Taxpayers again make 11th-hour filing effort

By JIM LUTHER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — Millions of taxpayers are lining up in banks, accountants' offices and at post offices today to square things with Uncle Sam for another year.

Midnight tonight is the deadline for most couples and individuals to file their 1982 tax returns, and members of Congress seized the opportunity Thursday to assail the tax system as complex and unfair, and to offer their own plans for cleaning it up.

Sen. Bill Bradley, D-N.J., and Rep. Richard Gephardt, D-Mo., unveiled a refinement of their simplified tax that attracted widespread interest last year. It would wipe out most deductions, most people would pay a 14 percent tax rate and 70 percent of taxpayers would get a tax cut.

Sen. Dan Quayle, R-Ind., proposed a similar plan. And another proposal, by Rep. Leon Panetta, D-Calif., would allow a four-member family $13,333 income without paying taxes.

The system is "beginning to crumble under its own weight," Gephardt said. "But help is on the way."

Don't hold your breath. Sponsors of tax-simplification plans agree there is little chance Congress will approve any wholesale revamping of the income tax in the next several years.

In the meantime, between 5 million and 10 million couples and individuals faced the task of completing their returns and getting them postmarked before midnight.

The Internal Revenue Service estimated that instead of filing their returns, as many as 3 million others would file a Form 4868 with a payment of estimated taxes by midnight, and wait as late as Aug. 15 before filing a completed return.

When all 1982 tax returns have been filed, there should be between 96 million and 97 million of them, up about 1 million from last year. Close to 80 percent will get refunds.

If you think your taxes are a little lower, you're right — but not by much. The Tax Foundation, a nonprofit group, estimates the average worker will have to work eight hours a day through May 2 this year just to pay 1983 taxes. That's one day fewer than last year, due mostly to the phased-in reduction in federal income taxes.

Figured another way, the foundation estimates the average person spends two hours and 40 minutes of each work-

Accountants will file past finish in '1040-K Tax Run'

ATLANTA (AP) — Hours after tonight's midnight deadline for filing income tax returns, accountants here will celebrate the end of the tax season by pounding the pavement in a "1040-K Individual Income Tax Run."

The "K" stands for "kilometer," although the race Saturday morning actually will be run over 10 kilometers and 40 yards. For those who find the "1040" run of six-plus miles too demanding, there will be a one-mile "Short Form."

And following the government's tax forms one step more, the organizers also plan an "EZ" event.

"That's just a fast walk to the bar," said Lily Grace Dozier of the Georgia Society of Certified Public Accountants Inc.

Race chairman Greg Hardwick, a CPA who came up with the idea, said the events may draw 800 runners, including "our friendly opponents" — local employees of the Internal Revenue Service.

The race benefits the Educational Foundation of the Georgia Society of Certified Public Accountants, so entry fees are, of course, tax deductible.

The public is invited to run, although many runners wouldn't have much use for one of the first-place prizes — "sub-chapter S corporation service" from one of the race's sponsors, Prentice-Hall Information Services Division.

The CPA group will provide a free tax consultation next year to the winner of the "1040-K."

Another sponsor, Trust Company Bank, will provide race T-shirts emblazoned with a Form 1040 on which a taxpayer reports income of $900,000 but tallies enough deductions to pay no tax. The preparer line is signed "Darn Good CPA."

ing day just earning money to pay state, local and federal taxes. That is one minute less than last year. The federal share is one hour and 44 minutes — easily the biggest claim on earnings.

Housing takes 94 minutes a day, food, 67 minutes, transportation, 43 minutes, medical care, 35 minutes, clothing, 22 minutes, recreation, 21 minutes, and all other, including savings, 38 minutes.

The figures are somewhat misleading, however, because they assume that all taxes are paid by individuals and none by businesses.

The IRS, knowing from experience that the number of errors on tax returns increases sharply as taxpayers rush to meet the deadline, cautioned against carelessness.

"When your return is ready to mail, go through and check all the arithmetic once more," advised IRS spokesman Larry Baidorf.

Some other IRS tips for last-minute filers: Use the stick-on label that accompanied your tax forms; be sure to use the appropriate lines on your return; double-check to see that you look at the correct line on the tax table when you figure your tax, and don't forget to stamp the envelope.

Errors in arithmetic and similar miscues are caught quickly by IRS computers. But if you're expecting a refund, an error will cause a delay.

More than half of all taxpayers hire somebody to help fill out their returns. And many of the last-minute filers apparently were making trips to the bank to open an Individual Retirement Account to lower their tax bills.

Financial institutions have reported heavy interest in IRAs over the past several days. A worker may exempt up to $2,000 from taxation by buying an IRA $2,250 for a couple with one non-working spouse. No tax is due on the money or interest it earns until it is withdrawn at age 59½ or later. The IRA may be purchased anytime before the tax return is filed.

A taxing situation

Some citizens will be up late tonight, but not for the usual Friday night partying. Midnight is the deadline for mailing the Internal Revenue Service its yearly dues. The Main Post-Office, 100 E. Wall St., will burn the midnight oil picking up and postmarking those IRS forms dropped in at the last minute.

Confirmation doesn't end debate

Kenneth L. Adelman

WASHINGTON (AP) — The 57-42 Senate vote confirming Kenneth L. Adelman as the nation's next arms control chief failed to end the dispute over whether his selection enhances or impairs chances for meaningful arms control.

In the aftermath of the Thursday vote, the culmination of three months of hearings and debate, President Reagan and Adelman called separately for bipartisan reconciliation to move arms control forward while some senators said the choice of Adelman makes such cooperation unlikely.

The Soviet Union's official news agency called Adelman "an outright hawk" and said his selection proves the Reagan White House is interested in amassing more arms, not controlling them.

Principal Senate opponents said Adelman prevailed because Republican senators who might otherwise have voted against him were subjected to intense presidential lobbying. Some of Adelman's supporters said his victory puts clear responsibility on President Reagan to make headway in arms negotiations. They said they used their support to wrest concessions from the administration that were otherwise unobtainable.

The opponents maintain the administration's triumph in salvaging the Adelman nomination will turn sour as the Soviets move to convert Adelman's arms control views into a propaganda windfall in Europe.

Reagan told a news conference he hopes "that this positive step will mark the beginning of a new bipartisan consensus on the vital issue of nuclear arms reduction."

"I'm convinced that Kenneth Adelman will prove that the confidence which the Senate has expressed in him today is well-founded," Reagan said. "And if we're met with reciprocal seriousness of purpose from the Soviet Union, 1983 can be a year of historic importance in securing a more solid and stable peace through arms reductions," the president said.

Adelman, who personally buttonholed many senators in his own behalf in the days before the vote, promised at a separate news conference in New York City to open immediate arms control consultations with key senators, including those who fought hardest to block his confirmation.

"I believe that such close consultations can help our arms control efforts, which, in my view, must be bipartisan in order to be effective," said the 36-year official who for the last two years has been deputy chief of the U.S. mission to the United Nations. Adelman said.

From Moscow, the Soviet news agency Tass labeled Adelman a foe of arms control and said his confirmation was due to "fierce arm twisting" by the White House.

First National: More conservative, more 'discerning'

By LESLIE HAINES
Business-Energy Writer

Reducing expenses and having a more "discerning" loan policy will be key elements in the First National Bank of Midland's plan to adopt a more conservative stance than it's had in the past few years. The move follows recent top-level management changes at the bank.

While not denying there are some loan problems, officers say the bank is sound and that there are no plans to change FNB's independent status.

The bank is looking economic reality in the eye, however. "You are going to see the bank a lot more conservative than it has been in the past," Donald L. McCall said Thursday.

Earnings have declined and loan charge-offs have increased, as they have in most other banks with large energy loan portfolios. Just as many of its customers have gone back to business basics while riding out the recession, First National, too, will be pulling in its horns.

"We've got to adapt ourselves to the environment we find ourselves in," McCall said. "We can't preach conservative business practices to our customers without doing it ourselves." Admitting the bank "built in a little fat" during its phenomenal growth spurt of the last 24 to 30 months, he said officers are making plans now to reduce expenses. He did not elaborate.

Last week, McCall, an executive vice president with the bank since 1981, was named chief executive officer and interim general manager following the sudden resignation of Charles D. Fraser, CEO, president and chairman.

Despite swinging to the conservative end of the scale, loans are still being made and the bank will show a profit for the first quarter of 1983, McCall said. The search for a new president is under way, he added.

Clarence Seharbauer Jr., new chairman of the board, told shareholders in an April 13 letter that the bank's directors declared the regular quarterly dividend of 30 cents per share. The checks were mailed Thursday.

In view of changes at the bank, Seharbauer told shareholders the annual meeting, originally scheduled for April 28, has been pushed back to May 26, "in order to properly prepare a comprehensive report on the condition of the bank."

McCall said First National's conservative posture will affect loan policy, which will become "a lot more discerning" than it has been in the past.

The bank has always prided itself on its strong commitment to underwriting growth in the Permian Basin, not only for the oil and gas industry but for all business ventures. McCall said loan demand has been high over the last 36 months, "and we feel we have met these needs."

By making loans in an aggressive way and growing by leaps and bounds, the bank has carved a niche for itself in West Texas and attracted attention from other parts of the state. In the first quarter of 1980, First National reported deposits of $652 million. Three years later, deposits more than doubled to reach $1.41 billion, making FNB rank ninth among Texas' top 10 banks by Dec. 31, 1982.

Banking sources say a 1 percent return on assets, a measure of profitability, is considered good in a bank with more than $1 billion in assets. In 1981, First National's return was 1.65 percent; in 1982 it dropped to .68 percent. The capital-to-assets ratio, a measure of internal strength, is nearing 10 percent, while the industry standard for a bank of this size is between 6 and 7 percent.

Transplant publicity questioned

WASHINGTON (AP) — Publicity brought money and aid for 16-month-old liver transplant patient Jamie Fiske. But it is an unreliable way of getting help, witnesses have told a House panel.

"It contradicts notions of fairness as well as good sense when organ availability depends upon the ability of particular recipients or their family members to generate publicity for their plight," said Alexander Capron, former director of a presidential commission which studied ethical problems in medicine.

"Moreover, this spectacle... is contrary to our usual proper norms of medical privacy and human dignity," Capron said.

Capron, now a professor of law and ethics at Georgetown University, said a regional or national system of organ transfer should be established to alleviate some problems.

Charles and Marilyn Fiske, parents of the Bridgewater, Mass., child whose case was spotlighted last fall as they searched for a liver donor, made a related proposal before a House Science and Technology subcommittee. They suggested that a national institute be established to raise public awareness of organ donations as a possible option.

The Fiskes waged a systematic publicity campaign, involving reporters as well as politicians in a successful attempt to save their daughter's life.

"In our situation, the media were always fair to us," Fiske said. "There wasn't a massive invasion of privacy."

But he acknowledged that their strategy wouldn't be a reliable one for all families with similar problems obtaining money, insurance coverage or a donor. "That may happen once or twice, but after while, that may lose its effectiveness."

"I think what has to be in place is a system that is much more secure," he said.

Capron also urged the subcommittee on investigations to support the adoption by every state of a universal definition of organ death, not only because of organ transplants but also because of "the use of modern forms of treatment that can simulate the traditional 'vital signs' in patients who are actually dead."

Capron was director of the President's Commission on the Study of Ethical Problems in Medicine and Biomedical and Behavioral Research, which concluded its work March 31.

Fiske said the Nov. 5, 1982, surgery on his daughter at the University of Minnesota medical center saved her life.

Jamie Fiske was a lively distraction during most of the hearing as she sang and made a variety of baby noises while her parents talked.

Fiske said Jamie gained more than 10 pounds after she left the hospital in December and now weighs more than 24 pounds.

Meanwhile, a 13-month-old Walnut, Miss., boy who was rushed from the same subcommittee's hearing on Wednesday in order to receive his own liver transplant, was recovering after serious complications during his surgery in Memphis. Doctors gave Brandon Hall a 50-50 chance of survival.

His mother, Billie Hall, had described to the committee the inadequate coverage in federal medical programs for transplants and the difficulties she had raising money for the procedure.

Government health programs and many insurers refuse to routinely pay for organ transplants because of their immense cost. Federal regulations also list some transplant procedures as experimental and therefore inappropriate for reimbursement. The only exception is with kidneys. An extensive kidney dialysis and transplant program is part of Medicare.

Liver recipient in stable condition

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — A 13-month-old boy, who underwent liver transplant surgery within hours of his mother's appeal before Congress for federal aid for such operations, was stable after suffering cardiac arrest.

"The next 48 hours are crucial," Scott Kent, a spokesman for Le Bonheur Children's Medical Center, said Thursday night. "His vital signs are still stable. We just continue to hope for the best."

Brandon Hall of Walnut, Miss., was taken to Le Bonheur a few hours after doctors at the University of Tennessee Center for the Health Sciences completed the transplant at 5 a.m. Thursday.

The child was rushed to surgery hours after he appeared with his mother at the hearing before a congressional subcommittee in Washington, D.C.

A nurse who visited Brandon in the intensive care unit at Le Bonheur said the youngster apparently recognized his mother, Billie Hall, 38.

"His mom and I noticed right away that his eyes are great," said nurse Susan Shapiro. "He recognizes people he knows."

Answering reporters' questions about the condition of her 13-month-old son is Mrs. Billie Hall of Walnut, Miss.

Mrs. Hall said she, too, was encouraged by her son's appearance. "He's going to live," she said. "Yesterday, we didn't know whether he was or not."

Doctors said the child has a 50-50 chance of survival.

Mrs. Hall appeared Wednesday before the House Subcommittee on Science and Technology to tell lawmakers that finding donor organs is extremely difficult. She also complained that federal medical programs don't help pay for such operations. Brandon's surgery is expected to cost $60,000, not including fees for his hospital stay.

Brandon's new liver came from 9-month-old Sarah Cadora of Beverdam, Va., who was killed in a traffic accident.

Dr. Peter Whittington, a pediatric gastroenterologist, said Brandon required 25 units of blood during the transplant, and went into cardiac arrest during the operation.

The volume of blood pumped into the boy apparently caused the cardiac arrest, which may have damaged the donor organ, Whittington said.

The child weighs 18 pounds and normally has one pint of blood circulating through his body.

It will be several days before doctors know if the liver was damaged.

First National: More 'discerning'

In the banking industry, this could be considered an enviable track record, but one not immune to the ups and downs of the oil industry.

"We are definitely an energy bank. Our fortunes ebb and flow with the energy business," McCall said. "It's well known that certain segments of the energy business have had a tough time, and we serve all facets of the business, so it's not surprising that our earnings would be affected."

McCall wouldn't release specific figures from the bank's upcoming financial statement for the first quarter of 1983, but he said the bank will show a profit. "Earnings, while not up to prior years, are still solid, and they are expected to be so for the balance of 1983. The bank is solvent, it's capital position is strong."

Comparing the first quarter 1983 results to those of the preceding quarter ended Dec. 31 is not viable, McCall said, because the bank always experiences a seasonal drop after the first of the year. More important, during the preceding quarter the bank gained income from the one-time sale of its main building, parking garage and motor bank, thus turning a non-earning asset into one which will earn a pre-tax gain of $35.6 million on the 1982 tax return, and create a deferred gain in future years of $12.7 million.

In the quarter just ended March 31, and in the one before that, net loans exceeded deposits at First National. Some sources say this means trouble, and could indicate the bank is short on cash, or that investor confidence has eroded. McCall says no, the bank is not cash-poor, and there are no immediate plans to issue additional stock. Borrowings from the Federal Reserve Bank have increased, however.

SINCE FORMER CEO Fraser's resignation, the bank's closely-held stock has traded very lightly. The last trades were about a week to 10 days ago, when the stock was selling for around $40, which is above book value reported last December.

"I would say they (investors) haven't lost confidence in the bank, the institution," said Joe Liberty, manager of Midland's Rauscher Pierce Refines office, one of the largest single traders of the bank's stock. "I think their deposits are stable. From what I view, it's a pretty stable situation.

"There are a lot of energy banks that have problems. This is just one that is more close to home. Banking has changed for energy. The price of companies' inventory has fluctuated."

First National would prefer to have a lower deposit-to-loan ratio, McCall concedes. "The drop in deposits is partly seasonal. We always experience a decline in the first quarter.

"The deposit base in this area of the Permian Basin has probably shrunk somewhat, with lower oil and gas prices, and lower natural gas takes. Our customers' cash flow isn't what it was," he said.

First National's core deposits depend more on wholesale activity than on retail business, McCall said. "I don't know that we're seeing any significant change in retail deposits. I've talked to some retailers around town who say business has picked up, and others say their first quarter was so-so."

Based on a critical review of loan quality, the bank last year charged off $16.6 million worth of loans, and upped its reserve set aside for loan losses to $50 million. Most other Texas banks have increased their loan loss reserves since the first of the year.

"Our non-performing loans have increased," McCall said, without providing exact data. "It all ties together with the energy industry. We're no different than other banks with a lot of energy loans."

SOME SOURCES say the bank is sailing in troubled financial waters as a result, and that it is under examination by federal regulators.

McCall said the last formal and routine review was made in 1981, and follow-up examinations were completed in 1982.

"The banking industry as a whole has come under increased scrutiny by various regulatory agencies, and one particular area is energy banks, along with agriculture banks and banks with loans to undeveloped countries," he said.

"This bank being an energy bank, it is subject to the same review as other energy banks. I would hasten to add we do not have any loans to undeveloped countries, and we have very few agricultural loans."

First National's current plans are aimed at maintaining the bank's independent status, McCall said. InterFirst Bank Dallas, which has been a correspondent bank since 1929, has owned 49 percent of FNB's stock since the late 1970s. To McCall's knowledge, no other bank or financial institution owns any equity interest in First National.

Federal bank holding company law says if a company or individual owns 5 percent or more of a bank's stock, it can be said to have a controlling influence on the bank.

Some say First National is ripe for a takeover because it allegedly faces loan problems and needs money, others say because the bank is so large, it is an attractive plum any holding company would love to acquire. But, the directors' resolution to remain independent is intact.

"Yes, we think we can remain independent, and not join any of the large bank holding companies," McCall said. "We don't want to appear cavalier or flippancy, but we think we're a great institution, and we hope people feel comfortable coming in here to do business."

Americans being 'conditioned' to nuclear war

MOSCOW (AP) — A top Soviet general says President Reagan is conditioning Americans to accept the idea of nuclear war, but he suggests Moscow would counter the planned deployment of U.S. missiles in Europe without basing nuclear weapons in Cuba.

Maj. Gen. Yuri V. Lebedev said he still believed in the "good will" of the United States not to deploy the new missiles in Western Europe starting later this year. But if the medium-range rockets were deployed, he said, the Soviet Union would not retaliate by placing its own missiles in Cuba.

Kremlin officials have warned repeatedly they will put the United States in an "analogous position" if the American missiles are stationed in five NATO countries, within a few minutes' striking distance of Soviet territory.

Those statements raised speculation in the United States that the Soviets were considering deploying mid-range rockets in Soviet-allied Cuba.

But Lebedev, 55, a military adviser to Soviet arms control negotiators, said, "There is no need to do it... It's enough to deploy new systems in Soviet territory," he said in an interview Wednesday with The Associated Press.

In 1982 the Soviets tried to install missiles in Cuba but pulled them back in a nuclear showdown with the United States.

Lebedev was interviewed through an interpreter at a Foreign Ministry press center.

The interview was one of several by government, military and academic figures who have been unusually accessible to visiting American reporters at a time when the Soviet Union and the United States are trying to influence public opinion on the controversial question of nuclear arms in Europe.

The United States, under a NATO decision, plans to begin deploying 572 medium-range missiles, with ranges of up to 1,500 miles, in Western Europe late this year. The Soviets have a similar number of SS-20s and other intermediate-range missiles targeted on Western Europe.

The NATO decision calls for the deployment unless the United States and Soviet Union negotiate an agreement reducing medium-range missiles in Europe. Those negotiations, now 18 months old, appear deadlocked.

"I cannot predict, but I still believe there will be good will on the part of the United States not to deploy the new systems," Lebedev, a long-time commander of missile forces, said.

Talks create favorable opinion

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's recent speeches on arms control and nuclear weapons have again turned public opinion in his favor, say White House officials who are using polls to prove their point.

Several officials, some of whom leaked the latest data while requesting anonymity, sought to reverse reports of weakness that followed the Republican-controlled Senate Budget Committee's vote last week to slash the administration's proposed defense buildup.

The outlook at the time was in doubt on Reagan's nomination of Kenneth Adelman to be his arms control chief and on a House resolution calling for a nuclear weapons freeze.

Reagan won confirmation of Adelman on Thursday, and a final vote on the freeze comes up next week.

An ABC News-Washington Post poll said Wednesday night that for the first time since last October, more of those surveyed approved of the way Reagan was handling his job than disapproved.

ABC said 49 percent of poll respondents gave the president a favorable mark, up from 45 percent last month and 42 percent in January, the low point of his term.

Speakes and other sources who acted independently Thursday also offered reporters the results of portions of a private poll conducted by Richard Wirthlin on Reagan's foreign policy performance.

The data showed that since the end of January, there has been a marked drop, then recovery in the number of people interviewed who believe more should be spent on national defense.

The figures show that the number of people who want to spend more for defense, even if that means increased taxes, fell from 50 percent at the end of January to 35 percent in mid-March and rebounded to 43 percent after Reagan made three nationally televised speeches.

Israeli land developers buying land in West Bank

SHAAREI TIKVA, Occupied West Bank (AP) — The land for this new Jewish settlement was bought from Palestinian Arabs — something that was impossible to do four years ago. Israeli land developers say they have broken through a barrier in being able to buy land in the occupied West Bank of the Jordan River.

Until 1979, the Israeli government banned its citizens and companies from buying land or building settlements in the territory its forces occupied in the 1967 Arab-Israeli war. At the same time, a Palestinian selling land to an Israeli could face a death sentence in Jordanian courts for what was regarded as a traitorous act.

But in a little-noticed action in 1979, Prime Minister Menachem Begin's government removed the Israeli ban. There was only a trickle of secret sales at first, but the land buyers believe the situation changed with the morale-crushing developments of 1982 for Palestinians — the Israeli defeat of the Palestine Liberation Organization in Lebanon, and the massacres at the Sabra and Chatilla refugee camps in Beirut.

"Now they are not afraid to sell openly," claimed Yaari Rozen, an engineer and partner in the firm building Shaarei Tikva, which is Hebrew for Gates of Hope. "Two years ago I would have to go with an Arab at night to look at land he wanted to sell. Now we can go by day."

Most Arabs, however, still would refuse to sell land to Israelis, and land-dealing in the West Bank can be dangerous. A buyer named Moshe Zar, well known to the Arabs for building a three-story mansion on a West Bank hill, was stabbed and seriously wounded by six Palestinians recently. Israeli land-buyers typically operate quietly, and only recently have some of them become known as their companies began advertising in the Israeli press.

So far the private land deals make only a small contribution to the Israeli government's massive settlement-construction program in the West Bank. About 10 percent of the total settlement effort is private enterprise, said Mrs. Plea Albeck, the Justice Ministry official who examines land registry records to determine which land is available for settlements.

A survey by the Israeli newspaper Haaretz recently estimated that Israeli individuals and companies have bought about 12 square miles of the West Bank's total area of 2,270 square miles.

But in some sectors of the West Bank, the private developments will be an important buttress to the government's drive to raise the number of Jewish settlers from the present 25,000 to 100,000 by 1987. The West Bank's Arab population is about 800,000.

Begin's government has rejected U.S. appeals to freeze settlements in hopes of advancing negotiations for a peace agreement. To Begin, the settlements are vital to keep the West Bank in Israeli hands and to block President Reagan's proposal to link the area with Jordan.

Shaarei Tikva is a half-mile from a government-sponsored settlement called Elqana and 20 miles east of Tel Aviv, Israel's biggest city. Municipal-style streets, a water system and electricity are almost ready; two dozen houses are in late stages of construction, and the developers envision a town of 700 families in a few years.

Rahel Rahat, a founding partner of the development company with Yaari Rozen, recently conducted a tour of Shaarei Tikva and two nearby settlements which, with Elqana, will put the eastern fringe of the Tel Aviv metropolis in the West Bank.

"Look, it's all empty," Miss Rahat said. "I am working to fill this land up with people, with Jews."

Two neighboring hillsides are gashed by road construction for two other settlements being built by her firm, each laid out for 600 to 700 houses. Since young, growing families tend to move to the settlements, Shaarei Tikva and its two neighbors could add 10,000 to the West Bank's Jewish population in a few years.

Miss Rahat and Rozen are members of the far-right Tehiya (Renaissance) Party and veterans of Gush Emunim (Bloc of the Faithful), the vanguard for Jewish settlement in the West Bank. They founded their company for ideological reasons, but as it grew into a full-scale land-development firm, they took on a non-ideological but wealthy partner for the capital he could provide.

Chaim Fefer, a manufacturer of prefabricated buildings and a friend of Rozen's from school days, said he invested in the effort to make a profit.

Pravda cites several letters from Americans

By The Associated Press

Some Americans who wrote letters to Soviet leader Yuri Andropov reacted with surprise when their thoughts drew a mention in the Soviet newspaper Pravda.

Pravda quoted three letters and mentioned about a dozen other American correspondents in its Monday edition. The writers quoted were 10-year-old Samantha Smith of Manchester, Maine; Carl Schleuss of Point Harbor, N.C.; and Tom Bell of North Bend, Wash.

Schleuss, contacted earlier this week, said he had asked Andropov to cut Soviet military spending, to "ease off" in Poland and Afghanistan and to withdraw from Cuba — suggestions which cut little ice with Pravda.

"I was just looking for some way out of a war," Schleuss said. "I was in World War I and I'm 84 years old, and I thought we were on the wrong track. That's all." He said he also wrote 75 members of Congress asking that the United States trim its defense budget.

Ulysses Bratton of Royal Oak, Mich., when told he was mentioned by Pravda, said it was "rare that I get through."

"I wrote to (Andropov's) predecessor. In fact, I may have written to his predecessor's predecessor," Bratton said.

The 83-year-old retired lawyer said he has a simple message for Andropov and President Reagan: "If you don't get together now and war comes, there's not going to be a tomorrow."

Miss Smith had asked Andropov, "Why do you want to conquer the whole world, or at least our country?" Pravda replied, "We think we can pardon Samantha her misleadings, because the girl is only 10 years old."

Rev. Richard Baggett Deats, a Methodist minister in Nyack, N.Y., said he wrote Andropov twice, once sending him a Duke Ellington album as "an expression of good will and peace."

Andropov is said by Soviet sources to have a taste for jazz.

"The first letter, when he assumed office, I wrote expressing our hopes for peace and the desire of our organization that we find ways of working together to build understanding between our people," Deats said.

Deats, 51, executive secretary of the Fellowship of Reconciliation, said he plans to visit the Soviet Union next month with about 40 people who want to "build understanding" between the two countries.

Asked whether he thought the Soviet leader actually had seen the letter, Deats replied, "I have as much hope that he might see it as I have that President Reagan might see a letter of mine."

Richard Farnsworth, a 52-year-old steelworker from Middletown, Ohio, said he wrote the Soviet leader several months ago.

"I wanted to make contact with Andropov on a person-to-person basis," he said. "I can't understand why the letter was of such importance one way or another."

Dennis Paulson of Santa Barbara, Calif., had sent a form letter to Andropov — part of his project of collecting essays from famous people for a book on preventing nuclear annihilation.

Paulson, 41, who has taken a year off from his engineering job to work on the book, asked Andropov's views on the nuclear threat and possible solutions. He said got a 17-page, typewritten reply from Pravda, and now is having it translated.

Regarding Bell's letter, Pravda said, "Tom Bell from North Bend, Wash., in a letter which is rather sensible on the whole, complains that free Cuba stands, allegedly, in the way of better Soviet-American relations — it is too close to the United States."

Couple forced to postpone matrimony

HOUSTON (AP) — Gail Mahaffey and Larry Kello would be one day from matrimony today except that she would be kicked off the Pasadena police force if they wed. And she says they need both incomes to fight the nepotism policy.

The couple postponed plans for a Saturday wedding after a judge on Thursday refused to issue a temporary injunction blocking a Pasadena rule against spouses serving together on the police force.

"To fight the lawsuit with just one income — there's no way," Ms. Mahaffey said in a telephone interview.

The $2,500 in attorney fees so far has been paid by the Pasadena Police Officers Association, but the expected $10,000 in lawyer fees over the next two months will come from the couple, she said.

U.S. District Judge Norman Black refused the couple's request to block the spouses' rule, but he did order an expedited schedule for their lawsuit against the rule. He said a final hearing would be held after 60 days.

Ms. Mahaffey said she and her fiancée were surprised by the judge's refusal.

"We were so confident that this would go through, we had all the invitations sent out, we had the flowers ordered, the cakes, I had my wedding dress. Everything we set," said Ms. Mahaffey. "It was something we really wanted."

Kello, 34, is a motorcycle patrol officer, and Ms. Mahaffey, 30, works in the department's police academy, a job she took after five years as a patrol officer. He has 9½ years with the force and she has six. They met at work.

"Being a police officer is not a very normal life anyway. Now they're more or less telling us we can't be normal. We've been dedicated to our jobs for years. We've sacrificed. To take that away, something you have built your whole life around, that's taking a lot," Ms. Mahaffey said.

The couple filed the lawsuit Feb. 15 against the director of the Civil Service Commission of Pasadena, the three members of the commission, the city of Pasadena and the Texas Civil Service Commission.

Pasadena police officers Gail Mahaffey and Larry Kello said Thursday that they will postpone their marriage after a U.S. district judge refused to block a departmental rule requiring one to leave the force if they wed.

The suit asks that two rulings by the Pasadena commission be overturned — a 1969 decision that relatives cannot serve on the force together, and a 1974 ruling specifying that if a couple on the force marries, the one with the least seniority must resign.

House OKs parole change

AUSTIN (AP) — A proposed state constitution change that would remove the governor from prison parole supervision, other than appointments of parole board members, has been approved by the House and sent back to the Senate.

The measure, which originated in the Senate, goes back to the Senate for approval of a House amendment.

The House vote was 124-14. The proposed change in the state constitution will go to voters Nov. 8, 1983, if final approval is given by the Senate.

The Board of Pardons and Paroles would have exclusive power under the amendment to grant and revoke paroles.

At one time, Texas governors had the sole right to grant paroles, until the parole board was created in 1936. The governor now only considers paroles that have been recommended by the board. He has the right to deny any parole that is recommended.

Former Gov. Bill Clements vetoed 2,035 paroles that had been recommended by the board in 1981.

Homestead amendment proposed

AUSTIN (AP) — If the Senate approves, Texas voters will get a chance this November to decide if the $10,000 limit on urban homestead exemptions should be removed.

The proposed constitution amendment approved 137-0 Thursday by the House.

Rep. Charles Evans, D-Hurst, said present constitution provisions say that a rural homestead up to 200 acres shall be exempted from forced sale to satisfy creditors or non-payment of taxes. Urban homestead are limited to a lot or lots valued at no more than $10,000 when purchased.

The measure by Evans would eliminate the $10,000 limit and substitute a one-acre limit.

An amendment by Officials wait for autopsy

PECOS (AP) — Authorities were awaiting results of an autopsy on a 51-year-old New Mexico man whose body was recovered from Red Bluff Lake north of here.

Ronald Hinkle, 51, of Hobbs, was found in the lake shortly before 4 p.m. Wednesday by sheriff's deputies and state game wardens.

Justice of the Peace Cliff Preslar pronounced Hinkle dead at the scene, and ordered an autopsy, which was to be performed in Odessa.

The possibility of foul play has not been ruled out, Preslar said.

"We have no idea yet until we get the results of the autopsy," Preslar said.

Rep. Terral Smith, R-Austin, would exempt all urban homestead of less than one-acre, even if they exceeded the $10,000 limit in the past.

'Little hobby' big accomplishment

LUFKIN (AP) — For Joe Templeton, being 88 years old doesn't mean that he's going to sit back and relax.

"I've always got to be doing something, and this little hobby of mine is something that I really enjoy," he said.

The "little hobby" he refers to is wood carving, and much of his work is something that would be a big accomplishment to many people half his age.

Templeton's collection of wood carvings is a sight to see. A wall in his den holds everything from reproductions of an old-timey log wagon pulled by oxen to an outhouse complete with toilet paper — with all of the fine detail hand-carved.

Templeton began his hobby only 13 years ago. He came up with the idea as he was reminiscing about his earlier days.

"I started thinking and I told my wife I was going to make me one of those buggies that we used to ride in, and I started to work on it," Templeton said.

He didn't have to try to find a pattern or find a picture, but built the replica from memory.

"I'd spent enough time in one to know exactly how it should look," he said.

After the buggy was completed, he began to think about other things he could build with his hands.

From that first horse and buggy rig, his collection expanded to include more than 40 covered wagons, numerous replicas of log wagons, miniature houses, furniture and other pieces, most of which he has given away to family and friends.

Oddly enough, Templeton says he has never sold any of his work.

"I've had people tell me I could make a fortune selling them, but I've never had any desire to have that kind of pressure of having to make them instead of doing it just for the fun of it," he said.

Templeton's daughter, Mrs. Norvella Doty of Lufkin, said that she thinks the work has been therapeutic for her father.

"I'll be honest, I think that's what's preserved his life so long," she said. "So many older people don't keep active, but I think the sense of accomplishment he gets from his hobby really helps."

Mrs. Doty said that after watching him at work, most people would find it hard to believe that he's almost 90, and still able to do such tedious work.

"His nerves have stayed steady for years, and when he works, his hands don't shake a bit," she said.

Templeton takes his time and doesn't let the tedious work become a burden. The exact replica of his house on Ellis Street, a perfect match of the real house inside and out, took him three months.

AP Laserphoto

Joe Templeton, 88, sands a wagon wheel in his workshop in Lufkin recently. Templeton began his hobby only 13 years ago. He came up with his "little hobby" as he was reminiscing about his earlier days.

"It was quite a job," Templeton said. "Right down to the 3,000 wood shingles on the roof."

Building his wood articles has become an expensive hobby, which has restricted the number of carvings he makes.

"I use a lot of birch plywood and that costs me $16 a sheet, so it does run into some money," he said.

For Templeton, who retired years ago from working out of state with the Carter Oil Co., the hobby has given him a new purpose in life, something to help pass the hours and the days. He says he'll keep it up as long as he's able.

City's decision sparks protest

LUBBOCK (AP) — A decision by city officials to appeal a court-ordered redistricting plan for the City Council sparked a march by more than 400 demonstrators, police said.

A police spokesman said he counted 431 marchers in a stretch between the Lubbock Memorial Civic Center and City Hall on Thursday.

The marchers in the four-block procession sang, "We Shall Overcome," a song that became the anthem of civil rights marchers in the 1960s.

Police provided a small number of officers to walk along with the marchers, but no disturbances were reported.

At issue was the city's decision to appeal a ruling by U.S. District Judge Halbert O. Woodward, who ordered the city to divide the council into six single-member districts, instead of holding at-large elections.

The newly formed Concerned Citizens of Lubbock arrived at City Hall about 11 a.m. for prayers and singing outside the building, while the council met in a second-floor chamber at a regularly scheduled meeting.

Mayor Bill McAlister told the meeting that although the election suit involves racial matters, "the city's appeal is not based on racial issues." Other council members made no comment.

Richards: Bill will bring in money

AUSTIN (AP) — State Treasurer Ann Richards says the $626,000 emergency appropriation bill approved by the Legislature Thursday will result in an additional $7 million for the state treasury by the end of 1984.

The House passed the Senate-approved bill Thursday 136-0 and sent it to the governor.

"This will enable us to begin implementing better cash management procedures, step up unclaimed property collections and improve the basic operations of the treasury which have been ignored for many, many years," she said.

"As a result will be able to return $11 to the people of Texas for every dollar provided in the bill."

Bills may save $10 million annually

AUSTIN (AP) — Rep. Rene O. Oliveira, D-Brownsville, says two measures finally passed by the House Thursday may save the state $10 million a year.

The House approved 137-0 and sent to the Senate a proposed constitutional amendment allowing garnishment of wages for enforcement of court-ordered child support payments. It also finally passed a bill that would put the practice in effect if approved by the Senate and voters.

Oliveira said that in cases where a parent has failed to make child support payments, a judge will have the authority to order an employer to withhold a portion of that person's income or require a person to post bond to provide for child support payments.

Taxpayers pay the tab when a parent defaults on child support payments.

"Over 155,000 children on welfare in Texas do not receive any financial support from a non-custodial parent," said Oliveira. "A 10 percent increase in the collection of child support due to income assignment, an extremely conservative expectation, will save $10 million per year to the state."

Baker: Reagan will 'gladden hearts'

HOUSTON (AP) — White House Chief of Staff James Baker says President Reagan's decision on whether to seek re-election will be announced after Labor Day and will "gladden the hearts of his admirers around the country."

Baker's made no further comment in his speech to about 900 people at the Forum Club Wednesday night on the possibility of the president seeking a second term. Reagan has declined comment on a second term.

Baker said Reagan's top priorities are Social Security, the defense budget and the potential for conflict in Central America. Baker said.

Woman sentenced on drug charges

HOUSTON (AP) — A woman accused of carrying cocaine to work as a Houston Police Department civilian dispatcher was sentenced to five years probation and fined $750 Thursday.

Julianne Pawlak, 19, pleaded no contest to drug possession charges. Ms. Pawlak resigned after her Jan. 3 arrest.

Detectives became suspicious of Ms. Pawlak after being told by a man charged with burglary that she had helped pawn the items he stole. When she was arrested at work on theft charges stemming from that case, officers discovered 3.3 milligrams of cocaine in her purse, police said.

The theft charges were dismissed as part of the plea bargain.

Mexico lifts grocery ban

EL PASO (AP) — Americans shopping in Juarez are once again being allowed to buy groceries in small quantities and take them north across the border, but Mexican officials say an export ban imposed last fall is still in effect.

Motorists leaving Mexico on the international bridges with a "family shopping basket" of goods were allowed to pass freely on Thursday — in sharp contrast to a total ban that was in effect in Juarez the past two weeks.

Only large exports of basic goods by motorists were prohibited when a nationwide ban took effect last fall in Mexico, but the Juarez customs office started an unannounced crackdown March 30 with car-by-car inspections and confiscation of all basic goods.

However, Juarez business and industry representatives took their complaints to Mexican customs director Javier Garduno Perez in Mexico City Wednesday.

Garduno issued a directive Thursday ordering an end to the local policy that had been put into effect at the Juarez El Paso bridges.

"Economic activity was reduced in the city by 50 percent," Artemio Jayme Salazar, president of the Juarez Chamber of Commerce, told the El Paso Times.

"It was not just the grocery stores, but hairstylists, auto repair shops and liquor sales were hurt," Jayme said.

Workers inspect a flooded manhole next to a water pump outside the South Central Bell Building in New Orleans April 7, after an 11-inch rain. A flooded basement and failure of the $2 fuse crippled the city's long distance system for 10 hours and seared its link with a nuclear warning system.

$2 fuse cripples New Orleans

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — A flooded basement and the failure of a $2 fuse crippled the long distance telecommunications system of this city for 10 hours last week and severed its link with a nuclear attack warning system.

The breakdown demonstrated the vulnerability of centralized telephone systems, even those with tight security and backup power, according to AT&T officials.

Similar computer switching machines sit in guarded, windowless buildings in 80 U.S. cities and carry thousands of circuits, including priority government lines.

They are the core of an area's long-distance telephone system and have survived floods, hurricanes, tornados and blackouts.

But when 11 inches of rain brought widespread flooding to Louisiana, the backup power failed — and one of those computers was shut down for the first time.

"I've never been through a set of circumstances like that and I thought I'd seen everything," said Art Ammon, manager of the Network Operations Center at AT&T headquarters in Bedminster, N.J. "We've never had anything quite this devastating."

Technology and centralization have made telephone systems more efficient but also more vulnerable to floods, $2 fuses — and terrorism or nuclear attack, according to Ammon.

"Security is very tight and it's going to get tighter because of the environment today. We don't want people knowing what is up here."

There is concern on the part of government — and it's probably a legitimate one — about the reliability of the communications switch network "in the event of nuclear attack or national disaster," Ammon said.

AT&T and the government are studying ways to switch long distance calls through smaller phone offices in cases of emergency, which is not now possible, Ammon said.

On Thursday, April 7, an intricate system of backups failed. The worst-case scenario unfolded.

South Central Bell Telephone's $12 million long-distance switching computer, called a 4ESS, had to be shut down, knocking out 30,000 telephone circuits into and out of southeastern Louisiana. Some of the circuits carried high-level government traffic, Ammon said.

The FAA airport control tower lost its computer link to Houston and outlying towers. Shipping operations were paralyzed. The mayor couldn't telephone the governor.

And for 3 hours and 56 minutes, southeast Louisiana was cut off from the National Warning System which alerts the public to nuclear attack or accidental missile launch. The Federal Emergency Management Agency office in Baton Rouge, La., used radio backup to keep in touch with New Orleans.

The airport control tower also used radio to contact Houston for clearance to let planes take off from New Orleans.

It all began at 5 a.m. CST, when heavy rains flooded the basement of South Central Bell's 16-story computer building in downtown New Orleans. Officials cut commercial power to the building.

An emergency diesel-powered generator, test-run only two days before, automatically started, but shut itself off 43 minutes later when the oil overheated.

An electrical fuse the size of a cigar had blown and fans used to cool the engine oil never started, Lindsey said. The engine could not be restarted until the oil cooled.

The second backup system, huge batteries kept on an upper floor, became the power source for the building and its vital switching equipment.

WASHINGTON (AP) — William Ruckelshaus, in his first appearance before the country's top environmental groups, was praised for his willingness to listen, but criticized for not offering a commitment to policy changes within the Environmental Protection Agency.

26 groups, including the Sierra Club, the National Audubon Society and the Wilderness Society, in what turned into a gripe session.

Conservationists presented complaints about administration policies over the last two years and pressed the need for a reversal of Reagan administration policies.

Teamsters president offers resignation for freedom

CHICAGO (AP) — Teamsters President Roy L. Williams, threatened with a 55-year prison sentence for conspiring to bribe a U.S. senator, faced a choice today between resigning as head of the nation's largest union or reporting to a prison hospital.

Attorney Raymond G. Larroca told U.S. District Judge Prentice H. Marshall on Thursday that the hospitalized union leader would resign "if that's what he has to do" to remain free on bail pending appeal of the conviction.

But the defense lawyer said he was still considering a last-minute appeal to Supreme Court Justice John Paul Stevens to allow Williams to remain free without resigning.

Williams, who suffers from severe emphysema, "is convinced that he will not survive incarceration," his lawyer said.

Today was the deadline set by Marshall for Williams to report to a federal prison hospital in Springfield, Mo., but Marshall said he would grant bail pending appeal if Williams resigned. He ordered Larroca to give his client's decision at a hearing this morning.

"If Mr. Williams removes himself from all positions of authority... the dangers will be removed and I won't deny him bail any more," said the judge, who has characterized Williams as a danger to society.

Marshall told Larroca that he wanted to see the resignation offer in writing before he makes a decision.

Williams has been hospitalized since Tuesday in Kansas City, Mo., with a breathing ailment. He was reported in fair condition early today and could travel the 125 miles to the prison hospital, a medical spokesman said.

Marshall, who said when he sentenced Williams that the union chief betrayed the working man, has refused to stay the sentence. Williams was convicted last December of conspiring to bribe then-U.S. Sen. Howard Cannon, D-Nev.

Larroca presented Williams' resignation offer Thursday, shortly after the 7th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals upheld Marshall's order that Williams must report to the hospital.

Larroca initially had offered a deal in which Williams, 68, would resign his $225,000-a-year post within a few days in exchange for being granted bail. Williams wanted to say goodbye at a Teamsters executive board meeting, the lawyer said.

But Mark Vogel, a federal prosecutor, said the government insists "either he resigns tomorrow or he surrenders."

In addition to a written resignation, the government wants a pledge from Williams not to influence or interfere in union affairs after stepping down, said Douglas Roller, head of the government's Strike Force in Chicago.

Under federal law, Williams would be able to hold his title as president of the 1.6-million-member union until all appeals are exhausted, even if he is imprisoned. Williams was elected to his position shortly after his indictment in 1981.

Williams and four others were convicted of conspiring to bribe Cannon by offering him exclusive rights to buy Teamster-owned land in Las Vegas, Nev., at bargain price in exchange for his help in defeating a trucking deregulation bill. A co-defendant, Allen Dorfman, was gunned down after the trial.

Cannon was not charged in the case and the bill became law with his support, but he lost a re-election bid in November.

Marshall provisionally sentenced Williams in March to 55 years in prison, fined him $29,000 and ordered him to undergo a medical exam to determine his suitability for prison.

The judge said the sentence probably would be lessened "significantly" after the medical evaluation.

Williams was admitted to the intensive care unit of Park Lane Medical Center in Kansas City on Tuesday.

Four indicted for shipping high technology equipment to Europe

ALEXANDRIA, Va. (AP) — Two West Germans and two Austrians have been indicted on charges of illegally shipping American high technology items to Soviet Bloc countries in Eastern Europe.

The major items shipped were microwave circulators used in communications systems, according to the grand jury indictments announced Thursday by Elsie L. Munsell, U.S. attorney for the Eastern District of Virginia.

The charges include conspiracy, violations of the Export Administration Act and making false statements to U.S. government agencies.

Israel born from ghetto uprising

By MARCUS ELIASON

GHETTO FIGHTERS' KIBBUTZ, Israel (AP) — Forty years ago the poorly armed Jews of Warsaw fought a doomed battle against the Nazi war machine.

Today a thriving community founded by survivors of that fight is part of a modern Jewish state whose commitment to survival was forged in the Holocaust and the flames of the Warsaw ghetto.

The Lebanese border is nine miles north of Ghetto Fighters' Kibbutz. Tanks often tie up traffic as they grind past the little farm settlement.

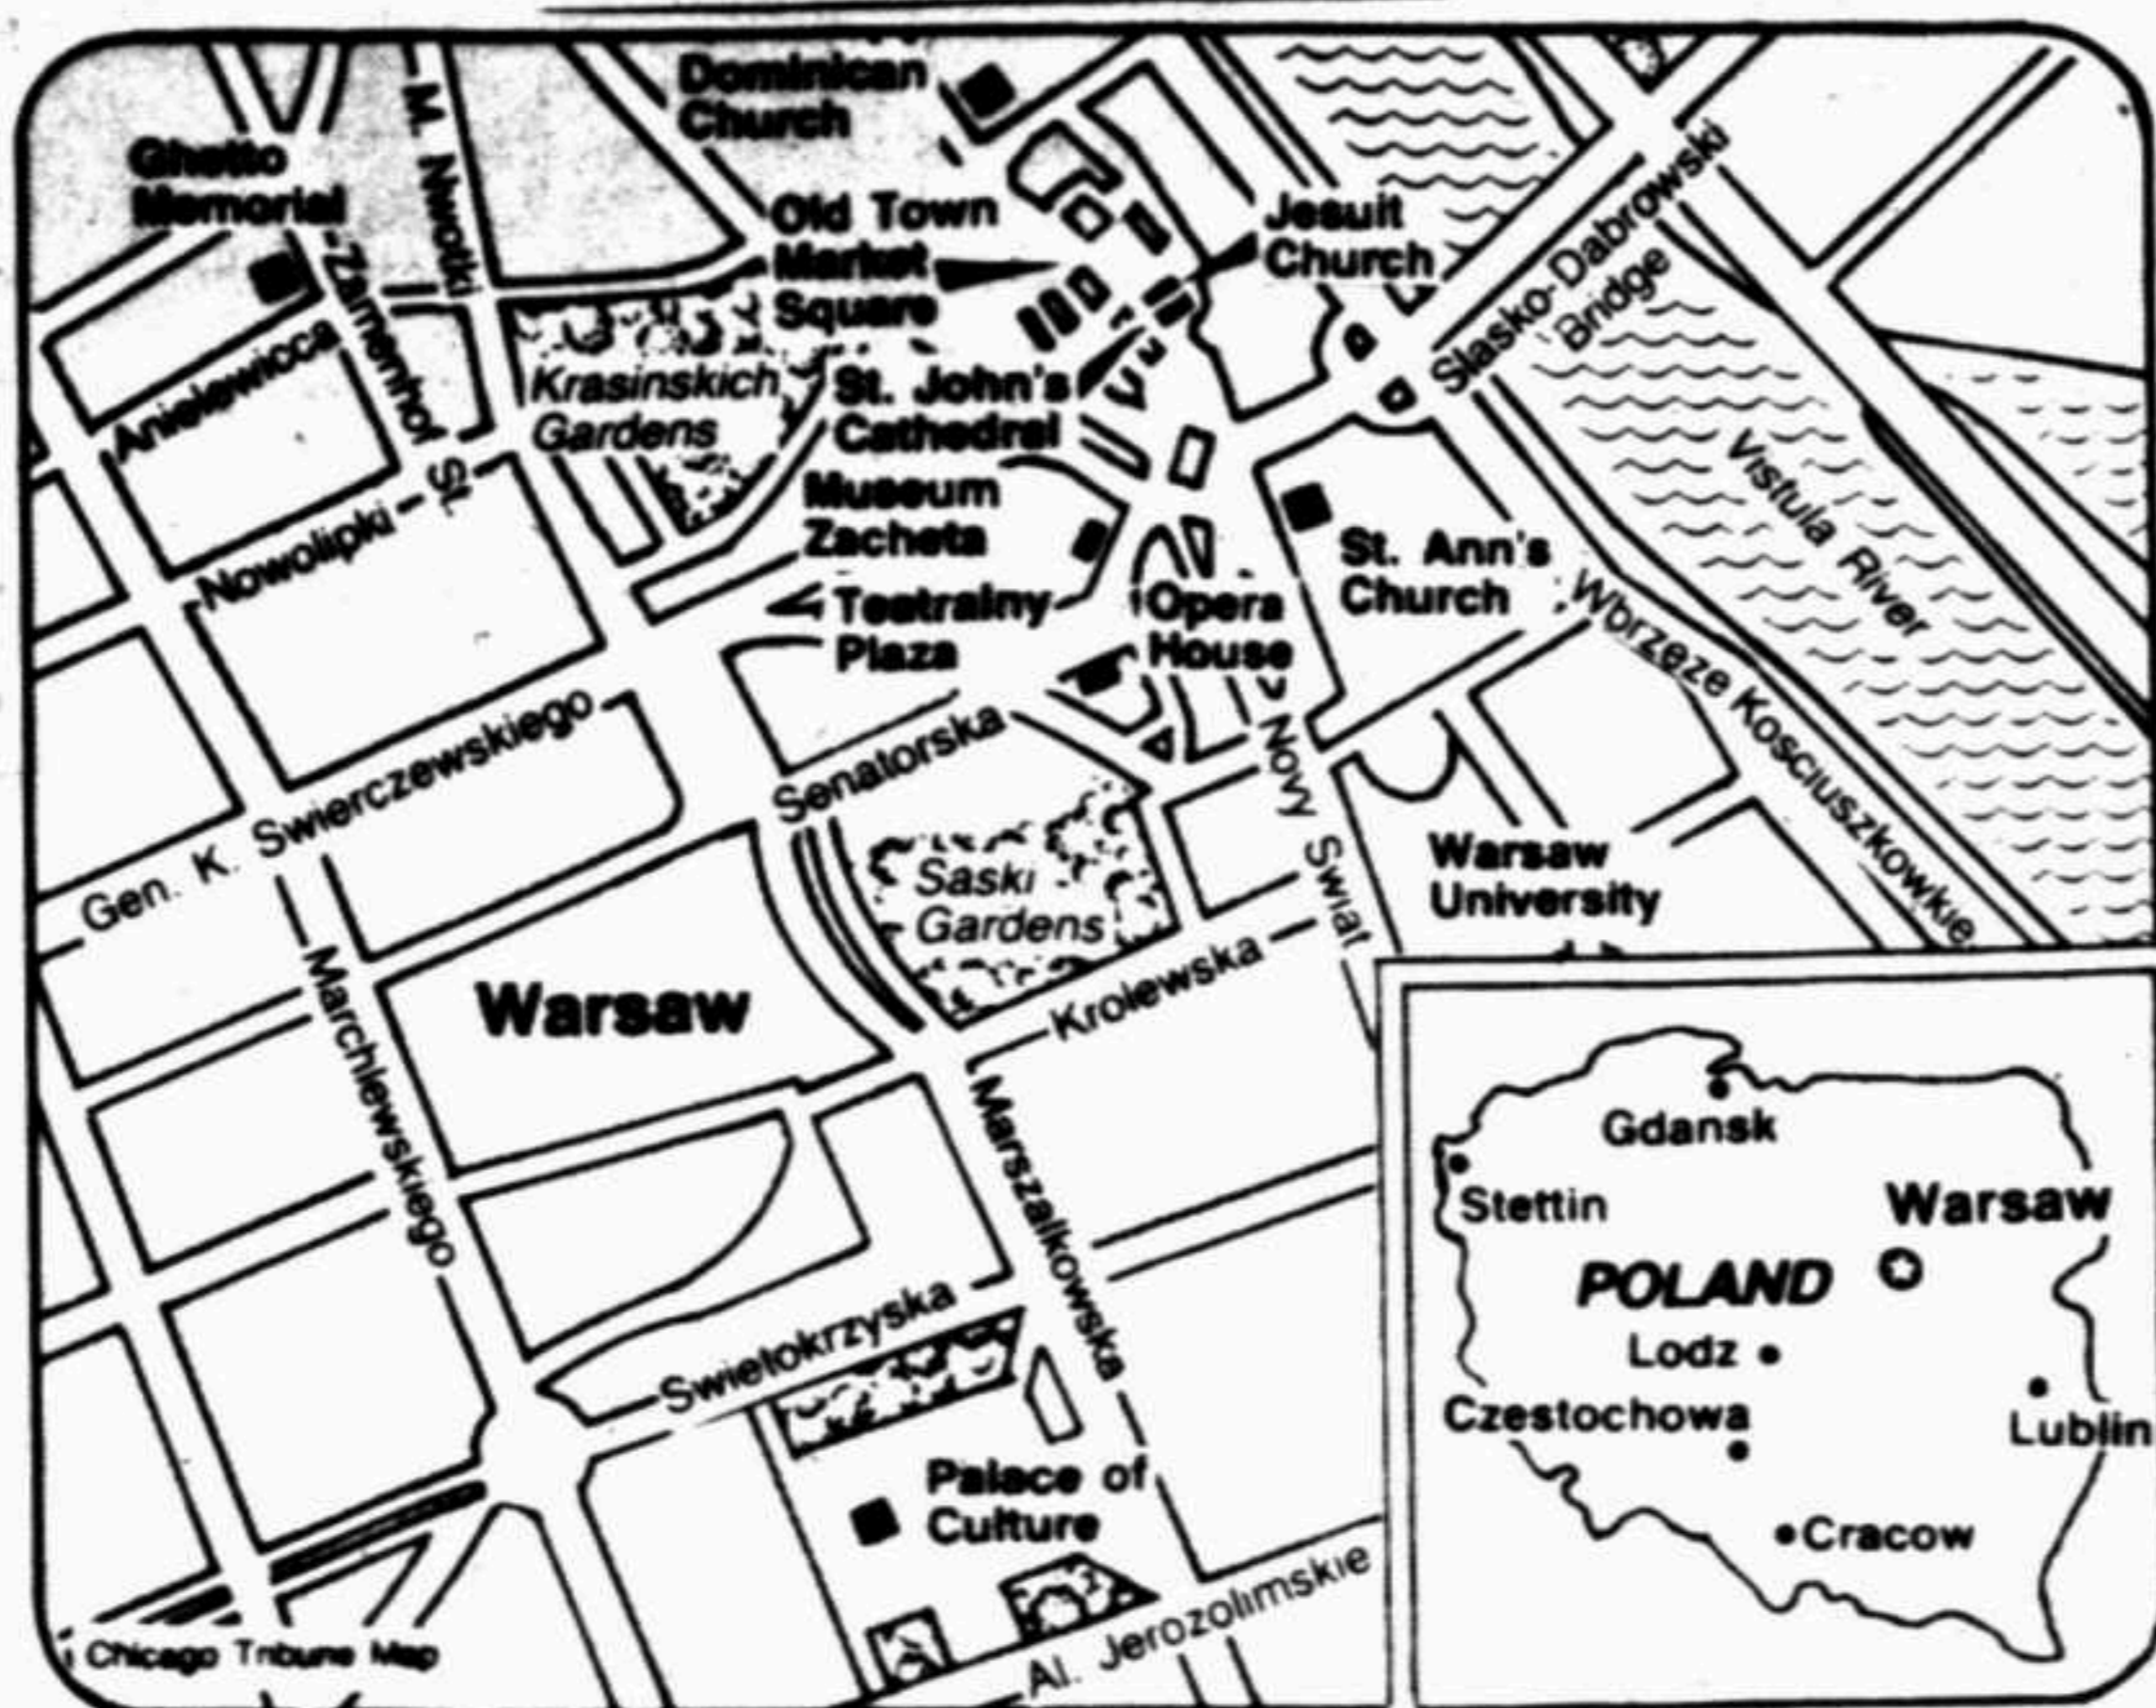

That computerized artillery and Israel's sophisticated warplanes have rearranged the geo-politics of the Middle East — and stand as proof that David's sling has turned to a formidable military force.

The memory of the Warsaw Ghetto Uprising in World War II is one of the foundations of the Israeli national character.

The story is drilled into every Israeli from childhood, along with this message: in a crisis the Jew stands alone, the outside world is indifferent, and those who strike Jews must be crushed, whether they are Arab armies or Palestinian guerrillas shelling a border settlement.

The memory of the uprising is also cherished as proof that the Jews could resist and did not all go to the Nazi gas chambers like lambs to the slaughter. "When we decided to fight in Warsaw, we had no illusions that we could defeat the German army," says Chavka Folman-Raban, one of the ghetto survivors who founded this kibbutz in 1949.

"I don't like to use fancy language," she says, "but I can only say — we fought to save our honor." She remembers vividly and with a self-conscious laugh how she smuggled grenades into the ghetto under her skirts. "I had a goyische (Gentile) face and my Polish was upper-class, so I could move in and out quite easily."

The events of 1943 are documented in words and photographs at the kibbutz museum of the Holocaust.

"We wanted to do something to commemorate the fighters in Warsaw, and we built the museum even before we built the infants' nursery," says Binyamin Anolik, the curator.

The 40th anniversary of the uprising is being observed this week and hundreds of Israelis came to the museum for briefings before traveling to Warsaw for ceremonies there.

Most have known since childhood the story of the uprising.

By mid-1940, the Nazis had crammed 400,000 Jews into the Warsaw Ghetto, intending that they die of starvation and forced labor. In 1942 the Nazis approved the Final Solution — the annihilation of the Jews of Europe — and by April 1943, all but 60,000 ghetto dwellers had been sent to the gas chambers. A band of young Jews, most of them members of Zionist organizations, began preparing a last stand. They stockpiled a few dozen guns, grenades and an arsenal of firebombs and waited for the SS to move in.

The SS commander, Juergen Stroop, wrote to Heinrich Himmler: "Hardly had the operation begun than we ran into strong concerted fire by the Jews and bandits. The tank and two armored cars were pelleted with Molotov cocktails...Owing to this enemy counter-attack we had to withdraw."

An angry Himmler shot back: "The uprising in the Warsaw Ghetto must be suppressed with utmost severity and ruthlessness. The more brutal the better. The events prove how dangerous the Jews are."

Stroop burned down every building that housed resisters. "Despite the danger of being burned alive, the Jews and bandits often preferred to return to the flames rather than risk being caught by us," he wrote.

Mordechai Anielewicz, the 24-year-old commander of the rebellion, wrote a message to his comrade Yitzhak Zuckerman who was operating outside the ghetto: "What has happened is beyond my wildest dreams: the Germans have fled the ghetto twice...I have been privileged to see Jewish self-defense in all its greatness and glory."

The ghetto fighters sent anguished appeals to the world, but no help came. The rest of the Polish population stood aside. Not until the following year did Warsaw revolt against the Nazis.

Anielewicz died at his command post. Zuckerman made it to Israel and lived at Ghetto Fighters' Kibbutz until his death.

The operation, which the SS reckoned would take three days, lasted four weeks. On May 16, 1943, Stroop concluded his report: "The Jewish quarter in Warsaw no longer exists."

Stroop was hanged by the Polish government in 1961 in the ruins of the ghetto.

U.S. tourists ignorant of Mexico's laws

MATAMOROS, Mexico (AP) — Great buys, the thrill of a saucy Latin holiday or just a spicy meal across the border lure thousands of American tourists into Mexico each year.

The vast majority of visitors find what they're looking for. A few, however, smack unwittingly into a legal system that tends to arrest first and ask questions later and assumes a person is guilty until proven innocent.

"There are a lot of happy innocents traveling abroad," said U.S. Vice Consul Christopher Dell in Matamoros. "Most of them remain so."

A Fort Worth man and teenagers he chaperoned on a spring break trip across the border, however, left Mexico outraged over an unexpected encounter with Matamoros authorities.

Richard Laisure, 37, claims he and five teenagers were beaten and robbed for no reason by Matamoros police March 17. Three of the youths, including Laisure's 16-year-old son, were handcuffed and jailed nearly four hours.

Police claim the Texans were drunk and were arrested for arguing with and insulting officers investigating an automobile accident.

The case, as far as Matamoros officials are concerned, is closed.

"This makes me proud to be an American," Laisure said when he returned to the U.S. side of the border. "At least somebody here cares."

American consular officials in Matamoros would not comment about Laisure's case because it involves minors whose parents have not consented to release of information.

But Consul George Kettenhofen said he's received "very few" reports of police brutality against Americans in Matamoros. "But, he noted, "we've had some Americans who have misbehaved."

The officials believe Matamoros Mayor Jorge Cardenas has made an effort to protect the rights of foreign visitors.

Dell and Kettenhofen discussed in a recent interview what Americans can expect when they cross the border and what services the American Consulate provides.

"We're here to make sure Americans are treated fairly by the standards of the country in which they're in," Dell said.

But, he added, "Many Americans don't realize that when you leave the United States, you leave your U.S. rights behind."

"You are not accorded special privileges because you are an American," Dell said. "You are voluntarily putting yourself under foreign law."

The officials say Americans traveling abroad generally demonstrate a lack of experience about what it means to be in a foreign country. Americans who live along the border and cross frequently into Mexico, however, have a better conception of their rights, they said.

Woman: Life isn't cost-free

By TAMARA JONES

BERLIN (AP) — She finds companionship in Agatha Christie's fictional sleuth Miss Marple and fulfillment in negotiating international maritime treaties. But then, everything about Rozanne Ridgway's life seems worlds apart.

Now she is alone in East Berlin, trying to "assemble" a lifestyle as the U.S. ambassador to East Germany, thousands of miles from a new husband, her family, old friends.

After flipping around the globe like a tiddlywink during a 26-year diplomatic career — Manila, Palermo, Nassau, Helsinki — Rozanne Ridgway has learned one truth the hard way.

"Life isn't cost-free," she says with a throaty chuckle. She repeats the phrase 20 minutes later, without laughing.

Sitting in the understated elegance of an embassy office where the only personal touches are a photo of her husband and a volume of Finnish poetry, Ms. Ridgway reflects that the price indeed has been high.

But worth it. "Every morning I discover I'm a survivor," the 47-year-old diplomat said in an interview with The Associated Press recently in East Berlin.

The discovery comes "on a rainy, gloomy day, 8,000 miles from home, and 8,000 miles from the nearest close friend, and 8,000 miles away from your husband."

And further still, in a sense, from the white-picket fence entwined with calla lilies where Ms. Ridgway grew up in St. Paul, Minn.

Her father sold tires at a service station near the stockyards and her mother stayed at home.

She went to grade school right across the street. High school was six blocks away. Hamline University, where she studied history, was just one block from the white picket fence.

Then, at age 20, Rozanne Ridgway joined the U.S. Foreign Service, boarded a plane to Manila in the Philippines and left home in grand, "look, no hands" style.

A dozen years and a handful of countries passed by, and "I looked up and realized there was nothing else I wanted to do," she recalls.

"Indeed, you could say the Foreign Service is the ideal career for the person who seeks security and at the same time doesn't like the notion of being the kind of person that does seek security."

Actress ready for a change

KLOSTERS, Switzerland (AP) — Deborah Kerr gingerly puts another log on the fire, even though there are unseasonably high temperatures in this Alpine resort where she and her American writer husband, Peter Viertel, make their home.

"The time has come in my life to change," says the Scottish-born film star. "There comes in almost every actress' life that bridge between when you're too old to play this part and you're too young to play that part. There is a gap, a sort of chasm which you have to coast over if you can."

At 24, Miss Kerr played an alcoholic in her 60s. Now that she's 61 and a seemingly ageless beauty, she could easily slip into a much younger part. Still, she emphasizes matter-of-factly, "it's time to change."

In an acting career that has spanned 43 years, change has presented no problem to her. She has continually demonstrated her versatility as a film actress in roles that have included a princess, a murderer, a nun, a nymphomaniac and just about every other imaginable part.

Last year, she had a small, but amusing, role in the TV revival of the Agatha Christie classic, "Witness for the Prosecution," which Billy Wilder had turned into a movie hit in the early 50s.

"Finding such parts is difficult, so it was wonderful when it came along," said Miss Kerr. Miss Kerr would love to do more movies, especially for television. But she is choosy. She says she has turned down quite a few scripts, either for being too explicit or too violent.

"I'll wait," she says. "I don't want to do junk."

In 1968, she refused to play a nude scene in "The Gypsy Moths."

"Had it been necessary for the dramatic content, I would have done it," she said. "But it was completely gratuitous. Who on earth in a small American town would live stark naked in the living room of a very humble house where the neighbors might come by and look through the window?"

Things were different, she said, in her last Hollywood movie, "The Arrangement."

"There, the nude scene was necessary, husband and wife in bed together, that was real." But the scene was cut.

"They don't cut anything now," she says, referring to the blood and guts films so popular today with teenagers.

She and Viertel were married in 1960 after her first marriage to Anthony Bartley, a Royal Air Force ace in World War II, ended in divorce.

In her first film, she was cast as a hat-check girl with two lines. The part wound up on the cutting-room floor.

Education's first

Looking at all those trees sometimes can prove confusing, making the onlooker susceptible to forgetting what the forest is all about. To avoid confusion, the onlooker should focus on the panorama.

While it may not be the best example of what Midland Independent School District trustees face in their current attempt to sort out the proper role between athletics and academics for junior high school students, it should serve commendably as a guiding light.

The proposal presented to trustees would have seventh and eighth grade students required to have passed at least three courses the previous semester, provided two were in the academic area, before being eligible to participate in athletics. The rule need arises, according to the Athletic Director Gil Bartosh, because of University Interscholastic League requirements regarding ninth graders' eligibility. The plan would provide a transitional period into the increased demands to which high school athletes are subjected and allow monitoring of junior high athletes' grades by Bartosh, according to Dr. Duane H. Moore, assistant superintendent of instructional services.

While the rule obviously would have merit in that it would keep some youngsters in school who otherwise might not be inclined to stay, there are a couple of drawbacks that need to be resolved before it's enacted.

One was addressed by Trustee Joe Golding who noted athletics should not be singled out in the matter. "If you're going to put something stricter on them, we need to look at the entire extra-curricular program." We couldn't agree more. That's the only fair way to approach the situation.

The second matter was brought up explicitly by Trustee Joyce Sherrod who said under the plan proposed "a student could have three F's and three D's" and still participate in athletics.

That, we feel, is the crux of the proposal's shortcoming. The purpose of Midland's schools is to provide an education for young people. Period! Athletics are extra-curricular activities just as are band, choir and any number of other school-related functions. That's not to imply these activities are without value. On the contrary, in many instances these activities can combine to give students a well-rounded junior high and high school experience, and memories to last a lifetime.

Simply put, though, these activities are extra-curricular. Their importance in the educational process is only secondary.

With that in mind and with the guidelines applied fairly to all extra-curricular activities, trustees should be able to forge a plan that will provide a clear view of the educational process for Midland's seventh and eighth graders.

East-West thaw

Even as evidence of covert U.S. military action against the Sandinista government of Nicaragua grows, a group of opinion leaders from throughout the Americas has issued a report calling for an approach toward instability and insurrection in Central America that is safer and sounder than U.S. military intervention.

The Reagan administration should read it carefully, for it reflects a sensitivity toward the complex history and current situation in Central America of which the administration's current policy is devoid.

The report — derived from discussions chaired by Sol M. Linowitz, former U.S. ambassador to the Organization of American States, and Galo Plaza, former president of Ecuador and former secretary-general of the OAS — was signed by about 50 leaders, among them U.S. bankers and businessmen, Latin American diplomats and two former U.S. secretaries of state.

They agree unanimously on two points: that instability in Latin America comes chiefly from economic, political and social conditions, not military pressure, and that "the sources of insecurity are internal to each nation; external influences are secondary. Even where there is a military dimension to conflict, as in Central America, solutions lie ultimately in economic and social development and political dialogue, not weapons or military advisers."

From these premises the report argues that there must be dialogue between the governments in El Salvador, Nicaragua and Guatemala and their respective opponents; between Nicaragua and each of its neighbors; between Cuba and all the countries of Central America, and between the United States and Cuba, the United States and Nicaragua and the United States and the Soviet Union. The report does not promise certain success from such efforts, but points out the grim alternative — continuing warfare without resolution that raises "the specter of wider regional conflict."

The purpose of the talks would be to find solutions to satisfy the countries of the region that their vital interests would be protected on the basis of national sovereignty, self-determination and nonintervention. The authors of the report believe that most of the governments and peoples of the hemisphere oppose expansion of Soviet and Cuban influence, and that the United States should make it unequivocally clear that its days of military intervention in the region are over. They state the obvious: that sharp conflict with revolutionary regimes is likely to breed intensified nationalist and revolutionary sentiment.

In a polite but mordant commentary on the administration's fixation on the Soviet part of the Central American equation, the report says that "perceived threats should be evaluated in light of the magnitude of the risk ... policies that magnify a danger out of proportion can themselves become part of the problem."

There is no evidence that the Soviet Union is interested in stabilizing Central America, but there is plenty of evidence that other nations are, including Cuba. The Administration's attitude toward international dialogue on Central America has ranged from cool to icy. The new report presents a compelling case for thaw.

BIBLE VERSE

In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you; for I go to prepare a place for you. John 14:2

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

IRS drowning offshore shelters

WASHINGTON — Our income-tax system is so burdensome and so unfair that it's driving otherwise law-abiding Americans into desperate and dubious measures to avoid paying their share.

In their outrage at the tax collectors' zealous efforts to squeeze out every last penny, some frustrated tax protesters have gone beyond the pale.

One alluring tax dodge that has tempted hundreds of Americans is provided by offshore banking facilities, which have long been used by bootleggers, drug dealers and other racketeers to evade U.S. taxes. Now the tax-protest groups are using these overseas banks in attempts to get beyond the reach of the Internal Revenue Service.

According to IRS records, at least 35 ongoing investigations involve the use of these offshore havens by tax protesters. The target of one investigation is a softspoken 52-year-old member of the Posse Comitatus protest group. His name is Lowell G. Anderson, of Greybull, Wyo.

A recent federal indictment charged that Anderson and others conspired to cheat Uncle Sam of income taxes by selling illegal "common-law trusts" in offshore banks, including the Oxford International Bank & Trust Co. of the Turks & Caicos Islands in the British West Indies. The trusts sold for anywhere from $750 to $20,000, according to the indictment.

IRS and Senate records provide a typical example — that of Thomas C. Woodward of Casper, Wyo. In October 1978, Woodward — who has not been charged with a crime — bought a $7,000 trust after Anderson falsely assured him that the common-law trust device had not been challenged by the IRS and could eliminate the need for filing incometax returns. Woodward opened two bank accounts on the same day at Oxford International, by means of a letter prepared by Anderson, who also furnished Woodward a bank signature card. Records developed by the Senate Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations show that at least five other Americans had trusts at the bank that involved Anderson.

In fact, the largest single deposit the bank ever received — $472,459 put in a trust account — was endorsed by Anderson.

The records show that from April 1978 to January 1979, Anderson, through a "Liberty Trust" at Oxford International, deposited $33,877 for himself and withdrew $37,500 in 56 separate transactions. All told, bank records for 10 months in 1978-1979 indicate that at least $492,459 was deposited through Anderson in common-law trusts at the bank.

Senate investigators could not say definitely that the offshore trusts were created to avoid taxes, but they could think of no legitimate reason for the accounts.

Anderson told his associate Tony Capaccio that the indictment is "sprinkled full of perjuries directed by IRS agents in the field."

Although he was hazy on details of the Turks & Caicos transactions, Anderson said: "I did talk to a lot of people about loss of bank privacy in this country ... If people decide they don't want to lose their privacy, what crime is it for American citizens to do business anywhere in the world? There's no crime."

On this most painful day for American taxpayers, it might be wise to remember that the IRS doesn't agree with Anderson.

LONELY HERO: Any writer in America, if he is cantankerous enough, can assail government leaders and get away with it. But it takes an authentic hero to practice my kind of journalism in a tyranny. Jorge Fontevicchia dared to criticize the military dictatorship in Argentina. He gave the Argentine people an alternative to the official version of events. He also published my reports from Washington with a boldness that is not always found in some U.S. editorial rooms.

For his editorial independence, he was hounded, harassed, threatened, kidnapped and eventually driven into exile. His magazine, La Semana was suppressed. The final issue contained the last of my reports, which was based on the reporting of my associate Dale Van Atta.

The kidnapping occurred four years ago. Fontevicchia was dragged from his automobile, blindfolded and hustled away to an unknown destination. He was held for a week in a small room, without light or human contact.

"I don't know who kidnapped me," he said. But it was not uncommon for military goons to kidnap, torture and murder critics of the government.

He was turned loose, with a warning. Undaunted, Fontevicchia marched right back to his publishing plant and continued to print the news as straight as he could, letting the facts fall where they may.

He was threatened and intimidated. The next time, he was told, he would be kidnapped and would never return. Sinister men followed him. The police kept a watch on his home. More than once, they searched his house and his office.

They shut down his magazine, but an appeal to the courts got a reprieve. Then last month, he was tipped off that the military government planned to arrest him. He fled to the Venezuelan embassy just ahead of the secret police.

The Venezuelan ambassador arranged for him to leave the country and personally escorted him to the airport. Outside the embassy, a large crowd of people gathered to cheer him and sing songs of freedom.

He contacted me from Venezuela. "I pretended to do the things similar to what you do in the United States," he said modestly.

"The situation in Argentina," he added, "is better than it was a few months ago." He described the military government as "like an animal near death."

What are his plans? "I will wait for the next democratic government and go back," he said.

And if the new government should oppress the people, he will write about it.

LETTERS

Easter story draws critic

To The Editor: I was really angered at the front page article in Family Weekly, dated April 3, 1983, about Easter. Granted, you might not have written it, but to put such a warped, perverted, article about the Lord Jesus Christ, His holy word, and the first of His ordained feast, Passover, in your paper!

I'm positive the person who wrote it never read one word of scripture. For then, they would know, that Passover is not a combination of several ancient pagan festivals, but started when God Almighty spoke to Moses and Aaron in Egypt. For God made the Passover, as written in His word, in Exodus the twelfth chapter.

And the biggest blasphemy to God, our Lord Jesus Christ, is to even imply that His Resurrection has anything to do with sexuality! The Resurrection of our Lord Jesus: was to fulfill scripture (Luke 24:45-46), to prove He was God, to bear our sins so we might have eternal life, and to make faith real (1 Corinthians 15:14-17).

As it says on our dollar bill "In God We Trust." This is a classic example that America doesn't even know God, let alone trust Him! The only truth, to the whole article, is that Easter is a pagan ritual. It came from Babylon, worshipping the fertility goddess Ishtar. We still carry this pagan ritual on by playing with eggs, bunnies, etc., and what really gets me, is the people say we celebrate Christ in this mess. America better start reading the Bible and ask the Holy Spirit to reveal it!

Sloan patrol

To The Editor: As taxpayers of Midland we were happy to know that during the week of March 14, no matter what crimes might have been committed in West Midland, the 1800 block of Missouri Street was being made safe for Tom Sloan.

According to the Reporter-Telegram, at the request of City Councilman Tom Sloan, our already short-handed police force was reduced to becoming, what has become known around the police department as "the Sloan Patrol."

Surely the police have more important things to do than spend 16 hours a day, for at least four days protecting Tom Sloan from those criminals driving trucks over 1/2 ton. Those 37 people receiving tickets have been charged with violating an ordinance that applies to only a small section of two streets in town, and had not been enforced since 1960, but what they were really guilty of was driving in front of Tom Sloan's house.

We have an excellent police force and they should be allowed to protect all the streets of Midland, not just those that city councilmen live on. When one man can demand that the police department have a patrolman stationed on his block 16 hours a day, and have it done, then tell me where the rest of us who are not councilmen can sign up so that we can get the same protection for our block?

About the oil

To The Editor: State Sen. Bill Sims, who represents our West Texas area, declared his elation at being assigned vice-chairman of the Natural Resources Committee's Subcommittee on Energy. "We've got more oil and less water than just about anywhere in this state, and it's going to be very important to manage both correctly."

His concern about water is well founded. The ominous note is his comment about managing the oil correctly. Since most regulation of oil has either been vested in the Railroad Commission or has been usurped by the federal government, what do you suppose he means to do? All I can read into his statement is more state taxes. It looks as if the oil patch is to again become the goat of the election process, to be milked by those who would buy votes and entrench themselves through their give-away programs of high state spending.

INSIDE REPORT:

Tip threatens Caribbean policy

WASHINGTON — House Speaker Thomas P. (Tip) O'Neill is emerging as a behind-the-scenes power shadowing President Reagan's Caribbean policy in a way that threatens the administration's hopes for a Marxist-free Central America.

When liberal Rep. David Obey of Wisconsin late last month whipspered in O'Neill's ear on the House floor that Chairman Clarence (Doc) Long of the House Foreign Operations Subcommittee might finesse a formal vote on Reagan's emergency aid for El Salvador, O'Neill intervened to assure a vote. That undermined both Reagan and Doc Long of Maryland. Then, early this week, word passed quietly to the Oval Office that O'Neill was considering a personal intervention to scotch Reagan's secret plan to undermine the Marxist Nicaraguan government.

O'Neill's sudden and, from Reagan's standpoint, malevolent interest in the administration's Latin policy is only partly a signal that the 1984 presidential campaign is now on the political threshold. It also signals a growing suspicion among liberal Democrats that Reagan has become vulnerable, particularly in his anti-Marxist policies in Central America. These Democrats are prodding O'Neill and he seems to be responding.

Obey was regarded as a crucial swing vote among the eight Democrats on crusty Doc Long's subcommittee, but his confidential appeal to O'Neill showed that in fact he opposed the president. Long's panel must approve, reject or modify Reagan's request to reprogram $60 million for Salvador that was voted for other causes last year. Long, understanding the emergency nature of the request and the relatively piddling sums involved, was inclined to let the president have most of what he wanted — without a formal vote.

Reports differ whether O'Neill, after hearing Obey's warning, wrote Long a letter, asked him on the phone or spoke to him person-to-person about Obey's demand for a formal vote. Whichever it was, it had the effect of damping Reagan's hopes for quick action. Committee opponents of the emergency aid (for small arms and ammunition) are pushing a dozen different demands on the Salvadoran government as the price for freeing the U.S. aid money, all of which must now be considered.

Students encounter new rule

LOS ANGELES (AP) Drama teacher Nancy Pierandozzi had been struggling to fit all 22 students in her performing arts class into the spring production, but report cards handed out Monday made her problem. Nearly half the class didn't make the grades they needed to stay in the play.

The Rev. Thomas Lane Butts, a minister for 33 years and a columnist for a Montgomery newspaper, is accused of "participating in practices incompatible with Christian teaching," including having sex with the married parishioner and getting drunk while on a church outing.

Teachers face sex charges

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — A high school football coach and his school-administrator wife, accused of operating a kinky sex "dungeon" for profit, pleaded no contest to prostitution charges and could be sentenced to up to six months in jail, authorities say.

Decision to be appealed

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration says it will appeal a federal judge's decision striking down a regulation aimed at assuring food and hospital treatment for handicapped infants.

U.S. District Judge Gerhard Gesell ruled Thursday that the regulation was "hasty and ill-considered" and that the administration hadn't used proper procedures, including seeking public comment, before publishing it on March 7. The rule went into effect March 22.

He said the regulation was intended "to change the course of medical decision-making in these cases by eliminating the parents' right to refuse to consent to life-sustaining treatment of their defective newborn."

The lawsuit was brought by the American Academy of Pediatrics, the National Association of Children's Hospitals and Related Institutions and Children's Hospital National Medical Center of Washington, D.C.

Governor gets student's bill

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — A sixth-grader's bill to ban the sale of live chicks, goslings and bunnies that are dyed with decorative colors has been sent to the desk of Gov. Lamar Alexander.

The Senate vote Wednesday to approve the bill was 23-4, with Sen. John Rucker among the dissenters. Rucker said a company in his area that dyes the animals for Easter gifts would be put out of business.

"I think we've more to do than say you can't dye a chicken and sell it," Rucker said.

The bill, which previously cleared the House, was suggested by Mary Beth Butler of Dyersburg. Sen. Milton Hamilton said the measure also has 4-H Club backing.

A dyed chick or gosling dies "within about two weeks," Hamilton said.

Minister goes on public trial

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP) — Two hundred well-dressed spectators are crowding a church auditorium daily for an unusual public trial into the moral fitness of a Methodist minister, accused of drunkenness and having a sexual liaison with a married churchwoman.

With a bishop acting as judge, and a jury of 13 church elders, the man being tried faces possible punishment ranging from a reprimand to losing his clerical papers.

Undercover FBI agents face charges

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Two volunteer undercover agents who played their part so well they were arrested on cocaine charges say they revealed their roles because they were tired of having people think they were criminals.

The FBI confirmed Thursday that Bill Bartlett and Royce Wilkinson Jr. were volunteer undercover agents, but a prosecutor refused to say if charges will be dropped.

At a news conference Thursday, Bartlett said they had been working with the FBI for two years.

"We knew at the outset that there was a possibility we could be arrested," Bartlett said. But once arrested, he said, the "social pressure has been tremendous on my family."

"It's the first time I'd ever been in jail in my life and I never want to do it again," said Wilkinson.

Wilkinson, 39, said he agreed to work undercover partly for the "novelty" of it and because, "It's a well-known fact that I despise drugs."

"It was a part we had to play, and I think we played it well," said the 43-year-old Bartlett.

"The press conference sort of surprised me, to say the least," said Bill Pope, district attorney general for Tennessee. "They claimed that they were undercover agents the night they were arrested. Anyone looks at that with a skeptical eye."

Pope declined to answer directly whether the charges against Wilkinson and Bartlett would be dropped.

Un-California-like downpour greets Japan's Disneyland

By EUGENE MOOSA Associated Press Writer

URAYASU, Japan — It was great weather for ducks, and Donald was there. So were an estimated 20,000 Japanese undeterred by a very un-California-like downpour today to see the grand opening of Tokyo Disneyland.

In the opening ceremony this morning, Mickey and Minnie Mouse, Goofy, Pluto and Donald Duck stood on Main Street and held a tricolor ribbon which was cut by Masatomo Takahashi, president of the Japanese firm which developed the park, and E. Cardon Walker, chairman of Walt Disney Productions.

The only Disneyland outside of the United States is a replica of the original park at Anaheim, Calif. Built at a cost of $630 million, it is located on 204 acres of reclaimed land at Urayasu, just east of Tokyo.

"We have reservations for 2 million guests already," Norimasa Ohshiro, a park spokesman. He said the owners expect more than 10 million visitors per year, paying an admission fee of $10.50 for adults and $6.30 for children under 11.

Managed, financed and operated by Oriental Land Co., a Japanese real estate firm, the park was planned and designed by Walt Disney Productions. Walt Disney Productions receives 10 percent of the entrance fees and a 5 percent royalty on sales of foods and merchandise.

The first visitor to enter the premises today was Ichiro Sugiura, a 19-year-old college student who said he had taken his place at 10 p.m. Thursday night.

As soon as the gates were open, many Japanese teenage girls rushed to souvenir shops and donned Mickey Mouse caps while middle-aged couples roamed near the park's central monument, Cinderella Castle.

Tokyo Disneyland features four original attractions, as well as 28 exhibits and rides modeled after those at Disneyland in Anaheim and Disney World in Orlando, Fla. Ohshiro said.

Cubs suffer big-inning loss

By TED BATTLES Sports Editor

A couple of more tail-whippings like the last two nights and the Beaumont Golden Gators may wind up as the sleepy green reptiles in the eyes of Midland fans. Midland pitchers hung seven zeroes and a one on the scoreboard at Cubs Stadium Thursday night, but Beaumont spoiled it all with a Big Seven in the sixth for an 8-4 Texas League win over the Bruins.

cardinal sin for a relief, walking two batters to force in a run. Then Ozzie Guillen hit a bases loaded three-run double into the left-center field alley. Bryant last year was a 7-8 starter for Amarillo and "this year we are in the process of making him a reliever," said Harmon. Midland took a 3-1 lead when Rick Baker tripled and scored on a grounder in the first and added two more in the third when Anich doubled, Jim Walsh beat out an infield hit and Trey Brooks and Tommy Johnson followed with singles. But in the end, Beaumont's pitching savvy again paid off. When George Stabilein, who hurled for AAA Hawaii last season, tired, in the sixth, Midland had one run in and two on base. Marty Kain, who was 10-8 at Amarillo last year, came in to give up a run-scoring infield hit to Hatcher, but then slammed the door on the Cubs for his second save. Dan Purpura's three hits paced Beaumont's 10-hit offense, but the Gators' most impressive blow was Mike Gillaspie's solo homer over the right field barrier in the second. It was his second in two nights, fourth of the season and raised his rbi total to 11. No wonder the Cubs issued four walks to him Wednesday night.

OTHER HIGH points were left fielder Bill Hatcher, who collected four of Midland's 11 hits and the relief pitching of Ray Soff. "Soff did well in the one inning (ninth), but we've got to hold the opposition close until we can get him in." And the addition of Mike Anich, obtained from the New York Mets for "a player to be named later, add some power. Mike hit 22 homers in Jackson last year and that's a big park," said Harmon, not to mention a low altitude, not conducive to homers. Anich was involved in what probably was the game's crucial play in the Gators' seven-run sixth, an uprising that chased Midland starter Darrell Banks, who led 3-1 and had a four-hitter going before the roof collapsed. With a man on first, first baseman Anich dropped Mike Martin's foul pop up when Martin, running to first, made contact with the fielder. It was ruled the contact did not result from the contact, although the play brought Harmon out of the dugout on the run. Martin promptly doubled and before it was over 11 batters had paraded to the plate and the Gators had seven runs and an 8-3 lead.

NEIL BRYANT came in in relief with two runs in and runners on first and second and committed the

Winfield hits pitch instead of pitcher

Weather rains on Texas' winning, brings down roof

By The Associated Press

Dave Winfield confined his aggressiveness to home plate and the baselines and got the New York Yankees back on the right track.

Winfield, thrown out of Wednesday night's loss to Detroit when he jumped on pitcher Dave Rozema in the fifth inning after a pitch sailed over his head, jumped on a Jack Morris pitch in the fifth inning Thursday night. He ripped it for a tie-breaking single that led to a three-run burst and a 6-3 victory over the Tigers.

"We're 3-5. That's inconsistent," Winfield said of the Yankees' sputtering start. "We just haven't gotten untracked on offense or defense and our pitching hasn't been up to snuff."

It was Thursday night Dave Righetti, who has two of the Yankees' three victories and none of the losses, scattered three runs and seven hits and fanned seven batters before George Frazier took over with two outs in the seventh and picked up the save.

American League Roundup

"It's early, but it's good to get a game like that," said Righetti. "We needed the win." Minnesota postponed its game with California because of snow outside the Metrodome and Texas' game in Cleveland was rained out with the Rangers leading 4-1 in the fourth inning.

White Sox 12, Orioles 11 The temperature was near freezing, the wind was howling, rain and snow spilled down on Chicago's Comiskey Park.

"Let's face it," said Baltimore Manager Joe Altobelli, "we're talking about a game that's supposed to be played in the summertime."

Rookie Ron Kittle, who had a three-run homer in Chicago's six-run fifth inning, hit a two-run single in the three-run eighth that finally subdued Baltimore. Kittle also had a first-inning sacrifice fly in the game, which took almost four hours to complete.

"I was glad to get the game over," he said. "I had plastic bags over my feet."

Brewers 5, Blue Jays 4 Jim Gantner's tie-breaking two-out homer in the ninth inning gave Milwaukee its victory over the Blue Jays. The Brewers pulled into the 4-4 tie with two runs in the eighth on Robin Yount's single, Cecil Cooper's triple and Ted Simmons' single.

Willie Upshaw had an inside-the-park homer for Toronto, a looper to short left that skipped past diving Ben Oglive.

A's 5, Mariners 3 Wayne Gross' two-run homer and RBI single carried Oakland to its fifth victory in the past six games.

Gross' first-inning homer came after Bill Almon, who had singled, was safe with a stolen base when shortstop Todd Cruz dropped the throw. His infield single drove in the first of three runs in the third inning. Chris Codiroli was the winner with relief from Dave Beard, who gave up Ken Phelps' homer.

Elway sends message to Houston, Baltimore

NEW YORK (AP) — John Elway's agent has informed the Baltimore Colts and Houston Oilers that if they draft the Stanford quarterback, he would be inclined to pursue a career in baseball.

The New York Times reported in its Friday editions that Elway's agent, Melvin Demoff, told the Colts and Oilers — who have the first two picks in the National Football League draft — that Elway wants to play for an NFL team on the West Coast.

"John has an extremely strong preference to play in California or at least on the West Coast," the Times quoted Demoff as saying. "I have a strong feeling that if John finds his football alternative unreasonable or unacceptable, he would be more than willing to play baseball."

Elway, considered one of the top quarterback prospects in a decade, is almost certain to be the first pick in the draft, which will take place in New York April 26.

If the Colts don't take Elway, they would be likely to trade the pick for a combination of players and draft choices. One possible prospect would be the San Diego Chargers, whose quarterback Dan Fouts, a free agent, has been seeking a million-dollar contract.

Demoff said he believes that if Baltimore trades its choice to a team Elway prefers, he would have little difficulty negotiating a contract. He said reports that Elway would seek $7 million over five years were "about right."

Elway is also considered an excellent baseball prospect. An outfielder, he played last year in the New York Yankees' farm system on a one-year contract paying him $140,000. He hit .318 for Oneonta of the Class A New York-Penn League.

Court 'raids' NFL for $49.5 million

LOS ANGELES (AP) — As the Raiders and Los Angeles Coliseum Commission celebrated a $49.5 million damage judgment against the National Football League, a judge denied a separate attempt to halt the deal that brought the team from Oakland.

The Raiders and Coliseum got their second victory in two days when two Los Angeles area taxpayers sued Thursday to invalidate the pact that brought the Raiders from Oakland, but failed to get an immediate injunction.

Attorney Dana Cole and John Shur of Marina del Rey, claimed in their suit that the $6.7 million the Raiders are to get in rent credits and other payments in their first four years of tenancy is an illegal gift of public funds.

They asked Superior Court Judge John L. Cole to issue a preliminary injunction prohibiting any further payments and occupancy by the Raiders in the Coliseum until "the issue can be tried."

But Cole said that nothing warranted an immediate injunction, although he declined to dismiss the suit.

Los Angeles Raiders owner Al Davis puts on his $11.5 million dollar smile as he talks to reporters outside the courthouse.

"The court cannot, either now or at trial herein, determine whether it is wise or proper for the Coliseum Commission to contract with the Raiders. That is not a matter for judicial determination," Cole said.

"It is highly unlikely that plaintiffs will prevail in this action. There is no reasonable probability of injury to support the issuance of an injunction." Attorneys for the Coliseum and the Raiders had asked Cole to throw out the suit on the ground that the commission had acted properly and legally.

Last Dec. 9, William Robertson, leader of the Coliseum Commission negotiating team that reached agreement with the Raiders last July, said that the $6.7 million in payments to the Raiders was not really the loan it was said to be and would never be fully repaid. He explained that it was called a loan "only for tax purposes" for Raiders' managing general partner Al Davis.

While Thursday's court action was taking place, the NFL said in a statement that it would appeal Wednesday's jury award in the antitrust suit as well as the initial verdict that the league had violated federal law in holding up the Raiders' move.

"In attempting to require the Raiders to remain in Oakland, the member clubs were adhering to a long-standing NFL policy favoring franchise stability," said a statement from the NFL.

"The league will appeal the jury's verdict on damages, as it has already appealed the earlier jury trial decision."

Marfa is no California phony

The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

California has a king-size inferiority complex when it comes to Eastern-classic thoroughbred horse racing. Cal-breds have won only four Kentucky Derbies and no Preakness or Belmonts in the more than 100 years those stakes have been run.

In the 46 years of the Santa Anita Derby, only six of its winners have gone on to win the Kentucky Derby, and only one has won the Triple Crown.

What has probably happened is that we've been sending the wrong kind of characters back there: horses that confirmed the East's worst feelings about California racing, nice, polite, well-bred, mannerly horses, little gentlemen all, the kind that would use the right spoon, go to the right schools, get up to let a lady sit down on a bus, never spit on the sidewalk.

I mean, they were the make-believe kind of horses, part-Disney, part-donkey, over-publicized glamour types. Hollywood-and-Vine horses owned by movie moguls, pampered refugees from cowboy movies. In short, phonies.

"Next you'll be telling me they can talk," sneered the hardboots. If these horses were human they'd be wearing gold chains, loafers without socks, shirts open to the waist, dark glasses and be telling you about their last picture.

The Eastern writers were properly derisive. "Nice little California sprinter," they would sneer about the state's latest entrant. "Another Midnight Cowboy from the land of the downhill tracks." A writer would say of a track-searing performance elsewhere that it was really a record "unless you count times taken in California." And so on. Humiliating.

Well, now, a Hollywood trainer who parts his name in the middle like any self-respecting movie figure, D. Wayne Lukas, who has an astonishing record of getting California horses ready for the Triple Crown classics in his few years around the West coast barns, has revised the script. He is getting a horse ready who is about as gentlemanly and courtly as Huntz Hall or Erich Von Stroheim. In a picture, he'd play a Nazi. If he was human, he'd be mugging people in Central Park, drowning cats. He makes a Cagney character look like a mama's boy, Bogie look like a sentimental slob.

He's named after a rough, tough Texas town — Marfa — but some think that's too polite for him, that he should be named "Saturday Night in Milano Junction." Or "Badwater." Marfa's a bully, is what he is. Lukas has a great deal of trouble convincing him that what goes on at the track is a race, not a brawl. Marfa thinks it's a tag-team match. He's there to break legs, not win derbies. He'd make a great linebacker. In hockey, he'd be the enforcer.

He'd rather eat the competition than beat it. That horse alongside just looks like a trayful of filet mignons to Marfa. He takes a "no, thanks, I'll eat it here" attitude to a horse race.

Wayne Lukas is not exactly scared of him. It's just that he never knows what he's going to do next. "He thought about putting Noble Home in the lake at Latonia," Lukas says. In post parades, he "gets into personality conflicts with the lead ponies." Says Lukas: "In the stretch at Latonia, I covered my eyes. When he came to Noble Home in the lead, I didn't know what he was going to do." Mug him and strip his wallet was a distinct possibility, Lukas admits. Instead, Marfa beat him by eight lengths.

Another thing Marfa does is beat his opponents. Not fancily. His time in winning the Santa Anita Derby Sunday was the slowest in 26 years. But he intimidates his competition. They run slower, he doesn't run faster. They're afraid of what he'll do to them. His name probably should be "Mafia," not Marfa.

"He has no finesse at all," concedes Lukas. "He's not going to end up in ballet. He's a corner-bat type. A bouncer. An alley fighter. He's a biter, a kicker and he hates to be told what to do. He'd get kicked out of Harvard. He'd probably misbehave on TV, insult the Queen Mother. He's got a terrible temper. He hates horses."

In short, Marfa hardly fits the Hollywood image of Trigger, the wonder horse, or Champion or Silver, one of those kindly sound-stage steeds who would fan the fallen cowboy with his hat or rescue the leading lady from a burning barn. Marfa would probably carry her in.

He creates trouble wherever he goes. This year, to get into the Kentucky Derby, a horse must win enough money to qualify as an elite of the turf. The Derby means to keep the ribbon clerks out, to hold the field to 20 horses, no more, based on earnings. Marfa was so so-so, so inconsistent in his early races that he came up with only $28,000 or $30,000, depending on which balance sheet you read last month. Lukas shipped him to Latonia Downs to pick up some badly needed scratch. He won the race contemptuously. He had never seen such a collection of glass jaws in his life.

But the defeated horses were so resentful of this no-goodnick, this lowlife who beat them, that they complained that he didn't belong in the race, which, like the Derby, was restricted to the top 12 money earners among the entrants.

As a matter of fact, Marfa didn't belong in the race. Not for the reasons they cited. It was like Man o' War in a claimer, as it turned out.

But Marfa comes off as an operator of a sting, like a guy who sits in on a no-limit game with an ace strapped to his sleeve and stage money.

West coast horses have never had reputations as hustlers before. They always seemed more the product of makeup, of press agency, rhinestone horses but not ever dudes who might be known as "Slick."

Louisville has never seen a rough rider like this one come from the Coast. This is no easy rider, no laid-back "Let's have lunch" character. This guy will fit right in with the drifters in the rooming houses along the Ohio. As a matter of fact, he might pick your pocket. Just don't get in any card games with him. And, above all, don't go down any dark alleys with him. He's the kind of guy who might carry piano wire.

Garvey plays numbers game

By The Associated Press

The numbers tell the story for Steve Garvey, but not for Ruppert Jones.

Garvey, playing in his 1,116th consecutive game, one shy of the National League record, doubled home the Padres' winning run in the fifth inning as San Diego topped the San Francisco Giants 6-4 Thursday.

Jones' consecutive-game streak doesn't come close. But the Padres' All-Star center fielder, who was batting an anemic .156 entering the game, slammed a three-run homer in the victory.

"I really feel good, better than everything indicates," said Jones, who hit .324 in April last year. "I'm not worried about the slow start. I've been hitting the ball well. I'm just not finding the hole."

Jones' smash off rookie right-hander Andy McGaffigan snapped a 2-2 tie in the fourth inning.

"The ballpark is so big, I didn't know it would go that far," he said of his first homer of the year.

McGaffigan, making his first major league start, also was touched for a two-run homer by Terry Kennedy, a two-run shot in the first inning.

"He looked all right," Giants Manager Frank Robinson said of McGaffigan, who gave up seven hits and six runs in 41-3 innings. "If it hadn't been for two big hits, he would still be in the game."

Former Giant John Montefusco, 1-0, went six innings and was touched for six hits, all singles.

Expos 4, Cubs 3
Tim Raines tripled home two runs and Scott Sanderson tossed seven-hit ball over seven innings as Montreal stopped Chicago.

Andre Dawson also homered for the Expos, his first of the season, a solo blast into the left field seats in the fifth.

Pitcher Dan Schatzeder, who came on for winner Scott Sanderson, 2-0, to start the eighth, was struck on the right arm by Jerry Morales, the first batter he faced.

"It hit my index finger first and tore the nail back a bit," Schatzeder said. "Then it went up and struck my arm. It left my finger numb. We'll just have to see how it feels tomorrow."

Cards 7, Mets 1
St. Louis chased Mike Torrez with a seven-run first inning highlighted by David Green's two-run triple as the Cardinals won their fourth in a row and the Mets dropped their fourth straight. Torrez lasted only two-thirds of an inning and gave up six hits.

Bob Forsch pitched a four-hitter for the Cards, losing his shutout on Hubie Brooks' fifth-inning homer. Forsch also had an RBI double in the big first inning, as did Darrell Porter.

Kentucky's Hall told to play ball

By The Associated Press

LEXINGTON, Ky. — Overseers of the University of Kentucky Athletics program, in a resolution passed Thursday, ordered Coach Joe B. Hall and Athletics Director Cliff Hagan to negotiate terms of a basketball game with the University of Louisville.

Hall lobbied against the resolution at the beginning of the meeting saying a rivalry with Louisville or any other state school would erode the "border-to-border support" the UK program enjoys, Hall said.

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — A federal jury has convicted two men of conspiring to violate federal anti-racketeering laws in a thoroughbred race-fixing scheme. The jury found Oarus Donald Oakes of Indianapolis and Donald Eugene Bowers, a trainer who at the time of the indictment was under suspension by Louisiana's Jefferson Downs stewards, guilty of the scheme that included the attempted substitution of a "ringer" at Churchill Downs in June, 1981.

NFL no haven for free agents

By BRUCE LOWITT
AP Sports Writer

There hasn't been a rush by National Football League teams to take advantage of loosened free-agency compensation and the chief lawyer for the players union calls the inactivity "a conspiracy of silence."

The deadline for teams to make proposals to the 252 players who became free agents following the truncated 1982 season is today.

Of those 252, 23 have been signed by their present teams, seven have retired and 13 have jumped to the United States Football League — leaving 209 unaccounted for, including San Diego quarterback Dan Fouts (who was to have talked to the USFL earlier this week but was a no-show) and wide receivers Harold Carmichael of Philadelphia and John Stallworth of Pittsburgh.

"The activity in the past has come in the last couple of days," said Dick Berthelsen, legal counsel for the NFL Players Association. "To get the total picture, you have got to wait until after the deadline."

There has been some activity, Berthelsen said, "but in effect, it's a conspiracy of silence. They don't bid. They want to leave well enough alone."

The new contract also allows free agents to sign for more money but still generate the same draft choices as they did previously.

Bucks down Bullets, 97-90

MILWAUKEE (AP) — The Milwaukee Bucks are finally healthy, which makes the Washington Bullets' National Basketball Association playoff hopes a little less than that.

Bob Lanier and Dave Cowens, who have started together only 13 times all season, played together Thursday night for the first time in nearly 2½ months as the Bucks defeated the Bullets 97-90 and dropped Washington below Atlanta and New York in the race for the final two Eastern Conference playoff spots.

Marques Johnson led the way with 26 points, but said the difference was the presence of Lanier and Cowens. Lanier, who missed 43 games because of knee injuries, had 14 points, nine rebounds, five assists, two blocked shots and a steal in 31 minutes. Cowens, who on Wednesday played his first game since Feb. 24, had four points and one rebound in 24 minutes.

In the only other game Thursday, the Portland Trail Blazers romped over the San Diego Clippers 120-83 as Calvin Natt scored 24 points. The victory enabled Portland to tie Kansas City for the fifth of six playoff spots in the West with Denver a game behind both.

Washington, which had won 12 of 14 games, is a full game behind the Knicks and a half game behind Atlanta in the playoff race. The Hawks have one game left and the Knicks and Bullets two each.

"We still have life," said Bullet Coach Gene Shue. "We had no control over our destiny the last three weeks until we won last (Wednesday) night. Then we had control for about half an hour. We didn't take control in that half hour, so we'll have to do it in our last two games."

The Bucks, meanwhile, are at their peak as the playoffs approach.

After 80 games, 23 different starting lineups, 27 roster changes and a total of 163 missed games because of injuries to various players, they at last have a full roster of intact bodies.

Lanier and Cowens both admit to rustiness, but Johnson said they were the difference against the Bullets.

"They give us a totally different look," Johnson said. "We have the greyhounds. Now we can let Bob and Dave control the inside. With them in the lineup, I don't have as much inside responsibility and I can play a little more open-court basketball."

"It really helped to have four big bodies — five with Paul Mokeski on the bench — against Washington," Bucks' Coach Don Nelson said. "You have to have size against that team or they just wear you down. They execute so well and get the ball where they want it."

Portland had no trouble with San Diego, building a 27-15 first-quarter lead and extending it to 20 points by halftime. In the second half, the Trail Blazers had leads as large as 43 points as the injury-riddled Clippers lost their seventh straight game.

Trevino leads Classic, says he'll win again

HILTON HEAD ISLAND, S.C. (AP) — It's coming to an end, Lee Trevino said, those two years of frustration that made him a non-winning also-ran and even prompted thought of quitting competitive golf.

"It never crossed my mind that I might not win again," the 43-year-old Trevino said Thursday after he had played the back nine in a course record-matching 90 on the way to a 66 and a share of the first round lead in the $350,000 Sea Pines Heritage Classic.

"I'll win again this year. No question in my mind about it," Trevino said, then flashed that famous grin. "And it might be a biggie. Yeah, it might be one of the biggies. I just might jump up and sting someone."

He stung the 6,650-yard Harbour Town Golf Links — which he called his favorite course in the world — with six 3's on the back nine as he barged out of the pack late on a cloudy day and tied South African Mark McNulty and young Jodie Mudd for the top spot.

A single stroke off the lead at 67 were Donnie Hammond, Bob Eastwood, Larry Mize and Fuzzy Zoeller, the former Masters champion who twice holed from off the green.

Ben Crenshaw, who did not have a bogey in his round, topped the big group at 68. Also at that figure in the scoring that was exceptionally low for this course, were Steve Hart, Morris Hatalsky, Dan Forsman, Mac O'Grady, Jim Nelford and Scott Simpson.

Tom Watson, the defending champion and current holder of the U.S. and British Opens, struggled to an erratic 74 and was in danger of not qualifying for the final two rounds Saturday and Sunday.

"I had four 6's," Watson said. "That's good in poker, not so good in golf." His round included an eagle-3, four birdies, three double bogeys and three bogeys.

Trevino's string of 14 consecutive seasons in which he had won at least once, a streak that started with his 1968 U.S. Open triumph, ended last year as he struggled through the worst season of his career.

"And I'll win again this year. No question about it."

Oilers down Flames, 6-3

By The Associated Press

NHL Roundup

Mark Messier had a Wayne Gretzky-style game Thursday night, scoring four goals to lead the Edmonton Oilers to a 6-3 win over the Calgary Flames in the first game of their National Hockey League quarterfinal playoff series.

Messier, in tying a team playoff record set by Gretzky last week, scored two of his goals in the first period, then got two more as the Oilers scored four goals in a seven-minute stretch of the third period to take a 6-1 lead. In other quarterfinal openers, the Buffalo Sabres upset the Boston Bruins 7-4 on a six-goal burst in 22 minutes of the second and third periods; the New York Islanders beat the New York Rangers 4-1 as Denis Potvin's goal set off a three-goal third period, and the Chicago Black Hawks scored three late goals to top the Minnesota North Stars 5-2.

Each of the winners took a 1-0 lead in the best-of-seven series with all the second games to be played Friday. Both Buffalo-Boston and Chicago-Minnesota will be played in the afternoon because the Chicago Stadium is committed to a Major Indoor Soccer League game Friday night while Boston Garden is playing host to a National Basketball Association game.

In Edmonton, the Oilers jumped off to a 2-0 first period lead on Messier's first two goals. But Paul Reinhart, who scored all three Flame goals, made it 2-1 in the second period. But the Oilers' first shot of the third period, a screened blast from the top of the faceoff circle, got by Flame goalie Reggie Lemelin at 2:00. Eight seconds later, Pat Hughes deflected in Dave Hunter's goalmouth pass to make it 4-1.

Paul Coffey scored at 7:30, and Messier made it 6-1 with fourth at 8:58 on a shorthanded goal.

The Sabres, who surprised the Montreal Canadiens in three straight in the first round of the playoffs, continued their upset string in Boston, routing Bruins goalie Pete Peeters, who had allowed only five goals in the last 11 periods of Boston's first-round win over Quebec.

The Bruins, who had beaten Buffalo in 12 of the previous 13 games at Boston Garden, took a 3-1 lead into the second period. But Lindy Ruff and Tony McKegney then scored two goals apiece for the Sabres.

At the Nassau Coliseum, Dennis Potvin's goal 1:44 broke a 1-1 tie and set off the third period outburst for the three-time champion Islanders. Stefan Persson tied it in the second period for the Islanders, setting the stage for the third period burst.

In Chicago, the North Stars and Black Hawks were tied at 2-2 midway through the third period. But with just under seven minutes left, Curt Fraser tipped in Doug Wilson's shot. Andre Savard scored at 17:41 to make it 4-2 and Wilson scored an empty netter with 46 seconds left to clinch it.

Arkansas drills Tulsa, 10-5

By The Associated Press

Texas League Roundup

Greg Guin hit a three-run homer to propel the Arkansas Travelers to a 10-5 Texas League win over Tulsa, while Jackson won its home opener with a 5-0 shutout over Shreveport and San Antonio posted a 3-1 win over El Paso.

Guin's blast in the bottom of the sixth put the game away for the Travelers, who evened their record at 3-3. Jerry Johnson, 1-1, picked up the win, while Tim Henry, 0-2, was tagged with the loss.

Roger McDowell, 2-0, pitched seven innings, allowed four hits and struck out nine Shreveport batters as the Mets improved their record to 3-2 and nabbed a half-game lead over Shreveport and Arkansas in the East Division race.

San Antonio got a solo homer from Larry See in the seventh. Bobby Smith homered for El Paso.

Schlichter has no excuse for his disease

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

It is a little chilling when you pick up a paper and see that Art Schlichter, a Baltimore Colts quarterback out of Ohio State, is caught up in a gambling mess.

It doesn't involve betting on football or throwing games. It's a case of getting bitten by the betting bug — not so rare a malady in this get-rich-quick society of ours — falling into a mud puddle over his head and finding himself involved with some shady company.

What makes the scene so unusual is that it doesn't involve a bunch of hardened jockeys, conspiring to fix a horse race; an old pro football player down on his luck or — as in the widespread college basketball scandals of the 1950s and 1960s — a bunch of glibbie kids picking up little more than pocket change to shave points for some wheeler-dealers.

ART SCHLICHTER epitomizes the "All-American Boy." He grew up on the outskirts of Columbus, Ohio, the son of a well-to-do soybean and corn farmer. As a teen-ager, he never had to wait for anything. When he graduated from high school, his dad bought him a car.

An outstanding athlete, Art was courted by many colleges but he enrolled in the one that stirs the blood of every Ohioan — Ohio State. How could you refuse when you're recruited by the man himself, Woody Hayes?

The rest of his college career was the stuff you read in those pulp sports books. When the Ohio State Buckeyes trotted out of their opening game in 1978 it wasn't Rod Gerald, who had led the team to two consecutive Big Ten titles, at quarterback but the rookie, Art Schlichter, calling signals.

BECAUSE OF his strong, accurate arm, he made Woody abandon his old "three yards and a cloud of dust" running policy to put the ball in the air. College for the tall farm kid was a picnic all the way. He dated the prettiest cheer leader. He was the idol of every guy in school.

Attractive, articulate, called "a coach's dream," he represented the NCAA and ABC on the college football-TV promotion tour.

Upon graduation, he was picked by the Baltimore Colts in the first round of the NFL draft and given a contract for $200,000 a year. His future appeared secure.

Then, last week, the roof fell in. He reported that he had lost $389,000 to bookies betting on sports, still owed quite a bit of that and was being pressured to pay up. He went to the FBI and reportedly helped in an investigation which led to the arrest of four men who were charged with illegal gambling activities.

WHAT WILL happen to Schlichter's pro football career is still not known.

There is precedence for punitive action. Paul Hornung, a backfield hero at Green Bay and defensive tackle Alex Karras of the Detroit Lions were indefinitely suspended by the NFL in 1963 for gambling involvement. The suspensions turned out to be for one year.

Such infractions have not been rare in big-time sports. Baseball had its "Black Sox Scandal" in 1919. The NFL had its abuses before Hornung-Karras. The college basketball point-shaving scandals involved scores of players from the nation's major schools. Jockeys repeatedly are being accused of fixing races.

It is naive to think that sports, amateur or professional, should be insulated from everyday temptations and greed. Athletes are as vulnerable as the stock clerk and the banker. When they get caught, it just makes a bigger splash.

THAT IS no excuse for a kid like

Schlichter. True, gambling can be a disease. No one is immune. But, of all people, Schlichter, with his strict midwestern upbringing, should have been the least susceptible. He had no excuse.

Much of the blame must be borne by society — our colleges which buy their athletic talent as they might choice beef on the hoof (Notre Dame's Digger Phelps puts the minimum price tag of a good basketball prospect at $10,000 while other coaches say it goes as high as $100,000) and let them get out before they complete the education they were supposed to be getting.

If our institutions continue to flout ethics and indulge in deceit in pursuit of athletic success and its monetary rewards, what can we expect of the kids?

GW-RBI: Baseball's joke

By JOHN NELSON
AP Sports Writer

There is no better case in point than New York's opening-day loss at Yankee Stadium to illustrate the foolishness of baseball's method for awarding the game-winning RBI.

Section 10.04(e) of the "Official Baseball Rules" reads: "Game-Winning RBI: The RBI that gives a club the lead it never relinquishes."

Thus, in a contest won 13-2 by Detroit, Mike Ivie received the game-winning RBI for a second-inning double that made the score 1-0.

Foolishness. And it can be carried to even further extremes.

Let's hypothesize. Suppose the Yankees had gotten themselves back into this game. Suppose, for instance, that New York had scored 10 runs in the bottom of the ninth and, instead of 13-2, the score had been 13-12.

Ivie still gets the game-winning RBI because Detroit never relinquishes the lead. But what about Lou Whitaker, who drove in the Tigers' 13th and, in this hypothetical example, the eventual game-winning run in the top of the ninth?

This rule needs some qualifiers.

The rules already stipulate one instance in which there can be no game-winning RBI — that is, when the go-ahead run scores without benefit of an RBI, such as on an error, wild pitch or double play grounder.

Let's also eliminate the GW-RBI in runaways, like Tuesday's 13-2 Detroit victory. If you don't like scorer's discretion, set up some criteria.

For example, no GW-RBI shall be awarded in games decided by five runs or more unless the winning team comes from behind or breaks a tie that existed after 4½ innings were played.

While not etched in stone, the five-run and 4½-inning criteria seem logical. Four runs is the maximum that can be driven in with any single at-bat (grand slam). And 4½ innings not only is the game's halfway point, but it also is the minimum length of a regulation game shortened by rain or other happenstance.

But even that does not give Whitaker the GW-RBI in our hypothetical game. Another change is in order.

How about this? In any game decided by less than five runs, in which a team neither relinquishes the lead nor is tied having once gained the lead, the GW-RBI is awarded to the batter who drives in the eventual winning run. The "eventual winning run" should be defined as the run that provides the winners with one more run than the losers. Voila. Whitaker.

But it's really no more complex than the "save rule" that governs relief pitchers. That rule, also a target of frequent change in the last decade, now is written in three sections, stipulating the number of innings a reliever must pitch and/or the maximum size of the lead he can inherit in order to qualify.

—There is another option, however. And it's much simpler. Do away with the GW-RBI altogether. Major league baseball struggled through its first 100 years without the statistic, which was first used in 1980. It didn't insinuate itself into boxscores until this season.

Part of the fan's love of the game is built upon a unique property that accommodates baseball to its statistics — as Carl Sagan would say, "Billions and Billions of them." Things like earned run averages, saves, batting averages, on-base percentage, slugging average, fielding percentage — broken down to day and night, home and away, grass and artificial surface, the day of the week, righty-lefty, indoor-outdoor, etc., etc.

One thing is certain. The game-winning RBI does not fit into that revered category as it is now written. It can't be taken seriously.

Chaparral golf team travels to Hobbs

The Midland College golf team is in Hobbs New Mexico this weekend for the next-to-last round of the Western Junior College Athletic Conference golf tournament.

The Chaparrals are currently in fifth place, two points behind South Plains. Coach Delnor Foss is hoping his troups can pass SP in the standings as the top four conference teams qualify for regionals.

Jeff Crawford and Mike Schwartz are the leading Chap linksters and according to Foss they have a shot at making the all-conference squad. Other members of the MC team making the Hobbs trip are David Stillwell, Scott Anaogstels, Danny Kloza and Emil Hale.

Niland charged with cocaine possession

DALLAS (AP) — Former Dallas Cowboys lineman John Niland has been charged with two felony counts of cocaine possession following two arrests in the past six weeks, authorities said.

Niland was charged Wednesday after police laboratory tests showed the white powder found in his possession March 3 and April 6 was cocaine, said Lt. David Davis of the Dallas police.

Municipal Court Judge Mike O'Neal set bonds totaling $10,000. If bond is not posted, Niland faces arrest, said Jim Ewell, a spokesman for the Dallas County sheriff's department.

Each charge carries a maximum penalty of 20 years in prison and a $10,000 fine.

Niland was arrested March 3 in the parking lot of his ex-girlfriend's apartment after allegedly smashing a window of her car, police said.

Stocks hit new high; fuel prices and auto sales up

By The Associated Press

The stock market continued climbing to uncharted heights, fueled by rising expectations of continued economic recovery and low inflation — even though gasoline prices are going up.

However, higher prices could reverse recent gains on inflation, according to analysts. Overall wholesale prices in March were scheduled to be released by the government today, along with last month's industrial production figures.

Stock prices, meanwhile, continued setting new records Thursday.

About two issues rose for each one that fell on the New York Stock Exchange, and the Dow Jones average of 30 industrials gained 8.61 points to a record 1,165.25.

Big Board volume slowed to 90.16 million shares from 100.52 million Wednesday.

Reports Wednesday of higher auto sales in the first 10 days of April were considered optimistic for the economy. Traders have been concerned about sluggish consumer spending for cars and other durable goods.

The latest increases in wholesale gasoline prices, as much as 4 cents a gallon, come on top of a nickel-a-gallon rise in federal gasoline taxes that took effect April 1.

Dan Lundberg, publisher of the Lundberg Letter that keeps track of gasoline prices at 17,000 service stations nationwide, said "it is almost inevitable" that the wholesale price increases as well as the full tax increase will be passed on to customers at the pump.

The average retail price for all grades of gasoline fell from $1.30 a gallon in July 1982 to $1.12 last month, according to Lundberg. It stood at a record $1.38 in March 1981.

U.S. automakers continued to call back laid-off workers this week, with more callbacks planned next week due to industry plans to increase weekly production by nearly 20 percent from year-ago levels.

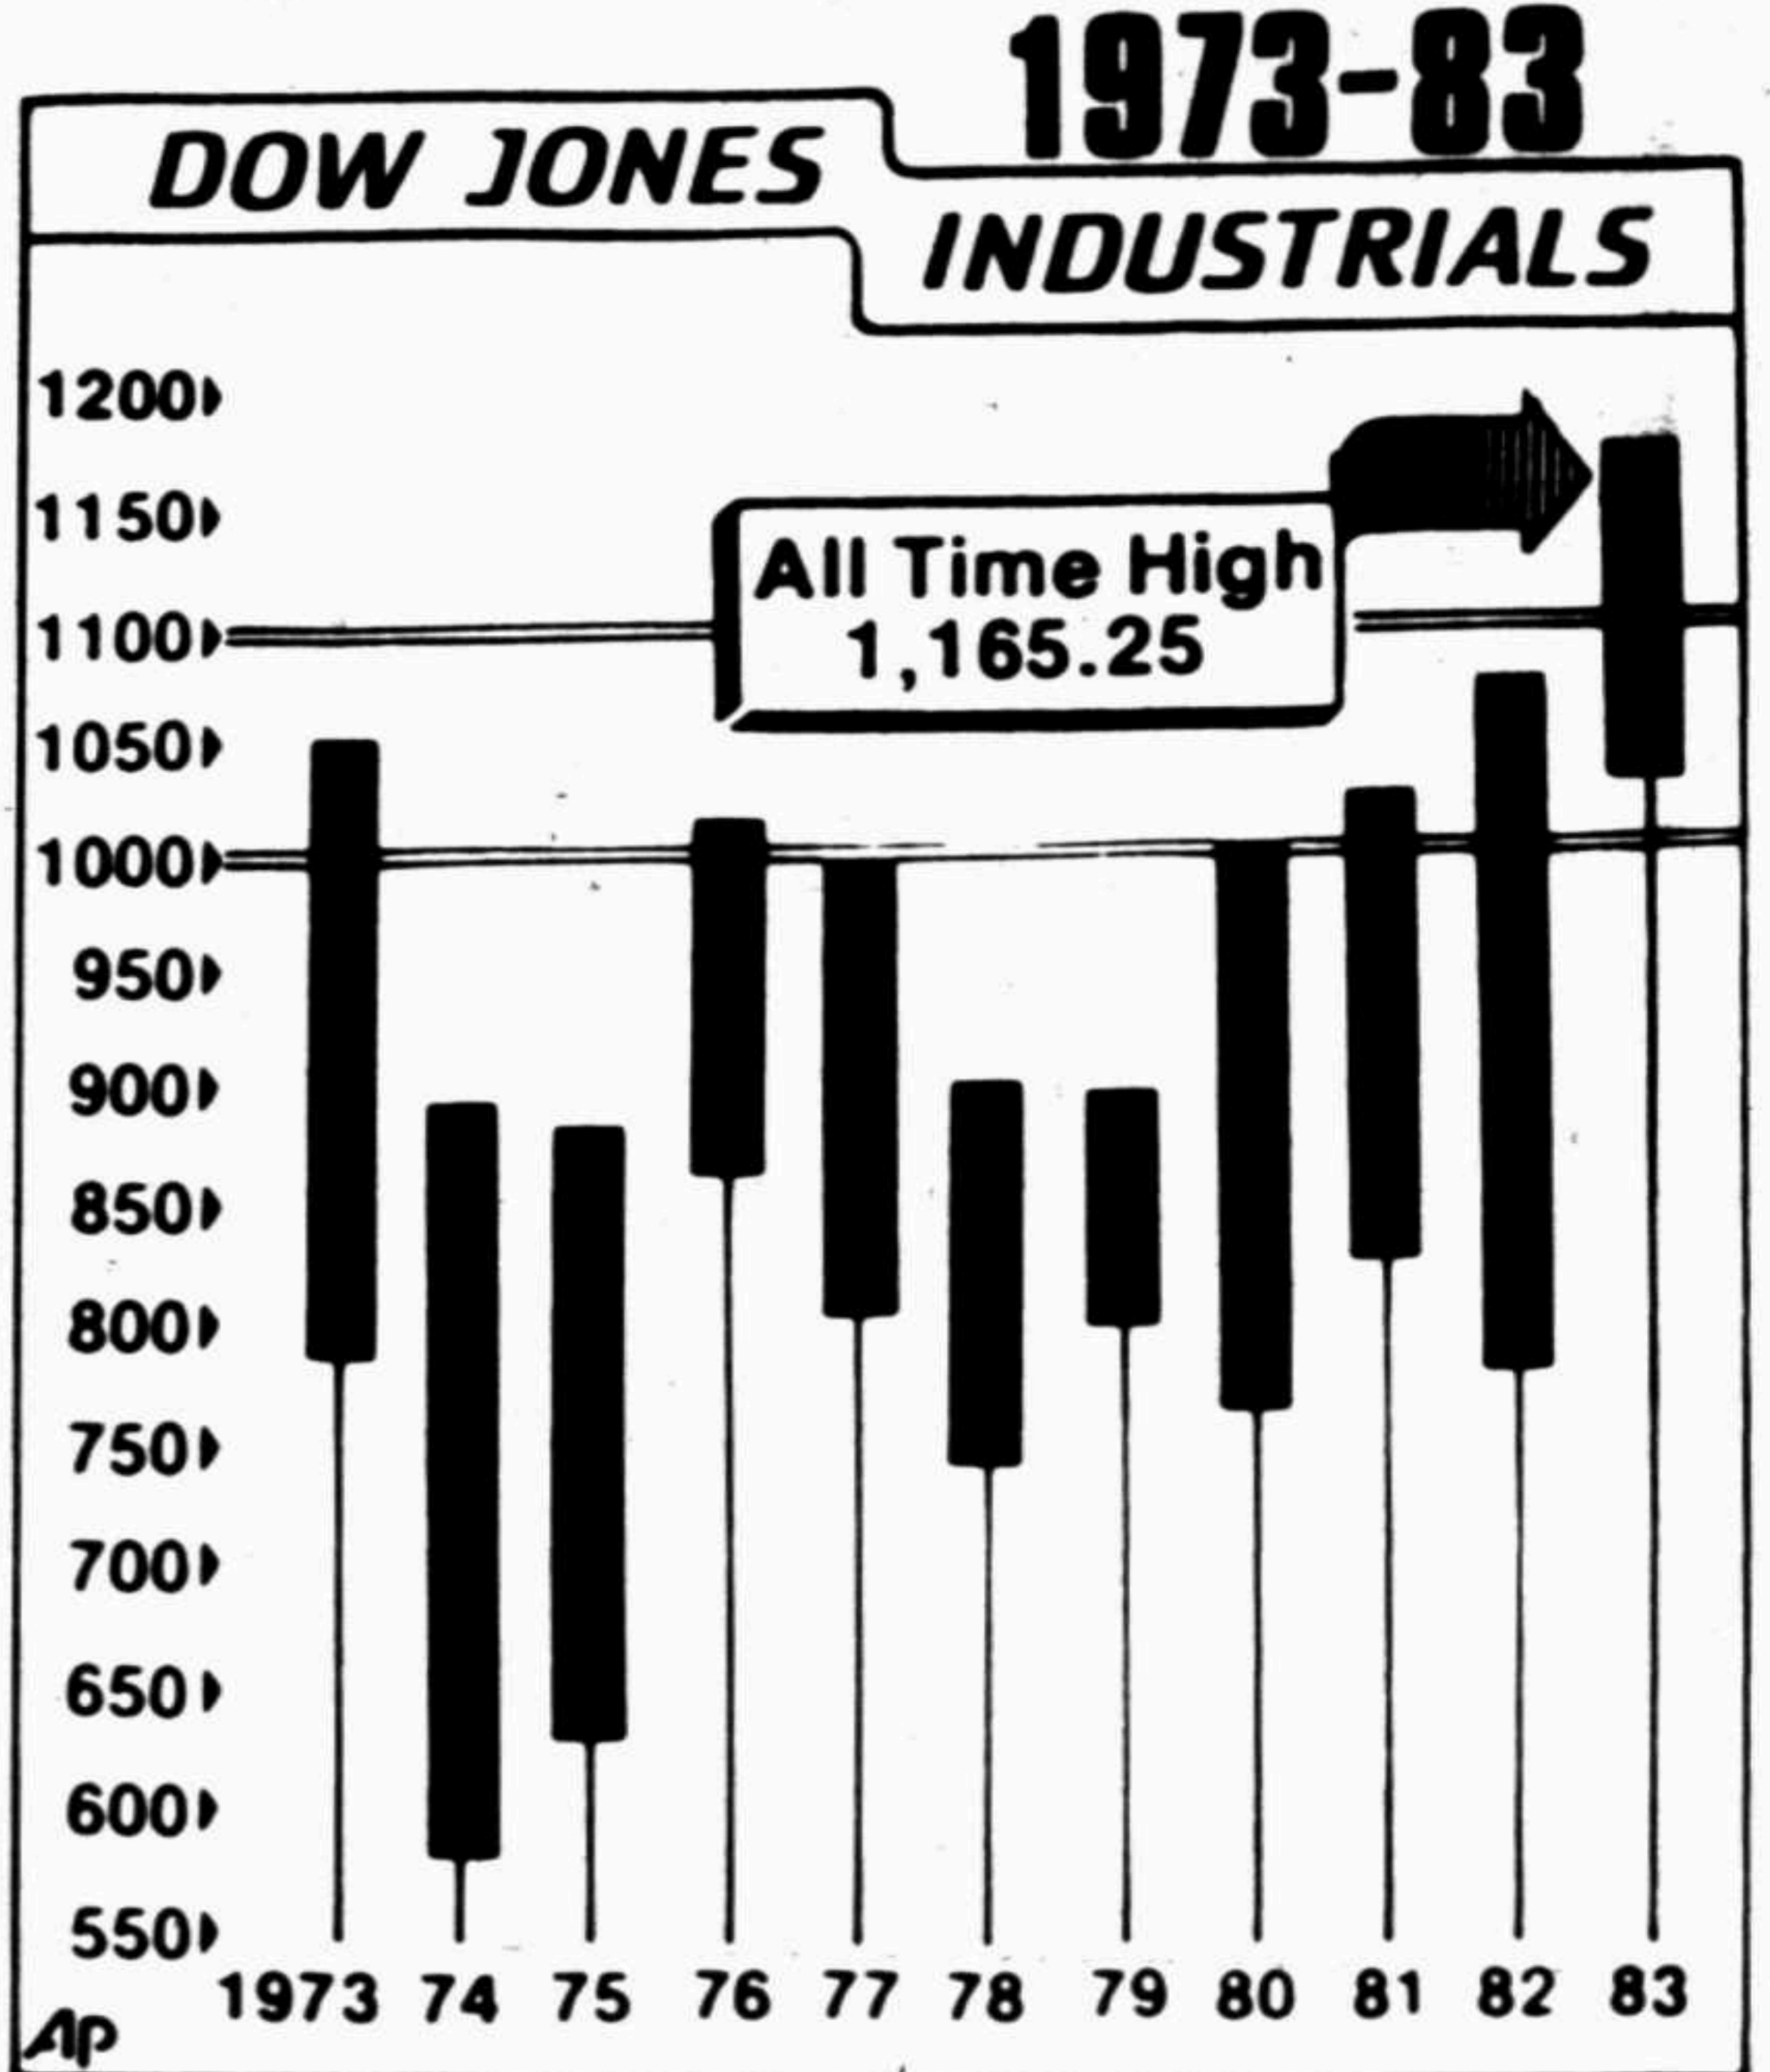

The five major domestic carmakers reported Thursday that 235,200 workers were on indefinite layoff this week, down from last week's 230,200 because of callbacks at the Big Three.

Temporary furloughs this week dropped to 6,006 versus 18,483 last week.

Meanwhile, Ward's Automotive Reports, a trade journal, said the companies are planning to produce 137,451 vehicles this week, up 19.95 percent from the 114,664 built a year ago, and a 9.4 percent gain from last week's 125,702.

So far this year, car production has climbed 32.8 percent over 1982, to 1,770,506 vehicles this year compared with 1,333,326 last year.

In other economic news, the number of Americans filing first-time claims for jobless benefits in the week ended April 2 fell by 11,000 from the previous week, to 487,000, the Labor Department said. But the total number of people getting unemployment compensation benefits under the basic 26-week program run by the states was 3,862,000 in the week ended March 26, up 19,000 from a week earlier, the agency said.

This chart reflects ten year activity of the Dow Jones Industrial average. Stock prices climbed to new record highs Thursday. The Dow Jones "average" index of 30 industrial stocks rose 8.61 points to 1,165.25. It has gained 51.76 points since April 6.

Natural gas bills' outlook gloomy

By SARAH McCLENDON
Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Further action on drafting new natural gas regulation was postponed in the Senate Energy committee Thursday until Tuesday morning, thus adding to the deep gloom settling over the big industry representatives here who frankly are predicting no legislation at all from this Congress.

At stake for Texas in the consensus bill which both houses of Congress are trying to write in committees — from 35 pending measures — is the price to producers and the supply of natural gas for intra-state users.

Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D., Texas is watching developments with concern for whether Texas can keep sufficient gas supplies for itself as pipeline carriers competing with each other may find it more profitable to serve the interstate market.

Several of the big carriers selling Texas gas to northern markets scoffed at the idea that the state would ever have a shortage or that any national consumers would be caught short. Spokesmen for carriers pulling gas from West Texas and serving some of the larger cities of the state said the likelihood is that there will be more gas produced and plenty for everyone if the restrictions on interstate pricing are lifted.

One of the largest carriers serving Texas gas fields said it is doubtful if any bill will emerge from this year's Congress but if it does it is not probable that it would improve present detested restriction on the industry.

At the present time in the uncertainties surrounding the industry in Washington, no one can say what will happen except that all depends on backroom negotiations on which no one wants to be quoted.

The house has been holding hearings which are expected to end next week, but then the house, according to close observers, is expected to close down and wait until the senate committee delivers its final draft of a new gas bill.

The race now is between the consumers and the producers with neither, said by an expert of a southwest-to-northwest pipeline, possessing much political clout here. The consumers are conceived to have a slight balance.

The framework around which both committees work is the President's proposal for gas reconrol. "Reconrol" is the word most used here as opposed to "deconrol" for the proposals generally do not tend to end regulations on the industry.

In the Texas congressional offices watching the progress of legislation, it is pointed out that there is absolutely no unanimity among carriers or industry leaders as to a Texas position.

The biggest flap in the present maneuvers over the gas question is what to do with old gas, which under present law is to be controlled perpetually. The congressmen are thrashing about with the concept that old gas ought to be taken out from under restrictions but no one wants to use the word "deconrol" for fear of running into a buzz saw of opposition from consumers and environmentalists.

Rep. Phil Sharp, D., Ind., is said by some of his colleagues serving under his chairmanship on the house sub-committee, to be laboring under a two-way pull by producers and consumers. He is expected therefore to offer a mild draft of legislation that would offer little change.

Then House members are expected to substitute for his bill the President's bill to deconrol the industry somewhat. The Republicans of the House including Rep. Tom Loeffler of Hunt, Texas think the president's bill will be adopted.

In the Senate, the sub-committee will begin with the president's plan and the negotiations between congressmen and industry men may result in the adoption of an amendment to remove old gas from present restrictions but to couch the language in such form that clear intent will not be easily discernible.

Texas congressmen from Beaumont to El Paso represent many varied segments of the industry from the petrochemical refiners of the Gulf coast to the independent gas producer in the Midland area. From appearances they and their staff are receptive to information from all the energy experts lobbying on this question.

A Texas official of an interstate pipeline said "One, we seriously doubt if any legislation at all can be passed in this Congress and two, if it is, we think its provisions will not be an improvement on the problems which the producers and the carriers are having in Texas and the nation today."

In the senate committee Republican sources cite the fact that any provision decontrolling old gas is expected to be voted a tie. Usually under rules of the senate, a tie vote is a defeat, but the senators on the committee headed by Sen. James McClure, Ind., have already agreed that this time it will be a victory for the amendment. The tie vote will obviously keep any one senator from being credited with changing the status of old gas.

Many find something Oz-like about this agency: it has human parts but the face it presents is aloof and sometimes capricious.

Taxman has PR problem, is everyone's punching bag

By The Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

LOS ANGELES — "You can read the Old Testament and you can read the New Testament and you'll always find something bad about the tax collector," says Frank Busalacchi, the IRS' western regional public information officer in San Francisco. "And when you have the two big books against you, you have a real public relations problem."

Indeed, as the Internal Revenue Service has grown, so has public antipathy to it — a combination of fear and distrust voiced again and again by U.S. taxpayers. "I suspect there is a little man somewhere with a little book, who is saying, 'Oh, am I going to get you the next time!'" said one witness to the 1980 Citizen's Choice National Commission on Taxes and the IRS. "I think it is in the back of everybody's mind who deals with the great, powerful and mysterious presence of the IRS."

As the last wave of taxpayers races to beat Friday night's deadline for filing, many will have that uneasy sense that they are not finished with the whole business. In fact, some ultimately will get from the IRS that dreaded summons to come in and plead their case.

MONEY FUND TABLE COMMENTARY: Assets of the 237 money funds reported by Donoghue's MONEY FUND REPORT of Holliston, MA 01748 declined $1.8 billion to $174.8 billion for the week ending April 13, 1983. The funds' 7-day average yield decreased to 7.96% from 8.04%. The funds' 30-day average yield increased to 7.89% from 7.84%. The funds' average maturity figure remained at 37 days for the second week.

William E. Donoghue says, "Following three weeks of increases, the 7-day average yield of taxable money funds fell slightly this week. In fact, the 7-day average yield has experienced only slight fluctuations since the beginning of the year when the 7-day Donoghue's MONEY FUND AVERAGE hit its year's peak yield of 8.34%. Although the 7-day average yield of taxable money funds declined this week, the 7-day average yield of taxable funds rose to 4.52%—that translates into a 9.04% average yield for investors in a 50% tax bracket. A 9.04% average yield compares favorably with 7.05%, this week's 7-day average yield for taxable funds, and 8.34% the latest average interest rate for the money market deposit account being offered by 50 of the country's leading thrifts and banks."

Yields represent annualized total return to shareholders for past seven- and thirty-day periods. Past returns are not necessarily indicative of future yields. Stock market gains

NEW YORK (AP) - The stock market pressed ahead today, continuing the record-setting advance of the past several days with the help of some favorable economic news.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, which reached new highs Wednesday and Thursday, gained 3.96 to 1,692.1 by noon.

Advancing issues held a 9-5 lead over declines among New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

But the market opened, the Federal Reserve reported that industrial production rose 1.1 percent in March, after gains of 1.5 percent and 0.3 percent in the two previous months.

International Business Machines, which reported higher first-quarter earnings on Thursday, rose 1/2 to 109 1/2.

Other gainers on the active list included American Telephone, up 1/2 to 42 1/2.

Homeowners, for example, are allowed a tax credit equal to 15 percent of the first $2,000 they spend on insulation, the purpose being to encourage energy conservation and avoid shortages.

In just a matter of months, however, fear of an energy shortage has waned, and so has the enthusiasm that accompanied the energy tax credit legislation.

There are some who see taxes as the economy's biggest area of growth, and because of this, they complain, government grows larger, the private sector and free enterprise becomes more hamstrung, and liberties are curtailed.

You'll get plenty of argument on some aspects of that argument, but it is true that government has grown while the private sector has shrunk.

The average worker, says the Tax Foundation, now spends two hours and 40 minutes of each eight-hour workday earning money for federal, state or local taxes.

This, says critics of tax policy, has driven Americans into an underground economy in which billions of dollars of income are withheld from scrutiny of the Internal Revenue Service.

The critics never end, confirming the old adage that time, tide and taxes wait for no man but instead move relentlessly.

Treasury bill interest not tax exempt

BY BILL DOYLE

Q. I believe I read in your column that interest from U.S. Treasury bills is exempt from federal and state income tax.

A. A check of Internal Revenue Service Publication 17 "Your Federal Income Tax" shows T-bill interest is not exempt. Where did I go wrong?

A. Beats me. You never read what you "believe" you did in this space. It's more than doubtful that statement was printed in any reliable book.

It has been explained here that interest from T-bills most certainly is subject to federal income tax, but is not subject to state and local income tax.

I suspect you have confused the fact that some people have been evading their tax obligation by not reporting T-bill interest on their federal income tax returns.

Some tax cheats go away with this, by buying T-bills through banks, brokers and other middlemen "nominees," which did not have to send "information returns" listing the amount of interest to the IRS.

However, it has been spelled out here that the party's over for those people. The compliance provisions of the Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act of 1982 require banks and other middlemen to issue information returns for interest paid.

If you own a T-bill, you'll get an information return. So will the IRS - "machine readable" form, to feed into its computers.

Boston wants garbage fuel plant

BOSTON (AP) - The city of Boston is looking for a new kind of garbage collector - a private developer willing to build a plant for making energy from 600 tons of garbage tossed out every day.
The plant would cost at least $150 million, and Public Works Commissioner Joseph A. Casazza said it would represent the biggest contract ever awarded by the city.
Mayor Kevin H. White announced Thursday that the city will receive proposals from developers.

Leasing activity steady, prices down, AAPL head says

By LESLIE HAINES
Business-Energy Writer

Land leasing activity has remained fairly stable throughout the country in the last few months, and seems now to be picking up, according to the national president of the American Association of Petroleum Landmen.

Lease prices have fallen, however, in some cases drastically, said

Roland Champion, AAPL head, who spoke Tuesday to the Permian Basin Landmen's Association.

"Good landmen are still working," Champion said. "If you have a good deal, you can still get it drilled." Activity has picked up tremendously in East Texas following Conoco's major discovery in Cass County recently, he said, and land work in the Overthrust region in Utah is steady.

"All we need is a couple of good discoveries in real wildcat areas and that'll touch it off again," Champion said. Traditionally, land activity, the first in the series of steps toward finding oil and gas, leads the industry in turning up, or turning down.

Due to the economic and drilling downturn, a number of leases are being dropped, Champion said, because many companies which extended themselves to lease or buy vast acres during the boom are now trimming their exploration budgets.

Champion, a founding member of AAPL, said there has been a drop in membership during the past year due to layoffs, but that most of those people were new to the business.

breaks now," Champion said. "We are giving a day's work for a day's pay."

He said a professional landman must have intelligence, integrity and initiative to gain competence and credibility in the industry.

"Integrity is the basis for so much that we do. So many of our deals are done by our word and a handshake."

The AAPL helps in that regard by spending more than half a million dollars annually on professional development training throughout the nation, he said. In addition, Champion helped create the Certified Professional Landman designation, now held by 3,200 landmen nationwide who have passed a stringent test. The designation carries clout, Champion said, urging members to try for the CPL.

Japanese workers take lower raises

From Wire Reports

TOKYO — Workers in Japan's major industries have accepted pay raises that promise to make this year's average wage increases the lowest, in percentage terms, in 28 years.

Increases approved so far for the country's major industries, which include some 4.8 million workers, or half the organized labor in private industry in Japan, indicate that this year's national average may fall as low as 5 percent.

Steelworkers, who traditionally set the pattern for other Japanese industries, accepted a 6,800 yen ($28.94 at the current exchange rate) monthly pay increase — a 3.14 percent hike in basic pay for a "model worker" aged 37 with nearly 17 years on the job.

Last year, steelworkers received a pay boost of $55.74-a-month, or a 6.4 percent increase.

Despite a real growth rate of 3 percent for the Japanese economy as a whole in 1982, unemployment in Japan has been creeping upward. With operating ratios at most steel mills below 60 percent of capacity, steelworkers reportedly were told to choose between "jobs or pay" — and their choice served to drag down wage increases even in industries such as autos and electronics in which leading companies are still enjoying rising profits.

Toyota workers got a 5.1 percent pay boost of $42.13, while workers at Nissan received a 5 percent monthly increase of $41.27, despite the fact that Toyota reportedly achieved yet unannounced record profits for its accounting year that ended March 31, and Nissan recorded a 17.6 percent jump in profits achieved in the first half of its accounting year.

Matsushita, the giant electronics company that produces products under National, Panasonic, Technics and Quasar brand names, gave its employees an average wage increase of $38.24, or 4.9 percent.

For both the auto and electronics companies, this year's pay increases represented a sharp decline, about one-third, from last year's hikes.

Officials of the Japan Federation of Employers Association said that they believe that management should not have offered any pay increases above those established in seniority pay scales — which, for the five leading steel companies, would have been only 1.7 percent. But they expressed satisfaction that the major corporations had succeeded in moving toward what they called "wage increases designed to cope with an era of low growth."

Since Japan's trade unions were established in 1955, labor's practice of staging a nationwide "spring struggle" every April in support of higher wages has been rewarded with a national average increase no lower than 5.6 percent, the 1958 mark.

Despite the lower level of pay increases, workers were expected to enjoy some increase in their real incomes. The increase in consumer prices for the fiscal year that ended March 31 was expected to be 2.4 percent and the government has forecast only a 3.3 percent rise for fiscal 1983.

Braniff, Hyatt, creditors, and union still dickering

DALLAS (AP) — Creditors of Braniff International are studying a new offer by a Chicago-based hotel chain to bail out the grounded airline, says Braniff Chairman Howard Putnam, who is under fire from the carrier's biggest union.

Sources close to creditors holding $467.5 million in secured Braniff debts said the Hyatt Corp. had enhanced its original offer by about $20 million, The Dallas Morning News reported today.

"Intense efforts will continue to try and gain an agreement between the creditors, Braniff and Hyatt," Putnam said Thursday.

In a related development, Putnam has been criticized by the president of the grounded airline's biggest union, who called for his resignation and those of other top officials, a radio station reported Thursday.

Marvin Schlinke, president of the local Teamsters Union, was quoted by KRLD in a copyright story as saying Putnam and other Braniff officials have no interest in putting the airline's employees back to work.

Hyatt proposes spending $30 million to put Braniff back in the air and would seek a similar amount in notes from secured creditors who hold mortgages on Braniff planes and equipment.

But Schlinke said the Braniff executives want only to sell off Braniff's assets as fast as possible.

He said Putnam, in an address

Wednesday to Braniff's unsecured creditors, spoke against a joint venture proposed by the Hyatt hotel chain corporation — the same plan that went before a Braniff board of directors meeting Wednesday night, KRLD reported.

Attempts by The Associated Press to reach Putnam and Schlinke were unsuccessful.

Putnam told the News that both the Braniff board and representatives of secured creditors were considering the enhanced offer by Hyatt to revive the airline.

Putnam said Hyatt's enhanced proposal would put 2,000 Braniff employees back to work and about 30 of the grounded jetliners back in service.

Hyatt's original plan was scuttled in New York Tuesday by a group of officials representing 37 banks and insurance companies holding secured loans totaling about $350 million of Braniff's estimated $1 billion debt. Representatives said the April 7 offer was too thinly financed, according to Putnam.

But Putnam said Hyatt Corp. Chairman Jay Fritzer improved the terms of the offer during talks Wednesday at Braniff's headquarters at Dallas-Fort Worth Regional Airport.

He said the Braniff board would consider the new offer between Thursday and Monday afternoon.

Civil rights panel tackles Reagan on job issue

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. Civil Rights Commission is challenging the Reagan administration for the second time in less than a week, this time over a major job discrimination settlement.

After a 5-1 vote, the panel wrote President Reagan urging him to allow the federal Equal Employment Opportunity Commission to file a court brief supporting the settlement of a New Orleans police department case, even though the Justice Department opposes it.

On Monday, the panel had voted to subpoena civil rights enforcement documents which it said the labor and education departments had refused to turn over.

The civil rights panel sent Reagan two letters Wednesday on the New Orleans job case. They were released Thursday.

Last week, Attorney General William French Smith and presidential counselor Edwin Meese convinced the employment commission not to file its dissenting friend-of-the-court brief because "the government has to speak with one voice," according to Justice Department spokesman Art Brill.

The Reagan administration has opposed racially based hiring or promotion quotas to remedy the effects of past job discrimination.

In January, for the first time, the Justice Department asked an appeals court to overturn a judicially approved settlement in which the New Orleans police department had agreed to promote one black officer for every white officer promoted, until blacks comprised half the superior officers.

Before the agreement, only 7 of 283 New Orleans police supervisors were black. The city of New Orleans is 55 percent black. The Justice Department sided with white, Hispanic and female officers who are challenging the agreement in an appeal to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

In urging Reagan to allow the employment commission to file, five civil rights commission members wrote, "EEOC's brief would have argued that the Department of Justice's position on the case was legally and constitutionally incorrect. EEOC's expert opinions on critical issues, especially affirmative action, should be publicly aired even when they conflict with the Department of Justice."

The letter by the five members was signed by vice chairman Mary Louise Smith, who was appointed by Reagan; by Murray Saltzman, who was appointed by President Ford; and by Mary Francis Berry, Blandina Cardenas Ramirez and Jill S. Ruckelshaus, who were appointed by President Carter. Mrs. Ruckelshaus is the wife of William Ruckelshaus, whom Reagan has named to head the Environmental Protection Agency.

Civil Rights Commission Chairman Clarence M. Pendleton Jr., a Reagan appointee, sent the president a dissenting letter. "Like you, I support affirmative action, but oppose quotas," Pendleton wrote.

Pendleton said he thought it was "presumptuous of the commission to advise the president on how he directs the executive branch."

Midland Fire Department Captain Frank Merritt uses a garden hose Thursday afternoon to spray the charred remains of a mobile home after fire destroyed the trailer, located on County Road 1130 about a half mile north of U.S. Highway 80. The trailer, owned by Armond Bunch, caught fire about 2:40 p.m. when bacon frying on the stove ignited a nearby rag, according to Fire Department reports. When Bunch's teen-age daughter attempted to beat the flames with magazines, the fire spread and eventually destroyed the trailer, along with a truck and a car.

Jury to begin deliberations in capital murder retrial

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

Jury deliberations were to get under way today in the capital murder retrial of Clarence Allen Lackey, accused in the July 31, 1977, abduction, rape and slaying of Toni Diane Kumpf.

The six-man, six-woman jury will be asked to decide if Lackey should die for allegedly killing and raping the 23-year-old Texas Tech secretary who was kidnapped from her Lubbock apartment about dawn that Sunday morning. Her partially clad body was found about three hours later in a cotton field, her throat slashed from ear-to-ear.

During three days of testimony in the case, Lubbock County District Attorney Jim Bob Darnell tightened a thick web of circumstantial evidence around the 28-year-old former construction worker whose 1978 conviction and death sentence in San Angelo was set aside by an appeals court on a technicality in the jury selection process.

Thursday, Department of Public Safety chemist Jack Benton testified that blood found on Lackey's boots and in his apartment matched Ms. Kumpf's, but although there was evidence she had had "sexual contact" the day of her death, a definite time factor could not be established.

The state contends Lackey kidnapped Ms. Kumpf and raped her in his apartment before murdering her and dumping her body in the field, which is located about two miles from where he lived. The door to her apartment had been kicked in and police said they found evidence of a struggle inside.

Heelprints on the door coincided with the pattern on Lackey's boots, and fingerprints on a package of Marlboro cigarettes found in her apartment matched those of Lackey, according to other testimony.

"There is no way this fingerprint could have been made by anyone but Clarence Lackey," said FBI-trained fingerprint expert Claude Stevens, who acknowledged the somewhat smeared print obtained from the cigarette package was "difficult to identify."

A knife recovered from Lackey's apartment was not allowed into evidence after Lackey's court-appointed defense team of three lawyers objected to its admission on grounds the Aug. 3, 1977, indictment by a Lubbock County grand jury did not specify what type of weapon had been used in the slaying. The indictment only referred to a "sharp instrument," according to testimony by grand jury foreman and Lubbock real estate salesman B.C. McMin.

This file photo of Clarence Allen Lackey, right, was taken in 1978 as he was leaving a San Angelo courtroom. He was convicted of the capital murder charge then, but is being retried in Midland after an appeals court overturned the conviction on a technicality involving jury selection.

This photo of Toni Diane Kumpf, the 23-year-old Texas Tech secretary who was murdered in Lubbock in July 1977, was supplied by her family. Clarence Allen Lackey is being retried on the capital murder charge in Midland's 238th District Court.

TP&WD to help desert bighorns regain foothold

Staff Writer

VAN HORN — Desert bighorn sheep breeding stock will be added to Sierra Diablo Wildlife Management Area north of here in June by Texas Parks and Wildlife Department in the hope the animals will get a firm foothold on the craggy slopes of Trans-Pecos mountains.

The sheep will be acquired from Nevada and will be kept in newly constructed breeding pens, according to Jack S. Kilpatrick of Marfa, wildlife biologist with TP&WD.

The wildlife management area is composed of 7,000 acres, though free-ranging desert bighorns have access to more than 200 square miles of mountains.

"We're trying to give the sheep that are roaming up there already a shot in the arm so that added production doesn't matter," said Kilpatrick.

Native West Texas desert bighorn became a thing of the past in 1960, when the last two ewes were sited in their final stronghold: the Sierra Diablos. They once ranged throughout the rugged mountains of the Trans-Pecos, with 1,500 estimated in existence in the early 1880s.

With the completion of a railroad through the Trans-Pecos in 1881, however, man invaded the area, marking the beginning of the end of native desert bighorn. Hunters slayed the animals, hauling the meat to Van Horn by the wagonloads to be loaded on refrigerated rail cars and shipped to northern markets. It was not until 1903 that bighorn hunting was outlawed in the state.

"We're trying to give the sheep that are roaming up there already a shot in the arm so that added production doesn't matter."

However, the influx of domestic sheep is regarded as the main factor in the eventual decline of desert bighorns, according to Kilpatrick. "Fac-ranchers began to stock the final strongholds of the Trans-Pecos bighorn range. Within three years, the total bighorn population in Texas was estimated at 150 head.

That dramatic decline in bighorn population led to the establishment in 1945 of Sierra Diablo Wildlife Management Area as a sanctuary. But their numbers continued to fall. In 1955 only 25 remained in Texas — all in the Sierra Diablo. TP&WD officials sited the final pair in the Diablo Mountains Victoria Canyon five years later.

Bighorn were re-introduced in the Sierra Diablo in 1971, said Kilpatrick. For two years, the breeding stock was in an eight-acre holding pen. Seven sheep were released to range free in the mountains in 1973 and seven more in 1979. They have survived thus far and have reproduced and now number about 25 head.

Kilpatrick noted that mountain lions may be preying to some extent on the re-introduced bighorns.

"In the Black Gap Wildlife Management Area, lions killed 21 bighorn sheep, forcing us to move the sheep out except for a few stragglers — maybe 10 head are left there," he noted.

The only other location in Texas where desert bighorn are located is on the Chilicote Ranch in Presidio County. They were introduced at that private ranch in 1977-78 and now number 12 head.

According to Kilpatrick, predation is blamed for the slow increase in bighorns at Chilicote.

TDoA listens to residents' concerns over funding

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Stretching public dollars over a 17-county area and supplementing public funds with private donations were among the concerns and ideas expressed by Permian Basin residents at the Texas Department on Aging (TDoA) public hearings here Thursday.

The TDoA's Citizens Advisory Council, which listened to the residents, assists the department to ensure involvement by the elderly in the state planning process by holding eight public hearings once a year. The council encourages community comments on plans and programs for the elderly.

Thursday's hearing at the Ector County Health Department attracted about 35 Permian Basin residents.

The primary concern in the wide-open spaces of West Texas is the "distance" the state dollars must be stretched to provide adequate services for 45,900 elderly persons in the 17-county area.

The TDoA has developed a plan with goals and objectives for programs funded under the Older Americans Act. This plan includes assessing the needs of the older population and developing formal, written plans, such as nutrition, social and community services. The funding formula for these programs is based on overall population 60 and over, the minority population 60 and over and the poverty level of people 60 and over.

But, according to Bill Smith, director of the Permian Basin Agency on Aging, the formula does not consider distance in the "rural areas."

"What we've asked them (council on agency) to include is a factor for distance," Smith said. "We're not saying we need extra attention, but federal and state dollars are not coming in proportionately. There ought to be a more equitable way of distribution."

Smith told the council that transportation dollars are depleted more quickly in the Permian Basin's 17-county area than in other places where there may be only three or four counties with comparable population.

"These dollars must be spread out over 23,515 miles," Smith said.

James Roberts, a member of the TDoA and the council on aging, said this information will be given to the TDoA board.

A suggestion to supplement state dollars was presented by Allen Baca of Austin. Baca told the board that "a legal foundation would be a good vehicle to bring in more money for the elderly."

He explained that in Tulla (Swisher County) the people are in the final stages of developing a foundation. If we're going to keep our (senior) programs going, we're going to have to increase local funding. The government dollars can't do it all.

"In Swisher County, we're utilizing community resources to build up a fund," Baca said. "If each community, city or county would formalize, legalize a foundation, people could give donations for senior activity programs."

"The Older American's Act sends seed money to start programs," he said. "When we create a legal entity, a foundation, in the community, others see and people will want to make contributions. If you don't have a legal entity, there's no place for people to donate."

The Citizens Advisory Council said it would take Baca's "self-supporting" program suggestion to the TDoA.

According to Roberts, the nine-member TDoA board will consider all comments from the eight hearings held throughout Texas. From these hearings a preliminary plan will be developed and then approved by the TDoA board, the governor and the legislature. Roberts said the entire process takes about eight months.

In a public hearing on aging, Allen Baca, a program specialist with the Texas Department on Aging, suggests senior service programs be supplemented with private donations.

Midland police probe several burglaries

Police are investigating several burglaries reported Wednesday, including the theft of camera equipment and cassette tapes valued at $2,391 from the residence at 4420 Harlowe Drive. David Moon told police a camera, lenses and 120 cassette tapes were stolen from his home sometime between April 4 and Tuesday. Police are looking for a suspect in the case, a white male, about 17-19 years old, about 5-feet, 4-inches tall and weighing about 120 pounds.

his wallet, containing credit cards and about $400 in cash, was stolen Wednesday from the upper right drawer of a desk inside Stone's office at the college. Stone told police several people knew the wallet was in the drawer. Gilbert Salgado, of 109 E. Nobles Ave., reported the theft of a 30-30 rifle, a 12-gauge shotgun and a portable television, taken from his home between 11 a.m. and 11:45 a.m. Thursday. According to police reports, the items are valued at $300 and entry to the house was gained by breaking a rear window.

Midland College basketball coach Jerry Stone reported to police that

(Continued from Page 1C) Other testimony during the week included a contention by Lackey's former girlfriend that he admitted the slaying to her, and that a pickup truck spotted leaving the scene of her apartment was identified as belonging to the suspect. The state rested its case at 5 p.m. Thursday. Outside of making routine objections to procedural methods, and pointing out that Lackey's blood type is shared "by 40 percent of the population" at large, the defense offered little or no resistance to the state's allegations and Lackey did not take the stand. Lubbock District Judge Robert Wright denied a routine defense motion for an instructed verdict of innocent, and final summations were to be heard this morning before the jury commences deliberations.

Senators OK finance bill

AUSTIN (AP) — Senators have approved a bill that educational officials have assured will finance public schools but avoid local property tax increases. Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby said Thursday the bill would give local districts more control over expenses and would offer property tax relief.

The measure was the Senate's response to a House committee vote Wednesday night holding the line on salaries for school teachers during 1984-85.

One senator said the 300 vote on the Senate measure was "on faith" that the Texas Education Agency was correct in its claims of what the bill would do.

Hobby said the bill was worked out by all major Texas educational organizations and would retain automatic teacher pay raises in current law, totaling 9 percent — or $923 million — over the next two years.

The measure would funnel more state aid to poorer school districts, Hobby said.

Children's Fair set for Saturday at Dennis the Menace Park, city gym

Parks and Recreation Department and the West Texas Association for the Education of the Young Child are sponsoring a Children's Fair Saturday from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. at Dennis the Menace Park and city gymnasium, 300 Baldwin St.

Purpose of the fair, free and open to the public, is to increase public awareness of the type of activities that help young children grow and learn and also to provide an enjoyable and fun experience. The fire department is providing a truck for children to examine and climb on. Other activities include carnival games, make-up, nutritious refreshments, dress-up, story hour, art, water play, music, parachute play and other games.

Parents are encouraged to take part in the activities with their children. Any organization or club that has literature concerning children is invited to display this at the fair.

For further information call the Parks and Recreation Department, 683-4281, extension 316.

PORT MANSFIELD (AP) — A seismographic vessel remained grounded on rocks at a jetty today after a collision during heavy seas that forced the evacuation of 20 crewmen, officials say.

"I don't know what's going to happen to it," said U.S. Coast Guard Seaman Louis Ruiz at the Port Isabel search and rescue station.

A dispatcher for the Willacy County sheriff's office said the boat, owned by Western Geophysical Co., was resting on its side near the jetty.

Company officials toured the site earlier, but had not determined the extent of damage to the vessel, the Coast Guard said.

The Houston-based Western Gulf smashed into the jetty near this Gulf Coast community in stormy seas Thursday while exploring for oil and gas deposits off Padre Island, officials said.

Founded by 12-foot seas, the 100-foot-long craft sent out a distress signal just before 8 a.m. as it was forced sideways onto rocks, the Coast Guard said.

There were no injuries, officials said. A helicopter from the Coast Guard station in Corpus Christi aided in a rescue of two crew members. The others escaped by climbing a rope stretched precariously between the crippled boat and the jetty, officials said.

Joffrey Ballet's farm team run Bliss-fully

By The Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

LOS ANGELES — Everybody knows at least one — a woman who, along with a full-time career, runs her home with style and efficiency. She is adored by her husband and children, entertains nightly, never gets a cold, never gains a pound, always looks chic and always radiates enthusiasm and exuberance for life. These people can be very depressing to be around.

Not because they usually have the resources to hire household help or buy beautiful clothes. Or because they seem to have a shining star that always has them in the right place at the right time.

No, what's depressing — if you don't have it yourself — is their metabolism, that non-stop energy level. What is more, people like Sally Brayley Bliss, 45, the former dancer who is artistic director of the Joffrey Ballet's junior company, Joffrey II, wife of Metropolitan Opera General Manager Anthony Bliss and mother of two sons, seem to take their endless energy for granted.

You can only assume it's something they are born with.

TAKE THAT RECENT day when Bliss was downing coffee and a bran muffin in the lobby restaurant of a hotel, explaining that she was running on four hours' sleep, so please excuse her if she seemed a little hyper.

You see, she continued as she signaled the waiter for a refill, the dance troupe had performed in El Cajon, Calif., the night before and, the night before that, was in San Bernardino, Calif. She had not gotten to the hotel until 3 a.m., and her husband called at 7:30 a.m. to chat. In a few hours, at 12:30 p.m., she would be boarding the bus with her dancers for a trip to Pepperdine University in Malibu, Calif., where there would be a class, rehearsal and that night's performance.

Rigorous, yes, but fine, and fun. Between her career as a dancer and now as a dance company director, Bliss has been touring for 30 years. Trains are particularly nice, she says, though she does not mind touring. "Actually what I love about touring is that it's the one time I can concentrate only on the dancers, giving them everything I can, emotionally and intellectually."

Typical Bliss. Everything she's into gets everything she's got — life is a series of passions. She doesn't just love clothes, she declares — this day she is wearing a black and brown Giorgio Armani suit, and she loves Perry Ellis, Stavropoulos, Givenchy — "I love to dress."

AND SHE IS AN AVID New York Rangers fan, also the Yankees (though since George Steinbrenner, well, things aren't the same).

And the United States, she loves it. (Born in London, reared in Canada, she became a naturalized U.S. citizen in 1977.) Also Los Angeles, she loves it here. "It's so... different."

And they have four dogs, plus she raises Lhasa apsos.

Bliss laughed and took a deep breath. "One thing I do worry about is becoming too fragmented."

It's just not in her nature to do anything casually. She thought when she had children, she sighed, she would stop touring. But part of being a dance company director is fund-raising, which means making friends and influencing people in the places where the Joffrey II appears. So she was in Los Angeles in March and then she will be here again for the 13th annual "Holiday Festival" at the Music Center on April 26-29. Joffrey II, which is like the farm team of the Joffrey Ballet, will be the stars at the festival and Sally Bliss will talk dance and the dancer's life to the 15,000 fifth-graders expected.

She will stay over for the inaugural performance April 30 of the Joffrey Ballet as a resident company of the Music Center.

Life on the road, she laughed, that is the easy part: reading novels on the bus, shutting the door to her hotel room and just having time for herself.

AT HOME IN NEW YORK, life is so much more complicated, fragmented, glamorous. There, Sally Brayley Bliss is a name, a personage whose doings are the stuff of social columns.

From the moment Sally Brayley met Bliss in 1963, she's been good copy. An up-and-coming dancer with the Metropolitan Ballet, she was 25, the daughter of a Canadian newspaperman. She had been married briefly several years earlier to a musician. Bliss, from an old New York family, was 25 years her senior and had been married twice, first to dancer Irina Baronova and when he met Sally Brayley, to actress JoAnn Sayres. Brayley and Bliss were married in 1967. In 1970, after becoming pregnant with their second child, she stopped dancing and threw herself into the Joffrey's scholarship program, becoming the Joffrey II's artistic director nine years ago.

Their lifestyle is distinctly non-traditional. Tony Bliss is the maverick of his Establishment family, says his wife. They never even considered that she might quit her career to become a full-time mother and wife. Instead, "I think Tony really loves dancers," she says. "He's so comfortable talking to them. And when we met, he loved the fact that I was a dancer. He sees now that I like what I'm doing, so that's OK too."

So when Bliss is not touring, there's her job by day and sharing her husband's life at night. Which means coming home from the office only to go out again — to the opera and dinner — or entertaining at home, which she does at least once a week. (She has her dinner parties catered, but enjoys doing the flowers, the table and "all those little things.")

THERE ARE TWO HOMES to run, an apartment in the city within walking distance of Tony Bliss' office at Lincoln Center and her office at the City Center, and a ranch-style cottage in Oyster Bay, Long Island, where her 12-and 14-year-old sons live with their governess.

It's a quality-time arrangement, apparently the idea of young Mark and Timothy Bliss. "We said, 'You know mummy and daddy have to work and we can't be with you out here' and they said yes, they'd live with it," says their mother.

"Some people disagree with this notion of quality time. But for me, well, that's what I have with both my husband and my children."

Bliss does not dance anymore and says that she does not miss it. "Any career in the arts is really self-involved. And I'm very happy choosing and developing young dancers, giving them what I know." Next year the Joffrey II will expand to an East and a West Coast company. Bliss will direct both. The expansion seems very logical to her, since it will enable the newly bi-coastal Joffrey Company to augment from either coast its corps of big ballet numbers — thus avoiding additional travel expenses. And of course, a Joffrey II east and west means more opportunities for young dancers. But, "I don't think I'll be doing this for the rest of my life," Bliss said.

WHAT SHE WILL DO, however, is less certain. She's fascinated by politics, "but I think politics would be a difficult business. And I think it would be hard for me to compromise all the time. You have to do that in politics, don't you?"

"I also think I'd like to write. Of course, that's part of my upbringing. I really had a great upbringing. Both my parents were wonderful, and my brother, too. Did you know he's a member of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police?"

Sally Brayley Bliss laughed, realizing how incongruous that sounded. Then glancing at her Rolex watch, she leaped up from her chair. The bus to Pepperdine was leaving in five minutes, and she still had to decide which dancers would dance in which ballets that night.

It would get done, of course. But now it would be rushed. "I'm a perfectionist. I do get mad when I see mistakes being made," she conceded as she pulled on her jacket and grabbed her purse.

"I think I'm difficult to work for." Her smile was winning. Being difficult, she'd concluded, wasn't really such a bad thing. "I think that people know that though I'm difficult, I love them."

'Dirty trick' debt collection methods frowned on by FTC

Copley News Service

When a consumer goes into debt, the understanding is he or she will pay the money back. When the debt goes unpaid, the creditor, naturally, has a right to collect.

Bill collectors make a living collecting debts. It's a legal profession, but sometimes, because of unscrupulous individuals or firms, collectors get the reputation of resorting to "dirty tricks" to collect.

The Federal Trade Commission, which in the past monitored thousands of complaints against various collection methods, has drawn up guidelines for the industry to follow. And the following are types of collection practices that are prohibited by law:

- Use of threats of violence or harm to property or reputation.
- Publishing a list of consumers who refuse to pay debts (except to credit bureaus).
- Repeatedly using the telephone to annoy someone.
- Telephoning people without identifying themselves.
- Advertising your debt.
- Falsely implying they are a lawyer or government representative.
- Falsely implying you committed a crime.
- Falsely stating they work for a credit bureau.

• Claiming papers sent are legal forms when they aren't.

• Indicating papers sent are not legal forms when they are.

• Stating you will be arrested if you don't pay up.

• Threatening legal action when none is planned nor is usually taken under the circumstances.

• And a collector cannot put anything on an envelope other than the debt collector's address and name (in addition to your name and address). If the collector's name shows that the communication is about the collection of a debt, it cannot legally be used.

HOW ABOUT THAT? — Some things you may not have even wondered about... More than 100 government publications for consumers are written in Spanish. Interested? Send a postcard to Consumer Information Center-100, Pueblo, Colo. 81008, and ask for your free copy of Lista de Publicaciones Federales en Espanol para el Consumidor (the publication is in Spanish only).

SOURCES FOR IRA VARIED — Often consumers think of banks and savings institutions when they consider opening an Individual Retirement Account.

However, a spokesman for Prudential, the nation's largest insurance firm, said more than 400,000 of the accounts have been opened with his firm alone, which was his way of pointing out insurance companies also offer IRA options.

Shanna Delany

Midland teen chosen finalist

Shanna Delany, 15, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Don Delany of Midland, has been selected to compete in the Texas Miss TEEN Pageant to be held in Dallas, July 1 — 2. This pageant is the official state-wide finals for the Miss TEEN pageant to be held in November.

Contestants will be judged on scholastic and volunteer service achievement, appearance, poise, personality, speech or talent, and formal presentation. No swimsuit competition is required. Contestants have the choice of presenting a speech or performing a talent on stage.

Miss Delany is sponsored by Britton Industries Drilling and Mustang Mud Inc. Her hobbies include snow skiing, water skiing and horseback riding.

Jingle helps turn singer's career around

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — They stop her on the streets to ask for an autograph.

A clerk at the grocery checkout counter tells her, "You've been shopping with us for a long time, and I never knew you were famous."

She wasn't — until an advertising jingle revived Hazel Miller's confidence and opened doors that had been closed in the past.

"I had gone to New Orleans last summer because I couldn't find work here," said the 29-year-old singer. "When I came home, I was shocked to learn that I'd become a celebrity. That commercial did it."

The song, "Look What We Can Do, Louisville," had been written as part of Mayor Harvey Sloane's campaign to improve the image that the community's residents have of their city.

Ms. Miller got her audition when "friends tipped me that an ad agency was looking for someone to do the tune. I went in one night and knocked it out. Everybody liked my style. They said there was a lot of life in my version."

In addition to its success on radio and television, the song has become a hot-selling record locally and has brought her dozens of nightclub engagements.

"The past years have been a struggle," said Ms. Miller, who was singing in Army bases by the time she was 15. She worked in a cigarette factory, was a service station attendant and later a janitor.

After her marriage to a childhood sweetheart failed, she enrolled at the University of Louisville. "I finally ran out of money and went back to singing."

She teamed up with three or four bands and that meant road trips, plus long separations from her sons, Bobby, 10, and Kenneth, 4.

"When you have youngsters to feed, you go where the jobs are. I try to make it up to them."

She has shared billing with the Temptations, Lou Rawls and Mel Torme.

"That's not bad for a woman who can't read music," said Ms. Miller, who picks her tunes and arrangements by ear. "I've learned by listening to others. Aretha Franklin was a childhood favorite of mine."

In her spare time, Ms. Miller is putting together a collection of songs for an album she would like to record. "I'm looking around for people willing to invest in the project. I might do it by myself if I can raise the money."

Son questions importance of high school diploma

By WILLARD ABRAHAM, Ph.D.
Copley News Service

Q. Our 18-year-old son is a senior in high school, and is doing poorly there. He always has been low in his achievement and grades, barely passing courses, but managing to muddle along.

Now he is pleading with us to let him drop out of school. He has obtained a part-time busboy job that he says he can have full time as he drops out. (We tell him such work is hardly a desirable adult occupation.)

So far we have insisted that he stay in school, that it is not in his best interest to leave when he is less than a year from completion.

We go round and round on this, but because he is basically a good boy he hangs on. We know (and so does he) that he could quit school if he chooses, without our permission, but he just doesn't want to go against our wishes.

He's unhappy, and so are we, but we do hate to see him drop out so near to graduation.

What is your advice in a situation like this?

A. Basically I agree with you. Once he drops out the odds are against his going back, although some young people do after they've been working for a year or two.

On the other hand, you and he have to ask yourselves: Is it worth the continuing discussions and unhappiness to force him to hang on? Is a high school diploma important enough to warrant the family hassle?

Years ago it certainly was, because that diploma represented the "terminal education" for many people. Now, with so many going on to college, it isn't quite as important.

If you can be sure that he will never have the capabilities for or interest in going on to college (an assurance that is difficult to come by) and that the family unhappiness will continue for the rest of his high school months, agreeing to his dropping out may not be such a tragedy. What can help soften it in your mind is an agreement with him to try it for a semester or a year and re-evaluate the situation to see whether going back or staying out seems best.

Q. It has become so easy to find fault with the behavior of our 11-year-old boy. He is such a slob about his room, helps around the house only when I constantly nag him and doesn't do well in school, although he certainly is capable of doing better.

If you can only give me some hints they might help my survival and his.

A. You're right, it is easy to find fault, and it's a habit many parents fall into.

So a change might be good for both of you. It could be based on noting activities of his in which he shows a tendency for doing well. If any school grade shows even a slight increase, if he ever puts anything away in his room, or if he does a good job on even part of the lawn or the dishes, use a little honest, earned praise.

To overwhelm him with lavish compliments, suddenly and effusively, might be viewed by him with skepticism. He may wonder what's come over you and react negatively.

So easy does it. Good luck.

Q. I've run out of ideas for presents for our 16-year-old. With his birthday coming up, it's been on my mind. It isn't an earth-shaking problem, but do you have any creative ideas?

A. Something related to the computer craze, a new recording, a poster, an offbeat hat or cap, a pin related to an entertainment favorite of his, a suggestion from one of his friends. All parents should face "serious" problems like this — right?

Have a happy birthday!

Letters may be sent to Dr. Willard Abraham, Our Children, P.O. Box 572, Scottsdale, AZ 85252.

DEAR ABBY

Plumber leaks truth about missing pipe

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: The letter from the traveling man who spends five days a week on the road interested me. He said he came home to discover a well-used pipe in the pocket of his bathrobe, and since neither he nor his wife smoked he was not only bewildered but a bit suspicious. Upon questioning his wife, she denied any knowledge of how said pipe came to be in his bathrobe pocket.

The following day when he went to get the pipe, it was nowhere to be found! He asked for your opinion of this puzzling incident and you dismissed it with, "Too bad the evidence went up in smoke."

Well, Abby, this should clear up the mystery of MY missing pipe. Being a plumber, I was summoned to the home of an attractive woman to repair a faulty shower nozzle that was spraying water all over her bathroom.

While waiting for my clothes to dry, I slipped into a robe hanging on a hook in the bathroom, and I must have thoughtlessly put my pipe into the pocket.

After searching for it high and low later, I suddenly remembered. When I went back to that house, the door was open and I could hear a loud argument coming from another room, so I sneaked in and quietly retrieved my pipe.

I hope this explains it for all hands. — PETE MCG.

P.S. Could you find out for me which five days that man is on the road?

DEAR PETE: Sorry, no help from this corner for a plumber who can't keep track of his pipes.

DEAR ABBY: I am writing to you because my fiancé and I have been fighting constantly over what I consider a major issue in our relationship.

I will be getting a large sum of money over the next two years and have informed my future husband that I would like to keep this money in my name after we are married. My reasoning: If the marriage doesn't work out, I do not want to have to split my money 50-50 with him.

My parents think I made the right decision, but my fiancé feels differently. He thinks I am taking a very pessimistic view of our future in even considering that our marriage might end in divorce. I really don't feel that way. I'm just playing it safe.

It's funny because lately I've been thinking that the reason my fiancé wants to marry me is because he knows I am coming into a lot of money.

I really do love him, Abby, but need to know if you think I made the right decision. — PLAYING IT SAFE

DEAR PLAYING: Yes. Every divorce started with a marriage.

And if you have even the slightest suspicion that your fiancé is marrying you for your money, have a lawyer draw up a prenuptial agreement. Or better yet, don't marry him at all.

It's the Espadrille Season.

Researchers say oncogenes still riddle

By The Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service
 "Isolation of Tumor Gene Called Possible Cancer Breakthrough," said the typical newspaper headline on Sept. 12, 1981. The story? Teams of researchers at Cold Spring Harbor Laboratory, the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and the Sidney Farber Cancer Research Institute in Boston had independently and almost simultaneously discovered a gene that could turn normal cells into cancer cells.

Could this be the "magic bullet" sought in the decade-long war on cancer? Was this the key with which researchers could unlock the secrets of the most vicious, and confusing, killer of humans? The initial answer to those questions was a qualified, hopeful "maybe."

Then, in March of last year, came the news that Robert Weinberg, the MIT molecular biologist who had discovered one of the first oncogenes — cancer genes — and Dr. Edward Scolnick, then a National Cancer Institute researcher who had long been working with oncogenes in animal cancer viruses, had discovered that they were looking at one and the same gene. Thus in a single moment of discovery were vindicated those who had staked their careers on research in animal cancer viruses. And the earlier finding of a human oncogene seemed to grow in importance.

BUT A YEAR LATER, researchers are still unsure about what they really have. Some molecular biologists and other cancer researchers believe oncogenes to be an irrelevant, albeit fascinating, phenomenon. The majority, however, like MIT's Weinberg, believe understanding the role of the oncogene is probably going to be necessary to understanding the development of cancer.

"We now know there are oncogenes in certain tumors that are control switches to turn on tumor cells," said Weinberg during a recent interview. "The big question is, how widespread a phenomenon is it? How do these oncogenes work?"

"We know that each of these genes encodes the structure of a protein, but the big question is how the protein so profoundly changes the structure of a cell.

"A third big puzzle is, what are all the steps necessary to convert a normal cell to a tumor cell? It's widely agreed that the creation of an oncogene is only one of the steps," the scientist said. "Other genes must also be activated, but what are those other genes ... We've found these genes in a number of tumors, but we don't know what activates them."

Thus far, Weinberg, Geoffrey Cooper at the Sidney Farber Institute, Michael Wigler at Cold Spring Harbor lab and Mariano Barbacid at the National Cancer Institute have reported isolating a total of about a half-dozen different oncogenes from numerous tumors, including breast, bladder, lung, colon, pancreas, nerve and bone, as well as from leukemias and lymphomas.

WHEN THE FIRST of these oncogenes was discovered, experts were predicting the finding might eventually lead to the development of simple screening tests that would determine who carried a particular oncogene, enabling those individuals to choose some form of preventive treatment or at least to receive advice about altering their lifestyle or exposure to carcinogens that might trigger the oncogene.

But findings of the past year have made the realization of that prediction far less likely. For rather than learning that oncogenes are rare genes, berserk bits of the genetic code running wildly through an otherwise orderly system, researchers are finding that the oncogenes are part of that orderly system.

The major question at the stage is what these genes are doing," says Cold Spring Harbor's Wigler. "They presumably have normal physiologic functions, and some sort of mechanism for their control. They're not in our (gene) line to give us cancer, and they're present in most species — they're conserved in evolution — so they have important physiologic roles."

The problem, said Wigler, "is we really don't have a clue as to what that normal function might be. The oncogenes "presumably do some things normally. They're presumably 'on' some of the time and 'off' some of the time. In some cases, the aberration may be that they're 'on' more than they should be, or their actions are slightly disturbed so they do things they shouldn't do."

ASKED TO GIVE a purely hypothetical example of what an oncogene's "normal" function might be, Wigler replied:

"Say it's a gene that tells a cell when it should divide and when it shouldn't divide. Most of the time it might tell a cell, 'don't divide yet.' Then it might say 'divide' when it shouldn't," and the result would be the creation of a tumor, a collection of madly proliferating cells.

"Presumably the scenario one paints is (that) one dumps carcinogens into the body, like cigarette smoke," said Weinberg, "and that triggers the action of the gene, but there are probably intermediate steps.

"One knows, for example," he continued, "that many carcinogens need activation in the body. They are relatively inert and once inside the body need activation to become mutagens — substances that cause mutations. "It is likely that the susceptibility of different people to certain cancers, like lung cancer," he said, has to do with the body chemistry of the individual.

If it has been found, as researchers initially believed it would, that oncogenes' unique, if bizarre, function is to trigger tumor development, it might be possible to screen for the presence of such genes.

On the other hand, if Wigler and many other biologists are correct in their belief that an oncogene is a crazed gene that has a normal function, there is no point in screening for it because everyone would turn out to have the oncogene, or genes.

HOWEVER, IF — as a recent findings suggests — the oncogene itself changes as part of the development of a tumor, there might be a way to screen for changes in oncogenes, and thus screen individuals for developing cancer, or for a pre-cancerous environment.

The initial, simplistic, popular view of things was that simply switching an oncogene "on" or "off" might be what causes cancer. Now, however, most biologists believe that an oncogene switching "on" is simply one step in a complex process.

One of the first questions that must be answered is where the oncogenes fit in the developmental picture of cancer. If, as Michael Wigler and Robert Weinberg — among others — believe, the activation of the oncogene is a relatively early step in tumor development, an understanding of the function of the genes is crucial.

Researchers are now at a point where they can go in one of two major directions:

They can look for more oncogenes, testing tumor system after tumor system for the presence of the oncogenes; or they can seek an understanding of the function of the oncogenes that already have been identified.

Both Weinberg's and Wigler's labs are headed down the latter path.

"We're interested in the mechanism," said Wigler. "It's sort of a paradigm decision for a scientist whether he wants to find more of what he's found, or take what he's done and examine it in greater depth.

Technique useful DNA research tool

By The Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

The drawing illustrates the basic tool in DNA research today. It is a simple procedure called the Southern blot hybridization technique, named for a man not a direction. This tool can be used, among other things, to compare DNA containing an oncogene with normal DNA, or to compare DNA from a human tumor with a DNA copy of an animal tumor virus. For example, say a researcher wants to see whether an oncogene from a lung tumor and an oncogene from a bladder tumor are the same. The first thing he does is isolate the lung gene and place it in a radioactive liquid in a test tube, as shown at top left. He then isolates the bladder gene and places it on a piece of blotter paper, top right. Both genes are then heated to about 176 degrees Fahrenheit. At that temperature, the DNA's double helix structure unravels, leaving two strands of gene pieces — here called A and B — in the test tube, center left, and two other strands, C and D, attached to the filter paper, center right. The liquid containing the now-radioactive lung-tumor DNA and the filter paper with its two strands of bladder-tumor DNA are combined in the same test tube.

If the strands of DNA contain one or more similar genes, they will attach to each other, with strand A cleaving to strand D, and strand C cleaving to B, leaving two double helices on the filter paper in the test tube, as shown in the bottom panel. The researcher determines if this combining, or hybridization, has occurred by placing the filter paper on an unexposed piece of photographic film. If the pieces have combined, the film will fog because the filter paper and its bladder-tumor gene will have picked up the radioactive lung-tumor gene. If, however, the genes are different, the film will not fog because hybridization will not have occurred.

Part Six: Bing and Grace Kelly

MY LIFE WITH BING by Kathryn Crosby

With the best quick-order chef in all Monaco

Fresh out of alternatives and abandoned to my own devices, I resumed staring glumly at the couple from The Country Girl, who were now chattering like magpies about topics of mutual interest, while absent-mindedly neglecting to unhand each other.

Grace Kelly remembered

An episode narrated by Rosemary Clooney came to mind. For reasons that I suddenly realized were still unexplained, she had dropped in on Bing one evening, latish and quite unannounced. There she had found Grace curled up in a chair by the fire, attired in cardigan sweater, tweed skirt, and heavy brogans, staring at her knitting through horn-rimmed spectacles.

"Ah, domesticity!" Rosemary had breathed before retiring discreetly.

Obviously superfluous, I now did a bit of retiring on my own following the same liveried attendant to a drawing room furnished in expensive antiques. There I busied myself in a search for something small enough to throw, lethal enough to wound, and expensive enough so that its replacement would bankrupt my fearless spouse.

My angels with Prince Albert and Princess Caroline, the latter still in proud possession of her ballet slippers

Preparing for royalty

In the summer of 1962 Bing was invited to have lunch at the farm of the Prince of Monaco. I phoned the Princess' social secretary, who informed me that a tea gown would be acceptable attire.

This was a category that I was prepared to handle. Among the trunks which Bing had first forbidden me to bring and then fatalistically lugged over half of Europe, I had secreted tea gowns galore. In honor of the occasion I settled upon the most spectacular number, a splendid chiffon besprinkled with beige and burnt-orange flowers, in a wildly impressionistic style worthy of one of Renoir's drunken acolytes. The jacket was deliciously transparent, and the picture hat would have been right at home in Versailles.

The lord of the manor himself was a model of sartorial splendor in a blue blazer with white ascot. We registered another first when I actually caught him manicuring his nails, and he seemed unaccountably anxious that our children not disgrace us. For the first and last time he watched me prepare them for combat, surveying each step with a critical eye.

Could this be the same man who had always greeted royalty and ragamuffins alike with the same casual amusement?

I worried about the children all the way to the farm, with predictable results: they had a grand time and I was car sick.

My stomach was doing flip-flops as I stumbled out behind our little band, who were following a liveried attendant to an outdoor barbecue.

Out of uniform at a picnic

There on the terrace stood Her Serene Highness in really grease-spattered slacks and blouse, competently cooking hamburgers. Equally casually dressed, the Prince was also maintaining his royal cool in the blazing heat.

Staggering in on heels which should have been made of glass, I felt like Cinderella in reverse, mistakenly donning her ball gown for a picnic. Trying to cover my embarrassment, I focused my charms on the Prince. His attention, however, seemed fully occupied by Bing and Grace, who had broken the initial tension by the simple expedient of wrapping themselves around each other.

"Unseasonably warm," I ventured. "How nice that you thought of a picnic!" (My talent for brilliant conversation thrives on emergencies.)

My target continued to gaze speculatively at his spouse and her erstwhile costar. I was wondering idly whether this particular monarchic setup had retained its dungeons and torture chambers, or whether I was to lose my mate to the guillotine, when mother, whom the children's departure had left momentarily unemployed, wrapped an ample arm about Rainier and asked him what it felt like to be a prince.

The children's hour

These blithesome musings were interrupted by the advent of my mother, with the Prince in tow. "Rainier honey," she was explaining cheerfully, "you don't have to worry about sibling rivalries. It's just a phase that children go through. Carolyn truly loves Albert, and she'll come to realize it in time. For the present, just keep knives away from her and give her lots of love."

Noble sentiments indeed, but the moral of the story wasn't helped by the sudden appearance of Carolyn herself, who looked rather as if someone had just given her forty days in purgatory in lieu of the recommended portion of love. Disheveled and caked with dirt she stood, and howled out her hatred of Mary Frances, who it seemed had put her in this state in the course of forcibly removing her ballet slippers. "She wanted 'em and she took 'em off me," the distraught child wailed.

When the prince looked inquiringly at me, I nodded in whole-hearted agreement. That would be Mary Frances all right.

Rainier's stern glance seemed to require something more of me. Could it just be possible that some action was indicated? Could he be unaware of the futility of thwarting Mary Frances? I was about to explain the matter when Albert's arrival interrupted me.

The heir to the throne was not yet barefoot, but this was his one advantage over his sister. "First he butted me in the stomach and knocked me down. Then he kicked me and took all my candy. Then he..."

Yes, that would be Harry. I smiled benignly and lost all interest in the future sovereign's monologue. I am a relatively quick study, and I'd heard the same lines often enough from the neighbors' children to get them by heart long since.

For the Prince, however, Albert's words still had an air of novelty. He assumed a forbiddingly patriarchal expression quite out of keeping with the role of jovial host. Feeling rather like a little girl about to be disciplined by her father, I was delighted at the interruption when, attracted by the general din, Bing and Grace strolled in, still with their arms about one another's waists.

Absorbed in each other they continued to chat amiably for a moment. Then, as if from an immense height, the Princess deigned to take notice of the uproar. Smiling majestically she murmured a few words in French, the burden which seemed to be, "Cease and desist, my chickadees, or mommy will break your little necks."

The hubbub stopped instantly. Ye gods and little fishhooks, this was sorcery! I resolved to perfect my French.

Her highness turned back to her admiring escort and favored him with a long soulful Gallic look, the English translation of which seemed to be, "See, if you'd only married me instead of the over-dressed frump who is now leaving claw marks in the arms of my Louis XVI sofa, you might have had disciplined children, in addition to countless other benefits."

I was about to reply in border Texan, the only language I speak when aroused, but my husband shot me a warning glance and announced that the hamburgers were ready. Whereupon he swept Grace off to sample them, followed by my mother and the Prince, and a considerable distance by an apparition in orange tea gown.

Royal hamburgers

Grace and Bing continued their tete-a-tete at lunch, while the French governess appeared at random intervals to lodge savage and doubtless justified complaints against my invisible descendants, and then disappear into the underbrush in pursuit of them. I did my best to follow the conversation, but it seemed to consist largely of code words.

Rebuffed I tuned back in on my mother's voice, and was horrified to hear it slowly, and with immense authority, reciting the entire elementary curriculum for American students. In my acute embarrassment I considered hiding under the table, or joining the children in the bushes. No, there really was no escape. I plucked up my courage and finally stole a glance at Rainier. Methodically and with obvious satisfaction he was taking notes. He looked like a good student who anticipated a test at the end of the lecture, and mother was just the sort of teacher who might administer one.

Fortunately the hamburgers were excellent. Since no one cared to monitor my behavior, or even acknowledge my presence, I favored them with my full attention. Red in tooth and claw, I must have devoured at least a dozen before Rainier regretfully put aside his pencil and announced that Bing and he were overdue at the club for their round of golf.

Head-to-head with Grace

Robbed of her prey, my mother sadly postponed the test and set off to rescue the governess. Grace and I were momentarily alone and rather at a loss for conversation, even though we would seem to have something, or at least someone, in common.

"Children are rather a problem, aren't they?" Her Highness finally remarked.

"Rather," I agreed. "I'm looking for a cross between a marine sergeant major and a prison warden to take charge of mine."

Surprisingly Grace took me quite seriously. "I'll give the matter some thought and let you know if I come up with a solution," she promised. Perhaps she considered it her Christian duty, or royal responsibility, to save the world from my wombats. I told her I'd be grateful for any relief, and wandered off in the direction of my mother, who was desperately tugging the subjects of our conversation toward.

Rainier beat Bing soundly at golf that afternoon, but my mate could find no excuse other than "a state of distraction." I ground my teeth sympathetically, reflecting that I would need caps at an early age if I continued MY LIFE WITH BING.

Networks: No evidence linking TV violence, behavior

ENTERTAINMENT

WASHINGTON (AP) — No scientific evidence exists to support claims that television violence causes violent behavior in society, researchers from the three major TV networks say.

But the project director of the National Institute of Mental Health study that linked TV violence to real-life aggression is standing by his findings.

Alan Wurtzel of ABC told a congressional committee earlier this week that the government study was "seriously flawed" and contended that the researchers misinterpreted the information they gathered.

J. Ronald Milavsky of NBC said his studies of young children "found no evidence that television exposure has a consistent or statistically significant effect" on their behavior.

The government study had contended that TV violence has an especially strong link to violence among youngsters.

Philip A. Harding of CBS Broadcast Group said part of the government's research included a study of third grade school children. Among acts government researchers considered aggressive were children sticking out their tongues and giving people "dirty looks," he said.

Wurtzel told the House Judiciary subcommittee on crime that "in many social sciences, statistical results of the magnitude reported in the studies cited in the NIMH report would lead to a conclusion of 'no significant relationship.'" conclusions. He said no single factor is likely to make a viewer aggressive or anti-social, but extensive viewing of TV violence may be an important contributor in some cases.

"Yet in the NIMH studies the same small correlations are interpreted as signifying very important behavior and attitudinal relationships."

"There can no longer be any doubt that heavy exposure to televised violence is one of the causes of aggressive behavior, crime and violence in society," added Leonard Eron, professor of psychology and research at the University of Illinois.

King Kong's hairy climb finally over

NEW YORK (AP) — The climb was a hairy one for King Kong, whose inflated 84-foot replica finally loomed from the top of the Empire State Building in a publicity stunt celebrating the golden anniversary of the ape's film debut.

Six days of bad luck and bad weather delayed the 3,000-pound vinyl gorilla's rise to a spot near the top of the 102-story building, where the original Kong cavorted with actress Fay Wray before tumbling to his death in the movie's climax. Workers pumped new life into the eight-story balloon Wednesday night after nearly a week-long effort that included stuffing it into elevators, unfastening it from tangled tethers and stitching up the ripped replica after a battering by high winds.

Even its promoters began calling the event, which was supposed to have come off a week ago

Thursday, a "Kong-a-thon." "In other parts of the country, they had been saying that King Kong failed. But everyone in New York was positive. New Yorkers understand delays," said Robert Vicino, 29, who master-minded the stunt. The Kong-sized balloon lifted its head Wednesday night at the final stage of its inflation, just as the sun set over New Jersey. Kong was attached so that his body hung to the south, or downtown, side of the Manhattan skyscraper's mooring tower, which had been designed to anchor airships. His left arm was wrapped around the tower and his head peeked out, facing the north.

It was one of the classic positions the original ape made famous in the 1933 movie "King Kong." About 100 onlookers waited throughout the afternoon on the Empire State's Building's 86th floor observation deck, many shivering as the weather turned cold toward evening.

As he directed his crew through the finishing touches, Vicino paused once to gaze up at his brainchild, shouting through his megaphone, "Come on, Kong!"

The shapeless brown balloon started to look like a gorilla about 5:30 p.m. and the crowd cheered when a surge of inflated air made Kong's left arm move forward, the first real sign of life.

"Only in America...I doubt my friends will believe me when I tell them about this," said Paul Garrett, a tourist from Devon, England.

When fully inflated, the blue-eyed gorilla veered from side to side in the wind while his fingers waved gracefully at onlookers.

New York City stretches out below him as King Kong surveys his domain from the Empire State Building earlier this week. After a series of delays over a six-day period, the giant balloon was finally inflated.

Judge helps others change their names

BELLEVUE, Wash. (AP) — Other boys taunted Francis Eberharter because he had a girl's name. So he changed it, and now Frank Eberharter is a King County Superior Court judge who talks to dozens of people about modifying their monikers.

"I carried a black eye for a year because of that name," Eberharter said, sympathizing with some of the name-change applicants that pass through his courtroom.

Each year, thousands of people across the country legally change their names. More than 1,000 changes were made in Seattle and King County last year, where the only requirements are $70 and a reason. Even the $70 can be waived if the applicant can't afford it.

King County Superior Court commissioner Jack A. Richey recalled one man who changed his name six times in a week.

"He just couldn't decide," said Richey, who decided for him by prohibiting further changes. "It was getting time-consuming and he was obviously mentally deficient."

Most name changes are for obvious reasons. Divorced women retake their maiden names. Children are given their step-father's name. Immigrants simplify.

"We've had a lot of Vietnamese people in the last couple of years," said Richey. "Sometimes they'll take a first name that's easier to pronounce. Also, some changed their name for protection when they fled Vietnam and now want to retake their family name."

"Often, you'll get someone who's been using a particular name his whole life but just wants to make it official," said Eberharter.

For as long as people have had names, they have changed them to suit their purpose. Indians earned new names centuries ago for acts of heroism. Early American settlers often changed their European names to simplify them. The Rockefellers, for example, were once the Rockenellers. Ezra Pound's ancestors were the Pfunds.

Helen Jane Matekel took her maiden name in King County last month. "It was significant to me," she explained, "and the other name was one I'd borrowed for a short period of time."

A Bellevue woman, who asked not to be identified, changed her name after a divorce. At the same time she gave herself a new first name that could also be a man's name. Her photography business has increased because some customers select men over women when looking through the telephone directory, she said.

Then there was the man who didn't think Paul Berg sounded like a name for a successful disc jockey. So years ago he switched to Pat O'Day, general manager of KYYX and KXA radio stations in Seattle.

"Paul Berg just didn't have that magic," he said, adding that Pat O'Day seemed "a good name that's easy to remember."

Folk fans to gather in Ohio

AKRON, Ohio (AP) — The 45th annual National Folk Festival, one of the nation's top folk music gatherings, will be held Sept. 23-25 in the Cuyahoga Valley National Recreation Area, the National Park Service says.

Howard Sacks, associate director of the Washington-based National Council for the Traditional Arts, which sponsors the festival, said Ohio is getting "the oldest and the most prestigious festival of traditional arts in the country."

The event will include more than 100 musicians from around the country, although this year's festival will include a special emphasis on Ohio's traditional music, Sacks said.

Tim Lloyd, a coordinator of the Ohio Arts Council, said the Ohio performers will likely include a black church choir, tamburitzan musicians and dancers, polka bands, Irish musicians, a gospel group and old-time fiddlers.

The festival has been staged for about a dozen years at the Filene Center of the Wolf Trap Farm Park at Vienna, Va., outside Washington, D.C. The Wolf Trap center, managed by the park service, was damaged by fire April 4, 1982. A temporary performing arts center has been constructed there. "We looked all over the country (for an alternative site) and the Cuyahoga Valley looked best to us," Sacks said.

Merman has brain surgery

Ethel Merman

NEW YORK (AP) — Broadway musical comedy star Ethel Merman was listed in "stable but satisfactory" condition today at Roosevelt Hospital after surgery for a brain tumor, a hospital spokesman said.

Miss Merman, 76, underwent nearly four hours of surgery Thursday and emerged about 1 p.m., spokesman Bernie Wisneski said.

The entertainer was hospitalized after she collapsed April 7, less than 24 hours after she had made her regular Wednesday visit to the hospital where she works as a volunteer, chatting and joking with patients. At the time it was feared she had had a stroke, but after several days of observation the tumor was diagnosed.

BELL BUCKLE, Tenn. (AP) — Actor Wayne Rogers, who portrayed Trapper John in the television comedy series "M-A-S-H," is being given a $4 million check — but he won't be able to keep it.

Rogers, 50, was to accept the donation today from Paul and Adrienne Trousdale of Monticito, Calif., for the Webb School here, from which Rogers graduated in 1950.

The contribution goes toward a $10 million capital funds goal of the private day and boarding school, which has students in grades seven through 12.

Trousdale, a relative of former Tennessee Gov. William Trousdale, also attended the school, in 1931. Founded in 1870, it has an enrollment of about 220.

LOGAN, Utah (AP) — Jody Powell, press secretary to former President Jimmy Carter, says journalists have a "fascination with titillation" and sometimes make up anonymous quotes.

"For the most part, journalism does an aggressive job of rooting out and exposing the shortcomings of important people in major institutions," Powell said Thursday at Utah State University in a speech titled "Arrogance of the Press."

"But there is a willingness among journalists to lower standards when it makes life easier for themselves," he said.

Powell, 39, also said as press secretary he found in news analyses a "fascination with titillation among journalists and a tendency to doctor up or even make up the anonymous quotes that too many people depend on."
