

Teenager arrested in slaying of Turkish consul general

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Police raided a home in a middle-class suburb and arrested a teen-ager on a murder charge after Turkey's consul general was assassinated in a burst of gunfire only a week after he had turned down an offer of official protection.

Armenian terrorists claimed responsibility for the killing Thursday of Consul General Kemal Arikan, the third Turkish consular official in Los Angeles killed in nine years. Deputy Police Chief James Hardin said officers were "looking for at least one other suspect."

Handig "Harry" Sassounian, 19, of Pasadena, was booked late Thursday for investigation of murder in Arikan's killing, said police Sgt. Dudley Varney. Arikan was shot as he waited at a stoplight on a busy city street while he was driving to work.

Three juveniles were held for questioning for several hours but were released, Varney said.

Los Angeles Police Chief Daryl Gates said the ambush killing came a week after the 54-year-old diplomat was warned that his life was in danger but turned down an offer of police protection.

"We have no idea why he chose to do what he decided to do, but he did refuse our offers," Gates said.

Minutes after Arikan was shot, anonymous calls claiming responsibility were received by various news organizations, including the Washington bureau of The Associated Press.

"We have just shot a Turkish diplomat in Los Angeles," the caller in Washington said. The male voice identified himself as a member of the Justice Commandos of the Armenian Genocide.

Armenian nationalists accuse the Turks of slaughtering 1.5 million of their countrymen in Turkey in 1915 and driving hundreds of thousands more into exile. The Turkish government never has acknowledged the accusations of genocide.

A friend of Arikan, Akif Keskin, said the consul general seemed to have a premonition of his assassination, but stopped using bodyguards because he felt they could not save him.

"He told me, 'If someone wants to kill me, he will whether I am guarded or not. Why should I get a young bodyguard killed too?'" Keskin said.

Arikan was alone when he pulled his white Ford out of the garage of the high-rise apartment he shared with his wife, Nuran.

It was 9:56 a.m. and rain was beginning to fall as Arikan turned the corner and headed up Comstock Avenue to busy Wilshire Boulevard and his office at the Turkish consulate two miles away in Beverly Hills.

He stopped at a red light. Eyewitnesses and police said two dark-haired young men rushed up to the car and opened fire through the door and window of the driver's side. A hail of bullets, eight or 10 in all, smashed through metal and glass.

The gunmen fled to a waiting car, the witnesses said, and sped away while Arikan, hit in the head and chest, slumped over dead.

His car rolled, hit two autos and crashed into a tree.

"The car was rolling, like by itself, like there was no driver," said construction engineer Rick Collette, who looked up from his work nearby and saw two young men, about 18 to 21 years old, running away.

Police found a 9mm pistol and a 45-caliber pistol in ivy where witnesses saw the assassins pause before jumping in a white Chevrolet Camaro. All the bullets in the guns had been discharged.

Witnesses noted the license number of the car, and police traced it to a home in a middle-class area of Pasadena, where it was confiscated and the four young men were taken into custody, said Pasadena Police spokesman Rocky McAlister.

"Our revolutionary struggle began in 1975," the caller to the AP said after Arikan was killed. "Our sole targets are Turkish diplomats and institutions."

In a written statement, President Reagan called the attack "a tragic event," and ordered the FBI to join the investigation by the Los Angeles Police Department.

Reagan said Arikan "was assassinated in an apparent act of terrorism. I condemn this vicious act."

On Jan. 27, 1973, Turkish Consul General Mehmet Baydar and Vice Consul Bahadir Demir were shot to death at a hotel in Santa Barbara. Gourgen Yanikian, 77, of Santa Barbara was imprisoned for the attack.

On Oct. 6, 1980, two gasoline bombs were tossed at the Bel-Air home then occupied by Arikan. One week later, a local Turkish travel agency was bombed by individuals claiming to be from the same group. There were no arrests in either case.

Dozier credits 'power of prayer' for rescue

VICENZA, Italy (AP) — U.S. Brig. Gen. James L. Dozier today called freedom "the most precious gift" and said his rescue from Red Brigades kidnappers was largely the result of the "power of prayer."

The 50-year-old general, clean shaven and clad in a green dress uniform, also paid a glowing tribute to Italian security forces who freed him Thursday from a Red Brigades "people's prison" after 42 days' captivity.

"As a military officer, I would very much like to have people like this under my command when the going gets tough," Dozier said.

Italian authorities made 17 more arrests today and uncovered hideouts filled with arms in renewed efforts to smash the Red Brigades, Italy's most feared terrorist organization. Most of those arrested were from Verona, but a few were picked up in Mestre, near Venice.

Dozier made extemporaneous remarks to 250 reporters gathered at the nondenominational chapel at the U.S. military base in this northern Italian city. He did not take questions, explaining he was still being debriefed by Italian and American authorities.

The general said nothing about the time he spent in captivity. He appeared relaxed and gestured repeatedly to make his points.

Before Dozier met with the press, a spokesman, Lt. Gen. Col. Jack Barham, told reporters that the general had not been "physically mistreated" and was "sufficiently fed" during the six-week ordeal.

Dozier was flanked by his wife, Judith, dressed in a red two-piece suit and a floral patterned blouse, and their 24-year-old daughter Cheryl.

Mrs. Dozier had tears in her eyes and nodded frequently as the general spoke. She also received a belated Christmas present at the news conference from Dozier, a gold chain with the symbol of NATO's Southern Command.

Mrs. Dozier kissed him on the left cheek and hugged him — repeating the gesture three times at the request of photographers.

Dozier, described by his aides as a devout nondenominational Protestant and a regular church goer, said "the power of prayer works."

"I'm here today to tell you that it works and it had a large part in my being here with you today," he said.

"I pray regularly myself but during the last six weeks I was on the receiving end of many prayers, and where I was you could sure as hell feel it," Dozier said.

Dozier said "events of the past several weeks have reinforced in my mind that the enemies of freedom are many in this world of ours, and that free men must be constantly prepared to contend with them."

He said that NATO is the key to the continued freedom "of free men and women."

Dozier praised the "speed and precision" with which the Italians carried out the rescue.

Italian newspapers hailed the 90-second police raid that freed Dozier as the greatest victory to date against the ultra-leftist terrorists. It was the first operation since 1975 to free a captive of the Red Brigades, who enjoyed an aura of invincibility.

Dozier was rescued by commandos from an elite anti-terrorist squad who broke into the apartment where he was held in Padua, 19 miles south of Vicenza.

One of the raiders swung a rifle and floored a terrorist pointing a pistol at the head of the general, who was bound and gagged, shoeless and dressed in a blue warm-up suit. No shots were fired, police said.

The commandos arrested three men and two women, and investigators began questioning them for leads to their accomplices. Officials said they expected to find eight terrorists in the apartment. They sealed off the neighborhood, where many students live, for half an hour after the raid but no more arrests were made at that time.

The Italian news agency ANSA reported the raiders seized 15 pistols, five submachine guns, seven hand grenades, six packages of plastic explosive, $16,000 worth of lire, false identity documents and an "archive" of information about people living in Venice.

Two men injured in morning accidents

Pampa police were kept busy early today when the heavy fog and slick roads contributed to two accidents on local highways.

The first accident occurred about 9:30 a.m. today on Highway 70 near the new Department of Public Safety office and Coronado Community Hospital. Injured in the mishap were W. L. Hite, 78, 1009 Varnon, and Ed Smith, 26, 1418 S. Birch. The two were taken to the hospital where they were treated and released.

A second accident occurred on Browning Street at Loop 171 when a 1,500-gallon petroleum tank truck traveling east on Browning hit a slick spot on the highway and careened out of control.

The Mayo Oil Company truck, driven by Jerry Dean Williams of Pampa, came to rest on its top. The Pampa Fire Department was called to wash down the diesel spill. Williams was not injured in the accident.

Lunch menu pleases prisoners

PALESTINE, Texas (AP) — Jail food is never much to rave about but Anderson County prisoners recently looked forward to lunch — and their marijuana cigarettes.

Jail personnel thought they smelled the odor of marijuana coming from the elevator shaft so Sheriff Roy Herrington ordered a search of the second floor cells. A small amount of marijuana turned up.

The smell persisted, and a second, more thorough, search turned up four ounces of the weed hidden behind one light fixture and 10 marijuana cigarettes behind another.

It seems a jail trusty got ahold of a key to the evidence room and was distributing marijuana to the other prisoners when he served them lunch.

Investigators hint ice buildup caused crash of Air Florida jet

WASHINGTON (AP) — Hinting that ice caused the crash of an Air Florida jet that killed 78 people this month, federal investigators are warning airlines to take special care against ice forming on planes while they wait on the ground in freezing weather.

The investigators said the Federal Aviation Administration immediately should notify all air carriers of "the potential hazard" of icing, especially when planes wait a long time on the runway during snow or icy weather.

The National Transportation Safety Board said the problem is particularly acute when a plane has to wait in freezing temperatures for more than 20 minutes after it has been de-iced.

The Air Florida plane that crashed into the Potomac River Jan. 13 waited at least 43 minutes between its last de-icing and the takeoff attempt that killed 78 people.

The safety board has no power to force compliance with its recommendations. An FAA statement said the board's suggestions have been distributed to U.S. and foreign carriers as well as to its own airport tower controllers.

Although the board asked the FAA to issue mandatory directives on the matter, the agency said it would hold off further action until a detailed technical review of the board's findings can be made.

Francis McAdams, the NTSB member overseeing the Air Florida investigation, told reporters it was too early to single out a cause for the crash.

But he said several findings so far indicate possible icing problems that may have prevented the Air Florida jet from gaining proper acceleration.

Saxophone thief sacked on theft, assault charges

An unsuccessful saxophone thief went against long odds Thursday night as he attempted to make off with a $450 musical instrument from backstage at M.K. Brown Auditorium during the Pampa Police Association sponsored Ozark Country Jubilee.

Timothy Paul Dill, 24, 1420 Market St., Pampa, is in custody today charged with the theft and aggravated assault against a police officer.

The charge of aggravated assault was levied after Pampa Police Officer Rod Bishop was assaulted by the saxophone-stealing suspect. Bishop attempted to retrieve the instrument and the suspect didn't want to return it, according to Pampa Police Chief J.J. Ryzman today.

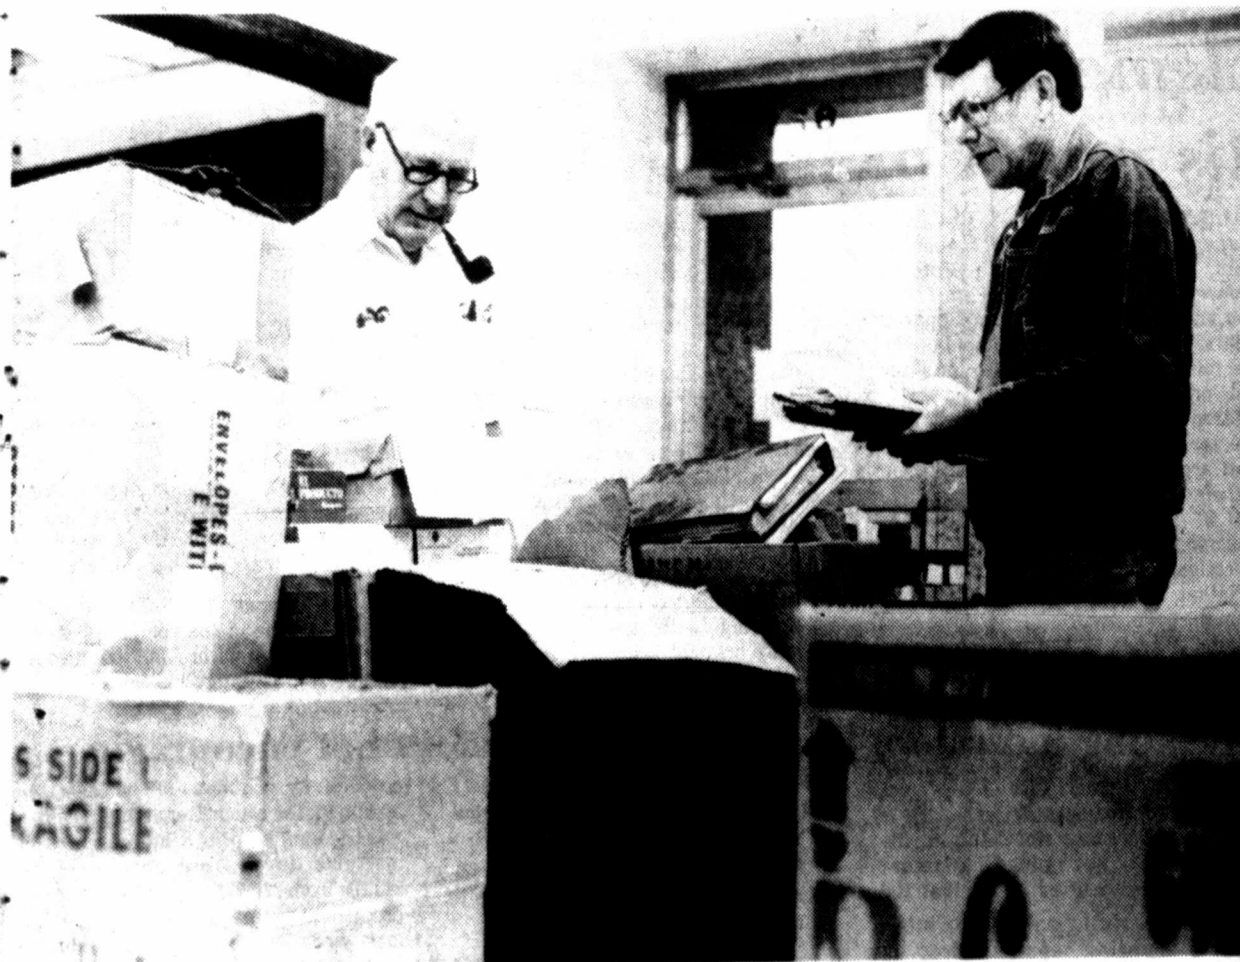

Bishop was treated at Coronado Community Hospital for various head and facial lacerations and released.

Dill's luck went bad when he was spotted acting suspiciously in the auditorium's backstage area by Pampa Police Clerk Jamie Lowe.

"Lowe reported the suspicious actions to Officer Bishop when Dill attempted to leave the auditorium," Ryzman said.

"Bishop made a routine traffic stop on the suspect's vehicle in the 1000 block of Gwendolyn, and after receiving permission to search the trunk of the vehicle, he spotted the hot sax and the struggle ensued," Ryzman said.

Owner of the Buescher Aristocrat saxophone, Ozark Jubilee member, Barbara Lynn Wright of Kimberling, Mo., missed only one number during the performance due to the theft, but continued her performance in professional style when the instrument was returned.

Critics will attack Reagan certification of human rights

WASHINGTON (AP) — Critics of the U.S.-backed Salvadoran government are vowing to fight President Reagan's certification that the military-civilian junta has made a "concerted and significant effort" to protect human rights.

The president's judgment Thursday came on the heels of published reports alleging that El Salvador's troops had massacred hundreds of unarmed men, women and children in recent offensives against leftist guerrillas.

The certification was required by Congress in last year's foreign aid bill before the administration could continue $65 million in aid to the Central American government.

Rep. Gerry E. Studds, D-Mass., a member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, said he will introduce a resolution to overturn Reagan's certification, which he charged ignored widespread human rights abuses by the Salvadoran military.

"There's no way the president's going to legitimately meet the concerns of the Congress in this (foreign aid) law," Studds said. "I don't know anybody outside this administration who believes what the administration is saying."

A House hearing on the certification is set for next Tuesday, with a Senate hearing expected the following Monday.

In a six-page report to Congress explaining Reagan's decision, the administration said the Salvadoran government was making reasonable progress toward halting human rights abuses considering the current civil war.

"El Salvador is now in a state of active civil strife involving the government and armed groups of the left and right," the report said. "As in similar circumstances in history, such civil strife has produced violations of human rights by elements of each side."

While not addressing recent reports in The Washington Post and The New York Times about alleged government massacres of civilians, it noted that the military high command has prohibited its troops from violating human rights.

And the report, delivered to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, said statistics compiled by the U.S. Embassy in El Salvador showed a decrease in alleged abuses by security forces.

However, a State Department official who was involved in the El Salvador decision raised questions about that assessment. The official, who asked not to be identified, said he was "not aware of any" improvements in the Salvadoran government's human rights record.

The president's certification also seemed certain to be contested in court. Michael Luhan of the Council on Hemispheric Affairs said the liberal Washington-based research group will seek an injunction against continuation of aid immediately.

Former Rep. Robert Drinan, D-Mass., who has said he will handle the court challenge, declared earlier this week that "the law doesn't just say that such a certification must be made, but that it must be true."

Haig stops in London for briefing

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. added a last minute stop in London to his schedule today, capping a busy week of Middle East shuttle diplomacy and East-West negotiations with a briefing for British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher.

There was no word on why Haig decided to return to Washington via London instead of flying straight home as scheduled.

U.S. officials traveling with the secretary said he would confer with Mrs. Thatcher on the situation in Poland, East-West relations and his visits to Cairo and Jerusalem.

Haig visited the two Middle East capitals for the second time in two weeks in an effort to break the nearly three-year deadlock in the Israeli-Egyptian negotiations on Palestinian autonomy.

"We have got a lot of work to do and we are far from finished," he said Thursday.

After listening to the Israeli and Egyptian positions during his first visit to the region, Haig came back with suggestions for bridging the gaps that have stalemated efforts to bring self-rule to the 1.3 million Palestinians on the occupied West Bank of the Jordan River and the Gaza Strip.

Following a meeting with Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak, Haig told reporters he did not come with a "made-in-America plan" to solve all outstanding questions, but rather with suggestions he hopes will lead to compromise.

"What we are seeking to do is to see if we can close a number of existing differences," he told a news conference earlier in Tel Aviv.

The secretary reported "slight progress" after meeting with Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin. In Cairo, he said some of the new U.S. ideas "are incomplete because the problem itself is too complex and the differences are too wide."

Poland's charges called ridiculous

By The Associated Press

The State Department said Polish charges of an "enormous" increase in U.S. spying in Poland were ridiculous, and that the Communists apparently picked names at random from American diplomats around the world.

Poland's martial-law regime rolled out its spy charges at a news conference in Warsaw Thursday for foreign journalists.

Col. Zbigniew Wislocki of the Interior Ministry's counter-intelligence service allegedly involved in intelligence activities. He said three were U.S. diplomats and eight were CIA agents.

Wislocki also named seven Americans in other countries who he claimed tried to recruit Poles for intelligence work in Poland.

"During the last two or three years an enormous increase of activity of American intelligence has occurred, including classic intelligence acts, such as recruitment of Polish citizens, reported recruitment attempts to the authorities.

In Washington, State Department spokesman Rush Taylor said in a statement: "It is the policy of the U.S. government not to respond to this kind of ridiculous allegation." Then he added: "The persons named appear to have been selected at random from among members of the U.S. Foreign Service serving in posts all around the world, and in at least one case, a post that does not even exist."

Clements refuses to apologize about his report of federal investigation

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements, who says he heard about it from prison Director Jim Estelle, apparently is the only man in Texas who knows anything about a supposed federal grand jury investigation of the special master assigned to monitor state prisons.

Clements insisted Thursday that Special Master Vincent Nathan and his staff are the target of an investigation of their "misbehavior."

U.S. Attorney Dan Hedges of Houston, however, said there is no investigation, and never was.

Nathan has demanded an apology from the governor.

But Clements, asked this morning if he was going to apologize to Nathan, said:

"I am not. I have no intention of doing anything like that."

Thursday, about three hours after making the remarks, Clements said he may have "misunderstood" the situation, but his staff lawyer, Johnny McCollum said that if the court-appointed masters aren't being investigated, "they ought to be. I'd even be willing to persecute them."

In a brief statement, Nathan said it was unfortunate Clements made the remarks without "adequate knowledge or information. Under the circumstances, he owes an apology to me and members of my staff."

According to Hedges, attorneys for the state brought some evidence to his attention regarding Nathan and his prison monitors.

Hedges said his office "determined there had been no violations of federal law." He said an investigation would have been ordered if federal laws were violated.

Nevertheless, Clements, basing his information on what he said Estelle told him, insisted there was an ongoing investigation.

"That master and those monitors we have over there ... have been in a state of misbehavior," said the governor.

"One of the reasons that this master now is refusing to comment with respect to some of the controversies is because those monitors and the master himself are under a grand jury investigation."

Leading indicators up, but other indicators not encouraging

By JAMES PELTZ
AP Business Writer

The first increase since July in the government's key gauge of future economic health lifted hopes that the recession is nearing an end. But other reports showing another drop in productivity and more auto layoffs tempered economists' enthusiasm.

The Commerce Department said its Index of Leading Indicators rose 0.6 percent in December, signaling that the economy should begin recovering before long. The strength of that recovery, however, left economists divided.

Less-encouraging news showed up in four other reports:

—Productivity in private business plunged at an annual rate of 7.2 percent in the fourth quarter of 1981 as the recession clamped down — the biggest drop since the government began keeping such figures in 1947 — and productivity was down 0.1 percent for all of 1981, the Labor Department said.

—The number of U.S. autoworkers on indefinite layoff rose this week to 243,500 from 229,275 last week, while car production slumped 11.9 percent from last week to 80,141 cars, industry reports said. At General Motors Corp., which now is negotiating a new contract with the United Auto Workers union, 139,000 workers were on indefinite layoff this week compared with 126,000 reported last week.

Tower reports honeymoon is over

WASHINGTON (AP) — The honeymoon is clearly over, and President Reagan's proposals that more than 40 programs be turned over to state and local governments is "shaping up as something of a partisan battle," says Sen. John Tower, R-Texas.

"But I think it will depend to a great deal on the reaction from state and local officials. At that point, I think it will become more of a bipartisan issue," Tower told Texas reporters in a 30-minute news conference Thursday.

Democrats criticized Reagan sharply the past two days — partly because of his suggestion for releasing federal control of programs but mostly because he made no mention of the rising national deficit in his State of the Union address Tuesday night.

The Democrats said the omission makes it clear the president has abandoned thought of a balanced budget and is willing to live with a $100 billion deficit, which they said his economic proposals have brought about.

Tower said he agrees with Reagan's stance that no new legislative steps need to be taken this session to correct the national deficit.

"I don't like a deficit of $100 billion, although I'm not sure it's going to be that high. I think that's using the most pessimistic figures to get that. But even if it's $65 billion, it's too high. The question is, should we make a mid-course correction?" Tower said.

"I don't think we should. If we abandon a program before it's even had an opportunity to work, based purely on speculation, then I don't see how we can ever resolve problems on a long-term basis."

Tower said he will oppose any attempts to cut the proposed defense budget or efforts to roll back or eliminate the personal income tax cuts passed last year.

"We've underfunded defense for several years, and we're trying to make that up. I don't think we've underfunded other areas," said Tower, who is chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee.

The Defense Department is not exempt from waste and abuse, but Tower said efficiencies are being made.

Tower called Reagan's advocacy of his "New Federalism" not an attempt to divert attention from a mounting national deficit, but "an attempt to get a handle on a federal government that's gotten too big, too powerful, too costly and too burdensome."

As of his 10 a.m. news conference, he had not had an opportunity to talk with Texas Gov. Bill Clements about the proposal, but said he planned to telephone the governor later in the day to get his views.

Former president Ford backs Reaganomics

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Former President Gerald Ford says President Reagan's economic proposals will provide few immediate benefits, but should bring about much better economic conditions by late spring or early summer.

Ford, speaking to 500 people at a free enterprise forum sponsored by St. Mary's University, said Reagan is moving in the right direction.

After his speech, Ford said he had no political aspirations other than to help Republicans such as Texas Gov. Bill Clements in their campaigns should his assistance be requested.

"If we're going to get responsible fiscal policy we have to tighten the reins," Ford said. "Reagan's changes are a big step toward the goal of reviving the democratic capitalism system which is so much for the people of the United States."

He said the country is encountering tough times now, but if Reagan's policies are adopted the change will benefit the nation.

Reagan's cuts will not reduce the budgets of 90 percent of the current federal programs, Ford said, and are merely a reduction in former President

Jimmy Carter's budget recommendations.

"Reagan reduced the budget recommended by Carter of $740 billion by $40 billion. In 90 percent of the cases the budget increases were reduced from 17 percent under Carter's plan to 7 percent under Reagan."

Economics will be the major political issue during 1982, Ford said.

"People vote the bread and butter issues. If unemployment is going down, and inflation is declining ... I believe the Republicans will do surprisingly well (in November)," he said.

Reagan would cut nuclear programs budget

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan will propose further increases for nuclear programs in his 1983 energy budget but will push for deep cuts in solar and energy conservation, congressional sources say.

The proposed budget figures, obtained Thursday from sources who asked not to be identified, would add more than $800 million to weapons production and other nuclear programs over 1982 levels.

At the same time, the president will ask Congress to cut energy conservation grants by almost 90 percent and eliminate many solar energy research programs.

The proposal also moves toward Reagan's pledge to eliminate the Energy Department, grouping its various programs under the other Cabinet agencies that would run them if Congress goes along.

Within the department's central office, the proposal eliminates money for the staffs of the assistant secretaries and slashes the appropriation for Energy Secretary

James Edwards' office staff from $2.1 million in 1982 to $649,000 for 1983. There are corresponding cuts in consumer, intergovernmental, legislative and public affairs staffs.

Overall, the 1983 budget proposals requests $7.74 billion for Energy Department functions, a cut of $1.7 billion from the 1982 appropriation.

The budget submission calls for the Energy Department's nuclear programs to increase from $4.69 billion in 1982 to $5.5 billion in fiscal 1983, which begins Oct. 1.

Relutant judges start redistricting

DALLAS (AP) — Three federal judges have decided to take on the nasty job of redrawing district lines for Texas legislative elections, pleasing everyone involved in the case — except themselves.

Bemoaning the "chaotic process" that forced the court to intervene in the "legislative function" of redistricting, the three-judge panel Thursday also extended the filing deadline for the May 1 primary from midnight Monday to 6 p.m. on March 19.

"The only way for the elections to proceed without delay — perhaps substantial delay — is for the court to adopt an interim plan" until the Legislature draws permanent district lines, said appeals court Judge Carolyn D. Randall.

She said the court accepted the task "with great reluctance."

"Without question, it (Texas' redistricting process) should be changed," said U.S. District Judge Jerry Buchmeyer in a separate statement. He noted that because the Legislature is not in session and the Legislative Redistricting Board no longer exists, only the courts can negotiate Voting Rights Act challenges with the U.S. Justice Department.

The decision came after six days of hearings in a legal challenge of the plan drawn by the five-man, all-Democratic LRB. Opponents of the plan said it violated the Voting Rights Act by diluting minority votes, and on Monday the Justice Department agreed, effectively vetoing the LRB plan.

Republicans said the LRB plan was partisan, that it unfairly helped Democrats and hurt the GOP. Their lawyers urged the court to abandon the LRB lines and accept their proposals, or to devise an entirely new map.

Texas Democratic Party chief Bob Slagle, emphasizing the "confusion" among would-be candidates, joined lawyers representing the state in asking the court to adopt the LRB plan so the many details of running an election won't have to be redone and the election delayed.

The court's decision fell somewhere in between.

"Everybody won," said Joaquin Avila, attorney for the Mexican-American Legal Defense and Education Fund, one of the plaintiffs in the case.

The judges said that in drawing the new maps they would make "only such modifications... as may be necessary" in the LRB plans.

Steve Bickerstaff, an Austin lawyer handling the case for the attorney general's office, said he was "very pleased" by the ruling, although "ideally we would have liked for the court to have gone ahead" with the entire LRB plan.

"I would have preferred to see the LRB plan completely out of the picture, but there is nothing here that we intend to appeal or seek review of," said San Antonio lawyer John McCamish, representing plaintiffs who objected to the House plan.

The judges scheduled a March 1 hearing and ordered lawyers to submit their proposals by Feb. 19.

The LRB plan occasioned an awkward split in the state executive branch. Secretary of State David Dean, a Republican, had attacked the plan, but as the state's chief election officer he was named a defendant in the lawsuit.

In Thursday's ruling, the court said that because of the "conflicts" between Dean's and the state's official positions, it would be "appropriate" for Dean to get his own lawyer to represent him in the lawsuit. He was ordered to do so. The judges also asked the Justice Department to enter the case to aid the court.

Priest who replaced slain pastor threatened

DENVER CITY, Texas (AP) — Authorities in this West Texas community are examining a letter to the successor of a slain Roman Catholic priest's parish which an Amarillo bishop said contains a death threat.

The Rev. Thomas Vazheparampil said he received the death threat in the mail in his first month at St. Williams Catholic Church, where he replaced the Rev. Patrick Ryan.

Ryan's badly beaten body was found Dec. 22 in an Odessa motel room. The 51-year-old priest had been reported missing after he missed a Christmas mass, and his murder remains unsolved.

Vazheparampil declined to discuss the letter and a phone threat he said he received. But Bishop L.T. Matthiesen of Amarillo said the letter contained the terse message, "I'm going to kill you."

"Father Vazheparampil said he was not concerned about the threat, but I advised him to turn the letter over to authorities and to please be careful," said Matthiesen, head of the Catholic Diocese of Amarillo.

But Police Chief A.J. Fowler said that the envelope contained only a magazine story describing the shooting death of a Nevada priest.

CONVICTED. Millionaire Rex Cauble leaves the federal courthouse in Tyler Thursday night with one of his attorneys, Charles Burton, after being convicted on charges he financed and profited from an elaborate smuggling ring that used shrimp boats to ferry 106 tons of marijuana from Colombia. Rancher guilty, faces prison term

TYLER, Texas (AP) — Millionaire Rex Cauble said he was "surprised" when jurors found him guilty of financing and profiting from an elaborate drug smuggling scheme.

Cauble was not the only one surprised.

When jurors returned to the courtroom after nearly nine hours of deliberations defense lawyers looked confident.

But their confidence quickly faded when the court clerk read off a guilty verdict on all 10 counts of an indictment charging the rancher with racketeering, conspiracy and embezzlement.

The rancher was accused of masterminding an elaborate drug smuggling scheme that prosecutors said brought 106 tons of marijuana from Colombia to Texas during 1977 and 1978.

The 68-year-old rancher and his attorneys, looking grim and pale, stood quietly as the verdicts were read.

Afterwards, Cauble said, "I am surprised and disappointed, and that's all I can say right now."

Cauble's attorneys weren't even saying that much. They refused comment, citing a gag order imposed by U.S. District Judge William Steger at the onset of the three-week trial.

Steger delayed sentencing until Feb. 22.

Cauble faces a maximum of 95 years in prison and forfeiture of one-third of all his vast business and ranching empire, estimated at between $55 and $80 million.

After Steger released the jurors, defense attorney G. Brockett Irwin walked across the room and shook hands with Assistant U.S. Attorney David Baugh.

"Congratulations," Irwin said.

"I don't think that's necessary," said a solemn Baugh. "But thanks anyway."

When jurors returned to the courtroom Thursday night, some were smiling and laughing at a quiet comment from one of the panel members.

Defense attorneys apparently interpreted the levity as a good sign while prosecutors looked grim. But the mood on both sides quickly changed when the verdicts were announced.

Spectators, including many Cauble supporters, appeared stunned. Several were teary eyed and a few wept openly.

Carolyn McConnell, a Cauble office manager who testified during the trial, cried softly as she left the courthouse and whispered to a man standing near her. "He's innocent."

Cauble and his attorneys left the courthouse quickly after meeting for a few minutes in Steger's chambers. Cauble remains free on $250,000 bond.

Jury foreman Frank D. Morris told Steger during the lengthy deliberations Thursday the jurors "absolutely could not reach a verdict" without reviewing the testimony of former Cauble pilots Elmer Vogt and Miller Crowmover and FBI agent Joe Masterson.

The jury also requested government charts of Cauble loans, handwritten telephone logs from Cauble Enterprises and trip logs from Cauble's private plane.

Three of the 10 counts against Cauble concern violations of the Interstate Commerce Travel Act.

Seniority staff cuts dropped

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Under the threat of a federal lawsuit and with strong hints from Gov. Bill Clements, the three Texas Employment Commissioners have decided to fire their least productive staff instead of the last ones hired.

The agency is firing about 500 employees because of a federal budget cutback of about 30 percent. The seniority system has been criticized as unfair to women and minority employees, who have been hired in greater numbers recently.

The commissioners voted Thursday morning while Gov. Bill Clements was telling a news conference "someone" might talk to his appointee to the TEC, Richard Mellado, about his vote in favor of the "last in-first out" system, which Clements opposes.

"They're going to have to be terminated on basis of merit, not 'last in-first out,'" said Clements. "If our Texas Employment Commission continues on the 'last in-first out' basis, the Justice Department will file on them."

"Someone might put a bug in his ear that it could be he has not considered this issue appropriately," Clements said of Mellado. "I don't intend to do that, but I'm not saying that someone won't discuss it with him."

Earlier this month, the three commissioners voted 2-1 to reduce the staff by firing the last-hired. Chairman Nolan Ward opposed the plan and threatened to join a lawsuit against his own agency.

"I think it's wrong," Ward said at the time. "I think it's illegal discrimination."

But Mellado voted for the proposal and the third commissioner, Ken Clapp, reluctantly joined him.

Before the vote, the commissioners were told by their lawyer that it's a "catch-22" situation, with the discrimination question on one hand and, on the other,

Clark's role likely to be stronger one

In William P. Clark, President Reagan has a national security adviser he knows well, trusts and to whom he is willing to delegate authority.

That means Clark will be a stronger participant in the execution of this country's foreign policy than was his predecessor, Richard V. Allen.

The Clark appointment will be faulted by some because Clark's foreign policy credentials are not imposing. He was executive secretary in the governor's office when Reagan was governor of California. Later Gov. Reagan appointed Clark to the California Supreme Court. His only experience in the making of foreign policy came last year after Reagan appointed him assistant secretary of state. He does not have the kind of academic background or expertise that Henry Kissinger, Zbigniew Brzezinski or Allen himself brought to the post as the top staffer for the National Security Council.

But Clark has one essential credential. He has the confidence of the president — which means that, unlike Allen, he will have direct access to the Oval Office and won't have to deal with Mr. Reagan at arm's length, through presidential counselor Edwin Meese III.

Meese and the two other members of the president's inner circle, James Baker and Michael Deaver, were wise to shift their chairs and give Clark, as a fourth staff adviser a place in front of the president's desk. They also are lacking in foreign policy experience. Clark, limited as his experience is in this important area of the president's responsibility, nevertheless has more than Meese, Baker and Deaver. He will be giving full time to foreign affairs.

Clark may have the clout needed to mediate between the often conflicting views of two strong Cabinet members, Secretary of State Alexander Haig and Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger. These men often speak for the viewpoints of the powerful bureaucracies they head — Weinberger for the Pentagon and Haig for Foggy Bottom. The White House must take its own bearings and establish a position somewhere in between. For this task, we venture to say, Clark is better qualified than his instant detractors realize.

OPINION PAGE

Tale of two Indianans

The Wall Street Journal recently featured an article that spoke volumes about the critical economic policy debate that continues in Congress and about why this November looms as a crucial test of what hope exists for a political remedy to our nation's troubles.

The focus of the front-page article was on a 28-year-old Indiana congressman, John Hiler. It used Hiler as a symbol of a crop of freshman representatives, elected with Ronald Reagan, who are ideologically committed to restoring our economic health by paring back government. Several of them unseated entrenched statisticians (Hiler ousted Democrat John Brademas after 11 terms) and they were greatly responsible for getting much of the president's budget and tax package through last year.

What sets Hiler and these others apart from the old conservative hands of Congress is their consistency. They believe in reducing government not only when it's politically profitable and hurts somebody else's constituency, but across the board.

They are true-believing politicians of ideas, and they drive elders like Tip O'Neill, long used to horse-trading favors with other people's money, crazy with bewilderment. O'Neill contemptuously dismisses the likes of Hiler as "Reagan's robots," the Journal reported.

Hiler evidently pays more heed to the economics he learned from Arthur Laffer while pursuing an MBA at the University of Chicago than he does to conventions of getting elected.

For instance, when civic leaders in his South Bend district pressed him to finish Brademas' work in obtaining a $100 million-plus federal guarantee for a local synfuels project, he sat on his hands. "I have very serious questions about the government getting in the ethanol business," he said recently, noting that such taxpayer-backed commitments often cause unworthy ventures to get off the ground. What happened? The South Bend subsidy-seekers simply went to Richard Lugar, one of the state's Republican senators, and he got the gravy. Hiler declined to attend the ceremonial announcement.

In another case, Bendix Corp. had hinted it might be leaving South Bend. The United Auto Workers and city leaders implored Hiler to help head off a move by the city's biggest employer. The congressman "played a secondary role," the Journal said. Again, it was Lugar who put the muscle of government to work.

"Philosophically, I believe that capital should be allowed to move freely," Hiler said later, asking "What is the proper role for a government official to playing a labor-management disagreement?"

Also last year, Hiler backed big cuts in the Economic Development Administration, which pumps federal tax dollars into redevelopment schemes in places like South Bend. Hiler said his community would be helped more by reducing the flow of money to Washington than by continuing to rely on its success.

The distinction between "conservatives" like Hiler and those like Lugar is an important one, and it serves to explain why, to this day, allies in the House continue to urge Mr. Reagan not to raise taxes in an attempt to balance the budget, while Republican senators talk differently.

When David Stockman confessed of his discouragement over the "constituency-based politics" that gutted his hopes for the Reagan revolution, he was speaking of the Lugars. What hopes of his remain, rest with the Hilers.

Economic prospects for 1982 make for a gloomy political prognosis for John Hiler and his colleagues in commitment. The halfway measures the Congress gave the president last year are beginning to have some effect, and they have laid the foundation for a partial recovery of our economy from 50 years of abuse, but the latest forecasts are that it will be late in the year before the signs of a comeback are widespread. That may be too late for the John Hilers who must run in depressed districts, and may prevent the ouster from power of the Tip O'Neills who hold the reins of the House.

Indeed, as we have been prone to lament on many occasions, quite possibly a democracy is unable to disengage itself from a "tax, spend and elect" syndrome. Will John Hiler be only another martyr to the cause?

How high will natural gas prices go?

BY ROBERT J. WAGMAN

WASHINGTON (NEA) — Since he took office a year ago, President Reagan has held only seven full-fledged press conferences — far fewer than the "one every few weeks" he talked about early in his administration.

It's an open secret that many of the president's senior advisers are not comfortable with his facing a room full of reporters on national television. They much prefer that Reagan communicate with the American people through "fireside chats."

The consensus seems to be that the former actors excel on television but does not easily absorb large masses of facts or wants to devote time to the detailed briefings that are necessary to prepare for all questions that might be asked.

As a result, Reagan often seems unprepared or, worse, responds off the cuff with answers that are wrong or that contradict administration policies.

This happened at Reagan's most recent press conference when he was asked whether his plan for more rapid decontrol of natural gas would significantly raise prices for the consumer.

No, the president replied, because gas producers get only 15 percent of the retail price while the rest goes to transportation and to middlemen in the delivery chain; thus, an increase in the wellhead price would not have great impact on the consumer.

"I find it difficult to believe that the (consumer) price would double or triple or quadruple," said Reagan, "because, of the price that the retail buyer pays, only 15 percent has to do with the gas itself."

The president was simply wrong — or, as a White House spokesman put it, he "misspoke."

Government, industry and industry critics agree that gas producers receive about 45 percent of the retail price of natural gas. And that percentage is rising.

There is some disagreement about how high the percentage will go. Gas utilities, the largest buyers of natural gas, estimate that it will have risen to almost 80 percent by the middle of this decade.

The decontrol law, which was passed during the Carter administration, completely decontrols the wellhead price of most natural gas by 1986. Producers want that process speeded up, and the administration is expected to introduce legislation shortly that would do just that.

Moreover, the current plan retains controls on some "old" gas — that is, gas discovered and in production before 1978. The administration's bill will probably seek to decontrol the prices of old and new gas alike.

Most experts agree that the existing plan will result in a continual, albeit gradual, increase in consumer gas prices to about double the current level by 1986.

But producers and users disagree on exactly what might happen if controls — including those on old gas — are lifted more rapidly. The major buyers, the gas utilities, predict that consumer prices could triple by 1986.

What most worries the gas utilities is that rapid and complete decontrol might push the price of gas higher than that of an equivalent amount of oil.

Because oil now costs twice as much as gas, many large energy users have switched from the former to the latter. This has been a major factor in the reduction of oil use in this country in the past three years.

The gas utilities fear that many of these users will switch back to oil if gas prices rise above oil prices; this would not only cost the gas utilities major customers but would pose significant national policy ramifications.

The administration believes that more rapid decontrol will spur development and that prices will stabilize if more gas becomes available. Critics maintain that the producers could control supplies in such a way that prices rise sky high and remain there.

As for the president's misstatement, White House spokesmen say that they do not know where he got his facts and figures. But they stress that even if Reagan was wrong about the percentage of gas prices received by producers and, by inference, the effect of decontrol on consumer prices, the administration remains committed to total deregulation and a "free market pricing system for natural gas."

An administration bill to accomplish these ends should reach Congress within the next two months. The debate is likely to be long and sharp.

Operation Memorial

By DON GRAFF

The Vietnam war itself may be receding into history, but it is still much too soon to be able to say that we have put behind us the bitterness it caused within the American polity.

Consider the furor that has been raised anew over the planned Vietnam memorial in Washington. It might have been expected that it would be the idea of a memorial that would be attacked by those who opposed the war, whose numbers became legion.

Not so. Even the more celebrated firebrands have been quiet on this issue. It is, essentially, the other side that has taken up critical arms and the target is the design that has been selected for the memorial.

It is, admittedly, subdued for a Washington awash in flamboyant posturings in neo-classic marble. Selected in a national competition, the memorial design specifies two low walls of polished black granite meeting in a shallow V. On the walls are to be inscribed the names of 57,692 known dead in Vietnam and 2,500 missing in action.

The effect of the low-key approach has been to outrage some military and congressional quarters. It has been termed a "black ditch," "an insult to those it is intended to memorialize" and a potential "wailing wall" for anti-militarists by spokesmen for the former and is the subject of a letter of protest to President Reagan from the latter.

Most seriously, from the point of view of the memorial's backers, Interior Secretary James G. Watt was moved to put a hold on final release of the site, national parkland on the capital's Mall donated by Congress.

None of this surprises Jan Scruggs, the Vietnam veteran who heads the private committee established to construct the monument. He sees it as inevitable.

"Every time the word (Vietnam) is spoken, it brings back all the bitterness of the war," he observes. "Emotions come to the surface and people start firing away at each other."

They certainly do.
This is only the latest of the trials of the memorial project. Its supporters previously had to correct the mistaken impression that the granite would carry no mention of Vietnam. It will. It is also intended, contrary to much repeated criticism, to fly the flag at the site.

And those who served and survived as well as the casualties will be remembered. The dedication inscription as now approved is to read: "Our nation honors the courage, sacrifice and devotion to duty of its Vietnam veterans."

The design is defended as neither pro- nor anti-war but designed to encourage reflection.

Despite the continuing critical barrage, Scruggs is confident that the project will be completed. It still has the official approval of the major veterans organizations, including the Veterans of Foreign Wars and the American Legion. Almost $3 million in donations from organizations and individuals has been raised toward the estimated $7 million construction cost of the privately financed memorial.

Scruggs expects groundbreaking to take place as scheduled March 1 at the site between the Washington and Lincoln memorials.

If it does, and is carried to completion, the memorial may do more than add a different look to monumental Washington.

To our benefit as a united nation, it could mark the last major operation of our most unfortunate war.

Can you trust news media?

By PAUL HARVEY

The TV networks want to take over another prime-time half-hour from your local TV stations; don't let 'em! Usually, you get "better balance" in newscasts originated by hometown stations.

Most New Yorkers — ans Washington, D. C. — based newscasters do not think as you do. You're suspected this but couldn't prove it — until now.

Pat Buchanan, having had a government-eye view of D. C. newscasters, was hesitant to criticize until Public Opinion magazine documented his darkest suspicions: that most of the media elite "look like WASPS and vote like Puerto Ricans."

For the Public Opinion profile S. Robert Lichter and Stanley Rothman spent an hour with each of 240 members of the "media elite": reporters, editors, columnists, bureau chiefs, news executives, TV correspondents, anchor-men, producers, film editors.

There are the people whose efforts color what you hear and read of public affairs, particularly of President Reagan and his policies.

So you'll know who's leading you around by the ear, "not once in four national elections did even 20 percent of these support the Republican party."

They went 4-to-1 for Carter over Ford, 7-to-1 for Humphrey in '68, 16-to-1 for LBJ over Goldwater and 81-to-19 for McGovern over Nixon.

Personally, they are not representative of us.

Only 8 percent regularly attend church or synagogue. Eighty-six percent attend "seldom or never."

Fifty-four percent see nothing wrong with adultery.

These news media people are becoming increasingly assertive; they think they run the country.

Specifically, they were asked, "Who directs American Society?" They placed business first, themselves second and unions third.

And when the question was rephrased to read, "Who do you think should run the country?" they placed themselves first!

These media people believe in redistribution of income, government-guaranteed jobs, affirmative action.

Buchanan concludes there is no way the Reagan administration can get its philosophy across with such a preponderance of the media lying in wait to subvert and distort it.

This President is making himself available for more in-person TV interviews where he can try to clarify his policies but, vastly outnumbered, he never has "the last word."

Now the TV networks want to take over another prime-time half-hour from your local TV stations; don't let 'em!

Reagan uses new math on budget

By WALTER R. MEARS
AP Special Correspondent

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan has come up with some new math to explain the soaring budget deficits he once promised to end in a hurry. But there are skeptics in his economics class who prefer old-fashioned arithmetic.

Among them are some of the Democrats Reagan accuses of fashioning federal policies that ran the debt total up to the trillion dollar level. Republicans and conservative Democrats are worried, too, at the prospect of deficits expected to far exceed the record $66.4 billion of Gerald R. Ford's last year in the White House.

They wanted federal excise taxes on tobacco, alcohol, gasoline and telephone service increased to trim the deficit. So did some of the president's own economic advisers. Reagan said no.

"Raising taxes won't balance the budget," Reagan told Congress Tuesday night. That is true, of course, if the government merely finds more ways to spend what it takes in.

"It will encourage more government spending and less private investment," Reagan said in his State of the Union message.

"So I will not ask you to try to balance the budget on the backs of the American taxpayers," he said.

That sounds good, but one way or another, the whole problem is on their backs anyhow. They pay the bills.

The argument has some old adversaries speaking in harmony now. For example, Republican Sen. Bob Dole of Kansas and former Vice President Walter F. Mondale, who ran against each other for vice president in 1976, agree that something has to be done now to reduce the deficits.

They don't agree on what. Reagan has flatly and repeatedly ruled out any change in the 3-year tax cut that is the centerpiece of his economic game plan.

Reagan had said deficits were the cause of inflation. More recently, his advisers have been saying that it isn't necessarily so, and one of them suggested there is no connection at all. Reagan's explanation now includes the claim that easing inflation helps cause deficits.

Elsewhere in the speech he noted that taxes are to be indexed for inflation so the government won't profit on rising prices. While he didn't mention it, that, too, will add to the deficit figures.

Secretary of the Treasury Donald Regan says deficits will be declining by about $10 billion a year, to levels in the range of $90 billion in fiscal 1983 and $80 billion in 1984. He said that would not necessarily drive up interest rates. But Chairman Paul A. Volcker of the Federal Reserve Board said it probably would.

And, as Reagan said, high interest rates add to deficits, since the government already owes about $1 trillion in interest cost the government about $5 billion more than was anticipated during 1981.

Three dead, nine wounded in highrise shootout

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A man who coolly assembled a shotgun and opened fire in his wife's insurance office, killing two people and wounding nine others before he was slain by police, was "always jealous," says a co-worker of his wife.

Ricardo Contawe was carrying a flower gift box when he stroled into the 18th-floor office in a high-rise above downtown San Francisco on Thursday afternoon.

He chatted casually with some of his wife's co-workers. Then, while they watched, he assembled a 12-gauge pump shotgun concealed in the long box, Sgt. Mike Pera said.

He fired first at his wife, hitting her in the leg. As others rushed to her aid, he fired "randomly," Pera said, critically wounding a company vice president and an unidentified woman who had to have her right arm amputated below the elbow.

Contawe's wife, Orlinda, was in stable condition. The two dead had not been identified.

"My first instinct was to jump under the table and that's what I did," said David Luke, a senior insurance underwriter, who said he was six feet from the gunman when the shooting started.

"I heard a woman yell, 'Please don't shoot me.' I heard a shot and that's when I got up and wheeled around and just headed the other way."

The 42-story building overlooking San Francisco Bay was plunged into chaos as workers stampeded down stairs and dove for cover. Minutes later the offices of the Mission Insurance Co. were spattered with blood and the shooting had stopped. Contawe, 36, was dead.

Three patrol cars cruising the area had arrived at Spear Tower about 15 minutes after the shooting spree began, and three officers killed the gunman in a brief gun battle after he fired at them from 30 feet away, Pera said.

Officer John Sheveland was nicked by a ricocheting fragment, but was not hospitalized. Officers Jim Seim and Bill Taylor were uninjured.

Cosette Hui was at her desk when Contawe came in with the box.

"We heard a shot. I was so scared I couldn't move," she said. "He was shooting all over the place."

The couple had been having marital difficulties for "a long time," Ms. Hui said, adding that Mrs. Contawe had told her "that guy is always jealous."

When police arrived, the gunman had his shotgun trained on a woman who was cowering behind a desk and pleading for her life. The woman was injured by gunfire, Pera said.

Auto contract talks collapse

DETROIT (AP) — The collapse of emergency contract talks between the United Auto Workers union and General Motors Corp. means fewer jobs for auto workers and no price cuts for car buyers, top bargainers for both sides say.

The negotiations fell apart late Thursday night over job security and other issues, UAW President Douglas Fraser said.

"It just didn't go together," Fraser said. "It's over."

The union chief announced the bargaining breakdown about 11:30 p.m. after a 14-hour session that wrapped up nearly three weeks of contract talks.

"Things are going to be worse (in the auto industry) than they otherwise would have been had we reached an agreement," Fraser said. "We've lost jobs as a consequence. The American consumer has lost a reduction in prices."

The failure with GM won't stop the UAW from pursuing similar negotiations at Ford Motor Co., where talks are to resume Monday.

The breakdown at GM, announced 30 minutes before a union-imposed deadline, means contract talks between the union and the nation's No. 1 automaker won't resume until July, the usual time for auto industry contract talks. Current contracts expire Sept. 14.

The round of negotiations began Jan. 11 at GM's request. The automaker was seeking wage and benefit concessions from the union in an effort to become more competitive with foreign carmakers.

In exchange, the union sought job security guarantees and an end to GM's purchasing of parts and components from overseas manufacturers.

The end of negotiations kills GM's promise, made Jan. 12, that all union concessions resulting from a new agreement would be passed on to consumers in car price reductions.

"We are deeply disappointed," Alfred Warren Jr., GM vice president for industrial relations, said. "The idea was a very exciting one."

Fraser said negotiations broke down over a variety of issues, especially job security and equality of sacrifice between UAW members and other GM employees.

New Federalism is fight against third party

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — President Reagan hasn't so described it, but his New Federalism is a fight against the third party syndrome.

Who is the third party? It isn't you, who receives the service; it usually isn't the specific provider of the service either. The third party is the party that pays the bill.

It need not always be government. It can, for example, be an insurance company or an employer, for example, or any organization that takes over a degree of financial or social responsibility for individuals.

The third party is always "the other guy," and the other guy always seems to get hit hard. He gets the bill for the exaggerated health care claims, for the padded automobile damage claim, for the social welfare programs the president observed were "rife with waste and fraud."

Third parties are almost always visualized as faceless institutions, and that's what makes it easy to pass the bill to them rather than pay it personally. You can do to a third party what you'd never do to a neighbor. "That's what they're there for," is the alibi for doing so.

Besides, according to the popular philosophy, nobody gets hurt. "The insurer or the government or the company pays for it." Everyone has heard the alibi "Why worry, it doesn't come out of anyone's pocket?"

It does, of course. Health care costs continue to rise against most efforts to control them. Automobile insurance claims and premiums are rising. Practically speaking, welfare costs have been out of control. The result is higher bills for everyone, as one city after another has learned. The notion that the other guy pays for the spending has been proven false by rising tax bills, fewer services, higher costs for municipal borrowing, shrinking tax bases, and weakened business.

The need for accountability is the keystone of any attack on the third party syndrome. The argument is that people cannot give up personal responsibilities and obligations to another party without forsaking controls over their destinies. If the first and second parties forsake accountability, it is said, the third party assumes a life of its own and, in turn, becomes less accountable to them.

Dallas is Reagan's choice

WASHINGTON (AP) — Top GOP officials say President Reagan has said Dallas would be an excellent site for the 1984 Republican national convention.

Republican national chairman Richard Richards said Thursday, "We will, of course, do everything possible to accommodate the president's request to give preference to Dallas."

The comments came during a meeting of the party's executive committee in Washington.

Richards was to appoint a site-selection committee today to consider bids from various cities.

Richards said the president wrote Texas Gov. Bill Clements, "I think that Dallas would be an excellent city in which to hold the convention."

"Operations and hospital rooms cost a lot more than you think."

Rev. Gene Lancaster will preach at the Hobart Baptist Church Sunday, at the 11 a.m. Morning Worship, the 6 p.m. Church Training and at the 7 p.m. Evening Worship.

Rev. Lancaster was born at Wellington, and attended schools in Wellington and Quail. He graduated from Lockney High School and surrendered to preach in 1953. He attended Texas Baptist Institute and Seminary at Henderson where he earned a Master's degree in Theology.

He is currently the pastor of the First Baptist Church in Lefors.

The public is invited to attend all services.

Midweek services at Hobart Baptist Church are held on Wednesday at 7:30 p.m.

Peace movement meeting

John Collins, national co-director of Clergy and Laity Concerned (CALC) and Ron Freund, Midwest regional representative, will be in Amarillo Feb. 7, 8, and 9, to discuss the peace movement and the CALC organizing in Texas and the Southwest.

In this region, interest in organizing the religious community to reflect and act on moral issues posed by the nuclear arms race has grown steadily, stimulated by the presence of Pantex and by Bishop L.T. Matthiesen's call for Pantex workers to resign.

The February meeting, sponsored by Northwest Texas CALC, is intended to give members of the religious community an opportunity to focus that growing interest on building a strong and effective peace network in Texas and the Southwest.

What's happened to faith?

By George R. Plagenz

Losers in Arkansas, the creationists have now set their sights on Louisiana, where the battle with the evolutionists will soon come to court.

Louisiana has a creation law similar to the one recently overturned in Arkansas. It requires that creationism be taught in the public schools along with evolution.

Creationists believe that the Genesis story of creation has as much scientific basis as the evolution theory. The fact that the federal judge saw it differently in his ruling in Arkansas hasn't lowered the creationists' hopes for a victory in Louisiana.

"We creationists were almost certain you would win your case," Rev. Roy Thompson told Robert Cearley, lawyer for the American Civil Liberties Union, in a recent debate in Cleveland. The ACLU, among other groups, challenged the constitutionality of the Arkansas law, resulting in the court case there.

Thompson said Steve Clark, the Arkansas attorney general who defended the state in the trial, had "made no preparation" until the trial was about to begin and even had stated publicly that he had "qualms about creationism."

"It will be different in Louisiana," the pastor of Cleveland Baptist Church told Cearley. "The truth will prevail and we will win out."

Bold words — but does it make all that much difference who wins? With all the problems in the world, many people ask, is the debate on how and when the world began worth all the attention it is getting?

Whatever your answer, if you are a thinking person you will have to agree that behind all the polemics — even behind the question of whether creationism should be taught in the schools — lies a matter of crucial concern.

Cearley, who tried the case for the ACLU in Arkansas, may be right in saying that evolution does not exclude God. On this point he has most liberal clergymen on his side. They will say they have no trouble in believing in God and evolution at the same time.

But this God is not the God of Genesis who "walked in the garden in the cool of the evening" and called out, "Adam, Adam, where art thou?"

It is not the God who Tennyson said was "closer than breathing" and who Jesus said we could talk to and trust like a father. The God evolution appears to leave room for is more like First Cause than Father.

But what if that is the only God there is — as many moderns suspect? This suspicion has given birth to what Louis Dupre, philosophy of religion professor at Yale University, calls the "new atheism."

Despite our outward professions, God as a real presence is absent in our lives and our society "as he never was before," says Dupre. The new atheism, he says, is expressed in the "non-religious mood of our time."

Thompson may be wrong in equating evolution with atheism, as he did in his debate with Cearley. But could our faith in science, which offers answers without meanings or explanations of why we are here, be responsible for the "new atheism" that Dupre is talking about?

Preachers and job burn-out

They fired the minister of a church in my neighborhood last week. He had been there 19 years.

Had he overstayed his ministry in the parish? Some people said so. They figure a pastor should move on — voluntarily — after eight or 10 years. But this one didn't. The congregation felt he was in a rut. He was coasting downhill.

Outsiders — and a few in the congregation — considered it "beneath the dignity" of a church to fire a minister at age 58. Where can he go?

It happens to football coaches and baseball managers when their teams' fortunes plummet and to business executives when the company profits fall off.

But fire a minister?

"It could be the best thing to happen to some churches," says Robert Hudnut, author of a book written in the 1970s titled "Arousing the Sleeping Giant." A Presbyterian minister, Hudnut has been called the "Vince Lombardi of the ministry." Like the former coach of the Green Bay Packers, Hudnut is "about as delicate as the production manager of a rock quarry" when he speaks, to quote one critic.

"It may well be," says Hudnut, "that the minister should go just the way the baseball manager should go when he isn't getting the best out of his team. He may be lazy. He may be unimaginative. He may be along just for the ride. He sets up his own schedule. He reports to no one."

Hudnut is particularly merciless on the minister who can't raise money.

"Jesus never backed off money talk," he says. "As I count it, 20 of his 30 parables are on stewardship. Any minister who is too busy to raise money is too busy to be a minister."

I don't know that I would be as hard on the pastor as Hudnut is, but there are some things about ministers that disturb me. One is their unwillingness to follow good suggestions. To paraphrase something they used to say about the Harvard man, "You can always tell a minister — but you can't tell him much."

Ministers refuse to take advice — on how to improve their sermons, for one thing. It is the lack of the unexpected that makes most sermons such pedestrian efforts. You always know what's coming.

What keeps us away from church is not so much that we don't believe what the minister says. We suspect he is going to tell us something we already know. We fear we will be bombarded with platitudes. Platitudes are true, of course. But, like wet matches, they have lost their ability to set anything on fire.

I am not sure I agree with a writer in an Episcopal publication who recommends that today's preachers adopt the technique of the stand-up comic. However, it might keep the congregation awake.

The stand-up comic, says this writer, "brings the big issues into the perspective of everyday life... We recognize him as a fellow-sufferer."

Then, after he has gotten us to think "I've had that exact feeling myself" comes the zinger — the unexpected punch line that not only makes us laugh at our predicament but makes us glad to be alive despite our misfortunes.

I have always felt that religion should make people feel great. But obviously it doesn't if you judge from the faces in the congregation on a Sunday morning. The blank looks may not be entirely the minister's fault.

BE FAITHFUL TO COUNTRY

The Church is God's appointed agency in this world for spreading the knowledge of His love for man and of His demand for man to respond to that love by loving his neighbor. Without this grounding in the love of God, no government or society or way of life will long persevere and the freedoms which we hold so dear will inevitably perish. Therefore, even from a selfish point of view, one should support the Church for the sake of the welfare of himself and his family. Beyond that, however, every person should uphold and participate in the Church because it tells the truth about man's life, death and destiny; the truth which alone will set him free to live as a child of God.

Testimony to start in prison murder trial

GALVESTON, Texas (AP) — Attorneys have completed a three-week jury selection process in the capital murder trial of a Texas convict accused of killing two prison officials.

State District Judge Henry Dalehite ordered testimony to begin Tuesday. Attorneys agreed on the 12th juror and two alternates Thursday.

Edward Eroy Brown, 31, of Waco, is on trial on charges that he killed Wallace M. Pack, warden of the Texas Department of Corrections' Ellis Unit in Huntsville.

Prosecutor Mark Ward said the state planned to present 11 witnesses.

Brown is also charged with capital murder in the death of Ellis Unit farm manager Billy Max Moore, and prosecutors said they may try him later in that case.

It took defense attorneys and prosecutors nearly three weeks to choose the panel, quizzing prospective jurors for almost an hour each about their opinions of the death penalty.

Moore and Pack were killed April 4 in a disturbance at the Ellis Unit involving Brown, who was serving a sentence for aggravated robbery. Moore was shot to death and Pack was drowned in a drainage ditch. Brown has claimed self defense.

The outburst occurred in a farming area known as "the bottoms" after Brown was accused of violating unspecified prison rules.

The accusations led to an arguments, and authorities contend Brown bolted before he could be handcuffed, grabbed Pack's gun, shot Moore in the head and then killed Pack in the ditch as the two men rolled into the water and struggled for control of the gun.

Some inmates have said "the bottoms" was where convicts were taken to be beaten by guards, but TDC officials have denied the accusations.

The case was moved here from Huntsville on a change of venue motion.

Hill coalition opposing school tax-exemption bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — A bipartisan coalition of liberal and conservative lawmakers is urging Congress to declare that the Internal Revenue Service now has the power and duty to deny tax benefits to private schools that discriminate.

Twenty-eight senators issued a statement Thursday saying there is no need for legislation proposed by President Reagan to specifically authorize the IRS to refuse tax exemptions to such schools.

Instead, they urged approval of a resolution stating "that current federal law clearly authorizes and requires the IRS to deny tax-exempt status and deductibility of contributions to private schools that practice racial discrimination."

The coalition includes conservative Alfonse D'Amato, R-N.Y., and liberal Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass. A co-sponsor of the resolution, Sen. Gary Hart, D-Colo., said Reagan's bill could cloud the intent of the 1964 Civil Rights Act, which includes a ban on government assistance to discriminatory institutions.

If legislation is necessary to clarify that tax exemptions qualify as government assistance, then it could become necessary to pass other bills to clarify other types of assistance, such as direct grants and loans," Hart said.

Reagan has said that the IRS has been acting without authority in revoking tax exemptions of 111 schools that practice discrimination.

Meanwhile Thursday, the House Judiciary subcommittee on constitutional rights opened hearings on the issue. Witnesses said Reagan's legislation is unnecessary because federal courts have held for 11 years that the IRS has the power to deny the tax exemptions.

Among the witnesses were representatives of the American Civil Liberties Union and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and M. Carr Ferguson, head of the Justice Department's tax division during the Carter administration.

Dear Abby

Mom's naked truth needs a cover-up

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am a 33-year-old man planning to marry a 34-year-old divorcee I'll call Vicki. She is raising two sons, ages 11 and 13, from a previous marriage. Vicki and I agree on almost everything except her attitude on nudity in the presence of her sons. She maintains that hiding her body teaches her sons that the body is something to be ashamed of, thus creating sexual hang-ups. She goes topless into their bedroom to talk to them and casually parades around the house with little (or nothing) on. Although she acts very nonchalant in her disrobed state, the boys appear to be somewhat embarrassed and uncomfortable.

We've discussed the subject, and Vicki insists that nudity is natural, pointing out that people who grow up in cultures where nudity is accepted have healthier attitudes about sex. Abby, I was raised in a family with brothers and sisters who were taught to be reasonably modest. Nobody ever deliberately walked around naked, and as far as I know, none of us ever developed any hang-ups.

I would appreciate your views on this subject.

OLD-FASHIONED IN ILLINOIS

DEAR OLD-FASHIONED: Vicki is undoubtedly well-intentioned, but we are not living in a culture where nudity is generally accepted. Her attitude might have been constructive when her boys were tiny tots, but they are now adolescents with healthy, normal sexual feelings and the sight of an attractive unclothed female (a mother included) is apt to produce a disturbing level of stimulation. Your observation that the boys appear to be "embarrassed and uncomfortable" would indicate that Mother is either consciously or unconsciously turning them on. I vote for reasonable modesty.

DEAR ABBY: We have had a long friendship with an extremely well-to-do, kind and generous couple for many years. For the last four or five years the man has been stealing various items from our home. (We are not just guessing — we know.)

Since making this appalling discovery, we have been avoiding his company as much as possible. It must be a sickness because he can buy anything he wants.

We doubt if his wife knows about this. He obviously needs professional help. What should we do? Talk to him about it? Tell his wife? Or just never see them again? Thank you for any help you can give us.

A BEVERLY HILLS FAMILY

DEAR FAMILY: Tell this man privately exactly what you have told me. Stress the fact that you value his friendship and realize that he is afflicted with "kleptomania" — a consistent neurotic impulse to steal without economic motive. Urge him to seek professional help from a behavior modification therapist. If he becomes indignant and denies his problem, don't invite him to your home again.

DEAR ABBY: I am having an argument with a friend. Maybe you can settle it for us. He says venereal disease can be cured no matter how long you've had it.

I say it has to be cured as soon as you get it or it's too late. Who is right?

WONDERING

DEAR WONDERING: Your friend. But the sooner treatment is begun, the better.

Everybody needs friends. For some practical tips on how to be popular, get Abby's Popularity booklet. Send $1 plus a long, self-addressed stamped (37 cents) envelope to Abby, Popularity, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.

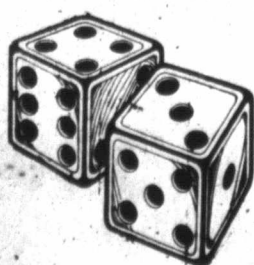

Honey Crackle

HONEY CRACKLE
Repeated on request.
3 quarts freshly popped corn
1 cup blanched slivered almonds
1/2 cup butter
1 cup firmly packed light brown sugar
1/4 cup honey
1 teaspoon vanilla

Into a large shallow roasting pan, turn the popped corn; sprinkle with almonds. In a 1-quart saucepan over low heat melt the butter; stir in the brown sugar and honey. Over medium heat, stirring constantly, bring to a boil. Boil gently without stirring for 5 minutes. Remove from heat; stir in the vanilla. Pour mixture over popped corn and almonds; stir until well mixed. Bake in a preheated 250-degree oven, stirring every 15 minutes, for 1 hour. Cool completely. Break apart and store in a tightly covered container. Makes about 3 quarts.

Dr. Lamb

Epilepsy can be caused from accidents

By Lawrence Lamb, M.D.

DEAR DR. LAMB — As a result of a brain concussion received in an automobile accident I suffer from epileptic seizures. I take Dilantin, Mellaril, Mysoline and phenobarbital. I am a former medical student but because of the accident I can't remember things in the immediate past and failed out of medical school.

I have had many grand mal seizures and am extremely nervous. The medicine I am now taking controls the grand mal seizures but I have about two or three psychomotor attacks a month.

Recently during counseling I was told to stay away from coffee. I do not drink any type of alcohol, not even beer. Why would caffeine affect an epileptic or cause seizures?

DEAR READER — Shocking as it may seem, your case is only one of the 20,000 new cases of epilepsy that occur each year because of automobile accidents. The cause is brain damage from the accident. It follows, of course, that other causes of brain damage may also result in epilepsy. Many more people have epilepsy not associated with known injuries.

Most cases of epilepsy can be managed well enough today to control or prevent seizures. It may require time and patience because the medicines and the amounts have to be adjusted on an individual basis for each patient.

Alcohol is not recommended because it is a brain depressant and doesn't mix well with many of the medicines used for treatment. A combination of alcohol and phenobarbital could be fatal.

Caffeine, whether it is in tea or coffee or colas, is a brain stimulant. It counteracts the actions of your medicines, such as phenobarbital, that are intended to soothe your brain and prevent seizures. It can affect how much medicine you need to take to control seizures.

I am sending you The Health Letter number 10-8, Epilepsy: You Can Have It, Too. Others who want this issue can send 75 cents with a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope for it to me, in care of this newspaper, P.O. Box 1551, Radio City Station, New York, NY 10019.

DEAR DR. LAMB — I'm a 26-year-old woman with two boys, ages 5 and 1. They really keep me going. The problem is that I can't seem to gain any weight, no matter how much I eat. I've had blood tests and urine tests also. The doctor told me all was fine. Is there any advice you could give me to gain weight? I'm 98 pounds and 5 feet 2. I hate the way I look.

DEAR READER — There are some medical problems that can prevent weight gain. These include an overactive thyroid that causes your body to use more calories than you eat and diabetes that can cause you to lose calories as sugar in the urine. Some people have digestive disorders that prevent absorption of food they have eaten. The most common cause, though, is eating low calorie foods.

Do the opposite of what we recommend for people fighting fat. Use sweets and starches. Eat fatty foods. Fat contains lots of calories, nine calories a gram. Eat fat pork and fat cold cuts, cheese, chocolate brownies and snack between meals. If you do enough of this you will gain weight but it will be fat. And, of course, if you could decrease your physical activity that will help, too. Maybe you are better off the way you are.

At Wit's End

By Erma Bombeck

A clean desk is overrated. They're promoted by the same people who spread rumors that neatness signifies an orderly mind and ranks right up there with clean fingernails and goodliness.

My desk may be "unstructured," but I know where everything is. Trust me. My expired library card is right here under the desk blotter along with the sales slips from Christmas 1978. That stack of folders over there on the floor is labeled MISCELLANEOUS. My reference books are right here under my feet for easy access. Personal correspondence is in the Easter basket on the chair and in case I need a throat lozenge here they are right in the drawer next to the holy card of Pope John.

My "Good Morning, America" scripts are neatly arranged under the quilting frame, on that chair are notes for my next book, and that entire sofa holds column ideas.

This desk drawer here holds a packet of summer poinsettia seeds, a wooden pig that holds recipe in a clothespin, a ketchup packet from McDonald's, a column by Garry Wills on John Lennon and a picture of a baby sucking on a stuffed animal of whom I have not the slightest notion who it is.

And in this drawer is a piece of used carbon paper and a pair of prescription glasses with one eye missing.

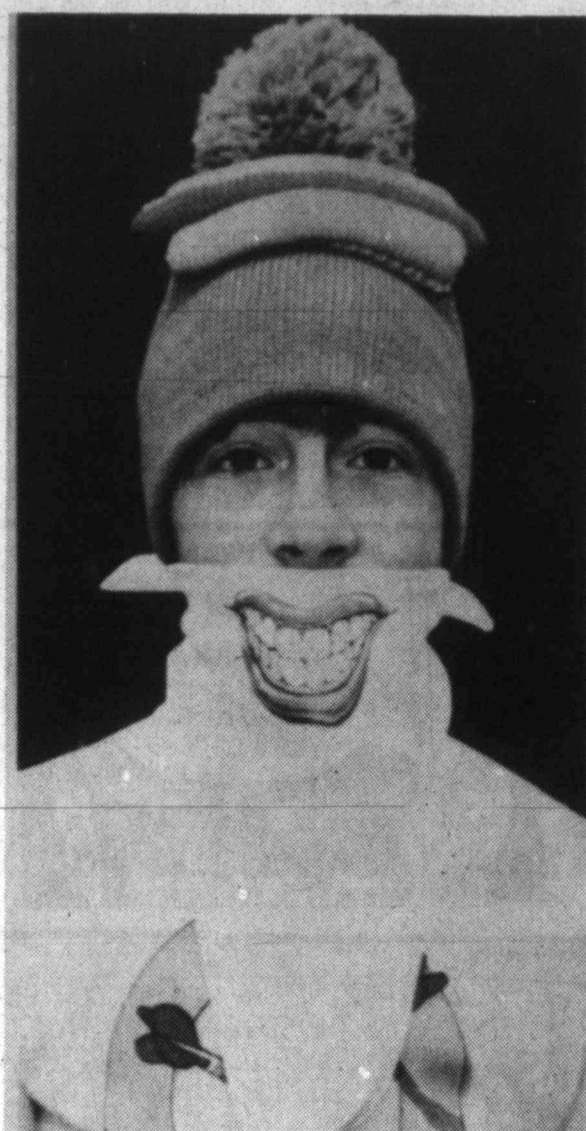

My husband visited my office last week and complained there was no place to sit. He said I should get rid of some of this junk.

I promised him I'd clear out the center drawer in my desk, but I couldn't go through with it. I couldn't throw out the rock with my name on it that a retarded child from Illinois had made for me. I couldn't throw away a certificate for a free ice cream cone, or the picture of Barbara Hower and me taken in a dime store, or the one earring, or the balloon from a carpet store opening, or my stamp that reads, "ERMA BOCKBECK, LOVE GODDESS," or a book of 15 - cents stamps, or the sewing kit, or the badge that reads, "IF WEARER IS FOUND DEPRESSED, ADMINISTER CHOCOLATE IMMEDIATELY." I did throw away a business card of a man I'd never heard of from Columbus, Ohio. My husband poked his head in my office yesterday and said, "Listen, give me the phone number off the card of that attorney in Columbus Ohio, I asked you to file."

SKI WEAR FASHION combo shows model, left, wearing ski hat featuring sun glasses and a luscious pucker bandana. Volunteers monitor CB radio to respond to calls for help

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — "Breaker, Breaker. This is an emergency."

The call for help, over a CB radio, may be from a family stranded with an empty gas tank; from a motorist suddenly confronted by three or four cows on the highway; or from a driver involved in an accident.

Chances are good that the plea will be intercepted by someone like James Cozine, a member of one of the many volunteer organizations monitoring Channel 9 in Kentucky.

"We receive all kinds of messages," said Cozine. "We try to screen them as much as possible to keep state police from making unnecessary runs. If the plea is legitimate, it's passed along to the proper agency and assistance is on the way in a matter of minutes."

Cozine, superintendent of the Frankfort Cemetery, keeps his citizens-band radio in his office. Other volunteers maintain CBs in their homes.

"Our club tries to cover the county," he said. "We begin listening at 4 a.m. and shut down about 1 a.m. Ordinarily, the range for a CB is five miles but when atmospheric conditions are right, you'd be surprised at the stories you hear."

Cozine recalls an evening when he and other club members kept picking up a distress call from "a boy in the Black Rock Desert. Seems he was trying to cross a dry river bed, got stuck, and wanted any listener to telephone the sheriff."

After checking the map, the club determined that the driver was in Nevada, "over 1,700 airline miles from us. We got in touch with the boy's mother in Reno, told her what had happened, and arrangements were made to rescue him."

He also remembers the time when a boat broke down "either in the Gulf of Mexico or somewhere off the coast of South America."

"The boat owner repeated his location for several minutes and we relayed the information to the Coast Guard in Louisville."

After Cozine returned to the air that afternoon, he overheard a radio operator on shore telling the people on the boat that "there's good news and bad news. The good news is that the Coast Guard will be standing by. The bad news is that they're not going to tow you to port."

There are approximately 20 members in Cozine's club, which convenes once a month to discuss experiences.

You are likely to be more restless than usual this coming year and considerable travel is likely. Several short trips, as well as one of long duration, could be in the offing.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) If you're in need of a favor today from someone you don't know too well, it's best to let a friend who knows this person better

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20)
Don't be hesitant about standing up for your rights today if something is owed you. A gentle reminder could set matters straight.

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
Some adjustments may be required today regarding a venture involving friends. If it's handled properly, all will benefit equally.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
Even though you may prefer to stay in the background today, conditions could make it necessary for you to assume control of a situation affecting your reputation or career.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
Companions or associates could be a trifle lethargic today, so it will be up to you to arouse them to action if you hope to advance joint interests.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
Your possibilities for success in what you set out to do today are very good, provided you don't rely upon Lady Luck
instead of hard work.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Avoid making hasty judgments or decisions today. You could initially overlook pertinent facts.
You won't miss a trick after a second study.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Try not to be presumptuous today,
or feel your ideas are superior.
Problems can be resolved if all concerned are given a chance to make a contribution.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Don't be afraid to bargain a bit today in business, or when purchasing a costly item. You can get better terms by negotiating a little further.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22)
There is material opportunity around you today, but if you take things for granted you might overlook it. Pay attention to even the smallest signals.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21)
You could start off a bit indifferently today, but once involved in something challenging, your enthusiasm will be aroused and you'll play to win.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
Your possibilities for personal gain look promising today in situations where you call the shots. In matters where others are involved, you may not do as well.

Philip English as "Colin" (left) is saved by Steve as played by David O'Brien from falling rocks on "The Doctors." Following his untimely end on that sereal, he has joined the cast of "Texas."

Elizabeth Berridge, Ernie Garrett and Damion Sheller have joined the cast of NBC-TV's "Texas."

When Ashley's Aunt Hildy suddenly passes away, she leaves her two wards -- her 10-year-old son, Gregory (Sheller), and 17-year-old Allison Linden, Ashley's strong-willed younger sister (Berridge) -- in her newly married niece's care, as the only stipulation for a $40 million inheritance. Meanwhile, Mark Wheeler, Grant's capable son (Garrett), returns from Australia, a successful oil scion in his own right, to make his mark as the new president of World Oil.

Although only 19-years-old, Elizabeth Berridge brings significant experience to her character, who first appeared December 15. She starred in the Universal feature "The Funhouse" and appeared in the theatrical film "Natural Enemies," with Hal Holbrook and Louise Fletcher, and the TV movie "Soldier's Home." Her daytime experience includes featured roles on "One Life to Live," "As the World Turns" and "Guiding Light." She has appeared in numerous stock and repertory productions as well.

Ernie Garrett, who made his first appearance on Youngster Damion Sheller, who first appeared on "Texas" December 15, played roles in the films "Manhattan," "Rich and Famous," "Friday the 13th Part II," "A Little Sex," "Ohio" and "The Chosen." His other credits include television's "Love of Life" and HBO's production of "Barnum." Elsewhere on "Texas," when actor Philip English took the part of Dr. Colin Wakefield on "The Doctors" a few years ago, he watched several open-heart operations so he could "understand" what he was talking about.

His new role as geologist Miles Renquist on "Texas" doesn't require as much research, but he's still reading up on the subject. Don't be fooled though, since pronouncing "psilomelane" can be just as tough

When Sean's parents see him in prison he looks so bad that his father has a heart attack.

THIS WEEK: Tom's guilt is destroying his life. Ellen is having second thoughts. ONE LIFE TO LIVE -- Clint is crazy about Vikki and he doesn't know whether they can work together. Larry has a behavioral change after his surgery. Asa offers Tony a job and he gets insulted and refuses him. Asa offers Edwina the job but she refuses to accept it. DAYS OF OUR LIVES -- The Count's father comes to town. Lee was his mistress and she will be again. David is cleared of all charges when Alex confesses the truth. A stranger is still out there and Roman asks Marlena to look through her files for clues. When Marlena discovers a stranger link with one of her patients, she pursues it on her own without telling Roman. The patient kidnaps Marlena when she goes to see him.

THIS WEEK: Roman searches for Marlena. David begins rebuilding his life.

THE GUIDING LIGHT -- Nola wants to name her baby after Kelly. Ross demands to know who Carrie is protecting. Amand files for a divorce. Kelly resents the time Morgan spends with Tim.

SEARCH FOR TOMORROW -- Martin and Travis get more support for their space project. Lee is pressured by Sissy to stop seeing Sunny. Dane digs up more information about Travis's father.

THE YOUNG AND THE RESTLESS -- Andy and Jill meet but each covers the feelings they have for one another. Kay bails Cash out of a gambling jam. Bobbie is shocked to learn that April is her sister and wonders how this will effect her relationship with Paul.

AS THE WORLD TURNS -- Jeff and Karen have another lovers quarrel. David sneaks out of the house to see Cynthia. Jane gets to make an appointment with Mr. Big.

EDGE OF NIGHT -- Geraldine has dinner with Johnny to raise money for the theatre group. Damien winds up in the hospital after a wild ski chase. Raven has a skiing accident.

THIS WEEK: Raven is confused and terrified. All wait for word in Monticello. TEXAS -- Myles searches for the compass. Mr. H is close behind him. Myles searches for clues and winds up at Billy Joe's apartment. Bo still has part of the compass in his hands. Reena and Grant plan a romantic evening together. Justin interrupts them reminding Reena of the bet she lost.

THIS WEEK: Myles narrowly misses Mr. H. Ruby is strangely effected by Bo's death.

Star Watch: 'My Dinner with Andre'

HOLLYWOOD (AP) -- Would you go to a movie that consists mostly of two men talking over a dinner table? Of course not. And yet...

There's this film called "My Dinner with Andre" which refuses to go away. At a recent showing in west Los Angeles on a Sunday afternoon, the Westland Theater was nearly filled with paying customers who laughed and applauded through the two hours of wide-ranging conversation. The film is in its 11th week, and drawing $16,000 weekly in a 285-seat theater.

"My Dinner with Andre" has appeared on several critics' Top 10 lists despite a limited release by New Yorker Films.

The two dinnermates visited here recently, and they seemed both astonished and delighted by their growing success. They are: --Andre Gregory, a New York stage director of considerable renown and notoriety, a spellbinder with a long, faintly satanic face.

--Wallace Shawn, actor-playwright, a small man whose bald head and comic face make him ideal for humorous bits in movies -- seemingly meek but possessed with a strong intellect.

They sat in the lobby of the gracious old Chateau Marmont, favorite stop for New Yorkers, and talked about their unusual enterprise. Here is a digest of their remarks:

Andre: I directed Wally's first play, and for a long time we wanted to do something together. ... He called at the end of 1978 and suggested we try writing a script. The idea was to start with me and my adventures around the world and proceed from there, using our own characters as a basis for departure.

Wally: I guess I thought it was silly to ignore the extremely dramatic and amusing subject that was sitting right in front of us. It seemed wrong for Andre to have gone through all his adventures without using them in some way as part of a fictional work.

Daytona race this weekend

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — The prototypes are new, sleek, pleasing to the eye and, best of all, they are fast.

There are seven of the GTP (Grand Touring Prototype) race cars entered in this weekend's Daytona 24-Hour Pepsi Challenge. One of them, a Chevrolet-powered March 82-G driven by Bobby Rahal, sped to the pole position during Thursday's round of qualifying at Daytona International Speedway.

Rahal, who co-drove to victory with Bob Garretson and Camel GT champion Brian Redman in 1981, this year will be teamed with Jim Trueman and Bruce Canepa. He grabbed the top spot in the huge field by touring the 3.84-mile course at 133.063 mph.

The International Motor Sports Association, which sanctions the American GT sports car series, brought some additional color to their racing this season by allowing the specially-built, one- or few-of-a-kind race cars to take part in their events this season.

The powerful Porsche Turbo 935s, which have won the last four Daytona 24-hour events and have dominated the GT circuit in recent years, still took eight of the top 10 spots — the only positions locked in after Thursday's qualifying sessions among three divisions, GT, GTO and GTU.

However, the handful of distinctive GTP cars made a fast and colorful impression at Daytona.

The first of the new generation of GTP's, a Chevrolet-powered Lola T-600 in which now-retired Brian Redman won five races on the way to his championship a year ago, was driven to seventh spot on the grid by Englishman Derek Bell. His fast lap was 128.170.

Besides the two English-built GTP cars that wound up among the top 10, a pair of Cosworth-powered, French-built Rondeau 382s were among the fast movers Thursday.

The car co-driven by Bill Koll, Skeeter McKitterick and Irv Hoerr was 12th fastest for the day, while the Rondeau of Danny Sullivan, Hubert Phipps and Gary Belcher was 13th quickest.

Another March 82-G, this one powered by a BMW engine, gave the defending GTO champions, David Cowart and Kenper Miller, the 15th fastest clocking of the day. Those two, who were so successful with a BMW-M1 a year ago, will team with Charles Mendez for their first effort at the fastest of the three GT racing divisions.

A pair of modified Chevrons, one with a Mazda power plant and the other pulled by a Buick engine, were well down the line in speed. But all except the top 10 qualifiers had an opportunity today to better their speeds and clinch a place in the lineup for the race, which is scheduled to get underway at 3:30 p.m. EST Saturday.

Leading the parade of Porsche Turbo 935s was Englishman John Fitzpatrick, who turned a 132.767 mph lap to gain the outside spot on the front row.

Right behind, all in Porschs, were Hurley Haywood, 130.707; Bill Whittington, 130.474; John Paul Junior, 130.117 and Frenchman Bob Wollek, 129.785.

Jim Adams put a 935 in the eighth spot at 127.441 followed by Danny Ongais at 127.034 and John Paul Sr., 125.757.

This race, the 21st annual 24-hour event, also is the first in the new 10-race Camel GT Endurance Series.

Duran, Benitez square off Saturday night

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Wilfred Benitez has seen film of Roberto Duran's last two fights, but he knows he will see a different Duran Saturday night when he defends the World Boxing Council super welterweight championship.

"He will be better than in his last two fights (10-round decisions over Nino Gonzales and Luigi Munchillo) because he knows what kind of a boxer I will be," Benitez, a 23-year-old Puerto Rican who has won world titles in three weight classes, is confident he will beat Duran and move on to challenge for an unprecedented fourth championship.

"This is going to be my last fight in the weight," said Benitez, who said he has trained well to get down to the 154-pound limit, but that it is difficult for him to fight at that weight.

He hopes to ride the victory into a challenge for the undisputed middleweight title (160-pound limit) currently held by Marvin Hagler.

Duran, at age 30, will be trying to win his third title and force a third fight with undisputed welterweight champion Sugar Ray Leonard.

Duran bristles when questioned about another Leonard fight.

"Right now, my mind is on Benitez, not on Leonard," he said Thursday. Then, through an interpreter, he snapped "Everybody is concerned about the situation of me fighting Leonard. Nobody asks why Leonard is not giving me a rematch."

"If I win, Leonard will have to come and ask me for a fight." But Duran said he would fight Leonard at the 147-pound welterweight limit. There is no doubt it is the only class in which Leonard would consider a third fight, something he doesn't feel he will have to worry about after Saturday.

Duran said he was retiring after quitting in the eighth round, blaming stomach cramps, to lose the WBC welterweight title to Leonard Nov. 25, 1980. And, he says he will retire for good if he fails against Benitez, which will be the third fight of his comeback.

"I see Benitez stopping Duran," said Leonard, who will be at ringside at Caesars Palace as a commentator for Home Box Office, which will televise the fight live beginning at about 7 p.m. PST. "I see Duran running on emotion, being frustrated again."

7:30 p.m. tipoff Harvesters visit Palo Duro tonight

According to the dictionary, a "don" is a Spanish title of respect. And you can bet the Palo Duro Dons will receive plenty of respect from coach Garland Nichols and the Pampa Harvesters in a District 3-5A clash tonight in the Dons' fieldhouse.

"Palo Duro will be just as tough as Tascosa and we'll be playing them on their court. That's a big difference," Nichols said. "The main thing we have to do is play our transition game and not let them get control of things."

Pampa (20-3, 2-0) goes after its 13th consecutive win after coming off a crucial 79-72 win over Tascosa Tuesday night. Charles Nelson, Mike Nelson and Terry Faggins accounted for 70 of Pampa's 79 points in the game. Charles Nelson, a 6-4 senior, led the way with 28 points. Faggins had 22 points and Mike Nelson added 20.

Palo Duro (11-9, 0-1) has been idle since last Friday's 77-69 loss to Tascosa. PD led all but the last two minutes as a Tascosa flurry at the end doomed the Dons.

Victor Hardy, a 5-10 guard, led PD with 28 points. He, along with 6-3 forward Doug Butler, are PD's main offensive cogs.

"We've proved we can play on the road this season,"

Nichols said. "I believe we'll continue to be successful."

Eight of Pampa's last 12 games were won on the opposition's court. The Harvesters have not lost at home this season. Their only losses were to Plainview, 63-61; Enid, Okla., 71-68, and Carlsbad, New Mexico, 70-63.

Amarillo High hosts Tascosa in the other district clash. The Sandies are 16-5 and 1-0 while the Rebels are 17-5 and 1-1.

In girls' action, Pampa can tie for second in the first-half district standings with a win over Palo Duro tonight.

Pampa is 4-20 overall and 1-2 in district play. Palo Duro is 7-12 and 2-1.

Keva Richardson, a 5-11 junior, had 25 points and 12 rebounds in Pampa's 53-47 win over Tascosa Tuesday night. The win broke a six-game losing streak by the Lady Harvesters.

Amarillo High can win the first-half championship with a win over Tascosa tonight. AHS is 3-0 while Tascosa is 0-3 in district standings.

Pampa matmen place in Edmond, Okla. tourney

Pampa Youth Center's wrestling team competed in an Edmond, Okla. Tournament last weekend, placing three of nine wrestlers.

Trace Robbins (115 pounds) and Jeff Gueggenheim (95 pounds) placed third while Jared Cambern (82 pounds) placed fourth.

The Edmond meet was a warmup for the nationals to be held next month in Tulsa, Okla.

The Pampa team travels to Chandler, Okla. this weekend for another tournament.

Youngsters interested in joining the wrestling team may go to the Youth Center Monday, Tuesday or Thursday for practice, starting at 5:30 p.m.

College roundup

Tulsa spoils Buffs' upset bid

By KEN RAPPOPORT
AP Sports Writer

It's called the "Hurricane," but that doesn't necessarily mean the University of Tulsa's basketball team blows the opposition away.

"People expect us to beat people to death," says Tulsa Coach Nolan Richardson. "We don't have a team like that. When you juggle the lineup as much as we do, you can't expect us to get any kind of big lead. We just want to win the game."

Thursday night's performance was typical of the 16th-ranked Tulsa team. Richardson used a lot of substitutions, as he usually does, and his players straggled and then spurred to a 68-61 Missouri Valley Conference victory over West Texas State.

The triumph was the 27th straight at home for the Hurricane, which hasn't lost there since Richardson brought most of his players along with him. Western Texas' junior college champions two years ago.

"Our margin of victory was satisfactory to us," said Richardson. "We've got some senior kids who are pressing. They're just not playing well right now. But I really praised the kids afterward because there's a lot of pressure on them from me, from the fans and from the polls."

Greg Stewart, one of the players Richardson brought from Western Texas who helped Tulsa win the National Invitation Tournament last year, combined with Bruce Vanley for 30 points to help the cause Thursday night. Trailing by as many as nine points through most of the game, the Hurricane took the lead for good at 61-59 when freshman Steve Harris hit two free throws with 2:41 left. Vanley, a 6-foot-10 sophomore, hit six of eight field goal attempts to finish with 16 points, while Stewart came off the bench to add 14. West Texas State got 12 points from Eddie Harris and 10 apiece from Goliath Yeggins and Charles Bell.

In other action involving the nation's ranked teams, No. 6 Iowa edged Michigan State 57-56. No. 9 San Francisco crushed San Diego 72-53. No. 10 Minnesota beat Northwestern 61-53 and No. 19 Fresno State defeated San Jose State 63-45. The Top Twenty Kenny Arnold and Steve Carfino scored 12 points each to lead Iowa over Michigan State. The triumph, before a sellout crowd of 10,004 in Jenison Fieldhouse, improved the Big Ten-leading Hawkeyes' record to 6-1 in conference play and 14-2 for the season.

It was the first victory for the Hawkeyes in Michigan State's arena after seven straight losses there.

"We were trying to get out of here with any kind of win that we could," said a relieved Lute Olson, the Iowa coach. "The first thing we have to overcome when we come to Michigan State is the Spartans. They normally play quite well. The media plays up this jinx thing to a point where the Michigan State players really believe there is a jinx."

Wallace Bryant and Quintin Dailey combined for 43 points, leading San Francisco to a convincing West Coast Athletic Conference victory over San Diego.

Bryant scored 23 points and Dailey added 20 for the Dons, who raised their WAC record to 4-1 and their overall mark to 18-2. Forward Gerald Jones paced San Diego with 12 points and a game-high nine rebounds.

Trent Tucker scored 18 points and Minnesota took control in the second half to defeat Northwestern. The score was tied three times early in the second half before Gary Holmes put the Gophers ahead to stay at 37-35.

"I know everyone thinks of Randy Breuer when they think about us," said Minnesota Coach Jim Dutcher. "But for us to play well, Trent has to play well. He's the key."

BIRD ON THE RUN. Star forward Larry Bird (33) of the Boston Celtics sprints upcourt after stealing the basketball from Reggie Johnson of the Cleveland Cavaliers. Bird led all scorers with 33 points as the Celtics whipped the Cavs, 116-104, Thursday night. (AP Laserphoto)

Cougars out to snap four-game loss streak

HOUSTON (AP) — If you encounter that sinking feeling from an air pocket on your next flight and someone yells "spread offense" it's probably Houston basketball coach Guy Lewis.

When Lewis gets the feeling that his Cougars are sinking on the court, that's usually his call, much to the chagrin of growing critics of the slow-motion maneuver.

The Cougars, who recently were ranked No. 10 in the nation, are in the throes of a four-game losing streak and in two of those defeats—Southern Methodist and Arkansas—the Cougars lost trying to protect dwindling leads with the spread offense.

Although Lewis remains a staunch believer in the spread, he also is perplexed at the frustrating turn of events that has put the pre-season favorites far back in the Southwest Conference title chase with a 2-4 league record.

"We've played well enough to win so I can't find too much fault with our game in Fort Worth," Lewis said, referring to UH's fourth straight loss Tuesday night against Texas Christian. "It was a repeat of all the other losses...you look at the stats and wonder how we could have lost."

The Cougars, 11-5 for the season, will try to rebound Saturday night when they host Baylor, fresh from its 69-59 upset of fifth ranked Texas Tuesday night.

Lewis is not certain he will start center Akeem Abdul Olajuwon against the Bears. "I just don't know for sure," Lewis said. "I don't want to tip my hand at some things I might be planning. Not starting doesn't mean he won't play."

Olajuwon has started three of Houston's four losses. Whatever the Cougars problems, Lewis refuses to blame it on UH's use of the spread offense.

"It's amazing to me the way people react to the spread," Lewis said. "Now you can be in any other offense and get a layup and blow it or get fouled and miss a free throw...and they don't blame the offense."

NBA roundup

Holtzman wins No. 600 as Knicks escape last place

By The Associated Press

A player named Russell helped a coach named Red reach a milestone, but it wasn't quite the same as the glory days of Bill Russell, Red Auerbach and the Boston Celtics.

The Russell-Auerbach tandem helped the Celtics win nine NBA championships in 10 years from 1956-57 to 1965-66. Red Holtzman and Campy Russell, on the other hand, are struggling to keep the New York Knicks out of the Atlantic Division cellar.

And the Knicks' 102-98 victory over the Washington Bullets Thursday night — Holtzman's 600th triumph as the New York coach — enabled them to snap a last-place tie and pull one-half game ahead of the New Jersey Nets.

The Celtics are still winning, too. They trounced the Cleveland Cavaliers 116-104. Elsewhere, the Houston Rockets downed the Philadelphia 76ers 109-101, the Los Angeles Lakers trimmed the Phoenix Suns 97-87, the San Antonio Spurs whipped the Kansas City Kings 126-115, the Milwaukee Bucks flattened the Utah Jazz 119-101, the Golden State Warriors edged the Chicago Bulls 111-110 and the Portland Trail Blazers nipped the San Diego Clippers 96-93.

The Knicks' victory was the 683rd overall for Holtzman — Auerbach leads the pack at 938 — but it didn't come easy.

New York trailed 58-45 early in the third quarter but reserve Larry Demie, averaging 1.6 points per game, scored nine points to help give the Knicks their first lead of the game 69-68 with 2:03 remaining in the period.

The score was tied 71-71 entering the final period but the Knicks hit 12 of 17 shots to break a three-game losing streak. Russell led the way with 24 points, 10 in the final period. The loss ended Washington's seven-game winning streak.

Celtics 116, Cavaliers 104
Larry Bird scored 33 points, including 22 in the second half to turn back a Cleveland threat. The Cavaliers outscored Boston 8-1 at the start of the third quarter to pull to within 64-61 but Bird's 15-footer sparked a 12-2 Boston surge and the Celtics stretched their lead to 95-77 entering the final period.

Rockets 109, 76ers 101
Moses Malone scored 31 points and grabbed 20 rebounds and Calvin Murphy became the NBA's 21st all-time scorer as Houston posted its fifth victory in the last six games. Malone dominated play throughout the game, scoring 13 points and grabbing 12 rebounds in the first half. Murphy hit a 16-foot jump shot with 6:40 gone in the second quarter to give him Murphy 16,961 career points and put him ahead of former Boston star Bob Cousy, who finished his career with 16,960.

Lakers 97, Suns 87
Kareem Abdul-Jabbar scored 31 points and Norm Nixon, a questionable starter because of injuries, added 22. The Lakers led 62-59 after three periods but outscored the Suns 21-8 in the first seven minutes of the final quarter. Nixon suffered bruises to his elbows and a hip during Tuesday night's 96-84 loss to Milwaukee. His status for Thursday night's game was uncertain, but he started and played most of the way.

Spurs 126, Kings 115
George Gervin scored 37 points in only 29 minutes of action and Mike Bratz came off the bench to add a season-high 19. Four other Spurs were in double figures as San Antonio defeated the Kings for the third straight time and handed the Kings their 20th defeat in 23 road games. Bratz scored 12 points as the Spurs outscored the Kings 37-21 in the second quarter to take a 61-44 halftime lead. Gervin, the NBA's leading scorer, hit 12 of 20 floor shots and 13 of 14 free throws.

Bucks 119, Jazz 101
Sidney Moncrief and Scott May combined for 49 points. May scored a season-high 27 points and Moncrief added 22. Bob Lanier had 20 points and keyed the Bucks' surge in the second quarter that pushed them ahead. Adrian Dantley, the NBA's No. 2 scorer with a 30.9 average, led Utah with 32 points.

The Bucks, who played without injured guard Brian Winters and swingman Junior Bridgeman, lost forward Marques Johnson in the middle of the second quarter. He collided with Dantley and suffered a badly sprained left ankle.

Warriors 111, Bulls 110
Bernard King tossed in a 15-foot, off-balance jump shot with 16 seconds left. That gave King a game-high 32 points and Golden State a four-point lead, nullifying a three-point basket by Chicago's Ricky Sobers with 11 seconds left.

Trail Blazers 96, Clippers 93
Calvin Natt scored 11 of his game-high 25 points in the fourth quarter to help Portland come from behind. The Blazers blew an early 13-point lead as the Clippers, fired by Tom Chambers and Phil Smith, staged a third-period rally. San Diego led 89-87 with three minutes left but the Blazers scored eight straight points — two by Jim Paxson, two by Kelvin Ransey and four by Mychal Thompson.

Bell inventory is 'horrendous'

CHICAGO (AP) — For Pat Montgomery, the red stickers that appeared on the telephones at the Illinois Bell building where she works were one of the reminders that things have changed for her and for AT&T.

Ma Bell is preparing to pull out of her role as parent corporation, and she's taking inventory. The telephones belong to her.

"They've got to figure out who owns what, and it's going to be horrendous," said Miss Montgomery, an Illinois Bell spokeswoman.

Worried looks on employees also are reminders of Ma Bell's status. Workers may have to make a choice soon or have it made for them.

"Is it best to go with AT&T, or best to be with Illinois Bell?" asks Mel Blackwell, 37, a district manager of residential service centers.

AT&T has agreed to relinquish its 22 operating telephone companies, including Illinois Bell, as part of an out-of-court settlement of an antitrust suit filed in 1974 by the Justice Department.

Under the settlement, which still must be approved by a federal judge in Washington, AT&T will retain the lucrative long-distance network, which it had been using to subsidize local calls. It will cut the local operating companies loose to run their own local networks. It's expected that will mean higher rates for customers, including 3.5 million served by Illinois Bell.

But no one knows for sure how the divestiture will be carried out, or all the effects it will have on employees and stockholders.

These people had always depended on the phone company with more than 1 million employees and assets totaling $137 billion.

Now, many Bell System employees, including 37,631 at Illinois Bell, wonder how their careers will be affected. Some pensioners, including 14,000 from Illinois Bell, wonder whether their benefits will be cut, and some AT&T stockholders are a bit jittery.

The Bell System, with its nationwide network of companies, has been the kind of corporation that encourages people to stay with it for a lifetime. People moved up by moving around.

A good example is chairman Charles L. Brown, 60. He worked in Cleveland, Hartford, Conn., Birmingham, Ala., Atlanta, Philadelphia, Cincinnati, Kansas City and was president of Illinois Bell before he reached his present position.

But now employees like Blackwell, who has been with the company for 15 years and spent four of them at AT&T on the East Coast, wonder if they will ever have a chance to do what Brown did.

"To some degree this takes away the opportunity to go higher in the business because you won't be able to transfer easily to Indiana Bell or Northwestern Bell or another company. Unless the local companies are regionalized, you won't have that opportunity," said Blackwell.

Miss Montgomery had similar thoughts when she first heard about the AT&T settlement. She had entertained ideas of a transfer to New York.

"When I first heard the news, I went into shock," she said.

"It's not that I had thought so much about moving up in AT&T, it's just that until Friday (Jan. 8) I had the option. Now our careers will be without the New York umbrella or the New York swinging door, the New York enrichment opportunity."

Fewer tables simplify income tax computations

EDITOR'S NOTE — This is the final article in a series of five articles written to help taxpayers prepare their 1981 income tax returns. This article discusses the revised tax table system.

By JIM LUTHER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The tax tables that show how much you owe the federal government have been simplified for this year's returns — condensed from four tables into one.

As it was last year, the zero-bracket amount (formerly the standard deduction) is built into the tax table — $2,300 for a single person, $3,400 for a couple filing a joint return, and $1,700 for a married person filing separately. But now you account for your exemptions before you turn to the easier-to-read table.

Here are the basic steps in filing out a return as a result of the changes:

If you file the short Form 1040A, total your income and subtract $1,000 for each exemption to determine taxable income. Look on pages 17-22 of the instructions for the figure that corresponds with your taxable income, read over to the column that lists your filing status (single, joint etc.) and find your tax.

An example: A couple with two children has wages of $20,000 and $500 interest from a savings account. Since up to $400 of interest is tax-exempt, subtract that from $500, leaving taxable interest of $100 and total income of $20,100. Subtract $4,000 ($1,000 for each exemption), leaving taxable income of $16,100.

That fits into a taxable bracket covering income of at least $16,100 but less than $16,150. Reading over to the column headed "married filing jointly" shows a total tax of $2,266.

For most filers of the long Form 1040: Add up your income, subtract any adjustments, subtract any itemized deductions, and subtract $1,000 for each exemption claimed. That leaves taxable income: look on pages 34-39 for that figure, read to the column that lists your filing status and you've found your tax.

An example: a couple with two children and filing a joint return on $30,000 of wages, $600 of interest, and a state income-tax refund from last year of $250. Subtracting the interest exemption leaves $30,450. The couple has itemized deductions (detailed on Schedule A) totaling $5,100 from which $3,400 is subtracted to account for the zero-bracket amount already built into the tax table. Subtracting the remaining $1,700 and $4,000 for the four personal exemptions leaves taxable income of $24,750.

Carrying that total to the tax table and the column for "married filing jointly" produces a total tax of $4,504.

If your income after deductions and exemptions is $50,000 or more, you may not use the tax tables. You must use the tax-rate schedules on page 40 of the instructions for Form 1040.

No matter what your income, you may qualify for one or more tax credits, which are dollar-for-dollar offsets for taxes owed. The major credits:

—Whether you file the long or short form, you may subtract half the money given political candidates; the maximum credit is $50 for a single return and $100 for a joint return.

—If you earned less than $10,000 and there is a dependent child at home, you may qualify for the earned-income credit of up to $500. This can be paid even if you have no tax liability. Check the instructions to see if you qualify.

These credits may be taken only if the long Form 1040 is filed.

—A special credit is allowed some elderly people; there is one set of rules for those 65 or over (Schedule R) and another set (Schedule RP) for those under 65 who worked for the government. The calculation can get tricky but the Internal Revenue Service will figure the credit for you if you think you qualify.

—A credit is allowed for 20 percent of certain expenses involved in caring for a child or handicapped dependent. The maximum credit is $400 if one child is involved; $800 if there are two or more. Use Form 2441.

—If you installed storm windows, insulation or certain other weatherproofing devices in your principal home last year, you may qualify for a credit of up to $300. There is a separate credit of up to $4,000 for home installation of certain solar or wind-powered energy equipment. See Form 5695 and IRS Publication 903.
