WASHINGTON (AP) — Alfred Kahn, the Carter administration's chief inflation fighter, said Wednesday that if price regulation is causing a shortage of unleaded gasoline, motorists face a choice of gas lines, rationing or higher prices.

Harriman Doubts Russians Ready to Sneak N-Assault On United States

MOSCOW (UPI) — American elder statesman Averell Harriman met for 90 minutes with Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev Wednesday and said anyone who thinks the Soviet leader is preparing a first strike nuclear attack on the United States is paranoid.

"There's no man in the world who has a greater desire to do all that he can to prevent nuclear war," Harriman told the joint Soviet-U.S. Trade and Economic Council.

He said Brezhnev understands that those who have responsibility over nuclear weapons have an obligation to prevent their use.

"This idea that he is planning a first strike or those who say that are paranoid," said the 87-year-old Harriman.

Harriman, a former ambassador to the Soviet Union and a special envoy of several presidents, said he saw first hand how the Soviet Union and the United States worked together during World War II to defeat Nazi Germany.

"We were able in spite of our differences and in spite of our difficulties to work together," he said.

"It is unthinkable to me that our two nations can't work together in trade."

The former New York governor said trade should not be linked to irrelevant matters and added, "You can't change trade in the way you can change a smile."

"Trade is too important to each of our countries... It isn't a gift from the United States to the Soviet Union," he said. "It is a mutually useful interchange between our two nations."

"It is an outrage, after all these years, that we don't have normal trade relations with the second-greatest country in the world," Harriman told several hundred businessmen and Soviet trade representatives. "It doesn't make any sense."

Harriman added that the United States should not stand in the way of Soviet oil and gas development. In August, President Carter imposed export license requirements on U.S.-made oil and gas production equipment and technology. "They are going to do it and we aren't going to stop them," he said.

Accused Dual Slayer Wins Plea Delay

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Former Supervisor Dan White, described by his lawyer as in a "prolonged state of shock," heard a judge read charges Wednesday accusing him of murdering the mayor and a supervisor. He was granted a week's delay in entering a plea.

A report in the Long Island, N.Y., newspaper Newsday, meanwhile, said White told police in a purported confession that he killed Mayor George Moscone because the mayor refused to reappoint him to the board and then killed Supervisor Harvey Milk because "Harvey smirked at me."

White, a 32-year-old former policeman and fireman who could face the gas chamber if convicted, stood quietly in the courtroom packed with reporters and family during the brief proceedings.

Municipal Court Judge R.J. Reynolds granted the delay after attorney Douglas Schmidt, hired since White's first court appearance one week ago, said he needed extra time to consult with his client before the arraignment could be completed.

White's only statement in court came when the judge asked him if he realized he was waiving his right to a speedy trial. He answered in a clear voice: "I do, your honor."

Outwardly, White appeared calm. He wore an orange prison jumpsuit and stood without handcuffs next to his attorney in the small, heavily guarded courtroom. Spectators were frisked and had to walk through a metal detector.

Moscone and Milk were shot to death at City Hall on Nov. 27, shortly after White entered the mayor's office to ask for his job back. He had resigned Nov. 10, saying he could not support his family on a supervisor's $9,600 annual salary.

The Newsday report quoted unnamed police sources as saying that White told police, "I asked him (Moscone) why the

Mrs. Gandhi Named Chairman Of Party

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Former Prime Minister Indira Gandhi was unanimously elected chairman of the "Indira Congress" party she formed last January after bolting the original Congress Party. She ran unopposed.

Mrs. Gandhi, 61, now officially heads the largest opposition party and can become opposition leader in the lower house of Parliament if she chooses.

Her party controls 75 seats in the 544-seat lower house, far fewer than the 304 of Prime Minister Morarji Desai's ruling Janata Party but more than the 66 seats held by the old Congress Party.

The former prime minister, who lost her government and her own seat in the March 1977 general election, returned to Parliament last month after victory in a special election in Chikmagalur, southern India.

ANOTHER CONTINUANCE IN WHITE ARRAIGNMENT — Atty. Douglas Schmidt, left, who represents Dan White, the ex-policeman and city supervisor on charges of murdering Mayor George Moscone and Supervisor Harvey Milk, is searched by a sheriff's deputy in the Hall of Justice in San Francisco on Wednesday before entering the courtroom. White's arraignment was delayed for a second time when Schmidt told the court he needed more time. (AP Laserphoto)

White would not reappoint White and he said because it would be bad politics.

Newsday said its sources disclosed these other details of White's alleged statement: The discussion moved into Moscone's inner office, where Moscone poured a drink. White told police that when the mayor refused White's request again, "I shot him."

White saw a Milk aide in the hallway and was reminded that Milk, the city's first openly gay supervisor, had told the city attorney to "look for a way not to reappoint White."

White then met with Milk and "he told Harvey that he had asked Moscone for his old job back. He said, 'Harvey shot him."

WE'RE A SOFT TOUCH FOR BUSINESS

FIVE-STAR SERVICE FOR DINING SERVICE

In an article by Bob Greene in the Travel Section of Long Island's Newsday, 10 major airlines were rated for their First Class dining service. Only Braniff received the five-star rating. Mr. Greene said, "In my experience, the domestic airline that consistently serves the best food is Braniff."

A SOFT LEATHER SEAT IN BRANIFF FIRST CLASS IS JUST 20% MORE THAN A SOFT LEATHER SEAT IN BRANIFF COACH.

Soft and wide natural leather seats are a special touch only Braniff offers.

Paul Goldberger, Design Editor of the New York Times, said, "The rich texture of the leather and the soft colors of the walls seem to help to reduce boredom and fatigue. They even smell good."

Coach Plus Leather Seats In Coach Plus — Plenty of room in Coach to seat people traveling together and still put an empty seat between them, except at peak travel times.

• Fold down center seat backs which become tables between travelers when the seat is not occupied; armrests that fold out of the way for more leg room.

• Advance seat selection on the flight out, all connecting Braniff flights and the return trip. And more seats to choose from because the Coach cabin is not divided into sections.

Braniff is a soft touch for business in First Class and Coach.

Woman's Jonestown Vigil Ends As Sister's Death Confirmed

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — The waiting has ended for Rosa Polk with a telephone call from the State Department confirming the death of her sister in Jonestown, Guyana.

"They called me and said they were sorry to identify the body of my sister," Mrs. Polk said. "I was so glad to hear that."

Mrs. Polk's vigil began last month as the first news of a bizarre murder-suicide Nov. 18 at the People's Temple commune in South America reached her.

Her sister, Isabel Davis, 53, of Los Angeles had gone to live in the religious commune in September, a month after the sudden death of her son, who also was a member of the People's Temple.

In a letter dated Nov. 7 the last one Mrs. Polk was to receive from her sister, Mrs. Davis described the camp as "a paradise ... a gorgeous place," adding, "I just love it here."

Less than two weeks later, the Rev. Jim Jones the cult's leader would lead hundreds of his followers in a "last communion," directing them to drink cyanide-laced Kool Aid. Some including Jones, died of gunshot wounds.

Witnesses said Jones ordered the mass suicide-murder ritual after cult members shot and killed Rep. Leo J. Ryan, D-Calif., and four other persons shortly after they had left the commune on a fact-finding mission.

State Department Tells Of Mass-Suicide Threat

WASHINGTON (AP) — State Department officials in Guyana received direct warnings last summer from the Peoples Temple cult that its members might commit mass suicide but the department says the threat was dismissed as a "psychological ploy."

The U.S. consular officer in Guyana, Richard McCoy, told his State Department colleagues that he remembers the precise words of the warning: "We will all give up and die. We will all commit suicide."

Department officials, instead of acting to prevent the mass murder-suicide, were cultivating a close relationship with cult representatives.

The State Department has strongly defended the way in which McCoy performed his duties as the chief liaison between the embassy and the Peoples Temple.

Far from being an intimate of the Jonestown cult, the department claimed, McCoy relayed to Guyanese police officials allegations of beatings, the holding of individuals against their will, smuggling of firearms, the presence of armed guards at Jonestown and rumors concerning plans for mass suicide.

The department also contends that the "working relationship" between McCoy and the Peoples Temple became difficult to maintain because of McCoy's contacts with the Guyanese police.

According to a department statement Tuesday, McCoy conducted himself in Guyana "in a manner completely consonant with the highest standards of professional competence and ethical behavior."

Mrs. Davis' name was not on the first list of Jonestown victims giving her family cause to hope that she was one of the scores who officials originally believed escaped into the jungle.

The death count eventually jumped to 911 however after officials found bodies stacked three and four deep.

"We've just been waiting to hear all this time," Mrs. Polk said. "We knew there was a good chance she was among the casualties."

Mrs. Polk said there will be no family service for her sister a divorcee with another son in Chicago.

"The family has decided at the suggestion of the State Department, to let them take care of the cremation and let it go at that," Mrs. Polk said.

She also said authorities were unable to say how Mrs. Davis died, since they could not perform an autopsy because of the decomposed state of the body.

"I'm willing to accept the fact that she is gone and my knowing how will not help anything," Mrs. Polk said. "We'll leave it in the hands of Almighty God."

"I think this is going to be my only statement on this. I want the whole matter to end here."

AN EDITORIAL:

Bear That Walks Like Soldier

WHILE MUCH of this nation's attention is centered on the fight against inflation, a knowledgeable group of military experts sees big trouble on another front.

For months now, current and past military leaders have been sending up warning signals over the continued buildup of the Russian Army and Navy, including the nuclear missile capability of both services.

The latest alert was issued only the past week when the prestigious Atlantic Council said that the Soviet Navy is "now capable of seriously interfering" with the NATO powers' use of the seas.

COUPLED WITH the renewed Russian interest in sending combat type planes into Cuba, the latest report should be of grave concern to every citizen of the U.S.

In making its report on the Red naval buildup, particularly in such areas as the Mediterranean and Indian Ocean, the panel of experts, which includes former Pentagon experts, warned that NATO powers were failing to recognize the magnitude of the Soviet threat.

As for the U.S., Leonard Sullivan Jr., a former top Pentagon analyst who directed the two-year study, says Washington should be spending at least $2 billion more on its naval needs than Congress voted this year.

THE STUDY, "Securing The Seas," urges a quick and at the same time long-range buildup of U.S. Naval power.

Sullivan says the U.S. should build up to 600 ships, about 75 more than provided for in the Carter administration's long-range program. With proper coordination, Sullivan argues, the Allies could contribute another 600 ships "on our side" to contest a Soviet fleet expected to stabilize at about 775 ships.

THE NAVY STUDY, along with those of continued Russian massing of tanks, nuclear weapons and men along Soviet borders in Eastern Europe, says something to those who are close observers of Moscow.

Recently, Gen. David Jones, the current Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, says "there is no escaping the fact that the Soviets for years have continued to outman, out-gun, outdevelop and outbuild and out-deploy us in the most meaningful military categories, all the while shortening our qualitative lead in many important areas."

Gen. Jones has expressed "deep concern" over what he described as the Soviet Union's growing military capacity "far out of proportion to any rational calculation of their defense needs." In the idea of strategic balance, he adds, the U.S. "can be likened to skating on thin ice with the ice getting thinner."

This is not some wild-eyed "hawk" talking, but a man who in the past has been at times accused of being too conservative in his views. Truly, the U.S. must look to its future security. Those who think Communist Russia has given up its dream of world conquest are indeed living in a dream world which could quickly turn into a nightmare.

AN EDITORIAL:

Somoza Under Mettle Strain

THE INTERNAL challenge to the Somoza regime in Nicaragua provides President Carter with the best opportunity since he took office almost two years ago to implement his highly touted international human rights policy.

But Carter is frittering away his chance to exercise the bold leadership needed, displaying instead a preference for relatively timid half-measures that have produced no visible results to date.

The failure of the White House to take firm action soon could lead to precisely what the U.S. fears most in Nicaragua—a few government influenced if not dominated by Marxists and terrorists.

That outcome is possible because of the fragmented domestic opposition to the leadership of President Anastasio Somoza.

BECAUSE MOST of Nicaragua's anti-Somoza political leadership is concentrated within the Broad Opposition Front, the country's next generation of leaders could well come from its ranks.

BOF is represented by a moderate coalition of 13 civil, labor and political organizations. Many of its adherents are committed to establishment of a democracy while the advocates of Marxism and terrorism are concentrated within the armed opposition, known as the Sandinista Liberation Front.

SLF has threatened a new round of civil war in the streets that almost succeeded in the five regional cities surrounding Managua, the country's heavily fortified capital.

The Carter administration's most forceful actions to head off such a military solution included recent behind-the-scenes political maneuvering to press the International Monetary Fund to twice postpone action on Somoza's request for a $20 million loan, leading to withdrawal of the request.

THE U.S. IS withholding all military aid to Nicaragua and has frozen $6 million in economic assistance earmarked for the Central American country. But Washington has resisted suggestions that it apply pressure on Israel to halt its arms sales to Nicaragua.

Carter could display this country's displeasure with the Somoza government by withdrawing our Military Assistance Advisory Group of approximately a dozen men. Economic sanctions would further isolate Somoza.

Last but not least the U.S. could replace its limp, flabby rhetoric with outspoken opposition to the type of government that has misruled Nicaragua for the past 45 years.

ART BUCHWALD:

Jimmy Carter's Image Is Sound As A Dollar

WASHINGTON—The President pushed a button, and Gerry Raftshoon immediately showed up in the Oval Office.

"Gerry," the President asked, "what are you going to do today to improve my image?" Raftshoon was stumped. It was the first day since he took on the job as President Carter's image-maker that he hadn't come up with an idea.

"Maybe we could fly over New York State in a helicopter and see the snow damage," Raftshoon said.

"Was there much snow damage in New York?" "No," Raftshoon said, "but that would be good for your image. I can see the headline now: 'President Inspects Lack of Snow Damage in New York State. Says His Anti-Snow Policy Is Paying Off.'"

"I THINK YOU'RE reaching, Gerry. Isn't there anything I could do to dramatize my fight against inflation?"

Raftshoon looked out the window. Suddenly he said, "I think I have it. Why don't you throw a silver dollar across the Potomac to show how much faith you have in our monetary system? The last one who did it was George Washington."

The President thought about it a moment. "Can you really throw a dollar across the Potomac? I thought the Washington silver dollar legend was discredited by Jack Anderson in one of his columns."

"Anderson printed the story based on the fact that his source used a paper dollar. Obviously you can't throw a paper dollar over the Potomac."

"BUT," THE PRESIDENT said, "if you made a dollar into a paper airplane, and the wind was blowing right, you could sail it across the Potomac. I learned that at Annapolis."

A kid asked his dad if he saw the stork that brought him.

"Just the bill, son," the father retorted, "just his bill."

"It's too risky, Mr. President. If you sailed a paper dollar across the Potomac as an airplane, and it nose-dived into the water, the dollar would sink on every money market in the world. I think we should stay with a silver dollar."

President Carter said, "There's one thing wrong with your plan, Gerry. The silver dollar is out of circulation—the new dollars are much smaller, and if I'm going to throw one I will need all the weight I can get."

"We could have the Treasury make a special silver dollar with tiny jets in it which could give it enough lift to get to the other side."

"THAT WOULD BE cheating, Gerry, and I promised the people I would never lie to them. We have to have someone else try to throw it over secretly, to see if it can actually be done."

"I don't want to go out there on the banks of the river with all the press covering me and fail to do it."

"Good thinking, Mr. President. We could get someone from the Washington Redskins to try it out first. The question is, should it be Joe Theismann or Billy Kilmer?"

"They both could be sacked," the President said. "Can't we find someone in the government?"

"What about Mike Blumenthal? He's secretary of the Treasury. If the press finds out about it, he could always say he was testing the new American silver dollar to see if it would fly."

"ALL RIGHT. Get back to me and let me know if it's possible."

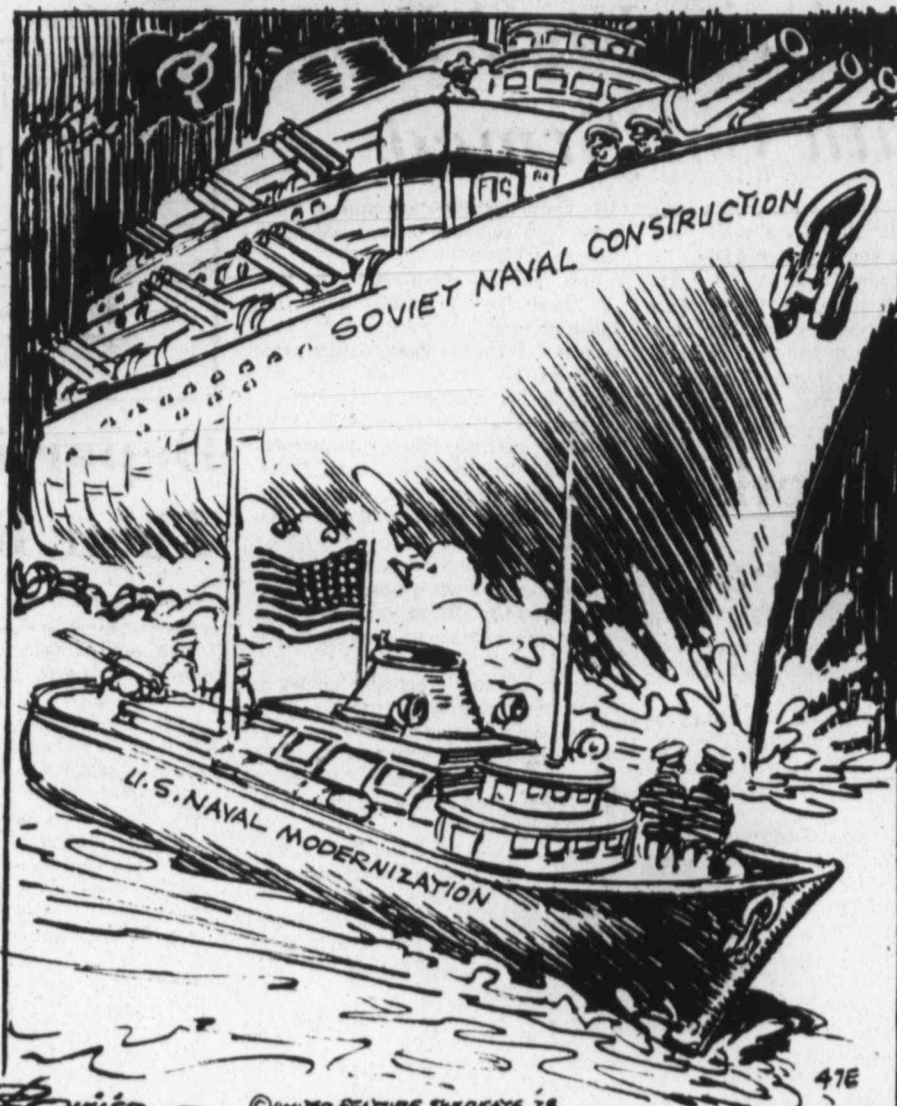

Raftshoon returned a few days later, shaken.

"Blumenthal threw a silver dollar with all his might and it only went halfway across the Potomac."

"How did he explain it?"

"He showed me the labor statistics for November. It seems the dollar will only go half as far as it did 10 years ago."

ROWLAND EVANS AND ROBERT NOVAK:

Pug's Nay Shushed

WASHINGTON—President Carter was spared a major embarrassment when his prospective offer of a high Commerce Department job to defeated South Carolina senatorial nominee Charles E. (Pug) Ravenel was rejected by Ravenel.

The embarrassment: top-level resignations at Commerce.

Suffering pangs of conscience for having persuaded Ravenel to undertake the Senate race against Republican Sen. Strom Thurmond, with long negative odds, Carter ordered Commerce Secretary Juanita Kreps to offer Ravenel the post of undersecretary of Commerce when Thurmond beat him with 56 percent of the vote.

But Ravenel, who originally wanted to run for governor this year, had other ideas for his future. In a one-hour conversation with Mrs. Kreps several days ago, he made it clear that he was not interested in any job in the Carter administration.

The specific offer of the second highest job in Commerce was not formally made.

What Carter did not know is that inserting Ravenel at that high level would have triggered the resignations of two or three top Commerce Department officials understandably upset at the prospect of working for a defeated politician with experience limited to stockbroking on Wall Street and political campaigning.

The expected resignations would have included at least two assistant secretaries under consideration for the about-to-be-vacated undersecretary post: Jerry Jasnowski and Frank Weil.

Ravenel originally wanted to run for governor, the job he had all but wrapped up in 1974 when he was ruled off the ballot for lack of residency requirements.

Carter and Vice President Mondale talked him into the Senate race, preserving the governor race for Richard Riley, a major Carter supporter in the 1976 presidential campaign and a big winner on Nov. 7.

THE UNANNOUNCED DRIVE for the Republican presidential nomination by George Bush is moving into a new phase, with Bush beating the bushes for conservative support to shore up his image on the Republican right.

Target No. 1 of the aggressive Bush forces is Harry Dent, one of former President Nixon's top political operatives in the White House and one-time counsel for the Republican National Committee.

Efforts to enlist the support of Dent, a key Southern Republican strategist in the Nixon-Ford years, have been made on Bush's behalf by Dick Herman, former Nebraska state chairman, and Tom Lias, a top Bush aide at the Republican National Committee when Bush was chairman.

Dent's answer: a polite no. Now practicing law in Columbia, S.C., Dent is avoiding 1980 politics for the time being and even disavows any intention of joining forces with his old friend John B. Connally, another expected 1980 contender.

THE PENDING SHAKEUP of the crucial House defense appropriations subcommittee, long the private preserve of retiring Rep. George Mahon of Texas, is shaking defense-oriented congressional leaders to the roots, with pressure now being applied to get Rep. Bob Michel of Illinois on the panel.

Mahon and three other hawkish Democrats who for years have dominated the subcommittee—by far the most important in setting the annual defense budget—will not be back next January.

But Republicans who favor a strong U.S. defense are worried even more by the defeat of Republican Rep. Elford Cederberg of Michigan on Nov. 7.

That puts Rep. Silvio Conte of Massachusetts, a liberal Republican who often votes for spending cuts and against new weapons programs, in line for a place on the subcommittee.

UNDER A LONG-term arrangement, the ranking Republican on the parent Appropriations Committee sits on the defense subcommittee as an ex-officio member—with the right to vote.

With Cederberg out, the ranking committee member is Illinois Rep. Bob Michel, but as assistant Republican floor leader Michel may be disqualified. The next senior Republican is Conte.

If the House Republicans don't change the long-established practice that appears to bar Michel from the subcommittee, the overall committee lineup of both Democrats and Republicans will be drastically tilted away from its traditional pro-defense posture when President Carter sends up his new defense budget.

Hard-line Republicans in the House, with help from other party leaders and Washington's extensive defense lobby, have sent an SOS to two formidable ex-members of the House: Gerald Ford and Melvin Laird.

Between them, Ford and Laird spend almost half a century guiding the nation's military fortunes as members of the subcommittee.

FOUR DAYS later, at 1 o'clock, Minister Fish and I in his bedroom listened to Adolf Hitler broadcasting from Berlin's Kroll Opera House. We sat there an hour. By 2 o'clock Hitler had not declared war on the United States.

Minister Fish bet me a dollar Hitler would declare war on us before 2:15. Two-fifteen came and went. Hitler declared war on the United States at 2:23. I won the bet.

The world has turned over many times since that day. Those who were lost to us at Pearl Harbor have been gone 37 years.

But you will find a bronze plaque to them on the mole at Pearl Harbor. It reads: "May God make His face to shine on them in lasting peace."

JAY HARRIS:

So, Who Cares?

LORI COX, A pretty teenager from Arizona, and Sen. Walter Mengden, a state Republican from Harris county, have something in common. One is fighting to put more patriotism into the public schools. The other is seeking to permit a silent prayer or a moment of meditation in the classroom. For each, incredibly, it has been an uphill battle.

For Lori, patriotism was more than a word. So, according to America's Future, a non-profit educational organization, she asked her high school to reinstate the Pledge of Allegiance at the opening of each class day.

According to America's Future, she not only was discouraged by some school people, by some classmates, but also, she asserted, by some state legislators.

BUT SHE WOULD not take "no" for an answer.

At last reports, Lori had won her fight for a state law providing that all public schools in Arizona allow 15 seconds a day for recitation of the Pledge for those who so choose.

Lori now is campaigning for a Congressional designation of a National Patriotism Week. This would encourage both primary and secondary schools to provide week-long studies each February in the patriotic heritage of America.

Lori's fight, according to America's Future, was not an easy one. Early in her campaign, the American flag was stolen. Another time, the flagpole lines were cut. Some critics said the flag was nothing more than a piece of cloth.

LORI COX IS now a student at Arizona State University. She can look back, and ahead, and see both sides of the issue.

In Lori's words, to those who opposed her efforts, she "answered that our flag does represent all of us. It represents choice. Either you participate or you do not participate. That is freedom. So if I stand alone in my classroom to recite the Pledge of Allegiance, then I will stand alone."

Today, she is continuing her efforts to restore pride in this nation, especially among young people.

"Today," she says, "We often hear the question 'Who cares?' But what if our forefathers 200 years ago had said 'Who cares?' Where would we be today? And where will we be 200 years from now if we fail to work and protect the ideals upon which our nation was built?"

SEN. MENGDEN can sympathize with Lori Cox. He has fought an at times frustrating fight of his own.

And come January, he will resume it. Sen. Mengden has pre-filed legislation for the next legislative session to permit silent prayer or meditation in public schools in Texas.

According to an item from the Houston legislator's office, SB7 provides that the person in charge of each public school classroom in Texas may allow a brief period of silent prayer or meditation with the participation of all consenting students.

The bill further provides that this period may not be conducted as a religious service or exercise and says that no disciplinary action can be imposed on anyone not wishing to participate.

"This bill provides an opportunity for a moment of silent reflection on the anticipated activities of the day or, for those so disposed, on a religious theme," Sen. Mengden says.

THE SENATOR already anticipates that his proposal will come under fire, from several fronts. After all, it has been up twice before in the Legislature and got lost in the shuffle.

The measure, he says, is "completely Constitutional. A three-member federal court upheld the constitutionality of a similar law in Massachusetts in Gaines v. Anderson, 421 F. Supp. 337 (1976), and the Texas Attorney General's office issued an opinion in Letter Advisory 128, dated March 28, 1977, that this bill was constitutional."

Sen. Mengden's measure was approved by the Senate in 1977 by a 27 to 4 margin, but was killed in the House Public Education Committee. In 1975, an almost identical measure passed the House, 112 to 24, but was killed in the Senate Education Committee.

In view of this, the Houston man says he thinks "now is the time" to get his measure through both bodies at the same time.

NO DOUBT the senator will have a lot of support. But, he will also have a lot of opposition.

For some reason today, anything that smacks of patriotism, prayer or freedom is questioned by those who claim their "rights" are being violated.

Never mind that no one has to recite the Pledge of Allegiance, if they do not wish to do so. Never mind that the moment of prayer or meditation is silent and that those who wish can think of anything they care to. Never mind that others "rights" may be involved—even a majority. It's still a "no-no."

Taking note of this, Sen. Mengden argues that his legislation does not trespass on anyone's rights. "There is no way that any reasonable person, including any reasonable atheist, can be against this bill."

"During the period of silent prayer or meditation, students are completely free to think of absolutely anything in the world. It is a good bill and has been endorsed by the Texas Association of Secondary School Principals."

People like Lori Cox and Sen. Mengden deserve the support of those who still believe that America, and the Flag and Pledge of Allegiance, Prayer, and a free choice, mean something. "Who cares?" Do you?

Public Officials Scorn Carter Wage Guidelines

By The Associated Press
Ohio and Illinois aren't the only places where lawmakers have ignored President Carter's voluntary wage guidelines. City and state officials in scattered areas of the country have approved or are considering pay boosts for themselves far in excess of what Carter urged as part of his anti-inflation program.

An Associated Press spot check showed that the raises generally range from several hundred to several thousand dollars. Some were approved by previous legislative sessions. In most cases, the increases are the first in a number of years.
Carter has called for a general limit of 7 percent on annual increases in wage and fringe benefits combined.

The president's chief inflation fighter, Alfred Kahn, has announced that he is telegraphing each legislature, asking it to abide by the voluntary wage standards.

Kahn, chairman of the Council on Wage and Price Stability, said that increases approved by the Ohio and Illinois legislatures were outrageous and irresponsible. He appealed to members of the public to put pressure on lawmakers to keep increases down. "It's up to them to scream," he said. "These people were elected by them."

The Illinois Legislature approved pay hikes for members totaling 40 percent over four years. The lawmakers also okayed a 16 percent boost in the governor's salary and a 32 percent increase for most other top officials.

David Gilbert, press secretary for Gov. James R. Thompson, said the governor is not considering calling a special session to revoke the increases. "The burden of any further action falls on the legislature, not the governor," Gilbert said. William A. Redmond, the speaker of the house, said a special session "just seems unlikely."

The city council in Providence, R.I., is considering boosting members' salaries, now at $3,000 a year, by 19.1 percent effective Jan. 1. Supporters of the move note that the councilmen have not had a raise for eight years.

Kahn, asked to comment on the plan, rejected that argument. "There is no allowance for catching up for past years," said Kahn, noting that the proposal — which may be voted on today — includes plans for future raises as well as the immediate hike.

Providence Mayor Vincent A. Cianci Jr. has warned that he will veto the pay proposal in its present form. Cianci also has said he will not accept a pay increase himself.

The Metropolitan Nashville (Tenn.) Council, meanwhile, has approved a plan to boost the mayor's salary from $25,000 to $50,000 a year — a 100 percent increase. The proposal also calls for a 100 percent boost in the vice mayor's salary, now $4,200 a year, and a 50 percent boost in council members' pay, now $3,600 a year.

Salaries had been frozen for 15 years under the city charter, but voters in last month's election approved a charter amendment lifting the ceiling. The new levels were recommended by the Civil Service Commission.

"The people voted on it and the Civil Service Commission recommended it," Councilman Philip Sadler said. "I know the constituents in my district won't judge me by how I vote on this pay raise. They will judge me by my record and will ask 'Is he honest, decent and has he done the things he should have done?'" Sadler said.

The Washington Committee on Salaries, including representatives of business, labor, the state bar association and public and private sector personnel offices, recently recommended an 11 percent pay boost for the state's eight elected officials and a 22.5 percent hike for legislators.

Gov. Dixy Lee Ray, to whom the recommendations were forwarded, accused the commission of "colossal stupidity" and added: "They've got rocks in their heads." The governor gets $55,000 a year; the legislators get $9,000, which will go to $9,800 Jan. 1.

No Balk Called By Inflation Chief On Rose's Salary Hike

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter's chief inflation adviser passed up a chance Wednesday to criticize the 200 percent pay increase given Pete Rose who has become the highest paid player in baseball.

Carter's new anti-inflation guidelines attempt to limit wage increases to 7 percent a year.

"I do not want to be in the business of fixing Pete Rose's salary," Alfred Kahn the chairman of the Council on Wage and Price Stability said at a White House briefing on another matter.

Rose signed a four-year contract with the Philadelphia Phillies that will pay him $800,000 a year for four years a total of $3.2 million.

Compared with the $265,000 he was earning annually from his previous employer, the Cincinnati Reds the start third baseman will receive a pay increase in percentage terms of slightly more than 200 percent.

Kahn said, however that Carter's guidelines "permit merit increases." He said that as long as the salary increases of all Philadelphia players as a group do not exceed the guideline, then a violation wouldn't occur.

"We're asking groups of employees to stay in the standards," he said. "We are not in the business of setting individual wages."

But he joked that "since I'm not a Philadelphia rooter, it may be I'll be particularly tough on the Phillies."

The Carter guidelines are voluntary and the administration lacks authority to force anyone to stay within them.

Mexico Cave Ordeal Ends For Student

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — A University of Tennessee student was listed in good condition Wednesday in a McAllen, Texas, hospital after spending 60 hours trapped in a cave in Mexico with a broken leg.

Chris Kerr, 22, of Germantown, Tenn., said he suffered the leg injury in a fall Friday while he and three other men were exploring deep inside the El Rinco Cavern near Ciudad Victoria, Mexico.

"We were about 3,000 feet into the cave when I got hurt," Kerr said Wednesday in a telephone interview with the Knoxville News-Sentinel. "It's funny, but the guy who knew the cave was at the back."

"I was waiting for him to catch up, and was looking right along the lip of the pit. I thought I saw some footprints and was right along the edge when I started sliding. I fell about 20 or 30 feet."

Kerr said the other members of his party made him as comfortable as possible before leaving to get help. The U.S. Air Force flew a rescue mission to the cave site and Mexican soldiers had to use drills, hammers and a dynamite charge about 50 feet from where he lay to make a hole large enough to get him out, he said.

"It was so steep and the passages were so narrow that a litter couldn't pass through," he said. "We had some ropes and they pulled at me but it took seven hours to move 70 feet."

Mayors Vow Wage Limit Try

WASHINGTON (AP) — Mayors of 800 cities pledged Wednesday to try to follow President Carter's voluntary wage and price guidelines, drawing praise from the administration's top inflation adviser.

It's "a source of enormous satisfaction to us," said Alfred Kahn, chairman of the Council on Wage and Price Stability.

"I do think public officials have a particularly strong obligation to set an example in these times when we're asking everybody to comply," he added.

Mayor John Rousakis of Savannah, Ga., who is president of the National League of Cities, presented the signed pledge to Kahn at a White House ceremony.

He acknowledged, in response to a question, that when there are violations of the guidelines in city governments, enforcement will be a problem because "we can't throw anyone in jail."

A number of city and state officials have approved or are considering pay boosts for themselves that are far in excess of Carter's wage guideline.

The Illinois legislature, for example, approved 40 percent pay hikes for its members, which Kahn and Carter previously have criticized.

Mayor Rousakis said cities "have to hold the line on inflation because we can't keep raising taxes to pay for rising

He said that insofar as it is legal, the 800 cities will try to refrain from purchasing goods and services from firms that fail to certify compliance with Carter's wage and price guidelines.

He said trying to keep union pay increases for city workers within the 7 percent wage guideline "is going to be tough."

Burleson Describes McCrory 'Fears' About Davis

HOUSTON (AP) — A hostile defense witness testified Wednesday that David McCrory was shaking and "scared totally to death" when he told him Aug. 16 of his "problems" with millionaire Cullen Davis.

"He said he was in trouble ... and he didn't know how he was going to get out of it," said Fort Worth karate instructor Pat Burleson.

"I chastised him for being involved with Davis."

He said he told McCrory he did not want to hear the specifics of his involvement because "I was sick and tired of his problems with Cullen Davis."

Burleson's comments came on cross-examination in the murder-for-hire trial of Davis, a Texas oil heir.

The defense contends Burleson entered into a conspiracy with McCrory and Davis's estranged wife Priscilla to frame the defendant.

Testifying reluctantly and often defiantly, Burleson, 42, said he put the bumpy McCrory into contact with the FBI because "I attempted to do what I thought was right."

He told prosecutor Jack Strickland that he had a "very hectic" relationship with McCrory and that "I don't find the words to describe it."

Burleson told of meeting with McCrory five days before Davis was arrested outside a Fort Worth restaurant.

"There was a pallor on his face, a rash on his hands and he was shaking," Burleson said.

"He related to me that he was in a lot of trouble, that he was working for a company owned by Cullen Davis and that his problems related to Cullen Davis."

Burleson said he did not discuss that meeting or the subsequent FBI involvement with Mrs. Davis, although he visited her three times before her husband's arrest.

Chief defense attorney Richard "Racehorse" Haynes earlier guided Burleson through the critical hours of the alleged conspiracy but failed to link him romantically with Mrs. Davis.

"Did you ever have a relationship with Pat Burleson that was more than platonic?" Haynes asked Mrs. Davis during a brief interlude between his questioning of Burleson.

Prosecutors angrily protested the question, posed outside the presence of the jury, and trial judge Wallace Moore ruled she need not answer.

"It's irrelevant and it also allows you to engage in an absolute character assassination of a witness you called," Moore told Haynes at one point.

Moore also ruled inadmissible questions by Haynes about Mrs. Davis's stormy romance with W.T. Rufner, a onetime boyfriend and professional motorcycle racer.

Mrs. Davis has acknowledged that affair but said it occurred after her summertime 1974 separation from her husband.

The judge said such questions were neither relevant nor material to the case against Davis, 45.

Haynes insisted he could show through his questioning a long, lasting and relevant link between Mrs. Davis, Burleson and McCrory.

"The relevance is the relationship between these parties," Haynes argued unsuccessfully.

"We are not attempting to assassinate character," attorney Steve Sumner said outside the courtroom. "We are attempting to show this web of conspirators through events that bind their relationship."

"The relationship goes back a long period of time and the true relationship has always been between McCrory and Priscilla and not McCrory and Cullen."

"If some of these events reflect poorly on these peoples' character, be that as it may, because we didn't create the facts. Cullen has been a 'mark' of these same conspirators for years but on a smaller scale."

Prosecutor Jack Strickland contended such questioning of Mrs. Davis was improper but added that he understood the defense frustration at the judge's ruling.

"They won before by beating Priscilla to death and I'm sure they'd like to take the same tack this time around," he said. Strickland referred to the Amarillo murder trial last year in which Haynes exposed the adulterous affair between

Mrs. Davis and Rufner and hinted at other sinister acts and infidelities.

The jury acquitted Davis of killing his young stepdaughter, slain in a basement utility room during a bloody shooting spree at the $6 million Davis mansion. Mrs. Davis was wounded and her lover Stan Farr was killed by a "man in black" who Priscilla and two other state witnesses identified as her bewigged, pistol-wielding husband.

Judge Drops Count Against Former Officer

HOUSTON (UPI) — A judge as dismissed one of five counts against a former police chief on trial in an alleged extortion and obstruction of justice plot arising from securities fraud investigation of an oilman.

U.S. District Judge Carl O. Bue Jr. ruled Tuesday that faulty court reporting had distorted what Carrol M. Lynn told a grand jury about his involvement with John V. Holden.

Lynn was charged with perjury in lying to the panel about his relationship with Holden, from whom the FBI charged Lynn took a $25,000 payoff in connection with efforts to block a federal securities case.

Meanwhile, prosecutor Reid Weingarten rested his case and defense lawyers began what was expected to be three days of testimony depicting Lynn as a victim of his own good faith attempts to break the Holden case.

Holden and his lawyer, Gerald Birnberg, have testified Lynn solicited a $45,000 payoff for fixing the securities fraud case. The oilman later was indicted and awaits trial.

The $45,000 never was paid and Lynn later allegedly told Holden and Birnberg a death contract was out on them and that they would have to pay off to stop it. Birnberg was wounded in the hand in a shooting attempt April 3.

Lynn later was arrested leaving Holden's house with $25,000 in his pocket.

Attacks, Holdups, Burglaries Head Crime Slate

A young Mexican-American man committed Lubbock's 283rd aggravated robbery of the year Wednesday afternoon, getting away with less than $100 cash from a hamburger stand on West 19th Street.

Jenny Lynne Fortenberry told officers the suspect came into Popi's Burgers, 5702 19th St., shortly after 2 p.m. and ordered a hamburger.

The waitress said that when it was ready, the man, dressed in a white shirt and dark pants, came to the counter and handed her the money for the food. However, when she opened the cash register the man told her she "had better step back." He held one hand in his pants pocket as if he had a gun, Miss Fortenberry said.

When she moved away from the counter, she said, the man reached into the register and took the bills. She said he left headed north on Elkhart in a small, two-door, dark colored car.

Eddie Ray Slay was treated at Methodist Hospital for a cut on his right hand that he said he suffered when he freed himself from a would-be robber.

Slay, 31, of 2214 Cornell St., said he was standing at the door of a night club at Zenith Avenue and E. 37th Street about 4:30 a.m. Wednesday when a tall, heavy-set black man came up behind the victim and placed a carpet knife to Slay's throat.

Slay said the man, who wore a brown leather coat and dark pants, told him to give him all his cash. Slay said he was able to break away from the man's grip, but cut his hand in the scuffle.

In another incident outside a Lubbock nightspot, Moreno Nieves of 708 46th St. told police he was shot by a man about 1:45 a.m. Wednesday.

Nieves, 26, said he was leaving a club at Main Street and Avenue X when he got into a fight with a Mexican-American man who pulled a pistol and shot him in the left foot. Nieves was treated at Health Sciences Center Hospital and released.

Two men sharing a 54th Street apartment told police they lost substantial amounts of property to burglars who pried the back door of the residence between 9:30 a.m. and 1:50 p.m. Wednesday.

James L. Majorowski of 3608-A 54th St.

said his $200 scanner and three shotguns, which he valued at $750, were stolen. His roommate, Lester James, said he is out $1,788 worth of property, including a television, stereo equipment, three radios, a pistol and clothing.

An Amarillo man said that when he returned home Wednesday he discovered a diamond necklace and diamond ring worth together $1,500 were missing from his overnight bag.

Rusty Williamson told officers he had inadvertently left the luggage in a parking lot at Lubbock International Airport about 3 p.m. Monday. The bag was turned in at one of the airline counters and Williamson said he picked up the case at 8:30 p.m. Monday. However, when he unpacked the luggage upon returning home, he said, the jewelry was gone.

Domingo Ortiz of 122 Ave. N told officers that the side door of his residence was pried Sunday and a $370 television set was stolen.

Orville Wampler said that a gun he bought Tuesday afternoon and placed in an office desk drawer at an Avenue J car lot where he works was gone when he went to get the weapon before leaving work at 6 p.m. Wampler said the weapon was worth $350.

Clio Ursua of 1622 Zenith Ave. said she was out a $455 color television set after burglars struck her home between 5 p.m. and 11 p.m. Tuesday.

Cheryl Janie Adams said she looked out her Fifth Street apartment window about 1:20 a.m. Wednesday and saw that her car had been extensively vandalized.

Miss Adams, who estimated the damage at $800, said she heard noise, looked out the window and saw a dark-colored car driving down the alley.

A neighbor told police she saw a black man jumping on Miss Adams's vehicle. She said he stopped when a man in a dark car yelled, "That's enough. Let's go."

The damage was reported to be a broken windshield, two slashed tires, a broken mirror and a dented top.

Miss Adams told police her car had been vandalized three times in the past month.

Challenge From France Forces Spanish Occupation Of Texas

(EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the fourth in a series of 10 articles excerpted from a new book entitled "Texas — The Beginning," written by Ed Syers of Kerrville. The book, available through Texian Press, P.O. Box 1684, Waco, Texas 76782, chronicles the state's least-known years, 1519 to 1834.)

Pass Caballo, across from Port O'Connor, has always spelled trouble entering vast Matagorda Bay. When in early 1685 a French ship grounded there, the danger was Spain's — her first New World challenge. Ashore, the French built a fort and claimed the area.

Rene Robert Cavalier Sieur de La Salle, a driving force in French Canada and the Mississippi's mid-America, had landed 300 colonists. In time, up dark, deep-running Garcitas Creek, below today's Victoria, he built Fort St. Louis.

Some believe he aimed his colony for Mississippi's mouth; others, that both he and Louis XIV always intended a Texas base. With Indian allies and a buccaner fleet he would assault treasure-rich Mexico. No one foresaw the catastrophes to follow.

Spain beat off the buccaneers. La

Salle's ships — not one, but two — were down inside Matagorda. His big navy escort returned to France: the colony was on its own.

For three years like a wounded animal, La Salle would thrash across Texas, first seeking Spanish outposts along Rio Grande, then Indian help in East Texas, finally in desperation, an escape to the Mississippi and safety.

Fort St. Louis disintegrated — to fever, dysentery, syphilis, finally to anarchy — his own men murdered La Salle — and inevitably, to the bestial Karankawa Indians.

Spain, alert to his coming, not his whereabouts, for four years threw out the New World's biggest dragnet: by sea, from Vera Cruz to Havana; by land, from Mexico to Florida. Alonso de Leon, an implacable hunter, thrust four times into Texas, finally discovering a survivor-turned-Indian at today's Bracketville; at length, the fort was sighted.

Its lifeless remains he burned to the ground. On its site went a Spanish fort. The die had been cast: Spain must occupy Texas. Up to Texas country near Nacogdoches, Domingo Teran de los Rios, first Texas governor, led Fray Damien Massanet. To the Tejas, the miraculous Lady in Blue had promised a mission. Here it was!

Close by today's tiny Weches, log-walled Mission Tejas took its stand. To it, from faraway Monclova, Teran had blazed a road — royally-ordered Camino Real.

Too far away! Unsupplied, drouth-ridden, then fever-stricken, the mission wavered, deserted by its once-friendly Tejas. At last Fray Massanet held on with a cannon in the doorway. In the end, even he gave way: the mission was burned.

And the royal road? Shortly Spain would find that it ran both ways.

Careless Smoker Finally Arrested

SAN JOSE, Calif. (UPI) — Delicate owner Lew Lieske has a bad, bad habit, according to the San Jose Fire Department, and they are tired of speeding to his home to put out the fires.

Lieske was arrested Tuesday. The latest blaze from a discarded cigarette which ignited the curtains nearly cost the man his life, according to Fire Capt. Jim Friday.

"It's a first as far as we know," Friday said of the arrest for careless smoking.

The fires over the past 13 months have caused nearly $100,000 damage in all.

"We've charged him with three violations of the state Health and Safety Code on carelessness with lighted material," Friday said.

Three of the blazes started in Lieske's bedroom, apparently from smoking in bed.

The fourth fire started in the living room. Lieske was dragged unconscious from the burning house and hospitalized for smoke inhalation and a cut suffered when he collapsed.

In October 1977 Lieske awoke in a blazing bed in a previous home. He dashed to safety but the place suffered $40,000 damage. He was not charged with that incident because it was beyond the statute of limitations, the investigators said. For the charges on three later fires, he was booked and released on $500 bail.

Charges Filed In Steel Haulers Strike

By The Associated Press
Nine members of an armed caravan were arrested on charges of harassing truckers in southwestern Pennsylvania Wednesday, as reports of tire-slashing, shootings and other violence linked to a four-week steel haulers strike mounted in several states.

Pennsylvania police said they found guns, knives, rocks, pipes and clubs in the caravan of about 30 cars, allegedly organized by members of the Fraternal Association of Steel Haulers, which has been on strike since Nov. 11.

One trooper received minor injuries when he was struck on the back of the head as he tried to make an arrest during the disturbance near the New Stanton interchange of the Pennsylvania Turnpike. Those arrested were charged variously with criminal conspiracy, carrying prohibited offensive weapons, and possessing firearms without a license. All were released on their own recognizance.

The Pittsburgh-based group is seeking higher rates, simplified trucking regulations and the right to bargain for independent steel haulers, some of whom are now covered under Teamster contracts.

FASH Chairman William J. Hill insists his group is not behind the violence, which has flared on highways in several states since the shutdown began. In Pennsylvania alone, more than 200 incidents have been reported.

State police said riders in the caravan were believed responsible for three shootings at the turnpike interchange with Interstate 70 as well as a rock throwing on U.S. 30.

Later, troopers confronted a group of about 80 men at the Union 76 truck stop near Smithton in Westmoreland County, where parked trucks were vandalized.

"They started slashing tires and damaging radiators and damaging trucks in general," a state police spokesman said.

The arrests in Pennsylvania came one day after four truckers in Ohio were arrested in connection with a shooting involving a parked truck in St. Clair Township. Police identified the men as FASH members.

In Cleveland Tuesday, a FASH picket suffered a cheek wound when he was shot outside a Jones & Laughlin steel plant.

Gilbert Kudrin, 39, of Lakewood, Ohio, said he was shot by a truck driver who was pulling out of the plant. No arrests were made.

Indiana police reported at least 40 tires were slashed on steel-hauling trucks parked at truck stops Tuesday night, and five shots were fired into the unoccupied office of an East Chicago trucking firm early Wednesday.

"We've had a lot of shooting up here," said Dennis Eaton, a communications officer at the Indiana State Police post in Lowell. "If there wasn't a truck strike, it might be written off as vandalism. But it seems like every time a gun goes off, a trucker's getting shot at." Meanwhile, U.S. Steel President David Roderick said layoffs involving steelworkers may be on the horizon. "You can only inventory so much for so long," he told reporters in West Lafayette, Ind., Tuesday.

If the strike continues, Roderick predicted, "steelworkers will be unemployed as a result of an irresponsible action."

Roderick, who was visiting Purdue University, said the strike has disrupted U.S. Steel's shipping capability by about 10 percent. "But we are continuing to run our mills on what I would call a normal schedule."

American Families Join Iran Exodus

TEHRAN, Iran (AP) — Hundreds of U.S. dependents left Iran Wednesday, joining the growing exodus of foreign workers fleeing anti-government violence that has enveloped the country. Oil production continued to tumble because of the crippling three-day strike by Iranian workers.

"We're not taking any chances," said one American woman as she sat in the lobby of the Tehran Hilton waiting to go to the airport. "These troubles are getting on our nerves. We've had death threats and abuse and we've just had enough. I don't know if we'll come back again."

Two of Iran's political opposition leaders, Karim Sanjaby and Dariush Forohar, both of the coalition National Front, were released from detention Wednesday evening.

This gave rise to speculation that the 71-year-old Sanjaby, who was arrested Nov. 8, had been freed to help form a coalition government to stem the violence. Reliable sources said another front member, Shapour Bakhtiar, had been suggested as a deputy prime minister. Gen. Gholam Reza Azhari, named prime minister Nov. 6, would retain his post in the coalition to show it had the blessing of the military, the sources said.

Sanjaby, in a telephone interview with French radio shortly after his release, said he was not willing to take part in a new coalition government "in the existing conditions in Iran." Sanjaby said that no such post had been offered to him.

Scores of American families stationed in Isfahan, south of Tehran, flew to the United States Wednesday. Most of the women declined to be identified because they feared for their husbands remaining in Iran.

The U.S. and British embassies issued warnings to their nationals to stay off the streets as fears grew that opponents of Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi planned a showdown for Ashura on Dec. 10-11, the peak of religious fervor during the holy month of Moharram.

Zealots March

The month is an emotion-charged period when religious zealots march in procession and scourge themselves to mourn the 641 A.D. assassination of Imam Hussein, the grandson of the Prophet Mohammed.

The military government has banned demonstrations, but street violence has flared almost every night since the weekend.

Some reports say that as many as 15,000 foreigners have left the country since September. Diplomatic sources, however, estimated that up to 8,000 foreigners, including some 5,500 American dependents, have left Iran in the last two months.

About 45,000 Americans and 110,000 other foreigners were in Iran last January when religious demonstrators opposed to the shah's modernization reforms and political foes seeking reforms in his authoritarian rule took to the streets.

Nears "Mass Exodus"

"It's not exactly a mass exodus — but it's not far off," a Western diplomat said. "However, it should be noted that many men are simply getting their families out until things cool down."

The Japanese foreign ministry in Tokyo said some Japanese businessmen and their families were leaving Iran, but officials said they had no exact numbers available. About 7,000 Japanese are stationed in Iran.

One Tokyo news agency said about 2,000 persons had returned to Japan or had been evacuated to London, Vienna and other European cities.

Western diplomats reported that the Iranian army has beefed up its guards protecting Americans and other foreigners working in the strike-bound oilfields in the southwest.

Death Threats Increase

The move follows "a distinct increase" in death threats against foreign workers in the oil industry network, the diplomatic sources said.

The diplomats, who asked not to be named, said a mass exodus of foreign workers would deal a critical blow to the shah and Iran's shaky economy. Death threats have been common — but no foreigner has been killed or seriously hurt.

Well-placed sources reported that daily oil production has shrunk to 2.8 million barrels — less than half the normal daily rate of 6 million barrels.

"We're hoping that production will bottom out at around 1 to 1.5 million barrels a day, but we can't be sure of anything right now," a reliable source reported.

Strike Leaders Arrested

Sources said troops arrested several strike leaders, but were keeping a low profile for the time being in an apparent effort to avoid sparking clashes with the shah's opponents.

Iran depends on the $22 billion a year it earns from oil exports to South Africa, Israel, Western Europe, Japan and the United States for economic survival.

The oil workers launched their strike Monday following calls by Ayatollah Khomeini, self-exiled spiritual leader of Iran's 32 million Shiite Moslems and major foe of the shah.

Grand Jurors Return 65 Indictments Here

bock County Jail that night, and Justice of the Peace Wayne LeCroy ruled that death a suicide.

Bentley, 24, who lived at 4605 44th St., was found dead in the trunk of a car parked in the 3800-block of 51st Street. Autopsy reports indicated Bentley had suffered numerous stab wounds.

Missing Persons Report Filed
Police said Bentley's 25-year-old girlfriend, Kathy Ann Stalcup, had filed a missing persons report Oct. 30. The next day she reported her car, in which Bentley later was found dead, missing. The car was found several days later in an apartment parking lot.

Miss Stalcup reportedly told police she had lost her trunk keys and had not tried to get into the trunk until she had a flat tire Nov. 6.

The body reportedly was found when Miss Stalcup's brother took out the back seat and reached through to the trunk to find a tool to change the tire. The vehicle reportedly was parked in front of a residence where Miss Stalcup was babysitting.

In another case, a murder indictment was lodged against T.C. Robinson, Jr., 22, of 1007 E. 28th St., No. 5.

Robinson is accused of murdering Joe

Earl Tucker, 30, who died Nov. 21 after being shot at a 1324 E. 25th St. residence. Police arrived to find Tucker lying on his back in a hallway. He reportedly had been shot once in the area of the left temple.

Argument Precedes Shooting

Reports indicated that an argument over a woman may have preceded the shooting.

Three aggravated robbery indictments and a burglary indictment were returned against Michael Smith McCowan, 19, of 2105 E. 30th St.

McCowan was cited in connection with reported November holdups at a Brierly Shopping Center shoe store and at two restaurants. The burglary indictment stemmed from a reported break-in at the Radio Shack, 8203 Indiana Ave.

Six persons were no-billed, thereby absolving them of any implication of guilt in the cases considered.

Cleared by no-bill of a rape charge was Austin Glenn Simmons, 18, of 3608 42nd St. Linnie Shields, Jr., 29, of Slaton, was cleared by no-bill of an aggravated robbery charge.

Also cleared by no-bill was Timothy Charles Allen, 18, of 500 E. Broadway, No. 16, who had been charged with aggravated assault on a peace officer. Police reports had indicated that an officer had been hit in the face after responding to a call to Allen's residence.

Constitution Winning In Spain

MADRID, Spain (AP) — More than 70 percent of eligible Spaniards voted Wednesday on a new constitution guaranteeing democratic rights under parliamentary monarchy, and early returns showed them overwhelmingly in favor of it.

First returns showed 85 percent favored the new constitution, officials said. They said 10.5 percent of the total vote had been counted and final returns would not be available until today.

Despite fears that political terrorists would strike and disrupt the voting, the referendum pointed to a clear victory for the government and King Juan Carlos, the hand-picked successor of the late dictator Francisco Franco.

Officials had predicted 75 percent of Spain's 24 million eligible voters would turn out. Government officials said the number apparently fell short because of rain and fears of anti-government violence, which has claimed more than 60 lives this year.

No Terrorist Violence

There were no reports of terrorist violence by Basque separatists who recently stepped up their campaign to wreck voting for the constitution, which makes permanent the democratic reforms initiated since Franco's death three years ago.

The separatists fear the limited autonomy granted in the constitution to the 13 ethnic regions of Spain will undermine their drive for full independence.

Unprecedented numbers of army combat troops and police — about 120,000 men — were turned out to guard key government posts, and early voting was orderly and peaceful.

In the violence-torn northern Basque region, where the separatists have demanded voters turn down the constitution or stay away from the polls, some voters who feared reprisals hid their faces from photographers after voting.

King Votes Early

King Juan Carlos, Franco's successor, was heavily guarded when he voted early with his wife, Greek-born Queen Sofia. The king's architect for reform, centrist Premier Adolfo Suarez, also voted early.

Also voting were Franco's widow, and 82-year-old Dolores Ibarruri, known as La Pasionaria during the Spanish civil war for her fiery speeches rallying republican forces against Franco. She returned from decades of exile in the Soviet Union after the dictator's death.

The referendum was opposed by Francoists, some Catholic bishops and also extreme leftists, including the Basque separatists.

In Madrid, one elderly woman shouted "Long live Franco!" as she deposited her vote. But Socialists in northern Spain demanded Franco's picture be taken off walls in polling places.

Brezhnev Hits U.S. Pressure

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev met with two U.S. Cabinet members Wednesday and criticized "attempts to use trade for political pressuring," Tass reported.

Brezhnev received Treasury Secretary W. Michael Blumenthal and Commerce Secretary Juanita M. Kreps, here for talks on trade and economic relations.

Tass, the official Soviet news agency, said Blumenthal and Mrs. Kreps gave Brezhnev a message about trade matters from President Carter. The specific contents were not disclosed.

Harriman Outraged

Harriman later declared it an "outrage" that normal trading relations have not yet developed between the two superpowers.

In his session with the Cabinet ministers, Brezhnev restated the Kremlin's opposition to restrictions on U.S.-Soviet trade adopted by Congress in 1974.

The restrictions, the Jackson-Vanik and Stevenson amendments, linked the non-discriminatory tariffs status and trade credits to Moscow with the issue of free emigration. The Soviets say this is interference in internal affairs.

Tass said Brezhnev told the two Cabinet officials that improved commercial and economic relations could better relations in general but only if "obstacles existing in this matter were removed, such as legal discrimination vis-a-vis the U.S.S.R. and attempts to use trade for political pressuring," the Tass account said.

SALT Pact Sought

Tass said Brezhnev wants a quick completion of a SALT treaty.

The three met in an ornate reception hall at the great Kremlin Palace.

Reporters permitted inside briefly said the 71-year-old Brezhnev limped slightly, favoring his left leg, but walked unaided about 20 yards across the hall. Brezhnev is rumored to be in poor health.

At a Kremlin dinner Wednesday night, Brezhnev said of the congressional restriction, "Nobody has ever profited or will ever profit from such an approach toward the Soviet Union."

He said such restrictions "call into question the reliability of the U.S.A. as a trade partner."

"Tough Problems"

Harriman told a Kremlin luncheon for American businessmen and Soviet trade officials: "You've had some tough problems, but I hope you'll stick with it."

"Trade is just too important to each of our two countries," he said. "It is not a gift to the Soviet Union. It's a mutually beneficial interchange between our two nations. It's an outrage after all these years that we do not have normal trade relations with the second greatest nation in the world," Harriman asserted.

At the opening session of the U.S.-U.S.S.R. Trade and Economic Council's annual meeting, Blumenthal acknowledged that the trade relations between the two superpowers have been mixed.

"But we are determined to move forward," he said. "Just as we fought together to repel the Nazi peril, just as we have joined astronauts and cosmonauts in space so too we can certainly achieve a new and improved trade and economic relationship."

The council brings together American and Soviet businessmen and officials interested in expanding trade between the countries.

The turnover in U.S.-Soviet trade for 1977 was $2.3 billion.

the law," West said. And through the Selective Traffic Enforcement Program (STEP) launched here in October, West is attempting to do just that.

West said the latest results on the traffic program are "sensational when you translate it into injuries and loss of life."

Fatalities for the first 11 months of this year stand at 35, compared to 43 during the same period last year, he said.

"In November, 1977, there were 196 injuries (in accidents). In November, 1978, there were 187 — a drop of eight and this is unbelievably heavy holiday traffic," West said.

Accidents in October dropped from 224 last year to 207 in October, 1978.

"On Slide Road we had averaged six injuries a month," West said, "but in the first six weeks of our traffic enforcement program we have averaged two a week."

More than 5,000 hazardous driving tickets were issued last month by special STEP officers and by regular police officers, he said, "and we'll step this up to 10,000 if the violators are out there."

West has been the target of angry letters and phone calls since the controversial program was implemented, but said

Air traffic scheduled to use San Francisco International Airport Wednesday, were diverted to Los Angeles while winds up to 60 mph made most landings impossible.

At Van Nuys Airport in suburban Los Angeles, a single-engine plane was blown over shortly after it landed Tuesday night, slightly injuring the pilot and causing moderate damage to the plane, according to airport officials.

Unofficial reports indicated winds reached to 72 mph atop Altamont Pass. The highest official reading was 65 mph at Modesto.

At least 25,000 homes in suburban Los Angeles were without power for 30 minutes to four hours because of damaging winds.

Most mountain passes above 3,000 feet in New Mexico and Arizona also were closed Wednesday, as the disturbance even brought light snow into portions of the desert of southwest New Mexico.

he doesn't mind.

"If they abide by the law, they've got no reason to write me a letter," the mayor said.

However, West said his mail has been running about 85 percent in favor of the program and 15 percent in opposition.

"We're creating an atmosphere of respect for the traffic laws," he said. And, although the goal for the traffic division of the police department should be to take in zero money, "if people want to drive bad and get tickets, we'll finance the city with traffic tickets," he said.

"This program may have already saved your life — or someone in your family," West said. "There is no way of knowing how much higher the statistics would go without a tough program such as this."

Leftist Lashes Proposed Vote In Nicaragua

PANAMA CITY, Panama (AP) — Sandinista guerrilla spokesman Ernesto Cardenal said Wednesday his group will consider as "traitors" those Nicaraguans who continue settlement talks with President Anastasio Somoza.

Cardenal, 52, a Roman Catholic priest who identifies himself as foreign minister for the leftist guerrilla group, condemned a proposal for a plebiscite in Nicaragua to determine Somoza's popularity, terming it "an imperialistic plan" to perpetuate "Somozism without Somoza."

The gray-bearded priest, clad in jeans and a black beret, made the comments to a small group of reporters in a Panama City hotel room. He said he was leaving immediately for Costa Rica, where the Sandinistas are based.

In Managua, Nicaragua's capital, residents reported a series of large explosions Tuesday night, and local news reports said several gas tanks exploded at a factory. The government said there was no indication what caused the blast. There were no details on damage.

Somoza and members of the Broad Opposition Front, an alliance of labor unions, businessmen and opposition political leaders, are considering a national referendum to determine the president's popularity. The Sandinistas withdrew from internationally mediated talks early on.

Kahn Blames Any Fuel Shortages On Controls

crease may be — if any."

The three committee members who attended agreed with Kahn on one thing: mandatory wage-price controls over most of the economy will not work. The committee issued a staff report concluding that even a congressional debate over controls would worsen inflation.

Kahn agreed. "Congress should make clear that it is not prepared — and it is not preparing — to give the president wage-price control authority, which he does not want," he said.

If successful, Kahn added, Carter's program of voluntary wage-price guidelines, coupled with budget restraint, will reduce inflation to the range of 6 to 7 percent next year, slightly worse than Carter's own targets.

"It may not look good, but it is better than the 10 percent inflation rate we're facing now," Kahn said.

He said he expects to have ready next month a recommendation on whether the $2.65 hourly minimum wage should be allowed to increase to $2.90 as scheduled on Jan. 1 or whether it should be delayed or scaled back. There is widespread agreement among economists that the increase could deal a sharp blow to the fight against inflation.

Any recommendation could not be acted upon by Congress before next month at the earliest because Congress recesses until then.

Other witnesses did not share Kahn's optimism about the prospects for success of Carter's program.

Alan Greenspan, who headed the Council of Economic Advisers during the Ford administration, said the only difference between Carter's wage-price guidelines and versions proposed by earlier presidents is that the Carter program "appears to be running into trouble sooner than expected."

Unselfish Rescue Wins Youth High Trust, Esteem

Chapter 3
THE MOUNTAIN OF MUD
By LUISE PUTCAMP JR.

(WHAT HAS HAPPENED: The runaway boy has joined a small camel caravan following a bright star. At the great river, robbers try to make off with their baggage. The boy rescues a robber a heavy green leather bag that Melchior had been carrying carefully.)

Melchior put the green purse in my care! There on the riverbank, he tied it tightly about my waist. He was very solemn about it. The old man and Parthus, the boy, were impressed, and maybe a little resentful.

I still didn't know what was in the purse. But I wore it even when I was asleep. Now I was really a part of the journey to the star!

And it seemed as if we had been on the road forever. The sun came up at our backs. The land was brown. The sky was endless. The green hills of home were far behind us now.

Parthus shouted beside me. I turned to see him pointing.
"What was it?" I said, squinting.
"The tower of Ur," he said importantly.

I saw nothing but the flat land, already starting to shimmer under the sun.

"There," he said impatiently. And I could see something that looked like a lump of mud in the far distance. I opened my mouth to ask him what it was. But he urged his camel ahead of mine, his white head cloth flapping.

The sun overtook us, high and hot. Ahead, the lump of mud got bigger before my eyes. Finally, as the sun was sinking before us, the ruined tower was so close I could see its three stages, and the stairways going up its sides.

At last it loomed in front of us, bigger than the palace of Susa, big as a hill. How could ordinary men have made so many little bricks and piled them so high?

We were picking our way through ridges of mud brick and piles of drifted dirt.

"A city stood here?" I asked Parthus, wiping my forehead. Nothing was in sight but the flat brown land. A little, unrelenting wind blew through the ruins.

"Winds and rain have eaten away the walls of Ur," said Parthus. He made a scary face. But the little people who built the walls are still here."

I unstrapped the bundles from the backs of the cross camels and helped set up camp. By the time I was free to explore, little daylight was left. Parthus's words about the vanished people stayed with me. I picked my way over heaps of mud brick, heading for the tower.

I looked up its battered side. At the top, Parthus had told me, was a little room where only priests went, on special days of the year. Parthus said the people of Ur had come from mountain country, far away. They wanted their gods to feel at home in the flat land, so they built this mountain of mud brick.

I felt suddenly very far from home. Out here, there were many more stars. And the big star, the star we followed, looked brighter than ever. Again I felt almost as if I should hide my eyes before it.

There was a sound in the gloom behind me. My heart knocked against my ribs.

Melchior stood nearby. He was looking up at the star.

I gathered my courage. "What is this star?" I said. "Where is it leading us?"

Melchior put the green purse in my care.

"The star is a sign," he said, "for those who know the way."
I puzzled over this. Now the night was so close around us that I could no longer see the mountain of mud.

"And what does the sign mean?" I said.

Melchior laughed softly. "Before this journey is ended, you will know," he said. "And you will see the one whose gift you carry in the green purse."

Continental Economic, Energy Alliance Posed

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Energy and economic problems of the United States, Mexico and Canada could be solved by a common market approach, Gov. Edmund Brown Jr. of California said Wednesday.

An economic and energy alliance with Mexico and Canada will become a reality within 20 years, Brown predicted in a speech to the Interstate Oil Compact Commission. Brown was elected chairman of the 30-state group on Tuesday.

In another speech, Arizona Gov. Bruce Babbitt said government has failed to face up to nuclear safety issues and has not done enough to promote the development of new energy sources.

Brown urged the group to think big on energy matters.

He accused the federal government of losing its opportunity to buy oil from Mexico, which has discovered huge reserves recently.

"We haggle over a few pennies while they're off to China and Japan," Brown said.

He suggested a new alignment of interest groups is needed to develop a true energy policy. He said environmentalists and organized labor should be included in deliberations.

"We need a stable, predictable, long-term environmental standard so investors will invest their money," Brown said.

He said environmental needs can be met along with new energy production, "but we have to be willing to pay the price."

The traditional opposition by organized labor to lifting government price controls should be reassessed, Brown said, because without deregulation there will be no investment and the result will be fewer jobs for workers.

Babbitt said: "By any kind of analysis, we must proceed with nuclear power development."

But he said there has been a "dramatic failing by Congress to deal with the whole nuclear issue."

"The waste disposal issue is looming over us," Babbitt said.

He suggested the states should take collective action to devise safety policies if the federal government fails to act.

Babbitt also accused the federal government of failing to adequately promote solar energy as part of the solution to the energy shortage. And he said the oil companies have been failing to use the resources at their disposal to encourage conservation.

Charles B. Curtis, chairman of the federal Energy Regulatory Commission, said the Natural Gas Policy Act — which sets a timetable for deregulation of natural gas prices and establishes exploration incentives — will have to be made to work.

"Congress has debated natural gas pricing policy for 30 years," he said. "Eighteen months were invested in what many congressmen described as a nightmare. They made it clear they are not going to go back and redo it."

Curtis said Congress expressed its distrust of the federal executive branch by giving many of the duties to the individual states. Reaction from the states to take on natural gas regulation has, in many cases, been reluctant, he said.

"We must make it work, or the nation will suffer the consequences," he said.

Offshore Drilling Law Compliance By Agency Questioned

WASHINGTON (AP) — A prominent environmentalist said Wednesday there is a "serious question" whether the Interior Department is complying with requirements of a new offshore oil drilling law.

Frances Beinecke, a senior project scientist with the Natural Resources Defense Council, told a House committee the department should stop selling leases in undeveloped offshore areas until regulations governing them have been established.

"Many lease sales have already occurred in frontier areas and Interior is pressing ahead with more lease sales in frontier areas," Mrs. Beinecke said in testimony before the Select Committee on the Outer Continental Shelf.

"Yet without regulations implementing the new requirements, leasing operations in these areas remain unaffected by the new provisions of the law. We believe that this result draws into serious question the Interior Department's compliance with the high standard of environmental care required by the new amendments."

ANN LANDERS

Dear Ann Landers: I'm an 18-year-old female with a serious problem. Your column, "How to Be a Stupid Parent," opened my eyes. Now I know what is wrong with me. It's the way I was brought up.

My parents never took time to listen to me. They were always "too busy." (They are trying to make up for it now but the damage has already been done.)

Point Three stressed the importance of forgiving a child when he makes a mistake or does wrong. Well, my mother was the world's No. 1 chop-buster. She never let me forget when I "misbehaved" or "let her down."

Point Seven stressed the importance of letting children make their own decisions. When I was growing up my opinions never mattered. Now I have trouble doing simple, everyday tasks, let alone handling the big problems.

Today at work I made some cruel remarks to my co-workers which made them hate my guts. (I hated myself right after I opened my mouth.) I wouldn't have said what I did but I was in a foul mood and feeling lousy.

Any suggestions? — Miserable

Dear Miserable: Yes. Accept responsibility for yourself and quit blaming your parents for your mean mouth, your foul moods and inability to cope. You'd be surprised at the number of children who had far worse parenting than you and turned out to be splendid adults.

Psychiatry in the early '50s guilt-tripped a lot of parents. In fact, one highly respected professional group glommed on to the catchphrase, "There are no bad children—only bad parents." In that connection, Dr. Zigmond Lebensohn, Emeritus Chief of Psychiatry at Sibley Memorial in Washington, D.C., sent me a wonderful cartoon. It showed two mischievous little boys, obviously up to no good. One is saying to the other, "I heard today there's no such thing as a bad kid. There are only bad parents. That sure does take a load off MY mind."

So, if you don't like the way you are, do something about it. You seem to be aware of your major faults, which is an awfully good place to start.

Dear Ann: My dad was the original "Mr. Fix-It Yourself." He taught me how to repair everything from electrical appliances to plumbing. I even wired our house and put in a tile kitchen and bathroom.

My husband bought a four-family flat and I do all the repairs. This keeps me busy from 7:00 a.m. until midnight. We have four kids and I'm on the go constantly. The minute I sit down I get a call: "The washing machine is on the

Dear Dr. Thosteson: My husband snores so loudly he wakes me up. He will not breathe for it seems like ages, and I get scared and nudge him to get him to catch his breath. When he does it is like an explosion, as though he has been running a hard race and is fighting to get control. Can this be a serious matter? Please comment. — C.B.

Snores is usually a harmless quirk, but it always indicates that the snorer is not breathing altogether properly. For some, determining the why can be important.

You tell me little else about your husband, so I can only suggest a few possibilities. His struggle for breath seems out of the ordinary. If a person drinks heavily he may be in a drugged sleep, in which breathing can be labored. Or he might have a nasal obstruction, as from polyps, for example. Being overweight can cause snoring to be more pronounced.

The episodes of breathlessness are called sleep apnea. They may last from 20 to 90 seconds. The resulting explosiveness is caused by the release of carbon dioxide in the lungs accumulated during the period when he is not inhaling fresh oxygen.

I've seen patients remedy this problem by losing needed weight. The apnea also may result from a lung disorder, and while I don't like to raise unnecessary ghosts, I think it wise in a situation like this to seek an evaluation through a physical examination.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: What exactly does cause constipation? What happens? — J.N.

Many factors contribute to it, but it boils down in the final analysis to just how the stomach and intestines handle the food we eat — or fail to handle it. It takes food anywhere from a day to three days to make the complete journey through the digestive tract. This may vary with the kind of food, to some extent, on how well it is chewed, and even perhaps the emotional state of the person eating. Any obstruction in the pathway can alter the results.

Constipation occurs when the system cannot keep up with the required rate of digestion and absorption of nutrients through the walls. If the muscle contractions (peristalsis) are not strong enough, there may be insufficient force to propel food quickly enough. If the passage is slowed in the lower intestines (colon), it may accumulate. Since it is here where liquid is removed, what is left may become a hardened mass — constipation. For more detailed discussion of causes and cures see the booklet, "The Way to Stop Constipation." Send 35 cents and a stamped, self-addressed envelope to Your Good Health, P.O. Box 11210, Chicago, Ill. 60611.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: Will holding a baby upside down by his feet and letting the blood rush to his head cause brain damage? Also, should a nine-month old baby be given a bottle at night or should it have milk at suppertime and wait until breakfast to have its milk again? — K.J.

The upside-down routine, while it will not cause brain damage, seems to me an unnecessary amusement for any tyke. As to the milk, an infant should be fed when it is hungry, a need it will make known to you. Whatever routine a baby adopts is fine, except that it should be one that fits in, as much as possible, with the family routine.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: My grandson has had beautiful blond hair, very fine, but thick. All of a sudden it has started falling out until now he is bald with only a few strands remaining. He is 9. Do you have any answers? — I.S.

Hair loss of this magnitude is often difficult to explain. It may follow a severe illness that is featured by high fever, can occur with excess use of vitamin A or result from a glandular deficiency, particularly of the thyroid.

A study done at Emory University a few years ago revealed that such hair loss may also result from an auto-immunity, a condition in which the body attacks certain of its own cells — in the case of hair, the follicles. The Emory group suggests use of immunotherapy, as with BCG, a new drug called levamisole in an effort to reverse the process. The studies at the time of the report were not complete, but a dermatologist familiar with it may be able to update you.

Tune In Tomorrow

By JON-MICHAEL REED

NEW YORK—A recent report in this column that "Another World" will become the first 90-minute TV serial in the new year elicited a response from the show's headwriter, Harding Lemay.

Although NBC hasn't confirmed the show's expansion from 60 minutes, as of this writing, Lemay took exception to the writer's assumptions about the work-in-progress required for the mammoth production.

"Actors on the show will not be required to burn the midnight oils," insisted Lemay. As this column suggested, the day's working schedule will be split between morning and afternoon tapings with different performers reporting for a.m. and p.m. rehearsals and shootings. "I always carefully plot my stories," added Lemay, "so that no actor works more than three times a week."

The new schedule for "AW" will in no way affect a performer's decision about additional career endeavors. "AW" performers have always included a large number who concurrently do Broadway or off-Broadway assignments while appearing on the series. And the producers allow "on leave" absences for performers to do nighttime or film roles as often as possible when storyline considerations permit. Those professional courtesies will continue, says Lemay.

Lemay objected to this writer's assertion that "modern viewers don't have the time or patience" for longer format serials. "It's a fact that all of the hour shows are leading in the ratings. Viewers obviously aren't tired of hour shows. If anything, the reverse is true. Half hour shows are losing ground."

This writer's assertions regarding the extended soap format are largely derived from reader response, and that response has been assuredly negative toward longer-format soaps. Serial viewing audience as a whole has dwindled, even though it's true that overall viewing patterns of the daytime TV audience have changed. More women have joined the work force. An individual viewer now tends to watch only one or two shows rather than several, as in the past. But most importantly, the ratings also and most definitely show a pattern of a viewer who watches half of an hour show then switches to another program.

The reasons are as arguable as the result. Tune in tomorrow to ascertain for yourself.

SHORT TAKES:

DARTH VADER is coming to the soap screen. Rather, actor David Prowse, who was behind the evil force of "Star Wars," will shed his black mask for a guest appearance on "The Edge of Night." David will portray a mentally-retarded giant, as befits his 6-foot-7 frame, during special Christmas holiday segments of the show. Since David's voice was dubbed by actor James Earl Jones for "Star Wars," audiences will finally be able to hear how the real Darth Vader sounds.

IF "A BROADWAY MUSICAL" resolves production problems and makes it to the Great White Way in early December, Helen Gallagher (Maevie Ryan on "Ryan's Hope") will be joined in the tuner by Irving Lee, who will take off his policeman uniform as Calvin Stoner on "Edge of Night" and don his dancin' shoes as a crooning lawyer for the musical. Irving was a standby for another Broadway musical, "Ain't Misbehavin'," before being chosen for "Broadway Musical."

LARRY WEBER (Barney Dancy on "The Doctors") and his wife had finished performing at the annual Ziegfeld Club Ball recently in the Big Apple. The club includes members who were associated professionally in any of the legendary showman Flo Ziegfeld's productions, and Larry's parents were stars of the Follies. Anyway, Larry and his wife were dining after their musical number when opera diva Anna Moffo came to his table and demanded to know whether Jason is going to return to Nola, Barney's troublesome daughter.

Despite Miss Moffo's professional stature, Larry could only advise her to tune in tomorrow.

City Community Center Offers Program On Ski Information

Love to ski, but not sure where to go? Need to repair your skis, but you're not really sure how to go about it?

Lubbock area skiers will be offered a chance to share their experiences, obtain new information and meet fellow skiers in a program to be offered by the Lubbock Parks and Recreation Department.

"Ski Mania" will be held from 1-5 p.m. Saturday in Hodges Community Center, 42nd and University. There will be a ski swap in which any ski equipment or apparel can be sold or traded. A style show will feature the newest in skiwear.

Films and exhibits will be set up, and a series of professionals will speak on various subjects pertaining to skiing.

Among the topics to be covered by the speakers are cross country skiing, Greg Henry, ski safety on and off the slopes, Kevin Kiechler, ski conditioning, Dr. Michael Bobo: style show, Pat Stephenson and ski maintenance, Ron Mullin.

Dr. Bobo teaches physical education at Texas Tech University. Other speakers are local ski merchants.

In addition to the exhibits, a chart comparing costs, group rates, mileage to various slopes in New Mexico and Colorado and other valuable information will be presented by the Parks and Recreation Dept.

Mary Williams, spokesman for the department, notes that Lubbock is seen as a ski area, and since the department strives to provide for the needs of the community, Ski Mania was seen as a viable project. Hopefully, she says, the program will become an annual event and perhaps develop into other areas, such as workshops.

The speakers offer a great deal of skiing information with their combined topics. Cross country skiing gives tips on cross country skiing — where to go for the best skiing, what type of equipment to use, and other valuable information.

Kiechler speaks about ski safety, and he notes "Skiing is the most booming sport today. This is largely attributed to the reduction in injury risk which has been cut in half in the past two years." Instruction on how to fall, how to get up, and how to load and unload on the lifts provides the bulk of Kiechler's topic.

Ski maintenance covers repair instructions as well as maintenance of ski equipment. Mullin will talk on how to wax ski edges, repair the bottom of skis and how to hot wax skis.

Dr. Bobo will discuss ski conditioning with an emphasis on general physiological conditioning and increased flexibility. The muscular and cardio-vascular systems must be prepared to prevent injuries and improve stamina of skiers, according to Dr. Bobo.

Ski Mania is open to the public and admission is free of charge.

WALNUT PORKIES

Pork sausage patties can be quite special when prepared in a new style. Add some finely chopped walnuts and chopped green onion or chives to a mildly seasoned bulk mixture. Shape and cook as usual. Or spear browned small balls of the mixture onto food picks as hot party appetizers.

South didn't like that trump lead. He felt that he ought to have the sole right to pull trumps, but here was West usurping his prerogative.

He won in his hand, led a heart and lost dummy's king to East's ace. Back came a second trump. South won in dummy and led dummy's last heart. West won and led a third trump to spoil all plans to ruff a heart and South was a dollar late and a trick short.

"Nice defense," said South. "You're too tough." "You're right about the nice defense," said North. "But you didn't really try to make your contract."

North was right. South had lost a cinch. He should have tried to set up North's fifth diamond. Here is the winning play.

Ask the Experts

An Ohio reader wants to know if the suits have always ranked in the same order at contract.

They certainly have at contract. However, in the game of bridge and in the early days of auction, spades was the lowest suit. It skipped all the others and moved to the top around 1910.

Hints from Heloise

DEAR HELOISE:

My children love to help with the Christmas decorations. So I just give them a small paint brush and some of my "artificial snow."

To make the snow, I pour about three cups of powdered detergent into a large bowl, add a little water gradually, beat after each addition with a fork. Or I beat it on low speed with my mixer.

Continue beating until the mixture turns into a frothy, whipped cream-like consistency resembling snow, then hand it to the children and let them have at it.

They can use their artistic and creative talents to decorate the branches of the Christmas tree, to trim windows with snowflakes or whatever. Put some along the edges of the panes to effect drifted snow or let the younger ones use stencils to create their masterpieces.

Food coloring can be added to the mixture to further inspire the artist, and sparkle can be added with glitter, beads, or sequins.

When Christmas is over, they (and Mom, more than likely) can clean up the whole mess with just water, and surfaces will be left sparkling clean! — Judy Carr

Getting ready for Christmas can be just about the best time of the whole year, especially when everyone, young and old, shares in the preparation fun!

That's what it's all about. — Hugs, Heloise

DEAR HELOISE:

If you need something to hold your flowers in place when using a cut glass or crystal vase, try clear plastic wrap.

It's practically invisible in the transparent container. — Mrs. D.

DEAR HELOISE:

If you have old lipsticks around and pieces of old candles, here's a way to use up both of them this Christmas.

Melt the candles (carefully, don't let the wax get overheated). Remove the lipstick from the tubes and add it to the wax.

Then, while this mixture is still warm, dip inexpensive white candles into it. Friends will think you've spent a small fortune on your holiday candles. — Roz Lee

DEAR HELOISE:

I use a small hamburger cooker to cook an egg. Most of these cookers have a non-stick finish so there's no grease to splatter and pop.

Also the cooked egg is just the perfect size for a slice of bread for egg sandwiches. — Kate

DEAR HELOISE:

My dad lives alone and I bring food to him quite often. When bringing gelatin dessert, pudding or tapioca, I put it in plastic mixed-drink glasses.

The food looks pretty, the glasses are easy to eat out of since the sides slant, and they do not have to be washed and returned.

When placing the container, I cover it with a piece of plastic wrap and secure it with a rubber band. — Barbara Leightenheimer

My compliments to both of you. You for that smart idea, and you, Father, for having such a sweet daughter. — Love, Heloise

DEAR HELOISE:

When lengthening pants or other hemlines, sometimes it's hard to completely remove the crease.

I just machine-stitch along the line of the crease, using a long stitch.

This is especially good on tailored-type clothes — gives them a sporty look. — B.L.

Jonestown Claimed Life Of Area Woman's Aunt

A-J Correspondent

BIG SPRING — Vera Satterwhite, 75, one of the victims of the mass suicide-murder in Guyana Nov. 18, was the aunt of Mrs. Pete Jones of Big Spring.

Mrs. Jones recalled that her aunt telephoned her from Portland, Ore., shortly before she left for South America and told her, "Baby, I don't really know whether I will ever see or hear from you again."

"I asked her to explain," Mrs. Jones said. "And she told me 'we are leaving for some place, but I'm not sure where' and then the telephone went dead."

Mrs. Jones related that no one in the family had heard about Mrs. Satterwhite's whereabouts until Sunday — when Mrs. Satterwhite's daughter in Los Angeles, Calif., was called to Delaware to identify her mother's body.

She remembered that her aunt first met the Rev. Jim Jones, founder of the Peoples Temple, in Los Angeles in 1971.

"She was retired, her children were grown and she was living on social security," Mrs. Jones said. "I guess she thought he had some kind of answer for her."

The Big Spring resident related that her aunt thought the Rev. Jones was god. "I don't understand the power he had over people. He was an evil man. He was a truly evil man," Mrs. Jones said.

"When the story first came out, we finally knew where the Rev. Jones was, and we were afraid. We looked at every news picture that came out with horror. We looked at them with magnifying glasses, and we kept hoping maybe our aunt was no longer with him. But, deep down we knew that she was probably there," she added.

"Now we read that some of Rev. Jones' followers were beaten and killed if they tried to contact their families. And so now we understand why we have never heard from her."

Mrs. Jones plans to attend funeral services for her aunt, which are Friday in Los Angeles, Calif.

Council's Expense Allowance Voided

ATLANTA (AP) — A $300 monthly expense allowance Atlanta City Council members gave themselves 11 months ago is illegal and must be repaid, the state Supreme Court ruled Tuesday. A retroactive pay raise given Council President Carl Ware also is illegal, and the retroactive part of the $4,000 yearly raise must be repaid, the court said.

Insurance Firm Heir Loses Drug Case Appeal

AUSTIN (AP) — Dallasite Carr P. Collins III, grandson of the founder of Fidelity Union Life Insurance Co., lost his appeal Wednesday of a cocaine possession conviction.

Collins received a five-year prison sentence from a Sherman jury. The case was moved on a change of venue from Dallas.

The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals rejected Collins' argument that he was searched illegally when officers found a one-ounce bag of cocaine in his pocket.

According to trial testimony, Collins was in the automobile of a man who delivered eight ounces of cocaine to an apartment for sale to a Department of Public Safety narcotics agent.

The agent signalled to other officers after the delivery was made. Collins was searched for weapons, the officers said, because they thought he might be a bodyguard of the man who delivered the cocaine.

Collins' attorneys said the cocaine should not have been admitted as evidence because the search was illegal. One of the lawyers, William T. Hill Jr., said he will ask for a rehearing.

In another case, the appeals court reversed Ronald Alan Ramsey's aggravated robbery conviction because prosecutors mentioned extraneous offenses during his Houston trial.

Ramsey received a 50-year sentence in connection with the Jan. 1, 1975, robbery of Bernice Taul. Mrs. Taul told police that three men entered her house and took jewelry from her and three other women.

During the trial's punishment phase, the district attorney tried to prove that Ramsey was on probation in Florida.

Instead of limiting evidence to possible prior convictions, prosecutors introduced Ramsey's entire probation record. The file mentioned he also was charged with capital murder, armed robbery and disorderly conduct.

The file prejudiced the jury, the appeals court said.

In other cases, the court: — Reversed Charles Roy Lackey's burglary conviction and 10-year sentence because he did not waive his right to be charged in an indictment.

Lackey was accused of entering the home of Mary Jane Mizell on May 22, 1975, with intent to kidnap Victoria March Mizell. The court returned the case to Dallas for possible new trial.

— Upheld Eugene Tealer's life sentence on an aggravated rape conviction. Tealer was charged with assaulting a nurse in the basement of the University of Texas Dental School in San Antonio. The victim suffered paralysis of the diaphragm, heart attack, liver lacerations and a ruptured spleen.

— Overruled James Ellis Chandler's murder conviction appeal. He was sentenced to 99 years in prison in the death of Pandy Grimsley. Chandler was accused of beating the woman to death in Forest Hills and then burning the body in East Texas.

The court rejected Chandler's argument that police illegally searched the house he shared with Miss Grimsley and her boyfriend.

Ford Urges Support For Shah

FORT WORTH (UPI) — Former President Gerald Ford said Wednesday during an impromptu news conference that it was a "vital interest to our well being" that the Shah of Iran remain in power.

In Texas for a guest lecture at Texas Christian University, Ford told reporters it was "unfortunate there are forces in Iran opposing the Shah's control."

"It's a vital interest to our well being in America that the Shah continues to stay in power. That piece of real estate is a valuable one with invaluable resources."

Ford's statement came as U.S. companies launched a large-scale evacuation of their American employees and dependents. John the Baptist was beheaded in 29 AD.

ents from Iran Wednesday and diplomats predicted "big trouble" over the next five days.

The departure of Americans came as thousands of anti-shah protesters demonstrated in Tehran's grand bazaar and walled cemetery and more workers joined a crippling strike in the southern oilfields.

Imperial army forces kept a quiet watch on the Tehran demonstrations, moving only to disperse the students. No shots were fired and there were no reports of casualties.

"There is going to be big trouble," said one diplomat, "and the military is going react with everything they've got. It could get very nasty by the weekend."

Lubbock Man Sues City On Tot's Injuries

A Lubbock man Wednesday sued the city, saying his son suffered $100,000 in damages when a commemorative monument fell on his foot.

The suit was filed in Judge John R. McFall's 237th District Court by David Salazar on behalf of his son Joel.

According to the plaintiff, Joel, then 5 years old, was injured June 29, 1977, while a visitor to the Guadalupe Neighborhood Center.

The petition says that a monument erected by the city in commemoration of persons who lost their lives during the 1970 Lubbock tornado fell on the child's left foot, injuring his toes.

The child later underwent an operation to amputate two toes, the suit says.

The suit claims the city should have known the monument was dangerous and asserts that, in fact, it had fallen on one or more previous occasions. The city was negligent in failing to stabilize the monument or remove it, the plaintiff contends.

Some bushy moths can smell so well with their antennas they can smell a moth that is more than a mile away and can fly to it even in the dark of night.

Carter To Get Quarrel-Free Tribute

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — The Democratic Party will try to pay tribute to President Carter at its mid-term convention this weekend without quarreling over his foreign and domestic policies.

The White House averted one potentially heated confrontation with Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., the leading congressional supporter of national health insurance, by agreeing to reaffirm its support of the 1976 Democratic platform plank calling for enactment of comprehensive health insurance. The agreement was reached in telephone negotiations between White House staffers and Kennedy.

Kennedy wants immediate action on a national health insurance program. The administration contends quick action could be inflationary and favors a gradual, phased-in program.

But there remained the possibility of a floor fight on the issue, as party liberals collected enough signatures from delegates to force consideration of a resolution calling for enactment of a national health insurance program by next year.

Kennedy didn't commit himself to attend the convention until he was assured of a means to avoid a confrontation over health insurance. His attitude reflected that of many members of the congressional wing of the party, who are reluctant to get into embarrassing and divisive airings of their differences with Carter. Most opted for a simple expedient: stay away from the second mid-term convention, scheduled to open Friday in Cook Convention Center.

"Our turnaround list reads like a Who's Who of American politics," said Elaine Kamarck, the Democratic National Committee aide charged with trying to convince big names to participate in the issues panels scheduled to run all day Saturday.

Carter will address the opening session, watch a movie extolling his accomplishments and try to squeeze enough money out of fat cats to cover the $650,000 cost of the convention.

The president plans to return to Washington on Saturday. Vice President Walter F. Mondale is expected to stick it out until the final gavel on Sunday. The White House staff will attend in force, as will the Cabinet.

Everyone is supposed to pay his or her own way. But there will be plenty of other costs. "We're going to come out of here with debts up to our ears," said Kamarck. "We're used to it."

Carter's appearance at the SALT panel won't produce a confrontation with Sen. Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., a leader of the opposition to the administration position on a strategic arms limitation treaty with the Soviet Union.

Funds Trade-Off For New Library Seen

By SYLVIA TEAGUE
Avalanche-Journal Staff

The Lubbock City Council is expected to approve a funds trade-off today to allow the construction of a branch library in Southwest Lubbock.

At the 9:30 a.m. meeting council members will ponder using $218,525 in federal revenue sharing funds to begin construction of the library on the west side of Leroy Elmore Park at Quaker Avenue and South Loop 289.

The funds were to have paid for construction of a softball complex in a Southwest Lubbock linear park that never became a reality because of high land costs.

A softball complex will be built, but it will be west of Texas Instruments in North Lubbock and will be funded from Community Development grants.

Those funds, which were to have funded a new senior citizens center, also will pay for the remodeling of the present Goedeke Branch Library to make it the senior citizens center.

Also Thursday, council members will begin a search for architects for the branch library and the senior citizens center and will discuss how Lubbock County Commissioners should participate in the library construction.

Lubbock County funds 40 percent of the library operation, with the City of Lubbock picking up the remaining 60 percent.

Mayor Dirk West's Crime Stopper program also is on the agenda for council discussion. Council members will receive a report from Assistant City Manager Jim Blagg and Police Chief J.T. Alley on how the program of rewarding informants functions in Albuquerque.

Two public hearings on Community Development funds are scheduled today. At 10:15 a.m. council members will hear public comment on reallocating $142,919 in CD funds to pay for an intensified code enforcement program ($18,060), construct water and sewer lines ahead of paving ($46,791), make water main improvements at Mackenzie Park ($7,356) and make improvements to the grounds at the Lubbock Lake Site ($5,200).

At 11:45 a.m. a public hearing is scheduled on an application for $500,000 in discretionary Community Development funds to begin the total clearance of the Phyllis Wheatley addition in Southeast Lubbock.

Also today, council members will consider using interest accumulated on revenue-sharing funds over the past five years to widen 82nd Street between Quaker Avenue and Slide Road and widen Indiana Avenue south of 95th Street. Total cost of the paving projects is expected to be about $378,000.

Council members today will consider endorsing the installation of crossing gates at a Santa Fe railroad crossing at 29th Drive. The only cost to the city would be about $400 to make adjustments to medians adjacent to the crossing.

Also today council members are scheduled to:

Designer Decorates Trees

DETROIT (AP) — Shoes by Gucci. Fashions by Halston. Now there are Christmas trees by Fontana.

Jeff Fontana hires out to affluent Detroit-area folks who pay him $300 to $1,000 to decorate their Yule trees.

His only rules: no colored spotlights shining on aluminum trees and no plastic, revolving Santa Clauses.

"I'll even decorate a plastic tree if it's in keeping with the look a client wants to achieve. You have to look at the house, talk with the people. Things have to balance."

For the client trying to buy elegance, Fontana might remove some inner branches and twine silver garlands around the center of the tree. Pheasant plumes, gold sprays and satin bows go on the branch tips.

"I try not to overdo a tree," the decorator says. "But some of my clients go a little ga-ga at Christmas. One, he's an attorney, he's like an 8-year-old kid at Christmas."

"He's got a plastic Santa with a button for a nose. You press the nose and an Oriental voice says 'Merry Christmas.' I've tried hiding that thing but he insists on using it every year."

Ad Offends Harvard...

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (UPI) — David Chan has one of those jobs of which many men are envious. For the past 14 years has photographed women in various stages of undress for Playboy Magazine.

But that didn't impress the student editors of the Harvard Crimson. The 41-year-old Chan arrived on campus last week to search for women to pose in the magazine's 1979 back-to-campus issue called "Women of the Ivy League," and Harvard was his first stop. He visited the Crimson and paid $181 for an ad.

On Thursday, Crimson President and Publisher Francis Connolly said the ad "was too offensive." The decision was made during a meeting with some 30 student editors.

Bob Grady, a senior member of the Crimson, said the ad was "against our stated policy of condemning sexism."

"I've been to about 25 schools in the past two years and not one of them has ever censored my ad," Chan said.

"There's always been a mystique with the Ivy League... especially now that women have entered the men's domain. There's a sexual fascination. What are these women like? We want to know that they're pretty nice," Chan said.

Said Grady: "Basically, this particular ad was directly participating in a specific activity of the magazine we find to be exploitative. It's our choice whether or not to accept their (Playboy) money and profit off an activity we don't want to participate in."

Chan also keeps his eyes open for possible centerfold material and is paid $10,000 for each centerfold.

He has also done two collegiate spreads. The women are paid $100 to $300 depending on their degree of undress. If they become a centerfold they are paid a minimum of $10,000.

He said despite the flap at Harvard he has received about 50 calls from Harvard women. He said the women do not have to pose totally nude.

A 20-year-old Harvard coed, who answered a similar ad which ran in The Boston Globe Sunday, said posing for Playboy is the sort of thing "you always dream about."

When asked if her mother knew what she wants to do, the coed said: "My mother said if she were 30 years younger she'd do it, too."

...But Not Brown

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — The editor of the student newspaper at Brown University says he would not oppose running a Playboy advertisement recruiting campus women for an upcoming photo layout.

The Harvard Crimson rejected a similar ad on the grounds it was sexist and offensive.

Robert Linn, the Herald editor, said Tuesday that Playboy has not tried to place the ad in the Brown newspaper yet for a planned spread on Ivy League women. But he said he assumed an attempt will be made to do so and that he would not object.

Linn said he believes a newspaper's job "should be to present information and let people make up their own minds." He said he discussed the ad informally with members of the paper's business staff and they agreed with him. A final decision would be up to the paper's nine-member student managing board, he said.

Train Smashes Houston Bus; 18 Injured

HOUSTON (AP) — A freight train smashed into a city bus at a west side crossing Wednesday, authorities said, and 18 persons were injured, four critically.

Several other victims were released after being treated for superficial injuries.

Witnesses said the warning lights at the crossing were flashing but the guard arms that normally halt vehicle traffic were not all the way down.

Robin Marsh, 18, was driving a van behind the westbound bus.

"The train came out of nowhere like greased lightning," she said. "The bus lifted up 2 to 3 feet off the ground."

She said the driver was thrown out as the bus was spun around by the impact and was heard to say before being taken to a hospital that he had not seen the approaching train.

The three-locomotive Southern Pacific freight train was leaving Houston for Los Angeles with 63 loaded and 15 empty boxcars.

Testimony taken by the Warren Commission about J.F. Kennedy's assassination was released to the public in 1964.

Singer Hospitalized

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Country singer Tammy Wynette is in the hospital for tests, but is reported in good condition.

Miss Wynette, who has been closely protected since she reportedly was abducted from a shopping center and beaten in October, has checked into hospitals in the past complaining of abdominal and gall bladder pains.

She reportedly canceled an engagement Saturday at Nashville, Ind.

"Miss Wynette was admitted Monday for some routine diagnostic work. We do not know how long she is expected to remain at Parkview," Lin Carrigan, a spokesman for Parkview Hospital, said Tuesday night.

Deny Parental Malpractice

BOULDER, Colo. (AP) — A couple sued by their 24-year-old son for alleged parental malpractice deny his claim he was punished so severely at age 14 that he suffers mental problems.

Tom Hansen was punished, but not in the manner he described, his mother said in a brief filed Tuesday in response to her son's suit filed in Boulder District Court.

Hansen claims he was forced to work long hours on little food when 14 and that he left his home in Kamuela, Hawaii, and went to live on a beach because of it. His suit contends he may be forced to undergo a lifetime of psychiatric treatment because his parents intentionally inflicted emotional stress on him.

Shirley Hansen says her son was suspended from school and was required to chop weeds in the family's backyard as punishment, but that he was not forced to work long hours and go without food.

Mrs. Hansen said her son was diagnosed as a paranoid schizophrenic by a Hilo, Hawaii, doctor, but she added that the doctor was a general practitioner and not a psychiatrist or psychologist.

Furthermore, she said, the doctor "qualified his diagnosis by stating that illegal drugs may have caused" some of her son's symptoms. Any damage he suffered, she said, was his fault because he took illegal drugs and refused medical help when it was offered.

No Gas Lack Reported In City; Price Increase Expected Soon

By BOB WILLIAMS
Avalanche-Journal Staff

Lubbock gasoline dealers said Wednesday they haven't been officially contacted by their national distributors about any shortages or price increases — but they added there are rumblings about a substantial price hike for most stations here during the next 30 days.

Paul Johnson, a local Chevron dealer, said that he heard gasoline prices may increase locally as much as five cents a gallon. "But I don't really believe there is a shortage," he said. "This may just be a ploy to get gasoline prices up. Gasoline prices have not gone up as much as other things during the past year," he added.

Local Fina dealer Maurice Lester said he also has heard rumors that his gasoline prices may increase as much as three cents a gallon. "But I can't make any predictions," he said.

One local dealer said he ran out of unleaded gasoline Tuesday. "I had to get some more Tuesday. And I do expect it will ... be in short supply until the manufacturers make more," he said.

Mobil dealer Wesley Cox said he had to increase his gasoline prices 8 of a cent already this month. Last month his station had two increases, .6 and .7 of a cent per gallon. "It doesn't cost them that much to make a gallon of gasoline. I think they (the oil companies) are making the profit, because the guys that pump the gasoline sure aren't making any more money," he said.

Another local dealer, Al Tredwell, said his Texaco supplier told him to expect a price increase last week. "Then they called and said to forget it. So I expect one anytime now. When the gasoline costs me a penny a gallon more, I have to pass the cost on to the customer," he said.

Tredwell said his full service premium now sells for 69.9 cents a gallon. "I should increase it a penny or more. Other stations have. But I just can't bring myself yet to selling gasoline to customers for over 70 cents a gallon," he said.

Phillips 66 station manager Bud Ferguson said his distributor has not mentioned shortages or price increases. "They do it without any warning. Last month we increased our gasoline price by 1½ cents. I don't know why, either. They say it's inflation," he said.

One dealer presented a brighter story. "We are getting ready to go down a penny a gallon on our self-service pumps," said Exxon dealer Al Vernon. "And as far as I know, we don't expect any shortages in the near future," he added.

Card Dealers To Vote On Unionization

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — More than 500 dealers at Resorts International Hotel Casino are scheduled to vote today whether to unionize their unique shop.

In an election Aug. 31 in the East's first legal casino, 280 of the 481 voting dealers said they did not want to unionize.

However, Local 137 of the Sports Arena Employees Union of Cherry Hill, which represents 3,000 part-mutual clerks at race tracks in New Jersey and Pennsylvania, charged that Resorts International management used unfair labor practices in the election.

The union also said it was damaged by a report in a Philadelphia newspaper on the day of the election linking the union to organized crime.

Last month, the National Labor Relations Board invalidated the election after management agreed to a new vote. The agreement meant that the charges against the casino would not be aired.

Only the 504 dealers eligible in August's election may vote today. Although four unions participated in the first vote, the dealers' choice today is either Local 137 or no union.

In the first election, Local 137 received 165 votes. The Casino Dealers Professional Association, an affiliate of the 600,000-member Communications Workers of America, received 25 votes.

Casino dealers earn a salary of $3 an hour plus tips, which have been averaging about $7 an hour.

Europeans Hope Plan Will Stabilize Currencies

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — A new European monetary system is intended to stabilize European currencies so that Europeans will know today what their money will be worth in other countries tomorrow. Indirectly, it should help the dollar.

Six of the nine European Common Market members agreed on the plan, the kind since the end of World War II. A two-day summit that ended here Tuesday. The other three, plus some non-member nations, may join later.

What is the system, how will it work, and how will it affect the dollar? Here are questions and answers on the main provisions.

Q: What does the new system do?
A: Basically, it sets up a fund against which member countries can borrow to stabilize the values of their currencies by buying up falling currencies and selling rising ones.

Q: What will this do to the dollar?
A: Common Market director Roy Jenkins said the system will tend to help the dollar.

The dollar has been burdened by being an exchange vehicle, and this provision would relieve that function. Dealers have sold one currency for dollars, then used the dollars to buy another currency. This caused the amount of dollars on the market to fluctuate, causing the value of the dollar to change rapidly.

Q: Is this plan, called the European Monetary System, new?

A: No. It has two main forerunners — the Bretton Woods Agreement that based world currencies on the dollar from 1944 until 1971, and a much smaller European economic arrangement still in effect.

Q: Why bring in a new system if similar schemes have failed or are still in operation?

A: The Bretton Woods system, named for the New Hampshire town where it was devised near the end of World War II, worked until the world was flooded with dollars in America's spending during the Vietnam War.

The system still in effect, a currency bloc nicknamed the Snake, works as far as it goes. European leaders, however, notably West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and French President Valéry Giscard d'Estaing, the architects of the EMS, want it bigger and better.

Q: How did Bretton Woods work?

A: Governments agreed on exchange rates, which could be adjusted if one country's economy did particularly well or badly. Adjustments of rates became more and more frequent, until world leaders decided to let each currency find its own level. As a result, rates change daily.

The dollar is worth about 1.90 West German marks today, less than half as much as in the 1950s. Most of the drop has been since 1971.

Q: What is the Snake?

A: It replaced Bretton Woods in 1972 and included most major West European currencies. Britain, France and Italy left when economic problems made the cost of supporting their currencies too expensive.

Now only West Germany, Belgium,

Luxembourg, Denmark, the Netherlands and Norway belong. Each currency is linked to the others. If one currency drops too much against another, the central banks sell the strong currency on foreign exchange markets and buy up the weak one. By the law of supply and demand, the weak currency gains value and the strong currency loses.

If this is not enough, the government monetary experts meet in secret and adjust the rates. The Snake takes its name from the way the relationship among the currencies looks on a graph.

Q: What's the difference between the Snake and the new system?

A: The new system, to take effect Jan. 1, includes France. The leaders meeting in this week's summit conference in Brussels want all nine Common Market members joining.

Italy, Ireland and Britain, with the Common Market's weakest economies, have yet to commit themselves. Italy and Ireland could join before the system goes into effect, but Britain is expected to stay outside for at least six months and probably until national elections. Other non-member European countries could join as associates.

However, there are other differences between the new system and the Snake.

Q: How will the intervention be done?

A: As with the Snake, intervention is automatic when a currency goes 2.25 percent away from its "central rate" against another currency. In the Snake, the West German mark, for example, has a rate of 15.71645 Belgian francs. If the franc weakens so that it takes 2.25 percent more francs to buy a mark, the central banks of Germany and Belgium buy francs and sell marks on the markets. If

INVESTORS' GUIDE

By BILL DOYLE

Q: I have a problem with my broker. In August, I bought 400 shares of stock which pays $2.12 a share dividends a year — 53 cents every three months. A dividend was paid on Sept. 29 and the broker sent me a check for $159, but I should have received $212.

I feel the broker short-changed me by sending me a dividend on 300 shares — not on 400 shares. But I can't get any place with him on the phone. I am enclosing Xerox copies of the transactions. What should I do?

A: Relax. You received the correct dividend. The copies you sent along spell out all the details. Here, again, we have a misunderstanding over the "ex-dividend" procedure — probably the thing that confuses more people than anything else in the stock market.

You made three purchases of that stock — 200 shares on Aug. 2, 100 shares on Aug. 4 and 100 shares on Aug. 30. You became the owner of those shares on each of those dates.

On Sept. 29 — the payment date — a dividend of 53 cents a share was paid to owners of the stock as of Aug. 31 — the record date. But that stock went ex-dividend at the opening of business on Aug. 24.

That means that anyone who bought the shares on and after Aug. 24 was not entitled to receive that dividend. Ex-dividend, in the simplest of terms means "without dividend." A stock "goes ex" one week before the record date because of the stock exchanges' five business day settlement rule for "regular way" transactions — the way most stock trades are handled. (Saturdays, Sundays and holidays don't count.)

The 200 shares you bought on Aug. 2 were entitled to that dividend, as were the 100 shares you bought on Aug. 4. But the 100 shares you bought on Aug. 30 — after the Aug. 24 ex-dividend date — were not.

You were entitled to and received dividends on 300 shares. The next time that company pays a dividend — scheduled for Dec. 29, to stockholders of record Dec. 1 — you'll get a dividend on 400 shares.

Q: Through my insurance agent, I have been purchasing shares of a mutual fund. I have elected to reinvest all my dividends to buy additional shares. When a dividend is paid, it is based on the lower of the two prices in the newspapers. When I send in money to buy more shares, I am charged the higher of the two prices in the papers. Why?

A: The lower of the two prices is the "net asset value" — the actual dollars and cents value behind each share of the particular mutual fund on a given day. Except for the handful of funds which have "redemption fees," the net asset value — also called the "bid price" — is the amount of money you will receive by cashing in your shares.

Most mutual funds allow shareholders to reinvest dividends at net asset value — meaning that you don't pay commissions on reinvestments.

The other price — the "offering price" — is the net asset value, plus a commission charge of up to 9.4 percent. That's the price you pay when you buy shares — other than through reinvesting dividends. Some funds have lower commissions. Some have no commission charge.

So for those "no-load" funds, the two prices are exactly the same. Your insurance agent put you into a mutual fund with a rather standard commission. That's how he makes his money.

Q: A man who traveled with me on a recent trip said that the new federal income tax law contains a provision which forgives the income tax on increased values of stocks, bonds and similar assets attributable to inflation. Is this true?

A: False. Proposals to "index" the value of "capital assets" were talked about in the past session of Congress. But our law-givers did not include that idea in the mishmash they finally passed as the so-called "1978 tax reform bill."

Survivor Recalls Horror Of Pearl Harbor Attack

devastated the entire area — and Simmons with it.

Diving into a pipeline ditch with others, he dodged bomb and anti-aircraft debris until, for the first time, he was able to think rather than just react automatically.

"I realized I had a battle station, and I wasn't in it. My station was in that PBV still on the ramp. I had nothing to fight with, but I had to be there."

He was two rungs up the plane ladder when his crew chief yelled to get away from the plane. The plane exploded with him a scant 25 feet away.

"It blew up and out or it would have killed me."

Suddenly, in the midst of bombing, strafing and confusion, he remembered his brother and looked seaward. The Raleigh had taken two torpedo hits and four bombs and was listing at 40 degrees.

"According to the manual, that meant it would sink, but the captain hadn't read the manual and kept it afloat."

Dorman Simmons didn't know how to fire an anti-aircraft gun. He had to read instructions before he could even load it. He also didn't know "or didn't have time" to plug his ears with cotton. A bleeding ear, compared to the rest of Pearl Harbor, was a minor injury which three weeks later quit bleeding. Later, the ship took a torpedo at sea and his nose was almost severed, also a minor injury. Eventually, concealed damage reached the cranial nerve. From then, "it took him five years to die."

Chick Simmons — knocked down six times and buried with debris — was detached temporarily three weeks later to a new national defense communications center where he read "things" he figures he wasn't supposed to read.

Facts flowing through the center backed up the word of the PBV patrol leader that the patrol was to avoid certain air lanes, the exact ones through which Japanese planes flew. It also added impact to the word of a "boy" that reported his radar had aircraft at 130 miles, and the officer on duty said forget it and shut it down.

The "boy" didn't say any more, but continued to track the objects until surrounding hills shut them out.

Efforts to document the beliefs have been thwarted on every turn, Simmons said, leaving only the survivors to tell how it was.

A Pearl Harbor survivor chapter can be chartered with eight members, but Simmons found 10 to begin the Lubbock chapter, which now has members from Abilene to Eastern New Mexico to the Panhandle, and others in between and ready to become members.

Simmons is president with E.W. Lewis of Lubbock as vice president. Lewis was stationed at Schofield Barracks.

James H. Wade Jr. of Lubbock, who was on the USS Tucker, is secretary-treasurer.

Trustees include Wallace M. Crawford of Lubbock, who was aboard the USS California, Jack O. Richardson of Lubbock who was with the USS Shaw, and Nathan C. Dalton of Big Spring who was aboard the USS Utah.

Other charter members are Richard E. Adams of Lubbock, who served with the USS Phoenix, and Cecil E. Deeg of Plainview, who was with the USS West Virginia, M.J. Cotter of Claude (formerly of Littlefield) and Robert C. Cross of Morton who were with the U.S. Army headquarters group.

Many, till now, wanted no part of reliving the horror in publicity, but now want to be among the survivors helping history "Remember Pearl Harbor" forever — as it was when they lived it, not as history books put it.

"I wasn't scared of an attack. I had talked to the old salts, and they said it could happen, and I believed them. It did," Simmons said.

Survivors, Vets Gather At Attack Site

PEARL HARBOR, Hawaii (UPI) — A whistle blast followed by a minute of silence this morning will mark the 37th anniversary of the moment the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor began, sending the United States into World War II.

Navy Secretary W. Graham Claytor Jr. will lead attack survivors, war veterans and patriotic groups in a solemn memorial service in the alabaster shrine atop the sunken battleship USS Arizona, where the bodies of 1,177 men still lie entombed in its hull in 80 feet of mud and water.

Petals from wreaths presented at the service will be dropped through the memorial's open well above the Arizona, which was blown apart and sunk during the first wave of the attack on Dec. 7, 1941.

The attack devastated Battleship Row including the battleships West Virginia and Tennessee, and destroyed more than 300 American planes.

About 30 members of the First Shot Naval Veterans of World War II have returned to Pearl Harbor for the first time since the attack to attend the ceremonies. They are former crew members of the destroyer USS Ward, which actually fired the first shot of the Pacific war.

The Ward was on patrol duty just outside the Pearl Harbor entrance at 6:45 that morning when it encountered a Japanese mini-submarine attempting an entrance to the harbor.

"We have attacked, fired upon and dropped depth charges on a submarine operating in defensive sea areas," the Ward messaged. That seemed impossible, and the message was ignored.

An hour later, the attack began.

The Japanese lost five midget submarines, 29 planes and 64 men in the attack.

Members of the 11th Bombardment Group (Heavy) Association, who were in the Army Air Force when Hickam Field was attacked the same morning, were to have their own commemorative service at the Hickam flagpole.

The Army was to observe the anniversary with a retreat ceremony, special 21-gun salute, and an open house at the Army museum.

In Honolulu for a week-long reunion are some former members of the 7th Fighter Command, whose pilots shot down some of the enemy aircraft over Oahu.

ORNAMENT THIEVES CAUGHT
MUNICH (AP) — Police said Wednesday they have broken up a gang of 9-to-11-year-old boys who specialized in stealing the hood ornaments of Mercedes Benz cars. They said they recovered 27 ornaments that the youngsters allegedly had been selling for about $1 each at school.

Piano Tuner Gains Reputation As Raconteur Of Yankee Lore

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — Howard Chase's expertise on New Hampshire — not its statistics but its "native life" — comes by way of his principal job, that of piano tuner.

"I needed an occupation that paid better than just jackass labor on farms and in the woods," he recalls of his choice of work.

His vocation has produced a country-grown philosopher, folk humorist, maker of fine violins and violas, storyteller, self-educated minstrel of native lore, the last of the New Hampshire Yankee renaissance men.

"A raconteur, if you will," Chase says. At 71, childless and widowed from Daisy nearly four years, Chase's countenance belies his age, his face soft with mirth, his speech as North Country as the characters of his tales.

As a piano tuner, Chase keeps alive a trade threatened by electronics. As storyteller he preserves what children learn as the "oral tradition," the spoken history, speech, texture of New Hampshire.

"The only school I graduated from was a one-room school in West Campton," Chase says. After high school in Laconia and Springfield, Mass., he attended New Hampton School, from which he "decamped when I got word that I was about to be kicked out anyway for sassiness and lack of studiousness."

"My schooling was sketchy but my education continues."

In 43 years of tuning, Chase has assembled anecdotes, interviews, backstairs gossip, family chronicles and his own experiences into an encyclopedic knowledge of how the state's people once lived.

Though born in Nashua, Chase says that "is not my typical background. My family moved to West Campton in the

Talks Planned On Refugees From Vietnam

KUALA LUMPUR (AP) — A U.S. State Department official arrived here Wednesday for talks with Malaysian officials on the growing exodus of Vietnamese "boat people" across the South China Sea to Malaysia.

The arrival of Robert Okuley, deputy assistant secretary of state, coincided with Kelantan State Police Chief Ibrahim Yeop's report that an armada of 300 boats was approaching Malaysia, which already unwillingly hosts about 46,000 refugees.

Okuley told a news conference the United States was sympathetic to the problems created by the influx. Many of the refugees are ethnic Chinese fleeing the Communist government that came to power in Vietnam in 1975.

He noted the United States is planning to increase its intake of refugees by 21,500 in the year ending April 1979 — almost double the previous schedule. Of these, 15,000 will be "boat people."

Okuley said after talks here and in Bangkok that he will head for a 40-nation conference on refugees that begins in Geneva Sunday. The conference, convened by the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees, will seek solutions to the Indochinese refugee problem.

The U.S. official also said he would talk with Malaysian officials about what position to take at the conference.

Thailand hosts 134,518 refugees and, like Malaysia, has warned it will adopt a "get tough" policy and not allow refugees ashore if there is no international effort to ease the problem.

There were reports that the 300 boats approaching Malaysia Wednesday contained as many as 30,000 refugees, but the Home Affairs Ministry and refugee officials said the report was a rumor. They said only six boats were approaching.

Malaysian officials recently refused to allow the 2,500-passenger Hai Hong to land, saying its refugee-passengers had paid their way out of Vietnam and therefore were not refugees.

The ship anchored 20 miles west of Kuala Lumpur. France, Canada and West Germany have accepted 1,500 of the Hai Hong refugees, and other Western nations are wrangling over the fate of the rest.

Earthquakes Rock Central America

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Earthquakes shook buildings and caused minor panic early Wednesday in a wide area covering El Salvador, Guatemala and southern Mexico, but authorities said there were no reports of damage or casualties.

The quakes measured between 5.8 and 7 degrees on the open-ended Richter scale, depending on where they were measured. A reading of 7 is considered a major quake capable of widespread heavy damage.

The first tremor hit at 6:53 a.m. EST, followed by a number of aftershocks and two more big tremors.

In San Salvador, Guatemala City and southern Mexican cities, early risers fled to the streets but quickly returned.

It was barely felt in the Mexican capital which, along with the southern part of the country, was rocked by six successive earthquakes in four hours Nov. 23.

ASSAILANT SHOT

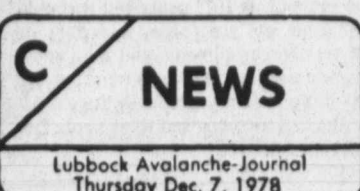

MANILA (AP) — A police sharpshooter picked off a knife-wielding robbery suspect as he held a woman hostage in front of a suburban restaurant early Wednesday. Police said Edgardo Lopez tried to rob the restaurant owner's wife when the business closed. Police patrols diverted Lopez's attention and the marksman fired a fatal shot into his head, police said.

HOWARD CHASE

White Mountains. That really set me up more as a native than being born in Nashua did."

Chase has written "Country Piano Tuner: His Stupid Song," 149 mimeographed pages, only 300 copies of which were published.

The "opus," as Chase calls it, is a delightful mixture of science, rumination on a number of subjects, poetry and a tribute to Concord, the city in which he lives.

But the essence of Chase's art as storyteller is not written down anywhere except in his notes and a modest card describing his talks.

"Talks on Native Life," the green card says, "voiced in native speech," the rates "proportionate to travel expense" to schools, civic clubs, historical societies, granges and similar gatherings.

His subjects are "folkways and local color from original sources, always including brief recitations of New England verse."

Chase talks about "Yankee Wedlock," "Thrill in New Hampshire," "Country Fun," "Doin' Business," "One Incredible Character: Mr. Shedd of Stoddard," "Sidelights on The MacDowell Colony" and "One Neighborhood."

He comes by his material about New Hampshiremen "by being one myself, principally."

"Naturally if you're a New Hampshire Yankee that is your meat."

MIDWEST CHRISTMAS GIFT — When Chicago restaurant owner Hal Markom called his friend Tony Ross of Scottsdale, Ariz., he complained of too much snow. "Is that so? Then send me some," Ross said. Wednesday Ross opened a parcel contain-

IRS Hears Clash On Blacks In Private Schools

WASHINGTON (AP)—The founder of an all-white Baptist school system formed during court-ordered desegregation in Memphis, told the IRS Wednesday that he can't find black students or teachers, but an NAACP official called the private schools "a bastion of white segregation."

W. Wayne Allen, chairman of the Board of Trustees of Briarcrest Baptist School System in Memphis, Tenn., said his schools have a policy of nondiscrimination, although they were formed in 1973 while public schools were being integrated under a court order.

"Every possible effort has been made to enroll minority students without success," Allen told a seven-member Internal Revenue Service panel. He said there are no blacks among the school's 3,000 elementary and secondary students.

Maxine A. Smith, executive secretary of the Memphis branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and a member of the Memphis school board, said the Baptist schools are segregationist.

"From the date of its inception until today Briarcrest has not enrolled a single black student or employed black teachers," she said. "Briarcrest stands as a bastion of white segregation in a city with a 40 percent black population."

The argument came at an Internal Revenue Service hearing that could affect the tax-exempt status thousands of private schools. The tax agency is proposing to deny tax breaks to private schools it finds guilty of racial discrimination.

There is no deadline for final approval of the proposal, which does not need congressional approval and still may be modified. The plan would force many private schools to prove to the IRS they do not discriminate if the IRS decides to review their tax-exempt status.

The tax agency wants to review the tax-exempt status of schools that have been found guilty by a court or government agency of practicing racial segregation and schools formed or substantially expanded during a time of public school desegregation.

Allen said his Memphis schools already have tried vigorous recruitment efforts, including advertisements in black publications and on broadcast stations, a mail campaign to black residents and personal visits to black colleges to recruit faculty.

The efforts produced no black students for the school system's regular program, but 46 blacks enrolled in a special summer program, Allen said.

But Smith said that while the Baptist school system "proclaimed the non-discriminatory admissions policy of these institutions, all Memphians knew that these schools were either created or expanded because of racism."

She said Briarcrest would not be in existence today if Southern Baptist ministers had not accommodated racist life styles of their members.

"I sincerely believe that if Briarcrest were required to enroll black students, employ black teachers or include black people in any of its activities, it would shut down," she said.

HEW May Abandon Rule Regarding Dress Codes

WASHINGTON (AP)—Long-haired boys or braless girls soon may not be able to look to Washington for help in battling school dress codes.

Health, Education and Welfare Secretary Joseph A. Califano Wednesday proposed dropping a federal rule that says schools cannot "discriminate against any person in the application of any rules of appearance."

The action "would take HEW out of the business of examining the rules imposed by local school authorities on the way students may dress or wear their hair," Califano told a news conference.

The rule has been on the books for three years as part of the government's regulations for Title IX, which bans sex discrimination in education.

But, actually, the federal government has been of little help to students fighting dress codes.

HEW's Office for Civil Rights has 112 complaints pending, some several years old and most involving school rules that prescribe hairlines for boys but not girls, according to spokeswoman Colleen O'Connor.

Two years ago, the office's director at the time, Martin Gerry, said schools could not prescribe hairline standards for one sex but not the other. Gerry added that the office was uncertain whether it would allow different standards for the sexes.

Like his predecessors, Califano held up resolving the complaints while he re-examined the regulation. Despite the long delay, he called it a relatively easy decision to make.

"I believe decisions regarding the way students may dress or wear their hair are best made at the local level, and not by the federal government," declared Califano.

He called for public comment by Feb. 20 and said his proposal to drop the rule still must be approved by President Carter and reviewed by Congress.

Holly Knox, director of the Project on Equal Education Rights, recently criticized Califano for not taking a stand sooner. "I may think it's trivial for a school to tell a kid how long to wear his hair, but when the kid gets thrown out of school, it becomes important," she said.

A recent case in Portage, Mich., involving a 14-year-old junior high school girl who was sent home twice this year for not wearing a bra received national publicity.

Gadget Glued To Teeth May Fight Cavities

NEW YORK (UPI)—A thin plastic sandwich about half the size of a shirt button that can be cemented on the back of a tooth is Uncle Sam's newest decay-fighting research idea.

Dr. James P. Carlos, the head of the National Caries Program, said Wednesday that the inner layer of some kind of tooth protective — such as fluoride — would be released slowly over six months through micro-pores in the plastic.

The "slow release system" works very nicely in dogs, Carlos, associate director of the National Institute of Dental Research in Bethesda, Md., told the Greater New York Dental Meeting.

Tests involving humans will begin in January or February.

"If we can prove it works in people," Carlos said, "this disc could be cemented to a tooth by a dentist or dental assistant. The patient could walk out and know the protection would last half a year."

Other research strategies cited by Carlos and associates:

—A 35 to 40 percent reduction in cavities has been documented by 80,000 children in 17 cities who rinsed their mouths once a week in school with plain, cherry or lime-flavored liquid containing fluoride. The cities do not have fluoridated water. The huge demonstration lasted two-and-a-half years. Twenty-five million children in towns also without fluoridated water could similarly be protected if parents give permission. The cost: 50 cents per child per year.

—A fluoride tablet, chewed, then swallowed once a day also results in about a 40 percent reduction in cavities. Designed for use in schools, it is being used in some Headstart programs.

—Adhesive sealants brushed on good teeth and hardened with ultraviolet light similarly protects against cavities up to three years. The problem: it must be applied by someone especially trained and it is expensive. Thus, prospects of sealant use in mass public health programs are dim.

—Research on anti-cavity vaccine turns up nothing new or dramatic these days. Work is with monkeys and rats. People want a vaccine but "it is a very long way off."

—The search for a sugar substitute is a high priority item in the anti-cavity program. A half dozen compounds are being tested and most promising are dihydrochalcones derived from the rinds of citrus fruit.

How sweet is the new sweet under investigation? "Many times sweeter than refined sugar," Carlos said.

"What we need," he said, "is something that can be added to snack foods, candies, soft drinks, chewing gum. The things kids eat between meals — when the damage is done to teeth."

Japanese Demand Boosting U.S. Onion Exports

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

It's enough to bring tears to your eyes! The Japanese are buying up America's onions.

Not all of our onions, of course. The big demand seems to be for the Spanish-style onions — the ones some people erroneously call Bermuda onions. No one knows exactly why; it could be an increased taste for hamburgers. There also are reports that the Japanese onions were smaller than usual this year.

Idaho and Oregon are the big producers of the big, Spanish-style slicing onions. Last October and November, they shipped 4.6 million pounds of onions to Japan. This year, in the same two months, unofficial figures show shipments of 43.7 million pounds.

Prices, meanwhile, are up. "Rather dramatically," said a U.S. Department of Agriculture spokesman who asked not to be identified by name. A 50-pound sack of Spanish-style onions with a minimum diameter of three inches sold for $3.50 at Idaho and Oregon shipping points in the first half of November. By the end of the month, the same sack was going for $6.

"That is a very high price for onions. No question about it," said the USDA spokesman.

Adding to the problem is a disease that has struck the onions in storage, meaning many of them must be culled out. "We can't put our finger on what we call the cullage, but it reportedly is running very heavy," the agriculture spokesman said.

It should be pointed out that there is NO shortage of onions. The storage crop — onions of all kinds of hand throughout the country for marketing during the coming months — stands at 18.2 million hundredweight, up 5 percent from last year. The storage crop of Spanish-style onions in the West is almost as large as last year's.

Even with the increase, the exports account for only a small fraction of total production. Tom Cooper, who runs the federal Market Reporting Service in Idaho Falls, Idaho, said, for example, that only about 6 percent of the onions shipped from the state in the current marketing season have been destined for export.

Ron Hendrick, president of Phil Livesley of Portland, Ore., an onion broker, said that not only are the Japanese buying more onions, they are buying different types. Usually, he said, only 25 percent of their purchases are jumbo onions; the rest are medium size. This year, partly because Japanese-grown onions are small, the proportions are reversed. Hendrick said the Japanese always have eaten more onions than Americans, who consume about 15 pounds a year on a per capita basis, and are now increasing their onion use because of the growing popularity of hamburgers and onion rings.

The demand for the big onions, meanwhile, is having an impact on the prices of smaller onions. The price of 50 pounds of yellow globe, two-inch onions from New York State has gone from $2.50 to $2.75 in less than a month. But that's still below the $3 price range at this time last year.

54 Students Made Ill By School Fumes

ORMOND BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Mysterious fumes spread through an elementary school Wednesday, causing several children to faint and making others nauseous, authorities said. Fifty-four pupils were hospitalized and the school was closed.

All of the children were treated at three hospitals and most were released within several hours, officials said. By midafternoon, only a few pupils were still waiting to be picked up by parents.

The hospitals reported that none of the children had been in serious condition. Most suffered nausea and a tingling sensation in their fingers.

Peggy Hollis, a fifth-grader at the Tomoka Elementary School, said she was in a choral room of the school when she began feeling ill.

"Everybody started fainting," she said. "I walked outside and got real sick and everyone got real sick. I couldn't smell anything but I got dizzy and started coughing and my eyes hurt."

Some school officials began carrying out stricken children as other officials summoned help. Volusia County ambulances and fire officials began ferrying the children to the hospitals.

County investigators ruled out leaks of either natural gas or air conditioner gas.

Bus Riders To Get Dose Of Poetry

BOSTON (UPI) — In an effort to make commuting more pleasant and bring culture to a captive audience, some of the nation's mass transit systems are showcasing the works of aspiring as well as established poets.

"Poetry In The Buses" is a federally funded program which "adds a visual interest to a bus, makes commuting to work a little more pleasant, and gives poets and artists a chance to get their work before the public," said Terry Briggs of the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority.

"We solicited the poems nationwide, although principally from the areas where we run the program," said Francis Balter, who dreamed up the idea two and a half years ago at the Pennsylvania Arts Council in Pittsburgh.

"We had about 400 applicants this year, who turned in thousands of poems; and we picked about 24. Some of them are original and some are from anthologies, which we credit," Ms. Balter said.

The "Bus Song," by Anthony Astroff, is aimed at giving the commuter something to think about besides how long it will take him to get home. "You're on this bus, bun to bun, rolling through this part of town Are you looking. Look! Look out there. Do not read this. Look! (See?)"

The federal Urban Mass Transportation Administration spent $62,000 to fund the program for a year in Boston, San Francisco, Detroit, Atlanta, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia and Washington, D.C. The National Endowment of the Arts has also supported the program with a grant.

"We were interested in the program because they say it has added to the enjoyment of people who ride the buses," said UMTA economist Richard Cohen, who helps manage the program. "All we've had is positive reaction."

"I like the idea of it," said Mark Medel, poet in residence at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology's Center for Advanced Visual Studies, who contributed a poem.

Miami Paper Acquitted On Objectivity Charge

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — The National News Council rejected a complaint Wednesday that contributions by officials of the Miami Herald to help defeat a casino gambling referendum may have impaired the newspaper's objectivity.

On another matter, the council held that an NBC News documentary on the lifestyle in California's Marin County was "journalistically flawed," but rejected a complaint that the program was "vicious, distorted and irresponsible."

Syndicated columnist Jim Bishop, who headed the Florida committee supporting the casino gambling issue, filed the complaint against the Miami Herald for the role its officials played in raising thousands of dollars to defeat the issue.

The gambling issue was defeated in November. A.H. Raskin, council associate director, said the council rejected the complaint, 7-2, that the contributions impaired the paper's coverage of the issue, but noted three potential areas of conflict.

"One is the possible prejudice of public confidence in the objectivity of the paper's news columns. Secondly, it tends to blur the lines of proper separation of the state and the press. And you may be feeding the notion, such as that expressed by Chief Justice Warren Burger, that news media conglomerates have little right to special immunities beyond those of other corporations," Raskin said.

The Herald contributed $16,000 in corporate funds to anti-casino organizations. Three other Knight-Ridder newspapers in Florida gave $9,000. Herald President Alvah Chapman and two relatives and James Knight, Herald board chairman, donated slightly more than $10,000. The total donated by Herald interests was $35,000.

Chapman also led a drive for $180,000 from other media sources through a citizens' committee sponsored by Gov. Reubin Askew.

Herald officials justified their involvement in the controversy on grounds that gambling would be harmful to Florida's economy, as well as that of the newspaper.

Raskin told the council his investigation showed some staff members objected that the publishers' involvement "went too far," but he said there was no question that the "totality of the Herald's news coverage was remarkable." He said the issue was presented objectively and thoroughly and there was no attempt by corporate executives to influence news judgment.

The council is an independent, non-profit organization composed chiefly of news media executives and some from other occupations.

The council reviewed several parts of the program on Marin County, which County Supervisor Barbara Boxer had claimed hurt the community.

The council concluded that NBC misled viewers by not fully explaining some sequences, and by failing to verify statistics quoted by some Marin residents as hearsay. The council's grievance committee had voted 6-1 Tuesday to support the complaint.

The council voted 8-2 Wednesday that the documentary incorrectly conveyed that Marin County had unusually high suicide, alcoholism and divorce rates compared with the rest of California.

Two specific sequences were also cited as misleading.

One depicted a $225 birthday party staged to impress children with the pleasures of wealth. The council said the program failed to show that the party was a promotional event.

Counterfeit Tape Firms Raided

dustries ever taken by the federal government, officials said.

No arrests were made. Thomas Puccio, head of the Organized Crime Strike Force, said he plans to present evidence to a grand jury scheduled to convene in January.

Possible violations of the law include violations of copyright and interstate shipping statutes, Puccio said.

CBS Axes More Shows; Five New Programs Due

LOS ANGELES (AP) — CBS, which has axed its new "Mary," "People" and "In the Beginning" series, dropped "American Girls" and "Rhoda" Tuesday and said it is taking "Good Times" off the air until spring.

The network said it will put five new weekly shows on the air when its mid-season schedule takes effect early next year.

CBS, the last of three networks to make public its mid-season program changes, said it also will return "WKRP in Cincinnati" — off the air in recent weeks — to its Monday schedule at mid-season.

Four of CBS' new shows are situation comedies. The fifth, "The Dukes of Hazard," is about three young cousins fighting corruption in rural Georgia and is a one-hour "comedy-adventure," CBS says.

The half-hour sitcoms are: —"The Stockard Channing Show," with Miss Channing, co-star of the hit movie, "Grease," cast as a young woman, estranged from her husband, who moves to Los Angeles and finds work at a health club.

—"Flatbush," about five young men recently graduated from high school in Brooklyn making their way in the world.

—"Co-Ed Fever," about life at what CBS calls "a state women's college" after it becomes a coeducational school.

—"Onward and Upward," starring John Amos as a former pro football player appointed to fill the unexpired term of a congressman who has died.

CBS said another weekly show, "The Mary Tyler Moore Hour," a variety show within a situation comedy format, has begun production and will be on the network schedule in the future. The dropped "Mary" was Miss Moore's variety show, which proved unpopular. The new show will be a comedy about trying to do a variety show.

Six returning series will be in new time periods when the mid-season schedule takes effect, CBS said. They are "Alice," which now will air Sundays at 9 p.m. EST; "The Incredible Hulk," "One Day at a Time," "The Jeffersons" and "Kas" all will air Wednesday nights, and "The White Shadow," which is moving to Saturday night.

IMAGIST PLAY TO BE PERFORMED AT TECH — "The Equestrian Assassination Of Billy The Kid," an original play by Texas Tech University doctoral student Steve Peters, opens tonight at the campus University Theater with an 8:15 p.m. performance. Subsequent performances are slated for the same time Friday, Saturday and again Dec. 15-16. Direction is by George Sorensen. The

SAN ANTONIO (UPI) — Discovery of the purple membrane, the only known example of photosynthesis occurring without chlorophyll, could lead to invention of a new type of solar battery, according to a scientist at the University of Texas-San Antonio.

Dr. Robert D. Renthal, assistant professor of biochemistry, has been awarded $178,000 in grants from the Public Health Service and Robert Welch Foundation to continue studies he began two years ago into the purple membrane.

Renthal wants to find out how the membrane, a specialized patch formed in red bacteria cells found along the Dead Sea and other salt flats, converts sunlight into electrical energy.

Renthal is quick to credit discovery of the purple membrane to Dr. Walter Stoeckenius of the University of California-San Francisco. Renthal said his research project was one of several started in recent years based on Stoeckenius' isolation of the membrane in 1965.

The purple membrane may represent the first hope of scientists to overcome the highly unstable condition of chlorophyll that has prevented its use to produce energy for man.

Heretofore — despite scientists' progress in developing solar cells, giant reflectors and other devices — scientists have lagged far behind nature in their ability to harness solar energy from chlorophyll. Although about one-third as efficient as chlorophyll, the purple membrane is more stable and more easily extracted from the bacteria.

"Based on the findings, scientists eventually may be able to design a plastic sheet, modeled on the membrane, that can store solar energy and function as a solar battery," Renthal said.

He said sunlight activates a pump-like mechanism in the purple membrane that carries protons, the simplest type of ion, across the cell membrane.

"The ejected protons produce an electrochemical gradient that the cell uses as a miniature battery," he said. "The research also may contribute to basic medical knowledge. The functions of the kidneys, the intestines and the nervous system involve ion pumps."

The bacteria normally use oxygen to extract energy from food, but when they become crowded and use all the oxygen in their surroundings, they make purple membranes that allow them to continue to live off sunlight, the scientist said.

Because the purple membrane helps the bacteria to push salt through their membranes to the outside, the research also could be useful in desalination projects to help man extract fresh water from the sea, the scientists said.

City Employees To Get Awards At Banquet

More than 200 City of Lubbock employees will receive service awards at the second annual employee appreciation banquet at 6:30 p.m. today at the Civic Center.

Mayor Dirk West and other members of the city council will present service awards to those who have been employed by the city five, 10, 15, 20, 25 and 30 years.

Those who will receive 30-year service awards and their departments are M.C. West, sanitation; Haskell Keeton, Arthur Holly, Nolan Gordan, Eugene Wood, Tilton Cobb and Wayne Mahaffey, fire; Albert G. Brewer and Arlen R. Mason, police; W.S. Hughes, electric production; and Jack Diamond, utilities collection.

Employees who have worked for the city for five and 10 years will receive service pins, and those who have worked longer will be presented inscribed walnut plaques bearing the new city logo engraved on copper.

Those who have retired or will retire in 1978 also will be honored at the banquet. The retirees include former City Attorney Fred Senter, who worked for the city 24 years; Fire Marshal A.C. Black, who will complete 31 years before retiring; and Deputy Fire Chief Haskell, with 30 years' service.

Others retiring from the fire department and their years of city employment are J.C. Martin, 30; G.R. Williamson, 28; Thurman Holly, 30; Bob Spence, 33; L. Leon Chapman, 25; James W. Goodwin, 21; Art Holly, 30; and Rufus Lusk, 25.

Those retiring from other departments include Walter Goodgion, 27 years, zoning; Royce Lane, 32 years, electric production; Irene Shipley, 32 years, data processing; R.L. Chisum, 15 years, building inspection; Floyce Mackey, 19 years, tax office; and E.M. Pruitt, 15 years, parks and recreation.

Dinner will be served buffet style beginning at 6:30 p.m. in the Civic Center exhibit hall, and presentations will begin about 7:30 p.m.

Entertainment for the event will be provided by the Dunbar-Struggs Jazz Rock Ensemble and the Dunbar-Struggs Panjammers.

Burglars Batter Harmless Pooch

KALAMAZOO, Mich. (AP) — Pooch, a tan and white mongrel described as a creature most likely either to hide from intruders or lick their hand, died Wednesday from a beating inflicted by burglars.

"We're all real upset about it, especially my wife and daughter," said Les Lowder, a service station owner who adopted the stray when it wandered into his business on Christmas Eve in 1972. "The men (at the station) are taking it pretty hard, too."

Pooch was inside Lowder's service station early Monday when burglars broke in. The small dog was slammed again and again with a baseball bat, then thrown into a grease pit to die.

Police said there are no suspects in the burglary. "It's pretty sick, isn't it?" asked one investigating officer.

"Perhaps it's better," said veterinarian Robert Coopes when he reported Pooch's death Wednesday. "I'm convinced he would have been a vegetable — not an animal."

Lowder said his pet's death was senseless.

Student-Designed Toys Aid Handicapped Tots

By PAT R. TEAGUE

United Press International Writer
Building a toy for a kid doesn't guarantee it will get any attention.

So Jim Sailor and Bob Clarke were apprehensive when several pairs of tiny, tentative feet approached their sky blue IM-2 space module.

The two men, Texas Tech University architectural sculpture students, knew they were facing the toughest critique of all: an inspection by toy lovers 10 years of age and under.

"Wow!" was the first inspector's response.

Suddenly, children were everywhere, unabashed as they climbed aboard the wedge-shaped, toy spacecraft. Kids spilled in and out of its cockpit, sometimes two at a time.

The I-2 (for "I am, too") had passed the test.

Like the rest of two Texas Tech sculpture classes, Sailor and Clarke spent a third of a college semester conjuring up and constructing toys for children affected by a variety of speech and hearing disorders.

The results of all that deadline carpentry and painting were a dozen or so colorful toys, which — to the children — appeared magically at the Tech speech and hearing clinic in mid-October.

The toys are designed to fulfill an architectural sculpture requirement and to assist children with speech and hearing problems. Some toys, like the airplane teeter-totter, are designed to foster the development of equilibrium.

Disenchanted Duo Charts Sailing Trip

FULLERTON, Pa. (UPI) — Jo Ann Newhart has been teaching in Northampton Area High School for nine years. Her husband Alan has a successful foreign car repair service in Fullerton.

On Alan's 30th birthday, "We talked about what we were going to do with our lives ... where we were and where we were going," Mrs. Newhart said.

Where they were, they agreed, was in a rut. Where they were going took a little more time.

What they decided to do was to sell everything, buy a boat and sail around the world.

"We want to meet people and find out how the rest of the world lives," Newhart said. "Do whatever happens at the moment."

Mrs. Newhart said she always has wanted to sail across the ocean to France.

"Alan was thinking about buying a sailboat," she said. "I wanted to go back to France (they had been there together on a brief visit). I had always had this fantasy about sailing across the ocean to France."

They spent most of last summer learning how to sail a 20-foot boat on Lake Wallenpaupack in the Pocono Mountains in Pennsylvania.

Later, they invested their savings in a 35-foot boat, which is awaiting them in Florida.

In early October Mrs. Newhart submitted her resignation to the school board. Alan has sold his business.

And, in a series of weekly garage sales, the couple is selling all of its worldly possessions. The Newharts plan to leave for Florida when the sales are completed.

Once in Florida they plan to spend a few months getting acquainted with the boat by going on trial runs in the Caribbean.

"There are plenty of uninhabited islands in the Caribbean," Mrs. Newhart said. "So we'll have plenty of time to do some exploring and scuba diving, as well as getting used to the boat. We'll live off the sea when we can."

The target date for the trip is early March. They plan to sail eastward to the coast of England.

The couple has named their boat "En Passant," the French equivalent of in passing or passing through.

"We are not retiring," Mrs. Newhart explained. "We are going to live and work where we are."

Family Begins Legal Moves In Dederich Case

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Synanon founder Charles Dederich, free on $100,000 bond in a rattlesnake attack on an attorney, may be released from a hospital over the weekend, an official said Wednesday. His family, meanwhile, asked a court for control of his affairs.

Guardianship papers filed Tuesday in Mohave County courthouse in Kingman ask that Dederich's wife, Regina, and daughter, Cecelia Jason, be named legal guardians.

Jan Tangdelius, spokeswoman for St. Joseph's Hospital in Phoenix, said the 65-year-old Dederich remained in serious condition in the coronary care unit. She said he would probably remain in the hospital for four or five more days. He had been flown there under police guard early Tuesday from a hospital in Kingman.

Several hours after the emergency flight, Dederich's attorneys posted a $100,000 bond following a hearing in a Lake Havasu City justice court.

With part of each designer's grade determined by the toy's popularity with the kids, Sailor and Clarke understandably were concerned. They shouldn't have given it a thought, clinic director Dr. Shara-lee Pierce said.

"I have encouraged them to consider patenting the (IM-2) and building it for commercial production," she said.

Certainly, the test audience reaction was favorable, she said.

"It's obvious that item attracted the children more than the others."

But she said all the toys — from the cylindrical merry-go-round to the padded oil barrels and a pull-apart wooden skeleton — have been extremely popular with the children.

Robert Venn, an assistant professor of architecture at the university, is proud of his students and their creations.

"These students spend one-third of a semester doing what would take a professional toy designer a year," he said.

But for Dr. Pierce and her nine associates the toys are serious business, more valuable for their therapeutic effects than their worth as novelties.

"We have noticed with a couple of the children who are non-verbal that they have uttered verbalizations (since the arrival of the toys) that we haven't heard before," she said.

"There's more spontaneous production of speech from children who didn't demonstrate this in the past. That's a big plus in therapy. You have to have something before you can do anything," she said.

Some of the 100 clients clinic workers see each year have severe language disorders, Dr. Pierce said. "Either they don't speak at all or when they speak it's so disordered that others can't understand them, not even their own parents, sometimes."

"So anything that can assist these children to use language better or at all is just an invaluable asset. We feel these toys have started to make that kind of impact in our program," she said.

In the toys, Dr. Pierce found no panacea. But, she said, they aid the children by encouraging uninhibited behavior and, through it, more verbalization.

The toy building program is in its third year at Tech. Each semester students create special toys to donate to an agency that works with children facing certain disorders.

Judging from the popularity of the IM-2, the padded barrels, the teeter-totter airplane and the cylindrical merry-go-round, there may be additional benefits for the creators themselves, Dr. Pierce said.

"We may have opened the door for some of them to go into the toy construction business. Who knows?"

Unbeaten Red Raiders Face 7-2 Center

By DON HENRY
Executive Sports Editor
With a shiny 3-0 record and after one trip away from home, Texas Tech returned to Lubbock Coliseum tonight to take on its toughest competition thus far and possibly the toughest of the month. The Raiders will run up against Colorado State University tonight (7:30 tipoff) to start a three-game homestand. And in one instance, the Raiders will all be looking up to one of the visiting Rams. Tech coaches tried to recruit 7-foot-2 Mark Jung out of Tucson, Ariz., last winter. Instead, Jung chose CSU, and he will be the starting center tonight. "Mark can shoot it for a big man," said Tech aide George Davidson, who scouted Colorado State last week, as well as leading the recruiting campaign on Jung. "Give him some room and time, and he can shoot. I mean shoot it out on the floor, not just beneath the basket." CSU coach Jim Williams has installed Jung as his center and the offensive strategy is to get the ball inside to him, said Davidson. "They play a deliberate game, although they'll break when they get a chance."

The Rams whacked Iowa 72-69 last Saturday, but earlier they lost a verdict to the Air Force Academy at Colorado Springs.

Tech is 3-0, having polished off a pair of smaller schools earlier last week and then tripping North Carolina-Charlotte on the road last Saturday night.

And Raider coach Gerald Myers has indicated that he will go with the same lineup which worked against NC-Charlotte.

That lineup will have 6-0 Geoff Huston, 6-5 Kent Williams and 6-5 Jeff Taylor outside and 6-9 Ralph McPherson and 6-8 Ralph Brewster inside.

"We could use Tommy Parks in there," mused Myers.

Brewster has hit 38 points in the three games, Williams and Huston 35 each. Adam Beadle, coming off the bench, has hit 29.

Eleven players have gotten into each game thus far, as Myers has experimented with various lineups.

The Rams will have a couple of freshmen in the lineup, Jung and 6-0 Eddie Hughes, a guard.

Rest of the way, the visitors will have 6-3 Alton Brandon, 6-5 Barry Young and 6-8 Kim Williamson.

Tech will attempt to get back onto its winning game tonight, after running into a deliberate team in Charlotte. The Raiders used the fast break and pressing defense in chilling the first two foes.

However, turnovers were a problem at Charlotte, and Myers will be seeking better control of the basketball in his offense.

Following tonight's game, the Raiders will take on Wyoming Saturday and Northeast Louisiana on Monday night.

Philbrick Retires As Tech Net Coach

George Philbrick, the long-time Texas Tech tennis coach, will retire from his coaching duties effective Dec. 31, Athletic Director Dick Tamburo announced Wednesday.

In making the announcement, Tamburo immediately named Mark Hamilton, a graduate assistant for the last two years under Philbrick and currently a professional at the Hillcrest Country Club, to fill the post for the 1979 season.

After his retirement as the Tech tennis coach, Philbrick will remain in the physical education department through the first session of summer school.

Philbrick, a Raider football letterman in 1936-38, joined the Tech staff as a physical education instructor in 1942. In 1947, he became the school's first full-time male physical education teacher.

In 1952, Philbrick became the tennis coach and has guided the Tech team since then. In the 19 years of Southwest Conference tennis competition, Philbrick's Tech teams have finished in the first division 12 times.

"George has been a part of Texas Tech athletics for a long time and has meant a lot to the school," said Tamburo. "Texas Tech owes George Philbrick a debt of gratitude for his long years of fine service."

Hamilton, 26, earned his undergraduate degree at Cal State-Fullerton and his Master's Degree at Tech.

According to Hamilton, an assistant will be hired at HCC to fill in when he is on the road with the Tech team this spring.

Equal Spending Urged For Fems

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Carter administration said Wednesday that major college football teams are unique and don't have to meet the same standards as other sports in eliminating sex discrimination.

Intercollegiate football was specifically cited as an exception to HEW Secretary Joseph A. Califano proposed new federal guidelines to eliminate sex discrimination from college athletics.

The proposed guidelines, aimed at clarifying a set of regulations stemming from a 1972 anti-discrimination law, prompted a quick rebuke from some feminist leaders.

Lynda Weston of the Project on Equal Education Responsibility, said: "It looks like they blew a hole right down the middle of the law."

Califano said the proposed new guidelines, being circulated for public comment before being made final in time for the start of school next fall, "recognizes that intercollegiate football, in particular, is unique among sports at some institutions."

The guidelines also suggest that basketball, when involving competition on a national level, may also deserve exempt status.

But under most other circumstances, the secretary said, a college or university would have to begin immediately to spend substantially the same amount on each woman participating in athletics as it spends on each man.

Califano said the guidelines would permit differences in expenditures based on what he called "non-discriminatory factors, such as the cost of a particular sport, for example, the equipment required, or the scope of competition."

Asked at a news conference for specific examples, the Health, Education and Welfare secretary refused to discuss individual cases, but said, "I do not believe any university in this country should have a problem complying with these guidelines."

Although the law barring sex discrimination in federally aided educational institutions was adopted six years ago and regulations to implement it were put into effect in 1975, colleges and universities were given a grace period of three years to bring their sports programs into compliance. That deadline passed last summer with many schools saying they didn't know what was required of them.

Califano's proposed guidelines would

AD Tamburo 'Looks Forward' To Rules

Texas Tech men's athletic director Dick Tamburo said Wednesday afternoon that he had not received any word or information concerning the new guidelines as mentioned by HEW Secretary Joseph A. Califano on women's and men's sports programs.

"I knew that something was supposed to be coming, but I hadn't gotten it," Tamburo said upon hearing of the statement issued by Califano in Washington.

"I know that groups have been trying to get a ruling on the matter. But, let's face it: Football is the sport that makes most programs successful. If they isolate football and basketball (from the equal financial guidelines for male-female athletes), then you could have a decent shot at having a well rounded sports program."

"Basketball could be a part of it. And, in some areas, such as Wisconsin, Minnesota, Michigan, Michigan State (teams with which Tamburo was familiar during his days as an associate AD at Illinois), ice hockey was a revenue-producing sport."

"But, I'm looking forward to getting the guidelines. Unless it went to the president's office and it didn't get over to me (Wednesday), then we haven't gotten anything on it yet. I'm sure going to check in the morning (today)."

during an Estacado workout Wednesday. The Matadors will meet the Gainesville Leopards in an AAA semifinal football game Saturday at 6 p.m. in Wichita Falls. (Photo By Milton Adams).

EHS Linemen Improve With Age

By BOB BAJACKSON
Avalanche-Journal Sports Staff

Don't bother to stroll into the local record store and hunt for an album entitled "Get Down" by the Blue Machine. In fact, there aren't any disco steps written for the beat.

The Blue Machine is the nickname of the Estacado Matador offensive line. And the get down phase to their routine is a coaching instruction.

"The coaches tell us to say low," said Matador tackle Rusty Johnson. "We are a close knit group who just try and work together."

Of course, Johnson and the rest of the offensive line doesn't get the chance to do their thing until center Manuel Escamilla snaps the football.

"I really don't get nervous when the noseguard lines up over the football," said Escamilla. "I just try to think about a particular blocking assignment for a particular play."

Escamilla handles all the snapping duties. The Estacado center claims that the deep snap to the punter is the most difficult.

"You can't afford to snap the ball high in a punting situation, because it will distract a kicker's timing," said Escamilla. "On field goal snaps, of course you have (Henderson quarterback). Kenneth then relays the adjustment to us (the line)."

If the adjustment involves changing the Matadors' strategy from trap blocking to wide plays, a sign of relief seems to come from the offensive wall.

"Because our offense is based on wide plays, we have more success blocking on when the season began," said Kelley. "In fact, our offensive line was not very good for the first five games of the season. We thought about making some changes, but didn't because we had the best people playing there."

So what was the key to the improvement?

"I think just the experience they got playing together made the difference," said the Estacado coach. "Just getting used to working with one another has made them a better unit."

After taking a brief vote, the Matador offensive line unanimously agreed that pass blocking counter rights and traps were the hardest blocking assignments.

"It gets busy when a linebacker will shoot the gap in the hole the play is designed to go," said Johnson. "So, you have to hit the defensive lineman low and then shoot across and hit the linebacker."

Despite the lack of confidence expressed by various polls, the Estacado offensive line likes its chances on winning the AAA state championship.

"It doesn't bother us that we've been overlooked by the polls," Johnson and Sanders said simultaneously. "But when we win the state championship, then they'll have to pick us number one."

The Matador trench stalwarts don't mind practicing in December either.

"Our goals have been winning the state championship since the summer," said Sanders.

Added Johnson "It's not not so bad. At least the snow is waiting to fall until after practice."

Playoff Roundup

to keep the ball low, but the distance isn't as great, so the risk is lower."

According to guard Darryl Saunders, how the Matador offense blocks, depends upon what the opponent's defense is set-up to stop.

"We don't have any offensive signals," said guard Saunders. "The coaches in the pressbox make the adjustments and send word down to the field. Then, someone brings in the play and tells Kenneth sweep plays," said guard Greg Evans.

But tackle Mike Esquivel quickly added, "Base blocking along with sweeps have been most successful because of our quickness."

However, there was a time that when coach Louis Kelley watched his offensive line under game conditions, he spent more time hiding his face than actually watching the action.

"Our offensive line was not very good

Cotton Center Eyes Bouquet

By RUSS PARSONS
Avalanche-Journal Sports Staff

The football field at Cotton Center is ringed on three sides by cotton fields. And if a giant hand (or one of the biting cold winds that hurtle through) was to pick you up and lift you high enough that you could see forever, that's still all you'd see. Cotton fields.

Some still have the bolls on the stalk. Others are naked. Brown and black and stripped of anything that looks alive.

Others still have been plowed under already and all that shows are rows and rows of deep furrowed ground and dirty white cotton lint clattering the roads like city snow.

They say that this year's crop is coming in especially late and that's not good news. They also say that this year's pheasant hunt should be one of the best ever. That's good news as the season starts this weekend.

To get to the six-man football finals, Cotton Center defeated Christoval last weekend at Grady. Leading only 22-16 and with the Cougars knocking, the Elks turned Christoval away four plays from their own two-yard line in the last minute and a half.

That's something you just don't do in six-man football.

But having already gone 10 games without losing, that's also the kind of thing that will happen.

The Elks face Cherokee, a 23-14 winner over Milford, Friday night at 7:30 p.m. in Shotwell Field in Abilene to decide the championship.

If credit for the Cotton Center season this year is to be handed out, start with coach Monte Lee.

A Hale Center native who went on to become an all-America ballplayer at the University of Texas and then bounce around the pros for a couple of years, Lee has brought his team to the championship game in only his second year as head man.

But the main topic of conversation over coffee at the cotton gin and at any of the three churches in town isn't the late cotton harvest or the coming pheasant hunt.

What people are talking about is the Elks. Not the kind with horns, the kind with helmets.

And Cotton Center has got football fever as only a town of 260 with a team in the Texas championships can.

At the elementary school they pick their favorite players every week. That's not real hard since there's only 19 on the squad.

But some of the older members of the community, families that don't have any children in school even, have attended all of the Elks' games, home and away.

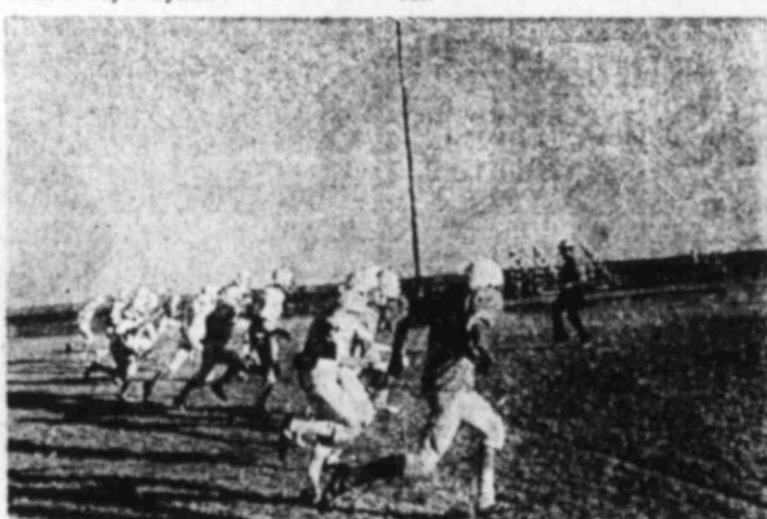

That is hard since the drive to the game usually consists of a two-hour journey across farm-to-market roads.

After being an assistant coach at Plainview for 10 years, he dropped out of the business to take on the freshman dean assignment at the same school.

But when Cotton Center came looking for a combination coach-principal, the offer was too good to refuse.

So, never having coached or played a down of six-man football, Lee has built at least the second-best team in the state of Texas in only two years.

Of course, he has a lot of talent to work with. He says there are even two or three players on his team that could play small college ball.

But a big factor has been the support he's gotten from the community. Heck, some folks are even saying they'll shut down their harvesting to go down to Abilene to take in the game. That's serious.

Sherwood Trods Successful Path

By JIM FERGUSON
Avalanche-Journal Sports Staff

Greg Sherwood doesn't admit to having any unknown potion in his possession on how to become a successful high school football coach. There are no tricks up his sleeves, either.

The way he tells it, the secret has been around for years. First, he says, hire a group of able-bodied assistants, willing to work a few thousand hours a week.

Second, get a job with a school which has more than its share of good athletes in the stable.

And third, be willing to your own can off.

If you can get two of the three above mentioned, then the team might win a few games; get all three, like Sherwood currently has, and it's nothing but W's from now on.

"You've got to get those assistants," said the Plainview head coach. "That's a big part of it, all right. I don't want to brag on mine too much because they are sitting right here. But that's a real key to it."

So under the first rule pencil in: "Once you've got good help, don't spoil 'em." That could be called rule 1a, for those keeping score.

"Another big part to winning," he continued, "is to go to a school with some good kids. That certainly doesn't hurt anything. I've been lucky that I've always had some good talent."

But as everyone that's every been associated with the game of football knows, that can't be all there is to turning a sagging football program into a prime contender. There's also the head man himself—which is in this case, Sherwood.

"It's that man right there that makes the difference," assistant coach Neal Billingsley said after the Bulldogs had beaten El Paso Andress 32-14 for the Region I football title. "He takes those kids' hearts into his hands and they'll do anything for him."

Roger Jones, once a pupil under Sherwood at Spearman but now a defensive end at Texas Tech, explained things this way: "I don't know what it is about him (Sherwood), but you just like playing for him. Before every game, he gets you mentally ready to play. And when you're out there you give 100 percent on every play. Some way, he gets you hungry for the fight."

Sherwood's Bulldogs will have a real fight on their hands Saturday afternoon at 1:00 p.m. in Jones Stadium when they meet Odessa Permian in a quarterfinal clash.

Since becoming a head coach, Sherwood has posted one of the finer won-lo-s marks found anywhere, especially after taking into consideration that the programs he has turned around weren't prime jobs when he first got there. In every case, Sherwood has taken over football programs that could be very easily termed slumping, for a lack of a better phrase. Not counting this season's 11-1 mark, the 17-year head coach has run up a 107-29-2 count.

At Spearman, Sherwood's residence before taking over at Plainview, he won district titles all five years he was there. Prior to his arrival the Spearman football team had been out of the playoff scene for 20 years.

During that five-year span, his SHS club never lost a district contest—a record he has kept intact at Plainview.

"The last time I lost a district game," repeated Sherwood, after the subject popped up during the course of the conversation, "I think it was back in '72. It's been awhile."

Although he had more than a lot of success in league wars, his Spearman teams were beaten in bidistrict playoffs four times by Childress. However, three of those times, Childress went on to either win or wind up as the bridesmaids in the Class AA state finals, which was some consolation to Sherwood.

The only time Spearman did sidetrack Childress, the Lynx went all the way to the finals, eventually getting tripped by Newton 56-28.

But Sherwood's success isn't just limited to Spearman, he also left winning teams at Dalhart, Liberal, Kan.; and Kermit.

In every instance—bar none—Sherwood has taken teams that have fallen on some pretty hard times and helped turn their programs completely around. And that includes his present place of employment.

"There's been no where to go but up for a couple of places I've been," commented Sherwood. "I've had some challenges that I've enjoyed."

"Whenever you get a chance to do something nobody else has ever done before, that's quite a challenge. That's the reason I took the job."

"But every where I have been I've gotten lots of help from everybody, especially here in Plainview. The town has really gotten behind what we've been doing. Even if our season ends Saturday, we've had a great one."

Rose Contract Shocks Baseball

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — The economic vibrations of Pete Rose's $3.2 million free agent contract with the Philadelphia Phillies continued to send shudders through the baseball establishment at the winter meetings Wednesday. And the team most likely to feel the fallout first is the Pittsburgh Pirates, who still are negotiating with Dave Parker, the National League's Most Valuable Player for 1978.

Parker will be in his contract option year in 1979 if the Pirates are unable to sign him, and that would mean they could lose him on a free agent market that that seems intent on climbing higher and higher, despite the warnings of Commissioner Bowie Kuhn.

At the press conference which unveiled Rose as baseball's highest-salaried player, there was some discussion of the lures he got from the finalists in the signing sweepstakes. Among them, said Rose, was the offer of a brood mare from the Darby Dan Farm owned by the Galbreath family, which also owns the Pirates.

That piece of intelligence must have fascinated Parker, who, at 27, figures he should be worth at least as much to the Pirates as they offered a player 10 years older than him.

Reports swept the convention Wednesday that Parker had taken a new approach to the negotiations with the Galbreaths, which still are continuing. Pittsburgh had hoped to conclude the talks by Thanksgiving Day, but Parker and his attorney, Tom Reich, were in no hurry, preferring to wait and see what kind of package Rose received.

Now they know, and it will almost certainly affect the tenure of future negotiations. If Rose was worth a brood mare, Parker might ask for a champion colt or stallion.

Reich, who is at these meetings, said the report that Parker was asking for the same package that the Galbreaths had offered Rose was untrue. He said negotiations with the Pirates would continue Wednesday.

But the attorney acknowledged that the Rose deal would have a tremendous affect on the player market. "If I didn't go in that direction, I wouldn't be doing my job," Reich said.

Pete Peterson, Pittsburgh's general manager, said the money already on the table for Parker was far more than that offered Rose. But Peterson didn't mention horses or any other fringe benefits that obviously would increase the total worth of the contract package and were involved in the Galbreath dealings with Rose.

There also is a certain amount of time pressure on the Pirates because Parker has said that if he isn't signed by opening day next season, he would end negotiations and leave Pittsburgh.

Meanwhile, relief pitchers remained the main priority in the player marketplace as the minor league half of the meetings drew to a close with the election of Johnny Johnson, a long-time aide of the commissioner, to succeed Bobby Bragan as president of the National Association.

Toronto sent reliever Victor Cruz to Cleveland in exchange for a pair of minor league infielders, Alfredo Griffin and Phil Lansford.

"We are future-oriented," said Pat Gillick, general manager of the Blue Jays.

SPORTS SPENDING—HEW Secretary Joseph Califano announces Wednesday government plans to require colleges and universities to spend the same per capita amount on women's sports as they do for men's, with key exceptions for football and so-called "non-discriminatory factors". (AP Laserphoto)

HEW Wants Budget Equality For Fems

require immediate equalization of per capita expenditures on scholarships, recruiting and other "easily financially measurable" standards. It would give colleges up to three more years to implement programs to encourage more women to participate in athletics.

The spending requirement purportedly would apply to all sports, including those that bring in money through ticket sales. But it recognizes "that certain sports that produce revenue, such as football and basketball, may require greater expenditures without having a discriminatory effect."

The guidelines also took note of "the higher cost of sports involving large teams, large coaching staffs, expensive equipment and facilities and additional costs of travel, recruiting, publicity and the like associated with national competition."

Thomas C. Hansen of the National Collegiate Athletic Association, said he was pleased that HEW is "addressing the problem of having regulations that did not recognize the unique status of football and basketball." But he expressed concern about the requirement for equal expenditures and said the costs "will be very high for a major university or proportionately for any university."

Margot Polivy, an attorney for the Association for Intercollegiate Athletics for Women, said the proposed guidelines merely "muddy" the issue. She said they appear to accept a status quo in which intercollegiate athletics are dominated by men.

Tale Of 3 Coaches.One Sees Efforts Awarded

ATLANTA (AP) — Vince Dooley, coming off the only losing campaign of his career at Georgia, felt like a winning season would be a successful one.

It turned into his most satisfying year yet — a 9-1-1 record, a second place finish in the Southeastern Conference, a No. 11 national ranking and an Astro-Bluebonnet Bowl engagement with the Stanford Cardinals.

It also provided personal recognition. Dooley, lifting his 15-year Georgia record to 112-50-6, Thursday was named The Associated Press SEC Coach of the Year.

He won in a landslide, receiving 10 votes from a 12-man panel of area sports writers.

The other two votes went to Alabama's Paul "Bear" Bryant, who steered the Crimson Tide to their seventh conference title in eight years, edging out Dooley's Dogs by a half-game.

"I'm very proud," Dooley said upon learning of the award. "As in any kind of Coach of the Year selection, it is a tribute to the coaches and players, an amazing group of players. I accept it for everybody."

Dooley entered the season painting a gloomy picture. That's really not unusual. He normally ranks among the most pessimistic preseason coaches in the country.

"The thing that worried me, though, was that everybody was agreeing with me," he said.

His Bulldogs registered upset victories over Baylor and Gator Bowl-bound Clemson at the start, then dropped their first road game at South Carolina.

Georgia strung together consecutive triumphs over Mississippi, Louisiana State, Vanderbilt, Kentucky, VMI and Florida before fighting Auburn to a tie, a game that denied Georgia a share of the title and a spot in the Sugar Bowl game.

"As I look back, I'll have the one regret, the biggest regret of all — that my decision, which I still feel like was the right one, turned out not to be the right one for our team and did not win us a share of the championship and the right to go to the Sugar Bowl," he said.

Dooley was referring to his decision to kick the tying point against Auburn when Georgia scored with less than six minutes remaining, rather than trying for a 2-point conversion and victory.

...One Seeking Employment

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Oklahoma State's committee to find a new football coach will meet again Friday, but one applicant already has been told he needn't wait for a call.

"I was very interested, but Dr. Young (Athletic Director Richard Young) told me outright that he wanted to go outside the (Big Eight) conference," said Bill Mallory, the fired Colorado coach. "He told me that OSU had no interest in me."

Among the prospects rumored as a successor to Jim Stanley are Texas assistant Leon Fuller, a former Oklahoma State assistant; Tennessee-Chattanooga head Coach Joe Morrison and Hayden Fry, head coach at North Texas State.

The Daily Oklahoman said Wednesday that Mallory was contacted by telephone at Boulder and said he inquired "at length" about the Oklahoma State job "but was turned down" by Young.

Young he had not been "that harsh" with Mallory, and he declined to confirm Mallory's statement that Oklahoma State would go outside the Big Eight for a new coach.

"Bill Mallory and I are very close friends and I hope he didn't interpret my comments the wrong way," Young said. "I just didn't feel that he was the right man in the right spot at the right time."

Oklahoma State has received about 50 "serious" applications and "I'd consider about 35 of them viable. . . I've received a lot more that were neither serious nor viable," Young said.

He said he hoped a new coach would be named "before mid-December" to replace Stanley, who was relieved of his coaching duties two weeks ago by Dr. L.L. Beger, school president. Beger said Stanley would be "reassigned."

One source said applications would be accepted through next Monday and that "most of those already received are from outside the Big Eight and from college assistants."

There were reports that Oklahoma State wants a new coach before Dec. 14, when Stanley has a federal court date in Kansas City. That's when he will seek a preliminary injunction prohibiting the Big Eight from conducting hearings into its investigation of an alleged slush fund for athletes at Oklahoma State.

Stanley last Thursday was granted a temporary restraining order by U.S. District Judge Russell G. Clark prohibiting the conference from discussing the investigation on the ground that Stanley had been denied due process. His order barred the conference from proceeding with information from informants unless Stanley was given a chance to cross-examine the informants.

NEW YORK (AP) — Homer Smith was fired as Army's head football coach Wednesday after recording one winning season in five years and losing four of five games to arch-rival Navy.

In a terse announcement, the Public Affairs Office of the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, N.Y., disclosed that the 47-year-old Smith's contract would not be renewed. Smith compiled a 21-33-1 record as Army's 27th head coach.

Raymond P. Murphy, Army's athletic director, said the search for a new coach would begin immediately.

The West Point announcement said Smith had informed academy officials that he did not expect to continue as coach. There was no further explanation of that statement.

HOMER SMITH
... Fired from Army

Smith, whose original four-year contract expired last season, was given a one-year extension after Army posted a 7-4 record in 1977 and defeated Navy 17-14, capping the Cadets' first winning campaign in five years and their best record since 1968. Following the season, Smith was named Eastern Coach of the Year by the Football Writers Association of New York.

He reportedly had been given an ultimatum following the 1976 season that he had to win at least seven games and beat Navy in 1977 to keep his job.

A West Point spokesman said the decision not to renew Smith's contract was reached Monday morning. However, Smith reportedly informed the team at a New Jersey restaurant on Sunday en route home from Saturday's 28-0 loss to Navy in Philadelphia that he did not expect to be back following a 4-6-1 record. His contract expires Jan. 31, 1979.

Smith was unavailable for comment. He was in Omaha, Neb., attending the funeral of a brother, Dean Smith, who was killed in an automobile accident over the weekend.

Lt. Gen. Andrew J. Goospaster, superintendent of the Military Academy, praised Smith for his contributions to Army football.

"His personal qualities and professionalism were inspirational to the Corps of Cadets. We wish him the very best," Goodpaster said.

Under Smith, Army posted a 3-8 record in 1974, 2-9 in 1975 and 5-6 in 1976. His overall record was 53-71-1 in 12 years at Davidson, Pacific and Army. He also served as offensive coordinator at UCLA under Pepper Rodgers.

Colts Place Barnes On Injured Reserve

BALTIMORE (AP) — Mike Barnes, selected by fellow National Football League players last season as the league's best defensive lineman, was placed on the injured reserve list by the Baltimore Colts Wednesday.

The Colts said Barnes' place on the roster for the remaining two games of this season would be filled by Greg Marshall, a rookie free agent from Morgan State.

A six-year veteran from Miami, Barnes injured his knee in the Colts' victory over the Washington Redskins Nov. 6 and had sat out the club's last four games.

He had his best year as a pro last season, registering 51 tackles and eight quarterback sacks. Barnes had recorded five sacks before his injury this year.

Versatile Cefalo Proves Worth

Miami Receiver Lauded By Fans, Shula

MIAMI (AP) — Jimmy Cefalo isn't one of the big names in 1978's impressive National Football League crop. But he does have a few distinctions that Earl Campbell and his other peers are lacking:

—He'll be the first to have his own book published;

—He's one-half of the only recorded Pottstown, Pa., to Pittston, Pa., touchdown combination in NFL history.

—He leads the NFL, and probably the entire football world, in pass-receiving efficiency.

The Miami Dolphins' third-round draft choice from Penn State will soon have his account of playing major-college football in the bookstores. A series of excerpts was used by newspapers throughout the country earlier this year.

After some annoying problems common to most new authors, Cefalo said, "Unless we have more hassles, it'll be out soon."

"There have been so many problems, I'm tired of thinking about it," he said.

The Pottstown-to-Pittston pass represents the hometowns of Dolphin backup quarterback Don Strock and Cefalo. It occurred against St. Louis two months ago.

And for the pass-receiving efficiency, Cefalo has turned 60 percent of his receptions into touchdowns, and is averaging 28.4 yards per catch.

"They're going to have to start a new category in statistics," Cefalo said.

Of course, that statistic is misleading. Cefalo only has five receptions, but three have been for touchdowns and a 26-yarder set up another touchdown.

"I don't know how efficient I've been, because there haven't very many," he noted.

"But I've been pleased. I've mainly just been in the pressure situations, and it's a good way for a rookie to improve."

"I'm playing behind two really great receivers (Nat Moore and Duriel Harris), so I know I'm not getting much playing time, but I do usually go in on the third-and-eight, third-and-nine."

Cefalo also returns punts for the Dolphins and has a respectable 8.6 yard average.

His versatility and hard work have impressed coach Don Shula.

"He's been everything we hoped he would be. We've been able to use him on third-and-long when the other team is concentrating on Duriel and Nat."

"He's made a couple of clutch catches, and Bob Griese has the confidence to throw to him in those situations."

Shula added, "He's the kind of person you like to have. He's quiet around the meetings, but he's always all eyes and ears, picking things up. And the thing we like best is that he hasn't taken a half-speed step since he's been here."

Cefalo, who praises Joe Paterno's coaching in his book, said comparing Shula with the Penn State coach is "like apples and oranges."

"They're both winning coaches in different situations. The similarity ends there. There're two different approaches. Paterno handles his players differently. I don't really like to even try to compare them."

Lawsuit Filed Against

Martin By Journalist

RENO, Nev. (AP) — A Reno sports-writer has filed suit against former New York Yankees Manager Billy Martin in connection with a Nov. 10 incident in which Martin allegedly punched the reporter.

The suit, filed Tuesday in district court here, claims Martin assaulted Nevada State Journal reporter Ray Hagar with "no provocation or offense" while Hagar was interviewing him.

Hagar, who suffered three broken teeth and a blackened eye, is asking for $10,000 in general damages and $10,000 in punitive damages.

The suit also charges the Western Basketball Association — which Hagar claimed Martin was promoting at the time — and the Reno Bighorns of the WBA with negligence and has asked for $10,000 in damages.

Martin was at the Bighorns' opening game at the time of the alleged incident. The morning after the game, Hagar said that Martin socked him at least twice.

Angry Perry Seeks Free Agent Status

WILLIAMSTON, N.C. (AP) — Righthander Gaylor Perry, upset because the San Diego Padres refused to negotiate a new two-year contract, said Tuesday he plans to become a free agent after the 1979 baseball season.

Perry, who posted a 21-6 record and won the Cy Young Award this year, said he went to San Diego last month to try to add another year to his present contract, which runs through the 1979 season.

"I have always had a two-year contract, and I started trying the first of September to get another year on the current contract," Perry, 40, said in a telephone interview from his home in eastern North Carolina.

"I had a 6-0 record in September, and after I won the Cy Young Award, I went back out to try again and I got another 'no,'" he said. "I said that winning the Cy Young has got to be worth something."

Perry said he never discussed salary in a contract extension with Padres' officials because he received "a flat no." He said he mentioned the possibility of a bonus and team officials said that would be against their policy.

Freshman Keith Peterson scored 18 points and sophomore U.S. Reed added 15 for the Hogs, who used 14 players in the triumph.

Dan Elmer scored 15 points and Eddie Harris added 14 for the Buffaloes, but the visitors managed only 34 percent shooting against the Porker defense.

It was never a contest. West Texas had a 4-2 lead in the first two minutes, but six minutes later, the Razorbacks led 17-10.

The victory was Arkansas' second in as many games. West Texas State slipped to 3-2.

Local Cagers Make Way To Tournaments Galore

The Lubbock Christian High School Eagles will put their perfect 8-0 record on the line today when they face Olton in the first round of the Ralls Basketball Tournament.

The Eagles will face the Mustangs at 1:30 p.m.

Other Lubbock high school basketball teams in tournament competition today: the Lubbock Christian girls team against Olton in the Ralls Tournament at 10:30 a.m.; the Lubbock High girls team battle Odessa at 10 a.m. in the Levelland Tournament; Dunbar boys will meet Ysleta in the Levelland Tournament; the Estacado boys will face Midland in the Canyon Tournament.

No question, that things have been going good for the Lubbock Christian boys basketball team.

Included in their current 8-0 record, the Eagles defeated the Estacado Matadors to win the recently concluded Plainview Tournament.

Shawn Williams put 26 points through the hoop for Lubbock Christian in the Eagles' 74-59 victory.

Besides that win, Lubbock Christian placed Tim Perrin and Billy McConnell on the all-tournament team.

So, with the Eagles appearing in mid-season form, coach Gary Bowe expressed the modest comment, "I'm very proud of the way our kids have played."

What seems to be amazing about Lubbock Christian's success is that the Eagles are playing good basketball despite the fact the LCHS football team played in the Texas Association of Private Schools championship game this year.

Leon Spinks Found Innocent In Trial

ELYRIA, Ohio (AP) — Former heavy-weight boxing champion Leon Spinks was found innocent in a brief non-jury trial Wednesday of charges that he failed to control his 1979 silver Corvette when it crashed through a fence in this Lorain County city.

The verdict was pronounced by Elyria Municipal Court Judge Stephen R. Nagy at 10 a.m. on Oct. 21.

Nagy said city failed to show that Spinks did not exercise reasonable control of the two-day-old, $13,000 sports car before the accident off Ohio 57 about 6 a.m. on Oct. 21.

Spinks testified that he went through the fence when his rear wheel slipped on gravel. He said he was trying to avoid an oncoming car.

"I was in full control but I hit the grass and slid into the fence," he testified.

"I went on to the hotel because I knew the tracks would lead them to me anyway," he said. "I was not trying to hide."

Neither Spinks nor a bodyguard who was with him were injured in the accident.

On emerging from the courtroom, Spinks said he was pleased with the verdict and that the judge "treated me like a human being, not a celebrity."

Dentist Heard In Randle Suit

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — The Texas Rangers' team dentist took the witness stand Wednesday in a damage suit filed here by former team manager Frank Lucchesi against a baseball player he charges attacked him.

Carl Rainone said a blow probably broke five of Lucchesi's teeth and loosened several others.

But Rainone, under cross examination from attorneys for former Ranger infielder Lenny Randle, would not say if a fist had struck the blow. He admitted regular decay could possibly cause a tooth fracture.

The dentist described root canal surgery and bridgework he did on Lucchesi's teeth.

Sports writer William "Blackie" Sherrod of the Dallas Times-Herald also took the stand. Players Tom Grieve and Bert Blyleven were to testify later Wednesday.

Lucchesi is suing Randle for damages as a result of a spring training altercation. The former manager for the American League baseball team claims Randle attacked him without provocation before an exhibition game here in March 1977.

Lucchesi has claimed that Randle was angry at being replaced in the lineup and slugged and kicked him. He's suing for an undetermined sum believed to be upwards of $250,000.

Sherrod told the jury he saw Randle throw several blows in Lucchesi's direction. Though he didn't see any of them hit, he assumed they had because he saw the manager fall down and his face was later badly bruised.

The sportswriter also described a press conference several days before the fight in which Randle's status with the team was discussed.

"I am sick and tired of these punks making $80,000, moaning and groaning... 'Play me or trade me,'" Sherrod quoted Lucchesi as saying when asked if Randle had tried to leave spring training camp.

"I don't blame Lennie. He just wants to play. I'll say this for him, he's always given 110 percent to the Rangers," Sherrod quoted.

Farm Groups Coalition Urged

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (UPI) — Farmers must cooperate with other factions of the agriculture industry and get along with consumer groups if they hope to regain their influence in Washington, a special counsel to the U.S. House Agriculture Committee said Wednesday.

PLAINS AGRICULTURE

By DUANE HOWELL

U. S. WHEAT PRODUCERS AREN'T disappointed about the failure of recent world wheat treaty talks and would rather have no agreement than a bad one.

So says Don Woodward, international trade affairs representative of the National Association of Wheat Growers and a past NAWG president.

"The U. S. government has earnestly sought an international agreement to assure wheat security and protect U. S. producer interests," he says. "The government should be given credit for resisting unworkable proposals advanced by other nations."

MORE THAN 50 WHEAT EXPORTING and importing nations have been involved over the last 15 months in efforts to write a new treaty to replace the existing 1971 International Wheat Agreement.

A second negotiating round ended last week without reaching final settlement, and Woodward says prospects for a treaty acceptable to U. S. interests remain in doubt.

"The European Community has been inflexible and wants to keep prices in the agreement low to limit the accumulation of reserves," Woodward said. "This violates the concept of the proposed agreement and it would be disastrous for our government to agree to the EC's position."

Woodward said importing nations should realize that low prices jeopardize wheat production and their food security.

THE CENTERPIECE OF THE NEGOTIATING document is the establishment of an international wheat reserve under member-country control which would operate to keep market prices within what would be considered an "acceptable" range.

Woodward maintains that such a plan is doomed if the price levels for triggering stock accumulation and release are set at low levels. The NAWG has argued for reserve accumulation when prices hit the farm level equivalent of the U. S. target price and "a release trigger which would permit producers to receive parity prices in the marketplace."

Woodward said farmers would be better served without an agreement than with one which restricts market freedom and keeps the supply burden on the United States.

MEANWHILE, DALE HATHAWAY, assistant U. S. agriculture secretary for international affairs and commodity programs, left this week for London and Geneva for further talks with EC officials on the agreement.

Hathaway is making the trip at the request of the Europeans and ambassador Alonzo McDonald, the U. S. negotiator at the multinational trade negotiations in Geneva.

It was the failure of the United States and the European Community to reach a compromise on a floor price which would trigger the accumulation of wheat stocks that produced the breakdown in the negotiations last week.

RESULTS OF THE TALKS BETWEEN Hathaway and EC officials will determine whether the interim committee has further meetings, officials said.

Officials noted that Finn Olav Gundersen, vice president and commissioner of the European Economic Community is scheduled to be in Geneva this week.

Hathaway would not say if he was taking a new U. S. proposal on prices to the talks, but said: "I hope to show the Europeans the errors of their ways (concerning prices)."

Georgetown University Law Center and counsel to the committee, told the closing session of the National Farm Summit a coalition of farm groups is needed to unify the political voice of agriculture and help push meaningful farm legislation through Congress.

"Agriculture can expect to starve if it continues to oppose Ralph Nader, Carol Foreman and other spokesmen for non-production groups," Kramer said. "You cannot fight everybody all the time."

The National Farm Summit, sponsored by the Agriculture Council of America and Texas A&M University, attracted more than 400 delegates and about 200 farmers who crashed the opening session Monday and dominated the discussions of state force reports on five major areas of agricultural problems.

The farmers, affiliated with the American Agriculture Movement, parked tractors and grain trucks outside the conference and at times argued heatedly with economists and others on the program.

But Kramer warned policies of confrontation, such as those used by AAM, could do more harm than good in attempting to win approval of legislation beneficial to farm families.

"You can't thumb your noses at them and then expect them to do your bidding," he said. "Congress quickly becomes immune to that type of approach."

Bob Bitner, an AAM member from Walsh, Colo., said that groups support the idea of a farm coalition to increase agriculture's political clout, but disagreed with Kramer's contention that the AAM techniques had not been effective and its goals were unrealistic.

"If we're unrealistic, we at least operate in the real world," Bitner said. "We think of ourselves as brash but we get people's head out of the sand and get them moving."

Kramer urged participants at the three-day conference, which was boycotted by the Farm Bureau, to overcome differences and work together.

"All of us in this room are a little suspicious of one another. AAM clearly is suspicious of everyone else, and everyone is clearly suspicious of AAM," he said.

Dr. Ronald D. Knutson, professor of agricultural policy at Texas A&M, said the summit had diagnosed tight supply demand situations, unprecedented inflation, family farm survival and nutrition as new dimensions of problems facing American farmers.

"In the past, the main problem confronting agriculture was that of low prices, while today it is inflation," Knutson said. "Rapid inflation has put the farmer in an increasingly high risk position. Farmers, particularly young farmers, are increasingly in a win-or-lose-all risk position."

The 200 AAM members who crashed the opening session on Monday were permitted to participate in the discussions throughout the three-day conference, even though most of them refused to pay the $90 registration fee.

Cattle Futures Mixed

By Reuters

CHICAGO — Cattle futures closed 45 points lower to 27 higher on 26,899 cars Wednesday on the Chicago Mercantile Exchange. Distant January was off the most with April at the best gain after rising 77. Earlier, nearby January fell 57.

The rally carried June, August and February to new season's highs and came on the prospect of snow and cold and continued strong stopping of deliveries.

There were 451 deliveries. Wholesale beef was off 1 to 2 cents at 82 cents a pound, f.o.b. river points. Cash cattle were steady to off $1 with the best top $56 per hundredweight. Omaha's top was $55.

Slaughter was 141,000 head. The major markets are expecting 14,600 head today.

Fewer cattle futures closed 32 lower to 10 higher on 2,584 contracts. January was the weakest with November at the best gain. Earlier, nearby contracts fell 67, while May rose 60.

Early selling followed weakness in live cattle futures and also stemmed from a heavy run of feeders to market and weakness in beef. Support was generated by a forecast of snow and cold and some continued high prices in cash feeder cattle.

Cash feeder cattle were off $2 to $3 with the best top $100 per hundredweight at Greeley. Receipts at the major terminals are expected today to be 10,000 head.

Hog futures closed 67 higher to 27 lower on 7,643 cars. February was up the most with only distant February lower. Earlier, April gained 85 after July fell 65.

Outset selling came on heavy hog runs and lower prices and the possibility of 5 to 25 or more deliveries. Late support was sparked by the forecast for snow and cold.

Wholesale hams were up 1 to 2 cents at 95 to 111 cents a pound, f.o.b. river, which is a one year high.

Market Hits Recent Peak

NEW YORK (AP)—Stock prices struggled to a new five-week high Wednesday despite increased resistance from sellers cashing in on the market's recent rise.

The New York Stock Exchange had its busiest session in more than three weeks.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial, which had jumped more than 13 points on Tuesday, added another 1.39 to 821.90. Since mid-November the average has risen 36.64 points.

Big Board volume came to 29.68 million shares, up from 25.67 million Tuesday and the heaviest total since a 30.61 million-share day on Nov. 14.

One catalyst for the upswing Tuesday was provided by David Rockefeller, chairman of New York's Chase Manhattan Bank, who told a press conference in London that fears of a severe credit crunch were exaggerated.

Rockefeller maintained that the bank prime lending rate, now at 11 1/2 percent, is near its peak for this cycle.

Buying interest seemed to fade somewhat Wednesday, however, with the Dow Jones industrial average at its highest level since early November. And some traders evidently began selling to cash in on the market's recent rise.

New York (AP)—Wednesday's national prices for New York Stock Exchange issues as of NYSE close. Prices and volume consolidated for securities also traded on other markets.

Unbeaten Red Raiders Face 7-2 Center

By DON HENRY
Executive Sports Editor

With a shiny 3-0 record and after one trip away from home, Texas Tech returned to Lubbock Coliseum tonight to take on its toughest competition thus far and possibly the toughest of the month. The Raiders will run up against Colorado State University tonight (7:30 tipoff) in a three-game homestand. And in one instance, the Raiders will all be looking up to one of the visiting Rams.

Tech coaches tried to recruit 7-foot-2 Mark Jung out of Tucson, Ariz., last winter. Instead, Jung chose CSU, and he will be the starting center tonight.

"Mark can shoot it for a big man," said Tech aide George Davidson, who scouted Colorado State last week, as well as leading the recruiting campaign on Jung. "Give him some room and time, and he can shoot. I mean shoot it out on the floor, not just beneath the basket."

CSU coach Jim Williams has installed Jung as his center and the offensive strategy is to get the ball inside to him, said Davidson. "They play a deliberate game, although they'll break when they get a chance."

The Rams whacked Iowa 72-69 last Saturday, but earlier they lost a verdict to the Air Force Academy at Colorado Springs.

Tech is 3-0, having polished off a pair of smaller schools earlier last week and then tripping North Carolina-Charlotte on the road last Saturday night.

And Raider coach Gerald Myers has indicated that he will go with the same lineup which worked against NC-Charlotte.

That lineup will have 6-0 Geoff Huston, 6-5 Kent Williams and 6-5 Jeff Taylor outside and 6-9 Ralph McPherson and 6-8 Ralph Brewster inside.

"We could use Tommy Parks in there," mused Myers.

Brewster has hit 38 points in the three games, Williams and Huston 35 each. Adam Beadle, coming off the bench, has hit 29.

Eleven players have gotten into each game thus far, as Myers has experimented with various lineups.

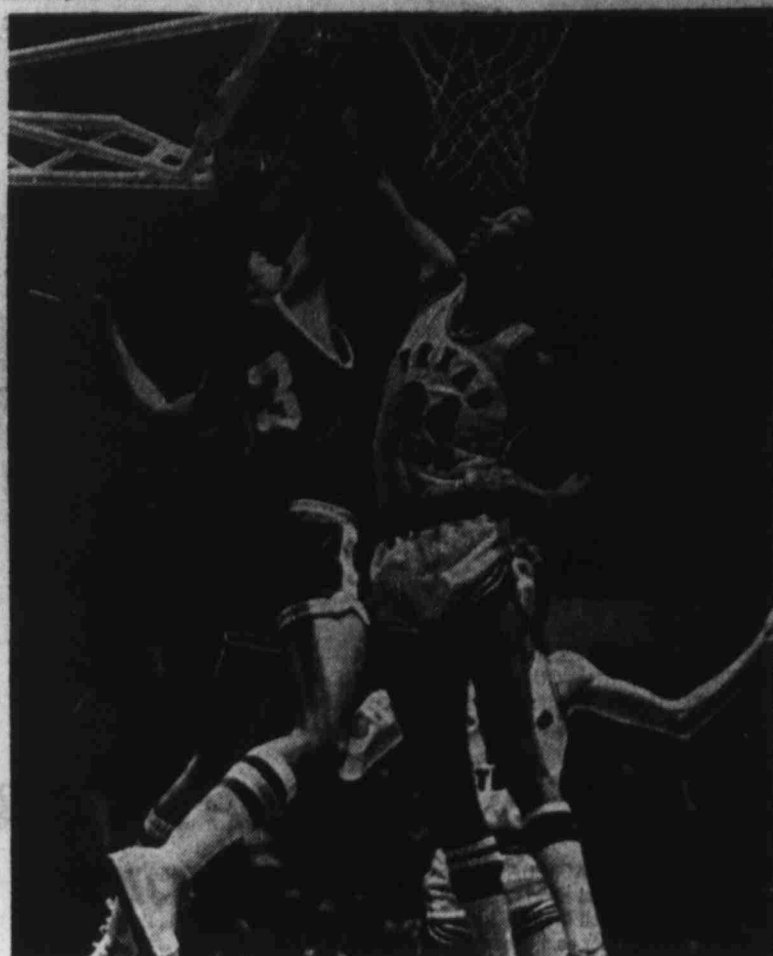

The Rams will have a couple of freshmen in the lineup, Jung and 6-0 Eddie Hughes, a guard.

Rest of the way, the visitors will have 6-3 Alton Brandon, 6-5 Barry Young and 6-8 Kim Williamson.

Tech will attempt to get back onto its running game tonight, after running into a deliberate team in Charlotte. The Raiders used the fast break and pressing defense in chilling the first two foes.

However, turnovers were a problem at Charlotte, and Myers will be seeking better control of the basketball in his offense.

Following tonight's game, the Raiders will take on Wyoming Saturday and Northeast Louisiana on Monday night.

Philbrick Retires As Tech Net Coach

George Philbrick, the long-time Texas Tech tennis coach, will retire from his coaching duties effective Dec. 31, Athletic Director Dick Tamburo announced Wednesday.

In making the announcement, Tamburo immediately named Mark Hamilton, a graduate assistant for the last two years under Philbrick and currently a professional at the Hillcrest Country Club, to fill the post for the 1979 season.

After his retirement as the Tech tennis coach, Philbrick will remain in the physical education department through the first session of summer school.

Philbrick, a Raider football letterman in 1936-38, joined the Tech staff as a physical education instructor in 1942. In 1947, he became the school's first full-time male physical education teacher.

In 1952, Philbrick became the tennis coach and has guided the Tech team since then. In the 19 years of Southwest Conference tennis competition, Philbrick's Tech teams have finished in the first division 12 times.

"George has been a part of Texas Tech athletics for a long time and has meant a lot to the school," said Tamburo. "Texas Tech owes George Philbrick a debt of gratitude for his long years of fine service."

Hamilton, 26, earned his undergraduate degree at Cal State-Fullerton and his Master's Degree at Tech.

According to Hamilton, an assistant will be hired at HCC to fill in when he is on the road with the Tech team this spring.

Equal Spending Urged For Fems

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Carter administration said Wednesday that major college football teams are unique and don't have to meet the same standards as other sports in eliminating sex discrimination.

Intercollegiate football was specifically cited as an exception as HEW Secretary Joseph A. Califano proposed new federal guidelines to eliminate sex discrimination from college athletics.

The proposed guidelines, aimed at clarifying a set of regulations stemming from a 1972 anti-discrimination law, prompted a quick rebuke from some feminist leaders.

Lynda Weston of the Project on Equal Education Responsibility, said: "It looks like they blew a hole right down the middle of the law."

Califano said the proposed new guidelines, being circulated for public comment before being made final in time for the start of school next fall, "recognizes that intercollegiate football, in particular, is unique among sports at some institutions."

The guidelines also suggest that basketball, when involving competition on a national level, may also deserve exempt status.

But under most other circumstances, the secretary said, a college or university would have to begin immediately to spend substantially the same amount on each woman participating in athletics as it spends on each man.

Califano said the guidelines would permit differences in expenditures based on what he called "non-discriminatory factors, such as the cost of a particular sport, for example, the equipment required, or the scope of competition."

Asked at a news conference for specific examples, the Health, Education and Welfare secretary refused to discuss individual cases, but said, "I do not believe any university in this country should have a problem complying with these guidelines."

Although the law barring sex discrimination in federally aided educational institutions was adopted six years ago and regulations to implement it were put into effect in 1975, colleges and universities were given a grace period of three years to bring their sports programs into compliance. That deadline passed last summer with many schools saying they didn't know what was required of them.

Califano's proposed guidelines would

AD Tamburo 'Looks Forward' To Rules

Texas Tech men's athletic director Dick Tamburo said Wednesday afternoon that he had not received any word or information concerning the new guidelines as mentioned by HEW Secretary Joseph A. Califano on women's and men's sports programs.

"I knew that something was supposed to be coming, but I hadn't gotten it," Tamburo said upon hearing of the statement issued by Califano in Washington.

"I know that groups have been trying to get a ruling on the matter. But, let's face it: Football is the sport that makes most programs successful. If they isolate football and basketball (from the equal financial guidelines for male-female athletes), then you could have a decent shot at having a well rounded sports program."

"Basketball could be a part of it. And, in some areas, such as Wisconsin, Minnesota, Michigan, Michigan State (teams with which Tamburo was familiar during his days as an associate AD at Illinois), ice hockey was a revenue-producing sport."

"But, I'm looking forward to getting the guidelines. Unless it went to the president's office and it didn't get over to me (Wednesday), then we haven't gotten anything on it yet. I'm sure going to check in the morning (today)."

By BOB BAJACKSON
Avalanche-Journal Sports Staff

Don't bother to stroll into the local record store and hunt for an album entitled "Get Down" by the Blue Machine. In fact, there aren't any disco steps written for the beat.

The Blue Machine is the nickname of the Estacado Matador offensive line. And the get down phase to their routine is a coaching instruction.

"The coaches tell us to say low," said Matador tackle Rusty Johnson. "We are a close knit group who just try and work together."

Of course, Johnson and the rest of the offensive line doesn't get the chance to do their thing until center Manuel Escamilla snaps the football.

"I really don't get nervous when the noseguard lines up over the football," said Escamilla. "I just try to think about a particular blocking assignment for a particular play."

Escamilla handles all the snapping duties. The Estacado center claims that the deep snap to the punter is the most difficult.

"You can't afford to snap the ball high in a punting situation, because it will distract a kicker's timing," said Escamilla. "On field goal snaps, of course you have (Henderson quarterback). Kenneth then relays the adjustment to us (the line)."

If the adjustment involves changing the Matadors' strategy from trap blocking to wide plays, a sigh of relief seems to come from the offensive wall.

"Because our offense is based on wide plays, we have more success blocking on when the season began," said Kelley. "In fact, our offensive line was not very good for the first five games of the season. We thought about making some changes, but didn't because we had the best people playing there."

So what was the key to the improvement?

"I think just the experience they got playing together made the difference," said the Estacado coach. "Just getting used to working with one another has made them a better unit."

After taking a brief vote, the Matador offensive line unanimously agreed that pass blocking counter rights and traps were the hardest blocking assignments.

"It gets busy when a linebacker will shoot the gap in the hole the play is designed to go," said Johnson. "So, you have to hit the defensive lineman low and then shoot across and hit the linebacker."

Despite the lack of confidence expressed by various polls, the Estacado offensive line likes its chances on winning the AAA state championship.

"It doesn't bother us that we've been overlooked by the polls," Johnson and Sanders said simultaneously. "But when we win the state championship, then they'll have to pick us number one."

The Matador trench stalwarts don't mind practicing in December either.

"Our goals have been winning the state championship since the summer," said Sanders.

Playoff Roundup

to keep the ball low, but the distance isn't as great, so the risk is lower."

According to guard Darryl Saunders, how the Matador offense blocks, depends upon what the opponent's defense is set up to stop.

"We don't have any offensive signals," said guard Saunders. "The coaches in the pressbox make the adjustments and send word down to the field. Then, someone brings in the play and tells Kenneth sweep plays," said guard Greg Evans.

But tackle Mike Esquivel quickly added, "Base blocking along with sweeps have been most successful because of our quickness."

However, there was a time that when coach Louis Kelley watched his offensive line under game conditions, he spent more time hiding his face than actually watching the action.

"Our offensive line was not very good

Cotton Center Eyes Bouquet

By RUSS PARSONS
Avalanche-Journal Sports Staff

The football field at Cotton Center is ringed on three sides by cotton fields. And if a giant hand (or one of the biting cold winds that hurtle through) was to pick you up and lift you high enough that you could see forever, that's still all you'd see. Cotton fields.

Some still have the bolls on the stalk. Others are naked. Brown and black and stripped of anything that looks alive.

Others still have been plowed under already and all that shows are rows and rows of deep furrowed ground and dirty white cotton lint clattering the roads like city snow.

They say that this year's crop is coming in especially late and that's not good news. They also say that this year's pheasant hunt should be one of the best ever. That's good news as the season starts this weekend.

To get to the six-man football finals, Cotton Center defeated Christoval last weekend at Grady. Leading only 22-16 and with the Cougars knocking, the Elks turned Christoval away four plays from their own two-yard line in the last minute and a half.

That's something you just don't do in six-man football.

But having already gone 10 games without losing, that's also the kind of thing that will happen.

The Elks face Cherokee, a 23-14 winner over Milford, Friday night at 7:30 p.m. in Shotwell Field in Abilene to decide the championship.

If credit for the Cotton Center season this year is to be handed out, start with coach Monte Lee.

A Hale Center native who went on to become an all-America ballplayer at the University of Texas and then bounce around the pros for a couple of years, Lee has brought his team to the championship game in only his second year as head man.

But the main topic of conversation over coffee at the cotton gin and at any of the three churches in town isn't the late cotton harvest or the coming pheasant hunt.

What people are talking about is the Elks. Not the kind with horns, the kind with helmets.

And Cotton Center has got football fever as only a town of 260 with a team in the Texas championships can.

At the elementary school they pick their favorite players every week. That's not real hard since there's only 19 on the squad.

But some of the older members of the community, families that don't have any children in school even, have attended all of the Elks' games, home and away.

That is hard since the drive to the game usually consists of a two-hour journey across farm-to-market roads.

After being an assistant coach at Plainview for 10 years, he dropped out of the business to take on the freshman dean assignment at the same school.

But when Cotton Center came looking for a combination coach-principal, the offer was too good to refuse.

So, never having coached or played a down of six-man football, Lee has built at least the second-best team in the state of Texas in only two years.

Of course, he has a lot of talent to work with. He says there are even two or three players on his team that could play small college ball.

But a big factor has been the support he's gotten from the community. Heck, some folks are even saying they'll shut down their harvesting to go down to Abilene to take in the game. That's serious.

Sherwood Trods Successful Path

By JIM FERGUSON
Avalanche-Journal Sports Staff

Greg Sherwood doesn't admit to having any unknown potion in his possession on how to become a successful high school football coach. There are no tricks up his sleeves, either.

The way he tells it, the secret has been around for years. First, he says, hire a group of able-bodied assistants, willing to work a few thousand hours a week.

Second, get a job with a school which has more than its share of good athletes in the stable.

And third, be willing to your own can off.

If you can get two of the three above mentioned, then the team might win a few games; get all three, like Sherwood currently has, and it's nothing but W's from now on.

"You've got to get those assistants," said the Plainview head coach. "That's a big part of it, all right. I don't want to brag on mine too much because they are sitting right here. But that's a real key to it."

So under the first rule pencil in: "Once you've got good help, don't spoil 'em." That could be called rule 1a, for those keeping score.

"Another big part to winning," he continued, "is to go to a school with some good kids. That certainly doesn't hurt anything. I've been lucky that I've always had some good talent."

But as everyone that's every been associated with the game of football knows, that can't be all there is to turning a sagging football program into a prime contender. There's also the head man himself—which is in this case, Sherwood.

"It's that man right there that makes the difference," assistant coach Neal Billingsley said after the Bulldogs had beaten El Paso Andress 32-14 for the Region I football title. "He takes those kids' hearts into his hands and they'll do anything for him."

Roger Jones, once a pupil under Sherwood at Spearman but now a defensive end at Texas Tech, explained things this way: "I don't know what it is about him (Sherwood), but you just like playing for him. Before every game, he gets you mentally ready to play. And when you're out there you give 100 percent on every play. Some way, he gets you hungry for the fight."

Sherwood's Bulldogs will have a real fight on their hands Saturday afternoon at 1:30 p.m. in Jones Stadium when they meet Odessa Permian in a quarterfinal clash.

Since becoming a head coach, Sherwood has posted one of the finer won-loss marks found anywhere, especially after taking into consideration that the programs he has turned around weren't prime jobs when he first got there. In every case, Sherwood has taken over football programs that could be very easily termed slumping, for a lack of a better phrase. Not counting this season's 11-1 mark, the 17-year head coach has run up a 107-29-2 count.

At Spearman, Sherwood's residence before taking over at Plainview, he won district titles all five years he was there. Prior to his arrival the Spearman football team had been out of the playoff scene for 20 years.

During that five-year span, his SHS club never lost a district contest—a record he has kept intact at Plainview.

"The last time I lost a district game," repeated Sherwood, after the subject popped up during the course of the conversation, "I think it was back in '72. It's been awhile."

Although he had more than a lot of success in league wars, his Spearman teams were beaten in bidistrict playoffs four times by Childress. However, three of those times, Childress went on to either win or wind up as the bridesmaids in the Class AA state finals, which was some consolation to Sherwood.

The only time Spearman did sidetrack Childress, the Lynx went all the way to the finals, eventually getting tripped by Newton 56-24.

But Sherwood's success isn't just limited to Spearman, he also left winning teams at Dalhart, Liberal, Kan.; and Kermit.

In every instance—bar none—Sherwood has taken teams that have fallen on some pretty hard times and helped turn their programs completely around. And that includes his present place of employment.

"There's been no where to go but up for a couple of places I've been," commented Sherwood. "I've had some challenges that I've enjoyed."

"Whenever you get a chance to do something nobody else has ever done before, that's quite a challenge. That's the reason I took the job."

But every where I have been I've gotten lots of help from everybody, especially here in Plainview. The town has really gotten behind what we've been doing. Even if our season ends Saturday, we've had a great one."

Rose Contract Shocks Baseball

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — The economic vibrations of Pete Rose's $3.2 million free agent contract with the Philadelphia Phillies continued to send shudders through the baseball establishment at the winter meetings Wednesday. And the team most likely to feel the fallout first is the Pittsburgh Pirates, who still are negotiating with Dave Parker, the National League's Most Valuable Player for 1978.

Parker will be in his contract option year in 1979 if the Pirates are unable to sign him, and that would mean they could lose him on a free agent market that seems intent on climbing higher and higher, despite the warnings of Commissioner Bowie Kuhn.

At the press conference which unveiled Rose as baseball's highest-salaried player, there was some discussion of the lures he got from the finalists in the signing sweepstakes. Among them, said Rose, was the offer of a brood mare from the Darby Dan Farm owned by the Galbreath family, which also owns the Pirates.

That piece of intelligence must have fascinated Parker, who, at 27, figures he should be worth at least as much to the Pirates as they offered a player 10 years older than him.

Reports swept the convention Wednesday that Parker had taken a new approach to the negotiations with the Galbreaths, which still are continuing. Pittsburgh had hoped to conclude the talks by Thanksgiving Day, but Parker and his attorney, Tom Reich, were in no hurry, preferring to wait and see what kind of package Rose received.

Now they know, and it will almost certainly affect the tenure of future negotiations. If Rose was worth a brood mare, Parker might ask for a champion colt or stallion.

Reich, who is at these meetings, said the report that Parker was asking for the same package that the Galbreaths had offered Rose was untrue. He said negotiations with the Pirates would continue Wednesday.

But the attorney acknowledged that the Rose deal would have a tremendous affect on the player market. "If I didn't go in that direction, I wouldn't be doing my job," Reich said.

Pete Peterson, Pittsburgh's general manager, said the money already on the table for Parker was far more than that offered Rose. But Peterson didn't mention horses or any other fringe benefits that obviously would increase the total worth of the contract package and were involved in the Galbreath dealings with Rose.

There also is a certain amount of time pressure on the Pirates because Parker has said that if he isn't signed by opening day next season, he would end negotiations and leave Pittsburgh.

Meanwhile, relief pitchers remained the main priority in the player marketplace as the minor league half of the meetings drew to a close with the election of Johnny Johnson, a long-time aide of the commissioner, to succeed Bobby Bragan as president of the National Association.

Toronto sent reliever Victor Cruz to Cleveland in exchange for a pair of minor league infielders, Alfredo Griffin and Phil Lansford.

"We are future-oriented," said Pat Gillick, general manager of the Blue Jays.

SPORTS SPENDING—HEW Secretary Joseph Califano announces Wednesday government plans to require colleges and universities to spend the same per capita amount on women's sports as they do for men's, with key exceptions for football and so-called "non-discriminatory factors". (AP Laserphoto)

require immediate equalization of per capita expenditures on scholarships, recruiting and other "easily financially measurable" standards. It would give colleges up to three more years to implement programs to encourage more women to participate in athletics.

The spending requirement purportedly would apply to all sports, including those that bring in money through ticket sales. But it recognizes "that certain sports that produce revenue, such as football and basketball, may require greater expenditures without having a discriminatory effect."

The guidelines also took note of "the higher cost of sports involving large teams, large coaching staffs, expensive equipment and facilities and additional costs of travel, recruiting, publicity and the like associated with national competition."

Thomas C. Hansen of the National Collegiate Athletic Association, said he was pleased that HEW is "addressing the problem of having regulations that did not recognize the unique status of football and basketball." But he expressed concern about the requirement for equal expenditures and said the costs "will be very high for a major university or proportionately for any university."

Margot Polivy, an attorney for the Association for Intercollegiate Athletics for Women, said the proposed guidelines merely "muddy" the issue. She said they appear to accept a status quo in which intercollegiate athletics are dominated by men.

Tale Of 3 Coaches.One Sees Efforts Awarded

ATLANTA (AP) — Vince Dooley, coming off the only losing campaign of his career at Georgia, felt like a winning season would be a successful one.

It turned into his most satisfying year yet — a 9-1-1 record, a second place finish in the Southeastern Conference, a No. 11 national ranking and an Astro-Bluebonnet Bowl engagement with the Stanford Cardinals.

It also provided personal recognition. Dooley, lifting his 15-year Georgia record to 112-50-6, Thursday was named The Associated Press SEC Coach of the Year.

He won in a landslide, receiving 10 votes from a 12-man panel of area sports writers.

The other two votes went to Alabama's Paul "Bear" Bryant, who steered the Crimson Tide to their seventh conference title in eight years, edging out Dooley's Dogs by a half-game.

"I'm very proud," Dooley said upon learning of the award. "As in any kind of Coach of the Year selection, it is a tribute to the coaches and players, an amazing group of players. I accept it for everybody."

Dooley entered the season painting a gloomy picture. That's really not unusual. He normally ranks among the most pessimistic preseason coaches in the country.

"The thing that worried me, though, was that everybody was agreeing with me," he said.

His Bulldogs registered upset victories over Baylor and Gator Bowl-bound Clemson at the start, then dropped their first road game at South Carolina.

Georgia strung together consecutive triumphs over Mississippi, Louisiana State, Vanderbilt, Kentucky, VMI and Florida before fighting Auburn to a tie, a game that denied Georgia a share of the title and a spot in the Sugar Bowl game.

"As I look back, I'll have the one regret, the biggest regret of all — that my decision, which I still feel like was the right one, turned out not to be the right one for our team and did not win for us a share of the championship and the right to go to the Sugar Bowl," he said.

Dooley was referring to his decision to kick the tying point against Auburn when Georgia scored with less than six minutes remaining, rather than trying for a 2-point conversion and victory.

. . .One Seeking Employment

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Oklahoma State's committee to find a new football coach will meet again Friday, but one applicant already has been told he needn't wait for a call.

"I was very interested, but Dr. Young (Athletic Director Richard Young) told me outright that he wanted to go outside the (Big Eight) conference," said Bill Mallory, the fired Colorado coach. "He told me that OSU had no interest in me."

Among the prospects rumored as a successor to Jim Stanley are Texas assistant Leon Fuller, a former Oklahoma State assistant; Tennessee-Chattanooga head Coach Joe Morrison and Hayden Fry, head coach at North Texas State.

The Daily Oklahoman said Wednesday that Mallory was contacted by telephone at Boulder and said he inquired "at length" about the Oklahoma State job "but was turned down" by Young.

Young he had not been "that harsh" with Mallory, and he declined to confirm Mallory's statement that Oklahoma State would go outside the Big Eight for a new coach.

"Bill Mallory and I are very close friends and I hope he didn't interpret my comments the wrong way," Young said. "I just didn't feel that he was the right man in the right spot at the right time."

Oklahoma State has received about 50 "serious" applications and "I'd consider about 35 of them viable. . . I've received a lot more that were neither serious nor viable," Young said.

He said he hoped a new coach would be named "before mid-December" to replace Stanley, who was relieved of his coaching duties two weeks ago by Dr. L.L. Boger, school president. Boger said Stanley would be "reassigned."

One source said applications would be accepted through next Monday and that "most of those already received are from outside the Big Eight and from college assistants."

There were reports that Oklahoma State wants a new coach before Dec. 14, when Stanley has a federal court date in Kansas City. That's when he will seek a preliminary injunction prohibiting the Big Eight from conducting hearings into its investigation of an alleged slush fund for athletes at Oklahoma State.

Stanley last Thursday was granted a temporary restraining order by U.S. District Judge Russell G. Clark prohibiting the conference from discussing the investigation on the ground that Stanley had been denied due process. His order barred the conference from proceeding with information from informants unless Stanley was given a chance to cross-examine the informants.

NEW YORK (AP) — Homer Smith was fired as Army's head football coach Wednesday after recording one winning season in five years and losing four of five games to arch-rival Navy.

In a terse announcement, the Public Affairs Office of the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, N.Y., disclosed that the 47-year-old Smith's contract would not be renewed. Smith compiled a 21-33-1 record as Army's 27th head coach.

Raymond P. Murphy, Army's athletic director, said the search for a new coach would begin immediately.

The West Point announcement said Smith had informed academy officials that he did not expect to continue as coach. There was no further explanation of that statement.

Smith, whose original four-year contract expired last season, was given a one-year extension after Army posted a 7-4 record in 1977 and defeated Navy 17-14, capping the Cadets' first winning campaign in five years and their best record since 1968. Following the season, Smith was named Eastern Coach of the Year by the Football Writers Association of New York.

He reportedly had been given an ultimatum following the 1976 season that he had to win at least seven games and beat Navy in 1977 to keep his job.

A West Point spokesman said the decision not to renew Smith's contract was reached Monday morning. However, Smith reportedly informed the team at a New Jersey restaurant on Sunday en route home from Saturday's 28-0 loss to Navy in Philadelphia that he did not expect to be back following a 4-6-1 record. His contract expires Jan. 31, 1979.

Smith was unavailable for comment. He was in Omaha, Neb., attending the funeral of a brother, Dean Smith, who was killed in an automobile accident over the weekend.

Lt. Gen. Andrew J. Goospaster, superintendent of the Military Academy, praised Smith for his contributions to Army football.

"His personal qualities and professionalism were inspirational to the Corps of Cadets. We wish him the very best," Goodpaster said.

Under Smith, Army posted a 3-8 record in 1974, 2-9 in 1975 and 5-6 in 1976. His overall record was 53-71-1 in 12 years at Davidson, Pacific and Army. He also served as offensive coordinator at UCLA under Pepper Rodgers.

Colts Place Barnes On Injured Reserve

BALTIMORE (AP) — Mike Barnes, selected by fellow National Football League players last season as the league's best defensive lineman, was placed on the injured reserve list by the Baltimore Colts Wednesday.

The Colts said Barnes' place on the roster for the remaining two games of this season would be filled by Greg Marshall, a rookie free agent from Morgan State.

A six-year veteran from Miami, Barnes injured his knee in the Colts' victory over the Washington Redskins Nov. 6 and had sat out the club's last four games.

He had his best year as a pro last season, registering 51 tackles and eight quarterback sacks. Barnes had recorded five sacks before his injury this year.

Versatile Cefalo Proves Worth

Miami Receiver Lauded By Fans, Shula

MIAMI (AP) — Jimmy Cefalo isn't one of the big names in 1978's impressive National Football League crop. But he does have a few distinctions that Earl Campbell and his other peers are lacking:

—He'll be the first to have his own book published;

—He's one-half of the only recorded Pottstown, Pa., to Pittston, Pa., touchdown combination in NFL history.

—He leads the NFL, and probably the entire football world, in pass-receiving efficiency.

The Miami Dolphins' third-round draft

choice from Penn State will soon have his account of playing major-college football in the bookstores. A series of excerpts was used by newspapers throughout the country earlier this year.

After some annoying problems common to most new authors, Cefalo said, "Unless we have more hassles, it'll be out soon."

"There have been so many problems, I'm tired of thinking about it," he said.

The Pottstown-to-Pittston pass represents the hometowns of Dolphin backup quarterback Don Strock and Cefalo. It occurred against St. Louis two months ago.

And for the pass-receiving efficiency, Cefalo has turned 60 percent of his receptions into touchdowns, and is averaging 28.4 yards per catch.

"They're going to have to start a new category in statistics," Cefalo said.

Of course, that statistic is misleading. Cefalo only has five receptions, but three have been for touchdowns and a 26-yarder set up another touchdown.

"I don't know how efficient I've been, because there haven't very many," he noted.

"But I've been pleased. I've mainly just been in the pressure situations, and it's a good way for a rookie to improve."

"I'm playing behind two really great receivers (Nat Moore and Duriel Harris), so I know I'm not getting much playing time, but I do usually go in on the third-and-eight, third-and-nine."

Cefalo also returns punts for the Dolphins and has a respectable 8.6 yard average.

His versatility and hard work have impressed coach Don Shula.

"He's been everything we hoped he would be. We've been able to use him on third-and-long when the other team is concentrating on Duriel and Nat."

"He's made a couple of clutch catches, and Bob Griese has the confidence to throw to him in those situations."

Shula added, "He's the kind of person you like to have. He's quiet around the meetings, but he's always all eyes and ears, picking things up. And the thing we like best is that he hasn't taken a half-speed step since he's been here."

Cefalo, who praises Joe Paterno's coaching in his book, said comparing Shula with the Penn State coach is "like apples and oranges."

"They're both winning coaches in different situations. The similarity ends there. There're two different approaches. Paterno handles his players differently. I don't really like to even try to compare them."

Lawsuit Filed Against

Martin By Journalist

RENO, Nev. (AP) — A Reno sports-writer has filed suit against former New York Yankees Manager Billy Martin in connection with a Nov. 10 incident in which Martin allegedly punched the reporter.

The suit, filed Tuesday in district court here, claims Martin assaulted Nevada State Journal reporter Ray Hagar with "no provocation or offense" while Hagar was interviewing him.

Hagar, who suffered three broken teeth and a blackened eye, is asking for $10,000 in general damages and $10,000 in punitive damages.

The suit also charges the Western Basketball Association — which Hagar claimed Martin was promoting at the time — and the Reno Bighorns of the WBA with negligence and has asked for $10,000 in damages.

Martin was at the Bighorns' opening game at the time of the alleged incident. The morning after the game, Hagar said that Martin socked him at least twice.

Angry Perry Seeks Free Agent Status

WILLIAMSTON, N.C. (AP) — Righthander Gaylor Perry, upset because the San Diego Padres refused to negotiate a new two-year contract, said Tuesday he plans to become a free agent after the 1979 baseball season.

Perry, who posted a 21-6 record and won the Cy Young Award this year, said he went to San Diego last month to try to add another year to his present contract, which runs through the 1979 season.

"I have always had a two-year contract, and I started trying the first of September to get another year on the current contract," Perry, 40, said in a telephone interview from his home in eastern North Carolina.

"I had a 6-0 record in September, and after I won the Cy Young Award, I went back out to try again and I got another 'no,'" he said. "I said that winning the Cy Young has got to be worth something."

Perry said he never discussed salary in a contract extension with Padres' officials because he received "a flat no." He said he mentioned the possibility of a bonus and team officials said that would be against their policy.

Local Cagers Make Way To Tournaments Galore

The Lubbock Christian High School Eagles will put their perfect 8-0 record on the line today when they face Olton in the first round of the Ralls Basketball Tournament.

The Eagles will face the Mustangs at 1:30 p.m.

Other Lubbock high school basketball teams in tournament competition today: the Lubbock Christian girls team against Olton in the Ralls Tournament at 10:30 a.m.; the Lubbock High girls team battle Odessa at 10 a.m. in the Levelland Tournament; Dunbar boys will meet Ysleta in the Levelland Tournament; the Estacado boys will face MidJnd in the Canyon Tournament.

No question, that things have been going good for the Lubbock Christian boys basketball team.

Included in their current 8-0 record, the Eagles defeated the Estacado Matadors to win the recently concluded Plainview Tournament.

Shawn Williams put 26 points through the hoop for Lubbock Christian in the Eagles' 74-59 victory.

Besides that win, Lubbock Christian placed Tim Perrin and Billy McConnell on the all-tournament team.

So, with the Eagles appearing in mid-season form, coach Gary Bowe expressed the modest comment, "I'm very proud of the way our kids have played."

What seems to be amazing about Lubbock Christian's success is that the Eagles are playing good basketball despite the fact the LCHS football team played in the Texas Association of Private Schools championship game this year.

Leon Spinks Found Innocent In Trial

ELYRIA, Ohio (AP) — Former heavyweight boxing champion Leon Spinks was found innocent in a brief non-jury trial Wednesday of charges that he failed to control his 1979 silver Corvette when it crashed through a fence in this Lorain County city.

The verdict was pronounced by Elyria Municipal Court Judge Stephen R. Nagy at the end of a half-hour trial.

Nagy said city failed to show that Spinks did not exercise reasonable control of the two-day-old, $13,000 sports car before the accident off Ohio 57 about 6 a.m. on Oct. 21.

Spinks testified that he went through the fence when his rear wheel slipped on gravel. He said he was trying to avoid an oncoming car.

"I was in full control but I hit the grass and slid into the fence," he testified.

"I went on to the hotel because I knew the tracks would lead them to me anyway," he said. "I was not trying to hide."

Neither Spinks nor a bodyguard who was with him were injured in the accident.

On emerging from the courtroom, Spinks said he was pleased with the verdict and that the judge "treated me like a human being, not a celebrity."

The 25-year-old ex-marine appeared for the trial wearing a black leather coat, sunglasses and a gold cross suspended from a chain around his neck.

Elyria patrolman Dennis H. Cluley said he investigated the accident and found about 50 feet of fencing torn down. He said he followed mud tracks to a nearby Holiday Inn parking lot where he found Spinks' damaged car.

Spinks damaged the car again Oct. 28 in an accident south of Elyria, when he swerved into another car while trying to avoid a vehicle that pulled out in front of him.

Ranger Thompson
Sent To Seattle

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP)—Bobby Thompson, a switch-hitting outfielder, was sold Wednesday for an undisclosed amount by the Texas Rangers to the Seattle Mariners in a deal at major league baseball's winter meetings.

Thompson, 25, hit .225 with two home runs and 12 runs batted in during 64 games as a Rangers' rookie in the 1978 season.

In another transaction, the Chicago White Sox completed a minor league deal with San Diego. Pitcher Kent Hunsicker was sent from the White Sox' Knoxville farm in the Southern League to the Padres' Amarillo affiliate for outfielder Chuck Wilburn.

Wilburn, 21, an outfielder, hit .302 in 77 games for Reno of the Class A California League. Hunsicker pitched for two clubs last season, 4-4 for Knoxville of the AA Southern League with a 6.06 earned run average, and 6-5 with Bakersfield of the California League with a 3.38 ERA.

The Cleveland Indians continued the series of minor actions at the meetings with the announcement they had acquired outfielder Joe Charboneau from the Philadelphia Phillies for pitcher Cardell Camper.

Charboneau, 21, led the California League at Visalia with a .350 average, including 116 RBI, 18 home runs and 119 runs scored.

Playing Time Surprised Dean

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — Quarterback Randy Dean was minding his own business, just as he had every Sunday for his two years with the New York Giants, when he was told he was going to start the second half last week against Los Angeles.

"I was so surprised, I didn't realize Joe (Pisarcik) was hurt," Dean said. "I wasn't used to playing. I had to run plays in the game I was unfamiliar with. The coaches are going to have to understand that I'll probably make mistakes, I'm not used to that intensity."

Dean had played just about every position but quarterback since the Giants drafted him on the fifth round from Northwestern in 1977. He spent most of his practice time as a backup wide receiver, free safety, a holder for placekicker Joe Danelo, and even served as a punt returner in the first half against the Rams.

But quarterback? Dean's only authentic National Football League action came in the waning moments of a lopsided loss to Dallas earlier in the season.

However, when Pisarcik was unable to play the second half in last week's 20-17 loss — New York's sixth straight — coach John McVay skipped over No. 2 man Jerry Golsteyn and decided it was time he found out about Dean.

"He's got a very strong arm and he's a very bright man," McVay said Wednesday when he announced Dean will get the starting job Sunday against St. Louis. "But we're talking about a young quarterback, don't expect miracles from a young man who really hasn't played. Don't expect him to turn into Roger Staubach."

Dean completed just four of 14 passes against the Rams — including a crucial interception that Pat Thomas returned 33 yards for a touchdown — but was the Giants leading ballcarrier with 63 yards.

"This is my opportunity, this is what I have prepared two years for," Dean said.

McVay has been high on Dean ever since he drafted him. But with a pair of young quarterbacks in Pisarcik and Golsteyn, he never had the chance to find out about him.

"How many more training camps will it take for Randy to be a NFL quarterback?" McVay asked. "Three, maybe four, I don't know. He's a smart guy with a lot of courage."

Dean is in the Staubach mold as a quarterback. His ability to throw the ball has not been questioned and he is not afraid to take off and run.

"I never think about getting killed, I'm just trying not to give anyone a good, clean shot at me," he said. "The end result is to get some yardage out of it and to give teams something to think about."

Dentist Heard In Randle Suit

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — The Texas Rangers' team dentist took the witness stand Wednesday in a damage suit filed here by former team manager Frank Lucchesi against a baseball player he charges attacked him.

Carl Rainone said a blow probably broke five of Lucchesi's teeth and loosened several others.

But Rainone, under cross examination from attorneys for former Ranger infielder Lenny Randle, would not say if a fist had struck the blow. He admitted regular decay could possibly cause a tooth fracture.

The dentist described root canal surgery and bridgework he did on Lucchesi's teeth.

Sports writer William "Blackie" Sherrod of the Dallas Times-Herald also took the stand. Players Tom Grieve and Bert Blyleven were to testify later Wednesday.

Lucchesi is suing Randle for damages as a result of a spring training altercation. The former manager for the American League baseball team claims Randle attacked him without provocation before an exhibition game here in March 1977.

Lucchesi has claimed that Randle was angry at being replaced in the lineup and slugged and kicked him. He's suing for an undetermined sum believed to be upwards of $250,000.

Sherrod told the jury he saw Randle throw several blows in Lucchesi's direction. Though he didn't see any of them hit, he assumed they had because he saw the manager fall down and his face was later badly bruised.

The sportswriter also described a press conference several days before the fight in which Randle's status with the team was discussed.

"I am sick and tired of these punks making $80,000, moaning and groaning... 'Play me or trade me,'" Sherrod quoted Lucchesi as saying when asked if Randle had tried to leave spring training camp.

"I don't blame Lennie. He just wants to play. I'll say this for him, he's always given 110 percent to the Rangers," Sherrod quoted.

Farm Groups Coalition Urged

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (UPI) — Farmers must cooperate with other factions of the agriculture industry and get along with consumer groups if they hope to regain their influence in Washington, a special counsel to the U.S. House Agriculture Committee said Wednesday.

John Kramer, associate dean of

Georgetown University Law Center and counsel to the committee, told the closing session of the National Farm Summit a coalition of farm groups is needed to unify the political voice of agriculture and help push meaningful farm legislation through Congress.

"Agriculture can expect to starve if it continues to oppose Ralph Nader, Carol Foreman and other spokesmen for non-production groups," Kramer said. "You cannot fight everybody all the time."

The National Farm Summit, sponsored by the Agriculture Council of America and Texas A&M University, attracted more than 400 delegates and about 200 farmers who crashed the opening session Monday and dominated the question and answer sessions throughout the discussions of task force reports on five major areas of agricultural problems.

The farmers, affiliated with the American Agriculture Movement, parked tractors and grain trucks outside the conference and at times argued heatedly with economists and others on the program.

But Kramer warned policies of confrontation, such as those used by AAM, could do more harm than good in attempting to win approval of legislation beneficial to family farmers.

"You can't thumb your noses at them and then expect them to do your bidding," he said. "Congress quickly becomes immune to that type of approach."

Bob Bitner, an AAM member from Walsh, Colo., said that groups support the idea of a farm coalition to increase agriculture's political clout, but disagreed with Kramer's contention that the AAM techniques had not been effective and its goals were unrealistic.

"If we're unrealistic, we at least operate in the real world," Bitner said. "We think of ourselves as brash but we get people's head out of the sand and get them moving."

Kramer urged participants at the three-day conference, which was boycotted by the Farm Bureau, to overcome differences and work together.

"All of us in this room are a little suspicious of one another. AAM clearly is suspicious of everyone else, and everyone is clearly suspicious of AAM," he said.

Dr. Ronald D. Knutson, professor of agricultural policy at Texas A&M, said the summit had diagnosed tight supply demand situations, unprecedented inflation, family farm survival and nutrition as new dimensions of problems facing American farmers.

"In the past, the main problem confronting agriculture was that of low prices, while today it is inflation," Knutson said. "Rapid inflation has put the farmer in an increasingly high risk position. Farmers, particularly young farmers, are increasingly in a win-or-lose-all risk position."

The 200 AAM members who crashed the opening session on Monday were permitted to participate in the discussions throughout the three-day conference, even though most of them refused to pay the $90 registration fee.

FmHA Closings Eyed By Administration

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Carter administration is giving "active consideration" to closing more than 1,800 county offices of the Farmers Home Administration under its government reorganization plan.

Further, a large part of the Agriculture Department agency would be transferred to a new Department of Community and Economic Development being considered as one option in the reorganization effort.

The agency, which abbreviates itself as FmHA, is the department's spearhead for carrying out rural development programs, including loans to hard-pressed farmers, housing loans and grants, and funds for business and industrial development.

In the fiscal year that ended Sept. 30, FmHA loans and grants totaled a record of $11.1 billion. They are expected to rise to around $12.3 billion this fiscal year.

According to the reorganization plan, which has been circulated in various agencies, the non-farm programs now handled by the agency — including development loans and grants — would be installed in the new Department of Community and Economic Development.

In it, the FmHA programs would be combined with similar functions now under the Department of Housing and Urban Development, the Small Business Administration and other federal agencies.

The plan, reviewed Wednesday by an official who asked not to be identified, says that programs operated by HUD and FmHA are viewed by many as often working at cross-purposes.

For example, it said, FmHA helps finance water and sewer systems "that contribute to suburban flight" while HUD tries to rehabilitate "the central city to reverse the outmigration trend."

"FmHA has been in the community and economic development business only since 1972, and many observers doubt its ability to handle development issues," the reorganization report said.

"Many small-town officials view FmHA as a farmers' agency unable to understand their problems."

The report said that FmHA county offices could be closed by "locating housing programs in state development offices" and by transferring its farm-oriented programs to the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service which has its own national network of county offices.

However, the report said that the office closings are a future option and not firmly recommended at this time.

"Only the community facilities and business and industry programs are definitely proposed for transfer," it said.

The report said that agriculture committees in the Senate and House can be expected to oppose the plan for FmHA because it would reduce the size of the Agriculture Department and their "jurisdiction over programs" related to the department.

Although the option to set up a new Department of Community and Economic Development has been under consideration in White House reorganization circles for some time, it is but one of several that the administration has in the works.

Another plan would transfer the Forest Service from the Agriculture Department, merging it with the Bureau of Land Management, now in the Interior Department, in a new Department of Natural Resources.

Certain functions of the Agriculture Department's Soil Conservation Service also would be shifted to the new department under that plan.

By DUANE HOWELL

U. S. WHEAT PRODUCERS AREN'T disappointed about the failure of recent world wheat treaty talks and would rather have no agreement than a bad one.

So says Don Woodward, international trade affairs representative of the National Association of Wheat Growers and a past NAWG president.

"The U. S. government has earnestly sought an international agreement to assure wheat security and protect U. S. producer interests," he says. "The government should be given credit for resisting unworkable proposals advanced by other nations."

MORE THAN 50 WHEAT EXPORTING and importing nations have been involved over the last 15 months in efforts to write a new treaty to replace the existing 1971 International Wheat Agreement.

A second negotiating round ended last week without reaching final settlement, and Woodward says prospects for a treaty acceptable to U. S. interests remain in doubt.

"The European Community has been inflexible and wants to keep prices in the agreement low to limit the accumulation of reserves," Woodward said. "This violates the concept of the proposed agreement and it would be disastrous for our government to agree to the EC's position."

Woodward said importing nations should realize that low prices jeopardize wheat production and their food security.

THE CENTERPIECE OF THE NEGOTIATING document is the establishment of an international wheat reserve under member-country control which would operate to keep market prices within what would be considered an "acceptable" range.

Woodward maintains that such a plan is doomed if the price levels for triggering stock accumulation and release are set at low levels. The NAWG has argued for reserve accumulation when prices hit the farm level equivalent of the U. S. target price and "a release trigger which would permit producers to receive parity prices in the marketplace."

Woodward said farmers would be better served without an agreement than with one which restricts market freedom and keeps the supply burden on the United States.

MEANWHILE, DALE HATHAWAY, assistant U. S. agriculture secretary for international affairs and commodity programs, left this week for London and Geneva for further talks with EC officials on the agreement.

Hathaway is making the trip at the request of the Europeans and ambassador Alonzo McDonald, the U. S. negotiator at the multinational trade negotiations in Geneva.

It was the failure of the United States and the European Community to reach a compromise on a floor price which would trigger the accumulation of wheat stocks that produced the breakdown in the negotiations last week.

RESULTS OF THE TALKS BETWEEN Hathaway and EC officials will determine whether the interim committee has further meetings, officials said.

Officials noted that Finn Olav Gundelach, vice president and commissioner of the European Economic Community is scheduled to be in Geneva this week. Hathaway would not say if he was taking a new U. S. proposal on prices to the talks, but said, "I hope to show the Europeans the errors of their ways (concerning prices)."

Cattle Futures Mixed

By Reuters

CHICAGO — Cattle futures closed 45 points lower to 27 higher on 26,899 cars Wednesday on the Chicago Mercantile Exchange. Distant January was off the most with April at the best gain after rising 77. Earlier, nearby January fell 57.

The rally carried June, August and February to new season's highs and came on the prospect of snow and cold and continued strong stopping of deliveries.

There were 451 deliveries. Wholesale beef was off 1 to 2 cents at 82 cents a pound, f.o.b. river points. Cash cattle were steady to off $1 with the best top $56 per hundredweight. Omaha's top was $55.

Slaughter was 141,000 head. The major markets are expecting 14,600 head today.

Cattle futures closed 32 lower to 19 higher on 2,584 contracts. January was the weakest with November at the best gain. Earlier, nearby contracts fell 67, while May rose 60.

Early selling followed weakness in live cattle futures and also stemmed from a heavy run of feeders to market and weakness in beef. Support was generated by a forecast of snow and cold and some continued high prices in cash feeder cattle.

Cash feeder cattle were off $2 to up $3 with the best top $100 per hundredweight at Greeley. Receipts at the major terminals are expected today to be 10,000 head.

Hog futures closed 67 higher to 27 lower on 7,643 cars. February was up the most with only distant February lower. Earlier, April gained 85 after July fell 65.

Outset selling came on heavy hog runs and lower prices and the possibility of 5 to 25 or more deliveries. Late support was sparked by the forecast for snow and cold.

Wholesale hams were up 1 to 2 cents at 95 to 111 cents a pound, f.o.b. river, which is a one year high.

Market Hits Recent Peak

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices struggled to a new five-week high Wednesday despite increased resistance from sellers cashing in on the market's recent rise.

The New York Stock Exchange had its busiest session in more than three weeks.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial, which had jumped more than 13 points on Tuesday, added another 1.39 to 821.90. Since mid-November the average has risen 36.64 points.

Big Board volume came to 29.68 million shares, up from 25.67 million Tuesday and the heaviest total since a 30.61 million-share day on Nov. 14.

One catalyst for the upswing Tuesday was provided by David Rockefeller, chairman of New York's Chase Manhattan Bank, who told a press conference in London that fears of a severe credit crunch were exaggerated.

Rockefeller maintained that the bank prime lending rate, now at 11 1/2 percent, is near its peak for this cycle.

Buying interest seemed to fade somewhat Wednesday, however, with the Dow Jones industrial average at its highest level since early November. And some traders evidently began selling to cash in on the market's recent rise.

New York (AP) — Wednesday's national price for New York Stock Exchange issues as of NYSE close. Prices and volume consolidated for securities also traded on other markets.

Market Hits Recent Peak

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices struggled to a new five-week high Wednesday despite increased resistance from sellers cashing in on the market's recent rise.

The New York Stock Exchange had its busiest session in more than three weeks.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial, which had jumped more than 13 points on Tuesday, added another 1.39 to 821.90. Since mid-November the average has risen 36.64 points.

Big Board volume came to 29.68 million shares, up from 25.67 million Tuesday and the heaviest total since a 30.61 million-share day on Nov. 14.

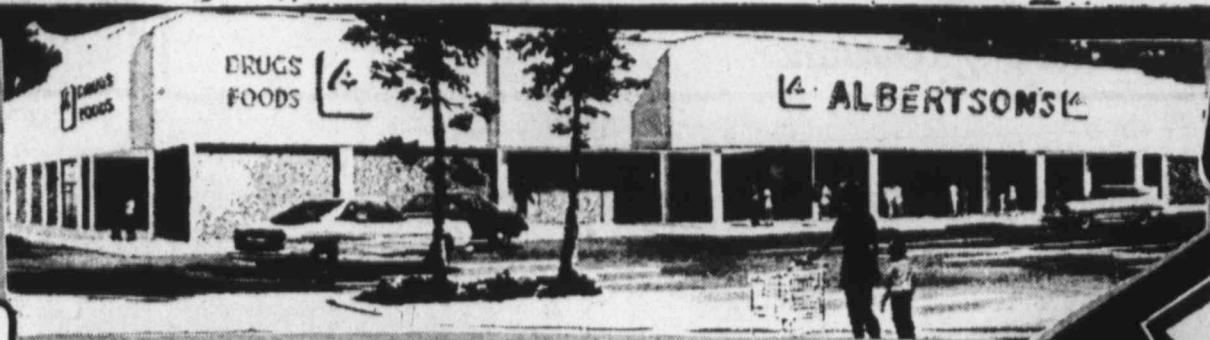

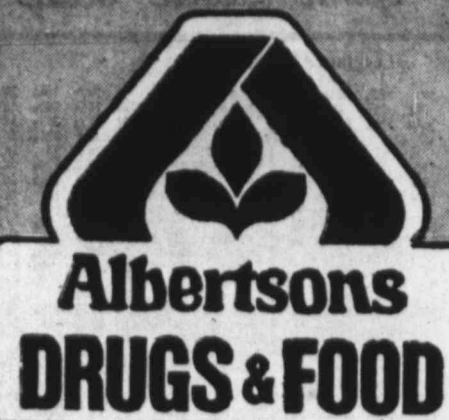

One catalyst for the upswing Tuesday was provided by David Rockefeller, chairman of New York's Chase Manhattan Bank, who told a press conference in London that fears of a severe credit crunch were exaggerated.

Rockefeller maintained that the bank prime lending rate, now at 11 1/2 percent, is near its peak for this cycle.

Buying interest seemed to fade somewhat Wednesday, however, with the Dow Jones industrial average at its highest level since early November. And some traders evidently began selling to cash in on the market's recent rise.

New York (AP) — Wednesday's national price for New York Stock Exchange issues as of NYSE close. Prices and volume consolidated for securities also traded on other markets.
