Arab League, Israel cast opposing 'votes'

By The Associated Press

A summit meeting of Arab leaders adopted a Mideast peace plan today, but Israel dismissed the proposal as meaningless. At the same time, the Israeli air force launched another raid to destroy four more Syrian missile batteries in Lebanon.

The Arab leaders, meeting in Fez, Morocco, adopted their first joint peace plan since Israel's founding in 1948 but avoided any explicit reference to possible recognition of the Jewish state, delegation sources reported.

In Tel Aviv, Prime Minister Menachem Begin's spokesman Uri Porat dismissed the plan as meaningless because it failed to spell out recognition of Israel's right to exist.

He said the Fez summit was no different from previous such meetings "and there is no reason to pay attention to it." He told a reporter: "They don't recognize Israel and they speak of the PLO as the sole representative of the Palestinian people."

Israel refuses to have any dealings with the Palestine Liberation Organization and invaded Lebanon June 6 to oust the guerrillas from west Beirut. The last fighters left a week ago, but Israeli and Syrian forces are still confronting each other in eastern Lebanon's Bekaa Valley.

Israel's chief of staff, Lt. Gen. Raphael Eytan, asked by Israel army radio about Syria's purported readiness to leave the Bekaa Valley, as expressed at the Fez summit, replied, "I think this readiness is lip service and there is no reality in it. It is a political tactic. In my opinion, the Syrians have made every effort to stay in Lebanon for a long time."

The Tel Aviv command said Israeli jets knocked out four more mobile batteries of Syrian SA-9 missiles in the Bekaa Valley, the second such attack on the sites in two days.

"The state of Israel is firm in its decision not to permit the Syrians to move ground-to-air missile batteries into the Lebanon area," the command said.

It also reported that two Israeli soldiers were wounded when their vehicle ran over a land mine near the village of Ain Aaata, southeast of the southern Lebanese port of Sidon.

Begin vowed Wednesday that Israel would never agree to President Reagan's plan for peace in the Middle East.

In a fiery speech to Parliament, Begin challenged the opposition Labor Party to an early election next year as a referendum on his government's claim to the occupied Arab territories. Labor has backed the Reagan plan, noting that it does not call for a total Israeli withdrawal from the lands won in the 1967 war.

The Arab leaders in Fez say say Israel must recognize the PLO and accept the creation of a Palestinian state incorporating predominately Arab East Jerusalem.

But Begin said that the occupied areas "will be for the Jewish people for generations upon generations," reaffirming his government's biblical claim to the territory.

Begin was unrelenting in his opposition to the Reagan plan for Palestinian autonomy in the West Bank and Gaza in association with Jordan. He said such a deal would deprive Israel of parts of the West Bank, put hostile Palestinians in control and jeopardize Jewish lives.

He called Reagan's plan "stillborn. Already today it no longer exists." He claimed Reagan's proposals deviate from the Camp David accords, the only overall peacekeeping framework Israel recognizes.

Serene sunset

August and September are the dog days of summer, usually marked by hot, dry afternoons. But those lazy afternoons and evenings sometimes provide beautiful sunsets. This serene, peaceful scene was spotted Wednesday evening one mile north of Loop 250 on Midkiff Road.

Swiss police storm Polish embassy, rescue hostages

BERN, Switzerland (AP) — Swiss police stormed the Polish Embassy today and rescued five hostages, tricking the four gunmen inside by blowing down the door with a remote-controlled bomb hidden in a food container.

They arrested the four raiders who had held the captives under threat of death since Monday, demanding that Communist Poland lift martial law, free internees and end repression.

Swiss Justice Minister Kurt Furgler said the four gunmen, who claimed they would blow up the embassy Friday unless their conditions were met, also had demanded $1.45 million and free passage to China or Albania.

"Switzerland will never accept blackmail," he said after the rescue operation. "The decision to storm the embassy was taken during the night after it was determined there was no room for further negotiation."

Furgler said four gunmen, dressed in camouflage suits, were arrested. He identified the leader as Florian Kruszyk, a 42-year-old former convict from Poland. He said Kruszyk claimed he had worked for the Polish secret service.

Kruszyk was sentenced to nine years in prison in 1969 for a Vienna, Austria, jewelry store robbery in which hostages were taken. He served four years of his term before being released.

In the initial stages of the embassy takeover the leader of the group identified himself as "Colonel Wysocki" and said he and his men belonged to a newly formed group opposed to repression in Poland.

The dramatic rescue operation began at 10:42 a.m. and ended less than an hour later.

Witnesses said a white van pulled up in front of the embassy and a man dressed in a delivery suit took a small white object up to the front door of the embassy.

The man returned to the van and made a second trip to the front door with an aluminum case that usually contained food for the gunmen and hostages. This time it was packed with explosives.

When the man got back to the van, the driver jumped out and both men ducked and ran off, witnesses said. They said the container than exploded, blowing in the door.

About 20 riot police wearing helmets, bullet-proof vests and gas masks then charged in the two-story building. Witnesses said they heard about 10 additional explosions.

There were reports of brief fighting between the terrorists and riot police when they spread throughout the embassy to search all of its rooms.

"I am satisfied there were no injuries," said Antoni Dobrowolski, the charge d'affaires at the Polish Embassy who returned to Bern Tuesday night from leave in Poland. He complimented the Swiss police for their disciplined action.

The Swiss government on Wednesday rejected Poland's offer to send a paramilitary unit to Bern to help rescue the hostages.

The embassy siege began Monday when the gunmen burst into the diplomatic mission, took 13 people hostage, and demanded Poland lift its martial law decree and free political detainees.

Conestoga 1 rocket makes flawless flight

MATAGORDA ISLAND, Texas (AP) — Conestoga 1, America's first privately-controlled rocket, was launched flawlessly from this Texas coastal island today and flew a 10½-minute sub-orbital mission exactly as planned before splashing down in the Gulf of Mexico.

The gleaming white, 37-foot rocket leaped into a clear blue sky about 15 minutes later than planned and climbed unhesitatingly to an altitude of 192 miles as 300 spectators standing in a pastureland applauded.

The rocket arched out over the Gulf where a dummy payload separated and spewed 400 pounds of water into the vacuum of space. The payload and rocket splashed down 321 miles from the launch pad.

More than 100 members of the media and about 200 guests — many of them investors in the Space Services Inc. of America — witnessed the launch and burst into applause as it disappeared from view.

"We did it, we did it!" shouted one executive of SSI after the 10:15 a.m. CDT launch.

Champagne bottles were popped and glasses of the bubbly were passed around among the spectators.

The countdown for launch went almost precisely as planned, with only a couple of brief holds when data communications were lost momentarily.

The weather conditions, which had been of concern, were perfect for the liftoff.

The guests and the media traveled by boat to the island during pre-dawn hours. Many of the guests arrived in a festive mood, dressed as for a lawn party, walking over the pasture land and dining on shrimp and finger sandwiches as the countdown proceeded.

Flags at the makeshift launch control center were at half staff in recognition of the death early today of Toddie Lee Wynne, 85-year-old owner of the land where the launch pad was constructed.

Officials said the rocket performed as expected, establishing that SSI is capable of organizing and controlling a rocket launch.

The rocket properly aligned itself for orbital injection, a maneuver that will be essential when SSI attempts to put satellites into space. This craft, however, was not designed to achieve orbit but followed a parabolic trajectory to a splashdown in the Gulf.

Wynne, a Dallas oilman and investor in SSI, died on a flight from Matagorda Island to Dallas, the Dallas County medical examiner's office said. Wynne also was an investor in SSI.

A family spokesman said Wynne experienced chest pains in the early morning hours at the family home on the island and was being flown to a Dallas hospital.

The mission control center is housed in mobile metal buildings and metal shipping crates. The complex is connected by a single-lane road snaking across pastureland littered with cattle droppings and prowled by scorpions.

Communication to the the mainland is limited to two telephone lines, hooked up by a satellite communications firm for the launch. During preparation, workers were ferried back and forth by boat.

PBRPC favors Greenwood water plan

By GAIL BURKE

The Greenwood One Water Supply Corporation proposal to tap into available sources for an adequate drinking water supply in the Greenwood area, 10 miles southeast of Midland, was given a favorable comment from the Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission Wednesday.

The corporation is proposing that an adequate potable water supply for the Greenwood area be developed from three sources, including wells, the Colorado River Municipal Water District and the City of Midland. Greenwood is currently provided water through individual wells, Jerry Tschauner, director of planning at the PBRPC, said.

In other action, the PBRPC also gave favorable comment for the following: funding for an expansion that would allow commercial jet parking at Midland Regional Airport, funding of a Head Start program in Odessa, funding for a residential subdivision for Andrews and funding with a Community Development Block Grant to improve the "window area" located north of I-20.

Greenwood One Water Supply Corp.'s pre-application for a water supply and distribution system is being submitted to the Farmer's Home Administration, requesting $1.25 million from the FmHA to be matched with $60,000 in local funds for a total project cost of $1.31 million, Tschauner said.

He added that this system would provide residents with a dependable water suppply sustem that meets state standards and the system would furnish water for 370 to 400 users.

"We feel like we have to get the system started," Ted Pearce, Greenwood One Water Supply Corp. representative, said. "There is an obvious need. We need to do it the most economical way we can for the citizens."

Pearce said the City of Midland was aware of the proposal, but John Lowe, director of public utilities for Midland, when contacted after the meeting Wednesday, said "this was the first he has heard about the proposal." Lowe said he could not offer any comment.

In other business, the PBRPC gave a favorable comment for a pre-application to enlarge the parking apron for commercial aircraft east of the air terminal building at Midland Regional Airport.

Col. Wilson Bank, director of aviation at Midland Regional Airport, said the parking apron would be extended approximately 400 feet, creating two additional parking positions for aircraft.

"This will allow eight parking positions altogether," he said. "One of the ramps was built during World War II. More flights have come into the airport over the past couple of years and they're having more overnighters now. The parking would help us out in the long run so the aircraft can be worked into their system the next day."

The $2,447,172 grant would be partially matched with $2,202,454 coming from Federal Aviation Administration funds and $244,718 coming from the City of Midland.

Also, the PBRPC approved continuation funding for the Head Start program in Ector County.

MC trustees approve athlete housing facility

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

Following a three-month period of serious negotiations and years of conflicting ideas, the Midland College Board of Trustees has approved a contract calling for the construction of an 11-unit facility to house 40 student athletes, academic scholarship recipients and housing superintendents.

The unanimous decision was made following study of the contract between Midland College and Bill W. Williams and John H. Hendrix (W&H Co.) by board members during a specially-called breakfast meeting at 7:30 this morning.

The eight-year lease states that all construction costs will be financed by the W&H Co. while MC takes over all financing with an option to buy starting from the date of completion.

MC will lease the housing facility from W&H Co. at $5,600 per month for 96 months, which roughly equals the $140 per student per month presently allocated for housing athletes at private homes and a local apartment complex.

Williams and Hendrix, both Midland businessmen and members of the Chaparral Booster Club, will be responsible for all built-in appliances, such as cabinets, refrigerators, stoves, baths and air conditioning units. Midland College will be responsible for all other furnishings, maintaining the property and insuring the building. The college also will provide water, sewer, telephone and electricity services to the resident hall.

The leasing agreement states that construction must begin within two

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

It's been a long, hot summer and Bill Sims has spent much of it on the dusty roads in West Texas finding out what the voters in the 25th State Senatorial District are thinking.

As summer cools off into fall, Sims is expecting his campaign to heat up against Republican contender Ernest Angelo Jr. of Midland. Both are vying for the state senate seat being vacated by Midlander W.E. "Pete" Snelson. A Democrat, Sims was featured Wednesday evening at a coffee in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Bob Massey. He was sponsored by the Midland County Democratic Party and the Midland County Democratic Women's Club.

From small town to small town, Sims said the most common concerns voiced by the people are water, education, crime and farming.

"Every town in West Texas talks about their current or future water problem," said Sims, who lives in San Angelo.

Although he sees no problem with the quality of education, Sims said people are concerned about paying enough to keep the good, young teachers in the field. "In West Texas we're blessed to have good school systems," he said, acknowledging that funding for such systems has come from oil and natural resources.

The closer the district gets to the Mexican border, the more apprehensive the citizens become about the economic decline in Mexico and what may result in an increased crime rate in cities close to the border, Sims related.

Problems with farming have been voiced by citizens in the smaller communities, such as Garden City and St. Lawrence.

"At St. Lawrence, the cotton is only about a foot high. In those cases, you don't ask them about their outlook on cotton. They have a very bleak look for the harvest," Sims said.

Continuing, he added that there isn't any place in the Permian Basin that isn't concerned about the decline in the oil business. "But there isn't anything the state can do about it."

Sims acknowledged his campaign has been low-key to date. His visits to the small towns have been planned without much fanfare. Even so, in some places Sims has seen more people than he had expected.

"I was in Marathon for a 7 a.m. coffee and there were about 50 people," he said.

"My plan is to try and get to as many places as I can," he continued, rattling off a list of small towns and events that included a luncheon at Fort Stockton, several county fairs, coffees in Dell City and Van Horn and a small dinner in Alpine.

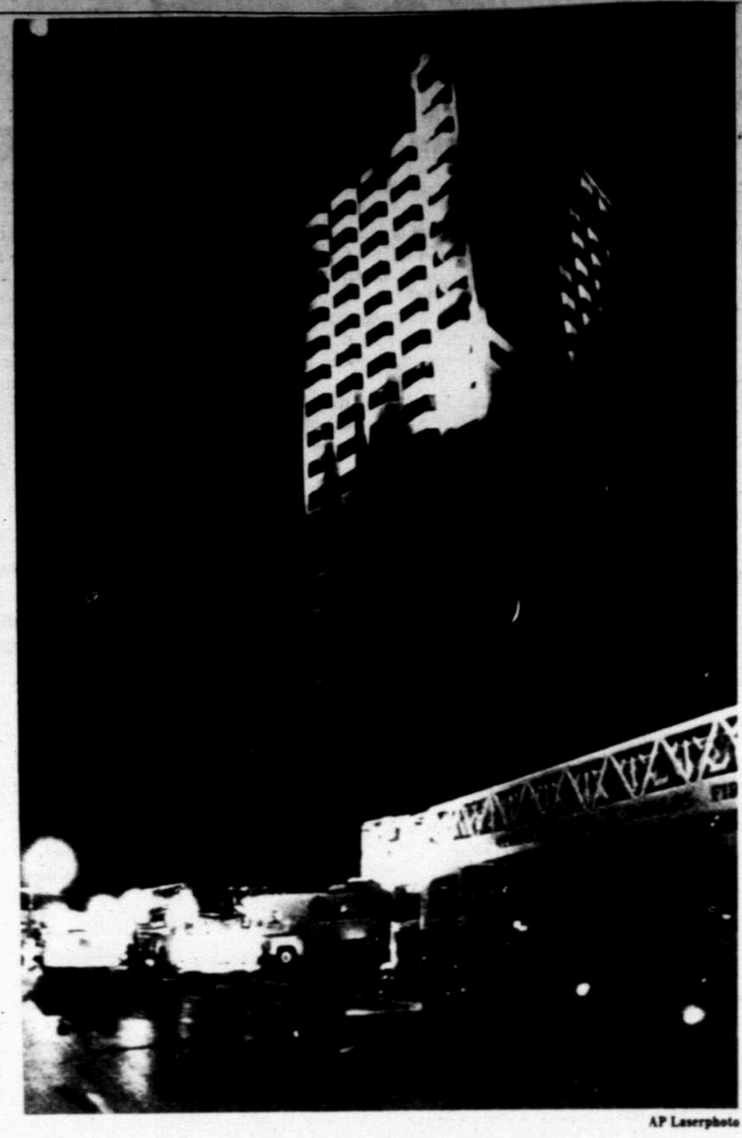

"I just enjoy getting out and visiting with the people. They're all good, honest people," he said.

While Midland is the home of many deep-rooted Republicans and San Angelo the spot for Democrats, Sims said the rest of the people in the district tend to be independents. "They walk on both sides of the creek. I'm going to let them know who I am and what I can do. I know these people are intelligent enough to make intelligent decisions."

Next week kicks off Sims' main campaign with a rally in San Angelo on Monday night. To be held in Red Lions Galleries and featuring a big screen football game, Sims said the organizers are expecting about 500 persons.

Ironically, that's the same day that Angelo will hold his Midland rally which features U.S. Reps. Jack Kemp, Tom Loeffler and Eddie Chiles during a luncheon in Midland Center.

To date, campaign contributions "are coming in good," said Sims. "I'm pleased with the support from the district. We're on line at this point."

The La Tour development, a 23-story condominium in Dallas' Oak Lawn section, was struck by fire Wednesday night. Officials are unsure of the cause of the blaze but think an electrical short may have caused it.

Officials unsure of cause of Dallas high-rise fire

DALLAS (AP) — Electrical shorts may have sparked the five-alarm blaze that broke out on the 15th floor of an unoccupied high-rise condominium and quickly spread to other floors, fire officials say.

"We suspect that it was caused by electrical shorts, but that's just speculation," said Don Stevens, Dallas fire department deputy chief.

The fire originally was reported late Wednesday night as a gas leak on the 15th floor of the building, according to fire department dispatcher Mike Roach.

Stevens said the blaze did not take long to jump to other floors, but was under control shortly before midnight.

"The main body of the fire was confined to the 14th through the 21st floors," he said. "Late in the operation, we did have a helicopter drop of several men and extra lines, but the main bulk of the equipment was carried up the stairs."

Each condiminium unit rents for $160,000 per year, officials said.

No one was reported to be in the structure at the time of the fire, officials said, and no injuries were reported.

George Custis, superintendant of construction for the building's contractor, Manhattan Construction Co., said his crews left the 17th floor of the building about 9:30 p.m. Wednesday.

The building should be completed a year from now, he said.

Small chance of rain forecast

Midlanders may get a respite from the hot, dry afternoons and evenings that have plagued the months of August and September with a 20 percent chance of late afternoon and evening thunderstorms forecast for today by the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

Temperatures should drop into the upper 60s tonight, climbing once again into the middle 90s Friday.

Friday is expected to be partly cloudy with no mention of precipitation in the forecast.

Winds will be southwesterly at 5-10 mph tonight, shifting to southwesterly at 10-15 mph Friday.

Wednesday's high of 91 was six degrees below the record high of 97 set for that date in 1964. The overnight low of 67 missed the record low of 53, set in 1956, by 14 degrees.

New vote tabulation system should give quicker totals

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Secretary of State David Dean says his new system of tabulating Texas election results will reduce the potential for voter fraud and should yield quicker results.

The plan was endorsed Wednesday by an advisory committee of media representatives.

Under the plan, Dean will be responsible for the semi-official tabulation of election night results, beginning with the Nov. 2 general election.

In the past, election votes were tabulated by the Texas Election Bureau, which was funded and operated by members of the Texas news media.

Burl Osborne, executive editor of The Dallas Morning News and chairman of the Texas Election Bureau, called the new tabulation system "an opportunity for a stable collection system that will pick up where TEB left off. I hope it will result in faster, more complete results at an earlier time."

Odessa escapee has bonds set

ODESSA — Bonds totaling $125,000 were set on an Odessa man after he escaped during his arraignment here Wednesday on burglary charges. A teen-ager implicated in the same burglary also escaped but was recaptured.

Police said James Redick, no age or street address available, was found hiding in the attic of a residence at 2012 E. 10th St. about 9 a.m. Wednesday. As he was being arraigned in Municipal Court about 2:30 p.m., he ran out the door of the courtroom when a bailiff turned his back to get some papers.

Redick was recaptured about two blocks away from the police station. In addition to the burglary charges, he was being held on warrants charging him with armed robbery and unlawfully carrying a weapon in connection with other cases earlier this summer.

The juvenile arrested with Redick for the same house burglary Wednesday morning escaped from the courtroom about 1 p.m. after he was left alone for a moment. He too was recaptured shortly after fleeing the building and was turned over to juvenile authorities.

weeks after a building permit is issued and must be completed within six months from the starting date. Tentative schedules call for completion of the facility by Jan. 15, 1983, in time for the college's second semester, according to H.A. Tuck, MC public relations director.

The facility, to be located almost due east of the Al G. Langford Chaparral Center, will take up a little over a half-acre of the campus, Tuck said. The 27,760 square foot facility will include a courtyard where entry to the 11 units will be available. The units will feature a living area and kitchen, two baths and four bedrooms. Architectural designs, compatible with the rest of the buildings on campus, were drawn by George Blackburn of Dallas and approved by the college's architect, Preston Geren. Builder will be Greg Frazier, Tuck added.

While the dormitory is being built specifically for the student athletes, MC has the option to house academic scholarship recipients, and if space allows, other students, according to Tuck.

"Midland College was built on the idea that it would be a community college," he explained. "But the fact is it has been difficult to find housing in Midland and with our athletic program we bring many athletes in from other communities."

At present, there are 41 student athletes attending Midland College, although at least nine of the athletes are from or are now residing in Midland with their families or relatives.

"It's going to help us," Tuck continued. "We've lost student athletes and other student scholars because of the lack of housing in the past. We found that often students couldn't afford to accept our scholarships due to the lack of housing. It is difficult to find places that accept students in Midland."

Dr. Jess Parrish

He added that many apartment complexes have age restrictions as well as minimum lease requirements. Most MC students are under 21 years of age and only wish to obtain housing for eight or nine months instead of signing the regular six-month or one-year lease usually required.

Since some athletes live at home or have found suitable living accomodations, Tuck said academic scholarship recipients would be next in line for residency in the housing facility, followed by other students as space allows.

"There are many possibilities (for the resident hall) that weren't mentioned during the board meeting," Tuck noted. "This would allow us to run some summer seminars and workshops that we haven't been able to do in the past."

He suggested that the facility could be rented to people from out of town attending two-day workshops on the campus for $10 per night.

"There are other possibilities, including summer sports camps," he added. "Who knows? We may have it filled with students in the summer."

tion to the Department of Health and Human Services for $214,175 with the applicant supplying $53,544 for a total project budget of $269,719.

"This is the second year of a three-year grant," Tschauner said. "The program will enroll 115 three and four year olds with 10 percent of these being handicapped. Fifty-five percent will be Spanish speaking, 50 black and 10 white children. Twelve children will be from families who are below the poverty level."

Plainsmen Homes of Midland also received favorable comment from the PBRPC on an application for the White Addition, a subdivision located in the northeast section of Andrews. The 4.5 acres is being replatted and will provide 24 lots. Plainsmen initially plans to build five homes. Tschauner said the company is "looking for another avenue of available funds for prospective buyers."

Another favorable comment was given for a Community Development Block Grant for Midland County.

The $1,676,000 is the total of the three-year grant. Since the Department of Housing and Urban Development requires that each year's request be treated as a new application, the PBRPC approved the $535,000 requested for this year.

The funds will be used in the same target area, a window pane area, Tschauner said, explaining that this is a low income area that is surrounded by Midland's corporate limits. Plans for the money include: $135,000 for completion of street improvements which began in 1981; $198,000 for sanitary sewer improvements and water work improvements; $9,000 for clearance activities; $99,000 for housing rehabilitation; $41,000 for general administration; and $53,000 for contingencies.

"Hopefully, this whole area will be up to standard and the City of Midland will annex this area," Tschauner said.

"There are 80- and 90-year-old people using their front yards for bathrooms," Midland County Judge William B. Ahders said. "I can't believe that we'd allow those kinds of things to happen in our town."

In final action, the PBRPC authorized Ernie Crawford, the executive director, to execute the Urban Mass Transportation Administration grant contract on behalf of the PBRPC.

Clements accused of trying to cover up 1981 TEC letter

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — House Democrats trying to hang an "Employee-gate" sign around Gov. Bill Clements' neck contend the governor has tried to cover up a 1981 letter warning that the Unemployment Insurance Fund might be in trouble.

Clements, a Republican seeking re-election in November, called legislators into special session on Tuesday to keep the fund from going broke.

The Texas Democratic Caucus on Wednesday distributed a three-page chronology that they had labeled "The Developing Cover-up" of a Nov. 13, 1981, letter from the Texas Employment Commission.

The TEC letter said employment commissioners wanted to "alert you (Clements) to a potential problem" with the fund. It stated that the "reserve fund has become dangerously small compared to the volume of benefits we pay out."

Clements said Tuesday the letter "was vague in wording and did not address the current problem." In his statement, Clements also said his staff had been monitoring the fund since December.

"This is untrue," Rep. Bob Bush told a news conference Wednesday. "On the day he called the special session, Aug. 26, Clements said, 'If they have such a letter, let them produce it, because I don't have such a letter. I've had my staff search our files; I've asked these people; no one has any recollection of any such notice.'

"By failing to act when he was first warned, by failing to plan for the current situation, this governor missed the opportunity to minimize the effect of this crisis on Texas taxpayers," said Bush, D-Sherman. "We are now in a box. No matter what we do, somebody's going to be hurt who wouldn't have been hurt had we taken more timely action."

Rep. Craig Washington, D-Houston, said, "The fall guy in all of this, regardless of how you look at it, is the small businessman — small business person. He or she gets hurt either way, because of the box we are in."

The fund has been drained in recent months by record high payments to hundreds of thousands of unemployed Texans, and employers now face having to pay higher taxes per employee to replenish the fund.

"All of us as taxpayers are going to have to bite the bullet as consumers because those (employer) costs are going to be passed along," Washington.

"Had I been governor," he added, "I would have done something besides sit on the letter."

Democrats laughed and called the incident "Employee-gate" in a comparison to Watergate.

Dr. Jarvis Miller, the governor's budget director, said it is "very clear" from the TEC's proposed budget statements that the TEC never intended "to submit any recommendations to Gov. Clements for action prior to Jan. 1 (1983)."

Jim Kaster, the governor's legislative liaison, said he has been asked why the governor did not allow a May special session to deal with the unemployment fund.

"The simple answer is there was absolutely no request from anyone to open the session to that matter. It appeared it could be addressed at the regular session," Kaster said. "The big drain on the fund took place in June, July and August and they admit it."

Clements' executive assistant, Hilary Doran, said the November 1981 letter was referred routinely to then-budget director Paul Wrotenbery.

"I don't think it is of any great significance," Doran said.

Miller noted that in the first five months of 1982, benefit payments were $9 million lower than in the same period last year.

"Until May or June, there was no evidence to substantiate what the TEC was telling us," he said.

Legislators try to finish

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Texas legislators hoped to end their special session today with a final House vote on an unemployment fund proposal and quick action on the measure in the Senate.

Possible adjournment Wednesday was stymied when House members were five votes short of the number needed for an immediate final vote.

"WE HAVE COST the taxpayers a few bucks by having to come back tomorrow," Speaker Bill Clayton said, "but I understand the economy of Austin will recoup."

The House tentatively passed, by a vote of 87-51, Clayton's compromise bill to raise money for the unemployment tax fund, which is threatened with bankruptcy in November. All efforts to amend the bill were defeated.

However, when Clayton asked for a suspension of House rules for an immediate final vote, the 105-33 vote was short of the 110 needed.

Earlier, the House passed 139-0 and sent to the governor a proposal that would allow schools to borrow money before their property tax rolls are certified and the tax rate set.

There was no discussion of the Senate-approved bill and no effort to amend it.

THE ONLY SERIOUS move to change Clayton's bill from the form it emerged in from a House committee Tuesday was presented by Rep. Robert Bush, D-Sherman.

Bush said his amendment would provide a temporary cure for the unemployment fund troubles and leave a permanent fix to the 1983 Legislature.

"This is a pay-as-you-go approach," he said of his plan to place an immediate surtax on Texas employers that would be 150 percent of the taxes they owe for 1982. He said this would raise about $450 million.

He stressed it would not involve asking any loans from the federal government. Bush's amendment was tabled 82-57.

Clayton said his measure, which includes federal loans until an unemployment tax increase becomes effective, means that "by 1985 the the loans would be repaid, the fund would be in the black and the Texas Employment Commission can set the tax rate as it is now."

THE UNEMPLOYMENT fund bill was presented as a compromise that had been approved by the governor, legislative leaders and business groups.

The bill was designed to replenish the fund set up 44 years ago to pay benefits to jobless workers with tax increases in 1983 and 1984, plus a surtax for parts of those years to pay interest on the federal loans.

The bill would increase the fund ceiling from $325 million to $500 million and increase the maximum tax levied on Texas employers from 4 percent to 6 percent of the first $7,000 an employee makes. In addition to increasing the present minimum rate from 0.1 percent to 0.4 percent, there would be a special tax of 0.3 percent for the last quarter of 1982 and another 0.1 percent tax for the first quarter of 1983.

Officials said these changes would increase the present minimum tax from $6 per employee to $28 per employee, with a three-month period of $35 payments in 1983. About three-fourths of Texas employers pay the minimum tax.

THE CURRENT maximum tax of $240 would increase to $458.50 in 1983.

However, TEC chairman Nolan Ward told reporters in Houston Wednesday he thought the legislation was "totally inadequate. We're going broke.

Pepper sign to stay

DALLAS (AP) — Dallas city councilman Wes Wise thinks it's ugly, but he and other council members decided the red art deco neon sign atop Dr Pepper's national headquarters was worth designating a city landmark.

The designation was necessary to exempt the sign from a city ordinance that bans rooftop signs after 1982.

Wise told the council members, city officials and conservationists who gathered Wednesday to debate the fate of the sign that he thought there ought to be another way to preserve the fixture without calling it one of Dallas' treasures.

But after all the hemming and hawing, the council unanimously voted to grant the Dr Pepper request.

The council also agreed to grant a request by Dr Pepper to protect the company's "time and temperature" ground sign, which is larger and closer to an intersection than the law allows.

"The signs help identify the national headquarters of the Dr Pepper Co.," Assistant City Manager Victor Suhm said. "Dr Pepper is known internationally, and its identification with Dallas is an amenity to the city."

In 1947, the "10-2-4" Dr Pepper rooftop clock tower was the second-tallest such structure in the state, behind the Mercantile Bank tower downtown. In those days, Dr Pepper urged Texans to "drink a bite to eat."

The clock bore the company's trademark of the numerals 10, 2 and 4 on its face. The "10-2-4" clock had been part of the selling of Dr Pepper since the late 1920s, when a sharp Dallas advertising man, Earle Racy, suggested the company use a Columbia University professor's research to attract customers, company spokesman Jim Ball said.

Director nominated

HOUSTON (AP) — Paul B. Gaines, director of airports in Salt Lake City, was chosen Wednesday to head this city's aviation department, Mayor Kathy Whitmire announced.

The city council will vote on Gaines' nomination in two weeks, the mayor said.

Gaines, 46, has served as manager of Salt Lake City's two airports for more than six years. He also was deputy director of airports for Sacramento County, Calif.

Mrs. Whitmire said Gaines was nominated for the $77,000-a-year job because he has a reputation as a "strong manager willing to make tough decisions."

Israeli planes bomb Syrian batteries

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Israeli warplanes knocked out four mobile batteries of Syrian SA-9 missiles in Lebanon today in the second such attack on Syria's surface-to-air missiles in two days, the military command said.

The Israelis lost no planes in the raid at Daher el-Baida, in eastern Lebanon six miles east of the town of Bhamdoun, a communique said.

Israeli jets carried out a similar attack on a single battery of the Soviet-built SA-9s in the same area Wednesday, the military said.

The communique repeated the standard statement accompanying raids on Syrian missiles: "The state of Israel is firm in its decision not to permit the Syrians to move ground-to-air missile batteries into the Lebanon area."

The heat-seeking SA-9 is considred one of the most effective in the Syrian arsenal. Each battery usually carries four missiles mounted on a truck.

Israeli military Chief of Staff Lt. Gen. Raphael Eytan said in an interview with Israel army radio recorded before the latest attack that Israel would continue to hit Syrian missiles brought into Lebanon.

He said the policy had been formulated by the Israeli Cabinet after more than a year of discussion.

Republicans confident veto will be upheld

WASHINGTON (AP) — Republican congressional leaders are so confident of upholding President Reagan's veto of a $14.2 billion money bill that they already are attempting to work out a replacement with administration officials.

With the House scheduled to vote on the president's veto late this afternoon, House Republican Leader Bob Michel of Illinois declared Wednesday, "I think we can sustain it."

But if not, Republican Leader Howard Baker of Tennessee is said to be confident the GOP-controlled Senate can hand Reagan a victory. It takes a two-thirds vote in both houses to override a veto.

Baker and Michel met during the day with White House Chief of Staff James A. Baker III and other administration aides to discuss a possible fallback measure, since some type of legislation is needed by next week for the government to meet its military and civilian payrolls.

Sources said the White House was offering a "compromise" under which Reagan would accept $300 million of $900 million in domestic spending that he opposes in the vetoed bill. In exchange, Congress would restore $2.1 billion it cut from defense programs, and would re-approve the $350 million it included for a Caribbean Basin program of foreign assistance.

However those discussions turn out, Michel said Reagan is eventually going to have to accept more money for domestic spending than he would like.

President Reagan speaks to reporters outside the White House Wednesday, accompanied by Ambassador Philip C. Habib, left, and Secretary of State George Schultz. Reagan said the three-nation force that oversaw the Palestinian evacuation from West Beirut will begin its withdrawal Friday from Lebanon.

The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

BONN, West Germany (DPA) West Germany is becoming increasingly popular with students from developing countries, a recent study by the Bonn Ministry for Development Aid has disclosed.

According to the study, the number of students from the Third World, including those from developing countries in Europe, has tripled during the last 20 years.

About 54,000 foreign students now study at West German colleges. Of these, 34,000 young men and women come from Africa, Asia, Latin America and southern Europe.

Marines should begin leaving Beirut

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. Marines who entered Beirut two weeks ago to oversee the departure of Palestinian guerrillas should begin pulling out Friday, President Reagan says.

"The United States Marine contingent should be among the first to leave," when the three-nation peacekeeping force begins withdrawing, Reagan told reporters Wednesday afternoon.

Reagan, who met for about 30 minutes with Philip C. Habib, his special Middle East envoy who negotiated the evacuation of the Palestine Liberation Organization from Beirut, said that Habib's deputy would be dispatched to the Middle East soon to continue peacekeeping efforts.

Habib said he would return to Lebanon for the Sept. 24 inauguration of President-elect Bashir Gemayel.

The first of the 800 Marines landed in Lebanon on Aug. 25. Reagan promised to have them out within 30 days. Friday would be their 16th day in the troubled nation.

"With the evacuation complete, and the authorities asserting their control throughout Beirut, I am pleased to announce that the multinational force will commence its withdrawal from Beirut Friday, Sept. 10, the day after tomorrow, and the United States Marine contingent should be among the first to leave," Reagan said, with Habib, Secretary of State George P. Shultz, and Morris Draper, a deputy assistant secretary, standing nearby.

Draper, a specialist in Near Eastern and South Asian affairs, said he would return within a few days to Lebanon. The president said Draper was Habib's "right hand" during the three-month negotiations that brought about the PLO departure and the lifting of the Israeli siege of west Beirut.

The Marine deployment has been accomplished without any major reported casualties to date. It marked the second time in 24 years that the Marines had landed in Lebanon in a peacekeeping mission.

"In the course of his briefing, Phil told me that a peaceful resolution of the Beirut crisis would not have been possible without a multinational force that included United States forces," Reagan said.

The other nations sending troops were France and Italy. The armed units patrolled city streets, and oversaw the departure of the Palestine Liberation Organization guerrillas from their west Beirut strongholds. The last of the PLO fighters left Lebanon Sept. 1.

The president also announced that an interagency group on Lebanon would coordinate political, security and assistance aspects of U.S. relations with the troubled nation.

Reagan vows to stick by plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan told Israel, in a private letter to Prime Minister Menachem Begin, that he intends to stick to his plan for Palestinian self-rule even if it is rejected in Jerusalem.

Reagan made the vow while assuring Begin last week that his plan for the Middle East is fair, balanced and offers the best hope for peace in the region.

If Israel accepts it, Reagan informed Begin, he will seek a reopening of the stalled autonomy negotiations and probably send Secretary of State George P. Shultz to the area.

Reagan did not say what specific steps he might take if Israel refused to go along with his proposals. They would give Palestinians control of land and "internal security" on the West Bank of the Jordan River and in Gaza.

Reagan's views were contained in so-called "talking points" attached to his Aug. 31 letter to the Israel leader. They expanded on the public statement the president made to the nation the next night. A copy was obtained by the Associated Press.

While some of the points seemed designed to ease Israeli concerns, others upset officials of the Begin government and may have contributed to the Cabinet's unanimous rejection.

For instance, the proposal that Palestinians take charge of internal security on the West Bank was seen as weakening Israel's protection against terrorism.

Also, Reagan promised not to support creation of a Palestinian state, but did not pledge to oppose one. In fact, he told Begin, the outcome must be determined by negotiators.

Copley News Service

WASHINGTON — Latin America's birth rates are dropping but total population is soaring nevertheless.

A prominent U.S. demographer, Leon F. Bouvier, said Wednesday that the population of Latin America is expected to reach 545 million by the year 2000 and 845 million 25 years later.

How is that possible if, as population specialists agree, fertility has been declining?

"In Latin America, fertility did not rise," Bouvier, director of demographic research of the Population Reference Bureau, explained. "Rather mortality fell dramatically, particularly infant and child mortality."

In recent years "more births survived to adulthood than had previously been the case — a 'baby boom' resulting from fewer baby deaths," he told the House InterAmerican Affairs Subcommittee.

What is more, Bouvier said, the United Nations Latin American Demographic Center (CELADE) of Santiago, Chile, projects that fertility will continue to drop but totals will rise "because the population of those future years is already born or their parents are already born."

In some Latin American countries half of the population is now 18 years of age or younger. In most industrialized countries, only a quarter of the people is in that age group.

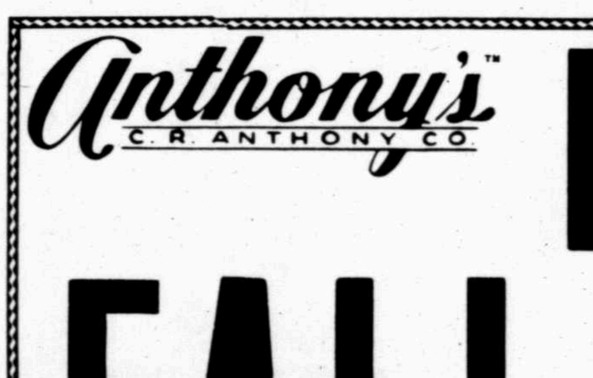

"This massive young population group...represents an awesome potential for further growth regardless of the fact that the rate of increase is dropping," Bouvier said.

As an example, while in Mexico the birth rate is expected to drop from its current 34-36 per 1,000 rate to 19 per thousand around 2025, "given the high proportion of young people presently in the total population, the current annual level of 2.7 million births will actually increase to around 3.2 million births in 2025," Bouvier said.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Friday, Sept. 10, 1982

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Baseball's Ted Kluszewski, homerun king Roger Maris, and golfer Arnold Palmer share your birthday. Also born on this date: Former Canadian First Lady Margaret Trudeau, "Sunday" news anchor Charles Kuralt and football's Charlie Waters and Buck Buchanan. Improve existing business operations and profits will rise significantly. Family and domestic matters continue to need sensitive handling. Do what you can to give loved one greater peace of mind. Bankers are more sympathetic to your particular needs than in the past. Age becomes less of a problem for an older person seeking employment. Your detached attitude could make some potential romantic partners shy away.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Curb an urge to splurge on items that you cannot really afford. A new love captures your full attention! Be careful not to overlook things that need doing at work.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A cash-flow problem may not disappear completely for several months. Deal with it realistically. All eyes are upon you at work. Your creativity sets you apart from the pack.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Take advantage of an unusual opportunity that arises today. Get together with someone who shares your interests. Troublemaking co-workers will be put in their place by higher-up. Stay out of it.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Despite interruptions, this should be a most productive day. Certain opportunities carry a big price tag and lots of strings. Investigate before you say "yes."

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Keeping a low profile works best for the next few days. Spend more time with a child. The results will delight you. You are due for a nice surprise. Your finances improve.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Certain promises may not be as valuable as they seem. Accept them with a grain of salt. Quick decisions save time and money but involve an element of risk.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Rivalries upset some of your plans and threaten a friendship. Using credit cards will not solve a money problem. Keep your head and refuse to panic.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Financing discussions help you solve a nagging problem. You are able to convince others of your sincerity. Plan a pleasant social gathering this evening but keep it simple.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You are on the brink of something wonderful. Do not lose faith no matter how doubtful others may seem. Select your goals carefully and you will emerge a winner!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): The financial picture brightens when your mate becomes a super achiever again. Cooperation is fine at the office and even better at home, but you still do best when working alone.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): New ventures produce success beyond your greatest expectations. A visit from an old friend helps rekindle your enthusiasm for your work. Deal openly with family responsibilities.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): By keeping some mystery in romance, your relationship will be more exciting. Review budget if bills are mounting up faster than you can pay them.

5 ♡	Pass	7 ♠!	Pass

Opening lead: Jack of ♠.

Some people are just born losers. No matter what they do or how well they prepare, catastrophe always seems to be lurking around the corner.

North's reasons for jumping to seven spades are beyond the ken of mortal men. The correct move would have been to make the grand slam try of five no trump, asking partner to bid a grand slam with two of the top three trump honors. The final contract would then have been six spades—by no means a laydown, but certainly a slam you would want to be in.

Not that seven spades had no chance. The only hope was to find East with a blank king of spades. That would drop under the ace and declarer could then finesse for West's jack of spades. As you can see, that was indeed the situation, and normally the contract would roll home, even though it was considerably against the odds.

When this hand was played, however, declarer was one of those unfortunate souls for whom nothing ever goes right. West decided to lead a trump—a very risky business with his holding. But even that would usually not make much difference, because from three to an honor most players almost invariably lead the low card.

Not on this occasion, however. West got off to the devilish lead of the jack of spades, for no good reason that he could later explain. Declarer was delighted at this turn of events. He covered with the queen in dummy and captured East's king with the ace. He returned a trump and, when West now produced the two, it never even crossed declarer's mind that the winning play was to finesse dummy's eight. Instead, he went up with the ten and West's nine of spades became the setting trick.

In a way, justice was done. You deserve to go down if you bid that sort of grand slam!

JIM SERVATIUS, EDITOR

NATO's greatest test

During recent months Americans have become aware of the fragility of the Atlantic Alliance, evidenced by the problems President Ronald Reagan has experienced trying to get support from allies for his technology ban against the Soviet Union.

What that difficulty is affirming is that containing the Soviet Union in this day and age will be no easy accomplishment. In fact, getting the allies to recognize and respond to the Soviet threat may be next to impossible.

That challenge was addressed earlier this summer by Gen. Bernard W. Rogers, writing in Foreign Affairs. The general noted that "since the end of World War II, Europe and North America have enjoyed an unprecedented era of peace. The central framework for maintaining that peace has been the North Atlantic Alliance and its permanent organization, NATO.

"Created to secure the West against aggression through a mutual defense system, NATO has proven remarkably successful in meeting a variety of challenges over the years. It has done so because Western leaders and the overwhelming majority of their countrymen have recognized the virtues of collective security for nations whose fundamental interests are held so closely in common," The general continued.

The security in numbers aspect of the alliance remains as important a consideration today as it was nearly four decades ago. In fact, the Soviet Union's growth as a global military power increases the alliance's role in meeting the challenges of today.

The greatest danger now facing NATO is not from the Soviet Union, although that threat is real. Rather, that greatest danger is that the decades since World War II have numbed the Europeans to the threat that a totalitarian regime presents to their society.

As Gen. Rogers noted, "The alliance today faces a more complex set of challenges than perhaps at any time in its history. Paramount among them is the unrelenting growth of Soviet military power which is coupled to, if not the major inspiration for, the current expansionism in Soviet foreign policy."

Finding that oneness of purpose again — the common thread that draws nations together and makes the alliance more important than the individual countries — is the greatest single element in determining if the Atlantic Alliance will continue to be a world power for the protection of freedom loving nations.

Making the veto stick

President Reagan sent Congress all the right signals in August when he vetoed a $14.1 billion supplemental appropriations bill that allocated too much for social programs and not enough for defense.

Mr. Reagan thus served notice that he intends to enforce a measure of fiscal discipline while holding the line against any further cuts in an already trimmed defense buildup. More importantly, perhaps, he demonstrated a willingness to use the veto to diminish budget deficits much as former President Gerald Ford did so successfully during the mid-1970s.

But now Mr. Reagan must make his veto stick by winning a scheduled override vote in the House. Predictably, the House Democratic leadership will be lined up in opposition.

Fortunately, however, the odds favor the president. The two-thirds vote required to override a veto should be difficult to muster if the White House can resurrect its conservative coalition of Republicans and independent-minded Democrats.

Both should find plenty of reasons to sustain Mr. Reagan's veto. The supplemental appropriations bill includes nearly $1 billion more than the White House had budgeted for social programs. To make matters worse, the bill entails a further reduction of almost $2 billion for defense. The latter is especially imprudent inasmuch as Congress has cut $33 billion already from the Reagan administration's request.

Any further cuts in defense would undermine the administration's efforts to restore a margin of safety at a time when Soviet military spending is well above that of the United States, and continuing to increase.

If the administration wins in the House, it should also make it easier for Mr. Reagan to extract essential concessions from Congress on far larger budget questions this fall. And the outcome of those budget deliberations will go a long way towards determining whether the projected deficits for the next three years can be reduced substantially, even if the economy rebounds more sharply than expected.

Another View:

The press in prison

Department of Corrections Director Ruth L. Rushen made an eminently sensible decision recently — to rescind the department order shutting down the state's prison newspapers. Indeed, it's hard to understand how the original decision was made in the first place.

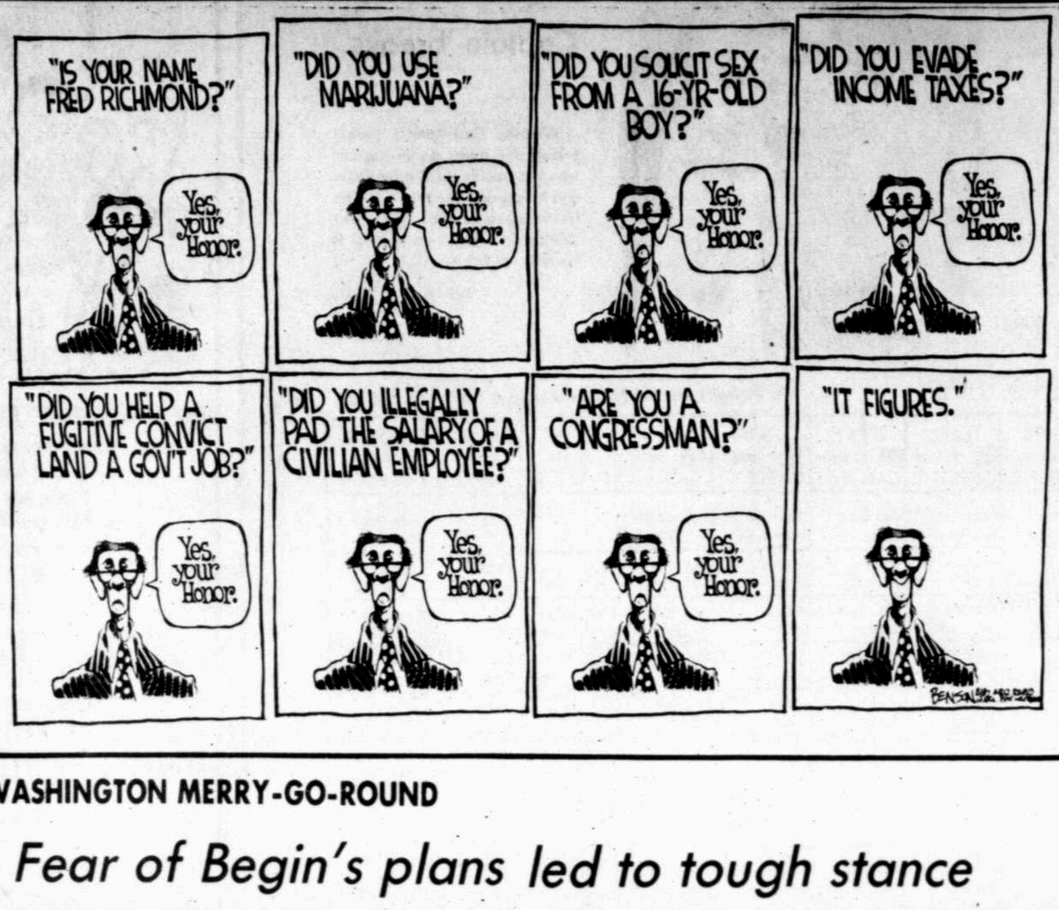

The issue, of course, is not freedom of the press. Whatever protections the courts have extended to prisoners — the right to receive and send uncensored letters, for example, or, as in this case, to publish opinions in prison newspapers — they can hardly extend to the full panoply of First Amendment rights. In that sense, the department's original decision to shut down the newspapers could hardly have been regarded as a major test for freedom of the press. Whatever rights a person carries with him into prison, the right to a state subsidy to publish a newspaper is not one of them.

And yet the decision to shut them down was still a mistake. Undoubtedly prison newspapers are a nuisance, just as high school newspapers, which are published under more or less similar legal circumstances, are often a nuisance to principals and school boards. Yet they also serve as one of the few legitimate ways that prisoners can communicate with each other and with anyone on the outside who cares to listen. In that respect, they have always been useful in airing prisoner complaints and in publishing information which, in coming from other prisoners, will be regarded as reasonably reliable by the prison community.

The department had argued that the $58,000 it costs to publish the newspapers was becoming prohibitive. But that argument just wasn't convincing. It's more likely that what the department was really trying to do was to avert some adverse court decisions regarding what can or can't be published in prison newspapers, an attempt that, had it been pursued, would have created more administrative and legal problems than it possibly could have solved.

In light of all that, both the department's decision to rescind and the pressure from Assemblyman Art Agnos that helped bring it about made absolute sense. Letting prisoners publish newspapers is not penological panacea but it is one of the few ways of keeping open the possibility that all the messages behind bars aren't violent and all the rhetoric doesn't have to be abusive — that there are, in short, civilized ways of doing things.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Fear of Begin's plans led to tough stance

WASHINGTON — The story behind President Reagan's sudden firmness with Israel over the West Bank is told in secret State Department dispatches. They make clear what the president's advisers fear Israel might do in the occupied territory unless deterred by the United States.

Jack Anderson

One secret report seen by my associate Dale Van Atta puts it bluntly and ominously: "There is reason to fear that the Israeli government might capitalize on demonstrations in the occupied territories, or even provoke such demonstrations, in order to expel large numbers of Arabs as 'security risks.' (Israeli) defense officials admit such contingency plans exist."

It's no laughing matter to accuse an ally of willingness to stage a provocation, especially an ally with as much domestic political clout as Israel has. So it is a measure of the concern that top U.S. officials have over Prime Minister Menachem Begin's actions and suspected intentions that they unanimously urged the president to get tough with Israel. If Alexander Haig had still been secretary of state, the president might have held out, at least until after the November elections.

Why would Israel want to expel "large numbers of Arabs" from the West Bank territory it captured in the 1967 war? Simply put, the resources — land and water — of the West Bank cannot support many more than the 800,000 Palestinians and 20 000 Jewish settlers now living there.

Yet Israel continues to build new settlements in the disputed area; one Israeli official has stated publicly that he wants 250,000 Jews living there by 1987. To achieve this goal, about an equal number of Arabs would have to be kicked out.

To buttress their suspicions of Israel's ultimate goal for the West Bank, State Department and CIA experts point to a pattern of repression by Israeli military occupation forces that has emerged over the past 15 years.

Punishment for actual or alleged support of Palestinian terrorist groups has always been draconian: Houses of relatives or sympathizers are blown up, and 24-hour curfews are imposed. Collective punishment on entire villages is often exacted for the crimes of a few inhabitants. Harassment of Arabs by armed gangs of Jewish religious zealots is routinely winked at by the occupation authorities.

The State Department used to send its own observers into the West Bank to investigate allegations of repression, but it stopped the practice when contents of the incriminating cables were leaked, embarrassing both the Israelis and the U.S. government, which did nothing to stop the incidents.

Over the years, I have sent my own reporters to the West Bank — Ron McRae in 1980, Peter Grant in 1981, and Van Atta just a few weeks ago. They talked to both Israeli and Arab sources, and their reports made clear the pattern of Israeli behavior.

I talked to Begin about the West Bank when I was in Jerusalem recently, and this is what he said: Israel is willing to grant "total autonomy" to the West Bank Arabs, allowing them their own civil administration.

But the catch — and it's a big one — is this: Israel would be the protector of the West Bank. There would be no Arab army, only Israeli troops.

By their own civil administrators, Begin presumably meant the village leagues, the organizations of Arabs who are not inflamed by Palestinian nationalism and are willing to live in an Israeli protectorate. Needless to say, they are regarded by fervent Palestinian nationalists as Israeli puppets.

There seems increasing reason to believe that Begin and his top associates intend to keep the West Bank — or, as they persist in calling it, Judea and Samaria. Whether they do it by outright annexation or in the guise of a protectorate, this is sure to keep the Palestinian issue boiling. That's why President Reagan was persuaded to make his rhetorical pre-emptive strike against Begin's suspected intentions.

GETTING A 'CHEATER': Patricia Rogers is a 27-year-old mentally handicapped woman who lives with her parents in Escondido, Calif. She receives monthly Supplemental Security Income payments as a victim of Prader-Willi Syndrome, a disorder that leaves her, among other things, unable to handle her own checking account.

Until two years ago, her SSI checks were sent to her father, who would have Patricia endorse the check and would then deposit it to the family account. Then Social Security officials suggested that the SSI checks be sent directly for deposit in the family account. And the Rogers' bank recommended that she be made a co-signator on the account, even though she is incapable of writing a check.

Social Security has now ruled that because Patricia is a co-signator on the account, she legally has access to all the family funds in it. Technically, this means that she has been overpaid, and owes the government the amount in the family account that's in excess of her SSI benefits. The amount, Social Security claims, is between $6,000 and $8,000.

Social Security officials say it is their policy to warn SSI recipients against "commingling" accounts to avoid this very situation. But Rogers says he was never cautioned about this, and notes that it was Social Security that suggested the change in payment that led to the commingling.

Officials say Patricia can apply for a waiver to avoid payment once she gets the actual bill for the technical overpayments.

GEORGE F. WILL

Reagan proposals will put Israelis to test

WASHINGTON — It has been said that mankind hopes vaguely but dreads precisely. Israel has had more reasons for dread than for hope. But rational prudence may be disappearing, replaced by reflexive negativeness in the current Israeli government.

George F. Will

The government is characterized by a lack of subtlety, a lack that has until now characterized Israel's enemies, often to Israel's advantage. Israel's government is forfeiting a chance to shape to its advantage a debate that it can not prevent.

The debate about President Reagan's peace proposals can begin with this fact: Jordan is, historically and ethnically, a Palestinian state, and any renewed "association" with a West Bank entity will make Jordan even more Palestinian. King Hussein — a Hashemite, not a Palestinian — may be ambivalent about re-acquiring responsibility for the territory he lost in 1967.

But whatever Jordan's Palestinian complexion, it does not mean that the Hashemite dynasty is less than legitimate. George I was England's legitimate sovereign, and he was as German as sauerkraut and deaf as an adder to the English language. Israel's defense minister, Ariel Sharon, says: "The Greeks went looking for a king and they chose an English-German one. So why shouldn't the Palestinians keep a Hashemite king?" Indelicately put, but a good question.

Reagan's plan will die in the cradle if Hussein continues his unkingly obedience to the decision of Arab powers at Rabat in 1974, declaring the PLO the sole legitimate representative of Palestinians, most of whom are Hussein's subjects. Israel should refuse to participate in any process that allocates any role to the PLO, about which Reagan said two years ago:

"(The PLO) represents no one but the leaders who established it as a means of organizing aggression against Israel. The PLO is kept under tight control in every state in the area except Lebanon, which it has effectively destroyed....The PLO has murdered more Palestinians than it has Israelis."

Actually, the PLO also represents, in addition to its Soviet sponsors, its Arab-principally Saudi — benefactors. Reagan's administration manifestly has a soft spot in its heart, not to say its head, for the Saudi regime. Reagan's proposals will test his administration's hypothesis that the Saudi regime, contrary to all the evidence that it is rickety and radical, actually is stable and constructive. The plan really requires Saudi support, political and financial, for Hussein to take his proper responsibility for the Palestinians.

There are limited and, over time, declining benefits from tracing far back the roots of historical controversies. But because the Saudi and Jordanian regimes have been so sniffy about the legitimacy of the state of Israel, it is useful to note the following.

Jordan is a somewhat jerry-built nation, improvised relatively recently, but the Hashemite dynasty is ancient. It ruled Mecca and Medina for many centuries, until its place was usurped in this century by Saudis. The Saudis do not expect the Hashemite elite to return from whence it came, and neither the Hashemites, who have put down roots in Palestine, nor the Saudis, should pretend they expect Palestinian refugees to return to Palestine's coastal plain, to Tel Aviv and Haifa.

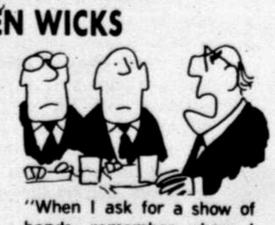

Hussein's attack on Israel in 1967, which cost him control of the West Bank and part of Jerusalem, was not just unprovoked; it came after Israeli assurances, through the United States, that Israel would not attack if not attacked. But Henry Kissinger, writing of Hussein, says of 1967: "Though (Egyptian President Gamal Abdal) Nasser had treated the (Jordanian) Kingdom with aloof disdain, Hussein carried out his high conception of the requirement of Arab solidarity and entered a war that Nasser had already lost."

That is an interesting ascription of moral weight to Hussein. For years it has been said that Jordan was not weighty enough to be the first neighbor to make peace with Israel, but that it must be the second. Writing about Hussein's position as it was a decade ago, Kissinger says Hussein "was trapped in the paradox that he was the Arab leader most ready to make peace, yet of all the territories it had conquered, Israel was most reluctant to relinquish the Jordanian portion, which it most intimately connected with its own tradition."

Reagan's proposals will test not only the administration's cheery assessment of the Saudis, but Kissinger's kindly assessment of Hussein. At least, the proposals will test these hypotheses, if the Israeli government can regain its composure and show the political flair that has been as important as military virtuosity in preserving Israel as an embodiment of intelligence and bravery.

'Soviet dream' is easy as a phone call

Good news from Moscow! The Soviet Telephone Company, according to news reports, now has a 24-hour working number where you can call for counseling and psychiatric advice. The phones are manned by professional personnel from the "National Center for the Study and Prevention of Extreme Conditions."

Art Buchwald

What kind of calls are coming through? Here's my best guess:

"This is the Moscow Confidential Telephone. I am listening."

"I want to leave the Soviet Union. The police say I'm crazy."

"Why do you want to leave the motherland?"

"Because my father went to California, and he said it was a much better place to live, and he wants me to join him."

"Do you always do what your father tells you?"

"Not always. But this time I think he has a pretty good idea."

"You shouldn't make big decisions when you're depressed."

"I'm only depressed because they won't give me an exit visa to go to California. I don't want to spend another winter in Moscow."

"You can't solve your personal problems by moving some place else. You will only take them with you."

"That's what you think boykitch. Just get me on a plane to California and I won't have a problem in the world."

"You're not in any condition to talk about getting on a plane. Come to the institute tomorrow and we'll talk about it some more."

"That's what the police told me."

"Listen to them. They know more than your father."

• • •

"Hello, is this the Confidential Telephone?"

"You sound angry."

"I am angry. How come the people in the U.S.S.R. don't have enough to eat?"

"You think we don't have enough to eat?"

"I know we don't have enough to eat. Have you been to the market this week?"

"Do you always get angry when you don't have enough to eat?"

"No, sometimes I do a dance and sing the 'Volga Boatman.' Why shouldn't I get angry when I don't have enough to eat?"

"Anger is dangerous if you don't know how to channel it. Who are you angry at?"

"You shouldn't get angry at them."

"Then who should I get angry at?"

"You can get angry at me."

"Why should I get angry at you. You don't have anything to do with collective farm planning do you?"

"No. But on the other hand I don't have the authority to send you away to Siberia for 20 years either."

• • •

"This is your Confidential Telephone. Do you have a problem?"

"No, I'm happy as can be. I have a two-room apartment I share with four other families, my son was captured in Afghanistan, I work two shifts at the steel factory, but only get paid for one, and my daughter has just been thrown out of the university for reading a book by Boris Pasternak. I've never been more content in my life."

"So why did you call?"

"Don't I sound nuts to you?"

"No. You sound like you're going through a mid-life crisis. It happens when anyone thinks he's achieved the Soviet dream."

Fire of undetermined origin destroyed a storage shed near the Rankin Highway and County Road 120 shortly before 1 p.m. Wednesday. Four fire department units responded to the blaze and spent more than an hour bringing it under control. The wood frame building is owned by Midland land developer Red Little.

Mortgage funds available through county program

Funds are still available for mortgage loans being made under the Midland County Housing Finance Corporation's Single Family Mortgage Revenue Bond program, according to Steve Davidson, corporation president.

Eligible housing under the program includes owner-occupied single-family dwellings located within the city or within the county. The borrower must not have owned a principal resident at any time during the three years prior to the closing of the program mortgage loan. Maximum family income of the borrower is $48,500. Minimum down payment is 5 percent.

Davidson explained that federal legislation places a restriction on the purchase price of a dwelling under this program. For a new home the maximum is $84,460. For an existing home the maximum is $65,932. Each mortgage loan bears an interest rate of 13⅜ percent and is a growing equity mortgage loan, with a term of about 14 years. Monthly payments during the first year will be based on a 30-year amortization schedule. During the next nine years monthly payments will be increased by an amount equal to 3½ percent of the monthly payments for the preceding year. Starting in year 10 and through year 14, monthly payments will remain static, and the mortgage will mature at the end of the 14th year.

Davidson stated that four local lending institutions are participating in the program: First Savings and Loan Association, Mortgage and Trust, Inc., Jackie Johnson Mortgage Co., and Fort Worth Mortgage Co. Applications for mortgage loans under this program can be made at any of these institutions.

Officers ordered to halt moonlighting

HOUSTON (AP) — Police Chief Lee Brown has ordered 328 officers to quit their off-duty jobs until they pass a new firearms proficiency test.

The order was issued to keep the department in compliance with a law passed during the last session of the Texas Legislature, Brown said Wednesday. The law requires all peace officers to prove with pinpoint accuracy that they can safely shoot their service revolvers.

Boyfriend testifies about sitter's actions with baby

BLOUNTSTOWN, Fla. (AP) — Although he admits he was drunk at the time, the boyfriend of a baby sitter accused of murdering two children says he may have seen her hold "something" to the face of one of the infants the night of the tot's death.

"I believe she had something in the baby's face, but I doh't know what," Robert Johnson testified Wednesday at the Calhoun County Courthouse in a pre-trial hearing for Christine Falling, 19, charged with two counts of first-degree murder.

But the blond, unshaven man said he drank more than a quart of whiskey that night, and added "I ain't sure" of what he saw, if anything, on July 3 — the night 2-month-old Travis Coleman died. The boy was found dead the next morning in the trailer Johnson shared with Miss Falling.

Miss Falling also is charged in the death of Johnson's niece, 2-year-old Cassidy "Muffin" Johnson, who died in February 1980. Miss Falling has pleaded innocent and her trial begins in November.

Johnson also testified he and Miss Falling got into an argument the night the Coleman baby died and that he pushed the baby sitter off the bed in the direction of the baby, sleeping on a pallet next to the bed, but he did not know if Miss Falling fell on the child.

Johnson was among seven people, including the baby's mother, Lisa Coleman, 17, who gave depositions to the defense Wednesday.

Reporters were barred from attending the depositions of two doctors who had treated the Coleman baby because they were given in the physicians' offices, but tapes of their testimony were provided. Other depositions were closed by order of Circuit Judge W.L. Bailey.

Dr. Clifford Bristol said he saw the Coleman baby in the emergency room of Calhoun General Hospital on June 26 after the child was brought there with breathing difficulties and a bloody nose.

"The child was gasping for breaths and had a rapid respiratory rate," Bristol said, and he decided the tot should be sent to a Tallahassee hospital because there was evidence of pneumonia.

Bristol said he could not determine the cause of the problem, but saw no evidence of choking or other physical injury. He said he was bothered because the child had no fever, unusual for babies with pneumonia.

"The child was otherwise a healthy child from what I can understand," Bristol said. "I'm not totally convinced...that this was due to an infectious process."

Bristol would not speculate on the cause of the baby's death, which occurred about a week after the emergency room visit. The baby was released from the Tallahassee hospital less than two days before it was found dead.

Teacher says she saw ex-guard enter theater where woman's body found

HOUSTON (AP) — A retired school teacher has testified she saw Clifford X. Phillips enter an abandoned meat market where a fur coat belonging to a murdered theater director was found.

Octavia Clayton said she watched Phillips, a former security guard, and a female companion drive up to the empty building the day after Iris Siff, executive director of the Nina Vance Alley Theater, was found strangled Jan. 13 in her downtown office.

Ms. Clayton was among several witnesses to testify Wednesday at Phillips' capital murder trial.

Phillips, who was fired for sleeping on the job, has told reporters he strangled Mrs. Siff with a telephone cord. However, he has pleaded innocent because he said Mrs. Siff confronted him as he tried to burglarize her office.

Ms. Clayton testified she saw Phillips and the woman, later identified as June Bordeaux, emerge carrying a bulging bag and drive away as the building went up in flames. A fur coat belonging to Mrs. Siff was found in the rubble.

Injunction granted

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — A state district judge has overruled the Texas secretary of state and granted an injunction to the Citizens Party to put the names of its candidates on the November ballot.

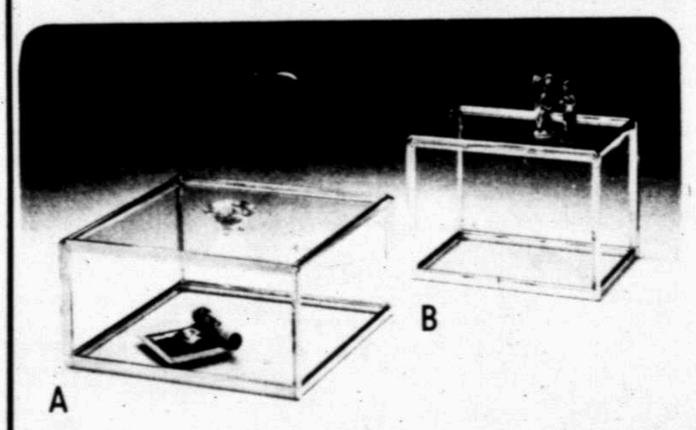

Bob Poteet, co-chairman of the party and its candidate for governor, wept outside the courtroom after Clark's decision.

"We fought so hard and so long," Poteet said. "We just had to do it."

The group had collected more than enough signatures to win a spot on the slate, but Secretary of State David Dean rejected the petition because most of the names were not accompanied by voter registration numbers.

Trudeau

FAIRWAY, Kan. (AP) — As of the beginning of next year, say goodbye to Zonker, Joanie, Uncle Duke, B.D., Mike and the rest of the cast of "Doonesbury" for about 18 months.

Cartoonist Garry Trudeau says they are "confused and out of sorts," and he himself needs "a breather."

"For almost 15 years, the main characters have been trapped in a time warp, and so find themselves carrying the colors and the scars of two separate generations," Trudeau said in a statement issued Wednesday by Universal Press, which syndicates the strip.

"It was unfair to stretch their formative years to embrace both Vietnam and preppy."

He added, "Investigative cartooning is a young man's game. Since the industry frowns on vacations, I'll be claiming a medical leave."

John P. McMeel, president of Universal Press, said the strip will stop Jan. 2 and will not resume until the fall of 1984. The strip, which now runs in nearly 700 papers, began with 28 subscribers in 1970 as an outgrowth off a strip Trudeau drew for Yale's college newspaper while a student there. Trudeau won a Pulitzer Prize in 1975.

The Florida Democrat marked his birthday by having his House Select Committee on Aging hear testimony Wednesday on the relationship between the young and old in the United States.

Among those present were 29 5-year-olds, Bob Keeshan, who plays Captain Kangaroo, and a teen-age actor who appeared in "On Golden Pond," Henry Fonda's last movie, in which the late actor portrayed an elderly man facing death.

The young actor, Doug McKeon, 16, testified, "It's very sad when you realize that often parents are so involved in producing material benefits for their children that their children are deprived of the joys of their (parents') presence.

"And later those same parents become grandparents and retire to some old-age oasis and their grandchildren are deprived of their presence; and they themselves lose the joy of sharing with the young. They become the 'forgotten generation' twice removed."

The 29 children from Dard's-Parkland Day Care Center in Washington sat quietly through the testimony, though some appeared to drowse under the hot television lights. But they all came to life when Pepper's aides wheeled out a white birthday cake with 82 candles.

BOSTON (AP) — The state Supreme Court says author Norman Mailer's fourth wife cannot withdraw her divorce complaint because she doesn't like the settlement, but she may appeal the terms.

"Displeasure with the alimony and property settlement award is not 'sufficient cause' for dismissal," the justices said Wednesday in the unsigned, unanimous opinion that was a win and a loss for both principals in a divorce granted March 21, 1980.

The couple married in 1963 and separated in 1974, and the former Beverly Rentz Bentley filed for divorce in 1976 on grounds of cruel and abusive treatment.

Jury to probe Belushi's death

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A grand jury will investigate the drug death of comedian John Belushi, it was reported today.

The Los Angeles Times, quoting sources close to the inquiry, said the two-day hearing by the Los Angeles County grand jury would be held later this month or early in October, and that actor Robin Williams will be called to testify.

Deputy District Attorney Michael Montagna, asked to comment on the story, said his office "does not comment on grand jury matters while they are in progress."

The newspaper said the district attorney would issue subpoenas to get the testimony of people who may have knowledge the final hours of Belushi, 33.

Episcopal Church changes hymnal

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Nineteenth-century poet James Russell Lowell is out, and modern poet W.H. Auden is in.

The two changes are a sampling of the reshuffled contents of a new hymnbook in store for the 7,578 congregations of the Episcopal Church.

At the church's General Convention on Wednesday, the House of Deputies, the convention's lay-clergy branch, gave apparent approval to a new collection to replace the 1940 hymnal.

In much-argued refinements late Wednesday, Lowell's lyrics for "Once to Every Man and Nation" in old hymnal were voted out of the new book.

But Auden's poem, "He is the Way," was voted for inclusion among 262 new hymn texts for the revised hymnal, to retain 347 of 600 numbers in the old book, which hadn't been revised for 42 years.

At length, delegates debated Lowell's and Auden's poems and a score of hymns that were turned down.

The vote total of the House of Deputies was not immediately announced, but clear indications pointed toward approval.

Earlier, the House of Bishops, the other house of the church's legislature, had authorized the new hymnal. Scholars, poets, musicians and theologians had worked on it for a decade.

The Episcopal Church has 3 million members.

In other convention actions, the bishops approved recognition and provisional intercommunion with three Lutheran denominations which have voted to merge. The House of Deputies has yet to act on the matter.

The bishops also voted to divide the Tennessee Diocese into three dioceses, adding western and eastern dioceses, and to divide the Dallas diocese into Dallas and western Dallas, covering the Fort Worth area.

In the three hours of debate and voting on the new hymnal, some old-time hymns that had enthusiastic advocates were deleted in the prolonged discussion.

Among those that lost out were "He's Got the Whole World in His Hands," "I Need Thee Every Hour," "Turn Back, O Man" and "The Battle Hymn of the Republic."

But some songs, which were recommended for deletion by a hymn revision commission headed by the Rev. Marion Hatchett of Sewanee, Tenn., were restored in floor action by the bishops or deputies.

These included "Now The Day is Over," "My Country 'Tis of Thee," "I Sing a Song to the Saints of God," "Almighty Father, Strong to Save" and "Stand Up, Stand Up, for Jesus."

Lowell's poem was dropped because it seems to deny a Christian premise that God repeatedly forgives people and gives them many chances to mend their ways, Hatchett said.

A hymn text by British author Rudyard Kipling, who died in 1936, was deleted because it was "uncomfortably imperialistic," the commission said. The text of "God of Our Fathers, Known of Old," refers to "lesser breeds" and "heathen heart that puts her trust in reeking tube and iron shard."

Three Lutheran churches to merge

By The Associated Press

After voting overwhelmingly to merge into a new 5.5 million-member church that would be the largest Lutheran body in the country, delegates to three conventions in three states joined by telephone in a prayer that reflected their disparate pasts.

The church conventions, meeting simultaneously in Kentucky, Ohio and California, made a commitment Wednesday to create a new, as yet unnamed, church by Jan. 1, 1988.

The delegates also voted to appoint a 70-member commission to iron out differences in the doctrines and structures of the three groups — the Lutheran Church in America, the American Lutheran Church and the Association of Evangelical Lutheran Churches.

Cheers went up in turn as each convention president announced the nearly unanimous vote. Then the delegates said a prayer asking that "the Holy Spirit ... gather us, as long dispersed Lutherans, to a richer commission."

The prayer was printed simultaneously on video screens at all three conventions. In unison, the groups sang the hymn "The Church's Sure Foundation."

The conventions also agreed to exchange representatives with the Lutheran Merger Commission in Canada, and all three U.S. conventions were studying a plan to allow joint communion with Episcopalians.

If the new church is formed, it would become the third largest Protestant denomination in the United States, behind the Southern Baptists and Methodists, and would have over 11,000 congregations.

The merger would also mean that 98.8 percent of all Lutherans in the country would belong to three large churches — the new church, the 2.6 million member Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod and the 400,000 member Wisconsin Evangelical Church.

Different Christmas greeting

By ANDREW JAFFE
Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — Wow, wait a minute — a Christmas greeting card that plays "Silent Night"!

The heart of the system is a plastic circuit board about one inch square that holds a tiny memory chip, where the music is stored as digital data. The speaker is a one inch wafer transducer with a paperboard amplifier. It's all powered by a watch battery.

American Express is charging $35 for a box of six cards. Meyers says the cards cost Amex $2.50 to $3 each.

Amex is playing coy about its supplier. Business Week speculates that Hitachi, Nippon Electric and Oki Electric have "all produced similar microelectronic gear for digital watches."

Meanwhile, the nation's two biggest card firms, American Greetings Corp. and Hallmark Cards Inc., are trying to develop their own musical card capability. American reportedly has a series of 12 electronic greetings, including one that plays "Happy Birthday," ready to appear early next year. Hallmark, executives say, is still debating whether the electronic card is going to be a fad or a permanent fixture of the greeting card market.

"As a one-shot thing," Thomas Banks, product manager for new cards at Hallmark told Business Week, "can you imagine how tiresome it would be, getting 60 musical Christmas cards?"

Meyers admits that Amex never test-marketed the card. "This is one of the few times we're just rolling out with something," he said. "We had to. It's not often you come up with a musical Christmas card."

Charcoal often effective drug overdose treatment

Research conducted at the University of Iowa shows that charcoal removes drugs that have entered the bloodstream.

In a study on six volunteers, they found activated charcoal significantly reduced the time that doses of phenobarbital, a sedative, remained in the bloodstream. And they said this simple, safe treatment may also rid the body of other drugs taken in potentially harmful quantities.

The study was conducted by Dr. Mary J. Berg and associates and was published in today's New England Journal of Medicine.

They tested the method on six healthy volunteers who took phenobartibal. The men drank several glasses of charcoal mixed with water, and this dramatically reduced the time the drug circulated through the body.

The drug's half-life — the time needed for half of it to be eliminated from the blood — fell from 110 hours to 15 hours.

Crab apple trees favorites for yards

By DX FENTEN
Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

The crab apple tree, cold-hardy and beautiful of bloom, is among the most popular of landscaping trees. With fall tree-planting time approaching, these beauties are worth a look if your yard needs some dressing up.

There are so many varieties of crab apples that selecting the best type for your property may be a many-weekend project. But planting it will take only a few hours from one weekend day. First, sit back and spend some time in contemplation.

Could you use a tree to soften the corner of a shed, your house or the garage? Do you need something beautiful to block out a less-than-beautiful view? How about a series of colorful beauties to line your driveway and help make your home even more of a castle than it already is today?

ARE YOU A BIRD and wildlife lover who needs some sort of tree to bid a warm welcome to your feathered, sweet-singing friends? Do you love natural beauty and want a tree that will become an almost solid mass of color, whether white, pink or shades of red ranging from a pinkish rose and moving to a deep blood red? Do you want a tree that needs little maintenance?

Do you have the feeling we've gone overboard in singing the praises of crab apples? We're actually on safe ground — not out on the proverbial limb at all. Throughout the United States in those areas that have cold winters, crab apples are the most popular flowering landscape trees. All those homeowners can't be wrong.

BEFORE WE GIVE some suggestions for planting these trees, we'd better pause to give you some idea of the best varieties, according to their outstanding features. For example, though the main difference (for our purposes) between crab apples and apples is the size of their fruit (horticulturists rule that trees with fruits less than two inches across are crab apples, those with larger fruits are apples), there are some crab apples that should be grown especially for their fruits.

If crab apple jellies and preserves are the apples of your eye, choose from varieties that have the largest fruit: Dolgo, Whitney, Chestnut, Hyslop or Beauty. If you are more interested in the fruits as colorful landscape features on your trees, Bob White and Indian Magic have small, colorful fruits that stay on the tree throughout the fall and early winter. Others that should be considered for fruit interest include White Angel, Rosebud and Red Jade. For sensational, aromatic flowers that will cover the tree entirely, consider Lemoine Purple, Bechtel Tea, Japanese Flowering.

IT IS IMPORTANT to note here that some crab apples flower profusely only in alternate years. The reason for this is that fruit formation follows the flowers. When you have both flowers and fruit, it means the tree has spent considerable energy producing the fruits in one year, so it slackens off the next year's flowering and fruiting. If this is a major consideration, choose the varieties that flower heavily each year, including Lemoine Purple, Ormiston Roy, Arnold and Bechtel.

If your interest in crab apples goes past the fruit and the flowers to the foliage, you should choose from between Royalty and Tschonoski. And, if your landscaping considerations require trees that are upright but spreading, choose from among Royalty, Ormiston Roy, Indian Magic, Dolgo, Adams, Jack Siberian and others of that type. For upright trees that are not noted for spreading, it would be White Angel and Tschonoski. Rounded and spreading trees include Redbud and Japanese Flowering.

TO COMPLETE the everything-you-always-wanted-in-landscaping-tree roundup, Columnar Siberian is narrow and pyramidal, Tea and Parkman are vase-shaped, open and interesting, and Sargent is broad, spreading and low. For those who must have at least one "weeping something," Red Jade fills the bill.

By now it should have occurred to most homeowners that the most difficult part of growing crab apples takes place either in the narrow confines of your mind or in the wide open spaces of your favorite local nursery. Once you have made your selection, the rest is easy and pleasant.

As soon as it starts to cool off, you'll have excellent weather and proper timing for planting your crab apple trees. If you can get your trees into the ground as soon as possible, they will have a chance to establish themselves before the cold weather puts a halt to everything. You can be certain that such a tree has an excellent chance of going on to become a healthy, magnificent specimen.

WHEN YOU'RE SHOPPING and selecting your tree, it's not necessary to chose the largest, fullest tree you can find. Crab apples are fast growers and quickly reach mature size. Smaller trees are also cheaper and are quicker to recover from transplanting shock. If you do choose a full-grown tree, buy one with plenty of soil around the roots. That means special equipment to get it to your home and either plenty of digging or more special equipment to get it into the ground once you get it there.

To plant your young tree, dig a hole that is wide enough to accept the roots without thir being crowded. Dig it deep enough so the tree will sit about one to two inches deeper than it was growing at the nursery (except grafted dwarfs wher ethe graft should be just above the soil line). You'll be able to see the line on the tree that indicates the old soil level. As you dig, be sure you keep the good topsoil separate from the usually poorer quality subsoil. When you start to replace the soil, put the topsoil in first, tamp it down, and put the subsoil after you have thoroughly laced it with enriched organic matter including compost, humus or peat moss. Before completing the soil replacement, put several stakes into the ground around tree, being careful not to damage the roots.

THOUGH THERE IS some difference of opinion on pruning your crab apple trees immediately after planting, it seems to be a good idea to at least remove those branches that are obviously not necessary, that are rubbing against other branches and that will not fit in the overall design plan of the shape of the mature tree. Prune carefully and leave as many main branches as possible. Though preliminary shaping is possible at this time, the more branches you can leave, the greater will be the overall growth pattern of the tree.

Once your crab apple tree has been planted, watered thoroughly and staked, the rest is up to nature. You can help by making sure no weeds are allowed to grow around the base of the tre to rob it of nutrients. Of course you'll keep an eye on your tree so it is never allowed to dry out while waiting for rain. A thorough watering about once a week for an hour with a soaker hose (in those weeks when there is no rain) will do the job nicely.

IT IS VITAL to fertilize your crab apple tree regularly, especially if it is a young one. If a tree is going to achieve about a foot of terminal growth each year, it will need all the nutrient help you can give. For a 2-year-old tree, a half-pound of fertilizer spread around the tree to the diameter of its branches, is perfect. Use a complete fertilizer and put it down so it is available to the tree as soon as spring growth begins.

If your tree is growing in a lawn area and you can't simply spread the fertilizer around and under the branches, poke some holes in the ground, about six inches deep and 12 inches apart. Put the fertilizer into the holes, dividing it so there is some fertilizer for each hole. Water thoroughly and your tree will thrive.

IT IS HOPED that you chose one of the disease-resistant varieties of crab apples when you did you buying. That eliminates all but the most limited spraying of your trees caused by the direct attack of a specific disease or insect not resisted by the tree.

That's just about all there is to growing and maintaining your crab apple trees. With this much attention, you'll have beautiful trees, frequently bearing flowers the first year after planting. Since most of us are rarely content to then sit back and let nature takes its course — and then have to stick our noses in, to help, of course — the best thing we can do in this case is to do some careful pruning. This sort of pruning will keep the tree healthy and growing in the shape and to the size you want.

Though, as a general rule, pruning crab apples should be minimal, you can look to prune out crossing and rubbing branches, branches that run parallel and an inch or so apart, branches that are skinny and spindly, branches that are much too close to the ground, and branches that are "water sprouts" and growing straight up through the center of the tree. Get these out periodically and your crab apples will be far prettier, and far closer to what you were seeking and saw in your mind's eye when you first envisioned them.

NOW SIT BACK. Watch the beauty develop. Watch the birds come. Watch the flowers bud and bloom. Watch the colors blaze and fade. Watch everything and then admit that millions of gardeners just can't be wrong.

Legalized gambling: Harmless fun or big problem?

By MARIAN J. MEYERS
Hearst Feature Service

ALBANY — It's everywhere — church raffles, poker, bingo, lotteries, horse and sports betting, craps. It's at the corner grocery store, where patrons can purchase Lotto or Instant Game tickets. It's in neighborhood pool halls, bars and back alleys, where people gather to place money on themselves, others and Lady Luck. And it will continue to be all around us.

Gambling, if not the national pastime, is certainly part of the American way of life. And some say it is becoming a growing problem as more states legalize what was once considered an act of questionable morality.

At issue is whether legalized gambling leads to illegal betting and swells the ranks of compulsive gamblers. At stake are hundreds of millions of dollars now going into state and municipal coffers.

IN 1981 ALONE, New York state and city governments made almost $128.5 million from off-track betting and thoroughbred and harness racing, with most of the OTB revenue going to municipalities where the parlors are located.

The three state lottery games — Lotto, Daily Numbers-Win 4 and the Instant Game — also bring in a sizable profit. Sales reached $424.8 million in fiscal 1982, resulting in a $179 million cut for the state.

A 1981 survey conducted by Gaming Business magazine ranked New York second in authorized gambling, right behind Nevada, which has six approved types of gambling to New York's five. Bingo, harness and thoroughbred racing, off-track betting and the State Lottery have earned the Empire State's stamp of approval. But a constitutional amendment to legalize casino gambling died in the legislature last year after receiving approval the year before. For casino gambling to be legal in New York, two consecutive legislative sessions must pass the bill and voters must approve it in a referendum.

STATISTICS INDICATE that six of 10 Americans 18 years and older gamble — and the number is steadily increasing as more states legalize it in various forms. According to the National Council on Compulsive Gambling, 1.3 million adults are compulsive gamblers.

"Legalized gambling increases the number of people gambling," says Joseph A. Dunne, council director and president, "and a certain percentage will become addicted to gambling. And these people will not be content with legal gambling."

Dunne's contention is backed by the Commission on the Review of the National Policy on Gambling. Among the commission's findings were that 1.1 million adults nationwide are compulsive gamblers, while an additional 3.3 million are potential compulsive gamblers. And it discovered that Nevada, which had legalized most forms of gaming, had the largest number of compulsive gamblers — 2.62 percent, three times the national rate.

REGARDLESS OF WHETHER legalization leads to compulsive habits, proponents maintain the state has no right to deny that form of entertainment to the public simply because a small number of people become addicted to it. They also claim that the availability of legal gambling makes illegal gambling less attractive.

"Our competitive edge is that it is legal," says Russell Gladieux, administrative director of the New York State Lottery. "Most people at one time or another buy lottery tickets." The agency expects to sell $510 million in tickets during fiscal 1983. With 5.9 million households statewide, that amounts to $1.66 a week per household.

The number of lottery tickets sold has steadily increased since the state got into the business in 1967, Gladieux says, mainly because there are more places to buy them. While the total sales for fiscal 1981 were $236.2 million, he notes that fiscal 1982 brought in $188.6 million more. The state gets 35 to 45 percent of the take; the rest goes to the winners and for operational costs.

THERE ARE THOSE who claim that OTB is the leading cause of compulsive gambling among the legal varieties. Off-track betting began in New York in 1971, and OTB revenues have increased every year since then, says Kenneth Beh, director of public relations for the state Racing and Wagering Board.

According to Beh, 1981 was the first year since 1973 that both the handle (money intake) and attendance at the state's four thoroughbred and seven harness tracks has been down from previous figures, and he expects 1982 to follow suit. But OTB revenue for 1982 increased 2.9 percent, amounting to $1.5 billion.

ALL THIS MEANS big bucks for states looking for extra cash to take the pinch out of federal budget cuts and economic hard times.

DEAR ABBY

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: My husband has this infatuation (maybe love) for a good friend of ours. She is a very dear, sweet person. When she comes around, old Herb lights up like a Christmas tree when only minutes before he was an old grouch. The minute she leaves, Herb goes back to being an old grouch again.

This has been going on for a long time, but lately it's been getting worse. I have a hard time handling my feelings around this woman. Poor dear, I'm sure she's not aware of my feelings, and I can't blame her for the way my husband acts. She does nothing to encourage him.

Incidentally, Herb and I have a very platonic sex life. What is your advice? — JEALOUS AND HURT

DEAR JEALOUS: Your central problem seems to be lack of communication between you and "old Herb." Instead of silently resenting his brightening up when your friend comes around, find out why he's grouchy in your presence. Get a dialogue going without becoming angry or judgmental. His grouchiness may be related to your "platonic" sex life. It's easier to effect a cure when you know the cause.

DEAR ABBY: I have a mother (divorced and living alone) who wants me to call her each time before I drop in. Sometimes I just happen to be in the neighborhood and feel like stopping by to say hello.

Yesterday she became very angry when I popped in on her. She said, "Why didn't you call me? I was planning on going out for the day!"

Do you think a daughter (I am 25) should have to call her own mother and make an appointment to see her? Thank you kindly. — UPSET

DEAR UPSET: In most cases, no. But since your mother asked spcifically that you call her, you should respect her wishes.

DEAR ABBY: I feel like a heel writing this, but I must. A woman comes to my home three days a week to do the laundry and housekeeping. She is an excellent worker and I pay her top salary. The problem? She has started to bring her 4-year-old child to work with her every day. At first the little girl sat quietly alone in the kithen, but lately she feels more at home, so she's been following me around asking questions. When her mother sees her doing this, she eprimands her, the child cries, and it upsets me.

Please don't think I'm criticizing the child. When she gets bored she looks for company. (I've bought her coloring books and she watches television, but she can't do that six hours a day.)

I don't have the heart to tell the woman not to bring her daughter here anymore, but I dislike feeling uncomfortable in my own home. I am not a mean person and I like children, but I feel sorry for the child. What should I do? — NO CITY, PLEASE

DEAR NO CITY: Ask your housekeeper to please make arrangements for the care of her child (away from your home) while she works for you. Tell her you feel sorry for the child. It's true.

New facts on alcoholism revealed

By JOANN RODGERS
Hearst Feature Service

NEW YORK — Scientists long have known that some people are more biologically susceptible to the effects of alcohol than others, but recent studies have uncovered important biological clues as to the reason, and, in the process, why alcoholism afflicts only some drinkers.

In one study, the results cast doubt on a popular theory which blames susceptibility to alcoholism on inborn differences in the way the brain fuels its operations. Pharmacology researchers Elizabeth Morrow and Miguel A. Medina at the University of Texas Health Science Center in San Antonio have found that brain cells in mice sensitive to alcohol use sugar the same way that brain cells do in non-sensitive mice.

At a meeting of the American Society for Pharmacology and Experimental Therapeutics, they described experiments in which they injected ethanol — beverage alcohol — into mice that are genetically more or less sensitive to the drug. Fifteen minutes later, they removed the animals' brains and carefully isolated nerve cells.

The nerve cells then were treated with a radioactively-labeled sugar substance which allowed the scientists to track the uptake of the sugar by the cells. Results showed no differences in uptake, suggesting that differences in brain sensitivity to alcohol are probably not due to the way the brain transports its major nutrient.

If what the Texas scentists discovered is confirmed, the search for the basis of alcohol sensitivity will be pushed more quickly in potentially more fruitful directions.

The second piece of research involves a newly discovered molecule called a leukotriene (loo-ko-TRY-en), or LT. LTs are a fatty acid made by all mammals and are part of a larger family of natural chemicals that includes prostaglandins and other potent hormone-like substances. Among other things, LTs are triggers in many severe allergic attacks, including asthma, and also are suspected of a major role in some heart attacks.

In the past two years, chemists — notably Dr. E.J. Corey of Harvard — have been able to synthetically produce these scarce substances and make them available for medical studies. At the University of Colorado, Dr. Robert Murphy, an organic chemist, has found that very small amounts of three LTs step up the firing rate of certain nerve cells — called Purkinje cells — in the brain. He and his coworkers also have learned that alcohol dramatically influences the impact of LTs on these cells in several ways. LTs have not yet been isolated from brain tissue, but chemically they may resemble several important genetically-controlled substances that help brain cells communicate with each other and direct the mind and body.

Alcohol is already known to alter the way that some brain chemicals work. If it turns out that LTs do bathe the brain, LTs — and drugs that block them — could mean a new set of strategies against alcoholism.

As a public health issue, the successful treatment of alcoholism may be second only to a cure for cancer. Its social and medical costs are measured in billions of dollars each year.

The search for biochemical clues to alcoholism is therefore a top priority, for if there are brain chemicals involved in alcohol sensitivity, they would be highly useful both as a way to identify those at high risk of alcoholism and as aides to design drugs that block their action.

Book explains digestive system

Hearst Feature Service

NEW YORK — Do you ever wonder what's going on inside your stomach? You're not alone — 20 million Americans suffer constantly from digestive problems and another 14 million suffer occasionally, yet the the digestive system continues to be viewed with ignorance, embarrassment and inappropriate humor.

According to Maureen Mylander, author of "Salesman Surgeon" and hundreds of medical columns, "It has not been socially acceptable to talk about digestive matters." Her new book, "The Great American Stomach Book," was written as an "owner's manual" for the stomach and explains how the digestive system works — and what to do when it doesn't.

"My book attempts to get the digestive tract out of the closet," Mylander said, adding that almost everyone has some kind of digestive problem which they're reluctant to talk about. "People will go to support groups and talk about all sorts of things, yet there are many cases where people will not go to a doctor out of embarrassment," she said.

Mylander said that stomach problems have a heavy relation to stress. "People with chronic diarrhea could relieve their symptoms if they could relieve their emotional stress."

Mylander hopes that her book will help people gain a sense of control over their ailments. "There are a number of things a person can do about digestive diseases. If you understand your digestive system, you'll know when a problem is serious and you should see a doctor. It'll also give you a sense of control in dealing with your doctor, so you won't become a chronic patient."

Mylander's book includes a "trouble shooter's guide" to digestive problems, which permits the reader to look up the appropriate ailment and see what to do about it.

Animal allergies common

By MICHAEL UNGER
Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

William Hinrichs loves to hunt deer, but if he gets too close they really get his dander up. Hinrichs is supremely allergic to deer. Not to dogs or cats or horses — just deer.

When he gets within 20 feet of a deer, he starts coughing and wheezing and his throat begins to close up. Hinrichs, a Mineola, N.Y. attorney, is caught on the antlers of a dilemma: He doesn't want to give up his hobby, but it's making him sick. "It's just their skin," the avid hunter explains. "Once they're skinned I have no problem. And I have no problem eating venison."

It hasn't always been that way. When Hinrichs began hunting deer about 20 years ago, he wasn't allergic to them. "In the beginning I had no reaction," he recalls, "and then in 1972 or 1973 I noticed the first symptom, watery eyes. It started small, but three to four years ago I began to have a clear reaction. When I was hunting in Canada, my eyes would water, my nose would get clogged up and drip, and I'd get short of breath. It was like an asthmatic attack. I felt awful."

Hinrichs and his allergy are representative of millions of people who develop a physical aversion to animals, often a household pet. It is the second most common type of airborne allergy, next to that caused by pollen, grasses, dust and molds. And, along with food allergies, it is among the most common of year-round allergic troubles. Most sufferers find relief by staying away from the particular animal that triggers their misery.

Others can't afford to, such as scientists who earn their livelihoods performing research with laboratory animals. Dr. David Levy, an allergist and immunologist at Johns Hopkins University, and Dr. Dorothy Sogn, a pediatric allergist with the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases, know of researchers who became allergic to laboratory monkeys or mice, and who have had to stop or curtail their experimental work. Sometimes doctoral students find their dissertations in jeopardy.

Levy knows of one scientist who may have missed winning a Nobel Prize because he started to break out in hives in the presence of guinea pigs and had to give up his work with a scientist who eventually won the coveted prize.

Others, especially the parents of infants, find themselves caught between conflicting needs. Do they give up Fido, who is practically a member of the family? Or do they let Junior face possible allergic complications such as asthmatic bronchial spasms, other serious respiratory problems and even anaphylactic shock, in which blood pressure drops dramatically and death will occur without prompt treatment?

Allergists, internists and pediatricians frequently tell their patients that the best treatment for allergic reactions to animals, particularly among infants, is to remove the source of the irrtant — in other words, get rid of the pet.

Now, however, many knowledgeable allergists tell parents to take a closer look before advising them to remove a beloved family pet. It may not be necessary to turn out the dog or cat because the new baby has a rash. Maybe the rash isn't an allergy at all.

"Having a rash is not necessarily equivalent to being allergic," says Levy, who is chairman of the American Academy of Allergy and Immunology's committee on allergy to animals. "You have to be exposed to develop an allergy; technically, you're not born with it. And only a small proportion of children may become allergic in the first year of life.

"If a child is not having serious difficulty, maybe it's not necessary to remove a pet," says Levy. "One of the questions is, when is it really justified? I wouldn't tell a parent to immediately get rid of a pet. I would discuss it with them and say it's something to watch. The symptoms may disappear."

Sogn, the pediatric allergist, points out that "the tendency to develop allergies is inherited to some extent. If there aren't allergies in the family, I'd look to make sure it's not just a runny nose. It's not always all or nothing. Each case has to be taken individually."

In Hinrichs' case, it took 10 years for him to develop the allergy and nearly 10 more years to find out, through the process of elimination, specifically what he was allergic to; a skin test by an allergist confirmed his conclusion.

"It only happened when I went deer hunting," he says. "I hunted ducks, pheasant, woodchuck, but the only time was with deer. I'd get up to the animal, dress it out, and 15 minutes later it would start." And each year it would take less and less time for the symptoms to appear. Hinrichs went to see the doctor when the symptoms appeared in five minutes.

Hinrichs has been getting allergy shots for more than a year because he wants to be able to continue hunting deer. But he says he doesn't know how effective the shots are. The standard yardstick is that about a third of all patients are helped permanently by allergy shots, while the remainder are usually helped somewhat for varying periods of time. Many young peole eventually grow out of their allergies and asthma, and better drugs and antihistamines may make lengthy, time-consuming and expensive series of shots unnecessary.

"He's unusual," says Hinrichs' allergist, Dr. Seymour Kaplan of Great Neck, N.Y., who is treating the hunter with shots of deer dander extract in an effort to desensitize him to the allergy. "In the state of Washington they may be treating for elk for all I know, but around here it's mostly dogs, cats and horses." Unusual, too, is the fact that Hinrichs does not appear to be allergic to his two dogs or to any other animal dander — the cast-off scales of skin, which in humans is called dandruff. Hinrichs, who also is allergic to penicillin, carries antihistamines wherever he goes for emergency use.

"Animal allergens cause trouble all year round," said Kaplan, who is co-chief of the pediatric allergy clinic in North Shore University Hospital. "I have one case where the father is a horse trainer and the child can't go near the father until he takes a shower and changes clothing. It's not the horse, it's the horse dander."

There is evidence that some animals yield more dander than others and more of the allergen that provokes the allergic response. There seem to be differences even among breeds. One 1977 European study, for example, shows that boxers, alsatians and short-haired dachshunds may be more allergenic than poodles, collies and long-haired dachshunds. Hair length doesn't appear to count; someone could be allergic to a bald dog, Sogn points out, because it is the dried skin flakes as well as dried saliva and urine that contain the irritating allergens.

Animal dander is airborne and may permeate a home, Sogn says. If a person's symnptoms improve away from the home and the pet, there is reason to believe animal dander is causing the symptoms.

"Then you have to weigh the seriousness of the allergy with the desire for a pet," Sogn says. "It's a matter of degree. The best treatment for any allergy is avoidance." When a decision is made to keep the pet, she says, "the medium ground is to make a haven" out of the allergic person's bedroom to provide a refuge from the dander and an atmosphere for proper breathing and adequate rest and sleep.

AT WIT'S END

Woody Allen again

By ERMA BOMBECK

Every three years, for the last decade, everything stops in this country while we dissect Woody Allen.

Critiquing Woody hasn't replaced baseball yet as a national pastime, but it's getting there. Is Woody's current humor as funny as his earlier humor? Has he out-Fellinied Fellini? Has he passed too far over the comedic line and is he stuck at tragedy? Is he rewriting himself?

I honestly don't know what this country would do if Woody Allen didn't surface every three years with a new venture. It has almost become a ritual. First, the critics get out reviews of all his past movies and compare them with the present one. Is it funnier than "Take the Money and Run"? As classy as "Annie Hall"? As serious as "Interiors"? As solid as "Manhattan"? The debates begin.

In fact, I know of no other profession where your present is judged by your past. When was the last time you said to your plumber, "I personally liked the way you installed our first water heater. Somehow this one doesn't 'work' for me."

For some reason, critics find humorists a challenge. They don't want to accept laughter for what it is . . . an illusive bit of mystery that bubbles out of control for no apparent reason. They want to trace it back to your birth like an umbilical hernia ("Did your mother or your father laugh?"). They want to believe it's biographical or relate it to your maturity or your social consciousness.

At a gathering the other night, I wandered into the following conversation:

"Comparing 'Midsummer Night's Sex Comedy' to 'Annie Hall' is like comparing Marie Osmond to Beverly Sills."

"I think you missed the statement Woody is trying to make."

" Well, it certainly wasn't vintage Allen."

"Actually, I think he peaked with 'Play It Again Sam.'"

"I loved it and I don't know how he can top it."

A man leaned over to turn on the TV set and said, "I wonder what's happening with the president's tax proposal?"

It was good to get my mind off Woody for five minutes.

Israel finds itself losing economic war

EDITOR'S NOTE: Israel may be unvanquished on the battlefield, but it is barely holding its own on the home front against implacable foes — deficit spending and inflation. This, the second in a three-part series, examines Israel's deep economic problems.

By CHARLES J. HANLEY

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — The Israeli economy drifts in some free-spending space between reality and an economist's nightmare.

It is a place where a 100 percent price increase is described as "controlled inflation," where a quart of milk costs a mere 34 cents but a Dodge Aries automobile an astounding $40,000, where the government each year spends as much as the country can produce, and where blue-and-white Bank Leumi vans followed the tanks into Lebanon so soldiers could continue to make the daily investment decisions that have become part of the inflation-beating game.

The most numbing economic fact in Israel is inflation, which at the moment stands at an annual rate of 130 percent. Because salaries, pensions and savings are tied directly to cost-of-living increases, inflation takes on a life of its own.

But the bedrock fact of the Israeli economy is that in many respects it is built on air — it is a fast-turnover economy heavily dependent on the outside world, through American aid or bank borrowing.

THE ISRAELI government owes foreign creditors more than $18 billion, or $4,500 for every man, woman and child in Israel — about three times the per capita debt of such a heavy borrower as Mexico.

American assistance this year totals more than $3 billion, two-thirds of it U.S. government aid and the rest from Jewish-American organizations and Israeli bond sales.

"Without this aid, we're flat on our bellies," Yakir Plesner, deputy governor of Israel's central bank, acknowledged in an interview.

The way Israel spends beyond its means can be seen in its trade figures. In the second quarter of this year, it imported $1.96 billion worth of goods, almost twice as much as it was able to export.

Oil — from Egypt, Mexico and elsewhere — is the big item. Israel must buy 99 percent of its oil abroad, and the oil price shocks of the 1970s helped kick off today's superinflation.

But energy needs are only one factor at the root of the deficit spending that produces Israel's inflation.

THE GREATEST expense is the military — one-third of the current $16 billion budget. That does not include the cost of the Lebanon campaign, at least $1 billion in direct expenditures.

Add to this the heavy costs of subsidizing exports to make them more competitive internationally, low labor productivity, and the fact that half the work force is employed in the public sector — and the result is something far from the lean, frugal economy envisioned by Israel's Zionist founders.

But if drastic anti-inflationary steps are necessary — as most economists here say — neither Prime Minister Menachem Begin's nor the preceding Labor Party government has been willing to take them.

"When you talk to Mr. Begin about the economic problems, he says, 'Well, wait a minute, that's No. 10 on my priority list. Let's talk about one through nine first,'" said American industrialist Edgar Bronfman, president of the World Jewish Congress.

The ordinary Israeli, meanwhile, just holds on tight as he watches the 1980 shekel — Israel's currency — plunge in value from 20 U.S. cents to 9 cents in 1981, to 4 cents today.

One hundred percent inflation may sound frightening, but between government "indexation" and their own nimble-footed investment and re-investment, Israelis appear able to cope.

FOUR TIMES a year, Israeli salaries are automatically boosted by a percentage equal to four-fifths of the cost-of-living rise of the previous three months. At the same time, the shekel value of bank savings, mortgages, government bonds, life insurance and pensions is raised by the full percentage of inflation, so that the 200,000 shekels one owed on his house last year may be 400,000 shekels today.

When indexation is "factored out," economists say, Israel's real inflation rate is in the range of 20 percent to 40 percent a year.

To keep up with this non-indexed inflation, many Israelis put their money in U.S. dollar investments or in the lucrative but volatile Tel Aviv stock market, using their bankers as brokers.

Israel's inflation fantasyland produces economic oddities:

—People carry little cash. The largest denomination banknote, the 100-shekel bill, is worth only $4. Rather than tote around inches-thick wads of cash, Israelis pull out their checkbooks when the bill arrives at restaurants, gas stations or supermarkets.

—Apartment sales and rentals and other long-term deals are offered in dollar amounts. Otherwise, payments would have to be recomputed continuously as the shekel was devalued.

—Because of government subsidies, food can be remarkably inexpensive. At the same time, heavy customs duties on automobiles and other imported "luxury" items can put them out of reach of many Israelis.

DESPITE INFLATION and what are probably the world's highest income taxes — 60 percent on annual income above $15,000 — Israelis survive, and many seem to prosper. Color television sales are up 11 percent and air-conditioner sales 21 percent over a year ago.

But economists warn that the inflation and indexation are doing fundamental damage. The dizzying rises in prices make it impossible for consumers to know a bargain when they see one, and thereby weaken a major anti-inflationary force, price sense. And indexation, by cushioning the impact, eases public pressure on the government to do something about inflation.

To pay for the Lebanon war, Finance Minister Yoram Aridor has raised some taxes and introduced other measures — including a compulsory loan of up to 5 percent of every worker's salary.

"Some economists say that under the cover of "war costs" Aridor actually has begun taking steps toward an austerity program that should have been imposed a few years ago.

Israel's leaders, as always, forecast a bright future for their nation, once it achieves a lasting peace with its neighbors.

"The Israeli economy is getting away from the more labor-intensive industries and toward more sophisticated, capital-intensive industries, the high-technology industries," Plesner said. "The government is spending more money than ever on research and development because it believes that as a small country without resources it has to take its place in the technological world."

Along the way from the simple, agricultural society contemplated by early Jewish settlers to the fast-paced, urbanized society of today, Israel has developed points of tension and conflict perhaps unforeseen by its founders.

A land founded on principles of egalitarianism has given rise to millionaires and an impoverished class. A country made for immigrants has turned into a source of immigrants for other countries. A land of refuge for the Jews has become a cockpit for bitter conflict between religious and non-religious Jews.

Buying managers indicate slowdown

NEW YORK (AP) — The economy continued to weaken last month, but at a slightly slower pace than in July, a new survey of corporate purchasing managers says.

The National Association of Purchasing Management, a trade group, also said in its latest monthly report that capital spending fell during August at a greater rate than in previous months. The group said its indicator of capital spending "shows no life at all."

The association's main economic indicators all pointed down in August.

—The share of purchasing managers who said production grew in August was 14 percent, compared with 15 percent in July. But 34 percent said output was lower in the latest month, compared with 38 percent reporting a drop in July.

—Fewer managers reported improvement in new orders for goods. But, as in the production category, the portion reporting declines was smaller than in July. There was an increase, from 43 percent to 48 percent, in those reporting stable orders.

—The managers got rid of their unsold goods at a slower pace than in July. Forty-seven percent said inventories dropped, 12 percent said they rose and 41 percent reported no change. In July, 50 percent reported declines, 10 percent said they were higher and 40 percent reported no change.

—Purchasing managers continued to order materials as close to the actual need as possible, indicating a desire to avoid a buildup of inventory while demand remains weak. Eighty-six percent bought materials no further than two months ahead, compared with 85 percent in July and 75 percent in August last year.

—The percentage of managers making capital spending commitments as far as six months in advance dropped to 47 from 55 in July and 58 in June. "The vital signs in this indicator are unusually weak," the association said.

Prices also headed downward. Only 5 percent reported price increases during the month, compared with 10 percent in July. And there was a small increase in the percentage of managers who said prices fell. Sixty-six percent reported stable prices.

The employment picture also was gloomy, but less so than in July. Forty-two percent reported fewer people on the payroll, down from 43 percent in July. Those reporting higher employment edged up to 7 percent from 5 percent. The Labor Department reported Friday that unemployment held steady in August at 9.8 percent.

Charles T. Haffey, a vice president in the corporate purchasing division of Pfizer Inc. and chairman of the purchasing managers association, said the latest survey indicated that economic activity continued to fall in August.

"But we would say it was not as bad a drop as it was in July," Haffey said.

David Jones, an economist at the securities firm of Aubrey G. Lanston & Co., said he viewed the purchasing managers survey as an indication that the Reagan administration may be premature in saying that an economic recovery is under way.

U.S., Japan sign aviation agreement

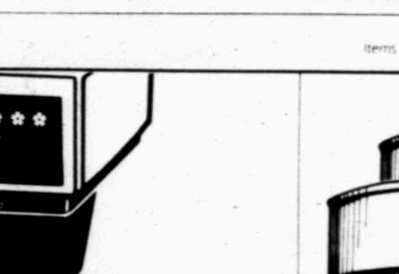

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States and Japan have signed a three-year commercial aviation pact that will expand air service between the two nations.

The agreement, which had been announced in June, was signed Tuesday.

It allows United Airlines to begin daily flights between Seattle-Portland and Tokyo next April and an increase in the number of U.S. charter flights between the two countries.

Peso problems cross border, Americans pillage Tijuana

LUBBOCK, Texas (AP) — A federal official says that during a tour of the Rio Grande Valley he heard the same anguished cry from American merchants along the United States-Mexican border: help.

U.S. businessmen have been urging Washington to coax Mexico into easing its grip on pesos, allowing Mexican citizens to once again trade on the U.S. side of the border.

"Mexicans don't have any dollars to come across the border to buy with," said Eddie Herrera, deputy administrator designate of the Small Business Administration, who traveled here Wednesday after meetings along the border.

"They have pesos, but businesses can't accept them because they can't exchange them back for dollars later," he said.

"They're in a quandary, and a lot of them are very upset," he said. "They want the federal government to do something to release the constraints that have been put on the exchange."

Mexico has imposed new constraints that make the peso the only legal tender in that financially strapped country. Mexicans who need dollars to pay debts in the United States or to import goods can get dollars in Mexico only with permission of the government-owned banks.

Along the border, purchases can be made with dollars, but merchants are required to deposit them in the government-controlled banks within 24 hours. Americans who travel to the interior of Mexico must change their dollars into pesos.

Herrera toured the Rio Grande Valley Tuesday and flew to Lubbock Wednesday for further talks before leaving the state.

"As expected, I found that the businesses that are most severely impacted are the retail businesses along the border," he said.

A Texas meat processor and distributor reported losing $1.5 million in the past month from its lost Mexican trade alone, Herrera was told during a meeting in Harlingen.

He said he visited Texas to get a personal feel for the effect the peso devaluation has had on U.S. border businesses.

He also said he came to Texas to check on the effectiveness of a new program designed to help the troubled businesses by allocating $200 million in guaranteed and direct loans to businesses hurt by the peso devaluation.

"I wanted to see what the impact of that program was and, if not, what else the SBA needs to do. The program appears to be going fairly well. It is definitely going to help. We have received many inquiries and applications," Herrera said.

Gov. Bill Clements and SBA administrator James C. Sanders announced the program last week.

"Some businesses, the only thing that's going to help them is just to get the consumer buying their goods again," Herrera said. "But others, who sold a lot of goods to Mexican buyers, companies, government agencies, and so forth, have just been sitting there with a bunch of receivables and not being paid."

It could be a month or two, perhaps longer, before they collect, he said.

"In Harlingen alone, which covers most of the Valley, more than $1.6 million (in loans) has been approved to businesses that have been directly affected by the peso devaluation," Herrera said.

Businesses in El Paso have been under similar stress, officials say.

"They were never paid because the Mexican government imposed constraints on the outflow of dollars. Hopefully, with these loans, they will be able to hold on until they get paid," he said.

The guaranteed loans are set by individual banks. Direct loans carry an interest rate of 14¾ percent, Herrera said.

TIJUANA, Mexico (AP) — A Mexican tourism official is accusing some Americans of "greed buying," depriving Mexicans of their own groceries at a time of economic crisis in Mexico.

Vi Murphy, spokeswoman for the Baja California Tourism Information Bureau, said U.S. citizens have been taking carloads of inexpensive Mexican groceries across the border and hoarding or reselling them at great profit.

"It's greed buying," she said Wednesday. "There isn't any other word for it. They are buying more than any family could ever use."

Although the Mexican federal government has ordered confiscation of many basic foods heading out of the country, customs officers say they may not be able to act before next week.

The confiscation order followed devaluation of the peso, an inflation-fighting move that has greatly increased the dollar's buying power here. But Francisco de la Madrid, customs chief here, said it would be next week before customs officials in Baja California, a Mexican province, enforce the border restrictions.

Baja California Gov. Roberto de la Madrid, no relation, said he would fly to Mexico City today to work out details.

Ms. Murphy said some stores in Tijuana's business district had been stripped bare of foodstuffs needed by Mexicans.

"The greed is what is going to lead to regulations at the border unless it stops," she said.

Several Tijuana merchants have begun limiting purchases of certain products. In some markets, customers were being held to one or two jars of instant coffee and one bag of sugar.

The peso was pegged at 49 to the dollar before being allowed to float, sinking as low as 135 to the dollar. Last week President Jose Lopez Portillo nationalized privately owned banks and set a two-tiered currency exchange system, with 50 pesos to the dollar for importers of essential goods and 70 for everyone else.

If possible, Baja California officials will maintain exemptions granted to the border areas because they "are distinctive states," Ms. Murphy said.

"Mexico does not want to lose its good friends and Baja does not want to lose its good customers," she said.

U.S. Steel, Marathon merger going smoothly, chiefs say

The honeymoon between United States Steel Corporation and Marathon Oil Company seems to be going well, as management of each company continues to "get to know each other," according to the chiefs of each.

U.S. Steel Chairman David M. Roderick and Marathon President Harold D. Hoopman were in Midland yesterday as honored guests of the Midland Wildcat Committee, an arm of the Petroleum Club.

Hoopman gave Roderick a tour of the prolific Yates Field earlier in the day. Marathon owns a 49.48 interest in the field, which in 1981 accounted for about 34 percent of Marathon's domestic liquid hydrocarbon production. The field is generally considered to be the largest remaining oil reserve in the Lower 48, and it provided part of the attraction the steel maker felt for Marathon.

"You have to be impressed with the field," Roderick said. "It has a great history and a great future. The reserves are going to be there for years to come."

"We were looking at a number of acquisitions for a long period of time. Marathon was always one that was on our wish list," Roderick said.

Acceptance of the merger has been outstanding on the part of citizens in Marathon's corporate headquarter city, Findlay, Ohio, Hoopman said. When it was first announced that either Mobil Oil Corporation or U.S. Steel would take over the company, local residents feared Marathon might pull out of the town.

David M. Roderick

"The outcome as far as Findlay is concerned is not one that has been detrimental to them," Hoopman said. The community has recognized that Marathon has remained in the city and there actually have been few changes.

Neither Roderick nor Hoopman said he had any second thoughts about the $6.4 billion merger, one of the biggest in American business history.

While the domestic steel industry is now operating at about 43 percent capacity, partly because of foreign imports, Roderick did not the think the merger was ill-timed.

"I think quite the reverse," he said. "The reason you diversify, or wish to diversify or gain a second line of business, is obviously because the first line tended to be very cyclical, tended to be labor intensive, tended to be import sensitive, and the very things we are experiencing now are the very reasons we were very desirous of getting a second major line of business.

"I think what events have proven is that from a long term, strategy point of view, we did exactly what we should be doing. Now, obviously, when you get hit with a major recession in one of your prime businesses as you're digesting one of these things, you get some discomfort and you have to work and try a little harder — which we're all doing — but looking back on it I would say, no regrets."

Hoopman said Marathon has not been called upon to help keep U.S. Steel in the black by selling off major assets, as some analysts had predicted. Shortly after the first of the year, and before the merger took place, Marathon did negotiate the sale of Canadian properties in Alberta, but it has not been called upon to make any sacrifice for the good of U.S. Steel.

Harold D. Hoopman

"That was the only set of assets sold, and there are no others on the market at the moment," Hoopman said. "We are an integrated oil company and we intend to remain active. The sale (of the Canadian properties) happened to meet the overall, combined goals of the combined corporate entities."

Roderick emphasized U.S. Steel was not out to take advantage of Marathon.

"I think its important that we're not robbing one to deal with the other," Roderick said. Marathon's capital budget remains intact, and long range plans established before the merger have not been altered.

There was never any intention, Roderick said, to pull money from the oil business into the steel business. "That wasn't our intention, that would be totally demeaning to our long-term strategy.

"So, what we're saying is these are two independents, they have to live within their own cash flows, and they have to make their own investments, based on their ability to generate cash and have the opportunity to invest it profitably," he said.

The steel industry is the third largest consumer of energy, and thus might favor cheaper energy, while Marathon would naturally favor more expensive energy. But Roderick and Hoopman did not feel the two companies are at cross purposes.

"About 70 percent of the energy steel uses is coal," Roderick said, "with only about 30 percent of the energy being electrical — and much of that electrical is nuclear or coal — so probably only about 20 percent is oil or gas. So although it's important, it is not the dominant factor in our energy stream.

"Our feeling is we're for anything that reflects a free and open market. We have advocated gas decontrol right along," he added.

The faster gas decontrol is phased in, in an orderly way, the better, Roderick said. "I don't think there's really any conflict there. I don't think there's any question of which side we're going to be coming down on, on an energy question."

Champagne flows at Boeing despite economy

SEATTLE (AP) — Champagne flowed for the first commercial flight of the Boeing 767 jet, but company officials admit the shaky economy makes immediate sales prospects for the sleek, fuel-stingy aircraft less than bubbly.

United Airlines kicked off the nation's first 767 air service by flying a plane christened the "City of Chicago" from the Windy City to Denver on Wednesday.

Chicago Mayor Jane Byrne ceremoniously daubed champagne on its smooth nose, not breaking the bottle to avoid dents, while passenger Percy Wood, a retired United Airlines president, termed the maiden flight "fantastic."

"The success of the 767 is very important to us," Pete Bush, Boeing corporate director of public relations and advertising, said in Seattle. "It represents an airplane we intend to build for well over 10 years. Everything about it says it deserves to sell well."

Boeing, anticipating 10,000 job cuts this year and with its first-half earnings off 53.5 percent, hopes the 767's "quality design" plus a tax break preserved in Congress will help the jet soar into the ranks of a best-seller.

Boeing has 173 firm orders for the 767 from 17 customers with an additional 118 options logged, said Bill Mellon, a spokesman for the Boeing Commercial Airplane Co.

At current prices of $46 million each, that firm order backlog would be worth about $8 billion, Mellon said, noting some planes were ordered earlier at lower prices.

But the aerospace giant has not had a new order for the 767 since July 30, 1981. And one airline, American, has let 20 options expire.

Boeing, meanwhile, is beset by European competition from the Airbus Industrie consortium, which is supported by the governments of France, West Germany and Britain. It is now manufacturing two airplanes to compete with Boeing's new generation 767 and 757 jets.

Development of the wide-bodied 767 and 757 began in 1978. Designed to use less fuel in an era of spiraling costs, the 767 seats 211 passengers and the 757 seats 186.

"In the long run we are sure the 757 and 767 are going to hold up well," Bush said. But he added:

"Over the short period, certainly, neither one is selling very well right now because airlines are not profitable enough to buy them."

Boeing considers United, its first 767 customer, to have 39 firm orders on the books. But it was only last month that United Chairman Richard Ferris confirmed United would take delivery of the first 19 aircraft of its initial $1.2 billion order.

A United spokesman said then if a controversial tax break for commercial airlines had not been included in the latest tax bill, it would not have made even that commitment.

The tax bill signed by President Reagan during his recent California vacation phases out the "safe harbor" leasing provision after Jan. 1, 1983. But an amendment tacked on by Sen. Slade Gorton, R-Wash., extends the tax break past then for commercial aircraft purchases.

Several other airlines had threatened to cancel orders if the tax break, which allows unprofitable companies to sell unused tax benefits to more profitable companies, was not preserved.

Boeing's struggles have been reflected in employment and earnings. In the first half of 1982, earnings dropped 53.5 percent, to $132 million, compared to the same period a year ago. Sales fell from $5.19 billion to $4.48 billion.

Layoffs and attrition have slashed Boeing's Puget Sound-area employment by nearly 12,000 employees since the start of 1981. Bush said he expects a total of 10,000 jobs to be cut in 1982.

Boeing officials say sales to foreign airlines would be better, even in this economy, if Boeing got more aid from the U.S. Export-Import bank, which arranges financing to sell American goods abroad.

Tom Riedinger, Boeing director of marketing communications, said he is encouraged the government is studying the commercial airplane industry and American exports. "But the discouraging part is that the economics of the present time are not improving rapidly enough to take the doubt out of the market," he said.

Citicorp says Californians will benefit from merger

WASHINGTON (AP) — Officials of New York's Citicorp said say consumers in California would benefit if the huge bank is allowed to acquire a financially troubled savings institution in California.

But leaders of California's financial community are expected to ask the Federal Reserve Board today to block Citicorp from moving into lucrative West Coast markets.

Approval from the Federal Reserve is the last hurdle facing Citicorp's bid to acquire Fidelity Savings & Loan of San Francisco. It would be the first time a commercial bank has been allowed to acquire an out-of-state savings institution.

The hearing was scheduled to resume today in San Francisco, where most witnesses were expected to oppose the plan. One witness at Wednesday's session said the Citicorp move could "ultimately see the demise of the thrift industry."

The Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp. took control of Fidelity, then based in Oakland, last April when the $2.8 billion company's net worth dropped to less than $20 million. The regulators reorganized Fidelity, moved it to San Francisco and began seeking a stronger firm to merge it with.

Citicorp's bid would have it invest $80 million in Fidelity in return for Fidelity's 81 offices in northern California.

Thomas Pfeiler, associate general counsel for the U.S. League of Savings Banks, said Wednesday that approval of the Citicorp plan "would virtually force other bank holding companies to acquire large parts of the savings and loan industry."

"I think we would ultimately see the demise of the thrift industry," he added.

But Citicorp's executive vice president, Edwin Hoffman, said that "running an S&L and running a consumer bank are not dissimilar. The issue is not how to protect someone else's turf, but how to best serve consumers." Citicorp, with $120 billion in assets, is parent of Citibank of New York.

Hoffman said that even with the current restrictions on interstate banking Citicorp has managed to make $800 million in mortgages and $300 million in student loans to Californians. He blamed local banks for failing to meet the demand.

Hoffman also said Citicorp's takeover would be cheapest for the FSLIC, which subsidize such mergers or reimburses depositors when a thrift fails.

Congress urged to aid job-related illness victims

WASHINGTON (AP) — The head of the International Union of Operating Engineers is urging Congress to quickly devise a federal system to compensate victims of job-related diseases when companies file for bankruptcy.

Union president J.C. Turner complained of "disturbing aspects of the public dialogue" surrounding the Manville Corp.'s filing for protection from creditors under Chapter 11 of the Federal Bankruptcy Act.

On the eve of today's hearing before a House job safety panel, Turner said the Manville action left asbestos victims with no prospects for help.

"Who will seek the bankruptcy shelter next?" the union leader asked. "Is the Manville Corporation the exception, or is it the harbinger of what is to come? Our workers and their families have a right to an answer."

Some 2.3 million Americans are currently exposed to asbestos fibers at work sites, government estimates show.

The Denver-based building materials company, the largest asbestos manufacturer in the country with consolidated sales of $2 billion last year, filed the bankruptcy motion last month to protect itself against some 16,000 asbestos suits. The number of suits is expected to soar to three times that figure.

OCTG plant close soon

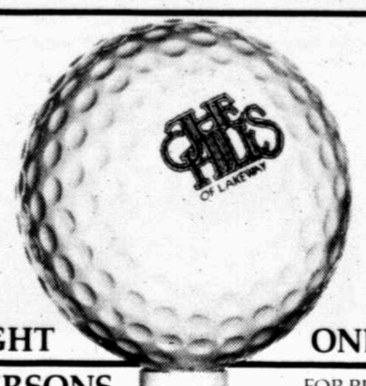

BELLVILLE, Texas (AP) — A plant that manufactures oilfield tubular products will close indefinitely next week, another casualty of a slump in the petroleum industry, company officials say.

The Bellville Tube Division of Quanez Corp. also plans to lay off 23 workers, after already furloughing 92 employees earlier this year, said company spokeswoman Carla McFall.

The firm, located just east of Houston, makes welded oilfield tubular products, but sales haye been down "since the end of last year," Ms. McFall said.

A dozen employees, including production foremen and supervisors, will remain on duty to allow management to quickly reopen the plant when demand for oilfield products picks up in the Houston area, she said.

American workers illiterate, have skill that will be obsolete

By VIC OSTROWIDZKI
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Did you know that 20 percent of American adults are functionally illiterate — unable to read a job notice or fill out a job application?

Are you aware that as many as 10 to 15 million manufacturing workers and a like number of service workers possess skills that will become obsolete in the next two decades?

There are a couple other items you may have heard about:

(a) American firms are losing competitiveness in domestic and international markets because they cannot locate the hundreds of thousands of workers with modern industrial skills they need, and

(b) A generation of youth is maturing that almost literally has never had the opportunity to work -- particularly minority youth, for whom the unemployment rate is almost 50 percent.

The above tibits of information are contained in a major bipartisan congressional study which urges America to move toward a comprehensive reform of the nation's employment and job training legislation and adopt a national strategy to meet the labor needs of the next two decades.

Noting that 12 major pieces of federal employment and training legislation expire before the end of 1983, the Northeast - Midwest Congressional and Senate Coalitions say the expiration of so many basic federal laws "offers a rare opportunity to reassess key employment and training issues."

Entitled, "Retooling the American Work Force," the report points out that although the need for capital investment in improved plant, equipment and technology has received considerable attention over the past few years, there has been little attention paid by the private and public sectors to improve worker skills and knowledge.

The first step in reforming the employment and training policies, the group said Wednesday in releasing its report, is the creation of a "national training strategy that addresses the massive need for remedial education, entry-level training, upgrading and retraining, critical skill development, and displaced worker training."

"The absence of such a strategy is a major barrier to America's economic renewal," the report said. "Investment in workers is as essential to national economic renewal as investment in improved plant, equipment, and technology. After all, more complex machines and more sophisticated technologies require better trained workers."

The study recommended that any future employment and training policies must come to grips with workers remedial and pre-entry level training assistance to the culturally and economically disadvantaged.

In addition, federal legislation must take notice of the needs and ways to upgrade the skills of employed workers and to help displaced workers become reemployed.

One way this can be done, the report suggested, is by providing funds to state and local governments and businesses to offer remedial education and pre-entry level training for those who need it, something already being done under the Comprehensive Education and Training Act (CETA).

The report recommended that Congress study the feasibility of launching major public service employment or displaced worker programs.

The study admitted that reform of the present employment and training program in one fell swoop is unlikely. It said that if such reform is made it will come in phases as needs are perceived and understood.

"But the aim of (the program) should be a unified set of national employment policies that helps current workers sharpen their skills and displaced workers find jobs, provides training for new entrants into the work force, fills critical skills shortages, and eases the entry into the work place of women and minorities," the report concluded.

WOMEN-OWNED BUSINESSES

New government figures show that the number of women-owned small businesses in the U.S. increased by almost 7 percent between 1979 and 1980. The Internal Revenue Service figures show that in 1980 there were 2,787,038 women-owned businesses, 22 percent of all such companies in the country. The firms accounted for $40.1 billion in receipts and $6.2 billion in net income. For 1979, IRS figures showed 2,609,896 women-owned businesses, with $37 billion in receipts and $6.5 billion in net income.

SMALL BUSINESS ADVICE

Small business firm owners in Los Angeles, Chicago and Kansas City will soon be able to get free advice on 20 different business topics simply by dialing a toll-free telephone number. In Los Angeles businessmen and those interested in starting a small firm will be able to learn how to do it by dialing 800-722-4030.

BIG SALE

The largest single collection of ivory, fine reptile leather products, and other wildlife contraband will go on sale to the highest bidders Sept. 29 in Brooklyn, N.Y. as the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service holds its first public sale to dispose of a 10-year accumulation of confiscated wildlife products, including ivory bracelets, necklaces, pins, pendants, crates of python, caiman and alligator shoes, boots, purses, wallets and briefcases, cases of elephant hide ice buckets and hundreds of trinkets made from the hides, horns, bones, feet, teeth, and other parts of wildlife.

PROCUREMENT AND BID RIGGING

The Reagan administration intends to move against fraud and corruption in procurement by the Defense Department and bid rigging in highway construction contracts submitted to Transportation Department.

Defense and Justice departments last week announced the formation of a special investigation and prosecution unit to concentrate attention on fraud and corruption in procurement by the Defense Department which spends $500 million a day for goods and services — in excess of $200 billion in fiscal 1982.

Transportation and Justice plan to form a committee to coordinate antitrust investigations of contract bid rigging on highway and airport paving contracts involving federal funds. So far, grand jury investigations in 17 states have resulted in the conviction of 134 companies and 155 individuals, $37 million in fines, and prison sentences totaling 37 years.

AROUND AND ABOUT

Colorado Republican Sen. Bill Armstrong wants to know from the Defense Department why the agency has purchased $4 million worth of pork from Romania and millions of dollars worth of East German typewriters. The early response from Defense has been that the Romanian pork was cheaper per pound than that available from Denmark or Belgium. No answer yet on typewriters . . . The Senate has passed legislation providing that turkeys will no longer have to be examined individually at plants that process between 5,000 to 20,000 turkeys per year. The change makes inspection standards for turkeys the same as for chickens and will affect about 13 of the nation's 200 turkey processing plants . . . The Transportation Department has issued a final rule allowing states to develop their own standards for federally funded highway maintenance. The old regulations, targeted for review by the President's Task Force on Regulatory Relief, required that federally financed maintenane on existing roads meet stringent geometric design criteria . . . The Hong Kong government has come up with a unique way to discourage its teeming 5.2 million population from growing. The government scales down tax deductions from $1,330 for the first child to just $165 for the seventh and beyond . . . A new federal study shows that Nevada has the lowest tax rate among the states . . . followed by Texas. In 1980 figures, Texas had a tax rate 35 percent below the national average, while Nevada's was 40 percent below . . . The General Services Administration has awarded a $40 million contract for installation and maintenance of a modern satellite voice communications system serving the federal government. The contract calls for replacing two "gateways" — Point Reyes, Calif., and Port Angeles, Wash., with new facilities in Mojave, Calif., Seattle and Washington, D.C. Gateways are major relay points between cities through which federal communications traffic must pass.

Bendix owners face midnight deadline

NEW YORK (AP) — Shareholders of Bendix Corp. had until midnight tonight to act in their company's entangled takeover struggle involving Martin Marietta Corp. and United Technologies Corp.

Under terms of Marietta's proposed $1.5 billion bid for Bendix, Bendix shareholders must turn over their shares to Marietta by midnight to be assured cash payment for at least a portion of the shares.

Marietta is offering $75 a share for 50.3 percent of Bendix's outstanding shares and proposes to acquire the remaining Bendix shares by swapping Marietta securities worth about $55 apiece.

Marietta's proposal was strengthened Tuesday when United Technologies agreed to team up with Marietta against Bendix, which started the fracas last month by making a $1.5 billion takeover bid for Marietta. Marietta management is fighting to avoid being absorbed by the larger Bendix.

United Technologies offered $75 in cash per share for about half of Bendix's stock in a two-step deal valued at about $1.3 billion.

United Technologies and Marietta agreed that if either gained control of Bendix, the winner would sell part of Bendix's assets to the loser.

Under terms of the United Technologies-Marietta agreement, Marietta would drop its bid for Bendix if Bendix ended its $1.6 billion offer for Marietta. That would leave United Technologies as the only bidder for Bendix.

United Technologies said that if its offer for Bendix succeeds, it would sell certain aerospace-electronics operations and other assets of Bendix to Marietta for $600 million.

If Marietta wins Bendix, Marietta would be expected to retain Bendix's aerospace-electronics interests and sell the rest of Bendix's assets for an estimated $850 million, which could be used to reduce the large debt it would be undertaking.

Bendix, based in Southfield, Mich., is a diversified manufacturer of automotive components and production machinery. Marietta, based in Bethesda, Md., is a producer of advanced aerospace products, cement and aluminum. United Technologies, with headquarters in Hartford, Conn., is an industrial conglomerate with aerospace interests.

Bendix gave no indication that it was ready to give up. William Agee, its chairman, announced shortly after United Technologies entered the fray that Bendix was raising the cash portion of its offer for Marietta by $5 a share to $48 a share. The Marietta directors rejected that higher offer Tuesday night.

The cash portion of Bendix's offer was for 45 percent of Marietta's shares. Bendix said earlier this week that about 58 percent of Marietta's shares had been tendered before last Saturday night.

Sixth bank to be first at home

NEW YORK (AP) — Chemical Bank, the nation's sixth largest bank, says it will provide the first major home banking and information system commercially available in the country.

Computerized banking at home has been available on an experimental basis in many areas of the country, and Shawmut Bank of Boston also announced Wednesday it would soon begin testing such a banking service in Massachusetts.

But Chemical said it is the first bank to offer such services to paying customers on a commercial basis.

Chemical said it has been testing its system, which it calls "PRONTO," for three years, including a program involving 200 New York area households since last November.

It said it would begin offering the system to checking account customers in the New York area later this year at a monthly fee in the range of $5 to $10 and that it expected as many as 3,000 customers by early 1983.

Using home computers, customers will be able to pay bills, transfer funds among their own bank accounts, obtain information on bank balances and credit card use, and keep track of spending. Future plans call for providing investment information, including stock prices and interest rates, news and other information and giving customers the ability to make purchases and pay for them electronically, said John A. Farnsworth, senior vice president in charge of Chemical's financial services division.

"We believe PRONTO will revolutionize the way consumers carry out future banking activities," Farnsworth said.

He said that after the system has 2,000 to 3,000 customers, the program will be evaluated before there are further expansions.

Customers will also be able to play video games. The current system uses a special computer program for Atari home computer systems. But Farnsworth said programs will be developed for most major personal computers on the market.

Administration wants decision overturned

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration is asking the Supreme Court to overturn a lower court ruling that would require all new automobiles sold after September 1983 to be equipped with air bags or automatic seat belts.

The Justice Department filed a 28-page document Wednesday that urged the Supreme Court to review a ruling on Aug. 4 by the District of Columbia Circuit Court of Appeals.

The three-member circuit appeals court, which is noted for its liberal decisions, overturned a decision by the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration.

The traffic administration had rescinded its own earlier ruling to require air bags or automatic seat belts.

In its legal brief Wednesday, the Justice Department said the appeals court was trying to substitute its own judgment for that of the executive agency.

"That court has impermissibly usurped to itself authority that Congress has specifically conferred" on the Transportation Department, the Justice Department said.

Potent Monahans attack to test Lee's defense

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

MONAHANS — Heading into the 1982 football season, the book on the Midland Lee Rebels read: Strong on defense, but questionable on offense. Here at 8 p.m. Friday the Rebels may find out just how strong that defensive unit really is.

The Monahans Loboes own one of the most potent offensive attacks in West Texas and if Lee fans are thinking this is going to be an easy ride for the Rebels since Monahans is a Class 4A school, forget it.

THE LOBOES of Dick Winder, former boss at Odessa High, own the services of tailback Ricky Boysaw and that in itself gives Monahans a great offensive weapon. He is the 1,000 a season producer who has good speed and good size. They also own fullback Tom Carrasco and wingback Merv Scurlock, both of whom return from last year's squad. The Loboes can light up any scoreboard in a hurry.

"Monahans is just awesome on offense," says a believing Spike Dykes, head coach of the Rebels. "Boysaw is a great tailback and they have a good quarterback (Greg Winder). Scurlock has great speed, but they also have a good fullback (Carrasco) and wide receiver (Allen Henry). But the best thing they have going for them is Dick Winder because he has few coaching equals in this state."

Monahans dropped a 34-27 decision to El Paso Eastwood last week and were leading 27-12 at one point in the game. Lee plays both teams this year with the Loboes first on the list.

"We're going to be solid busy the next couple of weeks from the look at that score," Dykes says. "Eastwood has five college prospects and picked to win their district. Eastwood started throwing the ball against Monahans and Monahans may have lost its poise in the secondary last week, but they're capable of scoring a lot of points against anyone."

HOWEVER, LEE'S defense didn't allow a TD in its 17-3 win over Lubbock Coronado in the season opener and the offense showed some big play potential, including a 90-yard TD romp by halfback Darrell Fennell.

"Lee has the makings of being a great team," noted Winder. "It is a credit to the Lee coaching staff that they can take an inexperienced team like they have and still be so well disciplined at this stage of the season. And we know the Rebels will be 10 times more physical than Eastwood. They have always had a physical team.

"We just ran out of gas against Eastwood because we have too many kids playing both ways right now. We have no depth in the offensive line. We lost three starters there and there is just not much behind them. We do have good quality kids in our skill positions, but Lee's defense presents a lot of problems for our youngsters in the line."

Dykes was generally pleased with his team's effort against Coronado, but noted that there is a lot of room for improvement. Dykes said that his Rebs missed too many tackles on defense and had too many turnovers (three fumbles and one interception) on offense. He also said that production on first down plays was not very good.

ON THE positive side, Dykes was encouraged that his defense didn't allow a touchdown by coming up with some big plays. He was pleased with the kicking of field goal specialist Kerry Robertson and punter Mike Mercurio. Dykes also liked the fourth quarter drive that netted 77 yards on 13 plays for a touchdown while eating up nearly six minutes of the fourth quarter clock. He also noted that the offensive line improved as the game went along and the offense showed some signs of consistency in the second half.

Midland Lee's defensive linemen Anthony Adams, left, and Eric Cooper were two of the big reasons last week that the Rebels were able to keep Lubbock Coronado out of the end zone in a 17-3 victory. They will have their hands full this week, however, since they travel to Monahans in an effort to stop highly touted Monahans tailback Ricky Boysaw, one of the top backs in West Texas who weighs 212 pounds.

Braves reclaim 1st, 12-11 in 10

By Associated Press

There may be only a little more than three weeks left in the baseball season, but as far as Joe Torre is concerned, the fun is just beginning.

"It's a 24-game season now, and we're 1-0," said the Atlanta manager after his Braves had regained first place in the National League West by a half-game over Los Angeles with a wild, 12-11 10-inning victory over the Dodgers Wednesday.

"It was one of those wild, kind of nerve-wracking games," said Atlanta's Dale Murphy, whose one-out single in the tenth chased home Claudell Washington with the winning run. "It was a little more nerve-wracking than I like."

Murphy's game-winning hit off Steve Howe, 6-4, came after singles by Washington and Rafael Ramirez. Murphy also smacked his 34th homer and had three RBI to lift his season total to 103.

THE GAME, the first of a two-game showdown at Atlanta Stadium between the division's two top teams, was a 35-hit slugfest in which the Dodgers had four homers — by Steve Sax, Pedro Guerrero, Dusty Baker and Steve Garvey — and the Braves three, by Bob Horner and Washington in addition to Murphy.

"It was like a war," said Horner. "Both sides were slugging away. You just had to suck it up and go get some more."

"It was one we had to take," said Washington, who had five hits. "We had to let the Dodgers know we haven't died. One like that gets our confidence back."

"It was just a lot of hitting, a lot of running, a lot of great plays in the field," said Torre. "It wasn't great for me. It got me in the stomach."

Garvey said it was the kind of game that could give the winner momentum.

Cardinals 1, Expos 0

Bob Forsch, 14-8, scattered eight hits, while Keith Hernandez' third-inning RBI triple off Charlie Lea brought home the game's only run as the Cards maintained their hold on first place in NL East.

"I'm just trying to contribute," said Hernandez, after raising his batting average to .302 with his 19th game-winning RBI. "I'm just glad that I'm hot."

The Cards stayed a half-game ahead of second-place Philadelphia, and moved 4½ lengths up on both Montreal and Pittsburgh.

Phillies 4, Cubs 3

The Phillies stayed on the Cardinals' heels as Bill Robinson's pinch-hit RBI single in the eighth enabled Steve Carlton to become the major leagues' first 19-game winner this year.

Carlton, 19-9, gave up seven hits in seven innings of work. Ron Reed picked up his 11th save.

Mets 9, Pirates 1

Dave Kingman drove in four runs — three with a fifth-inning home run, his 34th of the year — while Ron Hodges belted his first career grand-slam as the Mets toppled the Pirates. Rookie Rick Ownbey, 1-2, scattered eight hits in posting his first major league victory. He lost his shutout when Dale Berra homered with one out in the ninth.

"I wasn't happy (about losing the shutout) ... but I got my first win," Ownbey said. "If that home run had been in the second inning, I wouldn't be as down. I'm a rookie. I learned."

Padres 9, Reds 4

Joe Lefebvre had a two-run single, while Garry Templeton, Terry Kennedy and Sixto Lezcano had RBI hits to key a five-run ninth-inning rally as the Padres broke a 4-4 tie and sent the Reds to their fifth consecutive loss. The victory enabled the third-place Padres to climb to within 4½ games of the NL West lead.

The Padres' rally came against the Reds' aggresive rookie righthander, Brad Lesley, 0-1, whom Cincinnati players call "The Animal".

"I felt like I was getting my bell rung. That will happen. I won't lay down to anyone. I want that ball again," said Lesley.

Astros 8, Giants 1

Winning pitcher Joe Niekro, 14-10, scattered eight hits and drove in three runs — two with a single during a six-run sixth inning — to lift the Astros over the Giants.

"I didn't feel I had much rhythm in the early innings," Niekro said. "But about the sixth or seventh I started getting the knuckleball over a little better."

Upset fever hits Open

NEW YORK (AP) — Upset fever at the U.S. Open Tennis Championships has claimed the tournament's defending women's champion, Tracy Austin, and nearly netted three other big names — John McEnroe, Chris Evert Lloyd and Andrea Jaeger — who barely escaped quarterfinal scares.

All three favorites reached into their reserves after dropping the opening sets of their matches Wednesday and recovered to pull out victories and advance to the tournament's semifinal round after Austin was eliminated.

McEnroe, the defending champion and No.1 seed among the men, survived a gruelling five-set marathon against sixth-seeded Gene Mayer, winning 4-6, 7-6, 6-3, 4-6, 6-1. Evert Lloyd and Jaeger roared back for victories which thrust them into the tournament's semifinal round against each other.

EVERT LLOYD, seeded second, defeated Bonnie Gadusek 4-6, 6-1, 6-0, winning the last 12 games, after No.4 Jaeger had eliminated the tournament's Cinderella, amateur Gretchen Rush, 3-6, 6-1, 6-0.

The other women's semifinal will match a couple of giant killers with Czechoslovakia's Hana Mandlikova, the No. 5 seed who eliminated the third-seeded Austin 4-6, 6-4, 6-4 Wednesday going against No.7 Pam Shriver, who had conquered the tournament's top seed, Martina Navratilova a day earlier.

On the men's side, third-seeded Ivan Lendl of Czechoslovakia advanced to the semis with a 6-4, 6-3, 6-1 victory over Kim Warwick. Lendl will meet McEnroe, who had his hands full with Mayer.

"I expected a tough match and it was a tough match," said McEnroe. "I was in trouble. I started slowly, got back into it but let it slip away. When I won the tiebreaker in the second set, I felt back in it and I thought I was in control when I won the third set."

"It's tough," he said. "Keeping your concentration is difficult. Unfortunately we don't have umpires able to handle the situation. When you're wishy washy, things

Green Tree hosts PGA Sectional

The best club professionals of North Texas will compete at Green Tree Country Club Tuesday though next Friday in the NTPGA/Sahara Slacks Sectional championship.

Passons has dominated Sectional golf the last four years, winning four NTPGA Club Pro, two NTPGA Match Play, and two NTPGA/Prestonwood Travel Pro-Assistant, three NTPGA Pro-Pro and two Metro Chapter titles.

He already has a big lead in his bid for a third straight Minimax Player of the Year award with 190 points. His nearest competitor, Bob Elliott, Northwood Club in Dallas, has 162½ points, but doesn't plan to play in the Sectional because of a member-guest event at his own club. That leaves Bob Smith of Tenison Park GC in Dallas, the 1980 Sectional champion, as the closest challenger with 155 points.

Dwight Nevil, Tanglewood on Texoma in Pottsboro, a former Tour player who won the Magnolia Classic, has finished second the past two years and looms as a title threat.

RIVES McBEE, Las Colinas Sports Center in Irving and former Midland CC assistant, is another highly-regarded entry. He won last year and in 1977.

Tour player Rocky Thompson of Brookston, the 1978 winner, might play if he isn't eligible for the Hall of Fame Tournament in Pinehurst, N.C.

Two other champions are in the field—Ras Allen of Los Rios CC in Plano and Clayton Cole, Dallas CC. Allen claimed titles in 1972 and 1973 while Cole was the 1974 winner.

Robert Hoyt, Brook Hollow GC in Dallas, twice a second place finisher in the State Open; Jimmy Powell, Stevens Park GC, Dallas; and Burt Baine, Ridglea CC, Fort Worth, are other contenders.

IN THE OPENING round, four berths in the Oct. 7-11 LaJet Classic will be up for grabs. McBee is already exempt as the 1981 Sectional champion.

Two-time winner Doug Higgins, Diamond Oaks Golf & CC in Fort Worth, rates as an overwhelming favorite in the NTPGA Seniors, which will be held in conjunction with the first two rounds.

Two spots in the Dec. 2-5 PGA Seniors will be decided in the opening round.

There will also be competition in five age groups—50-54, 55-59, 60-64, 65-69 and 70-and-over.

A preliminary pro-am is scheduled Sept. 13. Entry fee is $50 for amateurs and deadline is Sept. 7. A special show by dennis Walters will follow the pro am.

A BONUS of $500 in merchandise awaits the Sectional winner, if he is using one of the new Pro Dyn steel woods. The Chicago company will give $400 for second, $300 for third, $200 for fourth and $100 for fifth, if any of these players are using its 17-4 stainless steel woods. Also, Pro-Dyn will give a set of three woods to the player who is closest-to-the-pin on a designated par-3 in each of the first three rounds.

A check for $1,000 will be given if a member of the NTPGA Hole-in-One Club makes an ace during the tournament. Otherwise, $250 will go to each of the four players closest-to-the-pin on the par threes in the final round.

UNC-Pitt matches top Heisman Trophy candidates

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Pitt quarterback Dan Marino and North Carolina running back Kelvin Bryant have much to gain — and much to lose — when their nationally ranked teams kick off their college football seasons.

Not only will a loss cripple the national championship hopes of the top-ranked Panthers or the fifth-ranked Tar Heels, but the two players also have plenty riding on the nationally televised game tonight.

Marino and Bryant are among the best college football players in the country. Marino was the nation's best passer last season, throwing for nearly 2,900 yards and 37 touchdowns. Bryant was headed for an all-time single season scoring record with 90 points after three games last year when he suffered a knee injury.

The two are prominent candidates for the Heisman Trophy, and an outstanding performance in the game could prove a springboard to the top individual award in college sports.

"I'll just try to keep running hard," said Bryant, a senior. "I know it's going to be one of the best defenses I've ever played against."

"I feel honored I'm a candidate," said Marino. "On the other hand, I'm team oriented. I want Pitt to win. But I'd be happy to go to New York and accept the award."

TED BATTLES
BATTLE SCENE

No, there has been no request by either side to renegotiate Jackie Sherrill's contract; yes, there is disappointment that UTEP blew its chances for a perfect (0-11) season; no, Ohio State will not concede to Baylor despite the Bears' demolition of North Texas State last week, and, yes, the seat is hot in Knoxville.

So far the college football season has been only a scattered crackle of picket line musketry, yet preseason polls have already have been shot full of holes.

What's going to happen when they start rolling the cannons into place, like tonight's Pittsburgh-North Carolina TV howitzer? It almost seems a shame, doesn't it, that two such highly-ranked teams like these should meet so early. Still, they might as well lose to each other, as to have Furman or Lebanon Valley pull the rug from under them.

HOWEVER, THE game for the national championship may have been played Monday night when Georgia beat the defending national champions, Clemson, 13-7. You'll recall, last year Clemson scored a September win over defending national champion Georgia, but no one believed it. Not until the pollsters had rambled through a dozen or so No. 1s and Penn State finally beat Pitt, 48-14, the last No. 1 before they turned to Clemson, did they accept what was so obvious the first week.

If last week's sampling is any indication, it will be another confidence-quaking season for the pollsters, those peerless experts who so accurately reflect the last week's scores in this week's polls.

These are the same guys who spent all winter and summer figuring out how it was all going to come out this season. And now look.

SOME OF the polls blithely ignored the traditional winning bloodlines of the University of Texas and substituted Texas A&M high in the national rankings, theorizing that the hiring of Sherrill from Pittsburgh would convert the Aggies into an instant winner. It was a headache Jackie could have done without. He was still trying to explain how a football coach could command more than a university president without this.

The Aggies were held in such high regard, you'd have thought A&M had hired Bear Bryant, soothsayers placed so much confidence in Sherrill's wand-waving talents.

Come to think of it, the Aggies did hire the Bear once. He went 1-9 in his debut year at College Station.

Still, the Aggies, favored by 15 points, didn't figure to have any trouble with Boston College. BC lucked out on the Aggies a year ago at Chestnut Hill, but there was no way that was going to happen again. It didn't. There was no question this time.

JOHNNY MAJORS won a national title at Pittsburgh a few years ago and then went home to Knoxville to rebuild the University of Tennessee, his alma mater, a school with a fine football heritage.

Always a strong contender in Worst 10, Gosh-Awfulest 20 rankings, UTEP spoiled it all by knocking off neighborhood rival New Mexico State. Now Miner fans don't know what's in store for them. They might even win another one before the season's over.

A lot of theories have been offered about UTEP's lingering football difficulties, but things haven't been the same since they changed the name from Texas Western. Somehow Texas Western is for Real Men. UTEP is Quiche.

BAYLOR didn't create any tremors in beating North Texas State, 20-17, but then it's tough to beat an opponent who has a head coach (Corky Nelson) who was coaching for you until two months ago. The Bears didn't have any secrets.

And wasn't that the same Miami team that beat No.1 Penn State last year. The Hurricane finished with a rush last year and maybe had delusions of grandeur for 1982 when along came Florida, 17-14.

By the way did you see what Guilford did to Hampden-Sydney?

NFL players reject offer

WASHINGTON (AP) — With the National Football League regular season scheduled to open in just three days, the prospect of a player strike appeared more likely following the union's rejection of management's latest offer.

Without setting a specific strike deadline, the executive committee of the NFL Players Association voted Wednesday night to move up the range of a possible league-wide walkout to occur between the second and fourth weeks of the season. Previously, the committee had said the strike would come between the second and fifth weeks of the season.

"We will have to demonstrate to them (the owners) that the players have the ability to shut them down," said Ed Garvey, the union's executive director said before the executive committee vote. "...we will have to set a strike deadline. The time is getting short."

Dykes was also pleased with the play of defensive linemen Anthony Adams and Eric Cooper against Coronado.

Paul Cox and Mercurio will again share the quarterbacking chores for the Rebels. Both had good outings in the same role last week. Mercurio completed four of six passes for 65 yards while Cox completed one of three for 36. Luther Johnson caught four of the passes for 92 yards with some pro-style grabs. The passing game seems to be far ahead of the Rebel teams of the last few years.

MERCURIO AND Cox may end up sharing the QB chores the whole season if the trend continues. Neither has proven that one should sit on the bench at this stage. The positive thing is that both will be pushed to perform with both playing well.

Tight end Mike Barton was the hard luck player for the Rebels last week. He was wide open on one pass play, but the ball was overthrown. Then he appeared to have a TD on another pass, but a Coronado player made a great interception at the goal line. Barton missed much of the game with leg cramps.

NFL veterans victims of knife

For Ted McKnight and Don Calhoun, however, the future is no.

McKnight, the sixth all-time runner with the Chiefs, and Calhoun, the Patriots' third-leading career rusher, were cut Wednesday.

McKnight, a starter since 1978, gained 2,344 yards in five seasons. He played in Kansas City's first five games last season before suffering ligament damage in his right knee that sidelined him for the rest of the season.

Calhoun lost his place on New England's roster when the Patriots signed fullback Mark van Eeghen, the Oakland Raiders' all-time rusher, on Wednesday.

Crane seeks second straight win

McCamey hosts MHS JV

By CHAD PUERLING
Sports Writer

McCamey fans might be looking for a somewhat more sedate game this Friday than they had against Iraan last week when the Badgers scored the winning two-point conversion with 26 seconds left in the game. But head coach Larry Nabors says he has other plans for the Badger faithful.

"We have a tendency to make our games close," he said, "It gets the crowds to come back."

But if this week's contest against the Midland Junior Varsity is going to be a close one there will have to be some unusual changes in both teams.

McCamey is a team which has averaged more than 300 yards per game over the last couple of years while the Bullpups attack resembles the less than explosive MHS offense.

IN OTHER area games, Rankin will travel to Sterling City where someone will have to leave with an even 1-1 record while the other team will have a 2-0 start in the young season. Rankin opened the '82 campaign with a 29-19 win over Eldorado and Sterling City shutout Imperial 23-0.

The surprising Golden Cranes will try for a two-game win streak as they entertain Marfa. After a dismal 0-10 '81 season, Crane blanked Reagan County 17-0 last week.

The Greenwood Rangers, who lost their opener to Jal, N.M., may have to wait another week before tasting victory as they go on the road to take on the powerful Wink Wildcats.

Class AA Stanton takes on its second of three AAA opponents as they travel to Coahoma. Last week the Buffaloes beat Tahoka 15-0 while Coahoma lost to powerhouse Kermit 25-0.

AS FOR McCamey, the Bullpups' only touchdown of the season but it came when the Pecos defense missed an easy tackle in a 13-8 loss.

On the other hand McCamey rolled up 303 yards in offense, 222 coming on the ground, against Iraan. The only things that kept the game close were seven McCamey fumbles, four of which the Badgers lost.

"We lost two of those fumbles inside their (Iraan's) two yard line," Nabors said, "That's why the game was so close."

Nabors said the defense had been ahead of the offense (through the pre-season games) until last week.

"OUR OFFENSE looked better than the defense," he said, "and that's a switch from the first two games. Our kids were strong the first half but they let up in the second half."

The lack of scoring by the Midland JV against Pecos didn't seem to bother Nabors who was impressed by the Bullpups offense after scouting the Pecos game.

"Midland came off the ball well on offense," he said. "They are young, like us, but they play aggressively and execute well."

Midlnd JV coach Rick Wood realizes that his team's ability to move the ball and put some points on the board could well be the deciding factor.

"We've been working on the offense a bunch this week," he said, "We're trying to make it simple."

SINCE THE sophomore team doesn't have a game this week Wood will be taking the sophomores and juniors to McCamey which should give him more depth than he is use to having. "A lot of sophomores will be see action in this game," he said.

"Later in the second half we had a touchdown called back on a motion penalty," Wood said.

Defensively Wood felt his team played very well and he thinks they're ready for McCamey. "We'll be okay," he said.

get out of hand. He was not in control of the situation at all."

THE MANDLIKOVA-Austin match, suspended by rain Tuesday, was resumed with Tracy holding a 5-4 lead in the first set. She won that set but then faltered in the second after taking a 3-1 lead.

"The turning point was when I broke her at 3-3 in the second set and then I won my serve for 4-3," Mandlikova said. "I just played every point and hoped that I could break her and win my serve. And I finally broke her."

Austin gave Hana credit.

"She won it," Tracy said. "I was disappointed on the way I played the big points because that's where I think I am the toughest. If they are going to win a big point, they are going to have to work for it. I just didn't feel strong up here," she said, pointing to her head.

Meanwhile, Jaeger was having her troubles with Rush.

"I didn't feel well in the first set," she said. "I was up 2-0 and then all of a sudden, it was weird, I was missing shots I shouldn't have. I was really letting her into the match and not concentrating at all."

Rush won the set but Jaeger came back and won 12 of 13 games.

Lendl, who avoided an upset earlier in the tournament with a gruelling five-set victory over Tim Mayotte, was concerned with Warwick, who had beaten two seeded players, Yannick Noah of France and Jose-Luis Clerc of Argentina, en route to the quarterfinals.

Cosmos nip Sockers

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Giorgio Chinaglia, under criticism during the year for showing signs of age, took only one shot in the second half, but it was all the Cosmos needed to vault into the Soccer Bowl for the fifth time in six years.

"With most players, you don't want to give them half a chance," said Chinaglia's teammate Rick Davis. "With Giorgio, you can't give him one-third of a chance because he'll burn you."

Chinaglia broke out of his doldrums with a goal at 1:51 of overtime to give the Cosmos a clinching 2-1 victory over the San Diego Sockers Wednesday night in the North American Soccer League semifinal playoffs.

"That's Giorgio," said Sockers' goalkeeper Volkmar Gross. "He's been doing nothing for the whole time except putting people to sleep. All of a sudden he explodes and the ball is in the net. I take my hat off to him."

Sconiers' homer gives Dukes 10-3 victory

ALBUQUERQUE (AP) — Daryl Sconiers' three-run homer was the decisive blow in a 17-hit attack that carried Spokane to a 10-3 win over Albuquerque Wednesday night in the championship series of the Pacific Coast League.

Albuquerque holds a 2-1 lead in the best-of-seven series that resumes Thursday in Spokane.

Spokane pounded five Albuquerque pitchers with all but one Indian getting at least two hits. Sconiers, who drove in four runs, added two singles.

Albuquerque had taken a 3-2 lead in the fifth inning on a solo homer by Mark Bradley. But the Indians rallied for two runs in the sixth off Albuquerque reliever Dean Rennicke. A single by Dick Schofield tied the game and Jose Moreno's RBI single gave the Indians the lead for good.

The win went to Spokane starter Steve Brown.

'Look, no hands' is no joke in gridder's case

ALVARADO, Texas (AP) — Rod McNeil, a defensive and offensive lineman, has been called for holding and grabbing the face mask. He laughed at the penalties. McNeil has no hands.

McNeil, 16, lost his hands in an accident when he was 9.

"We were moving our house and I was riding on top," McNeil said. "I slipped and grabbed a power line to keep from falling."

"Everything was normal when I got out of the hospital, except that I didn't have any hands," he said. "I wanted to play football just as soon as I could. I had no doubt about not playing."

McNeil, who stands 5-foot-10 and weighs 140 pounds, plays hard on the junior varsity team at Alvarado High School, said his coach in this town 30 miles southwest of Dallas.

"I don't make any allowances for him. If he makes a mistake on the field, he gets chewed out and if he makes a good play, he gets a pat on the tail, just like anybody else," said Coach Jim Bennett. "To see a kid like Rod, and the effort he gives, makes coaching all worth while.

The only problem he has with suiting up is snapping his shoulder pads in place, and "there is always somebody around to help me out," McNeil said.

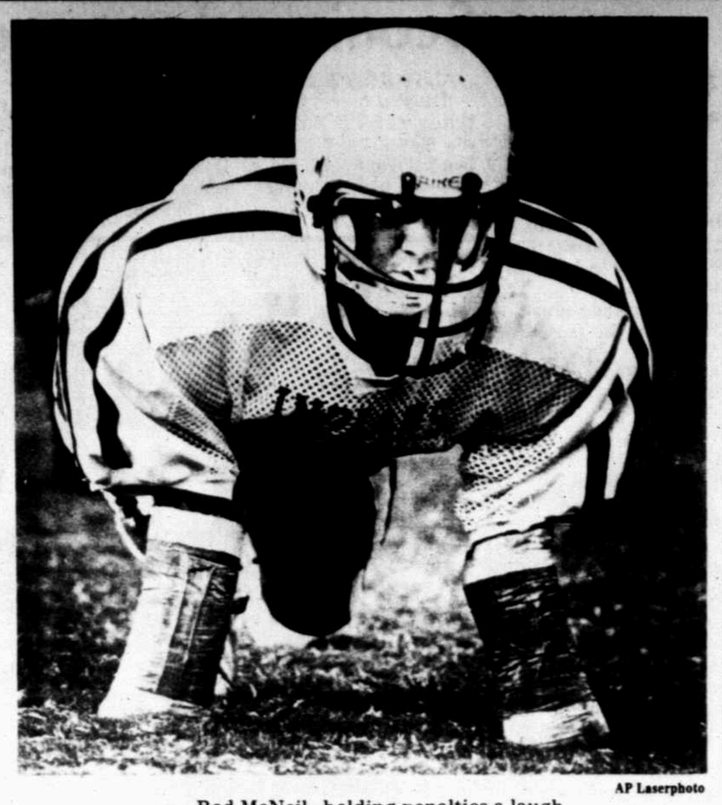

Opponents learn to take him seriously, teammates said.

"Sometimes the opposing linemen will look at Rod and whisper to each other," said Todd Johnson, a junior offensive tackle. "Rod won't say anything. He'll just hit 'em. He has a job to do and he gets it done."

"They take me lightly at first, but after the first play, they don't," McNeil said. "They can whisper all they want to. I'm just happy to be out there.

"I've had one holding and one face mask penalty called on me. I thought it was really funny when the refs called them on me," he said. "The coaches and my teammates couldn't believe it. They really gave the refs a bad time about it. I just laughed."

"I would like to think that his positive attitude comes from his father, Don, and me," said Mary

Memories haunt Tampa Bay's Bucs

By FRED GOODALL
AP Sports Writer

TAMPA, Fla. — As the Tampa Bay Buccaneers prepare to defend their second NFC Central championship in three years, memories of their first try still haunt the club.

"I think we really learned a lot that year," defensive end Lee Roy Selmon says, recalling the 1980 season when the Bucs tumbled to 5-10-1 after winning the crown in 1979. "The main lesson being that it's twice as hard to stay there as it is to get there."

Veteran tight end Jimmie Giles recalls the complacency that hit a young team that had shocked the football world by making the transition from National Football League doormat to division titlist so quickly.

"It was a matter of being young and inexperienced and not really knowing what was happening to us," says Giles. "This year should be different. It's a combination of things that will make us better, but most of all it's experience and maturity."

Tampa Bay Coach John McKay launches the club's seventh season with perhaps his most talented club, despite off-season trades which sent Ricky Bell — the running back McKay preferred to draft over Tony Dorsett — and linebackers Dewey Selmon and David Lewis to San Diego.

Doug Williams, who threw for 3,563 yards and 19 touchdowns during a 9-7 campaign a year ago, established himself as one of the most consistent quarterbacks in the NFC and his continued development will be a key to the Bucs' hopes to repeat.

Detroit, which has flirted with making the playoffs each of the past two seasons, could mount a strong challenge under fifth-year Coach Monte Clark if the Lions can overcome their problems on the road.

The team was 7-1 at home — the lone loss coming to Tampa Bay in the regular season finale — but was 1-7 on the road.

Green Bay, 8-8 under Bart Starr, closed with a rush after a 2-6 start, but a season-ending loss to the New York Jets prevented the Packers from making the playoffs.

Minnesota failed to win the division crown for only the third time in 14 years and is hoping quarterback Tommy Kramer, coming back from alcoholism rehabilitation, can lead the club, 7-9 a year ago, back to the top.

Despite the presence of Walter Payton, who rushed for 1,222 yards, Chicago's offense ranked 26th among the 28 NFL teams during a 6-10 season.

Former Dallas assistant Mike Ditka, who starred for the Bears when the team last won an NFL title in 1963, has replaced Neill Armstrong as coach. He brings with him an offensive system similar to the Cowboys and has drafted Jim McMahon in hopes the former Brigham Young quarterback can run it.

McKay went into the April draft looking for help for an offensive line that proved inconsistent in 1981. He found it in No. 1 draft choice Sean Farrell, a 260-pound guard out of Penn State.

He then swapped next year's No. 1 choice to Chicago for the second-round pick that landed Booker Reese, a 6-foot-6, 260-pound defensive end from tiny Bethune-Cookman College, to bolster the pass rush.

Yankees kill two Birds with one stone

By Associated Press

You have to hand it to the New York Yankees — by beating the Baltimore Orioles, they killed two birds with one stone.

Hitting four home runs, the Yankees whipped the Orioles 10-5 Wednesday night and stopped a pair of streaks: the Orioles' 10-game winning streak and Jim Palmer's personal 11-game streak.

"They throttled us the first two games," said Dave Winfield, who hit one of the Yankee homers. "You don't want to be swept and embarrassed."

The Yankees apparently caught Palmer on his worst night of the season.

"It was totally different from the games he's been throwing all year," said Baltimore catcher Joe Nolan. "But eventually you have a game like that. He's proven to be a good pitcher all year, but it's tough to go out there time after time and slam the door. The hitters are going to get you once in a while. It was just a bad night all around."

Palmer, 13-4, had not only won 11 straight games before Wednesday night, he had not lost in his 18 previous starts, dating back to May 30.

The streak which propelled the Orioles into second place in the AL East softened the loss for Weaver: "It ain't too bad to win 17 of 18 and 10 in a row."

Along with Winfield's homer, a solo shot, Ken Griffey hit a three-run homer and Jerry Mumphrey and Roy Smalley walloped bases-empty homers for the Yankees. With his homer, Winfield became only the ninth player to hit 30 or more homers in each league and only the fifth right-handed-hitting Yankee to get 30 in a season. Jay Howell, 1-1, who allowed four hits in eight innings, was the winner.

Royals 6, Mariners 2

Vida Blue scattered five hits and Hal McRae drove in two runs with a triple and a single, boosting his major league leading total to 118, as Kansas City beat Seattle. Blue, 12-9, struck out six and walked one in his fifth complete game of the season.

White Sox 5, Angels 3

Vance Law then greeted Ricky Steirer with a single to score Fisk for a 5-3 lead.

Rich Dotson, 11-11, allowed seven hits in 72-3 innings as he posted his eighth consecutive win. He walked two and struck out seven before getting help from Salome Barojas, who gained his 17th save.

Blue Jays 6, A's 5

Barry Bonnell and Jesse Barfield drove in two runs each as Toronto beat Oakland and completed a three-game sweep of the A's. Bonnell tripled and singled twice, and Barfield doubled and hit his 13th homer in the seventh as Toronto won in Oakland for the sixth straight time.

Rangers 2, Twins 0

Left-hander Jon Matlack fired a one-hitter for seven innings and George Wright hit a two-run homer in the third to lead Texas over Minnesota.

Matlack, 7-6, making his first start since a demotion to the bullpen July 10, pitched his best game of the season, as he walked two, struck out four and gave only a bad-hop single to Lenny Faedo inthe fifth before giving way to reliever Danny Darwin to start the eighth inning. Paul Mirabella finished up to complete a four-hitter, gaining his third save.

Indians 2, Red Sox 0

Ed Whitson tossed a seven-hitter and Andre Thornton's first-inning double drove home the only run he needed, lifting Cleveland past Boston. Whitson, 3-2, struck out two and walked two to record his first complete game of the season.

Brewers 8, Tigers 7

Moose Haas, 11-8, relieved Milwaukee starter Bob McClure in the fifth inning and earned the victory as the Brewers increased their AL East lead to four games over runnerup Baltimore and 5½ over third-place Boston.

Moore's two-run double in a three-run third finished Jerry Ujdur, 9-8.

KENNY REDIN'S Fin & Feather

Texas investigators figure it took no more than an hour for the sordid event to unfold. When it was over, 19 deer lay dead or dying inside two small pens on a ranch near Laredo.

One of the first casualties in the slaughter was a magnificent 19-point whitetail buck. And, because of his death, thousands of Texas sportsmen will suffer.

The buck was the cornerstone in an elaborate and expensive breeding program that Texas game biologists are confident would have helped improve the quality of the state's whitetail herd. Had he been able to contribute through a few more breeding seasons, the "superbuck" would have helped game managers seed his characteristics of massive body size and trophy antler development into the Texas deer herd.

THE KILLING of Yellow Buck, as he was called, and the 18 other deer — including several does that were carrying his offspring — was a monumental setback for the four-year-old program based on Laredo business man John Leyendecker's ranch.

Leyendecker has amassed a reward fund of nearly $9,000 for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the gunman and any accomplices responsible for the slaughter. But, neither the reward nor an eight-month inestigation by the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department has flushed out the killer..

The story of the massacre and the subsequent manhunt to find the deer slayer is detailed in the inaugural Texas Edition of September Southern Outdoors Magazine.

Southern Outdoors Editor Ed Spencer says, "One can understand the motivation of the killer, even if he can't be forgiven, since the magnificent rack certainly earned thousands of dollars on the black market. But, to kill the other 18 deer and le

Wallace always wanted to be stand-up comic

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

Some days begin good and go downhill from there, while others start bad and get better. Either is better than the day which begins bad and gets worse. Now we've all had those. Another experience we all have shared is the embarrassing moment, usually occurring on a day that may have started bright, but has taken a sudden downward twist. Plop.

It is important in such times to retain a sense of humor — not always possible, but definitely helpful.

Such a time befell this writer when she began to write a feature on the comedian George Wallace. An intensive search of all her notebooks — at home, in her car, at work — revealed a disturing fact and a startling mystery — the notes were missing. A second search was instigated to no avail. The moments turned into minutes and the minutes into hours; still no notes.

WALLACE WAS TRAVELING with Tom Jones and his crew, all of whom will be onstage tonight at Chaparral Center. (Tickets are still available for the 8 p.m. show.) But at deadline time, they weren't in Midland; they were in Lubbock.

I rang the number and crossed my fingers.

Wallace seemed like a good sport when we did the original interview and, I hoped, equally as human. I knew I was about to find out.

Of course, he was still asleep.

"Is this George Wallace?" I asked, as politely and softly as possible.

"Yes, this is George," came the sleepy reply.

I swallowed hard and said, "Hi, George. You probably don't remember me, but this is Georgia Temple with the ..."

"Midland, yeah, I remember you," George replied, adding in a very easy tone, "What's going on?"

"I'm so sorry to disturb you; I know I woke you up," I said.

"That's OK, I can go back to sleep," he said. "What can I do for you?"

Taking a deep breath, I said the zinger, "Well I'm really in a bind. This is so embarrassing, but I can't find my notes on our interview and I'm on deadline. Are you sure you can go back to sleep?"

"Sure, I'm sure," George replied. "Ask me some questions."

George Wallace

"I remember we talked about the story I read which said you announced to your family as a young child — I think it said you were six — that you were going to be a standup comedian," I began.

"Yeah, I remember that," George replied, "I just knew I wanted to be a comic at that time, but I don't remember announcing it, but like I said before, it sounds good anyway."

We had laughed before about this item in a feature on him and about how that must be the way publicity stories get started: Taking the truth and expanding on it. Although it wasn't true, as best George could remember, he decided it was a "keeper." He said then, something to the effect of, "Let's throw it out there and let it grow." Then he had laughed.

It is true that one of his earliest idols was a comic, one he has since had the opportunity to meet unexpectedly and spend some time with — Red Skelton.

The opportunity presented itself in Augusta, Ga., when George "just happened to see him (Skelton) outside a hotel."

As George explained again, sounding as enthusiatic this time as last, "That was exciting. He's the big reason I'm in this business. We spent the entire day together; it turned out to be a very interesting evening."

Although George always knew he wanted to be a comic, he was also aware of the financial problems inherent in that line of work. To ensure he could make a living, he graduated from the University of Akron with two degrees, one in marketing and the other in transportation. Then he headed for New York City.

After working in advertising for several years, he became a vice president of Douglas Leigh Advertising Agency. Then he made the plunge into the world of clubs and stand-up comics.

"I was just hanging around after being on stage one evening and they asked me to write the show," George said, adding, "That was very good. But after a year of writing I wanted to do my own material."

Quiting the Redd Foxx Show, George went back to work as a comic. That was 3½ years ago.

Today he has behind him guest appearances on Good Morning America, The John Davidson Show, The Mike Douglas Show, Merv Griffin and The Tonight Show, as well as becoming a regular performer and emcee at New York's Comic Strip. He also has traveled the country performing on the same bill with, among others, Diana Ross, George Benson, Natalie Cole, Earth, Wind and Fire, and currently Tom Jones.

HE STILL ENJOYS working New York clubs.

"We compete very hard in New York, trying to be on the No. 1 list," George said, adding, "I continue to work New York because it has continuously demanding crowds."

And that's what keeps him in shape and his material fresh because, although George has a mental note pad of routines and jokes, he constantly improvises.

"Thank's George," I said in closing.

"That's OK,' he replied, "Anytime."

"I really appreciate you being such a sport. Please go back to sleep," I said.

"Don't worry, I will," he said.

By The Hearst Feature Service

I recalled her performance in "Soap" and on Broadway some years ago in "110 in the Shade" and "Baker Street" (for which she received a Tony nomination). As a singer, she also appeared on stage in "Hair," "Grease" and other musicals. It's difficult to believe she is as young as she looks.

Inga has been married for almost 30 years to actor-singer Lowell Harris, and is the mother of two sons, ages 28 and 22. Despite some lean years in the past, they are a devoted, happy family. And adding to her happiness is her Emmy nomination as best supporting actress in "Benson" (her second time around). How will she feel come September — win or lose?

"I'm just so excited to be nominated again," she says. "This time, I really have some tough competition — Loretta Swit ('M.A.S.H.'), Eileen Brennan ('Private Benjamin'), Andrea Martin ('SCTV'), Maria Gibbs ('The Jeffersons') and Anne Meara ('Archie Bunker's Place'). That's some lineup.

"I'm looking forward to attending the Emmy Awards this year. I bought an expensive dress two years ago when I was nominated and then the strike came up and I couldn't attend."

Win or lose, Inga goes happily into her fourth season of "Benson," which she calls "a piece of cake." Her German accent comes au natural, as does most of her work, which began at a young age. She was encouraged (but not always supported) by a mother and two adoring Phi Beta Kappa brothers.

Inga has appeared in some pretty heavy fare, including "Romeo and Juliet" and roles in Philco, Goodyear, Hallmark and Du Pont TV productions.

"I know what it is to be tired," she admits. "I've played Ophelia and Juliet back-to-back, but it's nothing compared with that little TV opening night every week."

How did she get the role of Gretchen Kraus?

"I was doing 'A Man For All Seasons' with Charlton Heston on stage in Los Angeles, and was tired and suffering from a slight case of the flu. I was asked to read for the part, and rebelled. I had worked with some of the people on this show previously, and felt they should know my work. My agent finally convinced me, and when I read the script, it was so funny the first time around that I did it with a German accent. I laughed my head off."

Midland singer's dreams are coming true

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

Miss Patchell, a mezzo-soprano, was singing the second lead in "The Magic Flute" this summer at Carmel, Calif., when another singer, Michael Burt of England, asked her, "Why don't you come to New York and study?"

Miss Patchell responded with the usual answer she gives to that question, "It would be just too much to

"I thought that was the end of that," Miss Patchell said in a recent interview.

She was wrong.

"Mike called from New York City) and he said, 'I play golf with this man and he's a wealthy man in New York. He and his wife need someone to take care of their children, ages three and six. Why not give her a call?' " Miss Patchell related.

She had told Burt she was definitely interested in living and working in New York, but didn't have the necessary connections. She knew she would have to be able to work at a job, a special one, where her employer would understand her needs and allow her the time to study and take lessons.

It is necessary for most singers who study in New York, Miss Patchell said, "to be subsidized. You need energy; you need time. The studies involve languages, acting and body classes. You can't be doing three or four jobs at one time."

"I told him to let me know if he heard of anything, but I didn't expect to hear from him," she said, adding, in that "I can't believe this is true" tone, "And he pursued it."

Now it was up to her.

She called the mother in New York.

"She knew I wanted a career. She said to me on the phone, 'I understand that you want to be a singer?' I said, 'Yes.' She said, 'If we are both flexible, this whole thing will work. We don't have a piano, but we'll make sure you get one.'

"I asked her if she needed references and she said, 'No, Michael's is enough.' "

Miss Patchell said she will be living in the couple's home, in Manhattan's upper East Side, and will care for the two girls when they aren't in school.

As Miss Patchell said of her new employer, "They know the reason I'm coming to New York is to study opera; to see opera. I have to have the free time to do that. I have 8 a.m. to noon off every day and two evenings off a week for opera and more if possible," Miss Patchell said, adding, "They have somebody who has worked with the children before who is available part-time."

She said she will also make three trips to Europe this year with her new employer and the two girls.

The couple will pick up Miss Patchell in their limousine when she arrives Sept. 15. They told her it was unnecessary for her to bring her car as she can drive any one of their four vehicles.

Before leaving West Texas, Miss Patchell will give a one night performance. The date is set for Friday at 8 p.m. at First Christian Church. The free recital will feature a combination of lieder, oratio and opera from works by Schubert, Bizet, Mozart and Bach. She will be accompanied by Darryl Knapp.

Miss Patchell has performed solos with the Marin Symphony, the Dallas Symphony, Pro Musica of Salt Lake City, the Midland-Odessa Symphony, the Corpus Christi Symphony, the UCLA Symphony, in addition to singing solo at the Carmel Bach Festival and on a Europeran tour with Ostschweizer Kammerorchester.

While living in New York City another of Miss Patchell's dreams will come true; she will be studying with Joan Dornemann, Metropolitan Opera coach and prompter. She also will have as a voice teacher Conrad Osborn.

"Watching her do that class, I thought it would be incredible to work with her. She has so much energy," Miss Patchell said.

It sounds more and more like a Cinderella story. Of it all, Miss Patchell said, "Right after I found out about this I didn't sleep. It's a little scary, but I've always heard — Do the thing you're most afraid of. The only thing to do is to try."

Trucker writes songs on the road

KINSTON, N.C. (AP) — If you see Jerry Dunbar tooling down the road, his mouth going as fast as his tractor-trailer wheels, he's probably just working out the lyrics to his next song.

Dunbar will tell you that his song-writing career evolved out of the seat of a tractor-trailer and an old shoe box where he keeps the songs he finally puts on paper. At last count, the box held more than 100 tunes.

Just recently, one of those songs was pulled out of that box to become a hit single regionally, "Semi-Diesel Blues." It was recorded by the Super Grit Cowboy Band, a group which originated in Kinston.

Perhaps Dunbar might have been a writer under any circumstances, but he says the majority of his ideas have come from on-the-road experiences during his 17 years as a driver for Kinston's Overnite Trucking Company.

Those long hauls are when Dunbar comes up with most of his songs. "I've thought up a lot of tunes while I'm driving. And just in case something hits me I keep a pad in my pocket all the time," Dunbar says.

He has been writing songs almost as long as he has been driving trucks. In that time, he says he has come up with some doozies.

"I'll tell you," he said in a confidential whisper, "Sometimes I get tickled at myself. I'll be riding along and think of something real funny."

Pop music industry in slump in Britain

LONDON (AP) — Home-taping and little cash in the pockets of unemployed teen-agers has sent the pop music industry into a slump in Britain and other European countries, with album sales and concert attendance down sharply.

"You can't guarantee a living any more," says Justin Hayward, 35-year-old lead singer of The Moody Blues, one of the British bands to survive from the swinging 1960s.

Hayward points to home-taping, from FM radio and other sources, as a primary reason for the slump, but also claims that a lot of today's bands aren't up to scratch.

"The decline in album sales is extremely worrying," says Richard Robson of the British Phonographic Industry. "We estimate that 22 percent of all material recorded at home in 1981 would otherwise have been bought in the shops."

Album sales dipped by more than three million in Britain last year, to 64 million, says Robson. "Compare that figure to 1975, when 91.6 million albums were sold in this country, and you get some idea of the impact."

Record companies and artists are lobbying Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's government to introduce a levy on blank tapes, as the Germans have done.

"Home-taping has got out of all proportion," Robson argues. "Someone buys an album and maybe six friends record it practically free of charge. The blank cassette can cost as little as one-fifth of the album price."

He also points to Britain's record unemployment of nearly 3.2 million, or 13.4 percent. "That obviously means less disposable income to spend on records," he says.

Elsewhere in Europe, the Swedes are buying 10 percent fewer albums this year and 20 percent fewer pre-recorded cassettes, says Eddie Landquist of the Association of Record Suppliers. Bert Karlsson of Sweden's Mariann records says the expanding video market is diverting money from the pop industry.

Jimmy Cliff and Frank Zappa recently failed to fill a 10,000-seat stadium in Vienna, while in Turkey, record sales have dropped for three years. In the Netherlands, sales of records have fallen by 20 percent in three years as cash-conscious buyers become more choosy.

"They do not buy on impulse any more," says a spokesman for the Dutch Association of Record Shop Owners.

Mick Brandes, lead guitarist with the Dutch new wave band The Tapes, says slumping record sales contributed to the group's breakup. "A few weeks ago I got my royalties from Germany for 1981. They were a mere 450 guilders ($166)," he says.

Against the trend, promoters in Italy, Denmark, Norway and Belgium report keen demand for rock. An annual summer concert in Belgium attracted 61,000 fans this year, compared with 47,000 in 1981.

"I know that in the United Kingdom and the United States concert attendance is down. That's because tickets are far too expensive there," says Belgian promoter Herman Schueremans. "The market is saturated and the audiences are getting more selective."

Brian Southall of EMI Records in London — which gave the world the Beatles in the 1960s — says in the past 18 months, EMI has halved its roster of artists to about 60.

"When contracts come to an end, we have not renewed them," he says. "We have had to be more selective to cope with the recession."

Smaller record companies appear to have survived better and hundreds of independent labels have sprung up.

"While some companies are trying to expand like mad for new talent, we know we have the artists to keep our ship afloat, and we keep the company very tight," says Chris Bull of Chysalis Records in London.

NEW YORK (AP) — Arthur Fonzarelli, one of the most eligible skirt-chasers on television, will have his wings clipped on "Happy Days" this season. Ironically, the same actress who played little Richie Cunningham's girl friend eight years ago will become the Toast of Milwaukee as Fonzie's steady lady.

Love won't bloom immediately Sept. 28, when the ABC hit begins its 10th season. "She'll turn off to him at first," says casting director Bobby Hoffman.

What happens is that Fonzie (Henry Winkler) is smitten by a divorced mother and follows her home. "Mom, there's a hood out here to meet you," is the way the daughter puts it.

Mom is Linda Purl, who made an impression in ABC's forgettable "Mansions of America" miniseries last season. Daughter is Heather O'Rourke, the little girl in "Poltergeist."

Miss Purl, who was on the stage in Ibsen's "Doll House" recently, won the coveted role over some 400 actresses.

"We also strongly considered Mary Crosby (the woman who shot J.R.)," says Hoffman. "But she was tied up."

If the sultry Miss Crosby were selected, the role would have been played differently than with the tiny Miss Purl. "We were looking for the qualities of strength and femininity combined," says Hoffman.

Miss Purl will definitely not play a greaser. Hoffman says oil and oil didn't mix in 1976, when Pinky Tuscadoro (Roz Kelly), the sexy motorcycle queen, didn't offer enough contrast to Fonzie. "They were competing with each other. The chemistry didn't work," he says.

For the daughter's role, Hoffman considered another Steven Spielberg sensation, Drew Barrymore, the spunky sister in "E.T." "Her agent said Miss Barrymore doesn't do episodic television," says Hoffman.

There are those in Hollywood who are surprised that the respected Miss Purl chose to get involved with weekly situation comedy. But peer recognition isn't everything. It's not easy to pass up national popularity, and "Happy Days" is one of the best stardom vehicles around.

Winkler himself was a tapped-out actor from the Yale School of Drama when he got the Fonzie role, a suporting part that he turned into cult hero with solid acting, comic timing and some classic idiosyncracies.

Other famous "Happy Days" alumni include Robin Williams of "Mork and Mindy," Penny Marshall and Cindy Williams of "Laverne and Shirley," Cheryl Ladd of "Charlie's Angels," Jeff Conaway of "Taxi" and Morgan Fairchild of "Flamingo Road."

Half-dollar coin in mint condition

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Staff Artist: Jan Drake

The half-dollar coin, which for awhile seemed to be heading for the same forgotten fate as the $2 bill and quarter-size Susan B. Anthony dollar coin, may just be latent and waiting for renewed popularity.

The half dollar hardly shows up over the counter. But, contrary to a rumor which, at best, drew lackadaisical attention, the half dollar is not bound for extinction.

"No, that's not true," John Doom of the U.S. Bureau of the Mint in Washington, D.C., said Wednesday of rumors of the coin's demise. "What we did do was stop producing it at the first of the year, while the supply dwindled."

Demand for the copper-clad Kennedy half dollar was slight, the stock was high, and, yielding to popular demand, the Bureau of the Mint shifted emphasis to minting the scarce copper penny, which many Americans were hoarding as if it were silver.

"YOU CAN'T phase out a denomination unless you have authority of the Congress," said Boom, "and I'll tell you now, you won't get that authorization from Congress. I know politics in Congress."

He noted that use of the half dollar is not widespread. "I don't see a lot in circulation myself," though he observed that casinos and subway systems use them.

The Bureau of the Mint produced no general circulation 1982 halves, though the mint in San Francisco turned out 4½ million proofs of the coin for collectors and investors. In 1981, the U.S. Treasury produced 57 million halves. The year before, 77 million coins were stamped out.

However, the word in the numismatical world is that the coin may be produced later in the year.

"We can crank up at anytime and very easily turn out 20, 40, 50 million pieces," Doom said.

THE COIN APPEARS to be just about as scarce in the marketplace as it is in the Federal Reserve System's Dallas office.

"Now," said the Fed's Robert Blackwell, "I have plenty of pennies and no halves.

"We have no word on when they're going to resume production," said Blackwell, who noted that "they're not minting any (halves) because they have put the production into pennies."

What the Fed does have a surplus of is the Anthony dollar and the $2 bill. The Fed's Dallas office has on stock $7 million in Anthony coins and $32 million in the $2 bill. All told, the U.S. Treasury minted $1 billion in Anthony coins, and about $600 million are stockpiled.

"We have had them (the Anthony coins) in storage for three years, and nobody wants to use them," Blackwell said. "It's just like the $2 bill; we have $32 million in storage, and nobody wants to use them."

A Midland banker said there's no shortage of the half dollar in the Tall City. "Oh, no," the banker said. "We have very little demand for them; we have no problem getting them."

"I hardly ever see one," said Bonnie Rister. "I don't miss them at all."

"The quarter is my favorite," she said. "I don't know why. It just seems like I have more money if I have quarters."

Jack Chappell sees much utilitarian value in the quarter, which is the vending machine coin. The new half dollar has lost its appeal to him.

"I was a big fan of the silver halves," he said. "Seems like when the government took the silver content out (of the half dollars), they lost their concept of value, their glamour. They may go the way of the $2 bill unless inflation really goes wild.

"If somebody gives me a half dollar, what can I do with it?" asked Chappell, a lawyer. "Nothing. I have to ask somebody else for change."

Bob Bell, manager of Albertson's supermarket, said he no longer orders half dollars from the bank. Demand for the coin is virtually nil.

THE WALKING LIBERTY half dollar, which was first minted in 1916 and was discontinued in 1947, and its successor, the Franklin half dollar, which was last minted in 1963, were 90 percent silver. When it first appeared in 1964, the Kennedy half dollar was 90 percent silver, as were the dime and quarter, which have since been produced from copper and nickel. The 1965-69 halves are 40 percent silver, but in 1970, the coin followed the lead of the dime and quarter.

Lawrence Culver, proprietor of Tejas Coin & Stamp Co., said the half dollar is just about zero on the popularity scale.

"The half dollar accounted for 1 percent of coins in circulation (in 1981), and that's nothing," he said.

But Culver says that the Bureau of the Mint might create a demand, via a gimmick, for the Anthony coin, which first appeared in 1979, and the $2 bill, which the U.S. Treasury headlined in the 1976 Bicentennial.

Culver suggested that the Mint might package the Anthony coin and the $2 bill for the 1984 U.S. Olympics "and sell to the public as a rarity — a once in a lifetime deal. But I wouldn't buy any, because I know their worth."

U.S. yielding at IMF, World Bank meeting

By OWEN ULLMANN

TORONTO (AP) — After a week of pressure, attacks and isolation, the United States is edging closer to an agreement with 145 other nations on how to bolster a dangerously strained international financial system.

As the annual meeting of the International Monetary Fund and World Bank drew to an end today, the Americans were joining the urgent call for an increase in official lending aid to debt-ridden nations unable to pay their nervous private bankers.

The United States — which originally opposed any increase — still is holding out for a smaller increase than the other nations want.

On another contentious front involving long-term aid to the poorest nations, the World Bank slapped the United States for

An Analysis

The United States was alone on this decision also, as the 31 other donor nations agreed Wednesday to set up a "special fund" for development loans. U.S. companies will be barred from bidding on contracts funded through the special fund, as will other donors who refuse to contribute to it.

On the more urgent issue of short-term aid to countries flirting with default, U.S. officials expressed confidence that a final agreement would be reached next spring.

"I think there's a good chance — we're going to make a massive effort — to get it resolved by April," Treasury Undersecretary Beryl Sprinkel said Wednesday.

"We have already moved and we're willing to talk with our partners toward further narrowing of the differences," he told reporters. "I would expect a significant further narrowing by next April."

Although the Americans are willing to contribute more aid they had planned before coming here, U.S. officials faced continued attacks for not supporting at least a 50 percent increase in fund lending beginning in 1985, and for refusing to acknowledge how perilous the financial situation is.

The other nations say official aid is essential for the world system to weather the credit crises of Mexico and other major borrowers.

The fund holds $67 billion, but only about one-third of that is available now. Increased contributions by member nations are determined according to the size of their economies.

The United States, the largest contributor, wants to keep the increase to 25 percent or less, contending that any more would simply encourage more countries to try to borrow on easy terms.

But in recognition of the mounting financial crises affecting Mexico and other countries, the United States is proposing that an emergency fund be created by next April to deal only with cases that could shock the world's financial system.

Commonwealth Secretary-General Shridath Ramphal complained Wednesday that the United States almost single-handedly blocked the world community from moving toward an overhaul of a financial system in danger of collapse.

The world economy "is not merely being mismanaged, it's being allowed to operate in a kind of casino style," he said. "The message was that strong countries will make it and the devil take the hindmost."

The IMF, financed largely by the rich nations, makes short-term loans to governments on the condition that they move swiftly to correct the economic problems that put them deep in debt.

Sprinkel issued a stern warning to Mexico that it will have to undergo major changes in economic policy to obtain the emergency loans the troubled country is seeking from the IMF.

"I would expect significant adjustments will be necessary before the IMF would agree to provide funds," he said.

Mexico is conferring with the IMF on a plan for obtaining $4 billion to $5 billion in loans to help it through a severe cash shortgage. The crisis has made it impossible for the country to make payments on its $80 billion debt — the largest of any developing country.

World Bank bars U.S. firms from contracts

TORONTO (AP) — World Bank donor countries, angered by a congressional decision to cut U.S. contributions to the agency that gives interest-free loans to the world's neediest nations, barred U.S. companies from at least $640 million in foreign contracts.

The 31 other donors to the World Bank's International Development Agency — all but the United States — agreed on the ban Wednesday, during the joint annual meeting here of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund, World Bank spokesman Moeen Oureshi told a news conference.

Under terms of the arrangement, the other donors will be allowed in the next two fiscal years to channel their contributions into a "special fund" parallel to International Development Agency's regular lending pool.

Oureshi said the special fund was created in reaction to a congressional decision to stretch over four years the $3.24 billion IDA contribution that former President Jimmy Carter had promised would be delivered in three years, 1981 through 1983. The move, in effect, cut the annual U.S. contribution to the agency.

When some other nations also reduced their contributions in an attempt to put pressure on the United States, the IDA was forced to drop its 1982 lending to $2.7 billion, a 35 percent reduction from the planned $4.1 billion.

The IDA currently makes 50-year, interest-free loans for development projects in the poorest countries, such as India, Madagascar and Senegal.

Loans from regular IDA sources and the new parallel special fund "will be handled and administered in exactly the same way," Oureshi said.

The only difference is that contracts stemming from "special fund" projects will only be open to the developing nations and to donors who put money into the fund.

One World Bank official said the decision was more "symbolic" than practical and said it would have only a slight effect on U.S. companies. There was no immediate U.S. reaction to the decision.

Besides the United States, any countries that choose to give to IDA in the normal way will be also be excluded. Eleven nations — among them West Germany — have indicated they will stick with the regular IDA program, thus barring their companies from competing for special fund projects.

Six countries — Canada, Denmark, France, Italy, Norway and Sweden — have said they will contribute a total of $640 billion to the special fund, and the other 14 donors have yet to make up their minds.

Reagan's peace plan needs Jordan's Hussein

AMMAN, Jordan — When he left the White House last November after his first official meeting with President Reagan, Jordan's King Hussein turned to a diplomat and said, "Reagan is the first American president I have dealt with since Eisenhower who has a chance to resolve the Middle East situation."

Now, just 10 months later, Reagan has presented a Middle East initiative that, to be successful, requires Hussein, the elder statesman of the Arab-Israeli conflict, to play a central role.

One factor operating in favor of the U.S. plan, if it reaches the negotiating table, is the "very obvious chemical reaction" between the U.S. president and the Jordanian king, a Western diplomat said.

Hussein reportedly came away from his meeting with the president feeling Reagan was fair-minded. The two men get along very well and carry on a frequent correspondence, the diplomat added.

"That rapport will be very, very important" in the complex negotiations that must follow, the diplomat said, if the U.S. initiative has any chance to be implemented.

For now, however, Hussein, who has dealt with every American president on the Palestinian issue since Dwight D. Eisenhower, is biding his time, though Jordan has sent obvious signals that it was at least initially well disposed toward the plan, including guardedly optimistic remarks by officials, favorable press comment, and the unusual step of broadcasting Reagan's entire speech on television and radio.

Nevertheless, the first sign of interest in pursuing the plan must come from the Palestine Liberation Organization, a Jordanian official said, since the Arab world has designated Chairman Yasser Arafat's umbrella organization as the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people.

One side effect of the Reagan initiative already evident has been the forestallment, at least temporarily, of serious anti-American sentiment that was burgeoning, especially in Jordan and other moderate Arab countries, since the Israelis invaded Lebanon using U.S.-provided war materiel.

Meanwhile, Hussein and Arafat appear to be mending their relations which were almost nonexistent after Jordan expelled the PLO in 1970 and became little more than correct following a rapprochement in 1978 designed to combat the U.S. Camp David diplomacy.
