Smith wins 21st District's GOP nod

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

Lamar Smith

Lamar Smith won the GOP nomination to the 21st Congressional District Saturday night and will face Pete Snelson, D-Midland, in the November general elections, according to complete but unofficial totals.

However, Smith's runoff opponent, former San Antonio city councilman Van Archer narrowly carried Midland County by 127 votes. In Midland County, Archer received 2,470 votes and Smith received 2,343 votes. About 10 percent or 5,556 of the 55,784 registered voters turned out for the runoff race in Midland.

Unofficial districtwide totals showed 38-year-old Smith garnering 53.6 percent or 18,122 votes, while 46-year-old Archer received 46.4 percent or 15,709 votes.

"I would like to thank the voters of Midland for voting for me. It really does make me feel good because there was a lot of sleazy advertising against me. It was difficult for me to rebut, because we didn't have the resources," said Archer in a telephone interview from San Antonio Saturday night.

■ Ector County run-offs, other results — Page 5A

Archer said the radio, newspaper and television ads excerpting one of his quotes about low oil prices being the best thing to happen to the country caused him to lose the race.

"Nearly every roadblock possible was thrown in my face. Yet we still did magnificently. I lost because of this sleazy advertising."

Despite the advertising tactics, Archer said he would support Smith in the general election.

"I always support the Republican nominee. I've always been supportive of Republican nominees and Ronald Reagan needs supporters in the White House."

In a telephone interview from San Antonio, Smith attributed his win to a districtwide 30,000 plus turnout.

"I think the large turnout did help. We look forward to the general election and will continue to talk about the energy crisis," Smith said.

During the runoff campaign Smith advocated a national energy policy and a temporary import tax to stabilize oil at $22 a barrel.

Snelson, 62, who was a state legislator for 23 years in the 26-county area contained in the congressional district, said Saturday night he feels he can beat Smith on November 4.

"I have represented the district for two decades. I feel the district is not going to change its support.

"I think here in Midland, it's going to boil down to whether the people want to be represented by someone from Midland or someone from San Antonio," Snelson said.

Snelson completed his tenure as a state senator in 1983.

In the May 3 primary with six contenders vying for the Republican nomination, Smith received 31 percent of the vote and Archer received 25 percent. Former Midland Mayor Thane Akins came in fourth in the primary.

At the nine Republican polling places around Midland, the vote breakdown was as follows:

— Precincts 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106 - 396 for Archer and 185 for Smith.

— Precinct 201 - 57 for Archer and 42 for Smith.

— Precinct 202 - 51 for Archer and 38 for Smith.

— Precincts 203, 209, 211 - 27 for Archer and 17 for Smith.

— Precincts 204, 206, 207, 210 - 450 for Archer and 514 for Smith.

McCrary narrowly nominated

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Guy McCrary polled 53 percent of the votes cast in the Republican Party run-off election for commissioner of Midland County Precinct 2 to win the party's nomination for the post over C. Wallace "Wally" Craig, the incumbent.

McCrary

"I am delighted to have received the confidence of the voters," McCrary, a 32-year-old marketing consultant, said Saturday night.

McCrary garnered 1,174 votes, and Craig, a 62-year-old real-estate broker, pulled in 1,046 votes for 47 percent of the ballots cast in that race. Craig outscored McCrary in absentee balloting 333 to 259.

McCrary's victory now will pit him against Don Boydstun, the Democratic Party's nominee for commissioner, in the Nov. 4 general elections.

Only 10 percent or 5,556 of the 55,784-strong Midland County electorate voted in the Republican Party and Democratic Party run-off races Saturday.

Of the 11 races on both party tickets, the only Midland race was the Craig-McCrary contest. The Democrats had no local run-off candidates.

In assessing the outcome of the election, Craig, who has been in office since 1983, said that "This is not the end of the world. It may be the best thing that ever happened. We're looking at it philosophically. There is no bitterness."

Craig credited his losing the election to today's depressed economy.

"WHEN THE ECONOMIC conditions are bad at best," he said, "there is a tendency for voters to vote for a change. They think they are finding new answers. And I don't take it personally."

McCrary cited "very strong volunteer support" in carrying the election for him. He said that in his campaigning, he had addressed "pertinent issues and then took strong positions on the issues," which included the status of the Midland County Jail and its impending renovation, an envisioned new jail complex, taxes, the budget, and a planned long-range study of Midland County government needs into the 21th Century.

The Craig-McCrary runoff came about after neither candidate received a majority of votes in the three-way race for the Republican Party nomination in the May 3 primary elections. Craig scored 46 percent of the vote, McCrary got 40 percent, and Milton Rister, a 35-year-old computer consultant, received 14 percent of the vote in the first primary election.

Barrera easily wins chance at AG spot

By MICHAEL HOLMES

AUSTIN (AP) — San Antonio Judge Roy Barrera Jr. bowled over former prosecutor Ed Walsh in the Republican race for attorney general Saturday, one of nine statewide runoff elections settled by Texas voters.

With 100 percent of the ballots counted, Barrera received 102,352 votes, or 68.5 percent, to 47,184 votes, or 31.5 percent, for Walsh.

Walsh is the former Williamson County district attorney who obtained the death sentence for confessed mass killer Henry Lee Lucas.

Barrera, a district judge since 1980, was one of three Hispanics in runoff races. With Democratic Supreme Court Justice Raul Gonzalez also winning, each was in a position to become the first Hispanic elected to statewide office.

Barrera said he wants voters in November to compare his qualifications with those of incumbent Democrat Jim Mattox.

"I don't expect, because of my name, to get votes that I don't deserve. I am going to campaign as hard in South Texas as I will in North Texas," he said. "I would hope my surname would be an asset and assist me in making inroads to that part of Texas that has been traditionally and historically Democratic."

Walsh said Barrera ran a "fantastic" campaign and pledged his help in the fall.

"Roy Barrera has never been the enemy. Jim Mattox has always been the enemy. It is essential that we remove the biggest disgrace that Texas has from the attorney general's office, and that's Jim Mattox," Walsh said.

On the Democratic ballot, state Sen. John Sharp of Victoria won nomination for railroad commissioner, easily besting P.S. "Sam" Ervin, a Dallas oil and gas consultant.

Ervin, whose original name was Percy Strother Ervin, legally changed his name to P.S. "Sam" Ervin after Democratic Party officials refused to let him use the nickname on the runoff ballot.

He was listed on the May primary ballot with the nickname Sam, but opponents accused him of trying to capitalize on voter confusion over the nickname and the name of the late U.S. Sen. Sam Ervin, chairman of the Senate Watergate investigation.

With 99 percent of the precincts counted, Sharp had 347,239 votes, or 79.8 percent, to Ervin's 87,778, or 20.2 percent.

In other Republican runoffs, with all ballots counted:

— David Davidson, a former Gonzales preacher, earned the lieutenant governor nomination. With 100 percent of the precincts reporting, Davidson received 88,888 votes, or 69.6 percent, to 38,842 votes, or 30.4 percent, for Kingwood lawyer Aaron Bullock.

— Seven Points dance hall operator M.D. Anderson Jr. won the GOP land commissioner race, defeating Tyler high school teacher Grady Yarbrough. Anderson had 79,180 votes, or 63.1 percent, to Yarbrough's 46,310 votes, or 36.9 percent.

Weather's wild turns bring out heroic nature of many Texans

By DOUG CRICHTON

The Bright Side

DALLAS (AP) — From river rescues to aerial aid, heroism came in a variety of packages when violent storms raged across Texas last week.

But emergency workers from Ennis to San Antonio — even those who dangled 150 feet above a rampaging stream or clutched a fire ant-infested tree to keep from being washed away — deflated any attempt to label them heroes.

"This is just what we do for a living," said Army Sgt. Vernon Eads. "If doing your job is heroic, that's the only way I could get to be a hero."

To the four men he helped pluck from rising floodwaters Wednesday, the Fort Sam Houston senior medic looked like a savior as he dangled from a helicopter bearing rescue ropes.

"I'm used to being a rescuer, not a rescuee," said a relieved fire Capt. Ben Hoeffner. "But that guy sure looked good coming down from the sky."

Hoeffner had forged into the rain-fattened creek with two other men to help Rod Elkey, a volunteer fireman who swam out to save a woman trapped in her car at a low-water crossing but was himself swept away.

The strong current had snapped the rope that connected Elkey to shore and he grabbed the first thing he could — a tree covered with fire ants. He knew a creek bottom cluttered with cactus and brush would shred his skin if he tried to swim away, so stayed put, ants and all, and waited for help.

"I'm a certified scuba diver, and I have a healthy respect for water flowing that fast," said Elkey, a 38-year-old auto mechanic who also says that risking his life is "part of the job."

Sick jokes one way to cope with horror

By STEVE EMMONS
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

One day after news broke of the nuclear power plant disaster in the Ukraine, Professor Alan Dundes' anthropology students at the University of California, Berkeley, were jotting down the radiation jokes already making the rounds.

What has feathers and glows in the dark? (Chicken Kiev.)

What do you serve with Chicken Kiev? (A black Russian.)

What's the weather report from Kiev? (Overcast and 10,000 degrees.)

"You know it's sick and disgusting when you tell these," said Dundes, a folk humor specialist. "But the fact that these are all over the country suggests it's not any one group telling them."

Next-day joking about the nuclear disaster was hardly a speed record in the United States. Within 90 minutes after the space shuttle Challenger exploded, Joseph Boskin, a Boston University history professor specializing in contemporary humor, had received calls from friends in New York who told him five dead-astronaut jokes.

"Some people from the West Coast called at the end of the same day, and they told me the same jokes. It's absolutely amazing," Boskin said.

Amazing, he said, not because of the apparent callousness of the jokes but because of the lightning speed with which they appear and spread.

They are neither published nor broadcast by mass media, yet they are transmitted throughout the nation within hours of a disaster, apparently passed along by middle-class office workers and commercial travelers whose long-distance telephoning is a routine part of the business day. "It's the middle class that largely determines what humor is in America," Boskin said.

Almost all such jokes and wisecracks are "sick" humor, Dundes said, referring to the long-standing "sick" genre that deals with death, deformity and suffering.

But few of the jokes are sick in the psychological sense, said Dr. William F. Fry, a psychiatrist at the Stanford University medical school who specializes in the implications of humor.

A crack made as horrible news is pouring from the television screen is merely the way that person is "trying to cope with the horror. He's saying it for himself, not necessarily for the others around him," Fry said.

"Maybe the person is more horrified than you are," Fry said. "We shouldn't be alarmed by these jokes; they're perfectly natural in our human functioning."

Yet even psychologists concede that these jokes can be social dynamite, depending on the circumstances in which they are told.

Alleen Pace Nilsen, assistant dean of Arizona State University's graduate college and co-editor of English Journal magazine, attended the Fifth International Conference on Humour in Ireland last year and said that "more psychologists than anyone" were in attendance.

"It just amused me that they were telling these jokes over cocktails but that nobody got up and formally talked about it," she said.

They refrained, perhaps, with good reason.

"I've given lectures on sick humor," said Harvey Q. Mindess, director of the graduate psychology department at Antioch University West in Los Angeles. "When I say it has a legitimate function in helping people cope with anxieties, some are so offended that they will get up and be very angry."

Dominique Moisi, deputy director of the French Institute of International Relations in Paris, said that the same strain of seemingly callous humor has been practiced in Europe for generations. "The more you're scared, the more you have to create jokes," he said.

"Eastern Europe survived with jokes. Really. Whenever you arrive in the Soviet Union or, more so, a country of Eastern Europe, jokes are mentioned to you. It's a way of confronting a reality that you can't modify."

He said that one current pun, which does not translate well into English, is, "We thought the communists had promised us a radiant future, but they meant an irradiated one."

In some cases, however, the catastrophe is not a single disaster but a prolonged misery, such as political repression, Moisi said.

He cited a joke that made the rounds in Poland in recent years. In it, a fairy godmother descends to grant a Pole three wishes. He uses all three to wish that the Chinese would invade Poland — because they'd have to march through the Soviet Union to get there.

"It's interesting," Moisi said. "American history, by comparison, has not been tragic. With Vietnam, you entered into the path of historical normalcy.

"We in Europe know that history can be sad, bad, collectivized by humiliation. You didn't know that. That may be a reason why you're surprised by the arrival of these jokes. For you, the shuttle was the new frontier that knew no defeat, no tragedy."

Dundes disputes that point of view. He insists that virtually every American event that "hit the national nerve" — from the death of a president to a Hollywood scandal — has prompted such jokes.

"They (the events) are unique only in one sense: that TV and perhaps newspapers make everyone a witness," Dundes said.

"In the old days, by the time the news spread it was already old news. Now you are essentially an unwilling eyewitness.

"How many times did you see that damned shuttle explode? Some people actually saw it happen. They show the damned thing again and again. A press conference, and they show it blowing up. Recovering the bodies, and they show it again. You're an eyewitness whether you like it or not.

"We all saw those smiling people getting aboard, including one of us, a civilian, a non-professional. That's what makes it different now. We all share, and we share immediately. It has sped up the normal process. It has increased the number of people involved."

The joking emerges because people are confronted with a disaster that "makes things appear to be out of control," said Walter E. O'Connell, a psychologist for the Veterans Administration in Houston who has published articles and taught courses on the relationship of humor and death.

Tests could futher delay space race

WASHINGTON (AP) — Presidential investigators have informed NASA officials they want full-scale versions of a redesigned booster rocket tested in the upright position, a costly and complicated procedure that could delay the resumption of shuttle flights beyond next summer, commission and NASA officials say.

"It didn't go down very well," when members of a presidential commission investigating the Challenger accident recently made their views known to space agency officials in private discussions, one source close to the panel said.

The panel, which is to release its final report Monday, has decided that the cause of the Jan. 28 explosion was a faulty seam in one of the shuttle's booster rockets. Because the report is not yet public, the commissioners who discussed the issue in interviews at week's end would not allow use of their names.

Several commissioners have said publicly the panel wants the agency to stop relying on tests of 10-inch models of the 149-foot-long rockets during this redesign. NASA officials have said previously they expect to conduct any full-scale tests on a booster rocket lying horizontally. That's how full scale tests have been conducted in the past.

But one commission member, speaking on condition he not be identified by name, said, "I would think that, the way most of us feel, it should be vertical," and thus duplicate as nearly as possible the actual stresses of a shuttle's ascent into space.

This source added that "in private conversations we have suggested that, and it doesn't go down very well" with space agency officials.

A second commission member said, "They better test these things vertically."

Another commission source said that "there is no reason why they couldn't build two (rockets), hook them onto an external tank and put a small computer in there to guide them and shoot them into the Atlantic."

He said that would be expensive, because it would use two of the boosters, but, "They could recover them, look at the joints and see if they really held up. It would be a hell of a test and if I were an astronaut, that's how I'd want it to be done."

During the past horizontal tests and vertical tests advocated by the commission, the rocket is restrained during firing so instruments can measure the stresses throughout the casing.

NASA Administrator James C. Fletcher has established July 15, 1987, as the date for resumption of shuttle flights, but he has said, "There's not going to be pressure on anyone to be hasty. If there's a delay in the schedule, we'll take that delay. ... What we're trying to do is to get the thing started so we don't have a delay."

NASA officials said this week they can achieve that timetable if the solid rocket booster can be tested in a horizontal position, but added that a decision to test it vertically would be more time consuming.

HEROES

Hoeffner, firefighter Elmer Williams and Jim Siegler — a good Samaritan who learned from his truck's CB radio that a rescue boat was needed and offered his 12-foot craft — found themselves in the same tree when their boat was ripped apart.

Elkey had been treed for nearly three hours, and was there for another hour after the tree got crowded. And that's where Eads, who calls himself "an EMS junky" who loves his emergency medical service work, came in.

"It was a very dangerous maneuver, but we've practiced for this repeatedly," said Eads, 33. "It's a controlled danger."

Within a half-hour, all four men had been lifted to safety with ropes from two hovering Army helicopters. They were among 11 similar rescues the Army crews performed last week, providing enough fodder for seven citations, Fort Sam Houston spokeswoman Maria Jones said.

Others demonstrated commendable valor. Jim Miller, San Antonio's deputy fire chief, said that at one point during the pounding rains that flooded much of the Alamo City, all 56 emergency vehicles were deployed as workers took 175 calls for rescues.

"It was a hell of a flood, but to us it was an almost normal thing," Miller said. "Maybe not in that magnitude, but whenever it rains, we're accustomed to plucking those people out of there."

But you never get used to death, Elkey said, explaining that's why he was so intent on swimming out to the woman stranded in the creek on Wednesday.

Two days earlier, rising waters in Olmos Creek had trapped 61-year-old Leo John Vyvjala in his car. But unlike the woman in Culebra Creek — who practically skied to shore after rescuers shot her a rope and tied it to a fire truck — Vyvjala died after his car flipped over in the strong current and crushed him underneath.

"There was nothing we could do and we were maybe 30 seconds too late," lamented Capt. Donny O'Neill.

McCRARY

Rister, who lent his support to Craig going into the runoff, said he wished McCrary "good luck."

"IT'S TIME TO PULL the (Republican) party together and head toward November," Rister said. "I want to wish Guy good luck. He fought the battle and won."

He had supported Craig "because of his firm stand on doing everything possible to hold down taxes in county government" and to what he perceived as Craig's "more realistic and cost-effective" stance on a jail for Midland County.

Rister said that the "Democrats are going to back Boydstun pretty heavily." However, he said he felt Republican McCrary would have a "definite lead." Midland is a Republican stronghold, though the Democrats are fighting to make inroads.

"We'll definitely vote for him (McCrary) in the fall," Rister said.

Even through Midland is an acknowledged Republican fortress, McCrary said he and his supporters "won't take anything for granted" in his campaign against Boydstun this fall.

In noting his win by 128 voters over Craig, McCrary said he had not expected a "mandate" from the voters.

"Mr. Craig has served the community well over the years and is a popular man," McCrary said. "I knew from the outset that he would be very formidable."

THE CRAIG-McCRARY race was the only local race in Midland County.

Midland votes on other races were:

U.S. Congressional race: Van Archer, 2,470; Lamar Smith, 2,343.

Lieutenant Governor: Aaron L. Bullock, 1,192; David Davidson, 2,489.

— State Rep. Milton Fox of Houston beat perennial candidate John Thomas Henderson in the railroad commission race. Fox had 71,325 votes, or 56 percent, to 56,016 votes, or 44 percent, for Henderson.

In Democratic court races, incumbent Justice Robert Campbell and state Sen. Oscar Mauzy also won nominations to the Texas Supreme Court, while Democrats picked Rusty Duncan of Denton as their nominee for a Court of Criminal Appeals seat. Duncan will be elected in the fall, as he faces no Republican opponent.

In the third Supreme Court race, incumbent Gonzalez defeated challenger Jay Gibson, a former state representative from Odessa.

Gonzalez, appointed by Gov. Mark White in 1984, is the first Mexican-American to serve on the high court.

In the sprawling 21st Congressional District, where Rep. Tom Loeffler of Hunt decided to run for governor rather than seek re-election, former state Rep. Lamar Smith of San Antonio defeated Van Archer.

Emotional Tutu appeals to blacks to end violence

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Tears streaming down his face, Anglican Bishop Desmond Tutu appealed to blacks Saturday to stop killing each other as an increasingly bloody spinoff of anti-apartheid violence claimed more lives.

"The world is with us...why are we killing one another in this way?" Tutu, his voice breaking, said at a funeral in Johannesburg's Soweto township for a slain church worker who tried to mediate between rival black groups.

In Kempton Park, a white town east of Johannesburg, about 100 black youths, one firing a revolver and others hurling gasoline bombs, burst into a clothing shop, then rampaged through the central area as terrified white shoppers fled, witnesses reported.

The blacks set fire to the store during the Saturday morning shopping peak, burning out the building and causing about $250,000 worth of damage.

Store owner Alan Malenk said one youth pulled a knife at the height of the melee, stabbing and slightly wounding one of his assistants.

"They appeared to go berserk," a police spokesman said of the attackers, who escaped as police patrols descended.

Such an assault is almost unprecedented at a white shopping center.

Earlier, police reported five more blacks killed in renewed eruptions of violence, including three men, one a black policeman, who were burned to death.

Two charred bodies were left in a black township, Motherwell, in the eastern Cape, and the policeman's body was found in a white suburb near Pretoria, police said.

Police also said 10 black miners were killed and 115 were wounded in fighting Friday at the Hlobane coal mine in Natal provice between members of rival unions in a dispute over staging a strike. State-run radio had earlier reported a death toll of eight and 95 wounded.

Natal is the stronghold of Chief Mangosuthu Buthelezi, the main moderate black leader who recently set up a labor union in competition with the nation's giant labor federation, the Council of South African Trade Unions.

WORLD

The national federation is backed by the main anti-apartheid groups, including the United Democratic Front.

In Soweto, about 2,000 mourners stood silently as Tutu, winner of the 1984 Nobel Peace Prize, raised his hands in an emotional plea for unity.

"We have such a wonderful, noble cause...please let us not use methods of which we will be ashamed," the black bishop of Johannesburg said.

Police watched silently as mourners streamed from the church behind the coffin of Diliza Matshoba, a popular field worker for the South African Council of Churches. Matshoba's body was found in a government mortuary in Soweto last month, and his family suspects he was slain by conservative black vigilantes.

The mourners, including anti-apartheid activist Winnie Mandela, rose and gave black power salutes as Tutu said, "The fact that we are going to be free is no longer a question."

About half the approximately 1,600 blacks killed in 21 months of anti-apartheid unrest were killed by police and troops.

Most of the rest have died in a worsening cycle of attacks by black radicals against policemen or suspected government sympathizers, and by vigilantes killing anti-apartheid activists.

Government opponents suspect some vigilante groups are armed and encouraged by state agents.

Burning to death in a gasoline-filled tire, dubbed a "necklace," is now a common form of execution for suspected government sympathizers.

Earlier, the United Democratic Front, the main legal anti-apartheid group in the country, said it would go ahead with rallies scheduled in June to demand the lifting on the ban on the ANC.

There is widespread speculation Botha may reimpose a state of emergency in an effort to suppress demonstrations.

Second American soldier dies of bombing wounds

BERLIN (AP) — A second American soldier has died of wounds suffered in the April 5 bombing of a West Berlin discotheque, a U.S. military spokesman said Saturday.

Staff Sgt. James E. Goins, 28, of Ellerbee, N.C., died in a West Berlin hospital Saturday afternoon, said the spokesman, Steve Stromvall.

Sgt. Kenneth Terrance Ford, 21, of Detroit, Mich., and Nermine Hanay, 27, a Turkish woman, were killed instantly and 230 other people were injured in the 1:50 a.m. bombing of the La Belle discotheque. The nightspot had been crowded with about 500 people, many of them U.S. soldiers.

Goins had been in critical condition since the bombing and both legs had been amputated, Stromvall reported. He said Goins' wife, Patrocinia, was with him when he died.

Goins also is survived by a 5-year-old son, Carlos. Stromvall said the body will be flown back to the United States for burial but no date had been set.

Sixty-four of those wounded in the blast were Americans, but Stromvall said Goins had been the only one still hospitalized.

Goins belonged to the 4th battalion of the 502nd Infantry Regiment of the Berlin Brigade. Stromvall said he had been stationed with the Army in Korea, Panama and West Berlin, and was awarded the Purple Heart on April 30.

A West German newspaper reported last month that U.S. and West German intelligence officials had linked Libyan officials to the bombing.

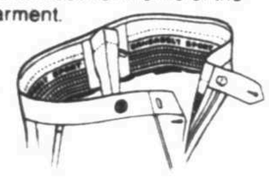

U.S. warplanes bombed the Libyan cities of Tripoli and Benghazi on April 15 in retaliation. Libya denied any involvement

Ector County JP defeats his challenger in run-off

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — In the only local runoff race in Ector County, longtime Precinct 4 Justice of the Peace Manuel "Mac" Valles, 52, defeated 64-year-old challenger Lee Norman, a southside Odessa grocer, by a margin slightly more than 2-to-1.

Valles, who emphasized his experience, qualifications and service to the people during his campaign, garnered 68.54 percent of the 782 votes cast in eight southside ballot boxes.

Norman, who got 25.46 percent of the vote in the May 3 Democratic primary, received a total of 246 votes (31.46 percent) in Saturday's election.

Valles will now have to face 42-year-old Republican Judy Burkes in the November general election. Ms. Burkes, who operates Judy's Bonding Co., ran unopposed for the Precinct 4 Peace Justice Republican nomination May 3.

Ector County Democratic Party Chairwoman K.T. McLeaisch, commenting on the slim voter turnout, estimated the cost of each vote cast locally in the Valles-Norman race cost between $18 and $19.

Only 4.4 percent of the registered voters in the county cast ballots in Saturday's runoff.

In the state runoff races, former State Representative Jay Gibson of Odessa, seeking to fill the Place 4 Texas Supreme Court spot, won 68.21 percent of the 1,529 votes cast in his runoff race with Raul A. Gonzalez. Gonzalez got only 486 of total votes cast in the race in Ector County. Gibson garnered 1,043 votes.

In other state Democratic runoff races, John Sharp led P.S. Ervin in Ector County by taking slightly more than 74 percent of the votes cast in the race for railroad commissioner.

State Sen. Oscar Mauzy led Shirley Butts by taking 65.31 percent of the Ector County ballots cast in the race for Place 1 Texas Supreme Court Justice.

In the runoff race for State Supreme Court Justice Place 2, Robert M. Campbell led Jim Brady by taking nearly 62 percent of the Ector County vote.

In the Democratic runoff race for Place 1 Judge on the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals, Rusty Duncan defeated George "Jorge" Martinez by winning 58.34 percent of the Ector County votes cast.

Only 960 ballots were cast in the Republican runoff race.

David Davidson beat out Aaron L. Bullock in the race for lieutenant governor by taking nearly 74 percent of the Ector County vote.

In the hotly contested race for the right to run in the November general election against Democratic incumbent Attorney General Jim Mattox, Ed Walsh beat Roy R. Barrera Jr. by a slim margin, taking only 50.42 percent of the vote to Barrera's 49.58 percent of the total votes cast in Ector County.

In the Republican runoff race for land commissioner, M.D. Anderson Jr. defeated Grady T. Yarbrough by garnering nearly 72 percent of the Ector County votes cast.

In the Republican race for railroad commissioner, Milton E. Fox won 56.18 percent of the Ector County votes to John Thomas Henderson's nearly 44 percent.

Tie recorded in Big Spring

BIG SPRING (AP) — Howard County voters divided their votes evenly in Saturday's runoff race for county commissioner, precinct 2, giving 641 votes to each candidate.

Two-term incumbent Paul Allen matched challenger John Stanley vote for vote in the computer tabulation, said County Clerk Margaret Ray.

Allen said he didn't expect his bid for re-election to be so close.

"This is the first time I've ever heard of this ever happening to anyone I knew, especially me," Allen said.

Allen, was forced into a runoff in the May primary election after placing second to Stanley, 693 to 658. A third candidate garnered 370 votes.

Ms. Ray, who has been in office for 12 years, said she does not recall a runoff race ending in a tie.

She said the votes will be canvassed by Democratic Party officials Tuesday and either candidate then may ask for a recount. Allen said he is undecided whether to ask for a recount, but Stanley indicated he would do so.

Should a recount confirm the tie, the winner would be decided by casting lots, according to the state election code, Ms. Ray said.

The winner will face a Republican opponent in November, an unusual occurrence in this Democratic-dominated area.

Republican Leo Williams won his party's nomination in the May primary.

Stanley, 64, who lives in Big Spring, is retired from the hardware business. Allen, 52, lives in Coahoma.

Campbell, Gonzalez, Mauzy nominated

By KEN HERMAN

AUSTIN (AP) — Incumbents Robert Campbell and Raul Gonzalez, and state Sen. Oscar Mauzy won Democratic nominations to the Texas Supreme Court in Saturday's runoff elections.

Democrats also picked Rusty Duncan of Denton, who faces no Republican opponent, as their nominee for a Court of Criminal Appeals seat.

Gonzalez carved out a tight win over challenger Jay Gibson, a former Odessa state lawmaker who held the lead in early vote counts. With 98 percent of the precincts reporting, Gonzalez had 241,965 votes, or 53.4 percent to Gibson's 211,171 votes, or 46.6 percent.

Campbell grabbed 235,620 votes, or 57.1 percent, to lead Austin Court of Appeals Judge Jim Brady, who had 176,636 votes, or 42.9 percent.

Campbell said Texas lawyers keyed his win and he claimed support from "every segment of the bar."

Mauzy had 259,000 votes, or 58.8 percent, to San Antonio Court of Appeals Justice Shirley Butts' 181,543, or 41.2 percent.

"It is an honor to be on a strong Democratic ticket going into the November general election," he said.

Duncan had 239,567 votes, or 56.7 percent, to Dallas lawyer George Martinez's 182,788, or 43.3 percent.

Gonzalez, who was appointed by Gov. Mark White to fill a vacancy, is seeking to become the first Hispanic elected to statewide office.

The Gibson-Gonzalez race heated up early with the candidates exchanging charges about the opposition's financial backing. Gibson, voted out of the House in 1984, said the Gonzalez campaign was funded by lawyers who defend companies and insurance companies in civil lawsuits.

Gonzalez, a former Corpus Christi appeals court justice, claimed Gibson was beholden to the other side — lawyers who represent people who sue companies.

Gonzalez was the top vote-getter in the primary with 41.1 percent. Gibson garnered 28.6 percent in a race that included two other candidates.

John Bates of Waco is the Republican nominee for Gonzalez's seat.

Campbell and Brady ran almost even May 3, with the challenger pulling 34.39 percent and the incumbent attracting 34.33 percent. Two other contenders were eliminated. One of them, Colin Kelly Kaufman of San Antonio, recently threw his support to Brady.

Among campaign issues, Brady questioned why Campbell continues to live in Waco rather than in Austin where the court is based.

Campbell emphasized his background in various court administrative positions. He also claimed Brady has been sued several times, including once for failing to pay debts. The Brady campaign said the defendants in most of the suits were not the same Brady.

Nathan White Jr. of Dallas is the Republican nominee for the court post.

Mauzy moved into the runoff with Ms. Butts by taking 46.7 percent of the May 5 vote. Ms. Butts gathered 25.9 percent in the primary, which eliminated incumbent McGee and Hugo Touchy of Houston.

As in the Gibson-Gonzalez race, Mauzy and Ms. Butts traded accusations about each other's financial backing. She said Mauzy might prove beholden to lawyers who file personal injury lawsuits. Mauzy said his opponent is "on the take from the insurance lobby."

Each denied the other's allegations.

The winner faces GOP nominee Charles Ben Howell of Dallas in November.

Martinez ran first on May 3 with 29.1 percent. Duncan had 27.5 percent in the tight primary that knocked out two other candidates, each of whom had more than 20 percent.

Ten legislative districts involved in run-off races

By GARTH JONES

AUSTIN (AP) — Curtis Lee Seidlitz, Jane Lack and Charles P. Jones won Democratic nominations to the state House and John Culberson became a Republican House nominee in runoffs Saturday in 10 legislative districts.

In other races, Judy Zaffirini of Laredo led state Rep. William Hall Jr., also of Laredo, in a bid for the District 21 Democratic nomination to the Senate. With 82 percent of the precincts reporting, Ms. Zafferini, the vice chairman of the Texas Democratic Party, had 61 percent of the votes and led Hall 19,452 votes to 12,637.

In the other Senate Democratic runoff race, with 82 percent of the precincts reporting in District 23, former state Rep. Eddie Bernice Johnson of Dallas led state Rep. Jesse Dean Oliver of Dallas 6,719 votes to 5,521, 55 percent to 46 percent.

Three Democratic House runoffs were settled early with 100 percent of their precincts reporting.

Seidlitz of Sherman drew 52 percent, or 1,798 votes, to 1,680 votes for Fred Golden of Whitesboro in District 62. Seidlitz meets Mary Ann Pittman of Van Alstyne in November's general election.

Ms. Lack of Victoria narrowly defeated Jack Whitlow of Refugio in District 32, taking 50.8 percent of the vote. She received 5,023 votes to 4,861 for Whitlow.

In District 119, Jones of San Antonio got 52 percent, or 1,050 votes, to 486 percent, or 982, for Jerry J. Beauchamp, also of San Antonio. There is no Republican candidate in November.

On the Republican side, Culberson of Houston got 58.6 percent of the vote to win a House nomination in District 125 over Herman Botard of Dallas, 731 votes to 516.

In the District 127 Republican House runoff, with less than 5 percent of the precincts counted, Dan Shelley of Crosby led Richard Bianchi of Kingwood 63.1 percent to 36.9 percent. Shelley had 378 votes to 221 for Bianchi.

With 70 percent of the precincts reporting in the Democratic House runoff in District 110, Rep. Paul Ragsdale, a Dallas Democrat, trailed Fred Blair, former Dallas mayor pro tem. Ragsdale had 35 percent, or 1,248 votes, to 65 percent, or 2,271 for Blair.

In the other Democratic House runoff race:

— In District 20, Rep. Jerry Clark of Buna led W.L. Pate Jr. of Beaumont 51 percent, or 2,407, to 49 percent, or 2,292.

Official Chernobyl accident relief fund tops $53 million

MOSCOW (AP) — The official Chernobyl accident relief fund has increased nearly sixfold in three days, with about $14 million coming in daily, the government newspaper Izvestia said Saturday.

The state-run Account No. 904 grew from $9 million on Tuesday to $53.6 million on Friday, the newspaper said. It did not offer an explanation for the sudden increase.

"Every day now, about 10 million rubles ($14 million) is transferred to the bank," the newspaper said.

The official news agency Tass said Moscow variety artists planned a benefit concert Saturday to raise more money for the fund. On May 30, top Soviet rock stars staged the nation's first rock benefit, called "Account No. 904." The concert was expected to raise up to $1.5 million for Chernobyl.

Officials have not said exactly how the money will be spent. Some money is expected to be spent on decontamination work at and around the plant and some funds are likely to go to the more than 100,000 evacuees.

Officials have said 26 people died as a result of the April 26 fire and explosion. About 190 people remain hospitalized, with 80 in serious condition.

A Soviet newspaper indicated Saturday that some Soviet officials were aware of the gravity of the accident less than 24 hours after it occurred.

It took Soviet authorities three days, until the evening of April 28, to announce the accident in a four-sentence statement. Deputy Premier Boris Shcherbina told a news conference last month that local officials in Chernobyl had underestimated the scope of the disaster, implying that that was the reason for the delay in the announcement.

The Defense Ministry daily Krasnaya Zvezda said helicopter pilots were ordered on April 28 to smother the fire by dropping sand from the air, indicating that at least some officials were aware the plant was spewing radiation and was so dangerous it could only be approached from above.

Authorities contacted Air Force Maj. Gen. Nikolai Antoshchkin, who commanded the helicopter pilots, late on April 26, the newspaper said.

Antoshchkin was told to "leave urgently for the town of Pripyat. They have decided to smother the accident-stricken block there with sand. Obviously no other technique besides helicopters can work," the newspaper said.

The commander had to spend several hours preparing for his mission and arrived in Pripyat, 2½ miles from the plant, on April 27, the newspaper said.

Shcherbina, head of the government commission set up to deal with the accident, told Antoshchkin in Pripyat that "everything depends now on you and your helicopter pilots" and that the only way to approach the reactor was from above, the newspaper said.

The pilots began flying over the reactor on April 28, measuring radiation, taking photographs and dropping sand.

Shcherbina was initially dissatisfied with the pilots' performance, the newspaper said.

American specialist will monitor 100,000 affected by radiation

LOS ANGELES (AP) — An American bone marrow specialist who treated victims of the Soviet nuclear power plant disaster at Chernobyl said Saturday that only two or three more deaths due to radiation were expected in the immediate future.

Dr. Robert Gale, who was greeted on his arrival Saturday in Los Angeles by his wife and two of his three children, signed a long-term agreement with Soviet health experts Friday to monitor for the rest of their lives some 100,000 people possibly affected by radiation from the fire and explosion April 26.

"We will learn a considerable amount about the pathogenesis of cancer as we did after the atomic bomb blasts" in the Japanese cities of Hiroshima and Nagasaki during World War II, Gale said.

Hundreds of thousands of people were studied in Japan following World War II, but modern, sophisticated equipment will yield more telling data on the long-term effects of exposure to heavy radiation, Gale said.

Gale, of the University of California at Los Angeles, told reporters that 26 people in all had died as a result of the accident, two during the initial blast.

All of those who were seriously exposed were within a 30-kilometer radius of the plant, Gale said.

"I believe the (death toll) figure will remain relatively stable and not change by (more than) 10 percent," Gale said, meaning perhaps two or three more deaths in the near future.

Any cancer as a result of the accident will begin appearing in about five years, he said.

The Russian city of Kiev, 80 miles south of the plant, received 15 to 30 times the normal level of atmospheric radiation when the initial radioactive plume passed over, he said.

The Russian city of Kiev, 80 miles south of the plant, received 15 to 30 times the normal level of atmospheric radiation when the initial radioactive plume passed over, he said.

Gale said he flew over Chernobyl and visited the now-evacuated town of Pripyat, where many power plant workers lived.

The cleanup of the Ukrainian town, abandoned by its 25,000 residents nearly six weeks ago, was progressing slowly, he said.

But he said Soviet officials told him children would return to school in the critical 30-kilometer radius by September.

The only motion he saw in Pripyat was laundry flapping in the breeze, Gale said before boarding the flight home.

Gale said he would return to the Soviet Union on July 21 with a delegation from the National Institutes of Health to begin working out details of the study, which he estimated would take about 35 years.

The National Academy of Sciences also will participate, as will experts from other nations, he said.

Sixteen nations have participated so far, Gale said, but he had no list.

Gale said earlier that 13 bone marrow transplants and six injections of fetal liver cells were given to 19 patients critically affected by radiation and that five of the marrow transplant patients were still alive.

The American specialist noted that 1,000 to 2,000 people were screened for radiation exposure soon after the accident at the plant 80 miles north of Kiev.

"Most were judged not to be at risk, but 400 to 800 were admitted to hospitals," he said. "Some are being followed as outpatients."

The number of people hospitalized now has been reduced to about 200, Gale said. The others were found either to have only stress-induced nausea or had normal blood counts indicating no immediate harm.

Soviet officials have said that 299 were hospitalized and that those at Thursday's news conference put the number still confined at 187.

Gale and Vorobyev said no children were among the injured and only two residents of Pripyat are hospitalized. One rode his bicycle into a dangerous area and the other came into contact with contaminated soil, they said.

Official reports have said consistently that those hospitalized were plant workers, firemen who fought the reactor blaze and volunteer rescuers.

Filipino minister won't pin all hopes on truce

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Defense Minister Juan Ponce Enrile was quoted as saying Saturday he has misgivings about planned negotiations for a cease-fire between communist rebels and the government of President Corazon Aquino.

"We'll give it a try although I must tell you I will not pin all my hopes on this truce," the Philippine News Agency reported Enrile as saying in a speech to a women's organization.

The talks would be the first in the 17-year insurgency.

According to PNA, Enrile said he knows how communists think and operate and "I would not be (so) imprudent as to accept their initial effort as already a sign that we are there."

Enrile was reacting to Thursday's announcement by Mrs. Aquino that she accepted the Communist Party's nomination of Satur Ocampo, former journalist and party leader, as its chief representative in cease-fire negotiations expected to begin soon.

The president had said she would announce her negotiators within 48 hours, but in a presidential palace statement published Saturday Executive Secretary Joker Arroyo said Mrs. Aquino has decided to keep the names confidential lest the negotiators be "hounded" by the media.

"The effectiveness of the negotiations might be impaired if (the government representatives are) identified since it will be very delicate," Arroyo said. "A degree of confidentiality will be necessary."

Arroyo did not specify the time of the planned cease-fire talks, saying only that they "will start very soon."

Meanwhile, a new group that includes politicians who supported deposed President Ferdinand E. Marcos, criticized Mrs. Aquino for agreeing to negotiate with the Communist Party and its military arm, the New People's Army.

Negotiating with the rebels is "virtual recognition by the present regime that the (Communist Party) is a belligerent force with substantial control over Philippine territory," the group, known by the acronym PATROL, said in a statement published in the Daily Express newspaper.

"It is naive for anyone to think that the (Communist Party) will abandon armed struggle," it said. "If they go to the negotiating table at all, it is only for a breathing spell or for sizing up the strength of the government."

Although Enrile said he had doubts about the outcome of a potential cease-fire, according to the Philippine News Agency report, he called on Filipinos to support Mrs. Aquino so her programs for solving the insurgency and economic problems will succeed.

"If this government will fail, I think I need not tell you that the future would be very bleak indeed" because the Communists could then take over, Enrile was quoted as saying.

The PNA report did not elaborate and Enrile could not be reached for further comment after office hours on the weekend.

Apartheid still separates legally married mixed-race couple

By MAUREEN JOHNSON

MARIANNHILL, South Africa (AP) — A year after becoming South Africa's first couple to marry legally across racial lines, Protas Madlala and his white American wife are living apart and thinking about leaving the country.

While whites and non-whites can marry, the rules of apartheid still dictate where they live and work.

For the former Suzanne Leclerc of Cumberland, R.I., and her husband Protas, it means they either live together in a squalid black township or live apart.

Unable to get permission to work in South Africa, Mrs. Madlala has taken a job in Transkei, a nominally independent black homeland in South Africa, 235 miles from her husband.

He lives here in Mariannhill, a church-run settlement near Durban, where he has a job as a community worker.

Tired of being gawked at by curious blacks and sometimes hostile whites, Madlala and his wife avoid shopping or eating out together during their reunions once a month.

"Some problems are tied up with people's identity — things that don't change just by changing the law," said Mrs. Madlala, 30, an anthropology graduate from George Washington University in Washington, D.C. "South Africa is just not geared to mixed marriages."

She met Protas Madlala, also 30, in Washington in 1984 while he was studying there at American University for a master's degree in communications.

He lives alone in his tin-roof, three-room home. It has no running water or electricity and is surrounded by shanties, broken cars and squawking chickens in a dusty, rundown black settlement.

"If we can't get decent accommodation where we can be together, then we will go," he said. "I cannot sacrifice my wife to this. And it is not just the facilities. Culturally, she is isolated here."

About 450 couples have married across racial lines since the white-minority government lifted a 39-year ban on mixed marriages last June 14, as part of its piecemeal reforms of apartheid.

A white who marries across the color line takes on the legal status of the darker spouse. That means living in an area segregated for blacks, Indians or people of mixed race who are known as "coloreds."

The reform move has turned out to be a mixed blessing in a land where residential areas, state schools and some public transport remain segregated.

Where a couple of different color dining together do not turn too many heads in a five-star hotel, they become a conversation stopper in more recently desegregated cafes or suburban restaurants.

Hostility and the myriad of laws have driven out some of those mixed-race couples for whom emigration is an option because, like the Madlalas, one partner is a foreigner.

Jack Salter, 54, a Briton who settled in South Africa 22 years ago, left in April with his 23-year-old colored wife — succumbing to abuse from whites and after having his grocery store shut down.

The white local authority in Kirkwood, a suburb of the Eastern Cape city of Port Elizabeth, withdrew Salter's trading license on grounds he had effectively become a colored. Salter regained the license in a Supreme Court suit, but declared he had had enough.

The far-right Reformed National Party has said the lifting of bans on marriage and interracial sex symbolized "the immense threat to the continued existence of white society."

It used pictures of the Madlala wedding and spotlighted other couples in a successful parliamentary by-election campaign against President P.W. Botha's governing National Party last year in Sasolburg.

In a telephone interview from Umtata, the Transkei capital, Mrs. Madlala said her determination to marry in South Africa last June 15 was a statement against apartheid, whether the law was changed or not.

It was changed the night before the wedding, and then the problems mounted. Mrs. Madlala was finally given a residence permit only this past April, but not a work permit.

For six months she lived in Mariannhill with her husband, unable to take a bus to Durban with her husband because public transport from Mariannhill is blacks-only.

There are no better living accommodations nearby for blacks, such as Madlala, who can afford them. Mariannhill is particularly run down because the government at one time had hoped to force its residents to move to a tribal homeland. That plan was recently dropped.

A year after becoming South Africa's first couple legally to marry across racial lines, Protas Madlala and his American wife, Susan, are living apart and thinking about leaving the country.

"I had all sorts of stomach ailments and something like typhoid," she said of her life in Mariannhill.

"It is not only the lack of a work permit that keeps me in the Transkei, but also where are we going to live? We can't live in a white area and a black township is not an appropriate place to be living in at all." In Umtata, Mrs. Madlala is a university teacher.

Madlala was more forthright. He said his yearning for privacy was exacerbated by disapproval of black neighbors because he helps with housework instead of leaving it to his wife, in accordance with African tradition.

"The people were very happy for her to be here...but there is no privacy," he said. "They are around all the time. I just can't stand it — even more than whites staring. There is no place left to hide."

During a drive to his office past a white suburb, Madlala pointed out a small house where they would like to live.

"But then perhaps I'd start getting nasty phone calls from (black) radicals saying I was a sellout," he said.

"But if we could get somewhere to live I'd stay. We are very political and we believe the struggle is in South Africa — and we have skills to contribute."

Commonwealth ends attempt at negotiations

LONDON (AP) — A group of Commonwealth leaders is ending its six-month attempt to negotiate a settlement of South Africa's racial conflict, a Commonwealth spokeswoman said Saturday.

Patsy Robertson, deputy director of information for the Commonwealth Secretariat, said the seven-member Eminent Persons Group decided not to return to South Africa for more attempts to mediate between the white-led Pretoria government and black nationalists.

The group was meeting in London over the weekend to review drafts of its final report to heads of government of the Commonwealth, the 49-nation association of Britain and its former colonies, Mrs. Robertson said.

She said the group was in the process of finishing its work and a report was expected to be published in about two weeks.

Members of the group returned from South Africa Wednesday after talks with President P.W. Botha's government on opening negotiations between the white-led government and the main black nationalist groups fighting to end the country's system of racial discrimination.

A spokesman for Botha's office said Saturday in Cape Town, however, that the government was still studying the Commonwealth group's proposals. "The South African government is not aware of any deadline for its response" he said.

In another development, Buckingham Palace and Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's staff both refused to comment on a newspaper report Saturday that said Queen Elizabeth II had urged Mrs. Thatcher's government to agree to economic sanctions against South Africa.

The independent paper Today said the queen is distressed by the bloodshed in South Africa and fears Mrs. Thatcher's refusal to heed calls by other Commonwealth states for Britain to impose trade sanctions could lead to the breakup of the Commonwealth, of which the queen is the titular head.

Mrs. Thatcher contends economic sanctions against South Africa, one of Britain's major trading partner, would be ineffective and possibly counterproductive.

Mrs. Robertson declined to say why the Eminent Persons Group rejected a South African request for further talks.

But The Times of London, in an article Saturday, cited a lack of progress on two key proposals by the Commonwealth group: the release of Nelson Mandela, the imprisoned leader of the outlawed African National Congress, and the lifting of the ban on the guerrilla group.

The newspaper, which did not identify the source of its information, also quoted the letter as saying last month's raids by South African forces into Botswana, Zambia and Zimbabwe "made the negotiating climate more difficult."

South Africa said the raids into the three countries, all of which belong to the Commonwealth, were aimed at ANC forces.

Hijack attempt thwarted

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — A youth who commandeered a Nicaraguan Boeing 727 as it prepared for takeoff Saturday from Managua's Sandino International Airport was captured three hours later when police rushed the plane.

Lenin Cerna, head of the state Security Bureau, told reporters that no shots were fired in the police assault and no one was hurt. An official communique said there were 68 passengers on the plane at the time of the takeover.

"The attempt to hijack the plane was made by a boy, whom we are going to present (to the public) later," Cerna said in an interview on the government's Voice of Nicaragua radio station. "Police managed to dominate him in a lightning operation, which makes us very happy."

Cerna called the would-be hijacker a juvenile delinquent and said he was trying to leave Nicaragua for non-political reasons.

An Interior Ministry communique identified the hijacker as Martin Martinez Lacayo, 21. It said he was armed with a revolver and threatened to kill the passengers if the plane did not take him to El Salvador and also demanded that a Salvadoran diplomat meet him there.

Peso continues sharp slide

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The Mexican peso, in a sharp slide for a week, plunged well past 700 pesos to the U.S. dollar at the close of the business week in free market currency trading.

Private exchange houses Friday quoted the dollar as high as 750 pesos for those wanting to buy, although most were not selling. Banks were selling only limited amounts of dollars, and in some cases had suspended dollar trading.

At least one exchange house renewed sales of dollars in early afternoon, selling them for 729 pesos. A person wanting to exchange a dollar for Mexican currency received as many as 719 pesos in return.

On Thursday, a dollar could be traded for 635 pesos and it took 642 pesos to buy one in the private exchange houses in Mexico City.

Bomb blasts kill three

LIMA, Peru (AP) — Four bombs exploded Saturday in a Lima plaza before and after President Alan Garcia attended a ceremony there, killing three people and wounding at least five, police reported.

They said the first bomb went off about five minutes before Garcia arrived at the Bolognesi Plaza for the ceremony honoring Francisco Bolognesi, killed in 1880 in a war with Chile. Three other bombs exploded after the president left.

A spokesman for the Investigative Police said it was believed the bombs were placed by guerrillas of the Maoist Shining Path movement.

The official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the first bomb exploded at a small outdoor drink stand and seriously injured two children. He said the stand and all other stores around the plaza had been closed as part of the heavy security for Garcia's visit.

Nearly an hour after the president left the plaza, two bombs destroyed a restaurant there, killing a waiter, a bread salesman and a man dining at an outside table, the spokesman said.

Iraq welcomes rebel

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — An Iranian rebel leader wanted by the Khomeini regime arrived in Baghdad Saturday after being pressured to leave France and was welcomed by high-level Iraqi officials, the state-run Iraqi News Agency said.

Massoud Rajavi, leader of the People's Mujahedeen Resistance, had been living in exile in France, and his departure from Paris came amid stepped-up French efforts to win freedom for nine Frenchmen kidnapped in Lebanon. Iran is thought to have connections with the Islamic Jihad — or Islamic Holy War — group which claims to hold four of the hostages.

Islamic Jihad pledges loyalty to Iran's spiritual leader, Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini.

LaRouche publication long on conspiracy, short on intelligence

By WILLIAM M. WELCH

WASHINGTON (AP) — It's been read by a presidential adviser and on Capitol Hill. You can't buy the magazine of extremist Lyndon H. LaRouche at newsstands but you are likely to be solicited to buy a copy when you walk through an airport.

Executive Intelligence Review, a weekly magazine, is the centerpiece of LaRouche's multimillion-dollar network of organizations and publications.

Presented as a journal of intelligence gathered by his followers around the world, the magazine is a collection of LaRouche's political extremism and conspiracy theories that produces such claims as:

— FBI Director William Webster is "operating on behalf of Soviet intelligence," and another top FBI official is a "reputed homosexual."

— Henry Kissinger, secretary of state under Richard Nixon, is plotting to take over the Reagan administration.

— The International Monetary Fund is responsible for spreading AIDS.

— "Traitors in the U.S. State Department and Senate" plotted a coup against deposed leader Ferdinand Marcos in the Philippines.

It has carried a LaRouche treatise on colonizing the moon and Mars, and articles suggesting White House Chief of Staff Donald Regan is linked to drugs and money-laundering.

And in a column upon the death of Soviet leader Yuri Andropov, there was this line: "The word is that a lot of bureaucrats at the State Department will be wearing their pantyhose at half mast at tonight's cocktail parties."

A year's subscription costs $396, and the magazine is near the heart of LaRouche's considerable fund-raising efforts. While the magazine can't be found on newsstands, devoted followers hawking the magazine are a familiar scene at big-city airports. And credit cards are accepted.

LaRouche, a former Marxist and frequent candidate for president, aims the magazine at businesses, conservatives and those concerned with security. He is listed as founder and contributing editor. His organization has claimed at least 7,000 subscribers.

Norman Bailey, a former member of President Reagan's National Security Council specializing in international economics, said he read the magazine regularly while at the White House and found it useful. He adds, though, that he considers LaRouche a paranoid fanatic.

"They've got a pretty good private intelligence network," Bailey said in an interview. "They would give me information about the attitudes of certain ministers, types of things I could not get from our intelligence activities.

"If you take out the personal attacks on people like Kissinger and the Queen of England...and if you eliminate the concept that everything that's happened in the last 4,000 years is due to some conspiracy, you can get some damn useful stuff out of it," he added.

Samuel Francis, national security aide to Sen. John East, R-N.C., said he also believes there is valid international intelligence in the magazine, though he made clear he is no supporter of LaRouche.

"I've seen some things in EIR I knew to be true, that were not publicly known, but it was always embedded in this conspiracy stuff so that you couldn't really use it," he said.

The slick-cover magazine typically has 72 pages, with the only ads for other LaRouche publications and services.

It has been published since 1974 and has made some wildly incorrect predictions. A May 1977 edition erroneously predicted an Israeli attack on Saudi Arabian oil fields "including the probable use of atomic weapons." The magazine also made this prediction about President Carter:

"Unless the Carter administration puts across its fascist 'energy policy,' which is now improbable, or unless a thermonuclear war with the Warsaw Pact erupts this spring or summer, which is still a grave possibility, the impeachment of the administration of Jimmy Carter should begin no later than the autumn of 1977."

Vietnam veteran deluged by calls after reviving girl

WEST CHICAGO, Ill. (AP) — A legless Vietnam veteran who crawled 20 yards to rescue a nearly drowned toddler says he has been deluged by well-wishers' calls from coast to coast, but the only thing he cares about is "that little girl."

One-year-old Jennifer Kroll was released from the hospital Friday, two days after James Patridge raced to her aid after the girl's mother pulled her lifeless body from the family swimming pool.

"We stopped by Jim's house tonight," Michael Kroll, Jennifer's father, said Friday night. "It was his first chance to be with the baby after the incident happened."

Patridge, who lost both legs in a 1966 land mine explosion in Vietnam, said the child appeared completely recovered.

"The little girl is fine now," he said. "There's no brain damage."

Patridge, 38, was working in his garage when he heard the screams of Jennifer's mother, Tammy, and took off in his wheel chair across a field toward the Kroll house.

AT&T, union leaders meet with mediator

WASHINGTON (AP) — Efforts resumed Saturday to settle the seven-day-old strike of 155,000 American Telephone & Telegraph Co. workers, as both sides met separately with a federal mediator.

Kay McMurray, director of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, met first with union officials, including Morton Bahr, president of the striking Communications Workers of America, said union spokeswoman Francine Zucker.

McMurray then met with company officials, including AT&T Vice President Ray Williams and Robert Livingston, director of labor relations, said Herb Linnen, an AT&T spokesman.

Linnen declined to characterize the meetings as representing either progress or lack of progress, but Zucker said, "We would say it's a hope for an early resolution to the conflict."

"I'm sure the company doesn't want to go into another business week facing the problems it's facing," she said.

The union claims the strike is costing the company $60 million a day. Supervisors and managers have been filling in for striking workers. The company has hired 3,000 temporary workers and said it may hire thousands more if the strike continues.

The strike, the largest in the country in three years, began at 12:01 a.m. June 1. The dispute centers on CWA's refusal to accept contract changes and a wage scale that AT&T says it needs to stay competitive in the rapidly changing telecommunications equipment manufacturing and installing business.

The company has proposed an 8 percent wage increase spread over three years and wants to end cost-of-living increases.

Beirut hostage's brother dies during flight home

OCALA, Fla. (AP) — Glenn Anderson, brother of Beirut hostage and Associated Press correspondent Terry Anderson, died Saturday of lung cancer during a plane flight home from New York, where he was being treated. He was 46.

Glenn Anderson's death was the second in Terry Anderson's immediate family since the journalist was kidnapped in March 1985. The Andersons' father, Glenn R. Anderson, died Feb. 15 at age 69, also of cancer.

Glenn Anderson died aboard a private twin-engine Cessna during a flight from Batavia, N.Y., where his sister lives, to his hometown of Ocala, said Nancy Cameron, a nurse who was aboard the plane.

"He was just a lot sicker than we knew, but he knew," said Ms. Cameron, who works with Washington Aviation Ministries, a volunteer group that frequently transports people for medical purposes.

Last week, Glenn Anderson made a videotape pleading for the release of his brother, one of five Americans kidnapped in Lebanon who are still missing. Glenn Anderson asked Lebanese officials to broadcast the tape on Lebanese television.

"This is a message to the people holding my brother Terry," he said in the emotional appeal.

"My father died of cancer waiting to see Terry. He did not see him. Now I have cancer and I made a vow I would not die until I saw Terry. That vow is very close to an end. Please release him. I wish to see him one more time. Please release him. Thank you."

The Lebanese broadcast a videotaped birthday message to Anderson last year at his family's request. It is not known whether Terry Anderson ever saw that message.

Hijack attempt thwarted

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — A youth who commandeered a Nicaraguan Boeing 727 as it prepared for takeoff Saturday from Managua's Sandino International Airport was captured three hours later when police rushed the plane.

Lenin Cerna, head of the state Security Bureau, told reporters that no shots were fired in the police assault and no one was hurt. An official communique said there were 68 passengers on the plane at the time of the takeover.

"The attempt to hijack the plane was made by a boy, whom we are going to present (to the public) later," Cerna said in an interview on the government's Voice of Nicaragua radio station. "Police managed to dominate him in a lightning operation, which makes us very happy."

Cerna called the would-be hijacker a juvenile delinquent and said he was trying to leave Nicaragua for non-political reasons.

An Interior Ministry communique identified the hijacker as Martin Martinez Lacayo, 21. It said he was armed with a revolver and threatened to kill the passengers if the plane did not take him to El Salvador and also demanded that a Salvadoran diplomat meet him there.

Peso continues sharp slide

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The Mexican peso, in a sharp slide for a week, plunged well past 700 pesos to the U.S. dollar at the close of the business week in free market currency trading.

Private exchange houses Friday quoted the dollar as high as 750 pesos for those wanting to buy, although most were not selling. Banks were selling only limited amounts of dollars, and in some cases had suspended dollar trading.

At least one exchange house renewed sales of dollars in early afternoon, selling them for 729 pesos. A person wanting to exchange a dollar for Mexican currency received as many as 719 pesos in return.

On Thursday, a dollar could be traded for 635 pesos and it took 642 pesos to buy one in the private exchange houses in Mexico City.

Bomb blasts kill three

LIMA, Peru (AP) — Four bombs exploded Saturday in a Lima plaza before and after President Alan Garcia attended a ceremony there, killing three people and wounding at least five, police reported.

They said the first bomb went off about five minutes before Garcia arrived at the Bolognesi Plaza for the ceremony honoring Francisco Bolognesi, killed in 1880 in a war with Chile. Three other bombs exploded after the president left.

A spokesman for the Investigative Police said it was believed the bombs were placed by guerrillas of the Maoist Shining Path movement.

The official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the first bomb exploded at a small outdoor drink stand and seriously injured two children. He said the stand and all other stores around the plaza had been closed as part of the heavy security for Garcia's visit.

Nearly an hour after the president left the plaza, two bombs destroyed a restaurant there, killing a waiter, a bread salesman and a man dining at an outside table, the spokesman said.

Iraq welcomes rebel

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — An Iranian rebel leader wanted by the Khomeini regime arrived in Baghdad Saturday after being pressured to leave France and was welcomed by high-level Iraqi officials, the state-run Iraqi News Agency said.

Massoud Rajavi, leader of the People's Mujahedeen Resistance, had been living in exile in France, and his departure from Paris came amid stepped-up French efforts to win freedom for nine Frenchmen kidnapped in Lebanon. Iran is thought to have connections with the Islamic Jihad — or Islamic Holy War — group which claims to hold four of the hostages.

Islamic Jihad pledges loyalty to Iran's spiritual leader, Ayatollah Ruholiah Khomeini.

LaRouche publication long on conspiracy, short on intelligence

By WILLIAM M. WELCH

WASHINGTON (AP) — It's been read by a presidential adviser and on Capitol Hill. You can't buy the magazine of extremist Lyndon H. LaRouche at newsstands but you are likely to be solicited to buy a copy when you walk through an airport.

Executive Intelligence Review, a weekly magazine, is the centerpiece of LaRouche's multimillion-dollar network of organizations and publications.

Presented as a journal of intelligence gathered by his followers around the world, the magazine is a collection of LaRouche's political extremism and conspiracy theories that produces such claims as:

— FBI Director William Webster is "operating on behalf of Soviet intelligence," and another top FBI official is a "reputed homosexual."

— Henry Kissinger, secretary of state under Richard Nixon, is plotting to take over the Reagan administration.

— The International Monetary Fund is responsible for spreading AIDS.

— "Traitors in the U.S. State Department and Senate" plotted a coup against deposed leader Ferdinand Marcos in the Philippines.

It has carried a LaRouche treatise on colonizing the moon and Mars, and articles suggesting White House Chief of Staff Donald Regan is linked to drugs and money-laundering.

And in a column upon the death of Soviet leader Yuri Andropov, there was this line: "The word is that a lot of bureaucrats at the State Department will be wearing their pantyhose at half mast at tonight's cocktail parties."

A year's subscription costs $396, and the magazine is near the heart of LaRouche's considerable fund-raising efforts. While the magazine can't be found on newsstands, devoted followers hawking the magazine are a familiar scene at big-city airports. And credit cards are accepted.

LaRouche, a former Marxist and frequent candidate for president, aims the magazine at businesses, conservatives and those concerned with security. He is listed as founder and contributing editor. His organization has claimed at least 7,000 subscribers.

Norman Bailey, a former member of President Reagan's National Security Council specializing in international economics, said he read the magazine regularly while at the White House and found it useful. He adds, though, that he considers LaRouche a paranoid fanatic.

"They've got a pretty good private intelligence network," Bailey said in an interview. "They would give me information about the attitudes of certain ministers, types of things I could not get from our intelligence activities.

"If you take out the personal attacks on people like Kissinger and the Queen of England...and if you eliminate the concept that everything that's happened in the last 4,000 years is due to some conspiracy, you can get some damn useful stuff out of it," he added.

Samuel Francis, national security aide to Sen. John East, R-N.C., said he also believes there is valid international intelligence in the magazine, though he made clear he is no supporter of LaRouche.

"I've seen some things in EIR I knew to be true, that were not publicly known, but it was always embedded in this conspiracy stuff so that you couldn't really use it," he said.

The slick-cover magazine typically has 72 pages, with the only ads for other LaRouche publications and services.

It has been published since 1974 and has made some wildly incorrect predictions. A May 1977 edition erroneously predicted an Israeli attack on Saudi Arabian oil fields "including the probable use of atomic weapons." The magazine also made this prediction about President Carter:

"Unless the Carter administration puts across its fascist 'energy policy,' which is now improbable, or unless a thermonuclear war with the Warsaw Pact erupts this spring or summer, which is still a grave possibility, the impeachment of the administration of Jimmy Carter should begin no later than the autumn of 1977."

Vietnam veteran deluged by calls after reviving girl

WEST CHICAGO, Ill. (AP) — A legless Vietnam veteran who crawled 20 yards to rescue a nearly drowned toddler says he has been deluged by well-wishers' calls from coast to coast, but the only thing he cares about is "that little girl."

One-year-old Jennifer Kroll was released from the hospital Friday, two days after James Patridge raced to her aid after the girl's mother pulled her lifeless body from the family swimming pool.

"We stopped by Jim's house tonight," Michael Kroll, Jennifer's father, said Friday night. "It was his first chance to be with the baby after the incident happened."

Patridge, who lost both legs in a 1966 land mine explosion in Vietnam, said the child appeared completely recovered.

"The little girl is fine now," he said. "There's no brain damage."

Patridge, 38, was working in his garage when he heard the screams of Jennifer's mother, Tammy, and took off in his wheel chair across a field toward the Kroll house.

AT&T, union leaders meet with mediator

WASHINGTON (AP) — Efforts resumed Saturday to settle the seven-day-old strike of 155,000 American Telephone & Telegraph Co. workers, as both sides met separately with a federal mediator.

Kay McMurray, director of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, met first with union officials, including Morton Bahr, president of the striking Communications Workers of America, said union spokeswoman Francine Zucker.

McMurray then met with company officials, including AT&T Vice President Ray Williams and Robert Livingston, director of labor relations, said Herb Linnen, an AT&T spokesman.

Linnen declined to characterize the meetings as representing either progress or lack of progress, but Zucker said, "We would say it's a hope for an early resolution to the conflict."

"I'm sure the company doesn't want to go into another business week facing the problems it's facing," she said.

The union claims the strike is costing the company $60 million a day. Supervisors and managers have been filling in for striking workers. The company has hired 3,000 temporary workers and said it may hire thousands more if the strike continues.

The strike, the largest in the country in three years, began at 12:01 a.m. June 1. The dispute centers on CWA's refusal to accept contract changes and a wage scale that AT&T says it needs to stay competitive in the rapidly changing telecommunications equipment manufacturing and installing business.

The company has proposed an 8 percent wage increase spread over three years and wants to end cost-of-living increases.

Beirut hostage's brother dies during flight home

OCALA, Fla. (AP) — Glenn Anderson, brother of Beirut hostage and Associated Press correspondent Terry Anderson, died Saturday of lung cancer during a plane flight home from New York, where he was being treated. He was 46.

Glenn Anderson's death was the second in Terry Anderson's immediate family since the journalist was kidnapped in March 1985. The Andersons' father, Glenn R. Anderson, died Feb. 15 at age 69, also of cancer.

Glenn Anderson died aboard a private twin-engine Cessna during a flight from Batavia, N.Y., where his sister lives, to his hometown of Ocala, said Nancy Cameron, a nurse who was aboard the plane.

"He was just a lot sicker than we knew, but he knew," said Ms. Cameron, who works with Washington Aviation Ministries, a volunteer group that frequently transports people for medical purposes.

Last week, Glenn Anderson made a videotape pleading for the release of his brother, one of five Americans kidnapped in Lebanon who are still missing. Glenn Anderson asked Lebanese officials to broadcast the tape on Lebanese television.

"This is a message to the people holding my brother Terry," he said in the emotional appeal.

"My father died of cancer waiting to see Terry. He did not see him. Now I have cancer and I made a vow I would not die until I saw Terry. That vow is very close to an end. Please release him. I wish to see him one more time. Please release him. Thank you."

The Lebanese broadcast a videotaped birthday message to Anderson last year at his family's request. It is not known whether Terry Anderson ever saw that message.

NATION IN BRIEF

Suspected killers caught

NORTHAMPTON, Pa. (AP) — Two men accused of storming a bank branch and killing three employees made off with about $2,200 before they were caught two miles from the shooting scene, police said Saturday.

The bank manager and a customer remained hospitalized, one in critical condition, with gunshot wounds from the attack Friday at the East Allen Township branch of First National Bank of Bath, 10 miles north of Allentown, officials said.

Stanley Joseph Hertzog, 29, of Allentown and Martin Daniel Appel, 28, of Northampton, were charged with murder, attempted murder, aggravated assault, bank robbery and conspiracy. District Justice Charles Kutzler ordered them held without bail at Northampton County Prison pending a June 16 hearing.

A crowd of more than 200 chanted "Kill 'em! Kill 'em!" while police led away the suspects Friday.

About three hours after the midday shootings, the men were stopped in a car fitting descriptions given by witnesses, police said.

Trooper Charles H. Marshall, who arrested the two, said Saturday that the bank indicated that $2,222 was taken but said the bank was waiting for auditors' reports.

Union deplores 'workfare'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Thirty-eight states require at least some welfare recipients to work for at least part of their benefits, a public employees union said Saturday, deploring the requirement as a throwback to the workhouses of Elizabethan England.

The American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees released a list of state "workfare" requirements that shows a majority of the states impose at least some minimum work standards.

Workfare requirements generally require able-bodied welfare recipients to participate in some job-related function, such as community service, public works projects or job training.

Gerald W. McEntee, AFSCME president, said the prevalance of workfare "deeply disturbs me, as it should the nation. This is 1986, not 1586 when in Elizabethan England paupers were sentenced to earn their subsistence keep in workhouses.

"Welfare recipients need real jobs," McEntee said. "They need support services and bona fide training to qualify for these jobs. But workfare provides neither."

Customs will review order

HONOLULU (AP) — Former Philippine president Ferdinand Marcos will not get back $7 million in jewels, currency and other items until a review of a judge's order to release them, a Customs official said.

Philippine officials said the order was likely to be appealed.

U.S. District Judge Harold Fong on Friday ordered the U.S. Customs Service to release goods Marcos and his party brought with them to Hawaii on Feb. 26 after leaving the Philippines. The Customs Service had been holding the goods pending a court decision on their ownership.

"Lawyers representing the Philippines have assured us that U.S. government lawyers are going to appeal the decision and take it to the limit," Horacio Paredes, spokesman for the Philippine Consulate in Honolulu, said Friday. He did not elaborate.

The new Philippine government has claimed Marcos illegally took the money and goods from the country. Two Marcos aides filed suit in March for their return.

Rich would gain more from tax plan than middle class

By JIM LUTHER

WASHINGTON (AP) — After-tax income of the richest Americans would rise more than three times as much as that of a $30,000-a-year worker under the tax-overhaul plan that the Senate is preparing to pass.

A person or family earning $200,000 and up would have 1.4 percent more to spend once the bill, written by the Senate Finance Committee, was fully effective, according to new estimates by the staff of the Joint Committee on Taxation. The average taxpayer earning between $30,000 and $40,000 would realize a 0.4-percent increase in after-tax income.

Sen. George Mitchell, D-Maine, sees the new figures as ammunition for one of the major battles over the tax bill. He is calling on the Senate to create a third tax bracket in the bill for the rich and use the money to increase tax relief for middle-income families.

"The reinstatement of a three-rate structure from the president's initial proposal would make the entire bill more fair and permit real relief to the people who most need it — the middle-income, wage-earning people of this country," Mitchell said.

Mitchell, a member of the Finance Committee, will ask the Senate this week to adopt his amendment in the interest of fairness, even though President Reagan and the Senate leadership are urging that the bill be approved intact. They have expressed fear that if any significant amendment is adopted, that would open the way for other changes, and eventually the measure would fall apart.

But those who are sponsoring amendments disagree.

"It's a phony argument to say an amendment is undercutting the bill," said Sen. William Roth, R-Del., who wants to change the measure to allow tax-deductible Individual Retirement Accounts for all workers. "That's the legislative process."

Mitchell, like Roth, says he will support the bill even if his amendment loses. But changing the measure to shift more of the tax relief away from the rich can only improve it, he said.

"Many middle-class Americans believe that their concerns are not central to either political party, that the Republicans care only about protecting the rich while the Democrats only care about helping the poor," Mitchell explained. "The Finance Committee bill, which helps the poor and the rich but does little or nothing for middle-class taxpayers, tends to confirm this belief.

"Both parties can disprove it by changing the bill to provide more relief to the middle class," Mitchell added.

The House-passed bill also would mean greater percentage increases in after-tax income for high-income people, although the disparity is not as large as in the Senate measure. Under the House plan, after-tax increases of the over-$200,000 group would increase by 1.9 percent; for the $30,000 worker, by 1.0 percent.

The Finance Committee estimates that people with incomes of $200,000 and up, who pay 11.6 percent of the total tax, would get 16.1 percent of the tax cut in its bill. Those with incomes under $20,000, who pay 13.7 percent of the tax under present law, would get 25.9 percent of the tax relief.

In between, people with incomes of $75,000 to $200,000, who carry 13.6 percent of the tax load, would receive 10.4 percent of the tax reduction. That leaves the greatest bloc of taxpayers — those with incomes between $20,000 and $75,000 — paying 61 percent of the total burden and getting only 47.6 percent of the tax reduction.

The tax relief for the over-$200,000 group is disproportionate to that granted other taxpayers because the bill would reduce the 50-percent maximum individual tax rate to 27 percent. Under present law, that top rate is paid only by couples with taxable incomes (after deductions and exemptions) above $175,250 and by single people above $88,270.

Mitchell wants to add a third rate of 33 percent.

About 80 percent of taxpayers would pay at the only other rate in the bill, 15 percent. Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., chairman of the Finance Committee says the bill has a considerable amount of momentum only because of that rate structure, more easily understood than the 14 and 15 rates in present law, and the fact the top rate would drop to the lowest point in a half century.

Reagan's original tax plan had three rates, with a top of 35 percent. The House approved a four-rate system with a maximum of 38 percent.

Reagan: Tax law 'hodge-podge of special favors'

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, assailing the current federal income tax law as "a hodge-podge of special favors" and a drag on the national economy, said Saturday he hopes to sign tax overhaul legislation by Labor Day.

"What a way to end the summer," the president declared in his weekly radio address from Camp David, the presidential weekend retreat in Maryland.

Reagan said the current law encourages investors to put their money into tax shelters instead of into productive enterprises that "create wealth and generate new jobs."

"When you get down to it, the tax shelters are not just a break for a lucky few," he said. "They are a drag on the whole national economy and a form of hidden taxation on us all."

"Because of these shelters, the fancy schemes and fast angles protected by the law, there is less investment in the new products and services offered by the entrepreneuers," he said.

"The current code," the president said, "is hardly a code at all. It's a hodge-podge of special favors, a product of the great Washington taffy pull, the favor seeking and influence peddling.

"So it's unfair, yes, but even worse, all this special privilege makes the code the biggest single obstacle to economic growth in our nation today.

Turning to the tax overhaul bill being debated in the Senate, Reagan said, "If we can get that bill adopted, if we can stop the Washington lobbyists from loading it up with the bells and whistles of special privilege, we hope to get the House of Representatives to agree to it in legislative conference and that means that I could sign that bill by Labor Day."

Victories show women can be viable candidates

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — Primary election victories by women in several Midwestern states this year are proof that state government is no longer a male bastion, says a female political organizer.

"We're certainly seeing that this is the year that women are being perceived as viable political candidates," said Monica McFadden, director of political programs for the National Women's Political Caucus in Washington, D.C.

Art Davis, chairman of the Democratic Party in Iowa, said the Midwest's battered farm-based economy has made conditions ripe for a political surge by women to the top echelons of state government.

"The Midwest has seen the results of 'politics as usual,' " Davis said after Tuesday's Iowa primaries, which included victories by women in both parties' races for lieutenant governor. That ensures the first female holder of that office since it was created in 1857.

Two women also will square off in the Iowa secretary of state election in November. Earlier this year, women swept the Republican and Democratic primaries for governor in Nebraska, which has never had a woman in that office.

Women also have fared well in other Midwest primaries this year.

In May, Jill L. Long won the Democratic nomination to run for U.S. Senate in Indiana against Republican incumbent Dan Quayle.

Janice Hart, a follower of extremist Lyndon LaRouche, won the Democratic nomination for secretary of state in Illinois in March by besting another woman, Aurelia Pucinski, who had the support of the state Democratic Party. State Rep. Judy Koehler won the Illinois Republican primary to run against Democratic incumbent U.S. Sen. Alan Dixon.

A key test awaits in Missouri in August, when Lt. Gov. Harriett Woods takes on a crowded field in the Democratic primary for the right to run for U.S. Senate.

Iowa's female winners were elated after Tuesday's victories.

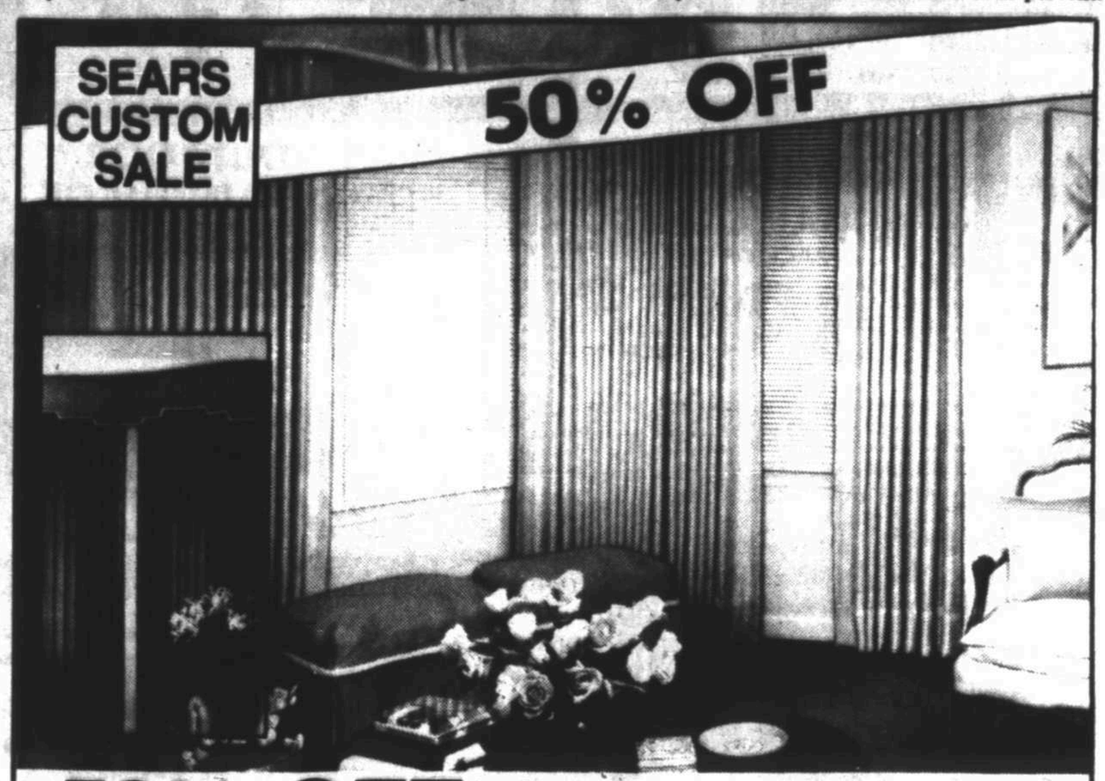

"I think it's great," said Jo Ann Zimmerman, a state representative from Waukee who captured 44 percent of the Democratic vote to beat two male lieutenant governor candidates.

"I think it pretty well says what Nebraska has already said — that is, that women are viable candidates," added Joan Lipsky, a Cedar Rapids attorney who will face Mrs. Zimmerman after getting 41 percent of the Republican vote to beat two male opponents.

Davis said he is not surprised by the increasing political success of women, who in the past have been primarily behind-the-scenes campaign workers and holders of local offices in Iowa. He said women often feel the brunt of economic hard times, so it is only natural they became more politically active as the farm economy soured.

"I think the barriers to women are rapidly disappearing, and the Midwest is a big part of that turnaround," Davis said.

"I think it means the voters of Iowa have accepted the idea of voting for women," said Elaine Baxter, a state representative from Burlington who got 47 percent of the vote to top two men for the Democratic secretary of state nomination. She will face GOP nominee Dawn Roberts, who ran unopposed in her party's primary.

HOW THEY VOTED

New public housing put on hold by House

Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Votes of area members of Congress on key issues during the week ending June 6, 1986.

Key HOUSE votes

HOUSE SHIFTS HOUSING FUNDS FROM CONSTRUCTION TO RENOVATION.

In a major shift from half a century of federal housing policy, the House voted 223-180 Thursday to put construction of new housing units for low-income citizens on hold and concentrate on rehabilitating existing structures.

Congress has already appropriated an estimated $860 million for construction of new public housing in 1986, but the amendment means this money could be used only to complete units — no new construction can begin. The remainder of the money would be spent for rehabilitation of existing structures. The Senate would have to approve the legislation before it can go into effect.

Supporters said the funds already appropriated could build 4,600 new units or repair 64,000. The vacancy rates for existing housing units are over 30 percent in many cities, they argued, because so many existing units are uninhabitable.

Opponents argued that simply rehabilitating existing housing would not solve the low-income housing shortage. The amendment was just the latest attempt to cut new construction for public housing, they charged. Others said that both rehabilitation and new construction are needed to solve the problem.

Voting to refurbish existing public housing instead of funding new units: Reps. Tom Loeffler, R-Hunt; Larry Combest, R-Lubbock; Richard Armey, R-Denton; Beau Boulter, R-Amarillo.

Voting against:

Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez, D-San Antonio.

HOUSE REJECTS ATTEMPT TO TERMINATE URBAN DEVELOPMENT ACTION GRANT PROGRAM.

Disregarding the wishes of the Reagan administration, the House Wednesday rejected an amendment to eliminate the Urban Development Action Grant program on a 93-289 vote. The amendment was offered to the Housing Act of 1986.

The UDAG program was established in 1978 to help alleviate physical and economic deterioration in urban areas of high unemployment through neighborhood reclamation. The Department of Housing and Urban Development awards grants based on the degree of distress in the area and the merit of the project.

The amendment's supporters argued that the UDAG program has allowed giant corporations to build projects that they would have built anyway, but with a federal subsidy. They also said that UDAG grants were concentrated in just a few states and that the amount of permanent jobs created by the program had been highly exaggerated.

Opponents countered by saying that UDAG provides corporations with an incentive to build in an area they otherwise would not consider. This private investment spurs more construction and development, as well as new tax revenues and new jobs, and slows or stops further economic deterioration in low-income urban areas. They also argued that it would be unfair to eliminate the loans that cities and states have come to depend on without providing an alternative means of stimulating economic growth.

Voting to eliminate the UDAG program:

Reps. Tom Loeffler, R-Hunt; Larry Combest, R-Lubbock; Richard Armey, R-Denton; Beau Boulter, R-Amarillo.

Voting against:

Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez, D-San Antonio

Key SENATE votes

SENATE CLEARS WAY FOR SAUDI ARABIA ARMS SALE.

A long-fought battle between the Reagan administration and congressional opponents of a $265 million arms sale to Saudi Arabia came to a close Thursday when the Senate failed to override President Reagan's veto of legislation blocking the sale. The 66-34 vote was one short of the two-thirds majority needed to override a presidential veto.

The weapons sale, proposed by Reagan in early April, was delayed when Congress approved a joint resolution blocking the administration's request. This marked the first time Congress had voted to scuttle an arms sale that had been requested by a president. Reagan vetoed the resolution May 21, and followed up with an intense lobbying effort coupled with a last-minute decision to remove the controversial Stinger missile from the weapons package. The removal of that weapon reportedly convinced eight senators, who originally opposed the deal, to switch votes and support the president on this latest vote.

Current law requires a president to notify Congress of a proposed arms sale, allowing members a 30-day period to either block it or permit the agreement to go forward by failing to intervene. If opposition is prevalent — as was the case with the Saudi arms sale — both chambers must pass a resolution rejecting the proposal. The president can then either bow to Congress or veto the legislation. If the president vetoes the resolution, both chambers must vote to override the veto, or as in this case, the sale will go through.

Those who wanted to override the veto based their opposition to the sale on what they said was a threat to security in the Middle East posed by the weapons, should they fall into the hands of terrorists. They also expressed anger over what they said was a failure on the part of the Saudi government to support U.S. policies.

Opponents chastised those who wanted to override the veto, saying those who continued to try and block the sale were hampering the administration's efforts to promote peace in the Middle East and improve relations with moderate Arab states to offset the military danger from nations such as Iran and Syria.

Voting to override the veto and block the Saudi arms sale:

Sens. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas; Phil Gramm, R-Texas.

SENATE TRIMS PROPOSED INCREASE FOR STUDENT GRANTS.

With an eye on the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings deficit reduction law and the current budget deficit, the Senate June 3 voted to trim by $100 a proposed increase in the minimum amount a college undergraduate can receive each year under the federal Pell Grant program. The amendment was adopted by a largely partisan vote of 60-34.

The amendment cuts the proposed increase in the annual allowance from $2,400 a year to $2,300 — a $200 increase over the present $2,100 cap. It also gives the education secretary additional authority to crack down on students who, in order to qualify for more aid, claim they are financially independent of their parents.

Pell Grants — named for Claiborne Pell, D-RI, a key player in the development of the program — are the primary federal grants given to needy undergraduates. The amendment was attached to the Higher Education Amendments Act, which subsequently passed 93-1.

Voting to cut the proposed increase in student grants from $300 to $200:

Sens. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas; Phil Gram, R-Texas.

Baby boy who fell 17 stories dies of injuries

NEW YORK (AP) — An 11-month-old boy who crawled out the window of his family's apartment and plunged 17 stories to the ground died Saturday, five days after his fall.

Sae Young Kim died of "severe damage to the brain, lungs and several vital internal organs," said Rosalie Kershaw, a spokeswoman for Long Island Jewish Medical Center.

The boy, whose mother had been sewing in another room, climbed onto a couch, then crawled out a window onto an air conditioner sleeve, police said after the accident Monday. His fall was broken by an apple tree limb and some bushes.

Moments later, the baby's mother went to find him, looked out the window and realized something had happened when she saw a crowd in the street below, police said.

The Health Department is investigating why there were no window guards in the family's apartment, spokesman Martin McGinley said Saturday.

WEATHER SUMMARY

More rain possible

From Staff and Wire Reports

Midland's partly cloudy skies may open up a bit today, tonight and Monday and bring more rain.

The weatherman at the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport for today is calling for a 20 percent chance of afternoon thunderstorms today and a high in the lower 90 degrees.

Winds are to be southeasterly at 10 to 20 mph.

For tonight, the weatherman is predicting a 40 percent chance of thunderstorms under increasingly cloudy skies. The low is to be near 70 degrees.

The weatherman is giving a 20 percent chance of afternoon thunderstorms on Monday and a high in the lower 90s.

Saturday's high temperature was 91 degrees, which didn't threaten the record high of 106 degrees for a June 7 in 1964. The overnight low was 70 degrees. The record low for a June 8 is 57 degrees in 1949.

STATE

Tropical moisture remained entrenched over Texas as warm and humid weather coupled with low-level cloudiness brought temperatures in the 80s and 90s across much of the state Saturday.

Meanwhile, scattered showers and thunderstorms continued to dampen the already saturated ground across parts of east, south, southeast and south central Texas.

Other showers and thunderstorms dotted parts of the Permian Basin and the Edwards Plateau as well as offshore along the upper Texas Coast. A ridge of high pressure remained anchored over the Gulf of Mexico as a low pressure center stayed stationary along the Texas-New Mexico border.

NATION

Rain was scattered over much of the eastern half of the nation Saturday, with heavy downpours over Florida and a threat of flooding in New England.

Showers and thunderstorms were scattered from the southern Plains across the lower half of the Mississippi Valley to the southern and central Appalachians and the Great Lakes region.

Rain also extended southward into Georgia and Florida, where Homestead got 2.50 inches of rain during the morning.

Rain was scattered over southern and central New England and along the middle Atlantic Coast. Flood watches were issued for much of southern New England.

Will area teen-agers find summer jobs?

Nobody's sure this year, interviewer says

By HOLLY LONGABERGER
Staff Writer

School is out and hundreds of high school and college students will be searching for jobs in the Midland area.

According to Rick Etheredge, a temporary interviewer for the Summer Youth Employment Program, jobs for youth could be either very limited or stay about the same as last year, depending on the economy.

Etheredge, who is the director of the Alternative Education Center during the school year, has worked with the summer program for eight years.

He said jobs appear to be less plentiful although students have received jobs during the first week.

But, Etheredge stressed, it is too early to tell what the job outlook for youth will be.

"There's a big question mark about the availability of jobs. It is based on speculation and adult employment. There are a lot of variables," he said.

The Summer Youth Employment Program was started about 20 years ago. The program is geared for high school and college students looking for summer employment.

Students can fill out an applications at the Texas Employment Commission on Loraine Street. An interviewer puts the application on file. When an employer calls, the interviewer looks in the youth's file and matches him with the employer.

Last year 540 youth applied and 367 were placed.

The types of jobs that are usually available to the youth are in delivery, fast food, day care, computers, retail sales, office work and janitorial.

Etheredge said the number of youth that have applied this year is about the same as last year.

He said he does take applications from 14-year-olds, but find they are hard to place. He said its easier to place older youth.

But, he said this year he is noticing something different.

"In past years it was easier to categorize applicants. Before, college students weren't interested in fast food or janitor jobs. This year the older students are not as selective," Etheredge said.

Etheredge said another thing that might be seen this summer is adults competing with youth for the summer jobs if adult unemployment keeps rising.

"It's possible that adults might jump at a chance at temporary employment," he added.

He said he would have a much better idea when the unemployment figures come out in three weeks.

Bob Burke, manager of Midland's Texas Employment Commission office, said "Quite frankly I'm puzzled of what will happen this year."

He said that adults might compete with youth for summer jobs or he said some employers might hire youth for the summer to replace permanent workers.

"I have no feeling on which way it will go and the employers I talked to don't know either," Burke claimed. "This is the first summer that no one knows what will happen."

Meanwhile, Etheredge recommended that young people not just depend on him to find them a job.

He advised them to check the newspapers, apply on their own, check the help wanted signs and listen.

"I want to believe if they do that and with my help, they'll get something," he added.

JTPA prepares participants for future employment

By HOLLY LONGABERGER
Staff Writer

For the area's economically disadvantaged youth, Midland's Job Training Partnership Act's Summer Youth Program offers training and work experience for young people ages 14 through 21.

Located at 3001 Illinois, the goal of the JTPA Summer Youth Program is to prepare participants for permanent employment by providing temporary summer jobs.

Students, drop outs and high school graduates are offered various combinations of education, training, work experience and supportive services by JTPA.

Other than age, the two stipulations of the JTPA is that the applicants must be economically disadvantaged and males 18-years-old must be registered with the Selective Service.

W.C. Wilson, coordinator of Midland and Martin counties' JTPA, said the income eligibility guidelines are issued from Washington D.C. and vary with the number of people in the family.

Eighty-seven youth will participate in this year's program.

The program was started about 20 years ago under the name of CETA. In 1982 it was changed to JTPA.

Wilson, who has been in Midland for 10 years, said with the JTPA they were able to do more things with private employers.

"We develop our own programs and work only within the private sector," he said.

Some of the summer programs include, the St. Edwards University program, the Christmas in April program and Career Beginnings programs.

Working with St. Edwards University in Austin the JTPA will send four migrant youth to the university to take courses and work. Wilson said they go to classes half the day and work half the day.

They work in various state offices and clerical work.

In the Christmas in April program six young people will be taught basic carpenter skills and help fix the homes of the elderly in the area.

"It's important to design programs so they will be able to compete in the job market. We want them to utilize the skills that they learn. Our programs seem very successful," Wilson said.

One of its model programs is the new Career Beginnings. In this program the youth will get summer work experience, once-a-week workshops on job finding and job keeping skills and a mentor, preferably in the career the youth is interested in.

Liz Zenteno, a job search trainer at JTAP, said the program will hopefully keep the youth interested in staying in school and give them basic knowledge to make informed decisions about college and jobs.

Ms. Zenteno added the mentor serves as an advisor, encouraging the youth.

"The mentor is a friend not only through the summer months, but someone who continues to help the youth throughout high school," she said.

Wilson said that the young person decides what program he would like to get involved in by expressing his area of interest.

From there, Wilson said staff members try to match the youth up with what he wants.

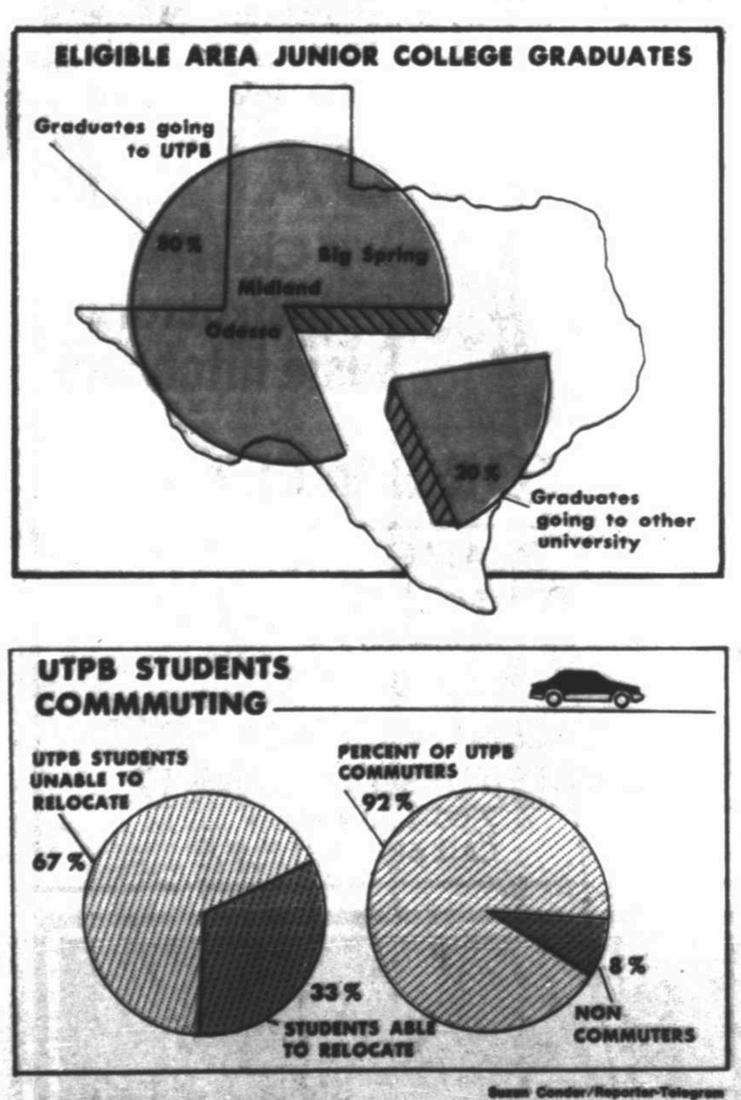

Wilson added that they do give a pre-test and a post-test. "For example, in the Retail Sales Program we test them to find out what the youth knows in the beginning and retest him in the end to find out what he has learned."

Because the JTPA creates its own programs does not mean that jobs will be plentiful, he said.

"We work within a budget and because of the economy our budget was cut by 20 percent. There are not many job opportunities," Wilson said.

Wilson added that the programs start Monday and will only run six weeks because of the lack of money

Basin residents will lobby in favor of UTPB

Susan Condor/Reporter-Telegram

By JULIE HILLRICHS

The eyes of Texas will be upon Midland-Odessa when Petroplex residents converge on the statehouse in Austin Friday trying to convince a committee studying higher education that the area's only upper-level institution is vital.

With rumors of closures and mergers flying, members of the University of Texas of the Permian Basin Development Board will try to fend off what some critics call a "witch hunt" by Gov. Mark White and House Speaker Gib Lewis to close the school or merge it with another. The board is slated to appear before the Select Committee on Higher Education at 9 a.m. in the Senate Chamber of the State Capitol Building.

"Both communities consider it (UTPB) important to West Texas and the citizens of this area," said Joan Baskin, director of the UTPB Development Board and president of the Midland Chamber of Commerce.

"Before we had it (UTPB), Midland-Odessa was one of the largest metropolitan areas in the nation that didn't have access to upper-level and graduate courses," she said. "The state of Texas has generally spent 50 cents of every dollar it received for education. They can deliver it easier in Dallas or Houston because they've got more people there, but their obligation is to every youngster."

Mrs. Baskin said the board will emphasize maintaining UTPB as an upper-level institution, and dismiss the notion that it should be given four-year status. Misguided efforts to make UTPB a four-year school died in 1983 at the end of the 68th Legislative session. The bill would have allowed freshman- and sophomore-level courses at the university, which only offers junior, senior and graduate classes.

"We have Midland College and we have three wonderful junior colleges in Big Spring, Snyder and Odessa to serve as feeders for UTPB. What the people here need are upper-level and graduate courses. We can't look the voters in the eye and say we need more educational institutions," Mrs. Baskin said.

According to task force coordinator Gem Meacham, the university has performed very well fulfilling its role as a regional institution in terms of economics and access.

Transfer students coming out of community colleges generally enroll in upper-level institutions, she said, and 80 percent of all eligible area community college students transfer to UTPB.

She noted about one-third of the total community college enrollment is eligible for transfer, thus providing an explanation for the discrepancies in head count between the area junior colleges and UTPB.

The Permian Basin Center for Energy and Economic Diversification is going to be the "key" to developing and redeveloping the future of sagging energy industry, said Ms. Meacham in an attempt to further illustrate the need for the university.

Approval of the multi-million project came late last year when the University of Texas Board of Regents pledged its support to expand the scope of petroleum-related ventures currently in Midland-Odessa.

The Permian Basin center, described as "a cooperative thrust" similar to the Institute for Biotechnology affiliated with the University of Texas Health Science Center in San Antonio, will be designed to aid the economic diversification of the region by applying research results, commercializing technological developments, introducing new technologies and various other entrepreneurial activities. Construction of the 10- to 15-year project will begin after the spring of 1987.

"The energy industry will come back as we all know, but it will be changing and the university will be needed to pivot that change," Ms. Meacham said.

The task force reported the university is as credible as any other regional institution, in that 92 percent of the students enrolled commute from as far as Big Spring, Fort Stockton, Crane, Alpine and Fort Davis; about 67 percent indicated they would be unable to relocate to get a degree because of income and family or job commitments, she said.

UTPB will continue to provide training and retraining as new industry moves in and the area becomes more diversified, Mrs. Baskin said.

"Because of the trauma in the oil patch, many people will have to go back and reassess or reevaluate their careers and, in some cases, change their careers," she noted. "It would be a fierce blow to this area if they didn't have that option."

In support of the board's effort, Mrs. Baskin said Southwest Airlines has added a one-time-only, nonstop flight to Austin which departs Midland Regional Air Terminal at 6:25 a.m. and arrives in Austin at 7:25 a.m. in time for the hearing. Reservations may be made by calling Southwest reservations and requesting special flight 793. The one-way fare is $59 and several return flights are available including a nonstop return departing Austin at 1:30 p.m.

To register or for information, call Ms. Meacham at 335-6553.

Boredom: Day after day, it's the same old thing

As I sit here at my incredibly messy desk, mindlessly fidgeting with a cigarette lighter, staring at a mostly blank computer screen, trying desperately to come up with an idea to write about, it has suddenly occurred to me that I am bored out of my mind.

As I think back on it, this rather dismal state of affairs has been with me for the past two or three weeks.

Nothing seems to interest me. It is as though I'm just going through the motions, putting in my time while waiting, in an intangible sort of way, for something exciting to happen.

It never does.

Day after day, it is the same old thing. Go to work. Go home. Eat. Sleep. Stare at the walls. In short, life has become tedious. Even those harmless daydreams — normally a dependable source of amusement — have become mundane. I mean, we're talking a serious case of boredom here.

Maybe it is the time of the year. Summer has never been a favorite of mine. Sweating in 95-degree weather does not appeal to me. Fall and spring are much better.

Maybe it is the fact I haven't had a real vacation in over a year. Oh, there have been some three-day weekends here and there, but nothing that would really qualify as a full-fledged vacation, the kind where you spend several weeks planning and anticipating the trip, an activity which invariably is more fun than the vacation itself.

Maybe fate has stepped in and decided it is my turn to be bored. Over the past few months several friends have come to me suffering from the same state of mind. In each case, I was less than sympathetic. I tossed out a joke or two and went about my business. It would seem my lack of concern has come back to haunt me.

Maybe — and, if the truth were known, this is probably the real case — boredom is one of those human conditions we all must endure from time to time and no amount of whining by me or anyone else is going to change that simple fact.

And, it is probably just as well. Our emotional make-up is such that being on a constant "high" is virtually impossible, not to mention unhealthy. We need a variety of moods in our lives and being bored is one of them.

Still, it is probably the least appealling. When you are angry you can direct your frustration at someone or something. When you are sad, there is always self-pity. And, of course, with happiness you can share your good fortune with others.

Boredom, on the other hand, falls into that gray area. It is more abstract. You are not really mad but, at the same time, you're certainly not jumping with joy, either. You are just sort of there, nursing a nasty case of the blahs.

People who know about these things call it "temporary depression." At least, that's what I've heard they call it. If they don't, they should. It sums up the mood very nicely.

Temporary depression. It has a nice ring to it. It sounds like something you would discuss with your analyst — at $75 an hour.

If I could afford that price, I'd gladly pay it to get rid of this deep funk I find myself mired in.

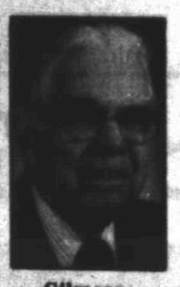

But since I can't, I'll do the next best thing — stare at the walls, fidget with my cigarette lighter, plan a vacation and wait for summer to pass.

Failing that, I'll discuss life's woes with my favorite bartender, who charges a lot less than $75 an hour.

Professor: Fiction taking new directions

By MICHAEL HOLMES
Associated Press Writer

The six-gun toting sheriff may have felt right at home in traditional Texas fiction, but he's a stranger in the pages of many modern stories, says the editor of a new short story collection.

"No long-legged galoots gunning down varmints, no wheeler-dealers of oil patch fame, no Sue Ellen southern belles in crinoline and turquoise," writes Don Graham in introducing his anthology, "South by Southwest."

Graham, a University of Texas English professor and author, has collected two dozen post-1940 stories for the book being released this month by the University of Texas Press.

Included are stories about Dallas hippies, high-pressure business competiton and people trying to come to grips with the upheaval of Texas moving from a rural society to an urban one.

"Since 82 percent of Texans live in cities, it should not be surprising to find that a number of Texas writers are exploring this urban environment," Graham said.

"They're interested in what happens when a world that had a particular kind of rural, ranching tradition changes; what happens when the sons and daughters of those rural people move to a city and are cut off from whatever kinds of values existed in those traditions."

In the past, much of Texas literature was penned in near-mythical tones about such subjects as the Alamo, cowboys and Texas Rangers.

"The Alamo began to be treated that way almost immediately," Graham said. "Texas early on also had the cattle drives — the most glamorous activity the cowboy participated in. We know that the cowboy is not confined to Texas, but the fact is if you want the grandest, most epic adventure he participated in — it's not riding on a ranch in Wyoming, it's the Texas cattle drive."

Such stereotypes have hung on so tenaciously, Graham says, that many authors dislike the tag "Texas writer."

"No writer wants to be called a 'Texas writer' because of the negative stereotype associated with that, because it would presume a Texas writer is somebody who writes about the cow culture.

"To have a 'Texas novel,' it almost has to deal with that, or with the kinds of rubes and rednecks who live in 'The Last Picture Show.' Or it's going to be like 'Dallas,' the TV show, where you have powerful wheeler-dealers who are ruthless and unprincipled," he said.

Although author Larry McMurtry won this year's Pulitzer Prize for fiction with "Lonesome Dove," a novel about old Texas Rangers on a cattle drive, Graham says many Texas writers are looking at fresh subjects.

As a pioneering example, he cites Billy Lee Brammer's political novel "The Gay Place," which, while a quarter-century old, belongs in the modern era.

"In 'The Gay Place,' he announced that Texas is urban. All of his characters are very modern and neurotic and paralyzed."

Motive sought in interstate abduction of banker

SIERRA BLANCA, Texas (AP) — Authorities still are trying to determine a motive for the abduction of an Albuquerque banker who was beaten and driven to Texas.

A man and woman, who refused to give police their names, were being held on $1 million bond each here Friday in the abduction of Sharon Giannini, 40, a vice president at First Interstate Bank in Albuquerque.

Hudspeth County Sheriff Richard Love said the couple was arrested in this western Texas town after running a road block at the Texas-New Mexico border.

Authorities said Mrs. Giannini was abducted from the bank's downtown parking lot on Thursday.

Mrs. Giannini's sister-in-law, Armida De Poi, said Mrs. Giannini was leaving the bank about 5 p.m. when the man, who had what turned out to be a toy plastic gun, and the woman met her at the elevator.

"They wanted her purse and her money," said Mrs. De Poi. "And when they saw she didn't have it, they got mad. They broke her glasses and forced her to take them to her truck."

A co-worker of Mrs. Giannini's, who was waiting to help the woman move furniture, saw her drive past with two strangers in the truck. The co-worker called the police.

Mrs. Giannini told relatives she was beaten on the two occasions she tried to escape.

"The whole time they were driving to Texas, they were telling her that as soon as they got where they were going, they would kill her," Mrs. De Poi said.

The truck sped through a border checkpoint about 1 a.m. Friday and was stopped by U.S. Border Patrol agents three miles west of Sierra Blanca.

Officers made everyone get out of the car. They arrested the couple and confiscated the gun.

Mrs. Giannini was taken to a hospital and treated for bruises. She stayed in El Paso on Friday.

Mrs. Giannini, who has worked at the bank about 15 years, told relatives she did not know her abductors and did not know the gun was not real.

Panel to discuss jail renovation

From Staff Reports

Midland architect Walter Pate will meet with the Midland County Commissioners' Court at 9 a.m. Monday to discuss renovation of the Midland County Jail and to review the jail's schematic design.

In addition, the commissioners will discuss the proposed study of Midland County government's needs into the 21th Century in that same meeting in the Commissioners' Courtroom on the second floor of the Midland County Courthouse.

Midland voters in May 1985 voted in a $3-million bond issue to renovate the jail, to finance the study and to expand Culver Youth Home.

In other business, the commissioners are to: open bids for insurance for Midland County, discuss purchase of a computer for the Juvenile Probation Office, discuss the county's housing-subsidy and community development program, and discuss taxes with Charles W. "Bro" Seltzer and Richard Mendenhall.

Mother, son slain

HOUSTON (AP) — Police had no suspects Saturday in the deaths of a young mother and her 21-month-old son who were found stabbed with their throats slashed in the rear bedroom of their apartment, police said.

Lt. Nelson Zoch said the woman, 19-year-old Annette Marie Watson, found lying nude on the floor in her far west Houston apartment, also had abdomen stab wounds. Her son, Austin, was stabbed repeatedly in the abdomen as well and was face up on the bed, Zoch said.

A Houston homicide police dispatcher, who asked not be identified, said Saturday no arrests had been made in the case.

Tonkawas return to Austin to mark Sesquicentennial

AUSTIN (AP) — The Tonkawa tribe of Oklahoma, whose ancestors roamed Central and parts of South Texas, came home for a weekend powwow to celebrate native American culture and the Texas Sesquicentennial.

Don Patterson, who led a delegation of some 95 Tonkawas and other native Americans, said dancing and drum beating at Jourdan-Bachman Pioneer Farm in Northeast Austin Friday marked the first time in more than 130 years that native Americans returned to land that was once ancestral Tonkawa tribal grounds.

"We came here to watch. We enjoy the dances, and we never had the opportunity to see the Hopi dances in New Mexico and Arizona," said Beth Christensen, a member of the Plains Indian tribe who has lived in Austin with her husband, Morley, for 17 years.

Patterson said that, except for an appearance in Port Lavaca last year, this marked the first time the Tonkawa tribe returned to Texas since the U.S. government moved its members to northeastern Oklahoma in October 1855.

Children dressed in costumes, buckskin and ornate beads, with brightly painted faces for the powwow, dancing to the beat of a large tom-tom. They performed the gourd, round and war dances for about 200 people.

Senate Channel available, cable firm says

From Staff Reports

The Senate Channel is available on Dimension channel 45 on C-SPAN, according to Dimension Cable Services. The service began Thursday.

The Senate began its first session before a national audience on June 2.

Senate television cameras began recording the upper body's session May 1, but the signal was available June 2-15. After this test period ends, the Senate will evaluate the success of the service. On July 29 the senators will vote whether to make television a permanent fixture.

In addition to its telecast of Senate chamber proceedings, C-Span will air a full slate of programming that explores the nature of the nation's "most exclusive private club" — how the Senate works, who its key players are and what viewers can expect to see in days ahead.

Assistant county agent joins extension staff

Shane Lowrie grew up on South Plains farm

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Shane Lowrie, who has a background in farming and ranching, has joined the Midland County Texas Agricultural Extension Service as an assistant county agent for agriculture.

"My job primarily will be involved with agricultural education," he said.

Lowrie, 23, grew up on a South Plains farm southwest of Lubbock.

"We ran some cows, too," he said. "We farmed and ranched. "That's what I've done all of my life, and that's what I like to do."

His family farmed cotton and grain sorghum and raised beef cattle near Ropesville in the Lubbock area.

"It (Ropesville) is the epitome of the small Texas town," said Lowrie. "It's a good place" of about 500 people.

Lowrie, a 1985 graduate of Texas A&M University where he majored in agricultural education, is succeeding Alan McWilliams, who left the Midland County Extension Service to become the Crane County agent.

Instead of returning to the farm after graduation, Lowrie decided to either teach agriculture or to work for the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

"I was interested in an agricultural teaching job and Extension Service work," he said. "Whichever job opened up first, that's the way I'd go. The Extension door opened first. I took it, and was glad to get it. That (agriculture) is where my background is."

Midland County Agent Earnest Kiker said he was pleased that Lowrie joined the Extension Service staff here.

"We're looking forward to working with Shane," said Kiker, Midland County agent since 1982. "He has a strong agricultural background — working on a farm."

Kiker noted that Lowrie was in the 4-H Club and Future Farmers of America (FFA) in his youth. As a 4-H'er, he won an $8,000 scholarship from the Houston Livestock Show & Rodeo Association.

"We think he's a fine young man," Kiker said.

Lowrie will be working with Kiker; Marian Farr, county agent for home economics, and Jill Pronger, assistant county agent for home economics.

In his role as an Extension agent, Lowrie will be working with Midland County farmers and ranchers in agricultural education programs and projects and will be helping 4-H Club boys and girls in their endeavors. Kiker oversees the 4-H Club program.

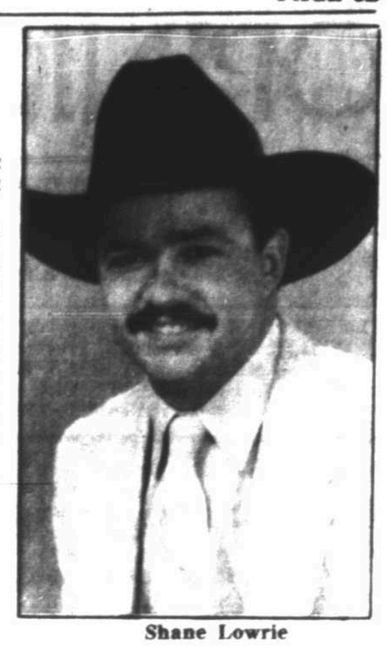

"We sort of help implement the (4-H Club) programs and get them started. We work with the kids, as well as the parents," Lowrie said. "That's everything from food and clothing projects to agricultural livestock projects. If the kid is interested in horticulture, we try to help him get started — get the plan of attack (worked out)."

Lowrie will join Kiker in working with farmers and ranchers on research in agriculture, including studying cotton varieties and setting up a farmers' market this summer.

"Without them (farmers and ranchers), we wouldn't have any reason to do what we so," Lowrie said.

In addition to working with farmers and ranchers, the county agents also are available to offer advice to the general public about horticultural problems affecting lawns, trees and shrubs, and home gardens. They will give suggestions on proper watering and controlling plant diseases and insects, including the fire ant.

"Anything that we eat or grow or put on your back, such as a shirt," Lowrie said, "we're involved in."

Oil workers included in benefit plan

By PEGGY ROBERSON
Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON — The Senate Friday voted to expand jobless benefits under the Trade Adjustment Assistance Act to include unemployed workers in oil and gas and related industries.

The act until now has benefited workers in textiles, steel manufacturing and other industries who have lost jobs because of foreign imports. It provides direct unemployment benefits for up to 26 weeks after regular state benefits have been exhausted.

Unemployed workers also can receive job training, counseling and relocation assistance.

Sen. Bennett Johnston, D-La., chief sponsor of the amendment, said the Reagan administration has been narrowly interpreting the act in a way that excluded most employees of the oil and gas industry and related service industries from receiving benefits.

Speaking for the measure on the Senate floor, Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, said oil and gas workers have been discriminated against. "These workers want to be productive, they don't want to be on welfare. They've taken a real hit, and for the administration to tell us it's not because of foreign competition just doesn't make any sense."

Bentsen said Middle East producers have "opened the valves to whip that OPEC cartel in line." Increased production has forced world oil prices down to near $13 a barrel for West Texas crude from a high of more than $30 a barrel late last year.

Bentsen said oil and gas workers need and want "the same kind of assistance we give to unemployed workers in Ohio and Michigan."

Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, objected to attaching the amendment, for $44 million, to a supplemental appropriations bill for fiscal 1986 on grounds it violates the Budget Act rule that if a program is added sponsors must tell where the money to pay for it is coming from.

"We're not talking about some sacred principle that cannot be violated," Johnston responded, "we are talking about dollars, dollars that help suffering people, people that are hungry or unemployed.

"We have been raiding that budget up and down the line, funding everything in the world, but when we want to have 52 weeks of unemployment for people who are down and out, who have been servicing this country, producing energy, we are told the Budget Act is sacred. Well, it's not sacred," Johnston added.

Gramm's point of order against the amendment was sustained by the chair but overruled 55-40. The amendment then was approved by unanimous consent. Gramm was in the chamber, but made no further objection.

"Sen. Gramm's objection was not to the substance of the bill, but to the manner in which it was proposed," said Larry Neal, Gramm's press secretary. The Senate in April approved a resolution urging President Reagan to broaden the Trade Adjustment Assistance Act to iknclude oil and gas workers, but Johnston told the Senate, "The White House has turned a deaf ear."

The Senate vote came on the day the federal government released figures showing Texas unemployment jumped from 8.5 percent to 9.6 percent since December, for a net loss of 150,000 jobs. Of that number, 40,500 were in the oil and gas industry, Bentsen said.

The supplimental spending bill was approved late Friday 71-8. It contains enough provisions that are objectionable to the White House to cause some supporters to fear a veto, despite the fact that it contains funding for farming and other politically sensitive programs. In addition to helping unemployed oil and gas workers, the $3.9 billion bill contains other political favors, including flood control money for West Virginia and citrus-canker control aid for Florida.

Young volunteers honored

AUSTIN (AP) — Eight young Texans Friday were awarded college scholarships of $10,000 and $20,000 in a new program to recognize outstanding high school seniors who help their communities through volunteer service.

More than 600 high school seniors statewide applied for the first-time scholarships. Because of the large response, the sponsoring Beneficial Corp. said it will continue the program next year.

The winners were announced during Gov. Mark White's weekly news conference.

Passing the test

A little critical analysis can prove beneficial from time-to-time. So can a well-justified pat on the back.

On the other hand, carried to the extreme each can be extremely detrimental.

Case in point: For the past few years, public education in Texas — and public school teachers — have come under increasing scrutiny. News coverage concerning public school "excesses" such as social promotion and plummeting scores on college entrance exams affirmed in the public's mind the image of a system in disarray.

Then came the TECAT — the Texas Examination of Current Administrators and Teachers. The idea of evaluating teachers' work was sound, but it was improperly presented and structured, and as a result a number of educators came out of it feeling as though they had no friends in the world.

That was a mistake. A big mistake — because it was a lie.

Now the test results are known and, lo and behold, teachers in the Midland and Greenwood school districts scored exceedingly well, even better than the average score statewide. In fact, 98.2% of the teachers in MISD passed the TECAT while 98.9% of the Greenwood teachers passed the test. Statewide, 96.7% of teachers passed.

That should be refreshing to all Midlanders and Greenwood residents who might have become concerned about the quality of education being afforded their children. The test was given and the teachers passed. What more could anyone want?

The next simple step is to respectfully acknowledge that the local teachers performed well enough to make Midland residents proud, and to let them know that the intent of the increased public scrutiny was not to make them feel abandoned or friendless. The intent, rather, was to verify what was already suspected — that as a group teachers are well-qualified to do their jobs and dedicated professionals, and, of course, to weed out the small number of unqualified educators in order to make the teaching profession in Texas even more noteworthy.

Thanks for understanding, teachers.

Noteworthy service

Midland is fortunate in that it has a large number of outstanding individuals and organizations that continue to bring honor and prestige to the community. The people of the Tall City should be understandably proud of that fact.

One such organization, the Midland Jaycees, was cited recently as that service organization's Chapter of the Year in the 25,000 to 75,000 population category and was honored for carrying out the Project of the Year — Midland Centennial Plaza. There were, of course, other honors bestowed on individual Midland Jaycee members, but it is these two honors that are particularly worthy of note.

Every Midlander should now be familiar with Centennial Plaza. In the downtown area where glass and steel structures reach for the Permian Basin clouds and cars and pedestrians hurry past, it provides a proper setting for Midlanders and others to sit on a bench under trees, relax from the hustle and bustle of everyday business life and enjoy a moment of leisurely rest. It is quickly becoming one of the focal points of downtown life, if it doesn't already claim that title. It is definitely the highlight of the downtown region and a great source of enjoyment for thousands of Midlanders and others.

With that commendable project and the many others the men and women of the Midland Jaycees carry out annually — they were awarded the Bill Leonard Award as the number one Labor Day holiday rest stop in Texas — it's little wonder that they have garnered these impressive honors. They are involved in projects that are bringing to the community a better quality of life and, for themselves, greater growth in the field of public service.

Well done, Jaycees.

Another View:
Legislate an exit

By law, there's no justice for "atomic veterans." Several thousand, who as soldiers were overexposed to radiation during American bomb tests, have become ill or died. They and their families claim it was as a result of exposure. But under current law, they'll get no day in court to try to prove it.

In 1984, Congress prohibited them from suing federal contractors for negligence in the atomic testing; all such cases were converted into suits against the federal government. But since the federal government is legally immune from such damage suits, the effect was to deny the atomic veterans any recourse.

They are allowed to request medical aid from the Veterans Administration for service-connected injuries. But so far the VA has approved only 15 claims out of the 3,050 filed. It's the government's position that radiation exposure didn't cause the other injuries — a decision the vets could appeal, but only if they could hire attorneys to argue their cases. And that's effectively prohibited by another law, which prevents paying attorneys in VA cases any more than $10. Yes, $10.

There's no excuse for this behavior on the part of a government that — no matter what else the veterans might be able to prove about its negligence or about medical cause and effect — inarguably did expose these soldiers to radiation levels it now knows were dangerous. Whatever damages a court would award them, if they were only allowed to go to court, these soldiers deserve better reward for their service than to be trapped like laboratory mice twice — once in the atomic tests themselves and now in a legal maze with no exit.

Congress seems finally to be thinking about that. It's still not willing to establish a medical compensation system for atomic veterans, or even to eliminate the $10 fee limit in VA cases. But Sen. John Warner, author of the 1984 law prohibiting suits against atomic-testing contractors, is now talking about repealing it. And the House has just passed a bill that would leave the contractors immune but change the rules so the government can be held liable in these cases. The Reagan administration is opposed, because those changes could cost a lot. But justice sometimes does.

Cables tell of Marcoses' opera trials

WASHINGTON — The biblical warning against trusting princes applies with at least equal weight to presidents, as ousted Philippines President Ferdinand Marcos has discovered. Twenty years of fawning solicitude by a succession of U.S. administrations can hardly have prepared Marcos for being left suddenly in the lurch by his powerful friends.

Jack Anderson

The extent of this long official U.S. devotion to the Philippine dictator and his first lady becomes embarrassingly clear in State Department cables obtained by our associate Lucette Lagnado through the Freedom of Information Act.

The cable traffic between Foggy Bottom and the American Embassy in Manila was heavy with queries and discussions about how Ferdinand and Imelda might best be toadied to by our diplomats and elected officials. Their every wish — or anticipated wish — commanded the earnest attention of ambassadors and protocol officers, and consumed page after page of detailed cable correspondence.

The most egregious examples, as luck would have it, are from the summer of 1966, when Marcos, inaugurated just nine months before, was to pay his first state visit to the United States. President Lyndon Johnson, no slouch in the hospitality department, ordered Texas-size treatment for the diminutive Philippines president and his photogenic wife, Imelda.

The elaborate preparations, chewed over endlessly in the cables, may seem ridiculous in retrospect. Small wonder that Marcos got the impression that he was a big shot entitled to perpetual care by the U.S. government. For example:

— No fewer than 10 cables dealt with the earthshaking question of what official gift Johnson would give Marcos when they exchanged the requisite greetings and flowery tributes. It was finally settled: a desk set, a silver cigar box and a silver picture frame.

But then there was the agonizing problem of what to have inscribed on the cigar box. Researchers in Foggy Bottom came up with the peroration from Marcos' inaugural address: "Come then, let us march together toward the dream of greatness." Not exactly Lincolnian, perhaps, but would it be OK for a cigar box? The State Department queried the embassy.

"Proposed inscription for silver cigar box is a good quotation, and we have been unable to come up with anything better," the embassy cabled. But then it added its misgivings:

"Possible problem arises from fact that phrase ... if inscribed on silver cigar box from President Johnson to President Marcos might well be construed to mean 'Let the U.S. and the Philippines march together,' whereas, of course, the phrase as used by President Marcos was addressed to Filipinos as an inspiration to Filipinos to march together. ..."

— LBJ was going to throw in a set of golf clubs for his new buddy, so Foggy Bottom cabled Manila urgently: "We need President Marcos' swing weight, flexibility of shaft, height, age, handicap and whether he is right- or left-handed."

— Equal if not more anxiety was expended on the choice of an appropriate gift for Imelda Marcos. Though there was no indication the first lady tickled the ivories, one suggestion was a "grand piano for the palace." The embassy had a more appropriate suggestion: "Item of hospital equipment which Mrs. Marcos might present to a needy hospital here."

— Even the U.S. embassy in Moscow was brought into the act, because the president of New York University was visiting the Soviet capital at the time. A priority cable from Manila explained: "Have discreetly sounded out closest associate of President Marcos and he is receptive to possibility of honorary degree from New York University." It noted that Marcos would be available between 2 p.m. and 5 p.m. on Sept. 20, and the Manila embassy official said he hoped the NYU "affair could be colorful with large audience and good coverage."

— Beach or mountains? City or country? Grand opera or county fair? Where should the visiting presidential couple be taken for a real treat?

One cable from Foggy Bottom suggested Marcos show up at the Shenandoah, Iowa, Agricultural Trade Fair and share in the fun with Vice President Hubert Humphrey. "We have up to now been told by Ben Romualdez" — Imelda's brother and the Philippine ambassador in Washington — "that president and Mrs. Marcos would have no interest in opera unless it were opening performance," the cable added.

There was a problem, though. Tickets to the prestigious opening night performance of the Metropolitan Opera were apparently hard to get. How about the new production of "Il Trovatore" a few nights later? "With sets designed by Cecil Beaton," the Manila embassy cabled hopefully, "this performance regarded as having almost equal significance to Metropolitan premiere."

Ferdinand and Imelda knew second-best when they saw it, though, and held out for opening night. With obvious relief, Foggy Bottom finally sent a confidential cable to Manila, apprising embassy officials that the Marcoses had been invited to the opening — and had accepted.

That may have been when the Marcoses were given a classic bit of American folk wisdom: "The opera ain't over till the fat lady sings." It might explain their stubborn reluctance to leave Manila some 20 years later in the face of popular revolution.

Radio Marti beaming life's hope to Cubans

WASHINGTON — On a cool morning recently, Jay Mallin was coolly telling a reporter that the radio station for which Mallin works as news director cannot be — heaven forfend! — "blamed" for successful escapes from Cuba.

George F. Will

Granted, Radio Marti's weather reports, broadcast from Washington and transmitted from Florida, are more detailed than reports broadcast by Cuban government radio. Marti's long-term forecasts and information on tides are closely listened to, especially by persons — often of military draft age — who are considering dangerous floats to freedom on inner-tube rafts.

Granted, also, such people are especially apt to listen to Marti, the U.S. government Spanish-language station now beginning its second year of broadcasting to Cuba. But Marti is prevented by its strict charter, as well as the wisdom of its administrators, from incitements.

Mallin tolerates no name-calling. Castro is referred to as the leader. Mallin has had Castro on his mind for many years.

Born in 1927 in New York into an American family with two generations of roots in Cuba, he was working for Time magazine during the revolution. During Castro's victory march to Havana in January, 1959, the lead car carried Castro, the second car his security people, the third car the Time-Life contingent.

Ernesto Betancourt, Marti's director, supported the revolution in the 1950s and represented Castro's movement in Washington in 1957-1958. He left Cuba in 1960, when Castro's anti-democratic intentions became clear.

Marti's impact is measured anecdotally, but by lots of anecdotes. There are interviews with travelers from Cuba, surveys of emigrants from Cuba (often arriving through third countries), correspondence from Cuba to relatives here. Mail to and from Cuba is measured in tons. Thirty-thousand telephone calls are attempted daily from Miami and 6,000 get through.

Castro does not attempt maximum jamming of Marti, partly because of the cost. Cuba is a mendicant nation, selling its young men as soldiers in exchange for Soviet subsidies. Jamming is expensive. The Soviet Union spends about $490 million a year to jam U.S. non-English broadcasts to the Soviet Union. Such U.S. transmissions cost just $26 million. All Soviet jamming involves 15,000 technicians at 2,000 jamming stations, costing approximately $1 billion annually.

Aside from the cost, Castro's vanity causes him to avoid full-scale jamming, which would affirm Marti's appeal. Marti, with 80 correspondents, costs just $10 million annually, less than one advanced fighter plane. Marti is a magnificently cost-effective weapon.

Cubans are ravenous for news from Angola and Ethiopia, where 400,000 Cubans (half of them civilians) have served Soviet purposes.

So the voices beamed from the studios in the building at the foot of Capitol Hill have produced in Cuba a small stirring, something like a crocus sprouting through a crack in concrete. And life, however frail, has a way of triumphing in time, even over stone.

Russell Baker

"If you're so smart, Mr. Know-It-All, why aren't you making a million dollars instead of wasting your brain on newspaper hack work?"

The frequency with which I get this question is amazing. Why in the world would anyone give up an easy, pleasant job, like mine for the dim and wretched toil required to make a million? Doesn't everybody know the kind of work you have to do to be a millionaire?

All day you have to keep a telephone glued to the side of your head, except when you go to lunch with someone important to discuss deals. Think of it:

Every day you have to go to lunch. Is there a more depressing way to use up a life than by going to lunch?

Your ear is aching from having the telephone glued to it all morning, and you are worried that your doctor may know what he's talking about when he says that at your present telephone rate you're going to need an earlift before you're 40.

And to compound the misery, you have to go to lunch.

With someone important, yet.

Maybe you don't know about someone important in the world of making a million. Someone important in this line of endeavor is someone whose eyes light up only when fractions are being discussed.

You can bet fractions will be discussed at this lunch because you have to talk about a deal.

Absolutely have to talk about a deal. If you don't, you can't deduct the outrageous price of the meal, and how are you going to become a millionaire if you spend your own money in these piratical feeding troughs? People don't really make a million anymore, they deduct their way to a million.

All right, enough. The work is dreary unless you've always dreamed of having a cauliflower ear and are crazy about fractions. Is it worth devoting your life to this kind of work for nothing more than a million?

Oh sure, there was a time when I would have put up with any unpleasantness in return for finding a million in the pay envelope at the end of every year. That was when a million enabled you to live like a prince.

With that kind of money you could travel like royalty, taking a suite aboard the Berengaria, or the Queen Mary if you preferred conspicuous consumption.

You could bounce around in a 24-room apartment on Park Avenue. You could buy a small island off the New England coast, complete with a big house and a very decent boat.

You could rent a floor in the Plaza every weekend and a house in Paris and another in Belgravia and go up to Saratoga for the season with a horse or two of your own.

But what does your million get you now?

Even if you had several hundred million, you couldn't travel like the old-time crowd. Nowadays everybody, plutocrat and steerage folk alike, travels the same way: sealed into a metal container and hurled through the air with no more dignity than a cannonball.

Fancy housing? Not half likely, ma'am. For a million in Manhattan they will show you an apartment with three or four rooms, every room of which contains a window.

An island off the coast? Well the Manhattan apartment isn't going to leave you much change from your million, but what the heck! — you've lunched with enough fraction people by now to know how to finance at least a small island.

Unfortunately, there aren't many available, and what there are will not be islands you'll want to be caught dead on by influential acquaintances.

The problem here is the island shortage caused by the millionaire glut. To turn themselves into millionaires, people who dote on fractions first "developed" all the coastal beach land. "Developed" — that means covering the land with the kind of houses millionaires pay millions never to go near.

To escape the source of their riches, they fled to islands that other people in love with fractions instantly "developed" so they too could get rich. Once rich, naturally they also wanted to get away from the messes that were the source of their scratch, and ... .

You can see why there are so few desirable islands left for sale.

You can also observe an unhappy result of becoming a millionaire. To make the heavy bucks, you end up destroying something that once upon a time made being a millionaire worthwhile. Ocean liners, private railroad cars, nature's beauties — nothing delightful can survive the kind of economy that grinds out millionaires like link sausages.

And where do you end up this side of the grave? With a cauliflower ear, lunch fatigue and a frustrated wonderment that a million entitles you to nothing more than a three-room flat and a first-class seat in a sealed can beside another man with a cauliflower ear.

Fear of terrorism no small factor to American tourists

Bill Modisett

Making a decision of whether to go to Europe this summer or to stay in the good ol' United States isn't going to present a dilemma for me. But it is presenting a dilemma for millions of Americans who have the opportunity to travel abroad this year and, frankly, I can appreciate their concerns.

The fear of terrorism is no small factor in deciding whether to take a trip overseas. Statistically, fear should not play a part in one's decision. But realistically when one considers that Americans are about like ducks in a shooting gallery where terrorists are concerned, staying at home gets awfully attractive.

Essentially, it isn't the concern for the financial state of travel agencies or world currencies that should sway a person's decision. That's so much pink smoke. Sure the tourism industry will suffer if a lot of Americans decide not to take overseas trips this year. But the bottom line here is not the health and welfare of any industry — tourism included.

Rather, what is at issue is the emphasis that should be given to the world terrorism problem. I think a lot of emphasis should be given to it, but not because of the killing of tourists solely.

Terrorism is an all-out assault against civilized values, one of which happens to be tourism. It is a war, although the mode of warfare is unconventional and the rules are unlike anything based on our civilization.

That means the civilized nations of the world (and I'm speaking of a lot more than just the United States) must join together in their response to terrorism to make the world safe overall.

After the United States' assault on Libya, President Reagan promised in a televised address that more strikes would occur if they were believed necessary in the fight against terrorism.

If the leaders of terrorist-supporting-and-sponsoring states such as Libya question whether Ronald Reagan means what he says, they really ought to consider the following list of recent moves made by his administration (courtesy of The Heritage Foundation):

— The issuance of an order sharply reducing the number of Soviet officials in New York.

— The restriction of communist officials from traveling outside the New York City area without advance notification.

— No significant unilateral concessions at the Geneva arms control negotiations.

— Movement toward proportionate responses to Soviet arms control violations.

— The use of U.S. Navy planes to capture the hijackers of the Achille Lauro over the Mediterranean.

— A decision to send U.S. Stinger anti-aircraft weapons to the freedom fighters in Afghanistan and Angola.

— The standoff at the "Line of Death" in the Gulf of Sidra and the eventual U.S. air strike against Libya.

Does all that — and there's plenty more — really indicate a lack of American resolve to meet the world's terrorists face-to-face, although such a confrontational posture probably goes against any self-respecting terrorist's "go-after-the-wives-and-kids" philosophy?

Well, that's a question every American must answer for himself. I don't believe it does. I believe Reagan is once again proceeding in the correct direction, although I have to admit I didn't always believe he was.

He's not going to let the terrorists "call his bluff" and that's important because in situations in which terrorists are involved, they're going to bluff, lie and manipulate where at all possible. Reagan's policies have indicated he's going to keep getting tough and playing the terrorists on their own turf.

That's the right approach which must be pursued if the world is to be effective in restoring peace and order.

Midland VIPS deserve special recognition

This past school year I have had the opportunity to serve as the Coordinator for the Volunteers in Public Schools Program in Midland. Thousands of hours are donated by hundreds of Midlanders each year to enrich the education of the students in this community. At the Volunteer Appreciation Luncheon held recently which was sponsored by First City National Bank, Mayor Carroll Thomas designated May 12-16 as VIPS Week. In addition to the luncheon held honoring outstanding volunteers from each school, teachers and staffs have expressed their appreciation to volunteers on each campus. Midland's school volunteers make a tremendous difference in student accomplishment and I encourage all Midlanders to join me in expressing appreciation to these volunteers. Not only are our children Midland's most valuable resource, but they are tomorrow's leaders.

Others serving with me this year on the VIPS Team and to whom I would like to express special appreciation were: Molly Bedrich, Kathryn Nichols, Marianna Crose, Linda Jordan, Kay Sowers, Georgiana Burnett, Jan Van Eman, Diane Claiborne, Brenda Faught, Kathy Wilson, Jackie Hamilton and Sandy Moore. They are all exceptional volunteers and assisted in making the city-wide VIPS program most successful.

Funding for our program this year was furnished by First City National Bank, Midland Downtown Lions Club, Texas American Bank, RepublicBank First National, Republic Bank, Western Bank and Claydesta National Bank. A big thanks to all of them for their financial support.

A recent article in the Midland Reporter Telegram listed outstanding volunteers from each school, however, the names of Paz Carrizales from Crockett Elementary School and Sandy Wallace from West Elementary School were omitted.

Hats off to all our VIPS! Keep up the good work

Soccer board earns our heartfelt thanks

We would like to express our gratitude to the Soccer Association Board members for donating funds to the Ronald McDonald Houses in Kathy's and B.J.'s behalf.

As we have confirmed before, this is a very worthy cause and has great personal significance for us.

Many times during the ordeal of our child's illness, we asked the question, "Why?"

We feel that the answers have come in the form of the personal and spiritual growth we have made, the closeness of our family and the wonderful friends that have surrounded us to give support and strength. And also in the form of things like this donation, the understanding and desire to reach out to help other people.

My neighbor made a statement that we felt you should hear. She said, if effect, 'When I read the newspaper article, I was thrilled that my child is part of such an organization that is not only highly organized and skillfully managed, but cares so deeply about the individual child."

We feel that each of our four children have greatly benefited from participating in the Midland Soccer Association's program. Their coaches have been outstanding.

Thanks to each board member for their tremendous efforts in behalf of all of those 1,500 "special" children.

Nuclear waste should find its home in D.C.

Ridiculous! The decision to consider only three nuclear waste disposal sites (in the states of Nevada, Texas and Washington) leaves most Texans agape. Purportedly the advantage of these locations is population density, or the lack of it. On either count, Washington, D.C., would be a far more logical choice than the others — and any escaped radioactive materials would soon soar aloft on the heated vapors of the bureaucratic effluent.

Well-watered state can't know our needs

Regarding your Sunday, June 1, "Another View': A snake and progress" from the Minneapolis Star and Tribune —

It is easy to understand why someone from a state that has 20 percent of its area in natural lakes and from a city that has 22 natural lakes within the city limits and is divided by the Mississippi would care less if environmental studies on the Concho water snake took until the Second Coming. Whoever wrote that article should be informed that West Texas is very dry and we need some dam water as soon as possible.

Bad news about IRAs found in tax proposal

While there might be some good news on the surface of the Senate Finance Committee tax proposal, taxpayers will find some bad news there if they dig a little deeper.

The committee has led us to believe that their proposal will decrease most of our tax burdens. That isn't at all true. Many middle income families will owe more in taxes due to lost deductions for individual retirement accounts, which will be disallowed for taxpayers who already have employer-provided retirement plans. In addition, these lost IRA opportunities as well as limits on other tax-deferred savings vehicles will deprive many Americans of the ability to plan for their retirements.

IRAs are considered by many to be among the most effective methods for retirement planning. Since 1981, IRA assets have jumped 860 percent from $26 billion to an estimated $250 billion by April 1986. More than 40 million of us currently own IRAs. With numbers like these, you can't help but question the merit of a tax plan that would virtually put an end to a planning tool that helps many secure their financial futures after age 65. I encourage you to bring these details to the attention of our senators.

Despite doomsayers, economy full of good news

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.

Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

NEW YORK — Good tidings about the economy and controversy over President Reagan's action on the 1979 strategic arms limitation agreement (SALT II) held my attention this week.

First, on the economy, Washington analysts forecast stronger business growth during the coming months. Stock market strategists in New York and elsewhere were predicting the Dow Jones industrial average will hit the 2,000 milestone before the end of this year, perhaps as soon as August.

The economy was described as "surprisingly healthy" in a full page report in the Wall Street Journal.

"From a long term perspective, the economy seems unequivocally to be growing strongly," the WSJ report said.

Noting that "most Americans are better off today than ever before," the report showed how life has improved for the average individual since the mid-'50s. Three decades ago, only 4 percent of households had a dishwasher. Today 46 percent have one. Only 8 percent had a clothes dryer compared with 66 percent now. Seventy percent of households today have a washing machine compared with 25 percent in the mid-'50s. Three decades ago, fewer than 1 percent of households had a color TV set; now 92 percent do.

The report also confirmed something I have long felt — that unemployment figures do not accurately reflect the general labor situation. The WSJ report said many economists cite as more meaningful than the official jobless rate a little publicized statistic called the employment ratio. That is the percentage of working-age Americans who hold jobs. Now near 61 percent, this ratio has been setting new highs. A 1985 Labor Department survey showed 107,150,000 employed workers in this country, nearly 35 million more than were employed in 1955.

"The message is that the economy has done remarkably well generating jobs, even it if hasn't managed to fully accommodate the rapidly expanding portion of the population, mainly women, wanting to work," New York economist Lacy H. Hung said.

Stating that "rising prosperity is evident," the WSJ report concluded: "Wealth, as measured by the value of securities portfolios and other assets, is at record levels." So much for the drumbeat of doubts by the gloom and doom pundits.

Other good news this week was that under the latest draft of the Senate tax bill, the average individual taxpayer would get a 6.4 percent cut in 1988. Those earning less than $10,000 would get an average 63 percent cut in their taxes. These cuts are supported by President Reagan. Not long ago he was assailed for hurting the poor while helping the rich, who, under the proposed tax legislation, will lose tax shelters and other deduction benefits.

• • •

The tendency among self-serving politicians, some of our European allies and liberal-oriented media commentators to find fault with almost anything our president proposes was particularly evident this week in the reaction to his announcement that the United States will not continue to comply with SALT II unless the Soviets stop violating it and start seriously negotiating nuclear arms reduction agreements.

Ignoring his assurance that he would "review" his decision if the Soviets took "constructive steps" between now and the end of this fall to "alter the current situation," critics at home and abroad assailed him for abandoning the SALT II agreement that was never ratified by the Senate and actually expired last December.

Skillfully handling a serious dispute within his administration between those headed by Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger who urged outright renunciation of the agreement, and those represented by Secretary of State George Shultz who favored continuation of compliance, the president opted for the kind of pragmatic compromise for which he has been noted since he was governor of California.

He kept the United States in compliance with SALT II by ordering the dismantling of two obsolete Poseidon submarines. At the same time, he said he will proceed later this year to equip B-52 bombers with cruise missiles. This would push the U.S. over the SALT II ceiling of 1,200 nuclear delivery system unless additional Poseidon subs are retired.

However, the president assured Republican congressional leaders his action on SALT II was not final and could be reversed if justified by a change in Soviet behavior.

While the president continued to be accused of having sided with the Pentagon hardliners, the Washington Post's White House correspondent, Lou Cannon, wrote:

"On balance, Reagan's decision was a victory for administration moderates. What Reagan did was to lay down a useful marker for the prospective summit. The president left himself running room to change his position if given any reason to do so."

So once again events may prove wrong those who question the leadership qualities of Ronald Reagan.

Reporters' tax-vs.-cut debate enlivens conference

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

Levine

AUSTIN — We journalists tend to avoid quoting our fellow reporters in news stories — except for times when they win Pulitzers and such. An opinion column like this one, however, is another story. So here we go.

One bright point during the mostly dreary Texas Lyceum Association conference in Austin last week involved a tax-vs.-cut debate between two veteran statehouse reporters. Molly Ivins, the irreverant liberal columnist for the Dallas Times Herald, took on Paul Burka, the equally outspoken senior editor at Texas Monthly.

Paul and Molly woke up a breakfast seminar on the state's fiscal crunch with some occasionally brilliant reparte. Paul took a familiar track, pointing out boondoggles which, if eliminated, could save the state enough money to overcome the several-billion-dollar budget shortfall that looms on the horizon.

"We can reach $1 billion without breathing very hard," Paul said, taking on such sacred cows as vocational-agriculture education, the Lamar University System and the University of Texas of the Permian Basin. Some excerpts:

— On the $37 million spent annually on vo-ag: "We're teaching how to raise cows to kids who are going to be living in Dallas and Houston five years from now."

— On UTPB and other new branches of the UT System: "Frank Erwin created schools around the state until he had campuses in 11 senatorial districts, then he stopped."

— On misplaced priorities: "We've had a bruceliosis program for years, we didn't get indigent health care until 1985."

— On the $120 million mistakenly spent for full-day kindergarten at both rich and poor school districts: "That's day care for Highland Park."

For more details see Paul's March 1985 TM article, "The Bloody Billion."

Paul's point was that the Texas Legislature, despite its reputation, has spent our tax money outrageously over the years. "It's a myth that politicians would rather cut than tax," he said. "They'd rather do neither."

Molly decided to resort to statistics to prove Paul's contention wrong. Misplaced priorities or not, she said, the state still ranks near the bottom in per-capita spending on programs such as education, health and human services. While Molly found woe in Texas' ranking 46th lowest among the states in per-capita spending, Paul turned it around taking pride in Texas' ranking fourth lowest among the states in per-capita taxation.

"Twenty years I've been watching the Texas Legislature meet, and I'll tell you what they are, they're cheap and they're mean," Molly said.

Some day lawmakers will learn, she said, that by refusing to spend the money needed to develop the state's human resources, "it is possible to cheap yourself to death." Just look at the nearly 40,000 inmates in the Texas Department of Corrections.

"If you let kids grow up neglected, angry and dumb, they frequently wind up in prison," Molly said.

Molly proposed a two-part solution. First, she said, restructure the state's tax system — heavily dependent on the regressive sales tax. "It's a massive redistribution of wealth from the poor to the rich."

Second, lawmakers must overcome the contention that higher taxes are fatal to both Texas' business climate and their own re-election climate. Molly pointed out that legislators regularly and safely increased taxes to provide services during the 1980s but placed that agenda on hold when increasing oil revenues during the '70s obviated the need to boost tax rates.

"We all started think that was the way God intended it to be," she said. "The Legislature has a psychosis against raising taxes."

Re-enter Paul, who claims liberals have a delusion of their own on the magic of tax increase. "You have a problem with the notion that if we only tax, it's the road to greatness," he said.

Still Paul admitted that his proposal to solve the revenue crunch by eliminating waste and duplication could well run into trouble with some curmudgeonly legislators who see Paul's boondoggles as sacred cows.

"It's what I call the 'reverse Humpty-Dumpty effect,' " he said. "Once it's put together, you can't possibly pull it apart."

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

MC busy despite season, slump

By H. A. TUCK

It's been busy around the campus and there's not much let-up in sight. Classes for the first summer term started last Monday, along with four days of late registration. This week, the Registrar's office takes a deep breath, since pre-registration for the second summer session starts on Monday, June 16.

The college is one of the few organizations in town which does well in bad times. Lots of students who couldn't find summer employment made the decision to get some of their college classes out of the way. By taking seven hours each summer term, a student could earn the equivalent of a semester of college work while living at home...and for considerably less money than a university would cost.

Advance enrollment for the "Career Reassessment" seminar is doing quite well. The four-day program, cosponsored by Midland College, Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, Midland Chamber of Commerce, and Midland Black Chamber of Entrepreneurs, Inc., is scheduled June 16-19.

There will be five programs presented on Monday and five more on Tuesday. All presentations will be repeated on Wednesday and Thursday. Persons attending can attend two programs each night, so they would be in eight of the ten programs scheduled.

Cost is just $12 for all sessions. The seminar is designed to assist those who have become unemployed or who are concerned about being laid-off. It's also helpful for those thinking of making a career change.

For more information or tickets, visit the Office of Continuing Education in the Administration Building or call Midland College at 685-4518.

All the sponsoring organizations have devoted a lot of time and effort for this event. But special thanks are due Wanda Phillips, coordinator of the MC Special Needs Program, who has really pulled everything together for a successful program.

It didn't take long for the transitions to begin taking place as two long-time MC employees were promoted. Dr. Raymond Yell, who was one of the four original fulltime faculty members, is taking over as Vice President of Instruction. His post as Dean of Transfer and General Studies is being filled by Dr. Hosni Nabi, who had been Assistant to the President. Yell replaces Dr. Don Hunt, who retires later this summer.

As an economy measure, the position of Assistant to the President won't be filled.

It was a great year for Chaparral tennis. The women's team captured the national championship, plus three singles titles and a doubles title. For the men's team, their fifth place standing was a good finish, although coach Joe Williams was hoping for more. Two players won individual singles titles in the men's tourney.

Now comes the serious recruiting to fill a lot of holes. The women's team likely will have only two of its seven players back next fall. The men's team will need about four replacements.

And is junior college tennis tough in Texas? Well, Midland won five of the nine women's titles, Tyler took two, Cooke County of Gainesville one and McLennan of Waco one!

One of the plusses in the women's tournament was the decision after the first day to run a consolation tourney for first and second round losers. With teams coming from as far away as New York, it was a bonus for the players and coaches to get in more than one match. It's something which might be adopted officially for future tournaments. Midland is bidding to host the 1987 women's tournament and, from the complimentary remarks made about the one just concluded, it might be the site again next year.

It's time for another reminder to the joggers, walkers, bicyclists, and dog-walkers about staying in the outer lane of Chaparral Circle. That's the area designated for all non-motorized traffic.

We also ask that those who use the circle early in the morning or late in the evening wear some white clothing or reflective tape. Since many come to work at 7 a.m. and classes run until 10 p.m., visibility is rather poor at times.

Continuing Education Department folks have expanded their list of course offerings for the summer, and the response has been very good on advance registrations.

Courses starting this week include: Ballroom Dancing, Bridge I, Basic Chess, Crochet, Decorating Windows, Drawing, Embroidery, Etiquette, Figure Drawing, French Brush-Up, Hawaiian/Tahitian Dance, Home Landscape Maintenance, Pilot's Instrument Ground School, Pilot's Multi-Engine Ground School, and Watercolor.

For more information about any of these courses, call 685-4518. To register, come to the Continuing Education Department in the Administration Building. Their hours are 7 a.m. to 8 p.m.

Stormy weather during the last two weeks caused a few problems on campus. A large light pole near Chaparral Center blew down, a window in Chap Center blew out from the force of the wind, and leaks developed in the roof of the Learning Resource Center.

But the 4-5 inches of rain revived the grass and shrubs that were showing lots of stress from heat and lack of moisture. Another treatment of fertilizer on the grass last week should get the campus back to showplace condition.

• • •

A freak accident resulting from an encounter with an angry duck caused rather serious injuries to instructor Dr. Betty Gaines recently. She was hospitalized but is improving nicely.

• • •

Electronic blips and glitches have replaced type lice and mechanical gremlins which used to be blamed for problems in newspaper printing. One of those former critters caused the disappearance of this column last week, the first time it's failed to appear in the Sunday Reporter-Telegram for many years. For both of you readers who missed it, we apologize.

Chuck Wagon Gang to travel to Nashville and West Germany

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — The nationally known Chuck Wagon Gang will be representing Odessa and the Permian Basin this week at the Fan Fair convention in Nashville.

Following the Nashville Grand Ole Opry feed, a special delegation of the Chuck Wagon Gang will travel to Geilenkirchen, West Germany, Saturday to feed some 2,500 people at the request of the U.S. Air Force NATO base there. On June 23, at the request of General Charles L. Donnelly Jr., commander-in-chief of the U.S. Air Force, the Chuck Wagon Gang will prepare a special meal for 500 people, including NATO generals under Donnelly's command and their special guests from across Europe.

The Chuck Wagon Gang has been putting on feeds for the Fan Fair at the request of the Grand Ole Opry since the beginning of the fair some 16 years ago. The fair draws country and western fans not only from throughout the United States but from around the world. The feeds are scheduled for noon on June 12 and June 13, with about 16,000 expected to be fed each day. The evening of June 13, there'll be a special feed for a crowd of approximately 4,000.

According to a Chuck Wagon Gang boss Steve Poynor, to feed 16,000 people it takes 8,500 pounds of choice, prime beef, 1,600 pounds of pinto beans, 3,000 pounds of cole slaw, 200 gallons of pickles, 2,500 pounds of onions, 700 gallons of iced tea, and 16,000 buns.

Former fundamentalists form support group

By MICHELLE LOCKE

STATE

DALLAS (AP) — Judy, a former fundamentalist, says fellow congregation members would scold her for being "out of step with the Lord" when her arthritis flared up.

Joel says it was a year after he quit going to church that he admitted he no longer believed the Bible.

Phil, who has been a member of various charismatic groups, the Catholic Church and the Mormons, says he was hooked on religion from childhood.

Surrounded, ironically, by the Sunday School decor of illustrated Bible texts in a North Dallas Baptist church, members of Fundamentalists Anonymous said at recent meeting they felt exiled and alone after first leaving fundamentalism.

They compare their feelings to the withdrawal symptoms of an alcoholic or drug addict.

Organizers of the New York-based group say fundamentalism is an addiction because it offers a clearcut picture of spiritual values with no gray areas or uncertainties, creating a step-by-step life plan that, although restrictive, offers security.

Judy, who like other group members asked that her last name not be used, said one reason she left her fundamentalist group was because she could not accept the belief that illnesses were caused by lack of faith.

"If my arthritis was painful, they would say, 'Oh, we're sorry you're out of step with the Lord,' " she said.

But leaving meant uncertainty, Judy said.

"We wouldn't have gotten caught in it if we hadn't had the need to belong, to fit, to have absolutes," she said.

"One of the biggest problems with being an ex-fundamentalist is that constant fear 'what if I'm wrong, what if I am going to hell in a handbasket?' " said Anne McKinney, who helped found the Dallas chapter of Fundamentalists Anonymous.

The year-old group has 32 chapters across the country, with the only Texas chapter in Dallas, where there are about 350 mail subscribers and about 20 people who attend the twice-monthly meetings. Members do not pay a fee to join or any dues, but donations are solicited after each meeting.

Dr. John Langlois, pastor of the church where the group often meets, said he has not raised many denominational eyebrows by allowing the group to use his building.

"We're pretty small potatoes. If we were a larger church, I don't know if we could get away with it," he said.

Langlois said he sees the group's purpose as seeking answers to spiritual concerns, despite its unconventional theme.

Other fundamentalist theologians say they sympathize with group members who have had bad experiences, but that Fundamentalists Anonymous organizers make a mistake when they lump all forms of fundamentalism into one category.

"Unfortunately, I think many of the people who are making up the membership of Fundamentalists Anonymous are throwing out the baby with the bath water," said Dr. Richard Land, vice president for academic affairs at the Criswell College in Dallas.

"I am somewhat grieved that there would be — if there are — abuses taking place that would lead to that kind of reaction," Land said.

Dr. John Hannah, professor and department chairman of historical theology at the Dallas Theological Seminary, agreed that some people have had bad experiences with extreme fundamentalist groups.

Both Land and Hannah differed between their brand of fundamentalism and what they described as legalistic fundamentalism, a heavy-handed dictatorial system forbidding compromise or tolerance of other beliefs.

"I see a core of people who have been legalized and burned out," Hannah said.

Sky can't limit celebration of Texas Sesquicentennial

WACO (AP) — For the Lone Star State, even the sky cannot limit the celebration of its 150th anniversary of independence from Mexico.

Beginning Wednesday a battery of aircraft will be on display and performing at the Texas Air Expo, an event billed as the state's biggest Sesquicentennial air show.

The five-day event at Texas State Technical Institute airfield begins Wednesday at 9 a.m. with grand opening ceremonies featuring Gov. Mark White, Curtis Graves, NASA deputy director and Sen. Chet Edwards, D-Duncanville.

"Things are coming together real good," expo chairman Karl May said last week. "The tickets are being sold all the way from Dallas to Austin."

On Thursday, the British Airways SST Concorde, the sleek flying machine that can cruise to an altitude of 55,000 feet and move at twice the speed of sound, will arrive from London. The craft will make two trips to the Gulf of Mexico at subsonic speed and return to Waco at supersonic speed, said May. The trips are expected to take 1½ hours, May said.

Tickets for the trip are selling for $650, he said.

Other aircraft scheduled for the expo include the Goodyear Blimp "Columbia" and the U.S. Air Force Thunderbirds.

Bush: Drugs pose threat to U.S. security

HOUSTON (AP) — The surge in drugs coming into the United States poses a serious threat to the nation's security and is enabling terrorists to gain support from drug traffickers, Vice President George Bush said Saturday.

"For the first time, the U.S. government specifically states that the international drug trade is a national security concern because of its ability to destabilize democratic allies through the corruption of police and judicial institutions," Bush said at a news conference.

As an example, Bush pointed out the Nov. 5, 1985, guerrilla takeover of the Colombian Palace of Justice in which 100 people, including 12 Colombian Supreme Court justices, were killed.

The principal documents sought and destroyed in the raid were U.S. extradition requests for major Colombian drug traffickers, he said.

Bush was briefed Saturday by the Organized Crime Drug Enforcement Task Force for the Gulf Coast region headed by U.S. Attorney Henry Oncken of Houston.

A similar drug task force was formed in Florida in 1982 to combat drug smuggling, Bush said. The foundation of that network helped establish 13 other task forces in the country.

But despite the success of authorities in Florida and other states, "the narcotics threat is now recognized as a national security concern," Bush said.

Bush said the drug problem also is widespread in Latin American countries as well.

"Our agencies are working closely with Mexico to corroborate even more fully on interdiction, prosecution and criminal activity. We know and they know that there is such activity in our country," Bush said.

Bush said that during a recent tour of Latin America he showed government officials pictures of Nicaraguans taking part in drug deals. He also said there are pictures indicating Cuban leader Fidel Castro permits the harboring of airplanes used in drug smuggling.

The Reagan administration also has authorized the use of military aircraft in tracking down drug smugglers, Bush said.

Bush said vigorous enforcement will trim down drug trafficking, but the long-term solution to the problem rests with the American people.

We Apologize To Everyone Who Just Bought A New Garment Bag

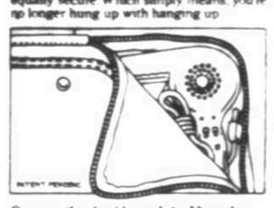

Because your new bag just became obsolete. Now introducing the System 4 Valet Garment Bag.

After years of listening, researching and designing, we've developed the World's Greatest Garment Bag. Several of its features are so superior they have their very own patent pending. Which won't be of much help to you if you've just bought a new garment bag.

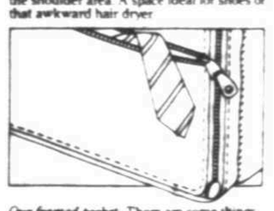

And for that we apologize. It really wasn't anything personal. Just a matter of perfection.

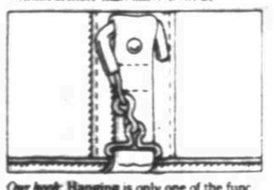

Our hanger system. There isn't one. You can use the hangers your clothes are already hanging on or the hangers we give you. Because with our hanger lock they're all equally secure. Which simply means, you're no longer hung up with hanging up.

Our over the shoulder pockets. Altogether System 4 has eight pockets. Two are in a most unusual area. An area normally wasted, the shoulder area. A space ideal for shoes or that awkward hair dryer.

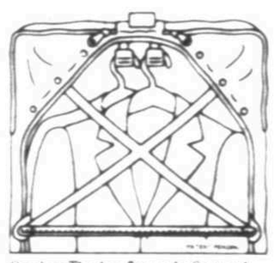

Our framed pocket. There are some things you don't want wrinkled. Some things you want to protect. Your tie. A scarf. Who knows. Which is why when you tuck something into our framed pocket, you can feel pretty confident that whatever it is you don't want wrinkled, more than likely won't be.

Our hook. Hanging is only one of the functions our hook is responsible for. Closing the bag is the other.

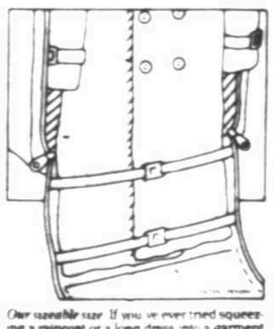

What, you say? How does the hook do that? Very simply, we reply. In fact, in just one easy step. All you do is wrap the hook around the bottom of the folded bag and into the closure catch.

And you're done. On your way. That is, if you can get around all the other passengers who are busy fumbling with their hooks, pockets, snaps and straps.

Our door. The door flap on the System 4 opens virtually all the way around the very perimeter of the bag, then drops completely out of your way. What that means is, there's no more twisting to maneuver your clothes in. Or out. Which not only makes it infinitely easier to pack, it cuts down on a lot of unnecessary rumpling.

Our Packing Bar. One of the biggest frustrations about traveling is to arrive with a bundle of wrinkled clothes scrunched in the bottom of your garment bag. System 4's crisscrossing packing bar prevents that by securing your clothes firmly on the hanger. Which just about eliminates wrinkles. And headaches.

Our cuvette cuff. If you've ever tried squeezing a raincoat or a long dress into a garment bag designed for the basic business suit, you know it's tough. Not so with our System 4. Essentially because of an ingenuous strap system which makes short work of packing longer garments. So no matter what you're packing, it will surely fit. Nicely.

Now that you've heard about all our features, try not to hate your garment bag. It's not that bad. It's just not this good.

Former fundamentalists form support group

By MICHELLE LOCKE

DALLAS (AP) — Judy, a former fundamentalist, says fellow congregation members would scold her for being "out of step with the Lord" when her arthritis flared up.

Joel says it was a year after he quit going to church that he admitted he no longer believed the Bible.

Phil, who has been a member of various charismatic groups, the Catholic Church and the Mormons, says he was hooked on religion from childhood.

Surrounded, ironically, by the Sunday School decor of illustrated Bible texts in a North Dallas Baptist church, members of Fundamentalists Anonymous said at recent meeting they felt exiled and alone after first leaving fundamentalism.

They compare their feelings to the withdrawal symptoms of an alcoholic or drug addict.

Organizers of the New York-based group say fundamentalism is an addiction because it offers a clearcut picture of spiritual values with no gray areas or uncertainties, creating a step-by-step life plan that, although restrictive, offers security.

Judy, who like other group members asked that her last name not be used, said one reason she left her fundamentalist group was because she could not accept the belief that illnesses were caused by lack of faith.

"If my arthritis was painful, they would say, 'Oh, we're sorry you're out of step with the Lord,' " she said.

But leaving meant uncertainty, Judy said.

"We wouldn't have gotten caught in it if we hadn't had the need to belong, to fit, to have absolutes," she said.

"One of the biggest problems with being an ex-fundamentalist is that constant fear 'what if I'm wrong, what if I am going to hell in a handbasket?' " said Anne McKinney, who helped found the Dallas chapter of Fundamentalists Anonymous.

The year-old group has 32 chapters across the country, with the only Texas chapter in Dallas, where there are about 350 mail subscribers and about 20 people who attend the twice-monthly meetings. Members do not pay a fee to join or any dues, but donations are solicited after each meeting.

Dr. John Langlois, pastor of the church where the group often meets, said he has not raised many denominational eyebrows by allowing the group to use his building.

"We're pretty small potatoes. If we were a larger church, I don't know if we could get away with it," he said.

Langlois said he sees the group's purpose as seeking answers to spiritual concerns, despite its unconventional theme.

Other fundamentalist theologians say they sympathize with group members who have had bad experiences, but that Fundamentalists Anonymous organizers make a mistake when they lump all forms of fundamentalism into one category.

"Unfortunately, I think many of the people who are making up the membership of Fundamentalists Anonymous are throwing out the baby with the bath water," said Dr. Richard Land, vice president for academic affairs at the Criswell College in Dallas.

"I am somewhat grieved that there would be — if there are — abuses taking place that would lead to that kind of reaction," Land said.

Dr. John Hannah, professor and department chairman of historical theology at the Dallas Theological Seminary, agreed that some people have had bad experiences with extreme fundamentalist groups.

Both Land and Hannah differed between their brand of fundamentalism and what they described as legalistic fundamentalism, a heavy-handed dictatorial system forbidding compromise or tolerance of other beliefs.

"I see a core of people who have been legalized and burned out," Hannah said.

Sky can't limit celebration of Texas Sesquicentennial

WACO (AP) — For the Lone Star State, even the sky cannot limit the celebration of its 150th anniversary of independence from Mexico.

Beginning Wednesday a battery of aircraft will be on display and performing at the Texas Air Expo, an event billed as the state's biggest Sesquicentennial air show.

The five-day event at Texas State Technical Institute airfield begins Wednesday at 9 a.m. with grand opening ceremonies featuring Gov. Mark White, Curtis Graves, NASA deputy director and Sen. Chet Edwards, D-Duncanville.

"Things are coming together real good," expo chairman Karl May said last week. "The tickets are being sold all the way from Dallas to Austin."

On Thursday, the British Airways SST Concorde, the sleek flying machine that can cruise to an altitude of 55,000 feet and move at twice the speed of sound, will arrive from London. The craft will make two trips to the Gulf of Mexico at subsonic speed and return to Waco at supersonic speed, said May. The trips are expected to take 1½ hours, May said.

Tickets for the trip are selling for $650, he said.

Other aircraft scheduled for the expo include the Goodyear Blimp "Columbia" and the U.S. Air Force Thunderbirds.

Bush: Drugs pose threat to U.S. security

HOUSTON (AP) — The surge in drugs coming into the United States poses a serious threat to the nation's security and is enabling terrorists to gain support from drug traffickers, Vice President George Bush said Saturday.

"For the first time, the U.S. government specifically states that the international drug trade is a national security concern because of its ability to destabilize democratic allies through the corruption of police and judicial institutions," Bush said at a news conference.

As an example, Bush pointed out the Nov. 5, 1985, guerrilla takeover of the Colombian Palace of Justice in which 100 people, including 12 Colombian Supreme Court justices, were killed.

The principal documents sought and destroyed in the raid were U.S. extradition requests for major Colombian drug traffickers, he said.

Bush was briefed Saturday by the Organized Crime Drug Enforcement Task Force for the Gulf Coast region headed by U.S. Attorney Henry Oncken of Houston.

A similar drug task force was formed in Florida in 1982 to combat drug smuggling, Bush said. The foundation of that network helped establish 13 other task forces in the country.

But despite the success of authorities in Florida and other states, "the narcotics threat is now recognized as a national security concern," Bush said.

Bush said the drug problem also is widespread in Latin American countries as well.

"Our agencies are working closely with Mexico to corroborate even more fully on interdiction, prosecution and criminal activity. We know and they know that there is such activity in our country," Bush said.

Bush said that during a recent tour of Latin America he showed government officials pictures of Nicaraguans taking part in drug deals. He also said there are pictures indicating Cuban leader Fidel Castro permits the harboring of airplanes used in drug smuggling.

The Reagan administration also has authorized the use of military aircraft in tracking down drug smugglers, Bush said.

Bush said vigorous enforcement will trim down drug trafficking, but the long-term solution to the problem rests with the American people.

We Apologize To Everyone Who Just Bought A New Garment Bag

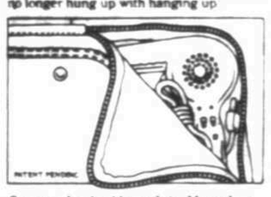

Because your new bag just became obsolete. Now introducing the System 4 Valet Garment Bag.

After years of listening, researching and designing, we've developed the World's Greatest Garment Bag. Several of its features are so superior they have their very own patent pending. Which won't be of much help to you if you've just bought a new garment bag.

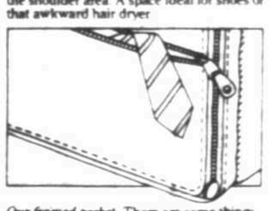

And for that we apologize. It really wasn't anything personal. Just a matter of perfection.

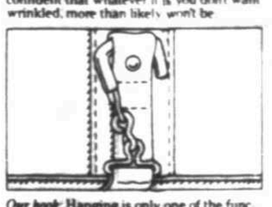

Our hanger system. There isn't one. You can use the hangers your clothes are already hanging on or the hangers we give you. Because with our hanger lock they're all equally secure. Which simply means, you're no longer hung up with hanging up.

Our over the shoulder pockets. Altogether, System 4 has eight pockets. Two are in a most unusual area. An area normally wasted, the shoulder area. A space ideal for shoes or that awkward hair dryer.

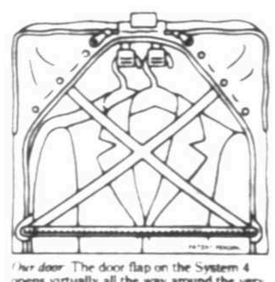

Our framed pocket. There are some things you don't want wrinkled. Some things you want to protect. Your tie. A scarf. Who knows. Which is why when you tuck something into our framed pocket, you can feel pretty confident that whatever it is, you don't want wrinkled, more than likely won't be.

Our hook. Hanging is only one of the functions our hook is responsible for. Closing the bag is the other.

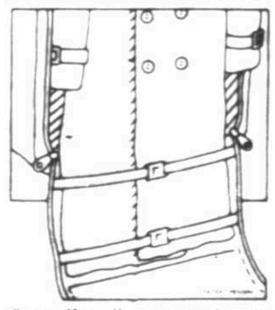

What, you say? How does the hook do that? Very simply, we reply. In fact, in just one easy step. All you do is wrap the hook around the bottom of the folded bag and into the closure catch.

And you're done. On your way. That is, if you can get around all the other passengers who are busy fumbling with their hooks, pockets, snaps and straps.

Our door. The door flap on the System 4 opens virtually all the way around the very perimeter of the bag, then drops completely out of your way. What that means is, there's no more twisting to maneuver your clothes in. Or out. Which not only makes it infinitely easier to pack, it cuts down on a lot of unnecessary rumpling.

Our Packing Bar. One of the biggest frustrations about traveling is to arrive with a bundle of wrinkled clothes scrunched in the bottom of your garment bag. System 4's crisscrossing packing bar prevents that by securing your clothes firmly on the hanger. Which just about eliminates wrinkles. And headaches.

Our expandable size. If you've ever tried squeezing a raincoat or a long dress into a garment bag designed for the basic business suit, you know it's tough. Not so with our System 4. Essentially because of an ingenious strap system which makes short work of packing longer garments. So no matter what you're packing, it will surely fit. Nicely.

Now that you've heard about all our features, try not to hate your garment bag. It's not that bad. It's just not this good.

Letter says universities' closings should be considered

HOUSTON (AP) — Texas university officials received a letter from the Governor's Select Committee on Higher Education asking them to study the idea of closing four colleges, including the University of Texas of the Permian Basin, the Houston Chronicle reported Saturday.

The letter further suggests the possibility of turning seven universities into branch centers and merging others, the newspaper said.

The letter also lays out alternative suggestions for restructuring groups of Texas universities into large regional systems that would wipe out the existing state boards of regents.

Larry Temple, an Austin lawyer and chairman of the committee, said he prepared the letter by listing each proposal that has come up in public discussion during the first eight months of the reform committee's life.

None of the proposals are recommendations, he said.

Among the ideas are the closing of Texas A&M University at Galveston, and the possible conversion of branch study centers of Lamar University at Port Arthur, Lamar at Orange and University of Houston-Victoria.

Other closings suggested for study include the UTPB; Sul Ross State University at Alpine; and East Texas State University at Commerce.

A suggested merger involves Texas Southern University, the University of Houston and Texas Woman's University Houston Center with the University of Texas Health Science Center.

Other possible mergers suggested for study include Angelo State with Sul Ross State; North Texas State with Texas Woman's University; Texas Tech with Midwestern University, Sul Ross State or West Texas State; UT-Arlington and UT-Dallas; and UTPB and Texas Tech.

"Politicians have talked about them, newspapers have written about them, but nobody has tried to chronicle the proposals," Temple said. "We're trying to tabulate the pros and cons of a change."

The 23-member committee, composed of legislators, educators and business people, was an outgrowth of the 1985 Legislature, which charged the panel with studying the state's universities in light of dwindling state revenues.

"Thirty-seven universities with 15 governing boards doesn't make sense and doesn't work right," Temple said.

The committee began its work in October 1985 and plans to come up with recommendations this October to present to the Legislature in January 1987.

The letter also suggests the possibility of merging all eight medical, dental and allied health schools into one system and the merger of all four campuses of Texas State Technical Institute with nearby community colleges.

Another idea voiced by the letter is the merger of the state's six upper-level institutions that offer junior-, senior- and graduate-level courses with nearby community junior colleges.

Odessa lawmaker launches drive to repeal seat-belt law

ODESSA (AP) — Two legislators are launching a drive to repeal the state's seat belt law, claiming the measure pulls too tightly against personal freedoms.

State Rep. Kelly Godwin, R-Odessa, a 35-year-old computer consultant, last Oct. 3 launched a petition drive to repeal the state's 9-month-old law forcing drivers to wear seat belts or face fines up to $50.

His main House supporter in the repeal drive is state Rep. M.A. Taylor, R-Waco.

Taylor said Wednesday he has gathered 2,000 signatures in the repeal drive. Godwin said he has collected more than 5,000 signatures. He said he already has drafted legislation for repeal of the seat belt law.

Taylor said he buckles up before driving.

"I'm not opposed to seat belts, he said. But his anti-seat bet law stance has drawn criticism from friends in the medical profession, he said. Doctors have accused him and other seat belt law opponents of adding to the state's traffic accident injury rate, Taylor said.

He defended his stand as protecting personal freedoms.

Warden wades in where others fear to tread

EL PASO (AP) — In this dry West Texas city, where water is a precious commodity, one man patrols the streets looking for sprinklers running amok and careless car washers.

They call him the water warden, although in just two months on the job Bill Wade said he has been called other names and threatened with physical violence and political undoing.

"Generally, I get great cooperation," Wade said Friday. "But then I get these upstanding citizens, civic leaders, who refer to my questionable heritage and my illegitimate birth."

A former Fort Bliss contractor who went looking for work when the construction business dried up, the aptly-named Wade got the temporary job of enforcing El Paso's year-old ordinance against wasting water.

The city's public inspection department gave him a copy of the ordinance, a monthly gasoline allowance of 100 gallons, and a batch of citation and warning forms.

"This is kind of an awesome job," Wade said. "They have an ordinance that's never been tested and they don't really know how to enforce it. They just said, 'Here it is, you figure it out.'

"So I'm it for the whole city, with 100 gallons of gas. But at least it's a start."

He sees the job as an important one that involves some law enforcement and a lot of public education and public relations.

So far, he said, he has issued 13 tickets to flagrant violators, more than 100 warnings, mailed about 50 warning letters to water abusers and has made uncounted telephone calls trying to win compliance.

The city ordinance makes it a Class C misdemeanor punishable by a fine of up to $200 to allow water to "flow, spray or otherwise move" into a street, alley or someone else's property.

When running water strays onto the asphalt or makes a puddle in an intersection, citations may be issued.

Commercial-sized sprinkler systems are the worst problem, he said.

During a brief tour Friday, he pointed out several intersections where water from surrounding sprinkler systems has damaged or all but destroyed the pavement.

Damage to roadways, traffic safety and water conservation were the three reasons behind for the city ordinance.

While the City Council was debating it, one council member tried to exempt car washing. But, Wade says car washing can waste water too, and he has issued about a dozen warnings, even to a sentimental favorite — school clubs washing cars to raise money.

"When I catch a carwash, I tell them to use buckets, hoses with nozzles that shut off and to watch where the water runs," he said. "You can't just lay the hose down and let it run into the street."

Often, he said, finding the right person to issue a citation to is difficult, as in the case of a car dealership where the police had to be called before one of the managers would accept a ticket.

Bentsen asks for probe of DOE's selection process

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Lloyd Bentsen has asked for an investigation of whether the Department of Energy violated the law by postponing the search for a second nuclear waste dump in the eastern United States.

A site in Deaf Smith County in the Texas Panhandle is one of three western sites being considered for the nation's first high-level nuclear waste dump, to begin operating in the 1990s. The other two sites are in Washington and Nevada.

In a statement released Saturday, Bentsen, D-Texas, said he has been working to block placing of the dump in the Panhandle beneath the huge Ogallala Aquifer, an underground water supply.

Energy Secretary John Herrington announced last week that the government is postponing a plan for a second dump site because it is not needed.

"Now, frankly, that gives me a great deal of concern," Bentsen said, "because it was always understood that you were going to have one site for the West and another site for the East. And I believe what he (Herrington) is doing is illegal..."

Bentsen contends that the second site is necessary because the first dump is limited to holding 70,000 metric tons of waste, while the nation will generate over 130,000 metric tons of nuclear waste in the next 20 years, according to estimates.

Model's friends shocked by brutal attack

DALLAS (AP) — Friends of Marla Gay Hanson say they are shocked by the brutal slashing that may have cut short the career of the $2,500 a day model.

Ms. Hanson, a native of Independence, Mo., moved to Dallas five years ago and worked for residential real estate companies and an apartment locator service before working at the Apparel Mart with J.H. Collectibles, a firm that markets a sportswear line.

She was in St. Vincent's Hospital in New York on Friday. More than 100 stitches were required to close gashes on her right cheek and above and below her left eye, hospital officials said.

Kim McCullough, who knew and worked with Ms. Hanson in Dallas, said she was stunned when she heard that a man had slashed Miss Hanson in the face with a razor blade.

"When I h rd the news, I almost died," she said. "She only worked here for several months, but we loved her. She was a real sweet girl, who got along with everyone and worked well with people. She left Dallas a year ago because she was planning to be a model and had a job lined up."

Police said two men, Steve Bowman, 27, and Daren Norman, 20, both of Queens, were arrested after a foot chase and charged with first-degree assault, possession of a weapon and resisting arrest.

During questioning, the two men implicated Ms. Hanson's landlord, Steven Roth, 28, who was then arrested, police Sgt. Diane Kubier said. Roth owed Ms. Hanson an $850 refund on a security deposit, authorities said.

Ms. Hanson, an Odessa native, had worked in the Dallas area, working at several jobs including as a cocktail waitress at posh Dallas hotels.

After she went to New York, the 5-4 brunette's career took off when she went to work for Petite Model Management in Manhattan.

She played a part in a Warren Beatty movie.

Irwin 'critical but stable' after heart attack

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. (AP) — Former astronaut James B. Irwin, a veteran of walks on the moon and an evangelist who searched for Noah's Ark, was in critical but stable condition Saturday after suffering a cardiac arrest.

Irwin was not conscious but was not in a coma, either, Dr. Richard Moothart said at Penrose Hospital.

The cardiologist said Irwin was unresponsive and added that it could be several days before physicians would be willing to make statements about his chances for recovery after Friday's seizure.

"As best we'll ever be able to determine, he had a cardiac irregularity causing him to lose consciousness," Moothart said.

Irwin did not suffer a heart attack, he said. The difference between the arrythmia suffered by Irwin and a heart attack is that an arrythmia "does not necessarily mean you have damage to the heart," Moothart said.

Irwin, 56, suffered his first heart attack in 1973, at age 43, while playing handball. He underwent cardiac bypass surgery in 1977, but later that year suffered a second heart attack.

Paramedics were summoned after a youngster found Irwin on a curb near his home. Irwin was dressed in jogging shoes and shorts and apparently had collapsed after sitting down, said Fire Lt. Andrew Collins.

Sue McBroom, emergency medical technician dispatcher for the Colorado Springs Fire Department, said rescuers used a defibrillator, which delivers a shock of electricity to the chest, to restore Irwin's heart beat.

"When we first got to him, he had no pulse," said paramedic Richard Burns. "After we defibrillated him, he had a pulse. Initially, it was weak but before we got him to the hospital (a 10-minute drive) it was a good, strong pulse."

Baby awaits donor heart

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — A dying, 13-day-old infant clung to life Saturday, while doctors, nurses, and the parents who gave up his custody to entitle him to a heart transplant operation awaited the gift of a human donor.

Jesse Sepulveda's condition was upgraded overnight from critical to serious, said nursing supervisor Helen Hancock at Huntington Memorial Hospital, where the baby was born May 25.

The baby won't be transferred to Loma Linda University Medical Center, 60 miles east of Los Angeles, until a donor heart is found.

At Jesse's birth, doctors told his young, unwed parents that he had only two weeks to live. It wasn't known how long the baby could survive without a transplant, Mrs. Hancock said.

Infant heart donors are rare, and Jesse's parents acknowledged one might not be found or that Jesse wouldn't survive the transplant operation.

On Friday, the infant's parents relinquished guardianship to the child's paternal grandparents. Loma Linda officials insisted on the custody change before the child could be put on the list of potential transplant recipients, family attorneys said.

"We're overwhelmed with joy. We're more than happy," the mother, 17-year-old Deana Binkley, said Friday after she and the baby's father, Jesse Sepulveda, 26, signed over guardianship of the child to Sepulveda's parents.

De Lorean aids creditors

Thomopoulos

DETROIT (AP) — John Z. De Lorean is helping creditors of his defunct sports car company in their efforts to recover more than $1 million in jewelry, furniture and household goods allegedly taken by his ex-wife, Cristina Ferrare Thomopoulos.

De Lorean Motor Co. creditors filed papers this week in a New York federal court alleging that the items she took to California when the couple separated in September 1984 were the company's property.

The creditors seek goods ranging from a $210,000 emerald and diamond pendant, a $2,750 silk gown and two $13,200 Venetian giltwood armchairs to a toaster, measuring cups, clothing and personal items.

Mrs. Thomopoulos denied any wrongdoing and promised a more detailed response at a federal court hearing set for Thursday in White Plains, N.Y.

BURBANK, Calif. (AP) — Actor Herve Villechaize, the 3-foot-11 former co-star of TV's "Fantasy Island," was arrested after allegedly kicking a 205-pound, 6-foot-3 process server, police said Saturday.

Villechaize, who played Tattoo, sidekick to Ricardo Montalban's Mr. Roarke, was freed without bail Friday pending a court hearing June 19, police said.

Police said the actor was leaving a restaurant with his ex-wife, Donna Hagen, 29, when process server Eric Brownson, 40, handed him papers ordering him to court in a civil case involving Ms. Hagen, police said.

After taking the papers, the actor "threw them down on the ground and stepped on them," police Lt. Talbert Kanigher said.

"The guy leaned down to pick up the papers and Herve grabbed his arm...and kicked him twice in the leg, then pointed to the guy and said, 'You're dead,' and pointed to his ex-wife and said, "You're dead, too,'" the officer said.

Villechaize denied striking Brownson. "I saw a huge man lunging at me with something in his hand," the actor said. "I thought it was...a weapon, so I backed off and the package fell on the floor."

Ms. Hagen filed a $225,000 lawsuit against Villechaize in 1982, claiming he had struck her and tried to shoot her the year before.

In May 1985, Villechaize was fined $425 and given a year's probation after pleading no contest to a misdemeanor charge of carrying a loaded weapon.

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Jazz pianist Ellis Marsalis, whose son, Wynton, is one of the nation's most acclaimed trumpeters, is leaving the city's high school for performing arts to teach at Virginia Commonwealth University, officials say.

Marsalis, who has taught for 11 years at the New Orleans Center for Creative Arts, has been hired as a professor to start a jazz program at the Richmond, Va., university. The job is for one year, officials said.

Marsalis and his band are on tour in Indonesia and couldn't be reached for comment Friday.

Celtics, Rockets go toe-to-toe in Game 6

By Chris Jenkins
Copley News Service

BOSTON — The Boston Celtics have Texas in their rrearviewp mirror. A look in the bathroom mirror at home will reveal some momentos of their visit to the Lone Star State.

Welts. Stitches. Bandages.

The team that was supposed to breeze to its 16th NBA championship got roughed up pretty good in the course of three playoff games at The Summit in Houston. One thing's for sure now. You can forget all that Sweet 16 talk. If the Celtics win another title Sunday or Tuesday — they lead the best-of-seven series, 3-2 — there will be scars to show for it.

So dominant were the Celtics in winning Games 1 and 2 in Boston Garden — throughout the 82-game regular season and previous playoff series with Chicago, Atlanta and Milwaukee — that most felt the NBA finals wouldn't need a return to Beantown.

Instead, by taking two of three at home, the Rockets bought themselves a ticket back to the Garden. Irish tempers get even shorter in the Garden, especially June, when title fever is matched by the equatorial conditions inside the league's oldest and most storied building.

THE MOOD here is ugly. A major rainstorm is in Boston for the weekend, but it's hinting around that it might stay through the summer. Local hero Marvelous Marvin Hagler hasn't beaten anybody senseless in, oh, hours. After what happened in Houston the other night, Boston is just itching for another fight.

And here comes Ralph Sampson, a one-fisted player riding into a two-fisted town.

"Sampson better be wearing his hard hat," said Celtics forward Larry Bird. "There will be a lot of contact in Boston. Our crowd will be louder than theirs, and they are mean and nasty, just like Houston."

Sampson, for those who might've missed it, was ejected in the second quarter of Game 5 because he punched out the Celtics' backcourt of the moment. He belted Jerry Sichting twice, then Dennis Johnson once, all with solid right hands to the head. (How odd it was, too, that one of the guards involved wasn't the Celtics' incendiary Danny Ainge.)

The day after, Sampson was the subject of a coast-to-coast roast in the press. Some of the strongest chastising was by columnists in Houston, a couple of whom recalled the tragedy of Kermit Washington's devastating punch to the face of Rudy Tomjanovich, now a Rockets assistant coach. Sampson's actions, they each wrote, were "indefensible."

But then, according one teammate, that little scene the other night was actually Sampson's way of responding to previous criticism.

"PEOPLE were saying Ralph was timid in the first two games," said Jim Petersen, who took over Sampson's playing time. "I think he took offense to that. I think they were surprised when he was taking them on three at a time and bloodying them up."

For whatever criticism was to come, though, Sampson was a hero to Houston fans. His departure triggered a shower of debris aimed at the Celtics, including snowballs formed from ice the color of soft drinks. Thereafter, whenever it was announced that substitutes were entering the game for Houston, the crowd chanted, "We want Ralph!"

Sampson played it to the hilt, too, appearing through a portal near the court for curtain calls. All of this, of course, was relayed back to Boston in damning detail.

But once the craziness of Game 5 was over, a strange calm prevailed. Maybe it was the overall absurdity of a playoff game in which the Celtics seemed to be leading with their chins, but the Celtics reacted for the most part with humor, albeit humor as black as their basketball shoes.

Angels discover winning formula

By ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

When the Midland Angels' win, they usually follow one of two formulas. The first is sneak a runner or two on base then wait for Glen Walker to blast a home run. The second is get lead off hitter Mark McLemore on base and sneak him around to score.

On Saturday, the Angels used both formulas, as Walker bopped a pair of home runs and McLemore added three hits, two stolen bases and a pair of rbi in Midland's 9-5 Texas League win over San Antonio. Brian Brady also cleared the fence twice, his fifth and sixth homers of the year.

The win keeps the Angels within 3 ½ games of TL West leading El Paso and the hopes of a first half pennant alive. With just 10 games remaining, the final six at Dudley Field in the Border City, each game's importance is clear.

The Angels can ill afford to be more than two games back of the Diablos entering that series or they will need to take five, perhaps all six games of the set.

Midland opened the second game of the six-game set with the Dodgers playing like they had a pennant on their minds. The Angels put a four-spot on the board in the first inning, thanks to McLemore's baserunning and a fielder's choice rbi by Billie Merrifield, then homers by Walker, with no one aboard, Brady with Raul Tovar along for the ride.

San Antonio chipped back off Doug Banning, 4-2, for solo runs in the second and fourth, before Midland stretched its lead to 5-2 in the fourth when Doug Davis crossed the plate on a McLemore single.

Two more Dodger runs crossed in the fifth as Banning, making just his second start since coming off the DL in late May, began to struggle. He lasted into the seventh when Randy Harvey came on to close out the last three innings earning his second save. It was Banning's first win since April 21.

"He isn't feeling any pain in his back, he just wasn't sharp, I don't

Grosso repeats Triathlon triumph

By ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

Doug Grosso's win in Saturday's George Hoffman Memorial Tall City Triathlon seemed to come naturally for the 30-year old defending champion.

Tabbed as the pre-race favorite to defend his Triathlon title, Grosso was the fifth individual to hit the water in the staggered start Saturday morn, but once out of the pool, he rarely had the occasion to be behind anyone.

"In a stagger start like this, there really is no psyche out factor, no back and forth with the other competitors," Grosso said. "It's just go, go, go all the time. It's difficult to concentrate in these stagger starts. There's no one around to push you. In a mass start, there's always someone around."

Without the other contenders around him, Grosso felt sure his 1:47.53, five minutes and 23 seconds slower than last year, would not hold up.

"Wait a minute, I'm not the winner of this thing yet," Grosso said as reporters and TV cameras surrounded him after being the first individual to cross the line. "There's probably someone out there burning up a 1:37 or so."

BUT A 20 MPH headwind in the longest segment of the race — the 18.6 mile bike — was causing all kinds of problems for individuals and teams alike.

As soon as the swimmers had jumped out of the Doug Russell Pool and started riding west towards Mission Country Club in Odessa, the wind would nearly bring the cyclists to a halt. The 30K ride was becoming an ironman contest in itself.

"We were pushing low gears all the way to Odessa," Grosso said of the biking segment. "That wind was whipping up pretty good, and I think that hurt the times. This course is more accurate than last year, but maybe I'm just slower this year."

You couldn't convince runner up Scott Hammond, also the race director, or the 132 other individuals competing this year. Hammond came in at 1:56.43, nearly nine minutes behind Grosso, but edging Abilene's Paul Patterson by about 50 seconds for second place. Grosso's winning margin of 8:50 was even wider than it was last year.

"I don't think anyone is going to touch that," said Chip Kane, fourth overall and first in the 20-29 men's age group.

True to form, no one did.

IN THE women's race, Chris Robichaud returned after a one year absence to regain her title with a fine 2:09.51. Robichaud skipped last year's race while she was pregnant and Lana Booth won the title. This year, Booth did not enter to defend.

Two years ago she posted a stronger time, but the wind took its toll on Robichaud's run for a personal best this time as well.

"Two years ago I averaged 22 MPH on the bike, this year it was only 18 MPH. That wind was pretty strong," Robichaud said.

The 29-year old mother of two found little to stand in her way of a return crown, but when she did see competition, she just ran away from it.

"I just won it my about a minute (actually 1:37)," Robichaud explained. "I saw someone (runner up Jamie Kelldorf) with a low number on one of the running turnarounds and she was pretty close."

From there, Robichaud legged it home for the winner.

The fastest team time of the 59 entered came two-thirds from San Angelo, one-third from Midland. David Hague, swimming, and Tymn Combest, bicycling, combined with Midland's Ralph Edwards, winner of last week's Tall Town 10,000, to post a 1:40.54, the day's best time over the 25-mile plus course.

The Detroit Tigers had an extra base hit in their first 50 games this season.

STREAKS

Since May 10 the Baltimore Orioles' bullpen had a 7-0 record with 10 saves in 12 save opportunities.

SPEAKING

"(Rick Rhoden) was upset by Bill (Robinson) asking the umpires to check the ball. Bill said you don't have to cheat and Rhoden said some words to Bill. I don't blame Bill. If it was me, I wouldn't have pushed him, I would have hit him. Rhoden's the reason it was all happening to begin with." Mets Manager Dave Johnson speaking about the brawl that broke out between New York and Pittsburgh after the Mets said Rhoden was scuffing the ball.

Texas schools find a way

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

In New Hampshire a school has been forced to abandon its ice hockey program.

A public beach on Long Island has banned surfacing.

In a statewide vote, Iowa banned pole vaulting from its list of approved track events, ruling the landing pits represent a high risk for injury.

Equipment is being removed from playgrounds and boards from swimming pools.

Use of buildings for non-school activities is being limited and gymnastics equipment has been placed on the verboten list.

Across the nation, soaring liability premiums and policy cancellations are leaving municipal recreational facilities and school districts without liability protection.

Climbing costs for athletic gear already has many big-city scholastic athletic ppograms on the ropes and, perhaps, this, without outside help, could prove the fatal blow.

Liability Threat

THE PANIC hasn't spread to Texas and Midland Schools Athletic Director Gil Bartosh doesn't see any reason for alarm.

"First, we require a physical for each athlete by a certified physician of their choice. If there is a history of a problem, the personal physician will know about it. Also, the athlete is more likely to confide in his personal physician.

"Secondly, the player must sign a permission-to-play form. The same form includes a responsibility agreement. It used to be that we'd have to call a player's doctor, if the player were injured on the field," adds Bartosh, "But now the trainer or attending physician may administer immediate aide." This is also something agreed to in the consent-to-play form signed by all schoolboy athletes.

Bartosh points out that an $18 insurance policy is available to the athlete as a supplement to the regular insurance policy held by the player."

Athletes are encouraged to take out the supplementary insurance, which covers the football season and spring training.

"It's a real bargain," says Bartosh. "They have their choice of 24-hour coverage or coverage that protects just during the school hours."

The policy would pick up what is deductible on most other policies.

ANGELS

know why," said pitching coach Aurelio Monteagudo.

Harvey came in to slam the door on the Dodgers on just one hit in the final three innings, striking out three and walking none.

"The thing I really like about Randy Harvey is that he has guts," said manager Joe Maddon of the lefty called up from Palm Springs (Class A Cal League) last month.

But it's the 28-year-old Walker that has the rest of the league shaking its head. The well traveled designated hitter wore out the Dodger pitching staff Saturday with his long ball act. He nearly made it a neat hat trick with another long drive to center field in the eighth inning and the bases loaded.

"In the past, I've been a streaky hitter, but this year I've worked extra hard to try and be more consistent with my numbers," Walker said.

Those numbers are the best in the Texas League right now with 60 rbi in just 56 games as well as the league leading 14 homers.

Walker's second home run, over the left-center field wall, came with Billie Merrifield on base and put the game out of reach 9-5 in the seventh inning.

"He really has his confidence back as a ballplayer," said Maddon. "That was something he had to re-find this season after being injured much of last year. His confidence level is such right now that he probably feels he doesn't belong in Triple-A right now.

Another player who is wearing out the league is second baseman McLemore who raised his average to .322 with three hits. He was also two-for-two in stolen base attempts giving him 37 for 42 this season, a nifty 88 percent success rate.

Juli Inkster boosts margin

McDonald's

MALVERN, Pa. (AP) — Juli Inkster shot a 3-under-par 69 Saturday to boost her third-round lead to eight strokes over a faltering field in the $450,000 LPGA McDonald's Championship.

The 25-year-old from Los Altos, Calif., carried out her promise to play the course, not the leader board or her closest pursuers, in the 72-hole tournament. First prize is $67,500.

Her three-round, 12-under 204 tied the tournament record set last year by Alice Miller en route to the championship.

The closest to Inkster's runaway pace was Mary Beth Zimmerman, the tour's second-leading money winner and a two-tournament victor this year. She carded a third-round 73 for a 54-hole total of 212.

Inkster had posted a record 36-hole, 9-under-par 135 to lead by four after two rounds. She increased the lead by four strokes Saturday with a remarkably consistent round of three birdies and 15 pars.

Inkster, after making a birdie on the 485-yard, par-5 second hole, led by at least six strokes over the remainder of the 6,313-yard White Manor Country Club course.

After the birdie, she shot eight straight pars, birdied the 11th hole, matched regulation over the next five, birdied the 17th and got a par on the 18th.

Inkster is seeking her sixth victory in three full years on the tour. She started her assault on the small, hard greens at White Manor with a 4-under 68 in Thursday's first round and followed with a 5-under 67 on Friday.

Floyd crowds into 3-way tie

HARRISON, N.Y. (AP) — Veteran Ray Floyd made a tap-in birdie on the final hole and moved into a three-way tie for the lead Saturday after the third round of the $600,000 Manufacturers Hanover Westchester Classic.

Floyd, going for the 20th victory of a 24-year PGA Tour career, struggled through wind and rain to a hard-won round of 70, one under par on the Westchester Country Club course.

He was tied at 205, eight under par, for the 54-hole lead with quiet, slender Mike Reid and Bob Tway.

Tway, a winner at San Diego earlier this year, had a 69 in the difficult conditions that ranged from misty drizzle to heavy showers.

Reid, closing in on $1 million in career earnings but not yet a winner in 10 years of Tour activity, also birdied the 18th hole, finishing off a 68.

"It's been frustrating, disappointing," Reid said of his career-long non-winning string. "Playing for 10 years, an average of 30 tournaments a year, in every tournament thinking you have a chance to win ....

"Sooner or later, it's going to happen: I'm going to win a tournament."

Willie Wood, the 5-foot-7, 135-pounder called "Wee Willie" by his fellow pros, salvaged a 73 and was two shots off the pace going into Sunday's final round of the chase for a $106,000 first prize.

Brett Upper, Gil Morgan and Scott Simpson were another stroke back at 208. Simpson and Morgan had third round 70s, while Upper birdied the 18th for a 74.

January leads Seniors

DALLAS (AP) — Don January sank a 30-foot birdie putt on the 18th green Saturday to break a tie with Chi Chi Rodriguez and seize a one stroke lead after 36-holes of the Senior Players ReUnion Pro-Am at soggy Bent Tree Country Club.

January, who hasn't won a tournament in his hometown in 30 years, hit 17 greens in regulation as he shot a methodical 4-under par 68 for a 10-under par 134.

Rodriguez, who was tied with January before the day began, shot a 3-under 69 for 135 in the chase for the $26,000 first place prize in the 54-hole tournament.

Lloyd wins seventh French Open title

French Open

PARIS (AP) - Chris Evert Lloyd won her record seventh women's singles championship at the French Open, beating Martina Navratilova 2-6, 6-3, 6-3 in a performance the loser said was close to perfect.

"On a scale of one to 10, I played about an 8. She played a 10 the last two sets," Navratilova said.

Lloyd won't argue the point.

"I felt the second and third sets I played great," she said. "I found my game."

After struggling through the first set, Lloyd turned it around in the second with a better serve and groundstrokes. She clinched her second consecutive French championship, seventh overall and 18th Grand Slam title when Navratilova failed to get to a drop shot on the third match point.

The victory was worth $154,400 for Lloyd, an American who first won the French in 1974.

Her seventh championship put her one ahead of six-time men's champ Bjorn Borg in titles won on the red clay courts of Roland Garros.

Lloyd won last year here, keeping alive her string of at least one Grand Slam victory a year since that first one in Paris. Last year's victory was in her mind on Saturday."I had to prove last year wasn't a fluke," she said.

The men's championship will be decided today, when Ivan Lendl, No.1 in the world and the top seed in the French Open, plays unseeded Mikael Pernfors of Sweden.

Virtually unknown before the tournament began two weeks ago, Pernfors beat eighth-seeded Henri Leconte 2-6, 7-5, 7-6, 6-3 in the semifinals Friday. Lendl of Czechoslovakia had an easy time against disheartened 13th seed Johan Kriek 6-2, 6-1, 6-0.

Pernfors is the first unseeded player in the men's final in Paris since fellow Swede Mats Wilander in 1982. Wilander won that championship.

Danzig Connection, Chris McCarron up, splashes to victory in Belmont Stakes.

Danzig keeps connection alive

Belmont Stakes

NEW YORK (AP) — Danzig Connection took the lead on the turn and splashed home first Saturday to give trainer Woody Stephens an astounding fifth straight victory in the Belmont Stakes.

Danzig Connection, ridden by Chris McCarron, who never before had ridden for Stephens, got home in front of lightly raced Johns Treasure in a time of 2:29 4-5 on a sloppy track.

In the days leading up to the race, the 72-year-old Stephens said, "I don't have as good a chance this year."

Owned by Henryk deKwiatkowski, Danzig Connection finished 1¼ lengths in front Johns Treasure, who was a neck ahead of Kentucky Derby winner Ferdinand. Personal Flag was another three-quarters of a length back.

It was a wet, foggy day, but a crowd of 43,127 fans turned out to watch another Stephens 3-year-old shine in the final leg of the Triple Crown.

Stephens had won the four previous Belmonts with Conquistador Cielo, Caveat, Swale and Creme Fraiche. Danzig Connection's second straight stakes victory, in only his fourth start this year, was worth $338,640 from a purse of $564,400.

Danzig Connection missed the Kentucky Derby and Preakness because of a bone chip in his right knee, which he suffered late in his 2-year-old campaign.

The victory by the Kentucky-bred son of Danzig split the Triple Crown three ways. Missing from the Belmont was Snow Chief, the beaten Derby favorite, who won the Preakness by four lengths over Ferdinand.

Danzig Connection paid $18, $8.20 and $5.40. Johns Treasure, owned by John Murrell and trained by 79-year-old Walter Kelley, returned $6.40 and $4.60, while Mrs. Howard B. Keck's Ferdinand, trained by 73-year-old Charlie Whittingham and ridden by 54-year-old Bill Shoemaker, was $3.80 to show.

Seminoles, Miami win Series tilts

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — Pitcher Richie Lewis picked up his second victory and Eric Mangham's sacrifice fly brought home the winning run in the bottom of the eighth as top-ranked Florida State beat Oklahoma State 6-5 Saturday in a loser's bracket game of the NCAA College World Series.

Oklahoma State, suffering its second loss, was eliminated from the tournament.

Kevin Ryan and Rick Raether combined for a five-hitter as defending champion Hurricanes staved off elimination, a 4-2 over previously unbeaten Arizona Saturday night.

The victory sends the 50-16, third-ranked Hurricanes into Sunday's semifinal game against top-ranked Florida State at 7:10 p.m. CDT.

Penalty shot parried, Mexico keeps 1-1 tie

World Cup

MEXICO CITY (AP) — It was the kind of confrontation athletes dream of — "Mano a Mano" with the game on the line.

In front of the Paraguayan goal stood Roberto Fernandez," whose quick reflexes have brought him renown as one of the world's best goalkeepers. At the penalty spot stood Hugo Sanchez, Mexico's greatest sporting hero.

Whether Paraguay would keep the 1-1 tie it had earned on Julio Cesar Romero's header five minutes earlier, or Mexico would win and advance to the second round of the world soccer championship, depended on what Sanchez did. The star striker laid on the ground for several minutes, attended to by trainers.

But he recovered sufficiently to take the kick, a low, hard drive to Fernandez's right. The goalie lunged and got his outstretched hand on the ball, which grazed the goalpost and bounded to the sideline.

Paraguay 1, Mexico 1. And Fernandez had the thrill of a lifetime.

The Mexicans sent the capacity crowd of 114,000 at Aztec Stadium into a frenzy by taking the lead after just two minutes. A centering pass by Raul Servin found Luis Flores free in the penalty area and he slipped the ball into the far corner of the net.

Romero, the former Cosmos forward, put in a powerful header off a free kick by Adolfino Canete to tie it.

The tie, which prevented both teams from clinching a place in the second round, came in a rugged game, with 80 free kicks. Sanchez received two yellow-card warnings, which means he will miss Mexico's game with Iraq on Wednesday.

Also on Saturday, Spain downed Northern Ireland 2-1 at Guadalajara, and Poland edged Portugal 1-0 in Monterrey.

The result at Aztec Stadium left in question just how intense the street partying here would be. Following Mexico's 2-1 victory over Belgium last Tuesday, more than 100,000 people were involved in the revelry, with 200 injuries and 81 arrests reported.

Capital authorities, aiing to prevent further damage to monuments on the city's main avenue, designated five city parks for celebrations. The parks are located in five scattered boroughs and were picked to avoid the downtown congestion of Tuesday night.

Workmen built a seven-foot high wooden fence around the base of the Independence Monument, where police clashed with about 2,000 fans who were still celebrating early Wednesday. Some damage was down to the monument and the surrounding area.

When people take time to care for others, everyone's a winner.

At Southwestern Bell Telephone, we salute the thousands of virtually anonymous Texans across our state who tirelessly volunteer their services to help others.

Now, in times of tightened federal and state budgets, their quiet and unselfish contributions have never been more strongly felt.

We're happy that our 34,000 Texas employees are included in this group. The generous giving of their personal time and energies to education, social services and community security has earned them special recognition as one of nine Texas winners of the 1986 Governor's Awards for Outstanding Volunteer Service.

I deeply appreciate the spirit of service expressed by volunteers like these, because the real winners are the people whose lives they touch with their caring.

Garner's double sparks Astro win

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Phil Garner hit a two-run double with the bases loaded in the eighth inning Saturday, erasing a 5-4 Los Angeles lead and lifting the Houston Astros to a 7-5 victory over the Dodgers.

The Astros had led 4-2 before Len Matuszek's three-run pinch homer in the seventh inning off Charlie Kerfeld gave the Dodgers a 5-4 lead.

Reliever Ken Howell, 2-3, entered the game for Los Angeles in the eighth inning and was greeted by Billy Hatcher's leadoff single. Howell walked Glenn Davis and pinch-hitter Dennis Walling, loading the bases.

Garner then lined a shot off the left-center field fence, giving the Astros a 6-5 lead and making a winner of Aurelio Lopez, 1-0. It was the first National League victory for Lopez, released by Detroit after last season.

Doran tripled and Hatcher doubled to give Houston an insurance run in the ninth.

Dave Smith pitched the final two innings for his league-leading 14th save.

Los Angeles left 15 men on base and 10 in scoring position.

The Astros staked starter Mike Madden to a 4-1 lead, but the lefthander was removed in the fifth after yielding a leadoff double to Bill Madlock and a walk to Marshall. Reliever Larry Andersen got Scioscia to hit into a double play, but Brock singled to bring Los Angeles within 4-2.

Glenn Davis opened the scoring against Jerry Reuss with his 11th home run, a two-run drive in the first inning. Madlock cut the margin to 2-1 in the bottom of the first with an RBI single.

Giants 6, Reds 2

SAN FRANCISCO — Bob Brenly's first home run in six weeks, a tie-breaking, three-run drive in the fourth inning, powered San Francisco.

Mike Krukow, 8-3, won his fourth straight decision with an eight-hitter, striking out eight Reds and walking none. The eight victories equals Krukow's total of last season.

Cardinals 3, Cubs 2

ST. LOUIS — Jack Clark tripled and scored the tie-breaking run on Tommy Herr's single, and John Tudor pitched a two-hitter.

Clark began the seventh with a drive off the center field wall, 414 feet away. Herr, batting just .174 at the time, singled up the middle to snap a 2-2 tie.

Phillies 3, Expos 1

MONTREAL — Juan Samuel and Glenn Wilson rapped RBI singles, keying a three-run rally in the seventh inning.

Mets 6, Pirates 4

PITTSBURGH — Dwight Gooden and Jesse Orosco combined on a four-hitter and the New York Mets turned two Pittsburgh errors into a four-run third inning.

Gooden, 8-2, improved his career record against the Pirates to 6-0 despite allowing four runs in the first six innings. He gave four hits, struck out five and walked a season-high four in winning his third straight decision.

Snyder earns trip to Austin

From Staff Reports

Snyder's Tigers are on their way to Austin for the state Class 4A baseball tournament this week after defeating Pecos, 8-1, in the second game of the doubleheader at Midland Lee High field to win the best-of-three series two games to one.

Pecos, loser to Snyder 6-5 at Angels Stadium earlier in the week, came back to even the series with an 8-7 win in the first game Saturday.

Don Osborne pitched a four-hitter to snuff out the Eagles hopes in the nightcap. Snyder came up with five runs in the sixth inning, all after two were out, to make it decisive.

Jim Velasco, who hit a home run in the first game, hit a two-run single. Catcher Ricky Hunter also singled home a run and Brad Holcomb's base hit drove in a run.

Snyder, which at one time this season was 8-6, heads for Austin with a 24-9 record after Saturday's action.

Higuera hogties Red Sox

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Ted Higuera pitched a four-hitter and Rob Deer and Jim Gantner hit home runs Saturday night to lead the Milwaukee Brewers to a 3-0 victory over the Boston Red Sox.

Higuera, 8-4, struck out six and walked one in his American League-leading seventh complete game of the season. Higuera pitched his first shutout of the season.

Dennis "Oil Can" Boyd, 7-4, took the loss, ending his personal five-game winning streak. He gave up five hits in seven innings.

Deer led off the fifth inning with his 11th home run of the season, giving the Brewers a 2-0 lead.

Gantner hit his third homer with two outs in the seventh inning.

Rangers Sweep

ARLINGTON — Charlie Hough allowed five hits over 7 2-3 innings and Greg Harris got his second save of the night, leading the Texas Rangers to a 3-2 second-game victory over the Seattle Mariners and a sweep of their Saturday doubleheader.

The Rangers, who have won six straight games, took the opener 7-5 as Oddibe McDowell and George Wright hit home runs and Scott Fletcher went 4-for-4. Seattle has lost four straight.

Hough, 5-2, gave up Jim Presley's ninth homer in the seventh inning and left with two outs in the eighth after an RBI single by Danny Tartabull pulled Seattle within 3-2. Harris, who saved the first game, pitched the final 1 1-3 innings for his 10th save.

In the first game, Texas scored twice in the seventh inning for a 6-5 lead. Fletcher singled home the tying run and Mark Huismann's wild pitch produced the go-ahead run.

Wright homered in the eighth for an insurance run.

Jose Guzman, 5-6, got the victory and Harris pitched the final two innings for a save. Matt Young, 4-4, took the loss.

McDowell's eighth homer of the year, Fletcher's double and Ruben Sierra's groundout gave the Rangers a 2-0 lead in the first.

Texas made it 3-0 in the second, but the Mariners scored three times in the third on an RBI double by Alvin Davis and a two-run double by Presley.

After the Rangers went ahead 4-3 in the fourth, Ken Phelps put the Mariners ahead 5-4 with a two-run homer, his ninth, in the top of the seventh.

White Sox 10, A's 3

CHICAGO — Bobby Bonilla hit a three-run homer and drove in four runs and Greg Walker homered, tripled and scored three runs.

The victory was the third straight for the White Sox, all against Oakland.

Bonilla's home run, his second of the year, capped a four-run fifth and came off Chris Codiroli, 4-7. John Cangelosi opened the fifth with a double and scored on a double by Harold Baines. Walker was walked intentionally before Bonilla hit his upper-deck blast.

Winner Joe Cowley, 2-3, survived a shaky start in which he walked five batters in the first inning, forcing in two runs.

Angles 8, Indians 2

CLEVELAND — Reggie Jackson's two-run doubled keyed a five-run third inning, and rookie Wally Joyner broke out of a slump with a double and his 18th homer.

Right-hander Mike Witt, 6-4, surrendered eight hits, walked two and struck out five before he was relieved with none out in the ninth by Doug Corbett. Andre Thornton and Mel Hall hit fourth inning solo homers off Witt.

Cleveland's Joe Carter blooped a single to center field in the first inning to extend his hitting streak to 20 games, longest in the major leagues this season.

Orioles 7, Yankees 5

NEW YORK — Fred Lynn and John Shelby homered, and Mike Boddicker got ninth-inning help from Don Aase to pitch the Baltimore over New York.

Boddicker, 7-1, lost his shutout bid with two out in the eighth when Don Mattingly hit a two-run homer, his eighth, then he lost his complete game in the ninth when Mike Pagliarulo hit a one-out, three-run homer, his 13th.

Twins 4, Royals 1

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Kent Hrbek went 5-for-5, including a home run and RBI double, and Gary Gaetti also homered Saturday night to power the Minnesota Twins.

Bert Blyleven, 5-5, scattered seven hits in his fifth complete game of the season. He struck out five and walked in raising his career record against the Royals to 24-16.

NBA

"People are throwing money, and I'm looking for it," said Johnson, recalling the fight. "I think I got a couple dollars in loose change."

Bird came to the defense of Sichting, sort of.

"I don't pick on 6-1 guys," said the 6-9 forward. "I would never pick on a 6-1 guy. My girlfriend could beat Sichting up."

THE ONE player who stayed mum on the fight was reserve center Bill Walton, who was the first to get close enough to Sampson to bring him down with a tackle. (And to think that just a day earlier, Walton had been wearing a T-shirt that said "Dance for Disarmament.") The brawl interrupted Walton's stated mission, which is another NBA championship.

UIL

The MISD insurance provides coverage for all injuries sustained during participation in football, including spring training and off-season programs. However, it is noted that the coverage has limitations and will not usually pay the total medical costs incurred. Since the school district does not assume responsibility through the policy, parents are advised to file a claim with their own insurance agency in the event of any injury requiring medical attention.

The coverage is limited to football related injuries.

"Other states are going to this type of coverage," notes Bartosh, "California and Ohio have already gone to it."

Midland schools offer two types of policies. One offers 24-hour coverage. The other is in effect only during school hours.

UNLIKE MIDLAND, some Texas schools still run their players through the standard physical conducted by a team physician.

"The University Interscholastic League has a consent form, which both students and parents are required to sign, that takes care of everybody. As a result, schools don't need to carry insurance because of it. Of course, if negligence can be proven, they can get you no matter how many consent forms are signed," says Bartosh.

In Midland $9,000 covers everyone at both Midland schools, no matter how many students participate.

However, the big key to Texas freedom from worry is the UIL form. "It is the same throughout the state and covers rules, such as recruiting violations, physicals and liability. Signing the UIL form eliminates court cases," points out Bartosh.

"Trouble arises in other states because the rules are not as as restrictive. In many instances, other states do not even have an organization to govern scholastic activities," Bartosh went on. "People don't realize the value of UIL supervision of athletics and other school activities."

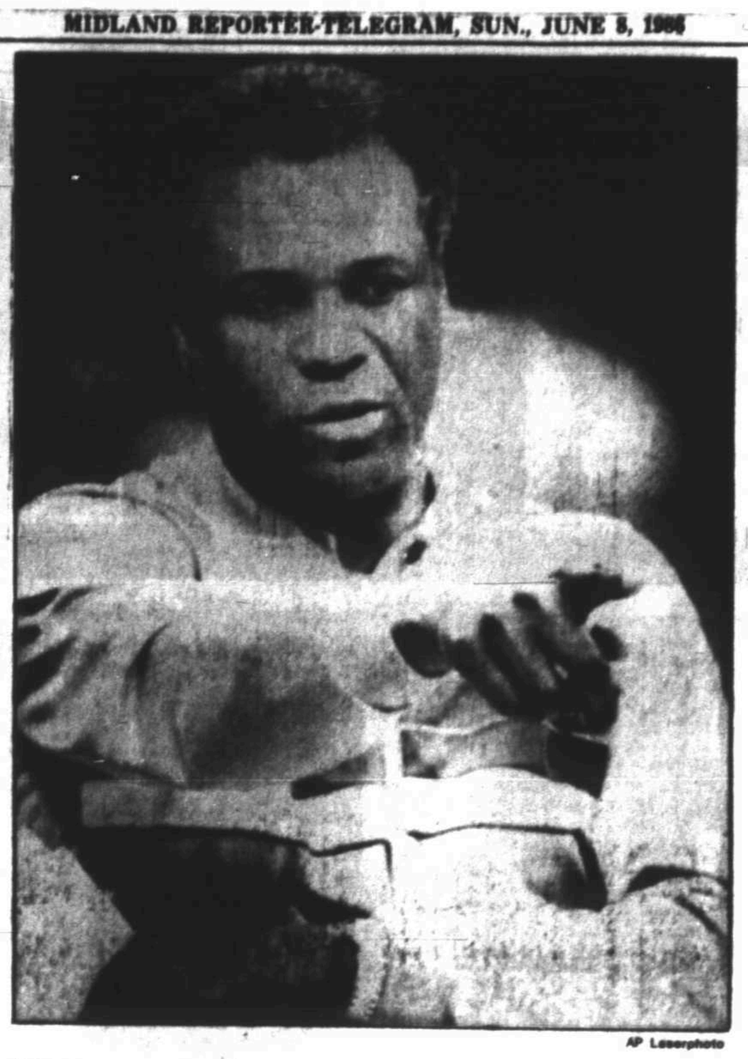

So there will be no misunderstanding, the UIL agreement stipulates all of the scholarship requirements, rules governing outside competition and college recruiting. For example, an athlete may be declared ineligible for participating in a college practice session or tryout; taking any college course offering instruction in which the athlete is participating; accepting an expense paid college visit for recruitment purposes before completion of the high school season in the sport in which the athlete is being recruited.

"It's a safeguard," concludes Bartosh, "that saves the UIL a lot of headaches," and eases the pain of rising liability premiums.

O'Neill claims men's SW golf

EL PASO (AP) — Winning a second consecutive Men's Southwestern Golf Championship wasn't a cakewalk for John O'Neill. Then again, he didn't expect it to be.

"Nothing in life worth anything is easy," O'Neill said Saturday after defeating Aaron Meeks on the third playoff hole to win the 71st annual tournament at Coronado

K.C. Jones worries about today's officiating in NBA playoff game at Boston.

Can refs maintain order today?

BOSTON (AP) — Boston Coach K.C. Jones said Saturday another fight could erupt if the referees in Sunday's playoff game with Houston don't call more fouls. But Celtics' forward Larry Bird said it's too late to change the laissez-faire approach.

"They'll let us play. They can't change anything around," Bird said Saturday before the Celtics' final practice for the sixth game of the NBA Finals with the Rockets. "The referees have established it and the players have gotten used to it."

Jones thinks that could lead to trouble.

"If they call it tight, the players will adjust," he said. "If it's loose, there could be a big brawl out there."

In Thursday night's fifth game in Houston, Rockets' forward Ralph Sampson was ejected in the second quarter for punching Jerry Sichting. But Houston went on to a 111-96 victory that cut Boston's lead in the best-of-7 series to 3-2.

"They got away with it much too much in the last ballgame. We boxed out and got pushed," Jones said. "They got called one out of five times for it. Hey, we can do it, too."

Flax shatters record, twice

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Ken Flax of Oregon shattered the collegiate record twice Saturday and became the first American in 11 years to capture the hammer throw title in the NCAA outdoor Track and Field Championships.

Flax, from Nicasio, Calif., had a best of 237 feet on his third attempt. He first broke the collegiate record of 233-1, which he had virtually shared with Tore Gustafsson of Washington State on his first attempt, with a heave of 230-4.

Gustafsson also had held the meet record of 246-10, set last year. But Flax, who had lost four of five previous meetings against his Pac-10 conference rival, was eagerly determined to close the gap Saturday.

When he was shown a copy of the draw sheet Friday night, he was delighted because he was throwing just ahead of Gustafsson in the first of the two flights in the trials.

NCAA Track

"We noticed that his best throws against me had always been his first," Flax said. "But we knew that if we could get a good throw on the first one, he would tighten up. So I wanted to make the first one my best, and watch him tighten."

After Flax threw 256-4 on his opening attempt, Gustafson threw 239-0 and fouled on his next five tries. Still, Gustafsson finished in second place with Fred Schumacher of San Jose State third with a personal best of 231-10.

"I expected a lot better competition," said Flax, a senior and the first American to capture the NCAA hammer throw title since Boris Djerassi of Northeastern in 1975. He was the first Oregon winner in the event in the meet's 65-year history.

"The first throw definitely psyched him out," added Flax a psychology major. "I was afraid he would come back. He was starting to loosen up (at the end).

Gustafsson of Gothenborg, Sweden, even had one more throw than Flax. He was given an extra attempt in the fourth round after the handle of his hammer hit the cage even though the implement landed fair at 249-1.

In one of the feature races of the four-day meet, Washington State's Gabriel Tiacoh, the Olympic silver medalist from the Ivory Coast, beat Arkansas' Roddie Haley in a sizzling men's 400-meter dash in 44.30 seconds, the fastest in the world this year.

Tiacoh started slowly and trailed Haley, the defending champion, by about three meters at the 200-meter mark.

THIS DOESN'T FIGURE IN VOLVO'S 3-YEAR NEW-CAR WARRANTY.

When you buy one of our Volvos, there's no limit to how far you can go. Because Volvo is the only car sold in the U.S. backed with a 3-year new-car limited warranty* that puts no limit on mileage.

And unlike some other car warranties, the Volvo warranty is not limited to the engine and drivetrain. It covers every part of your new Volvo against defects in material or workmanship...which means you won't have to worry about a single thing.

Even if another carmaker were to offer a warranty this good, they wouldn't have what it takes to back it up: a 1986 Volvo.

VOLVO
A car you can believe in.

"A LITTLE BIT OF COUNTRY"

Home near Polo Grounds offers "Country Class"

By GIGI MCKINNEY
Advertising Feature Writer

They say you can't take the country out of the city, but in one case "they" are so wrong!

Approaching the front entry, visitors can readily appreciate the home's trendy style, with a new roofline to compliment its traditional style with contemporary flair. Professionally landscaped planters line the walkways, adding a lush theme for the area.

Within the foyer (bottom right photo on the cover), originally a silo, custom handmade stained glass in its tower illuminates the Mexican tile and white stucco walls. The original archways define separate exits to the living and dining quarters. But on the contrary, a very open plan was executed for this home which was remodeled three years ago by knocking out walls and creating one "great room" for living with a smaller area for more formal dining occasions.

The formal dining area suggests splendor and prominence with the matching white stucco walls and matching carpeting.

A spacious kitchen will accommodate all the "hands" with all-electric appliances including a dishwasher, microwave oven, cooktop and conventional oven. Ample planning was given for a comfortable country lifestyle in the planning of a family-sized pantry. From a table height serving bar, informal or buffet meals can be served into the breakfast room.

From this area, easy access can be gained to the double garage, two storage closets, a covered patio onlooking the "backyard acreage" and a veranda for those wonderful West Texas summer evenings.

Just off the family's common living area are the master bedroom suite, guest bedroom and another covered patio.

In the master suite, convenience is the order of the day. Separate closets and vanity areas provide added convenience.

The guest bedroom is quite appealing for visitors with a large walk-in closet and a private full bath with tub/shower.

Additonal out buildings and equipment include a 21x40 metal hay barn, 16-feet in height, with electric lights; a 14-foot x 14-foot round grain silo; a well house and irrigation system with a metal cover over one well; a horse walker; pipe fencing and cross fencing with five separate paddocks; outside lights; four water tanks; protected trees in three paddocks; fly spray system plus chemicals; a groom's room (in which some furniture will stay); hot and cold water hook-up for washing horses at a deep utility sink and last but certainly not least, a convenient efficiency apartment/guest house with a full bath and compact living and kitchen areas.

This exquisite piece of "country living" in the heart of Midland is listed by Langston-Monarch Associates for $250,000.

For more information about this home or others, please contact your Realtor.

Is it really more expensive for a Realtor to market your home?

By MAY ADELAIDE BARBER

With the economic climate presently in an uncertain condition in Midland, a number of people with houses to sell are looking seriously at trying to sell the house themselves. For those who are familiar with loans and the legal problems that can arise, this may be the way to go. For a large number of folks, however, it is not as simple as it sounds.

If you are planning to sell your house, the first step is to price the property so that it will sell. It probably will not sell for the same price as the one in the next block which sold last month. The two houses are not as similar as they might seem. To get a fairly accurate idea of value, you may wish to order an appraisal. This can take several weeks and cost you several hundred dollars, but you will have something concrete on which to base your asking price.

The next step is to get your property in shape to show. This involves a clean-up, fix-up campaign to put the house and yard in tip-top condition. Just pretend the Ladies Aid Society is coming to tea–fifty ladies and a hundred eyes. Not only will you need to put the property in good condition, you will need to keep it like this until you sell it.

Now your are ready to stick a For Sale sign in the yard and start advertising in the newspaper.

With the sign you are giving notice to anybody who happens to drive by that your house is open for inspection, day or night, seven days a week. You had better not plan any weekend trips, either. After all, how can you sell your house if you are not there? If you like company, however, you are in for a great time assuming that all the people who come in are your kind of folks. Not everyone will be, and you do run the chance of opening your home to someone you would rather not invite in.

When you finally find a serious looker, you will also find out how good a negotiator your are; because there is likely to be a substantial difference between your asking price and the price offered. After all, if you are not paying a Realtor to market your house, you can accept a lower price and pass that savings on to your buyer. If your prospective buyer is an aggressive negotiator, you may find yourself looking at an offer that nets you far less than the figure you had in mind.

'And now for the paperwork. Unless you are willing to finance the sale or your present loan is assumable, your buyer will need to investigate a new loan. The contract that you work out will not be worth much unless the buyer can obtain the type of loan he or she needs. Also, a buyer will probably want some evidence of a clear title, assurance that all taxes are paid, a termite inspection and numerous other items. Rather than handle all of the legal details yourself, you probably will wish to consult a lawyer.

If you still wish to do it yourself, good luck. After all, you will save the Realtor's commission, won't you? Not necessarily. Most people who respond to "For Sale By Owner" offers expect to buy at a lower price. If you sell your home for less than its market value, you could lose far more than the commission you are trying to save.

If you decide to market your own home, think carefully about what is involved in time, skill and money. Then consider the advantages of having a Realtor do the job for you, painlessly and safely. It is your decision, and it is your money.

WASHINGTON— The annual pace of existing single-family home sales jumped 11.3 percent from March to April to the highest level in 6½ years as homebuyers took advantage of continued declines in mortgage interest rates.

The National Association of Realtors reported recently that the seasonally adjusted annual rate of home resales rose to 3.56 million units in April, the highest level since October 1979, when the rate was 3.77 million units.

Last month's existing-home sales pace compares with 3.30 million in January, 3.27 million in February and 3.20 million in March. The April pace was a whopping 17.9 percent ahead of the 3.02 million-unit pace recorded in the same month a year earlier.

"The favorable interest rate situation now is inviting families into the housing market," said Clark E. Wallace, president of the association. "There's no need to convince people that now is the time to buy a home; today's lower interest rates speak loud enough. Families are discovering that affordability conditions are better now than at any other time in this decade, and that is good news for the housing market as well as the whole economy," Wallace said.

Wallace, a Realtor from Moraga, Calif., pointed out that increased activity in home sales and construction is having a beneficial ripple effect throughout the entire economy as related businesses such as the appliance industry, lumber companies, landscapers, lenders and others experience a rise in business.

Association economists calculate that the average home resale generates nearly $19,000 in economic activity, while the average new-home sale generates about $113,000. This activity is in the form of original construction, remodeling, landscaping, moving and other expenditures, as well as spending for mortgage origination and insurance costs.

The economists explained that the March-to-April increase in the seasonally adjusted annual rate of existing single-family home sales indicates that the improvement went beyond the normal spring increase in housing activity. The association's latest survey of boards of Realtors throughout the country showed the actual number of home resales last month to be 335,000, compared with 277,000 in March and 283,000 in April last year.

The Midwest posted the strongest March-to-April gain, with a 15.8 percent increase to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 1.10 million–up 37.5 percent from April 1985. Last month was the first time since October 1979 that the Midwest resale rate has been above one-million units.

The South posted the next highest monthly gain with a 13.0 percent improvement to an annual pace of 1.22 million units——up 7.0 percent from a year ago. Meanwhile, the Northeast had a 12.7 percent increase to 710,000 units–up 26.8 percent from a year ago, and the annual home resale pace in the West remained unchanged from March to April at 530,000 units–up 1.9 percent from a year ago.

Exiting-home values continued to exhibit healthy improvements as a result of the strong housing demand, with the median existing single-family home price increasing $1,300 from March to April to $81,100–8.4 percent above the $74,800 median recorded in April 1985. Association economists noted that this was the largest annual increase in the median existing-home price since February 1981, when it increased 8.6 percent from the February 1980 level.

Principal, interest payment shouldn't exceed 28% income

Based on lending requirements set by the Federal National Mortgage Association, principal and interest payments by a borrower making a 20 percent down payment should represent no more than 25-28 percent of yearly gross family income. The National Association of Realtors calculates its index assuming that a borrower devotes 25 percent of family income to principal and interest payments.

With the Housing Affordability Index at its April level of 100.6 a family earning $30,000 per year could have qualified for an 80 percent loan on a $87,500 home, while a family with a $30,000 income could have afforded a $99,200 home.

Fascinating Facts

By Bob & Bill Drummond, Licensed Master Plumbers

Neanderthal man flourished from 100,000 or more years ago until as recently as 25,000 years ago, a much longer time than the historical life span of our present breed of men. The Neanderthal was a comparatively short man, usually less than 5 ft. 4 in. in height. The head was extremely long as compared to that of most modern men, with a very small chin and a rounded, sloping forehead. The eyes were large and set wide apart and were surmounted by a prominent ridge similar to that of the apes.

What would Neanderthal Man have thought of today's world? We'd bet he'd be amazed at many of the things we take for granted, such as air conditioning and indoor plumbing. Call SANITARY PLUMBING, HEAING & AIR CONDITIONING. (694-8871). We service what we sell.

Affordability index cracks 100 mark again

WASHINGTON — Lower interest rates more than offset increased home prices in April to boost the Housing Affordability Index over the 100 mark, the National Association of Realtors reported recently.

At 100.8 in April, the index was up 0.9 percentage point from the March level of 99.9, and 10.4 percentage points above the April 1985 level of 90.4. Prior to March this year, the index had been above 100 for three consecutive months.

"The fact that the index averaged 100.6 from December to April reflects the positive impact lower interest rates have had on the nation's housing affordability picture," Clark E. Wallace, president of the association, said.

"Improved housing affordability conditions have translated into homeownership for an increasing number of families, a stronger housing market, and economic benefits for many related industries," Wallace said.

Wallace, a Realtor from Moraga, Calif., explained that the 100 level on the index is the point at which a family earning the median income can qualify for a mortgage covering 80 percent of the median-priced existing home, which was $81,100 in April. April's index meant that a median-income family had 100.8 percent of the income needed to qualify for a $64,900 mortgage — 80 percent of the median resale home price.

Long-term mortgage interest rates are at seven-year lows, providing the major stimulus for the improved affordabilitly index, association economists noted. According to the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, the average effective interest rate (including points) on loans closed for previously occupied homes in early April was 10.37 percent, compared with 10.62 percent in March and 12.11 percent in April last year.

Movement in the index closely parallels movement in mortgage interest rates. When mortgage interest rates were at record high levels in September 1981 — about 16 percent — the affordability index hit an all-time low of 63.9. Conversely, the index reached a record high of 153.1 in February 1972, when mortgage rates were less than eight percent.

Wallace noted that the recent acceleration in resale home price appreciation has kept the affordability index from improving at a faster pace. The median existing single-family home price jumped $2,400 from February to March and $1,300 from March to April. The April median price of $81,100 was 8.4 percent ahead of a year earlier——the largest annual increase since February 1981, when an 8.6 percent annual increase was recorded.

Fishing for a Fresh Career

"Give me a fish, and I will eat for today; teach me to fish, and I will eat for the rest of my life."
— Ancient Proverb chosen as theme for
"Career Reassessment
Midland - 1986"

Text by David Lee Forrest Graphic By Suzan Conder

"Career Reassessment, Midland — 1986" is a workshop designed to teach Midlanders how to fish for job opportunities in choppy economic seas.

This Midland College employment workshop series, cosponsored by the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, Midland Chamber of Commerce and Midland Black Chamber of Entrepreneurs Inc., will be June 16-19 in Midland College's Allison Fine Arts Building.

The "teach me to fish" theme was chosen by Wanda Phillips, Midland College special needs coordinator, who said the workshop's goal is to "provide the actual tools for job search."

"It's very timely," said Antonieta Soto, first vice president of the Hispanic Chamber and one of the seminar's chief organizers.

"I'm all for the pep rallies and all that, but I think this will be more helpful," she said. "This is something that has to be addressed and dealt with directly."

The workshops are not targeted at any single age group, career area or educational level.

"We're trying to reach as many persons as possible — from the oil field worker to to the mid-level manager to the professional," Ms. Soto explained. The depressed local economy "is hitting everybody."

"Even if you're just going in to apply for a dish washing job, the more prepared you are, the better chance you have of getting it," she added.

"People are panicking right now and we're hoping to show them that they shouldn't just take the first thing that comes along," said Ms. Phillips. She said the workshop will emphasize job satisfaction.

"We're trying to do this in a positive way," Ms. Soto said, with the seminars addressing the broad topic of career reassessment, rather than just job loss. "Even if you're not unemployed, this will be useful."

Many of the sessions could be as helpful for a newly-graduated college student or a retiree looking for extra income as they would be for an individual who has just lost his job or business.

THE FOLLOWING is the planned schedule for the workshops:

■ "Winning Resumes," led by Janice Hastings, business education instructor with MC, will cover techniques for writing effective resumes. Participants should bring written information on their education, training and work history for individual assistance in writing their own resumes. 6:30 p.m.-8:30 p.m. June 16-17.

■ "Rejection Shock — Keeping Your Self-Esteem Intact" on positive self-esteem will be led by Sam Guyton, licensed professional counselor. 6:30 p.m.-8:30 p.m. June 16-17.

■ "Exploring Your Career Potential," conducted by Judy Bryant, an MC counselor, will allow participants to take the Kuder Interest Inventory and the Sixteen Personality Factor Test to help match life goals, interests and skills to specific job areas. It will take approximately two weeks to receive the results of these vocational aptitude tests, said Ms. Soto, so individual appointments for test interpretation will be made. 6:30 p.m.-8:30 p.m. June 16-17.

■ "How's and Why's of Personnel Agencies," conducted by Connie Day of Alliance Personnel and Cathy Blackman of Career Path, will be on how personnel agencies work, network and set their fees. 8:30 p.m.- 10 p.m. June 16-17.

■ "Tightening the Family Budget," taught by Marian Farr, home economist with the Midland County Extension Service, will cover techniques for establishing and maintaining an effective budget and specific tips on cutting costs of food, clothing and shelter. The session will include a film, handouts and discussion. 8:30 p.m.- 10 p.m. June 16-17.

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

Midland's 1986 deb season officially opened for 18 young women recently when the Minuet Club's board of directors hosted a tea to introduce them to the ladies of the club. The lovely home of Devereux (Mrs. Ross) Brunner was the setting for the event.

The girls to be presented at the 30th annual debutante ball Dec. 22 in the Petroleum Club are Kathy Scott Bird, daughter of Kay and Charles Bird; Laura Black, daughter of Pat and Dan Black; Catherine Bolger, daughter of Caroline and Perry Bolger; Carolyn Britton, daughter of Susan and Ron Britton; Sharon Cowden, daughter of Wright Cowden Jr. of Midland and Pam Cowden of Dallas, who is being sponsored by her grandparents, Evelyn and Wright Cowden.

Also Elise deCompiegne, daughter of Mary and Henri deCompiegne; Magan Donnelly, daughter of Linnie and Art Donnelly; Dee Dee Dyer, daughter of Bonnie Essman, who is being sponsored by her grandparents, Margaret and Irby Dyer; Tammy Eiteljorg, daughter of Susan and Jack Eiteljorg; Mary Mab Fitz-Gerald, daughter of Carolyn and Jim Fitz-Gerald; Susan Fry, daughter of Sara and Norman Fry.

And Patsy Elaine Hinchey, daughter Patsy Yeager Hinchey, who is being sponsored by her grandmother, Patsy (Mrs. W. Arthur, Sr.) Yeager; Bitsy Hopper, daughter of Carolyn and Jack Hopper; Sharon Karcher, daughter of Billie and Paul Karcher; Kelly Munn, daughter of Lynn and Bill Munn; Andrea Neisig, daughter of Sara and Russell Neisig; Leigh Ann Runyan, daughter of Marilee and Ed Runyan, and Laura Schneider, daughter of Pat and Tom Schneider.

Guests were greeted at the tea by club president Carole (Mrs. Johnny) Warren, immediate past president Patti (Mrs. Watson, Jr.) LaForce, president-elect Bonnie (Mrs. Orman) Hubbard and secretary-treasurer Eileen (Mrs. M.T.) Stalter. Other board members serving in the house party were Susan Britton, Sharon (Mrs. Gene) Floyd, Sue (Mrs. Ed) Harris, Betty Jo (Mrs. George) Moberly and Carol (Mrs. Jack) Steele.

Pink rubrum lilies throughout the party rooms provided a pretty background for the festivities.

Mary Mab was honored at the first of the many deb parties of the season recently when Camille (Mrs. Bill) Leifeste, her daughter, Jill, and Dyan (Mrs. Frank) Agar entertained with a luncheon in the Leifeste home. A 1985 graduate of Midland High School, Mary Mab will be returning this fall to UT-Austin, where she is a member of Kappa Delta social sorority.

FIVE MIDLAND WOMEN recently enjoyed a steamboat trip down the Mississippi. They were Edna (Mrs. W.H.) Pryor, Dorothy (Mrs. W.B.) Neely, Mary (Mrs. J.H.) Steedman, Martha (Mrs. Ben) Black and Joetta (Mrs. Ben) Colwell, who recently moved to Manor Park from Pecos.

The "Heart of Dixie" tour originated in New Orleans, and the Midlanders arrived a day early to enjoy that city's ambience before boarding the Delta Queen. Ports of call were Houmas House and Baton Rough, La., and Natchez and St. Francisville, Miss., with escorted tours at each stop. The delightful trip was enhanced by perfect weather (cool and no rain) and the delicious Southern cuisine.

LONGTIME MIDLAND RESIDENTS, Elizabeth and Lloyd Haseltine, returned to their native state of Missouri to celebrate their 50th wedding anniversary. They were married June 11, 1936, in Springfield, and to mark the milestone occasion, a reception was held Saturday in that city's Westminster Presbyterian Church.

Hostesses for the event were the couple's daughters, Kay Brockman of Midland, Ann (Mrs. Gary) Goss of Bedford, and Susan (Mrs. David) Kuykendall of Allenwood, N.J.

In keeping with the original wedding decor, baskets of daisies and ferns adorned the parlor, and fresh daisies topped the cake. A memory book, filled with messages from old friends and family, was presented to the couple.

Guests included the honorees' four grandchildren, Wendy (Mrs. Robert) Thompson and Michael Goss of Bedford, and Rebecca Miller and John Brockman of Midland.

IN HONOR OF foreign exchange student Lourdes Bernal, Ruthie and Ray Barron entertained with a combined graduation and farewell party recently at their home. A buffet supper was served, using a Philippine and American theme.

Special guests were Lourdes' mother, Rosalinda Bernal, and sister, Joeylyn, who flew in from the Philippines for her graduation from Midland High School. The threesome departed the next morning for Boulder, Colo., for the graduation of Lourdes' twin sister, Concepcion, who was also a foreign exchange student this year.

The Barrons were the second host family for Lourdes' stay. Jan and John Williams, Lourdes' first hosts, honored her and the Barrons' daughter, Syndey, with a graduation night dinner at Anasazi Restaurant.

LEE HIGH SCHOOL graduates Shelley Blanchard and Heidi Brown were honored with a Mexican Fiesta luncheon recently. The party was hosted by their aunts, Sylvia (Mrs. John) Hampton and Loretta (Mrs. Dean) Keim of Odessa, and their grandmother, Agnes Brown, at the Hampton home.

The 40 guests were seated at tables decorated with Mexican sombreros and mortarboards.

Shelley plans to attend Texas A&M, and Heidi, Tarleton State University at Stephenville. They are the daughters of Karon and Fred Brown.

MIDLAND HIGH graduates Erin Hotchkiss and Swedish foreign exchange student Tinna Wrangel were feted with a "Tacky Treasure Hunt" recently. Guests were requested to dress in costume, the tackier the better, and the two winning teams were awarded prizes, which were definitely rated as tacky.

The fun party was held at the home of Eleanor and Mike Morse. Co-hosting were Marcie and Mike Bray, Ann and Dick Dunbar, Cookie and Fred Wetendorf, Janet and Lee Foster, Jann and Vince Bash, Kay and David Jones, Judy and Jack Nichols and Jan and Andy Reed.

The daughter of Sharla and Bart Hotchkiss, Erin plans to attend Southwestern University at Georgetown. Tinna, the daughter of longtime friends of the Hotchkiss family, returns to her homeland on June 14.

FAYE McADAMS entertained for 12 Midland High School seniors and their friends with a Mexican Fiesta graduation party at the Saddle Club Apartments clubhouse. The honored guests were Mindy McAdams, Kim Slough, Diane Schaefer, Melody McFadden, Valerie Hutchins, Blake and Heather Yowell, Rebecca Daughterty, Jeff Eubanks, Christian Hyde, Paul Harris and Laura Legg.

Party decor featured purple balloons with the honorees' names lettered in gold and a Mexican sombrero filled with fruit for the centerpiece. The approximately 70 guests enjoyed tacos, chips and dips and breaking a pinata.

ASK DR. RUTH

Women distrusted

By DR. RUTH WESTHEIMER

Westheimer

Q. When I walked in on my wife having sex with another man, our marriage broke up. We tried to get together again, but I really could not get over that experience. Now she is remarried, but I can't get together with a woman. I distrust them, and they all seem too aggressive. Is this 1960s women or is it my fear of being hurt again?

A. That bad experience (though men have recovered from it) has likely made you distrustful of women, and maybe your self-confidence with women is down because your wife seemed to prefer that other man. I say "seemed" because that may not have been the real reason for her behavior. She may have wanted the excitement of cheating, no matter how much she preferred you. Perhaps if the other man had been her husband, she might have wanted to cheat with you.

As for the women all seeming aggressive nowadays, forget it. There have always been aggressive-seeming women. Today there are plenty of quiet women who give the man a chance to muse on it a while before making a move. The woman who takes charge of a courtship is often charming and doing the right thing, but the one who seems to be doing it just isn't to every man's liking. In any case, give yourself time to mourn for your past marriage and look around for a new partner at your own pace.

Q. My girlfriend and I like to hug, kiss and pet, and we look forward to having real sex someday. But I also feel attracted to men sometimes, though I don't want to go to bed with a man. The fact that I'm attracted at all makes me wonder, though, if I might be bisexual.

A. Maybe you are — potentially. But you are not compelled by any kind of law to act on this self-awareness. If you can have such an enjoyable relationship with a girl, why bother exploring that other possibility with men? When you are in a good relationship with one girl, you don't have to go after other girls just because they attract you.

You don't have to rob a bank because you like money, or kick a policeman just because he's tying his shoe. Life is made wonderful by things we don't have to do. Have a great life.

■ "Family Survival Through Job Hunting," led by Jim May, director of the Family Wellness Center, and Marti Vermillion, a Family Wellness Center staff member, will focus on coping skills to unite the family. 6:30 p.m.-8:30 p.m. June 18-19.

■ "Starting Your Own Business," conducted by Jerry Jones, chairman of MC's Business Studies Division, will study the feasibility of starting a business at home or on a larger scale and possible pitfalls and their solutions. 6:30 p.m.-8:30 p.m. June 18-19.

■ "Interview Techniques — Putting Your Best Foot Forward," led by Liz Zenteno, job search trainer for the Job Training Partnership Act, and Corina Hernandez, JTPA job developer, will provide participants with the opportunity to work individually with a professional interviewer. 6:30 p.m.-8:30 p.m. June 18-19.

■ "Looking Beyond the Want Ads For That Job," taught by Ms. Phillips, will cover specific techniques for using alternative job information sources and selecting where to apply. 8:30 p.m.-10 p.m. June 18-19.

■ "Opportunities in Temporary Jobs," with Amy Stewart, owner of Midland's Olsten Temporary Services, will discuss using temporary employment to find flexible time, reenter the job market and brush up on skills. 8:30 p.m.-10 p.m. June 18-19.

Tickets for the entire workshop are $12 and can be obtained in advance or at the door.

"Actually, that's not even going to cover the expenses," Ms. Soto said, unless there's a large turn-out.

"It's not planned to make money," said Deana Lusk, dean of MC's Community Services Division, who noted that even the aptitude tests offered would normally cost $15 alone. "It's our response to the hard economic times."

The workshop organizers are seeking contributions to help pay some registrations for persons who can't afford the $12 fee, said Ms. Soto.

Copley News Service

Almost as much a part of the wedding as the couple saying "I do" is the image of a photographer hustling about — setting up shots and taking photos to be placed in an album and looked at again and again over the years.

A growing trend, however, is to videotape the ceremony and reception. This is an ideal way for a couple to rerun the event for relatives and friends who were unable to attend the actual ceremony.

Women drinking

NEW YORK (AP) — About three-fourths of American women drink alcoholic beverages, according to the respondents to a Better Homes and Gardens survey.

The respondents, all women, drink wine (63.6 percent) and beer (51.5 percent) most frequently.

Of the married respondents, 78.2 percent said their husbands also drink alcoholic beverages.

Almost half of all the respondents indicated that they bought cordials and liqueurs, and most of those mixed the alcohol with soda or coffee.

Feline heiress' life 'the cat's meow'

Hearst News Service

TANGENT, Ore. — "Kitty Cat," they call her, and when she says "meow," everybody listens.

When the Tangent city fathers move the city offices into the stately five-bedroom farmhouse where Kitty now resides, she'll continue to have the run of the place. And why shouldn't she? She owns it.

The mixed-breed tan and gray feline found a gravy train when she pulled into John Bass' home 10 years ago. When Bass died three years ago at age 82, Kitty inherited her master's $240,000 estate, making the spayed female one of the richest non-human beneficiaries ever.

Bass, a longtime grass-seed farmer, required in his will that his lawyer administer the estate on Kitty's behalf until her death. After that, everything will go to this town of 440. In the meantime, Kitty and her lawyer will permit the city offices, now crammed into a single room, to move into the 1916 farmhouse, says City Recorder Gayle Rancourt.

Kitty was just a kitten when she strayed to the farmhouse a decade ago and was taken in by Bass and his second wife.

Bass, who survived both his wives, liked Kitty, but it really wasn't extraordinary love between man and cat that led to the rise in Kitty's fortunes, says Dale Clark, a friend who lives in a house trailer next to the farmhouse and takes care of the cat.

"Bass just wanted to do something so his relatives wouldn't get it," Clark said. Bass was childless.

Clark, whose payment for caring for Kitty and the farmhouse grounds is a long-term lease on the land where his mobile home is located, feeds the cat a special, expensive cat food and makes sure it gets an annual physical exam from a veterinarian.

Pasta proving popular

NEW YORK (AP) — Americans are eating pasta hot, cold and often, according to a Better Homes and Gardens survey.

In the year prior to the survey, 91.7 percent of those who responded said they had served hot pasta while 57 percent had served cold pasta salad.

Nearly half of the pasta-eaters surveyed were satisfied with their current brand of dry pasta. Approximately 20 percent of those surveyed found their pasta broken in the package when they bought it, while fewer than 20 percent said their brand was too starchy or sticky.

Fewer than 10 percent said they considered pasta made in Italy better than that made in the United States.

AN AFFAIR TO REMEM-♥-BEAR

THE SUBJECT IS ROSES

Insect control methods vary for different pests

By JOY BUTTS

Joy Butts

Many years ago, long before we regularly heard the terms "ecologically safe" or "biodegradable," Grandmother always emptied her wash water on the vegetable garden and her dish water on the roses in her flower beds. Her roses rarely had brown edges on their petals or disfigured new growth. The residue from the lye soap in the water was her insect control and the bits of food particles went back to the soil for healthier roots and greener plants.

Things are different now, although most old, simple remedies do still work, if we employ them.

Probably the most commonly recognized critters on roses are aphids. Attacking only tender new growth, they suck juice from the plant, destroying foliage and buds. Aphids multiply rampantly and when washing off with plain water no longer does the job, thorough spraying must be done to regain control.

A product for chewing or sucking insects, such as Orthene, Orthonex or others used according to directions, will work. Fill the spray container with water plus the chemical, then add a drop of liquid detergent or soap to act as a "spreader-sticker." This keeps the spray on the plant. In our alkaline water, add a tablespoon of white vinegar to increase the effectiveness of spray materials.

Spray very early in the morning or after sundown, but never during the heat of the day. Carefully cover both sides of foliage, coat new growth and all canes well, then spray the ground all around the bush.

When petal edges of opening blooms appear parched or when buds turn tan and don't open, thrips are usually the culprits. The first of the sepals — the protective leaflike covering around a flower — on the bud to barely loosen opens the door for tiny thrips to enter. As the bloom swells, thrips go deeper inside, sucking fluids from the petals as they go, and become impossible to reach with a spray.

Working only on buds and blooms, thrips are best prevented rather than controlled. When still very young, spray buds only every three or four days with a mixture of ½ teaspoon Orthene, Orthonex or Cygon 2E to every gallon of water. Fresh, clean blooms will be your reward.

Half circles cut out of leaves are the work of leaf cutter bees, for which there is no remedy. The pieces of foliage are used for nesting and there is no stage in the leaf cutter's life when he or his offspring actually chew on the leaf. Sorry, but the only known cure for the leaf cutter bee is a determined rosarian wielding a fly swatter.

Japanese beetles will be foraging on our blooms soon. The are hard-backed with metallic-green bodies and copper-brown wings. Many can be disposed of by hand picking and the use of Sevin or Diazinon applications.

Spider mites are prevalent in high-heat situations and attack from the ground up, causing leaves to turn red, yellow and then brown, to finally drop off. The backs of the leaves will feel gritty and very fine webs house thousands of mites and eggs. If not stopped, they can kill the rosebush.

Plain water will wash off mites if detected early and no other control may be necessary if daily washing is used for a while. If a spray must be used, applying two different products alternately will be most effective, since spider mites become immune quickly. Kelthane, Plictran, Vendex, Pentac are all useful, but great care to follow directions for each is is very important.

Identify the insect before you kill it. Not all bugs are undesirable. Lady bugs and praying mantis are helping you — don't kill them. Lizards, land turtles and horned toads are your valued friends, too, and chemical sprays are deadly to them.

Birds are an asset to insect control and a water source will attract many to your yard. Flycatchers, mockingbirds, purple martins and hummingbirds all devour millions of insects during a season. Special feeders aid some birds and specific housing brings the martins, who will return annually. If there are enough natural predators in your yard, you may only occasionally need to spray.

Some readers' questions are paraphrased here, followed by our answers:

Marie Hicks: I am trying a Miniature Rose this year in a 12-inch clay pot. Will it grow as large as it would in the ground?

A. Possibly. Miniatures do grow successfully in pots. Your pot, however, may be on the small side for an average Miniature bush. Also, clay pots tend to "breathe" more than plastic pots, thus it may let roots become too dry. A three-gallon plastic pot is about right and that can be set inside a more attractive pot, if desired. Remember, your rose needs at least four hours of direct sunshine daily.

DEAR ROSIE thanks readers who responded to our Mother's Day column. Winners: Colby, Kacy and Sara Cates won the No. 1 grade Hybrid Tea, Summer Dream, for their lucky mother, Kaye Polk. One Miniature Rose went to Sue Moreland and another to Debbie Strauss. All are Midlanders.

Your name and complete address will still bring you a free Miniature Rose catalog. Each comment and question is highly valued; let us hear from you. P.O. Box 5464, Midland, Texas 79704.

DEAR ABBY

Dad thinks 'nice' wedding can be simple, cost less

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Our family is approaching a time of dissension concerning the upcoming wedding of our eldest daughter. Recent weddings of friends and family have been real "blowouts," each trying to outdo the last.

My wife and daughters keep talking about the reception, dresses, flowers and tuxedos as if we had a mature money tree. They justify a "nice" wedding for the "memories" it will make.

I believe that a "nice" wedding can consist of a bride's gown, and simple dresses for the ladies that won't cost them a fortune — and ones they can wear again. And what's wrong with dark blue suits for the guys, a few simple bouquets, and cake and punch for the reception?

We aren't rich, but we meet our needs and have no bad debt problems — yet! My wife uses coupons to shop at the grocery store and she manages our daily money matters very well, but no amount of coupons will be able to cover the disaster they are planning.

What do you say? — HAS THE LADDER SET UP

DEAR HAS: Take the ladder down. I'm on your side, Dad. A wedding need not be an extravaganza to be memorable, nor does it have to top a previous one. Hold that line, and don't let your family talk you into going into debt to put on a show you can't afford.

DEAR ABBY: While driving to work this morning, I noticed a few automobiles with little "signs" displayed: CHILD IN CAR. That strikes me as somewhat absurd. Shall the rest of us put up a sign that says, FAIR GAME — ADULT ON BOARD? Or perhaps, SMASHABLE — ELDERLY INSIDE!

Is not all life sacred? — NOT EXEMPT IN PHOENIX

DEAR NOT EXEMPT: Your point is well-taken. It assumes that people would be less likely to hit an automobile with a child in it — as though one is given a choice of accidents. Weird.

DEAR ABBY: Thanks for pointing out the stupid statements some well-meaning people make concerning adopted children. One of the most stupid is to say — in front of the child — "And this is Alice, John and Jane's daughter. They adopted her, you know." Then all the information about the adoption comes flowing out like water from a fountain. Why can't they just say, "And this is Alice," and leave it at that?

But the worst by far is, "I'll bet you love her like she was your own child." How dare they? She IS our own child. — HAD IT WITH DUMMIES

(Do you hate to write letters because you don't know what to say? Common questions on foster care answered

By LINDA ANDERSON
Lifestyle Writer

Texas Department of Human Services defines foster care as "a service to families that are experiencing conflicts so severe in nature and degree that children must temporarily be removed from the home in order to ensure their safety or chances for healthy physical, social and emotional development. Foster care is time-limited substitute family care which allows children to receive nurturance, guidance and in some cases, therapeutic intervention while residing in the least restrictive environment of a caring family, preferable one in or close to their home community."

TDHS lists several commom questions — and answers — about foster care:

■ What is foster care? A program under the DHS which provides temporary families to children who have been abused, neglected or abandoned.

■ What are the children like? They are newborn infants to teenagers who come from every ethnic, religious, moral and financial background. Most are suffering with confusion, disappointment, anxiety and fear.

■ When the time comes, how do foster parents give up the children? It isn't easy. Foster care is not designed to be a lifetime commitment to a child, but a temporary and meaningful part of a child's life.

■ Can foster parents choose which children they accept into their homes? Of course. Each parent has special talents which they soon discover.

■ Do foster parents receive financial help? Yes, but it varies with each county. Usually a daily reimbursement based on the child's age is provided. Medical expenses, clothing, school supplies and day care are also provided in some cases.

■ Can foster parents be single or work outside the home? Yes. The department is concerned with foster parents' ability to provide quality care for the children.

■ Do foster parents receive training and support? Yes. The children may have special problems that are challenging to the foster parent. DHR requires training directed to these challenges.

Foster Home Developers can be reached at the Midland DHS at (915) 683-5411 for persons in Midland County; at the Odessa DHS at (915) 367-7201 for interested persons in Odessa, Kermit, Wink, Pecos, Monahans, Fort Stockton, Crane and Sanderson; and at the Big Spring DHS (915) 263-7671 for persons in Big Spring, Stanton, Lamesa, Garden City, Seminole, Andrews and Seagraves.

Boxes become family heirlooms

Associated Press

In the past, everything from candles to lace was likely to be handmade. Even the boxes these goods were kept in were home-crafted.

Boxes made for family treasures often were decorated with fanciful painting; today the tradition continues with new handsome examples, says to Country Home magazine.

Painted boxes represent a rich and well documented segment of the American decorative history. The Pennsylvania Germans, for instance, presented brides with decorated oval boxes for their bridal trinkets or finery. Motifs for the pine boxes, constructed of splintwood, included figures and flowers in cheerful red, green, and yellow colors.

Another technique used by early Americans to decorate boxes and chests was wood graining. The grain of expensive wood, such as mahogany or walnut, was simulated with paint on boxes that were made of less desirable woods, such as pine or maple.

Some of the same decorative treatments are being practiced today. Each box is unique with its own special personality. Available in a variety of sizes, the boxes store family mementos, jewelry, potpourri, sewing supplies — almost anything.

Haseltine golden anniversary marked

Mr. and Mrs. W. Lloyd Haseltine of Midland celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary with a reception Saturday in Springfield, Mo. The party was hosted by their daughters, Kay Brockman of Midland, Mrs. Gary Goss of Bedford, and Mrs. David Kuyken of Allenwood, N.J.

Haseltine and the former Elizabeth Call were married June 11, 1936 at First Congregational Church of Springfield. They have three daughters and four grandchildren.

The couple lived in Midland, Wichita Falls and Dallas before returning to Midland in 1960. Mrs. Haseltine, a violinist with Midland-Odessa Symphony, retired in 1963. She is a member of Chapter BS of the P.E.O. Sisterhood and The Musicians Club. Her husband, a geologist, retired from Mobil Oil in 1976. They are charter members of Christ Presbyterian Church, now Grace Presbyterian Church.

Economy making up for lost energy jobs

While oil sector contracts and fires — other sectors expand, hire

By DEANNA J. NEAL
Business/Oil Writer

ECONOMY

Texas has lost jobs and will continue to lose jobs as a result of declining oil prices, but expansion in other sectors of the state economy is expected to make up those losses, according to economist Edward L. McClelland.

In the recently released Economic Perspective, published by RepublicBank Corp., McClelland indicates that, while lower oil prices will crimp Texas' economic performance, most forecasts focus too narrowly on the energy sector, not considering prospects for the remainder of the state's economy.

"Texas, unlike most states, has more flexibility in its labor market because it has become highly diversified. While layoffs are being seen in the energy sector, other industries are looking for new workers," he said.

He predicts job losses in the state to reach the 100,000 mark as a result of lower oil prices this year, but says that is still only 1.5 percent of the state's total employment of 7.5 million workers.

"The favorable prospects for Texas' other industries means that these losses will be more than made up elsewhere in the state's economy, just as have energy sector declines since 1981," he stated.

The Texas economy will still enjoy positive real growth this year. With national prospects improved by lower oil prices, Texas will not grow as rapidly as the U.S. this year — a departure from recent patterns.

"Energy makes up a 12 percent share of the state's economy, so factors that boost the rest of the economy help offset the decline in energy-related activities," stated McClelland.

The Dallas-based economist, who recently joined energy leaders from around the nation in conducting a seminar for members of the working press and is in much demand as a speaker, feels that two positive forces that will effect Texas economy are: lower petroleum product prices paid by energy consumers; and, the lower value of the U.S. dollar, which is making many industries more competitive with foreign producers.

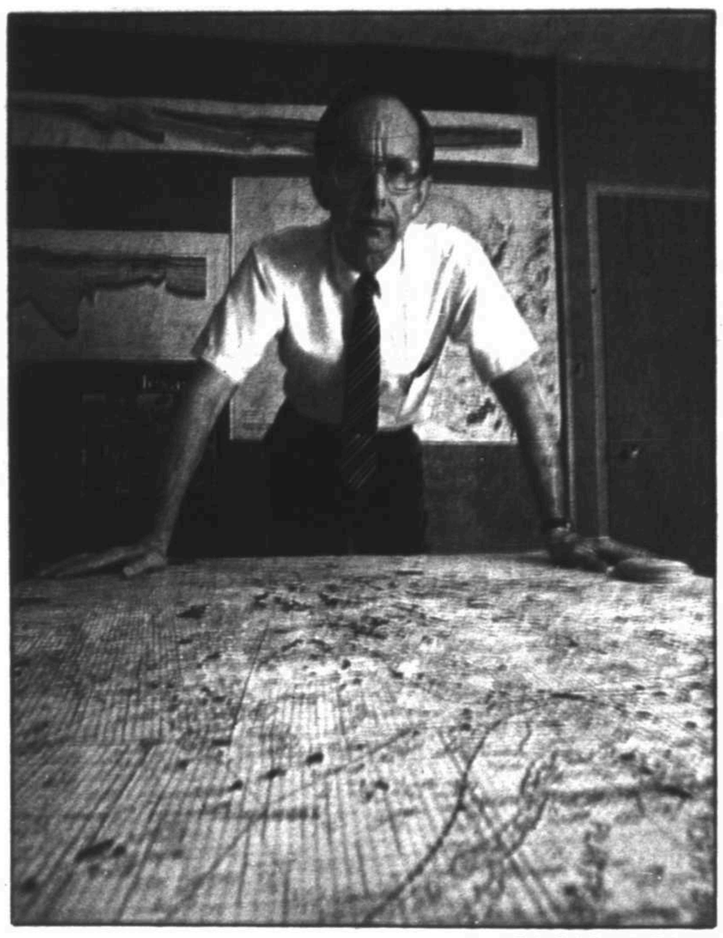

He notes that the retrenching in the energy sector will depend largely on the level at which oil prices stabilize and the length of time that it takes to establish the stable price which will prompt renewed drilling. At the present, no new drilling ventures are being undertaken and rigs are being stacked and drilling crews are being laid off.

For the economy as a whole, the RepublicBank economist feels it would be preferable for a crude price level around $18 a barrel to be established quickly, rather than trying to establish a higher price by waiting for a longer period of time.

Studies show that the consequences of lower oil prices are different now than in 1982 and 1983. Now, there are expected to be fewer job losses, compared to the 40,000 oil field jobs and 120,000 supply industry and refinery jobs lost four years ago. According the authority on Texas economy, it is unlikely that the same number of workers will lose their jobs again.

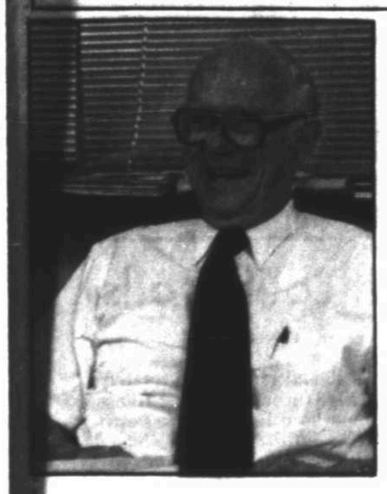

For example in 1981, employment in oil field equipment manufacturing peaked at 90,000, and 50,000 were subsequently laid off. In the past year the figure declined further, but about 35,000 workers remain in the industry. Recent layoffs have been concentrated in exploration and production activities. It will be difficult for specialized workers such as geologists and petroleum engineers to find new jobs, but those with more general skills such as secretaries and computer programmers will have less trouble finding new employment.

McClelland points out that lower petroleum products prices will provide a substantial boost to energy consumers in Texas, as well as the nation. "Those who will benefit the most are the transportation, chemical and agricultural industries.

Pioneer oilman talks about then and now

John Redfern reflects on 47 years in Midland

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

PROFILE

Oil from the Wasson field was selling for 94 cents a barrel, while what little high gravity crude that could be found around the Permian Basin went for the premium price of $1.02, but these were shaky oil prices. A worldwide glut threatened to send oil prices falling to below 25 cents a barrel. To avert an oil price crash, three men in Austin made an unprecedented decision — they ordered every oil well in Texas to cease production for a period of two years. The date was August 1, 1939. Texas was the leading oil producer in the world and the Texas Railroad Commission held absolute sway over world oil prices. It was a volatile year for oil prices, but it was a good year for John Redfern, because that was the year he moved to Midland.

This week marks the veteran oilman's 47th anniversary in Midland, and during that time he has seen many up and down cycles, but he is convinced that present depressed conditions in the oilpatch do not represent just another cycle.

"This is not just another cycle that we can work out of, as we have so many times in the past," says Redfern. "The structure of the oil industry is being fundamentally changed forever."

"We have had our ups and downs. It was up in 1937...down in '39...up in '41, and like that for most of the time I have been in the oil business. But, don't let anybody tell you its been like this before — it hasn't."

HE IS NOT OPTIMISTIC about oil prices or exploration: "We haven't found any great pools in 25 years, we have just been pecking around the edges, and what fields we have found have not been comparable to the early Permian fields. I think the majors are getting out because they can't justify the reserves, and I am not optimistic about oil prices going up." Still he is not discouraged.

While he feels the industry as we know it will be changed, he does not see it as the end of the petroleum industry, rather as a new beginning. The pioneer oilman, chairman of Flag-Redfern Oil Co., one of the most successful independent oil firms in

Royalty dispute over state lands continues

Progress made toward compromise

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Business/Oil Writer

State agencies administering oil and gas leases in West Texas and the producers holding those leases are moving toward a compromise on royalty payments from production.

The progress comes as a relief to local producers who have been working with the state's General Land Office and University Lands staffs to iron out differences in interpretations of state lease agreements. Disagreements had arisen over use of posted prices not available in a given field as the basis for royalty computations and over transportation charge deductions made by some purchasers from price postings.

Producers are encouraged by the results of recent meetings with GLO and University Lands officials. "The Land Office is doing its best to help producers cope with the downturn, and has been sympathetic to their problems," notes Scott Anderson, general counsel for the Texas Independent Producers & Royalty Owners Association, in Austin.

Anderson was among a group of producers and representatives who met with Land Commissioner Garry Mauro and State Rep. Tom Craddick late last month to discuss state royalty computations.

TIPRO and the Permian Basin Petroleum Association are hoping to get new interpretations of existing state Attorney General opinions regarding transportation deductions and royalty computations. Some crude oil purchasers' posted prices are structured in such a way that it appears the producer is making a deduction from the gross posted price for transportation. But, "the apparent deduction is simply a matter of accounting procedures," Anderson explains.

Producers are computing royalties on the actual proceeds from production — which in some cases are figured at what is, in effect, a 'net' posted

Independent TV station irked at dial slot on Midland cable

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

Alan Barrows, general manager of KPEJ-TV, the Permian Basin's newest and only independent television station, is pleased to be in the Midland market, but not at all happy with his station's slot on the Midland cable system.

Midland's cable system, Dimension Cable, has assigned Channel 14 to the new independent station, which means cable subscribers without a cable-ready television or a converter will have to get a converter to receive the station.

"I feel that for us to be competitive with the other local commercial stations, we need to be on the basic tier," said Barrows.

He added that he has already "amended revenue projections downward dramatically" partly because of the area's soft economy and partly because the station's position on the cable system will make it more difficult to sell advertising because Channel 14 is considered part of the upper tier and thus more expensive.

Doug Smith, director of operations for Dimension Cable in Midland, said the reason KPEJ was assigned Channel 14 was that it seemed logical to put it on an available channel rather than disrupting service. "We felt it would be a mistake to upset any existing subscribers for no reason, Power generation: new gas market?

HOUSTON (UPI) — An unrecognized market awaits the natural gas industry during the next decade because natural gas will be needed to help generate electricity, the American Gas Association chairman predicted Monday.

"There's a big under-perceived gas market out there. It's power generation," Edmund Schroer, president of Northern Indiana Public Service Co., told participants at the Texas Gas Association.

"What comes on in the 1990s is going to have to come on quick because it's not being planned now, and there's only one thing that comes on quick — gas-fired generation," Schroer said.

"That was perceived to be a gone market," Schroer said of the practice of using natural gas for a boiler fuel to help utilities generate electricity. The National Energy Act of 1978 outlawed the practice.

"I think that act ought to be repealed," Schroer said, adding attempts to change the law have been foiled in the House energy subcommittee because objectionable amendments were added to confuse the issue.

But he said the issue was expected to be discussed again this summer.

"I think the nation's current level of capacity is over perceived because the formula is misleading. I think the formula was wrong," Schroer said of the electrical industry's calculations about its existing production capacities.

He said few new coal-fired or nuclear generating plants are being planned, and that natural gas turbines offer the fastest way to establish additional electrical power.

Electrical capacity used to be calculated by figuring out the reserve margin, Schroer said, adding other industries did not calculate their capacities that way.

"You talk in terms of what you can do," Schroer said. "One thing we've learned is you cannot predict peaks. You've got as much luck forecasting interest rates."

JOHN PAUL PITTS

This time around is similar but mostly different

Where is the oil industry now, and where is it going?

Since no one can foretell the future, the next best thing we can do is look at the past for lessons and direction. Someone once described this less-than-perfect forecasting technique as "trying to drive a car by looking out the rear window."

Midland oilman Richard Gaddy used "looking out the rear window" last week when he told a gathering of 200 concerned landmen and geologists, who had come to a survival seminar, that there were many similarities between the 1980s and the 1930s, but warned that there were also many dissimilarities.

"It would appear," Gaddy told those who were anxious about their jobs and future in the oil business, "that we are in a period very similar to that of the sixties and early seventies. He characterized that period as one of many mergers among such major oil companies as Honolulu, Tidewater, Pan American and Standard Oil Company.

"Landmen and geologists by the droves were laid off and did anything they could to make a living. They sold washing machines at Sears, automobiles, insurance and anything else they could find to keep food on the table. A few even ran for political office," said the former Sinclair landman. "Then, like today, the major oil companies were undergoing fundamental restructuring as a result of a industry-wide change in management philosophy, and exploration and production staffs were cut severely."

He added that, like now, money was tight and those independents who chose to tough it out had to fight and plead for every dollar that came their way: "Today and then, venture capital was extremely tight. Nobody even wanted to talk about oil deals, and banking policies were very similar in that they involved almost no risk to banks."

So what makes the eighties different from the sixties? According to Gaddy, these are these differences:

■ The biggest difference is debt. Whereas the independents of the sixties had been saddled with decades of tight banking policies, the late seventies and early eighties saw a period of very liberal lending policies based on the expectation of $100 oil. This caused many independent oil companies to over-extend. Majors too, became saddled with excess debt as a result of mergers and the fact that some that to buy their own stock to prevent hostile takeovers. Debt in both camps has led to staff reductions and restructuring.

■ A deflationary economy is listed by Gaddy as another major difference: "In the sixties an oilman could take on debt, knowing he could pay it back with higher priced dollars. Now, debt has to be paid back with lower priced dollars. For many going into debt, an inflationary or even a static economy is better than a deflationary economy."

■ He also feels the political climate is different: "Back in the sixties, we had Sam Rayburn on our side and strong political support for the industry. Today, there is only weak support for the industry."

■ A weak banking system also separates the sixties from the eighties: "While the banks were tight in the sixties, they were strong. Today we have 105 troubled banks in Texas, and many have already bitten the dust. A troubled bank was once unheard of."

■ The oil price situation was certainly different, he claims. Low oil prices are prevalent today and then, but the $3 price for oil in the sixties was stable, unlike today's erratic prices. "Texas once ruled oil prices by controlling production with proration. Today, the Saudis are the new Texas Railroad Commisssion. They, not Texas, can make the price of oil go up at will," he said.

■ Gaddy is also concerned about the uncertainty in today's oil industry. Said the Midland independent: "Uncertainty used to not be such a problem in the industry, but today there is uncertainty in virtually every quarter of the industry — exploration, production, refining, marketing, gas transportation.

■ Also, he says there is "no place left to run." Said Gaddy: "Once we could pick up and go to Wyoming or Oklahoma or Michigan, where there was a boom or more activity going on. Today, there are no 'boom' areas to run to. We have to sit apd stick it out."

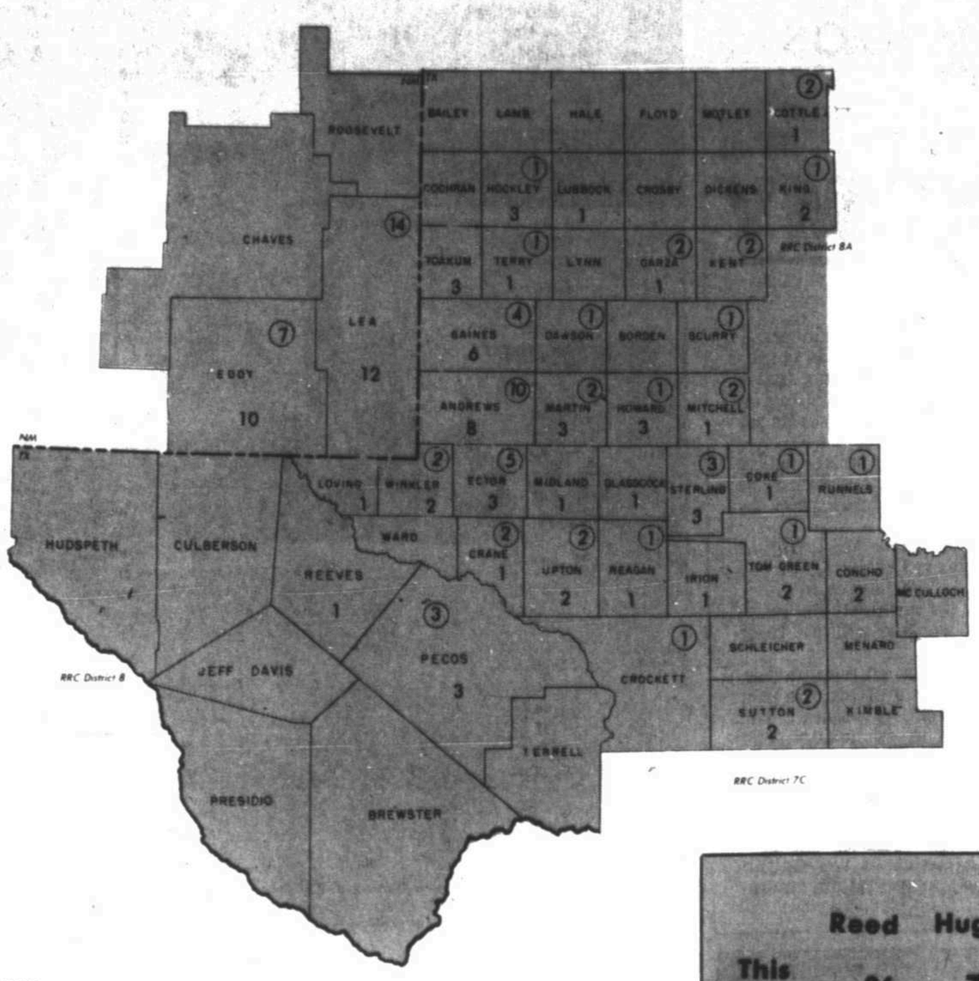

■ Last, he says there is tremendous, rapid change taking place in all segments of the industry. "We are seeing rapid changes in the technological, financial, and regulatory aspects as well as the methodology of the oil industry, leading to specialization. It is no longer possible for an oilman to wear all hats."

Gaddy advises the young man considering his future in the oil business to have a stubborn tenacity and overwhelming desire to succeed in the oil business, plus a year's salary in the savings account if he intends to stick around and see what hand the business deals him. He also advises to keep posted on all changes in the industry; keep in good physical and mental shape, and stay on good terms with the banks.

Reed Tool Permian rig count ending

The Reed Tool Rig Count comes to an end this week after at least three decades of providing county-by-county counts for the Permian Basin. The halt comes as the result of a downgrading of the Odessa facility from a regional to district office. Rig counts will continue in the Reporter-Telegram, using the Hughes Tool rig counts.

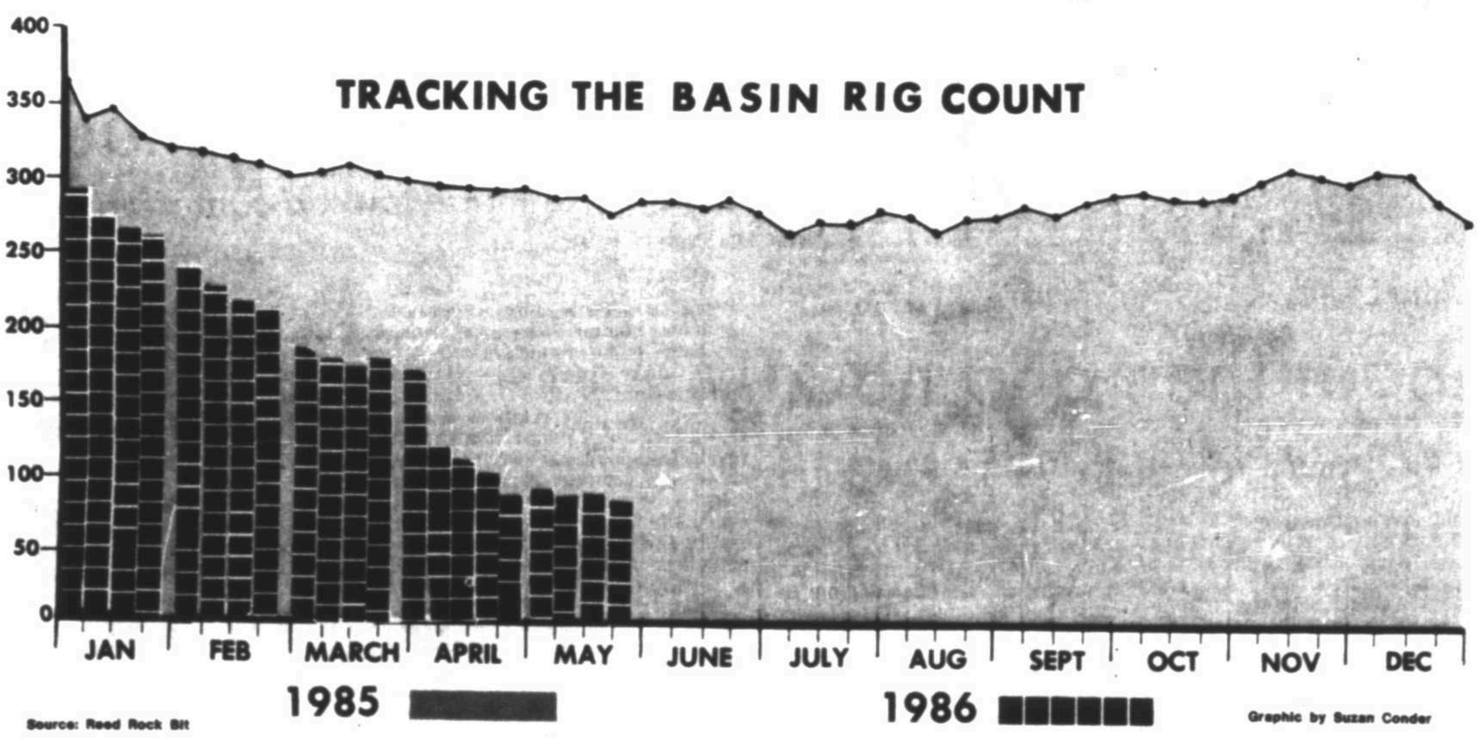

Meanwhile rig counts in the U.S. and Permian Basin continue to declines, but the rate of collapse appears to be slowing. The U.S. count, previously falling at a rate of 50 to 60 a week, only lost three this week, while the Basin count fell by 11 according to Reed Rock Bit and by 6 according to Hughes Tool Co.

Locally, activity in Midland and Ector counties remain slow with counts of 1 and three, respectively. Andrews County, previously the most active in the area, lost four to post a total of eight rigs making hole there. Lea County is showing the most rigs at work with 12, followed by Eddy County with 10.

Nationally, Texas activity declined by 15, while Oklahoma dropped five and Louisiana slipped four. New Mexico made a slight recovery, adding seven for the week. Other gains were seen in Arkansas, up six, and in Wyoming, gaining three.

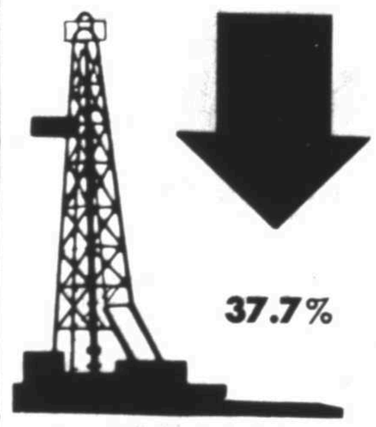

The rig count one year ago was 1,821 in the U.S. and 281 in the Permian Basin.

National permit count falls

Year-to-date 22,743
Last year 31,316

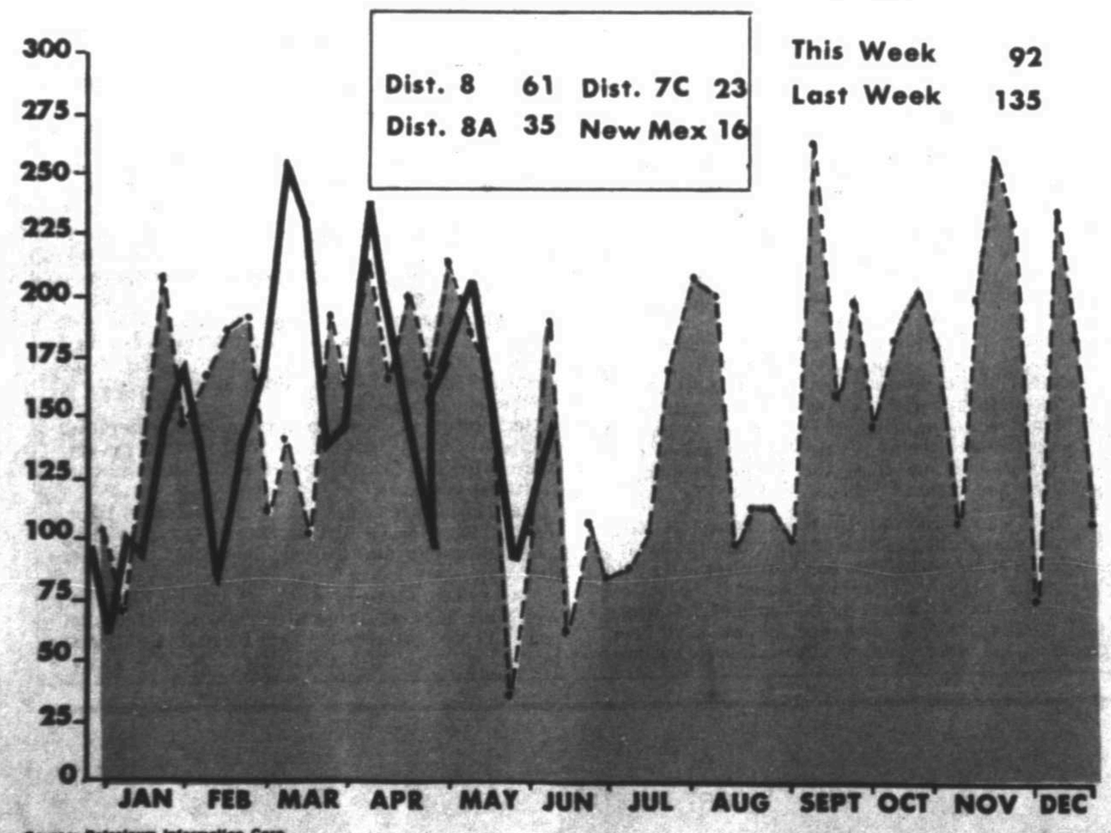

Oil and gas permits totaled 22,743 through the first five months of 1986, reports Petroleum Information Corp. The decline from the five-month total last year amounted to 37.7 percent.

As has been the pattern all year, new field wildcat permits showed the sharpest decline, down 43 percent to 2,104 from 3,696 in the first five months of 1985.

Other exploratory permits — deeper or shallower pool and significant extensions — declined 39.8 percent from the same period a year ago. The January to May total of 2,531 represents a drop of 1,674 permits.

Permits to drill development wells are off 36.6 percent to 18,108 from 28,580 in 1985's first five months.

ROYALTIES

price. Legally, the GLO is required to seek royalty payments at the higher, gross, level — disallowing any transportation deductions from posted prices.

"So far, purchasers have been unwilling to change their methods of posting prices, so we are looking for other ways to remedy the problem," says Jack Giberson, chief clerk and first deputy land commissioner at the GLO.

Mauro and Craddick are intent on meeting again soon to explore possible alternative solutions to the "bind the GLO finds itself in," according to Giberson.

Continuing discussion of the treatment of transportation charges is the only remaining point of contention, says Glenn Brant, president and CEO of Flag-Redfern Oil Co., Midland.

Recent actions by the University Lands system have settled between $300,000 and $400,000 in potential producer claims regarding invoices for royalty differentials for FY 1985. In April, a revised royalty opinion by the legal department of the University system altered the guidelines for determining the 'general area' posted price basis for royalties.

From September 1981 until April of this year, the Oil & Gas Accounting Office of the University System, based royalty calculations on the highest posted price in West Texas.

"The passage of time has proved that designating all of West Texas as the 'general area' is unworkable since the area is too large. Crude oil buyers that issue price bulletins frequently purchase in a few counties and occasionally in only a few oil fields," explained Linward Shivers, senior attorney for the University System.

The new legal opinion was issued just before producers were to be invoiced for 1985's differential between royalties paid those those due based the highest West Texas posting, according to Bob Conrad, director of the Lands System accounting office.

However, some producers may still be billed for the difference between actual proceeds and the highest posted price offered by a company buying crude in the same producing field, Conrad notes.

Anderson says that the GLO never changed its interpretation of 'general area' during the up market times of the early '80s, so similar royalty opinion concessions weren't needed from the GLO.

Last year, the GLO changed its position on gas royalties, resolving similar market value disputes. Now, "unless evidence indicates some other treatment, arms-length gas transactions are presumed to establish current market value for gas sold for the purpose of royalty collections," Giberson explains.

Officials of both agencies agree that "taking a hard look at the current legal problems and taking steps to resolve them with the best interest of the oil industry at heart is to the state's advantage in the long run," Flag-Redfern's Brant notes.

Keeping marginal properties under lease by accepting shut-in royalty payments for longer periods, is one option under consideration, Conrad says.

Losing rental income from nonproducing leases could become a larger problem for the University Lands System as exploration programs screech to a halt. Nearly 80 percent of the 249 University tracts leased for a five-year term during the systems 70th Sale in March 1981 were released when the primary term of those leases expired in March of this year.

Groups of tracts leased at auction in February 1982 and November 1983 will expire within the next ten months, notes Wallie Gravitt, manager of University Lands — Oil, Gas & Mineral Interests, in Midland.

The last University Lands lease auction was held last October. "Setting the next sale date is the responsibility of the Board for Lease, who will consider both the number of tracts nominated for sale as well as overall industry economic conditions in deciding if an auction is warranted," Gravitt explains.

"I think it's safe to say we won't be holding one real soon."

REDFERN

the state, came to Midland when the oil industry was in its infancy, and now he thinks we may be seeing the infancy of a new oil industry, even though he is uncertain what it will be like: "I think about it a lot today, wondering which way this business is going. If we knew which way it was going we could make some money, but I don't think anybody really knows where the oil industry is going from here — not even the major oil companies."

While many view present times with desperation and make plans to flee the oil industry. He says it was a depression and sheer desperation that brought him into the oil business: "I was working in Albany, New York as a sales engineer for a plumbing and heating company. The company was going broke, and so was I, and I knew I had to do something different to earn a living. A desperate man always does better in this business. I think it may be better to get into the oil business in a downturn, when you can't be seduced by a big salary."

REDFERN DECIDED upon the oil business after reading a newspaper article that reported 2.5 million barrels at $1 per day were being produced in the United States, with approximately one-eighth of that sum going to the common people who owned royalty interests. He went to the local library, verified the numbers and calculated that approximately $300,000 a day was going to the royalty owners of America.

"I decided I could find a way to get a daily share of that $300,000," he chuckled.

The good-natured, wildcatter, who calls himself "a native Texan from Jersey City," makes no bones about his devotion to U.S. legal tender. A sign on the wall of his modest office reads: "Call me a sentimental old fool...but I still worship the almighty dollar." Said Refern: "They talk about greedy oilmen...I plead guilty to being one."

So in 1937, with a $5,000 nest egg, inherited from his grandfather, the young graduate of Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, at Troy, New York, decided to cast his fortune with the oil business. "Then, a person could live on $1,000 a year if they lived on a tight budget," he explained. "I tell people that I gave up drinking back in the early thirties, because I couldn't afford it." His first stop was Tulsa, but he quickly moved on to Oklahoma City, where he spent the next two years learning the trading business and taking petroleum geology courses from Dr. Victor Monette at Oklahoma University. Monette also became his personal tutor in the intricacies and logistics of the oil business, passing along much valuable information in one-on-one sessions. "He taught me that I didn't have to be an expert in geology, because I could hire people for that." he added. Over the years he says he has taken that lesson even further by learning not to be afraid to hire people smarter than he was or pay them more money than he was making, if he was the right person for the job.

REDFERN SAID it was inevitable that he would end up in Midland: "Somehow, from the day I got involved in this business, I knew I would end up in Midland. I don't know how, but I just knew." He said he knew there had to be action in an area (the Permian Basin) that had 20 percent of the reserves, but accounted for only eight percent of the production. It was obviously a right choice, because the action was just getting underway, and John Refern would go on to found one of the most successful, independent oil companies in the Permian Basin.

"When I got to town, the pavement on Big Spring ended about where the YMCA is today and the entire oil industry was housed in the old Petroleum Building. There were only about three or four independent consulting geologists in Midland, and the staffs of most of the major oil companies were very small, normally one or two secretaries, a couple of geologists and a couple of landmen and maybe a scout," said Redfern.

He laments the passing of the oil scout: "Something was lost from the industry, when the scouts were eliminated and we went to commercial scouting services. There were guys in that profession who could tell how much oil was in a tank merely by throwing a rock at it and listening to the corresponding sound, and they could tell the depth of a well by counting the stands of pipe in a derrick." He said there was a real romance about the oil business and the pursuit of information, because frontiers were being opened and information was extremely critical because so few holes had been drilled.

WHILE JOHN REDFERN has drilled his share of wildcat wells (Flag-Redfern drilled 11 wildcat wells in 1985.), he doesn't claim to be a "great wildcatter."

"If I have any real talent," said Redfern, "it's knowing what something is worth." It has been that ability to know the value of a lease or royalty — to know when to sell that has made Redfern a successful oilman. He found a comfortable niche on the speculation chain that he could handle and stayed with it. Much of his revenue came from buying producing royalty with few wells then selling it, not to other speculators, but to investors. He said that during the war it was possible to buy producing royalty and get one's money back as fast as the guy drilling the well. "The trouble today, everyone wants to mark everything way up. Then, if I could make $25 an acre on a lease, I sold it."

But then, John Redfern never was a red-hot risk-taker. Once asked to grade himself on a scale of one-ten as a risk-taker, he promptly answered: "three!" His conservative policy is reflected in Flag-Redfern's financial record. It drills only with profits, and has strong profits. Last year the firm had a 79 percent success ratio in drilling, and per share earnings of $189 on revenues of $38,094. In 1984, the closely held corporation showed a per share earnings of $510 on revenues of $39,761 with a slightly better completion success. A write down of assets in the ground accounted for the difference.

"I get tired of these writers coming out here and making Midland sound like a big roulette table. Basically it takes a lot of hard work to succeed in the oilpatch. Always has and always will!" exclaimed Redfern.

when we could put the new station on an available channel and not disrupt the service." He added that cable subscribers who don't have cable-ready televisions or converters can get a free converter from the company. He also stated that his company is "very excited" about the new station.

According to Barrows, he has spent $4.5 million to build the station and created 30 new jobs, and told the cable companies he needs help making his station competitive with the area's other commercial stations.

"It's obvious to me, and I'm speculating, that Dimension is trying to widen its distribution of converters to ease into the broadening of basic service when full deregulation takes effect," he said.

He added that, despite his disappointment with his assigned channel, he thinks Dimension and Odessa's Post Newsweek are excellent cable companies.

Zales rejects Canadian buy-out offer as inadequate

Associated Press

(AP) Peoples Jewellers Ltd. on Monday made its third offer to acquire Zale Corp. with a proposal valued at more than $500 million that raises the cash portion of its previous bid, but Zale denounced the proposal as inadequate.

Dallas-based Zale, a major jewelry retailer, rejected the Canadian company's two previous offers and subsequently approved a restructuring plan to streamline its operations by reducing the value of inventory and selling some units.

"Each Peoples offer is a patent admission that the last offer was inadequate and this offer is no exception," company chairman Donald Zale said in a statement.

"Zale's restructuring is proceeding satisfactorily in the opinion of management and will ultimately be more rewarding to all of the Zale's stockholders than this offer," he said. "However, we will submit the Peoples offer to the Zale board of directors with the strong recommendation that it be rejected."

Under its latest offer, Peoples Jewellers, a Toronto-based jewelry retailer, offered $42 cash and $4 in preferred stock for each of the Zale common shares it does not already own, or $501.4 million.

Peoples currently owns 1.84 million, or 14.4 percent, of Zale's 12.74 million total common shares and common-share equivalents outstanding, said Charles Gill, Peoples' vice president of finance and administration.

Peoples' announcement came after the close of the New York Stock Exchange, where Zale's common stock fell 25 cents a share to $36.

Peoples also offered Zale's preferred stockholders $33.60 cash and $3.20 in Peoples preferred stock for each of their existing shares.

Under its previous bid made in March, Peoples offered holders of Zale's common stock $38 cash and $7 in preferred stock for each of their shares, while Zale's preferred stockholders were offered $30.40 cash and $5.60 in Peoples preferred stock.

"We believe that our proposal is a better means of maximizing shareholder value than the so-called restructuring plan that (Zale's) management intends to pursue," Peoples Jewellers President Irving Gerstein said in a statement.

When it rejected Peoples' second bid, Zale unveiled the restructuring plan and said it was meant to "improve Zale Corp.'s ongoing profitability and shareholder values for the long term."

The prospects for Peoples' attempt to acquire Zale depend heavily on the Zale and Lipshy families, who are relatives of company founder Morris B. Zale. The families together control about a third of Zale's stock, and any merger involving Zale requires approval by two-thirds of its total shares outstanding.

Average price tag for typical U.S. family home $123,299

DES MOINES, IA. — America's housing costs and the length of time it takes to sell a home vary greatly from city to city, according to a spring survey conducted nationwide by Better Homes and Gardens Real Estate Service.

The semiannual Housing Cost Comparison Survey matches home prices in about 100 cities chosen to represent different geographic areas and population size. The average price tag for a typical, upscale American family home in these communities is $123,299 for a newly constructed home and $102,738 for a resale property. Findings are based on Better Homes and Gardens real estate brokers' estimates of the cost of a three-bedroom, 1600-square foot home, with one and a half to two baths, located in a desirable neighborhood.

But, what consumers pay for such a home largely depends on where they buy, and local price tags often don't reflect the national averages. In Wilton, Conn., the most expensive market represented, the average price of a new home is $475,000, while an existing home costs $380,000. In other markets, buyers can purchase a newly constructed home for $62,000 in Knoxville, Tenn. or a resale property in Saginaw, Mich. for $46,000.

In Texas, survey figures show a typical new home in Dallas costs the buyer about $135,000, while the homebuyer in Ft. Worth can expect to spend $98,000 on a new house. Austin consumers can usually find a typical home for $88,000. San Angelo houses are selling in the range of $79,200.

In the communities analyzed, a typical family home is on the market an average of 86 days from the initial listing through closing of the sale. The shortest reported sales period occurred in Baltimore, Md., where homes are snatched up in an average of five days. In Phoenix, Ariz., however, sellers wait an average of 250 days before the right buyer comes along.

Market conditions look very positive to members of the Better Homes and Gardens Real Estate Service, with 77 percent expecting improving sales, 23 percent predicting constant activity, and none of the respondents expecting a decline. In addition, 81 percent rate business activity as "good", 18 percent as "average", and only 2 percent as "poor."

The 30-year conventional mortgage is still the single most common type of financing used, according to 62 percent of the respondents. FHA mortgages place a significant second at 20 percent, while adjustable-rate mortgages (ARMs) are only used for six percent of home financing.

Local personnel chapter receives national award

The Permian Basin Personnel Association has received national recognition from the American Society for Personnel Administration in Alexandria, Virginia.

PBPA president, Jeffrey Lyons, with Elcor Corp., reported that the local chapter earned the professional society's 1985 Chapter Merit Award. Citing the association's officers for their performance, Lyons said the award is issued annually to chapters that have demonstrated excellence in their Human Resource development programs.

During the past year, the PBPA organized training seminars and brought in nationally recognized speakers to discuss subjects such as Career Development, Productivity, Stress Management and Outplacement. The PBPA also provided personnel counseling to local businesses and recently organized a student chapter at UTPB.

The local PBPA organization is one of 400 chapters organized nationally to advance the field of Human Resource management and develop the professional skills of its 34,000 members.

The award presentation will be made during the ASPA's National Convention on June 15 to 18 in New Orleans, and at a local ceremony to be held later this year.

Chrysler to sell stake in Peugeot

Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

DETROIT — Chrysler has indicatedthat it will selling its minority stake in Peugeot, the French auto maker, in order to free more cash for spending on new cars and trucks in the United States.

The No. 3 automaker said its holdings of 12.5 percent of Peugeot's stock and stock warrants, currently worth about $275 million, will all be sold by June 11, and the proceeds will go directly into Chrysler's capital spending programs.

"This is a strategic decision based on our investment priorities," said Chrysler Chairman Lee A. Iacocca in a prepared statement. "We are making huge investments in building cars and trucks in North America," and so need the money from the stock sale, he added. "This next 12 months alone our capital spending will approximate $2 billion."

Chrysler noted, however, that its ongoing commercial relations with Peugeot (Chrysler buys some engines from the French company and distributes Peugeots in Canada) will not be affected by the stock sale.

Chrysler first obtained a stake in Peugeot in return for the sale of Chrysler's troubled European operations to the French company in 1978. Later, it received the warrants, or stock purchase rights, as part of a 1983 joint bond issue with Peugeot.

Iacocca had once seen Chrysler's stake in Peugeot as a key building block in forging what he grandly called "Global Motors." During the last recession, when it seemed that Chrysler could not survive on its own, Iacocca cherished a dream of combining Chrysler and its two foreign partners — Japan's

But Iacocca has seldom mentioned "Global Motors" since Chrysler has become enormously profitable and Peugeot has suffered big losses. At the same time, joint ventures, rather than mergers, have become the pattern for international combinations in the auto market; Chrysler has already formed a joint venture with Mitsubishi to build cars in the U.S., and it no longer appears to need much help from Peugeot.

With luck, Swatch Watch U.S.A.'s foray into the clothing business will reflect more of president Max Imgruth's business acumen, than his fashion sense.

Company hopes to expand product line

Swatch Watch expands from fashionable watches to fashions

NEW YORK (AP) — Max Imgruth, the 43-year-old president of Swatch Watch U.S.A., doesn't appear as wacky as the Swiss company's hot-selling, colorful watches. He is cool and reserved, except for his taste in clothes.

He is also determined to attain his next goal. "Swatch is at the crossroads. I want to make the transition from a single-product company to a multifaceted company," Imgruth says.

It could be hard, however, to match with other products the phenomenal success of the inexpensive Swatch, which was launched in this country in a big way in 1983.

The Swatch is a revolution in watchmaking, in more ways than one.

It is a spinoff of a race between the Swiss and Japanese to develop the world's thinnest watch. The Swiss won, welding the watch's components right into the case.

The Swatch — the word is a contraction of Swiss and watch and also means a patch of fabric — was created when engineers decided to apply that technology to mass production.

Swatch, which contains far fewer pieces than a regular quartz analog watch, can be produced on a single, robotic assembly line. Made of tough plastic, the Swatch is waterproof, shockproof and has a replaceable battery. It costs $30. It cannot, however, be repaired.

But the Swatch's real attraction lies in its imaginative, constantly updated designs.

"WE THOUGHT WE would position the Swatch as a fashion accessory. What we're marketing is much more a lifestyle, an idea, rather than something that just ticks," Imgruth said.

The result has been that, "We have created a watch buying demand on a seasonal basis rather than on a utilitarian basis," Imgruth said.

Imgruth primarily targeted females aged 12 to 24, who he envisioned buying four pairs of jeans a year, four pairs of Reebok shoes a year, and hopefully at least four Swatches a year.

To reach them, he pushed Swatches into department stores, rather than limit them to watch and jewelry stores.

It worked.

The company's total sales in this country soared to $135 million in 1985 from $3 million just two years earlier. The company doesn't disclose its profits.

Imgruth himself wears two Swatches at once, one set to local time, the other to Swiss time. On a recent day he wore a "Nautilus" and a "Tonga," but he changes his Swatches regularly.

"It gives me inspiration. I look at them, I think of graphics," Imgruth said.

They also match his outfit: a bright plaid jacket, blue-and-white striped shirt, a patterned tie, navy blue pants, turquoise socks and black loafers.

The company's lines each are made up of 24 watches, the classically styled ones that stay in th collection for one to two years and fashion watches that are changed every two to three months.

THE LATTER WATCHES have themes. This fall's will be "Coat of Arms" and "Kiva" American Indian.

Notable Swatches have included the see-through "Jellyfish," the hottest seller and no longer available; last year's fruit-scented ones; and the upscale "Limelight," which has four diamonds on its face and sells for $100.

Some people find that the designs make it hard to tell time on a Swatch.

"Oh, absolutely. I would tell those people to buy one of these, if you use it from a utilitarian point of view," Imgruth says, pointing to a tray of the simpler Swatches.

What Imgruth is trying to do now is attach the Swatch mystique to a line of accessories called Fungear and to a ready-to-wear collection called Funwear. These items also are also priced modestly.

A first Swatch shop featuring all the company's products was opened in Bloomingdale's flagship store here late last year. Now there are about 550 Swatch shops nationwide, the company says.

Imgruth expects the new products to account for over 30 percent of 1986 sales of Swatch Watch U.S.A. He declines to project those overall sales.

The company is a unit of Swatch S.A., which is based in Bienne, Switzerland. That company, in turn, is a unit of Societe Suisse de Microelectronique et d'Horlogerie, a watch conglomerate that is 51 percent controlled by private investors and whose stock is traded on the Zurich stock exchange, Imgruth said.

THE UNITED STATES, where per capita ownership of watches has been on the rise, is Swatch's largest market and represents 45 percent of Swatch's business, he said.

The question now is whether Swatch will sustain its momentum or see its products become a passing fad.

"I think people will continue to buy fashion watches," he said.

The trick to Swatch's long-term success, Imgruth said, will be to resist over-saturating the market with Swatch products.

Imgruth was born in Lucerne into a Swiss family of shoe and fashion retailers. He remains a Swiss citizen and speaks English with a slight accent.

He studied business, art history, languages, fashion and shoe design at various schools in Switzerland, Italy, England and France. He also received a bachelor's degree in marketing from New York University.

He worked for Swiss retailers until 1976, when he landed a job with SSIH, owners of Omega and Tissot watch companies. Later, he set up his own marketing consulting firm and Swatch was one of his first clients.

In 1983, Swatch asked Imgruth to assume his post.

Korean video recorder stirs up fear of piracy

CHICAGO (AP) — Korean electronics giant Samsung may wind up in a U.S. court if it trys to sell a videocassette recorder that enables users to copy tapes on a single machine, says a moviemakers' group that fears film piracy.

Samsung's machine, which allows copying of a half-inch VHS cassette onto an 8mm cassette, and vice versa, is on display at the Consumer Electronics Show.

Company officials say the machine is only a demonstration model, and that there are no plans for exporting it.

The Motion Picture Producers Association of America has suggested what its position would be should Samsung try to sell a similar product in this country.

In an interview with Television Digest two weeks ago, James Bouras, the association's vice president for home video, said Samsung would be "in for a lot of trouble. They're going to have some (legal) problems."

Donald Kobes, national-advertising director for Samsung Electronics America, said his company had spoken with the association, "and they said they had no problems with us showing the prototype."

"When we go beyond that we may be speaking a different language," he added.

The U.S. Supreme Court ruled in 1984 that taping television shows is legal when done for personal use. The case was brought by the movie industry, which feared the leasing of movie tapes would hurt business.

Last year, Sharp Electronics Corp.'s Japanese parent marketed a machine similar to Samsung's in the Middle East, said Jack Shea, Sharp's marketing director.

That machine allowed VHS-to-VHS copying, but its technology was incompatible with U.S. TV signals, he said in a telephone interview from Sharp's headquarters in Mahwah, N.J.

Still, Sharp discontinued distribution after a few thousand units following criticism from the motion-picture industry, and its own perception that such a machine could "upset all aspects of the entertainment industry," Shea said.

OPEC revenue bottoming out

HAMBURG, West Germany — Revenues of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries is heading for a record low this year, according to a report by the Shell Corp. OPEC countries' 1985 revenues from exports of crucde oil and petroleum products dropped by $22 billion, to $135 billion, compared with 1984 revenue. Revenues for 1985 are down 50 percent from 1984.

In view of the steep decline in oil revenue during the first quarter of 1986, there is little chance that revenue for the year will reach the 1985 level, unless OPEC agrees to reduce production quotas, the report said.

In 1985, Saudi Arabia shouldered the main burden, cutting oil production by 30.9 percent, while OPEC as a whole reduced oil production by 10.6 percent.

Saudi revenue dropped 36.4 percent compared with 1984 revenue whereas total OPEC revenue dropped by only 14 percent, the report said.

The Hungarian National Oil and Gas Corporation /OKGT/ intends to lease and purchase 2 SCR-systems rigs of 20,000 feet depth capacity each and their accessories, including putting into operation in Hungary in the 4th Quarter of 1986. The lease portion of the tender is to be financed by the World Bank. Woman turns hobby into successful business

ST. MARYS, Iowa (AP) — A couple from the city who knew nothing about farming or sheep moved to a farm several years ago. The woman took up knitting as a hobby to pass the time. Eventually she had so much wool sitting around the house she didn't know what to do with it.

So with her husband's help, she started her own business. She now makes thousands of dollars a year on clothing that is gaining a reputation as some of the best in the nation. The former city girl runs her business between taking care of the sheep, other animals, a large garden and an 80-acre farm.

"My family still thinks I'm crazy," said Kathy Mountain. "Coming out to the farm from the city is a big kick for them. I think they still think I'm out of my element."

Mountain and her husband, Bruce, both grew up in Des Moines and had careers there when, in 1978, they decided to move to Bruce's farm in the rolling hills of Warren County, near the small town of St. Marys. Bruce kept his job as a lawyer in Des Moines, but Kathy wanted to stay on the farm. They decided sheep would be a good animal for two amateurs to try to raise, so they bought some commercial stock.

"Sheep just seemed easier than, say, cows, because they were smaller and cheaper," Mountain said. "We figured they were a good thing to make our mistakes on, and boy did we make some mistakes."

She took up hand-spinning of the sheep's wool, and the wool began to pile up. "We were stepping all over it," she said.

During a trip to the Iowa State Fair, the Mountains talked to a woman who was hand-spinning wool. She told them it was hard to get natural colored wool, and there were no sources in Iowa.

"I'd been sitting here wondering 'What do you do with this wool once you've got it?'" Mountain said. "St. Marys was born."

It wasn't quite that easy to start St. Marys Woolens.

The Mountains switched to black wooled sheep, and began learning quickly about how to care for the sheep to avoid any damage to their wool.

AP Laserphoto

Kathy Mountain poses with two young lambs whose wool will be used in her woolens business.

"Our whole purpose in raising them is the wool, not for meat," she said. "We need to keep the wool clean, and we go to a lot of effort to make sure that happens."

Sixty of the sheep lambed this year, and Mountain is well versed in helping with the births and proper feeding and care. She talks about the sheep's characteristics as easily as someone who grew up with them.

Once the sheep are sheared, the wool is sent to a company in Harmony, Maine, to be made into cones of yarn. Mountain is extremely particular about how the white and black wools are blended. She uses four colors — mocha, charcoal, heather and natural white.

When the yarn returns to Iowa, it is parceled out to 10 to 15 women in the St. Marys area who work on various aspects of turning the yarn into sweaters, hats, scarves and mittens.

Mountain also works on machines in a former two-room schoolhouse that was moved to the farm when the business expanded.

"Nobody does the whole thing," Mountain said. "Some are knitters, some blockers, some hand seamers."

Moutain, who has degrees in graphic design and journalism from Iowa State University, has designed 29 motifs for the clothes. They are mostly sheep, but also include cats, geese and rabbits.

The work is convenient for Mountain's employees, who can do it at home in their spare time. They come to the St. Marys office every two weeks to collect pay and get more work.

"I'm real picky about the people I hire," Mountain said. "They have to be disciplined, and willing to work. The simple fact is the more efficient they are, the more money they make and the more clothes I get done."

When the product is completed, the clothes are sold through retail outlets in 16 states and by direct sale through a mail order catalog. The clothes are not cheap, ranging from $20 for mittens to $120 for sweaters. Mountain says she wants it that way.

"We are a specialized product, very high quality. The product is completely done by hand, and we work to the customer's specifications if they want. We don't have any desire to start mass producing so much that we have to lower our quality.

"One woman told me my sweaters are like Hummels, you save up so that you can have them, and you collect them. That's the best compliment I ever got."

Consumer index shows retreat in confidence

NEW YORK (UPI) — U.S. consumer confidence in May took its largest dip in a year, reflecting sagging optimism for future business conditions and a sharp decline in buying plans, The Conference Board reported Tuesday.

The business research group's Consumer Confidence Index, in which 1985 equals 100, stood at 96.1, down three points from 99 in April.

The monthly survey covering 5,000 U.S. households revealed that only 20 percent are looking for business conditions to improve, down from nearly 23 percent in April.

Fifteen percent expect employment conditions to brighten, down from more than 17 percent.

And only 26 percent expect their incomes to rise during the next six months, compared with about 31 percent in April.

Consumer buying plans tumbled following a major run-up during the previous month. Plans to buy automobiles declined to 9 percent in May, down from an imposing 11.4 percent in April.

Home-buying plans continue to be strong, however, propelled by lower home mortgage rates across the country.

Five percent of households said they are planning to buy a home during the next six months, the same figure recorded in April.

Intentions to buy major appliances, which vaulted to a record high in April, fell back in May. Buying plans were down across the board for such items as refrigerators, television sets, ranges, air conditioners and clothes dryers, the report said.

A Board spokesman noted that while the economy has been waiting for consumer spending to provide the thrust for accelerated growth, latest readings suggest this moment has not arrived yet.

Lower interest creates boom in Houston housing

HOUSTON (AP) — Lower prices and interest rates have teamed to recreate a housing boom in Houston, real estate agents say.

Sales of used homes in Houston are at their highest levels since the boom year of 1979, says the Houston Board of Realtors says.

In the first three months of 1986, records show board members sold 4,727 homes, the most since the 1979 record year when 5,833 homes changed hands during the same January-March period.

Board President DeLora Wilkinson noted that mortgage interest rates are down in the 10 percent range.

In addition, the average price of homes sold in Houston during April was $69,132, down $6,000 from last year's median price and $10,000 less than the 1983 price.

"There is a vast inventory of homes available, interest rates are down, and people are pricing their homes in a realistic manner," Ms. Wilkinson said.

The Houston real estate picture differs from the trend nationally, where home prices have risen 8.4 percent since last year, from $74,800 to $81,100.

Despite the price increases, the National Association of Realtors is reporting the strongest sales in six years, up 17.9 percent from April 1985.

Justice Department plans to file its own charges against TRW

CLEVELAND (AP) — The Justice Department plans to file its own complaint based on allegations by three former TRW Inc. employees that the company and three others defrauded the government out of $1.2 billion in a defense contract price-fixing scheme.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Alan J. Ross said the Justice Department would file an amended complaint within the next few weeks. He said Tuesday he could not reveal what changes might be made.

The government opted Tuesday to take over the suit, which was filed by the three former employees April 4 under the terms of the False Claims Act, a Civil War-era law enacted to halt profiteering. The law allows individuals to bring action on behalf of the government if information in the complaint is unknown to the government.

Their suit, filed on behalf of the United States, seeks $600 million in compensatory damages and $600 million in punitive damages.

Under the False Claims Act, the former employees would be entitled to up to 10 percent of any award to the government.

Former TRW accounting manager Larry S. Eagleye, former engineer Charles W. Broome and former accountant Alan J. Russ allege TRW defrauded the government by manipulating prices in violation of antitrust laws in connection with defense contracts to supply parts for the B-1 bomber and jet fighters.

Other defendants are General Electric Co., United Technologies Corp. and Iscar Blades Ltd., Israel's prime defense contractor. TRW is a major shareholder in Iscar Blades.

Robert Lundy, TRW vice president for public relations, said the three were fired in 1984 for using "improper processes and data to justify costs on non-competitive government contracts which resulted in overcharges."

Along with the lawsuit, the three former employees filed as evidence copies of some 1,200 pages of TRW internal documents.

A TRW spokesman said Tuesday the company welcomes the Justice Department's decision to intervene.

"We are pleased to see that it has happened since it means a more focused and coordinated approach," said spokesman Michael Johnson. "We still believe the suit is without merit and will be moving soon for a dismissal. We have been cooperating fully with the government in its investigations and will continue to do so."

General Electric and United Technologies had no comment on the government's decision to intervene. Stephen Madsen, an attorney for Iscar Blades, said his client hopes to be dropped as a defendant.

The Defense Department also will have a say in the complaint, U.S. Attorney Patrick M. McLaughlin said.

Coors shifts marketing strategy

By JEFFREY LEIB
The Denver Post

GOLDEN, Coldorado — For much of its recent history, the Adolph Coors Co. has brewed 100 percent pure Rocky Mountain controversy along with its beers.

At varying times, the unabashed embrace of conservative causes by Bill and Joe Coors, the chairman and vice chairman of the Golden-based brewer, has won it the enmity of labor, minority, women's and gay rights' groups.

Until recently, the insular, iconoclastic Coors family seemed to thumb its nose at such opposition.

Now, things have changed. Sold in 13 states a decade ago, Coors is now available in 45 states. Once a tight-fisted marketer, the company now is spending a fortune extending its reach. And while other brewers continue to shut or mothball capacity, Coors is constructing a $95 million packaging plant in Virginia to facilitate East Coast expansion.

"We realized it was no longer enough to make a high-quality, unique product on a regional basis," said Bob Rechholtz, the brewery's executive vice president for sales and marketing. "We needed to aggressively market new products with new appeal through heavier spending." Coors is now the largest per-barrel ad spender in the beer business.

In addition, to freshen its image with important market segments, the company is funding a huge public relations effort — sponsoring everything from Women's Yellow Pages, to menudo cook-offs in the Hispanic community, to tours by black rodeo performers.

Based on Coors' performance in 1985 and the first quarter this year, the company must be doing something right. While most of its competitors saw their volume skidding last year, Coors set a company record with the production of more than 14 million barrels. Net income in the first quarter this year, which ended March 23, soared to $7.2 million, from $644,000 a year earlier — more than a 10-fold increase. Sales for the quarter were up 7.7 percent and beer shipments up 11.3 percent.

Yet even with sales, profits and barrelage on the upswing for the moment, clouds still hover over Coors and its industry. The national beer market is flat. With an increasingly health-conscious population, excessive drinking is out.

To grow in such a climate, Coors is faced with the expensive and difficult task of yanking market share away from aggressive and powerful competitors, including Anheuser-Busch and Philip Morris' Miller Brewing Co.

Meanwhile, two other company units, Coors Energy Co. and Coors Porcelain Co. have been stung by troubles in the wider economy. Falling prices have hammered Coors Energy, which explores, drills, and markets oil and natural gas, and a sluggish electronics marketplace has chipped away at Coors Porcelain, which makes high-quality industrial ceramics products. The porcelain unit is run by Joe Coors Jr., Jeff and Peter's 44-year-old brother.

Jeff Coors still has high hopes for the non-beer segments: "If each doesn't have the potential for $1 billion in sales within 10 years, we won't fool with it," he says.

Still, despite such bravura, Coors' future rests with its ambitious plan to market beer nationwide by 1990, industry observers agree.

Says Rechholtz, after a lunch-time workout at the Coors Wellness Center, the company's on-site exercise facility: "Our analysis is that at the end of the beer wars, there will basically be just Coors, Miller and Anheuser-Busch."

In part to ensure its place at that table, Coors has attempted to bury lingering animosities with black and Hispanic groups by forging a series of pacts that promise increased hiring from those communities and the purchase of supplies from minority-owned firms.

Such overtures have helped Coors regain market share in old markets and neutralize opposition in new ones. Felix Burrows, the president of ViewPoint Inc., a Chicago-based market research and management consulting firm, says that sales of Coors products in the Hispanic marketplace nationwide are up 80 percent since the "economic reciprocity agreements" were signed in the fall of 1984. Sales to blacks are up about 50 percent, adds Burrows, whose firm was retained by Coors to monitor elements of the pacts.

If a single factor accounts for most of the brewer's success today, it is Coors Light. Jeff Coors says that first-quarter sales of Light exploded in the California market, up 25 percent from a year earlier. The 9-year-old brand is the nation's second most popular light beer, after Miller Lite, and the seventh best-selling beer overall. It now accounts for more than 40 percent of Coors barrelage, up from 15 percent in 1980.

However, despite Coors' undeniable success of late, Wall Street analysts are still somewhat cool to the prospects of the company and the industry.

Labor union presses government to study effect of VDTs on pregnancies

WASHINGTON (AP) — A labor union representing telephone operators says Congress should ensure that a government study is undertaken of how computer terminals affect pregnant workers, despite objections by a telephone company that would be part of the study.

Barbara J. Easterling, executive vice president of the Communications Workers of America, told a House Labor subcommittee recently that it should monitor the Reagan administration to ensure that the study is not squelched once again by the Office of Management and Budget.

The OMB already has scuttled one proposal at the behest of BellSouth Corp., where 2,000 telephone operators would have been studied.

The National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health has revised the study plan and resubmitted it to OMB for approval, but BellSouth says the revision still is flawed. OMB has not acted.

BellSouth attorney Hubert F. Owens told the health and safety subcommittee that the company's objections were based on scientific grounds. He said two public health experts hired by the company studied the plan and found it poorly designed.

The experts concluded that the study "could not produce scientifically valid results and that it would be unwise to undertake the study until and unless it was substantially modified," Owens said.

The proposed study would compare the pregnancy histories of 2,000 BellSouth telephone operators who use VDTs with 2,000 AT&T operators in the same area who do not use computer terminals.

Dr. James M. Melius, director of the NIOSH division of field studies, told the House subcommittee NIOSH has spent more than three years trying to devise a good study to determine if VDTs affect pregnancies.

The BellSouth study would be the largest human reproductive VDT study ever conducted, he said, and could answer the unresolved question of whether working with VDTs increases the risk of miscarriages in pregnant women.

But Owens said BellSouth originally was told the study would cover several industries, not just telephone operators. He said the company would have more faith in the study if insurance, airline and newspaper companies also participated.

"The study is too narrowly defined in that it includes only telecommunications workers," Owens said. "Other industries, which are equally as VDT intensive, and the public at large, will not give significant credence to the findings nor deem them applicable to their utilization of VDTs," he said.

Owens said BellSouth is committed "to never expose our employees to a work environment that would adversely affect their safety or health." But he said the company also is committed to "producing a scientifically sound and sufficient document that is worthy of acceptance and reliance."

But Ms. Easterling criticized the delay. She said an objective, comprehensive study of possible VDT risks to pregnant workers has been supported not only by CWA, but also by the American Newspaper Publishers Association, the Air Transport Association, the American Council of Life Insurance and the Computer and Business Equipment Manufacturer's Association.

BETWEEN THE LINES

Goldberg

Q. Could you please tell me about Whoopi Goldberg?
Mattie Brown
Madera, Calif.

A. She's 30, from New York City, where she and her brother were raised by their teacher-mother, after their father left home. Since the age of 8, she's been working in the theater, first with the Helena Rubinstein Children's Theater of New York's Hudson Guild Theater, later on Broadway in "Pippin," "Jesus Christ Superstar" and "Hair."

She also attended Catholic school and some high school, but gave it up for more theater and marriage. The marriage didn't last long, however, and with her 1-year-old daughter, Alexandrea (now 11), she moved to San Diego to continue her theater work there. Jobs were hard to get, so she worked as a bank teller, a beautician in a mortuary and a bricklayer instead.

Eventually, though, she joined the San Diego Repertory Theater and performed in such plays as "Mother Courage," "The Importance of Being Ernest" and "Getting Out." In 1980, she moved to Berkeley and became involved with an avant garde theater company called the Blake Street Hawkeyes.

At the time, she also did a one-woman show — she was performing in a two-character play and one night the other actor didn't show up so she had to go onstage alone. She liked it, and soon mounted an intentional one-woman show based on the life of comedienne Moms Mabley.

She then put together a group of characters in a one-woman show called "The Spook Show" and brought it to New York. Actress Judith Ivey brought director Mike Nichols to see it and the rest is proverbial show-business history: He was so knocked out that he decided to produce her one-woman act on Broadway. It was a success and she became a sensation. That led to "The Color Purple" and her Oscar nomination, a Grammy Award for her first comedy album, and a flood of movie scripts.

As it stands now, her second movie, "Jumpin' Jack Flash," in which she plays a bored computer programmer who discovers a message from a kidnap victim on her computer screen, is due out in August. Right now, she's deciding whether to do a movie called "Burglars" or "Public Enemy" with John Travolta.

There's also a project called "The Night I Danced with a Prince" to co-star Tom Hulce, in the talking stage. As we go to press, though, her two definite projects about to be filmed are both in TV: the final season episode of "Moonlighting" and a Carol Burnett variety special.

Regarding the name, a subject she hates to discuss and one that everyone still asks about: She thought her real name, Caryn Johnson, was boring so she changed it to Whoopi Cushion, which her mother told her was ridiculous. The way she likes to tell the story, a burning bush with a Yiddish accent then appeared and told her to change it to Goldberg. So she did.

Q. I saw "If Tomorrow Comes" on TV and I think Tom Berenger is adorable. Could you tell me a little about him, like what other movies he's been in?
Y. Capetillo
McAllen, Texas

A. He's 35, a Chicago native who became interested in acting while at the University of Missouri. He moved to New York right after graduation and studied with three distinguished theater companies: the Circle Repertory Company, Playwrights' Horizons and the Long Wharf Theater. His first starring role was on TV in Pete Hamill's dramatic "Flesh and Blood."

His movie debut was in "Looking for Mr. Goodbar" as Diane Keaton's killer. He followed it with a couple of unsuccessful movies: "Butch and Sundance: The Early Years," "The Sentinel" and "In Praise of Older Women"; then a couple of standouts: "The Dogs of War," in which he played a mercenary, and "Eddie and the Cruisers," in which he was the Tom Selleck-TV star character. Last year's "Rustler's Rhapsody" and "Fear City" were somewhat less successful. Currently, he's in the Philippines shooting a war drama, "Platoon."

Q. Can you tell me how old Mark Harmon is, how he got started in acting and what he's doing now?
W.S.
Lawrenceville, N.J.

Harmon

A. He's 43, and got started as an actor when his then-brother-in-law, the late Rick Nelson, got him a role on father Ozzie Nelson's show "Ozzie's Girls" in 1973. (He was, however, dressed in a gorilla suit.) He had done commercials as a child and easily got acting jobs after his stint as star quarterback for the high-profile UCLA football team.

You may have seen him in the series "Sam," "240-Robert," "Flamingo Road," "Police Story" and "Laverne and Shirley"; miniseries such as "Centennial" and "Eleanor and Franklin: The White House Years"; and the movies "Beyond the Poseidon Adventure" and "Comes a Horseman." Right now, after starring in the miniseries "The Deliberate Stranger," he is, as they say, reading scripts.

Q. Could you please tell me what Harry Belafonte has been doing lately?
Urslida Deleon
Claremont, Calif.

Belafonte

A. Working on behalf of various social causes, performing in concert and weighing his political future — he briefly considered a run for the Senate from New York. Right now, though, he's in preproduction with a six-hour miniseries that he's producing for ABC based on the lives of South African activists Nelson and Winnie Mandela.

Q. I'm doing a family tree and I think Lee Marvin may be related. Could you tell me if that is his real name and where and when he was born?
Sharon Whitrout

Marvin

South Bend, Ind.

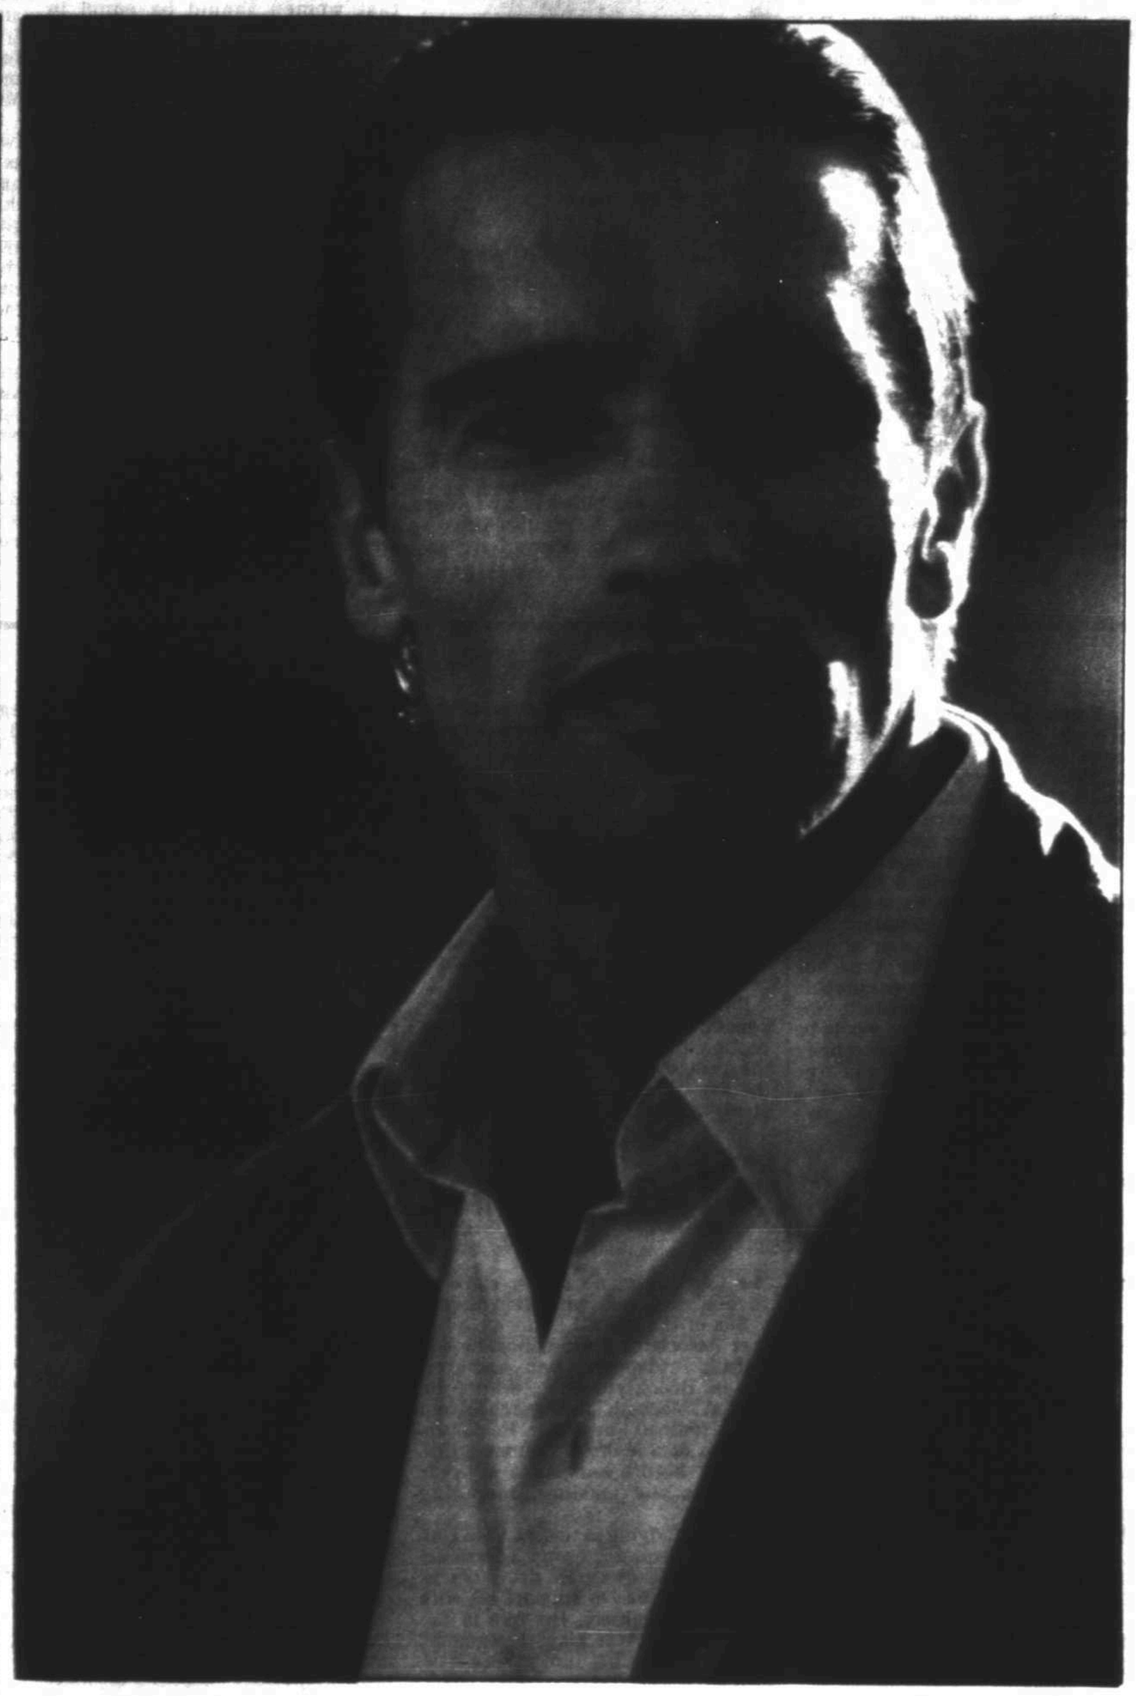

A. That is his real name; he's the son of advertising executive Lamont W. Marvin and fashion-/beauty editor Courtenay Marvin. He was born in New York City on February 19, 1924.

Q. Would you please settle an argument? Was Jameson Parker ever on "One Life to Live"?
Tracey Robles
Fresno, Calif.

A. Yes — he was the evil Brad Vernon for two years.

Q. Please tell me if Edward Albert of "Falcon Crest" is Eddie Albert's son.
R. Bush
Pleasantville, N.J.

A. Yes.

Arnold Schwarzenegger, former Mr. Olympia, has had moderate success in movies, including "Conan the Barbarian," "Conan the Destroyer," "The Terminator," and "Commando."

'Prince of Weights'

By JANE ARDMORE
King Features

He was programmed for success from the beginning — to be strong and to be gentle. "Not unusual," says Arnold Schwarzenegger in his strong but gentle voice. "Many times, big strong men are sensitive inside and very understanding of children. My father, for example. He was 6-foot, 2-inches, weighed 220 and was physically superb. He trained constantly, lifting weights, and was European champion at curling (a sport practiced on ice with the player making a heavy plate literally fly across the ice)."

Does Schwarzenegger remember seeing his father in action? "See him! By the time I was 15, I was competing. From the time I was 3, he was teaching me — to run, to play soccer, to exercise correctly and as soon as possible, to lift weights. He was a great influence on my life, the one who taught me self-discipline, who forced me to educate myself.

"When I was a schoolboy" — attending a Catholic school in Graz, Austria, where Schwarzenegger was born in 1947 — "he and my mother would come to the school every month to check on how I was doing. He felt language was very important. I started studying English when I was 10. Then in high school it was our second language.

"My parents were responsible people and were close to me and to my brother, who died 13 years ago. Our father was a body builder, we were body builders. My father lived long enough to see me win the Mr. Olympia crown three times. Two months before his death, he watched me win this world body-building championship. He was so proud and excited. Too bad he couldn't have lived to see what is happening to me now."

What is happening now is the release of "Raw Deal," first production of De Laurentiis Entertainment Group Inc., starring Schwarzenegger as Kaminsky, a one-time FBI agent who has been forced to resign because of excessive brutality in his handling of a criminal who had molested, mutilated and murdered a child.

"I can understand how that could get to a guy," he says, his hazel eyes reflective, "and the prosecutor was looking for any excuse to get rid of me anyhow; he's a pretty evil man. So I'm working as a small-town sheriff and not happy, when I'm asked to infiltrate a Chicago gangster organization, wipe it out and find out who is the FBI leak. If I complete the operation successfully, I'll get back to the FBI. Of course, the operation is successful; the prosecutor who nailed me is the leak."

Schwarzenegger has, in the 11 years since he retired from body-building competition, accomplished what might seem an impossible transition from "hunk" in action-packed movies such as "Conan the Barbarian" and "Conan the Destroyer" to a successful actor in "The Terminator" (which made Time magazine's Ten Best List of 1984) and "Commando," one of 1985's top grossers, which earned him ShoWest's Career Achievement Award.

Did his father ever dream he would become an actor? "He thought I was acting all my life," laughs Schwarzenegger. "But he had no idea I'd be paid for doing it. I had no idea either. I had dreams and visions like all kids and one of them was to come to America and visit Los Angeles."

It happened in Novemember 1968, when at the age of 21, he came to compete in another world championship event — he won the Mr. Olympia title seven times, and Mr. Universe five — and then came on to Los Angeles (which he considers the center of body building and fitness interest).

He stayed to write for the magazine Muscle and Fitness and enrolled at UCLA to study English, math and business administration. He later went on to earn his degree in business and international economics at the University of Wisconsin.

"I'd always dreamed of Los Angeles and I loved it, loved the mentality, the open-mindedness, the spirit of America is so free! I love the way this country welcomes new ideas, so different from Europe. I love the whole economic system which is young and inspirational."

He continues, "You can see it in the leadership of this country and I'm glad to be a part of it. I became a citizen three years ago. In fact, I feel as if in a life before this, I must have lived in this country, I feel so at home here. The things that have happened to me could never possibly have happened anywhere else in the world."

One of the first things that happened was that, as Mr. Universe, he appeared on the Merv Griffin Show and promptly received a call from Lucille Ball. She had seen him on the show and asked him to be on her show, "Happy Anniversary and Goodbye," with Art Carney.

"There was a director on the show," Schwarzenegger says, "but it was Lucy who really directed me, explained to me about projecting, and everything else I didn't know. It was a live show with a live audience and although I'd been performing in a way before live audiences all my life, it was quite another thing to be playing someone else and having lines which had to be pulled off so they were funny. She has kept her eye on my career ever since; she and her husband, Gary Morton. They've been great and so supportive.

"I was surprised and delighted to start out with such geniuses — Lucy and Art Carney. He played the husband who had just walked out on her. And I was the masseur, the Italian masseur in tank top and shorts, called in because Lucy's girlfriend felt she should get herself in shape and knock the world dead!"

He still didn't know he was heading for stardom, Hollywood variety. "Pumping Iron" was a film strictly on body building about which he has since written four best-selling books. But "Stay Hungry," in which he played opposite Jeff Bridges and Sally Field, won him a Golden Globe Award as the best newcomer in films, which in turn led to "Conan."

Timber contractor...not exactly a feminine career

By EMILY J. HORSWILL
King Features

Why would a young, attractive woman choose a career that requires her to spend months alone in the Alaskan wilderness? How would you feel about your daughter living in a tent by herself in brown bear country?

I met her abroad The Malaspina, an Alaskan ferry bound for Sitka. I'd been traveling Southeastern Alaska's Marine Highway for four days, long enough to recognize the Alaskans by their camaraderie and their "bush" garb, worn to an easy fit. They all topped 6-foot, 2-inches, were young, fit and bearded. Or so I thought.

Then, as I stepped into the ferry's solarium, one of them called, "Finish your job in the 'boonies' for the season, Annette?"

Annette: My daughter's name. As she looked up from her deck chair and I saw the English schoolgirl complexion, I set her age somewhere between that of my daughter and my granddaughter.

Annette Anderson

"Been slogging through mud for two weeks," she answered. "Glad to be going in to pick up my check."

Annette Anderson might have had three inches on my 5-foot, 2-inches and outweighed my 115 by 20 pounds. I took note of her direct gaze, the relaxed strength of her shoulders, comparing her freedom and opportunities with that of the women of my generation and felt envious and curious. She was engrossed in a legal document. It looked like a contract.

"Hollywood making a movie in Alaska?" I ventured. She searched out the voice, befuddled. When she grasped my inference, she rolled her eyes at the solarium's glass roof and we both laughed.

"In these?" She scooped a Northwoodsman's short rubber boot from the deck. "You're a teensy, weensy bit off. I'm an independent timber contractor. I work one-person jobs let by the Forest Service on bid. "Here," she passes me her document. It's couched in legal buzz, but the bid is articulate: $10,000.

"HOW LONG does one of these jobs last?"

"With luck and enough pizzazz, two months."

"You out in the 'bush' alone all that time?"

"I live and work alone. But I usually report in, or someone checks on me once a week. The longest I've gone without seeing another human was eight days."

I glance at a bald eagle's nest, the only obvious life on an island the ferry is inching past. "No unisex crews?"

"There are. But in two weeks, I'm climbing walls. Given the choice of too much togetherness and not enough, I'll talk to myself. And I like my work as an independent better."

"What do you do?"

"I've had several kinds of contracts: tree planting, thinning, examining for insect damage, disease. There were women contracting; but, as far as I know, I was the first to go out alone."

She twisted her hair, the color of dark honey, into a thick rope that fell halfway down her back, her direct gaze measuring me. Then she leaned forward. "This year I got into something exciting. I've been studying the growth progress of planted saplings compared to those left to regreate naturally."

"Did you have any preconceived ideas regarding the results?"

"SURE. SINCE anyone with their head switched on knows that nature has been growing timber successfully for 30,000 years, I figured a decently controlled study would have to come down on that side. But I also knew that all I could hope for on a tiny scrap of forest in two months was to justify further study. Even that seemed pretty iffy."

"But $5,000 a month isn't bad for an exciting job."

"It isn't so chunky when you consider the cost of living in Alaska, the cost of equipment and the fact that the work is seasonal."

"When a major studio spends $20 million to film an epic like 'Conan the Barbarian' and another 10 million to promote it, it's very gratifying," he says. "It makes you feel serious about the business. And then to follow it with a sequel. And 'The Terminator,' a science-fiction film which allowed me to appear for the first time with clothes on, gave me still further encouragement. The message I got was that I could be sold without showing my muscles."

Which doesn't meant that he has stopped training. He works out daily at the World Gym in Santa Monica, and the marvelous body which at 6'2 weighed 250-260 pounds when he first came to America is now 220 and is being honed to 215 for an upcoming role in "Hunter" "because, since it is being filmed in the jungle (in Mexico), I should not look too healthy."

America's Prince of Weights, not unlike Britian's Prince of Wales, has also found time along the way for romance and marriage, which have been well covered in the media — the girl with whom he fell in love and who became his wife in a wedding-of-the-year at Hyannis Port in April, was Maria Shriver of the Kennedy family, a co-anchor on CBS's Morning News Show.

They met at a tennis tournament in 1977, and for the young man from Austria it was instant romance. "She is a gorgeous girl and I always felt, from the very first, that we would marry, that she was the perfect one for me. We see things the same way. We communicate easily. The joy we have just in being together, the teamwork, the reassurance we give each other — we have supported each other totally from the day we met.

"No matter where our jobs have taken us, we always spend weekends together. 'Raw Deal' was filmed in Chicago and North Carolina. 'Hunter' is filming in Mexico near Puerta Vallarta.

"We ski together, dance, swim. She is a wonderful tennis player who beats me all the time. That was not surprising in the beginning because I wasn't a good tennis player; but now I'm a pretty good player and she still beats me.

"She also exemplifies today's woman in America, which has been a great re-education for me. I arrived in America just as the big movement for liberation was under way. There was nothing like that in Europe and I loved the idea. I had always felt that women should be equal in sports, that it was so important that they be able to compete on the same level as men and for the same kind of prizes as men.

"I started promoting women in sports in 1977 when I co-produced Ms. Olympia." As a matter of fact, the minute Schwarzenegger stopped competing professionally, he started promoting what had been called the Mr. Universe contest. He'd never thought the competition had been handled properly or had received sufficient media or television coverage. He wanted to raise the stakes and make it a much more important event and also to have women competing.

"I've been involved with management ever since I have just finished producing The Men's Professional World Body Building Competition and The Ms. International Contest in Columbus, Ohio — events which were sold out a month in advance — and will be handling the '86 Mr. Olympia competition."

His early training, the influence of his father, is still apparent. Best man at his wedding was his long-time friend Dr. Franco Columbu... "the fellow who came to America with me. We've been friends since 1965 in Munich.

"Franco is the real success story, twice winning the Mr. Olympia title as the strongest man in the world in his category (180 pounds). He came to this country without a word of English and no educational background and has gotten his doctor's degree in chiropractic and has become successful. He is now manufacturing food supplements as well, and is successful at that.

"Business methods are very different in America. I admire Franco for his skill and perseverance." Something Schwarzenegger understands, having been programmed for success himself. He probably has more bows to his arrow than any actor in Hollywood. It isn't that he doesn't trust stardom, it's just that with his health, his energy and his discipline, he can do so much more.

"I keep busy," he admits. "Always, from the first dollar I made in this country, I've been investing in real estate — it's the only way to go. I do careful research, I have the academic background, and most important, I know where to get information quickly. So, I have my real estate business, my work as a producer of body-building competitions, my career as an actor, and of course, my relationship with Maria.

"Family is most important. How could I feel otherwise with the mother and father I had and the home I came from? Unfortunately, my father could not live to see all that has happened; but my mother has. She visits me here in America every spring at my house in Santa Monica with the flowers and the garden and tennis court. This year, she had the added joy of attending our wedding."

And someday he hopes to give her grandchildren. "Maria and I will want children, of course. I love children." Indeed, Schwarzenegger is a very gentle giant.

Still, three years ago, she was plumb broke. Now she has a room reserved in Sitka's finest. What'll she do first? Turn on the hot water. Soak in the tub for two days with intermittent forays at the best Sitka has in "gourmet." Meet the rest of the independents drifting in.

Sitka is home base for them, not home. In her business, from April through September, home is on the bank of a stream in a 12-by-10 tent. Not one of those flimsy backpacker's affairs: heavy canvas.

"More comfortable?"

"That's the official excuse," she admits. "But the 'bush' is inhabited. Lots of four-legged company, including brown bears. Not that a brownie can't rip through any canvas with one swipe, but there's the psychological thing: that feeling that if you stake out a mentionable piece of real estate, they are more likely, given the right frame of mind, to walk around, instead of through.

Certainly, she carries a loaded rifle. And she can put on a polished performance at tree climbing. That is, assuming there is one around when you need it. The time she needed one, there were two climbers for one sapling. Fortunately, the bear beat the time of the would-be climbers in the opposite direction.

Both expertises — rifle and tree scrambling — go back to her training with CETA (The Comprehensive Employment Training Act) while she took years of university courses in forestry.

COLLEGE HAD always been iffy. She couldn't expect much help from the folks. If she got stuck, she could park at home. Then, both her father and mother died. Working for CETA wouldn't feed anybody, certainly not in Alaska.

"Too bad about quitting college."

"No. I already knew I couldn't dig the politics."

But while there she met the independents. She wasn't sure of her reception, but the larder was bare and the rent overdue. She bid and got the job. "They did take a good look at my records in rifle practice and tree climbing and my competency certificates in both." That done, everyone involved gave her total support.

In a daze, she poured over an equipment list. Where in the world would she get the wherewithall to acquire a three-wheeler and an ocean-going launch, much less the assurance to handle them alone for two months. The fellows "making it" prodded, advised and borrowed.

But the day she stowed her gear in the launch and pushed off, her stomach was doing the butterfly and her knees chattered like castanets. Fortunately, it's customary to sit in a boat. Also fortunate that she got an easy "stand." Even invited company sometimes. That'd been three years ago. One year, she'd tackled The Peril Straits off Chichagof Island.

The water had been calm when her launch chugged into the channel. Halfway across, the wind rose. Waves built, not straight, honest ones, but the kind that break as they peak and lash back. Her charts indicated a channel hemmed by rock cliffs. The launch would float, but in these iceberg waters, she'd only last minutes wet. She tried to sing. Prayed.

When the bottom of the launch scrapped on sand, she didn't have enough gas left to smell. She jumped out shaking so hard she could hardly beach her craft. Then, she saw she'd landed on the bank of the river exactly as planned.

"Right next to your own private bath."

"How romantic. Out in the Alaskan 'bush,' no one takes a bath in anything except insect repellent."

"SO YOU wash in 'bug chaser' and go to work. What's your daily routine like?"

"Early. Out here you'd better beat all the little winged creatures out of bed. Otherwise, between the mosquitoes' craze for blood and the 'white socks' for chomping bits of human flesh, there'd be nothing left but your bones."

When practical, she chugs back to camp about noon, washes while her big meal of the day cooks, takes a nap, then spends the afternoon on paper work. A snack and bed about 7.

Problems? Every day. But only one "jam" this stand: the day the tire on her three-wheeler went flat. And with only two days in two months spent 40 miles from camp, that's where she was.

She knew that 18 miles off, a fellow was working a one-day stand. She examined the tire. She might nurse it that far. Of course, she had no idea when the man would finish and pull for home. He had his launch ready and had gone back for his last tools when she crawled into it.

She stretched and yawned. "I'm sure glad this season's over. I'm looking forward to pulling into town."

"Satisfied with the last job?"

"More than that. With what I'm turning in, I can't see how the service can avoid extending the pilot program into a full-fledged survey. I ought to get another chance. On the other hand, I get tired of going it alone. Given the right circumstances..."

"The right man?"

"I seriously considered one, but that wouldn't work out."

I DON'T know how any of you other mothers and grandmothers would feel about your daughter or granddaughter chosing a career as an independent timber contractor, but I know how I'd feel.

And if I'd raised Annette, I'd be proud.

Brian Dennehy has little competition

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Movie companies can be found everywhere these days, not only on downtown's busy streets but in posh neighborhoods such as Hancock Park.

Still the bastion of the Los Angeles elite, Hancock Park has been invaded by filmmakers, most recently by an Orion Pictures release, "Hard Cover," starring James Woods and Brian Dennehy.

The usually sedate Lucerne Street was recently lined with the trucks and trailers that are the trademark of a movie company at work.

"Hard Cover" was filming inside a big house, one of 100 locations for the psychological thriller. Dennehy plays a cop who has written best sellers. However, his life has soured and he is suffering writer's block. His solution is a collaboration, literary and otherwise, with a former hit man (Woods).

During a lull in filming, Dennehy put down the book he was reading in his dressing room trailer and discussed the new turn in his career. Yes, he is co-starring in a major film. No, he doesn't mind being known as a character actor.

"I've been busy," he remarked in his low-keyed manner, "and I've had the field pretty much to myself. There are few actors around who can do what I do. I'm 47, but I can play fairly young, say around 40. There are a few character actors coming up, guys like John Mahoney, Guy Boyd, John Goodman, Dennis Farina, all of them very good. But I figure I've got three or four years before they're a threat."

Why does Dennehy have so little competition?

"Because of the decline of the studio system," he said. "Studios like MGM and Warner Bros. kept character actors under contract to supply their pictures. They would appear in eight or 10 pictures a year, sometimes two at the same time. They could sustain long careers, something that is difficult for actors today."

Dennehy has been in movies since 1977, when he played a crazy lineman in "Semi-Tough." His bulk and strong presence led to roles in "Looking for Mr. Goodbar," "Foul Play," "Little Miss Marker" and "Split Image."

However, it was his portrayal of the laid-back, sympathetic bartender who aided Dudley Moore in his pursuit of Bo Derek in "10" that made his first sizable impression with audiences.

He was the small-town police chief who incited Sylvester Stallone to his rampage in "First Blood," the Alaska pilot in "Never Cry Wolf," the American detective in "Gorky Park."

"Then Larry Kasdan wrote a beautiful part for me as the sheriff in 'Silverado,'" said Dennehy. "The failure of the picture was a big disappointment to me. 'Cocoon' (as leader of the space people) was a break for me, and I'm grateful to Ron Howard, who had to fight for me to do it. I also like the part (of a detective) in 'F/X.'"

Dennehy's characters seem multifaceted, even when he plays a heavy, as in "Silverado." He might be called the thinking man's villain, since he invests each role with dimension.

Son of the late Ed Dennehy, a former Associated Press editor, he was born in Bridgeport, Conn., and grew up in Brooklyn, N.Y., where he played "Macbeth" in high school and was a football linebacker. He continued his double life at Columbia University before serving a six-year hitch in the marines, including Vietnam.

After studying acting at Yale University, Dennehy found occasional roles off-Broadway. He drove trucks and tended bar to support his wife and two daughters. His role in the anti-Vietnam War play "Streamers" helped launch his film career.

"In the past three or four years, I've returned to the theater as much as possible," he said. "This summer I'm going to do 'Galileo' in Chicago, using the original Brecht script."

Dennehy has starred in two television series, "Big Shamus, Little Shamus," which had a swift death on CBS, and "Star of the Family," which had a similar fate on ABC opposite "Magnum, P.I." He recently declined a spinoff series of a character he played on "Cagney and Lacey."

"I played a bounty hunter who was an anti-feminist, fascist pig," said the actor. "It was funny and amusing for one show, but how are you going to sustain an undemocratic right-winger for a series? You'd be picketed by all the civil righters.

"There's only one reason to do a TV series: to get rich. Sure, I could take the money and run, but why? I have no illusions about the business, but my film career is going well now, and I'm going to ride it out as long as I can."

Former teacher 'forges' documents

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) — Visitors to Washington, D.C., who see the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution and the Bill of Rights may assume they're looking at the John Hancocks of the founding fathers, but they're really seeing the handiwork of Rose Flynn.

Mrs. Flynn, 80, a former English teacher, is the official forger of the United States.

In 1974, federal officials became concerned about the deterioration of the famous documents that were on public display at the National Archives.

"They were falling apart," Mrs. Flynn said. "They didn't smell so good, and they were beginning to wrinkle."

At the suggestion of President Nixon, who knew her and admired her penmanship, archives officials hired Mrs. Flynn to pen authentic-looking forgeries of the famous signatures so the real documents could be put away for safekeeping.

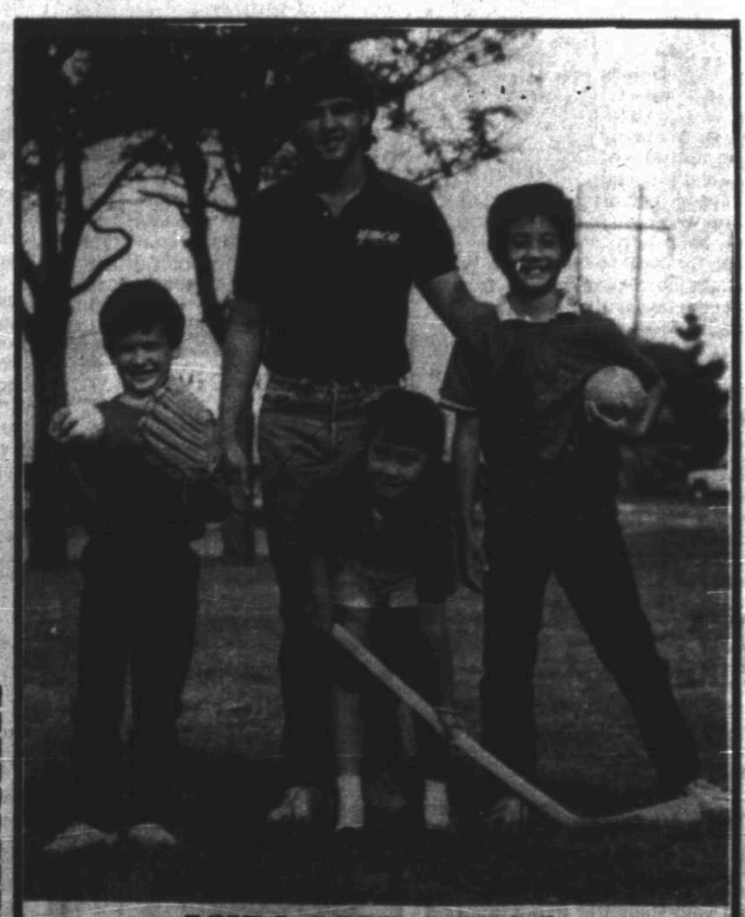

"They copied the documents themselves, but for some reason they couldn't copy the signatures," she said. Perhaps they were too faded, she speculated.

'Wise Guys' actually dim-witted

By DAVID LEE FORREST

Forrest

"Wise Guys," a comedy about a pair of small-time, dim-witted gangsters who never quite seem to hit the big-time, is a near-miss.

Joe Piscopo, the "Saturday Night Live" veteran, and Danny DeVito, the short comedian from "Taxi," play two buddies in Newark, N.J., who are employed in what one of them refers to as the fourth-largest growth industry in New Jersey — organized crime.

They don't exactly travel in "The Godfather" social set, though. The duo are the lowest grade of Mafioso go-fers. Among their duties are picking up their Mob chieftain's laundry, buying his groceries and testing his bullet-proof jackets (i.e., Piscopo wears it while the boss shots at him).

"At least we've got lifetime jobs," Piscopo notes.

"Yeah," DeVito observes drily, "unless we try to quit."

Sent off on another fairly minor errand, the pair commit a major mistake, one that costs their employer $250,000.

The crime lord, played by Dan Hedaya, is upset enough that he isn't sure that death is an adequate punishment.

"Do we really hurt them by killing them?" he wonders aloud.

"It's a start," replies his chief henchman, played by Lou Albano.

From there on, "Wise Guys" becomes a cliched chase movie, with Piscopo and DeVito scrambling frantically to avoid unpleasant deaths.

Many of the film's performers are good actors who never quite live up to their potential. Both Piscopo and DeVito have shown a great deal of promise in other roles, but in this movie they're little more than slightly updated imitations of Abbot and Costello.

Heyada, who was wonderfully evil in last year's Texas-made thriller "Blood Simple," only gets a few really good lines in his small "Wise Guys" role as "the meanest, lowest mobster in Newark."

Patti LuPone, the original award-winning star of the hit Broadway musical "Evita," is almost invisible in her tiny part as DeVito's wife.

In fact, Albano, a recently retired professional wrestler making his big-screen debut (he's so prodigiously fat he wouldn't fit comfortably on a small screen), has a much more important role than Ms. LuPone. His performance, however, is about what you'd expect from an pro wrestler, consisting mainly of yelling loudly and frequently.

Piscopo's character is Jewish while DeVito's is Italian, setting up an almost continual barrage of ethnic jokes, some of which work and many of which don't. The main running gag is that the wise guys' fondest wish in life is to open New Jersey's first Italo-Judeo deli.

The film's director, Brian De Palma, ought to know a lot about the "Garden State" of New Jersey since he was born in Newark. De Palma is not someone you'd necessarily expect to know a lot about comedy, though. He is best-known for making bloody Hitchcockian thrillers, including 1976's "Carrie," 1978's "Dressed to Kill," and 1980's "The Fury."

Many film critics did find his 1983 gangster film, "Scarface," highly amusing, but De Palma apparently didn't mean for it to be.

His uneven 1984 murder mystery "Body Double" did have some very clever — and very intentional — flashes of twisted humor, however, as did his superb 1981 thriller "Blow Out."

In "Wise Guys," flashes aren't enough. De Palma does a just barely adequate job of sustaining the humor. He and his cast come close, but somehow never quite hit the mark.

Compared to the funniest gangster movie of the recent past, John Huston's dark comedy "Prizzi's Honor," "Wise Guys" doesn't look too bright.

"Wise Guys," rated R for strong language and some mild violence, is now showing at the North Park Cinemas.

Cussler: Writing like 'sweats blood'

The (National Underwater Marine Agency) has found more than a dozen wrecks, including several Confederate vessels that sank during the Civil War. The group also located the Leopoldville, a troop ship that went down during World War II, killing more than 800 U.S. soldiers.

GOLDEN, Colo. (AP) — Success has found novelist Clive Cussler and he owes it all to an adventurer who drives an antique Daimler.

The adventurer is the fictional character Dirk Pitt, a central figure in all of Cussler's novels. Pitt is equally at home in Washington's political society or diving over remains of ancient vessels.

Yet, despite the continuing acquaintanceship, lately renewed in his current work, "Cyclops," Cussler doesn't really know Pitt. "I'm not sure I'd recognize him if he walked into a room," the author said.

Cussler and his wife, Barbara, occasionally entertain close friends with dinner parties. The conversation naturally turns to a Hollywood movie and Pitt.

"No one will agree who will ever play Pitt," he said. "I don't have a clear picture of Pitt. His features are misty."

However, the 54-year-old author, an accomplished writer of modern-day adventure stories, has a pair of light, blue-green eyes that don't miss much, and a quiet demeanor that suggests a wry humor.

And unlike Pitt, who courts danger with every dive, Cussler's lifestyle is that of a homebody who toils daily at a typewriter.

His efforts in the world of literature — six novels — are aimed at the nation's mass market. His fans usually push his books onto the New York Times' best-seller list, as they did "Cyclops," which centers on Pitt's efforts to prevent an American moon crew with research information from falling into Soviet hands. He also stops a Soviet attempt to level Havana.

While his books increase in popularity and profits, the actual work becomes more difficult.

"It's getting harder all the time," Cussler said of his writing, which is done at home on a word processor. "I sweat blood."

However, the financial rewards have left Cussler with homes in Golden and in Scottsdale, Ariz.

His success has also left him a bit suspicious of the filmmaking industry. He considers "Raise the Titanic," his favorite story, a critical failure because the book was trimmed to fit the film.

Since "Titanic," he won't sell his books to film producers, although he remains interested in a TV miniseries that would allow more time for intricate plotting.

"If they turned out another bad movie, it would start reflecting on the books," said Cussler.

Cussler grew up in Southern California and already had a career in advertising when he decided he wanted to write books.

His first book, "Mediterrean Caper," was written in the back of a dive shop in California. It didn't sell right away, so he relocated to Colorado and spent a year at Estes Park writing another novel, "Pacific Vortex."

Titanic, a novel about raising the doomed ocean liner from its North Atlantic grave, brought the financial comfort and security Cussler needed to continue. Since then he has written a book every 1½ to 2 years and each one has found an audience waiting and wanting more.

Cussler does little on-scene research for his novels, relying instead on travel pamphlets and the telephone. He recently called the U.S. Embassy in Buenos Aires and asked, "How does somebody board a plane there?" The ensuing description of the airport concourse will appear in a forthcoming book.

He spends much of his spare time working with his National Underwater Marine Agency, a nonprofit foundation that scouts for historic shipwrecks around the globe.

The group has found more than a dozen wrecks, including several Confederate vessels that sank during the Civil War. The group also located the Leopoldville, a troop ship that went down during World War II, killing more than 800 U.S. soldiers.

Cussler is a diver and has seen some of the discoveries up close, but no artifacts litter his study. He is content to find the wrecks and chart them, leaving them undisturbed as underwater shrines.

Another interest is cars. He owns more than 30, including four Rolls-Royces and Dirk Pitt's 22-foot-long, 1951 Daimler convertible.

Mysteries, too, are another hobby. He is checking out the flight of some French pilots who left Europe on a trans-Atlantic voyage two weeks before Charles Lindbergh.

"They made it to Newfoundland," Cussler said. "We've got reports of it (the wreckage) in the Maine woods. A fellow out hunting years ago remembered seeing an old engine sticking out of the ground."

Another mystery remaining for Cussler is John Paul Jones' Bonhamme Richard. The tiny ship is believed to be resting somewhere on the bottom of the North Sea off East Yorkshire.

Cussler has posted a reward for helpful information on the Bonhomme Richard and believes that someday a fisherman will find it.

Fame, though, is something Cussler has never considered.

"I still have to give my name," he said. "Occasionally someone will say, 'Oh yeah, I've heard of you.'"

Hurt hopes comedy changes his image

By SUSAN KING
Hearst News Service

Who can forget John Hurt's memorable, Oscar-nominated performances as the imprisoned junkie Max in "Midnight Express" and the tragic, deformed John Merrick in "The Elephant Man"? The 46-year-old British actor has even made television worth watching, receiving international praise for his portrayals of the flamboyant homosexual Quentin Crisp in "The Naked Civil Servant" and as the crazed Emperor Caligula in the BBC series "I Claudius."

But, except for the entirely forgettable 1982 feature "Partners," Hurt has done little comedy. He hopes that his newest film, "Jake Speed," will change his serious image.

"Jake Speed" is a lighthearted action-adventure film about a supposedly fictional character (Wayne Crawford) from a series of popular novels who helps a young woman in distress (Karen Kopins). Hurt plays Speed's nemesis, Sid Widgway — an evil white-slave trader.

"He's described as the slimiest thing that has ever crawled out from under a stone," Hurt says of Sid. "I went for every weak vice I could think of — every slimy vice."

Hurt says he's been looking for a comedy for a long time, but "if you look at the line of parts I've done from 'Midnight Express,' 'The Shout,' 'Elephant Man' and 'Champions,' they're not things you're going to turn down. One thing leads to another and I don't know where anything's going to lead. I never planned anything, including my birth."

Hurt admits, though, that he found himself in a situation "where I did so many serious looks at life, I wanted to broaden my horizons. 'Jake Speed' came along and I thought it stood a very good chance of working on the level that it was intended to work. So when the script came through my agency I said, 'Yeah.'"

The London-based Hurt also admits that people, especially producers, believe he's really like the grim, dramatic characters he portrays, so he makes sure he comes to Los Angeles every so often for a visit. The actor says an amazing transformation occurs when people meet him.

"You can see them changing their viewpoint of you as you're talking to them," he says. "They suddenly find themselves laughing at things you say. They don't expect it. They almost don't want to laugh because they think: 'This guy doesn't say funny things.'"

Hurt doesn't have anything amusing to say about Sam Peckinpah, who directed him in the 1983 thriller "The Osterman Weekend."

"Sam was misery to start with," Hurt says with a sigh. "I couldn't bear working with him. I was just dying for it to finish. He was just plain rude."

Their relationship changed two weeks into filming when Hurt had to do an improvisational scene as a TV weatherman.

"It made him laugh a lot," Hurt says. "Once you made Sam laugh, you were all right. Before that, though, it was absolute hell. I adored him off set, but on set he was smitten with this Bonaparte complex."

Peckinpah also taught him more about action films than any other director.

"He'd say, 'Play against it. If you got a gun in your hand, think of Clint Eastwood and don't make any expression at all, the vibration of the gun will move your face.' He was right, it worked."

Besides Peckinpah, Hurt also has worked with another controversial American director — Michael Cimino — on the ill-fated "Heaven's Gate." Hurt says Cimino's overspending was apparent, although there wasn't "mass confusion" on the set.

"Actually," Hurt points out, "it was run in a very military style; off we went to do our riding in the morning and then I had to go play pool in the afternoon with a professional pool player for two strokes in the film, both of which are set up anyway. I didn't mind, though, playing pool with someone who is a professional. I'm still a lousy pool player in my own mind."

Animals helping Ohioan carve name for himself

McARTHUR, Ohio (AP) — The bright-eyed mice in Ray Showman's house are helping him carve a name for himself among art collectors.

Showman's carved animals have become popular because of their realism, said Natsu Taylor, manager of the non-profit Trisolini Gallery Shop that Ohio University runs in Athens.

His mice sit atop small bits of wood as if trying to decide which way to scamper. His raccoons peer warily from inside hollow trees. His chipmunks stick their noses from burrows to test the wind.

"You can almost see their noses twitching," Taylor said. "He has captured the essence of the beast."

Showman works for the environmental division of American Electric Power Co. He and his wife, Carol, and their two teen-age children live near the Vinton County Courthouse here.

He sits by the family washer and dryer on the enclosed side porch when he carves his small beasts, doing most of it on winter weekends, before the mowing and fishing season.

"As soon as the grass starts to grow and the fish start to bite, I do that instead," Showman said.

Inspiration for his work comes from frequent walks through Vinton County forests.

"I've always been interested in wildlife," he said.

He modeled his first white-footed mouse from a rodent he saw in the woods. "I went and caught one and kept him in a cage. He was cute. I just liked him."

A baby rabbit he found and nursed to adulthood was the model for his rabbit figures.

Showman roughs the critters from a block of basswood. He uses a power drill to give them furlike texture. He paints them and adds other finishing touches, such as paintbrush bristles for whiskers that seem to twitch.

The bright eyes come from a taxidermy mail-order house. Mouse tails are made from reeds.

"I just do whatever takes my fancy," Showman said. "I've been making raccoons because they seem to sell pretty well, but I don't know what I'll make next."

His carvings sell for $25 to $80, depending on the time he invests in them. One raccoon peeking from a log may be $25 because Showman needs to carve only its head. A full-bodied chipmunk may go for $50.

"I sell amost everything I do," he said. "I guess the trick is to make it as close to nature as possible."

'The Elephant Man' to be staged by MCT

Opening June 13 at Theatre Midland is Midland Community Theatre's production of Bernard Pomerance's "The Elephant Man."

"Based upon an actual case history, Bernard Pomerance stuns his audience with a memorable piece of theater," says a spokesman for MCT. "The life of John Merrick, the Elephant Man, epitomizes both dignity and respect. the audience will grow to love him and to disregard his deformities."

Heading the cast of this powerful and moving story is Dr. Michael Stannard as Dr. Frederick Treves of The London Hospital and Brian Swartz as the deformed Merrick. Carr Gomm, the hospital administrator, is played by Michael Trost; actress, Mrs. Kendall, is portrayed by Carol Ray; Steve Gandy is Bishop How; Nurse Sandwich is Frances Heltzel. Others in the cast include Ray Tolson, Jay Laengrich, David Le Master and Patsy Springer.

"The Elephant Man" is directed by Sharyllynn Shaw, sets and lights are designed by David Layman; costumes by Mae Dawson; and stage manager is Karlis Gruzins.

Crew heads are Jo Stroker, talent; Jed Barker, construction; Mary Eimers and Liz Pauley, paint; Steve Porterfield, costumes; J. Robert Williamson, lights; Don Higgins, sound; Cindy Bohanan, props gathering; Robin Hodges, props running; Sharon Perkins, dressers; D.A. Plumlee, Dorothy Perkins and Jim Heck, casting.

A pictorial exhibition is currently on display at the Midland Public Library depicting the real life story of John Merrick and Sir Frederick Treves, the doctor who discovered him. The exhibit was assembled by Stannard, who once worked at The London Hospital.

The production play in the Davis Theatre One, 2000 W. Wadley Ave., Thursday through Saturday through June 28. Reservations may be made by calling 682-4111.

GOREN BRIDGE

BY CHARLES GOREN AND OMAR SHARIF
©1986 Tribune Media Services, Inc.

DEAR MR. GOREN:

Q.—There's something I don't understand about the mathematics of bridge. Suppose that you hold the following card combination:

DUMMY
♠ Q 6 3
YOU
♠ A K 10 4

You need four tricks from the suit. The odds favor a 4-2 break, so it would seem that, after cashing the king and queen, you should finesse the 10 on the third round. However, the "Official Encyclopedia of Bridge" says that if both opponents follow, you should play the ace next. Why is that?—N.P., West Hartford, Conn.

A.—You are correct in your assertion that, a priori, the odds favor a 4-2 split. However, the Encyclopedia is correct when it says that, once both opponents have followed to the second round of the suit, it is correct to play for the drop rather than the finesse.

The reason therefor is that, when you lead the third round from dummy, you have already eliminated a number of holdings from those originally possible. In addition, when your right-hand opponent follows to the third round of the suit, your left-hand opponent now has one more unknown card than does his partner; therefore, he has a greater chance to have the missing card in the suit. And a 3-3 split is more likely than finding your left-hand opponent specifically with a doubleton.

All in all, there is not that much difference between the two lines. The drop is about a 2 percent better play than the finesse.

Q.—My partner wants to use the Gerber Convention in all circumstances as our ace-asking convention. Is that wise?—A. R., Ft. Worth, Texas

A.—For those readers who do not know the convention, Gerber uses four clubs to ask for aces instead of four no trump. Most experts use it only as a jump bid over one no trump or two no trump. That allows them to keep four no trump as a natural bid, inviting partner to bid slam if he is at the top of his range for his no trump bid, or to pass if he is minimum.

We strongly suggest that you confine your use of Gerber to these cases. In too many auctions you need four clubs as a natural bid to help describe your hand. And then there are the cases where the bid is more useful as Stayman; for example, in the auction:

South	West	North	East
2 ♠	Pass	2 ♢	Pass
3 NT	Pass	4 ♠

If North has an unbalanced hand with a major suit, perhaps with slam interest, he needs to be able to find out if there is a 4-4 fit before he gets too high.
