Reagan opens Games, gives athletes pep talk

LOS ANGELES (AP) — President Reagan, slightly scrambling the declaratory formula, declared the 23rd modern Olympics officially open Saturday night after reaching back to his acting career to exhort U.S. athletes to win "for the Gipper."

"Celebrating the 23rd Olympiad of the modern era, I declare open the Olympic Games of Los Angeles," the president said at 7:40 p.m. from a box high in the Los Angeles coliseum.

Reagan, the first U.S. president to open an Olympic ceremony, was enthusiastically received by the 614-member U.S. team in delivering a pep talk a few hours earlier, where he declared himself "surounded by winners."

"From what I see here, you are ready," the president told the U.S. athletes before moving with his wife, Olympic officials and White House staff members to the closed, air-conditioned box for the lavish three-hour opening ceremony.

After a segment on the story of America, Reagan pronounced it "out of this world," and said, "I am bursting with pride," according to comments relayed by assistant press secretary Mark Weinberg to White House reporters on the very top level of the coliseum above the president's box.

In a brief television interview after the ceremony, Reagan said, "I think that there is a great patriotic feeling that is sweeping this country, and that bodes well for our future" — a note he also sounded in speaking to the athletes.

The president was supposed to open the games this way: "I declare open the Olympic Games of Los Angeles, celebrating the 23rd Olympiad of the modern era." The White House said Reagan's reversal of the phrases was no accident.

As the president left to board his helicopter for a 19-day vacation at his ranch in Santa Barabara, an hour's flight away, assistant press secretary Mark Weinberg told reporters, "The president felt it was more appropriate the way he stated it and he checked with (Peter) Ueberroth (president of the Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee) and he had no objections."

■ Reagan, Ferraro to compete for same audiences — Page 4A

Ueberroth brought Nadia Comenici, the Romanian gymnastic star of the 1976 games to the president's box to pose for pictures.

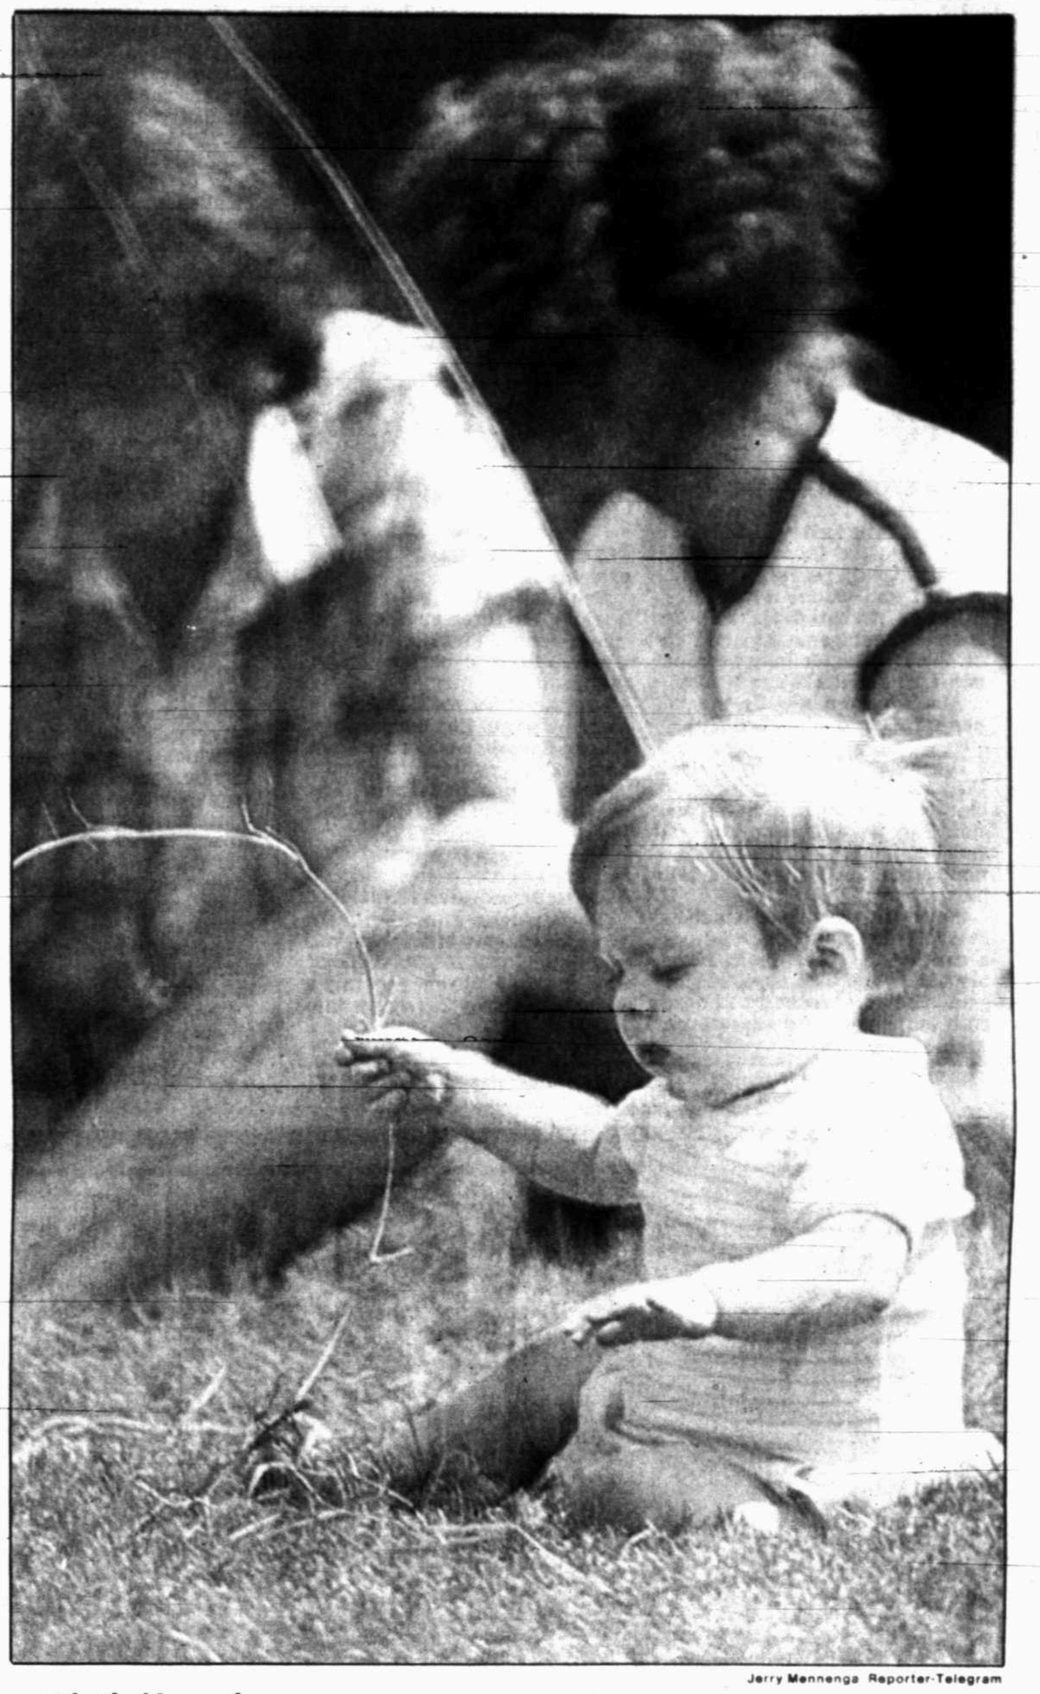

When Romania's team marched into the stadium, the president stood and applauded.

At Heritage Hall on the campus of the University of Southern California, the president told the assembled U.S. athletes, "Many years ago, when I competed in sports, our coaches would spur us on with a few punchy phrases."

"We count on you to push yourselves to the limit," he declared. "So when you're out there set your sights high... then go for it!

"Do it for yourselves, for your families, for your country," the president advised. "And if I may be a bit presumptuous... do it for the Gipper."

Continental bank's rescue was just one of many options

WASHINGTON (AP) — No corks popped off champagne bottles, no cheers or rebel yells were heard when government regulators reached last week's final agreement on bailing out Continental Illinois National Bank & Trust Co.

"We just plopped down in chairs and said, 'Thank God, it's done,'" reported Alan Whitney, spokesman for the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., the key player in the $4.5 billion government rescue plan.

The announcement capped long hours of hard work started shortly after the agency on May 17 stepped in with a consortium of 28 banks to provide a $7.5 billion prop to the Chicago bank, reeling from an international run on deposits caused by rumors of its financial problems.

The aid was considered just a stop-gap; a permanent solution had to be found to help the ailing bank, one of the nation's largest.

The options included merging the bank with a stronger institution without any help from the FDIC; merging it but with aid from the agency; and getting private investors to pour in new capital.

Regulators also could do what they did — forge their own solution, with money from the FDIC, an independent agency that insures deposits to $100,000 in 14,800 banks. The $16 billion fund draws its money from assessments on banks signing up for the insurance.

From the start, William Isaac, head of the FDIC and the lead government negotiator in the deal, felt "this is where we would end up," said an agency official who would only speak on condition he not be identified.

But Isaac also felt it was important that banks and private investors be given an opportunity to take a long, hard look at the bank and decide whether it was what they wanted.

Goldman, Sachs & Co., a Wall Street investment banking house, was hired right away to put together a package of information about the bank that could be shown to potential merger partners and investors.

The information was circulated to banks large enough to be interested in acquiring Continental, according to banking sources who would discuss the shaping of the final package only if not identified.

There are not many banks big enough — fewer than 10 in the United States and maybe only a handful overseas.

Immediately some of them said they were not interested; fewer than five bothered to scrutinize Continental's books, the sources said.

A few expressed interest but one by one they dropped out.

The dropouts gave a variety of reasons: An acquisition would not fit their own business plans; Continental, an aggressive lender to industry, had a different and incompatible approach to banking; Illinois law restricts the opening of branches by banks and thus offers no incentive to outsiders to move in.

Man drives car into crowd, being held without bond

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A man who wanted to "get even against the police" was being held without bond Saturday after he drove a car more than 100 yards down a sidewalk near an Olympic Village, killing a teenager and injuring 54 people as screaming pedestrians scattered, authorities said.

A Buick Regal driven by 21-year-old Daniel Lee Young jumped the curb at about 35 mph, mowing down pedestrians before slamming into a glass bus kiosk Friday night, police and witnesses said.

Young, who was unhurt, was arrested at the scene in the trendy Westwood neighborhood near the UCLA campus. He grinned at a photographer as he sat in the back seat of a squad car.

He was booked for investigation of murder and was being held Saturday without bail, said Officer Rod Bernsen.

The 8:30 p.m. incident came less than 24 hours before Saturday night's opening of the Summer Games, but, "There is no indication there is any connection with the Olympic Games in any way," said Police Chief Daryl Gates.

■ Driver called 'ordinary guy' — Page 8A

"He has said he wanted to get even against the police, but there is no indication of why The Olympics were not mentioned by him."

Among the injured was a college student who was to play in a band for the opening ceremonies.

Young, a resident of the Inglewood suburb of Los Angeles, had been placed on probation April 22, 1983, after a burglary conviction, Officer Scott Gilliam said.

"He's just mad at policemen in general," the officer said.

There was no evidence of any alcohol or drug use, Gates said.

"Everybody's kind of shocked," his brother Larry Young said at the family home in a modest Inglewood neighborhood, a Los Angeles suburb eight miles southwest of downtown. Young's parents and 11 brothers and sisters avoided the reporters gathered Saturday outside the house.

Earlier, Larry Young told the Los Angeles Herald Examiner: "I think lately he's been really kind of depressed, and my understanding is nobody had any idea he had taken off, but when I got here, the car was gone. I'm really not sure what happened."

Neighbors described Young as a quiet loner who would play his car radio loud or sit in front of his house listening to the radio.

Board member to seek appointment

By RHONDA RIGENHAGEN
Staff Writer

"I guess I'm just one of those people that look for a beating," said J. Murphy Horton as he announced his intention to seek appointment to the State Board of Education.

Horton, one of 27 board members, was elected to a six-year term on the board in 1982. During special session this summer, however, the state legislature voted to abolish the existing board and replace it with a 15-member body appointed by the governor. The intention of the bill is to begin replacing the appointed board with elected officials after two years.

As is the case any time districts are redrawn, the action requires approval from the U.S. Justice Department. It is uncertain, therefore, when the new body will take control. "We feel we will probably serve until December and the new board will take effect Jan. 1, 1985," Horton said. "Right now we're just kind of in limbo."

In the meantime, he is asking community leaders and school officials to endorse his appointment to the new board of education.

"I don't think my odds of getting appointed are good," he admitted. "I think it would take a small miracle, first of all because I'm a Republican and the people who are selecting are all Democrats; and secondly because I'm not a member of the good ol' boy club. I don't have a political base. I don't have a lot of big names speaking for my appointment."

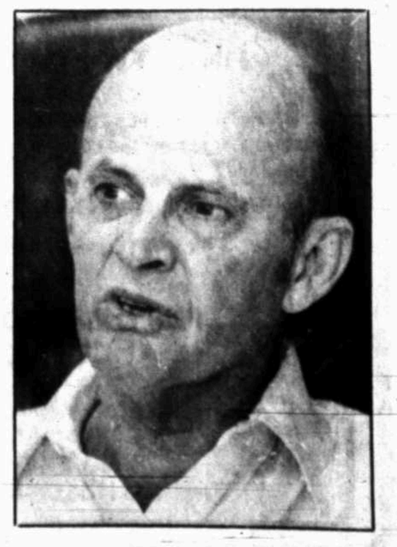

Sen. Bill Sims, D-San Angelo, encouraged him to seek appointment, he added. "And friends and constituents and people in education have urged me to run.

"I would certainly like to see a certain number of old members appointed to the board so there would be a transition base. It takes a while to learn how the board works and what it's really about." After 19 months of "boot camp," Horton said he's finally reached a point where he feels effective on the board.

He said his educational philosophies are compatible with the reforms outlined in House Bill 72, the bill that terminated the existing state board.

Being a member of the smaller board will make an already time-consuming job even more difficult, he said. "The way the new districts are set up, gosh, they're so big. District 14, which Midland is in, has got 47 counties." That is nearly double the number of school districts, population and area of the old district. "For a board member to work it would be virtually impossible."

Los Angeles Olympic Games give Romanian opportunity to defect

PASADENA (AP) — The Los Angeles Olympic Games provided Ghiorghe Dubei with the perfect opportunity to defect to the United States from his native Romania.

Tired of what he calls religious persecution, Dubei, 42, told Romanian officials he was flying to the U.S. to watch the Games.

But Dubei didn't tell his wife or 12 children of his real plans, and he arrived earlier this month at the Pasadena home of his brother, Constantin.

"I love my country. It is beautiful," Ghiorghe Dubei told his brother, who translated. "But I cannot live there. You cannot talk. You cannot say anything. You never know if the people you are talking to work for the (Communist) Party."

He reported to Pasadena police headquarters July 19 saying he wanted to seek political asylum.

"He claims he is being persecuted because of his religion," said Joseph Gallipeau, assistant director of the Immigration and Naturalization Service's Houston office. "He says he wants to live in a freer world."

Ghiorghe Dubei, a bricklayer and glassmaker, is Baptist. He said he grew unhappy with life in his homeland when authorities forced him to work on Sundays, which he said violated his religious beliefs.

He said he decided to defect in May after his employers at the Botosani factory in which he worked withheld a week's pay from workers and ordered them to work 12-hour shifts for eight hours' pay.

Constantine Dubei, 23, fled to Austria on a railroad car six years ago and then to the United States. He said Ghiorghe had tears in his eyes for his wife, Teodora, and his 12 children.

Ghiorghe's children range in age from 18 months to 22 years.

"I didn't tell my wife I wasn't coming back. In Romania, you are afraid to tell anyone that, because you think someone might find out," Dubei said. "Before I left, many people told me not to stay in American because a good father must be with his children. But more than half of those people would have stayed here if they could. I came also for my children's freedom, to show them that they can come too."

Constantine Dubei's wife, Maria, was jailed briefly after her husband defected and she was forced to work at half-pay. After four years, she was allowed to join her husband.

Ghiorghe Dubei said he hopes for similar results.

"My wife is not so happy right now because she knows she will have to fight for a passport," he said. "But she is not angry. She is afraid, but she believes that God will find a way for her to come.

Town's officials arrested after posing as vice officers

HOUSTON (AP) — The mayor and public works director of Jacinto City and another man were arrested in a topless bar after allegedly posing as Houston vice officers conducting a raid.

Police arrested Mayor Jess Michael Blasingame, 32, and Public Works Director John Lee Cooper II, 33, about 2:30 a.m. Friday.

Also arrested was their companion, George Edward Tracy, 20.

Blasingame and Cooper used their city badges in the dimly lit club to convince customers and staff they were Houston vice officers conducting a raid, said Assistant District Attorney Jack Millin.

Police said the mayor handed a gun to Tracy, who allegedly took a dancer in a back room, lifted her blouse and then exposed himself. The trio verbally abused club employees and threatened to send them to jail, investigators said.

George Banaduk, the club's owner, said the trio "terrorized" patrons.

Banaduk called police after learning the three men were not vice officers, authorities said. The trio appeared to be intoxicated, they said.

Investigators took the three men to Jacinto City Police Chief Wayne Speaks, who drove them home. Charges were filed later against Cooper and Tracy, who were then taken to Harris County Jail.

Blasingame was released without charges, but police will continue to investigate the incident.

Cooper was charged with impersonating an officer and was held in lieu of $2,000 bond. Tracy was charged with carrying a weapon and bond was set for him at $800.

Senator denies involvement in pornography

BEAUMONT (AP) — State Sen. Carl Parker, the co-owner of a house where police seized more than 400 X-rated videotapes, says he was not involved in an alleged Beaumont pornography distribution outfit.

"I have been involved in no illegal act," Parker, D-Port Arthur, told prosecutors.

Jefferson County District Attorney James McGrath played for reporters Friday a tape of a meeting in which Parker promised prosecutors he would cooperate in their pornography investigation.

Authorities raided the house April 19 and seized more than 400 tapes which they claim are pornographic. State District Judge Larry Gist has ruled that several of the tapes are obscene.

Parker said he and Daniel Lee, a former law client, bought the house in 1969 as an investment.

Lee, 58, later moved into the house and operated Happy Times Video.

Biological 'law' must be at work in Texas gubernatorial politics

By BILL KIDD

AUSTIN — Biologists occasionally quote a "law" on animal behavior to the effect that under the most precisely controlled conditions, an organism will do what it jolly-well wants.

Surely some variation of that law is at work in Texas politics.

Consider Comptroller Bob Bullock.

One could hear — literally — cries of surprise from press room offices the Monday morning a Bullock aide arrived with a statement saying that the comptroller will not run for governor in 1986.

Bullock noted in his statement that he "surprised" folks by announcing in November 1982, the same day he was re-elected to a third term as comptroller, that he would run for governor in 1986.

Bullock repeated his plans to reporters even before Gov. Mark White could be sworn into office.

In fact the expectation that White and Bullock would be engaged in knock-down, drag-out battle in 1986 had become a factor which was figured into all sorts of political equations.

At the conclusion of this summer's special session Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur, in remarks in the closing minutes of the session, praised White and Bullock for pulling together on education efforts.

It was, Parker noted, "no secret" that the two men anticipated going head-to-head in two years.

But now Bullock said he's not running for governor and will make up his mind "at some point in the future" as to whether he'll run again for comptroller.

There was, Bullock reported, "no great public clamor for my services as governor.

"If I were looking for a draft," he said, "I think I can now quit waiting."

Naturally Bullock's decision has prompted considerable speculation as to the "real reason" for his action.

Bullock, in announcing his decision, stated that "I respect the comptroller's office and the governor's office both too much to continue to hold one office and be a candidate for the other when it works to the detriment of both."

And, he added, he hoped his announcement would end "all speculation on the part of some people as to the political influence on each and every action of the comptroller's department."

An aide explained that since the agency is preparing to implement the new tax bill and will have to be making some interpretations, Bullock wanted to avoid the possibility that some of those decisions would be interpreted as being politically motivated.

That would be a simple and logical explanation.

However, for political observers, simplicity and logic don't always — some would say rarely ever — have a place in politics.

So speculation began on whether Bullock had been frightened away from a confrontation with White by the governor's success in the special session.

White did fare well in the special session, convincing lawmakers to support public education reforms and to pass a tax bill to pay for those changes.

Voters are likely to remember the sting of any tax increase for a long time, and the Texas Republican Party has made it exceedingly clear they want to make that an issue against White in 1986.

Even before lawmakers could get to Austin the Republicans were erecting billboards featuring White's prior statements against new taxes.

White is quite aware that there really isn't such an animal as a popular tax increase and has bought television time to present his argument that while he doesn't like taxes any more than anyone else, "our kids come first."

But the question of whether Bullock had hoped to capitalize on any backlash later against White seems moot — since Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby reported Bullock had indicated to him that Bullock had dropped his gubernatorial plans before the special session started.

So that prompted speculation that Bullock was experiencing health problems.

Bullock's health has been a matter of speculation in the past but the comptroller says that he's doing fine.

Undoubtedly there will be continued attempts to explain exactly why Bullock decided to drop out of the gubernatorial race.

At present, however, it appears that Bullock is demonstrating the principle that under whatever conditions, politicians will do whatever they decide to do.

Residents of Springtown agonize over death of popular teen-ager

SPRINGTOWN (AP) — More than 500 of the 1,600 residents of this small Parker County town turned out for the funeral of a 16-year-old girl, agonizing over her death — and the plight of another teen accused of killing her.

The nude body of Tracy Lee Bagley, a popular student at Springtown High School, was found beside a country road Tuesday. Authorities believe she was raped and strangled in a brown clapboard house across the street from the cemetery where she was buried Friday.

A 16-year-old boy, who was a varsity football player and a National Honor Society student, has been accused of killing her. Authorities say they will attempt to have the youth tried as an adult.

Miss Bagley's killing — and the subsequent arrest of her fellow student — left the town in shock.

"We all just hurt so bad. We hurt for her family, and we hurt for his family," said Glenda Newby after the funeral.

"This is the worst thing that ever happened in this town, and we want to know why, why, why?"

Miss Bagley, who had been captain of the high school drill team, sometimes had said that she wanted to be a fashion designer, while at other times expressed an interest in becoming a psychiatrist. The youth held in her killing had arrived in Springtown two years ago and made a name for himself both athletically and scholastically, friends said.

Eva Lee Pyle, of the Springtown Epigraph, the town's weekly newspaper, said, "We don't know what else to do. This whole town is torn apart. There is so much we can't understand."

Mrs. Pyle said the victim's mother, Dorothy Bagley, could not believe the boy had been accused of the killing.

"She told me, 'Unless I hear it from that boy's mouth, I just can't believe he would do it,'" Mrs. Pyle said.

Police said Miss Bagley called her parents from a friend's house Monday night and said she was watching television and would be home later.

At 2 a.m. Tuesday, Jerry Bagley, Miss Bagley's father, reported the girl missing. At 6 a.m., members of the drill team called off their practice and started distributing pictures of Miss Bagley to storeowners and townspeople.

At 9:30 a.m., a passing motorist found Miss Bagley's body in a ditch beside the road, about three miles northwest of the town square.

Crew's families sue Glomar's makers

HOUSTON (AP) — The families of five American crewmen who died when an oil drilling ship sank in the South China Sea have filed a $120 million lawsuit claiming the ship's owners were negligent.

Houston-based Global Marine Deepwater Drilling Inc. owned the Glomar Java Sea, the vessel than sank Oct. 25 about 60 miles south of China's Hainan Island during Typhoon Lex.

Global Marine and its subsidiaries have been named in numerous lawsuits claiming it was negligent in the sinking, but the firm has denied the allegations.

Only 31 bodies from the ship's 81-man crew have been recovered. The crew included 35 Americans.

The suit filed Friday in state district court alleges "negligence, gross negligence and outrageous conduct" on the part of Global Marine and other firms named in in the suit.

Also named in the suit are: Atlantic Richfield Co., ARCO Inc., ARCO China Inc., Santa Fe International Corp. and Levingstonm Shipbuilding Co.

BORROW TO BIGGER PROFITS

The secret to making real estate investments pay is borrowing. This idea of assuming what may be a staggering debt flies in the face of conventional wisdom. Yet, borrowing is the only means most people have of acquiring real estate – and it's the shortest route to high returns.

In real estate, borrowing is called leverage. Suppose you have $50,000 in the bank and you want to buy a $100,000 property.

Thinking in the old way, you'd put all your cash down and take a $50,000 mortgage. If you eventually sell the property for $150,000, you would have made 100% profit.

What if you had used leverage and put only $20,000 down? Your return on the same selling price would be $2.50 per every dollar you invested - or 250% rather than the original 100%.

Meanwhile, you could have used the extra $30,000 you didn't invest for other purchases.Tax breaks are nice, but the real money made in real estates comes from using leverage.

WEATHER SUMMARY

AP Laserphoto Map

The National Weather Service forecasts showers for today from Maryland throughout the South into the Gulf of Mexico, and for parts of Nevada, Utah and Arizona.

Today's weather should be mirror image of Saturday's

Today's forecast from the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport is a virtual mirror image of Saturday's forecast: partly cloudy and warm with isolated afternoon thunderstorms, a high in the mid-90s and winds out of the southeast at 5 to 15 mph. Chance of rain is less than 20 percent.

Tonight should see some isolated evening thunderstorms, with a low in the upper 60s and a less than 20 percent probability of rain.

Monday should be partly cloudy and warm again with isolated afternoon thunderstorms and temperatures in the lower 90s.

STATE

Showers and thunderstorms fell over the Coastal Plains and parts of the Panhandle Saturday, while a few isolated showers were expected to develop over the state through Monday.

Other showers stretched Saturday from the Houston area to the Rio Grande. A funnel cloud was reported near a strong storm in the Berclair area Saturday afternoon, but no damage was reported.

Widely scattered thundershowers peppered the Panhandle and West Texas, while a few rapidly moving showers passed through the Dallas-Fort Worth area. However, rainfall amounts were light.

The weather was more tranquil than Friday when a weak front over North Central Texas triggered showers and some heavy thundershowers that moved towards the coast before midnight.

The National Weather Service said rainfall through Monday would be limited to mostly isolated and widely scattered showers.

Afternoon temperatures were generally in the 80s or 90s, except for a few rain-cooled readings in the 70s over the Panhandle and along the coast.

Little change in temperatures was forecast for today. Cloudy to partly cloudy skies were expected to be the rule statewide.

NATION

Thunderstorms developed again Saturday over the Southwest, after a night of wet stormy weather in which the desert city of Phoenix, Ariz., got near-record rainfall and street flooding struck Las Vegas, Nev. But temperatures were balmy for the opening day of the summer Olympics.

As thousands gathered at Los Angeles for the opening ceremonies for the Games, afternoon temperatures soared to a muggy 85 degrees, with 48 percent humidity and hazy skies.

Showers and thunderstorms were widely scattered Saturday across Nevada, southeastern California and western Arizona.

And flash flood watches were posted for the mountains and deserts of southern California, and northeastern, south-central and extreme southern sections of Nevada.

Some 10,000 customers of Nevada Power Co. were left without electricity for as long as two hours, as transformers were struck by lightning and power lines were buffeted by wind unofficially clocked at 55 mph.

Floods that hit Las Vegas and the Moapa Valley, 50 miles northeast of the city, last Sunday caused millions of dollars in damage to public and private property, left one man dead and one woman missing.

Elsewhere, showers and thunderstorms were fairly numerous Saturday along the western and central Gulf Coast region and across Alabama and Georgia, and were scattered along the mid Atlantic Coast. A flash flood watch was issued through the night for parts of eastern North Carolina.

A few thunderstorms were scattered over the lower Ohio Valley and storms developed over the southern and central high Plains.

Reagan, Ferraro compete for same audience

By MAUREEN SANTINI
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES — While President Reagan was denouncing Democrats at a campaign rally in Atlanta last week, an Italian-American voter who braved the sweltering heat to see the president voiced his personal dilemma.

"I wish I could vote for him and Ferraro," Bill Brunetti of Cobb County told a reporter.

Brunetti's statement sums up one of the problems Reagan faces as he campaigns for re-election. The president must convince ethnic Catholics and 50 percent of the nation's women, that he deserves their votes even though he is not, by heritage or gender, one of their own.

The president may wince at the notion that he must appeal to the same constiuency as Rep. Geraldine A. Ferraro, the Democratic vice presidential nominee whom Republican strategists label among the most liberal member of Congress.

But it was obvious from the way he made his campaign pitch last week that Reagan knew that he and Ms. Ferraro will often be competing for the same audiences.

Brunetti said he believed he'd vote for Reagan. "I like what he has done the last three years and I'm not real impressed with Mondale."

But an Italian-American barber in Bethesda, Md., a long-time Reagan supporter, told a reporter recently that Democratic challenger Walter F. Mondale "will get the votes of 29 million Italian Americans" because he gave Ms. Ferraro a chance to become the first American of Italian ancestry in the White House.

The barber was exaggerating slightly, since there are only about 12 million Italian Americans.

As the president launched a political counteroffensive last week to regain the spotlight the Democrats enjoyed during their nominating convention, the Reagan camp appeared nervous, at least temporarily.

There was reason to be. Two recent polls show the large advantage Reagan enjoyed over Mondale two brief weeks ago has evaporated, and it is becoming all too apparent that Ms. Ferraro is partly responsible.

A recent Lou Harris poll, for example, shows Reagan beating Mondale, 51 percent to 46 percent if the election were held today. But when the Reagan-Bush ticket was pitted against the Mondale-Ferraro slate, the president held a statistically insignificant two-point lead, 50 percent to 48 percent.

An Analysis

John Buckley, a campaign spokesman, said the polls were not alarming. "We know certainly that since the Democratic convention the race has tightened. There's a Republican convention coming up, after which you will tend to see the same kind of blip in the polls that the Democrats got."

On the day of the Iowa presidential primary election last Feb. 20, Reagan told reporters "I always run scared." During his travels last week to Texas, Georgia and New Jersey, the president delivered his partisan attacks so vigorously that some people wondered what had become of his pledge to take the political high road.

In the same week that his campaign director, Edward J. Rollins, predicted the former vice president would conduct a "very slashing" campaign, the president derided the Democratic ticket for "going so far left, they've left America." He never mentioned his opponents by name.

At his news conference Tuesday night, at which he opened his counteroffensive, the president said: "I have never been one to campaign against opponents. I prefer to campaign on our record, what we've done and what we intend to do and that's the way I'm going to conduct myself in this campaign."

At the end of the week, his campaign strategists were saying he stuck to his pledge, despite such lines as: "They want to keep spending — and raise your taxes — so they can keep on spending...And believe me, of all the promises they made, that's the one they'll deliver on."

Reagan also said the Nov. 6 election would offer a choice between "a strong nation that is deeply proud of the ideals it represents in the world — or a nation that begs on its knees for kindness from tyrants."

James Lake, the press secretary for the re-election committee, said it was simply the presidential manner. "He's an aggressive campaigner," said Lake.

REAGAN

In a 1940 film entitled "Knute Rockne - All American," Reagan played a Notre Dame football star, George Gipp, who dies. Years later, during an especially tough game, Pat O'Brien, playing Coach Rockne, inspires victory by recounting Gipp's story and imploring: "Win one for the Gipper."

The president spoke in an enclosed outdoor courtyard where the athletes, in blue, white and red uniforms, stood on cement under a broiling sun that pushed temperatures to close to 100 degrees.

When he finished, the crowd began chanting, "Nancy! Nancy!" A surprised first lady walked to the microphone and wished them all the best of luck.

"I wish everyone could win first prize," she said.

For several minutes, both the president and his wife shook hands with athletes, who approached them repeatedly to pose for pictures and for autographs.

At one point, a woman broke through a rope line and rushed toward Mrs. Reagan but was stopped by a Secret Service agent. A few minutes later, the woman was allowed to pose with the first lady.

Asked whether he felt like a winner, Reagan told reporters, "No, but I feel I am surrounded by winners, and if that rubs off, then I am a winner."

Reagan arrived at the Olympic Village under extraordinary security. His helicopter landed on a grassy field in the middle of a track and his armored limosine was backed up on a long plank on the grass to shield him when he got off. He then was driven about 100 yards to the building where he spoke. At least three sharpshooters could be seen atop buildings.

The athletes, who greeted the president with chants of "USA! USA!," were generally ecstatic at Reagan's appearance.

"It was great. He's excited and I'm excited too, " said wrestler Frank Famiano.

"I'm very pepped up," said basketball player Sam Perkins, who liked Reagan's reference to the Gipper. "It was appropriate...That was fresh — real nice."

Not everyone, however, was impressed.

"I'm glad he didn't mention the re-election campaign and that he focused on the Olympics," said 10,000-meter runner Craig Virgin. "This is my third Olympic team. The speeches are all the same."

In his weekly paid political radio broadcast earlier, Reagan said: "Today it begins and our athletes are ready...

"The torch is passed — the games begin — the 23rd Olympiad of the modern era commences," the president said in the five-minute broadcast, taped before he left the White House.

Reagan never mentioned the Olympic boycott by the Soviet Union and 13 other nations.

But in his pep talk to the U.S. athletes, the president cited a "new patriotism spreading across our country.

"It is an affection for our way of life...a positive attitude toward those things fundamental to America that draw us together: our freedom, our decency, and sense of fair play as a people," he said.

The remark appeared to be the flip side of an argument Reagan used repeatedly on the campaign trail last week: that Democrats were spreading "gloom and envy" and pessimism.

CONTINENTAL

Of course, some were said to be wary of the risks.

Interest also was expressed by some private investors, most notably Bass Brothers Enterprises Inc. of Texas, which has extensive interests in oil and gas exploration, real estate and large stock holdings in major corporations. The sources said the group wanted certain protections from the government that were considered too expensive.

As the weeks passed, the sources said, it became increasingly clear that the government would have to shape its own, less expensive arrangement.

Isaac, 40, who has been head of the agency for three years, began holding long discussions with Federal Reserve Chairman Paul Volcker; C.T. Conover, comptroller of the currency, and representatives of the bank. Treasury officials were kept informed.

In the last three weeks, Isaac put in about 18 hours each day, said Whitney.

The final package, which sets out a complicated arrangement for buying out $4.5 billion of the bank's bad loans, injecting $1 billion in new capital and putting new managers in place, evolved during the discussions.

Elements were drawn from previous aid packages drafted for troubled banks, including Franklin National Bank of New York City and First Pennsylvania Bank of Philadelphia.

Other proposals were considered, including one that would have spun off the bank's bad loans into a new corporation, but were discarded because of concern about the precedent they would set, the sources said.

The negotiators "went through a lot of discussions and permutations before they came up with the final package," according to one.

Treasury Secretary Donald Regan had reservations about the arrangement because of protection given bondholders of Continental Illinois Corp., the bank's parent.

Isaac said he wasn't happy with that either, but the regulators' hands were tied by covenants requiring them to work through the bank-holding company, strengthening it to bolster the bank.

Toward the end of the talks, the regulators turned to finding a new management team. They wanted prominent executives who would restore international confidence in the bank.

They chose John E. Swearingen, the retired chairman of Standard Oil Co. of Indiana, and William S. Ogden, former vice chairman of Chase Manhattan Bank in New York. Swearingen will head the holding company and Ogden the bank.

There were reports the regulators had a hard time finding anyone to take the jobs.

But Isaac denied that.

He said Swearingen and Ogden were their first choices.

"There was one person who was asked if he was interested in coming into the Swearingen role and that was John," he said.

To head the bank, the regulators asked a few if they were interested. All but one said yes, and Ogden was the choice, he said.

With all the elements in place, the bank's board of directors met Wednesday night to approve the plan and Swearingen and Ogden. The next morning the FDIC's board of directors gave its OK and terms of the rescue were made public.

With election near, legislation whisked through

By TOM RAUM
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — With the presidential election approaching fast, legislation has started to fly on Capital Hill at a brisk pace.

Instead of the days, weeks and months it usually takes for bills to lumber through each chamber, politically popular measures are now being whisked through in minutes.

And you don't have to look far beneath the surface to see election-year politics at work.

"Shameful," protested Sen. Ernest F. Hollings, D.-S.C., as the Senate last week speedily passed legislation guaranteeing cost-of-living increases to Social Security recipients even if inflation at year's end is too low to trigger them under the current law.

The measure was slapped onto a completely unrelated bill, without hearings and with less than five minutes of discussion.

An Analysis

Yet Hollings was one of only three senators to vote against the measure. The Senate suspended its roll call for more than an hour so that one absent member who also happens to be up for re-election this year, Minnesota Republican Rudy Boschwitz, could get to the floor to vote a resounding "yes."

The House is expected to follow suit within the next few days — all because President Reagan mentioned at a news conference last week that he would propose the adjustment to Congress.

"The president most assuredly seized the initiative, which was his right. It is an election year," said Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y., who recaptured some of the credit for Democrats by leading the Senate's move on the issue.

The Senate's action was not unlike the overwhelming House vote in 1980 against any cuts in Social Security benefits — when none had been proposed at either end of Pennsylvania Avenue.

Election-year pressures were also at work in the House last week. The Democrat-controlled chamber, once called the graveyard for the New Right, approved two conservative-sponsored bills by hefty margins — one that would allow religious groups to meet in public schools and another sanctioning individual, silent, classroom prayer.

Earlier in the year, the more conservative Senate had wrestled for nearly a month with a proposed constitutional amendment to permit spoken prayer in school before defeating it. And less strong measures had either been rejected by the House or kept off the floor by the Democratic leadership.

Just because it acted on the Social Security and school prayer measures, House Majority Leader Jim Wright of Texas denies that Congress will give Reagan all the proposals on his list of legislation he wants passed before the election.

"We were going to do some of these things anyway," Wright said.

CROWD

"He was all right. He kept to himself," said Donell Thomas, 22, who attended Morningside High School with Young. "He was quiet. He liked to listen to music."

"He didn't try and make himself friendly. Whenever I came home from work, I'd just see him sitting on the porch listening to the radio," said another neighbor, 19-year-old LaVeldo Weaver.

The Westwood area was crowded with young people lining up for movies or heading to bars and restaurants on a July Friday night. One bystander, Linda Doyle, was standing just a few feet from where the car jumped the curb at Westwood Boulevard and Weyburn Street.

"At first I thought he had lost control, but then he gunned it and people started to fly," Ms. Doyle said. "Other people told us he looked like a maniac, gritting his teeth."

Afterward, the sidewalk was littered with shoes, a baby carriage was overturned and a puddle of blood blocked a shoe store entrance.

The dead girl was identified by coroner's spokesman Bill Gold as Eileen Deutsch, 15, of the New York City borough of Queens. She was in the area visiting her father.

The critically injured included Rocio Martinez, 2, hospitalized at UCLA Medical Center with brain damage; Mike Fay, 16, at UCLA with a head injury; Kimberly Horger, 16, with brain and multiple abdominal injuries, and Mandy Nadelberg, 15, with a fractured clavicle, both at Brotman Medical Center; Jacqueline King, 24, of West Los Angeles, at Santa Monica Hospial with brain injuries and a broken leg; and one other person at UCLA, whom officials declined to identify.

Dr. Larry Baraff, associate director of emergency medicine at the medical center, had initially said three people died in the crash. But hospital spokesman Richard Elbaum said only one person had died. Elbaum said he checked with Baraff, who said he was "mistaken" when he released the initial figure.

The attack occurred just a few blocks from the University of California campus where many athletes are housed in an Olympic Village and where some of the competition will take place.

Among the injured was a member of the Olympics' 736-piece collegiate all-star band. She was identified as Julie Wood, 22, of Whittier, Calif.

HORTON

His job is not only to represent his district at state board meetings, Horton said, but to visit individual school districts and discuss their concerns.

"You better have three cars and four or five filling stations" to cover District 14, he quipped.

"I realize it does take a tremendous amount of time and generates a negative cash flow as far as my business is concerned," the geologist said, "but I enjoy education and I have still got something else to give."

Austin council votes to settle single-member district lawsuit

AUSTIN (AP) — The Austin City Council has voted 6-1 to attempt to settle out of court the lawsuit filed against the city by the NAACP.

After the vote Friday, the council was presented a proposal by the NAACP that council members be elected from eight single districts next April. Council members currently are elected on a city-wide basis.

The settlement talks are expected to begin next week among lawyers for the city, the NAACP and the Mexican American Legal Defense and Education Fund.

The NAACP sued the city April 5 in federal court contending the at-large system of electing council members is discriminatory.

Hightower: Texas could be leader in renewable energy

AUSTIN (AP) — Texans are successfully showing the rest of the nation that wind can produce electricity, the sun can heat water and power can be produced from cow manure or crop wastes, Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower said Saturday.

"Texas has the potential of becoming the leader in the nation in renewable energy sources," Hightower told the newly formed Texas Renewable Energy Industries Associatiton. "We've got to get behind this new industry just because it makes good sense."

"We're not trying to put the oil and gas people out of business, we want to help them stay in business longer," said Amory Lovins, well known writer who advocates the "soft energy path" without central power plants and nuclear reactors.

Hightower told the organizational meeting of the association that it had his personal support and the backing of the Texas Department of Agriculture

"This literally can be a multibillion-dollar, homegrown industry," he said.

Hightower pointed out that Joe Cozad makes ethanol in Edinburg, Jay Carter of Burkburnett makes an electricity-generating windmill sold widely in California, Mike Osborne of Elgin sells power from his windmills to a commercial utility company and Ed Cox Jr. of Amarillo is building a power plant to run on cattle manure.

"Utility companies are, right now, planning to build as many as 18 new lignite-fueled power plants in the next 15 to 20 years that would cost Texans $2.5 billion a year," Hightower said. "Conservation and renewable energy industries in this state could deliver the same amount of power for a whole lot less money and have dollars left over for food and education."

He said mesquite and juniper woods have an energy value as high as lignite. "If you harvested just 10 tons per acre of mesquite and brush from our brush-infested rangeland, you could produce 8.1 quadrillion BTUs (heating units).

Neighbors call man just 'ordinary guy'

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A young man arrested after his car mowed down 55 people on a sidewalk was just an "ordinary guy," who liked to drive around with his car radio blasting, a neighbor said Saturday.

Neighbors on the street where Daniel Lee Young lived with his family were incredulous at the news, while Young's parents and 11 brothers and sisters avoided reporters.

One teen-age girl was killed and 54 people were injured, six of them critically, when the car rolled down the busy sidewalk, authorities said.

Young, on parole after a burglary conviction, was booked for investigation of murder in the Friday night attack and held without bail.

Police said Young told them he wanted "to get even" with police.

"Everybody's kind of shocked," his brother Larry said at the family's house in a modest Inglewood neighborhood, a Los Angeles suburb eight miles southwest of downtown.

A neighbor who had attended Morningside High School with Daniel Young characterized him as quiet.

"He was all right. He kept to himself," said Donell Thomas, 22. "He was quiet. He liked to listen to music."

Landon Watts, a neighbor down the street, said Young "rode around with his music on real loud, just like anyone else...you wouldn't figure for him to do anything like that.

"He was just another ordinary guy. You wouldn't think he'd be capable of it."

Youngs' mother was distraught as she sat near the front door with a telephone in her lap and said she didn't want to talk.

Larry Young said police did not allow Mrs. Young to see her son Friday night, after he was arrested in the busy Westwood village area near one of the Olympic villages and the UCLA campus.

The car Young drove onto the sidewalk belonged to his older brother Levester, said Larry Young.

Thomas said he was washing his car when Young drove off.

"He just went by like he was going to the store. It was just before dark," he said.

Neighbors said they didn't know much about the Young family — nine boys and three girls — and one said it was a neighborhood where people kept to themselves.

"People aren't neighborly on this whole street. They don't know anybody well enough to go over and have a cup of coffee," said Margrett Thompson, adding she didn't even know the Young family's name.

Walkways' design wasn't double-checked, man says

CLAYTON, Mo. (AP) — An engineer says he assured architects his firm had double-checked the design safety of suspended walkways that collapsed into a hotel lobby but that because of a misunderstanding the firm did not do so.

However, engineer Daniel M. Duncan also said his firm was not contractually responsible for checking the specific connections holding up the walkways at the Kansas City Hyatt Regency.

Duncan, Jack D. Gillum and their firm contend that those connections, not the design of the walkways or "sky walks," were responsible for the July 17, 1981, collapse that killed 114 people and injured more than 200 others attending a tea dance in the lobby.

The State Engineering Licensing Board has charged Duncan, Gillum and their St. Louis engineering firm, GCE International, with negligence in the design of the walkways. Testimony Friday wrapped up the second week of the board's hearing, which could result in the loss of state licenses for the engineers.

Earlier, the engineers contended that their firm had double-checked all the steel in the hotel's atrium after a large part of the atrium roof collapsed in October 1979, before the hotel was open.

Duncan said they had told the project's architects that the check included the design of the walkways' box beams linking them to their suspension system. But Friday he said that assurance was a mistake — such a check had not been fully made.

The licensing board contends the two engineers and their firm had an obligation to verfiy the hotel's safety, but failed to do so.

Army to use just portion of 'Taj Mahal' in desert

CARSON CITY, Nev. (AP) — The Army now plans to use half of a new $70 million ammunition salvage and recycling facility, dubbed a "Taj Mahal in the desert," and mothball the rest.

Word came of the plan Friday, three months after the Army announced that most of the 18-building "demilitarization" complex for disposing of old ammunition, which took 10 years to build, might be "laid away."

Sen. Chic Hecht, R-Nev., launched an investigation after the Army's April statement, saying he was concerned about a possible "boondoggle" and hoped the Army would make some use of the plant.

The Army then announced an evaluation of the new facility, built by the Navy at the sprawling Hawthorne Army Ammunition Plant 124 miles southeast of here and taken over by the Army on April 26.

"Whatever is usable, we will use it," Lt. Col. Rodney Tanaka, commander of the ammunition plant, said in a telephone interview Friday. "You realize it cost a lot of money."

While the Army plans to use about half the complex, Tanaka said that could vary depending on the amount of work being done at the base at any one time. And even though more of the facility will be used, he said, it won't mean more jobs at the base. Initially, the facility was to have provided 130 jobs.

Some of the most elaborate machinery at the complex won't be used, such as robot systems that enable technicians to safely pull apart and defuse old ammunition by remote control, using television cameras to watch what they're doing.

Paul Powell, public affairs specialist for the U.S. Army Armament Munitions and Chemical Command at the Rock Island, Ill., has said full use of the new facility didn't seem "cost-effective" compared to other methods of disposing of obsolete and unsafe bombs and shells.

One of those methods is to simply explode old munitions by open burning on a remote section of the 256-square-mile base.

Hecht was told by the Armament Munitions and Chemical Command that it costs $179 a ton to "demil" ammo by open burning compared to a projected cost of $2,389 per ton at the new facility.

But the private contractor now operating the complex, Day, Zimmerman and Basil Corp., was told by state environmental officials that a permit for such burning wouldn't be renewed next year.

Burford calls committee 'a joke'

VAIL, Colo. (AP) — Anne Gorsuch Burford, who resigned under fire as head of the Environmental Protection Agency, says the panel to which President Reagan has appointed her is "a nothing-burger...a joke."

She also lampooned the District of Columbia as being "too small to be a state and too large to be an asylum."

Mrs. Burford, a former Republican Colorado legislator and wife of federal Bureau of Land Management Director Bob Burford, received a standing ovation Friday night from delegates to the 57th annual Colorado Wool Growers Association convention for her assessment of the nation's capital:

It's called the District of Columbia, she explained, "because it's too small to be a state but too large to be an asylum for the mentally deranged."

In remarks to reporters, Mrs. Burford shrugged off the latest controversy to swirl around her, her appointment by President Reagan as chairwoman of the National Advisory Committee on Oceans and Atmosphere.

"(District of Columbia) too small to be a state but too large to be an asylum for the mentally deranged."
— Anne Gorsuch Burford

"It's a nothing-burger," she said, adding: "They meet three times a year. They don't do anything. It's a joke.

"He (Reagan) said he wanted to appoint me to something and he did."

The Senate voted 74-19 Tuesday in favor of a non-binding resolution urging Reagan to withdraw Mrs. Burford's appointment to the environmental panel.

The resolution said she "did virtually everything but carry out her responsibilities to the environment" during her tenure at the EPA.

Reagan, however, said he was standing by Mrs. Burford's appointment.

Asked about the Senate resolution, Mrs. Burford initially refused to answer, saying she was in Vail "to party." But later she noted that the resolution had been sponsored by Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass.

"To hear that kind of morality from him — I mean, doesn't that make you just die?" she said.

Some members of the Advisory Committee on Oceans and Atmosphere expressed surprise Saturday at her remarks that the panel is "joke."

In her speech, Mrs. Burford outlined what she called some of the commandments of Washington and Democrats: "Thou shalt spend the taxpayers' money like there is no tomorrow;" "Thou shall get your face on the evening news if Anne Burford is testifying before your subcommittee," and "Thou shalt not come to Washington without a criminal lawyer by your side."

Mrs. Burford resigned as EPA administrator on March 9, 1983, in the wake of investigations by six congressional committees into allegations of mismanagement at the agency. She was one of 12 top EPA officials to resign or be fired.

A Justice Department investigation cleared her of any wrongdoing.

She said she had gone to Washington "to help the president carry out the promises he made to voters who swept him into office — decentralization of government, regulatory reform, more environmental protection for fewer taxpayer dollars."

She said her efforts to streamline and reform the EPA were played down during her tenure as head of that agency.

"Very little of this was ever reported," she said. "I estimate that of all the coverage of EPA in my two years as administrator, only half was related to the environment and approximately one-fourth was accurate," she said.

Panel members express surprise over Burford's remarks

WASHINGTON (AP) — Several members of the federal environmental advisory panel that Anne Gorsuch Burford is to take over this week expressed surprise Saturday that their new leader considers the agency a "nothing-burger...a joke."

"I guess if she feels that way, it's curious that she accepted the job," said Don Walsh of San Pedro, Calif., a member of the National Advisory Committee on Oceans and Atmosphere.

"My own attitude has been that the law gives us what looks like a pretty important assignment. If the president of the United States asks you to serve on something like this, you...ought to take it seriously," added FitzGerald Bemis of Richmond, Va., another committee member.

Mrs. Burford, who resigned last year as head of the Environmental Protection Agency during six congressional investigations of her work, was selected by President Reagan earlier this month to serve as chairman of the 18-member independent advisory committee.

Last Tuesday, the Republican-controlled Senate voted 79-14 to ask the president to withdraw Mrs. Burford's appointment, which does not require Senate confirmation. The president said he would not. A similar non-binding resolution could reach the House floor for a vote this week.

On Thursday, 12 Democrats and one Republican introduced legislation to requrie Senate confirmation of the committee members.

Asked about the appointment following a speech in Vail, Colo. on Friday, Mrs. Burford referred to the committee as a "nothing burger."

"They meet three times a year. They don't do anything. It's a joke," she said, "He (Reagan) said he wanted to appoint me to something and he did."

When news of Mrs. Burford's remarks became known Saturday, Reagan was leaving for the opening ceremonies of the Olympic Games in Los Angeles.

B.J. Cooper, spokesman for Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldridge, whose department has more to do with the work of the committee than any other, declined to comment. "We have no direct authority over the committee, although it falls under us for budget purposes. It's an indepedent advisory committee to the White House," Cooper said.

"I'm surprised to hear her say that," outgoing chairman John A. Knauss of Kingston, R.I., said in a telephone interview, but he declined to comment further. Mrs. Burford succeeds Knauss this week.

Founded in 1972, the committee studies issues associated with the oceans and atmosphere and produces advisory reports for Congress and the administration, mostly dealing with the Commerce Department's National Atmospheric and Oceanic Administration.

Alleged IRA member arrested in California

LOS ANGELES (AP) — An alleged member of the Irish Republican Army who has spent time in prison on weapons and explosives charges has been arrested in Southern California, the FBI said Saturday.

Robert Hunter was charged with making false statements for a U.S. visa application, FBI agent Paul De Flores said, adding he could not say the exact location of the arrest or why Hunter was in the area.

Authorities have been wary of possible terrorist activity during the Olympic Games, which began Saturday.

Hunter was arraigned Friday on a charge of giving false statements in an application for a U.S. visa in Northern Ireland, De Flores said.

Family sues over PCPs

BRAZIL, Ind. (AP) — A family is seeking $17 million in a lawsuit for health problems and property damage allegedly caused by dioxin-and PCP-contaminated oil applied to the road in front of their farm.

In the suit filed Friday, Mack and Caroline McCullough and their son sued the Clay County Board of Commissioners and two firms that allegedly supplied and applied the materials under county contract. The firms have denied the materials contained contaminants.

The suit says the materials "contained lethal, pernicious and destructive contaminants, namely dioxin and or pentachlorophenol (PCP)." It also claims the family members have suffered poisoning.

Desert quake unnoticed

TWENTYNINE PALMS, Calif. (AP) — A mild earthquake that struck in the desert near a U.S. Marine training base went unnoticed, even by people near its epicenter.

The quake, measuring 3.4 on the Richter scale, was centered nine miles northwest of here when it struck at 12:42 p.m. Friday, said Dennis Meredith, a spokesman for California Institute of Technology in Pasadena.

Marine Sgt. Barbara Wilkens at the Marine Corps Training Center near Twentynine Palms, 100 miles east of Los Angeles, said she didn't feel the quake at the military base.

The sheriff's department received no calls about the temblor, said Deputy Dewey Lewis of the San Bernardino County Sheriff's Department.

'Radio rattlers' tracked

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — Tiny radio transmitters fed to eastern diamondback rattlesnakes are helping a scientist keep track of the mating habits of the feared but lonely reptile.

Once thought to fancy mating in the spring, the snake actually is attracted to the opposite sex in the heat of August, says Bruce Means of Florida State University.

Means believes female snakes emit an odor that the male picks up with his tongue and nose.

"The snakes must be communicating this way because the only other way would be by sound, and snakes don't hear," he said. "If we can prove that the females do emit an airborne scent that males detect, it will be the first time such a mechanism has been shown to operate in reptiles."

All mammals, including humans, give off sex scents, Means said.

Home health care would cut VA costs

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — The Veterans Administration's health care costs could be cut subtantially if more emphasis was put on high-quality home health care, an agency study says.

The findings, which were released Friday, show the daily cost of home health care to the VA averaged $14.98, compared with the average cost of $94.97 a day for comparable patients in VA nursing home units and $50.99 a day in community nursing homes.

The average cost of a day in a VA hospital was $207.99, considerably lower than in private hospitals, the study also said.

Ruthann Swanson, coordinator of the Minneapolis VA's Hospital-Based Home Health Care Program, and Judith Karklins, who heads a similar VA program in Little Rock, Ark., examined the costs for home treatment of 4,000 VA patients across the country.

The home programs include a physician who makes house calls, nurses, a nursing assistant or health aide, a social worker, a rehabilitation medicine therapist and a dietician.

The Minneapolis group has 11 staff members, 10 of whom make house calls and a secretary. At the moment, they are caring for 60 patients, Ms. Swanson said.

The group does a lot of teaching of family members who will help with therapy, Ms. Swanson said.

"We do a lot of things to help people get organized. The VA can provide any durable medical equipment required, such as beds, wheelchairs, walkers, lifts, mattresses that protect you against skin ulcers, grab bars to help you get in and out of tubs, raises for toilet seats. All of that goes into the cost."

She said health workers usually visit patients once or twice a week for 1 to 1½ hours each time and less frequently as time goes on.

Ms. Swanson said her study is imperfect because the patients studied were not randomly assigned to various settings.

"We do not have strong comparison data showing that a patient in one or another setting would be just as well served at any moment in any of the three places," she said.

She said three kinds of patients are referred for home health care:

— Terminally ill patients for whom intensive medical care would be unavailing;

— The elderly with many medical problems who see a physician regularly;

— Patients with specific needs, such as stroke victims who need rehabilitation, amputees who need help developing skills with an artificial leg and diabetes patients who need help.

Ferraro's first week full of surprises

By PEGGY SIMPSON
Hearst News Service

Ferraro

WASHINGTON — State legislators were curious enough to turn out by the thousands; a Republican-dominated businesswomen's group broke ranks with President Reagan; Italian-American Democrats talked of stemming the flow to the Republican Party; the White House stumbled over attempts to find a good line of attack.

The object of this activity: Rep. Geraldine Ferraro, chosen by Democratic presidential nominee Walter Mondale as the first woman vice presidential candidate in history.

Her first week as nominee had a few glitches, among them reports that her husband's real estate firm is renting space to a pornography firm in Manhattan.

She also was preoccupied with choosing campaign managers with enough experience to help her with a running start on the uphill trek to the November prize. Another condition was that they also needed to understand how to capitalize on her drawing power for all women, including Republicans and independents.

On balance, however, there were far more highs than lows.

THIS WEEK, the Mondale-Ferraro duo will take its historic show on the road. The two will start with a joint rally in Ferraro's hometown of Queens, go on to Cleveland, then to Jackson, Miss., and finally to the Texas cities of Austin, Houston and San Antonio.

The agenda reflects the battleground of the fall campaign against Reagan and Vice President Bush. They will be following a hastily arranged Reagan-Bush blitz of the South, including Texas, where the incumbents suggested that southerners had been insulted at the Democrats' selection of two northern liberals on the ticket.

Ferraro's first week was dramatized by a coup: an unprecedented endorsement of Ferraro by the 65-year-old National Federation of Business and Professional Women (BPW), whose 155,000 members are 43 percent Republican and 42 percent Democratic. Many of them, including the outgoing and incoming national presidents, are Republican business executives who have been alienated by Reagan's opposition to the Equal Rights Amendment and legal abortions and by the administration's lax enforcement of some civil rights laws.

In addition to the BPW endorsement, there was a new Gallup Poll published in Newsweek that showed the Mondale-Ferraro team two points ahead of Reagan-Bush.

FERRARO ALSO showed the potential of being a good fighting sidekick to the more staid Mondale — the ability to dissect Reagan's claims that all's well in America, including with the poor, by coming up with facts that call those claims to question.

She gave that a trial run in Boston before 2,000 state legislators and lobbyists at a luncheon for the National Conference of State Legislatures. Reagan had said no one had put facts and figures behind their accusations — most recently Ferraro's accusations — that his budget cuts had "devastated" the poor.

She took him up on the challenge by quoting from nonpartisan congressional research studies to document that a half million more persons have been pushed below the poverty line because of the budget cuts.

After an uncertain start, Ferraro won over many of the legislators with her attacks on Reagan's budget cuts, which she said had forced every state to raise taxes to take up the slack in vital programs abandoned on the federal level.

Her too-brisk speaking style may be the least of the problems facing Ferraro.

She is under pressure, in her campaign appointments and in her scheduling, to heal the deepening chasm between blacks and white feminists that became visible to all at the San Francisco convention, where delegates pledged to the Rev. Jesse Jackson agreed with him that while southerners got former Carter budget director Bert Lance and the women got Ferraro, blacks got nothing.

"SHE'S EXPECTED to be the healer and there is going to be a lot put on her. It may not be fair. It may not be anything she is prepared for. But she is going to have to deal with the anger of black women," said Polly Williams, a state representative from Milwaukee, who was a Jackson delegate in San Francisco.

"Jackson touched all those people who don't belong to any organized group. He brought them into the fold. Mondale has got to speak and touch the insides of people. He's got to figure out how to bring them in. So far, he's not addressing the concerns of the locked-out people," Williams said. And while Mondale delays, she said, Ferraro will take the heat.

When she spoke to the 7,500 members of the oldest black sorority, Alpha Kappa Alpha, Wednesday night, Ferraro had been expected to introduce new campaign aides — including, perhaps a "healing" appointment of a former Jackson activist, ex-Rep. Shirley Chisholm, as a campaign adviser. She didn't introduce anyone because negotiations still continued for the day-to-day top campaign jobs. As a result, she got a cordial response but not much more.

Next Tuesday, Mondale and Ferraro tackle the black backlash headon with a joint appearance in Cleveland at the National Urban League convention.

FERRARO APPARENTLY is proving a magnet, as expected, for the "Yuppies" who had followed Sen. Gary Hart.

Washington State Rep. Max Vekich, of Grays Harbor, a Hart backer, said, "Ferraro may be the key to keeping Hart and Jackson votes. She has a very positive effect.

Woman's efforts unite town in face of tragedy

SAN YSIDRO, Calif. (AP) — Gloria Salas knew, by name, only a few who were killed or wounded on San Ysidro's day of horror, but no heart was heavier than her own.

For two days, she wept. She wept and pondered, in her sorrow, what she could do to ease the grief of her townspeople and her town. So much grief.

On the third day, the course of events led her to decide what she would do.

"They came and cleaned it up so quickly," she says. "They put in new windows, new doors, fixed everything. A man from McDonald's said they didn't want to leave an empty shell, to remind us what happened. I understand that.

"But then he said they were going to open for business again as soon as possible. That is what he said, and the dead had not even been buried yet. It was as if nothing had happened there. That seemed wrong to me."

McDonald's Corp., of course, was blameless in the bloodbath of July 18.

The madman who heard God's voice and hated God's world and demonically gunned down 21 human beings just happened to have chosen McDonald's, a pleasant gathering place on this town's main street, to commit the worst mass killing in a single day in the nation's history.

BUT, NO. McDonald's will not reopen that place of wretched memory. The company made that decision, a spokesman said, because of "the sentiment of the community."

Until Gloria Salas decided what it was she could do, in her own way, to ease the anguish of the town, that sentiment went unexpressed. And all that she did was to heed the cry of her conscience and her culture.

That third day after the massacre, she rummaged about her house, found paper and a marking pencil, and made a sign. She taped the sign to the red brick wall in front of the kiddie playground located, in glaring irony, just in front of the place of the dying. The sign said:

"Dolor en San Ysidro."

Well, no one had to read a sign to know there was sadness in San Ysidro. But Gloria Salas was not through. She taped another sign to the brick wall:

"Unidos en esta Tragedia."

She stood beside the wall and asked the people who passed by, people she recognized, to sign a piece of paper to show that they were "united in this tragedy."

She thought that if they faced their sadness together it would be easier to endure. She told them that it might be possible to do this in the traditional way, which she did not have to explain, and which many who listened to her doubted was possible.

"WE ARE Mexican people. We have our customs. When someone is killed for no — how do you say it? — provocation, we make a..." She paused and searched for the English word. "We make a shrine.

"We put a little cross, some flowers, some sign of our respect. If it were a highway accident, we would put it right at the roadside, where the spirit of the person left. That is our custom. That is all I want.

"I want to make a shrine at this spot. A little garden. Maybe a few benches. It is our custom."

At first, many of the people of San Ysidro were reluctant to sign Gloria Salas's paper. Survival had taught them to keep a low profile, not to get involved in matters they don't understand. Even the parish priest, at first, cautioned against the idea.

To make a little shrine, the restaurant would have to go. That would mean dealing with a big corporation, maybe also government officials. Many in San Ysidro find it difficult, even threatening, to deal with strangers.

San Ysidro, a town of 14,000, is politically a part of San Diego. Years ago, though, it was its own town and, in spirit and culture, remains so. It is, in effect, an American extension of Tijuana, the Mexican town across the border. The language of San Ysidro is Spanish. The signs in the supermarket are in Spanish. Many of the residents, especially the older ones, speak no English.

THAT IS ONE reason why McDonald's was such a popular place. It was, in a predominantly Mexican setting, unmistakably American.

"Americans like to cross the border and eat tacos," said Jose Cruz, a Tijuana resident who signed Gloria Salas's paper. "So do Mexicans like to come over and eat burgers and fries." Eight of the 21 who died in McDonald's were from Tijuana.

Gloria Salas is typical of many who make their home in San Ysidro.

She was born, in 1946, in San Luis Potosi, near Mexico City, one of seven sisters and two brothers. When her father died in 1970 her mother, a government employee, moved to Tijuana. Gloria went, too, lured by the riches she had heard lay just across the border.

When her former husband went back to Mexico, Ms. Salas and her three children moved to San Ysidro to be near her mother, who was ill and has since died. Now Ms. Salas works in a beauty shop.

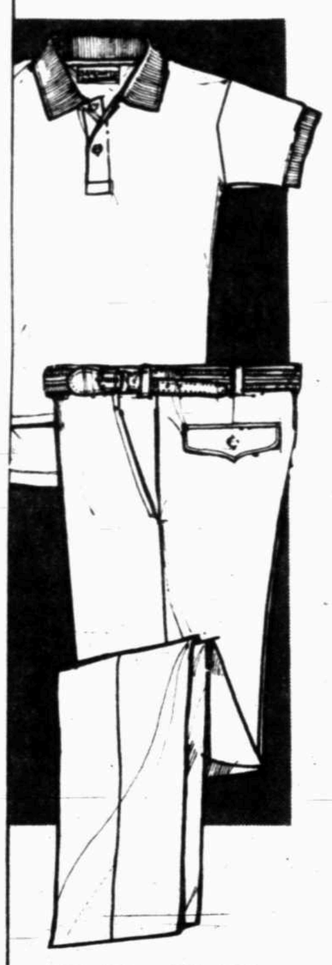

The initial reluctance to sign Gloria Salas's paper, to get involved, soon vanished. As the dead went to their graves in funeral after funeral, on both sides of the border, the shock of the crime gave way to the enormity of it, individual grief became community grief

Mrs. Salas is a woman as shy as she is determined. She is not one you would expect to lead a crusade.

BUT THAT IS not too grand a word to describe what Ms. Salas's quest became. Her list of names that began as an expression of mutual mourning grew to nearly 5,000. The press and officialdom interpreted them as a "petition" to raze McDonald's.

Mubarak urges U.S., Israel to revive talks

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — President Hosni Mubarak on Saturday urged the United States and Israel to revive Middle East peace talks following November's U.S. presidential election, and pledged Egypt would deal with any new Israeli government.

Answering reporters' questions in the Mediterranean port of Alexandria, Mubarak said: "I hope there is a strong push to the peace process in the region after an Israeli government is formed and after the American elections are finished."

Mubarak said he was willing to deal "with any government which the Israeli people choose, whether it's Likud or Labor or any other party."

But he made clear Egypt will not return its ambassador to Tel Aviv until Israel withdraws its troops from Lebanon, makes progress on solving the Palestinian problem, and resolves a border dispute with Cairo.

Mubarak withdrew the ambassador in September 1982 following the massacre of Palestinian civilians by Israeli-allied Christian militiamen in Beirut refugee camps under Israeli military control.

Mubarak's comments, distributed by the official government Middle East News Agency, were the latest in a series of appeals by the Egyptians for a greater U.S. role in peace negotiations following the July 23 Israeli elections.

The elections saw neither the Likud bloc of Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir nor the Labor Party of Shimon Peres win enough parliamentary seats to form a strong, new government. Both Labor and Likud now are negotiating with smaller parties, trying to form a coalition government.

In an interview published Saturday by the weekly newspaper Akhbar el-Yom, Prime Minister Kamal Hassan Aly said the inconclusive results of the Israeli election mean there is little chance for reviving the peace process until after the U.S. presidential vote.

"We have said before that the American elections are without a doubt a delaying factor in the process of returning to efforts for peace," Aly said.

Aly said revival of the peace process "has to come through an American move in the future."

Lebanese army bulldozes barricades to unify capital

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — The Lebanese army bulldozed barricades and detonated mines in central Beirut Saturday in the second phase of a plan to unify the capital. But in mountains overlooking the city, government troops fought Druse militiamen for three hours.

About 4,000 troops of the army's 3rd, 5th, 6th and 8th brigades deployed at first light in an 800-yard-wide strip along the "green line" that has separated Christian east from mostly Moslem west Beirut for nine years.

"There is no longer east or west Beirut. It's now a united Lebanon with a united capital," Brig. Gen. Mohammed Haj, commander of the operation, told reporters.

At nightfall, however, soldiers and Druse militiamen engaged in a three-hour duel involving artillery and tank cannons around the central Lebanese mountain town of Souk el-Gharb, which overlooks the capital.

Distant thuds of shellfire rattled Beirut during the flareup. Police said it took three cease-fire agreements to stop the fighting. Police said they had no casualty report.

Prime Minister Rashid Karami flew to Saudi Arabia soon after the Beirut operation began, trying to drum up political and financial support to help stabilize and reconstruct Lebanon. Karami made a similar visit to Syria on Thursday.

Arab news services said Karami planned to ask the Saudis to intercede with the United States for a complete withdrawal of Israeli forces from southern Lebanon. Saudi Arabia is one of Washington's closest friends in the Arab world.

All crossings between Christian east and mostly Moslem west Beirut will be open to free traffic on "Army Day," which will be Wednesday, Haj said.

The government's plan calls for a militia-free neutral zone in central Beirut. Warring militias were allowed to maintain offices in the three-mile-long zone with two guards armed with only a pistol each posted at entrances.

Arafat says both Israeli parties enemies of Palestinians

KUWAIT (AP) — Yasser Arafat, chairman of the Palestine Liberation Organization, said Saturday that both of Israel's major parties were enemies of the Palestinians and the Arabs must rely on themselves to solve the Arab-Israeli dispute.

"It is a tragedy to expect the solution to come from our enemy, any solution must be an Arab one imposed by the Arab nation," the guerrilla leader told a news conference here.

Arafat conferred with the emir of Kuwait, Sheik Jaber al-Ahmed al-Sabah and the crown prince and prime minister, Sheik Saad al-Abdullah, before going on to Iraq. The main topic of the news conference was Arafat's reaction to the inconclusive elections in Israel.

"No one in the PLO believes that there is any difference between Likud and Labor," said Arafat.

Nationalism winner in Israeli elections

An Analysis

By MARCUS ELIASON

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — The results of Israel's election point to a clear victory for rightist nationalism over the old political order.

Neither of the country's two main parties could claim a definitive triumph. After seven years under the spellbinding sway of Menachem Begin, Israel feels divided and leaderless.

"Those who call themselves leaders aren't leading...They are simply hurrying along a step ahead of a frustrated public which threatens to trample them if they slow down for a moment," wrote Amir Oren in the pro-Labor daily Davar.

The Labor Party and the Likud bloc are stalemated and the balance of power in the future government rests with 13 other parties, some of them religious splinter groups and right-wing zealots who now have political bargaining power. The moderate right, while relieved that Labor did not win the victory predicted by early opinion polls, is not rejoicing in the streets as it did in 1977 and 1981. And the moderate left has taken Labor's unexpectedly small edge over the governing Likud bloc as a devastating blow.

Likud, under Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir, lost seven seats in Parliament, dropping to 41 seats. Labor, led by Shimon Peres, lost three seats, going to 44.

Shamir has a better chance of forming Israel's next government, because Likud has a wider range of possible coalition partners, many of which are either religious or right-wing nationalist parties.

Labor was ousted by Likud in the 1977 election, after 29 years in office.

Labor supporters see the July 23 election as climaxing a seven-year shift to the right, which is expected to continue for simple demographic reasons: The Likud constituency is mainly Sephardic, or Middle Eastern Jewish, and the Sephardim, who have a higher birthrate, make up 55 percent of Israel's 3.5 million Jews.

For the moderately leftist, college-educated Israelis who are Labor's main constituency, the election was a catastrophe, in which an unabashed Arab-baiter like Rabbi Meir Kahane got over 23,000 votes and was elected to Parliament.

The 1984 election was Likud's acid test.

Begin, its revered leader, had retired into seclusion, broken, dispirited and reluctant to give his successor, Shamir, more than tepid election endorsement. The economy was out of control, with 400 percent annual inflation. Israel's occupation of southern Lebanon had become a debacle. The Middle East peace process was frozen.

The stage seemed set for a convincing Labor victory.

Labor's mistake, says right-wing columnist Yosef Lapid, was the patronizing tone of its election propaganda, "as if it was ready to forgive the electorate for going wrong in the previous election, if it would just admit its mistake. Nobody likes to change his position as if he were a sinner."

Likud's strength with the predominant Sephardim helped Shamir. To Sephardic voters who feel discriminated against by the Labor Party's Ashkenazim elite from European countries, Likud is more than a party. It is a home and a political identity. It offers them a sense of belonging.

The rising tide of nationalism was another factor, based on decades of Arab hostility that have created a "Fortress Israel" attitude and stamped out the old consensus that sooner or later, in some way, peace would come.

Many Likud supporters today have no such belief in peace moves. To them, it's Israel against a world that put the Jewish people in gas chambers and would do so again, given a chance.

Beside such existential issues, practical matters like Likud's handling of the economy pale.

Sooner or later, perhaps within months, the country may have to call elections again, and there is no reason to expect it to emerge any less divided.

That leaves the option of Labor and Likud joining forces in a national unity government to pull together for economic reconstruction. But a unity government would require religious nationalists and dovish Marxists to work together — an unlikely prospect in the heated political atmosphere of Israel.

Moderate Israelis brought up on the doctrines of the country's socialist founders are especially alarmed at the rise of the militant right in this election.

No fewer than eight of the new Parliament's 120 members are in what political scientist Dan Horowitz calls "the tribal stream" — the mystic Israel-firsters who find justification for their every deed in the Bible.

"Every election makes the previous election's extremists look moderate," said Avi Ravitzky, a member of a dovish religious group, on Israel television.

The Likud used to look extreme until the West Bank settler movement brought the Tehiya Party to prominence. Then came a Jewish vigilante underground waging vengeance attacks on West Bank Arabs, Ravitzky said.

"Now comes Kahane and the underground disavows him. And within his own movement Kahane is a moderate compared with some of his colleagues," he said.

Simple measures could save millions of lives, world health study says

WASHINGTON (AP) — Millions of unnecessary deaths worldwide could be prevented through simple, and relatively inexpensive, health care measures, a study by a Washington research group said Saturday.

"Though their health care needs differ drastically, the rich and the poor do have one thing in common: both die unnecessarily," said William U. Chandler in the study "Improving World Health: A Least Cost Strategy."

"The rich die of heart disease and cancer, the poor die of diarrhea, pneumonia and measles," said Chandler, a senior researcher at the Worldwatch Institute, an independent, non-profit research organization.

High infant mortality rates in developing nations reduce the capacity of the population for learning and work, for human development, Chandler wrote, while cancer and heart disease rob developed nations of their most productive citizens — those in their middle age.

"Fortunately, major improvements in world health can be made with cost-effective preventive and primary care measures," he reported.

"The most important of these are providing maternal and child care for the world's poorest people, clean drinking water and sanitation facilities to the third of the world's population that lacks them, diet education for populations at high risk of heart disease and cancer, control of tobacco products, and basic research for low-cost cures," he wrote.

Noting that 17 percent of all deaths in developing countries are associated with diarrheal infections, Chandler commented that "simple diarrhea will kill more people in this decade than the Bubonic Plague throughout the Middle Ages."

Pneumonia will take a comparable toll, he added, and most victims of these two diseases will be children.

Chandler estimated that five million to 10 million lives could be saved annually by extending primary health care to the world's poor women and children through paramedic workers.

Infant mortality rates have been cut in half where this approach has been tried, he said, citing programs in Costa Rica, Sri Lanka and China.

The workers, with only basic training, practice midwifery, teach family planning and breastfeeding techniques, give vaccinations and simple therapy.

"Often the cost is only $2 to $4 per person served each year," he said. And while the large number of people needing aid means the total expense could reach $10 billion, Chandler pointed out that is still less than two-tenths of one percent of the world's economic output.

A large investment in wells and toilets is needed in areas where diarrheal and parasitic diseases are common, but that would still be cost effective, he said.

"Fortunately, several technologies can provide low-cost but safe drinking water and sanitation services. Wells and pumps can be constructed for as little as $25 per person," he reported.

Turning to the developed world, he said, "half of all deaths in middle age due to heart disease and cancer could be prevented. Evidence links these early deaths to tobacco and diet, especially dietary fats and cholesterol."

Low-cost educational measures can go a long way to lower this toll, Chandler wrote, along with effective anti-smoking policies including sharply higher taxes on cigarettes.

"In the United States, an increase in the current tax of about 25 cents to $2 per pack is justified because each pack smoked costs, on average, $2 in health care and lost productivity," wrote Chandler.

He said that "cigarette smoking causes one-third of all cancers, most emphysema and bronchitis, half of asthma and ulcers and one-fifth of heart attacks in the United States." Smoking costs the country more than $45 billion annually in health care costs and lost productivity, he said.

Booby-trapped car explodes outside rebel headquarters

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — A booby-trapped car exploded Saturday outside the headquarters of an Afghan rebel group based in the city of Peshawar near the Afghan border, killing five people and wounding 12, officials said.

Two hours later, an explosion in the refugee-populated border town of Sadda, 75 miles southwest of Peshawar, killed six people and wounded 29, according to the officials. They said the reasons for the attacks had not been determined.

Gulbiddin Hekmetyar, leader of the fundamentalist Islamic Party, blamed Soviet secret police for the 9:10 a.m. attack on his headquarters in Peshawar, 110 miles northwest of Islamabad, that killed four Afghans and one Pakistani.

He was not in the building when the car bomb exploded.

There are intense rivalries among about two dozen guerrilla groups fighting the Soviet troops and Marxist regime in Afghanistan, and local officials speculated the bombs could have been planted by one of the factions.

Witnesses said the car explosion tore a huge hole in the Peshawar building.

"It threw up a column of dust rising to about 200 feet and left a crater some 15-feet-long by six-feet-wide," said Sayed Rasool, an Afghan who saw the blast. "Luckily, the school opposite was closed for the summer holidays. Otherwise, children could have been hurt."

The bombings came days after some Afghan rebel leaders reportedly held a secret meeting in Saudi Arabia in an effort to unite their groups.

Gulbiddin's party issued a statement blaming the Soviet KGB and vowing to retaliate by attacking a military target inside Soviet territory and the Soviet Embassy in the Afghan capital of Kabul.

Other rebel groups have accused Gulbiddin's guerrillas of attacking their units inside Afghanistan, sabotaging weapons' supply lines from Pakistan and kidnapping rivals.

Gulbiddin, an engineering student who fled to Pakistan in the mid-1970s after serving time in an Afghan jail, at one time was regarded as heading the best organized and equipped of the Pakistan-based guerrilla groups.

The Pakistani officials, who spoke on condition they not be identified, said Soviet agents may have been linked to the Peshawar bombing because it is believed they have succeeded in infiltrating some of the rebel groups.

"It's perfectly possible that the KGB want to create resentment among Afghans with the local population because of the huge number of Afghans living there," one of the officials said. "It's possible they want to harass the groups and create an even wider rift amongst them."

Irish Protestant ignites controversy with remark

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — George Seawright, a former member of the Rev. Ian Paisley's Protestant Democratic Unionist Party, has been charged with causing a breach of peace by suggesting that Roman Catholics be incinerated.

Seawright, a member of the Northern Ireland Assembly who was born in Glasgow, Scotland, and came to Northern Ireland a decade ago, was ordered Friday to appear in a Belfast court on Sept.3.

Paisley's party suspended Seawright this month for saying during a June 11 meeting of the education and library board of the Belfast City Council that "taxpayers' money would be better spent on an incinerator" to burn Catholics "and throw in their priests as well."

His remarks touched off angry exchanges between Protestant and Catholic council members and police had to clear the chamber.

Seawright, 34, a member of the council, refused to retract his remarks.

Bomb explodes near store

ROME (AP) — A small bomb exploded early Saturday outside a naval supply store, and the same group that said it bombed an Italian official's home hours earlier claimed responsibility, officials said.

The blast Saturday shattered a door of the Selenia-Elsag Naval Systems Consortium, and broke windows in the area, but injured no one, police said.

On Friday a bomb exploded outside the apartment of Leonetto De Leon, personnel chief for the Italian Ministry of Merchant Marine and editor in chief of Notizie NATO (NATO News). His wife and son were injured.

The Rome newspaper Il Messaggero said it got an anonymous phone call early Saturday in which a woman claimed the bombs were the work of a group not heard of before called "Communists in Struggle Against Imperialism and Armament."

City opens water project

MONTERREY, Mexico (AP) — The government has opened a $192 million supply system designed to meet the water needs of this arid city of 2.5 million people for the next 25 years.

The huge hydroelectric project took four years to complete. Nuevo Leon Gov. Alfonso Martinez Dominguez, who attended the Friday ceremony at the San Roque treatment plant on the outskirts of Monterrey, called it "the project of the century."

Monterrey lies 100 miles south of Texas.

The project includes a dam and an 83-mile-long aqueduct stretching from the dam site in Linares to the San Roque plant.

Monterrey's water shortage became a major health concern five years ago when a severe drought brought water rationing, still in effect.

Olympic Games get off to cheerful start

Hemphill brings torch into stadium, Johnson lights flame

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The 1984 Summer Olympics opened Saturday with a flag-waving American happening, Hollywood style.

A breathtaking spectacle, the ceremonies began with Gershwin, Copeland and Reagan — President Reagan.

He delivered the formal welcome — though he did not deliver it exactly as the Olympic Charter states it — from the Los Angeles Memorial Coliseum to a happy, cheering crowd of 90,000 and a world-wide television audience.

It ended when Gina Hemphill, grandaughter of Jesse Owens, who won four gold medals in the 1936 Berlin Olympics, carried the torch into the stadium and handed it off to Rafer Johnson, gold mnedal winner in the 1960 Rome decathlon.

Johnson jogged up the steps to the peristyle at the east end of the Coliseum where the torch burned for the 1932 games.

At 9:34 p.m., the torch atop the Coliseum burst into flame after first circling the five Olympic rings on the arch below.

Competition begins Sunday, with 12 sports and nine gold medals. The Soviet Union and most of its Eastern-bloc allies are boycotting the Games, but still more nations — 140 — and athletes — 7,800 — are competing than ever before in Olympic history.

GREECE, THE birthplace of the ancient and modern Games, led the march of athletes, while the host United States entered at the end of the line to thunderous ovation from the crowd.

Hours earlier, Reagan, in a "Win-One-for-the Gipper" speech, challenged the U.S. team to give its best, to honor its country, to compete to the fullest. The athletes replied with cheers.

From beginning to end, the crowd at the ceremonies was spirited and happy. Men, women and children clapped and sang. They waved flags. And some cried.

Producer David Wolper had promised a 20-goosebump occasion, and he delivered.

Outside the Colisium, police reported lighter traffic than expected — and no incidents. The weather was perfect though hot, with 90-degree temperatures and few signs of smog.

Church bells peeled at the start of the ceremonies. Then a "rocketman" with a jet backpack landed in the center of the field, the grass painted green for the event. Skywriting planes drew the five interlocking Olympic rings into a clear, blue sky.

A marching band played, a frontier town was built and the band finished its act in an outline of the United States.

It was an opulent production with a cast of thousands and a world-wide audience. Yet the poignant moments were many.

THE ROMANIANS, the only Eastern bloc nation to defy the Soviet boycott, were greeted with a standing ovation. The Chinese, participating in the Summer Olympics for the first time since 1952, were cheered warmly. So were the Yugoslavs, hosts for the 1984 Winter Olympics.

There were the athletes from El Salvador, a country torn by revolution marching for Olympic pride.

Some of the biggest cheers of the crowd were reserved for nations reflecting the broad ethnic mix of Los Angeles — the Chinese, the Mexicans, the Koreans and the Japanese.

African athletes paraded in flowing robes. And the New Zealand team included Neroli Fairhall, an archer who is a paraplegic and will shoot from her wheelchair.

The loudest, longest cheers were for the U.S. team, decked in red, white and blue uniforms. Flag bearer Ed Burke, a three-time Olympian in the hammer throw, grasped the flagstaff with one hand.

Everywhere there were flags. The Stars and Stripes. Flags of the other countries. Scores of flags with the Olympic rings. Even the Coliseum became a giant flag of every participating nation, as a stadium card stunt turned a sea of shirtsleeves into an international wall of color.

THEN, FINALLY, the flame arrived.

It had criss-crossed the country in a 9,000-mile, 82-day journey. And it entered the Coliseum to end the longest-running question of the Los Angeles Games — who would carry it into the stadium and light the torch?

The answer was Owen's granddaughter — and Johnson.

The Games having begun, its's now time for the Olympic events to begin.

Hearn's grand slam gives Mets 9-5 win over Cubs

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

Jackson's Ed Hearn was worried about spending the night at Cubs Stadium Saturday night, so he took matters in his own bat and belted a dramatic eighth inning grand slam homer to give the Mets a 9-5 verdict over the Midland Cubs.

This was a game that looked to be in the Cubs' hip pocket heading into the eighth, but when Hearn crossed the plate after his second grand slam this year, the Mets had scored six times, erasing a 5-3 Cub lead.

"With the score tied at 5-5, I was afraid we would be here all night with extra innings, so it was really nice to come through with the homer in that spot," said Hearn, who was about to head for a good night's rest.

"I wasn't really looking for a certian pitch in that situation with the bases loaded and two outs. I was just battling him (David Rosenhaun) because he was pitching me very tough.

"I like being in a situation like that just as anyone on this team or any other would like that chance. I'm no different than anyone else in baseball," Hearn said. "I hit a pinch hit grand slam against Tulsa in the first part of July, but that one just brought us to within one run and we lost. This was better because it won a game."

The eighth was a disaster as far as the Cub pitching staff was concerned. Starter Tandy Charley looked to be on his way to a victory, but gave up a one-out homer to Marlin McPhail, his first of the year, and a double to Al Pedrique.

The Cubs then brought in Ron Kaufman who got one out while walking the bases full and forcing in a run. Rosenhaun then came in to give up Hearn's seventh homer of the year, a real blast deep over the left field fence.

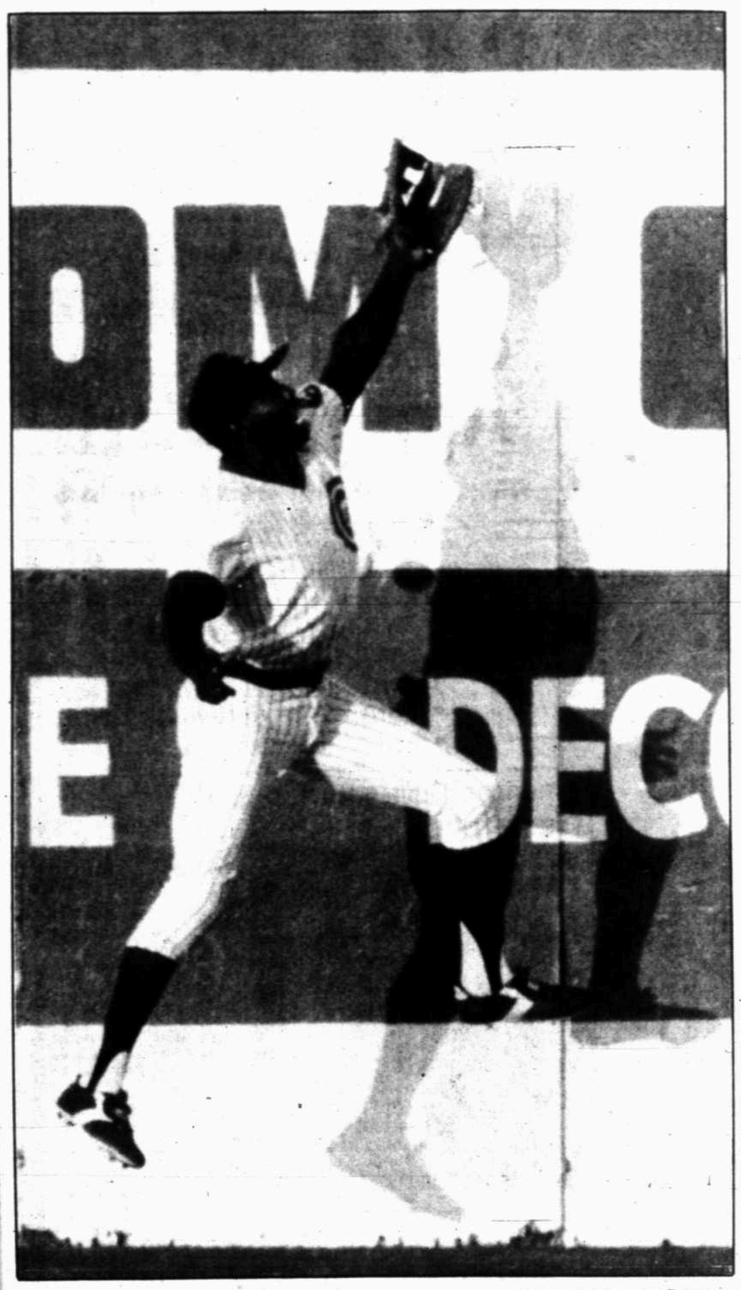

Jackson had a 2-0 lead in the second on RBI singles by starting pitcher Floyd Youmans and Lenny Dykstra, but the Cubs came back in the bottom of the frame with three runs on just one hit as Youmans couldn't find the plate.

Youmans walked two and hit Steve Lake to set up Charley's two-run, bad hop single over short for two runs. Later Mike Brumley scored from third on a wild pitch by Youmans.

The Cubs then left the bases loaded in the third when Youmans got Lake on strikes, but the Cubs got two more in the fourth when Brumley hit his third homer of the year to lead off the fourth and Darrin Jackson socred from third on another Youmans misfire at the plate.

The Mets closed the gap to 5-3 in the fifth when Dave Cochrane knocked in his 61st RBI of the year.

Caulkins, 21, has aged gracefully

By Chris Jenkins
Copley News Service

She's aged gracefully, this grand old lady of aquatics. Imagine what she'll be like at 22.

Everywhere she goes to swim, everywhere she looks, Tracy Caulkins is surrounded by teenyboppers. Over there is Michelle "Cha Cha" Richardson, 15. That's Jenna Johnson, 16. The next wave of American swimmers has arrived, engulfing much of Caulkins' generation. But Caulkins endures.

"When most of them were eight or nine years old, Tracy was on top," says Nancy Hogshead, a year older than Caulkins and also a member of the United States Olympic swimming team. "Tracy's still on top."

For the record, Caulkins is still only 21 years old and not at all matronly. She's matured into a young woman, but not to the point that she's lost her youthful enthusiasm. It's just that, well, she's been around about as long as water. Aquatics' history book is full of her.

THE LAST time there was such a durable American swimmer, in fact, he donned a loincloth and went by the name of Tarzan. Caulkins now holds 47 national championships, long ago surpassing the previous record of 36, set by Johnny Weissmuller. She has broken U.S. records a total of 61 times and been the outstanding swimmer at the World Championships. At the age of 15 she became the youngest recipient of the Sullivan Award as the country's top amateur athlete.

The only deprivation has been an Olympic gold medal — she would have won several if Americans had been allowed to compete at Moscow in 1980 — and that void will be filled at the XXIII Summer Games.

Caulkins arrived as the favorite to take at least a couple of golds, but also in the role of teen idol and team leader. The kids speak of her as a goddess. Even some of the older swimmers, Hogshead says, look to Caulkins for advice and inspiration. So it will be Sunday when Caulkins swims the 400 individual medley.

"The first day sets the trend for everybody," Caulkins says. "I want to fire up the rest of the team."

That's pretty typical of Caulkins, although it's a side of her that's rarely seen by anyone besides swimmers. For all her championships, they say, Caulkins is the warmest person in the sport. Her friendship, say some of the other veterans, has kept them going.

Cynthia "Sippy" Woodhead, for one, hit the dregs a couple years ago. An independent sort who usually leads with her emotions, Woodhead was bouncing from team to team and college to college, all in the pursuit of happiness and winning times. Woodhead, remember, once had been the world's premier freestyle swimmer. Now she was having trouble just making the finals of national events.

"I was dying for her," Caulkins says. "It bothered me because I had so many titles, so much going for me. I knew Sippy'd pick herself back up, and I told her that. We talked and talked and talked. Mostly, though, I just gave her hugs. That was my way of letting her know that I still believed in her, that I cared for her, that I'd still love her if she won or lost."

GRADUALLY, STARTING with last year's national meet, Woodhead began to win again. She won the 200 freestyle at the Pan American Games, then took first in the same event at the Olympic Trials. Caulkins disclaims any credit for Woodhead's resurgence. Woodhead disclaims Caulkins' disclaimer.

There's a flip side to that nice little story, however. Admittedly, Woodhead never gave much thought to the fact that Caulkins might need somebody to lean on as well.

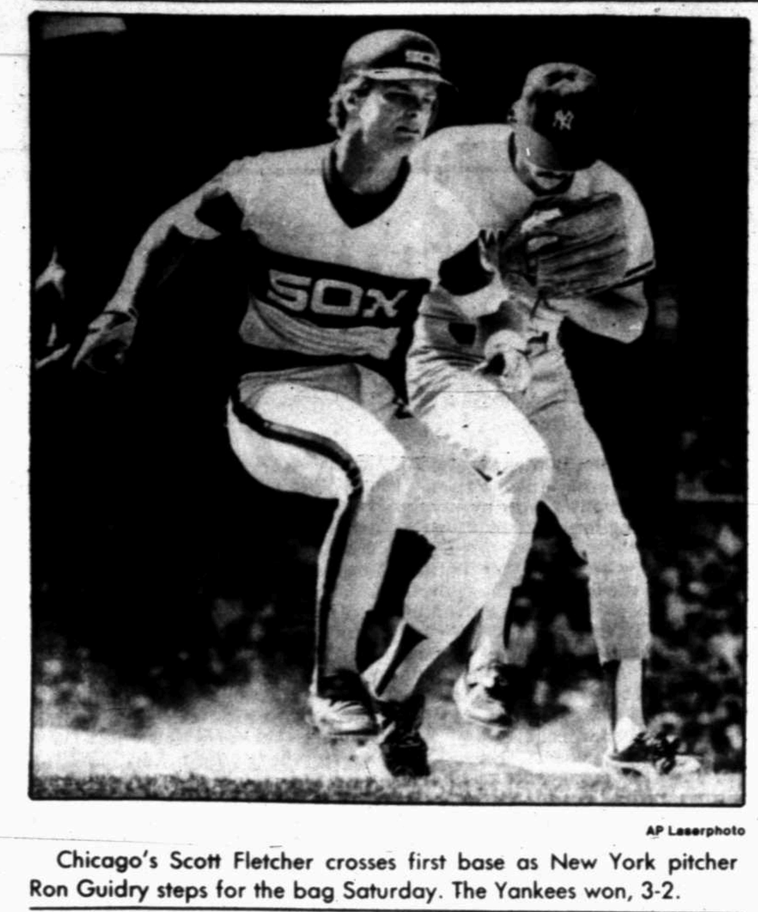

"People think that just because I'm quote Tracy Caulkins that I need fewer hugs," she says. "That's not true. I need them as much as anybody. Sippy and I talked about that, too. I felt I was there to help her and she felt bad because she couldn't help me."

In fairness to everybody else, seldom has Caulkins gone through slumps, certainly not the severe self-doubts that have plagued virtually every other holdover from the 1980 Olympic team. All anybody noticed was how she continued to amass national short-course and long-course titles. And few bothered to look any closer. Why?

"I don't know if I could do anything for her," Woodhead says. "Tracy's always been looked at as the leader. Nobody ever sees her angry or upset about anything. She went through some of the same things I did, but it didn't show because she's Tracy Caulkins. Even when she was struggling, she was so far ahead of everybody else that nobody even noticed.

"It didn't really dawn on me until (former U.S. swimming star) John Naber pointed it out to me at the Pan American Games. He said she didn't have anybody. He was right. Who does somebody like Tracy talk to? That's sad."

Rangers add to Jays' string of woes

Associated Press

American League

TORONTO — Larry Parrish hit a two-run homer and Pete O'Brien added a solo shot as the Texas Rangers topped Toronto 5-4 Saturday night to extend the Blue Jays' losing streak to six.

Mike Mason, 7-9, allowed only three singles in 4⅓ innings after taking over in the fifth. Dave Schmidt finished up after Mason was struck on the shin by a Jesse Barfield line drive in the ninth inning. He gained his sixth save.

Texas opened the scoring in the first on O'Brien's 13th home run of the season, off Toronto starter Luis Leal.

The Blue Jays tied it in the bottom of the inning when Willie Upshaw doubled home Dave Collins, who had singled and stolen second.

Buddy Bell led off the third with a walk and Parrish followed with his 16th homer for a 3-1 Texas lead.

Brewers 3, Royals 2

MILWAUKEE — Don Sutton pitched a five-hitter over seven innings and Ben Oglivie homered to lift the Milwaukee Brewers to a 3-2 victory over the Kansas City Royals.

Sutton, 10-8, walked two and struck out two. Tom Tellmann went the final two innings, giving up an RBI groundout to Steve Balboni in the ninth, to earn his second save.

Oglivie's homer in the fourth, his seventh of the season, gave the Brewers a 2-0 lead.

Yankees 3, White Sox 2

CHICAGO — Don Mattingly tied the score with a fourth-inning homer and doubled home the winning run in the sixth to lead the New York Yankees to a 3-2 victory over Chicago that sent the White Sox to their sixth straight setback.

Yankee starter Ron Guidry, 9-8, allowed both Chicago runs and seven hits in 6⅓ innings while walking four, striking out six and pitching out of two major jams. Joe Cowley went one inning and Dave Righetti went the final 1⅔ for his 15th save.

After walking Greg Luzinski, Ron Kittle and Greg Walker with two out in the bottom of the ninth, Righetti retired Jerry Dybzinski on a foul pop to end the game. The White Sox stranded 14 runners.

Twins 6, Angels 1

MINNEAPOLIS — The Minnesota Twins, behind Frank Viola's three-hit pitching and Randy Bush's grand slam home run, moved into first place in the American League West with a 6-1 rout of the California Angels.

The victory moved the surprising Twins a half-game ahead of the Angels in the AL West and 3½ games in front of defending West champion Chicago.

Viola, 11-9, allowed only three singles, giving up the Angels' only run on an RBI base hit by Daryl Sconiers in the eighth. The left-hander struck out five and walked five in his seventh complete game.

Bush, the Twins' designated hitter, launched his first career grand slam in the fifth inning off Jim Slaton, 3-5. His 366-foot shot to right field scored Kirby Puckett, Mickey Hatcher and Kent Hrbek. Bush also had two singles.

Indians 6, Orioles 3

BALTIMORE — Tom Waddell relieved Bert Blyleven to squelch a Baltimore rally in the sixth inning, preserving a 6-3 victory for the Cleveland Indians over the Orioles.

Blyleven, 10-4, had allowed only three hits, including a solo homer by Rich Dauer, before the Orioles scored twice and chased him in the sixth.

With runners on first and third following an RBI pinch single by Ken Singleton, who was 8-for-42 lifetime against Blyleven, Waddell came in to retire Rick Dempsey and notch his fourth save.

The Indians scored a gift run in the fourth off Scott McGregor, 12-9, and added three more in the fifth when only one of the runs was driven in.

Red Sox 3, Tigers 2

DETROIT — A throwing error by Detroit third baseman Howard Johnson allowed two Boston runs to score in the eighth inning as the Red Sox defeated the Tigers 3-2 with sparkling late-inning relief pitching by Mark Clear.

With the Tigers ahead 2-1, Dwight Evans led off the Boston eighth with a walk and went to second on a single by Jim Rice. Evans and Rice both scored when Johnson picked up Tony Armas' slow-rolling infield single and threw the ball into the Boston bullpen for an error.

Bob Stanley, 7-6, who took over from John Henry Johnson in the sixth inning, gained the victory with help in the eighth from Clear, who pitched out of jam with runners on second and third and nobody out. Clear went on to pick up his third save.

Niekro continues mastery over Padres with 3-1 win

Associated Press

National League

SAN DIEGO — Joe Niekro continued his career mastery over the San Diego Padres with a five-hitter and Terry Puhl homered to give the Houston Astros a 3-1 victory over the Padres in the first game of a twi-night doubleheader Saturday.

Niekro, 11-8, walked only one batter and struck out four as he hurled his fifth complete game and improved his lifetime record against the Padres to 22-9. Niekro, who has won nine of his last 10 decisions, allowed only one unearned run in the second when the Padres took a 1-0 lead with the help of a throwing error by Houston second baseman Bill Doran.

Houston scored a pair of runs in the third aided by three walks off Andy Hawkins, 5-4. With one out Alan Ashby walked and moved to second on a sacrifice. Doran walked and Craig Reynolds singled to score Ashby. Denny Walling followed with a single to score Doran.

Hawkins did not allow another run until Puhl belted his fourth home run of the season with one out in the sixth.

Cubs 11, Mets 4

NEW YORK — Leon Durham singled home the go-ahead and run Ron Cey, Ryne Sandberg and Henry Cotto each drove in a pair as the Chicago Cubs broke a tie with eight runs in the eighth inning to beat New York 11-4 and shatter the Mets' seven-game winning streak.

The victory pulled Chicago within 3½ games of the National League East-leading Mets, who had won six of their seven straight by one run. When the Mets, who trailed 3-0 after 4½ innings, pulled into a 3-3 tie in the seventh, it looked like another close one.

But with five unearned runs among the eight they scored in the eighth, the Cubs made it a rout. Sandberg started the big inning with a walk off reliever Doug Sisk, 1-4, who came on after starter Ron Darling was lifted for a pinch hitter. Sandberg went to second on a wild pitch and to third on an infield hit by Gary Matthews. Durham singled home the first run of the inning and when Sisk bobbled Keith Moreland's sacrifice bunt the bases were loaded.

Brent Gaff relieved Sisk and balked home another run. Jody Davis was walked intentionally to reload the bases and Cey followed with a two-run single. Pinch-hitter Jay Johnstone was walked intentionally after Gaff fell behind 3-0 and the Mets finally got the first out of the inning when relief pitcher Lee Smith struck out.

Bob Dernier grounded into a forceout at the plate, but Sandberg doubled home two more runs and Cotto, who entered the game as a pinch runner for Matthews earlier in the inning, followed with a two-run single.

Smith, 5-4, pitched 1⅔ innings in relief of Rick Sutcliffe for the victory. He allowed an RBI single in the bottom of the eighth to Darryl Strawberry. George Frazier worked the ninth.

Cardinals 5, Pirates 1

PITTSBURGH — Andy Van Slyke belted a two-run homer during a four-run St. Louis seventh inning and Danny Cox pitched eight strong innings as the Cardinals defeated the Pittsburgh Pirates 5-1.

Willie McGee, in his second game since coming off the disabled list, had a pair of singles, scored twice and singled home the tie-breaking run for the Cardinals, who beat the Pirates for the eighth time without a loss this season.

With the score tied 1-1, Tito Landrum opened the Cardinals' seventh with a double. Loser Jose DeLeon, 6-7, retired the next two batters. McGee then singled to right field, snapping the tie, before Van Slyke hammered his fifth homer of the season over the right-field wall.

Terry Pendleton chased DeLeon with a single and scored on Darrell Porter's double.

Cox, 5-8, came within an inning of the first complete game of his two-season, 30-game major-league career. He allowed seven hits over the first eight innings but gave way to Bruce Sutter after Johnny Ray and Lee Mazzilli opened the Pittsburgh ninth with singles. Sutter went on to record his 25th save.

Dodgers 1, Reds 0

LOS ANGELES — Bob Welch, exiled to the Los Angeles bullpen for two weeks, fired a two-hitter — singles by Gary Redus in the first and ninth innings — and the Dodgers nipped the Cincinnati Reds 1-0.

Redus singled cleanly to start the game and singled again with one out in the ninth after Welch had retired 22 batters in a row following walks to Dave Parker and Duane Walker to start the second inning.

Welch, 7-11, who brought a 4.18 earned run average into the contest, snapped a personal four-game losing streak with his first victory since June 22. He struck out eight.

The Dodgers snapped a 21-inning scoreless drought with an unearned run in the sixth on Mike Marshall's sacrifice fly. Dave Anderson led off with a double and was sacrificed to third by Ed Amelung, playing his first major-league game. Amelung was safe at first when second baseman Ron Oester dropped the throw at first and one out later Marshall's short sacrifice fly to left scored Anderson.

Tom Hume, 3-11, who went six innings, suffered his seventh consecutive loss.

Braves 4, Giants 3

SAN FRANCISCO — Dale Murphy's two-run homer in the first inning sparked the Atlanta Braves to a 4-3 victory over the San Francisco Giants as Rick Mahler and Donnie Moore combined on a seven-hitter.

Claudell Washington doubled with two out in the first and Murphy followed with his 23rd homer, an opposite-field drive over the right-field fence off Mark Davis, 3-11.

Moore pitched the final 1⅓ innings for his 12th save, ending San Francisco's three-game winning streak.

Expos 4, Phillies 1

PHILADELPHIA — Bryn Smith shackled Philadelphia on four hits and Gary Carter knocked in the go-ahead run with a third-inning double as the Montreal Expos defeated the Phillies 4-1.

Smith, 9-8, surrendered an RBI single to Von Hayes in the first inning, then put down the next 11 Phillies in order before allowing a pair of two-out singles in the fourth. Glenn Wilson popped out to end the threat.

Smith, who struck out three and walked two, permitted only one more hit, a single by Ozzie Virgil in the seventh.

With the score tied at 1-1, the Expos took the lead for good in the third inning on Carter's one-out double, knocking in Dawson, who had walked. They added a run in the eighth on Derrel Thomas' RBI double and one more in the ninth on an RBI single by Tim Wallach.

Lost lead isn't discouraging Inkster

TORONTO (AP) — Despite losing a big lead 24-year-old rookie Juli Inkster isn't discouraged.

Inkster, who lost a four-shot lead Saturday with a 3-over-par 75 was her usual breezy, chipper self following her third round in the $330,000 du Maurier Classic golf tournament which put her in a three-way tie for second, one shot back of Betsy King who carded a brilliant 67.

"I struggled all day but I'm only one shot behind and I'm right in it," said Inkster, now tied with Vicki Fergon and Donna White who both shot 69s. "I just played too cautious and you can't do that.

"It's an easy thing to say be aggressive but it's a hard thing to do. Now I've got to come back and be aggressive again."

Inkster said the round will be an easy one to shrug off.

"I've got to," she said. "If I dwell on it I'll just get upset.

"But one shot's nothing. Now it's a dogfight. A lot of people can win it."

The one with the best chance is King, who finished an hour ahead of Inkster. Her round was unusual in that she tore apart the back nine with a four-under 32.

"The front side is the easy nine," she said. "To go four under on the back nine on this course is rare."

Even though she started the day seven shots back, she didn't feel out of it.

"I had to shoot in the 60s to put myself in position for tomorrow," she said. "I didn't think Juli would necessarily have a bad round.

"I figured if she shoots around par and I come in three or four under, I'd pick up a few strokes."

Veteran JoAnne Carner, a two-time winner of this event on this course, was alone at 213 after a 71.

At two-under 214 were Japanese veteran Ayako Okamoto, who shot a 73 and Jan Stephenson, who came in with a 71.

Six golfers were at 215 — Patty Sheehan, Beth Daniel, Nancy Lopez, Kathy Hite, Dot Germain and Sherri Turner.

Lopez moved back into contention with a 68 while Daniel came in with a 69. Hite shot a 71, Germain and Turner had 72s and Sheehan a 73.

It was the tough back nine where the swing was made for both King and Inkster. King came in with a superb four-under 32 while Inkster had a two-over 38.

Jacobsen holds one-stroke lead

CROMWELL, Conn. (AP) — Peter Jacobsen got off to a quick start with five birdies on the front nine Saturday and then managed to hold on to a one-stroke lead over Mark O'Meara after three rounds of the $400,000 Sammy Davis Jr.-Greater Hartford Open.

Jacobsen, who entered the round tied for the lead with Mike Nicolette, shot an 8-under par 63 Saturday for a 54-hole total of 199, or 14 under par. At one point during the round, he had a three-stroke lead over O'Meara.

But O'Meara, Jacobsen's playing partner, recovered from a third-hole bogey to shoot six birdies on the final nine holes. His 63 gave him a three-day total of 200.

O'Meara, sinking a 6-foot birdie putt, tied Jacobsen at 12-under on the 15th hole. But Jacobsen birdied 16 while O'Meara shot par and the two matched strokes — both sinking long putts for birdies on the 18th.

Bill Kratzert, meanwhile, chipped away at the leaders, scoring five straight birdies on the back nine to hold onto third place alone at 202, 11-under par.

"The turning point was the 12th hole," Kratzert later said. "I'd hit every green until then and missed that one, laying it into the rough about 30 feet out.

"The chip hit the pin and jammed down into the hole. I thought, That was a heck of break. I think I'll take advantage of it."

He took a two on the par-3 hole and birdied the next four.

The three were far ahead of the pack. George Burns was in fourth place at 7-under 206 and three players were at at 207 heading into Sunday's final round on the par-71, 6,800-yard Tournament Players Club of Connecticut.

Nicolette and Lance Ten Broeck, who was tied for second place at the start of the third round, fell out of the running Saturday. Nicolette finished the 54 holes at 5-under and Ten Broeck at 4-under.

CAULKINS

Inside, quietly, Caulkins became depressed over her performance in international competitions. Suddenly she couldn't beat the East Germans to save her life.

She'd been the nail on the American team that hammered East Germany in the World Championships of 1978, taking five gold medals, but she also was one of the major disappointments of the U.S. squad that was humiliated by the East Germans at the same meet in 1982. The best Caulkins could do in five events at Guyacil was a pair of thirds.

"Who beat me?" she says. "Who didn't?"

THE MEMORY of that disaster lingers, particularly now that the East Germans won't be in Los Angeles. Nobody wanted them here more than Caulkins, the only American swimmer who would have cleaned up against them, having done just that last winter at the U.S. Swimming International Meet.

"A funny thing happens to you when you've been on top for so long," she says of that experience. "You become aware of slipping instead of staying on top. I found myself hanging on just not to get beat. I was swimming scared, especially in Guyacil.

"It's not a nice feeling. I hate it. It's the worst sensation in the world to step up on the blocks and know you're not ready mentally, knowing you're about to get beat. I was in that position. I don't ever want to be in it again."

The frustration of that time, Caulkins says, was exacerbated by the most well-intentioned of friends. Again, she was being treated differently. She felt a little like an empress who wore no clothes, and nobody would tell her.

"I don't know if people feel they're in a position to tell me, 'Hey, you've got to get going,'" Caulkins says. "People were telling me, 'You're doing great! You're doing great!' and I'm getting beaten all over the place by East Germans. They'd say, 'Hey, you've got 48 national titles. You're great.' Problem was, I was believing it.

"What I should have been hearing, what I'd rather have heard, was 'C'mon, Tracy, get better.'"

She's gotten better. Guyacil became the turning point. Caulkins returned to the University of Florida and worked herself into better condition, then went to work on her mind.

"What I needed was toughness," she says. "I had to become a killer."

Caulkins? A killer? Was it a killer who admits to crying all week at the Olympic Trials, alternating between tears of joy for the winners and tears of sadness for fallen friends? Is it a killer who once felt terrible about beating one of Woodhead's records "because it felt like I was invading somebody else's territory?" San Quentin should have such killers.

"Well, maybe I'm not a killer," Caulkins says. "But I want to be the toughest one in the pool in the last 100 meters of a 200-meter race."

Krickstein, Tulasne gain D.C. semis

WASHINGTON (AP) — Aaron Krickstein and Thierry Tulasne earned berths in the semifinal round of the $200,000 D.C. National Bank Tennis Classic by registering convincing victories Saturday night.

Krickstein, of Grosse Pointe, Mich., advanced by virtue of his 7-6 (7-4), 6-1 victory over Uruguay's Diego Perez, and Tulasne, of France, beat Stanford University's Dan Goldie, 5-7, 6-2, 6-2.

Few Olympic athletes know agony of victory

LOS ANGELES — A great many Olympic athletes know the agony of defeat — the hurdle crashed into, the height missed, the bar not cleared, the baton not hung on to, the concentration lapsed. Still others, though fewer, know the thrill of victory.

But only a few know the agony of victory ...

Jim Thorpe was the most celebrated of cases, a tragic figure of Olympic history.

And next was Rick DeMont ...

Rick DeMont, like Thorpe, was one of America's premier athletes when he showed up for his Olympic Games in Munich in 1972. He was the world record holder in the 1500-meter swim. He was favored to win at least two, and maybe three, gold medals in the German swimhalle. While this was sub-Mark Spitz that year, it was still something to hand down to your grandchildren one day.

Rick was only 16. But what was really remarkable was that he was not really a well child. He became a world champion swimmer while afflicted with chronic allergenic bronchial asthma.

This is a fairly crippling disorder for a person working in a library. For one who spends his life in a chlorine pool trying to outrace human dolphins at distances up to a mile, it can be torturous. It was hardly an environment you might choose for clogged lungs, obstructed air passages. Even a shark might head for shore when his breath came in restrictive rattles.

TWO DAYS before his first Olympic event, the 400 meter freestyle, Rick DeMont felt the old familiar symptoms. The lung tissue became waterlogged, the mucous buildup became crippling, the lips turned blue. Rick DeMont began to fight for air. "I was coughing, wheezing, lightheaded." It was an all-out attack.

The athletic world is insular. It deals with infirmity only if it is the macho kind. It can understand shin splints, charley horses, bone chips, ligament damage, knee swelling. Ingrown toenails they can fix. But respiratory ailments are somethings that afflict the 97-pound weaklings of the world, the bookworms, the timid, the underachievers, the indoorsmen. They certainly have nothing to do with world-class athletes and especially gold medalists.

Rick DeMont had thought he had covered his eventualities by making a full disclosure of all medications he needed, not to compete, but to live. Asthma is controllable, not curable.

The international governing bodies that regulate Olympics and world track and field games are in a posture of fighting a constant desperate rearguard action against the chemists of our time. No Olympics go by without rumors floating through the venues about blood-doping, miracle steroids, chromosome alterations. When a man breaks a world record now, the first thing the track federation worries about is whether he is a real person or a product of a laboratory in Transylvania. When a woman wins, they check to see if she isn't Frank Merriwell in drag. It's demeaning, degrading and almost demonic.

RICK DeMONT sensibly took medication for his asthma attack. It was either that or turn blue. Fighting for oxygen can tear the lungs and cause scar tissue as the victim stretches the alveoli without pharmaceutical help. DeMont even went to the doctors to report he had taken the medication and why. The doctors were not in. "I guess," recalls Rick now, "they were out to lunch. For two days."

Rick won his race. But, not, as it turned out, his gold medal. Three days later, the committee at the Games notified him he was barred from further competition and his 400-meter win was nullified. DeMont was practically on the diving board for the 1500 meters at the time. Traces of ephedrine had been found in his urine. Minute amounts but any amount was too much.

It was, of course, an historic injustice. Antihistamines can hardly be thought to be a performance-enhancer but the IOC is so hysterical about the drug menace that Coca Cola may be a banned substance any day now and traces of aspirin may get a decathlete barred for life.

What really tore Rick DeMont up was not entirely the rubout of his 400-meter win but the disqualification from the upcoming 1500. "I had had no asthma attack before that race. I had no ephedrine in my system. I had set the world record in the Trials. I had qualified fastest. Then, ten minutes before the race they come in and tell me to get dressed."

DeMont was not permitted to keep his gold medal. When he returned with it to California, he was pursued by correspondence from the international swim federation that he would be banned from competitions unless he returned his gold medal forthwith. He did so.

"They tell me that Brad Cooper, of Australia, who moved up to the gold when I was disqualified, refused to accept it and keeps his silver medal only."

DeMont is now a painter, a watercolorist, not the kind that does houses or rolls walls. "What has my life been like?" he rejoins. "Well, I'm the 'gold medal loser.' You know, 'the guy who lost the Olympics in a bottle.' It isn't as if I ran the wrong way or drowned in the pool or fainted in the homestretch. I live with it. The drug I took was 'Marax.' I have no idea whether it's legal or not now. Why not?"

IF IT'S not, others are. A footnote to the DeMont story deals with the other ill-starred Olympian of those Games, Jim Ryun. Also bedeviled by allergies, Ryun had been taking antihistaminic medicine at Munich — until the DeMont episode. His doctor took him off the regiment. Well in advance of his competition.

It didn't matter. Ryun's allergy turned out to be an overeager Ghanan who crashed into him in the first heat of the 1500 and tumbled him, and his gold medal hopes to the turf.

Ironically, Jim Ryun is at the Olympics campaigning for the Glaxo pharmaceuticals, Kentolin, Beclovent and Beconase, safe and approved substances for asthma medication at the Olympics. "Because of the air quality, problems are sure to occur," predicts Jim Ryun.

No asthmatic in Los Angeles will be asked to return his medals. Jim Thorpe and Rick DeMont will be able still to stand alone in Olympic annals. However, if the IOC runs true to form, Rick, like Jim, will one day get his medals back, and his name put back in the record book. If they run true to form it will be long after he is any longer able to read them or it.

Carrying U.S. flag is 'highest honor' for Burke

LOS ANGELES (AP) — For hammer thrower Ed Burke, carrying the American flag for the U.S. Olympic team in Saturday's opening ceremonies of the 1984 Games was "the highest honor, a very emotional thing."

The 44-year-old Burke, a former American record holder in the hammer throw who retired for 12 years after a disheartening performance in the 1968 Olympics, said being chosen as the flag bearer "is a credit to my wife ... and my family."

At a news conference 4½ hours before leading the U.S. team into the Los Angeles Coliseum for the opening cermonies, Burke revealed he'd learned of his selection by accident.

It happened Friday, shortly after the track and field team arrived in Los Angeles from its training camp at Santa Barbara, Calif.

"A girl from the handball team asked me, 'Are you that old hammer thrower they chose to carry the flag?' " Burke recalled.

"That must be me," he replied with a smile.

This is Burke's third Olympics — he also participated in the 1964 and 1968 Games — and he said, "The most overwhelming thing in the Olympics is parading in the stadium."

He disclosed that once, while driving his car home, "I had a vision of walking in the parade, but honestly, I didn't see myself leading the parade."

Burke said he was hoping he would be able to control his emotions during the opening ceremonies.

"I'm close to tears now," said the muscular 6-foot-1, 248-pounder from Los Gatos, Calif. "I hope I don't cry all around the stadium."

In 1962, when Burke was the leading collegiate thrower in the nation while at San Jose State University, it was his wife, Shirley, who was in tears — not from emotion but because Burke accidentally hit the car in which she was sitting with an errant hammer throw, shattering the windshield and peppering her face with glass.

"I thought I had killed her," Burke said. "It was very tragic."

Plastic surgery helped heal Shirley's face, but Burke decided to quit the sport.

He didn't remain out of it for long.

"She got me back onto the field," said Burke. "She's been my mirror and my coach since then."

Whenever Burke competes, he looks to his wife for guidance, in the stands or along the sidelines.

She also was instrumental in influencing Burke to return to hammer throwing a second time, after he'd decided to drop the sport when he placed a disappointing 12th in the 1968 Games.

Bucs return to '83 form, lose 38-0 to Seahawks

CANTON, Ohio (AP) — Coach John McKay had one word for his Tampa Bay Buccaneers' performance Saturday.

"Disgusting."

The Buccaneers picked up where they left off last year by dropping a 38-0 decision to the Seattle Seahawks in the first National Football League exhibition game of 1984.

Dave Krieg hit Byron Walker with a 16-yard touchdown pass and Seattle Seahawks, last year's surprise team of the NFL, turned four Tampa Bay turnovers into quick touchdowns to run up the largest victory margin in the history of the Hall of Fame game.

"I'm certainly disappointed in losing. Nobody who's ever played this game wants to lose, regardless of the situation," McKay said.

Seattle's victory in the typically sloppy game before 22,250 fans at Fawcett Stadium and improved the American Football Conference's record in the 14-year-old AFC-NFC series to 6-7-1.

"We had opportunities from our 40 and closer on in," Krieg said. "We had to go only 60 yards or less for touchdowns."

"This doesn't mean a whole lot," said Seattle Coach Chuck Knox. "We're not as good as we looked and they're certainly not as bad as they looked. After all, everybody played. We had 69 guys in during the first three quarters."

NFL Exhibition Season

Preceding the game, four players were inducted into the Hall of Fame: former Denver and Oakland defensive back Willie Brown, Cleveland offensive lineman Mike McCormack, Washington receiver Charley Taylor and New York Giants defensive lineman Arnie Weinmeister.

Krieg, expected to start at quarterback for Seattle this season after taking the Seahawks to the AFC championship game in 1983, completed five of six passes for 76 yards in the first quarter, including a 24-yarder to Charlie Young that set up the slant-in touchdown pass to Walker. The drive followed No. 1 draft pick Terry Taylor's interception of a Jack Thompson pass near midfield.

Jim Zorn, who lost his job to Krieg last year, then took the Seahawks to a pair of second-quarter touchdowns, one on Zachary Dixon's 5-yard run after John Harris returned an interception 43 yards to the Tampa Bay 15 and the other on Eric Lane's 1-yard run.

Seattle made it 28-0 just before the half when Buccaneers' punter Frank Garcia was unable to handle a bad snap and Greg Gaines covered the ball in the end zone.

Norm Johnson booted a 33-yard field goal to widen Seattle's lead to 31-0 midway through the third period, and Sherman Cocroft pounced on a fumble by Tampa Bay's Gene Branton at the Bucs' 24 to set up a 1-yard TD run by rookie Brian Gutierrez to make it 38-0 early in the fourth period.

Brown, McCormack never planned on pro careers

CANTON, Ohio (AP) — Neither Willie Brown nor Mike McCormack ever planned to play pro football long enough to make it to the Pro Football Hall of Fame.

But both men, who aspired to be high school coaches, said today they have no regrets about the choice they made.

"I was offered a contract, and I said, 'Well, go play a year or so and then go back and do what you want to do.' Then success started happening to me," Brown said just prior to his induction into the Hall of Fame. "Then 10 years went by. Then 15 years."

Brown, 43, joined the Denver Broncos in 1963 as a free agent after being cut by Houston, and by 1964 he was an all-American Football League performer at cornerback. Traded to the Oakland Raiders in 1967, he turned in 12 more superb seasons before retiring in 1978.

He was the only one of today's four inductees chosen in his first year of elgaity.

ALONG WITH Brown and McCormack, entering the Hall today were Charley Taylor, the all-time leading National Football League receiver, and Arnie Weinmeister, former defensive lineman for the New York Yankkees and New York Giants.

Brown, who had 54 career interceptions in regular-season games, said he originated the bump-and-run style of play by defensive backs. He now coaches for the Los Angeles Raiders.

"Al Davis (Raiders' owner) claimed he started it. We still argue about that," Brown said.

McCormack had a double interest in today's events. Besides entering the Hall, he's watching the Seattle Seahawks — whom he serves as president — take on the Tampa Bay Buccaneers in the NFL's first preseason game of the year.

McCormack, 54, began his pro career with the New York Yanks in 1951, then was in the Army when he was included in a 15-player trade engineered by Browns' founder Paul Brown in 1953.

The 6-foot-4, 250-pound McCormack became one of the key blockers for Browns' fullbacks Marion Motley and Jim Brown, and he gives them much credit for his success.

Taylor, 42, was a No. 1 draft choice of the Washington Redskins in 1964, and the Redskins never regretted the choice. During his 13 years in the NFL, Taylor caught 649 passes, including one he remembers well.

The 6-4, 235-pound Weinmeister, 61, played with the Yankees in the All-American Football Conference for two years and was all-NFL during his four years with the Giants, ending in 1953. He was selected following a review by a special Hall of Fame oldtimers committee.

Oilers beat Broncos in scrimmage

GREELEY, Colo. (AP) — Quarterback Warren Moon's 23-yard touchdown pass to wide receiver Tim Smith and a blocked punt recovered for a touchdown led the Houston Oilers to a 22-14 win over the Denver Broncos in a pre-season scrimmage here Saturday.

Moon, a high-priced quarterback acquired by the Oilers from the Canadian Football League during the off-season, completed 5 of 10 passes for 77 yards as the Oilers rallied from a 7-0 deficit in the first quarter.

Denver's John Elway staked Denver to its early lead by driving the team 62 yards to the Oiler 3-yard line, where running back Sammy Winder plunged in for the score.

Houston, playing without injured running back Earl Campbell, tied the score on Smith's catch, and the Oilers took the lead for good on a blocked punt recovered for a touchdown by safety Jeff Donaldson.

The score gave Houston a 13-7 lead at halftime.

Early in the second half, a 29-yard field goal by Houston's Florian Kempf upped the Oilers's lead to 16-7.

Houston capped its scoring on a 25-yard pass from back-up quarterback Brian Ransom to receiver Jamie Williams, giving the Oilers a 22-7 lead.

Denver's made it 22-14 late in the scrimmage on a one-yard plunge by veteran running back Rick Parros. The final 64-yard drive was engineered by recently-acquired quarterback Scott Brunner, who completed 6 of 8 passes for 61 yards.

Elway completed 4 of 8 passes for 41 yards.

Allen Academy
How were the grades?
In many cases, school performance is not up to par simply because of lack of challenge. In public schools, large classes have often resulted in bored and uninterested students which in turn, results in less than satisfactory grades
Acceptance into major universities requires today's high school graduates to be the products of a superior education. Allen Academy has been challenging students for almost one hundred years and this year all graduates were accepted to four-year universities.
This year, consider a complete education for your children. Allen Academy is a non-military, co-ed college preparatory school with a boarding program for young men in grades 8-12. We offer superb academics (with most instructors holding Masters' Degrees), small classes, and many planned activities.
There are limited openings in the 1984-1985 boarding program and we invite you to consider Allen Academy before you register your child in another school. An investment in education is an investment in the future.

Shape the future

One of the great enigmas of our time — like earlier ones that have perplexed man down through history — is how accelerating scientific knowledge opens new opportunities while presenting ticklish additional responsibilities.

Example: Genetic engineering.

Already genetic engineering has given mankind the ability to overcome perplexing medical problems. In fact, says a recent issue of The Washingtonian magazine, "Around the world doctors are using gene-splicing techniques for early detection of birth defects, to develop a safer, cheaper rabies vaccine, to make a contraceptive that will act as an antibody against human semen, and to make an artificial substitute for human blood."

But there are those who fear that the good resulting from genetic engineering will lead to other, more fearful steps. Among them is a man named Jeremy Rifkin who is now leading the assault against further genetic engineering. The magazine says: "Rifkin is convinced that humanity, once it moves onto the slippery stone of genetic engineering, will be unable to keep its balance. He says society will start out trying to do things that are beneficial but will end up contaminating the human gene pool and irrevocably damaging the environment."

We have to share Mr. Rifkin's fear in one regard: Caution is needed as modern medical science wanders further into the world of genes. After all, what we're talking about is the very future of the human race.

But, on the other hand, perhaps his strict opposition to genetic engineering is a bit hasty. Even space exploration — while holding a vast potential for harm for mankind — has provided astounding benefits in a few short years. It has virtually altered our everyday lives.

While we understand and appreciate Mr. Rifkin's concerns, let's not throw out the baby with the bathwater where genetic engineering is concerned.

Demonstration limits

The Supreme Court of the United States recently decided that demonstrators sleeping in Lafayette Park, across from the White House, were not entitled to constitutional protection.

Some civil libertarians contended the demonstrators were exercising "the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the government for redress of grievances," as protected by the First Amendment.

But people sleeping on the Capitol Mall, or occupying an executive office, or making pallet beds in the corridors of the Capitol in Washington, are not legitimate petitioners. They are acting in defiance of authorities, seeking to scandalize and embarrass, not simply to convince.

Such provocative tactics should not be tolerated by the elected representatives of the people. Demonstrators have a right to make their case, even if their activities necessarily involve some incidental inconvenience to the public. They do not have a right to go out of their way to disrupt the conduct of government or to violate established rules for the orderly protection of public places.

The high court's decision was reasonable.

Another View:

Israel cast adrift

Most Israeli voters may be sure in their own minds about the kind of future that they want and would seek for their country, but these disparate personal visions do not add up to a national political consensus. This week's election in Israel exposed more deeply than ever before the divisions and the antagonisms that now crisscross the fabric of that society. Both the ruling Likud bloc and the opposition Labor alignment, each with an uninspiring leader, were shown to have fallen in public esteem, while small and in some cases extremist parties gained support. The election was a test of democratic sentiment, but the results are neither conducive to stability nor healthy for democracy.

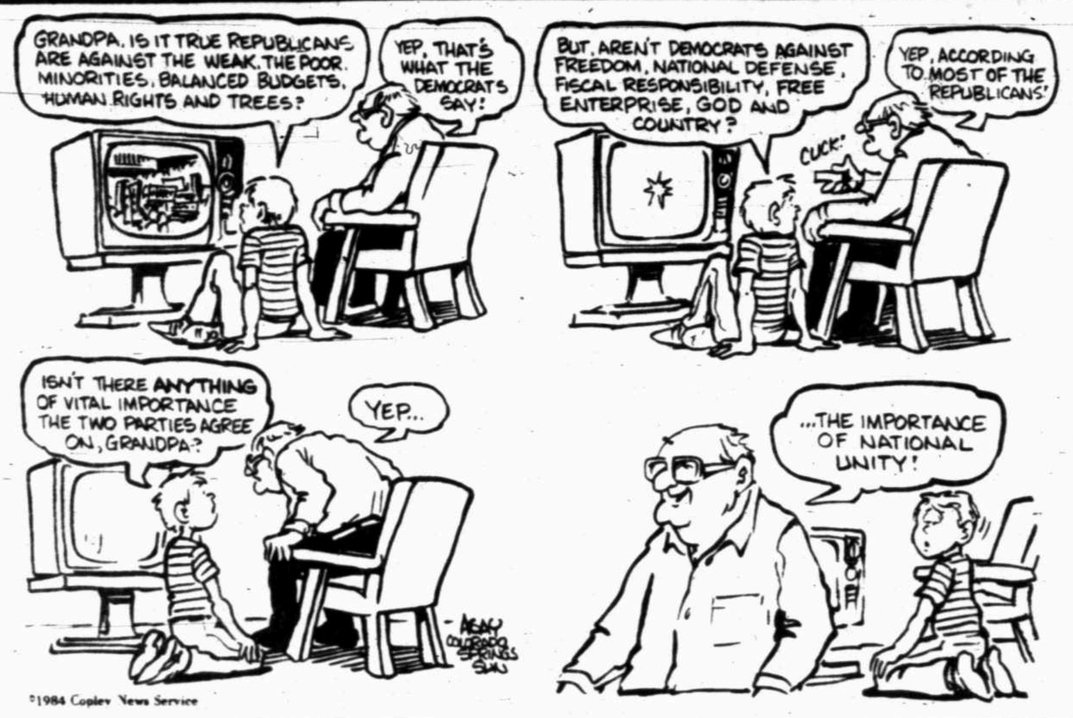

A good part of the problem rests with Israel's electoral system, which encourages a multiplicity of parties with the promise of a seat in the Knesset for each 1 percent of the vote achieved. A political campaign thus too easily becomes something of a bazaar, with a party and a program offered for every taste. This week voters could choose from among 26 parties. What they chose was to place representatives of a record 15 of them in the next Knesset. Included will be the fanatical Rabbi Meir Kahane, who says that his first order of business will be to introduce a resolution calling for the expulsion of all 650,000 of Israel's Arab citizens.

Changing the electoral system with the aim of shrinking the number of competing parties is a near impossibility. By the will of the electorate, Israeli governments have always had to be based on coalitions, and the smaller parties and their constituents would go to the barricades before agreeing to give up the governmental power that they either have or aspire to. This may be democracy in its most freewheeling form. It can also and has proved to be a prescription for inefficiency, immobility and inordinate power for minority forces.

In this election, Israel has once again shifted or stumbled further to the right. That gives Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir the best chance to form a new government, for it is Likud, rather than the Labor alignment, that will have more natural allies in the new Knesset. But it is one thing to cajole factions into a government, and it is quite another thing to be able to govern effectively with what results.

The most urgent domestic need in Israel today is to adopt the severe austerity measures that are required to put a dangerously shaky economy in order. It does not seem likely that Shamir will be able to mobilize a consensus to do what must be done. The outlook in that case is for either more drift and inaction or an early election that could prove no more conclusive than the one that was just held.

Political playing killing Games

WASHINGTON — In ancient times, it was the custom to suspend wars between Greek city states so as not to interfere with the Olympic Games. This same spirit motivated the Frenchman Pierre de Couberten who inspired the modern revival of the Games.

Jack Anderson

"Let us export our oarsmen, our runners, our fencers into other lands," he pleaded. "This is the true free trade of the future, and the day it is introduced into Europe, the cause of peace will have received a new and strong ally."

In our times, cultural exchanges — from ballet troupes to ping-pong teams — have softened the edges of international hostility. The Olympic movement, which offers a host of activities besides the quadrennial Games, is the pre-eminent vehicle for such exchanges.

Not only is it the foremost showcase and the epitome of friendly competition under international law, it already has built up a sophisticated network of international organizations. Today, 120 nations have Olympic committees. Each year, hundreds of sports encounters between countries take place under the Olympic umbrella. Most nations take part in several international matches every year.

But if the Olympic movement is to be a working showcase of fair play and a spawning ground of international amity, it must free itself from the interference of governments that want to use the Games as a sounding board for their politics and rivalries.

The Roman emperor Nero foretold the relationships of power politics to Olympic endeavors when he forced music upon the Games so he could take part; then he frightened off any would-be competitors. Nero also entered a chariot race and, though he was thrown out of his carriage and never finished, he was declared the winner.

Such political intervention, which hastened the death of the ancient Games, now threatens the modern ones. Though the Olympic movement has tried to resist being subverted by governments with axes to grind, it has been damaged by a whole series of political interferences.

In 1952, the Soviet Union, unwilling to relax its police-state grip on its athletes even for a few days, bullied the International Olympic Committee into permitting separate housing for the Russian team — a fateful capitulation.

Canada, the host government in 1976, barred the team from Taiwan in order to kowtow to Communist China. Then in 1980, it was President Jimmy Carter who forced a U.S. boycott of the Moscow Games to protest the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. This year, most of the communist bloc is retaliating by staying out.

This sort of thing will nibble the Olympics to death unless a bold step is taken. I urge the International Olympic Committee to adopt a resolution that would bar from the Games permanently any nation, great or small, that boycotts the Games or tramples on the rules. Any nation that walks out should be out for good.

Even a superpower will pause before giving up the glories and advantages of Olympics participation. And even if nations have to be expelled, an Olympics that is serious about its principles will prosper better than an Olympics that is the catspaw for political intrigue.

I suggest further that the Olympic movement give broader and more explicit expression to its peace-seeking goals by adopting as its motto something like "Peace Through Sports," and by taking steps within its realm to heal the war-created divisions among some of its members.

Why not encourage the participating peoples that are now split in two — the two Germanies, the two Koreas, the two Chinas — to approach unity through sports by fielding not two teams but one common team whose joint exploits would then become a unifying force?

Ours is a time when masses of private citizens are doing something about unresponsive institutions, a time for spawning unofficial movements that reach over and around governments to seek unconventional paths to justice, safety and peace. In such an age, the Olympics phenomenon presents a vast opportunity.

If anyone doubts the overpowering magnetic pull exerted by the Olympic Games, let him pick up the vibes around him this coming week and reflect that this excitement is welling up in 100 nations across the globe. No other event has so many worldwide spectators watching their television sets.

It is a fixation that has stood the test of time. Almost 3,000 years ago, the appeal of the early Olympics was so intense in Greece that time itself was measured in "Olympiads," the four-year intervals between the Games.

Can this universal attraction to the Olympics be used to advance the general cause of peace? There are reasons for thinking so. When ancient Rome conquered Greece, it gradually corrupted and did away with the Olympic Games. The Greek rules, such as the restriction on wrestling enacted in 648 B.C. that forebade biting and eye-gouging, did not appeal to Rome.

But it was not the Roman ideal of arena combat — which featured bloody death to the loser and turning loose wild animals on helpless captives — that survived, but rather the Olympic ideal of civilized contests under humane rules.

GEORGE F. WILL

Reagan's off to be ... Reagan!

WASHINGTON — The fun started in San Francisco, when Walter Mondale promised to raise taxes and added, clairvoyantly, that Ronald Reagan, if reelected, will raise taxes. Five days later, asked at a press conference if he would disavow tax increases, Reagan said "yes," no doubt causing folks at his Office of Management and Budget to say "Arrrrgh!" Reagan said "yes" when asked if he is prepared to "flatly rule out the possibility of seeking a tax increase next year."

George F. Will

Good arithmetic can be bad politics. The OMB people, who take arithmetic seriously, have worn their fingers to stumps producing evermore colorful and hair-curling charts and graphs in futile attempts to convince the President that he can not get there from here. That is, he can not get to a balanced budget with the existing revenue system. They say: When we program computers with economic growth assumptions radical enough to produce a projection of a balanced budget, with no new taxes, the computers giggle.

But the whirring of computers, even those that giggle, is being drowned out by the noise of gauntlets being thrown down with "thumps!" audible all the way to Key West. Mondale threw one in San Francisco, but Reagan threw one last January in his State of the Union address. That address is remembered primarily for its observation about America's posture ("standing tall"). However, it contained two sentences that were a preemptive strike on the "fairness" issue: "Simple fairness dictates government must not raise taxes on families struggling to pay their bills. The root of the problem is that government's share is more than we can afford if we are to have a sound economy."

Democrats would have to have angelic manners, which they do not, to forgo demanding:

"O.K., Great Communicator, communicate the cuts you plan — bearing in mind that you want increases for defense, and that interest payments are growing faster than defense expenditures and are not optional. So either you plan to cut entitlements — please supply particulars — and discretionary spending — more particulars, please — or you have a tax-increase plan hidden in a pumpkin at Camp David."

Ironically, Mondale's promise of tax increases pleases those conservatives whose four-word formula for universal happiness is "Let Reagan Be Reagan." That is, Mondale's promise provokes Reagan to canter off in the opposite direction.

At his press conference Reagan made a slamming noise audible all the way to Seattle. He slammed a door that may have to be opened next year — the door to increased taxes. But he slammed it so hard it bounced opened a bit.

His press-conference answer had a structure that was Eisenhowerean in its informality — and its artfulness. He said he would "look at the tax structure" to "bring that up to meet that minimum level of government expenditures." But he would do that only if "after all our best efforts" at budget-cutting, government has been cut as much as is compatible with its irreducible "responsibilities," and a deficit remains.

But such a moment is a long way away. And eagle-eyed conservatives may see that the door is ajar, and may nail it shut in the platform.

Meanwhile, Mondale's cry of "particulars, please" is made of India rubber and will bounce back at him. His "new realism" does not yet extend to specifying who is going to pay those new taxes. If, when pressed, he says "big corporations" and "the rich," arithmetic will rear its ugly head. Americans know, intuitively, that corporations do not pay taxes, they collect taxes, passing along the costs. Americans also know that serious revenues can only come from where most of the money is: the middle class.

Reagan's idea that economic growth and spending cuts will balance the budget may be the most dangerous sort of myth: one that is sincerely believed. But it is no more implausible than, and is considerably less cynical than, the suggestion that the budget can be balanced by putting the Pentagon and country-club members through a wringer.

This campaign, rolling at a remarkable clip for high summer, is becoming passionate because it is about class. The class struggle is never pretty and rarely has been as confusing as at present. Both parties claim to represent the downtrodden and identify the downtrodden not as the proletariat but as the middle class.

A young Democratic professional called from the convention to get his father's assessment of things. The father, a blue-collar worker in the Northeast, said: "The Democratic Party has been good to me — Social Security, G.I. Bill, student loans. The Democratic Party made me middle class. But perhaps Reagan will keep me middle class."

The campaign is touching elemental emotions, as it did in the woman who, having listened to Mario Cuomo's keynote address, said she would have wept had she not been wearing mascara.

Parking space new 'dream'

There is now a big real estate boom in parking places in Washington. As more "No Parking at Anytime" signs go up in the streets, people are desperate to have a parking spot they can call their own.

Art Buchwald

To find out about the boom I went to see a real estate agent who specializes in selling parking spaces. He had color photographs of various garages on his wall.

"I'm interested in buying a parking space," I told him.

"You've come at a good time. We have several outstanding ones that have just come on the market. May I inquire what kind of automobile you own."

"A 1984 Volvo."

"Then you will want a quality parking spot in the upper range brackets. Here is one that was only used by the original owner. The garage is just five minutes from the Washington Monument, and your place would be on the first tier, right near the entrance."

"How big is it?" I asked.

"It's quite large, 11 by 22 feet. It is marked by lovely gold stripes and decorated with a handpainted RESERVED sign on the wall. Your Volvo will be very happy there."

"Jow much does it cost?"

"Since the owner wants to sell because he is moving to San Francisco, we can let you have it for $23,000, not including maintenance charges."

"What are the maintenance charges for?"

"Heating, a 24-hour garage attendant, and keeping your space swept clean. Of course, you'll have to be passed on by a board of the other parking space owners, but I'm sure you won't have a problem considering the make of your car and the year."

"Do you have anything less expensive in the garage?"

"I do have one on the fourth level down. It's a charming old parking space but does need some work."

"What kind of work?"

"The concrete is cracked, and the white lines are fading, and during a heavy thunderstorm water seems to gather down there. But if your Volvo has been rust proofed I don't see any problem."

"How much is that one?"

"We can let you have it for $17,000, which is a steal."

"It seems like a lot of money for a broken-down parking space."

"There are several advantages to being down on the fourth tier. Your Volvo won't hear the planes from National Airport overhead, and as you drive down and around you have a lovely scenic view of all the other cars parked in the garage. I have four parties interested in it now."

"Can I get a mortgage on it?"

"You'll have no problem at all. The banks consider parking places in Washington much better collateral than apartments and condominiums."

"Suppose I only want to spend $10,000 for a spot. Do you have anything downtown for that?"

"We have a 9 by 16-foot spot in a dark alley that has just come on the market. The front of your car would look out on a meatpacking plant and the rear would face an empty warehouse. I don't know if your Volvo would feel very safe there or not. Frankly, I would buy something with a roof over it."

"But it seems like so much money."

"You must not look at it as a financial burden. After all, owning your own parking place is now the ultimate American dream."

Quietness of grief follows massacre

Modisett

There was a strange quietness following the recent McDonald's massacre in Southern California.

It wasn't the quietness that comes from shock; people across the nation have been shocked, reshocked and shocked again.

It wasn't the mental numbness that emanates from a natural or man-made disaster, like a tornado or a plane crash. While we don't anticipate those events occurring, we're so aware of the capability for them happening that it really doesn't shock anyone.

It was, rather, the quietness of grief — grief for the victims, the 21 dead, 19 injured; grief for the wife and children of the family-man-gone-berserk; grief even for the gunman.

It's the kind of silence that overcomes you because...because you ask why and no answer is forthcoming. There's no explanation; just the stifling silence. In all the reams of information at the fingertips of our society there isn't one page to justify why the oh so young and the elderly had to face death in this manner.

The silence is all there is, wrapped in a social sense of loss.

It overcomes you for another reason, too. Deep down in your heart you realize that here is yet another indication that there is no safe place to hide. You live with fear and the problem only increases — every year.

That was the cause of the honey-thick silence that followed the massacre.

We need an answer.

All I have is praise for Rep. Geraldine Ferraro, Walter Mondale's running-mate.

After 208 years of running the country (some would add "into the ground"), we men have more than proved we can't do it without our share of blunders, ineptness and scandalous activity. Politics has become a four-letter word — twice! It's about time to let the women in the country see if they can do any better. I truly hope they can. We need gutsy, intelligent, moral leaders in this country and, personally, I don't care if they're black, brown, white, female or what.

The only qualifier as far as I'm concerned is whether they're capable and will set a good moral example for all Americans.

Oh, I have my share of acquaintances — and you probably do, too — who continually tell me that I'm out of step with the times and that morality is an antiquated concept.

For what it's worth I disagree. Respectfully, of course.

I do think that the manner in which Mrs. Ferraro was chosen as Mondale's running-mate was demeaning. But Mondale has long sold out to special interests and it was obvious from the beginning that he would pick a running-mate to curry favor.

That's OK, I guess. I'm just not sure the ticket is properly structured for best effect.

Mondale-Ferraro. Nah! Ferraro-Mondale sounds a lot more realistic.

Don't be so hard on Texas Monthly for having a little fun with Midland and Odessa in its latest edition. At least they looked this way and found something to grin about.

Seriously, though, that dig about the two cities fighting like Iran and Iraq was stretching reality a bit. We really get along fine out here. I mean where else in the Lone Star State does one city dump on its neighbor — literally — and the two still peacefully co-exist, relatively speaking?

Actually Midland and Odessa are thinking about solving our wastewater problem by impounding the effluent, treating it and having our own lake. We could even host our own wet T-shirt pageant and invite celebrities to participate. Like former Miss America Vanessa Williams.

It would even be safe for the contestants to go into that treated lake water. There are no sharks ... uh, big fish...in this part of the state.

AP article based on inaccurate data

On May 29, your newspaper ran an Associated Press story about the budget of the Attorney General's office. The AP story was based upon a totally inaccurate and erroneous story in the Austin American-Statesman.

The wire story regurgitated many of the inaccuracies in the Austin newspaper, which was written by a reporter who did not bother to check the facts — nor did AP.

The truth is that there are no emergency fiscal difficulties whatsoever within the Attorney General's Office.

There is no spending freeze. Rather, there was a temporary hold on new hiring and purchasing pending a review of finances for the remainder of the fiscal year. The review has been completed; the hold has been lifted; and I expect to end the current year with a surplus.

I have always been a fiscal conservative. Taking a close look at the office's current budget is part of that conservatism, and I firmly believe the one-week hold was appropriate and my responsibility as a servant of the taxpayers of this state.

The workload and staffing of the Attorney General's office increased dramatically in 1983, when the legislature transferred responsibility for collection of child support to this office from the Department of Human Resources. Since taking over that enforcement program last September, my office has increased collections by 44 percent over the same time period in fiscal 1983. I am proud of these increased child support collections and intend to keep pushing to do even better.

There is no four-color press in the Attorney General's office. Had the Austin reporter and Associated Press bothered to check with the Comptroller's Office, they would have found that out.

I hope this letter will serve to clear up the inaccuracies that were repeated in the AP story.

Jim Mattox

Thanks for doing story with good taste

First of all I would like to apologize for the time lapse on my part in writing this letter to you.

I would like to thank you for the beautiful article that was in the paper concerning my son, Dwayne Stowell. It was certainly done in good taste and I was definitely surprised that you saw fit to place in on the front page. I would especially like to thank and commend Rhonda Rigenhagen for the context. I had several people ask me if she knew Dwayne and about the accident prior to the printing of the story. Also, the young man that took the photographs was so patient with us.

I recently wrote a letter to the school board and said it sure was nice to hear a little good news of today and Dwayne's article upstaged the biggest drug bust in Midland. I was glad to see that the newspaper in the city where I reside looked at it in that way since we all know that the rapes, murders, drugs, etc., is usually the news that sells the paper. I was also glad to see that you knew what was important to Midland that day!

SPEAKING OUT

Political partisans react to convention

Democratic Party sends message of unity, emotion

A resident of Midland for three years, Joanne DeWitt is an Adult Basic Education teacher at Midland College and has a Masters of Arts in teaching. She is a precinct chairman in Midland County's Democratic Party.

By JOANNE DEWITT

As most of us sit stunned by the Republican White House's action ordering its own attorneys to appeal a federal court decision that the windfall profits tax was unconstitutional, and await with anxiety a post-November change in the demeaner of the Midland contingent of FDIC, it is worthwhile to critically evaluate the unique happenings at the Democratic National Convention and to project what, if anything, it means to us in a city with the highest independence index in the world. The various analytical disciplines required to survive at petroleum production have been reflected at the polls, as we tend to analyze the individual rather than blindly following the party. Is there, then, reason to seek data from a televised convention in evaluating our prospects? I think there is.

I think the meaningful prospect evaluation data from the Democratic Party's San Francisco convention transcends most simplistic single-issue discussions, since both major parties can be expected to send similar cognitive messages. It is the affective communications which have the greater significance. Everyone is against war, depression, inflation, high interest rates, crime in the streets, conquest by a foreign nation, peace between Iraq and Iran, and the defrocking (in one way or another) of Miss America.

What affective messages did you receive between the commercials? I saw unity. For the first time, I saw a Democratic Party more unified at convention than divisive. The bundle of sticks appears bound together in strength, from new style to old style Jacksonian Democrat. I saw excitement. Excitement, not only over the altogether new phenomenon of unity, but over the charisma of the person chosen for the vice-presidency. All bets are off; we have never been here before. We may be on the threshold of a period in politics when regionalism, racism, sexism and similar "isms" give way to transcending economic concerns.

Therein lies the opportunity for us in ruggedly individualistic Midland. As we watch the upcoming Republican convention, we can reflect back on our experiences with these two parties. We can recall that when the party with anti-oil rhetoric has had the White House, we have done very well economically; while we have lost ground when the party that says nice things about us occupies what has become a fortress White House. Do we want depletion allowances or compliments? Do we want a repeat of the promise of deregulation from the same President Reagan whose Justice Department appealed and overturned what many of us feel was a correct decision making windfall profits taxes unconstitutional, or do we want to have our prospects and prospectives understood by the diversity of groups who aren't all exactly like us?

The "independent" approach is our life's bread. The "little guy's" aptitude for innovation and adaptability helps him lead the "majors" into new approaches while obtaining productive return from projects they pass up. The independent has learned to share the risk in chance taking. This busines approach also makes sense in political decisions. One need only look around town and see who Democratic Governor White includes among his appointees, or confront the realities of Republicanism as practiced in Austin. Too many of Midland's and our industry's eggs are in the Republican basket; it causes us problems when we venture past the county line.

If we buy the false propaganda that all Democrats are against free enterprise or that they are against the oil business, we have no one to blame but ourselves. We have some of the best "sales" people in the world in Midland. Prospects were drilled even when things went sour. The San Francisco experience indicates some exciting national changes have taken place in our potential investor, the Democratic Party.

If one has not received a farmout from Texaco lately, it could be because he or she has not gone inside and negotiated lately. Conditions change and institutions do, too. Independents have not flourished by blindly adhering to outmoded practices and ideas.

Democrats fail to offer any positive proposals

Robert L. Monaghan is District 25 committeeman of the Republican Party of Texas. Monaghan is founder and president of Cal-Mon Oil Co.

By ROBERT L. MONAGHAN

I watched the Democratic Convention last week with hope. I hoped to see a positive program emerge to balance the budget. I hoped to see a positive proposal for future economic growth. I hoped to see positive proof that the Democratic Party was ready to move into the 20th Century.

I didn't. Instead, I saw a party controlled by the same, old liberal policies and a week of negativism. For four days, I watched the Democratic Party tell the country about all the things they are against. I kept waiting to hear what the party is for.

On Thursday night, Walter Mondale finally told us what his party is for. Mondale promised, as he has all along, to be all things to all people. He promised to reduce the deficit, while at the same time promising to spend federal money to every special interest group which supported his candidacy. He promised a program of the same, old liberal Democratic policies of the past. He also promised more taxes, higher taxes for every working American in this country.

He didn't promise to balance the budget. He couldn't. His party has blocked every effort of President Ronald Reagan and the Republican Party to bring a balanced budget amendment before the House of Representatives. Political columnists and television commentators have already labeled the Walter Mondale-Geraldine Ferraro ticket as the most liberal Democratic presidential ticket in modern times. I agree. I also agree with those who say the election in November will offer Americans a clear choice.

I had hoped to hear something different from the convention. I had hoped to hear something that would make me forget where we were four years ago. Some of you may have forgotten what life was like then. Interest rates had risen to over 20 percent, the highest rate since the Civil War. Inflation stood at over 13 percent, the highest rate in history. Our taxes had increased more than $2,000 per family from 1976 until 1980. The "misery index," a combination of the unemployment and inflation rate which is supposed to tell us how bad off we are, stood at over 19 percent! It had been 12.7 percent on the day they assumed office. Today, under President Ronald Reagan, the index is 11.7 percent. This is progress.

Despite what Walter Mondale and his party tried to tell me last week, I feel pretty good about the way things are today. Interest rates have dropped dramatically. Inflation has been cut by more than half. Taxes have been reduced from the staggering increases of the previous four years.

Despite all this, I sat in front of the television last week and watched speaker after speaker at the Democratic Conveniton try to tell me how bad things are. The speakers dismissed the good economic news, saying the conditions are "only temporary." They said we need to increase taxes. They ignored the "misery index." I find this ironic, since the misery index was popularized by Jimmy Carter and Walter Mondale.

I'm sorry, Mr. Mondale. I can't accept your gloomy vision of America. I can't dismiss the strongest economic recovery in modern times. I can't ignore the economic vitality which has more Americans working than at any time in history. I can't forget how bad things were when you and Jimmy Carter were in the White House.

I feel good about America, Mr. Mondale. I wish you did, too. I also feel that you and your party have given Americans a clear choice in this presidential election.

That choice is Ronald Reagan.

Readers' Views on: Democratic Convention

'Gays' demonstration disgusting, repulsive

Possibly it was because I had just finished dinner but I truly feel that the nausea, disgust and repulsion I experienced while watching the news on a recent Monday was the result of watching the demonstration of the "gays" and lesbians at the beginning of the Democratic National Convention.

I am concerned with the depth of immorality that we have allowed our nation and children to experience and even some support openly. Do even the Democrats have to support so called "gay rights" in order to get their votes in November? My political affiliation has nothing to do with my strong opposition to these immoral actions. I view the coalition between blacks, women, etc., as possibly having some validity but homosexuals are to be classed with all immorality and have no legitimate rights.

They have the same rights as would idolaters, adulterers, thieves and extortioners, drunkards, etc., because this is with whom God classifies them. I resent, as a woman, being classified as a minority alongside homosexuals and lesbians — this is the ultimate degradation!

Then we hear — we must let everyone do his own thing and live up to their own potential. Apparently that is not God's viewpoint and if he is still old-fashioned and pertinent to today's needs — then take that up with him. Sodom and Gomorrah were filled with homosexuals and sexual deviants and I don't remember God allowing them to experience life in the way they wished — I believe he utterly destroyed them. He deals with us differently today and allows us usually a lifetime to change our lives, but right and wrong are still the same.

Voters and Americans, don't be afraid to oppose such repulsive behavior. Show our political leaders that you are tired of supporting any "group" that comes along and that you are ready to begin making the future more valid and moral for our children. We have got to do it — we have already seen that the other guy is not going to — he is afraid he will lose a vote. Voters, make this year one in which you make your voting decision on a man who has some moral standards and demonstrates them.

Democrats condone slaughter of unborn

I watched the Democratic Convention last week in utter disgust!

It is unthinkable that the Democratic Party should have three presidential nominees who would tear down our military strength and be so foolish as to think the Soviet Union would follow suit! How sad that the Democratic Party can only offer men who would help to bring to pass a former Soviet leader's prediction that "our grandchildren will bury you!"

All three bemoan the wars in Central America as "useless slaughter of innocent people" while they approve the "freedom of choice" movement: abortion. This freedom of choice is nothing less than the "useless slaughter of innocent people" — our most innocent and most helpless people, our unborn babies! For one of these men to profess to be a minister of God and still advocate murder through abortion is a sin against not only the God he claims to serve but a sin against every decent, God-fearing American citizen!

Think about it, fellow Americans! Do you want a president who would help us to lose the freedom that so many of our finest young men died to preserve and who openly condones murder?

If this is what the majority of Americans want, God help us all!

Reagan, Mondale begin campaign cannonading

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

SAN SIMEON, Calif. — Campaign cannonading began in earnest with President Reagan accusing Democratic Walter (Fritz) Mondale, presidential candidate and the top opposition leadership, of "going so far to the left, they've left America." He challenged the Democrats to behave, during a tour of Texas, Georgia and New Jersey, in a campaign of high intensity.

Earlier the president flaty denied Mondale's charge that the Republican administration planned a tax increase next year if re-elected. There always are standby revenue raising contingency plans in any administration but that doesn't mean automatic enactment of a theoretical program.

I would venture to suggest that Mondale is trying to fasten his own "big spender" image on the president. Even before the Democratic convention opened in San Francisco, Mondale promised more than $44 billion in new spending programs to the vast assortment of special interests that helped bring him the nomination.

WARREN T. Brookes, Hearst special writer and economics specialist, noted the Democrats intend to pass the buck of lavish spending to the Republicans, although Mondale personally called for higher taxes and a budget cut by two-thirds should he be elected. Actually, today's economy is President Reagan's best asset. The Democratic effort to try to turn this to their advantage falls flat. Look at the realities affecting the American people: Unemployment, at 7.1 percent, is at a four-year low.

Inflation fell to 3.2 percent in the second quarter from 4.4 percent when economists expected it could grow. The second quarter results meant that the past 18 months marked the strongest start of a recovery in 25 years. So the Democrats are retreating to "the unfairness level," meaning more for the rich and less for the poor. President Reagan, at a press conference, demolished that set Raggedy Ann picture.

In his 26th televised press conference since taking office and the first since former Vice President Mondale obtained the Democratic nomination, President Reagan emphasized the "fairness" concept of his administration and cited help for the needy. The Democrats, he observed, were quick to accuse him of being unjust but looked the other way when it came to listing assistance supplied by his administration when it didn't claim credit for help.

SINCE THE president has inflation well curbed, he stated that he would ask for an increase in Social Security should inflation dip below 3 percent because by law low inflation can cause a corresponding jump in Social Security. Democratic Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan of New York late Thursday night co-opted the president's plan, which would generate multi-billions for needy Social Security recipients and it passed overwhelmingly in a bipartisan Senate acceptance. And now it goes to the House for consideration.

In the give-and-take, which the president obviously enjoys, he was asked about Mondale's vice presidential nominee, Geraldine Ferraro, and her remarks about the president's religious beliefs. "Do you think that you're a good Christian?" President Reagan was asked, following up a rhetorical question earlier by Ms. Ferraro. Replied the president, "I turned the other cheek."

When it came to Central America and our commitments in that region, President Reagan dropped his lighthearted tone to assail Mondale for describing him as "trigger-happy." In his lifetime, the president asserted, he had seen four wars and peace remains his priority and ultimate goal. He wants a tranquil Central America but not a communist-run region directed by Fidel Castro's Cuba or the U.S.S.R. All efforts to persuade the Marxist Nicaraguan junta to stop exporting subversion to next-door neighbor El Salvador, which freely elected its government recently, failed. So have attempts by the Vatican to get the junta to cease persecuting priests and closing seminaries.

MONDALE INSISTS, if elected, that he will order all covert anti-Sandinista activities ended within 100 days in Nicaragua. President Reagan, facing an uphill congressional battle for funding of underground operations, has effectively ended them already. The communists are never plagued with the democratic niceties of being called to account by critics. Where El Salvador is concerned, Mondale treads swampy ground. He wants the emphasis on social and economic programs which is precisely what the Reagan administration has done while pursuing the military restructuring of the armed forces. The Reagan position has already paid sound dividends.

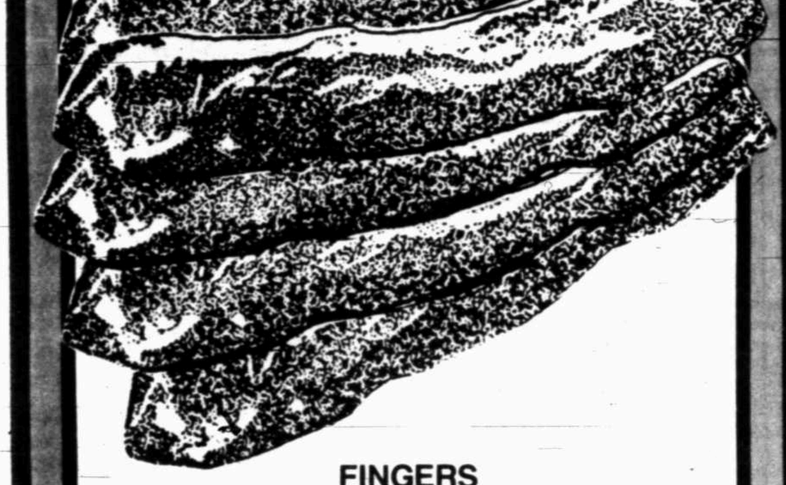

For example, popularly-elected Jose Napoleon Duarte has met with outstanding successes abroad and here to improve his country's standing. In Western Europe, he has met the heads of state and twice in Washington with President Reagan. While in Washington he also conferred with Clarence D. Long, chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, and a frequent critic of administration policy in El Salvador. Head of the Christian Democratic Party, President Duarte is the first freely elected Salvadoran president in 50 years and for this has been hailed by enthusiastic international support.

In difficult times, President Reagan personally interceded with Congress on behalf of President Duarte, whose offer to the guerrillas to lay down their arms and negotiate goes unheeded. Both President Reagan and Duarte agree: Communists cannot be permitted to establish another landbased aircraft carrier in Central America. Look next door at Nicaragua.

The fall season will feature a 14-game schedule and will begin on Sept. 10 and end Nov. 1.

Softball Tournament

A 3-2 Slo-Pitch tournament will be held Friday through Sunday at the 29th Street fields in San Angelo. The $65 entry fee is due Thursday.

The first 10 teams and first five individuals will receive trophies. Rules include foul ball is an out, 35 minute time limit, 15 runs after three innings and 10 runs after five innings. Teams hit own Blue Dot ball and home team is official scorer.

For more information, contact Howard Nance at 653-5696 after 5 p.m. or James Cox, 653-3116.

Lee starting volleyball

Midland Lee volleyball coach Janice Baulch has asked for all those wishing to compete in high school volleyball this year to report to the Lee High gym at 8 a.m. on Aug. 6.

Persons wishing to play should carry physicals and UIL forms with them to the reporting site.

Anyone interested in trying out for the team, sophomore through senior grades, are asked to report on Aug. 6.

Defense wins Cowboys' scrimmage

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (AP) — Gary Hogeboom fired a 60-yard touchdown pass to Ron Springs to highlight the Dallas Cowboys' annual intrasquad scrimmage Saturday.

Hogeboom's touchdown pass to Springs was one of the few offensive bright spots of the scrimmage, which was won by the defense 49-44.

The scrimmage was based on a scoring system that awarded points for first downs, stopping drives, interceptions and recovered fumbles, in addition to touchdowns, extra points and field goals.

Hogeboom, who is trying to win the starting quarterback job from Danny White, completed only four out of 15 passes for 115 yards and one interception.

White completed nine of 16 for 60 yards and one touchdown, while rookie signal-caller Steve Pelluer connected on six of 11 throws for 69 yards.

Timmy Newsome led the rushing attack with 54 yards on nine carries, including a 9-yard touchdown run. Tony Dorsett carried six times for 46 yards, including a 26-yard gain.

City golf sets deadline

From Staff Reports

The Midland Reporter-Telegram is sponsoring the Mens' City Championship golf tournament at Hogan Park Golf Course on Saturday and Sunday, Aug. 4 and 5.

Cost of the tournament, including green fees, is $35 per player with the entry deadline set for 8 p.m. Thursday, Aug. 2.

Flights for the tournament will be established by handicaps with 0-5 playing championship flight, 6-10 first flight, 11-14 second, 15-18 third and 19 on up in fourth.

Last year's tournament winner was Bill Baker, who is back to defend his crown.

Midlander gains CFD rodeo finals

CHEYENNE, Wyo. (AP) — Bulldogger Tommy Combs of Checotah, Okla., managed to keep his steer on its feet until he wanted the animal down, which gave him the second-best time of the go-round Saturday, 7.7 seconds, and the best total time going into the Cheyenne Frontier Days Rodeo finals Sunday.

Combs, 37, credited his time to "a lot of hustle" and ability to catch up to his steer close to the chute. It earned him $3,054 for the go-round and put him at 18.5 seconds on two head, which leads the field of steer wrestlers who will compete Sunday.

Rod Lyman of Great Falls, Mont., had the best steer wrestling time of the go-round, 7.2 seconds, and earned $3,781.

Cowboys got checks Saturday for the best performances of the second go-round. But the 12 best bronc riders and the top 15 cowboys in the other events, decided by total time or scores so far, will perform for top prize money Sunday. The final payoff will be for cumulative times and scores on three head.

A total $430,000 is being paid out during the 10-day rodeo, the richest on the Professional Rodeo Cowboy Association regular season.

The top payoff of $6,166 went to former world champion calf roper Paul Tierney of Hermosa, S.D., for a time of 12.2 seconds. Just one-tenth of a second slower, Chip Whitaker of Chambers, Neb., got a check of $4,980.

Three-time world champion steer roper Guy Allen of Lovington, N.M., added $5,128 to his winnings Saturday for the best time of the go, 13.4 seconds. Kennard Windham of Midland, Texas, came in second at 14.5 seconds, $4,142, but he has the best total time, 29.2 seconds, and will compete again Sunday.

The top rough stock payoff went to Stu Sellars of Minneula, Fla., $2,835, for his 80-point bull ride. Second-place bull riding money of $2,017 was shared by Bill Jolly of Bastrop, Texas, and Cody Snyder of Redcliffe, Alberta, Canada, for their 76-point rides.

Marty Jandreau, 23, of Kennebec, S.D., was one of the last to ride in saddle bronc Saturday afternoon, but his 76-point ride aboard a horse he said "bucked hard" earned him top go-round money of $2,567.

Dave Appleton of Stephensville, Texas, who won the first go, got another $1,847 Saturday for his bareback bronc score of 78, and he leads the field with 157 total points going into Sunday's finals.

Talladega quick, but typical

TALLADEGA, Ala. (AP) — The field of 40 cars at the Alabama International Motor Speedway on Sunday is expected to be the quickest ever, but otherwise veteran racers are predicting a "typical" Talladega 500 Grand National Stock Car race.

Six drivers qualified for the race at 200 mph or more, and the 40th car qualified at 194.595 mph.

"It will be a typical Talladega — hot and fast," Cale Yarborough said Saturday before the final practice session at the 2.666-mile tri-oval.

Yarborough, of Sardis, S.C., set a qualifying record of 202.474 mph this week to grab the pole position for the 500-mile race.

This year's race has a record purse of $415,725.

Bill Elliott of Dawsonville, Ga., will start on the outside of the front row after turning in a qualifying time of 202.422 mph.

"Speed is relative, and you can run 200 miles per hour here easier than you can anywhere else," Elliott said. "The worst thing about this race track is that people can forget how fast you are really going."

The high-banked track is the fastest on the Winston Cup circuit. Cars will run in a single-file "draft" to gain additional speed.

Winston Cup points leader Dale Earnhardt of Kannapolis, N.C., will start third after qualifying at 201.151 mph. Earnhardt is the defending champion in the race, and the victory in last year's Talladega 500 was his last.

"I love the speeds here, love the drafting and love the multi-car finishes," Earnhardt said. "I like being defending champion anywhere, but especially at Talladega.

Richard Petty of Randleman, N.C., will be gunning for career victory No. 201 on Sunday. Petty posted his fastest qualifying speed ever Thursday with a lap of 198.953 mph and will start 11th.

The race is the 18th in the 30-race Winston Cup season.

Clements tosses four TDs

HAMILTON, Ontario (AP) — Quarterback Tom Clements threw four touchdown passes while showing his former teammates that he hasn't lost his winning touch and leading the Winnipeg Blue Bombers over the Hamilton Tiger-Cats 42-20 in Canadian Football League action Saturday night.

Clements, booed by Hamilton fans before being traded to Winnipeg last year for Dieter Brock in an exchange touted then as the most historic in league history, threw two touchdown passes to James Boyd — the second covering 56 yards — to lift the Bombers from a 14-0 deficit in the second quarter to a 21-14 lead at the half.

Mary Ann Rangel, right, prepares to tape a client as part of her video dating service. Before she matches her clients, they view each others' tapes to decide if they're interested.

Videotape reduces dating to a science

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

Before the demise of the arranged marriage, choosing a mate was easy. A young man or woman just married whomever their parents found.

But ever since the marriage business was deregulated a century or two ago, people have been responsible for finding their own mates. While this is usually considered a positive development, it has not been an unmixed blessing for all concerned.

Some welcome the freedom to choose, but others are intimidated by the modern singles scene. They're frustrated by the system of random selection which has evolved to replace the matchmaker. They don't want to take their chances in that competitive free market of romance, the singles bar. They dread going on blind dates. What to do?

Well, there's always the videotape method.

"It eliminates having to mess with blind dates," says Mary Ann Rangel, who runs a Midland videotape dating service called Date A Person. "They get to know who they're dealing with."

Ms. Rangel attempts to impose order on the chaotic singles scene by reducing it to an exact science with the aid of video technology.

She has her clients fill out a detailed four-page questionnaire, then she interviews them at some length.

"It takes me a while," she says. "I really get to know them."

Victims' program not needed here, local officials say

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

Although there's a program availble to aid crime victims and witnesses, local officials say it's not as necessary in Midland as it might be in other areas of Texas.

The Victim-Witness Assistance Program is not to be confused with a program that provides financial help for victims of certain violent crimes, according to Shelley Paxton.

Ms. Paxton, who attended a recent workshop on the VWAP, is to enter her second year of law school at UT-Austin this fall and is working this summer as a law clerk for District Attorney Vern Martin.

The VWAP's basic function, she noted, is to inform victims and witnesses of the mechanics of the criminal justice system.

It would, for example, keep track of victims and witnesses, notify them of trial dates, provide transportation and emotional support if necessary, and explain why a plea-bargain may have been made or why the case might have to be dismissed.

A MAJOR FEATURE of the VWAP would be to establish at least one person in each prosecutor's office to coordinate the program and serve as liaison between the office and the victim and witnesses.

The coordinator also would help counter the intimidation victims and witnesses sometimes suffer at the hands of defendants or suspects.

Due to a shortage of space and personnel, according to Martin, there's no formalized VWAP in Midland County. But he doesn't feel there's really a need for one here.

"Ideally, it'd be desirable to have a formal program of this kind. But at the same time, Midland County probably has less need for it than most any other county in the state. That's because of the speed with which cases are processed here," he said.

"For instance, if a case doesn't come to trial for, say, a year, obviously neither we nor the police have time to stay in contact with victims and witnesses. There are just hundreds of other cases that must be handled.

"The typical case in Midland County — where the defendant has been arrested — is processed to conclusion within 60 to 90 days. I'd love to have a formal program because there are occasional cases where victims and witnesses get lost in the shuffle.

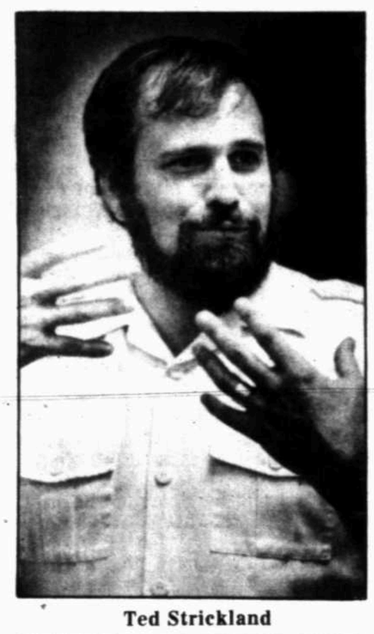

"But compared to other needs in the prosecuting of cases, it's not a relatively high priority because most of it's already happening here," Martin said.

SUCH WAS NOT the case five or six years ago, according to Martin, when there was a backlog of more than 800 cases — some of which were up to six years old.

"Half the defendants hadn't even hired lawyers," he said. "That changed with the advent of an additional district court and the streamlining of court and prosecutorial procedures."

While Martin sympathizes with crime victims, he sees a pitfall in the growing attention they've been receiving of late, with more and more victims viewing themselves as clients of prosecuting attorneys.

Ted Strickland

MCT's Strickland will head Chattanooga theater

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

Nestled in the trees, the Tennessee River at its doorstep, the Little Theatre of Chattanooga has, from its veranda outside the lobby, a panoramic view of the river bluffs with Chattanooga proper sitting on the other side.

"It's a beautiful location," says Ted Strickland, assistant director at Midland Community Theatre. Strickland has given his notice at MCT he will accept the assignment of chief administrative/managing artistic director on a staff of five at the 60-year-old Little Theatre of Chattanooga. He will trade West Texas tan for Tennessee green Aug. 10.

"As soon as 'Mass Appeal' opens (Friday), I have to get things packed up and ready to go."

Strickland views the job as a "very challenging prospect. For an organization that's 61 years old, they're tremendously unsophisticated in terms of their theatrical expectations. They recognize that.

"IN THE STATE of Tennessee, the big community theater in Memphis is really the only community theater that anybody ever knows about or talks about. And I think Chattanooga is saying, 'Hey, let's put ourselves on the map.' So they were out searching diligently for somebody."

The director at Theatre Memphis provided the contact for the job. Strickland had told the director he was in the market. Chattanoonga, meanwhile, had told the same man they were seeking someone. Strickland's name was forwarded to them.

Strickland was "in the market" he says, because "my professional ambitions were to eventually move back into the top administrative and artistic position...The opportunity presented itself."

Comparing the two theaters, Strickland says, "It's a much smaller facility. It was built in 1963 for about a quarter of a million dollars. It's got a 350 seat proscenium house and a circular experimental stage called The Circle. It will seat about 200 if you do full round so it's equivalent space (to Theatre Two) but circular rather than square.

"The major thing that it lacks is the auxiliary support space that makes Theatre Midland unique. There isn't a shop where you can work without interfering with rehearsals. There isn't a rehearsal room. There isn't costume, prop, set storage space. They've got some auxiliary space in a little warehouse somewhere in town for some costume and prop storage."

This means the crew can work only one night a week to prepare for a play. They will be hunting for an auxiliary space for storage and rehearsal.

"THEY'VE GOT a tremendous amount to grow, and, I guess, that's the challenge.

"It's also one of the tough things in terms of leaving here. The goals, the future of Midland Community Theatre, short term, could be so much higher than what the legitimate goals can be in Chattanooga. It's a different level of sophistication. But, I think one of the goals in Chattanooga will be to develop an organization that is as strong and as supportive as Midland Community Theatre enjoys."

Although Chattanooga is considerably larger — 350,000 in the city with another 100,000 in outlying areas which together constitute greater Chattanooga — the base of support is not as high as in Midland.

"They have about 3,500 subscribers and they do 10 performances of a six-show season. Last year they played to 97 percent capacity, so they don't hurt for an audience. One of the things is to expand that audience which is probably going to mean expanding the production program."

Midland Community Theatre this season had reached almost 5,400 members. MCT's productions run anywhere from eight shows to about 31 as in the case of this season's opener, "Annie."

Theater competition is stiffer in Chattanooga, Strickland says.

"There are two universities, both with theater departments. There are two road show houses in town that bring artistic groups in on a regular basis. There is an opera organization that produces three full operas a year."

Fees of court-appointed lawyers causing controversy

By LAWRENCE BUDD
Staff Writer

Upholding justice is costing counties across the state millions of dollars each year.

The criminal justice system each county must operate to protect its citizens and provide defendants their legal rights grows each year as people continue to violate the law.

Midland County spent more than $2.6 million in 1982-83 to finance its system and has budgeted more than $3 million to maintain the same system this year.

In Ector County, about $3.7 million was spent during the last budget year to maintain that legal system. Almost $4.4 million is budgeted to pay the system's bills this year.

Ector, which traditionally gets more criminal activity from its larger population, appears to be keeping this pace. Its judicial system cleared 1,724 cases from court dockets during the first three months of 1984, while Midland disposed of 940.

A SINGLE CASE, the murder trial of an Odessa man who was found innocent after a week-long trial in May, cost more than $33,000. This was an unusual case, the most costly of the year for the county, in which the jury was sequestered for a week.

Meals the 12 jurors ate at restaurants outside the motel during the four-plus days they were accommodated cost more than $560. The motel charged the county $2,500 for the rooms where the jurors stayed for four nights and meals eaten there.

The investigator appointed by the court to what developed into a complicated case charged the county $995. Bills for psychiatric examinations totaled $1,800. And the costs of time spent by the judge, prosecutors, bailiff and court reporter were calculated at $4,150 by County Auditor Dan Ramirez.

These costs together made up about one-third of the total bill. The remaining two-thirds — more than $23,000 — went to the two attorneys appointed by the court to represent the defendant.

The costs of court-appointed attorneys — necessary in most upper-level felony cases to see that the defendant receives adequate defense when facing a possible life sentence — has created controversy across the state as the lawyers are begrudged their fees.

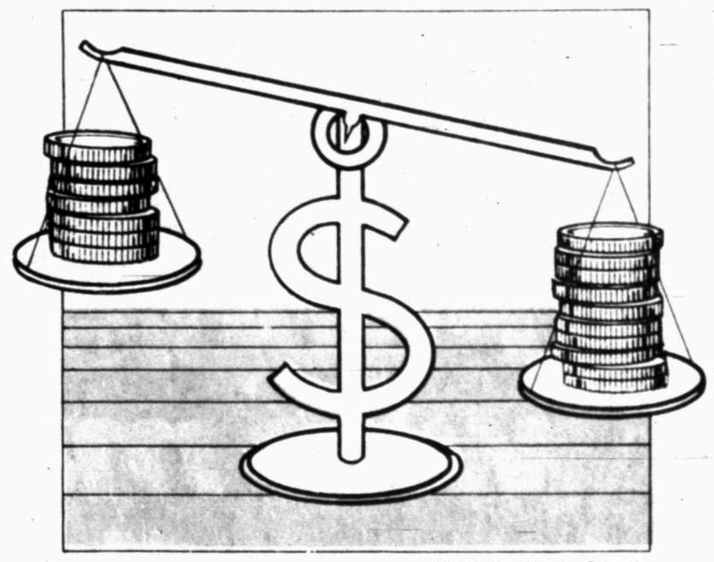

IN MIDLAND COUNTY, $105,000 is budgeted for this year and more than $127,000 was spent last year to pay attorneys to represent defendants who cannot afford to pay. State law calls for the county to pay attorney fees for indigents and to see the legal counsel provided is adequate. (Otherwise, appellate courts can reverse the district court decision and send it back for retrial or dismiss the charges entirely.)

The county's budget does not represent the entire amount paid to court-appointed attorneys in Midland.

A pool set up through the local bar association supplements the county payment. Attorneys wanting to avoid being appointed pay into this fund. (In many cases, corporate attorneys' companies pay to keep them off the list of attorneys eligible for appointment.)

No such alternative funding has been set up in Ector, where county commissioners have complained frequently about mounting bills during a year the county has struggled with financial woes.

GARY OTT

You do your best and all you get is ridicule

It has come to my attention that some spineless varmint has been using the radio airwaves to report that yours truly was part of the last-place team in Thursday's media golf tournament geared at raising money for the Midland Crime Stoppers Program.

It figures. You try and do something useful for the community and what do you get in return? Ridicule. Nothing but ridicule. You do your best and some (shall we say, "hefty") smart aleck radio personality sees fit to broadcast for all to hear that you and your partner skied to an 89 and as a result were recipients of the Rubber Duckie award for ineptness.

OK, so we did shoot an 89 and, yes, that is an incredibly bad score, especially under the liberal rules of scramble golf. But what Mr. Radio Man failed to tell you was that I faced intense pressure from many directions. For example:

— I was sober, a condition not conducive to good golf, especially when people (even a handful) are watching you.

— We had to start at the ungodly hour of 8:16 a.m. and, as you can imagine, it took a good 16 holes before I woke up and stopped experiencing double vision.

— I had never played the course before, an immensely valid excuse that is sometimes even used by touring professionals.

— Being a person who always keeps up with international affairs, my mind kept wondering how the freedom fighters in Afghanistan were faring rather than concentrating on that three-foot downhill breaking putt, an excuse NOT generally expressed by touring professionals.

— It was all my partner's fault.

Ahh, yes, my partner, a true golfing legend. He shall remain nameless at this point but to those who know him best, he is simply The Big Guy.

Allow me to explain.

The Big Guy, all six feet three inches and 220 pounds of him, got us off to a grand start by showing up at the elaborate clubhouse clad in camouflaged Army fatigues, University of Arkansas T-shirt, a punk rock haircut and hightop tennis shoes, an outfit that understandably brought looks of horror from many of the club regulars.

It also played a major role in our being named "Best Dressed Team" in the tournament, though I thought the choice was misguided and, instead, should have gone to the TV person who had the audacity to prance around the course in a pair of trousers featuring a bizarre combination of bright red and solid white stripes.

But that's a different story altogether.

What we're talking about here is a disgustingly poor round of golf and the subsequent verbal abuse that was dished out.

Ugly comments were common. There was:

— "89? Good Lord, what did you guys do, play blindfolded?"

— "You did understand this was a scramble tournament, didn't you?"

— "You're actually going to turn in that score?"

— "Thanks. You were the only team we beat."

— "Was this the first time you'd ever played?"

— "Does it bother you when people are laughing during your backswing?"

It certainly does. But what these jerks don't realize is that The Big Guy and I got the last laugh. We cheated. We really shot 98.

Cleaning up

Art and Carol Bailey pile more weeds onto the trash can during a cleanup Saturday at the Lancaster House. A group of Midlanders is trying to save the house from being demolished.

VICTIMS

"Prosecutors do not represent victims of crime; they represent the state," he said. "As such, they — in a sense — represent the defendant equally. Prosecutors, not defense attorneys, take an oath that justice be done.

"This sometimes means dropping charges in cases where there's insufficient evidence. This is hard for victims to understand sometimes.

"Of course, there are some victims who aren't all that interested in their case. And some of the people who are interested usually stay in constant touch with us anyway — whether we want them to or not.

"What that really means is that some of them badger the hell out of us when our time could be better spent prosecuting cases."

THE NEED FOR the VWAP in some locales, said Ms. Paxton, was illustrated at the workshop.

"We were told of a case in California where a woman's parents had been brutally murdered. When she called the DA's office to find out when it would come to trial, she was told it was none of her business.

"Suzanne Williams, the coordinator for the Texas Crime Victim Clearinghouse in Austin, conducted the seminar and said things like that go on all the time in places like Harris County.

"Harris County has 37 different law enforcement agenices — all of which process their cases through one DA's office," Ms. Paxton said. "They're swamped, and the VWAP is helping them."

Ms. Paxton related one case in Harris County where a grandson had raped his grandmother. There was no place to store the semen specimen except in the victim's own refrigerator, where it served as a constant reminder of what had happened to her.

The grandson's mother ultimately obtained the specimen and threw it away, thereby destroying the case. The VWAP, according to Ms. Paxton, established a line of communication between law enforcement officers and set up a central location to store such evidence.

"Evidently, no one else cared. It was these people (VWAP) who did something about it," she said.

STATE DISTRICT Judge Pat Baskin agrees with Martin that the criminal court dockets are up to date.

"We're in very good shape — both here and in Judge (Vann) Culp's court," he said. "And it's not that much due to the speedy trial law because the act does not mandate that the court try a case within a given period, but simply that the prosecution be ready for trial."

County court dockets "are pretty much up to date, compared to other counties," said Assistant County Attorney Mark Dettman, whose office prosecutes misdemeanor cases. "We're not far enough behind that the VWAP would be beneficial.

"Besides, compared to the DA's office, we handle very few cases that even involve a victim. From 80 to 90 percent of our cases are DWIs, simple drug possession cases and unlawfully carrying a weapon," he said.

Dettman indicated that with stepped-up enforcement of the DWI law and increased jurisdiction in misdemeanor theft cases, the county attorney's office could better employ more help and another county court-at-law than it could the VWAP.

STRICKLAND

CHATTANOOGA, LIKE Midland, has an "arts going community" that will travel. The distances are shorter.

"Nashville is an hour and a half up the road and Atlanta is two hours down the road. Atlanta has something like seven professional theaters in it and Nashville has three. There's a lot of competition for the entertainment dollar."

The type of material being done in Midland and Chattanooga theaters is similar, Strickland says, citing "Mass Appeal," "Lion in Winter" and "Don't Drink the Water" as plays both cities have produced.

"It's a heavier season than what we would risk. Normally our formula has been one or two musicals, one comedy/drama or drama/comedy and then the rest straight comedies, modern or classic. And they are heading more toward one fluff, a couple of musicals and then three heavier, more interesting, theatrically more challenging shows."

The Chattanooga theater also has a children's program. In existence for only a year, the children's school has more than 300 students enrolled in classes and has plans to stage five productions annually.

The five-member staff Strickland will head up includes a designer, a youth theater director, a director of operations and development — similar to a business manager — public relations person, and a secretary. Part-time employees include a custodian and a costumer.

ANOTHER MEMBER of the Chattanooga community theater staff is from MCT. Brett Batterson, designer for MCT, is going to Chattanooga to fill the designer position there.

When the two leave, they will take more than just their talent with them.

Batterson is married to Elizabeth Hewlett, who has a degree in acting from Tulane University and has starred in recent MCT productions, playing Stella in "A Streetcar Named Desire" and Leontine in "13 Rue de l'Amour."

Strickland is married to Arlene Jara, perhaps best remembered by Midland audiences for her performance of Fanny Brice in "Funny Girl."

Mrs. Strickland, who was the public relations officer for Midland Memorial Hospital for the past three years, is now filling that capacity for United Way of Midland.

In addition to missing "Midland and the people," Strickland will be minus his wife and their 4-year-old son Danny for several months.

"Ted and I are real flexible," Mrs. Strickland says, "Both of us are professional people and are sincerely committed to our careers as well as to our family."

Mrs. Strickland will be in Midland at least until the United Way Campaign is over in late October or early November. Then, she will join her husband in Chattanooga.

Both will miss the kind of support community theater has in Midland.

"There are some places we've been where, if you worked at the theater, people looked at you crosseyed," Mrs. Strickland says. "Here, you're well rewarded."

FEES

Last year, the county paid court-appointed attorneys $140,000. Fees for the current budget year have already surpassed by $41,000 the $180,000 budgeted for this purpose, and tentative plans for next year call for $210,000 to be budgeted.

One alternative to the current set-up in Ector is a pool similar to Midland's, but the fewer number of corporate attorneys makes this less attractive.

ANOTHER OPTION is the creation of a public defender's office. Ector County Judge Jan Fisher questioned the sense of forming this department, pointing to pending legislation she said would force counties to fund their public defender offices at a level equal to the district and county attorney offices combined.

District Judge Joe Connally, who served as Ector County judge before moving to the district court bench, supported the logic of a public defender's office being funded equal to the district attorney's office.

The district attorney's budget for the current year is $90,000 above last year's expenditures of $350,000 in Ector. (In Midland County, the DA's budget was up $65,000 over last year's expenditures.)

Comparing the $440,000 spent by the state to prosecute felony defendants to the $221,000 charged by defense attorneys, Connally suggested the county was getting its money's worth.

"I think (the attorneys) probably are making no money and are losing $10 per hour in most of the cases," he said, noting the county pays $50 per hour as opposed to the $60 per hour lawyers estimate as their overhead costs. Attorney fees in criminal cases in which the defendant hires the lawyer average $100 per hour, said Connally.

Jim Jordan, who has served as an assistant district attorney in Houston and Odessa and now is in private practice, said a different system could make the court-appointment system more efficient. In Houston, Jordan said newer attorneys made $40,000-$50,000 annually, while freeing up attorneys not wanting court appointments.

BUT JORDAN agreed with Ector County DA Mike Holmes, who pointed out that newer attorneys cannot always provide the experienced advice necessary in felony criminal cases.

Consolidation of law enforcement services duplicated by the city and county has been studied, but problems arise partially from a lack of cooperation between officers of the two agencies, said Connally.

Plans for a jail that would have served both Midland and Ector County were scuttled when no agreement could be reached as to which sheriff would have ultimate authority, he recalled.

Ways to cut costs are hard to find in a system mandated to large extent by state law and designed to protect the defendant in every way possible.

"The very system is inefficient by nature," said Ector County District Judge R.L. McKim, referring to the law's emphasis on defendant rights.

"There's a lot of inefficiencies built in," agreed Holmes. " I don't know how to get around it."

Connally, who has been looking at ways to make the system more efficient from the judicial and management branches of the county government during the last 10 years, said, "If I knew of a way to save the county money, I'd do it."

The costs of the criminal justice system "is going to rise and it's going to rise faster than the inflation rate," he said.

"The only real solution to the rising costs of the criminal justice system is to eliminate crime before it happens through better education and full employment," said Connally.

DATING

Then she makes a color tape of the clients talking about themselves and what they're looking for in another person. When she thinks she has a good match, she has one of the clients (usually the man) come in and look at the tape. If he likes what he sees and hears, she has the woman come in and view his tape. If she approves, Ms. Rangel arranges a rendezvous.

This is what takes the guesswork out of the whole thing. In a bar, singles are dealing with people they don't know anything about. With Date A Person, they get a sneak preview.

"It's just a different way to meet people," says Lisa Smith, who just signed up with the service.

Ms. Smith, who preferred that her real name not be used for this article, said she was attracted to Date A Person by the convenience.

"I don't like to go out to bars and meet people, and I haven't met anybody in church," she says. "And I don't really have time" for the singles scene.

For $50 per month, Ms. Smith will receive the benefit of Ms. Rangel's practiced matchmaking skills.

"If you're real particular and never find anybody you like, I refund the money," Ms. Rangel says.

Though her service has only been open for a month, Ms. Rangel has years of experience arranging matches between her friends.

"I've always been that way," she says. "I enjoy it."

The idea of turning her hobby into a profession grew out of another of Ms. Rangel's business endeavors, a day care center which is patronized by many divorced mothers of young children. The nursery is open Friday and Saturday nights, and Ms. Rangel kept hearing the same complaints from these women when they came back from their dates to pick up their children.

"They'd say they couldn't find anybody nice," she says. "The biggest complaint was that they couldn't find anybody honest and sincere."

Ms. Rangel saw a need for a dating service to help people who aren't comfortable with the singles scene, or who have been out of it so long they've forgotten how to ask someone for a date.

"It's kind of sad, but there are a lot of lonely people in Midland," she says.

Of course, it's still possible to be dishonest and insincere on videotape, but Ms. Rangel checks out each prospective client to screen those people.

"I've gotten some pretty nice people here," she says of her 37 clients. "But I did have two young ladies who came here with the attitude that they wanted to find wealthy men. I told them I'm sorry, but this is not an escort service."

Although her clients range in age from 21 to 69, most are between 25 and 35. In general, she says, the ones over 35 want to find someone to settle down with, while the younger clients are looking for something more casual. Women are more interested in finding someone with marriage potential, while men tend to be more concerned about the physical appearance of their prospective dates.

"It's not fair," says Ms. Rangel. "They may not look so great but they expect women to look slim and trim and gorgeous."

But she was able to match at least one average-looking man with a very attractive woman.

"He was real sweet, and she just fell in love with the tape," she says. "They're still seeing each other."

There's a certain logic about video dating — it's like viewing a "coming attraction" clip before deciding to see the entire movie.

But is it not perhaps just a little too logical, a little too safe, a little too cut and dried? Where's the romance, the excitement, the thrill of the chase?

"It's just being a little bit realistic," says Ms. Rangel. "They come in here as a last resort. What have they got to lose?"

Woman involved in custody battle over chimpanzee

HOUSTON (AP) — A woman involved in a custody battle over a 4-year-old chimpanzee says she gives the animal more affection than his previous owner did.

Houston animal trainer Paulette Rottman says she paid $5,000 for the monkey and says his name is "Scooter." But Glenn Toth claims the chimp is named "Mikey" and was stolen from his exotic animal compound in Palmdale, Calif.

An Aug. 8 hearing has been set to determine the chimp's identity, Houston police officer G.G. Lively said.

Authorities believe the chimp, which turned up at an animal boarding farm near Houston after an anonymous caller tipped police, is believed to be a 3½-foot-tall ape who was stolen from Toth last month.

Toth said Mikey, who has appeared on such TV shows as "The Dukes of Hazzard," "Private Benjamin" and "Alice," is worth about $12,000 because he is an established animal actor.

Toth has said he figures Ms. Rottman "didn't know that he was a hot chimp."

Police said Toth reported the chimp stolen June 19, when a guard heard an animal screaming and a truck driving away, then found that Mikey's cage had been cut open.

Tower recommends appointment

U.S. Sen. John Tower, R-Texas, has recommended to President Reagan the appointment of Walter S. Smith Jr. of Waco as judge for the western district, which includes Midland.

He would occupy a new seat created by the recently enacted Bankruptcy Court and Federal Judgeship Act of 1984.

Smith currently is U.S. Magistrate with the western district of Texas, and is associated with the law firm of Vaughan, Terrell, Lynn and Crowdun of Waco. He previously served as 54th District Court Judge from November 1980 to December 1982.

"Mr. Smith demonstrated exceptional ability while serving on the bench as state district judge. I believe his professional experience makes him an excellent candidate for this federal judgeship," said Tower.

A practicing attorney since 1966, Smith received his undergraduate and law degrees from Baylor University. He was born in Marlin on Oct. 26, 1940. He and his wife Jill have four children.

DEATHS

W. Deerwood

ODESSA — Walter Deerwood Jones, 71, of Odessa, father of Bobby Jones of Midland, died Thursday at a local nursing home.

Services were to be today at Hubbard-Kelly Funeral Home. Burial was in Sunset Memorial Gardens.

Jones was born Aug. 16, 1912, in Fannin County. He was married to Hazel Olene Lewis Oct. 3, 1934, in Comanche. A Baptist, he was retired from the W.D. Jones Trucking Co.

Other survivors include his wife, a son, a daughter, two sisters, nine grandchildren and six great-grandchildren.

People of our community who make a difference.

"I see Midland as a city of opportunity! Like other cities, it has some problems, but Midlanders view those problems as exciting challenges," says Gloria Hinojosa. Mrs. Hinojosa is, without question, one of those Midlanders who has accepted the challenge of smoothing out the little rough spots in our community.

Mrs. Hinojosa's desire is to help every Midlander see our community as a place of opportunity. Each day at St. Andrews Mission she sees many people who have not had the privilege of developing skills which are essential in our society. She translates for some and helps many others with correspondence and forms. Though Mrs. Hinojosa takes great delight in helping these people, she is most pleased when she can provide them with the opportunity to develop their own skills.

Mrs. Hinojosa faces the need for adult education in our community. She teaches many adult education classes including driver's education (classroom part) and citizenship classes. Mrs. Hinojosa also leads Bible classes for adults and children.

In addition, she plays a vital part in the preschool program at St. Andrews Mission. This program opens doors to preschool education for economically disadvantaged 3-4 year olds.

Mrs. Hinojosa's willingness to tackle problems in the field of education and her commitment to Midland as a city of opportunity has lead her to serve in a number of positions. She has served on the Board of Midland College for 12 years and on Midland College's Committee on Adult Education. Furthermore, she has worked with the school district's GEM program and the Bilingual Education Council.

Opportunities for improvement in our community are not limited to education, so Mrs. Hinojosa has also been a member of the Human Relations Council and Mexican American Advisory Council. Likewise, she has served on the Midland County Library Board and a number of YMCA committees and United Way Committees.

Commitment to opening doors of opportunity to all Midlanders is why Gloria Hinojosa makes a difference in Midland.

The affable Charlie Jones, a lawman for 27 years, is investigator for the Midland County Attorney's office. He has been a policeman, sheriff's deputy and deputy constable.

Man gave up farm for badge

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Charlie Jones left the farm and came to town.

He pumped gasoline, cowboyed for a spell, got into the big war of the 1940s, worked in the oil field, and finally pinned on a badge and strapped on a six-shooter.

Jones, never an outlaw, became a lawman of the gentle persuasion. He is the investigator for the County Attorney's office.

He was born on a farm near Dublin 62 years ago last spring.

"We raised cotton, corn, maize and watermelon."

The family moved to nearby Alexander community, 14 miles south of Stephenville, between Dublin and Hico. Jones got his schooling in Alexander.

"There might have been a hundred people there at the time," he recalled, but about 500 students, from the rural areas and other communities, attended school in the consolidated school district.

Still, Jones would ride the horse "back out there" to the 61-acre, one-team family farm.

Eventually, many folks left Alexander because "there wasn't nothing to hold the people there. People had to move some place else to find work."

JONES GRADUATED from high school in 1939 and went to work pumping gasoline at an old Magnolia Petroleum Co. service station in Stephenville. He worked 12-hour days seven days a week, made $10 a week and "got the third Sunday off."

Later, Jones tried his hand at cowboying on the 110-section T-Bar Ranch, which ran mostly sheep and some Hereford cattle.

He was comfortable on the range.

"I was raised on a horse," he said. "That's about the only transportation we had during the Depression."

He rode fences, repaired them, checked the cattle for screwworms, rounded up the cattle and branded them.

During the shearing season and round-up time, the cowboys would eat off the chuckwagon.

"We ate mostly mutton. Oh, I've eaten enough of that old mutton stew."

In 1942, Jones hung up his spurs and hat and was drafted into the U.S. Army.

After the war, he worked in the oil patch, married his sweetheart, "Blondie," in 1955, left the oil field and began his 27-year career in law enforcement in Midland.

He started out in 1957 as a city patrolman under Police Chief Harold Wallace.

"I JUST HIRED out." Back then, there was no formal training, such as that in today's police academies, for city and county peace officers. "I rode with the lieutenant one night...worked with the sergeant one night, and they turned me loose on the west side."

He still remembers the maze of the Permian Estates housing addition, his — and others' — propensity to get lost in that confusing neighborhood, and recalled the then newness of the Village Shopping Center and Grammer-Murphey Village Store.

"Midland Drive was just a pig trail, a cow trail," Jones recalled.

"We kept pretty well on top of things" in keeping peace in the city.

In 1963, Jones left the police department and went as a deputy under Sheriff Ed "Big Ed" Darnell.

"He was a good sheriff, and I think Wallace was a good police chief."

The sheriff's department was an eight-man force in the early 1960s.

"We had a lot of PR (public relations) type of things and used a lot of common horse sense."

Darnell once described Jones as an officer who "cooperates with fellow officers and the public extremely well" and said he can "recommend Charlie Jones in any endeavor."

IN 1976, JONES left the sheriff and went to work for Constable Jack Merritt, who died in office at age 76 in 1980. That year, in the only political race he ever waged, Jones ran against a fellow deputy constable, Tom McGinnis, for constable but lost the election.

In late 1980, he became the County Attorney's first investigator and has worked under two county attorneys, Robert Rendall and now, J. Scott Henderson.

"I never had too much trouble serving warrants or making arrests," he said. "I have a pretty good record of finding people in Midland County."

As investigator, Jones investigates police reports on misdemeanor offenses, does follow-up work, investigates driving-while-intoxicated (DWI) offenses, thefts, assaults, criminal trespasses, driving under influence of drugs (DUID) and driving while license suspended (DWLS).

"And if we don't have anything else to do, I have to collect bad checks."

Jones, who described himself as "a jack of all trades and a master of none," said the diversity and suspense of law enforcement appeals to him.

"Well, you never know what you're going to be doing the next hour."

Each day, Jones said he tries to conduct himself so that when he's shaving, he can look at himself in the mirror "and not have a guilty conscience."

"I like to treat people like I'd like to be treated if I was in their place," he said. "I've tried to get along with people and with those I work with."

Free delivery service operates between Fredericksburg, Stonewall

FREDERICKSBURG (AP) — If you're driving through Fredericksburg and see a red flag outside Johnny Weidenfeller's Mobil station, it would be neighborly to stop and pick up a package for delivery in Stonewall.

The package might be a medical prescription or it might be an automobile part for the garage at the other end of the "pony express" in Stonewall.

The free-delivery system has been operating for more than 40 years over the 14-mile stretch of U.S. 290.

The service began during World War II, when gas and tires were rationed and every trip had to count, Burg said.

But when the war ended nobody thought about giving it up.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

New building shaping up

By H.A. TUCK

The new Health Sciences Building at Midland College really has come out of the ground the past couple of weeks, with bunches of steel showing an outline of the size of the building. Sidewalk superintendents now are able to tell quite a lot more about the building, after months of looking at nothing more than piles of dirt.

• • •

By dawn's early light we really appreciated a jogger recently who was first visible from some reflective material on the heal of each shoe. Don't know where he got it but it would be nice if more people wore it while using Chaparral Circle. It's still a bit scary suddenly to drive up on a walker clad all in dark clothing.

• • •

It's only one week until MC starts its early counseling and issuance of time permits for the fall semester registration. It all starts Aug. 6.

Fall course bulletins listing both credit and non-credit classes being offered should be available this week from the Office of Student Services in the Administration Building. They also may be picked up in any Midland bank office or at the Midland County Library.

The college's hours now are 7 a.m.-8 p.m. Monday through Thursday for persons who would like to obtain a copy of the bulletin.

Oh yes, official registration this fall comes Aug. 29-30 with classes starting Sept. 4.

• • •

Joe Melanie Calverley, who has been teaching photography and serving as advisory for student publications since 1972, has just announced her decision to resign from MC.

With her skill, patience and knowledge, Joe has taught thousands of youngsters and adults the art and craft of photography for 13 years, first from a tiny makeshift darkroom and more recently from the labs she designed for the Allison Fine Arts Building's photo area. Many of her students, plus a number of MC publications she supervised, won local, regional and statewide honors.

During her years with MC Joe wore out more than a few cars as she commuted daily from the family ranch at Garden City to the campus. She has been an outstanding faculty member and all of us at MC, plus all her former students, wish her the very best in the future.

• • •

We welcome Rob Scofield to the MC staff. Rob assumes the post of Student Activities Director Aug. 1. He comes from Lamesa where he was minister of the First Christian Church.

Rob's wife Babara also knows a bit about commuting. She drove from Lamesa each day for the past two years to her MC teaching position in computer science and is fondly looking forward to the extra two hours she will gain from their living in Midland.

H.A. Tuck is public relations director for Midland College.

Financial aid information available

The Scholarship Research Institute of Texas, an affiliate of the Scholarship Research Institute of America in Washington, D.C., lists more than $3 billion in financial aid sources available to students entering college. It provides information about little-known scholarships for the average student.

After filling out a profile, students are sent a list of scholarships, grants, awards and loans for which they are eligible. Data includes dollar value, type of award, student's capatability factor and contact information.

Cost of the program is $29, and results are guaranteed or the fee is refunded. For an eligibility packet, write to The Scholarship Research Institute of Texas, 225 Congress, Suite 102, Austin, Texas 78701.

Lifeguard 'Olympics' at Wonderland

Water Wonderland and the American Red Cross field office are co-sponsoring the first "Lifeguard Olympics" at Water Wonderland on Aug. 2. The games will begin at 10 a.m. and end at 5 p.m. with an awards presentation.

Clay W. Francell, an instructor trainer with Red Cross, said lifeguards from all over West Texas and eastern New Mexico have been invited to participate. Each team is comprised of four members, who will compete with other teams during the day. To date, eight teams have signed up, and Francell said he expects to start the competition with 10 to 12 teams.

There are seven "Lifesaving Style" events which will test each team member's skill, speed and endurance. The winning team will receive a gold-plated whistle for their members. The winning team also will receive a complete set of rescue equipment for their pool which they represent. This equipment will include a rescue tube, ring buoy, shepherd's crook and a floating backboard.

Francell said this is a new way for the Red Cross to promote water safety, lifeguard training and fun through competition.

More information can be obtained by calling Francell, 563-1160, or the Ector County Red Cross, 332-5641.

Children will be entertained by magicians, clowns, storytellers and the breakdance group Flow Patrol on the Showmobile. Free drinks and candy will be given to each child. Games such as Frisbee toss and Frisbee accuracy will be played with prizes donated from local merchants.

Dennis the Menace Day concludes the summer season. For more information call 682-4281, extension 316.

The first breakdance contest sponsored by the Parks and Recreation Department will be held at 1 p.m. Saturday at Dillard's courtyard in Midland Park Mall.

The contest is open to any individual or group. Entry fee is $5 per person or $15 per group. The two divisions of competition are individual or team. All contestants must provide their own cassette music and arrive at the mall by noon.

Trophies will be awarded for first place in each division along with a $50 gift certificate to Midland Park Mall. The first place winner in the team division will be the special featured performer at the mall's back-to-school fashion show Aug. 11.

Contestants will be judged on originality, degree of difficulty and team work (if applicable). Registration forms can be obtained at the Parks and Recreation office, 300 Baldwin, or Midland Park Mall office. Entries will be limited to 10 contestants in each division, and will be chosen on a first come, first serve basis.

Nutrition, feeding for horses misunderstood

Kiker

This is the final article on small acreage land and livestock management and this week we will be looking at horse feeds and feeding for the small landowner.

Horses, compared to all other domestic livestock species, are probably the least understood by their owners when it comes to feeding and nutrition. Combine this with the generally poor range or pasture conditions that many horses are maintained under, and it is amazing that many horses survive as well as they do. In the last 10 to 20 years, horse nutrition research has been increased throughout the United States, and we now have a better idea of the nutritional requirement of the horse under different physiological and work conditions. This information is simple to understand, and is invaluable for horse owners and breeders to maintain their animals in optimum physical condition.

Nutrients required by the horse in order of importance are: clean, fresh water; energy; protein; minerals and vitamin A.

Water should be clean, fresh ann provided free-choice. The only exception to this rule is after exercise. A horse should be cooled off 30 minutes before being allowed to drink. During exercise, they should be allowed to drink as often as practical and as much as they want.

Eighty to 90 percent of the feed eaten by a horse is used for energy (found in carbohydrates, fats and proteins). The energy content of feed is usually expressed as TDN, or total digestible nutrients. Carbohydrates come in two forms: crude fiber (cellulose, poorly utlilized for energy) and nitrogen free extract (NFE). Thus, the higher the fiber content of feed, the lower the quality. NFE provides moat of the energy in a horse's ration. A horse can eat a maximum of 3 percent of its body weight/day and will eat an amount of feed necessary to meet its energy demands if the feed is available and of sufficient quality. Horses can utilize up to 16 percent fat in the total ration and 30 percent fat in the concentrate. Fat provides twice as much energy as an equal weight of protein or carbohydrates.

Protein is simply many amino acids tied together. The amino acid lysine is the most important to the horse. If a ration is deficient in lysine, growth rate and feed efficiency are lowered. Sources of protein high in lysine are alfalfa and soybean meal.

Three minerals are important in feeding your horse: salt (or sodium chloride), calcium and phosphorus. Additional trace minerals are frequently added as a low-cost insurance, and should contain selenium in areas where a deficiency of this mineral is known to occur. Salt should always be available free-choice.

Vitamin A is the only vitamin to be routinely fed to horses, although it is not required if the horse is receiving a green forage. Once a forage matures and the green color is lost, vitamin A needs to be supplemented in the ration at the rate of 30-90 IU/day/pound body weight for growing, pregnant or lactating horses and one-half this amount for other horses.

There are two types of feed available for horses: roughages (hay, cubes, pasture, haylage) and concentrates (grains). A general rule of thumb is concentrates should never make up over one-half of the weight of a ration. Thus, a horse's ration may consist of 0-50 percent concentrate and 50-100 percent roughages.

High quality alfalfa contains 15 percent more energy and two to three times more calcium and vitamin A than an equal amount of grass hay. However, because of the potenitally high leaf loss in poorly cured or harvested alfala, one needs to be careful in buying it. The best recommendation is to buy the highest quality hay at a reasonable price regardless of hay type. If the hay does not meet your horse's requirements, feed a grain mix that makes up the difference in the horse's requirements and those present in the hay.

If you would like more additional, detailed information regarding horses, call your county extension agent.

Arrangements are moving ahead rapidly for staging the Fourth Annual International Ranchers Roundup in the San Angelo Convention Center, Monday through Aug 3.

There's still time to register for the event, which has the theme "Holistic Ranch Management — Putting It All Together."

Livestock owners from two dozen states and several foreign countries are expected to assemble in this West Texas city to hear a wide array of speakers address the holistic theme, which implies that all aspects of the ranching operation are to be considered in the total planning and management process.

Earnest C. Kiker is Midland County Extension Agent for Agriculture.

Pregnant cows prefer evening meal

What's the best time to feed pregnant cows? For three years scientists studied over 800 heifers of all breeds during the entire calving season. Half were fed between 8 and 9 a.m. and half between 8 and 9 p.m.

Those fed in the evening had 17 percent more daytime births than the others. Daytime births make it easier for pregnant cows to get assistance from farm or ranch hands in case of hard deliveries.

Thank you so much for your kindness shown during the loss of our mother.

Pharmacy Footnotes

by Don Haynes

Summer is a wonderful season, but poison ivy is one of the things that can put a damper on it – to put it mildly, as anyone who's had it will tell you! At SERVICE DRUG OF MIDLAND, at A & Scharbauer (682-2519), it's our aim to keep the people of our community smiling through the summer months by keeping them healthy and feeling well. For rashes, itches, or anything else, we have the prescription and over-the-counter medications to help. We're open Mon.-Sat. 8-7. Visa/Mastercard.

POISON IVY

Poison Ivy usually runs its course in about 10 to 14 days and there is very little that can be done to stop it. However, the symptoms can be treated. They usually consist of severe itching and a rash, accompanied by little blisters that ooze a liquid when scratched. Years ago,it was thought that the liqueid caused the rash to spread.This is not so. It is the poisonous substance from the plant that causes the rash. Rid it from your clothes and body. Preparations containing tannic acid will help dry up the rash and cortisone products play an important role in wound healing. The old standby is calamine lotion. It dries on the skin to form a protective coating to minimize scratching and possible infection.

HINT:

If you have poison ivy near your eyes or genitals, see a doctor.

the make-up of artistry

Text by Julie Hillrichs

Legend has it that beauty is only skin deep and exists in the eyes of the beholder. But cosmetic manufacturers might argue otherwise.

Historically, statistics have proven that leading manufacturers of skin care products view beauty as a "big business."

Since the beginning of civilization, a variety of cosmetic aids have been designed especially for the purpose of transforming men and women from beasts into classic beauties.

The Bible for example, mentions the practice of anointing the head or body with fragrant oils. And Cleopatra, the most famous figure associated with cosmetics, was noted for her skill in making and using beauty aids in ancient Egypt.

Today, the cosmetic industry is reportedly one of the most heavily advertised products in the world with combined retail sales exceeding $1.5 billion a year.

According to Serge Hanson, owner of Serge Hair and Make-up, 14 Meta Drive, the art of making one's self more attractive is just that — an art.

"You have to work at achieving nice skin," said the French-born cosmetologist. "It's a matter of pampering yourself. It's mind over matter. If you don't mind, it doesn't matter."

Hanson, who studied cosmetology with Vidal Sassoon and Jose Eber in London and Los Angeles, said cosmetic trends in the United States continue to move towards the "natural, healthy look" — a look particularly flattering to West Texas women, he said.

Hanson moved to Midland three years ago after completing his studies in London — an internationally-known marketplace for the fashion and cosmetic industry.

"Unlike Americans, European women pay more attention to skin care than clothing. That's why they say European women look better as they grow older," Hanson said.

"But the French and English also strive for a harsh look because they have a political statement to make," he added. "The 'new wave' look is a direct result of the rebellious movement going on over there right now. Personally, I prefer a feminine looking woman."

According to Hanson, American hair designers and cosmetologists have an impact on the industry and in some cases, are more advanced in setting seasonal fashion trends than their European counterparts.

"Even the models you see in foreign magazines and on TV are American models," he said. "It's obvious we watch each other and use ideas to create our own variations of a particular style. But that's where the similarities end."

He also criticized cosmetic manufacturers for what he calls "taking advantage of the vulnerable consumer" and accused them of damaging the reputation of the entire industry in general.

"Being a cosmetologist, I'm ashamed of the business for the way they take advantage of people. They're adding collogens and vitamins to their products and charging outrageous prices," he said. "You don't have to spend a lot of money on cosmetices because your skin can't absorb all of those elements anyway."

Hanson described American women — Texas woman in particular — as "being in a league all by themselves.

"Texas women are so put together and coordinated as far as their overall appearance is concerned. They are some of the most beautiful women I've ever seen and they tend to pull off the 'sophisticated look' better than anyone else," he said, attributing it to his belief that "Texans have a great sense of pride."

Women who hope to achieve and maintain a healthy complexion, must first "feel good about themselves." according to Hanson.

"I don't believe in using a lot of cosmetics especially in this part of the country," he said. "There's so much dust. If you put more oil on your face, it will attract more dust and subsequently clog pores."

Instead, he suggests women use only water-base cosmetics and refrain from using skin cleansers that contain, detergent, deodorant or medicative additives. In addition, he recommends using a mild cleanser followed by deep cleansing at least twice a week to clean pores and remove dead skin cells.

Throughout history, a variety of skin care products have been designed to transform men and women into classic beauties. Serge Hanson of Serge's Hair and Make-up, top photo, applies makes-up to model Lindsay Magill. A palate containing various shades of eyeshadow, left, and an assortment of cosmetic brushes, above, provide make-up artists with the appropriate tools for their craft.

There will be more parties in August before the college crowd scatters.

ANOTHER GETTY MERGER occurred recently when Gloria Woods and Charles Sadler exchanged wedding vows. The couple met through their work; she's a geological technician, and he is a geologist. Furthermore the bride's father, a landman, is also with Getty.

The wedding took place June 30 in the home of the bride's parents, Nellie and Woody Woods.

Following a San Antonio honeymoon, the couple is at home in Midland. Gloria is a graduate of New Mexico University. Charles, son of Mozelle and Joe Sadler of Nacogdoches, graduated from Texas A&I University.

Co-hosting the fun party were Midge and Dillard Anderson, Lou and Jim Butler, Ava Sims and Betty (Mrs. W.D.) Barnes. Guests enjoyed box lunches while seated on quilts on the lawn-a la picnic style.

Sarah recently returned home from Dusseldorf, West Germany, where she spent the past year under the auspices of the Rotary Foreign Exchange Program. A 1984 graduate of Midland High School, she will enter Texas A&M in the fall. She is the daughter of Donna and John Yuronka.

A GROUP OF MIDLAND youngsters (all students or former students at Trinity School) will return Tuesday from a unique, three-week camping experience through the New England States. Called "Exploring America — A New England Hospitality Tour," the trip has been a work sharing program.

The Texans were met at the Boston airport on July 10 by 15 Andover, Mass., children, who have shared the camping with them and have been their hosts when they were not on the road. A get-acquainted barbecue and swimming party was held upon their arrival, with Texas tube steaks (better known as hotdogs) as the piece de resistance. Camping out in state parks, they have visited the many outstanding historical and natural sites of the area.

The local campers are Peggy, Steve, Kim and Tim Hartman, children of Margaret and Doyle Hartman; David Clough, son of Ann Clough; Laura and Doug Hinchey, children of Patsy Hinchey; Marian Yeager, daughter of Sharon and Goss Yeager; Margaret Mogford, daughter of Sally and Martin Mogford; Lisa Scoggin, daughter of Sue and Larry Scoggin; Ginny Graham, daughter of Lou Ann and Jerry Graham, and Heather Carney, daughter of Mary and Dr. Joe Carney, accompanied by Deanna Velasquez, daughter of Dorothy and Ruben Velasquez of Odessa.

Bill Fleischmann, chairman of the Science Department at Trinity School, was the trip's organizer.

AND LAST BUT not least! Don't forget the Chi Omega alumnae's benefit style show and brunch this coming Saturday. It is to be held at 11:30 a.m. at the Holiday Inn Country Villa, 4300 West Highway 80. Entitled "Statement of the Season," the show will feature women's fall and winter fashions, men's formal wear, jewelry and furs from some of Midland's finest shops. Tickets are available from members or at the door the day of the event. Proceeds will go to the Permian Basin Center for Battered Women and Their Children.

Iranians demonstrate for dress

TEHRAN, Iran (AFP) — An estimated 20,000 people took part in an official demonstration here in support of strict Islamic standards of dress for women.

The march followed unofficial demonstratons over the past few days in which several women suffered serious injuries when attacked for allegedly immodest dress. Men with bare arms or who tried to defend the women also were attacked.

"Death to those who do not respect Islamic dress codes," the protestors shouted. Women in the group, from teen-agers to the elderly, were dressed in head-to-toe black chadors.

Men in "Islamic" costume — buttoned-up shirt worn out over the trousers to hide the waist, and a beard of several days — supervized the march to ensure that male and female demonstrators did not mix.

Islamic dress was made official in the spring of 1982, when Iranian authorities ruled that all women, whatever their nationality or religion, must wear a scarf to hide their hair.

By the summer of 1983, women were obliged to wear an apron to disguise the figure. Those who failed to comply faced from one month to one year in jail for what Islamic courts described as "behavior inspired by plots by the superpowers in the east and west."

New doll replaces old favorite

READING, Pa. (AP) — Melanie Knittle clung to the doll like a drowning man latches onto a life preserver.

Brain-damaged at birth, she had never been happier — bouncing from person to person, shaking hands, hugging and breaking out in giggles and smiles. The doll never left her side.

In a corner of the living room, her father, Ray Knittle, 54, watched.

This was a special night for Melanie Knittle of Riverview Park. She was given a new friend, a General Electric Co. Mr. Magoo doll — capping a nine-month nationwide search to replace the child's old and tattered Magoo doll.

The Magoo doll was created by GE in the late '60s as a premium for distributors and as a tie-in for Mr. Magoo TV commercials playing at that time.

Melanie met Magoo when she was 3½ years old, according to her mother, Christine. The Knittles, who have another daughter, Marcy, 16, had won the doll at a drawing 10 years ago.

INTERIOR MOTIVES

by Ray and Austella Berry

The ordinary window shade has undergone many changes in the past few years. It is no longer simply utilitarian but, now, highly decorative as well. The functional aspects of light control still remain but much more has been added. The choice of colors is now very wide, from the palest pastel tints to the most vivid, brilliant hues. This extensive range of colors makes it possible to exactly match shades to drapery and upholstery fabrics and wallpapers for total coordination in a room. Styles are numerous. The choices range from simple tailored designs to those decorated with fringes and other trim. Patterns and textures add fresh dimensions and shades are available that underscore period, traditional and modern decorating styles.

Today, window treatment can be the focal point of your room. At WINDOW DECOR, window coverings aren't a sideline, it's our business. When you're choosing between custom draperies, woven woods, miniblinds, shades, and vertical blinds, let us help you. Share your ideas with us and we'll turn them into a design for living. At 30 M. Brides change over 50 years

NEW YORK (AP) — A bride could buy a formal wedding dress for $58.75 in 1934, according to a backward glance at marriages in a special Golden Anniversary issue of Bride's magazine.

At that time, a wife was advised never to call her busy husband at work, never to appear at the breakfast table without makeup, and never to let on that she was a better driver than he was.

DEAR ABBY

Bride's white wedding offends friend

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: A very good friend is planning her wedding and has asked me to be her maid of honor. She's planning a church wedding with all the trimmings, including walking down the aisle in a white wedding gown just like a pure and innocent bride, which she is not. She's presently living with her fiance.

Most who know her are either laughing at her or criticizing her. This is her first marriage and his second. I told her I couldn't participate in a church wedding because I disapproved of her past conduct and also the kind of wedding she's having.

She is now not speaking to me. This bothers me because we have been best friends since childhood. What do I do now? — PERPLEXED

DEAR PERPLEXED: The fact that you are "bothered" indicates that you may regret your decision. If so, tell your friend.

Perhaps you may not know that a church wedding with all the trimmings is a first-time bride's privilege and is not reserved for virgins only.

DEAR ABBY: I'm writing from jail, but I'm not blaming anybody but myself for ending up here. I hope to learn from my mistakes.

I'm writing to help the girl who wrote to you from Seattle. She said her boyfriend said, "If you really love me, you'll prove it by having sex with my friends." You told her to run from that no-good guy, but you didn't explain why.

I've lived on the streets, and I know how young girls become hookers. First they fall in love with a guy they think is nice, but he's a bum who only wants to use them. He says, "If you really love me, you'll have sex with my friends."

The girl doesn't want to lose him, so she has sex with a couple of his friends. What she doesn't know is that the guy she loves is a "pimp" who's training her to become a hooker. Before long, the "boyfriend" puts her out on the street, selling herself to guys, and the boyfriend (pimp) ends up with most of her money.

I've seen this happen to a lot of innocent girls, as young as 14 and 15. Next comes the dope, and pretty soon they're old, worn-out prostitutes before they're 19.

Print this, Abby. It might save a lot of lives. — IN JAIL IN SAN DIEGO

DEAR IN JAIL: Thanks for writing. It's well worth the space in this column.

DEAR ABBY: I write to you in the hope of reaching as many readers as possible. Fixing the drinking age at 21 may make little difference in curbing the number of drunk drivers. But fixing the penalty at permanent license revocation might make a huge difference! Then young people going out for an evening would do as they have done in some foreign countries for many years: knowing that the penalty for drunk driving is permanent license revocation, they draw straws to determine which one shall drink nothing but lemonade and be the driver.

Worth trying? — R.T. GORE, WOOSTER, OHIO

DEAR R.T.: Yes, I'll drink to that. (You drive.)

CONFIDENTIAL TO W. IN RANCHO MIRAGE, CALIF.: The best reason for doing the right thing today is tomorrow.

Sign language class popular

ASHTABULA, Ohio (AP) — Esther Border had trouble communicating with people she met until she decided to teach some of them her second language.

Now she's having a ball with all the new friends she's found.

Mrs. Border, 57, of Kingsville, Ohio, has been deaf since she was a child. She has retained the normal speech she learned before her world went silent. Her main problem has been understanding those she talks with.

When she learned as a teen-ager that she was losing her hearing, she enrolled in a sign language school in Tucson, Ariz., so she would have an alternative means of communicating with people.

Jacquie McTrusty, a social worker at the Day Treatment Center of the Mental Health Clinic of Ashtabula County, said Mrs. Border, a widow, was involved in an outreach program at the center.

"One of her complaints was that she was depressed because she spent so much time alone in her apartment," Ms. McTrusty said. "We have this day activities program where people socialize and we encouraged her to become involved in that.

"I asked her to try it for a few weeks but she said it was so hard for her to understand others. So then we started talking about her sign language and about teaching it to others and she was thrilled at the prospect."

Now, she has found that her students are also thrilled at the prospect. She is the only deaf person in the classes she teaches two afternoons a week.

"She started teaching sign as a volunteer and she is doing a wonderful job," Ms. McTrusty said. "She used to be depressed and now she is happy ... Now, they are learning her language and they can relate to each other in another way.

"She started with seven students," Ms. McTrusty said, "and now there are about 15 to 20 at every class." The students have normal hearing ability and are learning signs for their own interest.

"Most of the people we have here have very low motivation," Ms. McTrusty said, "but these people (in the class) have kept at it and that is amazing to me. Now, they know when the class is scheduled and most of them are here waiting for Esther to come in."

"I like it a lot here," Mrs. Border said.

'Hussy' originally just 'housewife'

Copley News Service

"Hussy," which now means a saucy or flippant girl or a strumpet or trollop, was a century ago merely an affectionate diminutive of the word, "housewife."

Dogs serve as masters' ears

Hearst News Service

Most states treat hearing-ear dogs for the deaf similarly to seeing-eye dogs, but training programs for these dogs remain hard to find — and most are unregulated.

So far, 46 states have passed laws granting hearing-ear dogs the same rights of public access as seeing-eye dogs for the blind, which are allowed in restaurants, motels and other public areas. Hearing-ear dogs wear bright orange collars and leashes, and their owners usually carry photo ID cards that certify their animals as trained hearing-ear dogs.

There are about 3,000 hearing-ear dogs serving a population of about 15.3 million hearing-impaired Americans, including 2.5 million with profound hearing loss. Most hearing-ear dogs are trained to respond to five basic sounds: a knock at the door, the door bell, the telephone, the alarm clock and smoke alarms. Dogs also can be trained to respond to a few other sounds, like the cry of a baby.

About 20 training centers have sprung up since 1976, when the American Humane Association in Denver launched the first hearing-ear dog program. Prospective owners should investigate training centers thoroughly before applying for a dog because the field is almost completely unregulated, said Cindi Osieczanek, who serves as AHA's national hearing-ear dog coordinator. "There are no state laws, federal laws, anything," she said. "You don't have to have any credentials to do it."

The association phased out its training program last year and now serves as a national clearinghouse for information about hearing-ear dogs. The group plans to form a national committee to standardize the field.

Osieczanek says that some deaf people disapprove of anything that visibly marks them as handicapped. "Hearing-ear dogs are not for everyone; they never were meant to be," she said. "The dogs meet a special need for a small part of the deaf community."

Most training centers are non-profit and rely on service clubs such as the Good Sam Clubs of America to pay the $2,000 to $3,000 cost incurred in training each dog. Without such sponsors, most deaf persons would be unable to afford the dogs, Osieczanek said, adding that the average annual income for hearing-impaired persons is only $6,000.

She said, however, that service organizations will not donate to centers run for profit, which means that those centers will have to scramble to find paying customers. "Where they're going to find deaf people with $2,000 is beyond me." Such financial problems probably will force some trainers out of business.

Dogs for the Deaf in Oregon is the only certified hearing-ear dog center that delivers dogs throughout the United States. Osieczanek said it has an "excellent" reputation. It's been in operation seven years and has placed more than 140 dogs. It expects to place 47 dogs this year if enough funds are available. It operates in one of the few states with any kind of certification process.

The dogs are free, but prospective owners have to wait an average of six to nine months, since applicants are taken on the basis of need. To ensure that dogs are placed in good homes, a staff member will drop in on applicants unannounced.

A trainer spends a week helping the new owner get used to working with his dog. He stays near the recipient's home and visits four times a day for at least an hour at a time to make sure everything is running smoothly.

Fish killed by whales' sounds

SANTA CRUZ, Calif. (AP) — Marine mammalogists at the University of California are testing a new theory that dolphins and toothed whales, like the narwhal and sperm whale, stun fish with sound to capture and eat them.

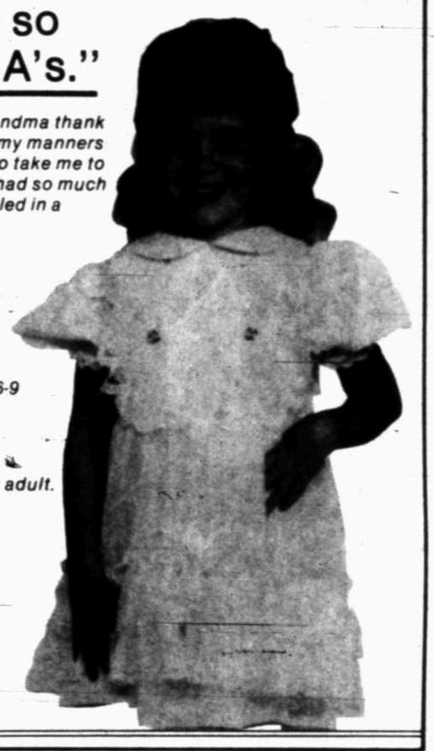

In one experiment, bottle-nosed dolphins averaged 228.6 decibels on a scale used to measure sound under water. That sound level, equal to a blasting cap exploding under water, researchers say, produces enough pressure to kill fish by rupturing their organs and blood vessels.

Author satirizes Californians

Hearst News Service

Here are the rules for becoming an instant Californian without the tediousness of actually having to move there:

— Dress in all-white outfits made of cotton, linen or silk.

— Accessorize your sunglasses. Start with a neck cord (de rigueur), then move on to a windscreen, clip-on visor, side blinders and a cinch strap.

— Make sure your car says something about you. Add a car bra (a vinyl cover that cushions the front end), sheepskin seat covers and vanity plates.

— Order only "health" foods: 10-grain breads, mellow tea, sushi and anything covered in sprouts.

— Develop body awareness. Never complain of a sore back; instead say, "My lats are killing me."

— Talk about "doing lunch."

— Never "hold" a meeting, always "take" a meeting.

— Refer to costly things as being "high-didge" (for digits).

— Go on a first-name basis only. Remember, if God had meant us to use last names, he would have used one himself.

These commandments — and a good many others — appear in the tongue-in-cheek handbook, "How to California." Follow the rules and you'll become a California native in just 11 weeks, guarantees 29-year-old author Jonathan Roberts, the co-author of the $1.5 million best-seller, "The Preppy Handbook."

"Americans have this love-hate thing with Southern California," says Roberts. "The lifestyle is constantly thrust at us by the media. I wanted to find out if people really lived like 'Three's Company.' "

Roberts applied scientific method to his semi-serious project. He made a list of expectations, jotted down on 3X5 cards.

"I thought I'd be debunking most of the cliches," he says, "but Southern Californians work hard to live these tokens and totems. There really is a California girl. She really is tanned and blond, and she really does wear her bikini to the bank."

Roberts, a New Englander, barely had launched his pop sociology project when something unplanned occurred: He fell in love with his subject.

"I first noticed it when I went to replace my Massachusetts driver's license with a California license," says Roberts.

"I found I'd grown an inch — see, here on my license, it says 'five-five.' At my height I need all I can get. Also, my eyes suddenly became blue; I'd always put them down as gray. I've grown athletic — I ride a bike on the beach. I took vitamins and learned to say new things like 'awesome.' "

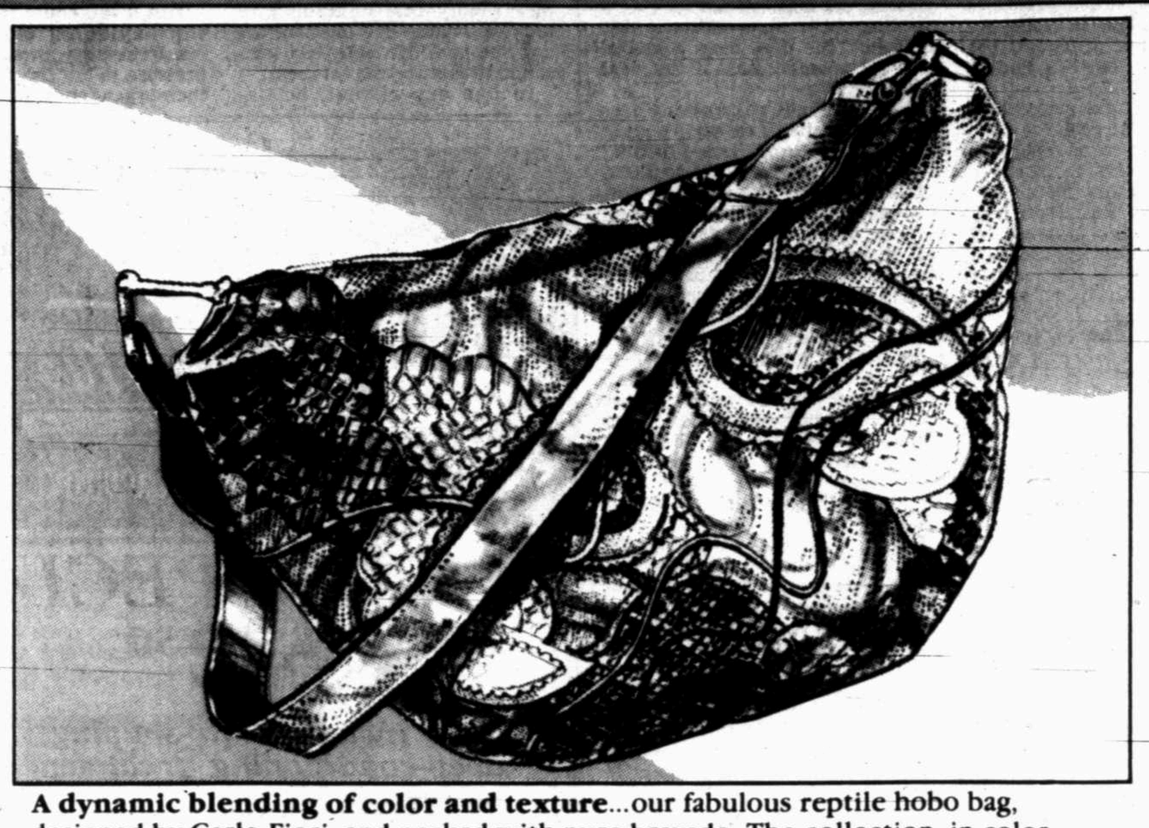

Roberts found a screenwriting job — "You always say you're 'in the Industry,' with a capital I, even if you work at the Fotomat — teaming up with his college (Brown University) roommate Steve Blume to write an old-fashioned romantic movie for teen-agers. "Rob Reiner directed it. It's called 'The Sure Thing.' It's in final editing now," he explains.

Roberts points out that he drew on his own New England upbringing for "The Preppy Handbook."

"That's the way I lived," he says. "I went to a left-wing prep school where we were required to call our teachers by their first names."

Fajitas, strips of grilled beef skirt rolled into a tortilla and topped with pico de gallo, are a hit at backyard cookouts, parties and restaurants. This suggested serving, courtesy El Jalisco, includes rice, beans, cheese, guacamole, tortilla chips and a frosty mug of Mexican beer.

Fajitas have become the latest craze in backyard cookouts, catered parties and restaurant menus, varying from recipe to recipe as they are handed down and modified from cook to cook.

The name fajita, derived from the Spanish word "faja," has a literal translation of "belt" or "girdle." Fajitas in Central and West Texas are most commonly prepared from beef skirt — the muscle along the diaphragm of the steer — grilled and cut into thin strips, rolled into a flour tortilla, topped with pico de gallo — a mixture of chopped tomatoes, onions — and other garnishes.

But there are as many different ways to prepare fajitas as there are cooks who prepare them.

Variations aside, fajitas are basically "the tradition of marinating thinly pounded skirt steak to tenderize it," according to 72-year-old Gilbert Cuellar Sr., founder of the El Chico Corp.

"GRILLING IT began with the Mexican ranch workers in Texas. Mexican immigrants in the 1940s often worked in ranches in West Texas near the Mexican border. When a steer was butchered the Mexican workers were given the least desirable parts — the head, intestines and the skirt steak.

"The workers would pound out the meat and marinate it, usually in lime juice, to tenderize it. The meat would be cooked over an open fire and served with condiments rolled in a flour tortilla or cooked in the house in 'guiso' (stew) or mixed with eggs.

"Because the diaphragm was thought to be a byproduct of slaughtered cattle rather than an edible part of the steer, it became easy and inexpensive to obtain," according to Cuellar.

Though fajitas began as an inexpensive entree, its popularity has brought an increase in skirt steak prices.

According to Gilbert Perales, manager and part-owner of El Jalisco, 414 W. Texas, wholesale meat dealers "could hardly give it away. It was something like 79 cents a pound," compared with the $1.98 to $2.05 he pays today, he said.

A common marinate for fajitas is a mixture of lemon, garlic, salt and pepper. Some cooks deviate from the norm by adding lime juice, beer, red or white wine, salsa, butter, margarine, oregano, paprika, celery salt, comino, granulated garlic, garlic powder or jalapeno peppers.

SOME COOKS serve fajitas with cheese and guacamole or side dishes of beans, rice, sausage or chili. Some may serve the entree with a nacho appetizer.

Recommended beverages include everything from margaritas to Mexican beer to iced tea.

The trick to excellent fajitas is in the house recipe. And house recipes for fajitas rival that of the Colonel's Kentucky Fried Chicken secret.

A public demand for fajitas has created a competitive marketplace for fajita-makers.

Though they won't part with their trade secrets, cooks are more than willing to point out tips which may be critical to the result of the fajitas.

John Ruiz, of Austin, who sells fajitas at several festivals throughout the state, said he uses a one-pound mallet to pound the meat down. "And be sure to cut all the skin off the meat. It will take the toughness out of the meat — and skirt is the toughest meat there is."

Lupe Ramirez, owner of Chef Lupe's in Austin, recently was awarded first place in the commercial division of the Austin fajitas cookoff. Having catered parties where he served fajitas to 4,000 guests, Ramirez advises the meat be marinated for at least 12-15 hours, but never more than 24 hours. He suggests, for serving six people, five pounds of skirt be used.

"Fill a deep pan half way with beer and add spices," he said. A method which enhances the meat and makes for practical cooking is to cut the skirt horizontally to a ½-inch thickness. If the meat is only ½ inch thick to begin with, he suggests making thin cuts into the side of the meat so it will absorb the marinade. After the slab of meat has been grilled, cut into one-inch strips or one-inch cubes.

Fajitas recipes vary from cook to cook, grill to grill

By LISA GERLOCK
Lifestyle Editor

"Fajitas are the easiest things in the world to cook," said John Lawrence, a petroleum engineer in the mechanical department at Cities Service Co. His favorite is a modified version of a recipe given to him.

A newlywed, he and his wife Jean enjoy preparing fajitas for guests — but the best part is: "You can cook them ahead of time, put them in a cast iron pot and put them back on the grill. It gives you time to visit with guests, but it also gives the meat time to smoke in its own juices, which tenderizes it and gives it flavor, and it stays warm until serving."

The Lawrences serve fajitas with guacamole, pico de gallo — finely chopped tomatoes, green onions and green peppers, tortilla chips, con queso dip and pinto beans with jalapeno peppers.

Lawrence said the fajita seasoning is also good for chicken and other beef dishes. Here is his recipe:

JOHNNY L's FAJITAS

⅓ pound meat per person
(Be sure to tenderize meat or have butcher tenderize it in machine)

MARINADE:
2 parts sugar
2 parts pepper
1 part MSG
1 part paprika
1 part salt

OR:
2 parts Season-All
1 part sugar
1 part pepper

Mix all ingredients together. Store in large container with pierced top (large shaker).

Sprinkle seasoning liberally on meat about 15 to 20 minutes before cooking.

Smoke meat over low to medium fire with either hickory or mesquite. Cook slowly — about 8-10 minutes.

Remove from grill. Cut meat — against the grain — into thin strips. Put strips into cast iron pot; cover loosely with aluminum foil; put back on grill and smoke over low fire (about 30 minutes).

HAROLD McDONALD'S FAJITAS

Harold McDonald, a regional sales manager at Tretolite, developed his fajitas expertise from his frequent entertaining for business purposes. He once cooked his favorite Tex-Mex dish for 70 people.

6 parts salt
6 parts sugar
4 parts lemon pepper
2 parts Accent
2 parts paprika

Using the above ingredients, follow preparation directions of Johnny L's recipe.

BASIC FAJITAS

"Most Mexican-Americans will tell you they had seldom heard of the term fajitas until about five years ago when they first began showing up on restaurant menus. However, they will say that they all had grown up eating a similar dish called 'carne asada,' a term meaning 'roasted meat,'" according to 72-year-old Gilbert Cuellar Sr., founder of the El Chico Corp.

Following is a basic fajitas recipe, courtesy El Chico Corp.:

2 pounds skirt steak
Marinade:
4 tablespoons Worcestershire sauce
4 teaspoons garlic salt
4 teaspoons pepper

Trim off any fat or white membrane, then pound meat with meat mallet until flat. Sprinkle both sides with garlic salt, black pepper and Worcestershire sauce. Rub all seasonings into both sides of meat.

Roll meat and allow to stand for short time so seasonings can penetrate. When ready to cook, steaks are prepared over a charcoal grill or broiler to desired degree of doneness. After cooking cut meat into strips or cubes, against the grain. Serve with condiments such as bell peppers, onions, beans, guacamole and relish. Serve meat with condiments on flour tortilla.

MARGARITA FAJITAS

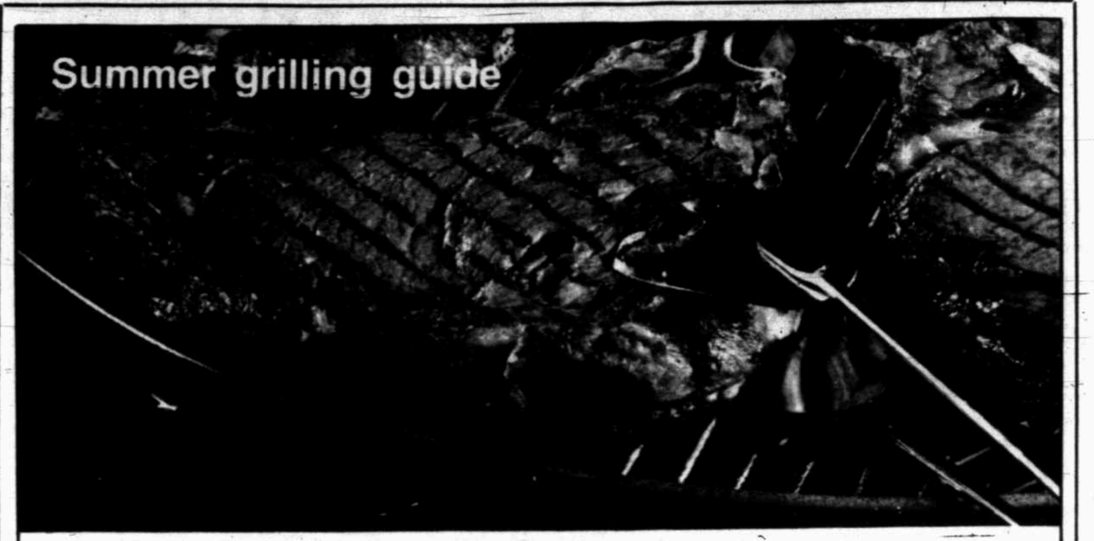

This recipe is from Jean Connor, of Palestine, Texas, who was awarded second place in the Texas Beef Cook-Off, sponsored by the CowBelles in Lubbock in April.

1½ lb. round steak, fat trimmed
¼ cup tequilla
½ cup lime juice
1 cup cooking oil
4 tsp. liquid smoke
1 tsp. Worcestershire sauce
¼ tsp. pepper
½ tsp. salt
¾ tsp. paprika
½ cup green onions, with tops, chopped
¾ cup chopped green pepper
1 cup chopped tomatoes
8 to 10 6-inch flour tortillas

Slice partially frozen round steak into long strips, somewhat thinner than a pencil. Marinate 2 hours in flat glass dish with mixture of tequila and lime juice. Drain.

Combine oil, liquid smoke, Worcestershire sauce, pepper, salt and paprika, beating with rotary beater until smooth. Heat wok over medium high heat, necklace with the oil mixture. When hot, add steak strips, stirring occasionally. When three or four minutes from desired doneness, stir in onion and green pepper. When done, ladle onto hot plates, top with chopped tomato and let guests wrap in warmed flour tortillas. Serves 4.

Preparation time (excluding marinade): 35 minutes.

CRAZE

"THE BEST SOLUTION is to cut the meat thin so it can be cooked medium rare. Then take it off the grill and steam the meat with beer. This adds extra flavor."

Perales says the most important aspect is to make sure to tenderize the meat and cut the skirt against the grain of the meat.

Perales said he was introduced to fajitas in San Antonio at La Margarita. He returned to Midland and told his father he thought they would be a hit. A year and a half ago, they put them on the menu.

Today, 50 percent of their orders are for fajitas.

Perales explained to his parents, Pertra and Felipe Perales, what he had in San Antonio, and his father developed his own recipe.

"Gilbert's Special," Perales's own concoction of fajitas that is also served at the restaurant, substitutes flour tortillas with corn tortillas.

Gilbert and his brother Richard, a chef at the restaurant, said appetizers with El Jalisco's fajitas plate "may be too filling," and suggest one of the five Mexican beers they serve as a beverage, white wine or iced tea as a beverage. A suggested dessert is the traditional Mexican sopapilla, a pastry spiced with cinnamon, sugar or butter.

Fourteen months ago, Yolanda and George Sosa, owners of El Burrito, 1106 N. Big Spring, added fajitas to their menu by popular demand. They prepare about 2-25 pounds of skirt steak a day for the fajitas and the tortillas are purchased exclusively for fajitas, according to manager Corina Gutierrez. El Burrito flavors the meat in a special marinate. The meat is then put on the grill, and, right before it is done, it is topped with another special sauce.

MANY MIDLAND restaurants now serve fajitas. Even restaurants as all-American as Wall Street Bar and Grill and Shenanigan's offer them.

Tom Woody, general manager of Shenanigan's, 3330 W. Illinois, said they were added to the menu in June, and already "they are 10 percent of the business."

Woody said he believes fajitas may be a fad. "It hit Austin about three years ago. I think it's something that is catching on, but people may forget about it in a couple of years," he said.

Austin's Shenanigan's also features chicken fajitas, which Woody said he may add to Midland's menu sometime in the future.

Woody said he expects the new Chili's restaurant to serve fajitas also.

Two months ago La Bodega Restaurant added fajitas to the menu in Midland and to the menus of their restaurants in Odessa and Lubbock. They also plan to serve them in their restaurant to open in Abilene.

Other restaurants in Midland serving fajitas are La Hacienda, 3303 N. Midkiff; Casita Gerardo, 2407 N. Big Spring; Dona Anitas, 305 W. Florida; El Chico Restaurant, 45 Plaza Center; El Sombrero Restaurant, 2301 Rankin Highway; Los Enriquez, 1401 N. Lamesa Road; Marios Spanish Inn, 3411 Thomason; El Pedro, 3100 Wall; Monterrey Cocina Mexicana, 523 E. Illinois; Ricardos of Midland, 1109 E. Front; Tampico Spanish Inn, 2411 W. Wall and Zenter's Steakery, 2215 Midland serves a luncheon fajitas special on Wednesdays only.

Plant profile

Pepper [Capsicum]

Planting and culture:
Peppers need warmer temperatures than tomatoes and do not grow well in cool conditions; set transplants 18 to 24 inches apart; use starter fertilizer when transplanting; plants thrive in well-drained, fertile soil that receives abundant moisture; apply side-dressing of fertilizer cautiously only after first crop of peppers has set; uniform moisture supply is essential during harvest season.

Insects, diseases:
Tobacco mosaic virus may be spread by smokers who handle plants without washing hands; aphids may accumulate on undersides of leaves; control with insecticide.

Harvesting:
May be picked at any size; when mature, fruits will break easily from plants; may be left to ripen fully to red or yellow; hot peppers usually ha vested when ripe red [except Jalapeño, which stay green]; entire plants may be pulled before frost and hung indoors to dry fruits.

Plant profile

Tomato [Lycopersicon Lycopersicum]

Planting and culture:
Best as transplants, dwarf plants 1 foot apart, staked plants 15 inches to 2 feet, wire caged or groundbed plants 2 to 3 feet; apply starter fertilizer when transplanting; mulch recommended; deep watering needed during dry periods; container grown plants need water daily; side dress with nitrogen fertilizer at rate of 1 pound per 100 row feet after first tomatoes have grown to size of golf balls; repeat twice at 3 to 6 week intervals.

Insects, diseases:
Tomato hornworms: 2- to 3-inch green worm with white stripes, usually found on leaves; very destructive; hand pick or use suggested biological insecticides. Early blight: dead brown spots on leaves spreads up plant, causing defoliation; upon close inspection, concentric rings visible within spots; control with fungicide; some varieties are more tolerant than others. Verticillium and fusarium wilt: soilborne diseases that cause yellowing of leaves, wilting, premature death of plant; control by crop rotation and planting resistant [VF] varieties. Septoria leafspot: numerous small black spots on leaves; centers turn white; starts at bottom of plant, may become severe in wet weather; control with fungicides. Blossom-end rot: brown, rotten bottom of fruit caused by calcium deficiency and wide fluctuation in soil moisture; pruning increases the problem; some varieties more susceptible than others; control by mulching and uniform watering. Poor color or sunscald: high temperatures and direct exposure to sun retard development of normal color; sunscald shows as large, whitish area on the fruit; usually becomes a problem when foliage has been lost to diseases.

Harvesting:
Fruits are of highest quality when fully colored and firm; hot weather accelerates softening process and retards color development, pick when fruits are pink and ripen further indoors at room temperature.

'WHEN YOU'RE 17, YOU THINK YOU'RE GOING TO LIVE FOREVER!'

"This term a very gifted student sat here. She knew Shakespeare, Shelley, Keats. And could she write. But the day before graduation she was in a car crash. They said if she'd been wearing a safety belt, she might have had a few bruises...not brain damage. Now she won't read or write or ever think again. When you're 17, you don't think about those things. You think you're going to live forever. She was 17."

AT WIT'S END

Children can break the darndest bones

By ERMA BOMBECK

I read the other day where a woman was grocery shopping and in trying to reach the last package of frozen broccoli lost her balance and fell head first into the freezer.

A man walking by grabbed her by the ankles, dragged her out, and drove her to the hospital where she was treated and released.

I have to believe that falling in the freezer was the easy part. The real trauma came when she had to deal with the people who fill out insurance forms. I can see it now.

"Was this an accident?"

"Yes."

"Was there any other way to get the broccoli out of the case?"

"Probably."

"Have you gotten broccoli out of the case like this before?"

"Many times."

Mothers know exactly what I am talking about. Most of the accidents that happen with children border on the bizarre. They never do anything in a conventional way. I always had the kid with the penny shoved up his nose, the arm wedged in the sweeper bag, the lip caught in a mousetrap. Things that everyone told me 30 years from now I'd laugh at . . . and I'm still waiting.

I was only five years into child-raising when I stopped asking, "How in the world could something like this happen?" After awhile, I fully accepted the strange and prepared myself to defend it while riding to the emergency room.

"How did your son split his head open?"

"He did a swan dive into two feet of water."

"You can't do that."

"Right."

I used to watch nurses at the desk who would try to jam "Got pantleg caught in the mixer" onto insurance forms or, "Cut tongue while hiding Fort Apache soldier set from cereal box in his mouth to annoy brother" and wonder what some of the other insurance claims read like.

I'd surely love to have seen their faces when a woman reported recently her buttocks were lodged in an emergency exit when she was in the bus restroom and the bus swerved, forcing her into the window.

Can't you hear them asking at the hospital, "Was this your assigned seat?"

AT WORK

Dead-end job has seven warning signs

By ADELE SCHEELE, Ph.D.

You feel caught in a work situation and don't particularly want to leave the company. You do realize that if you did nothing different you'd be in the same place in a year or two from now. You grope for the term — deadended. Can it really be happening to you?

Here are the seven deadly symptoms to this terrible disease.

— You've not been invited to any important meetings.

— Neither are you included in the social side — from ball games to the ballet.

— Your opinion is not taken much less solicited when there is to be a policy change.

— Your direct supervisor or manager does not have easy ongoing conversations with you but rather tells you any pertinent information in a cut-and-dried dictatorial manner.

— You're only given the facts during crisis times when you make an appointment with him.

— When you need more people or technology to assist you, your boss won't give you more.

— When you request raises for your own personnel, you are chronically denied more rewards even though you know that your company and your department can afford them.

What can you do? Examine the situation clearly. Decide whether the department itself is deadended. If it is, then think about quickly moving to another department yourself.

If your boss is supportive of you, but is not in a good position to be promoted, then consider helping him-her by getting more positive attention. Perhaps you can arrange for some PR around the competition of an old project or the start of a new one.

Perhaps you can find a way to give special notice at meetings, even at awards time within the company or the community at large. Perhaps help him-her think of writing an article for a professional magazine.

The tactic, of course, is when he-she moves up, you will follow in place. If however, your boss is not the one who you think is promotable, then you have to carry the ball.

Look at other departments and choose a likely one. You may now know what that is. Say you are vitally interested in what makes buyers buy your company's product. Start doing some research, even if it is not your job (yet) so you can begin a conversation with that department head.

Or find ways to talk to the head about some ideas of yours, about something that you'd like to volunteer doing together.

Try to start a working relationship with that director so that you won't be so surprised when the following words come out of your mouth: "Can't we find a way to work more closely on these projects?"

Doing the task before you were assigned to do it, having direct experience, extends your own set of boundaries, your self definition, and changes others' opinions of who you are and what you can do.

Or, if infiltrating another department feels alien, then find the highest person you know in the company and ask where the company is going in the next five years and how you can help to contribute to that goal.

Notice how upbeat and positive that is for the company versus "I am so deadended and depressed where I am."

The former presents something that the executive can help you move on with, but the second is only a complaint that lies passively, pitifully on the desk. Present the plan, not the problem.

Gardener finds bagging rejuvenates orchids

By ELVIN MCDONALD

When we visit showplace gardens, whether public or private, there is a tendency to think such profusion is a costly production involving rare plants and cultural secrets. In practice I find that common sense is the rule; the abundance comes from multiplying excellent but not necessarily rare species or cultivars.

An ingenious idea I saw being used at the Marie Selby Gardens in Sarasota, Fla., makes an excellent example: Claire Herzog, whose title is Keeper of the Living Orchids, is having extraordinary success — 85 percent — rooting orchid backbulbs, which she removes in the course of repotting. Usually the oldest of these, having in previous years and growth cycles produced leaves and flowers, then served as the parent for the next generation pseudobulb, is discarded. It may be considerably withered, leafless and even without viable roots.

Ms. Herzog's technique needn't cost more than pennies and hardly any time either. it's an idea you can use to turn minutes of gardening into hours of pleasure:

1) Take a clear plastic bag measuring roughly 12 by 18 inches; one the newspaper comes in will do, provided it is air-tight.

2) Place a handful of well-moistened but not soggy-wet long-strand sphagnum moss inside the bag.

3) Now add the orchid backbulb you want to sprout, seal the bag, and hang it near your other orchid plants. Ms. Herzog hangs hers all along a greenhouse bench.

Perfumes contain flower petals

NEW YORK (AP) — Fine perfumes contain small but necessary amounts of pure flower essence, the oil squeezed from flower petals.

However, it requires 33,000 pounds of violets, for example, to produce one pound of violet oil, says a perfume expert. Since chemists are unable to perfectly synthesize the natural scent of a flower, flower oils are still obtained the old-fashioned way by growing the desired flower.

Parents shouldn't count on problem vanishing

Dear Dr. Solomon: Our 14-year-old daughter has been having some problems in school since we learned that she has diabetes. Is this something that will go away by itself? If not, do you have any suggestions about what we might do about it? — Mr. and Mrs. J.Y., Salem, Mass.

Dear Mr. and Mrs. Y.: Although you do not specify the nature of your daughter's problems, I assume you would not be concerned enough to write to me about them if they were only minor. I suggest that you do not wait for these problems to go away but that you explore what is happening, and the school counselor or social worker might be a good person to get in touch with.

My concern in this case is with both your daughter's medical and emotional condition. I assume that by school problems you refer to such matters as attendance, school work, and her relationships with her classmates. These should not be ignored.

In addition, it has been my experience that emotional problems in adolescents who have diabetes often affect the control of the disease. A well-adjusted person is more likely to comply with diet, exercise, and insulin requirements than is a person who is beset with emotional problems.

Sometimes a problem does go away with time, but I would not count on it when the risk of doing nothing is so great. I suggest you tell your daughter what you plan to do and then arrange to see the school counselor or social worker for additional guidance.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I was visiting my niece one day while her child was sick and throwing up. She spoke with her pediatrician by phone, and then she said he had warned her no to let the child get dehydrated. What would happen if a child did get dehydrated? It doesn't seem to me to be a very serious condition. — Mrs. V.R., Ogden, Utah

Dear Mrs. R.: Dehydration can affect a child's temperature, breathing, circulation, and the function of the kidneys. In fact a young child who loses more than 10 percent of body weight because of the loss of fluid my die.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My father has Alzheimer's disease and I would like to know whether that means that I and my children have a better chance of getting it. My father is 63 years old. — Mr. F.T., New Haven, Conn.

Dear Mr. T.: According to Dr. Barrie J. Hurwits, of the Duke University Medical Center in Durham, N.C., there is some evidence of a genetic factor in Alzheimer's disease. The results of a study of 68 patients with the disease showed that secondary cases of dementia developed in one-fourth of their families.

For Lena, Baton Rouge, Louisiana: Immobilization alone may be a cause of osteoporosis (bone loss). On the other hand, exercise retards the development of osteoporosis but its effects vary a great deal from one person to another.

Neil Solomon, M.D., is a columnist for Los Angeles Times Syndicate. If you have a medical question, write Dr. Solomon at 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon will not give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.

Seriousness of different skin cancer types varies

By JEANNE A. PETREK

Q. I have recently been found to have a skin cancer. Though everyone says that I should not worry, I am quite worried. Is the disease very common and how malignant is it?

A. The common skin cancers — basal and squamous — occur quite frequently, and it is estimated that half of all white people will develop at least one such skin cancer during a lifetime of 70 years. Basal cell cancer comes from round-shaped cells deep in the skin, while squamous cell cancer comes from flatter-shaped cells nearer the surface.

The two tumors look very much alike and both so infrequently spread to other areas that they are considered almost non-malignant. They do, however, grow locally, destroying the normal tissue where they start and must be treated — usually by simple surgical removal.

Melanoma may be considered as the opposite of basal and squamous skin cancer. While the latter two appear as a skin-colored lump or open sore, melanoma usually appears as a dark spot. In the United States, the annual incidence of melanoma is 14,000 cases, while the other two account for more than 300,000 cases per year.

In fact, their true incidence may be higher, since basal and squamous are often easily treated in a single office visit, and many cases are unreported. Melanoma is fatal to about half of those in whom it is diagnosed; the other two cause death in less than one percent of those they affect.

Basal and squamous cancers appear mostly in older people with a long history of sun exposure and are occupational hazards of farmers, ranchers, sailors and habitual outdoor vacationers.

Basal cancer occurs about four times as often as squamous cell cancer. Since the appearance of a skin cancer usually signifies sun damage, other skin cancers are likely to appear elsewhere on the skin for the same reason.

Q. I have not been able to stop smoking, but I have managed to smoke only low-tar, low-nicotine cigarettes. Will this protect me against lung cancer? How much will it lower the risk?

A. With the percentage of Americans who smoke decreasing annually, the tabacco industry has been advertising low-tar cigarettes as a way of keeping Americans using a product which is supposedly safer than the standard brands.

In general, tar content provides taste, while nicotine produces such physiological effects as increased heart rate. It is also an oversimplification that tars cause cancer, while nicotine is more responsible for hardening of the arteries, leading to greater numbers of heart attacks and strokes.

A 1983 article appearing in the "New England Journal of Medicine" showed that low-tar and low-nicotine tobacco actually produces significantly higher levels than advertised.

The advertised levels on all cigarette brands are derived from tests on smoking machines for the sake of uniformity. Such mechanical uniformity is of little value, since it is largely divorced from actual individual smoking habits.

One cigarette filter — found in Barclay's, Kool Ultra and Kool Ultra 100's — contains four channels that lead air directly into the smoker's mouth where the air is supposed to mix with and dilute smoke during inhalation. In the smoking machine, the air coming through the channels mixing with smoke from the cigarettes yielded only one milligram tar.

However, it has been found that the pressure of a smoker's lips in actual circumstances is enough to partially or completely collapse these ventilation channels and thereby hinder the flow of outside air and the tar dilution for which it is responsible. The real delivery is three to seven times higher than advertised!

There is therefore no reason to believe that low-tar, low-nicotine cigarettes will decrease lung cancer incidence. Certainly, there has been no drop in lung cancer incidence or death rates in any country since the introduction of filtered cigarettes a few decades ago, or low-tar, low-nicotine cigarettes more recently.

Scientists may have found new cancer cause

BAR HARBOR, Maine (AP) — The discovery of a genetic defect in children with bone cancer suggests that researchers may have stumbled on a pervasive cause of many types of cancer — damage to or lack of a gene that protects against the disease.

"I don't think all tumors will be caused by these mutations but I think a sizable proportion will be," said Dr. Thaddeus Dryja, an ophthalmologist at the Massachusetts Eye and Ear Infirmary and one of those who discovered the new class of cancer-causing genetic defects.

The defects are of a type that until a year ago had never been seen.

Unlike cancer genes, which when altered can trigger cancer, these genes protect against cancer. When the protective genes are missing or damaged, the cancer can then appear.

Webster Cavenee of the University of Cincinnati described the findings at a recent news conference in Bar Harbor's Jackson Laboratory, where he is taking part in the annual Short Course on Genetics. The privately funded laboratory is a leading center for genetics research.

Children who survive a rare hereditary eye cancer called retinoblastoma often develop a bone cancer called osteosarcoma as teenagers, Cavenee said.

When he examined the genetics of this hereditary form of osteosarcoma, he found that it was caused by the identical defect responsible for the eye cancer.

That defect, in a gene on chromosome 13, was originally identified in the eye cancer last year by Cavenee and Ray White of the University of Utah. Humans have 23 pairs of chromosomes.

Earlier this year, Cavenee reported finding a similar defect on chromosome 11 in Wilms' tumor, a hereditary children's kidney cancer.

Once Cavenee found that the eye cancer defect also caused hereditary osteosarcoma, Dryja started to look at osteosarcoma that was not hereditary, and preliminary results show that it, too, is caused by the defect.

Osteosarcoma strikes 700 children per year in the United States.

Experts call for programs on cancer in Third World

TOKYO (AP) — World Health Organization cancer experts have called for long-term national programs to control cancer, particularly in the Third World, where more deaths from cancer are now reported than in the developed nations.

Dr. Jan Stjernsward, chief of the WHO Cancer Unit, told a news conference that the prevalence of communicable diseases in many developing countries hides the extent of cancer among the world's poor.

He said that in both the developed and developing countries, "a third of all existing cancer can be prevented, a third can be cured if the cases are detected early enough, and all cancer patients can be spared pain."

Dr. Stjernswar explained that cancers of the liver, mouth, cervix, lung and esophagus — generally associated with environmental conditions and unhealthy lifestyles — have become a major health problem in the developing countries.

The annual number of cancer cases is about 5.9 million, according to WHO statistics. About 2.9 million occur in the wealthy countries and slightly more than 3 million in the developing countries.

Dr. Hiroshi Nakajima, regional director of the WHO Western Pacific Region in Mania, said most cancer cases can be prevented by changes of lifestyle and early diagnosis.

Stjernsward said that cigarette smoking is still encouraged by many developing nations' governments for financial reasons.

One-third of cancer in the West is tobacco-induced, Stjernsward said.

He also said with campaigns agaisnt cigarettes having an effect in the industrial nations, the tobacco companies have turned to the Third World as a potential growth market.

The news conference was held in conjunction with the Third General Meeting of WHO Collaborating Centers for Stomach Cancer, which opened today at the National Cancer Center.

Stomach cancer is the leading cancer worldwide, affecting an estimated 680,000 new patients each year globally, according to WHO statistics.

The center was established in 1970 and has its headquarters in Japan, where the rate of stomach cancer is the highest in the world and where its treatment is most advanced, according to Getzendanner.

Protein believed linked to leukemia

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Scientists have announced the discovery of a new protein and its possible role in causing a common form of leukemia, and experts hailed the latest "breakthrough" in learning how cancer may be triggered by genes.

The study by researchers from the University of California at Los Angeles shows how a genetic change may cause a common type of leukemia in adults called chronic myelogenous leukemia, or CML. The disease strikes an estimated 10,000 new victims each year in the United States, according to one of the researchers, UCLA microbiologist Owen Witte.

Genes, the basic units of heredity, control characteristics of all living things and direct the growth and development of normal body cells and tissues. But scientists have identified 20 to 30 genes — called oncogenes — that they believe sometimes cause cells to become cancerous.

The UCLA study demonstrated for the first time how a suspected oncogene called "abl" produces a previously undiscovered protein that functions abnormally.

People are 'cards' when writing home

By LAURA BLY
Copley News Service

Whether or not you saw the movie "Blame It On Rio," you couldn't help being impressed with the advertisement promoting the movie.

If the bronzed blonde in a high-cut bikini pictured in the ad didn't catch your attention, the postcard-style copy certainly did: "I'm having a wonderful time — doing things I never would have done anywhere else! Oh, well. ... Blame it on Rio!" I can't help being impressed with the author's postcard savoir-faire.

In my book, those few suggestive words (and pictures) say far more than an insipid "wish you were here" scrawled on the back of a view from Sugarloaf Mountain.

Truth is, too many postcard scribblings — mine included — do little or nothing to amuse friends and family members back home. They either dutifully record the weather (who cares whether it rained during your side trip to Chartres?), include a hefty dose of travelese ("Mexico City is really a city of contrasts") or detail the sender's medical problems ("Boy, was I glad I had that Lomotil along. ...").

Of course, part of the problem is the choice of postcards available at most tourist joints. The quality may be improving but a lot of cards still feature out-of-focus scenics and nubile, bare-breasted ladies (each of whom was probably photographed 30 years ago).

Maybe it's the proliferation of cliches and dishonesty that keeps me from sending many postcards on my travels. Or maybe it's the fact that by the time my card reaches its destination, I've often been home for a week.

CNS Illustration

A travel agent recalls her attempt to circumvent the often-tardy foreign mail services: She'd buy the cards here, write and address each one before she left, and mail them from the appropriate foreign city shortly after her arrival. It worked — at least some of the time.

But to those who view postcard writing as an art, slow mail service and bare-breasted natives are no hindrance to creativity. In some cases, they actually enhance it. Consider the acquaintance who sent his Chicago friends a post-invasion postcard from Grenada. The card featured a slim brunette sprawled across a surfboard somewhere offshore, and the official tag line read, "Come relax with us on one of the world's last unspoiled islands, Grenada, W.I."

His message: "I've undergone some pretty extensive surgery since arriving here. When I got off the plane, the governor-general offered to make me head of police if I became a woman."

Terri Deaner, a sales representative, is another traveler who sees postcards as far more than a way of letting people know you got there safely. When she visited Italy, she sent a single girlfriend a photo of the Statue of David — inscribed with "Ran into this nice Italian guy the other day. Seemed to be just your type ... but he did seem a little cold." And when her sunbath on a Caribbean beach was interrupted by a persistent saleswoman trying to unload postcards from another island, Deaner picked up a few at half price — writing later that "Actually, I haven't been to this island. But you know me — I couldn't resist a bargain.

According to Deaner, many of her missives have been saved by the recipients — a fact which has been rankling me ever since she disclosed it. I can't think of anyone — not even my mother — who would bother to save one of mine.

Maybe Deaner gives lessons. ...

Belgian culture woven into Texas history

From Staff Reports

SAN ANTONIO — Although Belgium is a small north European country, many aspects of its culture are woven into the fabric of Texas history. At the 13th annual Texas Folklife Festival visitors can learn how the Belgian influence has enriched Texas.

Sponsored by the University of Texas Institute of Texas Cultures in San Antonio, the Folklife Festival is an annual celebration of the state's ethnic diversity and pioneer heritage. Nearly 6,000 participants from across the state, representing more than 30 ethnic groups including the Belgians, will gather together Aug. 2-5 to share the folkways of their ancestors with about 100,000 visitors.

The first Belgians in Texas were three priests who accompanied the French explorer La Salle on his journey to the New World in 1685. Two of the priests were killed in an Indian raid on Fort Louis, but the third survived and returned to France.

Almost 200 years later Texas had gone from Spanish to Mexican rule to independence and the young republic was seeking financial support from European powers. The government of Belgium sent Victor Pirson, an agent, to evaluate Texas and its resources and consider the prospects for establishing a colony. Pirson reported favorably on the state and brought back an offer of lands south and west of San Antonio for colonization. However, neither a loan nor a colony resulted from his first trip.

On his return trip Pirson met Henri Castro, who was in the process of developing an Alsatian settlement west of San Antonio. In 1845 Castro was beset with money problems and transferred the project to a group of Antwerp bankers recommended by Pirson. One was a Belgian business manager named Guillaume D'Hanis. Though he never came to Texas D'Hanis gave his name to a community west of Castroville in Medina County.

From the early 19th century San Antonio and the surrounding area held an attraction for the Belgians. In 1850 the state census listed only eight native Belgians — seven of them were living in San Antonio. By the 1880s a number of families had settled in the city.

Most of the Belgians who settled in San Antonio were from the village of Overmere between Antwerp and Ghent. Many spoke only their native Flemish and had to communicate with their new neighbors by using signs and gestures.

The majority of these settlers were vegetable growers who contributed to the agricultural economy by pioneering and developing cultivation, irrigation and harvesting techniques.

As an agricultural community the Belgians retained their native culture and identity for many years by gathering for "kermess," an outdoor festival celebrating the harvest season. One of the most popular pastimes played at the kermess was "Belgische Bols," a game similiar to present-day bowling.

Another contest included in the celebration was climbing the Belgian mast, a 14-foot-tall greased pole. At the Belgian booth during the Texas Folklife Festival visitors can test their athletic skill and agility in these two events.

The Texas Folklife Festival will be on the 15-acre grounds of the University of Texas Institute of Texas Cultures on HemisFair Plaza in downtown San Antonio. Tickets are $5 for adults and $1 for children ages 6-12. Children under 6 are admitted free. For more information write the Institute of Texas Cultures, P.O. Box 1226, San Antonio 78294, or call (512) 226-7651.

Sampling Arizona's French culture enjoyable

By MICHAEL CARLTON
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

SEDONA, Ariz. — Change the vacation plans, Aunt Millie. Forget Florida. Cancel California. Torpedo Tahoe. I've found the biggest travel bargain in the country and we're going to take advantage of it, my dear.

I'm not talking about one of those $199 New York to Los Angeles airfares, or a cruise line that awards you a free week on a Caribbean island and a bottle of champagne if you sail with it. I'm talking about something even better — especially for anyone who loves sumptuous accommodations, excellent French cuisine, and a natural beauty matched by few places in the world.

I'm talking about L'Auberge de Sedona, a new (it opened on Memorial Day), small (only 16 bedrooms) resort that must rank as one of the Southwest's most enjoyable.

L'Auberge is blessed by a stunning location in Oak Creek Canyon, where cliffs the color of cinnamon reach thousands of feet into the blue Arizona sky, hummingbirds hover, and fat brown trout forage in water so clear you can see the orange spots on their sides.

THE RESORT'S 14 log cabins are scattered amongst five acres alive with geraniums, roses, crepe myrtle, marigolds and petunias. From the outside they look like ordinary log cabins, the kind you find in many mountain resorts and national parks.

But inside you are suddenly in Provence. French country fabrics by Pierre Deux cover the sofa, the chairs, even the shower curtain. A fat, down quilt rests on the brass bed; a canopy of French fabric is overhead. There is a fireplace to warm you on cool high-country evenings (Sedona is at an elevation of about 4,300 feet), and a plump, stuffed duck sits over the mantle. There is a basket chock full of Vidal Sassoon hand lotion, soap and shampoo for your use, and a lovely wardrobe for your things.

Better, perhaps, is what there is not. No television. No telephone. If you want to make a call you have to walk to the main building where there is a pay phone. This is obviously a place to relax, to listen to the wind whistling down the canyon, to sit on your front porch, sip a glass of wine, and read a good book.

AND THIS is also, Aunt Millie, a place to dine on extraordinary food. That, my dear, is what makes L'Auberge de Sedona such a great bargain. Not only do you get a wonderful cabin for $120 per couple, you also get a bounteous five-course dinner and a huge breakfast the next morning. Only the wine is extra.

The food at L'Auberge is excellent — as good, probably, as any in the Southwest. For dinner one night I had a choice of smoked trout or a country pate as an appetizer, followed by either cream of broccoli or puree of summer melon soup. After a crisp, fresh salad I had a decision to make between six entrees: grilled Maine lobster; medallions of veal in a champagne and leek sauce; grilled loin of lamb with a port wine and mint sauce; roast Long Island duckling in a grape and Petit Sirah sauce; roast tenderloin with madeira sauce and mushrooms; and poached turbot with mussels. I had the duckling (it was superb: crisp skin on the outside, tender and moist meat inside), followed by a dessert of fresh raspberries and blueberries smothered in fresh cream. When I returned to my room the bed was turned down and two Andres mint wafers awaited on the feather pillows.

The next morning, after recovering from one of the best (and largest) meals I have eaten in recent memory, I was confronted with an equally daunting breakfast: juice, followed by fresh strawberries, kiwi and orange slices in fresh mint, or pears and raisins poached in rum. Next, walnut, strawberry, blueberry or pear pancakes (served with bacon or sausage). Then it was into the egg course — fried, scrambled, and soft boiled, or omelettes filled with asparagus, fresh herbs, zucchini or avocado and gruyere cheese. Still not enough? Have the eggs Benedict. The breakfast was served with fresh croissants accompanied by large jars of Bonne Marman strawberry, apricot, blueberry and cherry preserves, and all the coffee or fresh tea one could drink, plus a morning newspaper to read while eating.

BREAKFAST AND dinner are served in a handsome dining room decorated with Pierre Deux fabrics, Villeroy and Boch china, and fine table linens. Large windows open to a balcony where — on warm days — you can dine overlooking the rushing waters of Oak Creek, tucked snugly (and smugly) away from the more touristy places at the top of the hill.

A bonus for anyone staying at L'Auberge de Sedona is Sedona itself. The little town (10,000 population) has become the art center of Arizona, sort of a Taos, west.

But, Aunt Millie, I think we'll spend most of our time at L'Auberge de Sedona resting up between meals and deciding what we'll order for dinner.

Travelers may benefit from suggestions

From Staff Reports

Those who are just getting into traveling often have many questions on their minds. Even frequent travelers often can benefit from suggestions coming from those with long experience who know all the "tricks of the trade."

The United States Tour Operators Association, a non-profit trade organization, offers the following tips to make traveling pleasant and comfortable:

— Choose a good travel agent who can help with all phases of travel, one who knows the tour operators and can recommend programs travelers can choose with confidence.

— Ask questions before making a decision. The product offered in a package tour, an escorted tour and an independent tour varies widely and travelers can avoid disappointment by knowing exactly what is included in the tour selected.

— Check requirements for entering countries to be visited — whether tourist card, visa or simply valid passport. The travel agent will be able to advise.

— On a long flight request a bulkhead seat where there is enough room to stretch legs.

— For local currency needs exchange money and cash traveler's checks at a bank. The exchange rate is best in banks.

— Make purchases with credit cards, American dollars or traveler's checks. Almost all reliable establishments will accept them at the official rate.

— Beware of characters who approach travelers on the street offering a better exchange for dollars. Such black market transactions are illegal. There is the additional risk of getting bogus bills and thus being trapped with a wad of counterfeit bills and useless money.

— It is customary to acknowledge a pleasant, informative tour with a gratuity for the guide. The amount depends on satisfaction for services rendered. Most tour operators will provide information on tipping with final documentation.

Travelers warn of pickpocket tactics

By JAMES T. YENCKEL
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Two Washington travelers who returned from Paris recently warn of an unusual pickpocket tactic they each experienced independently on or near the Paris subway as they headed for the Louvre Museum. The pickpocket problem on the Paris subway system has become increasingly troublesome to city officials.

Both incidents involved a small group, including youngsters, who suddenly surrounded the victims, sticking a poster bearing a hard-luck message in their faces — apparently as a distraction. Meanwhile, others in the group, pulling and shoving, made a quick search of the victims' pockets.

One instance occurred about noon in a crowded subway car approaching the Louvre station. Two young women, who appeared to be in their teens, approached with the poster and began pointing animatedly as if it were important. Meanwhile, says the traveler, the pushing masked "any sensation that one's pockets are being gone through." In their haste, the thieves snatched only an airline timetable from his inside jacket pocket. When the subway reached the station, the two young women, apparently accompanied by an older woman, disappeared into the crowd. No one on the subway car offered any help.

The other traveler was walking about mid-morning with her husband from the Louvre station the short distance to the gallery entrance. Two women and three children suddenly appeared. One of the women waved a sign in the husband's face while the largest child, a boy, grabbed for his pockets. He fought them off, shouting "pickpockets, thieves," and managed to retain his wallet.

Other problem stations, reports The Washington Post's Paris bureau, are Palais-Royal, Opera, Champs Elysees and Les Halles.

Local firm takes on international flavor

Tiburon Corp. capitalizes on Canada, Europe funds

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business-Oil Editor

Every independent oil company in Midland has its own particular outside sources of exploration capital, be it monies from Arizona doctors, California movie stare or New York investors.

Money for exploration flows like green rivers into Midland from California, New York, Florida, Houston, Dallas and other places where investor dollars are traditionally concentrated. It is a capital flow that has helped nuture Midland into into an economic oasis.

Now, with the formation of a new, aggressive oil firm with strong Canadian ties, a new source of investment capital has been tapped for Permian Basin exploration. That source is Europe.

Tiburon Petroleum Corp. was formed in September 1982 with only five employees, the result of a merger between Intertex Energy, a small local firm, and Fortress Petroleum Co., a small public company traded on the Vancouver, Canada stock exchange.

TODAY IT IS a firm with 22 employees; and operator of a 100-well, $50 million Spraberry drilling program, that expects to raise $40 million over the next two years from european investors to fuel the firm's aggressive expansion plans.

Most of this money will also be targeted to low-risk, Spraberry-type prospects, according to Ray Lewis, Tiburon president.

Lewis, a native of Odessa who cut his sharp financial teeth in the insurance business, before getting into the oil business, says that Europe is a ready market for new venture capital--providing there's not too much "adventure."

"The incentives of U.S. tax write-offs don't mean a thing to Europeans," said Lewis, who spends many jetting to european capital centers, but primarily to Frankfort, Germany. "They live in the shadow of the Soviet Union. They have seen war in their streets, and have seen economies come and go in Europe. What they are looking for is a safe place to put their money. They are interested in the security of the investment and the length of the investment--something like a pension fund."

LEWIS SAID that Europeans like the economics of the low-risk plays, and will seldom wildcat on oil deals.

He also emphasized that deals are not made on the spur of the moment, as they sometimes are in Texas. "It takes a long period of time to build a good relationship," he said. "It's a different world over there, and takes a little practice to learn to do business in their style."

Lewis said that while many operators structure their deals to sell to their friends in the oil business, Tiburon structures its deals to appeal to the European business mentality.

Tiburon gained its access to European investors via its Canadian connection, which is primarily The Hughes-Lang Group, a hard minerals company headquartered in Vancouver, British Colombia, which is majority stock owner of Tiburon. The grouphas discovered and oper-

And now a franchised maid service

By RON GILMORE
Business-Oil Writer

From baby-sitting to hamburgers, franchises are the choice of today's entrepreneur.The popularity of franchises is growing in Midland as diverse business continues to expand, backed with the experience of a "chain".

"The franchisee is buying a tried and tested formula," said Leone Ackerly, founder of Mini-Maids, a national residential cleaning service. "According to the U.S. Dept. of Commerce, the operator of a franchise has a 95 percent chance of success, while a business person starting from 'scratch' has only a 65 percent chance of success," she said.

Ackerly is in Midland this week interviewing potential franchisees for her highly successful chain of "team-concept" cleaning services. Mini-Maids has over 60 franchises in 18 states and is seeking expansion in the Midland-Odessa market.

"Midland is an up and coming area," said Ackerly. "People here have a sense for business."

The average Mini-Maids franchisee has an upper income, college degree and some business background, according to Ackerly, who is opening two franchises in the area scheduled to begin "probably in the fall".

Boyce "B" Blakeney, the local franchisee for SaraCare sitting services, finds that owning a franchise has advantages over an independant business.

"This is definately the kind of business a person could do without having a franchise," she said. "But if a person has used SaraCare services in another town, they will give us a call when they move here because they know they will get the same service."

SaraCare is an El Paso-based chain that specializes in sitting services. Baby-sitting, hospital visitations, house-sitting, errands, elderly companion and tutoring are some of the services offered.

While most franchises offer a pre-tested formula for accounting, advertising, management and even the color for employees uniforms, SaraCare mandates a more vague base for the franchisee.

"SaraCare's tried and tested formula is simply 'that we care'," said Blakeney. "Of course they have set methods for accounting, hiring of employees and the various forms (medical releases, contracts),that are used."

Both Ackerly and Blakeney see Midland as a good market for franchises.

"The growth potential looks very good," said Blakeney. "I have been open since May and have not had one negative response."

Most franchises operate on a similar format, with the franchisee paying an initial fee to the franchisor, covering various start-up costs. The franchisee then pays out a percentage yearly to the franchisor.

"A minimum of $15000 is needed to start out as a Mini-Maid franchisee," said Ackerly. That amount provides a business license, a protected territory, supplies and equipment and other necessary outlays for the new entrepreneur.

SaraCare has a starting out cost of $2500 to $10000, depending upon the population base of the franchise territory.

Leone Ackerly, housewife who turned "kitchen table business" into multi-milliondollar franchise, wants to be the McDonald's of maid service.

U.S. Trade defecit increases as record setting pace eases in June

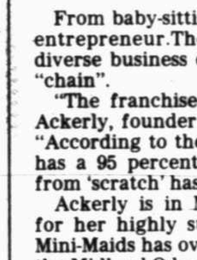

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States registered a foreign trade deficit of $8.9 billion in June, a slight increase over the previous month but far below the record pace set in the first four months of the year, the Commerce Department reported today.

While imports dropped during the month, exports were down by an even larger percentage, the government said. The import decline reflected a sharp drop in shipments of cars and other manufactured goods while the decrease in exports stemmed from a drop-off in shipments of corn, wheat and other agricultural products.

The $8.9 billion trade imbalance in June was only moderately higher than the $8.8 billion deficit in May and was well below the record monthly deficit of $12.2 billion set in April. From January through April, the trade deficit set a record each month.

For the first half of the year, the deficit totals almost $60 billion, running at a pace that would put the total for 1984 at $120 billion or more.

Government officials have predicted a trade imbalance as high as $130 billion this year, far above the record $69.4 billion deficit set in 1983. The deficit represents the differenc between imports of merchandise flowing into the United States and exports going abroad.

Are executive secretaries really exploited?

It's probably no secret by now, but some of Midland's better-performing oil companies are run by women.

Sure, there are men listed as the head of these companies, and they sit in big offices with big clean desks and do the things that executives most like to do, which is talk on the phone and have meetings — lots and lots of meetings...meetings to plan meetings... pre-meeting meetings...then, meetings to analyze meetings.

Executives also like to ride on airplanes, go to the "Y," play golf and have lunches, where they gossip about meetings.

But the truth of the matter is, the woman who answers the phone for him is often the one who really runs the company, taking care of the bothering little executive details like paying the bills, managing projects, supervising people, approving invoices, maintaining records, controling communications, taking care of finances and buying everything from paperclips to drilling mud.

She's what some call an executive secretary, but in reality she is often more executive than secretary, even though she sometimes pulls down secretary wages.

MOST EXECUTIVES freely admit that their secretary is more than a "right arm" but both arms, legs, eyes and ears about 90 percent of the time for him and his brain more often than he wants to admit.

One might think, then, that a woman in this position would feel exploited. And, if you were to listen to some of our militant feminist leaders you would know that is exactly how they feel — like poor downtrodden creatures, unappreciated, exploited, underpaid and just waiting for an army of boyish-looking girls in smelly sweat shirts and brogans to storm corporate headquarters and liberate them.

But how do these executive secretaries really view their job, and their relationship to the boss? Probably the best way to find out would be to ask and that's what Xerox did.

The magazine BIZ, a Xerox publication, surveyed 1,500 executive secretaries and came up with some conclusions that puts some old myths to rest.

THE FIRST MYTH, that secretaries are unappreciated, did not hold true. To the contrary, 90 percent of the secretaries who responded said they receive both recognition and credit from their bosses, and 87 percent said they were quiet happy in their work. Moreover, 94.7 percent said their bosses trust their judgment and allow them the freedom to work independently. Another 90.7 said their bosses were ready and willing to listen to suggestions and complaints, while 28.5 percent said their bosses took immediate action on suggestions and complaints.

Also on a positive note, 87 percent not only like their job, but 73 percent plan to continue doing it. About the only negative note came in the matter of utilization. Nearly 31 percent of the executive secretaries said their bosses underestimated their skills, while 28 percent said their bosses did jobs they could do better.

And what do they think of their bosses who have all the meetings? Over 91 percent said they believed their bosses were totally qualified to hold their positions.

SALARIES FOR exective secretaries ranged from $10,000 to $50,000, with the average around $20,000. While such salaries won't win any prizes, they are not quite exploitational compared to the national median income. Conveniently, the one question the survey neglected to ask was whether or not the executive secretaries were happy with their salary.

We might conclude then, from the report that executive secretaries are a highly skilled group, highly appreciated and for the most part content, although often underestimated, and probably underpaid.

We could, also, probably conclude those facts for 90 percent or more of the rest of us in the work place.

DON'T LOOK for the Sharpe-Tauke "recontrol" gas bill to be passed out of committee this year.

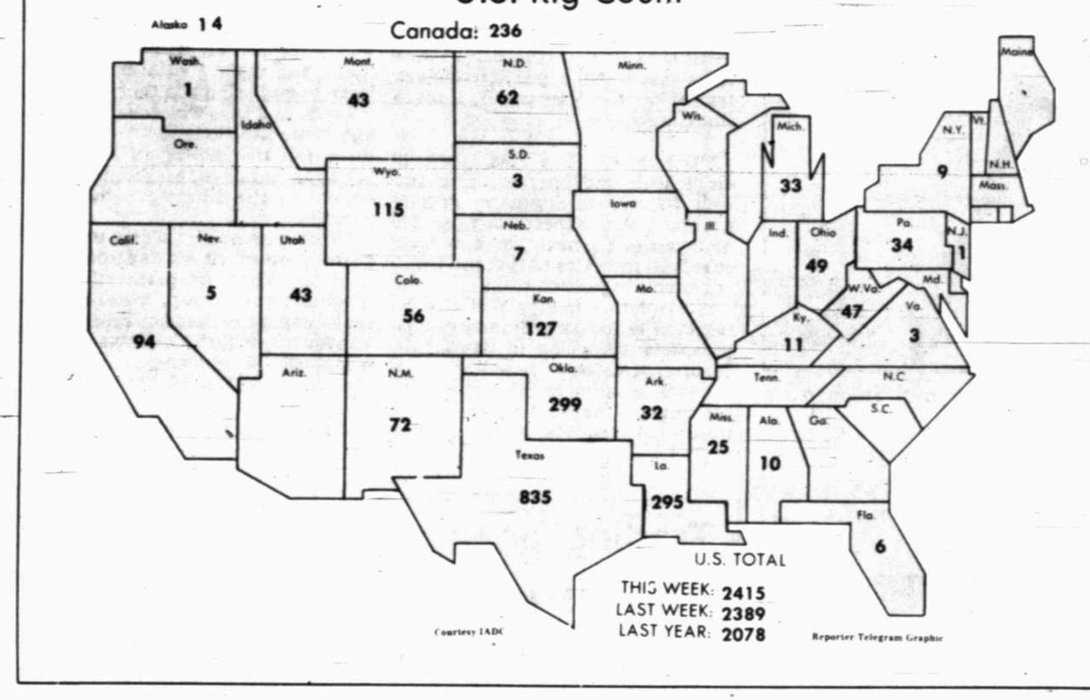

That's the word we received at the monthly meeting of the Permian Basin Petroleum Association, as oilman Charles Perry, who has been following the legislation for the association, reported that the bill may die in the House, despite the fact that one of the bill sponsors, Phil Sharpe, has a petition with 218 signatures on it to get the bill on the floor.

House Speaker Tip O'Neill, D-Mass., is reportedly not enthused about the bill as are many other members of Congress. Efforts to keep the bill bottled up in committee have been aided by a strong Jewish coalition opposed to the bill.

Basin rig count slips this week

Almost as fast as the Permian Basin rig count took a good jump, it went for a dump almost of the same magnitude.

The rig count stands at 333 this week down from last week's 344, and almost down to the previous week's 330. In the past seven weeks the rig count appears to be trying to stabilize at somewhere around 330, averaging 331 for that period.

Lea County with 41 remains the leader, with Andrews in second place at 27 rigs after dropping out of the thirties bracket from 330 last week. Pecos County with 24 rigs working remains a strong third place. Upton was the apparent loser this week, dropping four rigs. Otherwise, the gains and losses were distributed evenly across the Permian Basin.

The national rig count for this time last year was 2,078, and the Permian Basin rig count a year ago was 229.

WTCC strongly opposes bill

Strong opposition to the proposed "Natural Gas Market Policy Act of 1984" has been voiced by the West Texas Chamber of Commerce. Also known as the House Energy and Commerce Committee Natural Gas Bill, H.R. 4277 is an attempt to "recontrol" the natural gas industry, according to the WTCC.

"By imposing a two-year price freeze on all price escalator clauses in the gas decontrolled on January 1, 1985 and July 1, 1987, the measure effectively reimposes price controls on categories of gas decontrolled by the Natural Gas Policy Act" said Dan Mendell, III of Midland. Mendell chairs the chamber's Mineral Resources Committee.

"In addition," continued Mendell, "these provisions overturn clauses in thousands of existing gas sales contracts, resulting in changes to all parties involved and uncertainty as to the price paid for almost 50 percent of the nation's gas supply."

The West Texas Chamber of Commerce maintained that other provisions in H.R. 4277, such as take or pay and contract carriage, would also cause unnecessary stumbling blocks to energy producers and transporters.

"With a fragile recovery now underway among oil and gas companies, any new taxes or roadblocks would be very detrimental for the industries and extremely bad timing for the West Texas economy," concluded Mendell.

Call-from-anywhere telephones are here

SAN FRANCISCO – It may seem a fantasy, like Dick Tracy's two-way wrist radio or Maxwell Smart's shoe phone, but a telephone you can use anywhere – in a car, an elevator, a grocery store or on a golf course – already has attracted 12,000 buyers in nine cities where the system has been launched.

The new mobile telephone – called a cellular radio telephone – is a significant advance over the old mobile telephone service because it allows hundreds of thousands more subscribers to use a system as efficiently as you use the telephones in your home or office.

Conventional mobile telephone service, which can be used only in automobiles, has only one transmitter for a large geographic area. It allows only a few radio channels to be used at a time, and only one conversation per channel. For example, it can support only about 1,000 cars in the San Francisco area, and there's often a half-hour wait to get on the line. On the other hand, one cellular radio system will support 150,000 customers.

The technology, invented by Bell Laboratories, divides an area into amoeba-shaped cells with a radius of two to 10 miles. Each cell is equipped with its own frequency transmitter, receiver and computer switching equipment. As a car leaves a cell, the computer passes the transmission off to another cell without interruption in the conversation.

"This is more than just getting a phone in your car. When cellular radio finally comes out of the closet, it's going to affect society as much as television, radio and the telephone," said Geoffrey Goodfellow, a Palo Alto, Calif., computer expert who is working on an intercity billing system for cellular phones.

Motorola recently came out with a portable model for use in a restaurant, on a tennis court, in a cab, on a bus – wherever. You can call long distance, or hook the phone to your portable computer and send electronic messages to the office from a park bench.

The nine cities with cellular telephone systems are New York, Washington-Baltimore, Los Angeles, Indianapolis, Milwaukee, Buffalo, Miami and Chicago. When all major cities have the systems, you'll be able to travel out of, say, Albany, with your telephone. If someone calls your number, the phone you're carrying in your briefcase in Seattle will ring. Cellular phones could replace the two phones many of us have – the office phone and the home phone – with one phone, one number.

Twenty-eight of the nation's 30 major metropolitan areas probably will offer cellular radio telephone service by the end of the year, said Benn Kobb, editor of Cellular Radio News, a newsletter based in Fairfax, Va.

Jaguar sale should bring $392 million

N.Y. Times News Service

LONDON — The government's sale of Jaguar, the luxury car maker, to the private sector will take place on Aug. 3 and should raise $392 million, according to the prospectus issued Wednesday by the bankers handling the deal.

The stock was conservatively priced at $2.18 a share in an effort to make sure that the offer is well received in a period of declining prices on the London Stock Exchange and doubts about Jaguar's long-range prospects.

Analysts said that the government felt it could not afford a repetition of the turmoil surrounding the recent sale of Enterprise Oil PLC, where investors left most of the issue in the hands of the dismayed underwriters.

Jaguar, which is a subsidiary of BL PLC, formerly British Leyland, is expected to be the last company "privatized" before the multibillion-dollar sale of 51 percent of British Telecom in the fall.

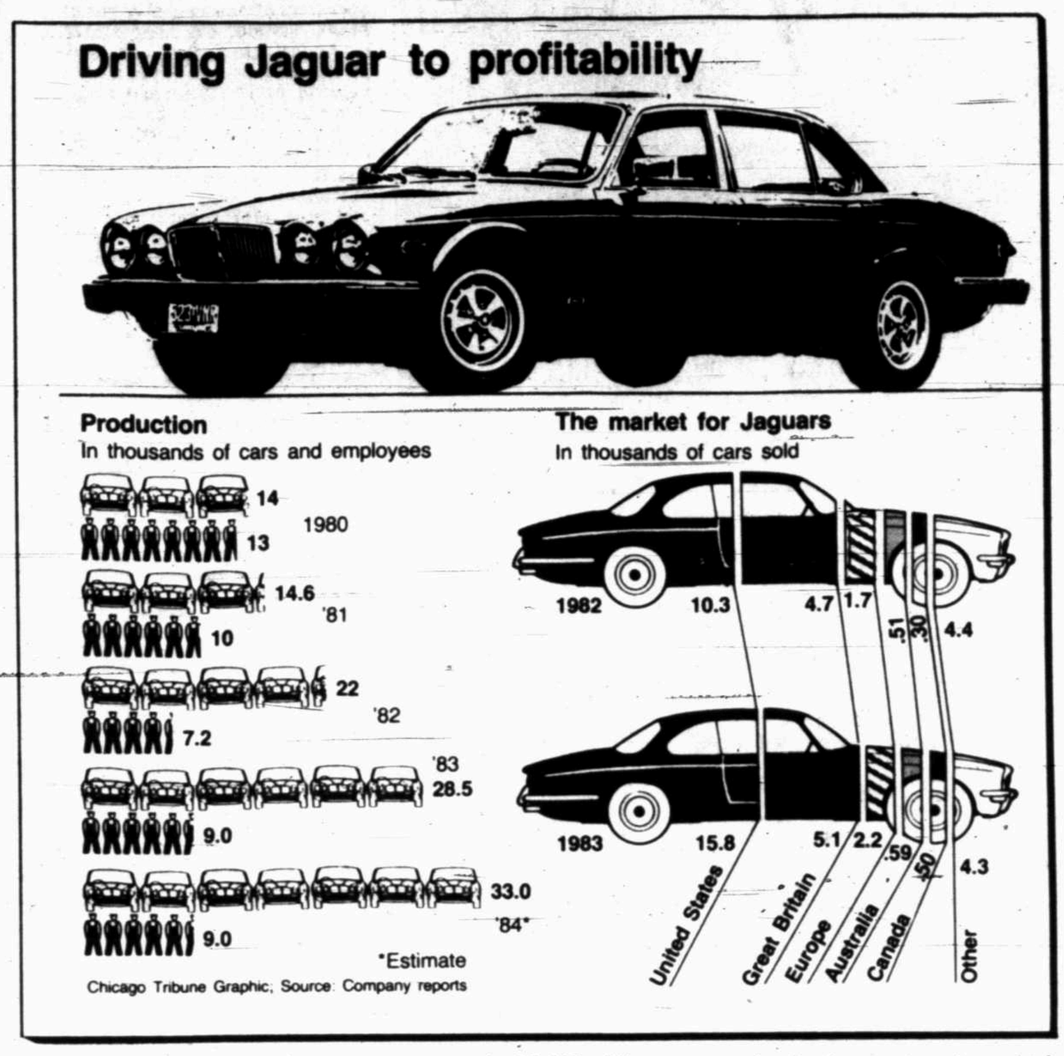

Figures in the prospectus highlighted the importance of the United States market and exchange rates in Jaguar's remarkable turnaround since 1980, when it had an operating loss of $58.5 million at current exchange rates on sales of $220 million, 11 percent in the United States.

Last year, operating profits reached $67.5 million and sales were $624 million, with 57 percent in the United States. During the four years, total unit sales almost doubled, to 28,000 from 15,000, with the United States accounting for most of the increase.

The steady appreciation of the dollar has raised the profits from the expanding sales in the United States, where Jaguars typically retail for more than $30,000.

Although the company is currently thriving — pretax profits for the first six months of 1984 are estimated at $54.1 million, compared with $33 million a year earlier — many analysts worry that it will have trouble competing in the long run with larger European luxury car makers such as Mercedes and BMW, and its far larger American rivals, Cadillac and Lincoln.

Almost all of the money from the sale of Jaguar, which is based in Coventry, is scheduled to go to BL.

Midlander to chair restaurant association

Louis Hochman

Midland civic leader and restaurant entrepreneur Louis Hochman, was recently elected senior vice president of the Texas Restaurant Association, a 5,200 member organization representing all factions of the foodservice industry in Texas.

Hochman's primary function will be to serve as chairman of the association's executive committee, a 12 member body that establishes the guidelines and policies of the association.

One of the issues that Hochman will confront in his new role is exploring new ways to increase the public's awareness of the dangers of drinking and driving and teaching them to use moderation when consuming alcoholic beverages.

The recent influx of concern that the public has exhibited towards drunk driving has resulted in harsher laws and attitudes for those caught behind the wheel with too much to drink. The Texas Restaurant Association responded by urging its members to teach their customers to know their limits, an effort that Hochman says is still going strong. TRA will soon be offering educational seminars to its members that will teach alcoholic beverage servers how to identify someone who has had too much to drink and what to do when that situation arises.

Hochman also plans to expand the association's communication efforts so that more people in the foodservice industry will become aware of the benefits of membership. As more people join, the association will grow stronger and the industry, more unified, according to Hochman.

In addition to his TRA activities, Hochman is also very active in Midland community affairs serving as a member of the Chamber of Commerce, chairman of the Convention Center and Visitors Bureau, chairman of the Midland Civic Center Board, vice chairman of the County Library Board, and former vice president of the Better Businesss Bureau of the Permian Basin.

Hochman has been in the restaurant business for 26 years and is the owner and operator of Luigi's.

Ribbon cut for new Laredo plant

LAREDO, Texas (AP) — Business leaders and local and state officials joined in a ribbon-cutting ceremony Thursday for Merit Radiators, which is expected to employ 300 people.

Harden Wiedemann, director of the Governor's Office of Economic Development, said Merit Radiators is the first business to get started with the assistance of the state's Small Business Revitalization Program.

The plant location had been vacant since Levi Strauss terminated its operations there five years ago.

IRS moving aggressively against tax schemes

Staff reports

Midland investors who might be inclined to participate in "loopholeish" new taxshelter schemes, or "abusive" schemes as IRS calls some them, might do well to know that IRS is moving aggressively against such ventures.

It would be wise to know that there are now strict new penalties dealing with abusive tax shelters and one should not be lured by the promise of tremendous tax write-off ratios as the sole reason to invest.

The Tax Equity and Fiscal responsibility Act of 1982 (TEFRA) makes participation in abusive tax shelters more hazardous than ever, with penalties and interest approching 50 percent when IRS disallows the claims.

IRS defines abusive tax shelters as marketing schemes that involve artificial transactions with little or no economic reality, frequently making use of unrealistic allocations, inflated appraisals, or losses in connection with nonrecourse loans.

Investing in an abusive tax shelter may be an expensive proposition when all of the consequences are considered, IRS noted. For example, the promoter generally charges substantial fee. If the return is examined by the IRS and a tax deficiency is determined, the taxpayer will then be faced with payment of the tax, interest on the underpayment, plus the possible application of severe penalties for negligence or civil fraud. And, in the most aggravated situations, IRS may decide to prosecute the case for criminal tax violtions.

Since there are many abusive tax shelters and more are developed daily by promoters, it is not possible to list all the factors a taxpayer should consider in determining whether an offering is an abusive tax shelter. However, one should ask the following questions, which might provide a clue to the abusive nature of the plan:

— Do the promised tax benefits far outweigh the economic benefits?

— Is this a transaction you would seriously consider, apart from the tax benefits, if you hoped to make a profit?

—Do shelter assets really exist and are they insured for less than their purchase price?

— Is there a nontax justifiction for the way profits and losses are allocated to partners?

— Do the facts and supporting documents make economic sense? In that connection, are there sales and resales of the tax shelter property at ever incresing prices?

— Does the promoter offer to backdate documents after the close of the year and are you instructed to backdate checks covering your investment?

— Is your debt a real debt or are you assured by the promoter that you will never have to pay it?

The watchword when evaluating investment prospectuses is that, if something sounds too good to be true, it probably is.

Report final on S&L failure

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal regulators failed to act two or three years ago when there was reason to believe that Empire Savings and Loan Association of Mesquite, Texas was on "very shaky ground," a House subcommittee chairman said today.

Empire was declared "unsafe and unsound to transact business" in March by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board and was cosed.

Federal regulators attributed the closure to a large number of questionable loans used to finance overbuilt condominium developments in eastern Dallas County.

The Government Operations Subcommittee on Commerce, Consumer and Monetary Affairs met today to receive a draft report on the Empire case.

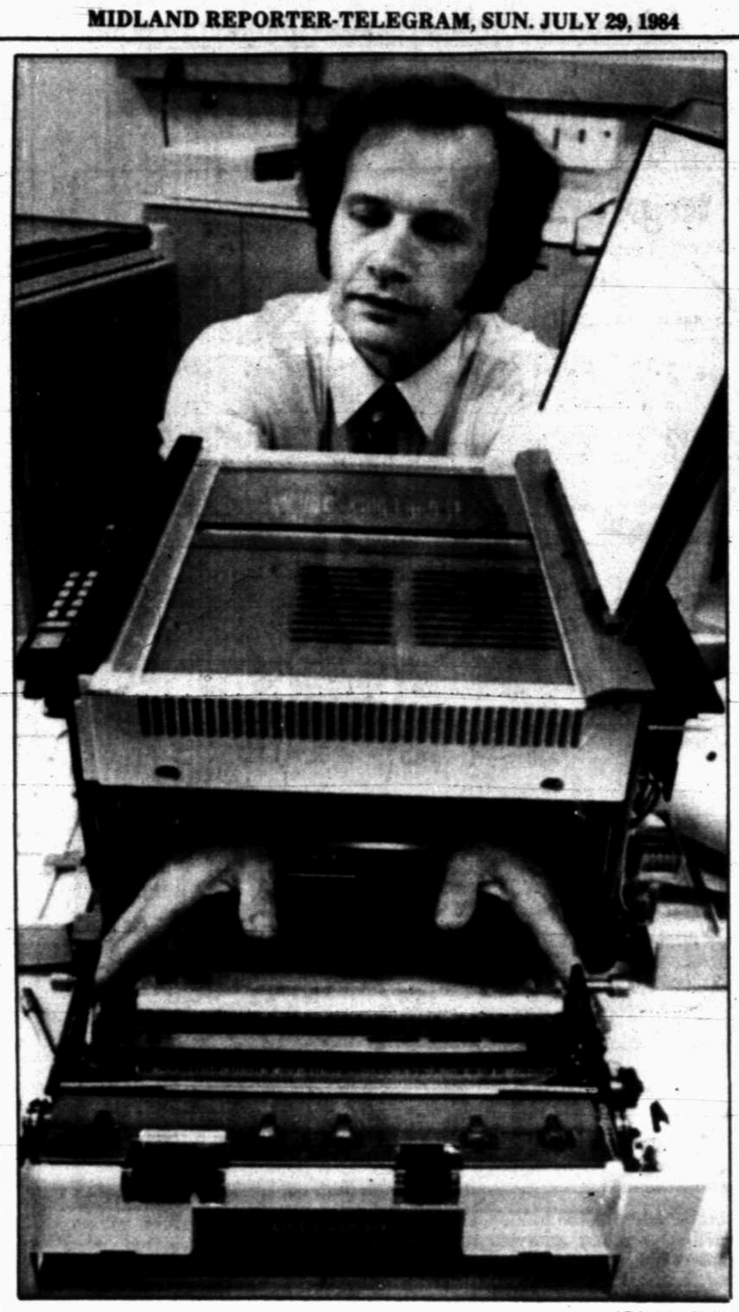

Subcommittee Chairman Doug Barnard Jr., D-Ga., said the report focused on "the effectiveness and adequacy" of the federal regulatory system.

The report will not be released until it is accepted by the full committee, which meets on the report July 31.

"There was good reason to believe Empire was on very shaky ground two or three years before it was closed by the bank board," Barnard told reporters.

He would not give out details of the report, but said the subcommittee, during its investigation of a series of large bank failures, found that federal regulatory agencies had sufficient powers under current law to step in earlier than they have done.

In Empire's case, he told the subcommittee, "The report finds that the bank board did not lack power or authority; there was an absence of will or determination to take forceful and effective measures."

Master meter course slated

AUSTIN — A training course for operators of master meter gas distribution systems has been scheduled on August 7 in El Paso and August 9 in Midland by the Pipeline Safety Section of the Railroad Commission's Gas Utilities Division.

The one-day course will be held at the TravelLodge Central in El Paso and at the Holiday Inn Country Villa in Midland.

Master meter gas systems are usually in mobile home parks, housing authorities, or apartment complexes. They are natural gas pipeline system that distribute gas from a central source, or master meter, to tenants. The tenants may or may not be individually metered.

As owners or operators of a gas distribution system, master meter systems owners or operators are subject to the same state and federal gas pipeline safety regulations as other gas companies. These operators can learn about their responsibilities by attending one of the training courses. Inspectors from the Railroad Commission will begin conducting safety evaluations of all master meter systems in the state this year.

Each course begins with an introduction to natural gas and pipeline safety rules. Correct procedures, records to keep during construction and repair, required inspections, operations, and maintenance, and preparing for and responding to emergency situations are also discussed. Detecting and controlling gas leakage is also emphasized.

The registration deadline for the course is Friday, August 3.

Documents show Navy overcharged for subs

WASHINGTON (AP) — General Dynamics Corp. documents tend to support claims of a fugitive former executive that the company deceived the Navy into paying a $634 million cost overrun on submarine construction in the mid-1970s, a congressional investigator said recently.

Richard F. Kaufman, general counsel for the congressional Joint Economic Committee, testified that the documents "lend support to major portions" of the allegations of P. Takis Veliotis, a former General Dynamics vice president who now is living in Greece to avoid prosecution on a federal indictment charging him with taking kickbacks.

Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., who held the hearing, noted that Veliotis is a fugitive and "may have ulterior motives and self-serving reasons for making his allegations."

"But," Proxmire added, "they were too serious to ignore."

Allegations against General Dynamics include charges that the company's Electric Boat Division incurred huge cost overruns on contracts to build attack submarines because of poor performance, including poor management, inadequate planning, inefficient use of labor and low productivity.

But the company, hoping to get the government to pick up the tab for the overruns, instead blamed the government for the excess cost, withholding information in an attempt to deceive the Navy and inflating claims, Kaufman said in summary of the allegations.

The corporation finally threatened to stop building the attack submarines, an action that also could have affected construction of Trident submarines in the same Connecticut shipyard, in order to put pressure on the Navy to approve a generous settlement, Kaufman said.

The settlement finally approved was $634 million — $90 million higher that General Dynamic's original overrun claim — because it was negotiated with top civilian Pentagon officials who were more concerned with coming up with a package that could sell in Congress than with the appropriateness of the claim, Kaufman said. A Navy board of review said it could substantiate only $96 million of General Dynamic's claim.

General Dynamics later "denied categorically" the allegations.

"Through selective use of documents at the Proxmire hearing today, superficial conclusions were drawn which are totally at odds with the judgment of two federal grand juries which considered the full range of evidence and determined there were no grounds for action against our company," the corporation said in a statement.

The company noted the allegations stemmed from an indicted former employee who is a fugitive and added: "We repeatedly have denied categorically all of the charges raised at the Proxmire hearing, and we do so again."

The documents submitted by Kaufman to the committee include internal memoranda detailing management problems at the Electric Boat Division and minutes and memoranda of subsequent negotiations with the Navy on the overrun settlement. In addition, Kaufman spent three days in Greece interviewing Veliotis on his allegations.

Kaufman said the documents were obtained from government and private sources, but was not more specific. Proxmire said in his opening statement that General Dynamics Chairman David S. Lewis reneged on a May 16 oral promise to cooperate with the committee and turn over pertinent documents from company files.

Kaufman said the internal documents showed problems beginning in 1971, when General Dynamics was awarded its first contract for seven attack submarines, because the corporation underestimated the cost of construction.

Veliotis, according to Kaufman, alleged that General Dynamics knew of the problem by by 1973, but made a deliberate decision to bid on a second contract for 11 submarines at the same low 1971 price plus an allowance for inflation on the assumption it could recoup the cost overruns on both contracts with late claims blaming the government for the overruns.

"Internal documents of General Dynamics lend support to major portions of Mr. Veliotis' allegations," Kaufman said. "For example, Electric Boat officials knew as early as 1972 that construction schedules were slipping and costs were getting alarmingly high. ... Problems in the shipyard were acknowledged freely in internal communications and reports over the next several years, and seem to continue growing worse."

In 1976, General Dynamics filed a claim for $544 million in cost overruns, saying the overruns were caused by the government.

"The evidence reviewed suggests that high officials of the corporation withheld information about the poor conditions in the shipyard from the Navy and the board of directors of the corporation," Kaufman said. "At the same time, problems attributable to the Navy were exaggerated in order to support the contractor's claim."

COMPUTREAT™
Economically treats wells at any time interval

Extensive field tests prove that Computreat's automated chemical injection system significantly reduces corrosion over conventional methods of chemical injection. That translates directly to a substantial reduction in equipment failure and replacement costs.

Until now, whether your well needed hourly, daily or weekly chemical injections, the only economical method to treat your well was based on your treater trucks' schedule. Computreat's computerized injection system allows chemical application at any programmed interval. Using the wells produced fluid, Computreat provides a prewet function. This function "wets" the casing and outside of the tubing to prevent chemicals from adhering to dry surfaces. Up to four different chemicals can be injected to the well followed by a circulation cycle that flushes the chemicals through the standing fluid level to the bottom of the well.

Parallel Petroleum files SEC statement for merger

Frank S. Delay, president and CEO of Parallel Petroleum Corp. has announced that a registration statement has been filed with the Securities and Exchange commission relating to two proposed transactions whereby Parallel will be merged with and into a newly-formed Delaware corporation which would acquire the proved oil and gas properties of six private limited partnerships in exchange for an aggregate of 3,970,108 shares of common stock. The partnerships are managed by Thomas R. Cambridge and A.L. Nail of Amarillo.

The proposed merger requires the approval of shareholders holding at least two-thirds of the outstanding stock of Parallel while the acquisition of the proved oil and gas properties will require approval by the partners owning at least 51 percent of the aggregate initial partnership subscriptions.

There will be no change in the corporate name, managing officers or the present board of directors of Parallel Petroleum Corp. If the oil and gas properties are acquired, four additional board members are proposed to be added, three of whom are geologists and one is an oil and gas landman.

Financial statements as of March 31, 1984 indicate that the proposed transactions would provide the following significant results to Parallel's balance sheet:

— Proved oil and gas properties (under the successful efforts method of accounting) would increase from $2,323,149 to $4,916,351, an increase of $2,593,202 or 112 percent.

— Shareholders' equity would increase from $3,373,023 to $5,817,225, an increase of $2,444,202 or 72 percent.

TIBURON

ates 10 gold mines throughout Canada.

"Richard Hughes has raised money all over the world for gold mine ventures, and we were able to capitalize upon his connections and expertise at international fund raising," said Lewis.

HUGHES AND LEWIS joined forces after determining that they both had need to operate to protect oil and gas investments. "After spending $20 million over a three-year period in the Permian Basin, Hughes decided he would be better off if he had a say over his investments as an operator."

The plan was for Lewis to use his expertise and Hughes's money to staff and organize build a tight, effecient run operating company that could make money by saving money.

Lewis was assisted in the task by David Matheson, Tiburon director and vice-president,and a chartered accountant with nine years experience in oil and gas financing.

The exploration philosophy of the company would be to achieve controlled growth by putting the majority of the firm's budget into controlled drilling programs, usually offset or infill wells, and using internally generated funds to drill prime prospects and retain a high as possible percentage of such prospects. Wildcats would be drilled strictly with internally generated money, outside capital would be attacted by keeping costs to a minimum.

It is a philosophy that has paid off. After three quarters of losses and an outlay of $500,000, the company turned a profit in its forth quarter.

For the five months ended February of 1984, net income for the five months was $510,000 and working capital provided from operations was $1.1 million. Net income and cash flow are expected to increase as production from various development programs comes on stream.

With a strong cash flow from production, a solid financial backer in Hughes-Lang and access to European capital, the firm is predicting a rapid growth rate in the next few years.

Applications for real estate license show significant statewide hike

AUSTIN — Applications to the Texas Real Estate Commission for real estate salesman licenses have shown a "significant increase statewide" during the current fiscal year, TREC administrator Wallace Collins reports.

Through June (representing the first 10 months of fiscal 1984), the agency had received 26,880 applications, compared to 19,352 for the comparable fiscal 1983 period.

"We seem to be reflecting a very strong upsurge of people wanting to enter the real estate business," Collins says.

The number of applications for brokers' licenses hasn't changed, nor has there been a significant increase in the number of complaints, Collins reports.

The increase in salesman applications appears to be a "valid barometer" of increased activity, Collins comments, since those applications represent the "entry level" for real estate business.

Collins says TREC has been able to keep up with processing the increased numbers of applications "so far," but notes the applications continue to come in, so that the agency workload is growinng.

The number of requests point to the continued high activity in real estate transactions in Texas, he indicates.

Figures received from the U.S. Census Bureau on residential construction in Texas indicate the first five months of 1984 saw a decline in new dwelling units planned for construction, compared to the first five months of 1983.

Bureau of Business Research, University of Texas at Austin, reports that for the January-May period this year, applications were filed for 99,428 units, with a value of over $4.218 billion, as shown by Census Bureau data.

The January-March period accounted for 57,610 units, with $2.453 billion in value.

In 1983, the January-March period recorded 69,763 units, with $2.459 billion in value, while the January-May period resulted in 116,867 units, with a value of $4.223 billion.

Texas Department of Health completed hearings on proposed changes in its hazardous waste rules, which would bring some 10,000 additional hazardous waste generators under TDH jurisidiction.

Present rules require persons generating over 1,000 kilograms (or 2,200 pounds) of hazardous wastes monthly to obtain TDH identification numbers and to use manifests when shipping wastes.

The new rules would apply to generators of more than 100 kilograms (220 pounds) per month, who would be required to obtain indentification numbers and to report hazardous waste shipments.

TDH says the new system will provide better controls which should reduce cases of illegal dumping.

The new rules are proposed to go into effect Sept. 1.

Department of Water Resources which shares jurisdiction over hazardous wastes with TDH, has received approval from the Water Development Board for changes in rules for hazardous waste processing, storage and disposal facilities.

The rules are aimed at preventing location of such facilities in flood-prone areas and at protecting underground and surface water supplies from contamination.

State Board of Insurance has set a hearing for 10 a.m. August 20 on a proposed amendment to title insurance rules regarding abstract plants.

Under the proposal, a title agent would be required to provide an abstract plant for each county in which the agent maintains an office.

The proposal was presented to SBI at last November's hearing on title insurance matters, but was continued until March, when additional testimony was taken.

Texas Savings and Loan Department is seeking to open an office in Houston, to deal with savings and loan matters in the South Texas area.

The department currently operates an office in Dallas, and Savings and Loan Commissioner L.L. Bowman III has presented the State Finance Commission with a request for a regional office in Houston as well.

Bowman says the growing activity in the area, and need for closer supervision in some instances, has prompted the request.

Bowman also is seeking to increase his department's regulatory and supervisory efforts — commenting that while most associations are well-managed and are operating smoothly, a minority may require a tighter regulatory rein.

Net income for the first six months of 1984 was a record $24,145,000, or $.82 per share ($.80 fully diluted), compared to $18,059,000, or $.62 per share, for the first half of 1983.

Revenues for the second quarter increased 22.8 percent to $137,565,000 and operating expenses increased 30.9 percent to $118,222,000, while revenues for the first six months increased 27.0 percent to $262,633,000 and operating expenses 30.1 percent to $227,743,000 compared to the first half of last year.

WESTERN CO.

FORT WORTH — The Western Co. of North America reported a net loss of $3,739,000, or $.12 per common share, for the quarter ended June 30, 1984, on revenues of $146,656,000. In the same 1983 quarter, the company had net income of $1,379,000, with a $.01 loss per common share on revenues of $127,313,000.

John A. Fanning, president and chief executive officer, said, "Despite reduced pre-tax losses incurred in the 1984 second quarter compared with the same 1983 period, a $6.7 million difference in tax provisions resulted in lower 1984 second quarter after-tax provision on foreign operations, which exceeded tax benefits related to domestic losses by $2.8 million. For the same 1983 quarter, the company reported tax credits in the amount of $3.9 million."

Fanning also said, "Market conditions for the larger of Western's operating segments, petroleum services, improved somewhat during the 1984 second quarter over last year's similar period; however, intense price competition continued, thus restricting operating margin gains. In the offshore drilling segment, 16 of the company's 17 rigs were contracted throughout the quarter for a utilization rate of 96 percent."

PAULEY PETROLEUM

LOS ANGELES — Pauley Petroleum Inc. has reported net income of $354,000 or 12 cents per share for the three months endded May 31, 1984 compared with $9,752,000 or $3.37 per share in the third quarter of the last fiscal year. For the nine months the company reported net income of 4435,000 of 15 cents per share compared with $6,623,000 or $2.29 per share last year.

Included in the third quarter and nine months last year was a pre-tax gain of $10,785,000 from the sale of a portion of the company's interest in an oil and gas lease in the Santa Barbara channel. Excluding the gain on the sale, the company would have reported pre-ta losses in last year's third quarter and nine months of $453,000 and $3,582,000 respectively.

MUSE AIR CORP.

DALLAS — Muse Air Corp. has announced that during 1984's second quarter ended June 30, the company incurred a net loss of $598,000 or $0.13 per share versus a net loss of $203,000 or $0.05 per share recorded during the second quarter of 1983. For the six months ending June 30, the company had a loss of $0.72 per share in 1984, down from a loss of $0.86 per share in 1983.

During the 1984 second quarter, operating revenues and passenger traffic increased 60 percent over 1983's levels.

Oil journalism awards announced

NASHVILLE — Mike D'Orso, staff writer for Commonwealth/The Magazine of Virgina, and Jim Hendon, energy writer for the Rocky Mountain News, were announced as winners of the American Association of Petroleum Landmen's Frank Kelley Memorial Award in Nashville recently during the presentation of awards session at the AAPL 30th Annual Meeting.

The award, given annually by the professional energy organization, is in recognition of "journalistic excellence in reporting oil and gas industry information to the general public." The writers receive the Association's bronze plaque and a cash award of $250. The magazine/newspaper publishing the winning entries also receive a plaque.

Special recognition was granted to Sam Fletcher, energy writer for the Houston Post and a four-time AAPL award winner, for his consistently admirable coverage of the energy industry worldwide.

D'Orso's award was for excellence in the area of feature writing for magazines. His entry was an in-depth examination of offshore oil exploration and the effects it might have on Virginia — Derricks & the Devil's Bones.

Hendon's entry — a series of articles appearing in the Denver-based tabloid — reflects the News' decision during the recent oil industry boom to cover the oil industry very closely using both locally-oriented and broader-scoped material.

His own emphasis has been financial, mainly because Denver is an oil money town as well as an oil town, and reflect research, statistics and local color.

The people of the oil and gas industry, especially landmen, are aware of the significant contribution which the print media makes in the dissemination of information concerning the nation's industries, products, and services. The purpose of the Frank Kelley award is to give some recognition to the valuable work that is being done by the nation's newspapers and magazines and their writers.

Susan Stamberg, host of NPR's "All Things Considered," treats her show like a family gathering instead of a news program.

Stamberg considers all things

By JACK CARROLL
King Features Syndicate

Susan Stamberg's office is a funky clutter of reference books, awards, family photos, memorabilia, "New Yorker" cartoons, fans' tributes, old newspapers, coffee mugs with funny faces and a typewriter. Amidst the hectic commotion which is her desk, she is right at home.

The anything-goes decor — where flower pots vie with pencil sharpeners for shelf space — is the perfect workspace equivalent of "All Things Considered," NPR's eclectic nightly news magazine that Ms. Stamberg has been hosting since 1971.

A 90-minute wrap-up of international events, domestic reports and interviews, the radio broadcast from Washington, D.C. has attracted a nearly cultlike following of more than 2.5 million weekly because of its unique approach to the news. And because of Ms. Stamberg.

Funny, warm, curious, open and direct, she embodies the special attitude that has made "ATC" the favorite radio show of Roger Mudd, Jules Feiffer and Charles Kuralt as well as truckdrivers, farmers, secretaries and Ph.D.s around the nation.

With her New York-inflected voice, her gloriously rich laugh and her on-the-level approach to journalism, Ms. Stamberg has redefined what it means to be an on-the-air newswoman.

AS LIKELY TO guffaw as other broadcasters are to pontificate, the tousle-haired anchor in her mid-40s has turned the nightly newscast — carried by 250 public radio stations — into a program that's closer to a family gathering than to a information-athon.

SHE TAKES TO the mike each day at 5 p.m., and all over the country listeners feel like she's talking to them alone.

"The medium of radio is so intimate that the audience feels like they know you," Ms. Stamberg says, sitting in that marvelous disarray of her office.

"In fact, they do know you pretty well because here we let ourselves be open. It's not happy-talk radio, but it does have lot to do with personality."

It is a typical Monday morning in the downtown Washington headquarters of NPR (the White House is about a mile away) and she has just finished up her daily meetings with producers and staff of "ATC."

Between now and air time, she must prep herself for the broadcast, the show which puts her in front of the nation seven and a half hours a week. That's equal to Dan Rather, Tom Brokaw and Peter Jennings combined. And with that kind of exposure, there isn't any way to fake it.

"I'M OPEN, I'm interested, which is true of anyone who's interesting, don't you think?" she says, analyzing herself. "It's not that I think everyone wants to come and talk to me; that's not true. But I want to talk with everyone. I want to know what they think and how come and what they're curious about. And I like thinking about ideas and just stopping and mulling. I do have a curiosity that gets me places."

BETWEEN THE LINES

Dan Travanti

Q. I think Dan Travanti is tremendously sexy. Is he going to be in anything besides "Hill Street Blues"?

L. Reise
Henderson, Nev.

A. Sexy is the key word here. He just finished a TV movie in Italy called "Aurora" with Sophia Loren co-starring as a female con artist. It's due to air on NBC sometime next season.

Anything you'd like to know about prominent personalities? Write Josie: SUNDAY WOMAN magazine, 235th E. 45th St., New York, N.Y., 10017. Sorry we can't answer any letters individually.

Q. I really liked Rick Springfield in "Hard to Hold." Is he going to do any more movies and does he have a girlfriend.

Christy
Modesto, Calif.

A. Despite the critical response to "Hard to Hold," yes, he is planning to do more movies. He just hasn't figured out which ones yet. In the meantime, he's going out on a four-month world concert tour that includes this country and kicks off next month. And yes again, he does have a girlfriend, despite his moans that only his dogs keep him company. She's not in show business and he doesn't like to reveal her identity.

Rick Springfield

Q. Could you please give me some information on Martha Quinn from Music Television?

T.P.
Austin, Minn.

A. Martha is 23, a graduate in broadcast journalism from N.Y.U. who has also acted in TV commercials for McDonald's and Hallmark Cards.

She grew up in Ossining, N.Y., with her mother, Nina, now a retirement counselor in Boston. She's also very close to her father (a lawyer) and stepmother, financial columnist Jane Bryant Quinn.

It was her stepmother, in fact, who advised her how to invest her five-figure salary from MTV: Open a money market fund and buy a co-op. So she owns an $85,000 one-bedroom apartment in New York's Greenwich Villiage. Not bad for a recent college grad.

Q. Anita Ekberg is one of my favorite stars. Whatever happened to her? Is she still acting?

Paul M.
Waterbury, Conn.

A. She's been living in Europe in recent years, Rome of late. While she's expressed interest in making a film comeback, nothing seems to have materialized as yet. Her most recent professional venture was running a car-rental firm.

Q. I'd like to know more about Tom Cruise

Michaela Cycholl
Flora, Ill.

A. He's 27, born in Syracuse and raised in Canada, Cincinnati, St. Louis, Kentucky and New Jersey (his father was an electrical engineer who moved around a lot). He started acting in high school when a leg injury forced him off the wrestling team and has had a fairly easy ascent in the field.

A small role in "Endless Love" led to bigger roles in "Taps" and "The Outsiders" and then the starring role in "Risky Business" which, he says, he was surprised to get.

"I auditioned while I was filming 'The Outsiders,' " he explains. "And I told them that I couldn't change my appearance because I had to work before the cameras that night. I was all greasy and had a chipped tooth and tattoo and an Okie drawl...and they cast me for this clean-cut kid!"

Tom Cruise

The movie led to a romance with co-star Rebecca de Mornay as well as another starring role in "All the Right Moves."

Q. I enjoyed Stephen Bauer in the movie "Scarface." Can you tell me about him, whether he's married, etc.

Krissy White
Melbourne, Fla.

A. The 27-year-old whose real name is Rocky Eschevarrio (he, ironically, took his mother's maiden name professionally to "avoid being typecast as a Latino," as he explains) was born in Havana and raised in Miami, "part of the first wave that left after Castro," he says.

As a teen-ager, he made his professional debut in "Que Pasa U.S.A.," a Miami-based bilingual comedy series on PBS, and, urged on by a professor at the University of Miami, decided to move to Hollywood and try to break into TV. He did, but after three years, feeling stuck, he and his wife, actress Melanie Griffiths, moved to New York to try to get work in the theater.

He didn't and was feeling pretty low when in the summer of 1982, he was sent to the casting director of "Scarface." He borrowed his father's accent, as he explains it, and got the part. Next up, a change of pace: a romantic drama, "Thief of Hearts," due out in October.

Red Skelton

Q. I love Red Skelton. Can you tell me what he's been doing lately?

S.S.
Scranton, Pa.

A. He recently did a Command Performance before England's royal family that was broadcast on HBO in March. The comedian — who was 71 on July 18 — is booked completely through 1984 and into 1985, to do his two-hour one-man show around the U.S.

"When he's home in Palm Springs, he paints," explains a friend. "He has galleries calling from all over asking for paintings, in fact, but he's away so much on the road that he doesn't have time to do very much. Actually, I think he's busier now than he's ever been. It's hard to keep up..."

STAMBERG

What distinguishes "ATC," says Ms. Stamberg, is its dedication to what she calls "human news," an umbrella description for the wide range of quirky angles behind the event.

For example, she loves one of the stories she filed during the Democratic convention in New York several years ago. Wondering how the influx of Dems was affecting Big Apple dwellers, she called up a friend who lived in Manhattan and had "Debbie" relate stories of conventioneers wandering befuddled by the city's maze of subways.

Last year, she and co-host Noah Unger didn't want to do yet another standard "here's summer" piece. So the two of them, tape recorder in hand, simply want out to a city park bench and filed their brown-bag conversation as a report.

"Listeners loved it," she boasts now. "It didn't have any news, but it had a lovely atmosphere." She quickly adds that with the 90-minute format, she's able to cover a wider spectrum of journalistic styles, and that serious stories are treated seriously.

In her time, she has interviewed presidents, ambassadors and Congressional figures. Unlike most headline-hungry journalists, though, she's not wild about the political arena, has never even been to a convention and prefers to report on the way Capitol Hill decisions affect people more than on how they get made.

"ATC" IS characterized by the unexpected, the personal — and Ms. Stamberg says she gladly pushes the leeway to its limits. "I try not to abuse it," she says of her unconventional flourishes.

She's not above scheduling her husband or son on the show for interviews, for example. The reading of her mother-in-law's cranberry relish recipe has become a tradition-laden annual event.

"I don't do it every day, but those sort of touches are not anonymous, which goes with the philosophy of the show. It's what makes us different. Everybody's got a mother-in-law, but Walter Cronkite wouldn't talk to his on the air."

Part of Ms. Stamberg's appeal is her willingness simply to be feminine, to allow her womanly instincts and style to come through. This, she says, separates her from many of the contemporaries and sharply distinguishes her from her predecessors, the first generation of women broadcast journalists.

"The pioneers to whom we owe so much, the problem with them is they came off like little men. Nancy Dickerson, in the early days, she just had to imitate men. I got a lot of reinforcement here for not going that route, the deep-voiced projection.

"The 90 minutes allows me to be serious, but also to be silly, or do a playful essay." Her confidence and cool come with experience, though. While researching her book, "Every Night at Five," a recollection of her years on the show, she went to the Library of Congress and listened to tapes from the earliest broadcasts.

"IT TOOK confidence to trust in your natural instincts, to say, 'I don't understand that' when you were talking to some experts. Now, I'm all for the 'If I don't understand it, nobody does' school."

Ms. Stamberg's unconventional journalistic style grows out of the unusual avenue she traveled to achieve her current position. A Barnard College graduate, the English major came to Washington from her native New York to work on the American University radio station — as a manager, never dreaming of on-air work.

When her husband — a diplomatic service attache — was transferred to India for two years, it looked like the move would terminate her radio career. "I can remember standing there at the ironing board a month before we were supposed to go wondering what we were doing. I'm scared."

Now she refers to spending those years in the subcontinent as one of the most important things she and her husband ever did.

Returning to the States, and soon thereafter becoming pregnant, she thought she would devote full time to housekeeping. "I was married in 1962, the pre-liberation days, and all my expectations were to create a family, not a career."

Eventually, though, she grew hungry for the daily crises she knew from broadcasting. "It was very isolating for me. I was 30 or 32, and most of the women I knew had had their kids already. I realized there were days when the only adult voice I heard was the cashier at the drugstore."

WHAT ALSO bothered her was the way people reacted to her maternal role. "Two months before Joshua was born, I would go to a party and tell people I was on this radio program and they would say, 'Oh, tell me about that.' Two months after he was born, I would go to a party and say 'I'm a mother,' and their eyes would glaze over."

Joing NPR as a tape editor when both the network and her baby were infants, she now recalls how strange the workplace was for mothers a mere decade ago. "I was afraid if I made too big a deal about being a mother they wouldn't take me seriously, I was afraid I'd always be perceived as 'mom.' Period."

They soon learned to take her very seriously, not because she elbowed her way to the top, but because she was candid and fresh. "There were a lot more professional journalists than me, but they came from print or TV. It turned out that I had the most radio experience of anyone on the staff."

As the single on-air personality who's remained with the show all of its 13 years, she now enjoys the sort of clout and respect in the newsroom that many anchors don't.

Yet, regardless of the prestige attached to being the premiere woman journalist of the airwaves, Ms. Stamberg simply doesn't bear the high profile of her television counterparts. She's noticed by strangers, for example, only when she opens her mouth, not by her looks.

"I don't care much about profile. I care more about the work that can be done. I don't see anything else anywhere that would let me do what I do here. I don't see anyplace else, that has the same starting point we do which is excellence."

SHE LAUGHS, calling this her "All Things Considered" sermonette, but it's a rallying cry that expresses her devotion to the show.

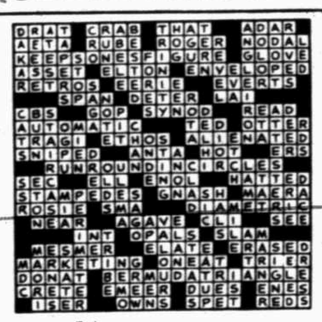

"We're not on the air to sell toilet-bowl cleaners or diet soda. There are no other agendas we have to meet here except giving the news in the best possible way. Honestly, the limelight is not that important to me."

Still, she has agreed after some coaxing to host a PBS television series, the pilot for which has been taped with a possible January air date.

The show, a roundtable discussion of the popular arts called "Back of the Book," is as much of a lark as anything else. "TV is never as fascinating as radio," she says. "It's not as flexible since it's so reliant on the visual. I think I'll always stick with radio since to me it's the medium of ideas."

Like anyone who has done a job for 13 years, Ms. Stamberg says she is hardpressed occasionally to find new ways to keep from falling into ruts.

'Mass Appeal' opens Friday

Bill Davis' "Mass Appeal" opens Friday in Theatre Two at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave.

"Mass Appeal" focuses on the relationship between a young fervent seminarian and a popular parish priest. The play deals with friendship, the generation gap, idealism verses pragmatism and love.

MCT's production features Jess Kozman in the roles of Father Tim Farley and Matt Mabe as the young seminarian, Mark Dolson. Kozman has been seen on MCT's stage in "Rue de L'Amour," "The Taming of the Shrew," "Tribute" and "Who's Happy Now?"

A recent graduate of Lee High School where he won best actor awards for his performance of the title role in "Caligula," Mabe is making his MCT debut.

The production is being directed by Ted Strickland, MCT's assistant director. Set design is by Brett Batterson.

Other staff members include Marge Henry, stage manager; Mike Jordan, assistant stage manager; Ann Seyler and Doug Seyler, set construction; Louise Evans, chairman of the paint crew; Billie Sartain, supervising costumes; Jan Mann, gathering props; Jim Bartlett, running props for the show; Andy Salcedo, lights; Jim Beverley, sound; and Marilyn Allen and Edwin Gibbs, publicity.

The production is scheduled for nine performances, closing Aug. 18. For reservations call the theater's box office, 682-4111.

Hall of fame nominations sought

The deadline for submitting names for election to the Petroleum Hall of Fame is fast approaching. Wednesday is the last day nominations will be accepted.

Persons wanting to propose names for election need to request guidelines from the museum, 1500 Interstate 20 West, or call 683-4403. Biographical information, newspaper clippings and other necessary information must also be submitted by the deadline date.

"Qualified candidates should have made outstanding contributions to the petroleum industry or have served as an inspirational example to those in the industry," said K.M. Jastrow, Hall of Fame committee chairman.

Hall of Fame by-laws limit the number of electees to no more than four in any given year. Elections are held every two years with enshrinement usually scheduled for the spring of odd-numbered years. It is expected that about 30 candidates will be considered once nominations close.

REVIEWS

'Best Defense' seems difficult to defend

By DAVID LEE FORREST

David Forrest

It's hard to defend the way "Best Defense" has been promoted.

Much of the film's promotion — including the preview clips — prominently feature the faces and names of star Dudley Moore and "Strategic Guest Star" Eddie Murphy.

One could easily get the impression that the movie teams up these two very talented comedians.

Unfortunately, Eddie Murphy, who is currently riding a wave of tremendous popularity, actually has only a minor supporting role.

He is featured in a small subplot as a soldier field-testing a new supertank for the U.S Army in the Arab nation of Kuwait and then stumbles into a war.

The main story line focuses on Dudley Moore, the engineer who designed an important — and critically flawed — part in the tank.

This plot takes place entirely in California two years before Eddie Murphy's subplot, with the result that the film keeps disjointedly cutting back and forth between 1982 California and 1984 Kuwait.

Moore and Murphy never meet and are never even aware of each other's existence.

Willard Huyck, who directed the film and co-wrote the screenplay, undoubtedly set up this situation to build suspense: Will the work Moore put in on the tank's guidance system pay off and save Murphy?

Huyck's gamble doesn't entirely fail in this respect; some suspense has built by the movie's end.

However, by the time the action has progressed far enough for the dual storylines to start meshing fairly well, it's hard to care very much.

The movie features a shrill tone, ham-fisted attempts at political satire, crude sexism and harsh characterizations.

Moore's character, a lazy engineer burned-out from losing 12 jobs in 10 years, is by far the least appealing role he's had on film. Murphy's less-than-heroic tank commander is grossly overacted.

In the end, "Best Defense" is more tiring than entertaining and more calumny than comedy.

"Best Defense," rated R, is now showing at UA Cine IV.

Britain: It's no longer 'land without music'

By JOHN ROCKWELL
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — For over a century, the English had to suffer the scorn of the Continent, musically speaking. "Das Land ohne Musik," the Germans sneered — "the country without music." But all that has changed in the past 50 years. British composers easily hold their own, internationally. British orchestras, conductors and singers proliferate on the world's stages. And now, if such proof were needed, we realize that English opera, too, need fear invidious comparisons with no one.

We realize that because in the last few weeks, both of London's major opera companies have performed in America for the very first time. The English National Opera (which counts as the rough equivalent in London to the New York City Opera here) played in Texas and New Orleans before settling in for 10 days at the Metropolitan Opera House. And the Royal Opera, Covent Garden (the big international house in London, comparable to the Met) has just finished an 11-performance run in Los Angeles, as part of the Olympic Arts Festival.

In retrospect, what seems almost as interesting as both companies' actual artistry is what they tell us about American opera, and the two New York companies in particular. In some areas, New York can easily withstand the competition. With casting, for instance, the young American singers at the City Opera seem easily the equals, if not the superiors, of their counterparts on display with the ENO. And the Met does even better than Covent Garden at attracting the top-level international superstars.

But in other respects, above all the willingness to champion national composers and to entertain new staging ideas, the English visits provided an enlightening, somewhat sobering standard for evaluation. Both London companies' devotion to Benjamin Britten this year in America (and other composers at home) is not paralleled by a similar advocacy of American composers by the New York companies. And while Britain is hardly at the cutting edge of production stylishness, the best stagings of both companies during these tours served to remind us how unsure the New York opera houses seem just now in this regard.

Tour performances cannot, of course, give a comprehensive picture of any company's artistic vitality: repertory, productions and casting are all carefully chosen to present a positive impression. One would never know, for instance, that the Royal Opera has encountered uncharacteristic critical carping at home for the past couple of seasons, or that other British companies at the same level as the ENO, above all the Welsh National Opera, have challenged the English company for boldness (flashy new productions) and musical standards (Reginald Goodall conducting the Welsh, not the English).

Still, the productions here showed both London companies in a most favorable light. In the English National Opera tour repertory, Jonathan Miller's Mafioso production of "Rigoletto" wasn't quite so rapturously welcomed by New Yorkers as it was at home, and the ENO version of Prokofiev's "War and Peace" had to contend with comparisons with the lavish Bolshoi Opera performances seen here in 1975. But both were still admired, in some quarters at least, and so was "Patience," even in a house ludicrously larger than what Gilbert and Sullivan should be seen in. Both operas of Britten were greeted in tones that ranged from respect to enthusiasm: "Gloriana," for its rarity and the crustiness of Britten's and Sarah Walker's portrayal of Elizabeth I, and "The Turn of the Screw," seen only in San Antonio, for the brilliance of Miller's staging and an impeccable performance.

The Royal Opera was even more warmly reviewed. Placido Domingo aside, the cast for the new production of "Turandot" (so new that London won't see it until September) was nothing special, nor was Colin Davis's gentlemanly conducting. But Andrei Serban's stage direction, abetted by Sally Jacobs's fanciful sets and costumes, made a thrilling spectacle. Jon Vickers and Davis combined for a searing "Peter Grimes," in Elijah Moshinsky's powerfully austere 1975 production. And Davis, a nicely consistent cast and a gorgeous August Everding-Jurgen Rose production made Mozart's "Zauberflote" as magical as it should be.

When comparing the London and New York companies, it should be remembered that both the Met and the City Opera have close ties to Britain. John Dexter was at the Met, overseeing productions, and Joan Ingpen is casting director, still. The result has been a steady influx of British singers, conductors, directors and designers to the Met.

GOREN BRIDGE

DEAR READERS: We have had many requests over the years for those hands that we consider to be our favorites. That makes quite a list. For the time being, therefore, we are devoting the Sunday column to a series of famous hands. At the end of the series, we will go back to our weekly question and answer column.

Opening lead: Queen of ◇.

They were almost identical twins, the King of Spades and the King of Clubs. About the only way you could tell them apart was that the King of Clubs had a slightly large head. They held their audience in rapt attention as they told of their exploits.

"It is our royal perogative to take hostages. There are few in the land as powerful as we. But we well remember the day when an ambitious warlord sacrificed us both for his personal glory!

"Now it is not unusual for royalty to lose their heads— we still shudder when we think what happened to your family during the French Revolution. But for it to happen to both of us in one hand is a cruel fate.

"The enemy had reached three no trump and our warlord threw a distant counsin into the fray— the Queen of Diamonds. The robber baron sitting South shrewdly played the seven in an attempt to coax our general to continue the suit, but he was far too sly to fall into that trap. Realizing the table's spade suit posed a threat, the King of Clubs was thrown to the wolves at trick two!

"Since South would have gained nothing by ducking, he won the ace, crossed to his hand with the queen of clubs and led the eight of spades. Not satisfied with the cruelty he had wrought thus far, our warlord now put the King of Spades on the executioner's block. Now there was no way that declarer could use the spade suit. Had he been able to see all the cards, South might have survived. Being a mere mortal, he ended up down one.

"We have taken part in many battles before and since. But never in our memory have we come across someone who paid so little heed to our royal function. It is an indignity we will never live down."

Songs to precede films

LOS ANGELES (AP) — If you missed out on The Police or Duran Duran when they last toured, don't despair. A taste of the concert experience may be as close as your neighborhood film theater.

The Music Theatre Network's Concert Cinema, recently inaugurated at 700 theaters in the United States and Canada, is packaging single-song performances by major pop groups for the big screen to precede feature presentations the way cartoons once did.

Disco, studio compared

NEW YORK (AP) — Dave Stewart, the shaggy-maned partner of pop star Annie Lennox in the Eurythmics, likes to make the club scene in New York and has found striking similarities between one disco and the hit group's sound studio in England.

"Our recording studio is in a church...just like the Limelight," he said, referring to the Manhattan night spot housed in a deconsecrated church.

"But we have the rooms divided up, otherwise there would be all that space," he said.

Consider issues before suing

By ANNE STRASSNER
King Features Syndicate

That man has done you wrong. Granted, he's only your landlord — but you're sure he's been overcharging you on rent or has failed to make repairs promised in your lease.

Or maybe you suspect that the company to which you've been slavishly loyal is paying you less than a male colleague — for the same work. You're mad, bitter, unwilling to stand for it — and in the midst of your revenge fantasies, a little voice whispers, "Maybe I ought to sue."

In our litigation-racked society, the idea is inevitable. Unfortunately, most of us are somewhat hazy about what a lawsuit is, what it entails, and whether or not we could actually win one. Before you heed that nagging voice, consider this counsel from attorneys and litigants who've learned through experience.

The case of negligent landlord

The burglars who lifted Celia's treasured family silver and antique jewelry from her apartment one afternoon didn't need the sophistication of international jewel thieves. In fact, they seemed to have walked in the front door of her building, which left them plenty of time to master the locks on her apartment door.

Celia and her fellow tenants knew that the front door wasn't closing and locking properly and had complained repeatedly, to no avail. Because she saw no signs of forcible entry on the outside doors or windows, Celia decided to sue the landlord.

Two years and one stressful three-day trial later, Celia won $15,000 plus $4,000 in attorneys' fees — on paper, that is. Her landlord is appealing, meaning her award could be snatched away before she's held a single penny of it.

Would she have sued if she'd known then what she does now? Celia isn't sure becauseshe concedes she hadn't made a thoughtful decision but made certain assumptions, many of which proved to be wrong.

She figured that a big landlord would act like a rational business person and thus she expected a reasonable settlement offer and speedy solution. But because the defendant was so obsessed with the possible damage to his reputation, he insisted on letting the case go to trial.

Celia's biggest surprise was the trial itself: "I had never been in a courtroom before, and I didn't know it would be so long and stressful. The cross-examination made me uncomfortable — the landlord's lawyer tried to imply all kinds of things about me, questioning my ownership of the things stolen."

The trial was also rough on the neighbors Celia asked to testify about the unlocked door. She worries about the strain a second trial might inflict on her and her friends.

Open-and-shut case

Jackie could tell anyone about the agony of legal defeat. She seemed to have an unassailable case: She'd learned that her teaching salary was several thousand dollars lower than that of a male colleague, though their jobs were identical.

When she broached the issue with the head of the school, he replied that, yes, the men were better paid, because they were breadwinners. Stunned, she retained a lawyer and sued the school.

Why did she lose? She blames an ineffective and unprepared attorney pitted against a biased judge.

More difficult to accept were the reactions of her co-workers, a number of whom backed Jackie until the proceedings really got underway then, says Jackie, "they didn't want any part of it."

Jackie remained in her job and says that going to the school every day the year before her trial was "horrible, devastating — I had to keep pretending that nothing was wrong and keep trying to be productive." Equally painful was the vicious assault by the defendant, whose trial strategy was to demonstrate that the salary difference was an outgrowth of Jackie's professional incompetence.

Jackie's lawyer had taken the case on a contingent-fee basis, so she had no legal fees to deliver. She was astonished, then, to receive a bill at the end of the trial.

Because gripes are very individual matters, you may need more guidelines about dealing with your problem. Here, then, are the questions to ask before fantasizing about courtroom triumph.

— How have I been hurt? With few exceptions, the only remedy courts can award is money or, less commonly, an injunction — a court order demanding the defendant abandon his evil ways. If your suffering can't be alleviated by either, you may not want to sue.

— What can I get? Don't assume that punitive damages are generally awarded.

— Can the other person pay if I win? Does he or she have insurance? A person who can't pay up if you win an award against him is known in legal circles as being "judgment proof."
ning"?

— Can I afford it? Figure out if you can bear the cost whether or not you win the case. Naturally, this will depend greatly on the fee arrangements you make with your attorney.

— How long will it take? This varies from state to state; some reportedly have backlogs of up to four years.

— Does the person I want to sue have any claims against me? If he has claims that stem from the same circumstances that prompted you to sue, he may be required to make a counterclaim against you. And if you are suing him in federal court or in some state courts, he could counterclaim for anything you owe him — whether or not it has to do with the facts of your case.

It gets worse: A counterclaim can be for a greater amount of money than your own claim. Horrendous but conceivable result: You lose your part of the case, defendant wins on the counterclaim, and you end up owing money.

— Must I maintain a relationship with the defendant while the case is in progress? If the person who's offended you is your landlord, employer, neighbor or relative, and you don't plan to move, quit or adopt a new family, you must weigh the unpleasantness of having an ongoing connection with the person you've hauled into court.

Parent abuse: Hidden violence

By SUSAN CRAIN BAKOS
King Features Syndicate

A man and woman are shouting angrily at each other. He begins clenching and unclenching his fists. Slowly.

Knowing what will follow the threatening gestures, she cringes. Now the muscles in his arms are taut; the fists remain clenched.

She crosses her arms in front of her chest and hunches forward to protect her body from the blows.

A typical scene of domestic violence? Not quite.

The woman, Barbara, 38, is a divorced mother. The "man" is her 6-foot son, Jeremy, age 17.

THREE OUT OF every 100 American children aged 3 to 18 commit severe acts of physical aggression against their parents (according to a three-year study funded by the National Institute of Mental Health). More than 2 million parents will be abused by their offspring this year. The majority of these victimized parents are women, many of them single mothers of teen-age sons.

"Parent abuse is somehow more shocking to us than wife or child abuse," says Midwestern therapist Lester Maday. "When a child slaps a parent, he is reversing the natural order of power, upsetting the authority hierarchy of the family. That is confusing and frightening, so parent abuse has remained America's hidden form of violence."

When stories about abused parents first appeared in the press a few years ago, they concerned elderly and infirm parents who were mistreated by their adult offspring. This kind of violence, while deplorable, at least fits the familiar pattern of domestic violence: The stronger one prevails over the weaker, dependent family member.

When dependent children hit parents who may be bigger and are certainly older and holding the financial trump card, the entire family structure seems to be turned upside down.

How can this happen? How can Barbara, who works in a responsible management position and supports her two children, permit one of them to beat her?

"It happens because you've let too many things go by," Barbara says. "Every time you let them (children) get by with something they shouldn't, you make it that much harder to draw the line the next time. They know this.

"ONE DAY YOU wake up and realize this child — not you — is in charge, because you've let it happen."

When Barbara says she "let too many things go by," she isn't referring to broken rules about cookies before dinner or the relaxation of weekend curfews by 30 minutes.

She is recalling the serious acts of violence Jeremy began committing at an early age: a lamp hurled through the living room window at age 6, countless dishes, vases and perfume bottles smashed in anger, his sister's Easter dress slashed with a razor blade because Barbara had grounded him for coming home drunk at age 13.

Barbara and Jeremy's father were divorced when Jeremy was 10. The trouble didn't begin then. It only escalated.

"I never could handle him," she says. "He's not like his sister, who was always an agreeable, affectionate child. I wanted Bruce to take custody of Jeremy when we got divorced, but he was getting married again. His fiancee said no.

BARBARA SAYS when she talks about her problems with Jeremy — something she's only been able to do in the last few months since they began seeing a family counselor — she makes people uncomfortable.

Maday says, "The problem of parent abuse is compounded by this widespread silence surrounding it. I recently attended a regional convention of family therapists. Many of us who have these cases in our practices have been reluctant to talk about them with other therapists.

But Barbara says, "I don't know if I would call what I feel 'guilt.' It's more like shame. I'm very ashamed of my inability to control my own life."

"GUILT IS THE worst part of it for me," says William, 41, whose 16-year-old son, Damien, is an abusive child.

William's job as a vice president in charge of sales for a large company requires frequent travel. The incidents of violence always occur when he is out of town.

"Returning home is seldom pleasant," he says. "I know I'm going to find my family in chaos. Before I unpack, I'll have Damien on the carpet. I've grounded him, taken away his driving privileges and his allowance. Once I even hit him. He just stood there and took it.

"My wife and I both feel guilty because we can't control Damien, because he's hurt us and our younger boys and there's nothing we can do to make this cycle stop. For a while we blamed each other and our marriage suffered.

ONE THING THEY usually have in common is the breakdown of parental authority in the home. At some point, the control began to shift from parent to child, and the shift went unrecognized until the child was more or less in charge.

Barbara believes she "never really had control of Jeremy.

"As long as he still needed me to provide basic care for him, while he was still young enough to be frightened of the world outside, we maintained a balance. Now he feels he doesn't need me for anything — except money, of course. The balance has tipped."

William says he is the authority in his family. The power shifts to Damien whenever he leaves.

"My wife has a lot of health problems. She is a fragile, very gentle person. Damien totally overwhelms her. She doesn't really exert a lot of control over the other boys either, but they're more fond of her than he is, so she gets them to behave on the basis of love."

DAMIEN'S FAMILY history is not marked by violence; neither is Jeremy's.

The products of typical middle-class backgrounds, both are described by their parents as children who've received a great deal of love, including physical stroking, kissing and cuddling as infants. Neither boy has ever seen his father hit his mother.

Some professionals do believe there frequently is a direct correlation between a violent family history and an abusive child.

Yvette, age 14, does fit this pattern and the easily imagined stereotype of a troubled child. Yvette's parents divorced three years ago. The marriage was an abusive one.

"I remember seeing Daddy hit Mama," she says. "Sometimes when he was passed out drunk she would hit him back and tell him the next morning he'd got into a bar fight."

After the divorce, Yvette's mother began hitting her.

"WE WERE POOR," Yvette remembers. "Really poor. Daddy always made a lot of money, but Mama couldn't find a job. She would go out looking for work and come home and smack me if I opened my mouth."

Yvonne, who hit back, says, "We began having shouting matches, sometimes punctuated by hitting, just like I'd had with my ex-husband. All along I'd thought it was his fault our marriage was like it was. Then I turned Yvette into my fighting partner. Now I believe it was me all along. There is something wrong with me."

Like other parents in this position, Yvonne lied about the black eyes and bruises to family and friends. A regular churchgoer, she didn't confide in her pastor until her son told him, "Mommy didn't fall; Yvette hit her."

THE STUNNED pastor arranged for professional counseling for Yvonne and Yvette. He also attended some of the sessions to learn how he might help others facing the same situation.

Professionals agree that abused parents wait too long to seek help. Perhaps the most poignant testimony of this comes from Jeremy.

He says, "When Mom finally said we were going to a counselor, I felt relieved. I wish she'd done something sooner. I've been hating myself, and her, for so long."

Jeremy's sense of relief diminished somewhat when he learned the counselor couldn't give them a quick set of instructions which would change Jeremy's behavior overnight.

"JEREMY DOESN'T like a lot of the new rules the counselor has helped us set up, and he often still rebels against them. The important thing to me is that he wants to keep seeing the counselor."

William also reports family therapy "slow going."

"We've spent a bundle already," he says. "And I don't see a lot of change, but there is some. This ray of hope is what keeps us going."

Yvonne and Yvette feel counseling has taken them farther than these two other families report.

"Maybe it's because we started sooner," Yvonne says. "We've also joined a support group for families with this same problem. Yvette has heard some of the parents talk about sending their kids away to relatives or foster care. It's really sobered her up."

Some people are horoscope scanners

By DOREEN T. HANSBURY
King Features Syndicate

I confess, I'm a horoscope scanner. Not reader, mind you — how could anyone take that mumbo-jumbo seriously? Yet, I find it hard not to peek at what the stars have to say about my day.

I search out key words, looking for optimistic ones like "success," "lucky opportunity" and "pleasant vacation." Finding any of these, I read on, anticipating the happy events the next day has in store.

On the other hand, if words like "watch health," "unexpected hazards" or "keep calm in crises" predominate, I snap the paper shut, deciding the stars in the heavens have better things to do than worry about my next 24 hours.

Trying to foresee future trends isn't a new activity. Humans have been doing it for centuries. Around 1400 B.C. Greeks climbed Mount Parnassus to get the latest on futures from the oracle at the Delphic Temple.

Kings brought questions on the chances of their administrations having to face famine, war or the necessity of tax increase. But the oracle's pronouncements were not always clear, and consultants were known to walk away muttering. Something like users of the Gallup Poll today.

Writings of the French astrologer Nostradamus, who lived from 1503 to 1566, still are consulted, and some insist many of his predictions for this century have come true. But, true to form, Nostradamus' predictions leave much to interpretation. Prophets seem to have this trait in common.

Different seers use different tools to foretell events. Astrologists map the stars and planets; others use crystal balls, cards or the crazy-quilt pattern of lines on the palm. One prophet, Edgar Cayce, slept right through his own best predictions!

It's easy to be fascinated by the possibility of moving aside the curtain that hides tomorrow, and planning our lives accordingly. After all, what else is Wall Street for?

When today looks a little chancy, the predictors' popularity climbs. They come in many guises. The stock market has analysts, politicians have pollsters and, for those who really plan their every decision according to the stars, computers now give read-outs of star scopes.

For some who are mathematically inclined, charting bio-rhythms has become a favorite pastime. This is a semi-scientific way of predicting your mental, emotional and physical condition as you greet the next sunrise.

Working income tax on my pocket calculator left it flashing bright little red figures across the display. But one attempt at the math involved in charting bio-rhythms altered the figures from red — to a pale panting pink.

Lately, the likes of Jeanne Dixon have had to give way to another breed of omen readers — the futurists. Futurists are oracles with a Ph.D. Instead of consulting cards, crystal balls and chicken bones, they produce predictions about the growth of technology, population trends and environmental development.

With all these in mind, they give us their lowdown on the state of our society for the next 100 years or so. If Chrysler Motors had consulted a futurist, it might have tooled up for one-passenger electric cars instead of adding fins to Plymouths in the 1950s.

An incident last week jolted whatever faith I had in horoscopes. Bundling the week's papers for the trash, I glanced at my horoscope for Saturday and found a collection of optimistic words. This was just before the papers slipped out of the string and spewed all over the floor. Never mind, I had Saturday to look forward to.

Sure enough. It dawned sunny and clear. "Creative success," the horoscope had said. Right on.

I baked a three-layer cake and every layer slipped from the pan without cracking.

"Personal fulfillment," it had predicted. How true that was. I played my collection of Glenn Miller records, and despite dusty grooves. "PE-6-5000" sounded as good as ever.

"Excitement surrounds you," the horoscope had foretold. Well, that happened, too. Everyone arrived home at once to tell me they had to have lunch right away, but, "Don't worry, Mom," they chorused, "we'll make our own." And the mayonnaise jar never hit the floor.

"People recognize your potential," was another forecast. Sure enough, Girl Scouts called to ask if I'd head the mother/daughter dinner.

By Saturday night I was so depressed with the uncanny accuracy of the horoscope I couldn't help but search out the old newspaper to recheck it. I discovered the horoscope I had been counting on actually was for Friday, the 4th — not Saturday, the 5th. And Friday had been a rotten day.

Farewell to horoscopes, economic advisories and the chanciest predictors of all — the weather forecasters.

Soda alternatives palate pleasers

By PHILOMENA CORRADENO
King Features Syndicate

It seems an astounding number, but according to recent figures, the average American consumed 38.5 gallons of carbonated soft drinks in 1983. We are a thirsty lot.

Here is a great collection of concoctions — alternatives to soda — some simple fun drinks, some creamy, some bubbly, some packed with health-boosting ingredients, some spirited — all palate pleasing.

Bananas, oranges, seasonal fresh, delightful strawberries and exotic papaya make other drinks that even the breakfast dodger will love. They're appetite appeasing, too, and need not be confined to morning enjoyment.

Summer Tea Breeze

BREAKFAST COCKTAIL
1½ cups carrot juice, chilled
1½ cups orange juice, chilled
Mix juices and garnish with orange slices. Serves two.

FRUIT DELIGHT
1 navel orange, peeled, cut in chunks
1 medium banana, peeled, cut in chunks
1 cup crushed ice
1 6-ounce can unsweetened pineapple juice
1 tablespoon honey
In blender combine all ingredients; blend until smooth. Makes about 2½ cups.

THE 3-B SHAKE
1 large, ripe banana
1 cup fresh strawberries, hulled

1 egg
2 teaspoons honey
¼ teaspoon cinnamon
Place all ingredients in electric blender; process until smooth. Serves two.

No treasury of summer drinks would be complete without iced tea and coffee. These are unusual but easy variations.

The trick in brewing tea to be iced is to use 50 perent more tea than you would for hot tea. When ice is added your brew will not be a weak, flavorless concoction. When tea kept in the refrigerator becomes cloudy, add a little boiling water to restore clarity.

SUMMER TEA BREEZE
6 cinnamon teabags
4 cups boiling water
4 cups unsweetened apple juice
2 (12-ounce) cans sugar-free lemon-lime soda
Place cinnamon teabags in warmed teapot. Add boiling water. Cover; steep 7 minutes. Discard teabags. Stir; let cool. Pour into 3-quart pitcher. At serving time, add chilled apple juice and soda. Stir. Pour into ice-filled glasses. Garnish with strawberry slices. Makes 6 servings.

ORANGE FRAPPE
7 orange-and-spice flavored teabags
3 cups boiling water
2 cups tonic water, chilled
1 quart orange sherbet
1 (16-ounce) can mandarin oranges, drained
Seedless grapes
Place teabags in warmed teapot; add boiling water. Cover; steep for 7 minutes. Discard teabags. Stir; let cool. Pour into 3-quart pitcher. Add chilled tonic water. Add sherbet and break into chunks with a spoon. Add oranges. Distribute evenly among 6 glasses. Serve immediately.
To garnish, skewer small bunches of seedless grapes. Place on top of glasses.

PEACHY COFFEE SHAKE
1 (16-ounce) can peach slices, undrained
1 cup cold milk
1 tablespoon freeze-dried coffee granules
1 tablespoon sugar
1 cup vanilla ice cream
In blender combine peaches, milk, coffee and sugar. Cover. Process at high speed until smooth. Add ice cream and process at high speed until creamy. Serve immediately. Serves 4-6.

MOCHA CHERRY COOLER
1 tablespoon Swiss-style instant coffee beverage
⅔ cup cold milk
⅔ cup vanilla ice cream
2 tablespoons cherry-flavored brandy
Combine all ingredients in blender; blend until smooth. Pour into tall glass and top with whipped topping and maraschino cherry, if desired. Serves one.

When the spirits move you, consider these cooling variations on Bloody Marys and daiquiris. Spiced Tea Sangria and Cranberry Sangria are great with Mexican snacks or meals. Their tangy touch makes them less cloying than the usual sangria.

SAUCY MARY
1 (24-ounce) can tomato juice, chilled
1 (10½-ounce) can condensed beef broth, chilled
1 cup vodka, optional
2 tablespoons lemon juice
⅛ teaspoon hot pepper sauce
2 teaspoons Worcestershire sauce
In pitcher, combine ingredients. Serve in glasses over cracked ice.
Makes 5¼ cups with vodka; without vodka, 4¼ cups.

PEAR DAIQUIRI
1 cup Frozen Puree (recipe follows)
2 ounces light rum
1 tablespoon fresh lime juice
½ cup finely crushed ice
Mint sprigs
Combine all ingredients except mint in blender or cocktail shaker. Blend or shake thoroughly until well blended. Pour into 2 chilled, 4-ounce, stemmed glasses. Garnish with mint sprigs.
Frozen Puree: Puree 1 can (16-ounce) pear slices or halves, including liquid, in blender or food processor. Freeze until firm. Makes about 1¾ cups.

PAPAYA DAIQUIRI
2 cups crushed ice
4 to 6 ounces light rum
3 ounces lime juice
2 tablespoons sugar
1 papaya, peeled, seeded and cubed
6 lime slices
In blender, blend all ingredients except lime slices until smooth. Pour into chilled glasses. Garnish each with lime slices. Serves 6.

'Lincoln' lacks drama

"Lincoln: A Novel," by Gore Vidal, Random House, 657 pp., $19.95.

A Review

By DAN CRYER
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

"Lincoln" is Gore Vidal with white shirt and tie, shoes shined, cheeks scrubbed, thinking positive thoughts. No longer making faces outside the window, the bad boy of American letters has joined the party.

Forget the wicked humor, the barbed wit of novels such as "Burr" (1973) or "Duluth" (1983). Forget the sneering at boobus Americanus, philistine and prude. Forget the indictment of politicians as though politics were just another name for graft.

This new Vidal is a patriot of sorts, a worshipper at the shrine of the president who suspended civil liberties and waffled on freedom for the slaves. If Lincoln's paramount goal was the preservation of the Union, Vidal's seems to be the preservation of Lincoln from his detractors.

The Lincoln that emerges from this sprawling historical epic is principled but not foolishly idealistic, ambitious but not vain, at once melancholy and humorous. He is a consummate politician — for Vidal, an epithet no more — who targets his cunning at lesser beings who cannot fathom the larger good.

Now, there is nothing wrong with all this. But the view is hardly startling. It is by now the orthodox judgment on our 16th president (see, for instance, Stephen B. Oates' fine biography "With Malice Toward None"). True, there are naysayers aplenty, from blacks who decline to bow down before Father Abraham to Marxists who analyze the man through class-tinted glasses. But the mainstream is firmly in the Lincoln camp.

What's wanted, then, if not historical verisimilitude — flawless in this case, according to Civil War scholar David Donald — is a fresh angle of vision. And here the author's customary satirical touch might have helped. But "Lincoln" is utterly lacking in mischief. Nor has Vidal been able to inject much drama into a story whose conclusion is all too well known.

The author frames his story between assassination threats and assassination. As the novel begins in February 1861, the newly elected president, in disguise, sneaks into a Washington rife with rumors of death threats and secession. We are given closeups not only of the president and his imperious, extravagant-spending first lady but also of young presidential secretary John Hay, pivotal Cabinet members — Secretary of State William Henry Seward and Treasury Secretary Salmon Chase (and his pretty daughter Kate) — and druggist's clerk David Herold, a minor member of the Booth conspiracy. The book closes shortly after Lincoln has been killed.

Without the irreverent participant-narrators of "Burr" and "1876," this novel surrenders to awe in the presence of greatness. The theme is set early on when a congressman warns Seward that the president is "a very complicated secretive sort of man. Don't underestimate him." Both Seward and Chase do, and pay the price. Both would like to replace a president they consider too small for the job, Chase because Lincoln is too soft on secessionists, Seward because he is too hard on them.

The president's genius, Seward realizes too late, has been to transform himself into an "absolute dictator without ever letting anyone suspect that he was anything more than a joking, timid backwoods lawyer, given to fits of humility in the presence of all the strutting military and political peacocks that flocked about him." By the time Seward grasps this truth, he's been shorn of his power and Chase has been ousted from the Cabinet.

Vidal offers convincing portraits of many of those peacocks: notably, Seward the witty New York sophisticate, Chase the hymn-singing Ohioan who leaves the dollar bill (on which his picture is engraved) as his calling card, and Gen. George McClellan, the brilliant student of warfare ever reluctant to do battle. Mary Todd Lincoln spends beyond her means and descends into something akin to madness. John Wilkes Booth struts across the historical stage as though his every move were on the boards at Ford's Theatre (and confides to young David Herold his murderous plot rather too casually for credibility).

We are made to sense the president's improvisation in the face of unprecedented challenges; his frustration with inept generals; the sniping from abolitionists and Democratic doves alike, not to mention from within his own Cabinet.

This vast historical drama unfolds, unfortunately, with a stateliness approaching tediousness. At book's end, when John Hay remarks that Lincoln "astonished us all," it's hard to disagree. If only Vidal had astonished us, too.

'Gashouse Gang's' year chronicled

"The Dizziest Season, The Gashouse Gang Chases the Pennant," by G.H. Fleming; Morrow; 320 pages; $15.95.

A Review

By DON FREEMAN
Copley Service

What a splendid idea! G.H. Fleming, a professor of English at Louisiana State University, has previously re-created the 1908 baseball year in "The Unforgettable Season." Now he has set his gaze on 1934 when the St. Louis Cardinals romped their way to the pennant and a World Series triumph over the Detroit Tigers, and a secure niche in baseball legend.

Led by manager Frankie Frisch, the frolicsome Cards were celebrated as the "Gashouse Gang." And what a grand collection of fun-loving free spirits they were — Jay Hanna "Dizzy" Dean and Leo "The Lip" Durocher and Joe "Ducky" Medwick and Johnny "Pepper" Martin, hailed as "The Wild Horse of the Osage."

It was the year that Bill Terry, peerless leader of the New York Giants, haughtily inquired: "Is Brooklyn still in the league?" He paid dearly for that crack as Casey Stengel's Dodgers subsequently knocked his Giants out of the race.

It was the year that the All-Star game, first played in 1933, became an annual fixture and Sunday baseball was rendered legal in Pennsylvania.

It was the year that Dizzy Dean signed for a paltry $7,500 and won 29 games!

Ingeniously, with an obvious affection for his task, Professor Fleming summons up the excitement of this phenomenal year simply by reprinting, in a day-by-day sequence, accounts from the sports pages of the time (adding an occasional comment in parenthesis). The giants of the sportswriting craft are strongly represented here — Grantland Rice, Damon Runyon, Paul Gallico, John Lardner, Westbrook Pegler, all of them stylists and a joy to read. Fleming's editing is masterly, the pace and continuity magically seamless.

With its color, its drama and its human foibles, an era is brought back to life, a moment in history caught on the wing. To borrow Walter Cronkite's catch phrase from a bygone television show, it is 1934 and you are there.

It is only yesterday and it is a lovely place to visit.

Darla Adcock Nelson, manager of Adcock's Ideal Drapery Service, and Elaine Ellis are proud of how accurately their Perfectpleat machine steams in and drys pleats.

Adcock's meets city's need for drapery service

Adcocks's Ideal Drapery Service - sound familiar, yet different? That's because the Adcock name has been a synonym for quality in dry cleaning since 1952, but up until June, 1984 the store name was more of a mouthful-Adcock's Ideal Cleaners and Drapery Service. Recently, the Adcock family made a change to meet a great need in Midland, a need for a dry cleaners that was commited exclusively to draperies and specialty items.

Adcock's has always specialized in draperies, but now they can offer you even better service. In many places clothing takes priority over drapes. That may be understandable, but it is still frustrating to have the living room open to the world for days while waiting on the drapes to be cleaned. Adcock's has changed that. Generally, household draperies can be in and out within three days.

In addition, Darla Adcock Nelson, the manager, will be glad to come take your dusty drapes down for you and to provide a temporary cover for your windows. As she takes the drapes down she is careful to label them to assure that every panel gets back to its proper place when she returns in a few days to rehang them.

Meanwhile back at the shop, three generations of experience will go into the professional care your drapes receive. The shop has been rearranged to provide both efficiency and quality in drapery care. Adcock's uses naphtha, not perchloroethylene (perc) which many cleaners use. Naptha is gentler on colors and fabrics. This is extremely important when dealing with draperies and special items such as table clothes, bedspreads, select gowns and wedding dresses.

John Adcock, the owner, feels confident that he has the best silk and wool finisher in town to handle your special items. Likewise, his pleaters are perfectionists who are determined to make your drapes look great by using the accurate and fast Perfectpleat machine.

Adcock's Ideal Drapery Service is also equipped to repair your drapes and they have a special process for whitening sheers. In addition, they give special attention to fire damaged drapes, often using special deodorizers to restore freshness.

These exceptional services are available to businesses as well as individuals. Apartments, office buildings, and many other commercial properties can benefit greatly from such fine work. Furthermore, the Adcock's have been known to provide their quality service to people outside of Midland.

In keeping with Adcock's commitment to professionalism in drapery service, Adcock's Ideal Drapery Service is a member of the International Fabricare Institute and the Texas Laundry and Dry Cleaning Association. Darla and John also made a trip last month to a number of San Antonio drapery plants to get organizational ideas and equipment suggestions from other drapery services.

So, you no longer have to settle for anything less than a complete and professional drapery cleaning service. Go by Adcock's Ideal Drapery Service at 309 Dodson Street or call Darla at 684-6697. She'll be glad to come out and give you a free estimate. Remember Adcock's-the synonym for family service and quality!

Bill's Plumbing and Fencecraft will help you prepare for winter

Though we are still in the midst of the sweltering summer, it's time to prepare for when the cold winter will come blowing in. Here are some suggestions: (1) Begin collecting a closet full of quilts, wool blankets, gloves, knitted caps, and thick socks, (2) start a savings account to help cover high heating bills, or (3) buy a winter home in Florida. If you don't like any of these suggestions call Tom Bloemendaal at Bill's Plumbing and Fencecraft and let him help you select an energy saving stove or fireplace.

Bill's has access to a full line of Forester Stoves, which can be delivered within 24 hours. Forester stoves have been manufactured since 1869 and are appropriate for cabins and homes. Ben Franklin stoves are also available, as well and units for mobile homes.

When it comes to fireplaces and accessories, Bill's Plumbing and Fencecraft can offer you just about anything you can imagine. They handle Majestic and Heatilator fireplaces and inserts. Their zero clearance fireplaces are fire boxes which you can build right up against with just about any material. Within one hour you can have a fireplace less the trim work for about $495 (includes unit and installation kit).

Bill's Plumbing and Fencecraft also offers fireplace inserts which keep your fireplace heat from escaping up the chimney. A special fan blows the heat back into your home. If you already have a fireplace, installing an insert now will help keep your cool air in this summer.

Bill carries a wide variety of fireplace accessories, including glass fire screens made by Portland Willamette. These screens are made with tempered glass and are solid brass with steal reinforcement. All glass fire screens are 15% off through Labor Day. Rod iron screens are also a specialty of Bill's.

When you order your firescreen, don't forget to also order a grate, a log carrier, and tools. Within 24 hours, Bill's can get anything from simple but practical to very elegant fireplace accessories.

For those of you who don't like to mess carrying out ashes, but do enjoy having a fire in the fireplace, Bill's offers log sets. These sets are very attractive and do give off some heat.

What is especially nice about Bill's Plumbing and Fencecraft is that it is a well established, local, family business. Bill Rodriguez began the company in February 1977 and he still insists on personally inspecting each job that they do. He also notes that their many repeat customers offer a testimony to the kind of quality service they give. Bill attributes this partially to the fact that they always work on contract so that the customer knows exactly what to expect. They also have a 1 year warranty on all their work. Though they have expanded their services a number of times, you can still find them at Loop 250 and Princeton.

One of the services that Bill's added since 1977 is a pool service. Bill has access to pool supplies, solar covers, chemicals, and Stay Right equipment such as pumps, heaters, and filters. The solar covers will be 15% off through Labor Day so take advantage of this savings opportunity. Bill also offers an alarm system which is designed to warn you if your child falls into the pool when no one's around. The $149 cost is a low price to pay to protect your child from drowning.

Bill Rodriguez, owner of Bill's Plumbing and Fencecraft, and Tom Bloemendaal canhelp you order beautiful fireplace accessories. Their glass firescreens and solar pool covers are 15% off through Labor Day. Wait no longer, go by Bill's at Loop 250 and Princeton.

Even with all these wonderful new services, Bill still offers quality fencing. He has 27 years experience in building wood, cinder block, brick, rod iron and chain link fences. Call Bill today at 697-4712 or leave a message with Sandy Rodriguez.

Bob Hawk and Associates offers monthly parking lot maintenance

With today's economy it is necessary to use quality materials, have professionals install them and maintain them properly to get your money's worth.

Bob Hawk and Associates are blacktop specialists, having been in the business since 1946. They do asphalt paving, sealing, trench patching, and driveway and parking lot construction, repair and maintenance. The most modern equipment is utilized to give you the fastest and most dependable service available.

Bob Hawk and Associates is home owned and operated, with each and every job given the time and attention needed to assure quality. With 37 years experience working with asphalt, Bob Hawk knows the properties and tendencies of asphalt, as well as the importance of proper maintenance and repair.

Along these lines, Bob Hawk has initiated a new service, parking lot maintenance. They will bring the lot back up to top shape. Then, once it is in excellent condition, Bob Hawk and Associates will maintain the lot to keep it that way. Once the three year contract is signed, they will, for a monthly fee, maintain your lot.

By having Bob Hawk maintain your lot you won't have the worries of trying to get somene out to repair the pothole that is getting bigger by the day, someone else out to reseal the asphalt and still someone else to stripe the lot. Bob Hawk will automatically take care of all of these.

Besides being more convenient for you it is also a good idea from a bookkeeping point of view. Once a contract is signed you will pay the same monthly fee for the next three years-putting an end to unexpected bills.

Bob Hawk and Bob Hawk Jr., of Bob Hawk and Associates have the equipment and know how to meet your asphalt needs. They also offer a parking lot maintenance contract to keep your lot in top shape. Give Bob or Bob Jr. a call at 694-6572 today.

Weather and time can destroy asphalt if it is not cared for properly. For longevity it is important to keep the asphalt sealed with a impervious coal tar emulsion. This emulsion should protect against deterioration from gasoline, oil, jet fuels and other hydro-carbons that tend to deteriorate asphalt.

Bob Hawk and Assocciates has the equipment and the know how to save you money on expensive repairs or replacement of your parking lot investment to say nothing of the enriched look and the ease of cleaning your parking lot.

Unlike city streets, traffic on a parking lot runs in definite patterns. Cars do not constantly change lanes in a parking lot. They follow the same paths and consequently only a very small area gets the traffic that is so vitally needed to keep the asphalt surface sealed. This is one reason why proper sealing and maintenance is so necessary. Bob Hawk and Associates has the professional crack routing and sealing equipment to properly repair and seal cracks in asphalt pavement. This the most important procedure in preventing moisture from entering the pavement and rendering the sub-base unstable, which in turn causes more cracks and "alligatoring". They also furnish and install precast concrete bumpers and stripe parking lot stalls.

"Give us a call--we do it all" is their motto. So, dial 694-6572 and ask Bob Hawk for more infomation on their parking lot maintenance contracts and other services.

Flower Talk will help you express your special feelings

Flowers are like music, they are a universal language. They can say anything from "I'm sorry" to "I love you" to "I'm glad that you're my friend." They are also a great way to say "thank you".

Flower Talk was recently opened by Paul Coleman and Julia Maisel for precisely that reason. There are many people who have a lot of things to say and it seems so right to say it with flowers.

Flower Talk is a little different from many of the other florists in town. Besides your usual cut flowers like roses, daisies and carnations, they also carry a variety of unique and exotic flowers as well as many nice gift items. Paul has a vast amount of experience in working with unusual flowers, so he knows how to handle them as well as how to arrange them to show off their beauty.

Flower Talk is a full service florist that offers complete wire service and free delivery within Midland's city limits.

They love to do weddings. They do request that you book your wedding at least a month in advance to assure that they have the flowers that you want on hand. This is especially true if you would like a variety of flowers or some of the more exotic ones. To avoid any waiting time, be sure to set up an appointment with Paul before you go in to discuss flowers for your wedding.

Fresh plants are also available at Flower Talk. They have a nice selection of hanging plants and plants in baskets or pots.

If you are interested in the unique flowers that Flower Talk offers but you would like something a little more permanent, why not check out the silk flower arrangements available. They have many arrangements made up and on display in the showroom. If you see a design or a particular type of flower that you like but not exactly the arrangement you had in mind, they will be more than happy to custom design a unique arrangement that will truly be one of a kind.

Be sure to stop by Flower Talk this week and take advantage of their remarkable specials. On Wednesdays, they have beautiful fresh bouquets for $12.50. Thursday is the day theyoffer green plants at 20% off and on Friday roses are $25 a dozen. Besides that, you never know what unadvertised specials you might find if you go in and browse.

Parking at Flower Talk is absolutely no problem. By being located at the Westwood Shopping Center there is ample parking.

Flower Talk is now open Monday through Saturday, 8:30 to 5:30. So even if you don't remember your anniversary till Saturday afternoon when many florists are closed, Flower Talk will be open for you.

Paul Coleman and Julia Maisel of Flower Talk are pleased to offer silk flower arrangements like the one pictured, as well as fresh cut flowers and plants. Go by their shop this week in the Westwood Shopping Center at Illinois and Midland Drive.
