Jackson storming convention city

By DAVID ESPO
AP Political Writer

ATLANTA — Jesse Jackson staged an emotional and forceful entrance to the Democrats' heat-baked convention city Saturday, telling thousands of cheering supporters that he seeks "shared responsibility" with the party's certain nominee, Michael Dukakis.

In the cool of the downtown hotels, Dukakis' high command met privately with Jackson advisers, hoping for harmony in the fall campaign against Republican George Bush.

Dukakis, his nomination assured, worked in Boston on Massachusetts budget matters. He and ticketmate Lloyd Bentsen arrive here Sunday.

In his first Atlanta appearance — before sweltering supporters massed in Piedmont Park — Jackson said his goal was to drive Bush "back into private life." He seeks no title or party post, he said.

"I seek a partnership, I seek equity, I seek shared responsibility," he added. "I don't mind working — I'll go out in the field and pick some voters. I'll come back and bale up some voters. When I get up to the big house, I want to help count the cotton."

Jackson played down talk of convention confrontations.

"We come to Atlanta not for fireworks, but for noble works," he said.

Jackson said meetings between his aides and those of Dukakis might resolve the issue of whether his supporters might put his name in nomination for vice president Thursday night.

"I hope we have meetings between now and then that would end the possibility," Jackson said in an interview with CBS News. "The success of those meetings will determine a lot about what kind of convention we have."

Dukakis confidant Paul Brountas said a strategy session with Jackson aides went well, although Dukakis sources said privately they doubted the two Democratic rivals would meet before the convention opens on Monday.

"It was a very good start to a convention which I believe will lead to a very unified party that will go into a general election campaign that will beat George Bush in November," Brountas told reporters.

'Brassy, blunt' comments characteristic of Richards

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — At first, the soft drawl and the silver beehive hairdo make Ann Richards seem like just another southern belle who spends her time worrying about what dress to wear to the next cocktail party.

That image changes quickly after a minute or two of listening to the brassy Texas treasurer speak. It obviously was no dumb blonde who became the first woman elected statewide in half a century and then survived six and one-half years in the male-dominated world of high finance.

Few women, for example, would quote Mae West when speaking to an audience of 750 well-heeled potential supporters and a dozen reporters with tape recorders. "Anything worth doing," Ms. Richards said at a June roast of the notoriously patient Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, "is worth doing slowly."

Or take the time Ms. Richards stood at a reception talking to Comptroller Bob Bullock and his aide Charles Miles, when a rural county judge approached the group. Austin lawyer Jane Hickey, a long-time Richards associate and her campaign manager, tells the story:

"He says, 'Bob, it's good to see you, how the h— are you?' And they shook and howdied." Bullock then introduced the judge to Miles, who is black.

"The county judge put his hands in his pocket and stared at the floor and said, 'How are you, boy?' Then he turned to Ann and said, 'And who is this pretty lady?' and Ann said, 'I'm Mrs. Miles.'"

Chicago murder study makes point weapons come in all shapes, sizes

CHICAGO (AP) — From forks to frying pans, the diversity of weapons wielded by the city's murderers could fill dozens of Agatha Christie mystery books.

The weapon of choice in Chicago for doing in a neighbor, relative or worst enemy remains the firearm, says the 1987 Murder Analysis Report, a compendium of statistics about murder in the Windy City compiled by the police department.

But last year, people in Chicago were killed with an almost A-to-Z arsenal of weapons, from an ashtray in one case to wooden boards in five slayings, the report shows.

One person was murdered with an axe, another was killed with an electric fan and a third was apparently burned to death with hot grease, says the report, which lists the type of weapon and the number of cases in which it was used without elaborating on the circumstances.

"They say necessity is the mother of invention," said Chicago police Officer Patrick Camden of the department's news affairs office. "People grab whatever's handy, I guess."

That's usually the case, says Stuart Kaminsky, who is something of an expert on the art of murder as the author of 21 murder mysteries.

"It sounds like these might be exotic murders, done by some fiendishly clever criminal," says Kaminsky, who lives in suburban Evanston and has written such mysteries as the Toby Peters and Inspector Rostnikov series.

Parents must play part as state calls the shots on immunization

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Children — fearing pain — and doctors — fearing flu epidemics — fall at opposite ends of the spectrum when it comes to the importance of getting immunizations.

And falling dangerously in between are parents, officials say.

Whether because of economics, ignorance, fear or an incorrect sense of invulnerability, the fact remains: dreaded childhood diseases are making a comeback.

And experts agree, parents are to blame.

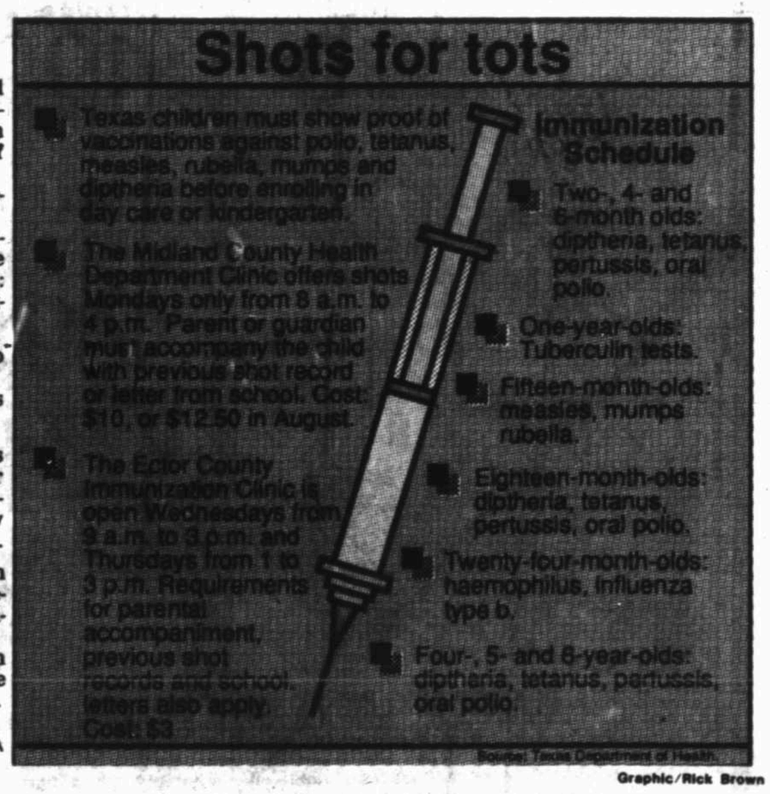

But Texas is lucky...so far, officials agreed.

The state's immunization record is higher than that of most other states, said Dr. V.J. Gururaj, a pediatrician at Texas Tech University Health Sciences Center in Lubbock.

Only one case of measles has been reported this year to the Texas Department of Health, said Steve McInelly, a TDH public health advisor.

In 1987, however, the more than 400 cases of measles reported to the TDH led the nation, McInelly said.

City's second-quarter bank deposits off $57 million

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant Business/Oil Editor

Soft oil prices, seasonal forces and aggressive savings and loans combined to drain $57 million in total deposits at Midland banks during the second quarter.

On June 30, deposits at Midland's eight banks totaled $1.416 billion, compared with $1.473 billion three months earlier. Since mid-year 1987, the drop is more dramatic, falling 7.4 percent or $113 million from the $1.529 billion total.

Slack loan demand continues to beset local bankers as total portfolios in the city stood at $569.8 million, down 8.8 percent for the quarter and off more than 13 percent compared to year-earlier levels. "Good loans remain hard to find," summarized Bob Southerland, president of Community National Bank.

The dropping oil price in recent weeks "doesn't have the business community in the best frame of mind," said Bill Franklin, president of First City National Bank.

However, price volatility is going to continue to be a fact of life for the foreseeable future, several bankers agreed. "If operators try to base their drilling plans strictly on spot market prices, they are going to drive themselves crazy," said Wayne Merritt, president of United Bank.

The bank presidents' predictions for the third quarter are uniformly flat, but Franklin of First City and others are looking toward a "stronger, but not spectacular fourth quarter."

David Jones, president of ClayDesta National Bank, said that the drop in citywide deposits since mid-1987 mirrors the drop in average oil prices during the last six months compared to prices from January to June last year.

"Deposits in Midland are a function of oil and gas runs. As the revenue flow slows, so do deposits," said Jones.

This week's raising of the prime lending rate is a double edged sword for local bankers. While it improves the interest spread between loans and deposits in the short run, "anything that raises the cost of doing business, will hurt the customer base" and eventually overall loan demand, said John Grist, president of Midland American Bank.

Jones of ClayDesta said soft loan demand translates into a less pressing need for funds by banks, which are not pursuing additional deposits as aggressively as savings and loans.

Franklin agreed, noting the higher rates being paid on accounts at thrift institutions are causing a significant amount of intramarket movement of funds.

The exception to the loan demand outlook is at United Bank, where President Merritt said they are "happy with loan demand."

Although a decline in federal funds, which are reportable as loans, lowered United's loan total during the quarter, Merritt said that actual bank loans are growing at an annualized rate of 12 percent.

Several bankers mentioned that despite lower loan and deposit totals, their institutions are strengthening their profitability posture as the local economy completes its turnaround. ClayDesta, Texas American and United Bank all saw improved profitability in the last three months.

Repossessions, once a daily staple for many banks, have slowed to a trickle if not stopped altogether. Charles Grimes, president of Texas American Bank — Midland, said his bank sees repossessions as a past phenomenon and that the market in general appears to be out of its problems of the past two years.

Statewide, Grimes sees better times ahead for banks as well, predicting that within six months to a year the bank holding companies yet to complete recapitalization programs will do so.

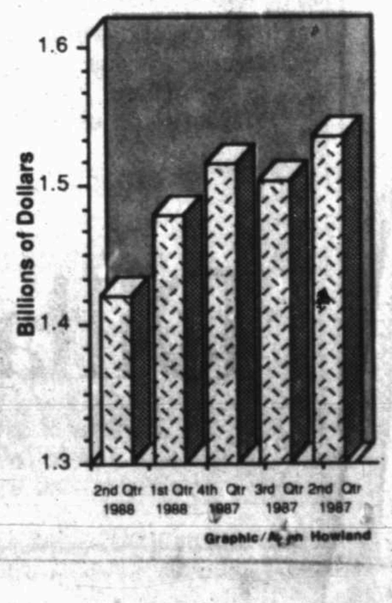

He also expects the Texas economy to respond positively to banks becoming more viable once again.

Local figures apparently bear out Grimes' theory. Texas Commerce, the first Texas bank holding company to undergo recapitalization — through its purchase by Chemical Bank of New York — showed the strongest deposit growth over the last year.

Texas Commerce Bank-Midland's deposit total of nearly $106.4 million at mid-year is 51.3 percent more than on June 30, 1987.

The bank also experienced growth in its loan portfolio during both the second quarter and as compared to last year. TCB-Midland president Ed Jones noted that loan growth is difficult to control but that the bank will "keep on going" in hopes of continuing the trend. The increase of $3.3 million during the quarter brings the bank to a total of $31.8 million at mid-year.

Texas state treasurer Ann Richards, right, keynote speaker for the Democratic National Convention, takes granddaughter Lilly from daughter Cecile Adams of Venice Beach, Calif.

RICHARDS

A nationwide television audience of millions has a chance to soak up some of that blunt but humorous style Monday night when the 54-year-old Ms. Richards delivers the keynote address at the Democratic National Convention in Atlanta. Party Chairman Paul Kirk says he picked the witty Ms. Richards for the job to help the party recover its once-unshakeable hold on the South and to take advantage of female voters apparent attraction to Democratic candidates.

"To be given this, what is really a high honor, to be invited to do this speech, is in a way of saying to women, 'We want to help you succeed. We want to help you be visibly successful,'" Ms. Richards says. "I'm sure that it will have some effect simply because it makes that statement, that that's the way the Democratic Party leadership feels."

Ms. Hickey says her pal sends another message for the party. "The Democratic Party is supposed to be about alliances between people who are all out of sorts and those who are fortunate enough to be successful," Ms. Hickey says. "And she does that. She says that to people."

As the wife of Dallas attorney and Democratic activist David Richards 25 years ago, Ann cut her political teeth with a once-a-year satire show on behalf of the North Dallas Democratic Women. The Richardses moved to Austin in 1969, where Ann campaigned on behalf of the Equal Rights Amendment and two Austin women who won races for the Texas Legislature.

Consistent with her belief that women could compete on equal footing with men, Ms. Richards took her first step as a candidate in the all-male world of the county commissioners court. She ousted an incumbent male Travis County commissioner in 1976 and spent six years in the mundane sphere of roads and bridges and county parks.

Capitalizing on incumbent Warren Harding's political problems, Ms. Richards took a last-minute plunge into the 1982 state treasurer's race. She defeated Harding for the Democratic nomination and beat her Republican opponent by 730,000 votes in the fall.

It didn't take long for the former Waco High School debate champion to move the office into the modern banking era. Six months into her term, the conservative Texas Business magazine gave her an "A" for leadership and called her "tough as nails."

Austin attorney Don Adams, lobbyist for the Independent Bankers Association of Texas, says she's done "the best, most efficient job of any treasurer in my time." One of the first things she did was eliminate "the float" of state funds, a situation that had allowed banks to earn several days' free interest on the state's accounts.

"The bankers are not happy about that," Adams says. "But to a person, they have high regard for what she's done."

New York investment banker Franklin Raines, who helped Ms. Richards sell two state bond packages, said she made a similar impression on the Wall Street community. "In making tough decisions, in the course of financing, she stood up and made those decisions, didn't defer them or try to paper them over," Raines says. "I think she's done an excellent job."

But Ann Richards' world has its share of thorns among the roses. She made a well-publicized fight against alcoholism in the late 1970s and was divorced from her husband in 1984.

Female. Divorced. Alcoholic. Those three strikes could strike some folks out of politics altogether. But Ann Richards holds a national plum of a speaking engagement tomorrow night, and she's ready to run for governor in 1990.

"You never know, out there, who might have said, 'I'm not going to vote for her because she is either female or alcoholic or divorced or white or whatever,' you don't know," she says.

"Of course the reality is that I don't always have to win. The process is that you put yourself forward and you say, 'Here I am and here's who I am and I'd like to have your vote and your trust.' If you get it, fine. If you don't get it, if something should happen someday that I'm no longer in public office, well then I'll go do something else."

Ms. Richards says she doesn't know if the Atlanta speech will help her pick up support for what could be a mean 1990 gubernatorial primary race against Attorney General Jim Mattox. She also doesn't expect it to turn her into a national Democratic hero like the 1984 prime time address did for New York Gov. Mario Cuomo.

"If I thought in those terms, I'd be too scared to do it," she says.

"I don't know. I don't think we can possibly know that. If I'm good, it'll help and if I'm not, it'll hurt. But it sure is going to be fun to do."

CONVENE

Jackson's seven-bus caravan rolled into town after stopping en route in Calhoun, Ga., to pick up adviser Bert Lance. Jackson was running late, and his bus halted along busy Interstate 75 so Lance could climb aboard. Police blocked other cars from using the road, and a massive traffic jam resulted.

In a 45-minute speech in the heat of a Southern evening, Jackson prodded his supporters, "Don't surrender your dreams."

"I was born in the slums and yet my name will go in nomination because the slums were not born in me...and they were not born in you," he told the faithful.

He said that when his name goes into nomination Wednesday night in the Democratic presidential roll call, "it means Harvard and Yale don't have a lock on the White House. It means (black colleges) Morehouse and Spellman stand a chance."

Aides to Jackson and Dukakis bid to defuse tensions before the convention opens. "We want Rev. Jackson campaigning" for the ticket this fall, said Susan Estrich, Dukakis' campaign manager.

"My sense is that Rev. Jackson and his staff and his supporters are very much interested in being included," she said in an interview. "We're reaching out. Our view is that the inclusion of the Rev. Jackson in the campaign is important."

"Better late than never" Jackson said of the unity talks.

In a rally in Chattanooga, he expressed interest in revamping the Democratic National Committee and hinted at replacing its chairman, Paul Kirk — normally a prerogative of the convention winner.

Estrich declined to provide specifics on the talks, and Jackson's side wasn't saying much, either. Sources said the two sides had made progress toward a unity platform even if some issues remained unsettled.

Delegates already were arriving by the planeload, greeted by heat, humidity and hospitality.

The convention hall — cramped by any reasonable standard — was nearly ready for the assemblage of delegates, alternates and journalists, although painters were still at work on the podium where Dukakis and Bentsen will stand next week to accept their prizes.

"My sense is that Rev. Jackson and his staff and his supporters are very much interested in being included."

— Susan Estrich, Dukakis aide

Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton, who will place Dukakis' name in nomination next Wednesday night, rehearsed his speech in a private room beneath the podium.

Estrich, heading up the advance troops here, said Democrats are recruiting top talent from the world of commercial advertising to work with political media experts, a practice Republicans have pioneered.

She said one of those recruited to help Dukakis is Ed McCabe, creator of the Frank Perdue slogan, "It takes a tough man to make a tender chicken."

Dukakis will use the four-day celebration of his candidacy to dramatize his economic theme by going beyond the customary convention appearances to campaign among local residents — at a factory gate and elsewhere.

"That will be the central issue of this campaign, an economic future that creates good jobs in every part of this country," Dukakis said in a pre-convention interview with the Associated Press.

Vice President George Bush was fishing in Wyoming with his pal and adviser, Treasury Secretary Jim Baker. Bush is to return to politicking on Wednesday, the night Dukakis is formally nominated. President Reagan carried the Republican attack, using his weekly radio address to charge that Democrats would take the nation "back to the failed policies of the past."

For all the Democratic sweet talk, convention officials disclosed that Jackson forces had picked up the petitions needed to challenge Texas Sen. Bentsen's nomination for vice president next Thursday night.

However, Jackson told his followers not to focus too much on the vice presidential issue.

"Don't start talking about what's going to happen Thursday. Today is Saturday," he said at the rally on his arrival in Atlanta. "We...must negotiate and debate and deliberate."

"It's not about concessions or conquests. It's about common ground," he added.

Former President Jimmy Carter toured the Omni hall and said that while he will speak Monday night, he does not expect to play a major role. He expressed the hopes of Democratic party elders everywhere when he said he expects Jackson will campaign hard for the Democratic ticket this fall. "The inevitability is that they will work out any differences," said the man who won the White House a dozen years ago. "We'll come out of here with a united party."

But that wasn't yet the case.

Jackson backed off a little in earlier hints that he would lead a challenge to Bentsen's nomination — but only a little.

"I'm not putting my name into nomination, but if it were to happen it certainly is an option that would be within the rules of the convention. It would not be breaking precedent," he said late Friday night ABC's "Nightline."

If Bush was taking a few days off, Reagan was working to offset the image Democrats want to portray.

"Is the Democratic party, is its nominee for president going to keep taxes low and government growth under control, or are they going to go back to the very policies that could wreck our economy again," said the man who twice won the White House by landslide.

Lawmen to be tried for murder next month

STATE

TYLER (AP) — A state district judge Saturday set an August trial date for three white lawmen on murder charges in the fatal beating of a black jail inmate, despite attorneys' claims the defendants face double jeopardy.

The lawmen were acquitted in Hemphill Friday on charges they violated his civil rights. But Judge Joe Tunnell said the new trial would not constitute double jeopardy for the men, denying defense attorneys' motions to drop charges against them.

Tunnell set the case for trial Aug. 8. John Hannah, special prosecutor at the Sabine County trial, testified that the previous civil rights proceedings had been unfair.

"Your honor, it's my belief, based that on all the trial that I participated in...I have never seen a trial conducted more unfairly to produce the results that were produced," Hannah testified.

Smith County District Attorney Jack Skeen of Tyler indicated after the preliminary hearing before Tunnell that suspended Hemphill Police Chief Thomas Ladner, 41, would be the first to stand trial since his name was the first on the docket.

"That's a decision to be made by the judge on how that's going to be set," he said, adding he planned to try the three lawmen separately.

"We're very pleased with Judge Tunnell ruling that there is not double jeopardy and we will be able to try all three defendants," said Skeen. "The fact they were found not guilty of civil rights violations in Sabine County will not bar their prosecution in this county."

The trial in Tyler, about 100 miles northwest of Hemphill, had been scheduled to begin Monday. Jail inmate Loyal Garner Jr. had died in a Tyler hospital two days after he was jailed.

Three defense attorneys filed motions for writs of habeas corpus to dismiss charges against their clients because, they argued, prosecuting the lawmen on different criminal allegations would constitute double jeopardy.

Defense attorney Jeff Haas contended the double jeopardy provisions in state and federal constitutions "preclude excessive prosecution when the previous prosecution has resulted in a judgment of acquittal."

Tunnell, in denying the motions, said the Legislature intended prosecution under civil rights charges would not preclude prosecution in connection with other criminal offenses.

"I recall no other statute where I've read that' than in the civil rights statutes," said Tunnell.

The Hemphill jury's verdicts Friday drew angry reactions from the East Texas town's black community.

"If there's justice for all in a free society, then it seems like there's justice for whites only in this society," said Will Smith, a preacher from the Church of Christ. "The message is to me that as black folks, we better be careful."

Ladner and Sabine County deputies James "Bo" Hyde, 35, and Bill Horton, 58, were charged in the death of Garner, a truck driver who was jailed in Hemphill Christmas night.

An inquest jury in Tyler ruled in February that Garner died of head injuries. A pathologist had testified that Garner suffered severe brain hemorrhaging after apparently being struck on the head at least twice.

Corrine Garner, the victim's wife, said she was disappointed by the Hemphill verdicts, handed down after 11 hours of deliberations by a jury that included a black woman.

Garner's mother, Sarah, said, "I'm not worried. It's not what I'm going to get, I turn it over to God. It's what God's going to get. I'm going to keep on hoping."

"It was the right result," said John Seale, Ladner's attorney. "This was the most hard-fought case I've ever been involved in."

Hannah said he would take the case to the U.S. Justice Department and urge them to file indictments of conspiracy to violate Garner's civil rights.

Garner, 34, of Florien, La., and two others were arrested on suspicion of drunken driving Christmas night just outside Hemphill. He allegedly was beaten unconscious that night in the county jail.

Judges strike out 'hardball' tactics with code of manners

DALLAS (AP) — Several North Texas judges, objecting to attorneys' behavior, devised a code of manners they hope will restore civility in their courts.

Eleven judges issued a 20-page order this week declaring the problem known as "hardball" lawyering as "so pernicious that it threatens to delay the administration of justice and to place litigation beyond the financial reach of litigants."

The judges decried lawyers' hostility and increasing willingness to insist that a judge settle minor disputes between them.

"With alarming frequency, we find that valuable judicial and attorney time is consumed in resolving unnecessary contention and sharp practices between lawyers," U.S. District Judge Sidney Fitzwater wrote for the court Thursday. "Judges and magistrates of this court are required to devote substantial attention to refereeing abusive litigation tactics that range from benign incivility to outright obstruction."

The code of conduct, an adaptation of Dallas Bar Association's "Guidelines of Professional Courtesy," is backed by sanctions ranging from public scoldings to fines.

The American Bar Association, in its March 1 issue, said the "hardball," "Rambo" or "scorched-earth tactics" are a national trend characterized by "a conviction that it is invariably in your interest to make life miserable for your opponent."

Judges across the nation have taken individual stands against such strategies of delay and intimidation. But according to Mark Harrison, chairman of the American Bar Association's committee on professionalism, the North Texas court's action may be the first in which a body of judges had collectively threatened punishment.

"If it's not unprecedented, it's certainly rare," said Thomas Mayo, a Southern Methodist University law professor who specializes in civil procedure and federal courts.

South Plains on track for possible railroad district

LUBBOCK (AP) — Regional railroad districts may be the only way to keep seven feeder lines from being abandoned or sold, according to a study released by the Texas Railroad Commission and the South Plains Association of Governments.

The lines, which serve 33 South Plains cities, are a vital part of many South Plains economies. Abandoning rail service to area cities could have a strong negative economic ripple. The South Plains rely heavily on the farm economy and most commodities are shipped by rail.

Many manufacturers also use rail service to bring raw materials in and ship out finished products. Without rail service, new industries and manufacturers may find the area undesirable.

Tim Pierce, SPAG's director of economic development, recommended Thursday area counties form two districts to operate the feeder lines that are expected to be abandoned or sold within the next few years, the Plainview Daily Herald reported.

Burlington Northern Railroad Co. owns two of the lines and the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Co. owns the other five.

"Typically in the past, counties have waited until a line is abandoned before deciding they need to do something," Pierce said. "Now is the time to do it before the lines are abandoned."

Pierce said documents drawn up by the Texas Railroad Commission for the formation of the districts will forwarded to county commissioners this week.

Area county officials, including Hale County commissioners, are expected to act on the formation of the districts within the next few weeks.

According to the study, the seven lines are valued at $13 million. However, approximately $18 million would be required for rehabilitation of the 344 miles of track.

If the districts are created, they will be the first such entities in the state.

A law passed by the Texas Legislature in 1981 allows two or more contiguous counties to form a railroad district. Under the terms of the law, a railroad district is a government entity but does not have the authority to levy or collect taxes.

Officials have the option of forming one large district or two smaller districts. Pierce is recommending one district north of Lubbock and one district south of the city. However, Santa Fe officials may force the counties to form the larger district.

Santa Fe officials have said they intend to sell their five lines as a package which cannot be split up. Since four of the lines are in the southern district and the other line is in the northern district, separate districts might not be feasible.

However, forming a single district also may be a difficult task. The law requires counties involved in a railroad district to be contiguous. If one county doesn't want to participate, another county could be prohibited from participating if it does not border a participating county. Thus, it would be easier to achieve the smaller districts.

Another reason why two districts might be preferable is the profitability of the lines. According to the study, Burlington Northern's lines, which are in the northern district, appear to be more profitable than Santa Fe's lines. The study also shows that Burlington Northern's lines appear to be better maintained, so rehabilitation expenses might be less.

Burlington Northern's Dimmitt-to-Plainview line is "quite healthy," Pierce said, and no abandonment is planned. He said the company is willing to sell the line.

Judicial candidate ruled eligible for post

AUSTIN (AP) — A candidate for state district judge has been declared a Travis County resident, ending months of questions about the location of her home and whether she is eligible for the post.

State District Harley Clark Friday said Jeanne Meurer is a resident of the county, saying, "The evidence presented to me today establishes Ms. Meurer's longtime desire and intention...to be a Travis County resident."

The verdict capped Ms. Meurer's fight, which began in March, to be certified as the Democratic candidate for the post.

WEATHER SUMMARY

From Staff and Wire Reports

Weather conditions won't change much — at least through Monday, forecasters at the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport said.

Today will be partly cloudy with less than a 20 percent chance of isolated afternoon thunderstorms. The high should be near 100. Winds will be from the south at 5-15 mph.

Tonight and Monday there will remain a less than 20 percent chance of isolated thunderstorms.

The low tonight should be in the upper 60s and the high Monday should be in the mid 90s.

The record high for Saturday was set eight years ago when it hit 101. The record low for today was set in 1936 when it dipped to 60.

STATE

Moist, unstable air brought scattered showers and thunderstorms to much of West Texas and Southeast Texas on Saturday.

Partly cloudy skies prevailed over most of the state Saturday, and winds were from the south at 10 to 20 mph.

The National Weather Service forecast partly to mostly cloudy skies through Sunday with scattered evening thunderstorms over West and Southeast Texas. In North Texas, widely scattered afternoon thunderstorms were considered likely in the southeast portion.

Otherwise, skies were expected to be mostly sunny in the day and clear at night.

High temperatures Sunday will be generally in the mid 90s to near 100 degrees, the weather service said.

Highs could reach 104 in the Big Bend Valley and in the Southwest. Lows Sunday night and Monday will range from the 60s in the mountains of West Texas to the mid 70s in the Big Bend area and the 80s on the southern coast.

Saturday afternoon temperatures were mostly in the 90s with a few readings 80s over the Panhandle and the higher elevations of the Trans-Pecos. The 3 p.m. state temperature extremes showed a low of 74 degrees at Marfa and high of 98 degrees at many locations around the state.

NATION

Thunderstorms rumbled over much of the nation today after hot, moist and unstable air from the Gulf of Mexico clashed with a cold front from Kansas to Wisconsin to whip up tornadoes, damaging winds, hail and rain.

In Nebraska, three tornadoes were reported in the Omaha and Council Bluffs areas Friday, damaging more than 100 homes and flipping railroad cars. Trees and power lines were damaged or downed in Omaha.

In Kansas, the same line of thunderstorms spawned a tornado near Wakefield; caused 55 to 60 mph at Abilene; produced damaging winds at Minneapolis, and blasted Ellsworth with 1¾-inch hail.

Thunderstorms swirling through Wisconsin and Minnesota ripped down trees and brought hail nearly 2 inches in diameter. Thunderstorms also produced damaging winds in portions of Indiana and Michigan.

In lower Michigan, Kent County was pummeled by 1½-inch hail. A building roof was destroyed and several trees were damaged in Emmet County.

In Florida, tornadoes touched down at Tarpon Springs, where there was damage to several unoccupied trailer homes. Two tornadoes were reported near Palatka.

Today's forecast called for rain and thunderstorms from northern and central New England across inland New York, through Florida and the central Gulf of Mexico coast; showers and thunderstorms scattered over northern Indiana and northern Illinois, and generally sunny weather over the rest of the nation.

High temperatures were forecast in the 70s and 80s over northern New England, inland New York, Michigan, Wisconsin and from Minnesota across the northern tier of states through Washington into northern Oregon; in the 70s and 80s along the California coast; the upper 90s and 100 degrees from southern West Virginia across southern Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Kentucky, Tennessee, northern Georgia, much of Mississippi, Kansas, central Texas, western Colorado and northern Utah; near 115 degrees through the desert Southwest, and in the 90s through the rest of the nation.

Temperatures around the nation at 3 a.m. EDT ranged from 49 degrees at Yellowstone National Park, Wyo., to 97 degrees at Glendale, Ariz.

BANKS

One disturbing trend Jones sees is that much of the loan demand in the market is not in response to new economic activity, but rather for financing purchases of producing properties and other acquisitions.

"Rather than financing drilling activity to create new assets through exploration, this represents current assets swapping hands," Jones said.

Jones attributed the $5.8 million — 5.2 percent — drop in deposits at TCB to seasonal fluctuations. "Typically people do their planning and fund raising in winter and spring and start spending it in late spring and summer."

Only the city's two smallest banks were able to buck the seasonal trend during the quarter. Midland American added $2.2 million, more than an 11.5 percent gain, during the quarter to stand at about $20.8 million.

President Grist doesn't feel the growth came at the expense of other banks, but attributed it to growth by existing clients. Compared to last year, MAB's June 30 deposit total is up 21.9 percent.

The bank showed loan growth over the past three- and 12-month periods. The portfolio total of $12.2 million is up 6.6 percent from the end of March and stands 8.1 percent ahead of last year.

Community National Bank registered a 1.5 percent gain during the quarter to stand at about $31.6 million. Compared to last year, Community's deposits are off 6.6 percent. The mid-year loan total of $10.9 million is down $880,000 from the end of March and $3.1 million — 22.4 percent — since June 30, 1987.

Community President Southerland noted that his bank's performance during the first half of the year is "as close to our budget as can be."

The largest deposit run-off during the past 12 months was at First RepublicBank, whose recapitalization plan remains up in the air. Since mid-1987, the city's largest bank has seen its deposit total drop by $124.8 million to $574.5 million. However, during the most recent quarter, the bank's deposit decline was roughly equal to the citywide average at 6 percent.

"We are pleased with the return to stability we have seen in our deposits over the past few months," said Jane Simonitsch, vice president of business development for First RepublicBank Midland.

Local operations are largely unaffected "as the FDIC (Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.) works to select a restructuring plan for First RepublicBank Corp.," she added.

Loan totals are also lower at the bank. First RepublicBank's portfolio total of $168.3 million is down 11.0 per cent from a quarter earlier and about twice that for the year. The changes on both sides of the ledger during the quarter "reflect the general trends we see in Midland of declining deposits and soft loan demand," Ms. Simonitsch said.

The city's second largest bank registered a similar pattern with a smaller deposit decline during the last quarter. First City National Bank, whose parent company completed his FDIC-assisted restructuring during the second quarter, ended June with a deposit total of $310.5 million, down less than 1 percent from March 31.

Franklin said that the bank's $156.8 million loan total is not comparable to three-month and year-previous totals because of extensive internal moves which the bank completed as a result of the restructuring.

United Bank, which reported record earnings during the first half of 1988, saw a seasonal deposit drop identical to the citywide average of 3.9 percent. Compared to the midpoint of 1987, United's deposits of $157.1 million are up 6.8 percent and its $99.2 million loan total is up 25.5 percent.

Texas American ended the second quarter on a strong note, Grimes said. Only a write-down of some real estate in early May, kept the bank from showing a profit in each of the last two months, he said.

Deposits at TAB-Midland totaled $120 million at the end of the quarter, virtually flat with the end of March and down 3.4 percent from June 1987.

Texas American's $33.6 million loan portfolio is off 4.8 percent from March and is down $9.4 million over the past 12 months.

Jones of ClayDesta, whose bank had the largest percentage deposit drop during the quarter, said "banking in 1988 is turning out better than the last couple years."

ClayDesta saw its deposits slip $7.1 million to $95.7 million during the quarter, which is 16.2 percent less than last year. Loans at the bank dropped 6.5 percent during the quarter and 14.4 percent for the year to stand at $57.1 million.

TDH

Texas has had one of the highest polio rates in the U.S. over the past few years, explained Dr. James Humphreys, executive director of the Midland County Health Department.

A majority of those high polio statistics were attributable to unimmunized Mexican nationals living here, Humphreys said.

Nationally, the number of measles cases has more than doubled over the past two years, according to a study published July 4 in U.S. News and World Report.

Mumps and whooping cough cases also had doubled over the past three years before making a decline in 1987, the study said.

Economically, immunizations don't come cheap.

Midland pediatricians charge about $50-$60 a child for the basic DPT (diptheria, pertussis or whooping cough and tuberculosis) and oral polio immunizations.

At the Midland health department, shots run $10 a child — $12.50 during the pre-school rush month of August — while in Odessa the shots run $3 a child.

The more than 300 percent price disparity between the two cities is not the local health department's fault, Humphreys said.

The TDH gives the immunization medication to county health departments for free. City Councils in Midland and Odessa set the rates, officials said.

Ten dollars per child may not sound like a lot of money to many Midlanders.

But for a single mother with four children living on about $250 a month in Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC) welfare stipends, the amount is nearly one-fifth of her income.

No one is turned away at the Midland health department should they not be able to afford the price of an immunization, Humphreys said.

Candidates in Midland are not screened for indigency either, the director said, adding, however, that screening may be a sensible next step for the department.

Costs are high because physicians fear a malpractice suit will be slapped against them should a child suffer serious side effects from the vaccines, Gururaj explained.

Some parents — especially those who have crossed the Mexican border into Texas — do not understand a child's immunization process should start as early as two months of age, McInelly said.

Instead, they wait until it is time to enter the child into a day care center or kindergarten, he added.

Then parents find their children must have DPT and polio immunizations before they can be admitted to school.

Illegals want to remain anonymous and fear deportation should they attempt to have their child vaccinated at a public facility — often the only one they can afford, McInelly added.

Fear can come into play especially when looking at the medication given to prevent pertussis or whooping cough, Gururaj said.

The chances are about one in 300,000 a child will suffer the much-hyped-but-rare-in-occurrence side effect from the whooping cough vaccine — brain damage.

That's the reason for parental fear and high pediatrician rates, Humphreys said.

Normal side effects that occur after immunization include redness around the area of the shot or a short-lived, slight fever, Humphreys said.

If a child develops a high fever or has convulsions within 48 hours of a pertussis vaccine, he should be taken immediately to the emergency room, Gururaj said.

Great Britain several years ago tried doing without a mandate on the pertussis vaccine, Humphreys said.

The number of cases — and resulting deaths — sky-rocketed and the vaccine was re-implemented into law, the director said.

The instances of that adverse effect happening to a child are rare indeed, the pediatrician said. A child is in far more danger should he not be immunized against the disease.

The overriding factor affecting an increase in the number of childhood diseases is parental complacency, McInelly maintained.

"Parents are not being responsible," the public health advisor warned. "They don't see kids walking around in polio braces. They don't hear about the deaths.

"They have been lulled into a false sense of security," McInelly said.

This parental disregard can be dangerous, he said.

More than 900,000 children worldwide die from the measles each year, McInelly said.

In addition, polio, mumps and whooping cough can kill a child if left untreated or if complications develop, he said.

A vaccine against the deadly haemophilus flu is now available and recommended for children as young as 18 months old, Gururaj said.

The flu can lead to menengitis, which kills 5 percent of the 12,000 children who contract it each year, Gururaj said.

The law mandates children receive DPT and polio immunizations by age 5.

But parents should take heed to McInelly's warning: the younger the child, the higher the risk a "common" childhood disease will signal danger.

"But it seems to me that in most of these cases, when exotic weapons were used, they were probably domestic cases where people grabbed what was handy when the emotions of the moment took over," he said in a telephone interview Friday night.

Camden noted that the report, though depicting a diversity of dastardly deeds, contains some good news: the number of homicides in Chicago dropped from 744 in 1986 to 691 in 1987.

In the nation's third-largest city, 374 people were killed last year with firearms, 175 were killed by cutting or slashing implements and 142 lives were ended with other weapons, the report found.

The most widely used firearm was the .38-caliber revolver, employed in 126 shooting deaths, the report said. Murderers used semi-automatic pistols to kill 76 people and shotguns to blast away 20 others.

Under the cutting and slashing category, one person was murdered with a bayonet, one with a saber and one with a screwdriver. Two people died at the hands of fork-wielding killers, three were stabbed to death with a carving knife and two with a boning knife.

A simple kitchen knife was the most-used weapon in this category, involved in 88 murders, followed by a pocket knife, used in 29 slayings, the report said.

In the "other" category, 10 people were beaten to death with baseball bats, one with a hammer, three with bricks, one with a rake and another with a shovel. Most beating deaths — 54 — were committed with the most accessible weapons: the hands, fists or feet, the report shows.

"Dear Walgreens:

This is a note of praise. Your pharmacist on duty Sunday morning was most helpful. I had come in to get a prescription filled for my daughter. When I got there I discovered the doctor had prescribed a medicine she was allergic to. Your pharmacist was very kind and helpful, even letting me use his phone to call the doctor. I doubt if many pharmacists would have been so nice. And I now plan on doing all of my prescription buying at Walgreens. Thank you Walgreens!"

Lost toxins weigh in at 617.7 million pounds

HOUSTON (AP) — Twenty chemical plants and oil refineries along the Texas coast estimate they lost 617.7 million pounds of potentially toxic pollutants into the environment last year, according to reports filed under a new public disclosure program.

Reports from the 20 facilities were among the first processed by officials under the new federal "right-to-know" law requiring that manufacturers estimate the release of any of 309 toxic chemicals to the air, land or water.

State officials estimate that 2,000 Texas facilities fall under the law passed by Congress in 1986 requiring the reports. July 1 was the first deadline for the reports, to be submitted annually.

"What does it mean, is the problem," said Gerald Carney, the Environmental Protection Agency's coordinator of the program for the region including Texas.

"It's scientifically inappropriate and irresponsible to take the data at this point and make health statements about it," Carney said.

Industry and government officials say large release numbers, in themselves, must be considered with other factors such as exposure and toxicity to determine the degree of risk a certain release poses.

And there is wide agreement among government, industry, environmental groups that the new information cannot in itself pinpoint threats to public health and the environment.

But some say it may be used as a starting point to launch more detailed investigations of apparent problem areas, and ultimately lead to reductions in chemical releases.

Officials at Monsanto, which estimated it lost 178.3 million pounds of chemicals in 1987, announced it would reduce that number by 90 percent by the end of 1992.

"...Our right to operate our manufacturing facilities is granted by those people in those communities," said Monsanto spokesman Mark Schannon. "Pollution, per se, regardless of the health risks, is something they don't want."

The reports indicate the majority of those estimated amounts reported under the law were of chemicals that are not considered to pose serious health threats.

The 20 plants' reports revealed, for example, that 293.6 million pounds of the total of 617.7 million pounds were releases to water, landfills and disposal wells of sodium sulfate, a chemical that EPA officials say will probably be taken off the reporting list because it is not toxic enough.

Industry and government officials say large release numbers, in themselves, must be considered with other factors such as exposure and toxicity to determine the degree of risk a certain release poses.

Another 249.1 million pounds were releases of ammonium sulfate, a chemical Texas Water Commission officials consider relatively innocuous. Neither sodium sulfate nor ammonium sulfate is considered a carcinogen or acute poison, for instance.

But, the 20 plants also reported releasing a total of 12.7 million pounds of chemicals that the EPA considers to have at least some tentative evidence of possible cancer-causing ability. Of that total, 9.3 million pounds were emitted to the air.

In all, the 20 plants estimated they had released 56.9 million pounds of the listed chemicals to the air, of which 17.2 million pounds were "fugitive" emissions — the accumulation of small leaks from equipment such as pumps, valve seals and pipe connections.

Six plants reported more than a million pounds of "fugitive" leaks: Amoco Chemical in Alvin and Dow Chemical in Freeport, 2.3 million each; Exxon's Baytown Refinery and Exxon Chemical Americas, 1 million each; Shell, 1.2 million, and Union Carbide, 4.9 million.

The Texas Air Control Board, which has several programs to regulate toxic emissions, has no firm plans about how to use the new information, but it will probably be compared to the air board's own data base, said Beverly Hartsock, executive assistant to Eli Bell, the agency's executive director.

If some emissions appear to constitute possible "hot spots," the air board can investigate and crack down with its regulatory authority if the evidence warrants, Hartsock said.

She stressed, however, that the plants' reported release figures alone — which represent yearly totals of routine and accidental releases — will not permit much new insight.

Deckhand Le Nguyen, left, and Capt. John Nguyen check the nets earlier this week in Galveston, as they prepared their boats for the opening of brown shrimp season, which occurred at 12:01 a.m. Saturday morning.

Trawlers declare open season on brown shrimp

GALVESTON (AP) — Thousands of trawlers streamed into the Gulf Saturday for the opening of the brown shrimp season, a highly competitive industry that some officials say is becoming harder to stay in.

At least 300 boats from Texas, Louisiana, Florida and Mississippi sailed from Galveston Bay and hundreds more were expected to depart from ports all along the Texas coast.

Shrimp trawling is done at night when brown shrimp move. During the day, trawling sometimes yields only one pound of shrimp for every 10 pounds of fish, but night trawling nets 10 pounds of shrimp to one pound of fish.

In addition, predatory fish are less likely to see shrimp caught in the bag of a net, said Ronnie Hornbeck of Port Bolivar, who has fished for 25 years.

Some boats carry thousands of dollars of fuel, food, extra nets and other gear, for a trawling trip that can last up to two weeks.

Shrimpers pull up to four nets through the water at 3 mph and communicate on citizens band radio, sometimes using codes to help each other find shrimp.

The biggest boats are about 100 feet long and are, in effect, little ships that can trawl right through storms that made earlier boats run for safe harbor.

But officials say the financial risks shrimpers take are growing. Some boat owners face notes of up to $2,500 a month.

Hornbeck estimated that between Sabine Pass and Brownsville last season, there were 3,000 boats pulling nets.

Rainbow Family's July 4th reunion cost $300,000

ZAVALLA (AP) — It will be months before the final effects of this year's Rainbow Family reunion are known, but officials say the back-to-nature group's "Gathering of the Tribes" in an East Texas forest cost taxpayers about $300,000.

That word comes as Nevada authorities begin preparing for next year's July 4 gathering of the neo-hippie group known for nudity and drug use.

Some Rainbows spent almost as much time in court this year as in the Angelina Forest, where nearly 4,400 people gathered. And Nevada officials say the same rules may apply in 1989.

However, Texas officials have said the 17th annual tribal gathering was more peaceful, healthy and drug-free than expected.

"We have some campgrounds that can handle maybe 100, 200 or 300 people," said B.J. Graves, supervisor of Nevada's Humbolt National Forest.

"But I don't know where we'll be able to accommodate thousands of people in one area," Graves said Friday. "We've just never had facilities for that many people."

The Rainbow Family faced three lawsuits and five hearings as the U.S. Forest Service tried to make the group apply for a special use permit and follow specific health guidelines. U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice eventually set the rules that allowed the woodsy festival.

"They'll run into the same problem here," predicted Jim Nelson, supervisor at Nevada's Toiyabe National Forest.

However, Nelson and Graves said they hope to meet with Texas authorities and Rainbow family members to avoid unnecessary problems.

Forest Service spokesman Carl Gidlund estimated the cost of overseeing the Rainbows' Texas gathering was "just under $300,000."

Dallas police suspend probe into harassing phone calls

DALLAS (AP) — Police have suspended the investigation into harassing telephone calls made to a white police supporter, including those traced to City Councilwoman Diane Ragsdale, who is black, officials say.

The investigation was suspended because of "a lack of workable leads" but could be reopened if additional information is received, said Capt. Dolan Hargrove, commander of the Department's General Assignments Division.

Police said Carrie Delano reported receiving nine telephone calls during a 24-hour period on June 12. The calls came four days after she and Ms. Ragsdale squared off in a heated debate at City Hall over the Dallas Citizens' Police Review Board.

The Dallas board has reviewed police internal affairs division investigations of shootings and some civilian complaints. The fatal shooting of white officer John Chase by a homeless, mentally ill black man in January rekindled long-running controversies on the community's relations with the minority community.

Southwestern Bell Telephone Co. officials traced the calls to telephones in the homes of Ms. Ragsdale, her sister Charlotte, and and campaign worker Ruth Benson. Police, however, were not able to determine who made the calls, Hargrove said.

Voice analysis of the tapes was not possible because the quality of recordings Ms. Delano made was not good enough to be analyzed, he said.

Soviets begin Pershing 2 inspections

WASHINGTON (AP) — Soviet inspection teams arrived at Army facilities in Texas, Oklahoma and Alabama Saturday to begin monitoring compliance with the U.S.-Soviet medium-range missile treaty calling for destruction of Pershing 2 missiles.

The visits under the Intermediate-range Nuclear Forces, or INF, treaty include verification of the number of missiles, launchers and support equipment.

Saturday's visits were so-called baseline inspections to verify the location and description of Pershing missile hardware listed by the United States. Both sides have 60 days, from July 1, to finish their baseline inspections.

After the baseline inspection, the Soviets may make random, unannounced visits during the next three years of missile destruction, and for 10 years after that to assure that Pershings are not re-introduced.

Fourteen U.S. missile sites, training facilities and industrial plants are to be open to Soviet inspectors as the Soviet Union and United States begin the three-year process of destroying all medium-range and shorter nuclear missiles.

Americans will examine 133 locations in the Soviet Union, East Germany and Czechoslovakia.

Soviet inspectors were taken Saturday to Fort Sill in southwestern Oklahoma, Redstone Arsenal near NASA's Marshall Space Flight Center at Huntsville, Ala., and the Longhorn Arm Ammunition Plant at Karnack, Texas, near the Louisiana border.

Pentagon spokesman Cmdr. Kendell Pease in Washington said the Soviets could stay 24 hours at the sites, with a possible extension of up to eight hours if both sides agree. He noted that the weather was hot in all three places, possibly around 100 degrees.

At Redstone and Fort Sill, he said, the Soviets would see Pershing motors to be destroyed. The Texas site is a future missile elimination site and there was little to see, he said.

Fort Sill uses Pershing 2 missiles for training, and has 37 of the United States' 256 Pershing 2 missiles. Five sites on the base were to be open to the Soviet inspectors — two launcher repair facilities and three training areas.

"We have a very, very short time scheduled to do a lot of things," said Fort Sill's commander, Maj. Gen. Raphael Hallada. "We've been working for it (the inspection), looking forward to it and think it will go well. I think they'll be very pleased."

The general said he hoped to have a chance to "offer them some good old-fashioned Oklahoma buffalo burgers."

Although they had been expected to tour four sites at Redstone, the Soviets told U.S. officials they only wanted to see two areas, a launcher repair facility that contained the major portion of Pershing hardware at Redstone and 51 earth-covered concrete "igloos" once used to store Pershing equipment.

Redstone Arsenal is home of the Army Missile Command, which manages the Pershing 1A and Pershing 2 nuclear missile programs.

Along for the ride at Redstone was an American officer with an instant camera to take pictures in case the inspectors wanted to record what they saw.

The first burnings of missile stages at the Texas site will begin about mid-August, said Hal Cornish, general manager of plant contractor Morton Thiokol.

But the Soviets' limited view of the Longhorn plant Saturday included only three sites where the Pershing rocket motors will be fired in place.

Curious Texans greet Soviet team

KARNACK (AP) — A 10-member Russian team arrived Saturday at a county airport where curious onlookers watched them begin an inspection of an Army ammunition plant where missiles will be destroyed under a U.S.-Soviet treaty.

But the Soviets' limited view of the Longhorn Army Ammunition Plant included only three sites where the Pershing rocket motors will be fired in place — and a lot of pine trees.

"The majority of the plant portion they are seeing is trees," said Army Capt. Winfred Towns. "They are restricted to the three sites where we plan on eliminating rocket motors."

Towns said that the INF Treaty stipulates the Russians' baseline inspection "could last from 24 hours to 32 hours; it's all up to the Soviets.

"They are just looking over the destruction sites. We have no motors here at this time," said Towns. "They are coming in to just do a baseline inspection — a physical inspection of the site where we will eliminate rocket motors in the future."

Anatoly Chentsov, leader of the Soviet team, said hello to the spectators.

"I would like to stress that our contacts with you will be sincere and our actions fruitful," Chentsov said. "I think that any misgivings and doubts will disappear when contact between the teams is made and we implement all of the normal conditions of the INF treaty."

The first burnings of missile stages, to assure compliance with the treaty on destruction of superpower medium-range nuclear missiles, will begin about mid-August, Hal Cornish, general manager of plant contractor Morton Thiokol, said earlier.

The Soviet team was accompanied in Saturday's tour by Cornish and by Al Germain, commander of the Longhorn plant.

"They (Russians) are doing the tour in a professional manner," said Towns. "No problems have been encountered so far."

The Russian men, dressed in civilian clothes, arrived on the plant at 11:21 a.m. CDT after they were taken by bus from Gregg County Airport, where they flew in on an Army C-41 transport plane.

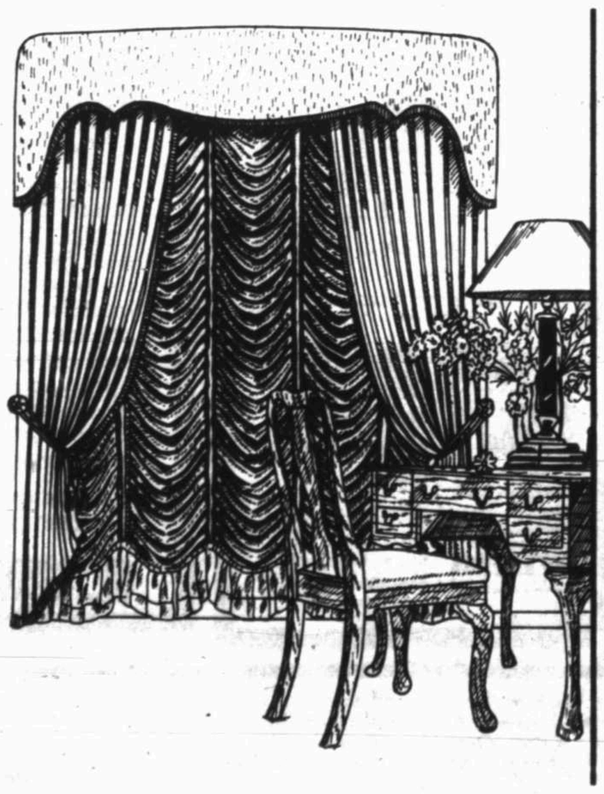

About 50 people watched the 9:20 a.m. CDT landing, and a spokesman for the Soviets said he had gotten a good response about the team's visit and any uncomfortable feelings about the inspections would probably vanish later.

Hance leads fund-raising race, reaping $687,071 in six months

AUSTIN (AP) — Kent Hance, the Republican incumbent on the Texas Railroad Commission, has put his political fund-raising efforts into high gear, raising $687,071 in the past six months.

After expenses, Hance has $490,628 in various political bank accounts for his fall campaign against Democrat Clint Hackney, a Houston state representative, the Austin American-Statesman reported in a Saturday story.

"We just kicked into high gear. I've run a race before, and we've got coordinators in every county," said Hance, who is able to build on the political power base he organized during his unsuccessful 1986 campaign for governor.

Gov. Bill Clements, who beat Hance in the GOP primary, appointed the West Texan to the Railroad Commission last year. Hance became the first Republican commissioner on the panel.

Hackney said he has raised about $200,000 and borrowed an additional $210,000. Campaign finance records show that Hackney has about $229,400 cash in the bank after expenditures.

"We had a couple of good weeks of fund-raising," he said.

In a Supreme Court race, a campaign finance report filed Friday with the secretary of state showed that a political action committee funded by doctors gave $31,500 in cash and in-kind services to Justice Raul Gonzalez.

Gonzalez, a Democrat, got $27,500 from TexPAC in March, two months before he dissented in a decision involving medical malpractice awards. The court's 7-2 decision, which said the cap on malpractice awards enacted by the Legislature in 1977 was unconstitutional, drew angry comments from the Texas Medical Association.

Later the committee also paid $4,000 for a political poll for Gonzalez. Gonzalez was in Reno, Nev., and could not be contacted Saturday.

Gonzalez raised $148,886 from Feb. 29 through June 30. A report was not at the secretary of state's office Friday for his Republican opponent, Justice Charles Ben Howell of the 5th Court of Appeals in Dallas.

Campaign reports were due Friday, but they are considered to be on time if they are postmarked by 5 p.m. that day.

Joe Jamail, the Houston lawyer who represented Pennzoil Co. when it won an $11.1 billion judgment against Texaco Inc., contributed $5,000 each to two incumbent justices who sat on the court when it upheld the judgment. The two Democratic justices, Ted Z. Robertson and William Kilgarlin, also each reported in January receiving $25,000 from Jamail.

Robertson is running for the court's top job against Chief Justice Tom Phillips, a Republican.

One justice not seeking election this year — C. L. Ray — reported he had raised $72,550 and spent $47,840 on legal fees to the law firm that represented him during disciplinary proceedings that ultimately led to a public reprimand by the Texas Commission on Judicial Conduct, the Dallas Times Herald reported Saturday.

WASHINGTON (AP) — With his feet propped on his desk, sharing the space with a black leather-bound Bible, Republican Rep. Beau Boulter leans back in his chair and talks about his David vs. Goliath race against Sen. Lloyd Bentsen.

Boulter likes to say that the bigger they come, the harder they fall. He recites again his litany of reasons for running — Bentsen is a friend of the men in the nation's boardrooms, while he, an Amarillo attorney and two-term congressman, has tasted of hard work, determination, and more hard work in the rough and rugged world of West Texas.

"He's tough, he's fair and he's not for sale," says the narrator of a campaign video.

His opponents, though, paint another picture — of a man with an ego the size of the Texas Panhandle he represents; as someone who was stalled in Congress with no hope of ascending into the ranks of the Republican leadership.

"He couldn't draw enough water to float in a bathtub," says one congressman.

Another, Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez, D-Texas, says he wouldn't recognize Boulter if he walked into a room.

Even Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, says the congressman's biggest advantage "is if he can't do it, he doesn't know it."

"He's got an enormous ego," says Bob Slagle, Democratic Party chairman in Texas. "He's more show than go" and is "real good at posturing and getting his name in the newspaper."

While Boulter may look flashy on TV, Slagle says the 13th District representative doesn't study the issues and has not earned the respect of his colleagues or the admiration of his constituents.

Two Republicans and former supporters in his district have called for Boulter's resignation unless he improves a miserable voting record and gets back to work in Washington. Amarillo's best-known citizen — oilman T. Boone Pickens — is contributing to Bentsen's campaign, according to election reports filed with the Federal Election Commission.

Boulter bristles at Pickens' loyalties, and says, "Boone doesn't support me now and it ain't a big surprise."

In El Paso recently, Pickens said: "First, I'm a Texan; second, I'm a Republican. In this case, I have to be for Lloyd Bentsen."

Jim Simms, an Amarillo businessman who supported Boulter "in every race he's ever run," now is a co-chairman of Panhandle Republicans and Independents for Bentsen and was one of the men who circulated the call for Boulter's resignation unless he improves his voting record.

Boulter counters complaints about his attendance in Congress by saying he needs to be in Texas to get out his message, as he takes his Boulter Breakfast Club — a dig at Bentsen's quickly disbanded $10,000-a-person Chairman's Council — to the corners of the Lone Star State.

GOP Rep. Beau Boulter

"Physically, emotionally, mentally, spiritually, I have to be out there with the people, eyeball-to-eyeball, and that's why I'm in Texas so much," he said.

According to figures released by Bentsen's office and compiled by LEGI-SLATE, a non-partisan political service, Boulter had cast votes 23.5 percent of the time between the first of the year and July 7. Bentsen had cast 94.5 percent of votes during the same period.

Bentsen must walk 'tightrope' with campaign funds, Tower says

WASHINGTON (AP) — Republican John Tower, experienced at running against a Democrat nominated simultaneously for the Senate and the vice presidency, says Lloyd Bentsen's Texas campaign threatens to become "a bottomless pit people throw money in" — and a war chest for the Democrats' national ticket.

"I think it's going to really be a tightrope for him (Bentsen) to walk," says Tower, a former senator from Texas. "It's going to be pretty tricky business."

Tower, now an adviser to all-but-certain Republican presidential nominee George Bush, says his camp has put lawyers to work on sifting through campaign finance regulations.

They will be quick to pounce on any violations of federal election law that Bentsen makes as he mounts simultaneous campaigns for vice president and re-election to the Senate, Tower said in an interview Friday.

Republicans worry that Bentsen's Senate campaign could become "a bottomless pit people throw money in and use for the presidential campaign," he said.

Before being selected by Michael Dukakis as his running mate, Bentsen had raised more than $5 million for his re-election bid — more than any other senator.

He got more money from political action committees than any Senate candidate seeking election this year — $1.46 million. By contrast, Dukakis refuses to accept PAC funds.

Tower had firsthand experience with a Texas law that allows a candidate to campaign simultaneously for both offices — as Bentsen will do this fall.

Tower ran against Lyndon B. Johnson for the Senate in 1960. Johnson was also running as the Democratic nominee for vice president with John F. Kennedy.

Johnson won both races and gave up his Senate seat for the vice presidency. A special election was called and Tower won.

Although Johnson juggled both campaigns in 1960, Tower says Bentsen faces some knotty problems because of stricter federal election spending laws.

Says one Republican operative: "It's a mine field he has to walk through...Anytime someone plows new ground you're bound to dig up a bone."

Counters Bentsen: "They tell me it's been done before in Texas."

Jim Boynton, assistant executive director of the Texas Democratic Party, said Bentsen is "one of the most organized candidates you'll ever run across" and will now just "put another step of organization in place."

He said Republican vigilance of Bentsen's finances is prompted because they "have to have some way to challenge the senator."

Under Texas law, if Bentsen were to abandon his Senate race, the Democrats could not name a replacement candidate and the seat automatically would fall into Republican hands.

LEAD HEALTH WARNING

The United States Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) has adopted requirements that all public water systems notify their customers about lead exposure. This notification is intended to educate and inform consumers on this issue in light of the fact that your drinking water may be a potential source of lead exposure. This is being done even though the City of Midland's water system is not in violation of the current standard. There are also other potential sources of lead contamination in the environment.

The following specific language is required by EPA in this notice:

The United States Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) sets drinking water standards and has determined that lead is a health concern at certain levels of exposure. There is currently a standard of 0.050 parts per million (ppm). Based on new health information, EPA is likely to lower this standard significantly.

Part of the purpose of this notice is to inform you of the potential adverse health effects of lead. This is being done even though your water may not be in violation of the current standard.

EPA and others are concerned about lead in drinking water. Too much lead in the human body can cause serious damage to the brain, kidneys, nervous system, and red blood cells. The greatest risk, even with short-term exposure, is to young children and pregnant women.

Lead levels in your drinking water are likely to be highest:

1. if your home or water system has lead pipes, or
2. if your home has copper pipes with lead solder, and
   -if the home is less than five years old, or
   -if you have soft or acidic water, or
   -if water sits in the pipes for several hours

Ways to avoid potential lead exposure are to "flush" faucets before use and to use cold water for drinking and cooking. You may wish to have hour home tap water tested for lead content by a competent laboratory. You may also wish to check to see if lead pipes, solder, or flux were used in your home plumbing.

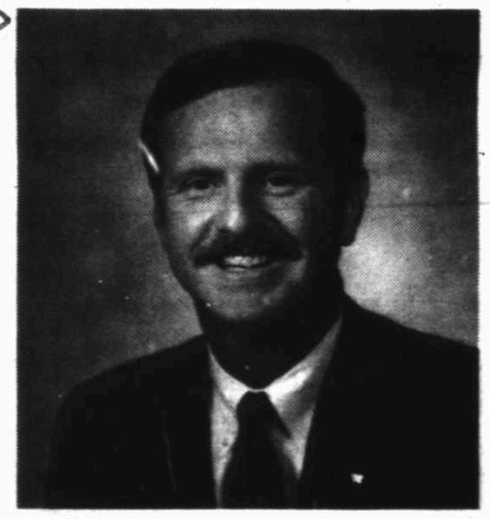

The Texas Department of Health has determined that the water provided by the City of Midland through its public water system does not contain sufficient lead content to violate EPA standards and thus poses no discernible health hazard. Furthermore, it is currently believed that there is no lead content in any of the City of Midland's public water supply system facilities. Therefore, the City of Midland believes that no immediate action is necessary to reduce lead content in the public water system of the City. However, the Texas Department of Health will continue periodic testing to determine the continued lead free condition of the City of Midland's public water supply.

The lead free status of the public water system of the City of Midland does not mean that lead is not or could not be present in your private home or business water distribution system. The City of Midland has recently enacted a ban on lead content plumbing pipe, solders, and fluxes. However, buildings constructed prior to the ban may well contain lead in their plumbing systems, and violations of the Code may occur in the future. The risk of lead contamination through the private water distribution systems is reduced, however, by the fact that the water distributed through the City of Midland's public water system is a hard, noncorrosive water. That is, since the water from the public system already contains a number of minerals, it is less likely to leach lead from the plumbing systems of private buildings.

If you would like more information concerning the potential hazards of lead contamination in your drinking water, you may contact the below listed entities or persons:

John Lowe, Director of Utilities, City of Midlnd, P. O. Box 1152, Midland, TX. 79702, (915) 683-4281, Extension 261.

"Strength, stability, service and trust . . . what people want in a bank."

Herb Cartwright, Senior Vice President and Trust Officer, Texas Commerce Bank – Midland

Does it make a difference which bank manages your personal or corporate trust account? You bet!

Many Midland banks are feeling the pinch of the current statewide economic decline. Texas Commerce, on the other hand, has been moving from strength to strength.

People today expect a lot from a bank. They don't want to take chances, especially with trust assets. They want the confidence of knowing their bank is ready to provide the kind of personal service and investments designed to fit their individual needs. They want bankers who understand their needs, who can respond quickly to requests.

It all comes down to four key words. Strength, stability, service and trust. That's what people want. And that's what they get when they move to Texas Commerce. The strength and stability of one of the oldest banking organizations in Texas. The service of a team of bankers who really care. And Trust Professionals dedicated to the conservation of wealth and service tailored to their clients' needs.

I think Texas Commerce represents something important for Midland people. It's a reflection of the city's attitude. One that says no matter how tough times get, Midland will succeed. It's all about hard work and a commitment to the community and its future. That attitude is paying off because Texans are moving to Texas Commerce every day.

If you're looking for more in a bank or trust relationship, please call me at Texas Commerce today. Phone 687-0691.

'Rainbow Express' driving force behind Jackson campaign

By MIKE GLOVER

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Like Jesse Jackson himself, the "Rainbow Express" caravan changed often on the long trip to Atlanta, running cool and then hot, long stretches of highway punctuated by fiery speeches in steaming churches.

As Michael Dukakis and top Democratic officials listened for words of confrontation or conciliation from Jackson, he rolled southward for three days from Chicago.

In a way, the bus trip was a throwback to the days of candidates barnstorming slowly across the country instead of zipping from region to region in jet airplanes. But there was also the flavor of 1988, with more than 100 reporters transmitting stories from the caravan — stories that showed up within hours or even minutes in newspapers or on television.

Friday night, from his Nashville stop, Jackson appeared live on ABC-TV's "Nightline."

The caravan itself was a wild-card assortment of buses, station wagons and bristling security vehicles.

At the head sat Jackson, mainly apart from the hustle and bustle. He traveled with advisers and his children, allowing reporters and photographers to join him for 10 minutes or so at a time, occasionally waving at photographers who pulled alongside in cars.

His was the best-appointed bus, equipped with a kitchen, television, microwave oven and staff area.

None of the buses was jammed, and on one leg of the trip two reporters rattled around one of the buses as the only passengers. Clearly, length of the caravan — photographed from news helicopters each time it pulled from a city — was important.

The caravan left few ripples as it wound its way to Atlanta. Construction workers stared curiously and occasionally waved at the buses festooned with banners and posters. As they entered each city, small knots of bystanders gawked, but the real crowds waited in the churches where Jackson held all of his public events.

It wasn't until Saturday that campaign officials moved to expand the caravan, hoping to assemble a big motorcade to give Jackson a horn-honking, crowd-pleasing entry into the convention's host city.

When announced, the caravan had been billed as a sort of rolling juggernaut, picking up steam as it headed toward the national nominating convention and capped with a triumphant arrival in Atlanta with thousands of supporters picked up along the way.

All that changed the first night.

"We're not picking up passengers," Jackson said. "Because of travel time, we're not encouraging additional passengers.

"This is not Atlanta for show business, this is Atlanta for serious business," said Jackson, as he launched one of the great rolling media expresses.

Instead, Jackson spent his time in a complex and subtle long-distance link with certain nominee Dukakis, a kind of dance that played itself out as the buses rolled from the inner-city ghetto of Chicago to the rolling hills of Tennessee.

For most of the trip, there were about 120 reporters, 20 or 30 assorted backers and a dozen or so delegates — including Tom Moynahan, an Indianapolis real estate agent who also happens to be a delegate for Dukakis.

"Let me make my loyalties clear up front," he said, adding he wanted to express appreciation for Jackson registering new Democratic voters, an important thing for someone running for local office like Moynahan.

Moynahan gradually blended into the rolling city. He doggedly stuck with the group, fighting his way through mobs of reporters to register at hotels and make his way into churches to hear Jackson speak.

His station wagon tailed the convoy and he was a required interview for reporters searching for a new angle.

The long, deliberate procession kept the focus squarely on Jackson, just as Dukakis might have been expected to be moving to the center of the spotlight.

At stops along the way, Jackson ran sort of an update service for reporters on his latest contacts with Democratic leaders.

But there were also the stops at inner-city churches in several cities, giving Jackson a chance to shine in his fiery preacher's role before excited audiences. At such times, the caravan turned from its insular self.

In Nashville, thousands gathered to hear Jackson in a tiny Baptist church that seated only a couple of hundred.

As crowds pressed against the door and reporters fought their way through, fire officials abruptly locked the doors, insisting legal capacity had long since been exceeded.

Inside the church, a wall of television cameras separated parishioners from the pulpit, and one of the bigger cheers of the evening came when church officials announced that television camera operators couldn't stand on pews and had to lower their cameras.

The crowd's loyalties were clear when Tennessee Sen. Albert Gore Jr. was introduced to scattered boos, though he later drew cheers with talk of defeating "Reagan, Reaganism and Bush."

When he promised to campaign throughout the fall with Jackson for the ticket of Dukakis and Texas Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, the man who got the No. 2 slot Jackson sought, there was silence.

When Jackson said "I want to win and I want you in," the house came down.

Dukakis to attack 'borrow, spend' prosperity

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG
AP Political Writer

BOSTON (AP) — Michael Dukakis intends to use the Democratic nominating convention to launch his presidential campaign with a call to end the "borrow and spend" prosperity of the Reagan years that he says masks great uneasiness across America about the future.

After flying to the convention in Atlanta today with his designated running mate, Texas Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, Dukakis will use the four-day celebration of his candidacy to dramatize his economic theme by going beyond the customary convention appearances to campaign among local residents — at a factory gate and elsewhere.

"That will be the central issue of this campaign, an economic future that creates good jobs in every part of this country," Dukakis said in a pre-convention interview in the governor's office of the Massachusetts Statehouse.

After the convention, Dukakis and Bentsen will leave Atlanta together for what campaign manager Susan Estrich said would be a coast-to-coast campaign trip with a first stop in Texas.

That inaugural trip by the new Democratic ticket will include "a good many rallies, built on the excitement which we think is going to come out of the convention."

Dukakis was spending the hours before his departure trying to deal with a state budget deficit that offered Republicans an opportunity to challenge his image as a tough manager who has balanced state budgets while holding the line on taxes.

The picture of the nation's economy offered by Dukakis will contrast sharply with the view put forth by Vice President George Bush, his certain Republican opponent.

Republicans cite an unemployment rate that is half what it was in December 1982 and inflation and interest figures far below what they were in the final year of the presidency of Democrat Jimmy Carter.

"We can build on the stable, record-setting economic pace of the Reagan-Bush years, we can continue to pursue peace through strength, or we can head down a road already traveled," said Senate Republican leader Bob Dole of Kansas after leading a GOP delegation to the Democrats' convention city.

Despite the improving economic statistics, Republican pollster Richard Wirthlin has said that, since December 1986, his monthly surveys have found a majority of Americans saying the country was headed in the wrong direction.

"There is great uncertainty out there," Dukakis said. "Why the great uncertainty?

"The American people know you can't build a strong economic future on a credit card. You can't borrow and spend, borrow and spend, and borrow and spend your way to prosperity."

As for the improving economic statistics, Dukakis said, "Those numbers, averages mask all kinds of problems."

Bentsen refers to a "Swiss Cheese economy" in which the general prosperity is pocked by bad times.

"Thirty-two percent unemployment in Starr County, Texas," was an example cited by Dukakis.

He also blamed Reagan administration antitrust policy for tolerating "takeover artists circling all sorts of healthy companies all over this country. As soon as they make an acquisition, 600 or 700 people are out in the street, or more...Over a trillion dollars worth of debt which our kids and grandkids are going to have to pay is no way to run a railroad."

Estrich described the convention as "a time when the opportunities to communicate through the media are enormous, so we'll be spending plenty of time trying to take advantage of those opportunities because in Mike Dukakis we have a candidate who has just burst onto the national scene."

For the first time, say Dukakis aides, the Democrats are recruiting top talent from the world of commercial advertising to work with political media experts — a practice common in GOP campaigns for years.

One of the people recruited to help Dukakis is Ed McCabe who was responsible for the Frank Perdue slogan, "It takes a tough man to make a tender chicken."

Most Democratic delegates white, middle-class

ATLANTA (AP) — Fewer than a dozen politicians are among the delegates to the 1988 Democratic National Convention, the party's biggest political event.

At least that's how many own up to being politicians.

An Associated Pess survey of more than 3,200 of the 4,161 delegates to the convention found that while nearly 1,000 of them hold elected offices — including hundreds of members of Congress and dozens of governors and mayors — only a handful list their occupation as "politician."

To be exact, there are nine of them.

They join nearly 300 lawyers, 100 retired people, an actor, a cook and a casket manufacturer this week as they cram into the cramped auditorium of the Omni to nominate Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis for president.

Of the delegates — who hail from all 50 states, the District of Columbia, and five U.S. territories — the typical convention-goer is white, middle-aged and college-educated. Almost two-thirds of them have not been delegates before, the AP survey found.

Their average age is 47, some 67 percent went to college and 69 percent are white. Twenty-one percent are black and almost 5 percent are Hispanic.

Under Democratic Party rules, the delegate seats are divided equally among men and women, and while there are no firm quotas, state parties were encouraged to recruit enough minorities so the racial mix of the delegation roughly parallels that of the state's Democratic voters.

Still, there was some irritation at the party's affirmative action program.

"We went from unfair to more unfair," said Morton Povman, a Dukakis delegate from New York. "Under the rules, a person can get the most votes and be elected by the people and yet not be selected as a delegate, not because Dukakis doesn't want you, but because if you're a white Catholic and they have enough white Catholics, they'll pick a black whatever."

A sampling of those surveyed by the AP found that about a third of them are worried about the federal budget deficit, unemployment, foreign trade or the economy in general.

Humorist makes politicians laugh — at themselves

ATLANTA (AP) — Political humorist Mark Russell says he's puzzled: "They call Dukakis a technocrat, yet he couldn't figure out how to pick up the phone and call Jesse."

"It will forever be known as the snub heard round the world — soon to be seen as a telephone commercial on television," Russell said, launching into a deep announcer's voice: "If the governor had used MCI, there would be racial harmony in America today."

But not to worry, he said. The dispute over the expected Democratic nominee's running mate will be settled peaceably.

"You know by Thursday, they'll all be up there together, Michael Dukakis and both of his vice presidents, hand in hand, making constitutional history," Russell told an audience of about 4,000 at a charity fund-raiser Friday night.

"This was going to be the brokered convention. This was the one where there was going to be some suspense. Now we're grateful for this little bit of drama," he said, referring to the uproar following Dukakis' failure to notify Jesse Jackson before word got out that Sen. Lloyd Bentsen had been picked for the vice presidential slot.

Russell, down from Washington for a performance billed as the convention kickoff, said he had no credentials to get near the Omni, where the convention begins on Monday. "They won't let me near there," he said.

But, he said, "I'll be addressing the convention. Not the big Democratic Convention. A smaller convention — Blacks for Bentsen — about eight people.

"Blacks for Bentsen want to put things in the platform like aid to Contras with dependent children and a raise in the minimum wage for the Texaco board of directors."

The choice of Bentsen is the "new Massachusetts miracle because Michael Dukakis was able to come up with a running mate who generates less electricity than he does," Russell said.

> "...But you know what's up for Dukakis: He has to prove that Martin Luther King's dream was that some day a Caucasian Texas millionaire will be vice president."
>
> — Humorist Mark Russell

"How is Dukakis going to settle everybody down? I know it's controversial and we wanted to be nice. But you know what's up for Dukakis: He has to prove that Martin Luther King's dream was that some day a Caucasian Texas millionaire will be vice president."

Russell said the senator was best known for what the humorist called "Eggs McBentsen."

"That was where the senator charged lobbyists $10,000 to have breakfast with him and they got to keep the coffee cup," he said.

Russell polled the audience at the fund-raiser for the Fox Theater and Georgia Public Television and expressed surprise when Vice President George Bush, the expected Republican presidential nominee, got much bigger applause than Dukakis or Jackson.

"Here we are in Georgia, where the Republicans are Republicans and so are the Democrats," he joked.

Russell lamented a lack of charisma in the presidential race.

"So we're down to Bush vs. Dukakis," he said. "It has all the texture of a mayonnaise sandwich on white bread.

"Dukakis is a bit lacking in poetry, romance," he said. "The one bland Greek in the world and he's running for president — Zorba the clerk."

Jackson, Dukakis aides pave way for meeting

ATLANTA (AP) — Top aides to Democratic nominee-in-waiting Michael Dukakis and rival Jesse Jackson stepped up the negotiating pace Saturday to try to ease the strains that threaten to disrupt the party's national convention.

A face-to-face meeting of the candidates seemed likely today, the day before the convention opens.

Dukakis campaign chairman Paul Brountas and Jackson convention manager Ron Brown were to kick off the latest round of meetings with a private afternoon talk as Jackson pulled into town to end a three-day bus trip.

"Communication is the first way to get things back on track," Brown said before the meeting, adding "There have been intensive communications in the last 24 or 36 hours."

The negotiations were complicated by Jackson's continuing hints that his name might be put into nomination for vice president — as a protest to Dukakis' choice of Texas Sen. Lloyd Bentsen and the way the Dukakis campaign handled the selection and announcement.

Jackson staffers picked up the petition form to qualify him for the Thursday night roll call on vice president — as well petitions to make certain he is on the Wednesday roll call for the presidential nomination he has sought for the past two years.

The candidate himself sent contradictory signals on the possibility of continuing his fight with Dukakis beyond Wednesday night of the convention.

"I'm not putting my name into nomination, but if it were to happen it certainly is an option that would be within the rules of the convention. It would not be breaking precedent," Jackson said on ABC News' "Nightline." "We should be expected to use every rule that we can to advance our cause and expand our Democratic Party."

Jackson and Dukakis agreed in a telephone conversation Friday that their top aides would meet.

Brown said his meeting with Brountas would probably lead to a small group of top aides from each camp meeting late Saturday night.

Dukakis doesn't arrive in Atlanta until this afternoon, and aides said a meeting that night could be crucial.

"The hope is the two candidates get together tomorrow," Brown said.

Over and over again, Jackson has talked of a partnership with Dukakis for the fall and beyond, although what such a partnership would be has not been made clear.

"There has been no discussion of the role I would play" in the fall campaign, Jackson said on his bus as he traveled from Nashville, Tenn., toward the convention on Saturday, adding he wants jobs for his supporters.

"I would never seek a job or a title or a position or a salary. There are those who do need jobs and who can do them well...That would not be an effective role for me to play, but I want to play a role," he said.

Brown said the talks will include "a complete definition and understanding of what that partnership means in specific terms."

He denied published reports that Jackson had asked the Dukakis campaign to provide a plane and other support for his efforts to register new voters.

"We're talking about a role of significance in the campaign. If folks expect you to go out and campaign 20 hours a day seven days a week, obviously you need the wherewithal to accomplish that and the staffing to accomplish that, but a story saying Jesse wants a plane is just silly," Brown said.

Delegates call Dukakis dull but dependable

ATLANTA (AP) — Democrats on the verge of nominating Michael Dukakis for president see themselves picking a dependable but dull fellow who has done well at his current job but lacks some experience he would need for the new one.

A handful of them suggest that the 5-foot-8-inch governor of Massachusetts could use lifts in his shoes.

Results of an Associated Press survey of delegates to the Democratic National Convention found that while many give Dukakis credit for his performance as governor, a roughly equal number are concerned about his lack of experience in national and international affairs.

"I suspect they (the Republicans) will make much of foreign policy issues, but I've never seen an election decided by foreign policy issues," said William Winpisinger, a delegate from Maryland and president of the Machinists union.

"What happens at home is what counts, and he's got a good record on that," Winpisinger said.

More than 1,900 delegates — about 46 percent of the 4,161 total — responded to the opinion survey and 583 gave Dukakis high marks for his record and experience as governor, his skills as a manager and his ability to deal with economic issues.

However, 553 said he is weak in the areas of foreign policy, national issues and in dealing with Congress.

One hundred cited Dukakis for his honesty.

"And I think that's going to be a big issue in this campaign...the Reagan administration sleaze factor," said Montana state Rep. Dan Harrington, a Dukakis delegate. "Dukakis has shown he's above all that."

Asked to name Dukakis' strength, Elana Stampfer, an Oregon delegate, replied: "his managerial skills. Everyone thinks that's boring, but I think it's exciting to have someone who will actually be able to run government well."

Of those responding to the survey, 288 said he was dull or described his personality as cold, aloof, humorless or arrogant.

"How can I say this politely? The one weakness is he is boring," said Gloria Johnson, a Jackson delegate from Maryland.

Gas leak could delay shuttle for 2 months

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Technicians located what they believe is the source of a faint gas leak in a space shuttle fuel tank Saturday, and said repairs may delay the first post-Challenger flight up to two months.

"They're not giving up fixing it on the pad; but they don't know what's caused the leak yet, and I don't think that's encouraging," said Chuck Hollinshead, director of public affairs at the Kennedy Space Center.

Hollinshead said that after a two-day search, workers using sophisticated equipment believed they pinpointed the source of the leak at a reaction control system (RCS) oxidizer tank near the top of a metal pod that contains an engine used to help maneuver the shuttle in orbit.

"They will work tonight and tomorrow to find the exact spot and to be sure there isn't more than one leak," he said. He said shuttle managers would meet today to consider a course of action.

The suspect RCS oxidizer tank is in a difficult-to-reach location, Hollinshead said. If Discovery has to be removed from the launch pad and taken to a processing facility for repairs, Hollinshead said, September's planned launching with a five-man crew could be delayed as much as two months.

The RCS is a series of small jet thrusters that astronauts use to steer the shuttle in space.

Hollinshead said engineers were assessing the possibility of removing the engine pod on the launch pad, a never-attempted process considered extremely difficult.

Launch pad personnel detected a faint odor of nitrogen tetroxide gas late Thursday, just days after it was pumped into the engine's tanks.

The gas, which is toxic in heavy concentrations, serves as an oxidizer to ignite the steering engine's fuel, monomethyl hydrazine, in oxygen-poor space.

NASA spokeswoman Lisa Malone said the leaked gas measurement was only 3 to 4 parts per million, considered very small. She said the impact on the schedule "will depend on where the leak is and how severe it is."

If Discovery were taken off the pad, it would be taken to a building where it would be disconnected from its solid fuel booster rockets and external fuel tank.

Then the spaceship would be towed to a facility where there is equipment to remove the engine pod, which then would be taken to another building for repair.

It was not certain what effect the leak would have on a critical 20-second test-firing of Discovery's three main engines on the launch pad.

Guard seals off half of Iowa town

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Iowa (AP) — National Guardsmen sealed off half the city to protect against looting Saturday as crews cleared trees and other debris strewn here and in Omaha, Neb., by tornadoes that wiped out entire blocks.

At least 10,000 homes had some damage from the twisters that slammed into the two Missouri River cities Friday, a county official estimated. From 100 to 130 houses were destroyed or suffered major structural damage, authorities said.

Insurance adjusters counted 160 homes as severely damaged and said the losses probably would reach $20 million to $25 million, the Omaha World-Herald reported.

Rep. Jim Lightfoot, R-Iowa, toured the area Saturday and Gov. Terry Branstad planned to do the same today. Lightfoot said he expected the city to be declared a disaster area, making federal relief available from the Small Business Administration.

At least 94 people suffered injuries, mostly minor, when wind gusting to 92 mph downed power lines, uprooted trees and ripped roofs off houses in a two-mile stretch along Interstate 29 near the river.

"It's a major disaster. There are complete blocks gone," said Pottawattamie County Supervisor Larry Allen, who replaced the courthouse roof at 1 a.m. Saturday.

"It's an absolute miracle no one is dead," Council Bluffs City Councilman Stanley Grote said.

Omaha Public Power District and Iowa Power and Light Co. said an estimated 30,000 customers were without power Saturday night in the two cities, down from 100,000 early Saturday.

A little thing like the roof coming off from a tornado doesn't keep these tavern patrons from enjoying their July evening. Don Moreland, left, and Don Funkhauser have a beer at the newly ventilated "Close Encounters" lounge in this western Iowa city.

Scattered looting was reported. It was not immediately known if any arrests were made.

Trees up to 48 inches in diameter snapped in Council Bluffs and others as tall as 100 feet were uprooted at an Omaha golf course. The twisters also started fires and overturned rail cars in a two-mile stretch in Council Bluffs.

"Vietnam. That's about it," Guardsman Carl Jennings said in describing the damage. "There's a lot of splintered wood, buildings destroyed, panic."

A tornado that hit Omaha in 1975 killed three people and wiped out homes and businesses over a 2,000-block area.

Police, Allen and Council Bluffs Mayor Tom Hanafan estimated Saturday an area 20 blocks by 35 blocks was hit the hardest by the storm.

Allen said the city has 22,000 to 23,000 homes and "more than half of the houses in town have damage that will cause them to file insurance claims, whether it's broken windows, trees on roofs or siding damaged."

Lt. Col. Paul Wieck, an Iowa National Guard commander at the scene, confirmed Allen's estimate, adding, "The problem you had here was the storm went through a fairly established part of town with a large number of mature trees. Those trees really took the brunt of the storm. When you have trees toppling over, you are going to have a fair amount of minor damage."

More than 170 uniformed officers, including 60 Iowa Guardsmen, helped protect against looting and reroute traffic. More than 50 Red Cross volunteers worked in shifts to distribute free food and drinks through the night.

Guardsmen sealed off a 700-block area of Council Bluffs, issuing permits to residents who lived and to anyone else with reason to be there, but otherwise allowing no one in. Some looting was reported early Saturday.

"Most of it has been oddball stuff. One guy had a cigarette machine in the back of his pickup. The worst problem has been the tourists," said Guardsman Les Hayes. Business owners guarded their closed storefronts.

Bulldozers cleared trees from streets, and cranes loaned by the Union Pacific Railroad were used to straighten metal supports on toppled signs and billboards.

FBI spied on Wayne Morse because of opposition to war, newspaper says

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — The late Sen. Wayne Morse and his supporters were the targets of FBI spying because of his opposition to the Vietnam War, a newspaper reported in today's editions.

The Sunday Oregonian reported that President Lyndon Johnson ordered the FBI to seek information that could be used to embarrass Morse's supporters in Oregon and around the country.

In August 1964, the Oregon Democrat and Sen. Ernest Gruening, D-Alaska, were the only two senators to vote against the Gulf of Tonkin Resolution, which became the basis of U.S. action in Vietnam.

The Sunday Oregonian reported that soon after the Gulf of Tonkin vote, an FBI domestic intelligence specialist notified FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover of the identities of 196 people, including 38 from Oregon, who wrote letters to Morse supporting his vote.

The newspaper said its report was based on documents recently obtained by free-lance writer Mark Kirchmeier of Washington, D.C., who requested FBI records under the Freedom of Information Act.

The newspaper said the FBI also investigated Wes Michaelson, a longtime aide to Sen. Mark Hatfield, R-Ore., through the administrations of Presidents Nixon and Ford. The records show the FBI found "no derogatory information" on Michaelson, who helped Hatfield frame his anti-war policy, .

Morse, who died in 1973, represented Oregon in the Senate from 1944 through 1968. He was widely regarded as a political maverick who jealously guarded his independence. Elected as a Republican, Morse became an independent in 1952 before he registered as a Democrat in 1955.

In 1966, Morse had letters from 93 people who opposed the war inserted in the Congressional Record. The FBI files indicate that Johnson responded by issuing an order to have the FBI "seek derogatory information" on the 93 people.

In 1967, after Morse and seven other senators asked Johnson to halt U.S. bombing of North Vietnam, the FBI sent a report to C.D. "Deke" DeLoach, then the director of the FBI's investigative section, discussing "possible communist and subversive influences" on Morse and the other senators.

Jake Jacobsen, a lawyer for President Johnson, defended the FBI's actions in an interview with Kirchmeier.

"It didn't have much to do with Senator Morse, as much as with the people who wrote him," said Jacobsen, who is an oil executive in Austin, Texas.

Indiana brewery soon may be back in the suds

EVANSVILLE, Ind. (AP) — One of the state's two remaining breweries could be back in business next month, the president of a company seeking to buy the plant said Friday.

John C. Brzezinski, president of Evansville Brewing Co., said his local investor group plans to begin shipping beer from the plant by Labor Day. Production would begin 21 to 30 days before that, Brzezinski said.

A group of local investors seeking to buy the former Sterling Brewery from G. Heileman Brewing Co. of La-Crosse, Wis., will receive a $125,000 low-interest loan through the Indiana Department of Commerce, Lt. Gov. John M. Mutz said.

The money, to be loaned at roughly half the prime interest rate, will be supplemented by a $75,000 city loan. Mutz said the plant will be bought for about $1.25 million.

Between 60 and 70 people will work at the brewery producing several brands including Sterling, Falls City, Drewry's and Cooks. Brzezinski declined to discuss financing arrangements for the sale. The state's only remaining brewery is in Fort Wayne.

Quilt sews up world title

BISMARCK, N.D. (AP) — North Dakota's centennial quilt has sewn up the title as the world's largest, now that almost 2,000 square feet has been added to the already huge blanket, says the woman who supervised its assembly.

"I actually beat my own record twice," Leona Tennyson of Antler said Friday. She began the project two years ago to commemorate North Dakota's 100th birthday.

It now measures 11,390 square feet, she said.

The Guinness Book of World Records said in March that Ms. Tennyson's quilt, which measured 9,495 square feet, was the world's largest.

However, an Australian quilting company, Hobbytex of Bracken Ridge in Queensland, weighed in with a quilt that was about 200 square feet larger, according to Guinness officials.

Ms. Tennyson, 73, promised in May to enlarge the centennial quilt to again make it the world's largest. She made her vow at a news conference wearing an Army helmet, camouflage jacket and T-shirt that proclaimed "Beat the Aussies In the Battle of the Quilts."

Hospital releases infant

SAN MATEO, Calif. (AP) — The infant born in an airliner's restroom and abandoned there by her mother was released from a hospital Saturday and given to county officials, who plan to place her in a foster home.

"She was having no problems at all, she was just a healthy little girl," said Sally Worster, nursing supervisor at Mills Memorial Hospital in San Mateo, about 15 miles south of San Francisco.

The 8-pound, 9-ounce infant was taken by representatives of San Mateo County's Child Protective Services in the morning. Calls to the agency went unanswered Saturday.

3,000 protest at battlefield

MANASSAS, Va. (AP) — More than 3,000 Civil War buffs and preservationists braved sweltering heat at the Manassas National Battlefield Park Saturday to protest plans to build a shopping complex next to the battleground.

"Some people believe the best way to preserve this battleground is to build a 1.2 million square-foot shopping mall on it," said Rep. Robert Mrazek, D-N.Y., who sponsored legislation that would block the development.

Many historians believe that both Union and Confederate dead lie in unmarked graves within the development site.

"They deserve better than having their remains bulldozed over for a Burger King or a Bloomingdales," Mrazek said.

'Wrong Way Corrigan' retraces flight

■ More national news Page 12B

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Imagine a brash astronaut thumbing his nose at the space agency and taking an old Mercury spacecraft all the way to the moon, then claiming it was a mistake, and you get a glimmer of Douglas "Wrong Way" Corrigan's feat 50 years ago.

Corrigan

"My compass froze. I guess I flew the wrong way," Corrigan claimed on July 18, 1938, after making a forbidden New York-to-Dublin flight in a used Curtiss-Robin monoplane on which he'd spent $900. Plus $90 for gas and oil.

He has steadfastly maintained he thought he was returning to his home base of Long Beach, Calif., after federal aviation authorities denied him permission to fly to Ireland.

But Corrigan, now 81 and living in Santa Ana, Calif., hinted in a telephone interview last week that his wrong-way explanation may change after he flies again to Dublin today, this time as an honored guest for three days of ceremonies commemorating his flight.

"Maybe this time over in Dublin, I'll tell them another story. We'll see," he said Thursday.

Corrigan's "wrong-way" explanation sounded like pure blarney at the time — he was made a lifetime member of the Liars Club — but America and Ireland loved it.

He was the overnight guest of the U.S. ambassadors in Dublin and London. After he returned to New York by ship, with his plane in a crate, he was given a ticker-tape parade. There was even a meeting with President Franklin Roosevelt.

A movie was turned out by RKO Studios, "The Flying Irishman," starring Corrigan as himself, and there were magazine articles and an autobiography, "That's My Story." He estimated he grossed $85,000 from tours and speeches.

As punishment for his journey, the Bureau of Air Commerce, forerunner of the Federal Aviation Administration, suspended Corrigan from flying for five days. Those five days were served while he was still aboard ship on the way home.

Whatever the true story, Corrigan had joined the ranks of his hero, Charles Lindbergh, and Wiley Post by making a solo, nonstop, single-engine crossing of the Atlantic.

He also dispelled the notion that air feats were only for millionaires and well-financed aviators.

When Corrigan was 20, he was a woodworker at Ryan Aircraft in San Diego and helped build Lindbergh's Spirit of St. Louis for the 1927 New York-to-Paris solo trans-Atlantic flight.

Corrigan got his pilot's license the next year. He bought a leather flight jacket just like Lindy's, scraped his money together and studied navigation.

He bought his monoplane for $310 in 1931, and spent an additional $590 modifying it into a long-distance machine. Before the flight to Ireland, he flew from Long Beach to New York nonstop in 27 hours on July 7-8.

Then the Bureau of Air Commerce refused to grant permission for a trans-Atlantic flight, on grounds his plane, loaded with 330 gallons of gasoline and five gallons of oil, was 55 percent too heavy for a safe flight.

Corrigan took off from New York's Floyd Bennett Field on July 17, saying he was headed for Long Beach. He landed at Dublin 28 hours and 13 minutes later, 3,150 miles from New York.

"There had been a haze near the ground and when I was 500 feet high, there was fog below the plane," Corrigan once said of his flight. "When I started to turn west I noticed the top compass was not working right, due to the liquid having leaked out...There was another compass down on the floor that I had set to fly a westerly course, so now I turned the plane until the parallel lines matched, and flew over the fog."

The wrong way.

He had no radio and his $1 wristwatch stopped. "The only modern instrument I had was a turn-and-bank indicator," said Corrigan, who subsisted on fig and chocolate bars and some water during his flight.

"I knew I wasn't in Long Beach when I dropped out of the overcast over Dublin," he said. "The place was greener and some of the houses had hay roofs."

Corrigan will be the guest of Aer Lingus on Sunday when the Irish airline takes him to Dublin aboard a Boeing 747.

"We offered him a first-class seat, but he said he would prefer to fly economy," said Aer Lingus spokesman Bill Maxwell in Dublin.

Gorbachev tries to sell new Soviet vision, but not all Poles are buying

By JOHN DANISZEWSKI

An Analysis

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev presented Poles last week with the vision of a new relationship with their neighbor to the East.

Instead of the big brother that many Poles feel has dominated them for two centuries under Soviet commissars or Russian czars, Gorbachev offered a portrait of a strong military ally, a potential huge economic partner and a fervent fellow believer in humanizing the communist system.

During a six-day visit that ended Saturday, Gorbachev's statements on Polish sovereignty went little beyond language used in the past. But his tone was solicitous and his appeals for maintaining the alliance were directed straight at Polish self-interest.

In a trip to Szczecin in western territories acquired from Germany after World War II, Gorbachev went out of his way to say he backed the proposition that this was now "truly Polish soil."

Talking to intellectuals, he said his goal was to bring a "human dimension" to socialism and ensure that "working people can live well and feel well."

To young people in Krakow, he said: "In my country and your country, perestroika (restructuring) will progress better the more tightly and more fruitfully the two countries cooperate."

Poles accustomed to images of dour-faced Soviet leaders stiffly reviewing marching troops from atop the Lenin mausoleum instead saw TV images of a smiling Gorbachev kissing children or chatting amiably with Polish workers.

In one of the most captivating moments of the visit, Gorbachev and his wife Raisa laughed as popular Polish balladeer Andrzej Rosiewicz pranced around a stage in a white fur hat and poked gentle fun at the Soviet Union with his bouncy song in praise of Gorbachev, "Mikhail, Mikhail."

But how did all this play among ordinary Poles?

"In my opinion, Gorbachev will contribute more to the friendship between our nations that has been done in this regard for decades," said Stanislaw Kwiatkowski, the chief government pollster.

AP Laserphoto

Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev, second from left, signs the closing statement of the Warsaw Pact nations' two-day summit in Warsaw, Poland, Saturday as other members of the Soviet delegation look on. From left are President Andrei Gromyko, Gorbachev, Prime Minister Nikolai Ryzhkov and Defense Minister Dmitri Yazov.

"A majority of Poles identify themselves with Gorbachev's policies and view it as a chance for our nation," he said.

But not everyone was buoyed by the Soviet leader's visit.

"All the Polish problems that existed before the visit remain the same and the visit has not brought any new solutions," said Bronislaw Geremek, a historian and leading opposition figure.

Geremek noted the Polish public had hoped Gorbachev would acknowledge Soviet responsibility for a 1940 massacre of about 4,300 Polish Army officers in the Katyn forest near the Russian city of Smolensk shortly after the outbreak of World War II.

He said the public also had wanted an "unambiguous crossing out" of the Brezhnev doctrine, under which the Soviet Union maintained the right to interfere in the affairs of its East bloc allies.

Gorbachev never mentioned Katyn during his trip. He made only a broad reference to Polish sovereignty without repeating the solemn pledges of noninterference he gave Czechoslovakia and Yugsolavia last year.

During a meeting with Polish intellectuals at Warsaw's Royal Palace Thursday, two speakers asked Gorbachev to give a signal to Polish society that the Brezhnev doctrine was dead.

But the Soviet leader did not respond specifically, saying only that he would provide written replies in a volume to be published later.

Gorbachev said hardly a word about Polish independence during his speech Monday to the Sejm, or parliament, or on subsequent visits to Krakow and Szczecin.

But officials clearly wished to associate themselves with Gorbachev's charisma. Polish leader Wojciech Jaruzelski hardly left the Soviet leader's side and repeatedly emphasized the parallels between Gorbachev's "perestroika" and Poland's "socialist renewal."

Geremek said there was a contradiction between Gorbachev's "dynamic domestic Soviet policy and the stagnation of domestic Polish policy" in the seven years since Jaruzelski imposed martial law and suppressed the Solidarity independent trade union.

Armenians reportedly call for end to strike

MOSCOW (AP) — A regional official said speakers at a rally in Armenia's capital called Saturday for an end to a crippling two-week strike over demands for control of an Armenian-dominated enclave in a neighboring Soviet republic.

The speakers told supporters to go back to work Monday, the day the executive committee of the Soviet Parliament is to meet, said an employee of the Armenian republic's Ministry of Internal Affairs in a telephone interview from the capital Yerevan.

Many Armenians have said they expect the body to take up their demands and the official news agency Tass made reference to the issue Saturday in announcing the meeting.

The ministry official, who spoke anonymously, said the rally took place late Saturday outside a Yerevan institute for the study of ancient Armenian manuscripts, but he said he did not know how many people attended and he gave no other details.

An employee of the Armenia Hotel in Yerevan said she heard from people who attended the rally that the strike was canceled. However, she declined to give other details or her name.

Armenians, who are predominantly Christian, launched a general strike July 4 to press their demand that Nagorno-Karabakh be taken away from the mostly Moslem Republic of Azerbaijan, to which it was annexed in 1923.

Armenians in Nagorno-Karabakh itself, a mountainous enclave about the size of Delaware, have also been striking since May 23. More than three-quarters of the enclave's population of 160,000 is Armenian.

Tass has acknowledged the strike has taken an economic toll. It said Saturday Armenia's construction industry lost $32 million as more than 25,000 construction workers struck daily.

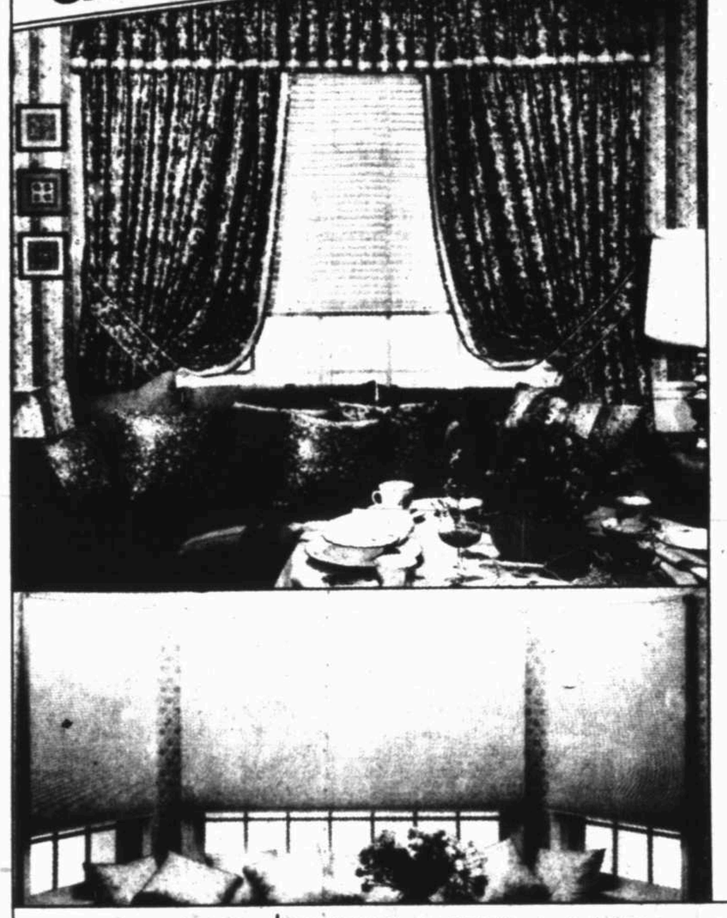

The republic's Communist Party Central Committee Friday said party and government officials had not been able to "display civic courage to openly oppose anti-social actions and gave in to the blackmailers and instigators," Tass reported.

The body singled out the republic's Ministry of Internal Affairs, which oversees police work, and prosecutor's office for taking "a conciliatory stand toward violators of law and order," Tass said.

Daily protest rallies in Yerevan have developed "illegal trends" involving "appeals of incitement," the committee was quoted as saying.

U.S. to again process refugees stranded by lack of agency funds

MOSCOW (AP) — The U.S. Embassy said Saturday it will resume processing thousands of Soviets who were promised refugee status in the United States but were left stranded because of a lack of State Department funds.

The embassy also announced that it will ask prospective refugees, their relatives in the United States and private organizations to help pay the refugees' way to America.

The U.S. government had been helping finance travel to and resettlement in the United States. The statement did not say what the refugees were being asked to pay. It said processing would resume Monday.

U.S. diplomats in Moscow say applications of about 3,400 people who were granted refugee status have been frozen since July 1, when the State Department decided to delay processing until Oct. 1, the start of the new U.S. fiscal year.

The department cited an increase in refugees and a shortage of funds.

Last month, the U.S. Embassy gave permission to a record 2,063 Soviets to immigrate to the United States. It expects to issue 9,500 visas for Soviet immigration to the United States in the 12 months ending Sept. 30, 1988.

The delay left hundreds of prospective emigrants stranded in Moscow after they sold their homes, quit their jobs and traveled to the capital expecting to be allowed to leave for the United States.

Saturday's announcement followed sharp criticism in Washington of the State Department decision.

On Friday, 23 senators sent a letter of protest to President Reagan, saying: "(The July 1) decision sends a terrible signal to those seeking freedom all over the world, and could give the Soviets the opportunity to claim that it is America and not the Soviet Union which is impeding emigration."

Nine members of the House Judiciary Subcommittee on Refugees asked Secretary of State George P. Shultz in a letter either to find the estimated $10 million required to pay for the emigration of the refugees whose applications were frozen, or to ask Congress for additional funds.

"In light of the promises this country has made to welcome and resettle thousands of emigres from the Soviet Union, the suspension should be lifted immediately," they told Shultz.

An estimated 400 would-be refugees came to Moscow since July 1 expecting to be processed and allowed to leave, according to the U.S. Embassy. It said embassy officials will begin interviewing them Monday.

For would-be emigrants whose exit visas expire before Oct. 1, the U.S. government will solicit funds to alleviate the cost of their trips, resettlement and medical care "from the families themselves, from their relatives in the United States, and from...voluntary organizations and other private sources," the statement said.

It did not specify how much the State Department would pay.

Soviets whose exit visas will be valid after Oct. 1 will be asked to wait at home and not depart for Moscow until they are summoned by U.S. diplomats, the embassy statement said.

A U.S. Embassy official said he told a group of 50 to 100 Armenians gathered on a street corner near the embassy of the new plan, and that "by and large they were pleased."

Many Armenians had earlier voiced bitter disappointment at the delay in processing the refugees.

The delay, which affected any Soviet applying to the embassy for refugee status, hit Armenians hardest of all. Of the Soviets given permission to emigrate to the United States in the year ending Sept. 30, 1987, 94 percent were Armenians.

"We moved out of our apartments, or homes," Musegh Sarafyan told a reporter last week as he stood near the embassy. "We sold our clothes and quit our jobs, and now we are left practically on the street."

U.S. lawyer wants oil platform cases heard in Texas

ABERDEEN, Scotland (AP) — An American lawyer said Friday he will try to have lawsuits involving the Piper Alpha oil platform explosion and fire heard in a Texas court.

Benton Musslewhite of Houston told a news conference in Aberdeen total settlements in the world's worst oilfield disaster could reach $1 billion.

He did not say whether he would handle cases for relatives of the 166 men killed when the North Sea oil rig was engulfed by flames July 6.

The platform, with 230 men aboard, was operated by the Los Angeles-based Occidental Petroleum Corp.

Musslewhite said damages against oil companies need to be punitive so the companies will say "we can't afford not to be safe or we will be put out of business."

Workers from Texas troubleshooter Paul "Red" Adair's organization continued efforts to cap five of the platform's 36 wellheads that still were burning, Occidental said in a statement.

It said work to clear debris from the tilting platform continues when weather permits and drilling of a relief shaft has begun.

Occidental said one more body was recovered from the sea, bringing to the number found to 26. Ten survivors remained in hospitals, the statement said.

Magazine claims attack ended hostage talks

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A Lebanese magazine says the U.S. Navy's missile attack on an Iranian jetliner derailed hostage talks between the United States and Iran.

Ash-Shiraa said Friday that talks between negotiators for the two countries had been held in a European country and "covered many details."

The report said "a number of American hostages were to be released in south Beirut in return for a public change in the American political stand on the Gulf War in favor of Iran."

It said the talks in Europe broke down after the Navy shot down the Iran Air jetliner July 3, killing all 290 people on board. The United States said its forces mistook the plane for a jet fighter.

The report carried no further details of the alleged talks and cited no sources.

Ash-Shiraa gained international fame in 1986 when it broke the story of secret U.S. arms sales to Iran to win release of American hostages. But the magazine's recent reports on the 18 foreign captives held in Lebanon have not been accurate.

In a separate report, the magazine said members of a West German delegation held talks in Christian east Beirut with representatives of a pro-Iranian group holding West German hostage Rudolf Cordes.

"The German delegation has returned home after the talks reached a dead end," the report said. The magazine did not report the cause of the impasse.

Cordes, 53, a businessman with Hoechst AG, a West German chemical firm, was kidnapped Jan. 17, 1987 in Moslem west Beirut. The pro-Iranian Holy Warriors for Freedom claimed responsibility.

Nine Americans are among the foreign captives in Lebanon. The longest-held is Terry Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press.

U.N. body seeks compromise in plane's downing

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The Soviet Union and China criticized the United States for downing an Iranian airliner over the Persian Gulf, but the Security Council is likely to consider a compromise that distributes the blame.

Iran failed to get Security Council members to condemn the United States Friday for the July 3 attack that left 290 people dead, and most nations said the urgent priority is to end the 8-year-old Iran-Iraq war.

The Soviet Union said the U.S. Navy must withdraw from the gulf in favor of a U.N. peacekeeping force.

"This tragedy has demonstrated once again that the U.S. naval fleet must leave the gulf without delay," said Valentine V. Lozinskiy, the deputy Soviet representative.

Iran had asked for the Security Council meeting on the shooting down of the Airbus A300 by the U.S. Navy cruiser Vincennes. The 15-nation Security Council adjourned the matter until Monday after debating the gulf disaster for a second day on Friday.

The council president for July, Ambassador Paulo Nogueria-Batista of Brazil, is trying to draft a document that would be acceptable to everyone and save face for Iran.

Iran's presence at the meeting was its first appearance at the council, which it has boycotted since the beginning of the Iran-Iraq war in 1980.

Diplomatic sources said council members feel Iran must achieve something at the meeting or it will continue boycotting the council and continue rejecting a year-old Security Council resolution that demands an immediate cease-fire.

Thursday, Foreign Minister Ali-Akbar Velayati of Iran condemned the United States before the council, and Vice President George Bush said the Vincennes acted in self defense when fired on the airliner.

Pentagon officials said the cruiser's officers thought the Airbus A300 was an Iranian F-14 on an attack course.

Thirteen nations spoke Friday, including Britain, China, France, Italy, Japan, West Germany, Yugoslavia, Algeria and Argentina.

At a news conference Friday, Velayati said: "The attitude of the U.S. administration is similar to a rich man's son who drives when he's drunk. He thinks money can buy everything, and that is not true."

The Soviet speech, like others, was moderate, and Moscow sent only its second-ranking delegate.

In 1983, the Soviet Union vetoed a Security Council resolution condemning it for shooting down a South Korean airliner over its territory. That disaster killed 269 people.

All speakers Friday deplored the tragedy, but also said that the most important task is to end the war through implementation of U.N. Resolution 598, which calls for a truce, withdrawal to recognized borders, prisoner exchange and an investigation of who was responsible for the war.

Iraq has said it will accept the resolution if Iran does, but the Iranians insist that Iraq be branded the aggressor before a truce.

Thousands protest Mexican election

AP Laserphoto

"The people know how they voted," leftist presidential candidate Cuauhtemoc Cardenas tells 300,000 supporters in Mexico City's Zocalo Square Saturday, he said the government and the ruling Institutional Revolutionary Party used massive fraud to rig the July 6 elections.

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Thousands of people rallied Saturday in the main square in front of the presidential palace, and defeated presidential candidate Cuauhtemoc Cardenas again accused the governing party of widespread fraud.

"An important part of that fraud was deficient voter registration rolls with millions of names repeated, which do not correspond to those in the various electoral districts or are the names of dead people," Cardenas told the huge crowd in Mexico City's Zocalo square.

Reporters estimated about 300,000 supporters of Cardenas' left-wing National Democratic Front attended the rally that was noisy but peaceful.

The Institutional Revolutionary Party, which has governed Mexico since 1929, won the July 6 presidential and congressional elections but with the smallest margin in decades. Its presidential candidate, Carlos Salinas de Gortari, received just over 50 percent of the vote. He will take office Dec. 1.

The governing party released a statement Saturday night saying it will "fight with the arms of the law for the full respect of the vote and the acknowledgment of the popular will" expressed in the official vote count.

In the statement, titled "Stop the Lie and Provocation," the party also said Gortari "triumphed over his opponents by an absolute majority." It noted Salinas won in 27 of Mexico's 31 states and that the party "obtained absolute majorities" in 249 of the country's 300 local electoral districts.

The statement was signed by party Chairman Jorge de la Vega, Secretary-General Humberto Lugo Gil, and three other officials.

At the rally, Cardenas also denounced the shooting of a Mexican television cameraman, saying it was "another attempt against freedom of information and expression."

"It is a violent action that seeks to intimidate the news media and foreign correspondents and photographers so they return to their countries and stop giving news about this Mexico in struggle in these post-election days," Cardenas said.

Gunmen in an automobile stopped Carlos Duenas' car on the south side of the capital early Friday and shot him in the face. Duenas, 30, who had worked during the election for U.S. Cable News Network's Telemundo program, was reported Saturday to be in critical but stable condition.

Marco Antonio Carrasco, a cameraman who was with Duenas, said the gunmen stole the victim's watch and shoes. Investigators described the assault as a common robbery.

Cardenas claimed the attack was aimed at journalists in general "so that they do not denounce any more violations of the law."

On Wednesday, a gunman shot and killed Romay Gonzalez Reyes, a 32-year-old journalist in the city of Comitan near the border with Guatemala.

Gonzalez, director of the local newspaper El Mundo, was working in his office when he was hit by eight bullets. The killer escaped.

The Thursday afternoon edition of the Mexico City daily Excelsior said Gonzalez "was popular for his defense of social and popular causes, which probably were the source of the attack."

Cardenas, accusing the governing party of fraud, said: "While being taken to district electoral committees, packages of ballots were opened, their contents were altered. On the one hand votes in favor of the official party were introduced and our votes on the other hand were removed.

"Many of these (ballots) were later found floating in rivers, in garbage dumps, in ravines, and others were simply strewn in the streets."

By official count, Salinas de Gortari won the presidential election with 50.36 percent of the vote, while Cardenas was second with 31.12 percent.

Poll watchers' coalition documents fraud in Mexican elections

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The reports of fraud persistently circulating in the aftermath of the July 6 general election come right out of the book: the poll-watchers' manual of a citizen watchdog group.

The Assembly for Democratic Suffrage, a coalition of civic groups and opposition political parties, had outlined what it said were 20-time-tested ways to cheat in the manual.

The assembly had planned to issue a final report on the election Friday, but postponed action. It was considering several proposals, including calling for the annulment of the entire election.

The assembly said Friday that opposition parties were represented at about 40,000 of the nation's nearly 55,000 polling places. It was the biggest election-day watchdog force in Mexico's history.

The visibility of the assembly itself during the elections was considered a small step away from one-party monopoly of the ruling Institutional Revolutionary Party. Its membership of about 60 prominent political activists and intellectuals was weighted heavily among opposition groups.

The assembly manual had warned poll workers to be on the alert for stuffed ballot boxes, padding the returns, falsified tally sheets or voter registration credentials and destroyed, altered or stolen ballots.

It also warned of potential problems at the national level and said little could be done to stop the PRI-controlled government from doctoring returns after they had been fed into the central computer system.

Friday, the assembly also accused the government and the ruling party of manipulating the voter registration rolls.

The opposition and several news organizations have been reporting irregularities since election day. Many of the reports describe tactics right out of the assembly's manual.

A newspaper in northern Mexico, for instance, compared turnout in several spots to the number of people on the rolls and found up to four times as many votes were logged as voters.

In the capital, the leftist opposition prepared for a rally Saturday and nationwide "defend the vote" tour by candidate Cuauhtemoc Cardenas.

The rightist opposition candidate, Manuel J. Clouthier of the National Action Party, or PAN, started his nationwide tour Thursday in Guadalajara and then planned to visit northern Mexico.

Both claim the ruling Institutional Revolutionary Party, or PRI, cheated, and Cardenas insists he won the election.

The Federal Election Commission said the PRI candidate, Carlos Salinas de Gortari won with 50.36 percent of the vote to 31.12 percent for Cardenas and 17.07 percent for Clouthier.

A week-long wait for official returns and the surprisingly low voter turnout figure of half of Mexico's more than 38 million voters for the most hotly contested race in PRI history did little to ease suspicions.

The government at first said the turnout surpassed the 75 percent of the 1982 presidential election and blamed the delay in releasing returns on the heavy turnout.

Government and party leaders say the fact that Salinas claimed victory with less than the minimum of 70 percent the PRI has always claimed before indicates the election was the cleanest in PRI's 59-year-history.

But it appeared there had still been some cheating.

In the northern state capital of Monterrey, the daily El Norte said it compared voter registration to turnout.

At one polling place, it said it found 150 people registered to vote, but 652 votes cast. In another, 290 people voted but only 68 were registered in the precinct. PRI won these precincts, El Norte said.

El Norte and the competing Monterrey daily El Porvenir also said their reporters infiltrated vote-rigging operations run by two labor groups which are important arms of the PRI.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Israeli soldiers shoot three masked protesters

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israeli soldiers shot and wounded three masked protesters who raised Palestinian flags Saturday in the West Bank town of Nablus, the army and hospital officials said.

Scattered protests were reported in other parts of the West Bank and in Arab east Jerusalem. Hospital sources said two youths and a woman were injured.

The army command said an Israeli patrol saw four masked men in Nablus raise Palestinian flags and throw stones. The Palestinian flag is outlawed in Israel and the occupied territories.

The army said the soldiers responded with gunfire and they wounded three protesters.

Officials at Nablus' St. Luke Hospital identified two of the victims as Mohammed Abdallah, 21, who was shot in the abdomen, and Mohammed Hamir, 19, who was shot in the leg. Doctors at Al Ittihad Hospital said they treated 21-year-old Mahmoud Al Kasar for a bullet wound in the leg.

Since the Palestinian uprising began Dec. 8 in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip, 222 Palestinians and four Israelis have been killed.

Plane skids off runway

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — The landing gear on a Portuguese airliner collapsed as the plane touched down in Frankfurt on Saturday, causing it to skid off the runway, airport officials said. They said none of the 225 people aboard was injured.

The TAP Boeing 727 airliner was landing after a regular flight from Lisbon when the landing gear on its right side collapsed, the officials said.

The plane skidded to a stop partly off the airport's northern runway, they said. The runway was closed for several hours, causing delays of up to an hour.

Ortega blames U.S.

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — President Daniel Ortega Saturday said the Sandinistas' recent crackdown on its domestic opponents was in reaction to renewed fighting with rebels and U.S. efforts to destabilize his government.

"We are reacting before criminal acts that are being encouraged in political terms by the North American embassy," Ortega said in an interview broadcast by state-run Voice of Nicaragua radio.

Ortega said U.S. denunciations of the Sandinista government's actions reflected "an imperialist mentality. They cannot see (these) things with justice," he said. The radio said Ortega's comments were excerpts of an interview taped earlier Saturday by American and Italian television networks.

The leftist Sandinista government expelled U.S. Ambassador Richard Melton and seven other American diplomats on July 11, a day after police violently broke up an opposition demonstration.

Quake reported off Taiwan

TAIPEI, Taiwan (AP) — An earthquake was recorded early today off Taiwan's southern coast. Police said there were no reports of casualties or damage.

The Central Weather Bureau said the quake struck at 3:53 a.m. and it measured 5.0 on the Richter scale.

It said the quake's center was in the sea about 31 miles southeast of Hengchun on Taiwan's southern tip.

Events marking Nelson Mandela's birthday banned

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Police Saturday banned all events marking Nelson Mandela's 70th birthday and set up roadblocks around the Cape Town prison where the black leader is confined.

Hundreds of members of the security forces, many in armored vehicles, patrolled townships outside Cape Town. There were no reports of violence. Police briefly detained at least four runners in a race organized as part of the birthday celebrations.

The police action came amid renewed calls from foreign governments for the release of Mandela, who is regarded by black South Africans as the country's pre-eminent black leader.

Mandela turns 70 Monday. He has been in prison the past 26 years.

Late Saturday, police Brig. Roy During issued an order banning all events related to the birthday, including a concert that was scheduled for today.

Other scheduled events, including pop music concerts planned in the southeastern port city of Durban and Soweto township outside Johannesburg, were banned last week.

Police blocked off Pollsmoor Prison and said only people with "valid reasons" would be allowed near the facility.

They sealed off a sports stadium in the Cape Town township of Guguletu, forcing cancellation of a soccer game and a rugby match that were part of the birthday celebrations.

Saturday's 15-mile road race was the only one of several birthday-related events that was allowed to begin.

But a heavy police presence apparently deterred most runners from showing up at the Cape Town shopping plaza that served as the starting line.

Witnesses said police detained the only five participants after they had run less than one mile. Police said four runners were detained and later released.

The runners wore T-shirts that read, "Mandela, Freedom At 70." Two people traveling in a van alongside the runners to provide drinks also were detained, witnesses said.

More than 30 people in the Cape Town area who were involved in Mandela's birthday celebrations were taken into custody last week.

City, county seek grants to lay pipes

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

There's a move beginning to pipe city water to and raw sewage from the remaining six blocks of an unannexed and impoverished southside Midland neighborhood.

But hopes of funding the project with government money have not yet been realized.

The ultimate aim in the county's decision last week to petition for two government grants is to revitalize the area occupied by at least 30 low-income families and to get the land annexed by the city of Midland, Commissioner Win Brown explained.

"It's an informal agreement between the city and the county because we can get the grants to upgrade these neighborhoods," he said.

Windowpane II, which is divided into eastern and western sections, has awaited annexation by the city since 1984, when commissioners unveiled a plan to install water and sewer lines in those neighborhoods.

Without safe water and sanitary sewer systems, paved roads and vastly improved housing, the city won't consider annexation.

However, the lack of federal funding and the overall size and condition of the area slowed progress on Windowpane II, according to Gary Harris, an engineer with Parkhill Smith & Cooper.

Commissioners voted last week to re-appoint Harris' firm as Windowpane II project consultant and gave the go-ahead to submit the county's two remaining applications for federal funding.

"They've done a good job," said Commissioner Guy McCrary, adding that a consultant change at this time would break the continuity of the project, which is divided into four phases.

In the first phase, the county recently completed installation of water services in the western six blocks of the area flanked on the west and east by Baird and Fort Worth streets and takes in portions of Gist, Stokes, Wolcott, Summit and Longview Avenue. A $245,000 grant funded that project.

Bids for the $263,000 installation of sewer lines in the six-block area will go out this fall and construction should be completed by early 1989, according to Harris.

In the remaining two phases, water and sewer services will be added in the eastern six-block area when more grant money becomes available. The eastern half extends to Terrell Street.

It is the intent of commissioners to do for Windowpane II what $1.6 million in federal funds did for Windowpane I — a 300-acre area north of the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum and mid-way between the Rankin Highway and Cotton Flat Road.

The grant money led to the "installation of utilities" in Windowpane I and brought the area "up to (city) standards," McCrary said.

Windowpane I called for the laying of water and sewer lines, repairing weathered and neglected houses, rebuilding other dwellings, clearing lots and putting in hard-topped streets, curbing and guttering and filling in the cesspools.

The U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development provided funding for the 1981 project.

In their 1983 pursuit of federal funding for Windowpane II, commissioners bid for $500,000 in Community Development Block Grant money through the Texas Department of Community Affairs.

However, the project didn't rate high enough on the department's need scale to get a portion of the money for neighborhood improvements that year.

In 1986, county commissioners headed for the Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission, seeking a share of $1.5 million made available to 17 counties.

The county received a $245,500 grant to run water lines into the impoverished area a year later.

Texas Army National Guard soldiers command a self-propelled 155-millimeter howitzer at the U.S. Army's Fort Hood in Central Texas. The soldiers are assigned to the Guard's 49th Armored Division. Fort Hood serves as Guard's training ground

FORT HOOD — Amid the "Great Place" for military action in Texas, a genteel soldier decked out in camouflage battle gear spoke softly and confidently.

"Speak softly but carry a 'big stick,' and nobody is going to mess with us," said citizen-soldier Edgar Murphy.

Murphy, holstered for battle exercises, is a Lubbock farm-equipment businessman who also performs the role of an infantry colonel in the Texas Army National Guard's 49th Armored Division.

The "us" carrying that "big stick" is the combined might of the United States military forces.

And a vital part of that armament is the Texas Army National Guard — a group of "weekend warriors" who train for combat readiness on weekends and in two-week summer camps.

Since the U.S. Congress has cut back spending on regular military forces, the weekend citizen warriors on land and sea and in the air now account for much of the nation's defense readiness. The Army National Guard and the Army Reserves, Murphy said, make up more than 50 percent of the U.S. Army's strength.

And proficiency on the battlefield is paramount for the American warriors whose potential enemy today is the Russian army, which far outnumbers the United States' military divisions.

"So, it behooves us to be good soldiers," Murphy said.

CITIZEN-SOLDIERS, known as minutemen in the Revolutionary War of 1775-1776, have served the land now known as the United States of America since 1636.

Freedom, Murphy said, has been won "by spilling blood of our fellow patriots." And Murphy said he has volunteered to serve his nation because "my country has been good to me."

"I love it. I owe it something back."

Throughout the year, Army and Air National Guardsmen take off from their regular civilian jobs to train in front-line and support action. They may be flying helicopter gunships, piloting air transports or fighters, firing rifles and cannons, blasting the terrains with low-profile tanks, manning armored squad carriers, and doing all sorts of things — from cooking mess to supplying munitions — to support the fighting troops.

The Army moves on "beans and bullets."

Fort Hood, known as the "Great Place" throughout the U.S. Army, is home of the regular Army's 1st Cavalry Division, the 2nd Armored Division, the air-combat 6th Cavalry Brigade and various support units.

And Guardsmen take time off from their white-collar and blue-collar jobs to perform war games in all seriousness.

"We are just like the active (Army in combat readiness)," said Texas Army National Guard recruiting Sgt. Rick Morris of Midland. The warriors may be called to serve in a 8-to-5 workday or 24 hours a day in case of peace-time or war-time emergencies.

"I like what I am doing," he said. "I have always liked the military. I like the job. I like the benefits. I believe in my country — just like I think everybody should. Good or bad, I believe in this country."

AMONG THE 49th Armored Division's 10,000 citizen-soldiers on a two-week June training assignment at Fort Hood are weekend warriors from Midland's Company A of the 111th Engineers Battalion and Odessa's Battery C of the 132nd Field Artillery.

"The engineers do anything that the Army needs to keep them moving — building bridges, making roads, clearing mine fields, laying landing pads for aircraft, building battle emplacement — bunkers," said Morris.

Morris cited the role of the Army's ground forces.

"You can only do so much from the air," he said. "You can pound the dickens out of the enemy. But the Army and Marines have to go in and finish the job off — clear things out. And the Army cannot move without your combat support. Without combat support, the Army would bog down real quick."

Guardsman Terry Henson, 21, of Odessa serves on a cannon crew.

"It's pretty exciting," he said. "You don't do it everyday."

"We all work together as a team," said Pfc. Guardsman Glen Smith of Lubbock.

The person in charge of the Texas Air and Army National Guards is Maj. Gen. James Dennis, the Texas adjutant general.

IN TRAINING exercise, "Young people prepare themselves to defend their country," Dennis said.

"We are going to get better everyday," he said. "To fight, we've got to know those combat techniques and, then, go back to our families."

Approximately 30,000 men and women are in the Texas Air and Army National Guards.

"Today better not be the day the Russians attack," Dennis said, "because we are ready."

Maj. Gen. Charles Kone, a Texas rancher who is commander of the Guard's 49th Armored Division, said that he is "proud of our soldiers.

"They are serious about what they are doing," Kone said.

Among visitors looking over the National Guard's training at Fort Hood was U.S. Air Force retired Col. Charlie Powell, former commander of Goodfellow Air Force Base in San Angelo.

"I enjoy getting back to see what's going — lots of new stuff," Powell said. "I'm impressed with the state of readiness of our Guard." He noted that the active military forces — the Army, Navy, Air Force, Marine Corps — are about half of the 3.3-million strength of 1970 during the Vietnam War. However, the military reserves and National Guard forces bring up the military might to fighting strength.

"Our people are trained combat ready," Powell said of the National Guard. "That is very clear to me. And we have state-of-the-art equipment."

THE MILITARY role of Guardsman Capt. Robert Martinez of Midland is get munitions, food, fuel and spare parts to the battle zones.

State's sales tax figures average 14.3% increase

By CHRIS VAN WAGENEN
Staff Writer

Strong sales continued to drive the state's economy during July based on the latest tax collection figures released by the Comptroller of Public Accounts.

Local sales taxes in many communities from Houston to Midland showed an average increase of 14.3 percent for the month in comparison to year ago figures.

"The strength of the state economy is being reflected on a local level," said Comptroller Bob Bullock, who predicted a steady increase local government shares.

An estimated 915 checks totaling $61.3 milliion were mailed this week to cities and counties which opt to collect the local sales tax.

Even year-to-date payments, according to Bullock's office, showed a significant swing — up 10.8 percent when compared to the same year ago period.

In Midland, Finance Director Troy Gifford saw nothing new in the figures, besides meeting current expectations.

For the month, Midland's tax share totaled $465,313 — a 7.25 increase over the same year ago period, which amounted to $433,,849.

Year-to-date, the city's share increased from $3,885,044 in 1987 to $4,332,606 — an 11.52 percent increase, according to the comptroller.

Countywide, a total of $277,314 was mailed out. Year-to-date that figure amounted to $1,440,178, according to the comptroller.

Neighborhoods invited to 'Night Out Against Crime'

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

After dark on August 9, businesses in downtown Midland and throughout the city, and dozens, perhaps hundreds of homes in the city's neighborhoods will be lit brightly. The idea, organizers and supporters say, is to shed some light on the problem of crime.

"Midland's Night Out Against Crime" will be a local demonstration of "National Night Out," an annual event since its inception several years ago in Pennsylvania. This year's "night" will include a noon rally at Centennial Plaza, according to Cheryl Meares, president of the Midland Crime Prevention Commission.

Last year, Midland-area participation was ranked 48th of 5,500 communities, according to the National Town Watch Association.

"Many neighborhoods will host special activities, such as block parties, cookouts, poster contests and flashlight walks," Ms. Meares said. "It's a great way to generate support for, and participation in, neighborhood watch groups."

At noon at the plaza, a flurry of balloons will be released, proclamations will be read by local officials, and crime prevention information will be available. All neighborhood watch groups have been invited to the rally, which could draw hundreds of people, according to organizers.

At 8 p.m., participants will be asked to turn on outside lights, lock their residences and go outside to visit neighbors.

The "Night Out" is designed to generate interest in crime prevention, including neighborhood watch groups, according to area law enforcement officers.

"This is something for the community," Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter said. "It will bring attention to it (crime prevention). It is an attention getter. It is an effort to get the information out."

Sgt. Lalo Camarillo, who heads crime prevention for Midland police, said the "Night Out" helps keep busy Midlanders rejuvenated and interested in crime prevention — especially neighborhood watch groups, which law enforcement officers say are most effective in preventing crimes, especially burglaries.

"We are trying to keep the people on our neighborhood watch program motivated," Camarillo said. "A lot of the groups go dormant. If we have this night out, they will be motivated, we feel. Once they meet, they tend to keep on meeting."

Currently, there are about 100 active watch groups in the city, according to Camarillo. The "activity" of the groups varies, the officer said.

"It has been steady," he said of the number of groups active the last few months. "We used to have about 250, before the drop in oil prices."

Camarillo said the enthusiasm of most of the groups is "mediocre." "They want to participate, but they are very busy people," he said. "They don't meet as often as we want them to, but meeting at least every three or four months is at least something."

Lawmen and event organizers predict the "National Night Out" — which has been recognized in Midland since 1985 — will be an annual event, and they insist it is more than a gimmick.

"It is very important" Painter said. "We wish there was more we could do to help the community as a whole."

Mail tale: Do real men wear earrings, sip sissy drinks?

Ott

One of the fun things about coming back to work following a vacation is reading the mail.

So it was for me Friday.

I sat down with a cup of coffee, a pack of Marlboro Lights and proceeded to read the mail. Mostly it was routine stuff — a reminder that I haven't made a payment to MasterCard for several months, numerous form letters addressed to "occupant," a coupon that will get me two pizzas for the price of one, a three-digit bill from the electric company and four hate letters.

I immediately tossed aside everything but the hate letters.

One in particular caught my attention.

It started off nicely enough. The first paragraph went like this:

"Dear Mr. Ott:

"I read with great interest, and amusement, your column in Sunday's Midland Reporter-Telegram. One part of it, though, made me realize that you obviously have not travelled further than from your office to The Bar across from the Exxon building."

At this point two things became clear:

1) The person was about to rip me to shreds for something I had written, and

2) He obviously knows my travel habits.

To make a long story short, he was upset because I had poked fun of men who wear earrings.

Actually, what I said was:

"Call me old-fashioned, but I'll never get used to men wearing earrings."

Then I added this paragraph:

"Men who wear earrings probably prefer sissy drinks that have a cherry on top."

I think it was that last part that offended this particular person, who, by the way, is a citizen of England. I say that because later in his letter he writes:

"Some of my friends, male friends, wear earrings. They don't prefer drinks with a cherry on top. I'd be more than happy, at the expense of the newspaper, to fly with you to England, first class of course, stay at the Dorchester Hotel, and introduce you to the men, and I emphasize men, that wear earrings.

"After three or four weeks of your investigative reporting we can return, assuming I can carry your broken body for your negative cherry comments, and call a press conference at The Bar where you can humble yourself and apologize for your written statements about men who wear earrings."

That really won't be necessary.

Instead, we'll conduct a poll and let you, the readers, decide this burning issue. Forget the Democratic Convention, what we really need to know is if it is OK for men to wear earrings.

If you are like me and think real men — guys like Mickey Mantle and Dick Butkus — would never be caught dead wearing an earring, then by all means write in your feelings.

If, on the other hand, you side with the gentleman from England, I suppose it will be OK for you to write in your responses, too. Just remember this, though: People in England drink their beer warm and prefer Scotch without ice.

So, what do they know, anyway?

But don't let that affect your decision. Make up your own mind.

And when you do, let me know how you feel.

Contact me by letter or postcard at the newspaper, P.O. Box 1650.

Of particular interest: Do women find men who wear earrings sexy? If so, why?

Don't hestitate. Write now.

My findings will be published in this space in the next couple of weeks, or whenever I get enough responses to support my position.

Gary Ott is city editor of the Reporter-Telegram.

Gladewater new home of antique haven

AP Laserphoto

Antique entsepreneur Beth Bishop poses by the sign that heralds her hometown's new business interest in old goods. Her efforts have been credited with revitalizing Gladewater's downtown by bringing more than 100 dealers to an antique mall.

GLADEWATER (AP) — The sign on Interstate 20 says "Gladewater — The Antique Capital of East Texas."

Some people in Jefferson or Canton might disagree with Gladewater's self-designation, but anyone who has been downtown in the last 13 months probably would not argue the point.

More than 100 antique dealers have taken over a four-block region of downtown Gladewater, breathing new life into the aging town.

The revitalizaton can be traced to the efforts of one woman — Beth Bishop.

Beth and her husband, Cecil, got into the auction business 20 years ago in Big Sandy.

"Most people were ashamed of my 'rat hole' furniture in Big Sandy," Mrs. Bishop said. "I came to Gladwater in 1985 and saw it was hurting. I said to myself, 'I am going to do something about this.' "

Gladewater was indeed hurting, but it wasn't always that way.

"I've been here 54 years watching this town," said Hurshel Baker, owner of Keoun Music Company. "When that first oil well came in back in the late '20s to early '30s, people came here from all over the country.

"This was literally the only place in the United States to find work during the Depression," he said. "I remember when there was 26 oil refineries operating in the city limits. I earned 80 cents an hour back then working in the refinery, which wasn't bad money: We felt lucky to have work."

The oil boom continued, more or less, until the early 1980s.

Gladewater had, in the past, lived and died by oil.

The oil crunch hit hard, as the once thriving oil town had all but dried up.

"I remember back in 1984, when I was the president of the chamber of commerce," local banker George Meisenheimer said. "We opened 40 businesses and closed 60.

"This whole town was depressed from 1983 to 1986," he said.

The Bishops moved their auction business to Gladewater in October 1985 when the downtown area was about 75 percent vacant.

In 1986, Mrs. Bishop contacted Meisenheimer about renting some of the 13 vacant downtown buildings owned by First State Bank.

An agreement was reached for her to rent the old K. Wolens building for $400 per month. She later purchased the building, as well as others.

Mrs. Bishop then began asking her auction friends and dealers to come to Gladewater to set up shop. She was making them offers they couldn't refuse.

She told them she would pay the rent and utilities on the building, as well as run their booths, charging only a monthly fee for the floor space.

The Gladwater Antique Mall, as it is now called, once housed the town's post office, as well as oil and gas offices and a pool hall in the basement.

The antiques are displayed throughout the two-story buidling and merchandise is paid for at a centrally located cash register.

Dealers are paid twice a month for the merchandise they sell, and Mrs. Bishop calls them when their inventory gets low.

"The reason this worked so well is the dealers working together," she said. "We have dealers from some towns who wouldn't speak to each other, they come here and work side by side."

The large number of dealers requesting space forced her to open a second mall.

"At one time I was looking after 74 shops," Mrs. Bishop said.

She quickly decided to let some friends in on her good fortune, letting them take some of the burden off her back.

Today there are 15 antique shops and five antique malls operating in Gladewater. Each mall has a waiting list of dealers wanting a piece of the action.

The Saturday night auctions regularly attract 300-400 people.

Meisenheimer said the bank no longer owns any downtown buildings, a feat he credits to low interest rates, and making mortgage payments the same as rent payments.

Recent grand-openings have included an ice cream parlor, two tea rooms, a restaurant and a baking company.

Meisenheimer said the town's biggest need is a motel.

Daytime ship traffic resumes in oil-coated Corpus harbor

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — Two days after the worst oil spill in the history of the Port of Corpus Christi, the Coast Guard authorized daytime ship traffic, with one official predicting shipping would return to normal early this week.

The Coast Guard closed the port early Thursday after an oil tanker crashed into a dock about Wednesday night, cutting a gash from which about 645,000 gallons of oil spilled.

If the ship movement causes oil to move toward the harbor mouth, Coast Guard Capt. Anthony Alejandro said, floating barriers called "booms" — that had been opened to allow the ships to move — would be closed again until the oil is contained.

"We've taken care of most of the oil problem, and now we're looking limited movement" inside the harbor, Alejandro said. "If this works, we could have normal movement by Monday or Tuesday."

Alejandro said the daytime-only movement is necessary to spot pockets of oil that could be stirred up or lodged under ships.

Gov. Bill Clements toured the Inner Harbor by helicopter Friday, declaring that "God's blessing" and the skill of local oil spill workers had prevented major environmental problems in the Ship Channel.

"I think the Coast Guard needs to be commended for very prompt action," said the governor. "There's no contamination, no environmental problem in (Corpus Christi) Bay, and that's a blessing."

Meanwhile, a Coast Guard official Friday interviewed the pilot who had guided the tanker — the Nord Pacific, owned by Utara Shipping Private Ltd. of Singapore — to the oil dock. The official said no negligence has been determined.

Alejandro said Friday that cleanup crews have recovered about 412,230 gallons of the estimated 645,000 gallons of oil spilled when the Nord Pacific crashed into Southwestern Refinery's Oil Dock No. 3.

The accident, which occurred about a mile west of the Harbor Bridge on the south shore of the Corpus Christi Ship Channel, spilled the oil along more than two miles of Inner Harbor.

"We were very lucky," said Charlie Chandler, contaminate biologist with the Texas Parks & Wildlife Department. "If a spill had to occur, it couldn't have happened in a better place, because this area is not as environmentally sensitive as Nueces Bay or Corpus Christi Bay, where there are extensive grass flats and marsh flats that harbor fish and shrimp."

The water in the Inner Harbor has not been seriously affected by the spill, Texas Water Commission officials said, and no dead fish have been found.

Port officials said about 44 barges were inside the port, either waiting to load or unload cargoes, when trapped by the spill.

The port closure was not hurting refineries along the ship channel, refinery officials said, because they already have enough petroleum in stock.

Texas Business magazine suspends operations

DALLAS (AP) — Texas Business magazine, which for 12 years has chronicled the rise and most recently the fall of industries in the state, has itself become a casualty of the slumping economy.

The magazine suspended operations Friday, one week after celebrating its 12th anniversary and unveiling plans for a new look that included better graphics, a new logo and more photography.

All 18 members of the magazine staff have been released and few expect the publication to return to operations, said William G. Smith, executive editor.

"There is a chance some miracle might occur and some investor with deep pockets might come in and resuscitate us. We don't think the likelihood of that is very high, but we're holding out hope," Smith said.

But for now the magazine staff plans to stick around long enough to put out the August issue, which should be out by next week.

Smith said the magazine's predicament reflected what has happened to Texas businesses.

"We were glossing over our own truth. We got high on our own height," Smith said.

But when the bottom fell out on oil prices, it took many of the magazines' advertisers down as well.

"All of a sudden when oil prices went to below $10 a barrel, everybody's confidence went south," he said. Many of the publications' advertisers were connected to real estate, the banking industry and the hotel business, which also have suffered from the oil price slump.

"Our ad pages have been running about less than half of what they were two to three years ago," he said.

The magazine, with a circulatin of 60,000, is published by Commerce Publishing Co., a subsidiary of Yankee Publishing Co. based in Dublin N.H., which also produces the Old Farmer's Almanac.

Dallas-to-D.C. flight lands in Nashville

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — An American Airlines Boeing 767 en route to Washington Dulles Airport made a precautionary landing in Nashville after smoke was discovered in the cockpit, officials said Saturday.

"To my knowledge, no one was injured," said Martha Bradley, spokeswoman for the Metro Nashville Airport Authority. "The indication was that the plane landed safely, taxied to the gate and the passengers were unloaded."

Flight 338, carrying 109 passengers and eight crew members, landed at Nashville's airport Friday about 6:35 p.m. CDT.

The flight originated from Dallas-Ft. Worth International Airport, Ms. Bradley said.

The crew asked to land after it discovered smoke "emanating from a switch," said Al Becker, a spokesman at American Airline's headquarters in Fort Worth, Texas.

However, John Raymond, another spokesman for the airline, said the smoke apparently came from the air conditioning duct.

"They radioed and asked for a priority landing, brought the airplane in and taxied to the gate. We sent another plane form Raleigh-Durham for the passengers," Raymond said.

He said the airplane was thoroughly checked out and was operating again Saturday.

"We don't take any chances with airplanes," he said.

Man shot in scuffle

FORT WORTH (AP) — A police officer shot a man in the hand on Saturday after the man took the officer's gun in a scuffle and tried to shoot him, authorities sa

Sgt. Billy Samuel said officers were dispatched to the city's northside about 3:30 p.m. to investigate a call about a man who was sitting in a tree, sniffing something from a soft drink can.

TAX

Gifford, who doesn't place a great deal of creedence in year-to-date figures, said he'll be curious to see how the year plays out, particularly since oil prices began plunging about 1½ weeks ago.

City officials earlier projected its share of the sales tax at $7,450,000 and budgeted from that a conservative $7,325,000.

"The bottom would really have to fall out over the next couple of months for us not to reach that," the finance head remarked.

In fact, city officials estimate that Midland will see at least a 2 percent increase in tax income for 1989 to $7,525,000.

"But that projection was put together before this latest dramtic drop in oil prices," said Gifford. "Those figures will change if this continues."

But Gifford doubts that will be the case.

A strong population base, coupled the possibility of more jobs being relocated here are strong indicators, at least to him, that the city will not see significant drop in its tax share.

However, he admits that "geo-political" forces could throw a wrench in that theory, given the current glut of world crude — a glut he contends that rest firmly on the shoulders of Iran and Iraq.

As for the current numbers, Gifford says: ..."There's not a lot of reason to wail and weep...I was just glad to see it holding in. It's ($465,000) a good number."

Odessa man, 21, dies in surgery after gunshot wound to chest

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — A 21-year-old man died early Saturday morning during surgery after suffering a gunshot wound to the upper chest, Odessa Police said.

Byron O'Keefe Dickson was shot once with a small caliber handgun during a disturbance at an apartment in the La Promesa Del Norte complex on North Texas Street, reports said.

A resident called police to say a fight was in progress in the apartment and, subsequently, police heard over the telephone a gun being fired, reports said.

Officers found Dickson lying outside an apartment upon their arrival shortly after 9 p.m., reports said.

The victim died early Saturday morning during surgery to remove the bullet at Medical Center Hospital, said nursing supervisor Bernadette Fuentes.

Several persons have been questioned, but no arrests have been made, a police spokesman said.

Mobile home fire still unexplained

From Staff Reports

Midland County Fire Department officials are unsure of the cause of a fire that gutted a mobile home early Saturday.

The fire started in the living room of a trailer at 1510 W. Carter Ave. at 7:30 Saturday morning, according to Midland fireman David Holman.

No injuries were reported and extinguishing the fire took about 15 minutes, Holman said.

"The old saying 'The Army travels on its stomach' is true. But there are a lot more logistics now," such as moving fuel, munitions, spare parts, soldiers and equipment, Martinez said.

"I feel strongly about the National Guard. It's very necessary," he said, particularly since in today's peacetime the regular forces have been reduced in manpower.

"The citizen-soldiers' jobs are part-time," Martinez said. "We take it (the Guard) seriously. We train very hard when we are out here (in the field) and take time away from our families to ensure freedom for all Americans."

The esprit de corps within the all-volunteer National Guard is high, said Sgt. Mario Campos, a 37-year-old Houston radio announcer who is assigned to the Odessa field artillery unit.

"I think we have a better spirit than some of the regulars," Campos said.

Texas Army National Guard retired Maj. Gen. Otto Scherz of San Angelo said that the National Guard is getting "better all of the time" and is not the step-child of the regular Army.

And instead of getting the Army's "cast-off" equipment, the Guard is "getting the (military) equipment off of the same assembly lines" as is the regular Army.

"You will find more dedicated persons in the National Guard," Scherz said, "than you will in the regular. He (the Guardsman) has to put out more effort (in training sessions) and gives of his own time" in serving his country.

Contra support more vital than ever

Congress appears poised to resume military aid to Nicaragua's Contra rebels if the Sandinista government continues its renewed suppression of basic human rights.

In the last few days the Sandinistas, who had said they would move toward peace by restoring to the Nicaraguan people human rights that had been repressed, returned to their old communist ways by closing the newspaper La Prensa and the Catholic radio station, jailing more than 40 people including opposition leaders, and expelling U.S. Ambassador Richard Melton and eight other American diplomats.

It's obvious that what Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega says he will do and what he actually does are two very different things. And it's also obvious that when he believes he has the U.S. Congress going his way — withdrawing aid from the Contras and lapping up every "peace" initiative he professes — he will take full advantage of American naivete and crush as much life from the rebels as possible.

Congress has fallen for his tricks and smooth words more than once, the last time being early this year when it voted not to renew military aid to the Contras. That was a mistake. It seems that Ortega needs more than his own good will to keep moving toward restoration of human rights. What he needs is apparent — the threat of American military assistance to the rebel forces.

Americans want peace in Nicaragua as much as any people. And we don't want to involve our troops in the Nicaraguan fighting if such a move can be avoided. But it's plain that Ortega doesn't want to permit political debate or real freedoms for Nicaragua's people and as long as he opposes basic human rights, his government will be a destabilizing force to the entire Central American region and to Mexico. In that light, it definitely is a United States "problem", too.

Earlier this week, the Senate voted 91-4 for a resolution threatening a resumption of military aid if the Sandinistas continue to frustrate democratic reforms and abuse human rights. The House then voted 385-18 to condemn the Sandinistas' actions and urging other Central American nations to meet to assess the situation. That's a good starting point.

But it isn't likely that Ortega — or any Marxist regime — will bow to democratic reforms without being forced to do so.

But how convincing will it be to threaten Ortega with military aid if he recognizes that if he puts on a good show, the Congress will simply decide he's changed and withdraw the aid once again. At some point the rebel forces could be demoralized and weak enough to not be able to pose a true threat to the Sandinistas. When that point comes, no amount of military aid will be good enough and the Congress will have to start considering whether American troops are required.

The Congress should renew military aid — once again — to send two messages. First it would tell the Contras that Americans are still watching and willing to help if needed. Secondly it would tell Ortega that his ruse has failed and if he wants to hold onto power, he had better start reforming.

This time, however, Congress should remember the lesson it has learned about withdrawing aid from the Contras.

Lobbying for space may be required

WASHINGTON — Contractors on the U.S. space program routinely wage promotional campaigns to help the program get a big budget from Congress. But questions are being posed about whether Rockwell International's efforts in that direction have been completely voluntary.

Jack Anderson

A source within the space industry told us that the company's advertising and lobbying efforts are a result of pressure from the National Aeronautics and Space Administration. The source said Rockwell was "shaken down by NASA to do its lobbying."

"It wasn't that they were just doing this," the source said. "It was that NASA asked them to do it."

We have obtained an internal report from Rockwell. The document outlines suggested promotional steps, including advertising and lobbying, to help NASA win congressional approval for its 1989 budget.

Rockwell spokesmen said that the company's legislative activities are confidential and refused to discuss them.

NASA asked Congress for an $11.4 billion budget in 1989, but Congress is leaning toward an appropriation of up to $1 billion less. The cut would have only a small impact on the space shuttle program, but could mark the end of the space station.

Rockwell is a big contractor on the space shuttle program and is one of four companies participating in the design and construction of a multi-billion-dollar manned space station championed by the Reagan Administration. The other three include McDonnell Douglas Astronautics Co., General Electric's Astro-Space Division and Boeing Aerospace Co.

NASA's associate administrator of external relations, Hollister Cantus, meets weekly with the Washington, D.C., representatives for the space station contractors to discuss the budget process and the status of the space station plans. NASA and the private contractors both have a stake in seeing Congress approve a big space budget, but they pressure Congress in different ways. NASA puts in its budget requests and makes its case to Congress — then hopes for the best. The private contractors can mount expensive advertising campaigns to rally public support behind the budget and put pressure on Congress through the voters.

Last year Rockwell produced advertisements promoting the idea of a space station. The report of the Rockwell promotional task force includes the notation that Cantus of NASA suggested that the company rerun the ads this year.

Cantus told our reporter, Scott Sleek, that he was simply responding to questions from Rockwell about whether the company should develop new ads.

He said the allegations that NASA was shaking down Rockwell to lobby Congress were "ludicrous" and "laughable."

"There is no doubt about the fact that from time to time we have indicated to them that if they want a viable space program that it all depends on how they communicate that desire and that urgency to the Hill," Cantus said. "This is Washington. That's where the money comes from."

The money comes from Congress, but government agencies aren't supposed to spend their own money lobbying Congress, so they rely on private contractors to do that.

NASA contractors say publicly that advertising and lobbying efforts to boost the space program are not new.

But such hard-hitting promotional efforts are not typical of most government contractors. Unlike some controversial government budget items such as nuclear weapons or food stamps, the space program has enormous public appeal and is a natural for pitching on television when the budget is on the line.

McDonnell Douglas introduced a television ad last year that the CBS and ABC networks refused to run because it was "too controversial," according to McDonnell Douglas spokeswoman Susan Flowers. The company called the ad "Reds." It shows a space station floating across space as a narrator describes the research advances being made in space exploration. Then the camera closes in on a red star and Soviet emblem painted on the craft as the narrator asks, "Shouldn't we be there, too?"

Boeing launched an advertising campaign last year using the theme "America Needs the Space Station," according to Boeing public affairs director Joseph Vranich. The ads were aimed at encouraging people to write their representatives in Congress urging support for the space program.

Rockwell's own promotional campaign for the space budget was actually drawn up by the company's NASA Support Task Force.

Bentsen will give Bush problems, regardless

WASHINGTON — Tall and thin, with hair silver-gray like the patina of old family flatware, and benefiting from the best tailor in American politics, Lloyd Bentsen looks more than ever like a pewter statue of Bourgeois Virtue. To George Bush, Bentsen looks like a problem he counted on not having.

George F. Will

Bush's campaign has at most a one-track mind. Its idea has been to portray Michael Dukakis as a high-tax, anti-defense, criminal-coddling, doesn't-much-like-the-Pledge-of-Allegiance liberal. Now Dukakis has wrapped himself in the gray worsted of Bentsen's business conservatism. Anyway, Bush's plan was not working. In the two months he has spent pointing at Dukakis and exclaiming, "Eeeeek! — a liberal!," the percentage of Americans identifying Dukakis as a liberal has risen from 27 to 28 percent.

For the fifth time since 1932, there will be a Texan on the Democratic ticket. Counting Bush's three times, there will have been Texans on eight national tickets in the last 15 elections. In 1984, Walter Mondale reportedly had polls showing that Bentsen would not help much with the Herculean task of carrying Texas against Reagan. However, that indicated less about Bentsen than about how beyond help Mondale was.

If the Democrats' bilingual ticket (both candidates are fluent in Spanish; it remains to be seen if one of the Republican candidates will be fluent in English) carries Texas, it may also carry two other hard-hit states in the Oil Patch — Oklahoma and Louisiana. The three have 47 electoral votes, the same as California.

Whether or not Bentsen brings Texas to Dukakis, he will force Bush to expend on Texas precious resources of time and money that he will need to climb out of the hole he is in in California, which suddenly seems as crucial to Bush as it has seemed all along to Dukakis. The selection of Bentsen may turn Bush toward California Gov. George Deukmejian or — I know I am repeating myself — Peter Ueberroth.

Conservatives pretending to be scandalized by the ideological differences between Dukakis and Bentsen should be required to write on the blackboard 100 times "Reagan-Schweiker." (You don't remember? Reagan named Pennsylvania's liberal senator, Richard Schweiker, as his running mate on the eve of the 1976 convention in an attempt to derail the nomination of Gerald Ford.) Besides, those differences signify that Dukakis has seen the cliff he does not want to walk off.

In 1968 (Humphrey-Muskie), 1972 (McGovern-Eagleton, then McGovern-Shriver) and 1984 (Mondale-Ferraro), Democrats nominated political puree: perfectly homogenized tickets, liberal top and bottom. These tickets got 43, 38 and 41 percent, respectively.

Because Bentsen is 67, liberals can console themselves with the thought that he is unlikely to become a presidential candidate. But liberals who worry about Bentsen are accepting a caricature of him, and may themselves subscribe to a kind of caricature — liberalism of the early-1970s sort.

It has been said that politicians should have their ears full of grasshoppers, a result of keeping their ears close to the ground. It will be said that the only ground Bentsen's ears have been near is too well-manicured to admit grasshoppers — that it is a putting green at the Greenbrier or wherever else the Business Roundtable goes to earth for its confabulations. Do not believe it.

Texas is a tossed salad of American diversities. Two of its three largest cities have female mayors (Kathy Whitmire in Houston, Annette Strauss in Dallas — she is Jewish) and the third, San Antonio, has a Hispanic mayor, Henry Cisneros. Bentsen has carried this complex state three times, winning 53, 57 and 59 percent of the vote — rather more than can be found in boardrooms.

In 1970, he beat Bush with a large assist from rural Baptists, mostly Democrats who turned out to vote in a referendum on selling liquor by the drink. In his next two races, Bentsen won 60 percent of the rural vote. Mondale got 34 percent.

Michael Barone, author of "The Almanac of American Politics," compares Bentsen to an earlier Texan, Jesse Jones, the Houston banker who was FDR's commerce secretary and head of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. True New Dealers considered him too friendly to business. But, says Barone, since the early 1970s liberalism has changed to the traditional Texas Tory variety. It says that "government should help business be productive and maintain a safety net for the poor, but should not aggressively redistribute income or regulate business."

The sound echoing through political circles in the aftermath of the selection of Bentsen is the solid smack of seriousness. If it provokes Jesse Jackson to disruptive megalomania in Atlanta, that may serve Dukakis by underscoring his determination to do what is necessary. Voters like that. They are looking for seriousness.

Boston-Austin axis reappears for '88

AUSTIN — Since he began his long run for the Democratic presidential nomination, Michael Dukakis has opened dozens of speeches with references to John F. Kennedy, the last "son of Massachusetts" to win the White House.

Levine

Dukakis went on to draw further comparisons to the 1960 presidential contest. He compared the Reagan Era to Eisenhower's "eight rather amiable but sleepy years" in office. He pointed out that the Republicans in both cases have nominated their sitting vice presidents.

And when he came to Texas, Mike Dukakis added a third ingredient. He reminded Lone Star voters that Kennedy worked together with Texan Lyndon Johnson to "inspire a whole new generation of young people," "open the doors of opportunity to millions of black and brown and white Americans," revive the nation's "mighty economic engine" and "raise the stars and stripes so high they literally reached the moon."

In the months since his nomination became an all-but-accomplished fact, however, the Massachusetts governor has refused to cement a duplicate ticket for 1988. Yes, he was considering several Texans as his running mate. But no, he wouldn't commit.

With his decision to pick Sen. Lloyd Bentsen of Texas on Tuesday, however, Dukakis formally revived the "Boston-Austin" axis. In introducing Bentsen to his home-town crowd Tuesday, he made sure that everyone got the message.

"The parallels between 1960 and 1988 are very close indeed," he said. "A son of Massachusetts born in our home town, just miles from where Kitty and I live, winning that nomination, reaching out to the state of Texas and asking a great senator from the state of Texas to join him on the Democratic ticket.

"The Republicans in 1960 did what they're about to do in 1988, they nominated an incumbent Republican vice president. Jack Kennedy and Lyndon Johnson beat that incumbent Republican vice president in 1960 and Mike Dukakis and Lloyd Bentsen are going to beat him in nineteen hundred and eighty-eight."

Bentsen played the role as well. "The Massachusetts-Texas axis was good for the good of the country and good for the Democratic Party in 1960, and it's going to be a real winner in November of '88," he said.

Particularly with quasi-Texan George Bush heading the GOP ticket, however, Texas Republicans aren't so quick to accept a replay of 1960.

"Lyndon Johnson at that time had national stature as the (Senate) majority leader," Gov. Bill Clements told reporters within minutes of Bentsen's selection. "He had an interface with leadership all throughout the South and the West. Without Lyndon Johnson there was no way that Kennedy could have been elected."

"That's not true here," Clements added. "Lloyd Bentsen does not have that kind of stature either in the South or the West. He can't carry Texas. We're in for one whale of a battle, and he is doomed to failure."

• • •

OTHER THOUGHTS ON THE BOSTON-AUSTIN AXIS ... Since the development of the two-party system, Texans and Massachusettsans have run for president or vice president 15 times. Only once, when Tennessee's Andrew Jackson beat Massachusetts' John Quincy Adams in 1828, has any of those 15 candidates lost.

■ Bush could one-up the Democrats with an Austin-Boston-Austin connection by picking former Ambassador Anne Armstrong of Kingsville to join him on the ticket. Don't bet on it.

■ All this shows the importance of Texas and our 29 electoral votes. Both sides know the Democrats have never won the White House without carrying Texas. Look for all four candidates to spend a lot of time here in what could be the major battleground of the 1988 race.

As Bentsen said, "The fact that he (Dukakis) has chosen a senator from Texas, a senator from the South, shows that we're going to fight for every state in the union and we're going all out to win."

RUSSELL BAKER

Writing was simpler before amortization!

Whom the gods would madden, they first make writers. This leads inevitably to a requirement for typewriter ribbons. Cat's-paw that I am to these Olympian sadists, I had bought three typewriter ribbons scarcely 10 minutes before the Monday mail arrived with news that they would have to be amortized.

Russell Baker

Amortized! The very word leaves me mentally paralyzed. Always has. Maybe because it contains the word "mort." Other words that have "mort" in them are mortician, mortuary, rigor mortis and Morton Downey Jr.

On the other hand, maybe it's because I can't visualize an amortizing. Words seem friendlier, easier to understand, when you can visualize what they mean.

Take a word like "cat." You can visualize "cat." The minute you hear "cat" you can see a sneaky, furred, quadruped torturing a mouse to death. There is nothing abstract about "cat," whereas everything about "amortize" is abstract.

These illustrate the two categories of words: abstract words and stract words. There are two kinds of words because there are two kinds of minds: the abstract mind and the stract mind.

The abstract mind's favorite word is "eschatology." Mine is "55 percent." This is the royalty the teamsters' favorite author, Speaker Jim Wright, received for his recent book, despite an ancient publishing tradition never to go above 15 percent, though Shakespeare himself come to your door offering "Hamlet II."

My mind, of course, is strictly stract. Or, in medical pariance, a strictly stract structure. Such minds stop dead in their tracks when confronted with "amortize" and grapple with its incomprehensible abstractitude, struggling to visualize some deed, person, place or thing hidden in its meaninglessness.

My mind imagines a chemical process involving acids. For example: Subaltern of Hussars: As a Nobelist in horse disposal, Dr. Spinalzo, you are the only man alive who can help me. There are 10 dead horses in the colonel's tent. How can I dispose of them without a trace ere he returns from the charge?

Dr. Spinalzo: Applying 30 cc. of sulfuric acid will amortize them in a trice.

Where was I? Ah ... typewriter ribbons.

Three of them I'd bought at a cost of $10.19 when the mail arrived containing the latest bulletin from the Authors Guild, an organization dedicated to making the writer's lot a happy one, at least financially.

The bulletin dealt with the latest edicts issued by the federal tax police. Usually such stuff goes instantly to my trash can. Life being temporary, you can be a writer or you can be a tax accountant, but being both is impossible. So the bulletin was en route to the landfill when the words "typewriter ribbons" caught my eye.

"Most businesses are allowed to deduct currently their general overhead — office rent, typewriter ribbons, paper ..."

The latest tax pronunciamento, however, required writers — oh boy, there it was — "to amortize these expenses over three years."

That's when everything went black and I stared into the gentle and incredibly wise eyes of Dr. Spinalzo, Nobelist in typewriter ribbons.

"The old typewriter ribbons, Doc, you could make them last for three years, but with these new babies, they go around the spool once and you've got to throw them away."

"Won't do, my child," Dr. Spinalzo said. "The tax boys say you've got to capitalize the expense —"

"Capitalize the expense? Doc, I already capitalized to the tune of $10.19 to buy the ribbons. How do I capitalize that $10.19 now that I've blown it?"

"Shut up, my son, and listen. These people who speak so authoritatively of three-year capitalizings state that you may 'basket and deduct' the $10.19 in ribbons on a 50-25-25 percent amortization schedule over three years."

I had to basket my typewriter ribbons? "They didn't teach basketing at Famous Writers School. All I learned was how to put the ribbons in the typewriter without getting my fingers inked up."

"You never learned basketing? Never learned how to capitalize over three years? I suppose you never learned amortizing either."

"That's where you use sulfuric acid, right?"

"In the first year, put 15 cc. on your receipt for the $10.19. Seven and a half cc. in each of the next two years, and by the fourth year the receipt will be amortized."

I can't even remember to take my sanity pills twice a day. And they want me to remember to put seven and a half cc. of sulfuric acid on a $10.19 receipt year after next. Ah well, some great books have been written in prison.

BILL MODISETT

Selection of Bentsen has changed presidential race

Modisett

For the past week — and predictably for the next few months, intermittently — the talk in political circles has been how Michael Dukakis' choice of Sen. Lloyd Bentsen for a running mate has "changed" the presidential race.

No, it's not a makeover of the Kennedy-Johnson Massachusetts-Texas combination of 1960. Dukakis is from Massachusetts and Bentsen definitely is from Texas, but the parallels end just about there. Internationally, domestically, and otherwise, the situation we face today is much different. But, yes, the Bentsen selection did change the race in a number of important ways:

■ All of a sudden, a politician not widely viewed as having the necessary expertise in national and international matters to lead the country effectively has pulled into his organization a national figure who obviously is highly qualified in a number of areas.

■ The selection of Bentsen should give the Democratic Party something it has been needing for a long time — a stabilizing force. For years, the party has seemingly bent over backwards trying to please every special interest group and in the process has virtually lost its identity. It's no longer viewed as the "common man's party" but instead the fringe groups' party. Dukakis' selection of Bentsen, a moderate Democrat, should transmit the message that the governor still wants the party to offer a haven for a wide spectrum of political views falling under the canopy of the Democratic label. And while it won't be the Democratic Party of old, in that regard the vice presidential choice should serve as the impetus for the party to debate political direction and formulate a platform that is more moderate and meets the needs of more people still holding to the party label.

■ Choosing Bentsen should make it clear to the Republicans, who have controlled the White House for eight years, that the race is far from over this year and if the GOP hopes to maintain that faith with the American electorate, it had better get busy designing an agenda that elucidates the party's view of the future and ways to tackle major issues such as war and peace, international relations, the conquest of space, environmental issues, the federal deficit, joblessness, etc.

Of course, one good way for Republicans to put a reverse spin on the "ball" following the Dukakis announcement would be for George Bush to pick a running mate who would steal some of the Democrats' thunder, somebody like former United Nations ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick or Gen. Colin Powell, a black who is President Reagan's national security adviser and an expert on the Soviet Union. If either was willing to serve, they would not only provide intelligent, courageous leadership but also give the Bush ticket the prospect of taking a woman or a black to the White House. And in that regard, the Republicans truly would embody the party of the masses — favoring limited government, low taxation, strong national defense, good education and strong support for civil rights.

But Bush obviously isn't going to rush into any decision or be forced into any by the Democrats. And he shouldn't.

The ballgame isn't over until the last out. Dukakis just scored big, but Bush has another at bat — and I suspect a strong designated hitter.

I think the "boring" presidential election year is beginning to change its demeanor — and the American public will benefit!

George Bush is poor excuse for 'oilman'

This letter is in response to Shellie Williams' letter that appeared in the Sunday, July 10th issue.

Since when can George Bush be termed an "oilman" and, especially a "Texan?" An oilman would generally be in favor of helping his industry. The oil industry has never seen darker days, with higher unemployment, than in the Reagan-Bush years. George Bush, while in the second most powerful office in this country, has done nothing to help the oil industry. In fact, his public statements have shown that he has not and will not help the oil industry while he is in office if, Heaven help us, if he is elected. George Bush has publicly stated that he is:

1. Against higher oil prices
2. For increased grain alcohol production and use as automobile fuel, which would help Midwest farmers and hurt oil producers
3. Against offshore exploratory drilling in certain areas

How could these be the policies of an "oilman?" These are more the policies of an Eastern wolf masquerading in Texas sheep's clothing, waiting and hoping to gobble up and ruin the remains of a once vital oil industry.

My hat is off to Sen. Lloyd Bentsen for seeing through George Bush's transparent disguise. It is better to try a new regime than to elect one which was a demonstrable failure to the oil industry.

Again blacks locked out of American Dream

Once again it has been proven that if you are not a male Anglo-Saxon in these good old United States you cannot become president. The American Dream will elude you. What American Dream? Such hypocrisy.

I refer to the upcoming election and Gov. Dukakis' choice for a running mate, Sen. Lloyd Bentsen.

In 1984 I served as the Midland County coordinator for the Jesse Jackson for President campaign (I was out of town working this time around). Through our leader, Rev. Jackson, we brought about awareness but still did not get a "piece of the pie." Instead we got slapped in the face by "where's the beef" Walter Mondale in that Jesse was not even interviewed as a gesture of good faith for vice president. I refuse to support any party who disrespects my leader. To express my contempt for Mondale I voted for Ronald Reagan.

I refuse to be a puppet for the so-called Democrat Party. I vote for you but when it comes time to vote for me you go the other way because I'm black.

If Jesse were Anglo-Saxon rather than black there is no dispute but that he would be our next president.

Dukakis' disrespect for Jesse, which should be considered disrespect for all of his supporters in that he did not select Jesse as his running mate, did not do him the courtesy of privately informing him of his choice for vice president, is the straw that broke the camel's back. What an insult to our intelligence!

It is time that blacks stop saying, "I am a Democrat," "I am a Republican." Neither are our party. We don't have one. Maybe we should form our own. It's time for blacks to stop voting just for the sake of voting and for sure to stop trying to identify with the Democratic Party.

Thinking blacks (who have depth) will do as I am going to do in November — sit it out, stay away from the polls. Let the Anglo-Saxons fight it out among themselves. Why are we voting?

It is time for blacks to stop encouraging their children to grow up and become president of the United States. Stop perpetuating that lie, for never in a million years will it happen unless they are going to change themselves into male Anglo-Saxons. If you're black, get back!

Jesse is not asking to be given one thing. He earned the second slot on the ticket.

I am a Jackson supporter, not a party supporter. The Democrats cannot get my vote. My vote is important to me.

SPEAKING OUT

Why should government support science research?

By TONY A. MARTIN

Tony A. Martin formerly served as chairman of the board of First City National Bank. He retired from that position in February, 1987.

A funny thing happened to your tax dollars the other day.

While you were working hard to make enough money to provide food, clothing and shelter for your family and pay your taxes, the Congress of the United States was throwing your money — your tax dollars — around like it was confetti at a parade.

On June 17, 1988, the Senate of the United States, in its pomposity, authorized the spending of 12.758 billion dollars ($12,758,000,000.00) of your money "... to strengthen national economic productivity and competitiveness through the programs of the National Science Foundation, and to be sure these programs are adequately funded."

Well, golly — let me tell you what these "programs" are and then you be the judge of whether your senators and representatives are really trying to balance the budget and be responsible stewards of your money.

Quoting from Page S8078 of the Congressional Record of June 17, 1988, " ... (b) Authorization for Fiscal Year 1989. There is authorized to be appropriated to the Foundation $2,050,000,000.00 for fiscal year 1989. Such funds shall be available for the following program categories:

(1) Research and Related Activities, $1,658,000,000.00, which shall be available for the following subcategories:

(A) Mathematical and Physical Sciences, $507,761,000.00.

(B) Engineering, $197,964,000.00, of which $4,400,000.00 shall be available for Ocean Engineering Systems.

(C) Biological, Behavorial, and Social Sciences, $288,737,000.00.

(D) Geosciences, $320,876,000.00.

(E) Computer and Information Science and Engineering, $149,126,000.00.

(F) Scientific, Technological, and International Affairs, $56,986,000.00 ....

(G) Distributed Programs, $9,000,000.00 (in addition to amounts authorized in (A) through (F) ....

(H) Science and Technology Research Centers, $30,000,000.00.

(I) Program Development and Management, $95,550,000.00

(2) Academic Research Facilities Modernization, $80,000,000.00.

(3) United States Antarctic Program, $141,000,000.00.

(4) Science and Engineering Education, $171,000,000.00, ...

(c) Further Authorizations. There is authorized to be appropriated to the Foundation —

(1) For the fiscal year 1990, $2,158,000,000.00.

(2) For the fiscal year 1991, $2,474,000,000.00.

(3) For the fiscal year 1992, $2,831,000,000.00.

(4) For the fiscal year 1993, $3,245,000,000.00."

Are these matters with which our federal government needs to be so massively involved? What do these senators think the private sector is doing and has been doing for 200 years? Who do they think created the society we live in and that has the highest standard of living in the world? Certainly it was not the federal government!

And how does the Senate of the United States or any other group of people know how much money will be needed for these "programs" in the years 1990, 1991, 1992 and 1993?

Certainly these senators don't know. Their subalterns professed to know and the senators voted for it...all but one, that is. Sen. William Proxmire (D-Wis.) was the lone dissenting vote. A voice in the wilderness, and you the people should know.

A trillion dollar federal debt, and the Senate of the United States spends billions of your tax dollars like funny money.

Will they ever balance the budget? Can we ever pay the national debt? Or will Congress just continue to blame everything on the president, while the president blames it all on the Congress?

Gorbachev gets impatient with European foot-dragging on talks

Lewis

BRUSSELS — Talk about a more stable European security relation is burgeoning, but it isn't getting anywhere yet. Mikhail Gorbachev sounds impatient. Now he offers pan-European summit talks, like his Reykjavik meeting with Ronald Reagan, and removal of 72 U.S. fighter-bombers in return for withdrawal of some Soviet planes in Eastern Europe.

These are bad signs when the general East-West atmosphere is improving. A spectacular European super-summit could only compound the difficulties in the way of getting serious about conventional arms talks.

Gorbachev keeps referring to Reykjavik as a successful breakthrough. Talks with Soviet officials in Moscow showed that only a few seem aware of what a fiasco it was considered in Western Europe and by many Americans.

Reykjavik remains a dirty word that sends shivers through Western chanceries. It makes you wonder what top advisers like Anatoly Dobrynin, long Soviet ambassador to Washington, are telling their boss. Or do they think the Gorbachev charm factor has so swept Western publics that the governments can be overwhelmed without serious negotiations?

The plane proposal is even trickier. The U.S. has agreed to remove 72 F-16s from Spain, and Italy has agreed to provide them a base. They are part of Western "forward-based systems," which have been a major controversy in East-West arms control for well over a decade. The Russians finally accepted leaving them out of the medium-range missile negotiations, but are now trying a new approach, taking advantage of Spanish and Italian politics.

The NATO position is that planes shouldn't be included in conventional reduction talks either, on the grounds that the real issue is to cut the capacity to "seize and hold territory," which aircraft can't do. This strikes me as a hypocritical argument. Planes are certainly an integral part of battle forces, essential to surprise attack.

Sooner or later, they will have to be included. But NATO is having a hard time getting its 16 governments with their varied domestic political arguments together, and Moscow knows it. Brussels plans to start off negotiating by refusing to include the planes, focusing on the main problem — which for NATO is the huge concentration of tanks and artillery facing it and poised for rapid advance.

The Russians have proposed — in the U.N., but not yet in the Vienna conference on launching conventional arms talks — to begin with a well-monitored count of what each side has, from the Atlantic to the Urals. NATO sees traps in that idea, although it is a significant advance in the Soviet position on on-site verification.

There are a lot of complex, specific problems at issue. Moscow is having trouble with Romania, which is holding up the human rights section of the Vienna conference. The West wants this concluded before moving on to new disarmament sessions.

But the central points are that NATO wants to eliminate Soviet conventional superiority and retain some nuclear arms in Europe, since the Kremlin will continue to threaten Western Europe with nuclear weapons. The Russians keep pushing to denuclearize Europe. They talk about shifting to "defensive" strategies, incapable of aggression. Given the geography, Moscow could certainly move in that direction, NATO feels. But the West couldn't cut very much and still maintain a coherent defense if the Russians shifted back.

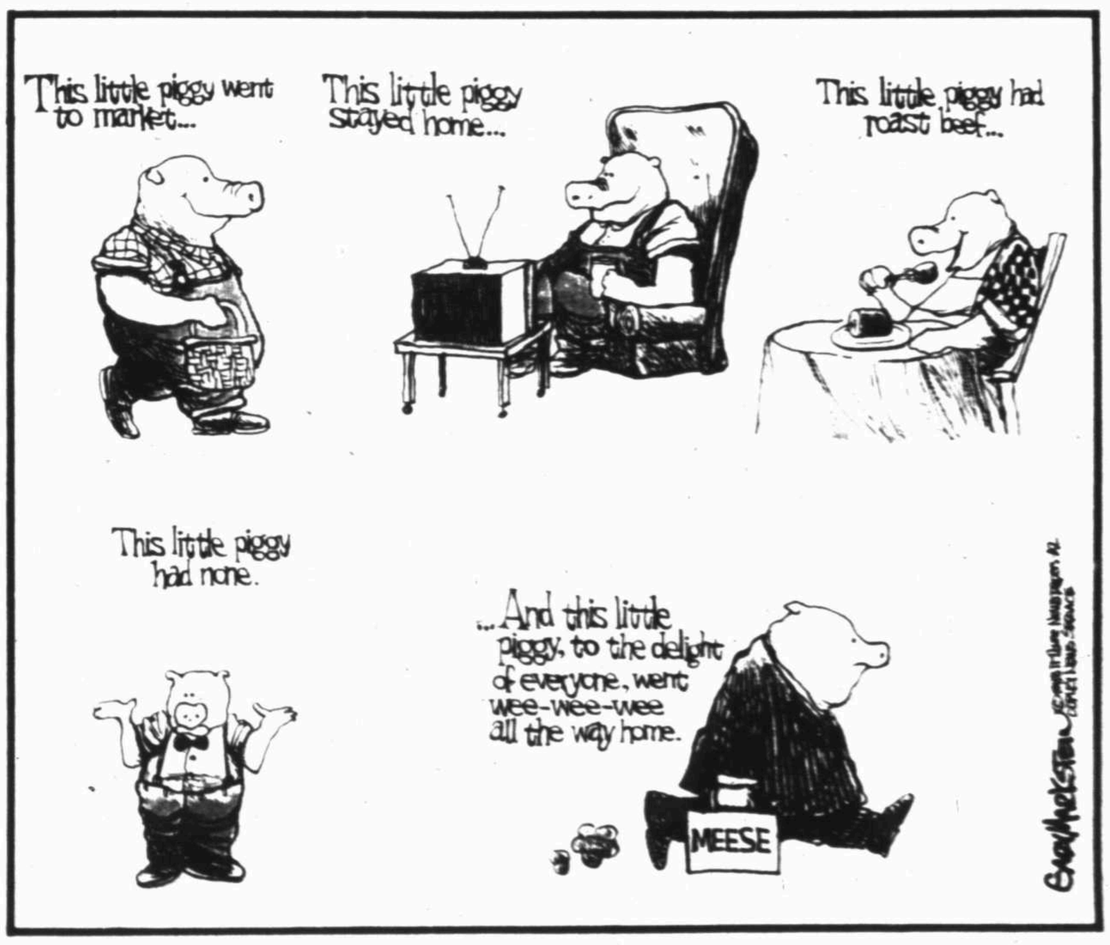

This is an encouraging but difficult period in East-West relations. The prospect of bringing the cold war to an end reopens all kinds of assumptions without providing new answers. What will happen in Eastern Europe? What will be Germany's priorities? It is possible to glimpse a much better, safer Europe over the horizon but it is still hard to see how to get there without serious dangers.

Gorbachev isn't reassuring when he calls for leaping ahead to his vision of a "common European house" without any blueprint or building plan. It is too reminiscent of the old Soviet line demanding "general and complete disarmament" in the public debate, alongside the inexorable Soviet military buildup. Real security through disarmament has to come in balanced, clearly visible steps.

NATO dawdles, overly fearful that Western voters will be carried away with vague promises and refuse to support needed defenses in the meantime. The propaganda game and the search for solid achievement still go on at cross purposes. Certainly it is in the interest of both sides to have relief from the arms burden, but it won't be achieved by sloganeering.

The best bet is to get negotiators to the table, and hold the rhetorical fire.

Lloyd Bentsen good choice as Dukakis' running mate

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

SAN FRANCISCO — Democratic presidential candidate Michael Dukakis' selection of Texas Senator Lloyd Bentsen as his running mate was a good choice for the Massachusetts governor politically, and for the country generally if the Democrats win the White House in November.

The 67-year-old patrician southern gentleman has had an outstanding record in war and peace. Enlisting as a private in the Army in 1942, he rose to the rank of colonel, flew 50 missions over Europe as an Army Air Corps B-24 bomber squadron leader, was awarded the Distinguished Flying Cross and the Air Medal with three oak leaf clusters.

During the 18 years he has served in the Senate, he has won the respect of both moderate Democrats and Republicans as a rational, highly intelligent fiscal conservative who also supported such projects as the welfare reform program that passed the Senate last month, the "catastrophic" medical costs bill President Ronald Reagan recently signed, the foreign trade bill aimed at protecting American exporters from unfair trade practices, and legislation assuring workers 60 days advance notice on plant closings.

Bentsen's deep commitment to civil rights goes back to the 1940s, when he was one of only seven southern House members to vote for repeal of the poll tax. In 1963, a year before Congress prohibited discrimination in public accommodations, he was the first white owner of a major hotel in Houston to voluntarily welcome black customers.

He joined the liberals in urging early withdrawal of U.S. troops from Vietnam in 1971. He later sponsored the War Powers Resolution to limit a president's ability to use U.S. combat forces overseas without congressional support. He unsuccessfully urged implementation of that resolution in 1983 to thwart the ill-fated deployment of U.S. Marines in Beirut.

However, if confirmed by the Democratic National Convention in Atlanta this coming week, he will be the most conservative democratic nominee for vice-president in a generation. The Washington Post called him a "Texas Tory Democrat."

Close friends of the distinguished Senator say his soft-spoken, gracious manners belie the tough fighting spirit that becomes apparent when he is doggedly determined to achieve an objective.

On foreign affairs and national security, he has been a hardliner since the early days of the Cold War. He even suggested in 1950 that President Harry Truman threaten the North Korean Communist regime with the atomic bomb if it didn't stop its invasion of South Korea. He has supported military aid to the Nicaraguan freedom fighters, production of the MX missile and the B-1 bomber.

A shrewd, innovative real estate and oil man in Texas, he is a strong supporter of incentives for business enterprise, leading congressional battles for accelerated depreciation and higher investment tax credits.

Bentsen was one of the most important congressional leaders in the 1978-81 drive to cut corporate and capital gains taxes, which became central elements in Reagan's economic recovery program. No other Democratic senator was more supportive of the Republican president in 1981 than Bentsen.

It is a tribute to the Massachusetts governor's political sagacity that he chose this Establishment-experienced, business-oriented scion of one of the richest and most prominent families in South Texas to offset Vice President George Bush's effort to portray the Democratic presidential candidate as an anti-business, weak-on-defense liberal. It surely promises a horse race in Texas. In more than a century, no Democrat has won the presidency without carrying that state, whose 29 electoral votes are third only to California and New York.

Winning Texas, however, won't assure the Democratic ticket national victory. It might if the roles were reversed. Sen. Bentsen has far more experience in national and foreign affairs than the Massachusetts governor, and he certainly looks more presidential, but in November the American people will be voting mainly for the man they prefer as president — not for the second man on the ticket.

Nevertheless, Gov. Dukakis' selection of Sen. Bentsen was a very brilliant move to solve the Jesse Jackson problem. I never thought the latter was presidential timber — not because he is black — but because of what the liberal-oriented New Republic magazine described as "ice cold questions about his character and his methods."

EDUCATION IN BRIEF

TSTI offering 'Sneak Preview'

High school students and their families who would like to visit Texas State Technical Institute and its training programs are invited to visit the campus during TSTI's upcoming "Sneak Preview" weekend.

The annual open house will be held from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Friday, July 22, and 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. Saturday, July 23. The event features instructional program booths, tours and visits with faculty and administrators. Representatives from the offices of admissions, financial aid, housing and registration will be available to provide assistance to prospective students. Students wishing to register at this time, may do so. The campus library and book store will also be open.

Visitors should come to the Student Center on Campus Drive for registration, information and meal tickets. A complimentary chuckwagon-style lunch will be served to all visitors on Friday and Saturday. Although accommodations will not be available on campus, visitors wishing to stay in Waco overnight may inquire at the information booth for directions to nearby motels.

For additional information, please call the Campus Information Office, toll free, at 1-800-792-TSTI, or (817) 799-3611, ext. 2250.

Museum classes open

There are still openings in several classes scheduled for the Museum of the Southwest's Museum School for children.

ARTSmart is the theme of the summer session which includes hands-on learning in abstract sills in observation, visual perception, spontaneity, and abstract thinking. One archaeology class also will be taught.

Weaving, 6 to 8 year olds, 11 a.m. to 12 noon, July 25 through 29.

Watercolor, 9 to 10 a.m., August 1 through 5, involving new ways to use watercolor paints.

Masks and Mobiles, 10:30 to 11:30 a.m., August 1 through 5, designed and made from personal "treasures" and found objects.

Handbuilt Pots, 12:15 to 1:15, August 1 through 5, using simple tools as the Indians did; building and decorating slab and coil vessels.

Digging Up the Past, 8 to 12 years old, 9 to 10:15 a.m. August 8 to 12; this class will be held in conjuction with the Museum's exhibition, Prehistoric Plainsmen: Archaeology of the Midland Area, and will involve "shoebox excavation" in learning archaeological methods. Also, pictographs and petroglyphs will be studied and created by the students. A "mini-dig" is planned.

Children are asked to wear comfortable, washable clothing and shoes.

Children may be registered at the Museum of the Southwest. Fees are $22.50 for Museum members and $25 for non-members for each class. Scholarships are also available.

For information call Marilyn Bassinger at the Museum, 683-2882.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

Choose your classes, do your paperwork, pay your fees...

By H.A. TUCK

Tuck

OK, students, pay attention to this announcement. If you were enrolled during the 1988 Spring Semester and plan to take credit courses during the 1988 Fall Semester, you need to early register this week.

You should come to the Student Center in the following alphabetical order: A-E on Monday, July 18; F-L on Tuesday, July 19; M-R on Wednesday, July 20; and S-Z on Thursday, July 21. Hours will be 7 a.m. to 5 p.m. each day.

When you come, you can select your classes and class meeting times, get all your paperwork done...and even pay your fees. That will be the end of registration if you do all those things.

For the three weeks after that, everyone who wasn't enrolled last spring can early register. The same alphabetical order and hours will be in effect. The only change, which goes into effect Aug. 1, will be that prospective students will come to the Student Services Office in the Administration Building rather than the Student Center.

Those who don't early register will need to come in the week of Aug. 15 to obtain a time permit and then go through the registration process on Aug. 23 or 24. And those who early register and don't pay their fees by Aug. 18 will have to come to the gym and re-register.

Any questions? Good, now get out paper and pencils for a pop quiz.

All students eligible to receive Abell-Hanger Foundation Scholarships or other financial aid of any type need to bring their certification letters, federal documents, plus high school transcripts in the case of 1988 high school graduates. All these students need to visit with Bill Burns, financial aid director, during their early registration.

To get an appointment with Burns, call 685-4501.

If you're confused by any of this, call 685-4501 and the nice folks in that office will help answer your questions.

While you are waiting for your turn to come up in the registration process, you can obtain a copy of the fall course bulletin at any Midland bank, the Midland County Library, or the Midland Chamber of Commerce office. That will help you determine in advance what courses you want to take, and at what time.

The bulletin also includes a list of the non-credit Continuing Education classes being offered this fall.

• • •

Despite rain that kept some people away, the Summer II registration went well as a small test run of the new registration process. Those who missed out because of the downpour got registered last week. The final count isn't in yet, but the student total for Summer II is above last year's count.

• • •

Student Activities Director Cheryl Franklin is relaxing a bit this week after completing a very successful "Project Choice" in cooperation with the Joint Training Partnership Act. She was in charge of the six-week program that brought about 20 high school girls to the campus daily for training and observation, to help the young ladies learn more about job skills and education required for success. The program even included a week living in the college dorms, so the students could learn about living away from home.

• • •

And MC basketball coach Reggie Franklin had a gym-full of boys and girls for his first Champions Basketball Camp last week. Both boys and girls participated in the daily regimen of basketball drills and practice games. Assisting with the camp were assistant coach George Walker, athletic director Delmor Poss and Conroe High School coach Harold Wilder, formerly coach of the Howard College Hawks.

There are four Continuing Education classes starting this week; perhaps one of them is for you.

Joe Salman is teaching Bridge II, for those who already understand the basics of the game. The class meets Monday and Thursday from 7-9 p.m. through Aug. 11 at a cost of $29.

Aerobic Dance will keep you fit, but out of the sun since it meets from 7-8:30 p.m. on Tuesday and Thursday. The class ends Aug. 4 and the fee is $17. Susan Scribner is the instructor.

If you are going to live in West Texas, you need to learn Country and Western Dance and Frieda Crawford can teach you how in just three weeks. The class meets from 7-8:30 p.m. on Tuesday and Thursday. Fee is $17.

Or in just two nights you can learn how to redecorate your kitchen. Pam Brady is the instructor on Tuesday and Thursday from 7-9 p.m. Cost is just $7.

To enroll, just visit the Continuing Education Office in the Administration Building Monday between 7 a.m. and 8 p.m. More information is available by calling 685-4518.

Coming up the following week is a decorating class in Flooring. It meets one night, on Thursday, July 28, from 7-9 p.m. Cost is $7 and Pam Brady is the instructor.

H.A. Tuck is public relations director at Midland College.

Early registration system changes tested, pass into practice at MC

From Staff Reports

A new system and a new location characterize Midland College's early registration system, which is being instituted for the 1988 Fall Semester.

The early registration begins Monday.

"During a trial run for the Summer II Session, the system worked extremely well," said Dr. Don Cates, associate dean of students and registrar. "We feel this system will be easier for the students, since it can assure them a place in classes and can eliminate a second visit to complete registration."

Only those students who were enrolled in credit courses during the 1988 Spring Semester will taking part in the early registration for the first week. They can enroll for specific classes and, if they wish, pay their fees during one visit. Working with an alphabetical system, those students should visit the Student Center between 7 a.m. and 5 p.m. in this order: A-E Monday, July 18; F-L Tuesday, July 19; M-R Wednesday, July 20; and S-Z Thursday, July 21.

All persons wishing to enroll for fall classes, who were not enrolled during the 1988 Spring term, may early register according to this schedule: A-E on Monday, July 25, Aug. 1 or Aug. 8; F-L on Tuesday, July 26, Aug. 2 or Aug. 9; M-R on Wednesday, July 27, Aug. 3 or Aug. 10; and S-Z on Thursday, July 28, Aug. 4 or Aug. 11. During the first week for these students, early registration will be in the Student Center.

The following two weeks will be in the Student Services Office, Administration Building. Hours will be 7 a.m.-5 p.m.

Students who early register may pay their fees as late as Thursday, Aug. 11. Those who do not pay their fees by that time will be dropped from class rolls and would have to attend official registration.

Persons who do not early register may obtain registration time permits during the week of Aug. 15-18. They, along with those who didn't pay fees early, will be enrolled on Aug. 23 or 24, during registration in the Physical Education Building.

"All students eligible for Abell-Hanger Foundation Scholarships or other scholarships or grants must bring their eligibility forms and acceptance letters with them to early registration. Students enrolling for the first time as Abell-Hanger recipients must bring copies of their high school transcripts with them," noted Bill Burns, financial aid director.

Bulletins listing fall credit and non-credit classes are available at all Midland banks, Midland Country Library, and the Midland Chamber of Commerce office.

Midland College's fall semester classes begin Monday, Aug. 29. About 4,000 students are expected to enroll for credit courses this fall.

Information regarding class offerings and the registration process is available by calling 685-4501.

Floodwater release boosts recreation

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Recreational outfitters on the lower Guadalupe River said they expected a busy weekend since the flow rate of the river more than tripled this week by the release of floodwaters from Canyon Lake.

The lower Guadalupe was flowing at a rate of 781 cubic feet per second Friday, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers said. For much of the summer the river, a popular recreational spot, had been moving at a sluggish 200 cfs.

"We've had more phone calls," said John Guenzel, owner of Rio Raft Co. "We've had calls from Houston, Dallas — all over. People have been waiting for some decent water. I think the word will spread."

MAKING YOUR FINANCES FIT

Bankruptcy - Pro and Con

Faced with mounting debt, and perhaps foreclosure on a home, some individuals file for bankruptcy as the only way to solve their debt problems. But this is a serious step and should be considered only as a last resort. And even in bankruptcy, certain obligations are not wiped out, such as alimony and child support, student loans and some taxes.

The cost of bankruptcy is considerable, not only in legal fees, but in the stigma that may remain on a credit record for up to 10 years. A bankruptcy can affect the chances of getting a home mortgage, an auto loan, or other credit. Some landlords will refuse a person with a bad credit record. Even some employers feel that bankruptcy is a sign of irresponsibility.

Is there an alternative? A nonprofit credit counselor may be able to work out a repayment schedule with creditors that can eliminate the debt and save the borrower's reputation.

HOW THEY VOTED

Congressional Quarterly

WASHINGTON — Votes of area members of Congress on key issues during the week ending July 8, 1988.

KEY SENATE VOTES

Senate OKs advance notice of plant closings. Despite seven days of slow debate and two attempts to end a Republican-led filibuster, the Senate July 6 easily approved, 72-23, a bill to require advance notice of plant closings or mass layoffs. The margin exceeds the two-thirds majority needed to override a possible presidential veto.

The measure would require businesses that employ more than 100 workers to give 60 days' advance notice before they shut down or lay off employees for more than six months. Notice also would be required if a layoff were to cause 50 or more workers at one site to lose their jobs and if affected workers constituted one-third or more of the work force at a site.

Senate leaders introduced the plant-closing notice legislation last month in response to President Reagan's May 24 veto of the omnibus trade bill, which included plant-closing language he opposed.

The House is expected to vote on the plant-closing notice bill next week. Democratic House leaders hope Senate passage will add momentum in the House, but opposition from Southern Democrats may bring a much closer vote than in the Senate.

Supporters of the plant-closing bill cited statistics pointing to the loss of some 400,000 jobs due to plant closings and mass layoffs in 1987 — often with little or no advance notice. The effects of shutdowns or layoffs on individual workers, as well as their surrounding communities, they asserted, must be considered. "It is time for us to mandate the common decency of two months advance warning for these workers," said Howard M. Metzenbaum, D-Ohio. "It is the right thing to do.'

Opponents of the bill complained that the measure would be costly to workers and employers, at an estimated $1 billion to $2 billion per year in administrative costs and employer penalties. "And who is the real loser?" asked Orrin G. Hatch, R-Utah. "It is the American worker.

In the long run, the working men and women of America will pay for this (bill)...through reduced wages, reduced benefits, reduced work hours, lost jobs and higher prices.'

Voting for the plant-closing bill: Bentsen (D).

Voting against: Gramm (R).

Senate overwhelmingly passes foreign aid bill. With little in the way of controversial issues to resolve this year, the Senate July 7 easily passed, 76-15, a $14.3 billion foreign-aid spending bill for fiscal 1989. The vote was the first in the Senate on a stand-alone foreign-aid appropriations bill since 1981.

In recent years, Congress has lumped foreign aid into catchall spending bills. However, the House broke that trend May 25, when it passed its version of a $14.3 billion foreign-aid spending bill for fiscal 1989.

The measure missed many of the usual skirmishes it encounters in Congress because this year's spending issues were resolved last fall by the budget summit agreement between President Reagan and congressional leaders. The bill would provide around $1.9 billion in military aid, $4.5 billion in economic support and $715 million to subsidize foreign purchases of U.S. goods.

The legislation next goes to a House-Senate conference, where provision differences between the two bills will be resolved.

Supporters of the spending bill said the measure "represents a thoughtful, balanced approach" to the needs of U.S. allies around the world and showed the willingness of the United States to uphold prior commitments. They also favored the bill's continued financial support for the controversial World Bank. "(T)oday, the World Bank is an indispensable instrument of macroeconomic change in the fight against poverty, hunger and illiteracy around the world," said Daniel K. Inouye, D-Hawaii.

Opponents of the measure objected primarily to specific sections in the bill — such as providing funds to the World Bank — rather than the bill as a whole. "We should not write our Treasury checks to the World Bank," stated Gordon J. Humphrey, R-N.H. "If we are going to spend funds of American taxpayers in helping other nations, let us do it directly, so we can have complete control over the expenditures.'

Voting for the foreign-aid spending bill: Gramm (R).

Voting against: None.

Not Voting: Bentsen (D).

Senate rejects expanded D.C. abortion amendment. The Senate July 7 spent little time in killing, 51-34, an amendment to its fiscal 1989 District of Columbia appropriations bill that would bar the use of federal funds and local taxes for abortions. This means that the District of Columbia could continue to use locally-raised funds for abortions if this fiscal 1989 spending bill becomes law.

Since 1980, the D.C. appropriations bill has contained language prohibiting the use of federal funds for abortions except in the case of rape, incest or when the life of the mother is in danger.

The defeated amendment was similar to an amendment attached to the fiscal 1989 D.C. spending bill passed by the House June 28. Without the amendment, the Senate spending measure would bar the District from using federal funds, but not local funds, for abortions.

Voting to kill the more-restrictive D.C. abortion amendment: None.

Voting against: Gramm (R).

Not Voting: Bentsen (D).

No major House votes were recorded.

Daily aerobics give most benefit

NEW YORK (AP) — An estimated 30 to 60 minutes of daily aerobic exercise gives close to maximum benefit in terms of preventing heart attacks, according to the Reebok Aerobic Information Bureau.

It says researchers at the University of Minnesota studied heart attack risk and exercise patterns in 12,138 middle-aged men. In addition, they found that there was little difference in heart disease risk between those who did light exercise and those who exercised strenuously.

MAKING THE GRADE

Jennifer McCormick, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Leonard McCormick of Midland, and sophomore at Midland High School, has been selected to attend high school in Germany next year as a Congress-Bundestag Youth Exchange student.

Conceived five years ago, The Congress-Bundestag Exchange Program is funded by members of the U.S. Congress and the German Bundestag (parliament) and is designed to strengthen ties between the successor generations of each country.

The program enables students like Jennifer to expand their perspectives and awareness of German and American social, economic and political institutions while extending friendship across international boundaries.

The newly married Janet Jones and Wayne Gretzky leave Edmonton, Alberta, Canada's St. Joseph's Basilica.

Onlookers cheer Canadian hockey star, actress bride

EDMONTON, Alberta (AP) — As thousands of onlookers cheered wildly, hockey superstar Wayne Gretzky and actress Janet Jones emerged from a downtown church Saturday as husband and wife.

The couple were married in an elaborate ceremony that drew about 650 guests, a throng of casually dressed well-wishers outside the church, and hundreds of journalists.

Crowds lined up several deep on both sides of Jasper Avenue, the main street in the Alberta capital, to get a glimpse of the participants in what was called Canada's version of a royal wedding.

Gretzky, who has led the Edmonton Oilers to four Stanley Cup titles and holds dozens of National Hockey League records, arrived 30 minutes early for the ceremony. He was escorted by best man Eddie Mio, a former Oiler.

Miss Jones, who like her new husband is 27, is from Bridgeton, Mo., outside St. Louis. She has appeared in the films "American Anthem," "The Flamingo Kid," "A Chorus Line" and "Police Academy 5."

The guests and a bridal party of 22 witnessed the private ceremony inside St. Joseph's Basilica, a Roman Catholic church. Although Gretzky is an Anglican and Miss Jones is a Methodist, special permission was granted to hold the ceremony in the basilica, which was blessed by Pope John Paul in a visit to Edmonton four years ago.

"Wayne is an exceptional person and has made a great contribution to the community," said the church's pastor, the Rev. Mike McCaffery, in explaining why a non-Catholic ceremony was allowed. "We're not setting a precedent here. All we're saying is that there are exceptions."

McCaffery and the Rev. John Munro, a retired minister from an Anglican church in Gretzky's hometown of Brantford, Ontario, conducted the 40-minute, ecumenical ceremony.

People began lining up outside the church as early as 10 a.m., six hours before the ceremony, and cheered as well-known figures arrived.

Among the celebrities in attendance were hockey legends Gordie Howe and Vladislav Tretiak, entertainers Alan Thicke and David Foster, and most of the Oilers.

Dalton begins new Bond movie

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — Filming of the latest James Bond movie, "License Revoked," starring actor Timothy Dalton in a reprise role, is ready to begin in Mexico City, United Artists announced.

Dalton, 42, is cast as the suave British secret agent opposite Robert Davi, who plays a tyrannical Latin American drug lord. Cast as femme fatales are Carey Lowell and Talisa Soto. Filming is set to begin Monday, the studio said.

In "License Revoked," Bond is cashiered by the British Secret Service as he becomes embroiled in a personal mission of vengeance.

The Hamlet-like role should be a cinch for Dalton, a Shakespearean actor whose stage credits include "Antony and Cleopatra" and "Taming of the Shrew."

The 20-week production schedule will be shot on locations in Mexicali, Durango, Vera Cruz, Isla Mujeres, Acapulco and Key West, Fla.

"License Revoked" will be the 18th James Bond film, if you count the Peter Sellers' spoof "Casino Royale," and is produced by Albert R. "Cubby" Broccoli, the veteran Bond filmmaker, and Michael G. Wilson.

Congressman, bride leave Mississippi hospital

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Rep. Floyd Spence of South Carolina, who underwent double lung transplant in May, left the hospital in a car festooned with balloons and "Just Married" signs.

The 60-year-old Republican congressman, a widower, married 37-year-old Debbie Williams of Lexington, S.C., in his hospital room July 3.

Spence was discharged Friday from the University of Mississippi Medical Center, where he received the lungs of an 18-year-old Texas accident victim May 6. Spence had suffered from severe emphysema.

The 18-year House veteran said at a news conference he will do all he can in Congress to encourage organ donation and increase public awareness of transplant programs.

He promised to hit the campaign trail hard in September and said he didn't believe his health should be an issue in his race against Democrat Jim Leventis.

Spence said he gave a razzing to nurses who constantly told him to "breathe through your nose now, and breathe deep." He had become accustomed to breathing through his mouth because of his deteriorated lungs.

"It's difficult to get used to psychologically.... I try not to be a pill," he said.

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Burt Reynolds says he may have cracked another career if he runs out of acting roles.

Reynolds, 52, prepared for his role as a safecracker in "Breaking In" by talking with former practitioners of the craft.

"If this doesn't work out I can go into business for myself," he said Friday. "I'm struck by how quiet these particular guys were. They're very intelligent."

Reynolds said "Breaking In," which is being filmed here, would be released by year's end.

TOPEKA, Kan. (AP) — Dr. Karl Menninger, regarded by many as the dean of American psychiatry, observes his 95th birthday Friday, yielding ever so grudgingly to the infirmities of age and developing an awareness of his mortality.

"Life is a damn precious thing," he said. "My spool doesn't have much left on it."

Menninger said he remains too engrossed in life to give much thought to dying. "If you were 95 years old, what would be on your mind? Dying. But I don't think about dying. Maybe I should," he said.

Menninger still has an office on the campus of Menninger, the sprawling treatment facility here that Karl, his father, Dr. Charles Menninger, and his brother, Dr. William C. Menninger, launched in 1925 as the Menninger Clinic.

He will spend his birthday at a luncheon at a program he founded to provide families and homes for troubled children. He will also attend a dinner with his wife, then go to a concert in his honor to benefit a lecture series named for him.

BUDAPEST, Hungary (AP) — Otto von Hapsburg, once heir to the vast Austro-Hungarian empire, has made his first visit to Hungary in 70 years.

The 76-year-old former crown prince, a member of the European parliament in Strasbourg, France, told the daily newspaper of Hungary's Patriotic People's Front that he follows the communist country's fate closely.

"The crown of Hungary is out of my mind, of course," von Habsburg said. But "the country is close to my heart."

Von Hapsburg was interviewed on a visit to the town of Szombathely, which he said he chose for his first trip back because his father, Emperor Charles I, visited there during failed attempts in the 1920s to restore the monarchy.

The Austro-Hungarian empire was dissolved after World War I ended in 1918.

The newspaper interview was published Friday. It did not say when he arrived in Hungary or when he left.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A man who says he was injured when fans rushed the stage at a Madonna concert has sued the pop star for an unspecified amount.

The suit, filed in Superior Court by Marvin Markowitz, alleges he was hurt at Anaheim Stadium last July.

"During the concert, defendant Madonna shouted to the crowd to come closer to the stage and ignore the security men," the lawsuit said. "When this happened, thousands of fans rushed the stage, crushing (Markowitz) and causing injury to him."

A call to the office of Madonna's agent went unanswered Friday night.

JENSEN BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Former movie star and singer Frances Langford Evinrude is selling the Outrigger Restaurant, once a winter watering hole for such stars as Ginger Rogers, Bob Hope and Jackie Gleason.

Ms. Langford bought the property in 1940. She was touring the South Pacific with the USO and dreamed of building a "Polynesian paradise." After marrying motor boat magnate Ralph Evinrude, she did.

When Evinrude died in 1986 his wife vowed to keep the restaurant open. She changed her mind last summer.

"We don't want to be in the restaurant business," said David Petersen, who represents L&E Corp., which handles the Evinrude fortune.

Harold Kaplan, a Palm Beach restaurateur, bought the restaurant and plans to open it in October as a seafood place.

WILLIAMSPORT, Pa. (AP) — Seven weeks after her arrest, former Miss America Bess Myerson changed her plea to guilty to charges that she shoplifted jewelry, cosmetics and other items from a South Williamsport discount store.

Miss Myerson, 64, was arrested by South Williamsport Police Chief Charles Smith after leaving the Hills Department Store on May 27 with $44 in merchandise. She said at at the time, and reiterated in a statement handed to reporters Friday, that she was only "leaving the store to lock (her) car" and planned to return and "pay for the merchandise."

Her attorney delivered the signed guilty plea to the retail theft charge Friday morning to the office of District Justice John M. McDermott.

"I represent that I make this plea knowingly, voluntarily and intelligently. I plead guilty," the form signed by Miss Myerson said.

McDermott fined Myerson $100, plus $48.50 court costs.

Help for those faced with repaying college student loans is as close as your local Army Reserve unit.

The Army Reserve recently doubled the amount available under its Student Loan Repayment Program. Now, participants can have up to $20,000 applied toward their qualified student loans in return for enlisting for certain critical skills.

To be eligible for the program, an applicant must have secured a federally insured loan on or after Oct. 1, 1975. The program also repays future qualified loans while a member of the Army Reserve.

The program offers a unique opportunity to eliminate most or even all of an individual's college debt by serving a standard Army Reserve enlistment in a unit near home.

Extra income, bonuses, and many of the Regular Army benefits can help to cut college costs to the bare bone — all without moving away from home.

Details on the Student Loan Repayment Program and other attractive Army Reserve benefits are available by calling a local Army recruiting station.

Dakota Sioux walk 450 miles to protest at pipestone quarry

PIPESTONE, Minn. (AP) — When she was young, Stella Pretty Sounding Flute heard her elders tell of traveling many miles to the Great Red Pipestone Quarry to dig the soft, red stone they used to carve their sacred pipes.

The Dakota Sioux woman journeyed on foot to the quarry Saturday with about 50 other Sioux seeking return of the site from the government and protesting the sale of items made from the stone they believe represents the blood of their ancestors.

"I cry because I'm seeing the sacred pipe at rummage sales," said Pretty Sounding Flute, who lives in Aberdeen, S.D. "They say it's just a trinket."

The march by the Indians Saturday was the last leg of a monthlong, 450-mile walk across South Dakota to the quarry in this city of nearly 4,900, eight miles from the South Dakota border.

The marchers, singing as they arrived Saturday night, said they would set up camp and remain two or three days at the quarry, now the Pipestone National Monument.

The Sioux group says the sale of souvenir pipes, jewelry and other items made of pipestone is a desecration.

Other Indians who make their living from the quarry contend that trading pipestone is a traditional practice that does not violate Indian religion.

The controversy over the quarry stirs deep emotions in the Indian people and involves issues of Indian land rights, cultural assimilation and religious freedom.

Members of the Yankton Sioux Tribe believe the quarry was illegally taken from them more than 60 years ago by the government. The tribe's council has asked the government and the Pipestone Indian Shrine Association, a non-profit organization that helps market pipestone items, to give up the quarry.

The council contends that 1858 and 1892 treaties with the government guaranteed Yankton Sioux rights to the quarry.

The site was sold to the government in the late 1920s, but the Yankton Sioux claim the sale was invalid. Congress designated the site a national monument in 1937.

Herbert T. Hoover, a University of South Dakota history professor, said the sale of the land, legal or not, should not affect the Yankton Sioux's rights to the pipestone, the only major outcropping of its kind in the country.

"The tribe may have given up the land, but you have to understand that, economically, that tribe had hit rock bottom in the 1920s," he said. "You can talk about legality all you want, but you have to talk about morality, too."

Hoover said the government payment for the land was nearly $329,000 or about $150 to each member of the tribe.

Vince Halvorson, superintendent of the monument, said the National Park Service has no plans to relinquish the monument or curtail sale of pipestone items.

"I think it's strictly an issue between the two (Indian) factions," Halvorson said. "As long as there's nothing illegal, and it's a practice that's been going on since we've been here, we'll keep on doing what we're doing."

The shrine association also has maintained distance from the dispute. Betty Zorich, the group's business manager, declined comment on the issue.

Halvorson said about 130,000 people visit the monument each year and about 100 people, including craftspeople, earn a living directly from the quarry. Only Indians can dig at the quarry.

Chuck Derby, a Sisseton-Wahpeton Sioux pipemaker from Pipestone, said he does not believe selling pipes is a desecration.

"Our feeling is that we've been doing this kind of work for several generations," he said. "We were taught by our elders to do this. You just can't take a pipe down to the store today and say, 'I want $20 worth of groceries.' You have to exchange the pipe for money to buy your groceries."

Indians involved in the walk said they don't want put other Indians out of work.

"We do not want to close the quarries down," said Wesley Hare Jr., a Yankton Sioux. "We'd like to see that if they take this stone, they use it for what it is meant for. That is the basis of our tribe's spirituality."

Pentagon probes if USS Vincennes detected radars

WASHINGTON (AP) — Pentagon investigators will be taking a close look at whether the USS Vincennes detected radar signals emanating from the Iran A300 Airbus that it mistook for an F-14 fighter and shot down, military and industry sources say.

Publicly available evidence suggests that the Airbus was not using its weather or navigational radar, which send out different signals than radar aboard an F-14 and could easily have been distinguished by equipment aboard the Vincennes, according to Pentagon officials.

"If an F-14 is using its target acquisition radar, it is a very specific signal, and one which you can easily identify," Pentagon spokesman Dan Howard told reporters on July 5, two days after the incident.

Pentagon and industry sources said it would be common practice for either an attacking F-14 or an Airbus making the 175-mile run in clear weather between Bandar Abbas, Iran, and Dubai, in the United Arab Emirates, not to turn on its radar.

"The Iranians know...when they paint something with their target illumination radar, that we can detect it and we can identify the target very specifically from that information," Howard said.

"It's not necessary to turn a lot of this equipment on if you know the location already from other sources," he said. "You can wait until you actually release your ordnance."

The absence of a radar signal, therefore, would tell the Vincennes' officers nothing about the approaching plane, but any radar signal originating from the Iranian aircraft should have identified it as civilian or military.

A computer analysis of electronic data from the Vincennes has been conducted in the United States and flown to Bahrain, in the Persian Gulf, where a six-member team headed by Rear Adm. William M. Fogarty is investigating the incident.

Pentagon officials have declined to discuss information uncovered by Fogarty, including whether the Iranian aircraft was sending out radar signals.

A device known as a transponder aboard the Airbus was sending one set of identification signals common to civilian and military aircraft, as well as a signal unique to warplanes, Howard said.

And the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Adm. William J. Crowe Jr., said that it was impossible for a ship to use its own radar to precisely identify an approaching aircraft, a view shared by Navy and industry officials who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The issue of whether the Airbus was emitting radar signals is quite different, however, and the answer is not likely to be known publicly until the results of the Fogarty investigation are released, something that Navy officials now say they do not expect until early or mid-August.

The Vincennes, and many other U.S. warships in the gulf, are equipped with a device known as a SLQ-32, which can distinguish the "signatures" of radars. Radars that are used by commercial airliners are quite different from those used by military aircraft.

The exact differences are classified, industry and Navy sources said, but generally military radars are far more powerful, operate on different frequencies, radiate farther, and "ping" objects more frequently with radio waves than do commercial radars, they said.

The SLQ-32, manufactured by Raytheon, Corp. of Massachusetts "is a little like a fuzz-buster," said one industry source. "It can spot a highway cop if he has his radar on. But if he doesn't have his radar on, you won't spot him."

The SLQ-32 can be programmed to distinguish the "signatures" of various types of radar. And one Navy source said that even if the device were not programmed to make that distinction, a skilled operator can tell the difference anyway.

Howard, in briefing reporters, said that he did not know "what the SLQ-32 was saying" aboard the Vincennes. "All that stuff is on the tape and will presumably be examined by the inquiry."

The 80 F-14s sold to Iran in the 1970s by the Grumman Corp. of Long Island, N.Y., were equipped with a radar system known as Airborne Weapons Guidance 9, or AWG-9, a sophisticated tracking and targeting device manufactured by Hughes Aircraft Corp. Iran is thought to have about 15 remaining F-14s capable of flying.

The F-14 does not carry additional radar systems, which might send out signals that could be confused with those of an airliner, according to industry officials.

Midland rolls out carpet for pro golfers

By JIMMY PATTERSON
Sports Writer

The Pro GolfTour, an event for players who have not yet earned their PGA Tour card, is headed toward the completion of its first full year.

Before the end comes, though, the tour comes to Midland for one of the final stops of the season.

Over 100 PGT players invade Midland's Green Tree Country Club this Thursday in a four-day, 72-hole format which will pay a total of $100,000.

In existence for only nine months now, the PGT is not yet trying to compete with the PGA but is merely trying to establish a name for itself.

"We feel very strongly that there are many excellent golfers not playing on the PGA as there are playing on the PGT," said Aytch Johnson, president of the PGT.

The highlight of the Green Tree stop will feaure the tour's top four money winners in head-to-head competition.

OKLAHOMA CITY'S Jim Woodward, Kansas' Bruce Vaughan, South Dakota's Mike Tschetter and El Paso's Steve Haskins will each attempt to go into the final stretch of the tour as the top earner.

Haskins, the son of UT-El Paso basketball coach Don Haskins, won last week's PGT stop at the Coronado Country Club in El Paso, and is currently sixth in this week's PGT event in Albuquerque, N.M. After three rounds, Haskins is 10 strokes behind leader Perry Arthur, who will also be in Midland Thursday.

After Saturday's round in Albuquerque, Arthur is shooting a 196. He is followed by Marco Dawson (199); Rick Cramer and Tim Robinson are tied for third, five shots off the pace and each with a 201.

Of the remaining top four money winners, Vaughan is 13 strokes behind in Albuequerque with a 209 after three, while Tschetter failed to make the third round cut; Woodward is not participating in the New Mexico stop.

THE PGT holds 14 tournaments in eight states, awarding $15,000 to each stop's winner. The tour began in March in Mobile, Ala., and will conclude the week after Labor Day at an as of yet undetermined site.

Over 250 golfers have qualified this year and a full field of 168 players qualify each week with cuts to low 60 after the second round; all making the cut earn money.

The PGT was formed in October of last year by two Palm Desert, Calif., businessmen, Johnson and E.M. "Bud" Sullivan.

And the PGT has its share of past PGA winners, including Rex Caldwell, Rod Curl, Forrest Fezler and Brian Claar.

Sons of former PGA greats Kyle Coody, Kel Devlin, Donnie Massengale and Wayne Player are also PGT members.

Among these bigger names, Massengale was the only confirmed player who would make the stop at Green Tree as of late Saturday.

Midland's own John Adams pulled out of the local stop Friday but fellow Midlander Montie Watson is expected to partake in the tourney.

Thirty-two states and Canada are represented on the PGT; the largest delegation comes from Florida with 49 players; Texas is second with 45 participants.

Some of the top names on the tour who have committed to play at Midland include:

Jim Woodward, Oklahoma City, Okla. — A 1979 graduate of Oklahoma State University, Woodward won back-to-back PGT stops on the second and third legs of the tour. He also has the record for the most-under-par victory, shooting a 14-under 274 at Cimarron Country Club in Mission, Tex. Gaining that record, Woodward defeated Fort Worth's Kevin Harrison and Lee Janzen, of Lakeland, Fla. Through nine tour stops, Woodward was the leading money winner with $41,876.

Bruce Vaughan, Hutchinson, Kan. — The second leading money winner in the PGT's first year, Vaughan has compiled earnings topping $29,000. Vaughan also fired a seven-under 271 victory at Corpus Christ in April and has three additional Top 10 PGT finishes.

Mike Tschetter, Sioux Falls, SD — A graduate of Texas Christian University in 1986, Tschetter won the PGT stop in Indianapolis with a 10-under, 278. With over $23,000 in earnings, he's third on the money list this year. Tschetter played on this year's Colonial Invitational, but did not make the cut.

Rain delays play in Great Britain

British Open

By GORDON S. WHITE Jr.
New York Times News Service

LYTHAM ST. ANNES, England — The third round of the 117th British Open was wiped out Saturday by a steady rain that flooded a number of greens at the Royal Lytham St. Annes links.

The Royal and Ancient Golf Club of St. Andrews, which conducts this tournament, the oldest in the sport, promptly set about causing considerable confusion about the next two rounds.

At first, the club announced that the final two rounds would be played Sunday as a 36-hole affair for the 71 golfers left in the field. A tee time for each player was announced and posted in many of the hotels in Lytham St. Annes and Blackpool. But three hours later, at 6 p.m., as rains increased and the fairways became flooded, the club announced another change.

Now the third round of 18 holes will be played Sunday and the final 18-hole round Monday. That will make this British Open the first of the 117 to extend to Monday. And the weather forecast is not good.

Mark McCumber and Gary Player, who were staying in the Pembroke Hotel in Blackpool, learned of the change while eating dinner with their families.

"I'm not sure they can do this," McCumber said. "Never heard of such a thing."

"Unbelievable," said Player, who won here in 1974. "But I'll believe anything, I guess."

When the third round begins, Nick Price of South Africa will be holding a one-shot lead over Seve Ballesteros of Spain. They have scores of five-under-par 137 and four-under 138, respectively. Nick Faldo, the defending champion, was tied with Craig Stadler at 140 with Andy Bean at 141.

None of these golfers had teed off when play was called at 12:23 p.m. But there were 35 players on the course, strung out from the first through the 16th holes, when play was halted. One was Hubert Green, who opened with five straight 3s and birdied five of the first seven holes. Since all Saturday's scores were erased, Green and everyone else must start the third round again.

The 41-year-old Alabama golfer, who won the 1977 United States Open, had just hit to the eighth green when the committee suspended play. Later in the locker room, Green shrugged and said, "What can you do? I'm used to it."

Tom Watson didn't seem bothered, although the five-time winner of the British Open was two under par for four holes Saturday.

This marked the first time in 27 years that a day of the British Open was completely washed out. In 1961, the third and fourth rounds were wiped out by a severe wind and rain storm on a Friday at Royal Birkdale, another English links 20 miles south of Lytham St. Annes and also on the Irish Sea. The two final rounds were played Saturday, when Arnold Palmer won the first of his two consecutive British Open titles.

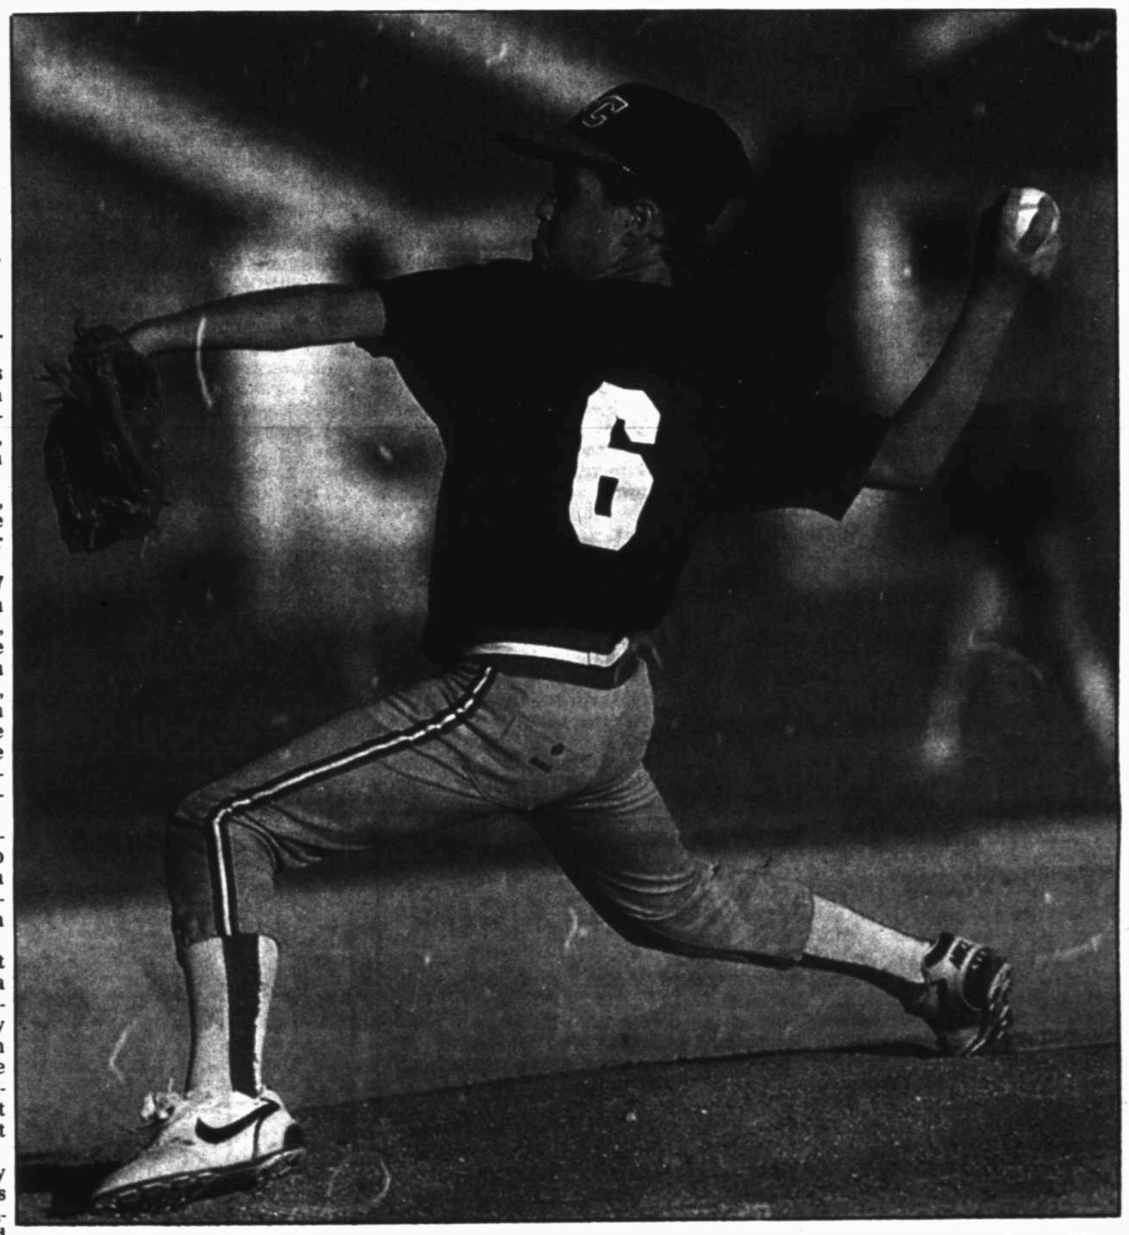

The year before that, at St. Andrews in Scotland, the closing two rounds Friday were washed out by a thunderstorm and played on Saturday. Kel Nagle of Australia won with Palmer second.

The first round of the 1970 Open at St. Andrews was suspended by a storm and resumed the next morning before the next round. Tony Jacklin, the defending champion and the first Englishman to win the tournament in 19 years, was the leader at the time of suspension. But Jack Nicklaus went on to win that Open.

The rare suspension came on a day with little wind but very heavy rains that started around midnight. Unlike most other links courses used for the British Open, Royal Lytham St. Annes sits low and flat about half a mile from the coast.

The greens, many of which are nestled below the fairways, do not drain well. Also, the water table here is quite high and the soil is not very sandy. It was impossible, despite some work with squeegees, to keep the greens at No. 9, No. 10, No. 11 and No. 12 from accumulating water faster than it could be pushed off.

Strong winds reaching 38 mph plagued the original 153 players here Thursday. Then bright sunshine accompanied the strong breezes Saturday.

Season tickets to go on sale

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

Season football tickets for both Midland Lee and Midland High will go on sale to current option holders Monday at the Memorial Stadium ticket office.

The ticket office will be open Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., including the lunch hour.

Option holders will have through Friday, Aug. 5, to renew their current options. Beginning Monday, Aug. 8, all remaining season tickets will be sold to the general public on a first come basis. All season ticket sales will close Friday, Aug. 26, and season tickets can not be purchased after that date.

Lee currently has a waiting list for season ticket availability.

Lee has only four home games this year and a season ticket (book of four tickets) will cost $16.

Midland High is the home team six times and a season ticket (book of six tickets) will cost $24. However, Midland High is designated as the visiting team against Lee this year and actually has seven games in Midland. MHS fans will have the option of picking up an extra ticket for the Lee-MHS game for an extra $5 per ticket for a total package of $29 per season ticket.

Season tickets are sold for only the West side of Memorial Stadium, meaning that tickets will be available to the general public throughout the season on a week-to-week basis.

Odessan wins distance race

By BILL GRIMES

Women, want to run your best? Stay away from being a race director and women-only races.

That's the message Midland's Cyndi Simpson brought out of Saturday's Women Distance Festival run in north Midland.

Simpson, who narrowly missed the 20-minute barrier in May's Run for the Arts, slipped to 20:35 while finishing second in Saturday's five-kilometer run through the Saddle Club and Polo Park neighborhoods. Angelo State senior-to-be Mary Laird of Odessa won the women's race in 19:56, while Jal, N.M. track coach Bob Jackson continued to dominate men's road racing in the Permian Basin with an easy win in the men's Chase After The Women 5K.

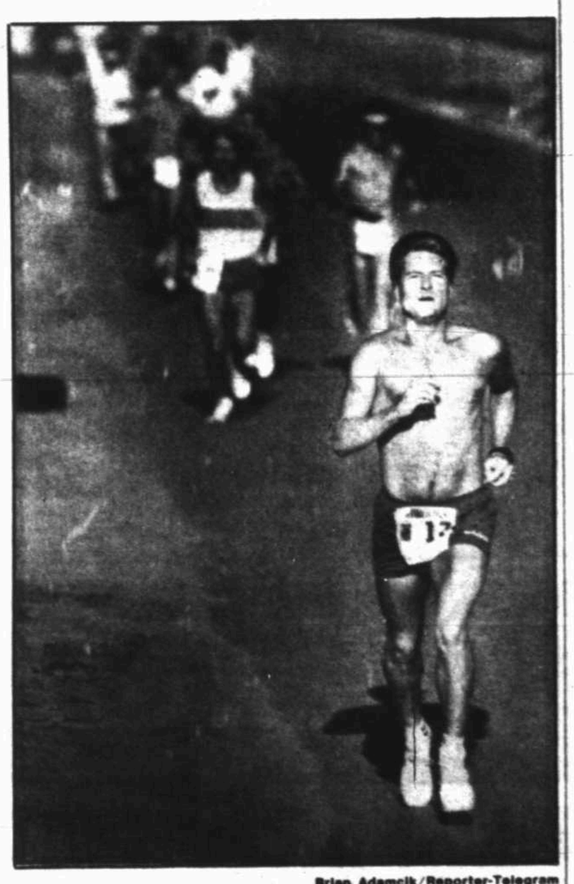

Both Laird and Jackson broke out from the pack in the first hundred yards of their respective races and were never headed thereafter. Laird won by almost 40 seconds, while Jackson was more than a minute beyond second-place Robert Sanders of Midland.

"I could see her, but I couldn't catch her," Simpson said. "I was so nervous, because I was in charge of this race." Company was a problem, too.

"It hurt when it was just me," she said. "I ran by myself the whole way."

Laird, who has run an 18:42 5K in a cross-country meet, won the 1986 Festival race but finished second last season. She said her pace Saturday was comfortable.

Joyner-Kersee shatters personal, world mark

Olympic Trials

By FRANK LITSKY
New York Times News Service

INDIANAPOLIS, Indiana — In less than an hour Saturday, Jackie Joyner-Kersee smashed a world record and her sister-in-law, Florence Griffith Joyner, apparently also broke one in the U.S. Olympic track and field trials.

For the third time in 24 months, Joyner-Kersee broke the world record for the heptathlon. She did it despite a gashed hand.

In the second of four rounds of the women's 100-meter dash, the 28-year-old Griffith Joyner won her quarterfinal in 10.49 seconds. She won by almost 4 meters as she bettered Evelyn Ashford's 1984 world record of 10.76 seconds by 27-hundredths of a second, an incredible margin.

The reading from the anenometer, the gauge that reads the following wind, was reported at 0.0, which meant the record was legal. However, flags flying above the scoreboard were waving briskly, and a triple jump at almost the same time showed an excessive following wind. The wind was above the allowable limit two and a half hours before when Griffith Joyner won her first-round heat in 10.60 seconds, the fastest time ever at that point.

The 26-year-old Joyner-Kersee lives in Long Beach, Calif., and is coached by her husband, Bob Kersee. She is a world-class athlete in the long jump and the 100-meter hurdles, and she is close to that level in other events.

She started the day with 4,367 points for four heptathlon events, the highest first-day score in history. The first of her three events Saturday was the long jump.

She fouled her first jump, a 24-footer. Then, jumping into a wind, she made a safe jump of 22 feet 8 inches, a meet record, on her second attempt and improved the record to 22-11¾ on her third and final attempt.

On her second jump, as she reached out before landing, she spiked the inside of her right thumb. The injury bled and she seemed to be in pain, but she said it was insignificant.

She certainly looked strong in her next event, the javelin throw. Her second throw of 164 feet 4 inches was only 2 inches short of her career best. That meant she had only to run the concluding 800-meter race in 2 minutes 24.95 seconds, a virtual walk, to break the world record.

NY Mets locker room not a pretty sight

ATLANTA (AP) — When the New York Mets' bats go quiet, their voices get loud. When the pitchers grow cold, the tempers get hot.

"I'm tired of the way things are going. I'm angry, I'm frustrated," Howard Johnson said after Friday night's 4-3 loss to Atlanta. "It's getting close to the point where you don't want to start pointing fingers and letting it get out of hand but there are certain guys who just aren't coming through. There's some bad vibes. Every night the pressure's on the same guys to do something."

New York, ahead by 7½ games in the National League East on July 4, leads the Pittsburgh Pirates by 2½ games. Pittsburgh has won seven in a row. The Mets, in the middle of a 10-game road trip, have lost four of five and 13 of their last 17 road games.

Angels lose in ninth

From Staff Reports

SHREVEPORT — This was not a night the Midland Angels will like to remember when the season is over.

The Angels gave up three runs in the bottom of the ninth inning to drop a 5-4 decision to the Shreveport Captains. The Angels had a one-hitter going into the fatal ninth.

Shreveport's John Scurla broke up a six inning no-hitter by Midland starter Mike Fetters with a two-run homer and then got three hits in the ninth to score three runs.

It ended with two outs when Kurt Walker, 3-3, walked Everett Graham with the bases loaded.

The loss is the ninth for the Angels in their last 12 games and they now own a two-game losing streak that will stand for the next three days.

The Texas League breaks for the All-Star game and Midland returns to Midland Wednesday to face Tulsa and Shreveport over a 10-game span. The All-Star game in Little Rock can be heard over KCRS radio locally and Midland's Jeff Manto, Mike Knapp and Jim McCollom will be members of the West squad.

Tom Alfredson had two hits and scored twice for the Angels, who out hit Shreveport by a 9-4 margin. Norm Carrasco had three Midland hits.

Fetters pitched one-hit ball for seven innings before giving way to Marty Reed in the eighth. Reed gave up two hits before being replaced by Walker in the ninth with no outs.

Walker got two outs, but the walk to Graham killed him. Walker previously had struck out Harry Davis for the second out of the inning as Midland used a five-man infield.

The Angels, however, are still in first place in the Texas League West, but that high standing is becoming increasingly hard to hold.

Chicago's Rafael Palmiero slides back in safely at first as Los Angeles' Tracy Woodson drops the relay throw from pitcher Orel Hershiser.

Pirates make it eight straight

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Mike LaValliere's two-run double and pitcher Doug Drabek's two-run triple highlighted a six-run third inning as the Pittsburgh Pirates routed the San Francisco Giants 10-1 Saturday night for their eighth straight victory, their longest since 1963.

Sid Bream's single scored a pair of runs in the first and Gregg's infield RBI grounder made it 3-0.

Mike LaCoss, who dropped to 7-7, is 0-5 on the road this season.

Giants pitching has allowed 27 runs in 24 innings in the three losses to Pittsburgh. Prior to the All-Star break, the Giants had won five straight games, allowing only three runs in 45 innings.

Phillies 10, Astros 6

PHILADELPHIA — Chris James hit an eighth-inning grand slam and added a double and two singles, leading the Philadelphia Phillies over the Houston Astros.

Houston had tied the score at 5-5 in the top of the sixth on a RBI grounder by Billy Doran. But then Juan Samuel led off the bottom of the sixth with a single, stole second and scored one out later on Phil Bradley's double.

Cubs 2, Dodgers 2

CHICAGO — The Chicago Cubs and Los Angeles Dodgers were tied 2-2 in the ninth inning when rain forced postponement of their National League game, forcing it to be replayed in its entirety as part of a double-header Sunday.

All statistics of Saturday's game will count on the record.

Tim Belcher will pitch against Jeff Pico in Sunday's opener, with Chicago's Al Nipper facing Brian Holton in the second game.

Chicago's Jamie Moyer, who has made eight starts at home this year, is still looking for his first Wrigley Field victory. He is 5-8 overall but 0-5 at home.

NL Roundup

Mets 3, Braves 2

ATLANTA — Kevin McReynolds' pop fly double to right field with two outs in the eighth inning scored Dave Magadan from first base as the New York Mets beat the Atlanta Braves.

Right fielder Dale Murphy failed to make a sliding catch and the ball got away, allowing the slow-footed Magadan to score.

The victory kept the Mets 2½ games ahead of second-place Pittsburgh in the National League East.

The Braves stole eight bases in the game, the most ever against the Mets in one game and an Atlanta record.

Dwight Gooden walked three and struck out four, increasing his career strikeout total to 998 in less than five full seasons.

Expos 6, Reds 1

MONTREAL — Tim Raines hit two home runs for the second time in his 10-year career and Hubie Brooks added a two-run shot as the Montreal Expos defeated the Cincinnati Reds.

Dennis Martinez, 10-7, pitched a six-hitter for his fourth complete game as the Expos won for the ninth time in 10 games. He struck out five and walked none.

Cardinals 3, Padres 2

ST. LOUIS — Luis Alicea's two-out single drove in the winning run as St. Louis scored twice in the ninth inning to beat San Diego 3-2 and snap an eight-game losing streak.

Tony Gwynn extended his hitting streak to 11 games with a homer and two singles for the Padres.

Red Sox continue to make new manager happy

Associated Press

BOSTON — Kevin Romine hit his first major-league homer leading off the ninth inning Saturday, capping a comeback from a 6-0 deficit and giving the Boston Red Sox a 7-6 victory over the Kansas City Royals.

Romine hit Steve Farr's second pitch into the left field screen for his first homer in 108 big-league at-bats, giving interim Red Sox manager Joe Morgan his third consecutive victory.

The homer made a winner of former Midland Cub Lee Smith, 4-4, who pitched the ninth. Farr fell to 2-2.

Kansas City, swept in a doubleheader in Morgan's debut Friday, led 6-0 through five innings, but the Red Sox scored four runs in the sixth and tied it in the eighth on Dwight Evans' two-run homer. Evans did not start because of a hamstring pull, but he got into the game as a pinch-hitter in the sixth.

The Royals jumped to a 2-0 lead in the first on George Brett's sacrifice fly and an RBI double by Danny Tartabull.

Bo Jackson made it 3-0 with his 12th homer in the second, hitting Oil Can Boyd's first pitch of the inning off the back wall in center to the right of the flagpole.

Seitzer's double and a single by Brett made it 4-0 before Boyd was lifted with no outs in the third.

Athletics 4, Blue Jays 1

OAKLAND, Calif. — Jose Canseco drove in three runs, raising his RBI total to 70, as the Oakland Athletics defeated the Toronto Blue Jays.

With three runs in the third, the A's took a 3-1 lead and broke a string of 19 consecutive scoreless innings. Luis Polonia tied the score with an RBI single and Canseco belted a two-run double.

Canseco, now three behind Boston's Mike Greenwell among American League RBI leaders, made the score 4-1 with a sacrifice fly in the fifth.

Storm Davis, 7-4, yielded six hits in seven innings, for the victory. Dave Stieb, 10-6, winless in his last four starts, was the loser.

Toronto scored in the second on singles by Kelly Gruber and Ernie Whitt and an RBI grounder by Fred McGriff.

Polonia had a leadoff single in the fifth, went to third on Henderson's single and scored on Canseco's fly to right.

Tigers 10, Angels 1

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Jeff Robinson continued his mastery over California with a four-hitter for eight innings, and Matt Nokes and Gary Pettis homered in a five-run fifth inning as the Detroit Tigers beat the Angels and snapped their seven-game winning streak.

Robinson, 11-3, improved his season record against the Angels to 3-0. The first two victories were complete games, and he has allowed only 12 hits and two runs in the three games.

The Angels took a 1-0 lead in the second inning on Tony Armas' sacrifice fly.

But the Tigers, held hitless for 3 1-3 innings by Willie Fraser, 6-9, took control in the fifth.

Luis Salazar and Dave Bergman singled with one out and scored on Nokes' 11th homer. Ray Knight singled to keep the rally going, and Pettis followed with his third homer.

Robinson carried a two-hitter into the seventh inning, but California threatened on singles by Bob Boone and Devon White. Johnny Ray hit a wicked line drive down the first-base line, but Knight made a diving catch and crawled to first base in time to double up White.

White Sox 7, Yankees 4

NEW YORK — Fred Manrique drove in three runs and Steve Lyons homered and hit a sacrifice fly as the Chicago White Sox beat the New York Yankees.

A crowd of 48,102 on Old-Timers Day at Yankee Stadium saw rookie Melido Perez, at 22 the youngest player on either team, improve his record to 9-5. Tommy John, the oldest player in the majors at 45, fell to 7-3.

Perez, brother of Montreal pitcher Pascual Perez, left after Jose Cruz lined a pinch-hit grand slam with no outs in the seventh inning, making it 6-4. Bobby Thigpen got the last five outs for his 19th save.

John and Perez matched zeroes in 89-degree heat until Lyons hit a solo home run with one out in the sixth. Lyons' fifth homer gave him only nine hits in his last 50 at-bats.

Twins 4, Orioles 3

BALTIMORE — Kirby Puckett hit a two-run homer in the first inning, and Greg Gagne and Gary Gaetti added solo shots, to power the Minnesota Twins over the Baltimore Orioles.

Twins starter Fred Toliver pitched seven innings of five-hit baseball in 90-plus degree temperatures to record his first American League victory. The well-traveled 27-year-old, who began in the Yankee organization and had pitched in the majors for Cincinnati and Philadelphia prior to his trade to the Twins, is 1-1 this season, 2-8 lifetime.

Brewers 4, Rangers 3

ARLINGTON — Robin Yount belted a home run and two singles, knocking in two runs, as the Milwaukee Brewers continued their domination of the Texas Rangers.

Jim Gantner added a pair of hits and an RBI as the Brewers won their sixth straight game and ninth in their last 11. The victory for the Brewers was their 15th in the last 19 meetings with the Rangers over two seasons.

Rookie starter Dan August went 4 2-3 innings for the Brewers before he was relieved by Odell Jones, 4-0, who retired the only batter he faced but got credit for the victory. Dan Plesac pitched the ninth for his 24th save.

Missions, Mets finally get the job done

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — What is believed to be the longest scoreless game in professional baseball history ended quickly Saturday when Manny Francois hit a bases-loaded single in bottom of the 26th inning to give the San Antonio Missions a 1-0 win over the Jackson Mets in Texas League action.

The two AA minor league teams resumed play after a 25-inning, 0-0 stalemate that began Thursday evening, lasted 7 hours and 10 minutes and was called at 2:30 a.m. Friday.

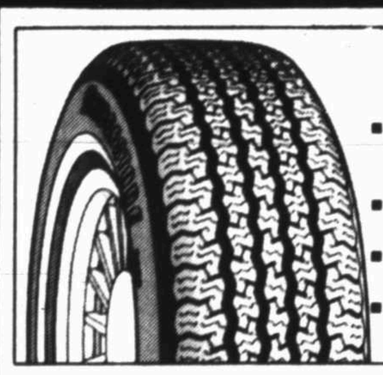

After the one-inning ending Saturday, San Antonio Manager Kevin Kennedy said, "It was the quickest win I ever had."

Francois' ended the duel with a basehit up the middle to score third baseman Walt McConnell.

The Missions' second baseman, said that before the game resumed, he visualized getting the winning hit.

The estimated crowd of 3,300 cheered enthusiastically when McConnell crossed home plate, but then fell strangely silent awaiting the start of the regularly scheduled game.

Cowboys' worry: Offensive line

By DENNE H. FREEMAN
AP Sports Writer

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. — It's Herschel Walker's team now but don't expect him to get very far if the Dallas Cowboys' offensive line can't jell in training camp.

With Tony Dorsett gone to the Denver Broncos, Coach Tom Landry hopes to shift the primary work load on the muscular Walker.

Walker rushed for 891 yards on 209 carries and he wasn't a fulltime starter at tailback until his last seven games. He also had 715 yards receiving.

"If you project his totals in those seven games over a 16-game season, you're looking at over 1,500 yards rushing and 1,000 yards receiving this year," Landry said.

"Of course, our offensive line has to come through for Walker to be effective. Just based on the experience our young guys gained last year our line should be improved."

THERE ARE already potential offensive line problems for Landry as the veteran skill players — quarterbacks, receivers, running backs and centers — begin reporting Sunday.

Guard Crawford Ker is making noises that he might be among the missing when the balance of the veterans are scheduled to report on July 21. He is unhappy with his contract which would pay him $170,000 this year.

Also, there is Nate Newton's weight watch. He has all-Pro potential but also is blessed with a big appetite. He reported to camp early 35 pounds overweight (335) and was immediately banned to the "fat man's" table where he gets only fruit and vegetables.

Right tackle Kevin Gogan and guard Jeff Zimmerman also have weight problems and must eat low-calorie meals.

"If they keep their weight under control we could be pretty good," Landry said.

LANDRY PLANS to stay conservative on offense this year, feeding the ball to Walker and throwing low risk passes.

Quarterback Steve Pelluer was effective in this type of offense in the last two games of 1987 as the Cowboys ruined the playoff chances of the St. Louis Cardinals and the Los Angeles Rams.

"Steve won't have any guarantees going into camp although he is the starter," Landry said. "He's going to have to earn the job."

Veteran Danny White is waiting in the wings to wrest the job from Pelluer.

"There is still a question of whether Danny can be consistent in his throwing motion because of the wrist injury last year," Landry said. "We'll just have to see how the wrist holds up."

The Cowboys' first preseason game is Aug. 6 in San Diego. The annual Blue-White scrimmage at California Lutheran College is July 30.

Dallas opens the NFL regular season on Sept. 4 in Pittsburgh.

Training Camps

Oilers a no-show in San Angelo

By MICHAEL A. LUTZ
AP Sports Writer

HOUSTON — Houston Oilers quarterback Warren Moon spent an anxious off season checking on the status of the Oilers' coaching staff.

He kept fearing offensive coordinator June Jones would be hired away from the Oilers one year after installing the Oilers' wide open offensive attack.

Moon's fears were unfounded and Jones is back to help the Oilers seek their second straight trip to the playoffs after a controversy-filled 1987 season.

The Oilers begin their 1988 quest Tuesday when training camp opens on the campus of Southwest Texas State at San Marcos for the first time.

The Oilers had trained 10 years at Angelo State University in San Angelo.

ROOKIES REPORT Tuesday, the veterans follow on Wednesday and the first full workout will be Thursday.

"This is my first year having the same guy coaching me," Moon said. "I was crossing my fingers the whole off season that he wouldn't get plucked away because he has a good reputation around the league as a good coach."

Moon is happy that Jones is back and that several other distractions are missing from the 1987 season, including the NFL players strike and the possible move to Jacksonville, Fla.

"We're so much more relaxed this year," Moon said. "You don't have the things one your mind, like going to Jacksonville or the strike."

The Oilers reached the playoffs for the first time since 1980, beating Seattle in the AFC wild card game before losing to Super Bowl runner up Denver in the second round.

The Oilers improved from 16th to eighth in the NFL in total offense and passing jumped from 13th to seventh.

And there's more to come this year, Moon said.

"We put in about 40 per cent of the run and shoot last year and we put in a lot more this offseason," Moon said. "Now when teams adjust to certain looks, we have more options.

"Last year we might have one or two things we could go to. This year we've got four or five things and we can do it at the line."

THE OILERS starting backfield also returns intact, although last year's No. 1 draft pick, Alonzo Highsmith, is still recovering from off-season knee surgery.

"Don't worry about me, I'm a competitor and I'll be at practice and I'll be ready to play," Highsmith said.

Coach Jerry Glanville, however, says Highsmith is day to day and will work only once a day during the two-a-day camp sessions.

Mike Rozier also is back after his best season in the NFL. He earned his first Pro Bowl trip and was fourth in the NFL in rushing with 957 yards.

The Oilers also added Michigan State All-American Lorenzo White as their No. 1 pick in the NFL draft. White was unsigned at midweek.

Glanville, starting his third full season as head coach, sees progress in his young team.

Retirement — football's hardest part

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

The rookies report Sunday, the veterans on Thursday and by next weekend the Pittsburgh Steeler training camp will be oozing with football players. For the first time in 14 years, Donnie Shell won't be one of them.

Gary Fencik and Walter Payton won't be in Platteville, Wis., with the Chicago Bears. Don't look for Dan Fouts at the San Diego Charger camp or Ray Guy in the Los Angeles Raiders' facility at Oxnard, Calif.

They are among the former NFL players who for the first time in maybe two decades find they are not getting ready for a football season.

The scene at the Steeler camp in Latrobe, Pa., is a familiar ritual that is routinely resumed each July in towns like Suwanee, Ga., where the Atlanta Falcons pitch camp, and San Marcos, Texas, which hosts the Houston Oilers. From La Crosse, Wisc., where the New Orleans Saints are gathering, to Carlisle, Pa., where the Washington Redskins prepare to defend their Super Bowl title, and a host of mapdot towns in between, the NFL returns.

On every practice field, coaches with clipboards check wind sprints in one corner and oversized individuals attack blocking sleds and tackling dummies in another. Playbooks are distributed and digested. The whole football practice operation snaps quickly into place.

And yet, each year some players must adjust to the culture shock of not doing what they have always done, not being a part of that scene. They retire and suddenly, July becomes football's toughest time, a time to begin doing something else with the rest of their lives.

Shell went to training camp with the Steelers for 14 summers, the first one as a free agent strong safety hoping to make the team, the last one as the team's defensive captain with 50 career interceptions, more than any man who ever played the position.

This July as the Steelers' college training camp in Latrobe springs to life, Donnie Shell is staying at home in Columbia, S.C. He is, at age 35, retired.

"In my case, I was kind of unique," Shell said. "I played so long and I accomplished every goal I had set. I've done what I wanted to do. Now it's over.

"You miss it, though. After doing that for 23 years from high school to college to the pros, and then suddenly you're not doing it, you miss it. There's no question about that."

Most of all, Shell said, he thought he would miss the camraderie, the relationships with men who had been almost like brothers to him.

"You're living together," he said. "You're winning together and losing together. You establish feelings for each other. You lean on one another and you pull for one another."

Eric Margenau, executive director of New York's Center for Sports Psychology and consultant for a number of professional sports franchises, understands what Shell is saying.

"Certainly retirement is a big adjustment and shock for the successful athlete," he said. "It's a little hard to describe. Most of them don't know how big an adjustment it will be until they're into it. In some ways, it's comparable to having a child. Nobody can tell you ahead of time what the stress and strain will be. You can't know what it's like and how profoundly it will affect your life until you're into it.

"Football is a player's life from early age. It's a part of them. To be without it can leave them adrift emotionally. The ones who do better are those who anticipate retirement and plan for it well ahead of time."

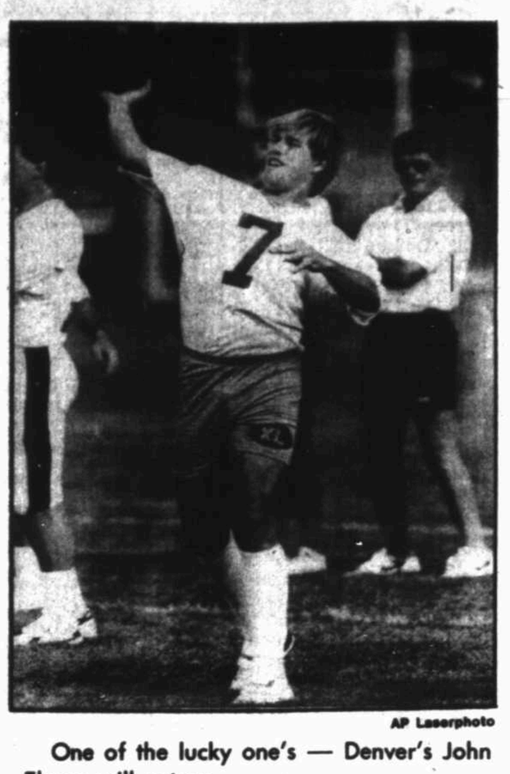

Shell falls into that category.

"Sure, I look at my Super Bowl rings sometimes and there are great memories," he said. "But I can't do anymore than I did in football. I'm satisfied. I'm a realist. I planned when I'd be getting out. We knew a couple of years before I did it. That makes it easier."

The planning included going back to school for his Masters degree in guidance and counseling. He has launched his own business in Columbia, called Sports Counseling Service to provide help for other athletes.

Margenau thinks more and more athletes are approaching retirement the way Shell did, with a next-career game plan. That reduces the tension that the opening of training camps might otherwise trigger. It also makes it easier for Shell to do a cameo week in the Steeler camp, helping coach defensive backs. There will be no temptation for him to stay. He has a business to go back to in Columbia.

"The days of players who go fishing in the off-season is largely gone," Margenau said. "They are aware of the potential dynamic of retirement. So they create off-season careers for themselves. The change in salary struture has helped in that effort. They invest money in a business that can involve them."

AP Laserphoto

One of the lucky one's — Denver's John Elway will return.

Like Shell, Alan Page welcomed retirement. He had played 15 years in the NFL, one more than Shell. It was enough.

"Retirement wasn't a jolt for me," said Page, who will be inducted in the Pro Football Hall of Fame a week from Saturday. "When training camp time came around, I was busy doing other things. I had a law practice I was trying to get established.

"It was a different feeling, though, because I didn't have to go and do all the things you don't look forward to doing. I was ready, anxious and looking forward to my retirement, to the chance to spend the summer with my children."

Walker suffers tailspin

By HOWARD ULMAN
AP Sports Writer

DANVERS, Mass. — Colleen Walker lost her entire five-stroke lead on the first eight holes, but gained four in the final three to finish Saturday's third round of the LPGA Boston Five Classic four shots ahead of Jan Stephenson.

Walker and Stephenson were tied through 15 holes at nine under par before Walker surged and Stephenson sagged on the steamy Tara Ferncroft golf course.

Walker, who led after each of the first two rounds, birdied the 16th and 18th holes while Stephenson, struggling with her drives, bogeyed the 17th and 18th, the latter a 485-yard par-5 on which she hit a bunker and missed a 10-foot putt for a birdie.

The four-stroke swing left Walker, who shot a 2-under-par 70, with a three-day total of 11-under 205. Stephenson had a 3-under 69 for a 209 going into Sunday's final round of the $300,000 tournament north of Boston.

LPGA

Betsy King, who played with Walker and Stephenson in the final group, shot 70 on the par-72, 6,006-yard course and was in third place at 210.

Walker, the tour's No. 5 money-winner this year, is seeking her second career title and first of the season. Stephenson is seventh on the earnings list.

Walker began the day with a five-stroke lead over six golfers, including Stephenson and King. But a slow start in which she bogeyed the first two holes, both par-4's, cut Walker's lead to two strokes over Cindy Rarick.

Walker never fell out of the lead although she shared it with Stephenson for much of the round, played in high humidity and temperatures in the 90s.

Stephenson trailed by three strokes after making pars on the first three holes.

Then Stephenson, seeking her first victory of the year and 17th of her career, made her move. A birdie on the 337-yard fourth hole began a string of five holes over which she made four birdies. Her birdie on the 150-yard eighth hole put her at eight under par and gave her a share of the lead with Walker for the first time.

Martin returns to fans' delight

NEW YORK (AP) — Billy Martin, fired as manager of the New York Yankees on June 23, returned to Yankee Stadium Saturday and received the largest fan ovation during the Old Timers Day introductions.

Before the game, Martin said about his former club, "I'd like to see this team go all the way. If they had stayed healthy we would have run away with the division. We would have been seven or eight games up by now. But that's part of the game."

When asked if he would ever manage again, he replied, "Never here, but maybe somewhere else, if the right situation arises."

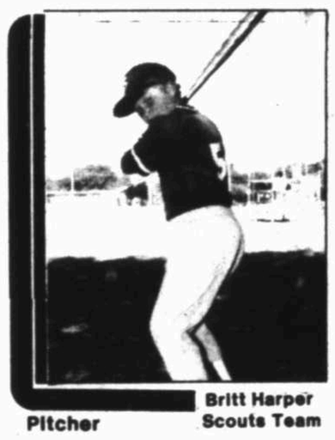

Twice before on Old Timers' Day, Martin was named manager of the Yankees. In 1975, he replaced Bill Virdon, and managed that same day. In 1979, he was named manager for the 1980 season.

Starter Catfish Hunter pitched a perfect first inning and Brian Doyle and Jim Spencer each drove in runs as the 1978 Yankees defeated the older Yankees All-Stars 3-1 in the Old Timers Game.

Is Your Kid Hall of Fame Material?

On July 23 we will publish an entire newspaper section focusing on youth baseball and including "baseball cards" like the one pictured on the right. Make sure your "hall-of-famer" gets proper recognition by sending a photo with the completed coupon. We must receive your entry by Tuesday, July 19. Cost per baseball card is $15.00 plus photo if needed. Cost per 2 children in one family is $20.00. Mail your coupon to:

Time to quit asking machines to make media decisions

Computers don't have all the answers. Cost per thousand is not a magic talisman. You have to factor in some imponderables, because what do machines know about human emotions like trust and believability? Asked in which medium they found the advertising most believable, more consumers said "newspapers" than the other four major media combined:*

Believe in newspapers. They can work marketing magic.

WOMEN

"It's not like I slacked off, but I felt comfortable," she said. "It was the strangest race I'd ever been in.

"I took off and there was no one around me."

In most road races, the men and women run together. But this just wasn't any road race — especially for several first-time competitors who participated in the Women's Distance Program at Memorial Stadium earlier this year. Race co-director Leesa Sanders said the program was designed for the beginner.

"Some in the race had to walk part of the way," she said. "We wanted to have more women (than the 36 entered Saturday), but there's not that many women that run in this area."

Several runners agreed that the humidity and wind were problems Saturday, but Jackson cruised through the mile mark in 4:52. Alone.

"I was intending to run 15:30," the former Eastern New Mexico U. runner said. "I just didn't rest enough in training this week."

Jackson continues to point toward the Septemberfest 10K run, hoping to inch toward a 31-minute clocking — or about a five minute per mile pace.

Sanders finished second in 17:02, while 40-year-old Victor Martinez placed third in 17:23.

Sanders and Martinez ran together for most of the race, before Sanders edged ahead.

"We always run together," Martinez said. "It was a tough race — a little hot."

The next local road race is the Crazy Eights eight-kilometer run on Aug. 8 (8-8-88). That race will start at 8 p.m. and prizes will be awarded to the eighth, 18th, 28th, 38th-place finishers, etc.

The crowd of 11,567 watched Carl Lewis (10.02 seconds, wind aided) and Calvin Smith (9.87, wind aided) win the semifinals of the men's 100-meter dash. The four favorites advanced to Sunday's semifinals of the men's 400-meter hurdles — Edwin Moses (48.34), Andre Phillips (48.58), Kevin Young (48.60) and Danny Harris (48.74).

PGT

Steve Haskins, El Paso — A graduate of the University of Texas at El Paso, Haskins was the 1986 and 1987 Texas State Open champion and claimed the PGT's inaugural event, the Mobile Invitational. Haskins, with over $20,000 is the fourth-leading money winner thusfar.

Bob Estes, Abilene — Voted Best Collegiate Golfer of 1988, Estes, a former member of the University of Texas golf team, is the first recipient of the Jack Nicklaus Collegiate Golfer of the Year Award. Estes finished in the Top 10 in this year's NCAA Championships.

Mike Standly, Abilene — A University of Houston graduate, Standly turned pro in 1986 and won the Greater Cincinnati Invitational, the seventh PGT stop this year.

Following the Midland stop, the tour continues at Amarillo's Tascosa Country Club.

Play concludes in September at Palm Coast, Fla., site of the PGT Championship.

TICKETS

Pre-game tickets will be sold each week from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Wednesdays and Thursdays and until 1 p.m. each Friday during the season. Adult tickets are $5. Student pre-game tickets are $1 and $3 if purchased at the gate on game night.

The 1988 high school football season begins Sept. 2 with Midland High hosting Lubbock Monterey while Lee travels to Killeen. Lee's first home game is Sept. 9 against Del Rio.

The Lee-MHS game is scheduled Sept. 23 and that meeting has potential sellout possibilities.

The Lee-Odessa Permian contest is Oct. 28, but that game is slated for Odessa's Ratliff Stadium. MHS will host Permian Sept. 30 and ticket demand should be high for that contest also.

The Oct. 7-8 weekend is also of special interest since both Lee and MHS will have home games. Lee will meet San Angelo in a key District 4-5A meeting on Friday, Oct. 7 and MHS will host Wichita Falls Rider in a non-conference game in a rare Saturday afternoon (2 p.m.) contest on Oct. 8.

Midland High will have a full 10-game schedule this year after two nine-game seasons. Lee will have its third consecutive nine-game campaign.

Season ticket sales should be brisk for both schools this year. Lee is coming off its fifth straight playoff season and Midland High had its first winning season in 10 years last fall and has an attractive seven-game Memorial Stadium schedule this year.

The following is a complete 1988 football schedule for both MHS and Lee.

Midland High Football Schedule

Sept. 2: Lubbock Monterey, here, 8 p.m. Sept. 9: Andrews, there, 8 p.m. Sept. 16: Lubbock Coronado, here, 8 p.m. Sept. 23: Midland Lee, there, 8 p.m. Sept. 30: Odessa Permian, here, 8 p.m. Oct. 8: Wichita Falls Rider, here, 2 p.m. Oct. 14: Abilene Cooper, here, 8 p.m. Oct. 21: San Angelo, there, 8 p.m. Oct. 28: Odessa High, here, 8 p.m. Nov. 4: Abilene High, there, 8 p.m.

Inviting Country Kitchen

This week's featured home is highlighted by a cozy country kitchen that was designed to be just as big and comfortable as the family room. The kitchen is very inviting to family and friends and has a place for everyone - a large center work island with stools, a desk area, and a breakfast area. Any family would love for their day to revolve around this kitchen which was totally remodeled three years ago.

INVITING

This wonderful four bedroom and three bath home is located in an older Midland neighborhood and is the perfect example of a family-style home. Approximately 800 square feet was added to the home three years ago and this remodeling included new carpeting, paint, and appliances.

The entrance to the home flows into a formal living and dining room. This lovely room has wedgwood blue walls with white trim and is brightened by a wall of windows.

Beyond the entrance, the family room is situated. This room was totally remodeled and focuses on a corner rock fireplace with hearth. Bookcases and a wet bar highlight one wall, with a wall of windows and a door lining another. This room has paneled wainscoting, cream colored walls and oatmeal carpeting which is featured throughout the home. A door leads to a small deck area in the backyard that is well suited for spending an evening viewing a West Texas sunset.

The kitchen and breakfast room are the center of all family activity in this home and is conveniently located to the right of the family room. Beautiful hand painted tile in shades of navy, yellow, rust and rose adorn the counter tops throughout the kitchen, making the kitchen very stunning and unique. The kitchen appliances include a Whirlpool cooktop on the work island and a double self-cleaning oven, a Kenmore microwave and a General Electric dishwasher. The kitchen also has beautifully stained cabinets with a large corner pantry.

The breakfast area is situated in front of a large window that looks out onto the spacious backyard. A door leads to a large patio that is ideal for summer cook-outs or for a small child to ride a tricycle.

To the left of the entrance hall, the home's four bedrooms are located. The first bedroom has tan walls and the second bedroom has a flower wallcovering in shades of soft blue, pink, yellow and green. Both these rooms have large closets and share a hall bath that has a vanity with two marble sinks and a separate area with a tub/shower.

A wall was added to form the third bedroom, which was originally the master bedroom, and is currently being used as a nursery. The focal point of this room is a wall that has a delightful print fabric of a marching bear band. A bath is situated across from this room and has a built-in shower.

With the addition of the master bedroom three years ago, the perfect haven for any couple was created. Two French doors provide a private access to the backyard and another door leads to a wonderful master bath. A lovely floral tile garnishes a whirlpool tub and the bath has two dressing areas, with the ladies side having a make-up area. The bath also has a built-in shower and a large linen closet. Another feature of this room is an enormous walk-in closet that has specially designed shelves and clothing rods.

The other amenities of this remodeled family home include a utility room which is conveniently located to the bedrooms, a two car garage with openers, a sprinkler system, and a small workshop in the backyard that also has space for storage.

This home is being offered by Action Realty for $120,000.

The family room was totally "gutted" and the back wall was extended when this home was remodeled three years ago. This room focuses on a corner rock fireplace and has a wall of cabinets and bookcases, with doors that open to reveal a wet bar.

The formal dining room is located at one end of the living room. This spacious room, which is decorated in shades of wedgwood blue, is ideal for formal entertaining.

The original master bedroom has been changed into a nursery with a wall of fabric that features a marching teddy bear band. This room has a large closet and a private bath which is situated across the hall.

Dedicated real estate agents make difference for Chaparral, Realtors

By JILL HANCOCK
Advertising Feature Writer

One of the reasons Chaparral, Realtors is able to be a full-service real estate company is due to the association of many dedicated real estate agents, stated David Pine, president. Two of the professional Chaparral agents that are making a difference are Linda Russell and Jan Stevenson.

After being involved in all the aspects of real estate - financing, developing, building, and foreclosures - since 1983, Linda Russell decided to obtain her real estate license and has been licensed in real estate sales for three years. She has been an associate of Chaparral, Realtors since 1987 and was also a Million Dollar Producer that year.

"As a Realtor, I believe that my profession is one of service, whereby I help the home buyer or home seller, on their journey through the maze of home selections, mortgage options, qualifications, inspections, closing etc.," explained Russell.

"It is my goal to impress upon the public through my work that we, as Realtors, are not simply 'sales people' working for a commission, but rather, 'service people' working hard to help those who want to make the American dream come true for themselves - homeownership," concluded Russell.

Russell is a member of the Midland Board of Realtors, the Texas Association of Realtors (TAR) and the National Association of Realtors (NAR).

Linda Russell

Jan Stevenson

Trying to accommodate the needs of a transfer and their families, Chaparral arranges for Jan Stevenson, the assistant vice president of Corporate Marketing and Relocation, to meet with a transferee to acquaint them with Midland before they even meet a real estate agent.

"I pre-interview a prospective homebuyer and then place them with an agent that will best suit their needs," Stevenson explained. "My initial contact is is to sell a person on Midland, not sell them a house. I feel that you have to let people get to know a town before they are going to know what area of Midland they want to live in."

Before coming to Midland in 1981, Stevenson had worked in Albuquerque the previous seven years in various aspects of the real estate industry. Although she transferred to Midland with an Apartment development company, Stevenson also worked as an office manager for the Earle M. Craig, Jr. Corporation, prior to deciding to return to real estate and pursue a degreed program in that field.

In addition to being a member of the Midland Board of Realtors, TAR and NAR, Stevenson has been very active in the Midland community. She has volunteered with the American Heart Association, Community and Senior Citizens Center, Midland Memorial Hospital and the Midland Tennis Club. Recently, Stevenson has served on the United Way Campaign cabinet for the past three years, was the S.P.C.A. publicity chairman this year and is an active member of First Presbyterian Church.

Don Harvey associate offers ideas to increase selling price of homes

People who are selling their homes, on average, could get a higher price, in most cases, if they would just follow a few simple procedures before listing their houses, according to a research conducted by Homequity, Inc. of Wilton, Conn., the nation's oldest and largest relocation management firm.

Young

"Once a price has been determined," says Ruth Young, sales associate of Don Harvey, Realtors of Midland, "the seller should look at the home as a prospective buyer would, remembering that first impressions are lasting impressions."

"The research shows that the house must have 'curb appeal'. Landscaping can have a great effect on curb appeal if the hedges are trimmed, the grass is cut and the flower beds have flowers in bloom - not overgrown with weeds," Ms. Young said.

"Other areas that will influence a buyer are cracked windows, torn screens or scratches on the front door where man's best friend may not have lived up to his reputation. Cars parked on the lawn are an absolute 'No. No.' because thus may indicate a lack of concern for the interior as well," says Ms. Young.

Kevin Kelleher, vice president of marketing management for Homequity said that the research shows a definite need for a home to conform to the rest of the neighborhood.

"If most of the other houses in the neighborhood have blacktop driveways, Kelleher says, "then the buyer expects to see a blacktop driveway."

The research shows that garages are more important for the cars and less important for storage in colder parts of the country than in warmer climates.

"That's particularly true in Texas and Florida," Ms. Young says, "where the house might not have much attic space or a basement. The garage is then important as a storage area or a family room and the car is frequently parked in the driveway."

Other important considerations the research found to be significant contributors to curb appeal, were the comparative size of the house with other houses in the neighborhood; the appearance of the house compared to the neighborhood - well kept or not; the condition of the paint on house and trim; the condition of the shutters; the condition of the sidewalks and steps.

"Inside is a matter of condition vs. appeal," Kelleher says. It may be boring and uncreative, but the color scheme in the house should appeal to the majority of prospective homebuyers. That means that it should have neutral colors and an acceptable color scheme to most people - lighter colors, sand and earth tones - not vivid color schemes that historically the majority of potential buyers find unappealing."

The home's interior condition should compare favorably to the rest of the houses on the market because the buyer is constantly comparing with the other homes that are being shown.

"Because she spends so much of her time there," says Ms. Young, "the kitchen is very important to the housewife. The cabinets must be clean and free from grease build-up, the range burners must be free of burned-on stains and the oven must be cleaned and free of baked-on food stains."

Ms. Young points out that the bathrooms take a lot of abuse from humidity. The tile should be cleaned and the grout replaced where necessary. Loose wallpaper should be glued back in place where moisture has caused it to peel and leaky faucets must have new washers so there is no annoying drip.

"Odors," Ms. Young says, "can turn off a buyer faster than an unfriendly banker. Nothing is worse than pet odors, dirty diapers or mildew. Distasteful odors can kill the sale of a very desirable home. On the other hand, the smell of fresh baking bread, or brownies in the oven, can conjure up pleasant memories of 'Grandmother's house for Christmas' that will help create the mood for a sale by giving that warm, cozy feeling of a very livable home.

"You can't attach a dollar value to having or not having eye appeal. But a home that sparkles and creates a friendly livable feeling, is bound to command a higher price," says Ms. Young. "From the time a potential buyer gets out of the car you want him or her to say, 'That is it! This is the house I've been looking for!'"

Don Harvey, Realtors is a member of the Homequity Relocation Centers (HRC), a national network of some 300 independently owned real estate firms comprising more than 30,000 sales agents serving 300 major markets in America.

Now Pick.

It's tough when they look so similar. And so with apartments. Many communities look similar, but looks can be deceiving. So how do you pick the good apple in the bunch?

Begin by looking at a Balcor Community. Saddle Club Apartments have been individually designed for their location. And developed to be worthy of the highest honor you can give it - to call it home.

But there's more...something at the core of each Balcor Community that can't be seen at all. And that's a passion for service. Saddle Club management professionals will go out of their way to ensure that your neighborhood is what you expect it to be. The very best.

So look beyond the first blush on the apple. And you'll pick Saddle Club every time.

Expect the Best.

Boning up on Osteoporosis

By ELIZABETH EDWIN
Lifestyle Editor

Remember when mom and dad used to make you drink all your milk so you could grow up with strong, healthy bones and teeth? Well, mom and dad really did know best once again.

Researchers have found that a disorder called osteoporosis is caused by a reduction of calcium in bone tissue and that the disease occurs more often in postmenopausal women and the elderly.

Osteoporosis is a disabling disease characterized by thinning, brittle bones. It is often called the "ticking time bomb" because it develops without any symptoms and in most cases can only be diagnosed after the bones have weakened enough for fractures to occur. It affects 15 to 20 million Americans a year and has led to 1.3 million bone fractures yearly in people over 45.

Since strong bones and teeth require calcium, which milk (along with other dairy products and some foods) supplies, having enough calcium in your bones is very important. During childhood, while bone tissue is being formed, ample calcium is imperative. Between the ages of 20-30 years, bones reach their strongest peak — but that doesn't mean you're off the hook from needing calcium.

Around age 35, bones begin to lose calcium faster than it is replaced, causing bones to become less dense. As aging progresses, calcium loss continues to occur. When too much calcium is lost from the bones, they become fragile and brittle.

But aging is not the only way bones lose calcium.

There are many other body functions that also require the nutrient. Calcium is needed for muscle contraction, blood clotting and brain and nerve function, according to Marion Laboratories.

When calcium supplied by the diet is insufficient to meet the body's needs, the body's hormones will release calcium from the bones into the bloodstream to make calcium available to perform various vital functions, according to Steven R. Gambert, MD, FACP; and Krishan L. Gupta, MD, MRCP, authors of "Aging Gracefully."

NORMAL BONES are composed of a series of thin intersecting plates surrounded by a dense shell. When calcium is continually withdrawn from the bones, the plates become filled with holes. Over time, the plates can disappear completely and the surrounding shell becomes thin.

If there is a long-term deficiency, the bone storage depot can become depleted of its calcium resulting in extremely fragile bones that can be fractured by even a minor mishap.

Although osteoporosis is not the sole cause of fractures in postmenopausal women and the elderly, it is considered to play a major role. Fractures in this population occur most frequently at the wrist, the spine and the hip.

It was estimated by a panel of experts at the Consensus Development Conference of the International Conference on Osteoporosis that more than 40 percent of women will experience a fracture by the time they reach age 70.

Over 250,000 hip fractures occur each year in the United States, with an even higher number of fractures occuring at the wrist, rib and vertebra, according to "Aging Gracefully." These fractures are largely attributed to osteoporosis.

To emphasize the importance of this fact, Gambert and Gupta added that fewer than half of all women who suffer hip fracture recover normal function, and 15 percent die soon after the fracture occurs with another 30 percent dying within one year of the injury — not from the injury itself, but from complications such as pneumonia and blood clots. Although osteoporosis is more common in postmenopausal women and older persons, several characteristics may put a person at greater risk of developing it.

Known risk factors include heredity, being a Caucasian or Oriental woman, having early (before 45) menopause, smoking, having a chronically low calcium intake or high protein or phosphorus intake, being inactive, drinking alcohol excessively, having an estrogen level drop, childlessness and being slight of build.

Men also can suffer from osteoporosis, but it is not as common. Researchers at Marion Laboratories cite many reason for this.

MOST MEN usually have more bone mass to begin with, therefore, they suffer slower bone loss with age than women do. They usually weigh more, have larger muscles, consume more calcium and get more exercise than women. Men also do not have a sudden decline in the sex hormones that protect the bone. Their testosterone declines gradually with age.

The exception to the small prevalence of osteoporosis in male patients are those men who suffer chronic alcoholism. These patients do show signs of the disease.

Although it is believed that osteoporosis cannot be significantly reversed, progression of the disease can usually be slowed down or halted. No matter what age a person is, prevention can be helpful.

According to Dr. Bess Dawson Hughes, a researcher and chief of the Calcium and Bone Metabolism laboratory of the USDA Human Nutrition Research Center on Aging at Tufts University, and researchers at the Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minn., bone deterioration can start as early as age 20 in women and is first evident in the spine. By age 40, a woman may have lost 20 percent of the minerals in her spine.

For this reason, one of the early signs of osteoporosis is a loss of height caused when the weakened bones of the spine begin to compress. Later, as the bones fracture and collapse, the shoulders can become stooped and bent.

Loss of calcium in the extremities typically begins at about 50, Dawson Hughes said, and by age 70, the spinal loss can be as much as 50 percent while the extremities may show a 20 percent loss.

Experts claim that various precautions can help slow or even halt the advances of osteoporosis.

It is advisable for women of all ages to have a daily intake of at least 800 mg of calcium. Those in a higher risk category may need more. According to a government survey, the average adult woman consumes only 475 mg of calcium per day, therefore most women need to add calcium rich foods to their diets.

Food sources rich in calcium are dairy products, broccoli, kale, collards, turnips, canned salmon and sardines (provided you eat the bones), leafy green vegetables, beans and grains.

In a study of postmenopausal women with a calcium intake of under 400 mg per day, Dawson Hughes found that they had a bone loss from the spine of 4.8 percent a year (one percent per year is considered average in a healthy woman). Their loss was substantially higher than those women who consumed 800 to 1,400 mg of calcium per day.

ALTHOUGH SOME reports question the value of calcium therapy for postmenopausal women and the elderly, Dawson Huges believes that increasing calcium intake to 1,500 mg daily will "significantly reduce bone loss in the extremities."

Most experts recommend adding calcium to the diet rather than adding a calcium supplement. The use of supplements with meals can impair the absorption of iron from the meal, possibly resulting in an iron deficiency.

However, 76 percent of the dietary calcium intake is in the form of dairy products and many people prefer to stay away from them due to their high caloric content and relatively high cholesterol levels. Also, many persons cannot digest the milk sugars (lactose) in dairy products. The result may be cramps, abdominal bloating and diarrhea.

In these cases, a calcium supplement may be advised by a physician.

Although the beneficial effects of calcium supplements are still being researched, exercise has been proven helpful in slowing osteoporosis. Weight-bearing exercise, such as walking, jogging, bicycling and jump roping, is recommended because regular exercise stimulates new bone growth.

When the first astronauts came back from space after only a short time, NASA physicians found evidence of measurable bone loss. G. Donald Whedon, a NASA medical consultant, said that although physical activity is necessary to preserve bone mass, ordinary calisthenics are ineffective. He recommends upright exercise that involves gravity, movement and muscle pull.

He also believes spending time outdoors is important. Sunlight helps your body create the active form of vitamin D that helps metabolize calcium.

FOR WOMEN who have had their ovaries removed, have early (before 45) menopause or who are at high risk, estrogen replacement therapy may be prescribed by a doctor. Estrogen helps keep the bones from dissolving and helps the digestive system absorb calcium more efficiently.

Estrogen therapy is a way to help supplement the body's diminishing reserves, keeping the body's calcium in better balance. However, not all women can use the estrogen replacement therapy — the decision is best made by a doctor.

Whether or not estrogen replacement therapy is an option, people concerned about having osteoporosis should stop smoking, reduce consumption of alcoholic beverages, soft drinks and caffeine, and begin an exercise program, in addition to increasing calcium intake.

But don't make the mistake of thinking the a nightly dish of ice cream will do the job of increasing dietary calcium. One cup of ice cream will only add 194 mg of calcium, but will increase calorie intake by 257. A better bet is one cup of yogurt made form skimmed milk offering 294 mg of calcium and only 123 calories.

If summer clearance sales are in full swing, can fall be far behind? Not according to the members of the Children's Service League, who are busy with plans for their Sept. 22 benefit for the Midland Cerebral Palsy Center.

A s:.ted luncheon and style show \.ll take place at the Holiday Inn Convention Center and will feature fashions from Swartz.

Ann (Mrs. James) Walton is chairman and Carlene Ware, co-chairman, of this year's event. Juanita (Mrs. Durward) Goolsby is the coordinator. Martha (Mrs. Bruce) Pope is the league president.

Committee chairmen include Betty (Mrs. Hal) Kempf, invitations; Nancy (Mrs. George) Patterson, publicity; Joan (Mrs. William) Henry, decorations; Mrs. Ware, table decorations; Patty (Mrs. J.H.) Chandler, wine serving; Dee (Mrs. Paul) Morris, ushers; Sarah (Mrs. Ron) Holcomb, special hostesses; Delores (Mrs. John) Davis, tickets; Liz (Mrs. Rick) Orson, prizes; Jean (Mrs. J.L.) Deffenbaugh, model transportation; LaDonna (Mrs. Richard) Moore, expressions of thanks, and Barbara (Mrs. Earl) Bruno and Betty (Mrs. Edward) Gemmill, invitation design.

Since the mid-Sixties, the style show-luncheon and the Beefeaters Ball and cattle auction have alternated each year as the league's only two fund-raising projects for the CP Center.

The league was organized in 1939 by a group of women to make layettes for the indigent children of Midland. It later became the support group for the CP Center, which has operated at its present location, 802 W. Ventura Ave., since 1974.

HOLLY ENGELKE, who became Mrs. Steven Wayne Butler in a Saturday evening ceremony in Grace Lutheran Church, was honored recently with a miscellaneous bridal shower. The party was held in the home of Ute (Mrs. Wayne) Gibson, with Maxine (Mrs. Clifford) Chapman as co-hostess.

The bride's chosen colors of pinks and white were carried out in the decorations.

Holly is the daughter of Margie Engelke, and the groom is the son of Nancy and Bud Butler. The couple will honeymoon in the Caribbean.

ALTHOUGH A WEEK AGO Saturday proved to be a dreary, rainy day, the mood at the home of Dell (Mrs. George) Davis was anything but overcast as guests gathered for a festive miscellaneous shower to honor Stacey Barr.

She and former Midlander Wade Perry, both of Arlington, will be married July 30 in Arlington.

Special guests included the groom's mother, Annette (Mrs. Bub) Hull of Midland, and the bride's mother, Karen (Mrs. Galyn) Barr of Arlington.

Guests enjoyed a delicious brunch, which included fruit pizza, quiche, cinnamon rolls, fresh fruit in caramel sauce, sausage pinwheels and toasted, sourdough bread.

THREE MIDLAND WOMEN recently traveled to Boston for the centennial convention of Delta Delta Delta social sorority. But the trip got off to a terrifying start for two of them. Somewhere out of Dallas, their plane plummeted 25,000 feet, enough to have sent more anxious fliers looking for the nearest car rental agency or bus station when they returned shaken but unhurt to their departure point.

However, the pair, Judy (Mrs. Charles) Priddy, president of the Midland Alumnae Chapter and convention delegate, and alternate delegate Charlotte Langer, needed to reach their destination on schedule, so they boarded a later flight.

Already in Boston was Pat (Mrs. Charles) Dougherty, who serves as district chairman for West Texas and New Mexico alumnae chapters and who had arrived earlier for an officers' meeting.

In between taking care of sorority business, the convention goers delighted in seeing the capital city's many historical points of interest and in being part of its Fourth of July celebration. They attended the Boston Pops concert and watched the spectacular fireworks display over the Charles River. An old-fashioned clambake also was a highlight of the day.

Pat particularly enjoyed a pre-convention dinner at the Union Oyster House, which is the oldest restaurant in continuous service in America. It has been doing business as a restaurant since 1826 and before that time was a dry goods establishment. It played a part in Revolutionary War history, as did many of the local stores, which became meeting and command posts.

Pat also reports it was fun to see former Midlanders, Tricia (Mrs. Mike) McElwrath of Washington, D.C., and her sister Melissa (Mrs. Scott) Fuller of San Antonio, at convention.

The opening banquet got off to an auspicious start when a fife and drum corps led the officers into the convention hall, and each of the 157 collegiate chapters was represented by a banner paraded around the perimeter of the room.

The sorority was founded in 1888 at Boston University, and the group got to see the founder's lovely home in the old Roxbury section of the city.

Invention eases pain

MONTICELLO, Minn. (AP) — People laughed when Don Nicolai thought about inventing a disposable fly swatter and a pencil equipped with a light so he could write in the dark.

But nobody laughed when the Minnesota Twins used a Nicolai invention during the World Series. Requests for his Cryocup came from universities, sports medicine clinics and professional sports teams such as the Minnesota North Stars, New York Yankees and Montreal Canadiens.

Nicolai and his wife, Kay, see that as just the beginning for the Cryocup, which they envision being sold to millions of joggers and other sports enthusiasts and people with arthritis.

"I think eventually it is going to make us a lot of money," Nicolai said.

The Cryocup is a reusable, two-piece plastic cup used to massage ice on muscle sprains, strains and spasms.

The cup has hit the market at a time when ice massage has emerged as the preferred treatment for sports-related injuries. Sports clinics and teams without the Cryocup fill plastic foam cups with water, freeze them, peel back the foam and massage.

"I kind of got sick and tired of these paper cups," said Nicolai, a registered nurse at Northwest Community Clinic in Monticello. "You would peel off the paper, turn it upside down and the ice would fall out. It was just kind of an untidy method."

So he suggested the idea of inventing a reusable cup to Oliver Hanson, a retired nurse in Cedar. After three years of experimenting with prototypes, the duo came up with a sturdy polystyrene plastic cup last August.

The cup is manufactured at Modern Plastics in Princeton and sold through the mail.

"A reusable cup is a good idea, as paper cups often burst and are a mess after they are peeled back," said Bob Finke, a physical therapist at the Braemer Sports Medicine Center in Edina.

While Tom Rutledge, trainer for the University of Minnesota Gopher football team, said he had seen the Cryocup, he wasn't convinced he should discontinue using plastic foam cups. The Gophers get their foam cups free, while each Cyrocup costs $1.98, he noted.

"I don't see it (the Cryocup) as having a great impact on sports medicine," Rutledge said.

Nicolai agreed there are many skeptics, but said it makes no sense to use the archaic paper cup method when there is a much easier way.

Breast Cancer Detection Unit Available to Area Women

An early read could save your life...

According to the American Cancer Society, one out of eleven women in the United states will develop breast cancer sometime in her lifetime. It is currently estimated that over 37,000 women die each year as the result of breast cancer.

Ninety percent of breast cancer are diagnosed by women or their physicians finding a lump in the breast. Women who are diagnosed with a lump large enough to feel have a 50 percent five year survival rate. A woman who is diagnosed as having breast cancer by mammography, before a lump can be felt, has a 97% five year survival rate. A mammogram can detect a cancer this small, e even before it can be felt. The American Cancer Society has established guidelines for a mammography in asymptomatic women. (Women who have no symptoms of disease). Those guidelines have been adopted by the American Academy of Family Physicians, American College of Obstericians and Gynecologists, and the American College of Radiology. Those guidelines are:

I. 35-40 years of age - One baseline mammogram.
II.. 40-50 years of age - A mammogram every 1-2 years depending on breast type and risk factor.
III. 50 years of age and over. An annual physical examination and annual mammogram.
IV. Asymptomatic women under 50 years of age with significant high risk factors should be examined at appropriate intervals. These risk factors include previous breast cancer and family history of cancer.
V. A symptomatic woman should have a mammogram at any age when she experiences a mass, nipple discharge, skin changes or unexplained breast pain.

A screening mammogram is an x-ray of the breast using extremely low dosages of radiation (usually comparable to dental x-rays) and is designed to find very early cancers.

A female technologist who is highly trained in mammography will perform the examination.

The charge for the screening mammogram is $90.00. The unit accepts cash, check, Visa, Mastercard and American Express.

'Bad back' variety of ailments

Associated Press

One-third of the 200 million Americans who have back trouble at some time in their lives suffer from what is mistakenly called a slipped disc — and there is no one-size-fits-all treatment.

Bad backs are so common, according to an article in a recent issue of Town & Country, that sufferers get instant advice from friends about the one and only "magic cure."

There is no such thing and some of the magic cures can be downright dangerous because each person's anatomy and condition is as individual as a fingerprint.

There is no such thing as a slipped disc. There are problems with bad discs, however, in which the nucleus of the disc pushes through the eroded hard surface of the disc and presses against a nerve.

People with ruptured or herniated discs not only have back-muscle pain, they almost always suffer excruciating leg pain.

The affected nerve usually is the largest one in the body, the sciatic, which radiates in two branches from the lower spine down the back of each leg from buttocks to heel.

Less frequently but not less painfully, the troublesome disc is in the cervical, or neck, area and the inflamed, swollen nerve radiates into the arm rather than the leg.

A bad disc can cause progressive muscular weakness in the legs and feet, or arms. Damaged nerves create numbness and tingling in the limbs.

In perhaps 5 percent of cases, the bad disc presses on a nerve that causes incontinence or loss of bladder function.

The painful symptoms almost always subside by themselves, usually after a couple of days to two weeks of bed rest.

To relieve pain and hasten recovery with minimal side effects, spine doctors advise the shortest effective course of light medication. Most prescribe a nonsteroidal anti-inflammatory such as aspirin or ibuprofen, a painkiller such as codeine and a mild tranquilizer.

Once you can walk around again and tolerate testing, your doctor will try to learn the cause of your back pain.

Among the spectrum of nondisc back problems that spinal X-rays and other tests can reveal are a dislocated or fractured vertebra, osteo-arthritis, a spinal tumor or infection.

Two diagnostic imagers — the CT or computerized tomography scan and MRI or magnetic resonance imaging — have revolutionized doctors' ability to diagnose accurately.

DEAR ABBY

Bald men fans deplore foolish cover up efforts

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: "Losing Mine" wanted to know how women feel about balding or bald men. "Can a man without hair be considered sexy, handsome and a hunk?" he asks.

Here is one woman's view: Baldness is not a "loss" — it's a change. Forget the toupees and transplants. The expense, pain and anxiety over strong winds are worse than any change in appearance.

And whatever you do, don't try to cover your baldness with foot-long wisps of hair parted an inch over one ear and draped around the head as many times as it will go. This looks ridiculous, fools no one, and is the subject of more notice, derision and comment than baldness could ever be. Gentlemen, please accept yourselves as you are — the way millions of bald men and those who love them do. — LAURIE MITCHELL, WICHITA, KAN.

DEAR ABBY: I want to answer "Losing Mine": I've never seen hair on my husband's head except in pictures. He was bald at 31 when I met him and it didn't make one bit of difference to me. If a man needs a hairpiece or a transplant for himself, fine, but if he's doing it for the ladies, he's wasting a lot of money. Any woman who would reject a man because he's bald isn't worth having.

I'm married to a handsome, sexy hunk. And his hair doesn't tickle my nose when he sleeps with his head on my shoulder. To me, he's not really bald. He just has more face to kiss. — WHO NEEDS HAIR IN CHICAGO?

DEAR ABBY: My father, who just turned 50, started losing his hair when he was in the Navy about 30 years ago.

When our family (Mom, Dad and their four kids) went for a portrait sitting 10 years ago, the photographer wanted an outdoor shot, so he had us move to a shady spot so he wouldn't get a glare off Dad's shiny head. Once, when we joked to Dad that we'd read that "a bald head is solar power for a sex machine," Mom blushed.

Dad is a dead ringer for Gavin MacLeod in "The Love Boat." Everyone says so. My 26-year-old brother, whose hairline is also heading north, had a girlfriend tell him she hoped he'd be as handsome as Dad when he gets older. Go ahead and use my name. Everybody in the Carter family has a wonderful sense of humor. — PAM CARTER, ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.

DEAR ABBY: I can't verify that bald men are better lovers, but my hunch is that a man who has lost his hair — or is losing it fast and isn't preoccupied by the fact — is generally superior in bed.

Bald men who don't resort to trying to hide their baldness have obviously accepted themselves as they are. This is masculine, strong, honest, self-confident and, therefore, sexy! — BALD IS BEAUTIFUL

DEAR ABBY: You said it all when you said, "It's not what's on a man's head; it's what's in it that makes him attractive, sexy and handsome."

I'll tell you what handsome and sexy means to me: It's being kind, thoughtful, clean, honest and gentle.

My guy became my friend first — then my lover. He's everything I've ever admired in a man. I'm as crazy about him as if this were my first love. I'm 74 and he's 75. — IN LOVE IN VENTURA

DEAR ABBY: I nominate Louis Gossett Jr. as the handsomest, sexiest hunk I've ever set eyes on. I think he's bald, but I can't swear to it. I never could see above those gorgeous, penetrating eyes. — DOTTIE IN DETROIT

Don't put off writing thank-you notes, letters of sympathy, etc., because you don't know what to say. Get Abby's booklet, "How to Write Letters for All Occasions." Lifestyle policies

Policies for publication of announcements in the Lifestyle sections of The Midland Reporter-Telegram are:

Information for Sunday pages must be in our office by 5 p.m. the preceding Tuesday. For publication in a weekday paper, we must receive the information by noon two days before the information is to be published.

For example, an item for Wednesday's paper must be received by noon Monday.

Engagement announcements must appear at least two weeks before the wedding date. Wedding announcements must appear within one month of the event. Anniversary announcements — 25th or higher — must be published within one month of the anniversary date.

All articles must be submitted in writing. Forms for weddings, engagements and anniversaries, only published Sundays, are available in the Lifestyle office.

All materials must include the signature and telephone number of the person submitting them.

We cannot mail forms to persons in Midland.

Pictures must be picked up in the Lifestyle office within one month after publication. To have a photo returned by mail, include a self-addressed, stamped envelope. Unclaimed photos are discarded after a month.

Photographs may be submitted with wedding and engagement announcements, and anniversary announcements of 50 years or more, but are not required.

A portrait of the bride-elect or of the future bride and bridegroom together may be submitted with engagement announcements.

Portraits of the bride only or of the wedding couple may be submitted with wedding announcements. A different photo must be submitted for the engagement and wedding announcements.

Photos should be vertical, black and white, glossy finish, studio portraits. Studio color pictures may be submitted, but quality reproduction cannot be assured. Snapshots generally are not acceptable and Polaroid shots are not accepted.

The MRT reserves the right to deny publication of any photo due to quality or content.

There is no charge for publication of photographs and stories.

Marvel Sayers

Midland woman awarded tribute

Marvel Sayers, member of the Midland County Republican Women's Club, received the Texas Federation of Republican Women's "Tribute to Women" award at the recent Texas Republican convention. This award honors women who contribute greatly to volunteer work.

Ms. Sayers has been a member of Midland County Republican Women's Club since 1970, and has served as president, first vice president, second vice president and chairmen of most committees. Currently, she is co-chairman of the Pink Elephant Ball and is a member of the Texas Federation of Republican Women board serving her second term as award of excellence chairman.

She has been a delegate to all Texas Federation of Republican Women conventions since 1979, and was chairman of the convention in 1985 when it was in Midland.

Demands increase

NEW YORK (AP) — Movie audiences are growing by 4 percent a year, despite increased competition from video cassettes and rising admission costs.

In return though, moviegoers now want more for the bigger bucks they are putting down at the box office. And that could mean a return to entertainment "extras," such as serials and short subjects, says producer Stan Zeitlin.

Zeitlin says his firm has made "The Popcorn Report," a nine-minute "short" of noncommercial messages from some of the nation's largest corporations.

Silver anniversary celebrated

Claude and Erma Dawson of Midland celebrated their 25th wedding anniversary with a reception Saturday at the Holiday Inn T-Dome.

Hosts at the gathering were the couple's children.

The couple was married July 13, 1963, in Midland. They have three children, Claude R., Fredrick and Cora.

Dawson retired from Sohio Petroleum Oil Company in 1985. His wife is employed with AT&T Communications.

AT WIT'S END

Summer camp not what it used to be

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

In the beginning, there was "summer camp." And it was swell.

Kids slept in cabins with 2-inch mattresses that smelled like dirty socks. Mosquitoes filed flight plans. And anyone who used soap or took a shower was a mama's boy and "needed work."

There was a schedule of activities, but no one followed it. Most of the day was spent gathering animals to hide in people's beds at night. There was food to be wadded up and used for bait. And you could be busy forever throwing rocks at anything that looked like it was relaxing.

The nights were busy. There were counselors to make miserable and scare half to death. There were licenses to issue to stupid kids you talked into going "snipe hunting." There were plans to make to run naked through the camp with paper bags on your heads.

There just weren't enough hours in the week to do all the mischief you had planned. You had to con a counselor out of forbidden matches by telling him you wanted to burn a tick off your back. You had to attend craft classes to finish the roach motel you were building for the food tent. And spying — if you did it right — took maybe 20-30 hours a week.

And camp was good.

Then some people thought camps weren't structured enough, so they decided to build a few tennis courts and call it a "tennis camp" where you could hit 10,000 balls a day and squeeze a tennis ball during dinner to strengthen your forearm. Then a voice said, "As long as they're away from home, let 'em lose weight," and they called it a "weight-loss camp" where kids could graze through three meals a day and chin themselves on tree limbs.

For several years, this was so. Then someone really got serious and decided to create a computer camp where kids sat hunched over a game that talked back and they bonded with software.

Adults began to look at camping as a retreat from phones and elevator music. So they established camps for "stress under the stars." Now there's a camp for entrepreneurs where business planning, marketing, finance and goal setting are covered ... one for business initiatives where you deal with management and accounting ... and even success camps where there's a physical endurance segment.

Today the sounds of crickets are drowned out by computer printouts. Vuitton luggage has replaced the laundry duffle bags, and microwaves beep where campfires crackled with green wood.

I'll bet they don't even pack flashlights to shine on Frankenstein faces in the dark!

IT'S YOUR LIFE

Number of drinking problems among elderly increasing

By STEVE EDWARDS

Edwards

A recovered alcoholic, speaking to a group of social workers, listed several warning signs of drinking problems among the elderly.

"Look for bruises on a woman's legs caused by bumping into furniture," he said. "Watch out for unusual sallowness in the skin. Be aware that a home overly neat and orderly at the time of your visit may reflect a careful attempt to hide a drinking problem."

Alcoholism among the elderly is a very serious problem which is made even more pressing by the difficulty of identifying the persons involved.

Even though statistics indicate the amount of drinking generally declines as people age, the number of elderly alcoholics is increasing.

More than 24.6 million Americans — about 11 percent of the population — are now 65 or older.

Many who never drank or who were considered only casual drinkers are developing serious drinking habits.

Yet issues of loneliness, grief, aging and other concerns are not highly visible.

In fact, many elderly individuals are not included in statistical data, partially because of the large number of older persons who remain in their own homes (over 80 percent) and who generally live isolated, lonely lives, either individually or as couples.

In most cases, problems in the work place and in relationships, and traffic violations provide evidence of problem drinking, but drinking problems can be hidden indefinitely when a person does not go to work, lives alone, and rarely socializes or drives a car.

Even if their alcoholism is noticed, they may be regarded as harmless old folks who are hurting nobody but themselves.

Many elderly alcoholics seldom leave their homes. Insecurity, financial difficulties or personal preference may keep them out of the bars.

Older people rarely are arrested for drunk driving, since they tend to drive only short distances or not at all.

As with alcoholics of all ages, the older problem drinker is often ashamed of his or her drinking and wishes to hide it.

At the same time, the alcohol enhances the feelings of isolation, loneliness and boredom that helped create the problem in the first place.

The result is a destructive cycle of more withdrawal and more alcohol to deaden the awareness and grief of their aloneness.

Many common signs attributed to aging actually can be signs of problem drinking, including confusion, paranoia, disorientation, hallucinations, memory loss, depression, anxiety, hostility and a tendency to make up stories to fill in memory gaps.

If the signs are not differentiated and a proper diagnosis is made, appropriate treatment cannot be given.

The following signs may indicate an elderly person with a drinking problem:

Odor on the breath; flushed face; bruises on arms and legs; broken bones and sprains; poor physical health; episodes of prolonged seclusion; frequent mistakes in financial matters; refusal to answer the telephone or door; mail and newspapers piled up; frequent trips to the hospital; erratic sleeping and eating problems; excessive napping; slurred speech; and unsteadiness in the hands and legs.

The problem drinker may claim to use alcohol as an aid to digestion, or he may make new social companions who are heavy drinkers and lose his old friends.

He may telephone people after midnight, usually because his feelings of loneliness mount after many hours of sitting alone drinking.

His self-neglect, confusion, and aggressive and violent behavior often trigger family quarrels.

Steve Edwards is executive director of Community and Senior Services and the Visiting Nurse Service of Midland.

Houston's Warwick Hotel (above) is located across from Herman Park and was originally an apartment house. When oilman John W. Mecom decided to make the Warwick into a hotel, he and his wife traveled the world in search of fine furnishing, such as this period statue (left).

HISTORIC HOTELS

San Antonio's Menger Hotel was the place to stay.

By CAROLYN FITZ-GERALD

From the fortified walls of the Alamo to an 1886 governor's formal inagural ball, to a Houston oil magnate's rare art collection, the story of Texas is told in its old hotels. Three such historic hotels are the Menger in San Antonio, the Driskill in Austin and the Warwick in Houston.

The Menger began in 1859 when the upstart state of Texas began making a place for itself in the world of commerce, politics and ranching empires.

Just 23 years after the Alamo fell and Texas emerged victorious from the Battle of San Jacinto, a German merchant named William Menger opened a bar and brewery in the shade of the Alamo.

Menger soon realized that his customers, who often spent the night on the long trestle tables, really needed a hotel so he built the first Menger Hotel with basement walls thick enough to keep his brew cool and preserve his imported hops and malt.

San Antonio was fast becoming a center for trade and the Menger became the place to stay, especially for the cowboys who spent their hard-earned money for a room overlooking the Plaza and for the soldiers who jingled gold coins in their pockets.

Among the rich and famous people to stay at the Menger was Captain Richard King, of the giant King Ranch in south Texas. A suite at the hotel was named for King.

Travel group designed for singles who 'get around'

By MITCH WEISS

CLYDE, Ohio (AP) — After more than 40 years of teaching, Shirley Skokane looked forward to hitting the open road in her recreation vehicle, but had reservations about traveling alone.

Miss Skokane wanted to travel America's highways and byways, looking for adventure, meeting new people and enjoying her autumn years.

But being single and traveling alone held her back from starting her dream.

A few months ago Miss Skokane learned about Loners of America, a club that offers friendship as well as fun for the single traveler.

Now, Miss Skokane, 62, is a road warrior, crisscrossing Ohio and the nation in search of sun and excitement. And if a little romance comes into the picture, so be it.

"We have a lot of fun," she said. "If there's anybody who likes to camp and is single, but they don't like to go to a campground by themselves, this is the way to go."

Phyllis Sleasman, president of the Fallen Timbers chapter of LOA, which covers northwest Ohio, said there were several recreation vehicle clubs for couples and families, but none for singles.

"Most of the people are over 50 and they enjoy camping and they camp with everything from a tent to a 30-foot Class A vehicle," she said. "I guess we could have picked a better name, but you don't want to say singles or losers of America. It's just singles who like to camp and enjoy being together."

Loners of America, headquartered in Ellsinore, Mo., is less than a year old. Total membership in the United States and Canada is 900. Ohio has four LOA chapters and Fallen Timbers has about 30 members.

The LOA organizes local and national campouts and rallies, which include games, cookouts, tours and talk — lots of talk, Ms. Sleasman said.

In some cases, caravans are formed by members to travel through an area, state or cross-country.

"Some of these people are full-time campers. They've sold their homes and camp in the South in the winter and head North in the summer.

"It's not a dating-type club," she said. But she quickly added that some people have grown close and think of each other as family.

Ms. Sleasman, also a retired teacher, said she has traveled to Arizona and all over Ohio. She said LOA has added spice to her life and that she looks forward to the weekends when she can take off on the road — again.

"It's a great feeling to get on the road and know you have a place to go, a place where you can meet your friends. I think it's teriffic," she said.

Miss Skokane echoed Ms. Sleasman, saying the "lonesome highway" is a thing of the past now that she has campanions where she goes.

"At least one of the Ohio chapters has an outing each week. There are always things to do.

"We have a nice mix of people, retired doctors, lawyers and factory workers. When you go camping, you're with a group of other single people who all have the same interest. You sit around and do a lot of talking. You can do your own thing too. After a while you get to know everyone and you're a family," she said.

She admits that while romance is not the main reason people join, some members get involved in relationships.

"I haven't met anybody who is looking for a wife. But, I guess, occasionally somebody who wants to get married, does," she said.

Contest fires traveler's imagination

By FRED FERRETTI
Copley News Service

CNS Graphic

I only entered the contest so I could win the Rolls-Royce. I have always wanted to travel around in a Rolls-Royce, even a cheap model (the one mentioned was the $100,000 low-end model) and this was an opportunity for me to perhaps become a traveler in style.

I didn't really expect to be like Robin Leach who always seems to be in the lap of luxury. But maybe I could be at luxury's shin, or calf, or something.

At any rate, all I had to do to be on the road to my Rolls was to "carefully cut out" my computer-printed number, name and address, then affix it to a 3-by-5 card, or any stiff blank piece of paper cut to that size. I had to use, it said, glue or cellophane tape, "no staples or paper clips," and send that in to some people out in Hicksville, N.Y. The name should have given me pause, but I kept thinking Rolls-Royce.

I did not have to buy any of the copies of famous perfumes these people from Hicksville were peddling, their "versions," they called them, of Obsession, Joy, Gucci, Opium, Chanel No. 5, Halston, Shalimar, Oscar de la Renta, Coco, Diva, and Paloma Picasso, to name some. Nor should I forget to mention a "last minute perfume listing," Poison.

No, I did not have to buy any to qualify for the Rolls-Royce, but if I did not, I had to use the envelope marked, "NO." I suspected that they would throw the NOs out with the Rolls' oil change, but, nonetheless, I sent my card and my NO.

Well, I won!

Not a Rolls-Royce, to be sure, not even a down payment, but a check from those people in Hicksville drawn on the Chase Manhattan Bank of New York for 40 cents. This, a note read, "represents your share of FIRST ROUND SWEEPSTAKES PRIZE MONEY. (We are sorry it's so small. The First Round Prize was $3,000, but because of the number of First Round winners your equal share is only 40 cents.)"

It went on to say I could deposit the check if I wished, or use it toward the purchase of any of the nationally advertised products, pictures of which (and an order form) they sent me.

There were quite a few things that, as a traveler, I could use, and I was informed that if I shopped prudently, my 40-cent check could be worth more, much more.

I could, for example, buy any of a clutch of watches. For evening wear there was a "version" of a Piaget, goldlike, for only $15. The people in Hicksville pointed out that Tiffany's charges $9,800 for a Piaget, so I could see what a deal that was.

There was a chronometer that would give me the hour in two different times zones, for only $16.95. There was a laser beam watch in which the hands were liquid crystal, and that was only $4; and there was another evening watch with a dozen rhinestones floating around the dial, and that was the same price as the "Piaget," only $15.

What to do?

I agonized for a bit, then went on to other paraphernalia being offered.

I found leather bags with matching wallets; a "Swiss Army Type" knife for only $3; a "Commando Knife," for $8, that looked like the perfect tool for a weekend of survival training on the Long Island dunes, or even in Hicksville.

There was a fishing rod for $5 and, finally, and perhaps most exciting, the "original designer label totes" from Gloira Vanderbilt and Pierre Cardin, which are sold, not only by those fellows in Hicksville, but on Fifth Avenue, Rodeo Drive and on the Champs-Elysses. That's what it said.

How to invest my 40 cents?

A watch would be nice, I mused, but so would that Commando Knife, because with it I could quite easily obtain other things of value, from others. On the other hand, a Pierre Cardin tote bag would indicate to others as we stood in airline check-in lines that I was a traveler of some substance.

Well, in the end, I decided to keep the check and not buy anything. I may, in the end, be sorry, because I am now wondering that since I did not order anything would I be thrown in the discards, unable to be in the barrel of entries for the Rolls-Royce?

Then I thought, I did not buy any Poison and I still won 40 cents, so, perhaps the people in Hicksville might throw me in the barrel anyway. As a matter of fact, there was a note along with the Commando Knife and other travelers' gear which noted, "There is no purchase obligation and you do not have to send back the order form to be eligible for the Grand Prize, but we would appreciate it if you did."

Oh, oh.

Nevertheless, I am keeping my check as I await the call that will inform me that I am right up there with Robin Leach and the rest of the rich fellows. For, you see, I believe those people in Hicksville are honest. I just wish their mail was coming from another place.

Garage organization improved

Copley News Service

Two more nails, and you will finish that deck you have been building on and off for the past years. Two more nails and you'll be a free man again! No more weekends occupied by sawing and sanding and nailing.

Wait a minute. What about all that leftover lumber? And just look at all those nails, bolts and screws you have left! You can't just throw them away, can you? Looks like you need another project.

Don't faint. Here's just what you need. It's easy, it's useful, it's an eight-panel plan sheet for garage storage! For years your wife has been after you to do something about "that mess our there." Here is your chance. Use your surplus lumber and hardware to put together one or more of these seven simple storage projects.

Choose from a selection of projects that include a sturdy bicycle rack, overhead storage shelving, a rain and snow gear hang-up, utility shelves, an easy ski rack, between-studs storage or a fliptop shelf. Each project requires few materials and tools (are a hammer, saw and drill few enough?) and most can be completed in half a day or less.

So, before you get too comfortable in the lounge chair you just set up on your beautiful new deck, send for this freebie.

Send 50 cents for postage and handling to Western Wood Products Association; 522 S.W. Fifth Ave., Dept. F55; Portland, Ore. 97204-2122. Ask for Garage Storage Plan Sheet 55.

What to give golfer who has everything: Robot caddie

By BARBARA LLOYD
New York Times News Service

There is a movement within golf to get players walking again. Competing for the attention of a fitness generation, golf professionals are eager to show that there is more exercise to the sport than swinging a golf club and riding in a motor cart.

Many golfers are willing to hike, but they don't want to lug a golf bag at the same time. Some use human caddies; others golf bag pull carts.

But now there are electric motor caddies that will move at your pace. And for those willing to pay the $2,350 price tag, there is a robot that will follow you around like a pet duck.

Gettig Technologies Inc. of Spring Mills, Pa., has spent the last six years refining its Shedda, a robot caddie that responds to low-frequency radio waves. The device operates on a transmitter, using the same technology that allows a homeowner to open a garage door from a switch inside his car. The golfer wears a small transmitter clipped to the back of his waistband.

The Shedda (a loose translation from the Scottish word for shadow) carries two antennae that pick up the golfer's signals as he walks around the course. As the golfer turns to the right, the cart's right antenna picks up a signal that is more powerful than the left antenna. The caddie moves toward the stronger frequency. Its top speed is about 4.5 miles per hour.

Dan O'Neill, Gettig's golf professional, says that the Shedda is programmed to stop automatically three feet behind the golfer. The caddie is controlled by six circuit boards and more than 500 electrical components.

Other companies are marketing electronic motor caddies that travel on their own, but for limited distances. Powakaddy, a company in Fort Lauderdale, Fla., refined its model this year with a 55-second timer. The control allows the golfer to send the cart off to the side of the green to wait for him. Kangaroo, a company in Columbus, N.C., introduced a similar version, the Hillcrest motor caddie, last July.

The manufacturers say that the units require far less maintenance than motorized carts with moving parts that need periodic lubrication and upkeep. Both are powered by dry cell batteries that are charged overnight in a 110-volt outlet.

Hill Country park reflects image of LBJ

By ROB McCORKLE

STONEWALL (AP) — During four tumultuous years in the White House, President Lyndon Johnson found solace and spiritual sustenance to cope with the world's problems at his Texas Hill Country retreat — the LBJ Ranch.

There, secluded among the oak and pecan-covered hills along the Pedernales River banks where he played as a boy, LBJ could get back to his beloved land and cattle, comforting constants in ever-changing times.

Today visitors from around the world can step into history and get to know the late president whose rural roots bridged the gap between the nation's frontier era of the 19th century and its role today as a Space Age world power.

More than a quarter million tourists a year find their way to this tiny German hamlet where the late president rests in the family cemetery beneath majestic oaks overlooking the Pedernales.

The life and times of this leader are captured superbly in exhibits — both static and living — in two national historical parks operated by the National Park Service and one run by the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department.

The three parks are at two sites 14 miles apart: one in Stonewall west of Johnson City on U.S. 290 where the LBJ Ranch sits, and the other in Johnson City where LBJ's boyhood home and his grandfather's Johnson Settlement still stand.

THE BEST way to get a deer's-eye view of LBJ's life and the land where he grew up is to take the National Park Service's hour-long bus tour from LBJ State Park's visitor center at Stonewall across the Pedernales River to the LBJ National Historical Park.

Johnson's familiar, resonant Texas drawl heard throughout his years in Congress and the White House eerily fills the bus: "This is my country — the Hill Country of Texas. The Pedernales River. There's something different about this country. The climate is pleasant, the sun's brighter, the air is always clean, the water's clean, the moon's fuller and stars brighter. There's a feeling of serenity. It brings new life and hope."

Park ranger Jewell Scott, Johnson's personal secretary during his four years at the ranch after he left the presidency in 1969, says it is the area's bucolic splendor — grassy meadows, plentiful trees and wildflowers, breathtaking vistas and sparkling creeks and rivers — that fly in the face of most tourists' preconceptions of a barren Texas landscape.

The first stop is a reconstruction of the white, wood-frame home where LBJ was born in 1908 and lived until 1913 when his parents moved to town, Johnson City. It is furnished with period furniture and contains several mementos from the Johnson family, including a ceramic clown box that LBJ bought for a dime when he was 4 years old to give to a beloved aunt.

Most buildings are accessible to those in wheelchairs and the visitor center furnishes written scripts for hearing impaired people.

Johnson's ancestors populated the Johnson Settlement during the Civil War days. His grandfather drove cattle north along the Chisholm Trail.

Four of the original late 1800s buildings of the 960-acre settlement still stand and are open to the public.

The historic buildings, which include the original, hand-hewn, oak log, dogtrot-style cabin, used as the Johnson headquarters during cattle operations, are part of a living exhibit.

Park employees, dressed in period outfits, point out interesting facets of pioneer life and perform age-old tasks like spinning. Particularly authentic is a working chuck wagon, complete with a grisled cook, making camp coffee, biscuits and other trail grub.

The Johnson Settlement's Exhibit Center utilizes old photos and rusty artifacts from cattle days to provide insight into the area's evolution from the open-range cattle kingdom days of the mid-1800s to more recent ranching and farming times.

JUST UP the river at the LBJ Ranch, a majestic live oak shelters the white lawn furniture where Johnson used to regale visiting dignitaries and Cabinet members with tall Texas tales and plot the course of a troubled nation.

It hardly seems possible that it's been 15 years since the legendary Texan succumbed to a series of heart attacks. The swimming pool where he recuperated from his first attack languishes under blue skies.

The army of U.S. Secret Servicemen and media have been replaced by a small cadre of National Park Service rangers that guards Lady Bird Johnson's privacy and tends to the well-manicured grounds that sparkle with the blooming flora that the former First Lady so cherishes.

The 75-year-old environmentalist travels much of the year promoting conservation and wildflower research, and her latest book, "Wildflowers Across America." She was recently honored by President and Nancy Reagan for her environmental work.

Parade launches 'greatest show on Earth'

Associated Press

Where do circuses come from? Wisconsin. Every year Milwaukee hosts the Great Circus Parade honoring the state's colorful, big top tradition. The Ringling Brothers Circus, born in the brothers' hometown of Baraboo, was once trumpeted as: "A mile of gleam, gold, glint and glistening glamor."

Keeping alive the extravagant spirit of the great big top shows, Milwaukee's parade stretches out for four gleaming miles and two glorious hours. Nearly a million people, crowding the sidewalks and leaning from high windows, crane their necks as the honor guard rounds into view.

Jungle cats caged in spoke-wheeled wagons exchange glances with balloon-toting kids on their parent's shoulders. Amid the brass-keyed cacophony of a steam-belching calliope, a nose-to-tail row of ponderously dignified elephants lumbers by.

Snorting teams of plumed draft horses draw the star attractions, some 75 circus wagons painted in colors as vivid as prairie sunsets. Baraboo's Circus World Museum loans them from its restored collection of 160 wagons.

It's fitting that Wisconsin, called "Mother of Circuses," should host such a parade. According to Midwest Living magazine, more than 135 circuses sprang from the state. Many circuses wintered in Delavan, now home of the Clown Hall of Fame and Research Center. In Baraboo, the historical exhibits and daily circus shows at the Circus World Museum draw tens of thousands of summer visitors. Even the University of Wisconsin-LaCrosse gets into the act, hosting a summer clown camp to teach the finer points of juggling, unicycling, face painting and capering in parades.

Curiously, Wisconsin owes its rich circus tradition largely to happenstance. In 1847, Mabie Brothers Circus moved from New York to Delavan to play the nation's newly settled midsection. Delavan's attractions? Pasture at $1.80 per acre, plenty of water and ample timber for tent poles, stakes and firewood.

The large, talent-rich Mabie show spawned circus after circus. Soon, staid little Delavan became the reluctant winter home of the rowdy folk in 28 tent shows. Other circuses settled elsewhere in Wisconsin.

During each summer's Delavan Circus Days festival, tours are made among the gravestones of the 150 circus old-timers buried in the town's cemeteries. The most celebrated stop is the resting place of William C. Coup.

An Indiana native, Coup loomed large in the creation of the famous P.T. Barnum Circus in 1871. That circus later became the Barnum & Bailey Circus. Coup's greatest achievement was putting the circus on rails.

As the horse opened the prairie to the Indian, the locomotive opened the Midwest to the circus. "Jumps" between farm-state towns that once took days by wagon shrank to a few hours by train. The territory a show could cover in single season grew by leaps and bounds.

Milwaukee's circus week begins when the circus train pulls into town, straight from the glory days of the old rail shows. The half-mile-long train, tugged by a vintage steam locomotive, leaves Baraboo after horse teams load the cream of the museum's wagon collection onto double-length flatcars. From Baraboo, the train chugs a leisurely two-day loop through southern Wisconsin and northern Illinois.

The north lobby of Houston's Warwick Hotel is beautifully decorated with funishing from all over the world, including an Aubusson Tapestry at the back of the room.

A portrait of Col. Jesse Driskill hangs in his hotel namesake.

The LBJ Suite at the Driskill Hotel in Austin was named in honor of the late U.S. Senator Lyndon Baines Johnson.

HOTELS

It was furnished with the heaviest and most carefully made furniture and featured a canopy of red silk over the monstrous four poster bed.

It is said that King once dropped a water pitcher from the balcony outside his room to the lobby below when the room service was tardy. "If we can't get any water we won't be needing a pitcher," he said.

This may have been the beginning of the prompt service that is now the Menger's hallmark.

Other famous people to have signed the Menger guest book include both Generals Lee and Grant, and later opera singer Lily Pons and actress Sarah Bernnardt made the Menger their home for awhile.

Across the street from the Menger is the Alamo Plaza, a place popular for formal courtship — Mexican style. This envolves the couple walking around the square under the sharp eyes of the duennas, who were not about to let their charges get out of sight with a man. More amorous meetings took place during the musical evenings in the Menger's Garden Patio.

In what is now called The Roosevelt Bar, Teddy Roosevelt recruited some of his Rough Riders, finding willing volunteers among Texans and those Southerners who declared themselves Texans when they came adventuring to the Lone Star state.

The bar, which is a replica of one in the House of Lords in England, was once on the front of the hotel. Plans are in the offing to move the bar back to its rightful place across from the Plaza and in full view of the Alamo.

While the Menger has already undergone millions of dollars in refurbishing, the most auspicious plan calls for rerouting the famous San Antonio river so that the windows of the old hotel will overlook the Alamo on one side and the river on the other.

Meanwhile, a visit to one of the rooms in the old wing of the Menger is to go back in time to a place where horsehair hats and bustles were the mode and spurs marked the rail in the Roosevelt Bar. The atmosphere is reminiscent of a time when turtle soup was served shortly after plucking turtles from the San Antonio River and tearful brides bade their husbands off to the War Between the States.

The Menger's fortunes rose and fell, and issues such as slavery, abolition, secession and states' rights were argued among guests in the ornate lobby with its fine oriental rugs and giant beveled mirrors.

Today, groups such as the Daughters of Texas and flying aces from various wars hold their meetings and reunions in the lobby and on the mezzanine of the Menger. Guests can still check into the King Suite and hear the soft strains of a Spanish guitar playing in Alamo Plaza on a soft summer night.

A quarter of a century after Menger filled the urgent need for his overnight guests, just 75 miles away, Colonel Jesse Driskill set out to build the finest hotel in the capital city, Austin.

Colonel Driskill spared nothing in his efforts to build a hostel that would attract the rich and famous. Women in hoopskirts were carried in handsome carriages to the arched entryway to sweep into the Driskill's many columned lobby and up the stairs to the Crystal Ballroom. Governor Sul Ross set a tradition for inaugural balls here shortly after the Driskill opened.

Though the columns still stand, women are brought to the arched entryway in limosenes wearing miniskirts. Most of the chandeliers were sold at public auction during the 1970s and the Driskill closed its doors for a few years. Saved from destruction by the Heritage Society bolstered by a unified citizenry, in later years the Driskill tried to buy back its treasures.

Perhaps the heyday of the Driskill was in the 1950s when culinary queen Helen Corbitt reigned over the Driskill dining room. Miss Corbitt insisted on only the finest in table linens, china and flatware, and any waiter who wasn't on his toes was no longer there if she caught him offering anything but the most efficient and gracious service. Her Canadian Cheese Soup and other Driskill staple fare have become famed over the state and still appear on menus in Texas' fine restaurants.

U.S. Senator Lyndon Baines Johnson was a regular guest in the 1950s, and in 1964 he and his entourage waited for news of his landslide victory as president of the United States.

A suite name for LBJ commemorates the flamboyant politician and photographs of Johnson with President Dwight Eisenhower, longtime Texas politician Sam Rayburn and even an early picture with President Franklin Delano Roosevelt decorate the walls outside the suite.

Today, guests can check into the LBJ suite or enjoy any of the 75 rooms in the old wing which are furnished in period furniture from the 1880s. Rooms in the newer tower faithfully carry out the colors and graciousness of the period rooms.

In the 1920s, Houston's Warwick Hotel was an apartment house for young ladies and gentlemen and some young couples who were making their way into Houston business and society.

Across from Hermann Park, it was a safe and tree-shaded place out from town and near Rice University.

In 1944, Miss Eleanor Skaggs of a Burnet County ranching family moved to the Warwick and still calls it home.

When oilman John W. Mecom bought the Warwick in the 1960s, he allowed all who called it home to stay if they chose. Miss Skaggs chose to stay on and has never regretted her decision. Miss Skaggs is the last of the early residents and as grand dame of the establishment, she is treated like a relative by staff and guests alike.

When Mecom decided to go into the hotel business he wanted his to be the best, so he and Mrs. Mecom traveled the world finding tapestries and vases, statuary and furniture that would fit in with the paneling dismantled from world famous chateaux and palaces, the baccarat chandeliers and the Portuguese Rose Aurora marble.

More than one visitor has mistaken the hotel for one of the museums across the street. Wandering the rooms at the Warwick is a cultural experience. Even the bronzes in the ladies' room off the Warwick Club are priceless.

Like an elegant home, there are rooms and suites fitted with oriental rugs, fine paintings and of course, an ironing board in each suite closet so guests don't have to call for one.

The statues in the front entrance were created in the 18th century and once stood in a Viennese palace. The tapestry on the wall in the lobby is a priceless Aubusson depicting Diana, goddess of the moon and hunt who is busily turning the handsome young Actaeon into a stag because he interrupted her bath.

Guests can be sure that no one at the Warwick will interrupt their baths. While maid service is first-rate, it is almost invisible, leaving one to wonder if the maids vie for the title of "least seen."

Dining at the Warwick can be like dining in several countries all in one place. Downstairs, the Cafe Vienna provides the warm appeal of a Viennese coffee house complete with a white faience stove. In the adjoining Palm Court, cocktails and French pastries are served from noon to midnight.

Upstairs, the Hunt Room has a massive marble fireplace, oak dining tables and black leather companion chairs on Brussels carpeting. The fare is heartier and consists of Lobster "Key West," Feta Shrimp and daily dinner specials each evening.

The most sought-after setting is the Warwick Club atop the hotel which offers a fabulous view of Houston. When comedian Bob Hope was asked what the prettiest place in the world was to him, he replied without hesitation, "In Houston, the view of Main Street from my room at The Warwick Hotel." His must have been a room at the top.

In addition to the view and the blue, white and gold Louis XVI atmosphere of the club, with white pilaster that once graced the gallerie of a famous French townhouse, there is the food.

A Warwick Club favorite is the tomato gin soup. Never have such strange companions made such a delectabale fare.

A Warwick Sunday buffet is said to be the best in town, and as you wander through the treasures of the Warwick, you may run into Miss Eleanor, a treasure herself. If you are fortunate, perhaps she will ask you to tea and tell you about the old days when the Duke and Duchess of Windsor found the Warwick so romantic.

The Warwick seems to have kept the best of what the old days had to offer and management intends to go on offering it to guests as long as a gracious stay in luxurious surroundings is required. The Driskill and the Menger, too, manage to meld yesterday's romance with today's luxury in order to offer the ultimate Texas experience.

The old hotels of Texas have outlived their owners and many of their guests, but if you look at the portrait of Colonel Driskill hanging just adjacent to the check-in desk, he seems to say, "Welcome," a word that has survived the centuries. Move on to hoist a brew in memory of William Menger in the Roosevelt Bar, and when you pause to admire a Mecom treasure in the state's largest city, you will know the essence of the old hotels of Texas.

TOMATO GIN SOUP

1 tablespoon olive oil
2 quarts vegetable juice cocktail
1 cube chicken base
½ onion, chopped
4 fresh tomatoes, peeled, seeded and chopped
1 stick celery, chopped
½ carrot, chopped
2 cloves garlic, chopped
½ teaspoon basil
½ teaspoon oregano
1 pinch thyme

In saucepan, saute onion and garlic in 1 tablespoon olive oil. When onion is transparent, add carrots and celery and cook until soft. Add fresh tomatoes. When most of the water has evaporated, add herbs, vegetable juice cocktail and chicken base cube.

Simmer slowly about 15 to 20 minutes. Place in blender and blend rapidly about 10 seconds.

1 tablespoon mushroom
1 tablespoon bacon, chopped
1 tablespoon cheese, grated
1 tablespoon onion, chopped
½ tablespoon parsley
2 tablespoons gin

Before serving the soup, saute 1 tablespoon onion and bacon. When onion is transparent, add mushrooms, parsley and gin. Flame. Add grated cheese and incorporate into soup.

Second half outlook cloudy

Sluggish rig count puzzles industry

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

Crystal ball gazers for the oil industry are finding the second half of 1988 slightly "opaque."

With six months of 1988 now behind the industry, it is not so clear what the next six months will bring. The first half of 1988 was not as bright as expected, and now falling oil prices and a recalcitrant rig count have cast new shadows on a brighter outlook for the second half. It is a situation that has caused some to revise initial optimistic forecasts for 1988 downward.

Of prime concern is the Baker Hughes rotary rig count which has remained stuck in the 900 range for the past two months, far short of the 1,070 rigs forecast earlier for the year.

As a result, it looks like the first-half lag will cause a decidedly lower rig count for the year, even if oil companies gear up in the second half as expected.

Baker Hughes has already revised its average count forecast for this year to 1,025 down from 1,070; and from 1,259 to 1,214 for 1989.

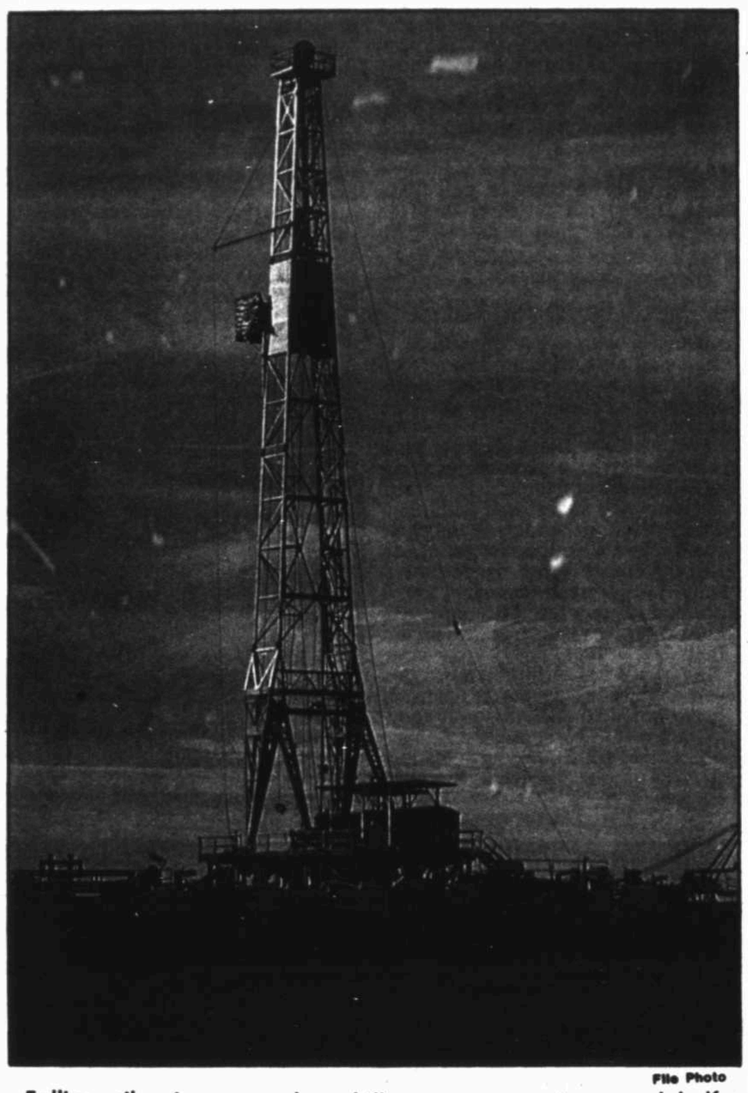

The slower than expected recovery in the first six months of 1988 has also prompted one brokerage firm to revise its rig forecasts. The research department of Rauscher Pierce Refnes had forecast that the rig count would fall steadily from 1,121 in January to a low of 850 in May before starting upward again.

The analysts had forecast a recovery of 15 rigs per week that would eventually reach 1,350 to 1,400 working rigs by the end of the year with an average count of 1,100 rigs. They have trimmed the average annual rig count to 1,025.

The rig count bottomed as expected at 880 on May 2, but recovery has been slight and a long time coming. Despite Texas losing rigs during in the last two weeks, the national count took a healthy jump of 27 rigs last week and was up another five this week to 926 working rigs.

It is the highest point for the count in three months, since the count was 941 on April 4, and is decidedly higher than the 891 count a year ago, but still disappointingly below industry expectations.

Late in June, Thomas A. Escott, analyst for Rauscher Pierce Refsnes Inc., Dallas, reported that oil companies are still planning a strong push for the second half of 1988, despite foot dragging in the first half.

Falling oil prices may slow drilling even more in second half.

"Both major oil companies and oilfield service companies report that the slow activity of the first half represents more sluggishness on their part than any real cutback in drilling plans," said Escott.

Since then, however, oil prices which have fallen sharply in the last two weeks to put a cloud even on that scenario.

None of the major oil companies have announced drilling cutbacks as a result of the downturn in prices. Locally, Exxon, Texaco and Amoco — major drillers in the Basin — are

TAMACC convention near

Up to 800 expected for 3-day affair

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

The Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce is throwing a party for between 500 and 800 of its closest friends.

That's how many are expected to attend the state Texas Association of Mexican-American Chambers of Commerce convention July 28-30 at Midland's Holiday Inn Convention Center.

"We are looking at between 450 and 500 registered delegates, with at least 500 to 800 attending, when you include spouses," said Sam Flores, president of the MHCC. "We had originally anticipated between 300 and 500 delegates."

Flores said MHCC members are eagerly anticipating July 28. "We're at the stage where we're starting to get nervous and realize the scope of what we were undertaking. It's like any big event you plan — a wedding or anniversary party or reunion. You plan and plan, and then on the verge of the event, you start to wonder if things are going to go smoothly. But we're excited. This is the culmination of a year's work."

He said the Holiday Inn had reported 63 room reservations as of June 30, and Elvia Hernandez, MHCC executive director, said 192 had preregistered as of last Tuesday. All those visitors will bring in considerably more than the $300,000 to $500,000 in tourist dollars that the MHCC had originally expected, Flores noted.

Among the special guests at the 13th annual convention will be Tom Flores, former head coach of the National Football League Los Angeles Raiders, State Treasurer Ann Richards and Jessica McClure, the Midland toddler who spent 58 hours trapped in a well last October.

The convention begins Thursday, July 28, with registration from 8 a.m. to 8 p.m. As a bonus for those who arrive early, Clay-Desta Communications is sponsoring a Hawaiian Luau at the Clay-Desta National Bank Atrium from 7 to 9 p.m., followed by a dance with Little Joe y La Familia at the Midland Center. The public is welcome to the dance. Tickets are $10 in advance, $12 at the door.

Former NFL coach Tom Flores

Registration continues the next day from 8 a.m. to 8 p.m. The opening breakfast will be from 8:30 to 9:45 a.m. The breakfast is "A Salute to Corporate America," and will feature an address by Gerry Rogers of American Telephone and Telegraph. Rogers is chairman of the board of the TAMACC Corporate Partners. Master of ceremonies for the breakfast will be Oliver Porter, AT&T vice president from Atlanta, Ga.

Six seminars on varying topics will be held from 10 a.m. to noon, followed by a luncheon honoring Hispanic women from noon to 1:45. Addressing the "Salute to Hispanic Business Women" luncheon will be Angela Cabrera, deputy commissioner of economic development for the state of New York. Master of ceremonies will be Felipa Garcia of the Texas Attorney General's office.

At 2 p.m. the MHCC Ambassadors, assisted by groups from area towns, will open the exhibit show. Special guests will be Ann Richards and Jessica McClure. There are 47 exhibitors this year, including corporate exhibits from Coors and AT&T.

Also included is a display from the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, featuring a scale model of the space shuttle and a 10-panel illustration of man's history in space. Hernandez said the public is invited to see the exhibits, and there will be a number of door prizes given away.

An L.A. Raider football will be raffled off, and former Raider head coach Tom Flores will spend some time signing autographs at the Coors exhibit. He currently owns Tom Flores Hyundai dealership in San Bernandino, Calif., and a Coors distributorship.

It's a long, long way from back car seats to Wall Street

Dell rockets to top of IBM clone heap

AP LaserPhoto

Dell Computer Corp. chief executive 23-year-old Michael Dell has overseen his company's growth from selling out of his dorm room and car into a major player in the personal computer market with annual mail order sales of $159 million last year.

By KIRK LADENDORF

AUSTIN (AP) — Four years ago in May, Michael Dell stopped selling computers out of his car and his dormitory room, and set up Dell Computer Corp. in a nondescript North Lamar Boulevard storefront.

From these humble origins, Dell's company grew to a runaway success. It sold $159 million worth of computers last year and its results this year point to another strong expansion of sales. Profits last year, some $9.4 million, exceeded the company's first-year sales.

Small wonder that Dell Computer's stock offering was considered a hot issue with plenty of investor "sizzle" when the company went public last month.

Dell has been hailed as a "marketing genius" for turning a low-prestige sales channel — mail-order sales — into a highly profitable niche for selling computers.

But there were dozens of other computer entrepreneurs promoting cut-rate computers by mail order about the same time as Dell.

The difference between Dell and the dozens of other makers of off-brand "IBM clone" computers is in great part an outgrowth of Dell's intensely competitive approach to doing business.

"He was in the right place at the right time with the right amount of ruthlessness and guts," said a former Dell executive who asked not to be named.

To that equation, others would add Dell's single-minded drive to build his company, his strong feel for what computer users wanted to buy, his courage to price products low enough to build volume quickly, and his knack for attracting favorable publicity.

"Dell had a very good product and a very good price and got some excellent product reviews," said Linda White, a senior analyst with Future Computing-Datapro, a personal computer market research firm in Dallas. "He cashed in on what was already in the works. People wanted IBM-compatible computers, but they wanted cheaper prices."

Personal-computer users in 1984 and 1985 were ready and waiting for entrepreneurial discounters like Michael Dell. IBM's machines were achieving widespread acceptance in the marketplace, but a growin group of experienced computer users were waiting for lower-priced, higher performance PCs.

These experienced computer users were well aware that high-performance add-ons could be installed in IBM machines, to improve dramatically the speed and usability of those machines.

Dell, himself, has said he owes much of his business success to the marketing policies of IBM, when it was the kingpin of the personal computer business in 1984.

By keeping its prices high to maintain big profit margins, IBM opened the door for discounters with look-alike machines.

The company started selling computers by mail almost immediately after it placed its first tiny ads in PC Week and Byte magazines in 1984.

Dell quickly became a leading player in the "gray market" industry.

Established IBM retailers sought to keep their sales high in order to qualify for IBM price discounts. To keep their volumes up, retailers frequently unloaded unsold products to unauthorized dealers like Dell.

Have you ever been to a confrontation where there were only winners and no losers?

That was the impression that about 150 Texans came away with after attending the New England-Texas Conference on Natural Gas Potential in Boston over the Fourth of July weekend.

As a result of the historic conference which was billed as a "summit," we may soon see "bubble-busting" volumes of Texas natural gas flowing into the New England market, creating new jobs in the sagging Texas economy and eliminating acid rain in the Northeast.

The New England market has always been there. All that was needed to open it was:

- establish a working dialogue between Texas and New England — two of the most politically hostile regions in the United States
- convince New Englanders that a hydrocarbon fuel — natural gas — could clean up their environment
- assure them that reliable natural gas supplies could be counted on for the future — even though many in the oil and gas industry still paint dire warnings of shortages
- convince New Englanders that Texans can be trusted more than OPEC — even after the bumper sticker: Let the bastards freeze in the dark,
- expand pipeline capacity into the market in the face of bureaucratic foot dragging by FERC.

It was a political task so difficult that a veteran politician would have shunned it like cancer. Perhaps that's why it took two relatively neophyte politicians — Texas Railroad Commissioner John Sharp and Massachusetts Congressman Joseph P. Kennedy II to pull it together.

Thanks to the unlikely friendship between the Texan and the Yankee, New England will probably become a viable market for Texas natural gas in the near future.

And what a market it is. Estimates show that the rapidly growing economy of the Northeast is expected to increase the demand for natural gas from 2.1 to 2.9 trillion cubic feet by 1990. In addition, there is an ocean of foreign oil to be backed out of the market.

Accounting for 7 percent of total U.S. oil imports, the Northeast has traditionally and extraordinarily depended upon fuel oil as its fuel of choice. The dependency is so great that fuel oil commands a 51 percent market share of the energy mix in the Northeast, compared to only 14 percent nationwide.

But now, motivated by the reality of acid rain, nightmares about holes in the protective ozone layer, a growing demand for energy and perhaps doubts about depending too heavily on foreign oil, the land of the bean and the cod appears ready to switch from fuel oil and move forward into the future with clean-burning natural gas.

Rep. Kennedy, co-sponsor of the conference, put it into words everyone could understand: "New England needs additional sources of clean, efficient, cost- effective energy. You, our guests from the Southwest, have a fuel that fits that bill — natural gas. We need fuel to meet the needs of our growth — you have it. You need new markets to spur demand and give a boost to your economy — we have it."

The match between the energy needs of the Northeast and the energy supply of the Southwest is so obviously perfect, one can only wonder why it took so long to happen. Perhaps old-fashioned animosity has played a role.

Texas Land Commissioner Garry Mauro characterized the meeting between, Texans and New Englanders, long known for their political animosity as a long overdue "thawing process."

Indeed, most of the history of the two regions has been marked by downright hostility. Texas is as conservative as New England is liberal, and old perceptions about liberal Harvard lawyers and fat cat oilmen don't die easy.

Adding to the problem has been the imbalance of political power. New England may be small, but it is politically powerful and Texas has felt the wrath of that power on more than a few occasions.

All six New England states would just about fit into Hudspeth and Brewster counties in the Trans-Pecos area of Texas, but each of those states has two U.S. Senators — that's 12 to two on the Senate side along. Lord only knows how many U.S. representatives this people-saturated "little nubbin" to the north has.

Bottom line is: New England can "whup up" on Texas politically anytime it chooses.

Incited by a traditional perception that what's good for big oil and Texas has to be bad for the Northeast, the geographical midgets of New England have often joined forces with neighboring energy-consuming states to (as George Bush might say) "kick Texas ass" more times than we care to remember.

Of course, New England has its own memories. During the energy crisis when this industrialized, fuel oil-dependent, section of the country was almost in a panic about how to get its next barrel of oil, someone in Texas came up with the now famous bumper sticker: Let the bastards freeze in the dark. It may have been intended as a joke, but for many Texans it expressed a true sentiment.

"Sure, we still remember the bumper sticker," young Michael Kennedy, brother of Joseph and President of Citizens Gas Supply Corp. told me, "but that is water under the bridge. I have many good friends in Texas. I have found that people in the energy business like to get things done, and I have never known a Texan to let his feelings stand in the way of a good deal."

Still there was trepidation — almost like two teenagers on a first date — when the Texans and Yankees first met for a clambake at JFK Library. Texans were concerned about acting too Texan, and the Yankees about not showing enough hospitality.

"If we don't show them exceptional Yankee hospitality, they will only try to out do us with hospitality when we go to Texas in November," Kennedy warned the New Englanders.

But somewhere between the lobster and clams, tensions eased, and on the return flight it was hard to find a negative note.

"I think this conference is one of the best things to happen to the industry in a long time. There's a lot to be done yet to make the match a reality, but we have taken the first step and the right step," said Midland oilman Clayton W. Williams Jr., who was one of those representing Texas at the conference.

Midland gas consultant Robert K. Anderson agreed that the conference was the starting place for bringing more Texas gas into the New England market. "In only 24 hours, we have gotten acquainted, opened a dialogue and identified the issues for further meetings. I only hope we can move forward from here," he said.

"I think it is remarkable that a neophyte on the job, could pull off something like this," state Treasurer Ann Richards remarked on the long flight home.

If indeed this conference and the one to follow in Houston do result in a new gas market for Texas, stimulating drilling and producing jobs by the thousands, and if at the same time they produce a new accord between the Southwest and Northeast, removing a painful political thorn, John Sharp just may have made the political coup of the decade.

He will put a smile on the face of Texans everywhere and a feather in his hat that will not go unnoticed for many years.

United posts record earnings

From Staff Reports

United Bank, N.A. reported net income of $1,022,000 for the six months ended June 30. The record earnings for the period were 62 percent higher than the first half of 1987.

The increase in net income was primarily attributable to a 33 percent increase in average net loans over the period.

The average, roughly $95.7 million, was determined excluding term Federal funds sold and securities that are considered loans for regulatory purposes only, said bank president Wayne Merritt.

United's net income for the first half of 1988 represents an annualized return on average assets of 1.16 percent, which ranks the Midland bank among the top one-tenth of its $100-400 million asset peer group in the state.

Merritt, who is also chairman of the board, said loan and earnings growth "is consistent with our continuing committment to provide loans to this community."

Friday's events conclude with a Tex-Mex Fiesta beginning at 7 p.m. and sponsored by Miller Brewing. The fiesta, catered by the Chuckwagon Gang, will feature the El Mariachi Ramirez from Odessa, and a dance from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m. with Los Keyes from San Antonio.

Saturday begins with a legislators breakfast at 8:30 a.m. Keynote speaker will be Texas Supreme Court Justice Raul Gonzales. Over 300 Hispanic legislators and public officials have been invited to this event.

Following the official business meeting and election of state officers from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m., the exhibits will reopen from 1 to 5 p.m., with special entertainment by local groups from Midland Community Theater, Midland College and Odessa.

Saturday will end with the Chairman's Banquet and Dance, at which the state Hispanic Businessman and Businesswoman of the Year, State Member and Corporate Member of the Year will be announced. Tom Flores will keynote the banquet, which will be emceed by Midland entrepreneur Clayton Williams Jr.

The convention ends Sunday morning with a menudo breakfast from 8 to 11 a.m. Noting that last year's convention was in Houston and next year's will be in Austin, MHCC president Sam Flores said: "We're sandwiched between two considerably larger cities. We want them to remember the good time they had hear, and know that it's not the size of the city that counts."

DELL

Dell built connections to retailers across the country and began reselling modified IBM PCs, with extra memory boards or disk drives and performance-enhancing features.

As almost a sideline to the grey market business, Dell introduced its first "clone" — a Dell-designed and Dell-manufactured computer that was fully compatible with IBM's PC. Dell sold his first IBM PC clone in the summer of 1985 under the trade name "PC's Limited." The Turbo PC was introduced in July 1985, selling for $795 (without the monitor). The more powerful PC's Limited AT, was introduced a month later, for a very low price of $1,995. A comparison chart published in the Austin American-Statesman at the time showed that the PC's Limited AT sold for less than half the price of a comparably equipped IBM AT.

An employee later asked Dell why he had used an apostrophe in the name when it wasn't gramatically correct. "I never was really good at English," Dell replied. The PC's Limited name stuck until Dell began using the company name on its products last year.

The response to the first clones was phenomenal and Dell later admitted he was surprised by it all.

By late 1985, Dell said his sales of company-made clones outnumbered the firm's gray market sales by a wide margin. Sales for the year ballooned to $33.7 million more than five times the company's first-year level.

In 1986, Dell sales grew again with the introduction of a PC's Limited 286-8 machine based on Intel's powerful 80286 microprocessor chip. That machine quickly became the company's best seller.

Dell's outside financing in the early days was nearly non-existent, so he made customers and suppliers carry the load. Customers paid up front, usually by charge-card, when the order was made. Dell could collect receipts for a few weeks before the product was shipped, former Dell executives said.

Dell was able to drive hard bargains with suppliers to keep his costs low. Suppliers had little room to maneuver because of a glut of computer components that plagued the industry in 1985 and '86.

By then, the business was growing fast enough that Dell decided to bring in professional managers. He chose Lee Walker, an experienc manager of start-up companies, t the company's president in mid-1986.

Walker helped recruit a core of top-level managers for the company His management experience was cited by the company's outside analysts as a key factor in stabilizing Dell Computer during its fast-paced growth.

But some employees who had been with Dell since the beginning said Walker's arrival signaled a changing of the guard within the company's management. A wave of executives were forced out or fired to make way for a new group of more experienced managers.

Under Walker, Dell began distancing itself from the crowd of clonemakers. It began courting corporate customers with slick brochures, a large and experienced sales force and a plush new corporate headquarters complete with a product demonstration center.

In April 1987, Dell Computer took another big step toward winning over corporate customers. It entered into a service agreement with Honeywell Bull, in which Honeywell would provide on-the-spot service to Dell customers when needed. Suddenly, Dell, a small company, had a big-league service agreement it could tout to its large corporate clients.

Dell eased other uncertainties this spring, when it reached a licensing agreement with IBM that will allow Dell to use IBM computer designs for present and future products, including IBM's new Personal System-2 computers.

ANALYSIS

moving forward with budgets as planned.

Mitchell Energy & Development Co., on the other hand has announced a $16 million increase in its capital budget for the current fiscal year, raising the total to $137 million.

The company said $11.5 million of the increase was allocated to its exploration and production operations or use in drilling new wells and acquiring third-party interests in existg wells.

While no drilling budget cutbacks have been announced, it is an economic given that the rig count tracks oil prices and if oil prices retreat for very long, so will budgets and the rig count.

However, Tony Annunziato, oil industry analyst for Shearson, Lehman Hutton discounts the effect of the present downturn in oil prices and sees a brighter future for prices in the second half.

"I think prices will bottom out in the next two weeks, and begin a turnaround," says Annunziato. "This is just a short-term problem of too much oil."

But despite his optimism about oil prices he is not so optimistic about drilling. "The economics are still not there to drill. The best way to make money on oil today is to buy it as a commodity," he noted.

What remains to be seen, says Escott, is whether sluggish rig count is signaling a major change in the whole drilling scenario or a temporary pause in a longer-term recovery.

He thinks the latter is more likely for the following reasons:

- oil prices are holding relatively firm,
- oil companies are generating substantial excess cash flows,
- reserves are dwindling and must be replaced,
- drilling and finding costs are now about $4 per barrel equivalent compared to $6 to $9 for reserve acquisitions,
- the natural gas bubble is unwinding and could trigger new drilling,
- the value of oil service company stocks are holding solid.

Temporary sluggishness? long term pause? The next six months holds the answer.

Basin count continues dropping

From Staff Reports

The U.S. rig count continued its upward climb and the Permian Basin continued lower, according to Baker Hughes of Houston.

The oiltool maker reported that the U.S. count, after jumping 27 last week, rose another five to stand at 926, the highest level since April 4, when 941 rigs were reported working.

The Basin count dipped one to stand at 103. Lea County, N.M. continued to be the most active in the Basin, with 14 rigs at work. Next was Eddy County, with eight, and Andrews County with seven. Midland remained stable with six rigs at work.

Rig utilization — the percentage of available rigs being used — showed a different trend, with the U.S. rate remaining stable at 23.5 percent and the Basin percentage leaping from 23.6 to 25.9 percent.

Texas reported the largest single state decline, losing five rigs this week.

Of the other major oil producing states, Louisiana and Colorado reported a drop of three each, while Oklahoma and North Dakota were unchanged from the previous week.

Seven states posted gains this week, with Wyoming, Michigan and Kansas all reporting the addition of three working rigs.

California reported two new rigs and Ohio, Pennsylvania and New Mexico each added one.

RRC levies $67,000 in plugging penalties to 11 operators

AUSTIN — The Railroad Commission levied a total of $67,000 in well plugging penalties this week to 11 oil and gas operators for problems under RRC rules.

The largest of the penalties, $20,000, went to Apple Oil and GAs of Bryan for 10 inactive and unplugged wells in Milam County.

Other plugging penalties included $13,000 to Liberty Energy Co. for six wells in Rusk, Liberty and Jefferson counties.

Also penalized were Batzer Energy Corp., $12,000 for five wells in Bastrop County; The Antonio Oil Co., $9,000 for three wells in Pecos and Fayette counties; M and S Operating, Inc., $1,500 for a well in Montague County; Tubular Wellhead Services, $3,000 for a well in Zavala County; Kristin L. Perryman, $4,000 for a well in Karnes County; and William B. Roberts, Inc., $3,000 for a well in Chambers County.

Three companies agreed to pay penalties without admitting any violation of rules. TLC Development Corp. paid $500 for three wells in Eastland County; Consolidated Operating Corp paid $500 for four wells in Coleman County; and Oil and Ga Investments, Inc. paid $500 for two wells in Fort Bend County.

To date in 1988, the commission has levied $475,000 in pollution and well plugging penalties. Last year, the commission assessed some $794,000 in such penalties.

Texas oil and gas operators complete more wells in June

AUSTIN — Texas oil and gas operators reported 245 gas and 623 oil completions in June, according to the Railroad Commission. May's total was 232 gas and 565 oil completions.

There were no gas completions in the Midland district, and two oil completions.

The June completions include 623 oil, 245 gas, and 732 dervice completions. In May, operators filed 565 oil, 232 gas, and 71 service completions. They also reported 1,069 holes were plugged, down from 1,123 in May. A total of 157 dry holes were reported in June, compared to 214 in May.

Seismic count shows decrease

The Society of Exploration Geophysicists reported that the number of seismic land and marine vessels searching for oil and gas in the U.S. and U.S. waters fell to 188 in June. The land crew tally fell by six, and the marine crew remained stable, for a net loss of six.

Brazil discovers oil basin in Atlantic

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — President Jose Sarney announced that Brazil has discovered about 100 million barrels worth of oil in the Atlantic Ocean.

"Tests carried out off the coasts of Parana, Sao Paulo and Santa Catarina states have revealed a 26-square-mile basin with potential for producing as much as 10,000 barrels a day," Sarney told reporters Wednesday.

Brazil produces about 600,000 barrels of oil a day.

In March, Sarney said the state-run oil company, Petrobras, suspected there were oil deposits in the region but gave no estimates of the quantities involved.

According to Sarney, the oil was discovered 112 miles off Brazil's southern coast at a depth of 390 feet. He also said the government oil monopoly had found substantial reserves of gas in the new basin.

Brazil for decades produced oil only in its northeastern regions, but in the 1970s major off-shore finds were made off the coast of Rio de Janeiro state, allowing Brazil to increase its domestically produced oil supply from 20 percent to 55 percent.

The country now produces about 60 percent of the oil it consumes.

Tulsa firm tests third prolific well

ARDMORE, Okla. (SWN) — CNG Producing Company has confirmed a third high-flowing oil well in its recently-discovered Cottonwood Creek Field in Carter County.

The new well, designated Number 1 Cottonwood Creek 30-H, flowed 2,400 barrels of oil and 1.3 million cubic feet of natural gas in preliminary tests. The well was completed in an Arbuckle limestone formation at 8,520 feet.

"This new well shows that there are still some good places to look for oil in Oklahoma's mature formations," said CNG Producing Vice President for Tulsa Operations Robert A. Lamb. "We're currently drilling three more wells in the area in our continuing effort to define the limits of the Cottonwood Creek Field and get a better understanding of the geology."

Greyhound-Trailways owner finding road to recovery bumpy

By SUZANNE GAMBOA
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS (AP) — Despite foreboding, bus czar Fred G. Currey and his investor groups sank millions last year into rebuilding the declining bus industry over the long haul.

They bought Greyhound Lines in March 1987 and few months later acquired Trailways Inc., forming the largest inter-city bus company in the nation.

Last month, the merger received the blessing of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the bus lines now boast increased ridership after five straight years of decline.

"Never fear, we're here," Currey says to the public. "We know there are some things wrong with the system but we're here. We'll be here to serve your needs ... and we're dedicated to bringing the system back."

But Currey's venture to make the bus a formidable transportation force hasn't been a smooth ride so far. He relates it as a good news, bad news story.

After slashing fares as much as 50 percent and unleashing the biggest advertising blitz in years by either bus line, Greyhound's ridership surged.

But the bad news is the bus company wasn't prepared, Currey said.

Terminals were packed, ticket lines were long, luggage and packages were lost and buses delays were long.

"We had a lot of service deficiencies and we had (them) because we were putting together the two largest bus companies in the nation," he said.

ALTHOUGH HE is optimistic the company can overcome its problems, Currey acknowledges the only way the bus can make a comeback is by improving long-deteriorating quality.

His plans to refuel the bus lines include faster ticketing, refurbished and safer terminals, computerized routing, airline-competitive prices and all-around upgraded service.

"We have a fundamental belief in the viability of the business and that really is in sharp contrast with the attitude that the previous owners had about the industry and the business," Currey said.

GLI Holding Co. Inc., an investor group led by Currey, acquired Greyhound Lines for $350 million in March 1987. The acquistition occurred amid declining ridership and labor disputes between union members and Phoenix-based Greyhound Corp., the previous owner.

Trailways Inc. was on the brink of collapse when another Currey group, GLI Acquisition Inc., bought for $80 million some of the bus company's fleet, garages and terminals in July 1987.

Despite ICC misgivings that the merger of the two companies could violate antitrust laws, the buyouts were given temporary approval and on May 17 the merger was endorsed.

"A company like Greyhound faces significant competition," said Michael Redisch, chief of the section of research and analysis in the ICC's office of Transportation Analysis.

"BUSES ARE the people's last choice. If the airline won't go there and it's too far to drive, the bus is the last choice. The bus is also hurt by driving and the growth of the automobile. It's a hard way to make a living."

But don't tell that to Currey, a former Trailways director. He's operating on the premise the the bus and its workers are just suffering from neglect.

"The previous owners of Greyhound and even to a modest extent Trailways, had kind of a going out of business attitude that was conveyed to the marketplace," said Craig Lentzsch, Greyhound Lines vice chairman and executive vice president. "So our coming on board and saying, 'We're here for the long pull,' I think had a positive effect on the marketplace."

In 1987 Greyhound Lines — which runs buses under the recognizable Trailways name but stamps them with the running greyhound logo — logged 6.3 billion passenger miles, up from 6.1 billion in 1986, ICC statistics show. Passenger miles are the total number of miles ridden by paying passengers and is a standard industry gauge.

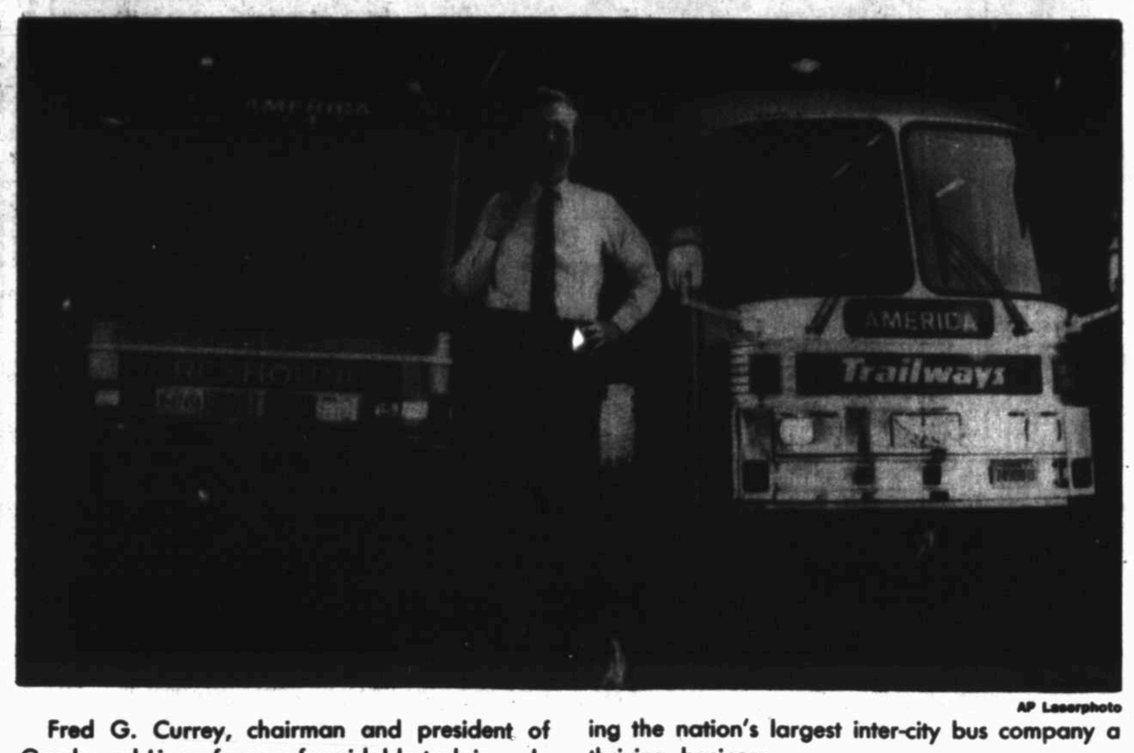

Greyhound predicts a 2.4 percent increase in passenger miles in 1988, said company spokesman George Gravley.

From March 19, 1987, to Dec. 31, 1987, the company lost $27.4 million, Gravley said.

"WE GOT THE revenues we expected and the profit was somewhat lower than anticipated because we incurred such substantial increased costs" during consolidation, Currey said.

Although the company faces $326 million in longterm debt, the sale of $150 million in senior notes has allowed the company to retire some short-term bank debts with higher interest payments and pour about $65 million into sorely-needed bus purchases.

In an October company newsletter, Jim Malcomb, senior vice president of maintenance, said 387 of Trailways' 1,127 buses would not run, 85 needed engines that were not in stock and many more were parked because of deferred maintenance.

AP Laserphoto

Fred G. Currey, chairman and president of Greyhound Lines, faces a formidable task in making the nation's largest inter-city bus company a thriving business.

Since its purchase, the company has added 325 new buses, including 275 MCI buses purchased from a subsidiary of Greyhound Corp. and 50 from Brownsville-based Eagle International Inc., a Greyhound Lines subsidiary.

The bus line subscribes to an airline computer reservation system, SABRE, and uses it to compete with airline prices.

"We simply cannot survive in this business with the poor quality we provided many of our customers this past summer," Currey told employees in the October newsletter.

After the chaotic summer, Currey directed executives to ask employees what they would do to fix the company's shortcomings.

ABOARD A GREYHOUND BUS (AP) — Linda Vandergriff's husband had just found a job in Central Texas, so she was heading back to Lima, Ohio, to collect their household.

Mrs. Vandergriff, who dislikes driving, said she could have flown but that would mean about a 35-mile trip from the Columbus or Dayton, Ohio, airport.

Instead she boarded a New York-bound bus in San Marcos, cruising up Interstate 35.

"The plane doesn't fly into Lima. But the bus takes me right to my door," said Mrs. Vandergriff, who sat alone on her bus seat, reading a grocery-store novel.

The round-trip ticket was cheaper, she said, and "it beats the heck out of driving."

Mrs. Vandergriff is one of a growing number of bus riders.

Just last year, transportation experts had given up on the bus industry. After five straight years of slumping ridership, there was little hope even among the bus owners themselves that the business would survive.

But Fred Currey, longtime bus believer, ignored the predictions.

He bought Greyhound Lines last year and then acquired its chief rival Trailways, Inc.

"There is a basic demand in this country for low-cost, quality ground transportation because there's a lot of travel that's done in this country that is more price-sensitive than it is time-sensitive," Currey said. "That's the thesis under which we're building this business."

Fernand Cestel of France and his wife were spending three weeks on Greyhound buses, although this time they actually were on a Trailways bus stamped with the running greyhound logo.

The retired couple kept their eyes fixed on the giant bus windows that stretched from the ceiling to seat level as they watched the sprawling Dallas metropolis give way to the grassland of its neighboring communities.

The Cestels were on their second bus tour of the United States, which started in the Florida Keys went through the Southwest and finished in Washington, D.C. The covered the Eastern seaboard on their first tour.

Many foreigners rode buses last summer, taking advantage of the weakened American dollar. Overall the company reported its first increase in bus ridership in six years. It expects another increase in 1988.

Mishaps in the airline industry are grounding flyers who are becoming loyal bus riders.

One non-flyer was given an entire bus to make his trips. Sports commentator John Madden, in exchange for doing in-house promotions, travels via a $500,000 fully equipped bus and has personal drivers, all courtesy of Greyhound. Madden used to take the train.

Lillian Bunn, 45, was returning to Little Rock, Ark. after visiting her mother in Dallas. "So many accidents happen on the plane, I'd rather ride the bus. It's like they said, 'Leave the driving to them,'" said Ms. Bunn, a teacher.

Ms. Bunn had stood elbow-to-elbow for about half an hour waiting for her bus, which was late. She was jostled a few times and had to stand her ground in a narrow and hot passage to make sure she got a seat.

Riders say the bus hasn't significantly changed in the past year, except that Trailways and Greyhound now run out of the same terminal.

Is it Social Security surplus or deficit?

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — The Social Security fund is developing a surplus and, like any big bundle of public money, it is also creating a political controversy.

Should the funds be used to finance new spending programs? Should the Social Security tax be reduced? Should the fund be left alone to build assets for financing retirements in the next century?

With the surplus projected at $37 billion in the current fiscal year, rising to nearly $500 billion by 2015, some analysts view it as the savior of a nation wracked by budget deficits.

Like a spendthrift who thinks money is wasted if it isn't spent, some politicians are busily devising plans for new governmental programs that may or may not have merit, and that otherwise wouldn't have funds either.

And some, such as Peter Ferrara of the Heritage Foundation, warn that the growing surplus is but a temporary thing, a consequence of young workers paying in big amounts that, inevitably, will be needed when their retirements come.

"The disappointing truth is, Social Security surpluses will become large deficits in about 25 years," says Ferrara, a fellow in political economy at the Heritage Foundation, a conservative Washington-based think tank.

As with others, Ferrara expresses almost no faith in the judgment of politicians presented with large sums of money, to wit:

"If policy-makers assume that such surpluses will eliminate federal budget deficits and pay off the national debt, they are likely to abandon attempts to balance the budget, spend billions of dollars of anticipated revenue that they will never receive, and plunge the nation into financial catastrophe."

Not everyone sees it that way, and some have credentials.

A.B. Laffer and Associates, a California consulting firm, states that under current law, projected annual Social Security surpluses will produce budget surpluses for 20 years or more by 1994. Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y., has spoken glowingly of the surplus and its possibilities.

Ferrara disagrees. An analysis such as Laffler's, he says, fails to add any adjustment for inflation or other variables, or for the effect of economic growth over time. This, he says, leaves a "badly distorted impression."

For at least the next two decades, however, the fund's surpluses should grow, simply because the youth bulge — baby boomers, if you choose — will be working its way through the economy, paying in more than it takes out.

But when they begin to retire, says Ferrara, they will create a demographic wind shear. By his estimates, all the Social Security trust funds together will begin adding to the federal deficit in the year 2013.

An analysis by J.P. Morgan & Co. expresses similar fears. Rather than spending, it suggests productive investment of the surplus can promote domestic savings and investment, and help control the trade and budget deficits.

Ferrara would repeal the Social Security payroll-tax increase made in January and the boost due in January 1990.

He argues that not only are the increases not needed at this time, but that eliminating them would tend to add jobs to the economy that would actually increase Social Security revenues and finance benefits to be paid in the 2000s.

He suggests also policy-makers should allow participants the choice of substituting private savings and insurance accounts for future Social Security benefits.

To do so, he contends, "could reduce reliance on Social Security in the future sufficiently to avoid the need for any tax increases, and even possibly create sufficient room for further payroll tax relief."

BUSINESS TRAVEL COSTS
By cost category, in percent:

Good travel can be business asset

By CHRIS BARNETT
Copley News Service

A travel agent who knows hidden bargains is as valuable as a crackerjack accountant who knows tax loopholes. So don't be afraid to shop for a travel agent who shops for you.

Pressure-cooked business travelers and their budget-conscious bosses can save a half hour commute and up to 25 percent on airfare costs by flying out of Chicago's Midway Airport instead of bigger, busier O'Hare International, advises John McCon, manager of Key Travel in Westchester, Ill.

A one-stop flight offers huge savings over non-stops and the one-hour layover or change of planes is not a major inconvenience, he stresses.

"There are plenty of deals around and we always look for the best one for our business traveler clients," says McCon.

Chicago travel consultant Linda Haster says the cheapest rate isn't always the best bargain. She says her business traveler clients want the "concierge level" in a hotel to get extra pampering — private breakfast, secretarial services — but they only want to pay an extra $25 a night for these little luxuries.

Haster, who consults with Lenox Travel Ltd. and several other travel agencies, says rent-a-car rates are "totally confusing today."

She advises companies to negotiate corporate rates with one company and give it 100 percent of the business.

Smaller companies and self-employed individuals who don't command that type of clout should look for off-airport car rental companies that can save travelers from 40 percent to 80 percent compared with the giants.

One San Francisco travel agent advises his business traveler clients to spend the weekend on a trip, play tourist and save money.

"Schedule your meeting on a Friday, stay the weekend and you and your company can take advantage of super-saver fares that require you stay over on Saturday," suggests Bob McFetridge, owner of Gatewey To Travel in San Francisco. "The money you save on airfare is amazing."

Smart travel agents can find great weekend hotel discounts he adds.

U.S. and Canadian hotels give "at least" a 50 percent discount on all rooms or suites on Friday, Saturday and Sunday. Many provide free parking, complimentary breakfast and free visits to health clubs.

One-night stopovers are a smart way to save money, too. Say you're flying from New York to San Francisco. You can stop in Chicago for a night, save several hundred dollars, over the non-stop fare and do business in the Windy City or visit a friend or relative. "It just takes a little more planning today, but the savings are huge," says McFetridge.

Companies with armies of employees on the road should always arrange corporate rates with hotels, but the lone entrepreneur or salesperson who works for himself should request a corporate rate when making the reservation.

Says McFetridge: "Most hotels are very nice about giving corporate rates to business people if you ask for it."

The best way to unearth bargains is to forge a solid relationship with your travel agent, says Anastasia Kostoff-Mann, president of Corniche Travel in Los Angeles.

"Take the time to make a relationship, get to know us, and that way we can be more creative — find the best angles — for you."

The "best angle" often is an obscure fare that only travel agents and their computers seem to find. For instance, a recent round-trip fare from Los Angeles to Chicago was only $200 if you bought it seven days in advance and didn't mind a quick stop in Phoenix.

That same trip — non-stop — purchased seven days ahead of departure was $278.

By touching down in Phoenix for an hour, you can save 30 percent.

Business travelers with savvy want the little extras, as well. Many prefer small hotels with nice breakfasts rather than major chain hosteiries.

Smart hotels have enough food in the fridge so you can fix yourself a snack and avoid the expense and hassle of 24-hour room service.

Another well-heeled business traveler looks for foreign hotels where Cable News Network is available on TV in the room in order to keep in touch.

Another executive doesn't try to punish himself on a long trip. He checks all luggage, keeping only enough items in a carry-on bag to stay alive for 24 hours if the checked bag goes astray.

Other smart business traveler tips culled from travel agents and executives who log thousands of miles a year include:

Always ask for the corporate discount for rental cars and hotels, and be sure you receive it.

Bring a second pair of comfortable shoes if you'll be on your feet for more than one day at a trade show.

Get your seat assignment early and, when possible, ask for an aisle seat up front for easy and quick departure after landing.

Always carry your briefcase, presentation and slides on the plane with you.

Bring, in your briefcase, a mini-desk set containing scissors, clips, cellophane tape, stapler, calculator, dictation unit, etc.

Check your own personal and corporate insurance coverage before paying for costly insurance on a rental car. Check your bags curbside at the airport before returning your rental car to the parking lot.

Business traveler's checklist

Copley News Service

U.S. companies will spend an average of $2.35 million each on travel this year, with approximately 46.7 percent going to airfare, 24.2 percent set aside for lodging, 13.7 percent paid out for meals and a whopping 9.6 percent spent on car rentals.

But filling out the expense report is only part of the business traveler's homework. Just as much needs to be done in advance of the trip, knowing what documents, safety hints and currency you'll need during your business trip.

MONEY, MONEY

American Express Travel Related Services recommends that you change your cash — or traveler's checks — when you reach your destination abroad because the cost will be less.

Avoid changing more money than necessary at airports and hotels. Never exchange money on the street — the exchange rate may be attractive, but the risk of getting arrested isn't worth it, since it's illegal.

Save all receipts from exchange transactions. You may need them to convert local currency back into U.S. dollars when you leave the country. Finally, do reconvert your currency before leaving a foreign country. You'll save in the end.

Credit cards may save you from spending now, but they may cost you in the long run. The exchange rate is the one in effect on the day the transaction is posted by the credit company. That date may be as many as 30 days after you make the purchases.

Bring your passport to cash traveler's checks and a pocket calculator that figures the exchange rate.

TIPPING

There are no absolutes, but there are some tried-and-true rules. If in doubt, ask the front desk at the hotel. Tip early for better service during a long trip. Save your highest tips for personnel you will meet again.

RED TAPE

Passports: If you do not have a valid passport, apply for it a few months early. If you do have a passport, check to ensure it will not expire until after your return home. You need two identical, current 2-inch-square photos of yourself, full face with a white background, a copy of your birth certificate bearing the seal of the issuing authority and an additional piece of identification, such as a driver's license.

Visas: Consult your travel agent about whether you need a visa for the country you are visiting. Write directly to the embassy or consulate of the country you plan to visit.

Documents: Take a passport, visa, copy of your birth certificate, a yellow international certificate of vaccination, driver's license, travel insurance claim form, extra passport photos, extra prescriptions, membership cards for travel-related associations and basic medical information, including allergies and blood type.

Mobil expansion plans will create world's largest polyethylene plant

By L.M. SIXEL

BEAUMONT, Texas (AP) — When Mobil Chemical Co. completes its $50 million expansion and modernization of its polyethylene plant here in 18 months, it will be the largest such plant in the world.

The demand for polyethylene, which is used to make everything from plastic bags to kitchenware, is very strong and shows no sign of abating, plant manager Dave Warner said. Companies such as Mobil, Chevron Corp., Dow Chemcial Co. and Union Carbide Corp. are eager to fulfill the world's desire for more plastic, Warner said.

The Mobil Chemical plant, located on a 300-acre site, is Mobil Corp.'s only domestic polyethylene plant. Mobil Chemical is a division of Mobil Corp. Overseas, Mobil manufactures polyethylene in Saudi Arabia under a joint venture with a government-owned company, and it has a joint-venture plant with Exxon Corp. in Australia.

Expansion plans in Beaumont call for addition of a sixth polyethylene unit and a third low-pressure reactor, along with modernization of two existing low-pressure reactors to improve efficiency and increase production. Sixty-six new employees will be added to the current total of 350 workers. The project will increase the plant's annual capacity by 70 percent, from 1 billion to 1.7 billion pounds of polyethylene.

The plant already runs 24 hours a day, seven days a week, making 90,000 pounds of polyethylene an hour. That will increase to 150,000 pounds an hour.

Mobil's plastic division uses polyethylene to make garbage bags, sold under the Hefty Bag trademark, along with grocery sacks, dry cleaning bags and plastic film to wrap consumer products such as men's shirts. Mobil uses 20 percent of the polyethylene for its Hefty product line and sells the remaining 80 percent to 300 to 400 other consumer product manufacturers, companies that make everything from plastic dairy bottles to automobile parts to toys.

But the market for polyethylene has not always been good, Warner said. About two to three years ago the market was oversupplied, and companies shut down several older plants. As the economy turned around, demand has increased again to the point that shortages are commonplace and the industry is running at nearly 100 percent capacity. Thus, companies are spending money to modernize and build new plants.

About three years ago, the demand for plastic oil cans caused a surge in polyethylene usage, Warner said. The plastic cans replaced traditional paper cans with metal tops and bottoms. By now, plastic oil cans account for neary all the oil containers sold.

Warner also said he expects plastic grocery sacks to be a major growth area. They are much cheaper to produce than paper bags, because polyethylene is a cheaper raw material.

Plastic tops for microwaveable frozen food are another new use for polyethylene. Warner said he is not sure how big the market for the dish tops will be, but it as another example of the growth potential for polyethylene.

Warner said the plant must keep tight control of the production process because operational mistakes such as excess heat can cause polyethylene to melt in the reactor. "Since a reactor holds 100,000 pounds of polyethylene , the potential exists to make a 100,000-pound glob of goo. It's pretty unusual, but people have done it," Warner said.

As for outside customers, polyethylene pellets are blown by air into rail cars for shipment. Mobil loads 16 to 17 rail cars each day, which will increase to 25 rail cars after the expansion. To make plastic bags and other plastic products, customers remelt the pellets for shaping into a final product.

Like many great inventions, polyethylene was discovered by mistake in 1933, Warner said. A scientist pumped ethylene to a high pressure, which was contaminated by oxygen. The oxygen acted as a catalyst and formed polyethylene. "When the scientist returned to his laboratory after lunch, he opened the container and found a white residue on the bottom," Warner said.

An English company, ICI, began building small reactors to produce polyethylene. And when World War II began, polyethylene proved to be a superior elecricial insulation material. Polyethylene was a protected industry during the war becuase it was the only product at the time good enough to insulate electrical components in radar equipment.

In 1968, Union Carbide developed the first commercial gas-phase plant to produce polyethylene, making it cheaper to manufacture.

Plastic film can be either low density, which gives more stretch, or high density, which is tougher. Linear low-density bags are softer, while bags made from high-density polyethylene are stronger and more "crinkly," Warner said.

Thomas Lewis, an analyst who follows the major oil companies for Chicago-based Duff & Phelps Inc., said the market continues to look good for polyethylene. With the economy growing as robustly as it is, demand is strong and more capacity will not affect profit margins, he said. Adding capacity to existing plants is cheaper and easier than building new plants, he said. And capacity improvement takes only two to three years, compared with the four to five years it takes to build a plant from the ground up.

AP Laserf noto

The $50 million planned expansion and modernization of Mobil Chemical's Beaumont plant will make it the largest polyethylene processing plant in the world.

Survey: New Hampshire has most favorable business climate

Associated Press

New Hampshire and South Dakota lead the lower 48 states when it comes to offering a favorable business environment, as wages continue to top the list of concerns among manufacturers, according to a private study released today.

Based on 21 factors that include wages, energy costs, state business incentives and education, New Hampshire offers "many of the economic and social qualities conducive to successful manufacturing," said the accounting firm Grant Thornton.

The factors were based on surveys of governors, state economic development officials and statewide associations representing more than 100,000 manufacturers, the New York-based firm stated.

Wages were the single most important factor to the associations when assessing business climates, the survey indicated. Available workforce, unionization and workers' compensation insurance levels were the next most important factors, respectively.

For the first time in the nine consecutive years Grant Thornton has conducted the study, the firm differentiated states by their "manufacturing intensity" to make state-to-state comparisons more valid.

States where total employment in manufacturing exceeded the national average of 17 percent or where manufacturing shipments exceeded the national average in dollar terms were considered "intensive."

Ranked right behind New Hampshire on a list of 27 states deemed as manufacturing intensive were Missouri, North Carolina, Delaware and Florida.

Heading the list of 21 states with a lighter concentration of manufacturing was South Dakota, followed by North Dakota, Nebraska, Nevada and Kansas.

According to the study, South Dakota is the least unionized state in the nation: only 3.1 percent of its workers are union members, compared with a national average of almost 20 percent. The state ranked as the most favorable among the 48 states in terms of overall labor costs.

Ironically, New Hampshire's overall labor costs put it at No. 35 when ranked among the 48 states. However, the Granite State's government fiscal policies ranked first overall.

North Carolina ranked first in terms of state-regulated employment costs.

Kansas ranked first in terms of availability and productivity of resources, while North Dakota ranked first in terms of quality of life, although the associations ranked factors such as cost of living, health care and transportation as their least concerns.

Other groups have made similar assessments of business climates around the nation. The Corporation for Enterprise Development, a Washington-based, non-profit economic development research and consulting group, has used a broad range range of factors to make its assessment.

But Selwyn Price, a Grant Thornton partner, has said while his firm's index also considers a range of factors, it weights them in accordance with what manufacturers identified in a survey as important.

Alaska and Hawaii were not included in the survey because it would be difficult to compare them with other states due to their "substantially different economies," Grant Thornton stated.

PRECONSTRUCTION BRIEFS

The following listings of new plant construction, provided by Construction Information Services is intended for the benefit of local contractors and fabricators who may have an interest in bidding on the listed projects. If your product or service fits, further information may be obtained by calling 1800-762-3361 for key contacts, phone numbers and additional information.

DEER PARK: Rohm & Haas awarded a contract for Phase I and II of $45 million expansion of their acrylic acid unit. Requires reactors, scrubbers, reboilers, condensers, pumps, valves, piping plus E&I. Construction kick-off first quarter 1989.

BEAUMONT: Mobil Chemical awarded process design and engineering for the addition of a grassroots line No. 6 polyethylene reactor. Requires reactor, coolers, discharge system, purge bins, pumps, valves and coatings. Construction kick-off fourth quarter 1988.

LAPORTE: Aristech Chemical will select site for $50 million polypropylene "C" line expansion. Requires site study, demolition, foundations, civil/site prep, tanks, pumps, mixers, piping, controls, and valves. Construction kick-off second quarter 1989.

CORPUS CHRISTI: Coastal States Petroleum is preparing preliminary process design for a 135 MMSCFD gas-liquid plant. Requires civil/site prep, turbo expanders, pumps, compressors, valves, piping plus E&I. Construction kick-off first quarter 1988 with completion third quarter 1989.

BEAUMONT: Goodyear is in economic evaluation of $25 million 50 MM lb/year polymer batch plant. Requires compressors, fractionators, pumps, reactors, mixers, heat exchangers, valves, piping and erection. Construction kick-off third quarter 1989.

Thrill seekers, from left, Ginger Thomas, Billy Simons, Rebecca Cockerell and John Kirkham, perched on Philip Perry's derby car, await Saturday's 1988 National Demolition Derby at Twin Cities Speedway. Ginger will be competing in "The Great Bicycle Race," Simons will be jumping a car on his skateboard, Ms. Cockerell will be driving in the derby and Kirkham will be parachuting into the "Super Saturday" events, which also include stock car racing and spectator drags. Pre-show begins at 8 p.m.

Flirting with danger

By GEORGIA TODD TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

Jumping over cars on a skateboard, leaping out of airborne planes and crashing into automobiles are hardly standard activities for most people. But then, Billy Simons, John Kirkham and Rebecca Cockerell like the unusual.

When Twin Cities Speedway opens Saturday for the 1988 National Demolition Derby, sponsored by the Midland Suburban Lions Club, Simons as Skate Stiks Billy will jump an automobile on his skateboard, Kirkham will arrive via parachute and Ms. Cockerell will be driving a car in the derby.

In addition, the event includes bicycle races, stock car racing and spectator drags.

What inspires people to do the things they do, especially if an element of risk is involved?

"Somebody asked me if I could do it," says the 22-year-old Simons. He says his response was, "Sure, why not. It's not that hard."

Experimenting with jumps on a skateboard began for Simons when some friends acquired a half pipe ramp.

"It looked like fun," he says. "I fooled around on a skateboard when I was little, but I moved out here and didn't start skateboarding again until I was 18."

While he is speaking, Ms. Cockerell shakes her head.

"I'd been too scared to ride a skateboard when I was 18," she says.

Yet, she had no qualms about driving in her first derby when she was 27.

"Age makes a difference," Ms. Cockerell. "As you get older, you're not so afraid of just stepping out of bounds a little and trying things a little different and new. When you're younger, you wonder what people are going to think. When you get older, things like that don't bother you anymore."

Kirkham, who works for Sewell Buick Toyota Used Cars in Odessa, has "always" found himself doing the unusual.

"I raced motorcycles, rode bulls in college," he says. "I once walked across 42nd Street (Odessa) during rush hour — that's a lot more dangerous than jumping out of airplanes." He laughs and adds, "If you knew our pilot, you'd know it's a lot safer jumping out that landing with him."

Kirkham adds to his list driving in demolition derbies and getting married. "I've done all that dangerous stuff," he says.

Skydiving was an activity Kirkham had always wanted to try.

"I'd always wanted to do it, ever since I was old enough to be responsible for my own actions. I never got around to it until I finally set a goal to do it before I turned 38. I made my first jump three days before my 38th birthday. That was the last chance I had to make the goal I had set."

During the two years he has been skydiving, Kirkham has discovered "the only place in the world where I can be totally by myself.

"And, I'm in control of what happens, completely. When you first come out of the plane you realize that what you do or what you don't do determines if you can do it again."

Ms. Cockerell's interest in demolition derbies began as a spectator.

"I used to sit and watch them crash and wish I could do it," she says.

Ms. Cockerell, who works at Bob's Oilfield Engine, found out how to get started from firefighter Cliff Balzer, who was driving a sponsored demolition car. When the same business, Morrison of Midland, agreed to sponsor her, Balzer and Ms. Cockerell purchased a suitable car at the police auction.

The event has few rules, Ms. Cockerell says. Cars are driven in reverse and drivers are not allowed to hit other drivers directly in the driver's door or headlight to headlight.

On derby day, Ms. Cockerell was "Excited. Ready to crash them. I couldn't wait to hit the first car. I thought about all those people who had pulled out in front of me on the highway."

"Revenge is mine," Kirkham adds. He laughs.

"I have a habit of doing that now," Ms. Cockerell says. "When someone pulls out in front of me now I say, 'That's all right. I'll get you in the derby.' "

Simons is counting on his jumping experience to be able to sail over a car during the show. He says he has never made that kind of jump before.

"Super Saturday," which includes thousands of giveaways, begins at Twin Cities when members of the Eagle's Nest Parachute Club drop in along with fellow member Kirkham for an 8 p.m. pre-show.

Stock car racing starts at 8:30 p.m. and the spectator drags at 9:30 p.m. At 10 p.m., divisions 6 and under, and 7 and 8 of the "The Great Bicycle Race," sponsored by 39¢ Hamburger Place in Midland and Odessa, will be held followed by Skate Stiks Billy at 10:15.

Entered in the 7 and 8 year-old division will be 8-year-old Ginger Thomas of Odessa, the daughter of Alan and Marla Thomas, who won first place in last year's bicycle race.

An avid race fan, Ginger finds winning to be "the same feeling as every Friday night when 26, 82 and 28 cross the finish line first."

Those are race cars driven by Miss Thomas' heros — Junior Robertson, 26; Joe Jackson, 82; and Frank Flournoy, 28 — when Twin Cities Speedway operates its regular race schedule on Friday nights during the season.

In addition, special shows, such as Saturday's demolition derby, are presented at the ⅜-mile asphalt track located west of Coors Road between Highway 80 and I-20 between Midland and Odessa. Since last season, the facility has added additional seating and parking and asphalted the parking lot and pit area.

Fender-crashing, demolition derby action begins Saturday at 10:30 p.m. At the close of the derby, the remaining divisions in the "Great Bicycle Race" will be held. Trophies will be awarded in all bicycle race divisions.

Admission is $7 for adults, $2 for those 6 to 11 years old and free to those under 6. Coupons which give 6 to 11 year olds $1 off the admission price, as well as bicycle entry blanks may be picked up at 39¢ Hamburger Place in Midland and Odessa. Gates open at 5 p.m.

The derby, which pays for five places, has a total purse of $2,000. Winners receive a 6-foot trophy. Each car entering the derby is charged a $25 entry fee for the car. Individual and team entries will be accepted. For more information on the bicycle races or the demolition derby call 683-8541 or 1-381-2401.

Kirkham, who has driven in between 10 and 15 derbies, has been an individual driver and a member of a team. In 1984, his wife was his partner. A total of six women drove in that derby.

Ms. Cockerell, who drove as a team member last year, is entered in Saturday's derby as an individual driver, sponsored by Ken's Paint and Body and StarCast Productions.

The two compared notes on how many drivers were entered when they drove in derbies. The numbers ranged from 63 to 103 cars.

"It's a mad house — that's part of the fun of it," Ms. Cockrell says.

"Throw a motor on your skateboard and drive in the derby," Kirkham says to Simons.

Shooting newspaper photos not as easy as one may think

Most people have the impression that pictures appearing in the newspaper just happen. The photographer is in the right place (angle of shot) at the right time (the light is perfect or he quickly adjusts for the existing light), has his equipment ready for action which then happens.

The above is true for spot news photos (which means you live with what you get when the action was happening and hope it's a brilliant shot) and wild art photographs — those which stand on their own and don't need an accompanying story to explain what the picture is doing in the paper in the first place.

However, the majority of the material which appears on the cover of this section does not qualify as spot news coverage or wild art. Thus, the photographers and I must work together — often easier than it sounds — to come up with an appropriate illustration for the story. Such was the case for today's Entertainment section cover story.

Imagine this past week — when Midland was having its recent monsoon season — shuffling eight people's schedules so they can arrive within the newspaper deadline in the same space in time at the right location with the appropriate weather conditions and the correct props to shoot a representative picture.

Then schedule all of the above twice.

Next, arrive at the office, only to discover 40 minutes ahead of the shooting that one person's car won't start, and the drive to the location from the newspaper is 25 to 30 minutes.

Thus, I had the opportunity Tuesday morning on the drive out to Twin Cities Speedway to talk with 22-year-old Billy Simons, who as Skate Stiks Billy, is planning to jump a car on his skateboard Saturday at the Speedway during the 1988 Demolition Derby. Although he hasn't done this jump before, he says he knows he can do it.

Fans will find out if he's correct Saturday when Twin Cities is the site of the demolition derby, sponsored by Midland Suburban Lions Club; the Great Bicycle Race, sponsored by 39¢ Hamburger Place; stock car racing; and spectator drags. The pre-show begins at 8 p.m. when members of Eagle's Nest Parachute Club drop in. Billy will make his jump around 10:15 p.m. The derby begins at 10:30 p.m. Gates open at 5 p.m.

Billy also told me he was a slow starter, that he wasn't awake yet.

I also am a slow starter. We were the last to arrive.

Already assembled were Odessans Ginger Thomas, 8; her mother, Marla; Odessan John Kirkham; Midlander Rebecca Cockerell; photographer George Wolf, Midlander Philip Perry, who had agreed to have his demolition car in the picture even though he wasn't; and the 1974 Plymouth, which was sitting on the track.

That morning, the car had been picked up by A-1 Wrecker & Salvage from the sign company location where it was being painted because the police frown on those who drive a car without glass in the windows.

The picture would have been taken the day before, but the demolition car we were going to use, the one Rebecca drove in last year's derby, had been moved. Thus, Monday we had found ourselves standing in a largely deserted Midland parking lot wondering what to do next.

Oh well, the weather was uncooperative Monday morning anyway.

Then, the photograph was to be taken at 11 a.m. Tuesday, but an Odessa doctor's office could not reschedule Ginger's appointment, so the time was moved to 10 a.m.

Standing at the track Tuesday, we all decided it was plenty hot by 10 a.m.

So, we had finally arrived in the right space in time, the sky was clear and everyone was in agreement. We wouldn't want to do this later and weren't organized sooner.

George looked at the car, studied the angles and put Ginger, who won last year's bicycle race at Twin Cities Speedway and is entered in this Saturday's race, on top of the car, told Rebecca, who is driving in this Saturday's demolition derby, to get in the front and John, who is parachuting into the track for the show, to sit on the hood.

A battery, sitting in the front seat on the rider's side, was moved so Rebecca could lean out the glassless window. She looked concerned during the shooting and may have been worrying about battery acid burning her jeans. Of course, that look wouldn't be unfashionable these days.

We suspect she was thinking of what might happen if the roof crashed in on her. Philip reassured her. He told her he could drive the car without a roof.

The reason for her concern were the 20 or so jumps Billy made up and down on the roof above her head; the ones George was directing him to do when he kept saying "Go for it."

Sweat was pouring off Billy and John Kirkham, who was dressed warmly for the occasion. Actually, we were all sweating.

One thing was certain. By the time Billy left the speedway 45 minutes later, he was awake. We all were.

When I think of the events scheduled in Saturday's show at Twin Cities Speedway and the spirit of adventure that those who compete in such activities must have, what comes to my mind is an oft heard line.

"Go for it."

ENTERTAINMENT IN BRIEF

Drama depicts life of Billy the Kid

Answers to the riddle of Billy the Kid, America's most famous — yet controversial outlaw, can be found this summer in the popular outdoor drama "Billy the Kid" — beginning the second season at New Mexico state park built Caprock Amphitheatre in eastern New Mexico.

The one hour and 45 minute musical drama captures the excitement of the old West of 1880 with gunplay, music and original Mexican folk dances.

"Billy the Kid" opened Thursday, June 16 and plays each Thursday, Friday, and Saturday night at 8:30 p.m. (MDT), through August 20.

The Caprock Amphitheatre sits atop the Bluffs of the Llano Estacado for the scenic view and is 10 miles south of San Jon, N.M., on NM 469.

Take exit 356 off I-40 at San Jon. The amphitheatre is approximately 100 miles west of Amarillo, and 210 miles east of Albuquerque.

No reservations necessary unless the group has 15 or more. Show tickets prices range from $3 to $6.

Barbeque is $3.50 to $5 a plate and serving begins at 6:30. Call 1-505-576-2455 or write Billy The Kid, Caprock Amphitheatre, P.O. Box 337, San Jon, NM 88a434.

Art workshops offered

Spaces are still available in several classes of the Museum of the Southwest's Museum School for Children.

ARTSmart is the theme of the summer session which includes hands-on learning in abstract sills in observation, visual perception, spontaneity, and abstract thinking. One archaeology class also will be taught.

Weaving, 6 to 8 year olds, 11 a.m. to 12 noon, July 25 through 29.

Watercolor, 9 to 10 a.m., August 1 through 5, involving new ways to use watercolor paints.

Masks and Mobiles, 10:30 to 11:30 a.m., August 1 through 5, designed and made from personal "treasures" and found objects.

Handbuilt Pots, 12:15 to 1:15, August 1 through 5, using simple tools as the Indians did; building and decorating slab and coil vessels.

Digging Up the Past, 8 to 12 years old, 9 to 10:15 a.m. August 8 to 12; this class will be held in conjuction with the Museum's exhibition, "Prehistoric Plainsmen: Archaeology of the Midland Area," and will involve "shoebox excavation" in learning archaeological methods. Also, pictographs and petroglyphs will be studied and created by the students. A "mini-dig" is planned.

Children are asked to wear comfortable, washable clothing and shoes.

Children may be registered at the Museum of the Southwest. Fees are $22.50 for Museum members and $25 for non-members for each class. Scholarships are also available.

For information call Marilyn Bassinger at the Museum, 683-2882.

Artifacts on exhibit

Evidence of man's existence in the Midland area throughout 12,000 years of time is featured in an archaeological exhibition at the Museum of the Southwest now through August 28.

"Prehistoric Plainsmen: Archaeology of the Midland Area" features artifacts and information found within a 50-mile radius of Midland. The exhibition, composed of items from the Museum's collections, provides clues about the lives of the early inhabitants of this area.

Twenty prehistoric sites in Midland County have been recorded with the Texas Archaeological Research Laboratory, and other sites have been found but not scientifically studied.

A hearth or campfire site on display was reconstructed using finds from a roadcut in north Midland on High Sky Street.

A hand dug well, reproduced using a rubber mold of a Mustang Draw excavation, estimated age 5500 years, is also on display.

The Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave., is open Tuesday through Saturday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and on Sunday from 2 to 5 p.m. No admission is charged.

Photographs on exhibit

Photographs taken by Permian Basin photographers, members of the group "In Focus," are on exhibit during July in the main lobby at First RepublicBank Midland.

"In Focus" was formed in May, 1986 by several Permian Basin photographers.

The current exhibition is a theme show based on the following quotation from Minor White, the noted photographer and teacher, " The photographer projects himself into everything he sees, indentifying himself with everything in order to know it and feel it better."

"In Focus" is also exhibiting at Gallery 1114, 1114 N. Big Spring, through July 28. The group has shown their work at Texas Tech University, Odessa College, the Presidential Museum in Odessa, and Midland Community Theater.

Membership is open to those who exhibit a serious interest in photography, with the desire for personal photographic growth as well as the desire to help others strengthen their work. If you would like additional information of "In Focus," please call Michael Banschbach at 686-7960.

MCT to offer theater workshops

A series of free workshops will be presented by Midland Community Theatre this summer which focus on musical comedy, auditions, sound, costuming and painting.

The workshops are open to the public.

An audition workshop will be July 30 from 1 to 5 p.m. Don Bachmann, MCT's executive director, and Michael Spicer, MCT associate director, will teach this free one-day course, which is known as "How to Succeed in Auditions" and includes character development, projection, breathing, relaxation and audition techniques.

A paint workshop can be taked from 7 to 10 p.m. Aug. 2 or 3. MCT's designer David Layman will demonstrate a variety of scene painting techniques including woodgraining, marbling, stenciling and masonry. Also covered will be paint mixing, scenic brushes and the process of transferring a paint design to full size. Those participating are asked to dress in paint clothes as this is a hands on workshop.

A two-part costuming workshop will be conducted from 7 to 10 p.m. Aug. 10 and Aug. 11. MCT's costume designer Mae Dawson will demonstrate the fast-sewing techniques used to create costumes for theater productions. Included will be fitting, cutting, sewing, altering and decorating.

The sound workshop is a one-evening course which can be taken from 7 to 10 p.m. Aug. 16 or 17. MCT's technical director Jon Clark will teach this free workshop which deals with music, sound effects and other auditory cues produced in the MCT sound booth in the Davis Theatre.

For more information call Theatre Midland's business office, 682-2544, or sign up at 2000 W. Wadley Ave.

Show to deal with whales

ODESSA — A National Audubon Society television special, "Whales," looks at a mammal man once feared but now reveres. The program will be aired at 7 p.m. on KOCV-TV/Channel 36 at 9 p.m. today.

Then, the first retrospective study of Duke Ellington's life and works, American Masters' "Duke Ellington: Yesterday, Today and Tomorrow" airs at 9 p.m. Monday.

The series "The Struggles for Poland" continues at 9 p.m. Tuesday with the segment "A False Dawn." This program follows the efforts of the Polish people to forge a new country amid political dissension and economic strife.

At 8 p.m. Wednesday, "16 Days of Glory" focuses on world record holders including British runner Dave Moorcroft, U.S. diver Greg Louganis and U.S. gymnast Mary Lou Retton.

Featuring dialogue between Texas' governor, reporters from the statewide press and call-in viewers, the live monthly public affairs program "The Governor Reports" airs at 11 p.m. Thursday.

El Paso to celebrate

Events in El Paso this summer include "Viva El Paso" at the McKelligon Canyon Amphitheatre through Aug. 27, and the "Music Under the Stars Concerts" at the Chamizal National Memorial Theatre Grounds on July 24 and 31.

In addition the fifth annual Tri-State Rio Grande Chile Cookoff will be held at Western Playland Amusement Park, July 23-24.

Women take up rat race

Women are closing in on men in the rat race, and more and more females are getting ulcers to show it — now almost as many as men, according to Health Magazine.

DERBY

"I'm not going to race in no demolition derby," Simons says.

Kirkham and Ms. Cockerell look at him, then at each other.

"Priorities change as you get older," Kirkham says.

Simons looks doubtful.

"My first derby was great," Ms. Cockrell says, looking at Simons. "I want to do it again. I can't wait for the next one, although a lot of people think I'm crazy."

She recalls the experience.

"I wasn't disappointed. I got hit a couple of times, and I was getting a little worried. But after that I was ready to hit somebody else. Then my car stopped. The starter fried on me. I hope that doesn't happen this time. It would be nice to get all the way through and win something, but if I don't that's OK. I'd like to stay in longer."

"Once you're past the first lick all the fears are gone," Kirkham says. Ms. Cockerell agrees.

"I'd probably be in this one, if I wasn't jumping in it," Kirkham says. "I thought about having a car in the derby, but I'm not going to. I'm smarter than Tony Dorsett (Dallas Cowboy running back), I retired a winner. I won the last derby I was in."

He pauses, then adds, " I'm always looking for something different to do."

Simons says, "There's not a whole lot of different things to do in this town. You either play baseball, football or soccer."

Pointing to his skateboard, he says, "This takes you a lot of places you wouldn't get to go otherwise."

Equipped with his skateboard, Simons, who has worked for Skate Stiks for 2½ years, has traveled to area competitions.

"The experience feels scary," Simons says. "If you're in a different town and you have three or four friends with you, all the rest are..."

"Enemies," interjects Miss Thomas, who joins the others for a few minutes.

Simons laughs.

"No, they are not enemies," Simons says. "But it really puts the pressure on you. When you want to do real good, you mess up. That's why I don't practice a whole lot any more on one trick."

Kirkham finds competing challenging and exciting.

"Sometimes you go out there just to have fun and pride gets hold of you, ego takes over," Kirkham says. "Life would be awful boring, if you didn't find things that were a challenge."

Ms. Cockerell, who has also driven jeeps in the mud drags, says the activities she has been involved in will help her son, Lance, try different things. His attitude will probably be, she says, "Well, Mom tried everything. Let's see what I can do."

When Kirkham says, "You get a feeling of self-satisfaction, accomplishment," Ms. Cockrell and Simons nod in agreement.

Simons throws in that he rides a skateboard for the exercise.

Kirkham looks at him before saying, "Mine's not exercise. Anybody that knows me, knows that I like to do things out of the ordinary. And, I like the excitment of flirting with danger."

No one disagrees.

Streetcars horse-drawn

Public streetcar service in New York City began in 1832. The fare was 12 cents. The streetcar was horse-drawn.

Glen Rose plans bluegrass festival

GLEN ROSE — Oakdale Park in Glen Rose is gearing up for its "Pickin' Under the Stars" Bluegrass Festival Friday through July 24.

Held outdoors underneath huge oak trees, the bluegrass program features nationally known bluegrass bands such as The Warrior River Boys from Alabama, Kenny Baker & Josh Graves from Tennessee, and the popular gospel group from Georgia, The Lewis Family.

Texas bands scheduled to appear include The Double Mountain Boys, Lipan; County Seat, Alvarado; Twice As Nice, Texarkana; Concho Grass, San Angelo; Clear Creek Bluegrass, Pearland; Bluegrass Reunion, Victoria; Chambers Creek Bluegrass, Maypearl; with Leon Valley Bluegrass from Copperas Cove serving as House Band. Roy Thackerson, The Fingerless Fiddler.

The musical stage show will open 7:30 p.m. Friday and end at 12 midnight. Saturday, the program will begin at 10 a.m. and run until midnight. Show hours on July 24 are 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. A one-day ticket is $9, and a three-day ticket is $23. Children ages 15 and under are free with their parents.

Jim Atchley of Austin will serve as master of ceremonies for this Bluegrass show.

Oakdale Park, campground and resort is open year round with cabins and full-camping hookups. For more information, contact Oakdale Park, P.O. Box 548, Glen Rose, 76043, 1-817-897-2321.

Programs focus on Southwest heritage

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — Taste buffalo meat, cottonseed ice cream, or several unusual dishes made with corn at special programs planned to highlight the "Family Folklore" exhibit now open at the Presidential Museum, 622 N. Lee St.

To celebrate the unique heritage of the Southwest, the museum has planned three special afternoons of fun. Combining storytelling, demonstrations, craft projects, and even games, participants will bring alive those people who settled this land. With the help of the Texas Department of Agriculture, each program will conclude with a cooking demonstration and unusual snack. Each class is free to the public, and groups are welcome, but need to register with the museum.

"Buffalo — At Home on the Range," at 1:30 p.m. Tuesday, is a program designed for participants to learn about the buffalo that once roamed the plains of West Texas through exciting tales and legends. The program, which ends at 3:30 p.m., will conclude with meeting some "real" mountain men, finding out how they hunted buffalo, and then tasting some buffalo meat.

Next up is "Cotton Was King" from 1:30 to 3:30 p.m. July 26.

Cotton has played an important part in Texas history, and participants will find out why and get a chance to experiment with some of the many uses of cotton. Demonstrations on the spinning wheel, people weaving, and a quilting bee will illustrate the history of cotton. Students will have the opportunity to create their own quilt square, and their efforts will be rewarded with ice cream made from cottonseed.

The last program is scheduled for Aug. 9 from 1:30 to 3:30 p.m. "Corn — Ears of Plenty" combines the unique history of the Indians of the Southwest and their reverence for corn with all the unusual food this simple plant produced. Participants can hear Native American legends, find out what early Texans thought about corn, and then illustrate their own legend. A special treat will be a taste of some unique ways to cook corn.

"Family Folklore," a traveling exhibit from the Smithsonian Institution, exhibit, is a unique exhibit designed to give the appearance of the family album, and also incorporates local artifacts and stories that illustrate Odessa's history.

So often folklore is considered the exclusive property of rural and ethnic people, yet folklore truly comes from all social groups and emerges from each family unit. Twenty panels are filled with photographs and text depicting stories, holidays, traditions, and heirlooms to encourage individual involvement.

The Smithsonian Institution Traveling Exhibition Service has produced a series of educational materials to enhance the exhibition, and an interviewing guide to teach viewers how to record their own family history is free to the public.

"Family Folklore" has been brought to Odessa through a grant from the Odessa Cultural Council. The exhibit will be on display through Aug. 13. For more information call 1-332-7123.

Party's over for 'Arthur 2'

By MYRA LEE SALCEDO

Salcedo

"Arthur 2: On the Rocks" has a title which is a self-fulfilling prophecy. The once witty and tipsy Arthur (Dudley Moore) settles for being merely tipsy in this watered-down sequel to the highly successful 1981 "Arthur."

Even worse than being consistently drunk is that Arthur's jokes are funny only to other characters on the screen who have had "a few too many." With the consciousness-raising about alcohol abuse over the last few years, the lovable lush of the early 80s is relegated to being a man on the downhill side of life in the "Just Say No" era.

The film opens with an intoxicated Arthur leaning out his window and harassing the passenger of a limousine. Noticing the man's gold initials on the limo, Arthur says, "I bet you had to look at thousands of cars before you found one with your initials on it." The passenger responds with "You have to be the most annoying man I've ever met."

"Do I have to?" Arthur replies with the kind of boorish wit that sets the tone for the whole movie.

The original film, Steve Gordon's fine, lighthearted, screwball comedy, paired Arthur, a lovable lush, with Linda (Liza Minnelli), a waitress with a penchant for shoplifting. It was easier to accept Arthur as an endearing figure in "Arthur," especially since love helped him get on the wagon. In "Arthur 2" neither love nor money can entice Arthur to become responsible and see the world through other than bleary eyes.

But the plot of Arthur's excesses are minor compared to the main plot of business tycoon Bert Johnson (Stephen Elliot) trying to destroy Arthur's and Linda's happy marriage. Johnson is the father of Arthur's previously jilted girlfriend, Susan (Cynthia Sykes, replacing Jill Eikenberry).

The spoiled Susan wants Arthur back at any cost. Why she wants someone who is always falling-down-drunk is difficult to understand. But Linda's happiness with her inconsiderate husband is even more confusing. If this weren't enough, there is the matter of Johnson maneuvering business deals to lock Arthur out of $750 million, and the even more questionable matter of Arthur and Linda attempting to adopt a baby from a social worker who knows he has a drinking problem.

However, "Arthur 2" doesn't fail just because alcoholism is no longer acceptable. It fails because the script and the plot develop Arthur into a pathetic character. The jokes fall flat and Moore's slurred speech becomes wearisome.

Not even Sir John Gielgud, (who died in one of of the most touching scenes in the first movie) returning as a ghost (or a drunken hallucination) can save this film. As one of the characters so aptly puts it: "The party is over."

"Arthur 2: On the Rocks," rated PG ("Parental Guidance Suggested"), contains some mildly vulgar language.

Jazz, pop group will perform at museum concert

A new musical group in Midland, "Nuvo Baroque," will perform at Sunday's 7:45 p.m. "Summer Sundays Lawn Concert" at the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave.

The United Spiritual Singers will not be able to appear as originally scheduled.

Nuvo Baroque, with instrumentalists and vocalists, performs jazz and pop.

The group, organized in February, includes husband and wife team, vocalist Pamela Musgrove and Keyboardist Len Musgrove; Robert McCommon, drummer; Guy McKenzie, bass player; Harry Boomquist, lead quitarist; and Carole Christiani, vocal and synthesizer performer.

Mrs. Musgrove appeared in the recent production of "Cats" at Midland Community Theatre, as did Ms. Christiani who also is a regular in Summer Mummer productions.

Group members include an attorney, landman, stockbroker, oil company president, and receptionist, all of who enjoy music performance and recognized a latent talent "dying to get out" as stated by Len Musgrove. They play professionally.

The free concert will begin at 7:45 p.m. on the front lawn of the Museum. Those attending are invited to bring lawn chairs or blankets for seating. In case of bad weather the concert will be held inside the museum.

KOCV-TV will air 'Shoulder to Shoulder'

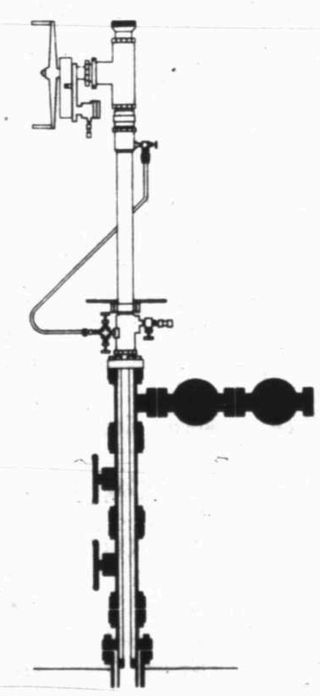

ODESSA — The series "Shoulder to Shoulder" starts the weekend for KOCV-TV/Channel 36 at 9 p.m. today.

Hosted by actress Jane Alexander, the episode "The Pankhurst Family" begins the series detailing the bitter struggle for women's suffrage in Great Britain.

Summer Night Music presents "Saxophone Colossus" at 9 p.m. Saturday. This edition is dedicated to Sonny Rollins, called "the greatest improviser in the history of jazz."

The joy of fishing is a real pleasure to pass on to younger generations

Can you remember your first fish? Most people can, and a good feeling comes over them when they reflect on that first fishing experience. Usually, it was with a close family member, such as a mother or father, and it brought the parent and child closer together.

Fishing industry spokemen suggest a few tips for a successful fishing trip.

The most important item is to do everything possible to ensure the youngsters will catch fish. Nothing is more disheartening than to fish all day without a keeper.

Find a location that should be loaded with crappie, bluegill or sunfish. Most kids have a short attention span, so, the more fish they catch, the more they will want to go on a second trip. In short, they will be hooked for life.

Try to use basic equipment. Asking children to whip buzzbaits or jig worms will only frustrate them. A spincasting rig or even a cane pole is ideal, because they are virtually trouble free and kids will spend more time fishing than pulling out backlashes.

Young minds are eager to take in new information, but concentrate on the basics instead of flooding them with techniques and "fishing jargon." By learning the basics of the sport, young anglers will retain more knowledge and become better fishermen.

Above all, patience is the key to a fun trip. Teach your children how to bait the hook and how to cast if their equipment warrants that, then sit back and let them have the fun.

Fishing can be a wonderful experience for youngsters. The experience will hold even more enjoyment for the adult who is willing to take the time and effort to teach them.

The first time is always the best! By following a few basic rules, that first fishing trip will be enjoyable for both child and parent.

Most travelers now plan for shorter summer trips

WASHINGTON (AP) — A travel group has predicted that Americans will set new records in travel this summer, with the majority taking a car, truck or camper to a vacation spot less than 250 miles from home.

The U.S. Travel Data Center, in its annual projection of summer vacations, said the Southeast will remain the most popular destination, while the Midwest and Great Lakes regions, which are in the midst of an economic recovery, will generate the biggest increase in vacation travelers.

Cities, the data center said, will edge out oceans and beaches this year as the preferred destination.

Suzanne Cook, director of the data center, said the traditional summer vacation — "where the parents take the kids on a three-week summer vacation" — is no longer the model for many American households, where more women work and have less time to take long trips.

"We're finding that people are taking more shorter trips throughout the year and not just one long summer vacation," Cook said.

It estimated that Americans will take 136 million vacation trips during June, July and August, up 3 percent from the 132 million trips last summer. Cook said the 1987 travel rate was a record.

The travel data center, a private, non-profit group that promotes travel, developed its forecast from the results of monthly telephone interviews of 1,500 adults. Cook said the margin of error in the survey is plus or minus 2 percentage points.

The center found that nearly a third of those responding to its survey — 31 percent — said they planned to visit a city, while 26 percent said they would go to an ocean or beach. That is exactly the opposite of the results for the 1987 survey.

Big Spring: A vibrant city

Big Spring is named after a great natural spring gushing from Sulphur Draw, according to the West Texas Travel Council.

Today the 'spring' is enclosed in a beautiful 470-acre city park, Comanche Trail Park. This park also has Comanche Trail Lake for fishing, the Figure 7 Tennis Center, a swimming pool, an 18-hole golf course, the Dora Roberts Community Center, hike & bike trails, picnic areas, overnight campgrounds, and the 6,500 seat outdoor Comanche Trail Amphitheater.

Besides the excellent facilities at Comanche Trail Park & Lake, the Big Spring Country Club, located on top of South Mountain, has an 18-hole golf course. Big Spring also offers indoor recreation facilities with two complete bowling complexes and a fully-equipped YMCA.

Nearby Moss Creek Lake, 9 miles east of the city, offers fishing for bass and crappy. Sailing and windsurfing are also favorites at Moss Creek as well as camping, picnicking and swimming

The Big Spring State Park, known locally as Scenic Mountain, offers everything for nature lovers, historians and fitness enthusiasts. This lovely 2.3 mile scenic drive overlooks the city and West Texas, as well as provides a haven for native plants and animals, including more than 300 species of birds.

Stop by the Heritage Museum at 510 Scurry and see the World Largest Collection of Longhorn horns, or view the historic Potton House, entered in the National Register of Historic Places. Visit the Chamber of Commerce office at 215 W. Third St. for more information and purchase or rent a cassette tour tape of Big Spring & Howard County.

Advice for boaters, fishing enthusiasts

Getting caught "in a blow" might have been an exhilarating experience in the movies of a generation ago, but it's not much fun in real life. Today's pleasure boats can handle surprisingly heavy weather safely, but it's the discomfiture that you don't need. Avoid being out in a boat during a storm, if at all possible.

The best way to do that is to stay tuned to a U.S. Weather Service or commercial radio station for forecasts. In the event that the forecast is "iffy," stay home or boat close to shore so you can get to shelter quickly.

This seems like obvious advice, but every summer the Coast Guard has to rescue boaters during storms that were expected and forecast, according to authorities.

In addition to getting forecasts, a prudent boat skipper keeps his "weather eye peeled." The disadvantage a boater has-there's no shelter in open water-is offset by his visibility advantage.

Because there are no visual obstructions when he's in open water, he can see the cloud formations on the horizon which warn of bad weather.

Watch the western horizon, the direction from which most of our weather comes. When a cloud begins to thicken and grow vertically, there's a chance of a shower.

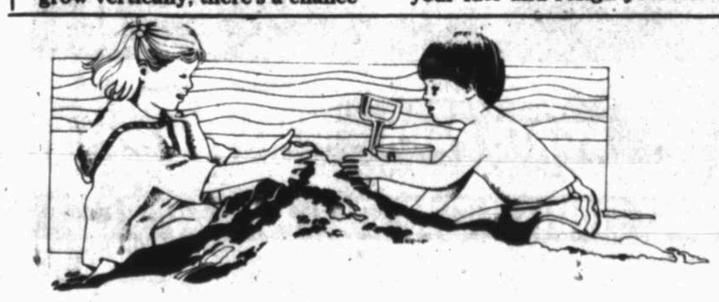

Learn to anticipate foul weather so you're safely ashore and not in your boat when a storm like this develops.

If it continues to grow darker and spread, you may be watching the development of a thunderstorm. (Sometimes the taller clouds have anvil-shaped tops; that's a sign of dangerous thunderstorms.) Head for shore without delay.

If you boat a lot, you'll probably get caught in rough water at some time or other. When it happens to you, slow down. Accept your fate and resign yourself to getting back, slowly but safely.

Get everyone aboard into a life jacket or vest. Although designed to keep a person afloat in the water, a vest will also protect the wearer from bruises during the bumpy ride.

If the water gets really rough, head into the seas at a sight angle. Throttle back to the point where you are only maintaining steering control. "Quartering" into the waves this way will help your ride out almost any squall.

'The King and I' to be on stage at Sul Ross

ALPINE — The pomp and pageantry of the popular Rodgers and Hammerstein musical, "The King and I," is on the stage of the Sul Ross State University Kokernot Outdoor Theatre through Aug. 6.

Performances dates are Thursday, Saturday, July 29, 31 and August 6. Curtain time for all performances is 9 p.m.

Based on the true story of "Anna and the King of Siam" by Margaret Landon, the musical is set in 1862 and tells the story of English widow Anna Leonowens who, with a small son, comes to the Royal Palace in Bangkok to serve as a tutor to the wives and children of King Mongkut.

Ms. Landon became interested in the story of Anna when she was living in Siam and read the books "The English Governess at the Siamese Court" and "The Romance of the Harem" written by the governess.

Ms. Landon was utterly absorbed by the picture the books offered of the inner life of an oriental court and of the brave Englishwoman who went to that court to teach English (and democracy) to the Siamese King's 67 children.

The writer let Anna's story simmer in the back of her mind for a few years until, in 1939, an acquaintance who had himself spent some time in Siam, wondered if she had "ever heard of his Aunt Annie," who turned out to be Anna Leonowens.

This contact gave Ms. Landon important family background and after two years of research, she published her book "Anna and the King of Siam."

Before Rodgers and Hammerstein made their musical adaptation of the novel, it had been a successful movie, released in 1946 and starring Rex Harrison and Irene Dunn.

"The King and I" is directed by Dr. Ron Hubbard, Sul Ross assistant director of communication and theater. Starring in the lead roles of the King and Anna are Sul Ross student Charlie Parrish and Alpine community member Sawyer Cornelison. Both have appeared in numerous Sul Ross theater productions.

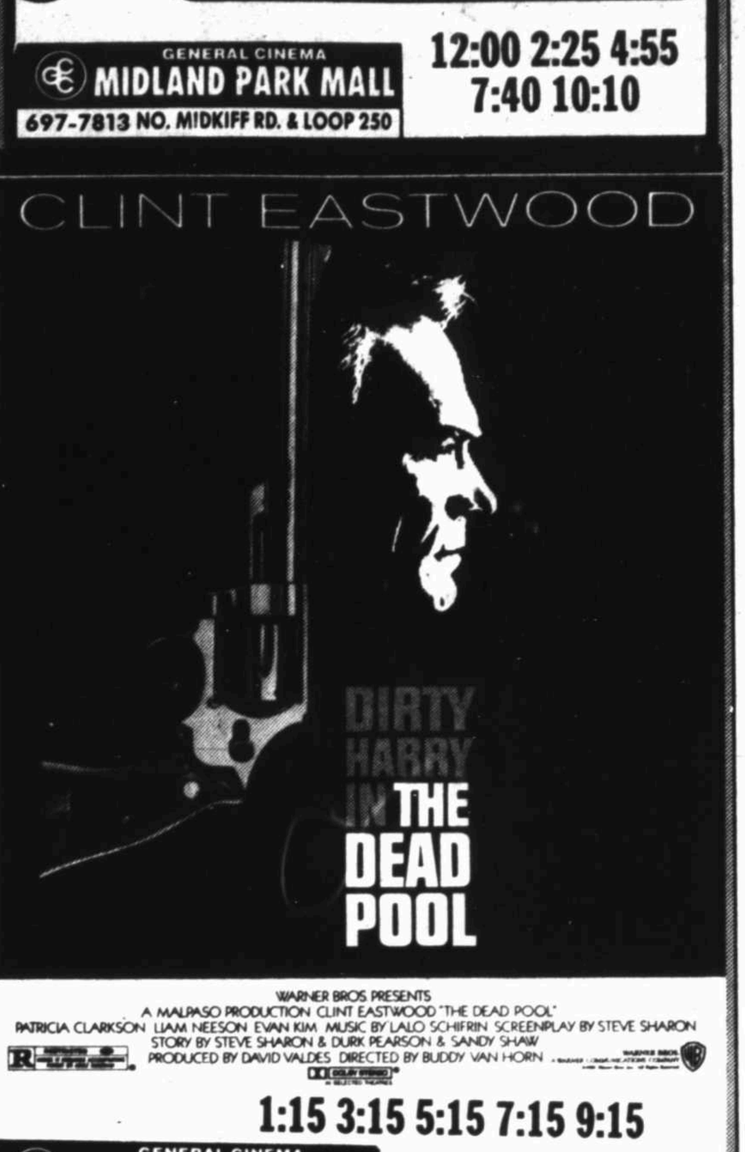

The production has a large cast of Sul Ross students and Alpine community members with 12 children featured as princes and princesses.

The music will be played by an 11-member pit orchestra directed by musical director Ellen Boyd, who will also play the piano.

General admission to the musical is $3. Students with a Sul Ross ID and faculty/staff members with an activity card will be admitted free.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Keep your conscience clear and you will find greater success and satisfaction. Economic changes work to your advantage. So do technological advances. You gain new insights from personal relationships, trips and educational activities.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: Broadway star Hume Cronyn, singer Dion, actor James Brolin, Sen. John Glenn, Sen. S.I. Hayakawa, actress Hariett Nelson, playwright Clifford Odets, comedian Red Skelton, actor Chill Wills, baseball's Joe Torre.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You have strong feelings about a special cause. Act on them! A candid discussion of finances will reduce domestic tension. Good communication is the key to a rewarding relationship. Listen closely.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Compatibility is the most important factor in a nurturing relationship. Job responsibilities may change. Be sure you receive fair compensation. You discover new ways to get what you want. Enlist influential allies.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Your concentration should be excellent today. Those in sales or the arts profit most. Writers need to get better organized. Travel could offer opportunities you have only dreamed of. Pack your bags!

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Persistence wins you both attention and advancement at work. Concentrate on business and let friends do some of the adjusting. You will benefit from having more room to maneuver in a relationship.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Put down new roots. Career growth accelerates. Financial prospects improve. Good health depends on staying alert. Do not let a minor problem develop into a major one. The mail brings good news.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Impatience could overtake you early this week. Consult experts regarding finances. Replace old procedures with new ones. Partner or mate needs reassurance; give it lovingly. Your words of encouragement mean a lot.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Behind-the-scenes wheeling and dealing may cause a few heads to roll, but the results will be rewarding. A raise or promotion is possible. Be alert to a close friend's jealousy.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Communication is paramount to your success today. Say what you mean. Financial problems fade thanks to a sudden windfall. Use the utmost discretion when handling any business or financial transaction.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Progress is made on the work front, but a close relationship may be hard to sort out. A good image is important to career success. Shape up. Your social connections prove helpful.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): If traveling, proceed with caution. Unexpected delays or confusing conditions are possible. Obtain all pertinent information. Keep your personal affairs to yourself. Do not confide in a talkative co-worker.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A long-distance message firms up some travel plans. Involvement in a community or political campaign could be a good outlet for excess energy. A vacation gets off to a flying start.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Get better organized at work and you will be more effective. Do some comparison shopping if buying appliances. Big savings are possible! An older person has vital business information.

Normally, an endplay is designed to surrender the lead to a specific opponent. Once in while, though, declarer is in a most fortunate position—when he gives up the lead, he really doesn't care which defender wins the trick.

North's one-spade overcall effectively took East out of the auction. South had a good heart suit, and had no intention of letting the enemy buy the hand at the three-level, so he rebid his hearts and became declarer.

West cashed three top diamonds, then shifted to the king of clubs. Declarer drew trumps in two rounds, then paused to consider his chances. He knew that West held at least six clubs, three diamonds and two hearts. Therefore, there was scant chance to make an overtrick by setting up a long spade. Indeed, East was a favorite to hold the king of spades because he was marked with great length in the suit.

Declarer found a simple way to proceed—he exited with a club. If West won the club and had no spade as an exit card, he would be endplayed—either minor-suit return would present declarer with a ruff-sluff. And if he had a spade, declarer would have to fall back on a spade finesse. If East won the club, the contract would be a cinch; not only would a minor-suit return yield a ruff-sluff, but a spade would be into dummy's major tenace.

Declarer's play earned a just reward. West was indeed void in spades, and there was now no way the contract could be defeated.

Watercolor paintings on display

SNYDER — A showing of 30 prize-winning paintings from the 39th annual Texas Watercolor Society show is on display at the Scurry County Museum, Western Texas College.

Texas artists represented in the watercolor exhibit include Charlotte Seay and Georgann Harben, both of Midland; Cathy Lubke, San Angelo; and Patricia Robitalle and Marvin Moon, both of Lubbock. The Best of the Shw Award went to Hanna baugh of McAlien for "Canyon Winter."

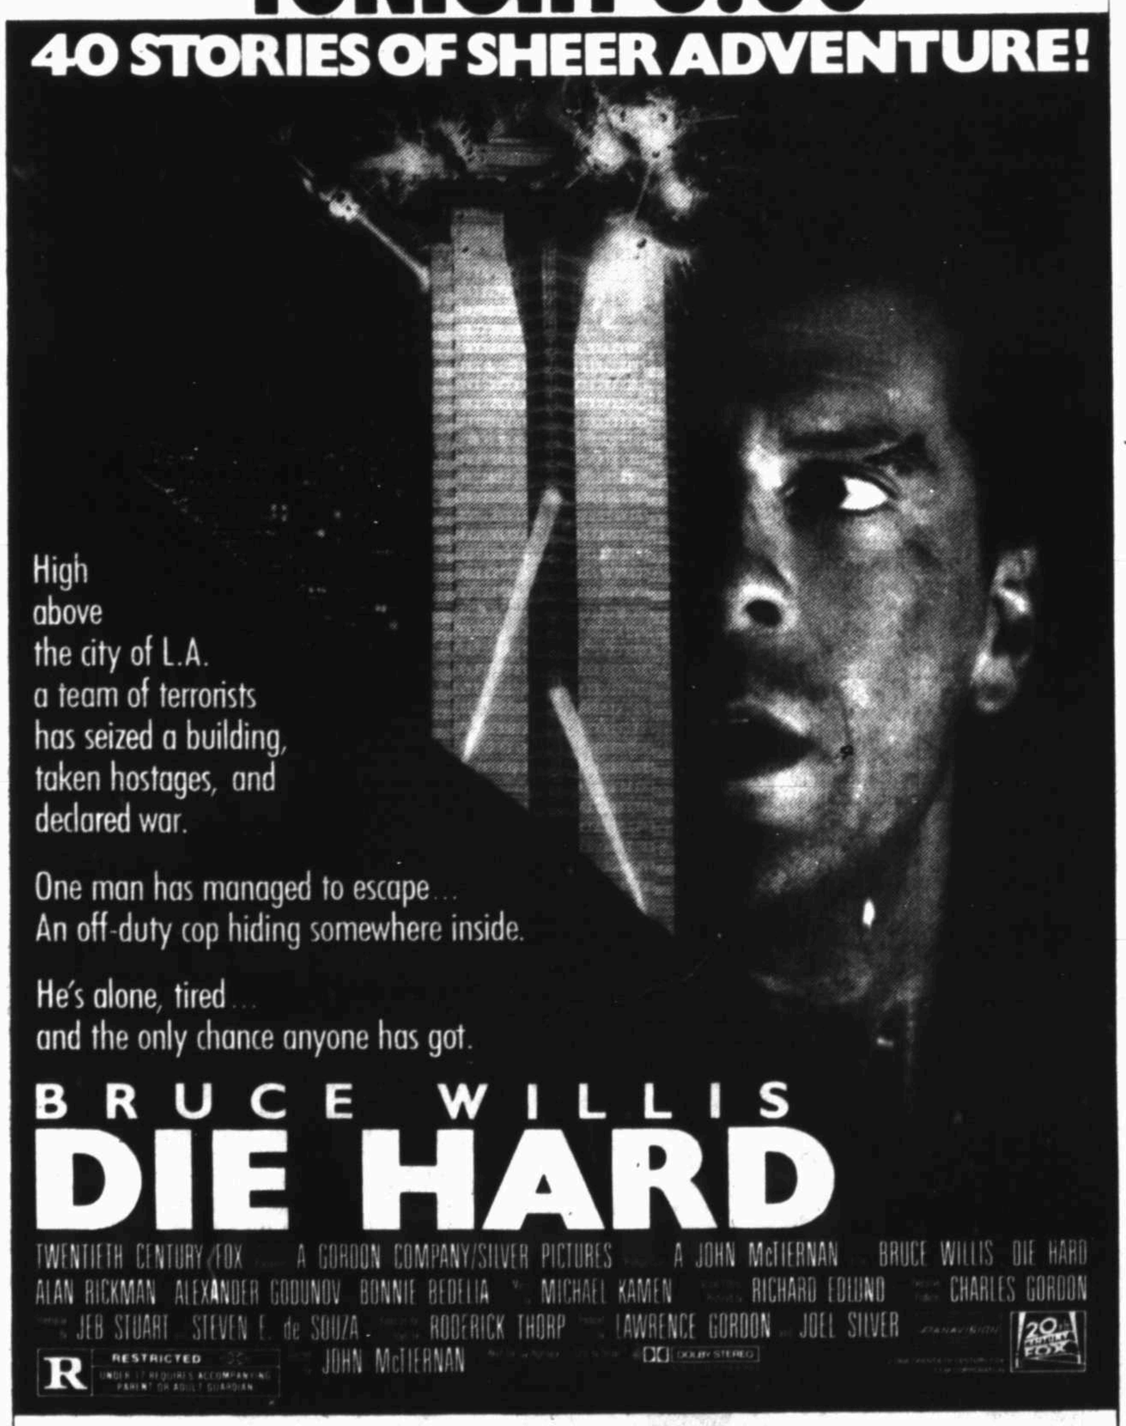

Juror for the show was Alex Powers who said the show had a depth of quality that made it as fine as any state watercolor society show he had seen.

The show is to remain at the Scurry County Museum through July 24. Then it will be exhibited in Austin, Beaumont, Waco and El Paso.

Information about the watercolor show and other museum exhibits can be obtained by calling the office at 1-573-6107. Museum hours are 1 to 4 p.m. Sundays and 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Victoria is Canada's 'flower power' city

By RICHARD CARROLL
Copley News Service

VICTORIA, Canada — "To realize Victoria," wrote Rudyard Kipling, "you must take all that the eye admires in Bournemouth, Torquay, the Isle of Wight, the Happy Valley in Hong Kong, the Doon, Sorrento, Camp's Bay, add reminiscence of the Thousand Islands, and arrange the whole around the Bay of Naples with some Himalayas for the background."

What Kipling neglected to mention is that when all of Canada is knee-deep in snow or slush, and parts of the United States are battling winter storms, Victoria is alive with flowers.

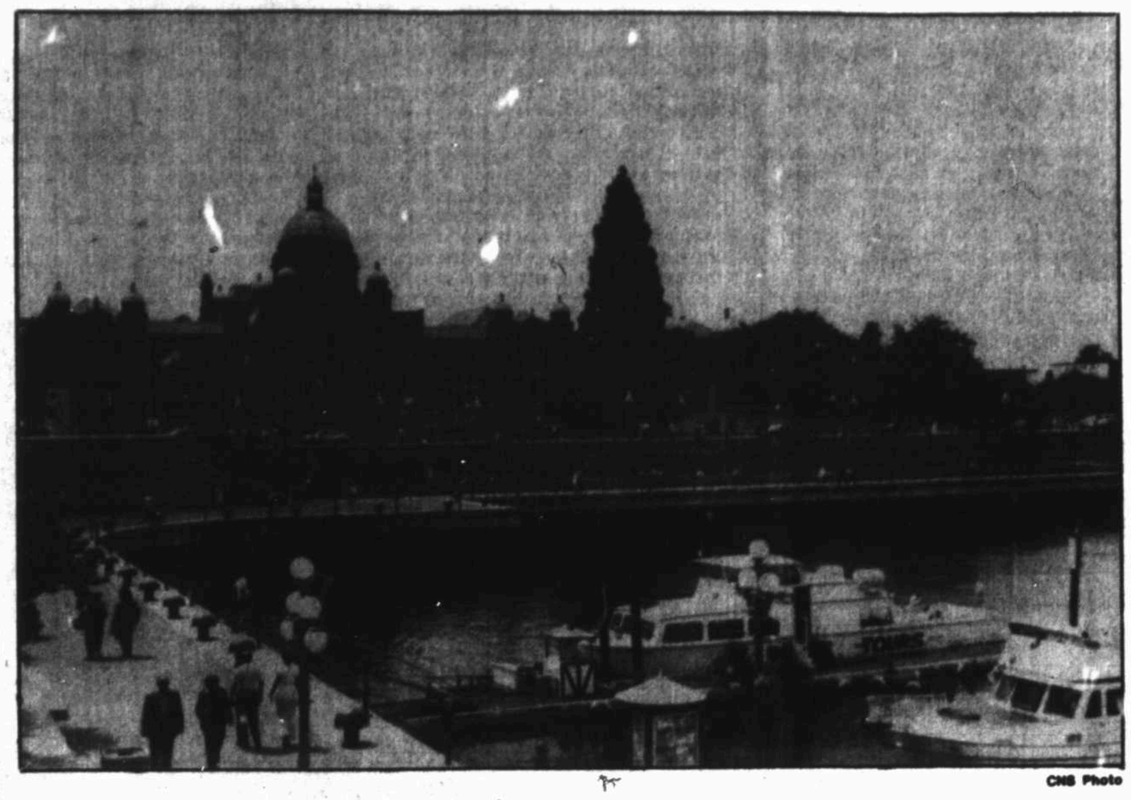

Victoria's spring comes to life in February when they trot out the Flower-mometer to count the blossoms. Residents are asked to count the flowers and blossoms in their own yards and telephone the count to a central office.

Canada's garden capital recorded more than 3 million blossoms last year, a figure that has been steadily increasing throughout the years and is British Columbia's undisputed "flower power" city.

Victoria, tucked away on the southern tip of Vancouver Island, the largest island on the Pacific coastline of North and South America, has only one snowplow, and the day after Christmas presents an international golf tournament.

The mildest weather in Canada prevails with a climate classified as Mediterranean, featuring lovely summers, comfortable and cool. The warm Japanese ocean current touches Victoria's southern shore while gentle sea breezes keep the air sparkling clean.

Bring along your walking shoes and enjoy a city that was designed for strollers, complete with rest areas where one can pause to contemplate the wonder of it all.

CNS Photo

The Parliament Buildings of Victoria, British Columbia, overlook the harbor.

Victoria lays claims to more castles, golf courses, teahouses and eccentric millionaires than any other city in Canada. The city, which has the feeling of a town, will astound you with its complexities of architecture, stately homes and tree-lined avenues dotted with towering Garry oaks. The harbor, around which the city is built, is a showcase and one of Canada's most attractive.

Another feature that makes Victoria one of the favored corners of the world is the afternoon tea ritual that highlights the English/continental ambience. Double-decker buses trundle past horse-drawn carriages while a chorus of bells happily announces the hour.

Overlooking the harbor, the magnificent landmark Empress Hotel appears as if it was plucked from downtown London and reassembled in Victoria. Adjacent to the hotel are the spacious lawns and gardens of the attractive Parliament Buildings — favorite subjects for photographers from throughout the world.

The Royal London Wax Museum, located opposite the Parliament Buildings has 116 intriguing life-size Josephine Tussaud figures, direct from, where else, London. Two blocks from the Empress is the historic Christ Church Cathedral, one of the nation's largest and adjacent to Victoria's Olde Towne.

Join one of The Greater Victoria Visitor Information Centre's personally guided city walking tours, for a quick and efficient overview. The two-hour walks originate from the center's office daily from July to September, 9:30 a.m. and 1 p.m., free of charge.

Guests see Bastion Square, the hub of Old Victoria, Waddington Alley with its original pine block cobbles, colorful Chinatown, the old Windsor Hotel and Fan Tan Alley. The authentic 130-year-old, hand-wrought copper lamps are reminiscent of Victoria's Olde Towne, an area that had its boisterous beginnings as a fur trading post and gritty gold mining boom town.

Behind the brick facades, narrow alleys and lovely inner courtyards lie tales of fortunes won and lost, of men who scrambled to the top and others who touched the brass ring for a moment or two and toppled into oblivion.

The restaurants also reflect a wide sweep of history and heritage. A dine around or refreshment stop would include the Dingle House, English Sweet Shop, London Fish & Chips, and the Captain's Palace, a mansion that has stood facing the Inner Harbor of Victoria for more than 90 years.

Allow time for Anne Hathaway's Cottage, which is a museum of Shakespearean history furnished with genuine 17th century antiques, the Art Gallery of Greater Victoria, Craigdarroch Castle, dating to 1888, the Maritime Museum and Thunderbird Park, which hosts a collection of authentic totem poles.

Fortunately, the city is not just a collection of buildings and museums. The area provides an infinite variety of sun-splashed gardens.

Walking through the streets and along the harbor, the great expanse of sky and horizon is brought into focus with 600 hanging baskets filled with seven varieties of blooming flowers gracing the antique lamp standards. A proud city symbol, the baskets are not only a floral signature but an enticement to explore the area.

Beacon Hill Park, a wild fowl sanctuary, is filled with roses. Butchart Gardens, 35 acres, is known throughout the world for the sunken gardens, glimmering ponds, manicured grounds and variety of flowers.

Other gardens of note are the Hatley Castle gardens and the semitropical Crystal Garden laced with waterfalls, fountains and streams. It is commendable that the city planners allowed space for parks, walkways and gardens. This thoughtful vision has made Victoria an area of fragrance and color.

For those who wish to explore 12,400-square-mile Vancouver Island, book the Malahat Railiner for the ride of your life. The train leaves Victoria each morning at 8:15 a.m., travels north to Coutenay arriving at 12:45 p.m., returning to Victoria at 5:40 p.m. Gray Line Tours also offers a variety of trips, including a Grand City Tour and a Pacific Seaboard Package.

If visiting Seattle, a scenic cruise to Victoria is on the Princess Marguerite. The boat operates round-trip cruises from April 30 to Labor Day. When traveling to Victoria it is best to avoid holidays and long weekends.

New Brunswick has spectacular scenery

By LOREEN ARBUS and NORM CHANDLER FOX
Copley News Service

Pssst, can you keep a secret? One of the most delightful vacation spots imaginable is right at New England's back door. It's the Canadian province of New Brunswick, which has been ignored all too often by American visitors who are busily making their way to Nova Scotia.

What makes New Brunswick so special besides its spectacular scenery are its people. Over one-third of the population is Acadian French. If you remember Longfellow's magnificent epic poem "Evangeline," these were the same Acadians who were driven out of Canada by the British and who wended their way down the Mississippi to settle ultimately in rural Louisiana. There, the word "Acadian" became corrupted to "Cajun." Meanwhile, back in New Brunswick, the Acadian French parts of the country will truly make you feel like you're in Europe.

More than half of the province is surrounded by a wild and rugged coastline, while the balance of the area borders Quebec and Maine. Spring is a marvelous time to visit New Brunswick. In April, everything turns a brilliant green and the roads are uncrowded, as are the cities.

There are two main cities in the province — and both are worth visiting. Fredericton, which sits on the banks of the St. John River, is the capital. Nicknamed the "city of stately elms," the metropolitan area consists of elegant tree-shaded streets and beautiful buildings — many of which date back to the early 19th century.

CNS graphic

Some of our favorite spots include Christ Church Cathedral, which is considered one of the best examples of decorated Gothic architecture in North America; the Beaverbrook Art Gallery that contains some exceptional Dalis, Turners, Hogarths and Gainsboroughs; the Provincial Legislature Building; and the campus of the University of New Brunswick, which was established in 1783.

We suggest you stay at the Auberge Wandlyn Inn, which has a central location, a very nice dining room, a wonderful bar and a very warm atmosphere. If you can't get into the Auberge, the second best hotel in town is the Diplomat, which has an excellent restaurant frequented by many locals.

Our favorite restaurant is Eighty-Eight Ferry, which is housed in a delightful old Victorian house. The cuisine is superb, and if it's a pleasant spring evening, you can have preprandial drinks in a gorgeous garden. Another good bet is the Luna Steakhouse, a very inexpensive Greek place with wonderful lamb, chicken and garlic in everything.

The second major city in New Brunswick happens to be its largest: St. John. This terrific city is poised on the Bay of Fundy, which is reputed to have the highest tides in the world. The oldest incorporated city in Canada, St. John was founded in 1604 by the French. At first glance, this metropolis reminded us of a combination of Boston (because of its Old World character) and San Francisco (because of its steep hills).

A recent renovation program has reclaimed old warehouses and buildings around the port. Now, St. John's waterfront is a walker's paradise. When you are down on the harbor, don't miss spending some time in the Market Square complex of boutiques, shops and restaurants. The developers used the old warehouse facades to house the modern establishments.

We like staying at the Delta Brunswick Inn that is in Brunswick Square. The other best hotel is the Hilton International St. John. This happens to be the smallest Hilton in the entire chain, and the rooms are delightfully furnished in antiques.

Among our favorite restaurants are the Continental that serves exactly that cuisine, Mallard House with its lovely atmosphere and food and the Turn of the Tide, which overlooks the harbor.

Try to browse through the shops on Prince William Street as they offer seldom-seen antiques at good prices. Also worth seeing is the Old City Market — one of the great city marketplaces.

After having seen the major cities, drive north to the Acadian coast and the town of Moncton. You are now in the center of French New Brunswick. The town has a charming Victorian flavor and lots of French-style buildings, such as Fort Beausejour. We highly recommend staying at the Hotel Beausejour, which is decorated with provincial antiques.

Our other favorite Acadian town is Caraquet, which is on a rocky seacoast that is very reminiscent of Brittany in France. Here, you'll discover a very lively waterfront with lots of seafood spots. We enjoyed just stopping at fish markets and having them boil lobsters for us that we would eat while picnicking near the wharf.

Stouffer Hotels offer low room rates for families traveling together

Copley News Service

Is it possible to take the family on a first-class vacation that's also affordable? Stouffer Hotels & Resorts says it is when you take advantage of a new plan at many of its properties throughout the continental United States, Hawaii and the Caribbean.

The "Stouffer Family Summers" program, available now through Sept. 11, allows up to four members of a family (children under 18) to share a room for as little as $69 per night. In addition, youngsters under 12 accompanied by an adult receive complimentary breakfast or dinner selected from the children's menu.

At present, 25 hotels offer the special rate. Cost is higher at some of the chain's resorts. For example, at the Stouffer Orlando Resort in Florida the family rate is $89. The package is priced at $109 at the Stouffer Pine Isle Resort at Lake Lanier Islands, Ga., near Atlanta, and at the Stouffer Poipu Beach Resort on the Hawaiian island of Kauai.

These packages are offered on a space-available basis. Reservations can be made by calling your travel agent or Stouffer Hotels and Resorts, (216)248-3600, Ext. 2836.

Yugoslavian summer

Boasting a striking diversity of scenery and culture, Yugoslavia also ranks as one of Europe's least expensive destinations for Americans. And for those of us who prefer traveling on our own, Yugotours has introduced four drive-yourself itineraries, each within a given region, that take in some of the country's key attractions.

An Adriatic coast itinerary, starting in Ljubljana, explores alpine Slovenia and the ancient towns of Istria before following the sun south along the coast to Dubrovnik and nearby resorts. A routing from Belgrade to Ohrid, a lake resort designated a UNESCO National Treasure, combines the outstanding medieval monasteries of Serbia and Macedonia with constant changes of scenery — vineyards and orchards, forests and gorges.

Two other options link inland regions to the coast. One starts in Zagreb and meanders through the spectacular forests, lakes and cascading falls of the Plitvice area and follows the Adriatic shore road from Zadar to Dubrovnik. The other begins in Belgrade, the nation's capital, and traverses Yugoslavia's Turkish region, via Sarajevo and Mostar, to Split and Dubrovnik.

More than 30 hotels in the country's most interesting cities and resorts are featured in this program, with a choice of seven categories of Avis and 16 categories of Hertz rental cars.

Prices for three-night stays in each city or resort range from $42 at the Villa Milocer in Milocer, a former summer retreat of Yugoslav royalty, to $228 per person at the Inter-Continental Hotel in Zagreb. Rates cover accommodations, based on double occupancy, and continental breakfast. Rental cars with unlimited mileage range from $18 a day for a seven-day minimum in a Renault 4, to $84 a day for a Renault Espace.

A copy of the new "Yugoslavia On Your Own" brochure and further details can be obtained from your travel agent or Yugotours, 3440 Wilshire Blvd., Suite 1206, Los Angeles, CA 90010; phone (213) 383-2438.

Washington recreation

When we travel to Washington, D.C., we know that's where politics is king. Well, look out. Recreation — jogging, swimming, aerobics, even horseback riding — is important to a growing number of visitors. Hence, the Sheraton Washington offers recreation facilities that remind one more of a dude ranch than a luxury hotel in the nation's capital. But that's how life has changed.

The 1,500-room Sheraton on Woodley Road at Connecticut Avenue, is promoting the Perrier Parcourse across the street in Rock Creek Park with its jogging path for vigorous workouts or leisurely strolls, nearby aerobic classes, bicycle rentals, golf courses, tennis courts and horseback riding. The hotel has two outdoor seasonal pools, a sauna and a fitness room with exercise equipment.

Hotel officials said they opened the fitness facilities because health-conscious travelers are seeking to keep fit while on the road, as well as at home.

Book, film catharsis for Cambodian

By JAMES REINDL

Ngor

CHICAGO (AP) — The physical torture is over for Haing S. Ngor, former doctor, Cambodian refugee, movie actor and now author and activist.

But the nightmares won't stop, and he can't forgive himself for being the only member of his immediate family to survive four hellish years under the Khmer Rouge, the Cambodian communists who seized power in 1975.

"Yes, I have survivor's guilt," he says, sitting in a luxury suite at a plush Chicago hotel.

"And every night I still have nightmares and I will never be forgiven by my memory for watching my wife die, watching my parents tortured by the Khmer Rouge, beaten by the Khmer Rouge, killed by the Khmer Rouge."

Ngor, 40, won an Academy Award in 1985 for his first acting role when he portrayed Cambodian journalist Dith Pran in "The Killing Fields." His own tale of survival under the brutal Khmer Rouge regime is told in "Haing Ngor: A Cambodian Odyssey" (Macmillan Publishing Co., $19.95), which Ngor wrote with journalist Roger Warner.

The book is an understated account of life in a country savaged first by civil war, then by Khmer Rouge occupation. Ngor writes of scrounging for edible insects to stay alive. He writes of watching his wife die in childbirth because helping her would reveal he was a doctor and mean his own certain death. And he writes of torture — his own and others'.

No embellishment could add to the horror that comes through in this straight accounting.

"They tied my upper arms to the cross and then my thighs and my feet," Ngor writes about one of the three times he was imprisoned and tortured. "Then they threw the rope attached to the top of the cross over the goalpost and hoisted me up until my feet were above the pile of wood and rice hulls. I swayed there, back and forth.

"After the guards tied all of the prisoners they went around to each pile of rice hulls and lit it with cigarette lighters.

"Rice hulls have a consistency like sawdust. Fires with rice hulls give off thick, stinging smoke and burn slowly, for days."

The war in Vietnam spilled over into Cambodia, but the country's own civil war racked what had been for centuries a sleepy, agrarian culture where government corruption was accepted.

For many Cambodians of mixed ancestry, the native, dark-skinned Khmers of the countryside seemed to pose no danger. But in 1975, the Khmer Rouge won control of Cambodia, renaming it Democratic Kampuchea. Americans were airlifted out of the country and many well-off Cambodians — such as Ngor, with his medical degree, Mercedes-Benz and merchant family background — left too.

But he stayed.

"I couldn't believe that the Khmer Rouge would do what they did," Ngor said. "I couldn't believe that the Khmer Rouge would be so brutal, so cruel. And not only me, the other educated people thought the same way."

As part of their purge, the Khmer Rouge relocated the population, emptying the cities and forcing residents into the countryside. There are estimates 2 million to 3 million Cambodians died under the Khmer Rouge.

On the day the capital, Phnom Penh, fell to the Khmer Rouge, Ngor was operating on a wounded government soldier. He left the patient to die, beginning his own struggle for survival.

Ngor's four years of hell didn't end until Vietnam invaded Cambodia and Ngor had made his way to Thailand and then to the United States and his new home in Los Angeles.

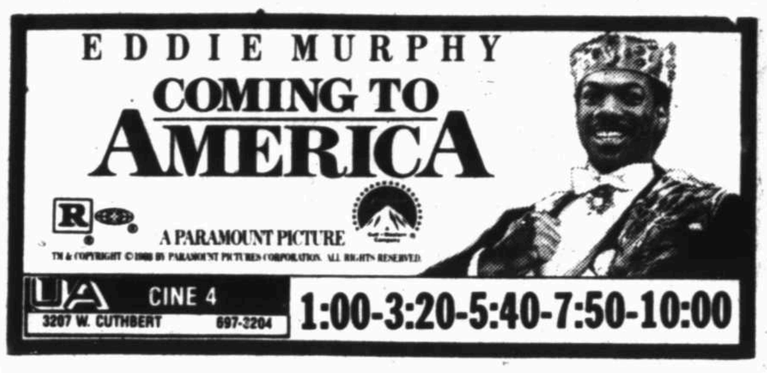

"A Cambodian Odyssey" began taking shape in a Thai refugee camp, Ngor says. It took two years to write.

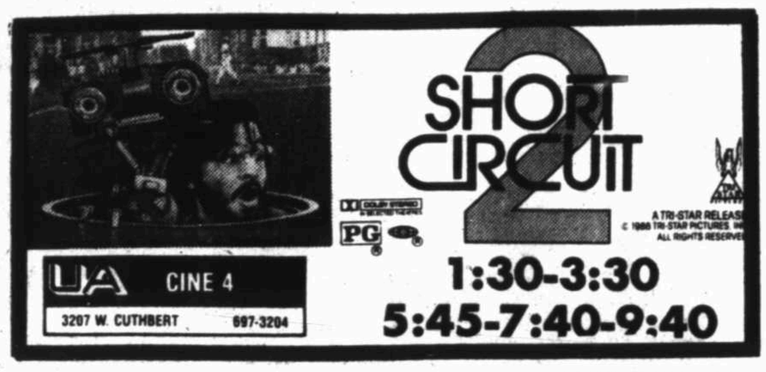

The book is a memorial to "my wife, my family...and...the people that were killed by the Khmer Rouge," Ngor says. But both the book and the movie were a catharsis as well.

Ngor says he's seen "The Killing Fields" only once. "I didn't want to watch, because it seemed like it would bring back all my memories," he says.

"Why I decided to do it, because before I crossed the border, I go to my wife's grave and say, 'Sweet, one day I will tell our story to the world.'

Ngor still lives in California and he says he's devoting some of his book and movie earnings to building hospitals for refugees along the Thailand's border with Cambodia, which remains under Vietnamese occupation.

Arts, crafts fair to be held at old Ruidoso airport

RUIDOSO, N.M. — Organizers here plan the 17th Annual Arts and Crafts Fair for July 29-31.

Sponsored by the Ruidoso Valley Chamber of Commerce, the fair will be held at the old Ruidoso Municipal Airport grounds, on Cree Meadows Drive, off of Mechem and Hull Road.

The arts and crafts of more than 130 artists and artisans will be displayed.

Applications were received from over 450 possible entrants representing New Mexico, Texas, Oklahoma, Colorado, Arizona, and California.

Oils, pastels, pottery, bronzes, wood carvings, fabrics and metal work all will be featured at the Nationally recognized show.

Cost of the show is $2 for adults and $1 for children 12 years and under.

Hours are: 4 p.m. to 9 p.m. July 29, 10 a.m. to 8 p.m. July 30 and 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. July 31.

"This weekend is truly a must for all individuals and families interested in enjoying art and a relaxing vacation in the cool pines of Ruidoso," says a release from the Ruidoso Convention and Visitors Bureau.

For more information, contact the Ruidoso Convention and Visitors Bureau at 1-505-257-7395 or write to: Ruidoso CVB, P.O. Box 698, Ruidoso, N.M. 88345.
