Ford camp exuding victor's confidence

By The Associated Press

Running neck and neck with just days to go, Gerald Ford and Jimmy Carter campaigned hard Saturday in states with the fat electoral bounties that make presidents. Ford said he'll win; Carter's people said they saw promise in their own vote projections.

"I had not been confirmed by your ballots, but since have been supported by your prayers," said Ford, who preceded Carter into Texas by hours. "I ask you on Tuesday, Nov. 2, not only to support me with your prayers but to support me with your ballots."

He saw encouragement in the crowd of 6,000 that heard him in Houston. "With a rally like this in Texas," Ford said, "I feel we're going to win and win overwhelmingly on Tuesday."

Carter, cognizant of the delicately balanced polls, made no such claim. But his press secretary, Jody Powell, said Carter's own vote projections are "certainly encouraging."

Powell said if Carter wins the southern and border states, as well as the traditional Democratic states, he would need to carry only three of nine states that are rated tossups. Among those are New York, Pennsylvania and Ohio — all late targets of both campaigns.

Stopping over in New Orleans on his way to Texas, Carter was greeted by 12,000-15,000 people who jammed the narrow streets of the French Quarter. He rode in an open-top convertible for five blocks, then walked another two to the accompaniment of Dejan's Olympic Brass Band.

"I think it's time we had a Southerner back in the White House again," he said.

While the President was making a last-ditch pitch for Texas' 26 electoral votes, his running mate, Bob Dole, was in California with its prized 45.

"We're winning, we're winning," Dole said in one speech. "Carter's a little uptight because he's about to blow the biggest lead in history," he said in another.

"The polls show it is so close that the outcome could be decided by whether it rains or not," the Democratic candidate said. Political wisdom has it that Democrats benefit from big voter turnouts, aided by good weather.

In Illinois, which bestows 26 votes, Democratic vice presidential nominee Walter F. Mondale stressed the get-out-the-vote theme. "We have the next three days to turn it around," he said.

The electoral college gives states one vote for each of its congressmen and senators, and three to the District of Columbia. Thus there are 538 votes total; a majority, or 270 votes, wins the election.

The Louis Harris poll, announced Friday, gives Carter the lead over Ford 45 per cent to 44 per cent. Seven per cent were undecided in the poll, taken for ABC News, and 4 per cent favored Sen. Eugene McCarthy, who is on the ballot in less than half the states.

Harris interviewed 2,891 eligible voters and said his sample showed Carter leading 55-39 in his native South and 43-41 in the East. Ford led in the Midwest 48-40 and 50-41 in the West.

Campaigning in Sacramento, Dole

Midlander to see cousin Bob today

Midland resident Mrs. Floyd Jarnagin will be able to see her cousin Robert Dole for the second time in two weeks today as the Republican vice presidential candidate stops in Midland for a motorcade and church services.

Mrs. Jarnagin and her family will accompany Dole and a group of Midland dignitaries on a motorcade from the Midland Hilton to the First United Methodist Chruch, Main Street and Ohio Avenue.

After services from 10:30 to 11:30 a.m. at the church, Dole will travel by motorcade to the Midland Regional Air Terminal, where he will hold a public rally and speech in the executive hangar of Rich Air Terminal before leaving for his next stop on his last minute campaign tour before Tuesday's general election.

Mrs. Jarnagin said she had made no special arrangements to visit with her cousin, saying his time was too valuable and that she could not make that demand on what time he had.

She was able to spend a little time with Dole two weeks ago when he made an appearance in Lubbock. Apparently someone tipped the senator off that his cousin was in the audience, Mrs. Jarnagin said, because at one point in his speech Dole said, "Come on up here, Maxine," and had his cousin join him on the podium.

"I'm proud of him and love him to death," Mrs. Jarnagin said.

Dole arrived at Midland Regional Air Terminal at 10:35 p.m. Saturday and spent the night at the Midland Hilton.

Other participants in Dole's motorcade, which begins at 10:15 a.m. at the Hilton, will be Mayor Ernest Angelo, State Representative Tom Craddick, District Judge Ray McKim and County Judge Barbara Culver.

Shootout kills city resident

By JIM STEINBERG

A 32-year-old Midland man was shot and killed Saturday night by a sheriff's deputy and a Texas state trooper after the man reportedly fired at them with a .38 caliber revolver.

After firing his weapon at Deputy Joe Payne, Monte Whiting of Route 4 was shot in the chest an undetermined number of times by Payne and state Department of Public Safety Sgt. R. T. Howie, said chief Midland County Deputy Lonnie "Bill" Cornell.

The incident took place in a vacant lot in front of Brazil Trucking on the Rankin Highway, two miles south of Interstate 20 shortly after 8 p.m.

Cornell said the sheriff's office received a call about a shooting disturbance at 7:45 p.m. Howie happened to be at the sheriff's office at the time of the call and responded along with Payne, Cornell said.

When the two officers arrived at the scene, Cornell said, Payne repeatedly asked Whiting to drop the gun, but he fired at the deputy as he attempted to get out of the car, Cornell said.

Both men returned the fire, he said. Whiting was pronounced dead at the scene by Justice of the Peace John Biggs. The number of times Whiting was hit and who fired the fatal shot could not be determined until an autopsy had been completed, Biggs said.

An investigation into the shooting is continuing, Cornell said.

Interviewed shortly after the shooting, Mrs. Robin Whiting said her husband did not actually fire at the officers because he had already emptied the firearm. He only pointed it at the men, she said.

Whiting was employed by Brazil Trucking as a ranch forman and truck dispacher for the last four years.

"It would take four men to replace him," said owner Doug Brazil, who originally summoned police Saturday night.

Ford received warmly

HOUSTON (AP) — President Ford, ending a two-day tour of the metropolitan Houston area, Saturday promised a strong national defense and a policy that would allow oil companies to expand, both topics that dip deeply into the pocketbooks of thousands of Texans.

The President, in an outdoor rally at a Houston shopping center, said he would continue his fight for tax reductions in the middle income categories and "if Congress continues to refuse this proposal by the next election in 1978, we will go out and we will beat them."

Several thousand people gave Ford a rousing Texas welcome at the rally and there were only one or two protest signs seen.

He talked about most of the same things he has been saying in recent weeks: "The country is back on even keel and confidence has been restored to the White House. Not a single American today is dying or fighting on foreign soil," he said.

He said under his program jobs would be developed in the private sector for all who wanted to work while "my opponent wants to give workers dead-end jobs paid for by the government."

Both Connally and Shepard stressed the national defense issue.

Mexican-Americans receive Carter visit

SAN ANTONIO, Tex. (AP) — Democratic presidential candidate Jimmy Carter sought the Mexican-American vote in South Texas Saturday speaking in Spanish and calling for more jobs before moving on to North Texas to spend the night in Dallas.

He was to spend the night in Dallas and was scheduled to attend services at a Fort Worth Church Sunday.

Crowds chanting "Viva Carter" and "We want Carter" greeted the Democratic leader when he arrived at Archer Park in McAllen for a rally attended by an estimated 10,000 in this South Texas city with a largely Mexican-American population.

Carter greeted his audience in Spanish before switching languages by saying: "I can also speak English."

Later Carter spoke before an audience estimated by police at nearly 25,000 at the Alamo Plaza in San Antonio.

"It is a time for a change," he said from a platform built in front of the entrance to the Alamo. "People want a nation of workers, not of welfare. There is a great yearning to restore our nation's spirit. It is time we reassess what our nation is and what it has been and what it can be."

While Carter was in San Antonio, his wife Rosalyn and daughter Amy, 8, were in Houston, where they held a news conferences and attended a Halloween party.

In McAllen, before Carter adressed the crowd, State Sen. Raul Longoria read a telegram from Lady Bird Johnson, widow of the late President Lyndon B. Johnson, in which she said she had voted absentee for a straight Democratic ticket.

Lucy Johnson Nugent, also on the podium along with Gov. and Mrs. Dolph Briscoe, Congressman Kika De la Garza and Democrat National Committee Chairman Robert Strauss, addressed the crowd in both Spanish and English saying she was going to vote "as Daddy did — Democratic."

Carter spent most of his time at the speakers stand pounding home Democratic points concerning jobs, welfare and the economy.

The McAllen-Edinburg-Pharr area, with about 75,000 persons, was rated the poorest section of the country recently according to national census figures.

Carter told the crowd he wanted "a nation of workers, not of welfare."

He also urged the crowd to vote Tuesday, pointing to the 1960 election in which John F. Kennedy defeated Richard Nixon.

"Only a few votes put John Kennedy in office," he said. "If they had not voted Richard Nixon would have been in the White House eight years earlier."

Candidate has 'wooden' platform

If you share with millions of Americans the two dominant emotions of the 1976 presidential campaign—indifference and indecision—Edward E. Gentry of Marthaville, La., may be just the ticket for you.

His name won't be on the ballot (you'll have to write it in), and his candidacy hasn't gotten even as much coverage as those of Lester Maddox and the Nudist Party hopeful who keeps going to jail for demonstrating his platform.

But Gentry is calling his program America's "last chance" and "the plan to save capitalism and build a new U.S.A."

It's all contained in a one-page position paper in which he calls for renewal of our depleted forests in a program in which "all people who are able, and receive checks from the federal or state government" will be asked to plant at least 100 trees per year. They would be harvested by contractors for the federal government, but Gentry says "there will be jobs for all."

Frankly, I don't know why we've been wasting all this time trying to goad the major candidates into saying something concrete—and, in fact, Gentry has respectfully suggested in letters to President Ford and Gov. Carter that they both withdraw and throw their support to Gentry to avoid "any bittered disappointment" as a result of Tuesday's election.

And Mrs. E. L. Davis of 3707 West Michigan in Midland— who claims no affiliation with the wooday presidential candidate—in separate and apparently more reasonable letters offers specific candidates for tree planting in Midland (which should satisfy Gentry, since he did not specify what genus of trees to plant).

Mrs. Davis has fallen in love with a tre called the "cedrus Deodara" and thinks Midlanders should plant forests of the spruce-shaped cedar tree as a substitute for the Colorado spruce that isn't suited for our climate and altitude.

She even offers a guide to outstanding local examples such as those at 3113 W. Illinois, 2802 Mariana, twin "Deodaras" at 3200 W. Front, one in her own backyard, and lots of cedarlets at Tom's Treehouse on the Andrews Highway.

I'm mildly familiar with the type of tree (at least as familiar as Mr. Gentry is with national economics and politics), and I think it's a sprucy idea. We're all going to be proud of the oaken facade of West Wall one of these days, and the City of Corsicana showers itself in annual glory from the majestic red oaks it planted by the thousands decades ago. (Remind me to print one of the great secret sonnets of the western world I wrote for the planting of a tree one time.) And I love Odessa's idea of a memorial forest.

But Don Schaffrina of Midland College has another leafy candidate for local dissemination which even offers an edible yield, and I've got to discuss that before we finish up the platform for the American Woodsman's Party.

Ford, Carter to complete unique campaign Tuesday

By WALTER R. MEARS
AP Special Correspondent

WASHINGTON (AP) — Gerald R. Ford, who never sought the presidency until he held it, and Jimmy Carter, the driving, self-started Democratic challenger, come to judgment on Tuesday.

By the standard measurements, Carter leads narrowly, with signs of erosion and of a late Ford advance.

However, this is not a standard election, this contest to restore the seal of voter approval to a White House that has lacked it for 27 months.

And the measurement that counts awaits two last days of campaigning by the appointed Republican President and by the Democratic nominee who lifted himself out of obscurity to the brink of power.

It will be registered on Tuesday in the polling booths of 176,877 precincts, from the Maine dawn to the California evening. It may be registered by only about half the Americans who could vote if they chose.

Thus the winner will probably be the choice of little more than one-quarter of the nation's voting-age citizens. That may not be a compelling mandate from the people, but it will nonetheless return the White House to voter custody, be it Carter or Ford who is chosen to take office next Jan. 20.

The electoral college arithmetic leans Carter's way, and Ford is confronted with a list of must states, sudden-death contests, any one of which could be his undoing.

A presidential election is not one contest, but 51, in every state and the District of Columbia, for the 270 electoral votes that will make a president.

"If we don't win states like Illinois, it will be virtually impossible to win the election," Ford said. Add to that states like Ohio, Indiana, Michigan and California. Ford's strategists acknowledge he must sweep them to make the presidency his own.

With his presumed base of Southern support, and as the candidate of the stronger party, Carter could assemble an electoral college majority without such a sweep.

But there were worrisome portents for the Democrats in a late California Poll that showed Ford six points ahead there, and in campaign surveys that indicate Carter is slipping in New York, Pennsylvania and Ohio.

Furthermore, with election day at hand, the public opinion analysts report a persistently high level of indecision in the electorate, and that, too, clouds the indicators.

With Ford, the signal issue has been the fact that he is president, that he has a record of performance in office to match against what he calls Carter's wavering, waffling promises.

Carter's central thrust has been a challenge to Ford's competence to handle the job he holds, together with pledges to put people back to work, overhaul the tax code, and reform the very structure of government itself.

He styled himself as the outsider, come to change the establishment.

As Americans choose a president, they also will elect a new Congress, with continued Democratic control a sure thing. They will elect 14 governors, and settle thousands of local contests and questions.

There are now 62 Democratic senators, 38 Republicans, and that balance of political power is not likely to change much. The election will, however, change the face of the Senate. Eight incumbents have retired, among them Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield of Montana and Republican Leader Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania.

The incumbents in deepest trouble include Democrats Vance Hartke of Indiana, up against former Indianapolis Mayor Richard G. Lugar; Republican J. Glenn Beall of Maryland, trailing Rep. Paul Sarbanes; and Conservative Republican James Buckley of New York, the underdog against former U.N. Ambassador Daniel P. Moynihan.

In the House, Democrats dominate by a 2-1 margin, 290 seats to 145. Even they expect the Republicans to regain 10 or 12 of the 43 seats the GOP lost in the 1974 congressional elections, just after the Watergate scandals.

Republicans talk of gaining 20 seats or more. But either way, both sides foresee a comfortable Democratic majority in the 95th Congress.

Fourteen states are electing governors this year, and in at least three of them, the statehouse contests could prove a boon to Ford against Carter.

Republican Govs. Christopher S. Bond of Missouri and Otis L. Bowen of Indiana are favored to win landslides that could help the top of the GOP ticket. In Illinois, former U.S. Attorney James R. Thompson is the runaway leader over Democrat Michael J. Howlett, and there, too, the coattails could aid the President.

There is another hard-to-measure factor in the presidential race, name of Eugene J. McCarthy. He is entered as an independent candidate in 29 states, and in contests like those of Illinois, Wisconsin and California, he could pull away enough liberal Democratic votes to turn the outcome in Ford's favor if the count is close.

In addition, former Georgia Gov. Lester Maddox is on the ballots of 20 states as the American Independent Party candidate.

But the pull of party, magnified by the absence of a compelling reason to defect, should be an asset to Carter. Party loyalties have waned, but the Democrats still are stronger, particularly in the big, industrial states that count most in the electoral college. The Democrats and organized labor have staged an intensive drive to sign up new voters.

By most calculations, the bigger the turnout of voters, the better for Carter.

Four years ago, about 55 per cent of the potential electorate cast presidential ballots. This time, the percentage showing could well be lower, perhaps below half. The trend is downward. Turnout in the last five presidential elections has averaged 62 per cent.

There are about 150 million Americans of voting age, and about two-thirds of them are registered to cast ballots. Now comes their choice, after an extraordinary campaign.

It is the first campaign ever to be financed with public funds, $21.8 million in checkedoff tax dollars for each candidate.

Ford is a unique incumbent, come to office through appointment as vice president to Richard M. Nixon, resigned Aug. 9, 1974.

The early pollsters' odds led Ford to a move that has become customary for the underdog: he challenged Carter to debate. It hadn't been done in a presidential campaign in 16 years, and no incumbent ever had agreed to debate.

So they debated, or, more accurately, appeared jointly to respond to questions put by panels of reporters. In three 90-minute sessions, at intervals of about two weeks, Ford and Carter dropped everything for the nationally televised encounters. In prospect, they had loomed as the decisive arenas of the campaign.

Both Dole and Mondale roamed the nation from Labor Day to election day. Harris said his surveys showed that Mondale was an asset worth two or three percentage points to the Democratic ticket.

What Ford and Carter could not do in their televised debates, they could not do in person: neither candidate found the issue or the image to turn the trend decisively in his direction.

Every time it seemed about to happen, something intervened. Usually something they'd said.

Carter was riding high when, in declining to disclose details of his promised tax reform, he left an opening which Republicans seized upon to claim that he would increase taxes for half the population. Then he turned up in Playboy magazine, with interview comments about lust and adultery.

Ford seemed to be gaining headway when Earl Butz had to quit the Cabinet for slurring blacks, and when Ford had to explain away his own misstatement on Eastern Europe.

So the campaign charts were zigzag, up one week, down the next. But even with his periodic setbacks, Ford was closing the summer's wide gap in the polls, saying as he embarked on his final and most intensive campaign journey that he was in position "to pull off the political surprise of the century and come back and win."

His problem was compounded by an economic downturn in midcampaign. Ford called it a pause in a solid recovery from the recession. Carter said it was evidence that the Republican administration has made a mess of the economy.

In foreign policy, Ford claimed experience, pointed to peace, promised a strong America. Carter said the administration has forsaken morality in foreign policy, asserted that Ford had let Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger become de facto president for foreign affairs.

He said he would never permit subversion of a foreign government, or use U.S. troops unless American security was directly threatened. At the same time, he criticized detente with the Soviet Union as too onesided, and by the time he was through criticizing Ford's remark about Eastern Europe, Carter sounded like the more hawkish of the two.

Yet at the same time, he was calling for defense spending cuts of $5 billion to $7 billion — and Ford was saying that would spell disaster for U.S. security, boasting that he has proposed the biggest military budgets in history.

Carter campaigned intensively, from Labor Day on, with breaks for the debates and for regular respites at his home in Plains, Ga. He traveled over 50,000 miles, made about 100 stops, campaigned in about 40 states.

Ford spent most of the eightweek campaign season at home, emphasizing his incumbency and campaigning in the White House or the Rose Garden, until the final debate. Then he set out on an intensive, 10-day blitz, aimed largely at the big, battleground states. His campaign has covered about half the states, with repeated appearances in the key ones.

Buoyed by his private polls, he showed up in New York, once thought to be beyond his election day reach, and in Texas, which would be a major southern prize if he could gain it.

As Ford stepped up his travels, his organization stepped up campaign television, budgeted for up to $12 million, with nationwide advertisements, and 30-minute shows in the key states. Joe Garagiola, the former big league catcher who now is a sports commentator, was the master of ceremonies, interviewer and cheerleader.

Carter's tone changed, too. He emerged in the first place styling himself as the candidate of competence, compassion and love, shunning the attack and saying he ran for himself, not against others. By late September, he was denouncing Ford as a brainwashed President, accusing him of disgracing America, saying he had not accomplished a single thing in office. Then, abruptly, the hard line lapsed, with Carter noting pointedly that almost everything he does is done on purpose.

Just as purposefully, he sought to fine tune his image. At one point, he said he was intentionally emphasizing conservative tenets, like a balanced budget and a pay-as-you-go approach to costly new programs.

Through those turns and more, the campaign moved from the crowded, noisy arena that belongs to candidates toward the silent solemnity of the polling booth.

It is topcoat weather now; snow chased the candidates in Chicago last Wednesday as it had in New Hampshire nine weary months ago.

Then the choice was among a dozen men.

Now it is two.

And on Wednesday morning, it will be one.

British think they have plan

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) — British officials think a multiracial Commonwealth peacekeeping force could be the solution to the deadlock over who controls the police power during transition from white to black rule in Rhodesia.

Senior British sources reported this Saturday as one of several ideas British chairman Ivor Richard may propose as compromises at the conference here of the militant black leaders and Prime Minister Ian Smith's white government.

After an embittered start, the formal talks were in recess until about Wednesday while Richard shuttled among the one white and four black delegations from Rhodesia in search of consensus. On the sidelines were senior observers from the Organization of African Unity, the Commonwealth and more than 70 governments including the United States.

William D. Schaufele, U.S. assistant secretary of state for Africa, arrived Saturday and moved into Richard's hotel, ostensibly to strengthen Richard's authority in conducting the deliate negotiations that came about largely as a result of Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger's recent African tour.

Smith told Richard at a brief meeting Saturday that he plans to fly back to Salisbury soon but he will return to Geneva when the conference reaches a more active stage.

Smith has demanded that control of Rhodesia's troops, police and courts remain in white hands during the period of a transition government under a black prime minister. The blacks have flatly rejected that, saying they must have the right to take charge of the country's security.

South African fighting erupts

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Blacks stabbed and shot a white guard in the black township of Guguletu outside Cape Town Friday night amid new racial violence in isolated areas of the country, police reported today.

The guard, P. J. Schoeman, 21, stationed outside government offices in the township, was reported in critical condition at a hospital. Police said his own gun was used on him.

In another incident, about 30 youths in Guguletu stoned a truck belonging to a furniture company, police said.

At the neighboring black township of Langa, police said they were forced to fire on a crowd of some 1,000 students who began stoning police vehicles. There were no reports of casualties.

Students in Langa also threatened to kill the superintendent of Langa High School if he did not stop year-end examinations. Students have launched a nationwide boycott against the exams in protest over the deaths of fellow students during rioting in black townships since June.

Maj. Gen. David Kriel, deputy police commissioner in charge of riot control, said students at high school in Mohlakeng township outside Randfontein near Johannesburg also abandoned school examination centers and refused to return.

In Soweto, the huge black township outside Johannesburg, police said youths threw a fire bomb through the window of a beer hall, setting the building ablaze.

Midland, area Scouts anticipating Jamboree

Midland and area Boy Scouts are preparing for the 1977 National Scout Jamboree, set for Aug. 3 through 9 at Moraine State Park near Butler, Pa.

About 40,000 Scouts and leaders from across the U.S. and from International Scout associations will participate in the Jamboree. A theme of "Forward Together, Scouting-USA," has been chosen for the event.

In order to attend, Scouts must be 12 years of age and classified as a First Class Scout by April 1, 1976, must have earned the required skill awards and must pass a medical examination. Applications should be sent in as soon as possible, since space is limited.

Information about the Jamboree is available from the District Scout Executive or the office of the Buffalo Trail Council, P.O. Box 1508, Midland, Texas 79701, phones 684-7171 or 563-2276.

The Jamboree traditionally is held every four years, except during wartime, to spotlight the Scouting program. The first Scouting Jamboree was held in 1937 in Washington, D.C.

Tuesday's balloting will include six uncontested elected positions

Of the six uncontested races for Midland offices in Tuesday's general election, five of the candidates are incumbent. The fourth, Jack Leonard, will run for the county commissioner (precinct 3) slot previously held by John Thomas.

Leslie C. Acker will be running for county attorney, a position he has held since he was appointed Jan. 1.

Born in Dallas, Acker was reared in Post. He obtained a B.B.A. degree and law degree from The University of Texas.

Before his appointment as county attorney, Acker worked two years as Midland assistant city attorney from 1970 to 1972, and worked four years as Midland assistant county attorney from 1972 to 1976.

Acker is married to Beverly K. Acker and has two children, Lisa, 10 and Dawn, 7.

Incumbent Constable Jack Merritt has worked with various Midland law enforcement agencies off and on since 1938.

A native of Weatherford, Merritt moved in 1918 to Snyder and in 1926 to Midland, where he became a farmer and rancher.

After a term as deputy constable from 1938 to 1941, he became the third man hired on the Midland Police Department. After three years with the department, he returned to farming and ranching, which was interrupted from 1950 to 1960 while he served as county constable. From 1962 to 1967 he was warrant officer for the county. He was appointed constable in 1969.

John Biggs, incumbent justice of the peace, precinct 1, place 1, has been in office since 1960.

Biggs moved to Midland in 1944 from Hereford. He worked eight years with United Dry Goods and eight years with Basin Supply, Inc., as an asssistant manager. Since being in office, Biggs has attended many justice of the peace training schools, he said.

Jack Leonard, candidate for county commissioners precinct 3, has been a Midland resident 30 years. Born in Montgomery County, Ark., Leonard moved to Martin County in 1928 and lived there until 1942.

He joined the Army Air Force and served in the Japanese-American conflict in Okinawa. He returned to Midland, where he has been engaged in the farming and ranching business.

Leonard has five children and five grandchildren, all of Midland.

Elmo Linebarger, 65, has been Midland County tax assessor-collector since late 1965, when he was appointed by the commissioners' court.

Linebarger, then a property appraiser in the tax office, succeeded J. M. Speed, who died in office at the age of 81.

In 1966, he won over Democratic candidate J. H. Fine, for a two-year term, becoming the first Republican in the state to the county tax collector's position.

Linebarger has 26 years of exeperience in tax work.

For three years beginning in 1950, he worked in the Tom Green County tax office in San Angelo. Then for 11 years he was tax assessor-collector for the San Angelo Independent School District.

Durward Wright has been a Midland County commissioner for two terms or eight years. He moved to Midland in 1959 from Odessa.

Wright grew up in San Antonio and attended Texas Tech. He later was employed in Fort Worth by Dunn and Bradstreet in Fort Worth before being transferrred to Odessa.

In Odessa Wright worked for the National Association of Credit Managers. In Midland he worked for Globe Factors about 14 years before starting his own factoring firm, in which he is now self-employed.

Wright is married and has five children.

Briscoe wins case review

AUSTIN, Tex. (AP) — Gov. Dolph Briscoe has won his federal court suit to block what he calls creation of "a little Cuba" in Zavala County, but he may have won it only temporarily.

Federal District Judge Jack Roberts agreed Thursday that Briscoe should have been allowed to review a federal grant application by Zavala County Economic Development Corporation.

But Roberts refused to void the $1.5 million grant. Instead, Roberts gave the governor 60 days in which to review the application.

During that period, Roberts said, the corporation is enjoined from spending any money from the grant.

The corporation wants to use the money to buy farm land for a cooperative, set up a savings and loan firm and an importexport business.

Briscoe is a major land owner in the area, and corporation officials say he opposes the proposal because it would create competition for him.

Agence France-Presse

PEKING—The official Chinese press confirmed Saturday for the first time the appointment of new officials to replace the ousted "gang of four" radicals as rulers of Shanghai, China's biggest city.

It also reported that giant demonstrations had been taking place in streets of the city since Friday to mark the new appointments.

There was no indication that the purge of the radicals in Shanghai, which was regarded as their national power base, would extend beyond the changes already made.

Those changes have included the sacking of Mayor Chang Chun-chiao, who was chairman of the city's ruling Revolutionary Committee and first secretary of the municipal party committee, and his replacement in both posts by 67-year-old Su Chen-hua, an alternate member of the party Politburo, who was purged during the Cultural Revolution in the late 1960s but later rehabilitated.

Chang's two deputies in both posts — Yao Wen-yuan and Wang Hung-wen — were also dismissed, completing the purge of the "gang of four." (The fourth member of the "gang," Mao Tse-tung's widow, Chiang Ching, did not hold a city post).

The deputies have been replaced, it was confirmed in the press Saturday, by:

—Ni Chih-fu, 43, a former model worker, inventor of the "Ni Chih-fu tool" and Politburo Alternate member, who becomes first vice chairman of the city's Revolutionary Committee and second secretary of municipal party committee.

—Peng Chung (age unknown), up to now first secretary of Kiang-su province, which surrounds Shanghai. He becomes second vice chairman of the Revolutionary Committee and third secretary of the party committee.

In a dispatch from Shanghai reproduced in Saturday's edition of the official people's daily, the official New China News Agency said the new appointments had been made by "the party Central Committee led by comrade Hua Kuo-feng," who succeeded Mao as party chairman.

Observers noted that the three now seem to be in a good position to become full members of the Politburo, which acts for the Central Committee when the latter is not meeting.

The agency dispatch confirmed that Chang, Yao and Wang (who had also been a vice chairman of the Central Committee) had been dismissed from all their posts in Shanghai "inside and outside the party."

Without giving details, the agency said all three had tried to make Shanghai, their native city, "a base for their usurpation of party and state power and restoration of capitalism."

But, it said, they had lost "all popular support" and were now "extremely isolated."

A comment in the People's Daily said the three armed services in Shanghai, as well as the one-million-strong local militia, had remained "loyal" to the Central Committee and had "firmly stood on the side" of Chairman Hua Kuo-feng.

Describing the demonstrations in the city, which included mass meetings and the sticking up of thousands of big-character wall posters, the New China News Agency mentioned the presence at one of the meetings of the Shanghai garrison commander, Gen. Chou Chun-lin, who is also a secretary of the municipal party committee.

Escalating malpractice insurance 'hurting' patients, not physicians

By ED TODD

The escalating cost of medical malpractice insurance is more burdensome to patients than it is to the physicians who must directly pay those costly premiums, Dr. L. S. Thompson Jr. of Dallas, president of the Texas Medical Association (TMA), said here Saturday.

"This malpractice thing is not hurting me (and other doctors)," he said. "It's hurting our patients . . . (who) are having to pay the increased costs.

Approximately 60 West Texas physicians and medical assistants and aides attended the seminar, jointly sponsored by the TMA and the American Association of Medical Assistants, Inc., of Texas.

He explained that patients, through doctors' and hospitals' fees and charges, are bearing the increasing insurance costs.

Doctors' insurance rates are on the increase, he said, due to the plethora of medical malpractice suits.

Dr. L. S. Thompson

As a result of the suits and subsequent court judgments, he said, physicians are forced to cut back in services.

But, at the same time, medical costs go up because physicians order more expensive tests and X-rays than before — and more than are actually needed, Dr. Thompson continued.

"We practice defensive medicine," he noted.

To attack the plight of the malpractice suit, Dr. Thompson said, the physicians, the TMA and other groups are putting pressure on the Texas Legislature to pass laws to tame suits and claims and the amounts awarded to suing patients.

The TMA proposes legislation to define the areas of medical liability and to limit the amount of damages that could be awarded.

Dr. Thompson, noting that the Texas Legislature is largely made up of lawyers, said that the legislators are "reasonable," nevertheless.

"We're not worried about the lawyers," he said. "It's my patients that I'm concerned with."

And Dr. Thompson reasons that corrective statutes could benefit not only patients and those in the medical profession but those in others professions as well.

"The public, they are suit conscious now," the TMA president said. And that consciousness is causing lawyers, architects and engineers to get on the defensive side of money-seeking law suit.

Because of that, he implied, interest in pressuring the Texas Legislature to write statutes governing malpractice and related suits may be on the increase.

As high as malpractice insurance rates are, Dr. Thompson said, the costs of a physician's overhead are sky high, too.

"We make a helluva lot of money," he stated. He said a doctor may gross $100,000 a year but may actually net about $35,000.

"People always say those 'rich doctors,'" Dr. Thompson said. "We make a lot of money, but we don't take home much."

Ford camp has victor's confidence referred to a statewide survey, the Mervin Field poll, and said he is more optimistic than ever about the outcome.

"Frankly, Jimmy Carter and Walter Mondale scare nearly everybody who looks closely at their records and their proposals and who is concerned about peace in the world and jobs here at home," Dole told a businessman's breakfast.

Dole also referred to the Ford camp's own surveys that project 293 electoral votes for the Republican ticket. He gave no specifics about the surveys.

"The polls are going our way and things are looking up," he said.

Mondale went from Illinois to Ohio, worth 25 votes.

In Aurora, Ill., he called the Republican ticket among the most conservative in history, declared Ford has consistently opposed any improvement in federal health care programs and said that "even Richard Nixon would occasionally rise above (Republican) principle."

Mondale also continued to hammer at Ford's record on Watergate, a theme designed to puncture the President's appeal as the candidate most worthy of public trust and confidence.

"If he had his way," Mondale said in suburban Chicago, "Richard M. Nixon would still be President." He referred to Ford's role as House Republican leader in blocking an early committee inquiry into part of the Watergate scandal. Ford has said he did not act at Nixon's behest.

Both Ford and Carter will make election eve television appeals for those voters who still haven't decided which levers to pull or which ballots to mark.

In Montgomery, Ala., Lester Maddox predicted Ford will win Tuesday, but that neither Ford nor Carter can "adequately represent the country." Maddox, lieutenant governor of Georgia while Carter was governor, is one of the many other candidates for president.

Supporters of another, Eugene McCarthy, picketed Carter-Mondale headquarters in Washington on Saturday. The former Minnesota senator a prominent Democratic candidate in 1968, was ruled off the New York ballot Friday when the Supreme Court turned down his appeal of a state court ruling.

One of the picketers said Carter supported efforts to keep McCarthy's name off the ballot, and that the demonstration was in protest.

Backpacker found safe

GUADALUPE MOUNTAINS NATIONAL PARK, Tex. — A backpacker missing in the rugged, snow-covered high country of this West Texas national park since Thursday was found in good condition Saturday.

More than 40 ground and air searchers from two states had been combing the wilderness for Tommy Motl, 26, of Fort Worth, a National Park Service spokesman said.

A winter storm left snowdrifts of more than of two feet in the area Wednesday and Thursday, and the spokesman said Motl apparently got lost Thursday, although he wasn't due back until Friday.

Junior ghosts, goblins enjoyed dry weather

Trick-or-treatin' tykes lucked into the week's warmest, driest weather Saturday night as some made their rounds in temperatures that ranged in the 50s through most of the evening.

And the youngsters who opted for this evening goodie-gathering likely will have good luck, too, with the forecaster predicting more of the same.

High mercury mark during the day Saturday was 73, and most area communities reported similarly pleasant temperatures. A spokesman at Crane described the day as "so pretty it was like summer." Warm weather also was reported in Odessa, Andrews, Stanton and Big Lake.

The evening hours in all locations were termed "kinda cool," but only Big Lake trick-or-treaters were faced with windy conditions.

Forecasters for the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Air Terminal project continued fair weather today and tonight, turning partly cloudy Monday. The mercury is expected to peak near 70 both days, dropping to near 40 tonight. Saturday's low, in the early hours of the morning, was 42.

Texas dried out Saturday as the cold and rain gave way to bright sunshine and warmer temperatures, the Associated Press reported.

A few clouds were reluctantly departing northeastern sections. Most readings were in the 60s and 70s by late afternoon.

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Gerald R. Ford has battled his way back in the 1976 presidential campaign to the point that he stands an almost-even chance of denying Jimmy Carter his long-anticipated victory, a final state-by-state roundup by The Washington Post indicates.

The survey indicates Carter is favored to carry 18 states and the District of Columbia with 214 electoral votes, while Ford is favored in 24 states with 197 votes.

Eight other states with 127 electoral votes are so close that neither man can claim an edge. Victory requires 270 electoral college votes.

Final newspapers polls, published Sunday indicate the rivals are less than 2 points apart in such key states as Illinois, Iowa and Michigan — with independent candidate Eugene J. McCarthy who is on the ballot in 30 states, holding enough votes to tip the balance. Private soundings say the race will be equally close in Pennsylvania and Texas. Those states, plus Mississippi, South Carolina and South Dakota, which are also listed as tossups in this survey, could hand the election to either man.

Reports from political correspondents in all 50 states, plus checks with Republican and Democratic officials and the Ford and Carter staffs, pointed to a slow erosion of support from Carter in the campaign's closing days in most — but not all — the closely contested states.

In Michigan and Ohio, Carter's support has firmed in the last few days. Ford is no longer certain of carrying his home state of Michigan and Ohio — which has gone Democratic only once in the last six elections — has a slight tilt in Carter's direction.

Blame DST on the War

WASHINGTON (AP) — Thanks to an Englishman who died in 1915 thousands of Americans are heading for church or tuning in football games an hour too early Sunday.

But others will have enjoyed an extra hour of sleep because of William Willett.

The reason for all this is the end of Daylight Saving Time at 2 a.m. today. This is when clocks in most of the country were to be set back one hour.

The change compensates for setting clocks an hour ahead in the spring, an idea first suggested by Benjamin Franklin to save candles. Willett campaigned for the plan, which first went into use during World War I providing extra light in the summer evenings, and saving energy.

Romania accepts werewolves, vampires

CLAREMONT, Calif. (AP) — The residents of Transylvania believe that werewolves and vampires prowl the earth but the creatures of their legends aren't the same as the Hollywood version.

Transylvanians don't regard the stories of human wolves with particular horror, either, but just accept them as a fact of life, says Dr. Harry Teacher at Pitzer College, who sampled folklore in Romania recently on a Fulbright fellowship.

"They're very matter-of-fact. It's just that these things can happen and you've got to be careful," says Senn.

He says Romanians — Transylvania is now part of that Eastern European country — consider werewolves and vampires as a part of nature and a product of the struggle between God and the devil in creating the earth.

But they don't set much store in the Hollywood depiction of those creatures as murderous ghouls or bloodsucking, sexual marauders.

"I think the Romanians would consider that rather immature," says Senn.

Werewolves are occasionally seen as agents of God sent to punish cattle farmers by eating their herds.

Senn says he talked to four older persons who told him people they knew had been compelled by the call of wolves to run into the forest, strip and turn into wolves before the very eyes of their loved ones.

Unlike the American portrayal of the man who turns hairy and demonic under a full moon, the werewolf in Romanian legend doesn't change under lunar influence, Senn says. Rather it as an accident of birth that makes one a werewolf.

Becoming a vampire, on the other hand, has to do with an accident of death.

Some of the Romanians Senn talked to believe in vampires, which they call strigoi — dead human beings whose spirits aren't at rest because of improper burial rites.

Sen. Hubert Humphrey

Happy Hubert exits hospital

NEW YORK (AP) — Smiling and shaking hands down the line, Sen. Hubert Humphrey left Memorial Sloan Kettering Hospital on Saturday "feeling wonderful" and anxious to get back on the job.

The Minnesota Democrat told reporters crowded into the lobby of the hospital, "The doctors say I'm in good shape, and they say that I'm in better shape than I ought to be."

Humphrey said he would rest for a few days but then he anticipated "campaigning, walking, swimming," adding with a chuckle, "and God only knows I'll be out talking."

The senator plans to use his time, "preparing for the Senate — that is if the votes are right on Tuesday."

Humphrey, who is favored to win his bid for reelection although he hasn't been able to campaign because of his hospitalization, said he is sure he can serve another six year term.

He also said he still plans to seek the post of Senate majority leader.

The former vice president underwent a six hour operation on Oct. 7, for removal of a cancerous bladder, regional lymph nodes and much of the uretha.

The senator said he had recieved dozens of telephone calls from people — "very important people, some from the theater, some from business — who've had similar operations and they said to me, 'come join the club.'"

A hospital spokesman said that Humphrey will continue chemotherapy treatment at a local hospital in Washington.

Humphrey said Friday that he underwent his first drug treatment session Wednesday and commented, "To put it bluntly, it's no fun."

Dr. Willit Whitmore, the surgeon who operated on the senator, was quoted by the spokesman as saying that Humphrey had made such "exceptional progress that the prognosis was very good."

Before leaving the lobby, Humphrey managed to get in a little campaigning. He repeated several times that Jimmy Carter wasn't about to "blow the lead" and he was emphatic in his prediction Carter would be the next president, "whether he wins by 6 per cent, 5 per cent or even 1 per cent. I'll tell Mr. Carter that from my experience all you need to win is one vote more than your opponent recieves."

The crowd in the lobby followed the senator on to the sidewalk where other people waited. The senator shook hands with as many people as he could reach, kissed his nurse, Scottie, and entered the limousine for the airport.

Council director wins appointment

Cope Routh, executive director of the Odessa Council on Alcoholism the past four years, has been appointed Area III coordinator for the Texas Commission on Alcoholism.

The appointment was announced by Clinton Kersey, executive director of the TCA, which is the designated state alcoholism authority.

In his new position, Routh will coordinate alcoholism programs throughout the West Texas area.

Kersey also announced the Area III headquarters, now located in El Paso, will be moved to Odessa, to serve the 51-county area, including the cities of Midland, San Angelo and Abilene.

"We feel the moving of the office from El Paso to the Midland-Odessa area will permit us to serve more efficiently the counties in which we are involved in alcoholism programs," Kersey said. Kersey took over his TCA post Sept. 1, succeeding Ken Behan, who now serves as the commission's director of field services.

Routh took over the Odessa Council post Dec. 1, 1972. He will continue to maintain an office in the Headlee Building in Odessa until permanent office facilities for the TCA Area III office can be established.

A successor to Routh's Odessa Council post is expected to be announced soon, council president Bill Masterson said.

Routh is a recovered alcoholic who worked 35 years in the newspaper business. He served 17 years as a staff member of The Midland Reporter-Telegram and five years with the Odessa American before entering the alcoholism field.

In order to assume his new post, Routh also resigned his position as trustee and board secretary of the Permian Basin Centers for Mental Health and Mental Retardation and his membership on the Regional Alcoholism Advisory Committee and the Regional Human Resources Advisory Committee.

Routh is a native of Dallas. He attended public schools in Dallas and in Oklahoma City, and attended Oklahoma Baptist University. He is a member of the First Presbyterian Church in Odessa and resides with a son, Mike Routh, in Odessa.

Texas couples work to save turtle species

By NICHOLAS C. CHRISS
The Los Angeles Times

SOUTH PADRE ISLAND, Tex. — Not long ago, in broad daylight, a big, blue-green sea turtle moved cautiously out of the Gulf of Mexico's warm waters, her reptilian eyes darting up and down the shoreline. Cautiously, she lumbered up onto the beach.

In a few hours she had found a safe place to lay her eggs in the fine white sand. She carefully buried the eggs, made a decoy nest to throw off predators, and unseen, slipped quietly back into the sea.

"Everybody ought to see a turtle nesting," wrote Dr. Archie Carr, a sea-turtle expert, in his book "So Excellent a Fishe."

"It is an impressive thing to see, the pilgrimage of a sea creature back to the land...The nesting rites begin when the turtle strands in the surf. That part is hard to watch, those minutes when she comes up with the breakers and stays there for a while, rising with a wave and then bumping back softly on the sand, making up her mind.

"She is clearly making a decision. The turtle is wild and skittish when first coming ashore."

THE WILD AND SKITTISH turtle — a species named Ridley — that came to this island arrived in August. She had been gone 10 years, perhaps more. Now, with unerring accuracy, she had arrived back from no one knows where, to lay her first batch of eggs. She had departed from this exact site as a baby turtle, the size of a silver dollar, weighing about half an ounce.

Now she weighed almost 100 pounds. Her sensitive shell was 26 inches across.

Where had she spent all those years? How many thousands of miles had she swum? How had she survived? How did she know where to return? No one knows. Perhaps no one ever will.

Of the five species of sea turtles, none poses more of a riddle than the Ridley.

The Ridley is the only sea turtle that lays its eggs in daylight, and the only one that once came ashore at its Mexican nesting place by the thousands in a single day. As many as 40,000 would flip about in the sand, lay their eggs and depart.

THE RIDDLE OF THE RIDLEY is one reason Dearl Adams, a contractor from nearby Brownsville, became involved with the sea turtles in 1963 — that and his belief that the Ridleys were vanishing and should be saved. No one else seemed to care much at the time. Since then, although Adams and his friends may not have succeeded in saving the Ridley, they have at least shed some light on its plight.

Starting in 1963, Adams, his wife Ethel, Ila Loetscher and Earl and Olive Irene Lippoldt have buried the ridley eggs, protected them, watched them hatch at 3 a.m., seen them go to sea and then waited, waited, waited for their return.

The experts estimate that there are only 10,000 Ridleys left in the world. Their only nesting place is 50 miles north of Tampico, on Mexico's eastern shore, at a little place called Barra Calabaza. When Adams saw a film in 1962 of the thousands of Ridleys nesting there, and learned that they were being destroyed for their eggs and hides, he decided to do something about it.

HIS IDEA WAS to import the Ridley eggs to the South Padre Island beach and create a safe rookery in the United States where the ridleys could return to nest, instead of being destroyed at birth by sand crabs, coyotes, egg poachers and leather hunters.

When Adams and his friends began hauling the ridley eggs from Barra Calabaza to South Padre Island, it was a 12-hour drive. They thought they had a protected stretch of remote island beach here. But since then, this once-desolate island has undergone a real estate boom and the strip they expected to be a sanctuary under the Federal Wildlife Act failed to gain that protection.

So it has not been easy. There are other predators now: curious tourists, careless beach drivers, toxics in the water, shrimp boats off the shoreline. A sea turtle caught in a shrimper's net can easily drown.

Since they began in 1963, Adams and his friends have buried 5,000 Ridley eggs from Mexico on the South Padre Island shore. About 1,250 of them have hatched, but, so far as they know, only three turtles have returned — the one last August, another earlier in June and the first, named Alpha, in the summer of 1974.

There may have been other Ridleys that returned, laid their eggs and gone back to sea. No one knows.

EACH YEAR, ADAMS and his companions buried the Ridley eggs and each year they waited from April 25 to Sept. 1, the nesting time, for the female turtles to return.

Until Alpha arrived, they were frustrating years. It was not easy patrolling a 30-mile stretch of beach, staying up nights making certain that the eggs would hatch and the baby turtles would get out to sea safely, and then driving another 30 miles to work in the morning.

No one has the slightest idea of what becomes of the Ridleys at sea. They have been spotted as far away as south Africa and Ireland, as well as apparently migrating off Key West, Fla. Some are obviously captured and killed for their hides and eggs. In 1972, Adams said, 40,000 pounds of turtle hides came into the United States from Mexico, destined to be made into shoes in Japan.

"It's a wonder any Ridleys are left at all," Adams sighed.

He still recalls his despair when he first went to Mexico to see the Ridley nesting site, and spotted truckloads of Ridley eggs being sent to the cities for sale.

"Boats would lay offshore and scoop up thousands of live turtles and cut them open just for the eggs," he said.

WHEN A RIDLEY MALE impregnates a female — (no one knows exactly when this happens — another Ridley riddle), she can have up to three batches of eggs over a period of time. The eggs are thus popular in Mexico because they are believed to contain aphrodiasiacs.

Curiously, the female Ridley, once ashore and laying her eggs, is oblivious to any disturbances around her.

The eggs hatch about 50 days after they are laid, and the young turtles begin emerging around 3 a.m. to make the 20-minute journey into the water.

They have a sure instinct to make a beeline for the sea as soon as they are born, Adams said. Only about 15 per cent of them normally survive the trip, and the mortality rate from predators is even higher once they are in the water.

The greatest difficulty in studying the Ridleys is that they are rarely seen. No one knows the origin of their name. They were once even believed to be hybrids.

Briscoe appeals to GOP

DALLAS (AP) — Texas Gov. Dolph Briscoe has called on state Republican leaders to help stop a federal grant which will be used to set up a farm cooperative in the La Razo Unita party stronghold around Crystal City.

Briscoe said Friday as far as he is concerned "the motto of La Raza Unida was 'kill the gringo,' and as far as I know it still is."

"This grant was made over the objections of Democratic leaders in Congress," Briscoe told a Democratic gathering at a downtown Dallas hotel.

Briscoe attacked the Zavala County Economic Development Board, the grant applicants, referring to the area planned for the farm cooperative as "a little Cuba." He termed the $1½ million grant an example of Republican fiscal irresponsibility.

U.S. District Judge Jack Roberts of Austin froze the grant Thursday to give Texas officials time to review it.

Contacted in Crystal City, Zavala County Judge Jose Angel Gutierrez, founder of La Raza Unida party, said the "gringo" reference was taken out of context and was made in a speech by him to a group of students.

"It was made more than eight years ago," he said. "We were not even Raza Unida then. It was called MexicanAmerican Youth Organization (MAYO) and the quote referred to the racist elements in the Texas society that we had to kill socially, politically and economically."

He added, "It was a reference to the racist elements which we defined as gringo."

Briscoe said Gutierrez called the Zavala project "sort of a people commune."

Gutierrez denied that the project was a "people commune" and added that Briscoe's attorneys had stipulated they had no objection to the grant.

Asked if he thought the commune was militarily subversive, Briscoe said, "You should go down there and investigate it." He said some of his staff has observed the project, but that he has sent no law officers to Zavala County to investigate.

Officials of the Zavala project said they would use the grant to buy farm land for a cooperative, set up a savings and loan firm and an import-export business.

Ford sees new price increases

DETROIT (AP) — Ford Motor Co. says higher-than-expected labor costs may force it to raise the price of 1977-model cars beyond the 5.9 per cent average increase already announced.

Ford said Friday the new three-year contract with the United Auto Workers will increase labor costs by 13 per cent in the first year. That means the cost of 1977 cars may be as much as 9 per cent higher than this year's, according to the industry's figures.

Before the month-long strike began Sept. 14, Ford estimated labor costs would be up 9 per cent in the first year.

Based in part on that figure, the industry had announced 1977-model price increases which the federal Council on Wage and Price Stability said in a report this week average 5.9 per cent, or $333 per car.

The 13 per cent increase comes to an additional $1.43 an hour per worker, including wages and fringe benefits, and will add an estimated $486 million to the firm's first-year labor costs — based on a domestic workforce of 170,000 and a 40-hour pay week.

Meanwhile, Ford announced that the strike cut third-quarter profits by at least $141 million, and said it would have a similar effect on the fourth quarter.

LBJ's little brother endorsing President

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sam Houston Johnson, younger brother of the late Democratic President Lyndon B. Johnson, endorsed President Ford on Saturday, calling him more experienced and trustworthy than Democrat Jimmy Carter.

Johnson, 62, told a sparsely attended news conference that he cast an absentee ballot for Ford in Johnson City, Tex., last Tuesday.

"It was the first time in my life I voted for a Republican," said Johnson, who said he came to the Washington area to make a speech at a patriotic church rally Sunday.

Johnson arranged his own news conference through friends, not the President Ford Committee. He said he had informed Republican campaign officials about his decision, but he added, "They didn't pay for me to come up ...I came up here to make a talk at a church."

Johnson, who reportedly aroused his brother's wrath by publishing an anecdote-filled book, "My Brother Lyndon," in 1970, criticized Carter for telling a Playboy interviewer that Lyndon Johnson at times lied to the American people.

But Johnson said he had decided to vote for Ford before learning about Carter's remarks, which the Democratic candidate later apologized for to Lady Bird Johnson, widow of the former president.

"I think President Ford is the best qualified man for the job," said Johnson, once a congressional aide to his brother. "I don't think Carter has the experience and knowledge to be elected."

Charge disputed in attorney race

Democrat Trey Lohmann, 32, is challenging Martin, 45, for the district attorney's job held for the past 11 years by Jim Mashburn.

"The smear tactic by (Lohmann) . . . is not only insincere but is an attack on the very foundations of our system of justice," Martin said Saturday in a prepared statement.

The "smear," Martin said, came in Saturday's Reporter-Telegram in which an ad placed by Lohmann said Martin "makes his living by defending dope pushers and burglars" and that such a livelihood is not a qualification for district attorney.

Martin said that the adversary system of justice in America demands a fair trial — the probing by both the prosecutor and the defender.

"Only a judge and jury have the right to determine the guilt or innocence of an accused," Martin said. "No lawyer would suggest that the law should be disobeyed regardless of whether the lawyer is a prosecutor or a defense attorney.

"A defense attorney defends the rights that are guaranteed to every citizen and insures that if the accused is found guilty his punishment will be imposed with the dignity, rights and common sense guaranteed to every person."

Efforts Saturday night to reach Lohman for comment or retort were unsuccessful.

Martin also said that last year Lohmann "requested that his name be placed on a list of only 13 lawyers in Midland County who actively seek to be appointed by the courts to defend people accused of crimes. His name is still on the list."

Hobbs man hurt in car accident

A Hobbs, N.M., man was listed in serious condition Saturday and two other men — one from Midland — were in satisfactory condition at Midland Memorial Hospital following a one-car accident late Friday.

Joe A. Speake, 22, was seriously injured when the car he was driving collided with a telephone pole at 1000 North "A" St. near the intersection of Cuthbert Avenue shortly before 11:20 p.m., police said.

Passengers in the car, John M. McDermott, 23, of Hobbs, N.M. and Mitchell C. Turner, 22, of Midland were listed in satisfactory condition late Saturday evening, a hospital spokesman said.

BURGLARY

Two-hundred and fifty dollars were reported stolen from a box in the business office of Midland Mobile Homes, 2200 S. Lamesa Road, police said.

The theft occurred sometime Friday and there were no signs of forced entry, police said.

Three residents tapped to serve Ford campaign

AUSTIN — Three Midlanders last week were named to steering groups on the President Ford Committee (PFC) to bolster the Republican President's campaign against Jimmy Carter, the Democratic party's contender for the nation's highest public office.

W. A. Yeager Sr. of Midland is one of 22 Texans appointed to the Texas Older Americans for President Ford steering committee. His selection was announced by Hines Baker of Houston and Dr. Elizabeth Paterson of Austin, co-chairmen of the 22-member group.

Among the 52 Texans appointed to the Lawyers for Ford steering committee were Midland County Judge Barbara Culver, a Republican, and Midland attorney Tom Sealy, a Democrat.

Their selection was announced by Sam Winters of Austin and J. A. Gooch of Fort Worth, co-chairmen of the group. An Odessan, Tom Rodman, also was named to the committee.

Ex-Democrat and former Texas Gov. John B. Connally is the Texas chairman of the nationwide PFC.

The nation's electorate will go the polls Tuesday to cast ballots in the presidential election.

Can we afford four more years without effective leadership?

There is a critical decision to be made on November 2nd. It goes far beyond the question of which Presidential candidate can govern with integrity and honesty. We must determine which candidate has the ability and strength to lead our country out of economic chaos, and the vision to see that all Americans—not just the powerful and influential—have a better future.

During the past two years, the middle class has paid far too dear a price for a President lacking that ability.

Since Gerald Ford took office, the unemployment rate has risen 50%, from 5.5% or 5 million people, to 7.9% or 7-1/2 million jobless Americans.

Today's inflation rate of 6% is higher than it was at any time between the Korean War and the inauguration of Richard Nixon.

The 1968 food dollar is now worth 57¢.

Mr. Ford's budget will account for the largest single deficit and more than 1/3 of the public debt incurred during our entire 200-year history.

Real GNP has actually declined during each of Gerald Ford's two years in office.

And who is most affected by these distressing statistics? Not the Washington establishment, or the economic elite courted by the Republicans. The burden falls on the person who can least afford it: the average American.

Jimmy Carter means to change all that. As President, he will make government responsive to your needs.

Tax Reform: "The average family in this country that makes less than $10,000 a year actually pays a higher proportion of their income in taxes than the average family that makes more than a million dollars a year. That's disgraceful. We need to move toward a truly progressive and simplified tax system, with reduced tax rates for the average American."

Economy: "We'll never have a balanced budget nor an end to the inflationary problems as long as we have 7-1/2 million people out of work. Employment needs to be the major thrust of the whole domestic policy of our government."

Efficiency in Government: "We now have in the federal government the most bloated, confused, wasteful bureaucracy ever created. There's no way to get an answer out of Washington and no way to understand what's going on there. We need to reorganize completely the executive branch of government, making it fair, efficient, effective, and responsive to our people's needs."

Housing: "No government that cared about our neighborhoods would stack the tax deck against them. A landlord can let a building run down and make a good living on tax breaks. But when a home owner spends a little hard-earned money fixing up his home, the assessor raises his taxes. And the FHA no longer cares about families getting started in their own homes. I intend to restore the FHA to the time when, for a down payment, a family could get a mortgage which the government would insure."

Health Care: "We need a nationwide health care delivery system which will make adequate health care a right for all people."

Jimmy Carter has the strength to take charge of our government. If you are tired of paying the high price of Republican ineffectiveness, you have only one choice on November 2nd, and that choice is for change.

Vote for JIMMY CARTER.
A leader, for a change.

Candidates, donors avoiding bad funding publicity

By WALTER PINCUS
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Congressional candidates and campaign donors are maneuvering over last-minute funds in an effort to avoid embarrassing publicity but still comply with new strict federal election laws.

Some controversial union and corporate political action committees withheld making contributions until earlier this month so that their reports to the Federal Election Commission could not be publicized much before the Nov. 2 election. For example:

—Chrysler's nonpartisan campaign committee disbursed $65,825 between Oct. 1 and Oct. 18. Prior to that it had given $3,000.

—United Technologies' political action fund gave $64,000 the first two weeks of October, including donations of $500 to $1,000 to members of the House Armed Service Committee and Defense Appropriations Subcommittee. The company is a major defense contractor. Also, $10,000 went to the Salute to President Ford dinner run by the Republican National Committee.

—The campaign committees of three liberal House members — Rep. Frederick Richmond (D-N.Y.), Rep. Anthony Moffett (D-Conn.) and Rep. Christopher Dodd (D-Conn.) — all reported receipt this week of donations from the Marine Engineers Beneficial Association. Richmond got $4,000; Moffett, $4,500, and Dodd $5,000. As required by law, the three sent telegrams reporting the donations to the Federal Election Commission. But their reports were among 200 sent the FEC in the past two days.

—The donating arm of the National Association of Realtors distributed $20,000 early this week to eight congressional candidates of both parties.

—The father of Sen. Bill Brock (R-Tenn.) gave $2,000 recently to a committee called the Tennessee Federal Election Account. By law, the senior Brock can donate only $1,000 to his son's campaign but is permitted to give up to $5,000 to the "election account" group because it is a multi-candidate committee. Its largest donations recently have gone to the Brock campaign.

Among other contributors this week to the "election account" are Sen. Brock's uncle and several other donors who already had made the allowable $1,000 direct contribution to the senator's tight re-election effort.

—The campaign committee of Robert K. Dornan, Republican House candidate in California's 27th district, reported to the FEC Thursday it had just received $30,000 from several donors.

—On Tuesday and Wednesday, the campaign committee of Rep. H. John Heinz III (R-Pa.), a Senate candidate, reported it received loans of $50,000 from a Philadelphia bank. Heinz was reported a guarantor of the loans, which raised to $2.2 million the amount he had put into his campaign as of Wednesday.

—The National Committee for an Effective Congress, like other multi-candidate committees, is limited by law to donations of $5,000 to a single candidate in an election. On Oct. 8, the liberal NCEC gave $10,000 to the Michigan Senate campaign of Democrat Donald Riegle. One $5,000 donation, however, was listed as being for Riegle's debt from the primary.

Party professionals, working for Democrats and Republicans, say the quiet handling of last-minute money is an old ritual designed primarily to prevent trouble for the candidates in the closing days of the campaign.

"We were busy last week," one Democratic official says, "helping campaign managers find money."

Said another House Democratic aide, "The party was out of money but we sent them to some unions that still had some."

One trade association with money that normally helps Republicans asked the Democrats for a list of 20 to 30 candidates who needed money, one Democratic aide reported.

"I don't know if they gave to anyone," the aide added.

On the GOP side, the Republican National Committee still had more than $500,000 from its Salute to the President dinner, which an aide said would be available to candidates.

Some GOP candidates looking for cash are being sent to the American Medical Association's political action committee, which still has funds.

The Auto and Truck Dealers political action fund, which distributed $233,310 to candidates in the first 18 days of October, was still giving at the beginning of this week. It gave $1,500 on Monday to Republican William Schluter who is challenging Rep. Helen Mayner (D-N.J.). The auto group still had more than $150,000 on hand last week, according to FEC reports.

ON NOVEMBER 2nd!

"The Texas Water Development Fund has helped approximately 30% of the citizens of Texas with loans to develop, improve and increase their water resources in the past 10 years at a cost to each Texan of about 25¢ a year." This statement was made by Bill Clayton, Speaker of the Texas House of Representatives, in support of Constitutional Amendment #1 on the November 2nd general election ballot, which would authorize the issuance of $400 million in bonds by the Texas Water Development Board, subject to legislative approval.

Here's What Other State Leaders Say:

I view the passage of Constitutional Amendment No. 1 to be of vital importance to the people of Texas. Approval of this amendment will help assure Texans in every part of the state sufficient water of good quality to meet their needs.

Gov. Dolph Briscoe

Unless voters approve the Water Development Funding Amendment at the Nov. 2nd general election, scores of Texas cities could find themselves forced to the brink of financial insolvency trying to comply with the new federal standards on drinking water. Passage of the national act means that we will be in desperate need of the additional funds provided under proposition 1 on the Nov. 2 ballot.

Mayor Lila Cockrell, San Antonio
President, Texas Municipal League

In no instance will any water project be implemented without the approval and participation of the local people affected by a proposed project.

Rep. Poage's address ends midyear meeting

BROWNWOOD — The West Texas Chamber of Commerce concluded its midyear meeting here Friday afternoon after hearing an address by Rep. Robert Poage of Waco.

The 40-year veteran of Congress lauded the rapid growth and development of West Texas, recalling that when he first went to Congress in the 1930s, West Texas was little more than "a rash collection of mesquite, prickly pears and sandstorms." He said the region's orderly utilization of its vast natural resources has made solid the region's economy.

The importance of importing water to West Texas was discussed by the speaker, who also touched on matters pertaining to energy and agriculture.

The WTCC directors, at their Friday morning business meeting, heard activities reports submitted by chairmen of standing committees. Larry Byrd of Midland reported for the Mineral Resources Committee, which he heads.

Two Midlanders were elected to fill vacancies on WTCC's board of directors. They are Spencer Blocker, president of Midland Savings Association, and Joe A. Kloesel, president of Drilco Industrial Division of Smith International, Inc.

L. D. Jones Sr., of Seymour was named a lifetime director of the organization.

President W. H. "Bill" Collyns of Midland presided at the business sessions of the conference, which opened Thursday afternoon. He also received a large, framed scroll awarded for "outstanding service and leadership" and listing the members of the "1976 Bill Collyns Century Club."

Cultural Achievement awards were presented Thursday night to Mrs. O. C. Armstrong of Fort Worth, Jim Prather of Post and Robert Summers of Glen Rose. The presentations were made by Joe Collyns of San Angelo, chairman of the WTCC Cultural Affairs Committee.

A "Quota Busters" breakfast was held Friday.

Midlanders attending the Brownwood meeting included Mr. and Mrs. Collins, Mr.and Mrs. Byrd, Mr. and Mrs. Emil C. Rassman, Mr.and Mrs. Harry Clark, Col. and Mrs. Doug Sutterlin, Mr.and Mrs. L. Roy Prescott and C. Winston Barclay.

TREY LOHMANN
For District Attorney

I believe that the best deterrent to crime is the certainty of swift and firm punishment for persons who violate the law. I have extensive experience in the trial of all types of cases in the state and federal courts. However, I have not made my living defending criminals in Midland County during the past eight years. A high percentage of criminals are repeaters. As your District Attorney, I will have no conflicts of interest with respect to any person who ought to be prosecuted. I earnestly solicit your vote for District Attorney. Please be assured that I will be an effective prosecutor and an efficient administrator. Thank you.

New breed of television dramas proving popular

By MIKE GOODKIND

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Social problems and how to deal with them are increasingly the subject matter of prime time television.

Alcoholism, prostitution, unwed motherhood, homosexuality, even gun control are some of the themes of this season's TV shows.

—On Monday night, in "Dawn: Portrait of a Teen-age Runaway," a 15-year-old girl turns to prostitution after running away from her alcoholic mother. The young heroine of this NBC made-for-TV movie returns home after her mother joins Alcoholics Anonymous. Her boyfriend, a male prostitute, gets a stockroom job and there is help for the pair from a sympathetic probation officer.

—On Tuesday night, the 19-year-old son in ABC's "The Family" learns that a friend since childhood is a homosexual. Should he accept him or spurn him?

—On Wednesday, in the premiere of CBS's situation comedy "Alice," a mother debates whether to let her 12-year-old son go on a fishing trip with her boss's friend, an admitted homosexual. The mother staunchly defends her right to decide what is best for her son, and agrees to let the lad take the trip after the homosexual professes shock that she could believe he would harm the boy.

"Obviously television has changed over the past several years," says Dick Kirschner, vice president of program practices at CBS. "I guess people are more aware of the general sociological problems going on and can more easily identify with them."

The social problems are of interest to young people because that is the audience at which many network TV commercials are directed. Some of the programs have done well in the ratings. "Dawn," for example, won nearly 50 per cent of the audience during its time slot.

There has been another type of success as well: young people apparently have been helped.

Doug Cramer, producer of "Dawn," said that about 100 high schools called his office asking for copies of the film to show to students. In some cities, he said, phone numbers were flashed on the screen after the program so that runaways could call for help.

"I don't think we ever start out in entertainment programming with the idea of doing something polemic," says John J. McMahon, NBC's West Coast programming vice president. "But there seems to be an appetite among the TV audience for social themes."

Alternatives and not answers usually are stressed. In "I Want to Keep My Baby," a made-for-TV movie scheduled for viewing soon, "the basic question of whether a teen-age unwed mother should try to raise the baby or give it up for adoption is explored," says Mike Marden, director of television movies for CBS. "We don't answer the question, but we do let people know that at least two choices are available if they fall into such a predicament."

Many industry folks, including Johnson, credit Norman Lear and his pioneer "All in the Family" with breaking the ice for pointed social portrayals. The theme worked for Lear via Archie Bunker, the bigoted Everyman, and the format has expanded and become more explicit ever since.

"I don't think we could have done 'Dawn' any earlier than this year," says Cramer. "We probably had the first television scene ever shot showing two minors in bed together."

Such explicitness, handled through a series of still photographs, depicted the two teenage prostitutes' realization that sex can also mean love.

Cramer vigorously objects to contentions that the popular appeal of programs like Dawn is titillation. "But there is always that small minority," he says.

Dramatic shows with social themes are still only a small percentage of TV fare. But Dr. Bill Rader, a Los Angeles psychiatrist who recently participated in a Merv Griffin discussion of transsexuals, believes that serious shows will win the ratings every time, if they're handled with interest.

"People aren't stupid," says Rader, who sometimes serves as a TV technical advisor. "They want to know about things that affect them."

UMTA spending fast

By JAY PERKINS

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Urban Mass Transportation Administration in two years has committed more than three-fourths of the money it was given to fund mass-transit construction projects through 1980.

However, the rapid spending does not mean the agency is in immediate danger of running out of construction money, although UMTA and the Ford administration say new funding will be needed sooner than expected.

The agency actually has more available funds than its checkbook indicates because many of the commitments are in principle only. This means the funds have been promised to a project only if all details can be worked out but the money has not been actually obligated. In fact, less than half of the $5.5 billion committed has been obligated.

Another reason is that much of the funds will go to longrange projects and thus payments will be parceled out over several years' time. By the time those bills come due, Congress will have provided additional funding if everything goes according to the agency's plan.

Too, UMTA still has more than $3 billion in a separate fund which was set up to subsidize mass-transit operating losses. This money could be diverted into capital grants for construction if needed.

The question of UMTA's spending came to light in a speech by its administrator, Robert Patricelli, and because several large grants were announced in the past few weeks.

Those grants have caused some to question whether the Ford administration might be trying to buy good will in the Nov. 2 election. Much of the latest funds have gone to Northeastern cities where political observers believe President Ford could use help.

For example, UMTA last week agreed to commit $600 million to Detroit, a Democratic stronghold in the President's home state. Thursday, UMTA agreed to give New York City $89 million. It also has awarded in recent months $269 million to Buffalo, $400 million to New Jersey, and a combined total of $340 million to New York, Baltimore, Boston, Detroit, San Francisco, Seattle and the District of Columbia.

Transportation Secretary William T. Coleman Jr. and UMTA Administrator Patricelli note the grants were applied for months ago and say the timing is coincidental.

Patricelli also has raised questions about UMTA's spending rate. He told an audience of transit officials in San Francisco two weeks ago that UMTA had committed all but $2.3 billion of the $7.1 billion given it by Congress two years ago to help cities rebuild old commuter rail systems, build new ones and to purchase new buses and upgrade existing bus services.

Since that speech, UMTA has committed another $689 million.

The administration acknowledges the spending level has resulted in a need for more money and Coleman has promised to ask Congress next year for new funds for use after Sept. 30, 1978.

This would allow UMTA to spread its remaining money over three years instead of four and would assure that the funds to pay for some of the longterm projects would be available when needed.

Candidates for sheriff continue verbal warfare

Darnell, a Democrat, blasted Smith's charges of "character assassination," saying his use in a paid advertisement of excerpts from court testimony by Smith was accurate and fair.

"These were Mr. Smith's own words, given under oath, as evidence of his widespread reputation for using unnecessary and excessive force in arresting people, even for simple traffic violations," Darnell said in a prepared statement.

Smith said Friday that portions of his testimony quoted in the ad for Darnell were taken out of context as part of an effort to discredit him.

"If my opponent is discredited by his own words, he can blame no one but himself," Darnell said. "Those words, and the actions shown, describe in graphic terms his violent temper and disregard for the rights of citizens."

The veteran sheriff fended assertions by Smith that the sheriff's office had had in recent years an excessively high turnover of deputies.

"My opponent included deputies who died, who had retired and who never went to work, as well as clerical, janitorial and trainee personnel," Darnell said. He accused Smith of "distortions and misrepresentations."

Specifically, Darnell said, among 26 former deputies cited by Smith, "five were Midland College trainees working only a very short time under our cooperative internship agreement with the college, six were janitors and cooks...

"Five of those listed during the past year never went to work because they could not find a place to live in Midland which they could afford on a deputy's salary. Of the 10 who resigned, two left because of illness, three became chiefs of police in other cities, three became chief deputy or deputy in other offices at higher pay and two went to the Midland Police Department for more money and additional benefits which our commissioners court does not allow us to pay."

Smith, a former Texas highway patrolman, said Darnell "has offered a variety of explanations of the turnover problem. But any businessman who has that kind of turnover would recognize, irregardless of the reasons, that something was wrong with his hiring practices."

Smith attacked his opponent's assertions that he first learned two weeks ago of the case from which the publicized excerpts of testimony were gleaned.

"When I requested a copy of the transcript last Thursday, the court reporter advised me that over 60 days ago my opponent inquired about the availability of said transcript—yet he waited, obviously to prevent the voter from having access to the complete transcript."

Smith said copies of the transcript are available for inspection at his campaign headquarters.

"My opponent's approach is demeaning to the office he so desperately wants to keep," Smith continued, also in a prepared release. "It is the kind of hysterical mud-slinging that brings such a bad name to politics.

"The campaign tactics of the opponent in the last few days say more than I could ever have said... The people... will judge for themselves as to who has represented the facts correctly, and really demonstrated the best qualifications to be sheriff," Smith concluded.

Little Amy steals limelight in Houston

HOUSTON (AP) — Mrs. Jimmy Carter, arriving just two hours after the departure of President Ford, said Saturday that two national independent polls to be released within the next two days will show her husband at least five percentage points ahead in the presidential race.

At an airport news conference, Mrs. Carter said she was not at liberty to name the pollsters but "you will be surprised to see the margin Jimmy has and we are completely confident of his victory."

Mrs. Carter later appeared at a Halloween carnival in a Houston elementary school and then flipped the coin for the opening of the game at the Astrodome between Grambling and Texas Southern University, two predominately black schools.

It was 8-year-old Amy Carter, who stole the show when she met her mother at the airport and joined her on the brief campaign swing through the state's largest city.

The children, many of them in Halloween costumes, cheered Amy when she appeared on the stage of the school auditorium with her mother. The youngsters had presented her (Amy) with a handmade vanity.

After the introduction of Mrs. Carter, Amy tugged at her mother's sleeve and said, "Remember, just talk two minutes."

The Carter's youngest child was the center of attention and at one point she stifled a yawn and appeared bored by the hullabaloo.

But, she was just another little girl on the slides and swinging bars.

Mrs. Carter said President Ford in the past few weeks has made "some unbelievable distortions of Jimmy's positions on many issues."

Texas, with 26 electoral votes, is considered too close to call and could be pivotal in Tuesday's general election. President Ford spent two days this week in the Houston area, where one-sixth of the state's votes are located.

Election to make little change in Senate balance

By JOHN CHADWICK

WASHINGTON (AP) — Continued Democratic control of the Senate in the next Congress seems assured despite the 33 seats at stake in Tuesday's election.

Republican strategists conceded this, saying they will do well if they make a net pickup of two seats. They would need a gain of 13 to wrest control from the Democrats.

Democratic campaign aides, while expecting to lose three or more seats they now hold, say that overall they have a good chance of increasing their majority in the Senate by two or three.

In the outgoing 94th Congress, the party lineup in the Senate is 62 Democrats and 38 Republicans, counting Independent Harry F. Byrd Jr. of Virginia with the Democrats and Conservative-Republican James L. Buckley of New York in the GOP column.

Of the 33 seats on the line, 22 are held by Democrats and 11 by Republicans. But at least half of the Democratic candidates are regarded as easy winners.

These include such wellknown senators as Hubert H. Humphrey of Minnesota, Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts, Henry M. Jackson of Washington, Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia, John C. Stennis of Mississippi and Harrison A. Williams Jr. of New Jersey.

In contrast, only two of the Republican senators up for re-election, Lowell P. Weicker Jr. of Connecticut and William V. Roth Jr. of Delaware, fall in the easy-victory category.

Some of the chief battlegrounds, and likely to account for a large part of the turnovers, are states in which incumbent senators are retiring.

Take Missouri State Atty. Gen. John Danforth. The Republican candidate is regarded as a sure winner over his Democratic opponent, former Gov. Warren Hearnes, for the seat being given up by Democrat Stuart Symington.

And retiring Sen. John O. Pastore, D-R.I., is expected to be replaced by Republican John H. Chafee, a former three-term governor and secretary of the Navy under President Richard M. Nixon.

Chaffee's Democratic opponent, wealthy automobile dealer Richard P. Lorber, won a surprise primary victory over Gov. Philip W. Noel, but the battle wounds have lingered on.

The Democrats are counting on offsetting expected losses in those states by picking up the seats from which Sens. Paul J. Fannin, R-Ariz., and Hiram L. Fong, R-Hawaii, are retiring.

In Arizona, former Pima County (Tucson) attorney Dennis DeConcini, the Democratic candidate, is expected to defeat Rep. Sam Steiger, a 10-year House veteran who won a bitter GOP primary fight against a House colleague, Rep. John Conlan.

As for Hawaii, Rep. Spark M. Matsunaga, a Democratic liberal, is rated as the likely winner over his GOP opponent, former Gov. William F. Quinn.

The retirement of Sen. Philip A. Hart, D-Mich., has brought on a battle for a Senate seat by two House members, Reps. Donald W. Riegle Jr. and Marvin Esch.

Riegle, who switched party allegiance from Republican to Democrat three years ago, has strong labor backing, but his victory prospects may have been dimmed by personal issues raised during the campaign.

In states where incumbents are running, Republicans say they are confident that Sen. Vance Hartke, D-Ind., will be defeated by former Indianapolis Mayor Richard G. Lugar.

They also say they expect Sen. Frank Moss, D-Utah, to be unseated by his GOP opponent, Orrin G. Hatch, a 42-year-old trial lawyer. Democrats here acknowledge they are concerned about Moss' prospects for winning a fourth term.

Democrats contend that losses of seats in Indiana and Utah would be counterbalanced by victories they foresee in Maryland and New York.

Sen. J. Glenn Beall, R-Md., is rated a likely loser to Rep. Paul S. Sarbanes, a labor-backed Democratic liberal. And in New York, Buckley is battling the challenge of his Democratic opponent, former Ambassador to the United Nations Daniel Paruck, Moynihan.

Races in California, New Mexico, Ohio and Tennessee are all regarded as close, with Republicans and Democrats figuring they offer prospects for unseating incumbents.

Republicans think they have a good chance of defeating Sen. John V. Tunney in California and Sen. Joseph M. Montoya in New Mexico.

Wigmaker says Carter certain to win by hair

NEW YORK (AP) — The political experts say the presidential race is too close to call. But a New York wigmaker who's studied the record says he thinks Jimmy Carter will win because he's got more hair than President Ford.

More hair?

Yes, according to Ben Z. Kaplan, who makes hairpieces for men. Kaplan notes that Dwight D. Eisenhower has been the only completely bald president in the 20th century. And he notes that Eisenhower's opponent, Adlai E. Stevenson, was pretty bald himself, leaving hair-lovers little to choose from.

The whole idea is scoffed at by one of the nation's bestknown baldies, actor Telly Savalas, star of the "Kojak" television series.

Savalas — who isn't actually bald, but shaves his head — said, "If Jimmy Carter's going to win because he has a lot of hair, woe is me to the American people."

Whoever is chosen, Savalas said, should be picked on the basis of ability — not hair. The actor himself isn't supporting anyone in the presidential campaign. Not yet, at least. "I'll support him Tuesday morning when I go into the voting booth," said Savalas.

While he refused to take Kaplan's suggestions seriously, Savalas did spring to the defense of bald men by naming some hairless heroes from his native Greece: "Aristotle was bald. Plato was bald. Socrates was bald."

Kaplan admits his studies aren't scientific. But he notes that there have been 12 elected presidents. Nine of them, he says, were hairier than their opponents. He counts the Eisenhower-Stevenson race as a tossup and says only Franklin D. Roosevelt and Harry Truman bucked the trend.

LET'S KEEP THE RECORD STRAIGHT!

Anybody seeking office can make "charges" against the man who holds that office, founded or unfounded. Sheriff Ed Darnell's opponent – on radio, television and in this newspaper-has attempted to create inaccurate and misleading impressions about the operation of our Sheriff's office. We checked the records to learn the TRUE facts.

ABOUT "TURNOVER" IN DEPUTIES

These statements are not true. The statement that morale is low is not so. Eleven persons listed by the opponent as having "resigned" in the last year were never deputies: 5 were Midland College students employed for 3-month periods at hourly rates as part of their training in law enforcement, and 6 were janitors and cooks employed in the jail. Of actual deputies who resigned, 3 left to become Chiefs of Police in other cities; 2 left because of illness; 3 were named Deputy Sheriff in other counties for more money, and 2 left for better paying jobs with the Midland Police Department. 5 deputies were hired, but never went to work because they could not find a place to live here. This is the record since 10-19-75.

ABOUT EXPERIENCED, TRAINED OFFICERS

Ed Darnell's 30 deputies have a total of 379 years of experience in modern law enforcement, 168 years of these under Sheriff Ed Darnell. The average age of these deputies is 38.6 years. They have a combined total of 1,136 college hours-several with college degrees and 12,722 hours in Special Law Enforcement Training Schools which Sheriff Darnell requires that they attend. Despite the low salaries-almost $200 lower than the Police Department-Ed Darnell manages to keep the finest, best-trained deputies in West Texas. They are proud to be working for the best Sheriff in Texas.

ED DARNELL'S OPPONENT'S ONLY LAW ENFORCEMENT EXPERIENCE WAS AS A HIGHWAY PATROLMAN... WITH NO ADMINISTRATIVE, MANAGEMENT OR LEADERSHIP EXPERIENCE... AND HE HAS BEEN COMPLETELY OUT OF LAW ENFORCEMENT WORK FOR 4½ YEARS.

ABOUT INCREASING CRIME

Unquestionably, crime is increasing everywhere - and Midland County is no exception. Sheriff Darnell pointed this out in his 1977 budget request, asking for decent salaries for his deputies. But Sheriff Darnell is handling the situation exceptionally well, clearing 70% of the crimes reported so far in 1976 in the areas of increased industrialization and growth outside the city. Many more of those will be cleared by the end of the year. Our Sheriff's Department has recovered more than $1,300,000.00* in stolen property since January 1st-and the recovery rate by the Sheriff's Department exceeds the national average by 42%! Every felony case was presented to the Grand Jury except those where restitution was made and charges dropped by the injured party or District Attorney's office, or the person charged pleaded guilty to some other offense.

ABOUT UNIFORMS AND MARKED CARS

The claim is made that uniforms and marked cars are necessary. Ed Darnell believes uniformed officers and marked cars with lights and sirens are a deterrent to criminal investigation and to rural patrols. . .but he did, on February 22, 1972, address a letter to the Commissioners Court, agreeing to do these things if the County Commissioners authorized the required expenditures of tax monies. THOSE "FRILLS", ADVOCATED BY ED DARNELL'S OPPONENT, INCLUDING AN ADDITIONAL PATROL CAR WHICH IS NOT NECESSARY UNLESS HE PROPOSES TO PATROL FOR SPEEDERS ON COUNTY ROADS, WOULD NOW COST MORE THAN $60,000.00 INITIALLY PLUS $15,000.00 ANNUALLY. Ed Darnell takes his obligations to our tax-payers seriously. . .and does not believe in spending tax money where it is not needed.

Your vote counts!

Please take the time to vote in Tuesday's election. This very well could be one of the most significant and most meaningful ballots cast in one's voting experience.

Presidential elections always are important, but the 1976 balloting appears to be even more so, due primarily to the issues involved in the platforms of the two major political parties.

It really shouldn't be necessary to urge citizens to go to the polls to fulfill their citizenship obligation on general election day, but Americans seemingly are unique in this respect. It just could be, however, and hopefully so, that Midland County and the rest of Texas will register above average voting in Tuesday's election, based on unusually large numbers of absentee ballots cast.

A great deal of facts, figures and information has been made available on the candidates and the issues involved. Hopefully, the potential voters have done their homework by this time.

Two proposed constitutional amendments having to do with water development also will be before Texas voters Tuesday. Amendment No. 1 would authorize the Texas Water Development Board, with the approval of two-thirds of both houses of the Texas Legislature, to issue an additional $400 million in bonds for continued development of the state's water resources.

The second amendment would authorize an increase of $100 million in state bonds which may be issued to make funds available for grants and loans to local governments in providing water treatment facilities.

The Reporter-Telegram, believing that both propositions should be approved in order to assure adequate planning and orderly development of the state's water resources, again endorses the proposals and recommends their approval by the voters.

The Reporter-Telegram also has endorsed several of the candidates in the upcoming election.

Based on his honesty and integrity, his experience and capabilities, his leadership qualities, his positive approach, his conservatism and his programs offered to date, this newspaper endorses the election of Gerald Ford to the presidency.

Congressman George Mahon also has the unqualified endorsement of The Reporter-Telegram in his campaign for re-election, based on his outstanding record, his experience, his position of respect in the Congress, his ability to get things done, and for all the things he has been able to do for Midland and for the rest of his West Texas district.

The Reporter-Telegram also has endorsed U.S. Rep. Alan Steelman in his race for a seat in the U.S. Senate, just as it has endorsed Rep. Tom Craddick of Midland for re-election to a fifth term in the Texas Legislature. Jon Newton of Beeville also has this newspaper's endorsement in his race for a place on the Texas Railroad Commission.

A vigorous write-in campaign, incidentally, has developed against Democrat Don Yarbrough of Houston in his race for Texas Supreme Court, with the principal challengers being State District Judge Sam Houston of Denton and Tom Lorance of Houston.

The important thing now is to vote on Tuesday. Please do!

Welcome, Senator!

U.S. Sen. Robert Dole of Kansas, Republican candidate for vice president, is a special guest in the Tall City this weekend, and Midland and area residents are delighted to have him here.

The distinguished visitor, winding down his rapid-fire campaign, spent Saturday night in the Hilton Inn and plans to attend worship services this morning in the First United Methodist Church. He will go directly from there to Midland Regional Air Terminal where a public rally will be held prior to his departure.

The senator is a great American who has distinguished himself in many ways in the service of his country. We wish him well in the future.

Welcome, Senator Dole, to Midland and to West Texas.

Norway defies Soviet pressure in Svalbard

By L. EDGAR PRINA
Copley News Service

OSLO — Norway is planning to reemphasize, in the face of implicit Soviet pressure, its determination to protect its national interests in the northern Svalbard archipelago, of which Spitsbergen is the largest island.

It will do this by increasing its coal production, currently the only significant economic activity in what is the most northerly habitable area in the world, and by creating a coast guard within its naval forces.

"We plan to open new mines and the group of 1,000 miners that we now have there will have to be augmented," Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund told a group of visiting American journalists.

Norway and the Soviet Union both mine coal on Spitsbergen.

The Norwegians have one mine — at Longyearben — that produces 450,000 tons a year. The Soviets have two mining towns, Barentsburg and Pyramiden, which have a total annual production of between 400,000 and 500,000 tons.

A multilateral treaty signed in Paris in 1920 placed the Svalbard group, which totals 24,000 square miles in area, under Norwegian sovereignty. However, it permits the 41 other signatory nations equal rights of access to the islands for the purpose of carrying on certain types of economic operations in the area subject to local laws and regulations.

Today, it has about 2,000 miners and functionaries in the Svalbard area.

While both Norwegians and the Soviets undoubtedly can use or sell the coal they mine on Spitsbergen, their presence there would appear to be more political than economic.

Moscow long tried to "persuade" Norway to revise the 1920 treaty in order, as the foreign office here says, "to allow for the strategic importance of this polar area to the Soviet Union."

The Russians suggested that the Svalbard be defended as a joint Soviet-Norwegian responsibility, but Oslo politely turned the proposal down.

That's not all.

The foreign office recalled that "the Norwegian government had been under pressure from the Soviet Union to cede Bear Island" from 1944 to 1947, but that this, too, was rejected.

Bear Island lies 250 miles south of the southern tip of Spitsbergen, where the Norwegian and Barents seas meet. Only about a dozen Norwegians live there.

In the last year or so, the USSR again has been pressuring the Norwegians on Svalbard and the Barents Sea economic zone. In September, 1975, Russian warships fired missiles in waters that are still to be negotiated. Oslo voiced its concern to Moscow over what many Norwegians viewed as Russian strongarm tactics.

Talks seeking an agreement on a dividing line for the Norwegian and Soviet 200-mile economic zones and the continental shelf in the Barents Sea are expected to resume later this year.

The Norwegians maintain that Svalbard is part of the Norwegian continental shelf and does not have such a shelf of its own. The Russians contend otherwise, because this would give them rights to explore for oil offshore, along with other treaty signatories.

(The new Norwegian coast guard, whose prime mission will be to patrol the 200-mile economic zone expected to be declared on Jan. 1, will use P-3B Orion and other maritime reconnaissance aircraft, helicopters, fast patrol craft, and naval fisheries surveillance ships, a number of which are due to be replaced with larger vessels.)

The Norwegians favor the median line solution to the economic zone while the Russians are proposing a "sector" solution which, as might be surmised, would give them more square miles under their jurisdiction.

But as important as the economic aspects of the Barents Sea problem may be, the Soviets primarily are concerned about the strategic factors.

They feel they must control the Barents Sea in time of war if their ballistic missile submarine force based on the Kola peninsula is to reach its launching points in the Norwegian Sea and North Atlantic. And they see the Svalbard archipelago, Bear Island and northern Norway as impediments to such control.

That is what has Norway worried and snuggling up as close to NATO and the United States as it can.

The trouble with Congress

By JACK ANDERSON

WASHINGTON — The integrity of Congress was enunciated in its earliest days by Thomas Jefferson, who returned a gift to a Baltimore merchant and wrote sternly: "It is a law, sacred to me while in public character, to receive nothing which bears a pecuniary value."

Jefferson's words were read, admired and quickly forgotten. From the earliest days of the Republic, the votes of congressmen have been bought by lobbyists, compromised by women and traded for large and small favors.

Even as we write this, the Justice Department is investigating allegations that South Korean agents have passed out cash and gifts to members of Congress. There are also 101 other ways that congressmen cheat the taxpayers. We have written about them until the words are tired.

Congress has produced an occassional statesman, but more typical has been the limited politician with a narrow background and parochial interests. His is not the ennobling power to shape bold national policies or the awesome authority to make great decisions.

More characteristically, his is the petty privilege to frustrate and delay the proposals of others, to hold up the appointments recommended by the president, to bargain selfishly for patronage and pork as the price of his support for national programs.

He inhabits a private, privileged world that is largely insulated from the outer world. Capitol Hill has its own police force, its own banks, its own ways and means. It has barber shops and beauty shops; shops for carpentry, electrical work and, to insure that congressional bottoms are properly cushioned, upholstery shops. There are steam baths, swimming pools and gymnasiums, where overweight legislators can cavort in private.

The trappings and the traditions alike are dedicated to the comfort and convenience of the members. It is a spoils system — a system contrived, that is, to spoil the congressmen. Even the elevators, marked MEMBERS ONLY, whisk the annointed to their floors, leaving their constituents to struggle for space in the public lifts.

Each member is provided a suite of ornate offices, complete with carpeting, paneling and leather appointments. Enthroned behind a massive desk and framed by flags, he is attended by truckling subordinates. The office walls usually are adorned with plaques, scrolls and inscribed photographs of the great, all attesting to the excellence and importance of the occupant.

The senior members are assigned private hideaway offices in the subterranean recesses of the Capitol building. In protected isolation, they can catch a nap, rendezvous with a pretty secretary or simply get away from the hurly-burly.

Sens. John Sparkman, D.-Ala., and Frank Church, D.-Idaho, happen to have adjoining hideaways, linked by a bathroom-bar which could be entered from either side. But the 76-year-old Sparkman, by right of seniority, outranks the 52-year-old Church. So orders went out to board up Church's entrance and leave Sparkman with his own private toilet and bar facilities.

The carpenters, however, got their directions mixed up and boarded Sparkman's side. Church didn't enjoy the unexpected luxury for long. One day, he found his new bathroom-bar sealed off. Sparkman had expropriated the facilities, as evidence that the seniority system is still intact in the Senate.

Congress also exempts itself from many of the laws it enacts for others.

Members of Congress receive deferential and obsequious treatment from many quarters. The flattery tends to inflate them with self-importance, although outwardly they maintain a humble pose. For the public doesn't abide arrogance in elected officials.

Some are exemplary public servants whose contributions will never be adequately appreciated. But others are irresponsible opportunists who slide through their careers without making any real contributions.

The collectivity and secrecy obscuring the unheralded dedication of the former also cover up the dereliction of the latter. Only the insiders can truly distinguish the doers from the drones. The rules and customs that prohibit one congressman from disparaging another prevent the public from ever sharing in this knowledge.

The system is ideally constructed, therefore, for the person who regards his membership as an avenue to special privilege and personal gain. There is a code of conduct which is seldom enforced. The only real guide is the individual's conscience.

The wining and dining of legislators is a major industry in Washington. Campaign contributions sometimes become almost indistinguishable from bribes. In addition to the annual $44,600 salary, each member can trim half-a-dozen congressional allowances.

The minor excesses invariably lead to larger outrages, which are countenanced by Congress. The transgressions of morality and the law have become all too commonplace on Capitol Hill.

The tragedy is that most members of Congress are honest and honorable men who serve the nation better perhaps than the voters deserve. But in the convivial and confidential atmosphere under the Capitol dome, they condone the outrages, protect the perpetrators and resist reforms.

Musings on the eve of the presidential election

WASHINGTON — The citizenry now has scant time to decide who will be president for the next four years. It was not a good campaign. In fact, the 1976 electioneering was as disappointing as the World Series.

It's easy to find alibis for staying home. But then, we haven't had a steady presidency since Dwight Eisenhower, so there is a duty to get the office square around. My soundings make me conclude that voters are swinging toward Mr. Ford.

People don't want their lives disturbed, and Mr. Ford's themes of an improved economy and peace for America certainly don't unsettle anyone. We are not in a recession or depression. At long last, the American military is not in combat. Watergate is behind us, and that's the way people want it. Gerald Ford offers a presidential presence.

Jimmy Carter, bereft of mind-searing issues, saw his enormous early lead melt to a few points. So he clings to moorings. In the South, his commercials remind the good folk that this is the first opportunity in more than a century to elect a Southerner to the Presidency. Everywhere, Carter runs against the Nixon-Ford Republican administrations, and urges Democrats (the big majority) to rally to the colors.

But elected Democrats are no holier than their Republican counterparts, so party label is no certain advantage in the presidential race. Since Mr. Ford and Carter won no awards this fall for clarifying the issues, my feeling is that voters are going to decide which man they can rely on and feel most comfortable with.

Here is Carter, the driven challenger, smiling, toothsome, but not reassuring. After 22 months and countless high-minded promises, we still don't really know who he is, or what he will do. His faraway look may be spiritual, but it reminds many of Richard Nixon. Carter is sometimes victimized by Northern prejudice, but other times he seems destined to become the Baptist Pope of us all. He ran his primary campaign into the general election, and it didn't seem to come out right. He is not the healer we hoped for.

Now comes President Ford, open-faced, occasionally stern and occasionally grinning. He is the All-American man whose earnest desire to work it all out gets him into trouble sometimes, and who is actually smarter and more competent than he looks. Mr. Ford has endured inquisition, painful decision, disloyalty, mockery and embarrassing setbacks. Yet he comes on like a polar bear who won't be felled. He is a constant, collegial in his dealings, and about as honest as they come in this comic game of politics.

Something must be said about this hearty, latter-day George Babbitt from Minnesota, Walter Mondale. Were Sinclair Lewis with us, he would have spotted him quickly as an Uplifter, a booster of contemporary benevolence, mindless of the consequences of spending the U.S. Treasury dry on behalf of worthy projects. H.L. Mencken might have proclaimed Mondale a classic specimen of italic Boobus Americanus unital, a willing fellow thumping and panting like the Good Man he is.

Dole is intriguing. Like Carter, there is much about him which is unknown. His surface credentials show him to be a heartland Republican, big for wheat and corn, and derisive of the federal monster. But he also owns a cruel wit. Scratch him, and I believe you will find a proud man understandably bitter from the horrible wounds inflicted on his young body in World War II. Dole has seen and felt more life than the others in this year's spectacle, but he has never allowed it to develop into a depth we all can see.

All four gents and their campaigns have not enriched us. Perhaps the debates were necessary, but they were not debates at all, mere arguments, media events, and occasions for stock speeches. As for the celebrated Playboy episode, I feel sorry for Carter. He could have said as much in some contemporary Christian journals and gotten away with it. And Mr. Ford knows where Eastern Europe is, he just got fudge caught between his teeth and had to explain his error for weeks.

Carter's pious promises never to lie, steal or cheat — except in his heart — were no worse than President Ford sitting amongst the fundamentalist thumpers in Texas, hoping that the Lord would strike him clean.

No matter. That was required exercise in "born again" competition. Had the candidates been up to it, they might have blurted some truths and thereby risked losing, namely, that:

—The United States is wasteful, particularly of energy. We don't need big-car engines, tropically heated houses and 1,001 gimcracks. We are headed for an energy coronary.

—Our lopsided Middle East policy only benefits munitions-makers.

—We must salvage education by breaking the public school monopoly on tax funds. We need a federal voucher system to build a diverse school system.

—Inflation and unemployment are inevitable in a land of superexpectant people. Overconsumption causes inflation, and half the unemployed aren't breadwinners anyway.

Carter leads the polls, with a large "undecided" vote. My hunch is that these dissatisfied folk will reason that Gerald Ford isn't great, but Jimmy Carter is a perilous mystery, therefore, go for Mr. Ford. Close election.

Mark Russell says

Reporters aren't doing ethnics any favors by only seeking their opinions in bars: "Pardon me, sir, I see you've been drinking beer and playing pinball for six hours straight just like your grandfather did in the old country, right?"

•

The candidates make the same mistakes. They're saying, "Give me one Pulaski Day parade and two beers with a guy in a bowling shirt and I will have my finger on the pulse of Eastern Europe."

•

Attention, ethnics: If you're tired of being hounded by the politicians and the press, go to a museum. They'll never look for you there.

BIBLE VERSE

"And everyone that heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them not, shall be likened unto a foolish man, which built his house upon the sand: And the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell: and great was the fall of it." — Mat.7:26, 27.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

We must vote

TO The Editor:

I would like to take this time and space to talk about the national election this Tuesday, and comment on a plan offered by one of the presidential candidates.

On November 2, the American voters will go to the polls to elect a leader for the United States. They will also elect the Congress that the new president will work with. Yet, there are those voters, who, for some reason, will not vote this Tuesday.

No one person can honestly say, "My vote does not count." That can be called only one thing. Voter apathy. There has been a gradual decline in voter registration in recent years. Even the 18-year-olds have not used their vote as much as they should. This year CAN be different, though. No matter what political party you are a member of, no matter what color, race, or creed, you as an American citizen have a voice in what happens this Tuesday. The right to vote is your vehicle to show your preferences. I urge all of the registered voters in this city to use their vote in the way that they deem best.

Anyone who has been listening to the news can see that these programs will be funded by a tax hike on the above-median income families. Another phrase that can be used in place of "social programs" is "Blue-White Collar Rip-Off." As I mentioned before, the candidate says that the government will control these programs. Don't we already have too much federal control in the United States? If this programming is allowed, this would increase our deficit budget, and put us one step closer to socialism, not to mention the possible monopolizing of certain industries, putting other competition out of business. This plan is as bad as divestiture of the oil companies. Think about it.

Anderson lauded

To The Editor

In my opinion Jack Anderson deserves congratulations for his excellent character sketch of the two candidates for president, Gov. Carter and President Ford. (October 24, Midland Reporter-Telegram)

Throughout history, in times of crisis, bright, inspired leaders such as Gov. Carter have miraculously appeared upon the scene from the least expected areas and diverse backgrounds.

One such was Abraham Lincoln who had a vision of freedom and equlity for an enslaved race of people.

Martin Luther King had a dream. Like Moses, he was not allowed to enter the promised land of his dreams.

Gov. Carter has a vision of what this country could become under his leadership.

Gov. Carter has a fine mind. He is a leader. He has charisma. He is able to identify with all people and their needs. He has empathy for the poor, the jobless, the elderly.

He is well informed and concerned with the problems of energy, inflation, foreign relations, waste in the government and crime.

Gov. Carter is a tireless worker. He sets his goals and works to achieve those goals.

Vote November 2.

To The Editor:

Two recent stories in The Reporter-Telegram, the latest on October 19, have been misleading about the student loan default rates at Midland college. The story, dealing with cutbacks on Hinson-Hazelwood Student Loans, leaves the impression that Midland College has had excessive defaults.

The truth is that only six such loans have been made in the history of Midland College. Of these, two have federal claims against them for non-payment or default. Both of these loans were made while Midland College was a part of the Permian Junior College System. One of the defaulted loans was actually made by another college and was transferred when the student enrolled at Midland College in 1969, when the school was created. The other loan was also made in 1969.

During the past four years, we have made only three such loans and all of them are being repaid. In the past year, we have not made a single loan under this program.

The total amount loaned by Midland College under the program since the school's inception has been only $8,347.04. Of this, the two student loans not repaid have been $3,606.74.

It is the philosophy of Midland College not to encourage loans to students, since they can be high risk. In most cases, students are able to obtain scholarships, grants, or work-study payments.

I hope this clarifies the position of Midland College regarding these loans. The situation is simply not of major proportions

Where would we be?

To The Editor:

Suppose someone should come up to you someday and say, "Give me some money so that I can have my little daughter killed." What would you think if this went even a step further and the federal government gave this person this right and by law forced you to pay for the murder?

Does this thought frighten you a little, or sound a bit repugnant? Isn't this thought preposterous?

The truth of the matter is that infanticide is a rather commonly accepted practice in many countries, including the United States. In more popular words, I am speaking of abortion.

I know that there are many groups and "knowledgeable people" who say that the aggregate matter in a woman's womb is not a human being, prior to a certain number of days, or even weeks. On the surface, this sounds all right, but in truth it is pure damnable nonsense. To say that this "matter" is not human life defies Biblical fact, reason and biological fact. It is doubtful that any doctor would say otherwise if his career depended upon such a decision.

We have become a nation of people with no absolutes, a "civilized" people of situation ethics. Our hearts are now ruled by our own selfish lusts, and our laws vary according to our moods. There is much truth in the words of Os Guinness, author of "Dust of Death," when he says that there is a vast difference between what God has made and meant mankind to be and in what man has made and marred mankind into being.

As one last thought, consider this: If the current acceptance of abortion had been as popular 10 or 20 or 50 years ago, do you think you would be here to read this today?

Inflation curbed?

To The Editor:

There is a lot of criticism for both presidential candidates. Jimmy Carter and Senator Mondale were referred to in the paper as the born-again boys, the pentecostals and holy rollers. The writer said Mondale was the son of a minister and Jimmy Carter wished he was. He also mentioned the followers of Billy Graham.

President Ford is criticized for the pardon of Mr. Nixon and the fast-growing inflation. President Ford is crossing the country telling everyone he has inflation under control. He said the other night that he had inflation 50 per cent under control.

What I would like to know is which 50 per cent he is referring to. Let us take a look and see if we can find it. Check your car insurance — the highest I have ever paid. Try the insurance on your home — up, up.

Check your monthly electric bill, your water bill and the gas bill — higher than any time since I have been in Midland.

Now, try again. Call a plumber or electrician and see if the service call is less than six months ago — no. I tried — the electrician is up two dollars over three months back. Try an office call at your favorite doctor — no reduction in price. Hospital rates are going up. Check the drug store for a prescription. How much have they decreased?

Buy a dress and a pair of shoes for your wife and see what you find. Check with your wife on the weekly grocery bill and see how you come out.

These are just some of the things we all face. These are all up. Mr. Ford needs some new advisors. If you are a senior citizen and have an income below twelve thousand, you are in trouble. You might be surprised to know the large number of people in Midland with less than ten thousand dollars a year income. Mr. Ford has had his day — it is time for a change in the White House. A vote for Mr. Ford means high cost of living. Try Jimmy Carter and if he can't produce in four years, do him like we should do President Ford — vote him out.

To the senior citizens: Check the president's voting record on social security. Now let us not be swayed by television speeches. If your income is less than twenty-five thousand dollars a year, a vote on Nov. 2 for Jimmy Carter is a vote in the right direction.

Charges answered

To The Editor:

Congressman George Mahon's opponent sent me a statement recently giving 12 reasons why a conservative won't vote for George Mahon for Congress. In all fairness, this should be answered insofar as 300 words will permit.

Item 1 — Panama Canal. Mahon voted for funds to continue negotiations to give away the Panama Canal. George Mahon's response: This charge is incorrect. George Mahon is unalterably opposed to giving away the interests of the United States in the Panama Canal. The vote was for the following: "It is the sense of the Congress that any new Panama treaty or agreement must protect the vital interests of the United States in the Canal Zone and in the operation, maintenance, property and defense of the Panama Canal."

Item 2 — House Internal Security Committee. Mahon voted to abolish the committee. Response: Under the leadership of Congressman Ichord, the vote was to merge this committee with the House Committee on the Judiciary.

Item 3 — Congressional pay raise. Mahon voted for. Mahon's response: The President in person and by letter, strongly appealed to the leaders of Congress to provide a pay increase for higher level government officials — including those in the Congress, the executive branch and the judiciary. He said that 20 per cent of the top government officials were leaving the government and that he was finding it difficult to recruit top flight people for executive positions and judgeships.

Item 4 — Mahon voted against an amendment to exempt small businessmen from penalties for alledged OSHA violations. Response: Mahon voted against amendment in 1975 because it was ambiguous. In 1976 he voted for an amendment exempting small businesses of 10 employes or less from OSHA regulations.

Item 5 — Debt ceiling. Mahon voted to increase the debt ceiling. Answer: After Congress has authorized a program and appropriated the money, it is the obligation of the government to pay the bills.

Raising the debt limit in order to keep from welshing on our debt is largely a formality. At that stage it is too late to refuse payment.

Mahon points out that the debt issue should be attacked at its root — namely, hold the line on spending.

Election thoughts

To The Editor:

It is my personal opinion that President Ford has many assets toward winning this election — one of which is Mrs. Ford and her open and truthful approach to issues of interest to people across the nation. Her example would be worthy of following for anyone trying to influence votes in that direction. If the truth hurts, a lie can hurt more.

U. S. involvement in Vietnam began when President Eisenhower sent the first advisory troops into that country — was up-graded by EACH president after — and was ended as a result of public pressure unrequited.

U. S. soldiers coming home are less responsible for unemployment than the tremendous number of U. S. citizens reaching the age to enter the work force.

The oil and gas industry would be better off if government personnel would spend less on self-indulgence and return more tax dollars to depletion allowances. If that allowance was adequate there wouldn't be any price battle.

With all due respect to the right-to-life members having good intentions — they should be ashamed to try to force the withdrawal of rights to the living. If something makes a person uncomfortable, all he has to do is stay away from it. When $55 million spent saves the taxpayer $180 million (amount HEW spent on abortions vs. the cost of care for the dependent children had abortions been denied) in just one year is increased as years pass, we must ask where the paradox really lies.

If we can't be honest and fair minded in our support of our choice for president, how can we expect it from the people we elect? If we haven't the strength of our own convictions enough to talk with each other without malice, how can we expect our representatives to listen to our needs?

Experience adequate

To The Editor:

The most generous thing that can be said for our present sheriff, Ed Darnell, is that he adequately runs the jail and fearlessly pursues delinquent fathers.

He tells us that Dallas Smith, his opponent, who served seven years with the Texas Department of Public Safety, lacks "administrative experience." In this newspaper several months ago, I read that Ed Darnell, prior to becoming sheriff, had delivered doughnuts and had managed a small cafe. May we assume that serving for seven years with the highway patrol is at least as good a preparation for being elected sheriff as delivering doughnuts and running a hamburger joint?

Of course it's true that until you've been sheriff, you haven't been sheriff. Following this logic, we find ourselves today with what amounts to a lifetime tenure in our sheriff's department. Any day now, I expect "Big Ed" to start making noises about "the devine right of kings."

"Big Ed" takes credit for there being "no organized crime in Midland or in Midland County." Well folks, the machinery, ready-made for organized crime, has existed in Midland and the county for at least ten years. Example: In an article printed in this newspaper several months back, dealing with illegal after-hours joints, Ed Darnell admitted that there had been one operating in the county, but it had been "closed down." The Texas Liquor Control Board closed it down. It had operated for years, with impunity, within "Big Ed" Darnell's specific jurisdiction.

When the organized crime bosses assess an area for its "potential," their understanding is immediate when they can observe just one illegal, wide-open joint...or just one so-called "tough guy" who can bludgeon at least one person a year into the hospital and get away with it; a man seemingly untouchable, who cannot even be prosecuted with any enthusiasm.

That's exactly what the "bosses" are looking for, folks...and they know just what it means. IF (a considerable if) organized crime has NOT YET come to Midland County, it is because they are NOT YET INTERESTED!

Look closely

To The Editor:

Citizens should choose carefully on November 2 between the two proposed constitutional amendments concerning water development bonds...

The Midland League of Women Voters recognizes that there are portions of the state that face water shortages. We believe our state needs a long-range water plan that is adequately financed. We do not believe that our state government has instituted adequate constitutional and statutory law to gurantee sound financial and environmental safeguards in the planning and building of water resources to be financed by the sale of bonds authorized by Amendment No. 1.

It is NOT necessarily true that eventually the General Revenue Fund will be paid back. That is no law that forces payment of a previous call on the General Revenue Fund. If revenues from projects do come in, the principal and interest are paid to the TWD Bonds Interest and Sinking Fund.

Any profit (which the TWDB makes from charging communities higher interest) goes into the TWD Fund, which is a revolving fund. The TWDB has already taken more than League of Women Voters urges you to oppose No. 1.

On the other hand, the League supports Amendment No. 2, which increases by $100 million the principal amount of TWD bonds allowed for "water quality enhancement." It will enable Texas communities to obtain loans for the local portion of matching federal sewage treatment construction grants.

Do not be stampeded into approving Amendment No. 1. There is still almost half of the funds ($169 million) available under already appropriated monies. Wait until you see what kind of water plan is designed before you finance it.

It's the truth

To The Editor:

You are not going to believe this. In view of all of the arguments the telephone company has offered about directory assistance, this incident may seem interesting.

In Kilgore, Texas, the J. B. Price residence has had a telephone connection for more than four decades. Last week, while traveling, it became necessary for us to call Mrs. Price. (Almost no one carries telephone numbers of all friends while traveling.) So, we followed the formula quoted in all phone directories: Dial 1, then area code and 555-1212. When the operator asked, "What city?", we replied "Kilgore, Texas." Followed a short silence but no ringing was heard. Then the same voice said. "Go ahead."

"At Kilgore, under "P" for Price, either J. B. Price or Helen Price, 307 North Longview Street," we replied.

Here came a silence, one minute, two minutes, three minutes. Then we decided the connection had been lost. "Hello."

"I'm still looking," said the same voice (Heaven only knew where she was — Austin, Dallas, Chicago, maybe).

Finally she asked, "Could it be Jessie Price?"

"No," we told her, still trying to be patient. Another long silence followed. Finally she spoke, "There's not any J. B. or Helen Price listed."

"Oh, yes there is," we insisted.

Operator: "I'll call the manager!"

"Please do!"

Then followed the same dialogue as before, then another very long silence. Finally we asked, "Why does it take so long? Kilgore only has a dozen or so Prices."

The operator explained: "I have to look through all the Prices in that part of Texas!"

Finally she found it and we made the call. Just finding that number took a full ten minutes or more and two operators.

POSITIVE THINKING

Here's a way to stop being uptight

By NORMAN VINCENT PEALE

A man telephoned from out of town saying he was a regular reader of my newspaper column and explained that he was suffering from nervous tension. He wanted to come to New York to consult me about his problem.

When he arrived at the appointed time, I was talking with someone else. However, I could see him through the glass doors of my office, pacing up and down nervously, looking repeatedly at his wrist watch, running his fingers through his hair, clasping and unclasping his hands. Indeed, he seemed to be in a considerable dither.

Finally the previous interview ended and I asked him into my office. He sat down, perched on the edge of the chair and began telling me about his tension, tapping his fingers nervously on the desk as he spoke. "Okay," he said impatiently, "let's start on my problem. I'm so nervous."

"All right," I told him, "suppose we start with your fingers."

"With my fingers!" he exclaimed.

"Yes," I replied, "with your fingers."

"I came here for some solid ideas," he said in a disappointed manner, "and you talk to me about fingers!"

"But your fingers are related to your ideas," I explained. "One reason you are nervously tapping your fingers is because there is a nervous tapping in your thoughts. You wouldn't tap your fingers in this way unless your mind was sending excitable messages down to your fingers. So put your hand flat and relaxed there on the desk," I instructed to him, "Let your fingers go limp. As you practice relaxing your hand, your mind will tend to accept a more peaceful state. Do not talk. Think peace. Now, don't you feel more peaceful?"

"I believe that I do," he said. Anyway he began to talk more slowly and less excitedly.

"You are getting quieter," I told him. "Now slump in your chair. Stretch your feet out. Let your head rest on the back of the chair."

"What is this — a psychiatrist's office?" he asked with a grin, but he did as suggested.

"Simply an office where healing peace is administered," I answered.

He was hounded by fears and insecurities which over a long period had resulted in a pronounced state of tension. Plagued with all kinds of fears — that his wife or children would get sick, that his house would burn down, that his business would fail, he was in a state.

I assured him that past care by God implied future protection and suggested that he exercise ordinary concern, and then calmly leave everything to God. "Your personality is frozen by this nervousness and fear. Your mind needs to be filled with serenity if you are to be healed. Of course you pray?"

"Sure, I pray every night before I go to bed," he answered, "but even so I'm in this nervous state. I just keep on being uptight and it's getting me down."

"I am going to give you a prescription," I said. "I want you to start today and pray 25 times a day."

"Why, I wouldn't have time to do anything else!" he protested.

"Just fragmentary prayers is what I mean, fractions of moments — quick mental prayer, such as 'Thanks, God, for being with me.'"

It must have worked, for he no longer was uptight.

AUSTIN—Texans will be voting on two constitutional amendments Nov. 2—both dealing with the issuance of additional bonds for the Water Development and Water Quality Enhancement loan funds.

Both amendments have received the endorsement of the state's top leaders—with Gov. Dolph Briscoe calling Amendment 1, increasing the Water Development Fund by $400 million additional bond-issuing authority, vital to Texas' future.

"I know of no issue more important than the development of the state's water resources," Briscoe said in announcing his support of the amendment, adding, "Nor do I know of any single action the people of Texas can take on Nov. 2 that will be more meaningful than voting for Amendment No. 1."

Similar endorsements have come from the state's other top officials—with Speaker Bill Clayton being particularly active in supporting the amendment.

Supporters say Texas' population will exceed 18 million by the year 2000—now less than a quarter century away—and that there may be as many as 26 million Texans by the year 2020.

Those people will need additional water for their own use and additional water will be needed by the cities where they live, the factories where they work, and the farmers who will feed them, supporters argue.

Moreover, water will be needed to maintain bays and estuaries, they say.

Even now, the supporters note, cities are having trouble keeping up with growth—and are turning to the Water Development Fund to finance reservoir projects, transmission lines, water treatment plants and related projects.

And the cities are turning to the Water Quality Enhancement Loan Fund to help finance wastewater treatment facilities, to meet increasing population, and increasingly stringent anti-pollution regulations.

Amendment 2, increasing the Water Quality Enhancement Loan Fund by $100 million hasn't drawn much organized opposition— and has been endorsed by top state officials, although many environmental groups haven't endorsed it for fear of confusing their support of Amendment 2 with Amendment 1—which they oppose.

The Texas Water Development Board has been conducting hearings throughout Texas as part of its work to revise the 1968 Texas Water Plan—and many speakers at those public forums have indicated they anticipate additional water demands, and anticipate coming to the Water Development Fund to help finance projects to meet those needs.

Speaker Clayton calculates the cost to the public for the fund has amounted to only 25 cents per Texan per year—which he feels is a real bargain.

And supporters say the bond issue isn't intended to import Mississippi River water to Texas—that is banned specifically in the amendment—although the possibility of import remains an open question.

So, supporters conclude, supporting the amendments is vital to providing Texas with enough clean water to meet its future needs—and that to delay will simply raise the ultimate cost.

Foes of No. 1 support Amendment 2

AUSTIN—With a little more than half of the $400 million in authorized water development bonds now out on loan, Proposition 1 on the Nov. 2 ballot is seeking voter approval of an additional $400 million in bonding authority.

As in 1969 when voters turned down a $200 million water development issue, environmental groups have lined up against the proposition. This time, however, opposition seems to have transcended liberal-conservative lines with such individuals as conservative state Sen. Walter Mengden and liberal Democratic national committeewoman Billie Carr taking leadership roles in the Citizens Against Water Taxes anti-bond group.

The CAWT and other opponents of Proposition 1 have centered on the "vagueness" of the Water Development Board as to what the additional money will be used for, arguing that voter approval of the constitutional amendment amounts to nothing less than a "blank check."

In 1969, opponents note, citizens knew what the WDB intended to do with the $200 million in question since the Texas Water Plan had been well publicized. The group claims that when voters defeated the bond proposal, they, in essence, had turned thumbs down on the water plan.

Proponents of the bond issue, however, steadfastly have maintained the 1969 bond defeat had no relation to citizens' feelings about the water plan which urged importation of Mississippi River water to West Texas.

The bond advocates stress that Proposition 1 is not—as CAWT chairman John Henry Faulk claims—a "pig in a poke" since the Legislature will have to approve the revised Texas Water Plan by a two-thirds majority in both houses next spring.

Opponents question the timing of the water plan revision —due for completion in early January—saying the revision process could have started earlier or expecdited to have it available for public scrutiny before the election.

And, they suggest, one can trust his own legislator —but can he have faith in the other 175 or so that he didn't elect?

In drafting Proposition 1, the Legislature specifically excluded the importation of Mississippi River water. But, bond opponents note, talk already is underway between Texas and Arkansas officials about an "our oil for your water" deal — same plan, different source.

Environmentalists and Proposition 1 opponents generally are supporting Proposition 2 on the Nov. 2 ballot, which would authorize the issuance of $100 million in water quality enhancement (sewer) bonds.

It's a quiet advocacy, however, since Proposition 1 opponents fear that their support of the sewer bond issue would confuse voters.

Area voters to decide on county officials Tuesday

Permian Basin voters, outside of checking off the name of the man they want to run this country for the next four years, will be picking their political preferences at the state, district, county and precinct levels in Tuesday's general election.

Nationwide, vote-casters will be choosing between the two major contenders in the presidential race: Republican President Gerald Ford and the Democratic party's challenger, former Georgia Gov. Jimmy Carter.

In the Permian Basin expanse of West Texas, voters will be casting ballots for candidates running for offices ranging from constable and justice of the peace to sheriff and state representative.

Andrews County

ANDREWS — Six Democrats, all certain shoo-ins, are running unopposed in Andrews County's general election next Tuesday.

Newcomer Glen Williamson is the party's candidate for the criminal district attorney's slot in the tri-county 109th Judicial District Court of Texas. That district takes in Andrews, Crane and Winkler counties.

Williamson, a Kermit lawyer, got the party's nomination after outpolling the incumbent, Calvin Wesch of Kermit, and contender Ronald Ragsdale of Andrews in the party's primary elections.

Sheriff J. A. "Bud" Gregory, 48, is going after another term in that office. He defeated challengers F. D. "Cotton" Hughey, 45, a one-time sheriff's deputy, and R. W. "Tip" Tipton, 48, a former Andrews police chief, in the party's first primary election May 1.

Also counting on a return to his old job is F. E. Peacock, 67, the county's tax assessor-collector who was unopposed in the primary elections.

County Atty. Henry Guillet, 67, too, is asking for re-election to his post. He was unchallenged in the primary elections.

Justice of the Peace G. A. "Rags" Ragsdale is seeking a renewed term in office. Ragsdale, of Precinct 4, Place 1, did not face opposition in the primary elections.

Constable Loy Underwood, 68, who was challenged in the first primary election, is looking for another four-year term in his Precinct 4 slot. Trying to take away his job were Weldon Baker, 59, and W. T. "Bill" Rodgers; both lost their bids for the constable's job in the May Democratic primary.

Registered voters in Andrews County number approximately 5,400. Voters will be heading for four voting places here.

Andrews County voters and those from six additional counties likely will be voting Democrat Jim D. Rudd into a two-year term on the Texas Legislature. He displaced the incumbent, State Rep. E. L. Short of Tahoka, for representative of the 77th Representative District that incorporates Andrews, Gaines, Hockley, Lynn, Martin, Terry and Yoakum counties.

Dawson County

LAMESA — The more-than-hopeful Democratic party candidates in Dawson County likely will take an "easy walk" into their offices in Tuesday's general election. None has opposition from the Republican ranks.

The unopposed candidates are:

— County Atty. Ralph Kinsey. His candidacy may have invited but did not draw any opposition in the primary.

— Billie Jean Bingham, 45, who is running for the unexpired term of Louie C. White, county clerk here for some 20 years. He died in office earlier this year.

— County Tax Assessor-Collector Leland Miller, 50. He drew no opponents in his bid for re-election in the May primary.

— Precinct 1 Commissioner J. E. Airhart, 60. His candidacy went unchallenged in the primary.

— Precinct 3 Commissioner Alton Addison, 71. He handily outpolled three challengers in the party's first primary: Orvis Davis, John Watson and Gene Herndon.

— Glenn "Bottles" White, 47, candidate for constable at large. He was unchallenged in the primary.

— Dist. Atty. Joe Smith of the 106th Judicial District Court. Smith, a Seminole lawyer, was not challenged in the primary election. The district he serves takes in Dawson, Gaines, Garza and Lynn counties.

— State Rep. Mike Ezzell of Snyder. He won over challenger Bill Atwood Jr. in the May primary election. The 63rd Representative District Ezzell serves encompasses Borden, Coke, Dawson, Howard, Scurry, and Sterling counties.

Some 6,300 persons in Dawson County are registered to vote in the general election.

Ector County

ODESSA — The almost 44,000 registered voters in Ector County will get their long-awaited chance of finally selecting a sheriff in a race that had attracted up to 12 candidates in this year's primary elections.

Now vying in Tuesday's general election for the county's top law-enforcement job are Democrat Jan Brooks, 39, a former justice of the peace, and Republican Elton Faught, a deputy sheriff until he opted to campaign for the $18,600-a-year post.

Voters here will be "playing" something of a multiple-choice game when they flip the levers on the voting machines. Most of the precinct, county and district races are virtually teeming with rivalry.

But, for now, back to the sheriff's race:

Faught won the GOP's nomination over contenders Floyd Hudman, a former Odessa police captain; Mack Henderson who, like Faught, resigned his deputy sheriff's job to run for high sheriff; and W. M. Rhinehart, a machinist.

In the Democratic party's first primary election, Brooks went up against A. M. "Slim" Gabrel, 54, a former Ector County sheriff for 16 years; Johnny Landis, 59, a former Pecos police chief; Gary Dunda, 38, a businessman; Bill Jones, 30, a former deputy sheriff; W. T. "Bill" Bowen, 28, a constable; Oscar "Pat" Anderson, 51, an oilfield servicer; and Dwane Woods, 46, an electrician.

The culmination of that race was the tossing of Brooks and ex-sheriff Gabrel into a runoff. Brooks gained his party's nomination.

The victor of the sheriff's final race will succeed Republican Elwood Hill, who opted for a livelihood in business rather than in law enforcement.

— The state representativeship. The incumbent, Odessa lawyer and Democrat John Hostenbach, is being challenged by Republican William W. "Bill" Gray. Hostenback won his party's nomination for re-election by downing contenders Steve Parker, 24, a financier, and Gary Watkins, 29, a lawyer.

— Judgeship of the 161st Judicial District Court. The incumbent, Republican Ray L. McKim, is faced with opposition from Democrat Gene Ater, 44, an Odessa lawyer. Ater beat out contender George Kelton, also an attorney here, for the Democratic party's nomination.

— Prosecutor. Dist. Atty. John Green, a Democrat, is unopposed. He was also unchallenged in the primary election.

— Judge of the Ector County Court-at-Law: Phillip Godwin, the Democratic incumbent, is without a challenger. He outpolled John "Buddy" Rogers, a former county attorney, in the party's primary election.

— County attorney. Democrat Mike Atkins, 28, also is a loner on the ballot. He, however, was one of four candidates in the first primary. They were Dennis Carda, Jimmy Edwards and R. C. "Eric" Augesen. The voters pitted Edwards against Atkins, an assistant county attorney, in the runoff election.

— Tax assessor-collector. Curtis Winn, 66, a Democrat and the incumbent, is unchallenged in his bid for re-election.

— Commissioner, Precinct 1. Democrat David Childers and Republican George K. Roeder are campaigning for the position. The incumbent, Erskine Wunsch, was turned out by the voters in the runoff against Childers. Also seeking the nomination was Leeman Doughit.

— Commissioner, Precinct 3. The incumbent, Democrat Julian E. Pressly, 52, is unopposed. But he had to overcome the challenge of five candidates to get that way: Forrest Commander, Bill J. Carnes, Fred M. Rabe, Will Weddel and Walt Schwartz. In the end, Ector County Democrats selected "Coach" Pressly over Waddel in the runoff.

— Justice of the Peace, Precinct 2. Democrat Virgil Lumpee is unopposed in his candidacy for the office formerly held by would-be sheriff Jan Brooks. Cast by the wayside in their bidding for the party's nomination were John Chambless and D. E. "Cotton" Gowan; Lumpee defeated both without need of a runoff.

Martin County

STANTON — Martin County Judge Jimmy Mathis, Sheriff Dan Saunders and four other local Democrats here are without opposition in Tuesday's general election.

Approximately 2,450 folks here are registered to vote in the election.

Judge Mathis became a for-sure judge again when he downed contender W. S. "Bill" Decker Sr. in the party's primary runoff election. The third candidate in that race had been L. D. Snell, who lost out in the first primary.

Saunders' bid for re-election was not contested.

Donnie Kennedy is seeking her first four-year term as the county's tax assessor-collector. Voters selected her over Dalton "George" Costlow in the May primary election.

(Sheriff Saunders had doubled as the county's top tax man here until earlier this year when the tax office was separated from the sheriff's department in a special election.)

Commissioner Troy Bradshaw of Precinct 1 is seeking re-election; he overcame the challenge of Eugene Atchison in the May primary.

Assured a four-year term as commissioner of Precinct 3 is Ronnie Deatherage, who defeated Don McMorris and "Van" Glaze in the first primary balloting. The incumbent, E. A. Welch, chose not to run.

Without an opponent, too, is Rick Hamby, who is seeking election to the chief prosecutor's office in the 118th Judicial District Court that encompasses Glasscock, Howard and Martin counties.

Hamby defeated James "Jim" Gregg in the primary election for the nomination to the district attorney's post. The incumbent, Robert Moore III, did not seek re-election.

Jim D. Rudd is candidate for state representative from the 77th District that takes in Andrews, Gaines, Hockley, Lynn, Martin, Terry and Yoakum counties. He defeated the incumbent, E. L. Short of Tahoka, in the primary.

Glasscock County

GARDEN CITY — Sheriff Royce "Booger" Pruit, barring any unlikely write-in campaign, will be handily re-elected to another four-year tour in Tuesday's general election.

Pruit, a Democrat who also serves as Glasscock County tax assessor-collector, is unopposed.

Unopposed, too, are Fred J. Hoelscher, candidate for commissioner of Precinct 1, and Randell Sherrod, candidate for the Precinct 3 commissioner's post.

Hoelscher knocked off the incumbent, Commissioner A. F. "Fritz" Henrichs, in the Democratic party's May primary balloting. Sherrod, like Pruit, was unopposed.

Running unopposed for district attorney for the tri-county 118th Judicial District Court is Rick Hamby. He got the party's nod over James "Jim" Gregg in the May primary balloting. The incumbent, Robert Moore III, did not elect to return to office.

The county's 582 voters will have a choice of candidates in the 68th State Representative District.

The Republican incumbent, Tom Craddick of Midland, is being challenged by Midland Democrat R. L. "Bob" Corley. The district is made up of Glasscock, Midland, Reagan and Upton counties.

Howard County

BIG SPRING — Only one local race will be officially contested here Tuesday, but two late-comers are mounting write-in campaigns in challenging the sheriff and a would-be commissioner.

Up to 16,000-plus Howard County voters will have the option of trekking to the polls on general election day to decide the races.

The officially disputed race is that for commissioner of county Precinct 3. The incumbent, Republican W. B. "Bill" Crooker, is being challenged for the office title and pay by Democrat Oliver "Bud" Nichols Jr.

Write-in candidate Jim Abreo is opposing Democrat O. L. "Louis" Brown for the Precinct 1 commissioner's job. Brown won the party's nomination by defeating the incumbent, Simon Terrazas, in the primary election.

Sheriff Aubrey N. Standard was guaranteed another four-year term in office until Big Spring truck driver Jodell Hudgins, 34, started waging a write-in campaign to win the county's top law-enforcement job.

Assured another term in office is Zirah Bednar, the county's tax assessor-collector. She outpolled challenger Helen Eggleston in the primary election.

The sole seeker of the county attorney's post is Democrat Harvey C. Hooser Jr. His bid for that office was uncontested in the primary election.

Robert C. "Bob" Smith is the party's shoo-in for the constable's job. Smith, a private detective, defeated Lee E. Young in the primary election. Smith is 37.

Rick Hamby is running unopposed for district attorney for the tri-county 118th State Judicial District that takes in Glasscock, Howard and Martin counties. He beat out James W. Gregg for the nomination in the Democratic party's May primary election. The incumbent, Dist. Atty. Robert Moore III, did not seek another term.

State Rep. Mike Ezzell of Snyder is assured re-election to the 63rd Representative District that takes in Borden, Coke, Dawson, Howard, Scurry, and Sterling counties. He was opposed in the Democratic party May primary election by Bill Atwood Jr. Ezzell won by a 3-to-1 margin.

Upton County

RANKIN — Democrat S. O. "Sid" Langford, 60, will be seeking re-election to his dual duty as the Upton County sheriff and tax assessor-collector in Tuesday's general election. He was unopposed in the primary election.

Also running unopposed are fellow Democrats O. R. "Doc" Adams, candidate for county commissioner of Precinct 1; Jack Carr, candidate for the Precinct 3 commissioner's job; County Atty. John A. Menefee; and Margaret Roberson, candidate for justice of the peace for Precinct 3.

Adams, the incumbent, was challenged for the party's nomination to the commissioner's post in the first primary election by Bob Whisman, Dean Nicholson and Allen Moore. In the subsequent runoff, Adams, 59, got the party's nod over runner-up Moore, 60.

Carr, in the primary runoff election, edged out incumbent Kenneth LaQuey for the party's nomination to the commissioner's Precinct 3 post. They were to top vote-getters of six vying for the party's nomination in the first primary. Entered in that race were George Tompkins, S. C. "Tito" Fuentes, Enoch Smith, E. T. Barrandey, LaQuey and Carr.

Mrs. Roberson defeated B. A. Epley in the runoff election for the justice of the peace nomination. The incumbent, Jack Howard, and another contender, Fred Martinez, were eliminated from the race in the first primary balloting.

Also unopposed then were Dist. Atty. Aubrey Edwards of the 83rd Judicial District Court and Dist. Atty. Dixon Mahon of the 112th Judicial District Court.

In the race for state representative, the incumbent, Midland Republican Tom Craddick, is being challenged for his hold on that 68th District office by Democrat R. L. "Bob" Corley of Midland. That district covers Glasscock, Midland, Reagan and Upton counties.

Crane County

CRANE — Local Democratic party candidates in Crane County's general election next Tuesday will be swept in to office, barring any write-in campaigns, by those among the 2,681 registered voters here who decide to cast ballots then.

Unopposed are Sheriff-Tax Assessor-Collector Raymond F. Weatherby; County Atty. James McDonald; Precinct 1 Commissioner T. N. "Whitey" White; and Doland "Tip" Tipton, candidate for commissioner of Precinct 3.

Unchallenged, too, in their bids for re-election are the four Crane County constables: E. N. "Beanie" Beane, Precinct 1; Kenneth Watkins, Precinct 2; Merle Damron, Precinct 3; and R. F. "Bob" Taylor, Precinct 4.

Kermit lawyer Glen Williamson is the sole candidate for district attorney for the 109th Judicial District Court. That district covers Andrews, Crane and Winkler counties.

Williamson got the Democratic party's nod for the job by defeating Dist. Atty. Calvin Wesch of Kermit and contender Ronald Ragsdale of Andrews in the party's primary elections.

McDonald, 35, is seeking his first four-year term as county attorney. He is serving out the unexpired term of Don Williams, who resigned to practice law in Midland and to serve as the U.S. Magistrate for the Midland-Odessa Division of the federal court system's Western District of Texas.

White got into the general election by outpolling three challengers to his commissioners' post. He beat Gordon Hooper in the runoff election. Knocked out of the running in the first primary were contenders Z. W. "Dub" Box and Scott Hickey.

Tipton was one of seven who jumped into the Precinct 3 commissioner's race after the incumbent, C. C. "Smokey" Swift, opted not to seek re-election.

In the first primary race for the nomination were Warren Beatty, Leonard Tarpley, E. P. Thompson, Elmo Morris, E. C. Clayton, Basil C. Chaffin and Tipton. In the runoff, Tipton whipped Morris.

State Rep. Richard Slack, a Pecos lawyer, is unopposed in his candidacy for re-election. The 69th Representative District he serves takes in Crane Loving, Pecos, Reeves, Ward, Winkler and (part of) Ector counties.

Reagan County

BIG LAKE — Seven Democrats, including Sheriff James L. Proffitt and Dist. Atty. Aubrey Edwards, will be unchallenged in their bids for election or re-election here in Tuesday's general election.

The only local opposition will come in the four-county 68th State Representative District wherein Democrat R. L. "Bob" Corley of Midland is trying to unseat State Rep. Tom Craddick, a Republican from Midland.

Craddick, a businessman, has been in the Texas Legislature for the past eight years. Corley, an oil landman, is seeking to make his political debut.

The district Craddick and Corley are vying to represent takes in Glasscock, Midland, Reagan and Upton counties.

Sheriff Proffitt and Dist. Atty. Edwards were unchallenged for the party's nomination in their bids for re-election in the May primary. Edwards serves the 83rd Judicial District Court, which covers Brewster, Jeff Davis, Pecos, Presidio, Reagan and Upton counties.

Other unchallenged Democratic party races here include those of the county attorney, the county tax assessor-collector, three county commissioners, and justice of the peace.

County Atty. Jack P. Schulze, 35, was unopposed in gaining the party's nomination in the primary last May.

Unopposed, too, was Christine Gardner, 54, the county's top tax hand.

The shoo-in candidates for the three county commissioners' posts, however, did have opposition to contend within the primary elections.

Lester Ratliff, 53, a Texan rancher, the incumbent commissioner for Reagan County Precinct 1, won over challenger Juan Ramirez, 39, a grocer, in the May primary.

Ralph L. Duesing, 56, an oil producer, is the candidate for commissioner of Precinct 3. The incumbent commissioner, Clayton Henderson, 53, a Big Lake farmer, and contender Siler E. Williams, 57, were kicked out of the race in the primary elections.

Wayne M. Dolan, who was one of five candidates for the Precinct 4 commissioner's post in the primary election, is seeking the post held by the late Jim L. Daniel.

Vying for the party's nomination in the first primary were Dolan, J. L. Allen Jr., Beryl Crossland, James W. Matthews and Jack Ham. In the subsequent runoff, Dolan knocked off Ham.

More than 1,900 folks in the county are registered to vote in the general election.

Children face court

MARGATE, Fla. (AP) — Fifty children appeared before the municipal judge to answer charges of driving illegally — on bicycles. Most pleaded guilty or no contest.

"You'll plead guilty and you'll say 'Yes, Sir' when the judge speaks to you," one mother told her child in not-to-be-disobeyed tones Friday night.

Police Sgt. Ronald Perreault said the crackdown on violations, ranging from failure to obey a stop sign to riding two on a bike, was part of a safety campaign in this Fort Lauderdale suburb.

Writing in a vote in Tuesday's election is a simple procedure. Just raise the numbered black slot above the office for which you wish to write in a name, and enter the name of the person for whom you wish to vote. A pen will be provided in the voting booth. The voter must know the name of the person he wishes to vote for, not just the party affiliation.

Write-in just a matter of opening machine slide

By LINDA SCHAFFRINA

Candidates listed on the ballot Tuesday won't be the only ones who can receive votes.

Any voter can write in another name by following a simple procedure.

The voting machine has a slot for each race. The voter simply finds the slot that matches the number for the race in which he wishes to write in his choice, County Clerk Rosenell Cherry said.

After the slot is raised, the pointers used for selecting candidates on the ballot are automatically locked, so a voter can't change his mind after raising the slot, she said.

A pencil will be attached to each machine and the voter can write in the candidates name. He can then use the pointers as usual for the other races.

When the lever is pulled, locking in the vote, the paper roll moves forward, Mrs. Cherry said. She said election judges will help voters match the slot and race numbers if requested to do so.

Donald R. Yarbrough, a Democrat, is the only candidate on the ballot for the post. But Yarbrough has become the subject of controversy since his nomination.

The State Bar of Texas has begun disbarment proceedings agisnt Yarbrough, who is the defendant in 16 civil suits.

The State Bar has accused Yarbrough of 12 acts of professional misconduct, eight felonies and one misdemeanor. The suit accused Yarbrough of conduct involving "dishonesty, fraud, deceit and misrepresentation" in several instances.

Critics claim that Yarbrough was nominated in the Democratic primary because of the similarity of his name to that of Don Yarborough, widely-known Texas politician, and former U.S. Sen. Ralph Yarborough.

Yarbrough attributes his success to God's will.

Two candidates have announced write-in campaigns in opposition to Yarbrough. They are Tom Lorance, an attorney from Houston, and Sam Houston, district judge from Denton.

Both men are running as independents. Houston is a Democrat and Lorance voted in the Republican primary this year.

Houston is a 1966 law graduate of Southern Methodist University and served several years as mayor of Lewisville before being appointed to the district judgeship in Denton about two years ago.

Lorance is senior partner in the Houston law firm of Lorance, Thompson and Wittig. He has been in general trial and appellate law practice for 27 years.

Expected voter apathy won't be anything new

The Los Angeles Times

If American voters stay home in droves on election day, as a recent national survey has suggested, they will set no precedent in American political history.

Exceptionally low turnouts are unusual, but not unique.

Although a Gallup Poll indicates that voter interest is on the rise, an earlier survey, conducted by the Committee for the Study of the American Electorate, concluded that more than half of the eligible voters may not vote in the Nov. 2 presidential election.

That level of voter apathy has been achieved on two other occasions in this century. In 1920, when Republican Warren G. Harding was elected, the turnout of voting age Americans was estimated at 49.2 per cent. Four years later, when Republican Calvin Coolidge was elected, the turnout was 48.9 per cent.

Dr. Ward Elliott, a professor of political science at Claremont (Calif.) Graduate School, has an explanation for what happened in the 1920s. The low percentages, he told an interviewer, can be attributed at least in part to complacency on the part of the Republicans who had long dominated American politics.

"There was surely complacency at the state level," Elliott said. "The Republican Party 'owned' states like Pennsylvania."

He pointed out, too, that women had just acquired the vote in 1920 and were not yet voting in substantial numbers.

Further, Elliott said, some states, particularly in the South, were so controlled by a single party that voting in the general election was virtually meaningless, all contests having been decided in the primary. In Alabama, for example, the general election turnout in 1920 was only 20.6 per cent. The figure in 1924 was even lower, 13.5 per cent.

According to Dr. Larry Berg of the University of Southern California's political science department, great numbers of Americans were probably too busy living the good life to vote in 1924.

"It was the roaring '20s," he added, "and everybody was having a good time. There was also a lag in political interest following the war (World War I), which hadn't been over very long, and the political bitterness of the (President Woodrow) Wilson era."

Historically, Americans have turned up at the polls in fairly respectable numbers, registering a modern high of 81.2 per cent in 1860, when passions were aroused over the slavery issue.

For the 40 years starting in 1932, the turnout averaged just a fraction under 60 per cent, falling below 60 per cent in 1932, 1944 and 1948. Each of those years was distinctive.

In 1932 the country was at the low point of the Great Depression, and people had things more important than voting on their minds. In 1944 the country was at war, and more than 11 million men were in uniform, far from home. In 1948 complacency was again a factor, with many forecasting (incorrectly) that President Harry S Truman had no chance of defeating his Republican rival, Thomas E. Dewey.

After the 1940s dip, turnout was up again in 1952, to 63.3 per cent. as Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, a Republican, captured broad voter interest and cut deeply into the old Democratic power centers to defeat Adlai E. Stevenson.

Four years later, with Eisenhower again pitted against Stevenson, the vote fell only slightly, to 60.6 per cent, a level that was generally maintained until 1972, when it slipped to 55.4 per cent amid discontent over the war in Vietnam and distrust of government.

Why has voter participation slipped, and why does it show signs of slipping further? The answers are complex and varied, and tend to change from one person to the next.

Floodwaters wash over Venice

VENICE, Italy (AP) — Floodwaters washed over historic sections of this famous canal city today as high winds and heavy rain battered Italy from the Alps to Sicily.

Sirens wailed during the night to warn the 60,000 residents of Venice's historic center of approaching high waters. Ten years ago, a disastrous flood in the city damaged churches, walls and monuments.

City authorities were out at dawn today, setting up catwalks of wooden planks across St. Mark's square and in other low-lying areas to provide passage for tourists and other pedestrians.

The lagoon swelled to a peak more than four feet above its average level. It was the second flood this month.

TROY, N.H. (AP) — While President Ford and Jimmy Carter criss-cross America followed by mobs of reporters, William Matson and Gordon Davis do their campaigning by just walking up the street or to the store around the corner.

There are no campaign signs or placards along Highway 12 which cuts through this southwestern New Hampshire mill town. The candidates have no campaign staff, headquarters or budgets. The extent of Davis' "campaign literature" is a mimeographed biographical sheet and his opponent doesn't even have that.

Matson, 49, a burly 6-foot-4 retired Marine Corp sergeant major and now town selectman, and Davis, 27, educated as a mortician but now one of Troy's two full-time policemen, are running against each other for the New Hampshire legislature. There are 400 members of the lower house of the state legislature, and it has been described as the purest form of democracy in the country today.

There are so many candidates for the legislature — nearly 700 — that it is virtually impossible to keep track of them. In many districts one man is on both the Republican and Democratic tickets, having entered and won both primaries.

But in Troy, a town of 1,800 of which one-third are eligible voters, the choice is between policeman Davis and selectman Matson, who occupy offices next to each other in the Town Hall.

The relationship is friendly.

Matson said some time ago he had strongly recommended Davis for employment with the State Police. Davis says of Matson, "I've got every bit of confidence that he (Matson) will do the job if he is elected."

A few days ago a reporter called Matson to set up an interview. When asked where Davis might be reached, Matson turned to the town clerk, who talked to Davis in the office four steps away and reported back that he would be available.

Democrats outnumber Republicans two to one here. Matson, a Democrat, says he isn't worried and plans no campaign at all. "I have a few friends. It's a Democratic town," he says. His only campaign expense will be a $2 filing fee, Matson says.

Davis has gone door to door, although campaigning only two days out of the week, and has left his biographical sheet tacked on a number of store windows. He says he probably will spend $36, all but $6 of which was provided by the Republican State Committee.

Davis, a Republican, says he expects the election Tuesday to be close, with the winner probably being decided by a dozen votes. Charles McGinness, 81, a Democrat, won two years ago with 221 votes, but declined to run again.

Some townspeople say this year's race may break party lines because of the lingering effect of a bitter strike at Troy Mills, the town's dominant employer, more than a year ago. Matson, town selectman at the time, is still blamed by some of the workers for bringing state troopers into town to help get supplies through the picket lines. Incidents of firebombing and vandalism followed.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Although overshadowed by presidential and congressional elections, the Tuesday balloting will also determine the future of nuclear power in six states.

The nuclear power industry beat back an antinuclear initiative in a California referendum last June, only to see six more spring up on the ballots of Arizona, Colorado, Washington, Oregon, Montana and Ohio.

The passage of any one of them on Tuesday would be a grave setback to the nuclear industry.

All six ballot proposals are essentially similar, requiring guarantees of safety and full accident compensation, affirmed by both houses of a state's legislature, before that state can permit a nuclear power plant or related facility.

Environment groups and other supporters say such guarantees are so tough they would actually ban further nuclear power in any state adopting them, leading to electricity shortages.

In Ohio alone, utility-backed foes of the antinuclear initiative have a $1 million budget, 25 times the budget of its supporters, a coalition of seven consumer groups.

The pattern appears similar in the other states, but the ballot proposals seem to stand a better chance of passage, here and there, than the dollar-power alone might indicate.

In Washington, public opinion polls have indicated a strong chance of passing the antinuclear measure; observers in Oregon believe the measure has an even chance or better, while polls indicate a close vote.

In Montana, without benefit of opinion polls, both sides were predicting a close contest.

In Colorado, a poll published earlier this month by the Denver Post showed that 55 per cent of those polled appeared to favor the antinuclear measure, 25 per cent were against and 20 per cent were undecided.

In Ohio, both sides claimed favorable polls but the measure is opposed by a broad range of interest groups.

All six ballot initiatives would require that nuclear facilities be proven safe by prior equipment testing before they may be built or operated within the state.

All six would also require proof that nuclear materials will be safely stored and handled, before facilities can be authorized.

All six would require that the nuclear power industry assume responsibility for "full compensation" of all damages resulting from a nuclear accident.

Five of them include a ban on nuclear facilities until and unless Congress repeals the socalled Price-Anderson Act, which provided liability insurance for commercial nuclear power plants, but only up to a limit of some $560 million; these states would insist on unlimited liability.

Only Ohio's nuclear initiative omits a specific requirement for removal of federal liability limition of nuclear facilities by municipal corporations.

In all six initiatives, authorization of nuclear facilities would require explicit approval by both houses of the state legislature.

In Arizona and Ohio, a simple majority in each house would be required; and in Montana a legislative joint resolution would be called for, also apparently meaning majority votes.

In Colorado, Washington and Oregon, legislative approval would require a two-thirds vote of each house — a stiff requirement that particularly outrages foes of the ballot initiatives.

Nuclear facilities would also require approval of the governor in Arizona's version of the initiative; of the siting council in Washington; and of a review board in Montana.

Oswald Greager of Richland, Wash., cochairman of the campaign against that state's nuclear initiative, says that "the sponsors aren't interested in regulated nuclear safety. They want to ban the construction of any more nuclear power plants, and they intend to achieve that goal with bureaucratic suffocation, political leverage and public fear."

Peter Lauritzen of Seattle, heading the pro-initiative campaign, argues that it will mean "we have a voice in future energy decisions. These decisions should not be left solely to a small number of utility executives."

The six initiatives differ mainly in defining the cut-off dates, beyond which new facilities or applications would have to meet the proposed requirements.

That was one lesson apparently learned from the defeat of the California nuclear initiative, which could have applied tough new regulations to power

Ohio uses bogus ad in newspaper

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — The State of Ohio says it placed a bogus $900 advertisement in the Wall Street Journal to find out what other states are doing to attract industry.

James A. Duerk, state development director, acknowledged Friday that he had written the 2-by-3½-inch ad that appeared in the newspaper's Oct. 15 issue with the heading: "Industrial Location Wanted."

Duerk said he got 87 responses from 20 states, with all but one providing detailed information about tax and financial incentives.

The information "provided us with a better idea how Ohio fares ...," Duerk said. "Believe me, we're coming far short of an awful lot of competition."

He said he feels the results support the contention by Gov. James A. Rhodes that Ohio is not competitive with other states because it doesn't offer industrial tax incentives. The Republican governor and Democratic legislature have been battling over whether such incentives are a major factor among industries relocating or expanding facilities.

The ad said: "Location needed for heavy manufacturing facility to employ approximately 500. Size of city not important.

"Reply in confidence with details on building, lease-purchase costs, adjacent land, utilities (including availability and rates), transportation facilities, labor unions, taxes, and state and-or local incentive programs."

By MARCY SPRINGER
Copley News Service

LOS ANGELES — "Just for today, I will try to live through this day only...

"Just for today, I will have a program, I may not follow it exactly, but I will have it. I will save myself from two pests: hurry and indecision...

"Just for today I will be unafraid."

The 48-year-old woman read the words slowly and carefully. And she recalled how, eight years ago, they would have demanded too much.

The woman, Jean, had been through intensive psychiatric treatment.

At times, she had been unable to control her bodily functions or to know if someone was in the room with her. And she had violent, convulsive electroshock treatments.

Later, she had heard about a group named "Neurotics Anonymous" (N.A.). And, she remembers, it had taken her "three months to get up the courage to walk through the doors."

When she did, she says, "I discovered these people were happy and serene and had something to rely on."

Now, eight years later, on a Thursday morning, Jean was leading a group herself.

It was a small gathering — only four women — compared to the groups of 30 or more at other Neurotics Anonymous meetings. With the coffeepot gurgling in the back of the meeting room, Jean opened the meeting.

She is a poised, diminutive woman with clear, intelligent eyes. Although she herself was a neurotic — and a psychotic — neurosis is not a requirement for membership in the group.

In N.A., according to its literature, a neurotic is "any person whose emotions interfere with his functioning in any way and to any degree whatsoever as recognized by him."

Eight years ago, Jean tells the women, "I felt like I was in a dark, deep hole and I couldn't see any light up there. I was afraid to live and afraid to die...

"I worried about people. I seemed to carry everyone's problems and it would bog me down. But I just had to carry their problems and not face my own."

N.A. does not intend to replace professional psychiatric help. Rather, Jean says, it offers "love and encouragement.

"I found nothing but hope and strength and love from the people around me."

Jean's (N.A. uses first names only) pitch may have been aimed at the newcomer this morning, Mary. Mary, a middle-aged woman with worry lines etched in her face, is nevertheless an attractive strawberry blonde, well-dressed and carefully coiffed.

Another woman, Barbara, a slim redhead, also says little. But when she does, the others listen intently.

With voice quavering, she tells the group, "If we live to be 110, we can never get to the place where we can handle each and every circumstance and have it all under control. Because we're all human. And the human part of us isn't all strong and sturdy and holding us up."

Although the women do not discuss the particulars of their lives, at times they reveal sources of pain.

"I am 51," Barbara says, "and I have more years behind me than I have ahead of me. And that is not easy. It is not easy to accept," she says as her voice breaks.

But N.A. asks that participants do learn acceptance of "the things I cannot change, courage to change the things I can and wisdom to know the difference."

Like the other Anonymous programs with which N.A. is affiliated, it advocates cure through confrontation. The first of its "Twelve Steps" (the same as those for Alcoholics Anonymous, but with the word "emotions" substituted), reads, "We admitted we were powerless over our emotions — that our lives had become unmanageable."

N.A., like Alcoholics Anonymous, also requires belief in a "higher power," whether it be a personal god, "human love, a force of good, evolution, the motions of atoms, gravity — anything at all."

The N.A. literature explains, "The emotionally ill person is very self-centered and is usually so arrogant that he finds it difficult if not impossible to admit of a Higher Power. When he has suffered enough and cries out for help, he is then seeking a Higher Power, however defined."

Retarded learn food business

WESTVILLE GROVE, N.J. (AP) — If you stop at the Harp Room here, ask Becky for a cheese steak, french fries and coffee.

At the next door down, Bill can sell you raisin bread or a pepperoni and cheese loaf. It's good. On your way out, ask Lenny for a pound of imported ham or some swiss cheese.

Becky, Bill and Lenny are mentally retarded.

But their boss, John Misci, says they're ready to go to work and he'd hire them himself if he weren't phasing out his Turnersville restaurant to instruct them at the St. John of God Community Services center here.

The center, run by the Irish Brothers of St. John of God, is offering its 12 most advanced retarded students a chance at learning the food business as part of its vocational training program.

And any weekday lunchtime, the public is invited to drop in to their school in this Gloucester County community to see what they can do — and to have lunch, too.

"I had a good business before I came here," said Misci, who had three restaurants when he found out four years ago that his daughter was mentally retarded.

Now, he's teaching other mentally retarded students how to bake doughnuts, rolls, danish pastry and specialty loaves. They're also learning how to slice cold cuts, make salads, bus tables and wash dishes with commercial equipment.

Misci believes his students, most of whom are in their 20s, can one day become food specialists in hotel kitchens.

"It's gratifying to motivate students who once only watched television. If I still had a place of my own, those kids would be my employes," Misci said.

For that reason, the menu at the Harp Room is simple. Patrons circle their selections from a long list ranging from soup du jour to cheeseburgers to honey dipped chicken.

Students, serving as waitresses, set tables, take orders and pass them to the cooks — Misci's professional aides — who work the grill.

Waitresses fill the simpler parts of the orders and do the serving. Later, others bus the dirty dishes and clean the tables.

In an adjoining bakery, rich with the sweet smell of fresh bread Misci's students work from scratch. Their fare includes french bread, raisin bread, rolls, buns and ham and cheese or pepperoni and cheese loaves.

Nearby, other students work slicing machines and serve up a wide range of cold cuts. They sell their baked goods and meats over the counter.

So far, sales to the public have been only a small part of the students' trade. The Harp Room doesn't advertise and there are no signs for the shop out front on Delsea Drive.

But sales to nearby parishes for church events, for center functions and daily trade to other student and staff members have boosted the Harp Room's gross to more than $750 during some weeks.

"We want people to come in here for the bakery and the restaurant," one center official said, quickly adding, "We also have cold cuts."

Jones' 'Texas Trilogy' closing on Broadway

By TOM SHALES
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — "A Texas Trilogy," which broke box office records at the Kennedy Center during its Washington run, will close on Broadway after only 63 performances and six previews, at an estimated loss of $150,000. The closing was announced by co-producers Robert Whitehead and Roger L. Stevens.

Asked why "Trilogy" failed in New York, Stevens, chairman of the Kennedy Center, said, "It's simple. There weren't enough people willing to buy tickets."

The "Trilogy" consisted of three plays with common characters, all set by Dallas playwright Preston Jones in the fictional little Texas town of Bradleyville: "The Last Meeting of the Knights of the White Magnolia," "Lu Ann Hampton Laverty Oberlander," and "The Oldest Living Graduate."

When "Trilogy" opened at the Kennedy Center in May, it attracted an initial 10-week run. The plays returned for another six weeks starting in August. During the last week of that run, "Trilogy" set another new house record of $210,000 for a single week of performances.

"Trilogy" became a phenomenon and the playwright a discovery, heavily ballyhooed by national media before the New York opening on Sept. 21. At least one source close to the "Trilogy" company believes that negative reaction to the plays by the major New York critics may have been partly due the heavy advance build-up.

Stevens said he thought part of the reason for the poor turnout in New York was the word "trilogy" in the title. "In retrospect, I can say that I wouldn't do it as a trilogy again," Stevens said. "It would have been better to do each of the plays one at a time."

The producers "tried everything," including TV commercials, to sell the plays, Stevens said, "but word-of-mouth is the only thing that really sells, and it just didn't develop." Stevens said "most" of the losses were incurred in the heavy advertising campaign which failed to pay off.

Gun issue: both sides optimistic

By G.M. PRATHER
Copley News Service

WASHINGTON — Supporters and opponents of gun control legislation are convinced next year's Congress will clear up the controversial issue once and for all.

Gun control supporters believe the change in congressional leadership in January will open the door for long-awaited passage of stricter gun control laws.

Pro-gun groups believe Congress can't help but listen to its constituents whom they say oppose gun control, and "continue to do what is right" — uphold the constitutional guarantee of the right to keep and bear arms.

Both believe the public is on their side, and both produce scientific polling evidence to prove it.

Speaker of the House Carl Albert, D-Okla., and Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield, D-Mont., longtime opponents of gun control, are retiring this year. They have been blamed — and credited — with blocking passage of gun control laws; once they are gone, anti-gunners believe gun control legislation will sail through the Congress.

"We had all the votes we needed to get our gun control bill through this year," said a key House Judiciary Committee staffer, "but Albert simply blocked it.

"He said congressmen didn't want to vote on such a controversial bill in an election year."

The Citizens Committee for the Right to Keep and Bear Arms says Albert voted "correctly" on gun control issues 100 per cent of the time.

His likely successor, Rep. Thomas P. O'Neill, D-Mass., is given a low 14 per cent correct rating.

In the Senate, Mansfield voted with the Citizens Committee 91 per cent of the time. Likely successors are split on the issue.

Main provisions of the defeated Handgun Crime Control Act of 1975 would have:

— Limited the number of dealers licensed to sell guns.

The measure was approved by the Judiciary Committee but died when the House Rules Committee — which Albert controls — failed to act on it.

"The gun lobby was dumb in killing this modest bill," the staffer said. "Next year's bill will have all of those provisions and more and will take a much bigger bite."

The National Rifle Association says it will never happen.

Pro-gun groups, of which the 105-year-old NRA is the leader, believe the public is strongly opposed to more gun control, and will prevail in its opposition to any further gun control efforts.

They cite a nationwide scientific survey taken last fall by Decision Making Information which found "86 per cent of our people believe in the right of the individual American to keep and bear arms."

Only 11 per cent saw stricter gun control as the solution to the national crime problem, DMI said.

But Rep. John Conyers Jr., D-Mich., chairman of the House Crime subcommittee, has just as many surveys to prove the American public favors gun control. He said:

— George Gallup in 1972 said 71 per cent of gun owners and non-gun owners favor tougher gun control laws and believe individuals should be required to obtain a police permit to purchase a firearm.

— CBS news said in July of 1975, a survey it had taken showed the public favored registration of handguns by a 4 to 1 margin.

The deputy director of NRA's Institute for Legislative Action, Robert Kukla, claims Harris, Gallup and the media obtain their pro-gun control results only by asking loaded questions. Anti-gunners claim the same thing about the pro-gun results.

"The public sentiment is toward criminal control, not gun control," Kukla said. He cited studies which he says show there is "no causal relationship between crimes of violence and the availability of firearms."

A 1974 study of two New York City boroughs — Manhattan Island and Queens — shows there are five times more crimes committed in Manhattan even though both boroughs have the same gun laws and roughly the same number of residents — 1.8 million.

"More gun control laws will not solve the crime problem," Kukla said. "We already have more than 26,000 of them on the books at the federal, state and local levels.

"We don't need more laws, but we do need an effective criminal justice system that is genuinely concerned with keeping criminals off the streets and with protecting the private citizen.

"Right now, they're doing just the reverse."

Instead of gun control, which pro-gun groups say doesn't deter criminals but does harass law-abiding citizens, the NRA offers alternative proposals:

— Impose harsher sentences on criminals and restrict parole.

— Control the kind of plea bargaining that is permissible and make it more difficult for a criminal to get off without a sentence.

— Abolish the exclusionary evidence rule, allowing the courts more leeway in admitting evidence against defendants.

— Speed the judicial process.

Meanwhile, both sides are gearing for a showdown in the upcoming session of Congress, each convinced the public is on its side and convinced the makeup of Congress is such that members are bound to vote its side.

Terrell to vote on liquor issue

TERRELL, Tex. (AP) — Some voters in Kaufman County Justice of the Peace Precinct 2 may take Tuesday's general election as one takes a before-dinner drink — rather casually.

The really big election will be a wet-dry affair two weeks later.

Liquor sales were legalized in the precinct in 1965, but only for off-premises consumption.

Kaufman County Clerk Jimmy Graham said he expects some 8,000 of the precinct's 19,000 certified voters to cast ballots in the mixed drink election. "This is probably going to be as big, if not bigger, than the presidential race," Graham said.

J. R. Robinson of Terrell surprised Graham earlier this month when he showed up with the required 307 signatures on a petition to call the mixed drink election.

"I'd been hearing for a long time that someone was going to file such a petition, but I didn't really believe it," Graham said. "There's a lot of people who would vote for something like this in an election, but they don't want to put their names on a petition for all the world to see."

Like most wet-dry elections, however, there are usually two sides. And unlike the presidential campaign, voters are seldom apathetic.

Ruby Worthen, a Terrell notary public, said she has been collecting affidavits from petition signers who said they had been misled about what they were signing.

Lawyer Floyd Shumpert and four area ministers took Mrs. Worthen's affidavits to the Kaufman County commissioners in an effort to halt the election, but were too late.

"We let the commissioners know we have the affidavits and laid the groundwork to contest the election if it passes," Shumpert said.

The Rev. Casey Perry of Terrell's Emanuel Baptist Church said a large group of citizens is standing by to call another election should the mixed drink issue pass.

"There's been serious talk of calling another election and voting out liquor altogether," Rev. Perry said.

Supreme Court to consider case involving occupancy ordinances

By PHILIP HAGER
The Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — "The occupancy of a dwelling unit shall be limited to one, and only one family," said the official notice, "John Moore (7) is an illegal occupant...Correct within 15 days."

The city of East Cleveland, Ohio, was informing Mrs. Inez Moore that the presence of her grandson in her modest, 2 1-2-story frame home violated municipal dwelling occupancy ordinances.

Mrs. Moore and her lawyers chose to resist the order — and she was fined $25 and sentenced to five days in jail.

But Tuesday, the silver-haired, 62-year-old grandmother will bring her case before the Supreme Court for oral argument, contending the ordinance violates her constitutional rights to privacy and free association.

Her attorneys say the ordinance is so restrictive, defining a "family" so narrowly, that the households of Thomas Jefferson, Herbert Hoover and Eleanor Roosevelt all could have been in violation of the city's law at some point in their lives.

The court already has upheld local, so-called "anti-commune" laws, restricting the number of none-related persons in a single-family dwelling. In the Moore case, the justices will be deciding just how far cities can go in limiting the number of related persons in a single-family home.

East Cleveland contends that its ordinances are a legitimate exercise of its duty to protect the health and safety of its citizens — and that if the laws are struck down, municipal zoning for family dwellings could be rendered meaningless.

"On the surface, it looks like somebody's trying to be mean," says Henry B. Fischer, law director of East Cleveland. "...But studies show a correlation between population density and trouble: more cars, crowded schools, more family fights that can lead to violence."

"Throw a lot of people together and see what happens. The grandfather and the son want to watch different TV programs. The mother-in-law and the daughter each want to run the kitchen. That's when fights arise and that's what we wanted to eliminate...Two's company and three's a crowd."

East Cleveland is a predominantly black, working class, suburban community of about 40,000. Its dwelling occupancy ordinances for single family homes, among other provisions, state that a homeowner such as Mrs. Moore can house the children of only one of her own children.

Mrs. Moore has raised her grandson John Jr., now age 10, since the death of the child's mother in 1967. Also living in the home is Mrs. Moore's son John Sr., another of her sons, Dale Sr., and his son, Dale Jr. Thus, since both her children lived there with children of their own, Mrs. Moore's household exceeded the city's definition of a single family.

City officials say that had she wished, Mrs. Moore could have asked for a variance from its board of zoning appeals, which is designated to consider hardship cases.

"She had no duty to pursue that route prior to challenging the constitutionality of the ordinance," says Murtaugh. "Besides that, there's no guarantee she would have received the variance."

Mrs. Moore was prosecuted and did not contest the charges against her. Her subsequent jail sentence and fine were postponed pending her appeal. Thus far no lower court has disturbed the conviction.

In recent years, many communities have enacted "anti-commune" laws, designed to restrict the number of non-related, often-transient persons living in single family homes. Such laws have been upheld in the courts.

In 1974, the Supreme Court in a 7 to 2 decision upheld an ordinance enacted by the village of Belle Terre, Long Island, N.Y.., defining a family as one or more persons related by blood, adoption or marriage "exclusive of household servants," or no more than two unrelated persons "living and cooking together as a single housekeeping unit."

A different issue is before the court in the Moore case (Moore v. City of East Cleveland, 75-6289).

"It's clear from the Belle Terre case that communities can regulate communes," agrees Mrs. Moore's lawyer, Murtaugh. "But our case is distinct: it involves related people."

Her attorneys assert that the law should recognize that families are flexible institutions — often including grandchildren, aunts, nephews and not always confined to the traditional father, mother and children.

The city's justifications for the ordinance — density control, traffic regulation, health and safety — must give way to the family's basic right to remain intact, her lawyers contend.

The city, in briefs to the Court, replies that the public interest is served by limiting the number of related persons in single family dwelling units.

Concludes Fischer for the city: "There's just so much space... We have to draw a line somewhere."

Hsinhua reports Shanghai purge

TOKYO (AP) — Three of the four radical leaders accused of plotting a coup against Chinese Communist party Chairman Hua Kuo-feng have been stripped of their municipal posts in the leftist stronghold of Shanghai, the official news agency Hsinhua said Saturday.

Hsinhua said Hua has appointed the new leadership in Shanghai, indicating his administration has taken firm control of China's largest city.

Chang Chun-chiao, Wang Hung-wen and Yao Wen-yuan were dismissed by the Communist party central committee "from all the posts they held inside and outside the party in Shanghai," Hsinhua said.

Chiang ching, widow of the late Chairman Mao Tse-tung and leader of the accused conspirators called the "gang of four" by Hsinhua, was not mentioned in the latest announcement. She held no municipal party post in Shanghai.

The latest decision by the party's Central Committee was the first announced action taken against the "gang of four" for their role in the alleged plot to usurp party and state power.

They are reportedly under arrest in Peking on charges that include tampering with Mao's statements before his death last month.

The Hsinhua statement made no reference to national positions held by the three dismissed Shanghai officials. All are members of the Politburo of the party's Central Committee. Chang, who was first secretary of the Shanghai municipal party committee, is a vice premier of China, and Wang, third secretary of the Shanghai committee, is a national vice chairman.

Professor says he saw planet

SIOUX CENTER, Iowa (AP) — Using a 16-inch telescope in his backyard observatory, an astronomy professor claims he has sighted what may be an undiscovered minor planet or asteroid.

Richard Hodgson, who teaches at Dordt College, said he was studying an asteroid in the constellation Pisces shortly before midnight Thursday when "suddenly came a fast-moving object.

"It looked like a star, but it was about 1,600 times fainter than what can be seen with the naked eye."

Hodgson said he contacted Dr. Brian Marsten of the Smithsonian Astrophysical Observatory in Cambridge, Mass.

"He was quite excited about it and felt we ought to see if we can find someoe else who might have seen it," said Hodgson. "But I haven't gotten any confirmation yet."

Hodgson, 42, estimated the object was less than a kilometer in diameter and was about halfway between the earth and the moon.

His Opponent Works AGAINST Midland

Midland and the oil industry have never had a harder-working, more effective Congressman then George Mahon, who has been our Representative in Washington for the past 12 years. Not only has George Mahon been an invaluable ally and spokesman for petroleum...one we can't afford to do without...he has secured many other things for our community: our badly-needed Federal Court and Federal Building, help for our airport and for Midland College; individual and personal help for our citizens, servicemen, small businessmen and farmers who needed help in cutting through the red tape of government bureaucracy; bringing President Ford to Midland to see first-hand what petroleum means to our nation, and what incentives the industry needs in order to do its job for the nation. These are just a few of the REAL things George Mahon does for you: things no freshman Congressman could ever do! George Mahon treats all his constituents fairly and equally, whether from Lubbock, Midland, Odessa or any other city in the district he represents.

GEORGE MAHON'S OPPONENT WAS MAYOR OF ODESSA FOR SIX YEARS...AND HE FOUGHT MIDLAND ON EVERY ISSUE THEN, BEFORE, AND SINCE. JIM REESE HAS NEVER BEEN MIDLAND'S FRIEND, AND HAS CONSISTENTLY WORKED AGAINST OUR CITY'S BEST INTERESTS. HE USED BITTER WORDS AGAINST THIS COMMUNITY WHEN HE OPPOSED US ON BOTH COLLEGE ISSUES—U.T.P.B. AND MIDLAND COLLEGE—AND WHEN HE ASKED THE CIVIL AERONAUTICS BOARD TO CHANGE THE NAME OF MIDLAND REGIONAL AIR TERMINAL TO "ODESSA-MIDLAND AIRPORT". THESE ARE JUST EXAMPLES OF MR. REESE'S FEELINGS TOWARD MIDLAND.

Three hours of Ford, Carter ads to blitz air waves Monday night

NEW YORK (AP) — For those so inclined, there will be three straight hours of Jimmy Carter and Gerald Ford on television Monday night. For those not so inclined, you're out of luck.

Over-all, the two major party presidential candidates have taken steps to insure that anyone turning on a radio or television set before Tuesday's election will hear from them— by flooding the airwaves with commercials.

The peak will come Monday night, when Carter and Ford take over from the NBC "Monday Night Movie," "Executive Suite," and "The Captain and Tenille," but not, heaven forbid, from the ABC Monday night football game between the Baltimore Colts and the Houston Oilers.

Each candidate has half an hour on each network— Carter at 7 p.m., 8 p.m. and 9 p.m. CST on ABC, NBC and CBS, respectively; Ford at 7:30; 8:30 and 9:30 with a combination film and talk that media adviser Phil Angell descirbes as "inspirational."

The Ford people estimate that broadcast and newspaper advertising for the last three days of the campaign — Saturday, Sunday and Monday — is costing them somewhere between $1.2 million and $1.5 million. The Carter people say they can't break down the final three days, but Gerald Rafshoon, Carter's media director, has estimated that the last two weeks may cost about $2.5 million. Each of the Monday night half hours will cost the candidate somewhere around $100,000.

For the final few days, Ford's people are selling a candidate to trust. "They key word is trust," says Angell. "That's what it's all about".

Of the election eve appeal, Angell says: "It's an upbeat, emotional, feel-good, kind of spot," There is similar emphasis in the most often shown five-minute commercial, which replaces a biographical spot that showed, among other things, Japanese planes plummeting into the Pacific and implied that World War II naval Lt. Gerald Ford shot them down.

Carter's election eve show has already been shown on local stations in several cities— including New York. It involves a combination of man-in-the-street interviews and calls from those said to be ordinary citizens to Carter, "direct from Plains, Ga."

The rest of the Carter message will come via commercials produced by Tony Schwartz, the media expert who designed the 1964 Lyndon Johnson commercials that showed a little girl picking daisy petals with an atomic bomb going off in the background.

There is also something of a radio blitz. Both candidates have bought considerable time on all the networks, local stations and those catering to blacks and other ethnic groups.

The Republicans estimate, for example, that anyone who watches television during the prime time hours — 8 p.m. to 11 p.m. in most areas — will see Ford at least three or four times on the networks and several times more on spots placed with local stations.

The Democrats, who buy time in relation to the ratings of the programs in which the ads are placed, are less sure exactly how many times Carter might appear on the air.

'Claude' wins out despite complaints

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. (AP) — Despite some parents' complaints, high schools here are showing a cartoon about little Claude, who gets so fed up with Mom and Dad's criticisms that he opens his magic box and makes them disappear.

As depicted in the award-winning, three-minute cartoon, Claude is a quiet boy, always tinkering with a little black box. Whenever he does anything, or doesn't, his parents berate him, saying he is stupid, "will never amount to anyting" and "can't do anyting right."

Wh the last put-down Clae pushes a lever on his little box and the parts disappear as the filmnds.

Oe parent, Donna Johson, complained to thechool board that the filr was "much too advnced, too much and toosoon, and goes against the traditions of the fanly." Added another pant, Joyce Conley: "Prents are made to loostupid and the film is creating a generation gap."

But a review board voted 7-to-3 to keep the cartoon in the classroom, and the school board agreed.

District spokesman Thurman Warner said the film "stimulates discussion about the lack of communication in families." He said it has been shown to junior and senior high school students in psychology, social studies and communication arts classes.

Lynn Adams of Pyramid Films, which has distributed more than 1,000 prints of the film, said the animated cartoon was created in 1969 by Dan McLaughli for his thesis in theater arts at the University of California.

Pyramid Films of Santa Monica, Calif., said the film won prizes in Chicago and Amsterdam and is used by church groups, schools and libraries. It is part of the permanent collection of the Museum of Modern Art in New York.

A GREAT FUTURE

Why is investment in real estate such a good, long-term investment? As a "product", subject as all products are to the law of supply and demand, land is the greatest of them all because its supply is fixed and the demand is ever-growing.

Among the greatest land "gobblers" are our national and local governments, which require vast amounts for highways and other projects. Industrial expansion is also consuming huge parcels of usable land, and environmentalists are insisting that more land be preserved in its natural state.

Although land is not expandable, population certainly is expandable and it has been expanding since the first duet of Adam and Eve. In fact, by the year 2000, the population of the United States is projected to be around 300 million. What this means is that every month from now to the turn of the century, we will be adding to the population enough people to fill a city the size of Toledo, Ohio. By the year 2000, half of the population will be living in dwellings that have not yet been built and on land that has never been used for dwellings.

If you have any questions on this subject or any other aspect of real estate, feel free to phone or drop in at DON JOHNSON realtors, 7602 Andrews Hwy. Phone 683-5333. We're here to help! (come in for your free copy of "Homes for Living" magazine.)

Mother of child fatally beaten says officers ignored her pleas

DALLAS (AP) — The mother of a child beaten to death says she tried to get police and welfare workers to help her get her two children away from their father last week.

Two-year-old Latacha Tanksley died early Thursday.

The father, Alfred Harold Tanksley, 22, and Rebeca Lynn Glasgow, 19, have been charged with murder in the case.

The man's other daughter, Felicia Tanksley, 3, was hospitalized for bruises Wednesday, which police say resulted from child abuse.

Mrs. Viola Tanksley of Taylor, the mother, said her husband had been wanting to have the children for a two-week visit "so he could buy them the new winter clothes they needed."

She said she allowed him to take the children Oct. 4 on the premise he would return them in two weeks.

Tanksley and Miss Glasgow said they disciplined the children in an effort to toilet train them.

However, Mrs. Tanksley said Friday both were toilet trained.

She said she called Dallas police Oct. 20 when she failed to hear from her estranged husband. Police told her that they could do nothing since it was a family problem and the husband had a right to them.

She said she then asked the Williamson County welfare office for help. That office was preparing a letter to Tanksley asking him to return the children the day the girl died.

Mrs. Tanksley said she did not think her husband would harm the children but feared he would "try to take them from me to hurt me. I just thought he might not ever give them back to me."

Police said Tanksley told them he decied to take his daughter to a hospital Wednesday night when he noticed she was not breathing properly. Once she was admitted, doctors noticed she was covered with bruises "from head to toe." The child died early the next day.

While some officers were questioning Tanksley, others went to his home and found the older girl alone and sleeping. Miss Glasgow was arrested when she arrived at the residence a short time later.

The 3-year-old was originally thought to be suffering from broken legs but doctors determined otherwise and she was placed in a foster home.

Mrs. Tanksley and her husband, a disabled Vietnam veteran, have been separated about a year, police said.

Bottlers object to ban

WASHINGTON (AP) — Manufacturers of beer and soft drinks dispute an Environmental Protection Agency report that contends banning throwaway bottles would mean lower beverage prices for consumers.

The agency report released Friday was based on a 26-city cost survey conducted by the League of Women Voters. The League compared the costs of soft drinks and beer sold in returnable bottles and cans with those in disposable containers.

The report is misleading, said spokesmen for the brewers and the soft-drink makers, because prices would not remain the same in a system of all returnable containers.

A returnable system works only if supported by consumers, said Thomas Baker of the National Soft Drink Association.

Henry B. King, president of the United States Brewers Association, released a survey conducted for his organization. He said it showed that a shift to the returnable-container system would cost the consumer as much as 87 cents more per case of beer.

This contrasted with the EPA report, which indicated that a case of beer in reusable containers would cost about $2 less than a case of throwaways. The League survey found a sixpack of soft drinks in the 7-to 16-ounce size cost 30 cents less than in disposables. And savings were as much as 16.8 cents in the 32-ounce size of soft drinks.

Elsie trains horses

SANTA ROSA, Calif. (AP) — What has three wheels, weighs 800 pounds, can spin on a dime and looks like a golf cart wearing a costume? It's a batterypowered mechanical cow, and Dick Knight says, "We call 'er Elsie."

Knight trains horses that specialize in "cutting" a cow from a herd and blocking its return so it can be weaned, examined, branded or sent to market.

He said Friday that he's delighted with Elsie, although some horses are a bit startled the first time they see it. The reaction seemed understandable as Knight demonstrated the machine, sitting inside with his head protruding from the artificial cow's back.

As a ranch hand Gayle Gray drove the machine into the corral for a practice run, stallion Doc's Tom Tucker perked up his ears. Elsie approached, then lurched quickly and repeatedly as Elsie twisted and turned, but the horse held his ground as a cattle-cutter must.

Inside the machine, Gray was using two levers to steer. Four heavy-duty, rechargable sixvolt batteries powered its two 1½-horsepower motors.

"With a cow, you go where she wants to go. With Elsie, we can control where she goes, and repeat the same moves as long as it takes to get the horse trained," Knight explained.

Knight, who charges about $300 for a month's training, said he uses Elsie for 95 per cent of the work. But he still likes to test a horse against live cattle every week or two.

Elsie was put together by Mechanical Animated Animals, Inc., of Elgin, Ill., which began manufacturing the fiber glass machines last December. General manager Ed Heaney said about 60 have been sold in the United States.

UT daily wins out

AUSTIN, Tex. (AP) — The student newspaper at the University of Texas, the Daily Texan, can continue taking sides in political issues and campaigns, District Court Judge Herman Jones ruled Friday.

Jones refused to issue a temporary injunction barring the daily newspaper from endorsing political candidates and legislation.

The court order had been sought by UT law student Howard Hickman, Amarillo.

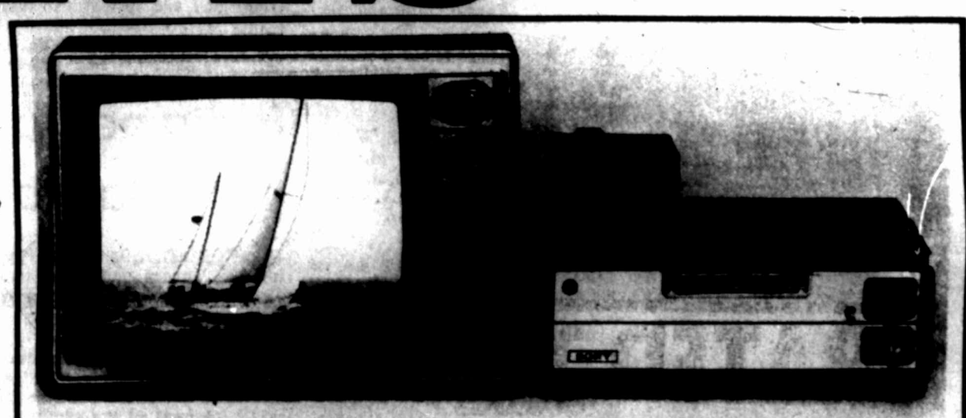
PRESENTS SONY



Sony Corporation of America has introduced the Betamax videocassette recorder that connects to a standard television set. Above right, the Betamax unit, referred to as a video deck, is shown connected to a Sony Trinitron color television set.

Sony Corp. offers Betamax

A man and wife in Los Angeles were able to keep their tennis date and yet did not miss their favorite TV newscaster who was on the air when they were on the court.

A Cleveland mother now takes her youngster shopping on a Saturday morning without a word of protest from the child who ordinarily would miss her favorite cartoon being televised while she was with her mother.

A politician in Washington, D.C., keeps dinner dates and is still able to see opponents scheduled for television interviews while he is in a restaurant.

A revolutionary advance in television technology now enables active people to do what they want without missing a particular TV program.

Betamax is the reason.

This is the newest home entertainment device that gives one the chance to schedule TV programs for convenient viewing. All the owner has to do is slip a blank videocassette into the Betamax and set a digital timer to record the TV program not to be missed.

Sony, the company responsible for the Betamax, says that many of the video machines are being sold monthly in the United States. A Betamax videocassette deck that connects to any standard television set has a suggested list price of $1,300. A 1-hour blank tape is $15.95, but if you reuse it 100 times, the cost per program is less than 16c.

If you're inclined to remain at home, you can put the Betamax to another use: watch two programs that are on the air at the same time.

While a favorite program is being viewed on one channel, another program on the air at the same time can be recorded. The recorded program can be watched at one's own convenience.

The Betamax has other advantages, too. Commercials can be eliminated. The machine can be stopped for its user to accept a telephone call and then turned on again for continued viewing of a program.

Sony is so optimistic for the success of the Betamax that 200,000 machines will be manufactured during 1977.

And, in the not-so-distant future, up-to-date feature motion pictures and educational programs will be available.

Alaska to select new capital

By DAN FISHER
The Los Angeles Times

JUNEAU — This is a city scorned. And it's about to become twice scorned.

Alaskan voters on Tuesday will decide where they want their new capital city. They decided two years ago that they no longer wanted it here in a vote that put a chill on Juneau's economy.

It's admittedly not one of your major national issues, but the Alaska capital move does have historic implications. If it transpires, it will be the first time since 1910 that a state moved its seat of government.

The key word is "if," because residents here think they might still be able to head off the move. Some plan, for example, to vote for the most expensive of three alternate sites proposed. The cost of a capital at Mt. Yenlo would be $2.9 billion as opposed to $2.6 billion for Willow, a site near Anchorage. That way, Alaskans may have second thoughts when the time comes to vote the necessary funds for a relocation, they theorize.

The city has also embarked on an ambitous program to attract new industry and commerce. That way, even if the capital is moved there will be enough diversity in the local economy to prosper in spite of the blow, city leaders here hope.

The diversification plan includes everything from a new sawmill to such tourist attractions as a city-financed ski resort and a proposed tramway to the top of Mt. Juneau.

The historical precedent is not encouraging.

The last state to change its capital city was Oklahoma. Fed up with the constant editorial carping of the staunchly Republican Guthrie Daily Leader, Democratic Gov. Charles N. Haskell left that city with his secretary and the state seal the night of June 11, 1910, says Kenny Franks, director of Oklahoma Historical Society's publications department.

Haskell set up shop in Oklahoma City's Lee Huckins Hotel the next day, and despite challenges in both the Oklahoma and U.S. Supreme Courts, the capital has stayed in Oklahoma City ever since. One result: the population of the Guthrie area has actually declined by nearly 40 per cent since 1910 while Oklahoma City today is more than six times its 1910 size.

California's capital was, for 13 months, Benicia, 23 miles northeast of San Francisco. But then, in 1854, the capital was moved to Sacramento and Benicia quickly became a nearly forgotten town.

Alaskans voted to move their capital on Aug. 27 1974 — just 18 days after the resignation of former President Richard M. Nixon. The referendum, which passed with 56 per cent of the vote, decreed that a special capital selection committee nominate no more than three potential new capital sites in the western part of the state.

The referendum passed in a "post-Watergate era when there was distrust of government generally and distrust of distant government in particular," says Leonard Lane, an aide to Alaska Gov. Jay Hammond and former executive director of that capital selection committee.

To the vast majority of Alaskans, Juneau is definitely distant — both physically and culturally. Anchorage is the state's largest city, with nearly half its 400,000 total population. Fairbanks ranks second. And both are two time zones and nearly 600 miles from Juneau.

It's impossible to get here by car alone. Part of the trip must be by ferry. That's because Juneau is in southeast Alaska — the panhandle, which is composed of about equal parts of land and water.

The weather here is notoriously overcast and wet. Advocates of the capital move generally claim to have spent more than one night in Seattle when the weather forced them to bypass Juneau.

Many among Juneau's 19,000 residents are subject to a peculiar form of claustrophobia, particularly in the winter when Mt. Juneau and Mt. Roberts, towering immediately behind the city, seem to threaten to push it into the Gastineau Channel.

The city was named after Joe Juneau, a miner whose gold strike here brought the first settlement. It was established as the "temporary" seat of Alaska territorial government in 1900.

While its foundations may be raucous, however, the city is anything but that today. The population is overwhelmingly white-collar, with government accounting for more than 55 per cent of Juneau's jobs. It all adds up to a "cosmopolitan atmosphere in a small, quaint community setting," says Alaska Atty. Gen. Avrum Gross.

By contrast, Fairbanks is bawdy and Anchorage ambitious.

Anchorage Times publisher Robert Atwood is the principal proponent of the capital move. He took up the cause immediately after Alaska was admitted as the union's 49th state in 1959. Moving the capital closer to the state's population center would make for better government, he argued. Having the capital in Juneau is "like a farmer trying to run his farm with his barn five miles away," he said.

Despite the publisher's crusading, capital move referendums failed in both 1960 and 1962. For 12 more years Atwood persisted. "We'd run lists of public hearings that no one could get to; stories on the cost of legislative travel. Every time anything went wrong, I wrote an editorial saying the problem was that the capital was so far away," he recalls.

Atwood apparently got his way in 1974. The capital site selection committee returned late last year with three candidates, all of which envision a new city built from the ground up, largely on state-owned land. All three are between 70 and 120 road miles northwest of Anchorage and 280-340 miles southwest of Fairbanks.

It's among those three sites that the voters will select on Tuesday.

India postpones national voting

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's government announced Saturday there would be no national elections in India for at least another year.

"The time is not ripe for elections," Law Minister H.R. Gokhale told parliament. "I do not think that we have come to a situation where it is desirable, in the larger interests of the country, to go in for polls now."

Carrillo convicted, gets probated term

AUSTIN, Tex. (AP) — A jury has found suspended Duval County Commissioner Ramiro Carrillo guilty of official misconduct and a judge sentenced him to two years in prison, probated for five years.

Carrillo was convicted of authorizing the use of a county truck to haul private grain.

Defense attorneys said they plan to appeal the verdict. Attorney Randy Schaffer explained that Carrillo would be free to pursue public office during the appeal process.

After the trial, Carrillo told reporters, "I'm going back on the political bandwagon."

The seven-man, five-woman jury deliberated for 11 hours over a two-day period. One juror said later 10 ballots were taken before the panel reached a unanimous decision.

Just before the jury emerged with its decision, defense lawyer Richard "Race Horse" Haynes informed the court he had information that one of the jurors, Charles Henderson of Austin, had not told the truth during jury selection 10 days ago.

Bissell, whose parents are Col. and Mrs. C. E. The public is invited to attend the event and meet the artist. His paintings will hang at the club through November, viewable each weekday between 9:30 a.m. and 5 p.m.

Bill Bissell

Biesell attended junior and senior high schools here, graduating from Midland High in 1948. He attended Odessa College and Texas Tech University and received a BS degree in civil engineering from The University of Texas at El Paso. He has 25 years' active and reserve service with the U. S. Tragedy lingers in small town

EDITOR'S NOTE — Eight children are dead. And Minster, Ohio, relives the tragedy month after month.

By GEORGE ESPER
Associated Press Writer

MINSTER, Ohio (AP) — The corn husks still come up golden in the fall. Children still play football and soccer in the schoolyards. There is still the German festival with beer and dancing on a weekend in October. And bowling and bingo. And dinner at the Wooden Shoe Inn.

Life must go on for the 2,700 residents of this rural community in western Ohio. But there is less laughter, for there are memories now that bring tears.

Nearly eight months ago, on Sunday, March 7, eight boys and girls were killed in a traffic accident. A car went through an intersection and struck a group of Minster High School students celebrating a basketball victory. The teenagers had been traveling in a caravan, but had stopped and gotten out of their cars to discuss where to go next in their victory celebration. They never made it to the victory dance.

At the funeral, Virgil and Alice Moorman stood at the casket of their 15-year-old daughter, Becky, receiving an endless line of mourners. Now, on a weekday night at St. Augustine's Roman Catholic Church, they stand among the empty pews listening to choir practice. Becky sang in that choir, and as they listen they remember her long blonde hair, her soft voice.

The tragedy will be replayed next month. On Nov. 9, the young man who drove the death car will be tried on eight counts of vehicular homicide, running a stop sign and not maintaining clear distance. John Kremer, 22, has pleaded innocent. He could be jailed for six months and fined $1,000 for each count of vehicular homicide, if convicted.

Last month, the victims were memorialized at the dedication of the new Minster Memorial Field for the high school football and track teams. The families of the dead were there and there was an outpouring of emotion for them. Most of the $100,000 needed to build the field was raised through donations after the accident. About $10,000 came from the eight families — out of money they received from people all over the nation shocked by the tragic accident.

"This has brought everything back and it is hard to take again," said Kenneth Olding, 39, who lost his daughter, Barbara Ann, 14, in the accident. Olding moved his wife, Carol, 38, and their teen-age son to a new home to escape the memories of the old one. Mrs. Olding took a job as a receptionist at Minster Machine Co. where her husband is the assistant chief engineer. She didn't want to have so much idle time to think about Barbara Ann.

For Fred Sommer, the football field is a reminder of his dead son Kenneth, 14. An older son, Fred, 17, just missed death by jumping on the hood of an auto. Fred is a senior this year and on the football team.

"He surely misses Ken," says their father. "Especially with the football season. Ken was the middle linebacker and Fred was looking for him to do a tremendous job because as a sophomore he would have been about 190 pounds and 6-3. I know Fred doesn't bring his name up too often but I know he misses him."

There are mixed feelings about Kremer.

"Anybody that takes my son's life, I've got no use for him, that's for sure," says Lee Westerheide, whose son, Scott, 15, was killed. "I hope I never have to meet him because there might be a problem."

Fred Sommer says that at first he was "very much down on the guy."

But later Sommer's wife and Kremer found themselves face to face while bowling in different leagues but at the same alley in Minster, and they waved at each other.

"After several months of thinking this thing over," says Sommer, "I thought, 'Well, put yourself in his place once and see how you would react if you were in an accident causing the death of at least one or two people.' I myself, right now, feel that I'm getting over it. And he has not yet been brought to trial, and for my part they could just forget the whole thing. My wife wants to forget the thing and she wants to forgive the guy that did it and just go on."

Virgil Moorman, who is a third or fourth cousin of Kremer, still bowls in the same league with him every Tuesday night.

"He's a very nice young fellow," says Moorman. "I just hope that he doesn't keep this as a big burden on his heart for the rest of his life. That isn't necessary."

Marilyn Kemper is still bitter. Her son, Tony, 17, was killed in the accident. The father, Elton, 43, lost his 70-year-old mother in July. In August, the Kempers had more bad luck. Elton Kemper suffered a heart attack that hospitalized him for three weeks. He is still at home recuperating.

John Kremer, too, has had his share of tragedy. He was 13 when a tractor driven by his 14-year-old brother on their family's farm overturned. John was thrown clear. His brother was killed.

Kremer has been working 12 hours a day as a meat cutter, driving to his job 20 miles from his home in Maria Stein, a village near Minster. He has tried to find solace in religious retreats and from a girl he started dating after the accident. He says he does not want to talk about the accident before the trial.

Factors in high paperback costs cited

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

Higher paper costs and bigger advances paid to authors for blockbuster novels have boosted the price of paperback books to record levels. But some industry spokesmen say the increases have leveled off.

Many paperbacks are now selling for $2 and more, although you can find a few volumes for as little as 75 cents if you hit upon something that has been in stock for several years.

One company, Dell Publishing, reported that the average retail price of one of its paperbacks this year is $1.68, up 65 per cent from the $1.02 average of 1971.

(The government's Consumer Price Index of a cross-section of goods and services went up 42 per cent from 1971 to September 1976.)

Not all of the increase has gone to the publisher. Retailers are responsible for part of the boost. In 1971, the retail price of the average Dell paperback was 46 cents higher than the price paid by the bookstore. In 1976, the retail price is 78 cents higher.

Charles Williams, vice president for marketing of Pocket Books, Inc., says his company's paperbacks now range from 75 cents (for the old stock) to $2.95 (for two items), with an average book selling for $1.75 to $1.80.

But Williams said the cost spiral has stopped and added, "We're probably going to do more $1.25-$1.50 books in the next six months than in the previous six months."

He said "the whys of the increase are obvious in any period of inflation." Labor costs are up. So are paper prices.

The publishers also are spending more to buy the rights to best-selling novels. "The enormous advances we pay are one reason for the increase," said a spokesman for Dell Publishing Co. "We just paid $200,000 for one book."

The sheer size of some of the most popular volumes also has contributed to the cost. Shogun, by James Clavell, sells for $2.75 in the paperback edition published by Dell. "It's enormous," said the spokesman. "It's almost two inches thick."

Williams said he did not think overall sales of paperbacks had been hurt by higher prices. "The public understands," he said. But he added that the company recognized that certain categories of books might sell better if the price were lower.

Milt Oehler, sales director of Dell, said that on an industry wide basis, "unit sales have gone down to an extent, but obviously the dollars are higher."

Oehler said the number of books people buy at a time has decreased. In 1971, he said, a best seller cost about $1.25. A buyer would pick up the best seller, plus three or four cheaper books — mysteries, westerns, etc. Now, when the best seller costs from $2.25 to $2.75, the buyer thinks twice before selecting additional volumes and settles for fewer books overall.

In some stores, buyers find hard cover volumes left from earlier stock marked down lower than the paperbacks. The paperback companies say they are not worried about losing business.

The lone permit issued for new commercial went to the First Mexican Baptist Church, 507 N. Tyler St., for a new church valued at $60,000.

The only permit issued for commercial alterations went to Sam Hollis for $18,000, an auxiliary building for a studio at 102 S. G St.

The 10 permits issued last week for residential alterations were valued at $25,621. They went to Grover Green for $1,195, enclose garage at 308 Tanglewood St.; J. C. Harper for $2,476, interior alterations-bathroom at 4511 Versailles Drive; Leonard Hernnandy for $3,500, enclose patio, add bathroom and den at 402 E. Dormard Ave.; Jose Cuevas for $300, storage building at 1704 English Drive; and W. M. Brice for $3,500, add carport at 804 W. Golf Course Road.

The other residential alterations permits went to John Woods for $1,050, enclose front porch at 1407 W. Kansas Ave.; Jack Steele for $1,600, interior alterations at 3205 Marmon Drive; Billy Ashby for $6,000, add den at 4313 Roosevelt St.; Ysias Yharte for $4,000, add for bedrooms, utility room and garage at 702 N. Tilden St.; and Christmas In April for $2,000, move in a residence at 1406 E. Pennsylvania Ave.

Socialist Workers party on ballots in 27 states

NEW YORK (AP) — The Socialist Workers party says that more than 600,000 Americans signed petitions to put them on next Tuesday's presidential election ballot in 27 states and the District of Columbia.

The party's candidate for president is Peter Camejo and his vice presidential running mate is Willie Mae Reid. Camejo was spending the last three days before the election here taking part in rallies, debates and speeches.

The SWP has been much publicized since 1973 when it filed a $37 million federal court suit against the FBI, the CIA and other government agencies, charging illegal harassment and intimidation over a 28-year period.

The SWP won the right to examine all FBI files relating to the party. In the course of the examination, FBI burglaries came to light in connection with domestic security investigations in 1972 and 1973. The bureau had claimed all such break-ins or "black bag jobs" ceased in 1966.

Currently the Justice Department is looking into illegal entries, wiretaps and the planting of informers within the SWP and other organizations.

Camejo, 36, is a native New Yorker and the son of Venezuelan parents. He calls himself the first presdential candidate of Latin American descent. He joined the SWP in his teens and over the past 16 years has been active in student, civil rights and antiwar activities. He formerly was a computer operator.

Camejo's running mate, Willie Mae Reid, has been a civil rights activist for 18 years and a spokesman for women's rights. Now 37, she grew up in Memphis, Tenn., and as a child spent three months picking cotton in the rural South. She since has been employed as a hospital worker, hotel worker, garment worker and computer programmer.

Top industries report better summer trade

NEW YORK (AP) — For the major industries like oil, steel and autos, the summer quarter was a little better this year than last, when the symptoms of recession were still being felt.

But there were a few notable exceptions to the general upward trend of third quarter earnings announced by the big companies in those groups this past week.

The economy's revival in the past year perked up demand for chemicals and petroleum products. Sales went up in the United States and the demand supported higher prices.

Abroad, however, the recovery moved much slower and petroleum product prices were held in check in many countries by government controls.

These conditions generally contributed to the higher third quarter profits among the major U.S. oil companies.

Earnings were up 9 per cent at Mobil Oil Corp., 8 per cent at Standard Oil of California, 42 per cent at Cities Service Co., 24 per cent at Shell Oil Co. and 30 per cent at Continental Oil Co.

But Exxon Corp., the nation's largest oil firm, reported a 4 per cent decline and No. 2 ranked Texaco, Inc., noted a 14 per cent drop.

In the steel industry, third quarter earnings improved at most companies reporting this past week. The notable exception was U.S. Steel Corp., the largest domestic producer.

In Detroit, two major big auto makers said strong sales of new cars gave a lift to their earnings. General Motors reported a big 63 per cent increase for the quarter and Chrysler reported a $76 million profit after a $79 million loss last year.

But Ford Motor Co. said its third quarter earnings dropped from $56 million to $42 million.

In other business developments this past week:

—A number of major banks, including top-ranked Bank of America and No. 2-ranked Citibank, announced a cut in the prime lending rate from 6¾ to 6½ per cent. The rate, charged on loans to a bank's most creditworthy customers, can influence rates on consumer and mortgage loans, though they aren't directly linked.

—The government's index of leading economic indicators, used as a tool in forecasting economic trends, dropped 0.7 per cent in September, the second month the index has fallen.

—The United States' merchandise trade deficit widened to $2.88 billion in the third quarter, compared with a second-quarter deficit of $1.29 billion.

—The fourth International Monetary Fund gold auction in Washington drew strong bidding, with 779,200 ounces sold at $117.71 an ounce, 14 cents below the price in London during Wednesday's bidding.

—Publishing magnate S.I. Newhouse's $250 million offer for control of Booth Newspapers Inc. was accepted after the Los Angeles-based TimesMirror Co. dropped out of the bidding for Booth stock. Booth, which publishes eight dailies in Michigan and Parade magazine, previously had opposed the idea of a Newhouse takeover.

Earnings reported

HOUSTON — Texas International Airlines, Inc. today reported record third quarter and year-to-date profits and revenues. The company's traffic loads also reached new highs during the period.

Net profit for the quarter was $1.6 million, or 31 cents per share, compared with a los of $127,000 during the third quarter of 1975. Nine-month profit this year was $1.8 million, or 37 cents per share, contrasted with a loss of $3.4 million through September of last. year.

Third quarter revenues increased 10 per cent to $31 million, while nine-month revenues were $87.1 million, up 39 per cent from 1975, when operations were interrupted for three months by a strike.

Load factor (percentage of seats occupied) for July, August and Septmember was 55.7 per cent, up 5.2 points from results in the same months last year, and higher than in any other quarterly period in the carrier's 29-year history.

Food-service firms expect sales record

By DENISE A. CARABET
Copley News Service

By the end of the year, the food-service industry is expected to reach a record sales level of $80 billion.

That's an 11 per cent increase over the year, a jump that has as much to do with burgeoning numbers of people eating out as it does with increased food prices.

Eating and drinking establishments account for fully two-thirds of that rich $80 billion market. After all, one out of every three American food dollars is now spent in one of these establishments, and the National Restaurant Association states that by 1980, $2 out of every $5 will be forked over for food.

For the first five months of 1976, eating and drinking places reported sales of $20.4 billion, up almost 11 per cent from last year, while total retail sales rose 13 per cent and food stores showed a modest gain of 6.5 per cent.

Besides the influx of women into the work force, which the National Restaurant Association points to as a major factor in increased restaurant volume, business travelers have also done their share of restaurant spending.

According to a joint survey by the National Advertising Co. and National Restaurant Association, the average business traveler — nine out of 10 are still men — spends a third of his time on the road and generates at least $600 of dinner-time restaurant business per year.

While the average dinner party spends $10.95 in a table-service establishment, the business traveler's bill averages $26.34 for himself and guests.

Convenient location is a big factor in determining which restaurant a business traveler will use, although 40 per cent of those surveyed said they relied on friends' recommendations. Also, if the restaurant is billed as different from the usual, the traveler will try it.

Of the 1,048 people surveyed, 59 per cent had tried a new restaurant even though they had previously dined an average of 19 times in the same city within a 12-month period.

Popularity statistics suggest that business travelers eat more often than not in an ethnic restaurant. Another association study, which polled more than 3,200 families about dining tastes, discovered overwhelming popularity for ethnic cuisine.

Italian restaurants were a favorite of 31 per cent of respondents; followed closely by Oriental restaurants with a surprising 30 per cent; Mexican at 16; German at 6; and French at 4.

Demographics make a difference in totals, said the survey. Oriental restaurants are most popular in New England and Pacific regions, with Mexican restaurants most popular in the Southwest and Mountain regions.

Also, people with incomes of more than $25,000 per year are three times as likely to patronize French restaurants.

On the business side of the restaurant and food-service industry, the end of the recession brought a flurry of merger activity to restaurant firms, said the association.

Pillsbury, for instance, purchased the Steak and Ale restaurant chain as a companion for its Burger King; General Mills acquired Hoffman House Coffee Shops; and Stouffers, a division of Nestle, took over the Borel chain of atmosphere restaurants.

AUSTIN NOTEBOOK

Round of industrial development meetings scheduled in November

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Industrial development and international trade will be coming in for lots of attention in November.

Texas Industrial Commission Executive Director James Harwell returned last week from a meeting of the Southern Industrial Development Council (composed of professional industrial development folks from 16 states) where the energy crisis was the number one concern—and where TIC Community Development Division Director Jerry Heare was chosen as SIDC board member, and where San Antonio was picked for the 1978 annual meeting.

Harwell will be off to another meeting in Charlestown, S.C., Nov. 9-11, this meeting being that of the International Division of the National Association of State Development Agencies (Harwell will preside over the session as chairman).

That meeting will concentrate on international promotion programs and the operation of foreign offices, such as the TIC branch in Mexico City.

Another meeting of note is that of the Texas-Japan Association in Dallas Nov. 10-11.

The Texas-Japan Association was formed during Gov. Preston Smith's administration, and meets one year in Texas, the next year in Japan. The group, composed of top corporation executives from the two areas, works at promoting trade between Texas and Japan.

Then on Nov. 30, the TIC and Texas Industrial Development Council will hold a seminar in Austin on public financing of economic growth.

One of the topics planned for discussion in the future of revenue bond proposals for industrial development in Texas—a plan which lawmakers approved but which the State Supreme Court stymied.

The need for refunding of the rural development fund also may come in for condiseration, along with charges in Federal assistance programs, such as the Small Business Administration, Economic Development Administration and Farmers Home Administration industrial program.

Another topic which will be dealt with is the role of community banks in financing industrial development.

Harwell says response to the seminar has been enthusiastic—indicating lots of people are interested these days in attracting new industries to their communities.

Incidentally, the TIC reports 13 industries announced new locations in Texas in September, adding some $20,000,000 annually to the state's economy and creating 446 new jobs—plus 369 "spin-off" jobs.

The State Securities board is warning investors against commodity options, including so-called "London options," being offered by what it calls "questionable promoters."

Commodity options are not fraudulent per so, the board notes, and are a recognized speculative vehicle. A commodity option allows its holder to purchase (call option) or sell (put option) a commodity futures contract at a set price, usually the price of the futures contract on the day the option is purchased, for a set period of time (three months to a year).

The board says that it would be wise for potential investors to check out unfamiliar companies—especially in cases where contact may be made by telephone or letter.

As a rule of thumb, Board Chairman Grogan Lord says that if the investor doesn't know the saleman well enought to buy a mink coat from him sight unseen, he doesn't know him well enough to buy a commodity option contract from him.

Campaign '76: how it looks today, state by state

By DON McLEOD
AP Political Writer

Democratic presidential nominee Jimmy Carter is leading in 22 states and the District of Columbia with a combined total of 295 electoral votes, 25 more than he needs for election, an election survey by The Associated Press shows.

President Ford is ahead in 14 states with 89 electoral votes. And 14 states with 154 electoral votes, are too close to give the edge to either candidate.

The survey is based on independent polls where available, or on the consensus of experienced political observers, campaign and party officials and reporters covering the campaigns.

In the 14 tossup states the race is viewed as too close to give either candidate even a slight margin. And in some of those where a leader is perceived, the race remains very close, and leads could change in the closing hours of the campaign.

In other major races, incumbents are favored over challengers in most cases. Democrats are favored to retain their majorities in both the Senate and House. Republicans may regain some of their recent losses in governorships but are not likely to gain a majority.

Alabama — 9 electoral votes

Carter is expected to carry Alabama in the presidential race with the suppport of former rival Gov. George C. Wallace. Most of the incumbent congressmen seeking election are expected to win handily, but the race may be close between Republican Rep. John Buchanan and Democratic Sheriff Mel Bailey in the 6th District (Birmingham). Rep. Bob Jones, Democrat, is retiring in the 5th District but Democratic nominee Ronnie Flippo is unopposed.

Alaska — 3 electoral votes

Ford is considered ahead, and the only House seat is considered in the hands of of Republican Rep. Don Young.

Arizona — 6 electoral votes

Ford is favored by a good margin, but the battle for the Senate job of retiring Republican Paul Fannin is a tossup between Rep. Sam Steiger, Republican, and Democrat Dennis DeConcini. House Republican Leader John Rhodes and Democrat Morris Udall are expected to hold their jobs easily. The race for Steiger's House seat between Democrat Bob Stump and Fred Koory is close, complicated by independent Bill McCune. Democrat Tony Mason is ahead of Republican Eldon Rudd in the 4th District.

Arkansas — 6 electoral votes

Carter is favored and so is Democratic Gov. David Pryor over little-known GOP nominee Leon Griffith. The major House race is the strong effort by GOP nominee Harlan Holleman against incumbent Democrat Bill Alexander in the first district.

California — 45 electoral votes

The presidential and Senate races in California are too close to call. Carter will spend the last day of the campaign in the state. Democratic Sen. John Tunney is in a tie in the polls with Republican S.I. Hayakawa. Incumbents of both parties are favored to hold their House seats.

Colorado — 7 electoral votes

This state, too, is very close, but the latest polling shows a slight Ford edge; only two Democrats have carried Colorado since World War II. All five incumbent congressmen are leading.

Connecticut — 8 electoral votes

Connecticut is too close to call. Sen. Lowell Weicker, Republican, and all six House members, four Democrats and two Republicans, are expected to be re-elected.

District of Columbia — 3 electoral votes

Carter is a prohibitive favorite in the District of Columbia. Walter Fauntroy, Democrat, is expected to be re-elected as Washington's non-voting delegate to Congress.

Delaware — 3 electoral votes

This is another toss-up state in the presidential column. Republican Pierre S. du Pont IV is expected to oust Democratic Gov. Sherman W. Tribbett. Sen. William V. Roth is a heavy favorite for re-election. A high percentage of undecided voters makes it impossible to call the contest between Republican Thomas B. Evans and Democrat Samuel L. Shipley for du Pont's House seat.

Georgia — 12 electoral votes

Carter's home state is considered certain to support him. Most of the House delegation is considered secure, except for Democrats Jack Flynt in the 6th District and Larry McDonald in the 7th District. Observers from both parties think these two races will be close.

Hawaii — 4 electoral votes

Carter is expected to carry Hawaii, and Democrat Spark matsunaga is believed to have an edge over Republican William Quinn for the Senate post being vacated by Republican Hiram Fong. Republican Fred Rohlfing is considered leading Democrat Cecil Heftel in a tight race for Matsunaga's House seat, but incumbent Democrat Dan Akaka is favored to succeed Democrat Patsy Min in the 2nd District.

Idaho — 4 electoral votes

Ford has a good lead in Idaho. Incumbent GOP congressmen George Hansen and Steve Symms are running ahead for re-election.

Illinois — 26 electoral votes

The presidential race in Illinois has become a dead heat. Republican James R. Thompson is a heavy favorite for the governorship against Democratic nominee Michael Howlett. Most incumbents are expected to stay in the House, but the usual tight race is being fought between Democratic Rep. Abner J. Mikva and Republican former Rep. Sam Young in the 10th District. Democratic incumbent Tim Hall also is under heavy challenge in the 15th by Republican Tom Corcoran.

Indiana — 13 electoral votes

This one is also is too close to call. A heavy Ford lead evaporated after the incident which led to the resignation of Agriculture Secretary Earl L. Butz, a Hoosier. Republican challenger Richard G. Lugar is seen ahead of incumbent Democratic Sen. Vance Hartke. Republican Gov. Otis R. Bowen is an overwhelming favorite for another term. Democrats are figured to keep the House gains they made in the post-Watergate landslide.

Iowa — 8 electoral votes

Iowa is a toss-up in the presidential race. This is the state where Carter opened his surprising nomination drive with a strong victory in precinct caucuses, but Rep. Gov. Robert Ray is backing Ford. All six House incumbents should be returned.

Kansas — 7 electoral votes

The Ford ticket is leading in the home state of his running mate, Sen. Bob Dole, but it could be close. The four incumbent congressmen look safe, but Democratic Rep. Martha Keys is in a tough fight.

Kentucky — 9 electoral votes

Carter is considered the favorite in view of the overwhelming Democratic registration and favorable polls. The two close House races are in the 3rd District, where Democrat Ron Mazoli is being challenged by Republican Denzil Ramsey, and the 4th District, where GOP incumbent Gene Snyder is facing Democrat Ed Winterberg.

Louisiana — 10 electoral votes

This one goes down to the wire too close to call. Carter was the early leader, then Ford pulled up, and now Gov. Edwin Edwards has finally thrown his weight behind Carter, while Edwards' wife has endorsed Ford. The hottest election in Louisiana is the fight for the House seat of the retiring Democrat F. Edward Hebert. Richard Tonry and James Moreau are locked in a court fight over the Democratic nomination. The Republican nominee is Robert Livingston, but former Democrat Rep. John Rarick is running as an independent.

Maine — 4 electoral votes

Although the latest poll has Ford slightly ahead, the large bulk of undecided voters makes the race too close to call. Democratic Sen. Edmund S. Muskie is expected to be reelected as are the state's two congressmen.

Maryland — 20 electoral votes

Carter is considered ahead in a close contest. Democrat Paul S. Sarbanes seems well ahead of Republican Sen. J. Glenn Beall Jr. The closest House race is the 8th District battle between Democrat Lanny Davis and Republican Newton I. Steers, Jr.

Massachusetts — 14 electoral votes

The only state to go for George McGovern in 1972 is expected to stay Democratic this year, too. In the Senate race Democrat Edward M. Kennedy is considered safe for re-election. The Republicans have a good chance to pick up a House seat in the race by Arthur Mason against incumbent Democrat Robert F. Drinan in the 4th District.

Michigan — 21 electoral votes

The gap is closing but Ford is still considered the favorite in his home state. Rep. Donald Reigle, Democrat, is still ahead of Republican Marvin Esch in the Senate race but not by much after disclosure of an old Reigle love affair. Interest in the House centers on the fight for Esch's vacated seat in which Democrat Edward Pierce is given a good chance of picking it off.

Minnesota — 10 electoral votes

All signs and polls point to a victory here for Carter and his Minnesota running mate Walter Mondale. Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey, Democrat, also is expected to win a fifth term despite his hospitalization in New York. The only close House race is in the rural 6th District, where freshman Democratic Rep. Richard Nolan is favored but is challenged strongly by Republican James Anderson.

Mississippi — 7 electoral votes

Once considered a Carter state because of its deep South location, Mississippi now is probably a toss-up because of its strong conservative traditions. The Democrats are mounting a hot challenge by State Rep. Gerald Blessey against Republican Rep. Trent Lott in the 5th District, but Lott appears ahead. Sen. John Stennis, Democrat, is unopposed.

Missouri — 12 electoral votes

The polls have had Carter ahead, but this one should be close — aided by a strong race by Gov. Christopher S. Bond, the first GOP governor in 28 years, who is heavily favored for another term. Republican John C. Danforth is expected to defeat former Gov. Warren E. Hearnes for the Senate seat vacated by retiring Democrat Stuart Symington. Five of Missouri's 10 House seats have been vacated by retirement, and the GOP has hopes of winning two or three of them.

Montana — 4 electoral votes

Nebraska — 5 electoral votes

Ford is ahead, but the Democrats say it will be close. Democratic Mayor Ed Zorinsky of Omaha is leading Republican Rep. John Y. McCollister in a close Senate race. Democrat John Cavanaugh and Republican Lee Terry are battling neck und neck for McCollister's House seat.

Nevada — 3 electoral votes

New Hampshire — 4 electoral votes

Both presidential nominees won first primaries here, but tradition and support from moderate Republicans and independents give Ford a slight advantage in the view of most observers. There are no reported polls. Gov. Meldrim R. Thomson, Republican, is favored for another term, but Democrat Harry V. Spanos is closing fast. Both House members are favored for re-election.

New Jersey — 12 electoral votes

A close one. Early polls favored Carter, but an expected low voter turn-out would aid Ford. Sen. Harrison A. Williams, Democrat, heavily favored for re-election. Republicans are mounting serious challenges to Reps. Helen Meyner, Andrew Maguire and Henry Melstrouski, but Democrats favored to hold a 12-3 advantage in House seats.

New Mexico — 4 electoral votes

Polls have favored both presidential nominees at one time or another, but going to the wire it is a toss-up. Sen. Joseph Montoya is still running ahead of a strong effort by Republican challenger Harrison "Jack" Schmitt, the former astronaut. Both House incumbents are favored.

New York — 41 electoral votes

Carter is holding onto his lead in the second largest state, but Ford is threatening. Former U.N. Ambassador Daniel Moynihan is leading Republican-Conservative Sen. James Buckley by 10 points and could help the Carter-Mondale ticket. Democrats are expected to hold their 28-11 edge in House seats.

North Carolina — 13 votes

Carter is leading but Republicans claim Ford is close. Lt. Gov. James B. Hunt Jr., Democrat, is expected to become governor, over Republican nominee David T. Flaherty. Republicans are shooting for three House seats but their best bet seems to be in former Rep. Wilmer D. Mizell against freshman Democrat Steven L. Neal.

North Dakota — 3 electoral votes

Ohio — 25 electoral votes

The slight edge is probably with Carter, although both sides say it is close. Republican Sen. Robert A. Taft Jr. is running neck and neck with former Democratic Sen. Howard Metzenbaum. Republicans stand to lose perhaps one or more seats from their 15-8 advantage in the House delegation.

Oklahoma — 8 electoral votes

Carter is a very slight favorite over Ford. Democrats hold a 5-1 edge in House seats and may be in trouble in two districts.

Oregon — 6 electoral votes

Independent polls give Ford a slight edge over Carter. Most incumbent congressmen are safe, but Republican Phil Bladine's challenge to Democratic Rep. Les AuCoin in the first district is a toss-up.

Pennsylvania — 27 electoral votes

Private polls still show Carter leading but his lead shrinking. The Senate race between Republican John Heinz III and Democrat William Green is a toss-up. A Democratic tide could cost the GOP as many as six House seats.

Rhode Island — 4 electoral votes

South Carolina — 8 electoral votes

Both sides are trying to claim South Carolina, but independent polls show Carter still leading. The best House races are in the 5th District, where former Yankee baseball player Bobby Richardson is challenging Democratic incumbent Ken Holland, and in the 6th District, where incumbent John Jenrette is challenged by Republican Ed Young.

South Dakota — 4 electoral votes

A toss-up. Ford should benefit from Republican tendencies and registration advantage, but the farm vote is restless. Both Republican congressmen look safe.

Tennessee — 10 electoral votes.

Carter's lead has dwindled but is still substantial. The excitement in Tennessee is in Democrat Jim Sasser's dead heat with Republican Sen. Bill Brock. All eight congressmen are favored, but a couple of the races could be close.

Texas — 26 electoral votes

Carter clings to a lead despite some problems and a strong Republican campaign. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen is a heavy favorite. Democrat Sam Jall Jr. and Republican James Hogan are neck and neck in the 1st Congressional District.

Utah — 4 electoral votes

This is Ford country. Republican Orrin G. Hatch is leading Democratic Sen. Frank E. Moss. And Republican Vernon Romney is ahead of Democrat Scott Matheson in the governor's race. Democratic Rep. K. Gunn McKay is ahead for re-election, but Democratic Rep. Allan T. Howe, rocked by a sex scandal, is hampered by a party-backed Democratic write-in candidacy and is trailing Republican Dan Marriott.

Vermont — 3 electoral votes

Although there are no published polls, Ford is given an edge over Carter by most observers. Sen. Robert Stafford, Republican, is leading, but Gov. Thomas Salmon, Democrat, is closing in a tight Senate race. Republican Richard Snelling is leading Democrat Stella Hackel in the gubernatorial race. Rep. James Jeffords is expected to win another term.

Virginia — 12 electoral votes

Ford is given a slight edge in this conservative state which for years has voted GOP in presidential elections, but a large block of undecided voters clouds the outlook. Sen. Harry Byrd, independent, is heavily favored over Democrat Elmo R. Zumwalt, the former chief of naval operations. Rep. Bob Daniel, Republican, is threatened. The 1st District, with no incumbent, is a toss-up between Democrat Robert Quinn and Republican Paul Trible.

Washington — 9 electoral votes

Early polls showed Carter ahead, later ones say Ford has caught him. Best call: A tossup. Sen. Henry M. Jackson, Democrat, is heavily favored for a fifth term. No changes are expected in the House lineup. Another toss-up is the governor's race between Democrat Dixy Lee Ray and Republican John Spellman.

West Virginia — 6 electoral votes

Call this one for Carter. Also favored is Democrat Jon D. Rockefeller IV for governor. The hottest House race is for the seat which Rep. Ken Hechler, Democrat, gave up in an unsuccessful bid for the gubernatorial nomination. Hechler is now waging a write-in campaign against the Democratic House nominee in his old district, Nick Joe Rahll II, and Republican Steve Goodman.

Wisconsin — 11 electoral votes

Another toss-up. Clouding this one is an expected strong third-party run by Eugene McCarthy, which could tilt it to Ford. Sen. William Proxmire, Democrat, is favored for a fifth term. Close House races are expected in the 3rd District between Democratic incumbent Alvin Balcus and Republican Adolf Gundersen and in the 8th between Democratic incumbent Robert Cornell and former GOP Rep. Harold Froehlich.

Wyoming — 3 electoral votes

Athough Ford has a poll showing him ahead, it is closer than it once was. Sen. Gale McGee, Democrat, is favored, as is Rep. Teno Roncalio, also a Democrat.

New controversy flares over religious kidnapping

By LINDA DEUTSCH

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Madonna Slavin, a 20-year-old Hare Krishna devotee, tells a court her family kidnaped her from the sect for five days. A judge rules the abduction illegal.

She tells of capture and captivity at the hands of her own family, of efforts to "deprogram" her, of her religious beliefs, and she tells of her escape.

It happened here — but the bizarre tale might have been told in any number of cities in recent years.

The question of how far parents can go to entice children away from religious cults still baffles courts and brings anguish to parents.

Miss Slavin won her right to stay with the Hare Krishna sect. In another case, prominent "deprogramer" Ted Patrick was convicted of kidnaping and sent to prison.

But in New York recently, when Marylee Kreshower protested that her mother had her unlawfully abducted from the Hare Krishna sect, the grand jury disagreed. Two sect leaders there await trial on charges of unlawfully imprisoning her through brainwashing.

Some former members of the sect have denounced it as a "counterfeit religion" which enslaves young people for financial gain.

Miss Slavin's case came to light when her fiance, Krishna follower Edward Walford Jr., 27, complained that her family had kidnaped her. After he and the sect sought a writ forcing the family to surrender her, a court order was issued for her return. But her father and brother, called to testify, invoked the Fifth Amendment when asked to reveal her location.

Then Miss Slavin escaped. She sought police protective custody, and showed up in court on her fiance's arm.

In a calm monotone, she told this story:

She said her mother had tearfully telephoned that her grandmother was near death. So she drove to the house. While Walford waited outside, family members ganged up on her.

Then, she said, she was dumped in a van and for five days was shuttled to the homes of uncles and cousins along the California coast. At each stop she was locked up with two female deprogramers."

She said she finally convinced the two women she could be trusted to take a walk and ran to a neighbor's home where she phoned her fiance.

During the ordeal, she said, her family "told me that I'd been brainwashed, that they wanted me to have my own free will, that I'd been conned."

When her parents' attorney asked in court whether she believed she had been brainwashed, Miss Slavin answered, "No."

She said she still loves her family and probably will not press charges against them. But she expressed resentment.

"I would say I was physically and mentally assaulted, which I would take as an aggressive action, not an action out of love," she said.

Superior Court Judge Harry Hupp, who presided over case, conceded some might sympathize with the plight of the Slavin family.

Youth pleads guilty

ACTON, Calif. (AP) — Teddie Boston is the perfect answer to the question of what kind of 49-year-old woman would hike the rugged 2,600-mile Pacific Coast trail by herself.

Wiry, weathered and grinning, Teddie looks like she would be out of place without her 60-pound backpack, hiking boots and cutoff shorts. She swings the pack up easily and falls into an unhurried but long stride that bespeaks an adventurer much more used to country trails than city sidewalks.

But that isn't really so.

Teddie is a mother of four from Anaheim, Calif. And until May 1, when she set off from Canada at the beginning of the trail, Teddie worked for 18 years for the Anaheim School District purchasing department — a job she lost recently when a local paper printed a story about her expedition.

The district had given Teddie five months of sick leave. Looking anything but ill, Teddie conceded she had fudged slightly — "Well, I told them I was out here to settle a case of jangled nerves."

While admitting they miss their mom, Teddie's college-aged children are excited about the trip. So is her husband.

At one point on her journey, Teddie's 20-year-old son Craig and 28 of his friends arranged a surprise greeting in a desolate desert town, just to cheer her on.

Predesignated stops in towns along the route allow her to pick up food packages and mail — and to telephone family and friends. Her phone calls include her relatives in Maine, where she was born.

Mostly a weekend and vacation hiker, she isn't really sure why she tackled the five-month project of making her way on foot along the Cascade and Sierra Nevada ranges from Canada to Mexico.

During the long trek, her answers to "Why?" ranged from, "Because it's there" to "I don't know."

But as she talked about the trip, only 400 miles from completion when she stopped briefly for mail in the northern Los Angeles County mountain town of Acton, more answers emerged.

"The Pacific Crest Trail needed my footprints. Everyone is pretty sure it's the first time a woman's done it alone," she said.

She hasn't been entirely alone. People abound on certain sections of the trail. In fact, Teddie met 134 persons on one seven-mile stretch — "the John Muir Freeway with no passing lane," she said, laughing. But another stretch of the trail saw three days go by with no other hikers in sight.

On one long haul, she played leap frog with two Yale students. They camped together at night, but she left them behind early each morning. They walked faster, so at some point during each day they caught up with Teddie once again.

The two said they were "following the Teddie prints," coining a phrase that Teddie may use as the title of a book about her wanderings.

"I'm going off to the hills to write my book when I'm done — I really have to write this up," she said. "Maybe in a cabin in the Siskiyous or Trinitys."

Appalachian blacks struggle

FRANCIS WARD

HARLAN, Ky. — Only a dirt road leads from downtown Harlan across the Cumberland River to the dirt-poor, predominantly black section of Georgetown, whose single street, Kentucky Ave., has no sidewalks and badly needs repairing.

Twenty-two of the 25 families living in Georgetown are black. The most up-to-date income data, a 1972 study by the National Urban League based on 1970 census information, listed 38 per cent of the black families in all of Harlan County at or below the poverty level of $3,000 a year. Indications are the income level in Georgetown was much lower.

Every house in Georgetown is old and beyond repair. The area is prone to major flooding. The sewer system (if it can be called that) is completely outmoded.

The city of Harlan recently received a $996,000 federal grant for a sewer extension project, but the project excludes Georgetown and seeks to upgrade service to a middle-income, unincorporated area south of the city instead.

Georgetown blacks, led by Wylda Harbin, founder of the Save Georgetown Committee, asked city officials to amend the plan. They refused. Mrs. Harbin, who says white officials have long discriminated against blacks in allocation of tax-supported goods and services, and her committee then decided to try to block the sewer project. However, it was eventually approved by the Kentucky-area office of the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

Harlan Mayor Beecher Rowlett hotly denies allegations of racial discrimination. He and other white officials say Mrs. Harbin and her supporters have taken unjustified positions against city actions in the past that were designed to benefit blacks as well as whites.

The struggle in Harlan is typical of the plight of blacks in Central Appalachia, a region encompassing eastern Kentucky, West Virginia, and some counties in southeastern Virginia and eastern Tennessee that is often thought of as a white poverty area.

But some civil rights spokesmen argue that blacks are two to three times worse off than the poorest whites in Central Appalachia, while having little of the political or economic leverage to affect their condition.

One reason for blacks' relative political unsophistication in Central Appalachia is that the civil rights movement of the 1960s bypassed the area in favor of other cities and counties where the black population was concentrated.

Blacks were only about 3.8 per cent of the Central Appalachia population of 203,459 (based on 1970 census figures), compared with 7.1 per cent throughout the whole of Appalachia, a 13-state region of 1,284,405 stretching from southern New York to northeast Mississippi.

The Harlan situation is viewed by supporters around the nation of Mrs. Harbin and her committee as a test case of what course blacks should take to improve their lot in Central Appalachia.

These national supporters, mostly spokesmen for foundations, civil rights, church and fair housing organizations, are divided into two schools of thought, says Clarence (Butch) Wright, former staff member of the now-defunct Black Appalachia Commission and a veteran observer of black activism throughout Appalachia.

Wright says the difference of opinion is over whether blacks should seek to block federal grants (as the Save Georgetown Committee did in one case in Harlan) or compel cities to grant minorities equal access to federal money services once a grant has been made.

Wright says he favors the latter course, because blocking federal money to impoverished areas like Harlan causes blacks to lose the support of poor whites, with whom blacks need to form alliances.

Both courses could be pursued through the federal courts, or by using the administrative apparatus available within federal agencies, like HUD, which have equal opportunity guidelines set down by Congress that they are supposed to follow in the allocation of funds.

Texas Tech in 31-28 thriller over Texas

LUBBOCK, Tex. (AP) — Junior tailback Billy Taylor soared like a springboard diver into the end zone on fourth down from a yard away with 7:20 to play Saturday, bringing 6th-ranked Texas Tech from behind for a vital 31-28 Southwest Conference football victory over 15th-ranked Texas.

The victory kept the Red Raiders (6-0) unbeaten and untied and put them into a SWC tie with Arkansas at 3-0.

Allison dashed for 22 yards on a critical third and seven deep in Tech territory to keep the drive alive.

With first and goal to go at the Texas two, the shoulder-to-shoulder Longhorns put up a stiff stand and stopped Allison three straight times.

Taylor, who has sommersaulted over the Texas defensive line for a touchdown in the first quarter, ten delivered under pressure with a record Jones Stadium crowd of 54,187 giving approval.

Tech's defense stopped a final Longhorns drive on the Red Raider 38-yard line. Texas Coach Darrell Royal disdained a chance for a tying field goal and Tech lineback Thomas Howard stopped Johnny (Gold Medal) Jones cold on the fourth and five play.

The preseason SWC favorites Longhorns dropped to a 3-2-1 record overall and 2-1 in the league standings.

Texas, an underdog against Texas Tech for the first time in the history of the two schools, built up a 21-10 lead early in the third period when Johnson bolted 60 yards untouched.

But Allison rallied the penalty-prone Red Raiders with a five-yard touchdown gallop and Larry Isaac ripped 15 yards for a touchdown to put the Raiders back on top 24-21.

Allison scrambled 25 times for 106 yards and completed 10 of 11 passes for 87 yards in a dazzling show.

Tech continually lost momentum because of penalties. The Red Raiders were flagged 13 times for 79 yards and constantly stayed in hot water.

But backup Texas quarterback Ted Constanzo scored on a two-yard bootleg and then Johnson ripped off his three touchdown runs to daze the Red Raiders.

The 6-0 record is the best start for a Texas Tech team since 1941 and the Red Raiders have won 10 of their last 11 games.

Royal decides against trying late field goal

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
R-T Sports Writer

LUBBOCK—Texas coach Darrell Royal decided against going for a 52-yard game tying field goal on a fourth and six situation with 1:50 left in the game against Texas Tech Saturday in Jones Stadium, but he tried to kick one after the game.

Needless to say, Texas did not make that crucial first down and Tech nailed down a 31-28 Southwest Conference victory over the Longhorns when linebacker Thomas Howard sacked Johnny (Lampasas) Jones for a three-yard loss to give Tech the ball.

When all was said and done, Royal walked toward the losers dressing room until he found a loose cigarette wrapper laying in the concourse. He tried to boot a field goal into the Tech crowd, which by this time, was madly screaming, "We're No. 1."

"We sent Erxleben (Russell) in for the field goal attempt, but when we assessed the wind, we decided that 52 yards would just be too much to ask. We needed another big first down to really be in his range," Royal explained.

Despite the loss, Royal had some things to be pleased about. First of all, his sagging offense had come to life with 273 yards rushing, despite losing Earl Campbell early in the first period. He got good quarterback play from Ted Constanzo and freshman fullback Jimmy Johnson filled in well for the lost Campbell with 101 yards rushing and three touchdowns.

"We did some things on offense that I've been wanting to see," Royal said, "But we just couldn't stop Tech. They come at you from every angle, and that Allison (Rodney) was absolutely superb. Ask why we lost, and you have to point the finger at him.

"TECH IS the best offensive team we have faced in several years, and they are now in the best position to win the conference race. We're not out of it yet because we have gone to the Cotton Bowl with one loss, but it will be a chore for any team to beat Tech."

Royal said that the big play that turned the tide for Tech was when the Longhorns had Allison trapped for what appeared to be a big loss before he broke loose for a 22-yard gain and a first down in Texas territory. Tech went on to score.

"I don't know how we missed him, but we did a pretty good job of it all

Steve Sloan mighty happy following great victory

BY TED BATTLES

LUBBOCK — As a spectator treat, it was worthy of a Super Bowl buildup and maybe Texas Tech Coach Steve Sloan described what a lot of witnesses felt.

Beseiged by a mob of writers at the Tech locker room door after Texas Tech's dramatic come-from-behind win over Texas, Steve, so flushed he looked like he quarterbacked every exciting play with Rodney Allison, sighed wearily, "I can hardly stand up. I'm so tired. It was a great game...The game probably was the best I've seen from a fan standpoint."

Texas Tech, still unaccustomed to the adulation that accompanies a lofty No. 6 ranking, beat "old pro" Texas, which takes national prestige like it was something that automatically came with the franchise, in a Pier Six blockbuster that was like something out of Rocky Graziano-Tony Zale.

TECH CAME out of the chute fired up seeking quick and complete capitulation and when Billy Taylor got the Raiders on the scoreboard 6:20 into the game after a Larry Dupre interception gave Tech the ball on the Texas 13, it looked like just maybe there might be a bloodless surrender.

So much for dreams. Texas struck back on touchdown drives of 65 yards from the ensuing kickoff and 72 yards on the next possession as Ted Constanzo replaced starting quarterback Mike Cordaro.

Fullback Earl Campbell ripped the Raiders inside with powerful runs and Johnny Lam Jones fled outside to make a mockery of the Tech defense.

"They were cross-blocking on our middle linebacker and walling off the tackle," explained Tech linebacker Mike Mock, "And with Campbell's super agility and balance he was hurting us and then Lam was killing us outside."

WHEN TEXAS recovered a deflected pitchout and drove to first down on the Tech 19 after assuming a 14-7 lead early in the second period, a rout seemed in prospect.

Razorbacks in rally to down Owls, 41-16

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. (AP) — Arkansas quarterback Ron Calcagni scored one touchdown and set up two others with his passing and running as the 14th-ranked Razorbacks rallied for a 41-16 Southwest Conference victory over Rice Saturday.

Arkansas trailed 7-0 at the half but scored touchdowns the first four times it had the ball in the second half on drives of 79, 62, 80 and 63 yards. Less than a minute deep in the third quarter, it was 34-10.

Calcagni's three-yard run on the option play put Arkansas ahead 30-10 with 3:08 left in the third period. The Razorbacks clinched it without any time elapsing.

Steve Little's kickoff hit on the Rice 1 and bounced into the end zone where it was ignored by the Owls. Arkansas' Muskie Harris fell on the ball for a touchdown.

The next time Arkansas got the ball Calcagni broke loose on a 38-yard run to the Owls' 17. Five plays later, he came right, ducked under a defender and made an excellent pitch to Ben Cowins who scampered three yards for the score.

Calcagni's 20-yard pass to wide receiver Bruce Hay carried to the Rice one and set up Arkansas' first touchdown.

Arkansas is now 3-0 in SWC and Rice is 1-4 in the conference.

Micheal Forrest came off the bench to score two touchdowns in the second half. His 53-yard run put Arkansas ahead 14-7. He also scored on a three-yard run in the fourth quarter.

There was some confusuion over Harris' recovery for a touchdown. Cliff Speegle, commissioner of the Southwest Conference, said that if the football had carried into the end zone on the fly it would have been blown dead and ruled a touchback. He said that since the ball hit on the field of play, it was a live ball.

Arkansas was ineffective on offense in the first half. Rice, which had played a four-man front all year, opened against the Razorbacks with a five-man defensive line. Arkansas managed only four first downs in the first half and never put two back to back.

Cowins, the leading rusher in the SWC, gained 121 yards on 20 carries. Calcagni ran for 91 yards and passed

Shepard guides Odessa by Purple Pack, 30-14

By PAUL DOMOWITCH
R-T Sports Writer

ODESSA-There will come a day very, very soon when his name will be a household word. Little children will imitate his every move and pattern their lives after him. And grown ups will stare in disbelief at his accomplishments.

Paul Gallico, one of the greatest sports writers of the past century, said of athletes like him: "they are creatures of wonder, who dabble in perfection and have immortality as their unavoidable destiny."

Such is Darrell Shepard. Right now, there is no high school football player in Texas that could be called his equal. And that is only for starters.

FRIDAY NIGHT, before 10,500 onlookers and idolizers at W.T. Barrett Stadium, Shepard passed for 168 yards and a touchdown, ran for 117 yards and another score, and put an end to the slim hope the Midland Bulldogs had of capturing a District 5-4A crown, as Odessa walked away with a 30-14 victory.

Shepard's statistics could have been even more remarkable—if he deemed it so. But the 170-pound wonderlust does not have a penchant for greed.

Shepard wasted very little time taking command, as he lead his team for a score on their first possession. He and backfield mate Jeff Holder ran at will on the Broncs' opening drive, but it was another Odessan-Daniel Stevens who danced in from the one-yard line with 4:21 left in the first quarter to open up the scoring gates.

HOLDER WAS a doubtful starter due to a leg injury, but the 190-pound senior still managed to pick up 93 yards rushing before the evening was through.

With :35 seconds left in the half, Midland came up with their answer to the Immaculate Reception. A fine run by Rusty Maroney and two pass interference calls on Odessa moved the Pack inside the Broncho five, when Widener threw a pass in split end David Isby's direction. The ball caromed off an Odessa defender, but Ward caught the ball right in stride, to narrow the gap to 17-14.

It was on that drive however, that Maroney left the game with an injury, and he was unable to return .

Bass sparks Houston past TCU with 4 touchdowns

HOUSTON (AP) — Don Bass caught four touchdown passes including three in the first half to carry the University of Houston to a 49-21 Southwest Conference football victory over winless Texas Christian Saturday.

The victory boosted Houston's record to 4-1 in SWC play and to 5-2 overall. The Frogs dropped to 0-4 in the conference and 0-7 for the year.

Bass snared three touchdown passes from starting quarterback Danny Davis and one from backup Bubba McGallion, as Houston quarterbacks passed for 443 yards including 221 yards in the first half alone.

Bass caught TD passes of 72, 32 and 54 yards from Davis and 11 yards from McGallion.

Other Houston scores came on a 17-yard run by Alois Blackwell and a five-yard run by Randy Love.

TCU scored late in the first half on Jimmy Dan Elzner's 8-yard pass to James Harris and a one-yard run by Tony Accomando early in the second half.

Davis completed six of nine passes for 230 yards and three touchdowns.

Davis and Bass started things going for Houston early in the first quarter. Davis found the fleet split end ahead of TCU defenders for a 72-yard pass and run play with Bass going the final 54.

Following Love's score, Bass did his thing for the third time, this time with McGallion hitting him for an 11-yard touchdown pass.

McGallion followed with an eight yard scoring pass to Robert Lavergne for the Cougars' fifth scoring pass of the game, tying a school record. The five touchdown passes also tied TCU's mark of touchdown passes scored by an opponent.

Gerald Modzelewski wrapped up the scoring for TCU with a five-yard scamper midway through the fourth quarter as the Frogs lost for the 27th time in their last 28 contests.

Houston's 443 yards passing set a SWC record, eclipsing SMU's mark of 437.

Texas A&M quarterback David Walker sits atop SMU's defensive tackle Jeff Sutton in second quarter action of their tilt in the Cotton Bowl Saturday afternoon. Walker was caught for a short loss on this play.

Aggies blank SMU with stout defense

DALLAS (AP) — Workhorse fullback George Woodard rushed for 155 yards on 34 carries and freshman Curtis Dickey dashed for two third-quarter touchdowns Saturday to lead Texas A&M to a 36-0 regionally televised Southwest Conference victory over Southern Methodist.

While the Aggies' swarming rush defense stopped the squirming runs of SMU's Ricky Wesson and Tennell Atkins, the A&M offense, engineered by quarterback David Walker, spent most of the afternoon in the shadow of the Mustang goal.

But a big-play SMU defense stopped repeated Aggie scoring threats in the first half and only a 58-yard field goal by Tony Franklin avoided a scoreless tie at intermission.

In the third quarter, A&M went on 39 and 98-yard drives climaxed by one and nine-yard scores by Dickey to give the Aggies an unsurmountable 16-0 lead.

The victory gave the Aggies a 6-2 season record and a 3-2 SWC mark. SMu dropped to 2-6 and 1-4.

The first A&M scoring drive started when defensive end Eugene Sanders recovered a bad Wesson pitch at the SMU 39. After that it took nearly five minutes for the Aggies to score in ten plays with Dickey getting the final yard.

The second third-quarter touchdown came after a 64yard punt by SMU's Ken Rosenthal to the A&M two. The 98yard drive again took ten plays before Dickey scored from the nine with 1:56 left in the period.

The Aggies made it a rout in the fourth quarter — scoring on a six-yard pass from Walker to tight end Gary Haack, an eightyard run by substitute halfback Adger Armstrong, and a 13yard scamper by Keith Baker with three seconds to go.

The Aggies reached SMU's five-yard line three times in the first half without scoring a point, although Franklin's 58yard field goal gave them a slim 3-0 lead at halftime.

SMU's Mark Howe intercepted a David Walker pass on the Aggies' first possession of the game, but Atkins fumbled on the next play and A&M took over at the SMU 39. A 21-yard pass from Walker to Dickey pushed the Aggies to the 12, but on fourth-and-two from the four, A&M turned down a possible field goal and SMU defense stopped Woodard oneyard short of the first down.

Early in the second quarter, a 15-yard dash by Dickey, a 13step rumble by Woodard and a 26-yard run by Walker gave the Aggies another first down on the 12. An offside penalty against SMU helped A&M to the four, but the Mustangs held after a procedure penalty against the Aggies. Then, Franklin, trying to move within one of tying the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) record for consecutive field goals, missed his tenth attempt, a 30-yard shot. He had field goals of 64 and 65 yards last week against Rice.

The Aggies' third foray inside the SMU five came after defensive back Mike Williams intercepted a long Wesson pass at the A&M 40 and returned it 48 yards to the 12 with 3:13 left in the first half. Woodard banged for eight yards in the first play, but the Mustangs defense held again — stopping Dickey for no gain and holding Woodard to one-yard before Walker threw an incomplete pass on fourthand-one.

A&M totaled 457 yards, including 349 on the ground, while SMU was heldto 97 total yards including 84 rushing.

Senior golf final today

PINEHURST, N.C. (AP) — Paul Severin of Richmond, Va.,birdied the 22nd hole Saturday to nip Ernest Hirschoff of Syracuse, N.Y., and join James Tingley of Glen Cove, N.Y., in the final of the North and South Senior Golf Tournament.

Tingley edged medalist Ed Ervasti of London, Ont., the Canadian senior champion, 1 up.

The two 58-year-olds will meet over 18 holes for the title today.

Severin, two-time All-American football end at North Carolina, won the 18th hole to get even on the No. 2 course of the Pinehurst Country CLub. He and Hirschoff then parred the first three extra holes. On the long fourth, Severin two-putted from 12 feet for a clinching par after Hirschoff was bunkered with his third and could not get down in two.

Ervasti led Tingley 1 up at the turn, but Tingley swept three in a row starting at No. 15, going par-birdie-par, and halved the par four 18th.

The matches were played in cool, overcast weather.

East Texas State in 28-3 victory

COMMERCE, Tex. (AP) — East Texas State quarterback Terry Skinner hit receiver Chris Lemberg for two third quarter touchdowns to pace the Lions to a 23-8 Lone Star Conference victory over Southwest Texas State Saturday.

Skinner hit Lemberg on a 25yard scoring toss before later connecting for a nine-yard touchdown play as the Lions scored 20 third quarter points to break open a 3-0 game on a muddy field.

Lion cornerback Rex Fox returned an interception 26 yards for the third touchdown of the period as ETSU extended its LSC mark to 3-3 and its overall record to 4-3-1.

Oklahoma State edges past Missouri, 20-19

STILLWATER, Okla. (AP) — Halfback Terry Miller dodged, darted and bulled his way for 228 yards and three touchdowns as Oklahoma State rallied from a 16-point deficit to corral Missouri, 20-19, to keep the Cowboys in the thick of the Big Eight title chase.

Down 10-0 at the half, the Cowboys fell behind 16-0 at the start of the third quarter when Missouri's Joe Stewart scored on a 100-yard kickoff return that tied a school record.

But touchdown runs of 23 and two yards by Miller cut the margin to 16-14 at the end of the third period and a 10-yard jaunt by the junior from Colorado Springs, Colo., in the fourth period gave the Cowboys the victory.

The win upped Oklahoma State's Big Eight record to 3-1 and insured them a tie for the loop lead with the winner of the Colorado-Oklahoma game and Nebraska, if the Huskers could get by Kansas.

It was the third straight game that Miller had set a personal high for rushing and his 228 yards on 36 carries was the third best in O-State history.

The 10th-ranked Missouri Tigers, who were coming off an upset of Nebraska and had beaten such teams as Southern California and Ohio State, fell to 2-2 in the Big Eight and 4-3 overall.

Cowboy quarterback Charlie Weatherbie, who came off the bench in State's big win over Oklahoma last week, again came in for freshaman starter Harold Bailey and directed the Cowboys to all three of their touchdowns.

The Cowboys traveled 65 yards on their winning march, with Miller picking up 40 yards in nine carries in the drive which was capped by his 10yard scoring spurt with eight minutes left. The two-point conversion attempt failed, but the 20-19 lead stood up.

Fired-up Colorado upends OU, 42-31

BOULDER, Colo. (AP) — Fired-up Colorado, rallying behind versatile sophomore quarterback Jeff Kanpple and thehard running of Tony Reed and Jim Kelleher, exploded for three second-half touchdowns and ripped Oklahoma 42-31 in a wild Big Eight football game Saturday.

The 19th-ranked Buffaloes, trailing 31-20 midway through the third quarter, struck quickly. Knapple unloaded a 70-yard bomb to wingback Billy Waddy to pull within 31-26, and Reed ran for the two-point conversion.

Six plays later, Kelleher ran one yard for the go-ahead score.

The Buffs then marched 85 yards in 11 plays for a third TD. Knapple passed 38 yards to Emergy Moorehead and ran 19 yards to the two-yard line, setting up another Kelleher touchdown — his third of the day.

The 13th-ranked Sooners had rolled to a 14-3 lead in the first quarter, largely on the breakaway running of fullback Ken King, who got Oklahoma rolling with a 71-yard jaunt for a score midway through the opening period.

Royal nixes field goal day," Royal said.

Royal pulled starting quarterback Mike Cordaro after the first two series of plays, trailing 7-0. Cordaro had thrown one interception and had tossed another pass into the teeth of the Tech secondary without a receiver in sight.

Royal refused to say why he pulled Cordaro and replaced him with Constanzo. "We rate both quarterbacks about the same. Ted came in and did a good job for us, but I wouldn't say that he has earned the right to be our top man," Royal said.

Johnson, a freshman from Pasadena, provided the Longhorns with a lot of rushing punch, and his 60-yard TD scamper to open the third period gave Texas a 21-10 lead. Many wondered if Campbell could have done any better, but Royal said that the loss of Campbell with a strained left hamstring could have been the difference in the game.

"We missed the big guy (Campbell)," Royal said. "He was really ready for this game. I was expecting big things from him today."

"I felt a little pain in the leg before the game, but I didn't think too much about it. It felt good during that first touchdown drive," Campbell said after the game.

JOHNSON'S THIRD period 60-yard romp for paydirt came right up the Tech middle. "I don't think I was ever touched. They played for the option, and I was wide open by the time I hit the line of scrimmage," said the freshman, who has had limited playing time since the Boston College game that opened the season.

Jones, world's fastest football player and Olympic star, had another good day with 95 yards rushing. He set up the Longhorns' second touchdown with a 46-yard run that once looked like a busted play at best. His 46-yarder turned into about a 95-yard run before he reversed his field and found his way to the Tech 28-yard line before all was said and done.

"I guess they just missed me," Jones said.

Howard made up for it on Texas' last play of the game when he threw Jones for a three-yard loss. Texas lost, and the 'Horns admitted it.

"They beat us," Royal said. "What more do you want from us."

Sloan happy over victory

Longhorns' momentum by tossing the Steers' for 27 yards in losses on three successive plays, forcing an unsuccessful 62-yard field goal attempt by Russell Erxleben.

Tech rallied for a field goal just before half, driving from its 20 to the Texas 17 to set up Brian Hall's 34-yard kick. Big play was a 35-yard run by Allison to the Texas 45 with a third and 22 situation.

"It was a trap-draw, a play we just put in this last week," said Allison.

THAT MADE it 14-10 Texas at half, but Jimmy Johnson, who did an excellent job of filling in for Campbell after Earl suffered a recurrence of an old leg injury in the first period, dashed 60 yards for a touchdown on Texas' first offensive play of the second half.

Tech defenders appeared to run off and leave the field wide open for Johnson and Mock said that was just about what happened.

"It was a communications problem. Linebacker Thomas Howard thought Buell was going to cover and Buell thought Howard was taking the inside. As a result, neither one did."

Tech was tagged with a costly 79 yards on 13 plays to only two penalties for six yards for Texas. Most of the Raider infractions were for jumping offsides on defense.

"WHEN CONSTANZO came into the game, he was using a double count and that combined with our anxiety eventually got all of us jumping at least once," Mock said.

Allison had a spectacular day with 10 of 11 completions for 87 yards and 106 yards rushing in 25 carries.

Most of the passes were short passes of either the swing or dump variety to the backs, "It was Texas' good pass rusher that forced most of them. I had to dump the ball to the backs," Allison said.

Allison climaxed an 80-yard drive in the third quarter with a five-yard keeper to cut Texas lead to 21-16 and halfback Larry Isaac, who set a new career rushing mark for a Raider back, turned in the day's most determined run, 16 yards, to put Tech ahead 24-21 with 2:08 left in the third period.

Isaac should have been stopped at the six, but fought his way over three Steer tacklers for the TD.

For gaining 91 yards in 16 carries, Larry was awarded the game ball by Coach Sloan. "Naturally, getting the record was a thrill, but it doesn't even come close to beating Texas."

AFTER TEXAS took a 28-24 lead early in the final quarter, Allison again came up with a clutch run that kept alive Tech's game-winning 76-yard drive. Faced with third and nine at the Tech 25, Allison went back to pass, was trapped and broke loose to free-lance 22 yards for a first down at the Tech 46.

"The biggest play of the game," said Sloan, "may have been that one when Rodney was trapped trying to pass and then scrambled out for a first down in the fourth quarter."

Defensive coordinator Bill Parcells heaved a sigh of relief after it was over, "Playing Texas is like going on a big game hunt. You have to be prepared for two types though— a rhinocerous (Earl Campbell) and an Antelope (Johnny Lam Jones).

"I didn't know if we had the weapons to stop both of them."

There were two records set Saturday. Isaac eclipsed Donnie Anderson's career rushing record of 2,280 yards on 526 carries with an 11-yard run in the second period that raised his career total to 2,284 yards in 460 carries.

West Texas fans set the other mark, a Jones Stadium record of 54,187 to beat the 53,124 for the Texas game in 1970.

Bobick captures 38th pro fight

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Undefeated heavyweight Duane Bobick won his 38th professional fight Saturday when his jarring body blows brought him a unanimous decision over Fred "Young Sanford" Houpe in their nationally televised 10-round bout.

Bobick, 214, from Bowlus, Minn., lost the opening round to the 195-pound Houpe from Oakland, Calif., but by the fourth round his body shots had slowed his slim opponent.

Houpe had not lost in 12 previous bouts but by the end of this fight at the Aladdin Hotel Theater for the Performing Arts, his left eye was closed and even a rally in the final round could not bring him the victory.

A crowd of 4,000 watched as the Bobick-Houpe was the second of two nationally televised 10-rounders.

Quarry used his left hook to full advantage in taking the victory in a brawling battle.

Bobick began his rally in the fourth round and three times in near succession landed lefts and rights to Houpe's head.

The loser's eye was swelling by the end of the fifth round. In the seventh, a Bobick right to the head sent Houpe reeling into the ropes. There were no knockdowns.

Judge Art Lurie scored 47-45, Harold Buck 47-43 and Johnny Mag 46-44, all for Bobick. The Associated Press scored it 4744.

The 25-year-old Bobick, managed by former world heavyweight champion Joe Frazier, collected $35,000 and Houpe, 26, $10,000. They had met once before when both were amateurs and Bobick also won that decision.

Houpe once was managed by comedian Redd Foxx, hence the "Young Sanford" monicker after the Foxx TV series "Sanford and Son."

Former middleweight contender Joey Giambra was the referee in the Quarry-Bethea fight, but the referee does not score in Nevada.

Lurie scored 48-44, Buck 4744, and Mag 47-45, using the 5-point must system.

Memphis State beats Tulane

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Terdell Middleton picked up 172 yards and scored both touchdowns as Memphis State overcame key fumbles to whip Tulane 14-7 in a clash of college football independents Saturday night.

First-half fumbles killed Memphis State drives at the Tulane 42- and 18-yard lines— the 26th and 27th times this season that Memphis State fumbled the ball away.

Middleton's first touchdown came as the climax of six-play, 80-yard drive that began with the opening kickoff.

He gained 67 of those 80 yards on runs of 26, 12 and five yards to put the ball in scoring position, then zipped around his own right end for the final 34.

That score came three minutes into the game.

Middleton's final touchdown came with three minutes remaining on a three-yard burst over guard.

Karate death brings concern among devotees

By ALAN DUNN
The Manchester Guardian

LONDON — The accidental death of a young contestant in the comparatively new sport of full contact karate has raised concern over possible dangers among traditional karate devotees, who see ful contact as bad for their image.

Police have speculated that Jeff Douglas, of Birmingham, might have had a heart attack when, towards the end of his recent heavyweight bout in the British Professional full contact karate championships at Belle Vue, he was floored by an accidental kick in the groin by his opponent and friend, Frank Lynch. Douglas fell unconscious and died later in the hospital.

Karate is basically an amateur sport, with professional coaching, but three-to-four years ago the Americans created a professional off-shoot — full contact, oddly sometimes spelled with a K in Britain — which has been successful commercially.

Full contact karate relates more to Siamese foot boxing than to karate. Special pads are worn on the hands and feet and the aim is to strike blows to an opponent's body to score points or knock him out. It is there that the two sports part company, for karate contestants never actually strike an opponent.

It is, according to Terry O'Neil, editor of Fighting Arts Magazine and a member of the British karate team which beat the Japanese last year, like stopping a bullet in flight. "In karate by a trained, discipline approach we generate enough power to put out a man, but it is part of the basic philosophy of the sport not to carry the blow through. This makes the sport attractive to many people, for they know that they are not going to get seriously hurt, while at the same time they are building an enormous confidence.

"But it is basically a participant sport — you need a knowledgeable audience to spot what is going on in a contest — and the Americans have now produced a variant that is a spectator sport," O'Neil says. "Karate contestants would have difficulty with full contact, which requires a different type of hip and shoulder power and swing of the foot to achieve penetration.

"The fear was that boxers could enter the sport and clean up — prizes in Britain have been up to $680 for a heavyweight bout in Glasgow in May and an average of about $120 — so a rule was built in requiring six kicks to be made in each round."

Buying a diamond soon? Confused about diamond pricing? We wouldn't blame you a bit. A ¼ carat diamond may cost a variety of prices. The size may remain the same, but the quality of every diamond differs slightly from that of every other stone mined. Diamonds are a unique gem that require specialized knowledge on the part of a jeweler. Tulsa Hurricanes trip Louisville 20-10

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Quarterback Ron Hickerson threw and eight-yard touchdown pass late in the third quarter and then scored on a 71-yard run late in the game Saturday to lead Tulsa to a 20-10 college football victory over Louisville.

Hickerson, a 6-foot-2, 200pound senior, threw the winning pass to Marcus Hatley with 3:36 left in the third period to give Tulsa a 13-10 lead. His clinching run, with 1:45 left in the game, came on a rollout down the right sideline.

After being dominated in the second period as Louisville took a 10-7 lead on a 31-yard field goal by Pedro Posadas, Tulsa rebounded to control the game offensively and defensively in the second half.

Tulsa is now 5-2 while Louisville fell to 3-4.

The game, which was played in a constant rain, was marked by 11 fumbles — seven by Tulsa. The Hurricanes lost four while Louisville lost one, a Calvin Prince bobble at Tulsa's 21.

Iowa beats Northwestern

IOWA CITY, Iowa (AP) — A three-yard touchdown run by Butch Caldwell with 3:14 remaining allowed Iowa to beat a gambling Northwestern team, 13-10, Saturday in Big Ten Conference football.

Winless Northwestern marched to the Iowa 12-yard line after the go-ahead touchdown and, on fourth and five, shunned an almost certain tie by not going for a field goal.

JIM KELLEHER, Colorado fullback, holds the football under him as he creeps across the goal line for first Buffaloe touchdown Saturday in Boulder, Colo. The Buffs knocked off Oklahoma's Sooners, 42-31. Obie Moore (57) makes stop too late for OU.

Arkansas St. whips Lamar

JONESBORO, Ark. (AP) — Fullback Leroy Harris scored three touchdowns to lead Arkansas State to a 31-0 Southland Conference victory over Lamar University Saturday night.

Harris scored on runs of two, one and two yards as the Indians capitalized on frequent Lamar miscues to set up early scoring chances.

The big senior fullback also led all rushers with 157 yards on 25 carries.

The victory was Arkansas State's first in league play against two losses and improved the Indians' overall record to 4-5. The loss put Lamar at 2-6 overall and 0-3 in conference play.

Arkansas State took advantage of a mishandled snap from center midway in the first quarter to set up its first touchdown.

After recovering the ball on the 11, it took Harris three plays to score. The final attempt came from two yards out.

Bobby Watson added a 31yard field goal early in the second quarter to make it 9-0 for ASU. After another Lamar fumble, the Indians went 31 yards and Harris dove across from one yard out to make it 17-0 at half.

UCLA takes 30-21 Pac 8 win

SEATTLE (AP) — Theotis Brown rushed for 220 yards and three touchdowns and James Owens ran for 123 yards and another score to lead unbeaten third-ranked UCLA to a 30-21 Pacific-8 Conference football victory over Washington Saturday.

The big sophomore halfback, who packed the ball 35 times, gave the Bruins a 7-0 lead with his 29-yard TD run that capped a 72-yard drive with the opening kickoff.

Brown's second touchdown came on a 15-yard run that gave UCLA, now 7-0-1 overall and 4-0 in the Pac-8, the 14-3 lead midway in the second period.

Owens, also a sophomore who carried 23 times, scored on a 34-yard run that put UCLA on top 24-13 late in the third period.

The Huskies, who had beaten UCLA eight straight times at home since 1958, battled back to cut the Bruins' lead to 24-21 with 6:52 remaining on quarterback Warren Moon's 28-yard scoring pass to Scott Greenwood. Moon then hit Ron Rowland for a two-point conversion.

Washington, now 4-4 over-all and 2-2 in conference play, trailed 14-13 at halftime. Freshman tailback Joe Steele raced 89 yards with a kickoff for a touchdown that closed the gap to 14-10 with 8:33 in the half. Steve Robbins' second field goal for the Huskies, a 32-yarder, came nine seconds before halftime. He booted a 31-yarder earlier in the second period.

Michigan St. swamps Purdue

EAST LANSING, Mich. (AP) — Michigan State exploded for five second-half touchdowns, three on scoring passes by quarterback Ed Smith, as MSU came from behind Saturday to swamp Purdue 45-13 in a Big Ten football game.

Trailing 13-10 at the half, Smith hit split end Eugene Byrd for 24-yard strike and then tossed an eight-yard flip to fullback Levi Jackson for another score. Moments later, reserve tailback Leon Williams roared 33 yards in three plays, the last a 12-yard sweep to cap a third-period scoring spree.

Smith notched his third TD pass of the day in the failing minutes on a four-yard toss to tight end Mike Cobb and reserve fullback Alonzo Middleton charged 14 yards for another score at the final gun.

The Spartan defense, meanwhile, helped by a soaking rain which began in the third quarter, shut out the Boilermaker attack in the second half.

Duke rips Georgia Tech

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — Quarterback Mike Dunn scored on runs of 10 and 32 yards as Duke took advantage of Georgia Tech's errors to roust the Yellow Jackets 31-7 Saturday.

The crowd of 30,300 saw Duke run up a 17-0 first half lead and add two more touchdowns in the second half in posting its biggest victory margin over Georgia Tech since 1940 when the Blue Devils won 41-7.

Southern Cal cops win over Bears 20-6

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Quarterback Vince Evans passed for 120 yards and scrambled for 54 more and a touchdown Saturday as the Southern California Trojans methodically ground out a 20-6 victory over Pacific-8 foe California.

The triumph keeps the Trojans tied for the Pacific-8 lead with UCLA at 4-0 as the fourthranked Trojans ran their overall record to 6-1.

California was never really able to generate much offense. The Bears' ground game was ineffective all afternoon and their star quarterback, Joe Roth, completed just 12 of 27 passes for 109 yards and was intercepted once.

Bell gained 78 yards on 24 carries and scored the Trojans' first touchdown of the contest.

A fumble recovery by the Trojans' Mike McDonald early in the first quarter set up USC's first score. McDonald fell on Vern Smith's fumble on the Cal 22-yard line. Moments later Bell skirted left end for six yards and the score.

In the second quarter, the Bears closed to within four points after Charlie Yauman recovered a fumble by the Trojans' Dennis Thurman on the Southern Cal 25.

The Bears, however, had to settle for a 33-yard field goal by Jim Breech after a running play and two Roth pass attempts netted just two yards.

A spectacular 55-yard pass from Evans to Randy Simmrin helped the Trojans extend their lead to 13-3 at the intermission. With less than a minute to play, Evans connected with Simmrin to move the ball to the Cal 27.

Penn in upset win over Tigers

PRINCETON, N.J. (AP) — A last minute scoring drive climaxed by an 8 yard touchdown pass from Bob Graustein to Jim Cioffredi gave the University of Pennsylvania a 10-9 victory over Princeton at Palmer Stadium here Saturday.

Penn called its last time out with 47 seconds left in the game and the ball on Princeton's 31 yard line. Graustein threw a 23-yard pass to Cioffredi who was tackled on the 8.

Notre Dame nabs narrow triumph

CLEVELAND (AP) — Rick Slager's passing and a pair of field goals by Dave Reeve were the difference as 11th-ranked Notre Dame tripped surpising Navy 27-21 Saturday in the 50th renewal of their intersectional college football rivalry.

Notre Dame won its sixth straight game, overcoming a 14-3 Navy lead with 21 points in the second period and holding off an aroused Midshipmen offense in the second half.

Reeve, who opened the scoring with a 47-yard field goal in the first quarter, added a 24yarder with 11:49 left in the game, giving the Irish 27-14 lead.

Navy quarterback Bob Leszczynski, whose pinpoint passing kept the Midshipmen in the game, directed a long drive late in the fourth period that moved Navy from its 20 to Notre Dame's 16. There a fourth-down pass was tipped away by defensive back Dave Waymer at the goal line with 4:30 remaining.

The Irish, who broke a school record by holding Navy without a touchdown in the first quarter—their 21st straight quarter without a touchdown—checked Navy's last offensive thrust with an interception in the end zone by Luther Bradley as time ran out.

Slager accounted for two touchdowns and set up Reeve's second field goal with his passing. He hit Dave Kelleher for 58 yards on Notre Dame's first touchdown, threw 28 yards to Al Hunter for another score, and hit Kelleher with a 45-yard bomb before Reeve capped the scoring.

Rutgers takes win

NEW BRUNSWICK, N.J. (AP) — The Rutgers passing combination of Bert Kosup to Mark Twitty and the tough Scarlet Knights defense combined here Saturday to top Massachusetts, 24-7.

The game extended Rutgers' victory streak to 15 games over two seasons, the longest in the nation.

Kosup connected seven times for 135 yards to Twitty, who has broken the all-time Rutgers' record for passing yardage in a season.

Florida posts win over Tigers

GAINESVILLE, Fla. (AP) — Florida struck quickly on the rifle passing arm of Jimmy Fisher and running of Willie Wilder to record its sixth straight football victory Saturday, 24-19 over Auburn, for a solid lead in the Southeastern Conference.

It was the fourth SEC victory for the 12th-ranked Florida, leaving the Gators the only team unbeaten in conference play and 6-1 over-all.

Fisher earned Florida its first touchdown late in the second quarter, covering 61 yards in two plays. Both were passes to wide receiver Wes Chandler, the touchdown pass covering 44 yards.

Wilder scampered 63 yards for his touchdown midway through the third quarter. He broke a tackle in the backfield on a deep pitch by 61b4iy and sped down the left sideline.

Rockets waive rookie Hicks

HOUSTON (AP) — The Houston Rockets of the National Basketball association have waived rookie Phil Hicks.

Hicks, the Rockets' No. 2 draft choice from Tulane, was used briefly in two games, playing seven minutes without scoring.

The Rockets also announced Saturday they have signed veteran Eugene Kennedy.

Kennedy, from Texas Christian University, played five years in the American Basketball Association. Denver waived him last Wednesday.

Former pro athletes now are in politics

By BOB GREENE
AP Sports Writer

They're off and running ...but not in meters or for yards.

They're running for office.

Kemp, who quarterbacked the Buffalo Bills, is seeking his third term as U.S. Representative from New York's 38th Congressional District. The Republican-Conservative is expected to triumph easily again after winning his last two elections with about 75 per cent of the vote.

Metcalfe, who won a gold medal as a member of the American 400-meter relay team in the 1936 Berlin Olympics, is considered a heavy favorite to return to Washington as representative of Illinois' 1st District for a fourth two-year term. The Democratic candidate also was second to Jesse Owens in the 100-meter dash.

Other former athletes running for political office include baseballers Wilmer "Vinegar Bend" Mizell, infielder Bobby Richardson, catcher Mickey Owen, pitcher Larry Jackson, outfielder Don Demeter and pitcher Pat Jarvis; football's Ken Bowman and Ron Shotts; boxer Joe DeNucci and distance runner Wes Santee.

Mizell started his major league career with the St. Louis Cardinals in 1952 and hurled for the Pittsburgh Pirates and New York Giants before retiring after the 1962 season.

As a Republican, Mizell is seeking to regain the 5th Congressional District seat from North Carolina, a post he held for six years. He lost it two yeas ago to Democratic incumbent Stephen Neal.

DeNucci, 36, a former middleweight title contender, is virtually assured of election to the Massachusetts House of Representatives from the heavily Democratic district in Newton, just west of Boston.

He was edged in the primary in his first try for office two years ago, but won the Democratic nomination last month by unseating the incumbent. DeNucci quit the ring after two losses—both on close decisions—to Emile Griffith in 1972.

Santee, one-time holder of the American record in the mile at 4:00.5, is seeking his first elective office as the Republican nominee for the Kansas House of Representatives in the 46th District.

The three-pointer, Pistor's third of the game, climaxed a come from behind effort by Arizona, which trailed 35-27 with eight minutes to go.

Arizona is now 4-3 overall and 2-1 in the WAC. Utah's record is 1-6 and 1-2 in league play.

Arizona quarterback Marc Lunsford led the Arizona attack,throwing touchdown passes of 58, 45 and six yardd, besides scoring once himself on a four-yard keeper play.

The Arizona triumph overshadowed an impressive performance by Utah quarterback Dan Hagemann. He hit 17 of 28 passes for 253 yards, including a pair of touchdown passes to flanker Jack Steptoe, and scored himself on a plunge from the one-yard line.

VMI captures big win over Virginia

NORFOLK, Va. (AP) — Two field goals by freshman placekicker Craig Jones in the third quarter gave Virginia Military's Keydets a 13-7 football victory Saturday in the Oyster Bowl over Virginia's Cavaliers.

The two teams battled to a 7-7 tie in the first half before Jones came through in the third period with kicks of 25 and 29 yards after the Keydets failed to get touchdowns on two scoring threats.

Turmoil mars Scott's play

By PAUL ATTNER
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — When he was traded from Miami to the Redskins four weeks ago for Bryant Salter, Jake Scott thought he finally had rid himself of the turmoil that marred his final year with the Dolphins. But when he arrived at Washington's preseason training camp, he knew differently.

"I read where it was a controversial trade and that the Redskins had been taken on the deal," he said. "I couldn't believe it. I had never met Salter and here I was being pitted against him.

"I wasn't given a chance to prove myself. I had played in the Pro Bowl. Yet right away it was a negative trade and a negative situation for me again.

"I felt the Skins got a hell of a deal. They got me and a No. 2 draft choice, too. It wasn't like I was an all-pro in 1910. Remember, I was in the Pro Bowl last year. I must have been doing something right."

HE STILL is. After two regular-season games, Scott had intercepted three passes and recovered a fumble, although he is just starting to feel comfortable in the Redskins' defensive scheme. Meanwhile in Miami, Salter is being employed as the Dolphins' fifth defensive back, and the team was still looking for its first interception of the season.

"I wonder how the trade looks to people now?" Scott asked, smiling slightly.

When the Scott-for-Salter deal was announced, it appeared that the Redskins indeed were taking a gamble. Scott had an ailing left shoulder that had been the subject of controversy in Miami, and he had been quoted as saying it would require surgery as soon as the season was over.

So far, however, the sholder has withstood the battering and Scott now says the concern over the injury "was blown out of proportion."

"It still hurts and the first thing I'm going to do after the season is get it repaired," he said. "But I played with it last year and had a good enough season to be considered the best free safety in the AFC. It's something you live with."

Scott is unique in pro football. He is willing to stand up to management and question rules and procedures. He admits he probably is overpaid.

IN A profession renowned for its toughness and pain, Scott is considered one of its most Durable, gutty members. He has the slightly built frame (6-0, 188 pounds) of an accountant, yet he hurls himself at ball carriers like a bowling ball and he is one of the most daring punt returners.

His outspokenness has earned him a reputation for being controversial. He has had run-ins with coaches both in college and the pros and he has been fined and suspended for taking stands on issues when he found it "impossible to capitulate to things I felt were wrong."

Honesty is an obsession with Scott. His friends are those people he can trust, "people who deal with me straight, who you can talk to man-to-man. The rest I don't need. I can live without them very nicely."

Scott is a self-described free spirit. He once rode trail motorcycles and had a pickup truck.

East Carolina in 24-17 win

By CHARLES MAHER
The Los Angeles Times

Steve Grogan, the new starting pitcher for the New England Patriots, is only 23. But he has already developed a spitter.

The Patriots were playing the Pittsburgh Steelers and things were proceeding unhappily for the defending National Football League champions (who ultimately fell, 30-27). One of the Pittsburghers, Dwight White, expressed his frustration by spitting on Grogan.

Whereupon Grogan spat back. Splat. He got White right in the face.

The episode tells us two things about Grogan:

1. He can fire the wet one with accuracy from short range, but whether he can spit for distance is open to question.

2. He is a combative player, not to be intimidated even by defensive linemen who outweigh him by 50 pounds.

But can he play quarterback?

Well, in four games — a loss to Baltimore and then two surprising victories, over Miami, and Pittsburgh and Oakland — he has passed for 767 yards and eight touchdowns. And he has scored force himself on runs. He made 76 yards rushing against Miami.

On the other hand, he has thrown six interceptions and will tell you he has a lot to learn. But, at 23, he's got a lot of time to learn it.

GROGAN GOT to start about half the time last season, his rookie year, because Jim Plunkett was hurt. After the season Will McDonough of the Boston Globe did a comparison of Grogan and Steve Bartkowski, the heralded Atlanta rookie.

"Grogan outperformed him," McDonough said. "More completions. More yardage. Better percentage. Fewer interceptions. And Grogan wasn't the No. 1 choice in the whole NFL draft.

"So when the season was over and Plunkett said he wanted to be traded, the Patriots were not as reluctant to let him go as they would have been otherwise. They didn't want Plunkett to leave but I think they would have fought a lot harder to keep him if Grogan wasn't around."

The day he was traded to San Francisco, Plunkett said: "Grogan has a better passing arm than I do."

McDonough: "Grogan and Plunkett are completely different kinds. Of course, Plunkett, in his sixth year, knows more about the game. But I think this kid, at this stage, is more accomplished. He's a better runner, has a better arm, fakes better, handles the ball better. There's no comparison in ball-handling. I think Jim's big edge was he had great faith in himself. The Patriots were concerned about this kid. As a rookie, he'd get so mad and get down on himself."

ONE OF Grogan's resolutions this year was to control his temper better. And he thinks he's done a fair job, the Dwight White spitter notwithstanding.

"He's a very nice kid," McDonough said. "Quiet but smart. On IQ, he graded out as one of the highest the Patriots ever tested."

Grogan grew up in Ottawa, Kan., about 50 miles south of Kansas City, and played at Kansas State. A physical-education major, he twice made the Big 8 all-academic team.

"We threw quite a bit my sophomore year, when I was a backup, and that's basically where I learned to throw the ball. But after that we went to a running type of offense. In college, you're always hoping you can play pro ball but I never really knew if I'd have a chance."

Grogan ran well — made 664 yards one year — but there's still not much of a market for running quarterbacks in the NFL.

"My senior year people started talking like I'd be drafted," he said. "But then I got hurt and I didn't know what was going to happen."

GROGAN MISSED a few games, came back too soon and got hurt again. Many pro teams classified him as a medical risk. But New England's scouting system rated him the No. 1 quarterback prospect in the country. Finding him still available on round 5 of the draft, the Patriots took a gamble.

With Plunkett hurt much of the time and the team otherwise screwed up, the Patriots went 3-11 last season. Grogan was asked to explain the turnaround this year.

"I think part of it was we had a lot of young players," he said, "and now we're starting to mature and play together. There's a feeling of togetherness that wasn't here last year. I don't really know what brought us closer together but it seems that everybody has a special feeling about everybody else and that makes the job easier."

What about Grogan's own development?

"I'M STILL learning," he said. "I think the big thing the last couple of weeks is that our offensive line has been doing a super job. We're running the ball well and when we can do that it takes a lot of pressure off me. I can throw some but I don't have to throw for a living."

Though he started much of the time last season, he felt more like a fill-in than No. 1. They were always talking about when Plunkett would come back.

"When they traded him it was a good feeling," Grogan said, "knowing they had confidence in me."

Except for the interceptions. Sometimes, he said, he gambles too much, trying to force the ball through the defense. "Probably three of the six interceptions were balls that were tipped off receivers' hands," he said. "But I've still thrown six in three games. You just can't throw that many and expect to keep winning. I know it's going to be a big problem if I don't cut it out."

When you're 23 you're going to have problems. But if Dick Shiner is right, the Patriots can expect Grogan to solve more problems than he creates.

Shiner played for the Redskins, Browns, Steelers, Giants, Falcons and, finally, the Patriots. Elven seasons in all. He decided two weeks into camp last year that he'd had enough.

Penn State edges past Temple, 31-30

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Sophomore quarterback Chuck Fusina threw touchdown passes of 66 and 23 yards and scored on a one-yard bootleg play Saturday as Penn State edged Temple 31-30 after breaking up a two-point conversion attempt after time had elapsed.

Coach Joe Paterno's Nittany Lions claimed their fourth consecutive victory and boosted their record to 5-3 after surviving Temple's two long touchdown drives in the final six minuetes.

Fran Tarkenton feels better than ever this season

By MAL FLORENCE
The Los Angeles Times

His first pro coach, Norm Van Brocklin, said he's the type of quarterback who'll win some games he shouldn't and lose some he should win.

Others have said his passing arm isn't strong, he's too much of a gambler, he's a scrambler and you can't win consistently with a scrambler.

Now, however, he's widely acknowledged as one of the game's greatest quarterbacks, a player who, amazingly, has never missed a game because of injury and one who holds, or is closing in on, all the all-time passing records.

What has happened is that Francis Asbury Tarkenton has survived his critics. Once more, the 36-year-old Minnesota Viking quarterback says that this NFL season, his 16th, may be his best ever.

"I'm playing better today than I ever have in my life," Tarkenton said this week by phone from Bloomington, Minn. "I'm better than last year and I hope to be better next year."

WHAT SECRET elixir has Tarkenton discovered?

"Just hard ORK," HE SAID. "I still enjoy playing and I want to play now more than I ever did. So, if you've still got your enthusiasm for the game, you want to work at it. I've even found enjoyment in keeping in condition in the offseason.

"When I was in my 20s, I didn't like to work out. I probably felt I could play forever and didn't need to — but you do. Now, I'm stronger than I was at 21.

"I can run longer, about six miles, ahich I couldn't when I was 21. I can throw tme ball harder and farther. My weight is 182, which it was when I entered the University of Georgia at 17.

"This should say something to all of us. If you work hard enough, you can maintain and improve your skills. Obviously, there comes a time when you can't. But I don't feel 36 is that time for an athlete or anyone else. All I know is that I've been able to improve my skills the last two years because I've worked harder than ever."

Tarkenton is also scrambling the record books. He has moved into No. 1 and ahead of John Unitas in three categories: most touchdown passes (292), most passes attempted (5,248) and completed (2,946). He is also within easy reach of Unitas' total passing yardage record — 40,239 to 39,061.

And, no quarterback in history has run, or scrambled for more yardage — 3,629; 6.0 average and 28 touchdowns.

IT AMUSES Tarkenton that he has suddenly been discovered after entertaining but not always impressing people when bminnesota was a struggling expansion team and later with the floundering New York Giants before returning to Minnesota in 1972.

"Everyone wants to corelate the quarterback with the record of his team," Tarkenton said. "Some reporter asked me the other day what makes Ken Anderson of Cincinnati a great quarterback. I said the first thing that makes any of us great is to have a great team around us.

"Now, I'm suddenly becoming a passer when, in those other years, people said that all I could do was run. You wonder about Sonny Jurgensen, who didn't have the luxury of playing on any good teams until he was 39.

"You wonder how good he would have been with some real good teams. He'll never go down in history as a great quarterback, yet in my years he was as good a quarterback as I've played against.

"Bart Starr and John Unitas get all the accolades — and they deserve them — but I don't think they were any better than Jurgensen, if as good.

"One of the reasons that I'm so enthusiastic now is that I had to play so many years with an expansion team and with the Giants, who had no chance with inferior personnel.

"So to be able to play on a team like the Vikings for five years is fun. The only fun in the game is to win. I don't care what kind of money you're making, if you're not winning the game is a drag.

INGLEWOOD, Calif., (AP) — Amid stacks of unanswered fan mail and a steady stream of incoming telephone calls, Jerry West leaned back in a chair in his sparsely furnished Forum office, winked, smiled disarmingly and said, "Oh, man. This isn't work, this is fun."

West, 38, new coach of the Los Angeles Lakers, is childishly gleeful about the job. He is delighted and doesn't mind saying so. He admits suffering heebie-jeebies while club owner Jack Kent Cooke was deciding who was going to succeed Bill Sharman.

"I honestly didn't know I was the one until late in the afternoon before Mr. Cooke made the announcement," said West. "When I found out I wanted to shout it to anyone who would listen, but I kept my mouth shut except for a few close friends...I had to tell somebody."

NO WONDER. He was back in the mainstream of basketball for the first time since he announced his retirement as an active player two years ago.

"It's been kind of lonely," West said. "When I retired, I really retired. I still did some things—played a lot of golf, worked as a television commentator, stuff like that—but I wasn't going in any direction. I didn't have any clear-cut goals.

"I'd thought about coaching, but I didn't give it too much thought, if you know what I mean. For one thing, I didn't want to leave the Los Angeles area. I couldn't picture myself getting the coaching job at UCLA or USC. I didn't think anything about Coach Sharman leaving the Lakers. And then there was that trouble between Mr. Cooke and myself."

West said that, contrary to popular opinion in Los Angeles, he has kept close tabs on the Lakers since his retirement, even offering General Manager Pete Newell tips on how t9 cure what ailed the team the past two years.

In fact, it was Newell who was instrumental in getting West and Cooke together after two years of silence and court suits.

WEST SUED Cooke, claiming Cooke reneged on certain aspects of West's five-year contract, including promise of a position in California Sports, which owns the club, after the popular guard retired as a player.

"Pete and I talked a lot about what capacity I could work in for the company, but the subject of head coach never once came up," West said. "Then, about six weeks before I got the job, Mr. Cooke invited me in to talk. The subject of me being the new coach didn't come up at that time, either. But we resolved the other problem. It was at the second meeting that Mr. Cooke brought the matter up. And he was the one who mentioned it first."

WEST REFUSED to discuss terms of his multi-year contract, except to say he was very pleased with it.

Another thing he doesn't like to discuss is the breakup of his marriage. He made a few comments on it, thought for a moment, then said he'd prefer ft if he wasn't quoted at all on the subject because of his three sons.

"I don't like to be evasive with the press," West said, "but there are some things, like money and family matters, that just don't need to be splattered across the newspapers. Ask me any valid question about the ball club, and I'll be happy to answer it if I can."

West seems much the same person that he was the day he walked off the University of West Virginia campus into the Lakers' backcourt 14 years ago...before becoming the National Basketball Association's third all-time leading scorer, 25,192 points, with the fifthhighest scoring average in history, 27 points per game; before being a 13-time NBA AllStar; before playing on a world championship team.

"I would hate for anyone to say that I'm conceited," West said. "I'm not. I couldn't stand myself if I were. There's nothing worse than a conceited athlete.

"THE DAY I start looking at myself and saying 'Hey, you're better than that guy' is the day I start hating myself. I may be a little luckier than some fellas because I have been fortunate enough to do just what I wanted to do. I realize everyone can't be that lucky. But I'm not a better person than the next guy because of it."

It is this kind of attitude, West hopes, which will permit him to make a successful transition from player to coach.

"The first thing you do with an athlete," West said, "is treat him like a human being. I'll treat my players as my equals. If a coach is going to be successful, he has to be able to relate to people, to gain their respect. If I respect my players and their rights, I hope they'll respect me and mine—and the same holds true with the fans and press.

"And I want to make sure I know what I'm doing or talking about, that nobody can say, 'Hey, that so-and-so thinks he knows it all just because he played once upon a time....'"

Brigham Young raps Arizona St., 43-21

PROVO, Utah (AP) — Quarterback Gifford Nielsen threw two touchdown passes, including an 81-yard bomb, and completed 20 of 37 passes for 339 yards to help Brigham Young University defeat Arizona State 43-21 in a Western Athletic Conference football game here Saturday.

The victory kept BYU's chances alive for a possible trip to the Fiesta Bowl on Christmas Day. BYU is now 3-1 in conference play. ASU dropped to 2-2.

A Larry Miller interception of an ASU pass from quarterback Dennis Sproul led to BYU's first score. Split end John Van Der Wouden scored from four yards out on a fake field goal try. Dave Taylor's kick was good and BYU led 7-0 with the game less than two minutes old.

Sproul wasted little time in pulling ASU even as he connected with speedy wingback Larry Mucker on an 80-yard pass and run play.

LSU crushes Rebs in SEC shocker

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — Terry Robiskie and Charles Alexander each rushed for more than 100 yards and an alert defense set up five touchdowns with interceptions and fumble recoveries as Louisiana State crushed Mississippi 45-0 Saturday night in a Southeastern Conference football game.

Robiskie, becoming LSU's alltime career rushing leader, ran for 129 yards and scored the first touchdown on an 18-yard run. Alexander contributed 138 yards, including a 64-yard scoring run in the third quarter.

The defeat virtually eliminated Ole Miss from the SEC title race, as the Rebel record plunged to 5-4 overall and 3-2 in the conference. It also was one of their worst defeats in this long series between bitter rivals.

LSU put the game on ice with a 24-point explosion in the second quarter. Three of those touchdowns came from a series of Rebel turnovers.

Bobby Moreau scored twice, on a four-yard run and later by recovering Robiskie's fumble in the end zone.

LSU, 4-2-1 overall and 2-2 in the SEC, got other scores on Robert Dow's one-yard run, a 27-yard pass from Pat Lyons to Bruce Hemphill, and a 20-yard field goal by Mike Conway.

Illinois sinks Badgers, 31-25

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. (AP) — Tailback Chubby Phillips scored two touchdowns Saturday to lead Illinois to a 31-25 homecoming victory over Wisconsin in a rain-marred Big Ten football game.

The victory gave the Illini a 3-2 record in the Big Ten and 44 overall, while Wisconsin slipped to 1-4 in the conference and 3-5 for the season.

Phillips started the scoring with a 46-yard touchdown run on the fourth play from scrimmage and then broke a 17-17 tie early in the third quarter on a five-yard slant which put Illinois ahead to stay.

Tar Heels gain rout

WISTON-SALEM, N.C. (AP) — Delbert Powell's 98-yard kickoff return set a North Carolina record and Tom Biddle's four field goals tied another as the Tar Heels routed Wake Forest 34-14 in an Atlantic Coast Conference football game Saturday.

Wake Forest, 3-6, scored its touchdowns on runs of seven and one yards by freshman tailback James McDougald. But ineffective punting kept North Carolina, 6-2, in good field position through most of the game.

McDougald, bidding to become the first ACC freshman ever to rush for 1,000 yards in a season, entered the contest needing an average of 87 yards in the last three Deacon games to accomplish the feat.

Both teams showed explosive offenses at times, but mistakes figured prominantly in the outcome. The Tar Heels struck first when McDougald fumbled at his 23-yard line on the first play from scrimmage. Seven plays later, tailback Mike Voight bulled over left tackle from two-yards out.

Brown nips Harvard

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — Paul Michalko rallied a sluggish offense with passes to ace receiver Bob Farnham at the outset of the second half as Brown hung on for a 16-14 victory over Harvard Saturday in an Ivy League football upset.

Brown's strong defense withstood Harvard's wild multi-flex offense in the opening half, and then shackled the mistakeprone Crimson until surrendering a final touchdown on a 70yard pass play with 1:21 remaining.

Bulldogs drub SFA by 35-18

NACOGDOCHES, Tex. (AP) — Texas Lutheran quarterback Mike Washington rushed for 107 yards and passed for two touchdowns as the Bulldogs drubbed Stephen F. Austin 35-18 Saturday.

SFA's Jimmy Wright opened the game with a 99-yard touchdown on the kickoff. Lutheran tied the score when fullback Charles Franks went over from 17 yards out in the first period.

Jayne and I have lived and raised our family here in West Texas. We love this country but we're afraid our children won't have the kind of opportunity we have had if Congress continues to allow big government to grow unchecked. The bigger the government — the less freedom we leave to our children.

The future of America is bright — if we make it so.... and the future of America is now.

Bullpups blank OHS in JV tilt, 21-0

Randy Moore scored twice and Mark Carr once Saturday afternoon, as the Midland Bullpups notched their fifth victory of the season, shutting out Odessa 21-0 at Memorial Stadium.

Moore, playing both ways for Coach Stan Moore's club, hit paydirt on a 20-yard run, and added his second score on a 25 yard interception jaunt.

Also having a tremendous game for the Pack, was sophomore sensation Walter Bryson, who picked up 75 yards in rushing mileage, before going out with a foot injury early into the third quarter.

The entire first half turned out to be a defensive struggle, as neither team could penetrate the 20-yard stripes.

The Baby Broncs had a second quarter scoring opportunity when they drove from their own 47 to the Bullpup 20, but a fourth down, 36-yard field goal attempt fell far short.

Midland came within striking distance twice in the opening half, but a penalty the first time and a fumble the second squelched both, and the teams went into the lockerroom deadlocked, 0-0.

Then, with 4:52 left in the third quarter, Moore ran through a tremendous hole in the left side of the Odessa defensive wall, and ran 20 yards unmolested to put his team on the board. A shanked Broncho punt set up the scoring opportunity.

No sooner had the fans settled back in their seats, when Moore picked off a second down Odessa pass in the right flat, and had open field between himself and the end zone, 25 yards away. John Swartz' kick made it 14-0.

The Bullpup defense completely stifled Odessa after that, with Hall hopping on a fumble and Alsheimer picking off yet another stray Broncho aerial.

Carr added the insurance touchdown with 1:15 remaining on the clock, going over from one yard out and capping off a successful four play-57 yard drive. A Barry Levin to Loudd 45 yard pass play set up the strike.

Finley changes mind over sueing players during player draft

NEW YORK (AP) — Oakland A's owner Charles O. Finley reversed his field Saturday and said he will, after all, participate in the free agent draft and he would not sue his free agent players who eventually sign with other clubs.

Finley had said Friday night during a radio talk show that he was not going to participate in Thursday's historic re-entry draft of 25 free agent players. He also threatened his free agent players with a law suit if they sign with any other team.

"I said that. I definitely said all of that," said Finley by telephone from Chicago Saturday. "But I have since changed my mind."

He would not elaborate on the reasons for his change of mind, but said "I am gonna go out and borrow money to be active in the draft. I'd be a damned fool not to. I've got to survive.

"I will participate in the draft, even though I don't want to. I don't believe in it at all. But I will be there. I'm against it 110 per cent because it will lead to nothing but the destruction of the game.

"I hate to be a party to it but I have no alternative at all."

Of the 25 free agents, seven of them played out their options with Oakland this season. They are Joe Rudi, Sal Bando, Gene Tenace, Bert Campaneris, Don Baylor, Rollie Fingers and Willie McCovey. Except for the 38year-old McCovey, whom Finley says "is finished," the Oakland owner says, "I'm gonna attempt to sign my players."

It is unlikely that any of Finley's six top players will sign with Oakland before the the free agent market is tested. "I guess they would be foolish to sign," Finley said.

"If I was a ballplayer, I'd do the same damn thing," he added. "It's not the ballplayer's fault, it's no one's fault but the stupid owners."

Finley says he never sent letters warning his six top free agents of potential legal action if they signed with other teams. "The letter was cancelled. There will be no law suits," Finley said.

But Finley's retractions did not definitively erase all the potential legal action. Marvin Miller, executive director of the players association, read the possibility of collusion into a statement Finley reportedly made Friday night.

"I've talked with at least three (owners) who say they won't bid on these free agents," Finley was quoted as saying Friday night.

Miller, pointing to the July agreement between the owners and players legalizing the free agent draft, said if Finley's statement was true, "it would be an outright violation of the owners' contract with the players association."

Cincinnati President Bob Howsam said on Wednesday that the Reds will not take part in the re-entry draft.

"Given Howsam's statement and Finley's statement that he has talked to at least three others, then he is confessing publicly to collusion," Miller said.

"When I testified to the House Select Committee on professional sports, I expressed concern about the possibility of collusion. I asked the House Committee to keep a close observing eye. They said they would."

Finley was asked if his statement, that he had talked to at least three other owners who said they would not participate in the draft, was accurate.

"I have no comment on that," Finley said.

"I know what collusion is," the Oakland owner added. "We did not talk and say 'if you don't participate, we won't.' We just asked each other: 'What are you going to do?' It was more like a survey."

But Finley admitted that several teams drafting on Thursday will be making picks strictly for show.

"I know for a fact a number of clubs will be drafting just to make themselves look like they're interested," Finley said. "Some of those clubs are not able to financially afford it."

Dorsett rushes for 242 yards

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Tony Dorsett rushed for 242 yards, including a 33-yard bolt for the winning touchdown, as secondranked Pitt survived a scare and defeated aroused Syracuse 23-13 Saturday in college football.

The Panthers, 8-0, fell behind 13-10 at 6:12 into the third quarter when Syracuse's Dave Jacobs booted a 55-yard field goal, longest ever at Pitt Stadium.

That put Pitt ahead to stay at 17-13 and Carson Long raised the margin to seven points with a 47-yard field goal four plays into the fourth quarter.

Syracuse, with quarterback Bill Hurley setting a new team record of 315 total offensive yards, drove deep into Pitt territory twice after that in the fourth quarter but failed to score.

The Orangemen, 3-5 on the season, drove to the Panther 10-yard line on their next series before fullback Jim Sessler was held to no gain on a fourth down-and-inches plunge. Then, Pitt marched down the field after that for a 29-yard insurance field goal by Long.

Dorsett, who sat out most of the first quarter with an elbow injury, piled up his yardage on 34 carries, which also included a second-quarter scoring plunge.

He now has 1,314 this season and 5,448 yards on his career.

Midland nabs country title again

BROWNFIELD-The Midland High cross-country team sped to their fourth consecutive triumph of the season here Saturday afternoon, finishing first once again in a tough 11 team field.

Young Robert Wilson was the Bulldog star once again, as he carted home his fourth straight individual first and his fourth straight course record, with a clocking of 10:05 on Brownfield's two-mile course.

Coach Ed Nixon's squad finished with 51 points, while Amarillo Tascosa was a distant second with 94, and Lee third, 106.

Finishing close behind Wilson were teammates Jeff Atkins, second, 10:13; and Harold Stewart, fifth, 10:18. Other Midland harrier results: Paul Dardin, 20th, 10:51; Pat Dardin, 23rd, 10:55; Chuck Stump, 26th, 10:59; and Tom Hunter, 35th, 11:09.

Results of coach Sam Volpe's Lee unit: Charles Hamilton, seventh, 10:28; Ricky Parsons, 13th, 10:40; George Pickens, 16th, 10:47; Greg Weeks, 21st, 10:53; and Jim Bicnell, 49th, 11:34.

Four runners participated in the junior varsity event for Midland, all of them finished in the top twenty. They were Bart Wolf, fourth, 11:19; Paul Laverty, fifth, 11:25; Bob Glenn, 11th, 11:42; Matt Morrison, 16th, 12:08.

Army routs Air Force

WEST POINT, N.Y. (AP) — Clennie Brundidge, playing despite the death of his brother in an auto crash, caught an 18yard touchdown pass and Army scored again 66 seconds later following a botched kickoff reception en route to a 24-7 victory over the Air Force Academy Saturday.

Leamon Hall fired a strike to Brundidge, his high school rival, early in the second period to cap a 10-play, 65-yard drive. Brundidge, a 220-pound sophomore tight end, made the catch in a crowd of three Air Force defenders in the end zone.

Army's Greg King scored an insurance touchdown on a 33yard dash with 2½ minutes left. That score came six minutes after Mike Castelli's 34-yard field goal gave Army a 17-7 lead.

The triumph enabled Army to break a three-game losing streak and even its record at 44, the Cadets' winningest season in four years. Air Force fell to 2-6 and blew a chance to capture the five-year-old Commander-in-Chief's Trophy for the first time.

Army can take the trophy, which goes to the winner of the annual service academy threeway round-robin series, with a win or tie against Navy in Nov. 27.

Pensacola golf is washed out

PENSACOLA, Fla. (AP) — A torrential rainstorm washed out Saturday's play and postponed until Monday the scheduled windup of the $125,000 Pensacola Open Golf Tournament, the last individual event on the pro tour this year.

Jack Tuthill, tournament director for the PGA Tour, ruled the Pensacola Country Club course unplayable Saturday morning and announced single rounds of 18 holes will be played both Sunday and Monday.

The tournament originally was scheduled to end on Sunday.

The storm, which caused some local flooding, hit Pensacola during the night and turned greens, tees, fairways and bunkers into lakes.

"The course was completely unplayable," Tuthill said.

"With the large cut (83 men qualified for the final two rounds), plus the short daylight hours at this time of the year, plus the fact that it's going to take us some time to get the course in shape, it's almost impossible to go for two rounds on Sunday," he said.

No one had teed off when play was washed out Saturday.

UT-A cops 31-24 win

ARLINGTON, Tex. (AP) — Linebacker Ron Irving intercepted a pitchout and ran 20 yards for a touchdown and Roy Henry hit 20 of 36 passes to lead Southwestern Louisiana to a come-from-behind 31-24 Southland Conference victoy over Texas Arlington Saturday.

The Cajuns raged for 24 points in the fourth period to cap a wild game that had seen a 95-yard kickoff return and an 86-yard punt return by the Mavericks' Elmo Simmons and Bill Bradshaw earlier in the same quarter.

Southwestern Louisiana made its record 7-0 for the season and 3-0 in conference play, but the Cajuns are ineligible for the conference title and the post season Independence Bowl.

UTA, with a 2-1 conference record and 4-4 for the season.

Fullback Derrick Jensen broke the Mavericks season rushing reord with a 147-yard performance in 21 carries.

Then the Cajuns exploded. Henry hit Dave Oliver with a one-yard touchdown pass, and then Roy Williams followed with a 45-yard score before Irving's theft made it 28-24.

Rafael Septien added secured the victory with a 36-yard field goal with 2:03 left in the game.

Mariners' scout dies of cancer

SEATTLE (AP) — Harry Malmberg, who recently had been signed as a baseball scout for the new Seattle Mariners of the American League, died Friday, a spokesman for the expansion club said.

The spokesman said that Malmberg died of cancer in Veterans Hospital in San Francisco. He was 49.

Yale posts big win over Cornell

NEW HAVEN (AP) — Two short scoring plunges by halfback John Pagliaro and pass receptions by John Spagnola vaulted Yale to an early lead and the Eli defense stood tough for a 14-6 Ivy League football victory Saturday over an inspired Cornell.

Safety Steve Skrovan and defensive back Kurt Nondorf each intercepted two passes by Cornell quarterback Jim Hofher. The Yale line also staged a dramatic goal line stand to thwart a last-minute Big Red drive.

Buckeyes in romp over IU

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. (AP) — Fullback Pete Johnson scored two touchdowns following Indiana fumbles and Ray Griffin raced 65 yards with an intercepted pass for another score Saturday as the eighthranked Ohio State Buckeyes whipped the Hoosiers 47-7 in Big Ten football.

Indiana's defense held Ohio State without a first down until late in the second quarter. And the Hoosiers took a 7-6 lead when Scott Arnett connected with George Edgar on a 15yard touchdown pass on the first play in the second period.

The Indiana errors, however, put the Buckeyes back on top in the closing seconds of the half and Ohio State broke the game open in the third period.

A 59-yard touchdown pass from quarterback Jim Pacenta to Jim Harrell late in the third quarter and a 10-yard TD run by Jeff Logan early in the final period put the game out of reach for the Hoosiers, who have not beaten Ohio State since 1951.

Johnson's first touchdown came with just 16 seconds left in the first half and erased Indiana's one-point edge. His second touchdown, the 53rd of his career, followed another Hoosier fumble early in the third quarter.

The Buckeyes remained tied with No. 1 Michigan for the Big Ten lead at 5-0. Over-all, they are 6-1-1.

CSU takes upset win over Pokes

FORT COLLINS, Colo. (AP) — Tom Drake booted four field goals Saturday, the last a 31yarder with 1:26 left, as Colorado State upset Wyoming 19-16 and threw the Western Athletic Conference football race into a wild scramble.

Wyoming is 4-1 in the conference, while defending champion Arizona State, Brigham Young and Arizona each entered the day with one league loss.

Drake kicked his game-winner after a pass interference call on Wyoming's Dennis Camino put the ball on the Cowboy 18-yard line. Camino was called on a pass from Dan Graham to wide receiver Harry Washington, who hooked up on a 56yard touchdown pass with 10 seconds left in the first half to tie the game at 13-all.

Drake also kicked field goals of 32 and 40 yards in the first half ad 28 yards in the third quarter.

White Tail deer season nearing

By GREG AKINS

It is good to get back at the typewriter after a couple of weeks' absence. I have certainly appreciated those of you who have mentioned missing my column.

For the white-tail deer hunters, the atmosphere is full of electricity as the countdown for most of them stands at 13 days. The cool weather we have had intensifies the fever (personal observation) and the hope is that it is hot 100 degrees on opening day.

Activity will be high these next few days with preparations being made for the annual trek. Many deer camps have already been prepared and others will be soon. One of the top priorities can be done this weekend and that is checking out your trusty deer rifle. The Permian Basin Rifle Club will be open to the general public today from 1 to 5, for the purpose of sighting your rifles. There is a one dollar charge per gun, which goes to pay for the targets and instructors.

This is a real fine service offered by the club, especially in that they will have qualified people there to help you zero in that rifle. Believe me, one of the most disappointing moments is one when you miss that trophy buck, and later find out your rifle is shooting two feet to the right.

For those who don't know where the rifle range is, drive about six miles south on the Rankin highway to where the big electric transmission lines cross the road and turn back east.

Some hunters have already broken in this hunting season by making some of the western states' mule deer and elk hunts. Bill Fulgham just returned from Colorado and reported that although he came home empty-handed, he did come close to getting a trophy bull. Bill Chrane of Midland, took to the Wyoming high country, and succeeded in bagging a very fine mule deer. I saw some of the photographs of the hunt, and it appeared that most of the party was successful.

I know the concensus of the hunters who have made these trips is that the hunt was worth it, whether they bagged any game or not.

As we have been reporting lately, the pastures look to be in excellent shape and the same goes for the wildlife which we have seen. The P&WD does report that the overall deer population seems to be down slightly from last year, but I am still forecasting a good year for the nimrod.

I intend to devote most of my column space in the next few weeks to hunting and about such things as hunter safety. Also, I hope to have plenty of reports and pictures from those of you that will turn them in. I know we all are interested and would like to share in your experiences.

Alabama nabs win over State

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. (AP) — Alabama used long touchdown runs by Johnny Davis and Pete Cavan and kept the ball for most of the third quarter to beat Southeastern Conference football rival Mississippi State 34-17 Saturday.

Mississippi State led 17-12 at the half, but Alabama opened the third quarter with an 82-yard drive capped by Davis' 27yard touchdown scamper.

Jack O'Rear scrambled for two points.

Five minutes later, Cavan rambled 25 yards on a draw play to put the Tide out front 27-17.

Alabama held the ball for more than 10 minutes in the third period.

In the fourth quarter, Alabama's defense tightened, with Colenzo Hubbard intercepting two Bruce Threadgill passes to stall Mississippi State's comeback efforts.

The Bulldogs dominated the first half, marching 82 yards after the opening kickoff with Threadgill hitting Duncan McKinzie for a 16-yard touchdown pass. Thirty of those yards were gained on two roughing the kicker penalties against the Tide.

To open the second quarter, Alabama's Jeff Rutledge handed off to Tony Nathan, who pitched it back to Rutledge, who then connected with Ozzie Newsome for a 62-yard scoring play.

Michigan batters Gophers

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (AP) — Quarterback Rick Leach ran for two touchdowns and passed for two others Saturday to lead No. 1-ranked Michigan to a 45-0 Big Ten football rout of Minnesota in their annual Little Brown Jug clash.

Leach scored on runs of 28 and 6 yards in the second and third quarters, respectively. The sophomore also threw a 13-yard touchdown pass to fullback Rob Lytle in the second period and hit wingback Jim Smith with a 22-yard TD aerial in the third.

Leach wound up with 114 yards rushing in 10 carries while Lytle, who also ran at tailback, ground out 129 yards in 20 carries.

Besides the scoring toss from Leach, Lytle also tallied on a two-yard run in the final period, four plays after Dwight Hicks returned an intercepted Tony Dungy pass 51 yards to the Gopher 18.

The victory was the eighth straight for the unbeaten Wolverines and raised their conference record to 5-0. Minnesota fell to 5-3 over-all and 3-2 in the conference. The regionally televised game was played before a Michigan Stadium crowd of 104,426 — fifth largest in Wolverine history.

Michigan opened the scoring at 9:19 of the first quarter on a six-yard run by tailback Harlan Huckleby. It concluded a 78-yard, 13-play march on Michigan's first possession.

The only other Michigan score came on a 46-yard field goal by Bob Wood in the third period.

Michigan scored in six of its seven possessions and probably would have scored in all of them except for fullback Russell Davis' fumble recovered by Minnesota's Steve Stewart at the Gopher five in the closing minutes of the first half.

Leach's 6-yard TD run, at 10:36 of the third quarter, was the first score that did not come off a legitimate drive. It came four plays and 39 yards after defensive end John Anderson recovered a Bubby Holmes fumble. The first Wolverine play after the turnover was a 27-yard burst by Leach.

The Gophers did not enter Michigan territory until the last 1:11 of the game, getting to the 45. But on the next play, Michigan deflected a Dungy pass and it was intercepted by freshman Ron Simpkins.

It was the fourth shutout by Michigan this season and the 26th shutout by the Wolverines in their last 102 games dating back to 1967.

There were numerous defensive standouts for Michigan Saturday, among them Anderson, tackles John Hennessy and Greg Morton and linebacker Calvin O'Neal.

Dungy had hoped to have a good game. The senior was an all-state high schooler at Jackson Parkside, some 35 miles from Ann Arbor. He took to the air from the opening kickoff and completed eight of 12 passes in the first half, but the Gophers just could not mount any drives.

They only gained 89 total yards in 24 plays before intermission while Michigan was piling up 258 yards, including 235 on the ground.

Dungy wound up with 12 completions in 20 attempts for 85 yards with two interceptions.

Ferragamo fires win over KU

LAWRENCE, Kan. (AP) — Vince Ferragamo fired two touchdown passes and Nebraska's quick, muscular defense smothered the Kansas offense Saturday as the Cornhuskers blasted the Jayhawks 31-3 and eliminated them from the Big Eight football race.

Ferragamo, the Big Eight's leader in passing and offense, scored Nebraska's first touchdown on a one-yard plunge in the first period and insured the victory with two scoring strikes in the second.

Kansas, 5-3 and 1-3 in the conference, never threatened until Mike Hubach booted a 42yard field goal midway through the fourth quarter.

Kansas fumbles led to the first two Nebraska touchdowns. Norris Banks fumbled on the Jayhawk 37 late in the opening period and Ferragamo used nine plays to go the distance, finally plowing over from the one.

Kansas' Mike Higgins fumbled the ensuing kickoff to Nebraska on the 35 less than a minute into the second period. Dodie Donnell swept 17 yards on the first down and two plays later Ferragamo, who passed for 149 yards in the first half, lofted a nine-yard aerial to Ken Spaeth in the end zone.

The fierce Nebraska defense held Kansas to two first downs on their next four possessions. Hubach's punt put the Huskers on their own seven but three running plays brought the ball to the 26.

Dibbs takes net win over Smith

PARIS (AP) — Eddie Dibbs was extended to four sets before he downed fellow American Stan Smith in the semifinals of the Paris Indoor Open tennis tournament Saturday.

Dibbs steadily wore Smith down with more accurate passing shots and fewer errors for a 2-6, 6-2, 6-4, 6-3 victory.

He will meet Jaime Fillol of Chile in Sunday's final of the tournament, which counts for the Grand Prix series in which Dibbs is currently in third place.

Maryland takes care of Kentucky

COLLEGE PARK, Md. (AP)— Fullback Tim Wilson ran for two touchdowns after a 49-yard punt return by Dean Richards ignited fifth-ranked Maryland and the unbeaten Terps whipped Kentucky 24-14 Saturday in an intersectional football game.

Wilson gained 81 yards and Alvin "Preacher" Maddox added 129 on the ground as the Terps, criticized by some for a weak schedule, ran their winning streak to 12 in a row including eight this season.

Kentucky scored on a 26-yard first quarter pass from Derrick Ramsey to Charlie Dickerson following a Maryland fumble, and Ramsey added a 52-yarder to running back Randy Brooks with one minute left in the game.

The Terps missed an extra point attempt after quarterback Mark Manges scored on a 10yard run in the second quarter, and trailed 7 6. But after the punt return by Richards put the ball on the Kentucky 11, Wilson scored from five yards out two minutes before the half, and Manges ran for a two-point conversion.

Maryland's Atlantic Coast Conference champions drove 77 yards to score with the secondhalf kickoff, converting four third-down plays with Wilson going over from the two. Ed Loncar added a 31-yard field goal in the fourth quarter.

So. Carolina in grid win

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP)— South Carolina broke open a tight struggle with two fourth quarter touchdowns and claimed a 27-7 victory over North Carolina State there Saturday afternoon.

In picking up their sixth victory of the season against three losses, the Gamecocks kept alive their hopes for a post-season bowl appearance. Representatives from the Gator Bowl and the Peach Bowl attended the game.

The loss dropped State's record to 3-5-1. The Atlantic Coast Conference team was within striking distance of the Gamecocks for three quarters, but USC pulled away in the final period.

Howard Payne posts victory

BROWNWOOD, Tex. (AP) — Howard Payne quarterback Howard Thompson completed four touchdown passes for an all-time Yellow Jacket record to lead HPU to a 32-29 Lone Star Conference squeaker over Sam Houston State Saturday.

Thompson divided his TD tosses between split end Larry Nelson and flanker Bryan Hargrove. The half ended in HPU's favor 13-7 with Nelson's first reception of 43 yards.

Georgia survives scare from Cincy to win by 31-17

ATHENS, Ga. (AP) — Georgia quarterback Ray Golf scored a pair of first-half touchdowns, but the seventh-ranked Bulldogs had to survive a fourth-quarter scare from aroused Cincinnati for a 31-17 college football victory over the 20th-ranked Bearcats Saturday.

Goff scored on runs of 13 and 14 yards, Kevin McLee added a seven-yard touchdown and Allen Leavitt booted a 33-yard field goal as Georgia, 7-1, took a 24-3 lead into the final quarter in the game played in a steady rain.

But the Bearcats, suffering their first loss after six victories, erupted for 14 points in a three-minute span at the start of the final quarter to edge within 24-17.

Cincinnati capitalized on a Willie McClendon fumble— Georgia's sixth of the game— late in the third period on the Bulldogs' 26. Quarterback Art Bailey connected with Steve Gantert on a three-yard TD pass three plays into the fourth quarter to narrow the margin.

Georgia failed to move following the kickoff and Cincinnati's Keith Jenkins returned a Bucky Dilts punt 65 yards to the Georgia six. Two plays later Bailey hit Steve Bell with a seven-yard pass only 3:47 into the period.

The Georgia defense, however, stung by the two quick touchdowns—the first given up by the unit in the second half this season—intercepted Bailey on Cincinnati's next two possessions.

First it was an interception by Johnny Henderson, and it resulted in a missed field goal. Linebacker Jim Griffith intercepted Bailey on the next possession, returned it 19 yards to the 10, setting up Georgia's final touchdown which Art Pollard scored from three yards out with 3:37 left to play.

McMurry topples Austin by 10-7

ABILENE, Tex. (AP) — An unyielding McMurry College front wall, led by linebackers Steve Lopez and Tony Strickland, thwarted a last-gasp effort by Austin College to give the Indians a 10-7 Texas Intercollegiate Athletic Association win Saturday.

Kangaroo quarterback John Simmons, who had earlier connected with tight end Brian McKamy for a 20-yard fourth quarter touchdown pass, led Austin College to the McMurry 28-yard line with 30 seconds remaining before the desperation drive was blunted.

He was thrown for losses three consecutive times as the clock ran out.

The win extends the Indians' TIAA mark to 1-1 and their seasonal slate to 3-6. Austin College ended TIAA play with an 0-4 record and now has a 3-6 overall mark.

Colts, Oilers blacked out

BALTIMORE (AP) — A spokesman for the Baltimore Colts said Friday night that 10,000 tickets remained unsold for the Monday night National Football League game against the Houston Oilers at Memorial Stadium.

Since all the tickets for the game were not sold by 9 p.m., EDT, Friday, the nationally televised game (ABC-TV) will be blacked out on home television in the Baltimore-Washington area, the spokesman said.

West Texas State upends McNeese St.

CANYON, Tex. (AP) — Robert Mayberry scrambled for three touchdowns, including an 83-yard scoring gallop, to lead West Texas to a 30-25 non-conference football victory over McNeese State Saturday.

Mayberry, who rolled up 147 yards in 15 carries, started the Buffaloes' scoring with his long distance run in the first period.

The victory left West Texas with a 2-5 season record while McNeese slipped to 6-2.

McNeese led 19-10 at the half but Mayberry scored two touchdowns to give West Texas a 24-19 advantage with 13:32 left to play.

The Cowboys' Bobby Wilson bulled in from two yards out with 2:10 remaining to give McNeese a 25-24 lead.

Virginia Tech takes easy 24-7 grid win

BLACKSBURG, Va. (AP) — Roscoe Coles ran for two touchdowns and Mitch Barnes passed to Moses Foster for another as Virginia Tech's Gobblers rolled past the mistakeprone West Virginia Mountaineers 24-7 Saturday.

Tech intercepted five WVU passes and recovered two Mountaineer fumbles.

West Virginia took the opening kickoff and drove to the Tech 29, where Dwayne Woods fumbled and Eddie Snell recovered for the Gobblers.

Tech then pushed to the Mountaineer 16, but turned the ball over on Dennis Scott's fumble.

We've had too few friends in Washington in the last five years. Now it's our turn to support a friend who's fought for us — Senator Lloyd Bentsen.

Oil Prices. Bentsen was one of the few to have the courage to call the price rollback "political hyprocrisy."

Natural Gas Deregulation. Bentsen sponsored and guided through the Senate the Pearson-Bentsen bill to end twenty years of federal controls.

Depletion Allowance. Bentsen led the fight that saved the depletion allowance for the 250,000 royalty owners in the State of Texas and 95% of its independent producers.

Intangible Drilling Costs. Bentsen opposed the Administration's proposals to limit intangibles to income derived from oil and gas.

U.S. Senator Russell Long, "If it hadn't been for Senator Bentsen and others of us who fought for a small producer exemption to the repeal of the depletion allowance it all would have been lost."

Senator Lloyd Bentsen receiving the annual "Hats Off" award from TIPRO President, George Mitchell, June 10 1974.

Mr. John Christman, President of TIPRO, "We are especially proud of the outstanding leadership role played by Senator Bentsen in moving toward natural gas deregulation. The responsible position he is taking on this and other energy issues is contributing mightily to the effort to bring about a long overdue bipartisan approach to the grave matter of a national energy policy."

Mr. Jack Blanton, President of Texas Mid-Continent, "Senator Bentsen is one of the few members of the U.S. Senate who truly understands the oil and gas industry. He's consistently fought to keep it healthy."

Redskins ready for potent Dallas Cowboys

By KENNETH DENLINGER
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The Dallas Cowboys are two touchdowns better than the Redskins at the moment. Their strength — both lines — is pitted directly against the Redskins' weakness. Washington will probably win.

At least that usually has been the scenario — loosely titled Billy Kilmer vs. The Robots — where the undermanned but emotional Redskins make a grand stand at the pass in Washington only to be overwhelmed by the blue-and-white machine later in Dallas.

Fortunately for the RFK Statium faithul, this is a rare week when Dallas does not have to win, when it either can rest Roger Staubach or concoct an attack that will minimize the risk to his throwing hand. And the Redskins? Well, this is the week you throw the record book — and the greenies — out the window.

Staubach's injury is not anything that will greatly hamper his passing, because his pinkie goes unused most of the time, anyway. In fact, the team doctor, Marvin P. Knight, said in jest: "WE SHOULD have amputated that (little finger) three years ago because it doesn't do you any good." Neither the Cowboys nor the NFL is programmed for a three-fingered quarterback as yet.

Staubach's finger bends at a drastic angle, and the risk is that the broken bone just before the large joint will be irritated enough to cause severe damage to the entire hand — and thus sidelidne him indefinitely.

This will allow the stadium sickies uninterrupted pleasure, when not yelling for Billy Kilmer's scalp.

If the Cowboys do dominate the Redskins in both games this season — and there were signs of an emotional awakening last year — George Allen's philosophical solar plexus.

DALLAS ALREADY has experienced its "down cycle," that transitional phase all excellent teams undergo and that some never endure successfully. With one sour season, 1974, when they missed the playoffs, the Cowboys skipped back to the Super Bowl last year.

They returned to dominance with their usual collection of superb players and several not known beyond next of kin until one of Gil Brandt's scouts unearthed him.

Sometimes one gets the feelding the Cowboys could win every game and Brandt would be disappointed unless he discovered some fine player in the hinterlands that the rest of the NFL overlooked. He is like the longshot player at the track who scoffs: "Anyone can pick the favorite."

One of Brandt's latest discoveries is running back Doug Dennison, who coach Tom Landry says "is the best guy I know to give a football to on the goal line or short yardage.

DENNISON PLAYED for Kutztown State, a rather harmless college in central Pennsylvania. Or more accurately, he played two games his senior year and was hurt. Everyone dismissed him except the Cowboys scout, who looked at enough Kutztown film to give Dennison a chance as a free agent.

There are other free agents who have become regulars, corner Benny Barnes, safety Cliff Harris, wide receiver Drew Pearson. And also fullback Scott Laidlaw, the Walt Garrison play-alike who was waiting to be drafted on the 14th round last year.

New York Net owner is impersonator

By PAUL DOMOWITCH

Question: What does New York Nets owner Ray Boe have in common with Rich Little?

Answer: They are both impersonators.

No, our Mr. Boe leaves the John Wayne, Jimmy Stewart, and Clark Gable impressions to Little. But for substantial realism, there isn't a man alive who can top Boe's imitation last week, of that unflinchable, arrogant white-haired impresario of the Oakland Athletics, Charles O. Finley.

IN FINLEY-LIKE style two Tuesdays past, Boe saw the opportunity to make a quick couple million, and destroy an athletic franchise at the same time, as he attempted to sell Julius Erving, perhaps the greatest basketball player in the history of the sport, to the Philadelphia 76ers.

Only Boe went a step farther in his mimicry of Finley. He succeeded in pulling off this feat, where even old Chuck himself failed. You see, this time around there was no Bowie Kuhn to step in front of his path, and block the deal in the best interests of the sport. No, NBA commissioner Larry O'Brien sat idly by in his comfortable Manhattan office, as Boe made a move that is going to have a much more detrimental effect on the Nets than the selling of Bando, Fingers, and Blue would have ever had on Oakland.

Mr. Boe, the impersonator, we salute you on a fine performance. Mr. Boe, the owner and manipulator we curse you for your greed, inconsideration, and destructiveness.

The word out of New York is that Boe is in the process right now of selling his club. As a businessman, no one would dispute his actions. Erving was asking for more than twice his salary, and by getting rid of him, Boe made a killing at the bank. But as I'm sure many will attest, even businessmen have ethics.

DR. J. was unquestionably one of the main reasons the NBA even agreed to a merger in the first place a year ago. He is a player with uncomparable ability at this present date, and it was Erving who was chiefly responsible for two ABA championship trophies resting in Boe's New York office during the past three years.

Erving is a Net no longer, and the Nets' drawing card power and legitimacy as a National Basketball Association contender have vanished. The varied responses of Erving's former teammates in the Big Apple were publicized last week. For those who missed them, they are similar in one respect. The players have given up without their favorite physician.

"Who would want to come out and see us now?" asked a dejected John Williamson. "There's no way we can compete with the NBA teams without the Doctor."

And Williamson is so right. With Erving, the Nets would probably have been authentic title contenders in one of the toughest divisions in the NBA. They could have challenged Buffalo, Philadelphia, and yes, even Boston. And they could have become the darlings of New York City basketball, with the Knicks finally being forced to settle for second best.

WITHOUT ERVING, they are nothing more than onlookers, and to make matters worse, the team Boe allowed Erving to sign with-Philadelphia, is right there in his own backyard. It's funny he just didn't give Erving to the Knicks already. Does that sound like an owner who is about to bail out of a sinking boat with all of the money clenched between his greedy little teeth? You bet.

Erving could be placed in the bad guy role in this sports melodrama. And indeed, in many circles he has been. But in his former teammates' eyes and in ours, he is not the real villian. "I would have liked for nothing better than to stay with the Nets," Erving admitted. "I feel sorry for the guys on the team. They're going to have to build all over now around John (Williamson) and Tiny (Archibald). But Boe wouldn't budge in giving me what I wanted. And believe me, I would have settled for a lot less than my asking price to stay with these guys."

What the Doctor was asking for may seem an awesome figure to most, mainly because it is. Erving was making $275,000 a season as part of a seven year package he signed out of the University of Massachussetts. This year, he asked for a renegotiation on that figure, with the new numerals spelling out $500,000 per annum.

For you non-mathematicians, that's in the vicinity of a 100% increase. Exorbitant? Yes. But this is no time to bicker about the money being paid professional athletes. Books could be written on that subject. But as Reggie Jackson said a few months back: "Of course none of us are worth the money we're being paid. But we'd have to be a little crazy not to take it, if somebody's nuts enough to offer it to us."

ERVING IS not crazy needless to

Oilers on tube Monday

BALTIMORE (AP)—Coach Ted Marchibroda set two goals for the Baltimore Colts prior to the National Football League season: Win two of the first three games and make it to the playoffs.

The Colts reached the first goal area, with a 6-1 record, they are definitely on target for a playoff berth as they open the second half of their schedule Monday night against the Houston Oilers.

The game, starting at 8:05 p.m., CDT, will mark the first appearance in four years for the Colts on the ABC's Monday night national television card. The attendance is expected to be somewhat less than Memorial Stadium's 60,020 capacity.

While first-place Baltimore has a one-game lead over New England in the American Conference East, Houston has dropped one game behind the AFC's Central Division leading Cincinnati Bengals with a 4-3 record.

"We're facing them at a bad time," Marchibroda said. "They've lost two in a row, and they have their backs to the wall. This is the worst time to be playing a physical team."

Both the Colts and the Oilers have hard-hitting defensive units which should appeal to network TV analyst Alex Karras, a former defensive lineman who delights in seeing offensive players battered.

Houston ranks second in the NFL with 35 quarterback sacks and Baltimore is next with 33. Only San Francisco, with 37, has done better.

Quarterback Dan Pastorini of the Oilers has thrown an average of 40 passes in each of Houston's last three games, a statistic which hasn't been overlooked by Baltimore's front four of John Dutton, Fred Cook, Joe Ehrmann and Mike Barnes.

The Oilers, however, give Pastorini good protection and most of his attempts are short and quick. Only one Houston receiver, Ken Burroughs, has averaged more than nine yards per catch.

Baltimore's Bert Jones doesn't throw as much, but he has hooked up with five starters who average better than nine yards on each reception.

Denver Expos' feeder

DENVER (AP) — The Denver Bears of the Class AAA American Association will head up the Montreal Expos' farm system again next baseball season, both clubs announced on Saturday.

Under Vern Rapp, new coach of the St. Louis Cardinals, won the 1976 American Association title before several members of the team went to Montreal for a stint with the parent club.

A new manager is yet to be named to succeed Rapp.

Rebel win over Mojo only major prep upset

By The Associated Press

Two high schools with the same namesake — Robert E. Lee — shared the Texas high school football spotlight for different reasons Friday night.

While Midland Lee took away Odessa Permian's half share of the Class 4A No. 1 ranking with a 14-13 victory, Baytown Lee whipped Aldine MacArthur 34-0 with President Ford in attendance.

Permian's defeat was the only loss in The Associated Press Class 4A Top Ten. Houston Kashmere, which was tied with Permian for the top spot, blanked Houston Washington 33-0; No. 3 Longview nipped Marshall 19-12, fourth-rated Port Neches-Groves clubbed Beaumont French 34-6, No. 5 Killeen walloped Copperas Cove 21-0, No. 7 Sherman plastered Paris 46-6, No. 8 Temple whipped Waco University 31-0, No. 9 Brazoswood toppled Victoria Stroman 34-7 and 10th-ranked Tyler aced Nacogdoches 12-0. say, and if you put his old salary and ability on a comparative scale with a great many other performers in the NBA, Erving was being grossly under-paid. The best in the game had every right to expect the best pay in the game as well.

And now we come back to Boe, the great impersonator. His club financially depleted because of the millions he had to shell out just to share the city of New York with the Knicks, Boe saw a chance to get out with a smile on his face and greenbacks in his wallet. Hell with the team he would be leaving behind.

Yes hell, which is what this season is going to be like for a disgruntled and dismantled group of cagers out on beautiful Long Island.

Rutherford seeking World Series victory

COLLEGE STATION, Tex. ZAP) — Fort Worth's Johnny Rutherford, the reigning Indianapolis 500 champion and current United States Auto Club (USAC) championship series leader, still livesin the shadow of famed fellow Texan A.J. Foyt when they compete in Texas.

Today's USAC-sponsored World Series of Auto Racing at Texas World Speedway was to be no exception although Rutherford had a shot at wrapping up the USAC championship series title with a victory in the 200-mile Indy car portion of the twin bill. A 200-mile stock car race also was slated.

"Maybe in years to come when I've won six championships and another Indianapolis title, I'll get some of that attention," Rutherford said. "In my book, A.J. is the greatest driver who ever pulled on a helmet."

Rutherford finished seconds ahead of Foyt in this year's Indianapolis 500, but in last August's Twin 200 races here Foyt won both races, unprecedented in USAC history.

Foyt was the center of attention at that race with the loudspeaker repeatedly blaring "The Ballad of A.J. Foyt."

"I'm working for the same status for myself although I can't amass the kind of record that A.J. has because of the time I have left to race," Rutherford said. "But I'll do the best I can and hope that someday I can be considered one of the best drivers who ever did it."

Qualifying for both the Indy and stock car portions of the Sunday's card was postponed until Sunday morning by torrential rains that pelted the track all week and turned the infield into a quagmire.

The rains forced track officials to close the infield for the weekend.

Jack Martin, a USAC spokesman, said there was some interest in postponing the race, but USAC officials decided it best to continue with the race despite the lack of parking space.

"When we announce a race, we enter into a contract with the fans and we like to fulfill our contracts," Martin said.

"I'd hate to have any fan drive up on a sunny race day and find the race cancelled," Martin said. "Our policy normally is to go right up to race time and if conditions force, then we cancel."

Rutherford will go into Sunday's Indy car races with a 140 point lead over Gordon Johncock.

Hansen captures race win

FLOWERY BRANCH, Ga. (AP) — Jerry Hansen gained his sixth A Sports Racing championship, his 16th over-all career title and second of the weekend Saturday in the second of three days of the Sports Car Club of America's national amateur championships.

Hansen's victory was virtually uncontested. He started on the pole, only .3 of a second faster than Randy Townsend. But Townsend, who can't or won't drive in the rain, pulled off saying, "I race for fun and this race wasn't."

Hansen, Wayzata, Minn., won the Formula A division Friday, and is a favorite Sunday in the Formula B competition.

His margin of victory Saturday was 43 seconds over Oscar Koveleski, who won the division in 1970 when his McLaren was new. Hansen drove a Lola T220.

Only eight cars started; only four were running at the finish. The rain kept the average speed down to an all-time low of 86.80 miles per hour.

President Ford is best for our State and our Nation!

The selection of our president is of such importance this year that it transcends partisanship. We believe that any objective study of the candidates and their views will lead Texans to conclude that the election of President Ford is the wiser course for our state and nation. We therefore are uniting to express our support of him, without regard of personal political affiliations. We invite all Texans who share our deep concern for our country's leadership to join with us.

Compare the views of the two candidates with the views of most Texans.

President Ford

- Stands for national defense second to none in the world as the vital foundation of our continued security.
- Stands for less government spending, has cut inflation more than half while in office.
- Proposes a further reduction in personal income taxes, an increase in the individual exemption to $1,000.
- Understands the need for a comprehensive energy program, supports fair prices for Texas' precious energy resources.
- Supports Texas Right-To-Work laws which assure right to a job without belonging to a union. Vetoed Common Situs picketing bill.
- Understands Texas agriculture and its importance to the world. Supports rights of private property.
- We know what we have in him. We know that we can trust him.

Jimmy Carter

- Wants to cut the defense budget $7-$15 billion, thereby weakening our security and threatening thousands of jobs in Texas.
- Proposes 60 new government programs estimated to cost at least $100 billion.
- Would have to raise taxes on an estimated one-of-every-two Americans to pay for increased spending.
- Wants to break up our energy companies, threatening Texas' tax base, and could bring about a state income tax.
- Publicly committed to George Meany to sign repeal of state Right-To-Work laws. Would have signed the Common Situs picketing bill.
- Supports Proposition 14, which would allow union organizers to trespass on our farms and ranches.
- We don't know what he really believes, or where he would lead us.

Full tanks indicate price will be hiked

By THOMAS O'TOOLE
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The nation's oil storage tanks are now fuller than they have been at any time in 37 years, reflecting the oil industry's belief that the exporting countries plan to raise prices when they meet in December.

Most oil companies have made little secret about the fact that they expect the oil producing and exporting countries to raise prices from 10 to 20 per cent next month. The price of crude oil today is $11.51 a barrel in the Persian Gulf. A 10 per cent increase could lift the price to more than $12 a barrel and raise gasoline prices in the United States 1 to 2 cents a gallon.

Figures compiled by the American Petroleum Institute, the industry's trade association, show that crude oil stocks for the week that ended Oct. 22 were more than 293 million barrels, the highest they have been since April 30, 1939. Storage tanks were full in the 1930s because the United States exported oil in those days and World War II had not reduced tanker traffic.

Crude stocks have climbed steadily in the last few weeks, reaching new highs on the East Coast, the Chicago area, the Gulf Coast and in California at the end of last week. Industry sources said they believe that companies will continue to stockpile crude oil in anticipation of a price increase in December.

The oil exporting countries plan to meet Dec. 15 in Doha, the capital of the shiekhdom of Qatar, to discuss next year's prices for crude oil. Since these countries provide almost 90 per cent of the crude oil traded around the world, the Qatar meeting will in effect establish a new level for world crude oil prices.

The $11.51 price was reached a year ago and represented an increase of about 10 per cent over what it had been the year before. That was the smallest price increase for world oil in the last three years. Oil prices having risen 300 per cent since the Yom Kippur War broke out in the Middle East in 1973.

In a West German television interview last month, the Shah of Iran called for a minimum price increase of 15 per cent, saying Iran's oil revenues had fallen 40 per cent because worldwide inflation had increased Iran's cost of importing other goods.

Drafting of rules sticky business

By CLYDE LA MOTTE
Reporter-Telegram
Washington Oil Correspondent

WASHINGTON — One of the problems with government price regulations of anything is the difficulty in drafting rules and regulations that make sense and that apply evenly to everyone. As a result, control programs are inevitably cumbersome, slow and tangled in red tape.

The Federal Power Commission's current reconsideration of its action last July in establishing new nationwide wellhead prices for natural gas is an example of the sticky business of having Big Brother set the signals.

For instance, FPC has divided natural gas into "old" gas and "new" gas, with different price ceilings for each. However, in order to attract into interstate commerce gas that is now being sold intrastate (because the unregulated intrastate price is higher), FPC had said in its initial July order that the first interstate sale of gas from a well, even from one drilled several years ago, would qualify for the top price of $1.42 per thousand cubic feet.

But it has also ruled that all gas from a given well, even though produced from separate zones at different times, would qualify for the gas price in existence at the time the well was first drilled.

Thus, if an operator drilled a well to 18,000 feet and produced gas from that zone and then later moved back up the hole and produced from another reservoir, say at 12,000 feet, gas from both prodicing zones would be priced as of the date the well was spudded in.

The FPC theory was that the cost of the well occurred at the time of the initial drilling to 18,000 feet so there would be no point in giving a "new" gas price to production from another zone even though it was not started until later.

In the commission's discussion of its proposed revised order last week, someone brought up the point that the rule aimed at luring intrastate gas into the interstate market and the rule regarding a single pricing of gas from the same hole could wind up in conflict.

Here's why:

Suppose a company drilled a hole to 18,000 feet in 1972 and sold that gas within his own state for use in his state. Since this was an intrastate sale, it was not subject to FPC price jurisdiction.

However, if after FPC increased the ceiling price for "new" gas this year, it dicided to switch to an interstate sale, it would get the 1975-76 "new" gas price of $1.42 per thousand cubic feet. This would be true even though the gas was from an "old" well because it would be the first sale in interstate commerce.

Suppose further that next year the same producer backs up the hole to 12,000 feet and starts producing from that reservoir, which is different than the one at 18,000 feet. He would get the "new" gas price, right? Wrong. That gas, under the order the FPC was drafting last week, would be priced at the level existing in 1972 when the well was spudded in. So the operator would get the 1972 price of 29 cents. So, from the same hole he would be selling gas for 29 cents and for $1.42.

That was just one of the regulatory headaches the commission developed while trying to draft the revisions to its July order, Opinion 770, which had set a price of $1.42 for gas from wells drilled in 1975-76 and $1.01 for wells started in 1973-74. (The $1.01 price was being revised downward to offset an "error" the staff had made in the initial order.)

During the long, long discussions over the revised order, many questions were raised. For instance, should there be a special price for very deep wells, say wells of around 25,000 feet, because of the obviously higher cost of drilling? Should offshore wells drilled far from shore in very deep water get a better price from wells drilled in shallow water near the coast?

Also, regarding "recompletion" wells, there was lengthy discussion over the precise difinition of such wells.

It was generally agreed that in the case of a well drilled to a given depth and then produced at shollower zones through which it had passed, the applicable price would be the price at the time the well was spudded in.

But supposed an operator who has been producing from a 5,000-foot well goes back into the hole and drills another 5,000 feet where he discovers a new producing formation. What price does he get from the deepened well, the "old" gas price or the "new" gas price? A reporter asked that question of two different commission officials, each deeply involved in drafting of the revised order, and got two opposite answers.

There were many other points of discussion as the commission members and their staff labored over the revised order.

There rarely is a "right" answer. Rather, it boils down to a system in

Discovery reported

WINTER PARK, Fla. — Florida Gas Exploration Co. has announced a natural gas discovery in Assumption Parish, La.

The well, Florida No. 1-A Brown, is located in the company's Northeast Lake Palourde Prospect 10 miles west of Thibodaux.

Drilled to a total depth of 18,382 feet, the well was completed in the upper of three potential productive sands.

On an initial six-hour test, the well flowed at a rate of 2 million cubic feet of gas and 80 barrels of condensate per day, through a 9/64-inch choke.

Operators work 268 rigs in Basin areas

Reed Drilling Equipment's Friday survey of active rotary rigs operating in the Permian Basin Empire showed 268 units making hole last week.

The count decreased seven from the reported 275 rigs two weeks ago and was only off by one compared to the active units working at this time one year ago.

Of course, Lea County, N.M. is still leading the count with a total of 26 active rigs as of last week. Second in the count again is Eddy County, N.M., with 18 units.

Tied for third place are Pecos and Ward Counties with 17 rigs each. Crockett finishes fourth in the count with 14 units. Finally, in fifth place is Martin County with a total of 12.

Have you considered reloading your shells? How expensive and difficult is it? Have you been wanting to up-date the reloading equipment that you have? What is new in reloading equipment? Take these questions and more to Shooter's Supply on November 5th and 6th and talk with Bill Cervenka.

MEC has a complete line of shotshell reloaders for the sportsman loading primarily for a moderate amount of competitive shooting (skeet and trap), for the sportsman who wants reloading versatility (skeet, trap and hunting loads), and for club and group ownership as well as the competitive shooter who needs a real production-line tool. One is right for you.

Every tool MEC is unconditionally guaranteed against any defects in workmanship and materials for a period of five years. MEC tools outsell the next two leading brands of reloaders in number of units as indicated in a recent independent survey conducted among dealers.

Drought delays wheat planting

TOPEKA, Kan. (AP) — Dry conditions delayed seeding winter wheat in some areas of Kansas, Oklahoma, Texas, Colorado and New Mexico this fall, but most regions received enough moisture so that virtually all the planned acreage was planted.

The November Sante Fe Crop Report out Saturday also said most of the seeded acreage in the five states it serves is up to a stand, but with varying damage from army worms being reported in all areas.

Some replanting may be necessary because of the infestations, the report said.

"In areas fortunate enough to get the wheat crop up at an early date, and where additional rain has fallen recently and in irrigated areas, some livestock is being moved onto wheat fields for grazing," the Sante Fe Report said.

University tells of gift

STOCKTON, Cal. (AP) — The University of the Pacific recently received a gift of $600,000 from the Thomas J. Long family of Walnut Creek, Cal.

University President Stanley E. McCaffrey said the funds would finance improvements in the School of Pharmacy and make possible a move for the Drama Department.

Diamond Oil Well's new Midland plant

Diamond Oil Well opens Midland plant

Diamond Oil Well Drilling Co. has a new manufacturing plant and yard between Midland and Odessa, just west of Midland Air Terminal.

The company held formal open house Friday.

Diamond Oil Well, now operating with 30 employes, originally was established in Midland in 1947 for the purpose of providing a diamond coring and diamond related service to the oil industry.

Originally, the bit manufacturing was done in Murray Hill, N. M., by J. K. Smith and Sons, Inc., and core barrels were manufactured by Diamond Oil Well in Midland.

For the last four years, manufacturing of the core bits as well as drill bits has been done in the Midland Plant.

B. G. Price is president of Diamond, while Andy Anderson is operations manager and T. P. "Red" Drew is sales manager.

Diamond Oil Well not only designs molds for the diamond bits, but salvages diamonds from used bits and resets the useable stones into other bits.

which someone is penalized so that someone else can be rewarded.

The current commission members appear dedicated to the idea that the primary target is to stiumlate exploration, drilling and production in an effort to increase the nation's lagging natural gas supply. That's why it is putting the highest price on "new" gas.

Unfortunately, the very act of regulation tends to slow down activity rather than speeding it up.

Most industry people say the way to get more gas is to remove the labyrinth of regulations and let the industry get on with the job of finding, developing and selling natural gas.

Congress came close to passing a deregulation measure this year, but fell short by four votes in the House.

Maybe the new Congress will enact such legislation and the FPC can then forget about the intricacies of determining a proper wellhead price.

Exxon says profits dip

NEW YORK (AP) — Exxon Corp., the world's largest industrial corporation and largest oil company, reported Monday its profits slipped 3.8 per cent in the third quarter despite a gain in revenue.

Losses on foreign currency transactions cut profits, the company said. It was the second straight quarter earnings have dropped.

Exxon, which reported a 2.6 per cent earnings drop after the second quarter, said it earned $635 million in July, August and September, against $660 million in the third quarter of 1975.

Revenue gained slightly, however, from $12.27 billion a year ago to $12.9 billion in this year's third quarter.

In the first nine months, Exxon said it earned $1.96 billion, against $1.867 billion a year ago. Nine-month revenue of $38.475 billion compared with last year's $35.906 billion.

On a per-share basis, Exxon earned $1.42 in the third quarter, against $1.47 in 1975. In the first nine months, it earned $4.38 per share, compared with last year's $4.17.

Publisher appointed

TULSA, Okla. — John Ford has been named publisher of the Oil & Gas Journal, effective Dec. 1, succeeding George H. Weber who is retiring after 42 years with the Journal.

Ford has been advertising sales manager, Eastern Sales Region, since 1973. He joined the Journal staff in 1956 and has served in its circulation, industry census and sales promotion departments.

52 strikes reported

AUSTIN, Tex. (AP) — Eighteen wildcat oil wells and 34 wildcat gas wells were drilled in Texas during the first half of October, the railroad commission reported Wednesday.

The Oct. 1-15 drilling raised the total of oil wildcat—or discovery—wells for the year to 438, an increase of 72 over the first 9½ months of 1975. A total of 738 wildcat gas wells have been drilled—an increase of 138 over this time last year.

The new oil wildcats included four in southeast Texas, five in south Texas, three in the Refugio area, two each in east central and west central Texas and the Midland area.

The new gas wildcats included 18 in south Texas, five near Refugio, four each in southeast Texas and the Midland area and one each in east and west central Texas and the San Angelo area.

The commission said 5,840 oil wells have been completed this year, or 474 more than had been completed by mid-October 1975. A total of 3,357 gas wells have been completed, or 729 more than by this time last

FEA asserts public can help in storage

CHICAGO (AP) — The public should be asked to help find the best ways for storing potentially dangerous nuclear wastes, a conference sponsored by the federal Energy Research and Development Administration and four other agencies has been told.

The conference was billed as a chance for utilities, nuclear plant builders and environmentalists to discuss the long-term impact of storing radioactive materials.

Participants in the three-day meeting backed a series of statements calling for greater public participation in deciding where and how to store nuclear wastes safely.

"A central issue in the nuclear-power debate is who shall decide," said a University of Minnesota political scientist in a paper delivered at the conference.

"I know of no example of the public being asked to make a decision on the adequacy of a nuclear waste management option," said Professor Dean E. Abrahamson.

Jimmy Carter, the Democratic presidential candidate, took note of the conference in a telegram earlier this week, saying, "Nuclear waste management is not just a technical issue to be left to the scientific experts, but a critical policy choice for the American people."

A "Utility Waste Management Group" made up of about 20 utilities with nuclear power plants issued a statement that below-or above-ground storage of liquid radioactive wastes can be "safe, environmentally acceptable and affordable" with existing technology.

HOUDINI'S MILK CAN is occupied by writer Robert Land, 51, of Southfield, Mich. The world's greatest magician first used the can at the Columbia Theatre in St. Louis, Mo., in 1908. Houdini would escape from the water-filled can after the lid was fastened with six padlocks. He died 50 years ago on Halloween in Detroit's Grace Hospital from a ruptured appendix.

Crackdown sought on welfare cheaters

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN – The State Board of Public Welfare has voted to ask the Legislature to crack down on welfare offenders, suggesting that welfare fraud be made a felony instead of its current misdemeanor status.

And the board wants unauthorized use, transfer or possession of food stamps to be criminalized.

Those are two of 17 topics that the board wants the Texas Legislature to consider when it convenes in January.

Other topics include protective services for the elderly who are abused, or neglected or otherwise unable to care for themselves; changing the name of the State Department of Public Welfare to the Department of Human Services; creation of an independent agency to administer the merit system tests to state employees; extending or elimination of the statute of limitations on paternity actions; and conforming state law to changes in the federal Hatch Act to remove restrictions on political activities for DPW employes.

Other topics include extending protection to provide for payment of damages awarded against employes of the DPW in the event of a suit and the purchases of liability insurance for employes and other transporting agents of the DPW; state funding for adoption for children not receiving AFDC; and providing that a person cannot transfer his assets to other members of his family, then apply to the DPW for medical assitance.

In other action the board approved a pilot project for a telephone hotline called "Welfare Action"--to give citizens assistance from the DPW without all the red-tape, to report welfare fraud, or just to call for information about welfare programs. The program, suggested by Board Member Raul Jimenez of San Antonio, will operate a telephone exchange in Bexar County as a pilot project, with statewide use the ultimate goal if the project is successful.

The board also ordered the DPW licensing division to develop a proposed standard on discipline for non-specialized child care facilities offering 24-hour care.

White House says tapes not heard by Ford staff

WASHINGTON (AP) -The White House says that recent duplicates made of former President Richard M. Nixon's tapes had nothing to do with checking possible references to President Ford's role in blocking a congressional investigation of Watergate prior to the 1972 election.

White House Counsel Philip W. Buchen said Friday the copies of the tapes were made at the request of Nixon and were not listened to by anyone at the White House.

Duplication of the tapes was disclosed by Rep. Jack Brooks, D-Tex., chairman of the House Government Operations. Committee. Brooks said he suspected the copies were made in connection with questions over Ford's role in blocking a House Banking Committee probe of Watergate.

Ford has denied that he acted at the behest of Nixon in trying to stop that investigation. And both the Watergate special prosecutor and the Justice Department rejected requests to listen to tapes that may have had a bearing on efforts by the White House to enlist Ford to block the investigation.

Brooks said the duplication "appears to coincide with the (recent) period during which certain questions were raised in Congress and the news media concerning any role President Ford might have played in blocking a congressional investigation of Watergate before the 1972 election."

Hicks gets life term

DALLAS (AP) — Joe D. Hicks, convicted of running an international narcotics smuggling ring, was sentenced to life imprisonment Friday in U.S. District Court.

Hicks, 40, was found guilty Sept. 30 of being the organizer of a narcotics operation which imported heroin from Thailand and cocaine from Colombia.

Authorities estimated narcotics involved in the operation may have had a street value as high as $500 million. The drugs were distributed in the Dallas area, California and other parts of the country.

Besides Hicks, Charles Lidge Bolts, 49, was given a 15-year sentence followed by a five-year parole. Bolts was convicted of conspiracy in the smuggling case.

Eight other defendants have pleaded guilty to various charges relating to the drug operation.

Area convicts gain paroles

AUSTIN – Gov. Dolph Briscoe has granted parole to five individuals sent to prison from the Midland area.

Manuela A. Gonzales was paroled to Upton County after receiving two years and four months time credit on a four-year sentence for carrying a gun on licensed premises in Reagan County.

Nathaniel Griffin was paroled to Midland County after receiving nine years time credit on a 10 year sentence for assault with intent to murder with malice in Midland County.

Major Lewis III was paroled to Tarrant County after receiving five years and eight months time credit on a seven-year sentence for burglary of private residence at night-time in Dallas and Haskell Counties, forgery in Jones and Nolan Counties, and passing a forged instrument in Midland and Mitchell counties.

Jerry R. Madry was paroled to Walker County after receiving four years and one month time credit on a six-year sentence for forgery in Ector and Howard counties and passing a forged instrument in Ector County.

Elie G. Wilson was paroled to Midland County after receiving three years and nine months time credit on a five-year sentence for burglary with intent to comment them in Midland County.

Safety rules restrict city park activity

By DEBBIE PIERCE

Everyone knows what parks are for — they're a good place to walk the dog, relax with the family, have picnics, get up a game of catch — to enjoy nature and some free time.

But what activities cannot be undertaken legally in parks?

Midland parks director Robert Thomson said a whole long chapter of the city code deals with regulations restricting what may be done in parks and playgrounds.

"Most of the regulations weren't made to restrict a person's enjoyment of parks," Thomson said. "They were designed to offer safety to the citizens and to insure that parks are used correctly."

About two years ago, a young Midlander was accidently killed when he stood too close to a swinging golf club on park property. So, the city council adopted an ordinance saying that activity is illegal in city parks, Thomson said.

Golf practice is limited to the Hogan Park practicing area and to Dunagan Park under supervised instruction approved by the city parks director.

Another matter mainly designed for safety factors is the prohibition of kites and model airplanes in parks. Thomson said this regulation applies to all city parks traversed by high voltage transmission lines.

The regulation also was designed to protect the peace of neighborhoods, where many city parks are located, as model airplanes can get quite noisy. A spot in Hogan Park is set aside especially for such activities, the parks director noted.

Most people probably can understand why the carrying or discharging of any type of firearms or air guns is prohibited on parks or playgrounds. But how about swimming, wading or boating within parks? All are illegal, too, Thomson said.

One of the more recent restrictions placed on parks came when the city council set up a 10:30 p.m. to 6 a.m. curfew on 19 of the city's neighborhood parks. Council noted that residents in the area of one of the city parks had complained about certain activities in the parks, and agreed to take action by making the curfew earlier than the previous midnight curfew.

Those parks included in the earlier curfew are Cowden, Crier, Dennis the Menace, Dunagan, Fasken, Garret-Brown, Grafa, Henderson, Hill, Lancaster, Lancaster Annex and the adjacent lease property, Lloyd, Moore, Ratliff, Rusk, Sidwell, Taylor, Tolbert and Wadley-Barron.

And how about walking your dog in a city park? Well, Thomson said, it's a perfectly legal activity — with certain exceptions.

Dogs may not be walked in Cole Park at any time, and dogs walked in any other city park must be contained on a leash. Also, dog or other animal shows in city parks are prohibited, except if the show is in Hogan Park or the undeveloped part of Dennis the Menace Park, and provided the activity is approved by the city parks director.

Of course, some rules still on the city books have no bearing today, for the most part. Such an example is the prohibition of tethering or pasturing "any cow, horse, mule, fowl or domestic animal in or upon any park or playground."

Restrictions like this were made many years ago, and have not yet been repealed by the city council.

But one rule often violated is the prohibition of driving through parks, Thomson said. The major concerns here is when an alley lies adjacent to a park and it's used as a thoroughfare, or when the parks become parking areas for vehicles during Little League baseball season, the parks director explained.

Another rule frequently violated is the prohibition of dumping "any kind of trash, refuse or garbage anywhere in a city park except in receptacles provided for that purpose." Thomson noted that an area in Hogan Park has become quite popular for dumping purposes, and now the city must clean up the trash.

What about music? Is it alright to send your young band student out to a city park to practice his instrument? No, not without approval from the city council, Thomson said.

And how about conducting a sale in a city park? That, too, is prohibited without prior council approval. Thomson explained that this rule is designed to prevent capital gain from city facilities without council permission. Persons also may not erect advertising devices within park property, unless the city council approves such measures temporarily "on occasions of public celebration or holidays" or within certain baseball parks designated by the council.

But surely it's permissible to hold your class reunion or even a family reunion in a city park, right? No, wrong again.

Thomson said any gathering of more than 100 persons in a city park must receive council approval first. That is, unless the activity is scheduled in Hogan, Cole or Washington parks.

The usual procedure in seeking permission for holding large gatherings in parks, or for seeking exclusive use of parks, is to go through the city Parks and Recreation Commission and then through the city council, Thomson noted. Any questions as to whether permission is needed for a gathering may be directed to the parks office, located at 300 Baldwin St.

Other activities prohibited in city parks include disorderly conduct, loafing or sleeping, destruction or removal of property, washing vehicles or loitering in park property after the curfew, unless prior permission is received from the city council for organized groups of 10 or more.

Pastor assumes blame

TOPEKA, Kan. (AP) — Jimmy Carter's Baptist pastor in Plains, Ga., says in a letter to fellow Baptist pastors made public Saturday he's responsible for Carter's Playboy magazine interview.

The Democrat presidential candidate's Kansas headquarters released the letter the Rev. Bruce Edwards sent to Baptist ministers in Kansas. Campaign officials said the letter probably went to Baptist ministers elsewhere, too.

"After reading the interview with Playboy," the Rev. Mr. Edwards wrote, "I am afraid that I must accept the responsibility for his accepting the interview.

"I have been his pastor for two years, and have always taught all my people to take advantage of every opportunity to share our faith in Christ."

In the interview, Carter said he had lusted for women in his heart.

By JUDITH MARTIN
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — English lady, 40, cheerful, well-spoken, own business, own husband, two daughters (10 and 13), wishes to meet thousands of well-dressed American gentlemen sincerely seeking matrimony.

English lady's name is Rita Barker; English lady's business is the Ivy Gibson Bureau, billed as "The Largest Friendship and Marriage Bureau in the World." It claims to have made more than 50,000 marriages out of two million introductions in London, and is branching out across the sea.

It is difficult, in the context of this society, to explain what a British marriage bureau for ladies and gentlemen — the owner never once slipped and referred to a client as a man or a woman — is.

It may be easier to explain what the Ivy Gibson Bureau is not.

It is not a clearing house for adventurous couples who wish to meet fun-loving partners of either sex. It is not a discreet way for sensitive and imaginative PhD to meet sensuous intellectual woman, 18-35, for lunchtime liaisons. It is not a place for easy-going bisexual to meet like-minded person for fulfillment of mutual fantasies.

Ivy Gibson's clients — Barker says there are 2,000 of each sex registered at any given time — have a mutual fantasy, all right. Each of them believes that somewhere in the world there is a steady, fairly presentable person of the opposite sex who would like to share quiet, conventional married life.

Barker says his 17 years' experience has proved that they are right. She can marry off anybody within a year, she claims. It's $75 for Americans and somewhat less (because there's less postage involved) for the English.

Her clientele, mostly white-collar workers in early middle-age, register their requirements at the bureau in an interview, and then are given as many suitable introductions as they request.

"Most people are quite happily suited within the year," she said. "Obviously, they are very lonely, so they are going to make that much more effort."

Their requirements are modest. A preference in age range or height, a religion and number of children is about it — a shared hobby is a tremendous added luxury. "Nice-looking" means neat and clean — lack of cleanliness has been Barker's only reason for rejecting clients — and "well-spoken" is not a codeword for anything more exciting than standard decent behavior.

Mostly they ask for someone "genuine" or "sincere," which means genuinely interested in matrimony, and unlikely to create exactly the same sort of trouble as one's previous mate.

When Barker mentions the term "women's lib" or "sexual revolution," she flashes a little expectant smile, as if to confirm that all worldly people know that these things do not really exist. They don't, among her clientele.

The word "friendship" is included in the bureau, merely to define those few months between meeting and marriage. She wouldn't dream of introducing a man to a woman even two years older than he — "the gentlemen don't want that, or the ladies, either. The gentleman wants to be five, or perhaps sometimes even 10, years older than the lady.

"Ladies realize that these days they may have to work after marriage — but of course, given the choice, both ladies and gentlemen would prefer that the ladies not have to."

And the basis of her American branch is that British ladies make better housewives, are apt to be more docile. "while British ladies believe that American gentlemen are rich."

Perhaps for the same reasons, "your ladies don't seem to want British gentlemen," and British gentlemen don't come scurrying after presumably fierce American ladies.

Georgia sheriff opposes Carter

FORSYTH, Ga. (AP) — Monroe County Sheriff Carey Bittick is a Democrat but he doesn't like Jimmy Carter and he's calling fellow-sheriffs in several states to tell them how he feels.

Bittick said he telephoned about a dozen sheriffs in Ohio, North Carolina, Texas and California last week in his campaign against the former Georgia governor.

"I just told them what I knew about what Carter did while he was governor here," Bittick said in a telephone interview Friday night.

He declined to name the sheriffs he contacted.

He said he intended to call sheriffs whom he knows in several other states today and Monday to tell them about Carter's handling of law enforcement matters and his state government reorganization plan during his term as governor.

Bittick said Georgia sheriffs strongly opposed Carter's push to create a state police force. The objections related to state police powers to investigate crimes on private property, he said.

"This would have cost the taxpayers more money," said Bittick, adding he thought it was an attempt by Carter to grab more power.

Carter's reorganization "is not what he claims it is," the sheriff said. "There were only about 65 active state agencies — or less than 70 — and he reduced them down to about 22 by appointing several superheads, and those department heads got big raises.

"State spending rose about 50 per cent while Carter was in office, and he increased cigarette and gasoline taxes after he said he would not," he said.

Bittick also said he told the sheriffs that some persons appointed by Carter to deal with law enforcement officers did not get along with sheriffs and other law officers and were not competent.

Bittick, who has been sheriff for 18 years in this central Georgia county, is a vice president of the National Sheriff's Association (NSA). He said neither the NSA nor the Georgia Sheriff's Association had any part in his anti-Carter campaign.

EEOC probing boycott

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission has stepped into the Arab Boycott issue with an investigation of whether the giant Standard Oil Co. of California has discriminated against Jews in employment here and abroad.

The investigation, begun in July, is expected to be completed in three to six months and, if the results warrant, may be extended to other companies or industries.

A spokesman for Standard of California, which is known as Socal and ranking sixth on Fortune magazine's list of the 500 largest U.S. corporations, denied that the company discriminates on religious or other grounds but declined to discuss this specific case.

Guy Carruthers, Socal's assistant general manager of public relations, confirmed that the EEOC inquiry was under way but added that he could not comment on it "because everything about it is supposed to be confidential."

He added: "All I can say is that, as a general policy, we have not and do not discriminate against employes by reason of their religion or race."

Socal has about 42,000 employes worldwide and is the nation's 4th largest oil company in terms of its 1975 sales, which totaled $16.8 billion.

It is also one of the four U.S. companies which together own 40 per cent of the Arabian American Oil Co., or Aramco. The controlling 60 per cent interest is held by Saudi Arabia's state-run oil corporation.

The investigation of whether Socal has discriminated against Jews was triggered by a charge filed this summer by EEOC Commissioner Daniel E. Leach.

Leach acknowledged that he had charged a "major American oil company with an alleged pattern and practice of discrimination against Jews" and that the company has been asked for "voluminous data on their employment practices."

Leach, however, refused to discuss what company and what specific charges are involved in the current case. EEOC law bars the agency from such public disclosure unless a court action is filed.

EEOC investigation of this kind usually involve the way a company hires, fires, promotes, assigns employes to specific posts or departments and other job policies.

Leach said he filed his charge "in part because of information presented to me in confidence and in part because of my own belief that the alleged discrimination may have resulted, in part or whole, from the Arab boycott."

The charge apparently stems at least partially from a case pending in San Francisco federal district court, in which a Jewish lawyer long employed by Socal has alleged that he was discharged in 1971 because of his religion.

The lawyer, Monroe Baer, has twice sought unsuccessfully to compel Socal to compile and present information on the religion of its managers and lawyers. The case is expected to go to trial late this year or early next year.

In the Arab boycott of Israel, American companies doing business with Arab oil-producing nations are asked to certify that goods entering Arab lands were not made in Israel, that they do no business with Israel, and that they have no dealings with others doing business with Israel. They also are asked if they have Jews as directors, managers or on their payroll.

A recent House subcommittee investigation found that reported requests about Jewish employes were rare, but that "a significantly greater number ...may have been received."

Hare Krishna devotee 'freed' from parents

By MICHAEL A. LEVETT
The Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — Hare Krishna devotee Madonna Slavin told a Los Angeles County Superior Court judge this week that her father, mother and other family members kidnaped her and tried to change her religious views through "de-programming."

The 20-year-old woman said she would wait several days before deciding if she will be a "friendly" witness in possible criminal prosecution of her family. The investigation of the abduction will continue while she decides, according to the district attorney's office.

"I feel no animosity....I just want my legal rights and my God-given rights," Miss Slavin said after the hearing.

Superior Court Judge Harry Hupp told the woman she was "free to leave the courtroom without restraint" after hearing her tell how her father, mother, brothers, sister, in-laws, cousins, aunts, uncles and two professional "de-programmers" moved her to different houses in three cities.

"Madonna Slavin was detained against her will without justification," Hupp said.

She did not look at or talk to the members of her family who attended the hearing.

Family members maintained she has been brainwashed by the Hare Krishna movement.

The woman told the court how she was lured to her family's Arcadia, Calif., home Saturday morning with a tearful phone call from her mother claiming Madonn's grandmother — who was in court Friday — was dying and wanted to see her.

While her fiance, Krishna follower Edward Walford, waited in the car, members of her family forced her into a van in the backyard, where two women she did not know were waiting, Miss Slavin said.

She described how she struggled and screamed "Krishna, Krishna" (calling to God).

"I said they were going to have to kill me," the woman told the court, when she realized that the family meant to kidnap her and try to "de-program" her.

She was driven to relatives' homes in Santa Inez, Santa Maria and Calistoga, all in California.

She escaped Thursday morning when she ran off after her captors let her go on a walk to look for deer.

"I couldn't stand it any longer," she said, using the same calm voice in which she related her entire journey.

She ran to a nearby house, called her fiance in Los Angeles and was put in protective custody by Napa County sheriff's deputies until Arcadia police brought her back Thursday night.

(Sunday night Superior Court Judge Jerry Pacht ordered Madonna's father, mother and oldest brother to bring her to court Tuesday.

(At that time, both men refused to answer most questions concerning her disappearance and Judge Hupp stayed the hearing until Thursday to consider offering the men limited immunity from prosecution in possible criminal actions if they would talk.

Mrs. Slavain did not appear.

(Miss Slavin had escaped by the time of Thursday's hearing so the judge delayed the hearing until Friday, when Madonna testified.)

Madonna told the court that she "was physically and mentally assaulted" and was escorted everywhere — including the bathroom — until she got to Calistoga.

She said her family said she was being "de-programmed" because she had been brainwashed by the Krishna movement and had lost her free will.

(Remesvara Swami, or Michael Grant, leader of the local Krishna temple, said that this was part of a nationwide effort to violate the Constitutional right to practice religon.

(He said that brainwashing, or de-programming, included violence, sleep and food deprivation and desecration of religious objects in an effort to make people foresake their religious beliefs.

(The movement leader said professionals were advertising their de-programming services.

(Critics of Hare Krishna and other cults claim that de-programming does not involve violence and that it is the only effective response to the "brainwashing" carried out by the cults.)

The de-programmers, who called themselves "Donna" and "Eileen," cut the beads from her neck and took away her prayer beads, Miss Slavin said.

She said she recognized one of the woman from a Los Angeles Times article on de-programming and that her name was Cathy.

Miss Slavin refused to elaborate after the hearing on any acts of de-programming that might have been carried out. She was not questioned on the matter during the hearing.

(Dep. Dist. Atty. Richard Lowenstein said that during questioning Thursday night following her return to Arcadia she said she was not physically abused or deprived.)

She said the family and the women spoke of a professional de-programmer and had a leaflet from a Pennsylvania group on the subject.

She told the court she still loves her father, mother, sister and brothers but what they did was "an act of aggression...not of love."

Judge Hupp told the court that a family with concern for a family member that chose a life not in accordance with their standards had taken an illegal act.

"While we might all sympathize...the law can't and doesn't accept forcible detention," Hupp said.

Lowenstein called members of the families "suspects" and said while he could seek a complaint without Miss Slavin's cooperation in the prosecution, "it is not a good idea to do it that way."

Barry Fisher, attorney for Miss Slavin and the movement, said he will explain the significance of possible criminal and civil actions to the woman. The movement is considering civil actions of its own, Fisher said.

Slavin family members continued to say Madonna was "under mind control" and called for an investigation of the Hare Krishna activities.

She is the victim of "psychological brainwashing technique" they have charged.

They may take legal action of their own, the family's attorney said.

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — A company founded by Korean evangelist Sun Myung Moon has captured a share of the East Coast tuna fish business and his associates say they may soon launch a major expansion of their commercial fishing operations in the United States.

These operations already include an active export business to the lucrative Japanese sashima (raw fish) market, which pays a premium price for the meat of giant, bluefin tuna caught off the Massachusettes coast, it was learned this week.

Last summer, business representatives of Moon bought about 5 per cent of the entire East Coast Tuna catch on wharves in Gloucester, Mass., and from boats on the high seas.

The representatives were working for the Tong Il Fishing Co. of New York City, a relatively little known arm of the controversial evangelist's conglomeration of religious, political, real estate and export-import entities. The commercial undertakings founded by Moon are believed to have helped sustain a variety of religious and other activities in the United States and aboard.

Of the 96 giant tuna purchased in New England by Tong Il, 57 were shipped on ice by plane to Tokyo in waterproof boxes nicknamed "coffins" by Massachusettes wharf men. The remainder are in cold storage in this country or were sold in New York City. These tuna were selling for well over $1,000 a piece in Massachusettes and over $3,000 a piece in Japan late last summer.

Joseph Tully, a Tong Il spokesman, confirmed this week that a major expansion of all fishing activities was being considered.

"Fish could help the American people," he said in a telephone interview. "Rev. Moon is looking at a number of things in the ocean. It has resources that can be used for the good of people, because of protein. And he's aware that the United States fishing industry is in a state of decline."

Until a few years ago, Atlantic bluefin tuna were sought mainly for sport. Because the dark, beef-like meat does not appeal to American tastes as white tuna from the Pacific does, there was only a small commercial market. That changed as Asian businessmen began buying the fish and exporting the meat to Korea and Japan. In 1973, scientists cautioned that stocks had declined ominously because of increased commercial interests.

In 1975, federal authorities, acting under congressional mandate, regulated the fishing for the first time and established a quota of 1,850 for last summer in the main fishing area north of Cape Cod.

Stephen Baker, an advertising man representing Moon, said recently that Moon planned to purchase fishing trawlers and a fleet of trucks and "make fish a staple in the American diet."

Tully said there had been discussion of this, as well as of expanding Tong Il's exporting business to include marine species "which don't count for beans in the (American) diet, but are valuable there (in Asia)."

Meanwhile, the tuna fishing exploits of Rev. Moon and his supporters abroad two vessels registed to Moon's Unification Church attracted the notice of local police and federal marine officials last summer.

Law enforcement agents of the National Marine Fisheries Service were quoted in a story in Friday's Gloucester Times as saying tuna from those vessels were sometimes taken to a beach in Swampscott, Mass., in the middle of the night.

As boats idling offshore illuminated the beach with searchlights, Moon supporters dragged 700-pound fish ashore and hauled them across the beach to a waiting truck, the story said. Moon supporters explained that, in this way, there was a saving of fees routinely charged by public and private docks for unloading fish.

Michael Smith, public relations spokesman for the Unification Church, said a rented house in a community of estates in Marblehead, Mass., served as the base for numerous all-day fishing trips by Moon and his supporters. During these, Smith said, the Unification Church leader would often "pray and think about the problems of the world."

Smith said a total of 29 tuna were caught last summer by the 48-foot yacht New Hope and the 28-foot speedboat Flying Phoenix, a catch which placed the church near the pinnacle of the 3,000 licensed Atlantic bluefin tuna fishermen. Smith said fish caught by those craft were not sold, but were eaten by Moon supporters at centers here and abroad, or placed in cold storage for eating later.

Daniel Russ, chief of law enforcement for National Marine Fisheries Service in Gloucester, said his office last summer investigated a complaint from a Cape Cod fisherman that the New Hope took more than its limit of one tuna a day while cruising in Massachusettes Bay between Gloucester and Cape Cod.

"We could not find any proof that would have justified any action against the New Hope," he said.

Coast Guard laws forbid the sale of fish caught by craft registered as pleasure yachts, rather than fishing vessegs. Several sources in the Massachusetts coastal fishing business said abuse of this regulation may have become widespread since tuna prices began to rise sharply last summer.

However, Smith said the church had been extremely careful to obey all fishing laws.

Capt. Richard Fullerton, Marblehead police inspector, said he also had investigated the Moon fishing operation briefly last summer in response to queries from neighbors in the exclusive neighborhood about Tong Il refrigeration trucks parked at Moon's rented Marblehead house.

Fullerton said he had been to the house on several other occasions to search for children reported missing by parents who believed the youngsters had joined Moon's religious movement.

Fullerton said he was told that the Tong Il trucks were parked there because the New Hope or Flying Phoenix frequently brought tuna back to a floating dock moored off the rocks below.

Charles Curcuru, of Curucru Brothers, Glouchester, said Tong Il representatives bought fish in commercial quantities at his dock last summer. "I never did business with a better bunch of people," he said. "They're real businessmen — all real pros."

Your Sheriff Must Control His Temper, If He Is To Control Lawbreakers. . .

ONE OF THE BIG REASONS WHY MIDLAND COUNTY REMAINS THE CLEANEST COUNTY IN TEXAS IS SHERIFF ED DARNELL'S FIRM BUT FAIR AND CONTROLLED WAY OF DOING HIS JOB. HE DOESN'T CREATE INCIDENTS, AND WILL NOT TOLERATE PHYSICAL ABUSE OF CITIZENS IN ANY WAY.

But how about the other Candidate?

The prosecutor in the Midland County Attorney's office, during 6 of the 7 years Dallas Smith was a highway patrolman here, has said:

"When I was in the County Attorney's office, many instances involving the use of physical force by Patrolman Smith were reported to me. These reports against Mr. Smith far exceeded those against all other officers."

EVEN MORE SIGNIFICANT IS THE TESTIMONY OF PATROLMAN DALLAS SMITH HIMSELF IN THE CASE OF THE STATE OF TEXAS VS. FRANCISCO LUNA SUBIA, NO. 19,567 IN THE COUNTY COURT OF MIDLAND COUNTY, ON FEBRUARY 16, 1970. PATROLMAN SMITH SAID, IN HIS OWN WORDS:

"I felt I needed a little action, so I reached over and got him by the front of the shirt, by his collar, and yanked him around in the seat." -Page 6, Transcript

And again:

"I grabbed him by the collar portion of the shirt, and I yanked him and jerked him around hard, and told him to shut up. And I said it loud, said it plenty loud." -Page 7, Transcript and again:

Question:
"At the time you did grab him, did y'all prior to that time shove one another, or anything like that?"
Patrolman Smith:
"NO, SIR. . .I grabbed him and yanked him around, and I slung him, more or less." -Page 8, Transcript

and again:

and again: after the man was handcuffed behind his back.

"I think when I pitched him in the car, I was pretty upset, myself, and I wasn't none too careful about putting him in the car. I just grabbed him by the arm and handcuffs and back of the seat and just loaded him up." -Page 57, Transcript

Unfortunately, "rough stuff" is sometimes necessary when an officer is physically resisted or attacked first -- but THAT WAS NOT THE CASE HERE, AS PATROLMAN SMITH HIMSELF TESTIFIED. The point for Midlanders to seriously consider is the fact that this man used excessive physical force far too often ... far more than any other officer. . .to the extent which makes his conduct and attitude a matter of concern. Moreover this man was innocent—the jury found him "not guilty"—but nothing could undo the harm from the admitted acts in an irresponsible officer who "yanked him", "jerked him around hard", "slung him", "kicked him in the neck", and "just loaded him up..." This is no way to enforce the law! These are legitimate concerns of every Midland voter who wants our county to remain a fine, clean community, where all our people-no matter where they live, or where they work, or the color of their skins-live in harmony under laws fairly enforced by mature officers, who recognize that "spoiling for fight" is now way to do their jobs.

City students learn about business through JA

The Junior Achievement program was begun in Midland in 1962 by a group of business leaders who felt the need to prepare young people for a future in business. Today, guided by a board of directors which includes 35 of the top business leaders in Midland, JA is teaching "the business of business."

Aided by teams of advisers from Tall City businesses, the high school students organize and operate their own "mini-corporations." More than 300 students and 70 business men and women are involved in managing the 17 companies formed this year.

The JA companies meet one night each week for two hours, from October through April. In that time the students serve as members of their respective company's board of directors. They select a company name, a product or service to be offered and apply for a charter from the national JA office.

Money needed to purchase materials for production is obtained by selling stock. Each share of stock sells for one dollar and is available to the public. Once production is underway, the sales income will pay company expenses, including rent, wages, salaries and commissions, material costs and taxes. The rent and taxes collected go into a special fund to provide scholarships and travelships for outstanding achievers.

In addition to the business knowledge gained by running their own companies, these students have a chance to test their management skills in leadership and learning to work with other people. This year JA of Midland is offering additional opportunities for growth through first aid training, sales clinics and a public speakers training course conducted by members of the local Toastmasters Club, in addition to the annual officer training clinic.

This year's companies are the following: Jaco, No. 1, co-counseled by Getty Oil Co. and Skelly Oil Co., distributing first-aid kits and safety equipment; Craftco, counseled by Elcor Chemical, producing jewelry; Alco, counseled by Union Texas Petroleum, making decopagued plaques of the school emblems; Richco, counseled by Atlantic Richfield, with products including ice scrapers, indoor-outdoor thermometers and and trunk lid tie-downs and Dryco, counseled by Sii Drilco, providing street number painting for your curbs and plans to manufacture stainless steel cookie sheets.

Also, Hytex, counseled by Texas Electric Service Co, producing the world's safest dart game; Minabco, counseled by Midland National Bank, making auto trouble lights; Amsco, counseled by Main Lafrentz, providing auditing services for the other JA companies and limited accounting and auditing services to the public; Oconoc, counseled by Continental Oil Co., producing salt and pepper shakers; Sunatco, counseled by Gulf Oil, U.S.A., producing trivets; Habco, counseled by Halliburton Services, producing door name plates in both plastic and metal, and the United Achievers Bank, counseled by First National Bank, providing the banking services for all JA companies.

And Unique counseled by Exxon Co., U.S.A., producing wooden hanging planters; Nojaco, counseled by Northern Natural Gas, producing brain teaser puzzles, rain gauges and travel totes; Westco, counseled by Western Co., producing retractable extension cords and plans to produce plant food; Southwestern Ringers, counseled by Southwestern Bell Telephone Co., producing phone directory holders and paper sack organizers, and Dynaco, counseled by Union Oil of California, building desk organizers.

These JA companies are not subsidized in any way by the public and all profits and benefits go to the company members and their stockholders. Funds for operating the JA program locally are made through contributions by the local business community and interested individuals. Recently, W. F. Ortloff, president of The Ortloff Corp., and this year's JA board president, announced this year's fund drive will be starting soon under the direction of campaign chairman, Gene Abbott of Abbott Building Co.

JA companies meet from 7-9 p.m. Monday through Wednesday. The board of directors and staff of JA extend an invitation to anyone interested to visit the business center at 2311 Elizabeth St. or dial 682-4966 for more information.

Ready-to-wear fashion whirl for summer '77' begins

By MICHELE COOPER
Agence France-Presse

PARIS — The latest winter fashions may be but a recent addition to most women's wardrobes, but attention in Paris already has turned to styles for next spring and summer.

The house of Lanvin kicked off the ready-to-wear fashion whirl for the 1977 summer season with a lighter, brighter version of its winter haute couture emphasizing tiny bodices, full skirts, and tunics that could be dresses or dresses that could be tunics.

Designed by Jules-Francois Crahay, who also does high fashion, the Lanvin de luxe boutique showing began with a series of beach coverups — or informal at-home wear — in pale stripes of golden sand, dusty pink and moss green of the finest cotton.

Both houses remained faithful to the sophisticated layered look. At Lanvin Crahay dubbed one of his key creations a "peasant" dress: of textured ecru cotton, it had bouffant sleeves of multi-colored print on black and was topped by a narrow, black pin-striped bib apron.

A parallel, yet very different, ensemble by Ungaro used a splashy lilac flower print in a two-piece dress, then added a smaller flower print on a short quilted vest. A violet, Indian-cotton jacket with exaggerated kimono sleeves — 2 feet wide, set from below the hip — lined in the same print as the vest completed the look.

Ungaro's jacket-vests were a trademark of his summer collection. With short, kimono-style sleeves, in prints or solids, they invariably had contrasting bands or piping.

While neither Ungaro nor Craway could ever be accused of copying, there was a touch of Yves Saint)-Laurent everywhere. But it was Saint-Laurent watered down and made more wearable for the ready-to-wear trade.

Lanvin, for example, showed a swirling, ankle-length cape-and-dress ensemble in light white jersey edged in royal blue, with a jersey underskirt edged in cherry red. The skinny bodice combined both blue and red in a geometric print with narrow straps.

While trousers were not totally absent from the collections, they were de-emphasized. When they appeared, they followed either a straight and narrow line or were bloused before narrowing sharply at the ankle.

For evening, royal blue and emerald green were color favorites. Ungaro ran metallic threads through brightly striped knits to make gowns in a variety of shapes, usually accompanied by a giant square as a wrap in matching or contrasting shades.

Less well known now than Lanvin and Ungaro, the Maggy Rouff label is trying for a comeback. Designed by former Maggy Rouff apprentice Claire Barrat, the collection shown Sunday was classic and ultra-feminine.

Especially successful were the exclusive prints used for daytime dresses — one of which appeared deceptively demure from the front but had no back at all from the waist up — and evening wear. One version had small, bright embroidered dots scattered generously over a white silk gown with short kimono sleeves.

Barrat also showed a lacy, ecru macrame blouse with the skirt available in three lengths, ranging from mini to maxi. The mini appeared elsewhere in the collection as well, as a cotton knit skirt teamed with a matching band around the bust.

Fabrics at Maggy Rouff were simple and elegant: cotton, silk and crepe de chine, or combinations of those. Silk also came in a rain-proofed version for a black poncho and narrow skirt.

Requests made to VIM office for volunteers

The most important qualification that a potential volunteer should possess is a desire to give of his time and talent to help others, says the Volunteers in Midland office, 682-1666.

TAPE-LENDING LIBRARY: This agency has been in operation many years and is designed to serve the visually handicapped. Persons needed include a record keeper, who will work with statistical information; outreach worker, who will visit nursing homes and read to the elderly, and a public relations person, who will write publicity.

SWINE FLU CLINIC WORKERS: Volunteers are needed to work in these clinics on Tuesdays and Wednesdays in November on three-hour shifts. These volunteers would screen patients, give information and assist with paper work.

TEACHER ASSISTANTS: Volunteers are needed in the classroom to help with the Head Start program. Men especially are encouraged to assist in this capacity one morning weekly from 8:30 a.m. to 12 noon or any portion of that time. In addition, teacher assistants are needed to help with children with learning disability problems. This work would be on a one-to-one basis.

Couple makes trip to London, England

The bride, the former Judith Lee Chambers, is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Chambers of Melody Acres. The bridegroom is the son of B. G. Bolin of 2911 Rebel St.

Mr. Chambers presented his daughter in marriage. She wore a floor-length ecru dress fashioned with a laced bodice which featured a V-neckline and lace bell sleeves with fitted cuffs. A lace panel down the skirt's front led to an eight-inch ruffled hemline. The bride's bouquet consisted of autumn-toned flowers.

The bride's sister, Valerie Deason of Brownwood, served as matron of honor. Best man was Alan Leftwich of Midland. Ushers were Tommy Bolin and Paul Bolin, both brothers of the bridegroom.

A reception was held in Midland Country Club.

The bride attended Midland College and Howard Payne University. She is a receptionist for Elmer Fox and Co., CPA, and a member of the Junior Woman's Association.

Suggestions given on garment buying

NEW YORK (AP) — With the growing popularity of downfilled garments for winter, the Feather and Down Association urges consumers to look for quality in design and workmanship.

Seams should be well sewn and the surface of the garment should be smooth. A fabric with a fuzzy appearance indicates possible down leakage.

The warmth a garment can provide depends on the amount of loft or thickness of the down filling. A higher loft gives more warmth.

Recipes presented for unripe tomatoes

By MARIAN BURROS
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — October is the end of the season for tomatoes, the beginning for apples.

For gardeners whose vegetable patches have yielded up far more tomatoes than they care to eat but who hate to see their unripened tomatoes killed by the frost, two recipes are offered: one for the freezer and one for the canning jar. Come January, the tomatoes will look much more appealing than they mibht to the sated palate in October.

The mincemeat recipe also calls for apples, which are plentiful at this time of year.

TOMATO SAUCE
(Makes 8 cups)

10 large ripe tomatoes
2 large onions, chopped
2 large carrots, scraped and shredded
¼ cup chopped parsley
1½ tablespoons sugar
1 tablespoon salt
½ teaspoon pepper

Wash tomatoes, core and cut into chunks. Place in large pot with remaining ingredients and bring to boil, stirring frequently. Lower heat and simmer for 30 minutes, or until mixture has thickened. Cool, then spoon batches of the mixture into the blender and blend until smooth. Pour into freezer containers and repeat until all of sauce has been pureed. Seal and freeze.

GREEN TOMATO MINCEMEAT

2½ quarts cored, chopped green tomatoes
1 tablespoon salt
1 orange
12 medium pared, chopped apples
16 ounce package seedless raisins
6 ounces chopped beef suet
1 teaspoon nutmeg
3½ cups firmly packed brown sugar
1 teaspoon cloves
½ teaspoon ginger

Sprinkle salt over tomatoes. Cover and let stand 1 hour at room temperature. Drain. Cover tomatoes with boiling water. Let stand 5 minutes; drain well. Grate orange peel; chop orange sections. Combine all ingredients and heat to boiling; stir occasionally.

Have ready 10 sterilized pint canning jars. Immediately spoon mincemeat into jars, leaving 1-inch head room. Place lids on jars; tighten rings firmly. Process in pressure canner at 10 pounds pressure for 25 minutes.

DEAR ABBY

Abby agrees with "Firm 'No'" teenager

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: After reading the letter from HEAVY-HEARTED DAD whose pregnant daughter wasn't even through eighth grade, I had to write. This is for all teenage girls whose boyfriends try to pressure them into going all the way:

I'm 16 and my boyfriend is 18. Sure, we go parking and make out, but when he mentions fourth base, I set him straight right away.

My feeling is this: We have our whole lives ahead of us, so why take a chance on ruining it when we're young?

If your boyfriend says, "If you love me, you'll prove it by going all the way," tell him to get lost. Keep a level head and don't ever go so far you can't turn back. It's not worth it. Sign me . . .—A FIRM "NO"

DEAR FIRM: Congratulations! Fifteen years ago I wrote a book, "DEAR TEENAGER," but the chapter "Should I Prove My Love?" is still sound advice for teenagers. And here it is:

Why not "prove your love" by sticking your head in the oven and turning on the gas? Or playing leap-frog out in the traffic? It's about as safe.

Clear the cobwebs out of your head: Any fellow who asks you to "prove your love" is trying to take you for the biggest, most gullible fool who ever walked. That proving bit is one of the oldest and rottenest lines ever invented!

Does HE love YOU? It doesn't sound like it. Someone who loves you wants whatever is best for you. But now figure it out: he wants you to:

Commit an immoral act . . .

Surrender your virtue . . .

Throw away your self-respect . . .

Risk the loss of your precious reputation . . .

Does that sound as though he wants what's best for you? This is the laugh of the century: He wants what's best for HIM . . . he wants a thrill he can brag about at your expense.

Love? Who's kidding whom! A boy who loves a girl would sooner cut off his right arm than hurt her. If you want my opinion, this self-serving so-and-so has already proved that he DOESN'T love you.

The predictable aftermath of "proofs" of this kind always finds Don Juan tiring of his sport. That's when he drops YOU, picks up his line and goes casting elsewhere for bigger and equally silly fish.

At times, still another version of this modern tragedy occurs, as indicated by this letter I once received:

DEAR ABBY: I went steady for seven months with a boy I thought was the most wonderful person in the whole world. I thought I'd always stay decent. After a while we weren't satisfied with just kissing.

He asked me to prove my love. I thought as long as we planned to be married in a few years, what would it matter?

I gave in to him, Abby, and I found out it mattered a lot. He lost all respect for me. He started going with other girls. He even talked about me to other boys.

Please print this for all the girls to see. Maybe it will help someone who is tempted to prove her love like I did.—SORRY NOW

If he loves you, let HIM prove his love—by marching you to the altar!

Wise counseling can relieve difficulties

By ROBERT P. STUDER
Copley News Service

LOS ANGELES — It's not an insurmountable problem and wise counseling probably can relieve many of the psychological difficulties — but a University of California at Los Angeles study has come up with some surprising answers to what happens to a marriage when a breast is removed.

The survey of 31 couples, conducted by investigators from UCLA's Neuropsychiatric Institute, included — for the first time — responses from the male partners of women forced by malignancy to undergo a mastectomy.

The survey probed reactions to the discovery of the disease, the decision to have the surgery and the post-mastectomy period that followed.

Some of the findings surprised the researchers:

— Nearly one out of four women had seriously considered suicide, a much higher percentage than had been predicted.

— Wives, questioned about their sexual relations before and after the surgery, felt that there had been "no change" and that the mastectomy had had no effect on their ability to enjoy sex.

— Male responses were more troublesome. Far greater numbers responded in one degree or another that sexual relations had become less satisfactory.

The study also showed, according to researchers Dr. Kay Jamison, Dr. David Wellisch and Dr. Robert Pasnau of the UCLA Department of Psychiatry and Biobehavioral Sciences, that contrary to expectations, the women were not reluctant to show their surgical wounds to their husband. Often, it was a case of the husband not wanting to see it.

Nearly two years after the mastectomy, 20 per cent of the men questioned still had not seen their partners unclothed. Several of the men said they "weren't looking forward to the eventual occasion."

Calories become national calamity

By SHIRLEY BRIGHT BOODY
Registered Dietitian
Copley News Service

Calories have become a national calamity. Two things cause this; too many, and the wrong source. The result is an increasing number of obese Americans and a fearsome increase in cardiovascular deaths.

Following these trends come the opportunists who prey on the gullible with "diet aids" and promises of "easy losses" and painless weight reduction.

People listen to every quack and charlatan who chooses to appoint himself an expert in diet and nutrition.

The advice is absurd, dangerous and it is the unsuspecting public who suffer the consequences of this opportunistic quest for money.

In evaluating a weight loss diet the first question to consider should not be "how fast" the scale goes down, but rather, does it effectively reduce the fat in your body while maintaining a high nutritional level.

The nutritional health of the overweight person is of prime importance. Many people who have gone on fad diets have lost their health in the effort.

We know today that the source of calories is as important as the number. The nutrition and chemistry of the diet determine whether health improves and the fat disappears.

The antiquated 500-calorie diet is inadequate nutritionally because it cannot supply enough food to maintain health.

Nor can the addition of vitamin pills make up the lacking nutrients. Many needed nutrients are found in food alone and cannot be supplied by pills.

Even a 1,000-calorie-a-day diet is not adequate nutritionally. To get a more healthful loss with peak energy and great nutrition, a diet should have 1,200 to 1,300 calories of selected items from meats, fish, poultry, vegetables, fruits and milk.

Calories count, of course, but they must be manipulated properly to supply the nutrients that people need — protein, carbohydrate, fat, vitamins, minerals and trace minerals.

The time in the day that calories are consumed is vitally important. The active hours are when they are needed for energy. You cannot help but gain weight if foods are eaten at night.

Calories taken in excess of those needed for bodily functions are stored as fat. To lose this fat you need to take into the body fewer calories than you burn up. However, there is more than that to consider.

For example, as weight is lost so is potassium, a vital life-sustaining mineral, and it must be replaced with high potassium foods. The loss of this mineral is a primary cause of sudden deaths occurring from 500-calorie diets and strong diuretic pills that cause a fast water loss.

It must be remembered that it is the source of the calories that determines your nutritional health. A properly nourished body cannot be attained by counting calories alone.

The Twentieth Century Study Club, in cooperation with the Texas Federation of Women's Clubs, will sponsor a "Hands Up" Crime Prevention Workshop at 1:15 p.m. Nov. 9 in the Midland Room of The Midland National Bank.

All interested persons are invited to attend. Mrs. Richard Story is the club's "Hands Up" chairman. President of the club is Mrs. Joseph H. Mims. Mrs. Jack C. Howard is program chairman, and Mrs. Conard Reeves is Western District, TFWC, crime education chairman. Also members of the workshop committee are Mrs. Robert Burkett, Mrs. Carl O. Hyde and Mrs. Alex Clark.

Existing crime prevention methods, methods of self protection, as well as literature and program material will be presented. A special guest of the Texas Crime Prevention Institute, Fred H. Stansbury of San Marcos. will discuss existing crime prevention programs.

Sgt. Fred Johnson of the Midland Police Department, director of crime prevention, will present suggestions in the Neighborhood Watch Program, Operation ID and security lighting measures. Also present will be Buck Luttrell of the Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission, crime prevention coordinator.

"Hands Up" is a nationwide volunteer program on crime reduction launched by the General Federation of Woman's Clubs. The program is made possible through a Department of Justice Law Enforcement Assistance Administration.

Goals of the workshop are to develop solutions and organize local action groups to launch specific crime reduction programs in the community.

Midland Police Chief Wayne Gideon has stated the crime rate in Midland is rising. Figures reflecting this statement given to the Department of Public Safety by the City of Midland Police Department show that from Jan. 1 to July 19, 1976, there were six murders, nine rapes, 23 armed robberies, 126 assaults, 636 burglaries, 1,198 larcenies and 128 automobile thefts.

Public awareness along with citizen involvement are key factors in crime reduction.

Six figures no longer rare price

By MARIE STANTON
Copley News Service

Six figures for a house.

That's not exactly a small investment for most. But $100,000 houses are selling, and selling in increasing numbers.

It wasn't many years ago that people spending $100,000 were either very wealthy or living way beyond their means. They were set apart by extravagance and luxurious life-style.

A lot has happened to change all this, and most of it is economic.

Today the $100,000 house is no longer rare. It is advertised regularly in local newspapers and magazines and more builders are venturing into the high end of the residential building market to find ready buyers.

These buyers are of all ages with varying lifestyles, but with two common characteristics: the desire for a comfortable home and the financial ability to purchase it.

Some building industry observers complain average costs of new homes have become dangerously high, leading many to question publicly and privately whether ownership of the single-family home may become a thing of the past for future generations — at least for the majority.

One developer said he feels people in the market for a new home are becoming more and more reluctant to build their own home because of the fear of what it will cost and because they do not know how to go about it.

Also people don't know if it is going to satisfy them esthetically when it is finished.

"Interpreting a blueprint is much more difficult than seeing an actual house completed. Buyers can see not only the finished house — exactly how it is going to work — but they can visualize themselves living in the house," he said.

Women exert influence

CHICOPEE, Mass. (AP) — Women are exerting an influence on the design of sports equipment, an area once considered men's domain, says the president of a sporting goods manufacturing company.

They are also influencing sportswear fashions. American women spent $50 million in 1975 on tennis clothing alone, though some of it showed up in the supermarket rather than on the courts. This expenditure has also led to greater fashion consciousness among male athletes.

"However," says Spalding's Richard M. Geisler, "the women's influence goes beyond tennis and mere cosmetic changes. It goes all the way back to the drawing board. In golf, for example, we have designed a woman's ball that converts their slower clubhead speed into greater distance."

Another factor in the impact on sports equipment, Geisler notes, is the federal law requiring greater portions of school athletic budgets to be used for women.

Slenderness preferred

NEW YORK (AP) — Most teen-agers would rather be thinner, reports a Dept. of Health, Education and Welfare survey of health conditions of youths between ages 12 and 17.

Although two-thirds of the youngsters felt that their weight was right for their age, more than half of the survey group felt they should weigh less.

Response to survey questions showed that more than half the girls who considered themselves "below average" on the popularity scale preferred to be thinner. About half of the boys would rather be taller, regardless of popularity.

Are drapes necessary?

By ADELE FAULKNER
Copley News Service

If draperies are not included with the apartment or condominium, they can be one of the major expenses.

Yet, do you really need them? . In small apartments, heavy draperies hanging at the window can have a diminishing effect making the entire room appear darker and more "closed in."

Besides providing the desired amount of privacy, ask yourself what basic "look" or design effect you wish to achieve.

For instance, a penthouse, because of its location may provide its own privacy, yet something is needed at the window to cut the glare. On smaller windows, this can be achieved by covering a screen with a mesh fabric which allows unglaring light to filter in.

Chaperoning basically a depressing job

By ERMA BOMBECK

At some time in a parent's life, he or she will be asked to chaperone something at the school.

Chaperoning is basically a depressing job. It is the moment most people have been dreading . . . the day you traverse the gap from swinger to swingee.

I do not like chaperoning for other reasons. It is not my idea of fun to sit and watch someone doing what I would be doing if I didn't have to sit there and tell them not to do it.

As the wife of an educator, I have had my share of supervising dances, trips, proms and social affairs. It would be selfish of me not to share my expertise.

1. One of the primary duties of a chaperone is to find the party. Obviously you cannot chaperone if you have no one to chap. We have found the best way to find the hidden location of a party is to follow a car full of kids with your lights out.

2. Proms often have two punchbowls. One is a blend of 15 fruits that make your face break out as you pour it. The other will put a little fun in your life, quicken your footsteps and make the evening bearable. Unfortunately, the chaperones are not told about this bowl.

3. Be sure of your authority. When you walk into the parking lot and discover three hoods who do not attend your school, but who are ripping off a car and have a tire iron in their hands, make sure you have a better threat than, "You know, this makes you ineligible for the Robert Frost awards in the spring."

4. Be aware of the fact that music at proms and parties could make you sterile. The art of conversation is reduced to lipreading and pantomime. As an experiment, I once repeated a single sentence for the entire evening, "Is there somewhere I can go to scratch my teeth?" Everyone pretended to hear what I was saying. Thirty-five people said they were pleased to meet me too. Eight said, "It's too much work for you. Come to our place." And one said, "Thank you. My mother made it."

5. It is not as difficult knowing when the party is over as you might think. There are little things . . . like you are humming and tapping your foot and the band is gone . . . your eyes no longer smart from Clearasil, and you realize that from habit you shouted, "Is there somewhere I can go to scratch my teeth?" and the English teacher sniffed and said, "I'd say you got into the wrong punch bowl."

Carla Jean Cavett wed to Jerry Dean Penick

ODESSA — Carla Jean Cavett of Odessa, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. O. B. Cavett, also of Odessa, Saturday became the bride of Jerry Dean Penick, son of Mr. and Mrs. Dean Penick of 5500 West Highway 80, Midland.

The Rev. Orval Austin of Jal, N.M. and the Rev. Frank Seaman, officiated the double ring ceremony in Westminster Presbyterian Church here.

When presented in marriage by her father, the bride was formally gowned in a traditional sheer bridal crepe and Alencon lace encrusted with bridal pearls. The fitted empire bodice featured a high-rise neckline contoured to a deep V. Scallops edged the yoke and neckline with a lace overlay encrusted with pearls. Bishop sleeves encircled with lace and gathered to wide pearl enhanced cuffs edged with a sheer ruffle, and a folded cummerbund traced the waistline. The circular skirt flowed to a deep chapel train in the back below a Dior bow.

The bride's sister, Dawn Cavett of Odessa, served as maid of honor. Matron of honor was Mrs. Fay Coleman of San Angelo, cousin of the bride. Bridesmaids were Jonie Badger, Sherri Huddleston and Janet Roberson, all of Odessa. Barbara Wilson of Odessa, cousin of the bride, was flower girl.

Best man was Larry Shackelford of Austin. Groomsmen were Rod Pope, Rusty Cavett, brother of the bride, and Howard Coleman, all of Odessa, and John Matthews of Midland. Gary Blackwell of Midland, cousin of the bridegroom, and Craig Cavett, brother of the bride, and Mike Lake, cousin of the bride, both of Odessa, were ushers.

NEEDLEPLAY

You can prevent 'bubbling'

By ERICA WILSON

DEAR ERICA: Could you please explain how to prevent needlepoint canvas from "bubbling" once it's been blocked and framed? I believe I am following all directions in wetting and blocking a completed canvas. After my picture hangs for several weeks, I notice that the canvas is not as taut as when I framed it. What's the best way to anchor my needlepoint so this won't happen?—Rebecca Newman, Brooklyn, N.Y.

DEAR REBECCA: Professional framers frequently glue the back of needlework to cardborad to prevent this very thing. This is often disastrous since they don't always get it completely straight and wrinkles form permanently.

I prefer working with a stretcher frame (available at any art store). It allows you to stretch your canvas tight around it with a heavy-duty stapler before framing, and when bubbling does occur (there will always be some, due to changes in atmosphere) you can stretch where needed and add a staple or two.

If you prefer to solve the problem the way our ancestors did, you could lace the back of your cardboard with several strands of strong button thread and herringbone stitches, and when bubbling occurs, you can just tighten the lacing the way you would a corset.

DEAR ERICA: I'm about to try making a crewel picture for an enlarged snapshot. I'm fine on everything except how to figure out how much crewel yarn to buy for colors. Can you help me?—Myrtle Ellis, Fitchburg, Mass.

DEAR MYRTLE: You can't really figure how much wool is needed for a crewel project ahead of time; it depends totally on which stitch you're using.

I'd suggest buying small skeins of every color and collecting more as you need them. The dye lots won't change tremendously, so don't worry about buying different ones. Besides, with the textured stitches of crewel embroidery an absolute color match isn't nearly as important as it is with needlepoint, when you're creating a large flat area of color.

DEAR MISS WILSON: When working a needlepoint design from a chart, what is the best way to put it on canvas—at the top from right to left, at the middle, or just at random?—Mrs. E. F. Bruno, Brooklyn, N.Y.

DEAR MRS. BRUNO: Where you start your needlepoint depends entirely on your design. A repeat design is best started in the middle, whereas a pictorial scene is easier when started at the top.

You are, however, courting danger when you pick parts to stitch at random because after you've worked a considerable portion you might find you made a mistake in counting, and you'll have to totally unpick! If there's a predominant pattern that repeats itself all over the canvas, you could work that first, and then have a "skeleton" from which to work the rest.

Stains invisible

Fabric stains caused by fruit juices, artificially sweetened soft drinks or alcoholic beverages are sometimes invisible. Prolonged storage or heat used in drying or pressing carmelizes the sugar, causing a noticeable yellow, tan or brown stain.

As soon as these stains are known, they should be sponged with rubbing alcohol or diluted bleach as safe for the fabric, says the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

Freezing good way

Recent research on the effects of freezing on fruit and vegetable structure indicates that freezing provides an excellent preservation process for many fruits and vegetables with a minimal change and the need for few preservation compounds.

This is explained by Mrs. Mary Sweeten, foods and nutrition specialist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, Texas A&M University System.

BARNES PELLETIER Suburban

Wolf threatened with extinction

By ANDY LINDSTROM
Copley News Service

ST. LOUIS — "That dude can take down and kill a full-grown cow in less than a minute," said a paunchy man in checked shorts and flower-spattered shirt. He was pointing at a timber wolf in the St. Louis Zoo.

"He's no farmer's friend."

"He looks just like our German shepherd," one of the boys said. "I'll bet he'd make a neat pet."

"You can't tame a wolf," the man answered in the fatherly tones of adult certainty. "They'd be all right for awhile. Then — wham — one day they'd turn on you and it would be all over. They were born to kill, pure and simple."

"Wolves are not a danger to people, nor are they pets," said Donna Hart, executive secretary of the Wild Canid Research and Survival Center (WCRSC) in Tyson Park, St. Louis. "The fact is, people are not a wolf's natural prey."

Tyson Park, managed by Washington University of St. Louis as an environmental research center, is 2,000 rugged and woody acres about 20 miles west of the city. It is also home for 14 wolves in a WCRSC sanctuary.

"Probably the biggest problem for the survival of the wolf is that people tend to anthropomorphize him," Donna said. "Small children are raised with the idea that wolves are pitiless killers.

"They read about the Big Bad Wolf, Little Red Riding Hood and the other fairy tales that depict the wolf as a kind of devil, an animal with blood lust.

"That's all untrue. There has never been a single case of an authenticated attack by a healthy wolf on a human being in North America."

"But," she added, "even a rabid squirrel is a menace. And the hundreds of stories of wolves attacking people in Europe and Asia are also unverified.

"The idea of wolves snapping at folks riding in their sleighs through the Russian forests just doesn't ring true. Actually, wolves in their natural habitat tend to stay as far away from people as they can."

Although a major improvement over the St. Louis Zoo's confined quarters, the habitat of the Tyson Park wolf pack is a far cry from the 10 or more square miles per wolf that biologists consider a minimum wilderness hunting ground.

Less than five acres of the former federal munitions storage area are set aside for the project. In fact, the Tyson wolf pack is actually two packs. Both are canis lupus, or timber wolves. But their heritage is literally continents apart.

To the unpracticed eye, both packs look remarkably like coyotes, to whom they are related.

Dogs and jackals also belong to the subgroup. Combined with another subgroup, the foxes, they make up the Canidae family.

Tyson's first pack, 10 wolves of questionable heritage, are kept behind a double set of chain-link fences on about one-and-one-half acres near the center of the park.

"We got the parents from an animal dealer in California four years ago," Donna said. "We are almost sure they are canis lupus baileyi, or Mexican timber wolves. But we aren't absolutely sure, and for a scientist, that means they aren't really suitable for most experiments."

A second enclosure, separated by a narrow walkway, contains four extremely friendly Iranian wolves, a subspecies of timber wolf that is nearly extinct.

Head of the first pack is a 12-year-old male with the size and power to back up his position. The second pack is leaderless.

"These wolves were dug out of a den by farmers in Iran about a year ago," Donna said. "The parents were killed and the cubs confiscated by local authorities.

"They would have been killed, too, but Marlin Perkins was on a photographic safari there and told them about our facility."

Pogemiller to be UTPB adviser

ODESSA — Mrs. Carla Pogemiller has been named to succeed Mrs. Glenda Miller as student activities adviser at The University of Texas of the Permian Basin.

Mrs. Miller has accepted a post as a field consultant in West Texas for the Texas Historical Commission.

Mrs. Pogemiller moved to Odessa in March 1975 from Albuquerque, N.M. Earlier she had been a deputy county recorder in Fairfield, Iowa.

Kuykendall, Wood elected

TEMPLE — District directors from Texas' 196 soil and water conservation districts elected Kenneth Kuykendall, president, and Charles Wood, vice-president, at a recent meeting.

Kuykendall, a Cherokee rancher, has served as director and alternate director of the state association for the past nine years. He helped organize the San Saba Valley Resource Conservation and Development Project.

Wood, a Lubbock farmer and rancher, has been a county soil and water conservation district director in the Lubbock area, for the past 10 years and chairman of the board for five years.

Zone changes on agenda

The Midland Planning and Zoning Commission will consider an eight-item agenda when it convenes in regular session at 4 p.m. Monday in the council chamber at city hall.

Commissioners will consider a city-initiated zoning study to rezone an area south of Florida Avenue, lying east and west of South Big Spring Street and Rankin Highway to Marlin Street. The zone change proposed is from single-family dwelling district and local retail district to local retail and commercial districts.

The commission also will study a request by Allen V. Manning for a zone change from local retail to commercial at Rankin Highway and Hicks Avenue, and a request by Joseph Bynum for a zone change from local retail to another classification of local retail at South Big Spring Street and Dakota Avenue.

Commissioners will discuss a request for a specific use permit for a child care center at 401 W. Nobles Avenue, as requested by Samuel H. Rodriquez. The group also will study a request by Greg Pulliam for a zone change from parking district to planned district on .32 acre at 2600 W. Michigan Ave.

City planners will consider a request by James Crume for a zone change from single-family to planned district in the 3200 block of Wadley Avenue, and a request by George William Berry for a zone change from single-family to office at Pecos and Louisiana streets.

The commission also will discuss changing its regular Nov. 15 session to Nov. 22.

By CHARLIE GREEN
Midland County Agent

Chilly, wet weather brought most outside farm and ranch activities to a halt for the greater part of the past week. The slow, soaking moisture will be a boon to winter small grains and rangelands.

The many acres of cotton in the Midland area just nearing harvest should not be too adversely affected provided sunshine and drying weather returns in long enough intervals to allow harvest to procede without too much delay.

The moisture is a plus for cropland producers in that soil moisture storage is essential for next year's production.

Any time after crops mature in fall is an ideal time to take soil samples. Once plants reach maturity, they virtually stop taking up nutrients. Therefore, the soil's nutrient state will remain about the same until planting time next spring.

There are many advantages to soil testing at this time. For one thing, you can now readily identify problem areas in a field. If you think fertility caused reduced yield or unusual symptoms in some areas, sample these areas separately so that a comparative evaluation can be made. Other reasons for soil testing this time of year include pleasant weather and more favorable soil conditions.

Although overall shortages of fertilizer are not anticipated, there can be a big advantage in having time to make plans with your dealer for the material needed. The possibility of fall or winter application of all or part of next year's fertilizer soon after harvest is another important consideration.

Information on how to collect representative samples can be obtained from the county agent's office. This material should be carefully read for suggestion and precautions because only a properly collected soil sample can adequately reflect the existing plant nutrient levels.

It is important to provide the soil chemist with information about your land use plans for next year so that fertilizer-use suggestions can be made on your soil test report.

A choice can be indicated on the information sheet accompanying soil samples whether regular tests or regular test plus the micronutrients iron, zinc and manganese are desired. I urge producers to do more soil testing as a guide in determining fertility needs because the cost of fertilizer materials is such that an incorrect "guess" without the benefit of soil analyses can be most expensive in terms of reduced efficiency.

The pyracantha has a long and famous history of beautifying fall landscapes with its heavy stems of bright orange and red berries. Some people like it, others do not.

Granted it is thorny, has outrageous growth habits, but in the fall when its branches are laden with a heavy coat of colorful red berries, it would be hard to deny it a place in the landscape.

One of the myths of the pyracantha is that the berries are poisonous. If you've ever watched the birds feast on a branch of pyracantha berries, perhaps you have wondered if they were indeed poisonous. The fact is, pyracantha berries are entirely edible and there is at least one recipe for pyracantha jelly.

Everett Janne, extension horticulturist, Texas Agricultural Extension Service gives the following recipe: To extract the juice, boil ½ lb. of berries in ¾ cup of water for one minute. Strain the juice through clean cloth. To one cup juice add one teaspoon lemon juice and ½-package powdered pection. Bring it to a hard boil; add ¾ cup sugar and continue boiling 1½ minutes, stirring constantly. Pour into hot, sterilized jars.

Short hiking trails abound

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Ouachita National Forest in Arkansas and Oklahoma contains a number of short hiking trails, many of which are educational as well as recreational.

A one-mile loop at Walnut Creek, for example, interprets forest land use, passing through 55 species of plant life. At Crystal Recreation Area another one-mile trail will have markers describing a hardwood forest and a jumble of rocks through which it passes.

Other routes include a three mile Youth Conservation Corps trail and still another one-mile loop that has markers dealing with the relationships between plant and animal life.

Author discusses 'cynical' book

By JEANNETTE BRANIN
Copley News Service

Formula for getting power: Use flattery, cunning, deceit. Be suspicious of everyone on every rung of the ladder.

Formula for using power: Be cruel, tyrannical, shameless. Put down anyone who threatens your preeminence.

Immoral suggestions? Not at all, said Michael Korda, author of a book which, a year ago, was America's No. 1 best-seller for 30 weeks: "Power! How to Get It, How to Use It."

"Amoral, maybe," said Korda in an interview. "Subversive, maybe. Seductive? Well, I should hope so.

"It certainly is a cynical book, but this is a cynical world.

"I suggest that the book can be used in two ways, as a manual for attaining power at the expense of others, or a manual of defense to help persons be aware of the ways that others take advantage of them."

The book came about when Korda became involved in the lives of friends whose careers had stopped or had taken a sharp downward turn.

"In almost every case, it seemed to me that they had handled the situations very badly," he said.

"My basic conviction is that there are a lot of difficult situations that people can't handle, and that is always true of life. There's simply no escaping it.

"But I believe that the higher percentage of those situations that you deal with well, the more successful you are going to be.

Korda is a California product who made his way to power in New York. He was born in England, but grew up in Beverly Hills and Hollywood. His father, Vincent Korda, and his uncle, Sir Alexander Korda, were motion picture directors.

"I think it was because I grew up in Hollywood that I didn't want to make my career in motion pictures," he said.

Instead, he went to New York and at 25 became an editorial assistant at Simon & Schuster at $75 a week.

"I was an exceptionally hard worker and a very good editor, and I was all of that for a long time and still making $75 a week.

"It occurred to me that the key distinction in pay positions is that you are not paid for what you do as much as by your capacity to make decisions. That capacity is power, and that is what is rewarded."

Korda said that he created a position where he could take on responsibility and make decisions, and that it was easy to do. Then, he said, he asked for his own office, a secretary and an expense account, and got them.

Korda says he is aware that some consider his book about power, now being released in paperback, to advocate base motives and actions.

"I am not judging whether people are good or bad," he said. "If you want to be at the top, it is a hard climb. The rewards are enormous, but they have to be paid for."

Ringing the bell

With Bob Tieuel

A bellringer writes: Dear Bob:

"It is very likely that the next president of the United States will get the votes of only about a quarter of the adult population. This is something that should concern every one of us, not just the campaign managers and the politicians. The case for a simplified national automatic registration system is clear. Last month, for example, over 90 per cent of Swedes turned out to vote.

"Blacks, the poor, and the young all vote in smaller numbers than do the satisfied and complacent. Groups largely excluded from society can't be expected to lead in political participation.

"A large black turnout this year would make both parties sit up and take notice of black needs and aspirations. Every church, social club, community organization, and concerned individual in the black community ought to be out knocking on doors and collaring neighbors and friends to urge them to study the issues and vote on election day. This year it should be a must." End of quote from Vernon E. Jordan.

Recent great quotes: From black-oriented Oklahoma Eagle- "Although the NAACP fell short in raising the million and a half dollars for the bond required for appeal in Mississippi, thanks for the pledge to underwrite the balance by the AFL-CIO. This generosity by the AFL-CIO as well as the Anti-Defamation League, the National Education Association and the United Auto Workers, helped the NAACP to meet one of the gravest crises of its long and illustrious career...This should not put us to sleep but we must continue to work and raise at least a half million bucks more."

H. Rap Brown and his wife, Lynn are happy that federal charges against them have been dropped. They want to go back to Georgia and "live in peace".

We close remembering the words of our Lord who said once: "Let you who are without sin, cast the first stone." Be a good neighbor. They come in all colors. And thanks for all your calls, letters, flowers etc. for Mom. She is grateful.

Prisoner escapes

LOS ANGELES (AP) — An American prisoner escaped from a high-security jail in Mexico City and crossed the border into Texas, television station KTTV reported.

The station said Jack Kolberg of New York City, reportedly awaiting trial on a narcotics charge in the Notre jail, crossed into Texas at an undisclosed place Thursday night.

Two Mexican prisoners arrested with Kolberg also escaped from the prison stockade.

He was the first American known to have escaped from the so-called escape-proof jail, the station said.

KTTV anchorman Chuck Ashman said Kolberg contacted an organization of parents of other Americans still in Mexican prisons. Kolberg said Americans were still trying to get out despite announced negotiations between Mexico and the United States for a prisoner exchange program.

Ashman said he contacted the American Embassy in Mexico City, which said it could not confirm the escape.

Dams provide cheap power, but salmon in danger

EDITOR'S NOTE — The dams along the Columbia River have given the Northwest the cheapest electric power in the United States. But the salmon that struggle up the Columbia have paid dearly for man's progress. Now men are trying to save them.

By JOE FRAZIER

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — For centuries, salmon in incredible numbers fought their way up the Columbia River to spawn.

The Indians took what they needed, and the run still prospered. Later, white men sent more than 40 million pounds in some good years in the 1920s to canneries and curing houses. The salmon runs survived even this plunder.

Then in the 1930s, the first of the hydroelectric dams went up on the river and the runs started to dwindle. Today there are 11 dams on the main stem of the Columbia and more on its major tributaries, and the salmon runs, once the world's biggest, are in trouble.

Engineers and scientists are looking for ways to restore the giant runs to the Columbia, and also to re-establish the Atlantic salmon on New England rivers where dams have all but wiped them out.

The dams hinder migration to spawning grounds, grind fish to pulp in their turbines and poison the water with too much nitrogen. They alter the temperature of the Columbia and other rivers, giving rise to diseases and parasites unknown before the dams were built.

The result in the northwestern United States has been a swap — abundant salmon for cheap, plentiful energy supplied by the dams. The campaign to revive the salmon without interrupting the energy hasn't been easy. But the steps taken so far, principally on the Columbia, show promise. They include alterations in the dams to aid salmon migration, manmade hatcheries near dams, and transportation of salmon in tank trucks past dams.

The original plan for Bonneville Dam, the first one the salmon must pass, had no plans at all for fish passage. It took hard lobbying by the commercial fishing industry to get fish ladders included.

"If they hadn't, that would have solved the whole salmon problem right there," said Howard Horton of Oregon State University's fish and wildlife department. "That would have been that."

Fishways were built into subsequent dams except for Grand Coulee, the largest on the river, 596 miles from the mouth. There are no fishways there, so above Grand Coulee there is no migration. The result is that 500 miles of river and tributaries are useless for the salmon.

Today, half the returning salmon were born in hatcheries operated by Oregon, Idaho and Washington. They consist of a series of quiet pools usually located below dams. The females are caught, killed and their eggs placed at the bottom of the pools to be fertilized by the males. The hatcheries then become the spawning grounds to which the new generations of salmon return instinctively to breed.

But until all the problems of the dams are solved, the escapement, or number of fish returning to spawning grounds, can be controlled only by regulating the fishing season. On the Columbia, the season has been cut from 272 days in 1938, when Bonneville was completed, to fewer than 50 days today. The once-abundant salmon have become a luxury more expensive than steak in many markets.

There has been no commercial fishing to speak of during the summer salmon run for a decade. The salmon also come upriver to spawn in the fall, spring and winter.

In 1938, commercial fishermen took almost 19 million pounds of Columbia River salmon. As dams went up the figure dropped. It has passed 10 million pounds only three times since 1952. Eight of the 11 dams were completed after 1952, as were eight of the 11 dams on the Snake River, a major Columbia tributary and spawning ground.

But the dams aren't all bad.

Because of them, there are no brownouts in the Northwest and energy from the dams, sold wholesale to publicly owned utilities by the Bonneville Power Administration, gives the region the cheapest energy in the United States.

In Eugene, Ore., the Eugene Water and Electric Board charges $12.10 for 1,000 kilowatt hours of electricity, enough to light and heat a suburban home for two to four weeks. In Chicago the price, with taxes, is $43.44. New Yorkers pay $90.62.

The energy is produced by the water stored behind the dams turning giant turbines. If the river level is low, all the water goes through the turbines, or "meat grinders", as Horton bittery calls them, and the fish go with it.

Depending on the angle of the turbine blades, from three to 18 per cent of the fish are killed at each dam they pass. "That's three to 18 per cent of the survivors each time. If you pass through several dams, that's a heck of a lot of fish," Horton said.

If the river is high, some of the water spills over the dam, saturating the river below with nitrogen and causing a fatal condition in the fish similar to bends in humans.

Under pressure from the state of Oregon, the Army Corps of Engineers, which built the dams, has installed "flip lips" on the five dams that cause most of the nitrogen problem. The lips direct water down the face of the dam instead of allowing it to plunge through the air and become saturated with nitrogen.

Experimental screening of turbine intakes is under way at two dams.

Another project involves gathering up young salmon shortly after they hatch, then taking them by tank truck several hundred miles downriver for release below the dams. The return rate for fish trucked downriver in 1973, a low water year, was 15 times that of those who swam through the turbines. The difference is less in high water years.

The Corps of Engineers is considering a $46 million program to increase escapement by building additional hatcheries on the Columbia and its tributaries.

"The dams are causing the fish kills, and the dams are liable," said Robert Thompson, fish manager for the Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife. "You can't just say, 'Tough beans, the housewife and commercial fisherman and sportsman are out so much for the sake of power production.' You just can't make that argument, and the Corps realizes its responsibility."

The hatcheries project would increase salmon escapement by 131,000 a year. With current mortality rates, Thompson said, that would mean that an additional 27 million young fish a year would be released from the hatcheries.

Biologists at the University of Maine are trying to learn more about the Atlantic salmon runs, which were all but wiped out by a series of smaller dams built around the turn of the century. Fishways weren't added until the 1950s, and pollution took a heavy toll as well.

For most of the nation the days of major dam construction are over as other power sources are developed and locations for dams are used up.

One dam projected for the Rogue River in southern Oregon will have no fishways over it, but hatcheries will be built below it. On the Columbia, Thompson says the question of saving the runs seems to be an economic one.

"It depends on how much we want to spend and how hard we want to work," he said. "The technology is there."
