Midland's downtown landscape will sprout two more towers known as Heritage Center. The 11-story and 17-story buildings will create 570,000 square feet of office space. When the project is completed, there will be room for 1,200 parking spaces. Announcing the project was Larry Bell with HBF Corporation. Groundbreaking will take place in June with the first phase ready by September 1982.

HBF announces another project

Plans for Heritage Center, Midland's newest downtown high-rise office building, have been announced by Larry Bell, president of HBF Corporation.

The center will consist of an 11-story tower and an adjoining 17-story tower in the dual phase development project. Groundbreaking is scheduled for June with space in phase I available for occupancy in September 1982.

HBF Corporation will manage the joint venture project as well as supervise construction and management of Heritage Center. The general contractor on the center will be HBF Construction, Inc. Kelly Cooke, vice president of property management at HBF, will be responsible for leasing of the project. Interim financing is being provided by The First National Bank of Midland.

Bell indicated that HBF anticipates a significant demand for space in the third and fourth quarter of 1982.

"With completion of the project...we hope to meet some of Midland's increasing demand for office space," Bell said. "We have tried to design a project to meet both the short-term and long-term demands for space while creating a total environment including adequate parking and other amenities for comfort and convenience of our tenants and their employees."

The 570,000-square-foot Heritage Center project will be located at Loraine Street and Michigan Avenue. Parking will be immediately adjacent to the building and provide up to 1,200 spaces upon completion of both phases.

Architectural design for Heritage Center is provided by 3D/International of Houston.

"The prestigious design of the building has already sparked a great deal of interest among potential tenants," Cooke said. Designed as a light tan brick structure, Heritage Center will be highlighted with dark brown brick trim and complementary tinted glass recessed windows. Energy efficiency has been carefully incorporated in the design of the project.

HBF Corporation, a Midland-based firm, has been instrumental in developments throughout West Texas. Key development projects in Midland over the past few years include the newly-completed Empire Plaza, One Marienfeld Place, HBF Building, Oak Tree Plaza, Medical Center and San Miguel Square.

Midland suffering 'growing pains'

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Midland's record-breaking growth of businesses and people sounds good to outsiders thinking of moving to the Tall City. But that same growth is straining the services provided by City Hall, and the residents' complaints that problems can't be resolved quickly is old news to city officials.

The problem is multi-faceted and seems to be tied in interlocking rings. Unless one is broken, the situation will continue.

The first ring circles around the problem of not enough employees to do the job.

The second ring centers on the lack of housing due to the city's rapid growth. Without housing, the city can't hire qualified outsiders who come to Midland for jobs.

The third ring encompasses the age-old problem of money. Dollars are needed to pay workers higher salaries to keep them under the city's wing and to finance additions and facilities which the city is lacking.

City Manager James Brown noted that the city's rapid growth "has affected all our operations. In a lot of places we're understaffed. And when we go to hire people, we can't get them for lack of housing."

And once they get people hired, the new employees don't stay long "because of availability of other jobs," Brown added.

IT'S LIKE A two-edged sword, the city manager proffered. "We get more and more complaints, but there's not enough people and too much work for those we have. We're barely keeping our heads above water."

The inability to keep up with city services has been going on for several years, and started with the Arab oil embargo in the early 1970s, he noted.

The City Council has approved an increase in personnel every year since the city's growth boom started. In 1972-73, the number of employees approved was 580. For the current fiscal year the number was 801 — an increase of 53 over last year.

But at one point this year, the city roster was 48 persons short — almost back to last year's level, said Brown. That figure didn't include the fire and police departments.

Richard Hennessy, director of planning and community development, remarked that the growth "has put a strain on everyone."

J.B. Keaton, director of building permits and inspections, explained how that growth has strained his department.

There are 450 to 500 inspections per month that each inspector must complete. Figured on a per working day basis, each inspector has 22.5 jobs. Taking April's figures, Keaton cited 545 building inspections, 702 plumbing inspections, 459 electrical inspections, 185 zoning and 69 miscellaneous inspections.

IF HE COULD increase his staff immediately, Keaton said he would hire another electrical inspector and one more woman to help with the permit and record keeping. Currently, there is only one electrical inspector and two women who handle the records and permits. That's been the same number of personnel in those areas since 1974.

"We can't keep up," he remarked. "People are moving in by the thousands."

And many people are leaving just as quickly as they came because they can't find affordable housing. Dorothy Foster with the Texas Employment Commission said that qualified "people would like to come here and accept jobs, but they can't find appropriate housing. Lack of housing is preventing some people from moving here."

Two city department heads pointed to a lack of personnel and dollars which prohibit operating their areas

Pan Am seeks approval to begin Midland service

Pan Am Airways has filed an application with the Civil Aeronautics Board to serve Midland Regional Airport, the city learned Friday.

City Attorney Joe Nuessle said he received notification of their action through a letter.

The Pan Am application is asking permission to serve numerous markets throughout the country, including Midland, Amarillo and Lubbock, said Nuessle. According to the application, these cities would be connected to Pan Am's service at Houston.

Pan Am's application is the third recent application to CAB for Midland service. Trans World Airlines already has received permission to serve the Permian Basin. Frontier Airlines also has applied, but no word of approval has been received in Midland, said Nuessle.

A TWA spokesman in New York said he wasn't aware of plans to begin Midland service in the near future.

"They just file these things and don't even tell us," Nuessle said. "But they must have some serious thoughts about coming in here or they wouldn't have filed."

American Airlines will begin service at Midland on June 11, and Sun-Air will start in September. Existing carriers are Braniff, Continental, Texas International and Southwest.

'So that we may live...'

HEARST

NEW YORK — In the office next to mine in New York is a dear friend and colleague, Jack O'Connell, who when he edited the American Weekly (our Sunday magazine, now extinct) initiated a campaign to change all our holidays around so Americans would have a passel of three-day weekends each year, rather than setting for just the Labor Day weekend plus some other isolated instances brought about only by a fortunate turn of the calendar wheel. Supported by thousands of readers, Representative Samuel Stratton of New York and the late Senator Everett Dirksen of Illinois, the strategic switching of holidays became the law of the land in 1970 and now three-day weekends abound.

I wouldn't like to be considered retrogressive and/or a spoilsport. Jack can testify that I was in the vanguard of supporters of the plan. However, the last Memorial Day switch really got to me. It beats me why this past Friday or tomorrow (Monday) was not selected rather than placing a whole week between the holiday and the date. A little research showed that we have a resident expert, Tom Eastham, in our Washington Bureau who is as upset as I am at the change. Through Tom's congressional contacts, the following explanation was forthcoming and it may require still another change in the law.

Tom writes:

"Dear Bill,

You've been wondering why we all celebrated Memorial Day last weekend when May 30th doesn't fall until next Saturday.

The country has been enjoying extra Mondays for 11 years now. But usually, we get the three-day weekends in close juxtaposition to the traditional holiday dates. Memorial Day, 1981, was an exception. Blame Congress.

There are four pre-ordained three-day weekends. The problem with Memorial Day is that when writing the law for the May 30th holiday, Con-

Search will continue for American missing

By JOHN LAIRD
Associated Press Writer

HANOI, Vietnam (AP) — Vietnam has promised to continue searching for the remains of Americans missing in action after it announced the bodies of three more GIs will be returned to the United States. "We are pretty damn happy," said the leader of the U.S. delegation that got the news.

"The Vietnamese office for seeking missing persons has informed the U.S. side that three sets of remains have been found, and the two parties will discuss a date for their return," Vu Hoang, head of the Vietnamese search team, said Friday. "The Vietnamese government, prompted by good will and humanitarian spirit, will continue the search process."

Hoang described the latest negotiations as having been held in a "very favorable" climate.

He also said the recovery of American remains has been a slow process because of the hostility some Vietnamese still feel toward the United States.

He said some of this hostility stemmed from U.S. "approval" of China's month-long invasion of Vietnam in 1979. Hoang said the attack had drawn resources away from other projects — including the search for U.S. MIAs.

Hoang's promises to keep up the search were made shortly before the three-man delegation ended its visit to Hanoi and flew to Bangkok Saturday.

"We are pretty damn happy," said Lt. Col. Joseph Harvey, head of the delegation and commander of the Defense Department's Joint Casualty Resolutions Center in Hawaii.

Harvey and two officials from the U.S. Embassy in Bangkok, Lt. Col. Paul Mather and James Tully, flew on to the Thai capital to begin arranging for the remains to be flown out of Vietnam.

The servicemen's names were being withheld pending positive identification in Hawaii.

The last time Vietnam returned American war dead was in August 1978, when authorities gave a visiting congressional delegation the remains of 11 U.S. servicemen.

Since the 1973 Paris cease-fire agreement, a total of 71 sets of remains have been returned, and intermittent talks have been held between U.S. and Vietnamese officials on some 2,500 cases still classified by the Pentagon as missing in action.

According to Mather, the discussions reached a "technical level" last October, and for the first time, lower-level officials began comparing notes and exchanging information relatively free of the political statements that had clouded earlier sessions.

Families of American MIAs have charged that Vietnam continues to hold a number of Americans prisoners.

The State Department has reported some 80 cases of alleged sightings of U.S. prisoners in Vietnam.

Syria vows continued protection

CHTAURA, Lebanon (AP) — Syria vowed Saturday that its surface-to-air missiles will stay in Lebanon to protect the Palestinians from what could be "massive aggression" by the Israelis. Israeli jet-fighters again cracked the sound barrier over the SAM sites, Syrian spotters said.

Syrian Prime Minister Abdul Raouf al Kasm, in a speech in Damascus to graduating police cadets that was broadcast by the state-run radio, said the month-long crisis over Syria's missiles in Lebanon was fabricated by Israel as a forerunner to "liquidation" of Palestinians in the south.

Syria has publicly argued the anti-aircraft missiles were deployed in "self-defense" April 29 after Israel downed two of its helicopters. Israel claimed the helicopters were attacking Zahle, a city 30 miles east of Beirut inhabited by Israel's Christian militia allies.

But Kasm charged the missiles must now remain to protect the Palestinians, whose Libyan-armed guerrilla camps in the south came under deadly Israeli attacks Thursday, the day after U.S. envoy Philip C. Habib left for consultations at the White House.

Thursday's raids were "a deliberate provocation and escalation of Lebanon tensions that may be a prelude for massive aggression," Kasm said. "Without Syria and its firm stand the Palestinian cause would be subject to liquidation and Lebanon to collapse or partition," he said.

Syrian missile crews here held their fire Saturday morning as fighter planes screamed high over the SAM-6 batteries and sonic booms shook the mountain-walled Bekaa Valley.

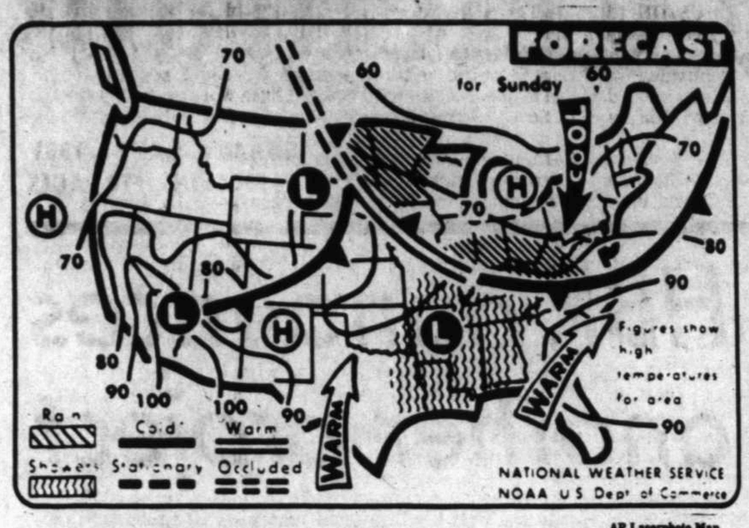

Four hours later, two planes that Syrian officers said were Israeli roared in from the Mediterranean coast, streaked over the snow-covered Sannine Mountains, circled Zahle and peeled off seaward.

The missiles, which already have downed three unmanned Israeli spy planes, took aim but did not fire.

Israel's military command in Tel Aviv claimed to "know nothing" about flights over Lebanon Saturday.

Syria has had a 22,000-man force in Lebanon since it intervened in the 1975-76 civil war between Christians and Moslems.

Forecast calling for partly cloudy skies

The forecast calls for partly cloudy skies and temperatures in the mid-80s today, dropping to near 60 degrees tonight. Temperatures should warm up Monday, with a high expected near 90.

Winds should be blowing out of the southeast today at 10-15 mph.

High on Saturday was a cool 75 degrees. Record high for that date was 101 degrees set in 1977. The record low of 45 degrees that was set on a May 30 in 1937 still stands as Saturday's low was a warm 59 degrees.

The National Weather Service recorded only a trace of moisture despite the thunderstorm that roamed the area Friday night. This brings the month's total to 2.21 inches and the year's precipitation to 6.15 inches.

Heavy downpours drenched parched Amarillo Saturday with the city's heaviest rainfall since last Summer, and thunderstorms in water-logged Austin caused brief power outages and left residents casting a wary eye for more flooding.

Meanwhile, Austinites still digging out from last weekend's flooding were under another flash flood watch as thunderstorms dumped more rain on the area.

City's growth has minuses, too

Kohout noted that the city is falling behind on acquiring park land as the town rapidly sprawls northward.

"We like to keep pace with the acquisition of park land and with developing it. But there's not even the capital dollars to acquire the land, much less develop it," he said.

"As these areas are developed, this adds that much more to maintain. We are looking at adding a few more people to keep maintenance at a minimum."

And recreational facilities aren't up to par, he claimed. "We're below our standard needs for adult softball fields, lighted tennis courts and soccer fields." If there was the money available, Kohout expressed a wish to have a uniformed park patrol.

MEETING THE DEMANDS of growth has affected the parks department for the past several years, he said in agreeing with the other officials. The only resolve he sees is a "massive infusion of capital dollars, possibly a bond issue or an increase in the tax rate."

Fred Baker's department of public works handles many of the areas about which residents complain, such as streets and trash. He's noticed the inability to get and keep workers for the past three years, and this is part of the problem with providing quality services consistently.

Out of nine persons allotted for the traffic department, Baker said he has been down to three at two points this year.

"Getting and keeping personnel who can perform the work is our problem. We've got a few who have been here 15 to 35 years and can do a wide variety of jobs. Then we have some who have been here less than a year and can only do one thing."

Operating the city machinery often is no simple chore, and therein lies another problem with training and keeping city employees. Baker said the paint-striping machine takes about a year to learn to operate competently and that includes driving it in a straight line. The street sweeper is another complicated piece of moving metal.

Despite the lack of employees, Baker contended that Dumpsters are emptied regularly and with few misses. "We service about 8,000 garbage containers daily. Even if we miss 100, we're batting almost a thousand.

"We may have several new people in the sanitation division, and sometimes they miss a route," he added.

Baker acknowledged the city can't keep up with making water and sewer taps because of its rapid growth.

"There are 120 water taps paid for that we haven't made yet. The crew can only do three to six taps a day. And then if there is a water or sewer line break, they have to stop work on the taps and go fix the line.

"Our crews are based upon maintaining a water system; we hadn't anticipated this extremely rapid growth," Baker said.

Also contributing to the decline of city services is maintenance of machines. Baker explained that the street sweepers "are a high maintenance item because of the dust and dirt here. In areas that have more rain, they don't have the problems with the cutting sand." Out of four machines, two currently are in the shop waiting for parts from the manufacturer.

STREET SWEEPERS are scheduled to clean the downtown area nightly, the major thoroughfares once a month and other parts of the city upon demand, said the public works director.

Because of the difficulty to train persons to run the paint striping machine, and to keep them, the city is now separating street lanes with ceramic buttons.

"Painting is a fairly costly item," he said, and it's easier to get the buttons down right the first time than it is the stripe."

To ease part of the problems resulting from lack of employees, city departments are going to maintenance which involves a higher cost at the outset but requires less manpower over the long run.

Kohout pointed to installing irrigation systems as an example. "As we get more automatic sprinkler systems in, we'll go from nine men to four for that part of park maintenance. We'll use the other five men for mowing or other crews."

Patching streets is another example of this practice in the public works department, according to Baker. "We're using materials that cost more money, but the patch doesn't come out. It reduces time and equipment."

Water and sewer crews are using plastic pipe, which is easier to handle in Baker's opinion. And the sanitation crew has become more automated to absorb the city's growth without adding more personnel, he said.

IT BOILS DOWN to "getting more work out of the same amount of people," Baker summarized.

Trash spills out of a Dumpster in a residential area after it became overloaded. City officials admit they are having a difficult time providing services to residents and in keeping up with Midland's growth. The problem is finding qualified employees. And once the right people are found, they often don't stay because Midland has no housing.

Midland's growth has sprung another problem in Baker's area — a need to augment the city's water and sewer distribution lines. And here comes the next major problem for the city:

"In the very near future, financing will have to come from some source for those improvements. In the past, that money has come from bonds," Baker said.

But when the city comes up with the money for projects and awards a contract to a firm, it's often months before work is started. The city manager noted the city has 28 contracts outstanding for paving work. "These are projects that haven't been started or completed. The contractors say they're too busy paving new residential areas to do the city's contracts.

"I know the people want things fixed immediately," Brown remarked, but there just aren't the employees to do it.

When the City Council begins its budget studies in July, one of the top items that will be reviewed is an increase in employees, according to Brown.

"We need enough to make it go. We can't let the city grow out from under us."

Editor's Report

gress had trouble deciding where it should fall.

Washington's birthday became the third Monday in February. Columbus Day the second Monday in October and Veterans Day the fourth Monday in October. Memorial Day, by law, was to be celebrated on the last Monday in May.

Which brings us up to date. Last Monday was, indeed, the last Monday in May. But that still leaves for the coming weekend next Saturday — May 30th — the traditional date for the holiday.

Whether Congress really wanted this unseemly spread between holiday and celebration isn't clear. Representative Sam Stratton (D-N.Y.), who wrote the bill, was spending the congressional recess in Europe and thus not available for comment.

Memorial Day traditionalists, of course, may still celebrate the holiday on the 30th, even though their employers don't have to give an extra day off.

There's no law against it.

Tom"

While we may argue about the appropriate time to celebrate Memorial Day, one thing no one argues about is the meaning of the observance.

It is a time the people of this nation are as one in remembering the millions of brave Americans who have given their lives for our country. Because of their sacrifice, this nation survives.

The setting aside of a day to pay respect to our fallen soldiers was started in 1868 to honor those who died in the Civil War. At that time it was commonly known as Decoration Day.

Since then the list of those remembered in our prayers on Memorial Day has been expanded to include servicemen killed in World War I and World War II and all other international battles in which the United States became embroiled.

Soldiers of the Vietnam war have a right to feel slighted, for they served their country as honorably as all the rest. The attitude of many Americans toward them is inexcusable and we should do all we can to correct it immediately.

I was especially pleased to note the tribute paid to those who lost their lives in an effort to rescue the American hostages in Iran. Families of the eight servicemen who died on Iranian soil were given medals, appropriately presented by some of the former hostages, for conduct beyond the call of routine duty.

All who participated in that ill-fated venture had volunteered.

Memorial Day has a meaning that touches every American family, for it reminds us of the debt we owe to those who laid down their lives in the interest of a nation's survival. They died, as George Bush said in speaking for all of us at Arlington Cemetery, "so that we might live in peace and freedom."

Doctors pleased with Brady's progress

WASHINGTON (AP) — White House Press Secretary James S. Brady is recovering well from his pneumonia and — for the first time since he was wounded in the assassination attempt against President Reagan — has recovered some movement in his left arm, a hospital spokesman said Saturday.

Dr. Dennis O'Leary, clinical dean at George Washington University Hospital, said Brady's doctors and therapists were so excited about the latest development they had a pizza party in his room Friday night to celebrate. It was the end of the second month the presidential aide has spent in the hospital, and doctors still say it will be at least four more months before they know how complete Brady's recovery is likely to be.

Although the press secretary's physical therapists found only slight movement in the flexor and extensor muscles of the left elbow, they considered it "a gift" because it was the first indication Brady would regain at least partial use of his left arm, O'Leary said.

The bullet that penetrated Brady's brain on March 30 destroyed a considerable portion of the right frontal lobe, including a section that was thought to be involved in controlling movement in the left arm.

"It's fairly minimal movement right now," O'Leary said, "but it gives the physical therapists something to work with. They can build on it."

The two muscles involved control the bending and unbending of the elbow. Another set of large muscles in the forearm, which enable a person to turn over one's hand, has not yet shown any evidence of voluntary movement, the medical spokesman said.

Brady still has full movement on his right side, and he has regained partial use of his left leg, including the muscles in his hip and what O'Leary termed "slow but steady progress" at the left knee. Although it was originally considered likely that Brady would be paralyzed on the left side, doctors now consider it "extremely promising" he will be able to walk, although probably with the use of a cane.

Brady's physicians have termed his recovery remarkable, but they have continually cautioned his friends and reporters not to let themselves get too optimistic.

Earlier this week, it was reported that Brady had contracted pneumonia, the latest in a series of complications he has suffered since the shooting. But on Saturday, a White House medical bulletin said his temperature, which had been as high as 105 degrees Fahrenheit, had returned to normal and the latest chest X-ray showed the congestion in his lung was clearing up well.

Minister urges blacks to 'turn to each other'

ATLANTA (AP) — A minister urged mourners at a funeral for the city's 28th slain young black Saturday to resist venting their frustration over the unsolved killings in summer riots or racial hatred.

"Now that summer is coming, is it time for us to take to the streets and go around burning?" the Rev. Johnny L. Jones asked mourners at the funeral of 27-year-old Nathaniel Cater.

"No, no. I don't think it's time to turn on our brothers. I think it's time to turn to each other," Jones told nearly 100 mourners at services at the Second Mount Olive Baptist Church.

He urged blacks not to assume whites were responsible for any of the slayings.

"We don't know who, we don't why. And I don't think it's safe to say a white man's doing it," Jones said.

CATER'S STRANGLED body was pulled from the muddy waters of the Chattahoochee River a week ago. He was buried in Kennedy Memorial Gardens, where the graves of nine other victims in the string of killings are located.

Meanwhile, a regional spokesman for the Internal Revenue Service said a group which collects money for the families of the victims has not been granted tax-exempt status.

The Committee To Stop Children's Murders, a group which includes several mothers of the 28 slain blacks, has told donors throughout the nation that contributions funneled to the families through the group are tax-deductible.

IRS spokesman Giles Hollingsworth said his agency has no record of the committee being granted tax-exempt status. It is possible the mothers applied for a tax exemption, but the IRS cannot release information about pending applications, he said.

TIM RYLES, head of the Governor's Office of Consumer Affairs, said last week he had asked the state attorney general's office and the Fulton County solicitor to prosecute the Committee To Stop Children's Murders for violating state law by failing to register with the state as a charitable organization.

Cater, who stood 5 feet 10 and weighed 150 pounds, was the oldest and largest of the 28 victims. A special police task force assigned to the murders also is investigating the disappearance of a 10-year-old black youngster.

Unlike Cater, the three other adult victims on the task force list were small in stature or had other attributes which would make them appear childlike or vulnerable. Police have been reassessing possible motives in the cases since Cater's corpse was found.

The United Youth Adult Conference, which has been leading weekend searches for clues, set aside this Saturday to stage a festival with live entertainment on the southwest edge of the city. The searches are scheduled to resume next weekend.

JOHN BASCOM, a spokesman for the organization, said the group is trying to raise funds for citizens band radios, hats, identification cards and other equipment to be used by the group's neighborhood watch patrols.

"We're hoping to have 1,000 people on the streets this summer," Bascom said.

Patched-up carrier Nimitz ordered back to service

NORFOLK, Va. (AP) — With the scars of a jet crash that killed 14 men patched up, the nuclear aircraft carrier USS Nimitz was ordered to head back to sea at high tide Saturday.

"She's going to go down and pick up where she left off," said Cmdr. Howard Matson, a spokesman for the Atlantic Fleet.

The $2 billion warship was off Jacksonville, Fla., on a training cruise to the Caribbean late Tuesday night when a Marine EA-6B electronic warfare jet came in high and off center, tearing into other aircraft parked on the deck and touching off explosions and fires.

The three Marines aboard the jet were killed, along with 11 sailors on the ship. Forty-eight were injured.

Three badly damaged planes — the EA-6B Prowler and two F-14 Tomcats — were pushed overboard. Seven others were removed for extensive repairs after the ship reached home here Thursday. Another nine or 10 planes required only minor repairs aboard ship.

Navy spokesmen said the ship itself required only minor repairs to its No. 2 catapult and a small dented section on the deck. The catapult is the device that flings aircraft off the ship to takeoff speed.

Marine pilot to be buried on Texas A&M campus

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — Funeral services for the Marine pilot of the plane that crashed on the flight desk of the USS Nimitz will held Thursday on the grounds of Texas A&M University, officials said.

Paternity suit bill defeated by House

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The House defeated a bill Saturday that would have increased the amount of time an unwed mother has to file a paternity suit against the father of her child.

The Senate-passed bill failed, 58-64, even though House members had culled out several provisions many found objectionable.

One such provision would have allowed fathers to voluntarily make payroll deductions for their child support payments. Opponents argued that judges would pressure fathers to consent to this.

When defeated, all the bill did was increase from one year to four years the time in which a paternity suit could be filed. A lawsuit challenging the one-year limit is pending in the Texas Supreme Court.

TI lays off 300 more workers

HOUSTON (AP) — Texas Instruments Inc. has laid off 300 workers in its Houston operation as part of a cutback the Dallas-based firm says affects 3 percent of its worldwide labor force.

Continuing weakness in world market demand for some semiconductor products and a decision to phase out several product lines were given as reasons for the Friday layoffs. Some 2,800 people were to be laid off worldwide, officials said.

Vice President Norman Neureiter said an earlier estimate predicted that 450 Houston jobs would be eliminated.

"Efforts to relocate some of the people have been partially successful," he said.

Neureiter also said the company is withdrawing from the digital watch business. The firm will concentrate on calculators, learning aids and personal computers, he said.

Disc jockey's slip costs him his job

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Bob Lashbrook says a slipped disc — of sorts — cost him his job and the radio station where he worked part-time a $10,000 contest prize.

The 60-year-old full-time carpenter and weekend disc jockey at KSCS-FM in Fort Worth says his problems began Monday while he was filling in for another announcer.

The station, nearing the end of a three-month ratings war and fighting to retain its top spot in the Fort Worth market, had promised to pay $10,000 to any listener who heard a disc jockey failing to play three songs without interruption.

Lashbrook, who has worked as a disc jockey since 1942, says he played two songs Monday afternoon, then keyed his microphone to do a commercial. But he realized his mistake and gave only the station's call letters, then played the third song in the "three in a row" package.

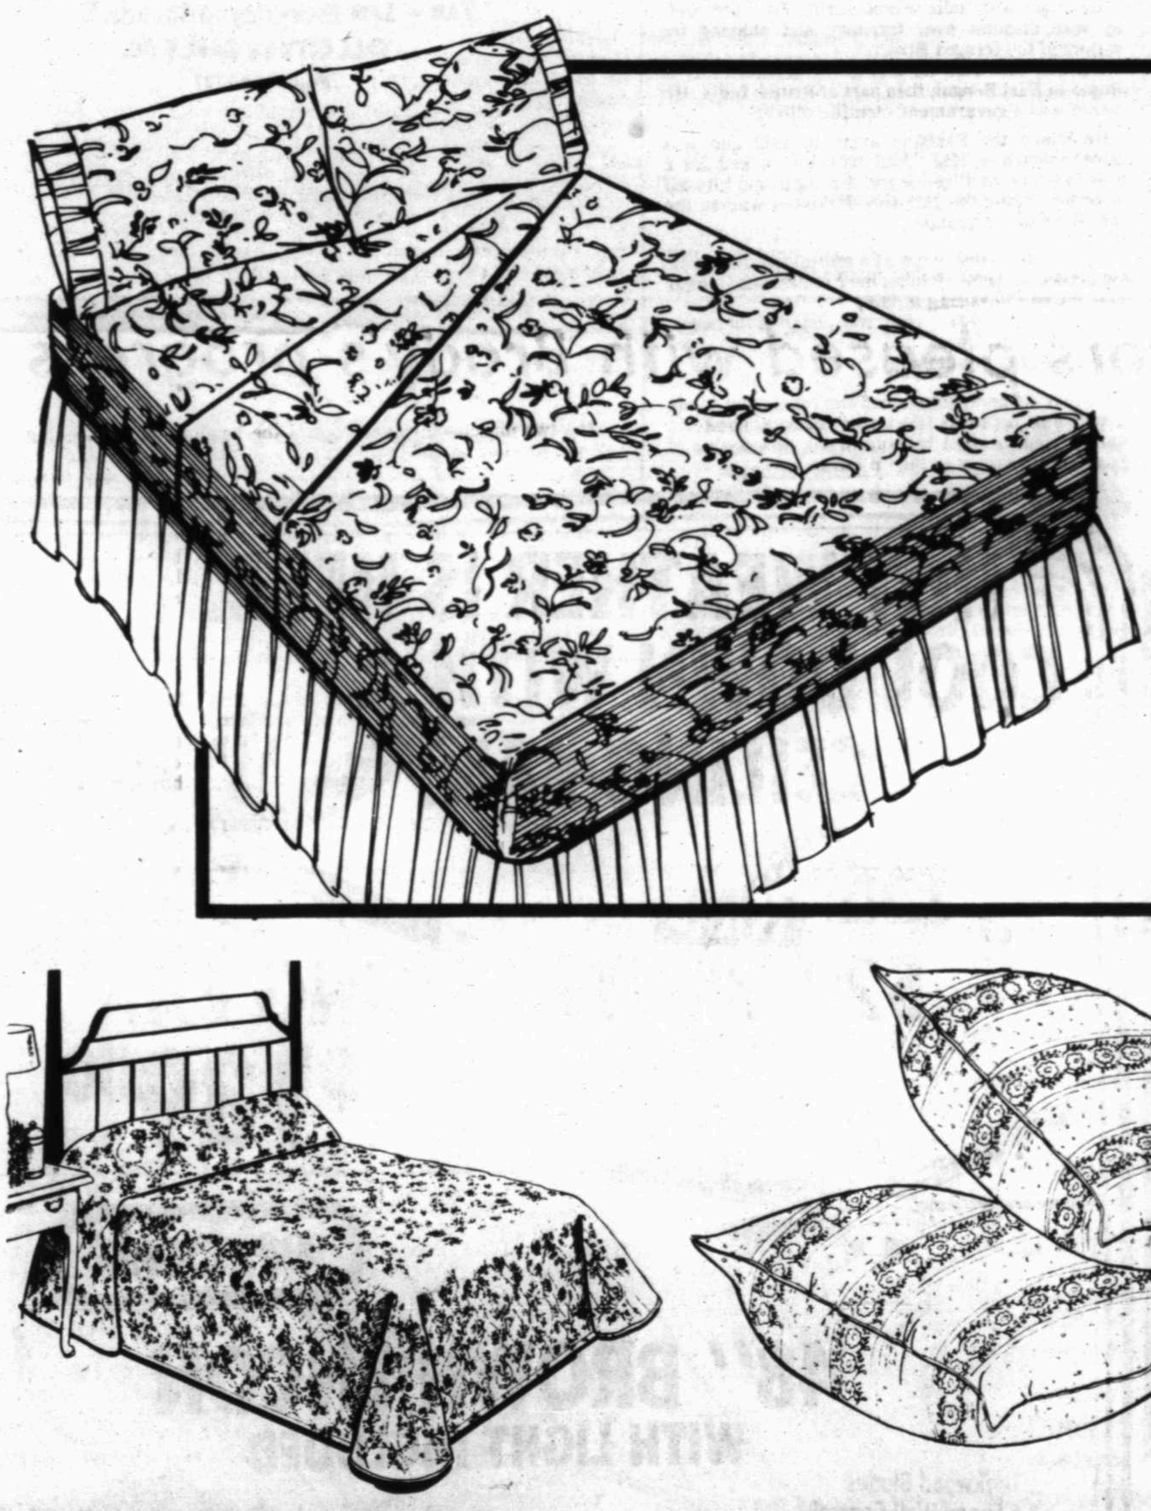

It was too late. A sharp-eared listener heard the goof and wrote the station, demanding prize money.

"Every stations has promotions and giveaways," Lashbrook said Friday after he had been fired, "but when they give something away here, they get mad about it."

"They (station officials) threatened the announcers that we'd lose our jobs if we did anything to make them pay, but no one really expected them to carry out the threat."

He said station management verified the mistake by listening to tapes, then asked an attorney's advice to see if they had to pay.

Zia assassinated in Bangladesh

By JAMES W. HATTON
Associated Press Writer

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Troops led by a major general assassinated Bangladesh President Ziaur Rahman in the port of Chittagong Saturday and announced they took over the government, broke relations with India and had navy support. But officials in Dacca said they were in charge, declared a state of emergency and curfew and told the rebels to surrender.

The United News of India reported that two aides and six bodyguards were killed with the Bangladesh president, that there were heavy clashes between loyalist and rebel troops in the Chittagong area, and that Indian border police were on alert on the Tripura state frontier on the east side of Bangladesh to prevent a possible influx of refugees.

Loyalist troops were reported patrolling the streets in Dacca, the Bangladesh capital 140 miles to the northwest where Zia had run the government since November 1975. There were reports the curfew in Dacca extended to other cities as well as the capital, which was said to be nearly paralyzed, with shops and markets closed and traffic halted.

According to news, diplomatic and official reports of Dacca Radio, the 45-year-old Zia — as Ziaur was called on second reference in this part of the world — was slain about 4:30 a.m. — 6:30 p.m. EDT Friday — in the government guest house at Chittagong. Travellers arriving in India from Chittagong said heavy firing around the guest house lasted about two hours.

The leader of the coup, Maj. Gen. Abul Manzur, the commander of the 24th division in Chittagong, one of five infantry division headquarters, broadcast over the radio in Chittagong that he had formed a revolutionary council to run the government. He said he had fired the chief of staff, Lt. Gen. H.M. Arshad, and eight other army generals. He also said the 1972 friendship treaty with India was abrogated and claimed the Bangladesh navy, headquartered at Chittagong, had joined the revolt.

But Arshad called on Manzur to "surrender immediately" and said all other military units in Bangladesh remained loyal to the authorities in Dacca.

Vice President Abdus Sattar took control in Dacca, declared an "internal emergency" and slapped near-martial law restrictions on the impoverished South Asian nation of 90 million, Dacca Radio reported.

President Ziaur Rahman

As acting president, Sattar quickly suspended all civil rights under 12 articles of the constitution, forbade people to seek redress to the order through the courts and banned all meetings and public gatherings. He also announced a 40-day period of mourning.

Sattar announced that Bangladesh would continue to honor all international treaties and commitments. Relations with India, Bangladesh's giant neighbor and ally in Bangladesh's 1971 war of independence from Pakistan, soured during Zia's five-year tenure with disputes over territory and sharing the waters of the Ganges River.

Little was known about the rebel group, including its strength, but United News of India said it was based in the Chittagong area and had been active in a recent anti-India campaign.

The general said to be heading the revolt also was something of a mystery.

UNI said Manzur was 40 years old and was a "one-time close friend" of Zia. It said the two partisans fought together in the war for independence.

In New Delhi, Indian Prime Minister Indira Gandhi, a friend of Zia, express her "deepest sympathy at this great loss." She said she had "always condemned politics of murder."

A Foreign Office spokesman in Islamabad, Pakistan said Bangladesh had suffered an "irreparable loss."

The State Department in Washington announced its regret at Zia's assassination and expressed "the hope that the democratic institutions in Bangladesh will not be in danger."

Zia was a war hero who came to power in November 1975 after a series of coups. In 1971 he announced the independence of East Pakistan separated from West Pakistan by more than 2,000 miles of Indian territory. In the war that followed he led guerrilla forces and fought alongside Indian troops to free his country from Pakistani rule.

There was no immediate word on the wife and two sons of the slain president. There also was no announcement as to the disposition of his body, leading to speculation that it still was in Chittagong and that the city of about 1 million people was indeed under rebel control.

Direct communication with Bangladesh was severed shortly after Zia's death was announced. Dacca international airport was closed, and spokesmen at the Bangladesh High Commission here said no visas would be issued to journalists.

The assassination came about two weeks after Hasina Sheikh Wazed, the 33-year-old daughter of the founder of Bangladesh — the late Sheikh Mujibur Rahman — returned to the country after nearly six years in self-exile in India to head the main opposition political party.

Sheik Mujibur, his wife and three sons were assassinated in 1975 by a group of young army officers Zia was accused of protecting. No immediate connection was established, however, between her return and the assassination.

'Hero' brought stability to nation

By SANJOY HAZARIKA
Associated Press Writer

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — President Ziaur Rahman of Bangladesh, assassinated Saturday in an attempted coup, was a 45-year-old war hero who took power after a series of coups and brought a measure of stability to one of the poorest countries on earth.

On March 27, 1971, Zia, then a major in the Pakistan army, made a radio broadcast to announce the independence of East Pakistan, separated by more than 1,800 miles from West Pakistan on the other side of India.

India declared war on Pakistan on Dec. 3, 1971, and Zia — as Ziaur was called in this part of the world — led Eastern Pakistani guerrilla forces and fought alongside Indian army troops. The allied forces defeated Pakistan on Dec. 16 and the new nation of Bangladesh emerged on the same day under Sheik Mujibur Rahman.

Zia, a slightly-built, dapper army officer, was promoted to deputy chief of army staff.

The sheik was overthrown and killed in an army coup in August 1975. After another coup and countercoup, Zia established himself as army chief and as chief martial law administrator of Bangladesh by November of that year.

Zia declared himself president in 1977, and immediately began urging his people to work harder, produce more and help the struggling nation ravaged by the war and natural disasters.

In 1978, Zia won a popular mandate for his leadership of the troubled nation when he swept to victory in a presidential election by defeating his opposition rival, Gen. M.A.G. Osmani, a former army colleague.

Zia crushed two mutinies by rebels in the armed forces and brought a measure of stability to the South Asian country of 90 million located off the Bay of Bengal.

Western nations and international banks poured in funds in response to Zia's appeals to boost Bangladesh, ravaged by natural disasters like floods, cyclones, famines, epidemics and assailed by economic and social problems endemic to all poor countries.

In domestic politics, Zia was regarded by many as an honest and shrewd leader.

He flew by helicopter to the remotest parts of the country, meeting villagers and giving a push to development projects such as voluntary canal-building to irrigate vast tracts of land.

In foreign policy, Bangladesh became a leading spokesman for the so-called non-aligned movement. Zia condemned the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan and Vietnam's intervention in Cambodia.

Zia was born Jan. 19, 1936 in the northern city of Bogra in East Bengal, then part of British India. His father was a government scentific officer.

He joined the Pakistan army in 1953 and was commissioned in 1955. Until 1964, he worked for a time in army intelligence and distinguished himself in action during the 1965 Indo-Pakistan war as the only Bengali commander.

He became an instructor at a military academy in West Pakistan before joining the Eighth East Bengal regiment at Chittagong in 1970.

The following year, civil war erupted between West Pakistani troops and East Pakistanis who demanded greater autonomy.

Zia quit his army job, joined the rebels and made the historic broadcast declaring independence. He commanded the first brigade of the new nation of Bangladesh, known as the "Z Force."

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Senate Saturday gave final approval to a proposed constitutional amendment by Midland Sen. W.E. "Pete" Snelson that would allow the Legislature to lengthen the terms of directors of some water districts from two to four years.

The Senate voted 30-0 to pass HJR 77, sponsored by Snelson and San Angelo Rep. Richard Burnett.

Snelson said the constitutional amendment is needed to help sparsely populated West Texas counties avoid expenses of elections that have extremely low voter turnout. Snelson said that one recent election drew only five voters.

To U.N., issue not well defined

By O.C. DOELLING
Associated Press Writer

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The United Nations is being pressed by the Reagan administration to take a more forceful stand against terrorism. But, in wrestling with the broad problem for nearly a decade, the world body has failed even to agree on exactly what constitutes an act of terrorism.

"There is no ready-made formula," Under-Secretary-General Erik Suy, the United Nations' legal counsel, said in an interview.

"If we tried to work out a definition, it would take us another 10 to 15 years and postpone taking effective measures," remarked a Turkish official long involved in the legalistic wrangling here. He asked to remain unidentified.

Stymied in efforts to attack terrorism on a broad front, the international community has had more success with a piecemeal approach that has resulted in the adoption of treaties against aircraft hijackings, attacks on diplomats and traveling government officials and against the taking of hostages.

Terrorism has aroused new concern following the shooting of Pope John Paul II, recurrent waves of violence in Spain and Northern Ireland, the planting of pipebombs in the New York City area and hijackings of Pakistani and Turkish airliners.

"The United Nation must be heard and heard loudly in its condemnation of terrorism," Vice President George Bush said, in sounding a foreign policy theme of the Reagan administration last Tuesday.

Bush told the U.N. Association of the United States that "if this institution cannot stand up to wanton killing or kidnapping or destruction of property, it surely has lost its course in the journey first charted as a collective advocate for the right of men and women to live in peace and freedom."

The vice president was the chief U.S. delegate to the United Nations in 1972 when the Nixon administration launched a campaign for the adoption of an international treaty against the spread of terrorism beyond immediate areas of conflict. That initiative followed the Munich Summer Olympics massacre that claimed 17 lives, including 11 members of the Israeli team and 5 Palestinian commandos.

Instead of the treaty sought by the United States, the General Assembly that year came up with an Ad Hoc Committee on International Terrorism. The 35-nation committee was phased out after six years of futile effort and the General Assembly in 1979 adopted a non-binding resolution that condemned "all acts of international terrorism which endanger or take human lives or jeopardize fundamental freedom."

U.N. Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim is to submit a follow-up report to the next session of the General Assembly, which opens in September.

The League of Nations, predecessor of the United Nations, had only limited success when it tackled the same issue following the 1934 assassination at Marseilles, France, of King Alexander I of Yugoslavia. A convention "for the prevention and punishment of terrorism" was adopted by the League in 1937 but never came into force since India was the only country to ratify it — although 24 other countries ultimately signed it.

The 1937 treaty defined terrorism as "criminal acts directed against a state and intended or calculated to create a state of terror in the minds of particular persons, or a group of persons of the general public."

Many Third World countries have insisted that avowed liberation movements be excluded from any conventions against terrorism. They have argued that "colonial and racist regimes" are in themselves terroristic and liberation struggles are "in fact the negation of terrorism."

Speaking privately and not for attribution, one Western official involved in the unsuccessful U.N. efforts expressed the view that "where there is a forcible deprivation of self-determination, then you can build a good case for the right of a people to use force back."

But, he added, freedom fighting crosses the fine line into terrorism when it reaches "a level of wanton violence that kills more non-combatants than combatants."

The bombing of a crowded pub, bus station or airport terminal or the tossing of a hand grenade into a busy market would fall into the category of terrorism.

From the British viewpoint, attacks by the Irish Republican Army in Northern Ireland fall into the category of terrorism because they involve "the use of violence in order to achieve political ends and to intimidate the population so that it is coerced" into opposing a political system that allows for peacable change.

Domestic political violence — as in the cases of the IRA, West Germany's Baader-Meinhof gang, the Red Brigades of Italy, the Japanese Red Army and Spain's Basque separatists — assumes international proportions when borders are crossed and assistance is received from abroad.

Midland oriented toward travel

Vacationers going off in all directions

By DORIAN MARTIN
Staff Writer

The first of June signals thoughts of far-away destinations varying from isolated tropical beaches to the crowded streets of European cities. And with those happy thoughts come the headaches of plane and hotel reservations, passports, what to see and a constant drain on the wallet.

Many of these headaches can be relieved by using a travel agent. According to Midland Travel Agency owner Sue Snelson, an agent can remove many of the traveler's worries by making all reservations, finding tours and giving economic information to lessen the drain on a tourist's spending money.

According to Adventure Travel Agency's Yana Baghdady, the advantage of using a travel agency is "not having to worry about getting the best value, the best travel arrangements available."

And, best of all, there is no fee for using a travel agency. This is possible because the agency receives a commission for every ticket it writes from the company being used. The agent is able to get what the traveler wants without being bound by any one company.

THIS ALLOWS the travel agent to find the best routes for the traveler, often by mixing and matching different airline schedules. The independent traveler who makes his own reservations will often travel on a schedule that will follow the routes of one airline at whatever time the flights are available.

Mrs. Snelson added that a good travel agency will soon be able to arrange a vacation according to a person's interests and where they would enjoy traveling, noting that agents like the challenge of digging up information for very unusual trips. However, Mrs. Baghdady warned the traveler to give the agent enough time to research and make the best plans.

Vacation travel has increased. As proof, Mrs. Snelson recalled that when a passport processing office opened in Houston two years ago, passports could be processed in five days. Now passport application procedures take several weeks.

SO WHERE ARE all the Midland tourists going? George Maze of Lones Travel Agency finds his clients have been going to "any place available." Tops on the list are Europe, Hawaii, Alaska, China, East Africa and Disneyland.

According to Miss Baghdady, it's to Mexico and Hawaii. She noted that "Mexico is cheap," and explained that the price from Midland to Hawaii is the same as from New York City. She also added that there was some interest in Europe.

Mrs. Snelson has found "that Europe never goes bad — they've built up a mystique." She agreed that Midlanders are interested in Mexico, especially the Yucatan peninsula. However, she noted that there has been no interest in travel into the Eastern bloc countries.

Where will be the "in" places to go in the coming years? Mrs. Baghdady predicted Alaska and China. Alaska, she explained, will be good because of the adventuresome attitude of Texans to tame the Alaska frontier and the ease in getting connecting flights from Midland to Los Angeles to Alaska.

Mrs. Snelson acknowledged that interest in the Orient, which waned in 1978 when the yen surpassed the dollar, is building back up.

Her forecast, however, is that the new tourist spot will be Australia. She explained that Australia's language, currency and trade are the same as the United States, which makes it easy on travelers. Other drawing cards are the aspect of Australia's untamed frontier as well as the new competitive airfares.

Maze ventured that Cancun and Cozumel in Mexico would be the next places for Midland pleasure seekers. He noted that Texans had already started to occupy the cities "because it's always accessible."

TRAVEL IS NOT hassle-free. Maze sees hotel reservations as a major hurdle for travelers to foreign countries because the accommodations probably "will not be the same as home." He warns these travelers to "go with an open mind because every place around the world is not like home."

The biggest problem Mrs. Baghdady notices is tourists making last minute reservations so that they don't get the seats or prices that they could have if they had called earlier.

On the other hand, Mrs. Snelson commented that airlines often change flight numbers and flight times. Passengers who have made their reservations extremely early are susceptible to these changes. However, in the case of a change, the airlines will get the passenger on another flight or pay for a seat on a competitor.

For those who do not wish to go through a travel agent, Mrs. Snelson suggests taking good notes of different schedules and plans. "Truthfully, there is no reason they should go without using a travel agency because it doesn't cost," she said.

Mrs. Baghdady's advice for a good vacation is simple. "Leave your worries behind."

Nationalist officials invited to attend funeral

By PHIL BROWN
Associated Press Writer

PEKING (AP) — China offered Saturday to pay the way for Nationalist officials on Taiwan to attend the funeral of Soong Ching-ling, the widow of Sun Yat-sen, revered by both Communists and Nationalists.

The official funeral committee announced all of her "relatives and friends in Taiwan are welcome to attend the memorial service" and China would "bear all expenses."

In Taiwan, sources who asked not to be identified said Nationalist President Chiang Ching-Kuo and military commander in chief Chiang Wei-Kuo, sons of the late Chiang Kai-shek, would ignore the invitation.

Taiwan's media has accused China of exploiting Soong Ching-ling's marriage to Sun in their "united front" effort which seeks to unite all Chinese as patriots regardless of their ideology.

Mrs. Sun, who split with the Nationalists and her powerful family — including the widow of Nationalist President Chiang Kai-shek — stayed here after the Communists drove the Nationalists from the mainland in 1949.

She died Friday night of leukemia at the age of 90.

Her body is to lie in state in the Great Hall of the People Sunday through Tuesday and a memorial service will be held there Wednesday. She is to be buried in a Soong family graveyard in Shanghai.

Despite China's unity efforts, a biography of Soong Ching-ling ran by Xinhua Saturday emphasized her past criticism of Chiang Kai-shek's anti-communist drive.

Sun, who led the 1911 revolution that overthrew China's last emperor, had followed a policy of cooperation between the Nationalists and the Communists.

Since Washington broke official relations with Taiwan on Jan. 1, 1979 and established diplomatic relatiions with Peking, the government here has talked of peaceful reunification, saying Taiwan could keep its present economic and social system. Taiwan called the overture "sugar-coated poison."

Peking now reacts strongly to any U.S. arms sales to Taiwan or any hint of upgraded U.S.-Taiwan relations, saying it is harmful to unification and amounts to interference.

Xinhua on Saturday chided Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. for his statements on upholding the U.S.-Taiwan Relations Act, an agreement for limited U.S. relations with Taiwan and assistance in its security, including arms. The act followed U.S. recognition of China.

Xinhua quoted Haig as saying that on his trip to China starting June 14, he would confirm again to the Chinese government that the United States sees no incompatibility in developing relations with Peking while abiding by the Taiwan Relations Act.

Reagan recalled she was a 1913 graduate of Wesleyan College for Women in Macon, Ga., and called her "one of the great patriots of China's modern history," Xinhua said.

Midway diversion requested

TOKYO (AP) — The governor of the state in which the Japanese home port of the U.S. aircraft carrier Midway is located on Saturday asked the government to take "emergency measures" to divert the carrier from returning this week because it may have nuclear armaments on board.

Three anti-nuclear groups, meanwhile, staged peaceful protests on an island in lower Tokyo Bay and near the U.S. 7th Fleet headquarters at Yokosuka Naval Base, south of Tokyo, in Kanagawa State.

There was no reaction to the request from the government of Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki, who last week denied a similar appeal by Yokosuka City Mayor Kazuo Yokoyama.

The Kyodo News Service said the request for government action from Gov. Nazuji Nagasu of Kanagawa state stemmed from a statement by Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger that the Midway is part of the American "nuclear umbrella" that helps shield Japan from foreign aggressors.

The government has been embroiled for three weeks in a running debate in the Diet, the Japanese Parliament, and in the press over claims by former U.S. officials that the United States for years has routinely carried and stored atomic weapons in Japanese territory — despite the nation's "non-nuclear" principles that prohibit the introduction of such arms. The government has denied the claims.

U.S. Navy officials have announced that the 51,000 ton carrier and its escort vessels, the guided missile cruiser Reeves and the frigate Kirk, will return to Yokosuka next Friday. The carrier has been at sea for three months on patrol duty in Southeast Asia and the Indian Ocean.

One of Saturday's protests occurred on a piece of reclaimed land in lower Tokyo Bay, near the Yokosuka base. The island has a memorial to crewmen of a Japanese fishing boat, Lucky Dragon No. 5, who were exposed to radiation from fallout from a U.S. Nuclear test at Bikini atoll in the Pacific in March, 1954. One crewman died as a result.

Kyodo said the planned 24-hour sit-in, involving about 20 people, was sponsored by a chapter of the Japan Council Against Atomic and Hydrogen Bombs, which it described as a Communist-affilated organization.

Genscher 'satisfied' with vote

COLOGNE, West Germany (AP) — Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, who had threatened to resign if his Free Democratic Party did not support NATO deployment of new missiles in Europe, Saturday got the vote he demanded.

Genscher pronounced he was "very satisfied" with the 75 percent-majority support of the missiles by delegates to the Free Democratic Party congress here.

Genscher, the party chairman, had told the 380 FDP delegates Friday he would resign if the small but influential party opposed his support of the NATO issue.

NATO plans to deploy 572 U.S.-made, medium-range missles in Western Europe beginning in 1983, a response to Soviet deployment of SS-20 rockets in Eastern Europe. The western alliance has also pledged itself to negotiate arms controls with the Soviet Union while going ahead with the missile plan.

Legislature runs it down to wire

By GARTH JONES
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Texas legislators, facing a Monday midnight deadline, put off crucial decisions Saturday on state spending and congressional redistricting until Monday.

Failure to reach agreement on either subject could bring on a special session.

A Saturday night meeting of a conference committee to negotiate a compromise on congressional redistricting discussed Senate-House differences for an hour then agreed to meet again Sunday.

There were no votes takes or a compromise congressional redistricting plan offered.

The House adjourned until 2 p.m. Sunday but the Senate session dragged on past 10 p.m. as Sen. Lloyd Doggett, D-Austin, staged a delaying talk against a bill to continue the state regulation of doctors.

The House voted late Saturday to reopen compromise talks on the general appropriations bill, by a 74-50 vote and demanded that the House-Senate conference committee add another $28 million to increase teachers ssalaries.

The increase, if finally approved, would give Texas teachers a 27.7 percent pay increase over the next two years compared to 26.6 kpercent in the previous agreement.

Earlier Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby said the Senate debate on the $26.9 billion state spending bill, which has been expected Saturday afternoon, would not be until Monday because of printing delays.

Failure to agree on either one could bring on a special session.

Both houses planned meetings Saturday and Sunday in an effort to find the key to these two sticklers plus a number of others, including redistricting of the Senate and House, new judges to help man an intermediate appeals court system, and work furloughs for convicts.

The regular session of the 67th Legislature ends at midnight Monday.

Any special session would be called by Gov. Bill Clements, who would dictate the time and the subject matter. The constitution limits any special session to 30-days.

Despite the crucial pending problems, the lawmakers can point to a long list of accomplishments, and a shorter list of failures.

Clements started the session with about 30 proposed measures on his request list. About half of them have been passed, including most of his 11-item anti-crime package and most of his war-on-drugs list.

The governor's top achievment was passage of legalized wiretaps for drug control, although the law will die in 1985 if not extended by that Legislature.

"All in all, this has been a good session for the governor's office,' Clements said Friday. "We've had several losses but the gains were good."

Other winning Clements-supported bills included increased penalties for child abuse, reorganization of the Pardons and Paroles Board, new penalties for aggravated rape, and admission of oral confessions in trials.

The big loser was initiative and referendum, the plan by Clements and other budget-minded conservatives to allow voters the right to propose law changes by petition and pass them at the polls.

Still other major issues that have won approval of the 67th Legislature include:

— Raising the drinking age from 18 to 19 years.

— Making a person temporarily ineligible for jobless insurance if he quits a job or gets fired.

— New dormitories for the crowded prison system.

— Increased interest rates for consumers.

— Licensing of sites for low level nuclear wastes.

— Comptency tests for teachers.

— A new curriculum of "basics" for public schools.

— Prohibition of commercial catches of redfish and speckled trout for two years.

Despite public opinion surveys showing approval of bingo, horse race betting and repeal of the Sunday closing law, the Legislature turned down all three controversial issues. The bingo issue apparently was settled two years ago when voters authorized it in a constitution change. However, the Legislature could not agree on statutory provisions that would put change into effect.

Other issues that appeared to be dead in the final days included a plan that would require embalming of bodies, an effort to petition Congress to repeal the 55 mph speed limit and a bill calling for non-partisan election of judges.

Redistricting due in court?

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Lawyers for a Mexican-American civil rights group said Saturday they expect the Congressional redistricting plan to be challenged in court.

"The state, to my knowledge, has never adopted a plan that stood up in court," said George Korbel, an attorney for Texas Rural Legal Aid.

Korbel has been involved in voting rights litigation since 1970, and represented plaintiffs in the 1971 suit that challenged legislative apportionments made after the last census.

"I'm sure there's going to be litigation no matter what," he said, explaining that Republicans, blacks and hispanics objected — for different reasons — to both the House and Senate plans for Congressional districts.

Because Texas is covered by the Voting Rights Act, the redistricting plan must be approved by the U.S. Attorney General to make sure there has been no "racial gerrymandering" — drawing of district lines to dilute minority voting strength or reduce minority representation in Congress.

A conference committee is working to resolve the differences in the House and Senate plans, and Korbel said he felt the committee might accept alternatives to boost minority representation in Congress.

TRLA and the Mexican-American Legal Defense Fund presented their plan in a Capitol news conference. It would create five minority districts instead of the four in the Legislature's proposals, MALDEF spokesman Raul Noriega said.

The plan would create a new South Texas district south of San Antonio and north of District 15, now represented by U.S. Rep. Eligio "Kika" de la Garza.

The new district, No. 27, would be about 53 percent Hispanic and 3 percent black, Noriega said.

"I think they (the conferees) are going to put in the South Texas district," Korbel said. He said he was optimistic about the plan's adoption because "it's the right thing to do."

"That's the most persuasive argument of all," he said, adding that he thought the state could avoid some costly legal trouble by adding the district.

"Keeping the state out of tremendously expensive litigation is persuasive to this Legislature which is so careful about money," said Korbel, although he said that in his opinion no plan would make everybody happy and some lawsuits would result.

Budgeters asked to boost pay

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The House told the conference committee on the $26.6 billion state budget bill Saturday to go back to work and add more money for teacher salaries.

Over objections from House members of the conference committee, state representatives members voted 74-50 to demand the addition of $28 million for teacher salaries.

But Rep. Bill Presnal, chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, said it was unlikely that Senate conferees would be willing to reopen negotiations about the budget bill.

"I don't think the Senate will meet with us," Presnal said. He said Sen. Grant Jones, D-Abilene, chairman of the conference commitee, was out of town. "If he is not willing to reconvene the conference committee, we won't meet."

The compromise appropriation bill probably will be taken up by the House on Monday, the last day of the legislative session, Presnal said.

The House version of the bill provided teachers an average 27.7 percent increase over the next two years, counting their built-in annual raises for experience, instead of the 26.6 percent approved by the conference committee.

Saturday's teacher pay vote came on an amendment by Rep. Matt Garcia, D-San Antonio, to a resolution authorizing the conferees to add money or language not contained in either the House or the Senate version of the bill.

The resolution is required by House rules but not by Senate rules, and Presnal said it was "not binding" on the conference committee.

FARM-RANCH ROUNDUP

Promotional endorsed

The Texas cattle industry will implement a voluntary 25-cent-per-head beef promotion investment program beginning July 1.

The beef promotional has been endorsed by the Texas Farm Bureau and four other Texas agricultural organizations in an effort to "generate additional funding needed for aggressive beef market development."

Under the system, 25 cents will be collected on each head of cattle and on calves sold through participating markets, packers, dealers and order buyers.

The funds will be remitted to the Beef Industry Council of the Meat Board for use in national programs of research, education and promotion.

Texas agricultural organizations initiating the 25-cent investment are the Texas and Southwestern Cattle Raisers Association, Texas Cattle Feeders Association, Texas Farm Bureau, the Independent Cattlemen's Association and the Livestock Marketing Association of Texas.

Cotton production down

AUSTIN — Upland cotton production in the Southern High Plains of Texas in 1980 totaled 1,345,000 bales, according to Texas Agriculture Commissioner Reagan V. Brown.

The regional production represents a substantial decrease from the 2,265,000 bales ginned in the Plains in 1979.

"Last summmer's prolonged drought and searing heat took its toll on Texas cotton production," Brown said. "The state's output dropped from 5,515,000 bales in 1979 to 3,320,000 last year."

The adverse summer weather also caused yield per acre to fall in all areas except the Northern High Plains and the Trans Pecos region.

The statewide average price for 1980 Texas Upland cotton was 69.7 cents per pound without allowance for unredeemed loans. The comparable price in 1979 was 55.7 cents per pound.

Rodeo changing funding

HOUSTON — The Houston Livestock Show and Rodeo is increasing its funding to graduate assistants and is earmarking $600,000 in grants to 4-H Club and Future Farmers of America recipients.

The value of graduate assistantships was increased from $4,800 to $5,400 annually. "Each year, the show funds about 20 graduate assistantships as part of our total scholarship program," Allen H. Carruth, show president, said.

In addition, the show will present 100 four-year scholarships, valued at $6,000 each, to 100 4-H and FFA members.

The Houston Livestock Show and Rodeo is the nation's largest donor of agricultural scholarships. Scholarship commitments exceed $2 million.

In 1982, livestock judging will begin on Feb. 22, and the first of 16 rodeo performances will kick off Feb. 24.

"With the horse show activities in full swing (in February 1982)..., plus the barbecue, fiddlers and hay-hauling contests, there's always been a lot to see on the show grounds," Carruth said at the show's annual membership meeting here. "Now, the carnival and all commercial exhibits will be open too, and livestock will be arriving to fill the barns, giving spectators a full house of stock show fun."

Screwworm cases confirmed

AUSTIN — Two screwworm cases were confirmed in sheep in the Marfa area last week, reported Dr. John Holcombe, executive director of the Texas Animal Health Commission.

"We don't want to be alarmists, but this is a situation that will need to be watched closely," Dr. Holcombe said.

The two cases were found in lambs on a ranch between Shafter and Marfa in Presidio County and brings the numbers of confirmed screwworm cases in Texas to four for the year.

"All livestock producers throughout the state need to be mindful that we could have problems again with screwworms," said Holcombe. He said that livestock producers may submit suspected samples to the U.S. Department of Agriculture's screwworm fly laboratory at Mission.

In the meantime, sterile screwworm flies from Mexico and pellets containing a special screwworm fly attractant and insecticide will be airdropped in a 25- to 40-mile square area around Marfa.

More wheat forecast

AUSTIN — Wheat production for the Southern High Plains of Texas is forecast at 6.5 million bushels, which is a 110 percent incease from 1980, according to Reagan V. Brown, Texas Commissioner of Agriculture.

Brown cited "timely rains, adequate moisture levels and increase planting acreage" as the principal reasons behind the projected increase.

"Wheat was our second biggest income producing export crop in 1980, bringing in $347 million," he said.

Some farmers are apprehensive that this year's bumper crop may produce a glut in the market and thus depress prices for wheat.

Virginia Democrats nominate Robb for gubernatorial race

By GEORGE W. WILBUR
Associated Press Writer

VIRGINIA BEACH, Va. (AP) — Lt. Gov. Charles S. Robb, son-in-law of the late President Lyndon B. Johnson, was nominated Saturday by Virginia Democrats to run for governor this year.

Robb, 41, accepted the nomination — for which he was unopposed — with a promise to "dam the tide of Republican dominance in Virginia."

Although Democrats have maintained large majorities in both the state Senate and House of Delegates, a Democrat has not been elected governor of Virginia since 1965.

In nominations that made clear the party's new mode of moderate conservatism, former Portsmouth Mayor Richard J. Davis was nominated for lieutenant governor and Delegate Gerald Baliles of Richmond was nominated for attorney general.

The convention beat back efforts of party liberals to give the nomination for lieutenant governor to Ira Lechner of Arlington, confirming a trend toward conservatism in its statewide ticket. A liberal, Henry Howell, was beaten for governor four years ago. The Legislature is predominantly conservative.

"It's been a long time since the office of governor and the General Assembly were united, in harmony, under one Democratic banner. I say it's been too long," Robb said in his acceptance speech.

Robb's almost certain opponent in the campaign will be Republican state Attorney General J. Marshall Coleman, who has no opposition for the nomination at the GOP state convention here June 6.

Robb was elected lieutenant governor in 1977 at the same time Virginians were electing Republican John N. Dalton as governor and Coleman as attorney general.

Robb is married to the former Lynda Bid Johnson, daughter of the late President Johnson. They have three young daughters.

Race looks like Kentucky Derby

By PATRICK BRESLIN
Associated Press Writer

TRENTON, N.J. (AP) — A New Jersey gubernatorial race with a field as crowded as this year's Kentucky Derby goes down to the wire Tuesday with a dog named Henry Hudson perhaps the favorite among television watchers.

A media blitz by 21 candidates — the same number that ran in the Derby — built to a crescendo as the final days and debates became more heated in an unusual primary election in which a winner may need only one-fifth of the votes.

With 13 Democrats and eight Republicans in the running, only about 20 percent of the vote in either party is needed to win the nomination.

The candidates include the president and minority leader of the state Senate, the former state attorney general, the mayors of the state's three largest cities, two U.S. congressmen and a millionaire businessman who is making his first bid for public office.

Most candidates accepted public matching funds to fuel their campaigns, but even Gov. Brendan T. Byrne — who pushed legislation to make the funds available — admits now that primary financing may have been a mistake.

With the extra money, the candidates have taken to television advertising like never before in two of the most expensive markets in the country — New York and Philadelphia, which broadcast to North and South Jersey.

Jersey City Mayor Thomas F.X. Smith, for example, has a commercial featuring Henry Hudson, a pooch who "tells" voters how Smith rescued him from a dock after he was shot and nursed him back to health.

It ends with a photograph of Smith and the gruff "voice" of Henry Hudson signing off: "See ya' in Trenton!"

Republican Richard McGlynn, miffed that he was excluded from a New Jersey Public Television series on 10 "leaders" in the race, took the four state-owned stations to court, claiming the broadcasts violated the Fairness Doctrine. The state Supreme Court agreed, and after NJPTV's appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court failed, the stations revamped the series to include all 21 candidates.

Some political observers theorize the heavy media saturation will stir up thousands of voters who usually stay home during the primaries. Others feel the voters will throw up their hands in utter confusion and stay home.

Based on previous trends, the Secretary of State's office predicts that 575,000 Democrats and 370,000 Republicans will cast ballots Tuesday, about 26 percent of those registered.

AREA REPORT

Arrests solve string of rural burglaries

STANTON — The arrest of an Odessa man and a Snyder woman reportedly has solved 28 rural home burglaries which exacted some $90,000 in lost property.

The two, Joe Subia Hernandez, 34, of Odessa, and Angela Martinez Johnston, 24, of Snyder were arrested and charged following investigations by Martin County Deputy Sheriff Charles Sebastian and Texas Ranger Charlie Hodges.

Sheriff Dan Saunders commended the officers for their investigation into the burglaries.

Hernandez and Ms. Johnston were linked to seven burglaries in Martin County, five in Dawson County, five in Howard County, three in Ector County, two in Andrews County and six in Midland County.

"We are manned and set up to handle the normal duties," The Stanton Reporter quoted the sheriff, "but, when we have additional loads and cases like this, we have to work extra. You don't solve a case like this by sitting around watching television and working in the garden."

He attributed the rash of rural burglaries to a growing population, transcient traffic and the isolation of homes.

Pair takes science honors

ANDREWS — Andrews High School students Mark Wilson and Charlie Mohr won honors in the recent International Science and Engineering Fair in Milwaukee, Wisc.

Wilson picked up a special award from the U.S. Department of Energy for his project on "enhancing alcohol production by vitamin stimulation of the fermentation process."

Mohr won a fourth place for his project, which tested wild and blind fruit flies for a possible non-visual stimulus to determine if the eyeless male will mate with the female.

Tulsa police have found no evidence that millionaire killed by hit man

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — After checking out more than 60 leads in three days, police said Saturday they have found no evidence that a hired hit man killed millionaire electronics magnate Roger Wheeler.

Sgt. Roy Hunt said an 11-man police task force formed to investigate te slaying has interviewed more than 40 witnesses and followed 60 to 80 leads, but detectives have no solid information on who shot Wheeler, or why.

"It's just like any other homicide," Hunt said. "It's just talk, talk, talk, and leather work. We're still investigating leads gathered at the scene of the murder."

Wheeler, 55, chairman and chief executive officer of Telex Corp., was shot once in the face as he entered his car after a round of golf at the exclusive Southern Hills Country Club on Wednesday evening.

Police have circulated composite sketches of two bearded men wearing sunglasses, but that has drawn light response.

House approves bilingual bill

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — A bill broadening Texas' bilingual education program and putting more money into it — but with a change some claim "guts" the measure — won final House approval on Saturday.

House passage returned the bill to the Senate, where Sen. Carlos Truan, D-Corpus Christi, said he would attempt to send it to a conference committee for removal of the amendment.

The amendment says if a child has not become proficient in English after four years of bilingual teaching, a school may transfer him or her into "an alternative transitional language program, such as English as a second language."

The bill sets funding for bilingual education at $50 per pupil, adding $8.6 million to the $9.3 million the state ordinarily would have spent on the program over the next two years.

It also requires schools to offer bilingual education in kindergarten through sixth grade instead of the present K-3. In addition, schools would have to provide some form of intensive English instruction in grades 7-8 for those needing it and instruction in English as a second language in grades 9-12 .

Students in bilingual education classes would be tested at the end of each school year to determine if they are ready to transfer into regular classes taught only in English.

The bill is the Legislature's response to U.S. District Court Judge William Wayne Justice's ruling that Texas must offer bilingual education to all who need it, through high school if necessary.

Gasahol bill chances dimmed

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Chances of passage of a bill that would give gasohol special tax treatment in Texas dimmed Saturday as the Senate advanced but refused to take final action on the measure.

"This would help create a new industry in Texas," said Sen. Bill Sarpalius, D-Hereford, of the House-approved measure to excuse 5 cents of the state gasoline tax on gasohol for the next five years.

"You mean you want to rob the highway fund a couple little old refineries in the state,?" protested Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur. "Instead of letting the Arabs get to us you want to let the local people get to us."

Sarpalius admitted that Diamond-Shamrock Oil Corp. was one of five applications pending for manufacture of alcohol from agriculture products to mix with gasoline, but said the other applicants included "a couple of farmers."

Sarpalis estimated the reduction in gasoline tax revenue would be $16 million the first two years and $20 million in 1984.

"We will lose a little money but we will receive additional money in property taxes, in sales taxes and the payroll for new jobs," Sarpalius said.

Legislators delay tough decisions

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Texas Legislators, fast approaching the end of a 140-day session, put off decisions Saturday on state spending and congressional redistricting until Monday.

Either issue, if not solved before Monday midnight, could bring on a special session.

A 4 p.m. compromise session on congressional redistricting was put off until Saturday night, apparently delaying any floor debate until at least Monday.

The House voted late Saturday to reopen compromise talks on the general appropriations bill, by a 74-50 vote and demanded that the House-Senate conference committee add another $28 million to increase teachers ssalaries.

The increase, if finally approved, would give Texas teachers a 27.7 percent pay increase over the next two years compared to 26.6 kpercent in the previous agreement.

Earlier Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby said the Senate debate on the $26.9 billion state spending bill, which has been expected Saturday afternoon, would not be until Monday because of printing delays.

Archer still comfortable as Republican congressman

By CHARLES RICHARDS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A continuing battle with a powerful West Texas Democrat played a major role in the switch by Rep. Bill Archer, R-Texas, to the Republican Party in late 1967, Archer says.

"I don't want to mention his name, but his concept of doing business and the way I felt things should be done were not exactly in harmony. He ran the Appropriations Committee, which I was a member of, like a floating crap game," said Archer, 53.

"I asked him if the press shouldn't have access to our meetings. He said, 'Oh, the press is welcome to our meetings. If they can find us.' About the same time, I saw Hubert Humphrey's influence stamped on the future of the Democratic Party, and I wanted to get my philosophy where I could be more comfortable," Archer said.

NOW IN HIS 11th YEAR in Washington, Archer is still comfortable as a Republican and says he hopes the voters will elect enough other GOP candidates in 1982 to give the party a majority in the House of Representatives.

"It would be the difference between night and day," said Archer, who said the domination by liberal Democrats through most of his tenure in Congress "has been very frustrating."

Democratic liberals have led the way in massive federal spending that has gotten out of control, Archer said.

As a city councilman in the Hunters Creek community of Houston, he and the rest of the council once put in new roads, sewer lines, water, a police department and a fire department, and still lowered the tax rate for three consecutive years, he said.

When he was in the Texas Legislature, he added, "every million dollars was looked at very, very carefully."

BUT IN WASHINGTON, "I learned if it wasn't in the range of several hundred million dollars, no one seemed to look at it very carefully. The closer to the people that government is, the more they can scrutinize it and it doesn't become as much of an inflationary monster that can't be easily changed."

Consequently, he's solidly behind the president's attempt to abolish numerous federal programs and allow state and local governments to administer them.

He's also for forcing Congress to balance its budget and restrict its spending to the money it has on hand.

"What's good enough for Texas is good for the United States," Archer said, emphasizing the surplus Texas has had for many years.

The former varsity tennis player at the University of Texas got into politics, he said, because as a small businessman he felt the unwanted interference of the government in people's lives.

AFTER GETTING A LAW DEGREE from Texas, he served in the Air Force during the Vietnam War, then returned to Houston and began operating a livestock and poultry feed business started by his father. He was elected to his community's city council in 1955 and served it for seven years.

"As I perceived government taking away more and more of my life, I finally realized if I was going to control it, I was going to have to give more of my life to government," he said.

"I got very concerned about what I saw happening in government that was not appealing to me. It was the same basic thrust that has gone on unabated until this last election on the ability of small businesses to survive."

He won election to the Legislature in 1966, changed parties after 11 months in Austin and then was reelected to a second term in 1968 without an opponent in the Republican primary.

THEN, IN 1969, he began hearing talk that George Bush was considering giving up his 7th congressional seat from Houston's posh west side to contest Sen. Lloyd Bentsen.

Bush did challenge Bentsen, and Archer announced for Congress, winning a hotly contested primary battle against Dudley Sharp Jr. and then defeating Democrat Jim Greenwood in the 1970 general election.

Okay, What's VDS?

One of Midland's best-kept secrets

By MIKE CRUVER
Sports Writer

VDS? What is VDS?

VDS is perhaps one of the best kept secrets in Midland. VDS Racing Team Inc., owned by Count Rudy Van der Straten, a Belgian citizen who founded and has ran VDS very successfully since 1965.

In 1976 the entire VDS Racing Team was moved to the United States. Based in California, VDS ran a car on the Formula 5000 series and now on the Can-Am racing circuit.

Count Van der Stradten moved his engine shop to Midland two years ago. Why Midland? Very simple according to Peter Gethin, head of public relations at the Midland shop. "The count wanted Franz Weis, who is easily one of the best engine builders in the world, to go to work for him. Weis agreed but only if the the engine shop would be located in Midland", said Gethin.

WEIS, WHO worked 18 years with Jim Hall's Chaparral Racing Team, said, "I enjoyed living in Midland and had been with Jim Hall for a long time. I just felt that it was a good time to make a change. This looked like a good place to go with." He added, "I had lived in Midand for 18 years and wanted to stay here no matter who I worked for."

Weis reputation as one of the top engine men in America is well-founded. He has certainly proved himself in the motor racing world by not only being responsible for the engines of the winning Can-Am teams from 1977 to 1979, but alway for the winning team's engines for the forerunner of Can-Am, namely Formula 5000. Weis was also responsible for the Formula 5000 championships from 1973 through 1977. He also put together the engine in Al Unser's Indianapolis winning car in 1978, with Jim Hall's famed Chaparral.

Weis and his fellow mechanics also put together the engines for the Indianapolis racing team of Psachie/Garza. Of the three cars entered in the 1981 race, one finished fifth, one eighth, and Josele Garza, who won Rookie of the Year honors, ran with the leaders during the race before a broken suspension caused Garza to hit the wall. He had to settle for 23rd place in the final standings.

CURRENTLY, Weis, and his team of Troy Rogers, Laddy McMurry and Tom Anderson are working on the 305 inch V8 Chey which already this year is giving some 30 horse power more than last year while being 35 pounds lighter. In other research, the VDS team working on developing the new Ve, 244 inch engine which, if it proves to be as successful as it has been in its initial stages, may very well be the way to go in the future. This engine is not only a possibility for winning the Can-Am series next year, but also looks to have a very good chance to be the winning engine for the 1982 Indianapolis 500 with the new regulations, according to Gethin.

Weis said, "Most of the improvements in racing will come through the aero-dymanics of the cars then in the engines. Everyone's engines are just about equall, it is just the ones that can get the most out of them that have the best success."

THE VDS race car shop, located in Santa Anna, Calif., is expected to be moved to Midland within the next year. The racing shop is where the VDS Can-Am car is built and test. For the 1981 Can-Am series, which opens June 14 in Toronto, Canada, the VDS car will be the much re-vamped Lola 530. This car, restyled by VDS' aerodynamist, Tony Cicale, and rebuilt by the long time VDS engineers, led by Steve Horne, is now based in Santa Ana but is expected to be moved to Midland also.

Driving the VDS Can-Am entry is 28-year-old Geoff Brabham. Brabham is the son of Jack Brabham, who won the World Drivers Championship in 1959 and 1960. Is his first start at Indy, Geoff finished fifth with the Psachie/Garza team.

Brabham started his racing career in 1973, in his native Australia but is wasn't until 1976 that he went to England to race in International Formual 3. He was fairly successful in England but due to a lack of finances, was forced to leave Europe in 1978, and take part in his first Super Vee races in America. This proved to be a fortunate turn of events as, driving for David Psachie he took part in five races in the United States and Canada and had his first win, almost immediately, at the Trenton oval.

IN 1980, Geoff joined the VDS racing team and it was with them that he won his first Can-Am race. This was at Atlanta Motor Speedway an he proved from this point on that he was definitely someone to be reckoned with. During the 1980 season, as he got more and more Can-Am experience he developed into the faster driver on the circuit, taking the pole position on four occasion. For the season, Brabham had to settle for third in the overall standings.

Sun Devils rout Horns in Series

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — Stan Holmes had five hits and drove in six runs as Arizona State bashed 19 hits to crush Texas 11-2 before a record opening crowd in the first round of the College World Series Saturday.

Attendance for first-day action in the collegiate baseball championship tournament was 14,115.

Holmes tied a CWS record with his five hits as the No. 1-ranked Sun Devils, now 51-12, chased five Texas pitchers, including previously unbeaten Tony Arnold.

Arizona State reached Arnold, now 17-1, for five runs on eight hits in 22-3 innings.

Holmes collected three singles, a two-run homer in the fifth and an RBI double in the ninth in becoming only the seventh player in the 35-year-old series to collect five hits in a single game.

Teammate Alvin Davis added four hits and Lennie Miller, Mike Soders, and Kevin Romine added two each. Miller hit a solo homer in the fourth and Soders tripled in the third.

The loss drops Texas to 58-10-1.

Michigan loses

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — Mark Gillaspie's three-run homer powered Mississippi State past Michigan 4-0 in the first baseball game of the 1981 College World Series Saturday.

Don Mundie scattered six hits in shutting out the 41-19 Wolverines. Michigan mounted one threat, loading the bases with one out in the fifth inning, but Mundie picked off one runner and Gerry Hool flew out to end the threat.

He walked three times and rifled his first pitch in the fifth inning well over the 370-foot sign in right field for the winning runs.

Martin tantrum brings suspension

NEW YORK (AP) — Oakland A's Manager Billy Martin, who had been uncharacteristically quiet in his dealings with umpires this season, was suspended indefinitely Saturday and fined an unspecified amount for bumping an ump during a game against Toronto, the American League office announced.

"You can't make contact with an umpire," Bob Fishel, an assistant to AL President Lee MacPhail, said in disclosing the action.

Fishel said that the length of the suspension would be determined after a review of the game films Monday by MacPhail.

Third base coach Clete Boyer took over as acting manager for the A's.

Martin had little to say when contacted by telephone at his Toronto hotel room Saturday, hours before the A's met the Blue Jays in the second game of their weekend series.

"I have no comment," Martin said about MacPhail's ruling and the Friday night altercation with plate umpire Terry Cooney.

Asked if he planned to go to New York and look at the game films and give his side of the case to the league president, Martin replied: "I don't have to review the films."

Martin was then asked when he had heard about the suspension.

"I got word this morning," he said, then hung up.

Fishel said the suspension was levied immediately after the league had received verbal statements about Martin's behavior from the four-man umpiring crew, headed by Bill Kunkel.

The incident occurred in the fourth inning of the game, won by Toronto 6-3. Martin started to get on Cooney from the dugout and, when a warning was ignored, he was thrown out of the game for the first time this season.

"He had already complained about some calls before," Cooney said. "I told him if he was going to argue about balls and strikes not to do it from the dugout. He kept on hollering, so I unloaded on him."

Apparently upset over Toronto catcher Ernie Whitt's request to have Cooney check the ball after a pitch by the A's Matt Keough, the fiery Martin then charged out of the dugout and bumped Cooney with his chest, knocking the 6-foot, 200-pound umpire backwards.

"It was like a freight train ran into me," Cooney said. "I've never been run into that hard in my life, not even in college when I played football. I'd say his actions warrant a severe penalty."

Martin then kicked dirt on Cooney's shoes and, when the umpire turned and walked away, the angry A's manager scooped up two handfuls of dirt and threw them on Cooney's back.

Otto Velez led off the Toronto fourth inning with a double. One out later, George Bell walked. After the first pitch from Keough, Whitt asked Cooney to check the ball, and Martin became irate.

Whitt said he asked Cooney to check the ball thrown by Keough "because it was a spitter. I've caught spitballs before. I know what they look like."

Several other teams have complained this season about Oakland pitchers throwing spitballs.

Before Saturday's game, some of the A's said they felt Kunkel's umpiring crew may be under pressure as the result of a run-in last week in Baltimore with New York Manager Gene Michael and subsequent criticism by Yankees owner George Steinbrenner.

"I think Cooney is feeling some heat," said Keough. "He challenged Billy, and then one thing led to another."

Boyer, asked if Martin's reputation as a battler and the recent criticism of the umps had contributed to the situation, replied: "Sure it did. I mean, I think the umpires read the papers, too. They were getting blasted by Steinbrenner. It's only my opinion, but I think they were a little edgy. The trouble with umpires is, they don't admit they make mistakes."

Pete still running scared

Los Angeles Times

All his life, Pete Rose has acted as if someone were going to come in and take his balloon away from him, take down the Christmas tree, repossess his tricycle. Tell him he couldn't play ball anymore. He'd be on the outside looking in. Like a kid with his nose pressed against the candy store window. A little boy with a sled and no snow.

In 1978, it was clear to Pete the Cincinnati Reds were through with him, they wanted to pack him off to boarding school, so to speak. It was the worst kind of rejection. All they were offering him was $400,000. A utility infielder's take. They acted like they hoped he wouldn't take it.

So, Pete collected his dog, rags, and his slingshot, and his pocketful of marbles and his pet frog and went off into the cruel world. He didn't join the circus or raft down the Mississippi, he got his lawyer and his plane and he set off to see what Pete Rose was worth.

HE PRESENTED himself first with his hat in his hand and an uncertain smile on his face at the desk of Atlanta Braves' owner Ted Turner. Under his arm, he didn't have an old catcher's mitt; he had a reel of film on the life and times of Peter Edward Rose. In case nobody knew who he was. If that didn't work, he always had the bubblegum cards, too.

"I'm sorry, we don't know what to ask for, I've been a Cincinnati Red since I got out of high school," Pete apologized to Turner, calling him "sir." "If you'd like to take a look at this film?"

"You don't need that," Ted Turner assured him quickly. "How does a million dollars a year for four years and $100,000 for life grab you?"

The education of Peter Edward Rose began at that point. At St. Louis, Gussie Busch, in a hospital bed at the time, bumped the pot. At Pittsburgh, the John W. Galbreath family offered race horses -- not platers, foals from animals that commanded millions in stud fees. Kentucky Derby prospects.

THE DODGERS, at first, passed. "It might create some hard feelings with our players, paying you a million," GM Al Campanis apologized. Later, Campanis called back. He had changed his mind. "We want to get back in the bidding," he told Pete Rose. What about the hard feelings, Pete wanted to know. "I figured if we had anybody who had made 13 straight All-Star teams, four World Series, and played in 2,500 games, and got 3,000 hits and hit in 44 straight games, if they wanted a million dollars, why we'd give it to them, too."

That was a little over two years ago. Since that time Peter Edward Rose has gotten 440 more hits as a Philadelphia Phillie. Oh, yes, he's gotten his million, too, and he's played in another World Series and playoff. That makes Series No. 5 and playoff No. 6. He's about to run Stan Musial and maybe Henry Aaron right out of the record books. Even Ty Cobb is not entirely safe. He's already caught Mel Ott in runs and has set almost every switchhitting record in the books except for the home runs.

WATCHING PETE Rose play is like watching an old grainy film of the Cobb-Wagner-Ruth-John McGraw era. Dirty uniform baseball. Slide on your head, crash into the catcher, run down the line as if the dogcatcher were after your pup, taunt the pitcher, run everything out, even walks. It's like taking a step back in time to a day when guys wore sleeve garters and straw hats and sang "By The Light of The Silvery Moon." You watch Pete play and everybody's young again.

Pete glories in the game. Some guys like war, other guys like girls, others like money. Pete likes baseball. He takes part in all phases of it -- the autographs, the press interviews, the banquets; Pete is like a kid with his first banana split. "All I have I owe to baseball," he challenges. "What d'ya think I'd be without baseball?"

AND WHAT would baseball be without Pete Rose? If the owners rejected Pete Rose, they would be telling the world their circus was all spangles and no elephants; they would be spurning their own mythic dreams, trifling with the trust of dirty-faced kids of all ages from 6 to 60. They would be saying hustle is a hoax and Charlie Hustle is a fake like the headless lady in the carnival, and Barnum was right.

It's nice to know the owners read the Sporting News, too. It's nice to know they have enough little boy in them. It's nice to know they know what makes their games tick, peanuts and crackerjacks and seventh inning stretches -- and a 40-year-old barefoot boy, Mrs. Rose's boy, Peter. It's nice to know Pete didn't really have to bring that recording of his greatest hits, or a note from his fan club, or an employment perspectus on film. All he needed was his bat. Because, anybody who wouldn't want Pete Rose on his team would fill in fishing holes, eat hotdogs with a fork, remain seated when the flag went by, and should have his top hat knocked off by a kid wearing a derby hat with holes in it.

The 23-year-old Springfield, Mo., resident began the day as co-leader with Sally Little, who shot a 74 and fell two strokes behind in the tournament at the 6,239-yard Stanwich Club course.

Pat Haden criticizes cuffing coaches

By BOB OATES
(c) 1981, The Los Angeles Times

Of the various football people questioned about the conduct of former Arizona State football Coach Frank Kush and others who cuff around players, the most indignant was Pat Haden, quarterback of the Los Angeles Rams.

"I don't see any place in football for a coach who slaps his players or grabs their face mask," Haden said. "In fact, I am deeply concerned about the direction of American athletics today."

The former USC Rose Bowl star and Rhodes Scholar listed the following actions as part of a "reprehensible pattern" in sports:

— Little League leaders yelling at their players, "not for them, at them."

— Coaches breaking contracts to take better jobs.

— Colleges and "supposedly respectable" owners of pro teams going back on their word and firing coaches.

— The unreasonable pressure on coaches and players of most college teams to win "as aplied by the alumni, the administration and the community."

— The classes that some football players don't have to attend at some of the schools.

— Fraudulent transcripts of grades at some institutions as used by other institutions to confer immediate eligibility.

— Newspapers printing football point spreads.

— Football fans booing quarterback Dan Pastorini when he was on the ground in pain with a broken leg.

— Other football fans cheering Pat Haden's injury "when it was announced on the scoreboard."

HADEN: "The thing that disturbs me most about Kush and Hayes is that they're only a part of this whole disturbing picture."

Now in his last year of law school, Haden, a six-year NFL veteran, agreed with others interviewed that physical abuse continues to be a part of football coaching at many colleges.

"I know things like helmet slapping still go on," he said. "But it's hard to blame the coaches entirely when you consider all the pressure they're under from their alumni and their administrations. That's what I mean when I say this is all part of one big problem."

Asked about solutions, Haden said:

"(USC Coach) John Robinson has a couple of good ones. He thinks coaches should have tenure, the same as professors, and should be paid the same as professors, no more and no less. But in the area we're talking about, most solutions aren't that easy to come by. The most important thing right now, it seems to me, is to recognize that we in America today have a sports problem."

Haden, 27, said he has been physically abused by only one coach, "and that was way back in Little League."

HE ADDED: "I've been lucky, I guess, but I've seen coaches lose their temper and yell at young players, and I don't think that's all that necessary either."

Unhappily, the wrong things (including whatever it takes to win) are condoned by American society, Haden said.

"Sports have always been a big part of my life," he said, "but I'm frankly pessimistic about the way things are going. The real problem is that not enough of us recognize that as (psychologist) Thomas Tutko said about the values of fun and games, it isn't the product th$t's important, it's the process."

UCLA bid for 3rd straight stymied

Tennessee wins AIAW meet

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Tennessee's Lady Vols, paced by Delisa Walton's magnificent anchor leg, outlasted heavily favored UCLA in the 1600 meter relay in collegiate record time Saturday to capture their first AIAW Division 1 Track and Field Championship.

Leading by just a point, Tennessee upset UCLA, which was seeking its third AIAW title, in the final relay event on the program.

Running in a heavy rain shower, UCLA's Orlee Fowler enjoyed a three-meter lead over Walton, who had anchored the Lady Vols to a collegiate record in the 800 meter medley relay Friday night.

WALTON CAUGHT Fowler then held on down the stretch to give Tennessee 10 big points to just 8 for the Bruins. The event was run with three and a half inches of water on the artificial turf of Memorial Stadium but Tennessee still managed a record time of 3:31.70 which eclipsed Prairie View's standard of 3:32.8 set in 1979. UCLA was clocked in 3:32.08.

Despite the conditions, there were numerous records set in a day which began with blustery thunderstorms, delaying proceedings for an hour and ending with a gentle rain and a double rainbow over the stadium.

Arizona's Meg Ritchie pitched the shot put 57 feet 1-inch to shatter her collegiate record of 55-4 12.

OREGON'S LEANN Warren was a double winner in the 800 meter and 1500 meter events. She broke the AIAW record in the 1500 meter in a time of 4:15.0 to the 4:15.6 mark possessed by Montclair state's Doreen Ennis.

In the 400 meter relay, Florida State established an AIAW record with a 44.35 showing to outshine the record of 44.79 by Cal State-Northridge.

There was a big upset in the high jump as Coleen Rienstra of Arizona State mastered the wet conditions with a leap of 6-feet while American record holder Louise Ritter of Texas Woman's University was second with two other competitors at 5-10 34.

UCLA went through the final day without winning event and the superior depth of the Bruins could not make up the difference.

The Lady Vols' triumph cameon a track thy dearly love. They were the most valualbe team — the first time in history it had happened to a womens' team — at the Texas Relays in April when they won five events.

Tennessee's Kathy Bryant earned a point for the Lady Vols in the final event of the evening — the 5,000 meter run — and Tennessee beat UCLA 61 to 57 in the final point totals.

Baseball talks move to Rochester

By HAL BOCK

NEW YORK (AP) — Surrounded by attorneys, negotiators, and enough legal briefs to keep an ambitious law student busy for days, baseball's tangled labor situation moves this week to Rochester, N.Y., a town that doesn't even have a major league franchise.

Federal Judge Henry Werker, on temporary assignment there, brings the major league legal world with him. In between criminal cases he will hear a National Labor Relations Board request for an injunction which, if granted in the language requested, would put a threatened strike on hold for one year.

If the judge denies the injunction request, major league players could still walk out between 24 and 48 hours after his decision.

ORIGINALLY, the players had set a strike deadline of last Friday, May 29, over the controversial free agent compensation clause which management placed in the collective bargaining agreement last February. But the two sides agreed to an extension of that date until they get a ruling from Werker on the NLRB action.

The baseball matter will be squeezed in between the other cases on the judge's calender, with the hearing to begin Wednesday at 10 a.m.

The injunction requested by the NLRB would move the baseball strike calender back one year, rescinding the new compensation clause and preventing management from implementing it until February 1982. In turn, the union then would have the right to strike, no later than June 1, 1982.

The dates are exactly one year later than the original deadlines set down in the collective bargaining agreement signed in May 1980.

THE ISSUE which has brought the union and owners into court is a provision which would supply a replacement professional player for any "ranking" free agent signing with another team.

The union argues that such a clause would severely restrict the freedom of mobility which players now enjoy under the free agent system and questions management's definition of a ranked player. It also claims teams would be hesitant to sign players if they had to surrender other players in exchange.

The existing compensation for teams losing free agents is an amateur draft choice and the owners argue that is not enough. The issue nearly caused a strike last May and then was submitted to a joint study committee in an attempt at resolution. Nothing came of that and in February, the owners adopted the controversial clause. A week later, the union set its May 29 strike date.

The contract required that any strike over the issue start no later than June 1, and during negotiations, the union, headed by Marvin Miller, filed charges of unfair labor practices against management with the NLRB. Those charges were upheld last week in Washington, by William Lubbers, general counsel of the NLRB.

THE FULL board supported Lubbers' contention that by refusing to open its financial books in negotiations while at the same time complaining about the costs of free agency, management had failed to bargain in good faith. An administrative court judge will hear that case June 15 in New York City.

The two court cases are somewhat related because the NLRB injunction request before Judge Werker asks for interim relief pending the decision in the June 15 case. That decision is subject to various appeals and could delay the final resolution of the matter. By seeking the injunction, the NLRB has asked the judge to shelve the compensation question until next year.

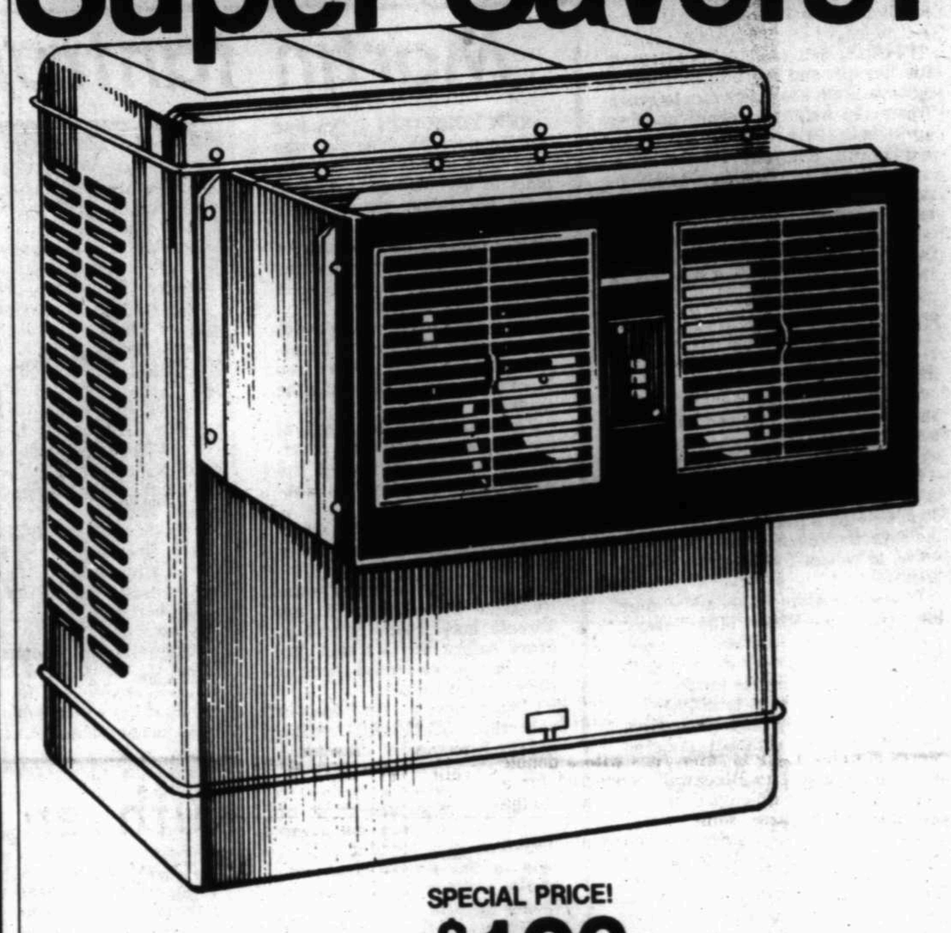

"I guess it's better for us," said Pittsburgh third baseman Bill Madlock, "but in a month, we'll probably have to go through this again and then again in two years when the (Basic) Agreement comes up again."

Calvin Griffith, owner of the Minnesota Twins, agreed.

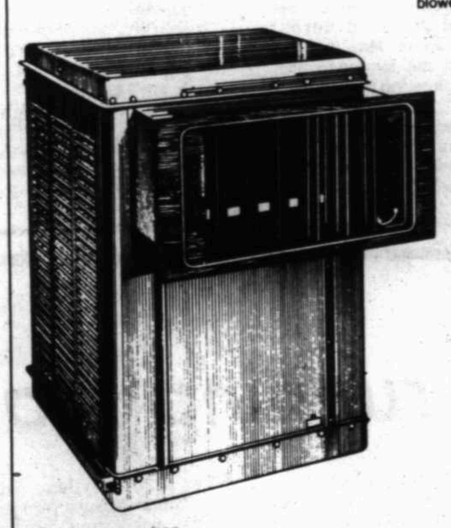

"This free-agent compensation issue should have been settled last year," he said "I wish the air could be cleared and we could concentrate on baseball."

Puhl's hit wins for Astros in 14th

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Terry Puhl's two-out single in the 14th inning snapped a tie and gave the Houston Astros a wild 21-hit, 9-8 victory over the San Francisco Giants Saturday.

After the Giants tied the game for the second time on pinch-hitter Milt May's controversial three-run homer in the 13th, Houston's Dave Roberts was safe on shortstop Johnnie LeMaster's one-out error in the 14th. Roberts was forced at second on Rafael Landestoy's apparent single when LeMaster decoyed him into thinking it was a pop-up.

However, Landestoy stole second, continued to third on catcher Mike Sadek's throwing error and scored on Puhl's single off Fred Breining, 1-1, the Giants' fifth pitcher.

Joaquin Andujar, 2-3, who yielded May's three-run homer, was the winner with relief help from Vern Ruhle, the sixth Houston pitcher.

The Giants, who tied the game 5-5 in the ninth on pinch-hitter Jim Wohlford's sacrifice fly, erased an 8-5 deficit in the bottom of the 13th.

Rennie Stennett was safe on second baseman Landestoy's one-out error and Sadek drew a two-outwalk. Maythen hit a drive off the top of the right field fence. The ball bounced back onto the field but first base umpire Frank Pulli called it a home run despite a strong protest from the Astros.

The Giants' eight runs were all unearned, the first five after two of the three errors by shortstop Reynolds. Reynolds also snapped a 5-5 tie with a run-scoring single in the 13th inning and the Astros added two more runs on Gary Woods' triple and a single by Jose Cruz to take an 8-5 advantage.

A walk to Puhl and run-scoring doubles by Cesar Cedeno and Danny Heep gave Houston a 2-0 lead in the first inning off Allen Ripley.

The Giants came back with four runs in their half, with Stennett hitting a two-run single and LeMaster a two-run double.

The Astros took a 5-4 lead with three runs in the fourth after Joe Pittman's one-out double. Pittman went to third on center fielder Bill North's throwing error and scored on Kiko Garcia's single. Garcia stole second, went to third on the first of Sadek's two throwing errors and scored on Niekro's bloop single. Niekro was forced by Puhl but a balk and Reynolds' RBI single gave the Astros the lead.

Krukow sees turnaround

NEW YORK (AP) — The Chicago Cubs broke into double figures in runs and victories Saturday and winning pitcher Mike Krukow thinks a turnaround is about to take place.

A seven-run fourth inning fueled the Cubs' 10-3 victory over the New York Mets, only Chicago's second road victory in 18 games this season and 10th win overall.

"We're playing good and we've been in every game," said former Midland Cub Krukow, who scattered five hits through seven innings.

The Cubs are 10-32 now and Krukow sees the opportunity for vast improvement.

"All we have to do is maintain a good head on our shoulders and play ourselves out of this slump. You have to give a lot of credit not only to our players, but also to (Manager) Joe (Amalfitano). Joe has not come down on us... we're too good a team for this record to continue."

Jerry Morales drove in three runs with a double and a single and Tim Blackwell connected for a two-run triple as the Chicago Cubs sent 12 men to the plate in their big fourth inning.

Krukow, 2-6, snapped a personal four-game losing streak, with the victory. Dick Tidrow finished up.

Jim Tracy started the Chicago fourth with a walk, took second on a wild pitch and scored on Morales' double. Morales moved to third on Harris' second wild pitch and one out later Ken Reitz walked.

Rhoden 6-0 as Bucs win

MONTREAL (AP) — Dave Parker belted a two-run double to cap a three-run third inning and right-hander Rick Rhoden pushed his record to 6-0 as the Pittsburgh Pirates nipped the Montreal Expos 3-2 Saturday.

Dale Berra led off the third with a single, and on Omar Moreno's slicing single down the third base line. After Phil Garner walked, Parker drilled a double to left-center field, scoring Moreno and Garner and pushing the Pirate lead to 3-0.

After retiring the first nine batters he faced, Rhoden surrendered a leadoff double to Raines in the fourth. Warren Cromartie's two-out single scored Raines.

The Expos scored their second run in the fifth inning after Chris Speier and Bobby Ramos started the inning with singles. Gullickson sacrificed the runners to second and third and Speier scored on Raines' sacrifice fly.

Reds' club Dodgers, 9-1

LOS ANGELES (AP) — George Foster drove in three runs, two of them with his 11th homer of the season, and Frank Pastore earned his first victory in more than a month as Cincinnati defeated Los Angeles 9-1 Saturday.

Ron Oester also drove in three runs with a single and two sacrifice flies as the Reds pulled to within 4½ games of the National League West-leading Dodgers. Los Angeles aided the Cincinnati cause with three errors, two passed balls and a wild pitch.

Pastore, 2-2, scattered six hits in 7 1-3 innings before being relieved by Tom Hume. Pastore struck out two and walked three in winning for the first time since April 24. Hume took over with one out and runners at first and third in the eighth and got Ron Cey to ground into a double play.

Burt Hooton, 7-1, suffered his first loss of the year. He was tagged for five runs on eight hits in five innings.

Commans captures NCAA golf

STANFORD, Calif. (AP) — Ron Commans of Southern California came from six strokes behind to pass defending champion Jay Don Blake and win the individual crown, while Brigham Young won its first team title Saturday at the 84th NCAA golf championships.

Rangers' Medich four-hits Mariners

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Doc Medich continued his mastery of Seattle with a four-hit shutout and Pat Putnam drove in the first run with a bloop single Saturday night, leading the Texas Rangers to a 6-0 victory over the Mariners.

Medich, 4-3, walked none and struck out seven in logging his second complete game of the season. It was his ninth career triumph against Seattle without a loss.

Mickey Rivers began Texas' two-run fourth inning with a single past Mariners shortstop Jim Anderson and Buddy Bell followed with another single in almost exactly the same place.

Putnam then lifted a pop fly to shallow right-center field that dropped in front of a diving Dave Henderson. Rivers scored and Bell moved to third, scoring on a single by Johnny Grubb.

Texas added a run in the seventh when Leon Roberts tripled and scored on a suicide-squeeze bunt by Jim Sundberg. The Rangers made it 6-0 with three runs off Ken Clay in the eighth. Rivers and Al Oliver's doubled, Bell and Grubb walked and Roberts rapped a two-run single.

Seattle starter Mike Parrott, 1-4, suffered his fourth loss to the Rangers without a victory over the past two seasons.

By winning, the third-place Rangers climbed to within 19 percentage points of the first-place Chicago White Sox in the American League West.

Royals hurdle Twins

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. (AP) — Clint Hurdle, just off the disabled list and playing his first game since April 19, hit a tie-breaking ninth-inning homer Saturday night and Jim Wright and Dan Quisenberry pitched five scoreless innings of relief as the Kansas City Royals edged the Minnesota Twins 6-5.

Hurdle's homer, his third of the year, came off Minnesota relief ace Doug Corbett, 2-2, who came in to start the ninth. Wright, who picked up his first major league victory, entered at the start of the fifth and retired the first 12 batters he faced before giving up an infield single to John Castino in the ninth. Quisenberry came in and picked up his seventh save.

The Royals, winning their fourth straight game, managed only one hit in the first five innings against Al Williams and trailed 5-0 before tying the game in the sixth.

With one out, U.L. Washington broke Williams' string of 12 straight outs with a single and Willie Wilson and Amos Otis followed with singles, scoring Washington. Williams, who was hit in the chest by a line drive and had to leave his

Catfish record set at Thomas

Area lakes have a new record for catfish. Red Tefertiller, Snyder, caught a 65-pound yellow catfish on trotline with live bait May 23 at Lake Thomas.

This eclipsed the record for both Thomas and Lake Spence and emphasized that the hot streak in catfishing is continuing.

At Thomas, Billy Leatherwood, Snyder, reeled in 45 crappie from 1/2 to 1 1/2 pounds using minnows. Crappie fishing has been good to excellent in eight to 10 feet on live bait. White bass fishing has been fair to good. Channel catfishing and yellow catfishing has been good to excellent.

Blue catfish were biting best with channel catfish a close second at Spence.

Reports included: Wanoreck's Paint Creek Marina—Doug Phillips, Sterling City, 8 pound blue cat; Donny Moore, Sterling City, 14 1/2 pound, blue. Triangle Grocery—Gene Leonard, Big Spring, 5 blacks to 2 to 3 pounds on minnows. Skinny's Hillside—Ralph Blair, Robert Lee, five blues to 7 3/4, eight striped bass to eight; James Seale, Odessa, 20 channels on worms; Lloyd Wright, Odessa, and party, 49 channels to two on trotline using catfish charlie and a 13-pound striped bass on grasshopper; W.R. Bugg, Odessa, eight channel cat to three pounds using shad and a 13-striper on a striper rig.

Thanks to TV, people recognize ex-ring champ

By SCOTT OSTLER
The Los Angeles Times

HOLLYWOOD — When he goes out in public, people recognize him instantly. It's not like a couple of years ago when he was WBC welterweight champion of the world, a giant in boxing, and could walk down the street unnoticed.

Then Carlos Palomino was just a champion. Now, thanks to the magic of television advertising, he's a star.

He's the handsome Chicano who sits at a bar and tells us how he cautions his friends who come here from Mexico that it's OK to drink his brand of beer, "But don't drink the water."

"I never dreamed the commercial would have the response it did," Palomino said. "I think I'm a lot more well known now than when I was fighting. People say to me, 'You're the guy in the commercial!' Then they ask me, 'What do you play?' I've had people guess polo, tennis, soccer — everything but boxing."

Palomino retired after losing his title to Roberto Duran in June of '79. Even as a fighter he had studied acting, and now he's a star of the screen, for 60 seconds at a time, anyway. The beer commercial began running late in '79 and is still going.

HIS ACTING career shows promise. He'll be in a martial-arts adventure movie this summer, and has a smaller role in a movie with George Kennedy and Ernest Borgnine. Offers come in steadily.

He pays the bills by making personal appearances for the Miller Brewing Co., mostly in the Southwestern United States. Wherever he goes, people yell out to him, "Don't drink the water!"

Funny thing is, when Carlos first saw the script for the commercial, he thought it was too corny and tried to get it changed. The production people persuaded him to try it their way first, and the rest is ad history.

These days Palomino plays tennis, runs 50 to 60 miles a week (he ran a marathon in 3:22), studies acting and screams himself hoarse rooting for his 10-year-old son at Little League games.

Carlos will be 32 in August and has never looked back. He turned down a $350,000 fight offer from Harold Smith. He did climb in the ring for a three-round exhibition a few months ago in Tucson, Ariz. An official there, after plying Carlos with a few beers, persuaded him to box the next day.

A little less throttle means lot of conservation

BY ROD N. REELE

Throttle back slight from top speed for substantial increases in fuel economy. That's the word from editors of Motor Boating & Sailing, who report a difference of only a few hundred rpm can mean the difference between good economy and exorbitant fuel usage.

For example, a pair of 235 hp stern-drive engines running at full throttle (5,000 rpm) will burn 47 gallons of gas each hour. At 4,000 rpm it is only 29 gallons per hour. This is a savings of about $25 per hour at today's gasoline prices.

The reduction in speed that results is relatively slight, but the drop will be five per cent for each 500 rpm. If full throttle speed is 35 mph, it will be about 33 mph at 4,500 rpm and 31.5 mph at 4,000 rpm. That's a small sacrifice for such substantial savings in fuel and cash.

Research based on boat tests conducted by MB&S in recent years indicates that these percentages of fuel savings for engine-speed reduction apply to all types of planing boats or outboard engines. For displacement boats, such as sailboats operating under power, a 20 percent engine-speed reduction drops fuel consumpiton to less than half that used at full throttle...

TEXAS PARKS and Wildlife department crews have resumed experimental spraying for control of the aquatic plant at Lake Conroe. Cove areas which have been closed off by the thick plants are being sprayed with Hydrothol 191. The chemical must be applied under strictly controlled conditions to avoid harming fish populations. Fishermen are advised that the chemical can be a skin irritant, and officials recommend not fishing in the immediate area while spraying is in progress...

Despite restrictive limits, fishermen caught more than 17 tons of largemouth bass from the Fayette Power Project Reservoir near LaGrange during the first year that fishing was allowed.

A TPWD creel survey conducted from Sept. 1979 to August 1980 showed an estimated 11,111 bass weighing approximately 34,703 1/2 pounds were landed for an average of 3.18 pounds per fish. This despite a limit on anglers of three bass per day with a minimum 16-inch length. The limits were to protect smaller fish in the face of heavy fishing pressure on the new lake...

The May squirrel season was for the squirrels in 40 SE Texas counties, says the TWPD, generally suffering from a lack of interest. Some 62 hunters harvested 44 spuirrels during May 8-9 hunts. One reason for the lack of interest was the weather, which included heavy winds, rain and a tornado which levelled 75 acres of heavy timer. Just shows those East Texas hunters are easily discouraged by a little adversity...now in West Texas where men are men....

THE START and finish of Memorial Day weekend at Oak Creek Lake near Sweetwater was an outdoorsman's delight. It was what was in between had anglers and boatsmen hissing between their teeths. Sunday dawned warm and cloudy and the lake was soon loaded with holidaying seamen. By noon the storm warnings were up and the lake was cleared of boats.

As it turned out the bad weather may have been timely. Everybody in the area was out of live bait...not only that, but only the bream were biting with any regularity.

Actually, the bream, a distant cousin of the black bass, isn't all that bad if you aren't fussy. A stiff rod and a rope sized line don't provide much bream sport, but a light tackle on a flexible rod will make for a good battle and bream aren't a bad fish once on the table.

The time to bait trot lines is when a change in the weather is blewing and with a cool front last weekend, a lot of lines were baited. However, the best catch was a 34-pound yellow by Harold Kennedyl.

Beware of Giardia Lamblia invasion

Don't drink the water

By JIM PETERSON

NEW YORK (AP) — When Les Line went rafting in Arizona last summer, he found the water too tough to handle.

It wasn't that the Colorado River was too fast or furious for him. What beat him was a tiny protozoan named giardia lamblia that has invaded back country waters throughout the lower 48 states.

Because of that little creature and various bacteria, outdoorsmen can't assume that any water, no matter how crystal clear, is safe to drink.

It's a nasty disease that can continue for weeks or even months.

"The symptoms are quite disagreeable," Line said in a recent interview. "Diarrhea hits you for two or three days and then it sort of goes away only to come back again." Line also told of stomach cramps, lethargy and a weight loss of 15 pounds.

These symptoms usually make their appearance several days after the disease is contracted. Line was back at his job in New York before he began to feel sick.

LINE IS the editor of Audubon, the magazine of the National Audubon Society. After he became ill, he contacted writer Bert Newman to do an article on Giardia's disease, a piece that appears in the current edition of his magazine.

Line doesn't think he picked up giardiasis from the Colorado River. "I suspect that the Colorado has such an immense volume of water going down that the protozoans would be diluted to the point where the chances of picking up the disease would be small," he said.

He thinks he got it at a small stream during one of several side trips into the mountains.

"We're talking about the most pristine waters in the country ... streams that are not contaminated by cities or industries or farms," Line said. "The only way they could have been contaminated was by human beings who were careless in their waste disposal."

IN HIS article, "Don't Drink the Water," Newman wrote that many people who come in contact with Giardia suffer no symptoms at all, but they can become carriers of the disease. Newman said animals, including beavers, also can become carriers.

Dr. Dennis Juranek, deputy director of the parisitic diseases division of the National Center for Disease Control in Atlanta, has been studying the problem.

He said he knows of no cases where people have died because of giardiasis. "The only risk would be to small infants when diarrhea could result in dehydration severe enough to cause death," he said.

GIARDIA'S DISEASE has become enough of a problem that wildlife officials in some states have been posting warning signs. Juranek says the government doesn't know just how extensive the problem is.

"Don't assume that any water is free of Giardia lamblia or any other disease-causing bacteria," he said.

He suggests bringing water from home. If that's not practical, he suggests boiling stream water before drinking it. If that's not possible, he advises purifying the water with chlorine or iodine.

According to Juranek, mixing two drops of commerical bleach in clear water will reduce bacteria. If the water is cloudy, Juranek said you should double the amount of bleach.

If you're going to use iodine, he recommends five drops of tincture of iodine in a quart of water. Double the dose if the water is cloudy.

Yankees rookie gets 1-0 victory

CLEVELAND (AP) — Rookie right-hander Gene Nelson combined with former Midland Cub Ron Davis and Rich Gossage on a three-hitter as the New York Yankees edged Cleveland 1-0 Saturday, sending the Indians to their third straight defeat.

Nelson, 2-1, at 20 the youngest player in the major leagues, walked four and struck out two before being relieved by Davis in the sixth inning. Gossage relieved in the eighth and got the final five outs for his 13th save, tops in the majors.

Only one Cleveland runner reached third base in the game. That came in the first inning when Miguel Dilone singled and stole second. After Jorge Orta walked, Mike Hargrove hit into a double play, moving Dilone to third. He was stranded when designated hitter Pat Kelly lined out.

Nelson and Dan Spillner, 1-1, settled into a duel after New York scored a run in the first on singles by Willie Randolph and Jerry Mumphrey and Oscar Gamble's RBI-groundout.

Spillner retired the next 13 Yankee hitters and finished with a eight-hitter that included eight strikeouts.

Nelson, meanwhile, allowed just two hits through the first 5 2-3 innings, both singles by Dilone. He was replaced by Davis after walking Kelly with two out in the sixth. Gossage came on when Davis walked Dilone in the eighth. The New York bullpen ace then picked Dilone off and finished up.

Stadler seizes two-stroke lead

BETHESDA, Md. (AP) — Craig Stadler, a runner-up here last year, used three consecutive birdies to take a 2-shot lead Saturday after three rounds of the $400,000 Kemper Open Golf Tournament.

Stadler, some 40 pounds lighter than when he won two 1980 Professional Golfers' Association Tour titles, played the hilly, 7,054-yard Congressional Country Club course in 4-under-par 66.

He took a 202 total, 8 shots under par, into Sunday's final round of the chase for a $72,000 first prize.

John Cook, the baby-faced rookie who won the Bing Crosby National Pro-Am earlier this season, had a strong 67 — including five consecutive birdies — that put him in a tie for second with veteran Tom Weiskopf at 204.

Weiskopf, a three-time winner of this tournament when it was played in Charlotte, N.C., birdied the final hole — shortly after the national television cameras had ended their coverage for the day — to finish a round of 68.

It was 2 more shots back to Jim Simons, who matched par 70 for a 206 total.

The Edwards brothers, Dave and second-round leader Danny, were at 207. Dave closed with a 68 and Danny shot 73. Tom Kite, with a 68, and Beau Baugh, with a 69, followed at 208.

Tom Watson, the game's outstanding player for the past four years, made a move early in the day and, at 2 under par for the tournament, had a spot among the leaders when he played the par-5 ninth hole.

And Watson, considered by many to be the world's best putter, 4-putted, missing a 2-foot third putt. It cost him a double bogey. He rallied for a 69, however, and finished the day at 209.

Although he hit his irons with crisp authority and admitted he had one of the best ball-striking rounds of his career, Stadler was only 1 under par and tied for second when he started his decisive move on the 15th hole.

He punched a wedge shot to within 2 inches of the cup — the second time he'd got an approach that close — and tapped in for a birdie.

He scored from about 15 feet on the 16th to take the lead alone and stretched it out with another wedge that nestled some 4-5 feet from the flag on the 17th.

"Those three," he said, "turned a very mediocre round into a very good round."

Cook, 23, said he was unaware he'd scored five consecutive birdies and wasn't certain how he stood in relation to the other leaders.

Dotson 3-hits Angels, 9-0 for White Sox

CHICAGO (AP) — Rich Dotson hurled a three-hitter and Greg Luzinski slammed a two-run homer Saturday, leading the Chicago White Sox to a 9-0 victory over the California Angels and into first place in the American League West.

The triumph was the 10th in the last 12 games for the White Sox as they moved 10 percentage points ahead of the Oakland A's, who lost 6-5 in Toronto.

Dotson, 5-3, also posted his third shutout of the season and spoiled the managerial debut of Gene Mauch with the Angels.

Mauch, who replaced Jim Fregosi Thursday, saw his new club commit three errors in the third inning when the Sox scored six runs, five of them unearned.

Chicago went ahead in the first when Ron LeFlore doubled and scored on Carlton Fisk's single off loser Geoff Zahn, 5-6.

Longshot romps

CHICAGO (AP) — Hagley's Nest, a longshot challenger from Canada, wore down Top Avenger late in the stretch to score a 1¼-length decision in Saturday's $114,100 Sheridan Stakes at Arlington Park.

Boza-Edwards retains title with TKO in 13th

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Cornelius Boza-Edwards retained his World Boxing Council superfeatherweight title Saturday, battering Bobby Chacon until the challenger's manager asked that the fight be stopped after the 13th round.

It was the first defense of the title for the Ugandaborn Boza-Edwards, and after the first six rounds it all became easy.

Chacon, a former WBC featherweight champion, scored well in the first six rounds but then began tiring, and the fight belonged to Boza-Edwards from then on.

The final three rounds of the fight appeared to be almost in slow motion, as the champion put the weary Chacon on the ropes and battered him with dozens of short, crisp punches to the head and body. The tactic, obviously intended to wear down Chacon, worked well.

The win put Boza-Edwards, 129½, who fights out of London, at 31-2 with 25 knockouts. Chacon, 130, of Oroville, Calif., went to 45-6-1 with 38 knockouts.

Borg, Connors, Lloyd easy winners

Rinaldi upstages net stars

PARIS (AP) — Kathy Rinaldi, a 14-year-old Florida schoolgirl, upstaged the superstars in the French Open tennis tournament Saturday by upsetting No.8-seed Dianne Fromholtz 6-3, 7-5 and moving into the final 16.

But Rinaldi, who previously had played in only six events on the circuit and accepts only expenses, was the star of the day at Roland Garros stadium.

She had six set points against her in the second set, but kept the rallies going on the slow clay surface and waited for her experienced Australian opponent to make the mistakes.

The daughter of a Stuart, Fla., dentist, Rinaldi said she decided to play in Paris because the stars would be here and it would be good experience.

"I also thought it would be fun. I must say it is," she added.

Next month she plans to play Wimbledon, "though I have never seen a grass court in my life," she said.

Connors, the No.2 seed, crushed Jean-Francois Caujolle 6-0, 6-2, 6-0.

Bosox rally for 5 in 9th, beat Brewers 7-6 in 10th

BOSTON (AP) — Manager Ralph Houk of the Boston Red Sox rarely gives the green light to his hitters on 3-0 counts, but Dwight Evans got it Saturday and took advantage with a bang.

Evans capped a five-run ninth inning with a two-out, three-run homer to tie the score and the Red Sox went on to edge the Milwaukee Brewers 7-6 on Dave Stapleton's one-out single in the 10th.

"With the wind blowing out and (Carl) Yastrzemski on deck I decided to give Evans a shot," Houk said. "I figured that if he got the ball up, he could get it out. However, he didn't need any wind with that ball. It was hit hard."

"When it's 3-0, I'm in charge at the plate," Evans said. "If he gives me a good pitch I'll tip my hat to him. But this might just be my first career hit off that man (Rollie Fingers)."

"This park is amazing — you're never out of the ball game," Houk said, recalling Milwaukee's victory on a two-run homer in the ninth inning Friday night.

"However, when you're down 6-1 going into the ninth and Fingers is sitting out there, you don't figure to have much chance. You just have to hang in there."

"It seems like the leads are a disadvantage in this ballpark," Milwaukee manager Buck Rodgers said.

"We've been down all season and we always seem to come back," said Stapleton, whose single drove in Jim Rice from third with the winning run.

The Red Sox erupted for five runs to tie the score in the ninth.

Tigers' Morris grounds Birds

BALTIMORE (AP) — Jack Morris allowed six hits and notched his sixth consecutive victory while pitching the Detroit Tigers to a 4-1 decision over the Baltimore Orioles Saturday night.

The loss, before a Jacket Night crowd of 51,464, the third largest regular-season crowd in Baltimore history, ended a four-game winning streak for the Orioles and Detroit's four-game losing streak.

The Tigers scored a run in each of the first two innings against Jim Palmer, 3-2, who had beaten them seven consecutive times since 1976. The Baltimore starter left after the second inning complaining of tightness in his right shoulder and Sammy Stewart allowed two runs and three hits the rest of the way.

Mayberry's homer guns down Oakland for Jays

TORONTO (AP) — John Mayberry clubbed a three-run homer, his second homer of the game, and Lloyd Moseby followed with a solo shot, as the Toronto Blue Jays rallied for four runs in the eighth inning and beat the Oakland A's 6-5 Saturday.

Mike Norris, 7-3, was cruising with a two-hitter until running into trouble in the eighth inning.

Ernie Whitt led off with a walk, and one out later, Damaso Garcia reached on a fielder's choice. Barry Bonnell then reached on an error by second baseman Keith Drumright, setting up Mayberry's ninth homer of the season. Moseby then followed with his fifth of the year.

The loss was Oakland's fourth in a row and marked their 10th straight defeat on the road. After winning 17 of their first 18 games this season, the A's have gone 13-19.

The Blue Jays tagged Norris for two runs in the first inning on a double by Garcia and Mayberry's home run.

Oakland tied the score 2-2 in the third on Dwayne Murphy's double. Jeff Newman and Drumright led off with singles, and after a sacrifice by Rob Picciolo, Murphy doubled off the wall in left-center.

MARIETTA, Ohio (AP) — Jim Barletto scored on a wild pitch in the ninth inning to give Ithaca a come-from-behind, 7-6 win over North Carolina Wesleyan in the loser's bracket semifinals of the NCAA Division III World Series Saturday.

Kennedy rebuilding plan proves failure

TED BATTLES
BATTLE SCENE

Bob Kennedy's departure as Chicago Cubs executive vice president, general manager came shortly after his "we can't win" comments on TV and in a newspaper column.

Kennedy was quoted, "What difference does it make if I finish fourth, fifth or sixth? I can't win this year, or next year, either."

It prompted players to wonder, "How come he didn't get fired for saying that?"

Fan response hit the Cubs where it hurt, in the box office as many returned tickets for future games.

WHAT IT all amounted to was an admission that an ambitious five-year program for reviving the Cubs had failed, although the increase for player development had been upped from $800,000 to $3,000,000 under Kennedy.

Kennedy, in effect, was asking for three more years of patience from Cub fans, who are on record as the most patient fans in baseball. They've been waiting since 1945.

Another three years might not seem interminable in view of the past, but the Chicago organization is worse off than it was when Kennedy took over. His one trading coup appeased the masses for a time, but since then it has been a case of the Cubs getting shortchanged with fringe ball players replacing disgruntled high-salaried prima donnas, a policy that has made for inner club tranquility, but has left Chicago with the worst club in the major leagues.

With the baseball revitalization on the South Side, the Cubs' troubles couldn't have been more poorly timed.

UNDER NEW, well-heeled ownership, the White Sox, while the Cubs are rounding up a collection of Joe Strains, Ken Reitzes, Ty Wallers, Leon Durhams, have gone out and spruced up the Comiskey Park premises with established stars like Carlton Fisk, Ron LeFlore, Greg Luzinski, etc. The White Sox suddenly are contending in the American League.

The one master stroke of the Kennedy regime came in the winter of 1977 when the Cubs traded Rick Monday and palmed off Mike Garman to Los Angeles for Bill Buckner and Ivan DeJesus, the sleeper of the deal, stuck in Albuquerque because of a glut of infield talent in the Los Angeles infield. Jeff Albert, who pitched for Midland, was a third player involved.

DeJesus and Buckner are the only active regulars left from the trade.

AFTER THAT, it was all downhill. Two time batting champion Bill Madlock was traded to San Francisco for Bobby Murcer, now with the Yankees but barely, and Steve Ontiveros, now in Japan. Second baseman Manny Trillo, outfielder Greg Gross and catcher Dave Rader went to the Phillies in 1979 for catcher Barry Foote, outfielder Jerry Martin, second baseman Ted Sizemore and a couple of minor league players.

Foote and Martin were disgruntled bench warmers with the Phils. With Chicago, they became disgruntled regulars and since have been disposed of. Martin went to San Francisco for Strain and Foote went to the Yankees for a minor league pitcher. Sizemore was traded to the Red Sox for catcher Mike O'Berry, who is currently catching for Cincinnati.

However, the trade that probably hurt most of all came last winter when relief pitcher Bruce Sutter was sent to the Cardinals for third baseman Reitz and Durham. While even Sutter admitted the Cubs would be wise to trade him for some players who could strengthen the club, the Cubs should have known better than to deal with the fast-dealing Cardinals after the Lou Brock for Larry Jackson and Curt Davis, Lon Warneke, $180,000 for Dizzy Dean trades.

In trading Sutter, the Cubs got rid of a player who could turn a ball club or franchise around, but did not get a player or players who could do the same for them in return. The Cardinals simply didn't have that type of player. What the Cubs got was a reserve infielder and a hazy promise for the future in Durham.

WHAT CHICAGO did accomplish was to unload Sutter's $700,000 salary, a sum which will be lost anyway in attendance at Wrigley Field.

And while the Cubs have been busy trading for journeymen ball players, the memory sticks of the last time the Cubs contended for a pennant. That all-Star infield of Ernie Banks, Glenn Beckert, Don Kessinger and Ron Santo and outfielder Billy Williams...all products of the Cubs farm system. They built from there and supplemented it with some shrewd trades, Ferguson Jenkins, Randy Hundley, Adolfo Phillips and almost won a pennant.

Some critics contend the Cubs' farm system is a disaster area, seemingly a safe enough blanket indictment. But who knows for sure. The year the Cubs won the Texas League pennant, 1975, experts claimed Chicago had no pitching prospects in the minors. Of course, that was the year of Sutter in Midland. And only the Yankees knew about Davis at Midland a couple of years later.

Royals prove most puzzling case

By MELVIN DURSLAG
Hearst Special News Service

One baffled by the complications of his own existence can find comfort today in a cursory study of the Kansas City Royals, who offer the most puzzling case of the 1981 running.

Whereas the season had begun for the Royals with happy speculation over whether George Brett would reach .0400, it now becomes a matter of whether the Royals will reach .0400.

At the last inspection, they were playing .314, a percentage hardly befitting a club with the noble history of Kansas City last year, not to mention several years before that.

On May 23, 1980, the Royals advanced to first place in their division, and, by late August, they were rolling 20 games on top.

Coasting home by 13, they expunged the Yankees in three in the playoffs.

Coming back with essentially the same club, except for a strong pinch-hitter, Lee May, lifted from Baltimore, and a fourth outfielder, Cesar Geronimo, removed from Cincinnati, Kansas City gave you no reason to expect anything but muscle.

And what has happened is so inexplicable that you reduce to a farce any science connected with baseball.

I mean, just about by Mother's Day, two clubs in the American League West already had fired their managers -- and there was Kansas City playing .314.

The field commander of the Royals, Jim Frey, is a fine fellow who made it emanately clear last year that he knows something about managing a ball club. Certainly, he knows as much this year as he did last, making you pause to wonder whether this sport can be analyzed even slightly.

The biggest problem confronting the Royals at the start of the season was how they were going to handle the publicity crush engulfing Brett.

AP Laserphoto

Atlanta shortstop Rafael Ramirez has ball slip through his grasp as line drive proved too hot to handle.

In 1980, you'll recall, George came within five hits of batting .400. For almost a month, in fact, he floated atop that percentage, inviting a very busy life in which he found himself constantly in the company of people with microphones, cameras and ball point pens.

He accommodated all with good cheer, but decided between seasons that if he was to pursue .400 in 1981, he would have to establish rules connected with exploitation.

Temperament hitherto unknown was now detected as the momentous decision was now made that all his media business would be conducted at the ball park 30 minutes before the game and 20 minutes afterward.

And if that schedule became a burden, the time allotment would be reduced.

Injured for a spell this season and hitting noticeably below par the rest of the time, George doubtless is discovering less demand on his time, which can enhance one's rest and relaxation.

And even though he already has tapped Kansas City for a million dollar a year contract, the feeling grows he would opt again for all the inconvenience that goes with dabbling with .400.

Countless explanations have been proffered for the unaccountably slow start of Brett, but no one has ascribed his slippage to the so-called helpful surgery he underwent before the start of the season.

Tormented by hemorrhoids, he hit the hell out of the ball last year. The affliction seemed to agree with him.

Given treatment for them during the World Series, he still seemed to respond reasonably well.

But it wasn't until they were removed altogether that his bat was silenced, which goes to prove the fallacy of corrective surgery.

The fact that surgery saved the career of Tommy John didn't mean necessarily that it would bail out Brett.

Another continuing problem besetting George last year was the postgame interview in which interrogators asked:

"What kind of pitch did you hit?"

George explained to us, "I would always tell them what kind of pitch I hit -- and that was the last of it. It never appeared in the papers."

"Maybe they were asking the question just for practice," he was told.

He shrugged, making it clear that people should desist asking what kind of pitch he hit unless they aimed to print it.

Well, when a batsman is hitting under .300, he isn't troubled often with inquiries about the pitch, making life easier for the man being interviewed.

So George's gain, in a sense, is Kansas City's loss, contributing to the heartache of a team already troubled.

Rutherford opposes USAC sanction of 500

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Three-time Indianapolis 500 winner Johnny Rutherford says the United States Auto Club should no longer sanction the Memorial weekend spectacular.

"It's time (Indianapolis Motor Speedway president) John Cooper looked around for another sanctioning body," said Rutherford, one of the drivers scheduled to compete in next weekend's Rex Mays 150-mile race here.

Rutherford, in an interview with The Milwaukee Journal, said Cooper should talk with CART (Championship Auto Racing Teams) about sanctioning the Indy.

"I'm tired of (NASCAR president) Bill France sitting down there and telling Cooper not to work with the car owners in CART," Rutherford said. "Cooper needs a first-class sanctioning body like CART, and he needs it now."

He cited the dispute over the winner of this year's 500 as an example of USAC incompetence.

Bobby Unser was said to have won the race, but officials later decided Unser had passed cars while returning to the track from the pits while a caution flag was out, a rule violation. They gave Unser a one-lap penalty, making Mario Andretti the winner, but Unser is appealing the ruling.

"Bobby Unser won that race," Rutherford said. "He should do whatever he has to do to get his title back. Take it to court, all the way to the top.

Spigner produces in clutch

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Needing nine pins on his final shot to win, top-seeded Bill Spigner of Chicago came through with a title-clinching strike to defeat Mark Williams 237-235 Saturday in the $95,000 City of Roses Open bowling tournament.

Spigner collected $12,000 for his third career Professional Bowlers Association title after six years on the tour.

Spigner, 31, went into the tournament at Timber Lanes with $11,000 in winnings this year, finishing no higher than ninth in any 1981 tournament.

Williams, a second-year pro from Beaumont, Texas, collected $7,000 for second, his highest finish on the tour.

The 23-year-old Williams, who had beaten two other bowlers to reach the match with Spigner, started strongly in the final game, scoring 83 in one three-frame stretch.

Spigner converted a difficult spare after leaving a three-ten split in the eighth frame, and moved to within one pin of Williams.

Chief sanitarian leaving behind a cleaner Midland

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Jewel Smith, Midland's guardian of health for the past 3½ years, is leaving his post as chief sanitarian of the Midland City-County Health Department.

In his wake, Smith is leaving behind good rapport, a cleaner Midland, and, possibly, a better informed and healthier citizenry to his successor, Don Goodrum, 36.

Smith's approach to health is largely based on cleanliness. For instance, if a food-service manager or owner tries to weasel out of following health rules and says something such as "Is there some way we can work this out?," Smith has a ready answer:

"My response is this, 'Absolutely! Clean it up; there's no other way.'"

Smith, a 54-year-old retired U.S. Navy lieutenant commander who served in the Medical Service Corps, is leaving Midland to retire in northern California.

His replacement, Goodrum, has already left the Texas State Department of Health for which he was a food and drug inspector for a 17-county area. This week he takes charge of the health facility's 19-person staff and its $435,699 budget.

GOODRUM'S SPECIALTY with the state took a wide swath: inspecting restaurants, food warehouses and commissaries, food manufacturing plants, bottle water facilities and, down the line, sanitary landfills.

Before joining up with the state health department two years ago, Goodrum worked as a registered sanitarian for Smith. Prior to that, he taught and coached varsity sports at Stanton.

The charge of city-county health department is multi-faceted and functions to ensure personal and environmental health.

Individual care includes maternal health, child health, chronic lung diseases, infectious diseases such as sexually transmitted diseases and tuberculosis, and immunizations.

In 1980, the department held clinics on maternal health and counseled or treated 169 patients. In 98 clinics, 10 physicians recorded 933 patient visits.

Forty-five clinics on child health were conducted, and 575 children were treated or advised.

On a daily basis, the department diagnoses and treats venereal diseases. In 1980, the department treated 532 cases of gonorrhea and 21 cases of syphilis. Scabies and lice are treated daily.

The department administered 11,363 immunizations in 1980.

THE DEPARTMENT'S environmental health responsibilities includes:

—Testing private and public water sources, including wells and reservoirs.

—Inspecting the 530 food service establishments in the city through 3,444 visits by inspectors.

—Supervising private santitation systems and working with governing bodies in the controversy over Midland and Monahans draws.

—Controlling mosquitoes and checking the spread of rabies in a vector control program.

—Analyzing bacteria sampling from all private and municipal water systems in a 25-county area, doing venereal disease screening and conducting laboratory procedures for the prenatal and the well-child clinic. Last year, the department performed 32,507 laboratory procedures.

SMITH SUCCINCTLY offered his value of the concept for health departments: "We don't have small-pox."

In his closing hours — Friday was his last day on the job — Smith offered a few observations in his straightforward manner:

—Major accomplishment: "I think probably working at getting a decent facility to work at." The city-county health department now is headquartered in the city-owned former Western Clinic at 501 Andrews Highway. Formerly, the department was cramped in a dungeon-like basement area of Midland Memorial Hospital.

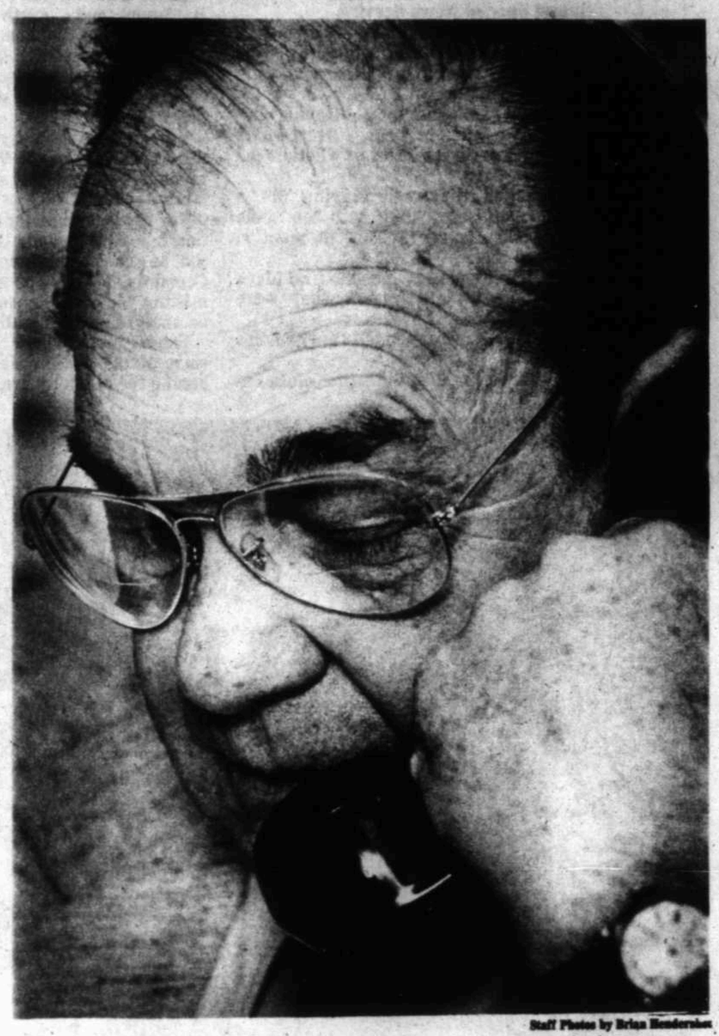

—Good rapport: "There's not a better group of folks" in referring to city-county administrators. Particularly, Smith cited the city of Midland, which obtained the old clinic for the health department and which provides the bulk of its funding. The county annually doles out $40,000 — which is "nothing," said Smith — to support the department.

—Effective health department: "That's why we have the good health department that we do; we don't have too many masters."

—Quality of Midland restaurants: "In relation to other places, excellent. You've got outstanding ones, and you've got bad ones. When you've got a half a dozen bad ones out of more than 500, that ain't bad."

—Cooperative restauranteurs: "That's due to an active health department and excellent cooperation from owners and managers of food facilities."

—Integrity of food inspectors: "They won't even take a cup of coffee off of them (resturant owners and managers)." Few try to influence an inspector's rating: "Some of them don't mean it that (as a bribe) way," said Goodrum. "Some of them do," tacked on Smith.

Jewel Smith has departed as chief sanitarian of the Midland City-County Health Department. He leaves a "good" and effective health department and in part credits that to having few masters.

—No "Sell out": "If a guy will sell himself out for a cup of coffee, he's being pretty cheap." Food handlers are never given advance notice of an inspector's visit.

—By the letter: "These health department inspectors follow the rules to the letter; there's no deviation. A lot of people think those rules are hard-nosed, but there's a reason for every one of them." And the No. 1 objection of those rules is to "deliver a clean product."

—Cleaning house: "The food service has employee problems that are staggering." And, said Smith, the basic cause is economics: "They (employers) don't pay enough..."If a person has been there two weeks, he's manager because he's been there the longest."

—Dispelling myth: Smith said he offers this response to restaurant owners and managers who say that the health department's stance on stringent rules is undermining their business: "No, I'm not ruining your business; you're ruining yourself. How can you blame me because you've got a dirty house? You did it."

—In-house pilfering: "Employee theft: It's a big thing in food service."

—FRIENDS: "Unfortunately, you can't have too many friends in the food service business if you're in the sanitarian business." Smith said he does have good friends in the food service trade, but "if they took advantage of that friendship, they wouldn't be friends."

—How good a place?: Both Smith and Goodrum noted that "a place is just as good as the managers. If they watch those people and stay on the job, you don't have any problems."

—Dilemma of draws: "I don't know," was Smith's reply to solutions for problems caused by the drainage channels. The two are Monahans Draw, which carries much of Odessa's sewage effluent south of Midland; and Midland Draw, which occasionally carries some of Midland's overflowing effluent into the same lake.

—Tap water: "The (tap) water you're drinking now is no better quality that the effluent sewage" water from the reservoir. Like people, fish, birds, waterfowl and other creatures in and around the lake water "carry diseases in their alimentary track just like you do."

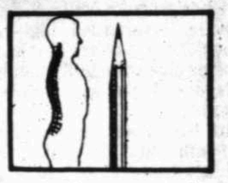

This week, Goodrum begins his chore as the health department's kingpin, although he was into the transition last week. Smith, who recommended him for the job, is confident of his ability and industry.

"It's been real busy, but they (departmental people) can handle it. But the complaints are killing us — flies, pythons, mosquitoes...."

House bill limits gold, silver sales

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Dealers in precious metals could not buy gold or silver objects from minors without their parents' written consent under a bill that passed the Texas House on Saturday.

The bill returns to the Senate for action on House amendments.

One change reduced from eight days to four days the time a dealer must hold an item before melting it down.

Local ordinances would supersede the state law in cities that have them, and often are stronger than the bill passed by the House.

The measure is a response to a wave of gold and silver thefts that followed the rapid rise in market prices for the two precious metals. Sponsors say juveniles have been among the culprits because of the ease with which they can sell items to dealers.

The bill would require dealers to record each purchase in a bound book, with a description of the article and the name, address and driver license number of the seller.

Copter crash kills six

BEAUMONT, Calif. (AP) — A medical helicopter rushing an hours-old premature infant to a hospital crashed in heavy fog early Saturday, killing all six people aboard, authorities said.

The fog and darkness prevented searchers from finding the wreckage for more than nine hours after the midnight crash, the Riverside County sheriff's office said. It was not known whether the victims had died on impact or in the hours following the crash.

Besides the infant, the victims included two doctors, a respiratory therapist, an air medic and the pilot.

The helicopter, owned by Loma Linda Medical Center, was being used by the San Bernardino Medical Center to transport the prematurely born baby to the San Bernardino facility from San Gorgonio Pass Hospital in Banning, about 20 miles away.

Charles Jervis, director of the San Bernardino Medical Center, identified the dead as Mal Cooper, 41, the pilot, of Rialto; Mark Symonds, 24, the air medic, of Loma Linda; Dr. David McKee, 26, of San Bernardino; Dr. Constance Geigerman, 36, of San Bernardino, and Linda Butler, 34, the respiratory therapist, of Rialto. Mrs. Burns identified the baby as the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Hein of Banning. The baby had not yet been named.

Cause of the crash was under investigation by the National Transportation Safety Board, a spokesman for that agency said.

Why would a rich oilman want to lose $5 million?

Proposed land swap stirring controversy and raising questions

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

A proposal to swap 200,000 acres of state-owned land for a similar sized tract owned by millionaire oilman Robert Anderson has generated a multitude of critics who suspect the ultimate loser will be the taxpayer.

Whether or not that turns out to be the case depends in large part on the appraised value of the property in question: the Anderson ranch in Presidio County for University of Texas-owned lease land in Hudspeth County.

When the issue first emerged about two weeks ago, it appeared the swap would be made without benefit of appraisal. That situation has changed in the past week, however.

In a telephone interview with the Reporter-Telegram Friday, UT Board of Regents Chairman James Powell said they were in the process of putting together panels of appraisers to conduct three separate and independent assessments of the properties' value.

"The appraisals will be done on both the surface value and mineral value of the lands," said Powell. "They will be presented for board consideration. We'll make the decision based on the commensurate value to the state."

Although numerous questions have been raised about the wisdom of a deal that would turn the Anderson Ranch into a state park that's right next door to the 750,000-acre federal park at Big Bend, the major question centers on the relative value of the two tracts.

GOV. BILL CLEMENTS' response that Anderson's property is worth $75 an acre and the university land is worth $50 raised an even bigger question: Why would a man of Anderson's business acumen be willing to lose $25 an acre?

While estimates vary, people knowledgeable in the field agree that — solely from the standpoint of ranching — Hudspeth County land is worth more than Presidio County land for several reasons.

Said veteran land appraiser Seth Woltz of Seminole: "It's my observation that the rugged terrain in Presidio makes it difficult to find cows and the presence of predators makes it hard to keep sheep and goats. If I were choosing ranch land, I'd take Hudspeth County."

Another source of concern for ranchers in the area is its proximity to the border and the resultant loss of animals to rustlers.

ANDERSON BOUGHT the property for an undisclosed price in the fall of 1961 from the Sprague estate, according to Joe Mims, general foreman for Anderson's Diamond A Cattle Co. in Roswell N.M. If it's such poor country for raising animals, why did Anderson (who could not be reached for comment) buy it in the first place?

"I don't know," said Mims. "It's really rugged. Yes, it may have been on speculation, but I wouldn't judge his intentions. It's very scenic. There are a lot of springs and some waterfalls.

"The state has wanted it as a park for years. They contacted us on it. We didn't contact them."

That contention runs counter to one source who says he's known the oilman for a long time: "Anderson's been trying to unload the ranch for years because the terrain is so difficult to maintain. But he's a billionaire. He's not trying to screw anybody."

It's no secret that Land Commissioner Bob Armstrong has long wanted the ranch for a state park. The legislature, however, has balked at providing the money to do so. If Armstrong was able to work out a trade arrangement with Anderson whereby the people of Texas would gain a park and the oil baron would be shuck of the remnants of speculation gone sour — with full mineral rights retained by the state on both tracts of land — everybody should be happy.

YET ESTABLISHING and maintaining a park that would abut Big Bend, which was established in 1944, is something that leaves skeptics scratching their heads because useof Big Bend has declined over the years.

According to Bob Huggins, public relations officer for the federal park, 456,201 persons visited it during 1976. Due in large part to the price of gasoline nowdays, that figure had dropped to 209,650 by 1980.

Asked if there was ever a time park officials considered expanding Big Bend, Huggins said: "Not really — at least not in enlarging its boundaries. There was some talk about taking a ranch that's inside the boundaries, but it never materialized."

One major critic of the deal is the Texas Cattle Raisers Association, which passed a resolution this spring calling for rejection of the proposal.

"It was a policy statement against any major land acquisition by the state unless it can be proven that a large segment of the population would benefit by it," said John Cargile, president of the organization.

"It was a general statement, but we did have the Anderson deal in mind. It raises some serious questions. The basis of our opposition is that any more park land needs to be closer to the centers of population."

Asked if the association didn't have a vested interest in trying to reduce the amount of land taken out of the potential cattle grazing pool, Cargile said: "It sets a bad precedent to trade land that was donated to the University of Texas in the mid-1800s. It would be the first time it's been tampered with."

STATE COMPTROLLER Bob Bullock has been quoted as saying the proposal "may be saddled with legal obstacles." Bullock requested an attorney general's opinion on the matter, but later withdrew the request — apparently after learning of state plans to set up a non-profit organization administered by the Parks and Wildlife Department to reimburse financially-strapped Presidio County for any taxes lost if the Anderson Ranch is turned into a park.

UT collects some $100,000 in fees from leasing grazing rights on the 200,000 acres in Hudspeth County, and Anderson reportedly pays $13,000 a year in taxes to Presidio County.

When the dust is settled, say advocates of the plan, land that might be lost to developers would instead be retained as a state park, Anderson would get better ranchland and no one would be the loser.

"That's the sum and substance of the governor's intent," said UT board President Powell, adding that the Parks and Wildlife Department could sub-lease portions of the park and the fees thus generated used to indemnify any tax loss to Presidio County.

In addition, said Powell, any revenue loss sustained by the state in giving up the $100,000 it receives from grazing leases in Hudspeth County would also be made up by the Parks and Wildlife Department and by the taxes Anderson would pay there.

"All of that would be written into the lease agreement," said Powell.

The upcoming appraisals pose yet another question: Would Anderson be willing to pay the difference if the relative property values show his land to be worth significantly less than the UT land?

"It's my understanding," said Powell, "that we'll either affirm or deny the trade solely on the basis of commensurate value. Mr. Anderson would not be given the opportunity to pay any difference."

Rising to 5,131 feet from a sea of grey that covers the desert, The Solitario's barren peaks and forbidding basin never have known permanent human occupancy for at least the past 12,000 years.

Big Bend Ranch hides lush oasis

Hidden so far within a remote box canyon that it was not re-discovered until 1970 by a topographical mapping team, Madrid Falls plummets 100 feet downward amid lush vegetation of a desert oasis.

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

BIG BEND RANCH — In the heart of the ridgebacks, gullies and buttes that comprise the majority of Big Bend Ranch lies a wilderness oasis.

Here, water cascades over a sheer precipice, sprays a mist in the air as it tumbles downward, creating a double stream shaped like a diamond against the rock face referred to as the "pedestal." A tranquil pool awaits it below, its ripples shaded by cottonwoods, willows and oaks entwined by maidenhair fern and grapevines, lending credence to its description by some as a "West Texas Garden of Eden."

In comparison to the wasteland surrounding it, Madrid Falls is that and more. For in the desert, water means life, and hope does not exist apart from it.

Beyond the box canyon Charro that winds a mile westward of the dry arroyo known as Fresno Creek, throughout the 190,000 acres of gorges, gnarled tablelands and jutting mountains seared by the Big Bend sun, lies desolation.

TWISTED PEAKS of The Solitario thrust upward 2,000 feet from the desert floor, forming the rim to a lunar-like crater eight miles in diameter that sentinels the Great Chihuahuan Desert. The Rio Grande carves a canyon through barren mesas and pinnacles, the water turned golden in the rays of the blazing sun. Agave and silver-leaf blanket the countryside in a choppy sea of grey, giving way in arroyos to rocks, boulders, jagged megaliths, all strewn like bodies on a battlefield. And everywhere, there is wilderness.

It's called Big Bend Ranch, or the Anderson Ranch, and has been variously described as remote, scenic and an enormous asset for future generations, or worthless. Add to those, "Desolation Incarnate," as many of the persons who have flown its expanses, jeeped its roads, hiked its desert trails, will verify.

Situated in the southeastern corner of Presidio County immediately west of Big Bend National Park, the ranch sprawls across 296 square miles of rugged terrain north of the Rio Grande canyons. Under normal weather conditions, it can be reached by standard-clearance vehicle by following U.S. 67 south of Marfa eight miles, Texas 169 southeast toward Casa Piedra 22 miles, and a gravel and dirt road another 34 miles toward the Mexican border.

HIGH WATER conditions in draws or damage resulting from recent rains occasionally may prove prohibitive in traversing the primitive road. A dirt runway provides access to the ranch from the air, though it necessarily is limited to small aircraft.

On the desert flatlands lie ranch headquarters, a white, Spanish-style bungalow which blends with the terrain. Its thick walls serve as insulation against the awesome heat that devastates the area in summertime, for here the mercury reaches the upper limits of thermometers, cresting at 119 degrees early last June in nearby Presidio.

The house, with its outdoor patio and covered porch, is in a lonely setting, with ridges hugging the eastern horizon and desert sweeping toward the setting sun. Yet the vast ruggedness surrounding it gives companionship of its own. For this is the land of self-discovery, where every step toward death in the desert is a step deeper into the immense sea of mystery indwelling every man. Civilization is a memory, the struggle for survival an ever-present obsession.

"A helicopter would be helpful," Sen. W E. "Pete" Snelson of Midland said in regard to viewing the ranch.

Wrong. To view by air is to miss the intensity of the maelstrom that limits ground travel in most areas to four-wheel-drive vehicles, horses and hiking boots. Roads are few, gorges and buttes many. Ranchhands in southern Fresno Canyon must rely almost solely on saddlestock for transportation, and where horse paths end, foot trails take over.

BEYOND, LIES only untrodden wasteland, unchallenged solitude.

As in The Solitario.

If ever a mountain range were aptly named, it is this island of loneliness rising from a desert ocean to a summit elevation of 5,131 feet at Fresno Peak.

But it is wasteland rising out of wasteland, devoid of the life-sustaining qualities inherent in many ranges. No alpine forest blankets its slopes. No perennial streams tumble through sheltered canyons. No springs gush forth purified waters. For its heights are barren, ravaged by the highest evaporation rate in Texas, scarred by bluffs and gullies that give no hint of life or moisture other than in tinajas — shallow depressions in rock which sometimes collect water after infrequent rainstorms.

The massive peaks that form the bizarrely symmetrical perimeter are warped, curled upward like the pages of a burning book. From an aircraft at 10,000 feet it appears as though some giant hand has ripped it apart and flung it back again. The lower "shutup" is a V-shaped gash 750 feet deep through its outer battlement, providing access to the battered interior only by jeep road or trail.

ONE'S INITIAL impression is that The Solitario is the holocaustic remnant of a volcano or result of a collision of the earth with a gargantuan meteor, for it seems unnatural to the terrain, standing alone, aloof to the desert formations and lesser mountains that fringe it.

But geologists who long have been acquainted with its unique characteristics say here is evidence of an ancient cataclysmic upthrust of the earth's crust, and to view it is to acknowledge that nothing short of cataclysm could have formed it, contorted mountains so and twisted peak after peak at the same angle.

Twelve miles to the southwest the Rio Grande at 2,400 feet slashes a gaping chasm known as Colorado Canyon through mountains and mesas. White water sweeps over boulders, crashes against 800-foot rock walls. River runners flock here in spring and autumn, claiming the rapids are faster, the experience more sensual, than even in Big Bend National Park's Santa Elena Canyon 40 miles downstream.

Camino del Rio, the highway which has received national publicity for its course through landscape of such rugged beauty, follows the snaking river to the mouth of the canyon, where it veers away only to skirt it again several miles downstream.

Midway through the gorge, a crevasse called Closed Canyon is cleft entirely through a mountain of the Bofecillos as though a gigantic sword has descended on it, split it in twain. It is awe-inspiring, as are many of the side canyons and precipices along the 28-mile stretch of river which serves as the southern boundary of the ranch, as well as the nation.

An irony exists here, for the water which slowly is destroying the land has failed to make an appreciable impact on a desert where a supply of moisture is the absolute necessity for survival. Only a few feet beyond the carrizo, salt cedar and seep willow which crowd the bank, the creosote and sotol of the vast Chihuahuan Desert again reign supreme. They remain unchallenged throughout Big Bend Ranch, except for that oasis that lies hidden in remote Charro Canyon several hours by four-wheel-drive vehicle and trail from the nearest true road.

TIRES SLIP, grind against gravel, sling rocks to the side in descending into the upper reaches of Fresno Canyon, a mile-wide valley separating The Solitario from the Bofecillos. Along its floor lie periodic signs of Indian occupation countless eons ago — pictographs, grinding stones, arrowheads. Low bushy trees infest certain areas of the dry arroyo, thicken in the presence of a solitary spring along a hillside.

At the mouth of Charro Canyon, the jeep becomes useless. Hiking boots are donned to seek an ill-defined trail which winds westward through ever-increasing foliage of cottonwoods and oaks. The sound of running water gradually intensifies, echoing between narrowing gorge walls. The trail disappears, moss-covered rock replacing it.

A stream of water surfaces, cascades over a slight bluff. Fifty yards further, the falls suddenly appear, a streak of white in the morning sunlight plummeting 100 feet downward into the sheltered pool frequented by the Madrean cliff frog and its relative, the canyon tree frog.

Moisture. Coolness. Life. The splash of water against water bears testimony that here the three exist as one.

Above the rim, 100 vertical feet away, the desert land unfurls into the distance.

Photography exhibit to close

Today is the last day for "The Photographer's Hand" exhibit which has been on display at the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave.

The exhibition features the works of 16 artists from across the United States. Organized in part by the International Traveling Exhibition Service, the show will travel to about 15 locations including museums in Brazil and Japan.

Early photographers hand-manulipated photographic images by touching up imperfections by hand. Contemporary artists are now creating new methods to increase the potential of photography. Techniques shown in this exhibition include hand-coloring the print, scratching, drawing and painting on the negative, and recording images and abstract compositions on hand-made negatives. The hand-worked photographs range widely in color, scale, technical approach and subject matter.

Another exhibition at the museum which will close shortly is the "Confluences of Tradition and Change-24 American Indian Artists." The last day for this show is June 7.

Museum hours are Monday through Saturday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Sunday from 2 to 5 p.m.

Flannery says she's been lucky

By FRED YAGER
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Although she's played doctors, lawyers and high-powered businesswomen, Susan Flannery, last seen on "Dallas" as the woman who out-conned J.R., leads a more interesting life than her screen characters.

Off camera, the blonde-haired Irishwoman who plays the part of public relations consultant Leslie Stuart is a licensed pilot, a gourmet cook and recently began developing movie projects which she plans to produce and eventually direct.

"I've been lucky," she said. "I've been able to play strong, liberated women compared to what the average actress gets to play. Even this role on 'Dallas' is evil, dastardly and mean.

"She's a very conniving woman and very much the match for J.R. Ewing," she added. "You hardly ever get to see women being unethical or cunning on television. Usually if they are they're psychopathic."

For eight and a half years, Miss Flannery acted in the daytime soap opera, "Days of Our Lives" for which she won an Emmy as outstanding actress in a daytime series. And she stressed that at no time, did she ever have to play somebody's wife.

"I'd rather give up acting than play those kind of roles," she explained. "I'm not trying to sound like a flag-waving feminist, but they're just boring."

BOREDOM HAS NEVER been a part of Susan Flannery's life. From the time she was nine-years-old, she was playing war games at the New Jersey end of the Lincoln Tunnel.

"We used to climb down the hill by rope and sneak up on the toll men," she recalled with glee. "Some of the guys would play along with us and actually played dead when we pretended to shoot them. The trouble was, we'd usually start playing around the afternoon rush hour and this didn't go over very well with the motorists."

Although an estimated 400 million people in 70 countries watch "Dallas," Miss Flannery still is recognized from her daytime series.

"When you're in their homes five days a week, 52 weeks a year, they start to think of you as either part of the family or the Walter Cronkite of daytime television," she said with a chuckle.

With this season's "Dallas" behind her, Miss Flannery said she plans to take some time off before getting back to work on her independent projects.

"Every now and then, I have to take some time off to grow, travel and do some thinking," she said. "When you work every day, all you do is memorize other people's creativity and spout it out."

WHEN SHE RETURNS home to California, one of her first goals is to find a movie of the week to produce before the anticipated director's strike begins in July.

"I really want to produce and direct a western," she said. "I still think they are the only true American art form and really wonderful to tell a story through. But, you need a good script to start with and if you don't have that, nothing's going to get any better. Michael Cimino (who wrote and directed "Heaven's Gate") found that out.'

Discussing her profession, the New York-born actress emphasized that most people making a living at this craft achieved success through luck and perserverence.

"It's not always talent with getting a role," she noted. "Often it's personality or something that comes across on a screen that people enjoy watching."

SIN begins nightly news show

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Spanish International Network, the nation's only full-time Hispanic TV system, launches the first national newscast for the Spanish-speaking Monday evening.

The newscast, "Noticiero Nacional SIN," will be broadcast live for a half-hour each weekday, and is expected to be carried by most of SIN's 112 TV and cable system affiliates across the country.

The advertiser-supported program will be broadcast at 6:30 p.m. in each time zone except the Central, where it will be shown at 5:30. The first edition Monday evening will feature "a statement by President Reagan commemorating the new enterprise," SIN said.

"This is commercial television's first national newscast produced by and for Hispanics in the United States," said Frank Marrero, SIN's head of network production. "Utilizing the most modern, state-of-the-art satellite technology, our goal is to link Spanish U.S.A. by reporting news of particular interest to Hispanics from wherever it happens — throughout the nation, the continent and the world."

The newscast will be distributed by domestic satellite along with SIN's other Spanish-language programming. Anchored by Guillermo Restrepo, the program will be based in Washington using the production facilities of WHMM-TV, a new non-commercial TV station opened last year by Howard University.

DeLuise changing form

By BOB THOMAS
Associated Press Writer

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Moviegoers will be seeing a lot of Dom DeLuise this summer, perhaps less so in the future. He's dieting.

The rotund comic can be viewed in the nation's theaters in two of his wilder portrayals: as a gross emperor of the Roman Empire in Mel Brooks' "The History of the World, Part I"; as Burt Reynolds' racecar mechanic and part-time Captain Chaos in "The Cannonball Run."

In both films he appears at his top weight of 260 pounds. When he appeared for an interview at the 20th Century-Fox Administration Building, he had dipped to 245.

"I hope I can reach 200 pounds, maybe 180," he said.

But will a slender Dom DeLuise still get as many laughs?

"I think so," he replied tentatively. "But then, you don't really know. It's like when I asked my psychiatrist: 'If you cure me, will I still be funny?' He said, 'I believe you will be.' That's not very reassuring at $90 an hour."

"A lot of what I want to accomplish is tied up with self-esteem and the loss of weight," he reflected. "When you're feeling good about yourself and your relationship to your family, you have a better chance of achieving your goals.

"I have worked a lot in several fields — movies, television, stage, nightclubs — but lately I've taken time off. I want time to think about my own worth and where I wanted to go. You can avoid thinking about those things by working constantly.

"Jonathan Winters gave me some good advice: 'Take time out to be with your children.' I've done that. I didn't want to wake up some day and find they were 16 and I really didn't know them.

"The kind of movies I want to do are like the old Frank Capra films — schmaltzy and full of heart. If I feel good about myself, that will come out on the screen. If I don't..."

Anticipating his slimmer, trimmer self, DeLuise is preparing a musical to star himself at Avco Embassy. Meanwhile, this summer he is appearing with two of his best buddies. He related how he met them:

"Before I met Mel, I loved him. Then one day he called me and asked me to meet him at the Beverly Hills Hotel. We talked for four hours — about our fathers, about being Jewish and Italian, about everything. He was preparing 'The 12 Chairs' and he said if he couldn't get Peter Sellers for the role of Father Theodore, he wanted me. Fortunately, he couldn't get Sellers."

"I met Burt when I appeared on the Johnny Carson Show and Burt was on the dais," said DeLuise. "I did an imitation of him getting up in the morning — looking at himsef in the mirror and ending up in the centerfold pose, though in my case I had my clothes on.

"The next day I got a telegram: 'Dear Dom, Will you please leave me alone? Love, Burt.' We've been friends ever since."

Ewings just tip of iceberg

By JAY ARNOLD
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — You may think J.R. Ewing, the villain of CBS' runaway hit, "Dallas," is merely an outrageous concoction dreamed up by Hollywood writers. The Media Institute believes otherwise.

In a new study called "Crooks, Conmen and Clowns: Businessmen in TV Entertainment" the Washington-based, business-supported research concern says that dastardly business executives beholden to neither God nor Constitution are the norm on prime time television.

Among the study's conclusions:

—Over half of all corporate chiefs portrayed on television commit illegal acts ranging from fraud to murder.

—45 percent of all business activities on television are portrayed as illegal.

—Only 3 percent of television businessmen engage in socially or economically productive behavior.

—Hard work usually is ridiculed on television as "workaholism" that inevitably leads to strained personal relationships.

"We were surprised by such heavy emphasis on businessmen as crooks," says Leonard J. Theberge, president of the institute and editor of the study.

The study grew out of the Media Institute's primary function — monitoring TV news coverage of business and economics. Unlike the entertainment survey, Theberge says his group has found little anti-business bias in network news broadcasts.

Among the Media Institute's 300 individual and corporate members are Mobil Oil, Westinghouse, General Electric and 20th Century-Fox.

Theberge says the study reviewed 200 episodes from 50 programs between December 1979 and April 1980 on all three major networks.

"The small-business men are portrayed as social climbers, buffoons, foolish; the big-business man only seems to have time for criminal activities," Theberge says.

"The murderous, duplicitous, cynical businessman is about the only kind of businessman there is on TV adventure shows, just as the cunning, trickster businessman shares the stage with the pompous buffoon businessman in situation comedies."

Relaxing over a morning cup of coffee are, from left, Ethel (Pat Griffith), Charlie (John Phillips) and Norman (Glen Thomason) in this scene from the current Midland Community Theatre production of Ernest Thompson's "On Golden Pond." The play is set for nine shows, closing on June 13. Reservations may be made by calling 682-4111, or going by the theater at 2000 W. Wadley Ave.

Midland Theatre's production of play a 'genuine' delight

Death is imminent. At least, Norman Thayer has decided so.

And Norman suffers from what most are guilty of — projection. Projecting his life into yesterday and tomorrow, he almost misses out completely on the present, which is the only time he has to actually live. Almost.

Ernest Thompson's "On Golden Pond," currently onstage at Theatre Midland, tells the story of an aging couple, Norman and Ethel; their grown daughter, Chelsea; her fiance, Billy; and his son, Bill. The setting is Norman and Ethel's summer home at Golden Pond, Maine, a place filled with the bittersweet memories of days gone by. The others join them for Norman's birthday — his 80th.

When informed that his daughter and her fiance are coming for the event, Norman, who has already said "I'm on borrowed time as it is," replies, in his usual dour but witty manner, "I don't want crowds of people standing around watching me grow older."

ETHEL IMPLORES him to be nice and he replies: "I will be the perfect host. I will overwhelm them with my charm."

She shakes her head and says: "That's what I'm afraid of."

And overwhelm (actually intimidate) is one of Norman's more skillfully-developed defense mechanisms. He does it so well, he isn't even aware he's doing it.

When Norman tells Billy, age 14, "Oh, we're practically twins," he is speaking with more truth than he would probably care to admit.

But as gruff-spoken, hard-headed, and willful (the list could go on and on) as Norman is, he is quite real and above all human. Inside, he's a tender, bark's-worse-than-his-bite man.

And he's funny.

As one audience member was overheard saying to another, "He's as funny as you are."

Which is what makes this play so delightful. It is genuine. While making the audience laugh at its funny lines, of which there are many, and the plight of its personalities, it speaks to the hearts and minds of those it entertains.

IT SPEAKS OF LOVE; not the hot-pants variety, but the lasting, understanding, accepting, timeless form of which man is capable. And it speaks of living fornow, enjoying each day and age for what it offers.

"On Golden Pond" won the Broadway Drama Guild's "Best Play" Award in 1979. It is a first for the 32-year-old Thompson, with his next, "West Side Waltz," scheduled for a Broadway opening this fall.

Midland Community Theatre's production, which will run through June 13, is directed by the theater's executive director, Don Bachmann. The stage manager for the production is Enid Phillips.

The cast includes Glen Thomason as Norman; Pat Griffith as Ethel; John Phillips as Charlie Martin, the mailman who is Chelsea's childhood sweetheart; Gloria Stephenson as Chelsea; Don Stroud as Billy Ray Jr.; and Jim Hicks as Bill Ray Sr.

All do an admirable job in their respective roles with stellar performances turned in by Phillips and Stroud.

Both appear relaxed and completely believable onstage as the characters they are portraying. Their delivery is in character at all times.

Occasionally, the others appear to be a little nervous, a condition not out of the ordinary on opening night.

Such was the case with Mrs. Griffith. She appeared to be a touch nervous, occasionally overplaying her lines and mannerisms. Otherwise, she was quite on target in her portrayal.

All deliver their lines with conviction. The only time when this was not completely the case occurred when Hicks spoke with Norman. Once again, it could have been opening night jitters, but it did seem he needed a little more inflection in his voice. Aside from that, Hicks did a respectable job.

At times, Ms. Stephenson's posture was somewhat rigid as if she wereuncomfortable onstage. Otherwise, the inflection in her voice when she spoke was genuine, with the overall effect of her portrayal being one of authenticity.

IT IS DIFFICULT to portray age accurately without overdoing or underdoing the role. Although Thomason does an estimable job of portraying Norman, delivering doses of Norman wit in a timely fashion, the audience is aware that he is younger than the character he is depicting.

Two very small suggestions come to mind to help create a lifelike impression onstage. It might add to the feeling of the place having been closed for a year, if Norman blew or wiped dust off the game and books he picked up from the shelves during the first scene. Also, the tackle boxes, supposedly full of all the goodies anglers deem necessary, sounded empty.

The set looks authentic, demonstrating that volunteers had spend many hours constructing it. Also, the clothing each thespian wore was appropriate and helped establish their respective personalities.

All in all, the play was very well done. The audience certainly loved it.

Perhaps one audience member summed the evening up best when as the curtain fell on the last scene, she said, almost under her breath to herself, "That was good."

And it was.

Wounded goose escapes pursuers

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Gertrude, the Canada goose with an arrow lodged in its thigh, was in hiding Saturday and game officials said they feared the wound and attempts to capture the bird may be weakening it.

"We don't know where she is right now. She disappeared yesterday afternoon, and is hiding someplace," John Nelson, a spokesman for the state Department of Natural Resources, said Saturday. "The minute we do hear something we'll get out there and try to capture her."

Gertrude, named by DNR wardens, has evaded all attempts at capture for three weeks. Officials want to nab Gertrude so the 20-inch section of arrow can be removed from its thigh.

Gertrude has refused drugged bait — and flew past wardens who tried to trap it in a cannon net, a weighted snare thrown by a modified rifle.

On Friday, two wardens enlisted 3-year-old Kimberly Anne Gotowski to offer the bird drugged bait, because Gertrude had been accustomed to feedings from neighborhood youngsters. The bird stll would't take the bait.

Residents of suburban Brookfield have helped authorities keep track of the bird's movements, and Nelson said he was confident that Gertrude would be sighted again.

Although Gertrude can still fly, Nelson said the pressure of being chased and the arrow wound "is putting some stress on her. The combination of the two must be tiring her out."

DNR officials also said infection from the arrow wound might be weakening Gertrude.

"The general consensus is that she is getting weaker," said Doug Hoskins, a DNR warden. "I'm not sure I agree with that, but if that is the case, it may be a matter of a day or two before somebody can actually get up to her and pick her up."

Nelson said the cannon net would be used again the next time Gertrude is sotted.

Use of a tranquilizer gun, which some DNR officials had mentioned as a possible way to bring Gertrude down, is not being considered because the drug dosage in the dart cannot be controlled and the shot could kill the goose, Nelson said.

DNR officials had not determined who shot the bird. Wisconsin's hunting season for Canada geese is in the fall.

Grateful Dead alive and well

By MARY CAMPBELL
AP Newsfeatures Writer

Guitarist-singer Jerry Garcia sounds as happy talking about the 15-year-old Grateful Dead as if he were a contented husband being interviewed on his wedding anniversary.

He and Bob Weir and the late Ron McKernan, called Pigpen, were in groups in San Francisco before. It was 1966 when the name was changed to Grateful Dead, for a type of ballad collected by Francis Child, and the first record made for Warner Brothers. In 1973 the group formed Grateful Dead Records, then in 1976 signed with Arista. The new LP, "Reckoning," on Arista, is a two-LP set of acoustic music, out this spring. It'll be followed in June by a two-LP set on electric instruments.

Both were recorded during 15 shows in the Fox Warfield Theater in San Francisco and eight shows in Radio City Music Hall in New York last Septmber and October.

Garcia says, "We found ourselves in the rare position of having more than enough really excellent stuff. In the past our live recording has been like not really getting it. The good nights we didn't record. This is the first time we've been able to escape that particular black cloud."

Fans have been asking for acoustic music, Garcia says. "We played acoustic in 1969, for about a year. We stopped doing it in the '70s because of technical problems. If you had a few acoustic instruments and electric at the same time, the miking was different.

"Since then, there has been a whole new generation of acoustic-electric instruments. Guitars have electric pickups in them and retain an acoustic sound. You don't need a microphone for them; you plug them directly into the public address system. And you don't have problems of competing with other instruments and feedback problems."

Garcia says, "On these concerts we did a little of everything we've always done. The acoustic thing is really a style, not a different form.

Fortifying a city's culture

Los Angeles Times Photos by George Rose

Mark Kasky, director of the Fort Mason Foundation, is proud of the role his group has taken in helping convert the former military outpost on San Francisco Bay into a community focal point and cultural center.

By SAM KAPLAN
The Los Angeles Times

SAN FRANCISCO — A rare demonstration of innovative planning has transformed the pier area of a 130-year-old unadorned Army base here into this city's new, vibrant cultural center.

Once the main point of embarkation for American forces in the Pacific, the base known as Ft. Mason has become a national model for the imaginitive and successful recycling of surplus military facilities.

It also is another example of this city's sensitive efforts to breathe new life into old buildings for the public to use and enjoy while creating an important focal point for the region. Los Angeles has much to learn from the lesson.

Bordering the bay, the fort's former barracks and warehouses have been converted into various multi-use spaces for classrooms, workshops, galleries, offices, studios and a theater, bookstore, coffeehouse, conference hall, restaurant and bakery. The resulting symbiotic relationships lend a sparkle to the center.

The conversions to date of the center's total space of 300,000 square feet within five buildings have cost $1.7 million, almost all of which has come from foundation, corporate and private donation. More construction is planned as the demand for the center's varied activities continues to increase. Nothing breeds success like success.

Once a point of embarkation for American forces, Ft. Mason has become a national model for the recycling of military facilities.

From 8 in the morning to midnight the center is alive with activities ranging from, among other things, classes in acting, dancing, singing, drawing, ceramics and writing to workshops in sensory awareness, childbirth preparation, stress management, energetics and the martial arts. There also is a constant schedule of lectures, performances and happenings.

The center is a veritable cultural smorgasbord that within the last year attracted some 1.1-million persons, according to the Ft. Mason Foundation. The foundation is a nonprofit citizens organization formed in 1976 to renovate, operate and promote the center under an agreement with the National Park Service.

The 68.5-acre fort was added to the sprawling Golden Gate National Recreation Area (GGNRA) in 1972 after local groups had vociferously protested proposals before the federal General Services Administration to sell or trade the land to real estate interests for private housing developments. The fort had been in disuse since the mid-1960s when troops were put on airplanes to the Pacific instead of boats.

The Park Service converted the upper acreage and buildings of the fort into the headquarters for the GGNRA, but did not know exactly what to do with the 13-acre pier area of old warehouses and barracks. Meetings with community leaders followed more meetings as no less than about 160 groups clamored to lease buildings for everything from acting studios to yoga clinics.

"We had these buildings we wanted to put into some form of people-use, but really didn't want to operate them," recalls William J. Whelan, GGNRA general superintendent. "It would have been a no-win situation if we had, with groups accusing us of political favoritism or censorship if we didn't allow certain uses. Finally, we hit upon the idea of leasing it (at no cost) to a nonprofit foundation made up of a broad case of citizens to oversee the operation."

The guidelines agreed to by the Park Service and the foundation were that the area be developed as a "cultural, educational and recreational center," offering free and low-cost activities to the broadest spectrum of the region's residents and visitors. And that is what the foundation has been doing for the last five years.

The inclusion of such facilities for such uses in the national park system has been attacked by Interior Secretary James G. Watt as a perversion of the system. He has called them "city playgrounds" available to local residents, but financed by taxpayers throughout the country.

Whelan answers that the GGNRA and center are "constructive places for leisure time use, meeting the needs of people who can't afford to get to 'rural playgrounds,' like Yellowstone." Foundation director Marc Kasky adds that Bay Area residents also are taxpayers and deserve such benefits as Ft. Mason, "and, besides, the center's operation is completely self-supporting."

Under the foundation's umbrella, 43 nonprofit organizations operate within the center on one-to three-year leases while hundreds of other groups rent out space on an ad hoc basis for specific events. These have included arts and crafts fairs, carnivals, conferences, exhibits, filmings, theater productions and, generally, "anything that reflects the cultural diversity of the Bay Area," says Kasky. Some 60 organizations are on a waiting list for permanent space.

Bordering the bay, the fort's former barracks now house such facilities as a theater, bookstore, coffeehouse, conference hall, restaurant and bakery.

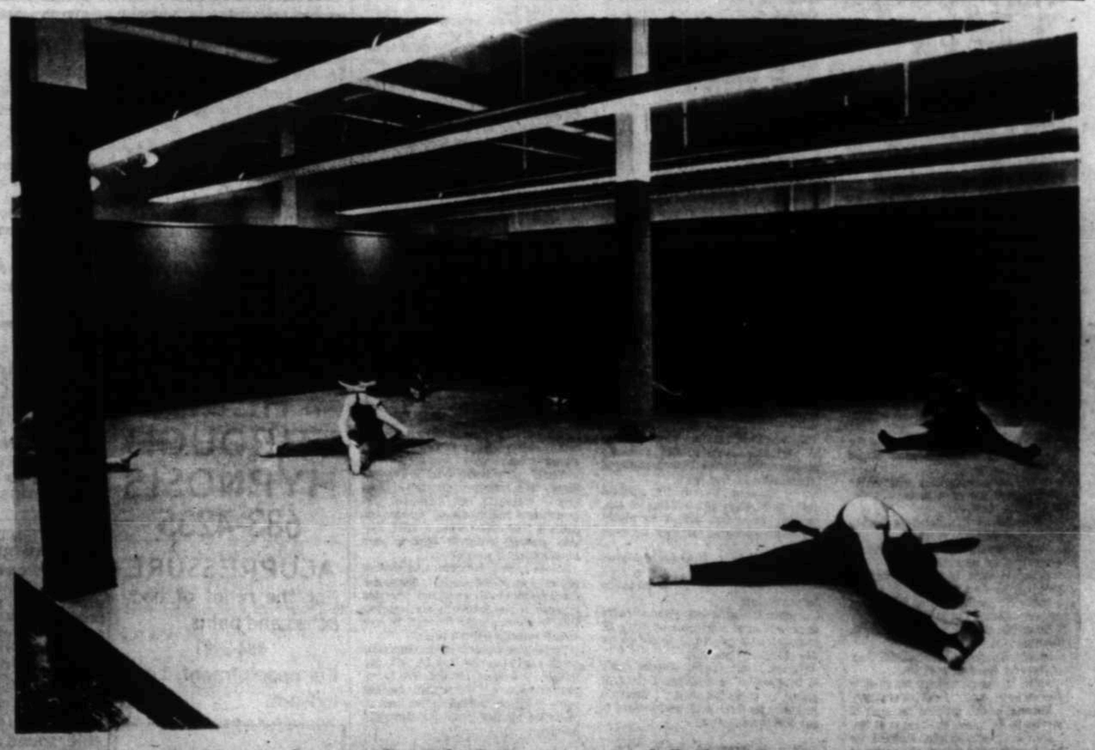

Part of the attraction for the organizations is that rents average about 28 cents per square foot a month, which is a fraction of what comparable space would cost in a private commercial building. Parking also is free to tenants and visitors. To qualify for space a group must be nonprofit and offer some benefits to the public free or at a minimal cost.

Among the current varied residents of the center is a contemporary crafts gallery, an art workshop, the Blue Bear School of Music, the San Francisco Chess Club, the Ensemble of Stanislavsky Theater Artists, the Media Alliance, the Oceanic Society, the Magic Theater, the San Francisco Bay Area Dance Coalition, the Friends of the River and the San Francisco Arts and Letters Foundation.

To attract such groups, the Ft. Mason Foundation had to overcome the affliction among some of an "edifice complex," which is the desire to create a distinctive building, some say monument, for their endeavor. It is a common disease among cultural groups. But the low rents, ambiance and the promise of the foundation to promote the activities of the center eventually won the groups over. Though the center's functional buildings may not be as attractive as this city's new symphony hall, they work for the people who use them.

Friends of the River, a non-profit activist group dedicated to the preservation of the Stanislaus River in Northern California, uses office space at Fort Mason. There are 43 such groups leasing space at the center and hundreds of others vying for remaining rental space for specific events, available on an ad hoc basis.

Members of a dance class go through their paces in a converted wharehouse at Fort Mason, now part of San Francisco's Golden Gate National Recreation Area. The center, open daily from 8 a.m. to midnight, is used for a variety of educational, cultural and recreational activities and was begun when residents protested its sale to private developers.

Budget battle splitting congressional Democrats

By CLIFF HAAS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — As Congress tries to make good on the unprecedented spending cuts promised in the 1982 budget guideline drawn to President Reagan's specifications, House Democrats are split on how much of a fight they should make to restore money for social programs long championed by the party.

The $695.4 billion blueprint adopted by Congress earlier this month requires 15 House committees and 14 Senate committees to revise or eliminate existing programs within their jurisdictions to achieve about $35 billion worth of cuts for next year.

A solid Republican majority in the Senate is expected to have little trouble making the cuts, although members of the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee have been at odds over administration proposals to consolidate a variety of programs into block grants which would give money directly to state and local governments.

IN THE HOUSE, Democrats, who hold a majority on paper and run the committees, face the same intricate process as the Senate, but also have a vow by House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. to restore billions of dollars for social programs facing cuts.

A number of O'Neill's colleagues say such a strategy would be a mistake politically and could doom the congressional budget process.

But O'Neill, the top-ranking elected Democrat in Washington, has said members of his party have a duty to protect the social programs Democrats have built over the years.

WHILE SOME liberal Democrats share O'Neill's view, many of the more conservative members of the party, who joined with outnumbered Republicans to give Reagan a spending plan that accomodates the deep budget and tax cuts he wants, are commited to the budget reductions.

Rep. William V. Alexander of Arkansas, the deputy Democratic Whip, suggested that the speaker's liberal views on social programs are not shared by a majority of House members — Democrats or Republicans.

"There's actually a conservative majority in Congress, not a Democratic majority," Alexander said. "To ignore it doesn't deal with it."

Other Democrats say the credibility of the budget process is at stake.

Under the so-called "reconciliation" process, the committees must reconcile existing laws that authorize various programs to conform with budget policy as reflected in the spending blueprint.

THE PLAN ADOPTED earlier this month calls for the panels to complete work by June 12 and report the savings back to the House and Senate Budget committees, which will assemble the cuts into a single omnibus package for approval by the House and Senate.

This is the first time Congress has gone on a budget-cutting spree of this sort. Last year, Congress used the reconciliation process for the first time to save about $8.2 billion in 1981 spending.

But that effort involved far fewer committees than are involved now, and more than half the savings resulted from measures to increase revenues. Nearly all the savings currently mandated will come from program cuts.

So far, "the vast majority of the committees are well on their way and I think are going to meet the targets," said Rep. Leon E. Panetta, D-Calif., who heads the House Budget Committee's task force on reconciliation.

"Most of the chairmen have indicated they want to achieve those goals," Panetta said.

If they don't, the Budget Committee will do the work for them.

"If the committees fail to meet their targets then, obviously, the Budget Committee has the option of recommending specific savings in those instances in order to bring them up to their target... If a committee substantially fell below their target we certainly would be doing that," Panetta said.

SPECIFICALLY, O'Neill has said he wants to restore money for programs such as student loans and school lunches.

Some Democrats say it may be appropriate when the omnibus bill reaches the House floor for only a single amendment to restore some money for social programs.

Panetta suggested that such a move would reflect a growing mood on the part of many Democrats that all they now can do is "present a clear cut option to whatever the administration is proposing and then vote on those up or down with the sense being that you can at least say you stood for something that was better."

"You can't just simply wipe out those programs without at least having a shot on the floor," Panetta said.

HOUSE DEMOCRATS met privately last week to discuss the issue, but participants said no decisions were reached.

"As best as you could tell from the debate," Panetta said, "most members do feel that they want to implement reconcilation pursuant to the resolution that was adopted.

Housing Authority to hear report on revenue bond program progress

An update on the progress of the bond program for construction of apartments will be submitted by Harry Clark to the Housing Authority of the City of Midland when the panel meets at 2 p.m. Wednesday. The meeting will be held in City Hall Council Chambers.

Clark, who is chairman of the Housing Authority, also is spearheading the move for the revenue bond program. If enacted according to plan, the program should provide the funds at lower interest rates for developers to construct apartments. When completed, these apartment rents should be in line with others in Midland.

Also on the agenda is review of a discussion Housing Authority officials had with representatives of the Department of Housing and Urban Development over replacement of screen doors at Hillcrest Manor. Hillcrest is a rent-subsidized apartment complex for low-income elderly and handicapped persons.

A report will be made on the status of the revised operating budget for the fiscal year ending June 30.

GEOLOGISTS AND GEOPHYSICISTS
San Francisco

Sohio Petroleum Company's share of Alaskan oil production, (nearly 700,000 B.P.D.), results in an impressive cash flow. But the Prudhoe supply will begin to decline within this decade. This fact gives our exploration effort a very specific focus; we are committed to finding new oil reserves to replace Prudhoe.

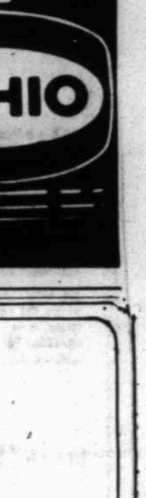

We have the financial resources to fund a first-rate exploration program. But the key to our success lies in our ability to attract explorationists of the highest technical quality and geoscience vision.

We are young and growing and hungry. We'll put you and your technical skills to a severe test. And your promotional opportunities will be directly tied to your skills and eontribution.

Sohio's Western Region Exploration Office in San Francisco has an immediate need for top GEOLOGISTS and GEOPHYSICISTS with 4 or more years of experience. You will work on Exploration project teams for Alaska and the Pacific Coast. Your acreage evaluation and prospect generation studies will lead to land acquisition and exploitation.

We offer the opportunity to live in the Bay Area and work in San Francisco, one of the most beautiful cities in the world. And we'll make it easy for you to move with a generous relocation package. If you'd like to join the Sohio adventure, send your resume to Frank Wood, Sohio Petroleum Company, #94619, 100 Pine Street, San Francisco, CA 94111.

19 Business Opportunities

You Know It's Worth $2,500 To Become One.
The only thing stopping a lot of good truckers from becoming owner/operators is the tractor cost. That's why Aero-Mayflower developed a new tractor lease program. It's a way for owner/operators to get started. All it takes to begin is $2,500. As an owner/operator with Mayflower you'll get:
1. 56% of the line haul ($560 out of every $1,000.)
2. If the fuel goes up, so does your fuel surcharge.
3. Training (if you need it) at our expense.
4. Your own business with a very successful company behind you.
We'd like to tell you more. Call 1-800-428-1220 (in INDIANA call 1-800-382-1212) between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. Eastern Standard Time.

By WANDA MOUTON
Lifestyle Editor

A lot depends on its success, but anyone can make his/her entertaining a professional affair, said Lola Igou, registrar/course coordinator at the Permian Basin Graduate Center.

Ms. Igou is a native South African who has lived in Europe and traveled widely. Being exposed to many different cuisines has also helped her to become a successful party giver and gourmet cook.

She conducted a course at the Graduate Center this week called "The Pleasure of Your Company," a one day seminar on how to plan a party.

Ms. Igou gave advice on overall planning, menu preparation, serving hints, tray preparation, floral arrangements and choice of wines. Several resources from the community also spoke.

"Entertaining thoughtfully takes time," she said. Here are some of her tips for successful party-giving:

● Be yourself.

● Give as much attention to party atmosphere as food itself. "Success of your party depends as much on the atmosphere as the food," she said.

● Be relaxed. "Give the illusion that things are under control," she advised. "If you are constantly jumping up and down to fetch things, this will make your guests nervous."

● Decide how many guests you will invite.

● Decide what type of party you will give. "There are as many kinds of parties as people themselves," said Ms. Igou.

● Check how many people your house will accommodate.

● Make a triangular route to the front door, the bar and your food area. "This will avoid crowd congestion."

● Use a few small tables and create an easy flow for the food line.

● Use a balanced menu, considering texture, nutrition, taste, color, etc. "For example, a combination of colorless dishes using cauliflower, creamed potatoes and chicken breasts in wine sauce is blah and boring," she said.

● Prepare a shopping and buying list.

● Put plans for all your party preparations on paper. "And don't plan to do anything the afternoon of your party that night, said Ms. Igou. "That is a time of relax."

● Keep a list on record for each party of all menus used, who has been invited, which guests, etc. "This will help in future party planning."

● Don't forget to make a list of the clothes and accessories you plan to wear for the party. Do this early so that repairs can be made, clothes dry cleaned or taken out of storage.

● Well in advance of the party, stock up on party accessories. These can include ashtrays, cocktail napkins, bathroom tissues and soaps, corkscrews, bottle openers, etc.

Mrs. Igou gave course participants an entertaining quotient quiz to test their attitudes about giving parties. Here are the questions:

1. When I'm planning a party, I look forward to it with:

....excitement, enthusiasm
....apprehension

2. When people arrive, I'm usually:

....relaxed, self-assured, gracious
....still running around like a chicken with its head cut off!

3. When someone asks for a cocktail, I usually answer with:

...."Coming right up."
...."How do you make that?"

4. When I pass the apetizers, I imagine my guests saying,

...."Love all these original hors d'oeuvre!"
...."Potato chips again..."

5. During the course of a party, I usually find myself with:

....a smile
....a headache

6. When the last person's gone, I'm:

....sorry it's over
....relieved

"If you checked the first answer on four or more of the above questions, give yourself a gold star," said Ms. Igou. "You must love entertaining."

"But if you checked the second line on more than a couple of questions, you probably get more anxiety than pleasure out of party-giving. And you're not alone."

Ms. Igou is a daring party-giving, sometimes even preparing dishes for a party from strange menus which she has never tried before. "I wouldn't advise this for the beginner, but I have the ability to look at a recipe and be able to tell if I will like it or not," she said.

Variety is the key to success in her food preparation. She prepares many dishes learned from her travels around the world, and isn't afraid to try other new recipes.

"Don't be boring," she said. "For example, I never serve chips and dips at cocktail buffets. I prefer fresh vegetables and dips." These can include young broccoli, celery, carrots, button mushrooms, sliced yellow squash and zucchini squash.

"If I'm not serving fresh vegetables, then I marinate," she said.

She also gave out some of her favorite recipes for different types of entertaining, including coffees, brunches, lunches, teas, cocktail parties, suppers, buffets, seated dinners and parties for special occasions.

Here is a sample of what she prepares for a formal dinner:

Formal Dinner (for 6)

Menu:
Stuffed Brown Mushrooms
(Dry Madeira)
Anniversary Shrimp
Pat's Golden Birds
(White Wine)
Carrots with Coriander
Zucchini with Herbs
French Crepe Meringue
Coffee
(Benedictine or Yellow CHartreuse)

STUFFED BROWN MUSHROOMS

12 large brown mushrooms
8 ounces prosciutto
1 bunch of parsley, flat or curly
1 medium-size onion
1 tablespoon olive oil
2 tablespoons butter
salt and pepper
4 egg yolks

Wipe the mushrooms with a damp cloth. Cut a thin slice from the bottom of each mushroom stem and then remove the stems, leaving the caps whole. Finely chop the stems, the prosciutto, parsley and onion. Heat oil and butter over low heat and saute all the chopped ingredients until tender and just beginning to brown. Season well with salt and pepper. Stir in the egg yolks and cook for about 2 minutes longer. Use the texture to stuff the mushroom caps. Place them on a baking sheet.

Before serving time, bake mushrooms in a 400 degree F. oven for about 20 minutes, until tender and very hot. Serve 2 mushrooms for a serving, either plain or on rounds of fresh toast, with a garnish of a parsley sprig and a lemon slice sprinkled with paprika. Makes 6 servings.

This recipe can be used for a cocktail hors d'oeuvre, too. The filling will remain firm enough so that the mushrooms can be cut into quarters or into 6 pieces.

Ms. Igou suggests that recipes for a formal dinner be selected after much thought, keeping in mind that the dishes should be prepared either a day or more in advance.

She also does not advise seating for more than eight at a table for a formal dinner. "The conversation tends to get too generalized with more than eight people at a table," she said.

She does not suggest too big a crowd at a formal dinner. "I would strongly suggest that you get help for a formal dinner," she said. "You will need help in the kitchen and in serving. She believes that the large formal dinner is almost a thing of the past.

'Sip, Gulp and Evaluate' form beer drinking society

By DAVID McQUAY
Hearst Special News Service

BALTIMORE — "To me it's a watered-down Irish stout," said the man called Evaluate.

"I'd say it's an English bitter ale, brought down to American taste," said the man called Sip.

"The head says Ireland or England," said the man called Gulp.

Wrong fellas.

Sip's wife pulled the empty bottle from behind her. It was Noche Buenos, a little-known Mexican beer.

Welcome to the International Research Institute.

The institute is a club composed of three Lithuanians who meet every Tuesday night and taste anonymous beers from around the world. They got their nicknames from a magazine article that was headlined "Sip, Gulp and Evaluate." Their beer glasses are marked S, G and E.

Sip is a huge-armed man named Gordon Matulonis who runs an industrial supply business. He's built like a beer truck, and you'd want him on your side in a beer-drinking contest or a bar fight. Gulp is a straw-thin, impish retired schoolteacher named Edward Budelis. Evaluate is a pudgy Seagram's Distillers supervisor named Casimir Razulis.

They grew up together in a Lithuanian neighborhood in southwest Baltimore. Sip and Gulp have been pals since the first grade. Evaluate met them in high school.

The beer-tasting just sort of "evolved," Gulp said. It began as a wine-tasting event that followed singing by Sip's Lithuanian choral group. He and a friend, now deceased, decided they did not like wine and switched to beer. Gulp and Evaluate began attending. The International Research Institute was born.

"We used to drink eight of a kind and we were boozers," Gulp said. "Now we drink eight different kinds and we're connoisseurs."

They have tasted about 1,500 beers from 60 or so countries, Sip says, although no one is counting. The cans stand in a rainbow of colors and languages in Sip's drinking room, which contains a small wooden bar.

"We don't collect cans," Sip says. "We drink beer."

But what happens when they run out of beers to test?

"Never will," Sip said.

"There are 1,700 breweries in Germany alone," Gulp said. "I brought back 53 (different beers)." All three men travel and bring back as many different beers as they can.

Many of their favorite ones — including Lowenbrau, Porkbrau Piriminator and Weiss Rossi — come from Germany, although Czechoslovakia's Pilsner Urquell tops the International Research Institute's list.

Gulp makes a strong case for Billy Beer, named for former President Carter's brother, as the worst American beer he has tasted. "He sold his name to five or six different breweries. You didn't know where it came from. It was terrible."

The worst beers in the world, the three members agree, come from the Soviet Union. The only time Gulp walked out of a bar without finishing his beer was in Lithuania.

So what makes a good beer?

Sip and Evaluate "look for a dryness, hoppiness," Gulp says. "I look for a balance. Generally, beer drinkers will look for the taste of good ingredients — yeast, hops and malt. We also look for liveliness, freshness and coolness. Some people pour it down the sides of a glass, thinking they'll get more beer by not having a head on it. That makes it as flat as you can get."

What really irritates the International Research Institute is American light beers. "We learned that light beer runs from 2.4 to 2.9 (per cent alcohol)," Gulp says. "And when you hit 2.4, you're getting as close to water as you can get. But you can drive better and you don't put on as much weight, so it has its place."

Light or dark, sweet or sour, the International Research Institute will sip, gulp and evaluate all samples.

Sip's wife divides the second beer into glasses and brings them in. "It's got a nauseating sweet," Sip said. "It's got an extra beet in it. I'd say Frankfurt, Germany."

"That's a stale American beer," Gulp said.

"No way," Sip said.

"I'd say a stale English ale," Evaluate said.

Gulp hit it: Cold Spring Beer from the United States that Evaluate bought months ago in Milwaukee.

Everybody missed, It was Labatt, a Canadian light beer. Groans from all corners.

The fifth beer was Hoffenreffer's from Rhode Island. No one got it. Everyone but Gulp thought the sixth was Irish. Gulp guessed American. He was right: Narragansett Porter from Rhode Island. Gulp was on a hot streak.

Around 9 o'clock, the International Research Institute's meeting was over. Out went the beer glasses. In came German cheese, German bacon on Lithuanian bread and a bottle of Cheri Suisse, a Swiss liqueur that tastes like chocolate-covered cherries. After that came other liqueurs. The International research Institute was going to work overtime after all.

Six-pack picks

The International Research Institute has selected the six best beers in the world and the six best American beers. As a public service, they agreed to permit the naming of these Truly Great Beers.

Best in the world:

2.Porkbrau Priminator, Germany. "Full, a balance of malts and hops."

3.Fritz Brau, France, "Excellent balance, not too hoppy."

4.Diekirch, Luxembourg. "Good, rich-flavored beer."

6.Groisch, Holland. "Full-flavored but balanced."
(threestars)

Best in America:

5.Budweiser, breweries all over the United States. "Less hoppy, good-flavored, lively."

6.National Premium, Baltimore. "Good pale flavor."

Teamwork essential to job success

By JAMES T. YENCKEL
The Washington Post

Do you hate to bother your boss with a minor problem because he always seems too busy?

If so, your office may be in trouble — with both you and your boss at fault.

You're doing the boss no favor by waiting until the problem grows out of proportion. And he's not helping, by failing to recognize the don't-bother-me image he projects to his staff.

The situation, common to many workplaces, is a breakdown in "teamwork," Says Dr. Arthur R. Ciancutti. The former pediatrician is executive director of the California-based Natural Learning Center Inc., which offers "Dynamics of Teamwork" workshops to businesses across the country.

On-the-job teamwork, says Ciancutti, "is one of the most important ingredients to productivity." Without it, employees can become dissatisfied, resulting in illness, job turnover, low morale, mistrust, unnecessary union grievances, boredom and missed deadlines.

The alternative is "participation with other people in getting something done together ... making it effortless to be engaged in effectively solving the problems rather than thinking about solving them."

To Ciancutti, 37, "The most fundamental unit in your life is your relationship withone other person. As soon as you start doing something with someone else, you've got a team." At the office, tha translates into your one-on-one relationship with each of your colleagues — peers, supervisors and subordinates

If you as an individual can understand how you affect those relationships, you can get associates working with you as a team to your and your company's greater benefit.

Take, for example, what can happen if — as Ciancutti described at a recent Washington workshop — you put your boss on a pedestal.

You're an employee with a problem only the boss can handle. But you tell yourself. "I have one or more justified reasons for not going to him."

"He's too busy."

"I tried last week."

"I feel his hands are tied."

"I'm afraid I'm going to get a bad evaluation."

Instead, you talk to your office pal Joe about it. "He's not on a pedestal," says Ciancutti. But what happens is that Joe has learned about a problem he can't solve. "He can think about it and talk about it, and that's it."

What happens next, as one staffer tells another? "There's a buzz." And for you, since your problem remains: Your "motivation will start to decrease" and your "stress level will go up."

Eventually, says Ciancutti, the problem will be identified, but by then it "looks complicated." And "the next one is growing right behind it. When you have a bothersome problem, you are participating in maintaining it in an unresolved state."

Meanwhile, there's an office "morale situation. Complaining rather than doing is a potentially contagious habit. That's an energy sink."

As for the boss, says Ciancutti, years ago he probably decided he had to put himself on the pedestal for his image. "He decided a boss should always look busy, always distracted — even when he's bored.

"Or he got a formula for leadership that says a leader should be decisive. This guy bought it. He never shows a crack. He's always on top of it."

But, says Ciancutti, since he is human, "he will be in doubt as often as anybody." His employees, however, don't know that and don't feed him information he needs "because he doesn't look like he's in doubt."

Either party, recognizing the problem, can move to open better communication. "You can learn to lead without being on a pedestal," he says, "and to follow without depreciating yourself."

Ciancutti practiced pediatrics and emergency medicine from 1971 to 1977. While treating injured patients, he "noticed that his team's health care delivery was at times compromised by ineffective communication, confusion about priorities or overlapping efforts."

He became interested in the subject of teamwork, and, as a result, "I changed careers." He began his two-day workshops in 1973. They are aimed at developing insights into "interpersonal problems in your company," building trust, achieving full communication and transforming "office politics and rivalries into increased cooperation and productivity."

Among clients he lists are Boeing, California Teachers Association, Hewlett-Packard, Standard Oil, Travis Air Force Base, Macy's and the Berkeley Health Department. More than 6,000 people, he says, have completed a workshop.

One perhaps not surprising finding: You don't get what you want unless you speak up.

As an example, he tells the workshop:

"I'm talking. I develop a cough. I want a cough drop." But he doesn't ask for one because "I might be turned down." When the drop isn't volunteered, "I cough more. Then I start talking about Smith Brothers."

This kind of indirect communication is not an uncommon tactic in offices, though it is often unsuccessful.

"There's no risk in rejection," says Ciancutti. By asking, you learn, "If I really want a cough drop I'm not going to get it here." The consequences of not asking: "People hang on, and hope gets you nowhere. Planning gets you somewhere."

Another common office problem is not "knowing how to receive." Says Ciancutti: "We know that people are motivated to contribute, no matter how cynical they are. At the end of the work day, they want to feel people are better off. And you are surrounded by others who want to contribute." But:

"Sometimes contributions are diamonds and sometimes they are dead mice."

A diamond, he says, is when your boss tells you: "Thanks, you did a great job. Here's a new project and a bonus."

A dead mouse: "Your project is not going the way it should."

That second contribution, says Ciancutti, "is being offered clumsily. But if you have the ability to receive, you can find the diamond rather than the dead mouse. The better you get at receiving, the better you get in life."

On competition in the workplace, Ciancutti says, "It's not healthy." You end up trying "to beat the other person" instead of "making your best contribution."

If "I'm playing against you for promotion, and I lose," he says, animosity could develop. But by trying to do the best job instead of beating out an opponent, "I don't have to be rankled against you."

If Ford Motors, he says, "is always going to beat Chevrolet" that "takes its eye off of making the best Ford. Teams formed by the adversary method are far less effective and satisfying than teams that make the objective challenge the adversary."

Science dropout

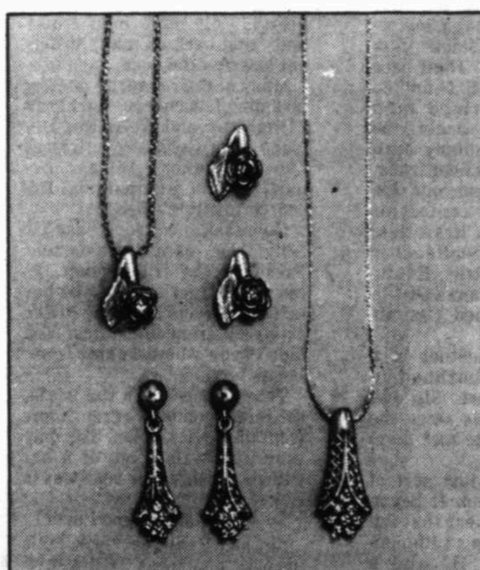

BARTLESVILLE, Okla. (AP) — A funny thing happened to Paul Stapp on the way to becoming a research scientist. He dropped out of high school because a high-school English teacher poked fun at his Missouri accent.

Stapp joined the Navy instead. He went on to earn a Ph.D. in organic chemistry at the University of Missouri, and did post-doctoral work at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Today, Stapp is a research chemist at Phillips Petroleum and has his name on 81 patents, mostly for inventions relating to oil, energy and chemicals.

Founder of school for Down's Syndrome children to address Midland Christian Women's Club

Nancy Davenport of San Antonio, founder of a school for children with Down's Syndrome, will address members of the Midland Christian Women's Club Wednesday from 9:30 a.m. to 11:30 a.m. at the Midland Hilton.

Admission to the brunch and program is $4.50 a person. Other features of the program will be a discussion of "Tips on Gardening" by Charlie Green, county extension agent, and music presented by Chrysalis, composed of members Tammira Madison and Matt Carr of Midland.

Three years ago Nancy Davenport had never heard of Down's Syndrome. Or, if the words were vaguely familiar, it was because they had been encountered in the genetic section of a college biology course and quietly put out of mind after the final.

Three years ago Nancy was joyously preparing to welcome a third child into her family, and rejoicing in the fact that, since she already had a boy and a girl, this baby would be eminently acceptable regardless of its sex.

Austin Steele Davenport was born Jan. 10, 1978, and Austin has Down's Syndrome. This is a genetic disorder which occurs in approximately one out of every 640 births, and which is caused by an extra chromosome in each cell of the body. There is no known ause for the improper cell division which leads to Down's Syndrome.

The general result of Down's Syndrome is delayed physical and mental development in varying degrees. Among Down's Syndrome people, the range in mental capacity, in physical well being, in occurrence of organic defects is almost as wide as in the general public.

"What do you do for a Down's Syndrome baby?" was the question Nancy asked herself as she brought her new baby home from the hospital and began research into sources to educate and train Austin.

The answer was still to love them. She didn't want to wait until he entered public school before he began his education, however, and formed her own program similar to the University of Washington Experimental Education Unit in Seattle.

Why has the cost of electricity increased so much?

Mainly, fuel. Mainly, natural gas. We still have to use it to make more than half your electricity. Our fuel bill in 1980 was $198,900,000*; our estimate for 1981 is $450,000,000.
As the graph shows, Texas Electric's customers paid much lower fuel costs on their electric bills throughout the '70s. But now our biggest contract for low-cost gas has expired, and we have to pay the going rate.
Our lignite-fueled generating plants (and our nuclear plant in the future) will help protect our customers from rising gas prices.
You can help hold down your electric bill by conserving at home; learn how at one of our free Tighten-Up workshops, or request our conservation tips booklets.
* The amount we have to pay for fuel to make electricity is the exact amount we charge our customers for fuel.

Sunglasses shady business

By RENETA BYRNE
Hearst Special News Service

If you had been Cleopatra, you would have worn uncut rubies and emeralds to protect your eyes from the glare of the Nile sun.

And had you lived during the time of the ancient Tibetans, you would have noted woven horsehair sun visors to protect your eyes.

But in this country, it took Katherine Hepburn — with her flat shoes, tweedy suits, trench coat and a pair of dark sunglasses — to launch the vogue for traveling behind dark "shades," or at least to popularize the idea.

Of course, she got a little help along the way from thousands of American GIs whose aviator glasses with green lenses were all the rage in the '30s and '40s.

While it hasn't been established for sure who invented modern sunglasses, there are very few people around today who don't think of sunglasses when it comes to the outdoors — particularly in summer.

Sporting a fashionable pair of "fun glasses" is one thing, but knowing which sunglasses can be both fashionable — and protective — is quite another.

True sunglasses should absorb at least 65 percent of the light as well as potentially harmful ultraviolet (sunburn rays). But how do you determine if the sunglasses are dark enough for eye comfort? Try them on and look.

You can be reasonably sure of good glare and infrared protection if you choose optical glass in green, neutral gray and some shades of brown. But the colors most compatible with human vision are gray and gray-green.

Even though they are a fashion item, sunglasses with a mirror coating can be considered for protection against intense glare.

The mirror effect is achieved by a metallic coating deposited on the base sun lens. When combined with absorptive glass, the coating deflects glare and filters out much of the light.

Fit and quality are every bit as important as the right lens. When selecting a pair of sunglasses, examine the frame carefully. Make sure the temples (sidepieces) are narrow enough to permit unobstructed peripheral vision. The frame material should be smooth and sturdy, and the hinges strong.

The metal core in the plastic frame adds strength and helps maintain a secure fit.

Turn glasses over to catch reflection of an overhead fluorescent light on the inside of the lens. If the light image across the lens is wavy or distorted, the lens may be faulty. Quality lenses are ground and polished to the same standards as good prescription lenses.

Eye-awakening experience cures sleep sickness

By PHILIP WELD JR.
Hearst Special News Service

LOS ANGELES — William P. Baird kept falling asleep in the darnedest places. In class. In the bathroom. While washing dishes. Even before wrestling matches as a freshman in high school.

He didn't know what was the matter, and neither did anyone else.

In desperation, during college he would squeeze an eraser with pins stuck through it to stay awake in math class.

"I'd grip it hard so that pain would wake me up," he said.

Even so, he dropped out of three colleges, just prior to flunking out, before finally earning a marketing degree from San Jose State University.

Baird, now 42, was suffering from narcolepsy (from the Greek narke and lepsia), named for its primary symptom of irresistible sleep attacks during the day. There was more.

Ten years after narcolepsy set in, when he was in the seventh grade, Baird began to suffer a related, but even more devastating ailment, cataplexy.

Cataplexy is characterized by episodes of muscular weakness induced by strong emotion — anger, laughter, fright, elation or onset of orgasm. It almost always accompanies narcolepsy.

For years, doctors would give Baird physicals and pronounce him to be in perfect health. It wasn't until 1966, after he saw a television show describing narcolepsy, that he found a physician who gave him the proper diagnosis.

The failure of a number of physicians to recognize Baird's problem is not unusual, although it has begun to change in the last few years.

Treatment of sleep disorders is relatively new in medicine. Dr. Elliott R. Phillips, a 31-year-old psychiatrist, is the medical director of a new sleep disorders center at Holy Cross Hospital in Mission Hills, one of 16 accredited centers in the United States.

Since the center opened in July 1979, Phillips and his co-director, Dr. Dennis J. McGinty, a psychologist, have treated more than 300 patients suffering from sleep disorders.

But many patients, as did Baird, go years without knowing their real problem.

Baird was a stockbroker in San Francisco from 1966 to 1973, but eventually lost his job because every time he was about to close a sale, his elation would trigger cataplexy.

"It was always a race to see whether the customer would say yes before I would feel my knees go and find myself reclining on the floor of his office, naturally having lost the sale," he said.

For a while he took a drug called imipramine, an anti-depressant found to combat cataplexy in some cases. But he developed a tolerance to the drug, and it also increased his daytime sleepiness and caused impotence. He has since stopped taking it and lives with his cataplexy. He has one to 10 episodes nightly, often around his friends, who understand and aren't upset by his behavior.

He has never married, but he has had lovers. Relationships are difficult.

"Once after work I hit it off with an attractive woman at a bar," he recalled.

"We were exchanging comments, bringing us closer together, relating to one another. As I sat there I put my arms on the bar, and felt my knees giving. I had to turn the conversation away from intimacy, otherwise I would have fallen underneath the bar," he said.

"In fact I have to be careful during this (phone interview) that I don't tie in with heavy emotions, otherwise I might drop the phone," Baird said.

The episodes are brief and Baird is conscious as he heads toward the floor. It happens when friends tell a funny joke. As he is falling, his thoughts tell him, "That was a funny joke."

Now he has learned to avoid emotional situations that trigger cataplexy, though when he has a good gin rummy hand in a card game with friends, he will feel OK about collapsing and carrying on afterwards.

A stimulant called Desoxyn combats his daytime sleepiness, allowing him to be awake and alert.

A husband for all seasons and occasions

HOUSTON (AP) — Husband No. 3 says he loves her, yes, but doesn't know if he wants to stay married since it's all so embarrassing. Husband No. 4 says it's all over, even though she insists he's the one she really wants.

Meanwhile, officials can't find why she ever divorced husbands Nos. 1 and 2.

Barba Ann Smith believes she is married only to her fourth, and latest groom, but says she has hired a lawyer "to get it straight."

County records indicate Ms. Smith has been married four times since 1970, including three times since March 26, without a divorce.

The marital snarl began to unravel Tuesday when a deputy county clerk, Wilma Harris, noticed that Ms. Smith was seeking a second marriage license in less than two weeks.

Records indicated it was the second time in eight days for her to apply for a license to marry a Nigerian national attending Texas Southern University on a student visa. Further checks showed that Ms. Smith on March 26 had married husband No. 2, Michael Visas Refinus, 29, identified as a native of Cameroon, and in 1970 had married husband No. 1, a Houston man, Leonard Johnson. There were no divorce records.

By the time the records had been checked, however, Ms. Smith and husband No. 4, Fabian Ohabisi Oha, 31, had been married by Justice of the Peace Laurence H. Wayne, who also had performed her May 18 marriage to husband No. 3, Robert Chuks Asomugha, 29.

Wayne said he did not realize he was performing her second marriage within eight days because he performs 30 to 40 ceremonies a week.

"I do it on the way into court or on the way to lunch," Wayne said.

Ms. Smith said she believes she is married only to Oha because she was divorced from Smith, Refinus promised her he would file for divorce and Asomugha told he he would not file the marriage license.

In saying she had hired a lawyer, she said she was not paid to get married and had not been asked to petition the Immigration and Naturalization Service for permanent resident status for her husbands.

But Paul O'Neill, INS district director, said an investigation will be made to see if any of the husbands have filed petitions to change their immigrant status. Fraudulent marriages to remain in the United States, he said, are not unusual.

"I know of one case where a woman was married nine times," he said. "one of her daughters was married four times and another daughter had three marriages."

County Clerk Anita Rodeheaver said that each time Ms. Smith received a marriage license she swore she was not married and had not been divorced within 30 days.

No charges had been filed but a spokesman for the district attorney's office said false swearing on a license application is subject to a five-year prison sentence on conviction and that conviction under bigamy statues carries a possible two to 10-year sentence.

Husbands Nos. 1 and 2 were not available for comment.

But No. 3 Asomugha said he was surprised.

"Yes, I love her, but now I am having second thoughts," Asomugha said, adding that she ran away after their marriage night. "I resent it. She embarrassed me."

But Ms. Smith said Asomugha told her "it was all over." She said she wants to stay with husband No. 4, Oha.

Oha, however, said he plans to have his lawyer void his marriage.

"It's not a legal marriage," Oha said.

Some crafts require so few materials, in such tiny quantities, that you need never look further than your old "scrap bag" for supplies. Pincushions, for example, in wonderful shapes require nothing more than small scraps of fabric and stuffing.

Most people who sew have enough scraps buried around the house to make hundreds of projects. In fact, Sandra Lounsbury Foose was so much a scrap saver that she made a career of it. Over the years, Ms. Foose designed scrap crafts for national women's magazines, Vogue Patterns, and the Hallmark Gallery in New York.

More than 50 of her designs, including the "pretzel" pincushion in today's column, appear in her most recent book, "More Scrap Saver's Stitchery," (Doubleday Publishers). Also among the 50 are fabulous ideas for children's toys, laundry bags, holiday place mats, and patchwork mosaics.

The "pretzel" hangs on a wall. Studded with white "salt" pins and threaded needles, it is always ready for quick, out-the-door stitch-ups. Ms. Foose suggests making several pretzels for a bazaar sale. In a basket, on a checkered napkin, they're irresistible.

Here are directions for the pincushion:

MATERIALS: Brown and white print scrap, 4.5 by 35 inches, matching thread, polyester stuffing, plastic curtain ring, three-fourths inch in diameter, pins with white plastic or glass heads.

SEWING: 1. Fold the 4.5 by 35 inches print scrap in half lengthwise, with the right side inside. 2. Stitch a seam one-fourth inch from the edge, curving it at the short ends, and leaving a two inch opening at the side. 3. Trim and clip curved seam.

FINISHING: 1. Twist tube into a pretzel form as illustrated. 2. Tack down two rounded ends with tiny stitches. 3. If desired, attach a curtain ring for hanging. 4. Stud with white-headed pins.

By the year 2000, people may be paying 10 cents for a sip of coffee, enjoying a life expectancy of 150 and wearing a human finger grown by a chimpanzee.

All that may sound a little far-fetched to you, but not to William P. Barry, a futurist who reels off those and other seeming fantasies with aplomb.

Barry, senior vice president for marketing of Los Angeles-based Barry and Co., a problem-solving firm, spends his spare time poring over technical journals, industrial reports, medical publications and marketing books to see what is in store for the world.

Several of his predictions are predictable: more economical cars, costlier homes, computerized shopping.

However, when Barry starts talking about the possibilities of $10-a-gallon gasoline and head transplantations, ears perk up.

Grafting human organs and limbs onto monkeys for later transplanting to people as needed is an idea, most people might think, whose time will not come.

Results of food fads for senior citizens may be death

Senior citizens are no more vulnerable to food quackery than are other age groups, but older people can suffer more in the development of health problems and financial loss, according to Dr. William Jarvis, president of the California Council against Health Fraud.

Jarvis said seniors are often ripped off by nutrition quacks, and that the result of eating questionable food products can be malnutrition and death.

"Older people have neither the money nor the physical reserves of health to afford experimentation with untried, unsound or unreliable food regimens," he said.

"Let the buyer beware," he advised. "Beware of health-food fads."

But the elderly are too often victims of advertising, mail-order and door-to-door selling frauds, said Jarvis, and are much more vulnerable than younger people as they seek desperately for foods and vitamins claimed to be cures for degenerative diseases or aids to promoting better health.

"Often lonely," said Jarvis, "the elderly are easy prey to ingratiating salespersons."

Today's seniors seem to be too trusting and less likely to spot deceptive business practices, he said.

He listed some health-food quacks who can be spotted:

— Promoters using sales techniques promising more than they can reasonably be expected to deliver.

— Those who claim to be victims of "establishment persecution."

— Those who seek to bypass the requirements for scientific proof of their claims.

— Those who resist critical peer review.

— Those who rely on testimonials to sell their questionable products.

— And those who will always find something wrong with the way you eat, no matter what you eat.

The best diet for people, said Jarvis, can be found in the basic food groups: breads and cereals, milk, vegetables and meats.

"If you eat a varied diet, good health is ensured," he said, "but trusting to health-food fads and vitamins alone can lead to such medical problems as scurvy and malnutrition and other forms of nutritional deficiencies.

Would-be robber in wrong bank line

TEMPLE, Texas (AP) — If you're one of those people who always seem to be caught in the slowest-moving line at the bank, you might understand the predicament a would-be robber found himself in recently.

The fellow stepped up to a teller at the 1st National Bank of Temple and demanded that she fill his sack with money.

"Give me the money, this is a stick-up," the unarmed man told Claudine Holder.

Ms. Holder barely glanced at the canvas bag on her counter. Instead, the teller, whom bank vice president Sam Farrow described as "feisty and very quick-witted," informed the man that he was in the wrong line.

She directed him to stand in a line across the lobby, and while he waited meekly for service, she called police.

Q. - We live in an apartment house. We can hear the people in the next apartment talking on some occasions. We also occasionally hear their radio or TV. Is there something we can do about cutting down or eliminating these noises? It is a rented apartment.

A. - Since you live in an apartment, about the only thing you can do is to install some absorbent material, such as drapes, along that particular wall. There are other solutions, but your landlord is not going to allow you to use them. One is to build another wall a bit away from the original wall and place insulation between the two. There is a slight — very slight — possibility that the landlord might permit the installation of the wall if you pay for it and can convince him or her that it would increase the value of the apartment because of the noise reduction factor. By the way, if you can get your neighbor to put up drapes along that wall also, you may have the problem solved.

Q. - We have stains in our beautiful oak floor caused by dog urine. We have tried scrubbing them with two different household cleaners without result. Any suggestions?

A. - Vinegar and water is a time-tested remedy, but it may not work on stains that have been there a long time. Try a pet store. Some of them have commercial preparations for this purpose. The ultimate solution is to sand out the stains, but this may necessitate refinishing the entire floor. If you decide on this move, also consider the possibility of using a wood bleach.

Q. - There are poured concrete foundation walls in our basement. We are getting ready to finish the basement, putting up 4-by-8 panels of prefinished hardboard. Can we glue these directly to the walls?

A. - If the walls were very smooth, the answer would be yes. Since this is seldom the case, you will have to put up furring strips, then glue the panels to the wood. One other way is to install studs from the floor to the ceiling a little away from the original walls and then glue the panels to them. In either case, be sure to get the adhesive made especially for this purpose.

(The techniques of using varnish, shellac, lacquer, stain, bleach, remover, etc., are detailed in Andy Lang's booklet, "Wood Finishing in the Home," available by sending 50 cents AND a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to Know-How, P.O. Box 477, Huntington, N.Y. 11743. Questions of general interest will be answered in the column, but individual correspondence cannot be undertaken.)

Breast X-ray urged in routine exams

Copley News Service

After nearly half a decade of controversy, mammography is back in favor.

In fact, doctors attending the recent American College of Radiology's national conference on breast cancer recommended that the X-ray diagnostic procedure be included as a part of routine medical care.

Previously, use of the test had been criticized as creating more risk to patients than help. This view was based on the belief that repeated use of the scanning technique could cause breast cancer because of radiation exposure.

But changes in equipment and techniques have resulted in a significant reduction in the radiation dose required to do the testing.

Today's mammogram, according to Dr. Wende Logan, consultant to the Roswell Park Memorial Institute in Rochester, N.Y., involves the use of only one-twentieth of the radiation required for the old type of mammography.

"That means," Logan says, "that we could screen a woman every year for 20 years before she'd have the same radiation exposure she'd have gotten in just one of the old type of mammogram."

Logan advises use of the screening procedure routinely, much as the Pap test is used for cervical cancer screening.

For women considered at high risk of developing cancer because of family history, Logan suggests a baseline screening at about age 30 with additional tests at intervals of about every two years for comparison.

For others she recommends an initial screening between the ages of 35 and 40 with repetitions at two- to three-year intervals.

Dr. Lazlo Tabar, head physician of the mammography department at Falun Hospital in Falun, Sweden, reports that in a long-term, controlled study there routine mammography screening resulted in detection of cancerous tumors as small as one-fourth-inch in diameter -- much too small to be felt on physical examination.

Poll shows cycling runs in families

LINTHICUM, Md. (AP) — Motorcycling is a family affair, according to a poll of cyclists across the country, but it's also strongly linked with friendship.

Nearly 60 percent of the cyclists polled by the Motorcycle Safety Foundation said more than one member of their family rode cycles. More than 80 percent said they had been introduced to cycling either by family members or friends.

The motorcyclists represented a wide sampling of riders who took MSF-sanctioned rider-training courses. Nearly 65 percent said they had more than five friends who rode motorcycles. Less than 2 percent said they had no friends who rode.

Of those polled, 41 percent were women and more than 80 percent parents. The polled cyclists were mostly (45 percent) college graduates, with 28 percent still attending college or high school. Cyclists included office workers, soldiers, company presidents and librarians, among others.

Electronic mail increase likely

NEW YORK (AP) — Increases in U.S. Postal Service rates for first-class mail are likely to increase the use of electronic mail, according to a management-information publication.

Program will help youth, seniors

SOUTHFIELD, Mich. (AP) — The Optimist Club's suggestion for helping the community's youth and senior citizens was selected as the "Best Civic Idea" in a pilot program aimed at enhancing the quality of living in the city.

The club, whose idea was judged the best of 13 entries, won $1,000 for its propsal for "a supervised neighborhood recreation program that presents a regularly scheduled and socially acceptable outlet for the energies of Southfield youth."

The project, which has been expanded to also benefit senior citizens, is conducted in one of the city's several vacated school buildings.

Launched by the International Telephone and Telegraph Corp. with a $25,000 donation to the city of Southfield to implement the Optimists' plan, the new program may also be conducted in certain other cities where the firm operates.

The competition affords a practical way of channeling corporate aid to communities in the face of projected cutbacks in government support for the arts and other social programs, according to ITT.

DEAR ABBY

Children hope mother's new habit won't last

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: My mother is a healthy, vibrant widow of 50. Dad has been dead for 12 years, and during that time my mother devoted her life to raising my brother, my sister and me. She is an R.N. with special training in intensive-care nursing.

So what's the problem? Mom wants to join a convent. I am overjoyed and feel that she has the right to follow the dictates of her conscience.

Mom has no encumbrances, as we kids are all raised and have families of our own. The order she has chosen has accepted her. The hang-up is my brother and sister. They are adamant in their opposition to Mom's decision. They act as though she is joining some kind of kooky cult!

It's tearing Mom apart. She wants so much to pursue her calling, but she wants the approval of ALL her children. How can I convince my brother and sister that Mom has the right to become a nun? — LOVING DAUGHTER

DEAR DAUGHTER: Instead of trying to convince your brother and sister that your mother has the right to become a nun, convince your mother that she doesn't need the approval of her children to follow the dictates of her heart and conscience.

DEAR ABBY: I think it's disgusting the way those big-league baseball players chew tobacco. My husband and I used to enjoy sitting down with a snack to watch the games on TV, but it's so unappetizing to see those baseball players spitting a stream of tobacco juice all over the place, we hardly watch now.

Abby, why do baseball players chew tobacco? — UPSET STOMACHS IN ALLENTOWN, PA.

DEAR U.S. IN PA.: I don't know, but I'll ask. And if I get any juicy answers I'll let you know. (Steve Garvey, George Brett, Rod Carew, where are you when I need you?)

DCAR ABBY: I sympathize with Elsie, the 68-year-old widow who had a crush on her 61-year-old lawyer. She had never gone with him, but she brought him brownies once and sent him a valentine.

My lawyer is also a bachelor, but I've never tried brownies or valentines. I just keep making out new wills. Soon he will have all my money for drawing new wills.

Poor Elsie asked if there was any harm in dreaming. She said it took her 25 years to get over George Brent. Have you any suggestions for me? It took me 30 years to get over Robert Taylor. — HAPLESS WIDOW IN NEW HAMPSHIRE

DEAR HAPLESS: Hang in there, honey! (I'm STILL not over Tyrone Power.)

DEAR ABBY: I am a 12-year-old straight-A student. I, along with everyone else in the class, recently had to write 100 times, "I will be quiet during class time," because the majority of the class was talking. (I wasn't.)

I don't think that was fair, and I politely told the teacher so. She said that was the only way she could get everybody to be quiet.

Abby, don't you think teachers can find a more just and effective way to keep the kids from talking? — INNOCENT YET ARMSORE

DEAR INNOCENT: A more "just" way, perhaps, but possibly not one that's more effective.

Boy strikes it rich in oilfields

At an age when city kids are setting up lemonade stands, the young farmboy has set up shop at a 100-foot oil drilling rig, catering to the crew's love of sweets.

Almost daily, after returning from third grade classes in nearby Lindsay, population 40, Mark bakes a batch of cookies and cupcakes to sell to the oil workers for a quarter apiece.

His savings account has grown to over $65 since the rig arrived earlier this spring. The profits, minus 10 percent for the church, will help pay for two summer camps he plans to attend.

HINTS FROM HELOISE

Scouring powders dull metal cabinets

CLEANING METAL CABINETS
DEAR HELOISE:
What can I do to clean and whiten my metal cabinets?

Scouring them dulls and roughens them. Any suggestions before I give them up as a lost cause? — J.M.

Oh, dear! Scouring powders are definitely a no-no. They'll ruin your finish in jig time.

But I understand your dilemma. If there's a smoker in the house, the problem is even worse. Not only does cigarette smoke yellow white cabinets but your day-to-day cooking builds up a film of grease and grime too.

If household cleaners, such as an all-purpose spray, don't do the job, try rubbing compound.

You've heard me tell about this "miracle" cleaner before. It's what hubby uses on his car, and if it won't hurt that expensive paint job on your car, you know it won't hurt your appliances or metal cabinets.

It's worked for others, so it might work for you. It's sure worth a try. — Heloise

LETTER OF LAUGHTER

Dear Heloise: Years ago, when my new daughter-in-law wanted to know how I made the icing on my son's favorite cake, I was glad to give her the recipe.

I told her it called for powdered sugar, butter, cocoa, mixed to spreading consistency with cold coffee.

You guessed it! She used coffee grounds!

Later my son said, "Mom, how long does it take for those grounds to dissolve?"

Bless his heart. He was trying to eat it without hurting her feelings. — An Admirer at 81

Oh, the stories new brides (and grooms) could tell! — Heloise

BACON BITS

Dear Heloise: My family enjoys the taste of bacon but it's too expensive for the amount of nutritional value it contains.

Therefore, I do not serve fried bacon often. However, I will buy bacon on sale. I cut it into pieces and fry it. After draining, I place the fried pieces in a covered container and put in the freezer.

It's handy to put a few of these pieces into scrambled eggs, omelets or green beans just before serving.

MIXING BOWL

Dear Heloise: I broke the large bowl to my stand mixer. I found to my dismay that replacing the bowl would be pretty expensive.

The mixer was old and, figuring I'd be better off buying a new mixer than replacing the bowl, I decided to make do with what I had.

I hunted around the house until I found a rubber ring from one of my old canning jars and glued it to the revolving plate.

Now any kind of bowl will fit pretty solid on it without slipping off. Even plastic bowls work sufficiently well. — Mrs. Nora McGrath

WATCH WHAT HAPPENS
Nothing can stop the march of time, but you can follow it in style and with minimum care with a well-crafted watch.
Many people with diversified lifestyles need more than one watch depending on the type of activities they're involved in. Skin-diving and strenuous sports require a water-resistant watch with stainless steel band. The same watch or a similarly rugged one fits the bill for shop and yard work. A more elegant style is most desirable for the office and social occasions.
For a dress watch that will continue looking beautiful for many years, you should consider 18 karat gold. Dramatic opaque gemstones are sometimes used as watchfaces. The brown tiger's eye, blue lapis lazuli and multi-colored opal are very dramatic, especially when accented with diamonds. If you're not not afraid of attention, you can even find a watch face entirely paved with daimonds.
The newest quartz analog watches are being promoted as "thin as a dime". The thinner movements of space-age technology make the sleek lines possible.
Watches are no longer merely functional objects. They are beautiful to look at and fun to use. If you have a gift-giving occasion coming up, consider a gift that will be a reminder of you time after time.

Fetal surgery era opens cautiously

By RICHARD SALTUS
Hearst Special News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — An extraordinary new chapter in medicine is being written.

After a series of animal experiments University of California physicians are about to undertake operations on fetuses still in the womb.

The era of fetal surgery is opening cautiously.

A few of the simpler procedures, to vent dammed-up fluids that threaten a fetus's developing organs, have already been attempted by surgeons using needles inserted through the mother's uterine wall and into the fetus.

But not long from now, if further animal experiments are successful, a team at the University of California here foresees attempts to open the womb and expose the fetus, operate directly on the tiny patient and then allow it to recuperate until the time comes to be born.

Prenatal surgery is aimed at fetuses doomed to death or severe handicaps because of medical problems that get progressively worse while the fetus is inside its mother.

Potentially, fetal surgery could save some infants that otherwise would be aborted because of conditions that are rare, but devastating when they occur. The best-known to most people is hydrocephalus, a buildup of fluid in the brain that often causes retardation.

As drastic as it sounds, fetal surgery springs from techniques that are used routinely to inspect the former "medical recluse," the fetus hidden in the womb.

In amniocentesis, fluid surrounding the fetus is withdrawn through a hollow needle inserted through the wall of the uterus, nearly always without ill effect. The fetus is not touched.

The first surgical procedures on the unborn will probably be carried out by modifying this technique. Seeing their way with ultrasound scanners that can look inside the womb, surgeons will guide hollow needles into organs where dangerous back pressure has built up.

Since a one-time draining of a hydrocephalic brain or an obstructed bladder won't be sufficient, University of California surgeons here are developing catheters to act as permanent relief valves. For example, a slender plastic tube has been made that can be slid through the hollow needle and into place in the fetus. Once in place, the plastic would spring into a pre-determined shape to hold it securely, and it would continually vent fluids to the outside of the fetus.

For the mother-to-be, at least, there would be little risk from such measures. More dramatic, and also more hazardous, are actual operations where the mother's womb would be opened and the fetus exposed.

Surgery would be undertaken late enough in pregnancy for the problems to have been diagnosed -- usually not before about four months -- but early enough for the threatened organs to recover from the defect and develop normally. Cutting into the womb without precipitating labor is the chief problem here, but one that may be overcome using new drugs that suppress contractions.

Shawn Mash, a clinical hypnotist, explains the damage smoking can do at a quit-smoking session at Health Clinics International at 2503 W. Ohio Ave.. Mash hypnotizes as well as teaches self-hypnosis to individuals and groups wishing to stop smoking, lose weight or deal with stress. New sessions begin each week. To learn more, call Health Clinics International at 686-0336.

Health Clinics' hypnotist wants to help all failures

Health Clinics International has recently opened an office in Midland at 2503 W. Ohio Ave.

Renown in Dallas as a foremost clinic to reduce weight and stop smoking, Health Clinics International offers a three-prong approach centered around hypnosis.

Shawn Mash, a clinical hypnotist for both the Dallas center and the Midland center, says Health Clinic's work is different from other "quit" groups. "We want all the failures," he said, "because we'll get them and help them."

Beginning with a free orientation session, the Clinic explains how participants will learn to help themselves in curbing appetites, cigarette addiction or anxiety attacks. The orientation helps the individual understand why he or she is addicted, why he or she started this habit and how he or she can control it.

Mash uses his "bull-rope of addiction" speech to show participants they must first break down the problem before they can begin to control it.

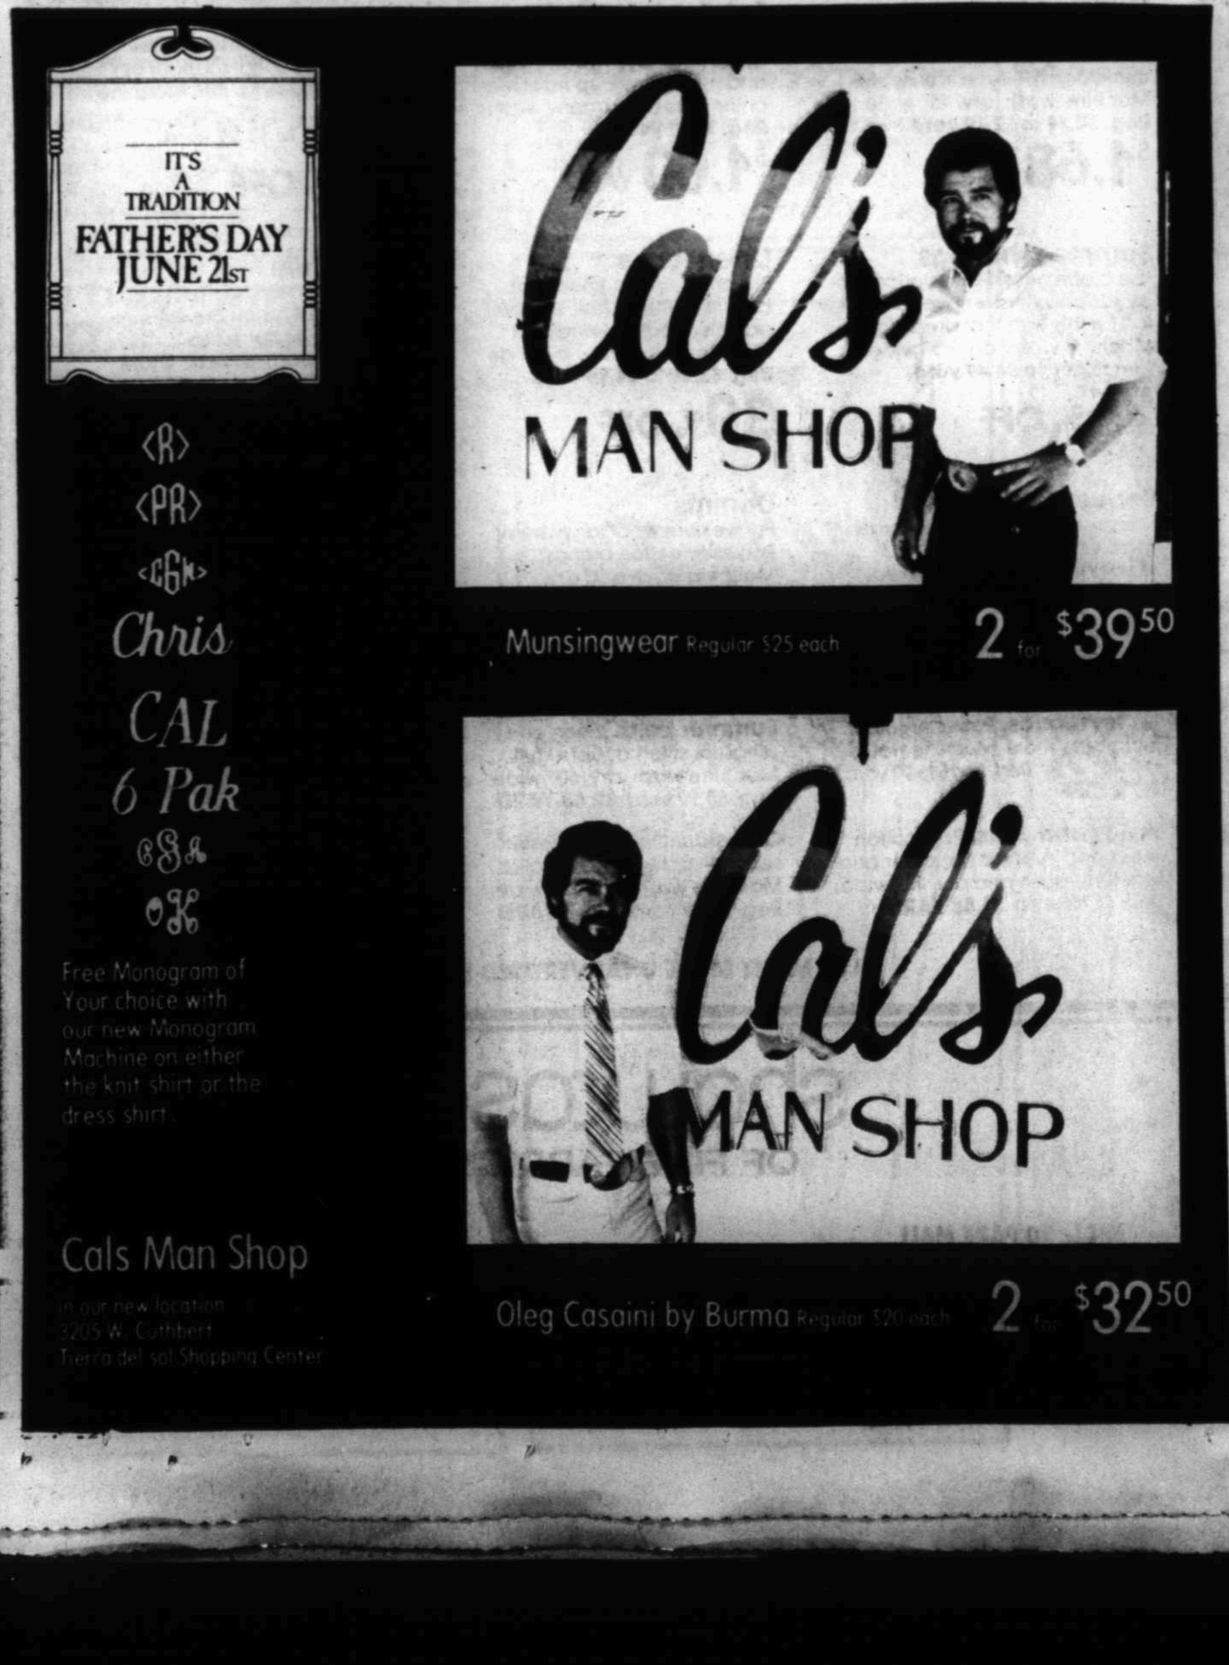

In the second session, participants are hypnotized as a group. Unlike theatrical hypnotism, Health Clinic's hypnotism processes do not force anyone to "act like a chicken." At Health Clinic, only certified professional hypnotists with at least 200 hours of instruction and practice will help you to get to your subconscious.

What's more, Health Clinics International offers a third step — behavior modification — for your continued progress. Providing a special diet, doing a personality study and teaching a mind-writing technique are but a few modifications done at Health Clinics.

"Mind-writing is used to ventilate the situation and it gives them the something to do," Mash explained. "Their thoughts tend to work themselves out of the body. It's the same system I developed for myself."

Himself a reformed smoker, Mash suffers from arterial phlebitis, which causes clotting in the circulatory system. He quit smoking through the techniques he teaches.

To learn more about Health Clinics International and what hypnosis and self-hypnosis can do for your or your company's personnel, give them a call at 686-0336, or come by 2503 W. Ohio Ave.

Thrifty main course soup

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

One of the best ways we know to entertain informally, delightfully and thriftily is at Sunday-night supper with a simple menu. Something to nibble on with pre-supper drinks. A main dish of a hearty soup or a soup-stew plus French or Italian bread. A carafe of wine. Perhaps salad or cheese — or both or neither. Dessert, of course.

As a candidate for the main dish for a supper of this sort, we suggest a hearty lentil and Italian sausage soup. Here is a recipe we used recently that met with success.

LENTIL SAUSAGE MAIN-DISH SOUP

2 hot and 4 sweet Italian link pork sausages (about 1 pound)
¼ cup water
2 large onions, chopped medium-fine (about 2 cups)
1 clove garlic, minced
4 medium carrots, sliced⅛-inch thick (about 2½ cups)
large celery rib, coarsely chopped (about ¾ cup)
⅛ cup parsley sprigs, minced
2cups lentils, rinsed
7-ounce can peeled plum tomatoes, quartered and undrained
2½ quarts water
1½ tablespoons salt
¼ teaspoon ground pepper
1 tablespoon dried basil

In a covered saucepot (about 8 quarts), over low heat, cook sausage in the ¼ cup water until water evaporates. Brown sausage, uncovered, and drain on brown paper or paper towels; slice ½-inch thick and reserve. Pour off all but ¼ cup of the drippings, or if necessary add enough olive oil to make that amount. Add onion and garlic and cook gently until onion is wilted. Stir in carrots, celery, parsley, lentils, tomatoes, the 2½ quarts water, salt, pepper and basil. Bring to a boil, over medium-low heat; simmer, covered, for about 30 minutes; stir in the sausage and simmer until lentils are tender and flavors are blended — about 20 minutes longer. Makes about 4 quarts.

Real estate man becomes restaurateur

By Tom Hoge
AP Wine and Food Writer

Most people who have achieved success in one field would think twice about turning to a different one in midstream. But that's what George Studley did when he opened New York's La Colombe D'Or restaurant.

Studley was a successful New York real estate broker when he decided at age 44 that he needed a change. He enrolled at Brooklyn's Community College where he learned all angles of the restaurant business from cooking to management. Then he opened his restaurant.

To me, it's more an art form than a business," he said.

Studley must be doing something right. In a few short years, he has advanced from amateur in a strange field to winner of the 1981 Holiday Magazine Award.

Asked what advice he would give someone entering the restaurant field, Studley cited three points; learn all facets of the business; stick by your own standards, no matter what; and don't accept the possibility of failure.

Studley has noted a trend in French cuisine to what he calls country-style cooking, featuring such dishes as bouillabaisse, a seafood stew that is a specialty of his house, and tapenade, an appetizer he calls Poor Man's Caviar. Here's a recipe for it:

2 cup pitted black olives
½ cup anchovy fillets in oil
½ cup tunafish in oil
½ cup capers
1 tablespoon lemon juice
2 cloves crushed garlic
1 teaspoon mustard
Pinch cayenne pepper
1 tablespoon olive oil

Chop and mix all above ingredients. Add olive oil a little at a time to produce firm, easy-to-spread mixture. Do not use blender or processor. Serve at room temperature. Serves 6-8 persons. Good with a chilled white wine.

Vegetarian cooking with avocados

By CLARE BARRETT
Copley News Service

The creamy green flesh of this thick-skinned, pear-shaped tropical fruit can be used in a number of delightful ways. Grown in Florida and California, avocados are plentiful and reasonably priced at this time of year. Their high oil content makes them rich and flavorful. Avocados can be enjoyed simply, on whole-grain bread with a slice of cheese and sprouts, or worked into more exotic preparations.

When shopping for avocados, choose those with firm, unblemished skins. Those grown in California have a rough skin that turns a deep greenish-black as they ripen. Florida avocados are usually large, with a smooth, shiny green skin. Avocados are picked under-ripe, and usually sold that way in theproduce markets and stores. They are ripe only when they yield to gentle pressure. Ripen unripe avocados by storing them in a flour bin — but don't forget they are there!

AVOCADO AVGOLEMONO

A delicious and distinctive soup.
4 cups vegetable stock
1 tbsp. grated onion
1 tbsp. minced parsley
1 clove minced garlic
1 tsp. ground cumin
One-half tsp. thyme
2 tbsps. dry sherry
1 tbsp. lemon juice, or more to taste
2 large ripe avocados
One-half to 1 cup cream

Heat the broth and add the seasonings. Peel and chop one avocado and half of the other and puree it in a blender with the hot broth. Return the broth to a saucepan with the cream and heat again, but do not boil. Serve immediately, garnished with avocado slices. Four or five servings.

GUACAMOLE

2 lbs. ripe avocados
One-fourth cup lemon juice
One-half small onion, minced
One-fourth cup chopped fresh cilantro leaves
2 medium tomatoes, chopped
Salt to taste

3 to 5 tbsps. chopped green chilis OR several dashes Tabasco sauce

Cut the avocados in half lengthwise, remove the pits, and scoop out the flesh. Mash the avocado with a wooden spoon or fork. Add the remaining ingredients and mix well. Vary the amount of hotness and salt according to your taste. Serve chilled with fried tortilla chips.

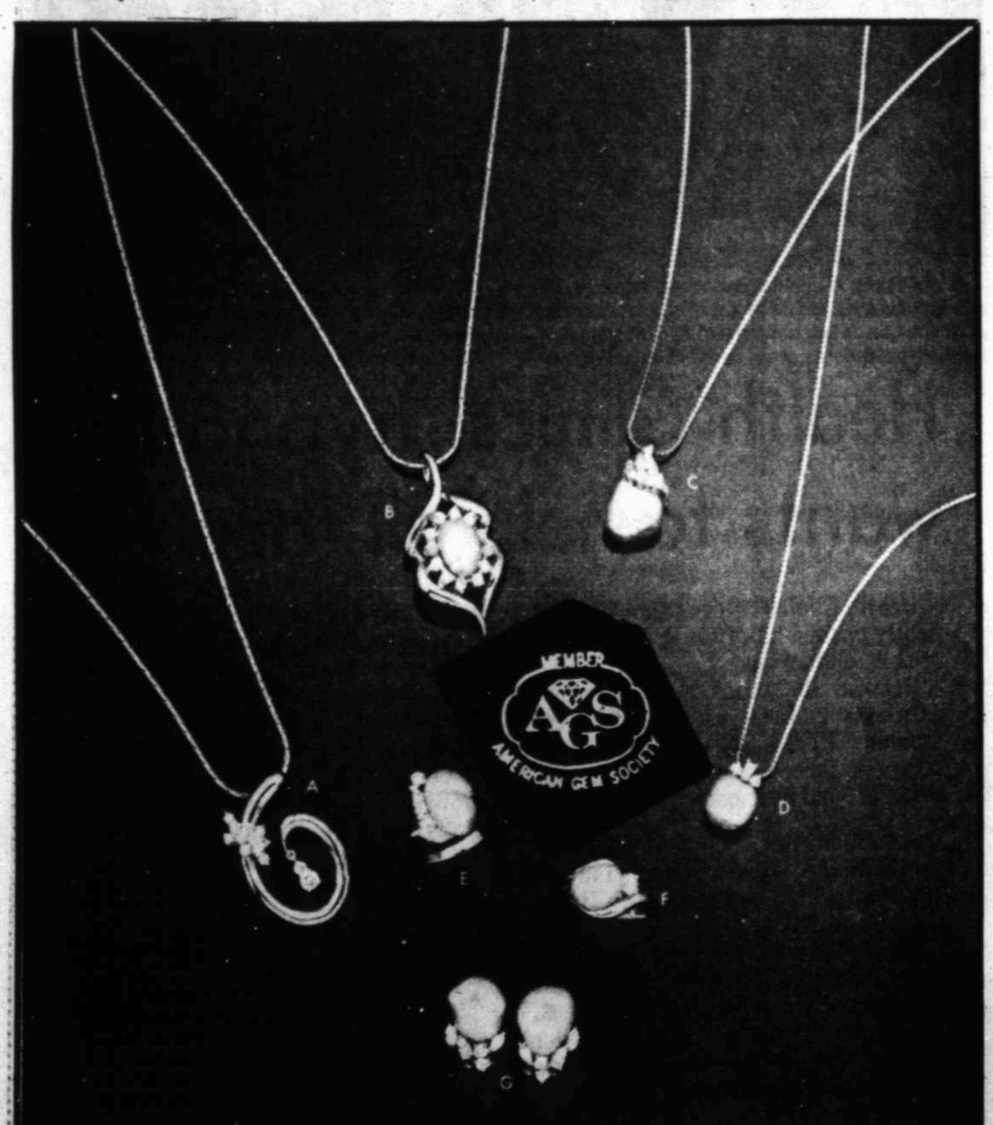

AVOCADO SAUCE

2 tbsps. minced onion
2 tbsps. butter
Three-fourths tsp. crushed red peppers (to taste)
One-half cup milk
2 ripe avocados, peeled, seeded and diced
Salt to taste
Seasoning of choice: a dash of nutmeg, a tablespoon of chopped cilantro, a pinch of ground cumin, or a dash of sesame oil

Saute the onion in butter with the chili peppers until tender. Add the milk and heat slowly. Put the avocado through a wire strainer or puree in a blender. Add the avocado to the hot milk sauce. Season. Thin the sauce with a little more milk if necessary. Note: DO NOT boil the sauce. Serve immediately. Yields about three cups.

Cutting the summer lawn

By ERMA BOMBECK

When the call is heard in a few weeks, "Ladies . . . start your engines," 85 million women will wheel their lawn mowers out of the garage, turn on their motors and be lost until October in a cloud of blue exhaust.

There is no such thing as a unisex lawn — either the husband cuts it or the woman cuts it — but whoever starts it is committed to it for life.

We bought our first lawn mower the first summer we built the house. I said, "It's cute, but what does it do?"

"It cuts grass," said my husband.

"We don't have any grass," I said.

"I'm going to fix that," he said, and proceeded to plant grass seed.

I yelled after him, "Hey, don't do this for me. I can keep busy washing, ironing, cooking, flushing, dusting, marketing, waxing, scouring and trying to keep awake."

When the grass started to grow, he made a speech to the kids. "Look, this is your mother's mower and I don't want to catch any of you trying to start it. Do you hear? Your mother is the only one allowed to cut the grass."

Somehow that speech was funnier when Tom Sawyer first used it.

My friends tried to persuade me to hold out. They said, "If you start that motor you will cut grass the rest of your life."

The grass grew around the base of the trees and over the sidewalk. It grew beyond the shrubbery and tickled the flag on the mailbox. The house was dark even on days when the sun shone. He was faking me out.

Finally, one morning, I started the mower and cut the grass. I found a sled, a Pinto and three preschoolers.

It also marked my enslavement to that lousy lawn mower. I wouldn't get it cut before he'd be out planting more seeds to make it thicker, fertilizing it to make it grow taller, and rolling it to make it look like a green carpet.

I had broken my first rule of marriage . . . if you can't do it sitting down, wait until you can afford to hire someone to do it.

One day, my daughter brought me a glass of water as I walked and sweated guiding my mower through the tall grass like a horse at a plow. "Just think," I said, "one day all of this will be yours."

I never saw her again.

Oversupply must be kept in perspective for future

By MAX B. SKELTON
AP Oil Writer

HOUSTON (AP) — The chairman of Exxon Corp. says it is essential that today's apparent oversupply of petroleum be kept in perspective.

"What we must not do, in our preoccupation with immediate problems, is to lose sight of the fundamental issues that are at the heart of the long-range energy dilemma," said C.C. Garvin Jr.

"Finding enough energy supplies to sustain economic growth, coping with the long lead times required to bring new projects on stream, improving the efficiency with which energy is used, and managing the consequences for the environment are the ongoing challenges we must face."

Garvin said Exxon anticipates that through the end of this century and well into the 21st Century there will be a continuing increase in the demand for energy.

"For the world as a whole, we expect two-thirds more to be used by the year 2000 than is consumed today, in the United States about 20 percent more," he said.

"In both cases, the rate of growth in energy demand will be substantially less than in pre-energy-crisis days, but will still provide significant opportunity for earnings growth."

Given the increasing gap between consumption of oil and new discoveries in recent years, he said, it is unlikely this expanding demand can be met from conventional petroleum resources.

"For the decades immediately ahead, the United States and the world will have to depend increasingly on greater use of directly-burned coal and nuclear energy," he said.

"However, these fuels cannot do the job alone. For various transportation and petrochemical purposes, we must have a continuing supply of hydrocarbons in liquid and gaseous form as well."

That is why Exxon, Garvin said at the company's recent shareholders meeting, has begun to make substantial investments in the recovery of heavy crudes and in synthetic fuels to augment conventional petroleum supplies.

Exxon's first major venture in these areas, the Syncrude Project in Canada came on-stream in 1978.

"Syncrude is operating satisfactorily and we have learned much about recovering oil from heavy tar sands," Garvin said.

In the United States, he added, Exxon is proceeding with the commercialization of the Colony Oil Shale Project in Western Colordo.

"Production of synthetic oil from underground mined shale should begin in 1985," Garvin said.

"At full capacity, Colony will produce nearly 50,000 barrels a day and the whole project will employe about 2,000 people. We have the technology to support this project, but it is our first commercial venture into shale and thus represents a major challenge to the corporation in the 1980s."

Garvin said Colony's anticipated success should open up an important additional source of supply for the United States for many years to come.

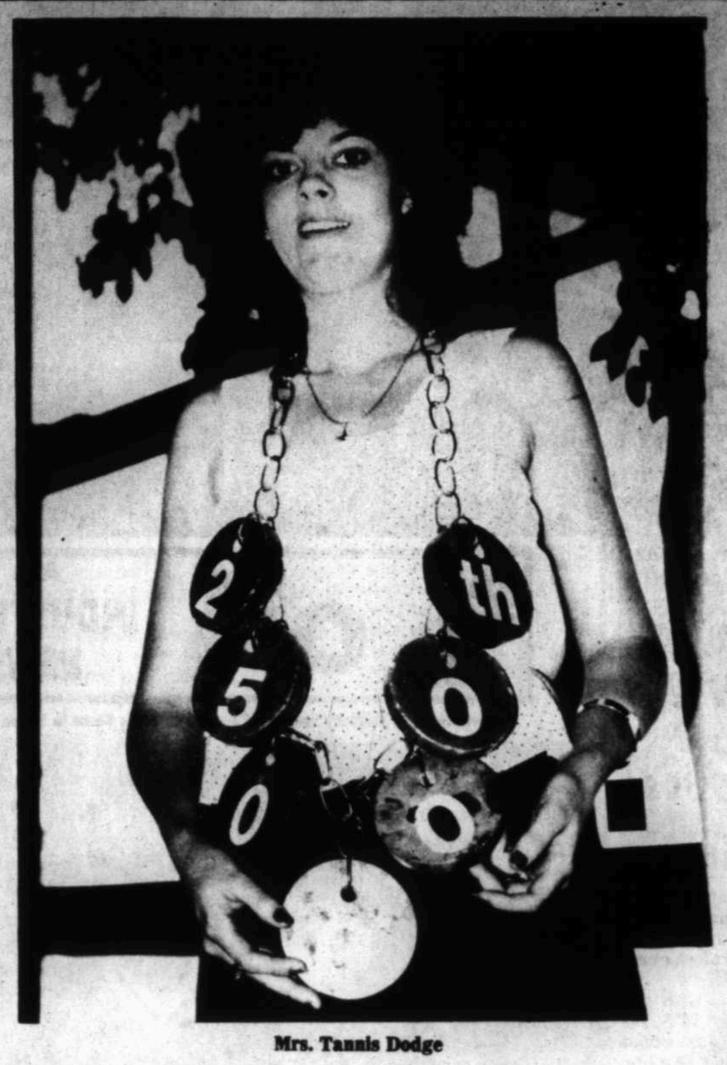

While synthetics are important, Garvin said, they are not the only or even the principal answer to future energy needs.

"Conservation is vitally important," he said. "Exxon supports it strongly and will continue in whatever ways it can to seek the productive use of the oil and other major forms of energy that we produce. But the possibilities for improved energy efficiency are not limitless. Nor can doing without solve our basic problem. Vital as conservation is, it cannot do the job alone."

A continuing effort, he said, must also be made in renewable energy alternatives, solar, fusion "and anything else that looks promising."

"For the long run, that is where our hopes line," he said.

"But there is no question in my mind that synthetics can, and must, make a major contribution in the period of long transition and that is what we must deal with first."

California county plans to make deal with Watt

By Tom Eastham
Hearst Special News Service

WASHINGTON — Santa Cruz County, California, is ready to make a deal with the Reagan administration.

Like other counties in the state, Santa Cruz has tried every way it knows to head off Interior Secretary James Watt's apparent intention to drill for oil and gas along California's scenic central and northern coasts.

Frustrated, the county has now come up with an offer Watt — and Reagan — could have trouble refusing: A pledge to save as much oil as offshore drilling would produce.

Santa Cruz claims that through a program of "conservation energy production" its residents, businesses and government can reduce the county's use of fuels an amount equal to its fair share of gas and oil that might be produced in the Santa Cruz Basin from Lease Sale 53.

"We think we can save 30 to 50 percent from current use," said Supervisor Joe Cucchiara, who spent Thursday and Friday in Washington trying to sell the idea to congressmen and — maybe — President Reagan.

He said six to 10 other counties are preparing to join in the Santa Cruz alternative.

Cucchiara brought with him a resolution passed by the Santa Cruz board of supervisors May 19 which proposes to negate the need for oil and gas drilling--which it brands "a clear and present danger to the economy, environment and recreational resources of our community."

Conservation won't harm agriculture, fishing, tourism, recreation or the environment, says the resolution, but by producing significant amounts of energy will make Lease Sale 53 unnecessary.

Insulation and weatherization, conservation and energy efficiency in industrial, commercial and governmental facilities, energy-efficient vehicles, improved building standards and use of solar energy are the methods proposed.

The resolution called on Watt to "delete" the lease sale of the Santa Cruz Basin and designate it as an energy reserve for national emergencies. The latter idea was proposed last year by Crescent City Republican Congressman Don Clausen. dean of California's Republican congressman and a Reagan partisan.

Cucchiara spent Thursday and Friday here calling on California congressmen to try to set up a meeting with President Reagan. He headquartered in the office of Monterey Congressman Leon Panetta, a leader in opposition to the oil and gas drilling.

"I think it's a very positive approach," Panetta said of the conservation plan. "It makes some sense and it is not just saying no, no, no."

Panetta said 40 to 50 California supervisors, state legislators and businessmen have indicated they would make the trip here to meet with Reagan to express their concerns about Sale 53 and push the Santa Cruz alternative.

"It's a valid area to be explored by local officials," said Panetta. "I've always felt conservation should be part of our national energy approach. This brings it home to our local communities and puts it up to the administration as a means of producing as much energy as the lease sale would."

Panetta questioned whether the action had come early enough to help. The first phase of Lease Sale 53 took place with an auction Thursday for leases in the more southern Santa Maria Basin--which brought oil company bids amounting to $4.8 billion for 81 tracts.

The 700,000 acres in the environmentally-fragile Santa Cruz and three other central and northern California basins were deleted from the lease sale last October, then restored to consideration by Watt in February. He has promisedto make a decision on the four basins by early June. Under the law, Watt must adopt recommendations of local governments if he determines they provide a reasonable balance between the national interest and the well being of the state's citizens.

If they show they can save their fair share of energy, Santa Cruz officials think they would meet that test.

250,000 'paid' museum visitor honored recently

A Gulfport, Miss., hairdresser was honored Wednesday afternoon as the 250,000 paid visitor to the Permian Basin Museum.

Mrs. Tannis Dodge of 105 Ralph Drive, Gulfport, was presented a seven-pound necklace made of rock cores taken from the Permian Basin Wells as she entered the Museum.

After finishing a tour of the museum with assistant director Ed Rowland, she received a gift of more conventional jewelry from the museum's gift shop.

Mrs. Dodge arrived at the museum with her mother, Mrs. Ola Rogers of 2,407 Idlewood, Odessa.

The museum keeps close records on admissions fees, which permitted the identification of the 250,000 "paid visitor." However, it does not charge for small children, and members can obtain a limited number of free passes. So the true "250,000 visitor" probably visited the museum several months ago.

Synthetic fuel production is not without its downfalls

By JOANNE OMANG
(c) 1981, The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Over the synthetic fuels industry hovers the specter of a deformed baby cricket with two sets of eyes. Doused when it was an egg with liquids made from coal, the cricket developed like some monster movie creature to remind the engineers that what they are doing to coal and oil shale is something new on the face of the earth.

The engineers were not surprised. Synfuels — primarily oil from shale and liquefied coal and gas from gasified coal — will have as much impact on the environment as the oil, coal and utility industries combined, and then some.

Devising controls for everything is an enormous task, because most of the environmental problems are unprecedented and some are nightmarish.

They include toxic chemicals that cause cancer and genetic mutations, which could be a major health hazard to people living near coal gasification and liquefaction plants and might be subjected to fallout because of possible leakage from pipes and valves.

Another problem, particularly in the West, is that each synfuel project will use millions of gallons of scarce water and threatens to pollute much more of it underground.

The smoke and dust from synfuel plants could endanger air quality. The thousands of people who are moving west to dig and process and sell synfuels will transform the region, not necessarily for the better.

Environmental groups, wielding a decade of legislation and wary of the Reagan administration's antiregulatory stance, are not about to yield on anything they don't have to.

The result is that for the first time in the industrial age, a new industry is going to have to consider environmental problems and costs from the day it gets going, rather than later. And, while environmental protection laws are already on the books, many problems lie ahead.

"There are dozens of substances coming out of coal conversion and there are regulatory standards for only two or three of them," says Jonathan Lash of the Natural Resources Defense Council. "There's enormous political pressure now to move quickly, and a political trend toward looser enforcement of the laws."

The deformed crickets, hatched at Oak Ridge National Laboratory, could have been caused by a chemical known as acridine, which is found in coal liquids, or from the liquids themselves. The products of coal transformation are what scientists call "biologically active," which means they include powerful cancer-causing agents and substances that injure eggs and sperm. Although these are new products, the same problems surround many ordinary crude oil products, which have been the subject of continuing tests.

Synfuels supporters try to be reassuring.

"We know some of these things are nasty," said Robert Hall of the American Petroleum Institute, but the industry needs "nothing new in terms of control technologies that isn't used in (oil) refineries."

The current proliferation of design and treatment is evidence that the companies want "complete control over everything that goes in and everything that comes out," says Joseph Yancik, head of research and technical services at the National Coal Association.

Industry critics are not so sure, but some are willing to wait and see.

Oil refineries still have unsolved problems, Lash points out, and he wants the Synthetic Fuels Corporation to require a more imaginative approach to synfuels' environmental problems as a condition of subsidizing new plants.

The Environmental Protection Agency has ruled that synthetic fuels are new chemicals that must go through testing and documentation required under the Toxic Substances Control Act.

More familiar problems include the industry's need for vast amounts of water in the arid West, its need for mountains of coal and shale that must be dug out of the ground, and its call for thousands of workers to come to the nation's last wide open spaces. The debate over water is especially intense.

A report to the U.S. Water Resources Council estimated that the existing water supply in the Wyoming, Utah and Colorado basins where the coal and oil shale lie could support an industry that produces 1.5 million barrels of oil a day, three times the goal Congress set for 1987. That translates into 26 oil shale plants and eight coal conversion plants, each drinking 50,000 to 2 million barrels of water a day, depending on the process. It also assumes that all water not now under contract is captured and that new reservoirs, pipes and pumps are built.

"That doesn't deal with practicalities," says Lash. Instead of building new systems, "industrial users will just buy up existing water rights and displace agricultural users as they have in the past," he says.

Mexico plans to continue natural gas sales to U. S.

By WILLIAM GIANDONI
Copley News Service

Mexican President Jose Lopez Portillo seems to have decided, again, that things would go better for Mexico with, rather than without, the United States.

The decision cannot have come easily for Lopez Portillo. He tried once before, with former President Jimmy Carter, and was rebuffed.

Remember, Lopez Portillo was the first foreign head of state to visit the White House after Carter's inauguration. Remember, too, that Lopez Portillo then ordered extra supplies of Mexican natural gas to help the United States through the shortages of the cold winter of 1977.

What did Mexico get for his efforts? First, a Washington announcement, warmly appreciated in Mexico, that the United States was going to help finance a costly natural gas pipeline from Mexican oil and gas fields to the U.S. border and, then, a Carter administration decision against the project. The pipeline was subsequently completed with Japanese and other help and Mexico is selling gas to the United States.

With that in mind, Lopez Portillo's willingness to try again, may be considered a measure of the strength of his conviction that closer alignment with the United States could be in Mexico's best interest.

Of course, to President Ronald Reagan must go credit for influencing the feisty Lopez Portillo to accept another invitation to visit Washington.

Clearly, Reagan and some of his closest associates, from Vice President George Bush on down, are fully aware of how important to the United States Mexico is now and will, increasingly, be in the future.

That there are obstacles to greater comprehension between the United States and Mexico there is no doubt.

One of the ongoing problems is that Mexicans know much more about each and every one of the points of conflict between the two countries than people north of the border.

Why that should be so is not difficult to fathom.

Mexico's history, since independence in 1821, is, for the most part, dominated by what the United States has done or failed to do. U.S. history, as studied in the United States, is mostly concerned with Europe or Asia, with only passing reference to Mexico, and no details of what to Mexico were momentous events.

That was first made evident to me in 1947 when, as a newly arrived foreign correspondent in Mexico City, I had to write a few paragraphs about the surprise stop President Harry S. Truman, then visiting President Miguel Aleman, made at the monument to Mexico's "Ninos Heroes" in Chapultepec Park. Not even the White House press corps was able to determine the meaning of Truman's gesture.

The only person in the United Press office who could explain the significance of the Ninos Heroes was Miguel Lozano Charles, a Mexican newsman who as a youth had been a cadet at the Colegio Militar, Mexico's West Point. He told us that the "boy heroes" were military college cadets who wrapped themselves in the Mexican flag and jumped to their deaths from the parapet of Chapultepec Castle rather than surrender to the invading U.S. Army under Gen. Winfield Scott in 1847.

So it is with all points of contention, be they migrant labor, trade, border problems or whatever. Mexicans have studied them in detail, whereas the United States has seemed, at best, to start considering each problem anew, with every change of presidential administration.

Undamaged reactor to be subject of emergency drill

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP) — A nuclear emergency drill that could be crucial to the future of an undamaged reactor at the Three Mile Island power plant will be conducted next week, officials said Friday.

Emergency preparedness is the major outstanding issue in federal hearings on whether the reactor, companion to one damaged in an accident two years ago, should be put back in operation, said Robert Arnold, president of GPU Nuclear and director of cleanup of the damaged reactor.

Nuclear plant operators must demonstrate adequate emergency planning in order to receive operating licenses from the Nuclear Regulatory Commission. The undamaged reactor has been shut down since its twin overheated in the nation's worst commercial nuclear power accident.

Arnold said NRC observers will evaluate GPU's role in the drill, scheduled for Tuesday, and the Federal Emergency Management Agency will assess state and local response.

"The expectation is that the company, the state and the local municipalities will show adequate progress ... as part of the requirements for restart," he said.

The exercise involves 20 state agencies, five counties, two municipalities, two hospitals, four radio stations, five fire companies and three schools, said DeWitt Smith, head of the Pennsylvania Emergency Management Agency.

The public will not be affected to any great extent, he said.

York County, one of the counties nearest TMI, has refused to participate in the drill. According to Smith, county officials said the date of the drill was set too late and it did not have the money to participate. He said it might cost a county $1,000 to participate.

Courts asked to block oil, gas exploration

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Sierra Club has asked a federal court to block the government from permitting oil and gas exploration in 247,000 acres of "wild and ruggedly beautiful federal land" in Wyoming and Idaho.

The conservationist organization said the Forest Service violated the law by not making an environmental impact study before recommending that leases be issued for mineral exploration in The Palisades, an area of steep ridges, narrow canyons and pure trout streams in the Snake River Mountain Range.

The lawsuit said drilling is "imminent."

The area is under study for possible designation as a national wilderness but Congress will not be able to give it that protection if drilling is permitted, the environmental group said.

In Wyoming, architect Phil Hocker, a Sierra Club official, said that what the Forest Service recommended amounts to determining the mineral potential of the area "through essentially leasing the thing from wall to wall."

Windmills producing cheap electricity

By BOB VON STERNBERG
(c) 1981, Everett Herald

GOODNOE HILLS, Wash. — Old, rickety windmills are still used on some of the farms that surround this high plateau above the Columbia River gorge. But a half century and millions of dollars separate those familiar contraptions from the three white monoliths that loom above the fields.

They are wind turbines, and they may be able to prove once and for all whether reliable, inexpensive electricity can be wrested from the wind.

"You stand here when one of these things is running and you get an awesome feeling of how much power's up there, going over our heads," said Howard Woody, the man who oversees the three wind turbines just east of Goldendale.

Such airborne power always has been elusive and tempermental, but federal researchers are close to the day big wind turbines may generate power almost as cheap as that from coal or uranium.

At Goodnoe Hills, the biggest windmills ever built may determine the future of large-scale wind power in the United States. Expectations are high, and federal officials will throw a bash Friday to dedicate the project.

But on the brink of success, the officials closest to the turbine project are gloomy because the wind research program has been targetted by Reagan administration budget cutters, who say it is time for private industry to take over. Frustrated program officials say it is too soon and to bail out now could cripple wind power research for years.

Woody works for the Boeing Engineering and Construction Co., which built the turbines for the federal government. Since last Dec. 22, when the first one ran for the first time, the three machines have produced power for almost 200 hours.

But there still are days when the wind doesn't blow strong enough or for long enough. And electric utilities want their power at a moment's notice.

Those utilities also tend to build big generating sources: Big as the Goodnoe Hills machines are, they can produce only 2.5 megawatts of power, and it would take 400 of them to match the output of a big coal-fired or nuclear power plant.

For those reasons, utilities used to treat wind power as a trivial curiosity. Their public postures — and spending — reflected that attitude.

But when the "energy crisis" became a national obsession in 1973, federal scientists began to look at wind energy. With only $300,000 to spend, they hoped to find out whether it was even feasible.

NASA, with its experience in aerodynamics and design, took the lead. By 1975, it was operating a wind turbine in northwestern Ohio. The windmill produced only 100 kilowatts of power, barely enough to meet the needs of two dozen homes. But it worked.

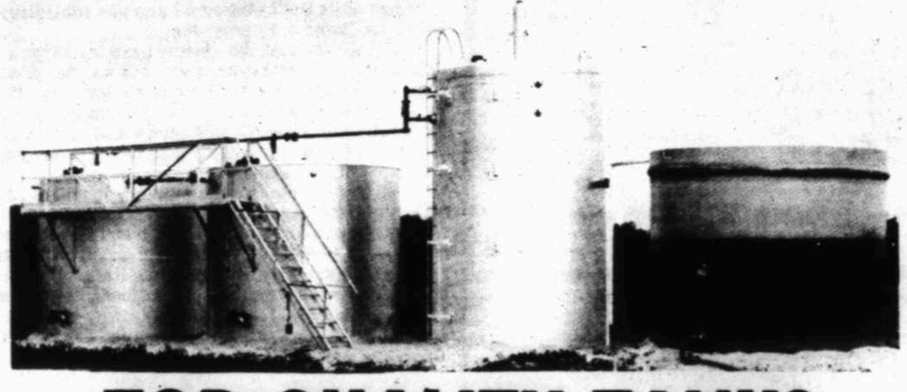

Five more turbines, bigger and more sophisticated, were built at several spots around the country. The power they produced still cost 20 to 35 cents a kilowatt-hour.

But officials from NASA and the Department of Energy said it was just a matter of time before the technological glitches were eliminated and before the soaring cost of conventional fuels made their windmills look attractive.

Three years ago, they concocted the $37 million Goodnoe Hills project, hiring Boeing to design and build the machines and enlisting the Bonneville Power Administration to market the power.

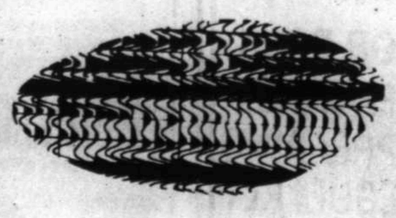

Work began just over a year ago, and finishing touches were completed on the final turbine last week.

Gasoline supplies slipping

NEW YORK (AP) — Despite increased production, gasoline inventories slipped in the week ended May 22 to 257.7 million barrels from 261.9 million the previous week, the American Petroleum Institute says.

The API, an industry group, said Thursday the latest figure was well below the 263.5 million barrels on hand at the same time last year, but well above the level considered normal for this time of year by the Department of Energy.

Gasoline production rose to 6.0 million barrels a day from 5.8 million a week earlier but was below the 6.3 million figure registered a year ago, the API reported.

With production of gasoline up, refineries operated at 68.7 percent of capacity, up from a revised 67.4 percent the previous week, it said. A year ago, the figure was 76.5 percent.

The API also said crude-oil imports dropped to 4.0 million barrels a day from 4.2 million a week earlier and 4.7 million a year ago. Crude oil inventories dropped to 405.7 million barrels from 407.8 million a week earlier.

Rebirth of federalism

Bringing about a rebirth of the federalism the framers of the U.S. Constitution had in mind when they created our form of government isn't an easy task. But it's a task the Reagan administration has undertaken and, for the good of the nation, all Americans had better hope the attempt is successful.

In the early days of the Republic a strong national government was needed to do the things that otherwise could not be done, things like defending the nation against aggressors, delivering the mail, regulating currency and other functions that are uniquely national in scope.

Our forefathers had the wisdom, however, to leave all other powers to the individual states. The system worked well. It was revolutionary, but the division of authority proved to be an efficent system.

In a recent column, U.S. Sen. John Tower addressed the need for a rebirth of the federalist system as it was intended. We think that's a good idea. Somewhere along the way we reshaped federalism into the image we felt it should reflect and we goofed — badly.

As Sen. Tower noted, "... Over the past half century, the federal government has slowly encroached upon powers intended for lower levels of government. It wasn't an insidious plot. Well-intentioned people saw needs and misguidedly thought only a federal law or regulation could meet them.

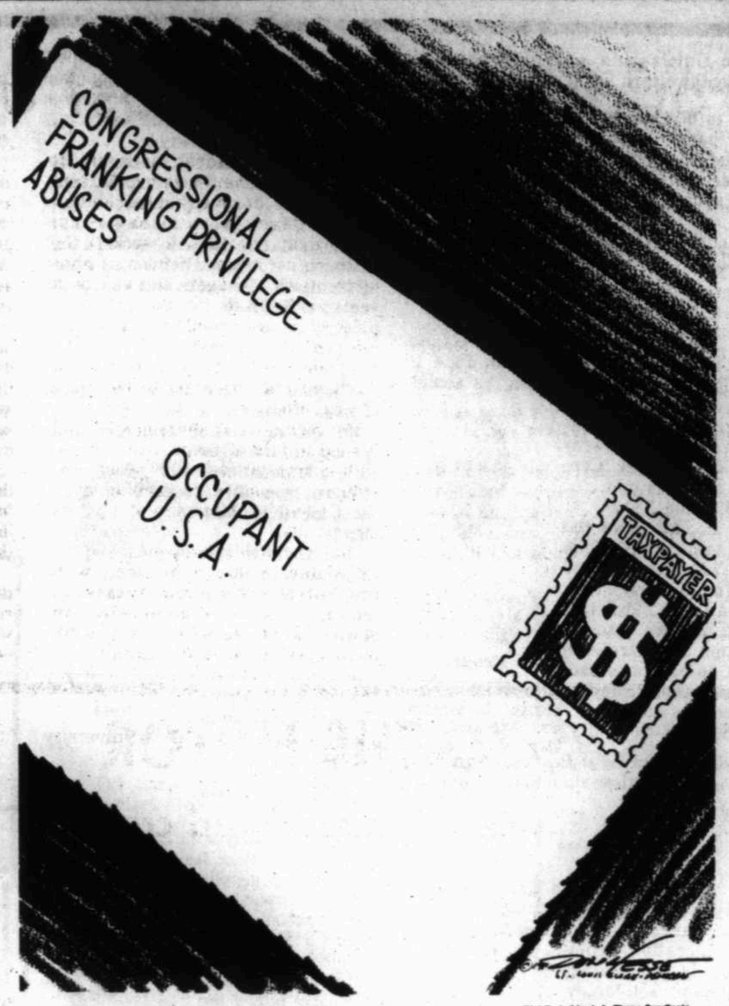

"The only problem was that often a national program failed to meet the needs of individual states or citizens because national rules don't allow for differences in local needs. As money became more centralized through federal taxes to pay for federal programs, more and more things were turned over to the national government — a classic vicious cycle."

Already the Reagan administration has created two groups to help reverse this trend — the Coordinating Task Force on Federalism. The task force is comprised of the highest level presidential advisors and cabinet members while the advisory committee is made up of governors, state legislators, mayors, county officials, U.S. senators and representatives, and private citizens.

As Sen. Tower noted, these individuals will be in a unique position to review current laws and regulations, draft proposals for new legislation and executive orders, and help see that the necessary actions are taken.

The federal government has become too large, too uncaring and too unwieldy. If we are to save this form of government we have to reshape our system the way it was wisely intended by the framers of the Constitution.

That's the best way to ensure a continuation of our freedoms.

ART BUCHWALD

'I love New York,' muggings and all

Art Buchwald

NEW YORK — New Yorkers are always complaining that "foreigners" (those who don't live there) are giving the city a bad name. Actually we "foreigners" would have no idea what was going on unless New Yorkers told us.

I had the occasion to go up to New York on Sunday last week, and spend the afternoon in Queens at a gathering of friends. Then I announced I had to go into the city.

"How are you planning to go?" someone asked.

"I thought I'd take the subway."

"You can't take the subway!" the person said.

"Why? It's Sunday. The subway shouldn't be too crowded."

"That's just the point," another friend told me. "It's much more dangerous to take it when it isn't crowded. You could be sitting in a car all by yourself, and that's when they'll get you."

"If they don't get you, the subway will," another person said.

"How could the subway get me?" I wanted to know.

"It's always breaking down. You could be stuck under the East River all night long."

"Maybe I'd better take a taxi."

"Be careful. Don't tell the cab driver you're from out of town, or he'll take you to Manhattan via Staten Island. They wait all day for people like you."

Another friend said, "If he does take you by way of Staten Island, don't argue with him. There was a story in the newspaper the other day about a man who complained the taxi was taking the long way from Kennedy Airport, and the driver beat him up with a tire iron."

"How long are you staying in Manhattan?" someone inquired.

"Just a couple of days."

"I'd take off that watch if I were you. They're getting awfully good at ripping off watches. If your wife is going to be with you, tell her not to wear any gold chains. They'll rip them off, too."

"Where are you staying?"

"Down in Gramercy Park," I said.

"You weren't planning on going out at night, were you?"

"I was hoping to. I understand there's a lot to see in New York City at night."

A friend said, "It depends on where you go. Always walk on a lighted street near the curb, and if they ask for your money, give it to them without arguing."

"Better still, don't walk anywhere. Take a taxi, and tell the driver to wait until you get into the hotel lobby," someone added.

"Is it all right to go to the theater?" I asked.

"It's all right to go. But coming back is where you could get in trouble. Whatever you do, stay off Eighth Avenue. That's where all the crazies hang out."

"Before you go, put all your valuables in the hotel safe, and be sure when you get back to your hotel you double lock your door. I know a guy who was sleeping in one of the best hotels in the city and found someone going through his trousers looking for his wallet."

"I think I better take notes," I said. "I hear the restaurants are pretty good in New York."

"It depends if they know you or not. If you go to one of the better ones, make sure you slip the headwaiter a $20 bill, or you'll be standing at the bar until 11 o'clock at night."

"When you're leaving for the airport during rush hour, give yourself two hours. If one car breaks down on the East Side Drive, you're a dead duck."

"Gosh," I said. "This sounds like a tough city."

"Why do you say that?" someone asked in a defensive voice.

"No reason," I replied, realizing I was on dangerous ground.

"That's the trouble with you out-of-towners. You're always knocking New York because you don't live here. It's the greatest place in the world."

"I wouldn't live anywhere else," another friend added. "I love New York."

"I better get going," I said.

"Why? It's only 4 o'clock."

"Well, if I'm going get beaten up with a tire iron, I better allow some time to go to the hospital."

"If you go to the emergency room on Sunday," a friend said, "make sure there's an English-speaking doctor on duty."

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

FBI violations of "due process" rights

Jack Anderson

WASHINGTON — Like most Americans, I was disgusted by the ABSCAM videotapes that showed members of Congress taking bribes from a fake Arab sheik. And like most Americans, I thought the FBI had done a brilliant job exposing the venal frailty of our lawmakers.

But now I'm having serious doubts that the game was worth the candle. Disturbing evidence has come to light that the FBI violated the law to set its ABSCAM traps, and then misled Congress about the extent of the bureau's lawlessness.

Even worse is evidence that when two Justice Department prosecutors warned that misconduct by the government's chief informant might jeopardize any convictions, they were almost immediately taken off the case.

In a famous dissenting opinion in 1928 — which has subsequently been followed by majorities on the Supreme Court — the late Justice Louis Brandeis wrote: "To declare that in criminal law the end justifies the means — to declare that the government may commit crimes to secure the conviction of a private criminal — would bring terrible retribution."

Brandeis was right: If government agents can behave like outlaws, no one is safe.

The appeals courts will decide whether the FBI's conduct violated the "due process" rights of the accused and invalidated the entire ABSCAM prosecution. If the convictions are thrown out because of entrapment or other illegal FBI activity, the price will be far greater than merely the expense of the investigation and trials.

For one thing, questions will always remain about the defendants who were ruined by ABSCAM: Were they basically decent men who would have served the public well if the FBI and its convicted con-man had not led them astray? Or were they in fact crooks whose richly deserved punishment was prevented by the FBI's misconduct?

There is an even bigger issue, though: However the appeals turn out, will the FBI be allowed to continue the questionable techniques it used in ABSCAM? The Bureau succeeded, for example, in getting Congress to ratify ex post facto its illegal conduct by being less than frank in disclosing what it had done. If the G-men get away with their outlaw behavior, the effects could reach far beyond ABSCAM.

The point to remember is that it wasn't jaywalking or spitting on the sidewalk that the FBI is accused of in the ABSCAM investigation, but serious breaches of existing laws that were written specifically to keep government from running amok. My associate Indy Badhwar has dug into court documents and Justice Department files for evidence of the FBI's illegal activities. Here's what he found:

— FBI agents created illegal banks and opened fictitious accounts in legitimate banks. This violated banking laws designed to prevent manipulation of financial institutions by government officials using the taxpayers' money.

— By setting up its own corporation, the FBI not only underbid private companies for government contracts, but raised money for its own use instead of getting it from Congress — a clear breach of the law intended to maintain congressional control over government spending.

— The FBI condoned the forgery of an incriminating letter to snare a targeted senator.

— The FBI supervisors of the prosecution's star witness, convicted con man Mel Weinberg, covered up serious accusations that he had ripped off ABSCAM targets for expensive gifts, and had instigated the forgery of nearly $2 billion in counterfeit negotiable securities. In fact, the FBI awarded Weinberg a $15,000 bonus for "recovering" the fake securities.

On the last point, it is important to remember that the accusations of Weinberg's misconduct came not only from potential defendants who dealt directly with him, but from two Justice Department attorneys, Edward Plaza and Robert Weir.

In an internal memo to their superiors, Plaza and Weir accused Weinberg of using ABSCAM for his own profit and of committing the "unpardonable" sin of coaching investigation targets and putting words in their mouths — despite the attorneys' warnings that his slippery techniques could endanger the entire prosecution. Instead of doing anything about Weinberg, the Justice Department replaced Plaza and Weir as ABSCAM supervisors.

The FBI's director, William Webster, subsequently persuaded Congress to legalize the kind of activities the bureau had engaged in by "remedial legislation" that Congress barely understood. Certainly the lawmakers didn't understand that the FBI had already been carrying on the questionable operations they were being asked to approve — and that some of its own members were the targets.

And what were the FBI's motives? Consider this: While ABSCAM was being planned, the new FBI charter was being debated in Congress. There was a possibility that Congress — in light of the FBI's past abuses — would curtail the agency's powers. But ABSCAM came along to capture the public's imagination with highly entertaining capers and to intimidate the Congress into the consideration of a more favorable FBI charter.

MARK RUSSELL SAYS

Francois Mitterand's victory in France is the best thing that has happened to the left since George McGovern was invited to deliver the commencement address at Rapid City South Dakota Central High.

The extent of France's leftward leanings remains to be seen. But if the French Embassy starts serving people's wine in cans, we'll know some of capitalism's niceties have dwindled.

If Pierre Salinger has to defect to Poland, things will have gone too far. If Mitterand visits Washington only to be greeted at the airport by Bella Abzug and Joseph Califano, we might detect a lack of official support.

If the Reagans hold a state dinner at the White House for Mitterand and the main course is Franco-America Spaghetti, hospitality will be found wanting.

If, at that state dinner, the entertainment features a selection of Parisian love ballads rendered by Tammy Wynette, you'll know the White House is concerned.

NICK THIMMESCH

To the graduates of 1981: Happenings in your time

Nick Thimmesch

John F. Kennedy was president when nearly all of you were born, but you had to learn about him through electronic or published history. His time was brief, but well remembered. As the first president born in this century, Kennedy held promise to a new generation of Americans, and spoke of "national peril and national opportunity." You have grown into adults since Kennedy died, and yet the peril and opportunity remain.

In Kennedy's time, many events that were to shape your young years and your future were already under way — the Civil Rights movement, the social revolution, the Vietnam war, the unsettling of our political system (especially the presidency), great fluctuations in the world economy, and the mind-stretching exploration of space.

Your first president was assassinated. You are quite young, but you already have lived under six presidents. Three were shot at, two wounded, one mortally. The first president forced to resign from office was recorded on your "time." Another, Lyndon Baines Johnson, wouldn't run again because he thought he had become too divisive for the nation. One of your presidents (Ford) wasn't even elected. Another (Carter) was a rare one-termer. Your generation hasn't had much luck with presidents, and I wouldn't be surprised if you told me you are a bit uneasy about the condition of our nation's highest office.

You might well be numb to the shock of public figures being felled by bullets. In your lifetime, two Kennedys, Malcolm "X" and Martin Luther King Jr. were assassinated, and George Wallace and President Reagan were seriously wounded. And now, the Pope, John Paul II, whom young people warmly responded to, though not necessarily agreeing with him.

Indeed, when you were tots in the Sixties, and more appreciative of TV entertainments like "The Pink Panther," "Spider Man" and "The Jackson Five," to say nothing of the durable Captain Kangaroo, there was great violence in America.

Negroes who sat at segregated lunch counters (blacks were called "Negroes" until 1970 or so) or marched to demonstrate their demand for civil rights, were beaten, jailed and sometimes murdered. When you and my sons (your age) were in bed and hopefully asleep, I was out covering urban riots which left many cities looking like World War II, and hundreds of Americans dead or hospitalized.

The huge anti-war gatherings of Americans, some just angry, some passionately concerned about Vietnam, didn't get your attention at the time, but you learned about them later. Race relations were disturbing, our military scorned, and patriotism out of favor. We also experienced the seemingly endless ordeal of Watergate. You were old enough to know that something bad was going on in Washington. And then it was over. The tearful family of President Nixon stood by as he waved farewell to his staff, boarded a helicopter and began his trip into exile. Since that sad but historic day, one political scandal after another has been paraded in front of you. Small wonder young people don't vote much.

Your generation has also lived with the most shaking social revolution since your grandparents bought bootleg liquor, dared to smoke cigarettes, and dance to the Charleston in the Twenties. In the Sixties and Seventies, young Americans let their hair grow long; broadened their tolerance of other people's lifestyles and sexual patterns; experimented and dallied with drugs; saw the further deterioration of the family; listened to cries of feminists, environmentalists, and other protestors; plunged into rock and even punk music; and showed an increasing fondness for heretofore esoteric sports like soccer.

Moreover, while you were in school, millions of Americans and tons of wealth moved from the older Northeastern and Midwestern states to the South, Southwest and West. Many once prosperous cities, including Dubuque, are rediscovering "hard times" and the need to find new, job-producing industries.

And yet you grew up in the most prosperous period in U.S. history. Unlike many other parts of the world, obesity is a greater national problem in the United States than hunger. Your parents rode the bus or on their bikes to senior high; many of you arrive in cars a citizen in the Soviet Union or China would dearly love to own.

You never shivered in the morning the way your parents or grandparents might have in houses with coal-fired furnaces, and many of you know what air-conditioned home comfort is. But you have reason to worry whether you will automatically enjoy these amenities in the years ahead, or whether you'll have a good job or can afford a college education. The American economic engine, seemingly invincible since World War II, has been wheezing. Japanese cars, foreign steel imports, and the increasingly tough competition American products encounter in the grown-up world, make economic futurists shake their heads.

You are too young to join them in such fretting. After all, you delighted in "Star Wars" and "The Empire Strikes Back," and the Space Age is as natural to you as going down to the old Fourth Street Ballpark to play nine innings once was for me. Since kindergarten, you have spent more hours in front of a television set than you did in classrooms. You are smack in the middle of the next revolutionary age — that of communications and information. Computers and data banks will be as common to your daily lives as rubber erasers and manual typewriters were to the class of 1962.

You leave school at a time of great consolidation. Everybody in Washington agrees that government programs must be cleaned up, spending and taxes cut. Esteem of our country has come back. It rumbled joyously in 1976 during the Bicentennial celebration. It picked up more during the agonizing year of the American hostages in Iran. Flags became respectable again.

I expect most of you like the United States a good deal, and while not blowing bugles or waving Flags, appreciate the liberty and freedom we all enjoyed. So life goes on. You hear plenty today about the "perils" (military, economic or whatever) that President Kennedy spoke of in his State of the Union Address — before you were born. But at your age, you must be far more interested in the "opportunity" he also cited.

AUSTIN NOTEBOOK

You may not like the product, but you must admire its producers

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Perhaps, to paraphrase Dr. Samuel Johnson upon a different subject, the most amazing thing about the Texas Legislature isn't whether it works well, but that it works at all.

And, generally speaking, the 1981 Legislature has been a fairly hard-working lot, although the work-product may leave something to be desired.

During the closing days of the session, one lawmaker complained to a reporter that too often the media ignores, or at least never tells the public, what a real grind a legislative session can be, and overlooks what's good about the process.

Well, for the record, the Legislature does deserve some bouquets along with the brickbats, although reasonable minds may differ over the exact proportions in which those objects should be distributed.

But, all in all, the 1981 Legislature has tried most of the time to look out for the general good of the state, although some individual members have had some proposals that might make any self-respecting jackal feel a bit queasy in the stomach.

It is amazing, really, that some 13 million people willingly submit themselves to a process by which 181 of them spend 140 days figuring out how to spend the money belonging to the public, setting public policy and deciding issues on a range of subjects so broad that one suspects members have been ripping pages at random from the Encyclopedia Britannica and introducing them as bills.

Still, we — collectively — have picked these men and women as the best we can find under our present system, a system which we (again collectively) have decided is the best we've been able to figure out to date.

There have been a number of disappointments about this session, although most of those have been in areas where few people really believed (or at least should have believed) that lawmakers would be able to make much real progress.

Overhauling the property tax system is one such area — and although some overhauling has taken place on what's been done in prior years, most of the problems which have led to criticism of the system remain uncured.

As one member noted during discussions of property taxes, he's never met anyone who's not willing to pay his or her fair share, and he's also never met anyone who was willing to pay a cent more.

Most folks feel they're paying their fair share — at least — already, but they're not so sure about the rest of the taxpayers.

One former member, and current property taxpayer, commented unhappily that back home in his community (he'd come by to watch some of his former colleagues in action) the taxes on his modest home had gone up tremendously in the last couple of years while those on the luxurious palaces of his neighbors hadn't increased proportionately. It was, he concluded, at least partly the fault of the Legislature (and partly the fault of local officials).

The feeling is a common one, and it's led to talk of taxpayers' revolts, with lawmakers describing how constituents would be descending upon the Capitol to dismantle it and its inhabitants.

That hasn't quite happened, and the Legislature hasn't quite dealt with problems of making property taxes as fair as possible — admittedly, an elusive, will-o'-the-wisp sort of goal, but one which needs addressing.

Reps. Lynn Nabers, D-Brownwood, and Wayne Peveto, D-Orange, were among those who tried to deal with the matter, taking different approaches but both making the argument that despite efforts to improve administration of property taxes, the system has a long way to go.

Unfortunately, property taxes show no signs of decreasing, whatever is done to the system — which increases the necessity for making the system as equitable as it can be. Certainly it's something which may be addressed during the legislative interim.

But if property tax reform fizzled, the Legislature did make some efforts in other areas — even if they haven't achieved complete success there, either.

Lawmakers approved funds to improve conditions in prisons, acting responsibly if not happily; they also wrestled with the question of bilingual education, a subject which isn't as simple as some of its proponents and opponents would like to make it out to be.

Members also worked hard on redistricting, another area where they haven't satisfied everyone, which obviously is impossible, given the political, partisan nature of the process.

But compared to 1971, the process was a relatively gentlemanly, ladylike affair.

And while it may have gone largely unnoticed, there was an exchange during those redistricting hearings in which Rep. Craig Washington, veteran black legislator from Houston, led a witness through a series of questions to the effect that Texas has reached the point where it's how well a lawmaker represents his or her district that's important, and not the legislator's race, sex or ethnicity, that matters.

So maybe the process is working better than we might have thought.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

A Fickle Fleece...

To The Editor:

I think that the taxpayers of Midland should devise their own version of Proxmire's Golden Fleece Award; or, perhaps something akin to Rowan and Martin's Fickle Finger of Fate Award.

After an appropriate trophy has been devised it should be presented to (or placed with) the contractor that fleeced the taxpayers by building the bridge on Garfield Street.

The one that was torn down was better — at least it didn't hold six inches of water on a dry day.

One shudders to think of what will happen if they ever get around to Ward Street.

I have sent the following letter to Midland's Chief of Police, which I would like to share with your readers:

In the past year, I have observed your officers — ladies and gentlemen — in operation in offenses from parking tickets to murder. I am grateful for their thoughtful consideration, courtesy, calmness and intelligence. They are a credit to our community and country. Thank you for leading them.

Calculated crisis

To The Editor:

You won't believe it, but in 1976 on Gull Island at Prudhoe Bay Alaska, an oil discovery was "burned" before witnesss.

A day later an official told one of those witnesses, "What you saw yesterday — don't you ever, as long as you live, let anything out...the story of Gull Island."

By order of the U.S. government the documents have been sealed, the rigs withdrawn, the wells capped.

It seems without much doubt that our energy crisis has been preplanned. This idea has grown out of the knowledge that two semi-secret organizations — the Council on Foreign Relations and the Trilateral Commission were busy in the 1970's planning policy for the U.S. energy crunch; complete with proposals that led to the passage of the Windfall Profits Tax, government directed allocations systems and increased dependence upon foreign oil.

Additional information evidence has been supplied by a recently published book, The Energy Non Crisis, by Lindsey Williams. He called some of our government officials the most misinformed or the biggest liars on the face of the earth.

Williams' report details extensive evidene of government suppression of major Alaskan oil discoveries and deliberate obstruction of production. Similar studies dealing with mock crises arising out of a Saudi Arabian oil embargo, have been released by Georgetown University Center for Strategic and International Studies. The study predicted that if Saudi Arabia stopped its daily flow of 1.3 million barrels of crude oil into the U.S. (which is less than 7 percent of our total U.S. consumption) factories would be closed; total rationing would be in vogue.

And why?

Because, by treaty, our own domestic oil, and imported oil from other nations will be sent to foreign customers of the Trilateral-allied oil corporations.

Inconceivable

To The Editor:

Anyone that uses or expects to use either of the two more popular forms of contraception, the IUD and/or the low-dose estrogen pill, may soon be subject to prosecution for murder if a proposed bill before Congress receives approval in its current form. This proposed law has received some publicity in the national media as an antiabortion bill but the possibility that the bill could effectively wipe out 25 years of scientific advances in contraceptive methods is certainly not widely recognized and reported to the public.

The bill in question is called the Helms-Hyde bill and proposes that Congress enact a law that states in effect that human life and full protection under the law begins at the instant of conception. This bill is supported by a collection of special interest groups that includes the Moral Majority and some Catholics for the stated purpose of using this bill to get abortion declared murder in the U.S. If full protection under the law begins at the instant of conception, then these special interest groups would argue that anything that interferes with the implantation of an embyro in the uterus or disturbs the development of the embyro is murder.

Anyone that favors the availability of choices in contraception in the U.S. should become familiar with the Helms-Hyde bill and its movement through Congress.

Public, and not too truthful, attacks upon the local Planned Parenthood Chapters show that the support for the Helms-Hyde bill is widespread. If you are offended by the prospects of this bill now in Congress, it is time to become informed on the Helms-Hyde bill and to communicate your concerns to your elected officials in Washington, D.C.

A job well done

To The Editor:

Thank you very much for your staff's wonderful help with 1981 CIA publicity and fund raising campaign.

We truly feel we could not have had such a successful year without the competent assistance of your capable staff.

1981 CIA was able to raise $54,000 and repair over 100 homes on April 25th. We have estimated that 2600 persons were involved and that these persons gave out 20,000 volunteer hours to repair the homes. This summer we plan to use CETA Manpower staff and a supervisor carpenter to repair the remaining thirty-one homes.

Again, thanks to you and your staff for all your help.

You all know...

To The Editor:

There are so many people in the area who have given of themselves to help in a time of need that it would take more space to name than there is room for.

I do know all their names, but they know who they are, and I wish to thank them for the kindness, understanding, compassion and help they gave to me when I felt no one cared. They cared and were the ones who did something about it.

The employees of Southwestern Bell Telephone company let me know how much they cared, to each one my personal thanks. I didn't realize I had so many friends.

To you who were so helpful at The First National Bank I cannot express enough your assistance in my time of need. I would recommend your services to anyone who asked.

It is good to know there are people everywhere that care enough to do something when the chips are down. The story is long and very unpleasant — those who gave of themselves know it in full and were the ones to give of themselves and put hope back into my life.

Bigger or better?

To The Editor:

I am dumfounded! At the proposal to expand and enlarge Midland Memorial Hospital. 100 more beds!

As a faithful and careful reader of The Reporter-Telegram, I have followed all the stories of the past two or three years about the hospital and its problems.

So, I read Sue Fahlgren's article in Friday's paper. The hospital's problems have been many and varied, but one problem consistently remains: lack of enough personnel, especially nurses.

Ray Branson, hospital president, stated that the expansion would be necessary, although the hospital only recently completed an expansion of slightly more than 100 beds, many of which are still unused due to a shortage of staffing.

My next letter will be about the strong instinct for administrators (whether U.S. government or hospital) to expand.

Meanwhile, remember, bigger is not always better.

Friendly exchange

To The Editor:

I am a teacher in high school in Seoul, Korea. As an English teacher I take this pleasure in writing to you on behalf of my students who want to correspond with your people.

By exchanging letters, I think they shall surely increase the knowledge about the countries with sharing ideas of student life and everyday topics between the two countries. And I am sure it would be the effective way for my students in practicing English.

I guess many young people will participate in our activity if my message can appear in your esteemed newspaper. Then I will mediate the applicants to my available students who are mainly 13-19 years old.

I believe this kind of activity will be something fruitful in the future for the young generation.

Burger backs public protections policies

By JOSEPH KINGSBURY-SMITH
National Editor
The Hearst Newspapers

WASHINGTON — Chief Justice of the United States Warren E. Burger has emerged as the nation's leading crusader for reforms to provide greater protection of law-abiding citizens against criminals.

Stepping outside his role as chief arbiter of constitutional issues, the country's top judicial figure has been striving to focus public and governmental attention on the need to take more effective action against what he regards as the criminal elements' war against civilized society.

With crime now estimated to be costing American taxpayers well over $100 billion annually, the chief justice has drafted specific guidelines for programs designed both to deter criminal activity with sterner justice and to help educate and train young criminals to become decent citizens.

These proposals were outlined by Chief Justice Burger in two major addresses this year. The latest was delivered at commencement exercises at the George Washington University law school.

Criticized by civil libertarians for attacking the legal system earlier this year for being too lenient on criminals, the chief justice, in his George Washington U. speech, stressed the "moral obligation" of society to try to turn all but the most hopelessly hardened criminals into useful citizens.

He proposed two kinds of mandatory educational programs in prisons. One that illiterate prisoners be taught to read, write, spell and do simple arithmetic. Secondly, that longer-term prisoners be required to take vocational training in skilled and semi-skilled crafts.

"The number of young, functional illiterates in our institutions is appalling," the chief justice said. "Without basic skills, what chance does any person have of securing gainful occupation when that person is released and begins the search for employment — with the built-in handicap of a criminal conviction.

"More often than not, inmates go back into society worse for their confinement.

"These vocational training programs should also be mandatory. An inmate who declines to cooperate must be motivated to do so by incentives, including shortening the sentence. Just as good behavior credit is now allowed to reduce sentences, we should allow credit on sentences for those who cooperate by learning. We should help them learn their way out of prison.

"To make these people good citizens is also for our own proper self-interest."

The tall, gracious, warm and witty jurist who, with his shock of white hair, is in appearance the personification of a distinguished-looking chief justice, learned early in life the importance of education. Son of a St. Paul, Minn., salesman, he came up in life the hard way. Starting work at the age of 10 selling newspapers, he later studied law at night while working during the day. Graduating magna cum laude, he is one of only two night school law graduates appointed to the Supreme Court.

While he favors prisoner rehabilitation through education and vocational training, he thinks there must be much swifter conviction of criminals and much less opportunity for them to receive short prison terms and be turned loose to resume "the war of crime" against society.

He pointed out that it takes longer to put a criminal in prison in the United States than in any other country in the world. Criminals also are released sooner than in almost any other country.

American criminals have, in effect, become an "elite class" under a criminal justice system that provides "more protection, more safeguards, more guarantees for those accused of crime than any other nation in history," he told the American Bar Association last February.

At that time, he proposed an 11-point program to "deter and cure" crime. The program called for "swift and certain consequences" for crime — "swift arrest, prompt trial, certain penalty, and finalty of judgment," such as mandatory prison terms. He believes there is far too much repetitive in-and-out release of criminals who commit new crimes while out on bail, and too much leniency by parole boards eager to make cells of crowded prisons available for new convicts.

While the chief justice realizes the programs he has proposed will be costly, he believes they are affordable and would in the long run reduce substantially what crime is now costing taxpayers, as well as making streets and homes safer for decent people.

ROUSTIN' ABOUT with Ed Todd

It used to be that an old-timer was some Old Fogey sitting on a park bench and fussing about change, mulling over the past, and befuddled by the present.

Well, now, it seems that old-timers are getting younger every day. If you're 39 and beyond or just don't like the trends in today's lifestyles, you may be a most honorable Old Fogey. Take a bow, tip your hat, and tap you cane.

Old Fogeys have more dislikes than likes.

They like things made of wood and brass, copper and wrought iron, gold and silver, porcelain and pewter, cotton and wool, silk and cashmere, sincerity and honesty. They like things "made to last" and treasure books written to endure.

Old-fashioned has come to mean substantial and worthwhile.

Many inventions and gimmicks seem foreign to them.

Modern-day vending machines of this computerized society irk them; they avoid them. The dang machines demand more money than the products they're dispensing are worth, and they're more impersonal than a plastic fish on an office wall.

The talk about flying (if rockets "fly") to the moon or elsewhere into space in search of more places to habitat and pollute seems a bit too far-fetched to be reasonable.

The mere thought of browsing for odds and ends or shopping for goods by way of a computer at home is sterile and lazy.

But the Old Fogey had rather stay at home or on the park bench or wherever his Walden's Pond is rather than mingle with the impersonal traffic in gilded stores of concrete, mirrors, plastic, mazes, noise, glitter and the chatter of people made temporarily inane by the confusion of a society made mad.

If he's locked in a city or town where the parks no longer afford solace, serenity and security, the Old Fogey ponders over what went wrong with society. He recalls his youthful days and how he imaged it was then and how it would be in time to come.

The Old Fogey walks downtown and finds that few there are who have the time or inclination to talk. And if you ask some stranger the time of day, you may get a stare and the time but no more. The atmosphere, no longer relaxed and casual, takes on "business" airs, and the Old Fogey wants to laugh at the absurdity.

The Old Fogey favors simplicity, a gentle breeze, and the blessing of an uncomplicated world. Yet, being a philosopher, he wants to discern the incomprehensible things of the universe.

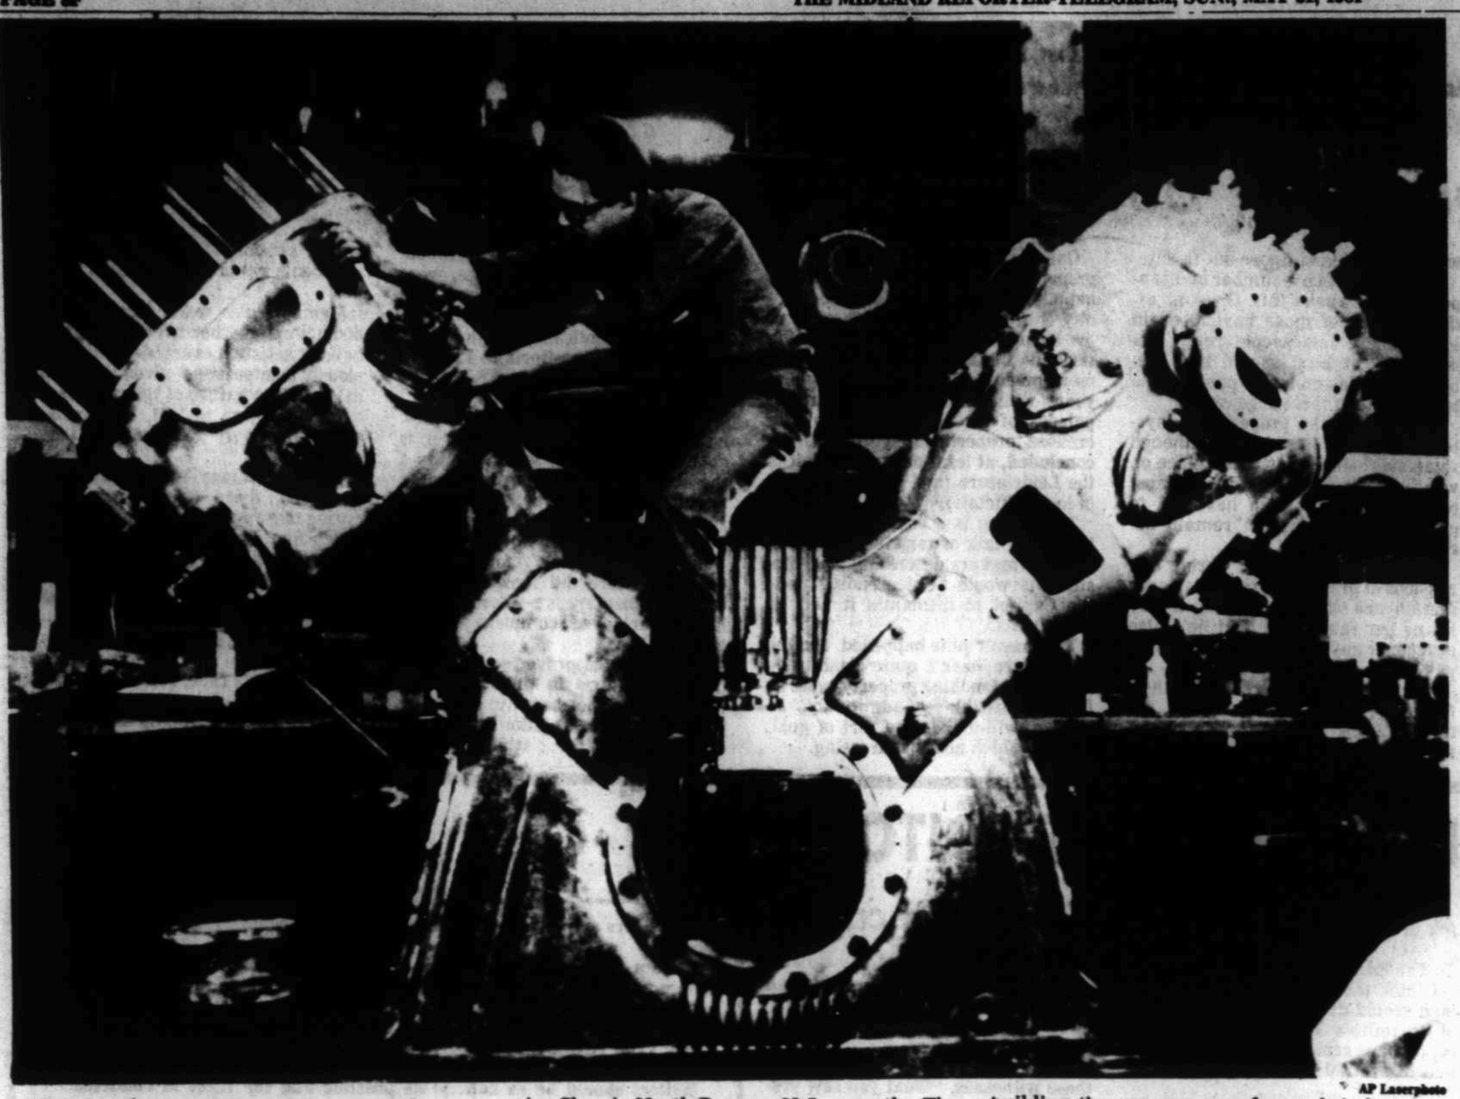

The Old Fogey is a dreamer who lives in turmoil. May he endure.

And as he ponders his fate, he wonders if Old Fogeys weren't always a part of this world. Perhaps they will always be

Water panel sets meeting to discuss solid waste plans

By BILL KIDD

-AUSTIN — New rules on industrial solid waste management, injection disposal wells and consolidated permitting by the Department of Water Resources are to be considered by the Water Development Board at its June 16 meeting.

WDB delayed consideration of the proposals at its May session.

The new rules on industrial solid waste management are to establish regulatory powers needed to implement portions of the State Solid Waste Management Plan under the Federal Resource Consevation and Recovery Act (RCRA).

The proposed rules contain a prohibition against open dumping of industrial waste; requirements for evaluation of certain disposal practices and disposal facilities according to requirements under RCRA; classification of facilities for inventory; and provisions on public participation in industrial solid waste management regulation.

DWR also is proposing new rules and amendments on injection wells and permitting regulations to allow Texas to receive final authorization for its underground injection control program, pursuant to the Federal Safe Drinking Water Act.

The proposals include new rules on requirements for applications, permits, actions and hearings for the solid waste program, the waste water discharge program and the underground injection program; and a new set of ruls setting standards for injection wells, including standards for construction, operation, monitoring, reporting, record-keeping, plugging and abandonment.

Public hearing on the proposals was held in April.

In a somewhat related matter, the Texas Department of Heath is holding public hearings, inluding a final one in Ausitn Friday (June 5), on proposed amendments to the Municipal Solid Waste Management Regulations, to replace and expand existing rules on municipal solid wate management.

Those charges are to incorporate U.S Environmental Protection Agency hazardous waste regulation for delegation to Texas of enforcement authority under RCRA.

The State Board of Insurance has set a hearing for 10 alm. Thursday to consider proposed amendments to the worker's compensation manual and experience rating plan.

Among the proposals for changes in rules and procedures is one to elimate the filing of low-premium policies, with a possible cut-off of $750-$1,000.

Companies now are required to file wth SBI copies of the declaration pages of all policies written on a daily bais; latest SBI figures show that policies which develop $1,000 or less in premium represent 47.8 percent of the total number of such policies, but less than three prercent of the total premium.

Main reason for the change is to eliminate some paperwork, SBI repots, with Worker's Compensation Section Director Ed Kasper saying his section now has 250,000 folders on shelves (200,000 active folders), and has been getting 40,000 pieces of mail a month this year.

Kasper says his division is "commpletely out of space," and doesn't have room to file the paper it now has.

Billy C. Hamilton, senior analyst with th Comptroller's Office, in a study published by the Bureau of Businss Research of the Uniersity of Texas, concludes bank holding companies in Texas "are clearly entering a period of greater Federal Reserve (Board) attention to anticompetitive issues" on merger requests.

In the near future, Hamilton says, "merger activities in the Texas bnaking industry are lifely to involve de novo (i.e., new charters) or foothold entry (a bank entering a new marketing area)."

Since 1979, Hamilton notes, the Federal Reserve has gone through four phases in its appliciaon of the "potential competition doctrin" to mergers and acquisitions, with adverse effects on potential competition used as a reason for denying acquisitions in the 1970-73 period.

That period was the most rapid period of expansion for holding companies in Texas, although, the researcher notes, some of the expansion reflected conversion of chain banking companies to holding companies.

The second period ran from 1973 to April, 1977, with the Fed denying a number of merger requests on grounds of potential competition being diminished.

That attitude shifted again, and until November, 1979, no applications were denid on the question of potential competition alone.

In September, 1979, Hamilton says, that policy seems to have changed agian, with at lest four major acquisitions being rejected since that time because of the potential competition doctrine.

"One explanaion for the shifting natu of Federal Reserve policy is the lack of hard empirical evidence supporting the underlying assumptions of the doctrine," Hamilton concludes.

Levi Strauss & Co. today announced a new profit sharing plan for plant personnel producing and shipping Levi's branded products.

Under the new program hourly employees at the company's 75 field locations can earn cash awards in fiscal quarters when the company's net income exceeds pre-determined levels. The amount of each employee's award will reflect his or her individual performance as well as that of the company as a whole.

Quarterly awards can range from nothing if results are poor to an extra week's wages or more when the company's earnings are strong. The first payout will be based on third quarter results and will be distributed in October.

Factors determining the size of awards include, in addition to employee and company performance, an individual's wage rates during that period, attendance, and length of service.

Peter E. Haas, Levi's president and chief executive officer, said, "This plan allows all eligible employees to share in the company's success. With the implementation of this plan all eligible employees in the U.S. who have at least one year of service will be covered by a profit sharing plan.

Currently there are about 20,000 eligible employees who will receive this award. We are extremely pleased to provide them and their families with this additional compensation, especially at a time when the cost of living continues to escalate."

Levi Strauss & Co. has traditionally shared its major successes with employees by awarding them shares of stock in the company. In 1975, when sales first reached $1 billion, a Billion Dollar Club was set up providing shares to all employees. Also, each employee is awarded shares of stock on his or her fifth anniversary and at five year intervals.

The U.S. Department of Education predicts a 1 percent annual decline in the number of teaching positions through 1984.

According to a 1980 survey of teachers by the National Education Association, more than 1/3 of those questioned were dissatisfied if they had another chance to choose a career.

Budget cuts. Lack of respect or advancement opportunities. Low salaries. Too much time spent on disciplinary or clerical chores vs. instructional work.

For whatever reason or reasons, teachers are leaving the classroom. According to estimates, 110,000 educators left teaching for other professions in 1980 alone.

For those teachers considering a career change — or even for those merely interested in supplementing their teaching income with summer work — Mitchell Fromstein has some kind words.

New career exploration is one of the main attractions of temporary work. A recent Manpower survey found that most temporary workers eventually hoped to work full time.

Most temporary assignments with Manpower are in office related positions, and it is this route that is attractive and rewarding to many teachers considering a career change.

Teachers interested in temporary work should contact their local Manpower office (there are 500 nationwide) or call a toll free "Employment Hotline" at (800) 331-1000 to set up an interview. Students with office skills are also needed for the summer months.

War on drugs bill gets first OK

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — A Texas War on Drugs bill, designed to catch doctors who put "hard drugs" into the illicit drug traffic, gained preliminary approval in the House late Thursday night.

The measure advanced, 89-46, with a final vote expected today. A number of minor amendments would send it back to the Senate for further action.

Doctors would have to write their prescriptions for such drugs as dilaudid, demerol, methaqualones, amphetamines, narcotics and barbiturates on special preprinted, serially numbered pads provided by the Department of Public Safety. Information on the form would include the name, age and address of the patient.

The physician, the druggist and the DPS each would get a copy of the prescription, which the DPS would record in a computer for correlations that might point to doctors who make a business of prescribing drugs with high street values.

Rep. Walter Grubbs, D-Abilene, the sponsor, told the House the measure would be "a deterrent to illegal prescriptions and illegal drugs."

He said drugs covered by the bill amount to only 7 percent of all prescriptions.

Grubbs added that "prescription forgery is easy and widespread."

Debate on the measure centered on privacy issues, and Grubbs said the DPS would be prohibited from making information in its computers available to the public. He said data on a prescription would be purged from the computer after 180 days.

Rep. Matt Garcia, D-San Antonio, attempted to eliminate the requirement that the prescription forms show the name and address of the patient.

"I am afraid we are sacrificing the right of privacy in the name of law enforcement," he said.

Rep. Bob McFarland, R-Arlington, answered that without data on patients, law enforcement officers could not identify persons who go from doctor to doctor, persuading them to prescribe drugs that could be abused.

"The bill covers only seriously addictive narcotic drugs," McFarland said.

Garcia's amendment was tabled, 86-50.

John Duncan, executive director of the Texas Civil Liberties Union, later issued a statement criticizing the bill as one that "strikes at those persons who are simply unfortunate enough to be in enough pain to have a physician prescribe a pain killer."

"The only person to come out ahead with this scheme will be the person who gets the new DPS computer contract," Duncan said.

He explained he meant H. Ross Perot, the Dallas computer millionaire who heads the governor's War on Drugs Committee.

By PRUDENCE HELLER
Associated Press Writer

VALLETTA, Malta (AP) — It's one of those places people have heard of but cannot always place. It's 17 miles long and nine miles across at its widest point. But in that small space is layer upon layer of mankind's history dating back nearly 6,000 years. It's the island of Malta.

Malta and the other Maltese islands bask in the Mediterranean sun, about 60 miles south of Sicily and 180 miles fron Tunisia. Ever since Neolithic Sicilian farmers, it's believed, journeyed to Malta in about 3800 B.C., people have been arriving there: Phoenicians, Romans, Arabs, Normans, the French, the British.

The Turks arrived, too, but they didn't get to stay, despite one of the great sieges of history. The Maltese and the Knights of St. John fought them off. Tradition says St. Paul was shipwrecked on Malta. And legend has it that Ulysses tarried with the sea maiden Calypso for seven years on Malta's little sister island, Gozo.

As a British naval base in World War II, Malta was hammered by Mussolini's planes. You can still see some of the gun emplacements used in its defense. It got its independence from Britain in 1964.

"We're so small," the Maltese man-in-the-street will tell you, "that we have to be friends with everyone."

Actually, it's the very smallness of Malta that makes it so satisfying to visit. You can get a real handle on it.

To get around on Malta, rent a car, take a tour bus, or best of all, travel on the local buses which fan out from just outside the walls of the capital, Valletta, and cost about 10 cents, often less.

What to see?

If you want to start at the beginning, so to speak, there's the cave of Ghar Dalam, where the remains of animals and birds that lived on the Maltese islands 170,000 years ago were found. The cave was also the burial place of the earliest known settlers — those from Sicily.

Not far from the cave is the megalithic wall of a fortified settlement of about 1400 B.C. Visit St. Paul's Bay, and some of the catacombs, including those where St. Paul reputedly stayed.

Also visit the walled "silent city" of Mdina, on a hilltop about as far inland on Malta as you can get. It gives you a feeling of being far, far away from everything.

Valletta is cluttered with things to see, including the conventual church of the Knights of St. John, the National Museum, housed in one of the "auberges," or residence inns, of the order, and the Grand Master's Palace and Armory.

But don't stop with historic sites. There's scenery. Walk the Dingli cliffs, with little farm plots clinging to the cliffsides. Take one of the tracks down among the farms, and have a picnic lunch in the sun.

Art collector's wife has her own exhibit

GREENWICH, Conn. (AP) — Olga Hirshhorn, wife of the noted art collector Joseph Hirshhorn, has quietly been gathering her own trove of work by some of the greatest modern artists and is now sharing part of it with the public.

A small ink drawing by Willem De Kooning is signed "To Darling Olga." The late Pablo Picasso, a neighbor of the Hirshhorns in southern France, wrote "Pour Olga" on his 1968 catalog cover, French meaning "For Olga."

"To Olga From Sandy" wrote the late Alexander Calder, who is represented by a gouache painting of animals, two small animal statues and a small-scale mobile model. Both Mrs. Hirshhorn and her uraniuim-magnate husband are depicted in Larry Rivers' pencil drawings.

Moreover, Greenwich was chosen for the first stop on the show's tour because it is where Olga Hirshhorn grew up and where she and her husband lived for many years after their marriage in 1964.

Much of Hirshhorn's monumental sculpture collection and other art was moved to Washington to form the Smithsonian Institution's Hirshhorn Museum and Sculpture Garden.

The Smithsonian approached Mrs. Hirshhorn for permission to exhibit part of her more than 1,000 pieces of art. Its traveling exhibition service has organized the exhibit, which will visit Tennessee, Florida, Texas, Louisiana, Iowa, Indiana, Ohio and Colorado.

Foster care bill gets OK

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The House of Representatives gave final approval Tuesday to a bill by Midland Sen. Pete Snelson designed to ease the process whereby the state pays for foster care of a child.

Under current statutes, the state must file a suit to terminate the parental rights of a child before the state may pay for foster care. Snelson's Senate Bill 471 would allow state funding for such care if a suit asking for a temporary suspension of parental rights has been filed.

An Aide to Snelson said many state officials and district attorneys have been reluctant to take such a drastic measure as permanently terminating parental rights. As a result, much of the money appropriated for foster care has not benefited children, she said.

House members passed the bill by a vote of 138 to 4, sending it to the governor.

CONSUMER TIPS

Be cautious when having transmission work done on car

By LINDA TRUITT
Better Business Bureau
of the Permian Basin, Inc.

Although a sudden change in the usual smooth operation of your car can be frustrating, if transmission problems are suspected the situation can be frightening.

When an automobile's motor races between shifting gears, or lags before shifting, or produces a clunking noise when the transmission goes into a lower gear, or does not shift out of first gear, odds are that something is the matter with the automatic transmission, and most of us envision huge repair bills.

While replacing a transmission usually involves several hundreds of dollars, in most cases repairs can be made to correct the problem that cost considerably less than the price of a complete replacement.

Stanley Roper of Transmission Service and Supply states a transmission expert should be able to locate the problem by questioning the owner about the vehicle's operation, learning the make and model of the car, observing the external appearance of the transmission and making a road test to experience driving performance. Because transmissions have changed dramatically in the last few years, a mechanic who does not continually work on transmissions may have trouble locating and fixing the problem.

Investigate the reliability of the company if you are unfamiliar with their work by asking for references and if they are a member of the Automatic Transmission Rebuilders Association. This organization requires their members to follow certain standards when working on transmissions.

Because of a transmission expert's ability to diagnose the problem without opening up the transmission, usually the exact price of what the repairs will cost or a price range can be expected. If you are told the problem cannot be diagnosed until the transmission is torn apart or the only solution is to replace the transmission, get another opinion.

Also be careful of repair shops that advertise "tune up and adjustment" of transmissions at an unbelievably low price. Most late model transmissions cannot be "adjusted" at all.

Most transmissions will eventually need major repairs, but your car's transmission will last longer if a few preventative measures are taken. The cheapest, simplest way to avoid trouble is to change the transmission fluid frequently and, at the same time, change or clean the filter or screen according to Tommy Childers of Western Transmission Service. Transmission fluid will deteriorate with use and therefore should be changed at least every 24,000 miles.

Between changes, frequently check the appearance and level of the transmission fluid. When no problems exist, the fluid is clear, has a pink or reddish tint, and does not give off unpleasant odors. Fluid that appears dark brown and has a burnt odor indicates the car is running hotter than normal which will eventally lad to a wearing of transmission parts.

Since a transmission does not consume fluid, the level should not alternate between changes. If the fluid is low you need to replace the seals as well as adding additional fluid.

Don't "hot rod" your car by forcing the gears to shift at maximum acceleration. Hot rodding will only wear transmission parts out sooner than normal.

For more information on this subject, write for "Tips on Automatic Transmissions" from the BBB/Permian Basin, Box 6006, Midland 79701.

Health department plans meeting on solid waste

ODESSA — The Texas Department of Health will conduct a public hearing at 10 a.m. Monday in City Hall Council Chambers here on proposed changes to the Municipal Solid Waste Management Regulations.

TDH proposes to amend existing rules and adopt new rules on municipal solid waste management, which deals with city landfills. These rules will replace and expand existing rules on municipal solid waste management adopted in November 1980.

Changes are being made primarily to incorporate hazardous waste requirements contained in U.S. Environmental Protection Agency regulations written before November 1980.

Some of the significant changes that relate to hazardous waste management facilities under TDH jurisdiction are:

—Addition of a section regarding the permitting of hazardous waste management facilities that process or store hazardous waste.

—Revising and updating standards for various hazardous waste facilities.

—Amendment of a section regarding financial requirements for hazardous waste management facilities.

—Various rule changes for regulation of non-hazardous wastes.

In addition to attending the hearing, written comments may be mailed to Jack C. Carmichael, director; Division of Solid Waste Management; Texas Department of Health; 1100 W. 49th St.; Austin, Texas, 78756.

Election family affair

BRIDGETOWN, Barbados (AP) — In one district on this Caribbean island, the elections June 18 will be a family affair. Brothers Lloyd Smith Jr. and Dudley Smith are competing for the St. Joseph Parish seat n Parliament nce held by their father, Lloyd Sr..

When Lloyd Smith Sr. quit active politics as a representative of the Democratic Labor Party in 1969, his younger son Dudley became the party's candidate in a special election to fill the seat. He lost, and his brother Lloyd Jr. was given the nomination for the general elections in 1971 and again in 1976. He lost both times.

Now Dudley has regained the nomination of the party, to run against incumbent Communications Minister Lindsay Bolden of the Barbados Labor Party. Lloyd Jr. was not pleased and decided to run as an independent.

"There's no feud between myself and my brother," he said, "but all's fair in love and politics."

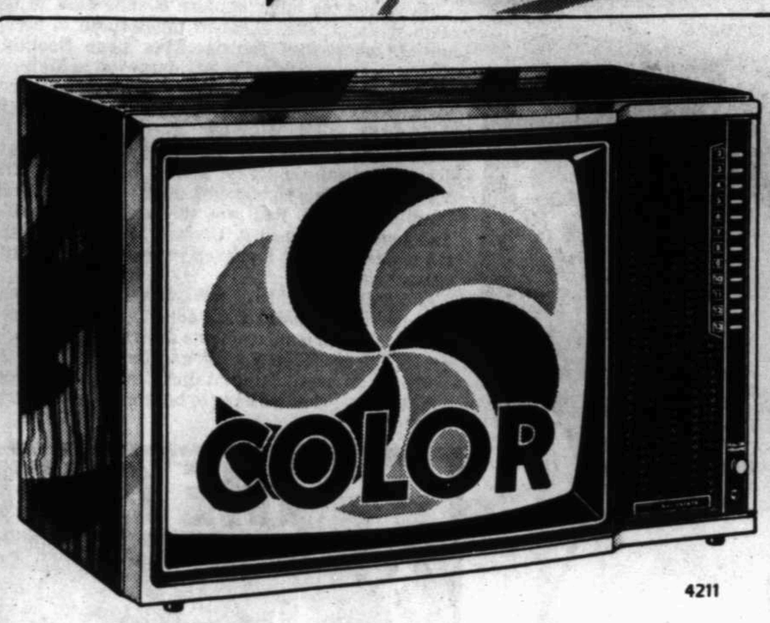

"I'm backing Dudley," said Lloyd Sr. "I asked Lloyd Jr. not to run."

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Cirrhosis of liver not always linked to heavy drinking

Dear Dr. Solomon: My son-in-law is being treated for cirrhosis of the liver. I had always thought of this as resulting from excessive drinking; however, although he'll have a beer once in a while — or even a few beers — he is not what I would call a heavy drinker, and I have never seen him drunk. How do you account for this? Are some people simply more sensitive to alcohol? I would appreciate some information about what cirrhosis is and its consequences. — Mrs. D.P.

Dear Mrs. P.: As you indicate in your letter, cirrhosis of the liver is not necessarily associated with heavy drinking; in fact, I have seen patients in my practice who didn't drink at all and still developed the disease. Neither is there any clear-cut correlation between cirrhosis and diet.

Cirrhosis is a metabolic disorder — that is, an individual's metabolism or genetic makeup will determine his or her susceptibility. That is why some people can drink to excess without developing the disease, while others, who are very modest drinkers, may be affected. Only about five percent of persons who are considered to be alcoholics get cirrhosis.

Cirrhosis involves distruction of the liver, with scar tissue replacing normal cells. Once this occurs, the damage cannot be reversed. One of the dangers of the disease is that it tends not be to noticed until the individual begins suffering from some of the complications associated with it. These include the retention of fluid in the legs and abdomen, the development of jaundice (shown by a yellowing of the skin), and easy bruising and bleeding. In the more advanced stages, according to Dr. John C. Chiesa, assistant professor of medicine at the New Jersey School of Osteopathic Medicine, the patient may become irrational and confused, and develop internal bleeding.

Besides excessive drinking, cirrhosis may result from a chronic inflammation of a liver that may not be functioning properly because of a genetic disorder. It can also begin as a complication of other disorders, such as hemochromatosis, a disease marked by excessive iron intake, as well as certain types of hepatitis or hemophilia.

The only definite way of establishing that a person has cirrhosis is through a biopsy. This procedure involves the removal of a small peice of tissue from the liver for laboratory examination. The diagnosis may be suspected in people who are heavy drinkers or who have a family history of the disease.

The treatment of cirrhosis is geared to protecting whatever liver function remains by removing the cause of the problem. For example, if the patient has been using alcohol to excess, he or she must stop dringing entirely. Similarly, if the patient has been consuming a great deal of iron — possibly through blood transfusions — this also must be corrected.

Cirrhosis of the liver affects people of all races and all ages; even infants and children are included among the victims. Although men develop the disease about twice as often as women, this is probably because men consume more alcohol than women, not because of a specific male susceptibility to the disorder. As women begin drinking more heavily — just as they've begun smoking more heavily — the ratio may change. In this respect, equal opportunity means equal risk.

(If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.)

POSITIVE THINKING

Should we emphasize developing moral standards?

By NORMAN VINCENT PEALE

A clergyman in a published statement points up a curious phenomenon. I refer to a kind of playing down of personal morals in favor of the primacy of social moral standards. It evidences a sort of moral permissiveness that seems to be a mark of modern intellectualism.

If religious sophisticates wish to emphasize moral standards from a purely social point of view, one wonders why they feel that they must at the same time depreciate and soften personal morality.

For example, the clergyman referred to above, in discussing obscenity, is reported to have said, "The dirtiest word in the English language is nigger." This is on the ground that it carries within its "etymology and meanings outrages against human individuals and groups."

This is a strong point with which I agree enthusiastically but he also says: "the truly obscene ought not to be slick-paper nudity, nor the vulgarities of dirty old or young literati, nor even 'wierdo' films showing transvestite orgies or male genitalia. What is obscene is that material, whether sexual or not, that has as its basic motivation and purpose the degradation, debasement and dehumanizing of persons."

While this pastor packs alot of insight, one wonders why his emphasis on hate which, of course, is immoral could not have been enunciated without depreciating the immorality of sexual obscenity. The total effect of his statement is to weaken personal morality while emphasizing and strengthening social moral values.

For my part, I have had too much experience with raw human nature to believe you can scale down moral standards in any area and not reap a whirlwind of broken lives. The sophisticated-intellectual hue and cry that we must get rid of the old sense of guilt is less than impressive. Guilt can be pretty healthy a deterrent that puts the fear of God into people, stiffening their moral sense and motivating them to live decently.

Should we still teach a high standard of personal morals. It may shock you even to have the question raised, but unfortunately there is a verging toward a permissiveness that disturbs a lot of thoughtful people. The effort seemingly is to keep standards somewhat in line with paganistic viewpoints in an effort, I suppose, to maintain an influential rapport with these elements. The policy seems to equate Christian morality with worldly morality rather than the maintenance of a system of moral absolutes. In effect, the new permissive policy seems to reduce Christianity to the world rather than to employ the tougher and more skillful strategy of bringing the world up to Christianity.

A passage in the Bible says, "...come out from among them and be ye separate." This relates to the days when a hard-core Christianity absolutely refused to compromise its moral position in the world. And the world retaliated by derision and persecution; but this in turn gave way to admiration and finally to acceptance. Christianity won its way in the cynical, sex-ridden, injustice-dominated ancient world because it was absolutely uncompromising. But this, of course, was when there was no soft attitude of accommodation among its leaders — its leadership then being composed of tough, absolutely dedicated men.

With the exciting renewal of America now getting wide support, might not it be a good idea if each of us examined our personal standards and honestly faced whether they have become eroded? And if we have young people in the home might we not have a frank facing of this issue with them? Believe me, young people today need support and understanding in order to hold up their moral standards, and I really believe most of them want to.

Incidentally, there are definite and encouraging signs that a new hard-core, spiritually-dedicated group is beginning to form again; this time among the grass roots, among the solid, wise, average man. Why not get with it!

Crime count: It may not be as bad as it sounds

By TOM EASTHAM
Hearst Special News Service

WASHINGTON — Americans have good reason to worry about crime — but a new Justice Department way of looking at it shows things actually may not be going from bad to worse.

It's not a case of figures lying, but of figures — period.

Worsening crime reports the FBI sends out year after year don't lie, but they don't always tell the whole story, either, according to the Bureau of Justice Statistics.

It turns out that while the numbers of crimes mount annually, the percentage of American households touched by crime is actually lower than it was six years ago.

Last year, 30 percent of American households — more than 24 million — experienced crime. High as that seems, it is two percent less than in 1975.

And while that sizable minority of American homes were touched by crime, most of it was non-violent. The majority suffered thefts — and almost all of the thefts were without contact with the thieves.

Those findings come from a new Bureau of Justice Statistics crime indicator based on a National Crime Survey of 132,000 persons in 60,000 households. The survey was developed to provide more information on the nature and extent of crime.

Six years of the crime census show the pattern is stable — and the trend downward.

The BJS developed its new indicator to answer the question: what proportion of the American people is affected by crime?

The household was chosen as the unit of analysis because an entire household suffers the pain, hardship, sense of violation, economic loss and fear that follows when any of its members is a victim.

The term "family" may readily be substituted. Of the 60,000 households interviewed, 75 percent were families, 22 percent individuals living alone and 3 percent groups of unrelated individuals.

Most measures of crime come in the volume or rates. Volume has limited usefulness unless the population size is taken into account, and rates don't show whether a given level of crime within a given population is widely spread or concentrated.

The household census is considered a move toward a more reliable assessment of the impact of crime on people.

The survey did not study murder, but it showed just six percent of all households touched by violent crimes--a rape, robbery or assault. Fourteen percent of the households experienced personal larceny — purse snatching, pocket picking or theft without contact, all away from home.

Burglary occurred in seven percent of all households. Ten percent suffered household larceny — something taken from a home or vicinity by someone with a right to be there, like a servant or babysitter. Two percent of the households experienced motor vehicle theft.

Race seemed not to be a significant factor among households which felt crime. Black and white households were victimized at 32 and 30 percent respectively last year.

But crime apparently increases with family income. While 38 percent of the households with incomes over $25,000 were victims in 1980, only 25 percent of households with under $7,500 were struck. In median households, the figure was a mid-level 31 percent.

Similarly, home location was a factor. Thirty-four percent of urban households, 32 percent of suburban and only 23 percent of rural households were victimized.

The bureau points out that the FBI's Uniform Crime Reports Crime Index has some built-in deficiencies. It produces a single number obtained by adding together all the incidents of each of seven major crimes reported.

If more than one offense occurs during a single crime incident, only the most serious is reported.

For example, if a man breaks into a house, encounters a woman whom he rapes and robs at gunpoint, then steals her car to make his getaway he has committed four crimes. But only the most serious — rape — is reported.

The crime survey has a similar deficiency in that a household suffering a crime is recorded only once no matter how many times it is victimized. But the various crimes members of a household experience are separately recorded in each crime category to give a truer picture.

As findings are expanded it is expected that crime, its victims and the problem nationally will be better understood.

Eventually, the bureau hopes to be able to answer the question: what proportion of the population bears what proportion of the burden of crime.

Right now, nobody knows for sure.

Some Democrats may again join Republican ranks

By MIKE QUALLS
Hearst Special News Service

WASHINGTON — Conservative Democrats who defied party leaders and joined forces with House Republicans to pass the administration-backed federal budget three weeks ago are threatening to revolt again if Democratic chiefs do not quickly embrace a three-year plan to slash taxes by 25 percent.

"That is certainly something that will happen...if a compromise cannot be reached," said conservative Democratic House leader Rep. Phil Gramm, of Texas, in reference to tax-cut negotiations going on between Senate Finance Committee Chairman Robert Dole, R-Kan., and Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, head of the House Ways and Means Committee.

DOLE AND ROSTENKOWSKI have been meeting the past week in an attempt to agree on a compromise that both the Senate and House tax-writing panels can draft simultaneously.

However, following a session on Wednesday which both sides described as "fruitful," Dole and Rostenkowski met Thursday morning with Treasury Secretary Donald Regan who said afterwards that it was "a good give and take session," but conceded that "we don't have a tax bill."

Thursday afternoon, Rostenkowski met privately with Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee to report on the talks and Regan's declaration at the morning meeting that the administration will not back away from its insistence that any tax cut plan cover three years.

"There is no agreement pending right now in view of the administration's position," said one panel member, Rep. Robert Matsui, D-Sacramento, Calif., after the closed door committee caucus.

Matsui also reported that only three of the 18 Democrats in attendance held up their hands when asked if they would accept more than a one-year tax cut.

THE CONCEPT of a multi-year tax cut "is not acceptable at this time," said Rostenkowski after the caucus.

House Speaker Thomas (Tip) O'Neill, D-Mass., also was gloomy about the negotiations, saying, "Progress has been vastly overstated by the press."

In an interview Thursday, Gramm, who co-authored the budget compromise with Rep. Delbert Latta, R-Ohio, said a plan calling for a 25 percent tax cut over three years already has been worked out between the administration and conservative Democrats.

The plan also calls for phasing out the marriage penalty, elimination of the differential between earned and unearned income and a savings package which would give tax exclusions to certain levels of interest and dividends.

"No one has made a formal offer of that package," said Gramm, "but it has been roundly discussed in the White House, the Treasury Department, the OMB (Office of Management and Budget) and among conservative Democrats, and there is no doubt in my mind that a coalition can be built around that package which can pass in the House."

GRAMM DECLINED to set any deadlines for Dole and Rostenkowski, who wants only a one-year tax cut and is under heavy pressure to relent from conservative Democrats in the House, 63 of whom joined the GOP minority to approve the Gramm-Latta budget plan which had the blessing of President Reagan.

However, Gramm warned that, while he "hoped" the conservative Democrat-backed tax package, which would carry the name of Rep. Kent Hance, D-Tex., "will not have to be used, it is there."

A GOP version of the plan being backed by the conservative Democrats, mostly southerners nicknamed "boll weavils" after Democrats from that region who dominated the House 20 years ago, was unveiled here Wednesday by Dole.

Both the Dole plan and the Hance package call for a 5 percent tax cut on Oct 1 and 10 percent cuts on July 1 of each of the following two years.

Other key points in the Dole proposal include an expanson of eligiblity and size of tax-deferred indvidual retirement accounts to encourage savings and an immediate reduction in the maximum tax rate from 70 percent to 50 percent.

REAGAN ORIGINALLY wanted the Kemp-Roth plan, which calls for a 10 percent cut each year for three years. However, the White House already has signalled Capitol Hill that it is willing to compromise, and Dole says he thinks the administration "will go for" the three-year, 25 percent slash.

That opinion was backed up Thursday by Rostenkowski's report to Ways an Means Committee Democrats that Regan had endorsed that formula at the morning meeting.

While Dole is publicly carrying that plan, the basic concept was orchestrated by conservative Democrats who have been quietly conducting behind-the-scenes negotiations with the White House, the Treasury Department and the OMB for the past two months on a compromise plan.

Gramm commented that there would be "a strong base of support" among conservative Democrats in the House "for a compromise based on the Dole idea."

HOUSE DEMOCRATIC leaders toeing the liberal line contend that a multi-year tax cut would be inflationary and lead to a larger federal deficit and question whether the conservative Democrat-GOP coalition can be maintained on the tax-cut issue.

"I think they have shot their wad," said Rep. Don Edwards, D-San Jose, Calif., the dean of the California Democrats in the House. "There's a lot of disenchantment about what went on on the budget."

Edwards also contends that mail coming in from constituents is "turning around" against Reagan's economic policies, and declared, "The sentiment of the nation is changing."

However, there are indications that liberal Democrats, still stunned by the beating they took on the budget, fear a repeat of that embarrassment and would like to work out a compromise behind closed doors, rather than risk a floor fight they are not sure they can win.

Rostenkowski, whose future on the Democratic leadership ladder may be riding on how he handles the tax-cut issue, could not be reached for comment on the Gramm threat. However, House Budget Committee Chairman James Jones, D-Okla., who bore the brunt of the loss on the spending package, has ackowledged to reporters here that he feels Reagan might have 20 to 30 Democrats who even would vote for Kemp-Roth if the president dug in his heels and forced the issue to a showdown on the House floor. Reagan only needs 26 Democratic votes to control the House if he can keep all the Republicans in line, and the GOP has the clear majority in the Senate.

WHITE HOUSE CHIEF of staff James Baker, the principle Reagan negotiator on the cut-tax issue also has publicly expressed confidence that the coalition can be reactivated, if necessary.

"The budget cut was tough, but do-able," said Baker. "The tax cut is tougher, but do-able."

Both Gramm and Latta also scoff at the suggestion that the coaltion is anything but alive and well.

Gramm termed "speculation" that the coalition was collapsing "sheer folly," and declared:

"Any group that can build a coalition on cutting $52 billion worth of programs, all of which have big political constituencies, can build a coalition to cut taxes, which is roundly popular."

Latta agreed, declaring that the coalition "can hang together and it will."

Action sought on ailing Social Security system

By DENISE ROMAND
Hearst Special News Service

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration has issued a call for complete overhaul of the Social Security system, warning that unless "bold, decisive action" is taken, the system will go bankrupt.

Appearing before a House subcommittee hearing, Health and Human Services Secretary Richard Schweiker and Budget Director David Stockman said failure to act would endanger solvency of the retirement system for some 36 million Americans who receive Social Security benefits.

But Rep. J.J. Pickle, D-Texas, Chairman of the House Ways and Means Social Security Subcommittee countered that his panel would not approve an administration plan to cut early retirement benefits unless it contains a "reasonable" phase-in period.

The chairman suggested the administration consider making its early retirement proposal a long range plan.

The administration has proposed that early retirees between the ages of 62 and 65 receive 55 percent of the full retirement benefits rather than the 80 percent provided under current law.

Schweiker said the administration is willing to accept other changes in its controversial plan to shore up the nearly bankrupt retirement system.

"Our proposals are not carved in stone," he added. "We look forward to working with the subcommittee in the bipartisan spirit on the fundamental task of putting Social Security back on a sound fiscal and programmatic footing."

Testifying before the panel, Stockman said, "Unless both the House and Senate pass a bill...which can be signed by the President, the most devastating bankruptcy in the history of the United States will occur around 1982."

Asked why Old Age and Survivors Insurance and Disability could not simply draw from the Hospital Insurance Trust Fund, he replied: "Drawing reserves out of the HI trust fund to mask survivor insurance deficits would be worse than simply robbing from Peter to pay Paul."

He said that it would jeopardize health insurance benefits for the elderly without solving the fundamental problems which jeopardize their retirement income.

Schweiker also admitted that whatever changes are made will be difficult and may even be unpopular. But without these changes, he said, "the cumulative Social Security trust fund deficit of income needed to adequately meet benefit outgo, would, under pessimistic economic assumptions, be as high as $111 billion dollars during the next five years."

New California museum displays railroad's past

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — The sights and sounds of life on the railroad will greet visitors to the new $14 million California State Railroad Museum here, which officials claim is the largest museum of its kind in the world.

For the recent opening celebration of the museum, a project of the state Department of Parks and Recreation, nine days of skits, songs and dances were staged in and around the cavernous new three-story building in Old Sacramento, and famous trains from all over were on display.

A replica of "Stephenson's Rocket," a little puffer-belly built in England in 1829, was flown here by the National Railway Museum of York, England.

The Smithsonian Institution in Washington, D.C., flew out the "John Bull," which was built in England in 1831 and shipped to the United States on a sailing ship. It is the oldest surviving steam locomotive in America.

The B&O railway museum in Baltimore sent the "Tom Thumb," a replica of the first American-built locomotive, dating from 1830. From Portland, Ore., came a giant steam locomotive that pulled Southern Pacific's famed "Daylight" passenger trains between San Francisco and Los Angeles, and more recently took the American Freedom Train across the country.

Before leaving, visitors can walk through a huge old Canadian sleeper. It sways as if in motion. Lights flash by the window.

Wandering storyteller uses audience as lab

By BARRY RENFREW
Associated Press Writer

PARKERSBURG, W.Va. (AP) — Gamble Rogers is a wandering storyteller, a walking library of tales and tall stories whose roots stretch back to America's beginnings.

"My stories are often celebrations of Acardian lifestyle, truck drivers and fishermen, because those are often my audiences," Rogers said on a stopover in West Virginia. "I'm a troubadour."

Rogers eases peoples' cares and tickles their souls with stories about country bumpkins, small town sheriffs and the salesman who saved himself from the jaws of a bulldog with a blow from a 14-pound naugahyde Bible complete with colored pictures, maps of the Holy Land and a complete concordance.

"It's (telling stories) is the hardest work I know of. I'm like a monkey at a typewriter trying to write 'Macbeth.' But every one is worth it to me," Rogers said.

A tall man with a wry smile, Rogers draws his stories from the small ironies and quiet humor of life.

His first job was as a Bible salesman, he claims, and though he doesn't remember selling many books, he said he did save himself once by using several copies to fend off a bulldog.

"Sometimes the best stories are lies, but they may be the most pretty things you've heard," he said. "So, I'm leary of researching things in case I find out they are not true."

So there are stories about the "legal beaver" in a seersucker suit with five "Hermann Hesse novels in one hand and a bowl of granola in the other," or the country schoolteacher who found a snake in her desk, and the backwoods preacher who set out to save the world.

"I put the stories together on my feet in front of audiences," Rogers said. "Audiences for me are like laboratories. I gauge their reactions, using them like soundings."

Carefully crafted over dozens of retellings, the details in each story are painstakeingly exact. And in every word lurks a smile or a joke.

"They all come out of experience — but they take a long time."

Each story is set to Rogers' guitar and the music rises and falls with his voice, serving as punctuation for each yarn. "Some of the best stories are told to music," Rogers said.

As he moves around the country, telling stories at colleges, clubs, or country festivals, Rogers said he also hunts out old folk stories. Storytelling, once a common form of entertainment, has all but disappeared and thousands of tales have been lost, he said.

"Part of my job is to collect stories and songs that have meaning from the old times," he said.

Rogers said he took up a storytelling after spending what he described as five respectable years as an architect. At night, he sang and told stories in bars, and finally decided that he wanted to do it all of the time.

"I couldn't keep away from it."

Local students ready for state science fair

Science students from across the state, including several representatives from Midland, will converge upon The University of Texas at Austin June 2-5 for the annual Texas Energy Science Symposium for High Schools.

The event, in its 21st year, is expected to attract more than 500 students and their teachers who will hear scientists and engineers discuss energy-related topics.

Students selected to attend from this area are Dary Jones and Greg Spencer from Midland High School and Cathy Olsen from Lee High School. Dale Biggs, a science instructor at Lee High School, will accompany the Midland students to the meeting.

Participants will spend two afternoons touring the science laboratories at the university, including those where experiments are being carried on in thermonuclear (fusion) research.

The symposium is being sponsored jointly by the university and the Texas Atomic Energy Research Foundation, which is made up of ten investor-owned electric utility companies in Texas including Texas Electric Service Co. The foundation was established in 1957 for the advancement of knowledge of energy through scientific and educational activities.

Shella Hanson (right) and Rhonda Suits show off the fish they caught in the streets of Greenwood south of Indianapolis when heavy rains caused a creek to overflow. The 34 inch, 29-pound carp (right) was thrashing around in the street when Mrs. Hanson caught it. Mrs. Suits' fish came in under four pounds. Both are considering returning the fish to their natural habitat.

Former back-yard laundry expands into major business

URBANA, Ill. (AP) — Albert Shelton's laundry business has come a long way since 1942, when his mother created it in the back yard to support her family.

Shelton, 45, now operates a business which handles more than 3,300 pounds of laundry an hour and has a fleet of trucks to deliver the finished product within a 250-mile radius. It employs 70 people — mostly Vietnamese and minorities.

"They needed jobs, we needed help, so it worked out good for both of us," said Shelton, who is the 1981 Small Business Administration business person of the year in Illinois.

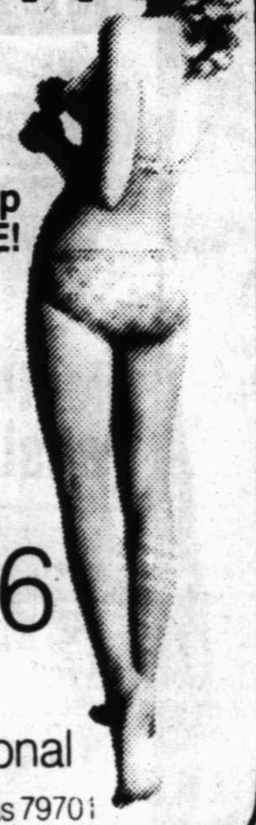

Shelton says he still remembers washing with a washboard and large kettle in the back yard of his childhood home. He keeps the kettle in his office as a memorial to his mother's hard work and as a reminder of his firm's humble beginning.

Shelton earned 13 varsity athletic letters while attending University High School in Urbana, but had to give up football to help re-establish the family business after a fire in 1950.

Tracy Whitley is the recipient of a $250 scholarship from the Uptown Business and Professional Women's Club. She is a graduate of The University of Texas at Austin and will attend the UT Law School next fall.

Having good crop of pecans means good management

By CHARLES W. GREEN
Midland County Extension
Agent — Agriculture

Growing a good crop of pecans means good management in combination with soil, water, zinc and weed management.

Pecan trees store a large percentage of the food they manufacture each year. As this stored food accumulates, the tree can then begin to bear relatively regular crops. So nitrogen needs to be applied every year and not just when a deficiency is seen. Commonly available nitrogen source fertilizers are 21-0-0, 33-0-0, and 45-0-0.

After the pecan tree is one year old, apply 21-0-0 at the rate of 2 pounds per inch trunk diameter or 33-0-0 at 1 pound per inch trunk diameter or 45-0-0 at 2/3 pound per inch. Nitrogen may be scattered on the surface within the drip-line and thoroughly watered in.

Apply nitrogen fertilizer in late February or early March or at least two weeks before the trees leaf out. Put on a second application of 1/2 the above rates in late May if trees have set a heavy crop.

Zinc is essential for optimum pecan production and may be applied to the soil (zinc chelate or zinc sulfate) for home yard trees or as filiar ssprays (zinc sulfate or NZN0. For soil application (practical when only a few trees are involved) use zinc chelate as directed on the label or apply one pound zinc sulfate per inch trunk diameter. Divide the total amount of either among holes punched 8 to 12 inch deep around the drip line. For foliar application, spray when the leaves are small and rapidly expanding. Use NZN according to the label or zinc sulfate (36 percent) at two to three pounds per 100 gallons of water (2 teaspoons per gallon). Older trees will need four to six sprayings; young trees may need to be sprayed at two week intervals for most of the season (as long as new leaves are growing).

The best index for determining nitrogen, zinc, soil, weed control and water needs is terminal growth of non-bearing shoots. If all other management practices are in order, low nitrogen can seriously limit shoot growth. All non-bearing shoots on mature trees (over 12 years of age) should be more than four inches but less than 12 inches. If growth is less, add more nitrogen. If growth is more, cut back.

As far as water management is concerned, pecans on good soil can bear with only 32 inches of moisture from April to October. However, more water can enhance tree health and regular production. Pecans require about an inch of water each week from April to October but the optimum would be two inches per week. In West Texas most of this will have to come from irrigation, since rainfal averages only 14 inches annually.

The pecan tree or crop has its greatest water needs in March immediately before growth begins, in June as nuts begin to size, in late July as kernels begin to fill, and in early September as kernels continue to develop. Water stress at these four periods can result in serious crop loss or complete crop failure. Stress during the lst period can result in a poor crop the following year.

A herbicidy glyphosate (Roundup) can be used to control weeds and grass around pecan trees that compete for mositure and nutrients. On young, smooth barked trees do not alow spray slution to contact the tree. Shields can be made with roofing pap felt, pistic, etc., to protect the trunks while spraying. Glyphosate does not have soil activity so will not damage roots. Be careful when spraying around home yard trees to keep the spray off other landscape plants. The herbicide isnon-selective and will kill or damage all plants which te spray contacts.

June is often characterized by extensive dry spells with gardens neding increased amounts of supplemental watering. Moisture, essential for plant growth and survival, can be conserved by applying a mulch over the plant's roots or over bed areas. Choose a clean mulch, free of weds, and one which will remain loose and well aerated. Chopped straw, hay, pine needles, shredded bark and oak leaf mulches are excellent for conserving moisture, keeping the soil cool and reducing weed growth.

Bill passed giving Ector County court jurisdiction

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Texas Senate gave unanimous approval Wednesday to a bill which would give the County Court at Law of Ector County concurrent jurisdiction with district courts in civil cases involving between $500 and $20,000.

House Bill 1797, by Rep. Jay Gibson of Odessa, passed on the Senate Local and Uncontested Calendar.

Other bills which passed on that calendar Wednesday include:

HB 1335, by Rep. Joe Hanna of Breckenridge, which would require that the economic feasibility of incorporating solar energy devices in state buildings be determined and implemented if feasible;

HB 200, by Rep. Foster Whaley of Pampa, which authorizes the Green Belt Municipal and Industrial Water Authority to purchase and lease underground water rights in Donkey, Hall, Childress, Hardeman and Ford counties up to 3,500 acre-feet annually for emergency use; and,

HB 1278, by Rep. Tom Craddick of Midland, which adds the commissioner of the Department of Health to the membership of the Texas Energy and Natural Resources Advisory Council.

No Senate amendments were added so the bills now go to the governor.

Peanut imports top quota

WASHINGTON (AP) — Imports of peanuts into the United States have reached more than 82 percent of the emergency quota authorized by former President Carter and President Reagan, the Agriculture Department reports.

Though last week, more than 248.4 million pounds of peanuts had been shipped into the United States, the bulk of them from India and China, the department said.

Under a special quota, 301.7 million pounds of peanuts can be imported through the end the July.

The usual import quota is only 1.7 million pounds. But after drought devasted the domestic peanut crop last year, Carter authorized an additional 200 million pounds of peanut imports in December.

That ceiling was increased by 100 million pounds last month by Reagan.

The Midland Regional Airport... just another great part of Midland...a great city!

Without air transportation, Midland might be little more than an isolated oasis in the west Texas sun. The Midland Regional Airport makes us and our industry easily accessible to any part of the country. Over 32,000 people arrive and depart here on the average each month using our commercial airlines. More private and corporate aircraft per capita operate here than in any other city in the nation. Almost 500 aircraft take-off and land at the Midland Regional Airport every single day. Thanks to the Midland Regional Airport, Midland is not an isolated oasis, but a dynamic city of the world, and...at the First National Bank of Midland, we're proud to be a part!

RINGING THE BELL

Black Americans can, will overcome all this trouble

With BOB TIEUEL

Joe Black Writes: "Dear Bob, There are some difficult times ahead for black people. But the problems are not unsurmountable. We, black Americans, can and will overcome ... Thank God, 'trouble don't last always' as the spiritual goes. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. once said: We must learn to live together as brothers, or perish as fools. I agree.

"Our economy can be improved through jobs and/or entrepreneurship. The development of new business is never an easy task and the probably reduction of funds for minority business development won't make the task any easier. So let's take the path that requires nothing but desire, discipline, dedication and initiative. I am talking about educational and job preparation. Our young people have to stay in school and not only do their best but they must select courses of study that relate to the jobs that they want. And black adults, with dead-end jobs, must give up some party-time and enroll in some evening classes that will make them more competitive in today's labor market." A Bellringer, Joe Black, vice-president — The Greyhound Corporation.

P.S. We must not forget that the welfare system was created to provide temporary aid for those who have fallen on hard times. Too many Americans are looking upon welfare as a way of life. They are allowing a welfare check to deprive them of their pride and dignity by destroying their desire to use their minds, bodies and work to support their families ... We should not judge President Reagan by his plan to cut a total of $3,587 billion dollars from food stamps, ADC, Medicaid and subsidized housing rentals. These cuts will still enable him to spend nearly the same amount of money as President Carter in each of these programs. And there won't be a reduction at all for those who qualify as being genuinely in need.

BEST EDITORIAL of Week from Black Point of View: "If you ar a black and you wanted to register to vote before 1964 ... To make sure you are literate enough to cast an intelligent vote, they found out by asking you such as: "How many bubbles are in a bar of soap?" "How far can a little dog run in the woods?" If you are black and answered this foolishness for a white voter-registration official, it ws pretty plain that you couldn't give a literate answer and you weren't going to register to vote.

The law effectively squelches the various cynical "literacy flimflams. It is unfortunate that this law applies to all or part of only 25 states. The obvious presumption is that such institutionalized racism does not exist and has not existed in the other 25 states .

BELIEVE IT OR NOT: Loving County in far West Texas has 114 people spread over 647 square miles. The county seat and only town is Mentone — population 44. It has not doctor, preacher, lawyer or dentist; no stores, hotel, restaurants or theaters; no airport, railroad or public transportation; no hospital, no school, no church. Not even a cemetery. What Loving County has is money. The 114 people in Loving County make about $10 million annually. That makes Loving County the second richest in the U.S. ... There is a Church of Christ with the sheriff in charge, but there's no pastor.....

The county has not received even a penny of federal aid in 18 years, it is repoted and there hasn't been a birth recorded in the county in 40 years, mostly because the nearest hospital is in Winkler County.

CHIMES: The most frequently used weapon for suicide and homicide is the handgun, which is found in two out of every 10 American homes and is the fifth leading cause of death, according to a recent special panel in Washington, D.C.

Students put Beetle up on roof

KALAMAZOO, Mich. (AP) — Five students who slid, pushed and pulled a Volkswagen Beetle 60 feet to the top of their high school did it because someone told them it couldn't be done, they say.

The Loy Norrix High School students have agreed to reimburse the school for the cost of removing the car that greeted students returning this week from a Memorial Day holiday.

The freshman and four seniors who hauled the VW body — minus wheels, windows and engine — to the roof of the school's main entrance said they just wanted to "pull a non-destructive prank" before school ended.

"What really made us do it was that everybody said it was impossible," said Dan Babcock, 16.

First Lady Nancy Reagan speaks with Barbara Walters during a recent interview in New York, during which Mrs. Reagan said she has had trouble sleeping since the assassination attempt on her husband. As for her husband's alleged assailant, John Hinckley, Mrs. Reagan said "I had to pray for John Hinckley also, because we're all God's children and if he loves me, he loves John Hinckley also. No passport needed to visit New Mexico

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — You can drink the water. Quarantining your dog at the border is unnecessary. Visitors do not need visas or immunizations. The language is no barrier. And the currency of the realm is dollars, not pesos.

Is one of our 50 missing?

New Mexicans are sure they're still part of the United States. But despite the passage of 69 years since President Taft declared New Mexico the 47th state in our union, some residents of other states — and a few foreign countries — still harbor doubts.

Examples of geographic ignorance abound. Just about every New Mexican has one or two stories filed away.

Mike Pitel, an information specialist with the state Travel Division, said his favorite was a request from a travel agency in Cleveland.

"They sent a telegram that said, 'I hear there is a lost civilization somewhere in the mountains of New Mexico. Could it be Estancia?'"

Estancia is not a "lost civilization." It's a thriving farm and ranch community 54 miles southeast of Albuquerque, the state's largest city.

"I wrote a letter back that played it very straight," Pitel said. "I sent the travel agent our manual and some of our promotional literature."

Since 1970 "New Mexico Magazine" has featured such stories, contributed mostly by readers, in a special column called "One of Our Fifty is Missing (A Continuing Saga)."

"Once in a while we get a letter from someone who thinks we make them up," said associate editor Scottie King. "Then something happens to them and they write and tell us about it."

One such person is Martha L. Wilson, a former Roswell resident now living in Anderson, Ind., where she teaches Spanish.

She related that she often wondered how people came up with the anecdotes until one day when she mentioned to a friend that she very much enjoyed traveling through New Mexico — taking all the little side roads, wandering through the mountain villages.

She said her friend looked rather disapproving and said, "We enjoy that kind of travel, too, but we certainly wouldn't want to drive in that area by ourselves. Of course, since you speak their language, it must help to communicate with the natives."

And there are more:

—The waitress in Albuquerque who told about the man who had a steak dinner and tried to pay for it with pesos. When the waitress told him that pesos weren't the currency in New Mexico, he lamented, "But I had all my money changed before I came here!"

—The Artesia woman who, at the completion of a business call to a laboratory in New York City, was told, "You surely are coming in loud and clear. Much better than calls I have been receiving in the United States this morning."

—The New Mexico man who was stopped by the highway patrol while driving through Pennsylvania on his way back to school. The patrolman looked at his license plate, then asked for his driver's license, I.D. card — and visa.

—The Las Cruces physician who tried to subscribe to a medical journal, but got his check back along with a letter telling him to send $13 more (foreign country rate) and to make the payment in U.S. dollars.

—The Silver City woman who called the toll-free number for a hotel chain to make reservations in Ruidoso, 140 miles to the east.

'Don't can that trash!' Find a good use for it

By CLARA HEMPHILL
Associated Press Writer

ROME (AP) — Most people think of garbage as something to throw away. But in Rome they turn it into animal feed. In Paris, they burn it to heat houses and generate electricity. In Chicago, they get methane gas out of it.

"There's a lot of stuff that can be used in garbage," said Mirella D'Argcangeli, a member of the Rome City Council and a delegate to an international conference on garbage here. "The thing that I really think is a mistake is not to do anything with it — to just throw it away."

City planners, engineers and political leaders from 37 countries met in Rome recently to talk about what to do with the millions of tons of garbage produced by modern cities.

In rural areas and in many cities, there is still plenty of room to put the trash in landfills. But some cities have run out of room and are looking for cheaper ways to get rid of rubbish than trucking it miles out of

With the cost of energy going up, some cities are trying to get electricity, gas or steam heat out of what their citizens throw away.

Rome sends its garbage to a plant that extracts the metal with a huge magnet, sifts out the paper and plastic with fans and whirlpools of water, and separates out the orange peels and other organic material to be used for animal feed and fertilizer. What can't be recycled is burned and the heat powers a steam turbine that runs the plant.

It looks like a Rube Goldberg device, rattling and shaking with shovels and sieves and centrifuges. Unlike the fanciful inventions of the American cartoonist, however, it's practical: it costs about $8.50 to dispose of a ton of garbage in the plant, or about one-third of what it costs London to burn its garbage, according to Mrs. D'Argcangeli. Rome has been using the plant for 10 years.

In France, three incinerators on the outskirts of Paris burn the garbage from the capital and 54 surrounding communities.

Some of the heat turns water into steam, which is piped into Paris and warms about 7 percent of the city's houses. The rest generates electricity.

Jean Defeches, president of a French garbage-treatment agency and a delegate to the conference, says it's cheaper to burn the garbage than put it in a dump.

HOUSEHUNTING WITH AN ENERGY EYE

When househunting today, it makes sense to check into the energy efficiency of the house you have in mind. Here are some items to look for:

Is the attic floor insulated with at least six inches of fiberglass or other material if it is not used space? Attic insulation of only six inches will save 14% on any annual fuel bill.,

Are all windows and doors in the house weatherstripped and caulked? This simple measure can save at least 12% on your annual energy bill. If they are not, you should spend a Saturday afternoon doing the job if you buy the house.

Does the house have storm doors and storm windows? Are they in good condition? If they are a few years old, they may need some inexpensive caulking to keep them watertight.

Does the house have a clock-thermostat device? Automatic thermostats protect you from your own forgetfulness. Turning down your thermostat ten degrees at night can save 11% on your heating bill.

Are hot water pipes or hot air ducts insulated in unheated passages? If they are, it will cut down your energy costs. If not, you should consider doing this yourself if you purchase the house.

If you have any questions on this subject or any other aspect of real estate, feel free to phone or drop in at DON HARVEY Realtors 702 Andrews Hwy. Phone 683-5333. We're here to help! Come in for your free copy of "Home or Living" magazine.

Enterprise Zones could resurrect inner cities

New York congressmen unveil urban renewal program

By ROBERT E. THOMPSON
Chief, Washington Bureau
Hearst Special News Service

WASHINGTON — In the decaying heart of the inner city, small businesses will flourish, shops will open, services will be expanded, aging houses will be renovated, welfare rolls will decline and there will be jobs for unskilled individuals who have recently known only unemployment.

That is the optimistic vision behind "Enterprise Zones" — an urban rehabilitation program to be unveiled this week by two New York Congressmen, Republican Jack Kemp and Democrat Robert Garcia, after many months of consultation with the Reagan administration and a variety of private institutions ranging from the U.S Chamber of Commerce to the Urban League.

The program — utilizing tax incentives and reduced regulation to lure small business into the blighted inner city — was the single urban redevelopment initiative advanced by Ronald Reagan in the 1980 campaign. In his Oct. 28 debate with Jimmy Carter in Cleveland, Reagan outlined the basic thrust of the proposal and promised, if elected, to move forward with it.

But enterprise zone legislation introduced last June by Kemp and Garcia was seriously flawed. It made no provision for government assistance to help provide the police and fire protection, water and sewage lines, health care, job training and other facilities needed to support business development in depressed urban neighborhoods.

So Kemp and Garcia went back to the drawing board. Under their new proposal, according to Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige, federal community development block grants will become available to provide the services needed to draw business enterprise into the blighted central city.

"All the tax abatement in the world won't work," said Baldrige,"if people don't make a profit."

While the commerce secretary contended that the federal government should "provide the overall opportunity and channel for grants," there must be a limit on the number of enterprise zones to be initiated. "We want enterprise zones where they will truly aid jobs and be practicable and work," Baldrige told a small group of newsmen.

But, added Baldrige, under the Reagan concept of "Federalism" it will be up to states and cities to determine where enterprise zones should be situated and how their establishment should proceed.

A spokesman for Kemp said, "Jack is concerned that it not be a token program, but that it be a large-scale demonstration program." The aide added that the new Kemp-Garcia bill will incorporate language to prevent businesses from moving a few blocks simply to take advantage of the tax incentives and other benefits offered to those who establish shops and plants in enterprise zones.

In the Senate the legislation will be introduced by a couple of Republicans who come from the liberal side of the spectrum, Rudy Boschwitz of Minnesota and John Chafee of Rhode Island.

If the program works, badly depressed pockets in major cities all across the nation will be rehabilitated. Business will move into areas of high joblessness instead of having the jobless leave the city in search of employment.

It is an unusual concept orignated in England when Peter Hall, a socialist professor at Reading University, and Sir Geoffrey Howe, Margaret Thatcher's Conservative chancellor of the exchequer, sat down to discuss ways of solving urban problems.

In the U.S. Congress the enterprise zones program has broad support stretching from conservative Republicans to liberal Democrats. But it will not be a cheap program to implement.

Despite tax incentives, businessmen will not risk moving into poverty and crime-ridden areas unless they have sound assurances that they and their investment will be protected and that they can be successful in their enterprise. Those assurances must be supported federal financial assistance.

Like so many programs devised by presidents from Franklin D. Roosevelt to Jimmy Carter, Ronald Reagan's enterprise zone plan is noble in its objective but uncertain in its implementation. But, like those programs of the past, it is worth trying--because the only way America's urban problems can be brought under control is through trying.

THE STORY BEHIND THE STORIES YOU READ ABOUT CELEBRITIES

By Josie

Q. I read that Bette Davis had a fight with the governor of New York. What did she do? J. Charney, Tacoma, Wash.

A. There was a mixup over a birthday party to be held by the governor in honor of Ms. Davis. Staff members had forgotten that he was due to be in another city that day and were forced to cancel the festivities. Ms. Davis then held her own celebration but the governor still couldn't attend. To make up, he phoned and sent roses, but she was still slightly miffed. "Next year, I want a parade down Fifth Avenue," she said. And she may, in fact, get it.

Q. I think Peter Strauss from "Masada" is incredibly sexy. Is he a ladies' man? J. Murcer, Siesta Key, Fla.

A. From all reports, he does seem to be a popular, but usually with one main woman at a time. (Ex-girlfriends don't always disappear gracefully either — his former two year roommate, model Sheena Hoffman, recently sued him in a "palimony" case.) And he does seem to be a romantic, judging by his idea of the best way to spend a day, "in bed, not alone, eating and reading the papers."

Q. I just saw "All Night Long" and I cannot imagine why Barbra Streisand would have agreed to be in it. Is she losing her senses? L. Stephens, Northridge, Calif.

A. No, it was a very well-paid favor. When Lisa Eichhorn, Gene Hackman's original co-star, was released from the film, Streisand, a friend of the director Jean Pierre Aumont (her former agent's husband) agreed to step in, raking in a hefty $4½ million for her labors. Incidentally, Eichhorn had never met Streisand, and when she did run into her at a Beverly Hills ice cream store recently, she intended to compliment her on the role in an actress-to-actress fashion. But she got carried away. "I forgot to tell her who I was," says Eichhorn, "so she just thought I was a fan." Embarrassed, the younger actress leaned over and tied her shoes until the star exited.

Anything you'd like to know about prominent personalities? Write: Josie, SUNDAY WOMAN magazine, 235 E. 45th Street, New York, N.Y. 10017. Sorry, we can't answer any letters individually.

Q. I keep hearing that Wayne Newton is a powerful man in Las Vegas. Does he own the city, or what? J. Gritch, Portland, Ore.

A. Besides setting attendance records as a performer, he does own property, including the Aladdin Hotel. In fact, his Las Vegas notoriety will extend even further next season when he portrays himself, as hotel owner, on the ABC series "Vegas."

Q. Billie Jean King is much older than most professional tennis players. How long is she going to continue competing? K. Cerone, Baton Rouge, La.

A. At 37, Billie Jean is just a part-time player, with most of her attention shifting to TV commentating. She's still a perfectionist, however. Regarding her recent coverage of the Avon Championships, she said, "I was terrible. I have to keep practicing, and take more diction lessons to get rid of my Southern California accent." Still, NBC was sufficiently impressed to begin negotiating with her to cover Wimbledon. CBS wants her in the pressbox for the U.S. Open.

Q. I keep reading about the romance between Andy Gibb and Victoria Principal. Has Andy ever been married? L.C., Sacramento, Calif.

A. Yes, briefly, to a woman named Kim when he was 19.

Q. My sister and I have been arguing about the designer Halston — I say he got his start designing gowns for Jackie Onassis when she was First Lady. She says he started as an assistant in the French couture house of Dior. Who's right? S. Jenkins, San Antonio, Tex.

A. You're closer. Halston started out as a milliner, at New York's prestigious Bergdorf Goodman department store. His first achievements in fashion design were the pillbox hats that were the trademark of the then-First Lady, Jackie Kennedy.

I Believe

Loni Anderson says she's found it difficult to be a star and a mother. But the person she calls "the force of my life" has made the struggle worthwhile

By Colette Bouchez

I think that if there was ever anyone who provided a real source of inspiration for me, it would have to be my daughter, Deidra. I have had her for almost half of my life, and I truly believe that because of her, it has been the best life any mother could ever ask for."

A far cry from the fast talking, sexy, blond Jennifer on CBS's "WKRP In Cincinnati," Loni Anderson talks honestly about her relationship with her 16-year-old daughter, Deidra, whom she calls "the life force of my life."

Loni continues, "The one thing that Deidra has provided for me is a sense of responsibility. I have somebody to take care of, and I believe that is a very important ingredient in continuing to strive, and in getting ahead, both financially and success-wise. I had to make sure that I could always take care of her, the way I really wanted to, and that, in and of itself, provided a source of strength and inspiration for me.

"She has influenced many decisions in my life, both by what she says, and the opinions she has, as well as by just being a part of my life. Because I love her so deeply, I would think twice about a lot of things before I did them... I would never want her to be hurt because of something I did. For example," says Loni, "I would never consider anything like a Playboy centerfold, because of my daughter. Even during the times when I was in school, and really needed the money badly, (Loni holds a degree in teaching) I refused that kind of work. I didn't want to subject Deidra to any kind of embarassment with her peers at school. I firmly believe that if someone is a true inspiration to you, like she is to me, somehow things work out for the best."

Being in the entertainment industry automatically puts people in the limelight, and "stardom" does not come without its problems; Loni has found that it is not always easy to be both mother and star.

"I just hope that I have been and will continue to be, a good mother," says Loni. "Everyday I strive to be open and honest enough to lead her in the right directions. Whenever possible, I try to let my daughter know just how much she matters to me. I really believe that if a child knows how much she is loved and wanted and cared about, and if she can feel and see this by the actions you take in your own life, then she will grow up feeling special. There are a lot of pressures in this world, and day by day, children are pressed into making larger and more important decisions about their life. I believe that if they realize just how much they are an important part of your life, it may make those decisions easier for them."

"I wrote her a note," says Loni, "that told her that the time that she has been with me, almost half my life, has been the best time... the best years... the best memories. I really believe that with all my heart, and I hope she remembers it forever." ■

Microwave Madness

If you're puzzled by some aspects of microwave cooking, here are answers to the questions most often asked

Why should some foods be cooked with a cover?

With a cover, heat does not escape into the air in the oven cavity, so cooking is quicker and foods cook more evenly. Also, covers keep foods moist and prevent spattering. Ovens that automatically calculate correct cooking time by means of a moisture sensor require a cover or wrapping on food when the feature is used, because the oven senses the first bit of steam that escapes from under the cover, then automatically determines time left to cook.

To prevent spattering, as when cooking poultry, use waxed paper. For some foods, paper towels can be used to absorb moisture (baked potatoes) or grease (bacon).

Microwave energy cannot pass through metal; in older ovens, metal could damage the costly magnetron tube by reflecting the energy back to it (newer tubes are shielded to prevent this feedback). Arcing (which produces sparks) will still occur if metal touches the walls of the oven cavity, which will then become permanently pitted. And thin, wirelike strips of metal, such as a twist tie or gold band around china, will arc and-or become hot enough to cause burning. The best answer is to check your oven's instruction book for recommendations.

Most manufacturers suggest the use of foil for "shielding" (slowing down cooking) areas of food that might overcook, such as poultry drumsticks, or square-cake corners. Most also permit cooking frozen dinners in the foil tray if it is shallow enough (¾ inch deep or less). Remove the foil cover and energy will enter the food from the top only, rather than from all sides as it would in nonmetal utensils, so cooking will be a bit slower.

Must frozen precooked foods be defrosted first?

Small quantities of food can go directly from the freezer into the microwave oven set at "high" power, which will defrost and then reheat the food. For larger quantities, it's better to start using the "defrost" setting, then finish cooking at "high" or the appropriate setting.

How can the appearance of microwave cooked foods be improved?

In a multipower-level microwave oven, using medium to low power, or reducing the power level after starting on high, will help tender roasts to brown well. Also, basting sauces or sprinkle-on coatings can be used to enhance the color of many microwave-cooked foods. For example, soy sauce can be brushed on meat or rubbed into poultry before cooking; poultry can be brushed with oil or margarine, then sprinkled with paprika before cooking. Casseroles can be topped with bread crumbs or crushed potato chips after the final stirring. Your conventional oven can be used for last-minute browning of roast turkey or chicken.

Breads made with whole-grain, dark flour, or with molasses have good color. Upside-down cakes, cakes with toppings, or cakes to be frosted are good choices.

A microwave oven gives excellent results when cooking foods that don't require browning, such as leftovers, fruits, seafood, sauces, fillings, and frostings. Vegetables retain exceptionally good color because they are quickly cooked in little or no water.

What's the best way to reheat breads and rolls?

Wrap them in waxed paper, plastic wrap, or place in a plastic roasting bag. Microwave them until they are just warm to the touch, then let stand, still wrapped, for a few moments. If cooked until the center is hot, they will have hard spots and will be tough and chewy.

How are meats cooked?

Large tender cuts cook best on medium (50 percent) and-or low (30 percent) power; they turn out tender, juicy, and browned. Let stand about 10 minutes before carving. Cook small, flat, tender cuts at high power, as in conventional pan broiling, and use a browning dish to give them good color. Serve immediately.

Less-tender cuts and meats such as pork and veal, which tend to dry out, should be cooked on low to medium power, in a dish with a snug-fitting or plastic-wrap cover; or cook in a plastic roasting bag.

How to Survive a Wedding

(When It's Not Your Own)

By Michaele Weissman

It's a rare guest indeed who can emerge unscathed from that flowers-and-lace-and-drunk-Uncle-Harry scene. But it can be done!

For years, the people I know had the consideration and tact not to marry. Recently, however, an alarming trend has developed. Without so much as a bow in the direction of my single 31-year-old sensibility, friends and family members have begun to wed, putting me in a state of frenzy. I face the prospect of all these weddings with a queasiness of stomach comparable to that of an income-tax cheat in an IRS waiting room.

Other people's weddings can undermine a single woman's equilibrium, particularly since social customs surrounding weddings froze sometime in late 1952. Never mind that the year at hand is 1981. On the day they wed, the bridal couple is miraculously transformed into a dutiful son and loving daughter, each of whom is wisely making his or her parents happy by doing the right thing. You, meanwhile, as a single woman, are doing nothing except messing up the symmetry of the carefully planned, two-by-two, four-couples-to-a-table seating arrangement.

This issue of where you sit is serious. At the wedding of my cousin Nat, I was actually seated at the teen table. The way Aunt Ruth sees it, if you are not married, you are not grown-up. I don't know when you last had a 15-year-old for a dinner partner, but let me tell you, trying to talk to one is about as rewarding as bailing out the Bismarck with an ice bucket. Since I'm not going to camp this summer and the last book he read was a "Spider Man" comic, we shared little common ground. Fortunately, my reflexes are excellent, and I was able to duck before the peas my tablemates hurled at one another came to rest on my decolletage.

I, however, am not a woman to be undone by a few flying vegetables. Having attended close to one dozen weddings in the last five months, I have developed and refined techniques for survival that make it possible for me to enjoy the free champagne. Herewith, a few of my more successful strategies.

LOOK BETTER THAN THE BRIDE

This isn't as difficult as you might at first think. True, brides spend hundreds of dollars for their dresses, but this does not mean they look good at the altar. In general, brides are abused and exhausted females. Let even the most assertive woman become engaged, and a huge machine swoops down and gobbles her up. Brides are run ragged, forced to endure lengthy visits with intolerably dull relatives, denied sleep, and kept indoors writing thank-you notes while the rest of us go sailing. The only time they look beautiful is when fewer than 20 people attend their weddings and in that case, you probably won't be invited.

I plot the details of my appearance at weddings with the care of a four-star chef preparing bouillabaisse. Simple clothing is best. Too many ruffles and accessories make women look nervous, and the illusion you want to create is one of supreme serenity. Avoid floor-length dresses, since they make you look like a tourist. Don't wear pink or coral, or you'll look like a bridesmaid. And skip the flowers in your hair — they make you look eager.

I always try to have a suntan when I am attending a wedding. If this is a particularly traumatic occasion (your younger sister is getting married), it may be worth scheduling a vacation 10 days before the big event. That way, you can fly in from the Caribbean golden brown and relaxed the night before the wedding. This strategy is doubly wise, since your absence during countdown week saves you from 30,000 family phone calls during which a legion of "concerned" relatives will probe the state of your emotions with the delicacy of a 19th century barber amputating a leg.

FIELD QUESTIONS DEFTLY

People will inevitably make certain idiotic inquiries, and you must be prepared to handle them. Aunts and uncles as well as strangers, will ask, "Why isn't a nice, pretty girl like you married?" or "What happened to that wonderful boy, Ira, you used to go with?"

I prefer the subtle approach. To my mind, the stare is the most effective way to answer the unanswerable. When Aunt Ellen sidles up to you at the bar to ask about your marriage prospects, simply give her the stare. Don't say a word, don't look down, don't flinch or fidget — just stare right into her eyes. She will melt like a Popsicle, I guarantee it. Suddenly she will find the buttons on the front of her dress fascinating. And after that, she'll rapidly fade into the hors d'oeuvre table. Another triumph for single womanhood!

Of course, you cannot overuse the stare; and you probably cannot use it at all on your mother, because she'll ask, "Since when have your eyes been crossed?" For many other occasions, however, this is the perfect technique. Besides being superlatively effective; it saves you from saying something rude that might later be held against you.

ESCAPE PASSES NIMBLY

There is something about weddings that makes men who are old enough to be your father feel excessively amorous. You, as a goodlooking single woman, become the object of all their curiosity about the sexual revolution. When Uncle George pats your backside, you had better beat a hasty retreat or you'll spend the afternoon with a 185-pound shadow.

I prefer the quick, surgical approach to this problem. "Uncle George, you should be ashamed of yourself," or "Uncle George, do that one more time, and I'll belt you." Probably Uncle George has had a substantial amount to drink, which means he will not understand more genteel discouragements.

KNOW WHEN NOT TO ATTEND

At certain times in life, a strategic withdrawal is the only way to survive. In general, if you wake up weeping for a week after receiving a wedding invitation, or if you break out in hives that resemble stigmata or find yourself choking and gasping for air, my guess would be that you really do not want to go. In this case, stay away.

Women have been known to break arms and legs two days before their best friend's wedding to avoid having to make an appearance. I, however, consider this an unnecessarily taxing way of excusing oneself. What you do instead is make up a terrific lie a month before the wedding and then stick to it no matter what. The best lies are simple and definite. Never tell a "maybe" lie such as "I might have to go to Milwaukee." That kind of excuse just leads to phone calls asking you please to get out of what you "maybe" have to do.

Also avoid lies having to do with your emotions — such as, "My psychiatrist told me not to go." Lies concerning your professional life or money are given more credence: You have been invited to speak at a sales meeting or academic

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

Summer: It starts on Tuesday

By H.A. TUCK
Public Relations Director
Midland College

For about a thousand students, Monday marks the start of the first summer session. Midland College will register students for the first summer term in the Physical Education Building from 2 to 4 p.m. and from 6 to 9 p.m.

Most of the students pre-registered and have time permits for their registration. Those of you who plan to take a course and didn't register may come to registration from 6 to 8 p.m. on Monday. You'll be processed as quickly as possible.

Classes start on Tuesday with late registration continuing until June 8. The first summer term ends on July 7.

Today the Muscular Dystrophy Association is slated to used the Chaparral Center parking lot from 12 noon until 6 p.m. for a benefit motorcycle contest. We don't have any details, but don't be surprised to find a bunch of cycles in the parking lot.

On Friday at 7 p.m. Chaparral Center will be the scene of a concert appearance by Johnny Paycheck, a well-known country music star. He's appearing in Midland in a benefit for the Midland Police Officers Association.

Robert Tate, stand-out basketball player for the Chaps during 1978-79 and 1979-80, was on campus for a brief visit recently. Robert had a great year at Idaho State, leading the team in scoring and doing well academically. We've also gotten good reports on the basketball feats of Kenneth "Big Time" Young and Chucky McGill at Baltimore and on Tim Shelby at St. Louis.

We're pleased to report that all eight sophomores from this year's basketball team either graduated or completed their courses and are on schedule for their degrees.

The campus was devastated recently by a hailstorm and high winds, but we are grateful to note that the damage — other than a broken pecan tree — was temporary. Daisies and roses are blooming now, along with some day lilies and other flowers. Some of the pecan trees lost limb-tips, but most of the nuts survived and should make a crop this fall. This most amazing growth continues to show up on the pine trees, which really seem to thrive in Midland.

It may be summer, but there are still many opportunities for learning and personal enrichment at MC besides the credit courses. The Department of Community Services offers a wide assortment of "short courses" during the summer, ranging in length from one evening to three or four weeks. The Reporter-Telegram carries a story each Tuesday about the courses starting the following week. Or you can visit the Community Services Department in the north wing of the Administration Building or call 684-7851, extension 147, to obtain more information.

Saying farewell is always difficult, particularly this week as we lose four of our favorite people, but here goes (in alphabetical order):

Anita Blackford, management and fashion merchandising instructor, leaves to practice what she has been teaching. Anita has become owner of "A. Blackford" in San Miguel Square, returning to the fashion field she left to join the Midland College faculty. She's got some great ideas and we think her store will do very well.

Larry Campbell came to MC three years ago to manage Chaparral Center and he showed Midland what a professionally-directed multi-purpose facility could be. He worked with all sorts of groups, promoters, entertainment stars, and local organizations in making Chap Center the entertainment center of West Texas. Larry is going to Lake Charles, Louisiana, to manage a larger facility.

Brian Gilley rescued MC's tennis program four years ago, won a couple of national titles, a flock of conference and regional titles, and gained the respect of college tennis coaches throughout the country. He recruited good people, made them better, and showed others that a low-key approach to high-pressure collegiate tennis would work. Brian is leaving to become a petroleum landman in Midland.

Carole Whitten is a "mother hen" on the campus who is retiring after seven years with MC, first as head of the faculty pool operations then as bookstore manager. Carole is one of the college's best public relations persons, as she makes each students, each visitor, each faculty member feel welcome. Carole and her husband will farm some on their place near Stanton, spend more time with their grandchildren, and travel a lot.

To all of them we say "thanks" for your contributions to MC and good wishes for the future.

"Just Call Me Joan Van Crazy!"

She plays the long-suffering Valene Ewing on "Knot's Landing," but it's the real Joan Van Ark who is feeling the pressures of stardom

By Jane Ardmore

The house is white with green shutters and sits on a quiet street in the San Fernando valley. The windows glow with yellow lamplight, smoke rises from the chimney. It's not a celebrity sort of house, but you know that even before Joan Van Ark opens the door and offers a visitor her warm invitation out of a spring rainstorm.

Joan has just run 10 miles through the hills — something she has done every day for years. She's wearing a sweater, slacks, boots and her rain-wet blond hair is pulled back in a tight ponytail, very different from the beribboned cotton-candy style she favors as Valene Ewing on CBS's "Knot's Landing."

"Come in, come in," Joan begs, "forgive my being breathless and not dressed up. Just call me Joan Van Crazy!"

It is a small house, filled with books, antiques, plants, comfortable furniture, and warmth galore. There is a fire in the fireplace and the scent of beef roasting for dinner wafts in through the kitchen door when Joan ducks in there to fetch chocolate chip cookies and hot tea. Her daughter, Vanessa, 11, peeks in and then returns to her homework in the other room.

It's quite a homey scene — and a dramatic depature from the quarrels and misfortunes Joan Van Ark has to endure on that "Dallas" spin-off, "Knot's Landing." As the wife of the alcoholic Gary Ewing (J.R.'s brother), and mother of the feisty Lucy, Valene Ewing is the subject of much wrong-doing by practically the entire cast of characters. It's soap opera at its soapiest.

For Joan Van Ark, a former Yale drama student and winner of the Los Angeles Drama Critics Circle Award for her performance in Shakespeare's "As You Like It," her work on "Knot's Landing" needs no excuses. "People say, 'How do you justify — with all your stage experience — doing this kind of stuff?' Well, there are moments, like working with Julie Harris on the show, that are absolutely Shakespearean. And other times, like when my husband, Gary Ewing, is drinking, that are very intense and real, a challenge for any actress. If Shakespeare were alive today, he'd be writing shows like 'Dallas' or 'Knot's Landing.'

"It's a fact that an actress has to act. There are only so many plays available. I miss the theater desperately, but if I were to limit my acting to plays, I'd be running all over the country. How can you do that constantly when you're a wife and mother? I'll tell you one thing, I'll never regret Valene. She's so different from anyone I've ever played. Part of me fell in love with her from the first reading of the script."

Joan first "met" Valene Ewing when she was signed to appear in a two-part episode during the first season of "Dallas."

"When my agent told me I would be playing the mother of a 16-year-old, I had a fit!" Joan exclaims. "I'd never played a mother, and I said unless they put on billboards in neon lights that she had this child at 15 and is now 31, well... Then my husband, Jack Marshall (a television news reporter), read the script and talked me into doing it. It was only supposed to be two weeks' work. I'd always done glamorous, sophisticated characters. Here was one really down-home and, for an actress, a real smorgasbord. Finally I decided to stop worrying about the mother angle and do it. I went down to Dallas, and immersed myself. I rode in taxis, just listening to the drivers so I could pick up their accent. It's such a soft and lazy sort of talking, I fell right into it and the crew thought I was a native."

Then, of course, last year suddenly Valene and Gary were spun off to their own series and Joan Van Ark's life changed drastically.

"It's the most exhausting experience I've ever had," she says. "Even training for marathons (she's run 12) is a piece of cake compared to maintaining this seven-day-a-week shooting schedule. To be honest, it's harder this year than last year. Last year was sort of a jolt. It was my first year starring in a series and I was sort of taking deep breaths. This year it's get home, sit in the kitchen, look at my lines for the next day, have a brief talk with Jack, fall into bed, get up at 5:30 a.m. and do it all over again.

"I feel guilty that I'm not the mother and the wife I want to be, but those feelings are minimal compared with the joy of coming home to Jack and Vanessa. If they weren't there, I would be in deep trouble.

"Jack understands why I am an actress. That's part of our relationship, that's the only way he's ever known me. I met him in high school when I was 15 and already into acting. He already had his own radio show. We were both into our careers at 15 years old."

How did she decide on acting? It was easy. She auditioned for her high school play, "The Madwoman of Chaillot" and got the part. That did it. Joan had found her place. Then she met actress Julie Harris. The Denver Post had sent the ingenue actress, Joan, to interview the star, Julie. "From that moment, she was my idol," Joan says. "I used to imitate her voice, that kind of Irish lilt. I'll never forget that interview, I asked her about everything, where I should go for training, what I should do, if I should go to college or not. She said, 'I know how you feel. School was not my favorite place either. I went to Yale Drama School. Perhaps you could write the dean saying I suggested you do so.' I did. I was only there a year but I learned so much!"

Her most thrilling moment as an actress was the night she opened in "Joan of Arc," as a guest star at the University of Colorado. She received a standing ovation and as she stood there, awed by the response, Jack and Vanessa walked onto the stage with a basket of long-stemmed roses. Joan went completely to pieces. She says, "Joan of Arc and Joan Van Ark just left the stage — temporarily discontinued."

Daughter Vanessa has also had a bit of acting experience. On an episode of "Knot's Landing" last season, when Julie Harris played Joan's mother, Vanessa played Valene as a child in the flashback sequences.

"She had never done any acting in her life," says Joan. "Her scenes were with Julie and I stayed in my trailer. I wanted this to be Vanessa's own work and her own moment. In the final scene, she was supposed to cry. The director came to me and said, 'Is she going to cry?' And I said if she does, fine, if she doesn't, that's okay too. She was having the time of her life. I thought she'd never be able to cry, she was too happy. In the scene, the mother and father were fighting because the mother was never at home. Vanessa could certainly identify with that. Julie, as Valene's mother, storms out of the house and Vanessa just sits there with her rag doll. They shot it twice and the second time, she cried. They brought her back to the trailer and crocodile tears were streaming down her face. The director said, 'Congratulations, you have another star in the family.' The crew applauded her — and not for my sake either."

Vanessa has even offered Joan critiques of Valene's scenes on "Knot's Landing." "She'll look at an episode," says Joan, " and say, 'You were distracted, Mom, you weren't concentrating.' She'll know it. I'm overwhelmed at that. And when it's good, she'll say, 'Right on the button, Mom!'

"I'm not going to kid you that maintaining our mother-daughter relationship isn't tricky. Even if you're not an actress or a professional person, every mother has a delicate balance to maintain. Part of my blessing is the fact that I have a husband who is good at fathering. He and Vanessa are very close and I'm so grateful for that. I know this child will never be short-changed on love. But I want her to know that I love her too and that it will all work out. I hope that I never see her getting even with me for being a working mother by standing on Ventura Boulevard with her skirt hiked up and her thumb out."

Success has its benefits but it can also be cruel. The demands of a full-time television series cut into the hours that Joan can spend with her family. "You have to make the time count," Joan emphasizes, "the time when you are at home."

conference in a distant city; you have won a free trip to Spain with six co-workers because your team sold the most stocks and bonds; you are being interviewed on Swedish television; you prepaid your travel agent for a tour of the Seychelle Islands and if you cancel now you will lose $500. (If a lie involves travel, try to actually go to the place you've mentioned. Then send a telegram. This is a nice, though admittedly extravagant, touch.)

One word of caution. Lies have a self-hypnotic power. If I call my office in the morning and say that I am sick so I can stay home and finish a piece of outside work, by the end of the day I invariably feel ill. It is best when you enter this realm of suggestion to tell upbeat lies, otherwise you may really wind up with mononucleosis.

DO NOT EXPECT TO MEET THE MAN OF YOUR DREAMS

If you do decide to go to Tina and Charlie's wedding, you should, by all means, try to have a good time. But you should not hope to meet any "eligible" men. Not one of the men who have called me following my numerous wedding forays has been single. (Just for the record, I rejected all these invitations.)

Once you realize that you are not going to meet your romantic ideal at a wedding, you become free to enjoy the people you do meet. The afternoon I got seated at the teen table, I discovered the very tall, very skinny, sweet-faced son of my mother's cousin. I taught Matthew to do the hustle. He told me all about the research he is doing as an advanced student in marine biology. We had a lovely time together.

At the wedding of my friend Eleanor, I met a woman, a retired history teacher, who smokes a pipe and owns an antique store in western Connecticut. I have since visited Belle and her husband twice. She is keeping an eye out for an old wooden desk, large enough for my expansive work style.

Having gone to so many weddings, I have also picked up much valuable information about how to give one. And you can bet if I ever do decide to marry, I'll know exactly what not to do. At my wedding, my single friends will all be made to feel welcome, and I will not care if there are eight or nine sitting at a table. At my wedding, the bartender will not be so old and feeble that he cannot uncork the champagne; nor will my wedding take place at a rented town house with ferocious African war masks leering down from the walls and so few chairs that arthritic aunts are compelled to sit on the floor. And, believe me, no man I marry will be coerced into wearing a mauve tuxedo. Not only that — at my wedding, the bride will have a tan. ■

A New Plan to Defuse Child Abuse

Child abuse is a monstrous crime. But child abusers are not always monsters. Now, a bold new program offers help for troubled parents — before abuse begins

By Diane O'Brien

Ann lay in bed nursing her three-month-old baby. Glancing at the clock, she called down the hall to her six-year-old son. "Timothy, you better hurry up or you'll be late for school again."

Timothy's eyes filled with tears. "I'm hurrying, Mom."

Hearing the school bus approaching, Ann grabbed Timothy by the shoulder and pushed him toward the front door. "And stay out of trouble today," she warned.

Ann slammed the door and leaned against it with a sigh. Since the baby arrived, she and Timothy seemed to argue non-stop. Hearing the baby crying from the bedroom, she gritted her teeth in frustration, then hollered aloud to no one, "I can't take it any longer." As soon as it was out, she felt deeply, horribly guilty and wondered whether she could ever feel angry enough to physically harm her children? Lately, it seemed more possible.

Frightened and worried, Ann ran to the telephone and dialed the first number listed in the phone book under "child abuse."

Diana Bryson-Gordon, director of the Parent Aide Program at Children's Hospital and Health Center in San Diego answered the call. Sensing the urgency in Ann's voice she asked, "Ann, would you like someone to be with you? We can send a Parent Aide to your home." She explained that Parent Aides were volunteers, parents themselves, who were available to befriend people like Ann — under any kind of overwhelming stress.

Ann knew she needed to talk to someone. New in the neighborhood, she had no friends or relatives close by. Lately, with all their financial worries, she and her husband, Steve, seemed constantly to be on edge with one another. "Yes, please!" she told Bryson-Gordon. "I don't want to be here alone when Timothy gets home from school."

Gordon continued talking with the young mother until Sue Yezbak, a volunteer Parent Aide, arrived at Ann's house. Sue stayed with Ann the entire day. As the mother of two herself, she helped Ann see logical solutions to the discipline problems with Timothy. She recommended a nearby family counseling center for professional guidance and made sure Ann had gained control of her emotions by the time Timothy came home from school.

"Being able to talk to someone who really understood and cared brought me the relief I needed at that moment and in the months to follow," Ann said. "I knew I was not a child abuser, but I felt I could become one. I was out of control and wanted help — and I got it."

Beth knew she could be a good mother to Danny, but their first few months together had been emotionally draining. Born two and a half months prematurely, Danny spent six months in the Intensive Care Unit at Children's Hospital and Health Center. The tubes, wires and monitors that surrounded her son's tiny body frightened Beth. When Danny underwent heart surgery at only a few weeks of age, Beth felt even more scared and alone.

Danny pulled through the surgery and it seemed that the crisis was over. But one evening, while returning to her apartment from the hospital, Beth was raped. The incident overwhelmed her. She became frightened of everything.

The hospital social worker sensed Beth's fear. She knew that the relationship between Beth and Danny's father was shaky and that Beth had no family or friends she could turn to. She suggested that Beth accept the help of a Parent Aide.

When Parent Aide Sharon Reno first visited her, Beth was skeptical. "The idea that I needed help made me feel totally incompetent," she said. "And I wondered how Sharon could ever relate to me. At times I didn't like my baby. A few times I felt like hitting him. How could anyone as stable as Sharon understand such feelings?"

But slowly Sharon gained Beth's trust. Sharon drove Beth and Danny to doctor appointments and took them shopping. Occasionally she took care of Danny, giving Beth time to herself.

Sharon had a rich understanding of child development — she had been a school teacher for several years — and shared her knowledge with Beth. What's more, Sharon had taken care of her son alone for three years before her second marriage, so she knew what it was like to be a single parent.

"The Parent Aide program gave me a friend I would have never had," said Beth. "Sharon showed me how to be myself. Sharon gave me the will to go on living."

Ann and Beth are just two of hundreds of parents across the country who are turning to Parent Aide Programs for support and assistance during a trying time in their lives. Parent Aides are parents who volunteer between four and six hours a week to serve as friends and role models to other parents who are experiencing any stressful situation.

Ultimately Parent Aides are working to prevent child abuse and neglect, a problem known to affect one out of every hundred babies born in the U.S. They are helping parents find ways of dealing successfully with the everyday stresses of family life. And they guide troubled parents to community resources that can meet their specific needs.

The San Diego Parent Aide Program — the one that helped Ann and Beth — is run by Children's Hospital and Health Center, and was modeled after the original Lay Therapist Program (another name for Parent Aides) formed in Denver in 1969 at the University of Colorado Medical Center. Since that time the concept has spread throughout the country.

Parent Aide Programs may be run by a state or federal agency (such as a Welfare Department), mental health center, family service agency, hospital, or interested community organization (church group, university or local Junior League). All coordinate with the local child abuse agencies, which are important sources of referral and professional resources.

Using parent volunteers to assist troubled parents is a relatively new concept in child abuse prevention and one that many specialists feel brings hope to an age-old problem. "Most of us learn to be parents by following the example set by our own parents," said David Chadwick, M.D., Director of the Child Protection Program and Medical Director of Children's Hospital and Health Center. "If a person is abused by his parents, he learns that way of parenting. In order to relearn parenting, he needs a good role model to follow."

By watching Parent Aides enjoying their own children and dealing effectively with problem situations, troubled parents can begin to develop new and different patterns in their lives.

In the Parent Aide Program in Albany, New York, success is often measured in small achievements. "Small changes in lifestyle indicate that troubled families are feeling better about themselves," said Helen Hayes, Director of the Albany program. "One mother who was always in her nightgown when her Parent Aide came to visit now is dressed and has her house straightened. Other previously disinterested parents have begun to ask questions about shopping, budgeting and nutrition. The Parent Aide Program is giving parents a new confidence in themselves, and helping them to see alternative ways to handle their children."

Using parents instead of professional case workers to serve as Parent Aides is important to any Parent Aide Program. The formality of the worker-client relationship often threatens parents, who may be afraid to express their true feelings because of a fear of being punished or having their children taken away.

In the San Diego program, 15 parents currently volunteer as Parent Aides. All of them — from the young mother of three to the retired couple with grandchildren — have a good record of parenting. They are homemakers, former teachers, nurses and working mothers. They receive no pay but are reimbursed for mileage.

In some communities, Parent Aides are part-time paid employees, although they are still parents, not career professionals. In the Sharing Parent Program in Salt Lake City, Utah, parents are paid to work 20 hours a week and are assigned to two or three families.

Barbara Fazio, a social worker and Coordinator of the Sharing Parent Program, sees it as an alternative to foster care. With extra support, parents are able to learn how to handle their problems with their children — while the family stays intact.

"Many of these parents have surrendered to a hopeless lifestyle — they feel like victims of their finances and of society. The Sharing Parent Program helps them learn how to function in society. Our program is getting people excited about life," says Fazio.

Parent Aides are not expected to be babysitters or housekeepers but many help out on occasion as an understanding friend. They typically spend four to six hours a week in the homes of their assigned families and are always available by telephone. Relationships between parents and Parent Aides generally extend over a one to two year period, depending on the type of support the family needs. Many Parent Aides and their families continue their friendship after the formal relationship ends.

Though they aren't professionals, Parent Aides are carefully selected and trained. Volunteers applying for a position in the San Diego program, for example, are screened by the Child Protection Program staff. They then complete a 16-hour training program, which introduces them to the facts about child growth and development, physical abuse and neglect and the dynamics of the family. They are also familiarized with community resources available to help distressed families, such as counseling agencies and preschools.

Once working in the program, San Diego Parent Aides meet as a group one morning each week with director Bryson-Gordon and hospital social worker Joann Peterson, who serves as a Parent Aide Supervisor. During this time, they discuss problems, share ideas and set goals for themselves and their assigned families.

Although initially most families using the San Diego Parent Aide Program were referred by hospital personnel, today over half of the families are self-referred. They are parents who have not yet reached the point of physical abuse, but who know they could hurt their children if they do not receive help.

It is usually a crisis situation which finally causes a parent to call for help. It may be a major crisis — an illness or divorce — or a minor one — a broken washing machine or a crying child. Other factors which add to a parent's frustration are: isolation or lack of friends or family, marital or partner stress, depression, emotional stress, and child rearing problems.

Not all parents who ask for help are assigned a Parent Aide. When problems involve drugs, alcoholism, severe emotional upheaval or sexual abuse, families are referred to the appropriate agency for more intensive help.

San Diego parents using Parent Aides range in age from a 14-year-old single mother to a husband and wife in their late 30s. The majority are married, but single, divorced and separated parents are also in the program. And no social group goes unrepresented: The parents come from a wide range of career and financial backgrounds.

"The myth that only families in lower socio-economic levels need this type of support is not true," Bryson-Gordon said. "Anyone can become overwhelmed by a crisis or a major life change. Most of us have resources to draw from within our own family or close friends. But a lot of parents do not."

The track record of the San Diego program is impressive. Of the 65 families who have used Parent Aides, 25 had a history of child abuse or neglect. Of the 25, only two families have had a repeat incident of child abuse or neglect after becoming involved in the program.

There's no doubt that Parent Aides are an important community resource. To learn if there is a Parent Aide Program in your area, contact the local child abuse council or child protection agency. If such a program is not in existence, you can develop one by working through the local child abuse agencies or Welfare department. (See How to Start a Parent Aide Program.)

According to Peterson, "You need to get together key agencies who work in the area of child abuse in order to get their assistance, support and participation." And, as communities across the nation get together to prevent child abuse, distressed parents — and thus their children — can find new hope for their lives.

HOW TO START A PARENT AIDE PROGRAM

Setting up a good Parent Aide program requires a great deal of individual effort and community cooperation. The following guidelines and pointers will help you on your way; the precise steps you take will, of course, vary depending on your local needs and resources.

1. Most Parent Aide Programs are set up by a well-known group in the community. A church group, for example, or a woman's organization such as the Junior League, can sponsor your program. Or you can get together with friends and neighbors.

2. Once you have a commitment from a local organization, contact the local child protection agency (look in the white pages under "child protection services" for your county, or under the listings for your county department of public welfare) and explain that you want to help develop a Parent Aide Program in your community.

3. The child protection agency can help you determine the need for a Parent Aide Program in your area. They can also help you develop guidelines for your program; these guidelines will establish what agency in your area may be able to fund the program and will define the responsibilities of the program director, the Parent Aide supervisors and the Parent Aides.

4. Present a copy of your plan to a group that can fund the program; a state or local agency, such as the Welfare Department; a hospital pediatric unit; a crisis intervention center; a mental health center; a family service agency; or a community group such as the Junior League. The support agency should provide salaries for the director and at least part of the salaries for the Parent Aide supervisors. It should also pay for space and equipment.

5. Once funding is obtained, select one paid, permanent employee to serve as the program director. The director will be responsible for overall program supervision including handling phone calls, maintaining records and screening Parent Aides. Parent Aide supervisors must also be hired, on a ratio of one supervisor to every 15 Parent Aides. Supervisors, unlike most Parent Aides, are paid, and may be welfare workers, medical social workers or public health nurses who can work part-time with the program.

6. Gather popular support for the Program; ask schools, hospitals, pediatricians, social service agencies and family counseling centers for their cooperation in developing the program.

7. Let your community know about the Parent Aide Program: contact newspapers and radio and television stations as well as community organizations such as church groups, PTA's, auxiliaries and women's clubs.

8. List the Parent Aide Program in the telephone directory under "child abuse" or "crisis intervention." Try to set up a hot line; if that isn't feasible, contact another 24-hour crisis intervention center and ask them to accept calls for the Parent Aide Program.

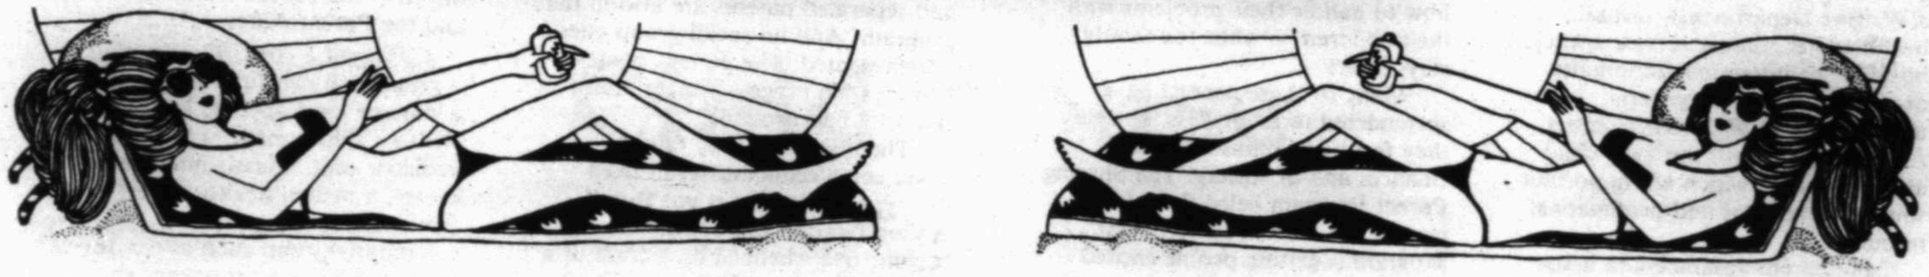

9. Develop a training course for the Parent Aides. Several free booklets to help you set up a Parent Aide Program and train volunteers are available from the National Center on Child Abuse and Neglect. P.O. Box 1182, Washington, D.C., 20013:

Sun and Your Skin

Spending time getting your tan started? When you're soaking up the sun's rays, you are drawing on the source of life itself

The atoms of which our bodies (and everything else alive) are composed have as their origin a particle that emanates from the sun's radiation. Each life on earth is a prodigious chemical creation which exists by burning and transforming the sun's energy. Given these conditions, it is not surprising that much of what goes on in our body and psyche is intimately linked to the actions of the sun.

There are many aspects of our relationship with the sun that are still not scientifically understood, but the relationship itself cannot be treated lightly. The sun gives us health and beauty, but its radiation is so powerful that with a few rays more or a few rays less, health will give way to sickness, and beauty will crumble.

Just what do we know of this sun that gives life? How can we best use its powers? When is it bad for us? What illnesses can it cause or aggravate? And when it is harmful, how can we protect ourselves?

HOW THE SUN ENTERS YOUR BODY

Our body is an amazing machine that uses solar radiation to maintain life. This radiation conveys energy, the condition of all life. It is up to the body to assimilate that energy. The first stage of this assimilation takes place at skin level. The skin is a screen and a filter. With a surface area of approximately 13 square feet, your skin protects you from the sometimes harmful components in the sun's rays, allowing the passage of only what the organism can and should utilize: the visible light rays and the invisible infrared and ultraviolet rays.

First of all, the light rays. The retina of the eye acts as a receiving station for these rays in accord with its chemical structure and selects the rays for sight.

Infrared rays give off heat. They are collected and used by small components of the skin which are called pacinian corpuscles.

Ultraviolet is the true life-giving ray. It acts on the skin to change two of its substances, cholesterol and ergosterol, into vitamin D, which is indispensable to the organism. Transformed into vitamin D, the sun's rays then travel through the capillaries to reach all parts of the body. Ultraviolet rays also pass through the retina and reach the pituitary gland (the gland located in the brain which regulates all the other glands), stimulating the functioning of the body.

The skin impedes the passage of other solar rays, however. The ultraviolets and infrareds aren't the sun's only messengers. Physicists tell us that apart from those solar radiations that are known and understood, there exist others whose role is not yet fully comprehended. Much of this solar "bombardment" is blocked by the earth's atmosphere, but physicians agree that some harmful rays do get as far as the second barrier, the skin. Since harmful effects of these toxic rays seem rare, scientists today tend to allow a growing importance to the skin's selective function. A "medicine" that sometimes kills:

BAD SUN AND GOOD SUN

Sunbathing and sunstroke — they come from the same source. So just what is the sun? Medicine or poison? Actually, it's both. It gives life to everything that lives — but it can kill. Each of us has his "good sun" and "bad sun," according to the case and our state of health. But it's important to remember that the sun's rays — even the indispensable ultraviolets — can be toxic.

"Sunsickness," or porphyria, is a rare and severe allergy to the sun causing skin lesions, and, in young adults, acute abdominal pains and vomiting. In extreme cases there may be temporary paralysis.

The symptoms resemble those seen in certain kinds of poisoning, especially barbiturate poisoning. Body metabolism (which regulates chemical exchanges) is upset, causing a chemical substance derived from hemoglobin, called porphyrin, to multiply in the urine. This abnormal build-up of porphyrin is the direct cause of sun sickness.

Since susceptibility to sun sickness has no giveaway sign, it's impossible to anticipate an attack. The moment it begins, however, diagnosis is easy to establish: porphyrins give the urine a reddish-purple color.

The sun can provoke other allergic reactions as well, all of which can be classified as forms of photosensitization. These reactions produce an increase in the skin's sensitivity, varying in intensity and form and resulting in rash, burns, itches, etc.

Some doctors believe the sun is responsibile for illnesses much more severe than mere allergies. In studying the mechanism of common sunstroke, researchers have discovered that ultraviolet rays cause skin cells to multiply. This process of proliferation is only temporary, but it presents the same characteristics as cell multiplications caused in the laboratory by putting the skin in contact with cancerous substances.

One scientist recorded that the peasants of Uzbekistan, in Central Asia, wear turbans offering no protection to the face, while the field workers of Turkmenistan, in the same area, shade their faces with a kind of fur sombrero. There is much more sun in Turkmenistan than in Uzbekistan. Nevertheless, the amount of face cancer found in Uzbekistan is proportionately higher than that recorded in Turkmenistan.

Other cancerologists feel the sun is not an agent of cancer but plays the role of detecting it. Through the action of the solar rays, skin cancers already formed tend to "burst." But since exteriorization permits detection and early care, the sun's action would be, on this hypothesis, beneficial.

A month or so of sun on your vacation is not cancer-producing. While it's probable that solar rays have an effect on certain forms of cancer, it is certain that vacation or weekend sun, except in enormous excess, cannot cause the disease.

Exposure to sunlight will have an eventual effect only in the advanced stages of cancer. Sailors and agricultural workers, having neglected antiradiation protection for years, seem to be the principal victims of solar cancer.

SUMMER MISHAPS

Sunstroke is caused by ultraviolet rays. It is a first- or second-degree burn induced by overexposure to the sun. At certain times of the day, usually in late morning and early afternoon, the invisible ultraviolet rays can violently attack the surface- and under-layers of the skin.

The process involved in sunstroke never varies: redness (solar erythema), smarting pain, peeling, and, in some cases, blistering. When the burns extend over a large surface, these symptoms are accompained by fever, headache and sometimes convulsions. A doctor should always be consulted.

Heatstroke is caused by infrared rays. These heat rays, by raising the temperature of the air and by provoking increased humidity in the atomosphere, will, in a subject who is overactive or overtired, hinder perspiration and block the elimination of toxins. The result is a form of asphyxia, or heatstroke.

The symptoms of heatstroke are easily indentified: intense thirst, violent pains in the head and chest, general weakness, ringing in the ears, irregular heart beat. There isn't much you can do to help the victim until the doctor arrives. Try to get him into a prone position, bathe his forehead with water, begin artificial respiration immediately. In extreme cases the victim is overcome suddenly and without warning. He collapes and sinks into a coma from which he may never emerge.

The killer-sun claims the lives of several hundred Americans each year.

GOOD SUN

Of all natural curatives, there is none simpler or more universal than the sun. It strengthens brittle bones, relaxes the nerves, eases pain, speeds recoveries, heals wounds, and effectively combats many kinds of bacteria.

states; most notably, in helping to mend broken bones. Sunbathing is an excellent treatment for skin problems: boils, skin lesions, psoriasis; also for certain organic troubles, such as growth problems and rickets. The sun's rays also help restore the health of anemics, and those who are hypertense. Recent experiments prove that the ultraviolet rays not only alleviate discomfort caused by pregnancy but favor as well the healthy development of the fetus.

The sun also makes hair grow faster. An English physiologist has confirmed that human hair grows faster during the sunny months: .539 millimeters a day from June through September and .340 millimeters a day from December through March.

Ultraviolet rays can raise your love potential. A few years ago, all the male chimpanzees in a London zoo suddenly refused to take part in sex or married life. The mere sight of female chimpanzees plunged them into deep apathy. Fearing a decline in the zoo's population, officials called on a veterinarian, but he could find nothing to explain the chimp's sexual disinterest. Then a doctor who had long practiced medicine in the tropics examined the cage of the languid chimpanzees and ordered that it be transported to a sunny place. He then hung an ultraviolet ray generator in the cage.

For 10 days the sun-starved chimpanzees were subjected to an intense bombardment of natural and artificial ultraviolet rays. On the eleventh day zoo keepers brought in the female chimps.

The project was a success. Transformation was total, sexual harmony complete, and the zoo's repopulation assured for a few years.

THE SUN VITAMIN

There are certain areas of the world, notably the slums of Latin America and of the industrial cities of northern Europe, where virtually the entire population suffers from rickets, a disease caused by lack of sun. Absence of exposure to the solar rays prevents the body from assimilating two elements indispensable to its formation: calcium and phosphorus.

The remedy: sun and ultraviolet rays. On contact with the skin and after a complex chemical transformation, these rays are transformed into vitamin D, which increases the rate of the body's assimilation of calcium and phosphorus. Vitamin D may be taken orally.

ARE CHILDREN BORN IN SUMMER MORE INTELLIGENT?

American psychiatrists and physicians who've made statistical studies covering thousands of subjects, have determined that children born in the summer are, by a significant percentage, more intelligent than children born in winter. Following these studies, the English psychologist J. E. Orme, doing research on "Mensa," the club for people with high IQs, has confirmed that the majority of the Mensa members were born in the summer.

HOW AND WHY WE TAN

On first thought it seems simple enough: you lie on the sand... the sand is hot... you turn pink, then red, and finally, tan. The phenomenon which changes a city drudge's pale white skin to a radiant bronze is really quite complex. Tanning takes place in three stages.

The ultraviolet rays, the only ones which make you turn brown, strike the skin, zigzagging through to a lower layer of the epidermis where a series of biocnemical reactions is set off which will cause you to tan. Specialized cells animated by an enzyme called "dopa" will, in reaction to solar energy, produce a substance called melanin. Melanin is a very dark pigment which colors the skin from light tan to dusky brown depending on how much pigment is present in the epidermic cells.

The "black" races are black because their epidermis is richer in melanin than a white person's. The only people who are completely "white" are albinos: they never tan because their skin has no melanin.

Tanning: a defensive reaction. Basically, your skin turns brown in order to resist the aggression of the ultraviolet rays. The melanin you produce is a natural screen against sun rays. Limited exposure to the sun is a good stimulation: body combustions accelerate, the nervous system becomes well-balanced, tissues are oxygenated, toxins are neutralized. However, when the ultraviolet attack is allowed to become too violent or too prolonged, the whole organism can be threatened by serious and sometimes fatal disorders.

Too much sun ages the skin. Sun-lovers, beware! Heavy doses of sun on the unprotected skin produce a phenomenon known as superkeratinization — a slow hardening of the skin which encourages the growth of wrinkles. This phenomenon will take place even when you have a tan that prevents burning.

You need protective lotions. To shield the skin against both sunburn and the aging process, use one of the standard suntan oils or creams which are made with some form of antiultraviolet or antiradiation agent. Such lotions have a double purpose; they care for and hydrate (moisturize) the skin, preventing premature aging; and they provide a chemical filter that blocks out noxious rays while allowing the tanning rays to pass. To avoid wrinkles, always use a suntan lotion when you spend a substantial amount of time in the sun!

At what age do you have the best tolerance for the sun? There is a scientific method, called Saldmann's Sensitometric Test, of determining an individual's resistance to the sun's rays. Using the test, scientists have determined that brunettes have more tolerance for ultraviolet rays than do blondes, and have found that we react differently to the sun at different ages.

The most resistant ages: 3½-5, 13-17, 50-60.

The most vulnerable ages: children: 6-8, women: 25-30, men: 30-35. ■

SEX—The Sun Connection

The sun is our most erotic natural resource, scientists say, with the power to arouse the sex drive and step up performance. Apparently, it's the light and not the heat that counts: Regardless of the season, fair, sunny weather is as sexually stimulating in Bangor, Me., as it is in Miami, Fla. — so you don't necessarily have to go packing off to the tropics.

Research on the connection between climate and human moods has shown that sun enhances responsiveness and quickens reaction time, and increases energy and vitality. It also accelerates the activity of the pituitary gland which regulates the ovaries and testes, and makes us more receptive to sensual pleasure. Dr Joseph Meites, professor of physiology at Michigan State University, maintains that sunlight sets off a series of nervous-system chain reactions that result in higher hormone levels and enlarged sexual glands in both women and men. In addition, the sun is believed to help trigger adrenalin secretions that ultimately deliver more oxygen to vital tissues, the heart and genital areas, among other parts of the body. (Optimism and alertness have also been found to increase with retreating clouds and lightening skies.)

LIGHT VS. DARK

Experimenters point out that a tiny brain component called the pineal gland is another link in the relationship between light and sexuality. According to Russel J. Reiter, M.D., professor of anatomy at the University of Texas Health Sciences Center in San Antonio, darkness causes this organ to produce a generous amount of a substance called melatonin which inhibits both ovulation and sperm production, as well as the hormones responsible for sexual desire. During the night, blood levels of melatonin are at their highest — five times the amount present during the day.

Sunlight, however — which reaches the pineal gland by way of special photo-receptors in the retina of the eye — evidently reduces melatonin output considerably, thus increasing both libido and fertility. (For this reason, totally blind people who cannot perceive any light at all have fewer sex/reproductive hormones circulating in their bloodstream and lower rates of fertility than those who are sighted or blind individuals who can still detect light.) Furthermore, by stimulating the optic nerve directly, sunlight energizes the hypothalamus, the part of the brain controlling the emotions, including the positive, euphoric feelings conducive to better sex.

The pineal gland is also rich in norepinephrine, an adrenalin-like chemical which is activated by light and is basic to many life "drives" and functions. These essential acts include waking, hunger, sexual arousal and sleep.

Evidence of the sun's influence on sexuality ranges widely: Studies with men have demonstrated an increase in testosterone levels during the summer and early fall (the longest days), and a marked decrease in winter. J. Richard Udry and Naomi Morris, scientists with the Institute for Sex Research at Indiana University, report that the rate of intercourse peaks in July — again, during the longest days of the year. And studies of birth patterns in northern Finland have shown the highest rate of conception during the summer, resulting in a greater-than-average number of twins. Reason: A phenomenon called "superovulation" — the release of more than one fertilized egg — occurs more often during long-daytime months.

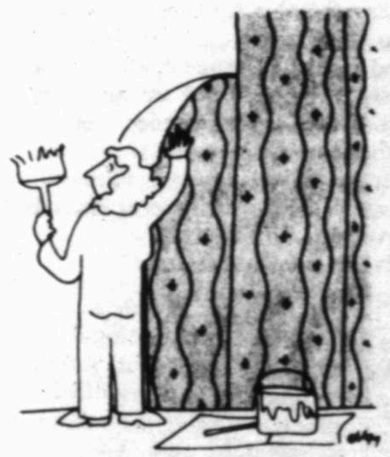

Long, sunless winters apparently have the opposite effect. For example, some Eskimo women have been known to stop menstruating entirely and even abstain from sex during extended periods of bitter cold and darkness. With the onset of spring, the flow resumes, along with both sexual interest and activity.

SUN: OTHER CONNECTIONS

Wearing fewer and more revealing clothes in sunny weather is as strong a sexual uninhibitor as the impact of the length of the day or the time of year. Sports and vigorous exercise in the sun deliver sexual dividends as well: sharpened senses, muscle tone and sexier bodies, more energy and endurance for lovemaking.

Develop Your Own Decorating Style

Do you want your home to be a nest to curl up in or a gallery to display your favorite objects? Here's how to design your space to fit your tastes

By Linda Ekblad

What is pale yellow, has cafe curtains, and abounds in knick-knacks? The room my mother presented me with when I returned from college. Many years have passed, but I remember how uncomfortable I was in the midst of ceramic angels, colonial print fabrics, and faded walls. Actually, the room was quite attractive. However, as people say about New York City — it was a nice place to visit but I didn't want to live there. The room wasn't me.

The scores of decorating books available make one thing clear: Colors, furniture, wall treatments, window coverings — everything in a home has a mood of its own. Dark wood beams evoke a sense of structure and security. A marble table is cool and remote.

The trick in developing your own decorating style is to discover your own feelings and express them in the decor. According to author and psychiatrist Dr. Samuel Dunkell, "You must consider your behavior, moods, areas of interest, and ways of relating to other people in order to create a room in which you will be comfortable." Whether choosing a color for the kitchen or a carpet for the living room, your feelings should match the emotional effect of the color or object you are choosing.

Sunny rooms, busy rooms, calm rooms, sexy rooms, neat rooms, and artistically cluttered rooms — there is no right or wrong. A light room isn't better than a dark room. One is more comfortable to an energetic, extroverted person, while the other is more appealing to an introspective, low-keyed individual. What is important is that the mood matches the personality of the occupant.

COLOR

Few things can compete with color and lighting for emotional impact. Violent and angry red, calm beige, cheerful and warm orange, secure and nurturing green and brown, quiet and meditative blue — we react to colors emotionally. If the colors in your rooms are in conflict with your inner feelings, you will experience slight tension whenever you are at home. Interior decorator Richard McKay of the design firm Jessup, Inc., says that "color is the most important part of design."

There are a few "emotional rules" about color you can follow:

1. Lighter colors give a feeling of space and openness. If you are an extroverted person, someone who likes challenges, wide horizons, and wants to live, live, live, you probably will be happier with lighter colors. However, if you are a private person, someone who likes to be alone in his or her own little world, these pale shades may be disturbing to you.

2. Darker colors lend warmth, security, and structure to a room. If you are someone who spends a lot of time at home, an individual who questions things frequently and feels the world out there is a bit mad, you will like darker colors. If you are a socially oriented person, open to others, you may feel closed in amid dark tones.

3. Neutral shades, like pale grays and beiges, have a calming effect. If you lead a very hectic life and seek peace in your home, if you are sensitive to loud noises, these colors are best for you.

Color is a wonderful decorating tool for the budget-conscious. Paint is relatively inexpensive, and using an unusual color on one wall can make an entire room, regardless of how little furniture or accessories you have to put in it.

Michael, a fledgling actor, has a studio apartment. He papered one wall in a paisley print and painted all the other walls and ceiling in a deep rust orange. The effect is warm and nestlike. "I work in a big world, on big stages. I'm always playing someone other than myself. I go on the road a lot and get to feeling pretty insecure and homeless. I like to come back to something small and secure. This place kind of wraps around me."

The color in Michael's apartment is so dominant that he needs very little else other than his chocolate-brown sofa-bed, an antique rocker, and a small oak dining table with two wicker chairs. The total effect is simple, warm, and economically feasible for a beginning thespian.

In the apartment next door, Sharon has done something completely different with the same studio floor plan. "I'm a very active person and I'm pretty confident about myself. I like lots of different colors, but when I thought about using them in here, I realized they were colors I like to wear, not look at every day. Dark colors seem to close in on me. And shades like pale blue seem too cold." Sharon needed the openness that light colors give, but she needed the warmth of earth tones. She solved her problem by painting two walls and her hallway in a rich, creamy ivory and the other two walls in medium beige.

Most of us are not clear-cut personalities, and we have our extroverted and our at-home sides. One woman related the following. "I really like life and adventure. I painted all my walls white and I love the openness and freedom that it makes me feel. But there's a small part of me that's still a little girl and gets scared. In my bedroom, I painted one wall a dark maroon, and it made me feel warm and safe. It's the room I go to to retreat and gain strength and comfort."

Do you like to be held? If you do, you probably aren't comfortable in chairs without arms. You might like a chair that has a high back and gives you a feeling of support. Or you might prefer a big club chair in which you can nap or read a mystery on a Saturday afternoon. Psychotherapist Mel Lichtenstein says furniture has an emotional impact and you must think about how each piece makes you feel. "A chair with no arms and shiny material could be threatening to some people. There's nothing to hold onto... it's slippery and you can slide off." For some, however, a big puffy recliner can feel suffocating.

Often, couples clash on the kind of furniture to use. Karen and Jake argued for five years about Jake's penchant for antiques. Karen is a busy, active woman, always flying around corners and flopping into couches. "I felt like I was going to break one of those skinny little chairs." Jake loves the past. "I have a special feeling for old furniture... those small hand-carved pieces, calling up memories of afternoon tea. It makes me feel that there's order and beauty in the world." They finally solved their differences when Karen took the living room as her decorating stomping grounds and Jake claimed the bedroom. Her effect is simple and uncluttered. There is little furniture, and what there is is bulky and functional. It speaks a message of no-nonsense, of people who are open and direct.

Jake's handiwork in the bedroom is a complete contrast. Most of the space is occupied, and there are numerous small wood pieces — chests, tables, and shelves. The headboard is tall and carved, and the dressers are in different tones of oak. Two small armchairs are covered in floral print fabric. The room makes you want to lie down and soak in all the tones of wood, admire all the woodwork, and gaze at the many objects on the walls and around the room. It is perfect for someone who likes to lie down for a while, look around, think, look around, compose a mental grocery list, look around...

The old and the new mix well together in contemporary rooms, states Richard McKay. "You should always look closely at Grandma's old pieces. People get used to seeing something over the years, and they forget that it is a beautiful piece of furniture because 'it's only Grandma's old china cabinet.' " Mixing styles can appease the conflicting sides of a person — most modern women still enjoy resting their feet on Auntie's embroidered footstool. Old furniture goes well with people who like Humphrey Bogart and Ingrid Bergman, lemonade on a front porch, and Fourth of July parades.

In general, the emotional rules of

1. Large, soft, upholstered pieces evoke feelings of security, of being held and comforted.

2. Plastic, glass, leather, and chrome are cooler, less emotional materials, and furniture made from any of these evokes feelings of remoteness and solidity. Men more than women enjoy these pieces. Many individuals who do not like a great amount of physical affection are happy with the smoothness of these materials.

3. Wood furniture generates warmth. Depending on the style, it can evoke a variety of moods. Delicate carved pieces echo feelings of nostalgia and orderliness. People who are neat and careful enjoy these pieces. Large, simple wood furniture speaks of frankness and usefulness, and is appropriate for people who are extroverted and practical.

How much furniture to use and where to put it is also an expression of individual style. McKay recommends charting the room on graph paper and making photostat copies. You can then draw in the furniture to scale and try different arrangements.

Dunkell believes the open, ambitious person likes open spaces, as does the optimist. The private person, he says, likes less space, small conversation pits, and closed doors. Some people like their furniture against the walls, while others prefer to have space around their couch or bed. The former is more secure, the latter less so. Furniture against walls opens up space and is thus comforting to anyone who feels closed in.

LIFE-STYLE

The way you live is different from anyone else, and your home should accommodate your unique life-style. People who like to entertain need proper dining facilities and adequate seating in the living room. But party-givers also need private space. Alice, a marketing executive, uses the bedroom as a miniature living room. "I have the TV in there, and a comfortable chair for reading. The living room is sort of formal and big, but my husband and I throw a lot of parties and we need that. I like coming in here at the end of the day and being alone, in smaller, warmer space."

Hobbies or special interests work well as part of the overall design. Bridge players might have a permanent bridge table that can double as a bar at parties. Musicians can utilize a corner of the living room for music stands, cello, and metronome.

COLLECTIONS

Using a favorite collection as part of the decor ensures you will feel comfortable and at home. Camels are a passion for Linda Friedman, and she collects them in all forms and sizes. Her apartment has needlepoint pillows of camels; one wall of shelves with wood, ceramic, and metal camels; and a corner of the bedroom is given over to a 5-foot, stuffed toy camel. Her rooms are done in desert colors of brown, beige, and orange, which give her a feeling of security and warmth and blend well with the camel motif. Happily, her husband, Tom, has caught the desert fever and now adds his own camels to the assortment on the shelves.

A Long Island couple enjoyed trying new and different restaurants. They collected menus from these establishments and wallpapered their kitchen in them.

WALLS AND WINDOWS

Enthusiastic, optimistic people like vertical effects, such as pole lamps, floor-to-ceiling drapes, and large vertical paintings, according to Dunkell. They like the feeling of things reaching upward. The slower-to-act, more questioning person likes horizontal effects, such as a long row of small prints or photographs.

What you want to look at is important to Psychotherapist Lichtenstein. If you like summer and daytime, you don't want to be looking at a painting of a snowy night. Paintings should express your feelings the same way everything else around you does. Many people are misled in buying artwork because they feel any painting or print that is expensive and skillfully executed must be appropriate for over their mantelpiece.

Jim Feeney created an interesting and inexpensive wall treatment with masking tape. He ran two strips of tape diagonally (but off-center) up a wall and across the ceiling and down the opposite wall. An up and down bargello pattern is also effective. You can use different colors or the same color. Jim used blue and green on a red brick wall. Stripes straight up and down at one end of a wall appeal to optimistic people who like the height and up-lifting effect.

BE IT EVER SO HUMBLE

Home is for you, not your friends or relatives or business associates. It is a place where you must feel comfortable and at ease with yourself. If it reflects your own moods and life-style, other people are sure to enjoy themselves.

Think about who you are and what kind of an effect you want to create. Open? Warm? Protective? Gather color and fabric swatches and study them. Ask: How does this color make me feel? Calm? Free? Happy? Collect pictures of furniture and furniture arrangements from magazines and ask: How do I react to this chair? Does it support me or overwhelm me? How does the space around it make me feel? Think about your life-style and special interests or collections. Ask: How can I use them as part of the decor?

Provocative Pastels

Here's how to make these subtly sexy shades work for you!

Just when you thought you'd seen every makeup color under the sun, voila! — the new sexy pastels for spring and summer. The shades are paler yet warmer than the pastels you've been used to. These are colors that suggest innocence — and promise a lot more. With that intriguing thought in mind, let's take a closer look at the new trend, the psychology behind it, and some tips on making it work for you.

Makeup colors for summer '81 look soft, pretty and provocative. That's the forecast from Estee Lauder. Says June Leaman, their senior vice president, creative marketing, "We're projecting rosy or apricot blushers, lip colors that range from pink to coral, peach, apricot, and melon. For eyes: greens, periwinkle, melon."

Interpreting the trend, Marlene Beck, director of marketing, makeup at Elizabeth Arden, explains, "The overall softening of color and fabric in fashion requires makeup that is softer, more pastel." Recognizing the seductive quality of the new color scheme, she adds, "The message is clear: A woman commands more attention with a whisper than a shout."

How she commands it is best described by noted psychologist Dr. Ernest Dichter, founder of the Institute for Motivational Research: "Pastels are flattering colors that tend to diminish the wearer's imperfections. Surfaces become subdued; it's like looking at someone in moonlight." Aside from their visual impact, pastels also evoke a favorable emotional response from others — especially men. "They're 'inviting' colors," says Dr. Dichter. "While a harsh shade may put a man on the defensive, a soft one has the psychological effect of arousing his protective instincts, of letting him feel free enough to show his weakness as well as his strength to the woman who wears it." And no woman has to be told how sexy that can be!

When it comes to working with the new pales, the approaches are as varied as the colors themselves. But on one point, the majority of experts agree: The makeup focus is definitely on the eyes. According to Sandi Burrows, vice president of advertising and creative services at Germaine Monteil, "Eyes are matte, beautifully ombred in graduated pastel tones and softly smudge-lined." From New York's il makiage comes the rounded eye: a softening technique achieved by applying a half-moon of shadow in the eye crease. At L'Oreal, liners are tuning in to living color: Instead of being framed with brown or black, pastel shadows are being accented with teal and blue liner. And to brighten the eye even more — a tracing of the new white kohl pencil along the inner rims. Another great eye-opener — Chanel's pairing of soft matte shadows with pearlized pink and lemon highlighters for touches of light on the browbone, lid center — wherever. The point of it all: With cheeks and lips in flesh-toned pastels, the eye becomes all important to achieve balance and focus.

"Subtle sexiness is a delicate balance of contrasts," says Sheila O'Malley, vice president, new product development, Group III, Revlon. With the new smoldery eye, she sees flesh-toned pastels for the lips and cheeks that play up the eyes even more. Lancome's version of the pastel face: a pink-to-coral palette for lips and cheeks (for the latter, they like a curved application of blush from the outer cheekbone up along the temple). And at Prescriptives, Director of Marketing Sylvie Chantecaille says, "We have developed new shades that give a fresh, transparent, nude look... intensities of tone just a bit stronger than your own... peach to wheat to transparent caramel."

Another important trend you'll be seeing a lot of this year: The monochromatic use of pastels. That is, nails, lips and cheeks all in one pastel shade. To extend the idea even further, you could tint the entire face with sheer makeups — like Orlane's new Lumiere du Teint, which can be worn alone or under foundation.

Nails (which are being worn shorter this spring) are another key element in the monochromatic pastel look. Most of the nail lacquers, including those from Ultima II, Charles of the Ritz and Diane Von Furstenberg, will be formulated to echo lips and cheeks.

GOREN BRIDGE

BY CHARLES H. GOREN AND OMAR SHARIF

1981 by Chicago Tribune

ASK OMAR

Q.—Someone in our game suggested that we play a new version of Stayman. Briefly, if partner asks for a major suit and opener holds both, he rebids two no trump. It seems to me that this method has a lot to commend it. How do you feel about it?—R. Loman, Atlanta, Ga.

(This question has been awarded the weekly prize.)

A.—That is nothing new. Over the years several methods have been suggested whereby opener can show both major suits. Two no trump is one. Three clubs is another. All of them have been tried and found wanting, and I don't believe that there is an expert in the world who uses that method.

The reason is quite simple. It is all fine and dandy when responder holds a fair hand and a four-card major. He now finds a fit and can either invite game by bidding three of a major, or bid game himself if he has enough strength.

Unfortunately, we don't always hold hands of 8 points or more when we use the Stayman Convention. Once in a while we will pick up a hand such as:

♠Jxxx ♡Jxxxx ◇Jxxx ♣x

Partner opens the bidding with one no trump, and we are sure of one thing—no trump is unlikely to be our best spot. So we search for a 4-4 major fit by bidding two clubs, with the intention of passing two diamonds should partner deny a major suit. About half the time partner bids a major and we pass, knowing that we have improved the contract because partner can take a few ruffs in our hand.

Now let's see what happens with the method you propose. Partner, with a balanced 16 points, opens on no trump and we are looking at the hand above. If we use the Stayman convention, there is the danger that partner has two major suits and will tell us the good news by bidding two no trump! Now we have to get out at the three-level, which will not be a happy spot with 16 points facing 2. Even worse, we could end up in game if partner fancies his hand.

I am a firm believer in simply bidding one of your major suits in response to Stayman when you hold both majors. Which should you bid? I don't much care whether you always bid hearts first, always spades first, your stronger first or any order that you like, as long as you have an arrangement with partner so that he knows what you are doing. That way you can afford to try to wriggle out of no trump contracts that are patently bad.

Q.—How would a team of players from the days of Charles Goren's prime stack up against a team of today's experts?—L. Donaldson, New York City

A.—In the play of the cards, Goren and company would more than hold their own. However, bidding is another matter. That facet of the game has improved enormously, and I fear that a team of today's experts would outbid a team of yesteryear's stars.

MONSTERA STRIKES AGAIN

By ELVIN MCDONALD

plants in the home

Q. A couple of years ago I bought a split-leaf philodendron in an 8-inch pot; it was two feet tall with leaves top to bottom, growing on stems stapled to a piece of bark. Now the bottom part is leafless, some of the old leaves have brown edges and the new ones are small heart shapes with no splits. Is this plant worth saving or has it reverted to a wild form?

A. You've asked about a common aroid that is often called Philodendron pertusum when it is young, Monstera deliciosa at maturity. At home in southern Mexico this plant typically begins as a creeper along the jungle floor; at this stage the leaves are entire, a botanist's way of saying they are not split, cut or perforated.

Adolescence sets in when the growing tip locates a tree trunk to climb. As each succeeding new leaf receives increasing light and air it also increases in size, eventually splitting at the edges and even sporting mid-leaf holes, nature's ingenious way of reducing wind resistance. Eventually there will be flowers, the pollen-producing males clustered toward the tip of a finger-like spadix, the females toward the base. If all goes well an edible Mexican breadfruit can be harvested a few months later.

Left in its sunny tree perch, rustled by balmy breezes, the monstera would continue to produce large, split leaves and fruit, year after year. Remove the tip however, root it in a pot and place to grow in drastically reduced light and humidity — presto, we have the plant in question! Yes, it can be saved and enjoyed in a number of ways.

Remove the pot and crumble away a third of the old soil. Replant using a mix of two parts sphagnum peat moss to one each of garden loam (or packaged potting soil) and sand. Wash the leaves, top and bottom, with lukewarm water. Scissor off the brown edges but save as much of the green as you can.

Use pliers to pull out all the staples; lay the stems gently to one side. Add a one-inch-thick layer of unmilled, long-stranded sphagnum moss (the kind used to line hanging baskets and when air-layering) to the rough side of the bark; tie in place (Nylon fishing line is ideal).

Secure the mossed totem in the pot and tie each stem in place. Mist generously and frequently so as to keep the moss moist. If new growth exceeds the moss support, cut it off, which will encourage shoots from below; or add a mossed extension.

The simplest solution to this problem would be to remove the staples, cut the stems where they emerge from the soil, wash and trim the leaves, then place to grow in a vase, old wine jug or colored bottle of water. Set in the best light possible; change the water once a month, shower the leaves so they'll be rain-fresh and you'll have an attractive, nerly carefree monstera.

Q. What could cause the leaf edges of my miniature geraniums to turn yellow prematurely? In magnification there seem to be many pin-prick holes.

A. I hate to break the news but red spider-mites attack geraniums too! Spray liberally every five days with sudsy water (three or four drops of liquid dishwashing detergent to a quart-size mister of water); this suffocates the mites. If the mites persist, apply a miticide (Kelthane is one).

Q. The members of my Sunday school class want to plant a church garden; what do you suggest?

A. If you mean a place for meditation, I would make it as peaceful as possible, with shade trees, inviting benches and hedged alcoves. Study "Your Biblical Garden: Plants of the Bible and How To Grow Them" by Allan A. Swenson (a 1981 book from Doubleday: $13.95). Visit, if at all possible, the Biblical garden at the Cathedral Church of Saint John the Divine, 1047 Amsterdam Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10025; it is open daily from 7 a.m. to sunset, the major viewing months being May to October. (For a brochure about this garden, send a stamped, self-addressed, business-size envelope with your request to the attention of Tania Bayard at the address above.)

You might also consider setting aside a sunny plot for growing row on row of flowers to provide an abundance of bouquet material for the church.

Q. What can you tell me about the purple passion plant? Mine grows beautifully and even set buds, which, unfortunately, dried up before opening.

A. Home for purple passion is the warm part of Java, the Indonesian island. I suspect yours simply needed a little more sunlight and warmth in order to bring out the attractive orange disk flowers that tell us it belongs to the daisy or composite family

In order to develop maximum coloration and compact habit, gynura (say "jye-NEW-ruh"), the botanical name for purple passion, needs some direct sun, soil between moist and on the dry side, and frequent pinching. Flowering is most likely to occur in summer or early fall, in the presence of abundant light, warmth and fresh air.

I haven't grown a gynura in several years, having banished the last one for insubordinate rankness. Now it occurs to me this could be an interesting subject for training as a potted espalier. One thing is almost certain about purple passion — there'll be aphids sucking on tender growth shoots. Brisk water sprays help; a few drops of liquid dishing detergent added to your water mister will suffocate survivors — provided you're diligent in treating every five days.

To grow a vigorous hanging basket of purple passion, start with about six cuttings six inches long. Make these from half-ripe wood, neither the newest, soft tips nor the woody bases. Strip away the bottom leaves, then plant two inches deep in a mix of sand and peat moss or moistened vermiculite. When rooted, plant together in an eight- or 10-inch container using a mixture of equal parts garden soil, peat moss and sand (if available use perlite instead, to reduce weight).

Q. What are some nightblooming flowers, hopefully fragrant, I can grow in containers on my patio?

A. One of my favorites is the old-time flowing tobacco, Nicotiana affinis. it grows to waist high and is a generous perfumer. Evening primrose, oenothera (ee-NOTH-er-uh) is another good choice not to mention larger white and pale yellow petunias, tuberose, white summer phlox, moonflower vine, apple scented geranium, Lady Plymouth geranium (white-edged leaves smell of rose), four o'clock, and any white clove-scented dianthus such as a carnation or pink.

Where patio gardens in general are concerned it will pay you to use large containers, especially where there is an extreme buildup of heat during the daytime. In such conditions a bushel basket is about the smallest size one can manage to keep from drying out or overheating. Of course, you can sink several smaller pots into one big one and a thick mulch such as bark chips also helps plants keep their cool.

Q. My Norfolk pine is about five feet tall and was doing well as long as I watered it about once a week. Then my daughter advised me to repot it and water only once a month. It's growing at the top but why are the tips on the old branches turning brown?

A. Mother knew best! Trim off the brown parts and bear in mind that a rigid, set schedule, such as one cup water applied once every week to a given plant, doesn't always work. It's better to feel the surface soil with your fingers. Norfolk pine should never dry out completely as this results in rapid loss of many brances which, in this instance, won't ever grow back. Evenly moist to ever so slightly on the dry side is what your fingers should feel every time they check around this lovely subtropical evergreen.

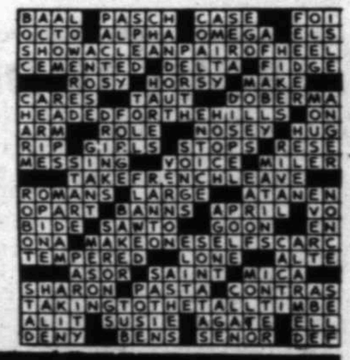

Q. How come the soil shrinks away from the walls of my pot?

A. A sure sign of serious drought! If the occupant isn't dead already submerge the pot in a pail of water to soak for 30 minutes or so. You can help avoid this in the future by soaking dry clay pots in water overnight before using and doing likewise with any sphagnum peat moss used in the potting mix.

Q. How can I train Yellow Dragon columnea into a shapely plant in my fluorescent-light garden?

A. I struggled with this plant for years and finally have succeeded by tying its branches to an eight-inch circle or wreath of wire. Pinching back new growth to one set of leaves stimulates compact habit and profuse bloom!

ABOUT THOSE BOOKS

THE FAST TRACK. Texans and Other Strivers. By Nicholas Lemann. Norton. 247 Pages. $12.95.

Ambition is a great thing, says the author. If you have enough of it you can become rich, famous, reach the top in a profession, or all three.

The author cites several cases of people who have achieved such goals, and in most instances gives a kind of play-by-play account of how they did it.

Generally the case histories center on Texans. That's because the author lived and worked there for some years, although, as everyone ought to know by now, they certainly do think and operate big in the Lone Star State.

"The idea behind looking at the subject of ambition," the author explains, "is that in this country — especially in Texas — it can be the quickest path to an understanding of how society works. People reveal themselves more when they're behaving ambitiously."

To this the publisher adds: "The American engine runs on aspirations."

No doubt. Still, one pauses a bit to wonder just what the publisher's aim was. Since the book focuses on such a relatively few big achievers, with very little of their own inner thoughts conveyed, it is far less than a definitive social document.

Anyway, it ought to sell big in Texas.

ORIGINAL SINS. By Lisa Alther. Knopf. 592 Pages. $13.95.

From the very first sentence, "The five had always known they were special," the reader knows that "Original Sins" by Lisa Alther is one of those books that traces the lives of childhood friends to their adulthood.

The "five" are Emily and Sally Prince, the daughters of a cotton-mill owner in Tennessee; Jed and Raymond Tatro, the sons of the mill's foreman; and Donny, the black grandson of the Princes' maid. As children, they play together and make plans for their futures. But, by the time they are teen-agers, they are no longer close friends. Their lives, however, remain intertwined.

"Original Sins" is a moderately interesting book. Although it contains a valid theme — growing up in the South during the '50s and '60s — its characters are stereotyped, and the book slides from gentle humor to biting, if not vicious, satire.

The best part of the book describes the pressures of high school life and all that such pressures involve. This section of the book is written with gentleness and humor. Then, the book takes a nasty turn, as if the author has decided she doesn't like the characters very much any more.

Sally becomes pregnant, marries Jed, and spends her life trying to please her husband. Emily and Raymond wander North. Raymond returns to the South, but Emily stays in New York City — stuck with a child and an unhappy marriage.

The Finest In "Controlled Flotation Beds"

The cut-away view of the patented Somma mattress shows the individual, water filled, cylinders surrounded by contoured polyurethane with a super soft quilted cover including 2" of insulation.

Sleeping on wa..., in any of its various forms, has become an acceptable alternative to the innerspring mattress. With the invention of the Somma Controlled Flotation System, sleeping on water has become completely respectable.

A Somma looks like a conventional mattress. It's lightweight and easy to move. It requires no heater. It comes in conventional mattress sizes. It uses standard bedding. And the comfort level is not equalled by any other form of mattress available today.

We have to be able to offer our customers a difference, an alternative, a superior product. The Somma Controlled Flotation System is just that. Its unique design of individual, water filled cylinders allows your customer to select the firmness one desires simply by filling the individual cylinders to an appropriate level. The body is supported without any "hard" spots. One side of the bed can be firmer than the other and wonderful, relaxed, tension-free sleep is achieved without any wave motion whatsoever.

The design of the cylinders, with only three seams per unit, nearly assures a leak-proof bed. A punctured cylinder is easily removed and replaced without affecting the performance of the system. In addition there are two separate safety liners for added protection. The quilted top with two inches of insulation eliminates the need for a heater while giving the mattress the feel, look and quality we're all accustomed to.

A Somma Controlled Flotation System is better than the best conventional mattress and far superior to any flotation system available today. The comfort is extraordinary. The benefit is immediate. And the quality of a night's sleep is without equal. When your customer is exposed to the Somma Controlled Flotation System, he will choose no other mattress.
