Judge Rules Lewis Guilty Of Contempt

Well ...
I Dunno,
But ...

Someone with a perverted sense of humor and evidently with malice of fore thought and impersonating another person gave an erroneous report of an approaching marriage to the Ranger Times, Monday.

Even though the announcement was accepted in good faith and as authentic, it will compel the Times to refuse to accept such information over the telephone and in the future any item intended for this newspaper will have to have undisputable evidence as to its authenticity before it will be published.

We regret that through such a stupid idea of fun this action must be taken.

It is difficult for us to comprehend how any person can so casually subject themselves to possible legal involvement, embarrass other people and at the same time gain nothing for themselves.

Certainly such a trick cannot be motivated by any of the finer impulses of life and must have for its objective, vindictiveness to which this paper will not be a party and to which end we will direct our constant vigilance.

We see that Ranger's Christmas lights are being strung on Main Street and do hope that they'll be on soon. We'll have to admit that we are a little childish about Christmas. We still like it with all of the trimmings.

And a woman saying yesterday that come Christmas, she always had a yen to have someone give her another doll. She is at least more frank than papas who buy toy trains, etc., for their sons and even daughters, and then spend more time playing with them than the kids.

We just never can believe it, in fact, when people say that Christmas doesn't mean anything to them anymore, that they have outgrown it. We never have and hope we never do and just let someone forget to remember those that are not interested and out will pop the unquestionable proof that it does "mean something" to them.

If ever there is a time of the year when people are rejuvenated, we believe it is Christmas. And you can't tell us that grown-ups as well as the kids like to have that stocking hanging by the chimney.

Judging from the whispering groups of Jaycees hanging around here and there, we have a suspicion that something just as secretive as the visit of Dr. PDQ is pending for the coming home talent show.

Rehearsals for the various acts are underway but something new must be cooking and the boys have let out just a hint that our suspicion might be right.

What kind of brew they are concocting we can't guess, but I like we always say, I gave to the Jaycees to make it bigger and better.

EXPECT TALK ON GERMANY IN THIS WEEK

NEW YORK — Secretary of State James F. Byrnes predicted today that the Big Four council of foreign ministers would begin their preliminary discussions of Germany here this week but that probably little more than agreement on future procedure will be decided.

Byrnes made his statement at a press conference called to announce the details of the American-British plan for economic fusion of their occupation zones of Germany. The plan makes the United States and Britain "equal partners" in treating the two zones as a single area.

Byrnes admitted that the immediate cost of the American "tax payer under the plan to fuse the two zones will be greater—approximately $100,000,000 more in 1947 than it would have been if the two zones remain separate. But he explained that at the end of three years under the unified plan it is expected that the two zones by operating together would attain economic self-sufficiency. He said that would be impossible if the two zones remained separate.

Byrnes admitted also that he had not consulted members of Congress who will be responsible for approving higher appropriations in the next year or so. He expressed confidence, however, that Congress could be persuaded that in the long run economic fusion will cost the American tax payers less.

MINERAL WELLS, WACO GAME TO BE SATURDAY

It has been announced that the bi-district game between Mineral Wells and Waco will be played at Mineral Wells Saturday afternoon beginning at 2:30 o'clock. Mineral Wells was winner of the District 9-AA championship and Waco won the District 10 championship.

Tickets are now on sale at Mineral Wells and will be $1.25 for reserved seats, $1.00 for general admission and 50 cents for student tickets.

Five teams enter the play-off rounds with undefeated full-season records. Odessa and North Side of Ft. Worth have won 10 games in as many starts. Lamar of Houston and Thomas Jefferson of San Antonio have won nine and tied one each, and Pasadena, a new comer to Class AA competition has won seven tilts and played three scoreless ties.

Of the play-off competitors Odessa's Broncs have the best record on offense, having scored an average of 32.9 points in 10 games. They have allowed opponents an average of 4.5. Lufkin holds the most impressive defense record, not only of the 16 teams remaining in the running for the state title but of all 101 Class A squads. Lufkin has given up an average of only 14 points in 10 games, the touchdowns scored against them being responsible for the two 7-6 early season defeats received from Tyler and Orange.

Big and Little Inch Lines To Aid Fuel Dilemma

WASHINGTON — Eastern consumers today were promised partial relief from the coal shortage within a week through the medium of The Big and Little Inch pipelines.

The lines, used to pump oil during the war and idle since, will begin in about five days to carry natural gas to eastern householders and essential industrial users. They were expected to serve major cities of Ohio, many in Indiana, and possibly some in Pennsylvania. This was expected to free additional coal for other areas.

Union To Appeal Verdict And Sentence When It Has Been Pronounced

WASHINGTON — Judge T. Alan Goldsborough today found John L. Lewis guilty of contempt but deferred sentence until tomorrow, when the government is expected to demand imposition of a jail term and a heavy fine.

The government, it was understood, is expected to ask the court to fine Lewis and his United Mine Workers, AFL, perhaps as much as $200,000 for each day of the national soft coal strike.

Such a fine would stop whenever Lewis told the miners to go back to work.

Goldsborough accepted all of the government's arguments of fact and law in pronouncing Lewis guilty of contempt. The contempt was for ignoring the courts temporary order of November 18 directing Lewis to call off the strike of 400,000 coal miners.

The strike, now in its 13th day, has slowed down industry, forced the closing of schools in many places, and has thrown more than half a million persons out of work.

The union will appeal the verdict and the sentence when it is imposed. Whether the sentence would be carried out or held in abeyance pending outcome of the appeal apparently was a matter for Goldsborough to decide. Legal opinions and precedents are conflicting on this matter.

Immediately after hearing the verdict against him, Lewis went to the bench and accused Goldsborough of violating the miners constitutional rights.

The barrel-chested mine worker's chief broke a silence he has maintained ever since the government obtained the Nov. 18 restraining order issued by Goldsborough.

In a torrent of denunciatory words he inveighed against what he called a "recrudescence of government by injunction."

He declared that the miners had quit work because of a labor dispute with the government over terms of the contract under which they have been digging coal since last May 29.

Lewis read his statement slowly, his voice rising and falling with an almost theatrical quality.

He accused Goldsborough flatly of violating the constitutional guarantees of free speech, press and assembly, and the constitutional prohibition of "voluntary servitude."

"Your injunction, sir, I respectfully submit, deprives the miners of these constitutional rights," Lewis told the court.

Goldsborough deferred sentence in order to avail himself of counsel for both sides.

He said such a course might "be somewhat unusual," but both the government and defense agreed to it.

Goldsborough set no bail for Lewis when the government agreed that none was necessary.

The government originally considered, as an alternative to a jail sentence and heavy fine for Lewis, asking the judge to "sentence" him and the union to negotiate with the government. That idea, however, has been abandoned, it was understood.

R. LEWIS AND ONE WORLD

The first few days of John L. Lewis' coal strike showed how far toward actuality in an economic sense, the conception of One World has progressed.

Because of an American work stoppage, all western Europe had to tighten its belt. Western European governments were forced to translate American industrial shutdowns and curtailed transportation in terms of less food, less raw material and less production within their own boundaries.

All this may have inflated Mr. Lewis' sense of personal importance even more. He could watch the effect of his personal strike, which already had lowered a pall of cold and gloom over his own country, spread like a paralysis to other lands, carrying with it a promise of hunger and discomfort.

Mr. Lewis' 400,000 miners might share their leader's view, if they could turn their thoughts and eyes from their immediate surroundings. Of course, it was not exactly their strike. They had not even been permitted to vote on the strike.

Yet they had followed their leader's bidding like 400,000 sheep, heedless of their responsibility to the government and the nation, heedless even of the direction in which they were being led. In doing so they had helped John L. Lewis to become one of the most important and unpopular men in the world today.

But it may be wondered if Mr. Lewis had weighed the possible political effects of his economic action—effects which might persist however quickly his present strike is settled.

Western Europe is still politically chaotic, pulled this way and that by the powerful forces of the United States and the Soviet Union. Mr. Lewis' strike is not calculated to drive any hesitant country into our arms. Europeans can be forgiven for mistaking confused laws and awkward governmental tactics for fundamental weaknesses in our governmental system.

They have this evidence at hand: One man controls the economic destinies of a group of workers who comprise less than three-tenths of 1 per cent of America's population. Yet, with their backing, he can control America's industrial life in defiance of a government which, on more than one occasion, has demonstrated its inability to stop him.

The results of this defiance are being brought home to western Europeans tangibly. How will they react?

It is possible that Mr. Lewis might awake one day to find that his periodic strikes had helped to drive part of the world away from American democracy and into a politico-economic alliance with totalitarianism of the right or the left.

NEW YORK—(NEA)—Army and Notre Dame weren't the only ones who scored a colossal tie in this year's epic gridiron battle at the Yankee Stadium. Their respective scholastic, ubiquitous Jack Lavelle for the Irish and Maj. Paul Amen for West Point, held each other in a deadlock.

Even to the uninitiated it was apparent that the Irish almost invariably anticipated the cadets' most intricate plays, and the great Johnny Lujack couldn't fool Army.

Fat Jack Lavelle played on the football squad under Knute Rockne in 1925 and '26, but being what he calls "far from All-American timber," retired to the sidelines to watch what the immortal Rockne was calculating into his charges in the way of football savvy. He was graduated in 1928.

"That was the year Rockne started me as a scout," recounts Lavelle. "Army was to play Southern Methodist at West Point and Rock, meeting me in New York, suggested I go to the game and see what the Army had. 'I mean in the way of plays, not players,' he stressed."

The boy made good. Fat Jack has been scouting for the Irish ever since.

LAVELLE has seen every important game Army played in the last 15 years, has an uncanny knack of picking plays apart and discovering revealing traits and involuntary movements of teams as a whole and players individually that tip off a play about to be used.

How does he do it?
"It's no secret," says Fat Jack modestly. "In scouting a team, you usually begin with its defense."

HE BROUGHT IT TO THE RIGH PLACE!

WASHINGTON COLUMN

BY PETER EDSON

NEA Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(NEA)—Dr. Harlow Shapley, director of the Harvard Observatory and one of America's top scientists, was subpoenaed before the House Committee on Un-American Activities this week, like a common Communist suspect. What the committee wanted from Dr. Shapley was information on what he knows about the campaign of Martha Sharp, Democratic candidate for Congress in the last election, against Joseph W. Martin, Jr., in Massachusetts' 14th District.

Martin, who will probably be Republican speaker of the House in the next Congress, won this election by a large majority than he has ever piled up carrying the industrial town of Fall River for the first time in his political career. A heavy Catholic and anti-Communist vote are generally given credit for the landslide.

In his campaign Martin never made direct charges of communism against Mrs. Sharp personally. But in his advertising and speaking, he defined the campaign issue as "Communism versus Joe Martin's real Americanism."

DR. SHAPLEY came into the story principally as a political amateur mixed up with ICCASP, the Independent Citizens' Committee of the Arts, Science and Professions. Dr. Shapley was its Massachusetts director, and as such was in close touch with the National Citizens' Political Action Committee, which is CIO-affiliated. In August, Mrs. Sharp and her managers came to Dr. Shapley for money. They wanted financial assistance from the CIO organizations but did not want the source of the money disclosed.

Dr. Shapley has taken the position that he will, of course, report on his group's financial activities in the last campaign, but only to the Congressional Campaign Expenditures Committee.

From supporters of Martha Sharp, the story of this contest is that she is just a poor social worker and minister's wife. To defeat her in the election, it is claimed that Joe Martin called in the bloodhounds of the un-American Activities Committee and proceeded to smear Mrs. Sharp as a Communist. It is further claimed that Ernie Adamson, chief counsel for the un-American Activities Committee, went into Martin's district and distributed committee documents to help defeat Mrs. Sharp.

THE other side of the story is that Ernie Adamson was investigating Martha Sharp's activities long before it was decided she would be the Democratic candidate for Congress.

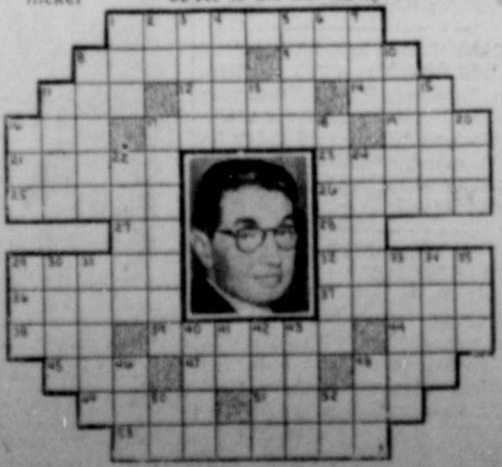

The investigation began with the Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee on which the un-American Activities Committee has issued a lengthy report. In 1943 JAFRC was refused permission by the U. S. government to disburse its own funds in Europe. An arrangement was therefore made for JAFRC funds to be disbursed by the Unitarian Service Committee.

Ernie Adamson says he began his investigation of Martha Sharp as Portuguese agent for the Unitarian Service Committee in 1944.

THE STORY: Russ invites Elise and Red to dinner. During the evening Red tells about the death of a friend in combat. Elise is surprised at the emotion he shows. She wants to talk this over with Russ when he drives her home, but Russ has something else on his mind.

XIII

ELISE lay across her bed crying until blue streaks of dawn showed in the eastern sky through the windows of her room and the pillow beneath her cheek was wet and rumpled with her senseless tears.

She didn't understand, in the least what was the matter with her. Russ had asked her to marry him. He had declared his love in a sweet and gentle way and asked her to become his wife.

And suddenly she had been thrown into a blind panic. She had even tried to stop him—and that had hurt Russ—had added to his stammering uncertainty.

She couldn't explain it even now. That urgent blind impulse to keep things just as they were between them. Russ a friend. And no issue to be irrevocably faced. No final choice to be made.

But the impulse had come too late and Russ's halting proposal had been put into words. A question that had to be answered with "Yes" or "No."

The best she had been able to do at the moment was to ask him for a little time. She had tried to do it gently, understanding even in her own complicated mental state how sensitive he was, how precarious the balance of his war-torn nerves.

"Russ—oh, Russ! . . . won't you give me a little time to think about it? Somehow I can't—I can't decide like this. Right now, I mean. You don't mind, do you, darling?" Which didn't make sense, Elise realized, when she had been waiting—waiting for him to say what he had said tonight.

And, of course, he had minded. She had seen his face darken with disappointment. Had felt him draw back into the shell of his reserve.

And so silently he had brought her to the door and asked after a moment's awkward silence, "Would you rather I'd not see you—until you make up your mind?"

And she hadn't been able to stand that. She had put her hands impulsively up to his shoulders. "Oh, no, Russ. Let's not be like that. Can't we just go on—as we were?"

It had been with something like a groan that he had taken her hands away. But he had said again, "All right, Elise—if you want it that way."

But he hadn't kissed her good night, as he had after other dates.

THE alarm clock jangled through a stream of disconnected dreams and woke her at seven. She was grateful for one thing, as she dressed for work. She wouldn't be apt to run into Russ during the morning. His office was out in the factory and he very seldom came into the laboratory except on purpose to see her or Red.

Red, however, was already on hand when she arrived at the laboratory. She thought he looked at her rather curiously, as if noticing effects of sleeplessness and tears which she hadn't been able to entirely cover with make-up.

Consequently her "Good morning" to his routine greeting was curt and she immediately got very busy at her work bench.

"We're running some more samples of that new lacquer," she told him brusquely. "Be sure you time them right this morning." Which was entirely uncalculated since they had buried the hatchet on that issue.

Red didn't answer. Just gave her a sullen look. She knew when he looked at her like that that he'd really like to slap her face—hard.

That Monday proved to be as trying a day for Red McPan as for Elise Varney—for different reasons.

First, he almost collided with Jackie Spence as he was striding across the campus to his first class that afternoon. She saw him first, however, and began an animated conversation with her companion to avoid speaking to him.

The encounter bothered her more than it did him, though. He even grinned a little maliciously as he watched her going on down the walk swinging her hips in what she thought was a provocative way. She was completely out of his system after that silly kid's tantrum she had pulled.

But he couldn't take as easily in his stride the second jolt the day handed him. The professor handed his first English paper back to him. It was all marked up with errors as he had known it would be, and there was a note appended asking him to see the professor in his office after class.

THE professor, when Red got to him, was a little nonplussed as to just where to begin. In fact he had never in all his years of teaching received a college paper written with as little regard for rules of English as Red's had been. He wondered in a mildly startled academic way how a boy could have gotten as far as college without absorbing some conception as to how English was to be written.

The professor handed Red a high school manual of English grammar which he had dug up somewhere and recommended that he study it before he handed in any more written work. There was something dryly hopeless in the prof's manner which set off a spark of alarm in Red's mind. The possibility of failure—of flunking out—loomed for the first time. And the thought of flunking a Freshman course—a course that 18-year-olds were breezing through with three-quarters of their minds on girls and other campus diversions, did something odd to Red.

He felt his throat growing hot and dry and constricted. And a feeling came into his chest, a feeling that he hadn't had since he was a boy.

VA Manager To Leave Position On January 1

Tom R. Rayburn, manager of the Veterans Administration Dallas Regional office, has announced his resignation effective January 1 to accept a position as vice-president and general manager of a Dallas air conditioning and refrigeration distributor doing business in the Southwest.

His successor has not been announced.

WINTER VISITORS BRING HOMES ON ROLLING WHEEL

By Jim Flinchum
United Press Staff Correspondent
McALLEN, Tex. (UP)— Another winter tourist season has opened in Texas' Lower Rio Grande Valley and with it had come the biggest influx of homes on wheels ever seen in this rendezvous for zero-temperature refugees.

Despite warnings of an acute housing shortage, northern tourists continue pouring into the valley counties for their annual four month's visitation. But wise to the rental situation in the era of "no vacancy" signs most of them nowadays come pulling their houses behind them.

The McAllen Chamber of Commerce estimated recently that an average of a score or more cars and trailers roll into the valley every day loaded with families of two to four persons seeking a few months escape from cold weather.

They are arriving despite repeated pleas by the chamber and other valley civic agencies that no housing facilities can be expected here.

Those who do bring trailers, however, can live in comparative comfort and still present no burden on the house and apartment shortage. Trailer camps are more numerous and crowded than ever before in the history of the Valley.

McAllen alone can count at least 300 trailer homes and the population of rolling shelters is growing rapidly. Hasty extensions have been made for all of its trailer parks and two new ones have been opened for business.

Additional courts also have been started at Pharr, Harlingen, San Benito and Raymondville. A record season is reported at Wes-laco where the only municipally-owned tourist camp in the Valley and one of the largest in Texas is located.

Despite the heavy crop of trailer dwellers the number of tourists has dropped this year far below those of pre-war times or even the wartime period. An estimated 40,000 persons annually spent their winters here immediately before Pearl Harbor.

Civic leaders estimate that valley merchants are losing between $4,000,000 and $5,000,000 in business because of the curtailed tourist business. Sadly they write letters to inquiring northerners telling them either to bring trailers or tents or to stay at home.

But those who have arrived with their trailers find living conditions comparatively easy in their mobile residences. Most of the trailer parks are located adjacent to citrus groves usually owned by the camp proprietor and the trailer wife fortunate enough to have come early for an outside location can in most cases just reach out of the window for the morning's grapefruit or orange juice.

Planned programs are staged by almost all of the municipalities or camps for entertainment of the winter visitors. In McAllen, the tourist club run by visitors themselves holds scheduled recreation four days a week.

Meanwhile, leaders among the permanent population hope that easing of building material shortages will provide a greater number of houses and apartments by next season. A survey conducted recently by the Valley Chamber of Commerce indicated that at least 10,000 tourist type cottages were needed immediately.

But all that prospective builders can do now is wait and wish. And point to the advantages of the trailer houses. No anxious landlords, nor eviction notices there, they say.

Ranger Vet 5th In Line At Sale Of Typewriters

FORT WORTH (Special) Dec. 2.—Sig. Summer Faircloth, Jr. 909 Young Street, Ranger, is a firm believer in the slogan that the "early bird gets the worm". Only in this instance it was a typewriter.

Joining the line of World War 11 veterans in the wee small hours of the morning here today, Faircloth was the fifth veteran in a line of more than 200 admitted to the War Assets Administration sale of surplus government typewriters.

The sale attracted certified veterans from all parts of West Texas and found veterans claiming, for anywhere from $25 to $50, standard and portable typewriters in all makes and models.

It was the first sale of its kind ever held by WAA in the Fort Worth region. Additional quantities of typewriters are available for veteran purchasers Dec. 3 and 4 with veteran dealers set to buy the unclaimed remainder Dec. 6.

Texas Girl Wins Award In Junior Grower Contest

LILLIAN ROEDER, 17, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. M.
Roeder of Shiner, won a major southern states award among members of the National Junior Vegetable Growers Association as the organization gathered in Boston, Mass., for its 12th annual convention.

As a sectional champion grower in 1946,
Miss Roeder
received $100 from the $6,000 in scholarships provided by A & P Food Stores for the production and marketing of vegetables in competition with other youths. National champion receiving a $500 A & P

Miss Roeder

scholarship is Jim Spell, 17, of Columbia, Miss.

Results announced by Prof.
Grant B. Snyder of Massachusetts State College, adult advisor for the junior growers, included a $200 southern states championship for Marjorie Ann Ball, 15, of Yukon, Okla.

Miss Roeder gardened a fourth of an acre on the 104-acre farm of her parents. Her 17 vegetable crops and some strawberry plants gave her a harvest of $308.90, used at home or sold. She had costs estimated at $50.

Her garden is a showplace for healthy plants with no weeds, her leader commented. A high score in the marketing study course added to her total score in the year-around educational program of the junior growers. In 1945 she was named outstanding 4-H club girl in Lavaca County.

HER ADVENTUROUS NIGHT HILARIOUSLY SUSPENSEFUL

When a killer abducts a pretty girl going to her wedding and with her, a glib bachelor, not her bridegroom, the complications promise to be funny as well as citing.

"Her Adventurous Night"
Tuesday's film at the Arcadia lives up to these potentialities in every respect. Starring Dennis O'- Keefe and Helen Walker, this Universal picture emerges as breezy, sparkling comedy entertainment.

In a novel but effective transposition of events, the story opens with O'Keefe and Miss Walker as a sedate married couple, blessed with an over-imaginative son played by Scotty Beckett.

Through the eyes of Beckett, the tales goes back to the initial meeting of his parents on a country road outside the fictional town of Midvale, Calif.

Miss Walker, as the altar-bound motorist, drives her car into a muddy shoulder to avoid hitting O'Keefe's telephone repair truck.
Unable to pry the car loose from its moorings, the gallant trouble-shooter gives Helen a lift in his truck.

When the pair are overtaken by the armed, murderous bank robber, the fun and action really start. And this fast tempo continues throughout, until the story's surprising denouement, when the hitherto unidentified bank bandit is brought to justice.

One of the highlights of the picture is an episode in a roadside winery, whose owner mistakes Miss Walker and O'Keefe for newlyweds, and turns over the "bridal chamber" to them.

Tom Powers is excellent as the desperado, Charles Judels stands out as the hospitable Italian vintner, and Fuzzy Knight shines as a befuddled stranger who always pops up at unexpected moments.
Benny Bartlett has an important role.

The skillful direction of John Rawlins takes full advantage of numerous dramatic and humorous opportunities in Jerry Warner's original screenplay. Ernest Miller is responsible for the clean-cut cinematography, while Executive Producer Marshall Grant and Associate Producer Charles

P. Haas deserve credit for the picture's effective settings.

35 Automobiles Go To Disabled In Dallas Area

By October 31st 35 automobiles had been delivered to disabled veterans of the Dallas Branch Area under the "automobiles for amputees" program.

A total 667 World War II veterans of Texas, Louisiana and Mississippi had been certified as eligible at that time.

"In the Dallas region," said
Tom R. Rayburn, manager Dallas Regional VA office, "136 veterans had been certified as eligible."

The program (Public Law 663) to furnish automobiles or other conveyances to World War II veterans who lost, or lost the use of, one or both legs went into operation the first week in September.

Since then VA field offices over the nation have made payments to dealers for 1,053 vehicles delivered to disabled veterans.

The 35 automobiles delivered in the Dallas Branch area cost $24,839, an average of $1,567 per vehicle.

After a veterans' application for a vehicle has been approved

Beware Coughs Following Flu

After the flu is over and gone, the cough that follows may develop into chronic bronchitis if neglected. Creomulsion relieves promptly because it goes right to the seat of the trouble to help loosen and expel germ laden phlegm, and aid nature to soothe and heal raw, tender, inflamed bronchial mucous membranes. No matter how many medicines you have tried, tell your druggist to sell you a bottle of Creomulsion with the understanding you must like the way it quickly allays the cough or you are to have your money back.

Says Men Just As Vain As Women

FORT WORTH, Tex., (UP)—Men are just as vain in selection of clothes as women—and perhaps a little more so in choosing hats, a Fort Worth hat salesman swears.
C. A. Turrentine said men spend hours before mirrors, admiring them and trying on dozens of chapeaux. But if the wife is along—that's different. The spouse's selection is made and wrapped in just a few minutes.

Turrentine admits he isn't averse to the trend, however. When business is slack, he tries on a few himself.

Keeping the Record Straight

CLEVELAND (UP)—If the loops and curves made by Federal Court reporters here were straightened out and laid end to end they would reach from Cleveland to Detroit, about 170 miles, it was estimated today. Under a new rule the three court reporters here must record every "ah" and "ahem."

Dark Milk Bottles Urged For Health

WASHINGTON (UP)—Don't be surprised some day if your family milk supply is delivered in colored bottles. The milkman merely will be trying to thwart the sun. The Agriculture Department has found that the sun, normally a source of vitamins, may rob milk which is left on the doorstep too long of some of its flavor and nutritional values.

The department said studies show that homogenized milk exposed to sunlight for as little as a half hour may change in flavor. Other milk may take as long as an hour.

Vitamins affected by sunlight include riboflavin and ascorbic acid. The loss of riboflavin is particularly unfortunate, the department said, because milk is one of the few everyday foods rich in this vitamin.

It added that if milk cannot be brought in promptly, a box or some other covering where it will be dark should be provided.

Some companies already have considered putting out milk in dark bottles to prevent the loss of vitamins. Consumers preference for clear bottles has blocked this move so far, however.
