North, West Texas hit by thunderstorms

By DOUG CRICHTON
Associated Press Writer

May thunderstorms battered West and North Texas with torrential rains and tornadoes, flooding homes, snarling traffic and injuring six people in a Dallas suburb when a roof collapsed on an office party, authorities say.

About 200 people were at a party inside Challenger Electric Equipment Inc.'s offices when the roof fell in about 7:30 p.m. Thursday "during a blinding rainstorm" in Grand Prairie, police Lt. J.M. Gatlin said.

Six people were taken to the D-FW Medical Center, however, where two remained hospitalized today in stable condition. The others were treated and released, said spokeswoman Phyllis Webster.

"We have been on the edge of a very potent situation for about a week," said Skip Ely, a meteorologist in the National Weather Service's Fort Worth office. "Late-May storms are real juicy, like this one."

Forecasters said strong thunderstorms were marching westward across the state this morning, drenching portions of Central and Southeast Texas, while rain continued to fall on already saturated ground in North Texas.

More than 6 inches of rain fell on Austin after midnight, causing flooding at numerous intersections in the state's capital. No injuries were reported, Austin police said.

Power outages affecting about 6,000 people were reported in Hunt and Hopkins counties in Northeast Texas overnight.

Texas Power and Light officials said most power was restored by sunrise today. High winds and tree limbs falling on lines accounted for most of the interrupted power, officials said.

Street flooding was reported in San Antonio and the Hill Country this morning and heavy rains forced the cancellation of the final day of school in Bandera.

"We have no school today and our make-up day has not been decided," said Betty Peters, secretary to Bandera Independent School District Superintendent Ted Dockery.

She said administration officials were discussing whether to proceed with graduation ceremonies for about 70 Bandera High School students tonight.

Senate favors compromise abortion bill

Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — A compromise bill that would ban abortions in the third trimester of pregnancy except in cases of irreversible birth defects won overwhelming Senate approval Thursday.

The Senate approved the measure on a voice vote after the compromise averted a threatened filibuster by pro-abotion Sen. Craig Washington, D-Houston, in the closing days of the 70th Legislature.

The bill goes back to the House, whose version would have revoked the license of a physician who aborts a "viable fetus" — one that could be kept alive outside the womb.

The Senate version limits abortions to the first six months of pregnancy, except to protect the mother's life or mental health, or if the fetus has "severe and irreversible abnormalities."

The House earlier rejected an attempts to exempt fetuses with gross abnormalities, but Sen. Ted Lyon, D-Rockwall, the bill's sponsor, said he thinks the House will accept the Senate compromise as the strongest bill he could get through the Senate.

"I think we have an excellent chance of having the House concur," Lyon said. "If we go to a conference committee and we don't keep the language, we have the specter of a Senate filibuster."

Despite the compromise, he said, "This is a tremendous step forward for the Right to Life movement in this state," which will prevent "perhaps several hundred" abortions each year.

Committee denies appeal for area SSC site

From Staff and Wire Reports

AUSTIN — A state commission today denied an appeal by local Garden City superconducting super collider boosters for that site's addition to Texas' two other recommended sites.

The action came after review teams of the state National Research Laboratory Commission recommended that ratings for the Garden City proposal, along with three other sites dropped earlier from consideration, remain unchanged.

The executive committee of the laboratory commission reviewed appeals submitted by committees supporting the Garden City site as well as those supporting sites north of Houston, the Houston-Beaumont area, and near El Paso, whose appeals also were denied today.

Edward Bingler, executive director of the commission, said today that after a review of the appeals, "The merits of the sites are virtually unchanged."

Bingler said that commission staff after the review process continued to question cost estimates Garden City proponants submitted for tunneling in the proposed area.

The executive director added that 85 active oil wells in the Garden City area are evidence of continued petroleum exploration and production, a condition that counted against the site.

The state National Laboratory Commission previously voted to present a Dallas and Amarillo site to the U.S. Department of Energy for consideration in the supercollider project.

The executive committee of the state commission — Chairman Peter Flawn, Herb Woodson and Charles Duncan reviewed the written appeals made by the quartet of appealers.

Of the appeals process, Flawn said, "Time is of the essence."

Along with the appeal, the Garden City SSC Commission is awaiting word from two national engineering firms on whether their site, about 40 miles southeast of Midland, has a chance in the national race for the multi-billion dollar lab.

"We're just trying to get this opinion on whether we should be in this competition or not," Akins said.

ICF Technologies out of Washington D.C. should return its verdict this week on the local site and DMJM out of Los Angeles will turn in its analysis on Monday, Akins said.

The study by the engineering firms will factor into whether or not the local group takes its proposal directly to DOE, if today's appeal fails, he said.

Flawn said he didn't think other proposals delivered directly to DOE would bother his commission.

"It's my understanding DOE will accept any proposals from any source," he said.

Offering to polish up their proposal at their own expense, the Garden City Commission is hoping the state will chose the local location as a third site.

"They could have the site for free. Hopefully reason will prevail," Akins said.

Further preparation of the Garden City site, which is about 95 percent complete, could cost up to $200,000 more, but Akins said the group will not know a final estimate until the engineering firms return their reports.

Pact could put Kuwaiti tankers under U.S. flags

By BARRY SCHWEID
AP Diplomatic Writer

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration and congressional leaders have reached an agreement under which the administration will be free to put Kuwaiti oil tankers under U.S. protection and then report to Congress, an administration official said today.

The official, speaking on condition he not be identified, said the agreement was worked out Thursday in meetings held by Frank C. Carlucci, President Reagan's national security adviser; Senate Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., and Speaker of the House Jim Wright, D-Texas.

Arrangements are proceeding to place Kuwaiti tankers under the American flag, probably in the first week in June, with military escort ships to be provided soon afterward, the official said.

He said the agreement called for the Senate and House to pass resolutions calling for a report on the reflagging and escorting. The report would be due within seven days after enactment of the resolution, he said. However, the resolution would not require that the report be made before the reflagging and escorting could be done.

The administration official spoke as Reagan met at the White House with his national security advisers to discuss plans to protect the Kuwaiti tankers from Iranian attacks.

The Washington Post said the aides were expected to give Reagan a plan that envisions a convoy of three or four tankers being escorted under U.S. naval protection every 10 days or so.

The newspaper, quoting administration sources, said the necessary air protection would come from U.S. planes based on carriers outside the gulf.

At the same time, Assistant Secretary of State Richard W. Murphy assured the Senate Foreign Relations Committee that plans to protect Kuwaiti tankers would not go forward until "the president is satisfied that we will be able to do it properly and until the Congress has been fully consulted."

Murphy promised to advise Congress of the outcome of today's meeting at the White House.

Bentsen: Attack reflects on energy policy

WASHINGTON (AP) — The missile attack on the Navy frigate USS Stark in which 37 sailors died underscores the weaknesses of the Reagan administration's energy policy, Sen. Lloyd Bentsen says.

Bentsen said Thursday that by pursuing an "open market" energy policy under President Reagan, the United States has become dependent on foreign oil for nearly 40 percent of its domestic needs.

Of that, 5.5 percent, or 1 million barrels per day, is coming from the Persian Gulf, where an Iraqi fighter attacked the Stark last week.

Meanwhile, U.S. oil production has slipped more than 730,000 barrels a day in the past year because domestic producers could not compete with the lower priced imports.

One way to remedy the situation is an oil import fee that would raise the price of oil to spur domestic production and set a price floor to reassure bankers who have lost on exploration loans since the oil price crash last year.

As chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, Bentsen has jurisdiction over taxes, including an oil import fee, but he says no such tariff will ever become law without the support of Reagan and would require winning a tough fight in the Senate.

The Reagan administration and Northeastern senators oppose such a fee, but for different reasons. Reagan's budget officers are committed to holding the line against any new tax, and the Northeastern senators fear increased home heating oil costs.

Hearings continue behind closed doors

WASHINGTON (AP) — The congressional Iran-Contra committees questioned former CIA official Joe Fernandez privately today about his role in aiding Nicaraguan rebels during the time that U.S. government military assistance was banned.

Fernandez, the former CIA station chief in Costa Rica, was named in testimony Thursday as having met with Contra military leaders during the 1984-86 aid ban.

The House and Senate investigating committees agreed to question Fernandez privately to shield his identity and thus protect him from possible harm from enemies he made during his spy agency career.

Committee officials said public hearings would resume later in the day with testimony from Assistant Secretary of State Elliott Abrams.

Fernandez's name came up at the hearing Thursday, when Lewis Tambs, former ambassador to Costa Rica, testified that he asked the former CIA official to contact Contra leaders. The request was part of a U.S. effort to support Contra fighters along the so-called "southern front" and encourage them to drive deeper inside Nicaragua. Fernandez worked under the alias of Tomas Castillo.

Tambs said he received his assignment when he was sent to Costa Rica two years ago by Lt. Col. Oliver North of the National Security Council staff, but he said Fernandez "also received instructions from Washington" to make contact with the Contra commandantes in the summer of 1985.

The investigating committees also heard testimony that Abrams, assistant secretary of state for inter-American affairs, had detailed knowledge of the construction of a secret airfield in Costa Rica as early as September 1985, and had deeper involvement in the entire Contra aid affair than he has acknowledged.

Local hospital board soon will grow

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

The board of directors of the Midland County Hospital District will expand from five to seven members after House and Senate approval of the body's reorganization bill was finalized Tuesday in Austin.

The bill now sits on Gov. Bill Clement's desk for approval, Frank Cahoon, board president, said Thursday.

In not vetoing substitute House Bill No. 2123, Clements will be giving MCHD directors four options for expanding their five-member board, Cahoon said.

Earlier efforts by community activists to curb the bill's passage through the legislature were unsuccessful.

Permian Basin League of United Latin American Citizens member Edia Hernandez has said she had lined up a vast number of representatives and senators willing to "tag," or stifle, the bill's passage.

LULAC members were upset with the district's proposed system of reorganization because it failed to call solely for a seven single-member district plan of reorganization that they support.

Reasons for the bill's passage in the face of LULAC opposition were twofold.

Firstly, LULAC was unaware that a chairman of a legislative committee could — and did — refuse a tag and pass a bill on for full House consideration, LULAC member Joanne DeWitt said Thursday.

Secondly, Rep. Tom Craddick, R-Midland, and Sen. Bill Sims, D-San Angelo, lobbied in their respective arenas to push for the bill's passage, Cahoon said.

Parts of Oklahoma left floating by 11th day of rain

Associated Press

An 11th straight day of rain in Oklahoma today kept up to 1,000 people from their homes as a ribbon of thunderstorms blamed for two deaths caused tens of millions of dollars in damage in the Midwest.

A state of emergency remained in effect in Oklahoma, where 6 to 9 inches of rain fell in the central part of the state Thursday, after moist air from the Gulf of Mexico clashed with cool northern and western air along a 1,000-mile front.

Thunderstorms in Texas on Thursday spawned eight tornadoes as well as baseball-size hail at Knickerbocker and 70 mph wind gusts at Wills Point, while in Wisconsin lightning hit at least 10 people, seriously injuring several of them.

The rain was so heavy in a Dallas suburb Thursday night that it sent the roof crashing down on an office party, injuring six people. Three were hospitalized in serious condition.

"We have been on the edge of a very potent situation for about a week," said Skip Ely, a National Weather Service meteorologist in Fort Worth, Texas. "Late-May storms are real juicy, like this one."

Some roads and bridges remained closed in Oklahoma, where a 2-year-old girl died Thursday when her family's car was washed off a road, and a 14-year-old boy drowned in a flooded creek Wednesday.

In central and southwest Oklahoma, muddy water from swollen rivers and creeks drove about 1,000 residents from their homes. The forecast called for 2 more inches of rain today.

"It won't be as heavy as we have had in the past few days," said meteorologist John Victory. "But even light rain will hurt."

State Civil Defense Director Norris Price said damage in Oklahoma could rise as high as $20 million.

In Iowa, an earthen dike burst in Hamburg, sending waters from the record-high Nishnabotna River swirling into the town of about 1,600 people. The National Guard spent the day sandbagging, patrolling and assisting with evacuations, said Lt. Col. Jerry Gorden.

Elsewhere in Iowa, conditions were starting to return to normal, said Ellen Gordon of the Office of Disaster Services, but state officials estimated agricultural damage alone at $3.6 million.

Reports from the four hardest-hit counties in the southwest tip of Iowa showed that 20 percent to 30 percent of the area's corn and soybean crops were harmed.

"The administration has gathered at one person's house. They couldn't get into our school," she said. "The kids were supposed to practice for graduation services this morning, but they couldn't get in."

Forecasters posted flash flood watches through the morning for much of Central and North Texas and warned residents along the middle and upper Gulf Coast to be on the watch for severe thunderstorms expected to cause rough seas and dangerous lightning.

South Central and Southeast sections of the state were also under severe thunderstorm watches this morning.

In other developments:

—Rep. Charles Rangel, D-N.Y., chairman of the House select committee on narcotics, said the Justice Department and CIA are trying to thwart his panel's efforts to learn whether there is a link between Contra supply flights and drug smuggling. He said Attorney General Edwin Meese III has refused to allow Drug Enforcement Agency officials to brief the committee, and the CIA has refused to provide information.

—The Los Angeles Times reported today that the CIA has suspended a covert operations officer who used agency helicopters to carry explosives and other supplies to the Contras in early 1986. The clandestine agent, sources said, was the "chief of base" supervising CIA operations in support of the Contras in Honduras.

Tambs told the congressional committees Thursday that the order to arrange permission for construction of the clandestine airstrip near Santa Elena had come from North through Fernandez. The airfield was to be used as an emergency landing strip and refueling site for planes on airdrop missions to resupply the Contras.

Fernandez was recalled to Washington late last year, disciplined and forced to take early retirement from the CIA because of his active role in support of the Contras. Tambs said the administration appears to be making lower-level people scapegoats for policy made at a higher level.

Iran-Contra Affair

"What I find to be disconcerting, to put it mildly, is to see officers who were carrying out what they believed to be orders from their legitimate superiors now ... seeing their careers sacrificed," he told the committees.

According to earlier testimony by retired Air Force Col. Robert C. Dutton, who managed the Contra air resupply operation last year, the help of Fernandez had been essential to the operation.

Tambs said Abrams was at a meeting in Panama in early September 1985 also attended by other members of a Central American policymaking group, and had discussed plans for the clandestine airstrip with him privately at that time.

In testimony to the presidential Tower Commission, however, Abrams said he couldn't remember when he first learned about the airstrip, professed only vague knowledge and said he did not know who was building.

"I think he has a lot to explain," said Sen. Paul Sarbanes, D-Md. "Apparently there are some direct conflicts, and his role in all of this is emerging larger and larger all the time."

Sen. Warren Rudman, R-N.H., without naming Abrams, said other previous testimony, including some taken under oath, was at odds with Tambs' statements, which he said had been corroborated and were "very truthful."

"I will tell you, Ambassador Tambs, that when the depositions of certain people you've referred to become public as to what they specifically said was their knowledge and what they did and who they told, I think that you will probably burn up," Rudman said.

ABORT

Washington, who registered a vote against the bill, along with Sens. Kent Caperton, D-Bryan, and Bob Glasgow, D-Stephenville, said he agreed to the compromise because "the ladies with pro-choice felt it was a workable compromise they could live with."

Lyon and Washington effusively praised each other as they endorsed the compromise on the Senate floor. "I know some people who are pro-choice may not like it, but many of them believe it's a reasonable compromise," Lyon said.

Sen. Eddie Bernice Johnson, D-Dallas, drew applause from the gallery when she criticized the predominantly-male Legislature for interfering with a woman's control over her body. "There's no woman that takes abortion lightly," said Ms. Johnson, a registered nurse.

"Many of the people who would vote today (to restrict abortions) wouldn't vote to take care of those children in these hospitals," she added.

Sen. Judith Zaffirini, D-Laredo, said she supported the compromise, although she still believes life begins at conception. "Abortion, whether you're pro-choice, pro-life, call it what you will, it is not a woman's issue. We're talking about a human life."

She said the state has a right to regulate abortions to protect unborn children. "A late-term abortion deals with a viable fetus," she said. "A viable fetus is an unborn child. We're no longer talking about a decision between a woman and a doctor. We're talking about a decision between a woman and a doctor and I don't care how many other people, and an unborn child."

Gov. Bill Clements said he would examine the bill before deciding whether to sign it. "I strongly supported Senator Lyon's bill from the beginning. I hope that that's the way it comes out."

Lyon said he thinks the governor will go along with the compromise as the best deal he could make.

Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby allowed the bill to come up on the Senate floor despite his opposition to abortion regulation. "There is nothing more personally offensive to me than government regulation of abortion," he said.

GULF

He told the lawmakers that "we intend to keep the Congress fully informed and we will take no action to implement the protective regime with Kuwait until the president is satisfied that we will be able to do it properly in consultation with Congress."

Sen. Claiborne Pell, D-R.I., chairman of the Senate panel, told the hearing that "no one should have any doubt that we are operating in a war zone, where imminent involvement in hostilities is a clear possibility."

"By wrapping the American flag around Kuwaiti tankers while knowing the enmity of Iran for Kuwait, the ally of Iraq, I believe we are headed for trouble," Pell said.

Murphy repeated the administration concern that Iranian attack on neutral shipping in the gulf could impede the flow of oil to the United States and its allies, and also expressed concern about growing Soviet influence in the Persian Gulf.

Under the agreement reached between the White House and the Congress, Byrd said earlier, the administration will provide Capitol Hill with details of its reflagging and escort operations within seven days of congressional approval of the agreement.

The agreement is intended, in part, to stem congressional demands for formal "consultation" under the War Powers Act.

The administration's plan to put 11 tankers under the U.S. flag, with American captains aboard, has raised concerns in Congrss that the United States might be drawn into the Iran-Iraq war, now in its seventh year.

Initially, White House and Pentagon officials said the program to place American captains and the American flag on Kuwaiti ships and to protect them with American forces probably would begin in early June.

Pentagon officials, speaking Thursday on condition they not be identified, said re-flagging the Kuwaiti vessels was continuing but the U.S. flag would not fly over those ships until the Navy was ready to escort and protect them — a process that could take several weeks.

"We've got to do more work on the military side, but we've also got to do more explaining to Congress," a source said.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater, however, denied there had been any slippage in the timing of the move. He said the re-flagging would start early next month.

"There's no timetable or deadline for the re-flagging. We have been discussing this with the Kuwaitis for weeks. It will start when we're ready," Fitzwater said.

"We expect we would be ready to escort tankers in the next week or two. We have said all along (we would start in) early June, and I expect tha," Fitzwater sai.

Secretary of State George P. Shultz told reporters Thursday night that he did not know of any decision to delay the "flagging."

He described the process as "somewhat laborious," involving inspection of the tankers to make sure they meet U.S. Coast Guard standards and finding captains to take charge.

"So there's a process under way," Shultz said. "I haven't heard about any delay in it."

"The United States has no intention and will not get directly involved in the Iran-Iraq war," Shultz said. "We will not go to war with either party.'

In other developments:

— The leader of the U.S. team investigating Iraq's May 17 attack on the frigate USS Stark said the Americans had disagreements with Iraqi officials but he expected the joint inquiry to be finished today. Rear Adm. David Rogers, deputy director of operations for the Joint Chiefs of Staff, would not describe differences that had arisen in probing the assault that killed 37 U.S. sailors.

— Military sources in Washington said th Iraqis had not permitted the investigative team to talk to the pilot who fired on the Stark, but did answer all the questions it had for the pilot. Iraq says the airman thought he was attacking an Iranian ship.

BENTSEN

"They still remember the bumper sticker: 'Drive 80 (mph), Let the Yankees Freeze in the Dark!'" said the Texas Democrat. He said if only they would go to Dallas to see what the decline in oil production has done to Texas.

Bentsen has said he would try to include an exemption for heating oil in any import fee that comes out of his committee. As for the administration, he said he hopes the Stark incident will shed some light on their deliberations.

The U.S. Navy was in the gulf not only to defend continued flow of its 5.5 percent of Arab OPEC oil, but also to ensure that the countries of Western Europe and Japan get their oil, much more of which comes from the Persian Gulf.

"Germany should have some planes over there," Bentsen said.

Japan should also be spending more on its military than the current 1 percent, "there are plenty of ways around that," he said, suggesting one way would be to send it straight to the United States.

MCHD

There was initial opposition in the House committee where the bill came up for a vote, but Craddick "told them what the situation was" and the opposition removed their tag, the Midland representative said in a telephone interview this morning.

MCHD directors must decide the method of redistricting by a deadline set to expire 120 days before the next election, which is scheduled for April 1988, the bill states.

Provisions in the measure give directors the option of having as few as four or as many as seven single-member positions — with any leftover spots designated as at-large positions.

LULAC threatened the MCHD with a lawsuit — similar to one the minority rights group filed against the Midland Independent School District — if directors failed to call for anything but seven single-member districts in their reorganization bill.

While that plan is one option open to directors, a fewer number of single-member slots also are a possibility under the bill.

Directors have maintained they needed more time to study plans to expand.

"Until they declare the method of election formally we're pretty much stuck. I wish we could have stopped it," Ms. DeWitt said.

Midland Memorial Hospital trustees and hospital district directors voted Thursday at their respective monthly meetings to send a joint thank-you resolution to the Republican representative and the Democrat senator for their efforts in support of the bill's passage.

"It turned out well for the people of Midland. Now we can do what we think is best for the hospital," said Cahoon.

But Ms. Hernandez vowed: "This is not the end of it. We're still convinced the constitution is on our side.

"All that board has succeeded in doing is making the citizens wonder what they have to hide," Ms. Hernandez said.

Clarification

In Wednesday's report of the outcome of a Midland medical malpractice trial, it was reported that Dr. William McGavran III testified under cross-examination that he charged $200 for the first hour of services as an expert witness and $100 per hour thereafter.

It is common practice for fees to be charged by expert witnesses in such medical cases.

Reagan urged to increase states' role in AIDS battle

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's domestic policy advisers are urging him to press states to start routinely giving AIDS tests to hospital patients, prisoners, marriage license applicants and others, sources say.

The Cabinet-level Domestic Policy Council, at a meeting Thursday that Reagan attended, also recommended that the federal government take steps to make AIDS blood tests routine at Veteran's Administration hospitals, federal clinics and federal prisons, said administration sources who insisted on anonymity.

The Domestic Policy Council reached a consensus on the issue by saying the expanded AIDS testing should be "routine," but not mandatory, the sources said.

U.S. Surgeon General C. Everett Koop and the Public Health Service had vigorously opposed mandatory AIDS tests, except for immigrants.

Under the blueprint presented to the president, state and local authorities would be strongly urged to make AIDS tests a routine part of hospital admissions and marriage license applications, but a person could refuse to undergo the test if he or she wished.

AIDS tests also would be recommended for patients at clinics treating sexually transmitted diseases and for those in state prisons and local jails.

The president is expected to approve the recommendations.

Reagan may outline his AIDS policy and the testing recommendations in a speech Sunday at a fund-raising dinner for the American Foundation for AIDS Research.

Presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said last week that Reagan "would probably look favorably" on mandatory testing for marriage license applicants and immigrants.

Reagan called AIDS "one of the most serious health problems facing the world" when he approved a national commission to suggest ways to cope with it earlier this month.

Koop has argued that mandatory tests would discourage carriers of the deadly AIDS virus from coming forward.

Koop had voiced concerns at a Domestic Policy Council meeting Wednesday that the blood tests are not 100 percent accurate and that false positive results could cause serious harm to the persons involved.

Secretary of Education William J. Bennett called in April for widespread mandatory tests. He subsequently softened that stance by calling for routine testing of hospital patients and others, with the understanding that a person could refuse to undergo the test if he or she wished.

That switch — from mandatory to routine — was sufficient to allow the Domestic Policy Council to reach a consensus on the AIDS recommendations, and Koop and Bennett shook hands conspicuously at the end of the meeting, the sources said.

Gary Bauer, the head of Reagan's Office of Policy Development and a stalwart conservative, also argued strongly that the administration should encourage routine AIDS testing to help check the spread of the disease.

The Domestic Policy Council decided, the sources said, that the Justice Department should develop a plan for routine testing of federal prisoners, the Department of Health and Human Services a plan for routine testing of immigrants, and the White House Office of Policy Development a plan for routine tests at VA hospitals and other federal clinics.

AIDS, or acquired immune deficiency syndrome, attacks the body's immune system, rendering it incapable of resisting other diseases and infections.

Some 35,000 Americans have been stricken by AIDS since 1981, and more than 20,000 have died. There is no known cure for the contagious disease, which is transmitted primarily through semen, blood and other bodily fluids. Most victims have been homosexual or bisexual males or intravenous drug abusers who shared needles.

The incurable condition is believed to be caused by an unusual virus, now called human immunodeficiency virus or HIV.

Health officials believe 1 million to 1.5 million Americans have been exposed to the virus.

A person who tests positive for antibodies to the AIDS virus, an indication of exposure, has a 20 percent to 30 percent chance of developing AIDS over a five-year period, according to the federal Centers for Disease Control.

The blood tests determine whether a person has formed antibodies against the virus, and thus whether the person was infected by the virus at one time. The tests do not tell whether a person still is infected, has AIDS or will develop it.

Cuban's defection 'huge intelligence coup'

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration, exultant over the defection of Cuba's second-ranking defense official, is describing it as perhaps the biggest U.S. intelligence coup in the 28-years of the Cuban revolution.

Brig. Gen. Rafael del Pino Diaz, deputy chief of the Cuban Defense Ministry, flew a small plan to Key West Naval Air Station in Florida on Thursday with his wife and three children.

Justice Department spokesman Patrick Korten said del Pino, formerly chief of the Cuban Air Force, requested asylum on arrival and was undergoing questioning.

Perry Rivkind, district director of the Immigration and Naturalization Service in Miami, said the family has been paroled into the United States, a status permitting them to remain here indefinitely without passports or visas.

"If this guy is who he says he is, this is the biggest intelligence coup since (Fidel) Castro took power," said an administration official who spoke only on condition of anonymity.

"This is a very important guy," said another official, who added that del Pino is believed to be one of the founders and organizers of the post revolutionary military establishment in Cuba.

There have been several high-ranking defectors from Cuba in recent years, most of whom have remained largely anonymous out of fear that Cuban authorities might retaliate against their families if they go public.

The Reagan administration had almost nothing to say officially about del Pino, aside from providing his name and rank. His motives for defecting were not disclosed. Privately, however, officials acknowledged that del Pino's flight represented a rare piece of good news at a time when the Iran-Contra hearings have been keeping the administration on the defensive.

The only other known Cuban military official who fled to the United States was Air Force Lt. Eduardo Guerra Jimenez. He left Cuba in a MiG-17 fighter on Oct. 5, 1969, but 10 years later returned to Cuba after hijacking a U.S. jetliner.

Pentagon officials who asked not to be identified said del Pino's plane, a small Cessna, was picked up on U.S. military radar at Tyndall Air Force Base, Fla., at 1:42 p.m. EDT.

Two F-16 fighter jets were scrambled to check out the plane and were in the process of moving into visual contact with the aircraft when the Key West Naval Air Station established radio contact with the Cessna. The naval station said the Cessna reported it wanted to land at Key West. The two F-16s remained in the area until the Cessna landed, the officials said.

The plane landed on Boca Chica Key about 2 p.m. EDT, according to Art Skelley, manager of the Key West International Airport. Skelley said the plane was an American-made, twin-engine Cessna 402.

Del Pino was able to take off in the aircraft because of his senior rank and by saying he was taking his family on an aerial jaunt around the Cuban island, unidentified officials told The Washington Post in today's editions.

Enrique Baloyra, a University of Miami professor, said del Pino is believed to be in his mid-50s and as a young man was an opponent of the rightist dictatorship ousted by Castro in 1959.

Baloyra said del Pino joined Castro's insurrection in the late 1950s and also played a role in defeating the CIA-sponsored Cuban rebels who invaded Cuba at the Bay of Pigs in 1961.

Boys out-spelled in national bee; Female is new champion

WASHINGTON (AP) — Girls ruled the 60th National Spelling Bee with a 13-year-old junior wordsmith capturing the coveted title in a contest that, in the end, was all female.

The trend became obvious in the seventh round when girls outnumbered the boys nine to six. After that fray, in which "meerschaum" and "polysemous" did some of the boys in, only four female spellers remained.

The new national spelling champion is Stephanie Petit, a dark-haired, eighth-grader from Bethel Park, Pa., who successfully spelled "dyscalculia" and "staphylococci."

The runner-up, Rachel E. Nussbaum, 14, of Ithaca, N.Y., credited the female success to a theory that girls are more adept than boys in certain fields.

"Some people say girls are just smarter, but I think that's not true," said the daughter of two college professors. "Maybe girls are a little smarter at things that have to do with languages, like spelling."

For her victory, Stephanie earned a gold trophy cup, $1,500 plus prizes and a national television appearance.

She and the other 184 spellers were meeting today with President Reagan and his wife, Nancy, following a White House tour.

"I can't believe this is me," Stephanie told reporters as they mobbed the stage to get her reaction to the triumph.

Stephanie, a straight-A student who enjoys tennis and plays violin and piano, said she studied spelling every day, including six hours each Saturday and Sunday. But after the win, she said: "This is it. I'm done with spelling."

The championship came down to the correct spelling of two medical terms.

Rachel incorrectly spelled "dyscalculia," meaning an impairment of mathematical ability due to an organic brain condition. She began the word with the letters "di."

Stephanie corrected Rachel's error, prompting shrieks from the dozens of spellers sitting cross-legged on the hotel ballroom floor. She then spelled the winning word, which is the name of a bacterium infecting the skin and mucous membranes. It was the 877th word of the contest.

Stephanie, who represented The Pittsburgh Press, said she knew she had won when Dr. Alex J. Cameron, an associate professor of English at the University of Dayton in Ohio and the official word pronouncer, intoned the final word.

Stephanie Petit

"I did a science project in microbiology this year, so I knew it," she said.

To earn the cup she also had to spell "sheepishly," "parrotlet," a small South American parrot; "chogset," a striped or spotted fish of North America; "epinephrine," a drug used to treat bronchial asthma; "chatoyant," having a changeable luster or color; "postcibal," occurring after a meal; "oenotherapy," use of wine for therapeutic purposes; and "guilloche," an architectural ornament. She missed on "tjaele," a Swedish word for frozen ground, in the last round, but so did Rachel.

All but the last round were on a miss-and-out basis. In the final round, the champion must correct the word missed by the runner-up and then successfully spell another word.

Pennsylvania fielded the largest delegation this year, 15 youngsters. The winner last year also was from Pennsylvania — Jon Pennington of Shiremanstown.

Material for the first four rounds was taken from the practice book "Words of the Champions" and from regional spelling lists available to the contestants.

Bakker's give 'Nightline' record ratings

NEW YORK (AP) — A live interview with Jim and Tammy Bakker this week gave ABC's "Nightline" its highest ratings in the program's seven-year history, according to overnight Nielsen figures from 12 major cities.

ABC estimated that 20 million people watched Wednesday night's broadcast, which was the Bakkers' most extensive interview since they left their PTL evangelical empire amid a sexual scandal.

The broadcast received a 15.4 rating and a 42 share. A rating point equals 1 percent of all households with televisions in the areas surveyed. The share is the percentage of TV sets in use at the time.

"Nightline's" previous record overnight rating, a 12.3, came on April 15, 1986, the day after U.S. planes bombed Libya.

'Tainted' blood recipients hunted

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Pentagon is launching what it calls a "look-back" program in an attempt to identify transfusion recipients who received blood from servicemen later diagnosed as having AIDS.

The Pentagon said Thursday that the program will focus on transfusions before routine screening of blood donations for the AIDS virus began in 1985.

In a statement, the Pentagon said the program will begin with a review of all blood donation records for personnel who have now tested positively for AIDS exposure. Recipient of the blood "will then be contacted and offered testing," it said.

Tax veto threat renewed

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan says the Gramm-Rudman deficit-reduction law has put a lid on the federal deficit this year, even though the budget does not meet the targets set under the statute.

Reagan, in a speech Thursday, complained that Democrats in Congress are trying to rearrange his budget priorities by cutting his proposed military budget and spending more on domestic programs. He said the changes could lead to calls for higher taxes.

"It is time to say 'no' to the free spenders. I will veto any legislation that raises the American people's taxes," Reagan told the National Association of Manufacturers.

New charges face Marine

WASHINGTON (AP) — New charges will face a Marine embassy guard accused of improper fraternization with Soviet women when pretrial proceedings resume next month.

Defense lawyers for Staff Sgt. Robert S. Stufflebeam, 25, of Bloomington, Ill., on Thursday obtained a continuance in the case until June 8. But following the recess, the Marine Corps released a new "charge sheet" against Stufflebeam.

The sheet said Stufflebeam now stands accused of nine violations of the Uniform Code of Military Justice, up from the four counts lodged against him on April 30. The new charges allege that Stufflebeam met Soviet women on three occasions at hotel bars while posted to Moscow and in each instance, left the bar to travel to an apartment "for sexual intercourse."

AIDS drug firm accused

WASHINGTON (AP) — The lawyer for a California company seeking wider distribution of a drug it says can inhibit the onset of AIDS has denied allegations that it tried to sidestep the Food and Drug Administration.

The allegations were made Thursday by a New York City physician at a hearing of the House Commerce subcommittee on oversight and investigations.

Dr. Bernard Bihari, director of the Kings County Addictive Disease Hospital in Brooklyn, said representatives of Viratech Inc. tried to encourage him to use the drug ribavirin even though it is not FDA-approved for AIDS treatment.

Harvey D. Myerson, a Washington lawyer for Viratek, said in an interview that the "company has never, to the best of our knowledge, encouraged physicians" to use ribavirin to treat AIDS patients.

Committee staffers said the company will be allowed to present its side of the story in detail at a later hearing.

Robot probes sunken ship to determine worth

HATTERAS, N.C. (AP) — Scientists fearful the corroded wreck of the USS Monitor could collapse on itself sent a deep-diving robot to determine if the famous Civil War ironclad at the bottom of the ocean since 1862 can be salvaged.

"We're developing a sense of urgency," project director Ed Miller said Thursday as the Deep Drone made the first of a series of 220-foot dives. "If we don't act now, there will be even less to work with for the next generation."

The Navy tug Apache and a team of marine scientists, engineers and archaeologists are studying the wreck 16 miles off Cape Hatteras in waters once known as the graveyard of the Atlantic because of fierce storms that sank many ships.

The $1.8 million project, which includes a survey of artifacts from the Monitor and runs through June 9, is sponsored by the Navy and the National Oceanographic and Atmospheric Administration.

On Thursday, the Deep Drone, a sophisticated robot that retrieved parts of the space shuttle Challenger, carried video and still cameras down to the 170-foot-long, 1,000-ton Union vessel, which sank in a storm while being towed on New Year's Eve 1862.

As the Eastport International Inc. robot reached the wreck, video images were transmitted back to the crew and members of the media aboard the Apache. Visibility was poor, however, and worsened when the robot stirred up sand.

Scientists said they expect later pictures will be much clearer because the Deep Drone will not touch the ship or the ocean floor. Unlike previous trips to the Monitor site, no divers are expected to visit the wreck.

New disease-carrying mosquito spreading north

By WARREN E. LEARY
AP Science Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A new disease-carrying mosquito with a taste for human blood can survive harsh winters in the Midwestern United States, a finding scientists say could mean the pest will make itself at home in northern states as it has in the South.

The aggressive Asian tiger mosquito, a species first spotted in this country in 1985, is spreading from the South up through the Midwest and eastern United States, and cold weather is not a barrier to the invader, scientists said Thursday.

Researchers at the University of Notre Dame and the federal Centers for Disease Control said the tiger mosquito, called Aedes albopictus, lays eggs that can withstand winters as cold as those in northern Indiana and Ohio.

The North American strains of the mosquito, which apparently came to the United States in imported used tires, appear to be the types found in the more temperate parts of Asia rather than tropical areas, they said.

Cold kills adults and larvae, but the insects sustain themselves in an area by leaving eggs that hatch in the spring, scientists said.

Known to endure the harsh winters of northern Japan and China, these strains therefore could reach as far north as Minnesota and Michigan, the researchers said.

Health officials are concerned about the insects because they are potential carriers of viral diseases. In Asia, they carry dengue fever, a sometimes fatal disease that causes painful joint inflammation, and other maladies.

Dengue occurs in the United States, such as an outbreak in south Texas last year, and could become more common if it has a good insect carrier, one of the researchers, Dr. William Hawley of the University of Notre Dame, said.

Laboratory tests also indicate the tiger mosquito might be a good carrier of different types of encephalitis, including the California and LaCross varieties, he said. Encephalitis causes inflammation of the brain, which can result in retardation or death.

The tiger mosquitos, which prefer humans to other hosts as sources of blood, are so named because of the distinct black and white stripes on their legs and a white stripe down the top of their middle sections.

In a report published in the May 29 issue of the journal Science, scientists said tiger mosquito eggs survived to hatch after wintering in controlled locations as far north as South Bend, Ind., where temperatures reached as low as minus 7 degrees Fahrenheit some days.

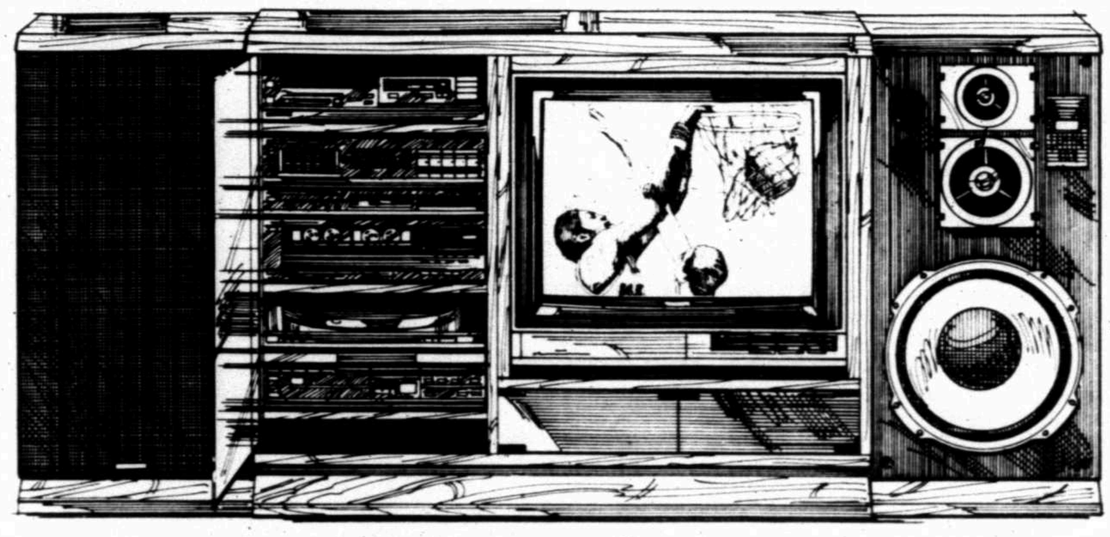

Hawley and a Notre Dame colleague, Dr. George Craig Jr., said all of the eggs from tropical strains of Aedes mosquitos died during the winter tests. However, of the five North American and two Japanese strains tested, in no case was the mortality due to subfreezing temperatures greater than 22 percent.

"Our results imply that this northward expansion is not a transient phenomenon, but the beginning of the permanent establishment of Aedes albopictus at these latitudes," wrote the researchers, including Paul Reiter of the CDC and Notre Dame graduate students Robert Copeland and Charles Pumpuni.

Hawley said in a telephone interview Thursday the mosquito has been found in at least 12 states, so far: Texas, Louisiana, Florida, Illinois, Indiana, Tennessee, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Missouri, Kentucky and Ohio.

"There is a good possibility they are up through the mid-Atlantic states as far as Virginia and the District of Columbia.

Tuesday, May 29, 1787
PHILADELPHIA TODAY

The City Street Commissioners met, all six present. Commissioners Ozeas and Richards were chosen "to direct the rebuilding of the chimney of a negro house, lately removed out of Filbert Street."

Among other actions, the board approved printing a handbill and putting an ad in the Packet warning draymen and carters to keep their carts, drays, wagons and horses off the sidewalks and not block intersections.

CONFEDERATION TODAY

The same four states and individual delegates as yesterday (New York, Pennsylvania, Virginia, North Carolina, and Dane of Massachusetts, and Kean of South Carolina) attended. The Congress had last had a quorum on May 11, and no one expected it to have one again until the Federal Convention ended, but several delegates patiently stayed on in New York.

CONVENTION TODAY

John Dickinson, Delaware, and Elbridge Gerry, Massachusetts, took their seats.

George Wythe reported more rules for the convention session.

"That no member be absent from the House so as to interrupt the representation of the State without leave.

"That Committees do not sit whilst the House shall be, or ought to be sitting.

"That no copy be taken of any entry on the journal during the sitting of the House without the leave of the House.

"That members only be permitted to inspect the journal.

"That nothing spoken in the House be printed, or otherwise published, or communicated without leave.

"That a motion to reconsider a matter, which had been determined by a majority, may be made with leave unanimously given — on the same day in which the vote passed, but otherwise, not without one day's previous notice; in which last case, if the House agree to the reconsideration some future day shall be assigned for that purpose."

Edmund Randolph and Charles Pinckney each proposed a plan of government, and the Convention decided to refer both to itself meeting as a committee of the whole.

DELEGATES TODAY

William Samuel Johnson's stage left Wentworth's very early in the morning so that he arrived in New York early. His expenses were 3 pounds and 13 shillings.

George Washington "dined at home," after which he accompanied Mrs. Morris to the benefit concert of a Mr. Juhan. An apologetic Charles Willson Peale wrote asking him to pose for another portrait. (Peale completed seven life portraits of him.) The general agreed, whereupon Peale suggested, "by bringing my Pallette and Pencils to Mr. Morris' that you might sett at your leisure and that if any interruptions by Visitors or business took place I would wait convenient to you."

John Dickinson wrote "My dear Polly" (his wife of nearly 17 years, Mary Norris), to report a pleasant journey and send his "tenderest love to our precious children."

James McHenry wrote to his wife of three years, Margaret Allison Caldwell, "We are beginning to enter seriously upon the business of the Convention, so that I shall have but little time to give my Peggy —"

LOOKING BACK
The Course Charted

At first glance, the Convention didn't do much today — adopted a few additional rules, received a couple of schemes for strengthening the Confederation, referred the plans to a committee of the whole, and adjourned. But these few actions in large part determined the course the Convention would follow and the destination it would arrive at.

Secrecy contributed significantly to the work of the Convention. There were no daily leaks about what the Convention was doing and what the individual delegates thought about each issue. When the Constitution was finished, the various alternatives to each of its provisions had not been publicized or attacked by the press. Nor were individual delegates locked into a position that they may have wished to change because their earlier position had been widely publicized. While the general outlines of the Convention plan became known (a government divided into Executive, Judicial and Legislative, a bicameral legislature), the details of its various provisions were kept remarkably confidential. The 55 delegates could and did keep their mouths shut.

But the most significant action were the referrals to a committee of the whole of the Virginia and Pinckney plans. With these referrals, the Convention committed itself to a new government, not a patched-up version of the Articles of Confederation.

Older Americans Act of '65 renewed with new programs

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's network of community services for senior citizens was renewed in a lopsided House vote that added new programs for frail elderly people living at home and for long-term care facilities.

The Older Americans Act, signed into law in 1965, was reauthorized Thursday on a 379-8 vote. The Senate has yet to act on the reauthorization.

Among the services provided under the act are senior centers, meals for delivery to shut-ins, group meals, transportation, legal assistance, employment opportunities and research activities.

Rep. Dale Kildee, D-Mich., chairman of the House Education and Labor subcommittee on human resources, called the act "one of the most non-partisan programs this Congress has seen. It successfully enables the elderly to continue to be active participants in their communities."

However, spending this year on Older Americans Act programs is only about $1.2 billion and outlays for many activities are expected to remain lower than the full authorized levels. Actual spending will be determined later this year during the appropriations process.

The House authorized several new programs to begin in 1988, including $25 million for in-home services for frail elderly people who otherwise would have to live in institutions, $20 million for a separate and expanded ombudsman program for residents of long-term care facilities, and $25 million for states with special needs to shore up services in those areas.

In addition, the reauthorization bill contains a one-time $25 million outreach program in 1989 to identify low-income senior citizens who are eligible for food stamps and other federal benefits.

The House budget, which has not yet been reconciled with its Senate counterpart, contains money for the frail elderly program and the 5 percent annual inflation adjustment. But it does not specifically provide for the special needs or outreach programs authorized Thursday.

Among the amendments adopted before the final vote:

— States receiving money under the act must set up elderly abuse protection and prevention programs, with $5 million authorized to help them get started.

— Demonstration projects designed to help and protect senior citizens who receive home care would get $2 million in 1989 and 1990.

JFK would have been 70 today

By BARRY SCHWEID

An Analysis

WASHINGTON (AP) — Had he lived, John F. Kennedy would be celebrating his 70th birthday today, and the world might be a different place.

Kennedy set out to change things. His election in 1960 marked the end of the Eisenhower era and the coming of age of a new, energetic and optimistic generation of Americans.

Critics have suggested the changes offered by Kennedy were mostly a matter of his Camelot style.

Indeed, the young president proposed no new radical departures in foreign policy. His promise was to take a fresh look, to inject the ideas of those brainy folks around him who became known derisively as "the best and the brightest," and to perform on the world stage with confidence.

Kennedy was assassinated in November 1963 and we are left to speculate what might have been if he completed his term and was re-elected to another four years, as Kennedy's growing popularity suggested would occur in 1964.

It's anybody's guess. But his temperament and what he experienced in 34 months in the White House suggest Kennedy might not have been driven to seek a military victory in Vietnam and Cambodia, with tremendous American casualties.

The disaster at the Bay of Pigs, and the accommodation later with Khrushchev, indicate he was a leader more inclined to pragmatic solutions than to ideology.

Kennedy and the Soviet leader might have made an interesting duo, butting heads in some parts of the world but quietly co-existing where national interests were not at stake.

Kennedy probably would have tried to strengthen U.S. ties to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization allies. His views on Western defenses were as apt to emphasize improving conventional forces as to rely on a nuclear deterrent.

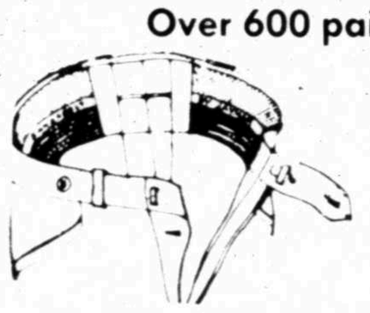

Always ready to consider new ideas, and spurred by forward-looking advisers, Kennedy also was bound to reach beyond the superpower conflict to focus on Asia's rising economic strength and on Third World problems.

The Alliance for Progress and the Peace Corps were two Kennedy programs pointed in the Jeffersonian direction of a benevolent America that less fortunate nations should be urged to emulate.

Idealism did not die with Kennedy. His successor, Lyndon Johnson, invoked the Great Society at home. Civil rights leader Martin Luther King Jr. and others invoked the American Dream to shatter segregation.

Kennedy most likely would have projected that idealism abroad, with economic assistance to the poorer nations and political pressure on authoritarian leaders.

Donovan's 'ordeal' shows legal need

The acquittal of former Labor Secretary Raymond Donovan, after an enormously costly nine-month trial and two years of pretrial legal maneuvering, underlines why the presumption of innocence is indispensable to a fair judicial process.

Donovan was forced from the Cabinet after his indictment on fraud and grand-larceny charges because, in large measure, the presumption of innocence was discarded. This is too often the case when high-ranking government officials are accused of misconduct.

After the charges were brought against Donovan, many observers succumbed to the bias that his firm, Schiavone Construction Co., was guilty of corruption, simply because it was an Italian contracting concern from New Jersey. "Would an innocent guy need all that help?" Bronx District Attorney Mario Merola arrogantly asserted to reporters in a reference to the defendant's team of lawyers.

After weighing the evidence, a jury promptly concluded that Donovan and his business partners were innocent of any wrongdoing. The jury foreman, among others, said the prosecution's case was so full of holes that indictments never should have been filed in the first place.

Of course one must not forget the argument against having an indicted person continue to serve in a government position. That effectively puts a cloud over all the official's actions. Rather than forcing the indicted person to resign, which might be construed as an indication of guilt, a better alternative would be to put the official on suspension until the case against him is resolved.

In Donovan's case, the prosecutor had tried to show that Donovan cheated New York City of $7.4 million on a subway construction contract by charging a minority-owned firm for equipment it leased from Donovan's company. That procedure itself was later approved by the U.S. Transportation Department.

One could argue that all's well that ends well, except that Donovan's character has been savaged, perhaps irreparably. He will not be rejoining the Reagan Cabinet. Nor can he expect to recoup the estimated $15 million in legal fees incurred by the co-defendants during the marathon case.

Simple justice demands that Donovan find a sympathetic audience among fair-minded Americans when he bitterly asks: Where "do I go to to get my reputation back?"

Efforts to avoid unnecessary damage to the reputations of public officials in future cases of this type obviously are needed.

State crime fighter

David Cobos, director of Midland's Crime Stoppers Program since it was started in 1984, does a good job. Too good, in one respect.

Cobos is scheduled to become state coordinator of the Texas Crime Stoppers program about June 22. In that capacity, he will direct a two-person staff in coordinating the work of Texas' 161 Crime Stoppers programs, the work of which is designed to give criminals headaches while giving law enforcement an edge in fighting the law-breakers. Judging from Cobos' track record locally, Midland County's loss will be the entire state's gain.

In a little over three years, Cobos led the Midland program to 360 arrests, 464 cleared cases, recovery of $419,603 in stolen property and another $433,416 worth of narcotics. Yet the program, which pays cash rewards for anonymous tips, spent only $55,350 for information. That's a good investment from anyone's standpoint — unless you are a criminal.

Of course, the spinoff effect of the Crime Stoppers program is measured in the way a community is free from crime. An aroused citizenry gives law enforcement a definite advantage. Private citizens become the eyes and ears of the law enforcement effort. Cobos has been able to capitalize on that spirit in Midland and the results tell the story.

When a community is able to fight crime effectively, it necessarily reduces the overall cost of crime and the citizenry reaps the benefits.

We known Cobos will bring a great degree of expertise to the state position and we wish him well in turning the tables on criminals.

No front-runner

By some accounts, Rep. Richard Gephardt, D-Mo., has taken on front-runner status in the race for the Democratic presidential nomination. But the race is still wide open.

In the first Iowa Poll after the collapse of Gary Hart's candidacy, Gephardt received indications of support from 24 percent of the poll's 401 Democratic participants — more than any other Democrat in the race. That compared with 13 percent for Rev. Jesse Jackson, 11 percent for Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis and six percent each for Arizonan Bruce Babbitt and Illinois Sen. Paul Simon.

Hart had received 65 percent to nine percent for Jackson and six percent for Gephardt in an earlier Iowa Poll, the results of which were made public the day Hart's relationship with Donna Rice was reported in the Miami Herald.

The caucuses, however are eight months away. As the Des Moines Register, the sponsor of the Iowa Poll, pointed out, about one-third of the Democratic participants indicated that they were undecided. Furthermore, participation in the caucuses doesn't necessarily follow the demographic lines that pollsters seek in trying to measure public opinion.

Caucuses typically attract a disproportionate number of activists and organized interest groups which know that the caucus format sometimes makes it possible for them to exert influence far beyond their numbers. The fact that a candidate does well in a caucus isn't as much an indication of his general support as it is a sign of whether he was well organized in the community or state where the caucus is held.

Iowa's caucuses would be of relatively little importance to the rest of the country if it weren't for the fact that they occur before the first primary election, in New Hampshire, and consequently command an unusual amount of attention. As such, the Iowa caucuses and the New Hampshire primary election have come to be seen as early election-year barometers.

But "front-runner," based on a 24 percent showing in the polls eight months before a series of local caucuses, would be too strong a term for Gephardt — or anyone else.

Soviets opening doors for 'Spetsnaz'

WASHINGTON — Americans of a certain age grew up with stories of the crafty, camera-toting Japanese tourists before World War II, whose snapshots included Pearl Harbor or other military targets in the background. Now it's the sly Soviet tourists in Western Europe that America and its allies must beware of. They could be "Spetsnaz" — spies with a difference.

Jack Anderson

The Soviet Spetsnaz (special forces) who reportedly travel abroad disguised as tourists or truckdrivers are gathering more than snapshots. They are familiarizing themselves with the geography of NATO countries they may be called upon to infiltrate in the final hours before an East-West war — to assassinate Western leaders, carry out sabotage and otherwise create confusion and chaos.

Behind the smile of Mikhail Gorbachev and the sunshine of his glasnost (openness) policy, our intelligence sources say, is the dark fact that the Soviets have been increasing their special forces rapidly over the last two years. There are at least 30,000 of these intensively trained experts in behind-the-lines disruption, poised in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe for rapid deployment into the West.

"Evidence of this being a growth industry is both recent and convincing," warns a secret briefing document we've seen. "For example, new units have been created and others are increasing in size. Dedicated training facilities are receiving new training aids and equipment, including mockups of U.S. and NATO military systems. Numbers of personnel attending certain training programs have significantly increased.

"This trend appears to extend to the non-Soviet Warsaw Pact special-purpose forces also. Upgraded equipment and refined operational techniques have been added to Spetsnaz units. Collectively, these factors show the threat to NATO's rear area is growing."

The briefing paper adds that the KGB, with Gorbachev's blessing, has been charting "new roles and missions" for Spetsnaz, and that there are "new facilities under construction (while) existing facilities (are) improved." Warsaw Pact Spetsnaz units have been expanding on Moscow's orders.

The briefing presentation, which includes nearly three dozen slides, is being used to convince NATO members' leaders that the Spetsnaz forces are a real threat that must be countered.

"These (Spetsnaz) troops are recognized as posing a significant threat to NATO Europe, the United Kingdom and North America in wartime," the briefing paper warns, "and represent an important instrument of Soviet power projection in the Third World."

The Soviet Spetsnaz troops don't lounge around in the barracks just because there's no war threatening. "Peacetime missions include political security and internal political control," the briefing document explains, "and political action and power projection abroad."

But if war breaks out, the Spetsnaz really go to work. "In wartime, certain of the special-purpose forces are designed to operate behind enemy lines, independent of regular Soviet forces for extended periods of time," the briefing paper explains. What will they be doing? "Conducting assassination, sabotage, reconnaissance and direct attack of a wide variety of key political, military and economic targets."

SPOOK STORIES: The CIA sent a contra-hit team into Managua, Nicaragua, in 1984 to kill the nine-member Sandinista ruling council, according to a timely book to be published soon: "The CIA, A Forgotten History" by journalist William Blum. The assassination squad's mission was scrubbed, according to Blum, when its explosives failed to show up. An earlier anecdote involved President Kennedy and British Prime Minister Harold MacMillan. They agreed on a plan to "liquidate" Indonesian President Sukarno, Blum writes. But the CIA official passing along this information in a memo confessed that he didn't know whether "liquidate" meant "murder or overthrow." Sukarno died in bed years later.

SEMPER FIDEL: The Cuban economy continues to deteriorate, and President Fidel Castro thinks he has found the right scapegoat: profiteers. "Prices in maintenance, construction and transport, to name just a few sectors, are scandalously high, covering up for inefficiency, overstaffing and overspending," he complained in a recent speech. But abandonment of Marxism is not under consideration. "Becoming the 'sorcerer's apprentice,' that is the apprentice of capitalism, is not the answer," quoth Castro.

Future of presidency at stake in ABM fight

WASHINGTON — Although the latest run on the presidency is the Democratic effort to bar any new interpretation of the ABM treaty, questionable tactics within Ronald Reagan's own official family have added to the misery that has made the $303 billion defense bill hostage to squalid politics aimed at the 1988 elections.

Rowland Evans and Robert Novak

The immediate casualty is the defense bill, which Reagan allies have kept from the Senate floor for weeks. Maintaining their filibuster by a single vote, these Republican senators are protecting the president's stake in his Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI). The Democrats, with Senate Armed Services Chairman Sam Nunn leading the way, put an amendment into the bill preventing Reagan from interpreting the ABM treaty as he reads it.

Downtown, Secretary of State George Shultz gave succor for several weeks to the anti-SDI Democrats by blocking an official report due in February that is highly optimistic on early deployment of missile defenses. The congressional Democrats and Shultz were insensibly allied in stripping power from the Executive Branch at the moment of the Reagan presidency's greatest weakness.

Finally sent to Congress last week after national security adviser Frank Carlucci intervened at State, the Pentagon report outlines multi-billion-dollar savings if SDI testing is permitted under a "broad" ABM interpretation. Senate Reaganauts say privately that Shultz felt it might strengthen the Senate's anti-ABM minority, thus making the ABM treaty more vulnerable.

The inability of the president's own men to stick together in the interest of political expedience or ideological conviction — not to mention the interests of Reagan — is cause for only minimum alarm because it is nothing new. "This administration has wallowed in indecision before," a Reagan Capitol Hill loyalist told us, "but now it is a real struggle to get any decisions at all."

But the deeper danger goes beyond cat-and-dog politics between the White House, State and Pentagon. It lies in what appears to be the eagerness of the Democratic Congress to put down the president even at the expense of U.S. interests abroad.

Reagan's arms negotiators are now in Geneva trying to complete an intermediate-range missile deal with Mikhail Gorbachev's stiff-necked crew. Here at home, using a wholly non-germane amendment to the defense bill as their agent to freeze presidential action on the ABM treaty, the Democrats seem to be telling the Kremlin: Don't worry, boys, we'll handle the SDI problem for you because sooner or later Reagan has to have a defense bill!

Strategic defense, whether Reagan wants to use it that way or not, is probably the finest bargaining tool he has in Geneva — and for subsequent talks to reduce the big, intercontinental missile force — because the Soviets truly fear it. Moreover, applying a congressional veto over a future presidential desire to reinterpret the ABM treaty trumpets an unmistakble message around the world: This president's term has 20 months to run, but he will not be allowed to interfere in the making of foreign policy.

The politics of 1988 looks likely to be the politics of "peace" and detente. That adds confusion to what has become another in the mortifying series of political frenzies over this nation's programs for strategic security. The MX missile struggle, now well over a decade old, thrives on Capitol Hill. The battle over SDI and the ABM treaty, now focused in the Republican filibuster against the defense bill, will shift in the next couple of weeks, but it is not about to break off.

Senate Republican leader Bob Dole and his Armed Services Committee lieutenant, Sen. John Warner, have established a last line of defense that will not be reached until late this year. That will be long after their filibuster has been broken, as it surely will be. A devil's pact may then be reached under which Reagan is forced to trade away the ABM-interpretation issue for a guaranteed SDI appropriation of around $4 billion. But trying to hold the House, which has authorized only $3.1 billion for strategic defense, to such a deal would be risky in the extreme.

The last battle probably will not come until after the bill, intact with its presidential shackle, is passed and gets vetoed by Reagan. The Dole-Warner forces will then swing back into action and produce the 34 votes needed to sustain the veto.

That would leave the nation with no defense bill, the Pentagon in the dark about its future, and the allies at a new pitch of alarm. The real loser would be the presidency. For the moment, it would be Reagan's presidency but in the longer run it would be the institution, battered and weakened in the last 25 years as never before.

Journalists have only one duty, one loyalty

Well, I'll say this for Gary Hart. A lot of people got excited about invasion of privacy when he was the ox getting gored who never uttered a peep when Lt. Col. Ollie North's privacy was invaded.

Charley Reese

The double standard is a good place to start any discussion of journalistic ethics. That's a good place to finish, too, because the essence of journalistic ethics is whether you have one standard for everyone or different standards for different people. Personally the only way I know that a journalist can be fair is to have one standard. For example, if you print the name of one convicted drunk driver, then you print the name of all convicted drunk drivers even when they are the editor or the publisher's golf partner. No exceptions.

In this instance, unless all the presidential candidates receive the same level of scrutiny, then Hart will have been treated unfairly.

As for the question, should the private lives of candidates be exposed, I think the answer is definitely yes. It is not a question of stooping to gossip. It is a question of giving readers a complete picture of a man or woman who will be in a position of power, not eight hours a day, but 24 hours a day for the duration of their term. Moreover it is also necessary in order to avoid being part of a deception.

By ignoring the late President John F. Kennedy's womanizing, the press participated in a deception — a disinformation campaign. Those journalists who knew but never said not only denied their readers information but actively participated with the Kennedy staff in a deliberate campaign to dupe the American people.

I say that because if you review the coverage — the extensive coverage of JFK, his wife, and his children — what clearly emerges is exactly what the campaign people wanted to emerge: the image of a devoted father and a loving, happily married man. That image we now know was contrived, not real, and it played an important part in attracting political support for JFK.

In reality, the work the Miami Herald did on Gary Hart was admirable journalism and the deliberate past deceptions of some major newspapers and TV networks, which are now critical of the Herald, carried out are the real examples of bad journalism.

It was bad journalism not to report the crudity and vulgarity of Lyndon Johnson which was quickly evident to anyone around him for more than 30 minutes. It was bad journalism not to inform the people that former Rep. Wilbur Mills had a serious alcohol problem until he made a public spectacle of himself and the story could no longer be hidden. To hide the serious problems or flaws of major public figures often in the news is not to show restraint but to actively deceive the public.

There are two things which can corrupt a journalist easier than money. One is to develop personal relationships with the people about whom he or she writes. You can't be a friend and a reporter at the same time for there will come an inevitable conflict.

The second great corrupter of journalists is to become concerned about the consequences of reporting the truth. It is not our job to do anything except find the truth and report it. It is not our job to see that one candidate wins or that a treaty is ratified or some project succeeds. It is not our job to be concerned with whether the truth helps or hurts an individual.

The minute a journalist begins to calculate the effect of what he writes, then he betrays his readers and begins to manipulate them.

A journalist should have one loyalty and only one — to his readers — and one duty and only one — to determine the truth and report it. Anything else is not journalism but public relations.

The only two exceptions are life and death matters and national security. No journalist has a right to report something which can directly result in another person's death or which will endanger national security.

Haitians use TV ads in anti-AIDS education program

By PIERRE-YVES GLASS

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — The AIDS virus is spreading so rapidly in Haiti, among both heterosexuals and homosexuals, that the government has turned to television to teach people how to avoid the killer disease.

On one recent TV program, three medical students noted that AIDS can result from any form of sexual activity. A female student displayed a condom, described how it worked and urged people to use them.

A 30-second spot that is repeated frequently cautions that sexual promiscuity increases the risk of exposure to the virus. A voice-over accompanying cartoon figures of men and women says in Haiti's Creole language, "Girls, make love to only one boy and avoid catching AIDS."

"There are people here used to having dozens of sexual partners. Some change partners every two or three days," said Dr. Bernard Liautaud, a specialist in sexually transmitted diseases who has spoken about AIDS on radio and television.

"That's a detestable habit that will almost certainly lead to contracting AIDS," Liautaud said in an interview.

Acquired immune deficiency syndrome is caused by a virus that attacks the body's immune system, leaving victims susceptible to a variety of infections and cancers. Only a fraction of the people who are infected with the virus have actually developed the disease.

In November 1986, a World Health Organization official said there were about 100,000 known cases of AIDS worldwide. In the United States, 35,769 cases had been reported as of May 18, and in 20,683 of them the victim died, according to the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta, which says about 1.5 million Americans carry the virus.

From 1,000 to 2,000 Haitians have been diagnosed as having AIDS. Doctors estimate 100,000 to 200,000 Haitians carry the virus without knowing it, and as many as 1 million of the 6 million people who live in this impoverished Caribbean nation could become infected with the virus within the next five years.

Such experts as Dr. Robert Jean-Louis, president of the Haitian Medical Association, claim AIDS was introduced to Haiti in the 1970s by homosexuals from the United States who traveled here as tourists. The chief victims of AIDS worldwide have been homosexual men and intravenous drug abusers.

They even had an international gay-congress here in 1980," Jean-Louis said. "They made Haiti a world crossroads for homosexuals. That's how the virus penetrated the population."

Haitians still are angry that the Centers for Disease Control initially put the entire Haitian nation in the AIDS high-risk category — along with homosexuals and drug abusers.

That classification finally was removed in April 1985, but not before the country's international image was tarnished and its citizens living abroad were subjected to discrimination.

"No nationality is more susceptible than another to AIDS," researcher Dr. Rodolphe Malbranche said. "We do have a high ratio of AIDS cases in Haiti, probably more than, say, Alaska, but not more than American cities such as Los Angeles and New York."

The reported incidence of the disease in New York is about three times the rate in Haiti.

As is apparently the case in Africa, the disease in Haiti appears to be transmitted increasingly by heterosexual activity, although there is a link with homosexuality.

"Most Haitian homosexuals are in fact bisexual because of societal taboos against homosexuality," Jean-Louis said. "They catch AIDS from other men and spread it to women."

About 50 percent of Haitian prostitutes carry the AIDS virus, researcher Alex Lassegue said. About four of every 10 AIDS victims in Haiti is female.

Almost every hospital in Haiti refuses to care for AIDS victims because both staff and patients fear contamination, Malbranche said. "Most (victims) just die at home," he said. "About 700 Haitians have died from AIDS since 1979."

Although the government's education programs have helped, private groups complain the government is not doing enough, given the immensity of the problem.

Researchers disagree over new AIDS virus

By WARREN E. LEARY

WASHINGTON (AP) — A first cousin to the virus that causes AIDS is spreading through West Africa, and an international scientific debate has begun over whether it causes a similar fatal disease.

French and American researchers said last week that they have good evidence the viruses they discovered independently two years ago in West Africa are identical. However, they disagreed strongly over whether the virus causes immune system problems similar to acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

Harvard School of Public Health researchers led by Myron Essex said they sampled blood from 4,248 people in six West African countries and found evidence of exposure to the new virus as high as 16 percent in some countries.

Although the contagious virus infects the same cells as the AIDS virus, it "does not appear to be associated with immunodeficiency-related disorders," the Americans say in a report published in today's issue of the journal Science.

Dr. Phyllis J. Kanki, the principal researcher on the study, said in a telephone interview that the virus, called human t-lymphotropic virus type 4, or HTLV-4, appears to be the same genetically as one discovered by French scientists and called HIV-2.

Recently, researchers from the Pasteur Institute in Paris reported that their data show HIV-2 causes a disease indistinguishable from AIDS. The French scientists warned the virus could cause a new AIDS epidemic.

The study, which appeared in the New England Journal of Medicine, said 17 of 30 people from Guinea-Bissau or the Cape Verde Islands who were infected with HIV-2 and treated in Lisbon had AIDS. None of the patients was infected with HIV-1, the virus previously called HTLV-3 that causes AIDS in Central Africa, Europe, the United States and elsewhere, it said.

Kanki said that she, Essex and their colleagues realize the conflicting results cause confusion, but they stand by their data and interpretations.

"They (the French researchers) are not looking at a lot of people in West Africa," she said. "They are looking at sick people who have made their way to European hospitals. They may be seeing a small piece of the pie, but not the whole thing. We saw more healthy people, some of whom were infected but without evidence of disease."

Dr. Francois Clavel of the Pasteur Institute, one of the authors of the earlier study, said in an interview that he thinks HIV-2 and HTLV-4 are the same virus and that it definitely causes a disease close to AIDS.

"We are a little confused about what the problems are," Clavel said. "We are surprised they did not have AIDS cases. Were they looking very hard?"

Kanki said there may be specific subtypes of HIV-2/HTLV-4 that lead to disease while others do not. But Clavel disagreed, saying there was no evidence of this.

Clavel and Kanki conceded they might be seeing the extreme ends of a different disease spectrum than traditional AIDS. Both said further studies will be needed to resolve the issue.

"It may take longer for this virus to induce AIDS than the other one," Clavel said.

The Harvard study, done in conjunction with scientists at Dakar University in Senegal and other research groups in France, found the incidence of HTLV-4 infection varied greatly from country to country in West Africa.

No evidence of infection was found in blood samples from Mauritania, and only 1 percent of samples were positive from Guinea. In Senegal, Guinea Bissau, Burkina Faso and Ivory Coast, overall prevalence ranged from 6.9 percent to 16 percent.

The report said that of 4,248 individuals sampled, there were only five cases of AIDS. In none of these cases was there evidence of HTLV-4 infection, it said.

AIDS is spread through contact with blood, semen and other bodily fluids from infected persons. As of May 4, AIDS had been diagnosed in 35,219 Americans, of whom more than half, or 20,352, have died since 1979. No one is known to have recovered from AIDS.

Worldwide, more than 48,000 cases have been reported from 101 countries. The World Health Organization estimates that as many as 10 million people are now infected with the AIDS virus.

Saturday: Fair, becoming partly cloudy in the afternoon, a high in the mid-80s, southeasterly winds at five to 15 mph, and a 20 percent chance of afternoon thunderstorms.

Fair skies due in Basin Saturday

From Staff and Wire Reports

Forecasters at the National Weather Service are calling for Saturday morning to begin with fair skies and, after an overnight low in the upper 50s, temperatures should warm up to the middle 80s. The forecaster said skies will become partly cloudy by early afternoon and there will be a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms.

For tonight, partly cloudy skies, a low in the upper 50s, and a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms are predicted. The NWS warns that some thunderstorms may be severe.

Winds will be out of the southeast at five to 15 mph through Saturday.

Thursday's high of 88 was 14 degrees below the record high set for that date in 1974. Today's low was 12 degrees above the record low of 50 set for this date in 1952.

NATION

A band of showers and thunderstorms drenched the nation's flood-plagued midsection today after dumping up to 9 inches of rain, spawning tornadoes and dropping hail as big as baseballs.

Some roads and bridge remained closed in Oklahoma, and flash flood watches were posted in that state, Texas and Kansas.

Severe thunderstorms spawned eight tornadoes in central and southwestern Texas on Thursday. Evening storms produced baseball-size hail at Knickerbocker, and gusts up to 70 mph at Wills Point.

Heavy rain in a Dallas suburb sent the roof crashing down on an office party, sending three people to the hospital and injuring three others.

In Wisconsin, lightning hit at least 10 people, seriously injuring several.

The band of wet weather curved from eastern Kansas and extreme western Missouri through eastern Oklahoma, western Arkansas and northeastern Texas to the middle Rio Grande Valley.

Rain and a few thundershowers lingered over the northern Atlantic Coast. Strong winds downed trees and power lines at Salisbury, N.Y.

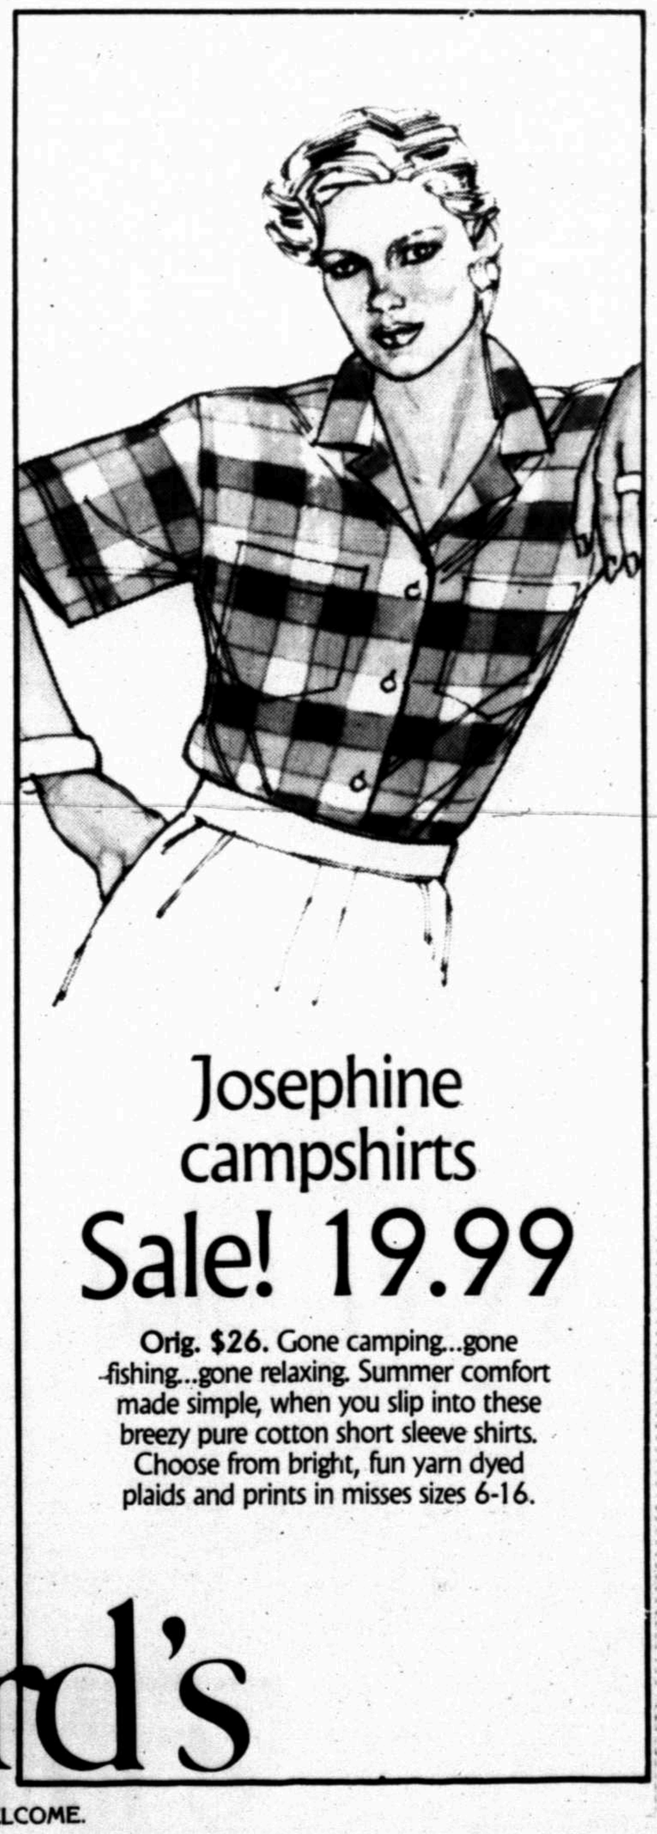

Today's forecast called for thunderstorms from southwest Texas through the central Plains to the upper Mississippi Valley and upper Great Lakes; scattered thunderstorms across the lower Great Lakes and southern New England, the Southeast, the central Plateau and the northern and central Rockies; light rain in the Pacific Northwest; fair weather in the Southwest and from the Ohio and Tennessee valleys to the Atlantic Coast.

Red Cross denies relief efforts inadequate

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

Red Cross officials in Saragosa Thursday denied charges made by City Councilwoman Oralia Corrales that tornado victims there are not receiving adequate relief.

Members of the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce who visited Saragosa told her the Red Cross effort there is lacking, Ms. Corrales said Thursday. Two chamber members, executive director Elvia Hernandez and Cindy Gonzales, returned to Saragosa Thursday, she said.

Among the complaints cited by Ms. Corrales were insensitivity, a lack of bilingual relief workers, inadequate transportation for victims, and an inefficient system which is allowing outsiders to claim funds meant for victims.

Illegal aliens in the area are not getting medical attention because they are afraid to ask for it, and small children in shock have been seen wandering the area, she said.

Ms. Corrales, who has not visited the ravaged town, also charged that "most of the monies the Red Cross gets goes to the staff."

But Red Cross officials at the disaster relief station at Balmorhea disputed Ms. Corrales' claims.

Susan Clowe, media coordinator for the agency, said 75 of the 83 affected families have been interviewed by relief workers.

"That is an unequivocal no," she said when told about Ms. Corrales' claims that funds are going to Red Cross workers. "Our national books and our chapter books are open for inspection anytime."

Ms. Clowe said there is "a tremendous amount" of sensitivity for the victims.

Relief operations after disasters such as the one that hit Saragosa seldom go smoothly, according to another Red Cross official at the scene.

"The operation is working; people are coming in," said Polly Brumfield. "This is not an easy situation."

Ms. Brumfield denied children in shock are roaming the area, and was surprised the Red Cross would be blamed for the fear illegal aliens have of detection.

"We have very experienced medical people here and they are daily checking out leads," she said.

"If they are disaster victims, they can come to our service center for treatment," she said. "No one is going to say to them 'Are you an illegal alien?'

"My God, nobody wants anyone to go without medical care."

Sam Flores, president of the Hispanic Chamber, said "there is some concern about the available aid reaching the disaster victims." He said he had talked to someone who had visited Saragosa.

Elvis Curb, manager of the Red Cross in Midland, said relief efforts have gone as well as expected.

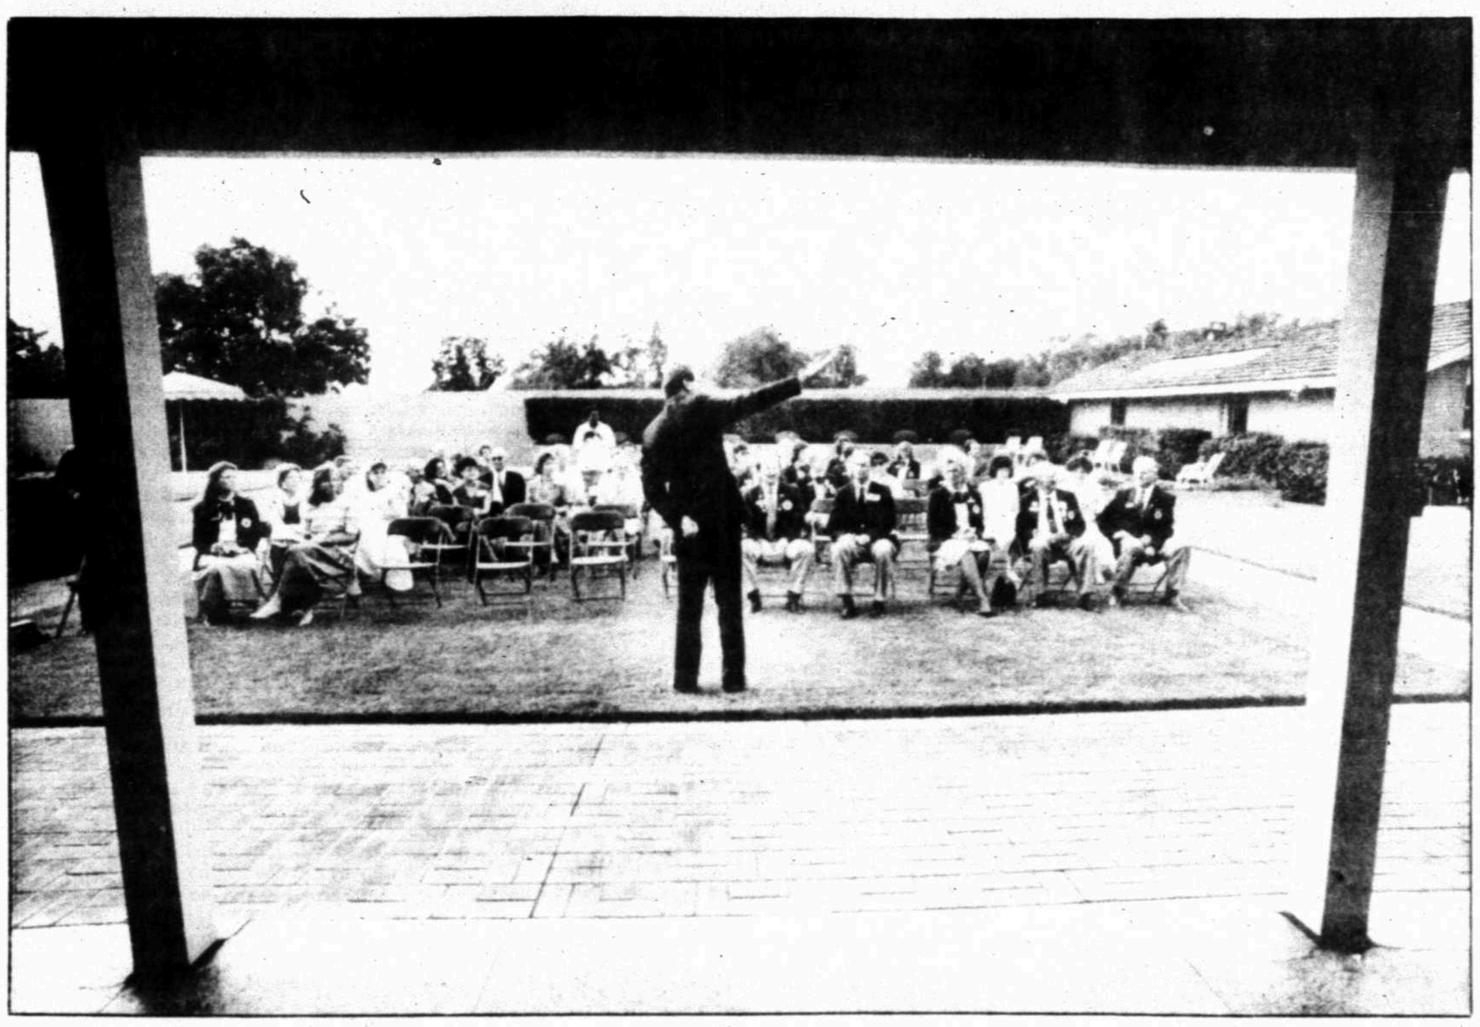

"Truthfully, in the early hours of the disaster, there were communication problems," he said. "But we are prepared for this type of situation, and are prepared for the language and the cultural differences that are going to exist. That was one of the reasons we sent staff members from distant locations."

Ms. Corrales said the relief station should have been set up in Saragosa, not in Balmorhea, 10 miles away, but Red Cross officials said victims have been reaching the relief station.

The officials also denied the shortage of bilingual relief workers, and said they have received no complaints of outsiders being issued relief funds.

"We have community people who are doing the casework, and they are visiting with each of the individuals who are coming in," Ms. Brumfield said. "We have not had anyone come to us and say 'that person does not belong here.'"

"And, we have bilingual people here, and we have had all day for the past two days."

Faulty sewer vents may be cause of obnoxious odor

By RICK BROWN
Assistant City Editor

Faulty sewer venting lines on the roof of a Garfield Street doctor's office may be the cause of an obnoxious hydrogen sulfide odor that irritated allergy-prone patients and worried the doctor who owned the building.

City Public Works Director Fred Baker said today that several of the top-of-the-building sewer vents were emitting gas below the city-code required 12 inches above the structure.

Because hydrogen sulfide is heavier than air, the gas may have sat undispersed on top of the building, waiting for wind to blow it into air-intake vents that also were located on the structure, Baker said.

"That appears to be the cause," said Baker.

Because of insulation added to the roof, many of the 1½-, 2-, and 3-inch sewer vents — which numbered about five — sat only two inches above the roof, he said.

In some cases, those vents were located a foot or two away from the 6, 8, or 10-inch air intake holes that helped the building's ventilation, city plumbing inspector Tom Wright said today.

Dr. J. Oliver Gooch, the building's owner, said today he remained unconvinced by the city's theory of the odor's cause, but plumbers Thursday were raising the sewer vents above the 12-inch limit to fall in line with the city code.

The plumbers also were tying all the sewer venting lines together so they would emit their obnoxious odors only in one corner of the rooftop, Gooch said.

"I hope it works, but there's still some doubt in my mind," the doctor said.

Gooch Wednesday theorized the odor came from a main city sewer line located just north of his office at 401 N. Garfield.

The smell was so bad that the ear, nose and throat specialist had to refrain from using the back portion of his office where allergy testing took place, he said.

The smell was irritating allergy-prone patients who sometimes had to wait in the area for three hours at a time, he said.

In addition, the doctor was concerned about the potential danger of the gas, which is deadly in high concentrations.

Baker said Thursday that the city had flushed the 10-foot-deep main sewer line that serves businesses, residents and nearby Midland Memorial Hospital in three-quarters of a section of land.

Midlander among law enforcement grads

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — A Midlander will be among 21 graduates of the Odessa College Law Enforcement Academy to receive certificates of completion during a Wednesday ceremony.

Completion of the law enforcement course means graduates will be eligible for the examination leading to certification as a peace officer by the Texas Commission on Law Enforcement Officer Standards and Education, according to Bill Cooksey, chairman of the OC law enforcement/criminal justice division.

Cooksey described the TECLOS test as "kind of like the State Bar exam. We don't guarantee that they'll pass it, but one of the things the course does is prepare them for the examination," he said.

The graduates get three chances to pass the exam, Cooksey said.

Anyone who fails three times must go through the academy again. Successful passage of the TECLOS test and subsequent certification means an individual can seek employment with any law enforcement agency in the State of Texas, he said.

Keynote speaker for the ceremony will be Jim Dodson, Odessa Police Department deputy chief.

The law academy is a cooperative effort between OC and the Odessa Police Department.

Special awards will be made to several graduates during ceremonies Wednesday night. The awards will be for: highest scholastic standing; firearms top gun; perfect attendance and outstanding student from the physical education program.

Area graduates include: Lynette Fred, Midland; Jeffery Dever, Big Spring; Amos Harrington, Gardendale and Sheryl Shanks, Andrews.

Odessans graduating include George Andrade, Andy Blackburn, Steve Clower, Connie Davis, Roddy Eaton, Robert Fitzgerald, David Hall, Floyd Largent, Lonnie Looney, Jason Meador, Orlando Orona, Ismael Orosco, Paul Owen, Ben Pena, Robin Smith, Kristy Turner and Tito Vasquez.

Midland men injured in truck, train mishap

From Staff Reports

Two Midland men were injured, one critically, Thursday night when the truck they were riding in was hit by a train at a railroad crossing.

The Department of Public Safety investigated the accident, but this morning said a report was not available. According to bystanders, the accident happened about 8 p.m. at a crossing near the intersection of U.S. Highway 80 and Interstate 20.

Glen McKinney, 1416 Ric Dr., was listed in critical condition this morning with head and abdominal injuries, and David Cupp, 1416 Ric Dr., was in stable condition with head and chest injuries and multiple lacerations, according to a spokeswoman at Midland Memorial Hospital.

A bystander said part of the bed of the truck was torn off when it was hit by the train.

Alien apprehensions drop after new law, INS official says

McALLEN (AP) — Alien apprehensions have dropped drastically in the Rio Grande Valley, and the regional U.S. Border Patrol Chief attributes the decline to the new law making it illegal to hire undocumented aliens.

Employer sanctions are the most important aspect of the new immigration reform law, Silvestre Reyes, chief of the McAllen sector, said Thursday.

"From an enforcement perspective, the employer sanction is the cornerstone of the legislation, because it removes the magnet that brings the alien to the U.S.," Reyes said.

He said during fiscal year 1987, which ended Wednesday, alien apprehensions dropped to less than half the figure recorded during fiscal 1986 in his sector.

A total of 47,465 people were apprehended in the border region during fiscal year 1987, while 123,197 were apprehended during 1986, according to Border Patrol statistics.

"That (1987) was the time when the new law was starting to get publicity in other countries," Reyes said.

In Mexico, employer sanctions were considered much more significant than the amnesty offer, Reyes told Leadership Texas 1987, sponsored by the Austin-based Foundation for Women's Resources during a forum on immigration issues.

The amnesty for illegal aliens proving continuous residence in the United States since 1982 began May 5. The employer sanctions go into effect Monday, but may be postponed because the government has not provided necessary forms to employers.

Many school children will benefit from the new law, a school superintendent said during the panel discussion.

"Parents will be able to openly participate in school," said Pablo Perez, superintendent of the McAllen Independent School District. "Of course that is very supportive to our youngsters."

Perez said that although the U.S. Supreme Court has required schools to educate all children, regardless of their legal status, the parents have been hesitant to spend much time at schools for fear of apprehension.

He said the district has 20,000 students, about 85 percent of whom are Hispanic and 1,000 of whom are undocumented aliens. Studies show that the dropout rate falls considerably when parents become active in schools, Perez said.

The district does not expect much of an increase in student population with the new law, he said, because it already is required to educate them.

House tightens holes in Open Meetings Act

By JIM WARREN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — After quelling opposition, the House Thursday tightened loopholes in the state's open government laws.

The revisions to the Open Meetings Act cleared the House without a whimper of dissent and senators, who passed a similar bill earlier in the session, said they will accept the House's minor changes and send the legislation to the governor's desk.

Rep. Juan Hinojosa, sponsor of the bill, said Gov. Bill Clements' staff has told him that Clements has no problems with the measure and will sign it. Hinojosa, D-McAllen, also credited Speaker Gib Lewis' support for the bill's easy sailing through the House.

The revision would force governmental bodies to keep records of discussions held in closed-door executive sessions. Councils, boards, commissions and other governmental bodies may meet privately to discuss pending legal cases, personnel decisions and acquisition of property.

Hinojosa's bill allows citizens who believe a body has violated the closed-meetings rules to have a district judge review the records of the executive session and release any information that should have been discussed in an open meeting.

The Texas Municipal League, school boards and various counties initially opposed the revisions. They said the knowledge that the meetings were being recorded would cause "a chilling effect" on officials in those closed-door meetings. But Hinojosa said he worked with the groups and took care of their concerns.

"I told them that the bill would still allow them to do everything they can do now, only they have to keep a record of it," Hinojosa said.

Teacher testifies girl was afraid of Cullen Davis

FORT WORTH (AP) — A teacher has testified that a girl who Cullen Davis is accused of slaying was afraid of him and didn't like to be alone with him at the Davis mansion.

Davis' ex-wife, Priscilla Davis, 45, contends Davis was the bewigged man in black who wounded her and killed her daughter, Andrea Wilborn, in an August 1976 shooting spree at the $6 million Davis mansion in Fort Worth.

Mrs. Davis has filed a multimillion-dollar wrongful death suit against Davis.

The first witness in the trial Thursday was Miss Wilborn's teacher, Ann Henderson, who said the 12-year-old girl was afraid of Davis and he once locked her out of the house because she didn't know her multiplication tables.

She said Miss Wilborn once told her that Davis "didn't think she was very intelligent and called her stupid and dumb, and belittled her."

Ms. Henderson testified that the girl did not like to be at the mansion with Davis and often came to school upset on Monday after spending weekends there.

A jury in Amarillo acquitted Davis of Miss Wilborn's death 10 years ago, but that verdict has no legal consequences in the current civil trial, which includes a personal injury suit by Mrs. Davis.

The intruder in the 1976 shooting spree also killed Mrs. Davis' boyfriend, Stan Farr, 30, and wounded a mansion visitor, Bubba Gavrel, now 33. The shootings occurred at a time when Davis and Mrs. Davis were involved in a long and bitter divorce case.

Judge, DPS official say improprieties began in '83

AUSTIN (AP) — A judge and Department of Public Safety official say they began noticing improprieties in cases handled by McLennan County District Attorney Vic Feazell as early as 1983.

Those statements came Thursday during the third day of testimony in the federal bribery trial of the indicted district attorney.

Former DPS Capt. Edwin Pringle testified that reports on the outcome of cases normally are not sent to his desk. But one day in December 1983, several reports were delivered to him and he noticed an "abnormal" number of the cases had been dismissed.

The reports, called dispositions, are sent by the district attorney's office to the law enforcement agency that made the arrest.

Pringle said the dismissals prompted him to order an officer to review all drunken driving cases filed in McLennan County between Jan. 1, 1983, and December 1984, Pringle said.

Pringle, who retired in 1985, said he left copies of the reports in a file, but they are now missing.

Feazell has been accused of accepting bribes from defense lawyers in exchange for leniency or dismissals of cases against their clients.

State District Judge David Hodges, who noted that Texas law requires that judges approve case dismissals, said during 1984, he noticed "a lot of dismissals occurring for the same attorneys."

Hodges said his court routinely signed 20 to 40 dismissals a day.

"Then I began to notice there was a huge percentage of cases being dismissed" for certain attorneys, Hodges said.

During opening testimony Wednesday, an assistant U.S. attorney alleged Feazell worked with a network of lawyers to carry out his scheme.

Feazell has denied the charges, claiming they are an attempt by DPS to get revenge because he exposed the Henry Lee Lucas scandal. Lucas confessed to hundreds of murders nationwide, but later recanted claiming he carried out the hoax to embarrass law enforcement officials.

A former Feazell assistant said the district attorney often took away cases he was handling.

Texas woman linked to 'Mickey Finn' robberies

Hearst News Service

SAN ANTONIO — Los Angeles authorities have been flooded with requests for information about the arrest of a Texas woman who has been linked to a nationwide string of "Mickey Finn" robberies.

The woman is accused of duping men, drugging them and then stealing their cash, jewelry and credit cards, authorities said.

Jacqueline Lynn Edmonds, 27, is being held in the Los Angeles County Jail without bond on numerous out-of-state warrants in connection with the robberies authorities claim stretched from coast to coast.

"We've already gotten calls from six states," Detective Mike Erice of the LAPD said. "We just sent out the teletype. I'm sure we'll be receiving some more (calls)."

Edmonds, of Universal City, just northeast of here, is believed to be a member of a ring of young women who prey on prosperous looking men in bars, nightclubs and hotels, officers said.

"The key is that the guy has some money," Erice said. "They give him a drink with a drug. Some of the guys are knocked out for eight to 24 hours."

He said the victims are usually robbed in motel rooms or apartments after consuming drugged drinks, commonly referred to as "Mickey Finns." He said the drinks used in the robberies are usually potentially dangerous concoctions of alcohol laced with animal tranquilizers.

Erice speculated that despite the flood of calls in response to Edmonds' arrest, many of the robberies involving the alleged ring probably have gone unreported.

"A lot of people would be too embarrassed to report it," he said. "If the victim is married, he's not going to report it."

Erice said Edmonds initially gave a different name, Jennifer, and age, 23, when San Diego authorities arrested her May 18 on a prostitution charge.

Following an investigation, she was charged with a March 28 robbery in Los Angeles, he said.

"It was a case of good police work," Erice said. "The officer had arrested her before. He kept checking names until he got the right one."

Erice said Edmonds also faces similar charges in Colorado, Missouri, Nevada, New York and a Dallas suburb. "She's staying here until the robbery case is disposed of."

Children's deaths prompt parents to sell their house

JERSEY VILLAGE, Texas (AP) — Too many memories exist in the home where two children drowned for the parents to live there anymore.

Craig Roberts, 38, and his wife, Rhonda, 28, have put the house up for sale after both their children died May 20 while the parents weren't at home.

Police said a housekeeper babysitting the children told them she had been cleaning bathrooms and watching television upstairs when she came down and found 3-year-old Joshua and 20-month-old Brei floating in the pool.

An autopsy determined they had been in the water about two hours.

"We based our life around our babies, and they grew up here," Mrs. Roberts said Wednesday. "We were always greeted by them in the morning and when we got home from work.

"This house was built for Brei and Joshua. We don't think we can live here without them," she said.

Two counts of involuntary manslaughter were filed against Francisca Rodriguez Ramos, 19, of El Salvador, who was working while the Roberts' regular maid was on vacation. A grand jury hearing on the case is scheduled June 19.

"We'd like to think that Brei died first, that she went in first and Joshua tried to save her," Mrs. Roberts said.

The pool was enclosed behind a chain-link fence and the gate was padlocked. Police said the housekeeper had opened the gate to the pool earlier in the day to feed the family dogs and apparently forgot to close it.

Five days after the tragedy, the Roberts put their Houston-suburb home up for sale. On Wednesday, they donated most of their children's clothes and toys to Texas Children's Hospital except for those that neighbors and friends had asked to keep as mementos.

Both parents have chiropractic practices here and will be staying in the city in a rented house or apartment.

"If we feel we can't stay in Houston, we want to be able to get up and go. This house can't be shared any longer by the four of us," Craig Roberts said.

Also on Thursday, the children's coffins were to be moved from their graves to a crypt reserved for children. A picture of Mickey Mouse, their favorite character, will be placed on the crypt.

"We're all right now. We've gone through everything. We now rest assured our children are in Heaven in the sight of God," Roberts said.

Duke law professor likely to be next SMU president

DALLAS (AP) — A Duke University law professor is likely to be named president of Southern Methodist University today, officials with the university indicated.

The Dallas Morning News reported in a copyright story today that A. Kenneth Pye, who twice served as chancellor at Duke, could be named the new SMU president at today's special meeting of the SMU board of trustees.

Pye, reached in Dallas Thursday night, declined to comment because he had not yet met with the board.

Asked if he would accept the job if it is offered, Pye said: "I have a tendency not to decide whether I'd take any position until it's offered to me. That's an idiosyncrasy of mine."

Dallas oilman Ray Hunt, head of SMU's presidential search committee and acting chairman of the board of trustees, was not available for comment this morning but a spokesman for him indicated Pye is the likely choice.

"I don't want to get into commenting on what that board is going to do," said Hunt spokesman Jim Oberwetter. Asked about the Dallas Morning News report, he told The Associated Press, "I don't think you have a problem with (reporting) that."

The university has scheduled a news conference after the board meeting and a spokeswoman who asked that her name not be used said the "candidate" would likely attend.

She said the university could not confirm or deny the newspaper report.

Sources told The News Pye met Thursday with Hunt.

L. Donald Shields resigned as SMU president in November, citing health problems. His resignation came after allegations of improprieties in the SMU athletic department and was followed by the resignations of the athletic director and football coach.

The National Collegiate Athletic Association suspended the school's football program for the 1987 season because athletes received improper payments from SMU boosters. The school subsequently decided not to play football in 1988.

In March, Gov. Bill Clements disclosed that he and several other members of the SMU board of governors knew of continued payments to student athletes.

Pye has twice served as Duke's chancellor and was acting president for one year at the Durham, N.C., university.

He is chairman of the Duke Athletic Council, a committee of students, faculty members, alumni, trustees and administrators who oversee the athletic program.

Primitive farms don't stop Chinese

CANTON, China (AP) — China is a country of nearly 1.25 billion people but it grows enough food for its own people.

Although China is the world's leading producer of rice, barley, tobacco and millet, and ranks among the top three producers of wheat, cotton and soybeans, its farm labor is still done mainly by hand.

Ex-customs official seeks return of stolen artifacts

GALVESTON (AP) — A former U.S. State Department official wants customs officials to return 29 fragments of pre-Columbian burial shrouds stolen from Houston Intercontinental Airport 11 years ago and recovered during a recent raid.

Dan Coleman said he legally purchased the textiles and shipped them home when he left the U.S. Embassy in La Paz, Bolivia, in 1976.

The Galveston County Organized Crime Control Unit and U.S. Customs officials unveiled the Peruvian shrouds Thursday at a news conference, saying they were recovered during a March raid at the Bayview home of an alleged buyer of stolen goods.

Coleman, a former Houston accountant now with a private consulting firm in Washington D.C., said he paid "several thousand dollars" for the artifacts. Museum officials have determined the shrouds are priceless and about 1,000 to 2,300 years old, authorities said.

Harold C. Wolfe, agent in charge of the U.S. Customs' Galveston bureau, said the artifacts' fate is up to the Houston district customs office, where the items were turned in to Thursday.

Wolfe said Peruvian law prohibits export of national treasures. But Coleman, regional inspector general for the State Department's Agency for International Development in Bolivia from 1970-76, said Americans had commonly purchased similar items in Bolivia.

"I was told by the organized crime unit that if I came down and identified them I could have them," Coleman said, adding he did that six weeks ago but was told customs officials had taken charge and he was not allowed to see them.

"I've even suggested to customs that if there was a real legal or jurisdictional dispute, I would consider donating maybe a third of the items to the Peruvian Embassy here in Washington as an incentive to make it good for both sides," Coleman said.

Wolfe said Coleman will have to petition the customs service for release of the recovered property.

Insect 'threat' to pecan production

Minzenmayer

The pecan nut casebearer, Acrobasis Nuxvorella, is the number one insect threat to pecan production in Texas. This nut feeder accounts for total crop losses in many years on unsprayed trees. With proper timing of a labeled insecticide, however, economic losses can be minimized.

Adult female moths lay eggs on the pollinated nutlets, eggs hatch in 4 to 7 days and then the young worms will attack the nutlets. Eggs are usually placed singly on the tips of nutlets. Eggs are flat and blue-greenish white in color when first laid but take on a pinkish red color after 1 or 2 days. Eggs are small in size, about the size of a pinhead.

Young worms hatching from eggs, first feed on leaf buds and then attack the small nutlets. First significant nut entry is expected on June 4th. Young worms cut a hole into the base of the nutlets and feed inside the nutlets. As the small worm feeds, pellets of frass are produced and collected outside the nutlets in fine webs.

Where eggs are detected, chemical treatments should be applied in 3 to 6 days. Where feeding damage is detected, chemical treatment should be made that day.

Sevin, Zolone, or Malathion sprays may be used for control of pecan nut casebearers on home yard trees. Commercial producers can use axinphosmethyl (Guthion), carbaryl (Sevin), endosulfon (Thiodan), or phosalane (Zolone). Check the label on the chemical container for rates of application, mixing and application instruction.

A second insecticide application, about 7 days after the first, is needed in most years for effective pecan nut casebearer control.

The pecan nut casebearer has 3 generations per year. It is about 42 days between the occurance of each subsequent generation. Some years the second and third generations of this insect may cause considerable nut damage. Total nut loss is usually greater during the first generation because an individual larvae may destroy a complete nut cluster.

Zinc can be applied to the foliage of pecan trees when applying an insecticide for casebearer control. Regular zinc applications are needed for good development of pecans in this area.

• • •

It is time to spray for the first generation elm leaf beetles. Products containing carbaryl (Sevin), Methoxychlor and acephate (Orthene) are effective against elm leaf beetles. Commercial applicators with proper equipment may be needed to protect tall trees. More information on elm leaf beetles wil be given next week in this column.

Report on USDA sent to Reagan

WASHINGTON (AP) — A 54-page booklet explaining what the Agriculture Department did in 1986 is not likely to become a best-seller.

The report, required by law, has been viewed for years by some USDA professionals as a duty that could prompt a flush of pride in only the most gung-ho careerist or ambitious political appointee.

Even by USDA standards, the report's a snooze, its narrative ranking with the first-edition 1973 Agricultural Statistics, and placing somewhere after the March 23, 1981, Livestock Market News as a historical document.

Still, the annual report sent by Agriculture Secretary Richard E. Lyng to President Reagan does apprise the president of goings-on in the innards of the sprawling bureaucracy, which reach deeply into the nation's more than 3,000 counties through local offices where farmers sign up for crop subsidies, apply for operating loans or file insurance claims.

In case Reagan wants to peruse the "Report of the Secretary of Agriculture, 1986," instead of the latest transcript of the Iran-Contra proceedings, some items might be worthy of note.

Last year, the USDA "directed much of its efforts toward implementing the Food Security Act of 1985, landmark legislation forged to ease American farmers into a new era of market-oriented agriculture," the report said.

And USDA also "took several steps to assist farmers beset by the forces of nature and financial difficulties," it said. The Farmers Home Administration helped do this by "assuring that more than 98 percent of their farm borrowers would be able to stay in operation."

The department's management "improved markedly as new, more productive systems, resulting in the savings of millions of dollars, were initiated," the report said.

However, Reagan was not reminded that USDA's commodity programs, including price supports and payments to farmers, jumped to a record of about $26 billion last year. A section in the report about operations of the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service — the agency handling the programs — failed to mention those costs.

The report noted in describing operations of the Foreign Agricultural Service that U.S. farm exports dropped 16 percent last year to $26.3 billion and were 40 percent below the record of $43.8 billion in 1981.

But the agency said credit programs helped foreign customers buy U.S. commodities and that Congress had authorized initiatives to help promote foreign economic growth through greater use of the private agricultural sector.

The Forest Service sent a new RPA report to Congress last year. That is short for the Recommended Renewable Resources Planning Act Program.

Campers were able to save 15 per cent on fees at national forest campsites under a new stamp program introduced last year, the report said. The stamps can be bought from Forest Service offices and private vendors before campers reach their destinations.

And Woodsy Owl was 15 years old in 1986, Mr. President.

Some other USDA tidbits in the report:

— The Agricultural Cooperative Service studied the feasibility of merging three major dairy cooperatives in the Midwest, and two prune-drying cooperatives in California.

USDA says meat, poultry inspectors do OK job in most cases

By DON KENDALL
AP Farm Writer

AGRICULTURE

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal inspectors generally are doing a good job protecting the nation's meat and poultry supplies, except in a few problem areas, according to an internal report by the Agriculture Department's own auditors.

The probe involved 132 plants to evaluate the management of federal meat and poultry inspection programs by the department's Food Safety and Inspection Service. Auditors also checked operations at the agency's national office, all five regional offices and two of its 27 area offices.

"We found that, generally, FSIS had been effective in fulfilling its mission of assuring that the nation's meat and poultry supply was wholesome and unadulterated," the report said. "However, we did identify areas of concern which need attention by FSIS management."

For example, the report said the agency lacked the authority to impose "appropriate and meaningful sanctions" against plants that violate federal standards, except for extreme cases.

"As a result, a few plants maintained only minimal levels of sanitation," the report said. "Many producers (plants) repeatedly marketed animals containing illegal levels of drug residues, and some manufacturers (of food products) did not provide full and accurate distribution information to aid in recalls of adulterated products."

The audit was sent last Sept. 26 to the inspection agency by the department's Office of Inspector General but was not made public at the time. A copy of the report was provided The Associated Press upon request.

Although the plants reviewed included both meat and poultry operations, large and small, the report did not identify them by name or location. Many of the types of problems and violations have been noted by private groups, whistleblowers and others.

Recent hearings have been held in Congress into the status of USDA food inspection operations and the rate of contamination by bacteria and pesticides, and more are planned.

"During our plant visits, we identified problems with the maintenance of structural fixtures, sanitation of equipment and control of condensation (water)," the report said. "In over half the plants reviewed, inspectors had not exercised adequate control over the use and storage of chemicals and pesticides."

The report added: "In over 40 percent of the plants, we identified one or more instances where condemned products had not been controlled to ensure that they would not re-enter the food chain."

Auditors said they found more deficiencies in large poultry slaughter plants than in the large red meat plants. And there was a relatively low rate of sanitation problems in "small processing plants with simple operations."

The USDA agency is responsible for inspecting more than 7,000 meat and poultry plants across the country, in every state and territory, the report said. In 1985, inspectors examined more than 120.5 million head of livestock and 4.8 billion chickens and other fowl, plus more than 66.4 billion pounds of processed red meat products and 53.1 billion pounds of poultry meat products.

According to the report, the inspecting agency, FSIS, responded favorably to the findings and recommendations, except for suggesting that proposals for some changes be referred to policy officials at a higher level.

In a letter included in the report, FSIS administrator Donald L. Houston agreed that some legislative changes would be required, including greater authority for cracking down on wayward plants, which often continue operating for years before current administrative procedures are exhausted.

Houston also noted that FSIS had already sought to revise federal law which requires meat and poultry to be under continuous federal inspection.

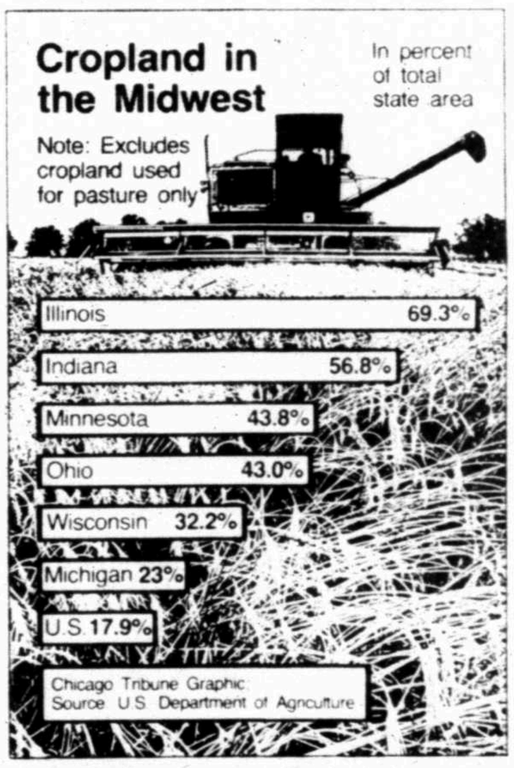

"If the statutory requirements are amended and increased discretionary authority becomes a reality, we intend to consider a reduced frequency of inspection in small processing plants with simple operations as one of the first steps in implementing the authority," Houston said.

After Houston wrote the letter last September, the 99th Congress in its final hours passed the Processed Products Inspection Improvement Act, which gives USDA greater discretion in allocating inspectors in processing plants — a step away from the historic practice of continuous inspection.

The new law, however, related only to plants that turn out processed meat and poultry products. Continuous inspection is still required at slaughter plants, but this is being questioned too.

According to the auditors, a selective, non-continuous system for inspecting cattle, hogs, sheep and poultry as they move through the plant would work as well and help save money.

"We believe that with a risk-based statistical approach to the inspection process, FSIS could maintain or increase the current level of consumer protection and be in a better position to effectively respond to potential budget reductions," the report said.

Federal aid suggested for ex-farmers

By MIKE ROBINSON

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal dollars may be needed to help rural communities adjust as economic problems drive more farmers off the land, according to an Agriculture Department report.

"Their limited capacity to absorb more displaced farmers may translate into not only a loss of farm families but also additional job and population losses in the local service and retail sectors," said the report issued Tuesday by USDA's Economic Research Service.

"The resulting financial stress for rural governments would mean that without outside help from state and federal governments, many will be unable to provide a stable environment for economic growth or even manage population decline effectively," the report said.

The report, "How Is Farm Financial Stress Affecting Rural America?" comes amid forecasts of an upturn for much of the farm economy, based in part on the lower dollar and increased exports.

It said, however, that "further restructuring in the agricultural sector seems unavoidable, at least in the short run." The picture is particularly grim for parts of the northern plains, lake states and Corn Belt, it said.

"Although both interest rates and the value of the dollar abroad dropped substantially in 1986, major problems such as excess capacity, low commodity prices, diminished export markets and high debt levels continue to plague the farm economy," it said. "If these trends accelerate, more farm sales, foreclosures and bankruptcies are inevitable.

"And more farm operators will have to face difficult economic adjustments in the immediate future. This bloc of farmers will be made up of large operators and, perhaps, an increasing number of smaller operators who rely on off-farm income for a major part of their household income."

The possibility that the problems will be widespread and affect entire regions has prompted an argument for a federal role in "helping to restructure the farm sector and to ease adverse effects," according to the report. "One possible option might be broadening USDA's direct responsibility for farmers' welfare to encompass the transition of marginal farmers to other occupations."

The report said efforts to help displaced farmers find new jobs could include education and training programs, assistance in starting new businesses and "easing capital losses associated with leaving agriculture."

"A determination by USDA not to abandon producers as soon as they stop active farming would fulfill a long-time commitment to these people who, because they have been farmers, are not well served by the nation's social safety net programs, such as unemployment compensation," the report said.

Increasingly, farmers have sought to subsidize their own farming operations with off-farm income.

'83 program had positive effect on erosion

WASHINGTON (AP) — A massive land-idling program ordered in 1983 to curb the buildup of surplus crops reduced erosion on those idled acres by an average of 24 percent, according to Agriculture Department estimates.

According to surveys by two USDA agencies — the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service, and the Soil Conservation Service — the rate of soil erosion on the idled land was reduced to an average of 5.8 tons per year from 7.6 tons previously.

The 1983 programs were highlighted by PIK, a payment-in-kind arrangement under which farmers qualified for free surplus government commodities in return for taking land from crop production.

In all, 1,234,000 farms participated in the 1983 programs, and a record 78.8 million acres were taken from the production of major crops, including wheat, corn, cotton and rice.

"Almost 90 percent of the (soil) savings occurred on land that, without the diversion programs, would have eroded at more than twice the tolerance level" of land to sustain its productivity, the department's Economic Research Service said in a staff report.

About two-thirds of the soil savings occured in the Northern Plains and Corn Belt, the regions with the most acreage in the programs, the report said. However, in the Appalachian and Southeast regions, where much less acreage was put into the programs, soil loss from the land idled was reduced by more than half.

"No significant soil savings were found in the Pacific, Mountain or Southern Plains regions," the report said. "The sampled counties in the Mountain region incurred more soil loss as a group with the diversion programs than without them."

"The poor showing in the West could be attributed to regional differences in farming practices and wind erosion," the report said. "While there was no reported wind erosion in the Appalachian, Southeast or Northeast regions, considerable wind erosion occurred in the more western regions, where much of the idled land had been in cotton or wheat, and with little or no protective crop residue cover."

Farms in the feed grain programs accounted for most of the soil savings on the idled land. The report also showed that these farms also had the highest savings per acre, reducing erosion of diverted land by an average of 32 percent.

"Primarily because of wind erosion on fallow land, wheat program participants had the worst performance, with an average erosion reduction of only 14 percent on diverted acres," the report said.

May gardening, yard care not over

Kiker

Here are some tips for May gardening and yard care:

1. Cut off old blossoms on spring flowering annuals, such as pansies, snapdragons, stock and calendulas to prolong the flowering season.

2. Continue to fertilize roses every four to six weeks with small amounts of a balanced fertilizer.

3. Allow foliage of spring flowering bulbs to mature and yellow before removing.

4. Set out plants of hybrid portulaca (Purslane) in sunny areas. Place root cuttings (3-inch stems) of your favorite colors in moist, sandy soil.

5. It is not too late to sow directly into the soil sunflower, zinnia, morning glory, portulaca, marigold, cosmos, periwinkle and gourd seeds. Achimenes, cannas, dahlias and other flowering bulbs may also be planted in May.

6. Do not forget to spray roses for black spot control. Use triforine, phaltan, benomyl or menab at seven-day intervals.

7. Do not neglect to pinch back the terminal growth on newly planted annual and perennial plants. This will result in shorter, more compact, better branched plants with more flowers.

8. It's time to plant caladium tubers, impatiens and begonias in shady areas.

9. Make cuttings of your favorite chrysanthemums and root them in a mixture of sand and peat moss. Cover cutting with plastic and place in a shaded area for five or six days to prevent wilting.

10. Replace or replenish mulch materials in flower beds and shrub borders to conserve moisture and reduce weed growth.

11. To get maximum flower production from crape myrtle, be sure to fertilize them with a complete fertilizer this month.

12. Lace bugs are often found on the underside of the leaves of among others, pyracantha, live oak and azaleas. Acephate, dimethoate, diazinon or malathion will give good control.

FAMILY MATTERS

Mother bewildered by daughters' fighting

By JIM MAY

May

DEAR FAMILY: My 3-year-old and my 16-month-old seem to fight constantly. I have tried everything I know to help them get along better. Nothing has seemed to work so far. I had always dreamed of my two daughters having a close, supportive relationship. This is definitely not what I had in mind. What would you suggest I do? JG

DEAR JG: This is a very difficult time in your children's lives. It is a time of growth and learning for your 16-month-old. It also is a time when most children seem to become very ornery and regularly express negativism. She is beginning to move from total dependence to some independence. It is a very challenging time for most parents.

The problems you have observed between your girls is well-known in literature. Your 3-year-old is still predominantly oriented toward you and her home. She is probably having as much trouble coping with this situation as you are. She needs reassurance that you still love her. This may be much harder than it sounds because you probably have to scold her when she attacks her little sister.

Dr. Burton White, in his book "The First Three Years," suggests the following:

- Be very firm with the older child so that she understands there are behaviors that are not acceptable under any conditions.
- Every day give the older child some private time free from all distractions, especially free from the younger child.
- Make a real effort to stimulate the older child's interest. Give her a chance to develop her social skills by inviting her friends over or by letting her visit friends.

In know it's hard on you and others who have to deal with this situation. Good luck.

DEAR FAMILY: My husband never seems to have time to spend with our children. I know he is very busy and we are lucky that he still has a job to be busy with. I just wish that there was a way he could find the time. Do you have any ideas I might try? DF

DEAR DF: Time is valuable and most people do not waste any available time. If we are to do one thing, most likely something else will not get done. All I can do is to share a story with you that the Rev. Dr. Daniel Vestal of First Baptist Church told to a gathering of parents and children at the Child Development Center's Family Program.

There was a young man who graduated from college with a degree in architecture. He wanted very much to be a builder. Soon after graduation, his father sat down with him and told him he wanted to help him get started. The father said he had a friend who wanted to build a house, so the father contracted his son. But the father would not tell his son who the house was for.

The son did his job and designed a lovely home. He met with his father and the plans were approved, but the son still could not find out who the house was for. When it was time for the house's foundation to be poured, the son decided to pour a less expensive foundation than he should have — after all he would make more money on the house if he scrimped on the foundation. Then for the house frame, he decided to use cheaper lumber than normal — for after all who would know? And besides, that meant more money for him. Then the roof was to be put on the house and he decided to use cheaper shingles — for after all, who would really know and he would make more money. When it came time to paint the house, he decided to use cheaper paint — the paint would look good for a while but would not last as long. The son also chose a cheaper grade of carpet and padding than he thought appropriate; but after all, probably everyone else did it that way — and besides, who would know?

Finally, the house was finished and it looked great. He called his father to come inspect the house. When his father finished walking through the house, he commended his son on a job well done. The son was very curious, and asked again who the new owner of the house was going to be. The father smiled and said, "You are, son. I wanted you to have the first fruits of your labors."

Dr. Vestal then asked the audience, "Who did the son cheat?" Voices answered, "Himself!" I think that is what happens when men do not spend time, real time, with their children when they are young.

DEAR ABBY

Shower gift given second time around

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Now that the wedding season is here again, I thought I might pass along a funny thing that happened to me when I got married five years ago. (I learned a valuable lesson from it.)

During my bridal shower, I opened a gift from a girl who (fortunately for her) could not attend the shower. The card read: "For Sue and Jim with love from Donna and Sam." As I removed a beautiful set of salad bowls from the box, another card fell out — so I picked it up to read aloud, and nearly fell over when I read: "To Donna and Sam, happy wedding and love from The Smiths." Luckily I caught myself before I read it out loud.

My husband and I think of the Smiths every time we use those lovely salad bowls. I also learned a valuable lesson before I made the same mistake.

Donna never found out that her faux pas was discovered. The names above are not the real ones, so just sign me ... NOT FOOLED

DEAR NOT FOOLED: You have passed on a valuable warning. There's nothing wrong with recycling a gift, but one should carefully examine the wrappings to make sure there is no card nestled in the tissue from the original giver.

DEAR ABBY: I am a 27-year-old Minnesota male, dating a 21-year-old female from Georgia. Her folks are strict Southern Baptists, and the time has come for me to ask "Papa Daddy" for his daughter's hand in marriage. So what's the problem? Well, I've been divorced for six years and my girlfriend and her sister say, "Don't tell the folks!"

However, I love her folks, and we get along very well. I am of the same religion, and I know they like and trust me.

What do you think? — GEORGIA ON MY MIND

DEAR GEORGIA: A failed marriage is not a crime. But one question: Are there any children in your closet? I advise you to tell your future in-laws the heretofore undisclosed details of your past. And the sooner the better.

DEAR ABBY: I just read about the poor guy who took a gal out to dinner and on their first date she rubbed her shoeless foot against his leg. I've given it lots of thought and concluded that:

1. She "knee-ded" him badly.
2. She was starting a romance from scratch.
3. Her behavior was "leg-endary."
4. In confessing to her priest the next day she said, "Father, I have shinned!" — HAROLD Z., CHICAGO

P.S. Abby, is this true?

DEAR HAROLD: Of course. Truth is stranger than friction.

DEAR ABBY: For the past four years I have been dating a wonderful woman. We share many common interests, we love each other and are contemplating marriage. One matter stands in the way. "Greta" is 6 feet tall and I am 5 feet 9. We have come a long way in adjusting to the height difference, but at times we are uncomfortable in public. I've noticed that Greta often wears "flats" on dressy occasions. This bothers me because I know how much she loves to wear heels.

Abby, are there any treatments to alter height? I would like to be about 3 inches taller. Greta has also heard that there is a form of surgery to decrease height. Any information you can provide will be greatly appreciated by both of us. — GRETA'S GUY IN GARDENA

DEAR GUY: I would be very leery of any kind of treatment or surgery that promised to alter one's height. Tell Greta to put her heels back on, and should anyone ask if it bothers you to be seen with a woman who is taller than you, say, "No, I don't mind looking up to the woman I love."

DEAR ABBY: My boyfriend is constantly telling me he wants to marry me. We are currently living together and have no definite plans to marry as yet.

My problem is that my grandmother is very sick and, according to the doctor, she doesn't have much time left. My grandmother is very dear to me (I am her only granddaughter), and I know she would love to see me married.

I have asked my boyfriend several times if we can get married in the near future while my grandmother is still around. His reply is always, "Wait until we have more money."

Do you think he really wants to marry me? — CONFUSED IN CANADA

DEAR CONFUSED: Not enough.

Female designs Hearst castle

By LEON WHITESON
Hearst News Service

LOS ANGELES — When Julia Morgan, designer of William Randolph Hearst's San Simeon castle and almost 800 buildings throughout California and the West, applied to the famous Parisian Ecole des Beaux-Arts in 1896 she was told that the school "didn't wish to encourage young ladies" to become architects. Morgan wrote back that she intended to persist "just to show that 'les jeunes filles' are not discouraged." In 1902 she became the first woman ever to graduate from the Ecole.

Eighty-five years later women are still battling not to be discouraged in the macho profession of architecture. The first Julia Morgan Colloquium on women in architecture, subtitled "Different Voices: Architects, Images and Options in the 1980s," held at the University of California at Los Angeles (UCLA) Graduate School of Architecture and Urban Planning last week, discussed the status and struggles of female professionals in the 1980s.

A distinguished panel of women architects and planners discussed their experiences before the first Julia Morgan Award "for outstanding contributions to the understanding of architecture by a woman" was presented to noted historian and author Esther McCoy.

UCLA historian Diane Favro, an organizer of the colloquium, opened the events with a slide lecture on Morgan that emphasized the architect's priority of concern for the clients and the users of her buildings over the assertion of her own design ego.

"Julia was deeply committed to a sense of obligation to her projects and the people involved," Favro said. "This obligation extended to her staff, for whom she often cooked hot dinners. And she even used to bring food for Mary Ann, the elephant at Hearst Castle."

Morgan's main projects in Southern California, apart from Hearst Castle, include the Herald building, the Hollywood Studio Club, several houses for Hearst's inamorata Marion Davies and three local YWCAs. The great variety of Morgan's styles, varying from the opulent Venetian rococo of Hearst Castle to woodsy women's clubs in the San Francisco area, is explained by the absence of that rampant self-importance that marks the work of many of her male contemporaries.

"The buildings speak, I do not speak," Morgan said simply.

Remarking that today women represent about 7 percent of practitioners but 27 percent of UCLA graduate students, planner Julia Thomas cautioned that "things have changed since Julia Morgan's time. Women have to sell themselves much more vigorously in this highly competitive, intensely political profession."

Architect Kate Diamond, who runs a practice with two women partners, agreed that "women still have to do better than men. And, like Julia Morgan, we still feel a strong obligation to satisfy the needs of clients and building users." UCLA professor and author Dolores Hayden wondered how women might deal with the stereotypes put upon them by clients and the public at large. She talked of "the larger need to make architecture sensitive to women in these days when the nuclear family is rapidly becoming a minority. We need day care, we need flexible housing alternatives. We need, in short, to understand the politics of space."

Architect Brenda Levin took up this theme with the recounting of her difficult decision to build a practice before starting a family. "There are conflicts every day, between my role as a professional and as a mom. Though I have a supportive husband who happens to share an office with me, I'm still torn. How, then, can a woman designer be as singly focused on a driven career path as her male competitors often are?"

Julie Eizenberg, a younger architect who is also a mother, argued with her older colleagues that "the only thing that can stop women now are their own limitations. I see no difference between women and men, thanks to the female groundbreakers of earlier generations. It's hard for all of us."

Joy Picus talked about "using power in a man's world. You have to realize that men test each other as well as women, and you'd better stand your ground or go under."

The ghost of Julia Morgan reappeared powerfully in the discussion that followed, that examined the difference between women and men as designers. "Julia saw buildings as stage sets for relationships, not hierarchies of status, as males tend to do," Favro claimed. "She was highly praised by her clients, though architectural historians have been critical of the eclectic range of her designs. It was very female of her to have no identifiable style, like Frank Lloyd Wright, say. She simply served her patrons."

Other colloquium audience participants suggested that the styles of female architects tend to emphasize "the passive not the active role, the listening not the telling," as one woman said. Favro remarked that it was interesting that "Julia's office on the Hearst Castle site, over the 20 years of its construction, was a tiny lean-to no bigger than a wren's nest."

As the discussion heated up it became clear that there is no simple categorization possible between male and female characteristics in architecture. Frank Lloyd Wright's "organic" sensitivity to design in harmony with its setting was certainly a "listening" not a "telling" mode. Though many male modernists, following Le Corbusier's and Mies van der Rohe's machismo, have been obsessed with creating blatantly phallic objects standing alone and egotistical in the midst of our cities, we now, in the postmodernist era, favor more fanciful and romantic designers like Charles Moore or Frank Gehry whose work is certainly charged with "female" responses and gestures.

When Julia Morgan died in 1957 at the age of 85 she was almost penniless and seriously underappreciated. It is a measure of women architects' increasing self-assurance and search for "different voices" that the UCLA colloquium should call upon her image as a foundation for the future.

Women may not develop skills

By JANE CLIFFORD
Copley News Service

"Today's baby girl can grow up to be anything she wants. But what she ends up wanting may be subtly influenced from the time she picks up her first doll until she picks up her college degree.

Even if she's born with the potential to succeed as a scientist or mathematician, she may never develop it, say researchers from the Project on the Status and Education of Women of the American Association of Colleges.

Although statistics seem to indicate an improving picture for the future, the project's recent study cites the following:

Despite the expansion of opportunities for women in the past 20 years, most occupations remain sex-segregated.

Although more women are in the work force, they're largely clustered in what is commonly referred to as "the pink-collar ghetto" — low-status, low-income clerical, service or retail sales jobs.

50 million women represented 44 percent of the nation's work force in 1984. But they accounted for only 5.7 percent of the engineers, 15.4 percent of the lawyers and judges, 14.6 percent of the doctors and dentists and 28 percent of the managers and administrators.

In short, the better-paying, more prestigious positions are typically held by people who shave their faces, not their legs.

"At least 75 percent of the jobs in higher-paying professions are held by men," the study reads.

The authors of the study, "Looking for More than a Few Good Women in Traditionally Male Fields," are especially troubled by the potential loss to the sciences, medicine, high technology and other professions when women are hindered from developing their talents in these areas.

According to Julie Kuhn Ehrhart and Bernice R. Sandler, authors of the study, there are reasons why women's career choices haven't changed faster — and reasons behind those reasons:

Girls are not as likely to be interested in traditionally male careers. "Boys receive chemistry sets, building toys, trucks and sports equipment; girls receive dolls, kitchen equipment and sewing and embroidery kits."

Parents' expectations that their children's interests and achievements will follow traditional sex roles can steer girls away from certain areas. "In general, boys are encouraged to be active and independent, to explore and to learn how things work. Girls are 'taught' to be passive, verbally oriented and dependent."

Young women are not as well prepared for advanced mathematics and science course work as their male peers. "Encouragement from parents to succeed in math, science and technology is crucial in a girl's decision to take these courses in high school."

Girls who don't take such courses, or don't believe they need to do well, the authors point out, "are potentially 'filtered out' of many college majors such as science, management, engineering and medicine, all of which typically require several semesters of high school mathematics for admission."

Also, they say, some girls are confused when seeing their mothers in such fields and trying to balance the demands of home and work. That, too, may act as a deterrent.

The study concludes that colleges and universities must do their best both to attract women to professional schools and retain them in fields that, for now, are still predominantly male.

While colleges need to actively recruit women to professional schools, some organizations, such as the Society of Women Engineers, give moral and social support to women students and go to high schools to talk to young women about their fields.

Sociologists: Women work harder at job, home

By TRICIA CRANE
Hearst News Service

Women work harder than men both at home and at their jobs, according to a new study by Denise and William Bielby, married sociologists at the University of California-Santa Barbara.

"Women give more time and attention to their jobs than men, despite the fact that women also spend more than twice as much time on household tasks," says Denise, reading the conclusion of a study she conducted in collaboration with her husband. The Bielbys, who analyzed data from a representative national survey conducted by the University of Michigan of 1,515 working men and women, found that more women than men reported having jobs that call for considerable physical or mental effort and at which they expend greater effort than is required.

The Bielby study challenges a long-held economic assumption that the reason women don't earn as much money as men is because they allocate less effort to work because of family and household responsibilities and therefore seek less demanding jobs with lower hourly wages.

In the past, economists who have looked at the effort expended by men and women at work have argued that a woman is more likely to perceive her job as being more demanding because of the toll taken on her store of energy by her household responsibilities. But the Bielby study shows this assumption to be false.

"If that were the case," says Denise, "we would not expect women to score higher on the question we asked regarding the effort put into a job beyond what is required." If the existing assumptions of economists were true, she says, this "should be precisely where women would make the trade off, where they should be reducing effort in the workplace in order to meet family obligatons. But this is not what we found."

The Bielby study is significant because economists have shown that assumptions about gender differences can lead to discrimination in employment.

"Ironically," she says, "our results suggest that an astute employer would do better by discriminating against men than women. Our findings show that roughly 65 to 70 percent of all women allocate more effort to work that do men with comparable attributes and responsibilities."

Children of Nazis shadowed by parents' complicity

EDITOR'S NOTE — The trial of Klaus Barbie in France has rekindled memories of the horror and pain of another time. For some, however, the memories are in the blood. Here is an update on the children of the Nazis.

By KEVIN COSTELLOE

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — A lifetime later, they wrestle still with the ghosts of Nazi fathers.

Niklas Frank thanks God his father was hanged. Irmgard Bormann looks for her "good father" in other men. Edda Goering is sure her famous parent merely "wanted the best for Germany."

Some condemn the atrocities, disown the father, seek reconciliation with the Jews. Some reject the guilt and burnish the memory of a loving man, a German patriot. But for the most part, two generations after the Third Reich collapsed, the offspring of Nazi leaders, living quiet lives in Germany or Austria, simply shun the public eye and keep to themselves their thoughts on the men who terrorized humanity, men they knew so well.

At times, the world will not allow them to unburden themselves.

Helmut Seyss-Inquart, grandson of the notorious Nazi overseer of the Netherlands during World War II, recently offered his help to the Anne Frank Foundation, the Amsterdam organization named for the Jewish girl whose diaries, written before her death in a Nazi concentration camp, have inspired millions.

But the gesture by Arthur Seyss-Inquart's descendant was rejected.

The grandson, a teacher, says he wanted to "warn against these sorts of anti-democratic, totalitarian systems with their racial delusions, which irrevocably end with the murdering of certain population groups."

Klaus Barbie

In a telephone interview with The Associated Press from his home in Austria, Seyss-Inquart, whose grandfather was executed after being convicted of war crimes at the Nuremberg trials, said he "wasn't disappointed, but rather a little surprised" by the foundation's decision.

PETER SICHROVSKY, a Vienna author who recently published a book about children and grandchildren of Nazis, criticized the foundation's action.

"It's a bad mistake. It deprives the younger generation of the chance to show that they are different from their fathers and grandfathers," Sichrovsky, 39, told the AP. But the author, who is Jewish, said he could understand the feelings of the older survivors of the concentration camps.

Sichrovsky, whose book is called "Born Guilty — Children of Nazi Families," appeared as a commentator on a major television documentary May 14 featuring children of some of the most prominent Nazis.

"Thank God for living without this father, and for growing up without this father!" Niklas Frank, son of Hans Frank, declared on the TV program.

As the dreaded Nazi governor of Poland, Hans Frank played a key role in the Nazi slaughter of 6 million Jews. He was executed after being convicted of war crimes at the main Nuremberg trial. His son is now a journalist in Hamburg.

"I was lucky that they hanged my father," the younger Frank said. Otherwise, he said, he might have been "poisoned" by his father's fascist ideas.

"I'm no fan of capital punishment, except for those people," he added, pointing to pictures of top-ranking Nazis.

Irmgard Bormann, a daughter of Hitler's secretary and top aide Martin Bormann, took a much different view.

"I ALWAYS wanted a husband who would be just like my father. I never got him," she said, with her face obscured by special lighting to avoid recognition by the TV audience.

"I can't be made responsible for what he did. He tried to do the best. It's that way in life, either eat or be eaten," said Ms. Bormann, who the television producer said now resides in Italy.

She noted she was 12 years old when the war ended and her father disappeared, and consequently had known him well. "As a father, he was a good father. He was angry sometimes, but very caring, very thrifty and interested in everything," she said. Martin Bormann was pronounced dead in 1973.

Wolf-Ruediger Hess, son of 93-year-old Hitler deputy Rudolf Hess, said his father is aware of the son's efforts to free him from a life sentence in West Berlin's Spandau prison.

People he deals with in everyday business generally know he is the war-criminal's son, the younger Hess said.

"I have known — and I am not exaggerating — in 95 percent of the cases, if not more, positive reactions" to the fact he is the son of the former high-ranking Nazi, the 49-year-old Hess said during the documentary.

Cologne author Heribert Schwan said it took him six years to track down the Nazis' offspring and convince six of them to appear on the show, entitled "Between Hatred and Love," for West Germany's ARD television network.

He said the more than 60 offspring interviewed generally expressed one of three basic reactions: a positive view of the past, hatred and rejection, or defense of the Nazi family member.

"The third generation is much more critical toward their grandfathers," Schwan told The AP. He said some in the documentary were speaking publicly on the issue for the first time.

THE DISCOVERY of the remains of Josef Mengele, the "Angel of Death" of the Auschwitz concentration camp, thrust his son, Rolf, into the spotlight in June 1985.

Rolf, then a 41-year-old lawyer in the southern West German city of Freiburg, has conducted several TV interviews to talk about his father.

The younger Mengele told West Germany's ZDF television network he felt a "deep moral responsibility" for his father's deeds, but he also defended his decision not to alert authorities to the fugitive's whereabouts in the 1970s, when he took money to his father at a Brazil hideout.

Names help sons of men who plotted to kill Hitler

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — For the offspring of Nazi criminals, the public spotlight is often uninvited. But the sons of two men who plotted to kill Hitler have found that their family names helped their political careers.

Count Franz von Stauffenberg, who served in the West German Parliament from 1972 to 1984, told The Associated Press the widespread name recognition made his campaign "much easier."

Stauffenberg, now a member of the European Parliament from the conservative Christian Social Union, is the son of Lt. Col. Claus von Stauffenberg, who was executed after leading the bomb assassination attempt that wounded Nazi leader Adolf Hitler on July 20, 1944.

Manfred Rommel, son of famed Field Marshal Erwin Rommel, who killed himself rather than face trial for complicity in the 1944 attack, also said the family name "was more of a help than a hindrance" in being elected mayor of Stuttgart in 1974.

"Especially people in the older generation recognized it, and that helped," the 58-year-old Christian Democratic mayor said in an AP interview in his spacious office in Stuttgart's modern city hall.

'You can't start studying the Nazi era by starting in 1933 when they came to power," Rommel said, touching on the themes of his talks. "If there hadn't been the breakdown of democracy, Hitler would never have come to power."

Rommel acknowledges that West Germany still is occasionally plagued by neo-Nazi violence, but he sees more danger in the radical elements of the anti-NATO, environmentalist Greens party.

Cisneros subpoenaed in cop's murder trial

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Mayor Henry Cisneros, who said the slaying of a suspected vigilante cop may have saved several other lives, has been subpoenaed to testify for another patrolman charged in the case.

Farrell Tucker, 35, faces a murder trial next week in the slaying of his former partner, Stephen R. Smith, 31.

Smith was suspected of vigilante activities and allegedly planned to kill three top law enforcement officials he blamed for damaging his career. Tucker maintains he shot Smith in self-defense last Aug. 18.

The highly publicized case cost two police chiefs their jobs and prompted a federal investigation and an $8 million lawsuit over alleged civil rights violations.

At the time of the shooting, Cisneros said Smith was not a well man.

"Maybe we were spared a multiple murder," Cisneros said. "One has to wonder where this thing might have gone. It is a sad turn of events."

Wednesday, Bexar County District Clerk David Garcia issued subpoenas requiring Cisneros, City Manager Lou Fox and Assistant City Manager Bill Donahue to testify for Tucker.

Tucker's attorney, Terry McDonald, requested the subpoenas for the city officials, saying they had testified at length before the Bexar County grand jury that indicted Tucker in Smith's slaying.

"They weren't listed as state witnesses and I don't have access to their grand jury testimony," McDonald said Thursday. "So I would have to assume that they have something to contribute."

He said he may ask the city officials if they had any direct knowledge of Smith's alleged vigilante activities.

Fox said Thursday that neither he nor Cisneros had received the subpoenas.

"If I can contribute anything I'll be happy to do that," Fox said. "I'll be happy to provide anything so that this gentleman receives a fair trial."

Donahue and Cisneros did not return telephone calls to The Associated Press.

Tucker, who was Smith's best friend, has been suspended since his indictment last October. He has told investigators that Smith, who was accused of brutalizing prisoners, planned to kill then-District Attorney Sam Millsap, then-Assistant Police Chief Frank Hoyack and then-Deputy Police Chief Robert Heuck.

On Aug. 18, Tucker met with the three officials, who told him to keep a planned meeting with Smith that night. Armed with two revolvers and a voice-activated tape recorder, Tucker met with Smith.

Tucker said that during a conversation in Smith's car, Smith grabbed one of the two handguns and threatened to kill him.

Tucker reached for the other revolver and shot Smith five times. The tape recorder did not produce anything audible, police said.

Clements vows to fight 'prima donnas' on taxes

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Gov. Bill Clements Thursday angrily pledged never to give in to "prima donna" lawmakers who "need to get out of their cocoons" and discover that Texas voters gave him a mandate to fight new taxes.

"The governor continues to make puzzling statements," said Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, the target of Clements' harshest comments. Hobby said it would take "some reality therapy" to bring the Republican governor and the Democratic-controlled Legislature together on a budget balancing plan.

Clements repeated his promise to veto any tax hike that brings in more than $2.9 billion. "Whether it's in this regular session which is shortly to come to a conclusion or whether it's in the next special session or the next special session or the next special session, I'm not going to change," he told reporters at an impromptu press conference.

"I'm not going to change. I'm not going to change."

The governor said he would hold fast to his position even if the budget stalemate lasts past Sept. 1 and into the next fiscal year. "Christmas is coming too," he said.

Clements said a breakthrough on the budget will come only when "totally unreasonable and unrealistic" senators and Hobby understand that Texans oppose the increased spending they are advocating. "They need to get out of their cocoons and get out there and talk to the people of Texas and understand what grass roots Texas is talking about," he said.

Asked to comment on Clements increasingly strident attacks, Hobby said: "When anybody starts to personalize the argument, they've lost the argument on the merits of the argument. That's why people resort to tactics like that."

The governor said lawmakers don't "realize who won the election and why I won the election.

"We need to look a little bit deeper than these superficial statements that are being made by some of these prima donnas here in Austin, Texas," he added. "We need to think about, 'What did the people vote for last November?' and 'Why did they vote?' I'm not going to change."

Senate passes bill that would delay marriages

Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — While fast foods, quickie auto tuneups and motorized banking have become modern American staples, the "impulse marriage" appears ready to depart the fast lane.

The Senate Thursday approved a proposal that would require a 72-hour cooling-off period between the time a marriage license is issued and the actual wedding ceremony.

A similar bill, which lawmakers say is an effort to reverse the growing divorce rate, has passed in the House. The proposal would join Texas with 30 other states that have similar laws.

If it passes, the measure would take effect Jan. 1. Any marriage that takes place within the three-day period would be voidable and subject to annulment.

Military personnel on active duty would be exempt from the cooling-off period. And others who can't wait can request a district court order to void the waiting period.

The Legislature in 1983 did away with the requirement for couples to submit to blood tests for syphilis before the wedding. A spokesman with the Health Department said it usually took five to seven days for the results of those tests to come back.

Part of 'Build Texas' plan delayed by House

By JIM WARREN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The House Thursday went along with part of Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby's "Build Texas" bond program, but some members, concerned about the state creating too much long-term debt, delayed a major portion of the package.

Hobby, in an effort to pump money into the state's economy and provide public works projects, offered his "Build Texas" program that would call for a statewide vote on $1.1 billion in general obligation bonds. The money would go toward construction projects such as prisons, libraries, mental hospitals as well as water projects.

The House, following the Senate's lead, agreed to a proposed constitutional amendment calling for $500 million in bonds for prisons, mental health hospitals and youth detention centers. Voters will decide whether to issue the bonds in a Nov. 3 election.

But another of Hobby's proposals — $400 million for local projects — faced opposition from Rep. Jim Rudd, the chief budget writer, and Rep. Stan Schlueter, the main tax writer. Concerned that the state was taking on too much bond debt, Rudd and Schlueter postponed it until today.

The prison and mental hospital bonds would finance those projects instead of paying for them through the appropriations process, as the state has done in the past. Neither the House nor Senate spending bills contain money for new prison construction, despite severe overcrowding in the Texas Department of Corrections.

Rep. Bob Aiken, D-Commerce and sponsor of the prison bond proposal, said the state cannot afford to pay lump sums for large construction projects like prisons. Paying for new prisons over a long period of time, Aiken said, will free up more money for other areas of state government.

Rep. Ric Williamson, D-Weatherford, said the state's 5.25 percent sales tax rate would jump to more than 7 percent if the state continued to pay for prisons up front.

But the controversy came on the public works bonds. Rudd, D-Brownfield, said his postponement was not an attempt to punish senators, many of whom have threatened to filibuster certain House bills. While the state has $2.1 billion in outstanding bonds, local governments have more than $40 billion in bond debt, Rudd said.

If the Legislature and the voters approve approve Hobby's local bond proposal, Rudd said, "We should stop fooling the public into believing we're a pay-as-you-go state."

Rep. Mark Stiles, D-Beaumont and sponsor of the local bond proposal, said he will try to take care of Rudd's concerns before the House votes on it today. Hobby said he would talk to Rudd about his problems with the measure, but disagreed that Texas had too much bond debt.

Senate votes to postpone penalties for hiring aliens

By PEGGY ROBERSON
Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON — The Senate Thursday agreed to delay the implementation of new penalties against employers who knowingly hire illegal aliens from June 1 to October 1.

The Immigration and Naturalization Service earlier had announced that it would not begin enforcement until July because of the delay in printing and distributing employer handbooks outlining the new rules.

Senators voted 48-45 to delay employer sanctions, a part of the omnibus immigration reform law passed last year. By a vote of 47-43, senators refused to reconsider that vote.

The amendment, sponsored by Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., is attached to a high-priority supplemental spending bill that is scheduled to clear the Senate today. The Senate Appropriations Committee included the immigration enforcement provision in its recommendations on the $9.4 billion spending measure.

A conference committee of House and Senate members will begin work Tuesday to weld the two bodies' versions into one measure that will be brought back to both houses for ratification before going to the president's desk.

The House version, with a $9.25 billion price tag, does not contain a postponement of employer sanctions, so conferees will either accept the Senate amendment or throw it out.

Sen. Alan K. Simpson, R-Wyo., chief sponsor of the 1986 immigration reform law, said postponing sanctions would merely add to employers' confusion. He said INS has undertaken an extensive education program, and that in any event INS will not penalize employers without a warning.

Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, however, late Thursday moved to send the spending measure back to the Appropriations Committee with instructions to make it "revenue neutral." Because the bill violates the budget ceiling, a single senator can block its consideration by raising a point of order.

Gramm said that committee members should "throw (the bill) out or throw out some program to offset the extra spending or come forth with a way to pay for it." Gramm is the author of the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings deficit reduction law.

Senators were to vote this morning whether to continue consideration of the measure on the Senate floor.

The catchall spending bill would replenish funds for programs due to run out of money before the start of the new fiscal year Oct. 1. It includes:

— $6.7 billion for agriculture programs of the Commodity Credit Corporation which had to stop writing checks May 1.

— A pay raise for federal workers and a new federal retirement system.

— An authorization for money to tear down the new U.S. Embassy in Moscow, believed to have been "bugged" by the Soviet Union.

Approved amendments attached to the bill include:

— A measure sponsored by Senate Majority Leader Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., and Minority Leader Robert Dole, R-Kan., requiring the administration to report on plans to escort oil tankers in the Persian Gulf before the U.S. becomes further involved in the region.

— A measure to change the criteria to be used by the Department of Energy in choosing a site for a huge multibillion-dollar advanced physics facility to build a superconducting super collider.

Fort Worth police check a hijacked bus for evidence after it was abandoned in Trinity Park west of downtown Fort Worth Thursday morning.

Police have suspect in bus hijacking

FORT WORTH (AP) — Police believe they know who may have commandeered a city bus, stabbed its sole passenger to death and then attacked the driver, but they say there have not yet been any arrests.

The driver, 22-year-old David Jeanfreau, told police a black male passenger commandeered the bus at knifepoint about 11:15 p.m. Wednesday, ordering him to drive to a park.

Once at the park, he said the man ordered him to the back of the bus while he sexually assaulted the only other passenger, 34-year-old Johnnie Gray of Fort Worth. She later died of stab wounds.

Jeanfreau managed to flee through the bus' back door, swim across the Trinity River as the hijacker pursued him and flag down a motorist on Interstate 30. He was later treated for the stab wound and not hospitalized.

Homicide Detective Sgt. Paul Kratz said police have ruled out Jeanfreau as a suspect because "we have been able to substantiate major portions of (Jeanfreau's) story through other witnesses."

Kratz said Jeanfreau did not activate the bus' emergency warning signal because the hijacker "was standing over him the whole time and the man specifically asked about the emergency warning system and seemed to know about it."

The suspect, however, is not another bus driver or a city employee, Kratz said.

Kratz also said the hijacker took Jeanfreau's billfold containing $60 in cash and went through Ms. Gray's purse.

NASA to study using liquid-fueled rockets

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — NASA has announced plans to study the feasibility of using liquid-fueled rockets to replace solid rocket boosters blamed for the Challenger disaster.

The Marshall Space Flight Center in Huntsville, Ala., said Thursday it was asking contractors to develop concepts for the design of liquid-fueled boosters that could be used to launch the shuttle or future spacecraft.

Marshall spokesman L.T. Spears said the center will consider the submitted proposals this summer and select two contractors to conduct a detailed, nine-month, $6 million study.

The 1986 accident that destroyed Challenger and killed its seven crew members was blamed on a flawed solid-fueled booster rocket.

Spears said liquid-fueled rocket engines are more versatile than solids because they can be throttled, held down on the launch pad after ignition and shut down in flight.

Solid rockets, however, instantly fire at full thrust and will continue to burn at that rate until the fuel is exhausted. The burn rate can't be modified once solids are ignited.

Spears said the request for proposals issued Thursday did not specify what kind of fuel could be used in the liquid rockets. NASA has flown rockets that use kerosene and oxygen, or hydrogen and oxygen as propellants. The shuttle's main engines use hydrogen and oxygen.

The rocket study would also consider whether proposed liquid-fueled rockets should be reusable or discarded after one use.

Hulls of the shuttle's solid-fueled rockets are recovered at sea and reused. Liquid-fueled rockets, however, such as the Saturn 5 used in the Apollo program, were used once and discarded.

The proposal reopens a debate that raged through the National Aeronautics and Space Administration during the 1970s when the space shuttle was being designed.

Some concepts then called for a liquid-fueled rocket booster system that would carry the shuttle to a high altitude, detach and then be flown back to a landing site near the launch pad, while the shuttle went on to orbit.

NASA abandoned the liquid-fueled booster concept, however, to save money in the space shuttle development, and chose to use solid-fueled rockets. The shuttle became the first manned spacecraft to be launched with solid rockets.

Challenger was destroyed when a joint in one of its two solid-fueled boosters leaked superheated gas that caused a fuel tank to rupture.

House votes for Indian transfer bill

AUSTIN (AP) — The House has voted to let the federal government take responsibility for the Alabama-Coushatta Indians in East Texas and the Tigua Indians in El Paso.

Both tribes are now under the oversight of the Texas Indian Commission.

The Senate-approved measure won preliminary House OK Thursday in a voice vote. Final approval would send it to Gov. Bill Clements.

The bill would only be effective if the U.S. Congress votes to take the two tribes and their reservations back under federal oversight.

If the transfer is made, the state government could only provide the tribes with services that are not provided by the federal government.

Officer charged in death of colleague at chess game

PHARR (AP) — A McAllen police officer was charged with involuntary manslaughter after he allegedly pointed what he though was an empty gun at a fellow officer during a chess game and pulled the trigger, police say.

Officer Jesus A. Ruiz, 22, was pronounced dead on arrival Thursday at McAllen Medical Center with a bullet wound in his abdomen, Pharr police spokesman Lt. Jesse Medina said.

McAllen police officer Noe Lara, 31, was charged with involuntary manslaughter in the shooting, and was later released from the Hidalgo County Jail on $20,000 bond, Medina said.

He said the shooting occurred about 4:40 a.m. while three officers and a civilian were at Lara's apartment playing chess.

"There was some evidence of (alcohol) consumption," Medina said, adding that there was no sign of a confrontation between the two men.

"The suspect officer recklessly got his weapon, probably thought it was empty and hit a live round," Medina said. "I would say there was not exactly horseplay, but a reckless use of the gun...Certainly we wouldn't have charged him if we didn't think so."

The Associated Press could reach neither Lara nor his attorney for comment Thursday.

The bullet that killed Ruiz was the only one in Lara's .357-caliber pistol, Medina said.

Ruiz was staying at Lara's Pharr apartment temporarily while waiting to move into another apartment, the spokesman said. Pharr is just east of McAllen in the Rio Grande Valley.

Art Hushen, spokesman for the McAllen police department, said Ruiz had been with the department since last July, and that Lara had been with the department since 1983.

Lara will be suspended pending the outcome of an investigation, Hushen said. He said the incident is the first accidental-shooting of an officer by another for the department, which has 151 officers.

STATE in brief

Window-washing rig's fall blamed on 'malfunction'

HOUSTON (AP) — A mechanical problem caused a window-washing rig to fall from a Houston skyscraper, killing three people, says the owner of the company.

"We theorize there was a malfunction in the system," LaRue Coleman, owner of Jobs Building Services Inc., said Wednesday. "The wind, in my opinion, had absolutely nothing at all to do with it."

Fire department officials said Tuesday they believed the one-ton scaffold was pushed by the wind and in turn broke a steel plate that was supposed to keep it from flying off a track at the top of the Pennzoil Building.

Two of Coleman's employees died and a woman pedestrian was killed when the platform, used to wash windows on the 36-story landmark, fell 31 floors during the Tuesday afternoon lunch hour. One other woman pedestrian was injured.

Winds were gusting to about 25 mph at the time of the accident.

Gerald D. Hines Interest, which owns the building, has suspended all window washing on the roughly 100 buildings it owns in the Houston area until the cause of the accident is determined, said Pat Harris, a Hines spokeswoman.

Jet's windshield shatters

DALLAS (AP) — Part of a cockpit windshield on an American Airlines DC-10 shattered while the jet was en route from New York City to Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport Thursday, but the craft landed routinely, officials said.

"The outer windshield pane on the captain's side shattered, but the inner pane was intact," American spokesman Ed Martelle said.

Officials were investigating the cause of the breakage, he said, noting that the 269 passengers on the 3½ hour flight probably were unaware of the mishap.

Martelle said he did not know at what altitude the DC-10 — Flight 491 from La Guardia Airport to D-FW — was flying or at what time the accident occurred.

Chlordane used in school

HENDERSON (AP) — A student acting on the instructions of the principal repeatedly sprayed a suspected cancer-causing pesticide inside and outside the school, authorities say.

The student became ill after the most recent spraying of chlordane last Friday and was briefly hospitalized, said Max Woodfin, executive assistant in the regulatory division of the Texas Department of Agriculture.

After a preliminary investigation, the private Hope Christian School was ordered closed Thursday, the last day of the school year, Woodfin said. About 40 children attend the school.

Engineer electrocuted

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A veteran broadcast engineer was electrocuted when he apparently touched two high-voltage lines while working on a radio station's transmitter, officials said.

Clarence Betz, 61, was found dead around 11:30 p.m. Thursday, police said. He apparently had been dead several hours, investigators said.

The body was found at the KRNN transmitter site.

Betz had been working alone on the transmitter when his left arm apparently brushed the power lines, officials said.

ABC's Whitaker in Midland 'for Belmont'

By BOB BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

The army putting the Scharbauer family of Midland under siege isn't carrying rifles or grenades or driving tanks. Instead, they are armed with pens, paper, tape recorders and television cameras.

And, the army of reporters is growing day by day as the running of Belmont, the third leg of horse racing's Triple Crown, draws nearer. This third race is all that separates Midland-owned Alysheba from three-year-old immortality.

The press putting the Scharbauer family — Dorothy, daughter Pam and husband Clarence, Jr. — under close scrutiny isn't just coming from the local newspaper or television station, but from all over the country, all over the world. Thursday it came from ABC TV in the form of commentator Jack Whitaker.

Whitaker, a television veteran of 35 years, was in Midland for 24 hours to film a special on the Scharbauers to be televised June 6 "within an hour of the race, sometime between 4:30 and 5:30 p.m. Eastern Time," said Whitaker. The special, along with the race, can be seen locally on KMID TV, Channel 2.

Even though the press has been hounding the Scharbauers since Alysheba hit the limelight with his Kentucky Derby victory, Whitaker says they are handling the notoriety well. "They're very nice. They were so gracious inviting us into their home, he said."

The special, part of "A two-and-a-half hour show for a two minute race," said Whitaker, is to give the race a different look.

"The reason we came down is, obviously they're nice people, but also to find out if it has had any salutary effect on the town. It's something to see the effect horses still have on people."

With the race still more than a week away, Whitaker isn't sure what his race-day assignment will be.

"I'm usually with the jockeys before the race in the paddock," said Whitaker. "I won't know until assignments are made. I know this feature on the Scharbauers is part of the pre-race."

WHITAKER HAS been with ABC since 1982 after spending his first 30 years in the business with rival CBS.

"I was in radio when I got out of school and couldn't make any money and television was just breaking so...," said Whitaker, who first took to the visual medium in 1950 in his hometown of Philadelphia.

In all his 35 years in the business, Whitaker, who is 63, has had a chance to see a lot of the country, a lot of the world. In fact, that's now the hardest part of his work.

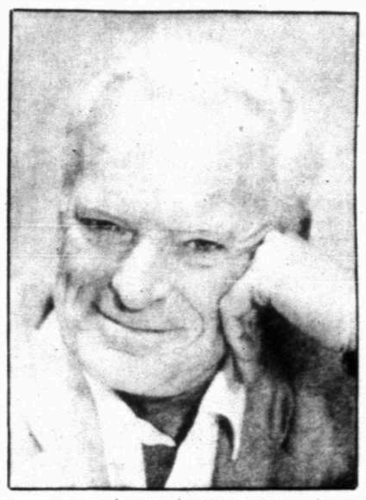

"Because I'm a lot older now, travel is the worst part of it," said Whitaker. "Of course every airline in America is in bad shape and that doesn't help. So travel is the worst. But, my job has taken me to a lot of places where, when I was growing up, I used to just read about."

Like Midland, Texas.

BACK TO Belmont, Whitaker thinks favored Alysheba will come through to win the race and become only the 12th horse in history to win the Triple Crown.

"I think his chances are very good," said Whitaker. "He seems to be thriving, training well and eating well. He's come out of the other two races real well. He was a better horse at Preakness than at the Kentucky Derby, or so I here."

In fact, Whitaker likes Alysheba's chances so much that, "going into the race, I'm going to bet on Alysheba. He's the best of the class."

Celts, Pistons head for Game 7

By SAM GOLDAPER
N.Y. Times News Service

PONTIAC, Mich. — The Detroit Pistons forced a seventh and deciding game Friday by defeating the Boston Celtics, 113-105, at the Silverdome by tying the four-of-seven-game Eastern Conference championship series. Each team has turned victories on its home court.

The seventh game will be played Saturday at the Boston Garden, where the Celtics have a 12-2 record in seventh games of championship series; they are 15-3 overall in such games. This is the first time since 1969 that the Celtics have been involved in a series that went to seven games.

THE CELTICS were without Robert Parish, their all-star center, who was back in Boston, serving a one-game suspension for punching Bill Laimbeer, and K.C. Jones, the coach, who was in San Francisco for his mother's funeral.

The Pistons, who have lost 17 straight in Boston, took command with an 18-4 run early in the fourth period for a 102-87 lead.

Larry Bird led all scorers with 35 points, and Adrian Dantley and Vinnie Johnson had 24 points each for the Pistons.

The Pistons, with 58 percent shooting from the field, also got a big boost from Vinnie Johnson's outside shooting. He had 12 points in the first half.

Bird, McHale and Ainge scored all but 13 of Boston's points. Bird, who picked up his fourth foul early in the third period, had 15 points. McHale added 14 and Ainge had 13, including 11 in a row. Bird, who hit six shots in a row, then missed four shots.

IN A CLOSE third period, in which neither team could gain more than a 4-point advantage, the Pistons led, 84-83. Bird added 12 points in the period to raise his total to 27.

Before the game, Jimmy Rodgers, substituting for Jones as the coach for the fifth time this season, said: "You're not going to see a lot of changes. The Celtics have always been a family and it will be no different tonight without K.C. A lot of what a coach does out there is dictated by instinct, the flow of the game and the foul situation."

However, it was expected that without Robert Parish, Rodgers would use several lineups. If he wanted to play a big lineup and keep the Celtics in a half-court game, his front line would be Kevin McHale, Larry Bird and Greg Kite. If he wanted to run, he would go with a small lineup of Bird, Fred Roberts and Darren Daye.

THE CELTICS showed still another option in the closing minutes of Tuesday night's game. With Parish, who has been unable to finish his third straight game because of a sprained left ankle, and Daye having fouled out, Jones played three guards — Dennis Johnson, Jerry Sichting and Danny Ainge. Johnson played small forward, matched against Adrian Dantley, who has been the Pistons' top scorer in the last three games with a total of 86 points.

Piston Coach Chuck Daly
...now hear this

Rodgers opted for a quick lineup to enliven the pace of the game. With McHale shifting to center, Daye, signed as a free agent Dec. 11 after he was waived by the Chicago Bulls, started at forward alongside Bird.

The change in lineups also brought a change in matchups. The 6-foot-8 Daye was assigned Dantley, the Pistons' top scorer in the last three games with a total of 82 points.

McHale, who had been on Dantley, shifted to Rick Mahorn and Bird wound up with Bill Laimbeer.

FOR THE third straight game, Laimbeer, who was fined $5,000 for his fight with Bird in Game 3, offered to shake hands with the Celtics' captain, but Bird again refused.

The Celtics, with 6 points from Ainge and 4 from McHale, got off to a 14-4 advantage in the first three and a half minutes. With Dantley unstoppable, the lead dwindled to 33-31 by the end of the quarter.

Daye couldn't handle Dantley's postups and picked up his third foul with 4:21 remaining. Roberts was the next of four Celtics to try to stop the former Notre Dame star. When he was assessed two quick fouls, Bird took a shot at Dantley, and before the half was over Johnson was guarding him.

Dantley, who made half of his 10 shots from the field and shot 9 of 13 from the free-throw line, had 19 points at halftime and the Pistons led, 58-55.

Bias had expensive tastes

UPPER MARLBORO, Md. (AP) — A Prince George's County undercover policeman, testifying in the drug trial of Brian Tribble, claimed the defendant and former University of Maryland basketball All-American Len Bias often shared $125 bottles of champagne in a nightclub where both were involved in suspected drug transactions.

Former Maryland basketball Coach Lefty Driesell and one of his players, who said Bias gave him cocaine on three occasions, also testified Thursday in the fourth day of the trial. Tribble, 24, is charged with providing Bias the cocaine that killed the top draft pick of the NBA's Boston Celtics last June 19.

TED BATTLES

Oh, for the peace and quiet of NYC...

Battles

It's a good thing Alysheba is tucked away in the pastoral serenity of the stables at Belmont, not far from the heart of Manhattan.

If the three-year-old, who stands poised on the threshhold of racing immortality, were spending the days before the race in Midland, his emotional equilibrium might be tilted for the 1½ mile test June 6.

Bedlam is gradually building in the Tall City as the national media, in all its unbridled enthusiasm, descends on this tornado-alerted West Texas metropolis like a horde of locusts.

MIDLAND HASN'T seen a horde of this nature since the Amarillo-Midland Texas League game in 1972 was called "because of grasshoppers." The entire nation laughed over that one.

Midland hasn't received this much national attention since Odessa Permian-Midland Lee televised their regular season high school football game, preempting a National League baseball playoff game in the process.

The staid New York Times, which condescends to run a list of high school scores and little more, threw up its hands in disbelief at the unheard of decision to preempt a playoff game for a high school football game.

Time, the Wall Street Journal, USA Today and the networks looked on in wonder and sent correspondents to see if it were true that a high school football game could generate that much interest.

Well, no one is laughing as the excitement over Belmont builds. The only wonder is whether Alysheba can pull it off.

By the time June 6 rolls around, Dorothy and Pam Scharbauer, co-owners of Alysheba, may be numb, just glad for it to be over, for they, along with Clarence, Jr., have had to handle the unrelenting media requests and pressure.

THE LEXINGTON, Ky., Herald-Leader sent writer Billy Reed and photographer David Perry to Midland to prepare a special Sunday issue on Alysheba, the Scharbauers and Midland.

"In Kentucky, horse racing is like high school football in Texas. That combined with Alysheba's success and the fact that he was purchased in Lexington, makes Belmont of special interest even in Lexington." Reed explained.

The interest in Belmont isn't confined to Midland, New York and Kentucky.

"Requests for press credentials for a Belmont race," says Reed, "usually run about 200. This year, they've received more than 700 requests." And the race is still a week off.

Alysheba's bid for a Triple Crown is the main reason. It has happened only 11 times previously and this one is heightened by the fact that Fred Turner, Dorothy's father and Pam's grandfather, won the Derby in 1959 with Tomy Lee.

Additionally piquing the interest in this Belmont is the $5 million added to this year's Triple Crown pot, the first time a Triple Crown winner will be so rewarded, and the fact that Trainer Woody Stephens has a string of five straight Belmont victories has stirred additional interest.

June 6. It seems a long way off. Just ask the Scharbauer family.

Indy 500 boredome destroyed by Unser

Murray

INDIANAPOLIS — I never thought I'd be bored to death by the Indianapolis 500. Scared to death, perhaps.

But, for about 130 laps Sunday, it was about as exciting as watching a guy park cars in Pacoima.

It wasn't a race, it was a parade. All it needed was a calliope. Mario Andretti was the grand marshal and he was running so far in front of everybody, it was hard not to change channels. Nothing is as boring as an Indy race with one guy a lap in the lead.

But, Indianapolis is a sleeping monster. Danger is never more than one left turn away. It is one big dead man's curve.

It turned into its horrible self on Lap 133 Sunday. First of all, a wheel came flying off car No. 16 driven by Tony Bettenhausen Jr. whose father died on this race track in 1961.

Since this wheel came off between Turns 3 and 4 on the track, Bettenhausen was able to steer his three-wheeled vehicle into the pits for a new fourth to continue the race.

The spectator the wheel hit was not so fortunate. He died an hour later at the hospital.

Bettenhausen finished ninth. But, Lyle Kurtenbach became the 10th spectator killed at the Speedway, the third by a flying wheel and the first to lose his life that way since a member of the crowd in the infield was decapitated by one in 1938.

The irony is, that runaway wheel also helped decide the race. On its trajectory into the stands it also hit the front end of a car driven by Roberto Guerrero ripping off part of the front end and forcing him to pit for repairs.

At the time, Guerrero was slashing along a lap behind the seemingly uncatchable Mario Andretti.

NOBODY'S uncatchable at Indy. This race is 500 miles of malice. It caught Mario Andretti with only 23 laps to go. It always catches Mario Andretti. He's the Sam Snead of the Speedway. He's looking for his second win here. He should be looking for his 10th.

A faulty line began spewing fuel at a flood rate into his engine just as he was beginning to compose his victory speech.

Roberto Guerrero, the handsome young Colombian, inherited the race as Mario crept into the pits to get a different kind of valedictory speech ready.

Guerrero, figuring the parade was now his, swept into the pits for a final fuel stop at Lap 182. He was now the boss of the race. He would load up and coast into Victory Lane.

The clutch stalled the car in the pits. Twice. Once on its way back out to the track.

Now, when you and I have an engine quit, we push a button or twist a key and it fires back up. At Indy, they have to wheel it back to the pits and crank it.

Out on the track, Al Unser the Elder, flashed into the lead. He suddenly had a lap on the stalled leader.

A yellow light, the 10th of the race, came on then, with eight laps to go, but, though the cars bunched up, there were, by the time the green came on again, only four laps left for Guerrero to pass six cars and overtake Unser. Four laps aren't enough to catch Al Unser.

Al Unser has now won just as many Indy's as A.J. Foyt and, if you don't think that's an upset, you don't know auto racing.

AL UNSER has always been known as the slower, dependable one of the famous Unser family. One brother was killed on this race track in 1959 and brother, Bobby, was always the flamboyant, magazine-cover member of the flying Unsers. Bobby was either on a wall or in Victory Lane.

Al was a guy for whom "Aw, shucks" was the most reckless kind of profanity. If Al Unser Sr. were a breakfast, he'd be corn flakes. If he were a drink, he'd be milk. He's white bread, vanilla ice cream. He's a G movie, a country song, mashed potatoes. He's always been the Other Unser, Good Old Al. In a movie, he'd play Bobby's best friend.

He was so overlooked, he's probably the only three-time winner who ever showed up at the Speedway in his prime without a ride as he did this month. He had won this race three times, back-to-back once and had finished second twice and third once.

He must have thought he also had to have a nose that lights up because he only got into a car at the last minute because Danny Ongais had his annual crash.

They put him in the kind of car where you'd kick the tires and look for bloodstains if you found it on a lot. It was a used car, all right. Rick Mears drove it in last year's race and it has since been hauled around the country for exhibitions at shopping centers as an Indy relic only slightly less prehistoric than Ray Harroun's Wasp or the 1927 Duesenberg. In other words, it was out of warranty.

So, everyone thought, was Al Unser. He'll be 48 in five days but no one is any better at holding a race car together through 500 miles than Al Unser. Like the car, he's a survivor.

THERE WERE 11 cars running when the Indy 500 ended Sunday. As usual, Al Unser's was one of them. Don't look for him on "The Tonight Show" or even as the butt of David Letterman jokes. Al probably doesn't even watch things like that.

He is obviously the best in the business at what he does —which is bring a car back in one piece, fast and rich. Al Unser is the kind of guy who could make a mule a threat in a race if it is long enough. He's as matter-of-fact as a telephone directory but if you got a problem car in a big race, Al Unser will probably straighten it out for you as well as anybody.

Winning your fourth Indy is a twice-in-a-lifetime feat. It's too bad a man had to die watching it. What is really melancholy is the incident will only be remembered by the notation on the track side race day bulletin which noted only under reasons for the yellow flag No. 7 "Loose wheel in stands." That is not much of an epitaph but that, too, is Indy.

Newly-organized bird dog club elects Good

From Staff Reports

The LLano Estacado Bird Hunter's Association, a club for those interested in hunting with "pointing dogs" for quail or pheasant in West Texas or the Panhandle, elected Steve Good as president.

Other officers of the newly-organized group include Frank Morgan and Charles Preston as vice-presidents and Bob Lopez, secretary-treasurer.

The club was chartered under the Texas and National Bird Hunter's Association. The purpose of the club is to foster and increase interest in and knowledge of Upland Game Birds and their conservation and restoration by promoting, regulating, controlling, supervising and conducting field trials on Upland Game Birds, primarily quail in WT.

Membership is not restricted to those who own pointing dogs, however, the club is primarily based on the use of dogs for hunting. The field trials will be judged on a spotting system and all dogs will compete on the basis of their ability to locate, point and retrieve game.

Last week the club sponsored a de-snaking clinic at the West Texas Sportsman's Club. The dogs, one at a time, were brought up on a rattlesnake which had been defanged. When the snake struck at the dog, a light electronic shock was applied remotely to a collar about the dog's neck. This works very well, particularly with pups and young dogs known to point snakes.

Tyson ready for war in Thomas defense

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Pinklon Thomas "is ready to go to war."

The enemy is Mike Tyson.

The spoils of their scheduled 12-round battle Saturday night at the Las Vegas Hilton will be the World Boxing Council and World Boxing Association heavyweight championships held by the 20-year-old Tyson.

"I'm going in there to fight Mike," the 29-year-old Thomas said. "I'm going to take him to the bridge."

"If he's not intimdated, then we'll just fight," Tyson said. "This is the fight I'm going to prove I'm the best fighter in the world."

Tyson won the WBC title on a second-round knockout of Trevor Berbick here last Nov. 22, then won the WBA title on a unaimous decision over James "Bonecrusher" Smith here March 7.

The fight was marred by Smith's holding tactics, which Tyson couldn't solve.

"I wasn't satisfied with my performance, but what could I do," Tyson said. "It takes two to tango.

"This guy will try to win. He knows what he lost and he'll try to win it back."

Thomas lost the WBC title on a 12 round decision to Berbick here March 22, 1986.

"It was a tough pill to swallow, but everyone has to lose sometime in life," Thomas said. "I know what it is to lose, to be up, to be down."

He surely does.

Thomas overcame a heroin addiction as a teen-ager and he bounced back from surgery on his right eye in 1984.

But the oddsmakers don't think he has much of a chance of overcoming Tyson, who has scored 26 knockouts, 16 in the first round, in winning all 29 of his fights.

Tyson was a 6-1 favorite to hand Thomas his second loss. He has won 29 times, 24 by knockouts, and fought one draw.

The fight will be the second half of a championship doubleheader, which will be televised by HBO.

Oilers' Sather blames ref for loss

By RALPH BERNSTEIN

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Coach Mike Keenan of the Philaelphia Flyers sang in praise of his players while his Edmonton counterpart, Glenn Sather, cried foul.

"This is the guttiest group I've ever seen," Keenan said after the Flyers, facing elimination from the Stanley Cup final, rallied Thursday night for a 3-2 victory to force the series to a seventh game on Sunday in Edmonton.

NHL

Sather turned his wrath on referee Dave Newell, questioning the leniency of a third-period penalty against Philadelphia's Brad McCrimmon. Sather said McCrimmon, assessed two minutes for unsportsmanlike conduct, should have been given a five-minute major and ejected from the game for head-butting.

"The game was decided by the referee tonight," Sather said. "It's a series that is being decided by (officials) miscues."

WHATEVER, it's become a series of Philadelphia comebacks. And one more victory will put the Flyers in the NHL record book. Only once previously — when Toronto beat Detroit in 1942 — has a team rebounded from a 3-1 deficit to win a best-of-seven final series.

The Flyers lost the first two games, came from three goals behind to win the third and lost the fourth to fall behind 3-1. In Games 5 and 6, they rallied from two-goal deficits to stave off elimination.

The victory also set up the first seven-game Stanley Cup final in 16 years. Not since 1971, when the Montreal Canadiens rallied from 0-2 to beat the Chicago Black Hawks, has a final gone the limit.

In addition to the McCrimmon call, Sather also objected to a high-sticking penalty on Edmonton's Glenn Anderson that set up Brian Propp's game-tying power play goal at 13:04 of the third period.

"Two guys collided. One guy walks away with a penalty," Sather said.

"I know that sitting here and complaining is not very professional. But we have to start making some noise."

EDMONTON'S Wayne Gretzky tried to put his team's position in perspective.

"I would say we're pretty down. I would say we're pretty disappointed," Gretzky said.

"But as they say, you play all season for the home-ice advantage. We got it and we better put it to good use on Sunday."

Gretzky also made note of the alleged head-butting.

"I don't think any player can back away when his head is butted. There is no need for that in the NHL. As I said, frustrations run high. Last time I looked head-butting was a five-minute major."

Gretzky also tried to explain why the high-powered Oilers are constantly blowing leads.

"Ron Hextall (Flyers goalie) is probably the best goaltender I have ever seen in the NHL that I have played against," he said. "It seems every game we start up 2, 3-0 and he comes up with big saves.

"When it was 2-0 for us, we had a couple of great chances in the last minute of the first period, and he came up with some great saves. He kept it at 2-0 when it could have been 3-0."

The Flyers' latest hero was defenseman J.J. Daigneault. He picked up the puck when Jari Kurri failed to clear it from the Edmonton zone, skated just inside the blue line and beat goalie Grant Fuhr, who was screened, at 14:28.

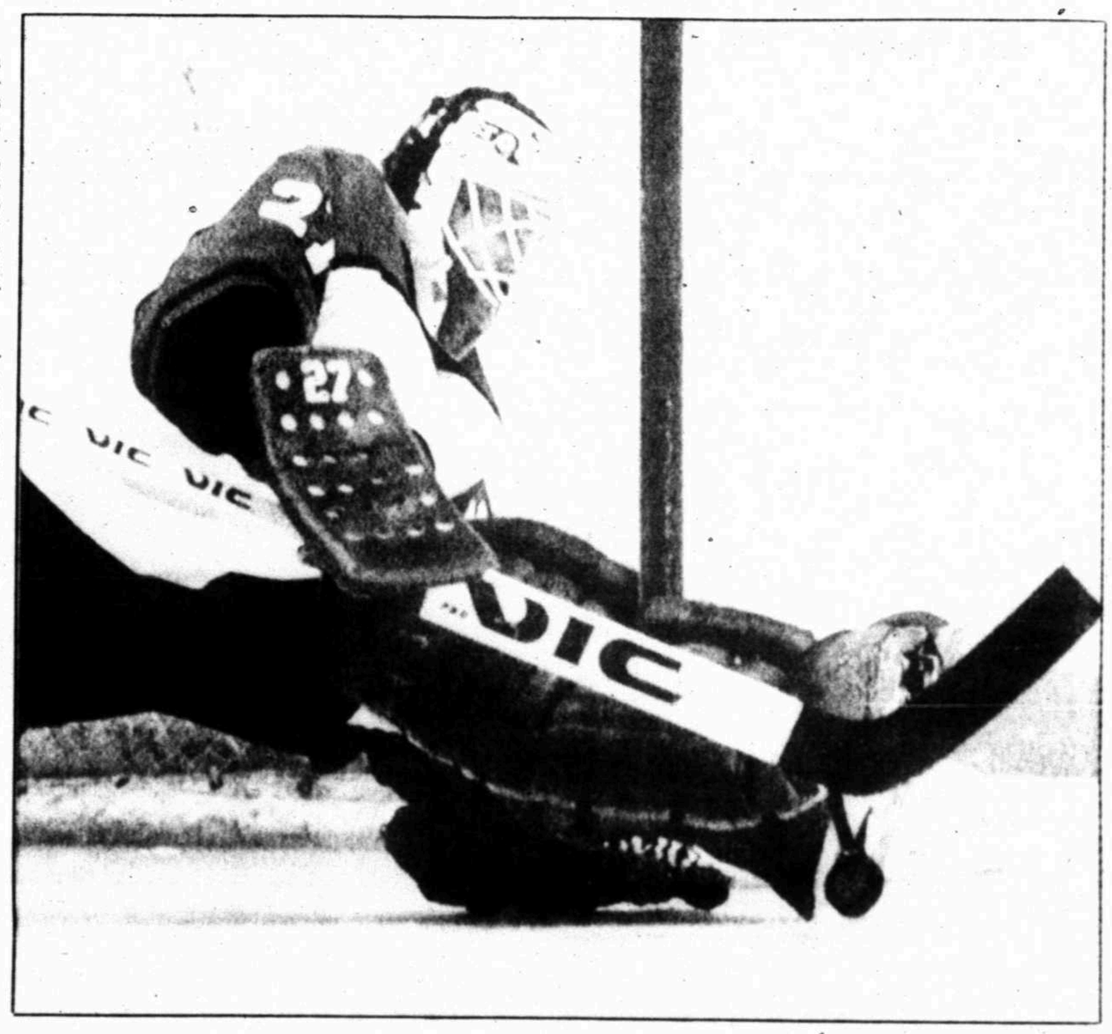

"I knew everything was clear," said Daigneault. "There was lots of time and Scott Mellanby was passing in front of the net and screened Fuhr well. I just tried to get the shot on net and it turned out to be a goal."

A sellout crowd of 17,222 at the Spectrum watched the Flyers hold off the Oilers for the last 5:32 and keep the champagne corked in the Edmonton dressing room.

The Oilers started shelling Hextall early. At 5:08, with Dave Hunter in the penalty box, they scored shorthanded. Gretzky laid the puck on Kevin Lowe's stick in front of the net and Lowe scored.

EDMONTON made it 2-0 at 15:16 when Kevin McClelland shot a rebound past Hextall.

Philadelphia began its comeback at 7:12 of the second period. Dave Brown passed from the left corner across the goal mouth and Lindsay Carson poked it past Fuhr to make it 2-1.

Carter hits three homers

By BEN WALKER
AP Baseball Writer

Baltimore's Memorial Stadium may be the place to hit home runs this season, but former Midland Cub Joe Carter seems more comfortable at Boston's Fenway Park.

Carter became the first player to twice hit three homers in a game at Fenway, and drove in five runs Thursday night for the Cleveland Indians in a 12-8 loss to Boston. Dwight Evans homered and drove in six runs for the Red Sox.

In Baltimore, Mike Young, who had not homered this season, hit a game-tying solo homer in the 10th inning and added a two-run shot in the 12th that lifted the Orioles over the California Angels 8-7. Baltimore has won six games in a row and California has lost six straight.

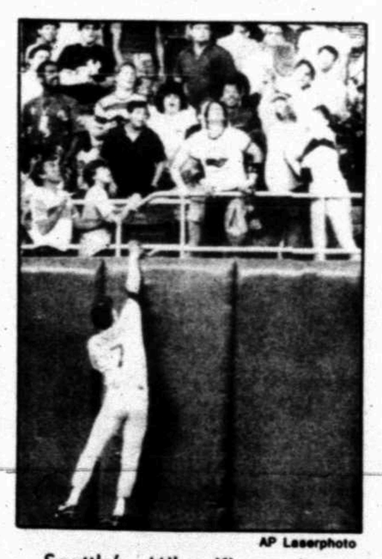

Larry Sheets homered twice and Cal Ripken Jr. and Rick Burleson also homered for Baltimore, which set a major-league record for homers in a month with 56. That broke the previous record of 55 set by the New York Giants in July 1947 and tied by the Minnesota Twins in May 1964.

The Orioles lead the majors with 76 home runs, including 48 in their last 19 games. Baltimore set its single-game home record for homers in a game and, combined with home runs by California's Wally Joyner and Ruppert Jones, established a mark of eight for two teams.

Orioles 8, Angels 7

There have been an average of nearly 3½ homers per game this season at Memorial Stadium, the highest rate in the majors.

"Baseball's getting ridiculous," Angels Manager Gene Mauch said. "I've never seen such semi-, semi-, semi-swings, and the ball going out, in my life."

AP Laserphoto

Seattle's Mike Kingry jumps against wall for home run ball by Yankee's Gary Ward.

The Orioles trailed 7-6 in the bottom of the 12th when Lee Lacy drew a leadoff walk from DeWayne Buice, 2-3. Young fouled off two sacrifice bunt attempts, then fouled off another pitch before homering to right field.

Red Sox 12, Indians 8

Carter's homers hardly mattered because Boston completed a four-game sweep behind the production of Evans.

Evans matched his career-high for RBI in a game, hitting a home run and two singles.

Carter, who homered three times at Fenway last Aug. 29, hit a three-run homer in the first inning and connected for solo shots in the fifth in the ninth. Carter and Julio Franco each had four of the Indians' 15 hits and Pat Tabler hit a three-run homer.

Yankees 5, Mariners 2

Gary Ward hit a two-run homer and Rickey Henderson and Dave Winfield hit solo shots for New York.

The Yankees raised their home record to 15-3, the best in the major leagues.

Twins 13, Brewers 1

Tom Brunansky homered during a controversial six-run first inning and Juan Berengeuer pitched seven shutout innings as Minnesota beat visiting Milwaukee.

The loss was the fifth straight for the Brewers, who have dropped 17 of their last 19.

Brunansky also had an RBI single along with his two-run homer. The Twins had 14 hits, with Gene Larkin, Kirby Puckett, Tim Laudner and Mark Davidson driving in two runs each.

Athletics 4, Blue Jays 3

Slugger Jose Canseco squeezed home the go-ahead run in the seventh inning and for Oakland.

Dave Stewart, 6-4, struck out a career-high 10 and walked one in eight-plus innings. He retired 17 straight batters before Tony Fernandez doubled leading off the ninth, bringing in Jay Howell.

Midland ump inducted into ASAA Hall of Fame

From Staff Reports

Midland umpire Don C. Deck has been approved by the Amateur Softball Association of America for initial charter membership in the National Indicator Fraternity.

The fraternity is a division of the Amateur Softball Hall of Fame in Oklahoma City, Okla., honoring umpires. The ASAA approved 168 members from across the nation for the initial charter membership.

To qualify for the honor, an umpire must have umpired in at least three national tournaments and have been a registered ASA umpire for seven years. Deck more than met the qualifications.

Deck has umpired in three major national tournaments in his 22 years of umpiring, plus 35 state and regional tournaments.

He umpired in the Open Slow Pitch tournament in Jacksonville, Fla., in 1975; in the Fast Pitch tournament in Austin in 1976; and in the Major Fast Pitch tournament in Allentown, Pa., in 1978.

Deck is currently state deputy umpiring chief of the Texas ASA and has been for the past 10 years. He has also been a valuable umpiring resource for Midland softball programs for the past 20 years.

Don Deck

Deck's name has been placed in the Amateur Softball Hall of Fame in Oklahoma City and his name has been placed on a stadium seat in the ASA stadium in Oklahoma City.

Only seven umpires from Texas were included in the charter membership.

San Jacinto seeks third title

GRAND JUNCTION, Colo. (AP) — San Jacinto, Texas, cruising through the 30th annual National Junior College World Series, plays for its third straight championship tonight against Seminole, Okla.

The only other three-time champion was Mesa Community College of Arizona, which claimed titles in 1970, 1971 and 1972.

San Jacinto disposed of scrappy Morris., N.J. 7-4 Thursday night to earn the title berth against Seminole, which dispatched Florida, of Jacksonville, 9-5, in a losers' bracket game.

The top-ranked Gators — speedy, hard-hitting and well-schooled — defeated Seminole 9-6 Wednesday night and would need to lose to the Trojans both tonight and Saturday night to forfeit the championship.

"It feels great to be in the championship game again," said Don Wright, whose two-run single in the sixth inning broke a 4-4 tie and gave San Jacinto the win over Morris.

Wright and Keith Langston, who pitched seven innings in relief to pick up the victory, said the Gators are not taking Seminole for granted.

Coach Lloyd Simmons' Trojans, 88-12, have played almost twice as many games as San Jacinto has, and hope to avoid the throwing errors that led to their earlier loss to the 50-8 Gators.

"They're a real good hitting team," Langston said about the Trojans. "You've got to pitch tough with Seminole."

Although Morris lost, the Titans, 28-10, gave San Jacinto its toughest game so far in the tournament.

"For the second time in three years, we came here and finished third, so I guess it proves we belong here," said Morris Coach Lee Seras.

The Titans jumped out to a 3-0 lead in the first on a double by Bob Frassa, an RBI single by Scott Vuz and a two-run homer by Mark Grillo.

San Jacinto countered with three runs in the second on an RBI double by Thayer Swain and a two-run single by Jon Prather.

The Principle of Restricted Choice states that if a player has a choice of cards to play, he will sometimes play one, sometimes the other. Therefore, if he plays one card, he is unlikely to hold the other. In simple terms, mathematically a player is more apt to hold one specific card than two specific cards. Declarer put that principle to work to make his game.

Note South's choice of four spades at his second turn. Since he had originally responded one spade, he was now showing a game-going hand with a self-sufficient spade suit, and his partner was free to bid on if his hand warranted.

West attacked with the top of his heart sequence. Declarer won with dummy's ace and led a trump to the ten, and West's nine caused declarer to reflect. If it was a falsecard from 9-8, declarer could simply continue with a trump to hold his losers to two trumps and the ace of diamonds. But if the nine was a singleton, declarer was in danger of losing three trump tricks. Applying the Rule of Restricted Choice, declarer elected to believe the nine to be a singleton.

He cashed four rounds of clubs, discarding two diamonds from hand, then continued with the table's last club. East was faced with a Hobson's Choice. He either could refuse to ruff, in which case declarer would sluff his last diamond to hold his losers to three trump tricks, or else East could ruff and allow declarer to overruff, permitting declarer to limit his losses to two trump tricks and a diamond. Either way, South was home.

Hodel: Arctic exploration possible without harm

By DAVID GOELLER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Interior Secretary Donald Hodel is telling Congress that the United States can have it both ways in Alaska: pumping vital oil from a potentially huge reserve without harming the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge.

"I am firmly convinced that exploration and production can be accomplished in an environmentally acceptable manner," Hodel said during his first Capitol Hill appearance to support opening the refuge's 1.5 million acre coastal plain to oil rigs.

"We do not have to choose between protection of wildlife on the one hand or oil exploration and development and production on the other — we can have both," he told the House Interior water and power resources subcommittee on Thursday.

Hodel offered to work with Congress to couple development "with careful stipulations to protect the caribou, musk oxen and the other animals, birds and fish."

He said such restrictions would exceed the safeguards tied to drilling at Prudhoe Bay, the decade-old oil field about 70 miles west of the refuge that now provides about 20 percent of U.S. oil production.

He said oil companies leasing refuge land would build upon the environmental experience at Prudhoe Bay, where foes once predicted the demise of a caribou herd that has approximately tripled in size since drilling began.

Hodel continued to stress the Reagan administration's basic argument for opening the coastal plain: dependence on foreign oil threatens national security and contributes to the trade deficit.

"The United States faces a mounting problem concerning our energy outlook, which has grave implications for our national security," he said.

Hodel said the nation now obtains about 38 percent of its petroleum from abroad — up from 33 percent in 1985 — and that this would climb to about 50 percent by 2000, with ever-increasing reliance on the volatile Middle East.

"The leasing we do today in the frontier areas cannot put oil into our pipeline for seven to 15 years," said Hodel, a former energy secretary. "In those terms, 1995 is now."

He said the greatest danger facing the refuge is for opponents to prevent orderly exploration from beginning now.

"In a future 'crisis' or 'panic' over energy supply, the body politic may demand that Congress mandate a crash exploration and development program," he said.

Texas sets third consecutive annual bank-failure record

By STEWART TAGGART
Associated Press Writer

HOUSTON (AP) — Texas has set the national record for bank failures for the third year in a row with the collapse of 1987's 27th bank, but officials say that at least the state appears to be nearing the bottom of its economic pit.

Federal regulators closed Texas National Bank-Westheimer of Houston Thursday, citing poor management and bad loans. With more than six months still to go, the closure smashed Texas' 1986 tally of 26 bank failures in one year, a national record for one state.

Texas also set the national pace in 1985 with 12 failures, compared to just three in 1984. So far this year, 82 banks have been shut down nationally, well over half the 140 closed last year.

The banks closed so far in Texas this year had combined assets of about $881 million, including $27.5 from the latest failure, Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. figures show.

Gerald Fronterhouse, chairman and chief executive officer of RepublicBank Corp., said he felt the end of Texas' bank-bust cycle was near.

"The state is beginnning to bottom out," he said. "The whole economy will begin to accelerate again and that will help the banks."

Harvey Rosenblum, vice president and director of research at the Federal Reserve Bank of Dallas, also gave an upbeat assessment of the outlook for banks and savings and loans, but said change may not come quickly.

"Things probably will get better, but I think it's going to get worse first," said Rosenblum.

With more than 2,000 banks, Texas has about 14 percent of the nation's financial institutions, state officials say.

Texas National Bank-Westheimer was chartered in March 1985, and became of concern to the comptroller's office in 1986, according to Robert J. Herrmann, senior deputy comptroller of the currency.

The bank tried to grow quickly by generating a high volume of loans supported by high-cost deposits gathered from outside the bank's market area, he said.

Liberal lending practices and poor administration and supervision of the loan portfolio by former bank officers resulted in excessive problem loans.

The practices, coupled with inadequate oversight of the bank by the board of directors and poor the local economy, caused the bank's financial condition to deteriorate, Herrmann said.

The FDIC was appointed receiver of the banks assets, which were then transferred to Texas Capital Bank-Westwood, N.A., another one-branch Houston bank.

At the time of the closure, Texas National Bank-Westheimer had about 1,200 accounts, including about $327,000 in 32 accounts that exceeded the federal deposit insurance limit of $100,000 per account, an FDIC spokesman said.

During a luncheon Thursday attended by bank executives in Houston, some executives argued Texas banks hurt by the state's depressed economy may be helped by mergers with out-of-state partners.

"We'll be able to do things we couldn't do without the merger," said Walter E. Johnson, president of Allied Bank of Texas, whose holding company, Allied Bancshares Inc. of Houston, has been merged with Los-Angeles based First Interstate Bancorp.

On Wednesday, RepublicBank Corp. and ailing InterFirst Corp., both based in Dallas, got approval from their shareholders to join forces. Also this year, Houston-based Texas Commerce Bancshares Inc. merged with Chemical New York Corp.

"We felt the merger route would provide some immediate benefits," said Marc J. Shapiro, chairman of Texas Commerce Bank-Houston and vice chairman of Texas Commerce Bancshares.

Shapiro told several hundred banking executives that Texas Commerce Bancshares officials believed the merger was best for the corporation, its stockholders and customers.

Lowell Smith Jr., president of the First State Bank in Rio Vista and president of the Texas Bankers' Association, said that there may still be too many banks in some areas of the state, conditions are expected to improve.

"I'm confident things will look up," he said. "I hope that we would not have to have the marketplace take care of it that violently."

Allied Bank chief says capital infusion will help

By LAURA TOLLEY
AP Business Writer

HOUSTON (AP) — Mergers involving Texas and out-of-state banks will help some institutions hurt by the state's depressed economy get back on the road to prosperity, some bank executives said Thursday.

"We'll be able to do things we couldn't do without the merger," said Walter E. Johnson, president of Allied Bank of Texas, whose holding company, Allied Bancshares Inc. of Houston, has been merged with Los-Angeles based First Interstate Bancorp.

Johnson, one of five Houston bank executives discussing the state's banking system at The Houston Club lunch Thursday, said the merger puts Allied with a bank that has about $52.07 billion in assets. The move will provide a chance to expand and become profitable again.

When First Interstate announced the acquisition of Allied last week, Allied also announced it would make a $112 million provision for loan loss reserves in the second quarter. The result was an operating loss for the three months of slightly over $100 million.

Allied isn't the only bank holding company to take on a new face this year. Houston-based Texas Commerce Bancshares Inc. has merged with Chemical New York Corp., and RepublicBank Corp. and ailing InterFirst Corp., both based in Dallas, got approval Wednesday from their shareholders to join forces.

"We felt the merger route would provide some immediate benefits," said Marc J. Shapiro, chairman of Texas Commerce Bank-Houston and vice chairman of Texas Commerce Bancshares.

Shapiro told several hundred banking executives that Texas Commerce Bancshares officials believed the merger was best for the corporation, its stockholders and customers.

"Obviously, our merger was designed to save costs," said Joe M. Bailey, chairman and chief executive officer of InterFirst Bank of Houston. But the savings is somewhat of a disadvantage for some because it means reductions in the InterFirst and RepublicBank staffs, he said.

Chamber reports stable economy

By DEANNA J. NEAL
Business/Oil Writer

The monthly economic report compiled by the Midland Chamber of Commerce indicates a continued stabilizing trend in key economic areas.

Recovery was reported in the construction sector as 26 new residential permits were issued. That figure compares to 19 last month and 17 in April 1986. Total valuation for new permits issued was $2,822,560.

Midland Regional served more local travelers with airline boardings up from 45,707 in March to 47,902 in April. Year ago boardings were 50,194. Announcement of additional service to Dallas-Ft. Worth Regional Airport beginning in July via Atlantic Southeast Airlines should give the local facility a much needed boost during peak summer travel months.

Post office receipts in Midland also made slight increases, totaling $926,015 during April, compared to $900,009 last month.

In the financial sector, bank deposits dipped in April, down from $1.52 billion in March to $1.47 billion. However, city savings and loans reported an upswing in total deposits to $842 million from $824 million a month ago. Receipts from city sales and use taxes also increased, up from $984,000 to $799,000.

April Texas Employment Commission figures indicate a 9.5 percent jobless rate from a total labor pool of 50,600.

Leading economic index drop largest in two years

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government said today its main forecasting gauge of future economic activity plunged 0.6 percent in April, the biggest decline in two years.

The weakness in the Commerce Department's Index of Leading Indicators was the first decline since a 0.5 percent drop in January and the largest downturn since a 0.8 percent decrease in April 1985.

The index had been up 0.8 percent in March.

Analysts caution against reading too much into one month's change in the index, but they said the April performance was a warning signal that economic growth is slowing.

The weakness in the index was heavily influenced by a huge drop in the average number of hours worked at manufacturing plants. Economists said this number overstated the weakness last month because the survey on which it was based was taken during a week that included two religious holidays, Good Friday and Passover.

Without the decline in manufacturing hours, the index would have fallen 0.1 percent.

Still, economists said five of the nine indicators available declined during the month, reflecting a widespread slowdown in economic activity.

Economic growth, as measured by the gross national product, spurted ahead at a rapid 4.4 percent rate in the first three months of 1987, the fastest economic growth in almost three years.

But economists are predicting the economy will slow dramatically during the April-June quarter, with some even forecasting a decline in the GNP, something that hasn't occurred since the end of the 1981-82 recession.

Tipperary lays groundwork for acquisition

From Staff Reports

Midland-based Tipperary Corp. has begun negotiations to acquire Mineral Development Inc. of Dallas, according to a statement issued Thursday by chairman of the board Deane Stoltz.

The firm's entering into a letter of intent is "very preliminary" and subject to working out a restructuring plan, negotiating definitive terms, settling creditor claims, and receiving requisite approvals.

Stoltz said that final terms of the deal will be worked out "by mid-July if it is going to happen."

Mineral Development is an oil and gas production firm with a majority of its production in the Permian Basin.

KLBJ radio sale canceled

AUSTIN (AP) — The sale of KLBJ AM-FM, which has belonged to the family of former President Lyndon B. Johnson for more than 40 years, has been canceled.

Donald Thomas, president of LBJ Co., said Wednesday he ended negotiations May 16 because the buyer, a New York-based investment group, failed to meet deadlines to complete the sale.

Last fall, Thomas announced an agreement to sell the station for $27.5 million to The Chase Group. If the sale had been completed it would have been the highest price paid for an AM-FM combination, according to radio brokers.

The Federal Communications Commission approved the sale in December.

Thomas said that when the agreement was signed last fall the sale was expected to be completed by the end of 1986. He said changes in federal tax laws, especially affecting long-term capital gains, had stimulated interest in selling the station.

"The change in the law was the thing that really motivated all broadcasters to explore the possibility of selling local stations last year," Thomas told the Austin American-Statesman.

Anthony Chase, who headed The Chase Group, could not be located for comment. A secretary at the New York office of Donaldson, Lufkin & Jenrette Securities where he previously worked said she didn't know how to reach him.

Thomas said since the sales contract to sell KLBJ was signed, the Austin economy had slowed and interest dimmed in buying local stations. He said when the purchasers failed to meet an April 16 deadline, they were given until May 16 to come up with the money to buy the station.

Roxana program will determine size of field

TULSA, Okla. (SWN) — Roxana Resources Ltd. has announced a three well step-out drilling program in order to determine the size of its recently discovered carbon dioxide ($CO_2$) field in Union County, N.M.

The decision was reached after several months of negotiations with prospective joint venture partners; an on-going testing and evaluation program; analysis of sidewall cores; and an in-depth engineering evaluation of potential reserves using all data acquired to date.

Roxana's discovery well, the Roxana State One, is surrounded by 43,000-plus acres. The proposed drilling program will call for the drilling and testing of wells as far as seven miles from the well-publicized discovery well.

Should the proposed drilling program prove successful, it would result in the delineation of a field of over 60 square miles in size. The geographical location of this field is significant in that it is in close proximity of $CO_2$ pipelines and the older mature oilfields of West Texas and Southeast New Mexico.

$CO_2$, which has myriad uses, ranging from beverages to fire extinguishers, has recently become the principal part of an explosive growth market - Enhanced Oil Recovery (EOR).

When secondary recovery has reached its economic and productive limit, EOR methods can help recover additional oil that would otherwise be unproduceable.

EOR projects now account for about 50 percent of all $CO_2$ produced in the United States. Present projections indicate that by the year 2010, 92 percent of all $CO_2$ production will be consumed by EOR projects.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Some investors receive capital gains for shorter time periods

By BILL DOYLE

Q. You answered a question from a reader who said he invested $5,000 in a mutual fund on Dec. 15 and the fund credited his account with a $1,422.79 capital gains distribution on Dec. 23. Is it really possible to have a $1,422.79 capital gains distribution on a $5,000 investment for only eight days?

Doyle

A. Sure. It happened to that investor. Larger capital gains distributions have been received by some mutual fund investors for shorter periods. And other mutual fund investors have received smaller capital gains distributions for longer periods of time.

Let's get back to basics. A mutual fund raises money by selling its shares to the public and uses that money to invest in a diversified list of securities, which it then holds in its investment portfolio. The value of the fund's shares rises or falls in line with the value of its investment portfolio.

From time to time, the fund's managers make decisions to sell securities from the investment portfolio — sometimes at a profit, but sometimes at a loss.

Assuming the fund portfolio transactions over a year's time result in a net profit, that money is distributed to fund shareholders at year-end in proportion to the number of shares owned.

Lots of mutual funds had large net profits from portfolio transactions last year — a period of sharply rising market prices. As a result, many fund shareholders received large capital gains distributions.

A capital gains distribution is declared by the fund's board of directors, payable to shareholders of record on a date the board picks. Usually, that record date is about the same time each year.

All stockholders of record on that date receive the capital gains distribution. The investor who bought the fund's shares eight days before the record date received that distribution, as did investors who purchased fund shares months and years earlier.

Q. I feel it is unfair for people who invest in a mutual fund a short time before a large capital gains distribution is made to receive the same per share distribution as long-term shareholders.

Do you agree?

A. No. When a capital gains distribution is made, the fund's shares go "ex-distribution" and the amount of the distribution automatically is deducted from the value of the fund's shares. That evens things out for both new and long-term shareholders.

This is the same process as when a dividend is declared and the fund shares go "ex-dividend."

Q. Is there federal income tax on mutual fund capital gains distributions? If so, how is it figured?

A. Indeed there is a tax. It applies whether you take your capital gains distributions by check or reinvest them to purchase additional shares.

For 1986, only 40 percent of the "long-term" portion of a capital gains distribution — a fund's net profit from the sale of portfolio securities held for more than six months — was taxable. The "short-term" portion of a capital gains distribution was taxable as the same rate as ordinary income.

For 1987, the entire amount of a capital gains distribution is taxable at ordinary income rates, but no higher than 28 percent.

Most mutual fund dividends, of course, have been and remain taxable at ordinary income rates. The exceptions are tax-free funds holding municipal bonds.

Q. I invested in a mutual fund shortly before a capital gains distribution and a dividend were declared. Then, the value of each of my shares dropped by an amount equal to the combined total of the capital gains distribution and the dividend. I reinvested both and received more shares. So the value of my investment was just about unchanged. It did drop a little, but I learned that was caused by a decline in the market value of the fund's investment portfolio.

However, because I had to pay tax on the capital gains distribution and the dividend, I actually was "out" money. Would I not have been better off waiting and investing in the fund after the distribution and dividend were paid?

A. Yes. It's always better to hold off investing in a mutual fund for exactly the reason you mention.

Top British diplomat released by his Iranian captors

LONDON (AP) — Britain's No. 2 diplomat in Iran, kidnapped by six armed men in Tehran, has been released and returned to his family, the Foreign Office said today.

Edward Chaplin, 36, was abducted Thursday after the gunmen stopped his car as he drove along a Tehran highway with his wife and two children, dragged him out and beat him.

"He has indeed been released," a Foreign Office spokesman said. "We understand that he is safe at home in Tehran with his family, but we have no word on his condition."

Britain had protested to Iran today over what it described as the "horrific incident."

At the same time, Iran said it had protested "the illegal arrest" of an Iranian diplomat in Britain, and said Britain "will be responsible for the consequences of this unlawful act."

The spokesman, who in line with British practice would not be quoted by name, said the British diplomatic mission in Tehran had informed the Foreign Office of Chaplin's release.

British officials had strenuously rejected the idea of a link between Chaplin's abduction and Iran's protest of its diplomat's arrest. Britain refused to consider any deal with the kidnappers of Chaplin, first secretary of the British interests section at the Swedish Embassy in Tehran.

"We are protesting extremely vigorously and are doing everying we can to secure the release of our diplomat," Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher said at her daily briefing of reporters covering the June 11 election campaign.

The Foreign Office said Chaplin was the target of an "horrific incident in Tehran yesterday in which (he) was abducted...and severely beaten."

Chaplin's superior, Christopher MacRae, said in a telephone interview with the British Broadcasting Corp. from Tehran that Chaplin had been driving in the Iranian capital with his wife, Nicola, their 3-year-old daughter and infant son, and a colleague and another child when a car stopped quickly and caused a collision with Chaplin.

"Out of it came six men whom we have not identified who proceeded to beat Edward up and drag him into their car, and drive off with him," MacRae said.

The Foreign Office spokesman said one of the gunmen got into Chaplin's car and drove off recklessly with the diplomat's family and the other passengers, then stopped, got into another car and left them behind.

MacRae said Chaplin's wife was "bearing up very well."

The Foreign Office said it had summoned the Iranian charge d'affaires, Akhunzadeh Basti, to receive a sharp protest on Thursday and again today.

The Foreign Office said the West German ambassador to Tehran, Armin Freitag, had observed part of the abduction, and Britain was in contact with him. In Bonn, the West German Foreign Ministry said Freitag had stopped his car to assist Chaplin but left after being threatened by a man with a large-caliber revolver.

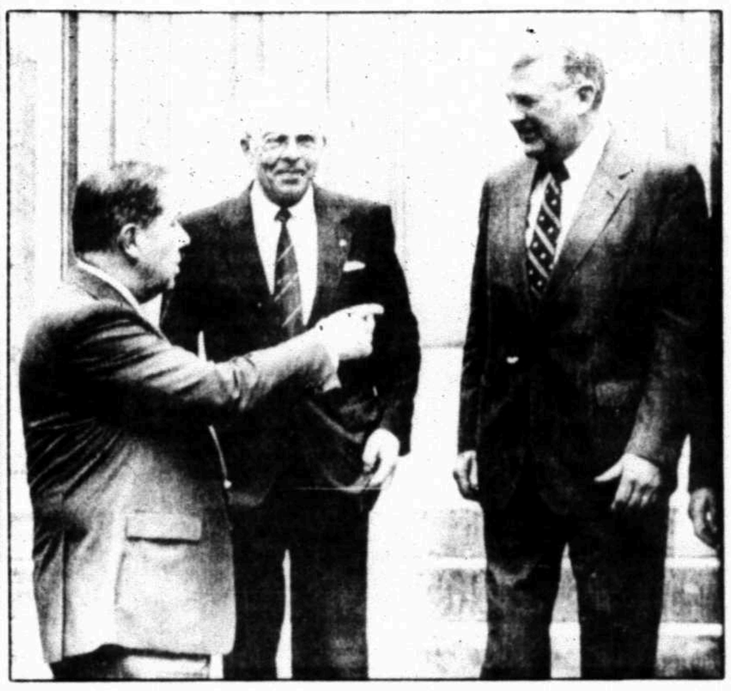

Asked about speculation that Iranian officials were involved in the abduction as retaliation for the arrest of the Iranian in Britain, the British spokesman said, "We do not have conclusive evidence as to who is behind the abduction."

The official Iranian news agency IRNA said, meanwhile, that Iran had strongly protested to Britain about the "illegal arrest" of Ali Qassemi, an official at the Iranian consulate in Manchester, northern England. The agency said Qassemi was arrested two weeks ago and released without charges, and rearrested Thursday.

British authorities would say only that Qassemi, 29, was freed on bail late Thursday after appearing before a magistrate on charges of shoplifting, reckless driving and assaulting a police officer.

The Foreign Office acknowledged that Iran had protested twice about Qassemi's case and had asserted he had full diplomatic immunity from prosecution.

Warsaw Pact countries continue talks

By SUSAN J. SMITH

BERLIN (AP) — Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev and the leaders of the other six Warsaw Pact countries today held a second day of talks focusing on proposals for reductions in nuclear arms.

The seven Communist Party chiefs and their delegations resumed their two-day conference, which began Thursday, in a heavily-guarded downtown East Berlin hotel.

East German officials were expected to issue a statement later today on the closed-door meeting's outcome.

In addition to Gorbachev, the six other Communist Party chiefs attending the annual Warsaw Pact summit are: Erich Honecker of East Germany, Wojciech Jaruzelski of Poland, Nicolae Ceausescu of Romania, Gustav Husak of Czechoslovakia, Todor Zhivkov of Bulgaria and Janos Kadar of Hungary.

The official East German news agency ADN said Thursday that the opening day's session centered on "the transition to concrete measures of nuclear disarmament," an apparent reference to recent Soviet proposals to abolish medium- and short-range nuclear missiles from Europe. The agency did not elaborate.

ADN said the Communist leaders also discussed ways to reduce tension in Europe and "common foreign policy actions."

The news agency said the meeting was characterized by "an atmosphere of friendship and comradely cooperation."

The short report was the only word on what was discussed at the gathering Thursday. ADN said all of the leaders addressed the summit, but did not publish any of their statements.

A group of East German dissidents used Gorbachev's presence here to ask the Kremlin leader to urge their government to adopt the reforms that Gorbachev has been pushing in the Soviet Union. The Kremlin leader has been promoting "glasnost" — Russian for openness — which includes freer discussion of a limited range of social issues.

The group, known as the "Initiative for Peace and Human Rights," delivered a letter addressed to Gorbachev to the Soviet embassy in East Berlin on Tuesday. One member of the group said the embassy accepted the document but there had been no response.

Last month, some of the group's members, but none of the six letter signatories, were arrested, fined and prevented from flying to Prague to see Gorbachev during his visit there.

The three-page document also asked Gorbachev to see to it that human rights groups in the Communist Bloc be allowed to conduct their activities unmolested by authorities. It also charged that some East German officials were attempting to keep Soviet reforms from permeating their society.

Gorbachev met with Honecker privately Thursday evening, ADN said, adding that the two men discussed expanding cooperation in "social developments" in their countries, but did not elaborate.

On Thursday evening, all seven Warsaw Pact leaders attended a concert at the East Berlin Schauspielhaus, or theater.

Before the Soviet Bloc leaders convened, West German officials said they expected the meeting to produce a proposal on reduction of conventional forces that would complement recent Soviet initiatives on nuclear-missile cuts.

ADN did not mention conventional forces in its report about the meeting Thursday.

Valentin Falin, chief of the Soviet news agency Novosti, complained to reporters that the West has not reacted to previous Warsaw Pact proposals on conventional disarmament.

Falin and other officials said unilateral troop withdrawals from Eastern Europe could not be expected of the Soviets.

Talks seen as 'first step' in anti-terrorism efforts

New York Times News Service

PARIS — Top law enforcement officials of the major democracies met here Thursday in what a senior American official described as an "important first step" in higher-level cooperation against terrorism.

Attorney General Edwin Meese, speaking at a brief news conference after the three-hour meeting, described it as an initiative made, in part, to prepare for a meeting of the leaders of the seven major non-Communist industrial nations in Venice next month.

The meeting of interior and justice ministers of the seven nations, as well as Belgium and Denmark, was held amid some of the tightest security measures ever seen here as France continued a state of alert imposed after terrorist threats were issued this week.

Nearly 2,000 extra security policemen were brought into Paris in the last few days after a group believed responsible for a series of devastating bomb attacks here last year announced that it would mount new attacks during the summer unless France released three imprisoned terrorist leaders.

The written message, from the Committee for Solidarity With Arab and Middle East Political Prisoners, was in the same handwriting as notes last year claiming responsibility for the bomb attacks and was being taken seriously by the French police, who said it showed that the group had apparently succeeded in getting some of its members into France.

Participants said the major purpose of the meeting Thursday, which was called before the new threats were issued, was not to formulate specific measures against terrorism, but to demonstrate a political willingness to extend the cooperation developed in Western Europe in the last year to the entire group of industrial democracies, including the United States, Canada and Japan.

Meese told reporters that the meeting marked a "new dimension" in the anti-terrorism fight. He called the meeting "the first of what we expect to be a continuing series of meetings of law enforcement officials, particularly law enforcement officials concerned with terrorism."

"We discussed how we could expand international cooperation in operational, technical and informational aspects of counterterrorism," he said.

Interior Minister Charles Pasqua of France said at a news conference that the meeting showed "a willingness to take all the measures necessary" to combat terrorism, including exchanges of information, advances in technology and possible new legislation.

The meeting Thursday, which was called by France and West Germany, was viewed in this country as a victory for American efforts to press the West Europeans to make the anti-terrorism fight a matter for cooperation at the highest levels of government.

Last year, the French resisted an American request to discuss terrorism at the meeting of the seven industrial nations held in Tokyo, though it did agree after long consultations to put the meeting on the agenda.

The French argument at the time was that the summit meeting should focus on economic questions and not be turned into a general conference on all international problems.

But France, which suffered the worst terrorism attacks of any major industrial country last year, has changed its policy, particularly under the conservative government of Premier Jacques Chirac.

Japanese government approves emergency spending package

TOKYO (AP) — In an effort to spur economic growth and resolve trade disputes with the United States and other nations, the government today approved a nearly $42 billion emergency spending package.

Cabinet ministers at a morning meeting approved the package, which includes public spending worth $34.84 billion and tax cuts amounting to $6.97 billion.

Foreign Minister Tadashi Kuranari said the world economy is "deep into morass," and said Japan was taking "extraordinary emergency action" in an effort to attain stability.

He said Japan plans to call on other nations to take concerted economic action at the upcoming meeting in Venice of the leaders of seven major industrial nations.

The emergency package is part of the government's drive to reach the 3.5 percent inflation-adjusted economic growth goal it set for the fiscal 1987 year that began in April.

Japan has long been under pressure from the United States and other nations to expand domestic demand, increase imports and cut its trade surplus.

Despite a successful attempt by major monetary powers since late 1985 to drive the dollar down against the yen, the Japanese trade surplus has continued to climb.

The yen's sharp upturn has slowed exports by making Japanese products more expensive in overseas markets, forcing manufacturers to slash production and investment and lay off thousands of workers.

Plane towed from Moscow's Red Square

By CAROL J. WILLIAMS

MOSCOW (AP) — A white, single-engine plane with West German markings that buzzed Lenin's mausoleum and landed on Red Square near the Kremlin wall was towed away before dawn today after police arrested the pilot and his female companion.

The plane landed about 7:30 p.m. Thursday on the 750-yard-long Red Square in central Moscow, and witnesses said about 300 amazed onlookers crowded around it. Police rushed in to arrest the pilot and surround the plane.

A Russian witness said the pilot told them he was an engineer from West Germany but gave no explanation of his flight or why he landed in Red Square. "It flew within about a meter (yard) of the mausoleum," he said. "After it landed, people ran everywhere. They didn't know what happened."

Soviet authorities surrounded the incident with secrecy and released no information.

Reports from Finland and West Germany today indicated the plane might have left Helsinki, penetrated one of the most closely guarded borders in the world and flown over several hundred miles of Soviet airspace to reach Moscow.

The West German Embassy said it was investigating reports the pilot was a German but had received no information from Soviet officials. The incident has not been reported by the Soviet media.

Margaret Seabury, a teacher at the Anglo-American school in Moscow, said she was told by an American tourist who had been in the square that the pilot wore a red flight suit and a peace conference badge and that he casually leaned against the fuselage after getting out of the plane.

Gwynne Dyer, a Canadian free-lance journalist, told The Associated Press he had seen the plane parked at the square at about 9 p.m. Thursday. "The only people standing around it were militia," he said, referring to Soviet police.

Dyer said there were at least 50 militia officers and 15 to 20 police cars. There was no sign of the pilot, he said.

The pilot, who landed in Moscow on the Soviet holiday honoring the nation's border guards, handed out a few autographed pieces of paper before he and his companion were arrested, witnesses said.

The plane had a wide blue stripe and appeared to be a U.S.-made Cessna aircraft. It was towed away on the back of a Soviet flatbed truck about 4 a.m. today. French television journalists who witnessed the removal said the plane was escorted by six police cars with flashing blue lights as it headed out toward Sheremetyevo Airport.

The Russian witness said the aircraft flew from the south over the Moscow River and circled Red Square three times before landing near the ornate St. Basil's cathedral.

A senior Western diplomat, asked whether the Soviets would consider the incident a blow to their prestige, said: "I don't deny they might worry about it. On the other hand, most countries aren't set up to shoot down every small plane that's out of place, even over the capital."

The Finnish air rescue service had mounted a search for a missing four-seat Cessna 172B that left Helsinki but failed to reach its planned destination of Stockholm, Sweden, officials in Helsinki said.

"The pilot identified himself as Matthias Rust," said Raimo Seppanen of the Malmi Airport flight control office.

"He took off in the right direction and we gave him the altitudes, but then he vanished," Seppanen told The Associated Press in Helsinki.

The Finnish search was canceled after authorities decided the missing plane was probably the same aircraft that made the dramatic Red Square landing. Few planes fly over central Moscow because of strict controls, and there are no known reports of any planes landing on Red Square.

Moscow and Helsinki are 550 miles apart.

In Bonn, West Germany, a Foreign Ministry spokesman said today a private airplane which flew from Hamburg to Helsinki, Finland, was missing. But he could not confirm it was the same plane that landed in Moscow.

Uniformed police and plainclothes agents set up barricades to keep passers-by away from the aircraft. The letters ECJB were visible on the fuselage, but a West German flag the witness said he saw on the tail had been blotted out with gold paint by 2 a.m. today.

Until it was taken away two hours later, the plane remained under guard and authorities chased away Western reporters attempting to ask about the incident.

"Nothing happened," a policeman told an Associated Press correspondent who saw the plane parked near St. Basil's cathedral at 2 a.m. "You can learn about it tomorrow from the Foreign Ministry press center."

Two U.S. television crewmen were forced back into their car early today when they attempted to film the parked plane, and three reporters were prevented from taking pictures and ordered to leave.

Chernobyl mishap has claimed 31 lives, could cause cancer

Hearst News Service

The Chernobyl nuclear power plant accident has claimed 31 Soviet lives so far, and could result in another 75,000 cancer deaths worldwide over the next 50 years, according to Dr. Robert P. Gale, the American physician who treated hundreds of Soviet victims of the April 1986 explosion.

Despite this, "the ultimate fallout from Chernobyl is likely to be more good than evil," he said.

Gale, 41, who emerged as one of the biggest heroes of the tragedy, is associate professor of medicine and head of the bone-marrow transplant unit at the Medical Center of the University of California at Los Angeles.

"I think we might all stand to benefit from this tragedy," he said.

Widely acclaimed in the United States for his transplantation techniques, Gale is probably far better known in the Soviet Union, where his name is a household word and he was regularly stopped on the streets of Moscow by Soviet citizens, who thanked him for his help.

Once in the Soviet Union, which initially had rebuffed U.S. offers of assistance, Gale immediatly set to work assessing the conditions of the approximately 500 hospitalized victims of the accident, 300 of whom had been flown to Moscow where a special unit was available to treat radiation victims.

Bone-marrow transplants helped many of the seriously injured whose marrow had been destroyed by radiation, but others were beyond help.

Gale said a similar accident is unlikely in the U.S. While the amount of radiation released from the power plant cores was similar in the Chernobyl and Three Mile Island incidents, he said, the containment of the radiation at the Pennsylvania plant was 5,000 as effective as that at the Soviet plant. One result: There were no deaths at Three Mile Island.

While the immediate impact of Chernobyl was felt by Soviet citizens who lived in the vicinity, the long-range effect in the form of radiation-induced cancer over the next few decades will be borne by people worldwide. Of the up to 75,000 cancer deaths that could occur over the next 50 years as a result of Chenobyl, more will be in non-Soviet Europe than in the Soviet Union, he said.

"A nuclear accident anywhere is a nuclear accident everywhere," Gale said. "We are all in this together."

Despite the tragic loss of life, Gale said the nuclear accident has led to both political and scientific rewards.

"I think the Soviet people are very, very appreciative," Gale said, and their reaction "would serve us well in the long run" by fostering more cooperative efforts between the two superpowers.

From a medical perspective, "we have learned many, many important things," Gale said.

The number of Chernobyl victims equalled the number of victims of all previous nuclear accidents.

"We just doubled our data base. I think we would approach our next accident very differently," he said.

While the Chernobyl accident commanded worldwide attention, its medical consequences "would look like absolutely nothing" compared to the smallest unintentional exchange of nuclear weapons between the United States and the Soviet Union, Gale said.

"We really need to do all we can" to reduce the possibility of nuclear war, he said. "We all have to work toward a common goal."

Three Mozambicans reported killed by South African raiders

MAPUTO, Mozambique (AP) — South African commandos killed three Mozambicans early today in attacks on four houses in a residential district of this capital, the national news agency reported.

The Mozambican News Agency said it was the first direct attack on Mozambique by South African forces since the two countries signed a mutual security pact three years ago.

In Pretoria, the South African Defense Force called the report "unsubtantiated."

One of the houses attacked contained offices of the African National Congress, the main guerrilla movement seeking to overthrow South Africa's white-led government, the news agency said. It said no one was killed at the ANC offices.

The Portuguese news agency Lusa also said Mozambican authorities believed the attack was aimed at members of the ANC, which is outlawed in South Africa.

"The defense force is not prepared to comment on unsubstantiated allegations of involvement in incidents in Mozambique," said a South African military spokesman, who declined to be identified by name.

"There have been similar attempts in the past to link the defense force with incidents elsewhere," the spokesman said, citing a recent bomb explosion this month that killed a woman in Harare, the capital of Zimbabwe. Zimbabwean spokesmen blamed South African agents, and South African authorities denied it.

Lusa reported that the dead included the brother-in-law of the Mozambican armed forces chief of staff.

Lusa quoted an unidentified Security Ministry official as saying the commandos broke into the home of Antonio Pateguana, brother-in-law of Mozambique's chief of staff, and killed him and his wife with weapons equipped with silencers.

Mozambique is a former Portuguese colony.

The news agency said the attacks were carried out simultaneously by groups of four men traveling in cars. The cars were destroyed close to the Indian Ocean beachfront and the attackers left Maputo by boat, the agency said.

The raids were reported in the Polana district, a section of the capital near the ocean, where government officials and foreign diplomats live.

The Mozambican News Agency identified two of the dead as a Mozambican couple, whose home was attacked. The third victim was said to be a night watchman at a house used by South African refugees in transit through Mozambique.

Besides the ANC offices, the fourth target was said to be a house on a beachfront avenue, where a Tanzanian citizen lives. The news agency said the attackers were interrupted at the house and left after breaking a window.

The agency quoted an unnamed eyewitness as saying that one of the attackers at the refugee house told him in Portuguese to "disappear, we have work to do."

WORLD IN BRIEF

Interferon makes AIDS inroads, doctor reports

PARIS (AP) — A doctor who pioneered AIDS treatment in France says 30 percent of his patients treated with interferon for an AIDS-related form of cancer have experienced complete remission.

The doctor also said all his Kaposi's sarcoma patients under interferon treatment, even those who have not had remission, are still alive after an average of three years.

Dr. Willy Rozenbaum of the Claude Bernard Hospital in Paris spoke with The Associated Press about his four-year study of interferon treatment of Kaposi's sarcoma, an otherwise rare cancer of the skin that occurs commonly in AIDS victims.

Rozenbaum said he would present the results in a paper at the Third International AIDS Congress, which opens June 1 in Washington, D.C.

The study tracked 82 patients. At least one of the AIDS patients treated with interferon has survived 4½ years, six months longer than the time covered by the report.

Former Indian leader dies

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Former Prime Minister Chaudhary Charan Singh died today after a long illness. He was 84.

Singh, a leader of the Lok Dal political party, served as prime minister from August 1979 to January 1980 at one of the most tumultuous periods in Indian politics.

Singh was one of many opposition politicians jailed in 1975-76 during the emergency declared by the late Prime Minister Indira Gandhi.

Singh was a lawyer and former chief minister of India's most populous state, Uttar Pradesh. He had been in deteriorating health since 1985, and doctors attributed his death to heart failure.

He is survived by his wife, Gayatri Devi, a son, and five daughters.

Korean officers arrested

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Three senior police commanders were arrested today for allegedly covering up the torture death of a student by bribing two junior officers to take the blame, a government prosecutor said.

The deputy chief of the national police and two other top officers also were arrested for trying to protect other officers who were involved in the killing of student Park Chong-chul on Jan. 14, according to a government spokesman. The official declined to be identified in keeping with official practice.

In a related development today, three junior officers arrested last week were indicted on charges of "brutal acts" for their role in the death, the spokesman said.

Two other junior officers have been charged in connection with the death in January. They had said they were the only ones involved.

Leftists seek peace talks

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Leftist guerrillas waging a 7½-year-old civil war renewed an offer to talk peace with the U.S.-backed government and called for measures to reduce the fighting's toll on a battered population.

An 18-point proposal offered Thursday to "humanize" the war includes an offer to end the campaign of economic sabotage that has caused an estimated $2 billion in damages since the start of the armed conflict in late 1979.

The war has claimed more than 63,000 lives, most of them civilians.

Gulf commerce a concern

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iranian President Ali Khamenei said today Iran was ready to cooperate with other countries to keep the Persian Gulf open for commercial navigation, but he rejected any role for the superpowers.

"The Persian Gulf must remain secure and should stay open for the countries of the region and the world and the flow of oil should continue from there," Khamenei said. "And we are prepared to make efforts to achieve this...and we believe it can be achieved."

Khamenei said although Iran's war with Iraq would continue on the battlefields until the overthrow of Iraqi President Saddam Hussein and his socialist Baath party, "the war in the (waters of the) Persian Gulf can come to an end."

Khamenei said the presence of the superpowers in the gulf is "a major and near danger." He said those who have interfered there are now regretting it.

He apparently was alluding to the Iraqi attack May 17 on the frigate USS Stark that killed 37 crewmen.

Steel firm makes offer

MONTERREY, Mexico (AP) — The Hylsa steel company has offered its foreign creditors up to 35 percent of its stock under one plan to pay off its $1.5 billion debt, a company spokesman said Thursday.

Roberto Cavazos, Hylsa assistant vice president, said the company offered two plans to creditors at a meeting Wednesday in Houston.

"The company offered two options so the lenders would have enough room to maneuver and come to terms with the restructuring plan," Cavazos said by telephone.

He said creditors could accept either plan or a combination of both.

Hylsa, the largest subsidiary of the Monterrey-based Alfa conglomerate, has suffered severe finanancial difficulties along with the rest of Mexico since 1982 when the currency was devalued. The peso, valued at 27 to the dollar in February 1982, is now worth about 1,260 to $1.

Hylsa would pay creditors $20 million in cash under both plans, Cavazos said.

Women conduct vigil

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Eight women staged a silent, six-hour vigil outside the National Palace on Thursday demanding freedom for 740 Mexicans they say are being held as political prisoners.

The demonstration was among seven held simultaneously around the country as part of the International Week of the Detained and Disappeared called by human rights groups worldwide.

Mexico's protests were organized by the 10-year-old National Committee to Defend Political Prisoners, Fugitives, Exiles and Missing Persons. Participants were fasting for 24 hours and sending letters to President Miguel de la Madrid stating their demands.

Bomb rocks Beunos Aires

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — A bomb exploded in an underground parking garage across the street from the Congress building Thursday, blowing up six cars and setting 50 ablaze, police reported.

Four people were slightly injured. There was no immediate claim of responsibility.

The explosion occurred five hours before the Senate was to debate President Raul Alfonsin's proposal to end prosecution of hundreds of mid-level officers accused of human rights abuses during the anti-leftist "dirty war" under military rule in the late 1970s.

Civil court Judge Emilio Garcia Mendez said he believed the bomb was an "act of intimidation" by opponents of the measure to end prosecutions, which is expected to be approved. The lower house approved the presidential proposal on May 17.

Argentine capital moved

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — Congress Thursday gave final approval to a presidential plan to move the capital 600 miles south and make the twin cities of Viedma and Carmen de Patagones Argentina's new political center.

Motorists honked their horns to notify the 55,000 residents of the two windswept cities on the fringe of Patagonia when the House of Deputies approved the measure 146-17 after nine hours' debate.

On March 25, the Senate passed it 24-17.

House Speaker Juan Carlos Pugliese said moving the capital from this city of 10 million bodes well for the country because it "decentralizes Argentina."

President Raul Alfonsin proposed the move 13 months ago, saying Buenos Aires had grown "into an excessive megalopolis." One in three of the 31 million Argentines live in this congested city.
