-income families would pay $5.60 for basic service in Midland and $5.30 for basic service in Odessa. With the reduced installation rate, the basic installation charge would be $26.90, which can be divided into four payments. Those without telephone lines in the home would be charged an additional $99 for the service.

The lifeline service has been in existence four years. Southwestern Bell officials did not have figures on how many local households currently participate in the program.

For information about the Lifeline Discount Telephone Service, call toll-free 1-800-244-5993.

based in Aarhus, Denmark. "He expects doomsday to be coming soon."

Jouret, who is Belgian, was believed to have fled to Switzerland last year after being charged with weapons possession and conspiracy in Canada. Police said they did not know if he was among the people found dead Wednesday.

Authorities were not ruling out the possibility that some of the victims were executed, investigating judge Andre Piller said.

"We are still reeling from what we found," he said after inspecting the underground chapel. "When we first walked in it looked a wax museum. The bodies were lying in a circle with their heads outward."

On the wall of the chapel was a picture of long-haired, bearded man with a cape and a rose.

A cassette tape attached to the door of the chapel explained some of the group's spiritual beliefs, Piller said, but gave no reason for the killings.

Police said they also found literature referring to a sect called the Cross and Rose, believed to be an offshoot of the same group.

The farmhouse, perched on a wooded hill over the village of Cheiry, 45 miles northeast of Geneva, was sealed off from reporters.

The bodies of 23 people, including a 10-year-old boy, were found at the farm. In addition to the 21 people found in the chapel, the body of Albert Giacobino, 70, was found in an adjoining house and another body was found in the farmhouse kitchen.

Villagers considered Giacobino the farm's owner, but the property was listed in the name of "The Agricultural Research Firm of Cheiry," whose ownership was unclear.

It also was not clear whether Giacobino had anything to do with the cult. No other victims were immediately identified.

Authorities said most of the victims were Swiss, French or Canadian. The bodies were taken to Lausanne for autopsies, and results would not be announced for several days, Piller said.

Villagers said they had no idea the sect existed.

Twenty-five bodies, including several children lying next to each other, were found in three chalets in a ski area at Granges-sur-Salvan in Valais canton, about 45 miles southeast of Geneva.

Police said they found 15 bodies at one chalet and two at another. Later in the morning, they found eight more bodies in a third chalet, which was destroyed by fire. Police called off the search of the third chalet late Wednesday, fearing the structure would collapse.

Valais police spokesman Carlo Kuonen told Swiss radio there was no sign of force or violence at the chalets.

"Apparently they were somehow put to sleep," he said.

Police in Canada said the bodies found there Tuesday in a rural area outside Montreal had not yet been identified.

Const. Michel Brunet of the Quebec provincial police said the man and woman were wearing medallions engraved with double-headed eagles and Latin inscriptions invoking the fabled Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse.

problem we'll have is when construction gets to Neely Avenue. But, that could be two to three months away."

Bogart suggested that residents taking alternate routes, such as Neely Avenue or Andrews Highway during the next several weeks to avoid heavy traffic congestion.

"In the mornings, that is three solid lanes of traffic on Wadley," he said. "Now, with it reduced to one lane, it will be impossible unless people start taking alternate routes."

He also advised leaving early for work or school and slowing down in the construction area.

"Slow down, watch for signs and for flagmen," he said. "That area is also the beginning of a school zone, so residents should be extra careful."

Bogart said no major accidents occurred on Andrews Highway and at Midkiff Road and Andrews Highway, the two previous sites of construction.

"We issued a lot of citations for motorists cutting across private property to avoid the construction," he said. "We will really watch to see if this will become a problem area. We'll issue tickets again for using private property if motorists try it. We also can issue tickets for disobeying construction warning signs if motorists ignore posted speed signs and other warning signs."

meaning," she said. "If you have an unscrupulous leader, you can end up with a very destructive cult."

In this case, the leader may have been Luc Journet, a 46-year-old homeopath and founder of the Order of the Solar Temple in Quebec, Canada. Police believe he fled to Switzerland last year after being found guilty on weapons charges.

Police were investigating links with an arson fire Tuesday near Montreal in two duplexes owned by members of the Order of the Solar Temple, a group that advocates stockpiling weapons to prepare for the end of the world.

Police in Switzerland said one of the three chalets in Valais had been rented by Jouret, but it was not known if Jouret was among the dead.

"Luc Jouret is the key main man behind this," said Johannes Aagaard of the Dialog Center, a Danish organization that monitors new religious groups throughout Europe.

"He represents an occult tradition with strong apocalyptical elements," said Aagaard. "He expects doomsday to be coming soon."

He doesn't believe there were other branches of the group in Europe or the United States, describing it as "a pure Swiss-Canadian movement."

Investigators said the bodies hidden in the chapel were lying in a circle with their heads outward.

"It could be a ritually planned self-execution," Aagaard said. "It's almost impossible to say anything now."

It was unclear if the group tied itself to the Rosicrucians, a centuries-old secret society whose symbols include the rose and the cross.

"I want to assure you that we have nothing to do with the Cross and the Rose sect in Switzerland," said Edward Lee, an administrator at Rosicrucian Order headquarters in San Jose, Calif.

Joe Szimhart, who does counseling and deprogramming for former members of cults, said that the leader of such cults "believes in going over to the other side, just like Jim Jones did."

Eileen Barker, a sociology professor at the London School of Economics who specializes in tracking new religious groups said there were about 1,600 in Europe. But she had never heard of the Cross and Rose.

"My first thought was, I wonder how many actually committed suicide and how many were murdered," she said. "In Waco, they didn't commit suicide. In Jonestown, the majority of the people were murdered by injections in the back of their arms or shot in the back of the head."

Kevin Garvey, a Connecticut-based consultant on cults, said there are as many as 2,000 religious cults in North America, many of them with a doomsday philosophy.

Young couple's rampage, killing 3 officers, taxi driver, stuns France

PARIS (AP) — In one of the bloodiest episodes in recent Paris history, a young couple tear-gassed two policemen, stole their guns and set off a wild car-chase, killing three officers and a taxi driver before being captured.

The slayings late Tuesday stunned a nation where only two other police officers had been killed in action all year, and prompted calls for restoration of the death penalty.

Authorities could recall no other case in which so many Paris police officers had been killed. Three officers and two civilian passers-by also were injured.

The male suspect, Audry Maupin, 21, died of a chest wound Wednesday night, 24 hours after the chase. A second-year law student, he had been too badly hurt to undergo questioning.

The woman, 19 or 20, refused to talk to investigators. She was identified as Florence Ray, from the working-class Paris suburb of Argenteuil, and had been living as a squatter in an abandoned building with Maupin.

Investigators searching the young woman's family home found documents with anarchist slogans and the name of a previously unknown group, "The Organization of Revolutionary Propaganda." The words "Death to the cops" were written on several documents.

"The police got out of their car within seconds. You could hear gunfire everywhere. . . . Police were telling people, "Get down, get down." '

— witness

Interior Minister Charles Pasqua described the suspects as "desperate young people, trapped in a fantasy of anarchist theories aimed at destroying society."

Right-wing political leaders, including Jean-Marie Le Pen of the National Front, said the best response to the killings would be to reinstate the death penalty, abolished in France in 1981.

Police unions demanded the government provide more funds and personnel for law enforcement. And about 500 cab drivers assembled their vehicles at the Place de la Nation in honor of their slain colleague, Amadou Diallo, 49, an immigrant from Guinea.

The rampage began at 9:25 p.m. Tuesday when a masked couple scaled a fence at a car pound, sprayed tear gas at two policemen on duty, and made off with their pistols.

For their getaway, the couple commandeered Diallo's taxi, taking the driver and a passenger hostage. About 10 minutes into the journey, Diallo deliberately steered his taxi into a police car with three officers inside.

Two of the officers got out of their car, and both were fatally wounded as the couple opened fire, police said. Diallo was executed by the young woman at point black range, witnesses said.

"The police got out of their car within seconds," another witness told French radio. "You could hear gunfire everywhere. . . . Police were telling people, 'Get down, get down.'"

The couple next hijacked a Renault sedan, taking the driver hostage. By this time, they were the object of an all-out search, and soon were overtaken by police motorcyclists. In the final shootout, one of the motorcycle officers was killed and another badly injured.

President Francois Mitterrand offered condolences to families of the victims and paid homage to the slain policemen.

Victim's sister speaks out against suppressing evidence

LOS ANGELES (AP) — As O.J. Simpson's lawyers waged another losing battle to get evidence thrown out Wednesday, a sister of his slain ex-wife suggested for the first time she has questions about his innocence.

"If O.J. is so innocent, why are they trying to suppress all the evidence?" Denise Brown told reporters after the morning court session.

She said she felt compelled to make the statement because "I've never seen this before."

Ms. Brown and other family members have sat through most of the hearings in the murder case. But this was the first time any member of Nicole Brown Simpson's family has hinted at his or her view of the defense.

Ms. Brown wore a button on her lapel saying: "Remember Nicole Brown and Ronald Goldman."

Simpson's ex-wife and Goldman were slashed to death in front of her condominium June 12.

■ SIMPSON UPDATE: Call Cityline 560-2400, enter 6202.

Simpson lawyer Robert Shapiro responded to Ms. Brown's comment saying Ms. Brown is now a lawyer "and lawyers have professional responsibilities to raise both legal and factual issues, and we are fulfilling our responsibility by raising all legal issues that should be raised. And obviously the judge is troubled by some of them. So we're on the right track."

Superior Court Judge Lance Ito allowed a hearing to continue today on whether items seized by police from Simpson's Ford Bronco are admissible. He appeared on the verge of ruling in favor of the defense to throw out several items because they weren't listed in the warrant, but yielded to a prosecutor's request to hold off until she presents more evidence on the issue.

Also Wednesday, Simpson's lawyers filed still another motion — this one 107 pages — requesting that all DNA evidence in the case be thrown out because police and lab sloppiness may have tainted it.

The thrust of Wednesday's hearing was similar to others — a new effort by the defense to keep out of the trial such evidence as analysis of blood drops found on the driveway of Simpson's mansion and items seized from his Bronco.

House leaders postpone GATT vote to Nov. 29

WASHINGTON (AP) — Struggling to save a huge global trade accord, Democratic and Republican leaders in the House agreed Wednesday to postpone a vote on the measure until after Thanksgiving.

President Clinton had been pushing for a vote before lawmakers went home this week. And as recently as Wednesday morning House Speaker Thomas Foley, D-Wash., said he was "firmly and absolutely committed" to that.

But, in a letter to the president, Foley and the other leaders said the House would vote Nov. 29 on legislation implementing the accord signed under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

At the insistence of Sen. Ernest F. Hollings, D-S.C., the Senate has already decided to vote on GATT on Dec 1, two days later.

"The Senate decision to postpone the vote has quite frankly undermined our ability to guarantee bipartisan support for this effort in the House at this time," the House leaders said.

They promised to work "to assure that GATT overwhelmingly passes the House."

As a down payment, the House voted 298-123 Wednesday night to approve the rules of debate for 123-nation GATT accord, touted as the largest trade agreement in world history.

U.S. Trade Representative Mickey Kantor said the "manifestly clear, strong unwavering support" in the leaders' letter was "a major step forward" in ratifying an agreement that he said would create 300,000 to 700,000 U.S. jobs.

The pact cuts world tariffs by an estimated $740 billion, reduces other barriers to trade and extends the rules of world trade to services and intellectual property such as computer programs and drug patents.

Opponents, including Hollings, say it will open American markets to a flood of manufactured goods produced in low-wage countries, destroying jobs at companies making textiles, aircraft, automobiles and other goods.

With the postponement, Kantor said, "we've taken the politics out of the debate. It will be calmer, more rational and more effective."

But some rank-and-file Republicans, who hope to see their party make big gains in the Nov. 8 midterm election, complained that a lame-duck session would mean as many as 100 defeated or retiring House members would vote without any accountability to the electorate.

"I think it is plain unconscionable that we bring this back in a lame-duck session. This important legislation should not be decided by members who have no political stake in the outcome," said Rep. Elton Gallegly, R-Calif.

Cartilage breakthrough could help many with bad knees

BOSTON (AP) — Researchers have found a way to heal damaged cartilage, a breakthrough that could help hundreds of thousands of people with bad knees and other balky joints.

The experimental treatment involves growing the patients' own cartilage cells in test tubes, then injecting the tissue into the damaged joint. It has been used so far on 88 people in Sweden.

If the method proves as promising as its developers hope, it could give doctors a major new tool for relieving the pain of joint injuries and stopping the crippling arthritis that often occurs years later.

Though the treatment is not yet available outside Sweden, a biotechnology company hopes to sponsor large-scale testing in Europe next year.

Cartilage lines the joints and makes them work smoothly. But unlike most other tissue in the body, it contains no blood vessels, so it cannot repair itself.

When people hurt their joints in football injuries, car accidents and other mishaps, surgeons can smooth out the damaged cartilage but cannot make it grow back.

Over time, the damage can trigger degeneration that leads to arthritis and the destruction of the entire joint. When this happens, there is no good treatment, and total knee replacement is often necessary. About 190,000 people undergo knee replacement surgery in the United States annually.

The new approach was developed by Drs. Lars Peterson and Anders Lindahl of Sahlgrenska University Hospital in Goteborg, Sweden.

"We started with knee injuries because they are the most common and easy to reach," Peterson said. "In principle, we could use this technique in any joint to repair and prevent further damage."

A report on their first 23 knee patients was published in today's issue of the New England Journal of Medicine. Results were judged to be good to excellent in 16 of them.

Among these patients was Henrik Esbjornsson, 24, of Kungalv, Sweden, a professional athlete who plays bandy, a game similar to ice hockey.

Seven years ago, he tore a ligament and injured the cartilage that covers the end of the thighbone and cushions the knee. His right knee was painful, instable and tended to lock up. Doctors performed the procedure in 1990.

"Since the operation, I can use the knee as I could before," Esbjornsson said. "It's completely OK."

With this technique, doctors first remove a tiny bit of healthy cartilage, then grow the cartilage cells in a tissue culture. After two to three weeks, the newly grown tissue is injected into the damaged cartilage. The injured spot is covered with a small flap of periosteum, the membrane that covers bone.

In time, the transplanted cells grow into the tissue and form normal-looking cartilage.

The first 23 patients were followed for periods ranging from 16 months to 5½ years. The technique worked best for those with damage to the cartilage on their thighbones; good to excellent results were seen in 14 of 16 such patients.

'Ozzie & Harriet' were perfection!

For literally millions of Americans, Ozzie and Harriet Nelson were the embodiment of the American dream: the ideal family where Dad was the breadwinner, Mom stayed at home and took care of the house and family, the youngsters encountered surmountable problems with, of course, the wise, insightful guidance of their parents. Life was perfect.

It was a "dream world," of course. But when Harriet Nelson died of congestive heart failure Sunday, after suffering the effects of emphysema for years, it touched millions of people who had come to think of the Nelsons — Harriet, Ozzie, David and Ricky — as the perfect family during the 1950's and 1960's, and the years of reruns since.

While there is credence to the argument that the "Ozzie & Harriet" show presented a too perfect image of American life during that era and in doing so may actually have contributed to the rebellious nature of the latter 1960's, it still was a lifestyle that millions of Americans sought to emulate and still do today to a degree. Sure it was an illusion, but it was an illusion many people wanted to lock onto. The Nelson clan essentially gave Americans a lesson in how to live their lives, based on a perfect standard even though in real life that standard might be difficult to achieve; it still was the goal.

In reality, Ricky's problems with drugs were later widely publicized and shattered, to a degree, the Nelsons' image. But even that problem seemed only a mirror image of the larger drug culture that engulfed the entire nation during the latter 1960's and 1970's. Americans copied the Nelsons and, it seemed, the Nelsons copied larger American society.

Together Ozzie and Harriet Nelson helped to give Americans a glimpse of how a perfect life could be lived, and the impact of that vision still continues to shape our society today, although it has been racked and tattered since by the Vietnam War, the drug culture, Watergate and a hundred other major distractions. Distractions don't control our lives, they only break our attention from trying to achieve the perfection seen in the fictional Nelson family.

Mums get sidelined for education's sake

It's that time of the year again. Fall nights. High school football. Homecoming. Mums.

Ah, mums. There are few things that capture the Texas spirit of extravagance more than a huge homecoming mum. Bells, lights and who knows what else turn a simple flower into a fashion statement only a true Texan can appreciate.

But one Amarillo school will be missing out on part of the mum tradition this year: Tascosa High School.

In a move that has undoubtedly upset some people, Tascosa Principal Gerald Boyer has banned mums from being worn at school. Good for him.

There's nothing wrong with mums. They are often more interesting to look at than the football game being attended. But schools are first and foremost about education, and the fashion wars that surround mums can and do get in the way of school work. . . .

Mums can still be worn at games, so it's not like Boyer is trying to kill a tradition. But he is right in putting education first.

Congress of reformers leaving like meek lambs

The 103rd Congress came in like a lion, but is going out like a lamb.

When they adjourn at week's end, members of this Congress will have left much unfinished business. President Clinton will call them back Dec. 1 for a lame-duck session, which may or may not salvage some legislation.

Obstinate, do-nothing Republicans are being blamed by Democrats in these emotional final days for failures to pass big-ticket items: health-care and campaign finance reform, workplace protections for congressional workers and rewriting the Superfund environmental laws. . . .

The Democrats can blame themselves. Clinton's election gave Dems control of the White House plus both houses of Congress. They could have written their own ticket. . . .

Republicans promised last week that if they get control of the House, they will bring to the floor 10 tax-cut and other bills in the first 100 days of the 104th Congress — not a bad strategy.

Finally, the freshman class was a big disappointment. They came in as reformers but left full of the puffery typical of veterans. That doesn't bode well for the future.

New sports facilities can't sustain city

CLEVELAND — About fifteen years ago — this was after the Cuyahoga River caught fire — this city defaulted on some bonds, the City Council president and a handful of other members were indicted in connection with a kickback scheme, the president of the school board was arrested for "mooning" on his way home from a rock concert, and the mayor, in a snit of some sort, withdrew his personal checking account from the Cleveland Trust the day his brother was arrested for robbing a branch of that bank.

Will

Today things are going well, up to a point. The reason they are, and the point at which they are not, are topics about which Mayor Michael White has volcanic opinions.

A 5-foot-7-inch cauldron of energy, he seems to pace even when sitting. He became mayor in 1990 at age 38 and was re-elected last year with 85 percent of the vote, an achievement that glitters like, and is a reward for, Cleveland's revived downtown. The symbols, and perhaps the catalysts, of the revival are two new venues for professional sports — Jacobs Field, the Indians new ballpark, and Gateway Arena where the Cavaliers soon will play basketball.

The economic justification for public investment in sports emporiums is easier to believe than to demonstrate. The calculation is complex because it is unclear how much of the money spent in connection with the sporting events would otherwise be spent locally anyway. In any case, new sports facilities are a trickle-down approach to building up cities: the viability of downtown facilities depends on the rental of luxury "skyboxes" or suites to corporate clients from nearby office towers.

That said, this too must be: The sense of pulsing viability that new sports facilities, and recurring crowds, impart to a downtown, has a cash value, albeit one difficult to calculate. And it has other values as well.

Crowded streets are safe streets. With 11 new restaurants having opened near the ballpark, and a new Ritz-Carlton a few blocks away, and the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame soon to open, White, an African American from the inner city, says happily, "The suburbs are beginning to be played out." People are moving back into the city, he says, "for the same reason a 55-year-old buys a Stingray after driving around in an Olds 88 for 10 years."

Rhetorically, he does not crawl along in second gear. He is a paradigmatic urban politician, a materialist optimist: "Take care of economic problems, and two-thirds of social problems go away." Hence his recipe for recovery in the rest of the city, the part away from the line drives and jump shots, is: jobs. Jobs, he says, will cure "addiction to the mailbox" — monthly welfare checks.

How, then, does he explain the fact that the explosion of social pathologies since the 1960s — welfare dependency, drug addiction and, especially, family disintegration and illegitimacy — has coincided with prosperity? He says the prosperity passed by the inner cities where there has been a "depression" for 10 years.

But there have been severe, protracted economic hardships before that did not result in anything remotely like the revolution in values represented by the 80 percent rates of illegitimate births in many inner cities. The numbers denote the starkest tragedy in contemporary America.

MIKE ROYKO

Pickpockets have eye, hand for patsies

He was getting out of a cab near a nightspot on Chicago's Rush Street when a woman who wanted the cab started to brush by and bumped into him hard.

Royko

"Oh, I'm so sorry," she said, smiling apologetically and putting her arms out to steady him.

Because she was uncommonly pretty, he just smiled and said: "That's OK, take it easy."

But then he sensed that something wasn't right, and he reached for the pocket where he kept his wallet.

The pocket was empty.

He stared at her for a moment. Her smile faded, and she glared back.

"Damn you," he said, "give me my wallet."

But she was already turning and moving away. He started to go after her, but he was jolted from behind.

"I turned," he said later. "Actually, I was kind of spun around by the way I was bumped. There was a big guy, bigger than me and obviously in better shape. All he did was point a finger at me. He didn't say anything. He just pointed a finger at me as if he was warning me that something could happen.

"He had on a tweed sport coat and a golf shirt. Well-dressed. He fit into the scene.

"But the way he looked at me, he wasn't the kind of person you would want to mess with over a hundred bucks, which is what I had in my wallet.

"So I wasn't going to tangle with him. The woman was walking away, and he turned and went after her.

"I don't know. I just got mad and I pointed at them and started yelling: 'Murder, that guy is a murderer. Hey, that woman is a murderer.' I have a loud voice, and I was yelling as loud as I could.

"I don't know why I did that. It just popped into my head. But some people on the sidewalk stopped and looked at where I was pointing. One of them said: 'What's going on?'

"I yelled: 'Yeah, them, those two. . . . They're wanted for murder.' Boy, I really let out the word MURDER.

"The next thing I knew, my wallet flew up in the air and the two of them took off.

"All I can figure is that my yelling shook them up. They were so smooth at picking my pocket, I guess they didn't expect anything like that.

"They took off around a corner, and I went over and got my wallet. The money was still there. Everything was there. I guess she didn't have a chance to pass it off.

"Anyway, I thought I'd call you. I had read what you wrote about pickpockets. Maybe that's why I had a hunch something was wrong when she bumped into me. I don't think people realize how often it happens. I was really lucky."

He was. Every day, people are boosted in Chicago. Someone bumps into them in a perfectly understandable way. In an elevator, getting in or out of a cab, going through a revolving door.

Then their wallets or purses are gone. A minor crime? On the worldwide scale of pain and suffering, yes. But if it's your wallet or purse and you are suddenly broke, your credit cards and checkbook are gone, and all your IDs are in the hands of thieves, it can be a disaster.

Especially in this suburban family man's position.

"I wasn't supposed to be on Rush Street," he said rather sheepishly. "I was supposed to be with a client. If my wallet was stolen, I can't report it because I didn't want the cops calling my home."

So he learned a lesson: Get the train, and as the folk song advises, go home to the wife and children and sit by the fireside bright.

But pickpockets aren't conscious of class or need. As my calls and mail tell me, if the thieves think you are a patsy, they don't care what your problems are.

"I was in a restaurant in Hoffman Estates," the woman said.

A pickpocket in suburban Hoffman Estates? Can that be? Sure.

"I was with relatives and had opened my wallet to give some of the younger ones money to play the video machines. Then when we were leaving, this woman stopped and bent over and fell down like she was having cramps.

"A man pushed past me to help her. It wasn't until the next day, when I looked in my purse, that I realized he had lifted my wallet and checkbook. And by that time, they had bought things with my credit cards and checkbook. I can't believe this could happen in a nice suburb."

How about the Lincoln Park Zoo?

"I was standing in a crowd looking at the gorillas feeding," the lady from suburban Waukegan said. "Suddenly, a young man in front of me stepped back quickly and I was thrown off balance. Another young man caught me as I staggered.

"Both young men apologized. When I left the building, I reached into my shoulder bag for ice cream money. My wallet, containing $140, was gone. And I actually thanked those bozos for apologizing to me."

ART BUCHWALD

It's just smarter to commit white-collar crime

The most disappointing aspect of the new crime bill is that Congress has not set aside any money to punish those who have committed white-collar crimes.

Buchwald

Since white-collar crime is now growing faster than blue-collar crime, you would think that some provisions would have been made to deal with the problem.

Stephanie Ross, a white-collar crime consultant, said that while it is hoped that the new bill can reduce street crimes, Congress has thrown in the towel about stopping criminal activity on Wall Street and in various halls of government.

"Wouldn't more hard prison time be a deterrent to white-collar criminals?" I asked.

"The problem is they never get to prison. The people who commit white-collar crimes hire the best lawyers in the country and, after stealing millions of dollars, they plea-bargain their way to a cruise on the Love Boat," Stephanie explained.

"What you're saying is that if someone had a choice, it would be smarter to commit a crime that involves enough money to hire F. Lee Bailey than a public defender."

"Do you know how many people went to jail for emptying out the safes of the S&Ls in America?"

"Four?" I guessed.

"Only two and a half executives did any time, and that was because they refused to tell where the money was hidden. There's no crime bill in the world that can stop the rich stealing from the poor."

"Didn't the Republicans propose that if you got caught selling phony government bonds to the public three times in a row, you would get life imprisonment?"

"Yes, but the white-collar-crime lobbyists defeated it. Nobody knows how much money from widows' and orphans' savings goes each year to help politicians get elected. If you look at the S&L scandals, you'll see their officers were the biggest supporters of the elected officials," replied Stephanie.

"How about more police to patrol the buildings where white-collar crimes are committed? Maybe that would stop them," I suggested.

"It wouldn't be enough to discourage the hard-core embezzlers. They'd wind up bribing the police with phony real estate deals," she said.

"We have to make our sentences a lot stiffer. If someone who stole $100 million is going to be sentenced by a judge to 300 hours community service, it ought to be a maximum-security place like Disneyland."

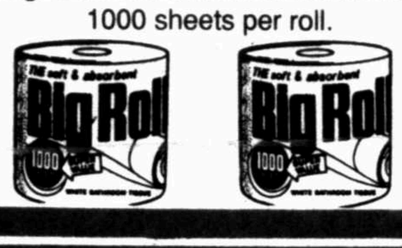

Art Buchwald's column is distributed by the Los Angeles Times Syndicate.

Perot proposes supporting GOP in both houses

WASHINGTON (AP) — Ross Perot says Americans should let Republicans "have a turn at bat" by giving near-blanket support to GOP candidates for Congress and handing Republicans control of both houses.

"I'm saying give these guys a chance," the Texas billionaire and 1992 independent presidential candidate advised.

Perot vowed that if Republicans win control of the House and Senate and don't deliver, then he would form a third party that would. He sidestepped whether he would run for president again himself.

Not surprisngly, his advice was loudly denounced Wednesday by the White House and Democratic leaders — who don't expect Perot's words to turn many votes but are too nervous about the upcoming midterm elections to risk letting them go by unanswered.

Republicans were gleeful.

"We welcome it. I was pleased by what he said," said Haley Barbour, chairman of the Republican National Committee. "When Perot called for the election of a Republican Congress, he was accurately reflecting the views of the 20 million people who voted for him in 1992."

White House and Democratic leaders were quick to accuse him of trying to create mischief.

"My hope is that people will vote their self-interest, vote on the issues (and) not take Ross Perot's advice on this," said Democratic Party chairman David Wilhelm. "I think people are smart and they are not going to vote blindly for anybody. They are not going to do it because Ross Perot suggests it."

Senate passes education bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — Turning back a Republican-led filibuster over school prayer, the Senate gave final approval Wednesday to an education bill providing billions of dollars to help students in impoverished districts, train teachers and reduce school violence.

The vote was 77-20.

The House already has approved the legislation reauthorizing for five years the Elementary and Secondary Education Act, which expired Friday. President Clinton has indicated his support for the bill.

School prayer advocates, led by Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., tried to block a final vote on the bill. Helms thought the prayer language included in the bill was too weak.

"America is in the midst of an historic struggle between those who on one hand yearn for a restoration of traditional values envisioned by our founding fathers and on the other hand by those who contend that anything goes," he said.

Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., countered: "Those who are voting against ending this filibuster are voting against education. They are voting against federal aid to hard-pressed local schools. They are voting against teachers and students. They are voting against major reforms and improvements in the most important federal assistance for schools in every city, town and village in America."

The Senate voted 75-24 to break the filibuster. The only Democrat voting against cutting off debate was Sen. Richard Shelby of Alabama.

The legislation protects the right of students to participate in voluntary, constitutionally protected prayer and cuts off federal education funds to school districts found to have "willfully violated" a court order that they allow the prayer.

Helms argued that involving the courts in the issue created an impossible hurdle for students and their parents.

He preferred school prayer language that had been passed by the House but dropped when Senate and House negotiators settled differences between their separate version of the bill.

Gill takes top honor at country music awards

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Vince Gill made country music history Wednesday by becoming the first person to win top male vocalist four straight times. He also was voted entertainer of the year at the 28th annual Country Music Association awards.

"I'm so thankful to be a part of it. I won't take it lightly. I'll treat you with class," the 37-year-old said in accepting the historic award at the Grand Ole Opry House.

He shared another award as part of the all-star compilation, "Common Thread: The Songs of the Eagles," which won best album.

Other performers on the project included John Anderson, Clint Black, Suzy Bogguss, Brooks & Dunn, Billy Dean, Diamond Rio, Alan Jackson, Little Texas, Lorrie Morgan, Travis Tritt, Tanya Tucker and Trisha Yearwood.

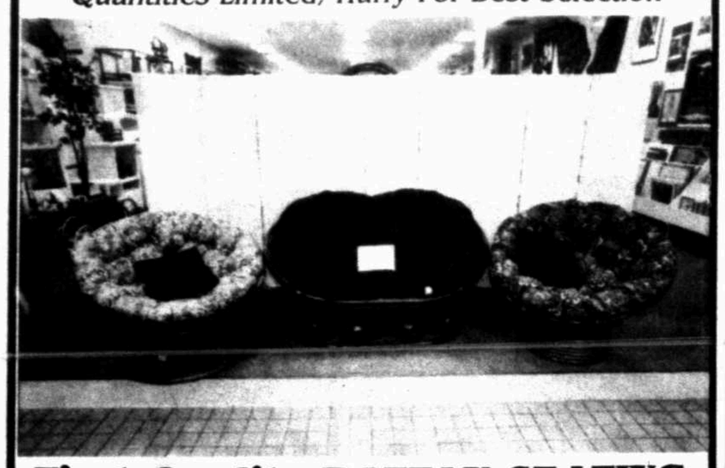

Pam Tillis won female vocalist of the year, denying Mary Chapin Carpenter a third straight honor in that category.

"I love what I do and I love to share it with the world," said Tillis, daughter of country veteran Mel Tillis.

John Michael Montgomery exclaimed "I love this country," as he accepted the single of the year award for "I Swear." He also won the Horizon Award as most promising, which he dedicated to his late father.

"I love it that I got the award because it definitely was for him. I do hate it that he ain't here to see it," Montgomery said.

Abell sets junior high standards

■ Texas Middle School Network names Abell Junior High School as one of few mentor schools.

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

Abell teachers take a bow. The educators' efforts to step away from the typical junior high school of the past, and try new middle school concepts, has earned Abell statewide recognition.

The Texas Middle School Network has named Abell Junior High School as one of a few mentor schools in the state and as such could lead Texas middle schools into the 21st century.

The school's concepts of teachers teaming together to teach the same group of students and scheduling classes into 105-minute blocks were recognized as practices on the leading edge of education.

"This is a very big feather in our cap," said Abell principal David E. Adams, who said he was surprised — due to great competition — that the school was selected.

George T. Abell Junior High School opened its doors for the first year in August 1993. Teachers were divided into academic teams composed of mathematics, English, social studies and science for the same grade level. Common planning periods allowed teachers to work together for cross and inter-disciplinary teaming.

In addition, block scheduling provided 105-minute classes in order to expand the curriculum, better prepare for the state testing and develop greater critical-thinking skills for Abell students.

Adams said the results of academic teaming and block scheduling were increased Texas Assessment of Academic Skills test scores and higher semester examination grades.

The school's success with its programs has earned it the designation of a Mentor School, a site that will be held up as an example to other schools.

Stanton expects 1,000s to show for Trade Days

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

STANTON — Browsers by the thousands will be streaming into Stanton this weekend for the sixth rendition of the Old Sorehead Trade Days.

"It is just amazing what it has done for our town . . . as far as what we can do to help out our community," said Brenda Kaye Kendall, a Trade Days co-founder and promoter.

Proceeds from the weekend event will go toward restoring the town's century-old Old Convent, lighting up the streets with yuletide decorations and painting and sprucing up downtown buildings.

"The weather is going to be great and we will be busting at the seams," Mrs. Kendall said.

"We've got (vendors) coming from Amarillo to Del Rio and from El Paso to Dallas."

A record-setting 400 antique, arts-and-crafts and food vendors are scheduled to set up booths and tables at the market, which is expected to attract about 45,000 people in the agricultural community of about 2,400.

The event will be held from "can to can't" — from sunrise to sunset — on Saturday and from noon to 5 p.m. on Sunday.

Booths will be set up on and alongside St. Peter Street, north to the Martin County Courthouse and east past the Martin County Historical Museum and the Martin County Community Center on Broadway Street and north on Convent Street.

An antique auction featuring Big Spring auctioneer Robert Pruitt is to be held at 7 p.m. Saturday. A dance — set for 8 p.m. Saturday at the Community Center's pavilion — will feature Mike Payne and his Western Stars of Stanton.

"We're real proud of him — our hometown boy," said Kathryn Burch, Trade Days co-founder.

Dance proceeds are for restoration of the Old Convent, which had its origins in the 1880s. At that time a band of Carmelite friars moved to to the community of Marienfeld — "Field of Mary" — along the Texas & Pacific Railroad Co., tracks and built a community anchored

Jury hears testimony in assault trial

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

A Midland man may be going down for the third time as a jury of six women and six men hear testimony in a case of assault with a deadly weapon.

Bill Mitchell is charged in the Jan. 19 incident involving two people in a moving car in south Midland. The assailant, while on foot, fired four times into the vehicle, striking it twice, according to Wednesday's testimony.

Mitchell already has been to prison twice, and therefore faces a potential prison term of 25-99 years instead of the usual 5-99 years for this kind of crime, according to assistant District Attorney Brian Carney.

Early witnesses indicated that Mitchell was firing at the car because he thought his ex-wife was riding in it. She was in the car earlier but was not a passenger at the time of the shooting, according to testimony.

Neither of the two occupants was injured in the shooting, although their vehicle was hit by one or two bullets, Carney said.

The prosecution's case depends on witnesses who testified Wednesday and placed Mitchell at the scene of the crime and with a weapon.

One witness said the defendant came into her house just after the shooting and put a revolver in her lap.

"He said he was going to give it to me to keep for him," she said.

The court-appointed defense attorney, Robert Sykes, said his witnesses will place Mitchell in different parts of the city when the shooting took place.

The prosecution rested its case after one day of testimony. The defense will continue today. A verdict is expected before the jury is dismissed late today.

Commissioner visits Midland, speaks of new developments

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

Texas General Land Office Commissioner Garry Mauro was in Midland Tuesday to inform area residents about new developments in his office regarding increased oil and gas exploration and increased veteran land grants for Texans.

Leases for oil and gas exploration increased 20 percent since April of this year, Mauro said.

"Leasing activity at the General Land Office has been steadily climbing for the past couple of years. Now it has shot upward," Mauro said.

In April, 33,129 acres were leased, but for the October sale, companies leased more than 340,000 acres, he said.

Much of this leased area is submerged land including oil and gas deposits in Texas-owned portions of the Gulf of Mexico, he said. But he thinks increased leases in that sector are partly a result of incentives from his of-

Appeals court sends drug case back to Ector County

Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals set aside a habitual offender conviction of Jimmy Daryl Wilson of Ector County on Wednesday and ordered that he be returned to the custody of the county sheriff pending a new trial on drug charges.

In a plea bargain agreement, Wilson was convicted in the 161st District Court in Ector County of delivery of less than 28 grams of cocaine and was sentenced as a habitual offender to 30 years in prison.

Wilson later contended one of his prior convictions used for enhancing the penalty to habitual offender was defective because the indictment in that case said Wilson unlawfully sold heroin in 1973, but it did not state he knowingly and intentionally did so.

The appeals court agreed the indictment in that case was fundamentally defective and ordered that the case involving the sale of cocaine be sent back to Ector County.

Ultimate food test comes from listening to body

Todd

It seems the more I read about, hear about, and talk about so-called health foods, the more I see and smell ordinary Southwestern foods that are naturally or artificially laced with fats and salts and other modern-day no-noes.

The problem, called temptation, with those supposedly terminal foods is that they taste so good: steak and biscuits-and-gravy, eggs and sausage, deep-fried fish and potatoes, cake and ice cream.

The goodness probably is out of habit.

Eating the goodness has made rotund and buxom many a pleasant soul.

Fact is, one of those fellows is a person I affectionately call Slim primarily because he isn't.

His passion — one of his passions — is eating and savoring foods laden with fats. His whole being radiates pleasure when the beckoning aroma of home-style fatty foods tempts his palate.

Slim succumbs to food's temptations.

Everybody, you know, needs a passion to purge boredom from life.

Put another way, as did mythologist-philosopher Joseph Campbell, the pursuit of passion is to "follow your bliss."

And everybody needs a bliss to pursue — to round out life.

Bliss or passion is different things to different folk: art, music, literature, science, religion, fantasy.

And one way or another, the need for food for many people is a lust for food. Since eating digestible stuff is common to man and beast, then it makes sense that many eaters would develop a craving for food, an obsession with this earthly sustenance.

Today, of course, health-food advocates and nutritionists exhort people to take in their quota of fruits and vegetables and fix a pot of red beans and brown rice.

Vegetarians shun the eating of the flesh of beasts, fish and fowl for reasons based on health and morality and on the desire to allow each of God's creatures to live out its life-span naturally instead of experiencing a brief life in a pasture, feedlot, pond or coop.

Just how a purist-vegetarian would rationalize the wearing of leather goods might be problematic particularly if the hide came from animals that were slaughtered primarily for their food.

Until the rise of the fast-food chain restaurants and the spread of highways and distribution centers, fice for small producers.

Mauro said his office has helped smaller producers by allowing them to report semiannually instead of every month like larger producers. This cuts down on office staff time and other costs.

"Paperwork is very expensive for the small producers," he said.

Mauro said his office is working with the energy industry to draw up a royalty relief program for marginal or stripper wells and secondary recovery projects.

"We're doing everything we can to keep small producers on state lands," he said.

Income from the increased land leases means more income for the Permanent School Fund that goes toward financing Texas public education system, he said.

Regarding the increases in land and housing loans to Texas veterans, Mauro said he was pleased that his office has made $1.5 billion in loans to 65,000 veterans in Texas. He said the rate and amounts of loans are increasing.

The maximum amount of these loans was recently raised from $20,000 to $40,000, he said.

"The program is booming and it doesn't cost the taxpayers a penny," he said.

Since January 1983 when Mauro assumed office, there have been 108 loans for land alone, totaling $1,593,902. Loans in Midland County for housing amount to $3,864,684 from 192 loans.

Together with home-improvement loans, this amounts to 305 total loans in Midland County for a total of $5,514,427, he said.

More than 33,000 veterans in Midland and Ector counties are eligible for the increased benefits, he said.

Mauro also announced a new issue of $10 million in Texas College Savings Bonds. These popular bonds are tax exempt and do not affect an investor's application for other kinds of college grants or loans, he said.

people often ate what was produced in their region and in their gardens, pastures and backyards. That makes sense, promotes regionalism and enlivens local color.

Hometown cafes were distinctive and still are where they are found.

Now, what to eat?

Certainly, we ought to consider various points of view and the wholesome and health-promoting qualities of foods. Longevity and health are most desirable as people are learning the older they get.

And the ultimate food test for the health-seeking soul is to listen to messages from the body, heart and mind. Indeed, we need to heed the messages from our very beings and not be beguiled by the sly cunning of fast-food barkers and junk-food purveyors.

Listen for health messages and heed.

LEAD: State names Abell Mentor School

Junior High School in Odessa," Adams said.

He said Abell and Crockett are cooperating to bring nationally recognized middle-school education consultant Elliot Marenbloom to the area.

Marenbloom will speak on "The How and Why of Changing Education," at a public meeting Feb. 10. He will speak at one of the high school campuses. On Feb. 11 he will conduct a workshop on middle schools for local teachers.

"Other schools will visit our campus and the state provides additional funding for staff development," Adams said. "We will also get funding to help other schools for cooperative projects."

Training materials will be made available to the mentor schools and they will receive stipends to offset costs associated with their activities as mentor sites.

Abell was recognized for its "demonstrated ability" to operate middle-school programs on the cutting edge of education.

Adams said all of the junior high schools in Midland are moving toward the team concept. "Abell and Alamo are one step ahead of the others," he said.

Rather than resting on his laurels, Adams said the school staff and students will have to be on their toes to continue to be an example for other middle schools.

"Being named a Mentor School doesn't mean we are doing everything right," Adams said, "But it says we are doing a lot of practices right, and we are committed to providing excellence at the middle-school level."

Jetliner makes emergency stop

ABILENE (AP) — An electrical short circuit forced a Boeing 737 airliner to make an emergency stop here Wednesday en route from Dallas to Arizona.

None of the 45 passengers was injured when the short circuit filled the plane's cockpit with smoke.

Fire and airport officials said the plane's pilot radioed Abilene about 10:15 a.m. that an apparent malfunction in the air conditioning system that blew smoke into the cockpit was forcing a landing.

Judge sentences farmer to 15 months for crop insurance fraud

BROWNSVILLE (AP) — A prominent Harlingen farmer was sentenced to 15 months in prison Wednesday for defrauding the government out of nearly $300,000 in crop insurance.

U.S. District Judge Filemon B. Vela also ordered Allan R. Anderson, 44, to pay $195,000 in restitution and serve three years of supervised release when he gets out of prison.

Anderson pleaded guilty in April to mail fraud involving the Federal Crop Insurance Corp. and filing a false claim to the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service.

"The good thing about this case is that I'm hearing from the ASCS that farmers are being more careful," said Assistant U.S. Attorney Laura Hubert Surovic.

However, Mrs. Surovic said Anderson's offenses constituted far more than sloppy bookkeeping. During 1989 and 1990, Anderson underreported the size of his cotton, sorghum and corn harvests to the government.

That allowed him to receive $203,000 more in federal crop insurance and $89,000 more in disaster benefits than he was entitled, Mrs. Surovic said.

Meanwhile, he reported his real harvest figures to his bank.

"These kinds of cases remind us that this is taxpayers' money. These are government programs, and they have to be applied for in good faith," Mrs. Surovic said.

In urging a light sentence, defense attorney Christopher Lee Milner asked Vela to consider that his client had admitted guilt and taken steps to pay back the government.

Vela imposed a sentence that fell directly between the federal sentencing guideline range of 12 to 18 months.

Anderson managed about 5,500 acres of farms in Willacy, Cameron and Hidalgo counties for various landowners. The government also overpaid some of the landowners as a result of Anderson's false statements, Ms. Surovic said.

Richards, Bush square off over insurance, debates

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Ann Richards and Republican challenger George W. Bush dueled Wednesday over insurance and debates.

Bush proposed a no-fault automobile insurance plan that he said would lower rates. In addition, he accused the Democratic of breaking her campaign promise in 1990 to lower auto insurance rates.

"Texans who contrast her failed promise with my plan will see a huge difference between vague rhetoric and specific reforms which will work to lower the cost of automobile insurance," Bush said.

Richards said that she promised in 1990 to hold the line on insurance costs, despite numerous campaign ads that said she had a plan to lower rates.

She said Bush's criticism was part of his "fill in the blank" campaign.

Under Bush's plan, a person's auto insurer would pay off an accident claim regardless of who was to blame. He said it would provide prompt and automatic compensation, although it would limit the right to sue.

Richards spokesman Rafe Greenlee said the proposal would "pit the average Texan against the giant insurance companies — a battle the insurance companies are sure to win."

Bush said that during Richards' term, the combined average auto insurance premium has increased from $632 in 1990 to $763 in 1992.

Texas Insurance Commissioner Robert Hunter said the increase in the average premium is due to an improving state economy in which people are buying newer cars that cost more to insure.

Suburbs add minority students, but not black, Hispanic teachers

DALLAS (AP) — Suburban school districts in the Dallas-Fort Worth area have added minority students to their rolls, but black and Hispanic teachers haven't followed, The Dallas Morning News reported Wednesday.

State education officials say finding minority educators has been a problem statewide, not just in the suburbs.

A survey by The News of school systems in its area shows that black and Hispanic enrollment in suburban classrooms has outpaced minority hiring.

Shannon Reeves, director of the NAACP's Dallas-based Southwest region, said no one is holding the suburban schools accountable.

"They don't get as much attention," he said.

Last month, Reeves joined a group of Mesquite parents in demanding that the school district improve its hiring record. About 9 percent of Mesquite's students are black, while 1.3 percent of the teaching force is black. Hispanic teachers account for 1 percent of the faculty, while Hispanic students number 11 percent.

Ron Cagle, executive director of personnel for the DeSoto school district, said hiring more minority teachers is "something that all of us now are very much aware of."

"We are doing a lot of recruiting," he said. "We're going to as many of the universities as possible."

The problem is finding the teachers, Cagle and others say. Demand, both nationally and regionally, far outstrips the supply. Part of the problem is that many black and Hispanic college students are pursuing higher paying jobs.

In DeSoto, black students make up a third of the student body, while 5 percent of teachers are black.

Allen is one of the few suburban districts where the proportion of minority teachers mirrors the student population.

Texas executes convicted killer

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — Thirteen years after a 19-year-old San Antonio convenience store clerk was gunned down in a robbery attempt, the man convicted of his murder was put to death.

Walter Key Williams, 32, in a brief final statement that he mumbled quickly while strapped to the Texas death chamber gurney early Wednesday, asked for forgiveness and said he wished his "whole life had been spent as Islamic."

"Thirteen-plus years later, justice is finally served," Drew Durham, an assistant Texas attorney general, said. "I think it's justice delayed."

Durham said the case had been appealed five times in the state courts and three times in the federal courts and said the attorney general's office would work with the Legislature to try to put limits on the number of appeals.

"I believe there are methods available," he said.

Williams was 19 when he was charged with killing Daniel Liepold during the 1981 robbery attempt at a San Antonio Circle K store.

Williams once worked at the store and casually knew the victim, who also was 19. He was arrested at his parents' home several hours after the Feb. 11, 1981, shooting.

"I don't know if we can say it's over with," Liepold's mother, Lea, said. "Our son is never going to come back to us.

"You know how when you have a sore and it keeps getting bigger and bigger? I'm hoping now it will begin to heal."

Saga of death row inmate becomes confusing question of stories, lies

HUNTSVILLE (AP) -- A tearful, angry and sometimes confrontational Henry Lee Lucas said Wednesday he refused to believe that the woman who claimed to be one of his murder victims was a fake.

"I don't understand what's going on," Lucas, 58, said in a death row interview. "She's always told me the truth."

As has been the case for more than a decade, the saga of the convicted serial killer and perhaps Texas' most famous death row inmate again becomes a confusing question of stories, recantations and accusations of lies and cover-ups.

Detectives familiar with the Lucas case, however, insisted this week they were skeptical of the most recent disclosures.

The latest chapter involves a Missouri woman who this week said she was Frieda "Becky" Powell, whose death in 1982 in Denton County got Lucas a life prison term.

The murder of the 15-year-old woman — who Lucas originally said was mutilated and carved into small pieces — was among hundreds Lucas confessed to, then recanted.

Lucas' attorney, Vic Feazell, said he found Phylis Wilcox, who claimed to be Ms. Powell, and had an alibi for a Texas killing in 1979 that put Lucas on death row.

On Tuesday, however, the woman said she made up the entire story, although Lucas held firm to his belief that she indeed was Frieda Powell.

"Now she's lying. I just don't get it," Lucas said. "It just don't make sense. I just don't understand what this cover-up is.

"It hurts more than you ever know. It's like someone took a knife and cut me to pieces."

With reporters crowding around a window trying to question him, Lucas broke down in tears and walked away. He composed himself after about 15 minutes, then held court for more than an hour, repeating his claims of innocence and spicing his remarks with obscenities.

"I've never been this mad before," he said. "I'm mad about this whole cotton-picking thing. All this stuff makes me sick. I just hate to get disgusted as I am today."

He insisted he took the life sentence in the Powell killing to protect Ms. Wilcox. He also denied the entire Powell-Wilcox story was a scheme to win his release from prison.

"I have never coached her," he said.

And when told that she had recanted her story about being Ms. Powell, Lucas replied: "I don't believe it. I'm tired of these lies. . . .

"I don't care what anyone believes. I don't care whether I die or live. Let her come face to face with me. That's the only way. I won't accept nothing else. I know Becky is alive. . . .

"I feel it's a cover-up that will keep me from getting to the truth."

Feazell said earlier this week the woman invented the scheme because she was in love with Lucas, a one-eyed drifter convicted of 13 murders in Florida and Texas.

"One-eyed drifter. That's all you talk about," Lucas complained to reporters.

The Powell remains were found in 1982. Lucas was convicted of her murder two years later.

Ms. Wilcox's story fell apart after Feazell said he obtained a picture of her — identified as Phylis Zook, her maiden name — in a 1971 Missouri high school yearbook. Feazell said once he confronted the woman with the picture, she broke down.

Lucas once claimed involvement in more than 360 murders nationwide but now claims to have killed only his mother.

Court throws out murder conviction

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals on Wednesday reversed the conviction of a man sentenced to death in the kidnapping and brutal slaying of an elderly widow in Tarrant County.

The reason? A jury selection error.

The court with a 5-2 vote overturned the verdict against Charles Richard Sonion, who was found guilty in the 1988 kidnapping and slaying of Ora Pearson, an 81-year-old neighbor in Azle.

Before Mrs. Pearson died, a handgun was inserted in her vagina and she was shot six times, according to documents filed in court. She also was beaten over the head and stabbed in the chest.

Her body was found in a field.

Prosecutors said Sonion had twice confessed to the murder, telling his wife, "I enjoyed watching her die." He was 39 at the time of the murder.

A legal brief filed by the defense said Sonion had a history of mental problems and had stumbled and hit his head on the night of the offense, "which resulted in his disintegration and bizarre actions and demeanor."

Sonion didn't challenge that the evidence supported a guilty verdict.

But in an argument accepted by the appeals court, he said the trial judge was wrong to dismiss a potential juror.

The woman, a judge's wife, stated it would take more than the facts of the case to persuade her that a defendant was a continuing danger to society, according to the court opinion.

A defendant must be found to be a continuing danger for the death penalty to be imposed.

The nine-member criminal appeals court — with two judges dissenting and two not participating — said a previous case has determined that such a dismissal is grounds for reversing a conviction.

Among other arguments, the prosecution said the mistake was harmless because prosecutors could have asked for the potential juror's dismissal without giving a reason. In selecting a jury, each side is given a certain number of challenges that are automatically upheld.

But the Court of Criminal Appeals, voting 5-2, reversed Sonion's conviction and ordered the case returned to the lower court. Prosecutors, who would decide whether to try him again, didn't immediately return a telephone call from The Associated Press.

Judges Charles Baird, Sam Houston Clinton, Frank Maloney, Chuck Miller and Morris Overstreet voted to reverse. Presiding Judge Michael McCormick and Judge Lawrence Meyers dissented. Judges Charles Campbell and Bill White did not participate in the decision.

Sonion's lawyer, Allan Butcher of Fort Worth, said the court ruled properly. He said the potential juror in question said she would want to know, if possible, about the defendant's background and any prior criminal acts before making a life-or-death decision.

"These are important factors to be considered in making this decision," he said.

Police search for suspect who escaped from hospital

HOUSTON (AP) — Authorities continued their search Wednesday for an accused heroin dealer who escaped custody by walking out of a hospital disguised as a woman.

Lionel Luviano, 21, escaped Tuesday afternoon from Houston's LBJ Hospital by cutting through a pair of manacles that shackled his left leg to his hospital bed.

Authorities believe the bolt cutters and clothes were smuggled in by two relatives.

A statewide alert was issued for Luviano, who authorities think is headed for Mexico. Officials also said Luviano, who faces federal charges of conspiracy to distribute heroin, will soon be needing medical attention because of his surgery.

The Gulf Force Violent Offenders Task Force also announced that Luviano's brother and sister have been charged with helping him escape.

Martin Luviano, 26, was arrested late Tuesday night in Houston.

His sister, Leticia Luviano, 19, remained at large Wednesday.

The two have been charged in federal court with instigating or assisting an escape. Bond has been denied for both.

Officers said they believe Luviano wore a green patterned silk blouse and slacks that a female accomplice smuggled into his room under her own clothes. They then walked past a guard and disappeared.

Luviano had been at the hospital since last Thursday recovering from a skin graft operation to repair injuries he received in a motorcycle accident shortly before his Aug. 4 arrest, said Lt. Mike Dunn of the Texas Department of Public Safety.

"He will be very difficult to apprehend at this point without the public's help," Dunn conceded, noting Luviano has friends and access to a lot of money. He also said Luviano has relatives in Mexico.

Dunn said Luviano is a key distributor of black tar heroin in the Houston area. His arrest, which came after authorities spent a year building a case against him, was considered a major victory for area law enforcement officials.

How To End Drain And Septic Problems

When your pipes were new, they were clean inside like the pipes in Fig. 1. In time, gook can accumulate to make your pipes look like the ones in Fig. 2. This build up is the cause of slow running and clogging drains.

Well, now there is a product that is guaranteed to completely clean your pipes, and eliminate this build up, when used as directed. This product, call Bio-Clean, actually digests grease, hair, soap film, and food particles. It cleans your entire pipe - even the top and sides! And Bio-Clean will keep pipes open when used regularly.

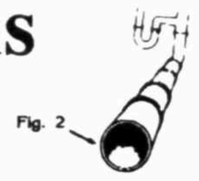

SEPTIC SYSTEMS

The major cause of septic problems, in properly designed systems, is a lack of bacteria to break down the incoming waste. When undigested waste fills up your tank, it can flow into the drain field pipes; causing back ups, odors and standing water.

Bio-Clean puts an end to these problems once and for all. It contains a specially selected strain of bacteria. They break down waste much faster than the organisms found at random in septic systems. These bacteria will digest approximately 60 times their weight of waste each hour! As this waste is destroyed, so are the problems it causes - we guarantee it. But you don't have to have problems to use Bio-Clean. It works great as a septic starter, too.

SAFETY

Bio-Clean is 100% safe for people, pets and all types of plumbing - even garbage disposals and plastic pipes! It contains no acid, lye or solvents. It generates no heat or poisonous fumes.

100% GUARANTEED

Just read and follow directions. If you aren't completely satisified with the results, return the unused portion for a full refund.

Call ADVANCE PLUMBING at 570-7465 and get $2.00 off each can when you mention this ad. Get a 10% discount when you purchase 3 or more containers. ADVANCE PLUMBING also offers free delivery.

Tutu continues to fight unjustness

By Sahm Venter
Associated Press Writer

CAPE TOWN, South Africa — Apartheid is gone, and Desmond Tutu dreams of a more tranquil life filled with the peaceful solitude he calls the "soul's speech."

Don't be fooled by the musings of the diminutive, dynamic Nobel Peace Prize winner.

Instead of easing gracefully from the high-charged life of a world-famous activist, the 63-year-old Tutu continues to struggle against anything he perceives as wrong or unjust.

He keeps watch on South Africa's first black-led government, and he is campaigning to relieve the debt burden of the world's poor countries. He plans to take up the debt issue during a two-week visit to the United States that began Wednesday to promote his book "The Rainbow People of God."

President Nelson Mandela is already in the United States this week, to address the U.N. General Assembly on Monday and try to drum up foreign investment.

South Africa's first black Anglican archbishop has a remarkable ability to create a fuss, get the world's attention, raise hackles.

Long associated with the black struggle against apartheid, he has strived to carve out an independent posture since South Africa's first all-race election in April.

He recently criticized Mandela's government for approving high salaries for top officials and lawmakers, drawing an angry response from Mandela, a longtime ally.

It was Tutu who spent his first years as archbishop raising international opposition to apartheid while Mandela and others were in jail. The same determination fills his vow to prick the conscience of Mandela's government.

And he has new targets.

"Since apartheid has ended now we should look for another global moral issue, and I would say that for me this is the foreign debt that so many so-called Third World countries are having to bear," Tutu said in an interview with The Associated Press.

He wants to persuade wealthy countries to cancel the trillions of dollars owed by poor nations if they implement democracy and respect human rights.

"Basically it is saying cancel debts, give people the opportunity of a new beginning," he said, proposing a six-month moratorium on debt repayment. If countries use that time to move toward democracy, the debts would be wiped out.

His 1984 Nobel prize for opposing apartheid, 48 honorary degrees and several human rights awards give Tutu the moral clout to make politicians and financiers at least listen.

Other issues pour into his office daily, via telephone, mail bag and fax machine. While talking with the AP, he was interrupted twice to do radio interviews by telephone.

"The kind of things that sort of land on your desk: 'Are you able to help in Nigeria . . . Can you come and help Liberia?' . . . getting calls from Rwanda, Burundi," said Tutu, who is in his second term as president of the All Africa Conference of Churches. "There's a dream of a slightly less hectic life, but it seems to be elusive."

Known for his kindness to friends and strangers alike, Tutu said his only regret about the activist life is a lack of time for his priests in South Africa.

"I have felt a niggling unhappiness," he said. "I want to be able to sit with clergy . . . help to participate with them in their problems, help to encourage them."

From his daily predawn jog until after morning prayers, Tutu keeps quiet, "just to tune in to the silence which is the soul's speech."

Anglican archbishops must step down at age 65, and the mere mention of the word "retire" has Tutu whooping with delight in his native Xhosa language: "Woza! Woza 1996!" (Come! Come 1996!)

When it finally arrives, he and his wife, Leah, plan to move to Atlanta for at least a year so he can take up a visiting professorship at Emory University.

"I hope it will give me time for reflection — and be a little more quiet — and perhaps write," he said. "We will be watching with great joy and pride our country going from strength to strength from a distance."

Former actor provokes, cajoles Gingrich in campaign

By Dan Sewell
Associated Press

DULUTH, Ga. — Newt Gingrich was not amused.

The House minority whip, his dream of becoming the first Republican Speaker of the House since 1954 tantalizingly close, had just crossed paths with his Democratic opponent, Ben Jones. The actor and former two-term congressman may not have much chance of defeating Gingrich, but he's having a ball using aggressive campaign tactics, Gingrich-style.

"Pathetic and childish," sniffed Gingrich, while an aide drove him from the Duluth Fall Festival where both candidates marched in a Saturday morning parade.

"Not a single positive idea ... he uses personal attacks ... he makes a rap video ... he uses foul language," said Gingrich, his pugnacious face stern.

Grinning and eyes twinkling, Jones recounted to supporters in a suburban Cobb County home that Gingrich had greeted him with a glower.

"He's never run against the Cooter before," Jones said, invoking the character he played on the hit TV series "The Dukes of Hazzard." "He's mad because we won't kiss his ring."

To Gingrich's outrage, Jones steadily levels allegations of ethics violations in the Republican's growing network of political, educational and fund-raising operations. On this day, Gingrich is riled by a free weekly newspaper quoting Jones directing an obscene suggestion his way.

"I can't see any reason to display that kind of behavior," Gingrich said.

Unrepentant, Jones says Gingrich calls him a liberal, an epithet in this conservative state: "If he's going to use the L-word, I'll use the F-word."

And so it goes in Georgia's 6th Congressional District race:

■ Jones, accusing Gingrich of dodging him, flew to Wisconsin this week to try to corner the congressman at a fundraising event. "If the Gingrich won't come to the Cooter, the Cooter will go to the Gingrich," he said, but left before Gingrich showed up.

■ People stop Gingrich, say they've seen him on C-Span, and ask him about health-care reform. People stop Jones, say they liked him on "Dukes," and ask whatever happened to the show's sexy Daisy.

■ Gingrich's campaign talk refers to futurist Alvin Toffler, cyberspace and plans to use computer networking for congressional bills and electronic town-hall hearings. Jones relies on such homespun references as "Newt's got enough money to burn a wet dog," imitations of Gingrich, Ross Perot and John F. Kennedy, and a joke about two drunks in a bar he tells simply because it gets a roar every time.

Gingrich says there is "a tidal wave" rolling against President Clinton and Democrats that could bring Republicans as many as 70 new seats in November. Probably not. But even the Democrats believe it'll be upwards of 25.

With 40 GOP gains, Gingrich could cap his dogged 16-year rise from west-Georgia college professor to national GOP leadership fashioned around an aggressive conservative ideology.

Gingrich is spending most of his campaign time helping other Republicans — he expects to have campaigned in 110 congressional districts by Election Day.

At home, he relies on name recognition so high that his campaign signs simply say: "NEWT" and the lure of having a Georgian lead the House.

"The choice in Georgia is going to be very simple," Gingrich told GOP activists — some wearing buttons urging "NEWT-er Cooter" — at a breakfast in Alpharetta. "Do you believe that a liberal Democrat from Spokane, Washington, is a better speaker of the House than a conservative from Georgia?"

Gingrich eked out a 974-vote victory in 1990 in a 6th District that ran southwest of Atlanta.

2-time victim tells how rapist no longer controls her life

By Cheryl Laird
Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — The first time Lanny Bevers got out of prison on parole, he found the person responsible for locking him up and raped her. Again.

This time, he also broke her leg and chopped off her thumb. Her daughter listened helplessly to her screams.

It won't happen again, La Vonne Skalias has vowed.

Her stalker-rapist is eligible for parole in the year 2005. By then, his two-time victim plans to have disappeared.

That's one reason Skalias detailed her assaults in the new book "Stalked" (The Summit Group, $19.95). She hopes the proceeds will fund her move to a new home and possibly pay for identity-changing plastic surgery.

"It's really hard for me to grasp that I have to give up my birthright and take a new name and start fresh," Skalias, now 47, said by phone from her home in Fort Worth, the scene of both attacks.

The first time, she was 30 years old. She was at home with her 5-year-old daughter, sleeping after a day's work as a secretary, when breaking glass startled her awake at 2 a.m. She ran into the hallway to find a young man coming at her with a butcher knife.

The next hour was a physical and psychological nightmare. One moment, the man would sexually assault her and threaten to kill her daughter. The next, as she prayed out loud, he would express remorse and try to clean up blood from her cut finger. Eventually, he left, leaving Skalias bleeding and naked.

A month later, police charged Lanny Gene Bevers Jr., a 21-year-old Army private who had shipped out to Germany after the attack. It took eight months to bring him back to Tarrant County for trial. He was convicted and sentenced to 20 years in prison.

When Skalias worried that he would come after her when he got out of jail, experts told her that rapists retaliate against their victims in only 1 percent of all cases. Still, she remembered Bevers' last words to her: "I'll get you and kill you when I get out if you tell on me."

Six years later, he was paroled. Skalias didn't find out about his release until he kicked in her bedroom door at 3 a.m. This time, he was wearing a stocking over his head. And this time, he was out of control with rage.

As Skalias' daughter, then 12, hid in her bedroom, unable to escape because of their new burglar bars, Bevers slashed at his victim. After two hours, Skalias escaped and crawled to her neighbor's house. Bevers ran away. Police found her daughter inside her bedroom, so stiff with fear they thought she was dead until she started screaming hysterically.

The police didn't believe Skalias when she said the rapist was Bevers, especially after she made a mistake in a photo-identification. They pursued another suspect. One month after the attack, Skalias went home from the hospital. She discovered that the horror hadn't ended. Phone calls began.

Skalias' daughter recognized the voice of the harassing caller. He told her, "I'm the man who (obscenity) your mother, and I'm going to (obscenity) you, too."

The police hooked up a tape recorder to the phone. For the next four months, Skalias and her daughter taped the rapist's threatening calls.

Eventually, police put surveillance on Bevers and caught him making a phone call to the Skalias home. Bevers was convicted of "retaliation" and sentenced to 15 years in prison. Later, he was convicted of the second rape and sentenced to life in prison.

Skalias was told that, in Texas, a life sentence actually means about 15 years in prison. Still, she felt relieved. That's enough time to start a new life, she said. It turned out to be enough time to help change the legal process that frustrated her so much during the two rape investigations.

Once a self-described "naive, introverted housewife," Skalias has since gained a reputation as a victim's hero. A TV movie of her story, called "Outrage in Texas," is in the works and is expected to be shown on ABC next year.

Skalias' testimony before the Texas legislature helped persuade members to pass a law that made stalking a crime. She stood next to Gov. Ann Richards when she signed the bill last year.

Are three heads better than one?

A three-headed, six-legged turtle was on display at a Taipei, Taiwan, department store Tuesday. The third head of the 2.3-inch turtle had retreated inside its shell.

Palestinians dig for their past

N.Y. Times News Service

JERICHO, West Bank — Picks and shovels sifted through the soft dirt, turning up shards of old pottery until they struck several rounded rocks about a foot below the surface. The rocks intrigued Professor Hamdan Taha, who heads the archeology department in the new Palestinian Authority.

Who knows? he said. Maybe they form the roof of an ancient house. Or maybe the top of a wall going back to the Hellenistic period, from the third to the first centuries B.C.

Then he shrugged.

Or maybe not, he said. It was too early to tell.

Whatever his diggers find, it will be a triumph because the important thing to them is that they are there at all. These are still days for chronicling "firsts" in the Palestinian self-rule that began four months ago in Jericho and the Gaza Strip, and Taha's workers certainly qualify as they poke beneath a barren field a mile north of this biblical town.

"This," said Iman Saca, the site supervisor, "is the first real Palestinian dig, arranged and run by Palestinians."

The excavation began last month and is taking place near Hisham's Palace, the well-preserved ruins of a winter residence built in the eighth century for a caliph of the Omayyad Dynasty. But while the location may have a royal bearing, no one would mistake the work for an Indiana Jones extravaganza.

It is a modest operation by any standard, confined to about 600 square yards and scheduled to last a month, with 10 volunteers and a budget of only $5,000 put up by a construction company that wants to build a motel there.

Before bulldozers churn up the dirt, Taha wants to detect what whispers of ancient secrets he can, and he has been able to delay the motel a bit and also to hold up two other construction projects in and around Jericho. Even if his findings prove to be meager, the archeologist says he has established an important principle: that the past must be respected as Palestinians head toward an uncertain future.

"In a sense, it's an archeological salvage operation," he said during a break under a sun that, already by midmorning, had no mercy. "We are trying to rescue what is here before the builders come in."

It promises to be a close race.

The need to build, for jobs and living space, is acute in the autonomous territories, especially Gaza, where poverty is a more obvious wound than in small and relatively sedate Jericho. Taha, who taught until recently at Bir Zeit University in the West Bank, said he has no illusions about holding back the tide of construction.

In fact, he is not even thinking about new digs in Gaza for the next five years. His main concern is to preserve existing sites there, including those chosen by Israel after it took control of the West Bank and Gaza in the 1967 Middle East war.

"We're just trying to minimize the damage," he said, gazing across a field that even before his arrival was scarred with deep holes left by scavengers who just grabbed whatever they thought might be marketable.

As the Palestinians try to get their self-rule out of low gear, they are preoccupied with matters like finances and security. But like an ancient vase, a dispute over archeology lies below the surface, and it is potentially explosive.

The issue is what to do about artifacts that Israeli researchers found over the years, not just in Jericho and Gaza but across the West Bank, which at some point is supposed to fall entirely under Palestinian control.

It is such a sensitive matter that negotiators for Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization agreed to set it aside for now along with other volatile questions like the future of Jerusalem and of Jewish settlements in the territories.

But the outlines of the problem are already plain, and each side cites international precedents to make its case.

Israeli archeologists say that Jewish treasures — most obviously the 2,000-year-old Dead Sea Scrolls, which were found from 1947 to 1956 in caves that lie in what is now called the West Bank — must remain the cultural property of the Jewish state.

Their Palestinian counterparts reply that anything discovered in the West Bank or Gaza, whatever its religious origin, is part of the Palestinian heritage.

"It belongs to the area from where it was removed," Taha said.

As a model, he cites Israel's own agreement with Egypt to give back all artifacts that it removed from the Sinai peninsula, which it had also captured in 1967 but returned entirely to the Egyptians as part of a 1979 peace treaty.

In turn, Israeli specialists argue that there is no comparison. The Palestinians never owned anything, they say, noting that Sinai was unquestionably a part of Egypt, which is a sovereign state — something the Palestinians have never had.

It will not be easy, or perhaps even possible, to keep politics out of his work, Taha acknowledged. But he insisted he would try.

COLLEGE FOOTBALL — Kansas St. at Kansas, 7 p.m., ESPN.

The NFL's worst

Since their last winning season in 1990, the Cincinnati Bengals have been one of the league's worst teams.

Emmitt still sore

IRVING — Emmitt Smith jogged around on his pulled hamstring on Wednesday but if it were a game, he couldn't have played.

The Dallas Cowboys running back said, "It's still up in the air whether I'll play on Sunday. The hamstring is still sore."

The Cowboys host the Arizona Cardinals on Sunday in Texas Stadium.

"I still have some work to do before I can get there," Smith said. "I think I've got a good shot. It has to be good enough that I can run full speed."

Smith pulled the hamstring in the first half of Sunday's 34-7 victory over the Washington Redskins.

A&M keeps Rice

HOUSTON — The Texas Aggies have no plans to play the University of Houston in football following next season's game but they are considering continuing their series with Rice University.

"We have had discussions about playing in the future, but we are really not planning to play them (Houston) again," A&M athletic director Wally Groff said.

Houston will host the No. 10 ranked Aggies in the Astrodome Saturday in the final game scheduled there between the Southwest Conference rivals.

After next season, the Aggies will become a member of the newly formed Big 12 Conference.

The Aggies could play again in Houston however against the Owls, who will become a member of the Western Athletic Conference.

Class AA to Abilene

ABILENE — Abilene is in line for professional baseball next spring.

City officials have reached an agreement with the Texas-Louisiana League for an expansion team in the independent Class AA league.

The agreement was based on the understanding that 1,500 season tickets would be sold and one of Abilene's existing baseball parks would be upgraded to Double-A standards.

League President Byron Pierce said no decision has been made on which park the new Abilene club would use.

Two league games played in Abilene last season drew an average of 4,200 fans per night, Pierce said.

Rangers open loop play

Joe D. Williams/Reporter-Telegram

Greenwood's Bucky Smith could play a big part in the Rangers' game with Reagan County Friday.

■ Reagan County's Owls aren't what they used to be, but they play the Greenwood Rangers Friday after improving week by week this year.

By Mike Butts
Staff Writer

Three weeks into the season, things looked pretty cushy for the Greenwood Rangers. They had racked up 74 points in two impressive wins and their district nemesis Reagan County had uncharacteristically stumbled to an 0-2-1 start.

But with a two-game winning streak, Reagan County has turned its season around just in time to play the Rangers Friday. Lucky Greenwood.

"We've had some pretty good scores against people and people started thinking we're pretty good," said Greenwood coach Bob Purser, whose 3-1 team this week received a vote for the Associated Press Class 3A state Top 10. "But all of a sudden you've got to put up or shut up. This is one of those Friday nights where you have to play."

■ Area Roundup

A Ranger win in the District 8-3A opener for both teams Friday at 7:30 p.m. in Greenwood would put an end to Reagan County's 14-game district winning streak and give Greenwood a 1-0 league start for the first time since 1991.

Despite losing their coach and several starters, Reagan County's Owls still figure to contest for one of the two playoff spots in 8-3A. And with Kermit, the early district favorite, struggling at 2-3, Friday's contest could help determine the district champ.

Greenwood coach Bob Purser doesn't underestimate the importance of the game.

"It's huge for us and for them, too," Purser said. "When you just have five district games, it's pretty much desperation from the start."

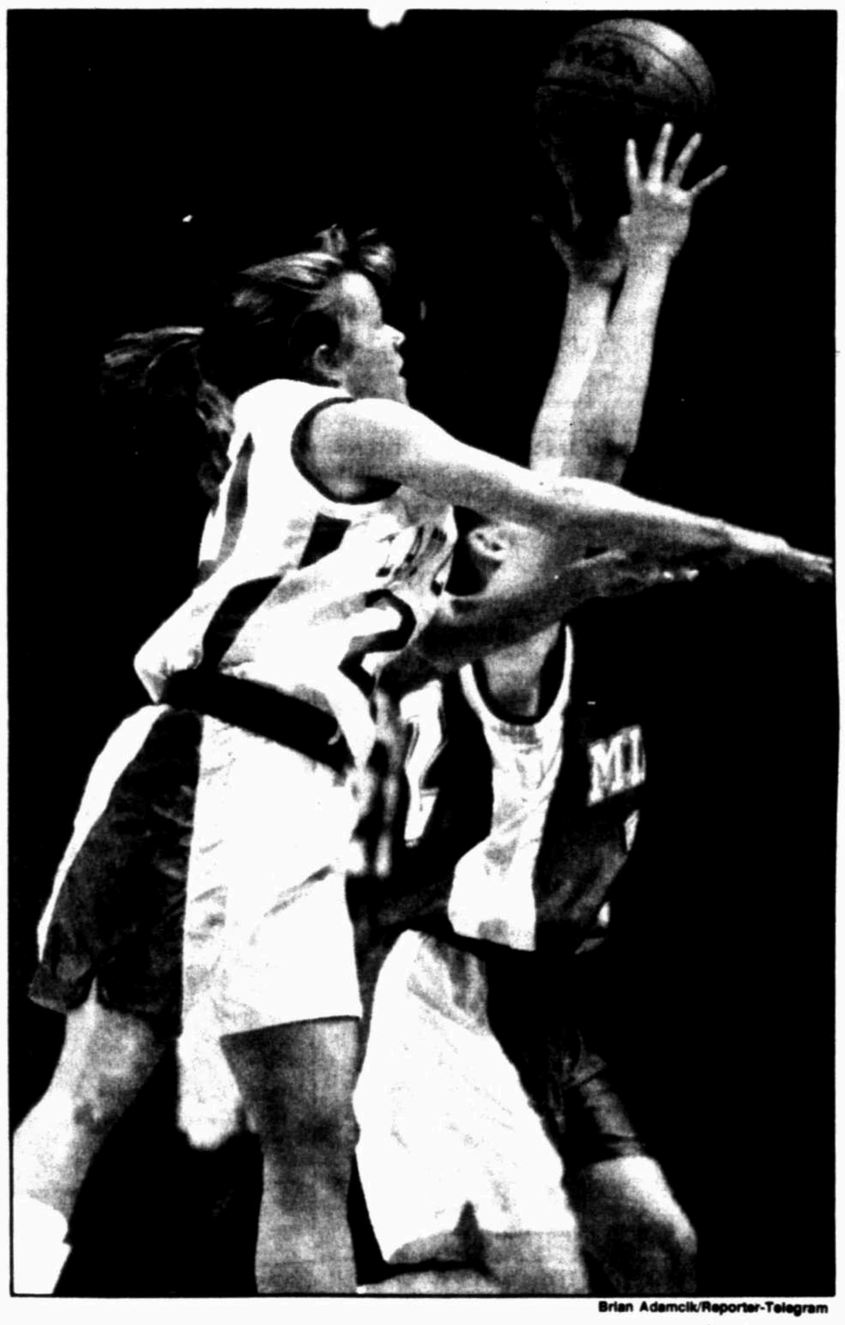

The Owls come off back-to-back 11-1 seasons, losing their last league game against Greenwood in '91, 21-7. But Reagan County and new coach David Steele opened the year with a scoreless tie against Ozona and then lost to No. 8 Ballinger 35-8 and Lamesa 34-12. They have rebounded with wins over Fort Stockton (39-8) and Brady (27-6).

Greenwood beat Fort Stockton 36-12 and lost to Ballinger 29-7.

"We've been playing a lot of inexperienced kids and now they have five games under their belts and they're experienced kids," Steele said. The Owls returned only two starters on offense and five on defense. "They're just getting a little bit better every week."

But on defense Steele's teams has been pretty good all year. They've allowed only 85 points, and it's that unit that

Midland College Lady Chap Amber Follis, left, defends as Pam Hicks leaps for a pass Wednesday at Chaparral Center as the MC men and women conduct intrasquad scrimmages at "Meet the Chaps" night.

MC women, men preview talents

New Lady Chaps look crisp

By Amy Wolfenbarger
Staff Writer

For those who missed the first-ever appearance of the Midland College women's basketball team on its home court Wednesday, the Lady Chaps are definitely going to be a show worth seeing by the beginning of November.

For the first time at the school, 14 freshmen and one sophomore came together wearing green and gold uniforms bearing the nickname Lady Chaps at the "Meet the Chaps" scrimmage at Chaparral Center.

And despite working on little but conditioning for the first month of classes, the women in green looked surprisingly crisp in a 20-minute, game-conditions intrasquad scrimmage. The game clock was stopped only for free throws.

"We're just getting started," said Midland coach Ron Jones. "It will be a lot different 30 days from now."

The Lady Chap season begins Nov. 3.

Despite the obvious lack of conditioning at this point in the year, the newcomers to the Chap Center seem to be developing strong chemistry.

"We developed chemistry from the first day," said Rashunda Jarmon, a freshman from Houston Northshore. "We're real close — like a family. Everybody gets along."

The Lady Chaps came out running, a strategy that will be a regular one according to Jones.

"Once we're in shape, we're going to apply pressure to the ball all the time," Jones said. "It's a style I like and it's a

Radford shines in exhibition

By Bill Petitt
Staff Writer

With only three players back from last season's National Junior College Tournament, Midland College Chaparral fans were spent plenty of time checking out their programs Wednesday night.

But it was a pair of familiar names from last year that shined during the team's intrasquad scrimmage at Chap Center.

Sophomore center Ben Radford scored 21 points and sophomore swingman A.J. Ashe bombed in 17 to lead the Chaps in scoring.

"I lived in the gym all summer," said Radford, who averaged 4.0 points and 1.5 rebounds per game for the Chaps last season. "I went to Tulsa, Okla., and played in a summer camp there. I'm a lot stronger and quicker than I was last year."

His quickness showed as he used a fast first step to beat his defender for three dunks and several easy shots.

"We're going to try and keep Ben in situations where he is comfortable," said new Midland men's coach Pat Rafferty, who joins the Chaps after serving as an assistant at Division I Drake last season. "We're going to have him play to his strengths as much as we can. Ben can really run and he's going to pose some quickness problems for some other big men and he's real explosive around the goal. He's going to challenge other big men to run the floor with him."

Rule changes designed to open up NBA

By Wendy E. Lane
AP Sports Writer

NEW YORK — Look for more outside shooting, less obstruction in the backcourt and milder trash-talking in the NBA this season under new rules approved Wednesday by the league's Board of Governors.

In voting for changes designed to increase scoring and decrease fighting, NBA owners addressed concerns that the game was being dominated by defense and overly physical play. Last season, neither the Houston Rockets nor the New York Knicks reached 100 points in the seven-game NBA Finals.

■ NBA labor talks/10C

"There's been a slight change in the game over the years, and the competition committee felt strongly it was time to open up the game a little bit," NBA commissioner David Stern said.

The most notable change is moving the 3-point line to a uniform 22 feet. Cur-

BILL PETITT

Writer returns to being a fan for a day

Sports writing has it's ironic side. Growing up I absorbed everything on television, on radio and in the newspapers about sports.

Petitt

As a kid in Lubbock, I would always cut out the Dirk West cartoons during the week so when the snows came and it was too cold to go outside I would have something to color and do while in the house.

But as a sports writer, sometimes the last thing you get to do is watch a sporting event for pleasure. Yes, sports writers cover a number of games, but following the event its back to the office to write a story, usually under the pressure of a deadline with midnight approaching. Most of the teams you cover you have no allegiance to, and the chore of being a journalist takes some of the flare from the games.

My mission, which I chose to accept last Saturday, was to travel to Austin and witness the Texas-Colorado game as a fan.

Donning blue jean shorts, a black T-shirt — with hot dog, popcorn, bottled water and program in hand — it was up to the 50th row on the upper deck at Memorial Stadium in Austin to watch the battle between two top 20 teams.

There racing across the field were some familiar faces. Shea Morenz of San Angelo Central, Josh Sumner of Odessa Permian and Joe Phillips of Midland High wearing the burnt orange.

Up in the stands, I was trying to learn the clapping cadence of the Texas fight song cheering for the Southwest Conference teams as their scores came across the public address system.

One thing that has not changed since my move from the bleachers to the press box are the fans. Small pockets of Colorado faithful dotted the sea of burnt orange. Three college-age Buff boosters, looking like yearling cut from the herd, would muster up some courage and stand and cheer when running back Rashaan Salaam ran for a chunk of his record-breaking 317 yards. Texas fans yelling at Morenz for not checking off and throwing to the second man. Another exclaiming that the 'Horns just were not the winners like in the past as he filed out following Neil Voskeritchian's 24-yard field goal to win the game.

Hands red from clapping, face red from the bright sun and a little drained, it felt good to be a fan again.

Baylor 42, SMU 20: The Bears defense should keep pressure on Ramon Flanigan. The Mustangs stayed close to North Carolina thanks to five turnovers. The Bears will not give the Ponies as many gifts.

Rice 24, Texas Tech 21: The Owls have won the past two games in Houston, but the Red Raiders have played beyond expectations this season. Rice has had two weeks to prepare for Tech while the Raiders played a physical game against A&M last week.

Texas 28, Oklahoma 20: If Morenz can play, the Longhorns should win. Oklahoma has not impressed despite its 3-1 record.

Texas A&M 60, Houston 6: A&M will come back after being embarrassed and nearly upset by Tech at home.

Last week 3-1, overall 25-6.

College of SW nips UTPB spikers

ODESSA — The College of the Southwest defeated the UTPB volleyball team 15-7, 15-10, 3-15, 16-14 here Wednesday evening.

With the loss, UTPB drops to 6-5 on the year. The Falcons will participate in the Northlake Community College Tournament in Irving this weekend.

Midlander Stephanie Saxon recorded three service aces for the Falcons in the loss.

Dedra Brooks of Seminole had 15 kills and seven solo blocks while defensive specialist Amy Rojo of Andrews accounted for seven digs in the loss.

"I thought the team played very well," said UTPB volleyball coach Steve Aicinena. "We were beaten very badly by this team in three games the first time we faced them and I thought we did a much better job this time."

Livingston-Bryan win RHCC tourney

Ken Livingston and Larry Bryan shot 63 to win Monday's NTPGA West Texas Chapter Pro-Assistant Low Ball Golf Tournament at the Ranchland Hills Country Club. The pair, playing out of RHCC, each won $300 dollars.

Finishing in a tie for second with 64s were Price Courter and Bart Craig of Hogan Park and Clay Kinnaird and Jon Wardlaw of Odessa Country Club.

Place, score and earnings in Monday's Pro-Assistant Low Ball Championship:
1. Ken Livingston-Larry Bryan (RHCC), 63, $300. 2. Price Courter-Bart Craig (Hogan Park), Clay Kinnaird-Jon Wardlaw (OCC) 64, $187.50. 4. Mike Stanfield-Jeff Sullivan (Ratliff Ranch), 65, $150. 5. Lanny Turrentine-David Turrentine (Big Spring CC), Shaun McDonald-Jeff Nunn (Gaines County CC), 72, $50.

Bulldog cagers get early ranking

According to Bob Springer's Texas Basketball Magazine, Midland High should be in for another big year when hoops play begins in November.

The Midland High girls, who advanced to the Region I semifinals last season, are ranked by the magazine as No. 14 in the state while senior Amy Alcala, the school's all-time leading scorer, is picked as a pre-season first team All-State player.

The Midland High boys, a state semifinalist last season, are ranked as No. 20 this year.

The Stanton girls are listed as the No. 15 pre-season pick in Class 2A while star player Laura Herm is a pre-season third team All-State selection and Sande Bundas honorable mention.

The magazine also lists MHS boys coach Jack Stephenson as owning one of the top 20 coaching records among active coaches in the state with a 370-203 (.646) mark over 18 seasons. Midland Lee's Jon House, who has had the Rebels in the playoffs two consecutive seasons, is listed at 249-125 (.666) for 12 seasons. MHS girls coach Jim Raughton owns a 205-62 (.768) record in just eight seasons as a head coach.

Other area boys coaches listed were George Byerly, Andrews, 330-262; Gerald Coppedge, 314-238 and Mark Owen, Abilene Cooper, 229-133.

Area girls coaches listed were Sam Nichols, Abilene High, 417-178; and Terry Simpson, Lamesa, 204-156.

The Rankin boys are the preseason favorite to win District 25-A while Big Spring and Andrews are said to be in a battle for the top spot in District 4-4A.

No feud between Buddy, Barry

IRVING, Texas (AP) — Don't look for a Jimmy Johnson-style feud between Buddy Ryan and Barry Switzer.

When he was at Philadelphia, Ryan had a running exchange of verbal needles with Johnson that heated up the series between the Eagles and the Dallas Cowboys.

Rookie coach Switzer drew praise from Arizona coach Ryan on Wednesday in a telephone exchange with area media, saying, "Barry paid his dues. He also was the most successful college coach. Every time I saw him play he won. His players always respected him."

Ryan said Switzer called him during the summer "to apologize for something he had been quoted as saying in a magazine. I wasn't sure what it was all about but we had a good conversation. He's a highly successful coach."

Switzer said he's not going to get into any exchanges with Ryan, although the Cowboys have been promised "an old-fashioned woodshed situation."

"It serves no purpose and has no effect on the players," Switzer said. "I've never gotten into anything like that. I like Buddy."

Switzer did have his moments at Oklahoma when he got into some word fights with then Texas coach Darrell Royal that made the annual meeting between the Sooners and Longhorns even more bitter.

Ryan was 8-2 against the Cowboys when he was at Philadelphia. Asked his formula to success, he said, "at Philadelphia we had to make a special game out of it. It was the only way we could turn things around. We had to have a change of attitude."

He added, "You can usually beat anybody if you decide to beat 'em."

Ryan brings his Cardinals to Texas Stadium on Sunday after his first victory in Phoenix, 17-7 over the Minnesota Vikings.

He said the Cowboys still look tough to him without Johnson.

"You can't tell they miss Jimmy by looking at film," Ryan said. "You don't know how things are going in the lockerroom."

He said he doesn't get any more pleasure out of beating the Cowboys than any other team.

"We've dug ourselves a hole and the Cowboys are in the way," Ryan said.

Ryan expects his usual warm greeting from the Dallas fans.

"One year they threw pork chops and another time it was water balloons," Ryan said.

It beat what happened to Johnson in Philadelphia.

He was peppered once by snowballs, including one that had a battery inside.

Switzer said controversy is Ryan's lifeblood.

"It's his style, it's his life, and his personality," Switzer said. "It's kind of the way he's always done things."

NHL players reject league proposals

NEW YORK (AP) — NHL players rejected two new proposals from the league Wednesday, and one owner said he is certain there will be no labor agreement by Oct. 15.

The league and the union spent six hours bargaining, the second day of contract negotiations since commissioner Gary Bettman shut down the start of the season for at least two weeks.

After turning down two offers from the owners, the players said they would come back with a counter-proposal "in a day or two."

"We're going to put together a proposal that will be responsive to the owners' needs," said Kelly Miller, player representative of the Washington Capiltals. "Hopefully, they'll take it seriously."

Union head Bob Goodenow said he would stay in New York to craft the new proposal. Bettman said he expected the parties to return to negotiations "in the next day or two."

The season was to have started last Saturday, and through Wednesday 26 games have been postponed. Bettman has said he hoped to begin the season Oct. 15 provided there was sufficient progress toward a labor agreement.

But none of the owners held out any hope for reaching a new collective bargaining agreement before Oct. 15, the target date for starting the season.

"I don't think we're going to be able to reach an agreement," said John McMullen, owner of the New Jersey Devils. "It's over."

"The lines are hardening," said Howard Baldwin, owner of the Pittsburgh Penguins. "I'm very disappointed, very frustrated."

Harry Sinden, president and general manager of the Boston Bruins, said he expected exactly what he got from union head Bob Goodenow — "hopelessness."

Thomas: Kelly takes over

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y. (AP) — Jim Kelly "told the coaches to get out" and called an offense-only meeting Wednesday to discuss the unit's mediocre performance against Chicago last week, running back Thurman Thomas said.

"As Marv was up on the stand talking to us, I just kind of looked over at Jim and Jim was just like going like this (rolling his eyes)," Thomas said.

"All of the sudden, we broke down. Jim just told the coaches to get out. I didn't really see no call for it or anything, but it was something that he wanted to express, what we had to do as an offense.

"It wasn't pointing fingers, it was just a meeting where we said we've got to pick up the pace of the no-huddle, we've got to stop making the silly mistakes, penalties, fumbles and interceptions and things like that.

"I think everybody's got to look at themselves and say, 'Hey, I've got to get the job done or they're going to put somebody else in there.'"

The Bills were penalized 10 times and had three turnovers on Sunday in a 20-13 loss to the Bears. Kelly was 19 of 36 for 116 yards, with two interceptions and one touchdown.

Thomas did not play in the game because of a knee sprain. He said Wednesday he felt better and expected to be ready for Sunday's game against Miami.

Daly loses sponsorship

CHICAGO (AP) — John Daly, who withdrew from the PGA Tour last month because of personal problems, lost his sponsorship Wednesday with Wilson Sporting Goods Co.

The company said it has suspended its contract with Daly.

Wilson said it will resume its relationship with him under a "restructured agreement" once the company is satisfied Daly has met "specific behavioral and performance objectives."

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 6, 1994

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Romance remains high on your list of priorities. Loved ones will be unusually supportive. Strong-willed and adventurous, you welcome new intellectual challenges! Creative ventures flourish in 1995. Others will be eager to board your success train. Be more discriminating when socializing with work associates. Luck helps you improve your financial standing.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actress Stephanie Zimbalist, auto racer Mike McLaughlin, baseball player Ruben Sierra, tennis great Helen Wills.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You should be able to carry out most of your plans without opposition today. Influential people are assessing your work. Contracts can be signed. Avoid burning the candle at both ends. Get more rest!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A message from overseas brings good news. Money could come from an unexpected source. Unsettled conditions affect romance or your finances. Emphasize ethics and morality in your business dealings. Tap into your artistic talents.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Adopt a confident, positive attitude and business associates will jump on your bandwagon. Conventional methods will work best if you are trying to boost sales. Join the high-tech generation — invest in a computer.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): The success of a business or personal plan depends on what you do next. Exercise caution. Partnerships could have their ups and downs. The object of your affections may be having second thoughts. Think positively!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Put your intellectual curiosity to work. Acquiring more knowledge will put you on the cutting edge of science. A radio or television program could catch your fancy. A retiree begins a lucrative second career.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Use the healing power in your hands. Working in a garden or learning a craft will put you in touch with nature. Play it safe in financial matters. Do not rush into romance.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Happily, you and your co-workers are on the same wavelength now. Team efforts will spark increased profits. Extra self-discipline will help you reach a long-cherished goal. Romance looks sublime!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Your hunches pay big dividends today. Make better use of your energies. Catch up on a backlog of paperwork and overdue phone calls. Inviting a family member to dinner will lead to new rapport.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Put proposed projects on hold while you complete business assignments already underway. Close attention to detail is essential. A longtime relationship may be less than exciting now. Put some pizzazz into it! Be romantic.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Stay alert to what is going on around you. A letter or gift could contain a hidden message. Give mate a helping hand on the home front. Expanding your social horizons boosts your spirits.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Do not let procrastination be your undoing. Buckle down to work! Look for a way to earn money from a favorite hobby. Keep your entertainment plans simple, combining business with pleasure whenever practicable.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Romance moves into high gear. Current financial trends will work in your favor. A former foe proves to be a valuable new ally. Conduct your own research before presenting a special plan to higher-ups.

There is one remarkable difference in the way a novice and an expert play their cards. The newcomer to the game tends to take 'pot luck,' contributing the card that is nearest to the thumb when not winning a trick, and often not taking a trick with the lowest of touching cards, thus leaving partner to guess what is going on. The expert tries to make every card tell a story to guide partner to the winning defense.

Note North's raise to three no trump. With a hand that surely must produce six or seven tricks for partner, three no trump should be a cakewalk while there might not be the values to stretch to 11 tricks at a diamond contract.

West led a low heart, covered by the ten and king and won by the ace. Next came the jack of diamonds, and it is here that one can gauge the caliber of the West defender.

Some players would discard a low club but, on winning the queen after declarer plays low from dummy, East cannot possibly know that it is vital to shift to spades to defeat the contract. More than likely East will persist with a heart, and declarer will wrap up 10 tricks.

Among those Wests who realize that a spade shift is more attractive are a group who would signal with the ten of spades. That will have the desired effect, and the defenders will rake in three spade tricks to go with their diamond, holding declarer to nine tricks.

The expert solves the problem neatly by discarding the jack of hearts! That tells partner not to continue hearts, but to shift to the higher-ranking of the other suits, or spades. (A low heart discard would ask for a club switch.) Now the defenders can take four spades and a diamond for a one-trick set.

Role introduces Dana Delany to world of spike heels, whips

LOS ANGELES — Dana Delany's latest role introduced her to a little discipline, the kind with spike heels and whips.

The former "China Beach" star plays a whip-cracking dominatrix in the movie "Exit to Eden," opening Oct. 14.

"I had a dominatrix consultant and she introduced me to people who were into the scene," she said in an "Entertainment Tonight" interview to be broadcast Thursday. "The main thing I got out of it was how normal these people were."

She thinks her fans will like her character.

"It's fun, fantasy stuff," she said. "And I think they'll get a few tips that they can bring home with them."

NEW YORK — Food is a passion for "60 Minutes" correspondent Morley Safer, and he's not bashful about flavorings.

"You can never have enough garlic. With enough garlic you can eat The New York Times," he said in an interview in — what else? — Wednesday's food section of the Times.

Food is a passion for Morley Safer of "60 Minutes."

Safer gathers culinary mementos on his travels for the CBS program, everything from foie gras from France to spices from Asia.

"I love Vietnamese food, but it's too intricate for me to cook," he said. "The ingredients have to be so incredibly fresh. It's interesting how important food is in the poorest of societies. They lack in so many areas, but they go the extra mile for food."

BERKELEY, Calif. — One, two, three, what're we fightin' for? Rock 'n' roll history is what.

Folk singer Country Joe McDonald is fighting to save a favorite small music hall of the 1960s from conversion to a homeless center.

"I'm not against the homeless. But why does the city have to rip out this auditorium?" he asked on Monday after the city proposed to move Berkeley Oakland Support Services into the Berkeley Veterans Memorial Building auditorium, a favorite venue for McDonald, the Grateful Dead and others.

McDonald's musical career started in Berkeley and peaked with his Woodstock perfrormance of his anti-war anthem "Feel-Like-I'm-Fixiin'-to-Die Rag."

After McDonald's protests, Mayor Jeff Leiter said the city may not rip up the hall after all.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Merle Haggard's life on the road sounds like one of his own doleful songs.

"We've blown two transmissions and an engine in the last 45 days," he said of his tour bus. "There's been all sorts of unbelievable hindrances. Stuck in airports all day."

"Every time something happens," he said, "one of my guys will say 'Yeah, but you're going into the Hall of Fame.'"

On Wednesday night, he was to be inducted into the Country Music Hall of Fame.

His hits have included "I Think I'll Stay Here and Drink," "If We Make It Through December" and "Are the Good Times Really Over?"

LEXINGTON, Ky. — Performing turned Naomi Judd's life around.

"When I was up on that stage, all the sudden my life made sense," she told the Kentucky Woman '94 conference Tuesday. "I could see myself in you all."

Performing turned Naomi Judd's life around, she says.

The six-time Grammy winner spoke of her teenage pregnancy, single motherhood and abusive relationships. She also discussed life in the limelight, and of having a savings account and insurance for the first time at age 37.

Judd and daughter Wynonna rocketed to stardom in the 1980s as The Judds. She retired from singing in 1991 after being diagnosed with with chronic hepatitis. She said the disease is now in complete remission.

LOS ANGELES — Spike Lee will write and direct a movie about baseball great Jackie Robinson and says he's discussed the role with Denzel Washington.

"I see this as a great American epic, the same way we saw Malcolm X's life. We're going to treat the subject like that," Lee said after sealing the rights last week with Robinson's widow. "This is about American history."

Washington starred in Lee's "Malcolm X."

Robinson was the first black in the major leagues, breaking in with the Brooklyn Dodgers in 1947.

NBA: Rules could unclog lane

rently the arc is 22 feet in the corners but extends to 23 feet, 9 inches beyond the top of the key.

In addition to boosting offense, the league also hopes the adjustment will require teams to defend the perimeter more and unclog the lane.

Under another rule change, a player fouled while taking a 3-pointer will get three free throws.

The league also prohibited hand-checking from the end line in the backcourt to the opposite foul line.

"By enforcing the hand-checking, that will clear up a part of the game that had gotten out of hand," said Rod Thorn, the NBA's vice president of operations.

"All players were taught in their early stages that defense was done with your feet. It (hand-checking) started with us. If you're used to grabbing and holding people, you'll have to adjust."

In response to a spate of fights during last year's playoffs, including a brawl between the Knicks and the Bulls that broke out right in front of Stern, the league also stiffened penalties for players who leave the bench during an altercation.

Players who do so will receive an automatic suspension of at least one game and fined a maximum of $20,000.

"We were appalled by a couple of ugly incidents during the playoffs," Thorn said. "We understand that emotions run high, but we will not tolerate brawls."

Other rule changes adopted:

More Sports/10C

—When a player has a clear path to the basket, a two-shot foul will be called if a defender grabs him in the backcourt.

—Players who commit two flagrant fouls in a game will be ejected.

—Officials will more strictly enforce rules against trash-talking and taunting, calling a technical when a player says something that could escalate into a fight.

—Fines for technical fouls will increase to $500, up from $100 for the first one and $150 for the second.

—The second or more of back-to-back timeouts when the ball is not inbounded can be no longer than 45 seconds.

QB Frazier will probably miss rest of season

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) — Nebraska quarterback Tommie Frazier, hospitalized with a blood clot in his right leg, is all but certain to miss the rest of the season.

A doctor Wednesday recommended surgery and said Frazier, once a leading contender for the Heisman Trophy, should have no physical contact for three to six months.

Dr. Deepak Gangahar, a cardiovascular surgeon, said the 20-year-old junior from Bradenton, Fla., should remain in the hospital for a week to 10 days for an operation.

"Medicine is an inexact science," Gangahar said from Bryan Memorial Hospital. "But as it goes today that is my recommendation to the coach."

WOMEN: Follis, Dunn run offense

style that the players enjoy."

Running the offense for the Lady Chaps were freshmen Amber Follis and Roslynn Dunn. Follis is a 5-foot-3 point guard from Dayton Barber's Hill. Follis was impressive with her ball handling skills against a press and showed talent in the assist department.

Dunn, 5-8 from Plainview, stood out on defense. Dunn finished with four points, including a steal on the press which led to a layup.

Other perimeter players for the Lady Chaps are 5-7 Tiffany Rhodes from Houston Cypress Creek, 5-7 Shannon Jordan from Meadow, 5-5 Pam Hicks from Winnsboro, 5-8 Tomenia Porter from Jacksonville, 5-10 Shandi Stabeno from Slaton, 5-11 Stacie Johnson from Blommington and 5-9 Holly Houston from Slaton. All are freshmen.

Houston and Porter accounted for 10 points and had a three-pointer each. Jordan had four points while Stabeno and Johnson accounted for the other two three-pointers.

On the front line 6-3 Joanna Kailahi is the cream of the crop. The only sophomore on the squad, Kailahi hails from Templeview, New Zealand.

Kailahi came out in the first four minutes and hit 5-of-5 and made one free throw for a team-leading 11 points.

"Joanna will have to be a leader since she has the only experience," Jones said. "She's a strong force under the basket."

Also at front line positions were Midland's own Brandy Wright and Deborah York. Wright, a 6-footer from Greenwood, had five points, while York, a 6-footer from Midland Lee, failed to score but gathered a good share of defensive rebounds.

Also inside was 5-10 Jarmon, who scored 10 points, Nikki Helm, 5-10 from Plano East and Keona Carter, 6-0 from Mustang, Okla. Carter, one of only two non-Texans on the team, is the niece of Joe Carter, the Toronto Blue Jays star.

The Lady Chaps will get their first real test Nov. 3. But Jarmon already answered one of the most important questions: Why would anybody want to try their luck on a first-year team and 14 just as new teammates?

"We're going to make history," said Jarmon. "It's a challenge. Somebody has to start it."

The Lady Chaps made their first marks in the history book Wednesday and Midlanders would be well-advised not to miss any more of the saga.

MEN: Chaparrals open season at home Nov. 4

(From 1C)

Ashe sat out the spring semester last season after transferring from Southern Mississippi. The time off didn't show in his shooting touch as he rattled two three-pointers home for part of his 17 points.

William Sims, a 6-foot-4 freshman from Tuscon, Ariz., scored 11 points and Crane freshman center Michael Carrasco added 10 points.

Fort Worth Dunbar freshman D'Juan Baker scored eight points.

Kevin Rice, Midland's only returning starter off the 31-6 squad, scored four points in a game that saw players interchange often, switching teams.

"I like (the ability to move players around)," said Rafferty. "We've got some versatility with all our guys. We've got some guys that can play a couple of spots. Even though we're not real big...There's only a couple of guys that we are going to keep at one position.

"What we are trying to teach them right now is to play hard and learn how to practice hard. You're going to make mistakes, but if you hustle and if you are playing hard something good is going to come from it and that's what we are trying to encourage."

Midland College opens the 1994-95 season Nov. 4 when they host Ranger Junior College in the Chaparral Classic.

Baseball owners could put freeze on signings

NEW YORK (AP) — Baseball owners told players Wednesday they may impose a 45-day freeze on signings, leading the union to raise concerns about collusion, which already has cost teams $280 million.

Owners on Monday asked the union to agree to a 45-day freeze and to postpone the start of free agent filing from Oct. 15 to Nov. 30. In the first significant meeting between the sides since the World Series was canceled last month, management lawyer Chuck O'Connor went to the union offices Wednesday to argue the owners' case.

"This is an attempt to preserve the ability to resolve the central economic issue," O'Connor said.

Union officials, led by assistant general counsel Lauren Rich, said they will discuss the matter and meet again Friday, after union head Donald Fehr returns from Los Angeles. Union officials believe a delay may give management additional time to figure out how to impose the salary cap owners want.

"We understand why why it's an advantage to the clubs to freeze things for 45 days," Rich said. "We asked, 'What, if any, benefit this could be to the players?'"

Acting commissioner Bud Selig said he foresaw the union's reluctance.

"I can't say I'm surprised," he said. "I believe it's in both parties' best interests. It gives both parties the opportunity to get back to the table."

Owners say they are concerned about players signing contracts before new rules are established, either by imposition or agreement. Only two players, Lenny Harris and Thomas Howard of Cincinnati, have signed since the strike began. As many as 184 players potentially are eligible for free agency.

"They are concerned about the uncertainty," Rich said. "The uncertainty is created solely by the clubs' desire to implement or their stated threat to implement or (that) they're thinking of implementing."

O'Connor, in a response to a question from the union, said owners may consider declaring the freeze without an agreement from the players. Union officials told him the union might view that as acting in concert, which is prohibited under the labor agreement, which expired last December and remains in effect.

Arbitrators found owners guilty of collusion following the 1985, 1986 and 1987 seasons, leading to a $280 million settlement, believed to be the largest arbitration settlement in American labor history. Provisions for tripling any damages were added to the collective bargaining agreement in 1990.

O'Connor said owners could unilaterally eliminate the anti-collusion clause. The union probably would challenge that action.

Prices ease

NEW YORK — Oil and gasoline futures moved lower Wednesday after weekly inventory figures released the night before showed larger-than-expected supplies.

West Texas Intermediate for delivery in November settled at $18.01 per barrel, down seven cents on the New York Mercantile Exchange.

After trading ended Tuesday, the American Petroleum Institute reported larger gains in the nation's supplies of crude oil last week than many analysts had predicted.

Also, the API figures showed a small increase in gasoline production despite expectations that refineries had reduced output to retool for winter heating oil production.

Crude futures also suffered on the expectation that Brazil's oil workers would approve an agreement Wednesday night to end their strike.

Natural gas prices were lower, with contracts for delivery in November settling at $1.664 per 1,000 cubic feet, down 2.8 cents.

Dollar weakens

NEW YORK — The dollar fell against other key currencies Wednesday, weakening with bond prices that dropped after a strong factory orders report contributed to inflation fears.

The dollar fell most prominently against the British pound and dipped against the Japanese yen and German mark as investors fled dollar-denominated assets, most notably in the U.S. bond market.

Gold prices were mixed. On New York's Commodity Exchange, gold for current delivery fell 40 cents a troy ounce to $392.20.

In New York, the dollar fetched 99.55 yen, down from 99.63.

Other late dollar rates in New York: 1.5435 marks, down from 1.5460; 1.2795 Swiss francs, down from 1,2810; 1.3453 Canadian dollars, up from 1.3488; 5.2745 French francs, down from 5.2810; 1,570 lire, down from 1,559.

Silver traded in London at $5.63 a troy ounce, up 5 cents. On the Comex, silver for current delivery fetched $5.607, up 1.5 cents.

Stocks lose

NEW YORK — The specter of higher interest rates drove stock prices sharply lower for the second consecutive day on Wednesday, but buying late in the session erased most of the losses.

The Dow Jones industrial average fell 13.79 to 3,787.34, after recovering from a loss of more than 50 points.

Declining issues outnumbered advancers by about 13 to 4 on the New York Stock Exchange. Volume was heavy at 359.60 million shares, up from 325.55 million Tuesday.

Signs send Wall Street reeling

Factory-order rise hints economic strength, higher rates

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Factory orders increased more rapidly in August than they had in nearly two years, a fresh sign of economic strength and possible inflation that sent Wall Street reeling.

Analysts said the economy's vigor will lead soon to higher interest rates.

The Commerce Department said Wednesday that factory orders, which help measure future production, surged 4.4 percent in August, the biggest increase since they rose 5.6 percent in December 1992. Orders fell 2 percent in July.

Shipments, a measure of current production, did even better. They increased 4.5 percent for their best showing in 15 years.

"This is a lot stronger than expected. It's more evidence that manufacturing is strong. We can't dismiss it as a fluke," said economist Carl Palash of MCM Moneywatch in New York City. "The Federal Reserve is going to have to tighten credit one or two more times this year."

And, he said, "the market reaction is reasonable given the economy's underlying strength."

Financial markets plunged after the report was announced but recovered lost ground later in the day. Bond prices were down sharply as the yield on the benchmark 30-year Treasury bond rose to a two-year high of 7.94 percent. The Dow Jones industrial average, which had fallen more than 50 points during the day, closed off nearly 14 points. Losing stocks outnumbered gainers by more than 3 to 1.

Factory orders have risen 11 times in the past 13 months.

They were expected to improve in August as automakers reopened plants after closing for two weeks in July to retool for 1995 models.

But the August surge was broad-based, with orders for non-durable goods such as food, fuel and clothing climbing 2.5 percent, the 10th straight gain and the largest since August 1990. Orders increased in all major industries except leather goods.

Jerry Jasinowski, president of the National Association of Manufacturers, insisted the gains were moderate.

"Manufacturing orders continue at a healthy pace that should yield growth of 2.5 percent in the third quarter," he said. "These numbers are not too strong and not too weak. We have the capacity for 3 percent growth without inflation."

The gross domestic product, which measures total goods and services produced in the United States, increased at an annual rate of 4.1 percent in the second quarter on top of 3.3 percent in the first quarter.

Hospital-chain deal could spur more closures

Associated Press

NEW YORK — The nation's top two hospital chains plan to become one in a $5.4 billion merger that they say will create a super-efficient health-care company, able to cut costs while maintaining quality.

Industry analysts said Wednesday that those goals will be met, at least partially, by closing hospitals that don't make enough money.

Columbia-HCA Healthcare Corp.'s purchase of HealthTrust Inc., announced late Tuesday night, creates a health-care juggernaut with 311 hospitals, 60,000 beds and 125 outpatient centers in 37 states and two foreign countries.

It's the latest example of a merger craze in the health-care industry that has made multibillion dollar deals nearly routine. Hospitals, clinics, drug companies and others are growing to remain profitable in the face of pressure from customers to control costs.

Louisville-based Columbia was founded in 1987 and has been on an acquisition binge for more than a year. It is hoping to dominate local markets across the country for a wide variety of health services.

It has bought or established hospitals, outpatient surgery centers, nursing homes, home-health programs, outpatient rehabilitation centers and psychiatric centers, among others. Its biggest acquisitions have been hospital companies Galen Health Care Inc. of Louisville and Hospital Corp. of America of Nashville. This year, it bought Medical Care America, the country's largest operator of outpatient surgery centers.

"Health care historically has been a fragmented industry, lacking accountability and quality standards," Richard L. Scott, Columbia's founder, president and chief executive, said in announcing the merger. "As we bring providers together into an integrated system, we can improve quality and efficiency and realize within this industry the benefits that size has created within other American industries."

While Scott said none of Columbia's facilities have yet been targeted for closure or sale, analysts say it's inevitable. Many of hospitals owned by Nashville-based HealthTrust are small, underused facilities in rural areas, while some others are near Columbia's existing hospitals.

IRS fraud costs U.S. $5 billion a year, group says

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — The Treasury Department is sending checks for as much as $5 billion a year — about 7 percent of all annual returns — to taxpayers who make fraudulent claims for refunds, according to an independent group that has been studying the problem since June.

The examination of the refunds arose out of concern that by increasing its emphasis on electronic filing, the Internal Revenue Service has helped make refund fraud easier. "It was an eye-opener," said one person involved closely with the group's work who spoke on the condition of anonymity.

"I was surprised it was that high."

The study group concentrated on fraud involving refunds because it is presumably easier to prevent this money being paid out than to find, levy and collect tax involving other sources of cheating, like unreported income.

Although congressional overseers, including the General Accounting Office, have expressed concern about fraud for some time, this was the first time the magnitude of the problem has been formally estimated.

The panel set $1 billion as the minimum amount of annual fraud, but this was said to be highly conservative to reflect the fact that criminal fraud requires intentionally false or misleading statements that are different from negligence, misunderstanding or error.

"The problem of tax refund fraud is serious, and it demands action," Ronald K. Noble, under secretary of the treasury for enforcement, said in a statement prepared for his appearance on Thursday before a House oversight panel to deliver the study group's findings. "We in the Treasury and the Internal Revenue Service have taken action to try to insure that nothing like these amounts will be paid out in the future."

Noble was appointed in April by Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen to be the chairman of the review group on refund fraud. The review was largely carried out by the study group directed by Stephen A. Saltzburg, a professor at George Washington University's National Law Center. Bentsen also chose Joyce J. Walker, a financial planner and a former Deputy Associate Director of the Office of Management and Budget, as manager of the group.

The group presented a list of possible remedies for IRS consideration, including abolition of its direct deposit indicator, in effect the go-ahead for a bank to advance money to a taxpayer who has filed electronically and is due a refund. But the group stopped short of making recommendations.

Frank Keith, a spokesman for the IRS, said the agency was "gratified" that the group recognized "the difficult task we face in stopping questionable refunds from going out the door."

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Rule affects IRA life-expectancy calculations

By Bill Doyle

Q: I will be 70 1/2 next year and will be required to start making withdrawals from my two individual retirement accounts by April 1 the following year. These IRAs were acquired when I received a lump-sum retirement benefit and from my husband's lump sum when he died.

Doyle

Since then, I have remarried. My present husband also has an IRA. He and I made premarital agreements, each naming the children from our first marriages as our IRA beneficiary.

Will I be required to base my IRA withdrawals on the joint life expectancy of myself and my present husband, or on the life expectancy of myself and my two children?

A: The mandatory minimum withdrawals will be based on the joint life expectancy of you and your children. That makes sense. After all, they are the beneficiaries. However, you must calculate that expectancy as if the beneficiary is no more than 10 years younger than you.

That "no more than a decade age difference" rule prevents IRA participants from passing the accounts along to young beneficiaries and, thus, keeping the IRA going generation after generation. The "R" in "IRA" stands for retirement, at which time the money in the account is supposed to be withdrawn and used.

Q: What is the logic, if any, in forcing an IRA participant to gradually remove his money after passing age 70½? I worked hard for the money I chose to put into my IRA, rather than spend. Why can't I leave it there?

A: You are ignoring the fact that you received a big tax break by putting money into your IRA. In exchange for that, the Internal Revenue Service gets its bite when you take money out.

Annual IRA contributions of up to $2,000 generally reduced your taxable income by a similar amount. Even if you made after-tax IRA contributions, the earnings on your IRA remain deferred from income tax until withdrawn.

Q: I have been a full-time employee at a company for 10 years. During that time, I have managed to save $40,000 in the 401(k) retirement plan and about $7,000 in an IRA.

Next fall, I would like to quit my job and go back to school full time for one year. I will need about $8,000 for tuition. Since I have no other way to get the money I need, will the IRS let me borrow from my 401(k) without penalty and tax?

A: Perhaps. The answer depends on the provisions of that 401(k) plan.

Some plans permit participants to borrow; some don't. Those plans allowing borrowing generally do so under favorable conditions and at reasonable interest rates, but do set restrictions on the use of money borrowed. Check it out with your employer's personnel department.

You cannot borrow from your IRA for any purpose. Legislation has been introduced in Congress several times to lift, or at least ease, that ban, especially for first-time home buyers. To date, no such proposal has been voted into law.

RANGERS: Wishbone averaging 350

most concerns Purser.

"The only points they gave away were to Lamesa and Ballinger and Lamesa had three or four big plays that were unusual plays that they scored points on," Purser said. "I may be wrong, but I think defensively they're better than anybody we've played, even Ballinger."

The Owls run out of a base I formation on offense and run less option plays than in past years. They throw about 15 times a game, Steele said, more than past seasons.

"They don't have all the tools they had the last few years," Purser said, "but they still make a lot of plays and they have two backs who played last year."

Senior Billy Hodge leads the Owls in rushing while splitting time with last year's 1,000-yard rusher Joe Ramirez. Junior Jarrod Morrison is the team's new quarterback. Linebacker Cesar Ramirez plays a key role on defense and junior Eric Dodd has come off the junior varsity to spark the offensive line.

Greenwood's wishbone, led by quarterback Josh Jones and running back Bucky Smith, averages over 350 yards per game.

"We're going to have to try to maintain control of the offensive and defensive lines and not get driven off the line (on defense)," said Steele, who replaced Sam Harrell at Reagan County after compiling a 16-30-2 mark at 2A Gruver. "They have a good power lifting program and their kids are strong."

Purser is a little incredulous about his team's showing up in the AP poll.

"I can't imagine where that vote came from," Purser said. "Obviously, we're not in that (Top 10) category. I think we could get better and be one of the top teams in this region."

Friday night's a good place to start.

BIG SPRING came off three weeks of good play and then fell off against Levelland, losing 28-7. The Steers open District 4-4A by playing host to 4-1 Lake View.

"I think we got off the bus at Brownfield," Steer coach Dwight Butler said of the Levelland loss. "We just didn't show up ... we looked like we were running in quicksand."

Butler gives no credence to the theory that Lake View's record is inflated by weak opposition.

"They played some good people," Butler said. "Lampassas was ranked close to No. 20, Brownwood is a perennial good team, and they played Del Rio which is a 5A team that made the playoffs last year. I think people are worried and try to convince themselves they are not very good.

"If the same (Big Spring) team shows up this week that showed up the week before, it could be 50-0."

With a 34-20 win over Christoval, previously 3-1, last week, GARDEN CITY (2-2-1) seems much improved. The Bearkats ditched the wishbone they began the year with and have gone back to the I formation with Bryan Harp the main man in the backfield. Harp has carried the ball 55 times in Garden City's last two games, both wins, for 328 yards.

But the Bearkats will open District 11-1A at Sterling City (4-1) this week probably without quarterback Brent Seidenberger, who separated his shoulder against Christoval.

Garden City coach Dennis Bryant compares Sterling City to Stanton, which beat the Bearkats earlier this year 48-6.

"Sterling City has two backs who can run," Bryant said. "If Stanton and Sterling City played, in my opinion, it would be a tossup."

STANTON (4-1) should come back from its first loss when they open 6-2A play at Forsan (1-4), a team that hasn't scored since opening the season with a 34-0 win over Garden City.

Also opening district play this week is ANDREWS (0-5) at Pecos (1-4). Pecos has allowed 28.8 points per game playing a much weaker schedule than Andrews. Last season Andrews struggled to a 14-6 win over the Eagles.

LAMESA (2-3) opens 5-4A play at Frenship. The 4-1 Tigers lost their first game of the year last week against Monahans 56-27.

RANKIN (1-4) tries to break a three-game losing streak in its District 8-1A opener at home against Menard (1-3-1) in Rankin.

MIDLAND CHRISTIAN (3-2) hosts Amarillo Christian (2-2) while TRINITY (3-2) hosts Midlothian Christian (2-3). The Mustangs and the Chargers begin TAPPS District 1 six-man play against each other Oct. 21.

NBA delay still possible

NEW YORK (NYT) — On a day when he addressed the NBA's ticklish labor dispute in non-combative fashion, commissioner David Stern said he fully expects a timely start to the league's 1994-95 NBA season.

"I'm planning on being in Houston on Nov. 4 for the season opener," Stern said, "so I can give the Rockets their championship rings."

Despite his confidence, however, Stern could not make any guarantees after the league's annual meeting with owners Wednesday at the Plaza Hotel here. Given ample opportunity, Stern could not rule out the possibility of a lockout on management's behalf or a strike by the players, things that have never happened in the NBA.

"If I could be nuclear about this, we and our players are equally aware that we have a mutually destructive capacity," Stern said. "But because of the relationship that has existed between us and the players, those particular weapons have not been called into action."

The owners meeting dealt extensively with the pending labor negotiations, and there was a conciliatory tone to Stern's analysis of where the issue stands and how the league hopes to avoid a work stoppage.

"We know what a strike is and we know what a lockout is," Stern said. "But we don't plan to use them.

"In 1983, the players did not want to agree to a percentage of the gross revenues, but they did. In '88, it was the same way. But they agreed. Now, we plan to make a deal again."

Rockets owner Leslie Alexander said he has a better outlook about the labor problems now than before he went into the meeting.

"We want to start the season," Alexander said. "We're the defending champions. We want to see if we can repeat. Both sides want to make a deal.

"A lockout is the last thing we'd look at. Right now, I'd say I'm cautiously optimistic."

MILAN, Italy (AP) — The "moda Milanese" for next summer is all about un-dressing.

Far from the layered look of past seasons, Italian ready-to-wear designers are bringing clothes down to the bare minimum in their spring-summer 1995 collections, showing here this week.

Drawing their inspiration from bras, bustiers, girdles, slips, nighties and negligees, the designers have turned underwear into outerwear.

Gianni Versace, in his second line Versus, did the look with more tart than taste. The models during his Sunday night show looked like live versions of pin-ups on a truck driver's dashboard. High-heeled and ruby-lipped, with demure bows in their hair, they strolled down the runway in lacy silk slips, rump-hugging stretch fabric, hot pants and bosom-bursting bustiers.

During the same show, his second line Istante collection took a more subtle approach to the baby doll look. Gingham plaid outfits with knee length skirts and short-cropped jackets, hot pants suits in staid pin stripes, and long flowing chiffon gowns could actually leave the boudoir for the boulevard.

In a trend he started last season, Versace used a lot of shiny plasticized fabric in his collection, turning many of the models into living Barbie dolls.

Giorgio Armani, who showed his second line Emporio collection Monday, was also into lingerie, but of the most sophisticated kind.

Delicate, cream-colored high-waisted silk slip dresses peeked discreetly from a long silk jacket. Dainty lace bras served as tops for loosely enticing chiffon hot pants or miniskirts.

The jacket is still the focal point of Armani fashion. Following the lingerie craze, the king of the blazer created the bra jacket, where the lapel is cut in the form of a brassiere. Other jackets have a super low neckline for a decollete effect.

Along with the high class sexy styles, the Emporio collection offers plenty of loosely cut pants and traditional jackets to satisfy the needs of the woman who has to go to work every day — in an office, that is.

Krizia, who also showed Monday, was one of the first to depart from the well-tailored sporty Milan trademark look, embracing sensual fashion several seasons ago. There were lots of bare navels, legs and breasts in her new summer collection.

Going with the general underwear trend, Mariuccia Mandelli, the name behind the label, showed girdle hot pants in stretch fabric, bra-topped silk gowns, and baby doll slip dresses.

Saying her fashion was for "the schoolgirl who just forgot to finish dressing," she left many shirts and skirts unbuttoned.

Search for perfect tie goes on

By Mark England
N.Y. Times News Service

WACO — Disclaimer: I once had a co-worker ask if I had a tie with wild animals on it that he could borrow to wear to a soiree at the Cameron Park Zoo. Now, I've never owned such a tie. Actually, I think such ties are beastly. But the fact that someone who knows me fairly well thought I was capable of having one tells you right off that my taste in ties is not impeccable.

But I do like to wear them.

It's an acquired taste, on my part. I didn't grow up wearing ties. My father was a poor role model, in that respect. He wore bow ties, which are OK if you want everyone to eternally remark on your boyish charm. But who ever heard of a power bow tie?

PAISLEY TIES rule Waco. And you can find an ample supply of striped and checked and polka-dot ties. Pick every part of your wardrobe carefully and your tie will blend in seamlessly.

But I've always thought of the tie as the one item in your wardrobe where you could cut loose and show your flair.

Wear your muted Dockers and your white dress shirt. But then splash a distinctive tie across your chest to show your true colors as you sail across a street or down an aisle at work.

You can find suitable ties all over Waco.

Mervyn's makes you sort through racks to find what you're after. Most of the ties are pretty busy. Not that they're unattractive, just that it becomes a matter of shopping to match a tie to a particular shirt — rather than hunting for a knockout individual tie.

One thing unique to Mervyn's, though. They always seem to have a few of what I call translucent ties, whose fibers interact magically with light. I'm a sucker for them. I hold them up to the light, at one angle, then another, like a kid playing with a kaleidoscope.

Maybe I should wear bow ties, after all.

Mervyn's also features cartoon ties, which sport the mug of characters like Daffy Duck or Bugs Bunny. Like I said, I don't get all warm inside seeing ties with animals, especially toons. I'm afraid that wearing one would make me feel like a walking billboard for Warner Bros.

THAT SAID, I do like the Tasmanian Devil tie. Just because of the Tas. What a lovable, slobbering, inarticulate goof. Reminds me of myself growing up. It was easy to wind me up and send me tearing across the landscape. And, afterward, it was always beyond my communication skills to tell you what had set me off. Still is, come to think of it. Hmmmmm.

JC Penney is a user-friendly place to shop. It groups ties by design. So if you find a design you like, you can easily search for the tie in a color that catches your eye.

I've bought most of the paisley ties I own, which is not many, there. That genre is well-represented and in a tasteful manner.

One warning, though. At JC Penney, or elsewhere, I would avoid buying clip-ons. They are uniformly easy to spot when worn. Plus they ought to carry a warning label: This tie is meant to be worn by those with a flat belly. It only extends half-way down your shirt and can cause unwanted attention to be paid to your gut — which is especially disturbing if you love to drink beer.

ONE OF the largest selections of ties is at Dillard's. Like JC Penney, Dillard's helps you out in your hunt to be tied. They affix much of their neckwear to shirts, to give you an idea of what colors and patterns a tie goes best with.

When I go to Dillard's, I like to see what the dummies are wearing.

Almost inevitably, I find what I think is the sharpest tie in the store adorning one of the mannequins. And it's always a tie I can't find on a table or in one of the glass cases. Last time out, I found a tie with a Southwestern motif. Buying such ties makes me feel rather like Jerry Seinfield in that American Express commercial, where he literally buys a snooty clerk's tie off of him.

Dillard's also carries the J. Garcia brand, put out by The Grateful Dead's lead singer. Ties for Deadheads. I like the sound of it. The ties I only moderately liked, although they are colorful. I'm sure the band's fans will love them. For me, though, they are too psychedelic. But, then, I'm not a Deadhead, at least not the kind that gallivants across the country chasing a rock band.

The Structure only carries its own brands. The selection is limited, but I did find a couple of ties I liked, in that they weren't run-of-the-mill.

ONE WAS an imaginative takeoff on the striped tie — a tie when combined with double-knit pants stamps you as someone who probably wears a paper hat at work. But the Structure's striped tie had earthy colors of brown, green and blue and had mathematical formulas (which neither I nor the store clerk could come close to solving) and architectural renderings intriguingly scattered about.

The other tie looked like the designer had played tic-tack-toe on it. I liked its champagne background and how the Xs and Os were boldly circled in colors of red and green. I think X was winning, appropriate for a Generation X store playing music from the soundtrack of "Reality Bites."

THIS IS NOT the definitive list of where to buy ties. Anyone with a good eye can buy great ties. Just look around. If you want a tie honoring the Three Stooges, try Gadzooks. J Riggings had an eye-catcher in its window: a tie with diamonds that looked like an artist had mottled the color on with sure, swift strokes.

What I wish Waco had are more stores featuring ties that pass the white-shirt test: ties so cool that they look stylish against a bare canvas. I wish Waco had more ties that are harder to classify, more ties whose designs look as if they were created by a gifted artist with a sumptuous eye for color. Sometimes, such ties can be found in Spiegel catalogs. And if you search diligently, you can unearth them in Waco. But you'll have to shop till you drop, so get in shape.

'Cool collar' is hot fashion accessory

By Robert Tharp
N.Y. Times News Service

It's amazing how fashion scruples fly out the window when the heat turns unbearable.

Just take a look at a new product generically known as the cool collar that has been popping up at flea market stands, Sam's Club, Target and some department stores recently.

Unflattering would be an understatement.

Imagine wrapping a damp, brightly colored link sausage around your neck and then strolling around in public. But fashion is rarely high on the list when one is doing yard work, running or spending any length of time outside in Southern summers. If it keeps you cool, Texans have learned, just do it.

The cold, wet rag around the neck has long been a popular way to cool down, and this new product is a glorified version of that concept. Other coping solutions have evolved over time. Distance runners often place bags of ice inside their caps and, going a little further back, cyclists once stuffed moisture-rich lettuce leaves in their helmets to keep them cool.

The collars, which are made under a variety of names, are more like scarves with polymer crystal pellets inside. After soaking in water for about 30 minutes, the pellets expand into a gelatinous mass that stays damp all day.

"It's coming from left field, but it works," said Dalen Garris, based in Waxahachie, who distributes the collars under the name Miracle Bandannas. "That's the fascinating thing. As strange as it sounds, it really does work."

The collars have become a favorite among roofers, gardeners and anyone who works or exercises in the heat. At Chapparral Steel in Midlothian, where employees in the factory's melt room work in 150-degree heat, workers tried out the product and made a large order the next day, Garris said.

"When they buy, it's not a fad, it's a safety issue," Garris said. "They don't care if it's nice or pretty; they want to keep their employees cool, and this works."

The collars can be found under a variety of names and designs. Most feature bright and somewhat gaudy designs like stars and stripes, cowboys and buckin' broncs, and something resembling African kente cloth.

They sell for between $5 and $10, and some are even offered for dogs.

The collars started to catch on late in the summer, and Garris said they're still selling fast. Next year, he figures they'll be as hot as the car windshield-shade fad of a few years ago.

"It's getting to the point where people know what they are," Garris said. "People want them because they're hot, and this is a way to keep cool."

They seem to work best if refreshed in cold water every few hours.

Xiangrong Shi, assistant professor of physiology at the University of North Texas Health Science Center, said the cool rags are probably beneficial, as long as they are not tied too tightly and the wearer does not forget to drink plenty of fluids.

The neck area is an effective place to cool the body down, said physical therapist Mary Condon at the Tom Landry Sports Medicine Center, Dallas.

"If you think about all the circulation that's occurring (in the neck,) that's probably the most logical place to put them," Condon said.

Occupations of rich and famous cause confusion

By Erma Bombeck

A few years ago I found myself on a cruise ship with a lot of fun people — writers, politicians, artists — including Laurance Rockefeller and his wife.

Bombeck

I took one of my friends aside one evening and asked, "What does Mr. Rockefeller do?" I really didn't say it to be funny or disrespectful; I honestly didn't know if he went to an office building and wrote checks all day, headed a foundation, sat on boards or what.

She said, "You're joking."

I said, "No, what is his job?"

It turned out he is very productive and involved, but since then there have been a number of people about whom I would ask the same question.

Did you ever wonder what Brooke Shields does for a living? I see her at Wimbledon in the good seats. She appears regularly on "Lifestyles of the Rich and Famous," where she's helicoptering over to some paradise island belonging to the Forbes family or to some sultan's tent. She spends Christmas with Bob Hope, and when Michael Jackson was single, she used to visit him at his home, the Star ship.

She has to be a professional celebrity with an agent whom she calls every day with instructions to "Get me a party."

Another person who has always been an enigma to me is Rev. Jesse Jackson. I know he's involved with the Rainbow Coalition, but I've never seen anyone who shows up at so many places for so many causes. If Jesus shows up in Waco he's there. If a baby falls down a well, he's there. If there are peace talks in the Mideast, he's at the table.

Several years ago I advised one of my children to "forget computers. Get a job as Rev. Jackson's travel agent and you can write your own ticket."

At the top of her form as a professional celebrity is Zsa Zsa Gabor. She continues to be everywhere, make news hourly and command attention wherever she goes.

It was good to see Barbra Streisand stop working in her back yard and get up on a real stage again. She was on her way to becoming a professional celebrity.

You never can tell what happens to these people. I remember a few years ago, the only thing I knew about Ross Perot was that he paid a lot of taxes and was involved in getting some of his employees out of Iran. The next thing I know he's running for president of the United States and he's everywhere, commanding audiences with a grass roots campaign that went crazy.

I never really knew what he did for a living.

Americans are suckers for name recognition. They've been known to vote for a dead man because he had a familiar name.

Who knows? Maybe we'll wake up one day and Brooke Shields will be president. We still won't know what she does all day.

Jeans need to fit just so

By Mia Moody
N.Y Times News Service

WACO, Texas — Whether it's the way they hug the body or how they match almost everything, few clothes are as long-lasting and as comforting as a pair of jeans. But finding a pair that fits your body style is the key to jean happiness.

Easier said than done. How many times have you tried on a pair of jeans in your size and found it impossible to zip them up without inhaling, jumping up and down or reclining on a chair?

Finding a pair of jeans is one of the most difficult wardrobe tasks people have, said Linda Smith, owner of Fashion Etc. and a fashion consultant for Everett Asbury Modeling Agency.

"It doesn't matter what type of body you have, finding jeans that fit is difficult," she said. "The best way to avoid disasters later is to buy a pair of jeans that fit your body style in the first place."

Bottom heaviness is one of the main problems women complain about, said Kay Hineline, director of fashion merchandising at McLennan Community College. To minimize any problem area, she recommends sticking to a simple, one-tone jeans.

"Anything light or bright such as floral or plaid will draw attention to the part of the body you are trying to conceal," said Hineline, who teaches classes on figure analysis and wardrobe selection.

Smith identifies four body styles and offers these suggestions for jeans that look best on them:

■ Pear-shaped people tend to have narrow shoulders, rib cages and waists and broad, full bottoms. People with this shape should wear jeans that are pleated at the waist and unrestrictive through the hips. She also recommends compensating for a small upper body by wearing shoulder pads.

■ Apple shaped people tend to store extra weight in the waist, stomach and sometimes the bust. The bottom is usually more flat than round. People with this body style, should select jeans with a few pleats on the side and a smooth waist band to conceal the stomach. A drop-yoke may also be figure flattering for women who have a bulging middle.

■ Saddle baggers generally have a small, slim frame that hides extra weight on the upper thighs and lower bottom, where it is often referred to as saddlebags. People with this figure should wear jeans with a paper bag waist where the waist is big and the jeans go straight down. She also recommends baggy jeans to camouflage saddle bags.

■ Hourglassers have a generous bosom, full hips and a small waist. Smith said these women should not wear jeans that are big or baggy. She recommends jeans that have a regular cut and that are not too tight or baggy.

Even if you know your body style, it is still important to try on a pair jeans before you bring them home, said Smith.

"Jeans are not like a shirt — you can't hold them up and look into a mirror and say this pair will work," she said. "If a pair doesn't fit or feel right, then go with another style."

Once you find a pair of jeans that fits, be smart and stock up.

Determine style of jeans by the shape of your body

N.Y. Times News Service

Jeans are not just a fair-weather friend, they can be worn almost anytime, any place. Linda Smith, a fashion consultant for Fashion Etc. and Everett Asbury Modeling Agency, offers these suggestions on how to get the most out of your jeans:

■ Mix and match them with wool blazers. Even those that you buy to wear with a skirt can give jeans a new look.

■ Vests and jeans can be flirty or serious. Pair vests with a plain shirt or turtleneck for a preppy look. Combine vests with a blazer for a dressier look.

■ Jeans can take you into the night by wearing them with black leather and suede. Vests and jackets made of these fabrics can give jeans a sleek edge on fashion.

■ Accessorize jeans with miniature backpacks, wallets on a string and leather belts.

■ Finish off the look with suede and leather loafers or ankle boots.

'It doesn't matter what type of body you have, finding jeans that fit is difficult. The best way to avoid disasters later is to buy a pair of jeans that fit your body style in the first place.'

DEAR ABBY

'By Mail' shower given by mother of bride is all wet

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Help! I am involved in a sticky situation and need your opinion. I recently received an invitation in the mail titled "Shower By Mail."

Van Buren

The shower was being given by the mother of the bride who lives in a distant state. Knowing that I would not attend, I was asked to send a gift to the bride's mother to be opened at the shower.

I had never met the bride-to-be. She happens to be engaged to the son of the woman my widowed father has been dating for years. I've met the son — but only for a few holiday dinners.

When I received this shower invitation, my initial reaction was one of disbelief. There was no R.S.V.P. indicated, simply an address to where the gift should be sent.

I was so offended by the whole thing that I sent nothing. The shower has come and gone. Unfortunately, it has not been forgotten by my father's "friend," who has made it clear that she noticed I had not sent a gift — she has been acting very standoffish.

Abby, should I have sent a gift, even though I had never met the bride-to-be and was not really invited to the shower? — SHOWERED WITH CONFUSION

DEAR SHOWERED: You need feel no remorse nor guilt. You were not actually invited to anything: you were simply given the "privilege" of contributing a gift to a shower.

However, in view of the fact that the groom's mother had been dating your father for a number of years, you might have handled the situation more generously, and sent a token gift with a note offering congratulations and best wishes to the bride and groom. For the record, it is improper for the mother of the bride to give a shower for her own daughter.

DEAR ABBY: Please help settle an argument between my husband and me. Should a man's socks match his shoes — or his suit? My husband has two pairs of dress shoes; one is a tannish color and the other is black.

Which pair of shoes should he wear with a gray suit? And what color socks should he wear? Should his socks match his suit or his shoes? — THE BATTLING BERNSTEINS

DEAR BATTLING BERNSTEINS: Although the sky wouldn't fall if Mr. B. wore the tan shoes with the gray suit, a well-dressed man would wear black shoes and gray socks with a gray suit. (His socks should match either his suit or his trousers; and he should save the tan shoes for tan or brown clothing.)

DEAR ABBY: I am a faithful reader of your column, and this is my first letter to you. I have no problem or gripe. However, re: the letter from the old bowler who didn't want to tell her age: When someone asks me how old I am, I smile and say, "I'm somewhere between the age of consent and collapse."

Abby, I'm actually 74, and have no wrinkles, so most people think I'm younger. You may print my name. — PEGGY O'NEIL, PUYALLUP, WASH.

DEAR PEGGY: Congratulations. That's what I call "the luck of the Irish!"

¿Que Pasa?

El Juez Jorge Rangel aconseja a los abogados hispanos estadounidenses quienes están interesados en hacer negocios en México a amiliarizarse con el sistema judicial mexicano. El Juez Rangel habló en una junta del Mexican American Bar Association realizada el pasado viernes, 23 de sept. en Corpus Christi, Texas.

Abogados Hispanos: Busquen Oportunidades Ofrecidas por el TLC

De acuerdo con el Juez de Corpus Christi Jorge Rangel, los abogados que estén interesados en hacer negocios en México deberán familiarizarse con el sistema, a judicial mexicano. Esto fue el tema principal del Juez Rangel en su discursó dirigido a un grupo de abogados hispanos en la conferencia estatal anual del Mexican American Bar Association (MABA - Asociación Mexico-Americana del Tribunal) realizada en Corpus Christi, Texas el pasado viernés, 23 de septiembre.

El Juez Rangel y el ex-Gobernador de Nuevo Mexico Toney Anaya entusiasmó a los abogados hispanos a aprovecharse de las oportunidades que ofrece el Tratado de Libre Comercio (TLC).

El TLC permite a abogados norteamericanos proveer servicios legales en México; sin embargo, hay diferencias entre los sistemas judiciales de México.y los Estados Unidos. El Juez Rangel sugirió que un abogado interesado en hacer negocios en México deberá formar parte de la lista de servicios de un abogado mexicano. También agregó que el abogado con más ventaja en la arena de comercio entre México y Estados Unidos sera aquel que posea licencias o permisos para practicar en ambos países.

El Gobernador Anaya enfatizó la importancia de los abogados hispanos norteamericanos en alinearse con bufets de abogados en México. El Gobernador Anaya dijo que las compañías estadounidenses que buscan hacer negocios en México necesitan de servicios otorgados por abogados que estén familiarizados con el lenguaje y las leyes de México. El Gobernador Anaya también les urgió a los miembros de MABA a explorar otras oportunidades de negocio en México fuera del campo de la profesión legal.

Turning the tide at the border

SAN DIEGO — With an entourage of reporters and photographers looking on, the U.S. Border Patrol launched Operation Gatekeeper over the weekend — its experimental crackdown on the most heavily used routes for smuggling people into the United States from Mexico.

As dusk approached, a force of 150 agents, double the usual number, fanned out along the 14-mile stretch of border from the Pacific Ocean to San Diego's Otay Mountain in cars, vans, sport utility vehicles — even mountain bikes and rubber rafts — looking for illegal crossers bent on eluding them.

"We're hopeful it will be a big deterrent," said Gustavo De la Vina, chief of the Border Patrol's suburban Chula Vista sector. "Most of our heavily trafficked areas are covered."

The San Clemente checkpoint 75 miles to the north, where Border Patrol agents normally screen vehicles northbound on Interstate 5, was shut down for the five-month experiment, its agents deployed along the border.

No figures on illegal crossers apprehended in the first hours of Operation Gatekeeper were immediately available.

"We don't know what our numbers are going to be in terms of apprehensions," De la Vina said. "We'll have a better idea in the next 48 hours."

In the first several hours, things looked pretty much as they usually do along the 10-foot metal fence separating U.S. and Mexican territory.

Small groups of would-be border crossers stood or sat at the customary gathering points just off Tijuana's Avenida Internacional, watching the back-and-forth movement of the Border Patrol agents who, in turn, were watching them through binoculars from their vans and Ford Broncos.

Behind the migrants, atop the hills overlooking the border, smugglers and their lookouts also kept watch.

At dusk, new stadium-type lights installed west of border town San Ysidro, Calif. snapped on, revealing

Assassination was ordered, according to confession

By Stephen Gregory CNS

MEXICO CITY — A turncoat federal lawmaker with possible links to drug runners ordered the assassination of the No. 2 man in Mexico's ruling party in an attempt to halt his reformist agenda, according to a co-conspirator's confession released Sunday by government officials.

Congressional deputy Manuel Munoz Rocha was simply "not in agreement" with Jose Francisco Ruiz Massieu's ambitious plans for political and administrative reforms in the authoritarian governing party, suspected coplotter Jorge Rodriguez Gonzalez allegedly told investigators with Mexico's attorney general's office.

Ruiz Massieu, secretary general of the Institutional Revolutionary Party (PRI), was shot once in the neck with a U.S.-made Tec-9 submachine gun Wednesday outside a downtown Mexico City hotel. He died an hour later.

Rodriguez Gonzalez, brother of Munoz Rocha legislative aide Fernando Rodriguez Gonzalez, was arrested Friday in the northern border state of Tamaulipas apparently preparing to flee to the United States.

He reportedly confessed to hiring suspected assassin Daniel Aguilar Trevino and buying the weapon used in the killing at the behest of his brother and Munoz Rocha.

A longtime PRI functionary, Ruiz Massieu had been recently named the leader of the party's majority faction in Mexico's next congress, scheduled to convene Nov. 1. He planned to use the powerful new post to press for far-reaching reforms in the PRI and an end

Please see page 4/ CONFESSION

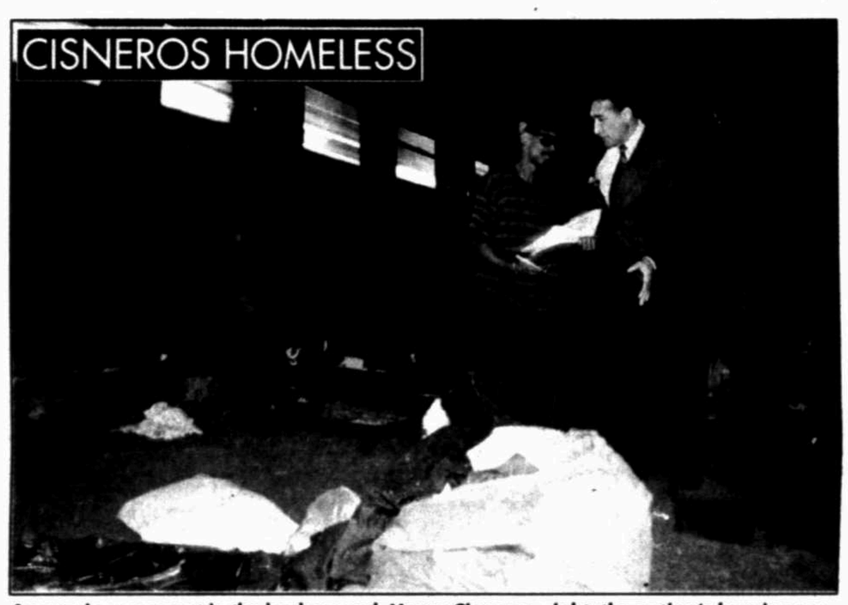

The man who killed a leading Mexican politician was offered money to commit the murder and stalked his victim for three weeks, said Attorney General Humberto Benitez Trevino. Aguilar Trevino said that two other men offered him 50,000 pesos equivalent to $15,000 for the murder.

Maria de los Angeles Moreno was named, Monday October 3,1994, as the new Mexico's ruling party Institutional Revolutionary Party,(PRI) Secretary-General by unanimous vote by fellow 200 members at Mexico City PRI headquarters.

CISNEROS HOMELESS

As a train roars past in the background, Henry Cisneros, right, the nation's housing secretary, chats with homeless man Willis Colemax during a visit with homeless people living in a lower Manhattan subway tunnel in New York Sunday, Oct. 2, 1994. Colemax had just written down the name and phone number of a relative who may be able to get a message to him, if necessary. (AP Photo/Adam Nadel)

El amor es... Henry Cisneros

Por Rick Martínez

SAN ANTONIO — Si conduce por frente al hogar de Henry G. Cisneros en la Parte Oeste de esta ciudad, puede ver que dice mucho acerca del hombre. Está muy arraigado en un barrio donde hay mayores probabilidades de oir hablar en español que en inglés. La estructura de madera de forma irregular es bonita, ordenada y modesta.

Es desde ese ambiente humilde que Cisneros saltó a la prominencia nacional como alcalde de San Antonio. Pero mírese a su imagen actualmente, y su casa está menos que en orden.

Exactamente cuando pensábamos que Cisneros estaba de regreso en el carril político correcto después de ser descarrilado en 1988 por la revelación de un asunto amoroso extra-marital con su consultora política — el tejano se halla nuevamente en medio de la inmundicia.

El trabajo de Cisneros, como Secretario de Vivienda y Desarrollo Urbano en el gobierno de Clinton, puede estar en peligro porque el calor está centrado sobre la Casa Blanca igualmente.

Parece que su ex-amante, Linda Medlar, no se conformó con ser abandonada en Lubbock. Medlar ha vendido transcripciones de conversaciones que ella grabó secretamente en cinta de sonido, entre ella y Cisneros, al programa tabloide de televisión "Edición Interior" (Inside Edition) por $15,000, según los informes de noticias. Las cintas muestran, entre otras cosas, que Cisneros no dijo la verdad a los investigadores federales sobre los pagos que él hizo a Medlar durante su examen para la plaza del gabinete, alega ella.

El motivo de ella fué la "venganza", según alega un columnista del "San Antonio Express-News". Ella está demandando también a Cisneros porque alega que él ha dejado de hacer los pagos de gastos para vivir que le prometió hacerle.

Esta querella entre amantes ha aumentado hasta convertirse en una investigación del Departamento de Justicia, a tenor de la Ley de Etica en el Gobierno de 1978.

Opinion/Opinión

The following article was submitted by the office of Congressman Henry Bonilla.

Ayudando a familias a realizar el sueño americano

Cada año, el Congreso aprueba cientos de proyectos de ley que dice que van a hacer de América un mejor lugar en que vivir, pero termina por crear nuevos programas sociales y más reglamentos. En su afán de aumentar el control gubernamental, el Congreso está faltando en sus obligaciones a las familias que están luchando para hacer una realidad el sueño americano. Las familias están trabajando más duro pero tienen un sueldo neto más bajo. Trabajando más horas para poder llegar a fin del mes, tenemos menos tiempo que pasar con nuestros hijos. En vez de subir los impuestos y ampliar la burocracia, el gobierno federal debe concentrar en hacer más para ayudar, no para perjudicar, a las familias.

Una manera en que el Congreso puede ayudar a las familias más es cambiando las leyes tributarias. Nuestros impuestos son demasiado altos y las familias de la clase media merecen algo positivo. Por eso he copatrocinado un proyecto de ley para aumentar a $3.500 la deducción por los hijos dependientes. Por ejemplo, una familia que gane $20.000 al año y que tenga cuatro hijos tendría ingresos tributables de $6.00 si el Congreso aprobara este aumento de la deducción por los dependientes. Además, tenemos que eliminar la penalidad a los matrimonios, que castiga a los matrimonios de ingresos dobles. No tiene sentido castigar a alguien por haberse enamorado y casado.

El Congreso debe premiar a las familias que cuidan a sus niños. Incentivos tributarios por la adopción animarían a más personas que no pueden tener niños a adoptarlos. Las leyes que hacen cumplir la manutención de menores fomentarían la responsabilidad de los padres. Y un crédito tributario por los ancianos a cargo daría a las familias que viven con un abuelo la oportunidad de tomar decisiones sobre su futuro. Debemos ofrecer mas incentivos a las familias que cuidan a los suyos.

Y, por último, siempre debemos recordar que el futuro resta con nuestra inversión en nuestros hijos. Mientras más control permitimos que asuma el gobierno en la educación de nuestros hijos, menos control tendremos como padres. Debemos encontrar soluciones innovadoras que nos permitan participar más directamente en la educación de nuestros hijos. Los padres, no los burócratas, saben lo que es mejor para sus hijos.

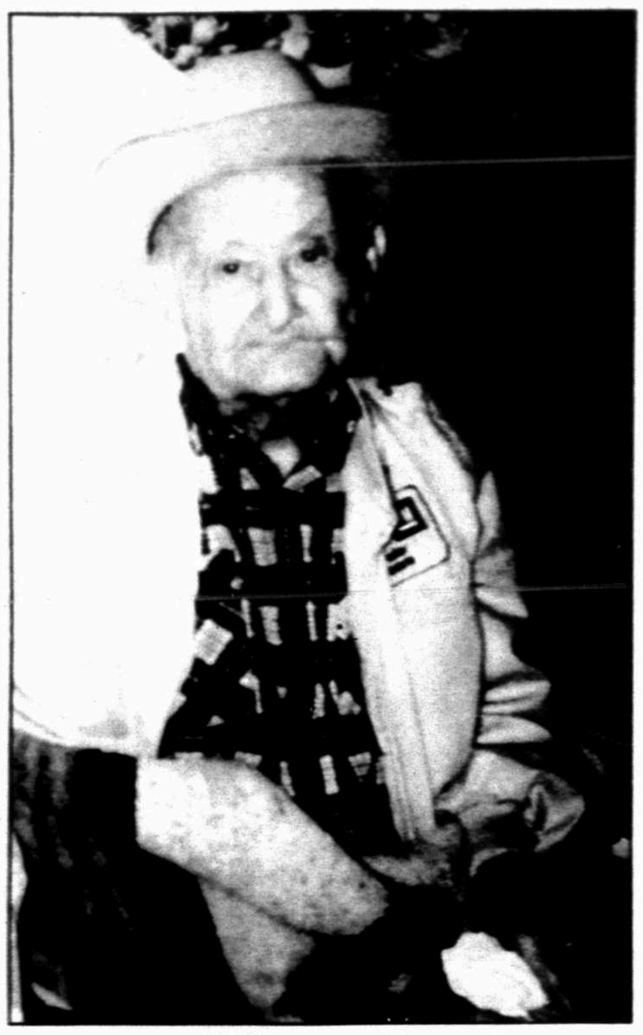

Nuestros hijos no deben tener que cargar con el déficit federal. Debemos abordarlo ahora. Si no, nuestros hijos afrontarán un destino de deuda. La enmienda para equilibrar el presupuesto y el veto por partida son medidas importantes que hay que aprobar. El gobierno no tiene por qué no tener que seguir un presupuesto justamente como lo demás lo hacemos en América.

No está muerto el sueño americano. Simplemete tenemos que infundarle nueva vida. Esto quiere decir que hay que convencer al Congreso a aprobar leyes a favor de las familias en vez de leyes que nos perjudiquen.

Dionisio Carrasco Quiroz

100 years old... ...or is it, 103

Many people are blessed in many ways. Some with wealth, others with talent... some with good looks and some folks with wisdom. But of all of these, one virtue tops them all.. LIFE. Dionisio Carrasco Quiroz is one of the few lucky ones to reach the age of a hundred years old.

Dionisio or "Dennis" was born in 1892, at least according to the records kept back then. In actuality, its possible that Dionisio may in fact be 103 years old, , making his real birth date 1889.

Born in the state of Chihuahua, Mexico, Dionisio lived the typical life of a rancher/farmer with a desire one day to have something better for his family. During the Pancho Villa era of covered wagons and old rugged western living, 12 year old Dionisio temporarily moved moved to the U.S. by way of foot! This way he wouldn't get recruited into Pancho Villa's army.

Once here, he was brought up by an anglo rancher and made best friends with his son. Later, Dionisio would get married and worked the trails, cattle ranching and planting cotton. After moving back to Mexico to rejoin his family, he left Mexico once again, this time for good in 1951 to start a better life in the U.S.

Dionisio has seen quite a bit of history in his time and to this date "Ole Dennis" hasn't changed. He is the father of 8 kids, 34 gran-kids, 40 great gran-kids and 8 great-great gran-kids.

Dionisio has long since been settled in mldland, Texas. Just a while back the already retired Dionisio still loved to work by helping with one of his son's business.

Today Dionisio is still as sharp as ever and loves to stay home playing poker... just like he did in the "old west".

Economic injury disaster loans available

LUBBOCK, TX – Businesses depending on farmers and ranchers in Andrews, Borden, Dawson, Gaines, Glasscock, Howard, Martin and Midland Counties can now apply for low interest Economic Injury Disaster Loans from the U. S. Small Business Administration (SBA). These loans are available to help businesses meet normal operating expenses that cannot be met due to the effects of a disaster. Drought which occurred August 1993 through May 1994 caused many farmers and ranchers to experience reduced incomes which may have had an adverse economic effect on businesses depending upon these producers. Farmers and ranchers are not eligible for this loan program but may be eligible for disaster assistance through other Federal agencies. However, nurseries that are victims of drought disasters can apply.

To obtain an application or receive additional information, interested business owners may call the SBA toll-free at 1-800-366-6303 or TDD 817-267-4688 for the hearing impaired. The deadline for filing applications is April 17, 1995.

The loan can help a business meet installments on long-term debt, accounts payable and overhead expenses that would have been met had the disaster not occurred. Refinancing of long-term debt, however, is not eligible under this program. The loan is designed for those businesses with substantial disaster-related needs and is intended to supplement monies the business owner can provide from other sources.

To qualify, businesses must be small by SBA's size standard. Businesses which can meet their financial needs through other sources are not eligible.

La cuestión que la Secretaria de Justicia Janet Reno tiene que resolver es si Cisneros engañó premeditadamente a los investigadores del equipo de transición de Clinton sobre la cantidad de los pagos que él hizo a Medlar, cerca de $50,000 según algunos estimados que se han publicado.

Ella alega que Cisneros los engañó. Cisneros dice que no.

Cisneros y Clinton se hallan en posiciones difíciles. La Casa Blanca está enmarañada en otras dos investigaciones sobre ética actualmente — los tratos de Clinton sobre bienes raíces en el escándalo de Whitewater y los alegatos de que el Secretario de Agricultura, Mike Espy, aceptó ilegalmente el pago de gastos de viaje, alojamiento y boletos para acontecimientos deportivos de parte de un elaborador de aves de corral y otras empresas reglamentadas por su departamento.

A menos que haya presión indebida por parte del presidente, parece improbable que Cisneros renuncie a su plaza ministerial. El renunciar sería, en esencia, reconocer que es culpable de engañar a los investigadores federales.

Los extractos de la grabación que leí en el "San Antonio Express-News" parecen mostrar que, en una época en que Cisneros estaba diciendo al mundo que había dejado su asunto amoroso detrás de él, en realidad no lo había hecho. Esa impresión, más que cualquier otra cosa, puede hacer el mayor daño a la verosimilitud de Cisneros ante el público.

Con César Chávez muerto y Cisneros en "Inside Edition", ¿qué otros dirigentes latinos tenemos en trámite de surgir? ¿Federico Peña? Mi sensación es que el reflector nacional no se ha enfocado aún sobre el latino que pueda tener una mayor importancia nacional algún día.

La realidad infortunada de la situación es que, aún cuando Cisneros capee esta tormenta, parece improbable que Clinton u otro gobierno demócrata apueste sobre él para un nombramiento futuro de alto nivel.

Mis conterráneos texanos, por otra parte, de seguro darán la bienvenida a Cisneros cuando regrese a su casa en la Parte Oeste y quizás si hasta lo elijan para algún cargo importante más adelante. Los texanos con quienes he hablado ven a Cisneros como la víctima de esta segunda vuelta con Medlar. Algunos la ven a ella sencillamente como una mujer que ha salido a buscarse unos cuantos dólares a través del sistema legal y mediante el tribunal de la opinión pública en su variedad de la televisión tabloide.

Algunos historiadores dicen que un asunto amoroso casi le costó su vida política a Franklin Delano Roosevelt, porque Eleanor quería divorciarse de él. Si eso le ocurriera a FDR en esta parte del siglo, ¿creen ustedes que "Inside Edition" perseguiría la historia de su amante? En un minuto de Hyde-Park.

Opinion/Opinión

An anti-latino trend

Ever get the feeling that things are connected when, on the surface, they are not?

A scientist recently suggested spraying the U.S.-Mexico border with an invisible fluorescent paint which would stick to shoes, clothes or skin. With the use of lasers, anyone crossing the terrain could be tracked down.

Meanwhile in Moorehead, Minn., a white man was charged with spraying a Mexican couple with the insecticide Raid while they were shopping in a grocery store. Overhearing them speak in Spanish, the alleged sprayer is said to have exclaimed: "Just another Mexican on welfare."

Such instances present evidence that while California may be in the forefront of anti-immigrant hysteria, that state is hardly alone. Nor is the avalanche of hatred restricted to immigrants.

For example, in El Paso, citizens created an uproar over a mural at a state office which depicts boxer Julio Cesar Chavez and the flags of Mexico and the United States. The objectors cloaked their hate in patriotism, and for a month unsuccessfully demanded that the Mexican flag be stripped from the mural.

Recently, the U.S. Supreme Court decided to refuse to hear a case involving English-only rules in the workplace. The court's decision not to rule in effect upheld the right of an employer to prohibit bilingual workers from conversing in Spanish.

Language police also have been active on the road and in the air. Earlier this year, a Greyhound bus driver on the Lake Tahoe to San Francisco run ordered passengers to stop conversing in Spanish. And, though less peremptorily, an Alaska Airlines flight attendant tried to apply the same stricture to Spanish-speaking passengers on her flight.

Running counter to the amended 1965 Voting Registration Act (which was designed to increase black and Latino representation), a Texas Federal Appeals Court judge recently ruled that the creation of one black and two Latino Texas congressional districts constituted racial gerrymandering "akin to apartheid."

New Jersey, following California's lead, has enacted a law requiring proof of legal immigration status to obtain a driver's license—thus, in effect, turning that state's department of motor vehicles into an arm of the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

On the school front, Virginia legislators recently banned undocumented immigrants age 18 to 21 from high school extension classes, while in Lake County, Fl., school district officials are still considering implementing a policy that requires schools to teach that American culture and values are superior to all others.

A bill in the U.S. Senate seeks to declare an "extraordinary immigration situation," which would suspend appeals rights of those seeking asylum in the United States.

Current debate before Congress also calls for eliminating documented as well as undocumented immigrants from receiving health, welfare, and housing benefits. It is already illegal for undocumented immigrants to receive any kind of benefits except emergency care and education for minors. But according to the rhetoric, the fewer than four million undocumented immigrants who are in the country are freeloading and so bankrupting the most powerful nation on earth. At the same time, these same immigrants are said to be taking everyone's job.

More insidious are proposals that call for the further militarization of our southern border—this while Canadians can freely enter through our northern border. All this during the era of NAFTA.

A national identification system, which it is feared would legalize discrimination against people with brown skin, or who otherwise appear or sound foreign, may also be in the works. The U.S. Commission on Immigration Reform has recently proposed creating a national work registry, which could conceivably lead to a national identification system.

The irony of the commission is that it contains no Latinos from the entire Southwest who fight for the rights of immigrants. However, on the commission are a number of staunchly anti-immigrant activists, chief among them, Harold Ezell, the former Reagan-Bush-era Western Region Commissioner of the INS. Ezell, who used to refer to immigrants as "wets" and who once proposed "frying them" is, not coincidentally, the co-author of the anti-immigrant SOS Initiative in California.

It makes us wonder how fine is the line separating government officials from political extremists and which is inflaming the rhetoric.

Referring to Haiti, President Clinton recently said that what's right isn't always politically popular. Perhaps it's time for him to do something else that is unpopular: exhibit moral leadership and demand that politicians of both parties quit using the backs of immigrants for political gain.

Helping families achieve the american dream

Henry Bonilla

Every year, Congress passes hundreds of bills claiming to make - america a better place to live, but ends up creating new social programs and more regulations. In its zeal o increase government control Congress is failing families that are struggling to make the American ' dream a reality. Families are working harder but bringing home less pay. working longer hours to make ends meet gives us less time to spend with our children. Instead of raising taxes and expanding the bureaucracy t.e federal government should focus on doing more to help, not hurt

One way Congress can be more family-friendly is to change the tax laws. our taxes are too high and middle class' families deserve a break that's why I've cosponsored a bill that would increase the dependent deduction to $3,500. For example, a family that makes $20,000 a year and has four children would have a taxable income of $6,000 if Congress approved this increase in the dependent deduction. In addition, we need to eliminate the marriage penalty, which hurts two-earner couples. It doesn't make sense for the government to penalize you for falling in love and making a trip to the altar.

Congress needs to reward families that take care of their children. Tax incentives for adoption would encourage more people who can't have kids to adopt. Laws that enforce child support would encourage parental responsibility. And an elderly dependent tax credit would give families ho live with a grandparent the opportunity to make decisions about their futures. We should give more of an incentive to families that take care of their own.

And lastly, we need to always remember that the future lies in the investment we make in our children.- The more control we allow the government to assume in our child's education, the less control that laves us as parents. We need to come up with innovative ways that will allow us to participate more directly in our children's education. Parents, not bureaucrats know what's best for their kids.

It's wrong to make our children shoulder the burden of the federal deficit. We need to address it now, or else our children will face a destiny of debt. The balanced budget amendment nd the line-item veto are important measures that should be passed. There's no reason why the federal government shouldn't have to meet a budget just like the rest of us in America.

The American Dream isn't dead. 'We just need to breath some more— life into it. This means getting Congress to pass family-friendly laws' instead of laws that hurt us.

CONFESSION: Killed for personal revenge to its 65-year domination of all government institutions.

According to Sunday's news release that read more like a spy novel, disgruntled lawmaker Munoz Rocha allegedly kept a list of "important persons in Mexico who would have to die" because they, like Ruiz Massieu, supported a make-over of the country's political establishment.

Federal prosecutors have asked Mexico's Chamber of Deputies, the lower legislative house, to strip Munoz Rocha of his constitutional privileges so that criminal proceedings may be launched against him.

A spokesman for the attorney general's office said no information was available on Munoz Rocha's whereabouts, but the Mexico City daily "Reforma" reported Sunday he was in hiding negotiating the terms of his surrender.

Along with undermining plans for government and party reform, Munoz Rocha allegedly hoped the assassination would also "politically debilitate" Ruiz Massieu's brother Mario, deputy attorney general in charge of Mexico's increasingly aggressive war on drugs.

This development is sure to heighten speculation that the Mexico General Attorney office released police mugs of arrested accomplices of the murder of ruling party No.2 man Jose Francisco Ruiz Massieu last Sept.28. Jorge Rodriguez Gonzalez,left, brother of Fernando Rodriguez Gonzalez who participated directly in coordinating the assassination,and Jose Pascual Alvarez, center, a rural policeman who sold the gun used by hit-man Daniel Aguilar Trevino, and right Roberto Angel Ramirez Arauz who collaborated in different steps ofthe plot. (AP Photo)

PRI official's death may also have been part of a scheme by drug lords to cripple drug interdiction efforts.

In congress, Munoz Rocha represented Tamaulipas state — home of the notorious Gulf Cartel drug ring. The lawmaker also allegedly plotted Ruiz Massieu's death with a man tied to the cartel.

That man, Abraham Rubio Canales, is related by marriage to fugitive cartel operative Raul Valladares del Angel.

For his own part, Rubio Canales is believed to have wanted Ruiz Massieu dead for personal revenge.

Until 1992, Rubio Canales was a close advisor to Ruiz Massieu when the latter was governor of Guerrero state. The onetime confidant, however, fell out of favor when it was discovered he had bilked more than $6 million while overseeing a federal land development project on Guerrero's Pacific Coast.

Rubio Canales reportedly blamed his former friend for his eventual arrest and conviction in the real estate scam.

Rubio Canales, currently serving a 14-year prison term, is also tied to the killing because suspected assassin Aguilar Trevino worked on a ranch the jailed man owned in Tamaulipas.

According to the official account of his confession, Rodriguez Gonzalez, 44, said his brother Fernando called him early last month in the Tamaulipas capital of Ciudad Victoria and asked him to hire two "bodyguards."

He allegedly hired Aguilar Trevino and a second man, Carlos Angel Cantu Narvaez, flew them to Mexico City and put them up in a hotel. He then reportedly bought the gun used in the killing and an AK-47 assault rifle from a corrupt policeman in the northern border state.

Cantu Narvaez, who reportedly stood near Aguilar Trevino during the assassination, fled to Brownsville, Texas, after the shooting. He returned to Mexico on Saturday and surrendered to authorities.

Meanwhile, Fernando Rodriguez Gonzalez, who allegedly watched the shooting from his wife's Ford Taurus station wagon, is being sought by authorities.

GATEKEEPER: Never this sophisticated

a line of shiny new green-and-white Border Patrol vehicles. And as darkness fell, still more new gear came into play.

On a rugged cliff overlooking the Tijuana River Valley, a National Guard officer scanned the scene using a truck-mounted infrared scope acquired for the Border Patrol.

"I see five of them, hiding in the bushes," he said, guiding agents toward them by radio. "They're about 200 yards from the levee."

Watching over the officer's shoulder was Border Patrol agent Bill Pink.

"We've had this technology for years, but never this sophisticated," Pink said.

Before the operation, De la Vina had warned his agents to be on guard for increased desperation from illegal crossers and smugglers, and perhaps even violence.

"Our main concern is not with the illegal aliens as much as it is with the smugglers. He (the smuggler) gives instructions to them to create diversions, to pick up rocks to throw them at us. We're hopeful we don't encounter this."

On the other side of the border, members of Mexico's Beta Group border crimes task force have their own concerns about crime that may result from Operation Gatekeeper.

Among the plainclothes Mexican agents who patrol the border looking for bandits and smugglers are fears that the Border Patrol's intensified night presence will lead to more attacks on illegal border crossers and more trafficking activity by smugglers.

"That is what we foresee," said Norberto Vasquez, a Beta Group supervisor.

"With more Border Patrol agents in these zones, we expect more migrants to move east to try crossing through the mountains, where it is much more difficult for us to patrol. And where the migrants go, the bandits will follow. The situation could become very difficult."

Others were privately more critical, saying the operation reflected an anti-immigrant attitude in the United States in general and California in particular.

"This could set us back many years," one said.

Besides the additional agents, elements of Operation Gatekeeper include:

— Another 1.5 miles of border lighting.

— Fingerprinting of every illegal border-crosser caught in the 14-mile zone as a way of keeping tabs on those who cross more than once.

— Increased penalties against people smugglers, who now will face up to 10 years in federal prison and could face the death penalty if someone dies as a result of their activities.

— An accelerated deportation of undocumented migrants now serving time in California prisons for crimes committed in this state.

— Another 110 inspectors for ports of entry in California to speed legal border traffic.

— Federal payment to California of $130 million over 12 months to defray the cost of keeping undocumented migrants in state prisons. The first installment is to be paid within 100 days.

By the end of January, the number of Border Patrol agents in San Diego will be increased to about 1,400 from about 1,000, using 300 new employees and 96 shifted from the San Clemente checkpoint.

A group of unidentified illegal immigrants wait for darkness to cross the United States/Mexico border near Imperial Beach, Calif. Sunday October 2, 1994. The immigrants, from Michoacan, Mexico said that they had heard about the new U.S. border policy called Operation Gatekeeper but that it would not deter them from trying to cross. CONSEJOS SABROSOS

Sazonando los alimentos con pimientos

(NU) - A algunos de nosotros nos gustan los alimentos picantes. El condimento perfecto para añadir sabor a los alimentos durante el otoño y la época navideña es un poco de jalapeño fuerte o pimientos dulces de banano.

Para darle más sabor a sus comidas o para celebrar, añada los pimientos de "Trappey" a estas recetas comunes.

PASTA FIESTA

8 onzas de pasta "linguine"
2 cucharadas de aceite de oliva
1 calabacín ("zucchini") grande, alrededor de una libra, cortado en cubitos
1 cebolla mediana, cortada en rodajas delgadas
1/4 de taza de pimientos de "Trappey"* en tajadas
1 diente de ajo grande, molido
1 lata de 14 1/2 onzas de tomates cortados en tajadas, sin escurrir
1/2 cucharadita de orégano seco
1/4 de taza de aceitunas negras, cortadas en tajadas
1/2 cucharadita de sal
Queso parmesano en polvo (opcional)

News USA

Los pimientos añaden sabor a la pasta y ensalada de papas.

Prepare la pasta como lo indique el empaque. En un sartén de 12 pulgadas, caliente el aceite a fuego medio y saltee el calabacín ("zucchini"), la cebolla, los pimientos de "Trappey" y el ajo por 5 minutos o hasta que los vegetales estén crujientes, moviéndolos ocasionalmente.

Añada los tomates, el orégano, las aceitunas y la sal; caliente hasta que hierva. Continúe a fuego lento; hierva sin cubrir por alrededor de 10 mi-nutos, moviendo frecuentemente hasta que la mezcla se torne espesa.

Al servir, mezcle los vegetales con la pasta. Añada queso parmesano si lo desea.

ENSALADA DE PAPAS DE CELEBRACION
(6 porciones)

2 libras de papas rojas (alrededor de 6 papas medianas)
Agua con sal hirviendo
2 huevos duros, luego de ponerlos en el refrigerador
2 cebollas verdes
1 pote de pimientos (2 onzas), escurridos (opcional)
1/4 de taza de perejil fresco
1/3 de taza de los pimientos de "Trappey"*
1/3 de taza de mayonesa
1/3 de taza de crema agria
3 cucharadas de vinagre de los pimientos
1 cucharada de mostaza "dijon"
1/2 cucharadita de sal

Coloque las papas en agua con sal hirviendo hasta que estén cocidas, de 25 a 30 minutos. Escurra el agua, deje que se enfríen y colóquelas en el refrigerador. Corte los próximos cinco ingredientes y échelos en un tazón, añada mayonesa, crema agria, vinagre, mostaza y sal y mezcle bien. Corte las papas en cubitos de media pulgada, remueva la cáscara o piel si lo prefiere. Añada las papas a la mezcla y muévala suavemente hasta que mezcle bien. Cúbrala y colóquela en el refrigerador por lo menos por una hora antes de servirla.

Tough times for the democrats

BY WILLIAM MURCHISON

Texas Political Notes

A Republican year is shaping up around here. Consider:

1. The latest Houston Post-KHOU-TV poll puts Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison 26 points ahead of Democrat Richard Fisher.

But what can Fisher do about it? Urge that he be sent to Washington as senatorial auxiliary to his good friend Bill Clinton? That would sink him for sure.

Fisher, nervous about contradicting his opponent's mainstream conservatism, talks instead about Hutchison's political action committee contributions. As if anyone cared!

Worse, from Fisher's standpoint, is the return fire his accusations have drawn. The Hutchison camp has been asking impolitely how much PAC money he received at a July 19 closed-door dinner featuring Bill Clinton.

2. And what about Ann Richards? The same poll shows our Democratic governor a measly 2 percentage points ahead of George W. Bush. For an incumbent governor as smart and pert as Richards' friends like to depict her, that's absolutely awful.

Neither campaign has any surplus zest. Richards sounds joyless and convictionless, not to say downright mean: calling her opponent a "jerk" and all. Bush, for his part, is the complete gentleman, refusing to attack his opponent personally but still getting in some good licks regarding her inattention to problems like welfare and schools.

This one still could go either way, but the Big Mo — the senior Bush's infamous name for momentum — appears to favor the junior Bush.

3. Republican strength trickles down to — or, perhaps better said, rises from — the grassroots. A new Arthur Finkelstein poll has 16-year liberal Democratic incumbent Rep. Martin Frost neck and neck with Republican challenger Ed Harrison — 40.7 percent to 40.7 percent — in a disparate district that takes in Dallas, some suburbs and a lot of small towns.

Harrison likes to note that Frost has voted with Clinton 91 percent of the time. Are the voters impressed? Not likely. Clinton's approval rating in the district is 35.7 percent — worse than in the country as a whole.

4. A black woman Republican, Jo Baylor, is running a spirited campaign for Lyndon Johnson's old congressional seat against ultra-liberal Democrat Lloyd Doggett, who is presently a state Supreme Court justice. In ultra-liberal Austin, her accusations about Doggett's beholdenness to the trial lawyers who are funding his campaign even while he sits on the bench may be insufficiently appreciated. Still, she stirs up the Bush and Hutchison troops, and that can't hurt.

5. At the state government level, Democrats suffer potential embarrassment from revelations of lousy investments in a fund — called Texpool — operated for municipalities. Money invested has dropped nearly $60 million in value this year. Incumbent Democratic treasurer Martha Whitehead, who demonstrates her disdain for the job by promising to abolish it, was appointed by Ann Richards. Republican Dave Hartman, a banker, is waving his arms, trying to call attention to the mess.

One could go on in this vein. Texas Democrats clearly are troubled over the prospect of losing all the major statewide offices. Is it Clinton? Partly. Our neighbor from Arkansas never has played well down here.

But it's also general, and generalized, disgust. Too many laws, too many taxes, too much government, too much crime! So goes the refrain. Government wants to step on smokers' rights and curb gun sales and protect "endangered" birds no one ever heard of before. But public schools are so-so at best.

Perhaps only Republicans can save the Democrats' bacon. When Democratic Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock recently threw a fundraiser, all but three GOP state senators attended out of respect, never mind that Bullock has a respectable Republican opponent, Tex Lezar. GOP wimpery vs. Democratic disdain for voters: You can't always know which will prevail. For right now at least, the Democrats are ahead in the self-destruction sweepstakes, with few signs of surrendering their lead.

EL SIDA y los adolescentes: Una alarma asombrosa

Lamentablemente, el grupo de mayor crecimiento para nuevos casos del SIDA son los adolescentes.

Estos datos sorprendentes están basados en un estudio por Baylor College of Medicine que dramatiza esta situación.

El estudio de Baylor reveló que aproximadamente el 20 por ciento de pacientes con el SIDA están entre sus 20 años de edad, lo cual hace pensar que adquirieron el HIV (Virus de Inmunodeficiencia Humana) cuando eran adolescentes, ya que el HIV típicamente toma un período de incubación de varios años.

Otros estudios han mostrado que en los Estados Unidos siete de cada 10 mujeres y ocho de cada 10 varones tienen relaciones sexuales para la edad de 20 años. Un estudio conducido por el Centro para el Control de Enfermedades (Centers for Disease Control) informa que el 21 por ciento de estudiantes de la escuela secundaria han tenido sexo con cuatro o más compañeros, lo cual indica que la oportunidad de contraer el HIV es más grande.

Más de 50,000 americanos han muerto del SIDA y una cantidad más notable de americanos están infectados con HIV, y están por desarrollar los síntomas. Ya que todas las edades y grupos étnicos están en riesgo de ser contaminados por el HIV, es crucial que todo el mundo—adolescentes incluso—aprendan y practicen maneras de aminorar el riesgo.

La gente se infecta con el HIV a través del contacto de fluidos o tejidos infectados del cuerpo. Normalmente, la infección se adquiere cuando hay relación sexual sin protección o por el uso de una aguja contaminada cuando se abusan las drogas intravenosas.

Siguiendo el curso hacia la edad adulta, pueda que los adolescentes consideren explorar diferentes estilos de vida sin la perspectiva adulta a las consecuencias potenciales. La modernidad de hoy en día y la tolerancia de no prohibir la actividad sexual y el acceso fácil al acrecentamiento de las drogas intravenosas aumenta la tentación para que los adolescentes se envuelvan en tales actividades. La tragedia de estas muertes evitables del SIDA es mayor por la juventud e inocencia de las víctimas.

Lo que hace falta hoy en la "educación del HIV" y es a menudo pasado por alto, pero es parte crucial de la vida del adolescente—los padres.

Aunque hay muchos mensajes que provienen de las escuelas, iglesias y centros sociales, es principalmente la responsabilidad de los padres el comunicar los peligros morales, físicos y emocionales que existen en cuanto a las relaciones sexuales prematrimoniales.

Como un padre, he luchado con la enorme epidemia del SIDA. ¿Que les digo? ¿Como les puedo advertir adecuadamente que se abstengan de relaciones sexuales en la adolescencia?

¿Más importante? Hable con ellos. Ponga énfasis en la responsabilidad de sus acciones. Explique las realidades del SIDA (y busque folletos que le puedan ayudar, si es necesario). Promuévales su valor propio y dignidad y ayúdelos a evitar situaciones que los puedan llevar a tener relaciones sexuales antes del matrimonio. Conozca sus amigos. Anímelos a que traigan sus amigos a la casa. Tome un interés real en lo que les interesa a ellos aunque le parezca "fuera de si". Al final, sus hijos van a apreciarlo, no importa lo que le digan hoy.

¿Y la parte más difícil? Sea un padre. Hable con ellos en términos serios acerca de sus amigos, tiempo excesivo con sus amigas o amigos, y en una manera amorosa recomiende que se abstengan de tener relaciones sexuales antes del matrimonio.

No hay absolutamente nada malo con ser un padre "anticuado" cuando se trata del SIDA. El SIDA no es una enfermedad "anticuada". Es algo serio.

Love is... Henry Cisneros

By Rick Martínez

SAN ANTONIO — Drive by Henry G. Cisneros' home on this town's west side and you can see it says a lot about the man.

It is rooted deep in a barrio where you are more likely to hear Spanish than English. The rambling wood-frame structure is neat and tidy and modest.

It is from that humble setting that Cisneros sprung to national prominence as mayor of San Antonio. But look at his image at present, and his house is anything but in order.

Just when we thought that Cisneros was back on the right political track — after being derailed in 1988 by the revelation of an extramarital love affair with his political consultant — the Texan finds himself again in the middle of the muck.

Cisneros' job as President Clinton's Housing and Urban Development secretary may hang in the balance. The heat is on the White House as well.

It seems ex-lover Linda Medlar was not content to be lovelorn in Lubbock. Medlar has sold transcripts of conversations she secretly taped between herself and Cisneros to the tabloid TV show "Inside Edition" for $15,000, according to news reports. The tapes indicate, among other things, that during his screening for the cabinet post, Cisneros was not truthful to federal investigators regarding payments he made to Medlar, she purports.

Her motive was revenge, alleges a columnist for the San Antonio Express-News. Medlar is also suing Cisneros because she claims he has defaulted on his promised payment of living expenses.

This lovers' quarrel has escalated into a U.S. Justice Department probe under the Ethics in Government Act of 1978. The question for Attorney General Janet Reno to resolve is whether Cisneros deliberately misled Clinton transition investigators on the amount of the payments he made to Medlar, about $50,000, according to some published estimates.

Medlar has alleged Cisneros did mislead them. Cisneros says he did not.

Cisneros and Clinton are in tough positions. The White House is embroiled in two other ethics probes at present — Clinton's real estate dealings in the Whitewater scandal and allegations that agriculture secretary Mike Espy illegally accepted travel, lodging and sports tickets from a poultry processor and other companies regulated by his department.

Unless pressure comes from the president, it seems unlikely Cisneros would resign from his cabinet post. To resign would be, in essence, admitting he was guilty of misleading federal investigators.

The tape excerpts I read seem to show at the time when Cisneros was telling the world he had put this love affair behind him, he really had not. That impression more than anything may do the most damage to Cisneros' credibility with the public.

With César Chávez dead and Cisneros on "Inside Edition," what other Latino leaders do we have on the rise? Federico Peña? My sense is the national spotlight has not yet fallen on the Latino who can be of greater national significance someday.

The unfortunate reality of the situation is that even if Cisneros weathers this storm, it seems unlikely Clinton or another Democratic administration would gamble on him for a future high-level appointment.

My fellow Texans, on the other hand, will surely welcome Cisneros home to San Antonio's west side and perhaps elect him to major office down the line. The Texans I've spoken with see Cisneros as the victim in this second go-round with Medlar. Some view Medlar as simply a woman out to get a buck through the legal system and through tabloid television's brand of the court of public opinion.

Some historians say that a love affair nearly cost Franklin Delano Roosevelt his political life because Eleanor wanted a divorce. If that happened to FDR in this part of the century, do you think "Inside Edition" would be after his lover's story? In a Hyde Park minute.

PROFILE: THE HOME TOWN BOYS

With the success of their first album on Discos MM (Capitol-EMI), "El Poder de Una Mujer," The Home Town Boys have blown into the Tex-Mex music scene like a West Texas sandstorm.

This family conjunto (which also has been known as the Conjunto Internacional de Ricky y Joe) has been entertaining dancers and selling records in and around their home town of Lubbock, Texas, for over ten years. Now, with their album out and heavy radio play (with songs that have gone to # 1 in San Antonio and throughout South Texas), The Home Town Boys are poised to sweep throughout Texas, California and the Southwest and northern Mexico.

The Home Town Boys are truly a family. Roman Martinez, Sr., who plays bajo sexto, is the father of the entire group. Unlike other band leaders, instead of hiring available musicians, Martinez bore and raised his own group: sons Ricky (lead vocals, bass); Joe (accordion, harmony vocals); Jesse (drums); and Roman, Jr. (percussion and sound).

The Home Town Boys dominate the conjunto circuit in West Texas, playing five nights each week and performing with such well-known artists as Ramon Ayala, Los Dos Gilbertos, Emilio Navaira & Rio, and David Lee Garza y Los Musicales.

The Home Town Boys have a long list of accomplishments out west, but now, with the success of their first album "El Poder de Una Mujer," they are taking on the rest of Texas and the world. They have performed at several concerts around Cinco de Mayo in California, as well as getting great airplay in the Midwest and taking Houston, Dallas, San Antonio and the Valley by storm. And now comes their second LP, "Somos Dos Gatos."

OFFICIAL NOTICE OFFICIAL NOTICE

VOLUNTARY RECALL OF CIGARETTE LIGHTER

As a voluntary/precautionary measure based on a small number of consumer complaints involving burns, R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Company has announced a nationwide recall of a recently distributed unique lighter. The lighter is:

CAMEL Metal Match Lighter — This lighter was distributed in retail stores with a two-pack purchase of CAMEL cigarettes beginning in August 1994. The lighter, designed to function as a relightable match, looks like a small pack of cigarettes and features CAMEL designs.

Consumers who possess the "CAMEL Metal Match" lighter must stop using it and either dispose of it or contact R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Company immediately for directions on how to properly return the lighter. DO NOT RETURN THE LIGHTER WITHOUT FIRST CONTACTING THE COMPANY. The two methods for contact include:

1. Send your name and address by October 31, 1994, to: CAMEL Metal Match Returns, P.O. Box 7, Winston-Salem, NC 27102.

2. Call 1-800-887-4579 with your name and address. The 800 number will be operational Monday through Friday, between 7:00 a.m. and 12:00 Midnight ET, until October 31, 1994.

Consumers will be provided postage-paid mailers in which to return the lighters. For returning a lighter or lighters, consumers will receive one $5.00 check to cover their inconvenience.
