Farmers and ranchers must diversify in order to survive today's depressed economy, says Midland County agricultural agent Earnest Kiker.

New immigration bill's impact still uncertain

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

The outgoing president of the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce believes many illegal aliens who may be eligible for amnesty under recently enacted immigration laws will be hesitant to take advantage of the opportunity to become legal U.S. residents.

"I don't know how many people are going to be brave enough to come out and say I've been an illegal alien all this time," said Roger Robles. "There have been too many incidents where people have been tricked into exposing themselves and then they were deported."

However, Henry McGehee, Immigration and Naturalization assistant district director in El Paso, said Friday that, while local INS offices have not yet received official word on the new immigration law, he understands there will be "a 12 to 18 month grace period," during which "no attempt will be made to deport anyone who may be eligible" for amnesty under the new law.

The new Immigration Reform Law signed by President Reagan this week will allow any illegal alien who has resided in the United States since Jan. 1, 1982 to make application for temporary legal residence.

As to how and where illegal aliens eligible for amnesty will be able to obtain applications, McGehee said, "We're working with several volunteer groups trying to work that out."

In addition to "legalization centers" expected to be set up within about six months in San Antonio, Austin, Corpus Christi and Laredo, he said there will be a center in El Paso and several other places yet to be announced.

The law provides penalties for employers who knowingly hire illegal aliens.

"Basically, what it's going to do — the amnesty portion — is good to an extent," said attorney Richard Alvarado, who maintains law offices in Midland and Odessa.

Texas House members find rug pulled out from under them

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — When returning members of the Texas House of Representatives settle in for inauguration Jan. 13, they'll find more different below them than around them.

The changes in the carpeting — workmen last week replaced the old, mustard yellow carpet with a new maroon, green and gold replica of the original floor covering — will overshadow the new faces in the crowd. With just 23 new members, the freshman class of the 70th Legislature is the smallest in more than a decade.

Tuesday's election brought few surprises. Twelve of the 23 new representatives were assured of victory, having won their seats during the spring primaries. Nine of the remaining 11 won races for seats vacated by retiring lawmakers.

One of the new representatives is Odessa Democrat Gary Watkins. He defeated Republican Casolyn Powers in the race to replace retiring first-term Rep. Kelly Godwin, R-Odessa. The remainder of the Midland-area delegation won re-election, including Rep. Larry Don Shaw, D-Big Spring, who survived a challenge from John "Rich" Anderson by 724 votes.

Two losing Democratic candidates, former Rep. Bob Barton of San Marcos and Janey Lack of Victoria, have asked for recounts.

Only two incumbents — County Affairs Committee Chairman Buck Buchanan, D-Dumas, and first-term Rep. Gene Haney, R-Houston, — lost re-election bids.

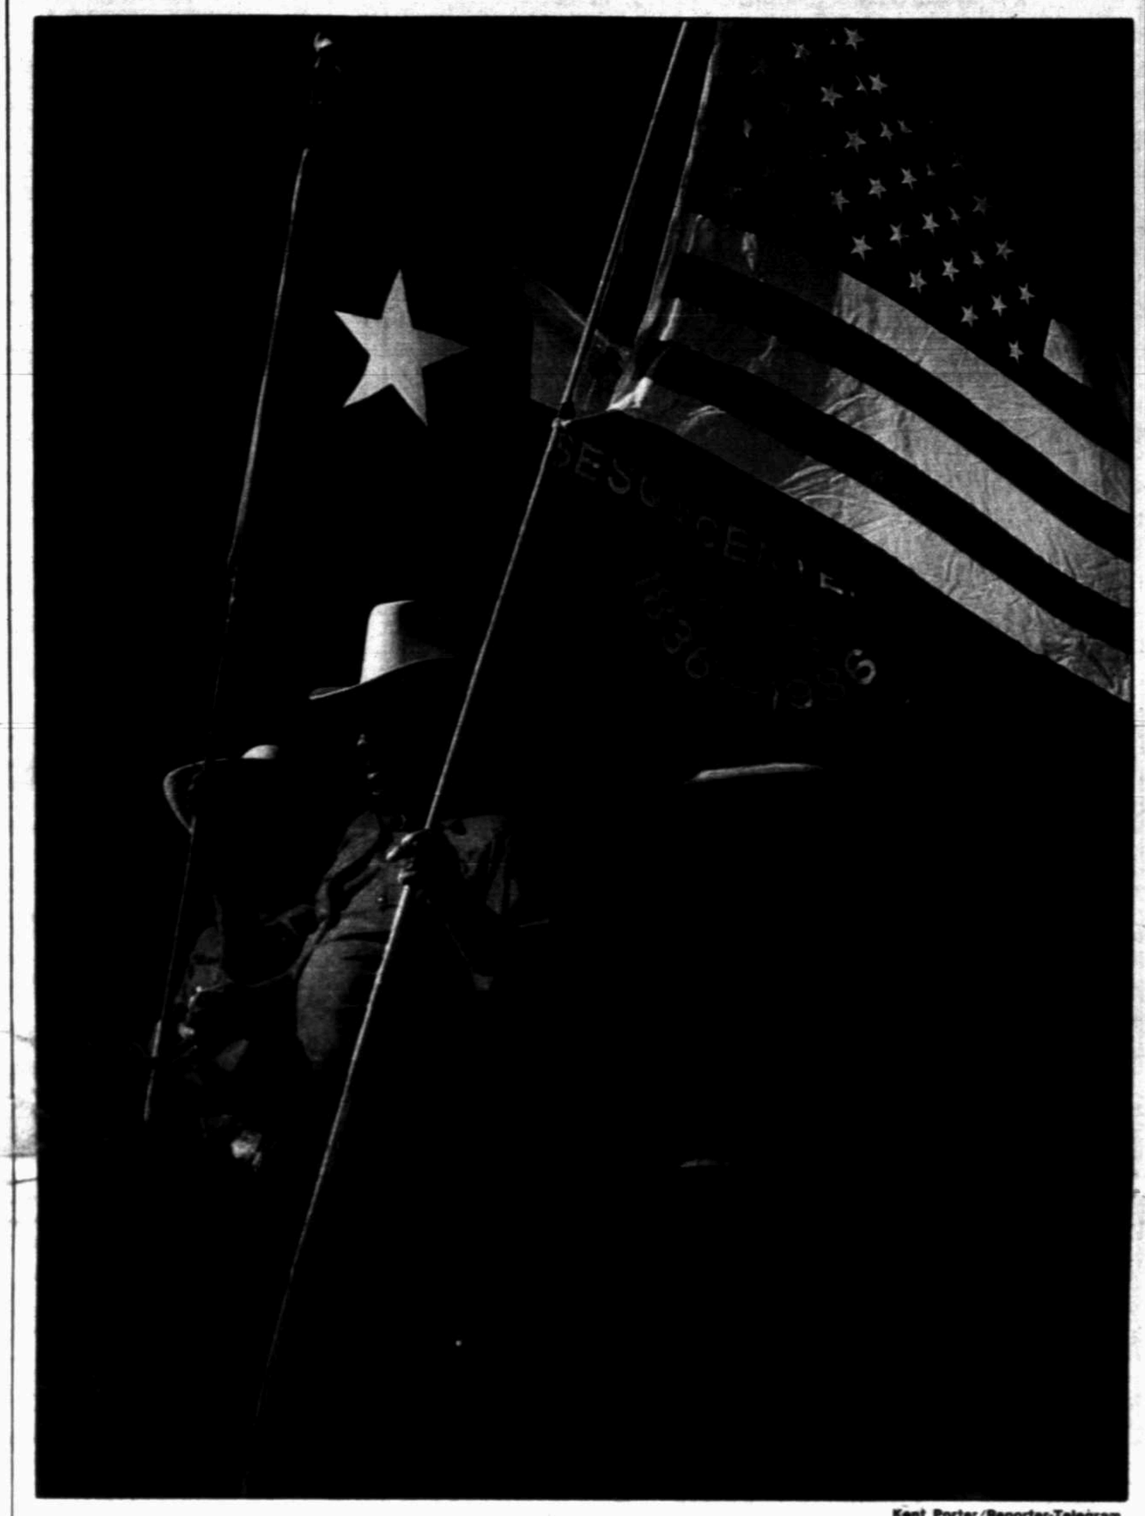

The partisan makeup of the House will change only slightly, with the Republicans picking up one seat. Democrats still control the junior chamber 94-56.

On a broader scale, however, Speaker Gib Lewis has nearly completed a five-year project to replace the old regime. With the 23 new members, only 69 of the 150 representatives will have served under Lewis' predecessor, Billy Clayton. Twenty-nine of the returning 41-member freshman class of 1983 make up the largest new power block.

Even among veteran House members, the Clayton team is pretty well gone. Twenty-two of the committee chairmen who served under Clayton's final 1981-1982 term have either left the House or been demoted by Lewis.

Lewis will have at least eight new committee chairs to replace in January, chief among them Bill Messer of the powerful Calendars Committee, Lee Jackson of the Business and Commerce Committee, Billy Hall of the Liquor Regulation Committee and Frank Tejeda of the Judicial Affairs Committee. Messer left to become a lobbyist; the others sought higher office.

Ortega vows planes flying supplies to Contra rebels will be shot down

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — President Daniel Ortega vowed on Saturday, before thousands of Nicaraguans celebrating the 25th anniversary of the Sandinista National Liberation Front, that planes flying supplies to Contra rebels would be shot down.

The celebration also marked the 10th anniversary of the death of Carlos Fonseca, founder of the Front. Fonseca and a few revolutionaries armed with pistols and single-shot rifles began the insurrection that led to the 1979 ouster of Somoza dynasty that had ruled since the 1930s.

A large billboard near Fonseca Plaza, where Ortega spoke, showed a Sandinista soldier capturing American mercenary Eugene Hasenfus. A slogan read, "The blonde invader has bitten the dust."

Hasenfus, now on trial before a People's Tribunal, was captured after his C-123 cargo plane was shot down Oct. 5 while carrying supplies to the Contras.

After Ortega's speech, the crowd cheered a military parade of 5,000 soldiers and Soviet-bloc weapons.

Observers saw no new weapons in the parade, which lasted one hour, 15 minutes. There have been rumors the Sandinistas acquired Soviet T-62 tanks and SAM-3 ground-to air missiles capable of knocking down jets.

Instead, the parade included 54 of the older Soviet-designed T-54 and T-55 tanks, 13 armored reconnaissance vehicles, 12 amphibious armored personnel carriers, and various anti-aircraft and anti-tank weapons.

During his 50-minute speech, Ortega blamed the CIA for Hasenfus flight and said, "We will keep shooting down the planes of the CIA with anti-aircraft weapons in the hands of the people."

Black Chamber's mission will take 'persistence, courage'

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

The new officers of the Midland Black Chamber of Entrepreneurs, installed at a banquet Saturday, have a mission "to encourage economic development and entrepreneurial endeavors, and this will take persistence, innovation and courage," according to guest speaker Calvin W. Stephens.

He reminded the new officers and guests that the officers "had been chosen to lead, and must lead by example. The members are followers and must follow with support, and the non-members must not stand in their way."

The MBCE inauguration banquet capped Jubilee weekend, a series of activities sponsored by the chamber celebrating the black contribution to Texas and the Old West.

MIDLAND UNITED WAY

Can you do your share? This year it's more important than ever!

Contra aid touchy topic in Honduras

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras (AP) — The first supply shipment from the United States for Nicaraguan rebels has arrived quietly in Honduras, but rebel leaders and other sources say the goods have yet to make their way to the combatants.

The distribution of $100 million in new U.S. aid, including the first overt military aid approved by Congress, may be out in the open in the United States, but it's a hushed-up operation in this Central American nation.

Honduras gives only a tacit nod to the presence of thousands of the Nicaraguan rebels, called Contras, who are fighting from bases in Honduras to overthrow neighboring Nicaragua's leftist Sandinista government.

A C-130 cargo plane loaded with what sources said was food and perhaps ammunition landed more than a week ago at Palmerola Air Base. The facility belongs to Honduras, although there are only 400 Hondurans there and more than 1,000 American troops.

"The help still has not arrived in our hands," Adolfo Calero, head of the largest Contra group, the Nicaraguan Democratic Force, said in an interview last week. "We've had contact with government people (from the United States) to establish rules and channels to receive the aid."

Calero declined to elaborate, but said he expected to receive some of the aid within the next week.

"We want to know where the aid is," said Roger Herman, spokesman for Kisan, a 3,500-member force made up mostly of Miskito Indians who are fighting the Sandinistas along Nicaragua's Caribbean coast. "We haven't even received the first grains of food."

President Reagan led the fight for Congressional approval of $70 million in military aid and $30 million in non-military funds for the Contras. The Contras' foe, the Sandinistas, came to power in July 1979, ending 42 years of rule by the rightist, pro-American Somoza dynasty.

U.S. military aid for the Contras had been outlawed since 1984, when CIA involvement in mining Nicaragua's harbors was disclosed and caused a major controversy.

The U.S. State Department is charged with overseeing the disbursement of the $100 million in aid. The CIA and Defense Department will handle distribution and training.

Sources in Tegucigalpa offered sketchy details about the Contra supply efforts.

Most of the approximately 18,000 rebels maintain bases in southern Honduras. One source said most of the supplies would come through Honduras and some would be funneled through other Central American nations.

Lugar: Policy may be fatally flawed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., the outgoing chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, says the Reagan administration's policy in Nicaragua may be fatally flawed and predicts it will be in serious trouble in the Democratic-controlled Senate.

Lugar said that some presidential advisers in the White House have seemed more eager to back a war than to negotiate a peaceful resolution that achieves American aims.

"Trying to build a democracy, that was our objective," said Lugar. "It wasn't to back the Contras during a war." Moreover, Lugar said that barring an uprising in Managua, "the Contras could not win."

Lugar said his differences with Reagan over the Contra aid program were not well-publicized, but he discussed the disagreement in detail in an interview after it became apparent the Democrats would control the Senate and he would surrender his committee chairmanship to Sen. Claiborne Pell of Rhode Island, the ranking Democrat on the panel.

"I generally feel that on Nicaragua, we could have done better if we could have worked out positions with the Democrats that would have gotten substantial support and longevity, therefore, in his (Reagan's) policy," Lugar said.

He said efforts by Reagan's Central American envoy Phil Habib to achieve a diplomatic solution earlier this year were undercut. He said it was "a near-miss" that could have worked if the administration had supported him.

Man threatens to blow up plane

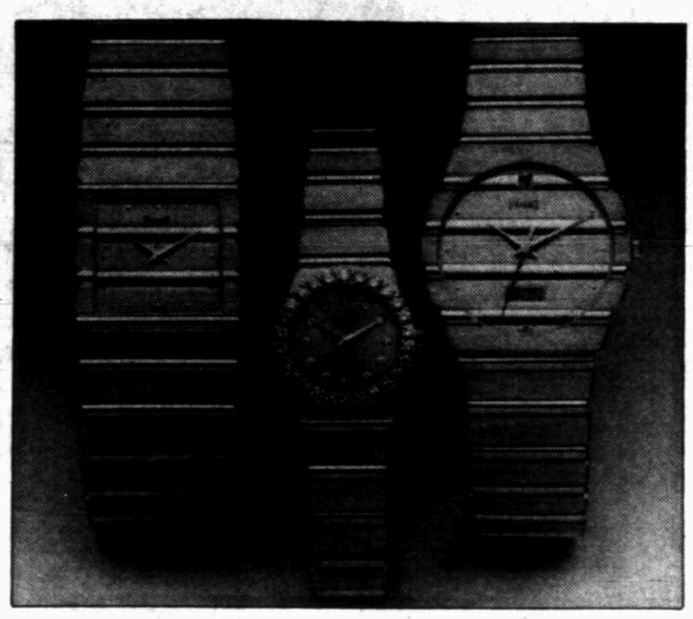

HOUSTON (AP) — A jetliner with 40 people aboard made an unscheduled landing Saturday after a passenger angry over the crew's refusal to serve him a drink threatened to blow up the plane, and the man was arrested, officials said.

Alfred Dukes, 31, who was traveling on the USAir flight from San Antonio to Philadelphia with a church singing group, was charged with interference with operation of an aircraft and interference with a flight crew, FBI spokesman said.

Shortly before 7 a.m., the pilot on Flight 64 radioed Houston's Intercontinental Airport to report a threat to blow up the Boeing 727 aircraft.

CHAMBER

New officers are Robbyne Fuller, president; Rhiny Williams, first vice president for job placement; Dorothy Smith, second vice president for the junior chamber; Margaret Fort, secretary; H. Dean Williams, assistant secretary; Harold Howard, treasurer; and Margie Titus, parliamentarian. Board members include Hadley Edwards, Henry Hammons, Milton Jones, Gloria Robinson, Ontee Robinson and Cecilia Wollschlager. Other vice presidents include Conrad Coleman, Virginia Conner, James Fuller and Dorothy Nash. Gladys Gurst of Sweetwater was the master of ceremonies.

A major highlight of the weekend was the unveiling of a bronze portrayal by Lubbock sculptor Eddie Dixon of black conquistadors, cowboys, mountainmen, Indians and cavalrymen. The replica, sculpted in bas relief, stands over 2 feet tall and more than 6 feet long.

Stephens, president and chief executive officer of Calvin W. Stephens & Associates of Dallas, recalled the adventures of three figures depicted on the Replica: Explorer Estavanico, an African slave who is credited with discovering Texas and New Mexico 45 years after Columbus discovered America; Mary Fields, a 6 foot, 200 pound frontier woman who smoked cigars and drank whiskey but always wore a skirt; and Bill Pickett, a black cowboy who invented modern-day bulldogging and once held onto a Spanish fighting bull for almost 40 minutes.

"You (the MBCE officers) are pioneers," Stephens said. "You must be like Estavanico, willing to explore unknown territory. You must be like "Stagecoach" Mary Fields, willing to work hard even in circumstances where others say they can't do the job. And you must be like Bill Pickett and have courage and the willingness to hang on."

The SMU graduate said the officers must demonstrate their dedication and sincerity to their mission, develop close relationships with other minorities, support all the chamber's programs, and come up with innovative solutions, new programs and bring in new members.

"The Midland Black Chamber of Entrepreneurs must be the engine on a train leading to economic development. We can no longer afford to be a caboose on the track of economic development. The caboose is always at the rear, and no matter how fast the train runs, the caboose never catches up."

Blacks have been in business almost as long as they've been in America, he told the audience.

But too often the whites have been hired to do the selling and handle the money and the blacks have been hired to do the manual labor, he said.

But that trend has begun to change in the last 15 years, he said. "Now blacks are still doing manual labor, but they're also collecting the money. We have moved a long way in securing our civil rights. But without economic parity and gains, civil rights are no civil rights at all. With our problems in housing, unemployment, education, crime and especially today, with drugs, establishing an economic base would help solve those problems."

He applauded the chamber's efforts to involve young people by establishing its auxiliary Junior Chamber of Entrepreneurs, saying the young people are the future.

"You must teach them, but also listen to their ideas. You must instill in them the idea that they can be successful and to believe that they can be the employer. They must know something about finance as well as breakdance. When they get off the dance floor, talk to them about cash flow."

Ms. Fuller, the new chamber president, told the gathering "We have a job to do in Midland and in Odessa. We know we have the best here and we can have the best, and we're going to work and plan and we are going to make it."

ORTEGA

The Sandinista leader, wearing a short-sleeved military uniform, compared the CIA to drug traffickers. "Today, they are the biggest traffickers of narcotics, taking the drug of terrorism to Angola, Grenada and Nicaragua," he said.

"The narcotics traffickers are characterized by having airplanes whose clandestine origins they hide. It is the CIA which buys airplanes through a third party and traffics in death against Nicaragua," Ortega said.

Earlier Saturday, an honor guard placed a wreath at Fonseca's mausoleum as a gentle breeze stirred the eternal flame burning over the tomb in Revolutionary Plaza.

Crowds started gathering in downtown Managua early in the day. The government radio estimated the turnout at 50,000.

Dignitaries from the Soviet Union and Soviet bloc nations and guerrillas from Colombia, El Salvador and the Palestine Liberation Organization were among hundreds of guests attending the ceremonies.

Among delegations from the United States were three Vietnam War veterans who recently completed a fast on the steps of the Capitol in Washington to protest President Reagan's anti-Sandinista policies.

One of the veterans, Brian Wilson, wearing a St. Louis Cardinals baseball cap, told the crowd in a brief speech the United States was conducting "an illegal, immoral and irrational war against your nation."

He said, "We smell, taste and feel another Vietnam, and how well we know that that evil war was born by a lie and perpetuated by lies, just as this war is also."

Since coming to power, the Sandinistas have presided over a nation in economic disaster. They are fighting a war by Contra rebels who want to oust the government and are backed by $100 million in aid from the United States.

The Reagan administration says Nicaragua is trying to export revolution to other Central American nations.

About 60 percent of Nicaragua's budget is earmarked for defense, mainly to support a military force of 100,000 soldiers, reservists and militia — the largest fighting force in Central America.

Managua, whose downtown area was destroyed in an earthquake in 1972 and never rebuilt, was spruced up for the celebration. City workers repainted curbsides and crosswalks and hung banners bearing the colors of the blue-and-white Nicaraguan and red-and-black Sandinista flags.

The Sandinista National Liberation Front was founded on July 23, 1961, by Fonseca and two followers — Silvio Mayorga and Tomas Borge — at a meeting in Honduras. But because July also is when the government celebrates the overthrow of the Somoza family, the ceremony was postponed until now.

Fonseca, the intellectual force behind the front, had a special fascination with Augusto C. Sandino, who in the 1930s fought a guerrilla war in northern Nicaragua against U.S. Marines occupying the country.

Because of that, the movement incorporated into its name the word Sandinista, which in Spanish means "follower of Sandino."

Fonseca, who suffered from poor eyesight and who liked books by American writers John Steinbeck and Jack London, went into the jungle to live as a guerrilla after some Sandinistas complained he lacked combat experience. It was there that he was killed in 1976.

ALIENS

"There's one major question I have regarding the employment of aliens," he said. "Will the people who are eligible for amnesty be allowed to work during the time it takes to secure this amnesty or will they be considered illegal aliens and not be able to work for however long it takes to get amnesty?"

Alvarado said he has not seen a copy of the new law so these questions will have to be answered when copies of it are available.

As to the impact he believes the new law will have, Alvarado said, "What's going to happen is it's going to cause anyone of Hispanic descent to carry on or about their persons some form of identification to prove either their legal residence or citizenship which, in effect, is discrimination," he stated.

Asked if he felt the new law will be challenged in the courts, Alvarado said, "I don't know but, basically, you're going to force one segment of the community to carry identification papers. Under different circumstances," he said, "that kind of requirement has been declared unconstitutional."

Alvarado suggested anyone who believes they are eligible to apply for amnesty should contact an attorney to determine their rights under the new law. He advised that anyone picked up by the immigration authorities "for any reason" should "refuse to depart voluntarily until they've explored the possibility of amnesty."

Robles believes the new law "is going to create a hardship for some people" who need to work because "employers are going to be much more hesitant to hire anyone they feel would be an alien because they (employers) don't want to incur penalties."

Sam Gonzalez, owner of Manuel's Crispy Taco in Odessa, said the new law won't affect his business because "we've always followed those procedures anyway."

According to Gonzalez, the new law merely reinforces the law that's been on the books for a long time, "there was just never any enforcement of it," he stated.

Mike Maxwell, manager of Furr's Cafeteria in Midland, asked if he felt the new immigration law would affect his business, said, "We don't think so. We've always had a policy, especially the way times are now, where we don't have anybody who would be affected," he said.

"If this had happened two or three years ago," he said, "We could have lost half our crew."

The Texas Department of Human Resources, as yet, hasn't tried to assess what impact the new legislation may have on the state's welfare system, according to El Paso-based Jim Harvey, DHR regional Administrator who was in Midland Friday. DHR "is just sitting back and waiting to see," he said.

Harvey observed, however, that the cost of medical care for illegal aliens in El Paso is significant, noting that of Thomason General Hospital's $35 million in indigent medical care last year, 20 percent of that figure ($7 million) was provided to illegal aliens.

At this point, Harvey said, there is no way to even speculate on what demands the new law may place on such programs as food stamps and aid for dependent children.

Midland and Ector County school officials said they don't expect to see any particular change because of the new law since both school systems have been providing public school access to all children regardless of the citizenship status of their parents.

Federal officials have estimated that of the approximately one million illegal aliens in Texas as many as 500,000 may be eligible for amnesty.

STATE

Across the rotunda, senators have had two years to get accustomed to their new, bright blue carpet. Four new senators will join 27 veterans on Jan. 13. Their arrival will have a demographic — rather than philosophical — effect on the makeup of the Senate.

The number of female senators will have tripled, the number of blacks doubled and the number of Hispanics increased by a third.

Only three senators — Democrats Chet Brooks of Pasadena and Hugh Parmer of Fort Worth and Republican John Leedom of Dallas — faced general election opponents. All won with more than 60 percent of the vote. Three of the four races for open seats ended with Democrats winning by a wide margin. In the fourth, the sprawling South Texas district vacated by retiring Democrat John Traeger of Seguin, Republican Bennie Bock of New Braunfels has asked for a recount following his nail-biting loss to Democrat Judy Zaffirini of Laredo.

Assuming Ms. Zaffirini survives that challenge, she will be one of a pair of "two-fers" — legislative parlance for a double minority — among the four new faces. She and Eddie Bernice Johnson of Dallas will join San Antonio Republican Cyndi Krier to bring the number of female senators to an all-time high of three.

For the first time since Reconstruction, Texas will have two black senators in Ms. Johnson and incumbent Sen. Craig Washington, D-Houston. Ms. Zaffirini and now-Rep. Frank Tejeda of San Antonio will join four incumbent Hispanic senators to set a record high of six Mexican-Americans in the Senate.

The fourth new senator, Ken Armbrister, replaces newly elected Railroad Commissioner John Sharp. Both are conservative, Anglo, male Democrats from Victoria.

All of those other changes in the Senate's ethnic and male-female composition, however, should do little to change the senior chamber's moderate-to-liberal voting patterns. Two of the new senators essentially mirror their predecessors' philosophy. While Ms. Zaffirini should be more liberal than Traeger and Tejeda more conservative than outgoing Sen. Glenn Kothmann of San Antonio, those differences should cancel each other out.

Early observations show the state budget should once again dominate the debate during the five-month legislative session. So the membership hasn't changed much in two years and neither have the issues.

Keep you eyes on the carpet in the House.

HONDURAS

El Salvador's Ilopango Air Base has been used to clandestinely ship supplies from private U.S. donors to the rebels, according to U.S. and Salvadoran sources. A Salvadoran military officer recently told The Associated Press his country would continue to deny publicly but privately allow the supplies to go through Ilopango. The officer spoke on condition of anonymity.

Calero and Herman said their troops desperately need food, medicine and communications equipment. Their shopping list includes boats, planes, helicopters, rifles, grenade launchers, mortars, machine guns and surface-to-air missiles.

"We are fighting without anything," Herman said.

Calero and Herman also said they had no firm details on a plan discussed in Washington to train the Contras.

"Our troops are trained," Calero said. "Without a doubt there will be training for heads of squads, regional commands."

Herman said his troops had six years of experience and it was more important to provide food before instruction.

Hondurans say they hope the aid will enable to the Contras to take the war into their own country.

"Everyone wants the Contras to leave and we all hope the money means the Contras will leave," Carlos Montoya, president of the National Congress, said in an interview. "If not, we will have to put a deadline on this, say six months or a year."

Sandinista troops frequently attack and mine the border area.

Thousands of Hondurans have fled the border zone, once a tranquil if impoverished coffee-growing region. The area is heavily guarded by the Honduran military and off-limits to journalists.

Lugar also said he is worried by the lack of consensus in Congress for the Contra aid program. The Senate approved by a narrow 53-47 vote the administration's $100 million program for military and other aid.

Lugar said it was difficult getting the 53 votes and made clear he fought for the aid bill against his better judgment.

He said he would have preferred a compromise with the Democrats that would have required a second vote on military aid after allowing for a period for negotiations with the leftist Sandinista government. If the White House had agreed, the compromise might have been passed by as many as 70 votes, he said.

"In order to make this thing run, you've got to have this kind of consensus," he said.

But he said both John Poindexter, the White House national security adviser, and Secretary of State George Shultz said Reagan objected to such a compromise.

"When the White House said we've got to win this vote, we've got to grind out 53 votes...we ground it out," Lugar said.

But, he said, "I still feel we are going to have to come to some kind of national policy that gets up into the much higher figures" than 53 votes.

"If you ask how that's doable I don't know," he said. "If you have a Democratic committee and Congress totally, obviously it picks up at a very difficult point, and I don't know what the catalyst for leadership is in that situation. If the Democrats just decide as a matter of principle that they don't want any more aid, it's got some problems."

Kidtalk: Place to call for help or just for friendship

DALLAS (AP) — Six-year-old Amy had just gotten home from her first day in the first grade and headed straight for the cookies her mom left as an after-school snack. But a spider stared back from atop the cellophane wrapper.

"She was terrified and didn't know what to do because nobody else was at home," Sandy Rusher says. "So she called us."

Like hundreds of other area children who have used the pioneering Kidtalk telephone program since its September inauguration, Amy got a sympathetic listener who talked her through getting a newspaper and swatting the creature off the cookie package.

Her problem — minor by adult standards but monumental by a child's — is just one of scores that Kidtalk volunteers are trained to handle during the line's after-school hours of 3 p.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Friday.

"So many mothers and fathers are at work when children are getting home from school," said Janis Dumas, program service director for Lone Star Council of Camp Fire Inc. "Kidtalk gives children a place to call for information or simply someone to talk to."

The problems run from Amy's spider to power outages and prowlers, but "most calls are from kids who are lonely or bored — they just want somebody to talk to," says Ms. Rusher, Kidtalk's telephone supervisor.

"There also is a lot of good news they want to share," she adds. "They may have gotten a happy face on their spelling test and they're so excited about it that they can't wait until Mom and Dad get home."

So at a rate of more than 100 per day, they are calling Kidtalk, some using speed-dial telephones their parents programmed with Kidtalk's number and others dialing the number their parents attached to the refrigerator.

Ms. Rusher estimates fewer than 10 percent of the calls her "warmline" (as opposed to "hot-line) gets are for problems more serious than loneliness, homework or friend troubles.

But some can be sobering.

One worried 10-year-old girl wanted advice on who she could talk to about her mother's drinking problem. Another little girl called to say her parents had beaten her repeatedly, Ms. Rusher says.

It is for problems like those that Kidtalk — a grant-funded joint effort of more than 40 Dallas agencies that Lone Star Camp Fire operates — makes sure a trained counselor sits in on each daily shift.

Besides making referrals to other human services agencies, Kidtalk volunteers also have problem-solving files detailing how to handle sensitive cases such as suicidal kids or imminent danger, Ms. Dumas says.

Kidtalk doesn't cost anything to call, and the most frequent customers are between the ages of 5 and 12, Ms. Rusher says.

The program isn't just for latchkey kids, those who come home to an empty house every day because their parents are at work, Ms. Dumas said.

Kidtalk's phone number is 214-631-0000.

Deputies tackle border bandits

BROWNSVILLE (AP) — Sheriff's deputies have taken to horseback in an effort to stop bandits who strike along the brushy river banks of the Rio Grande, victimizing illegal aliens crossing the river and then scooting back into Mexico with their bounty.

The first arrests have been made by the Cameron County Sheriff's Department as a result of the unusual police detail.

Lt. George Gavito of the sheriff's department said people have been robbed while crossing the river for two or three years. But the problem has gotten worse in the past year, he said.

"More and more people are coming into the country now," Gavito said. "More are coming from Central American countries. And they are coming in with money. They have five, six, seven hundred dollars on them. They have to pay to get to Houston.

"They (the bandits) sit around the levee waiting," Gavito said. "They rob the men and rape the women."

Two weeks ago, Sheriff Alex Perez assigned four deputies to ride the Rio Grande.

Two men were arrested Thursday by the mounties. One was from Tampico, the other from Matamoros, the city in Mexico across the border from Brownsville. They were charged with aggravated robbery and held on $50,000 bond.

Gavito said a case a day has been reported in recent times. In addition, he said, reports of people being stabbed are made about once a week. About two rapes a month are reported, he said. He said that only about half the cases are reported.

Cavito said the robberies are being committed by burglars and thieves who spend a good bit of their time in Mexican jails. He said they are often high from sniffing glue and paint.

A decoy was used in the arrests Thursday, Sheriff Perez said. He was a man who had been robbed a week earlier, the sheriff said.

"We think there are about seven border bandits who are doing most of the robberies," the sheriff said. "I want to catch all of them."

The men assigned to patrol the river are deputies who have cattle and are at home on horseback, Cavito said. They are riding their own horses.

The place the robberies and assaults are occurring are about a mile from downtown Brownsville, Cavito said, just outside the city limits.

Banks tied to Hunt brothers trial impatient

DALLAS (AP) — Banks involved in lawsuits with the wealthy Hunt brothers have asked a federal judge to rule immediately on whether they should be paid more than $700 million in loans.

The motions for summary judgment, filed last week, ask U.S. District Judge Barefoot Sanders to rule before the trial progresses further.

The banks contend the personal trust funds of Nelson Bunker Hunt and Lamar Hunt and their Penrod Drilling Co., owe the money and there are no other disputed facts in the case.

Two of the banks, First National Bank of Chicago and CitiBank, also have asked Sanders to decide immediately whether Penrod owes more than $36 million for buying an oil rig through a Japanese company. The banks advanced the money for the transaction.

A spokesman for the Hunt brothers said the motions are a "legal ploy" by the banks to collect their money, which he said was lent to the Hunts under duress.

Bunker, Lamar and Herbert Hunt, their trust funds, Penrod and Placid Oil Co., have filed two lawsuits totaling $14 million against 23 banks, saying the lenders tried to dominate and destroy Placid and Penrod. The suits also contend the banks tried to corner the offshore oil drilling industry.

Half-brother Ray Hunt is not involved in the suits.

The banks have denied the claims and filed counterclaims to collect $1.5 billion in debt from the Hunt companies.

Like 'Poltergeist II,' Clements is back

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Like the ghosties in "Poltergeist II," he's back. If I tell you "Poltergeist I" was the scariest movie ever made, you'll know how I feel about the return of Bill Clements.

But the people have spoken. They probably made the right move in getting rid of wishy-washy old Mark White. If only there'd been a better choice, a real choice....

We won't pick a new governor until Nov. 6, 1990. That's four years from Thursday — four years' worth of Bill Clements. Old Bill's election brings with it an enormous reorientation, an entirely different perspective for us Capitol watchers.

Based on "Bill Clements I," some of the changes, admittedly, will be for the better. That's due more in comparison to White than anything else.

With Clements in the governors' mansion, Texans will know just exactly where there chief executive stands. They may not like it, but they'll know for sure what it is they don't like. A weathervane politician he ain't.

Relations between the governor's office and the Legislature — with the exception of partisan political issues — should improve. Mostly because of his tell-it-like-it-is attitude, Republican Clements got along better with the Democratic-controlled House and Senate than Democrat White did. Even when the lawmakers disagreed with Clements, they had a sparring partner who would stand in one place long enough to take some punches.

Government, however, is form AND delivery. Just 'cause we know what we're getting doesn't mean we've gotta' like it.

Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby says Clements' election will have no impact on the state budget, but that's just a little hard to accept. Anybody want to bet whether tax increases will achieve any parity at all with budget cuts when the 70th Legislature tackles the estimated $4 billion deficit for the 1988-1989 biennium?

Like he proved during his first term, Clements knows what to do with the line-item veto stamp on the state budget. During his four years in office, White erased just $9.7 million — 0.014 percent — of $67.6 billion worth of legislative appropriations. Clements, on the other hand, X-ed out $285 million — 0.6 percent — of the $46.8 billion in spending plans lawmakers submitted to him.

The actual veto in raw dollars is peanuts compared to total spending, but the threat of veto will put a damper on any suggestion that the state has more — not fewer — responsiblities to meet for its residents. Hobby in particular should find himself the odd man out, as House Speaker Gib Lewis' penchant for budget cutting should mesh well with Clements. With White as an ally — an admittedly weak ally, but an ally just the same — Hobby and the Senate held the upper hand over Lewis and the House when it came to spending money where it needed to be spent.

Look for Clements to thrash around with White holdovers on the Public Utility Commission and state prison board. His call for their resignation ignores the fact that state law gives gubernatorial appointees six-year terms so incoming governors can't destroy any semblance of continuity in state policy.

Clements' election should also come as welcome news to the so-called "tort reformers." Those are the folks out to change laws governing recompense for civil wrongs — such as personal injury cases. Their plans include caps on punitive damages and attorneys' fees and other items that could reduce the amount of money an injured party can receive in court.

Although he hasn't endorsed the specifics, Clements says he is a strong supporter of "tort reform." As one would expect, White was neither a backer nor an opponent, but the big-bucks lobby effort should progress more smoothly with an up-front governor moving it along.

Finally, Clements' return to power throws a whole new slant on the U.S. Senate race of 1988. If Lloyd Bentsen decides not to run in 1988 — less likely now that the Democrats have recaptured the Senate — any Democratic candidate would find himself or herself in an awful lonely position at the top of the ballot in a presidential election year with a Republican in the governor's office.

Steve Levine heads the Reporter-Telegram's Austin Bureau.

STATE IN BRIEF

Teenager shot by officer says both were in wrong

HOUSTON (UPI) — A teenager who was shot in the head as he and a friend ran from a stolen pickup truck says he knows he made a mistake, but believes the officer who fired at him did too.

"I feel I did wrong, said Anthony Spiller, 15, "and (the officer) did wrong for shooting me. He could have told me to stop and I would have stopped."

Spiller said he is willing to testify in court against Brookshire police officer Zell R. Woods, and authorities have both Woods and Spiller under investigation.

The truck was stolen in Waller County and the shooting took place in Harris County.

State law does not allow officers to fire at fleeing suspects. Prosecutors said a grand jury will decide whether the shooting was justified.

Rapist right under noses

HOUSTON (UPI) — A public plea earlier this week for help in locating a man dubbed the "San Felipe rapist" enabled police to learn the seemingly elusive man was in the county jail, and had been there for a week.

"It's not that it is embarrassing, it's that we are glad that the suspect is in custody," Houston police spokesman Daniel Turner said Friday. "That will let the citizens of the city rest a little freer knowing he is behind bars."

Police learned the identity and whereabouts of the suspect after a Village police officer recognized a composite drawing of the suspected rapist shown on a television news show Thursday night. The officer believed the drawing was of a man he had arrested burglarizing a home.

Discipline turns to murder

FORT WORTH (UPI) — A Fort Worth man has been convicted of beating his daughter to death because she misbehaved at school.

James Earl Tenner, 29, was convicted Friday of murder by a Tarrant County jury.

Tenner was found guilty of beating the child with a belt and stick and bashing her head against the floor.

Prosecutors said Tenner beat his daughter, Erica, 9, in May 1985 because she had taken an extra carton of milk at school and talked back to a teacher.

Reagan, new Democratic Congress 'circling each other, leery of moves'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Like Japanese Sumo wrestlers, President Reagan and the new Democratic Congress are circling each other cautiously, leery of any move that might give the other an advantage.

Watching the match with interest are the other big winners of the 1986 elections, Republican governors.

The maneuvering between the White House and Capitol Hill will tell a lot about how political leaders believe the returns from last Tuesday's elections reflect what Americans want from their government.

There's plenty to chew on in the election numbers, some obvious winners and losers, and plenty of cases where the message is clearly in the eyes of the beholder.

New power bases emerged in both parties — the Senate for the Democrats and governors' mansions for the Republicans.

"They are ready to flex their muscle," said Michele Davis, executive director of the Republican Governors Association, its numbers increased to 24 by the pickup of eight on Tuesday. The GOP governors will meet early in December in New Jersey for a three-day session that Ms. Davis described as "blatantly political."

Senate Democrats, holding a 55-45 majority in the 100th Congress, will meet on Nov. 20 to elect leaders, make committee assignments and begin setting a Democratic agenda as an alternative to Reagan's program.

An analysis

The issues are clear — aid to the Contra rebels in Nicaragua, "Star Wars," welfare reform, budget defecits, the economic problems besetting farmers, and the environment.

For presidential aspirants in both parties, the coming weeks will determine how they will use their new forums.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy has taken himself out of the 1988 race and said Saturday he wants to chair the Labor and Human Resources Committee rather than the Judiciary Committee, on which he also has seniority.

His decision means Sen. Joseph Biden of Delaware, who would like to run for president, will become chairman of Judiciary — a juicy forum for an ambitious politician. Biden also is a senior member of the Foreign Relations committee, another panel prized for its ability to attract television cameras.

Sen. Bob Dole of Kansas finds himself leader of a minority instead of a majority, a shift that could make life easier for someone eager to get out on the presidential campaign trail.

Facing a totally Democratic Congress for the first time in his presidency, Reagan is expected to use his considerable political skill to try to build a political case against the Democrats prior to the 1988 presidential election.

The question will be whether the Democrats can avoid being tarred with Reagan's favorite campaign attack on them as the party of "tax and tax, spend and spend."

The Democratic Leadership Council, a group of elected officials, mostly from the South and West, who are dedicated to moving the Democrats to their version of the center, will meet in Williamsburg, Va., on Dec. 10, to discuss an agenda for the next two years.

On the right there is grumbling that the Republican Party blew it in 1986 and it's time for conservatives to find a new home. "A lot of conservatives will be rethinking their reliance on the Republican Party to provide leadership for the conservative cause," said Richard Viguerie, the New Right fund raiser.

On the left, the returns are read as a signal that voters are calling for a revival of "progressive populism."

Black leaders are saying their votes made the difference for the Democrats in several contests and the Rev. Jesse Jackson called on the Democratic Party to "engage in a mutually respectful, mutually beneficial relationship with this aroused vote."

Class of '85 in college, unemployed

WASHINGTON (AP) — The 2.7 million American youths who graduated from high school last year have gone on to college in record numbers, a Labor Department report shows.

But unemployment is high among those who dropped out of school last year or did not continue their education, according to the report by department economist Sharon R. Cohany in the latest issue of the Monthly Labor Review.

The report says 58 percent of the Class of '85 is in college. Labor statistics for the past 15 years show the percentage of high school graduates entering college reached a low of 49 percent in 1980. In 1984, 55 percent went on to college.

Of the 1.1 million graduates who did not enter college, the report shows that overall 64 percent have jobs. Only 34 percent of black graduates and 42 percent of Hispanic graduates have jobs, the report says.

For the 612,000 students who dropped out of high school between October 1984 and October 1985, the report says, 266,000 have jobs. Unemployment is highest among black dropouts, with 52 percent in the labor force compared with 72 percent of the white dropouts.

Ex-Carter Cabinet members won states former boss never able to OLYMPIA, Wash. (AP) — Three Democrats have scored political victories in the Pacific Northwest, where their former boss, Jimmy Carter, was never able to win a contest.

Although Carter never carried Washington, Oregon or Idaho in his presidential races, three former Cabinet members triumphed Tuesday:

— Brock Adams, a gregarious former six-term congressman and Carter's transportation secretary, ousted Republican Sen. Slade Gorton in Washington. Adams was in the Cabinet from 1977 until he resigned in 1979.

— Adams' successor at the Department of Transportation, former Portland Mayor Neil Goldschmidt, will move into the Oregon governors' mansion. He defeated Republican Norma Paulus, a former state legislator and Oregon secretary of state.

— Carter's interior secretary, Cecil Andrus, won the governor's chair in Republican Idaho. He withstood a big GOP turnout to edge past Lt. Gov. David Leroy.

The three are old friends and say they'll work together on common problems. Adams and Goldschmidt campaigned together in Portland, calling for tougher transportation regulations, particularly where nuclear waste is concerned.

Andrus, who also was Idaho's governor from 1971 to 1977, is used to warm relations with Washington and Oregon counterparts, especially when Republicans Dan Evans of Washington and Tom McCall of Oregon were in office. Evans, now a U.S. senator, endorsed Andrus this year.

The Northwest now has all Democratic governors. Washington's Booth Gardner campaigned for Goldschmidt and Andrus.

"It's an excellent opportunity for the region, a chance for cooperation, not confrontation," said Gardner spokesman Tim Zenk.

The Carter connection was a factor in all three races, albeit not central to any. None of the three states was carried by Carter in 1976 and 1980, or by his vice president and successor on the Democratic ticket, Walter Mondale.

All three men left public life after their Cabinet terms and allowed voters' memories to dim before seeking office again. Adams became a lawyer in Washington, D.C., Goldschmidt was a shoe company executive in Portland and Andrus moved home to Boise as a business consultant.

In Washington, Gorton cited Adams' tenure at Transportation, distributing copies of a U.S. News & World Report survey that rated him the worst Cabinet member. Gorton also cited Adams' chairmanship of the House Budget Committee to blame him for the nation's economic woes.

NATION IN BRIEF

Reagan's radio addresses available through phones

WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House, in a move that could increase the audience for President Reagan's weekly radio address, began making the speech available to radio stations through a telephone network Saturday.

A White House announcement said the new system would be available for a six-week trial period, beginning with Saturday's address from Camp David, in which the president discussed the federal budget process.

The president's address is carried live by the ABC, NBC and CBS radio networks as well as the radio networks of The Associated Press and United Press International and several independent networks.

The networks feed the speech to their subscribers, but there is no definite count of how many stations carry it. A spot check by the AP in September showed that in many sections of the country the broadcast cannot be heard.

The White House announcement said the address would be available live to stations via the AT&T telephone 900 network.

"The system will give radio stations throughout the country, that are not affiliated with a network which broadcasts the address, access to a live feed of the president's speech," the announcement said.

Baby's survival 'miracle'

MIAMI (AP) — A baby rocking in a swing at a pet shop was hurled 10 feet when a car crashed into the store but escaped without a scratch, police and her family said.

"It's a miracle she survived," said Robin Lowen, mother of 3-month-old Megan.

Megan was in a safety-seat swing at the Doggie Den shop Friday when a car driven by Jay Rojas spun out of control, crossed six lanes of traffic and rammed into the cinderblock wall behind the baby, police said.

The car knocked in a 40-square-foot section of the wall and sent it crashing into the store.

"Her chair just broke away from the swing with the impact, flew 10 feet in the air and landed on the rear end," said Sally Miller, Megan's grandmother and owner of the shop.

Accused spy released

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A former airman accused of trying to pass military secrets to the Soviet Union has been released on $200,000 bail.

Allen John Davies, 33, of San Jose, was ordered Friday to live with his parents in Cupertino and report to federal probation officers daily. He must be back in court this Friday.

"He was very happy to be out," said Davies' lawyer, Hary Hellerstein.

Davies' parents put up their home, cash and securities to post his bail.

Twain's advice to senators still good

WASHINGTON (AP) — The 13 new senators that voters are sending to Washington can expect plenty of advice, since the electorate has been giving advice to new senators for nearly 200 years.

Even Mark Twain once got into the act.

It was 1868 and Twain had recently returned from a journey to Europe and the Middle East that would furnish grist for his about-to-be famous travel book, "Innocents Abroad."

But that was in the future. To take care of the present Twain launched a stop-gap career as secretary to a U.S. senator and correspondent or "letter writer" for newspapers in San Francisco and Chicago.

Having observed the ways of senators up close and from the Senate press gallery, Twain undertook on Feb. 11, 1868, in a letter published in the Alta Californian in San Francisco, to offer the following advice.

Some of it is outdated. Some of it is not.

A new senator, wrote Twain, "ought not to spend millions in the purchase of volcanos and earthquakes (this was a reference to the then-pending purchase of Alaska) and then retrench by cutting off the Senate's stationery supplies."

"He ought not to keep mean whisky in his rooms and tell his constituents it is 40 years old."

"He ought not to draw a salary for his pet Newfoundland dog, under the name of 'Clerk' of the Senate Committee on So-Forth and So-Forth.

"He ought not to palm off old speeches from the Congressional Globe for 1832 as original, for behold, old speeches are even a more shameless fraud than new whisky.

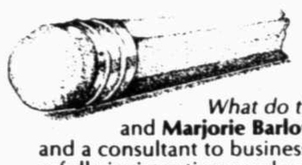

"He ought not to shirk important votes and then plead those threadbare 'sick relatives' in explanation. Something fresh must be tried...

"He ought to write a signature that another man can read, without direct inspiration from heaven.

"And finally let him never make a speech until he has something to say. This last is about the hardest advice to follow that could be offered to a senator, perhaps."

Enrile promises to prevent trouble in Aquino absence

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — President Corazon Aquino said Saturday that Defense Minister Juan Ponce Enrile, an outspoken critic of her policies, promised to do his best to prevent trouble when she visits Japan this week.

Two Manila newspapers, meanwhile, credited armed forces chief Gen. Fidel Ramos with preventing a coup allegedly planned by officers close to Enrile.

Mrs. Aquino told reporters she discussed rumors of an impending coup in a half-hour meeting with Enrile on Friday evening. A military source said Ramos arranged the meeting.

"I just said that just assure me that nothing happens while I'm in Japan," Mrs. Aquino said. "He said he's going to do his best."

Also on Saturday, Mrs. Aquino repealed presidential decrees that empowered her predecessor, ousted President Ferdinand E. Marcos, to arrest anyone indefinitely and without bail.

She said in an executive order that her action was intended to "make effective the guarantees of the rights and freedoms of the Filipino people." She had not used the decrees to make arrests.

The newspapers Manila Chronicle and Business Day each quoted unidentified military sources as saying Ramos headed off a coup attempt by officers close to Enrile. Enrile and Ramos led the February revolt that sent Marcos into exile in Hawaii after 20 years as president and swept Mrs. Aquino into office.

The reports said Ramos met with Enrile and military commanders Wednesday and Thursday.

Business Day said Wednesday that a group in the military planned to seize control of the government before the Feb. 2 referendum on a new constitution. Ramos responded the next day by issuing a warning against any such moves by "military adventurists."

Sources familiar with Business Day's operations said the plan was leaked to it by military figures close to Ramos. Ramos refused to comment.

Enrile, 62, has especially criticized Mrs. Aquino's peace overtures to the communists, who have waged a 17-year rebellion.

He has called for new presidential elections, removal of several Cabinet ministers, and replacement of some local officials appointed by the Aquino government.

Enrile's security chief, Col. Gregorio Honasan, told reporters the defense minister's aides knew nothing of a coup plot.

However, a senior officer, speaking on condition of anonymity, said he was among those who tried to dissuade disgruntled officers from moves against the government.

Afghans launch major offensive to gain fort

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — Thousands of Afghan troops backed by tanks and helicopter gunships have launched a major offensive in northern Afghanistan in an attempt to recapture a guerrilla-held fort, guerrilla sources said Saturday.

Jamiat-i-Islami, one of the largest Islamic guerrilla groups fighting the communist government of Afghanistan, said the Afghan army began the drive on Nov. 3 in the Fakhar district of Takhar province, near the Soviet border.

Initial reports described heavy fighting with losses on both sides, but gave few details.

Jamiat officials said troops from the Afghan 18th and 20th divisions were trying to retake a large government fort which was captured by guerrillas last August after several days fighting. The fort's garrison of about 300 soldiers was killed or captured and large amounts of weaponry were taken at that time, the officials said .

The officials, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said they had no further information on the fighting for control of the fort, but their sketchy reports indicated the insurgents were holding their ground.

Afghan troops were supported by Afghan helicopter gunships and jet fighter-bombers, the officials said.

An estimated 115,000 Soviet troops are helping the Kabul government fight guerrillas in Afghanistan. The Soviet troops entered Afghanistan in late 1979.

The Afghan government rarely allows Western journalists into the country and reports from inside Afghanistan cannot as a rule be checked independently.

Guerrilla officials based in Pakistan also said Saturday that at least 2,000 Afghan soldiers supported by an unknown number of Soviet troops began a separate drive on Nov. 2 against guerrilla positions around the southeastern city of Kandahar.

Soviet and Afghan jets were bombarding the guerrillas and large tank forces had been moved in, the officials said. The attack appeared to be an attempt to improve the government's defenses around the city before winter, they said.

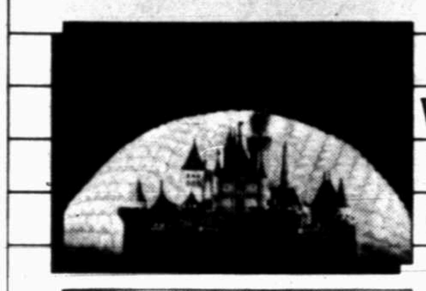

Reports from Kandahar described heavy fighting with dozens of casualties, the guerrilla officials said.

Kandahar, part of which is held by guerrilla forces, has been extensively damaged by repeated heavy fighting.

Hezbi-i-Islami, another guerrilla group, issued a statement Saturday saying its forces began an attack against Afghan government troops in Takhar province in the last week of October.

The guerrillas bombarded an army base with rockets, killing two senior Afghan army officers and 36 other soldiers, the Hezbi report claimed.

Hezbi insurgents also attacked army outposts in the Dash-e-Qila area of Takhar province with rockets, killing 12 Afghan soldiers, the statement said. One guerrilla was killed, it said.

Little done for homeless one year after town consumed

By JAVIER BAENA

LERIDA, Colombia (AP) — A year after a volcano's eruption swallowed up a Colombian town and more than 20,000 lives, day-to-day existence for many survivors is as bleak as the yellow-brown plain of mud that has buried their homes, their families, their memories.

Little has been done to resettle the homeless. Only 90 of 4,500 planned houses have been built, and those are poorly constructed. Nine hundred people still live in tents. Other refugees are scattered across Colombia, living with relatives.

The bureaucrats themselves complain that the government machinery is creakingly slow.

"The reality is that the government talks a lot but does little," architect Pedro Gomez, former director of the government relief agency Resurgence, said sadly in an interview.

Around Armero, the town destroyed by the volcanic mudslide, year-old signs of death are everywhere.

The desolate flats are dotted with hundreds of crosses fashioned from wood, plumbing pipe or other scrap material. Here and there, sun-bleached bones protrude from the mud.

Scavengers work daily atop what used to be Armero, digging through the dried muck. As night falls, they look like phantoms slipping silently over a lifeless surface. Approached by a visitor, one of them, Alfredo Caldas, turned up his palms in a gesture of helplessness.

"There isn't any work around here. What else is there to do?" he said. He and other scavengers earn about $5 a day selling scrap they find, Caldas said.

"Last month a friend found 200,000 pesos ($950), but when he put it out in the sun it just crumbled up into little pieces and blew away."

Armero died on the night of Nov. 13, 1985, when the Nevado del Ruiz volcano exploded in a fiery eruption that melted glacial ice on its slopes and sent a mud avalanche speeding downward at 100 mph through river canyons.

Although the Lagunilla River veers right just before reaching Armero, the mud surging down the river's path shot straight ahead and covered most of the town of 25,000 people in a bubbling hot mass, 15 feet high, that crushed, swept away and buried houses, automobiles and everything else in its path.

Some townspeople survived by running ahead of the wall of mud or somehow riding atop it.

Today, as seen from the air, the vast swath of dried mud — 20 miles long, up to two miles wide — stretches from the mouth of a canyon down through Armero's valley.

With each rainfall, the level of mud has dropped a little. It has fallen to street level in some places, exposing the remains of foundations or walls. But there is nothing to indicate that a thriving farm community once stood there, with a beautiful tree-shaded plaza, two-story homes and businesses, and a colonial church topped by a 50-foot bell tower.

Survivors of the mudslide fled here to Lerida, four miles away, or to other neighboring towns, some of which were also damaged.

Gomez said the yearlong relief effort has been bogged down by the national government's "elephant-like slowness."

WORLD IN BRIEF

Death demanded for those who bombed U.S. Embassy

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Military prosecutor Assad Diab has demanded the death penalty for six Lebanese accused of engineering the 1983 suicide bombing at the U.S. Embassy that killed 62 people, Diab's office said Saturday.

A Diab spokesman, who demanded not to be further identified, said all six were Shiite Moslems arrested by the army after the April 18, 1983, bombing in Moslem west Beirut.

An indictment issued Friday said the six men now in custody rigged a stolen U.S. Embassy van with 660 pounds of explosives in Zahrani, south Lebanon, a few days before the attack, the spokesman said.

According to the indictment, the van then was brought to Beirut where a suicide driver crashed it into the entrance of the embassy building at Ein Mreisseh boulevard.

The explosion tore off the entire facade of the eight-story embassy compound.

Among the dead were 17 Americans.

Prostitutes to be protected

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — President Corazon Aquino on Saturday ordered the Social Services Ministry to take child prostitutes and sexually exploited minors into protective custody for rehabilitation.

Officials estimate 10,000 of the country's child prostitutes live in Manila.

Mrs. Aquino said in an order released by the presidential press office that the government must protect prostitutes from "moral decline and lead them back to the path of morality."

Mrs. Aquino said those under 16 years old who are affected by the order will be given education, psychiatric treatment and job training while under government custody. She said $150,000 has been set aside for the program.

Oil well fire under control

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The Abkatun 91 off-shore oil well burning since Oct. 23 was under control Saturday and plans were being made for repairs to return it to production, the government oil monopoly Pemex announced.

GM to keep two strikebound plants closed

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — General Motors Corp. said Saturday it would keep its two strikebound plants closed because the union has not formally agreed that workers would end a 10-day wildcat strike.

The strike arose from the American auto firm's decision to sell its South African operation to local management. About 2,000 of GM's 3,000 workers struck on Oct. 29, demanding a say in the new management and money guarantees for anyone dismissed because of the sale.

On Thursday, the company fired 567 strikers who refused to end a sit-in protest at GM's two plants in Port Elizabeth, an industrial city on the Indian Ocean.

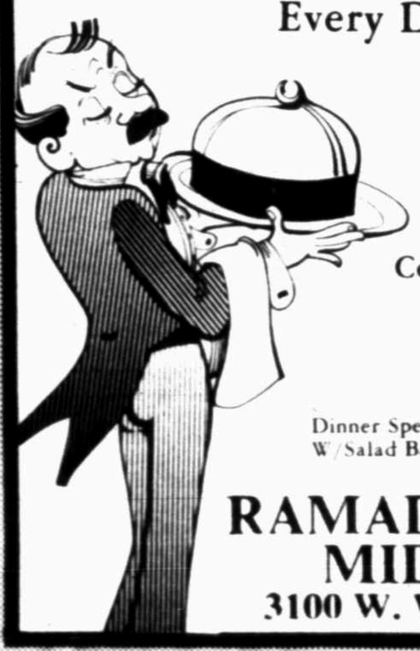

The National Automobile and Allied Workers Union conceded the workers had struck illegally — without a strike vote and other required steps.

Union officials told reporters Friday they had persuaded the workers to go back to their jobs on Monday, but without their employee identity badges as a sign of protest.

That led the company to indicate it would reopen the plants Monday and resume production. But GM said in a statement Saturday that the union had not notified company officials of any agreement, and it knew of the purported back-to-work plans only through news accounts.

That lack of communication suggested the strike would continue, the statement said, and given the need to prevent violence and protect property, both plants would remain closed Monday.

Cold front expected in Basin area

From Staff and Wire Reports

A cold front is expected to move through the Permian Basin this evening, dropping temperatures into the upper 30s from a high in the upper 60s, according to the forecast from the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Air Terminal.

Today's forecast calls for sunny skies with a high in the upper 60s. Winds will be from the north, 5-15 mph.

Tonight will be fair with a low in the upper 30s, but Monday is expected to warm up and reach into the lower 60s.

The low of 42 degrees Saturday was 15 degrees warmer than the record low of 27 set in 1948. The record-breaking high of 87 set in 1934 was also 15 degrees warmer than Saturday's high of 72.

STATE

Showers and a few thunderstorms were scattered over Southeast Texas and parts of East Texas Saturday as a cold front stretched from the east over to the middle Rio Grande Plains.

Skies were partly to mostly cloudy over most of North and South Texas, while sunny to partly cloudy skies prevailed over the rest of the state, the National Weather Service reported.

Afternoon temperatures were mostly in the 60s and 70s behind the front, while readings in the 80s were common ahead of it. The 3 p.m. extremes ranged from 56 degrees at Guadalupe Pass to 93 degrees in McAllen.

The forecast for today calls for a chance of showers over East and South Texas, while the rest of the state should have more weather like what it saw Saturday.

Forecasters said colder weather with rain and even some snow in the Panhandle and South Plains will invade the state from the west by Tuesday.

NATION

A powerful storm system near the Minnesota-Ontario border spread snow, low temperatures and very high wind Saturday across the Dakotas and part of Minnesota, while the Southeast had record highs.

Fifteen inches of snow covered the ground at Minot Air Force Base in North Dakota.

A blizzard warning was posted for southwestern through northeastern North Dakota. Snow combined with wind gusting to around 50 mph to create blizzard conditions, with near-zero visibility in many areas.

Farmers diversify to survive

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Farmers and ranchers may be persuaded to diversify just to survive in today's depressed economy.

"There are going to be some changes," promised Earnest Kiker, Midland County agricultural agent. "We like to talk about 'enterprise diversity.' "

The reason for that, of course, is that the one-crop approach to farming is just about costing the farmer his farm. When the weather, economy and market don't pan out for the farmer, his survival is threatened.

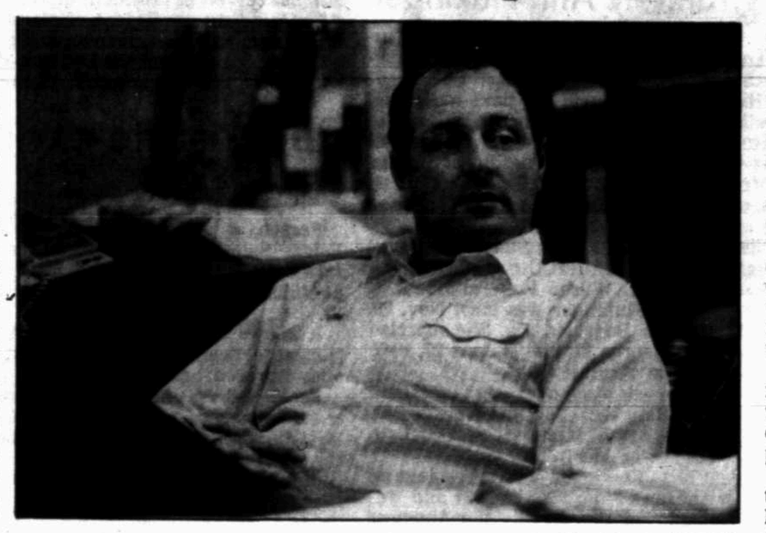

Cotton prices are low — less than profitable. Cotton has been damaged by nature's overly generous rainfall at harvest time. Cotton production is going to be dramatically down from last year. There's a cotton surplus, and the market is accordingly "down."

The surplus, said Shane Lowrie, Midland County assistant agricultural agent, largely is "the result of staying zeroed in on one crop."

"The farmers are doing a good job at what they are doing," Lowrie said, "but more diversification is needed."

Traditionally, farmers have tuned their optimism to the "next-year" philosophy: Things will get better next year. Today, they're discouraged. Year after year, "things" haven't turned for the better.

"I think the optimism is still there," Lowrie said. "But maybe not as much as it has been in the past, and that's largely due to the financial situation they (farmers and ranchers) are facing today. Probably a large percentage of them don't know if they are going to be in farming next year."

Ron Jaap/Reporter-Telegram

Earnest Kiker, Midland County agricultural agent, says that farmers and ranchers must diversify if they are to survive in today's depressed economy.

AND THERE IS an effort afoot to diversify the farm economy in Midland County. But even in diversification, cotton likely would remain the main "cash" crop.

Kiker cited the launching of a farmers market in Midland and Odessa last summer and studies on implementing fish-and-shrimp farming here.

"That (the Permian Basin Farmers Market) was a step in providing a market outlet for diversification," he said. "You have to have a market for your crops before you diversify." Without a market to sell their products, farmers helplessly watch their crops go to waste in the fields.

There can be a payoff in diversifying. For instance, some farmers (each) grossed more than $9,000 this summer and early fall in selling fruits and vegetables in the farmers market.

"That's better than $2,000 a month" for the four months during which the farmers market was in operation, Kiker said. "That's just through the market channel. It could be a great asset not only for consumers but for agricultural production in this area. I don't know of any farmer who couldn't use $9,000.

"There's a possibility for fish production in Midland County," said Kiker. "(Neighboring) Martin County has conducted some research in shrimp and redfish. They had real good success this year. There's a pretty tremendous market for fish and shrimp in Midland-Odessa."

Ward County, which is west of Midland-Odessa, is researching redfish production, but has ceased its shrimp farming, he said.

THE PRODUCTION of grains, such as wheat and sorghum, has not been profitable as a result of depressed prices. Prices of hay, including alfalfa, are down. Pecan prices are up. But pecan-raising, like grapegrowing, is a long-range project from inception to production.

To live with the current depressed situation, farmers are challenged to cut costs, to find more economical ways to manage their production, and, equally important, to produce crops which the consumer needs, wants and is willing to buy. Farmers must find or develop markets for their cash crops.

In that regard, Kiker said that key issues include economics, water, diversification, marketing, financing, consumer needs and product processing.

"You need to see what would be the most economical and feasible," Kiker said. "You're going to have to diversify in several agricultural commodities."

"I don't see any one commodity as being a panacea," Lowrie said.

"We are going to have to become more efficient in our production practices," Kiker said, "and gain more experience in the marketing of our agricultural products."

Kiker and Lowrie recommended that cotton farmers maintain their cotton crop and, at the same time, raise other crops, such as wheat and sorghum. In addition, they could invest in livestock. Their cattle and sheep could graze on the wheat and stubble.

However, Kiker noted that the cattle market is "not anything to brag about. To be successful in the ranching industry, we are going to have to be more efficient in our production practices, decision-making and marketing."

And the appeal of the agricultural life seem to be waning.

"The romance is leaving the farm," said Kiker, "as we continue in the economic depression we're in."

Sherrilyn Blaze, a life science teacher, works with her students at Alamo Junior High. She has been named the Chamber of Commerce's Teacher of the Month.

Alamo teacher seeks classroom challenges

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Despite having longtime aspirations to coach athletics, Alamo Junior High School life science teacher Sherrilyn Blase says she likes life in the classroom.

Mrs. Blase, the Midland Chamber of Commerce's Teacher of the Month, said "there's always a challenge, there's always the thought that I can make a difference.

"Maybe I can help some kids, turn them on to something," she said.

Chosen because of her extracurricular work with teens at Alamo, Mrs. Blase serves as faculty advisor to the Student Council and was instrumental in the establishment of the school's Prevention Using Student Help program.

PUSH has "grown so fast, it's hard to keep the small group atmosphere, but that's good because these kids are looking for a place to go and not be subjected to drugs and alcohol," she said.

"There are kids who don't want to be involved with drugs," she added, "and a lot of kids have found out they can have fun and be chemical free."

Ronnie Williams of Midland nominated Mrs. Blase for the Chamber award, citing a dramatic increase in student participation wherever she is involved.

Last spring, Mrs. Blase was chosen by her peers as the Alamo faculty representative to the Texas Classroom Teacher's Association. In that capacity, she placed second in Texas for membership growth. She also is an active member of the Science Teachers Association and has been involved in initiating a preventive substance abuse program at Alamo.

Mrs. Blase formerly served on the state Science Textbook Selection Committee as well as the Textbook Selection Committee at all levels. She serves on the MISD Teacher Communication Committee, which meets with Superintendent Dr. Joseph P. Baressi to address changes, problems and faculty concerns within the school system.

Teachers have a different attitude about their profession this year than last, following the passage of education reforms, Mrs. Blase implied.

She said the TECAT (Texas Examination of Current and Administrators and Teachers), administered last March, placed a heavy burden on the shoulders of educators.

While teachers have put the test behind them, they still have some concerns, including the state's standard appraisal system and the effect of the state and local economies on job security.

"A lot of teachers are really worried about the appraisals, but there's probably not anything on it that they're not already doing. I believe there's a lot of undue concern and a lot of unnecessary emphasis placed upon it," she said.

Gastric bubble aids 'morbidly overweight' Midlanders

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

After tipping the scales at 300 pounds in the doctor's office, the obese woman lamented that she ate constantly because she just never felt full.

The doctor checked the weight tables and found his patient was indeed "morbidly overweight" or at least double what she should weigh. He determined that she was indeed a candidate for the "Garren-Edwards Gastric Bubble."

The gastric bubble, approved by the Food and Drug Administration 13 months ago, has made its way to Midland Memorial Hospital.

Gastroenterologist Dr. R.P. Sarva is a Midland physician who does the simple procedure, implanting the bubble into a person's stomach.

Sarva said the gastric bubble is an alternative to other drastic weight control measures such as wiring jaws together or having one's stomach stapled in half to make the patient feel full.

The gastric bubble is a soft plastic, inflatable balloon.

"The deflated balloon is placed on the end of a tube and inserted down through the throat into the stomach," Sarva said.

The balloon is inflated into its round cylinder-like form and floats freely in the upper half of the stomach. It reduces the stomach's volume, causing the person's appetite to decrease because he or she feels full, Sarva said.

However, this is not a "magic cure" for obesity, he said. It is used in conjunction with a 1,000 calorie-a-day diet and behavior modification therapy conducted by Midland clinical psychologist Dr. David Koch.

"The bubble initiates the weight loss cycle, but the therapy is needed to get to the root of the patient's overeating," Sarva said.

The procedure is done on an outpatient basis and takes about 30 minutes to complete. The patient receives medicine to relieve the "gag reflex" (occurring when the tube is introduced down the throat) as well as a mild sedative.

The procedure costs about $2,500. That price tag includes a $1,600 hospital fee covering the initial screening, initial implantation, the bubble removal, dietary therapy and the behavior modification program.

The doctor performing the treatment takes home about $900 Sarva said.

Because the procedure is so new, standards have not yet been set for payment by insurance companies. At present, insurers consider the claims on a case-by-case basis.

Currently, the procedure is limited to adults because few children have undergone it, but Sarva said children could receive the same treatment in the future.

Political extremes keep moderates honest

The call came late in the night Wednesday.

I fumbled with the phone briefly before forcing a "hello" from my lips.

"Well, what did you think of the election?" The voice was vaguely familiar but it took me several seconds to place it.

Finally I did.

It was an old college buddy I hadn't seen or heard from in several years and, as a result, the incident turned out to be one of those rare late night phone calls that is actually enjoyable.

We laughed and briefly caught up on each other's recent past. For what it is worth, he's doing fine and I suppose I am too.

Then we got back to the election.

"Looks like Texas is becoming more and more conservative," I said.

"It's always been conservative," he corrected. "Now it's becoming a Republican kind of conservative."

"How does that set with you?" I was teasing him. He was, at least in college some 14 years ago, the most liberal person I had ever met, the kind who worked tirelessly for McGovern in the '72 election and sincerely believed in what that campaign represented. I figured him to be the type who would never change.

It was a good assumption.

"To be honest," he said. "I'm worried about the country. We're heading in the wrong direction and no one seems to care. It's scary."

"I take it your views are still somewhere left of Karl Marx."

"Damn straight," he snapped. "And, I ain't apologizing for it, either."

"It must get awfully lonely out there," I said.

"Sometimes," he admitted. "But, when the country finally begins to swing back, and it surely will, I'll be in the forefront."

"You always were a dreamer."

"Listen to you," he said, unable to hide his disgust. "Sounds to me like you have sold out and become a yuppy Reaganite."

"Who, me?" I couldn't resist a cynical laugh.

"Well, where do you stand these days?"

"What?" I was confused.

He wasn't. "I said, where do you stand?"

"Nowhere in particular," I yawned. "In fact, I try to sit whenever possible, preferably where it's cool and semi-dark."

We both laughed.

"You never did take all of this seriously, did you?" We were now just talking as old friends.

"Not like you did," I had to admit. "First time I met you, I knew left-wing politics was your life. You loved being in the middle of every argument, fighting for the underdog. Your face would light up when you attacked the establishment. It was clear you believed every word you were saying."

"I thought you did, too," he said.

"I did. But the problem was, when I'd hear the other side, it sorta made sense, too. It was all quite interesting but I never could feel strongly enough one way or the other to become a crusader. That's why we need people like you."

We ended our conversation a short time later.

I felt good. The country's liberal wing is in good hands. We need that, just like we need the far right.

Almost invariably, national policy is going to fall somewhere in the middle. This is as it should be. Still, voices from the extreme are a necessity. They keep those of us in the middle honest, not allowing the balance of power to tilt too far one way or the other.

Besides, extremists are far more fun to be around than moderates.

You might not cast a vote for a Jesse Helms or a Jesse Jackson but listening to one of them give a passionate speech has got to be more intriguing than suffering through 30 minutes of "looking at both sides of the issue" logic offered up by some electable moderate.

Anyway, if we eliminate the radicals just think how boring those midnight calls will become.

BUBBLE

Although the procedure is generally considered to be safe, American Edwards Laboratory, makers of the gastric balloon, have warned doctors of the possibility of serious complications.

These include intestinal blockage and ulcers which resulted in death for one Florida woman and affected 80 of the other 17,000 recipients.

American Edwards instructed doctors to have patients notify them immediately if they suffer symptoms such as abdominal pain, vomiting or increased appetite.

Sarva said about 5 percent of the recipients suffer common side effects such as gastritis or ulcers and are required to take antacids and other medications to curtail the increased acid production in the stomach.

"The balloon is a foreign body in the stomach. This increases the production of stomach acids (creating a surplus) because the bubble stays in the stomach," Sarva said.

Under more normal conditions, he explained, stomach acid is passed on through and out of the body.

These acids can perforate the lining of the stomach and cause ulcers.

The bubble is only left in for a maximum of three months, Sarva said. The removal procedure consists of going back into the stomach with the tube, deflating the balloon and removing it.

If the balloon should deflate unexpectedly without the help of the doctor, the remnants will most likely pass through the intestines, but, in some instances, may create a blockage in the intestine. This would require surgery to remove the deflated balloon, Sarva said.

Patients must abstain from alcoholic beverages, he said, as well as aspirin and aspirin-like products (arthritis medicine, for example). In addition, they're required to stay on a liquid diet for the first week.

In regard to the death of the one patient who received the balloon, Sarva said her intestine may have been perforated and not treated in time.

Though Sarva said another bubble cannot be put in immediately after one has been removed, a new bubble can be inserted after an unspecified length of time if the patient begins to gain the weight back.

Youth of our community who make a difference.

Jason Sever

"If one student sticks up for what he believes, that shows another one that it's not all that bad," says Lee Freshman student Jason Sever.

Jason has been actively expressing his belief that "It's possible to have fun without using drugs, and you have the high after the party, too."

As an eighth grader and Student Council vice-president, this young man helped organize a P.U.S.H. (Prevention Using Student Help) program at Alamo Junior High School. Jason says he had heard about the program through some other students. Not only did it sound like fun, it also looked like a good way to help young people avoid the trap of drug abuse.

This, Jason believes, is of utmost importance at the junior high level. At that age, he says, students become more open about drugs and more vulnerable to peer pressure to use drugs. Jason thinks the P.U.S.H. program is making a difference.

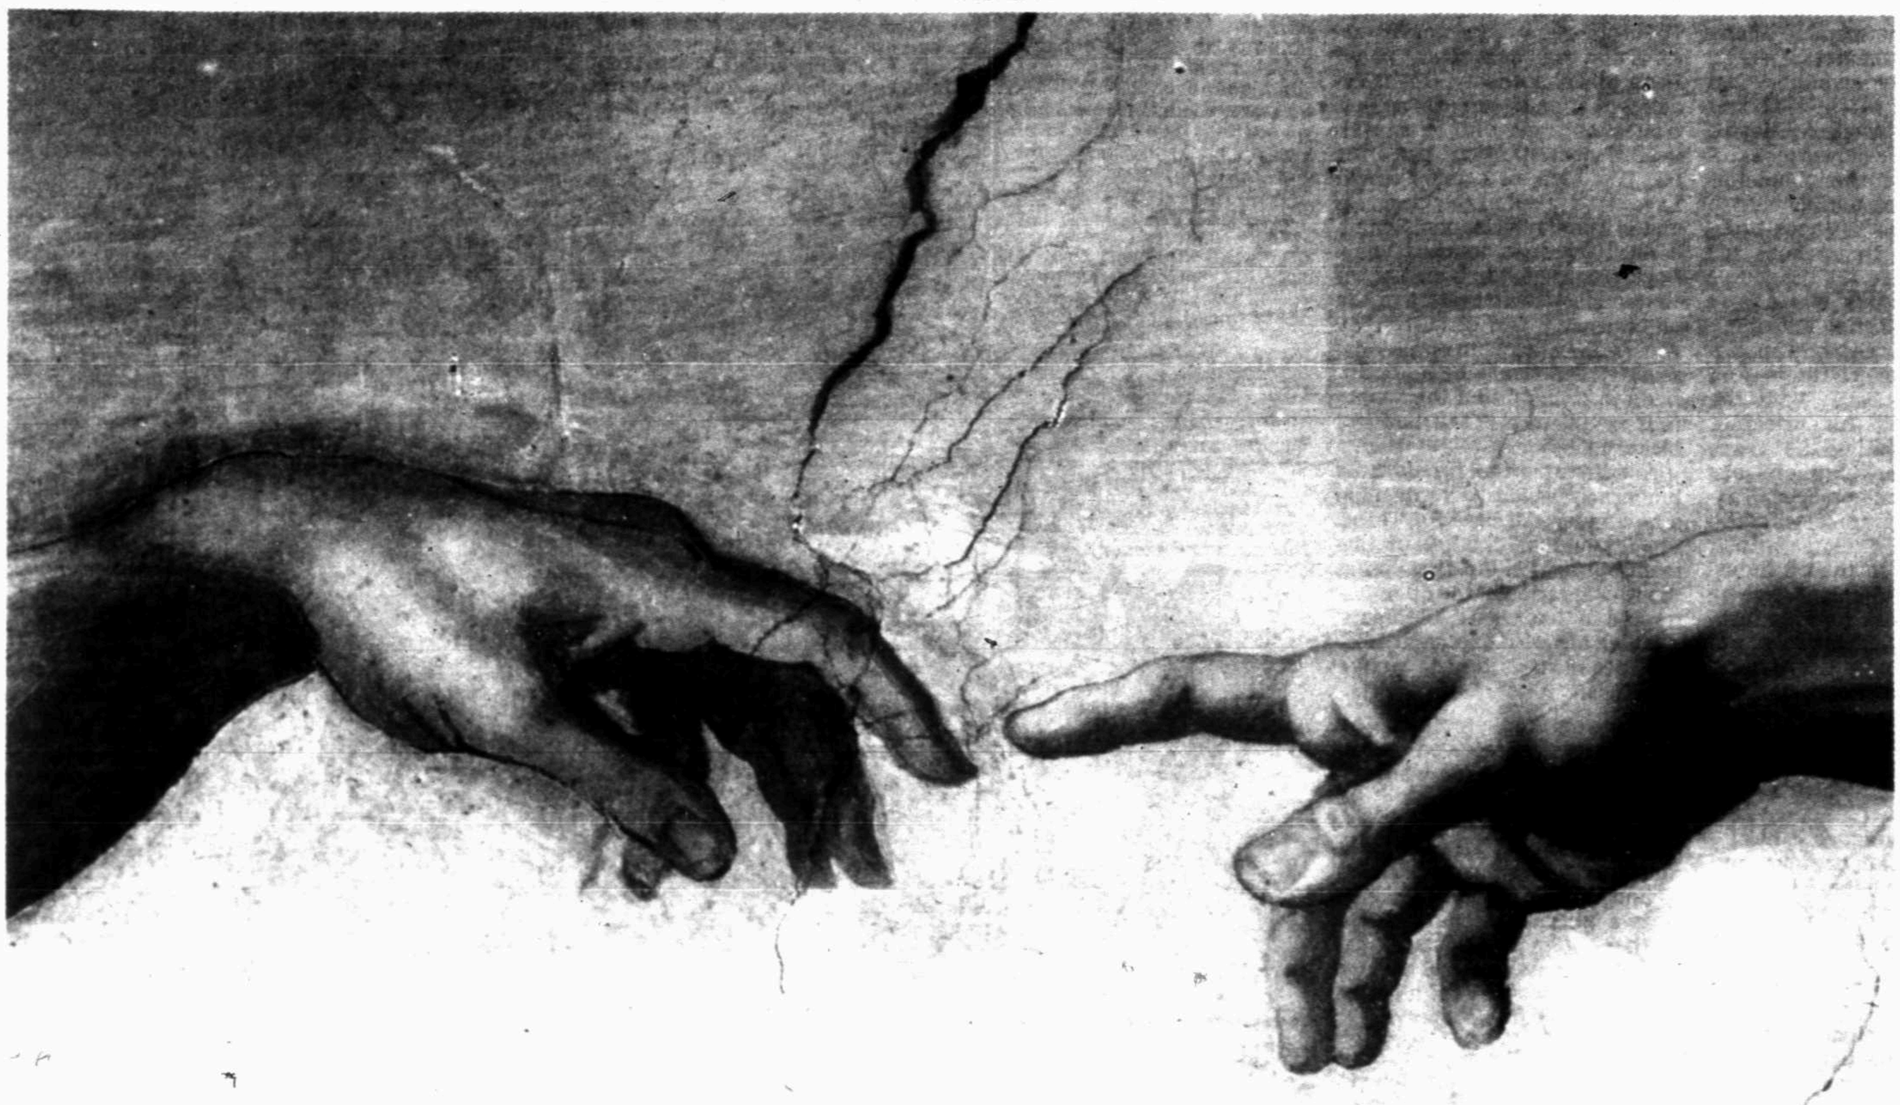

Between P.U.S.H.-sponsored dances, Six Flags trips and other activities, Jason played football and baseball at Alamo Junior High. Last year he was the recipient of the American Legion Award, the Optimist's Club 95 Award and an award for outstanding achievement in Spanish. As one of Midland's original participants in the Gifted and Talented program, Jason attended the Shake Hands With Your Future program at Texas Tech during the summer.

This school year, Jason is participating in football and the Fellowship of Christian Athletes. He plans to play baseball in the spring and is active at the First Church of the Nazarene. Already, he's making plans to attend Texas A&M and study to be a veterinarian.

It's apparent by his actions, that Jason Sever cares about his fellow students.

Helping Each Other Has Always Been Our Plan.

In 1964, it wasn't "the best of times" in Midland; the price of oil was below $5 per barrel, hundreds of homes were for sale with little hope, and unemployment was making national news. Everyone in Midland felt the crunch. But the ones that always seem to feel the hurt the deepest—the children, the old and socially disadvantaged, found themselves victims of circumstance with nowhere to look for help.

So, the caring and the love Midlanders have shown a thousand times since neighbors first rallyed to raise a friend's barn, once again stirred in the hearts of those who care deeply about their community. Casa De Amigos, "The House of Friends," quietly began to carve a philosophy — "Help People Help Themselves."

Today, the Casa serves Midland's east side with social, educational, medical and senior activity services.

The social service program has a professional social worker trained to serve the needs of Casa clients.

Casa offers bilingual education opportunities, from High School Equivalency Degrees, to English classes, homework help, to Adult Continuing Education classes and a Need to Read program.

Casa also provides general medical screening, with area physicians and nurses donating time to provide education and medical and dental care.

Casa provides an activities and care program for senior citizens. The Casa Hot Lunch program feeds a balanced meal to over 60 people each day. Other activities range from arts and crafts to bingo, Bible study, field trips and dances.

Casa De Amigos continues to thrive on the talents and resources of a caring community. Participation in Casa doesn't require any special skill—just a big heart. You can't beat the feeling of reaching out, and discovering a wonderful person — you!

"God must look down with special favor on a community that could not bear to see his children, young or old, black, white, yellow or brown, whole or handicapped, go hungry or cold, sick or imprisoned or without hope." He no doubt has a special place in his heart for those who have a special place in their hearts for Casa De Amigos — a very special place.

Wasting no time

Gov. Mark White surely has to be pleased about one aspect of his loss in this week's election: He now gets to turn over to Gov.-elect Bill Clements all of the state's mounting and seemingly unsolvable dilemmas — record unemployment, a collapsing state economy, depressed and threatened oil and agriculture industries. They're now the former governor's responsibility and the people of Texas are looking to Clements to provide solutions to those problems and to revitalize hope for the state's future.

Clements didn't waste any time after the election in making known his priorities and in giving an indication of the way in which he'll do battle with the state's problems. His priorities will be rejuvenating the Texas economy and making more jobs available for unemployed Texans. He'll also grapple with the state's financial dilemma, which is directly tied to the oil industry's problems. Clements says he will appoint a task force to fashion essential elements of his program for the 70th Legislature, which goes into session Jan. 13. That's the approach to governing Clements was known for when he formerly occupied the Governor's Mansion and which served the state well.

The priorities Clements has established are the obvious and crucial ones. We believe he's correct to push for a revitalization of the state's economy because that is the key to most of the problems afflicting the state. With a revitalization of the oil industry, the problems of unemployment and the state's budget shortfall likely would be reduced, possibly even eliminated. But we are aware that revitalizing the oil industry is not a simple step that can be accomplished overnight. To a great degree the ability to control oil prices remains out of the hands of Americans.

But there are particular actions that can be taken and could boost the oil economy. One is enactment of an oil import fee that would help provide a much-needed domestic floor price for oil. That step, of course, would have to be taken in the Congress and in Tuesday's election, Senate control was lost to the Democrats. That shouldn't matter, of course, since revitalization of the oil industry would benefit every American in its realm of national security. But it may be more difficult to accomplish if the Senate falls victim to partisan political bickering.

Another step that would help immensely would be to develop a new industrial base for Texas. That should be another of Clements' priorities. But first comes the revitalization of the oil industry and in that regard, Clements' relationship with President Ronald Reagan should prove beneficial.

Following the election, Clements said he received a call from President Reagan who congratulated him and said he wants to help turn the Texas economy around. The fact that Clements knows the oil business — and Reagan knows Clements — is a plus that could lead to further action on the state's depressed oil industry. And that, as we noted, would lead to a better overall statewide economy.

A revitalized economy may not of itself ensure the state's future, but it definitely is a step in the right direction.

Another View:

Now, the Demos

The predicters were, as usual, wrong — or at least not quite right. Just as the Republican capture of the Senate in 1980 had been pretty much an unforeseen event, so too was Tuesday's outcome.

The Democrats won a handsome victory in the Senate. It was not even close to being the squeaker we all foresaw.

A year ago we carried a warning by a devoted Democrat, former White House aide Anne Wexler, to her colleagues that they had better get their act together in case they won the Senate in 1986 and thus, controlling Congress, were seen by the electorate in 1988 as having a considerable responsibility for the condition of the country — whatever it might be by then.

This theme has been sounded repeatedly in recent days, and now, amid the congratulations, the pointed and relevant questions are being asked: Is Robert Byrd really the person an ascendant and ambitious Democratic Senate majority wishes to have as its leader? Do the Democrats have the discipline and imagination to come forward with plausible alternatives to administration policy? What are they for? Etc.

Our question is somewhat different. It is: Can the Democrats be as effective an opposition to the Republican administration as the Republican-run Senate has been?

Yes, we know: within the Republican membership of the Senate, from Jesse Helms, say, to Lowell Weicker, there are political chasms as wide and temperamental differences as sharp as anything you find on the Democrats' side of the aisle.

And it is also true that on various large major issues, the Senate Republicans have encouraged President Reagan in some of his most misbegotten ideas.

But it is also the case and, in our view, the central fact of the way the country has been governed in the past several years that determined, intelligent Republican initiatives and-or resistance in the Senate have been a force for good.

Dole, Simpson, Lugar, Kassebaum, Cohen, Packwood, Domenici — there are more, but these are among the many Senate Republicans who have made their weight felt in invaluable ways on everything from fiscal policy to the Philippines and South Africa sanctions in the Reagan years.

Our point is not that the Democratic Senate should treat Reagan with the same deference the Republicans did (even when those Republicans were fighting him). The country did not elect a Democratic majority to play at being something else.

But Bob Dole's Republicans surely did give some lessons in how to influence an administration to good effect. The Democrats, who are — and are meant to be — the real opposition, take over from pros.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, Nov. 9, the 313th day of 1986. There are 52 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Nov. 9, 1965, between 5:15 and 5:28 p.m. EST, most of the northeastern United States and parts of Canada were hit by a snowballing series of power failures. The resulting blackout lasted anywhere from 40 minutes to 13½ hours, depending on the area affected.

On this date:

In 1872, fire destroyed nearly 1,000 buildings in Boston.

In 1918, Germany's Kaiser Wilhelm II announced he would abdicate. He then fled to the Netherlands.

In 1935, United Mine Workers President John L. Lewis and other labor leaders formed the Committee for Industrial Organization as part of the American Federation of Labor.

In 1938, bands of Nazis roamed the streets of Germany, looting and burning synagogues as well as Jewish-owned stores and houses. The vandalism became known as "Crystal Night" because of the broken glass that littered the streets.

In 1953, the U.S. Supreme Court upheld a 1922 ruling that major-league baseball did not come within the scope of federal antitrust laws.

In 1963, twin disasters struck Japan as about 450 miners were killed in a coal-dust explosion, and 160 people died in a train crash.

Failing economy may destroy Egypt

WASHINGTON — Egypt is perhaps the United States' closest ally in the Arab world. It is the most populous — and one of the poorest — of the Arab states. What happens to Egypt could have an enormous impact on the Middle East.

Jack Anderson

The Egyptian government's apparent inability to cope with the country's overwhelming economic problems, therefore, has caused deep concern within the Reagan administration.

The outlook is grim indeed for impoverished Egypt. Terrorist incidents in the region have had a devastating impact on the country's tourist industry, which used to bring in $1 billion a year of badly needed hard currency. The world oil glut and continuing low prices have cut Egypt's modest but important oil export income by more than half.

Adding to the country's difficulties are the tens of thousands of Egyptian workers who used to earn valuable foreign exchange in Saudi Arabia and other neighboring states, but who have been fired and sent home as these countries cut their own expenditures to compensate for falling oil revenues. Not only does the Egyptian economy sorely miss the money these workers once sent home to their families, but the returned workers, unhappy and unable to find jobs, are a new source of political discontent.

Finally, there is the increasing threat posed to the beleaguered government of President Hosni Mubarak by Moslem fundamentalists who want to transform Egypt into a strict Islamic state on the Iranian model. The fundamentalist mullahs are chafing at the bit, eager to seize power the minute Mubarak makes a mis-move.

In fact, the situation Egypt finds itself in today is so serious that some competent analysts are warning the White House that the Mubarak regime could collapse early in 1987. The only course that will save Egypt's struggling democracy, these observers say, is for Mubarak to come to grips at last with reality and make some hard choices.

Yet there is little evidence that the Egyptian government is prepared to take the risky but necessary steps. For months, Egypt's lobbyists have been working Congress and the White House diligently, hoping to convince the Reagan administration that further U.S. aid is the only solution that can rescue their country — and save the U.S. position and the $20 billion in aid that has gone to Egypt since the Camp David accords.

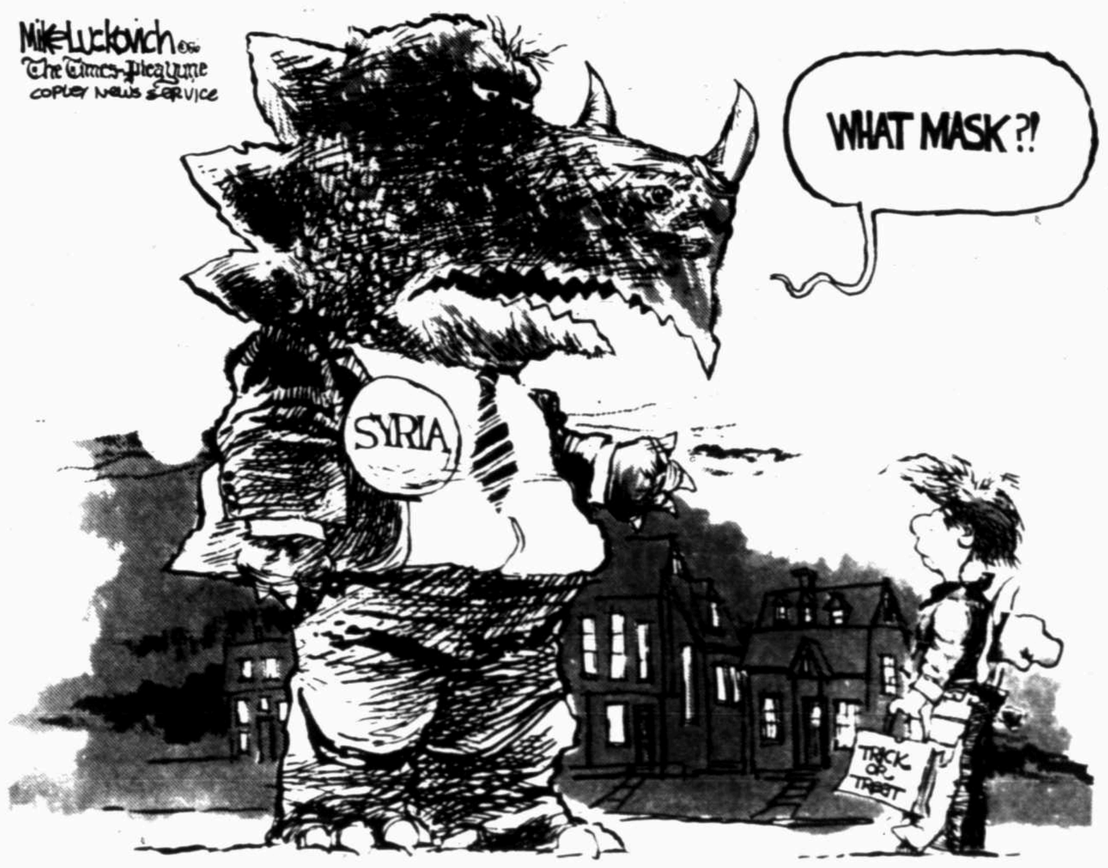

As luck would have it, the decision makers will soon have a lengthy analysis of Egypt's dilemma to study. It's a report prepared by the Heritage Foundation, the conservative think-tank with close ties to the Reagan administration. Our associate Lucette Lagnado has had an advance look at the voluminous report, prepared by James Phillips, the foundation's resident specialist on the Middle East.

"American aid is a palliative of limited therapeutic value," the foundation report notes. "A case can be made that aid may even be counterproductive because it acts as a sedative to dull Cairo's sense of urgency in undertaking reforms."

Egypt has a cash-flow problem that could sink it, the report explains: "By late 1986 or early 1987, Egypt faces a time of reckoning when its foreign currency reserves are exhausted. If it cannot borrow money it is unable to earn, then Egypt will be confronted with the stark choice of defaulting on its foreign debt or risking political turmoil by cutting imports."

That turmoil is no mere hypothetical nightmare. Mubarak's assassinated predecessor, Anwar Sadat, incited serious food riots when he rashly raised the price of bread by the equivalent of a penny.

The foundation report identifies the basic source of Egypt's present day predicament as the "heavy-handed socialist policies" of the nation's charismatic leader, Gamal Abdel Nasser.

Conservative judicial activism poses conflict

WASHINGTON — A '60s sensibility is slinking back into public life, this time in conservative judicial activism that is as pernicious as liberal activism. In the Tennessee textbook case, conservatives have invoked, as '60s radicals did, "sincerity" as a legitimizing license for turning schools into arenas of conflict.

George F. Will

The decision is that parents' and pupils' First Amendment right to "free exercise" of religion is unconstitutionally "burdened" if pupils are exposed to instructional material distressingly at odds with their religious beliefs. The judge said a controlling fact must be the uncontested sincerity of the plaintiffs' beliefs, however peculiar, about Holt, Rinehart & Winston readers — readers used in 15,000 school districts.

The judge said: "The plaintiffs have sincerely held religious beliefs which are entitled to protection under the...." Hold it. Constitutional protection of belief? Protection from what? Literature? Science? The 20th century? The free-exercise clause protects a broad sphere of conduct. However, it is not a guarantee of intellectual spiritual serenity, or a commitment to protect parents and children from influences that might complicate the transmission of sectarian beliefs.

The Tennessee plaintiffs objected to "The Diary of Anne Frank" (Anne said having some religion was more important than having a particular religion), "The Wizard of Oz" (it contains a good witch and implies that virtues can be acquired without God's help), "Cinderella" (magic), "Macbeth" (witchcraft), Hans Christian Andersen (fortune telling), Greek and Roman mythology (idol worship), concepts of death contrary to Biblical teaching, and all stimulation of children's imaginations "beyond the limitations of scriptural authority." The Tennessee judge's understanding of the "free-exercise" right would empower elementary-school pupils to leave the room when the class comes to readings that threaten to cause distress.

The Supreme Court has held that the free-exercise guarantee was violated when a Jehovah's Witness was denied unemployment compensation after resigning from a firm rather than accept transfer to armaments work; or when a similar denial of a state benefit resulted because a Seventh Day Adventist quit a job rather than work on Saturday; or when a diploma was denied to a student who, on religious grounds, refused to attend state-required ROTC training.

In these cases, state benefits were made contingent on conduct violative of a central religious tenet. The Tennessee case was quite different. The plaintiffs were not seeking exemption from forbidden conduct but exemption from exposure to disturbing thoughts. In the cases the Supreme Court has decided, the religious persons only sought access to a state benefit. In Tennessee, the plaintiffs insisted that the benefit (education) be tailored to their tastes.

Imagine the claims and counterclaims that will be litigated in every school district when word gets around that the "free-exercise" clause is a guarantee against state action discomfiting to sincerely held theistic notions. But surely elective participation in public education can not be tailored to sectarian sensibilities without violating another clause of the First Amendment — the ban on any "establishment" of religion. "Establishment" would be the clear consequence of state action to satisfy the plaintiff's insistence that their children not be exposed to ideas they consider contrary to scripture or "that might cause confusion" about religious beliefs.

Parents have a constitutional right to send children to private schools, even inferior ones, where they will be protected from serious literature and other disturbing influences. But chaos must result when parents are invested with a right to fine-tune their children's cooperation with a public-school curriculum. That is bound to be disruptive and is bound to exert pressure toward blandness, dumbness and falsehood in instruction. (Imagine teaching evolution to little creationists.)

Pluralism depends on tolerance of diversity, a value subverted by assertion of a constitutional right to retreat from all but comforting instruction. Furthermore, there is a social interest not only in pluralism but in commonality, in a shared grammar of the intellect. That must involve acquaintance with facets of history, science and literature that are problematic for certain religious mentalities.

RUSSELL BAKER

'On the ball' folks know about Cyndi Lauper!

I used to keep up with things. Keeping up with things seemed important. Vital. American. People who did it were on the ball, with it, on their toes, wide awake. No moss grew on them. They had moxie. They were in touch, au courant, plugged in. They knew the score.

Russell Baker

I wanted to be praiseworthy like that, so I kept up with things. I could name all of Artie Shaw's wives, tell you how many weeks "Elmer's Tune" had been on the Hit Parade and explain how to tell a Buick's age by counting the holes on the side of its hood.

I knew the Yankees should have brought Charlie Keller up from the Newark Bears before the Yankees knew it, knew the Japanese were behaving badly in Manchuria before the makers of War Cards Bubble Gum knew it, knew that Ann ("The Oomph Girl") Sheridan was a descendant of the Civil War hero Gen. Philip Sheridan before other kids on the block knew what the Civil War was.

I am reminded of this because I just had to ask somebody, "Who or what is Cyndi Lauper?"

A disk jockey on radio had been talking as though Cyndi Lauper must be as well known as the Washington Monument. That was annoying. Nine chances out of 10 he hadn't the slightest notion who Charlie Keller was, yet here he was, raving as though all humanity would naturally know of Cyndi Lauper.

Anyhow, I asked around and learned who Cyndi Lauper was (wears funny hair and sings) and how to spell it. I do that once in a while when smitten by the old urge to keep up with things. A year ago I found out who Michael Jackson was after a woman I know said her 5-year-old daughter, a real charmer, was in love with him.

A man who could win that girl's heart must be worth keeping up with, I thought. The first person I asked wanted me to be ashamed of myself for not knowing who Michael Jackson was. Didn't I know anything? Didn't I know that Michael Jackson had just raked in $1 million or $5 million — I forget which — for making a TV commercial for a big cola company?

Apparently, Jackson was the biggest heist artist since Jesse James. Fortunately, the person who straightened me out was my son. No need to take abuse from him, so when he tried telling me I'd better start keeping up with things or I would soon be as outmoded as Lawrence Welk, I said, "OK, sonny boy, name all of Artie Shaw's wives," just to teach him humility.

What's wrong with being as outmoded as Lawrence Welk? Admittedly, Welkian music is not the Budapest String Quartet's music, but at least it is music you can whistle, which cannot be said of either the Budapest String Quartet's or Cyndi Lauper's music.

Sneers at Lawrence Welk usually come from people who keep up with things. I no longer see the point of keeping up with most things. I first experienced doubts when Eddie Fisher and Debbie Reynolds were getting divorced so Eddie could marry Elizabeth Taylor.

Eddie looked to me like a potential multimarrier. That bothered me. Artie Shaw was quieting down matrimonially at that time, and I was grateful to him for making it easier to keep up with things. Now suddenly here was Eddie looking as if he might pick up where Artie was leaving off.

For the first time, it occurred to me there might be a lot of things that were not worth keeping up with. This was a moment of liberation.

To this day I do not know how many times Eddie has married. I do know, however, that Eddie Fisher gave me my first glimpse of what freedom could be, and that has made him one of my heroes. Soon thereafter, I was not keeping up with so many things that I had time to read Henry James. What's the use of knowing who Cyndi Lauper is if you've never heard of Daisy Miller?

How, you may ask, can I propound such deep questions after a life wasted learning about the wives of Artie Shaw, Buick holes, "Elmer's Tune" and the genealogy of "The Oomph Girl"? The answer is that age has brought me wisdom, just as the old folks used to say it would.

Age demonstrated that people who can't stop keeping up with things are doomed to become tedious old bores. If you doubt it, come to my house some evening and hear me recite the wives of Artie Shaw, recount Charlie Keller's statistics with the Newark Bears, reminisce about "The Oomph Girl" and whistle "Elmer's Tune," along with several hundred other songs from the Hit Parade.

I predict you will beg for mercy before I get around to telling you about Cyndi Lauper (wears funny hair and sings) and Michael Jackson (also sings but has lost a glove).

White's candidacy capsized by shifting political winds

Modisett

There is a school of political thought, no doubt, that teaches the moral justification in "doing what is right" regardless of public sentiment, regardless of the political consequences.

It's not far, in fact, from the school of journalism noted for its instruction in the procedure of spoon-feeding the public what it needs to know, regardless of the public's interest. The catchphrase in that school is: "It doesn't matter if they want to read it. They need to know it."

There's justification for both schools, obviously, but what they teach must be utilized judiciously. Gov. Mark White undoubtedly was, until Tuesday's election at least, a student of the former. He learned the hard political reality 230,000 votes shy of his opponent, former Gov. Bill Clements.

White attempted to "do what was right" in his interpretation. Some will call his moves the embodiment of political courage; others, political stupidity. But along the way to teacher competency testing, the no pass-no play rule, late-called special sessions of the Legislature and increased state fees that pinched too hard in a faltering economic climate, he alienated the state's teachers, football coaches, conservatives, small businessmen, and the South Texas voters he had relied on for his victory over Clements in 1982. He turned around on election day to receive the cheers only to find his crowd dispersed.

The political winds shifted on White and in following his course, he lost sight of what he was attempting to do. That can spell disaster quickly for a politician.

Paul Burka, writing in Texas Monthly, noted candidly that White was too attentive to polls and to public imagery, and in so doing — in trying to play to public sentiment — lost the ability to lead the state.

White's failing was not his intentions. As Burka noted, White has good intentions — possibly too good. But in attempting to do what in his interpretation is the "right thing" for Texas, White stepped too far over the line of acceptable governmental control. He stepped on Texans' independent "toes" and that error came back to him at the polls.

This is the day of a rapidly shifting political temperament in Texas. It isn't totally Republican in nature, although that party is making major inroads in the state's political system. But it isn't adherence to hardline Democratic political theory. Voters today embrace their Democratic roots because that is part of their tradition — their heritage — with full awareness of the new political realities. Too much control over the lives of the state's people, too much cost for services at a time when many Texans don't even have jobs, too little hope for the future — it all adds up, negatively.

In this atmosphere, politicians must stay aware of public sentiment, but they must not allow that sentiment to control their actions. Undisputedly, some of the change is due to the economic condition; in that regard, voters are looking for politicians who will cut costs for them, not increase costs, and who will give them the ability to earn a living. Those politicians must lead, not follow.

White embarked on his course and didn't want to change, even when conditions in the state indicated he should. That was Mark White's main failing.

Lee High Band shows gracious Midland spirit

On Nov. 1st, our band traveled to your area for the Region B UIL Marching Contest. When the announcement was made for the Division 5A bands, we were elated that El Paso Eastwood was one of those selected to progress to the State Competition on Nov. 10th.

Our band was the last to leave the stadium — some 20 minutes after the other bands had left. When our members came out of the stadium tunnel into the east parking lot — what a surprise. Your Midland Lee Band had not departed, but had waited to personally greet our kids and extend their congratulations. To see all those white and maroon uniforms intermingled with our blue and gold ones, immersed in genuine congratulatory embraces was truly a moving sight.

You are to be congratulated not only on your band's fine marching and musical performances, but the extraordinary graciousness shown to us by your hometown band.

Our best wishes to you in Austin!

Consulting firm could fly high with bat study

Well, I see where the commissioners can't figure out what to do about the bats at the courthouse.

Why not hire someone who is well qualified and trained in that field to come in here and make a study of the problem and bring a recommendation back to the commissioners?

Of course we should pay those whom we bring in to make the study about $25,000, don't you think?

Traffic signals inhibit east meeting west in city

After living in Midland 27 years I shouldn't be surprised at anything the City of Midland does. We've survived endless potholes that get fixed again and again, regraveling of streets every summer that attributes to hundreds of broken windshields, resurfacing of streets that they tear up again in a matter of weeks, and finally, the infamous traffic lights.

All of which bring me to this point. Is the city under the impression that traffic only travels north and south? I think so.

If you are unfortunate enough to be traveling east-west at 1 a.m. at the intersection of Midland Drive and Wadley, you will usually see that north-south drivers get a minimum of three green lights each (at alternating times) before the east-west drivers get a five-second green light. I've seen many drivers run the red light at this intersection thinking it was stuck. And when it finally does turn green, you have to drive like lightning to get across before it turns red again.

Then there is the light at the intersection of Big Spring and Scharbauer Drive, which I traveled today for the last time. The north-south drivers got green lights five separate times, the eastbound drivers four times, and the westbound drivers — zilch!

After almost five minutes, I was forced to turn right so traffic behind me could pass through also.

Is this traffic light timing credited to some type of scientific traffic light study we don't know about, or does the city not have the capability to adjust these lights to suit everyone's needs?

I, for one, am tired of burning gas and time every time I travel across town or just to the corner grocery store.

Why would you want to take girl's scarecrow?

To the person(s) responsible for taking the little girl scarecrow from the Emerson Elementary cafeteria without my permission: I am requesting, hopefully, that you return it.

My daughter worked very hard putting it together for Emerson's Fall Scarecrow Contest and was so proud of her achievement. She used her own possessions as well as those of her siblings in this project — her rocking chair, her little brother's baby clothes, her sister's cowboy boots.

I can't imagine why you would want to take things that belong to little children. They may seem minor to you but they are of major importance to their owners. I know times are hard but has the situation really come down to this?

You can't imagine how indignant my daughter was when I finally had to tell her that someone else had taken her scarecrow. I was so naive — I couldn't imagine that anyone would take it.

But you have a chance to redeem yourself. Just return it (or parts thereof) to Emerson's cafeteria doors when no one is looking. As soon as the school contacts me, I will gladly drive all the way into town just to bring her back home.

Pets easier to abandon than your responsibility

I found the animal you abandoned. It doesn't matter where, or whether is was a cat or dog or puppy. In truth, it was a kitten, skinny and covered with fleas, crying in front of the library late at night. I coaxed it out from under the bushes, calmed it down, found somewhere to take it. A friend helped find a home for it.

None of that matters, though. Not really. What matters to me is why that animal, which was tame, was dumped there in the first place. What did you imagine when you left it there, downtown, alone? Did you think someone would be looking for it, wanting a kitten? I guarantee, it's not easy to find a home for a skinny, flea-bitten mixed breed.

Maybe you had an idea what would happen: that in all probability, it would be hit by a car, or starve, or get sick and die. But you didn't care, because at least it wasn't your responsibility any more. You were wrong. It was your responsibility. If you'd had your pet neutered, it wouldn't have reproduced, but once it did, those offspring are your responsibility until you find good homes for them. If you can't, then it's your job to call one of the local shelters and make other arrangements. To abandon an animal is not only immoral, it's illegal. Abandonment is a Class A misdemeanor under the Texas Penal Code. That's $2,000 and/or up to a year in jail.

I only wish I'd seen you dump that kitten. I promise: I'll be looking for you next time.

Nation's tort system working, despite claims

In response to your lead article in the Business/Oil section of the Oct. 26 edition as regard to the "Nation's broken tort system," let me congratulate you on a classic example of presenting one side of a situation. There is no doubt that the rising cost of insurance is a problem facing business today. There is, however, considerable disagreement as to the cause of the problem.

Many may "attribute it to a judicial system gone crazy," but many more may attribute it to an insurance industry gone crazy with desires for soaring profits. Your article cites much anecdotal evidence that the present tort system has gone awry without going into the underlying evidence that would substantiate the verdicts recited.

The fact of the matter is that the insurance industry wrote billions of dollars worth of policies in the early 1980s to reinvest at high interest rates. In 1981, they actually sold insurance to a hotel owner after the hotel burned down, i.e. fire insurance to cover a fire that had already happened.

Anecdotal evidence will serve no useful purpose in trying to sort out actual facts involved. These are voodoo losses when the truth is, by their own admission, the insurance companies increased their net worth by $8 billion in 1984 and 1985. The stocks of the insurance industry rose 50 percent in 1985 — nearly double the rise in the general stock market.

This is a crisis? The large awards we hear about go to those who suffer permanent paralysis, brain damage, or multiple amputations because of a drunk driver, dangerous product or an unfit doctor. The large awards go to those whose quality of life has been destroyed and will need a lifetime of medical care. These are the victims, and they would be twice victimized if the insurers have their way.

This, then, is the choice, protection of profits — or protect our jury systems and rights of victims. All who have served on a civil jury in Midland County know that common sense prevails, and there is no need for the state to place arbitrary limits on justice.

We must work to make justice less costly and more accessible. We must reduce the need to go to court — but we must always protect the right to go to court.

SPEAKING OUT

Raising UW funds has been inspiring

By THOMAS J. WAGEMAN

Thomas J. Wageman served as chairman of this year's United Way campaign in Midland.

For several years now it has been the tradition for the United Way Campaign chairman to use this space for a report on the campaign the week before it ends.

So here it is.

Through the generosity of our fellow citizens, companies big and small, and our foundations, we have raised $1,727,714 in direct contributions and pledges. And we still have four days to go.

It seems like a lot and it is. Raising campaign funds this year has been an inspiration to all of us who have worked so hard — more than 700 volunteers have been involved.

As you might expect, some people and businesses who have helped in the past couldn't help this year. They were out of work or out of business. But the needs don't go away in hard times and you can't bury them.

It seems that all of Midland knows that; so others somehow, someway have found something extra for us and we will be able to cover our losses. Others who had never helped before are helping this year. We've raised $56,500, over 3 percent of our current total, in first-time gifts from first-time givers.

I think I know why this is happening — we are determined in this campaign to ask everybody to help and we are reaching people and businesses we never reached before. And, when times are tough — as strange as it seems — we often count our blessings, feel lucky we are as well off as we are and try to find something extra to help others who are not so fortunate.

That's happening. I feel sure of it.

If you feel the same way and haven't been asked to help, there is still time. Send your check to United Way of Midland, 1209 West Wall, Midland, Texas 79701.

And all of us will bless you.

Reagan will continue to be effective despite setbacks

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

NEW YORK — While the outcome of the congressional elections was the biggest political setback for President Reagan since he became our nation's leader, my prediction is that he will prove to be a far more effective president during the rest of his term than some partisan politicos and pundits have forecast this week.

There are encouraging signs Democratic control of the Senate will not lead to a left-liberal dominance of that body that could wreck the president's domestic and foreign programs.

Chairmanships of most key Senate committees, including the powerful spending, defense, tax and budget panels, will be in the hands of moderate-to-conservative Southern democrats. They will hold the balance of power in the Senate and there are indications they will seek to compromise with the president on important issues, including the economy and arms talks with the Soviets.

While retiring House Speaker Tip O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., claimed, "The Reagan revolution is over," incumbent and in-coming Democrats in both the Senate and House foresaw no sharp swing to the left.

Senate Democratic leader Robert Byrd of West Virginia said that under Democratic control, the Senate will be "moderate, middle-of-the-road. We will seek compromise rather than confrontation with the White House." Richard P. Conlon, Director of the House Democratic Study Group, said: "We've still got Ronald Reagan to deal with, and we'll be nuts to forget that."

So our leader is likely to be much less of a lame-duck president than it was predicted he would be if the Republicans lost control of the Senate.

The president will undoubtedly have to compromise with a Democratically- controlled Congress, but he has been good at that in the past both as president and governor of California.

To continue getting funds for his program to defend America against nuclear weapons, he will probably have to acquiesce to Democratic insistence that development of the strategic defense system be conducted within the framework of the Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty for ten years. He may also have to agree to continued compliance with the unratified SALT II treaty.

On the economy, he may have to compromise on his opposition to any tax increases. The Democratically-controlled Congress is expected next year to seek a tax increase to reduce the deficit. Administration officials have already hinted the president might consent to some non-income tax increase if the additional revenue was earmarked for defense.

It must, of course, have been a keen disappointment to the president that few of those for whom he campaigned so intensely were elected. He traveled 25,000 miles, raised an estimated $33 million in campaign funds and talked himself almost hoarse in 54 speeches. Nevertheless, most of his candidates were defeated.

However, the polls showed the voters had not lost faith in him. According to ABC, 64 percent of voters leaving the polls still approved his handling of the presidency.

Local economic rather than national issues dominated most of the Senate races and personalities seemed to influence the voters almost as much as policies.

Furthermore, many of the Republicans who lost their Senate seats were first termers who had been elected on the coattails of the president's landslide victory in 1980 and had not proved very loyal to him. They often voted with the Democrats against the president on key fiscal and foreign policy issues.

They might have done much better if they had supported him as strongly as the American people obviously do.

The congressional elections have created a clear balance between Congress and the Reagan administration and, with the indications of common sense on both sides, that may not be a bad thing for the country.

EYE APPEAL

A house that has great eye appeal usually sells for a price that reflects that appeal. There are houses, though, that have the potential to stand out in the neighborhood. Such potential may not be realized by current owners who sell them for bargain prices in comparison with surrounding homes. Turning a house that "could be" eye-appealing into one that "is" can produce thousands of dollars in value appreciation for the new owner. In fact, that always is something to think about when evaluating a home. What could be done to make this home something special? Before going house-hunting, it makes sense for a prospective home investor to talk to a contractor, one who can give good advice about the costs of such improvements.

Investigate the feasibility of a home improvement before buying a house.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

SIFE invites you to fund-raising auction Monday at MC

By H.A. TUCK

As a fund-raising project, a student organization is sponsoring an auction Monday evening in the Allison Fine Arts Building auditorium and you're invited to attend. The Students In Free Enterprise club is conducting the auction, with donated items from local business, individuals, and student club members. The preview begins at 6 p.m. and the auction begins at 7:30 p.m.

Every item will be sold without a reserve minimum, so there's a chance to pick up some bargains. Free refreshments also are being offered.

Sponsored by Dr. Jerry Jones, chairman of the Business Studies Division, SIFE is one of the newest, and one of the most active, groups on campus. Members already have gone to a statewide meeting in Dallas and are planning several other events. The auction will help defray student expenses to attend competitions and conferences next year.

•••

If you missed last weekend's Chaparral Classic, or saw it and just want to see the Chaparrals again, come out Thursday when Midland College hosts Cisco Junior College in a single game. It begins at 7 p.m. and will be your last opportunity to see MC this month.

Coach Jerry Stone takes his team away for two tournaments. They'll be in Hutchinson, Kansas, Nov. 20-22 for the Blue Dragon Classic. The Nov. 27-29 tourney is close enough for Chap fans to see the action, since that's the Odessa College Tournament.

Conference action begins Dec. 1, when the Chaps host Clarendon College. Then the team goes to Roswell to play New Mexico Military Institute Nov. 4 and hits the road to Odessa for a game Nov. 8. Fall action with New Mexico Junior College at Midland Dec. 11.

•••

There's still more basketball action at Chaparral Center this week, something many fans have come to anticipate. Gerald Myers is bringing his Texas Tech University squad to Midland for a "Red and Black" Scrimmage at 6:30 p.m. Wednesday. This is the third year the Red Raiders have presented a scrimmage in Midland and it's possible that Myers is superstitious about it now. He first brought his squad to Midland in 1984 and they won the 1985 conference title and the conference tournament. In 1986, they took the conference tournament with big upset wins.

Chap Center manager Mike Stevens and the Midland Red Raider Club combined to arrange the scrimmage here.

•••

Friday is the final day of the Ninth annual Midland Arts Association's Juried Regional Show in MC's McCormick Gallery, located in the Allison Fine Arts Bulding. You may see the show today from 1 to 5 p.m., Monday through Thursday from 8 a.m. to 10 p.m. or Friday from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. There's no admission charge.

•••

Seven more "Flexible Entry" courses start this week, five in computer classes and two in office education. You may register for any of these courses on Monday or Tuesday, prior to the start of each class, in the Student Services Office, Administration Building.

A class in "Computer Applications: Spreadsheet" meets Tuesday and Thursday from 8 to 9:20 a.m. through Dec. 11 or Monday and Wednesday from 5:30 to 6:50 p.m. through Dec. 10; "Computer Applications: Word Processing" meets from noon to 12:50 p.m. on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday through Dec. 12, or from 5:30 to 8:20 p.m. on Wednesday through Dec. 9; and "Advanced Computer Applications: Database" meets Wednesdays from 5:30 to 8:20 p.m. through Dec. 10.

"Machine Transcription" is offered on Tuesday and Thursday from 9:30 to 10:50 a.m. through Dec. 18; and "Word Processing: Multimate" is being taught on Monday and Wednesday from 12:30 to 1:50 p.m. through Dec. 12.

•••

A group of administrators and instructors from the Mississippi Gulf Coast Junior College System is scheduled to visit Midland College Monday to view the use of computers in accounting instruction.

Their visit is one of several by colleges throughout the country who read an article by MC accounting instructor Tom Vannaman, who detailed how Midland College was obtaining excellent results by using computers in accounting labs and instructional formats. Vannaman wrote of the program in Innovation Abstracts.

•••

A note we received this week from a club which met on the campus and toured several of the college's newer facilities jogged our thoughts. Since the college has been on its permanent campus for more than 11 years we tend to forget that many people have come to Midland in that time and that others haven't visited in quite some time.

So let me again invite any group or organization to come visit Midland College. We can arrange tours for any size group. It does take at least an hour to look at even a few of the many features. Since the buildings are spread out, any tour requires some walking.

•••

We've also been updating our list of speakers who are available from the college faculty, administration, and staff. Since our faculty's primary responsibility is teaching, they might not always been available to speak at certain times. But we can arrange to present a program on scores of topics. Our instructors are, naturally, quite knowledgeable in their teaching fields. But they also have some interesting, and unique, hobbies or additional specialties they can share with others.

Although we prefer several weeks to arrange for a speaker, we can provide a program on very short notice.

Within the next few weeks we'll have a speakers' list compiled and would be glad to provide your organization a copy for referral.

•••

Congratulations to President Dr. Jess Parrish for having been selected as one of the nation's top 100 educational administrators. The selection came from a survey by Bowling Green State University with the aid of a two-year grant from the Exxon Foundation.

H.A. Tuck is public relations director at Midland College.

Red Raiders rip Frogs, 36-14

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

FORT WORTH — This long time range rivalry is noted for its rude treatment of favorites and another chapter in the saga seemed in the making Saturday when Texas Christian University took a 7-0 first period lead over Texas Tech.

This, it seemed, was the inevitable letdown after last week's exhilirating win over Texas, but the Red Raiders, ignited by some big defensive plays, stormed back to beat the Frogs handily, 36-14 Saturday.

"Letdown?" demanded defensive end Calvin Riggs, one of the ring leaders of Tech's trouble making defense, "We don't play emotionally. We play with skill and confidence. That's the only way you can be consistent and that's what we are striving for."

The Raiders' defense provided the impetus, and after a sputtering start, the offense had a big day.

I-back James Gray scored on a 20-yard run, set up the Raiders' second score with a 34-yard run and amassed 118 yards of Tech's 257 yards rushing.

Quarterback Billy Joe Tolliver completed eight passes for 137 yards and five of them were to wide receiver Wayne Walker for 123 yards and touchdowns of 10 and 52 yards.

But for a while the crowd of 25,729 in storied Amon Carter Stadium, on the kind of Saturday made for football, suspected the worst.

TCU cashed in with 4:04 left in the first period on a three-yard run by Patrick Bradford for a 7-0 lead.

And the way punter Chris Becker (48.7-yard average on eight kicks with a long of 73) was rocking Tech back on its heels. Everybody was thinking of this series' unpredicable past.

"Early in the game we had bad field position and the TCU defense was doing a good job of pursuing to the ball," said Tech coach David McWilliams.

Monahans' end Ricky Boysaw sacked quarterback David Rascoe for a 10-yard loss, and when Becker boomed a 56-yarder, Tech had possession on its 28 for a change instead of inside the 20.

Tech swept 72 yards in six plays to send Ervin Farris in from the one with 9:32 left in the half. Less than two minutes later, a high centered snap forced Becker to take a safety on a punt attempt and Tech led 9-7.

McWilliams called the bad snap a key play, "because we got good field position on the free kick and that enabled us to put the ball in the air."

With 2:07 left in the half, Tolliver and Walker hooked up on the 10-yard touchdown pass, set up by Gray's 34-yard run to concluding a four-play, 52-yard drive to give Tech a 16-7 halftime lead.

Riggs' tackle on Rascoe and linebacker Michael Johnson's recovery of the resulting fumble set up Scott Segrist's 32-yard field goal with 10:39 left in the third and then he hit from 37 yards away with 6:04 in the period, his fifth straight in a string that began last week against Texas.

By now dire thoughts of an upset had evoporated. The 52-yarder from Tolliver to Walker 45 seconds into the final period, ending a 95-yard

On top of world Chaps win again

By ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

Advantage Midland College.

MC claimed the first set in the expected match for Western Junior College Athletic Conference supremacy with an easy 92-67 win over South Plains College in the championship game of the Chaparral Classic Saturday at the Chaparral Center.

Though the win over the Texans means nothing in the standings, it certainly served notice that MC is planning on a return to the top — of national rankings, the WJCAC and lists of post-season playoff challengers. South Plains was considered the pre-season favorite to dethrone MC as the WJCAC champs.

But head coach Jerry Stone isn't ready to claim any type of advantage after going up two-love over WJCAC opponents, even with such lopsided wins.

"I don't try to figure those kinds of things and I don't worry about them," Stone said. "I'm just trying to get the team playing as well as it can. And right now, we're playing like I thought we should."

The Chaparrals aced their second conference foe in as many nights in raising their record to 3-0, jumping out to a 21-4 margin in the first five minutes. South Plains never recovered.

"I like the way we started and we only had a couple of let ups, and they weren't serious," Stone said. "But we're a veteran team, we've been under the pressure before."

There wasn't much pressure in this opening tournament, at least not from the competition as MC's average margin of victory was 35 points.

"Your team does learn more on the road, but there is pressure here at the Chap Center," Stone said. "People's expectations are so high now, there is the pressure to win big here."

MC'S FLASHY backcourt combo of Mookie Blaylock and Lincoln Minor again led the Chap scorers. Blaylock, named the tournament's MVP, scored a game-high 26 while Minor, a member of the All-Tourney team, added 25.

With some pressure defense and the quick hands of Blaylock and Minor, the Chaps piled up fast break basket after fast break basket. The Texans were never closer than six points after the opening minutes — and that was midway through the first half.

"Coach (Stone) just told us to come out and keep the pressure on the whole game because they weren't the kind of team to give up," Minor said.

After two consecutive SPC baskets to open the second half, the Chaps scored the next 11 points, the first three on a three-point play by freshman Billy Ray Smith.

Smith led MC in rebounds with nine and was one of four Chaps in double figures with 12 points. Another newcomer, Alex Stanwood, also had 12 points to join Blaylock and Minor. Stanwood, from Booker T. Washington High in New Orleans, and guard Todd Duncan were the third and fourth Chaps to earn All Tournament honors.

IN THE final 20 minutes, SPC pulled within 12 twice, and that was too close for MC. Each time the Chaps bounced back with a pair of quick baskets to snuff the Texans' hopes.

"I really didn't think it would be that easy," said Minor. "But coach has been telling us in practice that we would be playing some tough teams so we were pretty prepared for this tournament.

"They won't all be this easy, though. People are going to be shooting for us. They're all going to get geared up for Midland College."

The Chaps are back on the courts Thursday with a 7:30 p.m. game against Cisco at Chap Center, but Stone points to the Blue Dragon Classic in Hutchinson, Kan., Nov. 20-22 as the real tester for the 1986-87 team.

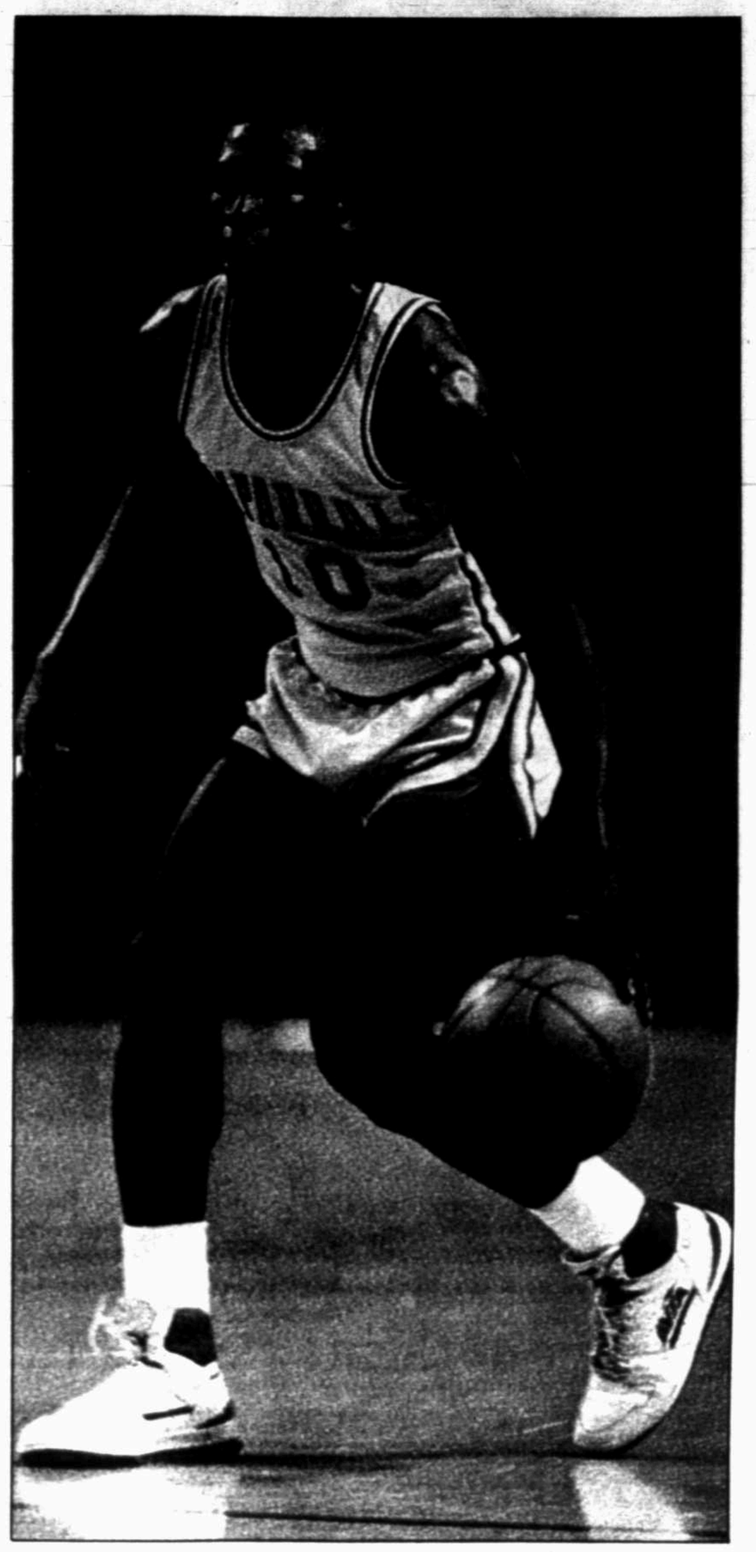

"We'll find out a little more about ourselves when we go out to Hutchinson, that's for sure," Stone says.

In the earlier games, Howard College of Big Spring defeated WJCAC foe Odessa College, 76-74, to win the third place title. Garden City defeated Barton County in the battle of Kansas teams, 75-70, for fifth place. Finally, Cisco defeated Grayson County for seventh place, 95-87.

Bears claw Hogs' Cotton Bowl hopes

WACO (AP) — The Baylor Bears put themselves in prime position for a postseason game and all but destroyed 10th-ranked Arkansas' Cotton Bowl hopes Saturday by stopping the Razorbacks' high-octane offense.

Baylor allowed Arkansas only two first downs in the second half as the Bears came from behind for a 29-14 victory that gives Texas A&M a two-game lead in the Southwest Conference football chase.

Quarterback Cody Carlson ran for a touchdown and passed 258 yards to become Baylor's all-time and single-season yardage leader.

"It was the biggest win of the year for us," said Carlson, who played despite an injured knee that caused him to miss practice last week. "We know now we are going to a bowl. We're just not sure which one."

"I've never seen a more courageous performance than the one Cody put on," Baylor Coach Grant Teaff said. "Besides the knee problem, he took a shot to the ribs that hurt him all day. We didn't know if he would make it.

"This is a big win. We'll get in a bowl now for sure. Our defense was great in the second half. We made some adjustments and they paid off."

Arkansas Coach Ken Hatfield said the loss severely damaged the Hogs' hopes for their first Cotton Bowl appearance in 11 years.

"We're hurt as bad as we've ever been hurt before," Hatfield said. "Just give Baylor credit. They made the big plays and made some great adjustments defensively. They shut down our game plan."

Metcalf's hat trick leads 'Horns, 30-10

AUSTIN (AP) — Sophomore tailback Eric Metcalf lived up to Texas coach Fred Akers' label as the "best pure athlete" on the team when he scored three touchdowns Saturday to lead Texas to a 30-10 victory over Houston in Southwest Conference football.

Metcalf, son of former NFL great Terry Metcalf, caught scoring passes of 74 and 53 yards from quarterback Bret Stafford and ran 7 yards for another touchdown.

Texas, known for years as a running team, had 379 yards passing against Houston, the most by a SWC team this season.

Texas, playing before 60,650 people — its smallest home crowd in five years — raised its record to 4-4 on the season and 3-2 in the SWC. Houston lost its seventh straight game to fall to 1-8 and 0-6.

Stafford, one of the nation's total offense leaders, broke school records in completing 16 of 27 passes for 314 yards. Metcalf caught five passes for 181 yards and also had 29 yards rushing.

"We've really been looking for the big play from Metcalf," Akers said. "It was slow in coming, but he made a tremendous catch on that first touchdown."

Metcalf said, "I've been waiting to open up and have a big

Ponies see green after Irish offensive explosion

SOUTH BEND, Ind. (AP) — Tim Brown scored twice and gained 235 all-purpose yards while Steve Beuerlein passed for a career-high 269 yards as Notre Dame routed Southern Methodist 61-29 Saturday.

The Irish rushed for six touchdowns and 322 yards in running up their highest score since a 69-14 pounding of Georgia Tech in 1977.

It was the most points allowed by a Mustang defense since a 61-0 loss to Baylor in 1916.

One of Brown's touchdowns came on an 84-yard pass play, with Brown running the last 55 yards.

Notre Dame's defense pressured quarterback Bobby Watters into two fumbles and two interceptions that the Irish turned into scoring drives.

John Carney kicked four field goals for Notre Dame.

Miami still on No. 1 path

Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — Vinny Testaverde threw four touchdown passes, all but one following a turnover, as top-ranked Miami shrugged off a steady rain to cruise by turnover-stricken Pittsburgh 37-10 Saturday in college football.

David Kintigh's 67-yard punt return for a touchdown with 55 seconds left in the first half boosted Miami into a 14-3 halftime lead and the Hurricanes then used six second-half Pitt turnovers to race to their 19th consecutive regular season victory.

Testaverde completed 17 of 26 passes for 291 yards and threw three touchdown passes in the second half as Pitt's injury-crippled offense self-destructed behind two quarterbacks who were seeing their first extensive playing time of the season.

Testaverde tossed scoring passes of 28 yards to Brian Perriman, 23 to Michael Irvin, three to Warren Williams and 20 to Brian Blades as Miami, 9-0, overcame 254 rushing yards by 260-pound Pitt sophomore tailback Craig "Ironhead" Heyward. Pitt committed a total of seven turnovers.

Pitt, 4-4-1, was forced to scrap its wide-open run-and-shoot offense and turn to a ball-control offense after losing four-year starting quarterback John Congemi last week with a fractured vertebra.

Penn State 17, Maryland 15

STATE COLLEGE, Pa. — Penn State was within a flick of dousing its national championship hopes, but linebacker Duffy Cobbs' lunging deflection of a two-point conversion attempt with 14 seconds left saved the second-ranked, unbeaten Nittany Lions, who got two nine-yard touchdown runs from tailback D.J. Dozier and a 36-yard field goal by Massimo Manca.

But the Lions also needed three pass interceptions, one resulting in an 82-yard return by a lineman, to scratch out a 17-15 victory over unranked Maryland, an 18-point underdog going into the game.

Maryland Coach Bobby Ross, who last week was given a one-game suspension for accosting an official, was crushed with his 4-5 team's failure to complete the upset.

Scouts from five bowls watched as the Nittany Lions came close to blowing a chance to play New Year's Day for the national title.

Michigan 31, Purdue 7

WEST LAFAYETTE, Ind — Quarterback Jim Harbaugh became Michigan's career leader in pass completions, hitting 14 of 20 attempts for 154 yards and a touchdown as the third-ranked, unbeaten Wolverines rolled over Purdue.

The victory extended the nation's longest major college unbeaten string to 15 games and it gave Coach Bo Schembechler his 165th triumph at Michigan, tying the school record compiled by Fielding Yost from 1901-26.

Michigan, 6-0 in the Big Ten and 9-0 overall, had no trouble with the troubled Boilermakers, who fell to 1-5 and 2-7. Two days earlier, Purdue Coach Leon Burtnett announced his resignation, effective at the end of the season.

Midland College's Lincoln "Ice" Minor turns a steal into an easy two points Saturday as MC goes on to win the Chap Classic.

There was one Lee victory Friday

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

Despite Midland Lee's first loss of the season, 6-3 to Abilene High, Friday night wasn't a complete wipeout for the previously state ranked No. 5 Rebels.

Lee sophomore coach Larry Tate, scouting the Amarillo High-Amarillo Tascosa game, did bring home a victory of sorts. Tate won a coin flip with Amarillo High to give the Rebels the title of home team for Friday's bi-district playoff game against the Golden Sandies at Lubbock's Jones Stadium.

Lee had agreed last week to play either Amarillo High or Tascosa in Jones Stadium next Friday at 8 p.m. Amarillo High defeated Tascosa, 20-7, to win District 3-5A's runner-up berth and the right to meet District 4-5A co-champion Lee in the bi-district playoff round.

Following that important game, Tate met with Amarillo athletic director Ed Lehnick and Amarillo High coach Larry Dippel for a coin flip to determine who would be the home team.

"The Amarillo A.D. (Lehnick) flipped the coin and I called tails. It was tails," said Tate.

All the flip decided was that Lee fans will sit on the west side of Jones Stadium Friday night and the Rebels will be designated as the home team. It may not sound like much, but Lee has been the home team in two previous bi-district victories over Amarillo High in 1983 and 1985.

AFTER FALLING to Abilene High in a major upset, losing a chance to become the first Rebel team in history to finish regular season play undefeated and losing an outright 4-5A title, Lee coach Earl Miller was ready to take any kind of good news.

"At least Tate came through for us on Friday," said Miller with a smile. "Maybe we found our designated flipper."

Tate wasn't exactly thrilled over the new title, saying, "Don't designate me as anything. I just do what I'm told."

Gil Bartosh, Midland athletic director, said Friday night tickets for the Lee-AHS game will go on sale Tuesday at 8 a.m. at the ticket office, located at the northeast corner of Memorial Stadium. Tickets will be sold Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. each day. Tickets will also be sold from 8 a.m. until noon Friday.

Adult tickets will be $5 each and student tickets will be $3. All seating is general admission, meaning that ticket buyers may sit anywhere they wish in Jones Stadium. Bartosh also said that no student tickets will be sold at the gate Friday in Lubbock, but tickets will be sold for $5 each at the gate.

"When you play in a large stadium like Jones Stadium, there is no concern about selling reserved seats. We'll have plenty of tickets for anyone who wants to see the game," said Bartosh. "This is also one game where students may sit with parents if so desired. We'll just open the gates and let the people sit where they wish."

Lee defeated the Sandies by a 30-3 margin in 1983's bi-district matchup, but held on for a goose bump raising 13-7 win over AHS last year. Lee will carry an 8-1 record into the playoffs while Amarillo High is 6-3-1, losing to Amarillo Palo Duro, Amarillo Caprock and Odessa Permian.

Lubbock's Jones Stadium will be a hotbed of football activity next weekend. The Lee-Amarillo High game will kickoff the weekend Friday. Saturday afternoon Texas Tech will face TCU and San Angelo will meet Palo Duro at 8 p.m. Saturday in a college-high school doubleheader.

San Angelo defeated Odessa Permian by a 14-7 margin Friday night to earn District 4-5A's second playoff berth and a share of the league title with Lee. By virtue of Lee's 14-7 win over San Angelo, Lee earned the right to enter the playoffs as 4-5A's top seed. Palo Duro was ranked No. 6 in the state last week and San Angelo has been as high as No. 5.

Hanks claims running crown; Lee takes 8th

From Staff Reports

LUBBOCK — Powerful El Paso Hanks won the Region I cross country meet here Saturday with a low score of 29 points while El Paso Eastwood finished a distant second with 73 points.

Hanks and Eastwood also won the right to advance to the state meet next week in Austin.

Midland Lee came through with a sursprising eighth place, finishing ahead of San Angelo, the District 4-5A champion which finished 10th.

"We beat San Angelo one week too late," said Lee cross country coach Eddie Wolski. "We could have had the district title if we had beaten them last week."

Senior Mike Garza, who finished 27th overall here last year, turned in his best time of the season with a 15:57, finishing 11th overall, but missing a trip to state by one place. The top two teams and the top 10 individuals advance to state.

Garza, however, did beat San Angelo's Garren Hill, the 4-5A champion. Hill placed 19th.

Lee's Rodney Clark also turned in a good outing, finishing 22nd with a 16:21 and just five seconds behind Hill. Other Lee members were Philip Scott, 52nd; John Beasley, 57th; and Robert Rodriquez, 74th.

Midland High's lone male entry, Sammy Venegas, finished 51st with a time of 16:56.

"We were very pleased with our kids. They all turned in best times," said Wolski.

Lee Maroon beats Nimitz for ninth grade title

From Staff Reports

Lee Freshman Maroon put the final cap on the Midland-Odessa ninth grade football championship Saturday morning with a 13-0 win over Odessa Nimitz.

Maroon finished the season with a perfect 9-0 mark and the title.

Midland Purple ended its season with a 30-0 win over Odessa Ector on Thursday and Lee White won a narrow 8-7 victory over Odessa Bowie. Odessa Bonham defeated Odessa Hood by a 26-14 margin. Saturday's season finale between Midland Gold and Odessa Crockett was not reported.

The eighth grade Midland-Odessa conference was decided last week when Alamo ended its season with a 7-1 record. Alamo was open this week. However, San Jacinto put the cap on a 6-2 season with a 35-0 win over Nimitz. In other games, Bonham defeated Ector 28-0 and Hood bested Crockett 22-0 in a day spiced with shutouts.

Rockets crown Kings, 102-90

HOUSTON (AP) — Akeem Olajuwon and Mitchell Wiggins scored 25 points apiece to lead the Houston Rockets to a 102-90 NBA win over the Sacramento Kings Saturday night.

Houston, 3-1, played without all-star foreward Ralph Sampson, who is sidelined with a sprained ankle.

Sacramento, 1-4, was led by Brook Steppe with 17 points as the Kings dropped their fourth straight game.

The Kings pulled within six, 85-79, with 5:57 left to play. Houston then took charge, led by three Olajuwon baskets, to outscore the Kings 11-2 in the next two minutes to take a 96-81 advantage.

Sacramento was never closer than eight again.

drive, virtually made Tech's sixth victory in nine starts official.

"TCU played a lot of man-to-man," said Walker, "and they really surprised us, but we were able to get deep on them."

A week ago, Tech's horizons were limited to a bowl, any kind of a bowl, but Saturday they broadened when Arkansas lost to Baylor.

The ugly duckling of a few weeks ago, after the Miami, Baylor and A&M blowouts, actually have a shot at a second place finish in the SWC. And the way the Raiders have been playing, all it will take is some of the consistency Riggs talks about.

Hatfield said the loss was tough emotionally.

"We didn't accomplish our mission of coming down here and winning to give us a chance to get to the Cotton Bowl," he said. "Now, everyone in the league has at least two defeats except A&M."

He added that "the Aggies still have three league games left to play, but they are playing very well. It will be difficult for us to still have a chance for the Cotton Bowl, but it isn't impossible yet."

Baylor halfback Jeffrey Murray scored on a two-yard plunge with 4:02 to play and Derrick McAdoo put the Razorbacks away with a 32-yard scoring run with 1:20 remaining

Oklahoma 77, Missouri 0

NORMAN — Fullback Earl Johnson's two touchdowns and quarterback Jamelle Holieway's 117 yards rushing sparked a seven-touchdown outburst in the first half that carried No. 4 Oklahoma to a romp over Missouri.

The 77 points was Oklahoma's widest margin of victory since 1919, when it beat Kingfisher College 157-0. The loss was Missouri's worst ever, eclipsing a 65-0 loss to Texas in 1932. Oklahoma scored more points in the opening half than the Tigers had given up in any game this season. The 49 points was a touchdown shy of the Big Eight record for points in a half — Nebraska scored 55 against Colorado in 1983.

Arizona St. 49, California 0

TEMPE, Ariz. — Flanker Bruce Hill scored three touchdowns — one on a 96-yard kickoff return to open the second half and two on passes from quarterback Jeff Van Raaphorst — as fifth-ranked Arizona State crushed California to clinch the Pacific-10 Conference football championship and a Rose Bowl berth.

It is the first time that an Arizona school has qualified for the Rose Bowl since Arizona and Arizona State joined the Pac-10 in 1978. The Sun Devils, 8-0-1 overall and 5-0-1 in league play, were put into position to claim their first Pac-10 title when 12th-ranked UCLA lost to Stanford 28-23 earlier Saturday.

LSU 14, Alabama 10

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — Greg Jackson claimed two turnovers and forced another to kill three Alabama threats as 18th-ranked Louisiana State upset the sixth-ranked Crimson Tide to throw the SEC football race into a four-team scramble.

Jackson picked off a pass in the end zone after the Tide had reached the 13 and recovered a fumble on the LSU 18. The LSU strong safety then forced a fumble when he cracked Alabama's Bobby Humphrey just shy of the goal and teammate Kevin Guidry pounced on it in the end zone for a touchback.

Houston coach Bill Yeoman said he too thinks Stafford is "a great athlete," but he added that "We watched too many real long wounded-duck passes that should have been intercepted. Someone's got to come down with them."

Texas placekicker Jeff Ward kicked three field goals to tie the SWC career field goal record of 56, set by Tony Franklin of Texas A&M in 1975-78, and set a school career scoring record of 268 points.

"He ought to be an All-American," Akers said of Ward.

Ferry carries Devils past Soviets, 86-79

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — Sophomore Danny Ferry scored 22 points, including 15 in the second half, as Duke pulled away from the Soviet National Team in the first half and held on for a 86-79 exhibition basketball victory Saturday night.

Ferry contributed seven points in a nine-point run midway through the second half which led the Blue Devils from a 60-55 deficit at the 10:28 mark to a 64-60 lead with 7:59 left to play.

Aleksander Volkov hit the first of a two-shot foul to pull the Soviets to within 64-61. Martin Nessley scored for Duke, but Valery Goborov's 3-point play at the 7:32 mark pushed the Soviets to within 66-64.

Ferry hit a short baseline jumper, while Sergey Tarakanov retaliated with two free throws at 7:03. But two free throws by John Smith and a follow shot by Billy King gave Duke a 72-66 edge. The Soviets were never closer than four points the rest of the game.

A 3-point field goal by Ferry started a run of 10 straight points to stake Duke to a 10-2 lead in the first three minutes. Although the Soviets overcsme the fast start and got to within 14-12, a 16-7 run in which Kevin Strickland scored the last six points gave Duke a 30-19 cushion with 5:47 left before halftime. The lead grew as big as 36-23 late in the half, but a 3-point shot at the buzzer by Vladas Khomichus cut the lead to 40-31 at halftime.

In the second half, the Soviet team used an eight-point run — four by Khomichus — to take a 60-55 edge before Duke rallied.

Strickland added 20 points, Tommy Amaker scored 14 and King 12 for Duke.

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Wayman Tisdale came off the bench to score 14 of his game-high 28 points in the second quarter, sparking the Indiana Pacers to a 130-97 victory over San Antonio in NBA action Saturday night.

Tennis

From Wire Reports

ANTWERP, Belgium — John McEnroe and Czechoslovakia's Miloslav Mecir reached the final of the $920,000 European Community Championship by trouncing Frenchman Yannick Noah and Jimmy Arias of the United States respectively in Saturday's semifinals of the world's richest indoor tournament.

McEnroe, now ranked 10th in the world, needed 70 minutes to overwhelm Noah 6-2, 6-3 while Mecir beat Arias 6-2, 6-1 in 68 minutes.

Mecir, 22, dominated play from the start with accurate, low groundstrokes and timely rushes to the net. Holding all his service games and engaging Arias in long rallies, sending him scrambling over the full width of the court.

"I played the important points well and had more luck with them," Mecir said. He broke Arias' service twice in each set.

In a lopsided match, McEnroe displayed powerful serves, dominated at the net and sent Noah all over the court chasing his accurate groundstrokes.

"Noah was stretching. I had him on the run," a relaxed McEnroe said. The 27-year-old American never lost his service in the hour and 10-minute match. He served four aces and, when faced with the occasional breakpoint, attacked the net to force Noah into mistakes or hit volleys for clean winners.

"I couldn't break him when I had the occasion," said Noah, who is ranked sixth in the world. He was hooted with whistles by some of the crowd of 8,000 at the Sports Palace...

STOCKHOLM, Sweden — Mats Wilander, making a comeback after a two-month break from the Grand Prix circuit, downed Guy Forget 6-2, 7-6 Saturday to set up an all-Swedish final in the $435,000 Stockholm Open-Scandinavian Championships.

The second-seeded Wilander, who took the layoff to avoid a burnout, won the tiebreaker 7-3. He faces top-seeded Stefan Edberg in today's best-of-five set championship match on the Royal Tennis Hall's plexipave surface.

Edberg, ranked third in the world and for the first time ahead of Wilander on the Association of Tennis Professionals' computer list, edged third-seeded Henri Leconte 6-7, 6-4, 7-6 in the other Swedish-French semifinal. It was the first time they met in official competition.

"I can't play much better," said Edberg after the serve-and-volley shootout. This was one of my best matches ever indoors, maybe the best one."

Edberg, the Australian Open champion, came from 3-5 in the decisive set to clinch his first final berth in the world's oldest Grand Prix indoors...

Fourth-seeded Sherwood Stewart of the U.S.A. and Kim Warwick of Australia beat the American-Mexican team of Andy Kohlberg and Leonardo Lavalle 6-2, 7-5 to advance to Sunday's doubles final.

Bowling

ROCHESTER, N.Y. Tom Baker used a lucky strike in the 10th frame of the title match to seal a 212-205 decision over top-seeded Steve Wunderlich and capture the Kodak Invitational bowling tournament Saturday.

It was the first PBA title of the year for Baker and his seventh overall. The victory was worth $27,000 in the $150,000 event.

"I feel very fortunate to win today, especially the way Steve was throwing the ball," said Baker, out of Buffalo, N.Y. "He (Wunderlich) hit the pocket 10 times, but he got some bad breaks. That was a good break for me."

In the opening match of the nationally televised finals, Randy Pedersen of Santa Maria, Calif., stopped left-hander John Gant of Independence, Ky., 187-158.

Baker began his title run with a 230-173 win over Pedersen. He then eliminated leading money winner Walter Ray Williams Jr. of Stockton, Calif., 198-189, in the semifinal...

Temple Eagles' 5th straight victim

Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — Shawn Halloran's passing and Troy Stradford's running carried Boston College to its fifth straight college football triumph, 38-29, over Temple during a steady drizzle at Veterans Stadium on Saturday.

With scouts from the Hall of Fame and Peach Bowls in attendance, Halloran completed 22 of 36 for 311 yards and three touchdowns as the Eagles, 6-3, never trailed in the game and scored on five of their first six possessions. Temple 5-4, suffered its second straight loss.

Stradford gained 140 yards on 13 carries and scored touchdowns on runs of 67 and 10 yards.

Army 21, Air Force 11

WEST POINT, N.Y. — Army quarterback Tory Crawford ran for 165 yards and two touchdowns to lead the Cadets to a victory over Air Force.

Army, 4-5, entered the game as the underdog against Air Force, now 6-3. The contest pitted two wishbone offenses which also had to battle a steady drizzle.

Crawford nearly scored the first time he touched the ball as he scampered 65 yards around right end to the Air Force 3. That set up fullback Benny Wright's 1-yard plunge two plays later, with just 1:07 gone in the game.

Syracuse 31, Navy 22

SYRACUSE, N.Y. — Senior Scott Schwedes scored two touchdowns, one of them on an 80-yard punt return, and set up two other touchdowns as Syracuse claimed a victory over Navy.

It was the third consecutive win for the Orangemen, 4-5, who dropped their first four games.

Navy scored twice in the final ten minutes to make the game close.

Schwedes gave Syracuse the lead for good two minutes into the second period when he fielded a Navy punt and returned it 80 yards for a touchdown.

Penn 42, Lafayette 14

PHILADELPHIA — Senior running back Rich Comizio ran for 132 yards and one touchdown on 23 carries to set a school career rushing mark as undefeated Penn trounced Lafayette.

Jim Bruni and Chris Flynn each had a pair of scoring runs as Penn, 8-0, ground out 357 yards rushing at Franklin Field.

Comizio raised his career rushing yardage to 2,185, passing Adolph Bellizeare's mark of 2,155 set from 1972-74.

Cornell 15, Yale 0

ITHACA, N.Y. — Senior quarterback Marty Stallone completed a 41-yard touchdown pass to Chris Hahn, and Tom Aug added three field goals to give Cornell an Ivy League win over Yale.

Cornell (7-1), is now in a tie with the University of Pennsylvania for first place honors in the Ivy League. Both teams have 5-0 conference records.

West Virginia 24, Rutgers 17

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Undra Johnson scored on touchdown runs of 29 and 4 yards in the fourth quarter as West Virginia snapped a six-game losing streak with a victory over Rutgers, hurting the Scarlet Knights' postseason chances.

The loss dropped Rutgers to 5-3-1 with two regular-season games left while the Mountaineers, who rallied after Mike Timko replaced the injured Ben Reed at quarterback late in the third quarter, improved to 3-6.

Timko came in with West Virginia trailing 17-10 and took the Moutaineers on an 80-yard, 9-play drive with Johnson breaking over the right side of his line on fourth and one to score from 29 yards out.

Holy Cross 17, Bucknell 10

WORCESTER, Mass. — Gordon Lockbaum scored two touchdowns and set a school record as undefeated Holy Cross clinched the Colonial League championship with a win over Bucknell.

Holy Cross controlled the contest early with a first-period 12-yard field goal by Billy Young and a three-yard touchdown run in the second quarter by Lockbaum.

Massachusetts 17, Harvard 7

BOSTON — Fullback Al Neri blasted up the middle for a 3-yard touchdown plunge early in the fourth quarter to cap a University of Massachusetts victory

Neri rushed for a career-high 132 yards to lift the Minutemen's record to 7-2. Harvard dropped to 2-6.

Colgate 27, Brown 3

PROVIDENCE, R.I. — Tailback Kenny Gamble slogged through heavy mud for 166 yards and four touchdowns on 43 carries as Colgate overwhelmed Brown.

The Red Raiders scored in every quarter except the second, striking first at 12:05 of the opening session as Gamble capped a 43-yard drive with a 1-yard touchdown plunge.

Seminole's wake up in third, 45-28

Associated Press

COLUMBIA, S.C. — Tailback Victor Floyd scored three touchdowns, two during a wild third-quarter scoring melee, as Florida State overcame a sluggish first half Saturday to beat South Carolina 45-28 in a game between college football independents.

The win improved the Seminole's season record to 5-3-1 but destined the Gamecocks, 2-6-1, to their second straight losing season.

Floyd, a 195-pound sophomore, led all rushers with 115 yards on 24 carries.

Duke 38, Wake Forest 36

DURHAM, N.C. — Doug Peterson kicked a 31-yard field goal with seven seconds left, giving Duke an upset victory over Wake Forest.

Peterson had his first conversion kick blocked and didn't kick another until the fourth period, but the Blue Devils marched from their 18 to the Wake Forest 15 to set up his game-winning kick. Duke snapped a four-game losing streak and climbed to 4-5 overall, 2-3 in the ACC.

Darryl McGill rushed for 164 yards and three touchdowns, including a 21-yard run with 3:56 remaining, to give Wake Forest a 36-35 lead before Duke took over. The Blue Devil scoring drive almost stalled at the Demon Deacon 40, but on fourth-and-nine, quarterback Steve Slayden hit tight end Jason Cooper with a 17-yard pass to sustain the drive and set up Peterson's kick.

Tennessee 33, Memphis St. 3

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. — Tennessee quarterback Jeff Francis connected with Anthony Miller for a 44-yard scoring pass and the Volunteers ran for three more touchdowns to rout Memphis State.

The win snapped a three-game losing streak for the Vols and upped their record to 3-5, while the Tigers fell to 1-8.

The Vols' defense held the Tigers to 130 yards rushing and 13 yards passing as Memphis State quarterback Tim Jones hit on four of 14 attempts and was intercepted three times.

Kentucky 34, Vanderbilt 22

LEXINGTON, Ky. — Sophomore tailback Ivy Joe Hunter rushed for a career-high 238 yards and four touchdowns to power Kentucky over Vanderbilt.

Hunter, who also had runs of 18, 37 and 39 yards, became the first Kentucky runner to go over the 200-yard mark since Sonny Collins had 229 against Mississippi State in 1973.

Kentucky improved its record to 4-4-1 overall and 1-3 in the SEC while Vanderbilt, losing for the fifth straight time, fell to 1-8 and 0-5.

William & Mary 32, Princeton 14

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. — Ken Lambiotte completed 18 of 25 passes for 250 yards and two touchdowns to lead William & Mary's Indians over Princeton.

The Indians' Michael Clemons rushed 16 times for 80 yards as William & Mary, ranked 8th in Division 1-AA, improved to 8-1 while the Tigers fell to 2-6.

Fall Landscaping

As cool weather begins to blow into the Permian Basin a homeowner's thoughts turn to fall landscaping.

Summer flowers need to be replaced with those that flourish during the winter months. Leaves need to be raked. Flower beds, bushes and trees need to be mulched. Lawns fertilized for the winter. And when your house is waiting for just the right buyer to come along, these housekeeping chores take on added importance.

This week's featured home, located at 901 Harvard, features lush vegetation on every side and plenty of windows to view it from.

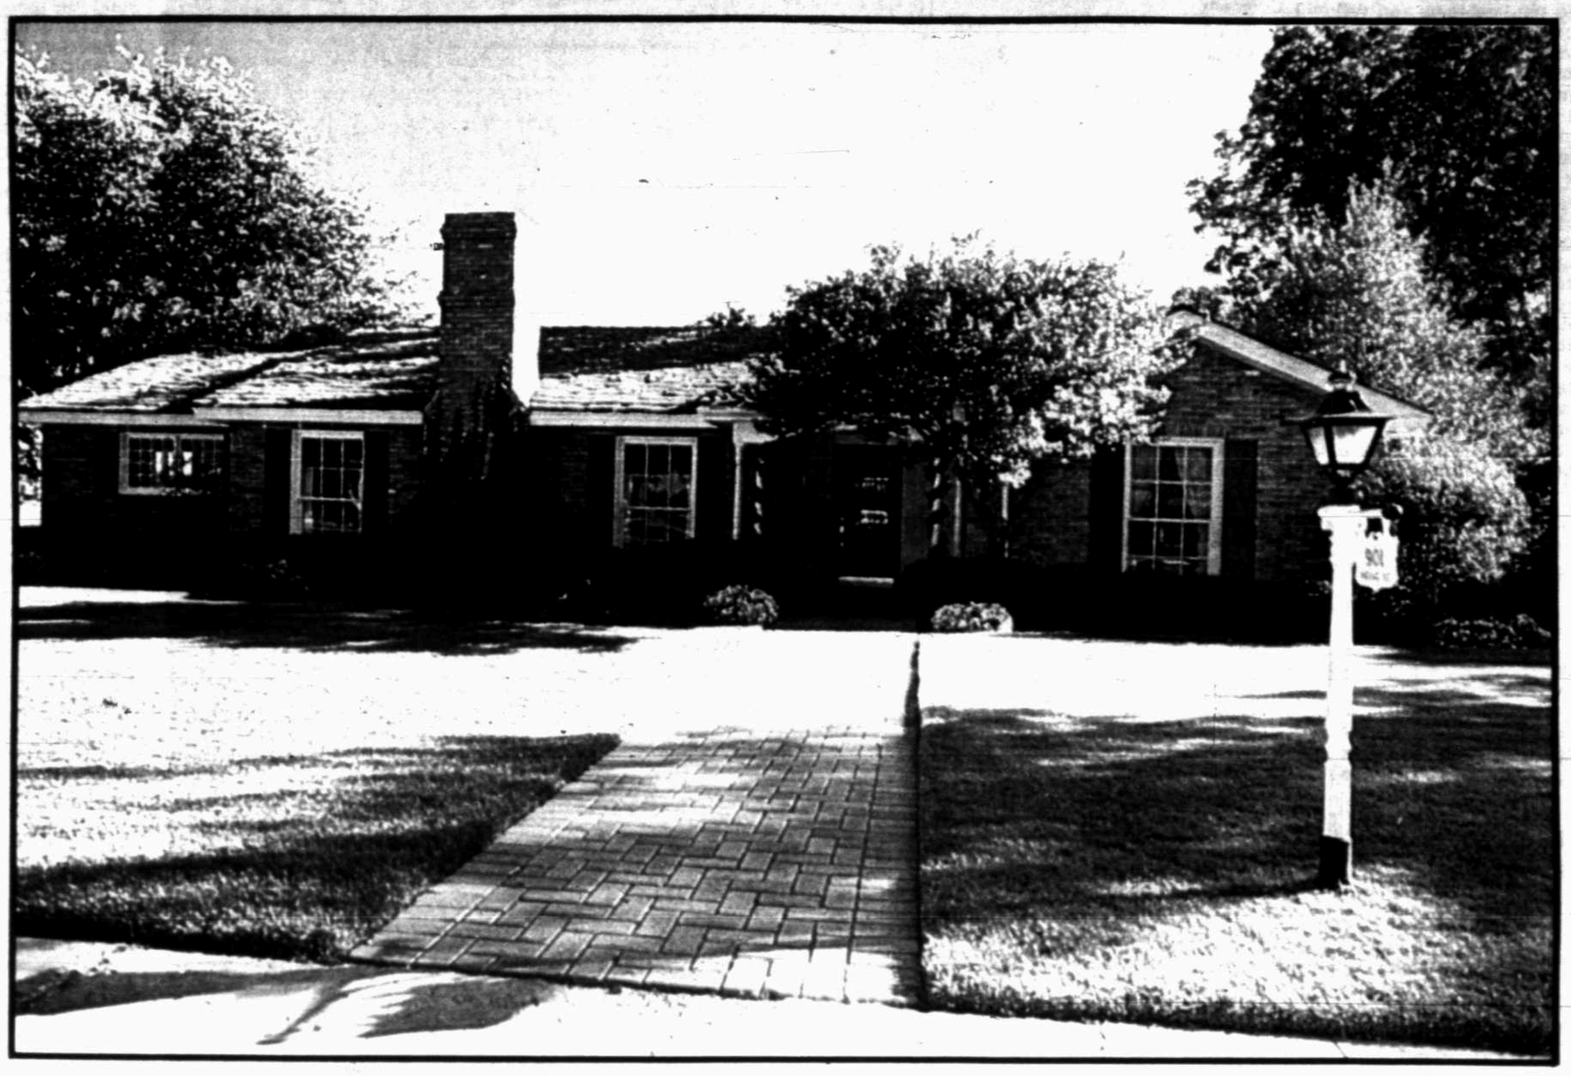

Attention to detail, including stained window and door trim, paneling and bay windows, make this home a joy to visit and a delight to own.

An entryway decorated with tongue-in-groove knotty pine paneling and a brick floor lets visitors know immediately that this home will be cozy and comfortable, a theme continued through the entire house.

The knotty pine is continued in the living area on the ceiling and as a wainscoting. A lovely brick fireplace helps to focus the room between two windows overlooking the well-manicured front lawn.

Cream colored carpeting contrasts beautifully with the light wood of the ceiling and built-in bookshelves and makes accessorizing easy. A bay window looks out onto the covered back patio and an elegantly landscaped back yard. Large shade trees make this home a delight in all seasons.

Another bay window in the formal dining room has a beautiful view of the duck pond in Wadley-Baron Park. Knotty pine wainscoting and matching ceiling molding make this room elegant.

Solid pine cabinets and yellow ceramic tile keep the kitchen light and airy. A beautiful view from the large window over the sink will delight the homemaker in your family.

Hot Point appliances, including a built-in cooktop, range and oven are encased in brick for a homey touch.

The sequestered master bedroom is carpeted in blue and features a ceiling fan. Windows on two sides of the room allow cool breezes to flow through, bringing the park on one side and the backyard on the other, inside. Painted paneling and recessed lighting are just two of the accents that make this room special.

The master bath, decorated in royal blue, features white, built-in cabinets, a beautiful vanity with mirror and gold fixtures.

On the other side of the house a spacious guest room decorated in fall colors matches the view out windows on two sides.

A third bedroom is being used by the current owners as a study. Rough hewn cedar paneling, built-in bookshelves and a wet bar make this room perfect for entertaining.

French doors leading out onto the brick-floored patio keep this room cozy, yet light.

This week's featured home has approximately 2600 square feet of living space, with three bedrooms and two and a half baths. A two car carport with electric garage door opener completes the long list of amenities in this house, listed at $225,000 by Carriage Company Realtors.

Make your own bookcase

By JACK WARNER
United Press International

Nearly every person who reads eventually needs a bookcase, and many build their own. It's not difficult.

Depending on how many books you have, you must first decide how many feet of shelving you need. If it's just 12 or 15 feet, then a free-standing bookcase is probably what you want. If it's more, then you might want built-ins to cover a whole wall.

Your options are generally greater with built-ins than with a free-standing unit because the built-ins can be secured to the wall. You can go with an open style, which employs what amount to ladders as the shelf supports, or a closed type with solid uprights, which is similar in construction to a stand-alone type.

Basically, a free-standing bookcase is going to be a box. Thirty inches is about maximum for nominal 1-inch pine or fir shelves. Anything taller than six feet is going to be cumbersome and could even be dangerous if it isn't secured to the wall or made very deep. And nothing looks worse than shelves sagging under too heavy a load.

Depth is another question. Nine and a half inches is about right for most books but if you intend to house phonograph records some shelves will have to be 11 ½ inches. Of course a split-level bookcase is not a very complicated project — three shelves 11 ½ inches deep by 12 ¾ inches high, with several more only eight inches deep above them.

Draw your project out on paper, so that you know exactly how much wood you need and its dimensions. The lumber yard calls its stock one-by-whatever and two-by-whatever, but those are "nominal" sizes. A 1x10 board, for instance, is going to be about three quarters of an inch thick and about 9 ½ inches wide.

In planning the height of a free-standing bookcase don't forget to account for the thickness of the shelves. If you're using ordinary stock then the top and bottom shelves should be an inch and a half longer than the rest, because they will fit over the sides.

Speaking of thickness, some of the better lumber yards may carry five-quarter stock, which means the wood is actually an inch thick. This looks very, very nice, a welcome relief from the monotony of three-quarter-inch wood, and it's well worth considering if you can afford it.

Unless you are confident you can crosscut your boards squarely, find a lumber yard that will cut them to size for you. It'll cost extra but if they do it right it will be worth it.

Buy only the best grade the yard sells and select the stock carefully. Avoid any pieces that are twisted — woodworkers call it "in winding" — badly cupped, warped or with knots on the edges. At some "discount" lumber yards that's virtually impossible; their lumber appears to be rejects from a beaver dam. Avoid these places.

A free-standing case will get its strength from the back. Get a sheet of quarter-inch plywood for the back. If you're going to leave the bookcase natural rather than paint it, then get Philippine mahogany or some other relatively cheap plywood - anything but fir plywood. Have the yard cut it to size, too.

There are a lot of ways to secure the shelves, but one of the simplest is with metal or plastic brackets which you insert into holes drilled in the side pieces. If you drill extra holes, you can adjust the shelf position later.

Lay the sides out together, back edge to back edge, and mark and drill the matching pairs of holes (first making sure they are level). Use a depth stop to be sure you don't go any deeper than necessary.

Put the sides between the top and bottom shelves and carefully nail the box together with finishing nails at least an inch long. Use a nail set to drive the heads just a little below the surface of the wood.

One caveat: nailing into end grain is at best a temporary joint. Don't ever expect it to hold permanently.

Turn the box face down and square it up. It's square when the opposite corners are the same distance apart. Then attach the back with nails all around.

If the plywood back turned out a little large, that's no problem. Get a Surform rasp and rasp it down flush with the sides.

Your bookcase will look a lot better with a kickplate. Get some 1X2 stock and make a rectangle of it about an inch smaller all around than the bottom shelf. Then nail it under the bottom shelf.

Now, before the shelves are installed, is the time to finish the project. Cover the nail heads with wood putty and sand all surfaces, starting with 120 grit and working up through 180 grit to 220, making sure to take the hard edges off all the boards. Do it by hand if you must, but an electric pad sander is a blessing here. Don't try it with a sanding disk on your drill, though.

Next you can paint the case and the shelves, or stain and varnish them, whichever suits you.

Plug your shelf brackets in, lay the shelves on them and there you are. Of course, it probably won't sit straight. Even if your kickplate is perfectly square it's unlikely your floors are perfectly flat. Just shim it up with cardboard, wooden wedges or whatever comes to hand until it quits rocking. Once you get your books installed it won't be going anywhere.

Tile shines on and on

When life cycle costs are considered, American-made ceramic tile represents a real bargain, says the Tile Council of America, Inc.

Because it's so durable, ceramic tile outlasts many generations of other flooring materials.

Fascinating Facts

by Bob & Bill Drummond, Licensed Master Plumbers

The frog is valuable to man in many ways. It is a mosquito killer and clears gardens of insects and slugs. Among both civilized and savage populations it has been used for food. In France, the edible European frog is bred for the market in large preserves. In both the U.S. and France, it is the hind legs, which have a flavor and texture something like chicken, are the parts that are eaten. In Germany all the muscle parts served stewed with sauce, are eaten. The frog is also a common laboratory specimen for biological research. Regeneration of animal tissue is often illustrated by the regrowth of the tadpole's tail.

French patio replacement doors act as beautiful and energy-efficient replacements for conventional sliding glass patio doors.

French doors elegantly replace sliding doors

The French patio replacement door acts as a beautiful and enrgy-efficient replacement for any convetinal sliding glass patio door. It has almost as much glass area as a conventional sliding patio door and provides the same scenic view. One difference, it swings open rather than slides. It can be weather-stripped, making it three times more energy efficient than either a conventional double paneled aluminum or wood framed sliding glass door.

Not only is the French patio door highly energy-efficient, it also provides the attractiveness and beauty that can increase the value of your home. It is also available with or without glass dividers. The door also provides the added security of deadlock preparation and tempered safety glass.

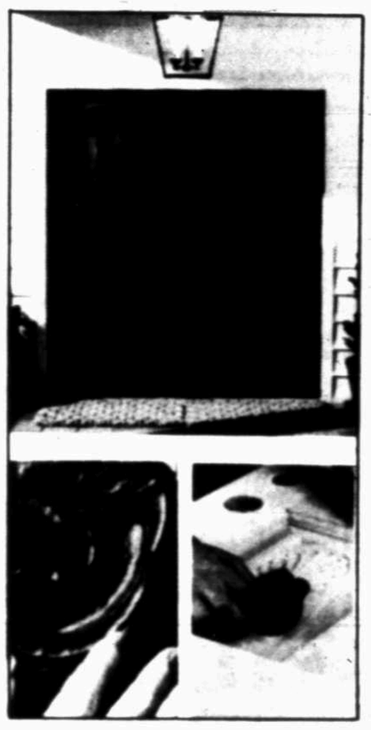

Regular care of entry door is very important

Your front door is the smile on your home, the first impression for visitors. This is why rich-looking, solid wood entrance doors are more popular than ever. "The return to popularity is due," says a Fir and Hemlock Door Association spokesman, "to the trend toward better, longer-lasting products by homeowners who are moving less frequently and, instead, upgrading their existing homes or spending more on quality amenities in the new homes they build or buy.

The best selling wood entrance doors are those with deeply carved panels or leaded glass inserts, some with both. All wood doors are pieces of fine furniture and they need care, especially when exposed to the elements. The door should be checked at least once a year and a good time is before winter hits. Check the jamb first for needed repairs or refinishing, then check the threshold. While you're at it, check the weatherstrip all around the door, replacing or repairing where needed. Most heat loss occurs around the door, not through it, so money spent on good weatherstrip saves fuel bills.

Newer solid wood panel doors have done away with many problems of splitting, checking or separating at the joints. Laminated construction and new glues have done the trick. But the wood finish, like the finish on the dining room table, needs attention now and then. It's usually easy, if the door has been properly finished originally.

If you go back to the original wood for refinishing, follow these simple steps. Sandpaper and steel wool the surface to remove all marks, stains, oil and dirt. (Do not use water or caustic or abrasive cleaners.) Then use oil base sealers, stains and finish coats (clear or paint), all from the same manufacturer to insure compatibility. Apply two coats of each, sanding between coats.

Regular care of entry door helps make a good first impression.

Doors sometimes begin to stick because of normal settling of the house. Solid wood doors have the advantage of being easy to plane or sand away the rubbing spots.

The waterbed grows up

By PATRICIA LEIGH BROWN
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — It may never join the loftiest ranks of modern furniture design, those hallowed niches reserved for the likes of Mies van der Rohe or Charles Eames. And it is possible to overstate the cultural importance of the water bed. After all, the modern water bed began as a gurgling mass of velvet-topped vinyl, procured in bead-draped record stores along with incense and albums from the rock group Cream.

Still, if contributions to modern design were judged purely on the basis of emotions engendered, the water bed, that fluid fixture of 1970s crash pads, might be at the top of the ratings.

In the catalogue for last winter's "High Styles" show at the Whitney Museum of American Art, Martin Filler called the water bed one of the "most evocative furniture types of the time." Filled with up to 250 gallons of water and who knows how many tons of sexual promise, the organic, free-floating form seemed to capture the spirit of the age. Its mystique was skillfully perpetuated by water bed dealers and manufacturers. "Two things are better on a water bed," read the copy of one popular advertisement in 1970. "One of them is sleeping."

But times change. "When I was a hippie," says the San Francisco writer Ben Fong-Torres, a former water bed owner, "I remember thinking that one day there would be a New Yorker cartoon in which you walked into an antique store and looked at beanbag chairs and water beds."

Strangely, however, the water bed has not become passe. Rather, it has followed in the footsteps of granola and Jane Fonda. "We have infiltrated the mainstream," says Henry R. Robinson, the president of the Trendwest Furniture Manufacturing Co. and the official spokesman of the Waterbed Manufacturers Association.

The $1.9 billion annual sales of the flotation sleep industry, as it is known, now constitute between 12 percent and 15 percent of the American bedding market, according to Robinson. In comparison, sales hovered around $13 million in 1971. Water beds now come in popular styles such as four-poster Colonials, which account for 49 percent of current frame sales. There are Victorian water beds with etched-glass and carved headboards. They are sold today in suburban shopping malls in stores with names like Water-bed Plaza. "The water bed buyer profile is not distinctively different today from conventional mattress buyers," says Leonard S. Gaby, a vice president of Simmons U.S.A., which began selling water beds in 1980 and now offers five styles.

In perhaps the biggest blow to their Haight-Ashbury image, water beds will be making their debut in the popular Spiegel catalogue next year, according to Carl Truett, furniture buyer for the company.

Born in 1969, the same year as Woodstock, the modern water bed was designed by Charles Hall, then a student, as a project for a class at San Francisco State University. Though therapeutic flotation systems date to the early 1800s, and possibly beyond, Hall is widely considered the inventor of the water bed in its popular form.

Water beds became common on many college campuses, though their early reputation for leaks caused them to be banned by some campus housing authorities. A Vassar graduate of the early '70s, now a Manhattan banker, recalled, "There was always a big scene in September with hoses hanging down from windows when someone moved their water bed in." She finally gave up on water beds, deeming them "too squishy." David Klein said: "It was a countercultural item. It was different. It was not the bed your parents had."

In the mid-'70s, stand-up comics and television sitcoms had a field day with water beds. In an episode of the sitcom "Phyllis," for instance, Phyliss (Cloris Leachman) checked into a motel room only to discover a pink fur water bed. She later accidentally stabbed it with a letter opener, creating a geyser that gushed to the ceiling.

There are alternatives to sliding closet doors

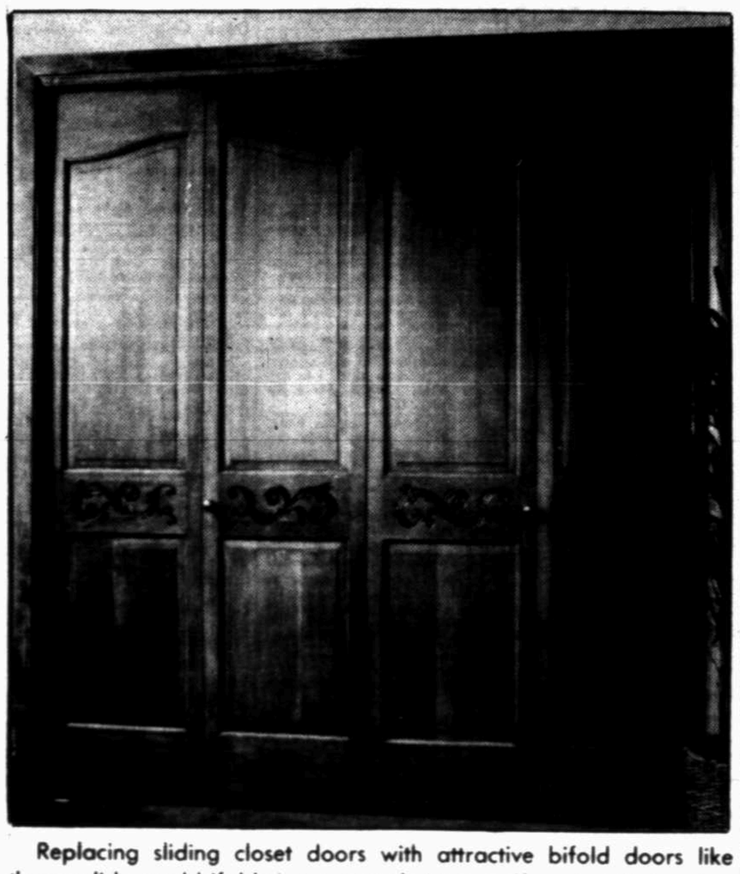

Closets with sliding doors can make getting dressed an exasperating experience. If one person owns the whole closet, the doors may have to be slid back and forth several times before the process is finished. If two people are sharing the closet—look out! Dressing at the same time could become a tug-of-war as one pushes the doors one way and the other pushes them back.

Bifolds are an alternative which some people have avoided because, in the past, reliable, attractive bifolds have not been available. However, that is no longer the case. Thicker, sturdier, panel bifold doors are now available. They are real wood all the way through and can be stained or painted to match any decor. Available in two-door or four-door assemblies bifolds can be obtained to fit openings that are from two feet to six feet wide.

Six-panel bifold doors can be obtained to complement styles from colonial to modern. Some manufacturers produce bifolds which feature unique carved designs and curved top rails for a more elegant effect.

When shopping for bifolds it is advisable to purchase easy-to-install units which are pre-assembled and pre-drilled to receive pivots and guides. Doors, track and complete hardware should be included in the carton. Consider purchasing doors with extra-wide stiles for a more substantial look and feel.

Bifolds can be adjusted to fit your opening. Remember that the measurements given on bifold door cartons are for the size of the finished opening. Manufacturers prefit doors to fit the opening size so the actual doors are about ¼" smaller than the size given.

Replacing sliding closet doors with attractive bifold doors like these solid wood bifolds is an easy do-it-yourself project that makes closets more accessible.

New entry doors should be chosen with extra care

When planning the construction of a new home or the remodeling of an old one, the entry door should be chosen with the same care and thought as floor coverings, fixtures and appliances.

The right choice can make the difference between an ordinary-looking exterior and a warm, inviting entryway that will continue to say "welcome" for years to come. In truth, the door is the focal point of any entryway—the initial clue to the personality of the inhabitants and the first hint of the home's decor.

Most entry doors are either wood or metal. For residential construction the warmth and beauty of wood doors has made them the favorite of homeowners everywhere.

Another reason why wood doors are favored is that they can be easily trimmed to fit any opening—even one that is out-of-square. This makes them particularly suitable for remodeling projects.

You may have a door custom-made or select for a variety of premade doors, usually on display at lumber yards.

When shopping for doors an understanding of several terms will help:

"Panel" doors consist of "stiles" (solid vertical members) and "rails" (solid cross members) with panels filling the spaces in between.

"Flush" doors consist of panel faces over a framework with a solid or hollow core. Exterior flush doors would be "solid-core" rather than "hollow-core."

Size is usually no problem because door sizes are standard. However, on panel doors, the width of stiles may vary and a buyer should be aware that too narrow a stile may limit the type of hardware which can be used. Extra-wide stiles can accommodate even the most ornate hardware.

It is important to remember that there is far more heat lost around a door than through it. Therefore, a good weather-strip system should be a part of any door purchase.

For those who fancy leaded glass inserts, there are now double or triple glazed models which not only save energy, they are easier to clean because the design is on the inside.

Choosing a door to fit the architectural style of a home is the easiest and most fun part of all. Doors can be found which fit in perfectly with Victorian, Colonial or other styles. Other doors can be chosen to give a novel and exciting eclectic look to a plain bungalow.

A carefully crafted, quality entry door is a sign of good taste and well worth the effort of shopping and comparing. Unseen items which should be considered are warranties and manufacturer integrity.

Stained glass makes sparkling doorways, good investment

By The Associated Press

Mention stained glass, and many people think of medieval cathedrals and Gothic churches.

But for modern-day Americans, the rich look of stained glass can make bay windows distinctive, skylights colorful or sliding glass doors a thing of beauty, according to designers.

"Homeowners often opt for designer glass when remodeling a home's exterior because it is a decorative investment which increases a home's value," says Barry Rupp, whose company markets beveled and colored designer glass products.

One cost-efficient way to improve the outside appearance of a home is by using windows to make a decorative statement, adds Rupp, president of Stained Glass Overlay of Costa Mesa, Calif.

With an average of 13 windows per home, he notes, many owners are looking to alternative window treatments instead of curtains, shades or blinds.

"Custom designs on glass, for instance, can create a sense of beauty in the interior as well as the exterior of the home by coordinating with fabric and wallpaper patterns," Rupp suggests.

"Decorated glass creates a sense of privacy and allows sunlight to shine through. Designs on glass also help to disguise unsightly views such as that of the driveway or busy roads."

Rupp says a front door or entryway can be coordinated to match the style and color of existing trim or shutters, or can make a decorative statement all its own.

If the front door is in good condition, a fresh coat of paint or stain may be all that is needed to improve the door's appearance.

An impressive entryway also can be created by replacing the existing front door and installing sidelights or a transom, which open up the front of the house and create a lasting impression.

When glass panels are used in a front door or in sidelights, more sunlight is brought into the home's interior, filling the room or foyer with additional light.

An elegant solid hardwood door can add to both a home's appearance and value, with hardwood such as oak or mahogany being recommended over softwoods like pine and fir because they stand up to general wear-and-tear over the years.

Check safety of garage door

For safety's sake, garage door remote controls should never be handled by children, only by responsible adults.

Proper installation of a garage door usually requires a professional.

For the life of your garage door and the safety of your family, especially if the door is an older one, maintenance and periodic lubrication is very important.

Your garage door may be the largest piece of moving equipment on your property. For peace of mind, keep that door to safety running smoothly.

Let's talk about Real Estate...

Joanne Langston

What determines "value" of a property?

In real estate courses we were always taught that a property was worth what a willing buyer and a willing seller would agree to. Unfortunately, however, in today's market, there are too many unwilling sellers who because of economic stress have had to accept sales prices much lower than would logically be expected. The repercussions from these transactions have depressed, not just "leveled" values throughout the entire market. I cannot see that this is a good situation for anyone!

Even though the short term benefit of purchasing a great property at a low price seems highly desirable to a buyer, the downward pressure of the transaction on the market only contributes to continued lowering of values-Bad news for other sellers on the market as well as for that buyer as a potential future seller.

As a broker, and as a 28 year resident of our community, I have great concern about todays real estate market. I feel it is not going to get better until buyers exhibit a greater responsibility to purchase properties at fair,reasonable prices and until more of our distressed sellers can resist pressures that force them to accept ridiculously low offers! I think it is imperative that we in the real estate community encourage sales at reasonable levels, and lend our support to the reestablishment of a more "normal" market. A "dream" situation I know, but something that we can all at least strive for.

Low Down Payment And No Closing Costs. They Open Up All Kinds Of Possibilities.

The Best Deal In Town.

- 3% down payment if priced at $50,000 or less. If over $50,000, 3% on first $25,000, 5% on balance.
- No closing costs.
- Great values.
- All homes priced for quick sale.
- Call brokers below for information on investor financing.

Financing example as of 11/7/86: $50,000 purchase price, 3% down, $48,500 loan at 9.875% Annual Percentage Rate: 360 monthly payments of $422.00.

The dream of homeownership can come true. Because, for a limited time only, down payments for these properties are only 3%.

What's more, there are no closing costs, so you save even more. You pay only normal prepaid items; we pay the rest.

Plus, your new loan is assumable once. So later on, if you decide to sell the house, a qualified buyer can assume your loan as long as it's more than 12 but less than 48 months old.

With all this going for you, you can probably afford more home than you planned. So look over the list; make your calls. But hurry. You may never have another chance to get the best deal in town.

Preserving Summer

There are those who say home canning is a dying art. These people believe that the year-round availability of fresh produce — as well as a more urban lifestyle — makes this old-fashioned method of food preservation unnecessary. But this is not necessarily true.

Find a Yuppie and chances are you will find a nostalgic child who remembers his mother or grandmother at the stove "putting up" quarts and quarts of tomatoes, green beans, jellies and even meats.

"My mother puts up 300 quarts of tomatoes every year," said one young professional woman.

"One time, my mother and I put up 124 quarts in one day," another said.

"I made end-of-the-garden pickles and apple butter last week," added another.

So some may say home-canning is a dying art, but they are probably wrong.

Debbie Schraeder of Garden City, mother of five, said, "I've been canning since I was in high school, must have been 14 or 15. My mama did it. There were 10 in our family and you had to to survive. If she hadn't canned, we wouldn't have had anything to eat. It's something I feel you need to do — I feel it will always be worthwhile."

Even young people are showing a growing interest in the process, according to Jill Pronger, Midland County Extension Agent for home economics. "We've had a lot of interest from kids who have gone and stayed with their grandparents and decided to try it," she said.

Mrs. Schraeder's daughter Charlene, a 17-year-old 4-H member, has been actively involved in canning food for her family since she was about 7, her mother said. "She has worked on canning (for her 4-H project) exclusively since 1980."

The idea of actually growing, harvesting and preserving foods can be mind-boggling for those accustomed to city sidewalks and supermarket frozen food sections, but, Ms. Pronger assured, "canning is easy."

Special vegetary knowledge is unnecessary, she said, just "knowing how to pick out fresh vegetables — the same principles apply to picking out vegetables to can." Beginners can learn how to can from "brochures we have out here (in the County Extension office; canning is) pretty well detailed, step by step."

She also stressed the process can be a real money-saver, which may be an added incentive during what commonly is being called "these trying economic times."

The Schraeders preserve produce from their own garden, including black-eyed peas, green beans, pumpkin, sweet potatoes, three kinds of pickles, three kinds of relish and corn, as well as such items as barbecue sauce and tomato juice, Mrs. Schraeder said. "I feel that I buy a lot at the grocery store, that if we didn't can ... we couldn't afford."

Necessary equipment includes standard jars made specifically for home canning, standard canning lids which provide proper sealing and some kind of canner, such as a pressure cooker.

"The initial purchase may be fairly big," Ms. Pronger said, "... but once the initial purchase is over, it (canning) is very low cost."

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

Halloween was celebrated in a variety of ways in Midland last weekend — at public and private parties, football games and various musical happenings.

The Yucca Theatre was the setting that evening for the very successful opening of Midland Community Theatre's "Little Shop of Horrors," a musical comedy spoof.

A Halloween party and dance followed the performance, with music provided by The Marbles. KBAT co-hosted the party, with disc jockeys "Kazz" and John Robins emceeing. The fun event included the awarding of numerous door prizes and two contests, one for "best mustache" and the other for the best female "costume."

Among those spotted in the throng were Marcia and John Ingram, Donna and Lee Bruno, Vicki and Ron Bolin, Betty and Arlen Edgar, Gayle and Tom Madonna, and Brian Schwanitz, who recently played the title role in MCT's production of "The Elephant Man," and his wife, Marylinn.

Meanwhile, over at Midland High School, the Tennessee River Boys from Nashville presented the season's opener for the Community Concert Association. As superb showmen and musicians, the multi-talented young men have a whole new group of Country Music fans in Midland.

Vocalist and rhythm guitarist Danny Gregg enjoyed a reunion here with childhood friends, pediatric dentist Walt Taylor and his wife, Gayla. The three grew up in Altus, Oklahoma.

In addition to the Taylors, a few of those seen enjoying the concert were Lou and Carl Hyde, Elizabeth (Mrs. Lloyd) Haseltine, Manetta Heckathorne, Micky German, Bernice (Mrs. Harry) Russell, Betty and Clyde Pederson and Gloria (Mrs. Robert) Steelman.

LONGTIME MIDLAND RESIDENT, Betty Matthews, was honored with a surprise party on Nov. 1 in celebration of her 80th birthday. The event, which was hosted by Betty's family, was held at the Plaza Club.

An elegant seven-course dinner, beginning with canapes and sparkling strawberry punch, and ending with a three-tiered chocolate cake with 80 lighted candles, was served to the group in the club's private dining room. Veal Monterrey was the piece de resistance. Background piano music provided a pleasant accompaniment to the evening's events.

The beautiful decorations included an ice carving of a figure "80," surrounded by seven floral arrangements, featuring pink and white lilies, roses, orchids and baby's-breath, and garlands of gardenias and orchids.

Sharing the milestone occasion were family members, including Betty's husband, Clark; her daughter and son-in-law, Kay and Bill Shoemaker of Midland; her son,, Jake Matthews and his wife, Janice of Dallas, and her grandchildren, Susan Shoemaker of Lubbock, Dan Shoemaker of Midland, the Rev. Trish and the Rev. Rick Williamson of San Antonio, Pam and Hank Koenig of Waco, and Christy Matthews of Dallas.

Friends present were Ruth and Charles Lutrick, Tiney and W.D. Ladd, Jeanne and R.O. Smith, Lucille and Marvin McCree, Christine Turner, Janice and Howard Glass, and from Dallas, Helen and A.J. Hill, who formerly resided in Midland, and Betty Worley.

Family friend Betty Jo Morgan entertained the Matthews clan with a breakfast at her home last Sunday before they attended services at First United Methodist Church.

DALLAS WAS THE RECENT destination for a tour group from Midland. Staying at the Adolphus, the Midlanders enjoyed the Chinese exhibit at the Science Museum in Fair Park; the musical, "Cats," and Neiman-Marcus' Fortnight, which has an Australian theme this year. They also enjoyed lunching at the well-known S&S Tea Room in Highland Park.

Going from here were tour director Donna Yuronka and her daughter, Sarah; Patsy Hinchey and daughters, Patsy and Laura; Patsy Yeager, Susan Huff, Dorothy Neely, Norma McFarland, Mary Steedman, Beulah Prichard, Jere Hubbard, Sue Conner, Roseann Hughston, June Cowden, Eugenia Bailey, Betty Rhotenberry, Alice Gordin, Mary Combs, Paulette Sole, Margaret Cowden, and Evelyn Cole of McKinney.

THE PLEASURE OF THEIR COMPANY — Betty and Don Ewan recently enjoyed a trip to Europe with their daughters and sons-in-law, Linda and Jerry Roudebush of Houston and Brenda and Jim Shute of Richardson. They toured England, Scotland, Germany, Switzerland and France by van, train and plane.

Beginning their two-week tour in London, the Texans enjoyed Andrew Lloyd Webber's hit musical, "Starlight Express," and the city's many tourist attractions before taking the Flying Scotsman sleeper train to Edinburgh, Scotland. They enjoyed exploring the beautiful Scottish countryside by van.

Munich, Germany, was their next stop, where they enjoyed dinner with fellow Midlanders, Karen and Tim Thompson. They were particularly interested in Munich's centrally located market place, where the shoppers come daily for their meats and fresh produce, and with the famous Glockenspiel clock on the town square.

In Switzerland, the group stayed at Interlaken and took a cog train to the peak of Jungfrau in the Alps. They were enthralled with the breathtaking Ice Palace at the top and the opportunity to throw snowballs in October.

Their last stop was Paris, where they visited all of its "must see" places. Among the highlights were viewing the works of the Old Masters at the Louvre, shopping the famed department stores and dinner at La Tour de Argent, a world-class restaurant on the Left Bank.

Their memories of the trip will certainly include the friendliness displayed by the European people as they traveled from country to country and the magnificence of the autumn colors, which were at the height of their beauty.

Common canning mistakes easily prevented

From Staff Reports

Fresh fruits and vegetables, quality equipment and proper procedures can produce summertime, mouthwatering foods for winter months.

However, mistakes can happen. Kerr Glass Manufacturing Corporation, maker of home-canning products, suggests the following reasons for canning failures:

WHY JARS DO NOT OR CANNOT SEAL

- Using make-shift supplies, such as off-standard jars — called packers' jars — which have mouths with inaccurate widths, lids that ride on edge and sealing edges which are not level — and one-piece caps instead of screw band.
- Using rusty or bent screwbands.
- Not closing the jar with full strength of the hand before processing.
- Using jars which have damaged sealing edges.
- Not cleaning jar's sealing edge.
- Syphoning of liquid, which causes food particles to lodge between lid and sealing edge of jar.
- Lack of heat in processing.

WHY FOODS SPOIL

- Not processing at correct temperature. For pressure cooker canning, this means 10 pounds or 240 degrees. To insure this, the pressure canner gauge should be checked each year. Other reasons for incorrect temperature include failure to exhaust pressure, failure to adjust for elevation and failure to keep pressure accurate — less than 10 pounds will not sterilize food.

In the boiling water bath method, water must be at a rolling boil when jars are placed in canner, water must cover jar caps by at least 1 inch when processing, water must remain at full rolling boil during entire processing time, foods must be processed the correct amount of time and adjustment must be made for elevation higher than 1000 feet.

- Improper cooling of jars after processing. Reasons for this include failure to remove jars from canner when gauge reads 0 degrees, failure to remove jars from boiling water bath when processing time is up and failure to cool jars properly — they should be about 1 inch apart, uncovered.

WHY LIQUID IS LOST DURING PROCESSING

- Liquid is lost from vegetables because of packing food too tight in jars, filling jars too full (non-starchy foods should be within ½-inch of the sealing edge; starchy foods within 1½-inches and liquid for all vegetables ½-inch), pressure too high, fluctuation in pressure, sudden lowering of pressure, leakage of steam from pressure canner and petcock opening before gauge returns to zero.
- With fruits, liquid is lost from filling jars too full — cold pack fruit should be packed to within ½-inch of sealing edge and liquid to within 1½-inches; hot pack fruit and syrup to within ½-inch of sealing edge.

WHY FRUIT TURNS DARK

- Not processed long enough.
- Processing temperature not high enough.
- Time not counted accurately.
- Boiling water less than 1 inch above cap during processing.
- Packing fruits raw which should be precooked.

WHY FRUIT FLOATS

- Using overripe fruit.
- Packing fruit too loose.
- Syrup too heavy.
- Processing too long.
- Processing at too high temperature.

CANNING

The glass canning jars may be reused, she said, but it is extremely important not to reuse the lids "because the rubber gasket won't seal right, which leaves it open to food spoilage."

It is also important to use only standard canning jars, not mayonnaise jars, peanut butter jars or any other jar not especially made for canning "because the jar (not made for canning) can't always stand the pressure and may break or chip."

The canning process is time consuming. "From start to finish, if someone has never done it before, it takes maybe 2½ to 3 hours," Ms. Pronger said.

During a recent canning session she and several 9- to 11-year-old 4-H members conducted, "we canned green beans. The kids snapped and washed the beans; sterilized the jars; filled them with green beans. We used the cold pack method." This session lasted about 2½ hours, Ms. Pronger said.

According to a Texas Agricultural Extension Service brochure, "Home Canning ... Fruits and Vegetables," the cold pack method means raw fruits or vegetables are packed in the jars, boiling liquid is added, the jars are closed and processed in boiling water.

The rewards are worth the wait, Ms. Pronger said. Not only is home canning a money-saver, but the foods "taste more like fresh vegetables. They don't retain the full summer taste, but they do taste more like home grown."

And that flavor is something money can't buy — not in a supermarket, anyway.

For more information and instruction about home-canning, contact the Midland County Extension Office, 687-1351.

Safety measures provide healthy home-canned foods

From Staff Reports

Proper methods of home canning insure foods will be attractive, tasty and nutritious.

But proper canning methods provide more than just beauty and flavor — they can be actual life savers.

"Food poisoning is an ever-present possibility," according to a Bacterial Food Poisoning Fact Sheet, distributed by Texas Agricultural Extension Service. One of the most serious forms of food poisoning is botulism.

"Botulism accounts for fewer than one of every 400 cases of food poisoning in the U.S.," the brochure continued, "but two factors make it very important. First, it has caused death in approximately 30 percent of the cases; and secondly, it occurs mostly in home-canned foods.

" ... Cl. botulinum can exist as a heat-resistant spore, and can grow and produce a neurotoxin in underprocessed, home-canned foods. An affected food may show signs of spoilage such as a bulging can or an off-odor," the brochure continued. "But this is not true in all cases, so canned foods should not be tasted before heating. The botulinum toxin is destroyed by boiling the food for 5 to 10 minutes."

The brochure listed eight steps to preventing food poisonings:

- Before and after handling raw foods, thoroughly wash hands, food preparation surfaces and utensils.
- Store refrigerated foods below 40 degrees.
- Immediately serve hot foods or keep them heated above 140 degrees.
- For rapid cooling in the refrigerator, and to prevent hot foods from reheating cooled foods, separate large portions of food into small portions.
- The danger zone is between 40 degrees and 140 degrees.
- Obtain and follow approved home-canning procedures, available from extension service or USDA.
- Thoroughly heat canned foods before tasting.
- When in doubt, throw it out.

Booklets help home canners

WASHINGTON (AP) — Millions of Americans are "putting up" summer produce for winter meals. The most common answers are canning and freezing.

Canning is the more traditional, and demanding, approach. Freezing has grown in popularity in recent years as more families have acquired freezers with sufficient storage space.

Either way, if it's done right the result can be months of delightful eating. But if the process isn't followed correctly, the result can be wasted time and food at best, and food poisoning at worst.

To help, the Department of Agriculture has put together a pair of booklets on the subject.

"Home Canning of Fruits and Vegetables" costs $1.50 and "Home Freezing of Fruits and Vegetables" is $2, and both can be had from the Consumer Information Center, Pueblo, Colo., 81009. Canning is item 174P, Freezing is item 175P.

Both the Department of Agriculture and the Food and Drug Administration warn that the greatest danger is botulism — a rare but sometimes deadly form of food poisoning.

Canned food is a good place for botulism to form, because it is caused by a microorganism that can grow only in the absence of oxygen.

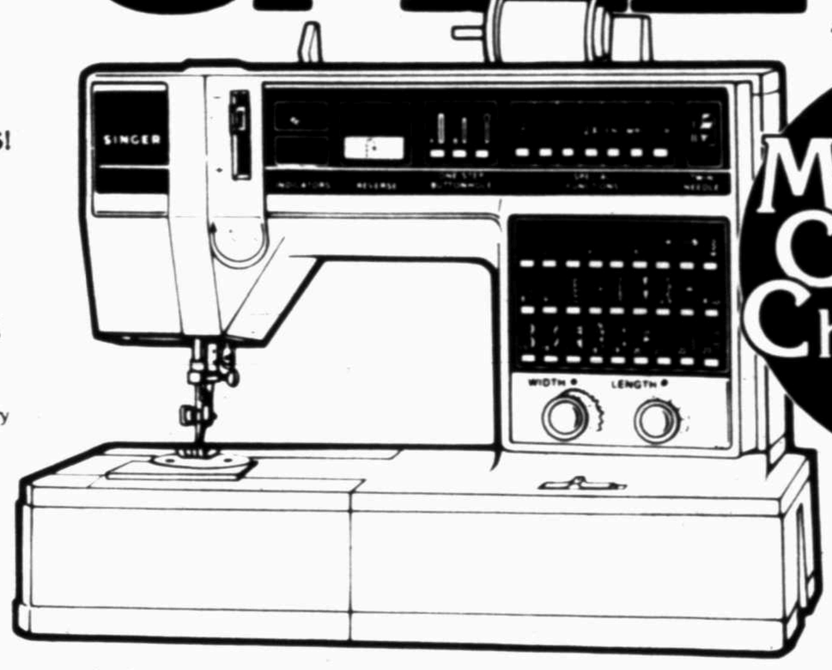

Spores of botulinum float in the air and can be found on many foods, but normally they don't find the right conditions to grow to dangerous numbers, the Food and Drug Administration reports. Food with high acid, salt or other chemical content can also inhibit them.

But they will grow in an airtight jar of food that has not been processed adequately to kill them.

DEAR ABBY

Child-support checks don't add up in daughter's mind

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Three months ago I moved out of my mother's house to live with my grandmother. Every month my mother gets $400 child support from my father for me and my brother. Abby, $200 of that money belongs to me. Of the $600 my mother got for my support the last three months, I have seen only $80. I have asked my mom to give me my $200 each month. She said, "No, I will give your grandmother $100, and I'll give you $10 a week for pocket money because that's all you need. I will not give you the whole amount because I want to know where it's going."

That's only $140 total. What about the other $60? If I received the whole $200 a month, I would gladly give some to my grandmother.

What are my rights to that money? My mother hasn't given my grandmother anything since I've been here. — FLAT BROKE

DEAR BROKE: The child support money should not go to you directly; it should be given to the person who is taking care of you — namely your grandmother.

If your father doesn't know that you are living with your grandmother and that she hasn't received any part of your support money, tell him.

You don't state your age, but $10 a week seems generous for pocket money.

DEAR ABBY: You be the judge: My husband, "John," is a very young 66. He is also very handsome, charming and gregarious. We have an excellent marriage. John sings in the church choir and I am part of the audience. The choir director is a lively, 24-year-old woman who is fond of John. (I'll call her Sandra.) Sandra has a live-in boyfriend who also sings in the choir.

Sandra recently called our home and I answered. She asked to speak directly to John. I assumed it had something to do with choir practice. Then I heard John laugh and say, "I'd better ask my wife." Well, it turned out that Sandra had tickets for a musical and she asked my husband to escort her because her boyfriend was going to be out of town! (No mention was made of me.)

When John asked if it would be all right with me if he escorted Sandra, I said no, it wouldn't. He said I was foolish to take that attitude — all it involved was picking her up and acting as her escort for the evening.

I held my ground. He insisted I was wrong to make a "big deal" out of it — all Sandra wanted was an escort.

I need to know from you, was I wrong to say no? Or should I have told him it was all right with me when it wasn't? — JOHN'S WIFE

DEAR WIFE: You were justified in saying no. Sandra struck a sour note when she asked your husband to escort her, and he should have told her so.

DEAR ABBY: I am sure I'm not the only one this happened to. I got married in a private civil ceremony; no family or friends were invited.

When I told my family and friends about my marriage, they said if I threw a party then I would get gifts.

Abby, if people want to give a present, why should the bride and groom be expected to shell out hundreds of dollars for a party? Can't friends and relatives give presents even if there is no party? — NOT ALONE IN RUTHERFORD, N.J.

DEAR NOT ALONE: Certainly. And the people who WANT to give a present will — party or no party. However, some people feel obligated to give a present (and therefore will) only if they have been invited to a party.

CONFIDENTIAL TO DEEPLY INVOLVED AND NO REGRETS: If not for your own protection, consider the heartbreak such a revelation could cause your husband and family. Destroy those letters, and don't carry them with you for "safekeeping." Should you be involved in an accident and their contents are revealed, if you live, you'll be a dead duck.

(To get Abby's booklet, "How to Be Popular: You're Never Too Young or Too Old," send a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents), self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Popularity, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

Poem a day keeps depression away

Copley News Service

If stress or depression has been with you for a stay, send it away by reading a poem a day.

That's the adivce of New York psychiatrist Jack Leedy, founder of the National Poetry Therapy Association.

He says reading or writing poetry releases pent-up emotions. In fact, even alcoholics and drug addicts benefit from poetry.

Therefore, Leedy recommends finding poems you enjoy and carrying them with you. When depressed, simply read the poem. Or read a poem at bedtime for a good night's sleep.

If you're really down in the dumps, he says to write your own poem.

Man shortage may be part of statistical mirage

Associated Press

The headline-making "marriage crunch" and man shortage that supposedly has doomed educated women over 30 to lifelong spinsterhood may be at least in part a statistical mirage.

Ninety percent of all Americans eventually marry, according to an article in the October issue of Cosmopolitan, including the great majority of college-educated women in their 30s.

The demographic study that caused the fuss was "Marriage Patterns in the United States," based on 1982 census data. It stated that a woman college graduate who was still single at 30 had only a 20 percent chance of ever marrying. Those still single at 35 had a 5 percent chance of marriage.

The study did not investigate choices, such as how many women did not want to get married, nor did it include men.

The statistics are misleading in part because they apply only to the "baby-boom" generation, particularly those born between 1946 and 1956. Since women tend to marry men who are older than they are, and there were more people born in the baby boom than in the years preceding it, baby-boom women outnumbered the men who were slightly older.

The marriage squeeze will follow these women throughout their lives, but need not apply to succeeding generations. For every 100 unmarried white women ages 38 to 42 in 1985, there were only 77 white men a couple of years older. The figures for black women are even more lopsided.

But for women now in their early 20s, the sex ratio is roughly even.

Also, the squeeze holds only as long as traditional marriage patterns do — as long as women want to marry older men who have more money, power and education than they.

Psychologist Dr. Carole Wade deplored some women's concept of a "loser" as anyone with less power, money, education or status than she has, and said women taken in by these limiting ideas ruled out a lot of fine men.

Uneven sex ratios alter society, Drs. Marcia Guttentag and Paul Secord say in their book, "Too Many Women?" They explain that young women change if they do not marry when they expect to. In the 1960s and '70s those who did not marry went to graduate school, entered careers and postponed marriage and child-bearing.

"We are looking at these issues of marriage and career the wrong way," Wade said. "The question is not: What is wrong with women that they can't find husbands? The question is: What is wrong with marriage that forces women to choose between having husbands and careers?

"The question is not what the baby-boom women will do when faced with a marriage squeeze; they are already doing it. The issue is what the younger generation of women will do.

"Will they sacrifice independence and ambition to be stampeded into early marriage and motherhood?"

She added: "Ultimately, each of us has to do what is right for her. Statistics can't predict what will happen to any given individual."

Luscious fabrics on cutting edge for rich home decorative details

Associated Press

What's on the cutting edge of home fabric fashions?

Fabric experts agree that homes will be wearing luxurious fabrics rich in decorative detail, reports Better Homes and Gardens Decorating magazine.

"I think there will be a ground swell in luscious-looking fabrics," says Virginia Jackson, home fashions coordinator for Celanese Textile Fibers. "People won't be taking a contemporary sofa and putting a very heavy, rough tweed on it, but instead, covering it in an absolutely delicious raw silk-like fabric."

Polishing off the lustrous look are glazed finishes now found on many of the latest home fabrics. The shiny outercoat lends elegance and sharpens a fabric's color and design.

Decorative details will also escort these fine fabrics home. The trimmings will include braids, ribbons, cords, borders, tassels and fringe.

"There are all sorts of trimmings available now that weren't availble two or three years ago," says Christopher Adlington, design director for Lee Jofa fabrics.

Many factors affect the home fabrics industry, one determinant is the apparel industry. The silk and silk-look fabrics, paisley and floral patterns, and dressmaker details that have woven their way into the clothes we wear are now popping up on the home front.

Reflexology helps relieve pain

Copley News Service

If you think barbells are for dumbbells and running isn't your speed, then perhaps reflexology will rub you the right way.

Reflexology is the foot and hand massage technique that helps relieve pain in different parts of the body.

It's based on the notion that each point in the foot and hand correspond with a specific area or organ in the body.

The book "The Reflexology Workout" actually provides massage techniques that are the equivalent of eight "workouts."

THE SUBJECT IS ROSES

November ends, begins rose year

By JOY BUTTS

There is good news for rose lovers — it's official. The Rose has been selected the national flower of the United States of America. Not the red rose, the white rose, nor even the Climbing American rose, but simply, the rose.

Now, planting the rose of our choice will bring pure pleasure, as always, while we also honor our national flower. Perhaps a rose planting near every flag pole will become a common sight.

November marks the end of rose season, but it really begins a new year for roses at the same time. It is the time to prepare the bushes for winter, to evaluate what has happened this year, and to decide what goals to set for better roses next season.

Mildew and blackspot are still thriving all around the Permian Basin. In this area, we are unaccustomed to this problem to the degree we have it now. Prevention is the best answer, however spraying on one of the drier days will help.

Choose a fungicide containing triforine, a chemical specially designed for these two undesirables.

To Funginex or Orthonex, add 1 tablespoon vinegar for each gallon of water and a drop of soap to help spray stick to the plant. Other suitable products can be used as directed.

Spray thoroughly, covering both sides of foliage, all canes and the ground under the bush. Stir up the mulch, then spray the ground again. Spray other plants nearby which may also be hosts of the disease.

If this problem is not controlled this fall, the spores will run rampant next spring.

Continue to deep soak the beds regularly, but stretch the time between applications. If beds have been watered weekly, change to every 10 days throughout winter, except when it rains.

During cold weather the wind and cold take a lot of moisture from all vegetation. The greatest help for plants and trees during winter is plenty of water. It allows them to fluctuate with the colder and warmer days without damage and gives added stamina against drying winds.

Mark the calendar at mid-December to add mulch if needed. It is important, to heap mulch up around and over the bud union to at least four inches depth.

Do not uncover root area. The bud union is where the bush springs new life. Keep it protected through the winter, removing mulch after pruning next March.

Mulching bud unions will help keep the roses from coming out of dormancy too early, as frequently happens in January.

Hanging baskets and potted roses can be dealt with one or two ways: allow them to go dormant outdoors, or move inside for winter. It is recommended they be allowed to go dormant, especially Miniature Roses, because that is the nature of the rose.

To winterize pots or baskets outdoors, sink containers into the ground in a protected spot such as on the south side of a building. Heap mulch around plants, leaving enough of the top exposed to locate the plant. Water plants and mulch when needed. Leave plants in this state until it is safe to bring them out next spring.

For containers too large to sink into the ground, such as whiskey barrels planters, use the following method: mulch around plants to a depth of ¾-inches, then wrap the outside of container with insulation material, securing snugly. Water as needed. Protection from the wind is as important as protection from the cold.

Roses living indoors must have at least five hours of direct sunshine to survive. Spray plants well before taking in; they will acquire spider mites, aphids, mildew and blackspot indoors even quicker than out.

Do not place next to a window pane; space 3-4 feet away from glass inside where there is good circulation. Feed and water on schedule.

For roses outdoors, trim away extra long canes to the same height of other canes, to make the bush more compact and to keep canes from wind-whipping, causing damage to bushes and roots. No other pruning is necessary until the first of March.

KAY YARBOROUGH, Midland, asks, "Is it time to move my blaze climbers?"

ANSWER: No. Rosebushes may be moved safely after they have become completely dormant, about the end of January here, but before mid-February.

Trim the tops no more than necessary to handle the plant. Lift with a fork to loosen roots; take no soil with the bush. Replant in a pre-prepared spot as if planting any bare-root rosebush.

Mulch over the bud union and about 6-8 inches up the canes. Keep moist. The flowers of Blaze will come on the wood grown this previous season, so try to retain all the main canes if possible.

Our discussion of different types of roses and their uses will be featured in the December column. Meanwhile, anyone wanting addresses for rose growers selling retail, please send a stamped, self-addressed envelope to the address below.

This column is an effort to bring information and assistance to anyone trying to grow roses. Readers' comments and questions help direct us to the areas of greatest need. All correspondence should be sent to Joy Butts, P.O. Box 5464, Midland, Texas, 79704.

AT WIT'S END

Scenario 'ludicrous'

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

Every time I watch the commercial, I find it incomprehensible. It's the one that says if 100 doctors were together on a deserted island, they'd all choose to take with them the same brand of headache remedy.

To begin with, the island has no golf course, no visible tax shelters, and when did 100 doctors ever agree on anything?

There's always been a lot of jokes about deserted islands and at least a couple of times a year I get a query from a free-lance writer asking (a) name five men you would like to take with you to a deserted island; (b) five books you would choose if you were stranded; (c) what one thing could you not live without.

It was never something I dwelled on a lot, but somehow I didn't think a box of aspirin would be the answer to my solitary prayers. Then, a few weeks ago, I saw a television movie with Loni Anderson who was stranded on a deserted island and I need never be tortured by doubts again. I know exactly what I want.

I want what Loni Anderson had.

Before she crashed into the water surrounding the island, she wore a peach suit that never mussed or soiled. The main accessory was a scarf that could be worn later as a cute sarong. Every time I fly anywhere, that's going to be my standard uniform.

As she stumbled ashore from the water, she carried with her the only piece of luggage she was able to salvage: her make-up case which held a few tins of caviar, some almonds hermetically sealed, and a bottle of good wine. There is no doubt in my mind the case also held life's necessities ... a tube of Erase for under the eyes, a night cream that firmed, and a good hair conditioner for split ends.

I know as sure as God made little green apples there was also a 30-day supply of mouthwash. This is really important. You have no idea how often I've watched sagas where some cowboy dragged in from a war somewhere dusty and dirty, lips parched, body sweaty, tangled beard, and wanted to make love without brushing his teeth. Yuuuck!

Who am I kidding? If I landed on a deserted patch of beach, it would be with a stack of wet wood, mosquitoes that required their own landing strip, the only edible food at the top of a 90-foot tree, and an eight-year-old kid who whined, "There's nothing to do."

And with my luck I'd be wearing that miserable tight skirt ... the one with the stripes encircling me like the equator that creeps up on me if I so much as breathe, and the sleeveless blouse that makes my arms look like the Pillsbury dough boy and I have to keep my jacket on.

It's so ludicrous ... as ludicrous as 100 doctors with severe headaches all wandering around a beach looking for a glass of water to take an aspirin.

New color TV scope detects corrosion

LAKE SUCCESS, N.Y. (AP) — A new industrial color video image used by contractors and others to examine pipes, heat exchangers, boiler tubes and condensers is helping detect corrosion and locate cracks or leaks, reports Energy User News.

The unit includes a cable that allows it to be used to a 40-foot depth of piping, with the tip of the cable containing a half-inch camera probe.

This sends the color picture signal to a screen and also sends an illumination signal that tells the operator if the amount of light is adequate.

Tension headache therapy touted

Copley News Service

Tension headaches are a headache to get rid of. Physicians report that the tension headache is the leading pain condition reported by patients.

To the rescue comes a new three-step therapy, courtesy of Dr. Seymour Diamond of the Diamond Headache Clinic in Chicago.

Diamond says the first step is a new triple-action medication known as Fioricet, which treats pain, muscle contractions and anxiety; the second step is counseling or psychotherapy to unravel the underlying emotional cause of the headaches; and the final step is biofeedback, which teaches patients how to recognize the onset of a tension headache and use self-hypnosis to overcome it.

PHOTO FOLLIES

By ELIZABETH EDWIN
Lifestyle Editor

Many people can relate to the humiliating experience of taking 30 rolls of film on vacation (36 exposure, of course) resulting in the embarrassing situation of terrible photos once they are developed.

From an informal session with the photo staff of the Midland Reporter-Telegram, some of the most common photography mistakes are amber eyes, overexposed film, poor composition, opening the camera with film in it, dead batteries for camera and flash, slow shutter speeds and taking photos from too far away.

Remedies to some of these mistakes seem obvious, others take a little more knowledge. The following is a compiled and condensed list of tips from the MRT photographers to help resolve some of the more common mistakes.

■ Amber eyes happen when the subject is looking directly at the camera and the flash is resting on the camera, aimed directly at the subject. To avoid these eerie looking creatures that appear on your prints, hold the flash above the camera or aimed toward the ceiling so the light will bounce off the ceiling back to the subject. HINT: If the ceiling is colored, the photo will reflect that color.

If your flash has the ability to tilt, another way to avoid amber eyes is by tilting it at a 60 to 75 degree angle and use a white card attached to the back side of the flash to reflect the light. When using flash, the shutter speed should be set at 60. On the camera, there is usually an arrow or the number 60 is in red to indicate the flash setting.

■ Overexposed film means that too much light was allowed to reach the film when the photo was taken. The amount of light reaching the film is controlled by the shutter speed and the aperture opening which is controlled by the f-stop. To avoid overexposure, a smaller f-stop should be used (which is a larger number on the camera — a 4 f-stop is a wide diameter opening for the aperture, while an f-stop of 22 is very small). For example, when taking a photo in direct, bright sunlight, an f-stop of 16 or 22 should be used.

Close-up flash photos are another photo commonly overexposed. Remember, when the camera is closer to the subject so is the flash. The best solutions are to bounce the flash from the ceiling as described above or back away from the subject and use a telephoto lens.

■ Photo composition may sound simple — just aim and shoot — right? Well, it's not always that easy. A steady hand is always helpful, but a keen eye will make the difference in composing a photo. Always examine the subject to be photographed — is it horizontal or vertical.

"Many people make the mistake of thinking just because the camera is set up with a horizontal frame that they have to take the picture that way," said Ron Jaap, MRT chief photographer. "I call that horizontalitis. They have all this wasted space on the sides of their frame."

If the subject to be photographed is vertical, turn the camera sideways so the camera view will also be vertical. To avoid wasted space, Jaap also recommends posing subjects close together and pulling in tight with the camera view to avoid wasted area. When photographing people, it is good to compose tightly from the waist up. Jaap also suggests taking a few extra frames when photographing people to ensure a good photo.

Background also is important in composing photos. The basic rule is: the simpler, the better. When setting up a photo, be sure to focus attention on what is behind the subject as well. Some common bloopers include the man with a telephone pole or a tree that appears to grow out of his head or the man standing in front of the fire place who appears to have antlers. A simple background will produce a better photo and give more focus to the subject. Mirrors and windows generally make poor backgrounds as well because of the reflection.

Objects such as trees also cause composition problems. Subjects posed under trees will often have spotted or full shadows on their faces. Full-shadowed faces also occur when the light is located behind the subject. This problem can be solved by "filling in" with a flash.

■ Obviously, a loaded camera should never be opened — it will expose the film. But for once-in-a-while shutter bugs, it may be difficult to remember if the camera is loaded or not.

The best way to check is to find a very dark room, preferably with no windows and only one door. Face away from the door to shield the film from any light that might seep around the door frame. Open the back of the camera and feel for the film cartridge and the film going across the back of the camera. If the camera is loaded, make sure the notches on the film edge are in place on the film advance and close the camera. HINT: Make a note of the frame the film advance had reached BEFORE opening the camera, as most cameras revert to the first frame when the camera is opened.

A good habit to acquire is to tear the film box's end off and placing it in the slot located on the back of the camera. This way there will be no question how many exposures the film in the camera has.

■ Batteries for the camera or flash should be changed as soon as they show signs of sluggishness. If the camera or flash has not been used in a while, it might be a good idea to go ahead and replace them before an important moment is lost. Carrying an extra set of batteries, especially for vacations or other extended periods, is also advised.

■ When movement shows in a photo it is because the shutter speed was too slow to stop the action. This problem is solved by adjusting the shutter speed — the higher the shutter speed, the faster action it will stop. When hand-holding a camera, a shutter speed of less than 60 should never be used.

■ A common mistake is attempting to take a photo when the subject is too far away. Remember, the subject will not appear any closer in the photo than it does through the camera view. To remedy this problem, use a telephoto lens or move closer to the subject. HINT: Flash photos from a distance of over 30 feet usually will not come out.

Other tips compiled by the MRT Staff follow:

■ Clean lenses with lens cleaners and fluid. Do not use tissues, handkerchiefs, etc. because they have wood particles in them.

■ Store film in the refrigerator, then before using it, leave it at room temperature for at least a ½-hour to prevent it from being brittle. Also, keep film out of direct sunlight. Heat can change the color balance.

■ In cold weather, keep film in a zip-lock bag. This will keep condensation from building up on the film.

■ ASA 400 is the easiest and most universal in use.

■ Make sure the film ASA matches the setting on the camera.

■ Ask for cameras and camera bags containing film to be hand-searched at airports. The X-ray security system will expose film, used or unused. It is worse for films of ASA 400 or more. A container with a lead shield can be purchased to carry film in to protect it from airport X-rays.

■ When traveling overseas, try to register camera equipment before leaving the United States to avoid hassles with customs.

The photos above and below are examples of poorly composed photos. The photo above has horizontalitis. The subjects in this photo should have been placed closer together and the photo shot vertically. The photo also crops the subjects off at the knees. The photo below also should have been shot vertically to include the heads and feet of the subjects. The photographer also should avoid prominent objects in the foreground of the photo such as the porch swing in the photo below. To the left is a photo that is well composed. The subjects are posed together tightly and there is no wasted space.

IT'S YOUR LIFE

Policy benefits need careful scrutiny

By STEVE EDWARDS

Among the most frequently asked questions by senior citizens involves Medicare coverage — especially eligibility for home health care benefits. By definition, Medicare is a federal health insurance program for people age 65 or over, disabled beneficiaries and persons with chronic renal disorders.

This insurance program consists of two parts. The first includes hospital insurance and is categorized as Part A. In this section, medical coverage is available to individuals who qualify in the above stated definition. This hospital insurance, Part A, pays for medically necessary services when a beneficiary is a hospital inpatient up to 90 days, a skilled nursing facility up to 100 days or at home receiving services from a Medicare certified home health agency.

Part B of the Medicare coverage is considered supplementary medical insurance. This is a voluntary program for those participating in Medicare and coverage may be declined by the individual, though most automatically enroll. As medical insurance, Part B helps pay for physician services, outpatient hospital services, outpatient physical and speech therapy, home health care, as well as other health services and supplies not covered by hospital insurance.

One myth about the Medicare program is that everything is covered. Many senior citizens have found this is not the case, thus the basic reason many individuals have purchased additional insurance outside of the Medicare program. Excluded services not covered by Medicare include:

- Routine physical check-ups, eye exams and dental care.
- Routine foot care.
- Hearing aids — fitting or replacing.
- Immunizations not related to injury or immediate risk of infection.
- Cosmetic surgery not related to an illness or injury.
- Prescription drugs.
- Items and services not reasonable and necessary for diagnosis or treatment of an illness or injury.
- Custodial care.
- Personal comfort items.
- Services covered by another insurance, such as employer group health, automobile or liability insurance.
- Homemaker services.

Medicare is interested primarily in the acute — not in the chronically ill patient. It is not an insurance program designed to provide coverage to a patient for an extended time. Due to recent mandates by Medicare involving Diagnostic Regulatory Groupings, patients have been dismissed from the hospital sooner, much sicker and weaker. The significant increase in home health care has been a result of these actions.

Medicare participants also should be aware of the restrictions placed upon eligibility for home health care benefits. These restraints not only underline an individual's need to secure additional health insurance, which most certainly should contain home health care benefits, but also the recent restrictions that Medicare has placed upon a patient's eligibility.

Eligibility for home health care benefits will be more deeply explored next week, but it should be noted that Medicare sets forth four basic requirements:

- The patient must be homebound.
- The patient must be under the care of a physician.
- The physician must certify that home care benefits are medically necessary and reasonable for the treatment of the illness or injury.
- The patient's need can be met with part-time or intermittent skilled nursing, physical therapy or speech therapy.

These requirements must be met if the beneficiary is to be eligible for home health care benefits.

Persons having Medicare insurance, or those preparing to enroll in the program, should contact the Social Security office for a Medicare booklet and other related information.

While Medicare does provide broad coverage, it is not a blanket insurance policy covering all health needs of individuals 65 or older. Not only should participants educate themselves to the benefits and restrictions of the program, they also should examine the coverage of other supplemental policies. For example, some policies cover only hospital care and not home health care. Some insurance companies will provide supplemental coverage only when Medicare pays. Do not expect them to provide coverage if the patient does not fall within Medicare's eligibility guidelines. Other companies will pay 80 percent of the 20 percent Medicare doesn't pay. Some companies will provide coverage if Medicare does not.

With individuals in our society living much longer lives, there's a good possibility if you're under the Medicare program you will need its coverage. Study the eligibility requirements and the benefits of other supplemental policies. Know the basic guidelines and avoid some very costly surprises.

Courtship, early marriage missed

By DR. RUTH WESTHEIMER

Q. During courtship and early marriage I easily matched my husband in desire and I climaxed easily and quickly. I knew I was lucky. But after my first child my desire for sex was gone. It came back during my second pregnancy but departed again after the birth of our second child. I know my husband misses that marvelous lovemaking we used to have. I used to joke with him about not having to coax or woo me or go in for foreplay, which was lucky because he is not good at it! We are together almost all the time now — he has been out of work for 18 months. Could that have something to do with my lack of desire?

A. A change in anyone's level of sexual appetite is to be expected at some time or other. There are seasons and off-seasons. I would be much more concerned if you did not know what desire and gratification are; as it is, please let me suggest that you recall your high-tide periods affectionately and gratefully and don't let yourself think that the tide won't come in again.

After a birth a woman is likely to need rest and to find herself preoccupied. Once in a while a relative or friend has to say, "I'll look after the baby. You and your husband go out and give yourselves a break — a meal, a show, a drive. Let yourselves absorb some of life's abundant pleasures."

Don't nag yourself about not feeling sexy just now. If you think your husband is missing something, you can give him pleasure without taking full part in it yourself.

But don't imagine that he is feeling more deprived than he says he is. Instead, think of this as a time for learning more about each other, for mutual tenderness more than for full sexual abandon.

This may be a time for both of you to learn more about those low-key intimacies and pleasures that people use as foreplay and afterplay. I don't just mean specifically sexual or physical things, but words, music, quiet companionship, as well. What we call wooing.

It is true that you needed less arousal in the past, but now you need quieter pleasure and comforting, and every woman is entitled to that. It is no disgrace not to be turned on High all your life. If your husband is out of work, at a time of change in his life, he too needs distraction and petting and sweetness from you. Anxiety and depression lower a man's appetite as well as a woman's.

This is a time for both of you to learn more about mutual wooing and encouragement — not just for sexual arousal, but for the warmth and help that you can give to each other.

Q. I was diagnosed as having herpes and since that first outbreak I have never had another, but I feel rejected by society. I am a beautiful person but I'm holding myself back. I think of myself as unhealthy because people use terrible words like "infectious disease."

A. I know some beautiful people who have herpes and who have learned how to live with it, including forming new emotional and sexual partnerships — while obeying the rule of never having sex with anyone without saying beforehand, at some point, "Before we are physically intimate, you have to know that I have herpes." People can learn to give each other the gift of physical love while avoiding further infection, but they have to learn first some rules to follow — from a doctor or clinic.

Herpes, as I have often said on TV and radio, is not the end of life. At the time of the big herpes scare there were some exaggerated stories published about this ailment, but people are taking a more rational view of it now.

You must learn how to overcome irrational fears and guilt. You have to learn to consider your own case as charitably and sensibly as other people do, and as you yourself would consider someone else's. Phone your local mental health center and find out about counseling and support groups for herpes patients.

One thing you will learn is that "infectious disease" is a medical term, not a disaster. Roughly, it means "harder to catch than a common cold." And probably you will need periodic reinforcement of all sensible advice you get about herpes, because your head may know something but your fears may still need repeated calming.

You say you are holding yourself back because of herpes. We all have to hold ourselves back to some extent. I think the big herpes scare taught many people to hold back wisely. Holding back, if it isn't out of disabling fear, won't ruin a life but protect it.

Study log solves time management

CARSON, Calif. (UPI) — After every exam, students vow they will never again subject themselves to the tortures of "cramming" — and yet the night before the next test, those same students will be downing endless cups of coffee in a futile attempt to learn all the material in one sleepless night.

But studying does not have to be such a painful experience. Acording to Dr. Judson Taylor, director of learning assistance and testing for California State University, Dominguez Hills, in Carson, students simply must learn to manage their time.

Taylor suggests students make a log for one week, showing how much time they spend on each of their activities. This log will reveal whether the student studies when he is too tired to concentrate, and will show how much study-time is actually spent watching TV and talking to friends.

Typically, students will study their favorite subjects when they are still alert, but never get around to the more difficult classes.

Drug harmful

United Press International

A popular over-the-counter drug sold as a protein supplement but widely used as a sleeping aid may cause liver damage in even small doses, according to a new report.

The drug, L-tryptophan, damaged the livers of laboratory rats during studies conducted by Texas A&M University researchers. Their report, published in the Journal of Nutrition, indicates humans who take even moderate amounts of the drug could suffer similar problems.

L-tryptophan, available without a prescription from health food stores and drug stores, is a man-made version of an amino acid found in nature but not in the human body, according to the researchers.

They said the drug produced fatty deposits on the rats' livers that interfered with the ability to detoxify and eliminate waste. The deposits were still there weeks after the drug use was discontinued, indicating the damage may be permanent.

Attention surgeons: 'If you snip, don't zip'

BOSTON (AP) — A surgeon confronted with the problem of frequently opening and shutting abdominal incisions turned to the obvious solution: a zipper.

But at least one zippermaker takes a dim view of that substitute for stitches.

The controversy was aired in the letters pages of today's New England Journal of Medicine. Bernard J. Rubin, an official of YKK in Macon, Ga., wrote, "It has recently come to our attention that at least one physician is using our zippers to close surgical incisions."

Rubin's letter — headlined "If You Snip, Don't Zip!" — went on to point out that his company's zippers aren't designed for medical purposes. During the manufacturing process, they come in contact with lubricants, detergents and other common chemicals.

"Illness or injury may result if this product is used for surgical purposes," he cautioned. "We cannot be responsible for any injury caused by such use."

Dr. H. Harlan Stone of the University of Maryland, wrote in reponse. He said, "The use of the zipper has greatly facilitated re-examination of the abdomen when it is required on an almost daily basis. We have tried many different zippers over the past few years. We prefer the Talon, it is less likely to disengage spontaneously, leading to evisceration."

Latest style in shoe polish 'a-peeling'

Copley News Service

If you peel down to the supermarket, there's a wonderful shoe polish sittin in your grocer's produce section.

The "polish" is yellow, comes in bunches and is loaded with potassium — and you can eat some of it before doing a spit-shine.

What is it? Banana peels. The International Banana Association says banana peels can give your shoes a high-gloss finish.

Rosita Romero of the IBA says the inside of the banana skin cleans off the dull coating on your shoes, while oils in the banana replenish the leather.

However, don't use banana peels on light-colored leather, unless you want to peel off some banana stains.

Once your dark shoes are coated and clean, simply buff them with a soft cloth.

Holidays often marred by family feuds

Associated Press

Families all over America will be getting together to celebrate Thanksgiving, but for some the holiday will be marred by the hurt, anger or bitterness of family feuds.

Feuds start over money or power or values or politics, or a real or imagined insult, Judith Viorst wrote in the November issue of Redbook. They exist between parents and children, brothers and sisters, relatives in all combinations. Some are poignant, others absurd, and they may have gone on for years.

"To those of us on the outside, family feuders can seem pathetic, petty, irrational. Why can't they, for heaven's sake, just kiss and make up?" Viorst wrote.

"But often a family feud is about a lot more than we — or the feuders — readily recognize. Often a family feud is the eruption of a lifetime of buried feelings — of rivalries and resentments, of all kinds of unhealed hurts stretching back into childhood."

Some feuders do not make up because they believe what happened is unforgivable, or because each is waiting for the other to make the first move. Even people who are neither self-righteous nor stubborn unwittingly find themselves caught in family feuds. But, sometimes, even bitter feuds can be mended.

■ Rachel, at war with her mother, put an end to several years of silence with a telephone call announcing a new grandchild and an invitation to see her.

■ Paul, whose father forced him out of the family business because he disapproved of Paul's "hippie" values, came home when he learned his father was dying — in time for them to tell each other, "I love you."

■ A sister called a sister-in-law after 17 months of not speaking and announced, "We're making up. It's enough already."

Sometimes all that is needed is for one feuder to reach out and make a gesture — but sometimes that gesture must be made again and again.

There is another option — not to let the feud get started in the first place.

"Feud avoidance is easier if we don't expect the impossible from our relatives — if we can accept them as they are and not demand that they be what we want them to be," Viorst wrote.

Collector cards tops with kids; parents say they're a bad deal

By DEANNA J. NEAL
Business/Oil Writer

They are cherub-faced, unpleasant, clever, funny little boys and girls who have offended adults and wormed their way into the hearts of Midland's children.

They are the Garbage Pail Kids, a collection of trading cards that are one of the fastest-selling items to enter the market in recent years. And they are equally popular with local retailers who can't seem to get shipments of the cards in fast enough.

The popularity of these bubble gum cards, manufactured by Topps Chewing Gum Co., is indisputable, as evidenced by sales nearing the three-quarter billion dollar mark. Local retailers are facing major difficulties keeping them on their shelves. At least a portion of the cards' appeal is attributable to the overwhelming success of Coleco's Cabbage Patch Kid dolls, which the Garbage Pails seem to parody.

"We received a three-box shipment last week and were sold out in three days. One little boy brought in eight silver dollars he had been saving and spent the entire amount on Garbage Pail Kids," says the manager of a Midland convenience store.

Local 7-11 stores have been a popular outlet for the cards, and managers at the stores report kids lining up to purchase the cards on the expected shipment day, and often the cards are sold-out before they reach the shelf.

But questions have been raised about the cards' suitability and the grotesque imagery's effect on youngsters. Parents disapprove of the "disgusting" collectors' items and teachers consider the cards and card trading an inappropriate disruption in the classroom. Many adults believe the cards portray serious subjects in a mocking and false manner.

> "...If my kids don't like the violent cards, they throw them away or trade them. Some of them are just harmless and cute."
>
> —Adelle Howard, mother of two collectors.

CONSIDER: PICKY MICKEY, a vulture feasting on carrion; Snooty Sam, an Uncle Sam look-alike with his finger planted up his nose; Stoned Sean, a dazed-looking boy sporting a dunce cap and holding a suspicious looking cigarette; Fryin' Bryan, a rosy-cheeked boy strapped into an electric chair, getting the big jolt; Brainy Brian a scientist-type fellow who has his brain out experimenting on it with needles and test tubes; Max Axe, a baby-faced warrior clasping a bloodied axe; and Warrin' Warren, a renegade warrior who makes Rambo look like Beaver Cleaver.

The backs of the cards are equally controversial, portraying "wanted posters" of parents jokingly accused of child abuse, teachers and principals mockingly accused of mental cruelty and running a prison, and brothers and sisters guilty of various crimes ranging from disorderly conduct to disturbing the peace.

Kids don't seem to take the cards seriously, but instead appreciate their parody of cute and cuddly Cabbage Patch Kids 'gone bad'.

"They're disgusting, but I like 'em. They're fun to trade and collect," says third-grader Paul Howard.

Six-year-old Stephanie Howard agrees that the cards are weird, but says she likes to look at the names and pictures on them. The Bowie Elementary School first-grader says, "My favorite is Brainy Brian, the one who has his brain out playing with it.

TAX REFORM

Taxpayers face choices before year-end

Interest, sales tax crucial to plans

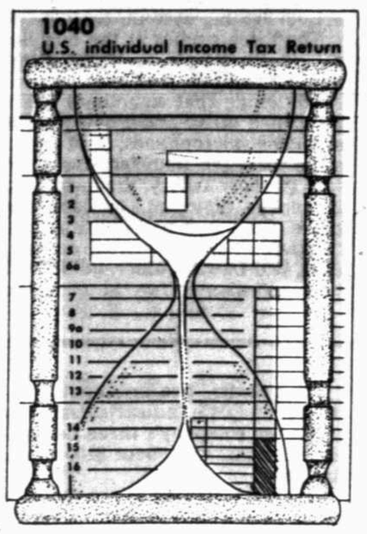

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Business/Oil Writer

The best rule of thumb for tax planning in the remaining seven and a half weeks of 1986 is to pile up as many deductions as possible before Dec. 31 and defer as much income as possible until after the first of the year, according to local financial planners and investment consultants.

Taxpayers need to evaluate the personal impact of three crucial changes in the personal tax laws, say tax experts James Flynn and Patricia Nee of Merrill, Lynch & Co.

The cost of credit will be considerably higher under 1987 tax law, because interest on most forms of consumer credit will no longer be deductible. Experts advise consumers to:

- Pay off, or pay down, balances on credit cards — starting with the highest interest rates first;
- Avoid using credit cards and other high-cost, non-secured credit lines which lose their deductability under the new law; and,

Suzan Conder/Reporter-Telegram

Time's running out

- Explore other methods of accessing credit. Interest on home mortgages, including home equity credit lines, and margin loans may remain an important source of tax-deductible credit.

Deductible interest on second mortgages is limited to the purchase price of the property, plus the cost of any improvements, to prevent taxpayers from borrowing against the appreciation of the value of their home, using the money for consumer purchases and still deducting the interest, says Stephen Huggins, tax partner of Price Waterhouse in Midland.

There are two significant exceptions to the purchase price limit: when the proceeds of the loan are used for educational or qualified non-reimbursed medical expenses.

IN ADDITION TO LOST consumer interest deductions, many other expenses that historically have been deductible will gradually lose that status in a four-step phase-out from 1987 through 1991.

Sound studio may aid economy

Hollywood already eyeing Houston

HOUSTON (AP) — Developer H. Milton Howe pulled off what some said would be impossible: he managed to hush the blaring Houston traffic with his 10,000-square-foot studio of modern soundproof design.

"It's the only sound studio in the country where you can run air conditioning while shooting," Howe boasts of the mammoth room in his Houston Studios complex.

Many of his associates warned Howe that a soundproof studio couldn't be built adjacent to a freeway, but he says, "What they meant is I couldn't do it reasonably."

The 39-year-old developer poured $750,000 into the project.

A person entering the studio is swallowed by its size and transfixed by its stillness. Hanging 10 feet from the 40-foot ceiling is a wooden grid catwalk, where lights can be hung, accessible only by a steep set of stairs.

The soundproofing was made possible through a foundation consisting of 18 feet of sand, covered by a 1½ feet of concrete, a layer of rubber pads, two-by-four spacers, plywood and a final layer of particle board.

The roof also has sand and insulation to prevent even rain from being heard inside. The walls consist of six inches of concrete, insulation, two layers of sheetrock, and another layer of insulation.

Howe, who owns about 10 acres in a warehouse district near downtown, first started developing the area into an artists' haven.

Before the studio was built, he said the technical question of actually having a sound studio next to Interstate 10, along with its location having the reputation as a bad neighborhood, haunted him.

AP Laserphoto

Developer H. Milton Howe on the stairs to the catwalks over his 10,000 square foot studio of modern soundproof design.

"It's been a nerve-racking experience," Howe says of the project he started two years ago.

Howe said his lifelong friend Derik Rawson kept telling him Houston needed a motion picture studio.

"I didn't want to mess with a business I didn't know anything about. But they all kept saying the same thing — Houston had the potential for movies but no facility. I finally became convinced," he said.

Howe said he hopes to attract the motion picture industry to Houston and help diversify the city's oil-dependent economy.

"The problem with this industry is it's kind of like running a bar, something a mother in Texas always said to keep away from," Howe says. "I'm not getting into entertainment buisness — I'm in development."

Since opening in mid-June, the television movie "Adam: Part II" and local commercials have been filmed in the main studio. Howe now is negotiating to have four feature films and episodes of a new TV series, "Houston Knights," filmed at his complex.

Cowboy boots set for comeback

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — When the Urban Cowboy fashion craze rode off into the sunset, it apparently went barefooted because left behind was a strong hankering for boots, the footwear of the West.

Boots are enjoying an enduring popularity in markets far beyond the Southwest, where the cowboy footgear is not a fashion, but a tradition. New markets are arising in the Northeast and Midwest, and industry watchers believe the boot is making a comeback.

Boots were an integral part of the western wear look made famous by the John Travolta-Debra Winger movie hit "Urban Cowboy." The fad faded, and many people hung up their Stetson hats and retired the wide belt with the big buckle. But they kept wearing the boots.

"In the Urban Cowboy era, you strolled out in a costume. That was very short-lived," said Frank Scivetti, vice president for sales and marketing of the Justin Boot Co., a division of the Fort Worth-based Justin Industries. "Now it's not uncommon for a man in a three-piece suit to be wearing a pair of boots."

Justin Industries, a conglomerate which also owns Nocona Boot Co., is one of the recognized leaders in the high-quality, handcrafted share of the bootmaking trade. Its biggest competitor is Tony Lama Co., Inc., an El Paso family business that grew up to become a corporation with shares traded on the New York Stock Exhcange.

Justin and Tony Lama both limped through a sales decline starting three years ago, but executives of the companies believe better days are ahead.

"I think we're in the upswing," said Frank Tisdale, a member of the Tony Lama board of directors.

Lama now employs 850 people and had $67 million in sales in 1985. Ninety percent of the firm's business is boots, but it also sells belts, wallets and other leather products.

The golden age for the two companies were the western wear boom years of 1980-82. The firms both hired armies of workers and Justin added Nocona to its holdings. Hard-pressed to keep up demand, both Justin and Tony Lama also built new plants in El Paso, the border town that is the capital of western bootery.

JOHN PAUL PITTS

The search for captive audiences goes on

The quest for new and effective billboard advertising space seems to be a never-ending process.

Highway billboards have been around almost as long as highways, going back to the chewing tobacco advertisements on the sides of barns and the Burma Shave signs. Taxi cabs, subways and city buses, with their captive audiences, have long been popular spots for mini billboards, and of late one firm has even started placing the mini billboards in toilets in office buildings.

But once you think all the captured audiences of the world have been identified and mesmerized by space advertisers here comes another. This time it's waiting rooms of doctors and dentists. Where once only antiseptic walls or banal prints greeted patients doing their mandatory wait, now in 57,000 waiting rooms around the country patients are able to fix their eyes on magazine billboards.

Each "issue" of the four foot by six foot magazine billboard is actually a single page with several short articles, sharp color photographs and magazine-style advertisements, usually for a single product. At a gynecologist's office, patients see the Woman's Health Adviser. At the pediatrician's office they find the Parenting Adviser. And at the veterinarian's office, pet owners can consult the Pet Care Report.

The magazine billboards, which are usually replaced once a month with a new issue, have become popular with doctors short for time, patients hungry for information and advertisers who want exposure to a captive audience.

Some doctors are not sold on the idea, however. While magazines have long been commonplace in waiting rooms, this new publishing medium and the advertising it carries might seem to some patients to carry a doctor's endorsement because it is displayed on his or her wall.

Hanging the board "implies some endorsement" said Dr. William F. Minogue, the medical director of George Washington University Hospital and an adviser to Physician's Weekly, a publication hung in hospital lounges. "They are kind of gaudy and flashy," Minogue added. "The doctor must exercise some quality control to see if the message is the one he wants told."

Whatever their merit, the displays have turned into a big business for their creator, Christopher Whittle, who is best known for buying and reviving Esquire magazine with his partner Phillip Moffitt. The two Tennesseans recently split their business holdings, and Whittle's new company — called Whittle Communications — is developing the magazine billboard business.

Whittle estimates the venture — which began in 1980 — will bring in more than $50 million this year and $125 million by 1990. He does not discuss profits, except to say that his pretax margins average 15 percent to 20 percent.

It is not known if there are magazine billboards in any Midland medical office or if we will ever see them in the halls of Lee and Midland High. That's right high schools! The firm has already identified another captive audience and is eyeing expansion into high school and college hallways.

Whittle plans to introduce six new titles on campuses in the next 12 months, and has disclosed plans for expansion into convenience stores. After that it will be off to England, Germany, France and Italy to establish the magazine billboard concept in those countries.

Whittle is not alone in sniffing out a profitable business. American Health magazine is attempting the idea with health clubs and plans to start a poster version of its magazine in October, according to its publisher, Owen J. Lipstein.

In that venture, American Health will find itself up against Esquire magazine, which has 1,500 magazine billboards in health clubs around the country. In the split of Whittle and Moffitt's business, the Esquire boards stayed with the magazine group, headed by Moffitt.

Still another company, the Market Source Corp., began a program last month called Golf Links in 1,000 private country clubs around the country. The Cranbury, N.J., marketing concern also has plans to introduce magazine billboards at tennis and yacht clubs next year.

Highways, taxis, toilets, waiting rooms, hallways, health clubs, golf courses. Where will this quest for advertising space end? Don't be surprised if some Sunday morning when you go to church, you see this big ad for toothpaste plastered on the front of the pulpit.

STUDIO

"We expect a lot of business in the next year," he said. "It looks like the bulk of production will be feature films from the West Coast."

The main building to the complex is a restored furniture warehouse that now is home to several tenants and also houses dressing rooms, a make-up room and a wardrobe area.

In the Houston area, the largest studio next to Howe's is Pearlman Studios, a 5,000-square-foot facility.

But Howe says what makes his studio different is that he is totally independent of the motion picture business, and what makes the location attractive is that movie industry tycoons are seeing Houston as an ideal filming location.

"Houston has cooperation of municipal governments, a wide variety of terrain with the coast, East Texas pines, flat land and nice weather," Howe says with a chuckle, knowing Houston is infamous for its hot and humid weather.

The Houston Studios complex is being compared to developer Trammell Crow's Las Colinas facility near downtown Dallas, where a state-of-the-art studio was built in 1982. But the two do vary.

The main soundstage in Houston has wooden floors, making it easy to nail sets to the ground, the ceiling grid system makes lighting easy and the air conditioning can run at all times.

In Las Colinas, the floors are concrete and the facility has a computerized lighting system, Howe says.

The three studios at the complex, ranging in size from 15,000-, 6,000-, and 3,000-square feet, also have air conditioning that sometimes has to be turned off to avoid detection by sensitive microphones, said sound stage manager Jennifer Loeb.

In its short history, the most popular movies filmed at Las Colinas include "The Trip to Bountiful" and "Silkwood," plus numerous commercials, said Dawn Cramer, public relations coordinator for the complex.

BOOTS

"It probably wasn't a very bright thing to do, in retrospect," Scivetti admits now. "We're back down to our basic market, which is substantial."

There still are 16 boot manufacturers in El Paso, but employment, which peaked at 3,300 in 1982, has stabilized at 1,300, just slightly less than the average of 10 years ago.

Hector Venegas, a labor market analyst for the Texas Employment Commission, said the Urban Cowboy fad introduced Yankees and Midwesterners to the comfort and style of boots, and many have remained loyal to the cowboy footwear. That's good news for El Paso, said Venegas.

Venegas expects employment in the industry to increase during the final quarter of 1986 as the bootmakers brace for the Christmas demand.

Rick Savitz, vice president, comptroller of Justin Industries, said sales from the company's three bootmaking divisions was about $100 million in 1985.

"Our unit shipments are about the same level as last year and the company anticipates a good fall season," he said.

A hard-times economy in the Southwest, triggered by slumping energy prices, has slowed buying in the best western boot market, said Jessica Gallia, vice president of Eppler, Guerin and Turner, an investment analysis firm.

"One of the reasons for the Urban Cowboy movie was because Texas was in and this was the place to be. People always love a winner."

TAXES

And other items will remain deductible, but with greater limitations on their amounts. Advisors are recommending that consumers:

- Purchase high-ticket consumer items, such as cars or major appliances, in 1986 while sales tax is still deductible. For example, a taxpayer in the 50 percent bracket who buys a $12,000 car in 1986 can deduct the $615 sales tax, thereby saving $307.50 in after-tax dollars; and,
- Prepay anticipated medical expenses, charitable contributions, state and local income and property taxes, and miscellaneous itemized deductions.

Taxpayers who do not itemize in 1987, will not be able to claim any part of their charitable contributions as deductible.

On medical expenses, the threshold level for itemizing rises from 5 percent of adjusted gross income (AGI) to 7.5 percent next year.

Miscellaneous deductions — employee business expenses such as association dues, professional journal subscriptions and job hunting costs — as well as such deductions as safe deposit box fees, tax preparation costs, and financial advisor's fees, which traditionally have been fully deductible, will be subject to a 2 percent of AGI floor.

DEFERRING EARNED INCOME until after Jan. 1 could allow taxpayers to take advantage of the lower tax rates which go into effect in 1987, but it can be tricky, warn experts.

The "constructive receipt" rules consider income taxable when the employee has the "unrestricted right" to receive it, whether or not they are in physical possession of the check before Jan. 1. To legally defer compensation, the irrevocable election must be made, in writing, before it is earned.

Probably the biggest exception to the rules concerning deferred income deal with capital gains treatment.

Under this year's law, there is a special tax rule for income from a long-term capital gain, such as the sale of stocks or property held for more than six months. Only 40 percent of the long-term capital gain is taxed and, because the top individual tax rate is 50 percent, the maximum capital gains tax is half of 40 percent — or 20 percent.

However, in 1987, capital gains will be taxed at the same rate as regular income. For small investors, such as people who have only a few stocks, that could prove to be a great difference.

Under current law, for example, a person with a taxable income of $16,000 has a marginal tax rate of 20 percent, meaning his or her capital gains tax would be 40 percent of that — 8 percent. But next year, that person's regular tax rate as well as capital gains rate would be 15 percent.

As a result, analysts advise those already interested in selling a stock or property, that it may be a good idea to do it before the capital gains rate rises.

But experts also caution that each taxpayer's circumstances are different and it may not be advantageous to sell a thriving stock or property simply because of the tax changes.

Another popular tax-motivated investment plan effected by the new tax law is the Individual Retirement Account (IRA).

Tax deductible IRA contributions for this tax year can be made until April 15, 1987. After that date contributions will be deductible only for employees not eligible for another retirement plan or whose adjusted gross income is less than $25,000 ($40,000 for joint returns). Consumers are being advised by money managers to:

- Contribute to a 1986 IRA to take advantage of this year's deductibility. A taxpayer in the 50 percent bracket saves $1000 by deducting the $2000 contribution to an 1986 IRA;
- Contribute now, rather than on April 15, to take advantage of daily compounded interest: in a fund with a 7 percent interest rate, $2,000 will earn $65 from November 1 through April 15; and,
- Maintain yearly IRA contributions even though they are no longer deductible for higher income taxpayers. The tax deferral of interest and appreciation remain unchanged under the new tax plan and is why IRAs continue to make sense in retirement planning.

THANKS TO THE phase-in period of lower tax rates and other rules, there will be additional changes in the rules for tax year 1988 which could impact next year's financial plans as well. Short- and long-term capital gains are capped at different levels during the next two years — 38.5 percent in 1987, and either 28 or 33 percent in 1988. So, deferring short-term gains into 1988 may be advantageous for some investors, but pre-planning is necessary, experts say.

Drilling, rig utilization continue upswing

From Staff Reports

The number of drilling oil and gas rigs in the United States rose for the second week in a row to 860, up 31 from last week's total. The Permian Basin rig count continued its slow climb back, up two to 97, according to the lastest figures released by Hughes Tool Co.

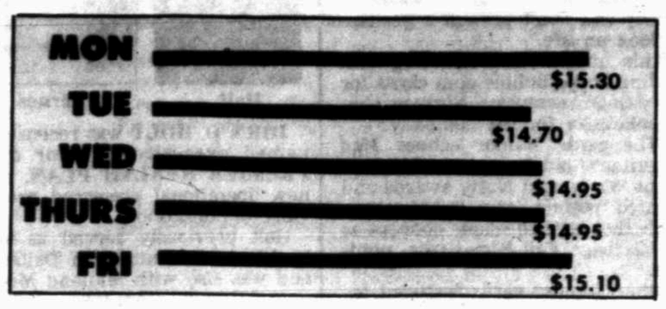

Last year at this time, the count was 1,864 nationally and 284 in the Basin.

Oklahoma added 21 to its state total, while Texas put 20 more rigs to work during the week. New Mexico added two to its count, while Louisiana lost five and California's rig total suffered a three-rig drop.

Rig utilization increased from 15 percent to 16.7 percent in the Permian Basin according to Smith Tool. Most activity continues to be in the shallow to intermediate depths from 5,000 to 15,000 ft. Utilization nationally, also increased slightly up to 19.6 from 19 percent a week ago.

RAILROAD COMMISSION OF TEXAS

Texas Oil Well Completions, 1984-1986

Texas Gas Well Completions, 1984-1986

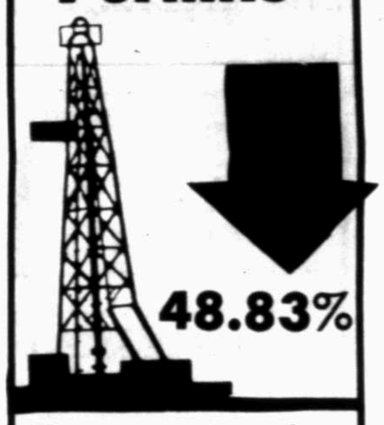

Well completions decline

The number of oil well completions in Texas during September 1986 was 535, down from 1,320 in September 1985, according to the Texas Railroad Commission. The number represents a decline of 59.47 percent. Year-to-date oil completions total 8,944 compared with 12,515 by this time a year ago — a 31.85 percent decrease.

The number of gas well completions in the state during September 1986 was 166, down 52.44 percent from the 349 gas completions reported to the Commission in September 1985. Year-to-date gas completions total 2,503, compared with 3,673 by this time a year ago

Drilling Permits

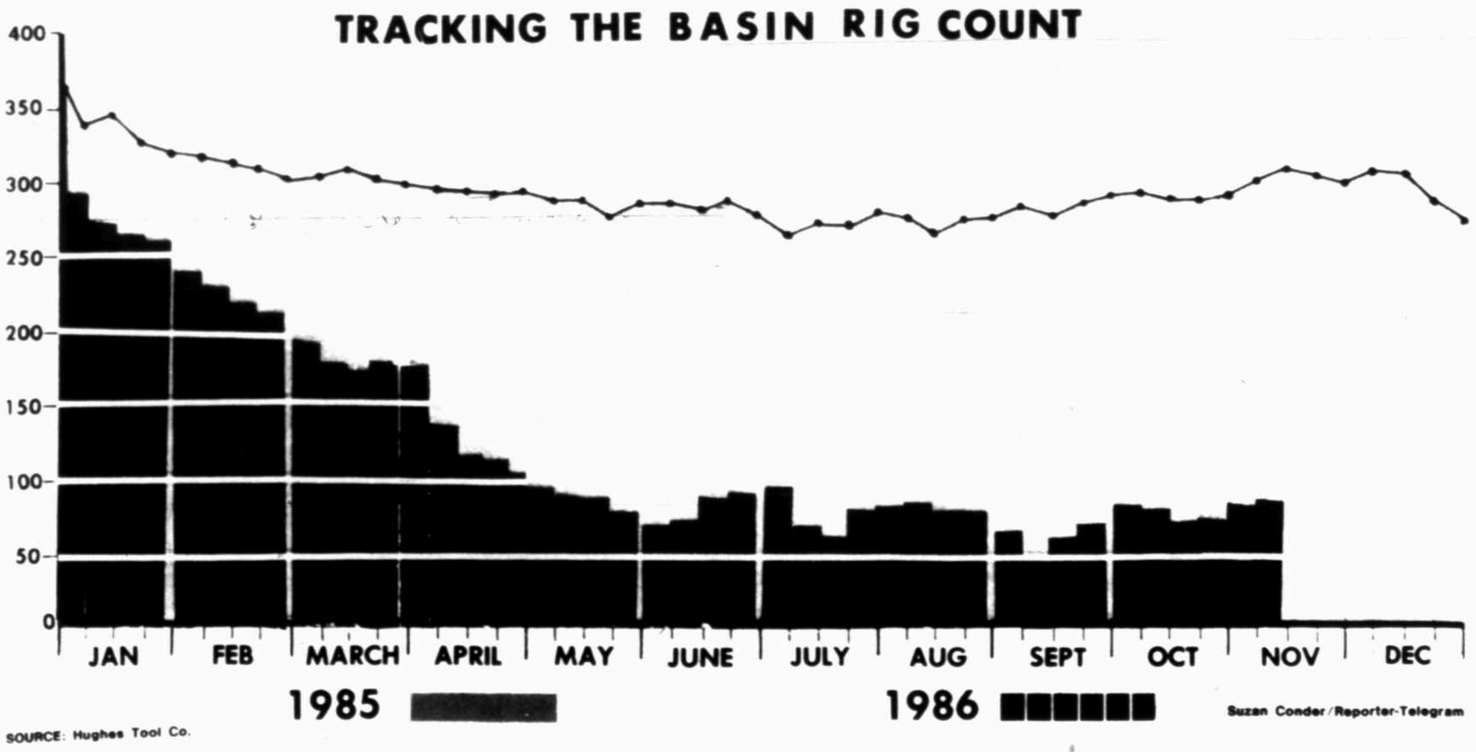

Fewer permits issued by RRC

The number of applications for drilling permits filed with the Texas Railroad Commission during September 1986 was 1,317, down from 2,574 in September 1985. The 48.3 percent decline depicts the dramatic downturn in drilling since the price of oil fell earlier this year.

Year-to-date drilling applications total 13,834, compared with 25,488 by this time last year — a dip of 45.72 percent.

Oil, gas drilling scam nets Houston man probation

HOUSTON (AP) — A Houston businessman accused of bilking investors who put more than $6 million into oil and gas drilling ventures was sentenced to three years' probation and ordered to perform 200 hours of community service.

U.S. District Judge Gabrielle McDonald sentenced Franklin B. Beard, 68, owner of Beard Energy Corp., on Wednesday. Beard pleaded guilty in June to two counts of mail fraud and two counts of securities fraud.

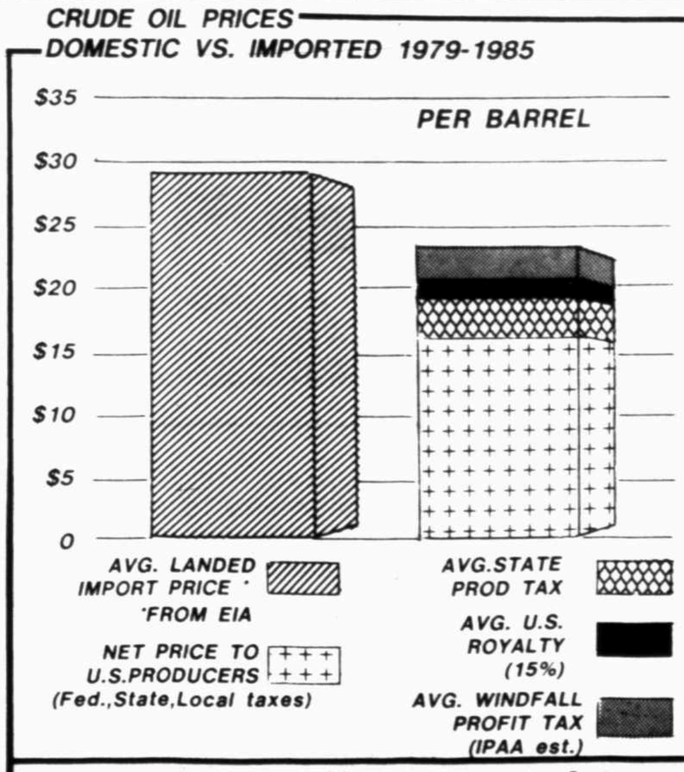

Beard acknowledged he lied to 143 investors in 23 states who bought unregistered securities in oil and gas projects between September 1982 and December 1983.

When Beard Energy went bankrupt in 1984, it had collected more than $6 million from investors and owed an additional $2.6 million to contractors and suppliers, prosecutor Evan Spangler said.

Company vice president Gary Corn, 52, was sentenced last month to five years in prison after he pleaded guilty to criminal contempt for violating a 1977 consent decree in which he agreed not to sell unregistered securities.

Corn also agreed in the consent decree not to mislead potential investors in any securities sale or project.

CRUDE OIL PRICES
DOMESTIC VS. IMPORTED 1979-1985

U.S. producers netted less

In contrast to widespread perception, U.S. crude oil producers have not benefitted from OPEC-equivalent prices since the Arab oil embargo, according to a study by the Independent Petroleum Association of America (IPAA).

The study shows the average landed import price from 1979 to 1985 was $29.90. U.S. crude oil producers, however, received a net price of $16.53 after taxes and royalty payments.

During recent testimony before the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee, Lloyd N. Unsell, IPAA president, said, "I think these facts should put to rest the idea that domestic oil producers have 'pocketed' the equivalent of OEC prices for their oil.

CARDS

"He's strange," she adds with a grin.

Gabby Black, an eight-year-old student at Milam Elementary School likes the cards "because they're neat. They give kids laughs and they don't cost very much."

SOME OF HIS friends have as many as 600 to 1000 cards, notes Gabby.

One third grade student at Anson Jones agrees that they are fun to collect. "My dad thinks they are repulsive, but I like them. Some of them are weird, but if I get one I don't like, I just trade it for something I do like. Sometimes I have to trade three or four cards to get a real popular one that everyone likes."

According to the nine-year-old, that is the appeal of the cards. Kids trade them with an intensity and obsession that have forced many local teachers to ban them from the classroom. Their main objection is the underlying message of the cards and the negative views of the world portrayed by the cards' characters.

Linda Fisher, a teacher of third grade students at a Midland elementary school says the cards are an interruption in the classroom. "Kids want to get them out and trade them during class and they invariably end up fighting over which card is whose."

She also notes that cards bearing student's names cause problems. "The children will call each other the names they read on the cards, and some students get offended by the names."

Eight-year old Paul admits that he does not like the card, Off the Wall Paul, that makes fun of his name.

"When the name is offensive — Phony Lisa; Greaser Greg; Michelle Muck; and Smelly Sally — it creates a problem in the classroom," Fisher adds.

OTHERS, HOWEVER, feel that the cards are harmless and doubt that they could influence children, who as young as 8 and 9 are being exposed to drug abuse, sex and violence through popular culture.

Paul says his teacher does not permit the cards to be out during class time, but thinks they're okay during recess and "she even trades with us sometimes. That's neat."

"We need to have a sense of humor and be able to laugh at ourselves. I don't perceive the cards as that much of a problem," states a teacher of fourth grade students in Midland.

Not everyone sees harm in the characters or the cards. "I tell my kids that someone is just out to make a fast buck, and if they don't like the violent cards, just throw them away, or trade them. Some of them are just harmless and cute," says Adelle Howard, mother of two Garbage Pail collectors.

Another mother of a seven year old girl objects to the cards because "they are degrading , awful, and they put down, rather than build up. I won't allow my daughter to collect them because they are a waste of money and don't present a positive outlook on life."

Kids have been collecting and trading Topps bubble gum cards for the past 20 years, says Norman Liss, a spokesman for the company.

"The cards' humor echoes Mad magazine's satirical style. Children in the '60s bought Nutty awards and Wanted posters, two bubble gum cards that used the same concept as the Garbage Pail Kids cards, notes Liss.

Other popular cards featured exaggerated characters in Ugly Stickers and Wacky Packages — satires on products such as cigarette packages and detergents.

TOPPS HAS SOLD in excess of 2.5 billion packages of cards (five cards per $.25 pack, with a stick of gum) since production began in March 1985, and Liss says they can't produce enough to meet the demand.

Liss maintains that the cards are not any different from anything kids have laughed at in the past. "Every adult had an entirely different perspective when he was a kid."

This latest rage brings to light the controversy of marketing to children. Many parents resent the strategies used to sell products to young consumers.

At just a quarter a pop, the cards seem cheap enough. But each package contains a list of all the cards available in that series, usually as many as 100 in each series. Now in the fifth series, the company keeps the kids buying cards with each series addition. According to one collector, "Just when I think I have them all, they come out with a new series ... and here I go again."

That is one of the things parents resent. One mother says she is tired of her kids wasting their money on the cards. "It never seems to end."

The Garbage Pail Kids' resemblance to the angelic-faced Cabbage Patch Kids hasn't gone unnoticed by Xavier Roberts, originator of the doll that caused its own craze a few years ago.

Last June, Roberts' company filed a copyright infringement suit against Topps and asked for an injuction to stop the company from producing the cards.

At last count, Topps is continuing to manufacture the cards and Permian Basin kids are snatching them up as fast as they can find them.

Secretaries honor 'boss of year'

From Staff Reports

George L. Wolf was honored at a recent breakfast as the Professional Secretaries International's Boss of the Year for 1986.

Wolf has worked for the City of Midland for 25 years as Code Enforcement Administrator. He holds a BA degree from Washington University and is active in the American Planning Association.

Wolf's nomination as Boss of the Year was submitted by his secretary, Roberta Allison. She says that in their busy office, Wolf never hovers over anyone's shoulder or paces the floor as deadlines approach. "He keeps his department well informed of any new changes and procedures for handling them."

"He has an easygoing personality, which is conducive to a productive working atmosphere and is well known and respected by many citizens of Midland."

She adds that his knowledge of the city's development sometimes exceeds recorded information, because of his long tenure at the job.

ClayDesta sets earnings record

ClayDesta National Bank reports record third-quarter earnings of $.43 per share, up more than 275 percent from the same period one year ago. Net income rose to $348,000 from $102,000 a year earlier, said David N. Jones, ClayDesta president and chief executive officer.

Jones attributed the bank's sharp rise in profits to conservative oil and gas lending practices, expansion into the residential mortgage lending market with ClayDesta Mortgage Bankers, and expense control measures.

ClayDesta Mortgage Bankers announced it would be opening a fourth mortgage lending office in Phoenix, Arizona, the first such office outside the state of Texas. Jones hinted the move was the first in an aggressive expansion plan both inside as well as outside Texas.

Jones expects to see higher profits continue for ClayDesta National as it looks for opportunities outside the mainstream of banking services.

"As evidenced by our move into the mortgage banking area, coupled with significant changes taking place in the banking industry as the result of deregulation, ClayDesta is planning to take advantage of profit opportunities in the non-traditional area of financial services," said Jones.

Groth: Chronicler of history

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

The art editor's words were taken to heart by the young aspiring artist — "Draw 100 sketches a day for three years." John Groth followed his advice, and it wasn't until later in his life that he discovered the editor was just trying to get him out of his office. By then, he was no longer an aspiring artist, he was a rising one.

Groth, who lives in New York City where he has been an instructor at the Art Students League for the past 43 years, laughed as he recalled the story.

"I never went to bed without doing 100 pictures; it made me widen my sketch areas. For example, I would illustrate what I heard on the phonograph. The life and action in my sketches comes partly from that discipline."

Groth, whose work may be seen locally by calling Stehle-Reed Fine Art at 689-6889, was in town conducting workshops recently for Stehle-Reed. While he was here, he spent some time reminiscing about his life and career.

As a young man growing up in Chicago during the Depression years, Groth found "the Great Depression a time when people were good to each other, there wasn't much greed around. People were very supportive of each other.

"Part of, I suppose, being a young man is being unemployed. No one in the block I lived had a job. There was no work. I was able to draw endlessly, and I loved the idea of being an artist.

"I was interested in war like all kids — stupidly — but that's the way it is. I was interested in sports. I wanted to be everything; to travel. I attained it all by being an artist."

Groth was sketching at a fair in 1933 when his ability was discovered by Arnold Gingrich, the editor of a new magazine. Gingrich was fascinated by the speed with which Groth could draw.

Since then, Gingrich has said of the experience, "I saw this barefoot bearded kid one afternoon and the next afternoon we made him art director of what was to be the world's leading men's fashion magazine."

Esquire.

Groth was grateful for the opportunity. "It's obvious you can have all the talent in the world but don't get a chance," he said.

It was Esquire which first sent him on world travels as a graphic chronicler of history. Within months of being hired, he was sent to cover the Mexican bull fights and the Mexican army. He saw Adolph Hitler in Berlin in 1934 and did a portfolio of Russian sketches the first year the Soviet Union was opened to world travelers.

"Esquire was a sensational success in (what was) still a Depression era," Groth recalled. Cost of the publication was 50 cents, when others were selling for 25 cents and 10 cents.

Groth's first war assignment was as a World War II correspondent for the Chicago Sun, where he made the front page with the first account of the liberation of Paris in 1944. The next day, he conducted the first interview with Pablo Picasso, and he later was with the Russians at the fall of Berlin.

Fellow war correspondent and friend, Ernest Hemingway, once said of Groth, "If John had made his drawings any closer up front, he would have had to sit in the Krauts' laps."

Groth subsequently covered the United Nations units in the Korean police action, France's Indochina War, United Nations participation in the Congo insurrection, fighting in Santo Domingo and the Vietnam War, the latter for the U.S. Marine Corps.

In all, Groth has covered six wars as a war correspondent. He has written and illustrated two books on his war experiences, "Studio: Europe" and "Studio: Asia." Although he is "very anti-war," he learned a lot covering the battle front.

"To me, everybody was a hero. What impressed me was not to be accepted by the top echelon, but the enlisted men. They made me feel as if I belonged. I met people I would never have met — farm kids from the South, cowboys from out West and mechanics from Detroit."

Fonsia Dorsey (Gloria Stephenson) and Weller Martin (Corby Considine) have some difficulty with their gin game in this scene from Midland Community Theatre's production of "The Gin Game." It opens Friday at 8 p.m.

'The Gin Game'

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

"Gin anyone?"

When Fonsia Dorsey, a new arrival at a home for the elderly, accepts an invitation from cantankerous rebel Weller Martin to learn the game, the action begins in D.L. Coburn's Pulitzer Prize winning comedy "The Gin Game."

The experience of directing the production, which opens Friday at Theatre Midland, has been an educational one for Michael Spicer.

"This is one of those shows, for me, that when you begin working on it you realize there's much more complexity to the script than you imagined," Spicer says. He laughs and adds, "You'd think that by this time I'd realize the Pulitzer committee knows what it's talking about when it give its award because the committee doesn't just give it for plays of minor consideration.

"The Gin Game," which was first staged at The American Theater Arts in Hollywood in September 1976, opened on Broadway Oct. 6, 1977. It won the Pulitzer Prize in 1977 and Best Play Citation in 1978. It is the only major work listed by Coburn as of 1985.

"That's a pretty quick rise to Broadway for a play," Spicer says.

The play deals with how the elderly are treated in U.S. society and interpersonal relationships.

"Coburn doesn't take the subject of how we treat the aged in our society, which is very important to most people today, and make some grandiose statement about it. He deals with it in terms of two very complex and real people. He also deals with how people treat each other, and the ways that people will interact with each other in a desperate or clinging situation.

"He's very skilled in his dialogue. In a lot of plays, when you're reading through, you say 'This is the exposition passage. This is the advancing of the plot passage.' You don't see that in this script. This is a pretty seamless script. It's really exciting to work on a script like this."

What pets deserve fate of being sent to pound?

Former Lubbock resident Steve Richardson please call 683-2941. Madison is waiting, and she's running out of time.

Mysteries intrigue me. I have a precious short-haired, white cat who possesses a green eye and a blue eye. Actually the word may be had, but I hope not. Although she appeared quite happy living in my yard for several years, some time around the middle of October she suddenly disappeared.

Since that time, I've done all the things I know to do as a responsible pet owner. I ran an ad. I've driven through the neighborhood. I've been to the Midland city pound. Thus far, I've struck out in finding my lady friend, but I have discovered new mysteries to wonder about. And, I found them at the pound.

The pound, located at 1601 Orchard Lane (my car knows the address by automatic pilot), has three neutered male cats — two of whom were released by their owners. As I stood in the cat pound and looked around me Wednesday, I wondered what in the world could these poor cats have done to deserve such a fate? My cats have only given me love, so I have no way of understanding taking a pet to the pound.

M.J. Smith, who takes care of the cats, told me she has a stack of cards at least a foot high on cats the pound put to sleep in October. The foot high figure is my determination based upon how far apart her hands seemed to me, and I may be underestimating. The success stories add up to six — five adopted cats and one returned to its owner.

The current cat inhabitants at 1601 Orchid Lane include at least nine precious kittens in all sizes, colors and hair lengths, and beautiful adult tabby cats, black cats, gray cats, calicos, a Siamese, a short-haired white cat and a Persian (with a snaggled tooth).

The short-haired white cat gave me a real start the first time I saw it at the pound. I thought I'd found her. But, alas the eyes are green, and it's a him not a her. He's a real beauty, but I have a 4-year-old highly territorial male.

Those who've seen the Neiman-Marcus Christmas wish book know that prize cats are for sale at quite a price. (One of the tabby's at the pound looks somewhat like the picture I vaguely remember in my mind.) Is it not ironic that while a person orders a cat out of a catalogue (and I'm sure someone will) another turns one in at the pound to wait its turn to die?

To further confuse the issue, most of the cats now at the pound look as if they have been owned by someone at some time. Few, if any, are strays. Yet, most have not been neutered.

Coy Willis, the director at the animal shelter, told me over 3,000 cats and dogs are born every hour in the United States.

Mine have been neutered because I've done what I wish everyone would do before their pet has that next litter. Visit the pound.

It is a heart-wrenching experience. These lovely cats are without hope unless someone cares. Thus far, even efforts to locate the owner of the only cat with current tags — a calico named Madison — have proved futile. It is thought that Madison's and owner were separated in a move. And time waits for no one.

A mystery which has baffled me for the past six years happened a little over a week ago on a night long associated with black cats — Halloween. The puzzling question is — Why is it that when you're looking for something to do it seems hard to find, yet, when you have something to do, there's something else you'd like to do happening at the same time?

Halloween, Midland Community Theatre opened its current production of "The Little Shop of Horrors" at the Yucca Theatre. I heard later that night and since that time that the musical is a hit and provides those who go with an evening of laughter.

I was at Midland High School Auditorium for the opening of Midland Community Concerts' season featuring The Tennessee River Boys. I don't know who had more fun - the audience at Midland High or the Yucca. When Danny Gregg gave his interpretation of the country western song "Swingin,'" I could not stop laughing, no matter how much my sides hurt.

These talented players complement one another onstage, and the result is delightful. Their timing is right on, and they know how to space fast and slow numbers in a set to gain the maximum mileage. Many of the numbers they perform are original songs.

One in particular called me to tears — "Still Home to Me." I shall not forget it's haunting words or melody.

GROTH

When asked about the dangers of being a war correspondent, Groth said, "Obviously you are aware; you're running scared and so is everyone else. When you're walking on a path, you watch where you step. You develop a survival sense. If you hear anything unusual in the way of a noise, you duck.

"But I didn't have a mission to lead troops, and I was not going to be in the lead looking for the enemy, and I was as athletic then as I ever was in my life. I was not in that much danger. I've been in much greater danger covering sports — as press I've had entry to almost any part of the arena."

Groth, who is also known as a sports illustrator, has done an entire series on Eskimo sports and games, folk sports and festivals of Europe and bull-fighting in Spain. "John Groth's World of Sport," published in 1970, features a selection of his sketches, drawings and paintings of unusual and exotic sports in "the world's far corners."

"There is more danger in sports because you're not prepared," he said.

Groth recalled an incident which happened at the Highland games. He was standing on the field. He had a camera, which he uses when there is not enough time to sketch, and had moved to about 50 to 75 feet from the ring.

"I had never seen this sport before, and this athlete was preparing to throw a hammer with an iron ball weighing 22 pounds on the end of the shaft. I kneeled, focused, saw the man in his kilt. He throws it and, much to my surprise, the ball becomes more than a tiny dot in the lens, it almost blacked it out. I threw myself flat. The ball knocked my hat off as it flew over my head."

Groth also recalled the time he was covering the Brooklyn Dodgers during training in Cuba.

"I was behind third base interviewing and drawing the third base coach when suddenly I was out. I woke up, and the ball players were huddled over me. There was an imprint of the ball in my groin."

Through the years, Groth has illustrated a number of books, including classics for the Limited Editions Club. Among these were "Gone with the Wind," "All Quiet on the Western Front," the "Short Stories of O'Henry" and "The Grapes of Wrath."

"I loved doing these and felt greatly honored," Groth said.

His works are represented in the collections of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, the Chicago Art Institute, New York's Museum of Modern Art, the Library of Congress, The University of Texas, the Atlanta Historical Society and the Dallas Public Library.

"It wasn't all good periods," Groth said. "I've returned to peanut butter periods several times in my life. I seem to get pulled out and discovered every 10 to 15 years, and the sprees usually last about five years. I never became a popular artist in the sense that Norman Rockwell did. Just the very fact that you're popular, suddenly it's over. Aside from Norman Rockwell, that seems to be the pattern."

When Groth looks back over the 78 years of his life, he is pleased.

"When you go as the press, you're welcome everywhere," he said. "I've crossed the paths of people I would never have met: Tea with Chiang Kai-shek and his wife, Nehru in New Delhi and Gen. (Douglas) MacArthur. I've been invited on tiger hunts; everything that you can dream of as a kid, I've covered."

GAME

Although Coburn treats his subject matter "with a good deal of humor and wit," Spicer emphasizes that the "strong language" is designed for mature audiences.

Reservations for the show, which runs in the Mabee Theatre II through Dec. 6, may be made by calling Theatre Midland's box office at 682-4111.

Starring in "The Gin Game" are Corby Considine and Gloria Stevenson. Spicer says rehearsals are going very well. He says this is a particularly difficult two-person play to carry off and that, in addition to the difficulty of dealing with being on stage the entire time, Considine and Ms. Stevenson have an added complication.

"The nightmare Don Bachmann thought he had working with four plants in 'Little Shop of Horrors' is nothing compared to dealing with a deck of ace playing cards," Spicer says.

"They're playing these gin games with real cards. The script might say the jack of heart, and the next card they pull out is the eight of clubs, but they still have to play it like the jack of hearts. The cards that they've got in their hands are not necessarily the cards they're are talking about, and they have to adjust to that. The rest of the time they have to choreograph their own card movement. And they play about a dozen hands of gin during the course of the play."

Spicer says, "It's a remarkable job they're doing keeping it all straight. A two-person play is hard enough, but when you throw in the job of keeping the cards straight, you've really increased the difficulty of performing. And, both of them are playing characters much older than they are, and they have to keep the characterization in line, too."

When the lights dim and the curtain rises Friday, the theater will hold, Spicer says, "A table, a deck of cards — this is a crummy retirement home they're in — chairs and a few other pieces of furniture, the audience and imagination."

Set design for the production is by David Layman and costumes are by Mae Dawson. Technical direction and lightening design are by Jon Clark with help from assistant technical director Elizabeth Lee and technical intern Jim Sosa.

Assisting as stage manager is Sharron Perkins. Talent chairman is Jo Stroker. Casting committee members are Marilyn Bassinger, Scott Hammond and Patteann Daniel. Construction is being handled by Jed Barker, paint by Mary Eimers and Liz Pauley, props gatering is by Linda Hicks and lights by Lauri Green.

In summing up his feeling this close to opening night, Spicer says, "I've done two real tough shows in a row — 'Midsummer Night's Dream' and 'Gin Game.' I think I'd rather do tougher shows. It keeps me thinking."

'Search for Tomorrow' canceled by NBC after 35 years on air

NEW YORK (AP) — There will be no tomorrow for "Search for Tomorrow" after the last episode of history's longest-running soap opera airs next month, more than 35 years since its debut.

NBC announced last week it was canceling the daytime drama, which has suffered from low ratings despite a revamping last spring.

The serial made its premiere on CBS on Sept. 3, 1951. It moved to NBC in 1982.

At the beginning of the season, executive producer David Lawrence said "Search for Tomorrow" would get away from "melodramatic" story lines represented on nighttime soaps and do more romantic stories.

Last month, Lawrence took the series on location in Ireland where several episodes were taped. They began airing last week.

Lawrence said the serial had been under the shadow of the hatchet for years, so the announcement was no particular surprise.

"We certainly all anticipated cancellation at some point in the near future," he said in a telephone interview. "When I got the assignment seven months ago, I was told the show was living on borrowed time."

NBC daytime programming chief Brian Frons said "Search for Tomorrow" would be replaced beginning Dec. 29 by a celebrity game show, "WordPlay," in the 12:30 to 1 p.m. EST time slot.

NBC also announced it would add another game show, "Blockbusters," to the daytime lineup, bringing the network's game show total to six. "Blockbusters" will begin airing Jan. 5 in the 10:30 to 11 a.m. EST time slot currently occuped by "Sale of the Century," which will air a half-hour earlier.

Like other soap operas, "Search for Tomorrow" provided early acting jobs for many who went on to be stars, including Morgan Fairchild, Susan Sarandon, Jill Clayburgh, Robby Benson, Trish van Devere, Sandy Duncan, Barbara Babcock, Kevin Bacon, George Maharis, Michael Nouri, Lee Grant and Wayne Rogers.

Joel Higgins, Ken Kercheval, Don Knotts, Hal Linden and Robert Mandan, who also appeared on the series, help "Search" celebrate its 35th anniversary the week of Aug. 27-Sept. 3 by taping segments that aired at the end of each episode.

The serial devoted its Sept. 3 telecast to a retrospective of landmark events, as seen through the eyes of long-running characters Joe Tourneur and Stu Bergman, played by Mary Stuart and Larry Haines.

Miss Stuart has been with the serial since its premiere in 1951. Haines joined the cast two years later.

Symphony & Chorale, quintet will give concert

The Midland Odessa Symphony & Chorale and the Lone Star Brass Quintet will present two free concerts, Nov. 11 at St. Ann's Catholic Church in Midland and Nov. 13 at UTPB Founder's Building in Odessa. Both concerts begin at 8 p.m.

The Lone Star Brass Quintet opens the program with "Suite" by William Boyce, "Mini Overture" by Witold Lutolawski, and "Military Suite #2 in F" by Gustav Holst.

Comprised of musicians from the Midland Odessa Symphony, the Lone Star Brass Quintet (LSBQ) was originally formed in 1981. Members are David Scott and Michael Santorelli, trumpets; Barbara Adamcik, French horn; Rob Belcher, trombone; and Alan Harvey, tuba.

Under the direction of Eugene Pierce, the Symphony Choral & Chamber orchestra will perform "Dona Nobis Pacem" by Ralph Williams. The piece is a contata in five movements for soprano and baritone soloists, chorus and orchestra. The work was commissioned by the Huddersfield Choral Society for its centennial celebration and was first performed on Oct. 2, 1936.

Newman credible as Fast Eddie

By MYRA LEE SALCEDO
Lifestyle Writer

Salcedo

With acting talent as smooth and polished as the pool pro he plays, Paul Newman adds great credibility to the role of Fast Eddie Felson in "The Color of Money." Reprising his memorable role in 1961's "The Hustler," Newman's performance reflects his years of experience.

Newman plays a stakehorse who bankrolls young players. He sees a winning potential in Vincent (Tom Cruise). Along with Vincent's girlfriend, Carmen (Mary Elizabeth Mastrantonio), they set out to make the most of his talents.

While Vincent wants his opponent's "best game," Eddie wants his money, an attitude he attempts to instill in the young pool shark.

"Money won is sweeter than money earned," says Eddie, even pretending to lose sometimes to make the payoff sweeter.

Eddie attempts to convince Carmen that the couple should go on the road with him. He uses the metaphor of a racehorse, saying, "You make him feel good and I'll make him run."

It's hard not to know who to root for, or who is using who, which is one of the more compelling elements of the plot. Cruise plays Vincent, a charming flake who never engages our self-pity.

Cruise exhibits some of the playfulness he became known for in "Risky Business" and even more believable aspects of anger and cockiness.

Director Martin Scorsese, opts for realism, where character, not sentiment shapes destiny. The film works even though it does not supply a clear winner, nor a cut and dried ending.

Eddie struggles to tame Vincent's spirit, saying, "Half of me says I've got the best thing that's ever happened to me, the other half says it just ain't worth it."

Eddie is obviously a man looking for a challenge and soon is not content to sit on the sidelines. The irony is that Eddie, the teacher, ends up learning a lesson as well. And in a face-off with his pupil, he is the one asking for his opponent's "best game."

The games are choreographed well, and the plot is long on character development. The only hitch is the sound. For some reason, Newman spoke so quietly, at times total sentences were lost. At the same time, whenever the background music came on, it was unusually loud. Because of this, myself, and several other members of the audience, were reluctant to ask the sound be turned up. In order to hear Newman, the music would have reached ear-splitting levels. It was a minor technical problem, and only seemed so because no one wanted to miss one single word of dialogue.

The casting of Newman and Cruise as the seasoned pro and the young upstart is perfect. They mesh well with good supporting actresses. The film conveys a slice of life that rings true. Don't expect something along the lines of "Rocky" or a chance to cheer at the final scene. "The Color of Money," maintains a ferocious level of competiveness to the end. And competition, like life, ain't over until the game is.

The "Color of Money," rated R for language, nudity and sex is playing at the North Park Cinemas.

'Harry' appeals to adventurous

Billed as "An adventure for the hero in all of us," Tri-Star Picture's lastest release, "Let's Get Harry," attempts to fill the bill, but doesn't break any new ground.

In the light of terrorists taking hostages, and in the spirit of "Rambo," four guys who are "just plumbers" go into the heart of Columbia to wrest a friend from terrorists.

The film opens with an American firm, Argus Pipe and Fixtures, that has set up business in the jungle locale of Guateque, Columbia. When the American ambassador to Columbia arrives by helicopter, he isn't in the pipe plant two minutes before terrorists descend on the plant amidst a barrage of gunfire.

The ambassador and plant manager, Harry, (Mark Harmon) are kidnapped by Columbians who intend to trade them for comrades imprisoned for drug dealing in the United States.

Meanwhile, back in Aurora, Ill., Mark's brother Corey, (Michael "Sixteen Candles" Schoeffling) finds out that the U.S. government intends to do nothing about his brother's plight.

He treks to Washington, is refused an audience with any top aides and is told, "It is the policy of this administration not to negotiate with terrorists. There are 20-50 square miles of trackless jungle and a hostile government in Columbia with no bases to hit." (It is never mentioned just who the president of this administration is.)

Corey says, "Not even Harry, who went at machine gunnists with a pipe wrench, (nice plumber imagery) can move the government when it doesn't want to be moved."

So Corey, appearing all-the-world like a freckled face Matt Dillon, rounds up some of his brother's buddies to interview "mercenaries for hire" found in the classifieds of "Soldier of Fortune" magazine.

They interview a few dubious "I'll kill 'em all and let God sort 'em out" types before Robert Duvall as Shike, appears. As a war hero who has won a Congressional Medal of Honor, looking for a challenge, Duvall is the best actor in the film.

Wearing a "gimme" cap and fatigues, Duvall is reminiscent of his memorable role in "Apocolypse Now." However, that was a much better movie. The idea of "Let's Get Harry," is far better than the execution.

Duvall, leads the men into the jungle and is in charge of negotiating payoffs along the way. Cocaine and payoffs abound throughout the film. It costs $40,000 for the "hunting" trip, including $3,000 for an airplane ride, $3000 for weapons and $3,000 for a beat up car. Apparently, $3,000, is a popular price in Columbia.

"Let's Get Harry" is another "us against them" film with no new twists. The photography is nice and technically the film is up-to-par. The level of intensity just isn't there, however.

It's hard to believe that a bunch of average guys could get motivated to go up against 50 terrorists. And seeing, Corey, (who doesn't look like he shaves yet) dash into the line of fire with guns blasting away in each hand is really stretching it. Rage is one emotion, Corey seems too clean-cut to exhibit.

There are good performances, however. Gary Busey as "Smilin' Jack," the wealthy car salesman-/hunter who provides the dough for the trip "If I pay for a huntin' trip, I go on it" has some of the better lines and scenes.

The film seems to appeal to those wanting to fight back against a feeling of helplessness brought on by terrorists taking hostages. By the end of the film, you may ask though, "How many lives is Harry's life worth?"

"Let's Get Harry," rated R for violence and language, is playing at Midland Park Mall Cinemas.

Collins, Hutton star in 'Monte Carlo'

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Collins

No, "Monte Carlo" isn't a new cop show with an Italian hero. It's a little mini-series with a Riviera setting, a Mata Hari plot and a lot of costume changes by Joan Collins.

Recalling her previous romp through Europe in the mini-series "Sins", costar Lauren Hutton summarizes "Monte Carlo" (airing tonight and Monday night on CBS): "Once again, Joan steals the man from me. Every summer we do this."

The man in question is George Hamilton, playing a drunken, one-book novelist named Harry Price. It's 1940, the Germans are sweeping through Europe, and Ms. Collins is an opera singer who arrives in Monte Carlo in a blue suit with matching hat and veil to pursue her incognito career as a British secret agent.

Although 1940 was not the year that fashion reached its zenith, Collins works hard along with her wardrobe mistress to struggle into 23 different outfits, from boa-ruffed evening gowns to some junior miss sportswear with a big bow tied over the derriere.

But the plot, the plot. Ms. Collins is the recently widowed Russian diva Katrina Petrovna. Dressed all in white, she ventures into the soft Mediterranean starlight with Umberto, a squat, bemedaled Italian general who can't believe his luck.

Ms. Collins alertly sees the tubby general receive an envelope full of secrets from Herr Pabst, the suave, deadly local Gestapo operative (played by Peter Vaughan). She Mickey-Finns the man from Mussoliniville and steals his secrets while he slumbers.

Hamilton, meanwhile, is parting from Ms. Hutton, the heiress who has been keeping him like a pet poodle. She goes back to New York while the getting is good. He stays. Perhaps his open-neck wardrobe wouldn't do in Gotham, perhaps he senses a chance to redeem himself from his wastrel life. He's not too proud to accept the keys to the roadster that Hutton can't take with her.

On foot in Monto Carlo is mysterious Malcolm McDowell. He plays an Irishman whose accent is no more Irish than Ms. Collins' is Russian. McDowell is a gunrunner, oil trader and all-round middleman who falls for highball-hoisting Lisa Eilbacher, an exile from Bryn Mawr.

When Pabst, the reptilian Gestapo man, finds out McDowell is mixed up in a scheme to smuggle Jews out of Germany, McDowell sneers, "You're just a big bully in a fancy suit. You don't scare me." Later, though, McDowell has cause to wish the show's production budget had afforded him a car as sleek and fast as Hamilton's.

In sober moments, Hamilton becomes intrigued by Ms. Collins. He observes, "She does have that little look out of the corner of her eye that says, 'I'm open for business.'"

Ms. Collins steps up to a microphone in a blue sleeveless gown with blue gloves and sings. Singing is a new skill Collins has acquired as part of her youth-giving deal with the devil. Hamilton wonders at her unlikely infatuation with "the spaghetti," as he calls Umberto.

Ms. Collins notices Hamilton's panting presence and warns, "Don't become intrigued by me." So Hamilton grabs her quick and plasters her lips with his. Ms. Collins is wearing a blue skirt and white blouse. She won't get to the nightgown scenes until later.

Back in Britain, the Limeys are preparing to singe Hitler's moustache with an air raid against Monte Carlo, of all places. Leading the raid is a cockpit hero played by Robert Carradine, of all people. It will be a long hard war if the British must rely on Ms. Collins and Carradine, for she misses the message about the raid and Carradine gets shot down in flames. "Oh, God, Harry, no, God, no, no!" Collins exclaims.

And that's just Part One. In Part Two, the frequency of Ms. Collins' visits to the wardrobe trailer diminishes as she spends an enforced period of leisure in a local dungeon.

There are no closets there, but apparently there's a mysterious tunnel to the makeup table where she sheds decades. The ending involves a plane departing for Lisbon, a la "Casablanca," though some may say it was better in black and white.

Much of "Monte Carlo" might have been shot with pre-colorized technology, for little use is made of the local color. There are a few shots of McDowell running down narrow cobbled lanes in spats, and Hamilton and his roadster do get about a bit.

But audiences may tire of seeing the same old stock establishing exterior shots of the sun-drenched city, and then a cut to an interior scene that could have been shot in Burbank.

Although the show, directed by Anthony Page, was truly filmed on the Cote d'Azur, carefully set artificial light is kinder to a veteran actress' face than the pitiless glare of direct sunlight — or perhaps it rained all summer in Monte Carlo.

Monte Carlo, where the casino is located, is part of the principality of Monaco. The Old World splendor of Monaco attracts everyone from tourists out of Sioux Falls, who arrive in buses, to potentates from Arabia, who arrive in yachts.

Ms. Hutton says, "You hang out with the Prince (Prince Rainier III, the ruler of Monaco) every night. There's only one chili parlor in town, and that's the bar at the Cafe de Paris. Like any good bar, it has a wild mixture of people."

Hutton grew up in the swamps of Florida and didn't read until she was 12. Despite her years as one of the world's best-paid models and more recently as a continually employed actress, she hasn't become blase about the glamor of a watering hole like Monte Carlo.

"The deep, deep luxe of places like prewar Monaco has died out now," she says. Those were the days when you didn't make money, you had money. "There are only a few great, great princes left, like dying elephants. World War II about put an end to them, though they tried to eke it out into the 1950s."

But it's a ball to film among the relics of the days when you could order a Pouligny-Montrachet '28 and care not a fig for the cost. "It's good for television to show us that Old World," Hutton says. "We're a new people and we can learn a lot from it."

ABC suspends Ball's series

LOS ANGELES (AP) — "Life with Lucy," Lucille Ball's low-rated comedy series, has been dropped from ABC's Saturday night schedule, along with "The Ellen Burstyn Show."

Brandon Stoddard, president of ABC Entertainment, said Friday that both shows will be brought back, but that they will make their final Saturday night appearances next Saturday.

"Life With Lucy" marked Miss Ball's return to regular series television after an absence of 12 years. But the show failed in the Nielsen ratings and was characterized by critics as looking like a 1950s comedy.

Miss Ball was unavailable for comment, said ABC spokesman Jasper Vance. Her husband, Gary Morton, commented only that "We love being with ABC." Morton is co-executive producer with Aaron Spelling and Douglas Cramer.

Her show was 71st out of 74 shows in the latest rating by the A.C. Nielsen Co. Miss Burstyn's show was 72nd. Both shows have been near the bottom of the ratings since their debuts in September.

Heart Answers

Risk Factors

Researchers have identified a number of characteristics or habits (called risk factors) which increase the chance that an individual will develop coronary heart disease. While not all risk factors can be controlled, such as age, sex, race and heredity, many can be controlled or corrected by the individual. The risk factors which can be controlled or corrected are: dietary habits (especially those leading to high levels of blood cholesterol and overweight or obesity), high blood pressure and cigarette smoking.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

Monday, November 10, 1986

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Unrealistic expectations will bring disappointment. Use common sense and experience when setting goals and you will enjoy one success after another! Money situation improves. Savings grow, thanks to conservative approach to spending. The sooner you forgive someone, the better off you will be emotionally. Do not feel guilty about cutting your ties to negative people. You need to ally yourself with those who share your optimism and high ideals. Romance enjoys favorable influences.

CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: St. Louis Cardinals slugger Jack Clark, actor Richard Burton, actress Mackenzie Phillips, actor Roy Scheider, Irish writer Oliver Goldsmith, German monk and theologian Martin Luther, long-time major league player and manager Jimmy Dykes, author J.P. Marquand, the Cincinnati Reds' Birdie Tebbetts.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Beware of financial misunderstanding. Change of plans is inevitable. Adopting new work methods will strengthen an important relationship.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Go after better credit terms or tax arrangements. People may be quick to take offense today. A new romance or marriage proposal is possible.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A tense atmosphere at the office could hamper some alliances. Travel and romance do not make a favorable mix today. Finances could become a major issue.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): An excellent time to consider projects that tie in with joint financial resources, home improvement loans. A real estate venture could prove very successful now. You benefit greatly from taking experts' advice.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Morning is the best time to communicate with mate or business partner. Shared activities may rub some people the wrong way. Your social life blossoms.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Any difficulties that might arise this morning will not be due to your shortcomings. The tide will shift by late afternoon. A special tax arrangement makes a job more attractive.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A new job offer sounds appealing, but certain benefits could give you second thoughts. Weigh your options carefully. A daring, new perspective enhances romance.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A thirst for travel or knowledge makes life fascinating. A stranger asks leading questions. Your own curiosity is aroused.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Distant news or an expert's change of mind could catch you off-guard. A conservative approach serves you well when handling tricky situations.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Guard against financial losses or damage to your valuables. Someone's carelessness must be curbed. A blind date arranged by a friend or relative exceeds your expectations.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Others are more than willing to pitch in and help boost profits. Distant news has financial or romantic implications. Traveling with a loved one is a dream come true. Show your delight.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Your plans are helped along by a former business associate. You may be thinking about starting or expanding a business. Ask for an expert's opinion.

DEAR MR. GOREN

Q.—My partner and I play negative doubles. However, we seem to get into trouble quite often when the bidding goes something like this:

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	2 ♠	Pass	Pass

We are never sure when and how to reopen the auction. Can you give us a few tips? — G.D., Laguna Hills, Calif.

A.—Before answering, let's consider why you have a problem. Because of the fact that you are playing negative doubles, partner might have a hand with which he would have liked to make a penalty double of two clubs, but could not because of your methods. However, you must bear in mind that the reason he passed might have been because he was too weak to act!

Quite often the key to the situation is your holding in the overcaller's suit. The more you have, the less likely it is that partner passed because he has the sort of hand with which he would have liked to make a penalty double and the more likely that he has a disappointing hand for you.

There are four auctions to consider:

1. If your hand is reasonably balanced with no great length or strength in the overcaller's suit, reopen with a double. If partner had been wanting to double for penalties, he will now convert your double by passing; if he had not, he will either bid a new suit or else pull to your original suit.

2. If your hand is unbalanced, either rebid your own suit or else bid a new suit. With a strong hand, reopen with a jump.

3. With a strong balanced hand (17-19 points) and at least a double stopper in the overcaller's suit, rebid no trump at the cheapest level. (Note that you know that partner did not want to make a penalty double and, therefore, must be weak. So you don't want to jump to two no trump.)

4. With a minimum opening bid and some length or strength in the enemy suit, pass. Just because you are playing negative doubles doesn't mean you have to reopen every hand. Sometimes the hand belongs to the opponents. In those cases let them play; don't reopen and get overboard, thereby exposing your side to possible punishment.

Q.—If they can show the world chess championship on public TV, why can't we have bridge as well? — G.P., New York City

A.—Good question. Unfortunately, there are certain problems about presenting bridge on TV which chess does not share. However, if you keep demanding bridge from your local stations and press, they will have to pay attention.

Langdon Kihn photographs to be exhibited at Museum of Southwest

From galleries of Peggy and Harold Samuels, the collection includes photographs taken on trips made by Kihn to paint native Americans. His trips ranged from Mexico to Alaska. Portraits of those American Indians were his specialty.

Boxleitner sheds fancy duds for dusty duds

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Bruce Boxleitner shed the fancy secret agent threads of his television series for worn, dusty western duds in the film version of Louis L'Amour's novel "Down the Long Hills.".

"I never had to wash my wardrobe," he said. "I could spill my lunch on it and make it look better. All I cleaned was my long underwear."

Director Burt Kennedy picked the wardrobe for the movie on the Disney Channel.

"It looked like it was right out of a John Wayne movie," said Boxleitner. "Burt fixed the hat so that it looked like a cavalry hat. I had the bib shirt and the suspenders."

Boxleitner recalled that he had once met Wayne.

"He told me to do a simple story," Boxleitner said. "People were getting too many psychological hangups in the Westerns."

Boxleitner's first series was ABC's "How the West Was Won," based on the 1963 blockbuster movie that had Wayne among its all-star cast. Boxleitner met his wife, Kathryn Holcomb, when she played his sister on the show.

He also starred in "Wild Times," twice appeared with Kenny Rogers in "The Gambler" and played Wyatt Earp in another TV movie.

"I love doing Westerns," he said. "When this came up, I said I wanted to do it. It was great to work with Burt Kennedy and Jack Elam again. I worked with both of them doing 'How the West Was Won.' I don't get much opportunity, because they make so few Westerns. But I may do another one next summer."

He turned the location shooting in Utah into a combination of work and vacation, accompanied by his wife and their two children, Sam, 6, and Lee, 7 months. The youngest son is named after his character, Lee Stetson, in "Scarecrow and Mrs. King."

"Down the Long Hills" will be shown on the Disney Channel beginning Saturday. Boxleitner stars as a widowed father who searches for his son after a wagon train massacre. The boy and a young girl escape into the mountains on a red stallion that is being hunted by both Indians and some horse thieves.

Elam plays a mountain man who helps in the search. Bo Hopkins and Michael Wren play the horse thieves, Tom Brown is the son and Lisa Macfarlane is the girl. Don Shanks plays a Cheyenne warrior.

Boxleitner said one reason Western series disappeared from television is that most were filmed on studio backlots to save money.

"On 'Bonanza' you could hear the hollow hoofbeats on the stage floor," he said. "The only West you ever saw was the Simi Valley. On 'How the West Was Won,' we did mostly location shooting the first two years, then we were in Malibu Canyon. They're very expensive to make. Our scheduling didn't help, either. We were on ABC with all these sitcoms, and along comes this lumbering Western miniseries. We weren't on every week. You have to be on every week."

Producer confesses series tough job

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Alan Landsburg has a confession: producing 130 episodes of "True Confessions" is tougher than he thought it would be.

"I've never had this many shows," he said. "I've never looked down a tunnel this deep."

Landsburg isn't complaining, however. He knew it would be a big job when he sought film rights to the stories from True Confessions magazine, published by Macfadden Women's Group.

The daily half-hour dramatic anthology, with Bill Bixby as host, is syndicated to more than 90 markets nationwide by King World. Among its stars are June Allyson, Robert Culp, Mickey Rooney, Burgess Meredith, Dick Van Patten and Donald O'Connor.

Sixty episodes had been completed by the time the series made its debut in early September.

"I think we've broken its back," said Landsburg. "We knew it was going to be a long pull, but we didn't know until we got into it how long a pull it was going to be. I think it's the most ambitious first-run syndication series ever tried."

Turner Broadcasting Co. has placed large orders for its original first-run comedies, but they don't approach the 130 episodes for "True Confessions."

"It was almost a year ago that we asked ourselves what we could do that would change the pattern of syndicated daytime shows," said Landsburg. "All that seemed to be out there were a few talk shows and an incredible number of game shows. That was it. There were no dramatic shows except for reruns.

"We've used 20 directors so far. It's all original drama so that gives them and the actors a chance to create characters. We've accepted 95 scripts so far from 50 writers, many of whom have never written for television before."

The stories are all inspired by pieces that have appeared in True Confessions magazine over the past 70 years.

He calls the "True Confessions" shows "miniature movies that allow the stars to exercise their acting muscles."

"June Allyson started work at 7 p.m. and worked all night," he said. "Her eyes lit up and she said she had never worked all night before in her life. Cesar Romero did a character that was not new for him but the environment was new. Erik Estrada did a role that got him out of the cop mold. Susan Anton did a comedy. Joe Namath played a philandering husband.

"There's no single kind of story. We didn't want to be the 'Love Story' show. We have stories that are emotional, suspenseful, or funny. We've done socially significant movies like 'Adam' and 'Bill,' so we have the basis for doing shows about battered wives, divorce, molesting stepfathers and date-rape."

Landsburg has a movie for HBO called "Long Gone." It's a comedy about a Class D Florida baseall team in 1950 written by Paul Hemphill, a sports writer for The Atlanta Constitution.

Girl named for drink, bar

HAMILTON TOWNSHIP, N.J. (AP) — Sherry Landing Camp will have quite a story to tell if she's ever asked about her name.

The 6-pound, 4-ounce baby was delivered late last week at the Landing Point Inn, a bar described by owner Jerrie Kingan as a "shot-and-a-beer place."

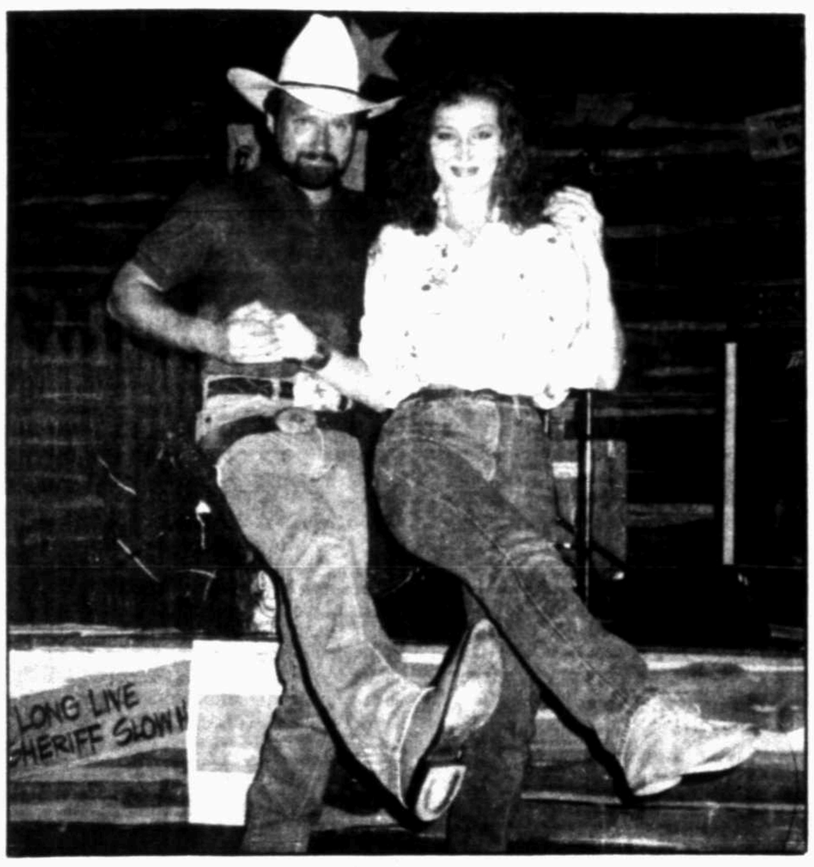

The baby's barmaid mother, Ellen Camp of Estell Manor, had gone into labor around 12:30 p.m. She called Ms. Kingan and police. Police Sgt. Anthony Garreggi and Patrolman Newton Nakao delivered the baby minutes after their arrival.

Ms. Camp named the child Sherry after the drink and Landing after the bar. She said she probably will tell her daughter where she was born "as soon as she's old enough."
