Washington Tractorcade Plans Set

By JOHNNY HOLMES
Avalanche-Journal Staff
PLAINVIEW—Asking farmers to join "the biggest movement in the history of the country," the American Agriculture Movement's national wagonmaster announced official plans for the national tractorcade to Washington during an AAM rally here Thursday.
Speaking in the Hale County Agriculture Center, Gerald McCathern of Hereford, who in two weeks will lead what he hopes to be 50,000 tractors to the nation's capital, said that the tractorcade will leave from seven points from South Dakota to Texas, including Amarillo, on Jan. 15. The tractors are scheduled to arrive in Washington, D.C. on Feb. 2, seven days before a scheduled congressional recess.
McCathern received a standing ovation from about 700 area farmers, most of whom were adorned in pro-American Ag buttons and "dump Carter" lapel stickers.
Better Price Is Goal
"We're going to go like you never saw. The only intention we have," he said, "is of bringing back a better price for our crops than we've got."
McCathern said he planned for 16 travel days with the tractorcade resting on the two Sundays during the journey. The tractorcade is expected to wind through almost every major city between the farm belt and the nation's capital.
"By the time our seven lines of tractors reach the Mississippi River, I hope we'll have 25 miles of tractors in each line," he said.
AAM has been granted permission to establish a Farmer's Market across the street from the Capitol Building in Washington. The farmers, who will be camped on the edge of town, will rise at 7 a.m. each day and drive their tractors, at 15 mph, into downtown Washington to the market, which will buy a token crop at parity prices.
To Buy Back "Crop"
The farmers then will buy back their crop, return to the camp, repeating the trek every day.
"There will be lots of space in front of Panhandle, where travel advisories have been posted, the NWS reported. But a winter storm watch has been issued for Lubbock and vicinity.

Widespread fog also may follow the cold front, which is expected to spread as far south as the Midland and San Angelo areas by this morning.
An eastward-bound Pacific upper atmosphere disturbance, which is carrying moisture, is boosting chances for freezing drizzle for the South Plains tonight.
Slick Roads Feared
The Department of Public Safety reported most highways and roads in the area were free of ice and snow Thursday night. But a DPS spokesman warned that road conditions could get "pretty slick" with today's predicted freezing drizzle.
Although Lubbock recorded a 46-degree high Thursday, temperatures will be much colder today, with the high in the upper 20s. The mercury will plunge to the middle teens by tonight.
The possibility of little or no sunshine and biting easterly-northeasterly winds will make today's weather even more miserable.
Although Paducah schools were in session Thursday, school officials said there would be no school today because some bus drivers had trouble with the icy road conditions.
The unseasonably cold temperatures across West Texas are expected to continue through Tuesday.
Some Areas Icy
Across the state Thursday, drizzle and fog obscured visibilities in central, north-eastern and southern portions. Ice was reported around Weatherford and Texarkana.
Today's new cold air mass comes on the heels of an arctic front that paralyzed the state for three days, knocking out power to more than 50,000 Dallas residences and dropping temperatures in the citrus fields of South Texas to below freezing.
Dallas Power and Light officials reported there were still a few thousand residents without power Thursday. In South Texas, damage to the citrus crop would run into the millions.
Forecasters called for continued cloudy and cold weather through Saturday in North Texas with light rain becoming mixed with freezing drizzle in some areas today.
Across the nation, light snow is predicted to spread from the north and central Rockies to the central Plains, the Mississippi Valley, the eastern Great Lakes region, the Ohio and Tennessee valleys and the Appalachians.
Thursday was an extremely cold day in many parts of the nation with freezing temperatures extending as far south as Florida and northern Texas. As bone-chilling cold maintained its grip on Illinois, two mentally retarded boys, dressed only in pajamas, were found frozen to death after they apparently wandered away from a Chicago school.
Throughout Illinois thousands of children missed school as icy roads kept school buses in their garages. In Chicago an 800 additional men were called in to help clear the 20 inches of snow that fell between Saturday and Monday.
In the west, snow fell from Oregon and northern Nevada to parts of Idaho and Utah.
Travel advisories remained posted for parts for Michigan and along the eastern shores of Lakes Erie and Ontario.

Reese Commander Listed For Brigadier General

COL. CHARLES E. Bishop, Reese Air Force Base Commander, was nominated Thursday by President Carter for promotion to brigadier general.
He is the fifth of seven Reese Wing commanders to be selected in the past decade for the one-star rank.
The U.S. Senate is expected to soon confirm President Carter's 53 brigadier general nominations.
Col. Bishop has progressed from a second lieutenant commissioned in 1953, to his current command of Reese's 64th Flying Training Wing by "a firm belief in the managerial philosophy of delegation."
Bishop said his major task is to "create an atmosphere, an environment that people want to work in, put out their best effort and achieve, be happy in that achievement, but always looking for other ways to do the job better."
His philosophy guides the activities of more than 2,800 civilian and military personnel who train or support the training of more than 300 new Air Force pilots each year.
Bishop and his wife, Pat, have been at Reese May 1977.
Bishop's background is a blend of education, combat, and command experience.

Shah Takes Ski Jaunt; Foe Asks Life In Jail

TEHRAN, Iran (AP) — The shah of Iran left Tehran Thursday, after weeks of near-seclusion in his palace during bloody street riots, and traveled to a nearby ski resort for two days of rest, a top aide said.
His staunchest foe, exiled Moslem leader Ayatollah Khomeini, raised the stakes in Iran's political crisis. He said in Paris the monarch should be jailed for life for his "crimes."

The airborne exodus of Americans and other foreigners from this strife-torn country continued. Violence tapered off as Iranians awaited developments in the fast-moving political situation.
It was a generally calm day in the capital, but scattered gunfire and shouting could be heard in the streets after the nightly curfew began at 9 p.m.
Before leaving with his family for the mountain resort of Jajroud, 40 miles east of Tehran, Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi signed a royal decree appointing Shahpour Bakhtiar prime minister, the royal aide, Ardeshir Zahedi, told reporters.

The shah asked Bakhtiar last week to form a civilian Cabinet that would replace Iran's military government and try to quell the yearlong unrest sparked by anti-shah protests. Bakhtiar, who for now has U.S. support, is expected to present the Cabinet to the shah Saturday and to the two houses of Parliament later for their required approval.
The new prime minister has said the 59-year-old shah wants to "rest and take a vacation" while the new government works to restore stability in this troubled nation. But the brief trip to Jajroud clearly was not the vacation Bakhtiar had in mind.

Plans For Equalizing Enrollment Drafted

By JEFF SOUTH
Avalanche-Journal Staff
SCHOOL administrators have come up with nine ways to boost the enrollment of Lubbock High by zoning into that campus parts of the attendance areas of neighboring Coronado and Monterey high schools.
In a report to the school board, administrators say it's possible to equalize the number of students at Lubbock High, Coronado and Monterey, the city's three Class AAAA schools.
But such equalization, according to the study, would require significant re-alignment of present attendance boundaries.
Under some of the possible changes, students living only four blocks from Coronado or Monterey would be assigned to Lubbock High.
Dr. E.C. Leslie, assistant superintendent for administration, said the proposals listed in the report are "for information only" and do not represent recommendations from the staff.
The "dot map" of students' residences is so drawn that school trustees could formulate their own combination of changes, Leslie said.

Lubbock High parents and students have asked the school board to boost their school's enrollment so that Lubbock High can compete better in athletics and academics with other Class AAAA schools.
Board members are expected to meet in executive session Jan. 11 to discuss with their attorneys how such attendance-zone changes might affect the school system's desegregation case, currently on appeal before a New Orleans federal court.
Racial Balance Enhanced
A Lubbock High change per se would not damage desegregation — indeed, it would enhance racial balance at that increasingly minority school. But some school officials fear that asking U.S. District Judge Halbert O. Woodward for the change somehow could disrupt the appellate proceedings.
School trustee Lynn Stafford said that besides attendance-zone changes, magnet programs — devised for voluntary transfers — may be considered as a means for boosting Lubbock High enrollment.
As suggested in Leslie's report, attendance zone changes would not require any current high school students to change schools. Rather, the changes would be phased in as students graduate from junior high and enter high school.
The report is based on the number of seventh-graders, eighth-graders and ninth-graders in 17 various sections bordering the Coronado-Monterey-Lubbock High boundaries.
10 Combinations Drawn
Leslie devised 10 combinations for taking one or more of those sections from Coronado or Monterey and adding the area to the Lubbock High zone.
He then computed how the three schools' attendance would be affected for the next three years as current junior high students move up.
If attendance zones are left unchanged, the study indicates, Lubbock High's enrollment will be 1,203 next year, 1,170 for the 1980-81 term, and 1,138 for the 1981-82 year.
In contrast, enrollment at Coronado, located west of Lubbock High, would be 2,031 next year, 2,023 the following term, and 2,016 the next. At Monterey, figures would be 2,088, 2,076 and 2,064.
One possible change is to zone into Lubbock High the northern and eastern portions of the Coronado area and the northern portion of the Monterey area. By 1981, this change would result in an enrollment of 1,619 at Lubbock High, 1,720 at Coronado and 1,879 at Monterey.
A second possibility is leaving Mon-tehran, Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi signed a royal decree appointing Shahpour Bakhtiar prime minister, the royal aide, Ardeshir Zahedi, told reporters.

The shah asked Bakhtiar last week to form a civilian Cabinet that would replace Iran's military government and try to quell the yearlong unrest sparked by anti-shah protests. Bakhtiar, who for now has U.S. support, is expected to present the Cabinet to the shah Saturday and to the two houses of Parliament later for their required approval.
The new prime minister has said the 59-year-old shah wants to "rest and take a vacation" while the new government works to restore stability in this troubled nation. But the brief trip to Jajroud clearly was not the vacation Bakhtiar had in mind.
Zahedi, Iran's ambassador to Washington and a close confidant of the shah, said the monarch was accompanied to Jajpour by Empress Farah and their children. It was the first time in three months that the shah has left Tehran for a rest, Zahedi said.
The level of violence has dropped since the pro-West shah tapped Bakhtiar, long a prominent figure in the anti-shah opposition, to put together a new government.
Bakhtiar reportedly has gotten the shah to agree to a weakening of the throne's power. But much of the anti-shah opposition, demanding that the shah abdicate, denounced Bakhtiar for dealing with the shah at all. The most influential figure in the religious opposition is the Shiite Moslem leader Khomeini, who toughened his stand Thursday.
In an apparent switch from his previous demand that the monarch go into exile, Khomeini told The Associated Press in an interview, "The shah and ... his immediate family are criminals and they have to be tried and punished according to Islamic laws."
Khomeini, who was interviewed at his

New Medical Building Plan Axed By Zoners

By SYLVIA TEAGUE
Avalanche-Journal Staff
PLANNING and Zoning Commission members sided with residents of Ranch Acres Thursday night when they agreed that a medical office building should not be built adjacent to the southwest Lubbock neighborhood.
However, another request for commercial and apartment zoning near the area was postponed until the meeting is continued next Thursday at 7 p.m.
James M. Lipscomb had asked the commission to change the zoning from single-family (R-1) to apartment-medical (AM) on property located west of Slide Road and south of 66th Street.
Lipscomb wanted to build a medical office building on the site, but drew stiff opposition from neighbors.
Bill Cox, representing Ranch Acres residents, said the request constituted "spot zoning adjacent to an established residential neighborhood."
"It's rather poor city planning," he said. "The only reason he asked for it (the zone change) is the property is available for sale."
Cox said approval of the zone change would lead to additional requests for commercial zoning down Slide Road.

Deportation Vowed For Illegal Acts

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Carter administration, upset by a bloody anti-shah demonstration by Iranian students in California, promised Thursday to deport any foreign student who takes part in illegal violence in the United States.
The warning was made by Attorney General Griffin B. Bell one day after he was instructed by President Carter to review possible steps the government might take. "All participants in such violence will be deported to the extent the law permits or requires," Bell said.
The attorney general said he was studying "our legal options" that could lead to revocation of student visas for the Iranians.

"Be On Notice"
"Any other visitor to our country who is here to obtain an education and resorts to violence contrary to law should be on notice that we will initiate appropriate legal proceedings to see that their stay in the United States is ended," he said.

Bell's stern warning — and Carter's order — were prompted by an anti-shah demonstration in Beverly Hills, Calif., Tuesday in which protesters stormed the mansion where the shah's sister and mother are residing.
About 500 students were repulsed by police after a 45-minute melee in which 35 demonstrators were injured and at least eight persons were arrested. The protesters burned an automobile, smashed the windows of police cars and set small fires in shrubbery surrounding the home.

Bentzen Urges Action
Sen. Lloyd Bentzen, D-Texas, and Rep. Robin Beard, R-Tenn., had asked Bell and Secretary of State Cyrus Vance in separate letters to see that lawbreakers among Iranian or other foreign students be deported immediately.

Bell appeared to go beyond that request Thursday. He said his review also would be aimed at expelling Iranians who no longer are students if their visas had expired, even if they were not convicted of any wrongdoing.
Speaking for Carter and Vance, Bell said: "I want to express our considerable concern about the situation our country witnessed this week on television, where persons who purport to be foreign students, enjoying our nation's hospitality for the purpose of an education, resorted to violence. Such violence is alien to the laws of our nation."

Bell Changes Mind
Bell said he originally regarded the anti-shah protests as a problem for local police. "I no longer do," he said. "We're not going to put up with this kind of conduct."

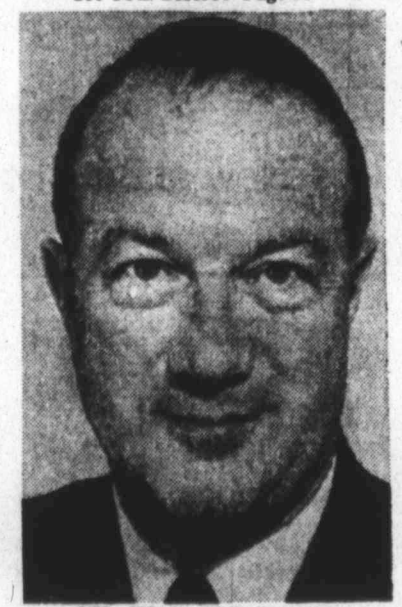

Bell said the Justice Department is continuing to investigate demonstrations by supporters and opponents of the shah of Iran in the United States. He declined any further comment.

The State Department has estimated there are between 50,000 and 60,000 Iranians in the United States with student visas, although many no longer are believed to attend classes.

White House press secretary Jody Powell said Carter requested the attorney general's review after hearing media

EMPLOYEES REMINISCE — Four former Hilton Hotel employees, now Lubbock residents talk about their experiences with the late hotel mogul Conrad Hilton, who died late Wednesday.

Hotel Impresario Conrad Hilton Dead At 91 From Pneumonia

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (AP) — Hotel magnate Conrad Hilton, a self-made multimillionaire from New Mexico who became the world's leading hotel man, died Wednesday night of pneumonia, a spokesman said.

Hilton, 91, had been hospitalized for three days, said Hilton publicist Jacques Cosse. Death came at 10 p.m. in St. John's Hospital to the tall, energetic operator of $300 million worth of hotels in the United States and abroad.

After a small beginning in Texas in 1919, Hilton eventually formed a corporation that by early 1966 had 61 owned, leased or managed properties in 19 countries, with more than 40,000 rooms and 40,000 employees. Other hotels were in construction or planned.

Hilton owned or controlled 30 percent of the company's stock.

Domestic hotels include the Palmer House and Conrad Hilton, formerly the Stevens in Chicago; the Denver Hilton; the Shamrock Hilton in Houston; the Beverly Hilton, Beverly Hills; and the Waldorf-Astoria, New York Hilton and Savoy Hotel in New York City.

In the 1950s, Hilton took over the Statler Hotels, which became the Statler Hiltons in Boston, Buffalo, Cleveland, Dallas, Detroit, Hartford, Los Angeles, St. Louis, Washington and New York.

Abroad, either leased or run on management contract are Hiltons in Acapulco, Amsterdam, Athens, Berlin, Cairo, Istanbul, London, Tehran, Tokyo and several other world capitals.

Known to employees as a gentle executive, Hilton was boyish, candid and trusting, with a hard streak of practicality and the ability to turn a shrewd deal.

"He was quite, quite active, came into work every day and stayed half the day," said Cosse. "He was working right up until just before Christmas. He was ill and went into the hospital just before the holidays and then went back into the hospital three days ago."

Cosse said Hilton's death should not have "much effect on the ownership or leadership of the corporation because his son, Barron Hilton, is the corporate president and has been for some time."

"Connie," as friends called the corporation's founder, credited his success mainly to opportunities he saw lying in front of people who were looking elsewhere.

For example, in 1942, he bought Waldorf-Astoria Corp. bonds with a face value of $500,000 for $22,500, or 4 1/2 cents on the dollar. Later he sold these for $412,000.

In 1949, he acquired operating control of the fashionable Waldorf-Astoria in New York for $3 million.

He hired hotel managers who knew the business. He didn't concern himself with operating details. But he insisted on increased financial returns, the quest for which he called "digging for gold."

Besides a Palm Springs home, the millionaire innkeeper had a 61-room mansion at Bel-Air, near Santa Monica, which was his primary residence and where he had 19 servants at his call.

Twice divorced, the second time after a tempestuous marriage to actress Zsa Zsa Gabor, he had married a third time in 1976, choosing longtime friend Mary Frances Kelly as his mate.

Work was said to be the great love of his life, his devotion to it being partly responsible for the breakup of both his marriages.

Scientist Discovers Psychosis Gene Link

HOUSTON (AP) — A California scientist says he has found a long-sought genetic link to psychotic depression, a severe mental disease.

The discovery offers long-range hope for a better understanding and treatment of such illnesses, said Dr. David E. Comings of the City of Hope National Medical Center in Duarte, Calif.

He said Wednesday he had identified a gene that significantly increases the risk of developing depression.

He said he also found an intriguing relationship between the gene, which he calls Pci-1, and both chronic alcoholism and multiple sclerosis, a disease of the nervous system.

The relationship is tentative, he said.

Sanitation District Denies Variance

TISBURY, Mass. (AP) — The golden arches won't be showing up on the shores of Martha's Vineyard, McDonald's apparently felt victim to a soggy soil problem that prompted a 1977 moratorium against new sewage systems on the island community.

Former New Bedford Mayor Edward Harrington had applied to the Tisbury Sanitary Control District Board for a variance to the moratorium so he could lease a waterfront lot to the McDonald's company, according to John Ochtera, New England real estate manager for the chain. The board ruled Tuesday that the application posed a potential health threat. About 70 irate demonstrators agreed.

JAPANESE WORSHIP

TOKYO (AP) — A record 68.8 million Japanese paid traditional visits to Shinto shrines and Buddhist temples in the first three days of the new year, police said Thursday. They attributed the turnout to good weather and economic recession.

Japanese observe "hatsu mochi," or the first reverence, praying for good business performance, domestic peace, and lately, traffic safety. The Fushimi Inari shrine of "business prosperity" in Kyoto attracted this year's largest crowd of 3.2 million people, police said.

Ex-Hilton Workers Look Back On Time Spent In Organization

By KIM COBB
Avalanche-Journal Staff

With the announcement Thursday of the death of hotel mogul Conrad Hilton, several former Hilton employees — now Lubbock residents — talked about their years with the man whose name came to be synonymous with "hotel."

Conrad Hilton was more than an efficient employer, according to several of his former workers. An attitude of personal interest in each hotel as well as its employees made the Hilton experience a pleasant one for the workers, former bellman Owen Gray said.

"Everybody just loved him," was Gray's opinion, echoed by several other ex-employees. "He was very friendly and compassionate with his employees."

Gray, owner of a Lubbock direct mail company, started work for Hilton in El Paso in 1938 when the businessman was married to actress Zsa Zsa Gabor. Gray estimated Hilton's hotels numbered about 10 or 12 at that time.

"(Hilton's sons) Nick and Barron Hilton (now president of Hilton Hotels Corp.) were just little kiddos then," Gray mused. He remembers Barron Hilton as an unruly child who took particular delight in kicking the bellhops in the shin as they stood grouped close to the desk.

Bill Ready, former manager of the old downtown Hilton Caprock Hotel, raved in 1969, joined the organization in 1928. He called the corporation a family enterprise, which he said it remained through the early days of his career.

Ready said the operation probably has changed during its period of speedy growth, but the former Hilton manager still stays in a Hilton hotel when he travels.

Another former employee, Kermit Duckworth, who managed the Lubbock Club for 18 years, credited Hilton's success to his attitude toward work and people.

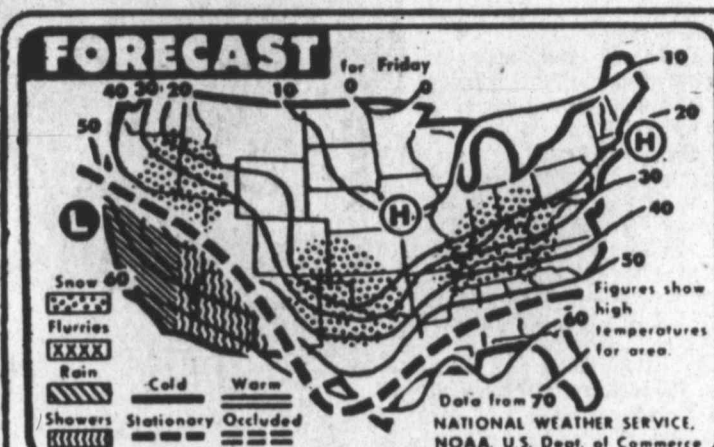

"Everyone liked him," Duckworth said. "And I've worked at a number of places where he had hotels."

But the hotel business has changed over the years, Duckworth observed. "We used to enjoy our work," he said of Hilton employees. "We used to think it was just a nice place to be."

Coby Briehn, who left the Hilton organization in 1950 as executive assistant manager of the Hilton Hotel in Albuquerque, N.M., doesn't think Hilton's death will make an appreciable difference in the way the hotels are run. He credited Hilton's success to the selection of his executives and said Hilton probably had the corporation set up to run as he would have wished upon his death.

Even though Hilton's efficiency and organization are given the lion's share of the credit for his success, former employees echo remarks about a warm personality, not a driving businessman. "He was a fine gentleman," Gray said. "Around him, you felt at ease. You didn't think 'There's Mr. Hilton' and get all uptight."

Love Making Comeback In Communist China

PEKING (AP) — Love is blossoming in the world's most populous country again after years in the official deep freeze.

In wallposters, plays, books, newspapers, radio and television programs, films and magazine articles, the Chinese are being liberated from a kind of Puritanism that was consistent with traditions dating back to Confucianism.

In hotels and restaurants, waiters stop dead before television sets when Gina Lollobrigida, cleavage exposed, does a sensuous, if slightly dated, dance, and Anthony Quinn grimaces under the whip in "The Hunchback of Notre Dame."

It's the first movie from the West to be shown here in more than 12 years. The coming attraction is that consummate disappointed lover, Charlie Chaplin.

A wallposter appeared here Wednesday demanding the "liberation of sex" and criticizing the policy of "delayed marriage and delayed love" as a "cruel crime that destroys young hearts and bodies," Kyodo news service said in Tokyo.

Kyodo said an old Peking resident shook his head in disapproval of the poster on Peking's "Democracy Wall," but young people scribbled supportive graffiti on it.

China's new view of love began to unfold last July when the newspaper People's Daily published a news story called, "Two Minds With the Same Ideals."

It was a dramatic tale of two workers in a parts factory whose love was resisted by the boy's mother and complicated by the fear he had cancer. All ended happily. The couple is married and has a child.

A while later, a short love story first published in a literary magazine drew millions of listeners when it was serialized on radio. It also brought an outpouring of letters.

A postal worker wrote that as a child he read stories showing love was "something noble" only to learn later it was "something vulgar." He said the story showed him "what real love is."

A soldier wrote that "old customs must be abolished and decadent views about love and marriage uprooted."

"A few years ago love seemed to me something vulgar, a petty bourgeois sentiment," said Wang Min, a weather bureau official in earthquake-stricken Tangshan. "The proletariat did not harbor such ideas, I thought."

He said he fell in love once and didn't dare admit it to himself.

But now he said his eyes have been opened and he finds love "an important part of the life of proletarian revolutionaries."

The party's radicals, led by the late Chairman Mao Tse-tung's widow, Chiang Ching, are to no one's surprise accused of giving love a bad name, the bi-monthly magazine China Reconstructs says in its January issue.

"One way of dividing young people, crippling their mental growth and setting them against each other was to forbid any discussion of love and marriage, an inseparable part of their lives," the magazine said.

"Young people could not talk about it, authors could not mention it," the magazine said. "All love was labeled sensual, vulgar, cheap and obscene. Newspapers, magazines, radio, stage and cinema were not allowed to touch it."

Proletarian revolutionaries were expected, it seemed, to be ascetics, the magazine said. Since the start of the People's Republic in 1949, Chinese young people have been encouraged to delay their marriages in order to curb population growth and spend more time at work.

youth confused and incapable of dealing with the problems of love and marriage, it continued.

One of the consequences was a materialistic attitude. Some girls refused to marry until the young man was ready with "a complete set of furniture, new clothes, sewing machine, transistor radio, etc."

The magazine also indicated love can be a boost to industrial production.

It said the subject came up among yawning, sleepy workers in a Peking towel factory recently and kept them talking for hours. The magazine said the workers were joined by friends from the night shift who stayed up to discuss love rather than going home to bed.

Utility Seeks Methane Gas Commitment

NEW YORK (AP) — The president of Brooklyn Union Gas Co. called Thursday for a "national commitment" to develop domestic methane gas as a replacement for foreign oil.

Eugene Luntley, head of the utility that serves 4 million persons, said methane, the principal component of natural gas, was readily available — not only in coal and peat, but also in garbage and sewage — and that a million-mile underground pipeline delivery system already was in place for it.

"I think we're being ignored in Washington," he said at a news conference.

Plans were being made to form a National Council for a Methane Alternative to Imported Oil, he said.

Luntley said methane can be substituted for any foreign oil in any oil-burning equipment without major changes and it will operate efficiently, more cleanly and at comparable costs. Oil burners and even cars can run on methane, he said.

"Methane is a forever source of energy," he went on, criticizing the U.S. Department of Energy as being infatuated with the electric industry.

"I couldn't find one single thing the Energy Department has done to provide energy to these people," he said, referring to his utility's customers.

Over 40 million homes and businesses use the fuel today, but "most people don't even know that this sophisticated delivery system exists," Luntley continued.

Doubling of domestic methane production could eliminate dependence on oil imports entirely, he said.

"But the nation cannot wait. What is needed is a national commitment to domestic methane as a replacement for foreign oil," he said.

Methane, a hydrocarbon, could be produced from almost any organic material, such as fast-growing kelp, or extracted from 10,000 feet beneath a Texas oil drilling platform.

Luntley said it also could be obtained from tight sandstone formations in the Rocky Mountain region of Devonian shale in the Appalachian area, from the Atlantic outer continental shelf and from Mexico, Alaska and Arctic islands.

Italian Reporter's Apartment Bombed

ROME (AP) — Terrorists firebombed the apartment of a reporter for the conservative Rome newspaper Il Tempo during the night, police said Thursday. It was the third attack on a press target in 10 days.

An anonymous caller to the Il Tempo switchboard claimed the bombing was the work of the Armed Revolutionary Group, right-wing extremists blamed for a number of bombings and killings in Rome.

Police said reporter Bruno Zincone was not at home at the time and damage was limited to his apartment door.

In the other attacks, terrorists set off a bomb in a car parked outside the Il Tempo offices here and raided the home of an editor of the Communist-line daily Paese Sera.

AN EDITORIAL:

No Room For Anarchy In U.S.

THE TIME HAS come for the U.S. State Department, and local law enforcement agencies across the nation, to call a halt to a situation which threatens to get out of hand, if it hasn't already.

We refer to the violent protest such as that staged in the Los Angeles area earlier this week by Iranian students who sought to storm the hillside home occupied by the mother and sister of the Shah of Iran.

In one of the more bloody confrontations between the students, who are in this country as guests of the American citizens, and security forces, a major tragedy was averted only at the last minute.

IT WAS NOT the first time that a planned "peaceful" protest has suddenly turned ugly and bloody.

If allowed to continue, it will not be the last, with unfortunate results for all concerned.

We can understand the deep feeling and emotions of the Iranian students who are watching events in their homeland far away. We are fully aware of the guarantees of this nation's Constitution, assuring the right of peaceful assembly and protest for U.S. citizens.

BUT, NO nation—including beleaguered Iran—can long tolerate what happened in Beverly Hills the other day without seeing law and order, as the Constitution also guarantees, deteriorate into anarchy in the streets.

This can and must not be tolerated in this nation under any circumstances for any reason. Period.

In this respect, we would like to commend the Iranian students at Texas Tech, who take part in such things, for their peaceful approach in their own protests.

While we oppose any demonstrations—by American or foreign groups—in residential areas, protesting students here have with one exception shown a sensible approach to "saying their piece."

It also should be noted, in passing, that not all Iranian or other foreign students at Tech nor certainly the majority of citizens in this area necessarily agree with those Iranians who do protest, which also is their right.

AS FOR THOSE protestors in other areas who engage in violent activities, spontaneous or premeditated, swift and drastic action should be taken.

Foreigners in this nation as guests violate their visas when they thus flout the law. And such persons should be arrested and then deported. The United States can not serve as a battleground for settling foreign disputes, nor can such groups take the law into their own hands and enforce their own brand of Mideast or Wild West Justice.

It is incomprehensible that Iranians should threaten Americans—who came to help them bring their nation into the Twentieth Century—in Iran, yet feel free to ignore the peace and laws in this nation. Justice and freedom is a two-way street. It can't be traveled only one way.

AN EDITORIAL:

Peers Not Years Raise Fears

IT'S SOMETHING of a paradox that the people who run the country are getting younger even while the people they govern are getting older.

The average age of the 535 members of the new Congress which convenes on Jan. 15 will be 49.5 years. It's the first time in recent memory that the average age has been on the sunny side of 50.

Whether this accent on youth will result in any material change in the laws that are enacted is interesting to contemplate.

40, according to U.S. News and World Report.

Analysts are arguing back and forth whether this youthful zest will be good for the country or whether the lack of seasoning will be bad.

In the end, political philosophy—particularly as it relates to balancing or not balancing the budget and to maintaining or not maintaining a strong defense posture—will be more important than the age of the Congressmen.

ONE BENCHMARK that could be a little disconcerting is the youthfulness of the so far bumbling Carter administration.

The average age of the Carter Cabinet is 52.7 years, down from 55.7 in the Eisenhower years two decades ago.

On the other hand, the Supreme Court has grown older—average age 65.6 years now, compared with 60.6 years under Chief Justice Earl Warren 20 years ago.

With those two examples to go by, we can safely say that it's peers, not years, that raise our fears.

ART BUCHWALD:

Economists Never Die; They Just Lose Figures

WASHINGTON—Ebenzer Tanklips was pleased with himself. As chief economist for the Bilgewater Corporation he had just handed in his projection for the year 1979.

It was a masterful job, he thought to himself, as he returned from lunch.

His report indicated a continual high inflation rate, more attacks on the dollar, a drop in the GNP, and what he considered his masterpiece—a prediction of a full-scale recession.

Not only was Tanklips hoping to be congratulated by the powers upstairs, but he secretly thought that it would help him win the Nobel Prize for Economics.

WHEN HE WALKED into his office his secretary said, "The chairman of the board wants to see you."

Tanklips smirked. They had just read his report on the 86th floor and probably wanted him to verbalize it for them.

He entered the chairman's office and noticed his report on B.J.'s desk.

"You wanted to see me B.J.?" Tanklips said.

"Yes," the chairman replied, "I just read your projections for 1979. You're fired!"

"Fired?" Tanklips said, "but why?"

"You're predicting a recession. The board had a meeting and decided we had to cut back. You are the first one to go."

"BUT I COULD be wrong," Tanklips said. "Maybe there won't be a recession. It's possible we could have a banner year. Let me go back and check my figures again."

The chairman said, "You did a great job, Tanklips. Your predictions concerning the prime rate, when fed into the federal deficit, not to mention the debit side of our balance of payments, when orchestrated with the price of oil, confirm what we've been fearing for some time."

"The boom is over and the sluggishness is starting to set in. As you so ably state here on Page 45, it's time to retrench, get rid of the deadwood, and dig in for the long pull until the economy turns around."

"Did I say that?" Tanklips cried. "I must have been crazy. B.J., think how many times I've been wrong in the past. If you had followed my advice in 1976 the company would be a cooked goose now. Let me see that report."

"OF COURSE! I see my mistake right here on Page 23. I forgot to project that the price of coffee would go down by three cents a pound."

"We don't sell coffee," the chairman said.

"Yes, but it's an indicator. If coffee goes down labor can't make unrealistic demands on us, and at the same time we can increase the price of our setzer valves, which could turn the profit picture around."

The chairman said, "I'm sorry it's too late. You predicted that, in order to resolve the inflation dilemma, we would have to live with an eight percent unemployment rate. This company is willing to live with it, as long as you are."

"But," said Tanklips, "I wasn't including myself in that unemployment rate. I was including everybody else. Economists never make themselves a part of the unemployment factor."

"WHY NOT?" the chairman asked.

"Because it would be a conflict of interest. We have to stay out of the unemployment projections or our figures would be tainted by self-interest. B.J., please don't fire me."

"I'm sorry, Tanklips, but your report speaks for itself. We're going to have to play hardball in 1979."

"Let me look at that a moment," Tanklips said, grabbing the report off the desk.

"My God, I put a decimal point in the wrong place! And I forgot to carry the two over when I added up seven, four and nine. This changes everything. We can't cut back in '79! It's going to be our greatest year."

"You wouldn't be snowing me, Tanklips, just to keep your job?"

"Of course not, sir. As an economist that would be unethical."

JAY HARRIS:

The Cost Of It All

THE VIETNAM War is something most persons in the U.S. prefer to forget about.

For people like Col. Gobel D. James, and hundreds of fellow POWs, not to mention relatives and loved ones of more than 50,000 American dead, Vietnam is like a scarlet letter.

The memories, the pain, the lessons learned—about themselves, the enemy, their fellow citizens and leaders—are things with which they live each day.

Col. James, who recently transferred to Reese AFB as Deputy Commander for Resources, spoke to the Downtown Rotary Club this week. The story he told is one every citizen in the nation should hear, and heed. For a person who has survived the ordeal he has, Col. James has a most remarkable outlook on life, his country and fellowmen.

COL. JAMES' trial by fire began about mid-morning July 15, 1968 just north of the 17th parallel which then divided North and South Vietnam.

His F105 was "hit by either a 37mm or 57mm shell and immediately burst into flame." The fire cut the controls and after twice alerting his back-seat crew member to eject, Col. James left the crippled craft.

As he started descending, he became acutely aware that his left leg was broken at the knee, dangling at an odd angle. Gunfire from peasant and military alike was directed at him from the enemy below.

Upon landing, he was set upon by Vietnamese civilians and soldiers, alternately being beaten and stripped of his uniform, his watch, his wedding ring. He was then placed on a board and carried to a bunker inside a nearby hill and the door barricaded as the irate populace beat on it.

LATER, HIS LEG set and bundled onto a makeshift "bamboo sling," the young American pilot was carried at a near-gallop through rice paddies and villages to a more central location.

There, huddled in a huge, underground room, with labyrinth tunnels, he and two other captured Americans were subjected to further punishment and indignities, including being punched, beaten, kicked and spat upon.

Finally, they wound up in the Hanoi area, "guests" in one of the Viet Cong's "luxurious" prison hotels. At this point, Col. James' story varies little from that of other POWs who went through a "living hell," some being imprisoned longer than the combined duration of World War I, World War II and the Korean War!

Food often was "cabbage soup" twice a day for two months when cabbage was in season. Then it could be pumpkin soup, or less. Here, the ravages of their wounds, often inflicted by their captors, the lack of adequate food and medical aid, all took its toll.

"THERE WERE long periods when we could not raise our voices much above a hoarse whisper," Col. James recalls.

Exercise and sanitary facilities were a sometimes thing and crude. A bucket served as the latrine, and later was utilized in a most unsanitary way while wounds were being treated.

"We heard about the protest riots and Jane Fonda and others," Col. James says. But to himself and others, the main priority was survival. And survive he, and a meager few hundred fellow POWs did.

After learning on Jan. 27, 1973, that the war was over, on March 14 he finally boarded "the most beautiful C-141 I ever saw, with the American flag on its tail and United States of America on its side." He and the others came home to a heroes' welcome, and a nation torn apart.

THE TRAUMA of the Vietnam War, Col. James says, will "be with us perhaps for hundreds of years..."

And if this nation survives even the next two decades—something by no means a certainty—the effects of Vietnam may prove to be either the spur to "turning things around," or the fatal flaw to further defeat.

That observation is ours, not Col. James. As a member of the military, he and his fellow officers and men are not permitted to make such statements. And he strictly adheres to the policy.

Others in and out of the service, for whatever it is worth, have decided to speak out. One, Gen. John Singlaub, paid for his remarks on the Korean withdrawal by being sacked by President Carter. Another, former Brig. Gen. George J. Keegan Jr., quit his Air Force intelligence post and is seeking to warn Americans of the Soviet nuclear peril they face.

And now, Gen. Alexander Haig, supreme commander of NATO forces in Europe, says he is leaving. He left the door open for a future political career. He has let it be known he opposes some of the President's defense policies in Europe.

THE TRULY remarkable thing about Col. James, and other Vietnam POWs we have met, is their unbelievable adaptation to what they went through, their return to a normal life and their unstinting love for America.

Col. James has a sense of humor, is able to make small jokes about things which at the time were life and death matters. After his capture, his family, a wife and three small children, did not know his fate for 18 months.

Today, he still serves his country, dedicated to the proposition that it must be preserved at all costs. This from a man who knows what the price can be.

In his closing remarks, he quoted from another POW, Navy Cmdr. Jeremiah Denton as he returned to U.S. soil: "We are honored to have had the opportunity to have served our country under difficult circumstances. We are profoundly grateful to our Commander-in-Chief and to our nation for this day. God Bless America."

And what have you done for your country of late?

L.M. BOYD:

...Pass It On

NOTE IN PRINT where Charles Schulz, the creator of "Peanuts," says his family really did once own a dog named Snoopy. And how typical it is that the truth so much varies from the fiction. Says Schulz: "We gave (Snoopy) away. He fought with other dogs, so we traded him for a load of gravel."

In Canada's Ontario is a town, called Hamilton which is closer to the equator than to the North Pole.

Q. "How many countries besides the U.S. use the 'dollar' as their official monetary unit?" A. An even dozen.

George F. Will:

The Taiwan Question

WASHINGTON—At issue in the dispute about President Carter's China transaction is not whether the United States should have a wide range of relations with China.

It should, and does. Indeed, relations have been expanding so fast that defenders of the transaction are hard put to explain why it was necessary. Neither is the issue whether full diplomatic relations are desirable. They are.

Rather, the issue is the price Carter paid. The price makes the transaction seem dictated more by the administration's political needs, and the ideology of the State Department's seventh floor,

ANDREW TULLY:

An Alien Nay Shun

WASHINGTON—As represented by our politicians, the people of the United States are a bunch of rabbits.

Our Washington clique of office-holders and dogooders is afraid of all foreigners, except maybe those who live in Lichtenstein.

Sixty percent of hundreds of thousands of illegal aliens who come to America every year are from Mexico.

So Rep. James H. Scheuer, D-N.Y., announced the other day that the House Select Committee on Population, which he chairs, wants its border with Mexico to be "sealed." Good idea, of course.

But, no, up near the top of the average Washington politician's numerous commandments is one that reads: Don't ever offend a minority, by word or deed.

PREDICTABLY, THEN, Scheuer was jumped by two committee members—Resident Commissioner Baltasar Corrada, D-Puerto Rico, and Rep. Paul Simon, D-Ill.

Both said that Scheuer didn't consult the rest of the committee before he called for a "firm, hard sealing" of the U.S.-Mexican border.

"I'm vehemently opposed to sealing the border, on practical and humanitarian grounds," said Corrada.

"The recommendation to seal the border is not a recommendation by the committee and it does not appear in any form in the report."

Simon, who must have a couple of Latinos in his district, said Scheuer's language "is a little rougher...than that used in the report...It would be impractical to try to seal the border."

CORRADA AND Simon are right, but only semantically. The committee report's language didn't mention a "firm, hard sealing" of the border.

But those words were implicit in the report, which proposed all sorts of tough, legalistic steps to staunch the flow of Mexican illegals.

Well, let's find a medal for Jim Scheuer. He refused to back down.

"I didn't mean sealing the border in the sense of something being hermetically sealed," he said. "But I'm glad we stimulated a little conversation on the issue."

I'm glad, too. I'm not sure at Mexico, but it sure is about time we did a little conversing on the problem.

Our border guards threw up their hands long ago over their attempts to stop the one-way traffic from Mexico over a boundary that extends for 1,950 miles.

THEY DON'T HAVE enough men, enough cars, enough planes—and enough cooperation from Washington's ruling lords.

Overall, illegal immigration already accounts for 15 to 25 percent of the nation's population growth, said the committee report.

And it estimated that "if current low U.S. fertility rates continue, eventually all U.S. population growth will be attributable to immigration—mostly illegal—unless something is done about it."

Nothing is being done about it. So far, President Carter's efforts have consisted of giving audience to a delegation of Mexican illegals who got into this country by breaking one of our laws.

Let's give Jim Scheuer two medals. He had the guts to say a no-no.

Television Heidi Shows Very Popular In Europe

By HANNS NEUERBOURG
ZURICH, Switzerland (AP) — Heidi, as rosy-cheeked and vigorous as ever at the age of 97, is outdoing watches, chocolate and bank secrecy as the current top trademark of her native Switzerland.

The orphan-heroine of Swiss author Johanna Spyri's famous books, who has charmed generations of children throughout the world, now holds Swiss businessmen enthralled as well.

But the purists are not happy at all. Book dealers, toy shops, and record stores report a "Heidi boom" unprecedented since she first appeared in print in 1881. There is an explosion of souvenirs, from Heidi napkins to children's potties.

Heidi's heyday is the result of two television series that have glued kids and adults to screens in Europe for more than a year and will continue to do so well into 1979.

One, a Japanese-produced animated version, was broadcast on 52 consecutive Sundays by a German network that is also received here. The other, produced jointly by German, Australian, and Swiss television, has been delaying dinners on Wednesdays since last October and will continue until next March.

The films, specifically the Japanese production, have generated a multi-million-dollar market that had even a Swiss financial newspaper, Handelszeitung, speaking reproachfully of "clever profiteers" who make money from the world of Heidi.

With some 20 million copies printed in 40-odd languages, Heidi is one of the most widely read books for children. Critics say the story of the orphan who found a happy home amid goats and cows in the Alpine shack of a cheese-making grandfather offers a simplistic, sentimental outlook to children, clashing with space-age realities.

"Heidi remains a figure with which children throughout the world can easily identify," says Rosmarie Tschirky of the Spyri Foundation, which coordinates documentation on authoress Spyri. "Unfortunately, businessmen have found out her market potential."

The hunt for a share of the market dates to 1931 when the rights on Heidi expired. She has since been featured in numerous sequels written by others, in a stage play, an opera, and half a dozen films, including one pre-World War II movie starring Shirley Temple.

But the real boom was touched off by the Japanese series. European rights were bought in 1974 for an undisclosed amount by a West German company. It was a smashing success in Spain, Portugal and Italy and then crossed the Alps to the north.

Souvenir sales skyrocketed. More than a million cassettes and records of the key songs were sold in German-language countries, and millions of comic books focused on a black-eyed Heidi wandering in strange environments, even among cave-dwellers.

"Heidi has taken a seat next to Mickey Mouse, Porky Pig and Superman," said a Swiss weekly, Schweizerische Illustrierte.

The Japanese Heidi has found a strong competitor in one from Vienna. She is 10-year-old Katja Pelletin, who plays the role in the Australian-Swiss-German production alongside a multinational cast that includes only a few Swiss.

"It is drawing an all-time record audience for a show not screened on prime time," Swiss TV spokesman Walter Grieder said. "And don't forget the ratings are based on polls of viewers older than 15. The success is far beyond expectations."

This is somewhat different from the experience of Heidi in the United States. There, some football fans are still boiling because NBC interrupted the last moments of a football game in 1968 with a TV version of the classic. And a new TV version of Heidi last month was rated 61st among 64 programs that week in the size of its audience.

In Switzerland, Spyri purists are unhappy with the show, though the TV script closely follows the book. "Written German" — as the Swiss call the language of the Germans and Austrians — is foreign to their ears. So, two German versions had to be done, one of them in dialect.

Heidi's Austrian accent is voiced over by a speaker from the Grisons, the original Heidi's home in Switzerland. But there are not many actors from that region and a mixture of dialects dubbed by foreign actors resulted and did not please some Swiss viewers.

There are other criticisms of the $5 million production. "I find it somewhat boring," said Mrs. Tschirky. "But my children like it."

Tr7, a Swiss TV magazine, was more critical. "It is hard to see how so much money could produce such an amateurish piece," it said.

Strangely, purists did not object to the shooting of the film far from the Grisons town of Malenfeld where the original Heidi was said to have lived. The reason: Heidi would no longer feel at home there.

"The place is now so crowded with power pylons, vacation homes and modernistic hotels so that we had to go somewhere else," Grieder explained.

VENDING MACHINES VENERABLE
Vending machines are not new. As early as 215 B.C. worshippers in temples could get holy water by dropping in five drachmas. In 1615, coin-operated tobacco boxes appeared in English pubs. After a coin was inserted, the lid opened and the patron helped himself to a pipet of tobacco.

Lower Valley Freeze To Hike Food Prices
By BOB WILLIAMS
Avalanche-Journal Staff
Lubbock residents can expect to pay 20 to 50 percent more for fresh produce within the next 30 days as a result of a bitter freeze which hit the Lower Rio Grande Valley's crops this week, according to local produce suppliers.

One supplier predicts damage from the freeze will be reflected in Lubbock's orange and grapefruit supplies within the next three days.

Other crops, such as cucumbers, bell peppers and cabbage "will increase at least 20 to 25 percent for Lubbock residents later in the season" said Joe Kizer, manager of Deardorff Enterprises, Inc.

"If all of the Texas crop is ruined, we'll have to turn to California, and they will raise their prices to adjust to the demands," he added.

Temperatures dropped as low as 19 degrees early Wednesday in the valley, and freezing temperatures tonight were expected to endanger the Florida winter crop.

The Texas freeze is the valley's worst in 17 years, and coupled with the potential for damage in Florida and a December freeze in California's winter garden, experts predict higher prices everywhere for fresh produce.

One employee of a local produce company said that it's too early to determine the extent of the valley's freeze damage, but by next Wednesday experts should have a good indication of the overall crop rottage.

Jim Hall, assistant manager for Furr's produce, said that it's been a bad growing situation for everybody. "Overall it's rough all the way around. The whole nation has had a problem in its growing areas," he said. He added ruined shipments are already coming in from the valley. "We received a shipment of cabbage from the valley this morning with ice on it," he said.

"I expect to see an increase in grapefruit, oranges and cabbage prices within the next 30 days," Hall said. He predicted a price increase in fresh produce of at least 20 percent, and pointed out that the Imperial Valley in New Mexico, where a major supply of the nation's winter lettuce crop is located, is currently experiencing freezing weather, which will dampen hopes for a decrease in lettuce prices unless warmer temperatures save the crops this week.

Costs for shipping produce from California and Florida, and the higher demand for such shipments, automatically creates price increases for the buyer and the shopper, he added.

An area onion supplier said his valley grower told him at least 20 percent of his onion crop has been lost to the freeze.

BILINGUAL GRANTS ANNOUNCED
WASHINGTON (AP) — The Department of Health, Education and Welfare's Office of Education has announced 149 awards totaling $16 million to colleges and universities for the support of two types of bilingual education training programs. One program will help schools establish or improve bilingual teacher training programs and award stipends to students enrolled in these programs. The other will provide fellowships for graduate students preparing to train others to teach bilingual education.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

By BILL DOYLE

Q. Many public utilities regularly increase the dividends paid on their common stocks. Since the dividends on those common stocks now produce yields as high as the interest yields on the same companies' bonds, would not the common stocks be better investments?

This question is not posed in terms of increase in market value, but strictly on the basis of yield. I am also aware that a company might reduce or omit the dividend on its common stock but must pay the interest on its bonds or be put into bankruptcy.

A. Given the caveats in your second paragraph, the answer has to come out "yes." Just don't overlook the fact that the market prices of utility common stocks are sensitive to interest rate changes.

Utilities, in the normal course of business, borrow many millions of dollars to pay for new generating plants, power lines and such. So, when interest rates go up, the utilities' borrowing costs increase. That trims their profits.

In periods of high interest costs, such as we have had lately, the market prices of utility stocks decline. The same thing, of course, happens to the market prices of all bonds — no matter who issued them.

Through thick and thin, however, many utilities have increased the dividends on their common stocks by gradual but certainly not spectacular amounts. For yield, that has made them better investments than bonds, on which the interest — once set — never changes.

Q. You wrote that, when the owner of a savings certificate — or one of the owners of a jointly-owned certificate — dies, the certificate can be redeemed without any interest penalty.

Your column stated, "The rules of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. (FDIC) are explicit on this... The Federal Savings & Loan Insurance Corp. (FSLIC) has similar rules."

When my husband died, I needed money and had to cash a savings certificate which was in both our names and had about a year to go to maturity. The savings and loan association charged me a big penalty. Is there anything I can do about this?

A. I'm afraid not. There was an error in the previous column. Although banks covered by FDIC are specifically prohibited from imposing an interest penalty when the owner or co-owner of an insured savings certificate dies, savings and loan associations are given a choice by FSLIC. Each S&L can lay on the penalty or not — as it so chooses.

When I wrote the column you quote, I had in front of me the FDIC regulations, which are explicit on this subject, but not the FSLIC regulations. I checked with someone I thought was an expert source on S&Ls. He assured me FSLIC has similar rules. He is now an "ex" source, because his information was not "pert."

The FSLIC regulations, of which I now have a copy, state that an S&L "need not penalize" in the case of death of a savings certificate owner or co-owner.

It comes down to this. An S&L doesn't have to lay on a penalty. But many do. And that usually comes as a very cruel surprise to the surviving spouse.

So, I apologize for the mistake printed in the previous column and offer this advice. Until FSLIC changes its rules, everyone who puts money into an S&L savings certificate should double-check to make sure that particular S&L isn't taking advantage of the penalty loophole. If it is, take your money elsewhere.

Q. I have some Series E, U.S. Savings Bonds in my name, "payable on death to" my nephew's name. He does not know his name is on the bonds. Is it possible to have the bonds changed to my name only?

A. Yes. But he would have to know about it. The bonds are now in "beneficiary form" and you want to change them to "single owner form." That can be done by filing out U.S. Treasury Department Form 4000, which must be signed by both the owner — you — and the beneficiary — your nephew.

DOYLE welcomes written questions, but he will be able to provide answers only through the column.

Egyptian Police Tighten Up Enforcement Of Cairo's Street Laws

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — In a crackdown ordered by President Anwar Sadat, police have driven beggars and street-corner vendors underground and handed out tickets for offenses ranging from smoking in theaters to pinching girls.

Police said Thursday that 28,580 violators have been nabbed since the crackdown was launched Jan. 1.

In a special televised address, Sadat told the nation a "new kind of behavior" was needed and a prominent politician wrote in Cairo's leading newspaper that a "jihad," or holy war, was needed to clean up the streets.

Cairo's nine million-odd anarchists are knocking down grudgingly to their first taste of street rule since the law abandoned the city many moons ago," commented the English-language Egyptian Gazette.

Increased patrols of green-suited police are evident in front of movie theaters, bus stations and sports stadiums. The crackdown has been generally well-received although there has been some col-lee-shop speculation that it would fade away as have periodic campaigns in the past.

"I used to get grabbed by young boys in the street and it made me upset," said Gehan Ali, a 17-year-old high school student. "But now those same boys are telling each other to behave or they will go to jail."

Thus far, police statistics show that 945 litterbugs, 443 masher and 1,335 street vendors have been arrested along with scores of beggars, pickpockets and drug peddlers. One particular target of the campaign has been the cacophony of radios, loudspeakers and honking horns that emerges daily from the overflowing city streets and sidewalks.

In the first three days of the crackdown, 2,477 violations were reported for noise pollution and there were 204 fines for firing cap pistols which are used at weddings and other celebrations.

The crackdown has concentrated in its early stages in Cairo, although governors in all of Egypt's 25 provinces have been empowered by the president to tighten security.

The announcement of the crackdown coincided with a government-mandated price increase of 17 per cent for gasoline and 16 per cent for cigarettes.

A similar move in January 1977 prompted street riots that left 80 persons dead and some speculated that concern over renewed unrest prompted the crackdown. However, this was firmly denied by authorities.

"I think the price hikes are behind this, they didn't want to take a chance on more riots," said a 30-year-old Egyptian, who barred use of his name. "Discipline is fine but the government should take the lead and clean up the streets and make the utilities work."

Ex-Prosecutor Testifies In Davis Case

HOUSTON (AP) — The former prosecutor who headed a private investigation into the murder-conspiracy case of Cullen Davis testified Thursday the project was not financed by the defendant's younger brother.

"I was told that Bill Davis was not involved in this matter," Fort Worth attorney Joe Shannon told defense lawyer Richard "Racehorse" Haynes.

Shannon said he himself was hired by Denver lawyer Richard Shaw and that he asked Shaw who was bankrolling the well-financed project.

"He indicated to me he had a client but he did not tell me who it was," Shannon said. "He told me who it was not."

Shannon's testimony, with the jury out, presumably torpedoed an attempt by Haynes to link millionaire Bill Davis to an "ongoing conspiracy" against his equally-wealthy brother.

Cullen Davis, 45, a Fort Worth industrialist, is accused of soliciting a hired gunman to kill the judge presiding over his lengthy, lurid divorce case.

The defendant contends he was framed by his estranged wife, Priscilla, FBI informant David McCrory and Fort Worth karate instructor Pat Burleson.

Haynes persuaded trial judge Wallace Moore to permit him to question investigators hired by Shannon and vowed he would link their "sidebar" probe to Bill

Davis, at the same time showing its relevance to this case.

However, he failed to do so, at least temporarily.

The younger Davis was ousted from the billion-dollar business empire headed by Cullen and Ken Davis in 1973 and reportedly received a $100-million settlement.

Although accused by Moore of "wasting time" Haynes succeeded in showing that the private investigation was a covert and clandestine operation with solid financial backing.

Shannon testified he marshalled a quartet of private sleuths to root out any illegal activities or improprieties on the part of defense lawyers and investigators.

He said they found none. Shannon, a former assistant district attorney, was the chief prosecutor in 1977 when Davis was tried and acquitted on a murder charge in Amarillo.

That charged stemmed from a 1976 shooting spree at the $6 million Davis mansion, a secluded, hilltop showplace on Fort Worth's fashionable west side.

Shannon said Shaw approached him about the private investigation last September and he accepted the job Oct. 3. He evoked an attorney-client relationship in refusing to answer certain questions.

But he said he was not employed by "Priscilla Davis, Pat Burleson, the State of Texas, Richard Haynes, (defense attorney) Phil Burleson, Cullen Davis or Bill Davis."

He said his instructions were to uncover any "illegal, underhanded or unethical activities on the part of the defense."

Although he admittedly found no such irregularities, Shannon was asked if "Dick Shaw turned over the results of your investigation to the district attorney's office?"

"He didn't indicate that to me," Shannon replied. "That was not the purpose of the mission."

Warship 'Survivability' Debated

TESTIFIED ON NAVY SHIPBUILDING—Navy Secretary W. Graham Claytor Jr. appears before a joint Economic subcommittee Thursday in Washington. Claytor briefed the panel on a construction program for a new fleet of guided missile frigates. (AP Laserphoto)

WASHINGTON (AP) — Navy Secretary W. Graham Claytor Jr. said Thursday the survivability of all warships is a problem because of difficulties in protecting their sophisticated guidance and operations gear.

Claytor told a congressional hearing, "This is an ongoing problem.... Survivability is an issue with new ships and existing ships."

"We cannot protect all the sensitive equipment on any ship, including an aircraft carrier," he said. "We do the best we can."

The General Accounting Office, in a report released Wednesday, said warships built since World War II are unnecessarily vulnerable to "cheap kills," in which a ship can be rendered useless when vital equipment is knocked out with a minimum of damage to the vessel itself.

"This inability to survive the cheap kill is both unacceptable and unavoidable," the GAO report said.

Claytor focused his testimony on a new guided missile frigate construction program, which is supposed to produce 82 ships by the mid-1980s for convoy escort and antisubmarine duty.

At an extra cost of $600,000 per ship, the Navy is equipping the frigates with additional armor that can stop metal fragments fired at 4,000 feet a second from 30 feet away, officials said. Such fragments could knock out poorly armored sophisticated equipment, resulting in a "cheap kill" of a ship.

"For a ship its size, it is a very survivable ship," Claytor said of the frigates.

Claytor and other Navy officials repeatedly rejected criticism of the frigates by Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., chairman of the hearing, and by the GAO, which urged that the construction program be changed.

"I don't consider, sir, that the GAO is an expert in military operations," Claytor said. He told Proxmire, "I disagree with you almost completely, with everything you said about the (frigate) program."

He said he was an "enthusiastic supporter" of the ship and was "proud of the way the Navy has managed it."

Proxmire criticized the ship for its growing cost — which has tripled since its original design — and the fact that it will have to be recalled for modifications to handle new equipment after being sent to sea.

The senator and the GAO urged that the changes, chiefly in the stern, be incorporated during construction to save money.

Claytor said design plans that will affect the stern modifications will not be available until spring.

He said previous experience with cost overruns in shipbuilding has shown that major changes in a multi-ship contract, once a price has been fixed, "should be done only if there is no way to avoid it."

Making the changes now, he said, would disrupt the work, cause significant delays in delivery of the ships and result in costs that "far exceed" the expense of making them later.

Asked why the Navy did not make a study about making the changes now or consult with shipbuilders, Capt. John Beecher, the Navy project manager, said, "I knew it would be disruptive to their production... it was not necessary to consult with them."

Chinese May Have Extensive Oil Reserves

HOUSTON (AP) — China is potentially a major oil-rich country, perhaps comparable to the Middle East, a U.S. Geological Survey researcher said Thursday.

With accelerated use of foreign technology, the geologist said, it could take the Chinese only a few years before finding out if the potential is realized. If it is, production from huge basins might begin in 5 to 10 years, he said.

Dr. Edward C.T. Chao discussed China's efforts in earth sciences at a session on "China's Science is World Prospective" at the 145th national meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Right now, the giant Taching oil field, discovered in late 1959, is the largest oil producer in China and produces about one-half the national output of 730 million barrels a year.

While emphasizing that estimates of total crude oil resources and reserves are completely speculative and cannot be confirmed until the proper exploration work is done, Chao said the estimates range from 100 billion barrels to 400 billion barrels.

Estimates for offshore Alaska, for example, put the reserves there at 9 billion barrels, he said.

"These estimates (in China) cannot be substantiated since geological and geophysical exploration is far from complete, both on land and offshore," Chao said.

"The People's Republic of China, however, is potentially a very important crude oil producer, and its significance as an oil-rich country will increase as more explorations and discoveries are made."

One potential oil basin is the Tsaidam Basin in Tsinghai province, where oil and gas have been detected in the 200,000 square kilometer area.

"The potential is fairly great there," Chao said, adding that another is the Jilin Basin in Sinkiang province.

Oil from the Middle East, the United States, and Venezuela has a sulphur content, Chao said. He said oil from the inland basins of China would be low in sulphur but would have a high wax content and therefore difficult to flow through pipes.

China also is involved in a major earthquake prediction program as the result of a damaging earthquake in 1966 that Hsingtai in Hopei province.

"Within these 12 years, they have come a long way towards developing methods and techniques of earthquake forecasting," Chao said.

A wide range of approaches is being studied, including animal behavior, well water levels, and earth noises.

Since 1972, the Chinese have been reported to have successfully predicted nine earthquakes, of magnitude 5 or higher on the Richter scale, Chao said.

While that figure represents a prediction success rate of only 10 percent or so, Chao still described it as "fairly astonishing."

Woman Driver Attacked After Near Miss

A Levelland woman told police that after she slammed on her brakes to avoid striking a pedestrian in the street, the man opened her car door and began hitting her.

Nancy Jean Kirkpatrick, 19, said she was northbound on Avenue P about 10:30 a.m. Thursday when a Mexican-American man about 30 stepped in front of her vehicle in the 2400-block of that street.

The clerk told police that after she stopped the car the man walked to the vehicle, opened the driver's door and asked Miss Kirkpatrick if she would take him "somewhere." Miss Kirkpatrick said that when she tried to drive away, the man, who was clad in a green hat and green jumpsuit, grabbed her by the throat and began hitting her in the face with his fist.

Miss Kirkpatrick finally was able to drive away from her assailant, reports show, and went to a nearby pawn shop where she called police.

She told officers the man, who was last seen running south along Avenue P, was about 6 feet tall and weighed about 175 pounds.

A 43-year-old Lubbock County Jail inmate was admitted to Methodist Hospital Thursday night for observation after jailers discovered him trying to hang himself about 6 p.m.

The inmate, who was jailed in August on a burglary charge, had been in the second-floor hospital ward at the jail. Spokesmen at the hospital said the man was not seriously injured.

In burglaries reported Thursday, Ken Maupin said that $1,820 worth of goods, including two guitars, more than $1,000 worth of stereo equipment and $95 in change, was missing from his 4906 Seventh St. home. He said the intruders kicked in the back door of his residence between Dec. 22 and 1 p.m. Thursday.

Jim Pickett, owner of Southland Battery at 116 Sherman St., said burglars pried the front door of his firm Wednesday night and took $862 in property. He listed 24 auto batteries, a battery charger and a portable color television as missing.

Gregory Good said while he was out of town for the holidays, burglars broke the glass in the front door of his 2019-A Ninth St. residence and took appliances, stereo equipment, clothing and $50 in change. The Texas Tech University student set his total loss at $855.

James L. Tate of Spring said that burglars broke a vent window of his 1976 Jeep Wednesday night while it was parked outside of La Quinta Motor Inn, 601 Ave. Q, and took tools, gun equipment, luggage, a calculator and a cassette tape deck.

Lubbock Independent School District officials reported Thursday that during the holidays three welders, worth $124 each, were stolen from the shop at O.L. Slaton Junior High, 1602 32nd St. Officers were unable to find any sign of forced entry to the building.

A 14-year-old Lubbock girl was taken into custody about 2:45 p.m. Wednesday after police confiscated about six pounds of what is thought to be marijuana from a residence in the 5000-block of Avenue J.

Police Sgt. Rivie Garrett said seven policemen, carrying out a search warrant, found the substance in the residence and the girl was the only occupant at the time.

She was turned over to juvenile authorities.

In other arrests, two Lubbock men, ages 19 and 27, were taken into custody about 2 a.m. Thursday after they allegedly attempted to steal a tip jar from the bar of Freeman's Club at 700 Broadway.

Reports show the two men were leaving the club when security guards stopped them and the jar, containing $18.15, fell from their grasp.

In a reported house burglary, Marco Antonio Ruiz of 1520-A 17th St. said he lost $1,065 in appliances and clothes between 1 p.m. and 9 p.m. Wednesday when he fell victim to burglars.

New Murder Trial Request Denied

Kenneth Owen Jaycon, convicted of murder in the nightclub slaying of a Lubbock man in December 1977, Thursday was denied his request for a new trial.

Judge Thomas L. Clinton overruled the motion in 99th District Court and sent the record and briefs to the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals.

Jaycon was convicted last April of taking part in the murder of W.D. Young III in a back room of a Lubbock nightclub.

Two other Lubbock men, Kenneth Herndon and Jim Gordon, also have been charged with murder in the case.

A September trial of Herndon ended in a hung jury.

Man's Former Wives, Widow Die Within 24-Hour Period

CINCINNATI (AP) — Three elderly women who at different times were married to the same man all died within 24 hours of each other, relatives say.

"It's almost unbelievable. It's scary," said Mrs. Tiny B. Love, whose aunt was one of the women.

The three Cincinnati women — Esther Banks, 63, Nellie Banks, 77, and Myrtle Banks, whose age was not known — had been married to Samuel Banks. The marriages spanned six decades, from the 1920s until Banks died last July.

The women apparently did not know each other, a relative said. All had been in poor health for some time.

Relatives' memories of Banks' marriages are hazy. He is believed to have married Myrtle in the 1920s and fathered two sons before the marriage ended. He married Nellie in 1943, and they were divorced in the early 1960s.

Banks married Esther in 1966, and she "devoted her life to him," Mrs. Love said. "They were married for about 12 years, and he was sick for about the last six of the 12."

Banks' former wives and widow died in reverse order of their marriage last Saturday and Sunday.

"I've never heard of that (coincidence), especially not knowing he had three wives," said Mrs. Charles Berry, Nellie's niece.

Funeral services for Esther were Thursday. Services for Myrtle and Nellie were scheduled for today.

Woman Killed; City's First '79 Homicide

A 50-year-old Lubbock woman, shot during an apparent family fight Thursday afternoon, became the city's first homicide of 1979 when she died about an hour and a half later at West Texas Hospital.

Bicenta Lopez Perez died about 4:30 p.m. after suffering a single gunshot wound to the chest in the 3:10 p.m. incident in east Lubbock.

Witnesses told police that Mrs. Perez was sitting in the living room of a relative's 1815 E. Second St. home when the suspect entered the house.

Witnesses said the suspect began talking with Mrs. Perez, an argument erupted and the man reached into his coat pocket, pulled a pistol and shot her.

According to police, the victim's 15-year-old son, who was the only other person in the room, wrestled the .32-caliber revolver away from the man, who ran west from the residence on E. Second Street.

The 55-year-old suspect was arrested by police 30 minutes after the shooting inside the community building at 515 N. Zenith Ave. He was booked into the county jail late Thursday on suspicion of murder.

Justice of the Peace Wayne LeCroy ruled Mrs. Perez's death a homicide.

Services for Mrs. Perez are pending with Henderson Funeral Directors.

Settlement Ends Long Kent State Legal Battle

CLEVELAND (AP) — A $675,000 settlement and a statement of regret brought an end Thursday to the long and bitter legal battle waged by the victims of the Ohio National Guard bullets fired at Kent State University in 1970.

"We got everything we wanted and more," exulted lawyer Sanford Jay Rosen of San Francisco, who represented nine people wounded at Kent and the families of the four students killed.

The settlement was read into the record in U.S. District Court, ending a retrial of a five-year-old damage suit stemming from the shootings.

It included a statement on behalf of the defendants — Gov. James A. Rhodes and 27 present and former National Guard members — expressing regret and saying that "the tragedy of May 4, 1970, should not have occurred," but denying liability for the shootings.

"If they (the plaintiffs) had gotten a judgment, they wouldn't have gotten an apology," Rosen said, referring to the statement. But former Adj. Gen. Sylvester DeCorso, who was one of the defendants, told reporters that "we make no apology" — although, he said, he felt "sorrow and regret for the deaths and injuries."

The biggest part of the settlement, $350,000, goes to Dean Kahler, now 28, who was paralyzed below the waist during the clash between guardsmen and students who were protesting the movement of U.S. forces into Cambodia. The other eight wounded get amounts ranging from $15,000 to $42,500. The families of the slain students receive $15,000 each. Also included in the settlement is $50,000 for lawyers' fees and $25,000 for the lawyers' out-of-pocket expenses.

The statement on behalf of the defendants said, in part: "In retrospect, the tragedy of May 4, 1970, should not have occurred. The students may have believed that they were right in continuing their mass protest in regard to the Cambodian invasion, even though this protest followed the posting and reading ... of an order to ban rallies and an order to disperse ..."

"Some of the guardsmen on Blanket Hill, fearful and anxious from prior events, may have believed in their own minds that their own lives were in danger."

"Hindsight suggests that another method would have resolved the confrontation ... We deeply regret those events and are profoundly saddened. We hope this agreement will help to assuage the tragic memories regarding that tragic day."

When asked if the statement was an admission of guilt, Rhodes' lawyer, Charles Shanklin, said, "Absolutely not. The governor is not guilty of anything, nor are any of the defendants. That is absurd."

During the long legal battle, the question of official culpability had been raised in court before — and twice rejected.

The defendants were cleared of criminal responsibility in a federal trial in 1974. Then the civil suit was filed — and turned down by a federal jury after a 15-week trial in 1975. However, an appeals court then ordered the retrial that opened Dec. 4 on grounds that the judge had failed to properly consider a report that a juror had been threatened.

When the suit was first filed, it asked $46 million. However, the plaintiffs asked that a specific dollar claim be removed in the retrial, leaving the question of amount of damages up to the jury.

Rosen praised the plaintiffs as "a remarkable group of people" whose "persistence in the quest for justice is what brought the state of Ohio to this point." He said that continuing the trial would have meant an additional $100,000 in legal costs. Legislative leaders in Columbus said the state had spent nearly $1 million and would probably spend that much more if proceedings continued.

The settlement terms were worked out by both sides last month, just before the retrial started, but dispensing the money was not approved until Thursday morning by the State Controlling Board.

Last month, the board refused to take any action on it, but it finally acted after state legislative leaders recommended acceptance.

As soon as he got word from Columbus, U.S. District Court Judge William Thomas made the settlement official.

DeCorso was on hand when it was read in court, and said he still felt that Kent State University and its students "cannot permit Kent State to become the rallying point for every revolutionary group in this country." Also present was Sarah Scheuer, mother of Sandra Scheuer, one of those who died in the fusillade.

All the plaintiffs deferred public comment until a news conference scheduled for later in the day.

'Moonshining' Losing Business

WASHINGTON (AP) — "Moonshining," the illegal liquor distilling that became part of the folklore of the American South, has fallen on hard times, federal officials say.

The Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms says seizures of moonshine stills dropped to a record low of 361 in 1978, down from 481 in 1977.

Acting ATF Director John G. Krogman said potential customers complain that moonshine tastes bad, contains lead and costs about as much as legal liquor. "People just are not very interested in moonshine anymore," he added.

OIL SPILL CONFERENCE WASHINGTON (AP) — The sixth biennial oil spill conference, sponsored jointly by the oil industry and the federal government, will be March 19-22 in Los Angeles, sponsors announced here.

The conference is held under the auspices of the American Petroleum Institute, the Environmental Protection Agency and the Coast Guard. Sponsors said more than 1,500 delegates and exhibitors are expected, and about 115 technical papers will be presented dealing with the prevention, behavior, control and cleanup of oil spills.

Gunmen Assault Medical Facility

MARION, S.C. (AP) — Two gunmen seeking drugs abducted a nurse and shot an orderly at a Marion hospital in the early-morning hours Thursday, then took up positions on the roof and stayed there through daybreak before surrendering to authorities, police said.

The orderly was in stable condition. The nurse was unharmed.

One arrested man was identified as Michael D. Stevenson of Chester. The other was not immediately identified. Hugh Munn, a spokesman for the State Law Enforcement Division, said they would be charged with kidnapping, armed robbery and assault with intent to kill.

Marion is a community of about 10,000 people about 100 miles east of Columbia in eastern South Carolina.

Romona Swails, 31, head of nursing services at the 50-bed Palmetto General Hospital in Marion, told The Associated Press that two men rang the bell at the hospital's emergency entrance at 2:55 a.m.

When the door was opened, the men pulled shotguns. Mrs. Swails said she asked what they wanted, and one replied: "Demerol or anything."

Mrs. Swails said she told the gunmen she did not have a key to the hospital drug cabinet. Then, she said, one of them "tore it off the wall with his bare hands."

She continued: "I was just mad at first because they wanted drugs. I was not afraid until they got me to the car and put that gun to my chest. Then I said, 'Oh my God, here I go.'"

Before leaving the hospital, she said, one man told her: "If there are any cops out there, I'm going to blow your head off." The men ordered two other nurses and a patient's husband to lie face-down on the floor, then left the building with Mrs. Swails and put her in the trunk of the car, Mrs. Swails said.

But, Munn said, about two blocks from the hospital the gunmen spotted a police car and "apparently panicked." He said the drug cabinet was found later in an alley.

Munn said the men returned to the hospital and shot an orderly, Robin Vondroff, 25, after he started to run when he saw them.

Mrs. Swails, left in the trunk, was released by authorities.

According to Munn, the gunmen took up a position on the roof of the two-story hospital while police surrounded it at about 3 a.m. They remained there in subfreezing temperatures until 9 a.m., when police and relatives persuaded them to give up. By that time, the Highway Patrol, Marion County sheriff's deputies and Marion city police had surrounded the hospital.

Munn also said that Vondroff was rescued after he was spotted behind a locked glass door to which he had crawled. Officers broke the glass and rushed him to Marion Memorial Hospital, where he was listed in stable condition in the intensive care unit with multiple wounds.

Laughlin Presented Publisher Citation

NEW YORK (AP) — James Laughlin, founder and for 42 years editor of New Directions Press, has been awarded the Third Annual PEN Publisher Citation.

The PEN award was given by the American branch of the international writers' association in recognition of "distinctive and continuous service to international letters, the freedom and dignity of writers, and the free transmission of the printed word across barriers of repression, poverty, ignorance and censorship."

Paraplegic Cowboy Saga Set For Film

By WAYNE SLATER

PEORIA, Ill. (AP) — The saga of the paraplegic cowboy and Calvin the wonder horse appears headed for a happy ending, no thanks to the bureaucrats. And who could the hero be, in a tale such as this?

You must have guessed. It's Hollywood.

"It still hasn't sunk in yet," Jim "Hopalong" Hendricks said. He's a 31-year-old paraplegic with the modesty of, well, a Hollywood cowboy.

"I still can't believe they want to make a movie about a country hillbilly like me."

Hendricks was paralyzed from the waist down in a towboat accident in 1974 on the Illinois River. Last spring, he sought to overcome his disability by using his monthly Social Security check for a loan on a pickup truck, trailer and a horse he had specially trained for an act billed as "Hopalong, the World's Only Paraplegic Cowboy and Trick Rider and his Horse Calvin."

But he missed a medical exam while drumming up business for the act, he said, and the Social Security Administration stopped his disability checks. Then the First National Bank of Beardstown threatened to foreclose.

"They can have everything, but not my horse, Calvin," Hendricks said. "He's given me a reason to live again."

Enter Andrew J. Fenady, Hollywood producer — a man whose film credits include "Chisum" with John Wayne and "Branded" with Alan Ladd, and who says he wants to make a movie about Hendricks, with Hendricks as a consultant.

Hendricks says he rides not to make money, but to encourage other handicapped persons to make the most of themselves. He charges $150 per performance, but says most of it goes for transportation, board and an assistant he hires for each act. Usually, he says, he ends up sleeping in the barn with Calvin.

Fenady says he knew immediately after hearing a news account that this was movie material.

"There certainly seems to be the basis for a dramatic, sensitive, inspiring story here," Fenady said this week in a telephone conversation from his office in Los Angeles. "Call it good old spunk and determination, courage, call it whatever you like."

So, two weeks ago, Hendricks' phone rang. True to the script, it was Fenady on the other end of the line.

"I didn't take it too seriously, but then after he hung up I commenced checking on him and I found out that he was legit," Hendricks said.

Fenady says he isn't promising the moon — not yet; he cautions that the project is in the early stages as he searches for a star.

Nevertheless, Hendricks has his sights on Hollywood, where Calvin's blind trainer, Bud "Deadeye" Jones, would also be a consultant.

Even if his checks are resumed, Hendricks says, he faces a permanent end to disability benefits because his rodeo act may violate a rule against earning more than $250 a month. He says he needs the checks to keep the loan to keep the act going.

Will the hero come through in time? Can the paraplegic cowboy and his wonder horse be saved? Don't leave your seat for the popcorn. The villain still lurks, and the final scene is not yet played.

Russians Hit McDonald's Menu Items

MOSCOW (AP) — A Soviet magazine says the "Big Mac" has earned big profits for McDonald's hamburger chain while raising questions about the health of hamburger-hungry Americans.

The world affairs weekly, New Times, said McDonald's is making millions of dollars out of a "clearly poor-quality product." One of the company's sandwich specials is known as the "Big Mac."

Fred Turner, chief executive at McDonald's headquarters in Oak Brook, Ill., commented: "The rhetoric of the English language New Times published in Moscow indicates they must have had a slow news day. Maybe next week they'll report they invented the hamburger."

McDonald's operates about 4,000 restaurants in the United States and 20 other countries, selling approximately 3 billion hamburgers a year.

"The most useful part of the McDonald special, as a California doctor has aptly put it, is the layer of air in the sliced bun," said the New Times article.

It added: "In the opinion of scientists, the correlation of fats, carbohydrates and soda in the firm's products makes them akin to foods which raise the cholesterol content in the blood which, in its turn, increases the probability of the cardiovascular system being affected."

The article quoted Dr. George Christakis, nutrition chief at Mount Sinai School of Medicine in New York City, as saying that a third of the youngsters who regularly eat such foods would run a high risk of heart attacks by age 50.

New Times said managers of McDonald's outlets "have strict instructions and are given considerable sums of money to participate in the activities of women's, charity, paramilitary, youth and other influential organizations."

"The firm thus imperceptibly becomes part of the average American's everyday life."

The Soviet article also said McDonald's management has used tough tactics to try to suppress attempts at labor organizing among its largely teenage workers.

"In the mid-70s employees of many stands began setting up committees in defense of their rights in spite of the management's overt and covert resistance, and to demand that the firm stop violating legislation on working conditions and wages," New Times said.

A DAILY MESSAGE FROM

The Newspaper Bible.

Luke 8: 13B-21, The Living Bible

They know the message is true, and sort of believe for awhile; but when the hot winds of persecution blow, they lose interest.

14 The seed among the thorns represents those who listen and believe God's words but whose faith afterwards is choked out by worry and riches and the responsibilities and pleasures of life. And so they are never able to help anyone else to believe the Good News.

15 But the good soil represents honest, good-hearted people. They listen to God's words and cling to them and steadily spread them to others who also soon believe.

16 (Another time He asked), "Who ever heard of someone lighting a lamp and then covering it to keep it from giving light? No, lamps are mounted in the open where they can be seen.

17 This illustrates the fact that someday everything (in men's hearts) shall be brought to light and made plain to all.

18 So be careful how you listen; for whoever has, to him shall be given more; and whoever does not have, even what he thinks he has shall be taken away from him.

19 Once when His mother and brothers came to see Him, they couldn't even get into the house where He was teaching, because of the crowds.

20 When Jesus heard they were standing outside and wanted to see Him,

21 He remarked, "My mother and My brothers are all those who hear the message of God and obey it!"

Women Want Social Security Changes

WASHINGTON (AP) — Women's groups told a federal panel Thursday that Social Security will remain "institutionalized sexism at its worst."

until income taxes are poured into the system and women are given pension credits for house work.

"Reform of the Social Security Act can be the cornerstone in reducing the dependency needs of women and according them full economic recognition," said Carmen Delgado Votaw, co-chairman of the National Advisory Commission for Women.

Eleanor Smeal, president of the National Organization for Women, noted that the median income of women over 65 is the lowest of any major group in the United States.

That situation will continue, she indicated, as long as "women are penalized for motherhood and the economic value of work in the home is ignored."

The women's representatives and dozens of other interest groups are voicing their complaints about Social Security to a 13-member advisory council, which will report to Congress later this year.

Most of the complaints Thursday came from representatives of government employees, who feel their pension rights would be diluted if Congress requires all government workers to pay into Social Security.

"The injustice that would be wreaked (by requiring universal coverage under Social Security) would be outrageous," said John A. McCart, executive director of the Public Employee Department of the AFL-CIO.

A dissent came from Robert Kalman of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees. "The current funding problems of state and local plans cannot be resolved unless Social Security is made the basic income-security program for all public employees and pensions and Social Security benefits are coordinated," he said.

In an effort to hold down the steady increase in Social Security taxes, Congress is considering a variety of proposals. One would delay the retirement age. Another would bring into Social Security about 6½ million government workers who are covered by different retirement plans.

Mrs. Smeal, representing NOW, said reform would have to go much deeper. The government, she said, must abandon three long-standing ideas about Social Security: that benefits must be related directly to earnings, that a family must consist of a breadwinner and dependents, and that the payroll tax must be the sole financing source for Social Security.

By relating benefits to earnings, Mrs.

Smeal said, Social Security perpetuates sex discrimination that keeps women's pay below that of men.

Second, she said, women are losers under Social Security because no credit is given for housework, which one study values at $340 billion a year in the United States. A homemaker is recognized only for dependents' benefits, which are related to her husband's earnings.

"Failure to provide the homemaker with a Social Security account in her own right denigrates the important economic contribution of the homemaker role to family and to society," Miss Votaw said.

Homemakers could be brought under Social Security by crediting each spouse with half the couple's total income, Mrs. Smeal said.

She also argued that at least one-third of the cost of Social Security should be financed through income taxes, which spread the burden more equitably among income groups than the payroll tax.

Automatic Seat Belts Not Popular On Cars

DETROIT (AP) — Sales of the first U.S.-built car with "automatic" seat belts have been a disappointment so far, the head of Chevrolet said Thursday.

Dealers have managed to sell just 3,200 subcompact Chevettes equipped with the $56 belt option out of the 11,000 that have been built that way since last spring, officials of the General Motors Corp. division said.

"It hasn't been accepted quite as well as we hoped it would be," Chevy General Manager Robert Lund said in response to a question at a news conference.

"Dealers tell us that it is perceived as inconvenient," spokesman James Williams said.

Lund said GM will experiment with a different type of automatic seat belt on some 1980 models.

The so-called "passive restraint" system features a belt that closes automatically around the driver when the car door closes.

The federal government will require passive restraints as standard equipment on all full-size cars in the 1982 model year and on all cars by 1984. A passive system could mean automatic belts, air bags or interior padding. The auto industry strongly favors seat belts or some other system instead of air bags.

GM is trying the automatic belt on the Chevette to see how buyers like it. It is a "two-point" belt, meaning one end connects to the door and the other to the floor between the front bucket seats.

Lund said a "three-point" belt with two door connections would be tried on 1980 models.

The top-of-the-line model Volkswagen Rabbit is the only car sold in the United States with automatic seat belts as standard equipment. VW says 40,068 such Rabbits were sold through the first nine months of 1978.

GM had hoped to sell 35,000 Chevettes a year equipped with the automatic belt.

The 3,200 sold in the first seven months partly reflects uneven availability of the Chevette around the country, but is still far short of Chevy's hopes, Williams said.

The comments came as Chevrolet announced record car-truck sales for 1978 and predicted new records for 1979, reiterating the bullish GM forecast of overall industry records for the new year.

CUTTING A PATH — The U.S. Coast Guard's new 140-foot ice-breaking tug Katmai Bay works its way down the Detroit River Wednesday on the way to Cleveland, where she will be commissioned Monday. The cutter is the first of a new class and cost $5.4 million, carries a crew of 14 men and three officers, features a 2,500 horsepower diesel-electric engine, and carries oil spill and fire fighting equipment. It is designed to break through 18-20 inches of ice and will more than likely meet its match at its new station in Sault Ste. Marie, Mich. (AP Laser-photo)

Briscoe Paroles Four West Texans

A-J Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Four persons sent to prison from the West Texas area have been released by Gov. Dolph Briscoe upon the recommendation of the Board of Pardons and Paroles.

Merce Ramos, convicted Oct. 15, 1975, in Lubbock County of aggravated robbery and forgery, was paroled to Lubbock County after serving and earning five years and eight months of an eight-year sentence.

Jose R. Villarreal, convicted Nov. 18, 1977, in Deaf Smith County of burglary of a building, was paroled to Potter County after serving and earning two years and 11 months of an eight-year sentence.

Robert Dale Daily, convicted Nov. 18, 1977, in Howard County and Jan. 24, 1978, in Harris County of burglary of a habitation, forgery by passing and burglary of a habitation with intent to commit theft, was paroled to Howard County after serving and earning two years of a six-year sentence.

Lida Olmos, convicted Oct. 7, 1977, in Gaines County of conspiracy to commit theft over $10,000, was paroled to Potter County after serving and earning two years and four months of a seven-year sentence.

Plainview Firm's Hearing Delayed

A-J Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — An application by Plainview Savings and Loan Association to relocate its branch office in Matador has been continued to the Savings and Loan Department's Feb. 5 docket call.

The application had been set for hearing at the January docket call on Tuesday, but was not published in time to meet notification requirements, a department spokesman said.

The application seeks to move the branch from the intersection of US 70 and SH 70 to the intersection of US 70 and Main Street.

If the application is protested at the docket call, it will be set for a full hearing at a later date.

MORE FILM NEEDED

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — President Neelam Sanjiva Reddy said the cinema is still an "urban luxury" in many parts of the world that needs to be spread to rural areas. Reddy told the opening of the Seventh International Film Festival of India Wednesday night that "investigations have revealed cinema as one of the major attractions behind rural exodus to cities."

COMPETE STOCKS INDEX

Dow Jones
Up 8.75

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market tallied its third broad advance in as many days Thursday as violence tapered off in Iran and as a Federal Reserve Board member gave an optimistic forecast for the troubled dollar.

Several analysts noted that large institutions, rich with cash from a December selling spree, apparently returned to the market this week as buyers.

The "cash has begun to leak back into the market," even though "nothing has changed on the interest rate or inflation front," said Larry Wachtel at Bache Halsey Stuart Shields.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, ahead by more than 12 points at mid-afternoon, closed up 8.75 at 826.14. New York Stock Exchange volume rose to 33.29 million shares from 29.18 million Wednesday as advances outnumbered declines on the Big Board by better than 3-1.

Nationwide turnover in NYSE-listed issues, including trades in those stocks on regional exchanges and the over-the-counter market, totaled 37.91 million shares.

Toward the end of the day, General Dynamics provided some encouraging news by announcing a 2-for-1 stock split and a 75-cent-a-share dividend, its first since 1970.

New York (AP) — Thursday's national prices for New York Stock Exchange issues as of 4:05 p.m. Eastern time. Prices and volume consolidated for securities also traded on other markets.

Iran Crisis Key Topic At Four-Power Talks

SAINT FRANCOIS, Guadeloupe (AP) — President Carter flew into French Guadeloupe Thursday for two days of four-nation summit talks likely to be dominated by the Iranian crisis and prospects for East-West conciliation.

There were no formal ceremonies when the Carter party arrived at Le Raizet Airport at 2:43 p.m. CST. Carter's wife Rosalynn accepted flowers from two small girls and the presidential party left by motorcade for the 25-mile drive to a collection of beach-front villas at the Hotel Hamak complex. Carter will hold informal talks there with the heads of state of France, Britain and West Germany.

The compound was festooned with French flags and was heavily guarded.

Carter's party, which includes national security adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski, arrived after a four-hour flight from Andrews Air Force Base, Md., for the French-hosted "informal and friendly meeting" on this island of the French West Indies.

On the flight, Carter said relations among the four powers are at their best in 10 years. The Americans left sub-freezing temperatures in Washington and landed here on a sunny afternoon in the mid 70s.

French President Valéry Giscard d'Estaing was the first to arrive for the meeting, followed by British Prime Minister James Callaghan. West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt arrived last.

The four leaders and their wives had dinner together Thursday night. There is no official agenda for their meetings, planned to begin this morning. The leaders will meet without interpreters or aids and converse in English, it was reported.

Presidential press secretary Jody Powell said Carter was not looking for final decisions on major issues to come from the meeting. He said Carter was sensitive to the fact that 11 NATO allies of the four nations were not at the talks.

Powell quoted Carter as saying the meeting is remarkable in that it does not focus on problems among the four nations.

Giscard d'Estaing also suggested the talks would be very general. He said economic matters should be discussed in wider channels, an apparent acknowledgement of Japan's role and interest in that area.

Confidantes of Giscard d'Estaing said the French president was prepared to tell the other three leaders France welcomes what it sees as the end of American and Soviet dominance of world affairs. He was said to feel China will assume a bigger role in world affairs and that Europe and the Third World also may emerge as significant powers.

Arms Sales To China

The leaders also are expected to discuss the issue of arms sales to China.

Carter, his wife and their 11-year-old daughter Amy are expected to stay on for a three-day vacation at the home of the island's governor near Gosier and return to Washington Tuesday night.

Brzezinski said Carter would reiterate his support for Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi at the meeting.

He said the shah, one of the biggest customers for Western arms and other products and a major source of oil for the West, also is backed by the other three leaders who fear Iran might tilt to the Soviet Union if the shah is removed.

Opposition To Shah

Part of the shah's opposition comes from conservative Moslems who feel Iran's modernization and heavy trade links with the West have fostered a Westernization that threatens traditional Moslem values.

Brzezinski said Carter also would seek advice from the European leaders on how to deal with "gray area" tactical nuclear weapons during the next phase of strategic arms limitation talks with the Soviets.

Short and medium-range weapons were not included in the SALT talks that are expected to result in a new agreement sometime this year. The present talks have dealt with long range missiles that the United States and the Soviets have trained on each other.

Threat To Europe

The "gray area" weapons are a threat to the cities of Europe. The French and British have these weapons, and the Germans provide a base for 7,000 to 8,000 such American weapons.

The leaders are also expected to discuss the United States' new relations with China, possible arms sales to China, the stalled Egyptian-Israeli peace talks, the guerrilla wars in southern Africa and money and trade problems.

Carter administration officials also hope the president will be able to improve his relations with Schmidt.

Schmidt backed Gerald Ford in his 1976 election contest with Carter, and he also has been a critic of the president's fiscal and anti-inflation policies.

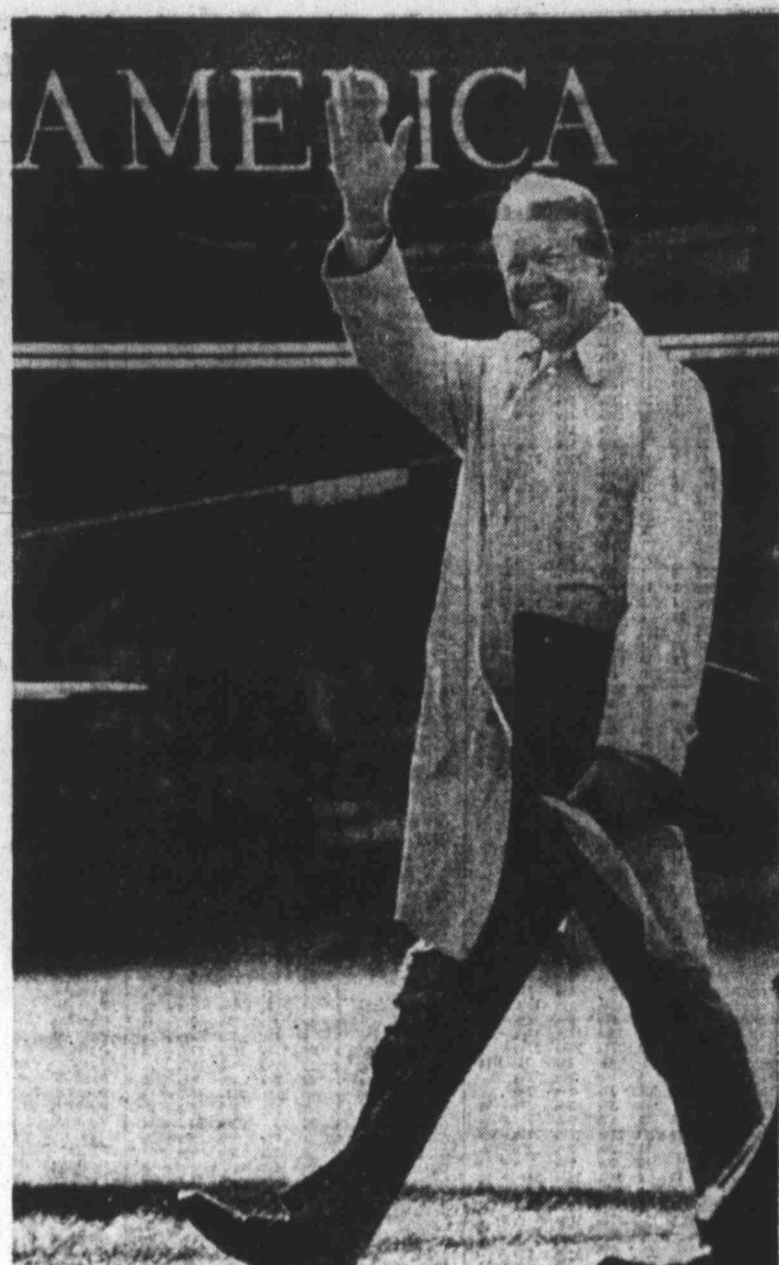

Callaghan Greets Newsman

Callaghan, who arrived aboard an RAF jet, was the only arriving statesman to say anything to reporters.

"I am sure we shall have an interesting and informative time. We are looking forward to the discussions very much indeed," he said.

The four leaders attended dinner at the Hamak Hotel Thursday night. They have emphasized from the beginning they would spend much of the time in recreation — golf on a course across the road from a field full of goats and cows, tennis on a court hidden from public view by palm tree branches, perhaps sailing the blue waters surrounding Guadeloupe.

The style of the meeting is expected to be much the same as those held at Camp David and no progress reports were expected. The French hosts have said there would be no press conferences, no public events and no official final communiqué.

residence-in-exile outside Paris, has called for establishment of an Islamic republic in Iran.

Asked what penalty the shah might face under Moslem law, the religious leader said: "One thing is definite, and that is life imprisonment. That would be the minimum. And also the return of all the property he has confiscated from the people."

Orthodox Moslems opposed to the shah say his Western-style modernization is eroding the traditional Islamic values of this Moslem nation. Leftists and other political activists have joined the anti-government campaign to push for an end to the shah's authoritarian rule. Both sides condemn official corruption, which they say extends as high as the royal family.

The Soviet newspaper Izvestia on Thursday charged that the appointment of Bakhtiar, regarded by many as a pro-West moderate, was the result of U.S. "political machinations" designed to safeguard American interests in Iran.

State Department spokesman Hodding Carter said in Washington that the United States has offered to "cooperate fully" with the Bakhtiar government. He also said a U.S. envoy went to the Soviet Foreign Ministry in Moscow and reiterated complaints that Soviet propaganda broadcasts into Iran alleging American interference there were "unhelpful."

Some commercial flights out of Tehran were delayed Thursday, but the air traffic situation was returning to normal.

A U.S. Embassy source said about 4,000 Americans were expected to leave in the next few days and the number of Americans remaining in the country would probably drop to about 25,000 once the exodus of dependents and non-essential workers was completed. Just a few months ago, before the worst of the anti-government rioting began, there were about 45,000 Americans in Iran.

Britons and Americans evacuated from the southern city of Bandar Abbas aboard a British Royal Navy vessel told reporters after arriving in the Persian Gulf emirate of Dubai that thousands of foreigners, including Americans, remained stranded in Bandar Abbas.

They said the British Club in the city was gutted by fire Tuesday and firebombs had been hurled at foreigners' houses. They reported no casualties, however. The British vessel evacuated 55 Britons and Americans.

In another development, the military commander of Tehran, Gen. Gholam-Ali Ovisi, left the city on a six-week vacation because of high blood pressure, sources close to the general said. Observers are watching closely for the reaction of hard-line military leaders to the impending change from military to civilian rule.

Iran's economic life has ground to a near-standstill because of the crisis, making formation of a workable civilian government more urgent.

Bakhtiar's chances for reviving the economy brightened Thursday when Mehdi Bazargan, a representative of Ayatollah Khomeini, called for striking oil workers to return to their jobs to produce enough fuel for domestic needs.

Since the latest round of anti-shah strikes began last month, oil production has plunged from 6 million barrels a day to 250,000 barrels or less, oil sources say.

Woman's Home Burns Down As Kids Hog Party Line

MEALESTER, Okla. (AP) — Her house was burning and Kathryn Waters was pleading with youngsters who wouldn't hang up the telephone on the party line.

"Please get off the line," she told them. "My house is on fire; I have to use the telephone."

They refused, she says.

The 65-year-old woman, who is still recovering from back surgery she underwent earlier this year, started walking to a neighbor's house a quarter of a mile away. She fell twice.

Finally a man drove by and gave her a ride. But by the time firemen arrived it was too late.

Only the outer rock walls of Mrs. Waters' home were left standing.

"There were 40 years of things we had accumulated, and now they are gone," she said. "But you can't keep crying about those things."

The Pittsburg County district attorney's office is investigating the incident. Failure to relinquish a telephone in the event of an emergency is against the law.

"I don't care about prosecuting the kids and I don't know who they are," Mrs. Waters said. "That is not going to bring our home back. I just hope they learn a lesson from this."

Mrs. Waters, who was alone at home Tuesday night, had called her husband to make certain he had reached his job over icy roads. That's when some youngsters — she doesn't know who — picked up another phone on the line. Mrs. Waters hung up, telling her husband she would call him back.

Later, as she was letting her dog outside, she heard a sizzling sound and saw that wiring on the ceiling was burning. "I went back in and tried to call the fire department, but the kids still were on the phone," she said.

Even when the youngsters finished talking, they left the phone off the hook.

"I could hear the telephone company's recording," warning of an off-the-hook phone, Mrs. Waters said.

terry unchanged but moving a large section of the Coronado zone (everything east of Frankford Avenue and north of 19th Street) into Lubbock High. By 1981, this would give Lubbock High 1,762 students; Coronado, 1,392; and Monterey, 2,064.

A less drastic variation, making the eastern boundary of Coronado Slide Road instead of Frankford Avenue, would result three years from now in 1,393 pupils at Lubbock High, 1,761 at Coronado and 2,064 at Monterey.

The administrative study says that if Coronado yielded a small part of its eastern area and Monterey, its northern area, Lubbock High could have 1,307 students, compared with 1,945 at Coronado and 1,966 at Monterey.

A similar proposal, affecting Coronado but not Monterey would result in 1,280 students at Lubbock High, 1,874 at Coronado and 2,064 at Monterey.

A sixth idea is for Lubbock High to annex a large northeast portion of Monterey's zone, and Monterey would get the southern part of the Coronado zone. That would give Lubbock High 1,519 students, compared with 1,746 at Coronado and 1,953 at Monterey.

Possibility No. 7 calls for Coronado to yield a small eastern part of its zone to Lubbock High and a small southern part to Monterey; and for Monterey to yield the northern part of its zone to Lubbock High. Lubbock High would end up in 1981 with 1,465 students; Coronado, 1,776; and Monterey, 1,977.

The study says a combination of proposals No. 3 (Coronado giving up its northeastern corner) and No. 6 (Monterey giving up its northeastern corner) would result in 1,774 students at Lubbock High, 1,761 at Coronado and 1,683 at Monterey.

A final proposal is for Monterey to yield its entire eastern section and gain part of Coronado's southern section. This would give Lubbock High 1,580 students; Coronado, 1,918; and Monterey, 1,720.

School trustees have said they would seek input from parents in affected areas before making any changes. Under the school district's desegregation plan, federal Judge Woodward must approve any change in attendance boundaries.

Armored Car Robbed Of $1.5 Million

LAKEPORT, Mich. (UPI) — An armored car was robbed of more than $1.5 million Thursday night while two of its three guards sipped coffee in a restaurant. Police were seeking the third guard.

Police said they were also looking for a late-model car that was parked outside the restaurant all day but vanished after the robbery of the Purotor Security Co. truck was discovered.

Troopers said the armored car had stopped at a restaurant in Lakeport and two of the guards stepped in for coffee.

"The only thing we know is that two of the guards went into the restaurant to have coffee and when they came back out the third one was gone, and so was the money," State Police Dispatcher Roger Tripp said.

Money Bags Missing
Missing from the armored car were three bags of money believed to contain $1,516,900, Tripp said. The two guards also found a note inside the car that apparently was written by the third guard.

"The guard left a note to the effect that he's left and don't report it right away, give him time to get away," Sgt. Robert Moore said. "Nice guy."

Troopers said the missing guard was considered a suspect in the theft. Officials would not release his identity nor speculate on his whereabouts. They also would not say whether he was armed.

"It's hard to say whether he's involved or whether there was force used, but there was nothing to indicate there was force used," Moore said.

Car Not Moved
Troopers said the armored car had not been moved from where it was parked outside the restaurant.

Purotor officials in Detroit, where the armored car was based, refused immediate comment on the robbery.

The guards were regulars at the Table Top Restaurant, manager Brad Bartlett, 38, said. He said they stopped by every Thursday for coffee. Two of the men always would come in while the third remained outside, he said.

There were about 10-12 people in the restaurant when the robbery occurred, said Bartlett, who was cooking at the time.

Cluster, the Distinguished Flying Cross with four Oak Leaf Clusters, the Meritorious Service Medal, and the Air Medal with fourteen Oak Leaf Clusters.

Many of those awards were the result of Bishop's combat experience in Okinawa and Thailand. He piloted F-86 aircraft in Okinawa from 1955 to 1957. He later served a second tour of duty in Okinawa as an F-105 Pilot.

Bishop was the operations officer of the 354th Tactical Fighter Squadron in Thailand before becoming an operation staff officer in the Fighter Division of the Pentagon.

He also taught in the department of aeronautics at the U.S. Air Force Academy in Colorado Springs, Colo., and commanded a base in Alabama before becoming Reese's 21st commander.

HANDICAPPED GAIN BACK PAY

WASHINGTON (AP) — Qualified handicapped workers received more than $362,500 in back pay during fiscal 1978 to remedy job discrimination, says Donald Elsborg, assistant secretary of labor for employment standards. The back pay to 120 persons resulted from settlement of cases under the 1973 Rehabilitation Act.

shop, but Bertram said the zone change appeared incompatible with a planned development south and west of the site.

Furr's has planned a light retail, office and commercial development near the site of the zone change.

Commissioners also denied the request of Antonio A. Romero Jr. for a change from R-1 to light manufacturing (M-1) north of 14th Street and east of Holly Avenue.

Romero sought the zone change to legalize an existing stock lot in the midst of a residentially zoned neighborhood.

Zone cases approved by the commission were:

—Request of Tom Scarborough for a change from multi-family (R-3) to general retail (C-3) to permit the expansion of Tom's Tree Place east of Slide Road and north of 34th Street.

—Request of Steve M. Hurt, representing Lubbock Bible Church, for a change from R-1 to A-1 on property south of 66th Street and east of Iola Avenue.

—Request of Bob Jordan for a change from R-2 to C-4 north of 35th Street and east of Avenue A to allow the expansion of the parking lot for an existing bar.

—Request of Harold Chapman, for Harold Chapman and Rufus Rush, for a change from AM to R-1 west of Quaker Avenue and south of Seventh Street.

—Request of Roger Loter, representing Legends, Inc., to change the zoning on the old La Fonda del Sol restaurant site from R-1 to C-3 to clear the way for another restaurant. The property is located south of Farm Road 2841 and west of the Amarillo Highway.

—Requests of Jack Geddes, representing Bobby Day, to amend a site plan on property located south of 63rd Street and east of Indiana Avenue, and to change the zoning from R-2 to A-1 on property south of 36th Street and east of Ironton Avenue.

—Request of Roy Love, for Bethel Assembly Church, the change the zoning from R-1 to A-2 on property north of 76th Street and east of Avenue U to permit the construction of a church.

—Request of John King, representing Sportsman Supply, to change the zoning on property north of 74th Street and west of Avenue X from A-1 to R-2 and C-2.

Hogs Oust Horses

FREMONT, Ind. (UPI) — Giddyup, pigs.

John and Talith Gurtner have found an alternative to the horse as a cowboy's best friend. Seven years ago they first hitched a pair of pigs to their wagon and they've been "hog drivers" ever since.

The Gurtners took up their hobby after retiring from farming and now they spend their summers showing off their porcine trotters at fairs and parades throughout the upper Midwest.

Their most unusual engagement was a "wedding gift" ordered by a man in Danforth, Ill., for his sister's nuptials. He asked the Gurtners to give the bride and groom a surprise hogwagon ride as a present.

The Gurtners chuckled as they recalled driving their matched pair up to the unsuspecting newlyweds in a reception line outside church.

"When most people first see hogs in harness pulling a wagon, they usually say something like, 'I don't believe my eyes!' or 'Now I've seen everything,'" Gurtner said.

and government reports of the Beverly Hills incident.

"The president, through the National Security Council yesterday, asked the attorney general to thoroughly review all the laws and regulations relating to foreign students in this country, obviously, with a view toward what actions can be taken at the federal level when American laws are broken," Powell said Thursday.

Carter talked discussed the matter with Vance earlier Thursday before the president departed for a four-nation summit meeting on Guadeloupe, French West Indies.

The Carter administration, meanwhile, offered Thursday to cooperate fully with the government being formed in Iran by Shapour Bakhtiar.

State Department spokesman Hodding Carter said the administration also "hopes and expects" Bakhtiar will succeed in his efforts to form a government and put an end to the strife that has torn Iran over the past few months.

And he indicated that, publicly at least, the administration has no plans to try to influence whether the embattled shah stays in Iran, takes a vacation or leaves the country for good.

"That is entirely for the shah to decide," Carter said. But he would not comment on whether the United States would privately give the shah any advice about his future course.

Carter had no comment on reports that Bakhtiar would cut off oil shipments to Israel and South Africa if he took power.

He said the United States sent an envoy to the Soviet Foreign Ministry in Moscow Wednesday to renew complaints that Soviet propaganda broadcasts into Iran alleging American interference there were "unhelpful."

us, but it's going to be crowded behind us," McCathern said, in reference to the traffic jams the tractors hope to create.

"We're going to inconvenience some people, but they've been inconveniencing us for 30 years," he said.

Also speaking at the gathering were national AAM activists Alvin Jenkins and J.C. Lewis.

Destiny Controlled

Jenkins, in an unscheduled appearance, spoke with the fervor of an evangelist, telling the people that they lived in a political world which controlled their destiny.

Saying AAM stood for "Always Alert Mentally," Jenkins compared the movement to a vaccine which could "cure the ills of an agriculture overrun by bureaucracy."

He berated President Carter, calling him "a parole officer throwing the farmers and ranchers back into the prison of government."

Lewis, speaking last, gave a long presentation in which he expounded on the Trilateral Commission and the Council of Foreign Relations and their relationship to the world's economic situation.

The presentation, one he has given in many area meetings, claims the two groups are out to establish a "limited world government by controlling our food, oil and the world's monetary systems."

AAM meetings are being held across the Farm Belt this week in preparation for the tractorcade. A meeting is scheduled tonight in Hereford, with one Saturday in Levelland.

Practical Joke Proves Costly

MINEOLA, N.Y. (UPI) — Nineteen-year-old Mark Alter thought it would be funny to point his toy gun at another motorist on a highway, but an off-duty policeman didn't appreciate his brand of humor.

Alter, of Massapequa, was fined $100 Wednesday and received a warning from a Nassau County District Court judge, who placed him on six months probation.

Alter pleaded guilty last Nov. 14 to charges of menacing and reckless driving.

Police said Alter, a student at St. John's University, was driving his car on Southern State Parkway last October when, as an apparent joke, he pointed a toy gun at a motorist in another car.

New York City Police Officer James Anderson, who was off duty, didn't appreciate the joke. He arrested Alter after an 80-mile-an-hour chase along the parkway.

Auto Sales Year Recorded As Third Best Ever

DETROIT (AP) — December auto sales tumbled off toward the end but pushed the 1978 total to 9.3 million domestic cars, the best year since 1973 and third best ever, the industry reported Thursday.

U.S. automakers finished the last 20 days of the year in a decline but ended the month 2.7 percent ahead of December 1977 with deliveries of 638,192 cars.

When imports and truck sales figures are tallied, the industry will have sold at least 15.4 million cars and trucks in 1978, up 3.6 percent from the previous record set last year.

The car total will be about 11.3 million, including domestics and imports. That will be second only to the 1973 record and up about 1 percent from 1977.

The year also saw Americans show a greater preference for small cars and for domestic cars at the expense of imports. Sales of U.S. cars climbed 2.3 percent while imports dropped about that amount.

Compacts and subcompacts made up

43.7 percent of all cars sold in this country, compared with 41 percent in 1977. Imported cars captured 17.8 percent of the market, down from 18.4 percent in 1977.

In late December, Chrysler Corp. for the second straight reporting period was the only U.S. automaker to post an increase.

A Ford Motor Co. analyst said dealers probably took it easy after both Ford and General Motors Corp. set company records in early December.

For the month, the industry's daily sales rate came to 25,328 cars, up 2.7 percent from the same month last year, which had one extra selling day.

GM was up 4.8 percent to 372,578 cars or 14,903 per day. Ford was off 1.3 percent to 183,556 or 7,342 cars per day and American Motors Corp. dropped 29.3 percent to 8,201 or 328 cars per day.

Chrysler, citing increased availability of its new two-door Omni and Horizon and full-sized cars, finished the month 8.4 percent of its weak December 1977. The No. 3 automaker sold 73,857 cars or 2,955 per day.

Volkswagen of America sold 7,414 U.S.-built Rabbits, bringing the total domestic industry's daily December sales rate to 25,328.

In the final 10 days, the industry slipped 6.8 percent in its daily sales rate with deliveries of 204,339 cars. That comes out to 25,542 per day.

Chrysler jumped 29.5 percent to 27,803 cars or 3,475 per day. But GM slipped 10 percent to 117,181 or 14,648 per day. Ford fell 11.5 percent to 56,761 or 7,095 cars per day and AMC dropped 23.8 percent to 2,504 cars or 324 per day.

The 1978 domestic total was 9,284,981 cars, exceeded only in 1973 and 1975. It was the best year ever for GM, which boosted its share of the domestic market to an even 38 percent from 34.4 percent in 1977.

GM delivered 5,285,282 cars during the year, up 4.6 percent from the previous year.

Ford finished 1978 up 1.5 percent with sales of 2,582,702 cars, while Chrysler was off 5.7 percent to 1,146,256 cars and AMC fell 7.4 percent to 170,728 cars.

HEARTLINE: I have worked for the railroad industry for a little over nine years, and was recently laid off. I am now drawing unemployment benefits, but they won't last long. I read something the other day about being able to get an extension on unemployment benefits, but didn't really understand what I read. Could you tell me about this? — R.E.

The U.S. Railroad Retirement Board announced that because of high unemployment in the railroad industry in the last three months, railroaders with less than 10 years of service can qualify for extended unemployment benefits beginning April 20. Such railroaders are eligible to begin receiving extended unemployment benefits only during a defined period of high unemployment in the railroad industry or nationally. The national indicator does not permit the payment of extended benefits at this time. A period of high unemployment in the railroad industry begins 20 days after the rate of unemployment equals or exceeds the trigger rate of 4.5 percent for three consecutive months. This is the first time such extended benefits became payable based on the railroad trigger alone.

The current period of high unemployment in the railroad industry will continue until 20 days after the rate drops below 4.5 percent for three consecutive months. Furthermore, once an employee begins receiving extended benefits, they are payable for a total of 13 weeks regardless of what happens to the rate of unemployment.

Those unemployed railroaders who have exhausted their normal benefits should apply for extended benefits on April 20, or as soon as possible thereafter.

er. Railroaders with 10 or more years of service qualify for extended railroad unemployment benefits regardless of whether a period of high unemployment exists.

HEARTLINE: I am a 63-year-old widow. My husband passed away two years ago. I have been drawing Social Security widow's benefits ever since. In the last year I have been seeing a gentleman quite frequently. We are thinking of getting married, but there is one thing that bothers me. My friends tell me that if I remarry, I will lose part of my widow's benefits. Can you tell me if this is true? — B.N.

Under old Social Security laws, this was true. However, this law was changed by the 1977 amendments which go into effect in January 1979. Widows who remarry after the age of 60 will no longer lose their benefits or any part of their benefits. Widows who have already remarried and as a result lost all or part of their benefits will also have their benefits reinstated at the original level. If the widow or widower is still drawing the reduced benefits, they should be automatically increased and this increase should show up in the checks they receive in February. If the widow or widower is no longer drawing widow's or widower's benefits, they will have to reapply for the benefits.

HEARTLINE: My son is still in college and will soon turn 22. He has been receiving Social Security benefits under my work record since I have been retired. Will his benefits stop on his birthday, the last day of the month in which he turns 22, or will he be allowed to continue drawing benefits through the remainder of the school year? — D.F.

If your son has not completed the requirements for a bachelor's degree, he is eligible to receive his Social Security benefits through the end of the quarter or semester in which he turns 22.

Ford Auto Prices Up Again

DETROIT (AP) — An across-the-board auto price hike averaging $124 or 1.7 percent was announced Thursday by Ford Motor Co. It's Ford's second price increase in less than a month.

The No. 2 automaker also said retail truck prices would be boosted an average of $161 or 1.8 percent.

The latest in a round of price increases by U.S. automakers is the first to affect all of a company's cars.

Ford's action will "help recover increased costs of labor, materials and services," said sales vice president Gordon B. MacKenzie.

MacKenzie said the increase was discussed with the Council on Wage and Price Stability and is within White House anti-inflation guidelines.

The increases range from $35, or 1 percent, on the Ford Pinto to $260, or 1.9 percent, on the Continental Mark V.

Last month, Ford boosted prices an average of $38 or 0.5 percent on its larger cars only in hopes of luring buyers to smaller, more fuel-sipping cars.

Chrysler Corp. and General Motors Corp. also increased prices on all but their smallest cars in December. The Chrysler hike averaged 1.2 percent and GM's 1.7 percent.

The Big Three and American Motors Corp. have also hiked prices on their optional big engines for 1979 cars, another effort to meet federal fuel economy standards by selling more cars with small engines.

Record VA Payments Expected This Year

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Veterans Administration says a record $485 million in dividends will be paid during 1979 to 4 million veterans holding GI life insurance.

VA Administrator Max Cleland said no application is necessary. Dividends are paid automatically to veterans of World War I, World War II or the Korean War who kept their GI insurance in force.

The bulk of the dividend payments will be made to 3.38 million World War II veterans, who will receive $433.3 million.

Trouble Spots Surround Soviet Union

MOSCOW (AP)—Serious trouble spots are developing along vast areas of the Soviet Union's non-European borders — more problems than the Soviets have had to deal with at one time since World War II, Western diplomatic analysts say. Clearly, it has the Kremlin worried.

Turkey, Iran, Pakistan and Afghanistan all have known periods of turmoil before, but never have all been so unstable simultaneously.

Complicating the picture is China, which has a troubled 4,350-mile border with the Soviet Union and has just opened diplomatic relations with the United States.

It adds up to this: With the exception of Mongolia, Kremlin strategists are now faced with uncertainty in every country that the U.S.S.R. borders from the Middle East to the Pacific.

In addition to developments in China, the Kremlin must consider that:

Land Payments Will Cease

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Federal Trade Commission says people who bought practically worthless land in Florida and Arizona can stop paying for it, but they are still stuck with the land.

In an agreement announced Wednesday, the FTC said the Miami-based Cavanaugh Communities Corp. will not be required to give refunds to people who have already bought its land because financial experts have determined that might bankrupt the company.

But the company will have to tell the thousands of its customers that in many cases the land they bought is worthless, and they may stop making payments.

The company's developments were Ronda, Palm Beach Heights, Paradise Hills and Perdido Bay Country Club Estates, all in Florida, and Twin Lakes Country Club and Estates in Arizona.

The company will also have to tell its prospective customers that some of its homesites may be roadless, susceptible to flooding or worthless as an investment if that is the case.

PROTECTION FOR HERDS

DENVER (AP) — Colorado's Division of Wildlife is seeking a $150,000 appropriation from the state legislature to help the state's deer and elk herd survive the winter and to pay farmers for their losses. The money would be used to pay claims from farmers and ranchers who have lost crops and hay to the hungry herds unable to reach their normal wintering grounds because of an unusually severe winter in the Rockies.

Analysis

rioting aimed at deposing Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi. Iran has been pro-West, but also supplies the Soviets with natural gas. And the foreign policy of any successor would be hard to predict.

In Turkey, a NATO member whose government has taken steps toward normalizing relations with Moscow, martial law has been declared after rioting in the eastern part of the country.

In Afghanistan, the Soviets have become deeply involved in the survival of a fragile regime. And in Pakistan, whose border with Afghanistan comes within a few miles of the Soviet Union, deposed Premier Zulfikar Ali Bhutto is appealing a death sentence — which, if carried out, could split his nation.

The Peking regime capped a year of vigorous diplomatic activity by normalizing relations with the United States — a move that prompted uneasiness in the Kremlin about the objectives behind it.

Diplomatic sources are uncertain what to expect now. They say it is possible to argue that the Russians' concern over developments in Asia and China will make them more accommodating toward the West — or that they will do anything they can to prove that expectation wrong.

"I don't think there's been a time since the war when the Soviets have had to cope with so many problems at the same time," said one senior Western envoy. "They are masters at the international chess board but there are too many imponderables at present to move with confidence in one game, let alone in several."

One factor the Kremlin must consider is whether its own Moslem population could be swept up in the Islamic revival in the Arab world, Iran and Pakistan. One in seven Soviet citizens is a Moslem.

The stakes are greatest in oil-rich Iran.

The Soviet press has accused the Carter administration of spreading "new provocative fabrications" about Soviet threats to justify its own use of "gunboat diplomacy." Pravda, the Communist Party newspaper, has charged repeatedly in recent days that the United States is interfering in Iran's affairs, citing reports that U.S. aircraft carriers are heading for the Gulf.

The White House said Wednesday that the carrier Constellation and accompanying ships are still in the South China Sea with no indication they will be moved nearer Iran.

The Soviet attacks on U.S. policy in Iran, beamed toward that country in stepped-up Persian-language broadcasts, have been coupled, diplomats say, with an effort to hedge bets on the shah so the Russians can take advantage of the situation if he doesn't survive.

When the recent troubles began, the Soviet press reflected the official view that the shah was preferable to any alternative and printed Western news service dispatches from Tehran. Now Pravda has a correspondent in Tehran reporting on the "popular uprising."

By contrast, there has been little comment on the situation in Turkey, which is strategically placed between the Soviet Union and the Middle East. Diplomatic sources say the Soviets are used to periphery unrest in Turkey. The official news agency Tass blamed the troubles there on "provocations of the right extremists."

The Soviets prefer Premier Bulent Ecevit's leftist coalition to a conservative or military government because he has taken steps to normalize relations with Moscow, diplomats say.

The U.S.S.R. is more deeply committed to seeing the fragile regime of Premier Nur Mohammed Taraki hold on in Afghanistan. To insure this, Western diplomats say, the Soviets have increased the number of advisers by four times to 5,000 since Taraki seized power last April.

Last month Taraki came to Moscow to sign a treaty of friendship and cooperation with the Soviet Union that is sure to increase concern in the West, as well as in Peking, that Afghanistan has become a new base for Soviet adventurism, particularly in Iran and Pakistan.

But the Kremlin has backed a regime that is deeply unpopular with Afghanistan's Moslem and tribal population, diplomats say. The program of Marxist industrialization the government has proclaimed is getting substantial attention in the Soviet press, but it could create the same conditions that touched off unrest in Iran.

An important part of the opposition to the shah is based on conservative Moslem objections to his methods in modernizing Iran.

In Pakistan, the Soviet Union — along with the West and Peking — is keeping a wary eye while waiting for the decision on whether Bhutto will be executed. Such a move could touch off demonstrations by Bhutto supporters that would pose a threat to Pakistan's unity, already under strain by demands of the frontier provinces and Baluchistan for greater autonomy.

New Government Unacceptable To Shi'ite

PARIS (AP) — Ayatollah Khomeini, spiritual leader of the Iranian uprising, demanded Thursday that the shah and his family be imprisoned for life.

"That would be the minimum," the Moslem holy man told The Associated Press in an interview.

Until now, Khomeini had demanded exile for Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi. Asked whether he still insisted on exile, he replied, "The shah ... and his immediate family are criminals and they have to be tried and punished according to Islamic laws."

Asked what penalty the shah would face, he said: "One thing that is definite is life imprisonment. That would be the minimum, and also the return of all the property that he has confiscated from the people."

Sitting cross-legged in a cold, unlit room at his residence-in-exile, a villa just outside Paris, Khomeini replied to questions through an interpreter. The 78-year-old cleric, dressed in white turban and black robe, spoke Farsi, his voice a feeble rasp but his replies concise and lucid.

Ruhollah Khomeini — "ayatollah" is a clerical title comparable to "bishop" — is head of the dominant Shi'ite Moslem sect in Iran, an overwhelmingly Moslem nation.

He was exiled by the shah in 1963 after the outbreak of religious violence in protest of the shah's modernization program, which orthodox Moslems say corrupts Islamic values. This is the same battle the ayatollah and his followers are now fighting.

The ayatollah seemed at pains to dispel the notion that under his spiritual guidance Iran would become a harshly anti-Western country dominated by religious zealots. He preached moderation throughout the half-hour interview, except when the shah was mentioned.

He refrained from closing the door on future friendship with the United States. He "would oppose (President) Carter as long as Carter is against the interests of our people and supports the shah," he said, but "after deposing the shah ... all these policies will be reviewed and decided upon."

The ayatollah insists he is not interested in ruling Iran. But as the widely acknowledged symbol of the opposition movement, his blessing would be vital to any government in Iran.

Asked about other countries that have backed the shah, Khomeini said "as long as Israel is at war with the Moslems, there will be no oil for Israel." South Africa, he said, would also be refused Iranian crude as long as it maintained white-minority rule.

Both countries import substantial quantities of oil from Iran.

Questioned on what form a post-shah government should take, Khomeini spoke of "an Islamic republic." It would be democratic, with two rounds of elections — one to approve a new constitution, and the second to form a Parliament.

As the ayatollah spoke here, in Iran a leading opposition figure, Shapur Bakhtiar, was preparing to present a new civilian government to the shah this weekend. The shah reportedly has agreed to surrender much of his power to the new administration, but Khomeini and many other opposition leaders reject any government linked to the monarch.

Khomeini alluded to fears that an Islamic republican government might fall under communist influence, saying, "Whoever is not a subversive and does not stand for the destruction of the revolutionary cause will be free to participate."

"Subversive" became a common euphemism for communists under the shah's rule. Khomeini has in the past attacked both the Soviet Union and the clandestine Iranian Communist Party.

He said he could not yet detail the form an Islamic republic would take. It would be run on Moslem law, he said. But it would not become a rigidly religious state like Saudi Arabia, where persons can be flogged in public for drinking alcohol, or Libya, where the law of Moslem scripture is applied to the letter.

"It would definitely not be similar to those countries," he said. The clergy would give only "general guidance." He also vehemently denied receiving aid or support from Libya.

The bearded cleric spoke shortly after conducting daily prayers before a crowd of Iranian pilgrims who had traveled to his villa in Neauphle-le Chateau, just outside Paris.

A light snowfall began as the ayatollah crossed the village street to the blue tent where prayers take place. The ascetic, slightly built Iranian spurned an umbrella and a helping hand for crossing the slippery road.

The villa, along with a house over the road, were donated by a wealthy Iranian supporter of the rebellion, according to the ayatollah's aides.

The second house is a sort of operations center. Hours are spent on shaky telephone lines to Iran gathering information on the rioting. The ayatollah's followers proudly claim that Iran's telephone operators refused to join a wave of riot-related strikes solely to preserve contact with Neauphle-le Chateau.

One room has been lined with Iranian carpets and stripped of chairs. Turbanned elders and bearded students sit on the floor and share meals of soup and mashed beans. Abiding by Moslem tradition, everybody entering must take off his shoes.

Assassination Brings Riot

MADRID, Spain (AP) — Shouting for the government to resign and the army to take power, angry rightists burned Basque flags in Madrid streets Thursday at the funeral of a Spanish general assassinated by Basque separatists.

A crowd estimated at 2,000 persons accompanied the casket of Maj. Gen. Constantino Ortin Gil, military governor of Madrid who was gunned down outside his apartment door 24 hours earlier by terrorists. Soldiers carried the casket on their shoulders three miles to a cemetery near the capital's outskirts.

Hundreds of riot police kept the crowd in order as it shouted demands for centrist Premier Adolfo Suarez and Defense Minister Lt. Gen. Manuel Gutierrez Mellado to resign.

Along the funeral route youths burned Basque flags as women in fur coats wept and blew kisses at the general's coffin.

Police arrested seven persons in two cars about 65 miles north of Madrid Thursday night for questioning in the slaying, but released four. The names of the three detained were not released.

Vietnamese Hit Cambodian Troops

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Cambodian defenses are apparently folding under Vietnamese ground attacks and widespread air strikes, political analysts said Thursday, although Phnom Penh claimed it had blunted a major offensive.

The analysts here said that Cambodian rebels, who are also striking against government forces, seemed to be planning a military attack on the capital, but added it was difficult to evaluate the conflict without first-hand information. The rebels were last reported besieging Kompong Cham, 45 miles northeast of the capital on the Mekong River.

In New York, U.N. Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim called on "all concerned to exercise restraint and to refrain from moves that may further escalate the fighting" between Vietnam and Cambodia.

The Security Council scheduled private consultations to discuss the issue late Friday afternoon and was expected to meet at the request of Cambodia next week, after a delegation arrives from Phnom Penh.

The border conflict increasingly mirrored the political struggle between the Soviet Union and China, with Vietnam responding to Cambodian charges of aggression at the United Nations.

The official Cambodian media said Soviet-built Vietnamese jets in the past few days bombed and strafed the provincial seat of Kampong Cham and Neak Luong, 35 miles southeast of Phnom Penh, and four other areas of eastern Cambodia.

The government called the Vietnamese "savage arch-slayers" and described air attacks on urban centers that it said caused loss of lives and property. The Cambodian government earlier had said most of the urban population had been sent to rural areas as part of a radical cultural revolution.

The Cambodian rebels claimed Thursday that only Chinese advisers and agents of the central government were in the provincial capital of Kratie when the United Front for National Salvation captured it Dec. 30 with the help of the local population. The dispatch did not say what happened to the Chinese advisers.

Political analysts in Bangkok confirmed that Kratie, 93 miles from Phnom Penh, was wrested from government control, but said they believe that regular Vietnamese forces did most of the fighting. The analysts estimate 100,000 Vietnamese troops are leading about 20,000 insurgents in the fight.

The insurgents said they also had taken Stung Treng and Lomphat, two capitals in Cambodia's northeasternmost provinces. A Vietnamese force was reported driving into southern Cambodia through the Parrot's Peak salient in an effort to sever the Cambodian from the coast.

A radio Phnom Penh broadcast claimed Cambodian forces killed 14,000 troops, destroyed 84 tanks and downed two jet planes in a week of fierce fighting beginning Christmas Day.

The Hanoi-backed United Front for National Salvation said it had control of some 18,000 square miles of Cambodia, or a fourth of the country, and the Mekong River.

In Geneva, the International Committee of the Red Cross announced it has offered its services to Cambodia and Vietnam and was ready to obtain lists of prisoners captured by both sides.

The spokesman for Vietnam's U.N. mission accused the Cambodians of aggression "to serve the expansionist and hegemonistic policies carried out by the Peking authorities against the Vietnamese people."

His statement came in response to Cambodian Deputy Prime Minister Ieng Sary's telegram to the U.N. Security Council Sunday charging Vietnam was trying to seize Cambodia to promote "the global expansion ambitions of the expansionist Soviet big power in Southeast Asia."

The official Chinese news agency Hsinhua Thursday carried a report backing the Cambodian position. The statement said the current Vietnamese offensive "proves to the hilt that Vietnam with the support of the Soviet big-power hegemonists has become a dangerous hotbed of war menacing the peace and stability of Southeast Asia."

The number of Chinese advisers in Cambodia is estimated up to 20,000 but they are generally believed to have avoided frontline action.

The U.S. government on Wednesday announced support for the Security Council meeting and its opposition to the Vietnamese invasion, despite Cambodia's human rights record. Cambodian refugees have reported that the government has slaughtered hundreds of thousands of politically suspect people since 1975 when the Communists came to power.

The Vietnamese and Cambodian Communists were allies against the United States and the Southeast Asian governments it supported. After the U.S. defeat three years ago, traditional hatred and rivalry between the two peoples resurfaced.

The border war between Cambodia and Vietnam has been going on since 1975.

Four Named In Death Of Robbery Victim

A Lubbock man was charged Thursday with capital murder and three other persons were named in aggravated robbery charges in connection with the robbery and murder more than seven months ago of Carlos G. Herrera at his New Deal residence.

The arrests were made simultaneously about 4 a.m. Thursday in the city and Idalou.

Ignacio Gonzales Jr., 19, of 308 35th St., No. 8, was charged with capital murder in connection with the multiple stabbing and shooting death of Herrera.

The 60-year-old Herrera was found May 13, 1978, in his New Deal home, suffering from more than 20 stab wounds and a single bullet wound in the chest.

Criminal District Attorney John Montford, in office for less than a week after being elected on a campaign to crack down on major crimes, announced the filing of the charges in a late-morning news conference.

Charged with aggravated robbery in connection with the incident were Guadalupe Gonzales, 32, of 909 40th St.; Israel Gonzales, 46, of 210 E. 36th St.; and Irene Rios Gonzales, 22, of 523 40th St.

Justice of the Peace Charles Smith denied bond for Ignacio Gonzales. Bonds of $100,000 each were set for Guadalupe Gonzales and Israel Gonzales by Smith. No bond had been set for Irene Gonzales.

All four suspects were held Thursday in Lubbock County Jail.

Montford said the arrests were aided by close cooperation between Texas Rangers, sheriff's deputies, police and investigators from his own office. Montford, who has been in office only four days, indicated the arrests were only the beginning of his hard-nosed treatment of major offenses.

Herrera, who lived about 5 miles northwest of the city on FM 1294, was found sitting on a couch in his living room by a friend, Ted Villarreal, who stopped to visit about 7 a.m. that Saturday.

Herrera was conscious when Villarreal arrived, but died before aid could be obtained.

Herrera was pronounced dead at the scene by Smith, who ruled homicide in the death. An autopsy revealed that the victim died from massive hemorrhaging from the stab wound, rather than the .22-caliber bullet which lodged in his chest.

A kitchen knife with a six-inch blade was recovered in Herrera's backyard, where deputies said a struggle probably took place.

Shaggy Pair Sought In Local Robbery

Two "shaggy-haired" men entered the 7-Eleven Store at 8101 Indiana Ave. shortly after 2 a.m. today and robbed the 20-year-old attendant of an undetermined amount of money.

William Gregory Bacon told police the suspects asked him if he had anything to eat, then one of the bandits walked behind the counter, pulled a knife and said, "I'm not going to hurt you, just give me the bills and never mind the change."

The other man, who warned he had a gun in his right coat pocket, allegedly told Bacon, "If you don't, I'll kill you."

Bacon said he handed over the bills from the cash register, and the man who said he had a gun left the store. The man wielding the knife told the attendant to turn around and face the wall before fleeing the convenience store, reports show.

Police today were looking for two thin, white men, thought to be in their late teens or early 20s. One of the suspects told Bacon a scar on his arm was caused by a bullet wound, and his companion reportedly had crossed eyes.

Man Killed In Shootout

FORT WORTH (UPI) — One man was killed and two policemen were shot and seriously injured Thursday in a shootout with officers who had responded to a report that someone in a house was shooting at passing cars.

Police said Sammy Stewart, 42, was killed as he ran from the home in which police lobbed tear gas grenades, starting a fire. Witnesses said he was carrying a shotgun as he ran from the house.

The incident, which took less than 45 minutes from the time the first shots were heard until the man was killed, started with a report of shots being fired at cars passing on a residential street.

The first officers arriving to investigate were each hit with shotgun blasts from the house.

The officers, B.L. Stutts, 36, and J.C. Gaul, 42, were rushed to a hospital where both underwent emergency surgery. Stutts was reported in fair condition and Gaul was said to be in extremely critical condition with head injuries.

Additional policemen arriving at the house were told a man had barricaded himself inside. Though police tried to talk him into surrendering, he refused, and police lobbed tear gas grenades into the house.

Apparently the grenades started a small fire, and the gunman ran from the house, waving the shotgun. He was killed when police opened fire.

TO YOUR GOOD HEALTH

BY
DR. PAUL E. RUBLE

Dear Dr. Ruble: I found a lump on each of my breasts. The doctor examined me and said I might need surgery, but he called in a specialist to look at them. At that time the specialist turned to his nurse and asked for a syringe. He then drew some fluid from my breasts, a darkish fluid. He told me the material in the needle was my cysts and that he had just saved me a $350 operation. Four years ago I had had two cysts removed from my right breast by surgery and had a biopsy that showed they were not malignant. I have never heard of this new method before. I am confused and wonder if the wrong decision was made. There is a swelling in my left breast, and it is painful. Please comment. — M.J.L.

You appear to be a chronic cyst former. The fluid of cysts is usually a clear, brownish-green hue. The aspiration (syringe) method is the recognized procedure for emptying a cyst. When drained dry, about half may reappear. The rest will disappear, not to return. It does, indeed, save you from surgery. If the cyst on the left breast has reformed and is painful it may have to be aspirated again or removed at a later date. The doctor very likely examined the cyst fluid to determine its status. Sometimes women on the birth control pills or other hormone medicines may lose the tendency to form cysts when they discontinue them.

Dear Dr. Ruble: When I was about three months pregnant I was X-rayed in the spine area. I didn't realize that this could damage the baby I was carrying then. My son was born at full term and was healthy. Now he is 20 and is serious about a girl he wants to marry. Is it possible that my X-rays could affect their children? — M.M.

The chief dangers of X-rays are to the fetus during the first three months of pregnancy. Your son apparently escaped and harmful effects. You need not be concerned about any effect on his children.

Dear Dr. Ruble: How obese does a person have to be to qualify to get an intestinal bypass job done in order to reduce? — M.M.

The decision is based on various factors — for example, how life-threatening the obesity is. There is a rule of thumb that is sometimes loosely applied. It is that the person should be approximately 100 percent heavier than he should be for his height. If your normal weight were 150 pounds and if you weighed 300 you might be considered sufficiently obese to warrant the procedure. But you certainly would not need it necessarily. More recently, some success has been obtained with a sort of stapling of a portion of the stomach to decrease its volume and encourage weight loss.

According to John R. Neill of the University of Kentucky College of Medicine, about 90 percent of overweight persons fall within 30 pounds of their desired weights.

"You Can Stop Sinus Trouble!" is the title of a booklet explaining what sinus trouble really is and what can be done about it. For a copy write to Dr. Ruble, P.O. Box 11210, Chicago, Ill. 60611, enclosing a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope and 50 cents.

Dr. Ruble welcomes reader mail but regrets that, due to the tremendous volume received daily, he is unable to answer individual letters. Readers' questions are incorporated in his column whenever possible.

Local Elks Sponsor Free Throw Contest

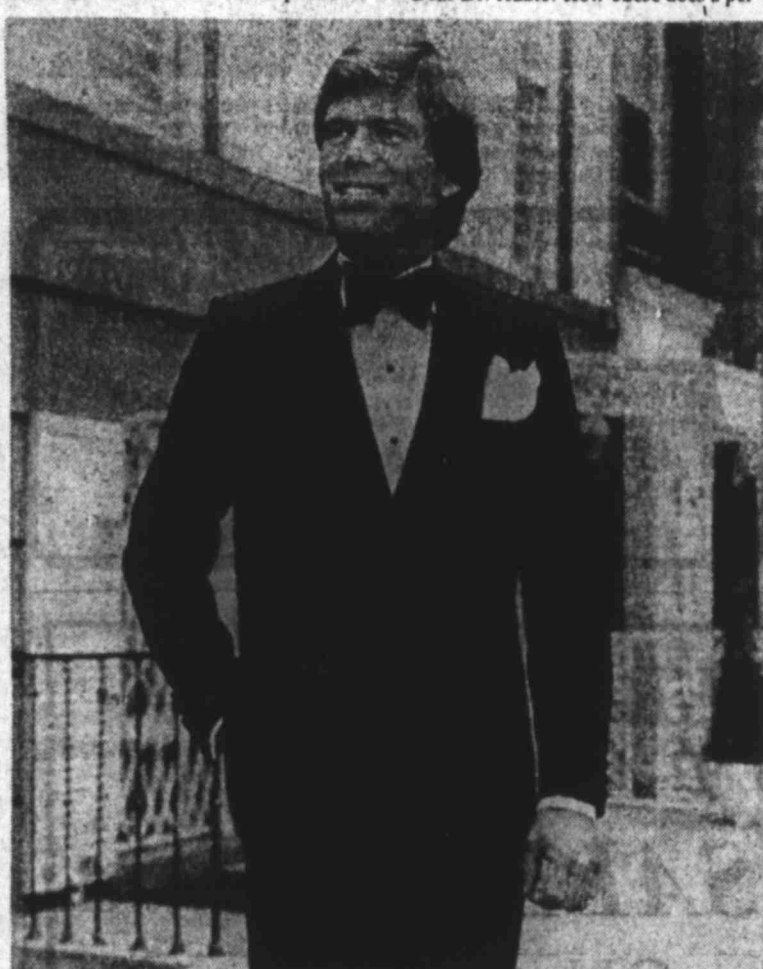

A basketball free throw contest will be sponsored by the Lubbock Elks Lodge Saturday at J.T. Hutchinson Jr. High, 32nd St. and Canton. Divided into three categories — ages 8-9, 10-11 and 12-13; there will be boys' and a girls' competition.

Competition times will be: Ages 12-13 — 9 a.m.; Ages 10-11 — 11 a.m.; and Ages 8-9 — 1 p.m.

Trophies will be given to the winners of each age category for both boys and girls. Ribbons will be presented to second and third place winners and certificates issued to all participants.

A contest similar to the punt, pass and kick competition, winners of the Lubbock contest will advance to district, state, regional and national. The national winner will be installed in the Basketball Hall of Fame.

For further information, contact the Elks Lodge.

ELEGANT OUTFIT — Perfect for a formal night on the town, this black dinner jacket is a double-breasted, four-button model, but only a single lower button is used to give the jacket the longer roll on the lapel. The low rolled narrower shawl collar is black satin, also used to cover the buttons and stripes on the matching pants. A wing collar shirt and butterfly bow tie complete the ensemble.

Hints from Heloise

DEAR HELOISE:

I read your articles every week and now I can finally give you one of my hints.

People who have hamsters know what a bother it is when they get out of their cages. Well, now I have a solution for this problem.

When the hamster is out, eventually he will get hungry and thirsty. So put a bucket in a room and make little stairs up to the top of the bucket with books (or make a little ramp) so the hamster can get up to the top. Place some food and water inside the bucket (you might trail a few grains up the books).

The hamster will find the food and consequently fall into the bucket (this will not hurt the hamster when he falls in). Then he can eat and drink, but the one thing the hamster doesn't know is that he cannot get out of the bucket.

Now you have your hamster back and he is not hurt a bit, except maybe his feelings. — Ellie Gillette (12)

So wise for one so young! You're a dear and that hamster is one lucky fella to have such a devoted keeper. Hugs! — Heloise

DEAR HELOISE:

I like to read the cooking tips for a person cooking for one. Here is mine.

When making gravy (by the cupful), try thickening it with instant potatoes.

Courtesies

WILSON—HORN

Vickie Wilson and Tye Horn will be honored today with a rehearsal dinner in the Sir Pellinore Room of Dunfey's Royal Coach Inn in Dallas. Mr. and Mrs. C.R. Horn will host the occasion.

Special guests will be grandmother of the future bridegroom, Mrs. Cora Love, and grandparents of the bride-elect, Mr. and Mrs. C.C. Thomas of Richmond, Ind. and Mr. and Mrs. E.H. Wilson of Largo, Fla.

The couple will be married in Westminster Presbyterian Church in Dallas.

GARLOCK—MOSS

Mary Garlock and Jobe Moss were honored Sunday with a brunch in the Lubbock Country Club. Dr. and Mrs. Roy Sheffield and Mr. and Mrs. Roy Sheffield Jr. were hosts.

Special guests were Mr. and Mrs. C.R. Garlock, parents of the bride-elect; Mr. and Mrs. Paul Moss, parents of the future bridegroom; and grandmothers of the future bridegroom, Mrs. C.W. Jobe and Mrs. Ennis Moss, Sr.

The couple will be married Jan. 20 in St. Luke's United Methodist Church.

HINTS FROM HIM

DEAR HELOISE:

I would like to pass on a little hint for all those guys (or liberated gals) with a cookie duster — alias, a "mustache."

Being an amateur duster — that is, my first mustache — I have noticed that it sometimes gets messy looking. Besides an occasional trimming, I have found that an extra toothbrush makes an excellent dusting brush.

So now, after you've munched on some delicious cookies, having made sure to dust all those extra crunchy crumbs into your mouth with the old duster, why not give the overworked duster a little break with a brushing from the versatile toothbrush. — Keith Horcasitas

Now that's one problem I haven't had to solve, but I suppose it can be a problem for some of our male counterparts. But you're a doll for sharing your tip with our male readers. — Heloise

DEAR HELOISE:

To remove the lettering on those colorful margarine lids, I use nail polish remover on a piece of cotton. The lettering comes off real easy.

When I use them to store various things, I can write on the lid what is inside the containers. Real neat! — Mrs. James Epps

LETTER OF LAUGHTER

DEAR HELOISE:

Would have written sooner, but someday I'm going to join the "Procrastinators Club," if I ever get around to it. — A Friend

DEAR HELOISE:

For an after-the-holiday hint, how about using that leftover eggnog that no one wants to drink to make some tasty rice pudding. It would be better yet if you happen to have leftover rice too.

Pour them together, bake as usual, and delicious rice pudding is the end result! Come to think of it, eggnog has all the ingredients you'd normally put into rice pudding. — Judy Benevy

DEAR HELOISE:

Just want to pass along a great idea my smart husband came up with.

He loves baked potatoes, but not the skins. So he suggested I peel them before cooking, place them in a piece of foil, add a little butter, seal and cook as usual.

They taste just as good and are a lot easier — no burned fingers trying to remove hot peelings, either. — Mrs. David Early

DEAR HELOISE:

If your meringue-topped pie comes out of the oven with black peaks instead of lovely brown ones, don't despair.

Instead, while the meringue is hot, grab your kitchen shears and cut them off!

The pie looks presentable as well as edible and no one need ever know! — Melissa Grant

That's so cute...and I'll never tell. — Heloise

At Wit's End...

By ERMA BOMBECK
I read a spine-chilling statistic the other day.

Educational theorist John Holt predicts that within the next ten years, more than 50,000 U.S. families will be schooling their children at home.

Have you any idea what that means at our house? It means our kids will be close to 35 by the time they graduate. My husband holds three college degrees. I hold one. We have never been able to tell our children anything.

If I said, "Children, today is Tuesday...ergo, tomorrow is Wednesday," they would cock their heads to one side, squint at me suspiciously and say, "Are you sure?"

I know it seems like a wonderful idea having the children sitting around a study table at night singing "Inchworm," but trust me. I'm a pioneer parent who goes back to the days when parents alone shouldered the responsibility for preparing a child for his place in the world...the days before they offered driver's education in the schools.

Now, there's a bit of home education guaranteed to stunt your growth. Maybe home education would have worked when the kids were younger. I had the "fear factor" going for me then. I would reach out to pick a piece of lint off their jacket, put their collar outside a sweater, or pat them on the head, and they would flinch. They were never really too sure. As years went by, they came to know me too well and they stopped flinching.

I stopped by my son's room the other night, poked my head in the door and said, "How's it going?"

He said, "The Celtics are ahead by two."

"C'mon, fella," I said, "That will never do. I'll help you with your homework. Got a pencil?"

He spread out on the desk his "School Organizer," a notebook that looked like a General Services warehouse.

"Could we talk about math?" I asked. He turned on his calculator with the printout and asked, "What do you want to know?"

"Want me to read through your essay?" He flipped the cover off his electric typewriter and said, "It's done."

"I can give you Spanish words," He pointed to his audit cassette tapes and said, "No need."

"Hey, how about some history questions?" He said, "I borrowed a computer from the library. It's all there. I just push a button."

I closed the door softly. Why did I have the feeling that it was only a matter of time before I would be replaced by a box, a beep and two dry cell batteries.

Here is another peanuts and bananas hand. South is in four spades and needs a little luck to make it since there are three obvious losers. One trump, one spade and the ace of clubs.

He notes those three losers. Then he has to look for 10 winners. Should he attack clubs? He decides that the diamond suit offers better possibilities so he starts on diamonds at trick two. He cashes dummy's ace of diamonds, returns a diamond to his king and leads a third diamond. He ruffs in dummy. East overruffs and leads a spade to his partner. South has added a fourth loser to the three he started with since East is sure to overruff a diamond.

Now let's go back to our peanuts and bananas. When South leads that third diamond he does not have to ruff in dummy. He can discard dummy's jack of spades. He has lost a diamond or peanut trick, but has made up for it by getting rid of the banana or spade loser.

Later on South trumps his losing spade in dummy as well as his fourth diamond. East gets to overruff, but that costs him his trump trick.

South loses one ruff, one diamond and one club, but makes his game.

NIMBLE FINGERS

MARSEILLE, France (WNS) — Charles Levoile, 27, was dancing with his fiancée, Marie Poppolo, when he reached into his pocket to show her the wedding ring he had bought. Unfortunately his pocket had been picked, and the ring was gone. No problem for Marie: She danced with all the other men at the party, and her nimble fingers recovered the gold band from a partner's pocket during the final tango.

Dear Ann Landers: I need to know once and for all. Does alcohol improve a male's sexual performance or not? My husband insists that it does — BEFORE he takes those few extra drinks. Then when he can't hack it he refuses to admit he was wrong. We get into an argument and he blames me — says I "turned him off."

Will you please get me some recent data on this subject? Nothing I say will convince him. Thanks so much. — Lancaster, Pa.

Dear Lan: Although there is plenty of modern scientific data on this subject, Shakespeare said it best in "Macbeth."

Discussing the contradictory effect of alcohol on sexual performance, the porter tells Macduff in Act Two, Scene Three: "It provokes and unprovokes. It provokes the desire but it takes away the performance. Therefore much drink is said to be an equivocator with lechery. It makes him and it mars him. It sets him on and it takes him off. It persuades him and it disheartens him..."

In simpler terms: Alcohol heightens the desire in males. It reduces the inhibitions. BUT it also has a physical effect on his body that makes it extremely difficult or impossible to perform. In other words, the spirit is willing but the flesh is oh, so weak.

Dear Ann: If you can solve this one, you're a genius.

I am 22 years old (female), still living at home with my dad and brother, who is 25. We all have different working hours. Dad gets up first and sets the alarm clock for me. I in turn set it for my brother.

The problem is, my brother could sleep through the San Francisco earthquake and the Chicago fire combined. He does not hear the alarm go off. Both Dad and I phone him from work because we know what a heavy sleeper he is. The telephone is right by his head. He doesn't hear that either.

Almost every night there's an argument at the dinner table because Brother insists I did not set the alarm and we forgot to phone him. So — he was late again.

When he loses his job, of course, it will be our fault. Do you have a solution to this? — Dumped On

Dear Dumped On: Is your brother a pothead — or is he perhaps on another drug? Beer or alcohol before bedtime can also knock out a person. Also, what time does he turn in?

Buy Rip Van Winkle an alarm clock with the noisiest clang available. Set the phone on its heaviest ring. If this doesn't do it, he's no normal sleeper — and I suggest he'd better stop doing whatever he's doing that knocks him unconscious at night.

Dear Ann: I'm a hard-working waitress who gives good service.

Last night I received the following:
On a $37 check — $2 tip.
$27 check — $2 tip.
$22 check — $1 tip.
$16 check — NO tip.

What do you think of this? — Mad In Madison

Dear Mad: I think if the service is really good, a $37 check merits a $5 tip, a $27 check rates a $4 tip, a $22 check deserves a $3.25 tip, and a $16 check calls for a $2.50 tip.

These days it's 15 percent — or a little more for spectacular service and special attention.

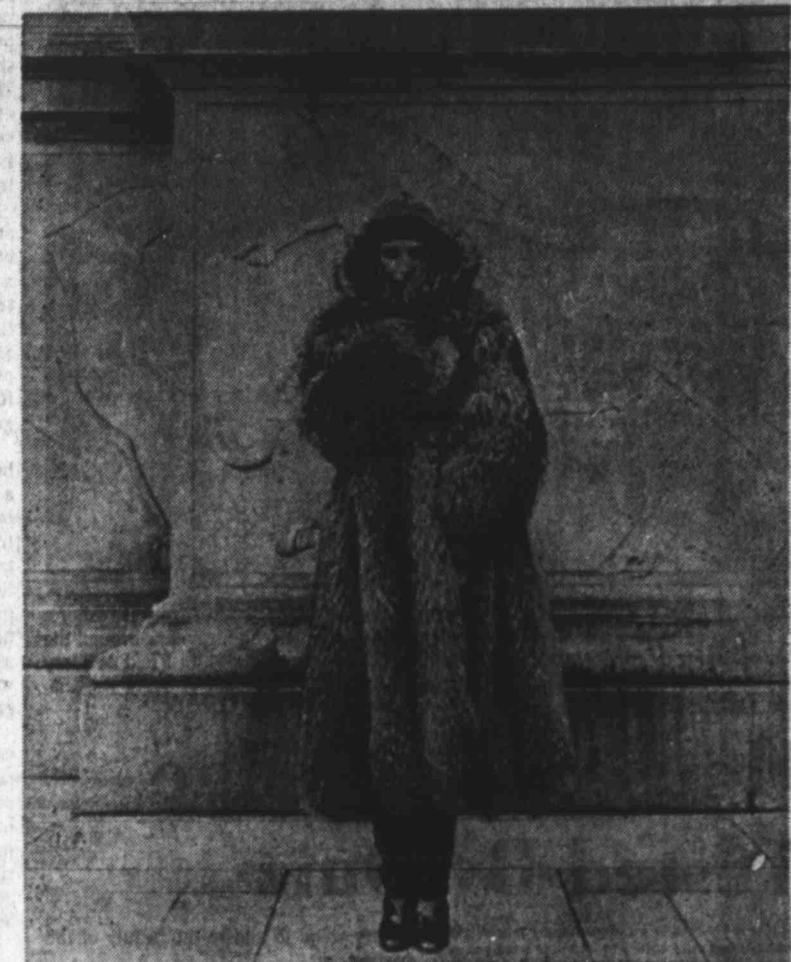

Dear Ann: I'm the mother of three good-looking sons, ages 14, 15 and 17. I'm tired of having our dinners interrupted by girls. Last night I announced there will be no telephone cords dragging in the plates while the food gets cold.

Do you think girls who phone boys are chasing them? When I was growing up, boys called girls. Right or wrong? — Creaky Lady

Dear Lady: Girls who call boys lose a lot. While it might flatter a male's ego, an aggressive female can spoil a good thing. On the home front: Make it a rule — no calls during dinner. The boys can phone the chicks back if they want to.

Is pot a drug? Can L.S.D. and pills open new worlds for you? Stop guessing. Get the facts in Ann Landers' new booklet, "Straight Dope on Drugs." For each booklet ordered, send a dollar, plus a long, self-addressed stamped envelope (28 cents postage) to Ann Landers, P.O. Box 11995, Chicago, Illinois 60611.

PLAINS AGRICULTURE

By DUANE HOWELL

REP. TOM FOLEY, D-WASH., chairman of the House Agriculture Committee, doesn't expect Congress to consider another "omnibus" farm bill during the new session, which begins Jan. 15.

Outlining the committee's informal agenda for 1979, Foley said, however, that an examination of "the whole range of agricultural programs" would be one of the first orders of business.

The committee's ranking minority member, Rep. William Wampler of Virginia, predicted congressional debate on farm support programs under the 1977 farm bill during the session, but he expressed doubt that the 1977 farm bill would be amended.

NOTING THAT CONGRESSIONAL AUTHORITY for government disaster payments on grains and cotton runs out in 1979, Foley said the Agriculture Committee would conduct hearings on replacing them with a federal crop insurance program.

Secretary of Agriculture Bob Bergland, who strongly supports the new crop insurance program proposal, attempted to push it through the last session of Congress.

But Foley expressed doubts that Congress could agree on a complete revision of federal crop insurance before the present disaster program expires. He predicted an extension of the current disaster program through the end of the 1981 crop year.

ADMINISTRATION PROPOSALS to reorganize the USDA, shifting some present activities to other departments, also will come under careful review, Foley said.

Both Foley and Senate Agriculture Committee chairman Hermand Talmadge of Georgia have urged President Carter to abandon plans reportedly under administration review to strip the USDA of the Forest Service and some conservation and rural development programs.

They told Carter in a letter that such moves would face strong bipartisan opposition in Congress.

Another issue that is certain to receive the House Committee's attention this year is the proposed ban on nitrite.

Wampler said the nitrite issue raises the question of the need for a national cancer risk assessment policy, but he did not say whether he expected such legislation to be introduced this session.

ALTHOUGH THE HOUSE AGRICULTURE Committee is not directly responsible for meat import legislation, its members will be involved this session in the Ways and Means Committee's attempts to pass a countercyclical meat import act, Foley predicted.

On other commodity-related subjects, Foley said the committee would renew its efforts to design domestic sugar legislation after a much-revised sugar program failed to pass the House in the last hours of the 1978 session.

Foley and Wampler said international commodity agreement negotiations, the effects of inflation on farm costs, and further development of foreign markets for U.S. agricultural goods would be among the committee's other interests in the new session.

Range Management Via Controlled Fires Beneficial

One well-planned, controlled fire can achieve several forms of range improvement, but the land manager must first be knowledgeable of fire's effects on each type of land to be burned.

Dr. Henry A. Wright of the range and wildlife management faculty at Texas Tech University has compiled data on the effects of fire on several different types of land in West Texas and on when and how to burn, as well as why.

"The main reasons for use of fire in grasslands include increasing yields and enhancing the taste of coarse grasses, amplifying availability of forage, controlling shrubs and cool season grasses, killing cactus and weeds, removing dead woody material and improving wildlife habitat," Wright said.

On the shortgrass prairie of the High Plains fire has few beneficial uses. Usually the grasses do not benefit from fire, he said, although they tolerate it during wet seasons. If rain is below normal, the grasses can be severely harmed for two or three years.

During a relatively wet season, when soil moisture is high, controlled fire on the shortgrass prairie can be economical means of cleaning up woody debris and killing prickly pear less than two feet tall. Fire will also control small cedar trees.

Contrary to popular theory, fire does not add nitrogen to the soil. Nitrogen and sulphur in the grass are lost in the atmosphere during a burn, Wright said.

Phosphorus, potassium, calcium and other minerals, though, are returned to the soil in the ashes, providing some fertilization.

Nitrate content of the soil increases by an indirect effect of the fire, though. After a burn the soil temperature is usually raised an average of 10 degrees, permitting a ten-fold increase of bacteria populations, which can break down more organic matter in the soil and add to its nitrate content.

Fire has several uses on the mixed prairie of the Rolling Plains. Most beneficial is the increase in both herbage yield and taste of the prevalent coarse grasses, such as tobosagrass.

Fire also rids the rangeland of litter often accumulated from these grasses. Annual broomweed, which can be toxic to cattle, particularly calves, is also controlled by burning.

Removal of dead honey mesquite and killing of young honey mesquite trees can be accomplished by controlled fire. About 50 to 70 percent of all cactus species will die two years after a burn, Wright said.

In the Edwards Plateau region fire removes chained debris and dead piles of ash juniper and kills young cedar trees. Wright said the combination of dozing and burning allowed one rancher east of Abilene to increase his carrying capacity from one cow per 50 acres to one cow per 15 to 20 acres.

Fire is used in the mesquite and brush country of the Rio Grande Plains to burn sprayed mesquite and increase forage yields.

Although it does increase carrying capacity and makes livestock handling easier, fire can destroy much of the brush cover, which results in depletion of wildlife numbers by as much as 50 percent.

Relative humidity, soil moisture, air temperature, wind speed and wind direction all need to be within certain levels for each type of rangeland to be burned, Wright stressed.

Experience is the best teacher when using controlled fire, Wright commented, and no one should be in charge of burning a pasture with less than two seasons of burning experience.

Farm Contracting Studied
Size Of Operation, Formality Linked

Whether a farmer's "John Hancock" shows up on a crop or livestock contract may depend on the size of the operation. Farm size and contracts go together, and crop operations are clear evidence of that.

These are the conclusions of a study conducted by Donald S. Moore of the Texas Agricultural Experiment Station and J. Rod Martin of the U. S. Department of Agriculture's Economics, Statistics and Cooperatives Service.

About one-half of the farmers in the Texas Rolling Plains — an agricultural area that in many ways is representative of the nation as a whole — with 600 or more acres used contracts in 1973, while only 14 percent of the farms with fewer than 150 acres used contracts.

Contracts with beef cattle producers are likewise used mainly by larger operations. No producers in the Rolling Plains with less than 20 head a year used contracts. But 60 percent of the producers with 200 to 499 head were involved in some kind of contracting.

(The largest producers — those with 500 or more head — often deal directly with feedlots and packers.)

A word about contracting: Basically, a contract, whether for a crop or livestock, is an agreement by the producer to sell the commodity when it's ready for market or at some stipulated time. These contracts are made before the crops are harvested or the livestock are near selling weight.

For example, a beef cattle producer might contract the herd, or some part of it, to be delivered when the wheat grazing period is up — when the animals are usually about 680 pounds. The contract will most likely be made at the time the producer buys the feeder calves, which then weigh about 400 pounds.

That's the most common use of contracts for beef cattle: Seventy percent of the Rolling Plains cattle marketed through contracts came from stocker-type operations that involved wheat or other cropland grazing.

While only 7 percent of the beef cattle producers in the Rolling Plains used contracts to sell or market livestock, more than a fifth of all beef cattle marketed in 1973 were sold under contract. Again, that's evidence that the larger operations use contracting more than smaller ones.

Beef cattle contracts have some restrictions, usually. They specify the price of the cattle, the amount of part-payment, the description and location of the cattle, and the places where they're to be delivered.

Other common contract terms are these:

— The buyer is allowed to cut a percentage of the cattle to sort out the ones found unacceptable.

— A 3 percent "pencil shrink" is allowed the buyer, to make up for weight lost through handling and hauling.

— Scales used to determine pay rates are specified in advance.

— The seller must furnish health and brand certificates.

Besides these standard terms, many agreements deal with production practices. For example, implants are often prohibited, grain for feed may be mixed, or supplemental feed during drought or other bad weather may be outlawed.

Crop contracts in the Rolling Plains — an area that turns out hefty amounts of cotton, grain sorghum and wheat, besides cattle — are classified as forward pricing contracts or advanced sale agreements.

The extent of contracting shifts from year to year, depending upon supply and demand, and other market factors. But when producers make contracts before planting, most of the agreements sell field crops from a specified acreage.

Production practices usually aren't addressed in these agreements, except that some harvesting procedures may be ruled out of bounds. For instance, a buyer may insist that cotton not be picked up off the ground and that good farming practices be followed.

Standard procedure for farmers contracting all production from specified acreage is for inclusion of all the acres planted or expected to be harvested. But some contracts specify the volume to be delivered. In these cases, the producers normally contract something less than the amount they expect to harvest. That serves as a buffer in case crops don't turn out well.

Most of the cotton growers in the Rolling Plains with contracts made agreements on the basis of acres harvested. Only 4 percent of them contracted by volume in 1973, while 26 percent of the grain sorghum producers signed volume contracts.

Producers across the nation usually try to make acreage contracts. Buyers are more willing to go that route when supplies of a particular commodity are low.

Under these terms, the buyer agrees to purchase, at a specific price, all the crop from a stated acreage. Buyers then run the risk of purchasing too much, if yields are especially high.

Of course, for those farmers who contract acres rather than volume, many of them don't contract their total acreage. Depending on their circumstances and the kinds of deals they can strike with purchasers, farmers may contract part of their output, planning to sell the rest of the harvest some other way.

Farmers may have an advantage in contracting only a portion of the intended production. Besides acting as a buffer if yields are short, if yields are good and the market price is relatively high at harvest, the farmer will have more crops to sell and can take advantage of the higher prices on that portion not under contract.

Beyond these intricacies in contracting — which involve gambling by both sellers and buyers — the system has certain advantages for operations large enough to use it.

Namely, the use of contracts can, soften those peaks and valleys that play havoc with supplies and prices. That takes some of the guesswork out of figuring where supplies will come from or go to.

There's nothing new in all this. Farmers across the nation have been contracting their commodities for years — although in the Rolling Plains, because of the beef cattle concentration and the competitive nature of cattle raising, contract activity is perhaps more intense than in other areas.

But lately economists have noted a trend in the growing popularity of contracting, and they link it to the larger farm operations.

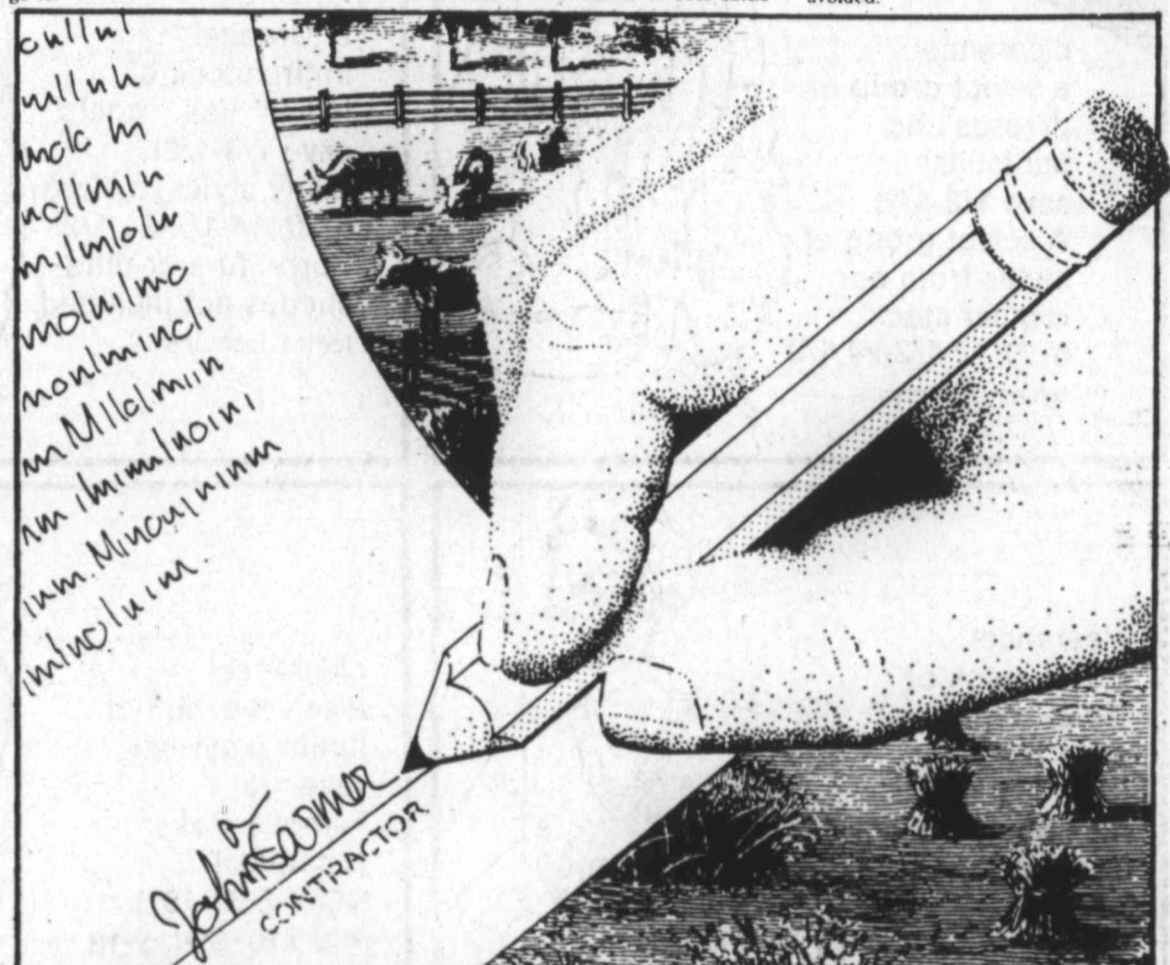

On the Rolling Plains, for example, the number of beef cattle producers using contracts in 1969 was 249, with just over 58,000 head sold. By 1973, as farming and ranching operations generally consolidated, the number of beef cattle producers using contracts jumped to 781, selling nearly 146,000 head.

Contracting today is probably more widespread than ever, but estimates are fuzzy. It's likely that the practice will increase in the future, as farms and ranches get bigger.

Beef cattle producers, especially, will probably turn more to contracting, largely because farms are getting bigger and contracting allows feedlot managers to schedule their operations better.

Beef cattle producers, also, see lower marketing costs using contracts than sending animals to auction. That's because the costs associated with transporting the cattle, plus the auction fee, are avoided.

CONTRACTING GROWING — Economists expect the practice of contracting crops and livestock to continue to grow, especially among larger operators. While only 7 percent of the beef cattle producers in the Rolling Plains used contracts to sell or market livestock in 1973, more than a fifth of all beef cattle marketed were sold under contract. This is evidence that the larger operations use contracting more than the smaller ones.

High Plains Boll Weevil Spraying On Increase

Aerial applicators sprayed ultra-low volume malathion on almost 700,000 acres of weevil-infested cotton last year in the 15th year of the High Plains Boll Weevil Control Program.

Ed Dean, field service director of Plain Cotton Growers, Inc., program coordinator, says an aggregate total of 391,789 acres were treated in 1978.

The base control zone at the peak of the spraying season contained approximately 210,000 acres in 10 counties. Individual fields were sprayed from two to six times as needed, using 64,835 gallons of insecticide.

In 1977, the base acreage was 435,000, and the aggregate acres treated were 1,250,000 at a total cost of about $1.8 million.

The 1978 control zone covered all or parts of Motley, Dickens, Kent, Crosby, Briscoe, Floyd, Garza, Borden, Scurry and Dawson counties.

Estimated cost for 1978 is $1.65 per acre per treatment, compared to the 1977 cost of about $1.50. Total cost in 1978 is estimated at just over $1.14 million.

The PCG initiated the program in 1964 when entomologists warned that unless controlled boll weevils in a few years could be adding huge costs to cotton production across the entire High Plains.

Dean said the 1978 program prevented significant movement of boll weevils on to the High Plains above the Caprock, which is the overall objective.

"Not only did we prevent the spread of weevils to the west," he continued, "we significantly reduced populations within the treated area and ended the season with much lower field populations than normal."

"This was possible because of the benefits from previous programs, dry weather and delayed cotton plantings last spring."

These factors, together, made it possible for the 1978 program to start at a later date and made it possible to apply insecticide on a tighter schedule than in 1977, Dean said.

"Also," Dean adds, "because of lower weevil populations in the cotton area surrounding the control zone, we were only confronted with our own boll weevils this year and were not bothered with large numbers of weevils moving in from outside the zone."

Spraying in the 1978 program did not begin until Sept. 27, whereas operations in previous years had started near the beginning of September.

"Delayed plantings over a broad area of the treatment zone, some by design and some forced by drought conditions, were a big help in delaying a buildup of heavy population pressures," Dean says, "and we will be urging producers in 1979 to use later plantings as a management tool both to help themselves and to improve the odds favoring another effective, low-cost program."

The program is financed jointly by High Plains cotton producers, the U.S. and Texas Departments of Agriculture. The USDA matches funds contributed by producers and the TDA.

Dimmitt Firm Gets Corn Marketing Pool

DIMMITT (Special) — Dimmitt Agri Industries, a grain handling and marketing cooperative here, has been approved by the U. S. Department of Agriculture to implement the first Form G type marketing pool for corn in the United States, according to Bill Clark, general manager of the co-op.

Form G loans for corn were made possible by USDA regulations issued in August of 1977 in which wheat and feed grains were added to the list of farm products that could be handled through approved cooperatives for Commodity Credit Corp. (CCC) loan purposes.

Prior to August 1977, cotton, honey, rice and soybeans were the only products eligible. Clark said successful cooperative pools have been in operation several years on these four products and have "demonstrated the value of farmers joining together to create better markets for their products."

Far-Mar-Co, a large regional cooperative in the Kansas-Nebraska area, implemented a pooling program for wheat producers in January of 1976.

This program, coupled with the 1977 USDA regulation, has enabled wheat farmers to break into the larger domestic markets and open the door for direct export of their wheat, Clark said.

Clark said Dimmitt Agri Industries has been approved to handle corn, milo, wheat and soybeans for its members through the program.

The board of directors has approved implementation of two types of pools. One will be a seasonal pool in which the member will commit acreage to that pool and the association will market the product "in an orderly manner" throughout the year.

The purpose is to feed the product into the market each month and obtain an average price for the year. This type of marketing has proven successful for rice and soybeans and in most cases has given greater returns to the producer, Clark said.

"It also assists in leveling out the price and in preventing the harvest time price slump," he said.

The purchase pool will allow the producer member to commit acreage to the cooperative prior to harvest for marketing, but he would retain the pricing decision and could fix his price at any time.

"The advantage of pooling will be to make large volumes of grain available to the cooperative to be used in effectively dealing with the larger markets," Clark said.

"If the pool participation is large enough, it will create a large reservoir of grain that assures potential buyers of a dependable supply and will allow the cooperative to take advantage of sales opportunities as they arise."

"It will also allow the cooperative to seek out markets and make contracts for future delivery because it will have the grain supplies to back up the contracts."

Clark said the pooling program has been designed to give greater flexibility and efficiency in the handling of members' grain and at the same time leave the pricing decision to the individual producer.

"The producer will have complete freedom in selecting the marketing system that works for him," Clark said.

The staff of the cooperative is now explaining the program to its members in the Castro County area and has scheduled a series of meetings in various areas of the county.

Valley's Freeze Loss Not As Bad As Feared

MALLEN (UPI) — Texas Agriculture Commissioner Reagan Brown said Thursday damage to citrus, vegetables and sugar cane in the Rio Grande Valley's worst freeze in 17 years was extensive, but was "not as bad as we first thought."

Brown discussed the damage with produce officials and then said he planned no embargo on shipments of oranges and grapefruit and would beef up his valley inspection team to assure no freeze-damaged fruit went to market.

Both Brown and citrus growers said it would be a week to 10 days before any accurate assessment of losses could be made. Brown estimated losses in the $45 million citrus and winter vegetable crop could run into "the millions."

He said reports indicated most green crops — including hard hit cabbage and lettuce — were expected to begin growing again within three weeks. Texas produces 25 percent of the nation's winter vegetables, 16 percent of its grapefruit and 3 percent of its oranges.

"A lot of rumors have been flying around concerning the wipe-out of the Texas winter vegetable crop," Brown said. "But winter vegetables can come back even after a hard freeze such as the one we have just experienced. We won't know the full extent of damage for at least 10 days."

He said growers expected a delay in harvest, but little full-scale destruction. He said freeze-damaged fruit would be quickly rushed to juice plants to be salvaged.

"Consumers can buy with confidence," he said. "The fruit that will not stand up to inspection will be juiced."

Mike Wallace, general manager of Texas Citrus Mutual agreed the extent of damage would not be known for a while.

Clements Sees Self, Solons On Same Wavelength

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is another in an advance coverage series on the 44th Legislature, which opens Tuesday. Earlier stories included interviews with Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby and Speaker Bill Clayton in which they gave their views of the 140-day session ahead. Here, Gov.-elect Bill Clements, Texas' first Republican governor in more than a century, presents his perspective.

By GARTH JONES

AUSTIN (AP)—Gov.-elect Bill Clements thinks he's on the same wavelength with most Texas legislators, as he was with Texas voters on Nov. 7.

"I think that most of the legislature understands that most of them were elected by the same people that elected me," Clements says. "They feel a responsibility to be responsive to what I am talking about. There is not one set of voters out there who elected me and another set who elected the legislature. These are one and the same people."

"You would be amazed how many legislators have told me they fully understand that."

Clements, who talks fast and moves fast, does not take office until Jan. 16 in what may be the most elaborate gubernatorial inauguration in decades.

But he has been busy since the general election votes were counted in a 10th-floor office of a downtown office building.

Day after day, and some nights, there has been a constant stream of visitors and job hunters to the small office where the 61-year-old self-made multimillionaire sits behind a bare wooden desk.

Clements' plan for dealing with the predominantly Democratic legislature is simple—follow the aggressive personal contact method that was so successful when he was deputy secretary of Defense in Washington.

"I have met with four groups that constituted more than 100 members of the legislature," he says proudly. "In addition, I have met with a large number of committee chairmen and people like that on a one-on-one basis. I intend to develop these personal relationships with the legislators and be fully sensitive to their needs and their responsibilities to their own constituents. I represent all the people of the state. I'm where this whole process comes together as being the highest elected official statewide and I intend for us to have a legislative program that is responsive to this state."

Clements will make an inaugural address on Jan. 18 and present his proposed state budget about Feb. 1. But there will be no big unloading of his entire program at one time.

"We've got several months before we end up with definite answers to these questions and I'm not going to cut off the process half way through or even before it starts," he said.

The big issues of the session are easy to point out.

"You have to put tax reduction No. 1 and no. 2 undoubtedly is the issue of improving the quality of our education. Between those two there is the school finance problem, a separate issue but a part of both."

Next, Clements says, are our relations with Mexico. He has plans to meet with Mexican President Jose Lopez Portillo, at a date to be announced later, and discuss three subjects that also are of interest to the Texas Legislature.

"Illegal aliens, that's a problem that's got to be solved," he said. "There's not any question whatsoever that Texas has a role to play in this. For us to be in default and abrogate our position is absurd."

Clements favors a return of some form of the old bracero program wherein Mexican workers would be admitted under temporary work permits. "President Lopez Portillo and I are in complete agreement on this," he said. "By Mexico and Texas agreeing to this puts enormous pressure on Washington and puts aside this nonsense of an amnesty program put forth by President Carter."

Another matter to be discussed would be the border drug traffic.

And third would be Mexico's new oil and gas reserves.

"It is absolutely necessary that we now commit to market some reasonable amount of Mexico's gas and oil for our energy requirements in the United States and allow us here in Texas to conserve our national resources in a technical and reasonable basis."

"Talking with Mexico about these three main things would set the tone for what the United States does at the national level," Clements declared.

Clements says he is not only optimistic of his relations with the legislature, but he is not afraid of the strongly entrenched Democrats either.

"I feel strongly that the people of Texas have spoken, they have said what they want in approving the tax relief amendment by 85 percent. And as governor I feel a strong responsibility to see that constitutional amendment is fully implemented, both to the letter and in spirit," he said.

"If the legislature in its wisdom sees fit to do otherwise and violates the will of the people and does not carry it out to the letter and the spirit, I will veto it."

Clements says he pays no attention to speculation the Democratic legislators might pass a state spending bill early so they would have time left to override any gubernatorial veto.

"I'm not afraid of that," Clements says with a smile. "I see no sign of that."

Neither does Clements see any big obstacles from Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, president of the Senate, and House Speaker Bill Clayton.

Hobby has been publicly doubtful of Clements' chance of getting a $1 billion tax reduction.

"The speaker in effect has agreed with me that we must have a tax reduction," Clements said. "Clayton is saying it could be several hundred million dollars. There's going to be a tax reduction. I think it's going to be a tax reduction. Mr. Hobby is going to be. He's going to have a flexibility that people around Austin wouldn't believe."

Clements' enthusiasm and optimism show clearly when he talks about the beginning of his administration.

"There have been no signals that I receive from any place to indicate there are any big problems. Everything is going along very, very well," he says, and chuckles happily.

"In all of these 100-plus members of the Senate and House I have talked with I have found no nonsense nor obstructionist views. I don't find anybody yet who is just taking the voice of opposition in order just to be opposed."

Angry Boy Wounds Mother

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (UPI)—A 12-year-old boy who was disgruntled because his parents placed him on restriction sat with a gun waiting for his mother to return home and fired five shots as she entered the front door, wounding her in the neck.

Police declined to release the name of the boy because of his age. He was booked in Juvenile Hall on an attempted murder charge.

The mother, 46-year-old Louise Gonsalves, whose husband is a state police sergeant, was listed in serious condition at University Medical Center.

A police spokesman said the boy fabricated a story that a man wearing a ski mask and brandishing a knife had forced his way into Mrs. Gonsalves' south Sacramento residence.

But the spokesman said the boy sat with a revolver on a sofa facing the front door and waited for his mother. When she entered, he fired five shots at her, hitting her at least once.

Tax Claim Supercedes Creditors' In Nowlin Case

Unsecured creditors will have to await the outcome of a government tax claim before it can be determined if they will receive any money from the assets of bankrupt cotton broker Vaughan B. Nowlin.

At a final creditors meeting Thursday, trustee Bill Brister reported that revenue of $1,248,818.39 had come from liquidation of assets.

However, Brister said, disbursements from the proceeds amounted to approximately $952,000, with the bulk of that going to pay secured claims.

Brister later estimated that about $220,000 would be left from the money after court costs and other administrative fees are paid.

Whether unsecured creditors receive any of the approximate $220,000 will depend on the outcome of the federal tax claim, which Brister, as trustee, is contesting.

The Internal Revenue Service claim against Nowlin and his wife is for approximately $1,159,000.

Federal bankruptcy referee Frank R. Murray recessed Thursday's hearing until 10 a.m. Feb. 12, and the tax claim will be heard at that time.

Nowlin was sentenced to one year in prison in early 1978 after pleading guilty to a federal charge of failing to pay taxes withheld from wages of his employees at Vaughan B. Nowlin Cotton Co. for the first quarter of 1976. He recently was released from confinement on that charge.

A state district court jury in 1977 had assessed Nowlin a five-year term after finding him guilty of felony theft by check. That case was appealed.

A Vernon native, Nowlin headed a Childress cotton company that at its peak handled between $40 million and $50 million worth of cotton a year.

Problems Abound For New Legislature

By BILL KIDD
A-J Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Trying to describe the issues that will be facing the 66th Legislature when it convenes Tuesday is like trying to describe the contents of the Encyclopedia Britannica.

There's just no easy way to wrap it up neatly and quickly.

Many of the issues are repeats from prior years, with public school education and tax reduction/reform — those hardy, perennial, thorny controversies — close to the top of the list.

Bills to reduce taxes may be the legislative equivalent of "Star Wars" toys this year, but there appears to be some variation in the approaches being taken.

Some members are proposing reduction in the state sales tax; others are looking at the possibility of a refinery tax to reduce dependence on property taxes for local funding of public schools.

Yet others have constitutional amendments to fix state spending at a particular percentage of the Texas economy (or by tying it to some other indicator); there also are proposals for initiative, referendum and recall.

Another possibility, which has been prefiled, is a local option county sales tax — which could be used to reduce property taxes.

Besides the question of additional state funding for public education, there will be proposals to raise teachers' salaries, and for student and teacher competency testing.

Law and order remains a major topic, ranging from wiretapping measures through construction of new prison facilities (in West Texas or elsewhere) through proposals to abolish the death penalty (or at least to place a moratorium on executions while the matter is studied again).

How to go about providing assessment of agricultural land on productivity, as voters approved doing in November, has to be solved — and may not be at all easy or simple. (And school districts have to be paid back for funds lost by implementing that "tax relief amendment.")

Writing the general appropriations bill — which will be in the range of $18 billion more — will be a major chore, as always.

Energy will be a concern — with proposals on solar power likely, as well as taxing oil and gas going out of Texas; development of lignite; and production of fuel from agricultural products — the so-called "agrohol" or "gasohol" approach.

Environment matters will come in for attention — at least as regards such items as disposal of nuclear wastes in Texas (which no one seems to favor); how to protect the Edwards Aquifer from pollution; and the state's feud (through the Air Control Board) with the Environmental Protection Agency on implementing new air pollution restrictions in Texas — restrictions which several groups and legislators have argued would result in a "no growth" policy being put into effect on Texas industry.

Whether to have a presidential preference primary — and the rules for conducting it if it's held — should provide some interest, and there are other changes in the election laws which are anticipated, including proposals for "party purity" and an overhaul of the primary system.

"Right to work" is being proposed as a constitutional amendment — and that's an issue which always produces lively debate.

Other constitutional amendments already proposed include prohibiting a state income tax and providing loans for students to attend medical schools outside the U.S.

Creation of water districts to receive water imported from outside the state, compensation for victims of crime and allowing removal of problem students from schools also are due to be considered.

In fact, it seems that almost nothing, from the seemingly monumental to the apparently trivial will be neglected.

Consider that there already are bills produced to do the following:

- Restore the requirement that motorcycle riders wear helmets.
- Put warning labels on alcoholic beverages.
- Set minimum jail standards.
- Require identification for horses.
- Make it a misdemeanor to knowingly hire an illegal alien.
- Reorganize state government.
- Limit the number of "standees" on school buses.
- Create a "Martin Luther King Day."
- Extend the jurisdiction of the courts appeals to criminal matters.
- Require service stations to provide air and water.
- Create various law and medical schools.
- Put a student on the University of Texas Board of Regents.
- Regulate smoking in grocery stores, retail establishments and nursing homes.
- Require that alcoholism be treated under all accident and health insurance policies.
- Allow collective bargaining for farm workers.

— Protect golden and Mexican eagles.

— Ratify the constitutional amendment giving Washington, D.C., two senators.

— Create an Advisory Committee on Minority Performance on Professional Examinations, a Racial and Ethnic Goodwill Commission, and a Racial and Ethnic Historical Contributions Commission.

Then there are proposals on landlord-tenant relationships, non-partisan election of judges, duties of paralegals, serial numbers on outboard motors ... and there will be proposals on collective bargaining for public employees, products liability and hunting and fishing seasons in various counties.

It has long been marked that the only two inevitable items in life are death and taxes.

And it's fitting to note that the Texas Legislature does deal with both those.

In addition to the taxes, already mentioned, there is a bill providing a legal definition of death.

With over 4,000 measures expected to be filed before the session ends May 28, almost anything (whether found in an encyclopedia or not) might come for consideration.

The Speaker Reports...

By Bill Clayton

AUSTIN — The months since the last session have been used by various committees to prepare reports and recommendations for use by the 66th Legislature. Some of the most important studies have been done concerning public school education in the state.

The Legislative Commission on Public School Finance, formed during the last session, will submit recommendations as to how best to distribute state-aid to schools. No doubt, recommendations will address whether to include intangible wealth as a variable in school finance formulas and how to deal with the exemptions of certain amounts on residential homesteads.

A joint committee of the House and Senate investigating special education also will present recommendations as to how best to deliver special services to handicapped children. Funding patterns, as well as programmatic concerns, will be addressed by this group.

The Texas Education Agency staff was directed by the last legislature to study transportation funding. With increased energy prices, the operation of buses by the schools has become quite costly. Current formulas simply do not take density factors into account. The recommendations that result from this study could result in an improvement in this aspect of school finance.

The House Education Committee also has worked diligently to provide information. In the recently submitted interim committee report, many significant recommendations were made. One dealt with curriculum reform. The committee recommended that there be an effort on the part of the state to redirect education toward more fundamental skill training. A description of a plan which divides curriculum into work skills, basic skills and discretionary courses was endorsed by the committee as a viable way to promote quality education.

An important issue considered by the committee concerns minimum competency testing for students in our public schools. There has been increasing concern throughout the nation that students are graduating from school without adequate skills. Bills are being developed to insure that such basic skills as reading, writing and mathematics are emphasized in the schools and tests are given to determine grade promotion.

Because of the hard work that went into developing these reports, the legislature will be better able to address the problems which will arise during the session.

Thoroughly considered and reasonable decisions will be made, and the committees and other groups are to be commended on their contributions to the legislative process.

YOUR PERSONAL BIORHYTHMS

By Bernard Gittelson, Author of "Biorhythm: A Personal Science"

The personal science of biorhythm can tell you how your day will go. Now you can judge the highs and lows of not only yourself, but loved ones and friends, and celebrities and stars. Biorhythm, our newest scientific discipline, is the study of the built-in natural cycles that powerfully influence our behavior.

Enter your own permanent numbers in the chart in the bottom right-hand corner. To figure your own permanent numbers, follow these three steps:

Step 1: From the year chart, find the numbers corresponding to your year of birth. For instance, if you were born in 1947, your number for Physical would be 21, Emotional 17, Intellectual 19. Note whether your numbers are preceded by an A or B; this will be used for Step 2.

Step 3: In the figure chart, enter your day of birth three times, one each for Physical (P), Emotional (E) and Intellectual (I). (If you were born on April 3, for instance, place a 3 in each column.)

Add the three columns to derive your permanent biorhythm numbers for your Physical, Emotional and Intellectual cycles. Now you can refer to today's rhythms.

Grain Firm Sold To Frito-Lay

A-J Correspondent

HEREFORD — Frito-Lay Inc. has acquired the facilities of Grain Handling Co., a prominent food corn handling operation in the local area.

Walter Cleverger of Hereford, a co-owner of Grain Handling, confirmed that the Dallas-based firm had taken over Grain Handling facilities as of Jan. 1.

"Frito-Lay will operate Grain Handling's facility," Garland DePrang and Larry Garvin (both of Olton) and I will retain possession of a feed mill in Olton," he said.

"I would rather not comment on any details of the settlement at this time," Cleverger added. "Frito-Lay should begin contracting with area farmers for food corn production right away."

The Frito-Lay takeover will involve GNC facilities in Hereford, Hart, Hart Camp, Olton and Springlake, according to Cleverger.

The announcement draws to a close a series of incidents which had created serious doubts about the future of food corn production contracts over wide areas of the Panhandle and South Plains. Frito-Lay and Grain Handling have been entangled in several law suits since October, when Frito-Lay claimed it was the victim of an $18 million fraud.

Grain Handling filed a $45 million civil suit against Frito-Lay alleging breach of contract, and claiming that the company had no right to repudiate an agreement to purchase four crop years of corn beginning in 1979.

A special hearing by the Texas House Agriculture Committee dealing with the concern over the lack of foodcorn production contracts for 1979 was held here in December, at which time farmers testified on the importance of the contracts and the role GNC has played in the area economy.

During the hearing, House Speaker Bill Clayton announced that Frito-Lay and GNC had reached a tentative agreement which would allow corn contracts to be offered to farmers on an individual basis after Jan. 1.

The takeover announcement comes just weeks prior to initial hearings on the lawsuits, which were to begin Jan. 29. All lawsuits evidently will be dropped because of the agreement.

Whittenburg Replaces Mason As Golf Coach

Texas Tech athletic director Dick Tamburo Thursday announced that Danny Mason has resigned as golf coach in order to further his career as a full time associate professor in the university's physical education department.

Tamburo immediately named Richard Whittenburg, the pro at the Hillcrest Country Club, to succeed Mason for the 1979 season. Whittenburg's appointment is effective immediately.

"We are sorry to lose a coach of Danny's quality, but at the same time we are extremely happy that Richard Whittenburg has agreed to coach our golf team," said Tamburo.

"He is an enthusiastic young man who has an excellent reputation as both a golfer and a golf instructor," added Tamburo.

Whittenburg's first job as a head pro was at the Woodlawn Country Club in San Antonio, where he worked for four years before taking the pro job at Hillcrest when Frank Baker retired in October of 1976.

"I'm excited about being a part of the Texas Tech golf team and working with the athletic department," said Whittenburg, who will continue to serve in his present position at Hillcrest.

"There is no reason that Tech can't develop a program that just might be able to sneak up on some people," he said.

WHEN TIME AND space run short... For those who have complained loudly and often about not getting in to view Tech basketball games, Saturday provides an opportunity to put cash behind the grips. A healthy group of one-time ticket purchasers could make an impression on Tech officials and possibly move them to alter — or at least consider altering — the season-ticket plan which has been in effect since the Coliseum was built and which provides money but not too many fans... Texas Commerce Bank continues to receive donations for the family of Tech footballer Michael Morris, who died last week after sustaining a pair of heart attacks during nonfootball-related surgery. The Michael Morris Medical Fund had more than $2,700 in donations Thursday...

Reckon it was apropos to have Lindsay Nelson, the Notre Dame play-by-play man, and Paul Hornung, an Irish alum, as announcers for the ND-Houston game on TV from Dallas? The networks are letting themselves in for criticism for such scheduling — in football or basketball — with their assignments, even if there is no bias...

IT'S AN ALL-star lineup Midland folks have assembled for the Midland Sports Banquet on Feb. 7, and starting the list is old New York Yankees hurler Lefty Gomez. The Hall of Famer will be featured speaker for the occasion. Also expected to be on hand will be Lubbockite Bobby Layne, race drivers Al Unser, Jim Hall and Bobby Hillin, and representatives of the Chicago Cubs (Midland Cubs parent group), Astros and Texas Rangers. The Midland Cubs are handling ticket sales... While playing at Tech, Larry Wood was known for his set shots, so when he hit from midcourt last week in a gimmick "game" at the Sul Bowl Tourney and earned $400 for Tech's general scholarship fund, he handled the entire matter with aplomb. He missed the first effort short by a good 4 feet. Then he crashed the second off the backboard and through the hoop. "I always use the glass on my half-court shots," he remarked afterwards, as he headed back to his law office...

Think a few yarns about professional life won't be unneeded this winter? Alfred Jackson (Atlanta Falcons), Raymond Clayborn (New England), and Earl Campbell are supposed to return to UT and enroll for the second semester — and share a pad... Hill spoke on Wednesday of last week, two days before the Gator Bowl and the incident which led to Woody Hayes' firing...

ONE REPORT HAS Aggie fullback George Woodard ballooning up to a hefty 303 pounds after missing the past season with a broken leg. Here's one view that, if the report is true, Tom Wilson won't take much of a look at him for playing time... It was an omen. In the fourth quarter, with Houston still leading 34-12, the Notre Dame cheering section wasn't too cheery. And right in the middle was the family of the Huffman brothers, starters for the Irish and from Dallas. Finally, from the sidelines, center Dave looked up in the stands and hollered, "Don't look so glum; it's not over yet." His mother broke into a big smile and blew him a kiss. A short time later, the Irish made their move...

Carver, in two games, averaged 23 points, hit 19 of 36 from the field and eight of ten from the line, grabbed seven rebounds, had four steals and handed out 11 assists. His 36.7 percentage is best among TAC free-throw shooters, too...

Williams, Tech Await Texas

By DON HENRY
Executive Sports Editor

Gerald Myers was getting worried. Here were the Sun Bowl Tournament officials reading off the names of the all-tournament team.

They announced Raiders Geoff Huston and Ben Hill, went to Michigan's Alan Hardy, and on down the list.

"We thought they had left off Kent Williams," Myers recalled, "and we knew he had a great tournament. Then, they announced he was the most valuable player."

That calmed Myers' fears, even took a bit of the sting out of the 1-point loss to Clemson in the championship. But, for Williams, it was nothing new for the season. He had been named co-MVP in the Birmingham Classic two weeks earlier, a tournament the Raiders did win.

And now, after completion of the non-conference season, one of Tech's best starts ever, Williams is ready for Texas, the Saturday foe in Lubbock Coliseum.

"Yes sir," Williams commented Thursday. "We're feeling pretty good now. We're coming off two good games, even though we lost one. We have the confidence now that we can play without anybody in the country."

"We're really fired up for it (the Texas game); we know we can beat Texas."

"This is the best (conference) schedule. We start off with a really tough one at home with a chance to knock off the favorite, then play TCU (Monday at Fort Worth), then play Baylor at home (next Thursday) and they're one of the top teams."

Williams, the 6-5 junior from Hobbs, is the Raiders' leading scorer, hitting 15.2 points a game. He has increased his average by hitting for 37 in the two El Paso games.

The scoring this year is only 2 points a game better than last year's final figure, but the other areas of the game are what please him.

"Last year was a lot different. The thing that I did was take some of the (scoring) slack from (Mike) Russell, and we had Geoff (Huston) and Mike Edwards to lead our defense."

"But, this year, I think I'm playing better team and individual defense, reading the offense, getting out on the break, getting the ball to others. It's the extra year of experience, I think, that makes the difference."

Williams is working with a comparatively young team, and "the youngsters — the freshmen and sophomores — they're really getting used to the offense and learning the defense now. At El Paso, I can remember numerous times that Jeff (Taylor) and David (Little, both freshmen) and (Ralph) Brewster and Ralph McPherson (both sophomores) came up with defensive plays.

"And these plays really help a lot. I know that if my man beats me, that somebody is behind me to pick him up."

In addition to leading the team in scoring, Williams heads the list in steals (11) and assists (35).

Also, he has been on the floor for more playing time than any other Raider.

Madden Ends Coaching Career

OAKLAND (AP) — John Madden retired as coach of the Oakland Raiders Thursday and said, "I'm never going to coach again."

His decision was made, Madden said at a news conference, partly because of an ulcer condition.

But, he added, "I gave it everything I had, and it's basically that simple — I don't have it anymore."

There was no immediate announcement of a successor to the 42-year-old Madden, who compiled one of the best coaching records in National Football League history, 103-32-7, over his 10 seasons with the Raiders.

Madden's eyes filled with tears as he spoke Thursday and he said at one point, "Things like this are easy to talk about and hard to do."

Al Davis, managing general partner of the Raiders, said the team called the news conference "with a touch of sorrow but also with great respect for a job well done, perhaps one of the best in the history of football."

News that Madden would leave the coaching post broke earlier in the day. There also was a report that the Raiders had traded quarterback Ken Stabler to Baltimore for the Colts' Bert Jones, but Davis said the story was "totally unfounded."

Madden stated emphatically that he had no thoughts of moving to another NFL team.

"I'm an Oakland Raider. I started with them when I was young and I will always be an Oakland Raider," he said. "I can't understand people going from one place to another."

Madden served two years as an assistant coach with the team, then an American Football League franchise, before Davis appointed him head coach 10 years ago.

This past season he became the 13th coach in pro football history to reach 100 victories and his winning percentage of .763 is the highest in the 100-victory club.

Davis indicated there would be no decision on a successor to Madden until "I think about it for a week to 10 days," and

Staubach Eyes Passing Marks

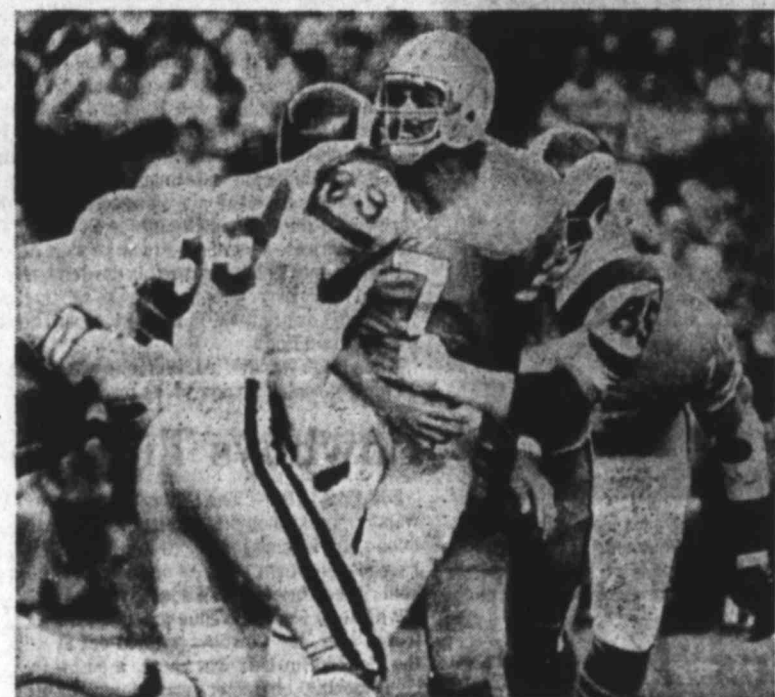

DALLAS (UPI) — If Roger Staubach does not land on his head again and has a reasonably decent day against the Los Angeles Rams in the NFC championship game Sunday he will come out of the contest the most prolific post-season passer in the history of the National Football League.

And all the experience he has accumulated in reaching this stage of his career could play a key role in the Super Bowl semifinals.

Although the Dallas Cowboys struggled through the early part of the year and had to rely on a late-season fold by the Washington Redskins to make things easy at the end of the campaign, their quarterback quietly went about having an excellent year.

For the second time in his career, Staubach led the NFL in passing, edging Pittsburgh's Terry Bradshaw.

But that was not all he did. With his 55.9 percent completion rate, his 7.72 yards per attempt average and his 25 See STAUBACH Page 4

Dante Looks For Burrough

HOUSTON (AP) — The Houston Oilers' primary offensive weapon of the past, the lights-out bomb from Dan Pastorini to Ken Burrough, has returned to the Oilers repertoire as they prepare for Sunday's American Football Conference championship game against Pittsburgh.

Once the trademark of the Houston Oilers offense, the bomb was put into mothballs by the emergence of rookie Earl Campbell as the leading rusher in the National Football League.

A conflict in philosophies between Pastorini and former offensive coordinator Ken Shipp also kept the long pass in the background while Campbell continued to keep the Oilers moving on the ground.

But as the Oilers went into the playoffs for the first time in nine years, the bomb suddenly showed up against Miami and New England and Burrough says it's just a matter of getting the rust off.

"People always thought the bomb was automatic with Dan and me," Burrough said. "It wasn't. It worked because we practiced it every day in practice. But we See DEEP THREAT Page 4

Greene Compliments Campbell

PITTSBURGH (UPI) — Joe Greene, the Pittsburgh Steelers' All-Pro defensive tackle, isn't antagonizing anyone this week. Not until Sunday, anyway.

Before last week's AFC semifinal playoff against Denver, the Broncos objected to several statements made by Greene that Denver had not seen such intensity as the Steelers would display during the game.

Greene turned out to be right, as the charged-up Steelers rolled to a 33-10 victory over the Broncos, but this week he's taken a more subdued position about the Houston Oilers, Pittsburgh's opponent Sunday for the AFC title and a berth in Super Bowl XIII Jan. 21 in Miami.

Greene was particularly flattering to Houston's rookie running sensation, Earl Campbell, even comparing him to Cleveland great Jim Brown.

"I never played against Jim Brown," said Greene, "but he was always one of my favorites and I enjoyed watching him. But if Jim Brown was better than this guy, I wouldn't want to be around."

"We watched films of him before we played him the first time this year and we just thought there was a lot of sloppy tackling, that guys were missing him. But when we played and the smoke cleared, he had three touchdowns and over 100 yards and I was a believer."

Greene feels that Campbell, the AFC Player and Rookie of the Year and the NFL's leading rushing, already ranks among the league's top two or three running backs.

"He is just a super running back," said Greene. "He has strength, quickness, the ability to break tackles and above all, a tremendous determination. I'd say he's already in the same class as O.J. Simpson among the great running backs in this league."

"In some instances, he may be even better than O.J. in that he can run right over you if he has to."

Greene also warns that despite all the talk about Campbell, Houston is far from a one-man team.

"Campbell has added a new dimension for the Oilers," said Greene, "but they still have some very dangerous weapons. Dan (Pastorini) is a good quarterback — he always has been — and now he's just getting the tools that a lot of other quarterbacks have — a running game. Their running game didn't command a lot of respect before — you could concentrate on stopping Dan in the air — but now Campbell makes it all the more dangerous.

"And as long as I can remember, they have played good, physical intimidating defense."

Greene says the Steeler defense will not prepare any differently for Campbell but added that his presence makes a defender play much more carefully.

"You can't be over-aggressive with a guy like Campbell around because he can pop one on you in one play and take it all the way," said Greene. "You can get a little reckless with some backs because you know even if they break one, they're not going to go all the way and you get another chance to stop them. You don't get a second chance if you're caught out of position with Earl Campbell."

"We won't prepare any differently than we did the week before against Denver and they didn't have a super running back like Campbell. We all have to realize that we can't be too aggressive with this guy but at the same time we have to realize that one man can't bring him down alone and that we have to help each other."

Jack Ham, considered by many to be the finest outside linebacker in the league, agrees with Greene that gang-tackling is the answer.

"We have to play good position defense the way we have all year," said Ham, "and most of all, we have to gang-tackle. We've played him twice this year and we know no one guy is going to bring Earl Campbell down alone. He has that tremendous leg strength that can turn a two-yard gain into a 10-yard gain."

"I think Houston changed its philosophy from past years. They used to be a big play team, with Pastorini just trying to outthrow everybody. But now they can attack you in different ways. I guess if you have a guy like Earl Campbell, you use him just the way we use Franco (Harris) to carry 20-25 times a game. Dan was always a good quarterback with a running game now, he can show what he can do."

The Oilers were scheduled to arrive in Pittsburgh Friday night and work out at Three Rivers Stadium Saturday morning. Temperatures in Pittsburgh were in the teens on Thursday and were expected to drop to zero Thursday night.

Pugh Gets Rich Via Playoffs

DALLAS (AP) — Figure it up yourself.

Twenty-three National Football League playoff games at a conservative $5,000 each is over $100,000.

That's what Dallas Cowboys defensive tackle Jethro Pugh has earned in the pressure-cooker playoffs where each play is magnified a thousand times.

Pugh, who has been bothered by a twisted knee, will run his record string of NFL playoff games to 24 Sunday if he sees duty against the Los Angeles Rams in the National Conference title game.

The NFL playoffs have been both cruel and kind to Pugh, a 14-year veteran out of tiny Elizabeth City State who was drafted in the 11th round in 1965.

Recall, it was Pugh who was the victim of Jerry Kramer's classic book on Bart Starr's quarterback sneak that gave Green Bay the NFL title in the 1967 "Ice Bowl" game.

Not only did Pugh have to live with constant replays of the last-second touchdown, but to this day he suffers from extreme cold because of frostbite from the sub-zero temperatures.

Pugh has been in four Super Bowl games and has two championship rings. His string does not include two Playoff Bowls where the semifinal losers met in the NFL playoffs before the merger with the old American Football League.

"Somebody on this team will break my streak," said Pugh. "Both (safeties) Cliff Harris and Charlie Waters have been in 17."

Ironically, Pugh has never been to a Pro Bowl or named All-Pro. In his salad days of the 1960s and early 1970s, Pugh was always overlooked because of Dallas' other tackle, Bob Lilly. After Lilly retired, along came Harvey Martin at end and Randy White at tackle to take the spotlight.

"I'd rather have the playoff record," said the quiet-spoken Pugh, who is the sole survivor of the original Dooomsday Defense. "Do you realize had bad it is to be on a loser? There are a lot of All-Pro's who were never in the Super Bowl."

Pugh is only 34 but has been bedeviled lately by a back injury and more recently the twisted knee. Larry Cole has won the starting spot away from Pugh.

"I wasn't aware I was in the NFL record book until someone mentioned it in the off-season," said Pugh.

When Pugh was drafted, everyone was asking "what's a Jethro Pugh?" They can look it up now in the record book.

The Cowboys have been watchful of practices since the George Allen years when they claimed he had spies out and about.

Dallas leaves at 7 p.m. Friday to fly to Los Angeles for Sunday's National Football Conference title game.

Wooten added, "I'd rather work out at the Cotton Bowl than our practice field anyway. There are some apartments overlooking the practice field and that can drive you crazy."

The Cowboys kept secret until the very last minute details of their workout schedule.

Bryant Shows Value As 'Backup' Runner

LOS ANGELES (AP) — At the start of this National Football League season, no one would have guessed that Cullen Bryant would be starting the Los Angeles Rams' NFC championship game — including the running back himself.

"I came to camp knowing Lawrence McCutcheon had set a club rushing record last year, that Wendell Tyler had a lot of speed and the club had drafted Elvis Peacock on the first round," said the 235-pound Bryant.

"I knew I had to come in with the proper attitude, and that I did."

Peacock was injured in the preseason and Tyler also was hurt with both going on the injured reserve list.

McCutcheon was hurt twice, missing the first five games of the regular season and now he also is out for the season. So Bryant, a University of Colorado product, had his chance and made the most of it.

Bryant heard the criticism and now says, "When you know in your heart that you are competitive, it doesn't bother much. Besides, I had my family and friends behind me. I always knew I had courage and I think the players knew it when I got here."

Bryant was used primarily as a kickoff and punt return man until 1975 when he got a shot at running back and gained 467 yards on 117 carries. But he carried only a total of 27 times in the next two seasons.

When McCutcheon suffered a thigh injury this preseason, the coaches went to Bryant because of his experience. He came through with 658 yards rushing in 178 regular season carries.

PLAINVIEW (Special)—Beginning with a barbecue dinner at 5 tonight, the inaugural Wayland Pioneer Classic will begin its history.

The tournament will mark the first men's college basketball tournament to be held here since before Wayland Baptist College arrived in the city.

A pair of Texas teams and a New Mexico school will join the host WBC Pioneers in the four-game meet, which WBC officials hope will become an outstanding mid-season affair for the area.

The tourney's opening game will pit the College of Santa Fe against Sul Ross State at 6:30 p.m. today. WBC and St. Edward's University will do battle following that match, about 8:30 p.m.

Saturday's consolation game will begin at 6:30 p.m., and the tourney title will be decided at 8:30. Tickets for all four games—as well as tonight's barbecue dinner—are available at the door at the Hutcherson Gym on the Wayland campus, site of the meet, for $6.50 (adults) and $3.50 (students).

Wrestling Stated

A 12 man, $5,000 "Over the Rope Battle Royal" will highlight the wrestling action at the Fair Park Coliseum tonight. To be eliminated a man must be thrown over the top rope and the last man in the ring gets the cash.

In other matches, that begin at 8 p.m., Dick Murdoch will face Mr. Pogo, Akio Sato tangles with Larry Lane and Alex Perez fights Rip Hawk.

In tag team action Moose Morowsky and Ricky Romero go against the team of Dennis Stamp and Ralamayas.

Dimmitt Coach Resigns

DIMMITT (Special)—Jerry Vance, the head football coach at Dimmitt High School for the past two seasons, has resigned to enter private business. Vance's resignation is effective Jan. 12.

Interested persons seeking the position should contact either Dimmitt School Superintendent Robert Ryan (647-3101) or Athletic Director Kenneth Cleveland (647-3151).

Texas Ducats Remain

More than 900 tickets for Saturday afternoon's Texas Tech-Texas Southwest Conference basketball contest have been sold, and the sales will continue today.

Carol Baker, Tech ticket manager, said Thursday that about 250 tickets remain on sale for the game. There are some $4 tickets, but most are priced at $3.50, Mrs. Baker reported.

Tickets will be on sale at the ticket office in the south building at Jones Stadium today from 9 a.m. until 5 p.m. Saturday, the ticket windows on the east side of Lubbock Coliseum will open at 11:30 a.m.

The game, Tech's first of the SWC season, will begin at 12:40 p.m.

Tickets are available since the students are away from the campus for the semester-Christmas break.

Mustangs Leave Cotton Bowl

DALLAS (UPI)—Southern Methodist University's president, athletic director and football coach announced Thursday their school was abandoning the Cotton Bowl—the Mustangs' football home for the past 30 years—and would move all future home games to Texas Stadium.

"It was not an easy decision," said SMU President Dr. James H. Zumbege. "We are cutting off a great relationship with the Cotton Bowl. It's like leaving a home you have lived in for 30 years."

"But emotions have to be laid aside making a judgment on what is best for SMU."

SMU will play five games in Texas Stadium next season, the first one being against the Rice Owls Sept. 8. In addition, SMU will meet North Texas State, Baylor, Texas and Texas Tech in the 65,000-seat facility which also serves as the home of the Dallas Cowboys.

The Mustangs experimented with playing non-conference games at Texas Stadium in 1972 and 1973, but then returned to the Cotton Bowl fulltime.

"This is a cornerstone, a turning point in the SMU football program," said SMU football coach Ron Meyer, whose team posted a 4-4-1 record last season and whose quarterback, Mike Ford, was the nation's total offense leader.

"On the one hand you have the nostalgia and the tradition associated with the Cotton Bowl and I appreciate that. But you have to do what is best for SMU."

"I think the access of such a modern facility as Texas Stadium overshadows the tradition we have established at the Cotton Bowl."

Zumbege said the move was made chiefly to protect the fiscal stability of the football program. SMU expects to draw larger crowds at Texas Stadium because of easier access, better parking facilities and far more creature comforts than are provided at the Cotton Bowl.

Meyer said he felt the stadium also would be far more attractive as a recruiting tool than the older stadium.

"We had to look at the bottom line," said Zumbege. "We depend on the football program to support the rest of the athletic program."

Two years ago with an attractive home schedule, SMU sold only 2,800 season tickets, a figure that was boosted to 5,500 last year.

With SMU leaving the Cotton Bowl, the stadium will be left with only two college games a year—the annual Texas-Oklahoma contest played on the opening weekend of the Texas State Fair in October and the Cotton Bowl Classic played on New Year's Day.

Lou Saban Selected As Army Grid Coach

CORAL GABLES, Fla. (AP)—Lou Saban, who seemed on the verge of staging a remarkable resurrection of University of Miami football, has resigned to take over the Army head-coaching job at West Point, officials said here Thursday.

Dr. John L. Green, University of Miami executive vice president, confirmed that Saban had resigned. A formal announcement was expected later at the U.S. Military Academy.

Saban's hiring was announced by Lieut. Gen. Andrew J. Goodpaster, academy superintendent, shortly after Dr. John L. Green, University of Miami executive vice president, confirmed that Saban had resigned.

An Army spokesman said that Saban would be introduced a news conference in New York today.

"Lou Saban brings to West Point ingredients needed to build a strong football program," said Raymond P. Murphy, Army's director of intercollegiate athletics.

Under Saban, Miami had 3-8 and 6-5 records the past two seasons.

Saban becomes the 28th head coach in Army's history.

Green said Saban informed him Wednesday morning that he planned to go to West Point, N.Y., to discuss the job at Army. Homer Smith was fired from the West Point coaching post last month.

Saban, who has coached professionally at Denver, Boston and Buffalo and at five universities, took over a floundering Miami program in December 1976. Miami teams had won only five games in the previous two years, and Saban had a rugged first year, finishing 3-8 on one of the country's toughest schedules—one that included Ohio State, Penn State, Alabama and Notre Dame.

But in the offseason, Saban directed a highly successful recruiting program, and in 1978, the Hurricanes finished 6-5. It was their first winning season since 1974, and included a season-ending 22-21 victory over archrival Florida.

Green said he bore no resentment toward Saban, whom he praised as having done a "remarkable job."

"The things he's been able to accomplish in two years, I think few men would have been able to accomplish," Green said.

Local Cagers Compete

Before Dunbar coach Joe McWilliams could verify it, Panther postman Raphael Scott had proved that Dunbar had been effected by the holiday layoff.

Scott, during a practice drill, dribbled along the baseline until he approached the basket. There Scott changed his direction as he headed into the lane and attempted a short jump shot. Scott missed the hoop by a wide margin.

"Yes, the layoff has hurt us," said Dunbar coach McWilliams. "The game tonight should be a challenge to our team."

Tonight, the Panthers will host the Morton Indians in a non-district game. Tipoff is slated for 8 p.m.

Other games will have Coronado hosting Amarillo Palo Duro, Lubbock High will entertain Amarillo Tascosa, Monterey will visit Amarillo High, the Christ the King boys and girls teams will host Muenster Sacred Heart, while the Lubbock Christian boys and girls teams host Idaho.

Other girls games have Amarillo High at Monterey, Coronado girls at Amarillo Palo Duro, Dunbar at Morton, and Lubbock High at Amarillo Tascosa.

And though Morton has lost some of its key players, McWilliams doesn't feel the Indians will be handicapped against the Panthers.

Phillips, Noll Share Respect

PITTSBURGH (AP) — With hard hits and groans they've broken some bones, but name-calling has never hurt the spirit of friendly ferocity between the Pittsburgh Steelers and Houston Oilers.

Indeed, the foes in Sunday's American Football Conference championship have remained chivalrous through nearly a decade of roughhouse rivalry in the AFC Central Division.

"There's a kind of an admiration between the two teams and the two cities," said Oiler coach "Bum" Phillips, who's even received some friendly mail from Steeler fans.

"You enjoy playing a team like Houston," said Steeler coach Chuck Noll. "It's football, purely good, hard football. Everything is settled right there on the field, and it makes it a very pleasant thing."

Pleasantries aside, there was a 1977 game in Houston in which Terry Bradshaw sustained a wrist fracture, backup quarterback Mike Kruczek had his shoulder separated, and defensive back Tony Dunny wound up quarterbacking Pittsburgh in defeat.

Oiler quarterback Dan Pastorini, knocked from that 1977 game with a badly sprained ankle, took another pounding when the two teams met again last month in Houston.

Pastorini sustained three cracked ribs. Earl Campbell cracked one rib. And Houston also lost rookie wide receiver Mike Renfro for the season with a knee injury.

"After a game, you usually go in and look at your players who are hurt," said Phillips. "After you play Pittsburgh, you go in and count casualties."

Phillips called that last Oilers-Steelers game the "most physical I've seen in 31 years of coaching." Houston trainer Jerry Meins called it "World War III."

Yet just as in past encounters, there were no punches, angry words, or cheapshots.

"I think that's a tribute to the Pittsburgh organization and their coaching staff, as well as their players," said Phillips.

The teams split this season, the Oilers winning here and Pittsburgh winning in Houston. Overall, Pittsburgh has a 13-5 series edge.

"We had physical games with Houston even when they weren't as good as they are now, when they were lacking in some personnel," said Steeler running back "Rocky" Bleier. "This game won't be any different."

Joe Greene echoed that.

"Houston played hell out of us even when they didn't have a good record," said Greene. "We play hard football and dare the other team to do the same thing. The Oilers always accept the dare."

After that last Houston-Pittsburgh game, Greene correctly predicted the Oilers would win a wild-card playoff berth and meet division-champion Pittsburgh again for the AFC title.

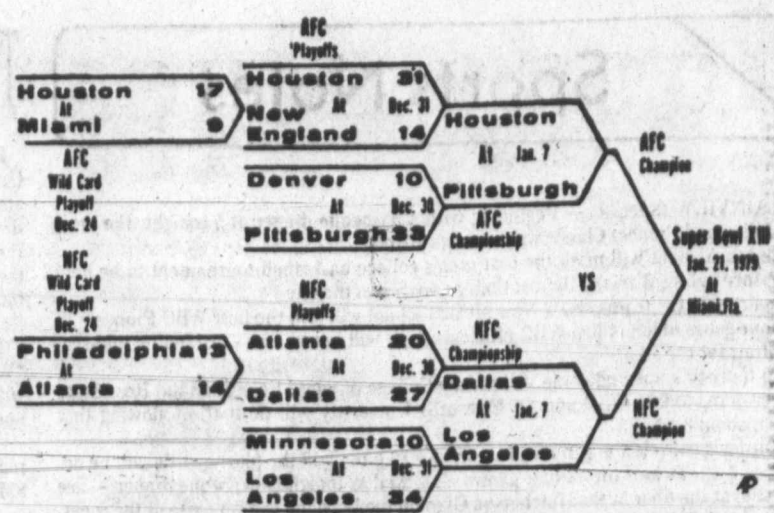

"Yeah, I was rooting for them," said Greene. "Not because we wanted to play them. It was just something natural."

Joe Greene feeling naturally nice?

Perhaps just as unique, Steeler fans have been sending Houston some friendly mail. It's a carryover from last season when Houston's win over Cincinnati put Pittsburgh in the playoffs, a favor for which the Steelers sent each Oiler player and coach an attaché case as a Christmas gift.

"I've gotten some real nice letters from their fans," said Phillips.

"They said they were hoping we'd get into the playoffs and play them a third time. They're gonna' root for Pittsburgh, but they wanted us to know they were pulling for us to get there."

Staubach Eyes Passing Marks

touchdowns, Staubach ended the season as the No. 1 active passer in the league.

During the season he passed Minnesota's Fran Tarkenton, Oakland's Ken Stabler and Cincinnati's Ken Anderson on the all-time passing chart — a complicated form used by the NFL which, when figured, gives the passer a numerical rating.

Staubach now stands third on the all-time list behind the now retired Sonny Jurgensen and Len Dawson. And with a few more excellent years Staubach stands a chance to surpass them as well.

"I think Roger's experience level gives him an advantage (in the quarterback department)," said Dallas coach Tom Landry. "But we have a lot of players with lots of experience who have played well in big games."

"If they come up to their level, especially on offense where we have Roger and Drew (Pearson) and others, it will be a big help. Whether it will be enough of an advantage, I don't know."

Staubach's post-season winless record stands at 10-4. That includes the 1972 playoff victory over San Francisco in which Staubach came off the bench in the second half to replace Craig Morton and rally the Cowboys to a last-minute victory.

It does not include last week's 27-20 win over Atlanta, in which Danny White had to be called on after Staubach suffered a concussion.

But before he left the game, Staubach moved past Stabler in the number of passes thrown in post-season games — 333 for Staubach and 325 for Stabler.

Staubach is four completions short of Stabler's post-season record in that department, 184 to 188, and he needs 112 yards to move past Stabler's post-season record in passing yardage — 2,398. His next touchdown pass will also tie the NFL post-season career mark held by Daryle Lamonica and Stabler.

Deep Threat Burrough Ready

got away from that this year and, for that reason, we were having a hard time getting together.

"We stopped going deep and people stopped respecting our ability to go deep."

That respect likely has returned now since Pastorini and Burrough hooked up for a 53-yard play against Miami and a 71-yard score last week against Eastern Conference champion New England.

The 71-yarder made Burrough realize that the bomb is really back. It also helped his career touchdown mark, a devastating average of 56 yards for 34 touchdown catches during his career.

"That catch was a long time coming, too long, and it broke their backs," Burrough said. "Hey, I've made my living off the long ball. As long as Dan can throw them and I can run under them, why quit trying them? Why waste all my speed and height?"

The Oilers started the year with the idea of establishing a strong ground game and developing a play-action passing attack.

"We never intended to take anything away from Kenny," assistant coach King Hill said. "But it was important to do the other things first. And Kenny was great about it. He came in and blocked, he ran the short routes, he did everything we asked."

"Because of Earl and because of the success we've had with play action, all of a sudden Kenny started getting some single coverage. Well, by golly, here's a guy who can catch the long ball and we've got a guy who can throw it. Why not work it back into our game plan?"

The Oilers also have the added threat of tight end Mike Barber, who caught two touchdown passes against the Patriots.

"If they give me all the attention, Barber's going to hurt them," Burrough said. "And the more they respect him, the more it helps me."

Wayland Baptist Hires Track Coach Goodwin

PLAINVIEW (Special)—Gary C. Goodwin, head track coach at Hereford High School was named Thursday as the new head coach of the men's track program at Wayland Baptist by Dr. Roy C. McClung, president.

The 29-year old Goodwin replaces Dr. Bill Hardage, track coach at WBC for nearly 12 years, who was recently promoted to an academic administrative position at the college.

Goodwin received his bachelor's degree in physical education and speech communication from West Texas State University in 1974 and is presently working towards a master's degree in the same fields of study at WTSU.

A four year letterman in track at Hereford High School, Goodwin helped his team win the District I-AAA championship and was a state meet qualifier in the 120-high hurdles, the 330-intermediate hurdles and the 440-yard relay. He lettered three years in track and in the sprint relays while at West Texas.

After serving as a graduate assistant at WTSU in 1973, Goodwin accepted a coaching position at La Plata Junior High in Hereford in 1974. Since then, he has served as head track and assistant football coach at Shallowater, Muleshoe and Hereford High Schools, coaching numerous regional and state qualifiers at those assignments.

Goodwin also served as director of the YMCA-AAU summer track programs in Hereford and Muleshoe in addition to his duties in the public school system.

"We are very pleased to have Gary on our staff and feel he will be an asset to our program," said Dr. Dan McAllen, vice president for academic affairs at WBC. "Because he will not have some of the administrative duties which Dr. Hardage had, he will be given more time to devote to the track program itself."

"We had an outstanding field of applicants and are very confident of Gary's ability to move ahead with our program," said Dr. Hardage. "He has a tremendous amount of enthusiasm, which is vitally important to any coach's career."

John Madden Ends Career

he added that Madden was welcome to stay in the organization.

"I want John to take a month off, two or three months, whatever time he needs to get this problem (the ulcer) under control, and then whatever he wants to do with us, he's welcome to do," Davis said.

Madden said his immediate plans were "to do nothing."

The big, red-haired coach said he had his mind virtually made up to retire before the 1978 season ended, but that the decision had nothing to do with the 9-7, his worst with the team.

Pete Banaszak, one of several veteran Oakland players attending the news conference, said later, "I think this is the end of an era, certainly in Oakland Raiders' history."

Madden, whose greatest triumph was leading the 1976 Raiders to a Super Bowl championship, said, "These were the 10 happiest years of my life and I just want to be remembered for 10 great years."

He said he had no medical advice that he should retire and that it was strictly his own decision.

Veteran guard Gene Upshaw said Madden "picked the right time to retire and I hope he can do the same." Upshaw added, "I told him to stop eating all those burritos."

Madden, one of the most volatile head coaches in the NFL, threw in some humor by saying, "I'm sure that the league officials will be happy as hell I'm retiring. There will probably be a party somewhere."

Moody Blues Combine Forces Again

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — After spending five years finding out that their whole is greater than the sum of their individual parts, the Moody Blues have slipped quietly back into successful collectivity.

Notice the careful avoidance of the word "comeback." The comeback in pop music is almost as commonplace as smog in Los Angeles, and arouses about as much enthusiasm.

Besides, it's almost ridiculous to talk about comebacks when you're dealing with a band like the Moodies. Of course, diehard Moody Blues fans (the group used to be referred to as a cult band, but the word cult is also in ill repute these days) noticed that the concerts and flow of platinum albums that began in 1965 stopped in 1973 with the release of "Seventh Sojourn," cut a year earlier.

But for many casual rock music listeners, the Moodies' disappearance didn't register. Their classics of the late '60s and early '70s — "Nights in White Satin" and "Tuesday Afternoon" for example — remained staples on most rock stations. Their albums sold at a greater clip in their absence than in their public presence — some 30 million copies to date.

The illusion of their presence was never shattered by any formal announcement they were splitting up. They preferred — and still do — to talk in terms of rests, personal housecleaning and the like.

But while the Moody Blues remained fondly ensconced in the public mind, guitarist Justin Hayward, bass player John Lodge, flutist Ray Thomas, keyboard player Mike Pinder and drummer Graeme Edge were just another bunch of struggling solo artists — not hugely successful ones, either.

It's hard to tell what would have happened had even one of them made a huge breakthrough. In any case, they decided to go back to the studio as a group in September 1977.

The result — "Octave" — was clearly a welcome shot in the arm. It was certified gold, meaning sales of 500,000, 10 days after its release last summer and joined the Moodies' earlier efforts in million-sales country in November.

So the Moody Blues are officially back — an attractive collection of fellows who have that quiet self-assurance that comes from years of stardom, but who are well aware of their good fortune in not only keeping their old friends, but also making a few new ones.

"We're very lucky to be able to come back on this level," says lead guitarist and vocalist Hayward, obviously gratified at the sellout houses that greeted the group during a recent 30-city swing across the United States.

"You know, we were lucky that we did split when we did. We each needed to do different things and put our own house in order, all of us. And I think if we'd have gone on another year, after '74, we'd have split up never to come back together again."

Hayward, a low-key sort who looks like a grown-up British choirboy and writes the Moodies' softer, more romantic ballads, probably enjoyed the most success of the bunch in the last five years.

His solo album, "Songwriter," has sold 500,000 copies and he also has a surprise hit single in "F.T.," a cut from a recent H.G. Wells' "War of the Worlds" by Richard Burton.

Now most aspiring artists wonder that a promising beginning, least, and Hayward has no in abandoning his solo work. Nor, ly, do his fellow Moodies.

"Everybody's going to do songs because they enjoy them firmly. I must say, the more I've ever gotten out of an album, my own album, 'Songwriter,' the real me. And it will continue room for both."

In fact, Hayward says, the group has boosted individual sales helped the other. It's very nice.

He thinks about that a bit adds a candid postscript: "We're ly. We all know that no single going to be bigger than the band know that. But it doesn't stop pleasure out of doing and want solo things."

Screen Dark At Lindsey, City's Oldest

The Lindsey Theater, the oldest operating movie house in Lubbock, screened its last films Thursday night. The theater is being shut down today, with owners citing "economic factors" as the official reason for closing.

The Lindsey is owned by Video Theaters Inc., and Video director Bob Scott said Wednesday, "We have just come to the conclusion we'll be losing less money by closing the theater than by keeping it open."

The theater, remodeled to "movie palace size" in 1939, boasted 1,300 seats and was regarded as the city's finest movie theater. Such films as "Gone With the Wind" and "The Robe" were premiered locally at the Lindsey. Later remodeling cut the seating capacity to "around 1,000."

But business began to cool as more theaters were constructed in outlying areas and in shopping centers. Scott said, "I really think the main factor is the downtown area. I don't know of any city of any size which has been able to support a major first run theater in the downtown area."

In an effort to increase business, the Lindsey switched to a "dollar policy" about a year ago, showing re-issued double features with the admission price set at $1 or $1.50.

Shun Raw Oysters, Liver Victims Told

BOSTON (AP) — People with liver disease who eat raw oysters may contract a fatal infection from a little-known bacterium called lactose-positive vibrio, federal researchers say in a report published in Thursday's edition of the New England Journal of Medicine. Symptoms are chills, fever and red-rimmed, liquid-filled sores on the arms and legs.

Dr. Paul Blake of the Center for Disease Control in Atlanta said that between 1964 and 1977, 39 cases were discovered in 16 states, 13 of which bordered the ocean. Blake said, however, that people with healthy livers should not be afraid to eat raw oysters.

Antique Store Hit By Tanker Razed

DINGMAN'S FERRY, Pa. (AP) — One person was killed and a truck driver was critically injured when a tanker truck crashed into an antique store, exploding into a ball of flame, state police said.

The fire burned about five hours Wednesday night. The dead person, whose body was removed from the store early Thursday, had not been identified, authorities said. The driver of the Exxon truck, Eugene Schroyer, 29, of Danielsville, suffered second- and third-degree burns over most of his body and was reported in critical condition.

POLICE CHIEF ACCUSED

LEWISTON, Idaho (AP) — Lapwai Police Chief Rance R. Torres has been arraigned on a charge of trying to procure a woman for prostitution. Torres, 27, was released on $1,000 bond Wednesday and bound over to District Court, where he will enter a plea.

Peanuts To Mark 30th Anniversary With Special

NEW YORK (AP) — It began as a childhood dream, a dream that millions have now shared for 30 years. "When I was about 6 years old, I found out you could make a living as a cartoonist and from that point, well, everything seemed clear," says Charles Schultz, creator of Peanuts, the most popular comic strip of our time.

CBS airs "Happy Birthday, Charlie Brown," an hour-long animated special Friday at 7 p.m. CST. The program celebrates the beginning of the 30th year of the adventures and misadventures of that little round-headed kid and the start of his 15th year on television.

Phyllis George, a former Miss America and sports broadcaster, is host for the program. She talks with Schultz about his life and art while reviewing highlights of past Peanuts specials.

The Peanuts characters are caught in some of their finest and, of course, most hilarious moments. There is Snoopy as the World War I flying ace and the Wimbledon tennis pro; Schroeder and his piano; Linus with his blanket; the baseball team, and Charlie Brown, never quite sure of what it's all about, yet somehow managing to get by.

The impact of Peanuts, which appears in 1,750 newspapers, has been tremendous. It is read daily by 90 million people in the United States and 24 foreign countries. It has inspired a half-dozen movies, a Broadway musical, whole shelves of books and a flood of Peanuts toys, jewelry, clothes, lunch pails, furniture and anything else you care to mention.

Yet for all his success and fame, Schultz says he hasn't changed much. As he and Miss George show us around 1 Snoopy Place in Santa Monica, Calif., headquarters of the worldwide Peanuts empire, we sense a sensitive, thoughtful, almost shy man. A man who has spent his life studying human nature and then brilliantly catching its frailties and charms in Peanuts.

To Schultz and many of his readers, Charlie Brown symbolizes the common man and his problems and worries, the cares of daily living. Charlie Brown, says Schultz, "defines for us the feelings we all have." Schultz says he is always baffled by people who ask him what his philosophy is. "I'm not trying to teach or tell something," he says, "just trying to make people laugh."

Making people laugh day after day, year after year, across 11,000 strips hasn't been easy. Schultz admits that the strip rarely leaves his mind. Imagine, as he says, "sitting in a room by yourself for hour after hour, trying to be funny."

But the effort has been worthwhile, and Schultz is looking forward to a future that seems limitless. Or as that incomparable hound, Snoopy, puts it from his own particular standpoint, "I'm bigger than Rin Tin Tin, bigger than Pluto, bigger than Lassie." And baby, he's just beginning.

Judge Sits In On Drums For Prison Band's Show

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Looking loose and relaxed in a sweater and slacks, the judge pulled up a stool behind a set of drums to jam with the "Contra Band."

"For those of you who haven't met me before, I'm Dick Klein," he said. The audience laughed.

"For those of you who have met me before — well, you KNOW," The audience roared.

They were all inmates at Holmesburg Prison and Klein was the man who had put many of them behind bars.

The Common Pleas Court judge was not surprised to see many faces he recognized Wednesday night as he sat in with the prison band. But it was the first time he had actually played with someone he sentenced.

After the session, one inmate Klein had sentenced to death before the death penalty was ruled unconstitutional, came up from the audience and told Klein:

"Hey man, this is off the record, but you play good."

For six years Klein and his own band, "The Fifth Amendment," have been playing the prison circuit and getting rave reviews.

But sometime he has trouble keeping his musicians together, like the last time they had a jailbreak at Holmesburg.

"Five of the seven guys who went over the wall about eight months ago had played with me two months earlier," the jurist said. "The trumpet player who escaped was the best musician at the place."

"They caught them, and the trumpet went to Graterford (prison). I guess I'll be playing with him again," Klein concluded.

Klein's other sidemen Wednesday were lead guitarist Stanley Roberts, 28, who has nine months to go on a 21-month sentence for theft; trumpeter Roosevelt Minter, 39, jailed six weeks ago for parole violation; and Randolph Pitts, 24, in jail for a parole violation.

One prisoner had only kind words for Klein at Wednesday night's jam session.

"He gave me a good break," said inmate Melvin "Butter" Blassingale as he strapped on his electric guitar. He explained that in 1972 Klein found him innocent of murder conspiracy in a trial without a jury.

But Blassingale wound up in prison anyway, for robbery and drug possession.

Airlift To U.S. Set For Viet Refugees

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia (AP) — Vietnamese refugees remaining on the stranded Hai Hong freighter will be airlifted to the United States beginning Jan. 15, officials said Thursday.

U.S. embassy officials and Malaysian authorities Thursday began taking the 800 refugees still aboard the Hai Hong for X-ray and medical examination at the government hospital in Port Klang, 20 miles west of here, officials said.

Most of the 2,450 refugees aboard the ship when it arrived Nov. 9 near Port Klang have been taken by European countries.

An information spokesman said Malaysian authorities were deciding whether to escort into international waters two boats packed with 600 Vietnamese refugees. They arrived Wednesday at the island of Pulau Kapas near Marang, 180 miles northeast of Kuala Lumpur.

Malaysian camps now host about 50,000 refugees who have fled the Communist regime in Vietnam.

New Jersey Casino Freed Of Charges

TRENTON, N.J. (AP) — The New Jersey Casino Control Commission has cleared Resorts International of charges it tried to cover up a $179,195 shortage in its Atlantic City casino, but it fined the firm $146,500 Wednesday for 30 other violations during the casino's first weeks of operation last summer. Fines totaling $21,000 were suspended on the condition the violations do not recur.

The vote clears the way for the commission to begin hearings Monday on an application for a permanent license. The state Division of Gaming Enforcement has filed 17 objections to the application, including one charge that the firm has mismanaged the casino.

Actor George Kennedy Relishes Role As Gen. George Patton

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — George Kennedy's 16 years in the Army must have taught him the essence of bravery. How else can you explain his taking on the role of Gen. George S. Patton in a new adventure movie?

The character would seem to be forever the possession of George C. Scott because of his Academy Award-winning performance in "Patton." Now Kennedy comes along in "Brass Target," an MGM release that hints the bombastic general's fatal car accident was not as accidental as reported.

"I had no hesitation about playing Patton," says Kennedy. "Although I don't compare myself to them, I see no reason why Spencer Tracy should not have played Dr. Jeckyl and Mr. Hyde even though Fredric March had preceded him. Nor why Jack Palance shouldn't have followed both of them.

"I thought George's performance in 'Patton' was terrific, and I happily voted for him, whether he wanted the Oscar or not. Patton is a great role for any actor to play.

"He was the most general-like of the World War II generals. He was a no-nonsense guy, our answer to the headline-grabbing British generals. Everything he did was colorful, even the slapping of the soldier. I'm sure that if the press hadn't picked it up, he would have sent out brochures for it.

"I was in Patton's Army for a brief time," Kennedy says, "and once I saw him from far-off. I was three miles away from the place where he was killed in Mannheim; I was on the Neckerstrasse, he was on the autobahn. I didn't know about it until I heard the news on the American Forces Network that evening. "Brass Target" is one of those "what if?" adventures that toy with historical events. British-born Frederick Nolan wrote the novel, "The Algonquin Project," on the proposition that Patton was assassinated by a cunning conspirator as the general was about to uncover a plot to steal $250 million of German gold.

Among those involved in the intrigue: Sophia Loren, John Cassavetes, Robert Vaughn, Patrick McGeehan, Bruce Davison, Edward Herrmann and Max Von Sydow.

"We don't say that these events happened," remarked George Kennedy. "We say, 'Here is a conceivability. I personally doubt if it could have been possible, but if you want to believe it, OK.'"

"Brass Target" was directed by John Hough ("Escape to Witch Mountain") in Switzerland, the Black Forest and Munich. The film reunited Cassavetes and Kennedy for the first time since "The Dirty Dozen." Kennedy played a major in that one, and when Cassavetes saw the five stars of Gen. Patton on Kennedy's shoulder, he cracked, "Well, George, I see you got promoted."

Kennedy receives another promotion in the currently filming "Airport '79 Concorde." He started out in the original "Airport" as a mechanic, worked his way up to an airline executive in the last two sequels. The only continuing character in the four films, he is now co-pilot (with Alain Delon) of a supersonic Concorde.

He comments:

"People ask me, 'Why another "Airport"?' I'll tell you why: the first three made a helluva lot of money. Besides, I like the character of Petroni. He's a no-nonsense guy, just like Patton."

Kennedy has been one of Hollywood's busiest actors since winning the supporting actor Oscar for "Cool Hand Luke" in 1967. He can now smile in remembrance of that event:

"It was the biggest night of my life, and you know what a reporter asked me backstage? He said, 'What do you think about the Oscar jinx?'"

Suspected Assailant Suspended From Job

ARBUTUS, Md. (AP) — David Alexander, 32, who police say had been suspended from his job, has been charged with assaulting two union stewards with intent to murder them at the raincoat factory where he had worked. Police say he surrendered about four hours after someone opened fire with a .32-caliber handgun in the cafeteria of the Misty Harbor, Ltd., factory.

Sandra A. Saunders, 33, a steward for International Ladies Garment Workers Union Local 4, was shot in the back. Charles H. Harris, 30, a steward for Local 110, was shot in the stomach and chest. Both were in guarded but stable condition Thursday at St. Agnes Hospital.

Nearly 200 persons who qualified for a provincial grubstake in British Columbia this year represented the largest number of prospectors in the past decade.

'M-A-S-H' Character Farr Seen More In Uniform

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Jamie Farr has been out of uniform lately on "M-A-S-H." That is, he's been in uniform and out of drag. If you get the drift.

"The last few shows, I've been more and more into Army clothes," said Farr, who was wearing OD fatigues with corporal stripes.

"In the show we're filming now, we have to evacuate the camp and go into a cave. My only feminine attire is a plaid babushka I tie over my helmet."

As fashion-conscious viewers know, Farr plays Cpl. Max Klinger, who spends his days on the CBS Monday night series bucking for a Section Eight discharge by wearing women's clothes.

Don't get any funny ideas. Klinger has been married and divorced on the show, and recently filmed an episode in which he falls in love with a nurse.

"In the show where I have a romance, I spend almost the whole show in my Class A uniform," he said. "When it doesn't work out I'm back in black singing 'Stormy Weather.' It was great not to do any of those feminine attire jokes."

Klinger wants out of the Army and Korea in the worst way, which is the way he goes about it. He is a born rebel. His disguise wouldn't fool "Charley's Aunt." Its obviousness, and his desperation, make it funny.

"M-A-S-H" is a zany show, populated with crazy people, and Farr adds a refreshing touch of burlesque. Dressing in drag is as old as show business, and some of the jokes probably date back that far.

Would Klinger take a discharge, if it really came through, or would he decide at the eleventh hour not to let his friends down?

Farr thought about that for a moment. "I don't know," he said slowly. "I think he would be shocked. Then delighted. Then saddened, because he probably would find it difficult to leave his family in Korea.

"One of the interesting things about Klinger is that he never gives up. He's a great spirit who never gives up. It keeps him alive, and it keeps the camp alive. They keep waiting to see what he will come up with next."

Although "M-A-S-H" spun off the hit movie, Cpl. Klinger is strictly a TV creation. His character was not in the movie. The role was little more than a walk-on in the beginning, but Klinger has now become an integral member of the merry maniacs, and Farr has moved up to co-star status.

"M-A-S-H" has probably undergone more change than any other series. Only Alan Alda, Loretta Swit and Gary Burghoff remain from the original cast. Burghoff, who was also Radar in the movie, has said he is leaving at the end of this season.

McLean Stevenson, Wayne Rogers, and Larry Linville left earlier, to be replaced by Harry Morgan, Mike Farrell, and Donald Ogden Stiers.

Like Klinger, Farr is from Toledo, Ohio, and of Lebanese descent. His real name is Jameel Farah. He's not sure how Klinger got to be Lebanese.

He came west to study at the Pasadena Playhouse, and his first movie was "The Blackboard Jungle." His first TV role was in "Dear Phoebe," with Peter Lawford. Later, he was a semi-regular on "The Red Skelton Show" and a regular on the first season of "The Danny Kaye Show." On "The Dick Van Dyke Show" he was the Snappy Service messenger.

After the Skelton show Farr was in the Army in Japan. "I was a private," he said, "and suddenly the State Department sent for me. I got VIP status on a United Nations plane and flew to Korea with Red Skelton to entertain the troops. Red had asked for me.

"I really owe my present day situation to Red. He was like a father to me. He told me to come and see him when I got out of the service. He put me under personal contract and made it possible for me to survive until I got a break."

Book Acts As Guide For Cheap Ski Bums

RENO, Nev. (AP) — Ski bum aspirants take note. There's a new book with your interests and pocketbook, or lack of one, in mind.

The book, "The Ski Bum's Guide to Mountain Wildlife," doesn't exactly tell where to rest one's ski-weary limbs, quench an unending thirst or satiate a ravenous appetite — at least not traditionally.

It's written for the permissive, opportunity-seeking ski bum, not the average, vacation-bound skier.

The writer, pen-named Nipi Chinook, tells readers that if they're out for "security and the city life," don't bother to read on. He writes that the volume is meant for those who want to chase "snowclouds and the mountain wildlife."

The best way to approach a ski bum-min' lifestyle, he says, is with an appetite for adventure and ground beef. He warns that a complete absence of financial ambition is essential.

"Time and money are cousins in that both can be spent carelessly," the author philosophizes. "But their relationship is distant, since money once spent may be acquired again, whereas, time spent carelessly is forever lost."

Once you've saved $50 or so and packed some invaluable possessions — a pair of skis, ski boots, poles, and a sleeping bag — you're ready to hit the resorts.

You can include other items, such as a boba bag, which, "besides the obvious pleasures it affords," can serve as a pillow when filled with brandy.

Most guides tell visitors what hotel accommodations a ski resort offers. This one goes a step further. He tells how to get a sleeping place for free. You may have to sleep under stairs, "borrow" keys for a free hotel room or, he says, "coax a willing female (or male) into staying at her place."

The next step is to get to know the town's residents. They will be able to provide information on jobs, ski lift passes and the town's highlights in general, the guidebook says.

Chinook advises that the best place to work is in a restaurant, because it leaves the days free for skiing. Restaurants also may supply season passes and free meals as well.

Which brings the ski bum to food in general.

The book provides the reader with a number of recipes fit for "any foraging slat rat's culinary excursions."

One example is tomato soup. All you need is a cup of hot water, ketchup and oyster crackers. You add ketchup to the water until the desired consistency is obtained, then sprinkle with oyster crackers.

The book ends with a little "feelosophy."

"Too many people live their lives the way they ski a mountain. They find a run that makes them comfortable and never ski beyond. ... How can their skiing ability improve? How can their living ability improve? Make each new run an adventure. Put on your bifocals, and stalk the mountain wildlife."

WASHINGTON (AP) — Agriculture Secretary Bob Bergland is resting at home after an over-enthusiastic tryout of a Christmas present — a pair of cross-country skis.

Relatives Win Long Fight To Aid Blind Child

CHICAGO (AP) — David was only 7 years old when his world was plunged into darkness.

For reasons which neither he nor anyone else involved seemed to understand, that's when his mother decided to close the door on their apartment and lock the rest of the world out.

To make sure no one could reach them, David's mother had the phone disconnected. She had the gas meter removed and they no longer ate hot meals. She stopped using electricity: no television, no radio, no phonograph, no refrigerator, and most of all, no lights.

In the fall of 1977, David did not report for the third grade at nearby McPherson school, and instead remained hidden away with his mother in their third-floor apartment. He saw no other children, and his "friends" became the dolls he had in the apartment, two goldfish, a bird and a hamster named Charlie.

David's aunts and his maternal grandmother came by, but they never got beyond the locked door. They would stand in the hall and beg David's mother to open it, but she never did. When the landlord stopped to collect the rent, she would slip an envelope under the door.

Only at night, and only occasionally, when she was certain no one could see them, the mother would take David to the grocery store. Almost secretly, they would emerge from the apartment to buy food — potato chips, bread, crackers, luncheon meat and the like — that was cheap and required no refrigeration or cooking.

Despite these measures, and the anonymity that living in the city seems to afford, David's absence did not go unnoticed.

But, as the family told Chicago Tribune columnist Anne Keegan, the efforts to free David required monumental patience.

Shortly after school began that year, a woman who lived downstairs called the Department of Children and Family Services to report that David was not being allowed to go to school. But she got nowhere.

Meanwhile, David's aunt called the school and was told a truant officer was looking into the case. But he "never returned any of my calls," said the sister.

"He paid no attention to us at all, as if he didn't care."

Then she called family services and was told something would be done. But time passed and nothing was.

Then the sister contacted the state attorney's office and was told nothing could be done because she was not the legal guardian. She wrote a television station and the response was no different from the others.

"If I didn't see them at night sometimes coming home with a pitiful little bag of food, you'd never know anyone lived up there," said a neighbor. "David had been completely removed from the world, and I couldn't take it any longer. I didn't want to live next door to a child who was getting paler and paler and thinner and thinner and his clothes getting too small for him and me not doing something."

So the neighbor called the McPherson school. They told her to call family

FROZEN FOLIAGE — Fog, freezing drizzle and a temperature of 18 degrees caused slick streets and frozen foliage along East Broadway and the remainder of the city this morning. Plains May Get Heavy Snowfall

By TOM GRIESS

Avalanche-Journal Staff

A mass of Arctic air slipped into Lubbock early today, coating roads and bridges with a deceptive glaze of ice and triggering a winter storm watch for the Panhandle and South Plains.

Snow likely will be heavy tonight and Saturday from the South Plains northward into the Panhandle, National Weather Service forecasters warned.

Freezing drizzle, snow and fog stranded travelers and forced hundreds into emergency shelters in Oklahoma today. Schools were closed in many sections of the state and non-essential state workers were told to stay home.

The Turner Turnpike from Tulsa to Oklahoma City was reported to be "a solid sheet of ice." Interstate 35 in South Central Oklahoma has been closed for various periods of time.

The second major winter storm in less than a week swept deep into Texas today, bringing fog and freezing drizzle to much of West and Northwest Texas. The Dallas area, still recovering from last weekend's damaging ice storm, braced for another round of freezing precipitation and bitter temperatures.

Dallas Power and Light officials, admitting that about 10,000 customers still were without service, said the threat of more ice or snow could delay repair work into next week.

Although the Arctic air mass is not as cold as the earlier front, temperatures are expected to drop into the middle teens on the South Plains tonight and reach only the upper 20s Saturday.

A National Weather Service travelers advisory was posted for the South Plains region this morning, where accumulating ice made driving dangerous.

From Lubbock north to the Panhandle and from the New Mexico border to Childress, roads are icy, a spokesman at the Department of Public Safety reported this morning: South of Lubbock to the Midland-Odessa and Abilene areas and east to Dallas and Sherman, bridges and overpasses are icy, the spokesman added.

With cloudy skies and a temperature high in the low 30s forecast today in the Lubbock area, hazardous road conditions may remain through the day.

A cold front that Thursday night was centered in the Panhandle region and then moved rapidly southward triggered the foul weather. By noon, the front reached from Guadalupe Pass in far West Texas to Del Rio, on the Rio Grande.

Moisture from the Gulf of Mexico met the cold front early today and caused the freezing precipitation in West Texas. An upper level disturbance locate off the coast of California this morning is expected to move eastward and increase the threat of precipitation tonight and Saturday.

Unseasonably cold temperatures and above normal amounts of precipitation are expected to remain through Tuesday, with highs in the 30s and 40s and lows in the 20s, and partial clearing of the skies is not expected until early next week.

Despite slick driving conditions this morning in the Lubbock area, motorists generally fared well.

Tax Breaks Face Delay

AUSTIN (AP) — An advisory committee recommends that the 1979 Legislature put off for two years additional homestead exemptions for the elderly and disabled.

The proposed school tax exemptions were part of the tax relief amendment adopted overwhelmingly by voters in November.

The amendment provided a mandatory $5,000 market value exemption for school tax purposes to every residential homestead. It also authorized the Legislature to exempt up to $10,000 of the market value of the homestead of an elderly or disabled person.

The advisory committee said, however, the two-year delay would give the Legislature time to determine the impact of other tax-relief measures and would enable lawmakers to judge how far they should go with the additional exemptions.

The vote to delay implementation of the exemptions was 6-5, the advisory committee noted.

Its report was prepared for presentation to the Legislative Council's Property Tax Study Committee.

The 18-member advisory committee also voted 10-3 that the Legislature not permit the taxing of timberland on the basis of productive capacity.

The amendment directs the Legislature to provide for taxation of farm and ranch land on such a basis, but left the controversial timber issue up to legislators.

Other written recommendations included:

— Exempting intangible personal property from local ad valorem taxation, except for intangible assets of certain transportation companies; capital stock of banks; and reserves of savings and loan associations, insurance companies, loan companies and credit unions.

— Exempting from property taxation all personal motor vehicles not used to produce income.

— Reimbursement of up to 100 percent

Foreigners Speed Exit From Iran

TEHRAN, Iran (UPI) — Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlavi and his family spent the Iranian weekend in the country and the exodus of foreigners continued today despite the scheduled transition to a civilian government Saturday.

A Canadian Air Force C-130 and Lufthansa airliner picked up American, Canadian and European nationals from Tehran and the Caspian Sea town of Rasht, northwest of Tehran.

Among those who left were nearly all the West German staff at the German-language university of Gilan, commissioned by the shah two years ago and still under construction at Rasht.

Several other commercial and charter flights also took off, without radar assistance, Iranian air force experts not used to handling commercial traffic sought to substitute for anti-shah air traffic controllers, on strike throughout the country since Monday.

Iran's state radio said the country was calm, except for peaceful marches "that denounced past incidents" in five west Iranian cities and towns in southern Iran. "The people took advantage of the good weather," said the radio.

Two senate inquiry missions intended for the cities of Ghazvin and Mashhad scene of pro-shah violence this week could not leave due to the fuel shortage that still paralyzed air and rail communications, the radio said.

The Iran Air national airline hit on strike since Dec. 27. Railroad struck on Dec. 30.

There was no indication if the which are costing Iran millions of dollars per day in lost revenue, industry and trade, would end when leader Shapur Bakhtiar's cabinet of "honest elders and so faces" Saturday.

Politicians said the strikes would off. But Bakhtiar's opponents, including

City Bank Deposits Set New Records

By LISA PAIKOWSKI

Avalanche-Journal Staff

Lubbock bank deposits at the end of 1978 reached an all-time high despite several city financial institutions showing a drop because of the late cotton harvest, figures released today showed.

At the close of business Dec. 31, 1978, deposits totaled $1,104,896,188 compared to the 1977 figure of $1,104,333,807.

The 1977 figure does not include deposits from Southwest National which opened this past November.

The year's total represented a $62,381 increase from the previous year.

Jim Edd Waller, vice chairman of the board at Plains National, expressed strong satisfaction with the state of the Lubbock economy, as did most city bank spokesmen.

"I think they (1978 figures) are indicative of the healthiness of the Lubbock economy," said Waller. "Plains National was up about 12 1/2 percent, so 1978 was a good year in terms of growth."

"The economy in Lubbock is very, very good," said Douglas Boren, president of Security National. "All the businesses in this end of town had the best year in many years. They did well both cash and profit-wise."

Although the deposits for all city banks showed little change, individual banks experienced some declines in deposits, largely due to the agricultural situation, according to spokesmen at the banks concerned.

"Where last year we had about 2,700,000 bales of cotton classed by Dec. 31, we had only about 1,100,000 classed through Dec. 31 of this year," said Tommie Stevens, president of Texas Commerce. "Our local economy will have a short cash flow from the cotton crop."

Texas Commerce's year-end total was down $4,817,694 from 1977.

Howard Yandell, president of First National, the largest agricultural loan bank in Texas in 1977, noted that deposits were down about $19 million and loans were up about $10 million.

"Being the agricultural bank that we are, we have not had the deposits from the farmers yet because of the late crops," said Yandell. "We're seeing our deposits increase after the end of the year."

American State deposits showed an increase of more than $8 million, and W.R. Collier, president of the bank, said that the late harvest also affected his bank's totals.

"Our total deposit figures don't reflect our growth because of the late harvest," he said. "The farmers are still holding their commodities."

Collier said that he was pleased with his bank's growth, however.

Lubbock National president Wayne Finnell also cited the delayed cotton crop as the reason for the slight decrease of $89,695 in their deposits.

"This time last year the crops and money were in," he said. "Our deposits should be better 60 days from now."

Finnell said that the decrease also was due in part to a drop in public funds. "But we had an increase in regular business to offset the public fund decrease," he said.

"Corporate and individual activity was

McDonald Gets LP&L Position

By SYLVIA TEAGUE

Avalanche-Journal Staff

Carroll McDonald, who resigned as district manager for Southwestern Public Service Co. in September, will begin work for the electric company's competitor, Lubbock Power and Light, beginning Monday.

In a surprise announcement, City Manager Larry Cunningham revealed McDonald's appointment to head the new LP&L sales and service division this morning.

Bill Wood, who now serves as electric utility director for the city, will become the new director of planning, development and production for LP&L, Cunningham said.

McDonald, 44, acknowledged his move to LP&L would be seen by SPS as a defection to the enemy camp, but said he doesn't view the move that way.

SPS doesn't have "that many secrets" which could be used to LP&L's advantage, McDonald said.

He explained his decision to seek the LP&L position by saying he was "eager to get back to the business I've been trained for all my life."

Also, McDonald said, "I've been assured I can do my business and stay in Lubbock."

In his new capacity, McDonald will be charged with increasing LP&L's share of electric customers, largely by persuading customers to switch from SPS.

But LP&L already is doing a good job there, McDonald said.

Teng Hints Use Of Force Against Taiwan

PEKING (AP) — Vice Premier Teng Hsiao-ping says he hopes China can get Taiwan back peacefully this year, but he doesn't rule out regaining it by "other than peaceful means."

To rule out other means, the senior vice premier told American correspondents at a news conference today, would tie China's hands. But he emphasized that peaceful reunification of the mainland and the big offshore island is Peking's goal.

Teng said his government "will be taking a variety of measures in different forms" to open discussions with President Chiang Ching-kuo and other leaders of the Nationalist Chinese government on Taiwan.

Chiang has repeatedly rejected negotiations with the Communists, and his government has rebuffed the overtures Peking has been making almost daily since the Nationalists' mainland, the United States, opened diplomatic relations with Peking on Jan. 1 and broke formal relations with Taipei.

But Teng, who is 74, said he expects to see the mainland in control of Taiwan within his lifetime. He added with a smile: "I can live for at least another 10 years."

He then said that 10 years "would be too long to wait," however.

Teng, who begins a visit to Washington on Jan. 28, spoke with the American reporters for an hour conference in the Great Hall of the People. He spoke in Chinese entirely, using an interpreter, chain-smoked throughout and appeared to relish the session.

He said while in Washington he would not discuss Taiwan with Sen. Barry Goldwater, the Nationalists' chief supporter in Congress, but if he met him he would renew his invitation earlier this week to come to Peking to discuss reunification.

"Our main goal is for Mr. Goldwater to get to know about China," he explained.

He denied Soviet charges that Chinese-American normalization will lead to a military alliance of Washington, Peking and Tokyo. He said although China "would like to absorb all kinds of advanced things, so far the United States does not have any intention of selling us weapons."

He also said he did not consider the question of American property claims in China and Chinese assets frozen in the United States to be a major issue.

Teng also supported Cambodia's demand for a U.N. Security Council session to condemn the Vietnamese invasion of Cambodia and said the United Nations should give "clear moral support" to Cambodians. But in a swipe at Vietnamese backers as well as Hanoi, he said it would be impossible to restrain nationalism, whether big or small.

Vietnam's "flagrant aggression" part of the global strategy of the Union and Vietnam, he asserted.

'M-A-S-H' Character Farr Seen More In Uniform

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Jamie Farr has been out of uniform lately on "M-A-S-H." That is, he's been in uniform and out of drag. If you get the drift.

"The last few shows, I've been more and more into Army clothes," said Farr, who was wearing OD fatigues with corporal stripes.

"In the show we're filming now, we have to evacuate the camp and go into a cave. My only feminine attire is a plaid babushka I tie over my helmet."

As fashion-conscious viewers know, Farr plays Cpl. Max Klinger, who spends his days on the CBS Monday night series bucking for a Section Eight discharge by wearing women's clothes.

Don't get any funny ideas. Klinger has been married and divorced on the show, and recently filmed an episode in which he falls in love with a nurse.

"In the show where I have a romance, I spend almost the whole show in my Class A uniform," he said. "When it doesn't work out I'm back in black singing 'Stormy Weather.' It was great not to do any of those feminine attire jokes."

Klinger wants out of the Army and Korea in the worst way, which is the way he goes about it. He is a born rebel. His disguise wouldn't fool "Charley's Aunt." It's obviousness, and his desperation, make it funny.

"M-A-S-H" is a zany show, populated with crazy people, and Farr adds a refreshing touch of burlesque. Dressing in drag is as old as show business, and some of the jokes probably date back that far.

Would Klinger take a discharge, if it really came through, or would he decide at the eleventh hour not to let his friends down?

Farr thought about that for a moment. "I don't know," he said slowly. "I think he would be shocked. Then delighted. Then saddened, because he probably would find it difficult to leave his family in Korea.

"One of the interesting things about Klinger is that he never gives up. He's a great spirit who never gives up. It keeps him alive, and it keeps the camp alive. They keep waiting to see what he will come up with next."

Although "M-A-S-H" spun off the hit movie, Cpl. Klinger is strictly a TV creation. His character was not in the movie. The role was little more than a walk-on in the beginning, but Klinger has now become an integral member of the merry maniacs, and Farr has moved up to co-star status.

"M-A-S-H" has probably undergone more change than any other series. Only Alan Alda, Loretta Swit and Gary Burghoff remain from the original cast. Burghoff, who was also Radar in the movie, has said he is leaving at the end of this season.

McLean Stevenson, Wayne Rogers, and Larry Linville left earlier, to be replaced by Harry Morgan, Mike Farrell, and Donald Ogden Stiers.

Like Klinger, Farr is from Toledo, Ohio, and of Lebanese descent. His real name is Jameel Farah. He's not sure how Klinger got to be Lebanese.

He came west to study at the Pasadena Playhouse, and his first movie was "The Blackboard Jungle." His first TV role was in "Dear Phoebe," with Peter Lawford. Later, he was a semi-regular on "The Red Skelton Show," and a regular on the first season of "The Danny Kaye Show." On "The Dick Van Dyke Show," he was the Snappy Service messenger.

After the Skelton show Farr was in the Army in Japan. "I was a private," he said, "and suddenly the State Department sent for me. I got VIP status on a United Nations plane and flew to Korea with Red Skelton to entertain the troops. Red had asked for me.

"I really owe my present day situation to Red. He was like a father to me. He told me to come and see him when I got out of the service. He put me under personal contract and made it possible for me to survive until I got a break."

Book Acts As Guide For Cheap Ski Bums

RENO, Nev. (AP) — Ski bum aspirants take note. There's a new book with your interests and pocketbook, or lack of one, in mind.

The book, "The Ski Bum's Guide to Mountain Wildlife," doesn't exactly tell where to rest one's ski-weary limbs, quench an unending thirst or satiate a ravenous appetite — at least not traditionally.

It's written for the penniless, opportunity-seeking ski bum, not the average, vacation-bound skier.

The writer, pen-named Nipi Chinook, tells readers that if they're out for "security and the city life," don't bother to read on. He writes that the volume is meant for those who want to chase "snowclouds and the mountain wildlife."

The best way to approach a ski bum's lifestyle, he says, is with an appetite for adventure and ground beef. He warns that a complete absence of financial ambition is essential.

"Time and money are cousins in that both can be spent carelessly," the author philosophizes. "But their relationship is distant, since money once spent may be acquired again, whereas, time spent carelessly is forever lost."

Once you've saved $50 or so and packed some invaluable possessions — a pair of skis, ski boots, poles, and a sleeping bag — you're ready to hit the resorts.

You can include other items, such as a boba bag, which, "besides the obvious pleasures it affords," can serve as a pillow when filled with brandy.

Most guides tell visitors what hotel accommodations a ski resort offers. This one goes a step further. He tells how to get a sleeping place for free. You may have to sleep under stairs, "borrow" keys for a free hotel room or, he says, "coax a willing female (or male) into staying at her place."

The next step is to get to know the town's residents. They will be able to provide information on jobs, ski lift passes and the town's highlights in general, the guidebook says.

Chinook advises that the best place to work is in a restaurant, because it leaves the days free for skiing. Restaurants also may supply season passes and free meals as well.

Which brings the ski bum to food in general.

The book provides the reader with a number of recipes fit for "any foraging slat rat's culinary excursions."

One example is tomato soup. All you need is a cup of hot water, ketchup and oyster crackers. You add ketchup to the water until the desired consistency is obtained, then sprinkle with oyster crackers.

The book ends with a little "feelosophy."

"Too many people live their lives the way they ski a mountain. They find a run that makes them comfortable and never ski that beyond. ... How can their skiing ability improve? How can their living ability improve? Make each new run an adventure. Put on your bifocals, and stalk the mountain wildlife."

New Christmas Present Lands Bergland In Bed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Agriculture Secretary Bob Bergland is resting at home after an over-enthusiastic tryout of a Christmas present — a pair of cross-country skis.

Tom Sand, an aide, said Bergland received the skis from his wife and proceeded to give them a thorough workout over the holidays at the family farm in Roseau, Minn. In the process, Sand said, Bergland acquired a sore back.
