Storm hits Philippines

More than 2,300 people killed in landslides

TACLOBAN, Philippines (AP) — Landslides unleashed by a tropical storm roared down mountains in the Philippines, sweeping victims into the sea. More than 2,300 people died and 1,500 were missing and presumed dead, officials said Wednesday.

The landslides hit the central islands of Leyte and Negros on Tuesday, burying coastal shantytowns under mud, debris and flood waters.

On Wednesday, scores of bodies still lay in the debris, and rescuers collected bodies, sometimes in wheelbarrows, for mass burials.

"The water suddenly rose. Cars and trucks were being flushed into Ormoc Bay like toys," said Ruby Gernale, a Red Cross official in Ormoc, a city on Leyte that was hardest-hit by the furious landslides.

"People were being carried by the waters, crying out for help. But we were helpless," she said. "The current was so strong."

One horrific landslide that hit the Ormoc area swept over shantytowns, crumbling the flimsy shacks under the weight of mud and debris. Many of those killed were children, and workers were digging mass graves

Jessica's rescuer

SAN ANTONIO — Construction worker Ignacio M. Sanchez, who helped rescue Midland's Jessica McClure from an abandoned well by digging a hole through limestone, has died. He was 65. Sanchez died at home Sunday of cancer. He was the specialist who knew how to dig through limestone so a paramedic could rescue the then 18-month-old child, who was trapped 22 feet underground in 1987. For this feat, Sanchez received eight commendations extolling his expertise and bravery. He worked more than 24 consecutive hours digging to reach the girl.

ATLANTA — Producers of the TV version of "Scarlett" want unknowns to play Rhett and Scarlett, but many Atlantans would cast Tom Selleck and soap opera star Susan Lucci if they had the choice. Almost 400 Atlanta Journal-Constitution readers called the newspaper Monday to nominate actors for the lead roles in the "Gone With the Wind" sequel. Selleck of "Magnum, P.I." was the top choice for Rhett Butler, with one-third of the votes. Ms. Lucci of "All My Children" and former "Designing Women" star Delta Burke were the No. 1 and No. 2 choices for the role of the Southern belle.

Federal Reserve cuts rate

■ Central bank lowers the discount rate, the interest it charges on loans to commercial banks.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Federal Reserve pushed a key interest rate to an 18-year low on Wednesday in a fresh effort to jump-start the national economy and keep it from sliding back into recession.

Major banks followed immediately with a cut in their prime lending rates, lowering the benchmark for many consumer and business loans to a five-year low of 7.5 percent. However, analysts questioned whether the moves would be enough.

Private economists were pessimistic as they surveyed a glut of weak economic statistics showing rising unemployment and plummeting confidence.

The Federal Reserve announced that it was slashing its discount rate, the interest it charges to make direct loans to commercial banks, from 5 percent to 4.5 percent, the lowest level since January 1973.

Later in the day, the central bank signaled that it was lowering its target for the federal funds rate, the interest that banks charge each other, by a quarter-

Kuwait declares end of disaster

■ Ceremony marks the extinguishing of the last oil field fire.

BURGAN OIL FIELD, Kuwait — Kuwait's emir on Wednesday ceremonially capped an oil well that had been reignited especially for a celebration marking the dousing of the raging oil fires ignited in the Persian Gulf War.

Even as the ceremonial well-capping went on, Canadian teams put out the last fire, in the northern field of Sabriyyam.

To the sound of bagpipes, tambourines and shrill ululations, the emir, Sheik Jaber al-Ahmed al-Sabah, walked on a red carpet leading to a blue podium, where he pushed a lever that automatically shut off a valve, stopping the flow of oil to the Burgan 118 well.

"Our national resources are safe now ... and this waste is stopped forever," Oil Minister Hamoud al-Rquba declared. However, the full environmental and economic impact of the months-long inferno is still being assesed.

Supreme Court hears graduation prayer case

By Linda Greenhouse
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — The question before the Supreme Court on Wednesday was whether public school graduation ceremonies can include benedictions that refer to God.

But that was only the starting point for an intense and lively argument that ranged widely over the landscape where church and state meet, and left the justices sounding unexpectedly wary about changing that landscape very drastically.

The case, which could well be a vehicle for unsettling decades of precedent on the relationship between church and state, is one of the most important of the Supreme Court's term. At issue is an appeal by school officials in Providence, R.I., from a ruling that the inclusion of prayers in a middle-school graduation had the unconstitutional effect of advancing religion.

The Bush administration joined the Providence School Committee in asking the court not only to permit the graduation prayers, but also to abandon its longstanding approach to analyzing government-sponsored religious activities.

Under the court's current precedents, such activities must have a secular purpose and

Jury convicts Faulkner, co-defendants

Associated Press

Flamboyant Dallas developer D.L. "Danny" Faulkner and three co-defendants were convicted Wednesday of looting $165 million from five thrifts through fraudulent land deals along Interstate 30 east of Dallas in the early 1980s.

The so-called I-30 condo scandal was one of the early harbingers of the coming thrift crisis, and was blamed for the $284 million failure of Empire Savings and Loan in Mesquite in 1984, at the time the largest thrift bailout ever.

It is the largest thrift fraud case to be tried in Texas and one of the largest in the nation.

The case was heard in Midland federal court.

STORM: Landslides, water sweep Filipinos into the sea

(From 1A)

Wednesday for the victims.

The disaster came during Tropical Storm Thelma's sweep over the region southeast of Manila. The national government in Manila only became aware of the scope of the disaster on Wednesday, however, because of poor communications with the area.

The storm dumped nearly 6 inches of rain in 24 hours on steep mountains on the island that were so heavily logged there was little to prevent the slides and inundation.

Leyte Gov. Leopoldo Petilla said rampant and illegal logging had so denuded hills in some hard-hit areas that the natural watershed no longer existed.

It was the fourth major natural disaster to strike the Philippines since a devastating earthquake killed nearly 1,700 people on Luzon island in July 1990.

Aurora Ladoy of the Leyte Provincial Disaster Coordinating Center said the death toll on Leyte, 250 miles south of Manila, stood at 2,337.

Officials said 52 more people died on the island of Negros.

Provincial officials in Tacloban said the death toll was based on body counts. But Vilma Tan, a regional civil defense worker, said authorities were so overwhelmed they were having problems compiling complete, accurate casualty figures.

The storm forced former first lady Imelda Marcos, whose hometown is on Leyte, to cancel a planned trip to the island Wednesday. Mrs. Marcos left for Leyte early Thursday but aides said she would not visit Ormoc.

Thelma, a relatively weak storm, struck Samar island on Tuesday with winds gusting to 46 mph before passing over Leyte and Negros. There were no reports from Samar, third largest of the 7,100 Philippine islands but among the most primitive.

In Burauen, about 20 miles south of Tacloban, residents heard a roar just before a sea of mud buried the town of 48,000 people.

"The house swirled," said Christina Quiotes. "I could hear my children wailing 'Where are you, Mommy?' I said 'I'm here, swim here!' " Three of her six children were missing Wednesday.

Most of the dead were in Ormoc, the coastal city of 160,000 about 45 miles southwest of Tacloban, the provincial capital. Mrs. Ladoy said the death toll in Ormoc stood at 2,002, many of them children.

On Wednesday, many bodies still lay in the mud, stripped of clothes by the force of the floods.

"I saw one van with bodies piled on top of each other with legs and arms protruding out," said Mrs. Tan.

Cebu provincial Gov. Lito Omena, who flew to Ormoc by helicopter Wednesday to offer assistance, said "children and old people were piled on top of each other."

City officials set up a makeshift morgue outside the community health clinic. Filipino reporters there said that throughout the day, people walked to the clinic carrying the bodies of loved ones.

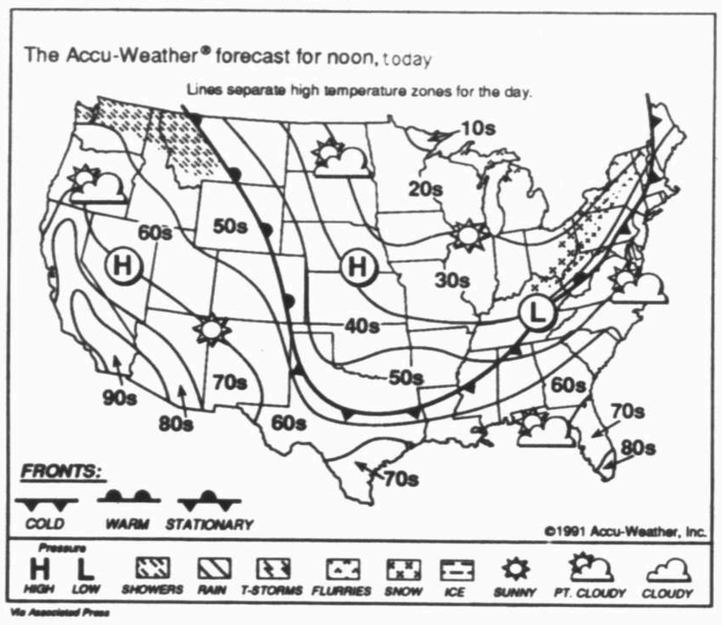

Officials said thousands of residents were unaccounted for.

"You can see bodies along the streets, under houses and in creeks (in Ormoc)," said Mrs. Tan.

The disaster occurred five months after eruptions of the Mount Pinatubo volcano caused deaths of about 700 people, left more than 300,000 homeless and forced the U.S. Air Force to abandon Clark Air Base, a few miles east of the slopes.

In November 1990, Typhoon Mike passed through the central Philippines, killing at least 335 people and sinking more than 30 ships in Cebu harbor.

OIL: Emir of Kuwait ceremonially caps Burgan well holiday declared for the occasion, had announced Tuesday that all fires were out.

The well fire at Sabriyyam and another at Rawdatein, both northern fields, were extinguished, but they were still spewing oil late Wednesday. Once they are capped, Kuwait can declare it has brought under control all of the 732 wells that were set afire.

Most of the wells were sabotaged by retreating Iraqi troops, but others were set afire during combat that included devastating allied air raids. Iraq invaded Kuwait in August 1990 and was driven out by allied troops in February.

Scientists are now turning their attention to potential problems in the fires' wake — damage to the fields, the removal of vast lakes of oil and the possibility of cancer-causing soot entering the water system.

Oil production, halted by the war, has now reached almost 500,000 barrels per day, but that is less than one-quarter of the pre-war level.

The ceremonial well-capping was in the southern Burgan oil field, one of the largest fields in the world. Attending were the oil ministers of Syria, Egypt and the Gulf Cooperation Council — Saudi Arabia, Qatar, the United Arab Emirates, Bahrain, Kuwait and Oman.

U.S. Ambassador Edward Gnehm Jr. described the occasion as "extremely historic and one that makes us all happy ... uplifts our souls."

The midnight-black skies that shrouded the field a few weeks ago — when hundreds of burning wells spewed tons of unburned oil and other pollutants into the atmosphere — had cleared.

The sun shone brightly through blue skies as men waving swords performed traditional Kuwaiti celebration dances. The oily sand around the well was replaced with clean, white sand.

An assemblage of equipment used by the different firefighting teams lined the road leading to Burgan 118. The well, which had already been extinguished, was re-ignited early Wednesday for the ceremony.

RATE: Analysts don't think cuts will help economy point to 4.75 percent.

It marked the 13th time the Fed has nudged the funds rate lower and the fifth time it has cut the discount rate since the recession began in July 1990.

But many analysts said they doubted that the latest round of rate cuts would do much to get jittery consumers spending again, given the huge overhang of consumer debt from the 1980s and fears about further job layoffs. Many economists said they had revised their forecasts to increase the chance of a double-dip recession.

"This is a very troubled economy," said Allen Sinai, chief economist of the Boston Co. "There was some snapback in the spring in manufacturing, housing and consumer spending, but all three areas look as though they have run out of steam."

Michael Boskin, chairman of the president's Council of Economic Advisers, said the administration believed the economy will be doing better by the spring because of the fall in interest rates, but he said the period between now and then was uncertain.

"One has to form a judgment about what all this negative news that has been hyped by the media will do to consumer psychology, consumer purchases and business investment," Boskin said during an interview televised by the U.S. Information Agency.

The president's economic advisers have been sharply split on the question of whether the administration should send to Congress new tax cut proposals in an effort to give the economy a shot in the arm.

Boskin has led a group that contends new tax proposals aren't needed because the recession is coming to an end and revenue lost in a tax cut will inflate a budget deficit already projected to hit a record $348 billion this year.

Many private economists said they believe chances for a major tax bill coming out of Congress early next year had been increased significantly by the weak economic news of recent days. But they warned that the rush to approve tax cuts could end up hurting the economy by raising fears on Wall Street that the deficit will worsen even more and drive interest rates up, instead of down.

PRAY: Lawyers' arguments seem to baffle justices must not have the primary effect of advancing religion.

The administration and the school officials are asking the court to permit government to sponsor expressions of religious belief as long as no one is coerced into participating. But that argument got a surprisingly skeptical reception even from justices who have criticized the existing precedents as unduly hostile to religion.

Several justices, including Antonin Scalia and Sandra Day O'Connor, appeared particularly startled when Charles J. Cooper, representing the school officials, said the Constitution would permit a state to designate an official religion as long as no one was forced to practice the designated faith.

Cooper, an assistant attorney general in the Reagan administration, gave that response in answer to a question from Justice O'Connor, who asked him whether, assuming there was no coercion involved, there was any constitutional difference between a state's choosing an official religion and a state's choosing "the bolo tie as the state necktie."

The lawyer replied that "some finding of coercion" would be necessary for the state's action to violate the Constitution.

"That certainly is not the holding of our cases," Justice O'Connor said.

In response, Cooper asserted that "we are quite frank in our request" that the court re-examine its precedents.

Scalia, one of the strongest voices on the court for lowering the barrier between church and state, appeared baffled and annoyed at Cooper's insistence that government is free to enact a sectarian preference as long as no one is compelled to go along.

"You are trying to say that the only test is coercion, but I don't think that comports with our tradition," Scalia said. "We don't say, 'Jesus save this honorable Court,' and our coins don't say, 'In Jesus we trust,' " although the use of the name "Jesus" would not be more coercive than the nonsectarian invocation of God.

Cooper replied that the name of Jesus was not used in those formulations because "it would not be politically possible."

Scalia could hardly contain his frustration. "If we could get the votes for it, that would be constitutional?" he asked. "That's what you're saying? You do not see anything in our constitutional tradition that says you cannot be sectarian?"

Solicitor General Kenneth W. Starr, who followed Cooper, made some effort to modulate the arguments of his legal ally. But he, too, ran into some rough sailing when he tried to persuade the court that it could permit public schools to offer prayers at commencements without unraveling the precedents that prohibit organized prayer in public school classrooms.

A decision in the case, Lee v. Weisman, No. 90-1014, is unlikely before the spring.

CONDO: Faulkner says verdict 'surprises' him

(From 1A)

Faulkner, who claims to be illiterate, was convicted on 42 of 45 counts, including operating a continual criminal enterprise.

Also convicted were former Garland Mayor James Toler, 41 of 46 counts; former thrift chairman Spencer Blain Jr., 34 of 35 counts; and appraiser Arthur Formann, 21 of 22 counts.

The six-woman, six-man jury deliberated 4½ days before returning the verdict Wednesday afternoon.

It then took another two hours to decide that the defendants should return their profits from the deals — $40 million for Faulkner, $38 million for Toler and $22 million for Blain, who was chairman of Empire Savings Association of Mesquite.

U.S. District Judge Lucius Bunton, who presided over the trial, has the final say on how much the defendants must return. Bunton set sentencing for Jan. 15.

In addition to the forfeiture of profits, Faulkner faces a 201-year prison sentence and $250,000 in fines. Toler faces 196 years in prison and a $250,000 fine and Blain faces 188 years in prison and a $208,000 fine. Formann's penalty may be 54 years in prison and $102,000 in fines.

The defendants showed no emotion as the verdicts were read. All four later said they would appeal.

"I was surprised because I'm not guilty," Faulkner said moments after the verdict. "I thought me and my son was just doing normal business."

"I wouldn't have had my name all over the place, spent my money there and lived there if I thought I was doing something illegal," Faulkner said.

Billy Ravkind, Blain's attorney, said the defendants were hurt by the jury's anger over the thrift crisis.

"This jury knew everything they needed to know about the problems in the savings and loan industry," Ravkind said.

But chief prosecutor Terence Hart said, "I don't see people that made over $120 million as victims. It's clear they manipulated the system to their advantage."

HOSPITAL: Facility to provide rehabilitation services

physical, occupational, speech and recreational therapists, company officials said.

Construction is expected to begin in early January, said Jim Salandi, the company's cchief development officer. The opening is expected in early 1993. The hospital will provide a comprehensive array of physical rehabilitation services for patients with head injuries, spinal cord injuries, orthopedic conditions, strokes and work-related injuries, Salandi said.

"This is no small project," Midland Mayor Carroll Thomas said after the announcement. "I think it's wonderful we're getting such a facility here. It will be an outstanding facility and the company is a first-class organization. In today's economy, the most exciting prospect is new jobs."

Thomas noted that the city has "concentrated on areas with the best potential for new diversification, and medicine is one of those areas, and this facility fits in with our efforts."

Odessa Mayor Lorraine Bonner said the new hospital was a great opportunity for Midland and Odessa to join forces to bring a new facility to this area. "We can only survive as a region. We no longer have the luxury of being Midland and Odessa, we have to be Midland and Odessa working together; then we'll be able to improve the lives of the citizens of both communities."

Brian Wells, who has been named administrator of the new facility, said the company is in the process of establishing a medical advisory group that will offer input on the need for specific support groups required by the West Texas region.

He said he expects no competition from the already-established hospitals in Midland and Odessa. "We don't compete with the other hospitals. We're adjunct to them. We provide the next step."

Salandi said his company does not come into a community "with a predetermined game plan. We customize our services to each community."

He said that, in looking for new markets, the company "is always looking for areas with an established population base, strong medical community and a lack of our type of service."

Midland/Odessa met that criteria.

He said the company has been in contact with area officials for at least the last 18 months, working on establishing the new hospital here.

"It's a long and carefully considered decision (to build a new facility). We pick our markets carefully and research them carefully."

He complimented the area on its "excellent and well-diversified medical community," and said he has received a warm reception from the people in the area.

RHSC, of Washington, D.C., was established in 1979. It has 51 facilities in operation or under development nationwide, and employs 8,000 people. It is part of National Medical Enterprises, one of the nation's largest health care service companies.

NATO once again looks to Soviet Union to justify pact's existence

ROME (NYT) — With NATO still looking anxiously for its place in the post-cold-war world, leaders of the 16-nation alliance who meet in Rome today are expected to point once again to the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe to justify the 42-year-old pact's continued existence.

This time, though, with the Soviet Union no longer posing a credible military threat to the West, the North Atlantic Treaty Organization will be responding to requests by Moscow and its former satellites that the alliance expand its political role and become a security pillar for all of Europe.

At their two-day summit meeting this week, President Bush and other NATO leaders therefore plan to approve creation of a new 25-nation cooperation council as a way of giving a formal structure to growing links between the alliance and the former Soviet bloc, including the three newly independent Baltic countries.

Poland, Czechoslovakia and Hungary, in particular, have been seeking security guarantees from NATO, even signaling their desire to join the alliance, while only last week President Mikhail S. Gorbachev said he strongly favored turning NATO into a broad political organization.

The council, which should hold its first meeting at the foreign ministers' level in Brussels on Dec. 20, will have a mandate to discuss regional security issues and promote confidence-building measures at a time of growing nationality disputes across the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe.

No less important, formation of the council — its exact name has still to be decided — should enable the United States, Britain and other strong supporters of NATO to argue this week that the alliance is adapting well to the changes that have swept Europe over the last two years.

But while NATO seems agreed on how to deal with its former enemies, there is no such consensus about its own military and political future and, above all, its relationship to other competing European organizations. And this debate is certain to continue well beyond the Rome meeting.

The military side of the issue looks relatively simple, with the NATO leaders due to endorse an 18-month-long strategy review under which the alliance will reduce its troop strength and military preparedness — nuclear weapons will only be used as "a last resort" — and create a new rapid reaction corps.

In practice, though, NATO leaders will be formalizing decisions that have already been made, including the gradual cutback of American troops stationed in Europe.

The only unresolved question is whether NATO should lift its ban on "out of area" operations, a rule that prevented the alliance from playing more than a consultative role in the Persian Gulf War, even though many of its members participated in the anti-Iraq coalition.

Saddam Hussein fires defense minister in major Cabinet change

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Saddam Hussein fired his son-in-law, considered the second most powerful man in Iraq, and replaced him as defense chief Wednesday with a cousin notorious for brutal treatment of Kuwaitis and Kurds.

The announcement marked a major change within the tight family circle that controls the ministries and security departments considered crucial for keeping Saddam's al-Tikriti clan in power since its defeat in the Persian Gulf War.

The brief report by the official Iraqi News Agency, monitored in Cyprus, gave no reason for Lt. Gen. Hussein Kamel Hassan's departure. It said all security branches would be concentrated in the hands of Gen. Ali Hassan Al-Majid, the acting interior minister.

Known as "Ali Chemawi" or Ali Chemical, for his notorious chemical warfare attacks against the Kurds, and also as "the butcher," Al-Majid is the one man most Kurds hate more than Saddam.

As governor for three months of conquered Kuwait in 1990, Al-Majid by all accounts supervised the systematic looting and suppression of the emirate.

Iraqi sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Saddam's move appeared aimed at stepping up his tough opposition to the Kurds. It also removed from the core of power a man seen as a rising star in Iraqi politics.

In Damascus, Syria, Kurdish opposition groups said the presidential decrees bode ill for the Kurds.

"The changes are definitely directed against us, because Ali Majid insisted all along that the only way to solve the Kurdish problem is to crush us," said a senior spokesman for the Patriotic Union of Kurdistan, who cited security reasons in withholding use of his name.

"Saddam's son-in-law supported a different line because he felt that after its defeat in Kuwait the Iraqi army is in no position to undertake a new campaign against us."

After U.S.-led forces drove Saddam's forces from Kuwait, Kurds rose in rebellion in northern Iraq, but Iraqi forces quelled the uprising. Kurdish leaders are still trying to negotiate an agreement with Saddam that would give them autonomy in northern Iraq.

Al-Majid was responsible for a savage campaign against the Kurds during the 1980s in which about 4,000 villages were razed and hundreds of thousands of Kurds forcibly relocated away from their northern Iraq mountain homeland to Iraq's southern deserts. The campaign culminated in a cyanide gas attack on Halabja village in 1988 that killed 5,000 men, women and children.

Paradise lost

Israelis say they will listen to proposals for talks sites

JERUSALEM (AP) — Foreign Minister David Levy said Wednesday that disagreement over the location of bilateral peace talks between Israel and its Arab neighbors would not endanger the peace process.

The issue emerged as a key stumbling block during the first phase of the peace conference in Madrid, Spain. Israel wants the talks to alternate between Israeli cities and those of the Arab participants, while Syria has insisted they be held at a neutral location.

"The Syrian insistence on conducting talks far from our region is not good news, and of course is not a message of peace. We hope they will change their mind," Levy said in a speech to Parliament.

But "I'm convinced that disagreements over the location of talks do not endanger the process," he added.

Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir's spokesman, Ehud Gol, said Wednesday that Israel would listen to other proposals if the Middle East was definitely ruled out as a site for the talks.

"We still hold to our position that the talks should take place in the region, and we will try to consult and reach that goal," Gol said.

Israeli newspapers have speculated that Rhodes or Cyprus might be acceptable compromise sites.

Gol said Israel would consider only countries near the Middle East.

On Tuesday, Secretary of State James A. Baker III called on Israel and its Arab neighbors to decide where to hold the next round of talks within two weeks.

"If there's no agreement ... we will feel free to submit proposals" on a site, Baker told a White House news conference.

Ten political prisoners in China plan hunger strike

BEIJING (NYT) — About 10 political prisoners in northeastern China are planning a hunger strike unless the prison authorities stop beating them and forcing them to work 14-hour days on a diet of hard bread and vegetables, a Chinese who has been briefed on their circumstances says.

The 10 are among about 35 political prisoners at a prison in Liaoning Province. They are serving sentences of up to 20 years for supporting democracy during and after the demonstrations in Tiananmen Square in 1989. They are divided up and housed with common criminals in cells packed with up to 40 men so that there is scarcely room to lie down.

The Chinese, who insisted on not being identified but has had reliable information in the past, said the guards frequently beat the political prisoners with sticks and electric cattle prods, and also ordered the common criminals to beat them up.

Several have injuries, but are not allowed to see doctors, and hygiene is poor, the Chinese said. The inmates, who are held in a prison called the Lingyuan Automobile Factory Training Unit in Lingyuan County, reportedly plan to begin the hunger strike Nov. 15 unless conditions improve.

In addition to the 14 hours of labor each day, making matchboxes, the prisoners reportedly must attend political study classes. They are tested and if they do poorly — by failing to commend the Communist Party — they are said to be beaten.

"I think they could probably stand the physical hardships, but mentally, spiritually, I think they are cracking," the Chinese said.

In the last two years, reports of the treatment of political prisoners have painted a varied picture, with some intellectuals and students being treated fairly well and others beaten, starved and threatened with their lives.

Soviets seek economic order

MOSCOW (AP) — As a dispirited Soviet Union prepared for the 74th anniversary of a revolution that promised peace, land and bread, authorities on Wednesday pledged free housing and affordable bread and meat to Moscow residents.

Despite the pledges, the Soviet mood seemed more despondent on the eve of Revolution Day, once the most hallowed Communist holiday.

President Mikhail S. Gorbachev, speaking in the Kremlin, said Soviets should not cross the Communist holiday off their calendar. But Russian Federation President Boris Yeltsin signed a decree abolishing the Communist Party in his republic. The party had been suspended nationwide since the failed hard-line coup last August.

Although most Soviets seem apprehensive of the post-Communist future, few are willing to speak out in favor of the former ruling party.

"Thank God that holiday is passing us by after 73 years. What holiday? Thank God all that is finally over," said Ivan Stremby, an engineer interviewed in front of a crowded and disorderly Moscow food store.

Panicked by the prospect of higher prices, Muscovites crowded into bakeries and grocery stores for the third straight day, pushing, shoving and sometimes shouting as supplies dwindled quickly.

"We received bread as usual this morning, but we ran out at 11 a.m.," said Galina Makarova, a clerk in a Moscow bread store.

Seeking calm, Moscow Mayor Gavriil Popov promised to allow residents to take possession of their current housing at no cost. He also said coupons would be issued in an effort to guarantee low-cost bread, meat, sausage, butter and eggs in the face of expected price rises.

Gorbachev, also seeking to defuse public anger, said foreign governments would help keep food supplies at current levels.

Gorbachev, just back from meetings with President Bush and French President Francois Mitterrand, gave no details. But Ivan Silayev, the senior Soviet economic official, told reporters that finance ministers of the seven leading industrial democracies had assured him a Soviet debt crunch "will be settled with the help of Western credits" within 10 days.

Ukraine elects to remain part of national economy

MOSCOW (NYT) — The Soviet Union took a tiny step back from the brink of economic disaster Wednesday when the Ukraine agreed to remain part of the national economy and the government said it would pay its foreign debt.

The Ukrainian parliament voted Wednesday to become a partner in the Soviet economic community. The Ukraine is the second most economically important state in the country. Without it, it seemed probable that the Soviet economy and then the nation itself would break apart.

Most of the 12 Soviet states say they are remaining in the Soviet Union instead of becoming independent mostly because they are so intricately tied to the Soviet economy. If the Ukraine hadn't joined, many Soviet leaders — including President Mikhail Gorbachev as well as economists — had predicted the entire nation would unravel.

Moldavia Wednesday also reversed its earlier decision to stay out of the economic union.

Now ten of the 12 Soviet states officialily have agreed to be economic partners. Reports said Azerbaijan too had changed its mind, leaving only Georgia steadfast in its refusal to participate.

Despite the Ukraine's about-face Wednesday, the Soviet breadbasket state's 52 million people are expected to vote to secede from the Soviet Union when they are polled on Dec. 1. The parliament's decision Wednesday to join the Soviet economy goes against what pollsters say the people actually want.

Maxwell died before fall, judge says

LAS PALMAS, Canary Islands (NYT) — Robert Maxwell, the British publisher whose body was found in the Atlantic on Tuesday, apparently died before he fell into the sea from his yacht, a Spanish judge in charge of investigating the case said on Wednesday.

"Our preliminary finding is that he did not drown, but that he died before he fell into the water," said Judge Luis Gutierrez Sanjuan. "All the signs are that this was a natural death, probably a heart attack."

The autopsy to establish the cause of death that was begun Wednesday is expected to continue this morning, but private investigators and members of the Maxwell family have already raised strong doubts about the preliminary version of events coming from Spanish authorities that holds that the publisher simply suffered a heart attack and fell overboard while the vessel was under way.

Searching for clues to explain Maxwell's sudden disappearance from his yacht, apparently in the pre-dawn hours of Tuesday, the family has ordered an extensive investigation into the background of the yacht's 13-member crew. Besides the crew, Maxwell was the only passenger, the family said.

"To put it plainly, we need to know whether someone tried to do him harm," said a close associate of the Maxwell family. "We need to know if anyone was put on board for a purpose."

He said that in the mind of Maxwell's sons and business associates, there are many things that arouse suspicion.

For one, he said, investigators have pointed to the shape and the security features of the yacht, the Lady Ghislaine, the gleaming white luxury vessel, 180 feet long and 32 feet wide.

"I know that boat inside out," said a friend of the family, "it has tremendous bannisters everywhere, like an ocean liner. You just cannot fall over. Even if you fell over, in most places you would probably hit yourself on a deck below."

For the same reason, the family friend said, it is hard to believe that Maxwell could have fallen down on deck and slipped underneath the bannister. "Not him, not a man of his formidable size. He would not fit."

Investigators hired by the family were on their way to the island of Tenerife where the yacht is anchored to inspect the video system, one of a number of security features on the yacht. Video cameras on the teak- and mahogany-panelled ship can monitor passages and rooms below deck, according to a member of the Maxwell staff.

But he added that the cameras are mainly used while the ship is in port and he did not know if the system had been switched on as the vessel was moving during the night Maxwell died.

Elizabeth Maxwell, the publisher's wife of 46 years, identified her husband's body, which was first brought to a military base on this resort island.

Democrats brag about Wofford; Bush gets message on economy

By David Espo
Associated Press writer

Related stories/2D

Democrats savored Sen. Harris Wofford's smashing victory in Pennsylvania on Wednesday as evidence of increasing strength heading into the 1992 campaigns for the White House and Congress. A chastened President Bush said "we'll try even harder" to repair the economy and expand health insurance.

The sensitive issue of race vied with pocketbook concerns in postmortems on the off-year elections. Bush hailed the surprise victory of Republican Kirk Fordice in the Mississippi governor's race after a campaign that stressed opposition to racial quotas.

At the same time, the president sharply attacked Republican David Duke, the former Ku Klux Klansman running in next week's gubernatorial runoff in Louisiana. Bush said he'd vote for the Democrat in the race if he had to choose.

Sponsors of term limitations for members of Congress licked their wounds after suffering a surprising defeat in Washington state, but vowed the issue would reemerge in a dozen states or more next year.

"Mark another one up for the ruling class of career politicians," said Ann Best, executive director of Citizens for Congressional Reform.

Said seven-term Rep. Vic Fazio, D-Calif., "I don't think any of us should underestimate the frustration and anger that people feel."

The crosscurrents were strong in elections that reached from the U.S. Senate to county supervisors.

While the term-limitation measure failed in Washington, incumbents were turned out of office in striking numbers — Gov. Ray Mabus in Mississippi and Mayor Kathy Whitmire in Houston among them.

House Speaker Tom Foley, who rallied the opposition to the term-limit measure in Washington, said the results showed that voters aren't "blind, raging, out of control" despite their anger.

Anti-tax sentiment came through loud and clear in New Jersey, where Democrats lost control of the legislature after pushing through a large tax increase in 1990.

Wofford said his upset victory over former Attorney General Dick Thornburgh after a campaign that stressed nationwide health care and extended jobless benefits showed that Americans "wanted to deal with problems of our own." Appointed to the Senate last spring after the death of Sen. John Heinz, Wofford will serve the three years left in Heinz' six-year term.

Thornburgh, a former two-term governor, said the contest had been transformed into something bigger, "the national economic picture and the quality of life people were looking for, particularly in health care."

He added, "If this election had been held six months ago in the aftermath of Desert Storm, it might have been different."

Ronald Brown, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, said Tuesday's results showed "Americans are ready for change." Said Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, "the clear loser was George Bush."

The president flew to a NATO summit in Rome, and Democrats who regularly accuse him of devoting too much time to diplomacy could scarcely contain their glee.

They scheduled events in Rome, Iowa; Rome, Mo.; and Rome, Ohio, to "call attention to the devastating effects of Reagan-Bush economics." And they sold T-shirts for $10 that bore the inscription: "George Bush went to Rome, and all I got was this lousy recession."

Bush, still a favorite in his unannounced race for re-election, confessed he was "depressed" by the defeat of Thornburgh, his former attorney general.

But the president noted the GOP triumphs in Mississippi, New Jersey and a U.S. House race in Virginia, and said, "Please don't look at the part of the glass that is only half full."

House vote to lift counseling ban falls short of override majority

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House voted 272-156 Wednesday to block the Bush administration's ban on abortion counseling at federally funded family planning clinics. But the margin was well short of that needed to override President Bush's threatened veto.

The House approved a $204 billion health, education and labor spending bill that includes language blocking for one year the administration's ban on counseling. Critics call that ban a "gag rule."

Despite winning, abortion-rights advocates were disappointed they fell short of a two-thirds, or veto-proof, majority.

"I find it a very sad day," said Rep. Patricia Schroeder, D-Colo. and an opponent of the ban on abortion counseling. "I hope American women remember how their representatives voted. They voted to treat them like children, not like adults."

Both the House and the Senate previously approved the bill. Wednesday's vote was on accepting a House-Senate conference report reconciling differences.

The measure also faced a Senate vote. But delays in House action on other elements of the bill prompted the Senate to put off action until Thursday.

On the eve of the vote, a group of Republicans charged the bill utilized budget trickery to provide $4 billion for programs by pushing outlays into the next fiscal year. They urged rejection of the measure for that reason; opponents of the gag rule said that issue reduced votes for the bill.

"What you see here is a legislative shell game," said House Minority Leader Robert Michel, R-Ill.

Bush has threatened to veto any bill negating the counseling ban. Seeking to avoid what could be the first override of his veto, Bush released a memo Tuesday aimed at persuading lawmakers that the restrictions would not be interpreted strictly. But opponents said Bush's memo had no legal effect.

"The White House memo is designed to get the administration off the hook on the gag rule and provide its gag-rule supporters in the House protection," said Rep. Les AuCoin, D-Ore.

The ban against abortion counseling at federally assisted family planning clinics was imposed by the Reagan administration in 1988, continued by Bush and upheld by the Supreme Court last May. Bush has gained support for his stand from conservatives.

House hearing on pipeline spying ends quietly

WASHINGTON (AP) — A House hearing on industrial spying against a former oil trader who leaked embarrassing pipeline documents to Congress came to an abrupt end Wednesday with lawmakers declining to ask him any questions.

"Everybody felt that the focus of the hearing was the surveillance and that there was a potential to start down a whole series of other avenues," House Interior Committee Chairman George Miller, D-Calif., said afterwards.

But pipeline company officials expressed dismay at the anti-climatic ending to two and a half days of hearings. Lawmakers had been hinting there would be fireworks when they questioned Charles Hamel.

The hearings were called to make public details of a Wackenhut Corp. undercover surveillance operation against Hamel on behalf of the pipeline company.

But when Hamel finished reading his 14-page statement Wednesday afternoon, not one of the 46 members of the committee indicated that he had a question for the one-time oil trader portrayed as an "extortionist" by his critics and a "whistleblower" by his supporters.

Instead, Miller banged the gavel and the hearings came to a close.

One avenue of questioning the lawmakers sought to avoid, according to sources close to the investigation, included whether the committee's staff encouraged Hamel to procure documents taken from the pipeline company.

Another possible avenue some lawmakers sought to skirt would have involved a broadening of the scope of the hearing to include alleged violations of environmental and safety laws on the company's Trans-Alaska Pipeline. The allegations were addressed in the documents.

Both issues were discussed extensively in 26½ hours of video and audio tapes of Hamel made surreptitiously by Wackenhut investigators retained by Alyeska in the effort to ferret out those leaking the documents to him.

Rep. Charles Taylor, R-N.C., had tried earlier to question oil company representatives on the pipeline's ownership committee about Hamel's comments on the tapes. The comments were contained in transcripts provided by industry lobbyists.

But Miller said Taylor could use only the recordings subpoenaed by the committee for the questioning. Taylor said he would try to arrange that during a lunch break and question Hamel in the afternoon session.

Earlier in the hearing, Taylor had quoted from a taped conversation in which Hamel told a Wackenhut agent posing as an environmentalist that he hoped that Alyeska recognized that he was the one funneling documents to Miller's staff.

Controversy over Soviet aid stalls defense bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Democrat-led proposal to take up to $1 billion from the Pentagon budget and use it to aid the Soviet Union has been blocked, at least temporarily, by members of Congress who say it's a misuse of taxpayers' money.

The plan, originated by Rep. Les Aspin, chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, and his counterpart in the Senate, Sam Nunn, is included in the 1992 Defense Authorization Bill, which had been expected to reach the House floor this week.

But disputes over the Soviet aid proposal and another less substantial issue have set back the timetable for final action on the defense bill. One source, speaking on condition of anonymity, said opponents were pressing Aspin, D-Wisc., and Nunn, D-Ga., to drop the proposal in order to win quick passage of the bill.

Armed services committee staff members were working behind the scenes Wednesday to try save the plan.

The proposal's supporters say it would increase American security by helping prevent further instability, and possible nuclear chaos, in the Soviet Union. Critics say the money would be better spent on defense-related problems in this country.

Aspin's portion of the proposal calls for using U.S. military resources, especially cargo planes, to transport emergency food and medical supplies to the Soviet Union this winter when a worsening food shortage is expected to become critical. The money apparently would not be used to buy the food or medicine.

Nunn's part of the plan calls for establishing programs aimed at promoting demilitarization in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe, in part through cooperation on technical problems such as destruction of nuclear weapons and environmental cleanup of military sites.

An outline of the plan released by Nunn's office stressed that the proposal is aimed at reducing the Soviet military threat, not at bailing out Moscow.

Republicans on Nunn's committee complained bitterly last Friday when the panel accepted a compromise version of the defense bill that included the Soviet aid plan. They said they had not been given time to study the proposal fully, and that it appeared to be an inappropriate use of scarce Pentagon funds.

Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., said Tuesday that Senate Republicans were "pretty unanimous" in their determination to vote against the defense bill if the Soviet aid provision is included when it reaches the Senate floor.

Asked about the delay in bringing the defense bill to a floor vote, House Speaker Thomas Foley, D-Wash., said Wednesday, "It is not in any trouble." But sources said the legislation was stalled until the aid dispute could be resolved.

Republicans are not alone in their opposition to the proposal. Rep. Dante Fascell, D-Fla., chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, said Tuesday he doubted the wisdom of using Defense Department funds to pay for Soviet aid programs.

Public Notice

On July 1, 1991, Southwestern Bell Telephone filed an application with the Public Utility Commission of Texas that proposes to delete Paragraph 3.4(G) from Section 3 of Southwestern Bell's intrastate Access Service Tariff, which concerns credits where a customer uses Switched Access Service to furnish a service which has been defined to be an exchange service. The application was assigned Docket No. 10463.

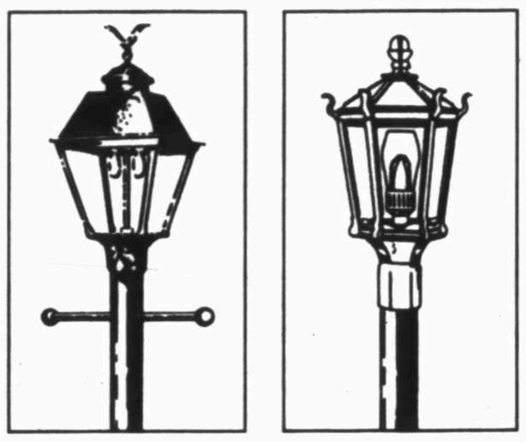

Because Southwestern Bell is not aware of any customers who presently use switched access service to furnish an exchange service, Southwestern Bell does not believe its revenues will be affected. However, certain interexchange carrier customers of switched access service have made claims under the aforementioned tariff. Such customers, but only to the extent they provide an exchange service using switched access, would be affected by this application. Based on claims made for credits (assuming such credits were allowable), Southwestern Bell's revenues would be affected by no more than $1,168,962 annually, which is .037 percent of the Company's adjusted revenue for the 12-month period ending December 31, 1990. It is not possible to know how many interexchange carriers might believe themselves entitled to credits, but 189 carriers have registered with the Commission pursuant to PUC Substantive Rule 23.61.

The tariff, after suspension, is proposed to be effective May 1, 1992.

Persons who wish to intervene or otherwise participate in these proceedings should notify the Commission as soon as possible, but no later than November 15, 1991. A request to intervene, participate, or for further information should be mailed to the Public Utility Commission of Texas, 7800 Shoal Creek Blvd., Suite 400N, Austin, Texas 78757. Further information may also be obtained by calling the Public Utility Commission Public Information Office at (512) 458-0256. Americans may have been left in Vietnam after '73, official says

Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — Despite nearly two decades of government claims that all American POWs were back home or presumed dead, a defense department analyst said Wednesday that as many as 10 servicemen may have been left behind in Vietnam after 1973.

The servicemen are now believed to be dead, but they possibly survived for two to three years after U.S. prisoners of war held by then North Vietnam were released in early 1973, said Garnett Bell, the head of the new U.S. Office for POW/MIA affairs in Hanoi.

Most were prisoners, and one may possibly have been a deserter, Bell told the Senate Select Committee on POW/MIA affairs, which was formed in August to investigate charges that the Pentagon had lagged in efforts to resolve the 2,300 cases of Americans still considered missing in Southeast Asia.

Bell also told the panel that U.S. search teams have been unable to retrieve remains of Americans that are being held by Vietnamese citizens. The individuals want to exchange remains for money — anywhere from a few dollars to $5,000 — but U.S. policy forbids any such payments, he said.

The defense department announced in April 1973 that no prisoners were left in Vietnam.

But Bell said reports received between 1973 and 1975 pinpointed Americans in locations where Bell knew prison camps existed.

That type of evidence should have warranted a field investigation, he said. He said U.S. officials probably did not pursue the lead because of circumstances surrounding the end of the war — primarily the fact that officials did not have access to what was then still North Vietnam.

Bell said interviews with Vietnamese refugees several years later appeared to confirm the earlier evidence.

Some family members of missing service personnel, as well as former defense officials involved in the search for MIAs, have accused the Pentagon of a cover-up regarding the fates of missing personnel.

Asked by Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass., a Vietnam veteran who co-chairs the panel, if he believed such allegations, Bell said:

"I don't think there has been a cover-up. But it is possible information has not been acted on."

When asked for specifics outside the hearing room, Bell said he had no comment.

Prospective juror spurs renewed opposition to cameras in Smith trial

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Media reaction to a freewheeling 78-year-old prospective juror spurred a new demand Wednesday by William Kennedy Smith's attorneys that cameras be barred for jury selection in his rape trial.

"I think there is a basis to find that William Smith's right to a fair trial is being absolutely destroyed by these methods of the media," attorney Roy Black told Circuit Judge Mary Lupo.

Black renewed his motion to have television cameras and photographers excluded and the names of prospective jurors kept private. He also said the current jury pool should be dismissed and selection started over under stricter safeguards against what he termed "serious interference."

Ms. Lupo had refused to do that before jury selection started Oct. 31 for the trial of the nephew of Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass. Smith, 31, is accused of raping a 30-year-old woman March 30 at his family's Palm Beach estate.

Prospective juror Florence Orbach, who wore house slippers to court Tuesday, had regaled the judge, the defendant and nearly everyone else in the courtroom with her blunt comments.

On Wednesday, however, she called Ms. Lupo to complain she was under siege with telephone calls and interview requests.

The judge later said Ms. Orbach was "a walking mistrial," but said she'd leave it up to Black and prosecutor Moira Lasch to decide whether to disqualify her. Lasch insisted on it and Ms. Orbach was excused.

She had remained in the potential jury pool after the first round of questioning, which is limited to attitudes about pre-trial publicity, the Kennedy family and being sequestered. After five days, 36 prospective jurors had been questioned and 16 of them excused.

St. Paul, San Francisco uphold gay rights

By Lee Mitgang
Associated Press writer

Voters in St. Paul, Minn., and San Francisco rallied to the defense of gay rights on Election Day. In Washington state, residents split on a measure to protect abortion rights even if the U.S. Supreme Court overturns its landmark Roe vs. Wade decision.

While efforts to repeal gay rights ordinances were beaten back in St. Paul and San Francisco, two cities that are known for their tolerance of homosexuals, measures to ensure gay rights failed in two smaller communities.

The abortion measure was too close to call Wednesday, with 98 percent of precincts reporting. Initiative 120 was trailing by 654,084 votes to 648,239, or 50.2 percent to 49.8 percent.

Thousands of absentee ballots remained to be counted, and if the tiny margin holds, state law requires a recount. The final vote then might not be known for weeks.

Three hotly contested Washington ballot measures apparently prompted a record turnout for an off-year election. At least 60 percent of the 2.2 million people registered voted Tuesday, Secretary of State Ralph Munro said. Off-year elections typically have a turnout of about 40 percent.

Initiative 120 was designed to safeguard abortion rights, even if the high court eventually overturns its 1973 Roe vs. Wade decision. Advocates said it would replace a 1970 state law legalizing abortion that now was outdated by medical technology.

But opponents argued that the initiative set the stage for more late-term abortions.

"The voters don't favor late-term abortions. A lot of people favor abortion in some circumstances, but not in all circumstances," said Julia Gonzalez, spokeswoman for the Vote No on 120 Campaign.

Washington voters dealt upsets to two other budding causes — term limits and the right to die.

Residents rejected an initiative that would have made Washington the first place in the world to legalize doctor-assisted suicide for terminally ill patients.

Hood trial judge demands letters

FORT MORGAN, Colo. (AP) — A judge has ordered Jennifer Reali to let him review letters she wrote to her attorney because another defendant in the same murder case alleges they will undermine her testimony.

District Judge Joseph Weatherby on Tuesday interrupted jury selection in the murder trial for Brian Hood to hear motions from Hood's attorneys seeking access to testimony and other information from Reali, who has admitted shooting Dianne Hood to death outside a Colorado Springs community center Sept. 12, 1990.

Brian Hood, 33, is accused of plotting with Reali, 29, to kill his wife. Hood is a former Texas resident who was a star college football player at Angelo State University in San Angelo.

Weatherby ruled Tuesday that Hood's lawyers should be able to examine the letters Reali wrote to her attorney, Elvin Gentry, for inconsistencies with Reali's statements to police.

Gentry said he will ask the state Supreme Court to issue a stay and overrule Weatherby on grounds his ruling violated attorney-client privilege. However Hood's lawyers said Reali has waived that privilege by issuing selected documents to Colorado Springs police as part of a deal with prosecutors.

Jury selection in Hood's first-degree murder trial began Oct. 1 in district court here, where it was moved because of publicity about the case in Colorado Springs.

Reali has pleaded innocent by reason of mental defect. But a jury found her sane and she is scheduled to be tried for murder in February. She has agreed to testify against Hood, who claims Reali was obsessed with him and acted alone in killing his wife.

Meanwhile, she is scheduled to be a witness against Hood. She said Hood plotted the slaying and coerced her into committing it.

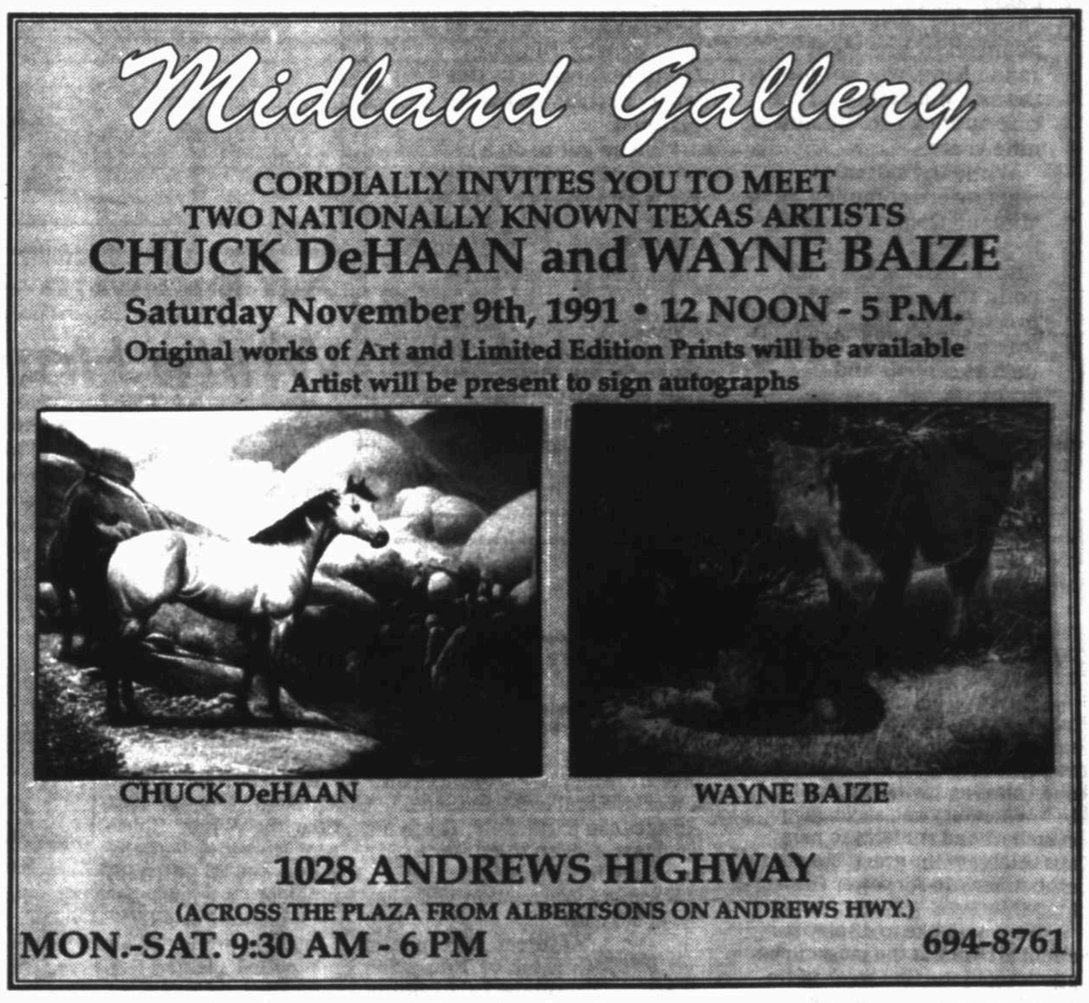

Reali's testimony is seen as crucial to prosecutors while Hood's attorneys will try to prove that Reali lied to police.

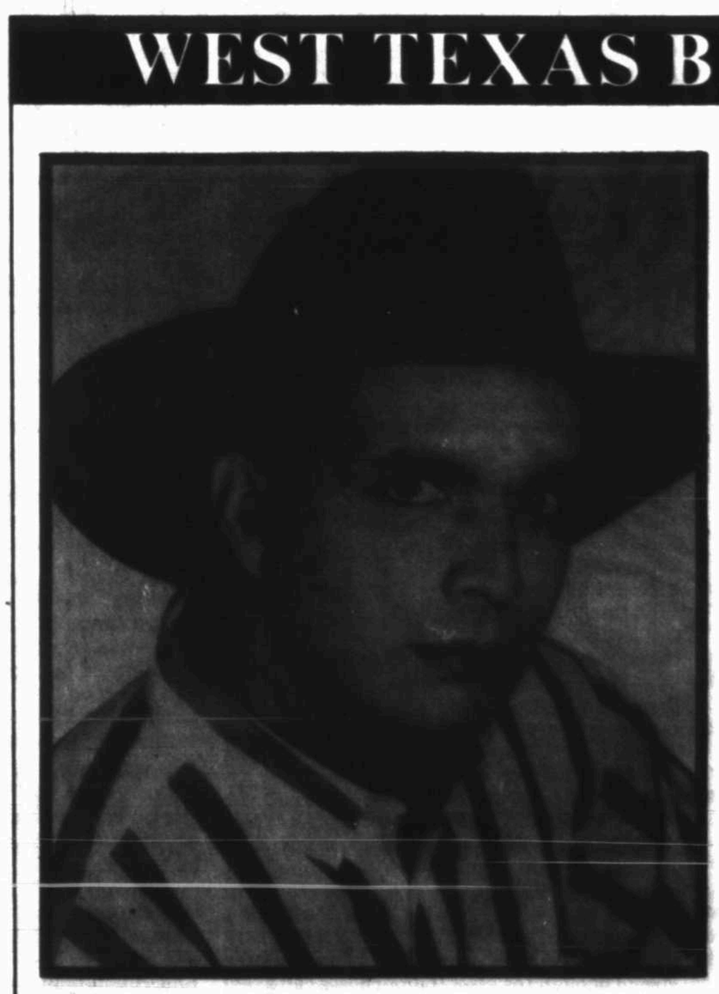

Under the ruling, Weatherby will review the letters from Reali to her lawyer and other materials, and then decide what to provide to Hood's attorneys.

In exchange for her testimony, Reali won't face the death penalty, which prosecutors seek for Hood.

Midland's future bright, challenging

A future in which the Midland population mushrooms to 140,320 with minority groups accounting for 35 percent of that total may not come as a great surprise to many Midlanders. Even speculation that those statistics might be realized by the year 2000, as the Midland Chamber of Commerce related this week, would not come as a shock.

Midland's surprising growth during the past decade, even continuing at a time when few Midlanders would have expected it, has indicated what this region's future holds. The chamber's vision, announced by president Janna King, was not pie-in-the-sky, but rather a realistic outlook for Midland in nine years.

While the statistics, which were compiled by the Midland College business department, indicate good future growth, they also point toward increasing pressures on Midland's infrastructure and facilities such as schools and hospitals.

But the pressures of a growing, thriving city should not catch Midland officials by surprise. In fact comments from King, Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce President Elvia Hernandez and Midland Black Chamber of Entrepreneurs President Robbyne Fuller indicate that the three organizations already are thinking in terms of the impending challenges.

Educational opportunities will be a major concern for the community as will economic diversity as the population continues to expand. The three chambers can provide a cohesive force in the community to ensure that the growth benefits all segments of Midland society. Judging from their remarks this week, that is what is planned.

"We've got to do a better job of integrating all races into society, into all roles," noted Doug Henson, chairman of the Midland Chamber of Commerce.

He's correct, of course, but already the chambers have recognized the challenge facing them. That's half the battle.

It should be an exciting decade for Midland and all Midlanders!

Term limits keep politicians from becoming part of 'club'

I heard Congressman Lamar Smith at the college when he spoke and answered questions. It was very informative.

One question that was asked was what did he think of limiting terms for U.S. representatives and senators. His answer was that it takes five years or more to know what is going on and to "know the ropes."

My opinion is this: When these men know the ropes, that is when it is the proper time to remove them from office and put in new blood and ideas, people that haven't joined the club.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Thursday, Nov. 7, the 311th day of 1991. There are 54 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Nov. 7, 1917, Russia's Bolshevik Revolution took place as forces led by Vladimir Ilyich Lenin overthrew the provisional government of Alexander Kerensky.

On this date:

In 1874, the Republican Party was symbolized as an elephant in a cartoon drawn by Thomas Nast in "Harper's Weekly."

In 1885, the transcontinental Canadian Pacific Railway was completed as the last spike was driven at Craigellachie.

In 1916, 75 years ago, Republican Jeannette Rankin of Montana became the first woman elected to Congress.

In 1918, during World War I, an erroneous report from the United Press that an armistice had been signed set off celebrations across the country.

In 1929, the Museum of Modern Art in New York City opened to the public for the first time.

In 1940, the Tacoma Narrows Bridge in Washington state collapsed during a windstorm which sent the 2,800-foot center span crashing into Puget Sound.

In 1944, President Franklin D. Roosevelt won a fourth term in office, defeating Thomas E. Dewey.

In 1962, Richard M. Nixon, having lost California's gubernatorial race, held what he called his "last press conference," telling reporters, "You won't have Nixon to kick around anymore."

In 1962, former first lady Eleanor Roosevelt died in New York City.

In 1967, Carl Stokes was elected the first black mayor of a major city — Cleveland, Ohio.

Israel's Shamir has no love for Bush

WASHINGTON — Dan Quayle has a fan club and the president of it is Yitzhak Shamir.

The Israeli prime minister is down on George Bush and now believes that Quayle is Israel's best friend in the U.S. government. The vice president has been an ardent supporter of Israel since he served on the Senate Armed Services Committee where he came to believe that Israel was an irreplaceable strategic ally in the Middle East. Quayle believed then, and still believes today, that what is good for Israel is good for the United States.

Anderson

In the last few years, Quayle has spoken sympathetically to several Jewish groups, but has always been careful not to cross Bush. Instead, he has been used by Bush as the sugarcoating to explain the president's policies to Jewish groups.

The strategy has worked too well. Quayle is a hero of the conservative Shamir government. Meanwhile, Shamir's disgust over Bush has spilled over onto the front pages of Israeli newspapers where Bush is ridiculed as "President Am-Bush," a reference to the threat Shamir feels Bush has become to Israeli security.

Israeli sources and U.S. intelligence sources in Washington have told us that Shamir's bile is at an all time high when it comes to Bush because of the peace conference in Madrid.

In Shamir's view, Israel has little to gain by talking to the Arabs. They will only say what Shamir doesn't want to hear — that they want their land back. He wants peace with his neighbors, but thinks he can get it by force, not by conceding any land. He is even more convinced of that since the Persian Gulf War, when Arab military might was shown to be impotent.

Shamir would not have gone to the peace talks if Bush and Secretary of State James Baker had not dragged him there. They did it primarily by holding up $10 billion in housing loans to guarantee Shamir would be a good boy.

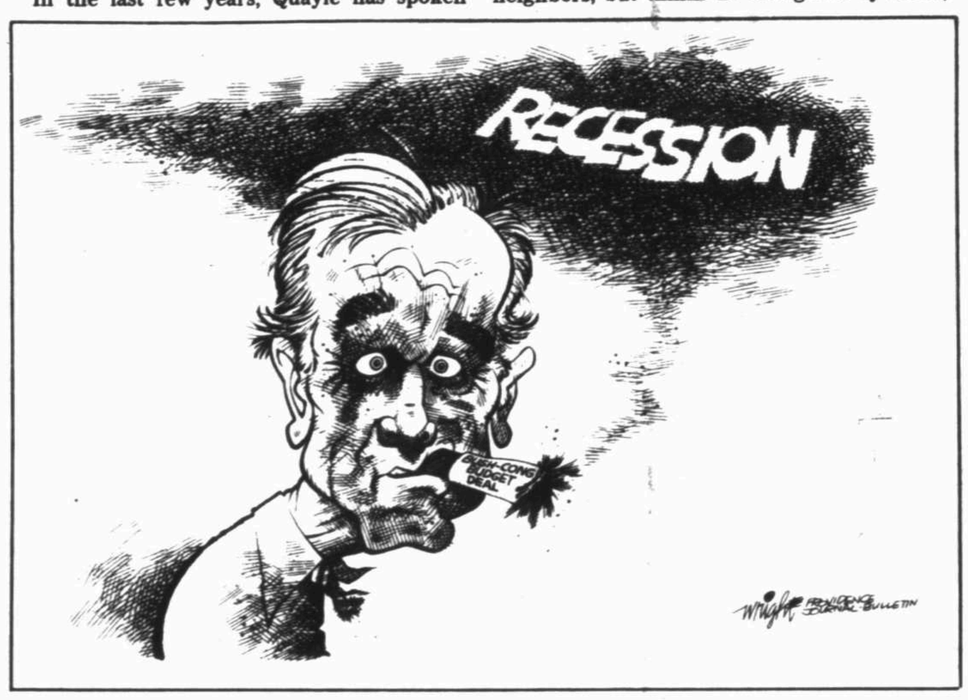

Behind Bush's back, but not so quietly that Bush doesn't hear about it, Shamir has been engaging in vicious name-calling. And when the name-calling reaches the level that it has in Israel, you can expect renegades in the Israeli government to get out of hand. Bush may have been targeted for some dirty tricks by elements within the Israeli spy service, Mossad — people who aim to please Shamir just as cowboys in the Central Intelligence Agency aim to please their bosses, even if it means violence.

Before Bush left for Madrid, the Secret Service received a report that extremists in Mossad might be plotting Bush's assassination. The report came indirectly from Victor Ostrovsky, a Canadian-born Israeli who was a Mossad agent for four years. Ostrovsky portrayed Mossad as an amoral, out-of-control spy service in his book "By Way of Deception." Israel tried to stop publication of the book by saying it would damage national security.

By Oct. 17, Ostrovsky had pieced together enough information to believe that the idea of an assassination plot against Bush was more than just speculation, so he tipped off a former U.S. congressman who flew to Canada to talk to him. Ostrovsky claims he came under heavy surveillance — he thinks by Mossad — while he was dealing with the congressman. The surveillance stopped when both of them complained to local police. Then the former congressman, who wants to remain anonymous, flew to Washington and spelled out Ostrovsky's theory to the Secret Service.

Our sources said that the Secret Service, instead of dismissing the report out of hand, is taking it "quite seriously."

White House finally recognizes recession

You can say anything you like about the White House — it's keeping its eye on the political ball. Even the greatest recession in recent times has not deflected the President's advisers from concentrating on the 1992 election.

Ward Freestyler, a Bush thousand-points-of-light keeper, admitted to a certain amount of nervousness about the figures coming over the White House transom.

Buchwald

In a rare interview he admitted, "For the first time the White House now considers unemployment a political problem that must be dealt with."

"A political problem!" I yelled. "What about a human problem? Unemployed people are not potted plants."

He said, "We have an election to win. We need to get our man in to solve the disaster that the Democrats have thrust upon this nation. We were a little late recognizing that the recession would be the main issue. We had been hoping that the issues would be abortion and school prayer. Now we have to play catch-up and assure the people that Willie Horton is responsible for the downturn in the Gross National Product."

"Do you think that will do it?"

"Not by itself. We also intend to attack the mean-spirited liberal Democratic Congress for sabotaging the President's supply-side Reaganomic programs."

"What programs?"

"I'm not at liberty to reveal what they are other than to say they would give great relief to the middle class. Those are the people we intend to appeal to because there are just so many voters you can target. You know and I know that the only reason we're having a recession is because the Democrats insisted on busting the budget and burning the American flag."

"Besides attacking the Democrats, does the President have any other ideas for getting the country out of the doldrums?" I asked.

"Not yet, because we didn't expect the recession to affect him in the polls. In fact, he's very ticked off that several months ago his economic advisers announced the recession was over and nobody believed them."

"Who did Mr. Bush blame for that?"

"The press. They buried the stories in the business section and no one had an opportunity to read them. As long as the recession continues the newspapers are going to print stories about it because it sells papers."

"So you intend to attack the media in order to deflect any flak the White House might get because of the bread lines in front of the banks in this country?"

"Our orders from up high are to play hardball. The big guy is tired of workers criticizing his administration just because they're unemployed. Our campaign slogan in 1992 is, 'Even if you're out of work, don't forget who gave you Desert Storm.' "

I said, "I must admit that you people are well organized."

"We don't take anything for granted. With a strong Republican vice presidential candidate like Dan Quayle, we still consider this election a battle of life and death."

"It would be great if the recession was over before election day," I said.

"Don't worry, it'll be over even if we have to organize a ticker-tape victory parade down Broadway. The American people can't be fooled. They know that recession talk during an election year is cheap politics. Right now you're only hearing from those who are out of work. When the ones who are still employed turn out to vote it won't even be a contest."

Articles of Confederation warned us

YORK, Pa. — Here in our nation's capital — our first, as York chauvinists reckon it — one can sense why Americans are so dismayed about federal government. Here you can hear in your imagination some vanished voices saying, "We warned you."

Will

York is best known for what the Continental Congress did here when it fled Philadelphia in 1777, the grim year that the British, noting the three sevens, called "the year of three gallows." On Nov. 15 the Congress approved the Articles of Confederation, the nation's first constitution.

Desperately struggling to throw off a tyranny and determined not to create a new one, the authors of the Articles, knowing that American politicians would not be immune to the lust for power, created only a wisp of a government. Thus began, here in York, America's attempt to discover if a government strong enough for essential purposes can avoid degrading itself by undisciplined wallowing in inessentials. On today's evidence, the attempt is failing.

Impressed by the public spiritedness elicited by the Revolution, the authors of the Articles made, in the words of a contemporary critic, the "amiable mistake" of thinking Americans needed no government. The word "government" never appears in the Articles. Today, as Americans revile Congress, note that the Articles created only one agency of government: Congress. It could do nothing important without nine of the 13 states (one vote per state) concurring. Even then it could not tax or regulate commerce. It could "requisition" money but could not compel compliance.

The Constitutional Convention, called for "revising" the Articles, effected a revolution against them. It affirmed the goal of the Articles — a government of limited, delegated and enumerated powers. But the idea of enumeration was soon lost and the Constitution's limits became too elastic to inhibit the central government's growth and intrusiveness.

Anxious about this possibility, advocates of a Bill of Rights had included the 10th Amendment: "The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the states, are reserved to the states respectively, or to the people." Some farsighted pessimists plucked the word "expressly" from a similar provision in the Articles and attempted to bind Congress by amending the 10th Amendment to say that "powers not expressly delegated to the United States" are reserved to the states. Their amendment was rejected.

The Constitution empowers Congress to make any laws "necessary and proper" to promoting the "general welfare." "Necessary" came to be construed broadly to mean "helpful," and anything helpful was deemed proper. So today we have an utterly unleashed and frenzied Congress. It is funding bike paths, fish farms, the production of mohair, the study of the Hatfield-McCoy feud and thousands of other trivialities pleasing to factions in 435 congressional districts. And it is a perpetual incumbency machine. (The Articles included term limits, then known as rotation of offices.)

Congress should come back to York and sit a spell where our constitutional government began. Congress should ponder its plummeting status and the possibility that it has something to learn about limits.

The constitution written here in 1777 created a government too limited to establish the necessary priority of national over state citizenship. But the second constitution, that was written 70 miles east of here 10 years later, created what has become today's swollen government operating with no limits on the incontinent spending and regulating that is undertaken to perpetuate in office the spenders and regulators.

The political ethics of today's permanent governing class do not restrain where the Constitution is permissive. Hence the cool appraisal behind today's hot passion: Term limits are needed as an auxiliary precaution against the perennial lust for power. About that lust, the authors of the Articles warned us.

'Babushka' makes sure there's food on the table

EDITOR'S NOTE: They spend endless hours shopping, cleaning, waiting in line. Grandmothers, or "babushkas," have shouldered the burden for years, and still do. As part of an occasional series on how ordinary citizens cope with the Soviet economic crisis, the writer takes a look at how one "babushka" holds her family together.

By Wendy Sloane
Associated Press writer

KIEV, U.S.S.R. — Lydia Parra rises early to begin hours of food shopping for herself, her daughter and granddaughter. Her only companion on the daily treks is a laminated cloth bag on wheels.

"Every day I leave the apartment at 8 a.m. to buy eggs, but there aren't any," said Lydia, 74, checking her babki, or cheese pie, in the oven. "And they cost 10 rubles for 10!"

When she goes to the crowded bread store, her daughter Lena, 41, is asleep on the pull-out couch in the living room. While Lydia waits in line to buy milk, her 18-year-old granddaughter, Lika, still snoozes in the bedroom the two of them share.

By the time she returns, both are gone: Lena, a divorcee, to her job teaching Russian to foreign students at the Civil Aviation Engineering Institute, and Lika, a tall young woman with long curls, to Kiev State University, where she studies English translation and Japanese.

AT THE end of the day, they are tired and expect Lydia to have a home-cooked dinner ready.

"I do something around the house," Lena insisted, eating a weekend lunch of spicy fried eggplant and tomatoes with beef, which Lydia had prepared. "I made cookies once. They were delicious."

What were supposed to be Lydia's golden years are filled with the daily grind of making sure her family has enough to eat. As the economy continues to deteriorate and a harsh winter threatens, Lydia and other grandmothers keep their families going.

The grandmother, or babushka, often is the backbone of the household. Because most women must work to make family ends meet, only the babushka can spend the hours in line required to obtain the ingredients of a decent meal.

Most men refuse to do household chores and baby sitters are virtually unheard of in the Soviet Union. Many elderly women raise their grandchildren, and sometimes their great-grandchildren as well.

It is not uncommon to see elderly women in their drab headscarves shuffling along the street carrying heavy, bulging sacks from a day's shopping.

LYDIA, A heavyset former math teacher whose husband died nearly 10 years ago, has had two heart attacks in recent years and was hospitalized not long ago. In spite of her poor health, she still goes to the shops every day.

On one trip, she spent nearly one-fifth of her monthly pension for 26 pounds of potatoes, which she had to roll home in her wheeled bag. One night, she went out late to a subway station to give a package of butter and cheese to an acquaintance, who promised to deliver it to her 48-year-old son in Moscow.

"He told me it was hard to find butter there," she explained with a stoic shrug.

The daily quests are becoming even more difficult. The government raised prices drastically in April, tenfold for some ordinary items, and the family now buys nothing but food and necessary books.

Because of a strict rationing system in the Ukraine, vouchers are needed to buy clothes, appliances, food and most other goods at state stores. Bread and milk are exceptions.

No ration coupons are required at farmers' markets and "commercial shops" owned by cooperative enterprises, but their prices are far too high for most people.

LYDIA RECEIVES a monthly pension of 175 rubles, up from 65 rubles in April; Lena earns 420 rubles a month and Lika, gets a stipend of 150 rubles from the university. All receive the bright yellow ration vouchers.

The combined incomes are barely enough to live on.

Lena used to travel to Moscow often to visit friends she met while attending a language institute there, but now it's too expensive: about 40 rubles round trip.

"I began to think, 'My God, I'll return, and what are they going to eat?'" she said. "I can't let Mama or Lika eat only porridge just because I felt like traveling to Moscow."

For Lydia, there are no luxuries.

With winter coming, she devotes most of her time to stocking up on food. Recently, she brought home onions that cost nearly 3.5 rubles a pound.

"Imagine if she had bought 10 kilos of onions?" Lena asked. "What would she have left?"

Elephants may be killed

There are too many pachyderms, officials say

By Angus Shaw
Associated Press writer

HARARE, Zimbabwe — The government says Zimbabwe has 70,000 elephants, twice as many as the land can support, and half must be killed so the rest will survive.

Zimbabwe and other countries of southern Africa with large elephant herds also contend that, because extensive slaughter would produce tons of ivory, they should be allowed to trade in ivory products despite an international ban.

Botswana, Malawi, Namibia and Zambia have joined Zimbabwe in setting up an ivory cartel, with plans to defy the ban if it is not relaxed this year.

Unless the elephants are culled, they will destroy their habitat, herds will starve and dozens of other species will perish, say wildlife officials in Zimbabwe, a landlocked nation slightly smaller than California.

"We simply have many more elephants than our land can reasonably be expected to carry," Dr. Willie Nduku, head of the Wildlife Management System, said in an interview. "We must kill them for the sake of our ecosystem."

In 1989, the Convention in Trade of Endangered Species banned the sale of elephant products in an effort to stop poachers from killing elephants for their tusks.

Elephant poaching has never been a problem in Zimbabwe, where illegal hunters more commonly go after rhinoceros for their horns. Huge quantities of legal ivory have accumulated in state warehouses.

The estimate of Zimbabwe's elephant population is based on counts from the air and by Western-aided research programs. They have proliferated because of effective conservation over three decades, which included providing water where there had been none.

Since artesian wells were sunk in Hwange Nature Reserve along the open western border with Botswana, elephant herds have increased nearly threefold in that park alone, to about 30,000 head.

The elephant is a browser capable of consuming up to 700 pounds of leaves and grass a day. Herds have torn down millions of trees to reach the topmost leaves. Antelope and other game flee the newly arid land to surrounding forests, disrupting ecosystems.

Greenpeace and Elefriends have denounced Zimbabwe's plan to cull its herds, but do not have representatives in Zimbabwe. Conservation groups in southern Africa support it.

"Foreigners who live in cities and criticize us have a bunny-love approach," said John Pile, executive director of the independent Zimbabwe Conservation Trust. "They don't want elephants culled. I prefer the term 'managed.' They should come and see the devastation for themselves."

Nduku said Western conservationists do not understand the realities of Africa, where the huge beasts trample crops and rural homes.

Fewer than 10,000 elephants have been killed since 1980 as part of wildlife management in Zimbabwe. This year, Nduku's rangers shot about 250, a tiny fraction of the 4,000 or so they had hoped to kill by Sept. 30, when the southern hemisphere winter ends.

After that, Nduku said, it was too hot to corral the elephants by helicopter, shoot them quickly in groups of 25 to 50 and butcher them for the hides, ivory and meat.

He said his rangers, marksmen who shoot the animals through the head or mouth, were occupied with moving black rhinoceros to safe havens, away from northern border areas where poaching is rife.

In many African countries, growing human populations compete with elephants for tillable and grazing land. Vast plains where herds roamed 50 miles a day 40 years ago have become obstacle courses of roads, railways, power lines and farms.

Environmentalists in Zimbabwe say the trade in elephant products has put conservation strategies at risk. In their view, elephants are a sustainable resource that will survive man's hunger for land and economic gain only if ivory and other byproducts can be sold.

Villages in Zimbabwe have built schools, clinics and other amenities with income from controlled hunting of wild animals. The returns are seen as a vital incentive to maintaining a manageable number of animals instead of killing them all as marauding pests.

The ban has put southern Africa at odds with East Africa, particularly Kenya. Daniel arap Moi, president of Kenya, set fire to 12 tons of ivory worth millions of dollars in early 1990 to dramatize the plight of elephants in his country, where the number has plummeted from 130,000 to 15,000 since 1970.

Nduku said the trade ban may have worked for Kenya by cutting off demand for ivory since 1989, but state warehouses in Harare now hold an estimated 110 tons of legally hunted, licensed tusks.

"Why should we be penalized for Kenya's predicament?" he asked. "It's like saying if gold is smuggled from one country, it should not be utilized wherever else it is produced."

Despite world ban, ivory continues to be traded

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — Gauging how the world ban on the ivory trade has affected elephant poaching is difficult because most African countries do not monitor their wildlife closely.

Initial studies suggest poaching generally has continued where regional wars have halted conservation programs, as in Mozambique. Combatants eat elephant meat and trade ivory for munitions.

Elsewhere, as in Zambia and Zaire, economic hardship has led to poaching.

"When you've got nothing and something walks past with gold on it — even if the price of gold has dropped — you'll probably take it,' said Holly Dublin of the World Wide Fund for Nature office in Nairobi.

East African countries that suffered the most dramatic losses in elephants report a marked reduction in poaching since 1989, when the Convention in Trade of Endangered species banned trade in elephant products.

During the 15 previous years, Kenya's elephant population fell from 130,000 to 16,000, a loss of about 5,000 a year, said Richard Leakey, director of the Kenya Wildlife Service.

He said Kenya lost only 55 elephants to poachers in 1990. Its neighbors, Uganda and Tanzania, also reported sudden declines in poaching.

Conservationists estimate about 1,000 tons of ivory, or the tusks of 100,000 elephants, were exported from Africa every year before the ban. The continent's estimated elephant population fell from 1.3 million to just under 610,000 between 1979 and 1989.

Since trade in elephant products was outlawed, retail sales of worked ivory have dropped by 80 percent and the price paid to poachers has declined to one-tenth of the former $13.50 a pound, said a Kenya geographer.

Esmond Bradley Martin studies the trade in ivory and rhino horn.

Captured bats escape university tower home

GAINESVILLE, Fla. (AP) — More than 10,000 bats ousted from two stadiums at the University of Florida have disappeared from a $30,000 custom-made bat tower the school built to keep them around.

"Not a single one of them is at the house right now," said Ken Glover, the university's pest control manager. "We thought the house smelled right and had plenty of nearby feeding places to attract them, but the bats had other ideas."

No one knows the whereabouts of the bats, who typically have a number of roosts and can easily travel 60 or 70 miles, said Jackie Belwood, director of science at Bat Conservation International in Austin, Texas.

The university, fed up with high-pitched squeals and smelly droppings, sealed the bats' stadium hangouts last month. But officials wanted to keep them around to eat mosquitos, so they captured the bats and moved them to the shelter in a wildlife sanctuary at a lake in Gainesville, located in north-central Florida.

The wood shelter stands on 20-foot stilts, far from predators.

Glover was optimistic the bats will return — eventually.

"It may take a couple years, but we're willing to wait."

Director plugs airport 'streamlining' plan

Three staff members will pick up the duties of former assistant director

■ Ken Day, director of airports, presented a plan that will divide most of the duties of former assistant director Marcy Blauvelt among three staff members.

By Debbie Lincecum
Staff Writer

Midland International Airport staffers are "streamlining" with a division of duties to avoid replacement of former assistant director Marcy Blauvelt, officials said Wednesday.

Ken Day, director of airports, presented city administration a plan last week that divides most of Ms. Blauvelt's duties among three other staffers. Ms. Blauvelt, former assistant director for administration, left her job late last month for a move to Denver.

"We're reducing our staff in an effort to become more efficient, leaner," said Day, who has created a new organizational structure giving more authority and work to assistant director Marvin Esterly and airport accountant Tommy Martin. Cara Lee Cranford, who worked with Ms. Blauvelt in marketing, will take on some new duties as well.

Day said Esterly, retaining his title as assistant director, will take on the bulk of the extra duties. Esterly is slated to head airport operations and maintenance, FAA safety compliance, fire and police coordination and property management.

Martin takes the new title of administrative office manager, and duties including accounting, parking lot operations, personnel services and administration of the foreign trade zone. Cranford, meanwhile, will be in charge of public information and marketing with the title marketing specialist.

"If we're going to continue to be competitive, without tax money supporting the organization, we've got to cut back, just like anybody else," Day said of the staff reduction. "What we're doing is streamlining. We have to be lean to insure revenue for our airport improvement programs.

"I know this is going to put more burden on them, on all of us, but we're going to restructure and make it work."

Day said the airport administration should work like a private corporation, with constant review of practices and methods to find ways to cut costs. The staff has been cut in the last year from 42 members to 38.

Deputy City Manager Mike McGregor said the restructuring is one of three or four similar moves in the last several years.

"We look into reorganization nearly every time someone in the administration resigns anywhere in the city, to see if we can't streamline what we're doing," McGregor said. In the airport case, "I think we can accomplish as much as we were with less money and less people," he said. "Everything (Blauvelt) was doing is going to continue to be done."

Day said the airport will save about $30,000 per year, although he has not determined if Esterly or the others will get a salary increase.

"We're reviewing that," Day said.

'If we're going to continue to be competitive, without tax money supporting the organization, we've got to cut back, just like anybody else. What we're doing is streamlining.'

Bureau to build kiosks

By Debbie Lincecum
Staff Writer

What is a kiosk and how can it help the city of Midland?

Midland Chamber Convention and Visitors Bureau staffers think they know the answer to that question, and if they're correct, the plan could generate more tourism for the city.

Weekend and evening visitors who miss regular chamber hours will soon be able to visit an information kiosk — similar to an enclosed pavillion — for lists of restaurants, hotels, attractions and other activities. The bureau plans to build four of the structures within the year.

"We want people to stay in Midland and feel welcome and comfortable," said bureau manager Suzy Lundy. "This provides a safe, attractive, well-lighted place to gather information."

One kiosk is planned just behind the chamber office, to be joined by others at the Petroleum Museum and Midland International Airport. Ms. Lundy plans to target all entrances to the city, placing information kiosks on U.S. Highway 80 and State Highways 349 and 191.

Information kiosks will be stocked with maps, lists, calendars of events and a pay phone.

A committee formed last year to establish Midland's "readiness" for the Confederate Air Force opening developed the kiosk plan, Ms. Lundy said.

"We're starting to look at the city, find ways to be a little more visitor-friendly," she said. "With all the attention Midland's getting because of the CAF, we think there will be more visitors coming through."

Ms. Lundy said frequent travelers usually seek information booths when they arrive in a city.

"This is a way to get information to people 24 hours a day, seven days a week," she said.

Information displayed will be updated frequently and changed according to the season, Ms. Lundy said. Special events or unique happenings — such as the arrival of migratory birds — may be featured now and then, but activities will only be listed if they are open to the public.

Later, the bureau plans to distribute similar information at three area roadside parks, which use a display format like the kiosks.

"We're very excited about this," Ms. Lundy said. "We hope people will use Midland as a base for travel all over the Permian Basin. This area has a lot to offer and we have an excellent location."

Father was loving, caring, infant's mother testifies

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

A 23-year-old man, on trial for the death of his 9-month-old daughter, was a loving, caring father, the infant's mother and the defendant's sister testified on Wednesday.

Other testimony revolved around what the defendant — Jesus Manuel Vidana — told a neighbor, the victim's mother, his sister and police occurred when the infant was injured while in his care.

Vidana, charged with intentionally causing the Jan. 10 death of Maritza Vidana, pleaded not guilty on Monday in Judge John Hyde's 238th District Court.

On the day the child was injured, Vidana had been left to care for his daughter and the 2-year-old daughter of Elvira Chavez, his sister, testimony indicated.

Ms. Chavez and Maria del Carmen Castor, the infant's mother and common-law wife of Vidana, left the defendant for about a half hour to watch the two girls, testimony showed.

Both women testified that Vidana was not angry that he had to watch the toddlers.

"He always wanted to stay with her," Ms. Castor said through a translator.

Ms. Castor told jurors that even if Vidana is found guilty she will always believe he is innocent. Jurors were instructed by the judge to disregard the remark, made while answering an unrelated question.

According to defense attorney Thomas Hirsch, the infant was injured from a fall from a couch.

That story was collaborated by what Vidana told others after the child was injured, testimony indicated.

Maria de Jesus Pompa, 17, who resided next door to Ms. Chavez's home where the incident occurred, testified through a translator about events on Jan.

District office survives cuts

■ Transportation commissioners voted to reduce the number of district offices from 24 to 18. The district office in Odessa, however, survived the cuts.

By John Powers
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Texas Department of Transportation's district office in Odessa survived cuts by the state's fiscal knife Wednesday when transportation commissioners voted to reduce the number of district offices from 24 to 18.

The Legislature approved a bill earlier this year ordering the commission to divide the state into no more than 18 districts by Sept. 1, 1992. The bill resulted from Comptroller John Sharp's performance audits to find ways to cut costs and trim and consolidate state agencies.

Transportation commissioner Ray Stoker Jr. of Odessa said the consolidations would save the state $21 million a year.

District offices that will be lost in the reorganization include Waco, Atlanta, Brownwood, Childress, Lufkin, Paris and Yoakum. The plan will create one new district office in Laredo.

Although the counties within the districts will change, offices will remain in Odessa and Lubbock, as well as in Austin, Abilene, Amarillo, Beaumont, Bryan, Corpus Christi, Dallas, El Paso, Fort Worth, Houston, Pharr, San Angelo, San Antonio, Tyler and Wichita Falls.

About 13,000 employees will be affected across the state, but Arnold W. Oliver, executive director of the agency, said he did not know how many jobs, if any, would be lost. The agency instituted a hiring freeze when the legislation was proposed, Oliver said, and some jobs will be lost by attrition. Other employees will be able to transfer to different locations and some may retire, he said.

Some employees and service responsibilities will remain in all the districts that are being cut, Oliver said.

"Our intent at this point is not to completely close, lock the door and turn out the lights on any of these offices that will become former headquarters offices," he said.

District 17 will include Midland and 17 other counties: Andrews, Brewster, Crane, Ector, Jeff Davis, Glasscock, Howard, Loving, Martin, Pecos, Presidio, Reagan, Reeves, Terrell, Upton, Ward and Winkler.

Previously the district covered only Midland, Andrews, Crane, Loving, Martin, Pecos, Reeves, Terrell, Upton and Winkler counties.

Oliver said staff members tried to keep urban counties and rural counties together, "and include a border development emphasis to take care of the needs along the Texas-Mexico border."

He said the mission of the department has changed in recent years from an emphasis on building highways, because the system essentially is in place, to an emphasis on repairing and rehabilitating the system.

A department task force came up with four possible reorganization plans for commissioners.

Jack Sherman kicks off program

Staff Report

The "Driving for Education" program begun Wednesday by Jack Sherman Chevrolet-Geo is designed to address the growing need for additional computers and high-tech learning equipment in elementary schools.

The program providing Apple Computers, Magnavox audio-visual equipment and Compton's encyclopedia sets, is touted as the first of its kind promoting computer literacy among students nationwide.

"Children are the hope for the future and, in the future, computer literacy will be as basic to a child's education as reading and writing," said Jack Sherman, president of the Chevrolet-Geo dealership.

Sherman has already notified school officials and volunteer groups about the program and has provided informational materials.

Supporters are encouraged to visit Jack Sherman Chevrolet-Geo and test drive any new vehicle during the school's designated "Test Drive Week."

When a pre-determined number of "Proof of Drive" Certificates are tallied, schools may select equipment from six different award levels. There is no limit to the amount of equipment a school may receive.

The program involves no cost to the school and no purchase is required.

Joe D. Williams/Reporter-Telegram

Jack Sherman discusses the new "Driving for Education" program at a Wednesday news conference.

There are a variety of computer and equipment models from which the schools can choose, including Apple Macintosh LC HD40s, Mac Classic 2/40s and Mac IIes, Magnavox television/VCR combination and camcorders, as well as Compton's encyclopedia sets.

Jack Sherman Chevrolet-Geo decided to get involved in "Driving for Education" because, "We are a local business and have a responsibility to assist the community. The expense of high-tech learning equipment needed by area schools is too large a burden for the taxpayers to bear," Sherman said.

FARM: Couple uses their own growing method

tween 2,000 and 3,000, ranging in size from small pumpkins called pies to hulking 30-pounders. Mrs. Dominy said they sold so many this year they briefly ran out of pumpkins. They had to buy 800 from a supplier until their last crop matured.

The middle-aged couple is so much into the pumpkin farming spirit, they bought orange T-shirts bearing the name Dominy Farms.

The Dominys have lived near Kirbyville since 1968. Raymond Dominy still works for the Santa Fe Railroad. Lula Dominy's parents were truck farmers in Silsbee, where she grew up. "I've always loved growing things and being outdoors in nature," she said.

When their children grew up and left home, they decided to pick up the plow and start the farm. The Dominys first visited a farm in Louisiana and discovered a growing method that uses black plastic that contains mulch.

The plastic is punched with holes for the crop to grow. The plastic with the mulch fertilizes the plants, while protecting them from weeds and insects. Motorists who catch a glimpse of the shiny plastic with its neatly plowed rows of fledgling plants often stop to get the lowdown on the growing technique.

In addition to the pumpkins, the Dominys have planted 3 acres of strawberries, which they will harvest in March. They also grow blackberries, squash and peaches.

A sign beside a cornstalk display and a scarecrow tells passersby to stop by on weekends in the fall to pick their own pumpkins from 9 a.m. until dark.

Children from Trinity Episcopal School in Jasper took a field trip to the farm in early October. In the thank-you notes, the students talked about the experiences they had on the farm, including milking a cow and feeding a calf from a plastic bottle.

"My husband is a pushover for kids. He let the students milk our cow by hand. I think that was a unique experience for all of them," Mrs. Dominy said.

While some children were reluctant at first to touch the cow, they soon began to see who could squeeze out the most milk. "Even their teacher decided she should try," Mrs. Dominy said. "I'm amazed every day how many people never even see things we take for granted. ... It's fun, but it's a lot of work."

Mrs. Dominy said the farm has become a family concern with her daughters, Donna and Brenda McCauley, and their children visiting to help out. The daughters have been practicing pumpkin painting and will have it down to an art by next Halloween, she said.

"I enjoyed the strawberry season, but Halloween has been a real treat for me," Mrs. Dominy said.

TRIAL: Crucial, conflicting testimony is expected

A man, identified as Vidana, came to her door and said "that his little daughter had fainted and he asked for (rubbing) alcohol," she testified.

Vidana told Ms. Pompa that he was in the kitchen when the infant fell off a couch and was injured, testimony showed.

Ms. Pompa, who did not have any alcohol, accompanied Vidana next door.

"She (Maritza Vidana) started to react when I arrived ... she started crying," Ms. Pompa testified.

Vidana asked Ms. Pompa if she could speak English, in order to summon an ambulance, she said. Neither speak English.

Ms. Pompa subsequently asked a neighbor to call for help.

The infant was transported to Midland Memorial Hospital with severe head injuries and died during surgery, testimony showed.

E. Hernandez, a patrol officer for the Midland Police Department, testified that he questioned Vidana at the hospital.

"He advised me he was in the living room of the residence belonging to his sister ... watching TV ... and got up to get a drink of water in the kitchen and while he was in the kitchen ... heard a thump," Hernandez said.

Vidana told police that the injured baby was discovered on the floor near a motorcycle helmet, Hernandez said.

"He (Vidana) stated that he thought the child had fallen off the couch," Hernandez said.

Other testimony has shown that the child was about two feet tall, and had been walking since she was just over 7 months old. The couch cushion was about 17 inches from the floor, testimony indicated.

Crucial — and conflicting — testimony in the trial is expected to be heard from expert medical witnesses as to the extent and possible cause of the injury.

Testimony continues today and is expected to last into next week.

Ms. Lundy said the event, which will feature a sneak preview of the Confederate Air Force headquarters and museum, is designed to thank agents for their support of Midland tourism.

"Travel agents not only make reservations on our airlines, they make suggestions for businesses coming here on conventions and that sort of thing," Ms. Lundy said. She said she expects travel agents from all over the area, who will be provided with new tourist information about the city and its attractions.

Umpire recounts shooting incident

The State

DALLAS (AP) — American League umpire Steve Palermo detailed for jurors in dramatic and emotional testimony Wednesday how he was shot aiding two waitresses who were attacked by robbers.

The Major League baseball official returned to Dallas, where he underwent rehabilitation earlier, to testify in the aggravated robbery trial of Army Pvt. Kevin Bivins, one of four suspects in the July 7 incident.

"One of them reached and pulled something out and I hollered ... and then — pow, pow, pow, pow, pow," said Palermo, who struck the witness stand to mimic the sound of bullets. "Five shots rang out."

Palermo was eating dinner at Campisi's Egyptian Restaurant after umpiring a Texas Rangers game, when waitresses outside the establishment were attacked by robbers. Palermo and former Southern Methodist football player Terence Mann ran to help them, along with restaurant employees. Both Mann and Palermo were shot.

Mann, 27, was shot in the neck, arm and abdomen. Palermo, 41, was shot in the back and the bullet — which entered the right side of his back and exited the left — traumatized his spinal cord and forces Palermo to rely on leg braces and canes to walk.

Palermo recently returned to his Overland Park, Kan., home, after months of rehabilitation in Dallas.

"My life is a living hell," Palermo said Wednesday, as his eyes brimmed with tears. "Ordinary things we all do as human beings — and I know I took for granted — I no longer take for granted: to go the bathroom, to brush your teeth, to take a shower.

Bivins faces up to life in prison and a $10,000 fine on the aggravated robbery charge. He also is charged with two counts of attempted murder, but is being tried first on the aggravated robbery charge.

Notably absent from the prosecutor's questioning was the request to have Palermo identify Bivins as his attacker. Assistant District Attorney Neil Pask, the chief prosecutor in the case, was in court Wednesday afternoon and unavailable for comment.

However, Vernon Myers, 20, who is also a defendant in the matter, told the jury Tuesday that Bivins told him he thought he shot someone during the melee.

Bivins said in a statement given to police upon his arrest that he shot someone but only after someone shot at him.

Palermo said he, restaurant employees and customers ran to the women's defense and chased the suspects a few blocks from the restaurant.

A suspect carrying a purse was caught by Corky Campisi, the restaurant's owner, and cornered by others chasing him, including Palermo. A car then stopped and three other suspects got out, Palermo testified.

Slowly and deliberately, he then recounted to jurors what happened after the five shots rang out.

"I felt myself go slowly to the ground, melting into the pavement," said Palermo. "A kind of warm numbness came over my legs."

He then told the jury how the event changed his life, glancing periodically at his wife, Debbie, who stood at the back of the courtroom.

"I don't know if I'll ever umpire again," he said. "It's a very uncertain life right now and it's a life I wish on no one. It's devastating."

Hostage-taker surrenders at junior college

The incident occurred six years after a 28-year-old man held two instructors at the school hostage for about three hours before fatally shooting himself.

TEMPLE (AP) — A Temple Junior College instructor was held hostage for more than three hours Wednesday by a student reportedly distraught over a test grade. She was released unharmed.

The female hostage-taker, who was armed with a loaded handgun, surrendered to police at 6:30 p.m., about two hours after she released sociology teacher Bobbie Marshall, according to the Temple Daily Telegram.

No shots were fired and nobody was hurt, police said.

Police took the 26-year-old student to the psychiatric unit of Scott and White Memorial Hospital in Temple.

School spokeswoman Susan Howe said classes weren't in session when the incident began. The campus was closed as police tried to resolve the situation.

The incident began about 1:20 p.m., said police Sgt. Terri Kelley.

Temple Junior College President Marvin Felder said the teacher had met with the student for a conference at the school's Instructional Services Center. The student arrived with a gun, reportedly was upset over a recent test grade.

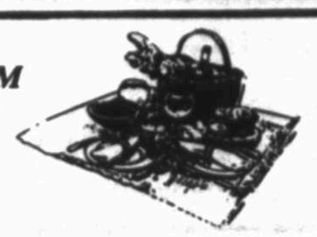

Police Chief Thomas Vannoy and the hostage's husband entered the building about 3:45 p.m. and began negotiating with the suspect, said deputy police chief Stephen Klempa.

The suspect's family also went to the scene.

Temple Junior College is a community college on the southeast side of Temple, about 35 miles south of Waco in Central Texas.

In February 1985, Steven Parsons took management instructor Laurelyn Carlisle, 33, and speech instructor Debbie Foster hostage. He shot Foster once and Carlisle twice before killing himself. Both women recovered.

Few trends develop for spring

Italian debut of Turkish-born Rifat Ozbek generates most excitement

By Bernadine Morris
N.Y. Times News Service

MILAN, Italy — The fashion action moved from individual showrooms to the Milan Fairgrounds Oct. 7, which meant larger audiences and more theatrical presentations.

By the end of that week, 26 houses had introduced their spring ready-to-wear collections in one of five salons that hold up to 1,000 people.

The first floor of the fairgrounds' massive main building has been converted into a street of shops, where 30 manufacturers are presenting their wares between shows. Beppe Modenese, one of the fair's organizers, predicts the number will double by next year.

The few trends that have developed so far are not revolutionary, though nobody is looking for revolutions. Long skirts are knocking at the door, biding their time.

Short skirts are thriving. They tend to be bouffant for evening, puffed out with petticoats, giving even the towering models a prepubescent look.

THE ITALIAN DEBUT of Rifat Ozbek generated the most excitement.

The Turkish-born designer, a leader of London's avant-garde who received a designer-of-the-year award from Margaret Thatcher three years ago, decided to show here to reach a broader audience. Besides, his clothes are produced in Italy.

With his wild London ways, he shook up the staid local establishment. Not that his clothes are all that wearable. But they are inventive.

His design source, he said, was the Wild West and American Indians, especially as presented in "Dances With Wolves." His interpretations were free. Silk fringe rather than leather strips hung from jacket shoulders.

Tabardlike tunics carved up at the sides showed a lot of the stretch pants or shorts worn under them. Strips of bone decorated cavalry jackets, and rows of shiny beads suggested sergeant's stripes.

Blanket stitching, macrame and tie-dyed armbands were homey touches. It was good theater, and the designer may even bring back ethnic dressing.

Another British voice was heard from: the Byblos boys, who called their frilly, revealing clothes "modern but not revolutionary."

Fair enough. But frilly is an understatement when it comes to the girlish look provided by Alan Cleaver and Keith Varty, the British designers who have made their home here for a decade.

They specialize in powder puff confections of pale mauve, aqua and yellow that all seem to sport ruffled tiers. Even the raincoats are ruffled.

The suits had flaring peplums below nipped waists; some jackets ended in ruffles. Everything was short. There were prints with a Cubist flavor, featuring guitars, African figures and classic sculpture, that were most effective in swimsuits. These were the styles for grown-ups.

SALVATORE FERRAGAMO, which started as a shoe manufacturing house 60 years ago, presented three smashing new styles along with its fashions.

Two were backless mules, one laced up the front like an oxford, the other with a series of straps forming the vamp. The third was a simple pump with a modest platform.

But you were supposed to look at the clothes, not the shoes. The clothes were sophisticated, luxurious casuals put together in the same color, often orange or yellow. The individual pieces included short wrap skirts, tights and loose coats.

The brief skirts that buttoned on one side made neat beach cover-ups; so did a long sweater, reaching almost to the ankles, which served as a beach coat.

All were in navy, as were the swimsuits they sheltered. Navy for the beach is both sober and smart. Evening dresses tended to be a bit fussy or too grand, but for top-quality casual clothes this house is in a class by itself. Its sporty separates are as good as its shoes.

CONTINUING THE DISPLAY of secondary collections that dominated the first days of the showings here, Krizia offered snippets from its five subsidiary lines in its own theater. Linen pants suits, loose dresses, overalls and jeans were the basics.

Sweaters were the most imaginative designs, depicting birds, lions and other big cats. Oversized cardigans were buttoned at the back, the better to show off the pattern.

The finale was a stretched jersey tube that almost reached the ankles. Wriggling around, the eight models wearing the same style in different colors drew the dress up above the knees, proving long and short can coexist.

AP LaserPhoto

A model presents this navy blue lace and chiffon evening outfit with mini dress and bolero jacket as part of the Genny spring-summer fashion collection in Milan during early October.

The foundation of the Italian success story lies in the expertly tailored suit and the seductive dress. Basile, a suit specialist, gave its styles a fresh twist in sherbet colors like orange, mint and peach.

Some of its standard long jackets were shown with full midthigh shorts or short sleeves. Ecru linen separates with embroidered openwork edges looked cool. These are styles for serious women who want clothes they can trust.

Genny marches to a jazzier beat. When this dress house does suits, it makes you stand up and take notice. Red leather jackets top glittery shifts with the outlines of a cathedral picked out in jewels on the dress.

Pale suits with narrow pants in raw silk have thin silk blouses under the jackets. The blouses are not buttoned; they are knotted at the bottom and the ends left to float like scarfs. You could guess that Gianni Versace is the consultant to Donatella Girombelli and her design staff.

But it is the dresses that rivet the eyes. Navy lace doesn't immediately come to mind as the sexiest of fabrics, but combined with navy crepe it makes for seductive dresses that seem to reveal more body than they actually do.

New York in midst of fashion week

By Woody Hochswender
N.Y. Times News Service

The model in black lace waltzed down the runway at the Hotel Pierre, made a turn and posed, like Camille in your high school play.

"That is a very pretty dress," said a woman.

"Do you think I dare?" wondered another.

"I really don't think you could," remarked the first.

Time to consider fashion again, even though a lot of people are saying no one is in the mood.

It is spring fashion week in New York, and if anyone had any doubts, Mayor David N. Dinkins proclaimed it so, with lots of whereases and therefores. The city assigned additional police coverage to Seventh Avenue between 37th and 40th Streets, where many of the designer showrooms are; the Sanitation Department scheduled an extra sweep-up in the garment district to make a good show for the out-of-town retailers and journalists.

None of this was any consolation to Eleanor Brenner, the Seventh Avenue designer, who had a trunk of 40 expensive samples stolen last week from outside her showroom. They found the trunk, empty, in the Times Square subway station.

"They probably sold the clothes for $5 each," said Ms. Brenner, adding that one of the beaded jackets had cost $2,000 to make.

"It's an ugly situation," she said, "but the show will go on."

Paris shows offer something new in coatwear

By Carrie Donovan
N.Y. Times News Service

Coats, like everything else in fashion, have been caught up in the craze for changing fabrics, categories and uses.

Once satin, velvet, lace and lame were strictly for evening, but now clothes made of or trimmed in any of these voluptuous fabrics are considered appropriate for day as well as night. Some of these fragile materials have also been treated to wear well in all weather.

At the Paris fashion showings last month, several editors were spotted wearing a boxy topper of black velvet with quilted satin sleeves that reversed to a quilted satin lining.

The coat looked great with a short pleated skirt or, better yet, over a pair of black tights. It would also be a perfect evening wrap: warm but elegant enough to toss over a ball gown.

It turns out that the coat, which sells for about $425, is really meant for rain wear and is made by an American manufacturer aptly called Drizzle.

Another versatile day-to-night cover-up is a zip-front hooded parka made of the same cotton velvet, which Drizzle's creative director, Jane Lipman, called "totally water repellent."

The coat is $425 plain or $500 with fur trim. It is at stores like Bergdorf Goodman and I. Magnin. The parka is at Henri Bendel.

Another material that works wonderfully for day or night is leather. A black leather trench coat, for instance, may not be waterproof, but it certainly makes a stylish statement, whatever the hour.

DEAR ABBY

Motorists, here's a warning: Don't interrupt cops at work

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Will you please ask your readers never to interrupt a police officer in the middle of a traffic stop unless it is a dire emergency? (Directions to the nearest restaurant don't count!)

Van Buren

Abby, we police officers never know who we are pulling over during a routine stop. It could be a murderer, an escaped felon or a minister. More law enforcement personnel are injured or killed during routine traffic stops than almost any other type of police activity. (It's twice as dangerous at night.)

Please don't pull up right next to me as I'm approaching the car I just stopped and ask me for directions! We could both be in danger and I might not be able to guarantee your safety.

We also make stops where the element of danger is known beforehand — such as an armed robber fleeing the scene. This is usually a planned stop where suspects are taken out of a car at gunpoint. If you should see one or more police officers with their guns drawn and pointed at someone, don't walk up and ask, "What's going on?" We are not filming "T.J. Hooker."

If a police officer is all red in the face and yelling at you and waving an arm in a sideways motion while holding a gun in the other, don't wave back. It isn't a greeting. MOVE! You are in the line of fire!

Thanks, Abby, for letting me get this off my chest. — CALIFORNIA COP, LOMPOC, CALIF.

DEAR READERS: He's right. When officers are on duty, they are not playing cops and robbers; it's the real thing. So, please, don't interrupt an officer who is obviously busy doing his job.

DEAR ABBY: Well, it happened again tonight! Don't people realize that in this day and age, it is not safe to assume anything?

I am a 21-year-old man — stable and successful — and I am presently seeing a woman who is 19 years my senior. For some reason (probably because I look younger than I am), people tend to assume that we are mother and son.

Abby, you would not believe the pain and frustration it causes my girlfriend when people tell her what a handsome "son" she has! She doesn't look anywhere near old enough to be my mother.

Tonight when we came out of a restaurant and the valet retrieved my car, the young fellow who brought us our car said, "Gee, if my mom had a car like this, she'd never let me drive it!"

Please let your readers know that assumptions can be rude. I doubt there would be a problem if I was 40 and she was 19 or 20. — HATES ASSUMPTIONS

DEAR HATES: Unfortunately, some assumptions — when verbalized — can be cruel as well as rude. However, when a 40-year-old man is in the company of a 19- or 20-year-old woman, the assumption is more likely to be that they are boyfriend and girlfriend. Today, when people are living longer and taking better care of themselves (physically, nutritionally and sometimes with a little help from a plastic surgeon), age is merely a number.

But on the chance that it could be embarrassing, it's wise to make no assumptions concerning the relationship between a male and female.

People are eating them up! For Abby's favorite recipes, send a long, business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Cookbooklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

AT WIT'S END

Buying spices takes commitment

EDITORS' NOTE: Erma Bombeck is on vacation. This column originally appeared in July 1988.

By Erma Bombeck

Doris from Rochester, N.Y., writes: "I've got my 30th wedding anniversary coming up in September, and I just used up my first box of bay leaves. The box has a price tag on it that says 15 cents. Am I alone?"

Pull up a couch, Doris. Of course you are not alone. You are a member of the largest cult of homemakers in the world, those who hang onto everything in their kitchens — except their sanity.

If spices qualified as antiques, Sotheby's would be camping at my kitchen door.

I have a spice from Ceylon to sprinkle over my chilled melon, one from Jamaica for pickling, one from Sierra Leone for rhubarb, one from Spain for sweetbreads and one from Madagascar for winter squash. I have no idea what I'm doing with these spices, because I don't like any of the things you use them for.

But I know this is true: Once you get a spice in your home, you have it forever. Women never throw out spices.

There are several reasons for this. First, they smell so rotten to begin with that most of us have no idea when they go bad. Second, they don't take up much space, so we say, "What the heck." Homemakers also figure that one rainy day when they are trying out a new recipe and it calls for a quarter-teaspoon of cardamom, they'll have it.

You couldn't get me to throw away my container of fennel. This probably seems like a shallow reason, but my husband alphabetizes my spices, and it's the only "F" I have.

Men do not understand this attachment to spices. One day I asked my husband to put a small jar of mint in his vise and take the lid off with his pliers.

"When did you last use this?" he asked suspiciously.

"I've never used it," I said.

"How old is it?"

"What year did we move from Ohio?"

"You paid to have this transported from Ohio 16 years ago? Why did you buy it in the first place?"

"It was on sale."

"But you hate mint."

"Maybe it will absorb some of the odor of the sauerkraut in the disposer. Get the lid off!"

If it makes you feel any better, Doris, I bought a small packet of saffron last week. Cost me an arm and a leg. Did you know it takes approximately 55,000 flowers to yield 1 pound of it? A pinch of it will flavor a whole pound of rice.

The Egyptians were buried with their spices. I know which one I'm taking with me when I go.

Robots create worn look in jeans

N.Y. Times News Service

New blue jeans that look old have been popular with consumers for years. But making them has created problems for manufacturers: the quality of the "finish" can be uneven, and the chemicals used in some processes are unhealthy for their handlers.

But only if the handlers are human. The GMFanuc Robotics Corp., the nation's largest robotics manufacturer, based in Auburn Hills, Mich., has developed a robot that is garnering interest among jeans makers and industrial launderers that do much of the finishing.

Its system is intended to replace people who spray potassium permanganate onto jeans, particularly the seat, knee and thigh areas, in a technique known as localized abrasion.

Workers are still needed to load the jeans onto the system, but the robot itself turns the jeans to spray the front and back. It can also spray the rear pockets to look as if they have been carrying a tobacco can or wallet for years.

To date, the company has received three orders for the system, which it developed this spring. Peter Planchock, general manager for GMFanuc Robotics West, said the company was approached about the possibility of designing the system by an industrial launderer in the Los Angeles area.

The look created by localized abrasion has been popular in Europe for about two years, building on the popularity of stone washed jeans, which are faded all over, and is starting to catch on in the United States.

Norman Karr, executive director of the Men's Fashion Association in New York, said "reverse snobbery" has made such finishes popular.

Buyers of preworn jeans are trying to avoid the appearance that they have arrived fresh from the clothing store. Jeans with localized abrasions, Karr added, make the wearers "look as if they've been there for a while, rather than looking as if they just got there."

Designers search for 'looks' women want

Associated Press

New York City's fashion industry employs 200,000 people in the more than $50 billion business of trying to figure out what the American woman wants and giving it to her — at a profit.

In these recessionary times they must anticipate two things about their customers, according to an article in a recent issue of Harper's Bazaar — what they need and what they want.

An in-house research task force at billion-dollar sportswear empire Liz Claiborne Inc., pores over market and census data to try to pinpoint trends and changes in the American woman's lifestyle. Sales in New Jersey are said to be followed especially closely because Ms. Claiborne considers it "real middle America."

Anne Klein's chief designer, Louis Dell'Olio, always includes in collections a few constant pieces to fill basic needs, explaining:

"In fall, there is always a classic trouser, whether it has a slim or a wider leg. And there's always a pencil skirt, because no matter what's going on fashionwise, a short slim skirt always sells."

IN WARMER weather, a stretch tank is basic for sexy, young layering.

Isaac Mizrahi finds customers shopping for a basic look.

"Women's priorities are becoming more like men's, in that they just want to put something on, look fabulous and walk out the door," he said.

Bill Blass, a high society favorite, says his barometer is literally to know his customers personally — how they live and the sorts of occasions for which they dress.

"You have to travel; you can't just sit here," he said. "In San Francisco, for instance, the most beautiful clothes are worn in private houses, not in restaurants."

Oscar de la Renta takes notes while chatting with Nancy Kissinger, Marella Agnelli and Marie-Helene de Rothschild.

Geoffrey Beene recently inaugurated a Fifth Avenue boutique to reach out directly to his customers.

AP LaserPhoto

These two designs are from the Oscar de la Renta fall/winter fashion show in New York.

AP LaserPhoto

Bill Blass designs for fall/winter include these two after-five fashions.

BEYOND A WOMAN'S need to dress in an appropriate manner is the other realm of fashion — the realm of seduction. Few designers understand Americans' fantasies as well as Ralph Lauren, who has learned to market not only needs but aspirations.

Mizrahi's look this year includes sexy bras under ski parkas, bathing caps worn as hats and elaborate evening wigs.

"I don't think about the function of clothes as much as about wanting them to seduce you and jump into your bag and eventually into your luggage," Misrahi said.

Calvin Klein put it this way:

"Women want a sensuality out of clothes. For day, they're dressing softer and gentler; and at night, it's all drama. It's 'I want a killer dress. I want to walk in and be seen.' "

Klein supplies them with tiny sheaths of gold lace or deceptively simple "slip" dresses.

A key ingredient in the seduction of high fashion has always been to unveil something new. Winter 1991 is no exception.

"You have to give them something they don't already have in their closets," Blass said.

IN RECENT YEARS, the American woman's increasing appetite for fresh, new looks has generated increased attention on young and emerging designers.

Zang Toi, 30, designs sexy, Malaysian-inspired suits and dresses that sell like hotcakes at Martha on Park Avenue and Palm Beach — $200,000 in sales each season — to women like philanthropist Carroll Petrie, Pat Kennedy Lawford and cosmetics maven Georgette Klinger.

"They want something new but not too trendy," said the designer, who believes her customers want a departure from the clothes of the big, established designers they've worn for years.

In addition to freshness and variety, Susan Enfield wrote in Harper's Bazaar, emerging designers often offer high-fashion concepts at a lower price than more established names. American women have become noticeably value conscious.

Young designer to get hero's welcome at home

By Emil Wilbekin

NEW YORK (AP) — Most starlets feel they've made it when they can return home to lots of fanfare. If you use that adulation as a barometer reading, fashion designer Zang Toi is a bona fide hit.

Toi, whose creations have been played in Vogue, Harper's Bazaar and Elle magazines, was recently caught in a tug-of-war between two Malaysian retailers in anticipation of his first trip home in six years.

The stores vying for his presence were Parkson and LeCoshe's. Parkson is a large department store chain in Southeast Asia. It doesn't carry the Toi label, but it invited the 30-year-old designer home, anyway. He would show his clothes and promote the Parkson stores.

LeCoshe's is a Malaysian boutique that carries Toi's line exclusively. It is closely affiliated with the Malaysian royal family and the Back Benchers Club of Parliament. When it got wind of the Parkson's promotional campaign, LeCoshe's invited Toi to take part in an event to benefit several local charities. It would fall within a week of the Parkson fete.

Toi, thrilled with the invitations, accepted both. "They were two events that would take Zang home and let us know how people are accepting his work in Southeast Asia," said Marcus Teo, Toi's merchandising director. "We also hoped it would open business opportunities (there)."

But each store wanted Toi's appearance to be an exclusive. What followed was a flurry of faxes between New York and Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia. "It became something of a royal tussle," said Teo.

At one point, there was an attempt at a joint event, but that didn't fly. In the end, Toi turned down the Parkson invitation, saying the date conflicted with preparation for his Spring collection. It didn't help that Parkson would not give Toi show tickets for his family.

As it stands, Toi will go home in February next year for the LeCoshe's show. "All the attention that I get in America, my family only experiences through press clippings that I send to them," Toi said. "By returning home, they will be able to share it with me."

This attitude befits Toi, one of several young designers who has the New York City fashion clique captivated. But he remains untainted by the industry's sometimes contagious pretentions.

Part of his success with his women's ready-to-wear label comes from his innovative twist of giving denim, tweed and wool a feminine shape. "When you're a young designer it is the time to be creative, take risks and have your own distinct look and image," Toi said.

The look has led to a string of honors. In September, for instance, Toi was honored as a member SFA-USA, a Saks Fifth Avenue black-tie dinner dance that recognizes a select group of fashion designers.

Toi also was nominated by Elite Modeling agency this fall as one of the top young new designers. And last year he received the Mouton-Cadet Young Designer Award, an industry honor that applauds promising fashion designers.

Not surprisingly, business is booming. The Zang Toi label earned $1 million in 1990 and is projected to bring in $3 million in retail sales in 1991.

Toi sells his clean cut, classically tailored and humorous clothing at some of America's toniest department stores and boutiques. A suit goes for $800 to $1,500.

"It feels good to be recognized by the industry," says Toi, who works 12 to 14 hours a day, "but I have to work harder so I don't disappoint myself or others who have supported me."

Abuse reports were filed against parents, teachers say

WHITE SETTLEMENT(AP) — Two Fort Worth school teachers said Wednesday that they filed an abuse report several years ago against the parents of a 13-year-old boy found chained in his trailer home this week.

But state child welfare officials said they have no record that a report was ever made against Jay and Linda Hill, who remained jailed Wednesday on one count each of child abuse in Tarrant County.

The Hills were arrested Monday after their son Stephen Hill was found inside their home weighing about 55 pounds, half the normal weight for a child his age. Police say he had been starved for about three to six months, apparently as punishment for hyperactivity.

Stephen, remained comatose and in critical condition Wednesday after suffering a heart attack at home, hospital and police officials said.

Doris Hughes, who taught the couple's younger son, Douglas, in the first grade in 1986-87 at Ridglea Elementary School in Fort Worth, said she made an abuse report at that time.

"It makes me sad," said Ms. Hughes. "Because if something could have been done then, this might not be happening now."

Ms. Hughes conferred with Douglas' kindergarten teacher, LaVonne Simdon, before making the report.

Ms. Simdon said she noticed Douglas had signs of injuries, but did not think at the time they were signs of abuse.

During the school year, in Ms. Simdon's class, Douglas came to school with a broken collar bone and his arm in a sling. The boy had a note from his mother, she said, which explained Douglas injured himself in a fall at the school playground.

Later that same year, Ms. Simdon said Douglas came to class with a bruise above his eye. Douglas told the teacher he fell from a bunk bed.

"I do remember I didn't have a thought in the world that he was abused," Ms. Simdon said. "But when he started first grade, things started happening."

The school nurse contacted the Texas Department of Human Services' Child Protective Services in Tarrant County after Ms. Hughes noticed the bruise on Douglas' face.

The agency told the school nurse that there was not enough evidence to warrant an investigation, Ms. Hughes said.

Mrs. Hill, a 37-year-old homemaker, and Hill, a 42-year-old engineer at General Dynamics, remained in the Tarrant County Jail on $100,000 bond each.

The Hills withdrew their sons from school April 6, 1987, records show.

Andrea Helms, spokeswoman for Child Protective Services in Fort Worth, said files of unconfirmed abuse reports are purged six months after a claim is made.

If there were a report made at that time, no records exist to verify the teachers' story, she said.

"We have no record," Ms. Helms said Wednesday.

Police combed the trailer home Wednesday.

Among the items found was the black, plastic chain used to restrain Stephen.

Sen. Bentsen formally introduces $72.5 billion tax-cut plan

By Nancy Mathis
Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — Texas Sen. Lloyd Bentsen on Wednesday formally introduced his $72.5 billion tax-cut plan, bolstered by the surprise Democratic victory in a key Pennsylvania Senate race that featured support for the middle class as a crucial issue.

"The attitude of middle Americans might be summed up — after they were run roughshod over by the economic policies of the '80s — but it might be summed up by the country Western song: They got the gold mine; we got the shaft," said Bentsen, a Democrat who chairs the tax-writing Senate Finance Committee.

The proposal would provide a $300 tax credit for each child and restore the Individual Retirement Account deductions to all taxpayers. The five-year cost of $72.5 billion would be paid through an extra 5 percent cut in military spending.

Sen. William Roth, R-Del., joined Bentsen in a bipartisan news conference, signaling some GOP support for the tax cut.

"Tuesday the American voters sent a loud, clear message — get the economy moving, taxes are too high. Frankly, there is no time to waste," Roth said.

Bentsen started a rash of tax-cut proposals from both Republicans and Democrats when he announced last month that he would introduce a tax cut proposal to help the middle class. But his cause was bolstered after the Pennsylvania election Tuesday.

In an upset, Harris Wofford, a Democrat, defeated former Attorney General Dick Thornburgh. Health care and tax cuts were key issues.

"In my mind, tax cuts and a strong economy go together like turkey and Thanksgiving dinners," Roth said. "If Congress and the White House don't take action the biggest turkeys in America will be those elected officials who fail to act."

Roth, who has previously joined Bentsen on tax-cut efforts, called for an end to partisan politics on the issue.

Also joining Bentsen and Roth was Sen. Barbara Mikulski, D-Md., facing her first re-election bid next year. "The message from Pennsylvania is there are 49 other states just like it," Mikulski said.

Bentsen said hearings will begin soon but acknowledged Congress may recess later this month before considering the bill.

Bentsen contends the measure would help jump-start the stalled economy by putting money in the hands of consumers and also provide through the IRA additional savings needed for investments.

Some common herbs, foods shown to work as decongestants

By Jean Carper

Ancient cold remedies

Why not try fighting a cold with nature's ancient drugs? Some common herbs and foods have pharmacological properties that really work, says Jim Duke, Ph.D., medical-plant expert at the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

Carper

To fight a cold, he puts herbs and spices with decongestant and antitussive (anti-cough) powers in his teas and soups, including hot chili peppers, thyme, turmeric, cardamom, rosemary, spearmint, bay leaf and sage.

Rob McCaleb, president of the Herb Research Foundation, relieves a cold's congestion and nausea by drinking ginger tea: ¼ teaspoon of ginger dissolved in a teacup of boiling water. He says 10 crushed magnolia flowers will help stop a runny nose.

Dr. Irwin Ziment, professor of medicine at UCLA, praises red-hot chili peppers for cold relief. Eat hot jalapeno peppers in Mexican food to break up congestion, he advises, or put 10 to 20 drops of Tabasco sauce in a glass of water and drink it or gargle with it.

Garlic and horseradish are also good decongestants, he says.

Beware Raw Oysters

It's probably not a good idea for anybody to eat raw oysters any more. The mollusks are frequently contaminated with bacteria, notably illness-producing Vibrio bacteria.

But if you have chronic liver disease, diabetes or have had stomach surgery, for sure don't eat raw oysters. They could kill you. That's a recent warning from World Health Organization researchers.

They analyzed 333 cases of Vibrio-caused illness among Florida residents. Of the victims, 197 or about 60 percent had eaten raw oysters a week before getting ill. More striking, 19 percent of those stricken had a liver disease, 7.6 percent were diabetic and 6.6 percent had previously had gastric surgery.

Experts say that otherwise healthy people who eat raw oysters contaminated with a small number of the Vibrio bacteria may not get sick or may suffer only moderate diarrhea with stomach cramps.

But if the organism invades the bloodstream, the disease is often fatal, and must be diagnosed and treated immediately with antibiotics. Extremely vulnerable to this lethal Vibrio blood infection are those with liver disease or a history of heavy alcohol consumption, said the researchers.

New magnesium cures?

If you have chronic fatigue syndrome or premenstrual syndrome (PMS), the mineral magnesium may be just what the doctor should order. Two new studies show that magnesium may help relieve these two disorders.

One study done at the University of Southhampton in the United Kingdom found that patients with chronic fatigue syndrome had lower concentrations of magnesium in their blood cells. Further, when researchers gave 32 chronic-fatigue-syndrome patients injections of magnesium sulfate or a placebo for six weeks, those getting magnesium had improved energy levels, a better emotional state and less pain.

Italian physicians recently found that magnesium pills alleviated premenstrual mood changes. They gave 32 women with PMS either magnesium or a dummy placebo pill. The dose: 360 milligrams of magnesium three times a day from day 15 until the onset of menstruation.

When getting magnesium, the women said they had less overall menstrual distress and pain, as well as fewer mood changes. The researchers concluded that magnesium could be an effective treatment for PMS.

Contagious hepatitis spreads fast

■ There are five types of hepatitis — A,B,C,D,E — and cases of the most common types, A and B, are up by almost 40 percent.

Associated Press

Hepatitis is contagious and spreading fast. This year 700,000 Americans will contract the virus, which attacks the liver and can lead to death.

The most common types, hepatitis A and B, according to an article in the current issue of Redbook, are up nearly 40 percent.

"We're in a sea of hepatitis," said Dr. Richard Duma, president of the National Foundation for Infectious Diseases in Washington, D.C.

Even more alarming, hepatitis B, a serious form of the illness once limited to intravenous drug users and homosexuals, is spreading among the general population and 30 to 40 percent of the cases occur in people who are not in any high-risk group. Scientists don't know how they got the disease.

The skyrocketing rate is particularly troubling for women because pregnant mothers who are infected with hepatitis B have a 90 percent chance of giving birth to babies who can carry the virus for the rest of their lives.

Hepatitis is not one disease but five different viruses, named hapatitis A, B, C, D and E. All have similar symptoms — fever, nausea, achiness, fatigue and rashes — but some strains are more debilitating and last far longer than others.

In many people, the urine turns the color of cola, and the skin and whites of the eyes become jaundiced, a yellowing caused by the inability of the liver to break down bile.

Depending on the viral strain, these symptoms appear anywhere from a few weeks to as much as six months after a person is infected.

Most people recover from any type of hepatitis in four to eight weeks from the time they first become sick. A small number never recover fully.

These so-called chronic carriers develop an incurable inflammation of the liver. About half of them continue to have symptoms; the other half become silent carriers — seemingly healthy but still dangerously infectious.

Hundreds of thousands of these people will get severe liver disease 15 to 25 years later, at which point their only hope for survival may be a liver transplant.

About 80 percent of hepatitis cases are either hepatitis A or B.

The most widespread of the viruses among the general population is hepatitis A, infecting about 150,000 Americans every year. The good news is there is no chance of becoming a chronic carrier after being infected with hepatitis A.

The most lethal of the group, hepatitis B, kills more than 6,000 Americans a year. Hepatitis B is passed through the blood or semen of an infected person — most often through sex, intravenous drug use or, in the case of health-care workers, through a needle prick or other exposure to blood.

This route of infection is the same as that of the AIDS virus, but hepatitis is much more infectious.

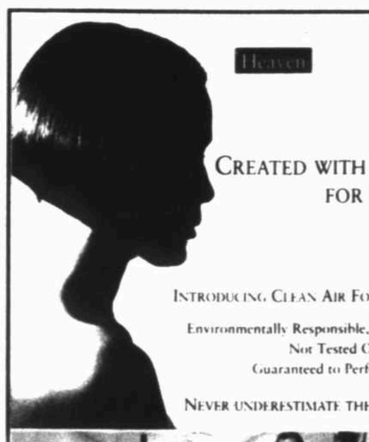

"If you got stuck with a needle from someone with AIDS, you'd have half a percent chance of contracting the virus," said Dr. Jerome Boscia, director of vaccine development for SmithKline Beecham. "But with hepatitis B, your chances would be as high as 30 percent."

To protect newborn babies, experts recommend that all pregnant women be tested for hepatitis B. If the virus is detected, the baby is given a shot of immune globulin along with the hepatitis B vaccine, reducing his chances of developing infection from 90 to 5 percent.

The Centers for Disease Control and the Public Health Service now recommend that all children be vaccinated against the virus at birth, 6 months and 1 year.

As for the blood supply, hepatitis A and E are not spread through blood so there is no risk. Hepatitis B can be detected by a highly accurate test. Hepatitis C remains a problem, Leslie Laurence wrote in Redbook. But researchers say more sophisticated tests for detecting it are expected to be available within the next year.

Ouch! Forfeit

RUSSELLVILLE, Ark. (AP) — Arkansas Tech will forfeit its four wins this season because it used an ineligible player in the games, officials announced Wednesday.

Senior defensive back and linebacker Doug McCoy has been playing in his 11th semester, a violation of of the Arkansas Intercollegiate Conference's 10-semester rule, Tech Athletic Director Don Sevier said.

McCoy, a Fayetteville High School graduate, attended Northwestern Louisiana for six semesters, from the fall of 1986 through the spring of 1989 and has been enrolled at Tech since the spring of 1990, Sevier said.

Tech officials were unaware, he said, that McCoy enrolled at the University of Arkansas during the fall of 1989. UA officials confirmed that McCoy attended class one day before dropping out of school.

Sevier said McCoy voluntarily informed Tech officials of his situation after seeing a newspaper account of a Henderson State player who apparently had done the same thing.

Free agents

NEW YORK (AP) — Oakland third baseman Brook Jacoby and Carney Lansford filed for free agency Thursday, raising the total of free agents to 88.

Sixteen players remain eligible to file by Monday's deadline, including six players from the World Series champion Minnesota Twins: pitchers Jack Morris, Steve Bedrosian and Terry Leach; third baseman Mike Pagliarulo; catcher Junior Ortiz, and second baseman Al Newman.

Among those still eligible are Los Angeles catcher Gary Carter, Houston pitcher Mike Scott and St. Louis reliever Todd Worrell. Teams may begin making offers to players on Tuesday.

MHS in role of 'UnderDawg'

■ The Lady Bulldogs test powerful Amarillo Tascosa tonight as the Class 5A volleyball playoffs begin.

By Bill Price
Staff Writer

LEVELLAND — Midland High's Lady Bulldog volleyball team knows it will be the "UnderDawg" when it takes on Amarillo Tascosa at 8 p.m. here today in a bi-district playoff at Levelland High School's gymnasium.

But the 17-9 Lady 'Dawgs, runners-up in District 4-5A, vow they won't be overwhelmed by the Lady Rebels' daunting lineup.

Tascosa is 25-7 for the season and the District 3-5A champion, boasting three players listed with heights of 5-11 and two more at 5-10. Those players include Holly Ridings, a 5-10 senior who was an integral cog on Tascosa's 1990 Class 5A state championship basketball team, and her 5-11 sophomore sister, April Ridings.

Also on the roster are 5-5 Jessica Hatch and 5-10 Jesilyn Hatch, both daughters of Tascosa head coach Dana Hatch, 5-11 senior Melissa Hobbs and 5-11 sophomore Amy Mitchell.

"We're going to play it as if it were the world championship," MHS head coach Sonja Pittman said of the match, originally scheduled for 7:30 p.m. but changed because of a scheduling conflict.

"We've done quite a bit of advance planning and we may know more about them than any of our other playoff opponents in years before. We just hope we can rise to the occasion."

The Lady 'Dawgs, though giving up an overall height advantage, do have 6-0 middle blocker Sally Gibson to lead an experience-laden team.

Mich Neatherlin, Lisa Sanchez and Gibson, an all-district player a year ago, are all returning starters from last year's 20-7 team that narrowly missed the playoffs. Also, Gibson was a starter and Neatherlin a letter winner on the 1989 team that tied for second in 4-5A but lost a district playoff to Abilene High.

"That was tough last year because we had won a tournament and had some all-tournament players that season. We've just been so close to it," said Pittman, who has a MHS team back in the playoffs for the first time since 1986.

As for the competition, Pittman is aware of what her team is facing.

The last time MHS made the playoffs the Lady Bulldogs faced another Amarillo school in Amarillo High. AHS downed the 'Dawgs 15-7, 15-3 in bi-district play at Amarillo, suffered only one loss the whole season and went on to win the state title.

"I know at least in the last decade the representatives from that district have made it to the regional tournament at least. Quite a few of those teams have gone on to the state tournament and usually won first

Coaching moves shake-up WJCAC

■ Five of nine conference schools change on-court leadership to create wide open basketball race.

By Jimmy Patterson
Assistant Sports Editor

A few short months ago, the Western Junior College Athletic Conference was in a shambles.

Almost as many WJCAC coaches changed jobs as baseball players filed for free agency last week, and as it turns out, more schools than not in the conference have new coaches.

Five of the nine schools went through coaching changes during a two month period in the spring. And although Ron Mayberry is back for another season at South Plains, the Texans didn't escape completely unscathed. Mayberry's brother and long time assistant, Mike, left the coaching ranks for private business.

The changes all started in March when Western Texas head coach Tony Mauldin jumped ship to accept the head coaching job at Abilene Christian University.

Mauldin may not have known it at the time, but his leaving was only the beginning. When the fourth-year WTC coach accepted the ACU job on March 12, it started a trend which wouldn't end until June 1. The remainder of the changes, chronologically:

■ Tuesday, March 19: After four seasons and an 81-43 record at Midland College, the school's board of trustees opt against renewing Reggie Franklin's contract for a fifth year.

■ Thursday, March 28: Former Howard College head coach Steve Green (81-19 in three seasons), whose Hawks' tied for the WJCAC title the last two years, is named as Franklin's replacement at MC.

■ Tuesday, April 2: Two weeks to the day after learning he would not return to MC, Franklin accepts the head coaching position at his JUCO alma mater, New Mexico Military Institute.

■ Tuesday, April 9: Kelly Green, second year head coach at Frank Phillips and brother of MC coach Steve Green, accepts the head coaching job at Western Texas, filling the void left by Mauldin.

■ Friday, April 12: Jeff Kidder, 28, becomes the youngest coach in the conference when he accepts the head coaching position at Howard College. Kidder, spent time under the tutelage of Eddie Sutton at Kentucky and Mark Adams at West Texas State University.

■ Saturday, June 1: Thirty-two-year-old Mark Ellis, formerly of Pratt (Kan.) Junior College, fills the head coaching vacancy at Frank Phillips, created when Green accepted the WTC position.

New Mexico Junior College's Ron Black, Odessa's Dennis Helms, Clarendon's Joe Mondragon, and Mayberry at South Plains were the only four coaches who stayed put.

How all these changes will affect the different teams in the conference is a point agreed upon by coaches old, new or relocated. Surprisingly, most coaches agree that the changes will give more teams a shot at the title and that parity could be the buzz word this season. Still, the top three favorites in the league — Odessa, South Plains and New Mexico JC — no doubt have been picked to qualify for

New Midland College basketball coach Steve Green watches his players go through the motions during "Meet the Chaps" night Tuesday.

A talk with Steve Green

Midland College basketball writer Jimmy Patterson sat down recently with first-year MC basketball coach Steve Green concerning the changes not only at Midland College, but also throughout the Western Junior College Athletic Conference. Here are some selected questions and answers from the conversation:

Q: One only has to look as far as Big Spring to know that you'll be running a different style of basketball program at Midland College than the one that was run here previously under Reggie Franklin. What would you say will be the most noticeable difference, from a fan's perspective?

A: As the season wears on, the tempo will increase. And in the beginning, the number of players we use will be greater. We don't plan to suit up anybody who won't play.

Q: Should basketball fans look for the same type of game both offensively and defensively that was so successful for you at Howard?

■ Chaparral and WJCAC team previews/2C,3C

A: Our defense is designed to make other teams play faster than they're accustomed to playing. But we're 15 games away from getting into shape. The biggest thing now is we're not playing with confidence on the defensive end. And we've got to have that. They've been inventing new ways to mess up in practice, and we can't have that. But that's typical.

Q: Midland's most obvious absence this year will be the hole left by post man Carroll Boudreaux. How do you plan to fill that hole?

A: I don't know the size or the depth of that hole. We beat Midland the last four times we played them at Howard, so to me, there is no hole. I'm just trying to fill the hole left by Johnny McDowell. I was always concerned with what Carroll might do to us, but I know the other coaches around the league who played against Howard were equally concerned with what Johnny was going to do to them. That's the difference between the suc-

MC, Howard will fight for fourth spot

The year of change is upon the Western Junior College Athletic Conference and it's nine member teams.

It would take only a few minutes for even the most casual observer to note that this year's conference race is not a matter of nine teams racing for four tournament spots.

Patterson

This year, it's a matter of six teams and one spot.

Realistically, New Mexico Junior College, South Plains and Odessa College have the Top 3 positions sewn up already.

The T-Birds, Texans and Wranglers are the favorites simply because they have the luxury of returning their coaches from last season.

And it doesn't help the rest of the league any that not only are Ron Black, Ron Mayberry and Dennis Helms back for another term, but they are models of stability and success.

This much is a certainty: Forget the Top 3 spots. Not only are the coaches back, but two of the three also bring back some of the top sophomore talent in the league, which instantly makes them favorites.

Guard Greg Brown and forward James Inman return to Hobbs, and Robert Shannon and Nathan King (albeit a 25-35 pounds overweight Nate) are back at OC.

If there is a weak link among the Top 3, it, oddly enough, may be SPC. Ron Mayberry is back, but brother Mike, for years his assistant, has resigned. Corey Beck and Dwight Stewart, two all-conference freshmen last season, quit the team and transferred to Arkansas a year early. (Neither will play for the Hogs this season, but both have three years of eligibility come 1992-93.) Not only are the two prized possessions of the league gone in those two, but Mayberry says that SPC also lost its three top recruits leading into the season.

Bleakly, Mayberry says, "If we can survive this season, we'll be doing OK." Somehow, some way, Mayberry will succeed. It's just a matter of to what extent.

So with the Top 3 spots a lock, with this guess going to NMJC at the top, followed by OC and SPC, what's left is the fourth Region V tournament qualifying position for the remaining six teams in the league to fight for.

The pre-season coach's poll gave early nods to Midland College, but since the release of that poll, coaches throughout the conference are dishing out the highest praises to the talent at Howard College.

Black went so far as to say the Hawks have "the best raw talent in the league."

Western Texas Coach Kelly Green, brother of MC's Steve Green, says that if the Hawks come through as expected, "they have the best talent in the league and are a shoo-in" for the tournament.

So, who'll take the fourth and final Region V spot?

Count out Clarendon, which may have a returning coach in Joe Mondragon, but still spends about as much money on its basketball program as a girl scout troop spends on a field trip.

Count out Frank Phillips, which has a new coach and a complete roster of freshmen.

Count out Western Texas. Green, another first-year coach, also has a roster of first-year players. The former FPC coach says it'll likely be next year before a serious run is made in Snyder.

And count out New Mexico Military. Another new coach in Reggie Franklin having to introduce a new system to a group of young players.

Not surprisingly, it boils down to MC and Howard.

The edge for Midland, as even coaches throughout the conference will tell you, is its experienced and successful head coach. Steve Green has four conference losses in two seasons. He's a winner, and he has a talented young cast. The non-conference slate is vital if Green hopes to whip the Chaps into shape in time for conference play. If he can, MC is in.

Green's proven ability to win should place the Chaps in the Region V tournament for the first time since 1989. But beware the Hawks of Howard. They won't go down easily.

Jimmy Patterson is the assistant sports editor of the Reporter-Telegram.

Chaps take on new look

From head coach down to role player, MC is loaded with new faces

By Jimmy Patterson
Assistant Sports Editor

New coach.
New assistant coach.
New uniforms.
Twelve new players.
New outlooks and attitudes.
Even new tennis shoes.

For Midland College basketball fans, there are obviously several reasons for newfound excitement. For those same fans, though, reality suggests that newness does not automatically beget success.

Success takes a little more work.

And that work has been under way at Chaparral Center, site of grueling workout sessions five days a week for almost two months now. The workouts assure that, if nothing else, the 1991-92 version of the Chaparrals will be one of the better conditioned teams in the Western Junior College Athletic Conference.

First-year head coach Steve Green runs a simple program, really: Run, shoot, score. Again and again.

It is the kind of basketball Green's Howard College Hawks played with near perfection the last two years in Big Spring. And it is the kind of basketball, Green, assures that will accompany him to Midland.

The Chaps open the season Friday at 8 p.m. against Murray State in the first round of the Chaparral Classic. Howard College meets Angelina in a 6 p.m. game. Saturday at 8 p.m., the Chaps play Angelina.

Midland College travels to New Mexico Military Institute with former coach Reggie Franklin now at the controls in Roswell, on Dec. 7 to open the 1991-92 WJCAC campaign.

"If any of my guys are open, I want them to shoot it," Green says. "We're going to be putting the ball up from the outside as much as we are from the inside. But that stands to reason because we'll have more people playing outside."

The new-look Chaps run a double post, three out offense. The Chaps will use two post players and three guards, a type of scheme that has been used by the most successful teams in the league in recent history.

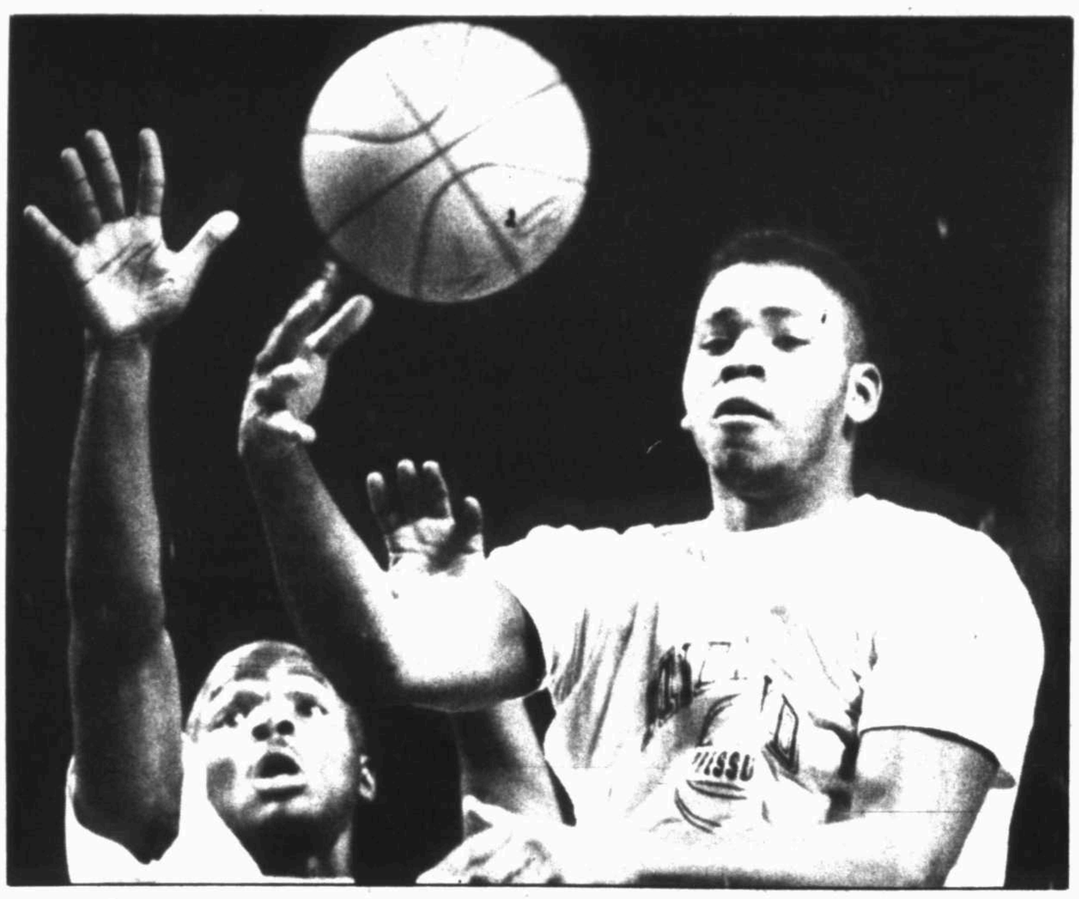

"We've got about nine or 10 players that will play sometime during the course of a 40 minute game," Green said. "Ending the game is probably more important than starting it, and they'll adjust if they're given a non-starter role."

MC is a little short in stature compared with years past. The departure of 6-6 Marlon Jefferson, who quit the team and school and went home last weekend, doesn't help any.

With Jefferson gone, only Charles Sanders returns with any experience as a Chap.

Sanders is the only sophomore with playing time for MC, but he is not the only Chap with just one season of JUCO eligibility remaining.

Guard Chris McKinney, a starting point guard for the NCAA Division I San Diego State Aztecs last season, and Charles Gentry, who attended the University of Colorado in 1990-91, are both experienced sophomores.

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

Freshman Danny Pearson, right, of Mobile, Ala., goes to the hoop as sophomore guard Chris McKinney, of East St. Louis, Ill, defends during Tuesday's "Meet The Chaps" night.

"Inexperience is the biggest problem we'll have to overcome," Green said. "This will be like my first team at Howard when we went 20-13. Every game we were learning. And we were beyond the learning stage there in the last two years."

Should Green's prediction come true, it will be the third consecutive season the Chaps put up 13 losses. However, Green sounds a bit more optimistic when talking about the non-conference schedule.

Green said the Chaps conceivably could be 11-2 when the Christmas break arrives following the conference opener at NMMI. Ideally, though, "I'm shooting for 13-0," Green admits.

"I've got guys with potential, but we're missing the intangibles right now," Green said. "Right now we don't have a Spud Webb or a Mookie Blaylock or a Charles Outlaw or a Puntus Wilson."

Green said the ingredient missing that propels a player to the above status is "heart or character." This is not to say MC isn't coming together well as a team, though.

"We have team unity. This is a young team, and they're going to get along when things are going well. A young team, though, is more prone to pointing fingers than accepting blame. But they're fun, and they're good guys."

Competing for the guard spots this season, along with comments from Green:

■ Thomas Sanders. He's been shifted from small forward to guard in the new system, has improved defensively and has become a threat from long range.

■ Chris McKinney. A cross between a point and shooting guard. "He passes as much as he shoots. He's from a tough part of the country and he'll welcome the opportunity to show you. He's got a lot of pride."

■ Kelon Haynie. "A tremendously gifted athlete. He's got arms that'll stretch. He can write a letter in his dorm room, and deliver it to Dallas without ever leaving Midland his arms are so long." In terms of consistency in practice and work habits, Green says he's in the Top 2 or 3 on the team, "which is why he'll be successful."

■ Shawn Morris. "Probably our only true point guard. That is his natural position. He's not a two guard or a three guard. He's a point guard and that's all."

■ Danny Pearson. A cross between a point and shooting guard, Pearson is a "good shooter and is learning the importance of trying to guard people."

■ Terrance Rone. Another point or shooting guard, Green says Rone has "the heart and willingness to do whatever it takes to keep him on the court." Rone's brother, Trasel, a 6-5 forward, played in last April's Texas-USA All-Star Game, and his half-brother, Martez Covington, a 7-1 center, plays in Europe. Terrance is the smallest of the crew, at 6-1.

■ Bruno Baptista. Hampered by injury that has limited his progress, Baptista has practiced and played sparingly in the pre-season.

At forward, Green has not a lot of height, but at least several players from which to choose:

■ Dani Mizrahi. From Holon, Israel, Mizrahi has been up and down in pre-season, another player bothered by injury. During a scrimmage at Lubbock Christian, though, Green said Mizrahi "had his hands on the ball everytime we looked up."

■ Morris Conley. Described by Green as similar to last year's Howard standout Johnny McDowell, "he's the same kind of player as Johnny, but not quite as big and doesn't get up as well, but he has strong work habits. He's two inches shorter and 10 pounds lighter than McDowell, but has just as much heart."

■ Arisvaldo "Ari" Rodriques. Green said that by next season, Rodriques will be one of the Top 2 posts in the conference.

■ Bruce Patterson. Another with superior work habits, Green says Patterson "gives as hard as he can for as long as he can, and when he's done, he just falls down."

■ Charles Gentry. Very talented offensively, Gentry, Green says, "can do whatever he wants to do. If Charles Gentry wants to average 20 points a game, he can average 20 points a game."

■ Fabian Mina. An athlete who also excels in soccer, Mina had as many as 20 rebounds in 20 minutes at a recent scrimmage against Lubbock Christian. Limited offensively, but "can score off the glass. Heck we may just throw it up on the glass so he'll get a chance to score." Mina was cut by Jacksonville JC last year presumably because of his offense, but he more than makes up for that with his defense. "If there's a loose ball rolling around on the floor, it's not going to be on the floor for too long if Fabian is playing."

Coaches' Poll

1. Odessa College Wranglers
2. South Plains College Texans
3. New Mexico JC Thunderbirds
4. Midland College Chaparrals
5. Howard College Hawks
6. Western Texas Westerners
7. New Mexico Military Broncos
8. Frank Phillips Plainsmen
9. Clarendon College Bulldogs

WJCAC Opponents

Clarendon College Bulldogs
Last Year: 7-19, 2-14 (T-8th)
Coach: Joe Mondragon
Key Returners: Steven Gay, F; James Rike, G; Howard Griffin, F/P; Cody Walker, F/P.
Mondragon's Comment: "We're not going to finish last, but that's where we're picked again. I've never come in last."

Frank Phillips Plainsmen
Last Year: 15-13, 7-9 (6th)
Coach: Matt Ellis
Key Returners: None.
Ellis' Comments: "It'll be interesting from the standpoint that we've got all new kids. Not a kid from last year has returned. A lot of our success will deal with how well we'll be able to deal with type of talent in this league. I'm not disappointed with our recruting class, we just got started a little late."

Howard College Hawks
Last Year: 29-1, 15-1 (T-1st, lost national tournament qualifying play-in game to Alvin, 95-91).
Coach: Jeff Kidder
Key Returners: None (all first year players).
Comments: Kidder has some of the top JUCO prospects in the country with guard Markee James, and forwards Will Macon and Chucky Robinson. ... The 28-year-old Kidder, a former assistant under both Eddie Sutton at Kentucky and Mark Adams at West Texas State, is the youngest coach in the conference.

New Mexico Military Broncos
Last Year: 7-20, 2-14 (T-8th)
Coach: Reggie Franklin
Key Returners: Terry Herrod, G.
Comments: Franklin returned to Roswell, where he played his junior college ball and served as an assistant coach after his contract was not renewed at Midland College. League consensus is that NMMI has better — and quicker — talent than in recent years.

New Mexico JC Thunderbirds
Last Year: 18-11, 9-7 (4th, eliminated at Region V tournament).
Coach: Ron Black
Key Returners: James Inman, F; Greg Brown, G; Pete Lewis, G.
Black's Comments: There's more parity in the conference than in year's past. The teams down at the bottom have improved. This is not saying much, but we could finish anywhere from first to last."

Odessa College Wranglers
Last Year: 24-8, 10-6 (3rd)
Coach: Dennis Helms
Key Returners: Robert Shannon, W; Kevin Washington, W; Nathan King, F/C; Anthony Murray, F/C.
Comments: OC opened the season Monday against Lamar (Colo.) missing three players who were suspended for three games for disciplinary reasons, and two who were sidelined due to injury, including Nathan King, a returning starter who was suffering from a stress fracture.
Helms' Comments: "I definitely feel Midland, Howard, South Plains, New Mexico Junior College, along with ourselves, all have good talent. Anybody can win it, but the only advantage in wining the conference is getting new uniforms. So I never concern myself with winning it. We've got play our best when it comes to March."

South Plains College Texans
Last Year: 29-1, 15-1 (T-1st)
Coach: Ron Mayberry
Key Returners:
Comments: The off-season was particularly tough for South Plains. Mayberry's brother and assistant coach Mike, resigned, opting for a career in the private sector; Corey Beck and Dwight Stewart, All-Conference freshmen who would've virtually assured SPC of a national pre-season ranking, quit the team a year early and will sit out at Arkansas this year, and SPC's Top 3 opted against attending school in Levelland. ... Darryl Beasley, who played for Mayberry at Wayland Baptist, is SPC's new assistant.
Mayberry's Comments: "We have a big void. If we can survive this year, we'll be fortunate. We lost our best two players and our top three recruits. You just can't do that. A person doesn't have to be very smart to figure out that that'll affect a program a great deal."

Western Texas Westerners
Last Year: 14-15, 4-12 (7th)
Coach: Kelly Green
Key Returners: No returning sophomores, although Tracy Braziel and Chad Landrum, members off last year's team, did walk on and make the squad.
Green's Comments: "We have good quickness and athletic ability, but we're not very big, and we don't have good shooters. We'll have a hard time scoring. We don't have the offensive firepower they had here last year."

CHANGES: New coaches ready for basketball season

(From 1C)

the Region V tournament next March in Waco because they return the same coach as they had last season.

Midland, even with a first-year coach, has been picked to finish fourth.

"In a way it will be advantageous to the inexperienced teams because of all the changes," Green theorized. "Last year, there were three teams that could've won the national championship from this conference. It took a 15-1 record to tie for the conference. A 15-1 record this year will win it by four games.

"Then again, there might be more teams with a shot at it. Everybody's better or everybody's worse, depending on how you look at it.

"My personal opinion is that there's nobody this year as good as Howard or South Plains was last year. I don't think this year's conference champion would be able to beat last year's South Plains or Howard teams."

NMJC's Black has been in the conference longer than most any other coach. He was taken somewhat by surprise by the large number of changes and feels parity could be a key word because of the new faces in new places.

"It's amazing how this league changed," Black said. "I think it makes it that much tougher. The new coaches are ambitious, but I think the schools where coaches stayed put will have a definite advantage to start off with. By February, it won't make that much of a difference.

"I think the race is pretty wide open. There'll be a lot of teams that can slip into the top four and qualify. We could finish anywhere from first to last."

Mondragon, who's been associated with WJCAC basketball for 13 years, says the abundance of changes may make it seem like certain teams would have an advantage, but that's not necessarily so.

"You'd think it would give you an advantage because you've got to know this league to play in this league," he said. "I would think we would have an advantage there, but after the first two ball games, all the new kids on the teams are going to realize what level they need to play at and step up to it."

GREEN: Hoping to catch up

cess level of the two teams.

Q: How will your first team in Midland compare with your teams at Howard?

A: This team will be like my first team at Howard (that finished 20-13 overall three seasons ago). In every game we were learning. In the last two years at Howard, we were beyond the learning stage.

Q: Any problems that will be particularly difficult to solve?

A: The biggest obstacle I have to overcome is having 14 players I've never seen before. The players, right now, don't think like I do. It's not that they have bad attitudes, it's just we're not on the same page yet. They haven't learned yet what I'm trying to get across. But every program in the league with a new coach will be experiencing the same thing.

Q: With all the changes in the conference, what exactly will that mean to programs with new coaches, and to programs who have retained their coaches?

A: South Plains, Odessa, New Mexico Junior College, those places are a giant step ahead because they're not having to learn what their coach wants, they're just having to go out and do it.

New WJCAC coaching changes

Six teams in the Western Junior College Athletic Conference underwent coaching changes in the offseason. Following is a list of the coaches and changes:

School	New Coach	Former Coach
Midland College	Steve Green	Reggie Franklin
Frank Phillips	Matt Ellis	Kelly Green
Howard College	Jeff Kidder	Steve Green
New Mexico Military	Reggie Franklin	Carlisle Dean
Western Texas College	Kelly Green	Tony Mauldin

Celtics sign Green for season

BOSTON (AP) — Rickey Green, a 14-year NBA veteran, was signed for the remainder of the 1991-92 season by the Boston Celtics on Wednesday to fill in as a point guard while Brian Shaw and Dee Brown are sidelined with injuries.

Green, 37, a first-round draft pick by the Golden State Warriors in 1977, was signed to fill the 12th spot on the roster, an opening created Tuesday when Shaw joined Brown on the injured list.

The Celtics said that Green, recently released by Philadelphia, replaces unsigned Derek Smith for salary cap purposes. No salary, however, was announced.

Green, who wore No. 13 for his Boston debut against the Chicago Bulls, has averaged 8.5 points a game with the Warriors, the Detroit Pistons, the Utah Jazz, the Charlotte Hornets, the Indiana Pacers and Philadelphia 76ers.

Bagwell top NL rookie

Associated Press

Houston first baseman Jeff Bagwell, a non-roster invitee to spring training, was selected the National League Rookie of the Year on Wednesday.

Bagwell led NL rookies with a .294 average, 163 hits, 15 home runs, 26 doubles and 82 RBIs. He beat out Pittsburgh first baseman Orlando Merced in balloting by the Baseball Writers Association of America, receiving 23 of a possible 24 first-place votes and finishing with 118 points.

"I never thought I'd do that well," said Bagwell, who moved from Class AA to the major leagues. "I got lucky. I got a chance to play and that was the main thing. After you get the chance you've got to do well."

Bagwell set about doing well from spring training when he challenged Ken Caminiti for the third-base position. When Caminiti kept his job, Bagwell thought he was headed back to the minors.

"I thought I was going to Triple-A but (assistant GM) Bob Watson asked me if I wanted to play first base," Bagwell said. "My answer was obvious."

Although he'd been a third baseman throughout his minor-league career in the Boston organization, Bagwell adjusted to his new role quickly and improved his hitting after a slow start.

"He handles first base as well as anyone we've had over there," general manager Bill Wood said. "When we got Jeff we knew he was a top prospect and rated well offensively."

By the end of the season, he was getting rave reviews for his defense, too.

"I'd love to play first base the rest of my life," Bagwell said. "I'm not an ideal first baseman. I don't hit for much power and I'm small but I'll tell you, I love playing there."

Jeff Bagwell, left, first baseman of the Houston Astros, and Chuck Knoblauch, second baseman of the Minnesota Twins, congratulate each other after Bagwell was named National League Rookie of the Year Wednesday. Knoblauch was named American League Rookie of the Year Tuesday.

Merced, who hit .275 with 10 homers and 50 RBIs, recieved 53 points followed by outfielder Ray Lankford of St. Louis with 28. Atlanta first baseman Brian Hunter was fourth with seven points.

Bagwell's .294 average was second to Craig Biggio's team-leading .295 and his 163 hits were second to center fielder Steve Finley's 170. His 82 RBIs were a team high and he hit one of the longest home runs of the season.

On May 5 at Pittsburgh's Three Rivers Stadium, Bagwell hit a ball five rows deep into the upper deck in left field — an estimated 456 feet.

The Astros obtained Bagwell from the Red Sox on Aug. 31, 1990 for reliever Larry Andersen, who left Boston to sign as a free agent with San Diego. Bagwell played for Boston's Class AA team at New Britain in 1990 and earned Eastern League MVP honors.

Making the jump to the majors leagues caused Bagwell some early-season sleepless nights.

"I think I took it too seriously at the beginning of the year," Bagwell said. "That's natural because I was struggling. I knew I was better than what I was showing. I'd come home at night and sit around and wonder 'what am I doing here?'"

Success helped him relax.

"As the season went on, I realized you can't take everything so seriously," Bagwell said. "If I make an error or a stupid play at first base I just laugh at myself."

Twins 15th of 26 teams in payroll

NEW YORK (AP) — The World Series champion Minnesota Twins were 15th among the 26 teams in payroll in 1991 and the NL champion Atlanta Braves were 19th.

In another example of not getting what you pay for, the Oakland Athletics, who slumped to fourth in the AL West after three pennant-winning seasons, led the majors with a $39.2 million payroll. The Boston Red Sox were second at $36.6 million and the Los Angeles Dodgers were third at $35.6 million.

Houston dropped from the 11th-highest payroll in 1990 at $18.2 million to last at $12.5 million. The only other team whose payroll decreased was Cleveland, which fell from 19th place at $15.4 million to 25th at $13.4 million.

The figures, compiled by management's Player Relations Committee, were contained in documents distributed Wednesday to general managers during their meetings at Boca Raton, Fla. A copy was obtained by The Associated Press.

Minnesota's payroll rose from $14.2 million in 1990 to $23.6 million in 1991. The Twins had the 20th-highest payroll in 1990.

Atlanta, 19th in 1990 at $14.2 million, saw its payroll rise to $21.7 million.

The payroll figures include 1991 salaries, prorated shares of signing bonuses and earned performance bonuses, but do not include postseason award bonuses. The numbers include all players on Aug. 31 rosters and disabled lists and termination pay for released players.

Hostetler tired of bickering

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — Jeff Hostetler is sick of all the finger- pointing and the over-analysis of the woes of the New York Giants' offense and the team in general.

The embattled quarterback is also sick of the talk that he is playing on a team of quitters.

Hostetler said on Wednesday that he had no intention of throwing in the towel with seven games left in the regular season and invited anybody on the defending Super Bowl champions who didn't want to work hard to take a hike.

"If you want to put the blame on me, let's do it," a more defiant Hostetler said before practice for Sunday's game in Phoenix against the Cardinals. "But I am not going to sit here and quit. I am not a quitter. I don't plan on doing it. I don't plan on giving up and I don't feel there are any guys in this locker room who are going to give up."

Giving up has been a hot topic around the Giants' locker room since Lawrence Taylor accused the team of quitting in a 30-7 loss to the Philadelphia Eagles on Monday night.

Taylor accused the players and the entire coaching staff of quitting, but Hostetler downplayed the comments.

"I can see why he said those things," said Hostetler, who didn't finish the game because of a slightly sprained ankle. "It's a frustrating situation. You look around and I can't say everybody quit, but I know it felt like some of our guys did. Enough finger-pointing. It's time for everybody to turn around and look at what they did."

Hostetler said he is obviously not satisfied with his own performance this season and he is keenly aware of the calls for Phil Simms to replace him at quarterback.

Giants coach Ray Handley said Tuesday that isn't going to happen.

Still, the offense needs to improve and no one is more aware of that than Hostetler, who is ranked fifth in the NFC.

New York is averaging just 15.33 points per game and it has scored just two touchdowns in the last two games. The second halves of those games against Washington and Philadelphia were pathetic for the offense, which controlled the ball for just 16 of a possible 60 minutes. The 34 plays resulted in just seven points.

"Hey, we haven't been playing any high school teams out there the past two weeks," said Hostetler, who replaced Simms as the starter this season. "We have been playing some pretty good teams with great defenses. Sure, we'd like to have scored more and moved the ball better and had some better performances. So we have to come around."

or second," Pittman said.

"But the history of our team this year has been that we can play well enough to beat anyone or poor enough to lose to anyone.

"They have a major height advantage, but I'm not as concerned about that as I am our blocking defense. We had better play some great backcourt defense because they are a strong middle hitting team.

"They are starting three sophomores, though (Jesilyn Hatch, Mitchell and April Ridings). April Ridings is probably the strongest player of the three, but we hope we can take advantage of the other two," Pittman said.

"We tend to self destruct and make a lot of unforced errors. We are either awesome or awful. If we can be consistently awesome, we can stay with them."

In other bi-district play tonight, 4-5A champion Abilene High (23-3) takes on 3-5A runner-up Amarillo High (23-9) at 7 p.m. in Brownfield, making it a complete battle of AHS teams.

A&M, TCU think of bowls and jinxes while on TV

FORT WORTH (AP) — Bowls and jinxes will be on the minds of Texas A&M and Texas Christian when they meet tonight before a national audience offered by ESPN.

TCU will be trying to break a 19-year jinx when the 12th-ranked Aggies comes to Amon Carter Stadium attempting to protect their Southwest Conference lead.

The Horned Frogs haven't defeated the Aggies since Oct. 21, 1972, when they won 13-10 at College Station.

Even so, TCU (6-2 and 3-2) is enjoying its best season in eight years, while the Aggies (6-1 and 4-0) have lost only at Tulsa 35-34. It's the best start since 1986 for the Aggies, who start 13 freshmen or sophomores.

While two losses have virtually eliminated the Frogs from the Cotton Bowl chase, they are in the running for several other bowls, who find TCU's "Triple Shoot" wide-open passing attack entertaining.

The Aggies' Bucky Richardson, a fifth-year senior, is only 38 yards short of breaking the SWC quarterback rushing record of 1,974 yards set by Marty Akins of Texas in 1975.

"He's as good as any quarterback in America," TCU coach Jim Wacker said. "Bucky is as valuable to A&M as whoever wins the Heisman Trophy is to their team."

A&M freshman running back Greg Hill is 28 yards short of the SWC freshman rushing record set by Earl Campbell of Texas. Hill is 100 yards shy of becoming the first freshman in SWC history to rush for 1,000 yards.

The Aggies, the only unbeaten team in the SWC, are 14-point favorites.

Both coaches are worried about a short work week.

"It's tough getting ready in such a short period time, particularly when you're the team which has to do the traveling," A&M coach R.C. Slocum said.

"We're going to miss the rest time we need badly," Wacker said. "But if they are going to give us $650,000 to play the game, we'll play any night they want."

"I like being in this position," Slocum said, referring to the league standings. "But in less than a week we could be one of the teams with one loss. We have to stay focused."

The game will mark the return of TCU freshman quarterback Tim Schade, who suffered a minor separated shoulder three weeks ago. Schade will share time with Matt Vogler, who must wear a glove over his left hand, which was severely burned in a cooking accident.

Irish, Vols have bowls panting

By Rick Warner
AP Football Writer

NBC viewers and fans at Notre Dame Stadium won't be the only ones keeping a close eye on Saturday's game between the fifth-ranked Fighting Irish and No. 13 Tennessee.

Orange and Fiesta bowl officials also will be waiting anxiously for the outcome.

If Notre Dame beats Tennessee and then defeats Penn State the following week, the Fiesta would have a chance to get a national title game between Notre Dame and the Florida State-Miami winner on Nov. 16.

If the Irish lose one of those games, however, the Orange would probably match the Florida State-Miami winner against the Big Eight champ.

Saturday's game will feature two of the top offenses in the country.

Notre Dame is averaging 467 yards and 37 points per game, compared to Tennessee's 468 yards and 29 points. Notre Dame gains most of its yards on the ground (283 per game), while Tennessee does its mostly through the air (293 per game).

The top guns for Notre Dame are quarterback Rick Mirer and fullback Jerome Bettis. Mirer is the nation's third-rated passer with 1,558 yards and 17 touchdowns, while Bettis leads the team in rushing with 824 yards and is No. 3 nationally in scoring with 16 TDs.

Tennessee is led by quarterback Andy Kelly, who needs one more good game to become the school's career leader in completions, attempts, passing yards and TD passes. His favorite target is Carl Pickens, who leads the SEC in reception yards (702) and catches per game (5.4).

Neither team has a great defense, so this should be a high-scoring game. But the Fighting Irish, who are 6½-point favorites, will score a few more than the Vols. ... NOTRE DAME 34-27.

Arkansas linebacker Tyrone Chatman (47) puts the halt on Baylor running back Greg White on a scoring drive. Arkansas lost the game on Nov. 3 and need a win against Texas Tech Saturday.

Red Raiders trying for major rebound

LITTLE ROCK (AP) — Like any coach coming off a tough loss, Spike Dykes of Texas Tech is worried about resiliency.

"It's sort of hard to get up off the ground" after something like the Texas game, Dykes said Wednesday during a telephone hookup. "That's what always worries you about games of that magnitude."

Tech led Texas 3-0 and 12-7 but Texas won 23-15. At the end, the Raiders reached the Texas 13.

Despite the loss, Dykes said, the Raiders have a good attitude for Saturday's game against Arkansas in Lubbock, Texas.

The players, he said, "understand the value of getting prepared to play."

Arkansas is 4-1 in the Southwest Conference after last week's 9-5 loss to Baylor. The Razorbacks are 5-3 for the season and will be in line for a bowl bid if they win.

It is difficult to get a handle on Arkansas, Dykes said. The Razorbacks have played smart and the defense has given them the opportunity to win, he said. The offense has been good enough, he said.

"They haven't made many mistakes you lose games with," Dykes said. "It's one of those football teams that's really scary. The big key to us playing very well in the game is how we respond ... Anything short and it will be a bad old day at Black Rock."

Dykes was also asked to explain Arkansas' 15-1 record at Lubbock.

"I don't understand it for the life of me," he said.

Dykes is in his fifth year as Tech's head coach. Prior to that, he was an assistant at Tech for three years. One of the problems during those eight years, he said, was that Arkansas usually had a good football team.

"The time we had a good chance to beat them, we played horrible and they played great," he said.

That was in 1989 when the Razorbacks won 45-13. Arkansas went on to 10-2 and the SWC championship. Tech finished 9-3, including 5-3 in the league.

After a pause, Dykes also pointed out that Arkansas normally followed Texas A&M on Tech's schedule. Then he concluded: "I have no answer to the question, I don't know."

Fiesta Bowl willing to increase payout

PHOENIX (AP) — The Fiesta Bowl is willing to increase its payout to $3 million per school to attract the top-ranked team on New Year's Day, executive director John Junker said Wednesday.

"In the past, we paid $3 million per team for the championship, and it would be hard for us to imagine getting a championship for much less than that," Junker said.

Bowl bids will be announced Nov. 17, the day after No. 1 Florida State and No. 2 Miami play in Tallahassee. If both win this weekend, the Fiesta Bowl would try to invite the winner of their intrastate clash to face fifth-ranked Notre Dame.

The Orange Bowl, which pays $4.2 million per team, also is interested in luring the Florida State-Miami winner for a possible national title game against the Big Eight champ.

Without a championship game, the Fiesta would pay each team between $2 million and $2.3 million. But Junker said the payout could be increased to $3 million in order to get a title matchup.

Junker said the additional money would come from advertising revenue, which would be higher for a championship game because it would be watched by a larger audience.

But NBC, which televises the game, emphasized that the money would not come directly from the network.

"NBC enthusiastically supports the Fiesta Bowl's efforts to attract the national championship game, but cannot and will not pursue that sort of contest in a fiscally irresponsible manner," the network said.

Junker said his bowl hopes to get a title sponsor to replace Sunkist Growers Inc., which dropped its sponsorship in February.

"We would like to get it done, but we're not forced to do so because we have a good, strong base on ticket sales and with NBC," he said.

NFLPA doesn't expect owners' offer to be taken

NEW YORK (AP) — An official of the NFL Players Association said Wednesday that he doesn't expect the owners' latest contract offer to be accepted.

The settlement offer, which contains some free agency provisions, was made recently to lawyers representing players who have filed antitrust suits seeking free agency against the league.

"I fully expect the case to go to trial without a settlement," said Doug Allen, the NFLPA's assistant executive director. The union has renounced collective bargaining rights for the players but still keeps in contact with the lawyers and players involved in the lawsuits.

The latest proposal would institute a plan similar to the NBA's, including a salary cap, a rookie pay scale, unrestricted free agency for some players after six years and restricted free agency for others after three years. The six-year free agency would be granted to any player who isn't offered a salary of more than $1 million after that time.

Because of the pending lawsuits, the offer has been presented as a negotiating tool to James Quinn, the chief lawyer for the players. Quinn has confirmed a meeting, but has declined further comment.

Last week commissioner Paul Tagliabue met with a group of owners in Denver and discussed the proposal. NFL spokesman Joe Browne said the meeting was one of several Tagliabue has had with owners and said the labor proposal was "only one of several important issues discussed."

Allen said he believed that any settlement would also have to include damages to free agents from 1989, 1990 and 1991 who didn't get offers from other teams.

"We feel there are damages involved that go beyond what's in the settlement," he said. "That would also have to be resolved."

Few players think there is much interest in playing partscore contracts. Quite the opposite is true—they can produce as much or more fascination than a grand slam. Note East's clever defense on this lowly one-no-trump hand.

With the opposition strength divided almost evenly, South got to play the hand at one no trump. It's a good thing that East decided not to balance, because any contract East-West essayed could be defeated at least two tricks with routine defense.

West led a low spade, and East made the expert play of inserting the queen. Declarer won the king, led a club to the queen and continued with a low club. When East produced the seven, declarer finessed the ten, fetching the ace. West continued with the two of spades.

East rose with the ace and we would venture that most of the defenders we know would have continued with a spade. That would have left declarer with an easy seven tricks—three in hearts and clubs and the spade trick already in the bank.

A quick count convinced East that, left alone, declarer would surely fulfill the contract. So East decided to base the defense on the possibility that West held the ace of diamonds. Therefore, East shifted to a low diamond, putting declarer to an immediate guess.

The contract was on the line, and declarer had nothing to go by. After much thought, declarer concluded it was more likely East would lead away from the ace than the queen with the jack-ten visible in dummy (both defenders had already shown up with an ace) and rose with the king. West decapitated the monarch, cashed out the spades and then switched back to a diamond. East's queen netted the defenders seven tricks in all for a one-trick set.

Dionne Warwick, others plan concert for African children

NEW YORK — Dionne Warwick, Rita Marley and other performers will join Miriam Makeba at a concert in Nigeria next month to raise money for the children of Africa, organizers said Wednesday.

Ms. Makeba and Winnie Mandela appealed for sponsors for the concert at a news conference in New York where the list of performers was released.

"We are here to put the final injection to this tremendous effort that has been undertaken," said Mrs. Mandela, wife of Nelson Mandela, head of the African National Congress.

Other entertainers at the three-day concert in Lagos on Nov. 28, 29 and 30 will include Kool & the Gang, the Commodores, Barry White, Frankie Beverly and Maze, Freddie Jackson, Melba Moore, Color Me Badd, The Boys and Chubb Rock and Third World.

African performers expected include Fela, King Sunny Ade, Ladysmith Black Mambazo and Hugh Masekela.

The concert, Ms. Makeba's brainchild, will be held along with a conference bringing together scholars, United Nations officials, doctors, politicians and others concerned about the welfare of African children.

Concert organizer Tiahmo Rauf said a cable company is being sought for a pay-per-view deal. He said organizers hope the concert will raise "trillions" to improve the health, education and welfare of African children.

"We are appealing to our friends to help make this a reality," Ms. Makeba said.

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina — Evangelist Billy Graham arrived here Wednesday to prepare for crusades and high-level visits next week.

Graham

Appearances at the 78,000-seat River Plate soccer stadium could draw a combined audience of more than 300,000. Several million more are expected to watch broadcasts that will be transmitted to 20 countries in Latin America and the Caribbean.

Graham was scheduled to meet with President Carlos Menem on Monday. The soccer stadium crusades were set for Thursday through Sunday.

The 72-year-old evangelist was invited by 2,000 of Argentina's evangelical churches.

TULSA, Okla. — The success of Operation Desert Storm was due mainly to organization and leadership, says one of the men who led the troops, retired Gen. H. Norman Schwarzkopf.

Schwarzkopf told the 2,500 people attending the Tulsa Business Forum that business leaders need to set clear objectives, high standards and learn from mistakes, and he referred to the Persian Gulf War in every instance.

But when asked what he considered the main problem in America, Schwarzkopf forcefully said, "Ethics."

"People talk about a leadership crisis," he said. "It's never a competence problem. It's an ethical, moral crisis. It's a problem of character."

Schwarzkopf, who retired in August, told humorous anecdotes of the celebrity status he gained — but says he doesn't deserve — from his nine months in the Persian Gulf.

SAN FRANCISCO — Pop music star George Michael is donating part of the proceeds from his upcoming single to charities including two San Francisco AIDS agencies.

Michael

The single, "Don't Let the Sun Go Down on Me," is a remake of the classic song originally recorded by Elton John.

The San Francisco AIDS Foundation and Project Open Hand will receive part of the royalties.

"We are extremely appreciative of Mr. Michael's donation to help in the cause of fighting AIDS," Pat Christen of the AIDS Foundation and Steve Burns of Project Open Hand said a statement.

The AIDS Foundation focuses on education, case management and advocacy issues surrounding AIDS. Project Open Hand delivers free hot meals and groceries to more than 2,000 people with AIDS in the San Francisco Bay area.

Michael also is donating proceeds to the Los Angeles Children's Museum, the Boys and Girls Club of Chicago, the United Negro College Fund, the Jimmy Fund in Boston and the Hospital for Sick Children in Toronto.

NEW YORK — Paul Simon, who recorded tracks for his Grammy-winning "Graceland" album in South Africa, is returning there with his current band for five shows in January.

Simon's 17-piece band — which includes five native South Africans — will play Capetown on Jan. 11. Four other shows will follow in different cities around South Africa.

Simon was invited to play by the South African Musicians Union.

Mavericks can't lose all of them

NBA Roundup

Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS — Rolando Blackman, whose status was in doubt after spraining his right hand, scored 10 points of his 22 points in the first 10 minutes, leading Dallas to its first victory of the season, 97-94 over Minnesota on Wednesday night.

Blackman, who averaged 22.4 points against the Timberwolves last season, helped the Mavericks win for the first time in four outings this season. They beat Minnesota for only the second time in six games.

The Timberwolves, 0-2 under new coach Jimmy Rodgers, got 14 points from reserve Doug West, including 12 in the second half.

Derek Harper led Dallas with 26 points. Terry Davis added 16 points and 14 rebounds, while Rodney McCray scored 19 points.

Spurs 119, Trail Blazers 93

SAN ANTONIO — Sean Elliott scored 28 points and David Robinson 25 as San Antonio routed Portland, extending the Trail Blazers' losing streak to three games.

Kevin Duckworth paced the cold-shooting Trail Blazers with 20 points, while Clyde Drexler scored 17. Portland made only 38 percent of its shots for the game and was outscored 36-19 in the fourth quarter.

All four of San Antonio's opponents have been held under 100 points this season.

Bulls 132, Celtics 113

BOSTON — Michael Jordan scored 44 points in a shooting spree from inside and outside and corner to corner as Chicago romped over Boston.

Going over the 40-point mark for the third consecutive game, Jordan scored only eight points as Boston charged to a 38-29 lead. However, he was just warming up.

Jordan hit for 18 points as the Bulls outscored the Celtics 34-20 in the second period for a 63-58 halftime advantage, then added 15 in the third period as Chicago broke the game open. He added just a 3-pointer in limited action in the fourth quarter.

B.J. Armstrong had 22 points and Scottie Pippen 19 as the Bulls snapped a two-game losing slump and spoiled the Celtics' 500th consecutive sellout at Boston Garden since Dec. 23, 1980.

The victory enabled Chicago's defending NBA champions to even their record 2-2. Boston was left with the same record after its first home defeat.

Bird topped Boston scorers with 30 points. Reggie Lewis had 21, rookie Rick Fox 15 and Robert Parish 14.

Hornets 114, Hawks 104

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Kendall Gill scored 30 points and Muggsy Bogues hit two key baskets as Charlotte Hornets won for the first time in four games.

The Hawks chipped away at an 87-72 deficit and tied the score 93-93 on Rodney Monroe's 10-footer with 9:36 left. Rumeal Robinson gave the Hawks their only lead at 94-93 by hitting the second of two free throws with 8:24 to go.

Bogues gave the lead back to Charlotte with an 18-foot jumper with 8:08 remaining. Atlanta trailed 97-96 following two free throws by Dominique Wilkins before Bogues scored from the top of the key, starting a 7-0 run.

Gill then sealed the victory with 11 points in the final three minutes.

Wilkins scored 21 points despite hitting just five of 18 shots for Atlanta. Kevin Willis had 19 points and 11 rebounds and Stacey Augmon 17 points for the Hawks.

Magic 105, Bullets 88

ORLANDO, Fla. — Terry Catledge had 24 points and 14 rebounds as Orlando remained unbeaten.

The Magic, who never trailed while improving their record to 3-0, once again used a big third quarter to take control. Orlando outscored the Bullets 33-13 in the period to extend a seven-point halftime advantage into a 27-point rout heading into the fourth quarter.

In its three victories, Orlando has outscored its opponents 108-63 in the third period.

76ers 107, Nets 105

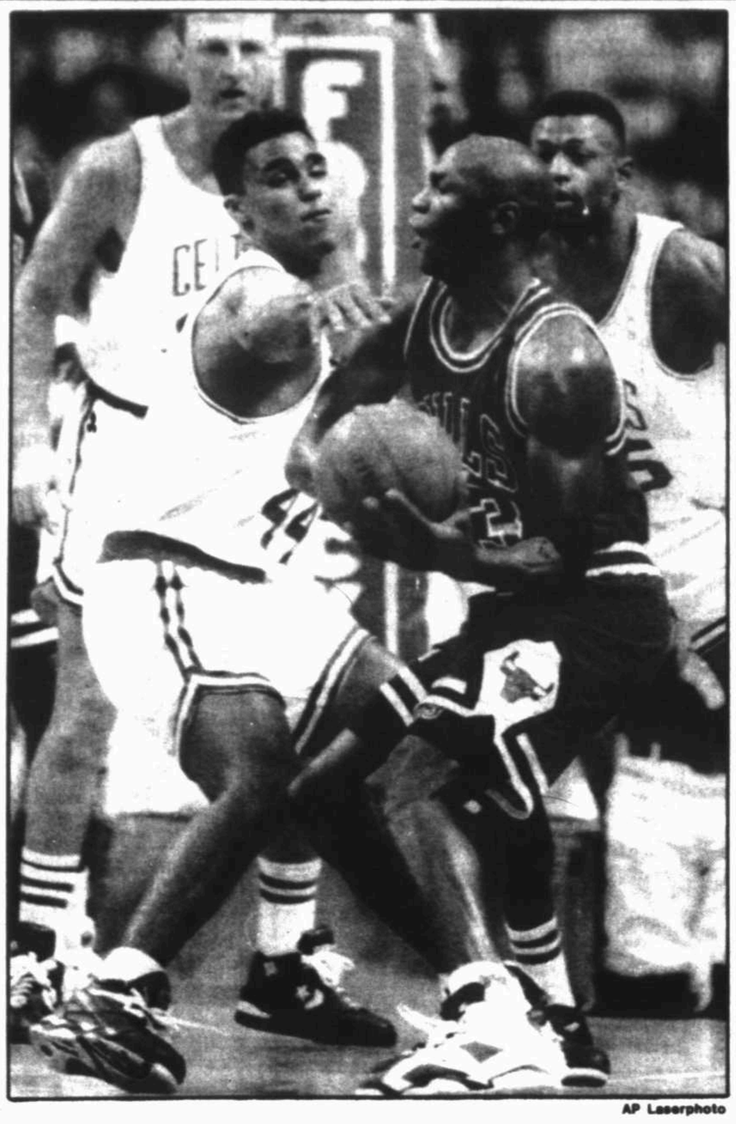

PHILADELPHIA — Charles Barkley had 25 points and 22 rebounds and scored Philadelphia's last four points in the final 17 seconds.

The Nets took a 104-101 lead on a jumper by Chris Morris with 1:04 to go, but Armon Gilliam hit a jump shot for Philadelphia with 51 seconds left and Barkley scored on a layup with 17 seconds remaining. Barkley added two free throws with 2.9 seconds to go for a 107-104 edge.

Warriors 120, Bucks 114

MILWAUKEE — Chris Mullin scored 32 points as Golden State produced its first 4-0 start since moving to the West Coast 30 years ago.

Mullin scored 10 in the final quarter for the Warriors, who have three road victories, including the Bulls in Chicago on Tuesday night.

Staff Report

The Midland Soccer Association has closed entries for its Turkey Shootout soccer tournament, which will be held Nov. 16-17.

MSA, which has 150 teams, ranging from Under-6 to Under-19, totaling 1,700 girls and boys, expects some 109 teams from Texas and New Mexico to participate.

"This year's tournament comprises the largest field of entries to date," said Bill Tiner, MSA commissioner and tournament chairman. "The competition is perhaps the best ever for our Midland teams, particularly with teams from Hobbs, Lubbock, Amarillo, San Angelo and Dallas coming to Midland to play."

The tournament is een as an opportunity for Midland soccer teams to demonstrate their skills in competition with players from other associations.

"Equally as important is the opportunity to showcase the parks and facilities we have helped to develop with the City of Midland Parks and Recreation Department," said Al Weinkauf, MSA president. "These soccer facilities are among the best in the state.

"The competition offered by the tournament and the soccer fields are things we, as Midlanders, can be especially proud of."

MSA plans to use soccer fields and facilities located all over the city for the tournament. This field includes fields located at Bluebird, Windlands, Hogan and Dunagan parks. There is no admission for games.

Weinkauf estimates that the initial financial impact of the tournament to the city's business at $500,000 in additional revenue.

"All the hotels and lodging in Midland have been booked for a number of weeks," Weinkauf says. "We are pleased that the Turkey Shootout will give back to Midland these types of revenues. Midland businesses have always been especially supportive of soccer for our children, and this is one way we say thanks for the continued support."

King lands golf honors

Staff Report

Midland Lee junior Paula King and Plainview's Shawn Savage have been named recipents of first titlist player of the year awards by the Northern Texas PGA Junior Golf Foundation.

King, 17, earned her title by winning the Wilson Tournament of Champions in August at the Chase Oaks Golf Club in Plano. In addition, she won the West Texas Junior Tournament of Champions and four of the six weekly tournaments she entered.

Awards given out on Feb. 9 at NTPGA President's dinner in Dallas.

King also finished as the runner-up in the Midland Women's City golf championship this summer. Last spring, as a sophomore at Lee, she was the District 4-5A runner-up, earning a Region I berth.

She was inducted into the National Honor Society Tuesday at Lee.

South Africa back in Games

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — South Africa, barred from the Olympics for more than three decades, will return to the Games next year with its first racially integrated squad.

"We are now going with a non-racial team," Sam Ramsamy, chairman of the National Olympic Committee, said of the decision to attend the 1992 Barcelona Olympics.

South Africa's last Olympic appearance was at the 1960 Summer Games in Rome, when the team was all-white because of the government's apartheid policies. Next year's team is certain to feature black distance runners and boxers, and blacks may represent other sports as well.

"This is the first time we can say that South Africa is taking part in the Olympic Games," Ramsamy said at a news conference. "For the first time we can get a team that will have the support of all of South Africa."

Despite its long absence from international competition, South Africa could field medal contenders in track and field, boxing, yachting and several other sports.

For years, Ramsamy led the international sports boycott against South Africa to protest apartheid. But he said he supported a return to the Olympics following President F.W. de Klerk's reforms and his pledge to end racial discrimination.

Most anti-apartheid groups, including the African National Congress, also dropped their opposition to international sporting ties with South Africa. Ramsamy praised ANC leader Nelson Mandela for supporting South Africa's return to the Olympics.

Whites in this sports-mad country are particularly eager to see their athletes compete abroad. From their perspective, the sports boycott has been one of the most painful sanctions to endure.

All major sports have been integrated at the top level, but some governing bodies are still in the process of racial unification.

For example, track and field meets have been integrated for years, but the separate governing bodies for whites, blacks and mixed-race athletes are still trying to settle their differences.

Bastrop loses eligibility appeal to TEA

AUSTIN (AP) — Bastrop, ranked No. 2 in Class 4A football but facing elimination in district as a result of an ineligibility ruling that caused it to forfeit two games, lost its appeal Wednesday to the Texas Education Agency.

Tom Anderson Jr., deputy TEA commissioner, rejected the evidence did not support the school's position, agency spokesman Joey Lozano said.

The ruling means that to qualify for the playoffs, Bastrop must win Friday's game against New Braunfels Canyon and needs for Lockhart to beat Clemens and Hays to beat Smithson Valley.

Bastrop spent most of this season ranked No. 1 in The Associated Press Schoolboy Poll, but dropped to No. 2 this week after the forfeitures.

After a two-day investigation, the TEA last week ruled that a Bastrop player was academically ineligible. Officials said the boy had failed an algebra class during the first six-weeks grading period, but was later given a passing grade.

Under the state's no-pass, no-play law, any student who fails to make a grade of at least 70 in a class is ineligible for all extracurricular activities for the following six weeks.

After the TEA ruling, the District 26-4A executive committee voted to strip Bastrop of district victories over Lockhart and Hays since the player was used in the games.

The forfeits were the first losses for Bastrop and jeopardized its playoff chances.

"The issue to be decided today is quite simple — the question is whether the district had a grading policy consistent with the laws of this state," said TEA attorney Terry Johnson.

"Under the law of this state, a student who has a grade lower than 70 at the end of the first six weeks is ineligible."

Johnson said the evidence would show that student, who was not named, had a grade lower than 70 at the end of the first six weeks in Algebra II, "based in part on the fact that he was caught cheating."

On a retest, he said, the student made a 30.

Another TEA spokesman said the student earned a grade of 50 in algebra.

"But the district, nevertheless, transferred him to another class with a grade of 70, thereby giving him a passing grade in a class whose door he never darkened," Johnson said.

Bastrop school officials contend that teachers should be allowed to assign grades at their discretion.

CART reaches impasse

Associated Press

The future of Championship Auto Racing Teams, the main sanctioning body of Indy-car racing, remained up in the air after a board of directors meeting Wednesday in Houston.

As expected, Tony George, president of the Indianapolis Motor Speedway, went before the 22-man board and outlined a plan that would reorganize the leadership of CART, naming a commissioner and streamlining the board of directors to about five or six members. That group would include George, a representative of series sponsor PPG Industries and several team owners.

The current board members spent nearly three hours discussing the proposal before adjourning with no official action. A source close the discussions told The Associated Press that CART chairman William A. Stokkan was authorized by unanimous vote of the board to act as its agent in continuing the discussions with George and other speedway officials.

George, weariness and disappointment evident in his voice and manner, said, "We made a proposal to the owners today that for all intents and purposes was rejected. Right now, we're considering getting together and establishing what are the issues right now and what direction we go from here.

"Quite frankly, we're disappointed. It was a comprehensive proposal with a lot of merit. ... We are all looking to make sure the sport is represented the best way possible so that we can take it to the next level, which is something we are all striving for. ... We shall see what the next few days bring. It's important that this process keep moving, that it not lay dormant.

"I'm trying to be optimistic," George added. "I can't deny that I am disappointed, but we're open to discuss this and, right now, negotiations are still open.

"I think we made a good, solid attempt to get this thing off on the right foot ... we'll see. Obviously, there are a lot of issues here important to the owners and they have much to consider."

Stokkan was more upbeat.

"I'm being very careful, but the proposal has been quite well received by the owners," he said. "As always happens in situations like this, there is some clarification that needs to be brought to the table."

Stokkan didn't want to get into specifics, saying, "We think it is counterproductive to keep up a dialogue in the press.

"We came a long way today, but we didn't make it all the way to home base. But all of (the owners) are grateful we have gotten to this process with both organizations in the same room talking about this process. There is an enormous amount of new material and a good start. Now it is up to our side to get back to the speedway with some modifications to the plan as we see it."

The source, who asked to remain anonymous, said negotiations between Stokkan and George should resume within the week and that another meeting between the CART board and the speedway's representatives is expected to take place "probably in weeks rather than months."

The biggest stumbling blocks appear to be the speedway's position in this matter and how much power it would wield, as well as the role of a commissioner and where that would leave Stokkan.

The speedway still runs by far the biggest race in the series — and also the only one not sanctioned by CART. The Indianapolis 500 remains under the sanctioning umbrella of the U.S. Auto Club.

Fed's effectiveness questionable

Central bank has task of building nation's economic recovery

By John Cunniff
Associated Press writer

NEW YORK — The task of building a recovery from the recession that began in the summer of 1990 has fallen almost entirely to the Federal Reserve, but the central bank may not be equal to the job.

Five times in less than a year, the Fed has lowered its basic lending rate to banks in hopes of spurring more loan activity and stimulating the economy.

The latest move came Wednesday, when the Fed dropped its discount rate to 4.5 percent from 5 percent. The rate, at which the central bank lends to member banks of the Federal Reserve System, is the lowest since 1973.

But the effect has been limited. Manufacturing picked up earlier in the year, but the pace has slowed again recently. Burdened by debts and job insecurity, consumers have been reluctant to spend, and weak retail sales have forced producers to cut output.

■ An Analysis

While banks responded by dropping some lending rates, they have been cautious lenders at best, concerned about non-payment of existing loans and their shaky balance sheets.

Many reasons are offered for the economic gridlock. Some, including the White House, claim banks have been hamstrung by tighter government regulations imposed in response to the savings and loan crisis.

The root causes for the Fed's relative ineffectiveness may be more fundamental.

Competition from non-bank financial entities may have lessened the Fed's economic influence, since its powers are limited mainly to banks. Moreover, with a growing number of people relying on interest income, lower rates reduce rather than expand their buying power.

The most noticeable impact of the Fed's moves has been on home mortgage rates. The national average rate for 30-year fixed-rate loans, more than 10 percent a year ago, is less than than 9 percent now. A one-year adjustable rate mortgage that cost more than 8 percent last year is now well under 7 percent.

In effect, many households have received a pay raise, often amounting to more than $100 a month, but rather than spend they have been paying old bills instead.

Experiencing a deep slump, automotive companies with financing arms have offered their own below-market rates to little avail, and so aren't likely to benefit from the latest Fed move. Neither are bank credit card users.

Amid consumer criticism, most credit-card rates have remained stuck at what once might have been considered usurious levels, and some have actually risen despite the Fed's strategy.

Prices drop

NEW YORK — Oil prices fell sharply Wednesday amid perceptions that supplies are adequate for the time being.

West Texas Intermediate for delivery in December settled at $23.40 per barrel, down 38 cents, at the New York Mercantile Exchange.

Prices had run up recently as storms in the North Sea delayed tanker shipments, but calmer seas were prompting traders in Europe to sell oil futures. The pattern spilled over into New York.

In addition, prices for the refined petroleum products were falling because home heating oil supplies are high, thanks to a relative lack of cold weather this fall. Even though gasoline supplies are at their lowest level in months, demand seems to finally be tapering off.

Dollar mixed

NEW YORK — The dollar was mixed against other major currencies Wednesday after the Federal Reserve lowered its discount rate.

The dollar closed at 1.6370 marks in New York, down from 1.6385 late Tuesday.

The dollar also fell against the Japanese yen in New York, slipping to 129.90 yen from 130.025 late Tuesday.

The British pound gained against the dollar. Sterling rose to $1.7750 in New York from $1.7725 late Tuesday.

Salomon shakeup

NEW YORK — The longtime head of Salomon Brothers Inc.'s equity department resigned as part of a management shakeup at the scandal-wracked investment firm.

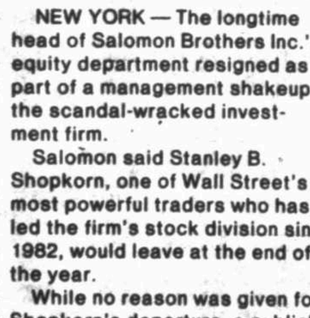

Salomon said Stanley B. Shopkorn, one of Wall Street's most powerful traders who has led the firm's stock division since 1982, would leave at the end of the year.

While no reason was given for Shopkorn's departure, a published report said he was to be excluded from the new executive committee appointed by Salomon's chief operating officer, Deryck C. Maughan.

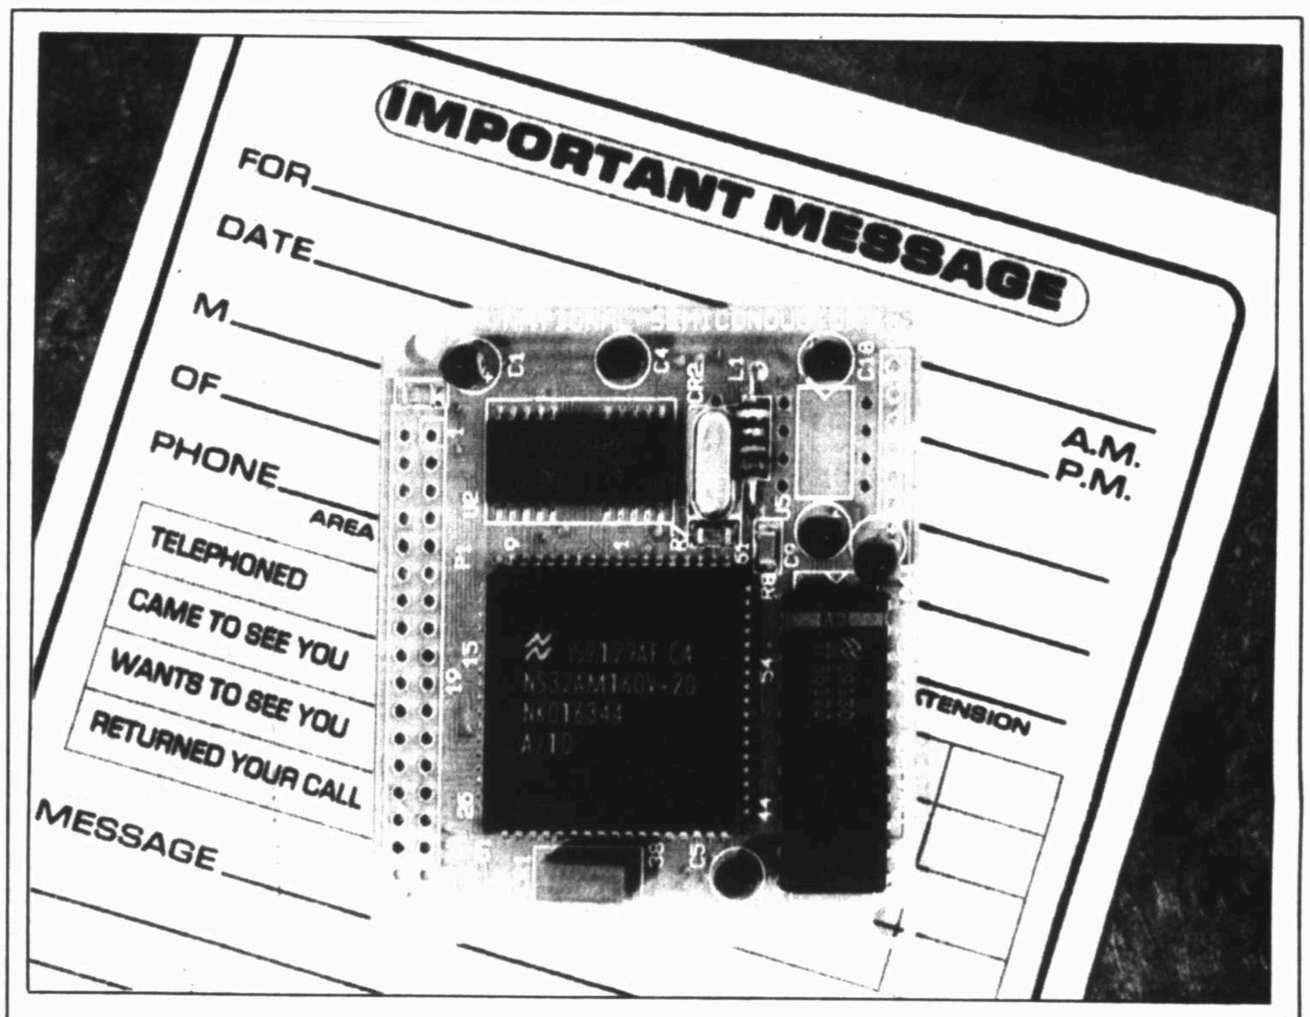

Takeover fails

LOS ANGELES — A takeover bid for Executive Life Insurance Co. by a group of state insurance guaranty funds fell short of state requirements, California Insurance Commissioner John Garamendi announced.

The rejection Wednesday resurrected the question of who will buy the insurer, which collapsed under risky junk bond investments and focused nationwide attention on financial vulnerabilities in the insurance industry.

Midlander new head of NARO

By John Paul Pitts
Business/Oil Editor

A Midland royalty trust manager has assumed the chairmanship of the National Association of Royalty Owners.

Grier Brunson, who has served as president of NARO-Texas, which numbers over 1,400 members became chairman of the 5,000 member organization at the group's annual meeting in Dallas this week, according to NARO President Jim Stafford.

Brunson succeeds Mary Badgett, a Lubbock CPA who has headed the organization for the past two years. Brunson also received an award as "Outstanding Member for 1991" for his work in establishing a fair-play bill for divison orders.

Rep. Tom Craddick of Midland was honored as Outstanding State Legislator for the nation in working for independent producer and royalty owner fairness. Other Midlanders who were honored included: John Paul Pitts, editor of the Reporter Telegram, who was awarded a Freedom Bell award for outstanding energy coverage, and Harry Spannaus, who was also awarded a Freedom Bell for his column in the Reporter-Telegram Oil Report.

Denise Bode, president of Independent Petroleum Association of America was the featured speaker for the convention. She told the gathering that the oil industry suffered from a bad image that was distorting public opinion and disrupting reasonalble Congressional solutions.

Senate committee rejects banking regulator nomination

WASHINGTON (AP) — On a party-line vote of 12-9, the Senate Banking Committee on Wednesday rejected the nomination of Robert L. Clarke for a second term as the Treasury Department's top banking regulator.

Republicans said Clarke had fallen victim to a "kangaroo court" and the "personal vendetta" of Sen. Donald W. Riegle Jr., D-Mich. Riegle, meanwhile, assailed Clarke's policies as "disastrous" for the nation.

Riegle and other Democrats blamed Clarke, the comptroller of the currency since December 1985, for contributing to the wave of bank failures that has nearly bankrupted the government's deposit insurance fund. Republicans said he was being made a scapegoat for events beyond his control.

"This is crass politics and partisanship at its worst," said Treasury Secretary Nicholas F. Brady. "It is the time-honored duty of the Senate to advise and consent. It is another thing to engage in character assassination and persecution."

Despite the rejection, Clarke under the law can remain in the position until a replacement is found. He did not return telephone calls.

Levelland's Lynco Services to end its drilling operations

Staff Report

Lynco Services Inc. of Levelland announced Wednesday that it would terminate its contract drilling operations in the Permian Basin.

R.W. "Bob" True, operations coordinator for Lynco, said the company, which at one time had nine rigs running, would bring all of its 11 rigs to the yard for disposal at a later date.

Don Roberts, president of Lynco, said he regretted having to terminate the business, but could not continue due to depressed drilling activity. He also cited environmental containment, increased equipment replacement costs, and excessive workman's compensation insurance as other factors that led to the termination decision.

Roberts thanked all of the customers who had given him an opportunity to work for them in past years.

Lynco has been in the contract drilling business in the Permian Basin for approximately 11 years.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Rules regulate withdrawal of IRA funds

By Bill Doyle

Q. The five certificates of deposit I have in my individual retirement account are about seven years old and pay much higher interest than is currently available on new CDs.

Doyle

I will reach age 70½ next year and will have to start counting some portion of my IRA CDs as taxable income. Will I have to actually cash in the CDs and lose the high interest rate? Or can I just report part of a CD as income and pay income tax on it, without actually cashing it?

A. Don't do either. Things aren't as complicated as you evidently believe.

After you pass age 70½, you are required to make withdrawals from your IRA at a rate based on your life expectancy or the joint life expectancy of you and your IRA beneficiary. The first withdrawal must be made by April 1 following the year in which you turn 70½.

Rather than cash an entire CD, you can simply take out enough of the accumulated interest to meet a withdrawal requirement. That way, the original principal of each CD and the accumulated interest not yet withdrawn will continue to earn more interest.

Your thought about paying income tax on money not actually withdrawn from an IRA is way off base. Internal Revenue Service literature stresses, "You cannot keep funds in an IRA indefinitely. Eventually, you must withdraw them." If you don't make the required withdrawals, you're slapped with a horrendous penalty tax, equal to 50 percent of the amount you should have withdrawn.

Q. I have 10 CDs in my IRA, each acquired at a different time. Some pay high interest; some pay low interest. When I pass age 70½ and am forced to begin making IRA withdrawals, will I have to take equal amounts of money from all my CDs?

A. No. You will be allowed make to the withdrawal from any one or more of the CDs you pick.

The smart move, of course, is to take money out of your lowest-interest CD first and leave your highest-interest intact until last. Following this pattern, your money will earn more interest for you.

Q. You wrote, "An IRA participant can make annual contributions only until the year in which he or she reaches age 70½." I believe this statement to be incorrect.

While a person must start withdrawing from his IRA by April 1 of the year following the date on which he turns 70 1/2, there is nothing in the law which disallows him from making an IRA contribution — providing, of course, he has earned income.

A. The column you dispute was correct. You are wrong.

Internal Revenue Service Publication 590, "Individual Retirement Arrangements (IRAs)," spells this out with the following words.

"You can set up and make contributions to an IRA if you received taxable compensation during the year and have not reached age 70½ by the end of the year."

You might be confused by the fact that self-employed people with Keogh retirement plans are permitted to make annual tax-deferred contributions, regardless of their ages. The same thing applies to some other types of retirement plans. But it does not hold true for IRAs.

Q. My IRA at a bank has grown to more than $17,000. I would very much like to invest some of this money in the stock market. How can this be done and still have it in an IRA?

A. You can do it by opening a "self-directed" IRA, in which stocks and other securities can be held, at a securities brokerage firm.

Through the brokerage, you can arrange for a "trustee-to-trustee" transfer of your IRA from the bank to the brokerage.

FED: Bank hopes lowering lending rate spurs economy

(From 9C)

To a great extent, credit for small businesses remains tight, and venture capital for new enterprises has all but dried up in some areas. However, issues of new securities, debt and equity, have benefited.

Stock investments, in fact, have been a notable beneficiary of Fed actions, with popular market averages moving far above levels justified by corporate profits. Eventually if not now, it is reasoned, low rates mean higher profits.

Still, something is missing. Textbooks teach that there are two basic ways to affect the course of the economy: monetary policy, under the Fed's purview, and fiscal policy, under the direction of Congress and the president.

The White House, however, has been reluctant to employ the fiscal side of the equation by either greater spending or tax cuts, concerned that either one would worsen budget deficits and perhaps lead to renewed inflation.

But with the Fed's impact muted and with an election year coming up, the pressure on elected officials . . . may grow.

White House moves to date mainly have involved jawboning the Fed and the banks to ease credit. But with the Fed's impact muted and with an election year coming up, the pressure on elected official to take fiscal action may grow.

Surveys suggest that many people perceive their own household budgets to be in worse shape than Washington realizes. While some economists view the 6.8 percent jobless rate as acceptable, those affected view it more darkly.

It is unlikely that the Fed's efforts alone will get them back to work quickly. Budget deficits or not, it could take tax cuts and spending programs, too.

With an election year coming up, discontented Americans may be inclined to view their economic plight in a political context.

BANK: Lawmaker says panel rejection 'personal vendetta'

(From 9C)

Industry lobbyists are speculating that the administration will try to persuade Congress to use pending banking legislation to merge the comptroller's office with another Treasury bureau, the Office of Thrift Supervision.

President Bush then could nominate the director of the thrift office, Timothy Ryan, to run the combined agencies.

Clarke's office regulates nearly 4,000 nationally chartered banks, holding roughly 60 percent of the industry's assets. They include most of the nation's largest and most prominent banks.

In an emotionally charged, two-hour debate, Sen. Jake Garn of Utah, the panel's senior Republican, said Riegle had not given Clarke a fair chance to defend himself. Garn called the proceedings a "kangaroo court."

GOP members hinted Riegle was retaliating for Republican attacks on him concerning his efforts to help Lincoln Savings and Loan boss Charles Keating Jr. — efforts the Senate Ethics Committee has said "created the appearance of being improper."

"This is a personal vendetta. This chairman intends to get Comptroller Clarke because he wants a scapegoat," said Sen. Pete Domenici, R-N.M.

"Some of you don't need scapegoats," he said, gesturing toward Democrats. "Maybe the chairman does."

Riegle faulted Clarke for loosening standards on commercial real estate lending and cutting back on bank examinations, particularly of smaller banks.

"Mr. Clarke's deregulatory policies and inclination toward forbearance have had disastrous consequences. . . . The losses . . . that occurred on his watch are unprecedented . . . necessitating the $70 billion taxpayer loan now pending before Congress," Riegle said.

Republicans, however, said Clarke did a good job under difficult circumstances and should not be blamed for the collapse of oil prices that destroyed the Texas real estate market and economy.

Other Democrats blamed Clarke for reversing course from lax regulation to an overly tough policy that has caused a shortage of credit, stifling the economy, particularly in New England.

"When it comes to down to doing anything on this issue all we get is polite conversation," said Sen. Christopher Dodd, D-Conn. "We're suffering miserably."

Doctor turns Civil War collection into soldiers museum

By Bill Kaczor
Associated Press writer

PENSACOLA, Fla. — As a child, Norman Haines would wander through the Antietam battlefield near his home in Maryland, sometimes picking up bullets, rusted bayonets or other Civil War artifacts.

The Pensacola physician later received his first serious collectible item, a Confederate musket, as a present on his 14th birthday.

"From that point on I was hooked," Haines, 45, said. "I just started more reading, more studying."

And more collecting.

His Civil War collection eventually outgrew his home and most of it was put in storage until this year. Inspired by an advance copy of Ken Burns' Public Broadcasting System series on the Civil War, Haines bought and refurbished a building in downtown Pensacola to display his artifacts.

In late August, he opened the Civil War Soldiers Museum. Its focus, as the name implies, is on soldiers. Haines himself is a direct descendant of five Union veterans.

"I wanted to emphasize that we were not glorifying war," Haines said. "What I am interested in is how the soldier lived and died in that period of time. We wanted to emphasize that it's a soldiers museum, not a war museum, not a Northern museum, not a Confederate museum."

Haines hopes entry fees of $3 for adults and $1.50 for children 6 to 12 and sales of gifts and books will pay the monthly bills. He intends to operate the museum until he retires and then find an organization that can keep it going.

Artifacts on display include personal items such as stencils for marking clothing, dog tags soldiers bought from camp followers because neither army furnished them, matches, shaving equipment and a carpetbag.

A tiny hand-carved set of bone dominoes and a roll-up wooden checkerboard could be stashed in a pocket or pack. There are poker chips and playing cards soldiers would toss away before battle to avoid the taint of anyone finding gambling material on their bodies, Haines said. After battle, survivors would retrieve the cards.

Uniforms, musical instruments, cooking gear, documents, money, photographs, paintings and a few weapons also are on display.

One room of the 4,200-square-foot museum is devoted to Pensacola. Many thought the war would start in this Florida Panhandle city because Fort Pickens was the southernmost of the Union's two major strongholds in the South. Fort Sumter in South Carolina was the other.

But Florida Sen. Stephen Mallory, later secretary of the Confederate Navy, wanted to avoid war. Through his effort a truce was signed. The South agreed not to attack if the Union didn't reinforce Pickens. The Confederates instead fired on Sumter.

Another section combines Haines' medical and Civil War interests. It includes a life-size diorama of a Confederate surgeon amputating a soldier's hand at a field hospital.

On display are bone saws, medicine bottles and a lead round with teeth marks apparently left by a patient who had to "bite the bullet." One interesting item is a suppository mold a previous owner had mistaken for a bullet mold.

At one time Haines did his collecting at flea markets and antique shops. Those sources dried up about 10 years ago. Civil War collecting has become a business and he now buys from dealers.

"They scour the country, and before it ever gets to the places where I can be traveling through and find it, the dealers have it," he said.

Haines attributed his boyhood fascination to the uniqueness of the Civil War.

"There was nothing like it before and nothing since," he said.

It was a time of transition. What started as a traditional "gentlemen's war" was transformed by advances in weaponry and photography, which gave the public its first realistic look at war's horror, into a modern, total conflict. Guerrilla and trench warfare appeared. Rifled cannon made forts obsolete.

The nation also was in transition, sort of a puberty period, Haines said.

"We didn't know quite what we were all about," he said. "We didn't know where we were going. We didn't know what was going to happen to us."

Texans eager to bet on lottery will have to wait

AUSTIN (NYT) — For those wondering how anxious Texans are to play the newly approved lottery, just check the flashing switchboard at State Comptroller John Sharp's office.

By midafternoon Wednesday, 500 people had called Sharp asking the obvious questions: When will lottery tickets be available, how much will prizes be, and how can people sign up to sell the tickets?

"We don't HAVE tickets," Sharp said, patiently but puzzled.

Sharp's staff had to inform the callers that the answers aren't all known yet because several steps necessary to create the games can't be taken until Tuesday's election results are certified Nov. 20.

In the meantime, an Austin-based commission has begun studying the options and has started looking at applicants for jobs and services ranging from lottery directorship to ticket printing.

Around the state and the nation, interested parties are waiting for the decisions:

■ In a remote community near Big Bend National Park in far West Texas, operators of the Study Butte Store are wondering what they'll have to do to become part of the nation's largest network of lottery retailers, expected to include about 20,000 vendors.

■ In Columbus, Ohio, manufacturers of equipment used to validate winning tickets are waiting to hear how many devices Texas might order on a rush basis.

■ In Fort Worth and countless other cities in Texas, residents are trying to imagine which of their neighborhood convenience stores will become retailers.

Meanwhile, throughout Texas, an anti-wagering group will be monitoring the selection of contractors — especially those who will advertise the lottery — out of fear that the games will fulfill dire predictions about lotteries preying on the young and fostering compulsive gambling.

ELECTION '91

For now, Sharp is preaching his own message of caution, urging residents to be patient with the lottery start-up process and not to be upset if it takes a while to answer their questions.

Fortunately, there are a few givens at this point:

By month's end, a lottery director will be hired.

From the first of the year to April 1992, retailers will be screened, with as many as 50,000 background checks being conducted — from Sharp on down to the mom-and-pop grocer in Mexia — by state police and the FBI.

By July 4, 1992, an instant-win, scratch-off-card game will be operating as required by law.

And by January 1993, a high-stakes game — in which players pick their own lucky numbers — will be inaugurated, creating the first Texas lottery millionaires.

"We basically have 240 days to get this project up and going, so it's like having 240 days to start up a Fortune 500 company, which is why we started the process a month ago," Sharp said.

Sharp said he plans to accomplish the goals with fewer state workers (about 186) than any other state. However, thousands of Texans will be needed to work for contractors, vendors and the 20,000 retailers, he said.

"We're going to spend a lot of time bringing this up in every nook and cranny of Texas, not just the major metropolitan areas," Sharp said.

He said he wants the start-up process "to be just as fair to Cuero, Texas, as it is to Houston."

The technology needed to bring the first instant games both to small-town Texas and urban convenience stores is readily available, said Butch O'Neill, chairman of AGT International, Inc., of Columbus, Ohio. His firm supplies the ticket validation equipment to Louisiana and four other states.

"You scan it and can it," he said, explaining the functioning of devices he hopes to supply to Texas as well. States supply retailers the devices that check the validity of winning tickets before transmitting the information across ordinary phone lines to lottery headquarters.

The equipment operates much like the devices used when credit-card purchases are verified.

Louisiana's network, which has operated since Sept. 6 and already handled $100 million in lottery bets, was established in about two months, O'Neill said.

No mystery: Voters angry; parties worry

By John King

Analysis

WASHINGTON (AP) — Election Day 1991 had no national elections but it delivered a nationwide message: People are angry, and both parties have good reason to worry.

Democrats got the edge in off-year balloting because they won the biggest contest, the Pennsylvania Senate race. It provided an early and encouraging test run of the themes they plan to use against President Bush next year.

"It's the closest thing to a referendum on George Bush that we've had," said Democratic National Committee Chairman Ronald Brown.

The election did indeed show signs of potential Bush vulnerability, Republican protests to the contrary notwithstanding.

In Pennsylvania, Democratic Sen. Harris Wofford won by campaigning on recession worries and concerns over affordable health care while presenting a pro-middle-class, outsider's image. He drew strong support from the white suburban voters who Democrats will need to win the White House.

"It may have been, ultimately, a wakeup call directed at Pennsylvania Avenue," said Sen. Charles Robb of Virginia, chairman of the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee.

But Bush isn't the only one who should worry.

The elections saw incumbents tossed out in state after state and city after city — a foreboding for both parties but particularly for Democrats, who control Congress and most state and local governments.

The message from the off-year electorate wasn't lost on those who face the same voters a year from now.

"I don't think any of us should underestimate the frustration and anger that people feel," said California Rep. Vic Fazio, head of the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee.

"If you are seen as the person in charge, you start with one foot in the political grave," said Paul Goldman, an adviser to Virginia Gov. L. Douglas Wilder, a presidential hopeful.

In New Jersey, voter anger with Democratic-sponsored tax increases boosted Republicans in both legislative chambers from the minority to veto-proof majorities. The GOP made huge inroads in the Virginia Legislature, and won the Mississippi governor's race for the first time since Reconstruction.

Difficulties lie ahead for both parties as they look for ways to curry favor with the angry electorate.

The Democrats, perhaps to a fault, are suddenly optimistic and full of bravado. "Voters want change and George Bush hasn't a clue as to what that means," was Democratic Chairman Brown's analysis.

Ten-year reign ends

Houston Mayor Kathy Whitmire talks to the media during a City Council lunch break about her election loss. The defeat of the incumbent mayor ends her record-setting 10-year reign in Houston. Mrs. Whitmire made a dismal third-place showing in Tuesday's elections with 20 percent of the vote in complete but unofficial returns. Wealthy developer Bob Lanier, who finished first with 44 percent, will face state Rep. Sylvester Turner, who had 35 percent, in a runoff early next month.

Dems use wins to press jobless benefits bill

WASHINGTON (NYT) — Buoyed by Harris Wofford's victory in Pennsylvania, Senate Democrats moved Wednesday toward trying to freeze foreign aid and using the money saved to pay for extended unemployment benefits for people out of work at least half a year.

Even without committing themselves to that way of paying for the $5.6 billion bill, they were using it as a political club to swing at President Bush.

The president's budget director criticized the plan as a violation of last year's budget act. But Sen. George J. Mitchell of Maine, the majority leader, retorted, "Why is the president so ready, eager and willing to help people overseas and so reluctant to help people in need in America?"

Republicans and House Democratic leaders were wary of the Mitchell approach, which would limit foreign-aid spending in future years to the level being spent in the current fiscal year.

But they agreed that it might carry overwhelmingly in both houses, perhaps at veto-proof levels, if allowed to get to the floor. And the savings of $7.7 billion would easily pay for the extra benefits of as many as 20 weeks that Senate Democrats have insisted on.

The unemployment benefits issue, which seemed on the verge of agreement just last week, remains bogged down not only over this bluntly partisan question of a foreign-aid freeze but also in a swirl of personal rivalries and arguments over numbers and the sanctity of the budget act.

How long does it take?
The actually delivery takes 1 - 2 hours Monday - Saturday, and 2 - 3 hours on Sunday, again depending on the size of the distributorship. Also, a few hours a month are needed to collect from subscribers. Many distributors choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in subscribers' papers. Collecting in person will be necessary though!
When do papers have to be delivered by?
6 a.m. Monday - Friday and 7 a.m. on Saturday, Sunday and holidays.
Do I ever get a day off?

Midland Is Looking Up!

City ranks third in job growth

■ Among the state's metropolitan areas, Midland ranked third in adding new jobs in the past 12 months.

By John Powers
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Midland ranked third among the state's 28 metropolitan areas in adding new jobs during the past 12 months, the Comptroller of Public Accounts office has reported.

Midland had 45,600 people employed in September, an increase of 1,600, or a 3.6 percent gain, from the number of people employed in September 1990.

The increase came across the board in construction, manufacturing, wholesale and retail trade, services, government and transportation, a comptroller's spokesman said. The only category that did not show a gain was finance, insurance and real estate.

Victoria, with a 5 percent gain, led the state in new jobs, followed by Beaumont-Port Arthur with a 4.3 percent increase.

Odessa ranked sixth, with a 3 percent gain, from 43,500 to 44,800 workers.

Other areas showing good growth included Houston, Killeen-Temple, El Paso and Brownsville-Harlingen. The latter reflects the growth of the maquiladoras, or "twin plants" on the Texas-Mexico border.

For the first time since 1982, Texas was tops in the nation in creating new jobs, the Comptroller's office reported in its Texas Economic Quarterly publication. For the 12 months ended in June, the state had a 1.2 percent growth in employment, or 87,000 new jobs. Ohio was second, with a .5 percent gain, and Illinois was third at .3 percent.

Because of the 1990-91 recession, only three of the 10 most populous states — Texas, Ohio and Illinois — had increases in employment during the 12 months since June 1990, the report said.

Comptroller John Sharp's economic forecast is for slow to moderate growth to continue in Texas, which still will outpace growth around the nation by about.5 percent a year during the next few years.

"Although oil prices may remain volatile in the short term, the Texas economy is much less affected by oil prices than it was 10 years ago," the report said. "With oil prices presently below $25 a barrel, an unexpected slip in oil prices would have little effect on an industry that is already downscaled."

Because the forecast assumes the average price of oil will increase only about $1 a year during the next few years, the outlook for the industry is flat, the report said.
