Midlanders turn eyes to skies

Tornadoes sighted in Basin; Some rainfall received

Almost everybody in Midland was watching the skies Tuesday night.

Heavy thunderstorms spawned tornadoes between Midland and Andrews and dropped heavy rains on parts of the Permian Basin while leaving others completely dry.

With the memory of the devastating tornado that ripped through Wichita Falls last Tuesday still fresh, reports of a tornado moving toward Midland from the Andrews County line sent as many as 40 Midlanders with children, dogs, cats and sleeping bags to the shelter of the Midland County Courthouse.

The crowd began to gather about 9:15 p.m. Tuesday, a Midland County Sheriff's Department spokesman said today, and had left by about 10:30 after the threat of an incoming tornado had passed.

Reports of shelter seekers in the downtown Southwestern Bell Telephone Building could not be confirmed this morning.

"I don't know. I was staying near my bathtub last night," one telephone company spokesman said today.

Since the building is usually locked at night, however, its use a shelter probably was limited, said the spokesman.

Despite heavy rains in the area and some strong winds, no reports of damage had been received by this morning.

The storm apparently spent a good deal of its time directly over the National Weather Service rain gauge at Midland Regional Airport, where 1.62 inches of rain was measured between 10 and 10:38 p.m. with most of that measured from 10:17 to 10:38, weather service spokesmen said.

Hail a half-inch in diameter was mixed with the heavy rains at the airport, and pea-sized hail was reported at the Warfield truck stop east of Midland.

The area east of Lamesa in Dawson County apparently got the heaviest concentration of rain. Residents there reported up to an unofficial four inches during the storm Tuesday night.

Gauges further south in Dawson County recorded two to three inches.

Midland apparently missed the majority of the moisture, with most city gauges reflecting only a few tenths of rain.

South Midland recorded .6 inch and north Midland got only .1 inch. Far east Midland received only .2 inch, but in the far western part of the city, .67 inch fell. Greenwood missed the rain altogether, reports indicated.

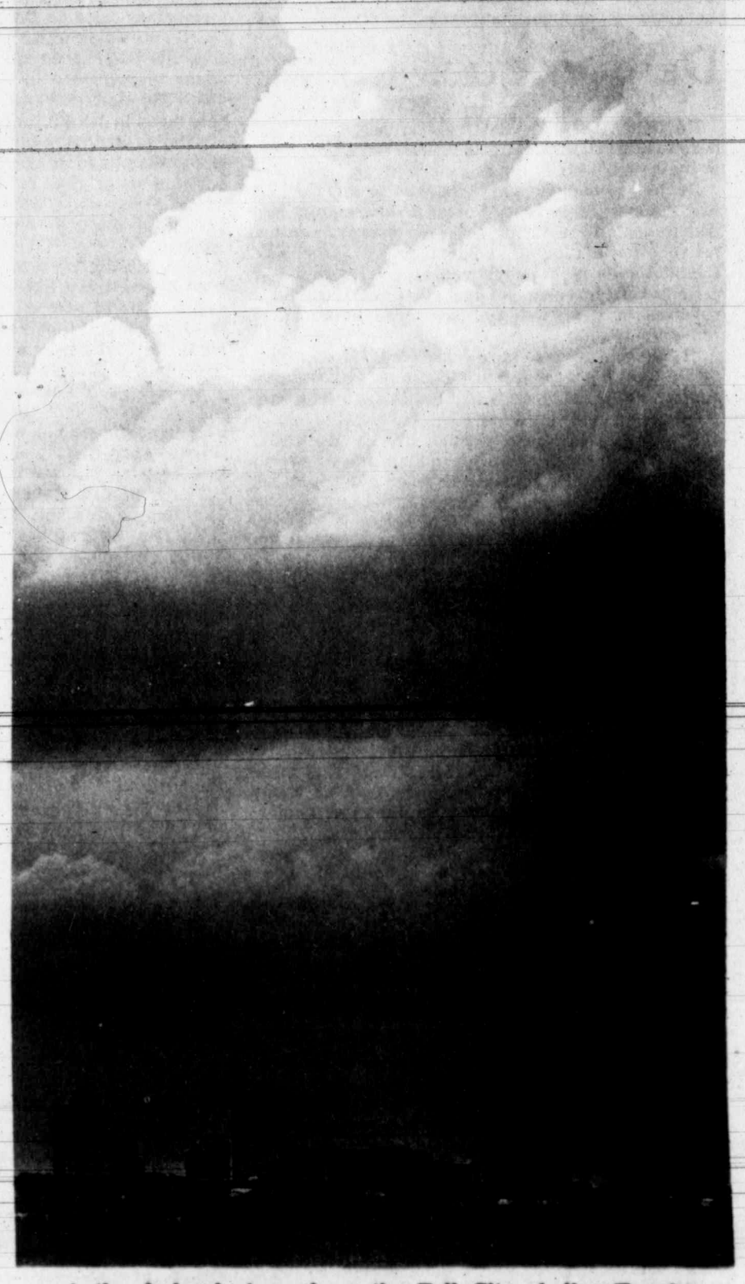

Forecast for Thursday calls for a continued chance of afternoon and evening thundershowers with some possibly becoming locally heavy tonight.

Probability of rain is put at 30 percent tonight, decreasing to 20 percent Thursday.

High Thursday is expected to be near 80, with the overnight low in the upper 50s.

Recorded high Tuesday was 79 degrees, nowhere close to the record temperature for the date of 97 degrees, set in 1975. Overnight low was 56, a good deal milder than the 33 degree record set in 1953.

The 1.62 inches recorded at the airport brought the monthly accumulation to 1.63 inches and the annual rainfall total to 2.86.

A thunderhead rises above the Tall City skyline Tuesday evening as a series of storms move through the Midland-Odessa area. A tornado spawned by the clouds was sighted 10 miles northwest of Midland, though no damage was reported. Midland Regional Airport received more than 1.55 inches of rain in a 25-minute period. Midland itself got only scattered traces of rain. (Staff Photo by Richard Mason)

Marvin's friend gets $104,000

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Michelle Triola Marvin was awarded $104,000 today in her lawsuit against actor Lee Marvin.

Superior Court Judge Arthur Marshall said the award was intended "for rehabilitation purposes so that she may have the economic means to re-educate herself and to learn new, employable skills."

The judge said he was concerned that Miss Marvin be able to "return from her status as companion of a motion picture star to a separate, independent but perhaps more prosaic existence."

The award was considerably less than the $1.8 million that Miss Marvin, 46, sought as compensation for the six years she lived as homemaker, companion and cook to the 55-year-old tough-guy actor.

Marvin's attorney, A. David Kagon, called the ruling a "total victory" for the actor. Marvin said: "I think it's sensational ... We won on all counts ...."

Miss Marvin said: "I'm very happy that I won something. I'm proud to have paved the way for people in relationships such as mine."

In his 33-page decision, the judge found that the actor and the former showgirl had neither an express nor implied contract to share property. However, the judge cited a California Supreme Court decision which allows a judge to find "additional equitable remedies" to protect the rights of unmarried people living together.

He said he based his decision on the fact that Marvin's income during the affair with Miss Marvin exceeded $1 million and that Miss Marvin — who filed the suit seven years ago — was forced to go on unemployment to support herself when they separated. He said the amount of the award was linked to the maximum she earned while a singer — $1,000 a week over a two-year period. Miss Marvin had sought an estimated half of the fortune Marvin made during their relationship.

The judge made it clear that his decision does not mean that all unmarried persons living together are automatically entitled to the property and earnings of a non-marital partner. He said that would be tantamount to restoring common-law marriage which does not exist in California.

He commented at length on various portions of evidence including the testimony of Richard Doughty, a young actor who claimed he had sexual relations with Miss Marvin while she was still living with Marvin.

> The judge said he was concerned that Miss Marvin be able to "return from her status as companion of a motion picture star to a separate, independent but perhaps more prosaic existence."

The judge, evaluating three months of testimony at the trial, pointed out that Miss Marvin's testimony in her own behalf had been inconsistent many times. He particularly cited a conflict between her story and one told by screen star Gene Kelly who took the stand to refute Miss Marvin's claim that he had recommended her for a role in the show, "Flower Drum Song."

The judge supported Marvin's contention that promises made during the early days of the love affair were casual comments that could not have been taken seriously.

"A review of the extensive testimony clearly leads this court to the conclusion that no express contract was negotiated between the parties," the judge said.

Citing an alleged comment by Marvin that, "What I have is yours and what you have is mine," the judge said: "Considering the circumstances from which it allegedly sprung, the lack of intent to make a contract is immediately apparent.

"...He had repeatedly informed plaintiff that he did not believe in marriage because of the property rights which a wife thereby acquires. Plaintiff could not have understood that phrase to accord the same rights to one who was not defendant's wife."

The case already has set a precedent on appeal. The California Supreme Court in 1976 upheld the right of unmarried persons to sue for property division when a live-in relationship ends.

Today's ruling becomes part of California law, but its effect outside the state is unknown. The outcome of Marvin vs. Marvin may be cited as a precedent in similar cases anywhere, but the weight that will be given the ruling is pure speculation, lawyers have said.

Depending on how Marshall ruled, attorneys close to the Marvin case have said, an estimated 100 similar suits could be filed in California alone.

Other entertainment figures currently being sued by former live-in lovers are singer Alice Cooper, comedian Flip Wilson and actors Rod Steiger and Nick Nolte.

On Tuesday, another such suit — filed against rock star Peter Frampton by former companion Penelope McCall — was dismissed by New York Supreme Court Judge Joseph Gagliardi because their living arrangement had involved adultery, a crime in New York.

The judge's decision was the final act of a courtroom drama that exposed Hollywood private lives to public scrutiny and provided enough details for a soap opera.

There were bitter accusations between the former lovers involving alleged infidelities, abortions and alcoholism.

On the witness stand, they both tried to resurrect memories of a love affair that began 15 years ago on the set of the movie "Ship of Fools" and died six years later on the beach at Malibu.

"I loved Lee," Miss Marvin said tearfully.

"I never loved her," Marvin growled through clenched teeth.

Supreme Court deals news media legal defeat with new ruling on libel

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court, voting 6 to 3, ruled today that public figures suing for libel may inquire into a journalist's "state of mind" and the editorial process behind the allegedly libelous statement.

Handing the news media a major legal defeat, the justices ruled that reporters and editors enjoy no constitutional protection from having to answer such questions in libel cases.

"We have concluded that the (2nd U.S. Circuit) Court of Appeals misconstrued the First and 14th Amendments and accordingly reverse its judgment," Justice Byron R. White wrote for the court.

The decision is a big victory for former Army Lt. Col. Anthony Herbert, who is suing CBS and others in a $44.7 million libel action.

The decision means lawyers for Herbert will be able to ask at least some of the questions they previously were barred from asking in pre-trial proceedings.

"According an absolute privilege to the editorial process of a media defendant in a libel case is not required, authorized or presaged by our prior cases," White wrote.

He said that to give journalists such an absolute privilege "would substantially enhance the burden of proving actual malice, contrary to the expectations of (past libel rulings)."

Under a landmark 1964 Supreme Court decision, public officials and public figures who sue for libel must prove "actual malice" — knowledge that a statement was false or reckless disregard for whether it was false.

If questions probing into the editorial process are allowed — such as "Why did you use this quote instead of another?" or "Didn't you and your editors suspect that your source was lying?" — actual malice might be easier to prove in future libel suits.

White was joined in the majority opinion by Chief Justice Warren E. Burger and Justices Harry A. Blackmun, Lewis F. Powell Jr., William H. Rehnquist and John Paul Stevens.

Three justices, William J. Brennan Jr., Thurgood Marshall and Potter Stewart, filed separate dissenting opinions but only Marshall voted to give the news media a total victory.

"Because I believe some constraints on pretrial discovery are essential to ensure the 'uninhibited and robust' debate on public issues which (the court's 1964 ruling) contemplated, I respectfully dissent," Marshall said.

Brennan wanted the court to shield journalists from "state of mind" questions in certain instances but added: "This privilege must yield if a public figure plaintiff is able to demonstrate to the ... satisfaction of a trial judge that the libel in question constitutes defamatory falsehood."

Stewart voted to send the case back to the federal trial court for rulings on each individual question Herbert's lawyers sought to ask.

The test case decided today stemmed from Herbert's 1973 lawsuit against CBS, the network's "60 Minutes" news magazine program, correspondent Mike Wallace, producer Barry Lando and the Atlantic Monthly.

Herbert, who was stripped of a battalion command, gained national prominence in 1971 when he formally charged his superior offices with covering up war crimes in South Vietnam.

Lando's investigation of Herbert's experiences led to a Feb. 4, 1973, segment on "60 Minutes" called "The Selling of Colonel Herbert."

In it, the truth of Herbert's charges was called into question. Lando also wrote an article for the Atlantic Monthly magazine about his findings.

Tensions rising again in Iran, but Khomeini's foe backs down

TEHRAN, Iran (AP) — Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's forces staged military parades throughout Iran to boost army morale and demonstrate the new Islamic republic's strength.

Meanwhile, Tehran's local religious leader, Ayatollah Mahmoud Taleghani, did an about-face after warning against "another dictator" and appealed to his supporters to cease public protests against Khomeini's revolutionary committees.

It was an apparent effort to defuse rising tensions among the various revolutionary factions in the capital. But several thousand of his supporters demonstrated in Tehran for the fourth successive day demanding a purge of "counter-revolutionary elements" from the revolutionary committees.

Meanwhile, thousands of flower-garlanded soldiers paraded through Tehran and provincial capitals, carrying large portraits of Khomeini and green Islamic flags as crowds of bystanders clapped in approval.

Khomeini, the 78-year-old religious leader of the revolution, ordered the parades to try to repair some of the damage done to the morale and efficiency of the armed forces during the upheaval that led to the overthrow of Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi.

The executions resumed today after a one-day layoff for the firing squads. Seven men were shot for killing anti-shah demonstrators, Radio Tehran announced.

This brought the total number of confirmed executions by Khomeini's committees to 143 since the last royal government fell in early February.

Taleghani, who went into hiding last weekend after Islamic militiamen arrested his two sons and a daughter-in-law, roughed them up and held them for 24 hours, urged the revolutionary committees on Tuesday to exercise restraint and warned against restrictions on freedom.

School election voting slow

The April 28 runoff election between incumbent Midland school board member Ed Runyan and retired teacher Alice M. Greer seemingly is not attracting the interest of the original election.

By this morning, after two full days of absentee voting, only 25 persons had cast their ballots at the school district office.

A record number of absentee ballots was cast for the April 7 election, which set up the runoff. Voters apparently were attracted then by the Plan O referendum on that ballot.

Absentee voting will continue through Tuesday at the school district office at 702 N. N St.

Committee recommends better safety equipment, safeguards

WASHINGTON (AP) — A government advisory committee on nuclear safety says the nation's nuclear power plants should be equipped with improved instruments to alert plant operators to the condition of vital safety systems.

That was one of several recommendations made Tuesday by the Advisory Committee on Reactor Safeguards to its parent agency, the Nuclear Regulatory Commission.

The committee said specifically the nuclear plants should have instruments to give plant operators a better reading of the temperatures and water levels in the plants' reactor core.

The group also recommended new safety research and analysis in the aftermath of the Three Mile Island nuclear power plant accident March 28, and said the NRC should consider having its own computer system to simulate reactor operations and accidents.

Operators of the Three Mile Island plant had trouble determining conditions inside the reactor and its water system when the accident began, and were slow to realize that certain safety valves should have been open or closed at the time.

The advisory committee also made public a preliminary study written in January 1978 in which a consultant, Carl Michelson, a Tennessee Valley Authority specialist on nuclear safety, predicted just the sort of confusion that apparently compounded the Three Mile Island accident.

Plumbing speeds nuke cooling

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP) — The painfully slow process of cooling down the damaged reactor at the Three Mile Island nuclear power plant is being accelerated through changes in the plant's plumbing.

Harold Denton, chief of Nuclear Regulator Commission operations at the plant, said Tuesday that technicians hope to lower the temperature of the reactor's cooling water by another 10 degrees.

He had announced plans last week to reduce the water temperature by 10 degrees per hour from about 280 degrees down to 230 degrees, but it was only down to 245 degrees by Tuesday.

"The preferred cooling plan ... is taking a lot longer than I had imagined it would," Denton said at a final news briefing here. He arrived at Three Mile Island 19 days ago, when the reactor's core was in danger of melting, and was returning to Washington.

He also said releases of radioactive iodine have been halted and a flap over disposal of radioactive waste will be solved by taking the material to Washington state instead of South Carolina, where authorities refused to admit it.

Meanwhile, the Metropolitan Edison Co., operator of the plant, said Tuesday it could go bankrupt unless the state gives final approval to at least part of a proposed $49 million consumer rate increase that was approved only six days before the nuclear accident.

At the plant's troubled reactor, the NRC wants core temperatures at 230 degrees before steps are taken to bring it into what is called a cold shutdown. That's the point at which there is no longer any risk of a chain reaction in the core going out of control.

The reactor normally heats pressurized water, which in turn heats other water into steam to power turbines. The steam is now being used to carry off reactor core heat.

"Plans are being made to lower the temperature about another 10 degrees by opening up new flow paths for steam," Denton said.

Victor Stello, a Denton aide who is taking over as the NRC chief of operations at the site, said a cold shutdown is being delayed so that precautionary backup systems can be completed.

"The design just takes time, and it takes time to fabricate pipe and install it," Stello said.

Denton said increased releases of iodine 131 during a recent 30-hour period were far too slight to present any danger to the public. The releases have been halted, he said.

He said a possible cause of the iodine releases was a procedure used by company technicians to replace charcoal filters that decontaminate gases before they are released.

"We found that 20 filters had been removed, but no replacements had been put in," Denton said, adding that in the future, each of the 130-pound filters will be replaced as soon as its removed.

Metropolitan Edison went before the Public Utility Commission Tuesday in connection with the rate increase, nearly all of which was slated for running Three Mile Island.

Met Ed offered to trim $16 million from the increase. But James Liberman, general counsel for the utility's parent company, General Public Utilities, said that without a "transfusion" the company faces bankruptcy.

The commission could decide this week whether the utility is entitled to the increase in view of the accident, which has crippled the plant indefinitely.

Denton goes home

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP) — Harold Denton, sent here to tame the worst nuclear power plant accident in the nation's history, has gone home to Maryland.

Denton, a nuclear physicist who is the Nuclear Regulatory Commission's chief of operations, was dispatched as President Carter's personal representative after a reactor accident at the Three Mile Island atomic plant nearly caused a catastrophe.

Denton supervised an operation that controlled releases of radiation and strove to harness the renegade reactor.

"I consider my task here completed," Denton said at his final news conference Tuesday, although the contaminated cauldron is still not at the totally safe point called cold shutdown.

Four hours later, he walked into his Rockville, Md., home to the happy cries of his three children.

"Oh, he's here! He just came in the door," said his daughter Liz, 18, who happened to be on the telephone with a reporter at the time.

"Fantastic! Oh, it's so great to have him home after 19 days!" she said.

The 43-year-old Denton had come to Three Mile Island on March 30, following two days of confusion, poor communication and misleading reports about the dangers.

From the moment he arrived aboard an Air Force helicopter, Denton turned around the mood at the site. His credibility was never questioned and there was no doubt about who was in charge.

The public got nearly all its information about the scary accident from Denton, who patiently translated complex technical developments into lay terms with a soothing voice at his regular news conferences.

In the process, he became a sort of folk hero, drawing praise from Carter and warm thanks from Gov. Dick Thornburgh.

And young ladies in the Harrisburg area were spotted with T-shirts saying, "Harold Denton Can Heat Up My Reactor Any Time."

Nuclear fuel shipments cause concern to India

WASHINGTON (AP) — India's worry about uncertain future shipments of nuclear fuel from the United States is expected to be the most contentious topic when Foreign Minister Atal Bihari Vajpayee sees President Carter and Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance next week.

Vajpayee will spend a day and a half in Washington after visits to New York and Detroit.

The United States has a contract to deliver enriched uranium to India through 1993, the Indians say.

But a U.S. law passed since the agreement was signed makes it more difficult to ship uranium unless India consents to full safeguards by the International Atomic Energy Agency aimed at insuring that India does not use the uranium to make nuclear weapons.

A recent effort failed to bring agreement on the appointment of a special joint committee of scientists to determine whether these safeguards would interfere with development of peaceful nuclear energy in India.

Beginning this fall, the Congress will have power to veto uranium shipments unless President Carter expressly orders them.

Indian Prime Minister Morarji Desai refuses to submit to full international safeguards as long as they are not also applied to countries which, like the United States, already have nuclear weapons. Desai, 83, says he has no intention of making nuclear weapons, but his promise would not bind his successor.

The question of U.S. uranium shipments to India is part of the broader issue of nuclear development in South Asia, including Pakistan's desire for nuclear weapons.

Other items on the agenda for discussion include developments in the Middle East and Vietnam and the military activity of both the United States and the Soviet Union in the Indian Ocean.

Welding defects found

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Welding irregularities were found in the containment vessel of the "twin sister" reactor at the Three Mile Island nuclear power plant, according to X-ray inspection reports cited by the Los Angeles Times.

The Times also reported that an unpublicized mishap at the "twin" reactor — involving a closed valve and instrument deficiency — occurred one week before the more serious accident at the Pennsylvania nuclear plant.

The "twin" reactor, known as Unit 1, has one of the best safety records in the nuclear industry. But these inspection reports, plus the minor accident, raise questions about its safety, according to the Times report, published Tuesday.

Metropolitan Edison Co., which operates the twin reactors at Three Mile Island, discovered problems last month with its subcontractor's inspection report on 63 welds in Unit 1.

Metropolitan Edison officials declined Monday to discuss what irregularities were found in the routine inspections, pending a meeting with the subcontractor, Nuclear Energy Services Inc. Officials of Nuclear Energy refused comment, the Times said.

A Metropolitan Edison official who declined to be identified said, "Maybe in the back of their minds (the utility's employees) do suspect they were falsified."

Quake cleanup hindered by rain

DUBROVNIK, Yugoslavia (AP) — Persistent rains plagued earthquake cleanup operations again today and made life more miserable for 80,000 people spending their third night outside.

Avalanche dogs and specialists with listening devices combed demolished neighborhoods in the Montenegro coastal area, leveled by a powerful quake Sunday.

Carter says he'll nominate Barrow for Marine position

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter announced today he will nominate Gen. Robert H. Barrow, a three-war veteran who cracked down on training abuses, to become the 27th commandant of the Marine Corps.

Barrow, holder of the Navy Cross and the Army Distinguished Service Cross for "extraordinary heroism" in the Korean and Vietnam wars, will replace Gen. Louis H. Wilson, who will retire June 30 after four years as head of the 187,000-member Corps, said the sources, who asked not to be named.

The 57-year-old Barrow, a native of Baton Rouge, La., has been assistant Marine commandant for the past 13 months.

His nomination is subject to Senate confirmation, but this is normally automatic.

As Marine commandant, Barrow will sit as a member of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, the nation's top military body.

While Marine manpower chief in 1976, Barrow was instrumental in drafting reforms designed to end physical abuse and harassment of recruit trainees by drill instructors. Officials said the training reforms, which include closer supervision by officers, have worked well.

Barrow told reporters at the time that the Corps would not ease the tough physical conditioning that traditionally marks the training of Marine recruits. But he said there would be no more "excess stress" on recruits, including "nose-to-nose yelling" by drill sergeants.

Among other things, Barrow ordered the length of the training day at boot camp shortened from the old dawn-into-night schedule.

The changes followed the death of Marine Pvt. Lynn McClure of Lufkin, Tx., who died after suffering head injuries during close combat training. The Corps has denied the reforms resulted from the McClure incident.

Barrow's 36-year Marine Corps career began in World War II when he was commissioned and sent to China. There, he fought alongside Nationalist guerrillas for months behind Japanese lines.

280 rightists seeking posts

LONDON (AP) — The ultra-rightist National Front, which seeks to end all non-white immigration into Britain, is running 280 candidates in the general election and threatens to whip up simmering racial tensions.

It is the largest field the Front has mustered for a general election since it first competed for seats in the House of Commons with 10 candidates in the 1970 election. In the last election in October 1974, it ran 90 and got 3.12 percent of the vote.

Led by men with known fascist links, the Front has been involved in bloody street battles with leftists and non-white immigrants. None of its candidates has ever come close to getting elected despite an increase in racial tensions and opposition to non-white immigrants. But its slate of candidates running for election to the House of Commons May 3 is the fourth largest on the ballots, exceeded only by the "big three" Conservatives, Laborites and Liberals.

By having more than 50 candidates, the Front will get media exposure previously denied it.

It qualifies for a five-minute election broadcast on all TV channels April 26. It can also legitimately claim to participate with the three major parties in campaign TV and radio discussions.

The Front's national organizer, Martin Webster, said one of the reasons for running so many candidates was to beat what he called "the conspiracy of the media against us."

The Front, formed by a merger of the British National Party, the League of Empire Loyalists and other rightist groups, aims to restore Britain's lost imperial greatness, halt non-white immigration and repatriate the 3.2 million non-whites living in the country.

Its founder and chairman, 44-year-old John Tyndall, once paraded in Nazi-style uniform as one of the leaders of the British National Socialist party in the early 1960s.

The Front's support ebbs when the racial climate cools off and surges when it heats up. But Scotland Yard estimates it has 12,000 full-time members.

The major parties have condemned the Front for its racist campaign. Although the Conservatives have indicated they would like to restrict non-white immigration, Britain's smouldering racial problem has not become a campaign issue.

Instead, the major parties are leaning over backwards to woo the 1.2 million non-white voters. They could influence the result in at least 40 districts and could tip the balance in another dozen.

Swearings-in highlight routine board meeting

By SUSAN TOTH
Staff Writer

The changing of the guard and a discussion of the inter-district transfer policy highlighted an otherwise routine meeting of the Midland school board Tuesday.

Two new school trustees were sworn in to office by Dist. Judge Perry Pickett.

Joyce Sherrod, whose resignation as a Midland teacher was accepted just before the swearing in, and Parker Humes took the oaths of office. The third trustee to be sworn in this year will be determined by voters in a runoff election April 28 between incumbent Ed Runyan and retired teacher Alice M. Greer.

Ann Page, who was narrowly defeated by Mrs. Sherrod in the April 7 school board election, said in her farewell speech to the audience and her fellow board members that she was "proud of our district and the things we stood for."

She thanked each trustee individually for his contributions during her one-term tenure on the board, and urged each of them to "extend the same kindness to the person who succeeds me."

To standing applause from the audience and the board, Mrs. Page was presented a framed color photo of the board she was leaving by board president Johnny Warren, who thanked her for her tireless work and "mother's touch."

David Grimes, who chose not to run for re-election, seemed more relieved than saddened by his departure. His farewell oratory was limited to "I wish you all lots of luck. Goodbye."

Grimes then tucked his photo under his arm and stepped down.

Neither of the deposed members remained for the rest of the meeting, which included consideration of several transfer requests from outside the district.

Transfers for four students in the Greenwood district who attended Midland schools this year were approved, but a transfer for a student currently enrolled in Greenwood who wanted to transfer to Midland for high school was turned down pending approval from the Greenwood superintendent.

Special education students from Greenwood were accepted for transfer on the condition the Greenwood district pay tuition for the students.

Special education students are not included in the average daily attendance figures used to get reimbursement from the state, Midland Schools Superintendent James Mailey noted, so the tuition would cover the difference in state aid that normally would be received.

In other business, the board heard a report on special education and strings programs and authorized the staff to place orders for new school buses for next year.

The board, after an executive session, agreed to sell one lot taken for back taxes in November 1967 for $460. They also purchased five lots near the school warehouse and bus barn for $7,500.

Following a lengthy executive session, two students were expelled for the remainder of the school year.

One expulsion was for striking a teacher and the other for carrying a weapon on campus, school officials said.

Man hurt in shootout

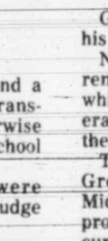

CLEVELAND (AP) — A 26-year-old man was wounded after he and police officers exchanged about 25 shots in a gun battle in the busy concourse of Cleveland Hopkins International Airport, police said.

No one else was wounded, officers said, although about 50 people were in the area when the shooting started Tuesday night.

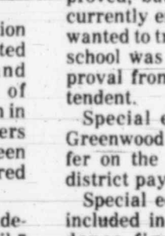

Police said they had no idea why the man, identified as Bruce Brightharp of Cleveland, started firing a .38-caliber revolver. Brightharp was hit by four bullets and was reported in fair condition at Southwest General Hospital today.

An airport maintenance man said he recalled seeing the man at Hopkins for about a month, "just sitting there, kinda quiet, bothering nobody."

Tax-supported legal aid denied striking farmers

RAYMONDVILLE, Texas (AP) — A South Texas state judge has ordered the tax-supported Texas Rural Legal Aid not to represent striking farm workers arrested here.

Attorneys for the Charles Wetegrove Co., hit by a Texas Farm Workers Union strike that slowed harvesting for two weeks, complained that TRLA is not allowed to get involved in criminal matters.

State District Judge Darrell Hester agreed and after a Tuesday hearing said he would sign an injunction barring TRLA involvement in criminal proceedings

TRLA Lawyers last week represented union members arrested as picket line tension mounted. Rollins Koppel, attorney for Wetegrove, said it was unfair for TRLA to use its federal funds to represent persons charged with crimes. However, attorney Randy Fleuriet, representing TRLA, said the legal aid group is not barred by law from working on certain criminal cases.

Willacy County Sheriff Oscar Correa testified that the TRLA lawyers made it more difficult for deputies to maintain order on the picket lines.

"I felt had they not been there we could have talked to the people and they would have understood laymen's terms about the law," Correa said.

Koppel had also asked Hester to bar TRLA from getting involved in labor activities. But the judge refused to issue an order preventing the legal aid lawyers from attending rallies or demonstrations.

TRLA lawyers indicated they will appeal the injunction.

The Texas farm Workers Union strike began here April 4. A Wetegrove official testified that the strike cost the company $300,000. Koppel said the harvest returned to normal Monday as extra law enforcement officials protected workers who returned to the onion fields.

Chavez again calling for banana boycott

WASHINGTON (AP) — Cesar Chavez, his United Farm Workers union locked in another struggle he fears it may not survive, is resorting once again to his ultimate weapon — a call for a consumer boycott.

The target is not grapes or lettuce or wine. It is Chiquita bananas.

Chavez hopes the boycott will bring victory in the union's three-month strike against 11 major lettuce growers in California and Arizona.

The connection between bananas and lettuce?

Sun Harvest Inc., one of the largest struck growers, is owned by United Brands Co., which sells bananas under the Chiquita label. A successful banana boycott, the UFW hopes, would pressure Sun Harvest into settling with the union and set a pattern for the other growers.

"Our best hope is the boycott," Chavez said in an interview Tuesday. "The best hope is what we call 'The Court of Last Resort' — the American public."

In its 13 years, the 12,000-member UFW has won the backing of up to 17 million adults for boycotts launched to gain bargaining recognition, according to a national poll cited by the union.

"The American public," Chavez says, "has been very good to us."

Chavez, 52 and still the dominant force in the union he founded 13 years ago, is touring the country on behalf of the six-week-old boycott.

This week he is in Washington, seeking publicity for the boycott, along with money from other unions and government support for his lettuce strike.

The boycott, he says, is causing alarm at United Brands.

But company spokesmen following behind Chavez contend the UFW provoked the lettuce strike and is exploiting the good intentions of sympathetic consumers who are being asked to back a strike that will result in sharply higher food prices.

Chavez contends the growers are trying to break the strike — and ultimately the UFW — by importing illegal aliens to replace the striking farm workers.

Non-union harvesting is up to 30 percent "and increasing," he said, claiming the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service is ignoring the situation.

"If we cannot stop the unchecked illegal immigrant strike-breaking game that they've been playing, it'll be very serious for the entire union. We need desperately to get the government to enforce the law."

Chavez said the union will face its critical test late this month when the lettuce harvest begins in California's Salinas valley, billed as the nation's "Salad Bowl."

The company, however, says the issue "is not the establishment or survival of a union or cause, but the settlement of a contract...."

And so far, United Brands spokesman Dennis A. Sullivan said, the boycott has not affected sales of Chiquita, which he called "the most valuable thing" United Brands owns.

Sullivan denied that Sun Harvest has hired any illegal aliens. He said California's farm labor law allows for replacing striking workers, and that is what Sun Harvest has done.

The growers have offered three-year wage increases averaging 7 percent a year in line with President Carter's anti-inflation guidelines.

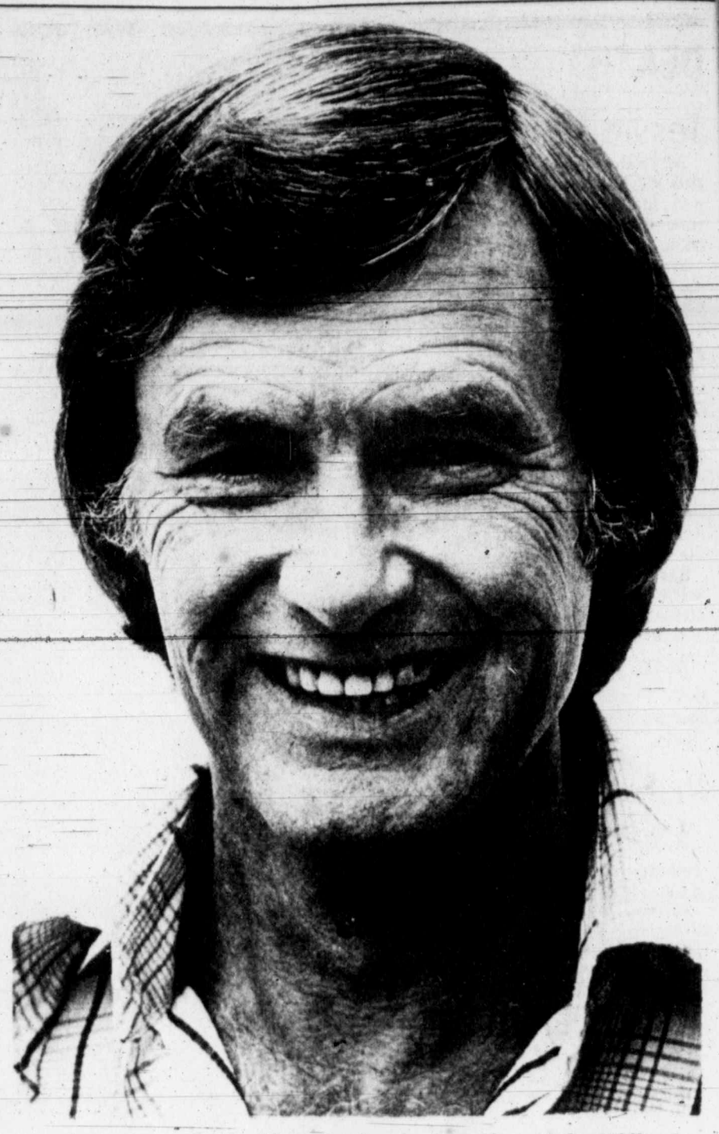

Chavez says the guidelines don't apply because more than half of the 4,000 striking workers make less than $4 an hour.

The government acknowledges that workers making less than $4 are generally exempt from the guidelines but says the pay standard applies to the strikers as a whole because many make more than that.

Chavez said a few workers make as much as $8.50 an hour on piece rates, but they work less than 40 hours a week and are unemployed much of the year. "They are poor, very poor," he said.

The growers, who say many UFW workers earn up to $12 an hour, say they offered increases of up to 12 percent in the first year to boost the minimum hourly wage from $3.70 to $4.12.

But they say the UFW still insists on a $5.20 minimum in the first year and total wage and fringe benefit hikes of 200 percent over three years.

Actor Orson Bean will be the featured speaker at the Midland Chamber of Commerce membership banquet, scheduled May 7.

Actor to be featured at Chamber banquet

Award-winning comic actor Orson Bean will be the featured entertainer for the Midland Chamber of Commerce annual membership dinner to be held at 7:30 p.m. May 7 in the Chaparral Center at Midland College.

Bean has been a stage and screen actor, television celebrity, producer of off-Broadway plays, night club comedian, author, founder and director of an experimental school for children and a professional magician.

He has described himself as a "househusband and explorer of inner space."

Bean made his debut as an entertainer doing a magic act that toured the country. He first appeared in New York City at the famous Blue Angel Supper Club, where he received more laughs than applause. He decided then to stick to straight comedy.

His Broadway debut came with "Men of Distinction," which was followed by "John Murray Anderson's Almanac" for which he received the Theatre World Award.

Bean played the lead in "Will Success Spoil Rock Hunter?" opposite Jayne Mansfield, which he said "accounts for my bad posture."

David Merrick used him in "Subways Are For Sleeping," which won Bean a Tony Award nomination. He followed this with a two-year run in "Never Too Late."

The comic actor also starred for a year with Melina Mercouri in "Illya Darling," the musical version of "Never on Sunday."

His off-Broadway production, the pop-art musical "Home Movies," won him three Obie awards.

Tickets to the Chamber dinner may be obtained by telephoning the chamber office, 683-3381, or going by the office at 211 N. Colorado St.

Rival firms oppose agreement

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Western Union Telegraph Co. wants to expand its radio and television transmission operations, but competitors are crying foul, saying the company seeks to make the move at taxpayer expense.

At issue is an agreement between Western Union and the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, that would allow the company to use government-owned transmitting and receiving facilities around the country.

Rival communications companies say that would give Western Union an unfair competitive advantage.

The Federal Communications Commission is expected to decide shortly whether to approve the agreement. Western Union and PBS are urging approval, while other firms, including RCA and American Telephone & Telegraph, say the deal should be rejected.

Since February 1978, the Public Broadcasting Service has been transmitting programs to its television affiliates over Westar I, a Western Union communications satellite, using ground facilities owned by CPB. The 157 transmitting and receiving stations cost CPB $39.5 million, most of it government money, and serve 276 public broadcasting affiliates across the country.

Western Union last November asked the FCC to lease three of the ground facilities near Washington, New Orleans and Jouston. The company said it envisions eventually beaming radio and television programs to at least 22 additional cities serviced by the government system.

As part of the agreement between Western Union and CPB, Western Union would pay $5 million over the next seven years to use the stations. It would use its own satellites and its own equipment to hook into the publicly owned facilities and "from time to time" would be allowed to use public broadcasting terminals.

The leasing proposal emerged threes ago when Western Union and CPB signed a 10-year contract for leasing access to Westar I for $2.4 million a year. That agreement included provision for Western Union to use the government-owned ground facility but they withheld approval of that part of the contract.

Since then, RCA American Communications Inc. and AT&T Long Lines, Western Union's chief competitors in the satellite communications field, have said if the Western Union-CPC deal is approved, it will give Western Union a distinct competitive advantage at taxpayer expense.

"If Western Union can use public facilities to have an instant telecommunications network with minimal investments, competition will not be equal," argued RCA in briefs filed before the FCC. "There is no way that private business...can compete with entities using public facilities."

Joe Mahon, Western Union's assistant vice president for public broadcasting services, said if the company had to build its own ground facilities, they would be costly.

Mahon conceded that an agreement with the government would be cheaper than building ground facilities, but said, "We're not getting a free ride or something for nothing."

However, RCA told the FCC that under the proposed agreement, Western Union could realize profits "far exceeding that which privately-funded carriers can achieve."

Lawyers for CPB argue that the agreement with Western Union would not threaten its autonomy and would offset expenses of leasing the satellite.

Three more Easter-weekend acts of vandalism reported

By MIKE SLATON
Staff Writer

Three more acts of vandalism were reported Tuesday to Midland police in the wake of 40 other reported acts of vandalism over the Easter holiday, according to a police spokesman.

Police said they suspected the three acts also occurred during the weekend.

Two of the incidents involved gunfire, police said.

T.A. Carter told police that about 4 a.m. Sunday five shots were fired at a light outside his home in the 3000 bock of Stanolind Avenue. Two of the shots entered the house, officers added.

Police said a .22-caliber magnum was used to fire shots at the Carter home.

John Muller of the 2000 block of Northrup Drive reported to police that he had found two bullet holes in the right side door of his car.

In the third case, a hammer may have been the instrument used to break the windshield of a car belonging to Jim Medford of the 3000 block of Neely Avenue, police said.

The apparent vandalism took place in an area bordered by Wadley Avenue, Midland Drive, Golf Course Road and Garfield Street.

The shootings happened within a mile of where four other shootings were reported earlier.

A total of six incidents involving gunfire within the last week have been reported to the police.

Residents told police of one vandalism involving gunfire on Dengar Avenue, two acts on Northrup Drive, and one each on Stanolind Avenue, Winfield Road and Sinclair Avenue, all in the northwest corner of Midland.

Chief Wayne Gideon of the Midland Police Department today said so far more than 40 cases of vandalism have been reported to the police recently.

Most of those, said Gideon, occurred over the Easter holiday and many are being reported late because the victims were out of town.

Gideon today said police can not link all the incidents to one individual or group, but additional personnel have been assigned to try and solve the case.

Missing items may have been found

A man using a metal detector between March 15 and 19 near the old Superior Oil Company building at 3701 Andrews Highway may have found several items police believe were taken in a March 14 burglary.

Two rings, a bracelet and a man's gold wrist watch were thrown from a car into the lot east of the building, police were told.

A man who works nearby told them he had seen someone using a metal detector in the area, officials said.

Police investigators found none of the stolen articles and believe they may have been picked up by the man with the metal detector, according to officials.

The property was taken from the motel room of a San Antonio man.

Sergeant Bob Miller today asked the man who was using the metal detector in that area or anyone having information pertaining to the case to telephone the police department.

Former Bryant aide to speak here

Melanie Barrier, former press secretary for Anita Bryant, will address the Midland Chapter of Texas Eagle Forum at 7:30 p.m. Thursday. The meeting is scheduled in the Fellowship Hall of Golf Course Road Church of Christ.

Also speaking will be Emory Bartlett, local chapter president, who will report on her recent trip to Washington, D.C., where she attended a National Pro-Family Rally.

Eagle Forum is an educational and legislative organization concerned about the moral issues today, said Ms. Bartlett.

The Forum is a non-partisan group active in local, state and federal levels of government, according to Ms. Bartlett.

More information may be obtained by telephoning Ms. Bartlett, 694-7308, or Cindy Miller, 697-5073.

Vice President, wife in Denmark

COPENHAGEN, Denmark (AP) — Vice President Walter Mondale and his wife arrived in Denmark today for the third stop on a six-nation tour to reassure small European allies and neutrals of American interest and support.

The Mondales came from Norway, the home of his ancestors, and Iceland, and after Denmark they plan to visit Sweden, Finland and the Netherlands.

Bush tosses his hat into presidential ring

WASHINGTON (A) — Former U.N. ambassador and Republican Party leader George Bush is the latest candidate to toss his hat into the presidential ring.

Bush will formally announce his candidacy for the Republican presidential nomination here May 1, his office said Tuesday.

Bush's government career includes time as director of the Central Intelligence Agency, U.S. ambassador to the United Nations and envoy to the People's Republic of China. He also is a former national chairman of the Republican Party.

Following his official announcement, Bush will begin his campaign with visits to Connecticut, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, and Florida, his office said.

Survivors include a son, James Ray Hill of Snyder; a sister, Faye Howell of Ballinger; a brother, Clem Hodges of Midland, eight grandchildren and seven great-grandchildren.

Cuevas attorney hopes to prove Estelle deal

HOUSTON (AP) — The defense attorney for convict Ignacio Cuevas hopes to prove today that the state Corrections Department director agreed to let three inmates and eight hostages move unmolested to an armored car during a state prison siege in 1974.

Under questioning Tuesday from defense attorney Will Gray, TDC Director W.J. Estelle said he never told inmate Fred Carrasco "that any of his demands was acceptable."

Carrasco, Cuevas and Rudolpho Dominguez staged the longest siege in U.S. penal history at the state prison in Huntsville, a siege that ended in a bloody escape attempt in which two hostages, Carrasco and Dominguez were shot to death.

Cuevas, the only one to survive, is charged with causing the death of one of the hostages.

Gray asked Estelle about an alleged telephone call with Carrasco the defense attorney says was recorded on tape and witnessed by Ruben Montemayor, an attorney who carried messages between the negotiators during the siege.

He said the tape showed that Estelle authorized Montemayor to tell Carrasco that his plan to move from the prison library to an armored car with eight hostages, "without deviation," was acceptable.

"The tape also shows that the hostages all cheered when Estelle agreed to the demand," he said.

Gray said Estelle received the proposal from Mrs. Linda Woodman, a hostage who was released to bring the plan to the prison officials.

Estelle, his voice tight with anger, replied, "I can pret' near guarantee you that I never told Mr. Carrasco anything he asked was acceptable."

Gray then asked District Judge Miron Love to declare Estelle a "hostile witness" and allow the defense to cross-examine him and play the tape of the telephone conversation for the jury.

"His hostility to the defense is obvious, and there is no way we can examine him unless we can cross-examine him," Gray said. "The state supressed evidence by refusing to call this man as a witness to give us a chance to cross-examine him."

Prosecutor Bert Graham objected angrily to this charge and to Gray's request. Love sustained the objection, saying he had never heard this evidence before, and could not allow Gray to cross-examine his own witness until "proper proof" had been presented to support the allegation.

Cuevas was convicted in 1975 of causing the death of Mrs. Julia Standley during the escape attempt, in which another hostage, Elizabeth Beseda, also was killed.

Cuevas was sentenced to death, but won a reprieve when the state Court of Appeals granted him a new trial on the ground of judicial error.

Gray, who didn't call a single witness in Cuevas' first trial, said he planned to call today Montemayor and King Waters, a reporter.

Environmentalists to seek Congress' aid on forest land

WASHINGTON (AP) Environmentalists angered by President Carter's recommendation to open millions of acres of national forest lands to development are turning to Congress for help.

"There's no necessity for it," William Tate, executive director of the Wilderness Society, said Tuesday. "These are marginal lands."

Carter recommended to Congress that 36 million acres of roadless land — 7.5 million acres of which are in Alaska — be opened for "multiple uses," such as mining, grazing, timber cutting, recreation and oil and gas exploration.

An additional 15.4 million acres would be designated as wilderness under the Carter proposal, announced Monday. Such a designation would keep the lands virtually free from new development and mineral exploration.

Black said to have set cross afire

AMHERST, Mass. (AP) — A cross-burning that touched off day-long discussions of racism at quiet Amherst College was set by at least one unidentified black student, the college president says.

"The worst cruelty is that black students have been manipulated and used by one of their own," President John William Ward said Tuesday night at a meeting with students to discuss Monday's cross burning.

"That is obscene," he said.

College authorities were trying to determine the student's identity, said Douglas Wilson, an Amherst spokesman.

Wilson said students told Ward "the material for the cross which was burned on the lawn of a black residence came from the basement of that residence and was constructed and burned by one, possibly more, black students."

Ward today refused to say if his information came from black students.

House votes state milk grading

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The House has voted to put the state in charge of inspecting and grading milk, now a task performed largely by city health departments.

The bill (SB315) advanced, 108-23, Tuesday with a final vote expected next week that would return the measure to the Senate for action on amendments.

Rep. Luther Jones, D-El Paso, fought to preserve cities' milk inspection authority.

It's Realtor Week

This is Texas Realtor Week and congratulations and best wishes most certainly are in order for all Realtors here and elsewhere across the Lone Star State.

Midlanders, of course, are more familiar with Realtors at the local level, and it is to them that a snappy salute is directed.

Midland Realtors, individually and through their Midland Board of Realtors, have done so very, very much in the development of Midland that it would be next to impossible to list all of their helpful acts in this regard. Yet, most of us are inclined to take them for granted.

The Realtors are active in their support of all endeavors leading to overall progress, growth and betterment of the community. They work tirelessly in serving the housing needs of individual newcomers and companies transferring or contemplating moving new or additional personnel to the Tall City. They also have been active in seeking new and expanded businesses and industry for Midland.

The list goes on and on, reaching into practically all facets of community life. They are good citizens.

Midland Realtors form a vital link in the community's overall economy.

The highest type of real estate service is provided by the Midland Board of Realtors, which is a professional association of Realtors, affiliates and other interested representatives of the business community, organized for the benefit of its members and the community. Its members adhere to a strict code of ethics which has to do basically with the Realtor's obligation to the public, his obligation to his client, and his obligation to his colleagues.

The term Realtor, incidentally, is a service mark registered with the U.S. Patent Office, which means that only qualified members may use the term. The term by no means is easy to come by. It is easily understandable why members are proud of their Realtor designation.

And Midlanders are proud of their Realtors and of what they have meant and mean to the continuing growth and development of the Tall City.

Privacy protections

The proposals by President Carter for new protections for the citizen against invasion of an individual's right to privacy merit widespread support.

One of the principal proposals affects the news business, which in turn affects the public's right to know. It would provide protection for any person preparing material for publication. Police would be prohibited from raiding work places and rummaging through such materials in search of evidence, as they did in the case of the Stanford Daily.

The other proposals would limit government access to medical records, protect individuals who cooperate in medical research from having their records disclosed, and establish new controls on credit information gathered by private agencies on individuals' finances, tastes and purchasing habits.

These are needed protections in this day of data banks stored in huge computers.

But we must acknowledge that there could be problems in federal legislation which seeks to give too broad a protection to individual rights to privacy.

The public's right to know must remain paramount over the individual's right to privacy in instances which involve the expenditure of public funds or the use and possible abuse of police powers.

Congress should scrutinize the Carter proposals carefully to see that they do not restrict unduly the public's right to know about public affairs.

The privacy afforded welfare recipients, for instance, should not be absolute. And their medical records should be open for investigation of possible fraud. Citizens who become a charge on the public purse must necessarily sacrifice some of their rights to privacy.

These are relatively minor reservations. If they are considered carefully by the Congress, the president's privacy program seemingly should have citizen endorsement.

Washington tapes solve the big hanging problem

Art Buchwald

WASHINGTON — The most pressing question Washington faces today is whether we will get the Gilbert Stuart portraits of George and Martha Washington. For those who have not been following the controversy, the Smithsonian Institution bought the paintings for $5 million from Boston's impoverished Athenaeum Library to hang in the National Portrait Gallery in Washington.

Suddenly Bostonians are up in arms. The idea of losing the paintings caused all the politicians in Massachusetts to scream that Washington was stealing their state's heritage. Mayor White said that everyone knows Washington has no culture and the sale could only be compared to the Mona Lisa being sold to the Arabs.

My answer to White is, "Baked beans." If any city is lacking in culture it's Boston. It doesn't have a first-class university, a decent symphony orchestra or an accredited museum. Bostonians can't tell the difference between a Rembrandt and a hockey puck.

I go to Boston a lot and I have many friend there. But not once has anyone ever said to me, "Would you like to see the Gilbert Stuart portraits of George and Martha Washington?"

Depending on the season, my host will say, "Would you care to see a Red Sox game?" or "How about going over to watch the Celtics play basketball?"

Once I said to a pal on the Boston Globe, "I'd love to see Picasso." And he replied, "He isn't here any more. He was traded by the Patriots for a place kicker and two draft choices."

I believe it's silly for Americans to argue which city has more culture. I think the decision as to where the portraits should hang must be left to the wishes of the people involved.

I am fortunate to have in my possession a tape made during the sitting of the portraits.

It isn't generally known, but Stuart painted President and Mrs. Washington at the same time because George wanted to save money.

The tape was given to me by the Smithsonian, and they have authenticated that the voices are those of George, Martha and Gilbert Stuart.

Here is a partial transcript:

WASHINGTON: Gil, what do you intend to do with these portraits?

STUART: It is my dream, Mr. President, that some day they will hang in the National Portrait Gallery in the nation's capital.

WASHINGTON: I'd like that, wouldn't you, Martha?

MARTHA: What other choices do we have?

STUART: Well, I heard from an art dealer that Boston would like them.

MARTHA: You mean the home of that dreadful Yankee, John Adams?

STUART: That's the way I felt about it, Ma'am. They have no appreciation of art. Just the other day I heard Paul Revere say, "If you've seen one portrait, you've seen them all."

MARTHA: George, I've never asked anything of you before. But you have to promise me that I'll never hang in Boston.

WASHINGTON: (laughing) Martha, you worry too much. The Bostonians are too cheap to buy a Gilbert Stuart painting, much less a pair.

MARTHA: Nevertheless, you must promise.

WASHINGTON: All right, Martha, I promise. Gilbert, you're a witness. I never want our portraits to hang in a city that throws Coca-Cola bottles at opposing baseball teams.

STUART: I couldn't agree with you more. I'd rather have my work hanging in Cleveland.

That was the end of the tape, but I believe it speaks for itself. The three people involved have been turning over in their graves knowing the pictures were in Boston. But they'll be jumping for joy once the portraits are safely ensconced in the city of Washington, where they belong.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Billy yet must face questioners

By JACK ANDERSON

WASHINGTON — In a voice husky from booze and laryngitis, Billy Carter recently joked with reporters about his Libyan connection. He alluded to his big mouth, which has lost friends and alienated people. The Libyans, he cracked, "are the best friends I got in the world right now."

But to Justice Department officials it is no laughing matter. They want to know how President Carter's younger brother became so close to the Libyans, who have granted arms and asylum to international terrorists and have befriended some of the world's most notorious rogues and renegades.

Billy Carter told reporters that his only interest in Libya is to promote Libyan-American friendship. But the Justice Department is trying to determine whether he has stepped across the legal line and should register as a foreign agent. This would be required by law if he has performed any services for the Libyan government.

The Justice Department asked Carter three months ago to explain his relationship with the Libyans, but he has not responded. Meanwhile we have conducted our own investigation of Carter's Libyan caper.

Carter was put together with the Libyans through Mario Lanza, an Atlanta real estate operator, at the Libyans' urging. Libya's charge d'affairs in Italy, Gibril Shalouf, reached in Rome, told us that he had helped arrange the invitation for Carter.

An entourage of eight Georgia politicians and businessmen, including state senators Floyt Hudgins and Henry Russell, accompanied the president's brother to Libya. They traveled first class, stayed at the best hotels and were shown around Rome and Tripoli in chauffeur-driven cars.

The Libyans picked up all the bills and handed out gifts, including an expensive leather saddle for Carter. One source familiar with the arrangements estimated that the trip must have cost the Libyans over $50,000.

We flew to Tripoli to piece together the story. We learned that the Georgians had discussed establishing a corporation to handle Libyan investments in the United States. "They were eager to relieve Libya of some of its petrodollars," an American diplomat told us.

Significantly, Carter talked to the Libyans about lifting the freeze on eight C-130 transport planes, which the Libyans have purchased from the United States but which Washington has held up. Intelligence sources told our reporter Arnaud Swirsky. The planes have been gathering mildew for five years on the Lockheed grounds at Marietta, Ga.

The Georgians and Libyans alike denied that the controversial planes had been discussed. But competent sources insisted that the Libyans hoped to use the president's brother to get the planes released.

Most members of the Georgia congressional delegation, meanwhile, have joined Billy Carter in trying to break the ban on military transport shipments to Libya. All but two Georgia congressmen have asked President Carter in a private March 21 letter to "sell twelve L-100's and associated support worth approximately $200 million" to Libya. The L-100s and C-130s are basically the same aircraft.

From all accounts, Billy was not his usual fun-loving, beer-swilling self in Tripoli. He was taken aside by U.S. embassy officials and cautioned about the "sensitive nature" of Libyan-American relations. Thereafter, he was the model of decorum.

He responded to a long welcoming speech with a simple, polite "Thank you." His host, Ahmed Shahti, head of Libya's foreign liaison office, later delivered an after-dinner speech criticizing U.S. support of Israel. But Carter scrupulously avoided any political retort.

He also patiently played the role of the president's brother, shaking hands at an embassy garden reception and visiting American children at the Oil Company school.

Sources differ, however, on Billy Carter's reaction to the cultural shock of spending a week in a country that prohibits alcohol. Some say he didn't touch a drop, except on U.S. property at the embassy reception. Others confide that he managed to keep his whistle wet.

Libya's revolutionary leader, Muammar Qaddafi, was away from Tripoli during the Carter visit. He left it to his top associates to entertain the Georgians. But he complained to us afterward about the ban on the C-130s.

"The United States is behaving as a child," he grumped. "They didn't give us planes. They didn't give us ever our money back. Of course, the money we have given the United States, if we had kept it, would now become double because of the interest."

Footnote: Billy Carter not only failed to respond to the Justice Department's questions about his Libyan relationship but refused to answer a grand jury's questions about curious loans to the Carter peanut works. He is drying out at the Long Beach, Calif., naval hospital where he is also unavailable to comment on our story.

Melvin Laird again urges gasoline rationing, now

Nick Thimmesch

WASHINGTON — Melvin R. Laird, a much consulted man in this town, believes President Carter should push Congress to take a quite unpopular action — legislate gasoline rationing now.

"Carter has to do something to make the energy crisis real to people," Laird explains. "Gas rationing would make people feel a little hurt, and then they would appreciate what this oil import situation is doing to the security of the country.

"We are now paying $50 billion a year for our oil imports, and we're heading for $57 billion next year. If we don't limit imports, our dollar will continue to deteriorate on the world market, inflation will remain double-digit as it is now, and the country will get weaker and weaker.

"Rising gas prices won't wake people up. In Germany, when gas soared to $1.85 a gallon, consumption kept going up, too. We need gas rationing for the psychological effect it will have."

Laird was secretary of defense and has some understanding of national strength. He also chaired the National Energy Project for the American Enterprise Institute in its first stages. And he is one of the most adroit politicians around, having served many years as one of the most skillful tacticians in that comradeship called Congress.

He knows that gas rationing would be politically very unpopular, particularly as we go into the 1980 elections. Even without hearing any drumbeating for this strong action, the public voted gas rationing down in a recent Gallup Poll by a 52-40 count. Moreover, only 43 percent polled believe the current energy situation is "very serious," and fewer think there will be a repeat of the long lines which formed at gas stations in the winter of 1973-74.

Despite the pleadings of three Presidents, the energy message isn't getting through. Since Laird first advocated gas rationing in late 1974, we have used more and more of the stuff. In March, 1973, daily consumption was 6.5 million barrels. It now stands at 7.3 million, a 12 percent increase.

Demand for gas rose 4.5 percent in the first quarter of 1979 over 1978, while overall demand for petroleum rose 1.7 percent. People want and use more gas, period. Gas stocks at the end of March were 242 million barrels, down frm 265 million in late January. We are getting down to what the industry considers minimum acceptable levels.

The outlook is not good. Besides nudging upwards toward the 90-cent and $1 a gallon mark for premium, there is good prospect for shortages this summer and worse ones in 1980. Iran's oil production is at half-speed. The Saudis, who were pumping 9.5 million barrels daily, recently cut to 8.5.

As far back as three years ago—the government released a contingency gasoline rationing plan. The plan was refined several times since, but essentially it holds that if the gap between gasoline supply and demand becomes unmanageable, rationing will be declared necessary.

Unlike World War II rationing — designed to cut demand for rubber for tires and then fuel — the present plan's emphasis is to provide more equitable distribution and efficient use of gasoline. The Department of Energy insists that any plan for standby gasoline rationing is "designed for use only in an extreme gasoline shortage."

The plan would apply to retail sales of gasoline (not diesel fuel) at filling stations. Coupons would be issued to persons based on motor vehicle registration records. The value of the coupons, in gallons, would vary according to market conditions. There would be extra gas for priority users — national defense, fire, police, emergency medical, sanitation, postal, snow removal, public transportation. Farmers, businessmen and government organizations needing gas for off-highway vehicles would be provided for, as would foreign visitors (Mexicans and Canadians principally).

People could voluntarily sell or transfer unused coupons — theoretically an incentive to save gas. The Department of Energy once called this the "white market" system but now avoids that term.

A three-month supply of the coupons, costing $30.5 million to print, has been stored at Pueblo, Colo., since 1974. One-third the size of a dollar bill, and looking a little like one, the coupons could be enlarged by unscrupulous souls, and possibly used in dollar-bill change machines, alas. The government doesn't like to talk about that prospect.

At that, Congress has two legislative shots at stopping any gas rationing program of the kind proposed by President Carter several weeks ago. Since there is small sentiment in the republic for gas rationing, it is highly unlikely that Congress will respond to small sentiment.

Besides, such a program would cost an estimated $1.8 billion a year to administer. There is question as to whether rationing would even reduce the amount of gasoline consumed. It might only provide better distribution and supplies. Laird admits it would also amount to a "further surrender of our personal freedom to bureaucracy" and could never be totally fair. He manfully argues, however, that an enlightened Congress, responding to presidential leadership, could approve gas rationing — even in an election year.

"People must learn, in a way that hurts a little, what damage their country is suffering from paying these terrible penalties on imported oil," says Laird, a Wisconsin Republican who would rather suffer measles than more bureaucracy.

1. The word, "Martyr" was one who testified at the cost of his own life. It is an out-growth of the word witness. It was customary for the witness to cast the first stone in a death penalty. Of what well known story in John 8:7 is this rememorative?

2. What is meant by "Passover?" Exodus 12:51

3. Who said, "Take heed that ye do not your alms before men, to be seen of them.'"? Matthew 6:1

Send now for my book, on achieving pleasure with the Internal Revenue Service. It's called "Joy of Tax."

When most of us were children, we didn't have tax education in the schools, so we had to pick it up on the street corner.

Or maybe your father would take you out behind the barn and explain where dependents came from.

Today, with a breakdown of old taboos, people are more willing to discuss their tax lives freely. Some, worrying about being overtaxed, decided to cut back. They were called Californians.

For years, people overdid it when it came to imposing their sometimes weird tax practices on others. They were called liberals.

Flood forces more evacuation

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — The surging Pearl River continues to pour over its banks, forcing new evacuations downstream from water-logged Jackson, where authorities say some flooded areas may not dry out for a week or more.

And in Alabama, Civil Defense officials worried whether people will leave their homes in time to escape anticipated record flood crests expected to threaten the west-central section of the state.

Buddy Stuckey, assistant civil defense director for south Mississippi's Marion County, said 2,000 persons fled their homes Tuesday.

"They learned their lesson from the '74 flood," Stuckey said. "People are being real good about it. They've been real cooperative."

Jackson officials said 17,000 persons remained homeless in the metropolitan area.

Officials say at least five deaths in Mississippi have been attributed directly to the flooding that began last week.

Stuckey said 20,000 sandbags were distributed Tuesday, mostly to persons wanting to protect their homes from the waters that are expected to reach flood levels Thursday.

"It looks like we'll be evacuating our entire town before the crest gets here," said Georgetown Mayor Beal Allbritton as mobile homes and loaded cars headed toward the only road leading out of the community of 420 about 40 miles south of Jackson.

The Pearl's rise at Jackson climbed Tuesday to almost 43.3 feet, more than 25 feet above flood stage, the National Weather Service said. By nightfall, the river had fallen to 43 feet.

"Mississippi is going to beat this thing just like it has everything in the past," said presidential aide Bill Simpson. Gov. Cliff Finch and federal officials met Tuesday to brief reporters on plans for providing disaster relief for flood victims. President Carter declared the state a disaster area Monday.

Officials warned that the level of the Pearl River in Jackson still might fluctuate, even as it begins to recede. But they said the water would not clear out of the Jackson area for a week or more, and some areas behind the levees, such as the flooded state fairgrounds, would have to be pumped dry.

In Alabama, Civil Defense Director Warren Rhoades said some 500 families in Selma have been evacuated by late Tuesday from the path of the Alabama River's floodwaters.

'You have to joke — or cry'

By MATT MYGATT

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Howard Bros. Discount Center was remodeled a few months back. Now you can nudge your boat right into the TV department, scoop up fish in the aisles and find snakes among the drifting dog food and shampoo bottles.

But that wasn't part of the plan.

"You've got to joke about it because if you think about it, you want to cry," manager Frank Vogt said Tuesday, his department store inundated by about two feet of water from the swirling Pearl River.

He said losses were about $350,000 in merchandise. Sacks of manure that he used to try to keep water out were of little use, he said.

Neither the store nor his home — 15 feet under water, to the eaves — was covered by flood insurance, he said.

"But you're looking at a half-million dollars with all the fixtures and everything," he said as he waded through the darkened store.

"There are snakes in here but I don't know if any of them are poisonous. I haven't been close enough to look," he said.

"You could run an outboard motor down these aisles," he said, pointing with a flashlight to several saturated television sets.

"We had one in here running up and down."

"It's a business loss," he said. "But I work for a good company, and they'll take care of me."

Vogt reached down and scooped up a visitor to the store — a fish. "We don't sell any pets here," he said.

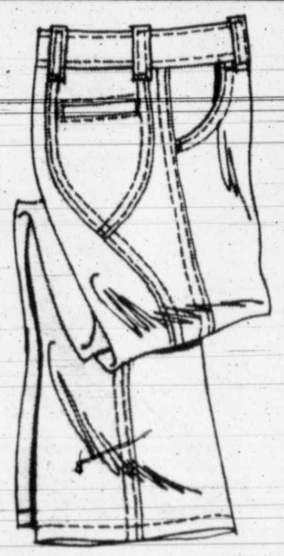

The smell of dry dog food floating on the murky water permeated the inky darkness.

"The sorry thing about it is we just had it remodeled in February," Vogt said. "That's the sad thing."

The 1½-mile trip from the store in Jackson's northeast side, site of some of the worst flooding in the city, to his three-bedroom home in nearby Flowood used to be a quick hop. But these days, it's a good half-hour drive via four-wheel drive vehicles down Mississippi 25, over the bulging Pearl River.

Then, Vogt steps into a small fishing boat for a half-hour trip down a residential street that's covered by 15 feet of water.

Standing on top of his home Tuesday, the boat tied off to a ventilation duct, Vogt told how he managed to save an outboard motor from his house, and sent his wife and three children to New Orleans for the duration of the flooding.

Rhodesia officials foresee vote to remain heavy for second day

SALISBURY, Rhodesia (AP) — Officials predicted another big turnout of voters today on the second day of the Rhodesian election. More than 20 percent of the nation's black and white adults went to the polls on the first day and only a few guerrilla attacks were reported.

In the first eight hours of the five-day polling to elect Rhodesia's first Parliament with a black majority, more than 568,000 of the 2.8 million black voters and 100,000 whites cast ballots Tuesday.

Even optimists among white election officials were surprised by the black voters' response. "It's startling," said one.

The turnout in northeast Rhodesia far exceeded the national average, although the region is heavily infiltrated by Robert Mugabe's guerrillas based in neighboring Mozambique.

Nearly 50 percent of those eligible voted in Mukumbura, a fortified town close to the border.

Dressed in their Sunday best, hundreds of villagers lined up for hours on a dusty road under a broiling sun to take part in their first universal-suffrage election.

In the tobacco farm district of Centenary, site of the first guerrilla attack on a white farm in December 1972, truckloads of workers marked their ballots despite a rash of guerrilla attacks in the district two nights before in which four black workers were killed and five were wounded.

Bob Schonken, a local police spokesman, said he expected the violence to escalate as the election continues. But he said the vow of guerrilla leaders Mugabe and Joshua Nkomo to disrupt the elections "so far was obviously unsuccessful."

"Our people still came to vote today," one young white farmer told reporters who toured three centers in the northeast. "They, like us, are tired of war. They, like us, hope a new government will bring peace and international recognition."

One young man from the Shona tribe said he was voting "to end the war."

"It will have to end because we will have chosen our own government," he said, answering questions through an interpreter. "They (the guerrillas) will have to come back because we will have won what they have been fighting for."

"It seemed like people were intoxicated with joy as they were going to the polling booths today," said Bishop Abel Muzorewa in a speech to some 300 journalists and 70 foreign observers.

Muzorewa, one of Prime Minister Ian Smith's three black co-sponsors of the new constitution and the man generally expected to be the first black prime minister, said: "I am satisfied that the will of the people will be triumphant."

He criticized the U.S. government for refusing to send official observers to see that the election is "free and fair." And he said he could not understand why governments that "recognized the invaders in a matter of hours" in Uganda might deny recognition to a government elected by the people for Zimbabwe-Rhodesia, as the nation will be renamed.

It was a slap at the black governments of Tanzania, Uganda, Mozambique and Botswana, all of which support Nkomo and Mugabe and all of which recognized the self-appointed government of Ugandan exiles soon after Tanzania's invasion force captured Kampala last week.

The two guerrilla leaders and the African governments that support them contend that the new Rhodesian constitution's promise of black-majority government is a sham because it preserves white control of the civil service, armed forces, police and judiciary for at least the next five years and gives the whites a veto over changes in the constitution.

The government had a force of nearly 100,000 regular and reserve troops on duty throughout the country to guard against guerrilla action. An army spokesman said that on Tuesday security forces drove off guerrillas who opened fire on voters at two polling places; there were several other "ineffectual" attacks on voting stations, and a truckload of black voters detonated a land mine.

Bloch's death revealed

KAMPALA, Uganda (AP) — Dora Bloch, the British-Israeli grandmother left behind in the 1976 Entebbe hijacking rescue, was pulled from her hospital room and executed in a forest the same day, a Kampalan told reporters in the aftermath of President Idi Amin's fall.

"It was Saturday afternoon and I was coming from my shopping when I heard about nine shots," said bookkeeper Victor Kato, who lives on the edge of Namanve Forest, used by Amin's secret police as a dumping ground for the bodies of their victims.

"I rushed to the main road and asked people what had happened. They said that two cars had turned into the forest with a white lady. On going there we found a body of an elderly woman. They shot her along with a white chicken.

"Maybe it was some sort of witchcraft, I don't know."

Mrs. Bloch, 74, was aboard an Air France airliner which a gang of Palestinians hijacked in 1976 and took to Uganda's international airport at Entebbe, 21 miles south of Kampala.

Suffering from a sore throat, she was taken to a Kampala hospital and was not at the airport when Israeli commandos rescued the rest of the passengers and crew members.

Kato said he realized the dead woman was Mrs. Bloch when he heard BBC reports that she had been left behind and her fate was unknown.

He said she was executed near a sandbank in a clearing about 200 yards from the main road in the national forest. He estimated the bodies of at least 6,000 people were left rotting there by Amin's State Research Bureau and others of his agents.

"They left her body there for some time," he said. "Then they came to collect it, probably to prevent journalists from seeing it."

One of the last people to see Mrs. Bloch alive at Mulago Hospital said she was in good spirits and awaiting her discharge when Amin's agents came for her.

"I had just completed the evening ward rounds and was standing on the fourth floor," said the medical superintendent, Dr. J.G.S. Makumbi. "I heard a scuffle on the sixth floor where Mrs. Bloch was staying in one of our VIP rooms.

"I rushed to the stairs to see what was happening and I saw armed men carrying machine guns pulling her down the stairs. They were firing to frighten people out of the way. We naturally ran."

Makumbi said Mrs. Bloch was pulled into a Mercedes sedan and driven away.

"We could still hear her screams as the car approached the gate of the hospital," Makumbi said.

Makumbi said he kept Mrs. Bloch's cane, clothes, shoes and other personal effects "...thinking that her family would want them."

Amin's troops reported on rampage in Tororo

KAMPALA, Uganda (AP) — Troops still loyal to Idi Amin are reported killing officials in eastern Uganda believed sympathetic to the new government in Kampala.

With the invasion force of Tanzanian troops and Ugandan exiles still preparing to extend the new government's authority to northern and eastern Uganda, the deposed president's forces were reported on a murderous rampage in the eastern city of Tororo, near the Kenyan border.

It was believed that pro-Amin Moslems were also killing members of Christian tribes in the area in retaliation for Christian murders of Moslems after the fall of Kampala to the invaders last weekend. That outbreak of killings was in retaliation for massacres of the Christians by Amin's Moslem supporters during his eight years in power.

The whereabouts of Amin remained a mystery. Various reports, none confirmed, put him in Libya, Sudan, Iraq, Zaire or still inside Uganda, possibly in the northwestern corner of the country where he was born.

Meanwhile, Tanzanian commandos made a dash some 50 miles to the east of Kampala to secure the Owen Falls dam and power plant on the Nile River. The plant produces all of Uganda's electricity and 15 percent of the power used in Kenya, and there had been fears that Amin's men would blow it up.

The road from the Tanzanian front lines 13 miles east of Kampala to the dam was reported still unsafe, with bands of Amin troops harassing cars attempting to travel it. But the Tanzanians were reported preparing to follow up the raid in force.

Provisional President Yussufu K. Lule's Cabinet held its first meeting at the presidential residence in Entebbe, 21 miles south of Kampala, where Lule is recovering from the flu. It set limits on withdrawals by bank depositors in an attempt to prevent runs on the Kampala banks, which were looted after the city fell to the invaders.

Seven shot by Iranians

TEHRAN, Iran (AP) — Two of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's revolutionary committees executed seven more persons early Wednesday for killing innocent persons, Radio Tehran announced.

The announcement said six military men, ranging in rank from private to major, were executed in Tehran after a revolutionary court convicted them of involvement in the killing of hundreds of demonstrators against Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi in the capital last Sept. 8.

The broadcast said Ebrahim Ghorbani was put to death in Kerman, in southeast Iran, for killing one person during the nationwide rioting that brought down the royal regime.

Volcano risk found worldwide

By RANDOLPH E. SCHMID

WASHINGTON (AP) — The rumblings of the geologic time bomb known as Soufriere volcano came 77 years after that same mountain spewed forth death and destruction, taking more than 3,000 lives.

But while residents of the Caribbean island of St. Vincent know of the danger in their midst — and none was killed in the Friday the 13th eruption last week — the same hazard exists in parts of the world where people are less aware of the danger.

There are more than 500 active volcanoes in the world ranging from the explosive types, such as Soufriere, to the non-explosive ones like Kilauea on Hawaii, which produces streams of highly fluid lava.

"We consider a volcano active when it has erupted within recorded history. Most of the world's volcanoes are dormant, and thus are deceptively quiet. They are dangerous because they are like geologic time bombs that can erupt with very little warning," commented Dr. Robert Tilling of the U.S. Geological Survey.

And the United States isn't immune, added Tilling, chief of the survey's Office of Geochemistry and Geophysics. Besides the volcanoes in Hawaii there are several others in this country, some of which resemble Soufriere, he said.

"In the Cascades we know that there are some volcanoes that have the potential for explosive eruption," he commented, referring to the Northwest mountain range. "Lassen Peak, Mount Shasta, Mount Hood, Mount St. Helens and Mount Baker ... have erupted in the past and can erupt again in the future."

He said his agency is now monitoring some of these mountains to watch for signs that might precede an eruption.

"While there is no general method developed yet for making predictions of volcanic eruptions, recent studies ... have revealed certain precursor signs and patterns prior to eruptions," Tilling said. He said eruptions of Kilauea have been preceded by a swelling of the ground and swarms of minor earthquakes.

A growing problem worldwide, he explained, is that past eruptions have deposited layers of ash and lava around volcanoes that have eventually turned into fertile soil, attracting large populations to the very areas where they are likely to be affected by an eruption.

Basically, scientists describe volcanoes as openings, or windows, in the surface of the earth through which molten rock and gas from the interior of the planet can reach the surface. Some volcanoes, like Stromboli in Italy, may erupt continuously for centuries, while others lie quiet for a thousand years and then burst unexpectedly.

Volcanoes are named for the Roman god Vulcan, arms maker for the other gods. The Romans thought the smoking mountain Vulcano off the coast of Italy was the chimney of his forge.

"If you spot the 500 or so active volcanoes on a world map you will see that a great many of them are located around the Pacific Ocean," Tilling said. This circle of activity is called the "Ring of Fire" and is also where most of the world's earthquakes occur.

Many volcanoes are also located in and around the Mediterranean Sea and active volcanoes also are often found in the oceans.

The Hawaiian Islands were formed by volcanic activity, as were many Caribbean islands, such as St. Vincent. A new volcano forged its way from under the sea in 1963 creating the island Surtsey near Iceland.

The last major eruption of Soufriere came May 6-7, 1902, taking more than 3,000 lives. It ocurred in conjunction with one of the most destructive volcanic eruptions in history, that of Pelee on the island of Martinique. Pelee exploded violently a day later, wiping out the the port of St. Pierre, killing 30,000.

Soufriere is a name given to several volcanoes that give off gasses, and the one on St. Vincent is also known as Morne Garou.

Not far away, on Guadaloupe, is another volcano also called Soufriere. In between is Martinique.

Vietnam proposes DMZ

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Vietnam proposed the creation of a demilitarized zone on its border with China as peace negotiations between the Communist neighbors began today in Hanoi.

Radio Hanoi reported that Vietnamese Vice Foreign Minister Phan Hien also proposed that both armies withdraw two to three miles from the border recognized before the Chinese invasion Feb. 17 and that prisoners of war be exchanged as soon as possible.

He said although the two governments were now at the negotiating table, Chinese troops still occupied more than 10 areas in Vietnamese territory. He charged that the Chinese were continuing to strengthen their forces along the border and said the situation was "very tense."

There was no immediate word of the Chinese response. But earlier today Xinhua, the official Chinese news agency, accused Vietnam of a number of border provocations in recent days and said there were casualties on both sides in fighting between April 9 and April 16.

Hien said a preliminary survey determined that the Chinese invasion force destroyed four provincial hospitals, 21 district hospitals, 281 schools and many pagodas and historical sites on the Vietnamese side of the border.

The Chinese troops withdrew from most of the Vietnamese territory last month after claiming they had "punished" their neighbor for alleged border violations.

At first, Vietnam insisted that negotiations to restore normal relations could only start after all Chinese troops withdrew from Vietnamese territory but then withdrew that condition.

The Chinese delegation led by Vice Foreign Minister Han Nianlong arrived in Hanoi on Saturday.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

'Health food' is confusing term

Dear Dr. Solomon: What is meant by the term "health foods"? I've always thought that fruits, vegetables, milk, cereal, and so forth, are all health foods, and that candy and cake are not. Am I the only one confused by the term?—Alice.

Dear Alice: You are definitely not alone in your confusion regarding advertised food claims. In fact, the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) staff has recommended eliminating the designation "health food" simply because there is so much public confusion about what it means.

In making its recommendations, the FTC staff pointed out that the term "health food" seemed to imply that certain foods possess special qualities. If the recommendations are adopted, the commission would also forbid other types of health-related claims now being used in advertising, such as the ability of a food to prevent disease or to be of value in treating it. In the same vein, advertisements that referred to the fat or cholesterol content of a food would have to disclose sufficient information to permit consumers to understand and evaluate the claims made.

If the FTC staff's recommendations are adopted, they could become effective in about a year.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I've heard of intestinal bypass surgery, but I'm not clear about how it helps a person lose weight. Will you clarify this?—Mr. H.G.

Dear Mr. G.: The operation permits ingested foods to bypass most of the small intestine, where calories ordinarily are absorbed by the body. Since the calories are not absorbed, weight loss results. This is a complex surgical procedure that may have serious side effects, including severe diarrhea, vitamin deficiencies, stones in the urinary tract, and accumulation of fat in the liver.

Because of these risks, intestinal-bypass surgery should be performed only as a last resort for patients with massive obesity—that is, at least 100 pounds above, or double, their ideal weight. Only patients who have unsuccessfully tried non-surgical methods of losing weight, and whose obesity, itself, is considered a threat to health, should ever consider this drastic approach to weight loss.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I've finally made up my mind to go on a diet, but I don't want to lose 10 pounds quickly only to gain nine back. How many pounds per week should someone on a diet ideally lose?—Lucy

Dear Lucy: Losing about two pounds a week would be ideal. Since body weight may fluctuate daily because of water balance, it is best to weigh yourself once a week at the same time. Dieters who lose more than two pounds a week often have trouble keeping the weight off.

Many factors studied in cancer investigation

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Why are men in southern Louisiana more prone to lung cancer than those who live in the north part of the state?

Researchers don't know yet. But they have established one thing — the men in these parts tend to drink more booze, more beer, more wine, more strong coffee, eat more seafood.

Can this be significant? It hasn't been ruled out, but one researcher, William D. Johnson, doesn't plan to cut down his daily beer intake because of the findings.

The intake of alcohol, coffee and seafood remain among the factors being considered in this medical detective project, but Johnson, who is assistant professor of biometry at Louisiana State University's Medical School here, says a more probable villain is the area's shipyards.

And it is likely the problem will be a combination of several things, he adds.

Whatever the main cause, odds are it will involve something in the work environment, not lifestyle. That deduction was drawn because the rate of lung cancer among women in southern Louisiana is not excessive.

Trying to pin down why lung cancer strikes more frequently in the south is like the proverbial search for a needle in a haystack.

"We interview a man with lung cancer, then we locate a man in the same neighborhood, same age, same race, as much alike as possible except he doesn't have cancer, and interview him," says Johnson.

"All that data goes on punch cards and can be run through a computer. In a couple more years we expect a pattern to emerge. Than we test the pattern with laboratory experiments."

The study was begun after a National Cancer Institute report showed 38 south Louisiana parishes were among the top 10 percent in the nation in frequency of lung cancer, and 13 of those parishes were in the top 1 percent.

At 72 lung cancer deaths per 100,000 residents, St. Bernard Parish, which stretches south of New Orleans, had a rate 140 percent higher than the national average of 30, the study showed.

Johnson said one odd aspect of the national study was that the high rate of lung cancer seemed to have a correlation to the amount of surface water in the area. All 13 of Louisiana's highest-rated parishes, for example, are either adjacent to the Mississippi River or beside the Gulf of Mexico or Lake Pontchartrain.

That's why shipyards are suspect — plus the fact that a lot of asbestos is used in ship building. The dust of asbestos fiber is known to cause lung cancer.

"People in South Louisiana have a history of working in shipbuilding and shipbuilding has been linked with lung cancer," Johnson says.

"The same thing cropped up for Georgia counties where, during the war, a large population worked in shipbuilding. Of course, there are other industrial exposures, too."

How do you tell his son?

By GEORGE ESPER

PLYMOUTH, Conn. (AP) — In the glow of spring, with Easter baskets and cards still on the dresser and the promise of summer outings with Dad, how do you tell a little boy, 9-years-old, blue eyes and smile, that his father has been killed in an armored car robbery?

How do you tell him there won't be any more auto races, boating, swimming and fishing?

"All I told him was, 'Remember Daddy the way he was and don't forget the good times you had with him,'" said Leslie Clark's mother, Harriet Clark. "There was a robbery and he was shot and he died."

Leslie, whose nickname is Lee, burst into tears at the news that his father, Leslie Clark, who would have celebrated his 37th birthday next Monday, was killed by robbers.

Clark, who had been with Purolator Security Inc. for 10 years, and two other guards were shot to death in nearby Waterbury Monday by holdup men who authorities said fled with $1.8 million in cash, checks, jewelry and food stamps.

Lee's parents were divorced almost two years ago.

"It's a hard age," said Mrs. Clark, 33, as she sat in her modest home surrounded by her other children, three daughters, Janet, 18, Susan, 16, and Robin, 14, and relatives and friends.

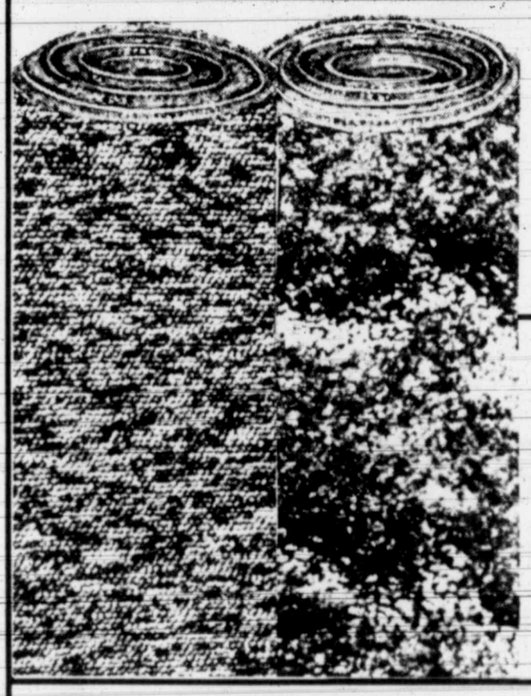

"I think he finds it difficult living in a house full of women, really rough," said Mrs. Clark, a soft spoken woman who works in a convalescent home just up the block.

Consolidation proposal stirs up 66th Legislature

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — State Rep. Emmett Whitehead of Rusk stirred up a hornet's nest when he tossed a bill into the 66th Legislature to put the functions of six state boards and commissioners under the Department of Health.

But it's the will of the people, he said.

"I sent 23,000 questionnaires to the people in my district; 3,000 of them were returned and 80 per cent said they wanted a reduction in the size of bureacracy in state government. My bill is basically a step toward economy in state government," Whitehead told the House Health Services Committee.

What House Bill 1415 does, basically, is maintain the services and functions of the boards — but without the high-salaried executive directors of each of the agencies.

This, according to the Legislative Budget Board, would save the taxpayers $651,695 during the next five years.

Whitehead knew he was fanning a storm when, in his original bill, he proposed the Health Dept. take over the functions of the Texas Board of Chiropractic Examiners, the Texas Board of Examiners in the Fitting and Dispensing of Hearing Aids, the Governor's Commission on Physical Fitness, the Texas Optometry Board, the Texas Board of Physical Therapy Examiners and the State Board of Examiners of Psychologists.

By putting the agencies' functions under a Health Department umbrella, the boards would retain their autonomy, and the lower-level employees, but would eliminate the positions of high-salaried executive directors, Whitehead said.

But when he presented his bill in committee, Whitehead offered an amendment removing the Governor's Commission on Physical Fitness and the Texas Optometry Board.

Why them? somebody asked.

"I felt discretion was the greater part of valor," the legislator replied. "In other words, I needed five or six votes."

The boards will come under review by the Legislature's Sunset Commission, which is considering phasing out some state agencies, in 1981, but Whitehead's bill could be called a "Little Sunset."

Spokesmen for the four remaining boards in Whitehead's bill paraded before the committee to plead for the status quo:

Dr. Bill Walker, member of the Board of Examiners of Psychologists — "We can offer greater protection under the way it is now. It will come up under the Sunrise Commission in 1981."

"That's Sunset Commission," somebody corrected.

"Sunrise or Sunset — whatever it is," the doctor replied.

R. B. Hall, executive director of the Board of Examiners in the Fitting and Dispensing of Hearing Aids — "I do not feel it is better to put it under a large umbrella like the Health Department and do away with the executive directors at the same time. Somebody has to do the job for the hard of hearing in the state. Some plan ought to be arrived at but I can't see putting it under this already large agency and making it more unwieldy to deal with."

Mike Marks, executive director of the Board of Examiners in the Fitting and Dispensing of Hearing Aids — "The needs of the hard of hearing must be met. The board is self supported by licensing fees."

These students squeal, squabble, finally make clowns of themselves

BY NADINE JOSEPH

BERKELEY, Calif. (AP) — Arina Isaacson's students bop, kick, trip, fall, squeal and squabble. They honk their red noses, shed tears and evoke laughter.

"Everyone has a few comic characters inside," said Ms. Isaacson, who turned a dark warehouse in Berkeley into the first clown school on the West Coast. "It's all a matter of letting them out."

Her school is less formal and rigid than those run by Ringling Brothers and Barnum & Bailey in Florida and the Big Apple Circus in New York. It's geared to the average person.

"I'm interested in helping the person who wants to loosen up and play instead of watching TV," said the 32-year-old special education teacher-turned-gymnast and clown.

Her students range from disabled children to foreigners who can't speak English, from teachers to plumbers and electricians. Only a handful plan to enter the profession.

"The clown is the outsider, the pathos character everyone can relate to through their hearts," she said.

As Boo-lu the clown, Ms. Isaacson has opened for comedienne Lily Tomlin, performed with the San Francisco Make-a-Circus and appeared last year at the International Women's Year Conference in Houston.

The slender, dark-haired woman dons baggy red pants, orange sneakers, a red and white striped shirt with sleeves twice the length of her arms, a red top coat and tails. Two gold tear drops dot her rouged cheeks.

"Traditional clowning was open to men only," she said. "In the last five years, women have joined the ranks, bringing a new subtlety, sensitivity and sensibility to the art."

Ms. Isaacson describes her Boo-lu as "sympatico with the underdog, deeply sad, whose joy comes from tears.

"It's a part of me that would be locked up, if I wasn't in clown makeup," she laughed. "The funny part is that I hated clowns as a child. They scared me."

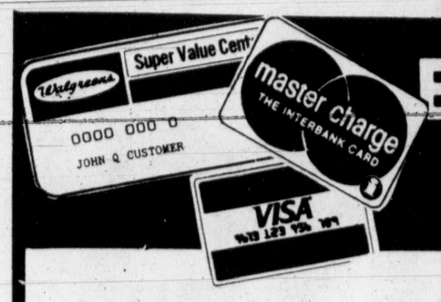

The former teacher took up clowning five years ago, after working with disabled children. "At first, I enjoyed it and saw it as preventive medicine," she said.

A native of Colorado and graduate of New York University with a master's degree, Ms. Isaacson set out to found her own clown school.

She contacted foundations and companies and got $1,600 in grants, enough to transform the warehouse into performance space for the circus arts.

"Clowns have been around forever. They comment on life and help people laugh, when life seems hopeless," she said.

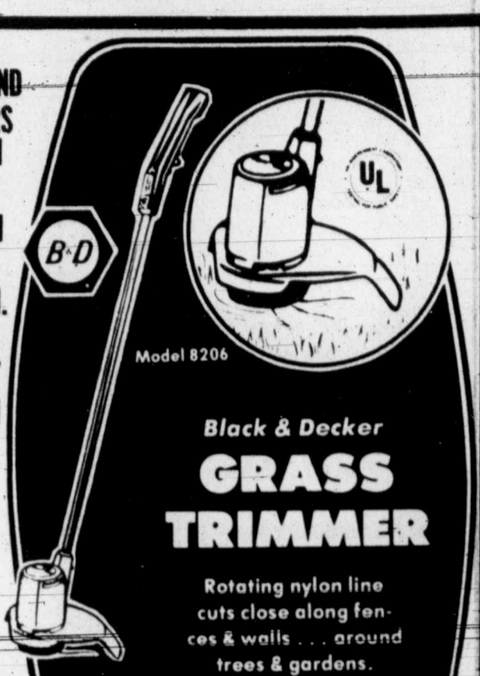

Her students say that the class is liberating — helping them to be funnier and more daring in public. They learn to create their own clown makeup and improvise gags.

Britton Theuer, adjunct music faculty member at Midland College, will be featured in a recital at the Fine Arts Building Thursday at 8 p.m.

The recital is slated for the Recital Hall and the public is invited without charge.

A trumpeter, Theuer will be assisted by his wife, Glenna, as piano accompanist. Also participating will be the Chaparral Brass Quintet. Members of the quintet, in addition to Theuer, include Bill Sterling, trumpet; Sharon Chase, trombone; Richard McKee, tuba; and Don Haddad, French horn.

The same program will be presented at Odessa College April 26...

...PHI BETA PHI Alumni will have a founder's day luncheon Thursday in the home of Tommie Strack, 901 Citation St.

All alumni are invited to attend and bring a salad dish. For further information, call Janet Foster at 68-3180. Eating time is 12 noon...

...TWO MIDLANDERS have been named outstanding students at McMurray College this spring, according to Dr. Bill Dulin, math and science division chairman.

Carol Adele Edgerton has been named outstanding freshman medical technology and chemistry student and Sarah Hardwick Bell has been named outstanding senior biology student.

Carol is a medical technology major at the college. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert G. Edgerton, of 4406 Gulf St.

Sarah is a biology major and the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. V. Hardwick, of 214 Ridgelea St.

...SUMMER MUMMERS, Midland's unique melodrama group, will launch their 31st seson with a volunteer get together Thursday beginning at 7:30 p.m. The meeting will be held in the old American Legion Hall, 206 S. Colorado St.

After a one-year absence, the Summer Mummers performances will return to the old hall, which is now county property. It will be a "return to the birthplace" of Mummers, as the volunteer group had its beginning there 30 years ago.

Purpose of Thursday's meeting will be to attract workers of all kinds - on stage and back stage - to make this season the most successful ever. All talents are needed, including actors, actresses, stage crew, props, construction, electricians, sound, lights, painters, concession or just anyone who wants to have a good time for a worthy cause. No previous theatre experience is necessary.

Summer Mummer Melodrams are produced each year by volunteers of the community. Proceeds of the productions are donated to Midland Community Theatre. The Mummer season traditionally runs from the July 4 weekend through Labor Day.

Refreshments will be served at the April 19 meeting...

...MIDLAND COLLEGE will be the site of a free seminar on "The Advantages and Disadvantages of Incorporation" April 26. In making the announcement, James Bramlett, director of the MC department of Community Services, noted that the seminar is sponsored by the Senior Core of Retired Executives-Ace Chapter of Midland, and co-sponsored by all Midland banks, Midland College, and the Midland Chamber of Commerce.

"Gary Ward, an attorney from Lubbock, will conduct the SCORE Seminar," Bramlett noted. "He is extremely well-versed in this particular field and has conducted a number of seminars similar to the one we will have at Midland College."

Ward is noted for making the subject matter both interesting and understandable. He presents his information in a down-to-earth manner and uses language that is in the vernacular of small business people. Those in attendance will be allowed adequate time to ask questions and receive answers.

The seminar is geared toward the small busness person and toward those who are considering starting a small business. There is no charge for the seminar and anyone who is interested may attend. The event will be held between 10 a.m. and 12:30 p.m. April 26 in room 115 of the Midland College Fine Arts Building.

Beautiful African violets in all colors and sizes will be available at the African Violet Society sale Saturday at Dellwood Mall. African Violet Society to hold sale

Over 300 plants in all colors, size and price will be available at Saturday's Midland African Violet Society sale at Dellwood Mall.

In addition, plants with a variety of foliage types, ranging from starter plants to large blooming plants will be sold. The group will also have some mini plants and "trailers."

All plants for the event have been grown by club members and donated to the club for this sale, the main fund-raising project of the club.

A relatively new club to Midland, the African Violet Society formed in November, 1977. Officers this year are Susan Clark, president; Sharon Hindman, first vice president; No No Burkhart, second vice president; Suzanne Iken, secretary; Kaye Ledbetter, treasurer; and Robin Stokes, reporter-historian. The club now has 30 members and expects more growth in the future. The society's motto is "Make Midland Homes Beautiful — Grow African Violets."

The club meets the first Monday of each month at 7:30 p.m. at the Lancaster Garden Center, 1705 W. Indiana Ave. All persons interested in growing African violets are invited to attend the next meeting May 7 or come by the sale Saturday at Dellwood Mall. Membership committee chairman is Norma Barnes. She can be contacted at 697-2686.

Secretaries to be recognized

Texas Governor Bill Clements and Midland Mayor Ernest Angelo have proclaimed April 22-28 as Secretaries Week. April 25 has also been set aside as Secretaries Day in the state of Texas and the city of Midland.

In proclaiming Secretaries Week, Goernor Clements urged all citizens to recognize the efforts made by secretaries in the operation of industry, education, the government and the professions.

Mayor Angelo asked that all business and industry join in giving due recognition to this group, paying special attention to Secretaries Day on April 25.

While the National Secretaries Association (International) sponsors Secretaries Week nationwide, the Permian Chapter, NSA, will sponsor it locally. During this week, NSA encourages persons in all phases of the business world to give recognition to secretaries for their service to business, industry, government, the professions and the community. Employers are also urged to recognize their secretaries who are an indispensable and integral part of the management team and upon whose skills, loyalty and efficiency the functions of business and government offices depend.

Stella Pearson, CPS, chairman of Secretaries Week locally, has announced that the chapter will sponsor Career Day April 26 for members of the Future Secretaries Association at Midland and Lee High School. The event will be followed by a luncheon at Midland Hilton.

In addition, a luncheon for area secretaries, their bosses and guests will be held at the Hilton on April 27.Trvel Time Travel Agency will present the program; and the chapter will announce their 1979-80 Boss of the Year.

Benefit tea set Sunday

A benefit tea for the purchase of a hearing ear dog for Mary Bess is being planned by the Eta Epsilon Zeta Chapter of Zeta Phi Beta Sorority Inc.

The event will be held Sunday from 3 until 6 p.m. at the Midland Federation of Black Women's Clubhouse, Washington Park on Wall Street, and the public is invited to attend.

Upon learning that Mrs. Bess had applied for a hearing ear dog from the Humane Foundation of Englewood, Colo., the sorority sent a donation to the foundation. With the "Thank You" letter came the total price of the dog, $2,500. The sorority decided to make the raising of the total monies needed its project this year.

Mrs. Bess is a former teacher in the Midland Public Schools who worked for 19 years in the city. She began her career here at Carver High School, moving to Austin Freshman School upon its closure in 1968. She also worked at Carver High School again in the special education department.

After several operations to correct inner ear problems, one of her ear drums was removed. Sometime later she lost hearing in the other ear. She had to retire because of total deafness nearly two years ago.

She is a past president of the sorority in this city and is still an active member of the sorority as much as her impairment allows.

She was a choir director and pianist at Macedonia Baptist Church. Since her loss of hearing, she has become a member of the First Baptist Church, which has a program of the deaf. She is a member of the deaf choir, has learned sign language and is working part-time making drapery.

She remains active in spite of her handicap, and the sorority solicits the public donations to the tea in order to keep her an active and contributing member of our community.

A special account has been opened at the First National Bank under the name Mary Bess Special Account, no. 109-752-0. Contributions may be made to the bank directly or donated at the benefit tea.

There will be entertainment during each hour throughout the evening, featuring local talent. Entertainment will include the Alleluia Hands Choir from the First Baptist Church. All contributions are tax deductable and will be sincerely appreciated.

Save on health care

NEW YORK — In 1978 it cost Americans $12 billion out of their own pockets for doctor's bills, while various forms of medical insurance covered claims totaling an additional $23 billion. In that same year, notes the U.S. Department of Labor in a recent Family Circle magazine article on how to save on health care expenses, an average urban family of four with an income of $17,100 might have spent $985 for medical care.

To cut these personal health care costs by up to 30%, Barbara Gilder Quint, money management expert, suggests the following:

MEDICAL INSURANCE: Know what your "routine" insurance covers. For example, most policies won't pay for dental repairs, but they will cover the costs of dental work necessitated by an accident.

DOCTOR'S FEES: Know in advance what your doctor's fee is, and what it includes. A surgeon may quote you his price, but does it include post-operative visits in the hospital and to his office? Find out.

HEALTH DEPARTMENT PROGRAMS: Many community health-care programs offer free immuizatin and booster shots for your children.

Vegetarians increasing

NEW YORK — Vegetarians are growing in number in the U.S. and according to information from the American Medical Association, "it is possible to provide an adequate diet for most people by vegetarianism, but it is much more difficult and requires more planning than for those who include meat and animal products in their diets."

Dr. Laurence Finberg, MD of Montefiore Medical center in Bronx, N.Y., and a spokesman for the AMA, urges a minimum education in nutrition for vegetarians to enable them to obtain adequate nutrition.

"No single vegetable protein, unlike those from many animal sources, is capable of providing both a sufficiency and an appropriate balance of amino acids for long-term human nutrition," he said.

Consumers can slow the spiral on food prices

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

Pork and poultry producers are rushing to fill the gap left by the drop in beef supplies. But the long-term answer to soaring food prices is largely in the hands of the American public.

Economists say the increase in the number of hogs and chickens will help put a temporary brake on the rise in food bills.

But they also say that keeping prices on an even keel will depend on controlling the inflation that is pushing up the cost of getting food from the farmer to the consumer.

Consumers are not helpless. They can switch from beef to eggs, chicken or pork. If everyone switched once a week, it would more than offset the decrease in beef supplies.

Consumers also can get back to basics. They can, say experts in the federal Office of Consumer Affairs, buy no-frills groceries and shop at warehouse stores. They can pass up products that are high on packaging and low on nutrition.

THE KEY to food prices in the near future will be supply and demand, particularly at the meat counter.

"The meat supply situation is the most important thing for the next year," said Jim Zellner, economist in the consumer affairs office.

Beef supplies are down. Cattlemen are expected to produce only 22.4 billion pounds of beef in 1979 compared to 24 billion pounds last year and nearly 26 billion in 1976.

Cattlemen now say they are increasing production. The number of cows and heifers slaughtered this January was 5 percent below last year's levels, indicating that the animals are being kept for breeding.

It will take time, however, for meat supplies to increase: First, there is the 16 to 24 months needed to raise a calf until it is old enough to breed. Once the calf is bred, it takes 9 months to produce a new calf. And it takes at least 18 months before that new calf is ready for market. Total time: Almost four years.

"There is very little to be done about the situation except to let the normal forces of the market restore the balance, and they will," said Alfred Kahn, head of the Council on Wage and Price Stability.

WHAT HE'S SAYING is that as beef gets more and more costly, people will turn to substitutes, ultimately, reversing the price trend.

"The second something goes up in price, people shift away from it," said Tom Stemberg of Star Markets, a Boston-based chain.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture expects 16 percent to 20 percent more pork to be available this fall than at the same time last year. That should keep 1979 pork prices at a level not much higher than 1978's.

Lee Campbell, president of the Poultry and Egg Institute of America, said egg supplies during the first half of the year are expected to be about 2 percent larger than last year; production of broiler chickens is expected to grow by about 8 percent.

The USDA predicts that beef prices will continue to rise during the first half of the year and will peak in the summer months when consumers start to feel the effect of increased pork and poultry supplies. Overall, the USDA says, beef prices this year will average about 20 percent higher than last year's.

BEEF CONSUMPTION, on a per capita basis, is expected to decline this year since there will be less beef available. Over the years, however, Americans are expected to go right back to beef.

The USDA predicts that per capita beef consumption by the year 2030 will be one-third greater than it is today. Traditionally, says the department, rising incomes mean rising beef consumption. And the more we demand, the more likely we are to face relatively high prices.

A short-term trend worrying some people, meanwhile, is anticipatory pricing. Some manufacturers, afraid that President Carter will impose mandatory price controls if his voluntary anti-inflation guidelines don't work, are boosting prices now — just in case. (Carter has said repeatedly that he will not seek mandatory controls.)

"These are real fears," said Esther Peterson, special assistant to the president for consumer affairs. "Anticipatory pricing is a factor that we're concerned about."

It means that consumers have to shop even more carefully than usual. You may scoff at the idea, but shopping carefully can make a big difference — not only in what happens to your food bill from week to week, but also in what happens to prices and products over the years.

"I BELIEVE THE American people will have to change some of their patterns of living," said Mrs. Peterson. "We've got to get back to basics ... I think there's a great deal of overpackaging, of advertising of foods that are not highly nutritious foods ... The best way to get rid of a product is to leave it on the shelf."

One supermarket official, who asked not to be named, said: "The lowest (profit) margins are on the basic staples." The profitability of a store depends on the "mix," on whether the store can sell enough high-profit items to offset the bargains.

"We know that supermarkets are arranged for attractive impulse buying," said Mrs. Peterson. "It's a real test for us to go through there and have a list and hold it tight."

Industry and government spokesmen say consumers seem willing to pay for convenience and service. Americans are spending more and more money on food away from home, even though those restaurant meals are more expensive than the ones prepared in the kitchen. Americans eat about 20 percent of their meals away from home; they spend about 33 percent of their food dollars on those meals.

William T. Boehm of the USDA's Economics, Statistics and Cooperatives Service, said: "The fact that processors continue to add — and sell — more services with food products is a reflection of our changing lifestyles. To a significant degree, higher food prices reflect our willingness to pay for preparation, packaging, boxing, slicing and selling."

MARKETING COSTS now account for 68 cents out of every dollar we spend on U.S. farm-produced food. The labor costs alone in getting a product to market are, on the average, equal to the farm value of the actual food. Here's where the pennies in your dollar go:

Farmvalue	32.0 cents
Labor	32.0 cents
Packaging	8.5 cents
Transportation	5.2 cents
Profits before taxes	4.6 cents
Miscellaneous	17.7 cents

Marketing costs as a whole went up 66 percent from 1973 to 1978; transportation costs showed the single biggest jump — 77 percent.

The increased reliance of the food system on things like labor and energy means that food prices are vulnerable to inflation, said Boehm. Unless we change the system, food prices will keep going up.

THE COMPTROLLER General's office, in a recent report to Congress, on food prices, recommended:

—Overhauling Interstate Commerce Commission regulations that often cause trucks to return home empty, after making deliveries.

—Steppping up industry use of things like computerized checkouts and standardized food containers.

—Weighing the costs and benefits of government programs like nutrtional labeling since it is the consumer who ultimately has to pay the price for the protection.

Government studies have shown that the cost of bringing food to market — now nearly $11 billion a year or 8 percent of the total food bill — could be reduced by $330 million simply by eliminating needless trucking regulations.

Where do prices go?

By The Associated Press

Meat prices are up, up and away. But where is the dollar going?

A major supermarket chain, which asked not to be identified by name, provided a look at what happens.

The store recently bought a 156-pound hind quarter of beef for $198.90.

It sold the meat from that hind quarter for $238.96, a difference of $40.06. But the chain says only 81 cents of the difference was profit. The rest went for labor, rent, insurance, taxes, etc.

Here's how it works:

The hind quarter is divided into 20 retail cuts. In the process, almost 60 pounds is lost to fat and bone.

When the chain bought it, the hind quarter cost $1.27½ per pound. By the time the fat and bone was thrown away, the meat that was left had cost the store $2.07 a pound. And that doesn't count the cost of cutting it up, wrapping it and sellling it.

The butcher makes about $12 an hour. It takes him 88 minutes to cut up the meat. Cost: $17.71.

Packaging for each cut of meat works out to 1.9 cents per pound. Cost: $1.83.

Loss due to pilferage and spoilage adds $8.36, equal to about 3.5 percent of the total retail price. (If that sounds like a lot, think about today's prices: two steaks can easily cost that much.)

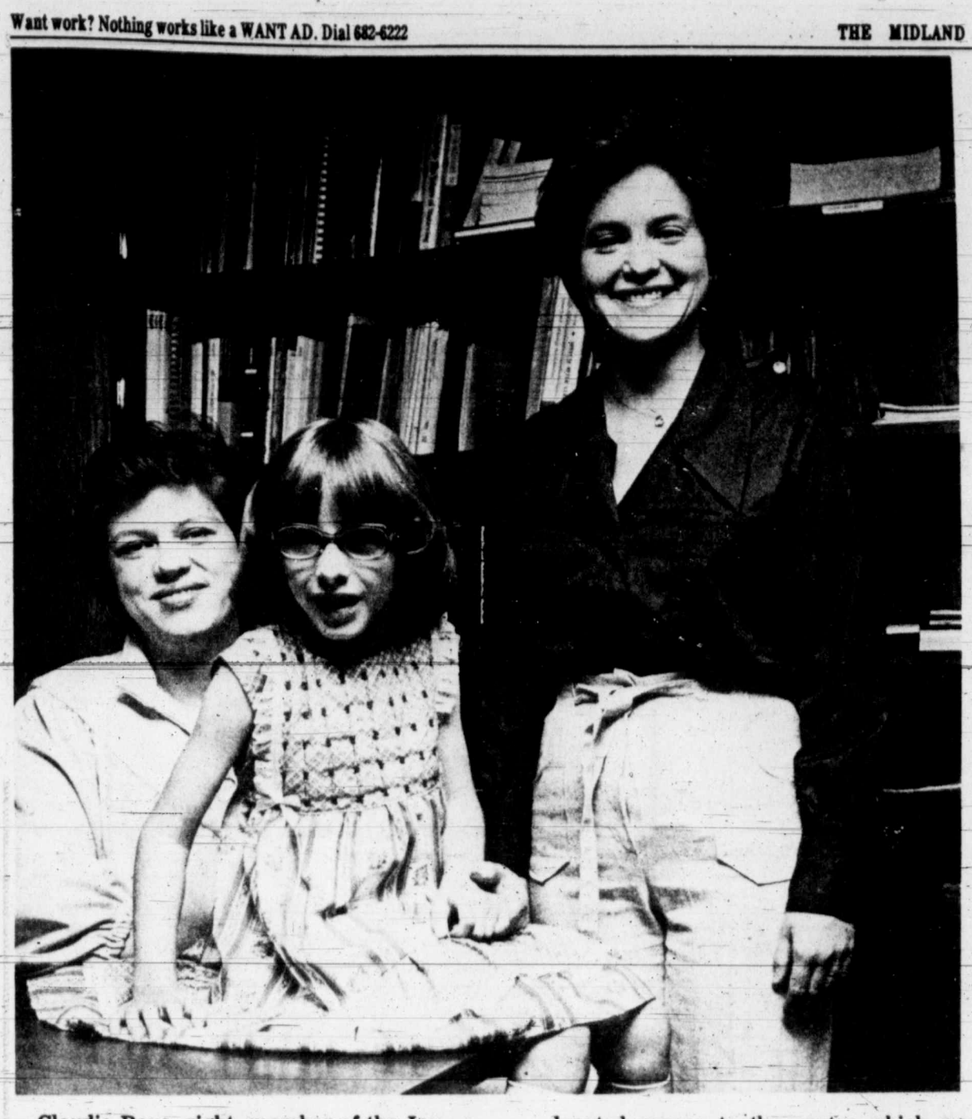

Rent, insurance, taxes, front-end labor (clerks, etc.) cost $11.35, equal to about 4.75 percent of the retail value.

Add the cost of the meat, the butcher's salary, the packaging, the loss and the operating expenses. Total: $39.25.

Middle-Eastern Garbanzo Dip tasty snack

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
Associated Press Food Editor

It took a long time for Hummus bi Tahini, a traditional Mideast dip, to catch on all over the United States.

The first recipe for it I encountered appeared in a 1950 cookbook. The next one in a cookbook published in the 1960s. Like a lot of other cooks, I didn't get around to trying recipes for Hummus bi Tahini until the 1970s.

Recipes for Hummus bi Tahini always call for pureed cooked garbanzos (chick peas), lemon juice, garlic, salt and pepper. Up to now, the recipes I have used have also called for sesame oil or sesame paste. Both oil and paste can be found in shops stocking Mideast foods and in some supermarkets and health-food stores. They can also be mail-ordered.

Claudia Rosen in her "A Book of Middle Eastern Food" describes tahini as "a paste made from sesame meal." The cans of tahini I buy in New York City are labeled "ground hulled sesame seeds" and the contents are pastelike. This tahini has to be stirred before using it, because the oil gathers at the top. After the can has been opened, the tahini seems to keep indefinitely in the refrigerator.

Just last week we tried something new in my test kitchen. We made Hummus bi Tahini, but instead of using sesame oil or tahini, we added toasted ground sesame seeds. The result was so good we are passing along the recipe. (Sesame seeds are widely available; for this recipe you'll need to toast them.) Served as a dip for the Mideast bread called pita, this Hummus bi Tahini makes great snacktime fare.

MIDDLE-EASTERN GARBANZO DIP
(Hummus bi Tahini)

16-ounce can garbanzos (Chick peas)
1-3rd cup toasted sesame seeds, Note follows
½ teaspoon salt
1-3rd cup lemon juice
1 large clove garlic (or more), peeled and crushed
1 tablespoon olive oil
Pita

Drain beans; there will be about 1 and ¾ cups beans and about ¾ cup liquid. Reserve 1 tablespoon of the liquid. Grind the sesame seeds fine in an electric blender or food processor. Add the drained beans and puree. Add salt, lemon juice, garlic, olive oil and the 1 tablespoon reserved bean liquid; process until smooth. Turn into 1 or 2 screwtop jars and cover tightly. Chill overnight to allow flavors to blend and to have the dip stiffen. Serve with Pita (cut into small wedges if you like) for dipping. (Heat the Pita according to package directions.)

Note: you can spread untoasted sesame seeds in a small (about 8-by 6-inch) shallow pan and toast them in a preheated 300-degree oven stirring often, until they are golden colored — 5 to 8 minutes. Or you can spread them in a 9-inch black iron pan and toast them over low heat.

New Nigerian constitution prohibits sexual discrimination

By CLAUDE E. ERBSEN

LAGOs, Nigeria (AP) — The women of Africa's most populous country don't need an equal rights amendment.

The new Nigerian constitution coming into effect Oct. 1 already prohibits sexual discrimination, and specifically provides for "equal pay for equal work without discrimination on account of sex or any other ground whatsoever."

But despite the legal ban on discrimination, and the rapid advances made by Nigerian women in recent years, traditional restraints on women still persist in a country where half the population is Moslem.

"The problem is not so much one of the rights and opportunities that are denied them," the newspaper Times of Lagos commented recently, "rather it is the question of attitudes towards them."

While no women have yet reached Cabinet-level positions in the Nigerian federal government, many are running for offices in upcoming state and federal legislative elections. Some have scaled the pinnacles of the civil service and diplomatic life.

Francesca Emanuel, a descendant of slaves who returned from bondage in Brazil, is permanent secretary of the Ministry of Establishments, the equivalent of the U.S. Civil Service Commission, and as such is the highest ranking woman in the Nigerian government.

In the diplomatic sphere, Mrs. R.T. Mohammed has become Nigeria's first woman ambassador, serving in Botswana, a key political listening post on the border of South Africa.

Although women still account for only 10 percent to 15 percent of Nigeria's university population, they are beginning to attain key positions even in the predominantly Moslem northern part of this West African nation.

Professor Deborah Enilo Ajukaiye heads the physics department at Ahmadu Bello University in the mainly Moslem state of Zaria. And in Kaduna, also a heavily Moslem area, Margaret Miller is a judge.

There are two women candidates for state vice governor in the upcoming elections — the first to be held in Nigeria in 15 years — and many other women are contesting state and federal legislative seats.

Nigerian women have also traditionally controlled the country's retail economy, reigning supreme in the markets where much of the country's trade is transacted.

In fact some of the market women have moved into a kind of international trade, flying to neighboring countries with their bundles of merchandise and their babies strapped to their backs.

Although some women have made giant strides in Nigerian public life, most are still confined to traditional work at home and in the fields.

"In the country," says Peju Alade, a veteran Nigerian Radio Corp. announcer, "women share in the field work, and have the housework as well."

Mrs. Alade, a mother of four whose husband is a jazz pianist and TV producer, is one of the Nigerian urban women combining motherhood with a career.

With an estimated 24 million women registered to vote in this year's election for Nigeria's first civilian government in 13 years, politicians are eagerly wooing the female electorate.

One candidate for the presidency, Nnamdi Azikiwe, has promised to include a woman in his Cabinet.

Some women voters pose a special problem for the Federal Election Commission which will be running the poll.

The problem is how to deal with Moslem women in Purdah who are not permitted to mingle with men at the polling places.

The solution: "Our polling booths will have two doors," says Election Commissioner Alade Odunewu. "Where necessary we will have one queue for men, and another for women, using opposite doors."

Shoplifting costly

COLLEGE STATION-Teenage shoplifting, "ripping off" and "just-for-kicks swiping" present an increasing menace to society and a test for law enforcement officials, Dorthy Taylor, a family life education specialist, says.

Teen thefts amounted to more than $6.5 billion in the United States in 1975. These losses caused merchants to mark up prices about 15 percent to cover the losses from theft, the specialist points out.

Miss Taylor is with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, The Texas A&M University System.

The National Retail Merchants Association found these facts about shoplifting:

Many people don't see shoplifting as a crime and don't believe they will be punished--but hundreds are every day.

One out of 12 shoppers is a shoplifter.

Shoplifters come from all income levels and are both male and female--but women shoplift more than men.

The average shoplifter is female and 14-18 years old with a family income over $10,000.

Reasons for shoplifting are as varied as shoplifters, Miss Taylor continues.

Compulsion, desire for attention, kicks, peer acceptance, revenge against the establishment, drug habit support, psychological problems, or because they don't think it's a crime are some reasons.

Need is rarely an actual reason for shoplifting, the specialist points out.

Hamill's skill honed

By BETH MOHR
Copley News Service

LOS ANGELES — Dorothy Hamill glided onto the ice for a demonstration that was as exciting as it was unexpected for the noontime skaters who cleared the ice for her.

The speed of her spins — in arabesque, deeply arched or upright positions — turned the blue, aqua and lime stripes of her skating costume into a blur. Her leaps and turns were marvels of grace and control — and that wedge cut, which was created for her and became an international favorite, actually settled as perfectly as it does in those TV commercials.

While such achievements are always demanding, Hamill paid less than many who reach her level. They cost her a lot in hours of practice and dedication, but took a surprisingly small toll of her social life.

"I started skating when I was 8," she said in an interview. "By the time I was 14, I was practicing five hours a day and from 16 to 18 it was up to eight hours."

She was doing what she loved and her mother saw to it that she didn't miss too many of the things teenagers enjoy.

"She made sure that I dated once or twice a week," Hamill said. "In addition to dates, I was able to go to quite a few games after my practice."

Thinking back at 22, she added:

"I always had a steady boyfriend and I usually was pretty serious about them. They all lasted at least six months, so I must have been serious. I was engaged when I was 16."

Her steady now is Dean-Paul Martin, actor and tournament tennis-playing son of Dean Martin. They have been dating for almost three years, are serious but not engaged, she explained.

Her Ice Capades tour, which began in September, has them dating less than usual.

"He tries to come to see me between tennis tournaments," she said. "Right now, he is getting over hepatitis and will be working on his role in 'Players,' a tennis movie he is doing with Ali McGraw."

Along with her nightly performances, Hamill must work daily to keep her skills polished.

"My practice is not as complex as it was for competition, but I do work on figure as well as free skating," she said. "When we first go on the road with a new show, we spend six to eight hours a day on choreography. Now that I have the routines under my belt, I don't have to spend quite that long."

She would like to do some shows with Ice Capades next year, without committing herself to a full season. This is her third year with the company.

Dorothy Hamill

"Ideally, I would like to do a few cities, like New York, Los Angeles and Chicago. That is selfish, of course, and I don't know what I will be able to do.

"You really can be a skater as long as you want to be, but a star's life is limited. The schedule is very demanding and there always is someone else coming along. There will always be another Olympic winner.

"I think you would begin to lose your freshness after four years. You get older and start to realize that there are other things in life."

When the road shows are over, Hamill would like to try a movie.

"I don't want to do it unless I am prepared. I have attended some acting classes but only as a spectator. Maybe I will do ice shows in Las Vegas and Lake Tahoe. I don't know." There is one thing Dorothy Hamill is sure of.

"I am going to teach blind and handicapped children to skate. In 1975, I saw a blind boy skating and he actually was great. Some of his jumps and spins were unbelievable. It gave me a funny feeling. That's when I decided to teach these children.

"I have been teaching some of them for the last few years and it is amazing how well they do. I tell them what to do, have them feel the position of my arms and they follow through. It's very rewarding."

Despite her success and the satisfactions that go with it, she suffered a bleeding ulcer from stress.

"That was about a year ago and it is as healed as they get," she said. "I think I create a lot of my own problems. I worry about so many little things."

The frill is gone from tennis clothes this year, as designers aim for styles that can be worn off-court as well.

Tennis manufacturers serving up new sportswear

By JENNIFER SEDER
The Los Angeles Times

The frill is gone. So are lace and ribbons and pastel-colored dresses and skirts with peekaboo panties. Tennis manufacturers are serving up a whole new set of sportswear-oriented clothes such as jogging trunks, shorts cut high up on the leg, tank tops and warm-up suits. And their game plans do not include fussy, feminine little numbers.

Even Gussie Moran, whose lace panties shocked the tennis world in 1949, says she now plays and teaches only in warm-ups, shirts and shorts.

With the active sportswear boom finally acing out tennis clothes that can only be worn on the courts, the new marketing strategy of manufacturers and retailers is if the outfit can't double as sportswear, it's out of bounds.

"Players want versatility and fashion, not purity," says David Thurm, vice president of Catalina sportswear, adding that Catalina now offers 40 styles of tennis shorts and shirts — all of them functional off the courts — and only two styles of the classic tennis dress. "These days you see more tennis clothes at the Safeway and on Rodeo Drive in Beverly Hills than you do on the courts.

"We did some regulation tennis dresses and skirts last season but you couldn't give them away in most department stores," Thurm adds. "The pro shops and specialty stores seem to be the only retailers that do well with styles that are limited to the courts."

Another reason manufacturers are stressing versatility rather than purity in tenniswear has to do with the general health of the sport itself.

According to the National Sportsmen's Consumer Audit and an independent sports marketing survey group called SMART, the tennis boom of the early and mid-70s is finally leveling off. And what's left is a core of about 24 million serious players who shop mostly pro shops and specialty stores and view tennis as a sport, not a trendy pastime.

Now an estimated $2 billion dollar industry, tennis continues to grow at an annual rate of 5 to 10 percent a year, as compared to the 20-30 percent growth rate of five years ago, according to the Consumer Audit's latest survey. And Hugh White, director of research for Tennis magazine, describes the current state of the sport this way: "The periphery players, meaning the ones who jumped into the sport a few years ago, have gone to more faddy sports like jogging or rackquetball. So what we now have is a much more stable sport, like golf."

Thurm agrees but adds, "It's just as trendy to buy tennis clothes as it ever was. Our customers are just using them for newer, faddier sports."

Women's tennis champion Martina Navratilova, like Moran, agrees that even some pros prefer multi-purpose, sportswear-oriented tennis clothes to the pro look. The owner of some 40 tennis dresses, most of which were designed especially for her, Martina "The Brat" says "I never wear dresses or skirts for practice. I just feel more comfortable in my shorts or warm-ups. If it weren't a regulation to wear dresses for competition, I wouldn't wear them. Most of the time, I'll wear a dress once, and then stuff it in a closet and forget about it."

The warm-up suit favored by Navratilova is also the fashion love of the season in fabrics such as shag terry, velour, nylon or cotton knit.

One solution designers have come up with to cope with the consumer's demand for versatility is to design tennis dresses and skirts that closely follow the latest ready-to-wear trends.

Designer Geoffrey Beene, for example, is turning his tennis dresses into mini-sundresses this spring and summer, showing them with halter or strapless tops, cinched waists and lots of pockets. "The dresses are styled to allow maximum tanning," says David Moore, sales representative for Beene. "They are also heavily influenced by Beene's spring ready-to-wear collection."

Since the newest tennis styles are knock-offs of active sportswear, it follows that the fabrics and colors for tenniswear are also knock-offs from sportswear lines.

Shag terry and velour — big sellers in active sportswear this season — are also going strong in the tenniswear market, as are hot colors such as orange, lime green, yellow and red.

The only tip-off that these are, in fact, tennis clothes is that they are covered with a certain color piping or a certain placement of stripes. In the piping game, the colors and placement change with each designer, each season. Geoffrey Beene, for instance, does his spring piping in kelly green and navy or ice-blue and white, while Ruth Robbins does lime green and cream.

"It's obvious our customers aren't buying clothes to sweat in," says Catalina's Thurm. "It's a whole new ball game."

Treatment takes planning

COLLEGE STATION—Satisfying window treatments for the home take planning, a careful eye and basic rules-of-thumb, says Sue Young.

Mrs. Young is a housing and home furnishings specialist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, The Texas A&M University System.

On the practical side, first decide: How much the budget will allow, which kinds of fabric will achieve the effect you want, if you want lined or unlined curtains, if you need insulation against cold or noise(if so, you need lining or heavy fabric--or both), and, if curtains should keep out light at night or only screen the room from the street(to keep light out, curtains will need lining or heavy fabric).

On the visual side, use a careful eye to form early ideas on color, texture, pattern, floor or sill lengths and headings.

Consider the window's effect on the entire room.

Basic rules-of-thumb for window treatments include fold fullness, length patterns and color.

Fold fullness affects the budget. Generally, it is better to choose a generous amount of a cheaper fabric--for full folds--than to skimp on a more expensive one and get skimpy folds.

Also, remember that lining adds a quality look, even to cheaper fabric.

To give cheaper fabrics a quality look, line and interline them.

They will last for years, and the lining achieves the generous bulky look of expensive curtains.

Length is personal preference, but once decided, let it be the guide to fabric weight and pattern choice.

For short curtains, avoid especially heavy fabrics or very large patterns--those are best in full-length curtains.

Always take into account the fabric repeat--the length of each pattern before it starts all over again.

Since both curtains on a window should have the same pattern on each side, it may be necessary to order an extra pattern length per curtain.

Pointers presented on sandpaper

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

Bits of information that may be interesting or helpful or both:

Sandpaper contains no sand. It has any one of several other materials, depending on the kind you purchase. So-called flint sandpaper is usually the cheapest and has many uses in light work. Garne paper is fairly hard and tough, and is a good, all-purpose abrasive for the woodworker. Emery paper is even tougher, which is why it is used so much on metal. Extremely hard are aluminum oxide and silicon, which can be used on woods and metals and which will stand up under heavy-duty power sanding.

While many holes in pipes can be patched, an opening which is the result of corrosion is likely to be the forerunner of other holes, especially in the area of the first break.

Despite the thousands of precautionary statements about the necessity of turning off the water before making certain repairs, many persons forget to shut off the valves especially as a preliminary to replacing faucet washers.

When using a spackling compound or any similar patching material, be sure to read the label on the container to see whether the repaired area must be primed before the application of paint or other finishes.

Home owners in warm, humid areas now can buy asphalt roof shingles with fungus- and algae-resistant white granules designed to help white roofs stay white longer.

There is sometimes a little confusion over the difference between mortar and grout with reference to the installation of ceramic tiles. The material that bonds the tile to a surface is usually known as mortar; that which fills the spaces between tiles is called grout.

In selecting resilient floor tiles, remember that light colors reflect more light, making things seem larger than they are; dark colors absorb light, making things look smaller and heavier; and colors always seem stronger when applied to a large surface.

If you intend to place mineral-wool batts or blankets or other insulation on floors above cold spaces, R-19 is recommended for homes in the northern half of the United States and for homes in the southern half that are heated by oil or electricity. Otherwise, R-11 is usually sufficient. The "R" numbers stand for resistance to heat loss in cold weather or heat gain in hot weather and are more accurate than inches as a means of designating insulation performance.

(Do-it-yourselfers will find much valuable information in Andy Lang's handbook, "Practical Home Repairs," which can be obtained by sending $1.50 to this newspaper at Box 5, Teaneck, N.J. 07666.)

Consider operational costs

COLLEGE STATION—Make energy-conscious decisions when shopping for a new clothes dryer, a family resource management specialist, Nancy Granovsky, recommends.

First, consumer should check out installation requirements.

Electric models will require a 120/240 volt, 3-wire a-c circuit of 30-amp capacity.

Gas models usually require a three-eighths or one-half inch gas supply line)but check manufacturer's instructions and local plumbing code) and a properly grounded 120-volt a-c, 15-amp circuit.

Determine the cost of providing the proper electrical and gas installation if the home is not already equipped to use a clothes dryer, the specialist recommends.

If the home is equipped for either a gas or an electric dryer, a gas dryer will probably cost less to run, she continues.

If energy costs the nation's typical rates(3.8 cents per kilowatt hour for electricity and 20.7 cents per therm for natural gas), an electric dryer will cost four times more to operate than a gas model, Mrs. Granovsky points out.

This cost is based on the U.S. Department of Energy's estimate that 416 wash loads per year is typical.

If this is the case, a year's worth of laundry would cost about $40 to dry in an electric dryer and about $11 in a gas dryer.

DEAR ABBY

For sports nuts

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Our daughter, Amy, is engaged to a fellow who is a sports nut. Jerry follows baseball, basketball, football, hockey — any sport. He's an authority. He knows the names and numbers of all the players, how much they earn, who was traded for whom, etc. Jerry would sit and watch TV replays and live games all day if he could. And when he's not watching sports, he's reading about it or talking about it. I worry that after they're married he'll make a poor husband and worse father because all he seems to live for is sports. I've tried to warn Amy, but she doesn't listen.

Amy doesn't enjoy sports as much as Jerry, but goes along with it just to please him.

Jerry is a nice enough fellow otherwise, but being sports crazy, what would you say their chances are for a successful marriage? — AMY'S POP

DEAR POP: Who knows? In spite of Jerry's preoccupation with sports and Amy's lack of enthusiasm for it, they could have a great marriage. You sound like a well-intentioned father who's running interference for his little girl who might well be able to call her own signals. Back off, Dad.

DEAR ABBY: My father's English is so poor it's embarrassing. He says, "He don't," "They was," "There ain't no," etc.

Although I'm only 14, I think it is never too late for a person to learn, and my father could learn if he wanted to. He's 35 and was born in this country, but sometimes he talks like a foreigner.

Sometimes I correct him in front of people because if I waited and corrected him later, he'd claim he never said what I said he said, and then we'd have a fight.

Don't you think adults should take criticism with a smile and appreciate it even though it's from a 14-year-old? — LENNY IN THE BRONX

DEAR LENNY: It's humiliating to be corrected in the presence of others. Your intentions may be good, but your timing is bad.

DEAR ABBY: I wish to say a few words in defense of newspaper carriers who distribute Christmas cards. Some people seem to think the cards are a hint for a tip.

I have three children who have had paper routes for several years. At first, they put the paper on the porch of every subscriber, but found that fewer than 10 percent tipped for the extra service, so now they porch only the elderly and the tippers. — GREELEY, COLO.

DEAR GREELEY: Most newspapers ask their carrier boys to "porch" delivered papers as a matter of course — not as "extra service." To expect tips for such routine service is out of line.

Wedding bells in your future? Whether your lifestyle is bridal gown or blue jeans, Abby lays it all out for you in her booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." Send $1 and a long, stamped (28 cents) self-addressed envelope to Abby: 132 Lasky Drive, Beverly Hills, Calif. 90212.

Spiced nuts a real treat

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

SPICED NUTS

1 cup sugar
1-3rd cup water
¼ cup light corn syrup
¼ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon ground allspice
1 teaspoon ground cinnamon
2 cups walnut or pecanhalves
1 teaspoon vanilla

Grease a 15 by 10 by 1-inch jellyroll pan. In a heavy 2-quart saucepan over medium heat, stirring constantly, cook sugar, water, syrup, salt, allspice and cinnamon until mixture boils. Stirring occasionally, cook to soft-ball stage — 235 degrees on a candy thermometer. Off heat, add nuts and vanilla; stir until mixture begins to thicken and get lighter in color. Pour onto prepared pan. Working quickly with 2 forks, separate nut halves, each one from the other. Cool completely. Store in airtight container. Makes about 1 pound.

Truck stops like new little towns

WASHINGTON (AP) — Truck stops, once a Mom and Pop business with Mom turning out a minimal menu and Pop pumping gas for anyone who had the cash, today are a $10-billion-a-year industry, reports the National Association of Truck Stop Operators.

Not only are some of the nation's 6,500 truck stops likely to have been built by large corporations, but the person who runs a truck stop often is a new breed also, says NATSO chairman Charles Floyd.

"He can just as easily be a former banker or lawyer as an up-by-the-bootstraps man," Floyd says. "But, on the average the operator is basically a business executive, with one twist — he runs a 24-hour-a-day, 365-day-a-year business that caters to automobile passengers as well as truck drivers."

The changes in the industry have been enormous, he points out. If Mom and Pop were able to survive on two gas pumps and a cigarette machine, today's operator can't. A large truck stop pumps more than 6 million gallons a year of fuel alone.

"But fuel is not the only attraction for motorists," Floyd adds. "The truck stop today is fast becoming a city unto itself. They offer everything from motels and posh restaurants to saunas, laundromats and mini-department stores."

At some stops a driver can roll in at 3 a.m. and find a check-cashing service, a communications center, a barbershop or beauty salon to visit while a vehicle is being repaired. At one stop, in Doswell, Va., there's even a live disc-jockey radio show produced for instant entertainment.

The family is not overlooked at truck stops, Floyd notes. Many have installed self-service diesel pumps on a "cash and carry" basis for recreational-vehicle owners, and have added items to their retail stores to woo trade from other highway establishments. And some locations have opened grocery stores for campers and pleasure drivers, and have installed waste-disposal areas for recreational vehicles.

Generally, truck stops are located on Interstate highways and primary highways at intersections with state highways. Those on the Interstate system are situated on an average of 12 acres of land, and can generally park more than 100 trucks and cars, Floyd says. Several stops cover 20 to 30 acres and can accommodate several hundred vehicles.

But prime interstate locations are not cheap. According to NATSO, the independent businessman located on Interstate-highway property has paid an average of $9,378 per acre.

About 35 percent of the truck stops in the nation are operated as part of a chain. The other 65 percent are independents.

So sophisticated has the industry become that NATSO now stages seminars for its members that range all the way from "Retail Store Management" to one seminar that has been dubbed "Trucker vs. Truck Stop Operator" which allows both sides to air their gripes in an academic-type environment.

What's in a name? These U.S. bureaucrats know

By RANDOLPH E. SCHMID

WASHINGTON (AP) — Lake Creek in South Dakota will continue to be called Lake Creek, not La Creek or Lacreek, thanks to a little-known government agency that, in its own way, has an effect on every American.

Polar Peak in Colorado won't become Mount Nedley, either, but one of the several Powell Lakes in Michigan may be rechristened for St. Patrick.

And two previously unnamed bodies of water in Reston, Va., now bear the appellations "Thoreau" and "Audubon."

Such decisions, seemingly so minor, add up to the mass of place names that allow Americans to find their way around, to commemorate people or events and to be able to tell others where they are.

These decisions are made by the domestic names committee of the U.S. Board of Geographic Names. These people, representing a variety of government agencies, meet regularly in a small conference room deep in the massive Interior Department building, an event unnoted even by the government security guards who question visitors.

What happens in that little room, though, can stir passions and alter the maps of the nation.

A proposal to rename Washington's Mount Rainier to Mount Tahoma has been sometimes bitterly debated every few years since the 1880s, for example, even though the board ruled on keeping Rainier in 1917.

The current hot topic is the effort to get Alaska's Mount McKinley rechristened Denali, an ancient Indian name. The domestic names committee would really like to see that decision made in Congress, but efforts there to get action have been unsuccessful.

Perhaps a compromise could be reached, committee members suggest, using one name for the mountain and the other for the surrounding national park. But the name of the park is up to Congress, while the committee has jurisdiction over the mountain, so some sort of coordination will have to be achieved.

In 1973 the board restored the name Cape Canaveral to the area known as Cape Kennedy since the slaying of President Kennedy in 1963. The name Kennedy was kept for the space flight center there, but abandoning Canaveral for the geographic location had been criticized by Floridians, who traced the name to explorer Ponce De Leon.

The board also drew widespread public interest in 1911 when it restored the "h" to Pittsburgh, and in 1933 when it approved the apostrophe in "Martha's Vineyard," the only official place name in the country with a possessive apostrophe.

The Board of Geographic Names was established in 1890 and reorganized in 1947. All name controversies are referred to the board which determines the correct name, spelling and application for use on federal maps.

The act of naming places has always interested people, and many place names are derived from foreign words thanks to the early explorers of North America. Those names can be changed through generations of use, or copied incorrectly, resulting in slightly different names on different maps. This brings the board most of its business.

Lake Creek, S.D., for example. The U.S. Geological Survey asked for a decision on this when, in preparing new maps, it noticed that "Lake Ceek" flows through "Lacreek Wildlife Refuge." Perhaps the names should be the same, survey officials thought.

So the Forest Service was asked to look into the matter. No, it decided, it's Lake Creek.

Administration using Social Security report as 'ammunition' in fight

By CHRIS CONNELL

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Carter administration is using the latest annual report on the health of Social Security as ammunition for its anti-inflation program and its fight to convince Congress to pass a hospital cost containment bill.

The system's three trustees, issuing their report Monday, blamed inflation for an expected 9.8 percent cost-of-living increase the nation's 35 million retired and disabled workers, their survivors ad dependents will begin receiving in July.

The trustees said the Hospital Insurance trust fund, Medicare's so-called Part A, will go broke sometime between 1988 and 1998. Urging Congress to pass the hospital cost containment bill and look for new ways to finance Medicare, they said Medicare paid $17.9 billion in hospital bills in fiscal 1978, up 17 percent from 1977.

Social Security Commissioner Stanford G. Ross said the cost-of-living increase, expected to cost $10 billion, "underscores the need for broad support of President Carter's anti-inflation program."

The trustees also warned in their report to Congress that a recession later this year could cause a cash-flow problem for the Old Age Survivors Insurance trust fund starting in 1983.

The report said that fund might not have enough money at the start of each month for benefit checks to be sent out then. The problem would correct itself later in the month as payroll taxes gradually came in and would clear up entirely by 1992, the trustees said.

They suggested legislation to allow commingling the Disability Insurance and Old Age funds to tide the system over during such cash flow crunches.

The cash flow problem is envisioned only in the worst of three possible economic scenarios the trustees drew up.

The trustees — Treasury Secretary W. Michael Blumenthal, Labor Secretary Ray Marshall, and Health, Education and Welfare Secretary Joseph A. Califano Jr. — emphasized that the balance between income and outgo "is quite fragile in the immediate future."

They said Congress should not try to roll back scheduled payroll tax increases unless it cuts benefits or finds additional revenue.

Ross said Congress acted courageously in 1977 when it voted for higher payroll taxes and put the system on a sound footing for the next half century. But he added that the president and Congress should look for ways to forestall those payroll tax increases.

"There's no question that the public is resistant of the present level of payroll tax, much less those that have been legislated to take place between now and 1990," Ross said.

American workers and employers are paying 6.13 percent on wages up to $22,900 this year for Social Security protection, for a maximum tax of $1,404. The tax rate will climb to 6.65 percent in 1981 and 7.65 percent in 1990.

The wage base is expected to climb steadily by about $2,000 a year, so that by 1987 some Americans will be paying more than $3,000 a year in payroll taxes on income up to $42,000.

The Old Age trust fund will run a deficit at least until 1981. It shrunk by $4.4 billion last year to $31 billion. But the rising taxes will replenish it by the 1990s, even under the worst of the scenarios.

The "pessimistic" set of projections show the Old Age fund lasting until about 2015, when the post-World War II "baby boom" generation advances into old age.

When dolphins finish with Nessie, we've got Max

By HUGH A. MULLIGAN

RIDGEFIELD, CONN. (AP) — When those two Miami dolphins (deep end variety) get through photographing the Loch Ness monster, it is hoped in the interests of science they will come here and do some mug shots of Big Max.

Around the shores of our 55-acre lake, Big Max is as legendary a leviathan as Nessie herself and is seen about as often. He is a snapping turtle of such prodigious girth and barbarous bite as to make strong men paddle in panic for shore when he mistakes their fishing nets for pasta al dente and women call in the children as soon as darkness descends on the murky waters he calls home. This seldom-seen scourge of suburbia demands verification.

Seven-year-old Tommy Walsh, who is an authority on the atrocities of Big Max, tells me that the terrible tortoise recently emerged from his winter hibernation to chomp on half a hockey stick that had been stuck in the frozen surface of the lake. Last summer Big Max bit a hole in a large rubber raft, which my little friend assures me was fully as large as the one John Wayne commanded in the Iwo Jima invasion. All three occupants had to swim for their lives to shore.

How big is Big Max? Tommy detailed a hemisphere as far as his bony freckled arms could stretch.

Bigger than an extra large pizza?

"Way bigger," Tommy threw back that minnow.

Which is why I say bring on those dolphins. For those of you who have not kept pace with matters reptilian, the Boston-based Academy of Applied Sciences has retained the services of two camera-equipped dolphins to search out Nessie in the murky 975-foot depths of Scotland's 24-mile-long Loch Ness.

The dolphins, both 500-pound females from a Miami aquarium, are now in training off the Florida Keys for their Scottish caper. After locating Nessie, which according to the game plan should end in victory by mid-summer, finding Big Max should be a piece of cake. Or at best a giant squid.

Rainbow Lake is at most only three miles around its shoreline and at its deepest only 22 feet. Still, Big Max has proved to be far more elusive than the Loch Ness monster, showing himself to only a fervent few in the past decade compared with the 3,000 documented sightings of Scotland's slithery beastie, which since 1934 has been a protected species.

Of course Big Max's arrival on the amphibious scene is not as memorable as Nessie's. There is no frightful hiss of steam from the nostrils no furious churning up of the lake surface, no gigantic bow wave — just one crunchy snapping sound and then a dark shadow swiftly disappearing into the muddy deep.

So far the New York Times, World Book, London Daily Mail and various Japanese publications that mounted scientific expeditions in an unsuccessful search for Nessie have not arrived to probe our obviously possessed waters with radar, sonar, minisubmarines, scuba divers and echo devices, nor have they bated Big Max with aphrodisiacs guaranteed to get a rise out of tyrannosaurus rex. The dearth of authenticated sightings may have discouraged scientific curiosity.

Even Tommy Walsh, who keeps me posted on this terrifying terrapin, has never actually seen Big Max, which as an authority puts him in the same class as Father Aloysius Carruth, a monk in the Benedictine Abbey on the western shore of Loch Ness who has written a book on Nessie. "But my brother, the Prior, has seen him," the author assured me when I visited him in the abbey at Fort Augustus in the highlands. There followed a long tale about two men in a fishing boat on a sunny day encountering a creature with an even longer tail, scalesome and flailsome, plus a neck like a giraffe, skin like an elephant, a short pronged head and the four-humped back of a dinosaur.

Big Max comes on big enough to those who have been vouchsafed a sighting.

Sixteen-year-old Karen Barr, another minimarine biologist hereabouts, is one of the few who has actually seen him in the flesh, or at least in the shell. She describes a monster tortoise about the size of a Manhattan manhole cover with a carapace, the uppermost portion of his shell, almost as tough.

This would make him a wetback from the Galapagos Islands or a throwback to a one-ton species that swelled in the Dakotas a million years ago.

According to Karen, whose younger sister delivers my afternoon Danbury News-Times, Big Max dines with gusto on the large Canadian geese that visit our lake about this time every year. He reverse dive bombs them with awesome speed from his underwater lair, dragging them down by their big webbed feet.

"There is often a terrific honking and beating of wings and flailing about in the water," Karen described the scene.

Census job may be expensive

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government wants Vincent P. Barabba to come back and supervise its elaborate 1980 census. He says he wants the job, but he's not sure he can afford it.

Barabba, 45, now market research manager for the Xerox Corp. in Rochester, N.Y., served as director of the Census Bureau in the Ford and Nixon administrations.

He said he has been asked to take the job again — this time during the big 1980 census — but he also said conflict-of-interest laws may make it financially impossible for him to do so.

"It's hard to look your kid in the eye and say you can't go to the college of your choice because Daddy wants to be director again," said Barabba, who headed the Census Bureau from 1973 to 1976.

He said he would take a "significant" pay cut to accept the job which pays $47,500. And he said there might be other financial losses as well.

He would not discuss the exact financial problems he may face. But he would be subject to provisions of a new ethics law — it takes effect July 1 — which is aimed at "revolving door" employees who take government jobs for short periods, then move to jobs in private industry in the same fields.

The theory behind the law, which critics say will keep good people from taking government jobs, is that the employees should not be allowed to use influence and contacts they build up within a federal agency on behalf of a private corporation later.

"I understand why they write the laws," Barabba said, "but they don't leave much room to be a nice guy."

The most controversial section of the law would prohibit former government workers from participating for two years in any matter that was part of the employee's "official responsibility."

Other laws require some government employees to excuse themselves from any official decisions that might benefit them personally. For example, President Carter asked his cabinet officers to divest any stocks that might present a conflict of interest or an appearance of one.

Teacher retirement bill passes

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — A bill that would improve pensions for teachers and administrators in top pay brackets and increase state contributions for teacher retirement won House approval Tuesday.

The bill (HB2083) passed on voice vote and now goes to the Senate.

If the bill becomes law, a teacher or administrator will pay retirement contributions based on his or her entire salary rather than the first $25,000.

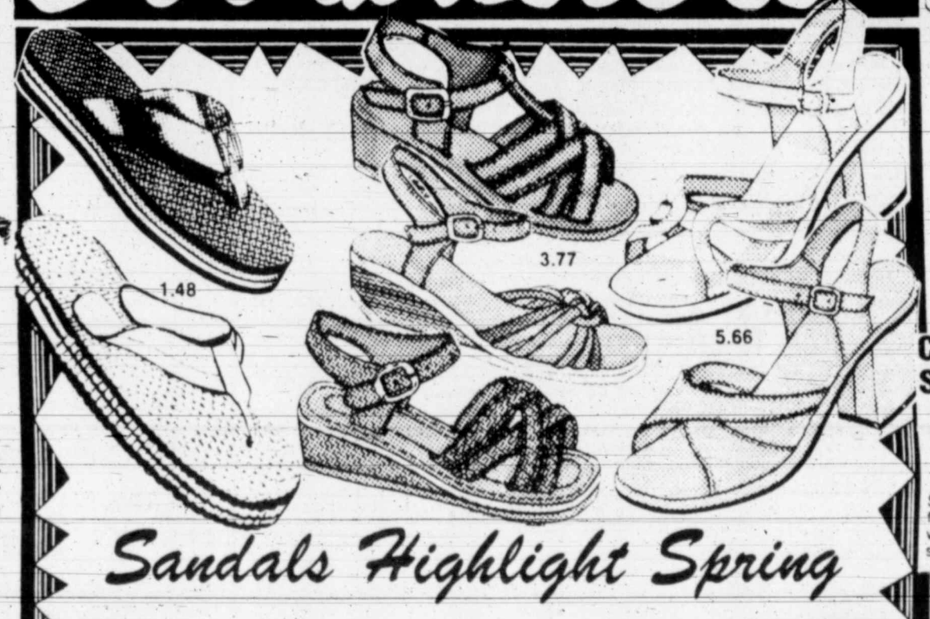

This will mean more income for the retirement system.

The $25,000 limit also will be removed from salaries used in computing benefits when a teacher retires. Benefits are based on a teacher's best five years in terms of salary.

Sponsors contend $25,000 will not be an uncommon salary for classroom teachers within about three years.

Another provision of the bill increases state contributions from 7½ percent to 8½ percent of school employee salaries, but about 80 percent of the money would come from federal aid funds received by school and colleges.

Haitian artists use canvas on wheels

PORT AU PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — Haiti's best popular art whizzes down the streets of this overcrowded city at breakneck speed, threatening the lives of unaware pedestrians.

"Tap-taps," the garish small buses which provide most of Port-au-Prince's public transportation, are flowing art galleries showing the most remarkable examples of Haitian native art.

Scenes ranging from roaring lions to Christ surrounded by his disciples in a tropical version of Leonardo da Vinci's "Last Supper" are depicted in bright, showy colors on the tap-taps' doors, hoods and fenders.

Although Haitian primitive art has found a steady international market, throughout the years it has been losing its original charms.

But, behold...tap-tap artists who boldly sign their masterpieces "J. Calixte, Sensitive" or "Jean, Painter" have recaptured the fresh creativity that once belonged in a canvas.

Standing on any corner, one is visually assailed by soaring eagles, pastoral scenes, flowers, portraits and every other possible subject matter.

Art on wheels is not an exclusively Haitian phenomenon — gaily painted buses can be found in Colombia, Panama and some other Latin countries. But Haitians have given tap-tap art an undisputed beauty and force, aside from turning it into the most profuse form of expression since rococo.

In a country known for its voodoo rituals and beliefs, tap-taps are a powerful reminder of the deep imprint Catholicism has left on these shores.

Jean Marsh loafs in odd way

NEW YORK (AP) — It's a wry summary: "Born in a poor part of London, England, Jean Marsh now lives in a rich part of Oxfordshire, England, and a rich part of New York...both of which keep her poor."

Miss Marsh doesn't dispute it. After all, she wrote it.

Right now, the lady who sprang to fame in public TV's "Upstairs, Downstairs" a few years ago is in the New York part of life, in a new English play that premieres on Broadway next Tuesday.

"Whose Life Is It Anyway?" is the show. It's a laugh-and-cry drama about a young sculptor paralyzed by an accident. Miss Marsh, the star maid of her TV series, essays a doctor in this stage effort.

A small, witty woman with auburn hair and pale blue eyes, she's quite distinctive. Although British, she hates tea. She loves the idea of loafing, but goes about it in an odd way.

Since her series left public TV, she's done two Broadway plays, "Habeas Corpus" and "Fallen Angels," and two others in Los Angeles, "Travesties" and the "Importance of Being Earnest."

She also did a film, "The Eagle Has Landed;" a "Waltons" episode; George Bernard Shaw's "Too True to Be Good" and toured last year in "Twelfth Night" before returning to Broadway.

The co-creator of "Upstairs, Downstairs" with actress Eileen Atkins, she also has been at the typewriter again. Result: An outline for a film and outlines for two TV situation comedies.

She declined to reveal the contents of these projects now, lest "someone pinch the ideas." A network — she remained mum about its name for the time being — asked her to submit the series ideas.

"They like them both, and I'm quite sure one of them definitely is going to be bought," she said in an interview at her spacious, sunny apartment on Manhattan's East Side.

Miss Marsh, a bit weary from three weeks of constant rehearsals for "Whose Life," allows that she also has thought about writing for the theater. But it's still just a thought.

"I just go where my instincts take me and my ideas just took me to film and television. Which is interesting, because I don't particularly like working in them as an actress.

"I like working in the theater. But my instincts haven't taken me to writing a play."

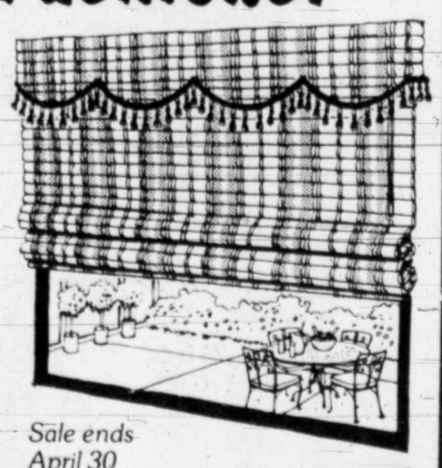

Author Marsh has a strange quirk for a writer. She hates to write, be it for film, TV or stage: "I prefer to act. I don't like writing. It's awful to sit alone here and work, work, work.

"I've got all the discipline as an actress, but none whatsoever as a writer. I mean, the poor old network people are waiting for my revisions, they want to go ahead with it."

Alas, the tube moguls must wait while she does her acting duty in "Whose Life." She just hasn't had time to sit down and tussle with the muse on their behalf.

Model of colonial Fairfield traced to centuries-old damage list

By JOE MAGRUDER

FAIRFIELD, Conn. (AP) — Hessian mercenaries who overstepped their orders from the British and burned Fairfield to the ground in 1779 didn't know it, but they were doing Bill Lee a favor.

The burning left an historical treasure — a damage inventory — that Lee has used two centuries later as a blueprint for an extraordinarily detailed model of Fairfield the day before the tragedy.

The inventory describes the location and design of each building burned, and even locates gardens, orchards and fields planted in crops. It enabled the 54-year-old artist-designer to learn, for example, that one downtown lot that was a cornfield until the 1950s was a cornfield in 1779.

A veteran of a number of historical restoration projects, Lee paid painstaking attention to detail in his effort to create, in the model, something that would give others the sensation of stepping back in history.

Among features in the model that survive to this date are the home of a boy who reportedly saw the invasion from a church steeple and spread the alarm, and four trees, including two copper beeches, already a century old in 1779.

Also still standing is a post used in colonial times for administering public whippings, now converted for displaying notices.

The model of what was the town center faithfully reconstructs the architecture of each home — something that required, for example, seven styles of windows and four types of doors.

Even crops in fields are scaled to the height appropriate for July.

Lee's recreations of the copper beeches are reduced in scale to reflect two centuries' less growth.

As in colonial times, most buildings are unpainted; those that are painted in the model reproduce shades of white, blue, yellow and red from colonial paints.

A native of Bridgeport, Lee's interest in history was stirred by friends.

"Down at the beach at night, we'd be talking about the way the British came down from New Haven, and the way they came in and what it must have been like," he recalled recently.

Sponsored by the Fairfield Public Library, the 9- by 11-foot, table-height model went on public display April 8 at the Fairfield Historical Society to mark the 200th anniversary of the burning.

In Senate committee, 'every man a king' still true

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG

WASHINGTON (AP) — In the Senate Judiciary Committee the rule is "every man a king," or, at least, a subcommittee chairman.

That was the practice during the years Sen. James O. Eastland, D-Miss., was Judiciary Committee chairman, and it remains in effect now that Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass. has succeeded Eastland.

That's why there is a Jurisprudence and Governmental Relations subcommittee, as well as one on Limitations of Contracted and Delegated Authority.

What will those subcommittees do?

No one seems quite certain, except that they will have budgets which will allow the senior members to hire staff to look into whatever they can justify.

"I am the ranking minority member on the subcommittee known as Jurisprudence and Governmental Relations," said Sen. Alan K. Simpson, R-Wyo. "And as ranking minority member of the subcommittee I have a budget of $147,000.

"Of which I've used absolutely zero."

A newcomer to the Senate, Simpson said he probably will use part of his budget to hire an aide to work on all issues before the Judiciary Committee.

Sen. Howell Heflin, D-Ala., another Senate freshman, is chairman of the jurisprudence subcommittee.

Lauren Steele, a Heflin aide, said, "We're in the process of hiring the staff, right now." And a lawyer from Mobile, Ala., is scheduled to become chief counsel May 1.

What will the subcommittee do?

"It's not really been decided what they're going to do yet," said Steele.

Sen. Max Baucus is chairman of the subcommittee with the somewhat exotic title of Limitations of Contracted and Delegated Authority.

"It's going to be Max's major oversight activity," said an aide to the senator. Exactly what the subcommittee will oversee was left to be determined.

Despite the every-man-a-king philosophy, two of the 10 Democrats on Judiciary don't have chairmanships.

One is Sen. Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia, who as Senate majority leader has enough power to satisfy his needs.

The other is Sen. Patrick Leahy of Vermont.

"All the good subcommittees were taken," said a Leahy aide. "He didn't particularly want to be chairman of the penitentiaries subcommittee," which easily could have been created if Leahy had insisted.

The Vermont senator already heads subcommittees of the Agriculture and Appropriations committees.

"We struck a deal," said the aide. In return for not insisting on a subcommittee of his own, Leahy was assigned to three of the major subcommittees — Administrative Practice and Procedure, Antitrust and Criminal Justice — and he got a big enough share of the committee budget to hire three aides.

•

From Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., came this critique of the United States Senate:

"I think that it's important that we appear to know what we're doing."

When Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance and Defense Secretary Harold Brown appeared together before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee to discuss the peace treaty between Israel and Egypt, members of the panel had only a limited time for questions.

Chairman Frank Church, D-Idaho, said he would invoke the 10-minute rule, under which members would have only 10 minutes on each round of questioning.

Church then turned to Vance and Brown and said he was aware that "savvy witnesses have long since discovered that under the 10-minute rule the way to avoid questions they don't want to answer is to filibuster." The two officials promised to keep their answers short.

Jarvis out to get tax man

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — Howard Jarvis now hopes to do to state income taxes what he did to state property taxes.

The principal author of Proposition 13 announced Monday he would sponsor a new initiative to cut state income taxes in half.

Proposition 13 cut property taxes by 57 percent.

Planned for the June 1980 ballot, the initiative would cut state revenues by somewhere between $3 billion and $4 billion a year, starting in 1981, he said.

Jarvis, 75, an executive of an association of landlords, kicked off the campaign at three news conferences, one after the other, in Sacramento, Los Angeles and San Diego.

"We have been waiting for a realistic policy to implement Proposition 13, and we are still waiting. It's time once again to show the politicians in this state who's boss," he said in Sacramento.

The new initiative would start in the 1980 tax year. The 11 percent maximum state tax rate, now levied against an income of $16,310 for a single person or $32,620 for a married couple, would be cut to 5.5 percent.

The initiative would also fully "index" the tax brackets for inflation, so that cost-of-living raises wouldn't force employees into higher brackets.

The state income tax will raise $4.84 billion this year — about a quarter of total revenue — if Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. gets the $1.3 billion tax cut he wants.

Jay Rockefeller doubts coal commitment

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (AP) — Gov. Jay Rockefeller said Wednesday he is not convinced President Carter has made a strong commitment to coal, even though the president asked him to find ways to boost the use of coal.

"Speeches change nothing, it's what the results are," said Rockefeller, who is chairman of the President's Commission on Coal.

Carter said at a Tuesday news conference that the nation must be more aggressive in expanding its use of coal. He requested the coal commission to hold hearings to help find "acceptable" ways to substitute coal for natural gas and oil.

"I asked the president to ask me to hold the hearings," Rockefeller said.

The West Virginia Democrat said he sees the hearings, in part, as a way to put pressure on the president, his administration and the Congress to broaden coal's role in the national energy plan.

"There's an opening there, there's a little light," Rockefeller said in an interview.

He said he saw the president's push for coal use as an "indirect" result of an accident at a nuclear power plant near Harrisburg, Pa. But he said nuclear power should not be counted out.

He warned that the nation should not expect coal to provide a quick solution to inflation, which is in part caused by oil imports.

"Coal is just part of the answer," he said.

Rockefeller has been skeptical of previous presidential declarations for coal. He has attacked the White House for lacking a coherent national energy policy.

Although a boom was predicted for the coal industry at the end of a winter-long strike by the United Mine Workers in 1977-78, thousands of Appalachian miners have been idled because of a slow market for coal.

Rockefeller said that despite the clamor for alternatives to imported oil, the coal industry is producing more coal than the nation is demanding.

He said if there is a commitment to an immediate expansion of coal use there are two possible ways to provide a quick spurt in consumption — by having utilities with oil-fired generators purchase power from coal-fired plants and by mixing coal with oil to form a "slurry" fuel.

But the governor warned that coal is not a quick solution.

"If you're talking about coal, you're talking about three or four years to open a new mine," Rockefeller said.

And, he said, expanded coal use must be reconciled with environmental concerns, such as air and water pollution.

Rockefeller said one way to increase long-term use of coal is to expand the development of plants that convert coal to other fuels, such as synthetic oil. But he said he wanted to wait for the commissimn to make its report before making more specific suggestions.

'Puppycaid' bill attracts wrath of veterinarians

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Rep. Ernestine Glossbrenner of Alice thought she had an innocuous-enough bill. It would allow cities and counties to set up clinics to sterilize dogs and cats, rather than sending them to the death chambers.

But before the late-night meeting of the House Health Services Committee ended, the bill had come under attack by Texas veterinarians, whose spokesman called it a step toward socialized veterinary medicine — "Puppycaid," if you will.

Glossbrenner told the committee she drafted her House Bill 1660 after listening on her car radio to the commercial pleas for people to have their dogs and cats spayed or neuterized to cope with the growing animal control problem.

"The bill authorizes cities and counties to establish spay and neuter clinics rather than just destruction centers for pets," she said. She said legal questions exist whether local governments may use funds for sterilization clinics now.

Part of the bill would allow the state to lend money to cities for this purpose. The Legislative Budget Board reported the lending could amount to $899,000 if all cities of more than 10,000 population asked for that means of financing their clinics.

"I don't think that will happen," Glossbrenner said. "The bill doesn't require every city to build a clinic. The cities will have the option. It will free local cities and counties to use animal control funds they now have."

Glossbrenner brought three South Texas women as witnesses. Katherine Rupp of Falfurrias spoke for the trio because the other two women were too nervous.

"I love animals," Rupp answered when the committee chairman asked her whom she represented.

She said Los Angeles became the nation's first city to set up a municipal animal sterilization program and so far 42 per cent of the city's pet population have been sterilized at that city's three clinics.

"It went a long way to solving a serious health problem," she said.

Connecticutt and Alaska have since started sterilization programs, she said.

Charles Huff, executive director of the Texas Veterinary Medical Association, came forward to oppose the bill.

"Spaying and neutering animals is not that conducive to animal control," he said. "When it's free, few people bother to bring in their pets to have them spayed or neuterized."

He had different information about Claifornia's experience on the subject. A free sterilization drive was conducted in Southern California with movie stars participating, he said, and only one-tenth of the expected number of animals were taken to clinics to be sterilized.

"They called off the campaign in disgust."

Huff said pet owners oppose sterilization for various reasons; some say it's morally wrong.

"Some say that dogs and cats have very few pleasures in life and they deserve to keep this one," he said.

He said his association spends thousands of dollars every year to educate the public toward controlling the pet population. Pressed for details, Huff said the association has just spent $3,000 for some educational materials.

He said veterinarians are not opposing the bill for fear of losing business to the free municipal sterilization clinics.

Auditors say electric cars not good enough to sell

By MIKE FEINSILBER

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressional auditors say the government is trying to get electric-powered cars on the road too soon. The cars just aren't good enough to attract buyers yet, they say.

A report just released by the General Accounting Office says the Energy Department should wait until a better electric car is built before undertaking expensive demonstration projects in which private fleet owners will get subsidies for buying and using battery-powered cars.

Demonstrating what presently available electric vehicles can do will not induce people to buy them, GAO said, because those now available cost too much and lack vigor and range.

The report concludes: "Cost-performance relationships must be markedly improved before a commercial demonstration program can realistically achieve success."

The GAO criticism concerns the Energy Department's administration of the Electric and Hybrid Vehicle Research, Development and Demonstration Act of 1976.

The department plans to put 10,000 electric vehicles — or hybrid vehicles running on both electric power and gasoline — on the road by 1986, with most in private hands. But the GAO recommended that the cars be driven only by federal workers until technological advances occur.

Under the department's plan, the first 200 cars would be put out this year at a cost of $27,000 per vehicle, with $10,000 of that going to a management consulting firm hired to plan the project, compile data and handle other paperwork.

The department would share the cost of buying and operating the demonstration cars with the private citizens and firms and the government agencies that would own the cars.

Under the department's plans, 20 cars are to be made available at a subsidized cost to the American Telephone and Telegraph Co. in Los Angeles for use by telephone repairmen, 40 to Consolidated Edison of New York for meter installation jobs, 60 to the Long Island Lighting Co. of Mineola, N. Y. for meter readers, 20 to Disneyworld in Florida for landscaping and maintenance work, 25 to private drivers through an auto dealer in Pennsauken, N.J., and the rest to government agencies.

The Energy Department, replying to the GAO report, said the 1976 law required the department to make the cars available to private users.

And besides, the department said, "We do not agree with the view that scarcity of data, limited range vehicles, the need to improve technology etc., should postpone the demonstration effort in the private sector.

"Our experience to date supports an opposite conclusion. The DOE program intent is to introduce current technology vehicles into those market sectors as new technology becomes available."

In 21 years, the Energy Department has estimated, there will be 8.6 million electric or hybrid cars on American roads, accounting for 5 percent of the total number of cars and saving 200,000 barrels of oil a day.

The GAO also criticized Energy Department research into an electrified road. Under that concept, electric cars would be powered by cables embedded in the roadway and would depend on their own power sources only when on side streets.

But this would increase, not cut, demand for electricity during peak hours, the GAO said, and the government's goal is to cut peak-hour demand. An advantage of electric cars is that their batteries are recharged during the night, when demands for electricity are lowest.

Eight released by board

NEW YORK (AP) — Two actresses, a reporter, a U.S. senator's wife, an author and a magazine editor have been honored as "symbols of contemporary motherhood" in being named "Outstanding Mothers for 1979."

The First Outstanding Mother Awards were presented Tuesday to Jane Muskie, wife of Sen. Edmund Muskie, D-Maine; Lenore Hershey, editor-in-chief of Ladies' Home Journal; Carol Jenkins, WNBC-TV news reporter; Harriet Adams, author of 180 books including the "Nancy Drew" series, Charita Bauer, actress in "The Guiding Light" CBS-TV soap opera, and veteran actress Arlene Dahl.

The awards were sponsored by the National Mother's Day Committee.

●

BOSTON (AP) — Former Sen. Edward W. Brooke and his ex-wife are being sued by the state of Massachusetts for recovery of more than $84,000 in Medicaid payments made in behalf of Mrs. Brooke's late mother.

In filing the suit Tuesday, Attorney General Francis X. Bellotti said he has no plans to prosecute either Brooke or his former wife Remigia on criminal welfare fraud charges.

The action came in a suit originally filed by Brooke in an effort to clear himself of the allegations. The attorney general's office filed a counterclaim Tuesday, seeking to recover the $84,387 in Medicaid payments made in behalf of the late Teresa Ferrari-Scacco.

The former Republican senator, defeated for re-election last November, subsequently was cleared by the Senate Ethics Committee of charges he knew his mother-in-law was receiving Medicaid at a time when he held more than $70,000 for her.

Bellotti said he decided not to try to pursue the criminal issue in light of the Senate committee's action, the state welfare bureau's findings and those of his own staff.

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Muhammad Ali has purchased a home in suburban Bala Cynwyd for $60,000, according to a lawyer who said he represented the former heavyweight boxing champion in the purchase.

John Colehower of Philadelphia confirmed that the house had been purchased by Ali on April 2. He declined comment on reports it would be occupied by Ali's second wife, Belinda. They were divorced in 1977.

Security has been so tight that the man who sold the house, Michael McCarthy, did not know who the purchaser was.

"Nobody told me anything," he said.

AWOL has high cost, report says

WASHINGTON (AP) — Absences without leave, the most prevalent crime in the nation's armed forces, cost the government an estimated $1.1 billion between 1973 and 1977, a new report says.

The nation's sailors, soldiers, airmen and marines went "over the hill" 608,000 times in those four years, according to the General Accounting Office study.

The study said the Marine Corps had the highest AWOL rate, the Air Force the lowest.

And the report by the congressional investigating agency said punishments given service men and women who went AWOL varied widely and were not likely to be more severe for repeat offenders than in first-time cases.

But the GAO said the cost impact of unauthorized absences is dwarfed by their potential impact on the nation's military effectiveness:

"Individual excellence and the overall quality of the service is determined by training, discipline, morale, and motivation," the report said.

"Collectively they establish combat capability — the ultimate measure of military effectiveness. AWOL seriously damages this capability by adversely affecting unit effectiveness and mission readiness."

Most of the estimated $1.1 billion cost to the government was "for recruitment and training lost," the report said.

The GAO said more than 70 percent of the 4,100 people who went AWOL during one 12-month period were eventually discharged as unfit for service.

Only one-fifth of those who went AWOL in their first two years of service were high school graduates, the study found.

That led the GAO to recommend greater efforts toward signing up high school graduates.

It also said, however, that without a draft the military is competing with civilian employers and noted that the Pentagon, in meeting its desired strength, may be forced to sign up more people not measuring up to its "definition of a quality recruit."

But the GAO said, "Combat capability could actually be hurt by bringing in too many marginal performers in contrast to accepting some shortfall in troop population."

The Defense Department, in its response, called the AWOL cost figures misleading. It said a comparison should have been made between the draft and all-volunteer eras. The GAO said it did indeed consider difference in attitude of volunteers and draftees. The draft ended in 1973, and since that time discipline has improved in teh all-volunteer force and that costs associated with AWOL cases have come down.

From the last tally in 1977, the AWOL rates declined for all services except the Navy, the study said. It suggested the drop was due to the recruitment of qualified people and to "aggressive action" to prevent "sub-standard personnel" from enlisting.

The GAO also said the military justice system criticizes severe punishment for going AWOL but provides no guidance on specific penalties that can be assessed.

"As a result, it is not surprising that we found wide differences in punishment imposed for AWOLs of similar length," the study said. For example, the GAO said, in 42 percent of the cases it examined, servicemen got an adminiatrative discharge in lieu of court-martial for being gone for more than 30 days, the most serious AWOL. In the remaining cases, it was dealt with as a minor offense.

There were some differences among the services. The Marine Corps most often imposed a bad conduct discharge, confinement or both, the study said. The other three services more often used reduction of privilege combined with lesser forms of punishment.

And the study found that persons who had prior convictions for AWOL did suffer much greater punishments than first-time offenders.

"Thus, instead of being relatively sure that the most serious AWOL offense will result in severe punishment, military members can discern from the services' practices that the likelihood of severe punishment is low," while admistrative discharges are more common, the study said.

Supreme Courts says states may prevent aliens teaching

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court, employing a logic scorned by four of its members, says states may prevent aliens from teaching in public schools.

The effect could be to keep French citizens from teaching French to American children or, as in the test case, Englishwomen from teaching English grammar in public schools.

The justices split 5 to 4 Tuesday in upholding a New York law that prohibits aliens who do not seek U.S. citizenship from teaching in the state's public schools.

"A teacher has an opportunity to influence the attitudes of students toward government, the political process and the citizen's social responsibilities," Justice Lewis F. Powell Jr. wrote for the court's majority.

He added that states "properly may regard all teachers as having an obligation to promote civic virtues and understanding in their classes, regardless of the subject taught."

Therefore, Powell's opinion said, states may draw a distinction between citizens and resident aliens when deciding who gets teaching positions.

In a sharply worded dissent written by Justice Harry A. Blackmun, four justices said Tuesday's decision "seems constitutionally absurd."

Justices William J. Brennan Jr., Thurgood Marshall and John Paul Stevens joined Blackmun in accusing the court of returning to the "frantic and overreactive days of the first world war, when attitudes of parochialism and fear of the foreigner were the order of the day."

Resident aliens enjoy most of the rights citizens do. But in recent years, the Supreme Court and lower courts have carved out exceptions to the "equal protection" enjoyed by aliens living in the United States.

Last year, for example, the high court upheld another New York law that prohibited aliens from serving as state police officers.

The test case on teachers involved lawsuits filed by Susan Norwick, a native of Dundee, Scotland, who is still a British citizen, and Tarja Dachinger, a citizen of Finland. Both women have been U.S. residents since the mid-1960s and are married to U.S. citizens.

New York education officials considered both women well qualified to teach, except for their lack of citizenship.

Meanwhile, ABC News reported Tuesday night that the court will say in a ruling yet to be issued that certain due process of law protections — such as the right to be present at a hearing and the right to confront adverse witnesses — do not apply at parole proceedings for state prison inmates.

In other decisions issued Tuesday, the court:

—Ruled by a 7-2 vote in a case from Bellwood, Ill., that residents of a community, and the community itself, have a legal right to sue real estate firms for alleged racial bias in home sales.

—Ruled unanimously that tenants forced to move in the face of condemnation proceedings by the federal government are not entitled to federal aid for relocation.

—Ruled in another unanimous vote that six-member juries must return unanimous verdicts to convict defendants in state criminal trials. That decision came in an obscenity case from Louisiana.

Senate OKs credit insurance bill

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Senators have tentatively approved a credit insurance bill touted as a money-saver during emergencies and criticized as a "special interest" piece of legislation.

Sen. Carl Parker's bill advanced Tuesday on a 24-7 vote, but another vote is needed to send the measure to the House.

The bill's main supporter has been Montgomery Ward Enterprises, which proposed new legislation after state insurance officials said current laws did not permit the package-type policy the company wanted to offer.

Sen. Lloyd Doggett, D-Austin, said the bill would provide coverage "most consumers do not want nor need. ... its only purpose is to fuel the flames of inflation."

He dramatized Montgomery Ward's support of the bill by displaying one of the store's catalogs on his desk.

Doggett indicated the only reason he was not filibustering the bill was because Parker had aided him the past two weeks in protesting what Doggett said were anti-consumer bills.

Parker's bill would permit stores to sell one policy to cover all debt risks, including the loss of income as a result of illness, dismissal or a strike.

Parker, D-Port Arthur, has a high concentration of refinery workers in his southeast Texas district.

In addition, the catch-all policy could include credit life insurance and cover damage or loss of the property or a customer's credit card.

Doggett complained that a customer would have to pay for all the coverage even if he or she wanted only one type, such as credit life.

"It will add to the cost of purchases," said Doggett.

The cost of the insurance would be 50 cents per $100 per month and would be calculated on the basis of declining balance.

Parker said the insurance would be optional with each customer, but Doggett suggested store clerks would present the insurance as a regular practice that each customer needed. He said the state insurance staff felt the sale of such policies would violate antitrust laws.

Parker denied the bill was part of any "scheme" to force customers to buy credit insurance. He noted State Insurance Commissioner E.J. Voorhis Jr. had testified the bill was consistent with the public interest.

"The bill is for people who want to protect their credit (rating) and pay their bills on time," said Parker. He said such a proposal could be especially important in Jefferson County, where "strikes are a fact of life."

In a loud exchange with Parker, Sen. Bill Patman, D-Ganado, claimed the bill was a "true special interest bill for Montgomery Ward and not your people back home."

"It's as accurate to say you're speaking for deadbeats as it is to say I'm speaking for Montgomery Ward," responded Parker.

A spokesman for Montgomery Ward was the main proponent of the bill in committee. Doggett released copies of a state insurance board memorandum showing that Montgomery Ward had been seeking authority to issue such policies since 1977.

"This is an unfortunate piece of legislation in an unfortunate legislative session," said Doggett.

House starts work on bill for $20 billion in spending

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Texas House members started work today on a $20.2 billion two-year general appropriation bill that would leave $370 million for tax cuts or additional spending.

Most observers believe debate — largely on attempts to change the bill (HB558) by amendment — will last at least through Friday.

The bill would raise spending 19 percent over current levels, compared with 22 percent recommended by the Legislative Budget Board and 17 percent urged by Gov. Bill Clements.

Some Republican legislators were expected to seek further cuts to make more money available for tax cuts, though few believe anything like the $1 billion sought by Clements is possible.

And part of the difference between the House bill and the budget board's is illusory.

The budget board included funds to avoid a scheduled $269 million two-year increase in the cost of public schools to property taxpayers in the 1,100 local school districts.

The House Appropriations Committee eliminated the $269 million from the budget bill but only with the understanding that it would be added to the school finance bill now being written by another committee.

The bill (HB951) by Rep. Bob Close, R-Perryton, would have remedied that.

"Who controls state funds? Is it the elected representatives of the people ... or is it the various and sundry agencies, agency heads and agency boards?" Close said.

Bill on funds fails to get OK

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Efforts to force all state agencies in the executive branch of government to put their money in the state treasury have failed for this legislative session.

The House administered the death blow Tuesday by defeating, 48-86, a weakened bill that — paradoxically — would have given legislators greater control over state funds.

Numerous agencies keep license fees, examination fees and other income they receive in bank accounts outside the treasury. Some, such as the State Banking Department, spend their money without legislative appropriation.

Free gasohol in Austin promotes use of mixture in automobiles

AUSTIN (AP) Agriculture Commissioner Reagan Brown donned a service station uniform at an Austin self-serve filling station Tuesday to promote gasohol - a mixture of unleaded gasoline and alcohol.

But Governor Clements' limousine had to wait in line while Brown pumped one gallon of the special fuel into Land Commissioner Bob Armstrong's motorcycle.

The free samples and a Capitol rally supporting bills legalizing the manufacture of alcohol for motor fuel were part of "Gasohol Day" Tuesday.

Brown told a small rally of farmers that the only opposition to the proposed legislation had come from liquor interests.

David Senter, a Burleson farmer representing the American Agriculture Movement, said, "We don't want to drink it. We just want to burn it."

The Texas Agriculture Department, Texas Oil Marketers Association and two private firms sponsored the test project.

Rep. Dan Kubiak, D-Rockdale, sponsor of the proposed legislation, said Texas would become the 11th state to have full gasohol service should the bills pass this session. The pending bills exempt gasohol from state gasoline taxes until the new mixture — 10 percent alcohol to 90 percent gasoline — becomes competitive as a vehicle fuel.

Sen. Bob Price, R-Pampa, said the gasohol bills also include $20 million for pilot gasohol manufacturing projects and $20 million in state grants for other firms that enter the gasohol business.

A proposed gasohol plant, to be built by the Rio Grande Valley Sugar Growers Association and Midwest Solvents Inc., already has been guaranteed a $15 million federal loan, Kubiak said. The plant could produce 15 million gallons of alcohol annually for the production of 150 million gallons of gasohol.

Hot tomatoes do better in your garden

By EARL ARONSON
AP Newsfeatures

Just about every vegetable-garden popularity poll will include as a winner tomatoes, which can be a most rewarding crop. If you want a better harvest, here are a few ideas.

Tomatoes need sunshine. Plant them where they will get plenty of it — all day if possible. If you have no room elsewhere, stick in a few, well-staked, among the flowers. They blend in well.

Don't plant them too early. Start them indoors rather if you use seed. You are better off buying started plants in the long run. As a guide, don't plant tomatoes outside until the topsoil temperature is at least 55 degrees.

In short, delay planting outdoors until all danger of frost has passed. Wait until mid-May to mid-June in northern states, where the growing season is short; mid-April to early-June in temperate states. In the far south, you may plant tomatoes any time except April, May and June, when the temperature might be too hot for good tomatoes in the summer.

Select your variety carefully. Choose for disease resistance and adaptability to your climate. If there are letters such as VF or VFN after the variety name it will mean it has been bred to be resistant to the common tomato diseases verticillum (V), fusarium (F), and nematodes (N), a root-invading soil pest. Such diseases may cause plants (and fruit) to wither and die. Among disease-resistant varieties are Big Girl Hybrid, Jet Star, Supersonic, Better Boy, Beefmaster, Burpee's VF Hybrid, Ramapo Hybrid, Wonder Boy and others.

If you live in an area with a short growing season select an early-maturing variety.

If you buy seedlings choose short, compact, sturdy ones. These will probably be six to eight weeks old. When you plant them apply a starter-food solution high in phosphorus around the plant but not directly on it. Then when the plants begin fruiting, apply a general fertilizer such as 5-10-5 to stimulate new growth.

Don't forget to give the plants a good watering if the weather stays dry.

Black, leathery spots on the bottom of garden tomatoes indicate they have a common garden disease termed blossom-end rot.

Art winners profiled

NEW YORK (AP) — Here are brief profiles of the 1979 Pulitzer Prize arts winners:

FICTION

John Cheever

John Cheever, 66, winner of the 1979 Pulitzer Prize for fiction, is the author of six collections of stories and four novels. His Pulitzer Prize-winning book, "The Stories of John Cheever," chronicles 61 of his short stories, beginning with some of his earliest works. One of his novels, "The Wapshot Chronicle" won the National Book Award in 1958 and the American Academy and Institute of Arts and Letters' Howells Medal for fiction.

DRAMA

Sam Shepard

Sam Shepard, a 35-year-old playwright whose works have been performed primarily Off- and Off-Off Broadway, is currently in his fourth year of residency at the Magic Theatre in San Francisco. His play "Buried Child," which won him the Pulitzer Prize for drama Monday, is a view of a disintegrating rural family in Illinois. The work opened last fall at the Theatre for the New City and moved to the Theatre de Lys in Greenwich Village, where its last scheduled performance was Sunday. Shepard began writing plays when he was 18 and has written scores of plays in the past 14 years.

HISTORY

Don Fehrenbacher

Don E. Fehrenbacher, winner of the history prize for "The Dred Scott Case: Its Significance in American Law and Politics," is the William Robertson Coe professor of History and American Studies at Stanford University. A New York Review of Books critique termed Fehrenbacher's winning work "probably the most thorough study of any Supreme Court decision ever undertaken."

Two years ago Fehrenbacher edited and completed the writing of "The Impending Crisis," a history of pre-Civil War years that won the prize posthumously for Professor David M. Potter, also of Stanford.

BIOGRAPHY

Leonard Baker

Leonard Baker's book "Days of Sorrow and Pain: Leo Baeck and the Berlin Jew" won the 1979 Pultzer Prize for biography. Published in 1978, it is the story of a rabbi who helped German Jews maintain themselves during the horrors of the Nazi regime. The American-born Baker spent five years in 10 countries interviewing some 100 persons who knew Baeck. As Berlin's leading rabbi and one of the world's foremost Jewish theologians, Baeck helped many Jews escape from Germany as Hitler rose to power, and during the war he worked with the underground until he was imprisoned in a camp where he was assigned to hauling trash. Baeck survived the Holocaust and became a world leader of liberal Judaism.

POETRY

Robert Penn Warren

Robert Penn Warren, 73, was the winner of his third Pulitzer Prize, and second for poetry. The 1979 Pulitzer was won by his book, "Now and Then: Poems 1976-1978," published last year. His first award was for the novel "All The King's Men" in 1947. A teacher at several universities, Warren was on the faculty of Yale University for 22 years, becoming professor emeritus of English in 1973.

NON-FICTION

Edward Wilson

Harvard professor Edward O. Wilson, 49, an expert on insect societies has gained world-wide attention for his theory of sociobiology, which he extends, in his Pulitzer Prize-winning book "On Human Nature," to human society. In his book, he combines theories of evolution, ecology and ethology as he considers how humans' biological heritage may direct our behavior and development. His book was published in 1978.

Shop Midland And make it grow.
Why shop Midland? Did you ever consider that when you make a major purchase in another city you decrease the financial base at home? It's time we all realized that the money we spend away from home never comes back. But the dollars we spend here in Midland circulate many times through our local economy, creating jobs and enabling businesses to support local services.
Midland merchants pay their share. Midland merchants are taxpaying citizens. Their property taxes, amounting to more than $1,135,000, support our public schools, Midland College, Midland Memorial Hospital, police and fire departments, and city and county services. They provide jobs for more than 18 percent of the total work force, and contribute more than 15 percent of The United Way budget. Sales tax payments by Midland retailers climbed 43 percent over the same period one year ago.
Make Midland a better place. The dollars we spend in Midland make Midland a better place. Shop Midland. And make it grow.

Midland Wildcat Committee hosts Texas American officers, directors

Officers and directors of Texas American Oil Corp., Midland-based oil and gas exploration and refining firm, were guests of the Midland Wildcat Committee Tuesday in the Petroleum Club of Midland.

William S. Judd is president and director of the company.

With him at the reception were H. L. Atnipp, executive vice president and director; Curtis Bedrich, secretary-treasurer, and G. Stanley Cromwell, vice president — Land and Geology, all of Midland; Coyn Mateer, Mt. Vernon, Ill., director; Billy Delp, Fort Worth, director; E. E. Runyan and J. Paul Karcher, both of Midland, directors, and Ted Ward, vice dpresident — Drilling and Production, Monahans.

Judd hailed the recent announcement by President Carter on the phaseout of price controls on petroleum as a great incentive for all operators, both independents and majors, to "get out and find more petroleum."

"We will have to wait and see what the full effect of the changes will be, and see what will come out of the president's excess profits tax threat before we can actually plan ahead," Judd said. "I believe if there is an excess profits tax passed it will include a plowback credit clause."

Judd said that he expected Texas American's operating budget to increase tremendously in the next five years. "This year, it is $11 million. In five years, it should reach $25 million or go as high as $28 million.

Judd said that the lifting of price controls would increase cash flow and that "Texas American will plowback much of the extra profits in exploration."

The stripper well phase of the president's plan drew praise from Judd. "It is almost a certainty that many fields that have been depleted will lend themselves to rejuvenation through secondary recovery programs."

"The president has given the oil industry a real challange — develop a good supply of domestic hydrocarbons so that we will not have to depend so heavily on foreign supplies," Judd said.

Judd said the fanatic environmentalist continues to be a roadblock to developing the petroleum industry, transportation of petroleum and the development of alternative sources of energy.

"In the early days of the industry there was not too much effort on the part of the oilman to take care of the environment, but I believe the industry has cleaned up its actions and that the environment is of primary concern," Judd said. "There has to be a lot of common sense used by both the environmentalists and the oilman.

Flowing oil discovery completes in Glasscock

Patrick Petroleum Corp. of Michigan, Hilliard Oil & Gas, Inc., and Pogo Producing Co. No. 1 Hanna Bailey has been completed as a flowing Wichita-Albany discovery in Glasscock County, 17 miles south southeast of Garden City.

The operators reported a daily potential of 244 barrels of 38.1-gravity oil and 20 barrels of water, through a 20/64-inch choke and perforations from 6,599 to 6,656 feet.

The pay was treated with 3,500 gallons, and the gas-oil ratio is 250-1.

Total depth is 10,000 feet and 4.5-inch casing is cemented at 8,100 feet. The plugged back depth is 6,784 feet.

The Wichita-Albanay was topped at 6,506 feet on kelly bushing elevation of 2,691 feet. The Dean was topped at 6,926 feet and the Ellenburger was hit at 9,910 feet.

Wellsite is two miles northeast of the old Barbee (Wichita-Albany oil) area and 2,250 feet from north and 800 feet from west lines of CB&CNG survey, abstract 20.

WINKLER WELL

Southland Royalty Co. of Midland No. 1 Keystone, drilled as a wildcat to 11,402 feet in Winkler County, has been completed as a producer in the Keystone, South (Tubb 6,470) field.

The operator reported a daily pumping potential of 27 barrels of 38-gravity oil and 31 barrels of water, through perforations opposite the Tubb from 6,666 to 6,728 feet. The pay was treated with 2,750 gallons of acid.

The gas-oil ratio is 1,296-1.

Five and one-half-inch casing is cemented at total depth.

Wellsite is 1,320 feet from north and 660 feet from west lines of section 10, block B-6, psl survey and nine miles east of Kermit.

It is 1/2 mile southeast of one of the field's 10 wells and separated by a 6,675-foot dry hole.

PECOS OFFSET

Zinke & Philpy, Inc., staked a northwest offset to its No. 1 Grant-State, recently completed discovery well of the Di-Mar (Devonian gas) field of Pecos County, 10 miles southwest of Imperial.

The new project, scheduled on a 5,800-foot contract, is the No. 1 Amoclo-Grant.

The location is 1,800 feet from nothwest and 2,200 feet from northeast lines of section 18, block 10, H&GN survey.

LUBBOCK WELL

Samedan Oil Corp. of Midland No. 1 Doss has been completed 1/2 mile northeast of production in the Hickville (Strawn) field of Lubbock County, six miles north of Idalou.

It finaled for a daily pumping potential of 41 barrels of 41.2-gravity oil and 11 barrels of water per day, through perforations opposite the Strawn from 9,214 to 9,224 feet. The gas-oil ratio is 732-1.

The pay zone was acidized with 4,000 gallons.

Total depth is 9,410 feet and 4.5-inch casing is cemented on bottom.

Location is 660 feet from north and west lines of tract 20, section 32, block H, Brown County School Land survey.

WARD PROJECTS

American Trading and Production Co. announced locations for a pair of tests in the Scott (Delaware oil) pool of Ward County, four miles south of Barstow.

The No. 2 F. H. Scott is one location southwest of production and 7,260 feet from northeast and 660 feet from northwest lines of section 33, block 33, H&TC survey.

The No. 3 F. H. Scott is one location southeast of production and 5,940 feet from northeast and 660 feet from southeast lines of section 33, block 33, H&TC survey.

Each of the tests will be drilled to 9,000 feet.

COTTLE WELL

A new gas well, the second, has been completed in the Stesscott (Atoka gas) pool of Cottle County.

It is Gus Edward of Abilene No. 1 G. R. Tippen, one mile northeast of the other producer.

It completed for a calculated absolute oen flow potential of 10 million cubic feet of gas per day, through perforations from 6,176 to 6,226 feet.

Total depth is 6,307 feet and 4.5-inch casing is cemented at 6,305 feet.

The well is 660 feet from south and west lines of section 111, H&GN survey and two miles southwest of Chalk.

AMOCO PROJECT

Amoco Production Co. No. 1-3 Anderson Clommunitized is a new sproject in the Anderson Ranch (Morrow gas) pool of Lea County, six miles north of Maljamar.

Slated for a 12,300-foot bottom, it is 1,830 feet from south and 1,980 feet from east lines of section 3-16s-32e. Ground elevation is 4,329 feet.

DERCA AREA

Durham, Inc., of Midland No. 1 Elkan has been staked in the Derca (Pennsylvanian) pool of Lea County, 21 miles southeast of Caprock.

The project is to drill to 10,600 feet.

Location is 2,100 feet from north and 1,980 feet from west lines of section 34-13s-34e.

NOLAN WILDCAT

Wintershall Oil & Gas Co. of Houston No. 1 Mary F. Cook is a new 7,100-foot wildcat in Nolan County, one mile southeast of Maryneal.

Location is 2,050 feet from north and east lines of section 159, block 1-A, H&TC survey and 7/8 mile southeast of a 7,164-foot dry hole.

The site also is one and three-eighths miles north of the Group, West (Strawn lime) field.

The location also is two miles southeast of the depleted Nenia Lucia, East (Mississippian) field which produced at 7,092 feet.

The dry hole is Skelly No. 1 Adams, abandoned in 1959 in the Ellenburger which was topped at 7,018 feet on elevation of 2,575 feet.

FISHER EXPLORER

John W. Barbee of Abilene No. 1 T. O. Upshaw will be dug as a 6,950-foot Ellenburger wildcat in the north edge of the depleted Bennett multipay pool of Fisher County, four miles southwest of Rotan.

Operator will spud 467 feet from south and 660 feet from east lines of section 50, block 2, H&TC survey.

The Bennett field Ellenburger production was from 6,695 feet. The Saddle Creek produced at 3,865 feet.

RRC wants to ease 'booms'

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The railroad commission asked Gov. Bill Clements on Tuesday to authorize the commission to administer a new federal law to ease possible "boom town" effects of coal and uranium mining.

The law provides federal financial assistance to communities chosen by the governor to receive the aid.

Texas' three railroad commissioners said in a letter to Clements:

"Areas which are experiencing or will experience, in the next three years, housing shortages, overcrowding of current housing, and 8 percent or more rise in mining relamployment or an inadequacy of available public services may receive grants to plan for the increased growth and housing that will be needed."

Money also would be available for constructing housing.

Congress has authorized the expenditure of $180 million this year and next.

Sutton well completes

William Perlman of Houston No. 3-54 George Brockman has been completed in the Sawyer (Canyon gas) pool of Sutton County for a calculated absolute open flow potential of 1,420,000 cubic feet of gas per day.

It finaled from open hole natural, from 2,790 to 2,829 feet.

Location is 1,882 feet from north and 1,546 feet from west lines of section 54, block 7, TW&NG survey.

The wellsite is 24 miles southeast of Sonora and one and five-eighths mile north of production in the southeast side of the pool.

Government has hope shortage won't come

By ROBERT C. TOTH
The Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — The government held out hope Tuesday that American drivers can avoid a gasoline shortages this summer if President Carter's plan to cut both U.S. imports and consumption is implemented quickly — and there are no new disruptions in the Middle East.

But Department of Energy officials nonetheless urged Congress to give them power to close gas stations on weekends and order fuel-saving thermostat settings — 65 degrees in winter, 80 degrees in summer — in public, commercial and industrial buildings.

ENERGY
OIL & GAS

They made the statement in issuing the department's "response plan" for coping with oil shortages following the Iranian revolution. Officials said success of the plan depends not only on U.S. actions but on two international factors as well:

—"Iran must be rock-steady" in continuing to export the 2.5 million to 3 million barrels-a-day achieved since it resumed production. Further political unrest and technical problems, such as pump failures, could disrupt the flow, he warned.

—Saudia Arabia and other oil-exporting state in the Middle East and South America must maintain their output at current levels, which are higher than projected last year as they sought to make up for the Iranian cut-off.

To present all possible sides of the oil picture, one official at the briefing presented the most pessimistic outlook "in the hope of being wrong." If things go bad, he said "we could remember this as a year in which we were all very uncomfortable."

For one thing, he notes, there are "very, very ominous signs" of gasoline shortages starting about June 1 because the nation "is on an apparent gas consumption binge." So far this year consumption is running 5 percent ahead of the same period last year, and reserve gas stocks are "very sharply downward," he said.

If voluntary restraints on gasoline consumption do not work, the Department of Energy wants authority to order gas stations closed on weekends after June 1.

Presient Carter, in his April 5 speech laying out voluntary measures to conserve fuel, said individual states would be asked to set reduction goals for ther citizens and local governments.

A Department of Eergy official said Tuesday that federal authorities here have not yet begun negotiations with any governors on specific state targets.

One official raised the possibility Tuesday that a heating oil shortage could cause "real hardship" next winter unless stocks, now in the "critical zone," are rebuilt to safe levels by Oct. 1.

Refineries will be asked to set targets for rebuilding these stocks and if they refuse, the Department of Energy will require them to do so, the official said.

Of the nation's 19.5-million-barrel-a-day oil consumption, about 9.5 million barrels are imported. The Carter administration hopes to cut these imports by 1 million barrels, which would represent 5 percent of total usage but about 10 percent of imports.

About one-third of the cutback has already been achieved, officials said Tuesday, and they expressed confidence that the full goal can be realized under the "response plans" call for factories to switch from oil to natural gas as their fuel, plus restraint by the public in auto and home use.

Crockett well completes

CROCKETT WELL

Methane Gas Co. No. 3-F Maggie Moore has been finaled in the Adams-Baggett Ranch (Canyon sand gas) field of Crockett County, 30 miles south of Ozona.

It completed for a calculated, absolute open flow potential of 625,000 cubic feet of dry gas per day, through perforations from 4,993 to 5,168 feet after 6,000 gallons of acid and 6,852-gallons of fracture solution.

Total depth is 5,314 feet and 4.5-inch casing is cemented on bottom.

SPRABERRY

John L. Cox of Midland No. 1 J.T.L. is a new well in the Upton County Spraberry Trend Area pool.

On 24-hour potential test it pumped 135 barrels of 38-gravity oil and 80 barrels of water, through perforations from 7,023 to 8,420 feet after a 130,000-gallon fracture job. The gas-oil ratio is 680-1.

Wellsite is 1,320 feet from noth and east lines of section 56, block Y, TCRR survey.

Gaugers hunted

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal investigators are prowling New York City and Los Angeles in search of price-gouging service stations. And the Energy Department says they'll be moving on to other cities soon.

The "sweep" teams are part of the Energy Department's attempt to crack down on service stations taking advantage of rising gasoline prices by inflating their pump charges above allowable levels.

The Energy Department said Tuesday that the 15-member teams now in New York and Los Angeles consist of investigators and auditors.

They are loofor stations that sell gasoline above federal gasoline price ceilings, which are based on prices charged as of May 15, 1975, and which take into account rises in wholesale prices and overhead costs.

The Energy Department says it has issued 106 notices of probable violation to service stations and 41 of those have agreed to roll back prices. It said one station in midtown New York is under investigation for selling unleaded premium gasoline for 99.9 cents a gallon.

Violation of the price guidelines could result in a maximum fine of $2,500 a day per violation. But a "willful" violation could cost an operator up to $10,000 a day and up to 1 year in prison.

Allowable increases

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Texas' average calendar day oil allowable is 3,512,104 barrels, an increase of 9,480 barrels a day from April 1, the railroad commission reported Tuesday.

The commission said the legal rate of flow was measured from 183,588 wells, 837 more wells than were on allowable schedules on April 1.

Just a few sharp trucks are pictured among the many available at Nickel-Williams Chrysler Plymouth Dodge during their 3rd annual $1 million truck sale. Only $300 down (cash or trade) plus tax, title and license.

$1 million truck sale now at Nickel-Williams

TRUCKS, TRUCKS, TRUCKS! $1,000,000 WORTH at Nickel-Williams Chrysler Plymouth Dodge, 3705 West Wall. The sharp, the pretty, the eye-catching, the small, the powerful. All types and sizes, styles and colors are here, and if you have been wanting a new truck, now is your chance to have just what you'd like, for whatever purpose you can name.

L. A. Iacocca, president of Chrysler Corporation, has just announced a 5 year, 50,000 mile contract which covers all major power train components for the duration of the plan. It may be purchased, just as any other option, and will offer the customer the longest term protection plan by any domestic manufacturer.

SPECIAL! Effective April 3, we are offering this plan at no extra charge on all Sportsman wagons, vans, and domestic two-drive pickups. This offer will be in effect until May 10 and represents significant savings to purchasers of these vehicles.

Nickel-Williams has all kinds of Dodge trucks in stock at this time for the "One Million Dollar Truck Sale", crew cabs, conventional trucks, one-ton dual wheels, 4-wheel drives, club cabs, Sportsman wagons, small D-50 trucks.

$1 million truck sale, free 5 year-50,000 warranty. This is a fantastic time to visit Nickel-Williams and pick up your new truck or van for only $300 down, cash or trade, plus tax, title, and license. Come in right away and see if you can resist this great selection!

Government fluorocarbon program ends, aerosol product ban begins

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sunday marked the end of a two-year government program to phase out the use of fluorocarbons and the beginning of a ban on virtually all aerosol products containing the substance which scientists say threatens the earth's protective ozone shield.

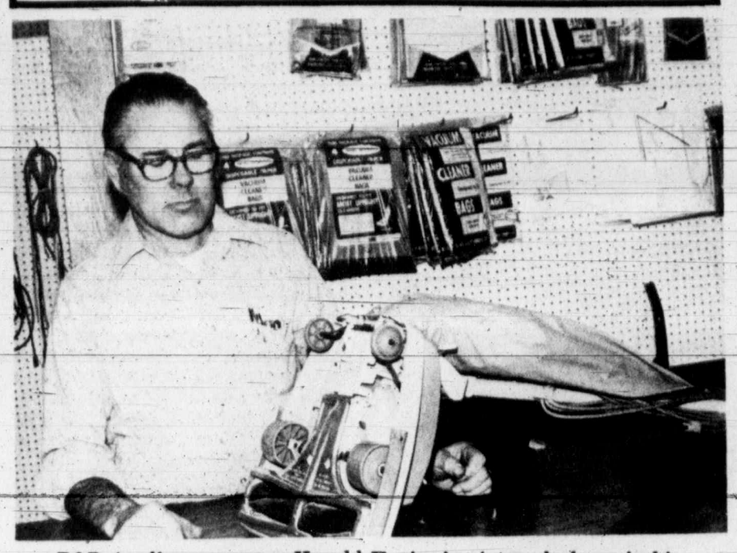

The fluorocarbon propellants were once used to pressurize more than a billion containers of consumer products each year, including deodorants, anti-perspirants, hair sprays, colognes, insecticides, spray paints, air fresheners, furniture polishes and household cleaners.

But products containing fluorocarbons have largely disappeared from store shelves in recent years as the environmental hazard became an increasing concern.

The final step in the two-year program — a ban on interstate shipments of almost all aerosols using fluorocarbon propellant — follows earlier steps to halt manufacture of non-essential aerosols using the chemical.

However, a few products classified as essential, and some that slipped through a loophole in the federal regulations, may remain on the market.

The products classified as essential include contraceptive vaginal foams, inhalers used by asthma sufferers, cytology fixatives used in cancer diagnosis, a mine safety warning device.

B&B Appliance gives expert one-day service

Have the Spring dust storms of West Texas put a strain on your vacuum cleaner? Don't tolerate the inconvenience of a broken vacuum. Go to B&B Appliance, 1009 N. Midkiff, and let the owner, Harold Ervin, solve your problem.

Ervin has been repairing cleaners in Midland since 1953. Although he specializes in Hoover and Kirby, he can repair any make of vacuum.

One day service - in today and out tomorrow - is stressed at B&B Appliance. Another much desired feature is that when you leave your appliance, Ervin will tell you exactly how much the repair job will cost.

"Our only business is service," says Mr. Ervin. "We do not sell vacuum cleaners."

"You can also have your coffee makers, blow dryers, and mixers repaired at B&B.

To get that rarity today, good honest service for a good honest price, see B&B today.

Turtle might slow pipeline

WHITEHOUSE, N.J. (AP) — A rare four-inch turtle who likes his privacy may be jeopardizing a $5 million pipeline project, New Jersey officials say.

Like saving the snail darter in Tennessee, guaranteeing safety for the bog turtle could force a change in plans for the pipeline project.

Lawyers offer free visit

BISMARCK, N.D. (AP) — The state bar association wants every North Dakotan to see one of its attorneys on May 1. The bill is on them.

As a part of Law Day USA, so proclaimed by Gov. Arthur Link, state lawyers have agreed to offer a free 15- or 20-minute consultation.

Westinghouse seeks inspection of nuke plants

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Westinghouse Electric Corp. has called for precautionary examinations of a cooling system component common to eight U.S. nuclear power plants it has designed.

One such component, a fist-sized part of a Wisconsin reactors' circuit-breaker system, developed hairlinecracks that were discovered in a recent inspection, said Westinghouse, the nation's No. 1 producer of commercial reactors.

"The situation could conceivably affect the startup of some safeguard motors. However, periodic testing of the system has not shown any such problems," Westinghouse spokesman Jim Daley said Friday.

"We're talking about motors that power safety pumps that are involved in backup (core) cooling systems," he said.

Cracks in the component, called an end cap, were detected at the Westinghouse-designed Point Beach II reactor in Two Creeks, Wis., Daley said.

Daley said the Nuclear Regulatory Commission was advised of the problem and the eight utilities were instructed to review the plants and replace the end caps, if necessary."

Westinghouse said the components can be replaced without interrupting service.

Soviets trying private enterprise

By SETH MYDANS

MOSCOW (AP) — Encouraged by the success of small-scale private agriculture, the Soviet government is cautiously allowing small private enterprises to provide some much-needed consumer services.

The modest compromise with communist ideals is one attempt to satisfy consumers, who are complaining increasingly about the inconveniences of their lives.

Like the "private plots" which provide nearly a third of the country's fruits and vegetables on just 4 percent of its arable land, the cottage industries are seen as a temporary, stopgap measure.

But they are a measure that is sorely needed.

Tangled in a complicated planned economy, consumer services are one of the most striking deficiencies in everday Soviet life, one of the main concerns of the average Russian household.

People complain that they cannot buy many of the little-noticed items that add up to a comfortable standard of living — eyeglass frames, spools of thread, cotton socks, nails, eyeshadow — and that they cannot get their watches, shoes, apartments or cars repaired.

According to the 1970 census, the last from which statistics are available, 0.1 percent of all gainfully employed people, or about 120,000, worked for themselves and not for the state.

These included some dentists, artists, music and language teachers, auto mechanics, home-appliances repairmen and the like.

The statistics did not include those engaged unofficially in the multimillion ruble trade on the black market that makes up the bulk of private enterprise in the Soviet Union.

This illegal traffic in manufacturing and sales ranges from young speculators in jeans and rock records to a thriving trade in hard-to-find books to moonlighting construction brigades to huge illegal open marketplaces where everything from cosmetics to carburators is sold.

Newspapers are full of stories of the arrests of private speculators of this sort, many of whom are reported to be millionaires.

In order to open a home enterprise legally, a tailor or craftsman must obtain a government license, pay a small tax, and avoid illegal "speculation," or big money-making, a crime with penalties ranging up to death.

New wording in the year-old fourth Soviet constitution opens the door to expanded trade by small private enterprises — though analysts here emphasize that they do not see this as a modification of Soviet ideology, but as a stopgap measure.

Article 17 of the new constitution states that "in conformity with the law, individual labor activity is permitted in the areas of handicrafts, agriculture and everyday repairs and services for the population, as well as other forms of labor activity on the part of citizens and members of their families."

The phrase "other forms of labor activity" is seen as an opening to further expansion of legal private enterprise if it works out well.

So far, though, the numbers are small, and most of the cottage industry has been confined to rural areas, the only places where it was permitted before the new wording in the constitution.

Article 17 was adopted following a buildup of government decrees allowing small individual enterprises, and after some limited public discussion in the newspapers.

According to a doctor writing from Novgorod: "Experienc shows that minor, particularly urgent repairs to footwear, clothing, household appliances and certain machines are in some cases carried out more efficiently, more quickly and (if taxes are reasonable) more cheaply by skilled craftsmen at home."

A Communist Party lecturer wrote in opposition that encouragement of such private enterprises could harm "the education of the new man of high communist morality."

This opposition reflects the view of those who oppose the private agricultural plots that have proved so successful over the years.

The program has been slowed by conservative party members who also argue that the route to communism must not take detours into private enterprise no matter how much more efficient they may be.

Despite this, President Leonid I. Brezhnev himself has repeatedly encouraged private agricultural work, and that program is now being expanded, with financial enticements to city dwellers to till their own plots and raise their own vegetables, chickens, bees and rabbits.

Ruff at right time to insure contract

By ALFRED SHEINWOLD

When your partner makes a hasty play as declarer, get up from the table and get yourself a drink of water. You'll probably need the drink when you see the outcome.

Today's South took the ace of diamonds and promptly ruffed a diamond in dummy. North promptly got up from the table.

South cashed the top clubs, ruffed a club and took the top trumps. A few minutes later declarer gave up a trump and a spade.

STARTS CLUBS

South should take the ace of diamonds, lead a club to the king and ruff a club. The king and ace of hearts come next, after which South discards a spade on the ace of clubs and ruffs another club.

Only now is it right to ruff the diamond. This puts South in dummy with the last club established. South leads the club and discards his last low spade. East can ruff then or take his trump later, but he cannot defeat the slam.

DAILY QUESTION

Partner opens with one spade, and the next player passes. You hold: S-Q105; H-10; D-J10962; C-Q1083. What do you say?

ANSWER: Bid two spades. You have five points in high cards and three points for the singleton, easily enough for a raise.

Bulldogs corral Big Spring Steers

By RICHARD VINCENT
Sports Writer

Midland High was strictly all business Tuesday afternoon.

The Bulldogs, stymied much of the day by the pitching of David Manley, broke things open with two runs in the sixth inning and went on to dump the Big Spring Steers, 3-1, in a District 5-4A baseball game at Memorial Stadium diamond.

The Purple Pack, now 2-0 in district and 13-5 overall, got some fine pitching themselves as sophomore Mark Hewitt scattered six hits en route to his fourth success in five outings.

Manley, who had a no hitter through 3 2/3 frames, allowed just five hits as he dropped to 1-2 for the campaign. The Steers fall to 0-2 in district and 8-14 for the year.

Both teams were sharp defensively. Midland High had the only error of the game, which came on a run-scoring bad throw from centerfielder Tracy Gann.

But the Purple Pack more than made up for that miscue by picking off two Steer runners and gunning down two others trying to steal. Catcher Tommy Munoz and second baseman Coyet Copeland hooked up to kill the two steals while Munoz and shortstop Jimmy Zachry combined for one of the pickoffs.

Big Spring grabbed their only run in the opening stanza. With two down, Tony Rubio looped a single to shallow center. On Manley's base hit to center, Rubio raced for third and tallied when Gann, who tried to throw him out, rifled the ball into the bleachers along the third base line.

The Steers kept in the contest with excellent fielding until Zachry shook up Manley with a towering solo homer over the leftfield fence in the fourth that evened the score at one apiece. For the hard-hitting senior, it was his seventh circuit clout of the season and raised his runs-batted-in total to 29.

Bulldog Coach Larry Peel appeared to give his team a quick pep talk just before the sixth began, and it apparently worked.

With one down, Munoz singled with a short pop to right and the Pack was off and running. Zachry then drew an intentional walk before Gann, who had a two for three day, smacked a single through the gap that pinch runner Mike Young, who was in for Munoz, rode home.

Gann was forced at second on Sam Driskill's fielders choice for out number two but the Bulldogs weren't quite finished. Pinch hitter Archie Booth slashed a base hit between second and third that chased Zachry in from third and made the score 3-1.

Hewitt, who was near perfect in the third, fourth, fifth and sixth, was backed up in the seventh with a slick twin killing. Manley started the inning by legging out an infield hit. Next, Ricky Myers whiffed for the third time before Ysa Rubio grounded to Copeland, who flipped to Zachry for one at second. Zachry completed the double play with a strike to first.

Midland High travels to Abilene Saturday for a district battle with Abilene High.

Love match for Chris

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — Happy newlyweds Chris Evert and John Lloyd, pelted with rice bought by police and toasted at a well-guarded but lavish wedding banquet, begin an 8- or 9-day honeymoon today at an undisclosed spot in Europe.

The tennis stars promised the Rev. Vincent Kelly, the bride's high school principal, they would "love, honor and obey ... till death do us part" Tuesday evening at St. Anthony's Catholic Church here before 100 carefully-chosen close friends and relatives.

The vows were traditional, but Evert chose popular organ and guitar music to accompany them. A rendition of the tearjerker "Sunrise, Sunset" from "Fiddler on the Roof" evoked sobs just from bridesmaid Ana Leaird.

Everything went smoothly until the guests, waiting outside as the wedding party posed for pictures, asked for rice. A squad car was dispatched and minutes later a patrolman passed out handfuls from the five bags he'd just bought.

The appearance of Fort Lauderdale's favorite daughter and Lloyd brought cheers from some 500 persons straining police guardrails. One couple held up a sign calling the newlyweds "a perfect set."

The bride wore an empire-waisted, white satin and Chantilly lace princess gown with a three-yard train and matching veil held by a seed pearl headpiece. It was fashioned by Ted Tinling, a prominent tennis dress designer, and cost $6,000.

Evert carried mauve roses and baby's breath to match the dresses of sisters Jeanne, her maid of honor, and Clare, the flower girl, and bridesmaids Leaird, Laurie Fleming Rowley and Stephanie Tolleson.

American and British flags — symbolizing the bride's and groom's nationalities — flanked the door to a banquet room at the locked and guarded Largo Mar Beach Club.

Tennis luminaries such as Billie Jean King, Ilie Nastase, Vitas Gerulaitis and Brian Gottfried were on the guest list, but the only major touring pros who showed up were Martina Navratilova and Rosie Casals.

Evert's white limousine pulled up to the church five minutes after the ceremony's scheduled 7:30 p.m. start. The nervous but radiant bride waved and followed her mother and bridesmaids inside.

The 25-minute ceremony capped a nine-month romance that began when a friend introduced Evert, the No. 1 woman player, and Lloyd, a lesser-ranked British Davis Cup player, at Wimbledon, the scene of some of the bride's greatest triumphs.

They were engaged on Evert's 24th birthday, Dec. 21. Her soft-spoken, reserved groom, also 24, is a far cry from tempestuous tennis star Jimmy Connors, to whom Evert was once engaged.

Chris and new hubby leave church after nuptials.

Midland High's Tracy Gann makes contact with the ball during Tuesday afternoon's District 5-4A game with Big Spring at Memorial Stadium diamond. Real Lee Rebels stand up in 5-4A

SAN ANGELO — Perhaps Midland Lee is finally starting to play the way everybody thought they would.

At the very least, the Rebels' 7-2 District 5-4A baseball victory here Tuesday afternoon over San Angelo shows that Lee is definitely a second half contender.

The triumph, Lee's third in succession, leaves the Rebels with a 2-0 district ledger and a 16-9 overall worksheet. Meanwhile, San Angelo fell into an even deeper hole with 0-2 and 4-11 readings, respectively.

Terry Willis continued to work his magic for the Rebels. The senior righthander went the distance, allowing just five hits as he raised his record to 7-2.

And Willis also kept up his torrid hitting. He ripped loser Moses Reyes for three hits in three trips to the plate, scored three times and knocked in three runs.

Also having a field day for Lee were Clay Calhoun, B. B. Lankford and Tyler Alcorn, who each collected a pair of hits.

For those who can't, or don't want to remember, San Angelo humiliated Lee 1-0 on Reyes' two-hitter during the first half.

But Lee certainly got revenge yesterday. The Rebels scored five runs over the first three innings and never looked back, even adding two insurance runs in the fifth.

In the first, Steve Pitts walked and Calhoun delivered a single. Willis then blasted a triple to left, scoring both runners. With two down, Alcorn walked and later got caught in a rundown between first and second. Before Alcorn was tagged out, Willis hustled home, giving the Rebels all they would need.

However, Lee kept pounding. They put one run up in the second when Lankford singled, stole second and then came in when Pitts reached on an error by third baseman David Martinez.

Then in the third, Willis doubled and Alcorn singled. Willis tallied on a passed ball by Bobcat catcher Philip White.

The Rebels got a piece of the rock in the fifth when Calhoun opened with a base hit, stole second and rode home on Willis' single. Willis, who had gone to second on a throwing error, crossed the plate when Alcorn hit safely.

San Angelo scored in the seventh after Brent Miller walked, went to third on Martinez' single and came in when Tod Fields reached on an error by second baseman David Wood. Martinez tallied the last run on White's single.

Lee faces a tremendous challenge Saturday afternoon when the Abilene Cooper Cougars come to the Tall City.

Gal golfers try luck

Midland High, winner of the District 5-4A girls title, and runnerup Midland Lee, will try their luck at the Region I AAAA golf tournament starting Thursday at the Meadowbrook Municipal Golf Course in Lubbock.

Joining the Bulldogs and Rebels as top teams in the field will be Amarillo High, the defending region champion.

Coach Mary Baird's Bulldogs narrowly copped the district crown with an 1,114 total, two shots better than Coach Paula Ferguson's Rebels, who staged a last round charge and overtook Big Spring to earn the other region berth.

Both coaches said their respective squads should be competitive at the meet. Baird said her team's chances are "as good as anyone else's."

Ferguson said, "I think we have a pretty good chance. Amarillo High is the defending champion and they're pretty strong. But I think we have a good shot at second. It's just a matter of getting it all together and playing well."

Representing Midland High will be Nancy Spaugh, third in the district individual medal race, Ann Coombes, Kim Hopkins, Patty O'Neill and Laurie Blackwell.

Playing for the Rebels will be Michele Marburger, second for the individual medal, Penny Sutcliffe, Brenda Heath, Christi Orwig and Roxi Barrett. Heath is the only holdover from last year's second place region and third place state team, said Ferguson.

Also from District 5-4A will be Odessa Permian's Jackie Daiss, who won the individual medal with a 230 total following an outstanding 70 in the last round. The medal was her third in as many years.

Players will begin the first 18 hole round at 9 a.m. with Friday's final 18 set to start at the same time.

The top two teams and top two individuals at region advance to the state tournament, which will be the first week of May in Austin.

Gold Sox beat Cubs, 9-6

AMARILLO—Amarillo's Gold Sox came up with six runs in the last of the fifth to pull out a 9-6 victory over the Midland Cubs in a rain-abbreviated Texas League game here Tuesday night. Amarillo moved into a tie for first place with Midland in the West as a result of the victory.

The Sox' winning rally began when starter Henry Mack walked the first two batters. Mike Allen relieved and walked another batter to load the bases. Then Earle Battey was safe on Mike Turgeon's error at third as two runs scored. Joe Hicks then doubled home two more and Steve Smith singled home the final run.

Rain, which began falling in a steady drizzle as early as the second inning, forced a halt to play in the sixth inning. At the time, Amarillo had built its lead up to 14-6.

Midland jumped to a 4-0 first inning lead when Jared Martin walked, Jesus Alfaro singled and then an error and wild pitch enabled Martin to score. Eric Grandy then delivered a run-scoring triple and scored on Carlos Lezcano's single and Turgeon's hit produced the final run of the frame.

Gary Ashby's single, a couple of walks and infield out gave Amarillo a run in the second and Brad Shames singled, two walks, Tim Flannery's single and Tim Derryerry's run-scoring grounder accounted for two more runs in the fourth.

Midland took a 6-3 lead in the fifth when Martin doubled, Alfaro singled and Martin scored on an error. Alfaro moved to third on a wild pitch and scored on Grandy's grounder.

The Cubs and Sox resume their six-game series at 7:30 p.m. today with either Jeff Albert or Jack Ledbetter scheduled to start for Midland.

Mets beat Caps, 5-4

By The Associated Press

Jody Davis slammed two homers as the Jackson Mets opened their Texas League baseball season with a 5-4 victory over Shreveport.

In other Texas League action, Amarillo beat Midland, 9-6, in a game shortened to five innings because of rain and Tulsa edged Arkansas, 2-1. El Paso's scheduled game at San Antonio was postponed because of rain.

It was the first game of the season for both Jackson and Tulsa. The two teams had their season opening series delayed by flooding in the Jackson area.

Davis had a three-run homer in the third inning Tuesday night and then capped off his offensive outburst with a two-rn homer in the eighth inning. Jackson trailed, 4-3, at the time of the second homer.

Shreveport's Steve Wilkins had his fifth homer of the season in the sixth inning with two men on base.

Spurs take 2-0 lead over 76ers

By BARRY WILNER
AP Sports Writer

The Atlanta Hawks and Philadelphia 76ers are heading home, one team having accomplished its short-range goal and the other hoping that home cooking will get it on the right track.

The surprising Hawks evened their best-of-seven Eastern Conference semifinal series Tuesday with a 107-99 victory over the defending National Basketball Association champion Washington Bullets. The series resumes Friday in Atlanta, where the Hawks have won 17 straight games.

The Sixers, reeling under a two-game deficit in their series with San Antonio after a 121-120 loss in Texas Tuesday, return to Philadelphia wondering if they can stop George Gervin.

The Western Conference semifinals got underway with Seattle besting Los Angeles 112-101 and Phoenix defeating Kansas City 102-99. The Sonics entertaining the Lakers again tonight while the Suns host the Kings again Friday.

"This victory gives us control of the series," said Hawks center Tree Rollins, who was scoreless in Atlanta's opening loss to the Bullets but had 13 points in Game 2. "If we win in Atlanta, we take the series."

"Remember, we have the best winning record in the league on the road," said Bullets forward Bobby Dandridge, a 36-point scorer Tuesday. "I wouldn't be surprised if we went down there and won two games.

"We still haven't played the way we did in the regular season when we were at our peak. That should come in Atlanta. Then they'll see the real Washington Bullets."

Spurs 121, 76ers 120

Philadelphia Coach Billy Cunningham will have to find someone to stop Gervin, the NBA scoring leader the past two seasons, if the Sixers hope to get past the Spurs, a team that hasn't won a playoff round since it was the Dallas Chaparrals of the American Basketball Association in 1968.

With 6-foot-6 All-Star guard Doug Collins injured, Cunningham has tried forwards Bobby Jones and Joe Bryant and guards Henry Bibby and Al Skinner on Gervin, the "Iceman." But the 6-7 Gervin has scored 31 and 29 points in the two Spur victories.

"For me to guard 'Ice,' we'll have to get more action on defense," said Jones.

Sonics 112, Lakers 101

Seattle overcame a 17-pount first-half deficit, took the lead for good with 5:46 left in the third period and held off Los Angeles. Gus Williams was high for the Sonics with 27 points and Dennis Johnson had 26. Kareem Abdul-Jabbar paced the Lakers with 25.

"I still think the key is how well we play Gus Williams," said Lakers Coach Jerry West. "We didn't do good tonight. I thought we played well but our inability to stop Williams and Dennis Johnson hurt us."

Suns 102, Kings 99

The Midwest Division champion Kings didn't look a bit rusty in the first half after their week off, assuming a 58-49 halftime advantage. But the Suns pecked away and took the lead for good with 1:44 left in the third period.

Paul Westphal had 25 points and Walter Davis 24 for Phoenix. The Kings were led by Otis Birdsong's 20 points.

Rod stirs 'em, Ryan silences 'em

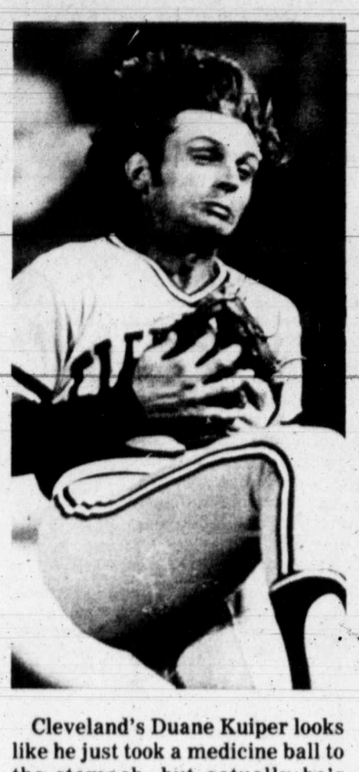

By BRUCE LOWITT
AP Sports Writer

The Minnesota Twins fans gave Rod Carew a standing ovation. Thanks to Nolan Ryan, it was the only time they cheered all day.

Carew, the seven-time American League batting champion who was traded by the Twins to California last winter, returned Tuesday to Minnesota for the first time.

He was welcomed with open arms by the 37,270 paying customers attending the Twins' home opener.

Then Ryan took the mound and silenced the Twins on four hits, striking out 10 batters en route to his 38th career shutout, a 6-0 victory by the Angels.

Cleveland's Duane Kuiper looks like he just took a medicine ball to the stomach, but actually he's making a basket catch of a pop up. (AP Laserphoto)

"I GUESS the standing ovation didn't surprise me," said Carew, who felt Twins owner Calvin Griffith never paid him what he was worth. Carew forced the trade by saying he would play out his option.

"Most of the fans knew that I gave them 12 good years here in Minnesota. Calvin Griffith is out of my thoughts now. I'm just swinging to beat his club, not him. If he didn't want to keep me that's his business. I don't think about it anymore."

Carew, who made about $150,000 last year — far below the going rate for superstars — is now in the $750,000-a-year range with California.

He batted four times and got one single, in the eighth inning. But his bat — he's hitting at a .357 clip — wasn't needed. By the end of the seventh inning California had all its runs.

RYAN OUTPITCHED the Twins' Dave Goltz with a three-hit, 10-strikeout performance last week for his other victory this season. He got the only run he needed Tuesday in the first inning when Rick Miller opened the game with a triple off Goltz and scored on Don Baylor's single. California made it a runaway in the fifth inning with four more runs, the first of them on Willie Aikens' homer.

Meanwhile, Ryan was mowing down the Twins. When he was finished he had fanned at least 10 batters in a game for the 120th time in his 12-year career.

"I wasn't aware of the strikeouts," Ryan said. "I was more concerned with trying to shut them out today. I just knew my earned-run average was astronomical (in his first start, Ryan was chased by Seattle during a 14-6 Mariner romp) and I'm trying to get it back to respectability (it's now 4.19)."

A's 6, Mariners 5

Oakland attracted a crowd — crowd? — of 653 paying customers, barely half their previous mark for dismal attendance of 1,252 fans.

And the way the A's and Mariners played, perhaps they'd have preferred to keep the game a total secret. The teams committed an even dozen errors, nine by Seattle. The A's squeezed out the victory on Jim Essian's two-out, bases-loaded single in the ninth inning.

Red Sox 6, Brewers 5

Fred Lynn is supposed to hit more for average than for distance — but right now he's miles ahead of where he expected to be.

"I can't keep this up. Nobody can," he said after hitting his sixth home run of the young season, tops in the majors. The ninth-inning shot came after Jerry Remy coaxed a leadoff walk from former Boston teammate Reggie Cleveland. It vaulted the Red Sox to their victory and cut the Brewers' East Division lead to one-half game over the Red Sox and Yankees.

Yanks 5, Orioles 1

The Yanks' Ron Guidry found the smoke that had deserted him in his first two starts, checked the Orioles on three hits and fanned 10 Baltimore batters en route to his first victory.

"I was throwing hard," he acknowledged. "I wasn't trying to, but I was ... Mentally this game is going to help me. I've got to where I don't have to worry about pacing myself to go nine."

Reggie Jackson's leadoff homer in the seventh broke a 1-1 tie and New York added three runs in the eighth, two on Roy White's double.

Rangers 6, Indians 2

Buddy Bell, never a big RBI man with Cleveland, burned his former teammates with three RBI for Texas, leading the Rangers to their seventh victory in eight games. It was also their 13th in a row over the Indians, a streak that started 366 days ago.

Tigers 6, Royals 3

Steve Kemp's seventh-inning single off Al Hrabosky broke a 3-3 tie, then Milt May made the Mad Hungarian madder with a two-run double to lead the Tigers past Kansas City. The Royals played the game under protest over an interference call that temporarily took a run away from them in the top of the seventh.

White Sox 6, Blue Jays 1

Wayne Nordhagen drove in a pair of runs while Francisco Barrios and Mike Proly teamed on a three-hitter in Chicago's victory over Toronto.

Barrios retired 14 batters in a row before John Mayberry led off the seventh with a double. Proly then took over, retired the side and held Toronto hitless the rest of the way.

MJTA to hold Junior event

The Midland Junior Tennis Association will hold a tournament for boys and girls, ages 15 and under, April 28-29 at the Lee High courts. Action April 28 begins at 9 a.m.

Entry deadline is on or before April 24. Entries may be made by calling Yvonne Garton at 683-1529. Balls and trophies will be provided.

The tournament is made possible by the Midland Mixed Doubles Tournament, which is annually sponsored by the Midland National Bank.

Jaycees hold ring meet

Hard hitting amateur boxing will make its 1979 season debut in Midland Friday and Saturday at the Midland County Exhibit Building on East Highway 80.

The Midland Jaycee Boxing Tournament will feature 120 boxers from nine boxing clubs from New Mexico and Texas. In addition to the battles for individual championships, the nine teams will also be seeking to win the coveted team trophy.

The first bout is scheduled to begin at 7:30 p.m. Friday. A Saturday matinee is set for 1 p.m. Saturday, and the final survivors will square off in the finals Saturday night at 7:30.

Advance tickets are available at Stadium Sports Center, No. 1 Sports Place, Taylor Sporting Goods or any Midland Jaycee. Tickets bought in advance are $5, and will be good for all three events. Tickets at the door are $2 for Friday night's competition and $2 for the Saturday matinee. Saturday's finals will be $3 at the door.

The Midland Boxing Club and the Boys Club of Midland will both have team entries and are co-sponsors with the Midland Jaycees.

A's draw smallest crowd in 12 years

OAKLAND (AP) — The Oakland A's drew the smallest crowd in their 12-year history, 653 fans, for Tuesday night's game against the Seattle Mariners.

The smallest previous A's home crowd was almost double Tuesday night's turnout — 1,252 on Sept. 28, 1971, against Kansas City.

Hooton lets pitching do the talking for him

Los Angeles Times Syndicate

The Dodgers call him "Happy" because he always looks as if he just heard the dam broke, or Paris fell, or Henry Aaron is coming to bat. As Joe Garagiola said of another man, "He's happy but his face don't know it."

At a preseason banquet, the emcee spent five minutes extolling the virtues of the next speaker, calling him a pitcher for the ages, a combination of Walter Johnson and Christy Mathewson, a franchise-saver, a near-Cy Young Award winner, and then he called on Burt Hooton to respond and Burt got up and said, "Thanks." And sat down. Later, Rick Monday observed dryly, "You don't know it, but that was a prepared speech for Hoot."

Burt Hooton would make a secret agent look gabby. You'd have to pull out his fingernails to get him to say "Ouch!" "Hello" is an oration. "How are you?" is the Gettysburg Address. Howard Hughes was downright gregarious compared to him.

IT'S IMPOSSIBLE to tell from looking at him whether he just won 11-0 or got shelled in the first inning. He seems perpetually to have his mind on other things. He looks without interest at the batter up there as if he were a barber and this was just another haircut.

He was so silent when he first came to the Dodgers that some players subconsciously began to address him in a "me Tarzan — you Jane" tone of voice, enunciating the words carefully as though there were a language or hearing barrier. "Do-you-like-it-here-Mr.-Hooton? Is-there-(watch my lips) anything-we-can-do-for-you?"

Hooton was 7-2 with the Dodgers before anyone heard a word, and the betting was that his first one would be "Ma-Ma."

Burt gives the impression it's just a job, that he picks up a ball and glove the way a carpenter would pick up a hammer and nail.

Actually, he can be pardoned for going through life thinking the next card will be a deuce, the next batter is going to hit it out, or the shortstop is going to throw it out, or the umpire isn't going to give him the corners.

HOOTON CAN be forgiven for thinking his next throw will be snake-eyes, he pitches hip-deep in hard luck.

Hooton has pitched in two games in 1979. He went eight innings in one game and left it leading 3-2, only to see his relief wild-pitch the game away, 4-3. In his second game he pitched six innings and left trailing 2-1, only to see his team could not improve it despite an all-time record of six wild pitches by the opposing pitcher.

In his first two starts this year Hooton has drawn Gaylord Perry, the 1978 Cy Young winner, and James Rodney Richard, who throws changeups 90 miles an hour, as opposition.

IN 1977, Burt Hooton was involved in 15 one-run games. He managed to win exactly three. He's not the kind of guy you'd pick to sit next to in a lifeboat, or back his play at Monte Carlo. A little more support like that, and the Dodgers should change his nickname to "Lucky."

Anyway, this Happy Go Lucky is used to bad bounces. Burt was just about the fastest thing to come out of Texas since Bronco Billy, when he left the university there. He struck out 19 batters in his third minor league start to tie a 60-year-old record, and, he struck out 135 in only 12 games

IN ONLY HIS fourth major league start, he pitched a no-hitter for the Cubs. In another game, he struck out 15 Mets. The Cubs' brain trust got together and decided he'd make a perfect relief pitcher. Legend has it, that was the day Burt Hooton stopped smiling. When he was traded to the Dodgers, he was overweight, undermotivated, discouraged, and threw the baseball as if he expected the worst to happen to it.

Now 20 pounds lighter, a 19-game winner last year and second in the Cy Young balloting, isn't it time Happy let his face in on the good news?

"Actually, I'm having a good time out there," Hooton protested the other night. "I really get a kick out of baseball. It's just my way." He comes, he explains, from a long line of non-talkers, people who moved to Texas to get away from all that gabble in Virginia and Washington.

"My wife is always after me to talk to her more," he confesses ruefully. "My father was the same way. I just look at it this way: If there's something to say, I say it. If there's something to get excited about, I get excited. If not, I just shut up and stay calm. In Chicago, I think it hurt me not to be more aggressive. I should have gone to the front office sooner and said, 'Trade me.' It's just that it's not my nature to be noisy."

Hooton is currently engaged in a deadly-silent struggle with the Dodgers front office over a new contract. If he signs one and the Dodgers finally win a World Series, you'll have no trouble picking Happy out of that ticker-tape parade. He'll be the one who looks as if he's the only one who knows that the tape shows the market is crashing.

Pirates just grin and bear it

By JOHN NELSON
AP Sports Writer

Pittsburgh Pirates Manager Chuck Tanner looked like a man grabbing at straws when he singled out 31-year-old right-handed relief pitcher Enrique Romo as the bright spot in a 13-2 loss to Philadelphia.

It was Romo who yielded Garry Maddox's grand slam homer in the Phils' six-run fifth inning Tuesday night.

However, pointed out Tanner, in the next 2 2-3 innings, Romo gave up one hit, struck out five and didn't walk a man.

"They just waxed us," Tanner said, "but these ball games aren't all going to be one or two-run affairs.

"Hopefully, we'll find something in this that will help us in the future," Tanner said, adding that he thought Romo did a "nice job.

"Romo is a good sign. After he gave up the grand slam, he came back, he didn't fall on his face," Tanner said.

Outside of Romo, there wasn't much to cheer about on the Pittsburgh bench. The Phils pasted starter Bert Blyleven, 0-2, for 10 hits and seven runs in the first 2 2-3 innings, and they went on to collect 17 hits in the ball game.

"YOU JUST grin and bear it and take it like a man," Pirates veteran first baseman Willie Stargell said. "I've been on both sides of stuff like that."

Bake McBride homered twice to drive in five runs and Mike Schmidt added a solo shot, his fourth, for the Phils. Steve Carlton, 2-1, went six innings, gave up both of Pittsburgh's runs on Bill Robinson's first-inning homer, and rested the last three innings.

The Phils now have won all three meetings of the two teams this season, and it was Carlton's second victory of the season over Blyleven.

Tanner said Blyleven's problem was simple. "He's a curve ball pitcher, and he couldn't get his curve ball over tonight."

Bowa said the cold weather had a lot to do with Blyleven's troubles.

"It's hard to grip a breaking ball in the cold," Bowa said, "but Blyleven's going to win his games, believe me."

Continuing a trend that has seen attendance at Three Rivers Stadium skid due to cold weather and union sympathy with the umpires' strike, only 7,739 fans showed up in Pittsburgh Tuesday night.

Expos 5, Mets 4

Rodney Scott drilled a single to right field, scoring Dave Cash, and gave Montreal a 12-inning victory over New York. Cash, a pinch hitter, drew a walk off Mets reliever Skip Lockwood and advanced to second on a sacrifice by Andre Dawson, whose seventh-inning homer had tied it 4-4.

Willie Montanez picked up his first homer of the season for the Mets, a two-run shot in the fourth.

Cubs 5, Cards 3

Rookie Scott Thompson, former Midland Cub, singled twice and doubled, driving in two runs, and Dave Kingman clouted a two-run homer that carried the Cubs and left-hander Ken Holtzman to victory. The win was Holtzman's first in the National League since 1971.

Ted Simmons drove in two of St. Louis' runs with his second homer of the season in the fifth. Kingman's homer was his third.

Reds 7, Braves 4

Cincinnati scored all its runs in the first inning, getting two-run hits each from winning pitcher Tom Hume and Dan Driessen. The Reds sent 11 men to the plate in the first inning, eight of them after two were out.

Hume went 7 2-3 innings, surviving a pair of homers by Braves catcher Dale Murphy and a solo shot that Gary Matthews nearly put into the third-level seats in left field at Riverfront Stadium.

"At least the home runs weren't hit with anybody on base," Hume said. "Most of the hits I gave up were high pitches. I have to work harder."

Padres 4, Giants 3

Gene Tenace hit a two-run homer, his first of the season, and Dave Winfield drove in the winning run for the Padres in the eighth with a single.

Rollie Fingers got the victory — his first decision — in relief of Eric Rasmussen. Rasmussen checked the Giants on four hits through five innings before yielding Bill Madlock's two-run homer.

Dodgers 10, Astros 6

Steve Yeager, who was hitless coming into the game, smacked a two-run homer in the eighth inning to break a 6-6 tie and boost the Dodgers over the Astros.

Yeager was one of three Dodgers who homered. Steve Garvey had two home runs and Dusty Baker added a solo shot. Jerry Reuss, 1-0, got the victory in relief of Andy Messersmith, who yielded a three-run homer to Cesar Cedeno in the sixth.

MC women golfers drop to fourth spot

NORMAN, Okla. — The Midland College women's golf team dropped to fourth place in the Sooner Invitational here Tuesday with a 36-hole total of 705.

Oklahoma leads with a 553 while Texas Tech is second with 676. Temple Junior College holds a slim lead over MC with a 694 total.

The tournament ends today with the final 18 holes.

Jamie Gossett paced MC with an 86 Tuesday while Wendy Goodwin posted an 87. Diane Robinson had a 91 while Sheryl Guthrie and Maria Hasch both carded 98.

Post pick as Nancy takes off

ORLANDO, Fla. AP) — Nancy Lopez and Donna Caponi Young are resting this week, but most of the top money winners on the LPGA tour are competing in the Florida Lady Citrus Golf Classic beginning Thursday.

Two-time Winners' Circle champ Sandra Post was given the early favorite's role for the 72-hole event at the Rio Pinar course, which was a men's tour stop for 10 years until the Florida Citrus Open switched across town to Arnold Palmer's Bay Hill this year.

Rio Pinar has pine trees, creeks, bogs and lakes and at 6,200 yards will be playing just a shade shorter than it did for the men.

The men generally turned in winning cards between 15 and 17 under par. The record is 21-under shot by Buddy Allin in 1973.

"As accurate as they are, the ladies ought to get plenty of birdies," says Rio Pinar's new pro Gene Michaels, a PGA tour regular in the 1960s. "Several holes offer good opportunities for birdies and subpar scores shouldn't be too hard for the leaders."

The 10th stop on the women's tour features eight of the 10 top money winners.

NCAA, Irish with egg on chins

By DAN LAUCK
Newsday

NEW YORK — It is all over now. The season has ended. The money is being paid back. The eligibility will be restored. And it seems that everyone just wants to forget that it ever happened, the NCAA because it's the kind of thing that leaves egg on its face, Notre Dame because it doesn't want to antagonize the NCAA.

But what happened to Marc Kelly a month ago, on the eve of the NCAA Mideast Regional tells you something about the NCAA, the encumbrances of its bureaucracy, its rigidity, the pettiness of its rules and what appears to outsiders as a lack of common sense. It illustrates the reason the National Collegiate Athletic Association has become an anathema to many of its own members.

What happened was this:

A story went out over one of the wire services about Kelly, was picked up by the Detroit Free Press and was clipped and mailed to the NCAA's enforcement staff as someone to look into.

Kelly would hardly appear to be someone who would be of interest to the NCAA. He was a walk-on guard at Notre Dame, a freshman from LaCrescenta, Calif., who is 5 feet 9 and wears a corset when he plays to support his back. He played rarely, only when Notre Dame was 25 up or 25 down and the fans were already leaving.

"HERE'S THIS little guy about my size," said Col. John Stephens, an assistant athletic director at Notre Dame, "and they're treating it as if he's Magic Johnson."

What interested the NCAA was that last summer, before Kelly had decided to attend Notre Dame, he was invited to be an extra in the filming of the movie "Fast Break." Jim Harrick, then an assistant at UCLA and now the head coach at Pepperdine, was hired as the technical consultant for the movie and he rounded up a number of high school and junior college kids — all of them friends — who could play the game decently well to get by. Kelly was one of those.

As it turned out, the director picked out Kelly from among them to speak two lines ("Hey, nice shot," and "What's the matter with him?"), thus making him nearly $700 and the object of a lot of friendly razzing by his teammates. Kelly thought that was all there was to it.

NOT QUITE.

Article III, Secion 1, paragraph 3 of the NCAA constitution reads: an individual shall not be eligible for participation in an intercollegiate sport if he has directly or indirectly used his athletic skill for pay in any form in that sport.

Hale McMenamin, on the enforcement staff, read the clip and, knowing that Notre Dame was playing in the Mideast Regional on Friday night, called Stephens and informed him. Stephens checked, conferred with McMenamin, and McMenamin suggested they declare Kelly ineligible and begin the paper process to recover his eligibility.

NOTRE DAME coach Digger Phelps was more than slightly irritated when he heard the news. Kelly would be no factor in the games, for sure; he had not even been making the trips. But as a reward for playing hard every day in practice, pushing the others ahead of him, Phelps had planned on taking Kelly to the regional — and to the finals, if they would win. On Wednesday, two days before the regional, Phelps had to tell Kelly he couldn't go.

"He called me outside the lockerroom," Kelly said, "and said the NCAA was on us about the movie. They said that made me a professional and he said I was ineligible. I thought he was kidding."

Kelly soon learned otherwise. "I thought if I could just talk to them and explain everything, they would change their mind," he said. Notre Dame requested that the NCAA speed up the process so Kelly could be cleared and go to the reginal. "They said they couldn't do it that fast, for some reason or another," said athletic director Moose Krause.

"There wouldn't have been time," McMenamin said. A conference call would have to be arranged among Krause, at least two of the three members of the eligibility committee, and Steve Morgan, the NCAA staff liaison with the committee. "Mr. Morgan advised me that it couldn't be arranged," McMenamin said.

"I DON'T have any recollection of that," Morgan said. The first he heard of the matter, he said, was when Krause's letter arrived the next Monday, after the regional.

Which was too late for Kelly.

"My weekend was already ruined," he said.

Two weeks later, the eligibility committee, meeting on another matter, discussed the Kelly case, which would be their next. The merits evidently suggested to the three committee members — two athletic directors and a faculty representative — that Kelly should have his eligibiity restored immediately, if he paid back the money. The committee didn't even need to hear Kelly's explanation of how the movie role came about, or how Harrick had assured him that it wouldn't affect his eligibility.

"If anyone is to blame, it's me," Harrick said. "How coud they do this?"

Easy. They followed the procedures and guidelines and rules to the letter. With the maze of regulations and rules in the NCAA handbook, that sometimes is the biggest problem of all.

"The wheels of injustice," said Stephens, "grind slowly."

28 winners vie in T of C play

RANCHO LA COSTA, Calif. (AP) — The withdrawal of PGA champion John Mahaffey, who had planned to make a comeback try here, has left an elite field of only 28 pro golf tour winners arrayed for Thursday's start of the $300,000 Tournament of Champions.

Mahaffey, who underwent surgery on his left and that was damaged in the Bing Crosby National Pro-Am, has been out of action for almost three months.

He arrived in La Costa over the weekend to practice for this exclusive event that brings together only the winners of regular pro golf tour tournaments from the preceeding 12 months.

"He tried to play, but the hand became badly swollen and he had to quit," one tournament official said.

"He could have teed off and played a couple of holes and then pulled out and gotten last-place money ($3,400)," another official said, "but he said that wouldn't be right, wouldn't be fair to the people or the sponsors so he withdrew and went home."

Mahaffey, whose career has been plagued by injuries, last year won the Ben Hogan award for a comeback from another hand injury as well as elbow problems. That comeback was capped by his victory in the PGA National Championship.

He also won another American tour title in 1978, took the individual championship in the prestigious World Cup and then touched off the 1979 season by winning the first event, the Bob Hope Desert Classic.

With him out, nine multiple winners are left in the field that will be chasing a first prize of $54,000 over the 6,889-yard, par-72 La Costa Country Club course.

The most recent, of course, is newly crowned Masters champion Fuzzy Zoeller, who also won in nearby San Diego earlier this season. Zoeller said he's "still on Cloud 9" from his playoff victory in Augusta, Ga.

One of the men he beat in that sudden death affair, Tom Watson, comes in with perhaps the strongest credentials, however. In addition to his Player of the Year titles the last two seasons and his position atop the year's money-winning list, Watson has finished second, first and second in his last three starts.

With his strong play and the sudden revival of Jack Nicklaus, who missed the Masters playoff by a single shot, another in the dramatic series of Watson-Nicklaus confrontations is a possibility.

Other multiple winners from the last 12 months are defending champion Gary Player, Andy Bean, Lee Elder, Lon Hinkle, Bruce Lietzke and Lanny Wadkins.

Hubert Green, Ben Crenshaw, Ray Floyd, Tom Kite, U.S. Open champ Andy North, Jerry Pate and Lee Trevino are other leading entrants. Also on hand are Bob Byman, Rod Funseth, Jerry Heard, Barry Jaeckel, Mark McCumber, Mac McLendon, Gil Morgan, Larry Nelson, Jack Newton, Jim Simons and Ron Streck complete the field.

NBC will provide national television coverage of portions of the final two rounds Saturday and Sunday.

Permian helps cause of Rebels, Bulldogs

Odessa Permian, whether they like it or not, gave Midland High and Midland Lee tremendous shots in their respective arms Tuesday afternoon.

You see, Mojo, with a 5-4 eight-inning District 5-4A baseball victory over Abilene High on the Permian diamond, reduced the number of undefeated loop teams.

That means both Tall City outfits stand 2-0 and in a tie for first in the circuit. The only other club with an unblemished register is Abilene Cooper, which had its Tuesday encounter with Odessa High in the Key City washed out by rain.

Permian, 1-1 in league and 14-7 overall, took advantage of two Warbird eighth inning errors to help bag the triumph and drop Abilene High to 1-1 and 8-9.

Each team scored four runs in the fifth and then grudgingly held on for dear life.

But Abilene High, which had six errors for the contest, let poor fielding cause their downfall.

In the Permian eighth, leadoff batter Doak Huddleston hit a pop fly that the Eagle left fielder dropped. Then, Huddleston went to second when catcher Mitch Gassaway threw the ball away trying to pick him off.

With two out, pitcher Conley Crawford, who relieved starter Jay Doelling after six innings, won the game with a single up the middle that brought in Huddleston. In the process, Crawford raised his record to 7-2.

Cooper, 1-0 and 14-2, and Odessa High, 0-1 and 6-16, will try Thursday at 4 p.m. to makeup their weather beleaguered battle.

Score by innings:

Abilene High	000 040 [illegible]—4 5 6
Odessa Permian	000 040 01—5 8 1

Mac Rogers, Ricky Stokes (6) and Mitch Gassaway; Jay Doelling, Conley Crawford (6) and Doak Huddleston. 2B-Seth Smith (Abilene), Vic Vines and Roger Lightfoot (Permian). HR-Huddleston (Permian). WP-Crawford (7-2). LP-Stokes (1-2).

FOOTBALL—Allan Harvin and Aaron Hagens, two University of Cincinnati running backs from New Jersey, were indicted Tuesday by a grand jury on charges of receiving stolen property in connection with a reported theft of stereo equipment at a dormitory. Harvin, 19, is a freshman tailback from Willingboro, N.J. Hagens, 21, is a junior wingback from Madison, N.J. "There will be no action on the part of the university until the legal process is completed," said Athletic Director William Jenike. He said the two would continue with spring football practice...

Midland to host JV baseball tournament

Some outstanding action is on tap for the Midland junior varsity baseball tournament, which starts Thursday and continues Saturday at both the Midland Lee and Memorial Stadium diamonds.

Midland Lee, Midland High, Odessa High, Odessa Permian, Big Spring, the Crane varsity, Lubbock Coronado and Hobbs, N. M. will participate.

Four games are set for Thursday. In the 2 p.m. opener at Lee, the Rebel yearlings, 14-1 and fresh off Tuesday's 4-3 victory against Odessa High, will tangle with Hobbs, followed at 4 by the Crane-Odessa High tussle.

Ricky Wright knocked in the winning run for Lee against Odessa in the fifth, scoring Cliff Collyer from second. Clay Bateman, 7-0, got the win with seven strikeout, five hit pitching. Barry Corley and Ed Ellis each had two hits.

In Thursday's games at Memorial Stadium field, Midland High battles Big Spring at 2 p.m. followed at 4 by the Permian-Coronado fray.

Four games are scheduled for Saturday, all of which will be played at Memorial Stadium field. Times are 10 a.m., noon, 2 p.m. and 4 p.m.

Admission for the tournament is $1 for adults and 50 cents for kids.

Lafleur, Bossy, who is best?

Guy Lafleur of the Montreal Canadiens and Mike Bossy of the New York Islanders are two of the most potent goal scorers in hockey, and any opposing team must pay close attention to each. But the debate continues to rage over the value of assigning a player to shadow the superstars.

The National Hockey League playoff quarter-finals are a perfect example. The Toronto Maple Leafs assigned left wing Pat Boutette to follow Lafleur all over the ice.

The result? Lafleur scored a goal and set up three others as the Canadiens scored a series-opening 5-2 triumph over Toronto in Monday night's game.

The Chicago Black Hawks put left wing John Marks on Bossy most of the time during the first game of their best-of-seven set.

The result? Bossy scored three goals and set up another as the Islanders cruised to a 6-2 triumph.

"EVERY CLUB in the league puts somebody special on him (Lafleur) and he still either leads the league in scoring or comes close," says Maple Leafs captain Darryl Sittler. "Meanwhile, maybe you're taking something away from your own team by putting the special man on him."

New York left wing John Tonelli, who plays on the line with Bossy and center Bryan Trottier, expresses a similar view.

"Bossy's had guys check him all year long," says Tonelli, "and nobody's been able to stop him yet."

The Maple Leafs get another shot at Lafleur and the Black Hawks will have another try at Bossy tonight as the playoffs continue.

IN THE other quarter-finals, the Pittsburgh Penguins try to tie their matchup with the Boston Bruins and the New York Rangers, down one game, visit the Philadelphia Flyers.

There will be another, different kind of battle in at least two rinks, between the goalies and the forwards who come too close to their nets.

Penguins goalie Denis Herron said Tuesday he'd "whack them (Boston forwards) with my stick — right across the ankles, too," if they try to infringe on his territory.

PERMIAN PONTIAC'S ANSWER TO ROOM & ECONOMY

A Car So Great It Couldn't Wait 'Til Fall

PHOENIX -80

And look at that cargo space. Fold down the rear seat and you've got a Hatchback that can stow two 10-speed bicycles and still have room for more. That's 40.9 cubic feet of cargo space with excellent access...Any way you look at it, Phoenix Hatchback is one terrific way to get the functionality you need. Pontiac style.

From One Generation To Another

Terry travel trailers have meant quality and craftsmanship since 1945. A tradition passed from one generation to another, assuring its owners of travel comfort and convenience. And now, for 1979, there are 8 travel trailer and 2 fifth wheel Terry models to choose from. With 4 colorful interior decor selections, there's a Terry travel trailer to suit the most discriminating family.

Let us point out all features that are built into the 1979 Terry trailers to provide you with years of traveling good times.

And find out why Terry means quality and craftsmanship—from one generation to another and for generations to come.
