Three killed as tourist flees North Korea

By EDWIN Q. WHITE
Associated Press Writer

SEOUL, South Korea — A gun battle broke out today after a Soviet tourist fled while touring the area around the truce village of Panmunjom, the United Nations Command said. The command said two North Koreans and one South Korean were killed and an American soldier was wounded.

The official North Korean radio said three people were killed "on the North Korean side" in "the Soviet defector incident," and that one other person was seriously wounded.

A United Nations statement said the shooting started after North Koreans, following the Soviet tourist, crossed into the southern half of a small joint security area in the demilitarized zone that has divided the Korean peninsula since 1953.

The South Korean and American casualties were not identified, pending notification of relatives. The American was reported to be hospitalized in stable condition.

Neither American nor South Korean officials would identify the Soviet, saying only that he was a member of a North Korean-sponsored tour of the 800-yard diameter joint security area that surrounds the truce village.

But Kyodo News Service in Japan identified him as Basil Mapuzak, 22. The state-run (South) Korean Broadcasting System said he was a "Russian tourist guide."

U.S. and South Korean troops took "defensive actions against an armed attack on the UNC (United Nations Command) side of the joint security area at Panmunjom," the United Nations Command said in a statement.

"Between 20 and 30 security guards from the North Korean People's Army intruded across the military demarcation line about 11:50 a.m. (9:50 p.m. EST Thursday), firing at an apparent defector from a North Korean-sponsored tour of the joint security area," it said.

The North Korean Radio Pyongyang, monitored in Tokyo, said the gunfight broke out when a Soviet tourist at the Panmunjom conference site "carelessly crossed the central border line, and a U.S. guardsman pulled at the tourist's arm."

When a North Korean guard tried to pull the Soviet tourist back across the line, a U.S. guardsman fired at the North Korean guard, Radio Pyongyang said. The North Korean radio report also referred to firing from the South Korean side at 4 p.m. and 6 p.m. in "provocative, militaristic attacks" which were designed to "increase tensions in the demilitarized zone."

It was not clear if the report was referring to the defector incident, which occurred at noontime, or to later firings elsewhere in the 151-mile-long demilitarized zone which extends 1¼ miles on each side of the border.

It was the first known shooting incident involving casualties inside the joint security area since the 1953 armistice that ended the Korean War.

However, there have been other shootings and deaths elsewhere in the demilitarized Zone. And on Aug. 18, 1976, two U.S. army officers inside the oval security area around Panmunjom were axed and beaten to death by North Korean guards. Nine other U.S. and South Korean soldiers were injured in that incident.

U.S., Soviet relief teams work together in Ethiopia

By JAMES R. PEIPERT

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia — An international effort to ease a catastrophic famine here has provided a diplomatic opportunity for the United States and other Western countries.

But Ethiopian officials and foreign envoys based here say they doubt that the influx of mostly Western aid will prompt the military government to significantly loosen its close ties with the Soviet Union.

"We're here only for humanitarian reasons right now," remarked an official of the U.S. Agency for International development. "If our relations improve, that's a bonus." That official, like other Western and Ethiopian sources, spoke on condition he not be identified.

An Ethiopian official, observing that the Americans were attaching no strings to the aid, said: "This time they are showing signs of maturity. They are concentrating on humanitarian concerns, rather than political things."

The United States has become the biggest single donor of humanitarian aid to Ethiopia, providing about $19 million worth of aid in the fiscal year that ended Sept. 30. The United States also has pledged $60 million more for the new fiscal year.

In the short term, the United States is expected to be allowed soon to upgrade its diplomatic representation here to ambassadorial level. The U.S. ambassador was asked to leave in July 1980, and since then the embassy has been headed by a charge d'affaires.

A longer-term effect of the famine assistance may be the winning over of thousands of ordinary Ethiopians who know that much of the food coming into the country is from the United States. One diplomat said the aid is creating a reservoir of goodwill toward the West that would be beneficial if there ever is a change of government.

But Ethiopia, a country of about 42 million people occupying a strategic position in the Horn of Africa and along the Red Sea, is likely to remain for the foreseeable future the Soviet Union's biggest investment and staunchest ally in Africa.

Ethiopian leader Mengistu Haile Mariam, at a rare news conference on Nov. 16, thanked the people of the United States and Western Europe for the outpouring of aid for more than 6 million people estimated to be suffering from a prolonged drought and famine.

But Mengistu also said the Soviet Union and other Eastern Bloc countries had helped Ethiopia make more progress in the past decade — since the ouster of Emperor Haile Selassie in September 1974 — than it had made in the previous 40 years.

Much of the Soviet aid has been in the form of military hardware, perhaps $3 billion worth by Western estimates, to fight secessionist guerrillas in the northern provinces of Eritrea and Tigre and to counter any threat from neighboring Somalia.

Food aid from the Eastern Bloc has been minimal. It was only after Ethiopia received substantial pledges of famine relief from the West that a somewhat embarrassed Soviet Union said it was sending 300 trucks, 24 helicopters and 12 cargo planes to help transport the food aid.

Ethiopians say privately there have been questions among ordinary people over why the Soviets waited so long to act.

It was an invasion by Somalia in July 1977 of a disputed region of southeastern Ethiopia called the Ogaden that brought about a major turning point in U.S.-Ethiopian relations.

Some well-connected Ethiopians contend the United States forced their country to seek aid from the Soviets by refusing to supply arms to help them fight the Somalians, a foe for centuries.

Aides say Arafat, PLO in harmony with Hussein's overture

By MONA ZIADE
Associated Press Writer

AMMAN, Jordan — Yasser Arafat's two top aides said today the PLO welcomed King Hussein's invitation to join Jordan in an effort to settle the conflict with Israel. But they said fighting must be escalated at the same time.

Salah Khalaf and Khalil Wazir told reporters that political moves must be coupled with an "escalation of the military struggle" and they said the Palestine Liberation Organization would never accept U.N. Security Council Resolution 242 as a basis for a negotiated settlement.

The 1967 resolution calls for an Israeli withdrawal from occupied territory and for a recognition by the Arab countries of Israel's right to live within secure boundaries.

The Jordanian monarch told the Palestine National Council on Thursday that Resolution 242 should be the cornerstone of a settlement based on trading "territory for peace."

The PLO has rejected the resolution because it made no provision for a Palestinian homeland.

"The military struggle is a must," said Khalaf, co-founder of Arafat's Fatah guerrilla group and his chief security adviser. "Escalation of the military struggle must be coupled with a political initiative. Experience has proved that the two are inseparable."

"We support a Jordanian-Palestinian move ... But we cannot say there is a peace initiative," said Wazir, the military second-in-command to Arafat.

The Palestine National Council, the PLO's parliament, convened for a second day today despite a boycott by Syrian-backed dissidents who declared the session illegal, charging it lacked a quorum.

Arafat loyalists said Thursday he mustered 257 members of the 384-seat parliament — four more than required for a quorum — and this was seen a vote of confidence in his leadership of the PLO, which has been weakened by infighting since its guerrillas were expelled from Lebanon by Israel. The Palestine National Council reported four more delegates arrived Friday, bringing the total to 261.

"Arafat falsified the names of representitives of the union members and popular organizations to cover up the lack of quorum," the government-controlled Syrian newspaper Tishrin charged today.

Damascus-based PLO parliament speaker Khaled Fahoum, an independent who sided with Arafat's opponents, told a news conference in Damascus on Thursday that the Amman meeting was "a tragi-comedy."

He said 177 parliament members, more than one-third, had boycotted the meeting and that there was no quorum. "This means the meeting is illegal and consequently the former PNC remains the only valid PNC," Fahoum said.

The deputy parliament speaker, Salim Zaanoun, said the council's charter allowed replacements in some cases.He said some members were part of quotas given to PLO factions or Palestinian unions, which can change their representatives.

Stringent security measures caused a 50-minute delay in today's parliament session. All members were frisked three times by Jordanian security officers before they were allowed into the meeting hall.

In Israel, a spokesman for Prime Minister Shimon Peres said today the Israeli leader does not believe the PLO will take up Hussein's appeal to try diplomacy.

Since the PLO was forced from Lebanon in 1982, four Syrian-backed groups have been demanding that Arafat be removed as PLO chairman.

In his speech Thursday, Arafat, dressed in an olive-drab uniform with a pistol on his right hip, pleaded for the reunion of the "bickering" guerrilla factions and said the Soviet Union was mediating "to correct the relation with the brothers in Syria." Syria is a major Soviet ally in the Middle East.

Black spots on teeth could identify children

Bonded dental disc gives youngsters, others permanent ID card

A small plastic disc planted on a tooth is a new identification tool being used by some dentists.

By DAVID FOX
Associated Press Writer

O'FALLON, Ill. — The black spots on the teeth of some youngsters might not be tooth decay. They could be tooth display — tiny identification discs cemented to teeth that could help locate missing children.

The Maxwell-Conover Micro Informational Disc is the inspiration of Dr. Jeffrey Maxwell, a Pekin dentist, and police detective Sgt. Jim Conover. It is a piece of plastic containing vital data, such as the wearer's name, address, telephone number, and medical information.

"The disc is mounted to the side of the tooth," Maxwell explained. "Then, in a case where you're unconscious and go to the emergency room, they have the information they need.

"Or say a child is found and, either because of youth or drugging he doesn't know who he is, you can tell everything you'd want to know about him."

He said the disc also would be useful for the elderly, amnesia victims or the mentally ill.

It takes only a few minutes to be bonded to a tooth, and drilling is not required. The disc can be removed, and the information on it viewed with a magnifying glass.

Maxwell said the disc was developed from the forensic work he and Conover had done in identifying both the living and dead.

"We worked with the FBI computer out of Washington, filling in dental charts for missing children," he said Wednesday. "A couple of the charts we filled out were very nonunusual; they could have fit almost any kid.

"We kept getting together, and more frustrated, especially with the problem of missing children. We felt there's just got to be a better way of identifying these kids, something they can't lose so no one can take their wallet or ID card and throw it away."

Maxwell said more than 1,000 discs have been sold to dentists from every state since they went on the market in July, but the Spring Valley Dental Group, four O'Fallon dentists, was the first big client.

"We offered it free of charge — that is the service; the disc costs $10," said Dr. Philip E. Kahlert. "As far as I know, we are the first large dental group to use it."

Kahlert's group is offering the service at cost, but only about 50 discs have been applied.

"The response has just not been overwhelming," he said. "Maybe the $10 stood in the way of some people, and maybe some are just sort of burned-out."

Still, he was confident the project would continue.

"It's a good service; I'm still firmly convinced of that," he said. "Of course there's a lot of people who deny the reality of it. They believe it can't happen to their kid.

"But when you look at the number of missing children in the United States every year, I think it's frightening. And if it saves one kid out of a thousand — no, out of 10,000 — I think it's worth it."

The National Weather Service forecasts showers through Saturday for the Southwest and central California, changing to snow over the mountains. Cold temperatures are expected in the Northwest and Northeast.

Showers, thunderstorms likely through Saturday

From Staff and Wire Reports

Midlanders planning to do some weekend Christmas shopping may want to stay home as the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport predicts a 50 percent chance of showers and thunderstorms tonight increasing to 80 percent Saturday.

Temperatures in the Midland area tonight will be near 40 warming to highs Saturday near 50. Southeasterly winds at 10 to 15 mph will become southerly at less than 20 mph.

The record high of 81 set in 1966 was 33 degrees above the high of 48 recorded Thursday. The record low of 17 set in 1938 was 17 degrees below the 34-degree low reached this morning.

STATE

Cloudy skies were expected across all of Texas today with scattered thundershowers expected to dot portions of West Texas.

Pacific moisture in the form of middle and high level clouds spread over a large portion of the state early today, the National Weather Service said. The clouds were increasing, forecasters said, because of an upper level low pressure system in Southern California that has started moving eastward towards Texas.

Low clouds were also reported over portions of South Texas, mainly over the Lower Rio Grande Valley.

Winds were light and variable statewide.

Early morning temperatures were mostly in the 30s with readings in the 40s and lower 50s being reported in South Texas and along the Texas coast. Extremes ranged from 32 at both Longview and Lufkin to 51 at both Laredo and McAllen.

NATION

Nearly 8 inches of rain drenched parts of southern Florida, flooding roads and forcing some residents from their homes, and rain fell in parts of the West, turning to snow in higher elevations.

Rain was scattered over western and central Arizona and northwest Washington early today.

In southern Florida, strong winds and rain forced residents of two trailer parks to head for higher ground and snapped power lines.

More than 7.5 inches of rain fell in the 30 hours ending at 1 a.m. today, said National Weather Service forecaster Andrew Stern at West Palm Beach.

High waves grabbed at the shore along part of State Road A1A in Palm Beach, where sections of the highway routinely wash out during heavy weather.

Arms talks to begin January 7

By MAUREEN SANTINI
AP White House Correspondent

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. — Ending a yearlong stalemate, the United States and the Soviet Union are opening new negotiations in Geneva on Jan. 7-8 in an effort to curb nuclear weapons and space weapons.

"We are ready for genuine give-and-take with the Soviet Union with the purpose of reaching concrete agreements," Robert C. McFarlane, President Reagan's national security adviser, declared.

A joint announcement by the superpowers on Thanksgiving Day said that Secretary of State George P. Shultz and Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko were designated to begin the new talks.

Although the session will formally end a yearlong deadlock, McFarlane cautioned that the quest for an arms agreement was likely to be difficult.

"I would not say that this is a milestone of conclusion but, rather, an opening of a process that will be difficult and sustained over time," he said.

The meeting represents the first face-to-face negotiations on strategic and medium range nuclear weapons in a year, and the first U.S.-Soviet talks on space weapons since 1979. "We enter the talks in January in the spirit of honest compromise and getting results," McFarlane declared.

Without mentioning the extreme U.S.-Soviet hostility that marked most of Reagan's first term, McFarlane said:

"We are at a moment where each side has decided to make a determined effort to reduce tensions."

Shultz and Gromyko will use the first session to discuss the objectives, format and agenda for the new talks, McFarlane said.

His announcement was made at the White House.

In a move that symbolized the tense state of superpower relations, the Soviets stalked out of nuclear arms talks a year ago to protest NATO deployment of new U.S. Pershing 2 and cruise missiles in Europe. Efforts to revive those talks have so far failed.

While McFarlane said the new talks will focus on strategic nuclear weapons, medium-range nuclear weapons and space weapons, he added it was not yet known whether the separate suspended nuclear talks will ever be revived.

But there was the possibility the new talks would, in effect, replace the stalemated talks. That way, the Soviets would not have to back down on the preconditions they had set for resuming those negotiations.

However, McFarlane indicated the administration still hoped the earlier talks could be revived, saying their "established institutions and channels and delegations and so forth make possible immediate progress ... without further delay."

Nevertheless, he said the United States was willing to "listen about alternative ideas on the other side and we look forward to doing that in January."

Reagan, who won re-election Nov. 6 in a landslide, said he intended to make arms control the No. 1 priority of his second term, which will begin two weeks after the start of the Geneva talks.

McFarlane traveled to Reagan's mountaintop ranch Monday to discuss the agreement, and then returned to Washington to finalize the details.

The national security adviser quoted Reagan as saying, "It's the first step in what will be a long and difficult road, but the world is depending on us."

But there was no direct reaction from the president, who celebrated the holiday privately with a traditional turkey dinner with most of his family.

In language that presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said was approved in advance by Reagan and Moscow, McFarlane said:

"The United States and the Soviet Union have agreed to enter into new negotiations with the objective of reaching mutually acceptable agreements on the whole range of questions concerning nuclear and outer space arms."

He said the agreement resulted from exchanges between Reagan and Soviet leader Konstantin U. Chernenko over the past eight weeks, but did not divulge the nature of the contacts.

The national security adviser said the exchanges began after Reagan proposed a new approach to arms talks during his speech to the United Nations in September.

That speech, and Reagan's subsequent White House meeting with Gromyko, occurred at the height of his re-election campaign. Reagan's political advisers worried privately that the perception by some Americans that Reagan was a "warmonger" would become a campaign issue.

Since halting the arms talks last November, the Soviets have been insisting they would not return to that bargaining table until the United States removed the newly deployed missiles from Western Europe.

And after Reagan proposed massive U.S. research into establishing a defensive system in outer space against incoming nuclear missiles, the Soviets said repeatedly they wanted to discuss a moratorium on such militarization of space before resuming nuclear arms talks.

The Thanksgiving Day announcement appears to have satisfied both sides, since the talks will focus on both nuclear weapons and space weapons.

McFarlane said there were no preconditions on the new talks, signaling the agreement was reached without Moscow insisting on removal of the NATO missiles from Europe.

In Moscow, Soviet Foreign Ministry spokesman Vladimir Lomeiko said the Soviet Union would still insist on the removal of the missiles before agreeing to return to the old talks.

"As far as those negotiations go, the situation has not changed. They are only possible given the removal of the NATO rockets," he said.

McFarlane appeared to switch between optimism about the agreement and wariness about what the new talks could produce.

He said Reagan "sees it as a positive sign of an acceptance by the Soviet Union ... to enter a serious dialogue" to lower tension and the level of arms.

Then he added: "But we will see. It is important that at these sessions both sides enter with a spirit of good will and that they lead to specific negotiations to follow."

He said the U.S.-Soviet relationship "is acknowledged on both sides to be central to the preservation of peace and stability throughout the world."

"We have consistently taken the position that reducing nuclear weapons must be the most important objective facing both countries," said McFarlane.

After three years of strong anti-Soviet denunciations, such as labeling Moscow an "evil empire," Reagan began to soften his rhetoric a bit last January after the arms control talks stalled and European allies expressed alarm about the hostility between the superpowers.

Lately, Reagan has been saying he still doesn't believe in the Communist system but recognizes that the superpowers have to co-exist.

Earthquake hits South Pacific

Associated Press

HONG KONG — An earthquake measuring 6.5 on the Richter scale shook the South Pacific near the Vanuatu Islands, about 1,400 miles northeast of Brisbane, Australia, the Hong Kong Observatory said today.

Neither the observatory or the U.S. Geological Survey, which also recorded the quake in Golden, Colo., had reports of damage or injuries. USGS officials said they measured the quake at 6.7 on the Richter scale.

Meanwhile, the Indonesian meteorlogical agency said an earthquake, also registering 6.5 on the Richter scale, rocked the capital of Jakarta and its surrounding areas shortly before noon today, about a half hour before the South Pacific quake was recorded.

It did not report any casualties or damage from that earthquake, which it said was centered in the Indian Ocean about 255 miles west of Jakarta.

The reported center of the South Pacific quake was thousands of miles from the reported Indonesian quake.

The USGS National Earthquake Information Center placed the hypocenter of the South Pacific earthquake at latitude 14.1 degrees south and longitude 170.6 degrees east.

The Richter scale is a measure of ground motion as recorded on seismographs. Every increase of one number means a tenfold increase in magnitude. Thus a reading of 7.5 reflects an earthquake 10 times stronger than one of 6.5.

An earthquake of 6 on the Richter scale can cause severe damage. A 7 reading is a "major" earthquake, capable of widespread heavy damage.

The Vanuatu Islands were known as the New Hebrides until 1980.

South Florida has holiday flood

Associated Press

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. — Strong winds and nearly 8 inches of rain forced residents of two trailer parks to head for higher ground, snapped power lines and made traffic accident rates go "bonkers" as South Florida sloshed through Thanksgiving Day.

The National Weather Service in West Palm Beach reported 7.53 inches of rain for the 30-hour period ending at 1 a.m. today, said forecaster Andrew Stern.

"I don't think we'll have more in the way of heavy amounts, but it's going to rain a light rain on and off," said meteorologist Ron White at the National Hurricane Center in Coral Gables.

Red Cross workers set up a temporary shelter for residents of two trailer parks in suburban West Palm Beach driven from their homes by flooding.

"This morning, the water was up to the second step outside," said Tom O'Donald, a resident of the Seminole Colony trailer park. "A little more and it would have come into the trailer."

Jerry Krinn, a Red Cross disaster services coordinator for Palm Beach County, said most residents of the parks returned home late Thursday.

High waves grabbed at the shore along part of State Road A1A in Palm Beach where sections of the highway routinely wash out during heavy weather. Auto accident rates were up Wednesday because of the rain.

"It was crazy ... it went bonkers," said Florida Highway Patrol Trooper LeeAnn Pender in St. Lucie County.

About 1,200 Merritt Island residents were without electricity for about two hours Thursday morning when winds gusting to 25 mph blew tree limbs onto power lines.

Thanksgiving kicks off holiday season

By MARY MacVEAN
Associated Press Writer

Millions of Americans kept alive a tradition that started with a harvest feast more than 350 years ago by sharing dinner with loved ones and reaching out to the hungry in Thanksgiving celebrations that kicked off the winter holiday season.

From the nation's first family to its desperate poor, it was a day to belly up to turkey and all the trimmings. Tens of thousands of homeless, hungry or lonely people feasted on free meals and warmth offered in soup kitchens, restaurants and shelters.

Miles of parades wound throught the streets of several of the nation's biggest cities on Thursday, a day before those same streets would taken over by the kickoff of the Christmas shopping madness. To herald the season, more than 100,000 people watched the lighting of a 90-foot Christmas tree in Atlanta.

In New York City, at least 100,000 people bundled up against the cold to watch Raggedy Ann, Garfield the mischievous cat and the other helium-filled stars of the 58th annual Macy's Thanksgiving Day Parade.

In Montgomery, Ala., the Turkey Day Classic parade was marred by the stabbing death of a 20-year-old spectator. A juvenile was in custody.

Police said more than 500,000 people turned out, despite temperatures dipping as low as 12 degrees, to watch Detroit's 58th annual parade. And more than 400,000 people lined Philadelphia's streets for the Gimbels Thanksgiving Parade. An estimated 80 million people watched the parades on television.

Thanksgiving marks the five-day feast held in 1621, when Massachusetts Bay colonists shared their harvest with the Wampanoag Indians.

"Thanksgiving is supposed to be with the Indians," said Indian activist Russell Means, adding that he and others across the country fasted and prayed in mourning on Wednesday and Thursday. "There isn't a thing with the Indians in the public or the press — out of sight, out of mind."

But for most people, it was a day of gobbling gobblers and sharing with those more familiar with want than bounty.

Daniel Alvarez, 39, was among the estimated 18,000 people who ate free Thanksgiving dinners in New York City.

"I'm on Social Security, I can't get an apartment, I sleep on the train.... I don't usually eat this much," he said, eyeing three pieces of pie on his tray during a dinner given by the Salvation Army.

Nicole Petculescu and her husband, John, came to the United States from Romania in 1972. On Thursday, they opened their cafe in Kingman, Ariz., to "everybody who comes in."

"This country received me with such warmth. I just want to give a little of it back," Mrs. Petculescu said.

In Chicago, Ismet Deletioglu prepared to feed 1,600 guests at his ninth annual feast at Matt's Port.

Texans call attention to Ethiopian famine

Associated Press

As Texans celebrated Thanksgiving with football games and feasts, about 100 people in Houston marched two miles from a downtown park to a Baptist church to call attention to the plight of starving people in Ethiopia.

And thousands of elderly and needy residents of the state gathered Thursday for free meals of thanks — many of them at two traditional giant affairs in Fort Worth and San Antonio.

U.S. Rep. Mickey Leland, who organized the Houston march, planned to leave for Ethiopia today to study relief efforts in the drought-stricken African nation.

Raul Jimenez Sr. had no idea what he was starting when he offered a free Thanksgiving turkey dinner to 250 senior citizens in Fort Worth 12 years ago.

Thursday, the 52-year-old executive of the Jimenez Food Products Co. offered free meals to an estimated 18,000 people in Fort Worth and San Antonio with help from grocery stores, local governments and organizations, citizens' donations and volunteers.

"The good Lord has been good to me and my family, and I wanted to show my thanks," Jimenez said Wednesday while preparing for the feasts.

About 145 turkeys, 90 gallons of green beans and sweet potatoes, 180 pounds of corn bread mix and 700 pounds of gravy mix were prepared for the Fort Worth dinner alone.

"I had a dream to do something for senior citizens," said Jimenez.

Labor's chief of staff investigated for role in contract, sailboat trip

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Labor Department is refusing to disclose the status of its chief of staff, who, sources say, is under investigation for his role in awarding no-bid contracts and a trip on a lobbyist's sailboat.

The sources said the department's Office of Inspector General — which investigates fraud, waste and abuse — has been interviewing employees about the activities of Daniel K. Benjamin, a senior aide and trusted ally of Labor Secretary Raymond Donovan.

The sources spoke only on condition they not be quoted by name, and several said they have been asked by investigators and other department officials not to speak with reporters about Benjamin.

Donovan is on unpaid leave while he defends himself against a grand jury indictment in Bronx County Court in New York.

A woman answering Benjamin's office telephone refused to say whether he was working and referred a reporter to department spokesman Michael Volpe, who also refused to confirm whether the chief of staff was on the job. Volpe added that information on leaves by department officials is "private and non-disclosable."

Attempts to reach Benjamin at his home on several occasions were unsuccessful. Messages left on his home phone recording system, asking him to call, produced no results.

In mid-October, Benjamin told senior department officials in a memo that he would be on leave from his $66,400 salary through the end of that month. One source said he has not returned since, although it is possible he could have appeared in his office briefly. As chief of staff, Benjamin normally has a high-profile job within the department.

According to the sources, investigators are focusing on:

— Benjamin's trip last July on the 32-foot "Navajo Chief," a sailboat owned by lobbyist Mike McKevitt, Washington counsel for the National Federation of Independent Business. The organization represents some 560,000 small businesses, which are affected by department regulations and programs.

— The role Benjamin played in the award of contracts without competitive bidding, including a seven-day contract to his former research assistant who was one of his sailing partners on the lobbyist's boat.

— Government forms filled out by Benjamin, in which he listed different amounts for his earnings before entering government service.

Asked about the case, Deputy Inspector General Raymond Maria said, "I cannot confirm nor deny that we have an investigation of that nature."

A former assistant professor of economics at the University of Washington in Seattle, Benjamin, 37, entered the Labor Department as a consultant in June 1982 and served in several high-ranking jobs before his appointment as chief of staff last May.

The sources said investigators specifically asked about a $2,357 contract awarded to Keith Wollenberg, a former research assistant to Benjamin at the University of Washington.

College's beauty pageant turns into 'meat market'

MILLEDGEVILLE, Ga. (AP) — The Georgia College newspaper has entered a piece of beef in the Miss Georgia College scholarship pageant to protest rules governing the behavior of contestants.

The roast was entered to protest requirements that a contestant must not have been married, cohabitated with a male, had an abortion, had any children or have any plans to marry before the end of her reign.

"It's no one's business who a contestant has lived with or if she has had an abortion," said Jackie Smith, editor of The Colonnade. "The pageant is dictating behavior in the name of scholarship. What do any of those requirements have to do with scholarship?"

Miss Smith and staff writer Andrew Boswell entered "Piece of Meat" in the contest by submitting an official entry form, seven black and white photos of the roast and a $30 fee. But Miss Smith doubts the contestant will be considered.

Nevertheless, as contestant sponsors, Miss Smith and Boswell will be able to attend the sponsors' meeting Nov. 27, during which the two students "will be able to air our beef," Miss Smith said.

The purpose of the beef entry is to draw attention to the pageant, and, perhaps, end it, she said.

"The pageant exploits women and it's really a beauty pageant and not a scholarship pageant," Miss Smith said. "Sometimes at Georgia College you have to go to extremes to get something done."

Good things happen in one-room school

ELLIS CORNERS, Mich. (AP) — When Debbie Beyer isn't busy teaching the three R's at Fredonia Township School No. 2 she spends her time ordering supplies, shoveling snow and cleaning the bathroom. But none of the three students in the one-room school complain about a lack of attention.

"I always thought it would be really fun to teach in a situation like here," Ms. Beyer said. "A lot of good things go on here. There's lots of love and good feelings. I think they are getting a good, quality education. In a lot of ways it's superior."

Kindergarten through fifth-grade classes are offered at the south-central Michigan school, one of only 21 one-room schools left in the state.

The class this year consists of fourth-grader Tina Smith, 9, and third-graders Susan Washburn, 8, and Shawn Combs, 9. No other elementary-age children live in the 5¾-square-mile district. But it does have preschool-age children, so the school likely will stay open, Ms. Beyer said.

Ms. Beyer, who began teaching in Fredonia this fall, said the students benefit from the school's relaxed atmosphere, high teacher-pupil contact and lack of discipline problems.

"There's not so many kids as in other schools," said Tina, the fourth-grader.

That fact allows Ms. Beyer to offer special projects — like microscope study — that would be much more difficult in a 30- or 35-student classroom. She also teaches math, spelling, history, art, physical education and music.

Specialized programs like speech therapy and social work, as well as audio-visual equipment, come from the Calhoun County Intermediate School District.

The students pitch in by washing chalkboards, cleaning sinks and helping clean the 1860s-vintage building.

The intimate environment has paid several dividends, Ms. Beyer said. Third-grader Susan probably will be ready for fifth-grade schoolwork next year, and Fredonia School students have posted consistently high scores on state assessment tests, she said.

Park to be built at site of Mexican fire

By CHRIS ANGELO
Associated Press Writer

MEXICO CITY — State officials say a park will be built on the scorched ground where fiery explosions destroyed scores of houses and killed 346 people in a poor neighborhood outside the capital.

Benjamin Granados, state of Mexico public works director, said bulldozers would begin razing 122 homes no longer safe for habitation, possibly today. Trucks began moving belongings from the homes to warehouses Thursday.

"In 10 or 15 days it will be a park," he said of the heaviest damaged part of the San Juan Ixhuatepec section of suburban Tlalnepantla. The death toll rose to 346 on Thursday when nine victims died in the hospital.

People whose homes are razed will be given new homes worth $10,000 in another area. But some residents said they would rather remain, especially if the devastated gas storage plant, owned by the government oil monopoly PEMEX, is moved.

Some residents said that about eight or nine months ago they also fled a fire at a lumber facility in the same PEMEX complex. That fire was controlled and they returned home some afterwards.

PEMEX officials have said they do not plan to rebuild the gas facility in the same place, and the location may also be turned into parkland.

Some residents said they believed their houses could be repaired, although they were in the area considered uninhabitable.

Granados said a few standing houses in the planned park area will probably be demolished, even if they are in satisfactory condition, to develop a "security belt" against future explosions, should PEMEX rebuild.

He said the residences were built on land sold illegally by farmers who had the right to work, but not sell, government communal farmland. "We are taking advantage of the situation to regularize the zone," said an official involved in the planning, who spoke on condition he not be named.

Returning to their homes Thursday, many residents found only charred remains and piles of rubble from Monday's blasts.

For Raul Pena Duarte, 44, there was little left.

"All my family died there," Pena Duarte said as stood at a doorway opening onto the blackened rubble of the house and patio he had built. Only walls and the wheels of what might have been a bicycle were recognizable.

"I had gone to work. They were all asleep," he said. "A piece of one of the tanks went through there and then everything burned."

Pena Duarte, his wife, four children ranging from 10 to 16, his wife's mother and sister and another family lived in the simple three-room house.

WORLD in brief

British joining American threat to leave UNESCO

PARIS (AP) — Britain's decision to join the United States in threatening withdrawal from UNESCO unless reforms are made deepens the crisis facing the U.N. agency, and increases pressure on other Western nations to follow suit.

One Western delegate, who spoke Thursday on condition that he not be named, said the decisions of two founding members to withdraw from the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization was especially significant.

"In this situation, one plus one means an awful lot more than two," he said. "There will have to be a re-examination of possibilities in Washington and European capitals."

Geoffrey Howe, Britain's foreign secretary, said Thursday that his country would pull out of the 161-nation organization unless management and budget reforms are made by the end of 1985.

Reporter questioned

AMRITSAR, India (AP) — An Associated Press newsman has been questioned for two hours by Amritsar police in connection with a dispatch about last June's Indian army assault on the Golden Temple, holiest shrine of the Sikh religion.

Brahma Chellaney, 27, had been directed by the Supreme Court to go to Amritsar and cooperate in the police investigation. He was not arrested, however, and remained free on temporary bail.

Chellaney, who has worked for The Associated Press for six years, was asked Thursday about his activities in Amritsar when he was the only representative of a foreign news organization present during the temple siege.

Challaney has been charged with violating Punjab press censorship rules and committing two non-bailable criminal offenses: promoting communal discord between the majority Hindus and minority Sikhs, and wounding the religious sentiments of the Sikhs.

Court upholds union ban

LONDON (NYT) — The House of Lords, Great Britain's highest court of appeal, refused on Thursday to overturn the government's ban on unions at the high-security Government Communications Headquarters, in Cheltenham. The civil service unions involved immediately said they would appeal to the European Court of Justice.

When imposing the ban in January the government said past labor disruptions and the threat of future ones was a national security risk. The unions protested fiercely, with backing from many other trade unions and opposition figures.

The government offered the 7,000 employees affected at Cheltenham and seven other stations just over $1,200 each in compensation for the loss of their union rights. Those who insisted on staying in the union were offered alternative jobs. To the dismay of union leaders, most employees accepted the payments.

Shcharansky sends word

JERUSALEM (AP) — Soviet dissident Anatoly Shcharansky, whose whereabouts were unknown for several weeks after he was transfered from a Soviet prison, has sent word that he has arrived at a labor camp but hinted his health was poor, his wife said today.

Avital Shcharansky said her husband had cabled his brother Leonid in Moscow confirming that he had arrived in work camp No. 35 in the Ural mountains.

Shcharansky served the last three years in prison at Chistopol about 500 miles east of Moscow. He was sentenced in 1978 to a 13-year term on charges of anti-Soviet activity and spying for the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency.

Japan chases bombers

TOKYO (AP) — Two Soviet bombers violated Japanese airspace today near the main southern island of Kyushu, and 34 Japanese warplanes scrambled to meet them, a Defense Agency spokesman said. There were no reports of a clash.

Spokesman Masamu Nishida said two Tu-95 "Bear" bombers flew south over the Tsushima Strait near Okinoshima Island at about 6:30 a.m., violating Japan's 12-mile territorial airspace for about 3 minutes and 20 seconds.

DILLARD'S WELCOMES THE AMERICAN EXPRESS® CARD

Watergate hero Samuel Dash still relishes spotlight

SAN DIEGO — With more than a trace of deja vu, Samuel Dash was savoring the election returns from Puerto Rico.

Dash, on the University of San Diego law school faculty this semester as a visiting professor, was beaming in his cluttered office next to the law library stacks as he displayed a recent front page from a Puerto Rican newspaper.

A photograph of Dash took up half of the page of the tabloid, and the banner headline read: "Investigador de Watergate critica a Romero y al FBI."

The proud smile evidenced that Dash — propelled to national fame 11 years earlier by his role of chief counsel to the U.S. Senate Watergate Committee — still relishes the spotlight. He continues to take pride in having a role in making the system of laws in a democratic society work.

Between teaching a criminal procedure class at USD, working on ethics problems for the American Bar Association and preparing a case for the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals, Dash has spent the last few months advising the Puerto Rican Senate on how to conduct an investigation into alleged corruption by Puerto Rico's Gov. Carlos Romero Barcelo.

On Nov. 6 — three days after the newspaper article — the citizens of Puerto Rico turned out the governor of the commonwealth.

The vote followed the Puerto Rican Senate's investigation and televised public hearings on an alleged cover-up by Romero Barcelo's administration involving the slaying of three young Puerto Ricans by police.

"They impeached the governor by the election process," Dash said, noting a direct relation between the election returns and the Senate's investigation and televised hearings, which were patterned after the Watergate probe.

He could not help but note the similarities between Romero Barcelo's downfall and Richard Nixon's.

"In Watergate," Dash said, "the public in the millions responded to the hearings by their telegrams and letters to the White House and Congress.

"It was only through this response that Congress had the guts to initiate the impeachment process or the special prosecutor could ultimately prosecute these people. It took the knowledge of the people in power that the people who voted for them knew what was going on and wanted proper law enforcement."

Dash, 59, who speaks with an intense ardor in discussing the Constitution and the Bill of Rights, said an informed electorate and an accountable, responsible government are essential to a participatory democracy.

"Things get bad," he said, "when there's a gap between the people and the people who are supposed to govern them, when the people who govern begin to think that they have the power separate from the people and that the government belongs to them.

"That happened in Mr. Nixon's administration. He really believed he owned the government — that the Justice Department, the CIA and the FBI belonged to him and he could use them as devices to go against his enemies."

"When the people are fully informed and really know what happens," Dash said, "they have this sense of outrage and they'll respond to it and act as participating citizens.

"Vigilance is the only thing that is going to keep us a democracy and that vigilance can only be guaranteed if there is an informed public."

Thirty-four years ago, Sam Dash became a lawyer. Just about ever since, he has been at or near the forefront of legal issues in the criminal justice system, both here and abroad.

The New Jersey native graduated with honors from Harvard Law School in 1950 and then took a teaching position with Northwestern University School of Law. Concurrently he undertook his first job of investigative work: an undercover look at Chicago's municipal judges for the Chicago Crime Commission.

"I went to the municipal judges and told them I was a new young law teacher and I was going to teach criminal law and I didn't know anything about it," Dash recalls.

The result was a Law Review article that disclosed corruption on the Chicago bench called "Cracks in the Foundation of Criminal Justice."

Puppeteer requires coordination

NEW YORK (AP) — Call it great character acting. Caroll Spinney, the alter-ego of both the chirpy Big Bird and the cantankerous Oscar the Grouch, says he has no trouble keeping their voices and personalities distinct.

"It's easy because they're so different," said Spinney, a puppeteer for 40 years who began playing Big Bird and Oscar when "Sesame Street" began 16 years ago. "It doesn't mess up my head at all."

Spinney goes underground from behind a trash can when he plays the immobile Oscar, but he dons orange leggings and a bulky, canary-yellow body costume to play the lumbering 8-foot character, Big Bird.

One hand held aloft maneuvers the beak and the other hand moves one of the bird's feathery claws. It's hard physical work. When he hasn't performed for awhile, Spinney lifts small weights to stay in shape.

Maneuvering his awkward character, who sometimes rollerskates, requires real coordination. The costume has no eye holes, so Spinney has a miniature TV monitor strapped to his chest to see where he's going and who he's talking to. But he only can see what the camera is covering.

"It can get a little stuffy in there," said Spinney.

Sixteen years ago, Big Bird was much scrawnier, "the equivalent of Mickey Mouse's pal Goofy," said Spinney. "He started out looking very ratty, sort of an ugly duckling who turned into a good-looking bird."

In the next decade and a half, Big Bird has grown in stature and aged from 4½ to 6 years old. Meanwhile, his appeal, as the loving, naive child in all of us, has always been universal.

"I have the sweetest audience in the world," said Spinney. "They haven't been spoiled by the rest of television yet."

He prefers Big Bird to the surly Oscar, who's a favorite of many adults because of his biting sense of humor.

"We've had a hard time keeping Oscar on track," said Spinney. "There's a distinction between being grouchy and being mean."

Parents can crush babies

CHICAGO (AP) — Researchers studying the effect of child restraints on death and injury of youngsters involved in auto accidents say it's a myth that the "best place for a baby to travel is in its mothers arms."

Children in a passenger's arms suffered nearly the same rate of death and injury as entirely unrestrained children, the researchers said in a recent Journal of the American Medical Association.

And in a 30 mph crash, the adult holding a child "usually becomes a huge blunt object that crushes the baby against the dashboard," they said.

By comparison, restraints for youngsters age 4 and under virtually eliminated the risk of death, according to a study that showed requiring older children to wear seat belts would lessen the severity of injuries and save millions of dollars in medical costs.

Researchers who studied accident reports for 1982 and 1983 in Tennessee estimated that only about 30 percent of youngsters traveling in cars actually were in restraint devices, even though their use for children aged 4 and under is required by state law.

Tennessee was the first state to require that children be put in approved child-restraint devices when traveling in cars. Forty-eight other states have since enacted similar legislation.

Dr. Robert Sanders of the Rutherford County, Tenn., Health Department cited motor vehicle accidents as the No. 1 cause of death for all children beyond infancy and called restraint laws "the most practical approach to 'immunizing' children against their leading killer."

The researchers found that of the 81 children who died in auto accidents in Tennessee since the passage of the first child-restraint law in 1978, only two were strapped in. Of the 17 deaths in 1982 and 1983, none were in such restraint devices, the study said.

Park to be built at site of Mexican fire

By CHRIS ANGELO
Associated Press Writer

MEXICO CITY — State officials say a park will be built on the scorched ground where fiery explosions destroyed scores of houses and killed 346 people in a poor neighborhood outside the capital.

Benjamin Granados, state of Mexico public works director, said bulldozers would begin razing 122 homes no longer safe for habitation, possibly today. Trucks began moving belongings from the homes to warehouses Thursday.

"In 10 or 15 days it will be a park," he said of the heaviest damaged part of the San Juan Ixhuatepec section of suburban Tlalnepantla. The death toll rose to 346 on Thursday when nine victims died in the hospital.

People whose homes are razed will be given new homes worth $10,000 in another area. But some residents said they would rather remain, especially if the devastated gas storage plant, owned by the government oil monopoly PEMEX, is moved.

Some residents said that about eight or nine months ago they also fled a fire at a lumber facility in the same PEMEX complex. That fire was controlled and they returned home some afterwards.

PEMEX officials have said they do not plan to rebuild the gas facility in the same place, and the location may also be turned into parkland.

Some residents said they believed their houses could be repaired, although they were in the area considered uninhabitable.

Granados said a few standing houses in the planned park area will probably be demolished, even if they are in satisfactory condition, to develop a "security belt" against future explosions, should PEMEX rebuild.

He said the residences were built on land sold illegally by farmers who had the right to work, but not sell, government communal farmland. "We are taking advantage of the situation to regularize the zone," said an official involved in the planning, who spoke on condition he not be named.

Returning to their homes Thursday, many residents found only charred remains and piles of rubble from Monday's blasts.

For Raul Pena Duarte, 44, there was little left.

"All my family died there," Pena Duarte said as stood at a doorway opening onto the blackened rubble of the house and patio he had built. Only walls and the wheels of what might have been a bicycle were recognizable.

"I had gone to work. They were all asleep," he said. "A piece of one of the tanks went through there and then everything burned."

Pena Duarte, his wife, four children ranging from 10 to 16, his wife's mother and sister and another family lived in the simple three-room house.

WORLD in brief

British joining American threat to leave UNESCO

PARIS (AP) — Britain's decision to join the United States in threatening withdrawal from UNESCO unless reforms are made deepens the crisis facing the U.N. agency, and increases pressure on other Western nations to follow suit.

One Western delegate, who spoke Thursday on condition that he not be named, said the decisions of two founding members to withdraw from the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization was especially significant.

"In this situation, one plus one means an awful lot more than two," he said. "There will have to be a re-examination of possibilities in Washington and European capitals."

Geoffrey Howe, Britain's foreign secretary, said Thursday that his country would pull out of the 161-nation organization unless management and budget reforms are made by the end of 1985.

Reporter questioned

AMRITSAR, India (AP) — An Associated Press newsman has been questioned for two hours by Amritsar police in connection with a dispatch about last June's Indian army assault on the Golden Temple, holiest shrine of the Sikh religion.

Brahma Chellaney, 27, had been directed by the Supreme Court to go to Amritsar and cooperate in the police investigation. He was not arrested, however, and remained free on temporary bail.

Chellaney, who has worked for The Associated Press for six years, was asked Thursday about his activities in Amritsar when he was the only representative of a foreign news organization present during the temple siege.

Challaney has been charged with violating Punjab press censorship rules and committing two non-bailable criminal offenses: promoting communal discord between the majority Hindus and minority Sikhs, and wounding the religious sentiments of the Sikhs.

Court upholds union ban

LONDON (NYT) — The House of Lords, Great Britain's highest court of appeal, refused on Thursday to overturn the government's ban on unions at the high-security Government Communications Headquarters, in Cheltenham. The civil service unions involved immediately said they would appeal to the European Court of Justice.

When imposing the ban in January the government said past labor disruptions and the threat of future ones was a national security risk. The unions protested fiercely, with backing from many other trade unions and opposition figures.

The government offered the 7,000 employees affected at Cheltenham and seven other stations just over $1,200 each in compensation for the loss of their union rights. Those who insisted on staying in the union were offered alternative jobs. To the dismay of union leaders, most employees accepted the payments.

Shcharansky sends word

JERUSALEM (AP) — Soviet dissident Anatoly Shcharansky, whose whereabouts were unknown for several weeks after he was transfered from a Soviet prison, has sent word that he has arrived at a labor camp but hinted his health was poor, his wife said today.

Avital Shcharansky said her husband had cabled his brother Leonid in Moscow confirming that he had arrived in work camp No. 35 in the Ural mountains.

Shcharansky served the last three years in prison at Chistopol about 500 miles east of Moscow. He was sentenced in 1978 to a 13-year term on charges of anti-Soviet activity and spying for the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency.

Japan chases bombers

TOKYO (AP) — Two Soviet bombers violated Japanese airspace today near the main southern island of Kyushu, and 34 Japanese warplanes scrambled to meet them, a Defense Agency spokesman said. There were no reports of a clash.

Spokesman Masamu Nishida said two Tu-95 "Bear" bombers flew south over the Tsushima Strait near Okinoshima Island at about 6:30 a.m., violating Japan's 12-mile territorial airspace for about 3 minutes and 20 seconds.

DILLARD'S WELCOMES THE AMERICAN EXPRESS® CARD

Watergate hero Samuel Dash still relishes spotlight

SAN DIEGO — With more than a trace of deja vu, Samuel Dash was savoring the election returns from Puerto Rico.

Dash, on the University of San Diego law school faculty this semester as a visiting professor, was beaming in his cluttered office next to the law library stacks as he displayed a recent front page from a Puerto Rican newspaper.

A photograph of Dash took up half of the page of the tabloid, and the banner headline read: "Investigador de Watergate critica a Romero y al FBI."

The proud smile evidenced that Dash — propelled to national fame 11 years earlier by his role of chief counsel to the U.S. Senate Watergate Committee — still relishes the spotlight. He continues to take pride in having a role in making the system of laws in a democratic society work.

Between teaching a criminal procedure class at USD, working on ethics problems for the American Bar Association and preparing a case for the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals, Dash has spent the last few months advising the Puerto Rican Senate on how to conduct an investigation into alleged corruption by Puerto Rico's Gov. Carlos Romero Barcelo.

On Nov. 6 — three days after the newspaper article — the citizens of Puerto Rico turned out the governor of the commonwealth.

The vote followed the Puerto Rican Senate's investigation and televised public hearings on an alleged cover-up by Romero Barcelo's administration involving the slaying of three young Puerto Ricans by police.

"They impeached the governor by the election process," Dash said, noting a direct relation between the election returns and the Senate's investigation and televised hearings, which were patterned after the Watergate probe.

He could not help but note the similarities between Romero Barcelo's downfall and Richard Nixon's.

"In Watergate," Dash said, "the public in the millions responded to the hearings by their telegrams and letters to the White House and Congress.

"It was only through this response that Congress had the guts to initiate the impeachment process or the special prosecutor could ultimately prosecute these people. It took the knowledge of the people in power that the people who voted for them knew what was going on and wanted proper law enforcement."

Dash, 59, who speaks with an intense ardor in discussing the Constitution and the Bill of Rights, said an informed electorate and an accountable, responsible government are essential to a participatory democracy.

"Things get bad," he said, "when there's a gap between the people and the people who are supposed to govern them, when the people who govern begin to think that they have the power separate from the people and that the government belongs to them.

"That happened in Mr. Nixon's administration. He really believed he owned the government — that the Justice Department, the CIA and the FBI belonged to him and he could use them as devices to go against his enemies."

"When the people are fully informed and really know what happens," Dash said, "they have this sense of outrage and they'll respond to it and act as participating citizens.

"Vigilance is the only thing that is going to keep us a democracy and that vigilance can only be guaranteed if there is an informed public."

Thirty-four years ago, Sam Dash became a lawyer. Just about ever since, he has been at or near the forefront of legal issues in the criminal justice system, both here and abroad.

The New Jersey native graduated with honors from Harvard Law School in 1950 and then took a teaching position with Northwestern University School of Law. Concurrently he undertook his first job of investigative work: an undercover look at Chicago's municipal judges for the Chicago Crime Commission.

"I went to the municipal judges and told them I was a new young law teacher and I was going to teach criminal law and I didn't know anything about it," Dash recalls.

The result was a Law Review article that disclosed corruption on the Chicago bench called "Cracks in the Foundation of Criminal Justice."

Puppeteer requires coordination

NEW YORK (AP) — Call it great character acting. Caroll Spinney, the alter-ego of both the chirpy Big Bird and the cantankerous Oscar the Grouch, says he has no trouble keeping their voices and personalities distinct.

"It's easy because they're so different," said Spinney, a puppeteer for 40 years who began playing Big Bird and Oscar when "Sesame Street" began 16 years ago. "It doesn't mess up my head at all."

Spinney goes underground from behind a trash can when he plays the immobile Oscar, but he dons orange leggings and a bulky, canary-yellow body costume to play the lumbering 8-foot character, Big Bird.

One hand held aloft maneuvers the beak and the other hand moves one of the bird's feathery claws. It's hard physical work. When he hasn't performed for awhile, Spinney lifts small weights to stay in shape.

Maneuvering his awkward character, who sometimes rollerskates, requires real coordination. The costume has no eye holes, so Spinney has a miniature TV monitor strapped to his chest to see where he's going and who he's talking to. But he only can see what the camera is covering.

Missing children

Six-year-old Etan Patz left his home in the SoHo district of Manhattan May 25, 1979, to walk to school. He never arrived and he's never been found.

Johnny Gosch, 12, went out early in the morning of Sept. 5, 1982, to deliver newspapers in his hometown of Des Moines, Iowa. He never returned home and his whereabouts are unknown.

Eugene Martin, 13, another Des Moines newspaper carrier, disappeared without a trace last Aug. 12.

These youngsters and tens of thousands of others are part of a growing list of missing children throughout this nation. For a number of years there was no coordinated effort to help find the youngsters. Many times the missing children were simply listed as runaways. In a lot of cases, that was accurate. It soon became evident that the problem was more complex, though, and in June the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children opened its doors in Washington, D.C.

Jay Howell, executive director, says the center's efforts are meeting with success. "We are confident it does work," he said and he has statistics to back up his assertion. The center's "hotline," which is a toll free telephone number to which anyone having information on a missing child is urged to call, received 2,000 calls in its first week of operation alone. The toll free number is 800-843-5678.

The center, funded by a $3.3 million Justice Department grant, has a staff of 28 people who assist individuals and local governments in finding missing children. The staff also assists law-enforcement agencies in aiding the victims and their families.

While much progress already has been made on the problem of missing children, not even the full extent of the problem is known. The center estimates at least 1.5 million children disappear from their homes each year. Most of them are runaways and many return home before long.

Some don't, though. They end up as victims of street crime or exploitation. In fact, recent studies indicate 85 percent of the children who have been criminally or sexually exploited were missing from their homes at the time.

That's reason enough to justify the center's continued existence. As long as the problem of missing children remains so prevalent, concerted effort to find and help the youngsters — and parents — is essential.

Kitchen debate

The Japanese are miffed at Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige because he is pressuring them to stop commercial whaling.

"We have a long tradition of eating whale meat, as Americans eat turkey," said Tatsuo Saito, deputy director of Japan's Fishery Agency.

Mr. Baldrige should not let that remark go by.

If Americans were indulging a long tradition of dining on California condor or whooping crane, Mr. Saito would have a point. But we're trying mightily to keep those rare birds from becoming extinct. The domestic turkey of which Mr. Saito speaks is anything but an endangered species. In fact, American farmers are always worried about raising too many of them, which drives down the price.

Whales, on the other hand, are wild and splendid creatures of the deep whose numbers are declining. Prized not so much for food as for their oil and sperm, they're being hounded from pole to pole by commercial whaling fleets that mainly fly the flags of Japan and the Soviet Union.

Having pointed out some of the differences between whales and birds in the great scheme of things, Mr. Baldrige should then have invited Mr. Saito to his home for dinner Thursday. Mr. Saito could have been offered a plate containing a turkey drumstick, some cranberry sauce, and a serving of mashed potatoes and gravy, with a choice of pumpkin pie or mince pie for dessert.

Then he could have been offered a slice of whale blubber and asked for an honest opinion. Can he really defend Japan's whaling policy on dietary terms?

As a good Commerce Secretary, Mr. Baldrige should send Mr. Saito a planeload of frozen turkeys and an offer from American farmers to supply lots more. Let's help the Japanese wean themselves off of whale meat and onto a plentiful American product. We can save the whales and make a dent in our $30 billion trade deficit all at once.

Another View:

An ignored problem

In his second debate with Walter Mondale, President Reagan pooh-poohed the suggestion that world population is a serious problem. The population explosion, Reagan asserted, "has been vastly exaggerated."

Ten years ago, when he was California's governor, Reagan knew better. On the occasion of World Population Day, Oct. 24, 1974, he issued a statement noting that the world's population, then almost 4 billion, "is expected to double again in 32 years (and) unless major efforts are made to reduce that growth, vast numbers of people will face severe famine and misery."

According to Marshall Green, a director of the Population Crisis Committee, the world's population has increased by about 785 million in those 10 years, and in the next decade will grow by another 987 million. Vast numbers of people currently face famine and misery in Ethiopia and elsewhere.

This country's southern neighbor, Mexico, also is facing a population explosion. According to the Population Crisis Committee, Mexico's current population of 77.7 million will double in just 26 years. No one pretends that Mexico will be able to generate enough jobs to accommodate that much growth in 10 years.

"Vastly exaggerated"? Vastly ignored is more like it.

China wants to resell U.S. arms

WASHINGTON — Before they've even negotiated a deal to buy U.S. military hardware, the Chinese are dickering to sell some of it to Iran, according to recent intelligence reports classified higher than top secret.

Jack Anderson

The People's Republic of China, which wants to buy arms from the Pentagon without the standard agreement not to resell them to third parties without U.S. approval, did not volunteer the information about the highly secret negotiations with Iran. It was picked up through clandestine intelligence-gathering.

Sources at the National Security Agency told my associate Dale Van Atta that Peking fully intended to hide any sales to Iran. The Chinese told Tehran that, as part of a separate agreement, the weapons would be routed through a Mediterranean country that is a member of NATO. In an evenhanded gesture, the Chinese also offered Iran any military items they may get from Soviet bloc countries.

Peking has already been selling the Iranians some Chinese-made helicopters, howitzers and missiles that have been rendered surplus by modernization of the divisions along the Sino-Soviet border.

After four years of war with Iraq, the Iranians badly need spare parts for the American hardware the Khomeini regime inherited from the shah. They found two U.S. allies to sell them the goods: Israel and South Korea.

Behind-the-scenes pressure from Washington last summer got the South Koreans to stop their sales to Iran, which had consisted mainly of artillery shells. But no amount of pressure has moved the Israelis, who publicly deny the whole arrangement.

So the arms sales continue, through middlemen, who make only cursory efforts to disguise the Israeli involvement. For example, arms dealers are currently looking for a country willing to pose as the "end-user" of Israeli M-48 tanks that would actually be slipped to Iran.

The United States is not happy with the Israeli-Iranian arms traffic, but intelligence officials realize that the deal is helpful to Israel and thus to U.S. interests in the long run. They explain that the Israelis sell arms to Iran because they get oil in return; they prefer Iran to Iraq; it helps prolong a war that weakens the Arab world — and they need the money.

In fact, an account of an Iranian Cabinet meeting last May indicates that Tehran is unhappy at the doubling of arms prices in the past two years.

Ayatollah Khomeini hasn't been relying on the Chinese and Israelis alone to supply his war machine. Iranian arms buyers have been ranging the globe in search of $2 billion worth of munitions.

At about the time South Korea was persuaded to stop selling arms to Iran, North Korea stepped in and began supplying land mines and rocket grenades.

Khomeini's arms scouts have also found some promising sources in Argentina and Brazil. They're bargaining with Argentina for Tam tanks, French-made Mirage fighters, Israeli Dagger fighters, some old destroyers and a helicopter. Brazil appears willing to palm off on the desperate Iranians some amphibious armored cars, small boats, mortar shells, hand grenades, rockets, bombs and ammunition.

Footnote: NSA sources believe that China is determined to become a net exporter of weapons. For example, about a month ago the Chinese quietly delivered three frigates to Egypt at the Mediterranean port of Alexandria. If Peking succeeds in its apparent intention to sell more munitions than it buys, it would mark a new direction for the communist giant.

FANNIE MAE FRACAS: For about a week this summer, the former chairman of the Federal National Mortgage Association, Oakley Hunter, was an official "unperson" in the elegant environs of his old agency.

A handsome portrait of Hunter, which had been prominently displayed at Fannie Mae headquarters since his retirement in 1981, was abruptly removed, and he was rudely informed by his successor, David Maxwell, that he was no longer welcome on personal visits to the building.

What on earth brought this on? A letter to the editor.

In the June issue of the business magazine Regardie's, Maxwell and his minions were quoted in denigration of Hunter's 12-year tenure at Fannie Mae. Hunter wrote a letter defending himself, without criticizing the new regime.

Even such a temperate response was enough to drive Maxwell into a frenzy. He ordered Hunter's portrait jerked from the wall, and fired off an unmannerly letter to Hunter, saying, "I have given instructions that you are not to be permitted access to our offices unless you are coming to see someone on official business, in which case you can make that purpose known to the receptionist and security people."

By the time we reached Maxwell, Hunter's portrait had been put back up — evidently because Maxwell had already become a laughingstock at Fannie Mae, and he didn't want his ridiculous behavior appearing in the press.

Israel wants U.S. aid for subs

WASHINGTON — Bowing for now to Navy Secretary John Lehman's polite, tough "no" last month for a new, American-built submarine fleet, Israel is pushing its backup position: the right to use U.S. aid to buy new submarines elsewhere.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

Israel's ambition to become a Mediterranean submarine power appears beyond change, even though some well-placed officials in the Reagan administration question its rationale. They worry that a new Israeli submarine fleet, doubling its present three subs, might trigger Soviet "dumping" of scores of overage but operational Soviet diesels in the Eastern Med, based in Syrian and Libyan ports. Explaining its need to Lehman and Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger, Israeli defense officials cited "coastal defense."

Lehman's refusal to accept the bid to "purchase" American diesel-electric submarines was based not on Israel's needs but on grounds of unacceptable competition for scarce submarine technicians and other production workers at a time when the Navy is building nuclear subs. Israel's fight then moved to its new front. But skeptics doubt that the battle for made-in-America subs is over.

Israel's new front is to get an exemption from the law requiring foreign countries to buy only American-made weapons with American aid. Thus, the still-muted submarine hunt threatens to put yet another political problem on President Reagan's cluttered Middle East plate and anger U.S. Arab allies at the same time.

Arab reactions to the still largely sub rosa sub hunt were typified by the remark of Egyptian Ambassador Ashraf Ghorbal, who leaves here this week after 16 years with an unmatched reputation for objective candor. "My God," he said when he first learned about the submarines. "There is no need for it."

The first case of the U.S. agreeing to waive the ban on "off-shore" procurement came last year so that Israel could build the Lavie jet fighter. That also allowed the use of secret high-technology components, such as honeycombing in wings and tail sections, made only in the U.S. Israel will be exporting the Lavie in considerable numbers when full production starts, putting it in direct competition with American-made fighter aircraft also produced for the export market.

Given Israel's near-total dependence on the U.S., and the unusual influence it continues to exert over Congress, waiving the off-shore procurement ban for the Lavie has not yet generated much economic discontent. But other recent U.S. attempts to help Israel's flawed economy have triggered reaction here, such as movement toward free trade between the two countries. Although Congress passed legislation this fall looking toward free trade with Israel, the potent textile industry is fighting a rear-guard action with some help from U.S. Trade Representative William Brock.

If they had the choice, U.S. boatyards would be falling over themselves to get the submarine business Israel wanted to give them — until Lehman asked them to go elsewhere to avoid opening long-closed diesel-submarine production lines and a consequent squeeze on scarce, specially-trained submarine workers.

Israel has no other way to go for its submarines than to American shipyards or, if blocked there, to foreign yards with American aid. That could mean diesel shipyards in either Holland or West Germany. But Holland will not produce weapons for Israel and Israel does not want to ask West Germany for fear it would weaken its political case against the Germans selling military weapons to moderate Arab states.

Other possible sources for the submarines are Korea and Taiwan. But since they cannot match the high quality of American construction that Israel wants, and since American yards want the business, Pentagon officials are uneasy. They worry that Israel's congressional allies, prodded by shipyards in such places as Quincy, Mass., or Quonset, R.I., may try to reverse the Pentagon's decision to discourage Israel from using American producers.

There is not, however,the slightest question on whether to change Israel's mind about its perceived need for a new fleet of submarines. Israel will get her submarines one way or another, thanks to the American taxpayer. When President Reagan is then asked to finance Egypt's equal need for protection against coastal incursions by Libya or Syria, he can either do so — or watch Uncle Sam shrink still smaller in the Arab Middle East.

CHARLEY REESE

Defense offers only real hope

The United States needs to pursue a multi-layered defense against ballistic missiles. This would be more evident to more people were it not for the tendency of every public issue in this country to become over-simplified ad trivialized.

The journalist who first dubbed this a "Star Wars" proposal deserves the dis-service to America award. To label a complex proposal much in need of serious discussion with perjorative label was simply an attempt to poison the well in advance of the debate.

Charley Reese

Consequently, much of the criticism has been on the level of grammar school children debting Einstein's Theory of Relativity.

Take, for example, the argument that the defense would not be 100 percent effective and so we ouught not to have it. This reaises a straw man. I twas neve suggested that it would be 100 percent effective because there is no such thing as a 100 percent effective anything. More importantly, however, this specious argument reflects the ignorance of the people who make it.

The function of an ABM system is to prevent a nuclear war. A system deployed to protect our land-based missiles, airfields, sub bases and communicatins centers would — even at 40 or 50 percent effectiveness — vastly increase our deterrence. If 40 or 50 percent of our nuclear forces have a high probability of surviving a first strike, then a first strike is not a feasible option for Soviet plannes. Bear in mind tht presently all of our nuclear forces are currently 100 percent vulnerable except fr whatever number of subs happened to be at sea.

Moreover, a defense against intercontinental missiles holds out the only hope of any eal arms reductins. That's the conclusion of Dr. Henry Kissinger. Whatever you think of him, nobody has evr accused him of not hving one of the most brilliant minds in America.

Kissinger's logic is correct. At the present, both sides base their deterrence n offensive weapons.

"Under present conditions," Kissinger said, "the reductions that can be verified are relatively small. They are either dangerous because they simplify an attacker's calculations or tey are irrelevant bcsuse they leave large numbers of warheads."

Kissinger then points out tht even if an unimaginable agreement on reductions were reached, the side willing and able to hide even 1,000 warheads could dominate and defeat the other. "But with a properly designed defese, much larger numbers wuld be needed for a strategically decisive evasion, and those larger numbers could be detected," he said.

In sum, a properly designed defensive system would make it easier to reach agreement on reducing missile warheads whereas in the absence of a defensive sytem, no real reduction is ever likely because it would be too dangerous.

He also points out that a system 50 percent effective against a major nuclear pwer would likely be 100 percent effective against a minor nuclear power, the number of which are sure to increase.

Another dirty tactic used by partisan opponents of a missile defense is to attempt to focus the debaate on operational details of a system that has not even been developed, much less produced.

Sen. Paul Tsongas, D-Mass., for example, persisted in quetining a scientist about how a president could make a decision if the system woul have to be activated within five minutes of launch in order for one phase of it to catch the Soviet missiles in the lower athmosphere.

Well, this is rather like demanding to know whether the pilot, the co-pilot or mission control will make the final landing approach decisions on the firs manned flight to Mars. The president is talking theory, researcha nd feasibility; Tsongas wants to argue operatioal details.

(If the system were far enough along to warrant a discussion of operational details, one might point out to Tsongas that after Soviet missiles leave their silos, decision-making on our part is moot. We either shoot back or die passively.)

Finally, you can be sure that such a system is feasible because the Soviet Union has launche a major propaganda effort to prevent the United States from pursuing it. The reason the Soviets know it is feasible is because they have been working on their own version for the past five years.

Parole officers overworked

DALLAS (AP) — As thousands of parolees leave the crowded Texas prison system, state parole officers are faced with increasing workloads and dwindling resources to enforce special release terms handed to many ex-convicts.

More than 20,000 inmates were freed last year from the Texas Department of Corrections, and state officials warn that another flood of inmates may soon be released in order to ease crowded conditions behind prison walls.

Of those freed last year, about 10,000 were told that in addition to the standard rules of parole, they had to meet one or more special conditions to keep their freedom, the Dallas Times Herald reports.

The special conditions are intended work on the cause of an inmate's criminal behavior and are part the parole board's strategy for dealing with the flood of inmates being released, officials say.

But the Board of Pardons and Paroles has no idea if the conditions are being observed, and it discourages parole revocation even if a parolee is refusing to abide by the terms of his release, the newspaper reported.

"There's no teeth in them (special conditions)," said a Dallas County parole officer who recently resigned from the department. "Special conditions don't mean as much as they sound like they do. It's just a do-nothing system."

As of Sept. 30, there were 30,300 people under the jurisdiction of the parole board, nearly triple the number just four years ago.

Last week, state prison officials warned that capacity in the Texas Department of Corrections may reach 95 percent by the first of the year — the point at which prison officials are required by law to begin releasing prisoners to reduced inmate population.

"The overcrowding crisis has shifted in some measure from TDC into parole and probation caseload," said Charles Walker, former general counsel for the parole board.

Although state law limits caseloads to 60 parolees per officer, the avearge caseload for the parole board's 381 officers at the end of September was 80, the Herald said.

Parole officials say they are trying to devise a strategy for handling the explosion.

Father gambles to find cure for daughters' disease

She was a toddler, just four months shy of her second birthday, seemingly a normal, healthy, happy child.

That was last February.

Today she can do little but lie in bed. She can't sit up. She has lost control of her muscles, she can't talk, and her sight is rapidly fading.

Tests on her new infant sister, conducted shortly after her birth in July, show the baby suffers from the same rare and fatal genetic ailment.

Their father, owner of a dry-cleaning business in southern Ohio, is fighting to save his daughters' lives.

In apparently the first action of its kind, he has dipped into his life savings to commission a San Diego researcher to find a cure for their disease, using as yet untried genetic therapy techniques.

"I worry if we'll be able to do anything for our eldest daughter. She's already damaged," he said, his voice halting and at times overwhelmed by his feelings.

"We realize we're in uncharted waters. It's never been done and even if things go well, it may not be enough.

"At the moment we don't have a lot of alternatives. We've zeroed in on our best shot and we're taking it."

Dr. John O'Brien, a neuroscientist at the University of California at San Diego School of Medicine who received $20,000 from the Ohio father, said he already has hired a technician to isolate and clone the gene missing in the two children.

"The man has done his homework," O'Brien said. "He knows a lot about this subject. He hopes we will be able to pull off this gene therapy approach before it's too late.

"Right now, he's sitting on a lit fuse waiting for the younger one."

O'Brien, who gained national attention in 1969 when he announced that he had traced the cause of Tay Sachs disease to a missing enzyme, is among a growing cadre of molecular biologists involved with the cloning of genes for the possible treatment of incurable ailments.

The technique, developed about a decade ago, has advanced to the point where some researchers are planning to seek permission next year to begin inserting genes into human beings.

Among the possible ailments under consideration is Lesch-Nyhan disease, whose missing gene also was cloned at UCSD. Victims of this cruel disease often must be tied down to keep them from mutilating themselves.

O'Brien said he was hopeful that he will be able to clone the gene for the Ohio family by February or March. After that, more animal studies would be required before the researchers could apply to the federal government for permission to insert the gene into a human being.

"Had we known about it, we wouldn't have had the second child," said the girls' father, who asked that his name not be disclosed to protect his wife's privacy. "All during my wife's second pregnancy we were hoping she would be all right. But it didn't work out."

For him, time is the enemy.

The disease in question, called metachromatic leucodystrophy or MLD, results from the failure of the body to produce sufficient amounts of a specific enzyme known as arylsulfatase A (ASA). Without this enzyme, fatty substances build up in the brain and nervous system, with symptoms first appearing at age 2. The body weakens, muscles become spastic, the mind comes under attack. Life expectancy is about eight years.

O'Brien plans on collaborating with Dr. Howard Temin, a Nobel Prize winning scientist at the University of Wisconsisn, on the next phase of his experiments. In those studies, the gene will be inserted into dog tissue cells to see if it will produce the missing enzyme. Following this work, they'll test the gene in laboratory dogs.

"We may not require an animal with this disease (MLD)," O'Brien added. "We could use the fucosidosis dog as a basis for this work."

The Ohio father said he contacted O'Brien after he made numerous calls to the National Institutes of Health (NIH), scientists in Ohio and researchers in Los Angeles.

After contacting O'Brien, he and his wife decided to commission the San Diego scientist to clone the missing gene, withdrawing $20,000 from their savings account.

Drug pump gives automatic doses

FREEPORT, Texas (AP) — The U.S. Food and Drug Administration has approved the sale of a portable drug pump that automatically dispenses medication into a patient's body, says the Texas firm that developed the device.

The pump is light and portable enough to be carried in a shoulder holster or on a belt. It can deliver thousands of doses automatically and could be used for cancer chemotherapy, antibiotics, hormones or anticoagulants.

Intermedics Inc., a biomedical device manufacturer headquartered in Freeport, developed the pump and plans to market it now that the FDA has given the pump its approval.

The pump is controlled by a microprocessor and powered by a 1.5-volt battery.

Russell Chambers, chairman and chief operating officer of Intermedics, said infusion drug therapy offers an alternative to repeated injections by delivering the drug through a catheter. The pump controls the infusion and gives a precise dosage at exactly the prescribed time.

The new pump can be programmed to deliver medication at a constant flow, or at set periods, or a combination of the two.

Tom Sommers of Intermedics said the cost of the pump would range from $1,500 to $2,000.

Reb backs can break 1,000 in Sun Bowl

Jones, Thurman need only repeat last year's feats

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

If Midland Lee's Walter Jones and Tyrone Thurman turn in performances tonight like they had in last year's 48-14 victory over El Paso Irvin in the area round of the state playoffs, they both will leave the Sun Bowl as 1,000 yard rushers.

Thurman became a real Rebel force against Irvin a year ago when he rushed 11 times for 115 yards and two touchdowns. Jones had 72 yards on 10 carries and a touchdown.

Heading into tonight's Sun Bowl battle with El Paso Andress, this year's area foe, Jones needs only 17 yards to crack the 1,000 yard barrier. If he comes back with the 72 yards he had against Irvin last year, he will become the first Rebel back to ever gain 1,000 yards in back-to-back seasons.

Thurman needs 105 yards for the magic 1,000 against Andress and his first 1,000 yard rushing year. So, Thurman needs another 115-yard effort tonight to insure that mark.

Jones had 1,142 yards rushing in 16 games last season to follow Lee fullback Isaac Garnett over the 1,000 yard barrier. Garnett's 1,994 yards in 16 games is the Lee rushing record. Garnett's 1,000 yards in seven games is the quickest any Lee back has ever been over the 1,000 yard mark, but Jones is the first Lee back to have a shot at back-to-back 1,000 yard years. Thurman would join that twosome as a 1,000 yard product if he can topple 105 more yards in the playoffs.

Against Irvin last year in Midland's Memorial Stadium, Thurman scored on runs of nine and five yards and also had rushing plays of 49 and 17 yards. Jones scored against Irvin on a one-yard plunge, but also had a 25-yard gainer in the game.

Garnett had 72 yards on 19 carries against Irvin, his second straight playoff game without busting the 100 yard mark. He also failed to get 100 yards against Amarillo High in bi-district as Jones took off the running weight off Garnett with a 156 yard afternoon.

However, the longest run from scrimmage in last year's Irvin-Lee area battle came from Lee reserve Billy Gibbs, who cranked off a 59-yard TD run against the Rockets. Gibbs graduated last year.

Lee kicker Craig Kamradt had a career best 51-yard field goal against Irvin last year. Last week he had a 41-yard field goal against Plainview in the bi-district game.

In all, Lee rolled out 376 yards rushing against Irvin and another 65 yards in the air from quarterback Jeff Motley. Jones had a 42-yard reception and Thurman a nine-yard catch.

The Lee defense held Irvin to a mere 41 yards rushing as the Rockets tried to go to the air 38 times. Irvin had 215 yards passing against Lee, completing only 15 of those 38 tosses. Irvin was intercepted three times by the Lee defense.

Tonight's Lee-Andress game should have an entirely different makeup since Andress is primarily a running team this year with I-Back Cody Bell already owning 1,094 yards on the season.

Andress quarterback Eddie Green has thrown only 107 passes this year, completing 42 for 742 yards. Although that is a fair amount of passing compared to Lee's 568 yards passing on only 23 completions. Lee has thrown only 49 times all season.

However, Lee has had about the same results. Lee quarterback Dirk Bergoon has thrown four TD passes while Green, with almost 200 yards more passing, has only five TD aerials.

If you look at the statistics, Lee should have an edge tonight against Andress.

Although Andress' Poke is a 1,000-yard rusher, he has scored only five touchdowns rushing this year. Thurman has scored 18 touchdowns for 108 points and Jones 10 touchdowns and an extra point conversion for 62 points. No Eagle can match the scoring punch of either Rebel back.

Jones and Thurman, not counting receiving, kickoff and punt return yardage, have combined for 1,878 yards rushing. Poke (1,094) and Green (422) are the top running threats for Andress and that totals to 1,516 yards, a difference of 362 yards in favor of Lee.

Lee fullback Randy Ellis has 592 yards himself with four touchdowns while Andress' third threat has 236 rushing in slotback Jimmy Jones. Andress fullback Mike Welch has had only 187 yards rushing this season and with Welch and Jones combined, they have only 423 yards, still 169 yards short of Ellis alone.

The key for Lee in this year's area contest is to follow the formula of last year's game with Irvin. Score quick and put doubts into the heads of the Golden Eagles. Lee scored the first time it got the ball against Irvin, marching 79 yards in six plays.

Dallas finds new ending for joke

IRVING (AP) — The split-personality Dallas Cowboys went from a joke to a juggernaut in just four days.

"We came back from one of the worst losses in franchise history," said running back Tony Dorsett after the 20-17 Thanksgiving Day victory over the New England Patriots. "People had lost respect for the Cowboys."

Dallas, whipped 14-3 by the winless Buffalo Bills on Sunday, extracted some respect from Patriot quarterback Tony Eason.

The Cowboys sacked him 10 times, most ever against a New England team, and safety Michael Downs returned an interception 27 yards for a touchdown.

Still it took a 23-yard field goal by Rafael Septien with four seconds to play to subdue the Patriots.

"I'm sorry to disappoint you all but I'm happy to announce the Cowboys aren't dead yet," said Dallas Coach Tom Landry. "It was our best game of the year. We really played good defense."

THE COWBOYS moved a half game ahead of Washington and the New York Giants in the National Conference Eastern Division with an 8-5 record. New England is also 8-5 and alive for a wild card berth in the American Conference East.

Dallas quarterback Danny White, coming back after a two-week absence, threw a 9-yard touchdown pass to Tony Hill and directed the game-winning drive. His 16-yard pass to Doug Cosbie set up Septien's kick.

Dallas led 10-3 at halftime and stretched the advantage to 17-3 in the third period on the White to Hill connection.

Eason refused to be rattled and threw a one-yard touchdown pass to Derrick Ramsey and sneaked across for a touchdown from a yard out to tie the score 17-all with 1:58 left.

White, relacing young Gary Hogeboom who was benched because of Dallas' punchless offense, directed a flawless drive to the Patriot 6.

After Dorsett ran 16 yards, White hit Doug Donley for 13 yards, Hill for 11 and Cosbie for 16.

Septien's kick was perfect and New England's wild series of laterals after the kickoff failed.

"The Dallas defense did not surprise us at all," said New England Coach Ray Berry. "You just have to look at their past history. They get awfully tough in November and December."

Dallas Cowboy Tony Dorsett (33) is pushed out of bounds by New England cornerback Raymond Clayborn.

BERRY SAID the Patriots should be a better team with the experience.

"I told our squad after the game that Dallas has actually done us a favor in some respects," Berry said. "A football game is a test. It reveals where you are. And what we found out today is that we are not prepared good enough to win a close game like this one."

Landry said, "It was a great game for us. After last week, I'm sure New England was somewhat eager to play us after scoring 50 points (against Indianpolis) and then seeing our films. If you have any character at all, you are going to play your best."

White completed 21 of 41 passes for 288 yards and Hill snagged 8 for 125 yards.

Eason was on target 19 of 38 times for 204 yards but suffered 57 yards of losses on traps.

"White hit the passes to keep us in the game," said Landry. "He did a good job of moving the ball under the circumstances, considering we have such a patched up offensive line."

The Cowboys lost starting guard Kurt Petersen with a twisted ankle early in the game.

The victory, Dallas' 13th against 3 losses and a tie on Thanksgiving, assured a 20th consecutive non-losing season.

"I didn't want to be on the fist Cowboy team not to make the playoffs since 1974," said Dorsett.

Five teams still running race for title

Associated Press

Five teams are still in the mathematical running for the Southwest Conference football title but the Texas Longhorns can put everybody's calculator away with victories over Baylor and Texas A&M in their final two games.

Texas was an eight-point favorite to do away with problem No. 1, the Baylor Bears, in Waco on Saturday in an 11:30 a.m. regionally televised (Raycom) matchup.

SWC

In other SWC games, Texas Christian was a six-point pick over Texas A&M in College Station; Southern Methodist was a two-point nod over Arkansas at Texas Stadium, and Houston was a field goal choice over Texas Tech in Lubbock.

Bowl scouts will be busy bees at SWC games this weekend. Official invitations may be extended at 6 p.m.

The Bluebonnet Bowl's Ted Nance will be standing by in College Station to tag TCU's cinderella Horned Frogs "win, lose or tie" against the Aggies.

A deal has been worked out that should TCU somehow get to the Cotton Bowl then the Bluebonnet would take Texas.

The Aloha Bowl will be in Texas Stadium for the 6:45 p.m. ESPN game with Arkansas to invite the Mustangs to their Dec. 29 Classic in Honolulu.

Arkansas is the apple of the Liberty Bowl's eye.

Houston was still holding out as a bowl possibility based on the Cougars getting past the Red Raiders.

Texas leads TCU, SMU, Arkansas and Houston by a full game after the Longhorns' 44-23 victory over the Horned Frogs last Saturday.

The SWC champion is the host team in the Cotton Bowl New Year's Day. The guest team will be the high-flying Boston College Eagles and their magic-making quarterback, Doug Flutie.

There are still 25 possible combinations for the SWC title.

If two or more teams tie for the title, the team that beat the others is the host team.

Boston College-Miami: Battle of QBs

MIAMI (AP) — Boston College and Miami, a pair of explosive offensive football teams apparently headed for New Year's Day bowl appearances, meet Friday in a nationally televised game showcasing the talents of quarterbacks Doug Flutie and Bernie Kosar.

Flutie, considered the leading candidate for the Heisman Trophy, has rewritten the NCAA record book in leading the 10th-ranked Eagles to national prominence the past four years.

Kosar, meanwhile, is only a sophomore but has professional scouts drooling because of his classic dropback passing style and the leadership he's shown in helping the 12th-ranked Hurricanes to a 19-4 record and a national championship over the past two seasons.

The 1:45 p.m. matchup will be the first on-the-field meeting between the quarterbacks, but Miami's aerial chief shrugged off the significance.

"I don't have any effect on how he performs and he doesn't have any effect on my performance," Kosar said. "It's unfair to bill it as a battle between two people because there are so many other people involved."

Boston College, 7-2 with a pair of games remaining, reportedly is headed for the Cotton Bowl and a $1.8 million payday regardless of the outcome of Friday's game.

The Hurricanes, 8-3 after losing to Maryland 42-40 in a shootout they led 31-0 at halftime two weeks ago, are said to have the inside track for a berth in the Fiesta Bowl.

The Cotton Bowl apparently is willing to accept the Eagles win-or-lose because of Flutie, who's passed 2,706 yards and 21 touchdowns this season and is considered a good bet to give the game's television ratings a boost.

The 5-9, 176-pound senior from Natick, Mass., has thrown for 9,831 career yards and amassed 10,537 yards of total offense — both NCAA records — and Miami Coach Jimmy Johnson says Flutie presents the Hurricanes with their most formidable challenge of the season.

"You don't see one like Doug Flutie very often," Johnson said. "He's able to do a lot of things because he has a lot of talent and a great supporting cast."

Kosar is also surrounded by loads of talent, including wide receiver Eddie Brown (49 catches, 894 yards, nine touchdowns), and has completed nearly 63 percent of his passes for 3,195 yards and 23 TD's in 1984. Careerwise, he has thrown for 5,524 yards and 38 touchdowns.

Miami also is said to also have reached an agreement that'll send them to the Fiesta Bowl win-or-lose, but Johnson and his players said pride will be a major incentive against Boston College.

IN THE only major college game Thanksgiving Day, it was Miami of Ohio beating Cincinnati 31-26 as quarterback Al Marlow ran for a touchdown and passed for another. Miami completed its season at 4-7, Cincinnati was 2-9.

Games involving ranked teams Saturday — when bowl invitations will officially be extended — pit Utah State at No. 1 Brigham Young; No. 3 Oklahoma State at No. 2 Oklahoma; No. 6 Texas at Baylor; No. 9 South Carolina at Clemson; Arkansas at No. 11 Southern Methodist; Notre Dame at No. 14 Southern California; Tulane at No. 16 Louisiana State at night and No. 17 Texas Christian at Texas A&M.

Also, Pitt is at Penn State; Kentucky at Tennessee; Maryland at Virginia; Mississippi vs Mississippi State at Jackson; North Carolina at Duke; Air Force at Texas-El Paso at night; Houston at Texas Tech; Arizona State at Arizona at night; Fresno State at Nevada-Las Vegas; Long Beach State at San Diego State at night, and New Mexico at Hawaii at night.

BYU, the only unbeaten major college team in the nation, is headed for the Holiday Bowl, probably against Michigan.

The winner of Oklahoma State-Oklahoma goes to the Orange Bowl as the Big Eight champion, while the loser plays in the Gator Bowl against South Carolina.

Other teams playing Saturday who are Bowl-bound include Air Force (Independence vs. Virginia Tech); Tennessee and Maryland, headed for the Sun Bowl; Penn State (Freedom against Iowa); Arkansas (Liberty); SMU (Aloha, with Notre Dame the likely opponent if it beats Southern Cal); Kentucky (Hall of Fame vs. Wisconsin); Virginia (Peach vs. Purdue), and TCU (Bluebonnet vs. West Virginia).

Detroit's David Lewis spikes the ball after scoring the Lions' first touchdown Thursday at the Silverdome, starting a rally which defeated the Green Bay Packers, 31-28.

Lions rally for 31-28 win

Pack playoff hopes all but gone

PONTIAC, Mich. (AP) —The defeat was devastating and heartbreaking for the Packers who saw their winning streak snapped at four games and their slim chance for a National Football League playoff berth all but disappear.

It embarrassed Green Bay Coach Forrest Gregg.

"That was probably the worst 60 minutes of defensivefootball I've seen. It was horrible," Gregg said after the 31-28 Thanksgiving Day loss to the Detroit Lions. "This put us out of any hopes for this year. It was embarrassing in front of a national television audience.

"We'll have to struggle like the devil to break even, now."

Green Bay, which has not won five successive games since 1966, slipped to 5-8, and has to win its remaining three games to finish at .500.

Detroit quarterback Gary Danielson, who completed 24 of 33 pass attempts for 305 yards and three touchdowns, said his club went into the game with aspirations of its own.

"Today, we were ready to play. I don't think it would have mattered who we were playing, it just happened to be Green Bay," Danielson said. "Winning on national television shows everybody we're not a joke franchise. We just haven't done what it takes to win some of the close games this season."

Of Detroit's 13 games, 10 have been decided by six points or less. However, the victory over the Packers only improved the Lions' record to 4-8-1. Not exactly what was expected of the defending NFC Central division champs.

"We're not embarrassed by the way we've played this year, just the outcome," Danielson said. "This team has played hard all year and we're not going to give up now."

There were two key factors in the game. Detroit's receivers made clutch catches to keep drives alive. As a result, the Lions had possession of the ball 44:47 compared with only 15:13 for the Packers.

The Lions finished with a 33-14 edge in first downs and outgained the Packers 518 to 306 in total yards.

"They wanted to show the U.S. they're not a bad team," said Green Bay tight end Paul Coffman, whose only catch went for a 44-yard touchdown. "The Lions' offense did a super job of holding on to the ball. Maybe we should have scored a lot more when we had the chance."

In the first quarter, it looked as if the Packers could turn it into a rout. Gerry Ellis scored on a 40-yard end run and Green Bay quarterback Lynn Dickey tossed the TD stike to Coffman and — just like that — Green Bay had a 14-0 lead.

Danielson hit rookie tight end David Lewis on a 10-yard TD pass early in the second quarter, but Dickey answered with a 7-yard scoring pass to Eddie Lee Ivery that put the Packers ahead 21-7.

However, the Lions scored a TD and a field goal in the last 1:14 of the first half and Gregg felt that might have turned the game around, even though Green Bay still led 21-17.

Danielson tossed a 21-yard TD to Lewis and, after a 35-yard punt by Bucky Scribner, the Lions sent in reserve quarterback Mike Machurek who put up a 48-yard "Hail. Mary!" pass that Mark Nichols brought down among five defenders to set up Eddie Murray's 32-yard field goal as time ran out in the second quarter.

"The field goal just before the half was the difference in the ball game," Gregg said. "You can't coast or glide in this league or you'll get your teeth kicked out, and that's what happened today.

"At the start of the second half, we told our defense to get ready. Stop 'em here. They didn't."

Detroit fullback James Jones scored on a 1-yard dive in the third quarter and Danielson pitched a 21-yard TD strike to Jeff Chadwick at 8:45 of the fourth quarter to put the Lions ahead 31-21.

Dickey, who was held to eight of 17 for 115 yards, had to leave the game after being poked in the eye and rookie Randy Wright finished up by flipping a 4-yard touchdown to Phil Epps with 55 seconds remaining.

"It just goes to show what can be done if you don't hang your head," said Detroit Coach Monte Clark, who gave the team a pep talk at breakfast. "I told them, 'You've got to believe in yourselves.' I'm proud of the way we played."

Big Eight, state of Oklahoma championships on line

Associated Press

The Big Eight title and an Orange Bowl berth are on the line. So is the championship of the state of Oklahoma.

Both the second-ranked Oklahoma Sooners and No. 3 Oklahoma State Cowboys, however, are after bigger game — a national championship.

"I feel like both teams are playing for a chance to play for the national championship," said Oklahoma State Coach Pat Jones. "I'm very proud for the state of Oklahoma. It's a great opportunity and challenge for both teams."

The Cowboys are 9-1 and have never been to the Orange Bowl. They haven't beaten Oklahoma since 1976, when the teams shared the Big Eight crown with Colorado.

Oklahoma, 8-1-1, set up this battle for the Big Eight crown by upsetting then top-ranked Nebraska 17-7 last week.

"Our destiny is in our hands," said Oklahoma Coach Barry Switzer. "A victory over Oklahoma State gives us an opportunity to fulfill all our goals of a conference championship, Orange Bowl trip and possible national title."

The game will be televised nationally by ABC and is sold out. According to Switzer, his team might have an edge in experience in such big games — Oklahoma has won two national championships in his 11-year reign.

"We've played a lot of big games. We've played No. 1 a bunch of times. I don't think OSU's got the same thing to say," Switzer claimed.

"There's no bigger game they've ever played before. They've never had the opportunity to go to the Orange Bowl in one game, to play for the national championship in one game. Not many teams do. It's got to be the biggest game, and our victory over Nebraska rivals that."

"Tradition is definitely on their side," said Oklahoma State safety Adam Hinds. "They have beat us quite a bit. But this year is a little bit different. We've got a lot of older guys, a lot more experienced players. There are games this year that we would have lost in years past because they were close, but we found a way to win."

The loser goes to the Gator Bowl against South Carolina.

Brigham Young, ranked No. 1 for the first time in its history, looks to finish off a perfect season against 1-9 Utah State. The Cougars, 11-0 and headed for the Holiday Bowl, are the nation's only unbeaten team.

Elsewhere among ranked teams, No. 6 Texas is at Baylor; No. 9 South Carolina at Clemson; Arkansas at No. 11 Southern Methodist; Notre Dame at No. 14 Southern California; Tulane at No. 16 Louisiana State at night, and No. 17 Texas Christian at Texas A&M.

Also, Pitt is at Penn State; Kentucky at Tennessee; Maryland at Virginia; Mississippi vs Mississippi State at Jackson; North Carolina at Duke; Air Force at Texas-El Paso at night; Houston at Texas Tech; Arizona State at Arizona at night; Fresno State at Nevada-Las Vegas; Long Beach State at San Diego State at night, and New Mexico at Hawaii at night.

In the only major college game Thanksgiving Day, it was Miami of Ohio 31, Cincinnati 26 as quarterback Al Marlow ran for a touchdown and passed for another. Miami completed the season at 4-7, Cincinnati was 2-9.

Today's featured game was 10th-ranked Boston College at No. 12 Miami, Fla., in what was expected to be a passing duel between BC's Doug Flutie and Bernie Kosar of Miami.

Bowl games can extend their invitations — officially — at 6 p.m. EST Saturday, though just about every slot has been locked up.

Among the teams playing Saturday who are Bowl-bound are Air Force (Independence vs. Virginia Tech); Tennessee and Maryland, headed for the Sun Bowl; Penn State (Freedom against Iowa); Arkansas (Liberty); SMU (Aloha, with Notre Dame the likely opponent if it beats Southern Cal); Kentucky (Hall of Fame vs. Wisconsin); Virginia (Peach vs. Purdue), and TCU (Bluebonnet vs. West Virginia).

Budd might resume international running career

STELLENBOSCH, South Africa (AP) — Running star Zola Budd said today that she may resume her international track career, and will enter an 8-kilometer road race in Zurich, Switzerland next month as a "fresh start" to her career.

Budd, the 18-year-old South African who became a British citizen in April and met disaster in the Los Angeles Olympics, said she still had made no firm decision on continuing her running career for Great Britain.

She also announced the formation of a three-man trust to manage her business affairs and to arrange her running commitments for the next four years.

Last month, Budd said she would remain in South Africa and would forsake her overseas future on the track. South Africa is barred from international competition because of the white-minority government's race-segregation system, called apartheid.

But then Budd went into seclusion on the wine estate of Jannie Momberg, vice president of the nation's athletics union, and agreed to reconsider that decision.

At a news conference today on the farm, Budd said, "I've only planned my career until Dec. 30, when I will participate in a road race in Zurich and will have a rethink on my future after this race.

"At the moment, I'm keeping all my options open. I feel like competing internationally again, and will see what it's like when I run in Switzerland."

After that race, she said, she will return to South Africa and make a final decision on her future.

"At one stage after the Olympics, she was confused as to whether she wanted ever to run any more," said Graham Boonzaier, a Cape Province wine farmer and one of the three members of the "Zola Budd Sports Trust."

Budd, who set an unofficial 5,000-meter world record in January, became a British citizen in a blaze of publicity.

In the 3,000-meter final at Los Angeles, Budd collided with American star Mary Decker as both attempted to take the lead in the race. Decker fell and Budd staggered in seventh.

Budd conceded that the method she chose to go to the Olympics was full of mistakes, and advised others facing similar decisions "to make sure about the people who are closest to you. Be sure about the people's intention."

Although Budd declined specifics, Boonzaier said that Budd's father is no longer involved in her career and only her coach, Pieter Labuschagne, has survived the Olympic debacle to serve as the third member of the trust, along with Momberg and Boonzaier.

Momberg said Budd was considering becoming a "commuting runner, living in South Africa and competing oversgas.

"This girl wasn't going to run," he said after the press conference. "Then we had to look at the option of coming and going."

Neither Miss Budd nor the two members of the trust who were present would admit to any plans after Dec. 30, but Momberg said Labuschagne had already applied for teaching jobs in the Stellenbosch area outside Cape Town, where Momberg's farm is located.

If one co-champion does not win all of its games from the other co-champions, or, if the co-champions in a two-team tie played a tie game, the host team is the school whose last Cotton Bowl appearance predated the last Cotton Bowl appearance of the other co-champions.

Texas could win the SWC title Saturdy by defeating Baylor if TCU and Houston lost and Arkansas and SMU tied. However, the Longhorns have lost four of their last five games in Waco.

TCU will be trying to defeat A&M for the first time in 12 years.

"We hace a chance to complete a great season," said TCU Coach Jim Wacker. "A chance of finishing 9-2, something that hasn't happened around here since 1955. A chance of going to a post-season bowl game, something that hasn't happened around here since 1965.

"We haven't beaten A&M since 1972. Do you realize how long that is? I hope our football team does," Wacker said.

McEnroe sidelined for two weeks with wrist injury

SYDNEY, Australia (AP) — John McEnroe will miss two weeks of tennis but will be ready to play for the United States in the Davis Cup final next month in Sweden.

McEnroe, ranked No. 1 in the world, was ordered to take a two-week break from tennis after injuring his left wrist during practice in California two days ago. He will miss the Australian Open, which opens Monday.

"He called me and told me about his wrist," Dr. Omar Fareed, a member of the U.S. Tennis Association's Sports Medicine Committee, said from Los Angeles. "I examined him and prescribed two medications. I advised him not to play for two weeks. He's not ready to play right now."

The decision has cost McEnroe the chance of joining Don Budge and Rod Laver as the only male players to capture four consecutive Grand Slam titles. He has won the last two and could have pocketed a $1 million bonus by winning both the Australian Open and the French Open next June.

But he should be ready for the Davis Cup finals next month.

"I'm looking forward to his playing in the Davis Cup," Fareed said. "As far as I'm concerned, he should be ready for that 100 percent."

With McEnroe out, Ivan Lendl of Czechoslovakia, the reigning French Open champion, will be the No. 1 seed for the Australian Open as officials attempt to entice Jimmy Connors to take McEnroe's place.

Officials have issued five of the six wild cards for the Open — the last one being held open in the event Connors decides to enter.

Cubs, Padres expected to bid hard for Sutcliffe

SAN DIEGO (AP) — The bidding for free-agent pitcher Rick Sutcliffe will come down to a battle between the San Diego Padres and the Chicago Cubs, Padres General Manager Jack McKeon predicted.

"Rick has a genuine interest in playing here. I think it's going to come down to two teams — us or the Cubs," McKeon said following two days of meetings between Sutcliffe and top Padres management.

Sutcliffe, the National League's Cy Young Award winner, declared his free agency at the end of the season after compiling a 16-1 record with Chicago.

The Padres beat the Cubs, three games to two, in the National League Championship Series in October.

The 28-year-old Sutcliffe was wooed by such Padres brass as owner Joan Kroc during his visit to San Diego with agent Barry Axelrod.

"I'm impressed by the area and the people in the Padre organization," he said. "The Padres are an outstanding team and they're going to get nothing but better."

Sutcliffe and Axelrod said they were impressed by the enthusiasm of Mrs. Kroc, who hosted a dinner for the group Tuesday night in La Jolla, and by the inclusion in the discussions of Padres first baseman Steve Garvey.

Garvey and Sutcliffe are friends and former teammates on the Los Angeles Dodgers.

"Joan Kroc has done some tremendous things with this ballclub and for the people in this area," Sutcliffe said. "You read some bad things about ballplayers, but people like Steve Garvey and Andre Thornton try to give something back."

Axelrod said in addition to a five-year contract offer from the Padres, Sutcliffe has received bids from the Cubs, Kansas City and Atlanta.

The New York Yankees, California Angels, Texas Rangers, St. Louis Cardinals and Baltimore Orioles also gained negotiating rights to Sutcliffe in baseball's re-entry draft two weeks ago.

"We'll talk to another couple of teams during the winter meetings (scheduled Dec. 3-7 at Houston), and we should have a decision about a week after that," Axelrod said.

No. 1 Hoyas open campaign tonight

Associated Press

Georgetown and Illinois are ranked No. 1 and 2, respectively, but the teams aren't even close this weekend as the college basketball season gets rolling.

Georgetown, the defending national champion, opens its campaign tonight in the Civic Auditorium in Hilo, Hawaii. After facing Hawaii-Hilo, the Hoyas will rest until Monday's road contest at Hawaii-Loa.

The Fighting Illini will face the more familiar Idaho State but the game will be a first-round matchup in the Great Alaska Shootout which began today. What ever happened to home openers?

In addition to the Illinois-Idaho State matchup, the first round of the Shootout will see Tennessee meeting Alabama-Birmingham, Maryland versus No. 19 Kansas and Oregon against the host Seawolves of Alaska-Anchorage.

"It's earlier than I've ever played a tournament, and particularly with the type of teams that are in there," Oregon Coach Don Monson said. "It's a chance for us to make a little bit of national recognition for ourselves."

ILLINOIS EARNED itself some more national recognition when it soundly defeated No. 5 Oklahoma, 81-64, last Sunday in the Tip-off Classic in Springfield, Mass.

"I'd probably be just as happy beating up on some teams," Illinois forward Doug Altenberger said. "We're going to find out a lot of things in a hurry, but it feels better after beating Oklahoma."

Besides just beating Oklahoma, Illinois was able to stop the Sooners' All-American forward Wayman Tisdale. The job was handed to senior center George Montgomery, who was named Most Valuable Player in the Tip-off scoring 17 points, grabbing 10 rebounds and holding Tisdale to 19 points, eight below his average last season.

GEORGETOWN ISN'T the only team visiting Hawaii this weekend as Virginia, Providence, Pepperdine and Davidson all will play games after receiving leis, the traditional welcome to the 50th state.

Two other Top Twenty teams will inaugurate the 1984-85 season tonight as No. 10 Southern Methodist hosts Texas Southern and No. 11 Nevada-Las Vegas visits Nevada-Reno.

On Saturday, five more ranked teams will play.

Northern Illinois visits No. 3 DePaul, debuting under new head coach Joey Meyer, No. 17 Louisville is at No. 4 Indiana, Campbell travels to face No. 13 North Carolina State, Southeastern Louisiana is at No. 16 Arkansas and Baptist is on the road at No. 20 Georgia Tech.

The Louisville-Indiana will provide some early-season answers as to just how good the teams of Denny Crum and Bobby Knight will be.

Indiana suffered through a season of injuries last year finishing 22-9 and at times dressed less than 10 players for a game.

"This is the first time we've had this many people sitting on the bench," Knight said of his current 15-man Hoosier roster that includes U.S. Olympian Steve Alford, who was the team MVP as a freshman, and West German Olympian Uwe Blab whose most impressive statistic is his height — 7-foot-2.

Louisville, 24-11 last season, will have to replace Lancaster Gordon and Charles Jones. Kevin Walls, one of the leading high school scorers in the nation last year, should get tested quickly against Knight's tenacious man-to-man defense.

"There are five things you have to do defensively — pressure the ball, pressure the passing lanes, take away cuts, know where the ball is and block out," Knight said. "I don't think there is any one of those five things we do really well."

Louisville will get to find out just how well.

New look picks up Bullets' winning pace

Associated Press

The new-look Washington Bullets, no longer just bruisers on offense, are asserting themselves on the court after a slow start.

The Bullets, despite the offseason acquisition of speedy guard Gus Williams and quick forward Cliff Robinson, looked like the same defense-oriented team as they scored only 93, 79, 96, 107 and 88 points in five losses.

After starting with a 2-5 record, however, the Bullets picked up the pace, averaging 109.7 points in winning their next seven for a 9-5 mark. In the process, they handed the Boston Celtics their only loss of the season, a 112-95 rout on Nov. 10, and beat the 76ers at Philadelphia 120-

Whalers have little trouble beating Penguins, 9-3

Associated Press

HARTFORD, Conn. — The Hartford Whalers spent Thanksgiving feasting on a porous Pittsburgh defense and reaped a 9-3 National Hockey League victory that snapped a three-game losing streak.

"I suffered through our last few games when we couldn't score," Coach Jack Evans said after Thursday's explosion. His team had scored just nine goals in the last seven games. "Tonight, everything went in for us."

NHL

Hartford's third line of Greg Malone, Bobby Crawford and Torrie Robertson combined for four goals and nine assists. Each scored a goal within a 3:29 span of the second period when the Whalers broke away from a 2-2 tie.

"We've been getting opportunities but we haven't been finishing plays," said Malone, who tied a club record with five points and netted a pair of goals. "Tonight we did."

In the only other NHL game, it was Montreal 3, Chicago 2.

The Whalers forechecked consistently, something that was missing during recent games, and the pressure resulted in several breakdowns by Pittsburgh.

"We were very weak defensively, especially in our end," Pittsburgh Coach Bob Berry said. "We played with intensity for the first five minutes and it slipped away quickly."

Mike Bullard scored at 6:09 to give the Penguins a 1-0 lead but the Whalers struck for two goals within a 1:34 span to take the lead. Mark Johnson, who also scored twice, scored at 10:06 and Malone followed.

In the second period, Moe Mantha tied the score at 4:59 but the Whalers got goals from Crawford, Malone and Robertson in a 3½-minute spurt to break the game open.

Goals by Tony Currie, Risto Siltanen and Dave Tippett made it 8-2 before Pittsburgh's Mark Taylor scored at 13:41. Johnson's unassisted goal at 15:15 of the third period concluded the scoring.

The Whalers, outscored 32-9 in those seven previous games, improved to 8-9-2. Pittsburgh slipped to 6-10-2.

Canadiens 3, Black Hawks 2

MONTREAL — Guy Carbonneau gave an assist to his pharmacist after sparking the Montreal Canadiens to victory over the touring Chicago Black Hawks.

Carbonneau scored two goals and assisted on the other as Montreal hung a 3-2 defeat on the Black Hawks.

"After Saturday night, I had a fever and headaches," said Carbonneau. "I was tired and in practice my legs just weren't there. I've been taking medication and it's helped."

Bob Gainey got the first Montreal goal off an assist by Carbonneau, who then made it 2-0 early in the second period when he beat Chicago goalie Murray Bannerman.

Darryl Sutter and Doug Wilson brought the Black Hawks even with a pair of second-period power-play goals, but Montreal won it in the third when Carbonneau fired a shot past Bannerman at 15:12 of the third period.

Carbonneau used a burst of speed to split Black Hawk defensemen Keith Brown and Behn Wilson at the Chicago blue line, then snapped a shot off the left goal post and over Bannerman's shoulder.

"I'll tell you one thing, I never realized Carbonneau could shoot like that," said Bannerman, who faced 35 shots in goal for Chicago. "He got two like that tonight, one in each corner. And they were both really good shots."

"Our strength is coming back," Carbonneau said of his line. "As soon as we cut off a rush, it creates a chance for us. That's what happened on my two goals tonight."

Bannerman couldn't do much about Gainey's goal. Carbonneau set up behind the Black Hawks' net, took his time and shoveled a pass to Gainey as he broke towards the net. Gainey snapped his sixth goal past Bannerman before the goaltender could get set at 5:55.

Carbonneau surprised Bannerman 10 seconds into the second period when he took one stride over the blue line and fired a rising wrist shot over the goalie's right shoulder and just underneath the crossbar.

Sutter brought the Black Hawks within 2-1 on a power-play goal similar to Gainey's on a setup from Tom Lysiak at 3:48.

With 10 seconds left in the period, Wilson drilled a slapshot that caught the top left corner of the net to tie it 2-2.

Helmets have gone from exception to rule in NHL

By JOHN KEKIS
Associated Press Writer

Once helmets were the exception in the National Hockey League. Now they're the rule. Not all players like them, but more and more are wearing them, and this season even the officials are joining the trend.

Until recently, players in the NHL had the option to either don or discard the helmet. The adoption of Rule 23 changed that for good.

"If a player who came into the league after (June 1) 1979 does not want to wear a helmet, he will not play in the NHL," league executive vice president Brian O'Neill said. "Today, the game is being played at a much faster pace, and with the increase in head injuries we felt it was necessary."

Helmets have been around — and stirring arguments pro and con — since 1894. Gordie Howe, no fan of the helmet in his day, was nearly killed during the 1950 Stanley Cup playoffs after colliding with Toronto's Ted Kennedy. When "Mr. Hockey" returned the following season, he was wearing a helmet — on doctor's orders.

"I had to wear one for a year afterward," Howe said. "(Detroit Red Wings General Manager) Jack Adams used to get mad at me for taking it off, but I never liked them. I think they interfered with my production. In my days nobody wore the damn things."

As late as 1968, only a dozen players in the NHL wore helmets — and not always for protection. Jack Crawford of the Boston Bruins, for instance, wore his to hide a bald head.

Yet while Howe disliked helmets, his sons, Mark and Marty, both NHL players, wear them. It is a reflection of the times.

"They feel naked without them," the elder Howe said. "That's the feeling you have to have. For youth it's good. They feel at home when they get up to the NHL. But it has led to higher sticks."

AND TO the disappearance of the solid, sometimes thunderous, body check that once was an integral part of the game, according to some players.

"The reflex action of most NHL players now is to bring their stick up to head level if an opposition body comes close, especially one that threatens to make contact with them," said one older NHL defenseman, who asked to remain anonymous.

"Most players now came out of minor hockey (or college) where they wore headgear and maybe even face masks. That means there's been no caution to carry their sticks around guys' noggins. When I was in kid hockey, you kept your stick down much more because you didn't want to cut anyone and certainly didn't want to be cut yourself.

"There are many times when I have a chance to knock a guy flat with a good check, but I have to weigh the cost. In most cases, I know that I'll get a stick in the mush if I try a clean check, so I back off."

Six of the league's 21 teams — Calgary, Los Angeles, Toronto, St. Louis, Buffalo and Quebec — have all-helmeted rosters. Less than 30 players leaguewide skate unprotected. Players under contract before June 1979 who don't want to wear helmets must sign waivers absolving the league of responsibility for any head injuries.

WASHINGTON'S ROD Langway skates bareheaded. The league's top defenseman the past two years, he wore a helmet in his first three years with the Montreal Canadiens.

"I got cut over the eye with it," Langway said. "I wasn't playing that well at the time, and all of a sudden I just said, 'I'm going to take it off,' and the next thing I knew it felt really comfortable and I put it away."

Langway said "a lot of extras" happen to players who don't wear helmets.

"It's weird," he said. "It seems like people notice you more. The sticks seem like they're down more because the players seem like they know that you don't have a helmet on. I've only been hit a couple of times without a helmet on, and when I wore a helmet it seemed like I was always getting hit."

New York Rangers' defenseman Barry Beck has suffered several injuries, including a concussion in Toronto last January when he tumbled over Rangers' goaltender Glen Hanlon and collided against the end boards. He still skates helmetless.

"Oh yeah, a helmet would have helped me," Beck said. "Still, and it may sound crazy, I'm not going to wear a helmet just because I hit my head into the boards. I've been playing for seven years without one and I don't think I'll ever wear one unless they make it mandatory."

Helmets are not yet the rule for league officials, but that way of thinking also might change.

"We've discussed it," said Frank Udvari, a former referee and now a supervisor of NHL officials, "simply because there are officials coming out of junior leagues that are used to wearing helmets.

"We don't bar them from using them, but when they come up here I suppose they don't want to be all alone wearing one, so they don't wear them. I think like anything else, though, eventually it'll come to pass."

THIS SEASON, veteran referee Andy Van Hellemond became the first NHL official to wear a helmet on the ice.

"You think of the reasons to do it, and there are a few. You think of the reasons not to — and there aren't any," said Van Hellemond, who was soon joined by linesmen Wayne Bonney and Ron Asselstine. "When you think about it, the only reason you don't wear a helmet is because of the look. And really, that's no reason at all.

"It's coming, anyway, one of these years, and I thought it was time to give it a try. We protect our bodies with $80 shin guards and protective girdles and elbow pads, yet we have nothing on our heads. Does that make sense?"

Gators say penalty too stiff

GAINESVILLE, Fla. (AP) — The National Collegiate Athletic Association has never imposed such severe sanctions as against the University of Florida, and the organization should reduce them to maintain its reputation for fairness, the school said in a formal appeal.

The appeal complains that the stiff sanctions, including three years' probation and loss of 20 athletic scholarships, for wrongdoing in the Florida football program don't take into account the school's cooperation throughout the probe.

"The University of Florida, in complying with the letter and spirit of NCAA legislation, and in an effort to show good faith, cooperated with the NCAA to the maximum extent possible," wrote lawyer Jim Quincey in the appeal released Wednesday.

The Southeastern Conference on Tuesday ruled the Gators will not be eligible to participate in any bowls this year, but postponed a decision on whether Florida could keep its new conference title.

Last Saturday, Florida beat Kentucky 25-17 to clinch its first-ever SEC championship in 52 years. Florida officials also announced interim Coach Galen Hall had been named to the permanent job.

Coach Charley Pell was fired in September and two assistant coaches were dismissed amid allegations that included spying on other teams' practices. The school also attempted to put more distance between itself and overzealous supporters, Quincey said.

"The institution was told by the NCAA enforcement staff that such actions would be taken into account," Quincey said, adding that new President Marshall Criser "had the right" to expect the corrective steps would be considered for leniency.

The Florida appeal of the 59 infractions cited by the NCAA asks that the third year of probation be immediately suspended as compensation for its cooperation. The current NCAA plan allows suspension of the final year only if Florida controls its football program for the first two years.

The appeal blasts NCAA plans to take away 20 scholarships over two years and reduce the total number of scholarships to 85 next year, plus make only 75 scholarships available in 1986-87.

"A sanction this severe has never been imposed in any previous case in NCAA history," Quincey said.

The association could best maintain its reputation for fairness by reducing the sanctions "in this highly publicized case," according to Quincey.

Subaru tops import and U.S. autos in customer survey

Subaru has risen to outrank all other Japanese and U.S. automobile makes in the latest independent customer satisfaction survey conducted by J.D. Power & Associates.

"The latest Customer Satisfaction Index rates the value-leading Subaru well above quite an impressive array of imported and U.S. makes," noted Thomas R. Gibson, executive vice president, operations, for Subaru of America, Inc.

He observed, "We were judged against the rest of the industry and the only vehicle with a higher percentage of satisfied owners than Subaru was the exclusive European luxury car, Mercedes Benz."

The impartial J.D. Power 1984 C.S.I. measured customer satisfaction levels of 31 domestic and import automotive nameplates using a weighted average of a variety of factors such as the condition of the car upon delivery, frequency of mechanical problems, the dealer's attitude and results in performing warranty work.

Gibson noted, "By the time the survey was run, the new car glow had pretty well worn off for the owners. They had plenty of time to really get to know their vehicles and their dealers. Obviously, consumers endorse our dedication to producing a car which is inexpensive and built to stay that way."

"We're very pleased to be so highly regarded by our owners," he commented. "In last year's survey, Subaru was ranked third in the automotive industry, while we were fifth two years ago. So, we are definitely headed in the right direction."

"The results of the survey are also a tribute to the outstanding Subaru dealers and distributors across the country. Like our corporate commitment to customer satisfaction their dedication is more than just a sales or service program — it permeates every area of our business," said Gibson.

Taylor's year at Wilmer-Hutchins make good movie

By ROGER CAMPBELL
Dallas Morning News

DALLAS (AP) — Wilmer-Hutchins coach Radford Taylor's 1984 football season would make a good movie. Except the plot might be hard to believe.

Get this: The movie opens with Taylor being fired because he is the white coach of an all-black team. He is then rehired after suing the school system for $4 million. Expect a long year, right? They shut out Highland Park to qualify for the playoffs. How about some bad luck? Nope. The Eagles, in a 3-way tie, win a coin flip to get into the playoffs. Finished? Not yet. The Eagles defeat Spruce in the first round.

"It'd make a great movie," Taylor says. "Part of it kind of funny. Part of it kind of sad. I don't know what you would call it."

Call it a remake of a time-honored theme: Hero plucks triumph from adversity.

And the stage is set for the next scene: The Wilmer-Hutchins Eagles (9-2) play the Plano East Panthers (9-1-1) 7:30 p.m Saturday, Garland Memorial Stadium.

There's no telling what happens next.

Pan in on the Wilmer-Hutchins locker room, moments after the last game of the 1983 season. Radford Taylor, father to many of his players and inspirational leader to all of them, is preaching his football gospel of hard work and commitment.

Taylor knows no other way.

"I told the kids when I got here that we wouldn't accept two things," Taylor says. "I wouldn't accept lazy — late's lazy and lazy is late. And I wouldn't accept repeated mistakes."

His brand of leadership has worked on a group that once doubted whether they could win. That makes the following events even more incredible.

In 1983, Taylor's first season at Wilmer-Hutchins, he turned a pitiful football program into a respectable one (7-3). In 1982, the Eagles finished 2-8.

"They didn't believe in themselves," Taylor says. "They were looking for a spark. They didn't need a big fire. It was just a case of rolling up the sleeves and going after it."

Taylor goes after it like a leatherneck sergeant — an approach he says he adopted long before he joined the Marine Corps. His yells during practice can be heard the length of the field. Sometimes he runs behind players who lag during the team's infamous "40 40s" (40 40-yard sprints). It is his way of leading by example, of pushing his kids.

"One of our sayings," Taylor says, "is that anybody can be better than good."

But the Eagles were better than good during the regular season. They played great defense to win eight games, including a 3-0 victory over Highland Park. It was the first victory over Highland Park in seven tries, giving the Eagles a share of the district title that led to a 3-team coin flip in which they won to advance to the playoffs.

All that after Radford Taylor endured a summer-long ordeal that, to this day, he says he will never understand.

Members of a predominantly black school board and several community leaders, saying that Wilmer-Hutchins athletes needed more black role models, fired Taylor. They claimed Taylor made racial slurs, was incompetent, that he wasn't getting along with teachers, parents, staff and players.

"So many things happened," Taylor says of his "frustrating" summer. "When I went to coaching school, I was miserable. I didn't have very much hope of coaching. I never gave up the faith, really."

Taylor, who filed a $4 million federal lawsuit against trustees of the school district, could have left before being rehired. He says he had "20 concrete opportunities" to coach elsewhere, one in which he would get "a $10,000 raise in a program that wasn't hanging on the bottom."

But Taylor stayed, because, he says, "I love the kids. They, and some parents, showed support all the way."

Some of the players spoke out against losing their coach.

"It made no sense," Anthony Wright, a starting safety for three years, said earlier this week. "They should have left it alone. It doesn't matter what color you are as long as you can do your job. He's a great coach. I look up to him. The other players feel the same way.

"When we lost to North Mesquite, he said, 'I'm not worried about you losing; I'm worried about how you're going to act the week after.' He wouldn't let us go down. Nobody knows how it would have been (if Taylor hadn't been the coach). As you can see, it turned out for the best."

And Taylor says he is not bitter. He has a favorite among the axioms that he spews out regularly and that hang in frames on fieldhouse walls: "Tough times don't last, but tough people do."

Returning to Wilmer-Hutchins after the controversy was tough. Taylor, who had to regain control, worried how the kids would respond to the turmoil.

"I wasn't going to sit around," he says. "It never had been so miserable that I couldn't do it. It wasn't a case of coming back to prove something, but a case of coming back to finish something. Maybe we're growing up.the kids, the school, the coaches."

So, for now, the tough times are over.

But this may not be the end of the Radford Taylor story.

Will the same school board that fired him and lost a bitter fight to uphold the firing renew his contract in January?

"I don't know," Taylor says reluctantly, his hoarse voice dropping several octaves. "All I know is that if football starts tomorrow, I'll be there. I'll coach spring training. If I'm here, I'm going to get after it. If I'm somewhere else, I'm going to get after it.

"No matter what happens today, I'm going to make it tomorrow."

The camera is still rolling.

No more yawning about SWC basketball

DALLAS (AP) — The start of the Southwest Conference basketball season used to draw about as much attention as a gasoline station opening.

Nobody really cared except the players, coaches, relatives and girl friends.

If you were a student you could go to an SWC basketball game and study for an exam it was so lonely and quiet.

Basketball isn't football's poor relation anymore in the SWC. It isn't just "football, and, spring football."

Former Texas sports information director Jones Ramsey caught a lot of flak from SWC basketball coaches years ago for that innocent quip, but it was close to being accurate.

That's back when most SWC folks thought a hoop was something you either did the "Hula" in or built a dress around.

Baskets? That was for measuring bushels of corn and wheat.

Fast break? That's what a quarterhorse did coming out of chute.

Jump shots? That's how you hunted ducks, walking up on stock tanks.

You get the idea. Basketball "lingo" wasn't exactly the talk of the barbershop.

NOW, YOU can get an earful of SWC basketball chatter right smack in the middle of the sacred SWC football chase to the Cotton Bowl.

And the talk isn't just from SWC listening posts. The basketball banter about the league is from coast-to-coast.

Pickup national magazines or newspapers and you read about Houston's three straight trips to the NCAA Final Four or why Southern Methodist and Arkansas are ranked in the preseason Top Twenty.

Click on radio talk shows and SWC basketball is prominently mentioned with growing respect.

Recent example:

Basketball expert Dick Vitale tells a talk show host "I think Arkansas Coach Eddie Sutton should be rated right up there with Bobby Knight of Indiana and Dean Smith of North Carolina. He's just a great, great coach. That's why you can never count out a Razorback basketball team."

Or, "I think SMU's Jon Koncak is a tremendous player. I have him rated in my top 10 players in the country."

Or from Dick Weiss in the "Tipoff" publication of the United States Basketball Writers:

"The powerful (Arkansas center) 6-11 Joe Kleine and SMU's 7-0 senior center Jon Koncak both made the U.S. Olympic team along with the graduated guard Alvin Robertson of Arkansas. No other conference had that much representation. SMU should be in the nation's top 10 and Arkansas could be the team to watch as tourney time nears.

"Hogs' Eddie Sutton, who would look great coaching the U.S. (Olympic) team in Seoul (1988) and is a great X and O man."

The SWC is fast developing a reputation as a league of canny coaches.

Such as Sutton at Arkansas; young Knight disciple Dave Bliss at Southern Methodist; foxy Shelby Metcalf at Texas A&M; hard-working Gerald Myers at Texas Tech; wise Jim Killingsworth at Texas Christian; fiesty Jim Haller at Baylor, and cagey Guy Lewis at Houston.

Young Tommy Suitts at Rice has earned respect while Bob Weltlich at Texas, another Knight disciple, is trying to get the Longhorn program turned his way after the abrupt departure of Abe Lemons.

Vitale even leaps to Lewis' defense, making prominent mention of the Cougar boss in a column in "Tipoff."

"I have to feel a little sorry for Guy Lewis out in Houston," Vitale writes. "It seems like the critics will never let up on the man. Now, they're saying that Akeem Olajuwon has learned more about basketball in a week's practice with the Houston Rockets (of the NBA) than he did in three years at the University of Houston.

"Funny, isn't it? All Lewis did with Olajuwon is make the Final Four three consecutive years."

While still not at the level of the powerful Atlantic Coast Conference and other more established basketball loops, the SWC is making swift progress.

Three SWC basketball teams, Arkansas, SMU and Houston, will receive prime-time national television network exposure this year.

The league has come a long way from the days when some folks thought "shooting buckets" was something you did with a rifle.

Pro golf's most celebrated foursome after Skins Game $

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. (AP) — Pro golf's most celebrated foursome — Arnold Palmer, Gary Player, Jack Nicklaus and Tom Watson — get together again this weekend in the second of a series of television productions called the "Skins Game."

A total of $360,000 will be up for grabs Saturday and Sunday in the 18-hole match (9 holes each day) on the Nicklaus-designed Desert Highlands course.

The event, highly successful in its inaugral performance with the same foursome last year, is a co-production of Ohlmeyer Communications and Trans World International and, admittedly, is a staged-for-television event.

It will be televised live on NBC 3:30-6 p.m., EST, Saturday and 4-6 p.m., EST, Sunday (with taped replay to sections of the country in which the live telecast conflicts with pro football).

And it will be the last under the current format and sponsorship. PGA Tour Commissioner Deane Beman has announced that the 1985 Skins Game will be played under the direction of the Tour, with only one of the four players to be selected by the Skins Game sponsor.

The unique aspects of last year's event — the first time Palmer, Player, Nicklaus and Watson had competed in the same group, along with the unusual format — produced high TV ratings, some cheerful banter among the game's greatest players, and moments of drama.

"I've had more mail about the Skins Game than anything I've ever played in," Nicklaus said.

But the most controversial moment came after the television cameras had completed their coverage.

In a post-match confrontation that was supposed to be private — but which was overheard by a reporter — Watson angrily accused Player of illegally improving his lie on the 16th hole. Player, who took the most money out of the match, denied it. Relations between the two have been cool ever since.

In all, Player won $170,000, including $150,000 on one hole. Palmer provided the most dramatic moments and collected $140,000, including $100,000 on one hole. Nicklaus won $40,000 and Watson $10,000.

Cards on rough road to sixth title

Associated Press

Louisville Coach Denny Crum might have been talking about the state of basketball for the entire South when he spoke of the competition in his own Metro Conference.

"I think there are going to be changes," Crum said. "We've got better coaching, better players and people are doing a good job recruiting."

North Carolina has lost All-Americans Sam Perkins and Michael Jordan, while Kentucky saw Melvin Turpin and Sam Bowie graduate. Both teams have plenty of talent, but because of the transition, a new power may arise from the many contenders.

Duke, Maryland and Georgia Tech look strong within the Atlantic Coast Conference with North Carolina State as a challenger. Louisiana State has finally found a big pivotman, but needs to overcome poor outside shooting to claim the Southeastern Conference title.

Crum's Cardinals will find the going difficult as they try for a sixth Metro title. Memphis State has Keith Lee back for his senior season and Virginia Tech presents a formidable obstacle with Dell Curry and Perry Young.

Duke knocked off North Carolina in the semifinals of the ACC tournament last season, and the people responsible for that victory are all back for Coach Mike Krzyzewski. Leading the way is junior guard Johnny Dawkins, the ACC's second-leading scorer last year, forward Mark Alarie and Dan Meagher, a rugged Canadian Olympian.

Krzyzewski's team has been chosen as high as fourth in preseason polls, but it's not a point of pressure for the fifth-year coach.

"My first reaction to that is that it's nice to see Duke ranked so high — in anything — so I like that to begin with," Krzyzewski said. "Secondly, I know that is a rating ... based on what you think is going to happen. The people who are making those ratings ... don't know my team as well as I do."

Maryland features junior Adrian Branch and sophomore Keith Gatlin at guard, with Len Bias back at forward. The Terrapins whipped Duke for Coach Lefty Driesell's first tournament title.

Georgia Tech continued its steady improvement under Bobby Cremins and will have guard Mark Price to try to lead the Yellow Jackets to a 20-victory season, something they've not achieved since 1970.

South Basketball

Dale Brown guided LSU to the Final Four in 1981, where the Tigers lost to eventual champion Indiana. He likes this team's chances, too.

"Let's be honest," he said. "We coaches all are striving for the same thing — national recognition — and the polls offer that."

The Tigers have Jerry Reynolds, Derrick Taylor and Don Redden back from last season. Brown also has a big center — 7-foot-1 Yugoslavian Zoran Jovanovich — the first true big man he's had since Greg Cook in 1981.

Alabama returns Bobby Lee Hurt and Buck Johnson, but the Crimson Tide has work to do if it is to top last season's fifth-place finish in the SEC.

Lee raised the hopes of a lot of Memphis State fans last spring when he announced that he would return for his senior season. At 6-10, Lee will join 7-foot sophomore William Bedford.

"Bedford has the potential to be one of the most dominating centers in college basketball," Coach Dana Kirk said. "But he needs a lot more improvement in one area — defense."

Young and Curry led Virginia Tech to an early season trouncing of then-reigning national champion North Carolina State. The Hokies made it to the semifinals of the National Invitation Tournament, but the lack of a big man in the middle may cause problems.

Hagler expects crown defense against Hearns in April

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

The deal is all but done and next April, Marvelous Marvin Hagler expects to defend his middleweight championship against Thomas Hearns in Las Vegas, Nev.

Maybe.

"Hearns looks pretty set, but I don't believe anything until I step in the ring," Hagler said. "I've been around long enough to learn that. That's the ups and downs of boxing."

Two years ago, Hagler also thought he was going to fight Hearns. But it never happened. A series of problems climaxed by an injury to Hearns' right hand postponed it. Hagler frowns when he thinks about the whole affair.

"He said he hurt his little baby pinky," the champion said, his tone dripping derision. "Guys in the street would cut that pinky off for a $1 million. We offered him $3 million and he didn't want to fight.

"We've been negotiating five times for the same fight. I say he'd better come and get me before I change my mind and say 'Forget it.'"

There is, however, very little chance of that happening. That's because Hagler and Hearns need each other right now, and they know it. Their match is the only big money fight on the boxing horizon at the moment.

So, every chance he gets, Hagler tosses a little gasoline on Hearns' fire. There is, for example, the matter of height. Hearns is 6-1, some 3½ inches taller than Hagler. The marvelous one's eyes gleamed when the topic was raised.

"I love tall dudes," he said. "I always like to chop down big trees. You know, what you do is bring those tall guys down to your size and then, whammo, you put their lights out."

He made the process sound absolutely ominous.

Then Hagler did some more probing with his needle.

"I think Hearns is waiting for me to get old and gray, get so old I can't see anymore," he said.

Hagler has been in this brutal business since 1973 and he knows it can't go on forever. He has some goals, though, one of them the record 14 title defenses by Carlos Monzon, who ruled the middleweight division from 1970-77. Hagler has defended his crown 10 times in the four years he's held it.

"I'm ahead of his schedule," he said. "After I beat Thomas Hearns, the only option left for me is to go for Monzon's record. I'm tossing it around. I'm so close, the closer I get, maybe I might want to go for it."

The problem though, may be finding opponents. Hagler knows a string of stiffs could cause bad taste. "I don't want to be criticized for fighting bums of the month like Joe Louis and Larry Holmes," he said. "I'd like to go out with a lot of grace and style as still the undisputed middleweight champion of the world."

There was a brief dispute earlier this month when the World Boxing Council threatened to strip Hagler of his crown because he wasn't paying attention to its 12-round limit for his fights. The argument was settled out of court when the WBC, in an attack of common sense, realized that Hagler is recognized as the middleweight champ by the public, with or without its sanction.

The argument was not nearly as important as the internal debate Hagler's conducting about just when he will walk away from the ring permanently.

"I thought I wanted to fight until I made a million bucks," he said.

That plateau was reached some time ago and he's still punching.

"When I was 16, starting out, I also said I'd retire at the age of 30," he added.

And how old is Hagler now?

"Thirty."

Tarks' 12th UNLV team may be best

By ROBERT MACY
Associated Press Writer

LAS VEGAS, Nev. — Jerry Tarkanian doesn't look much like a college basketball coach, and the NCAA has said he shouldn't be a college basketball coach. His history is winning and being investigated.

On the court, disheveled in shirt sleeves, haggard, chewing on a towel, he almost always looks ready to cry. In court last summer, he could laugh.

Tarkanian has been dogged by the NCAA since he sounded off on their enforcement policies while coach at Long Beach State in 1971. Now, fresh from his legal victory over collegiate sports' governing body, Tarkanian is shaping his 12th team at the University of Nevada-Las Vegas, and locals are betting it could be his best.

And while he scowls and rubs his shiny pate when his players talk Final Four, a grin tugs at his bulldog brow when he's asked if that would be a fitting, ironic finish to the 13-year saga of NCAA vs. Tarkanian.

Tarkanian admits this year's team has the best depth since he's been at UNLV. He says the Rebels will run more, press more and be more versatile than last year's 29-6 club that made it to the final 16.

"We're trying to get back to running like we did a few years back," Tarkanian said.

That was in 1976 and 1977 when the Rebels went to the Final Four, attached "Runnin'" to their nickname, set national records for game scoring average (110.5), most consecutive games over 100 points (12) and single-game scoring (164 vs. Hawaii-Hilo).

The NCAA derailed the Runnin' Rebels in 1977, finding the program guilty of 38 recruiting violations, placing the school on two years' probation and ordering Tarkanian suspended for two years. Tarkanian obtained a court injunction and kept coaching and winning — much to the chagrin of the NCAA heirarchy.

The case languished in legal limbo until June, when it went back to court for a final disposition on the injunction.

District Judge Paul Goldman, referring to the NCAA investigators who relied only on their recollection of interviews, wrote that the practices "might be considered efficient, but so was Adolf Eichmann and so is the Ayatollah."

Goldman said the investigators, the infractions committee and the NCAA Council "acted and thought not like Caesar's wife, but rather as arrogant lords of the manor."

The NCAA hit UNLV with 38 violations, including grade-fixing, giving players credit for classes they never attended and arranging for free transportation. Other allegations were that prospects were given free meals and shows at Las Vegas hotels and that players were given money at various times.

Nearly half the allegations stemmed from the tenure of Tarkanian's predecessor, John Bayer.

The NCAA has appealed Goldman's decision to the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals and Tarkanian hopes it will end up in the U.S. Supreme Court "because I know I'll win there, too."

"Right now I think the organization is making an effort to be a little more fair, and I think a lot of that is because they've been beaten in my court case," Tarkanian said, hunched in a chair in his plush office at the Thomas and Mack Center. The year-old 18,500 seat arena has been dubbed "Tark's Shark Tank."

In a town built on losers, Tarkanian has become something of an institution at winning. He's 593-118 over a 23-year career, and his .711 winning percentage is the best among active coaches.

But he says he regrets the price his family has paid for the NCAA's tenacity.

The NCAA announced sanctions against Long Beach as Tarkanian headed for Las Vegas. He called the penalties against the California school "the most unfair thing in sports history" and contended they were prompted because the program was fast reaching par with UCLA, the giant across town.

"I believe you need an NCAA but you've got to have equal treatment for everybody," Tarkanian said. "You've got about 10 schools that blatantly buy athletes. The NCAA knows who they are, the coaches and players know who they are, the media knows who they are. Yet they won't do anything about them.

"You need to cut out all these silly little insignificant rules and make 10 or 12 major rules, then stick by them. And bury the schools that are buying players. Nail the coach, the player, the school."

Tarkanian thinks the NCAA has looked the other way when some schools violated rules "because they want some programs to be successful. Maybe it's the TV revenue or something, I don't know."

With Tark's programs under the NCAA microscope, he has opted for transfers, junior college players and problem athletes cast off by other coaches. And he's turned them into winners.

"They'll always be watching me," he says of the NCAA. "We're surviving with a lot of transfers. But it will be extremely difficult for us to ever get a great athlete. I don't think I'll ever be vindicated in the eyes of some people."

But an NCAA championship would help.

Unseeded Nesker topples favored Shriver in three sets

SYDNEY, Australia (AP) — Instead of quitting, Pam Shriver says she'll just take a few days off.

Shriver, heavily favored, lost in three sets Thursday to unseeded Marcella Nesker of the Netherlands, 5-7, 7-6, 6-4, in the third round of the $150,000 Family Circle New South Wales Open.

Nesker is ranked 64th in the world, while Shriver is ranked No. 3.

"If I had to face the prospect of playing like this, I'd get out altogether," Shriver said.

Shriver said that during the break she would re-examine both her career and her association with long-time coach Don Candy, although she did not predict a total break with the coach.

"It will be heaven to get away," she said. "At the moment, I have a horrendously negative attitude. I've just had too much of the whole thing."

The victory gave Nesker the right to face Ann Henricksson of the United States in the quarterfinals.

In other matches, Zina Garrison defeated West Germany's Bettina Bunge 6-3, 7-5, and Yvonne Vermaak of South Africa downed Christiane Jolissaint of Switzerland 6-3, 6-3.

The match between Puerto Rican Gigi Fernandez and Pascale Paradis of France was interrupted by rain with Fernandez leading 5-4 in the first set.

Peggy Gossett of the Women's Tennis Association confirmed that Shriver had withdrawn from three tournaments scheduled early next year. That would give Shriver at least three months free from tennis.

"I'm not winning any of my close matches and it's definitely the half-time point as far as my tennis career is concerned," Shriver said.

"The first half is over. I've gone through the stage of being an up-and-comer and then establishing myself in the top 10. Now it's time to regroup."

Dowdeswell ousts No. 1 seed Kriek in South Africa

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Britain's Colin Dowdeswell upset top-seeded Johan Kriek 4-6, 7-6, 6-4 Thursday to advance to the third round of the South African Open tennis tournament.

The unseeded Dowdeswell, avenging his loss to Kriek in the final of last year's tournament, broke Kriek's service in the ninth game of the final set and held his service to win the match.

The South African-born Kriek, now an American citizen, had the edge for much of the match as he made his opponent struggle for every service game while winning his own fairly comfortably.

It was the second major upset of the tournament in the first two rounds. On Wednesday, unseeded Australian John Fitzgerald ousted second-seeded American Jimmy Arias 6-2, 7-6.

There's little MacLaine doesn't do

ENTERTAINMENT

By PAUL ROSENFIELD
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — "Shirley's taught me a lot about broiling fish," said Thomas Sharkey, personal assistant to Shirley MacLaine. The line, uttered in the kitchen of MacLaine's rented house in nearby Tiburon, said more about the performer — and the range of her curiosity — than she could say about herself. Especially coming after an almost nonstop 24 hours of MacLaine talking, observing, dancing and pub crawling. Americans who read know only too well what MacLaine does do: she acts, writes, dances, and dominates the media. But is there anything she doesn't do? That Shirley MacLaine also broils fish (and perfectly seasons the lemon butter) would seem to be gilding the lily.

More to the point was the question overheard in the lobby of the Orpheum Theater, where MacLaine was winding up a three-week stand before bringing her one-woman show to Los Angeles Nov. 15 to the Wilshire Theater for another three weeks.

"Which Shirley MacLaine interests you the most?" an Orpheum patron was asking.

"Oh, the real one," came the answer.

THE REAL Shirley MacLaine? There isn't just one. Thirty minutes before a Wednesday matinee, MacLaine entered an Orpheum side door alone, switched from a leather aviator jacket to crimson sequins — then didn't leave the stage for a solid two hours. With four dancers, but without props or a set, and with lighting properly subdued (in the age of rock concerts, less lighting is more) she offered a dancing autobiography: The Lady and Her Legs, it might be subtitled.

An hour and 40 minutes into the show, she sweated — slightly. But when she walked off, a half hour later, she didn't swear or collapse or do phony backstage kissing or yell at anyone. She simply looked at a still photographer and quite seriously said, "Not too many stomach shots, I hope." "Are you talking about the psychic gut?" wondered MacLaine's lighting man, Jeff Schlissel, referring to "Out on a Limb," MacLaine's recent best-seller about psychic phenomena. MacLaine just laughed, left, and in the fastest costume change since Marlene Dietrich went from sequins to a tuxedo on stage in two minutes flat, she returned. Another MacLaine, wearing suspenders and a tweed suit, was ready for another encounter. "Lunch" between performances, at a local writers' hangout, would lead to supper, in Chinatown, coffee on Russian Hill, and on and on.

SHE RECENTLY completed a spontaneous 14-day juice fast and, with eight shows a week, the meals are necessary. She's in fighting trim. Socially, too, the meals are necessary. In one San Francisco week, she dined (separately) with the Gordon Gettys, trance channeler Kevin Ryerson (the medium mentioned prominently in "Out on a Limb"), a former chorus dancer she roomed with in the early '50s, Zoetrope executive Tom Luddy and a Nobel Prize-winning scientist. On her day off, she flew to Los Angeles to work on the NBC miniseries of "Out on a Limb" (she'll play herself) with director Colin Higgins. And that was just the first week.

MacLAINE WON'T attribute the activity to energy; rather it's "A state of being." But what makes Shirley kick? Especially in this year of gratification, of winning the Oscar and topping the best-seller list and writing her fourth book and turning 50? There are those who would cite narcissism or plain restlessness.

"An awful lot of time is private time," she insisted. "And then there's dancing, which is the one constant, the one necessity. Dancing keeps me anchored, and it keeps from using tricks on the screen." She knew the answer was too easy. Yet dancing, because she began professionally at 12, is what keeps her grounded. As long as she's in there kicking, she can't soar off into the stratosphere. And to the public she remains Our Shirley.

It isn't that simple, but also it is: MacLaine needs a stage. "From the first moment I walked on a sound stage — on 'Trouble With Harry,' when I was 20 ... I felt at home. I loved the cameramen and the grips and the womb of it. I don't ever remember feeling scared on a sound stage, or unprotected."

On "The Apartment," MacLaine remembers director Billy Wilder "telling me to take 16 seconds to react to something Jack (Lemmon) would say — and I could do it. All three of us knew just what Billy meant; we were that tuned in to one another." MacLaine also knows how time passes, and she flashed her smart Irish grin at another memory.

"THERE'S A beautiful speech in 'The Turning Point,'" she said, recalling it almost verbatim. "About how there are still moments when it all comes together — the music, the costumes, the dancing, the lights. For me, now, I have those moments with the live audience, on the stage. And I didn't have those moments before. I didn't go back to the stage, remember, until I was 41 years old."

And at 41 — unlike her overnight discovery at 20 — the magic wasn't instant. The performer's drive that took her back to Broadway in 1976 is the drive that turns some people off. "Oh God, yes," she admitted. "People would come backstage and say, 'I'm exhausted just from watching you.' And I knew I was doing something wrong. People don't say that anymore. I got out of my own way. See, it's not about being 'multitalented,' or letting the work show. I've been a lover of perfection, but there's a higher state known as relaxation."

Emblem traced to painful incident

Ancient lore has it that many hundreds of years ago when Viking marauders were harassing Britain's northeast coast, a raid on an important Scottish settlement was foiled when the invaders crept, barefoot, straight into a bed of thistles.

Their cries of pain alerted the defenders, who rushed to the scene and routed them. From that day on, the story goes, the hardy purple-flowered thistle has been Scotland's emblem.

Facts of life pop up in controversial book

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Jonathan Miller, the physician, actor, author, lecturer and director of plays, operas and television, has turned his interest to the birds and the bees. For the moment, anyway.

The outspoken 50-year-old Englishman, perhaps best known in this country for playing host on the 13-part PBS medical series called "The Body in Question," has written a book about human development from conception to birth.

Called "The Facts of Life"($18.95, Viking), it is what is known in the trade as a pop-up book because it has three-dimensional movable illustrations, some of them very graphic, of what happens in the formation of a baby.

The labels "controversial" and "unorthodox" have often been attached to Miller's past artistic efforts, including his recent staging of the Verdi opera "Rigoletto," which he set in a Mafia-ridden Brooklyn of the 1950s. But he says that he was not trying to be provocative with "The Facts of Life," written in collaboration with a designer, David Pelham.

"It's so matter of fact that even to anticipate trouble you'd have to be very, very neurotic," he said the other day in an interview in the lobby of the Algonquin Hotel in Manhattan. "Look around the room. Everyone you see is here because of what is shown in the book. Surely it's not rude to ask how."

"I can't bear provocation," he went on, "because the people you provoke are so idiotic. I just try to clarify and say clearly what was previously obscure or misunderstood or overlooked."

The six pop-ups show the male sex organs, the female sex organs, sperm assaulting a ripe egg cell, a 40-day-old fetus, a 24-week-old fetus and a 9-month-old fetus about to be born.

Miller said the book was not necessarily intended for children. "It's for the childish in the adult," he said, "or the adult in the child." He noted that it was a follow-up to a book he and Pelham did last year called "The Human Body," in which the sexual organs were not included.

He expects no criticism from conservative groups, he said, adding that "a number of serious pro-life people" had told him they liked the book because they regarded it as an argument against abortion. "It shows how the fetus develops from a very young stage, and you can see that it's a little creature, quite human," he said.

Asked his views on abortion, Miller said: "I believe the rights of a living individual take precedence over the rights of an as-yet-undisclosed individual. At the same time I don't think abortion should be approached with careless indifference, as if at were an appendix. It's a moral decision requiring as much care as euthanasia."

A Cambridge graduate, Miller received his medical degree from University College, London, in 1959. He left medicine in the early 60s to be the co-author of and to appear in a satirical revue called "Beyond the Fringe," with Dudley Moore, Peter Cook and Alan Bennett, which played on Broadway from 1962 to 1964.

From Wire Reports

The Soldier Who Didn't Wash; The Five Loaves Volume II from the Stories & Fables series Walt Disney Home Video 50 minutes. $49.95

This is another volume in the outstanding British series of short stories that have been imaginatively adapted and filmed on locations around the world with miming-actors and voice-over narrations. The series is being distributed in this country by the Disney Co.

"The Soldier Who Didn't Wash" is convincingly set in 18th-century Russia and tells of the footsoldier, Sergei, who made a pact with the Devil. And won. He didn't wash for 15 years, used the Devil's gold to bail out the Czar and married a princess as well.

"The Five Loaves" is a middle-European tale about two peasants, Paully and Georgie, who travel to market together each month. It tells a lesson in equal justice given Georgie when he insists on equal division of the reward they are given by a stranger for sharing their bread.

These are entertaining moral fables. Eden Ross Lipson

Number of paralegals increases, despite 'old guard'

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

The number of paralegals, or legal assistants, is increasing despite controversy spread by long-established attorneys who refuse to accept them and unethical practitioners who give paralegals a bad name.

"The old guard lawyers are not particularly receptive to the idea," said Nancy Hart, head of the Legal Assistant Curriculum at Midland College. "But it's very much a coming field because it saves so much money and it takes less time."

"Their role is designed to free a lawyer from all the routine tasks," she said. "But they are always under a supervising attorney."

Questions about the duties a legal assistant can or cannot perform has caused some of the confusion surrounding the trade, which is one of the fastest growing in the nation, according to some studies.

"There is nobody that I know of who would consider themself a good, ethical legal assistant if they were doing anything like practicing law without a license," said Karol McVay, a certified legal assistant for Stubbeman McRae Sealy Laughlin & Browder, Inc. "Lawyers are extremely conscious of having a non-professional lawyer involved in their cases."

According to a review of the first 10 years of Legal Assistants Committee of the State Bar of Texas, written by G.R. Poehner, "one factor which tended to slow the development of the paralegal profession has been the lack of understanding on the part of lawyers with respect to the principles of delegation and supervision...of legal assistants."

THE QUESTION most lawyers unfamiliar with the paralegal concept ask pertains to the ethics involved in asking a non-lawyer to perform certain duties, Poehner writes.

"The Code of Progessional Responsibility, promulgated by the Supreme Court of Texas, of course, applies only to lawyers, not to legal assistants directly," the author writes. "Lawyers, however, employ legal assistants, and the ethical standards of the Code of Professional Responsibility do apply to such employment and utilization."

The state legal assistants committee is, in conjunction with the state bar, gathering guidelines to free lawyers from "such unwarranted concerns," according to the 10-year review.

According to Ms. McVay, legal assistants can act as go-betweens for the lawyer and client, gather information and conduct research.

"Almost everything that can be done, short of going to the courthouse, is done," she said.

They cannot accept cases, set fees, appear in court or give legal advice, she said.

"They can be just as specialized as lawyers," Ms. Hart said. Legal assistants may specialize in litigation; wills, trusts and probate; torts and insurance and claim investigations; and in divorce, custody, adoption, change of name and support procedures.

THE PRACTICE of legal assistants has been slow to reach Texas, Ms. McVay said. For years, legal executives, the equivalent of legal assistants, practiced in England.

"And in this country, even the medical profession is farther ahead of the legal profession in the use of paraprofessionals," she said.

Although the American Bar Association first established a committee on legal assistants in 1968, Ms. McVay said she first heard about legal assistants in this state in the early 1970s. Texas, however, which established its legal assistants committee in 1975, is one of the leaders in numbers of certified legal assistants, according to the May State Bar of Texas Legal Assistants Division Newsletter.

The Texas State Bar is the only bar in the country that has a legal assistants division, established in 1981. About 1,500 persons belong to the division, Ms. McVay said.

"A lot of it (the hiring of legal assistants) depends on how progressive the law firm is," Ms. McVay said, "because, of course, the attorney always assumes full professional responsibility" for the legal assistants' duties and actions.

Many, such as Ms. McVay, came into the profession after being a legal secretary. According to Ms. Hart, two-thirds of the 60 students enrolled in the program at Midland College are legal secretaries.

"ALMOST ALL of the legal assistants today have secretarial support," Ms. McVay said. "It defeats the purpose if the legal assistant has to prepare and type materials."

According to Ms. McVay, the profession is growing for a number of reasons:

— "Everything is so complicated today that business people even have to depend on a lawyer more and more."

— "People in general have gotten so litigious — even over things that people would have settled between them or forgotten years ago."

— "The cost increase — for attorneys, too. It's hard to make a profit. Lawyers used to raise their fees when they wanted to make more but, because of the saturation of attorneys, they can't anymore."

Use of legal assistant is "a way to get legal service to more people and keep costs down," Ms. McVay said. "If we can free up that time lawyers used to spend on the more mundane things, that gives them more time to spend on their cases."

Despite the establishment of a certification program and exam, sponsored by the National Association of Legal Assistants, a legal assistant does not have to be certified to practice.

"The exam is strictly voluntary," said Ms. Hart, who attributes some of the confusion to the differences in legal assistant education.

WHILE MIDLAND College has offered a two-year program for the past eight years, other universities, colleges and paralegal schools offer programs which vary in length from three months to four years. To be admitted, a person may be required to have a bachelor's degree, while another institute may require only a high school diploma or equivalent, Ms. McVay said.

She added she took the certification exam with no educational training other than that she learned working as a legal secretary since she was 17.

"I was already doing the work and had the title before it was recognized," Ms. McVay said with a laugh. She was excited she passed it "even if it was just for the satisfaction of doing something for years and finding out you know as much as you thought you did."

Most legal assistants are employed by attorneys on a salary or contingency basis, Ms. McVay said. Fee-splitting "is absolutely unethical."

Legal assistants also are employed by courts and trust departments of banks. And there recently has been a growing movement toward freelancing, she said, "which also will raise a lot of serious ethical questions."

"There are no standards in the industry, yet," Ms. Hart said. "And even the names legal assistant and paralegal contribute to the confusion."

"Today, a legal assistant is anything you want him or her to be," Ms. McVay said.

However, that could change soon.

The Texas division already is working on a state certification program for legal assistants, she said.

Odessa's Teen Court judged successful

By LAWRENCE BUDD
Staff Writer

ODESSA — In one year, 766 criminal cases involving juveniles charged with minor crimes have been handled through Odessa's Teen Court.

Not one of these defendants has appeared again before Judge Ken Spencer.

Coordinator Natalie Rothstein credits peer pressure as the key to the program's record in its first year.

"As long as the kid is involved in the justice side, that kid is not going to be involved in the criminal side of the criminal justice system," said Ms. Rothstein.

Odessa children between the ages of 10 and 16 charged with crimes such as speeding, shoplifting or public intoxication have had the option of this alternative to the adult justice system since November 1983.

The Odessa City Council recently broadened Teen Court's scope to include higher-level misdemeanors, such as possession of small amounts of drugs and alcohol, theft of up to $200 and criminal trespassing.

Rather than a fine at most (the traditional sentence to teen offenders found guilty of Class C misdemeanors), kids opting for Teen Court are sentenced to a set number of hours in public service and on juries deciding punishment for other Teen Court defendants.

Other teens serve all the court positions from lawyer to bailiff. Spencer is the lone adult participating.

"It's the peer group that determines peer behavior," said Ms. Rothstein of the basic concept behind Teen Court.

"It's very difficult, when they feel alone, to say no if they want to say no," she said. "If we can have another peer group exhibiting law-abiding behavior, it can work."

Modified from programs in Denver, Colo., and Grand Prairie, Teen Court has attracted international attention. Since a visit from a Japanese TV crew which spawned a documentary shown in that country, Tokyo is looking at developing a program similar to Odessa's, said Ms. Rothstein.

The Junior League of Midland has contacted her several times, said Ms. Rothstein. Ellen Bell said Wednesday that a survey had been sent out to Midland league members polling their interest in developing a program in the city.

Many of the teens coming into the program as defendants have stayed on after their sentences were completed, Ms. Rothstein said.

"It gives them kind of an extended family," she said. "It may be the first time they have felt integrally involved in an important thing. These kids are not the jocks on campus, but they're finding a niche."

Along with the understanding of the legal process, Teen Court participants get a glimpse of potential careers. "We don't have any F. Lee Baileys or Clarence Darrows yet, but I wouldn't be surprised if something like that comes out of this," she said.

Another key to the program's success has been the support of Spencer, the junior league and the community, she said.

Also, "You've got to care," said Ms. Rothstein, "The kids pick up on the way you feel."

Parents are required to participate in the process. The sentences range from 2 to 22 hours of community service and 1 to 4 nights as a juror.

Determining the punishment is complex, said Ms. Rothstein. "That offense may symbolize a lot of other problems."

"You don't want to kill an ant with an cannon. On the other hand, you can't let a murder go unchecked."

The increase in the scope of cases has not been felt yet, she said. Few referrals have been made on the higher-level misdemeanors.

The school district has approached her about Teen Court hearing substance abuse and truancy cases currently handled by the juvenile center, said Ms. Rothstein.

Along with jury duty and public service, the defendant would be sentenced to a three-hour chemical abuse education and prevention class, which is funded through a federal grant. Parents will also be required to attend a parent skills workshop.

While emphasizing her interest in continuing the program, Ms. Rothstein said "My dream is for us to put ourselves out of business."

Doctor shows how to 'win over wheezing'

By RON GILMORE
Staff Writer

Since 1981, Dr. Phyllis Huffman has made regular trips to a local slaughterhouse in search of animal lungs to use for demonstrations in "Winning over Wheezing," a course she teaches for asthmatic children and their parents.

"Asthma is the number one cause of absenteeism in schools today," said Dr. Huffman.

Sitting by her time-worn rolltop desk, Dr. Huffman is the picture of old-time medicine, a Norman Rockwell-type doctor who genuinely cares for her patients. As Midland's leading pediatric allergist for the last 25 years, however, Dr. Huffman is no old-fashioned healer when it comes to keeping up with the times.

"Without exception the children who have taken my course have never had a serious asthma attack again," she said.

Winning Over Wheezing is Dr. Huffman's method for helping the children to help themselves.

"Kids love to take some responsibility for their health," she said. "Except for the teens," she added. "They don't do as well because they think they are indestructible."

The 10-week course is limited to around 10 children at a time and runs from 5:30 p.m. to 6:30 p.m. In the class, children learn how their lungs work, with the help of the donated animal lung. Staff members show the children how the lung passages get obstructed and cause the wheezing and raspy cough that afflicts a reported eight percent of all Americans — half of them children.

The students, usually ages seven to 15, examine X-rays of asthma and pneumonia patients and make trips to the emergency room and the cardio-pulmonary unit of Midland Memorial Hospital.

"We do this to teach the kids that there is nothing to be afraid of if they have to go to the hospital," said Dr. Huffman. "But I haven't had an asthma patient in the hospital for over 10 years," she added.

Children taking the course also learn about some of the causes of asthma and what to avoid.

"Pets, pollin, smoking and perfume are some of the main ones," said Dr. Huffman.

Using a workbook from William H. Rohrer, Inc., the children do some schoolwork as well.

"I want them to know the value of the medicine that they are taking," she said.

Dr. Huffman emphasizes the positive.

"Asthma is a preventable, controllable disease," she said. "None should have to be admitted to the hospital with asthma.

CRMWD to hold meeting on Stacy Reservoir permit Tuesday in Big Spring

From Staff Reports

A ruling last week by the Texas Supreme Court negating the Stacy Reservoir permit will be the prime item on the agenda of a meeting of the Colorado River Municipal Water District directors Tuesday in Big Spring.

Frank Booth, Austin attorney who has represented the CRMWD in permit proceedings, said he will file a motion for rehearing of the ruling.

John L. Taylor of Big Spring, president of CRMWD, noted that the agency's staff and attorneys were assessing the court's reversal.

"We didn't come this far to give up," he said. "At this point we are studying various courses of action besides filing for a rehearing. Our board has no intention of abandoning efforts to obtain a permit to develop the Stacy site. The simple fact is that this water is crucial for the growth and development of the Upper Colorado and Permian Basins without, at the same time, having any adverse effect on downstream interests."

"We didn't come this far to give up. At this point we are studying various courses of action."
— John L. Taylor, CRMWD president

The CRMWD had been granted a permit by the Texas Water Commission to impound a 554,000 acre-foot lake 25 miles southeast of Ballinger on the Colorado River to yield 113,000 acre-feet annually. The permit for the past four years, since it was granted by the Texas Water Commission, has been contested in the courts. The Supreme Court held last week that a TWC inventory of the Colorado River showed there was only about 3,100 acre-feet meeting the court's definition of unappropriated water.

Doctor likes pace of life in small Texas town

By PAT ROLLINS

EMORY, Texas (AP) — After years of life in the big city, Howard E. Kweller decided to look for a different quality of life and a better place to raise his children.

Kweller is a doctor, and he chose to settle in Emory, Texas, population 813, and 30 miles from the nearest hospital.

"I love medicine. My biggest concern is with the quality of care for patients," Kweller says.

Kweller's wife, Denise, is a wholehearted participant in her husband's quest for quality. A regular fixture each day at the clinic, "D" is a licensed lab technician and physicians' assistant.

Kweller started his practice in Emory in 1981 after a short stint in the same area with the Public Health Service. An honors graduate of the University of Maryland, Kweller graduated from Mt. Sinai School of Medicine in New York. He did an internship with the U.S. Public Health Service Hospital in Baltimore, and his residency in surgery at the U.S. Public Health Service Hospital in San Francisco.

After that urban experience, he chose the country life.

"I lived in New York for four years. There is a tremendous pressure and competition there. I enjoy the slower pace and friendly people in Emory. This is a good place to work and raise our children," Kweller says.

THE DOCTOR also has some definite opinions about the high cost of medicine and the money-up-front policy of many hospitals.

"I had a recent case of acute appendicitis come into my office. It seems a hospital in the Metroplex refused to let the patient be admitted when he couldn't come up with $1,400 in advance," Kweller said. "The patient called me and then had a friend rush him the 75 miles to my office. It turned out he had been suffering from the malady for nearly 10 hours as the pain moved from his stomach into his appendix area and got worse. We immediately had him admitted to a local hospital and operated on."

The operation was successful. Troubles with the case were not over, however. "D" tells the story:

"After the surgery, the insurance people called us and seemed to be trying to find a way to get out of paying for the work. They seemed to believe that acute appendicitis might not be an emergency situation," "D" added.

While Kweller is concerned about the high cost of medicine for his patients, he is equally concerned about the possibility of picking up even more government regulations in the future as a result of that pervasive high cost.

"I AM NOT in this for big bucks. However, on the other side of the coin, most doctors only receive about 20 percent of each dollar spent on medical care. Another point to be made is the fact that while everyone hollers about the high cost of medicine, no one seems to holler about the vast increases in the cost of a doctor's overhead," Kweller said. "For instance, the cost of oral polio and DP (vaccines) has gone up over 400 percent in the last four years."

Kweller expounded even further on the quality of care for British citizens, where socialized medicine is a fact of life. "No one wants to have cheap care. They want to know and trust their doctor. In Great Britain, people have to get on long waiting lists for non-emergency operations," Kweller said.

The rural environment has an insulating effect for country doctors, Kweller believes. He said he feels somewhat insulated from all the government regulations. In addition, Kweller feels the rural environment allows him to be cost-conscious.

Since 1981, the clinic in Emory has been expanded by the Kwellers and they have gone into debt for an old X-ray machine from a nearby hospital. The couple says it will take at least 10 years to get out of heavy debt.

IN KEEPING with his patient-oriented approach to medicine, Kweller does not often use appointments in his practice.

"I am a gatekeeper," Kweller stated. "I get you what or who you need. We do not keep appointments here, but take people as they come."

Kweller even makes occasional house calls.

"This man has had a stroke or several strokes and is paralyzed on his right side," Kweller said before arriving at the house, "I need to check him for the possible onset of pneumonia."

Infant with new heart ready to leave hospital

HOUSTON (AP) — An 8-month-old girl who received a new heart during a transplant operation three weeks ago will be going home in a few days, her doctor says.

The young patient, whose name has not been released by the Texas Heart Institute, is "well, vigorous and playful," said Dr. O. Howard Frazier.

Doctors said the infant had been suffering from irreversible heart failure caused by a disease of unknown origin called cardiomyopathy.

Three weeks ago, her diseased heart was replaced with a donor organ taken from a 2-year-old Dallas girl who died of head injuries.

Frazier said that the infant suffered from one mild rejection bout, but has since made dramatic improvements and gained weight.

"She looks good," said Frazier, director of the institute's transplant program.

One week after the operation, a biopsy of the new heart showed signs of rejection, Frazier said, but all other tests indicted everything was normal. To treat the rejection, she was given an anti-rejection drug, cyclosporin, and received a strong dose of steroids to paralyze her immune system.

Some type of rejection episodes are common to all transplant patients, Frazier said, but the biopsy allows doctors to treat the problem early.

Another biopsy taken a week later showed the heart was fine, the doctor said Wednesday.

"She had one rejection episode unbeknownst to her," said Frazier, adding that she will be able to have a "normal child" like others her age.

The infant's transplant operation signals a "pilot program" for future infant heart transplants, Frazier said.

The tiny patient will be watched in the days ahead to see if the transplanted organ grows as the girl grows, Frazier said.

"We think they do," Frazier said. "No one has done one this young that lived."

The surgical team hopes to peform at least 10 infant heart transplants for future study, Frazier said.

Town holds emergency yard sale

By LAURA GRIFFIN

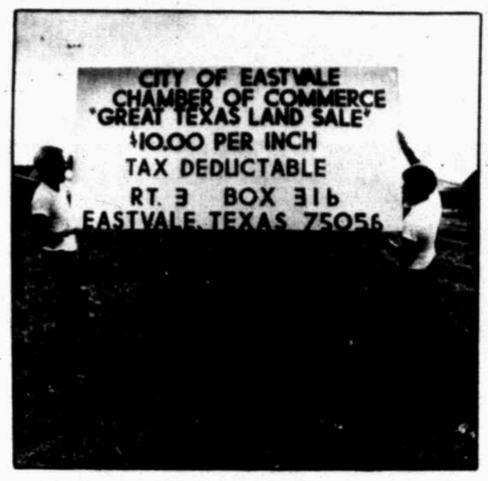
EASTVALE (AP) — When hard times hit, some people hold yard sales to earn extra money, and that's just what this city is doing.

Eastvale, a city declared blighted by Denton County commissioners and its City Council, is selling its last lot of land — by the square inch.

Mayor Bert Eubanks said the city is selling the land for $10 a square inch in hopes that Texas' popularity will bring the city enough money to repair roads and install working water and sewer systems.

"We're advertising this sale nationally," she said. "I also think it would make great Christmas gifts for relatives in the north. This way people can own land in Texas. I think it (Texas) is still popular enough because of the (TV show "Dallas") and because of Texas itself."

The sale could bring as much as $9 million if the entire 900,000 square-inch parcel of land across from City Hall sells, but Mrs. Eubanks said she doesn't hope for that much.



Eastvale Chief of Police Joe Schreibvogel, left, and Sgt. Ronnie O'Neal raise a sign advertising the sale of land in an effort to raise money for the city. AP Laserphoto

"I'm, sure there's no way we will get $9 million, but even if we just get half of that it's $4.5 million and a quarter of it is $2.25 million and we can do all kinds of things with that," she said.

The City Council has asked the governor to declare Eastvale an emergency situation so it can get some federal assistance for its severe problems, Mrs. Eubanks said, but it has not yet heard from the governor.

Residents have moved away and businesses have "packed up and left town" because the water situation is so bad, she said.

The city has two small water tanks for its citizens, who never know if they will get water when they turn on the faucet, Mrs. Eubanks said. Last winter the city was without water for 15 days.

Mrs. Eubanks said she got the idea to sell the land from a man in Boston, Mass., who read about Eastvale's plight in The Boston Globe. The man suggested the city raffle off an acre of land at $25 a ticket and give the winner of the land a Stetson hat.

"Well, I looked into the legalities of it, and a raffle is against the law in Texas. Plus, we don't have an acre of land. So I thought about it awhile and decided we could sell the one lot we do have."

People across the country have expressed an interest in Eastvale's situation, she said.

"This thing has just mushroomed," she said. "I've been interviewed by the Canadian Broadcast Network, the Mutual News Network, People Magazine, Channel 4 and Channel 8 and a bunch of newspapers and radio stations. It's nice to know a lot of people are interested and care about the problem."

NEIL SOLOMON, M.D.

There's no special test for premenstrual syndrome

Dear Dr. Solomon: How can a doctor tell if a woman has premenstrual syndrome? I get upset whenever I have my period, but my gynecologist says I don't have premenstrual syndrome. He has never taken any tests, so how can he be so sure? — Millie, Albany, N.Y.

Dear Millie: There is no specific laboratory test that can confirm the presence of premenstrual syndrome. The physician must rely on what the patient says and on his or her knowledge of the patient to make the diagnosis.

Information that may help confirm or exclude the diagnosis of premenstrual suyndrome include the patient's symptoms, her personal stress, and a psychological history.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My father has been told that he has diverticulosis. I would like to know what this means and how serious it is. — Lew, Columbia, S.C.

Dear Lew: Diverticulosis is a condition in which little sacs, called diverticula, develop in the wall of the colon. It is estimated that the condition is present in the majority of people in the United States above 60 to 70 years of age. Most are not bothered by the condition and would not know they had it unless they were X-rayed.

Complications such as diverticulitis (an inflammation of a diverticulum), bleeding, or perforation occur in about 15 percent of patients with diverticulosis.

Dear Dr. Solomon: The way I understand it, angina is a physical condition, not a mental condition. If that's the case, why does it become worse if a person becomes upset about something? — Mr. T. O'N., Boulder, Colo.

Dear Mr. O'N.: Emotional or psychological stress is associated with an increase in blood pressure and heart rate, and may therefore aggravate angina. Similarly, uncontrolled hypertension increases the demand for oxygen.

Angina patients can contribute a great deal to the management of the disease by adopting a lifestyle that emphasizes such factors as reduction in psychological stress, no smoking, and control of blood pressure.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My grandson is getting a soy-protein formula because of some allergy problem. Is this the usual form of treatment where the baby's family has a history of allergies? — Mrs. A.S., Columbia, Md.

Dear Mrs. S.: There are conflicting views about the use of soy-protein formulas to prevent allergic disease in newborn infants. Some pediatricians maintain that the formulas are less likely than cow's milk to produce an allergic reaction in infants born into families with a history of allergies.

For Debbie, Harpers Ferry, W.Va.: Nature is on the side of the pregnant woman. Both calcium and iron absorption are improved during pregnancy, so that a little goes a long way. However, this does not mean that supplementation is not required for a successful pregnancy.

Neil Solomon, M.D., is a columnist for Los Angeles Times Syndicate. If you have a medical question write Dr. Solomon at 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon will not give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.

U.S. Postal Service seeking site for new post office

From Staff Reports

The U.S. Postal Service is seeking a suitable site on which to build a new Northside Station postal facility in Midland, Postmaster Bill Williams said.

The "preferred area" for site consideration is bounded on the north by Wadley Avenue, on the east by Lamesa Road, on the south by Wall Street, and on the west by North Garfield Street. Where streets or highways are used as boundaries, sites on either side of the street or highway are considered within the preferred area. All utilities and access to a two-lane paved public street must be available.

Site size needed is approximately 179,685 sq. ft. of land, or a lot with minimum dimensions of 346 ft. by 519 ft.

Property owners are asked to submit their site offerings no later than Dec. 14, to Bill Wright, Real Estate Specialist, Field Real Estate and Buildings Office, U.S. Postal Service, P.O. Drawer 239, Dallas, TX 75211-0239.

After a suitable site has been located and the Postal Service has accepted an offer to sell from the owner, an architect will be hired to design the building.

The proposed new postal-owned building will have approximately 28,109 sq. ft. of interior floor space.

Bids are due by 9 a.m. Dec. 11.

Man treated for gunshot wound

From Staff Reports

A Midland man was treated and released Thursday at Midland Memorial Hospital for gunshot wounds to his right forearm and abdomen following a shooting which was the result of an apparent domestic argument, police said.

According to police, William Lee Kennedy, 1605 English Drive, admitted himself to the emergency room at MMH after he said he was shot with a .22-caliber revolver following an argument at his residence.

Police said the bullet entered and exited Williams' right forearm and lodged just beneath the skin in his abdomen. It later was removed by emergency room physicians. No charges are expected to be filed as the result of the shooting, according to police.

Airport owner remains in critical condition

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — Harold Vroman, owner of Sky Ranch Airport southwest of Midland, remains in critical condition in Odessa's Medical Center Hospital's intensive care unit.

Vroman, 65, was injured Nov. 15 in a fall from a scaffold on a hangar he was helping build at Sky Ranch.

He fell 12 to 15 feet.

Vroman suffered a fractured skull, fractured third vertebra in the neck, broken right wrist, three broken ribs, and an injured right eye.

Book, concert to raise funds for officers

From Staff Reports

Advertisments in an informational book about the problems of child abuse and a country and western concert have been scheduled to help raise money for the Midland Police Officers Association.

The book, sponsored by the MPOA, will be made available to the public, according to Det. Lt. Gayle Reeves, president of the association.

Members of the 10-year-old association have entered into an agreement with Wally Flowers, a country and western music promoter, to help sponsor a country and western concert next spring. Flowers and his staff soon will be contacting Midland businesses to sell space in the book.

About $10,000 to $15,000 is expected to be raised from the concert and advertisements. The funds will be used to maintain functions of the police association.

"All of these funds will go to further law enforcement in some shape, form or fashion," Reeves said.

Profits will be used to help officers and their families who are under financial stress from illnesses, disabilities and other hardships, Reeves said.

In addition, the 102-member association will be able to continue offering an annual scholarship to one officer per year to attend Midland College for criminal justice studies.

"We also hope to institute pretty soon a program called something like 'The Friend of the Year,'" Reeves said. The individual honored for cooperation and assistance to the Midland Police Department would be treated to lunch and given a plaque, he said.

Midland police look for robbers

From Staff Reports

Midland police are looking for two men who entered a southside convenience store about 10 p.m. Thursday, held the store clerk at gunpoint and then fled with an undetermined amount of cash.

Jeri Dodd, the store clerk, told police the men entered the Stop & Go Convenience Store, 900 S. Big Spring St., displayed a small caliber automatic hand gun and demanded she give them the money from the cash register.

After doing so, Ms. Dodd said the suspects left the store running north. The suspects were described as black males in their early 20s. One man was wearing blue jeans, a blue jean jacket and a baseball cap. The other wore blue jeans and a brown leather jacket, police said.

JFK's life, death recalled by visitors to Dealey Plaza

DALLAS (AP) — For the first time since 1963, observance of President John F. Kennedy's assassination was limited to a few specators who mingled through Dealey Plaza, snapped pictures — and wiped away an occasional tear.

There were no organized plans in Dallas Thursday to commemorate the fateful moment when Kennedy was shot fatally at the corner of Elm and Houston streets in the downtown area.

Instead, a steady procession moved through the JFK Memorial Plaza, reading the historical inscription, studying a map of the assassination site and taking pictures of the Texas School Book Depository, from where reputed assassin Lee Harvey Oswald fired the fatal shots on Nov. 22, 1963.

A small U.S. flag had been placed in the shrubs in the front of the memorial. By 12:33 p.m. — approximately the time Kennedy was shot — the crowd had grown to about 75 to 100 people.

Officials of the Dallas County Democratic Party, which sponsored the Nov. 22 memorial ceremonies for the past few years, said they decided it would be more appropriate to shift the services to Kennedy's birthday on May 29.

"That was the whole idea of last year's 20th anniversary services, to have a major rememberance, then stop it," said former Democratic County Chairman Bob Greenberg. "You don't celebrate people's deaths. You don't celebrate Lincoln's or Washington's death. You celebrate their birthdays."

Observers took advantage of a crisp autumn day highlighed by a cloudless sky to gaze at the memorial.

Traffic mishaps kill at least 10 people in Texas

Associated Press

Accidents on Texas' highways and roads have claimed at least 10 lives so far during the holiday, including six deaths on Thanksgiving Day.

The holiday traffic death count compiled by The Associated Press began at 5 p.m. CST Wednesday and continues until 11 p.m. Sunday.

A 56-year-old New Summerfield man, identified as John B. Long, died early today in a two-car accident on U.S. 79 about two miles east of Jacksonville in East Texas.

A 19-year-old Angelo State University student driving home for the holiday was killed Wednesday evening, and two companions were injured, when their car rolled over in Early, officials said.

Jeffrey Robert Lewis of Burleson was pronounced dead at 6:25 p.m. at Brownwood Regional Hospital, assistant Early police chief Andy McLane said.

An unidentified Mexican national was killed in San Antonio Thursday in a single car accident, authorities said.

An unidentified man died Thursday afternoon in a freak accident in Houston, and authorities said two men with him were being sought in connection with leaving the scene without trying to give aid.

The victim stuck his head out of a car window and caught it on a wire running from a telephone pole to the ground, authorities said. Officers said the man was pulled from the car and died instantly.

The two men with the victim left the car and fled the scene.

A West couple was killed at about 3:30 p.m. Thursday in a one-vehicle accident on Farm-to-Market Road 308 between Waco and their North Central Texas community.

The DPS identified the victims as Tserafin Orduna, 21, the driver of the car, and his wife, 22-year-old Domitila Ramirez Orduna. Both were pronounced dead at Providence Hospital. A passenger in the car, Arturo Orduna, was in satisfactory condition at the same hospital.

The driver suffered massive head and chest injuries and a broken right leg. His wife sustained a fractured neck, two broken legs, a broken right arm and massive chest wounds, doctors said.

Arturo Orduna suffered broken facial bones and lacerations, a fractured hip, broken arm and broken leg.

A DPS spokesman said the driver was westbound about one mile east of Farm-to-Market 933 when the car ran off the right side of the road and struck a large tree.

Edmond Maskell, 55, a railroad agent from St. Alvins, Vt., was killed and three others in a car with him were injured when a car traveling in the wrong lane of Interstate 45 in Galveston County hit them head-on, the DPS said.

Trooper A.R. Gonzalez' report said the accident occurred just after 4 p.m. Thursday a quarter mile north of Farm-to-Market 65.

Venancio Garza Jr., 20, of Houston was charged with negligent homicide after his car struck a vehicle driven by Leon Decuir, 41, of Pearland, the DPS said.

Decuir was in good condition and Deborah Decuir, 36, of Pearland and Dorothy Maskell, 54, of St. Alvins, Vt., were listed as stable at Galveston Memorial Hospital in Texas City, the DPS said.

Gonzalez' report said Garza's car was northbound in the southbound lane of I-45 at the time of the accident.

Elida Jimenez Gonzales, 23, of Converse was killed and three other people injured when the car in which she was riding collided with a pickup truck at 12:30 a.m. Thursday on Farm-to-Market 1518.

DPS troopers said the driver of the truck, 20-year-old Reyes Flores of San Antonio was listed in stable condition at Santa Rosa Hospital.

Two men in the northbound pickup were also injured in the crash. They were Charles Sowell, 19, and Timothy McMahon, 19, both of Universal City. Both were in undetermined condition at Brooke Army Medical Center.

Woman mourns deaths of great-grandchildren

ORANGE (AP) — Mary Melancon has lived 106 years but the worst tragedy in her life was fresh in her mind on Thanksgiving Day.

Although she had lots of great-grandchildren and great-great-grandchildren crawling on her lap, the memories of a fire that claimed the lives of three of them still were fresh in her memory.

The three were buried Wednesday, two days after they burned to death in Ms. Melancon's apartment.

Ms. Melancon said the deaths of Uhlester Chargois Jr., 5; Anthony Atkinson Jr., 23 months; and Erica Monroe, 3 months, was the most tragic incident of her life.

"Lord have mercy," she said quietly while dabbing a handkerchief to her eyes.

The mother of 12, Ms. Melancon spotted the fire while washing dishes. Authorities said the children started the blaze while playing with matches. She tried to douse the flames with a pan of water.

Ms. Melancon's granddaughter, Jackie Monroe, mother of the three children, came downstairs and saved her grandmother. The flames prevented her from saving the children, who had gone upstairs.

More than 100 grandchildren attended the last family reunion and great-and great-great-grandchildren numbered too many to count, relatives said.

The fire left Ms. Melancon homeless and without any belongings. Many of her relatives live near her in the Arthur Robinson housing project and work together taking care of the woman they call "Mamoo."

"I didn't save anything but the clothes on my back," Ms. Melancon says. "I ain't got nothing."

For Wednesday's funeral, relatives bought Ms. Melancon new shoes, stockings and a new dress with a lace collar.

The grandmother will be moving to a new apartment soon. The City of Orange Housing Authority already has assigned her a unit not far from her daughter, Clementine Reed.

Texan ready to challenge O'Neill for House leadership

By MERRILL HARTSON
Associated Press Writer

Stenholm

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Texas Democrat, asserting that Rep. Thomas P. O'Neill "is too far to the left" to continue as House speaker, says he's ready to challenge O'Neill's re-election in a party caucus.

Rep. Charles Stenholm of Stamford, a leader of the so-called "Boll Weevil" faction of conservative Southern Democrats in Congress, said "there's definitely going to be a challenge of the speaker, and there's a 99 percent certainty that it will be me."

Stenholm disclosed his plans in a telephone interview Thursday with The Associated Press.

O'Neill, D-Mass., who has been in Congress for 32 years and speaker of the House since 1976, said in a telephone interview from his Cape Cod home that "anybody has a right to run" in the caucus of House Democrats scheduled for Dec. 3. But the veteran Democratic leader also said he has sufficient "pledges of support to be able to retain the post."

"We haven't made an announcement," said Stenholm, reached at his suburban Virginia home. But he also said that "those of us who feel it's time for a change, have decided to do it."

"There are many of us in Congress who believe this is the time to begin rebuilding the (Democratic) party for 1986, and several feel that if we're going to do that, it's time to get started."

— Rep. Charles Stenholm, D-Stamford

"There are many of us in Congress who believe this is the time to begin rebuilding the (Democratic) party for 1986, and several feel that if we're going to do that, it's time to get started," the congressman said.

O'Neill, who turns 72 next month, has said he will retire in 1986. Some party sources have said that for this reason, any challenge to O'Neill's leadership role in the 99th Congress starting in January likely would only be symbolic. These sources discussed the leadership situation on the grounds they not be quoted publicly.

These sources have said that current discussions among legislators focus on changes that could be made in 1986, when O'Neill retires.

Stenholm, 46, said he was concerned about the image of House Democrats in the wake of President Reagan's landslide Nov. 6 election victory over former Vice President Walter F. Mondale. Stenholm said he feared that under O'Neill's continuing leadership, the party would be seen as "obstructionist" by the American people. "I'm afraid we'll be left with a stalemate," he said.

A Stenholm challenge would be the first formally launched against O'Neill since 1977, although in recent years there have been signs of discontent among young Democrats who feel the leadership gives them too little say in the affairs of the chamber.

The Republican Party made only modest gains, picking up just 14 seats in the House, despite Reagan's landslide victory, and Democrats still hold a 253-182 margin.

Stenholm, who is leader of a group known as the Conservative Democratic Forum in the House, met frequently with Reagan's representatives in 1981 as the administration was seeking Democratic support for Reagan's budget proposals.

Majority favors burying waste, poll reveals

DALLAS (AP) — A majority of Texans favor burying low-level nuclear waste instead of storing it above the ground, according to a public opinion poll.

The fall Texas Poll found that 58 percent of those surveyed believed low-level radioactive wastes should be buried, as opposed to the 24 percent who thought it should be kept above ground.

The results, published in Thursday's Dallas Morning News, surprised the head of the state agency in charge of finding a site for the waste.

"We had heard that there may be a preference for above-ground for a variety of reasons," said Rick Jacobi, general manager of the Texas Low-Level Radioactive Waste Disposal Authority in Austin.

Testimony before a state House subcommittee, Jacobi said, indicated that above-ground storage might be favored because of a distrust of landfills. Some witnesses feared leakage that could contaminate groundwater.

The poll of 1,020 adults, conducted by the Public Policy Resources Laboratory at Texas A&M University, also found that 70 percent of the people responding favor an end to the law that allows Texans to drive with open alcoholic beverage containers in their vehicles.

In other findings:

— Sixty-two percent of those polled favor a law requiring people to wear seat belts in their cars.

— Fifty-three percent believe state judges should not run for election with party labels, but rather run unaffiliated with any political party.

— Fifty-seven percent favor the governor or legislature appointing judges and then, after a few years, having voters decided whether the judge should stay in office or be replaced.

Congress has said that each state must establish a disposal site for low-level radioactive wastes, such as those generated by hospitals and industry, by the end of 1985.

Texas has yet to select a site, and currently there are two under consider — both in South Texas. One is in Dimmitt County and the other in McMullen County.

The poll, officials said, has a sampling error of three percentage points in either direction.

MADD president resigns over rift with policemen

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The local president of Mothers Against Drunken Driving says she is resigning her post because of a rift with a "vocal minority" of the San Antonio Police Department.

Suzanne Hildebrand's penchant for observing police work firsthand by going to accident scenes and observing DWI arrests had caused friction among some officers, the San Antonio Light reported.

Ms. Hildebrand told the newspaper that the "definite hatred" she has felt while in the police station "is no longer worth the trouble."

In an interview published Thursday, she said she just recently became aware of "'what was apparently some longtime feelings" at the Police Department and decided to step aside.

"We (MADD and the Police Department) have a common goal," she said. "We have to work together. It's become graphically obvious that can't be done with me as president.

She said no one had come forward to assume the post, which she planned to relinquish next month.

Several officers told The Light they had problems with Hildebrand.

"She just popped up in places where we didn't think she belonged and began, through her pushiness, to get in our way rather than making our job easier," Patrol Lt. Clyde Ross said.

"I like Suzanne as a person, but I don't need any help in making my job harder. And let me assure you, I get these complaints from my men more often than they are put in writing," Ross said.

Procopio says FDIC's job not done

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business-Oil Editor

"The job in Midland is about 20 percent done," said FDIC Liquidator, Tom Procopio, who leaves this week to assume a new position in Atlanta.

One of only 175 FDIC liquidators in the country, Procopio has been instrumental in the liquidation of First National Bank of Midland from the start, organizing a liquidation team here, handling the acquisition of the bank and the division of loans.

As he prepared to depart Midland, Procopio reflected on the status of the disposition of First National Bank loans.

Said Procopio: "I would have liked to stayed a bit longer and gotten things under control better. We are still only about 80 percent organized as far as having all the procedures and personnel we need, but the Atlanta position will be a good career move for me. It will be a deputy director's position, and allow us to settle down for awhile."

He said the last year had been mostly putting out major fires and working with major deliquent accounts trying to keep many of them afloat, but now the FDIC was reaching a point where it would begin to attempt to arrange workouts.

"We are looking for third parties or new money to come in and attempt to develop some of the leases and drilling prospects we are holding, in which case FDIC would subordinate to new money," he said.

Tom Procopio

FDIC currently has about 1.1 million acres under deeded trust, including developed and undeveloped leases, and in some cases leases have lapsed because no workout could be arranged with third parties.

The only properties FDIC is actually operating are the GMW properties, which include 60 oil and gas wells with an income of $1.5 million per month and $60,000 per month net to FDIC. The wells are operated by an independent firm, which submitted high bid.

"Our goal is to get rid of them," Procopio stated. "We don't want to operate any oil and gas production."

About 65 percent of the loans have been paying something, according to Procopio, and the FDIC has left them alone. Now, concentration will be made on creditors with big cash flows, using outside consultants such as investment brokers and others to develop long term solutions.

On a positive note he said FDIC did not foresee any conditions that would " knock the wind out of the sails" of the recovering oil industry, and that FDIC would hold loans secured by production for the long-term.

He said drilling companies were the hardest hit by the falling oil prices and resulting bank failure.

"We are dealing with about 75-100 drilling contractors; they were the single largest source of losses. Some of them now have zero cash flow, and can't handle debt service while all their rigs are stacked. It's a hard decision, but we are now having to determine who will survive and who will not. We have to keep the stronger ones that can service their debt, but some of the weaker ones will have to be foreclosed. We don't have any choice."

Procopio explained that rig and equipment auctions were bringing about 15 to 20 cents on the dollar.

He also puts real estate into the hard-hit category.

"This (real estate) is a major problem. We have 200 properties from lots to apartment complexes, and many deliquent debtors. We are going to have to start protecting ourselves," he said.

Despite the large portofolio of real estate loans, FDIC has no intention of dumping real estate on the market at bargain prices.

"We don't fire sale things," he said. "We go with the market price. If we didn't it would only further depress the market."

He said FDIC was in a damned if we do and damned if we don't situation. "If we hold property and wait for the market to get better, we look good. But, if it gets worse, we look bad, because we should have sold when we could."

Was there any shuffling of assets prior to the failure of First National? Some says Procopio, but not as much as one would epect. He said it was the exception.

Also involved in the liquidation of Penn Square Bank in Oklahoma, he said oil people were easy to work with.

"They (oil people) are down-to-earth, straight-shooters, who can look you in the eye and tell you what's what. I think it's the nature of the business that breeds a lot of solid people," he informed.

He said Midland was one of the best communities he had ever worked in, and whoever took his place would not regret having worked in Midland.

How much longer will FDIC be a fixture in Midland? Probably another six years, according to the departing liquidator, but certainly not at full staff for that period of time. FDIC now employs 300 in Midland and is looking to add about 25 more.

Northwest Texas Legislative Council agrees on five West Texas concerns

Staff Reports

A united effort to give greater impact to the needs of the entire Northwest Texas area in the upcoming session of the Texas Legislature took a step forward this week with a priority-setting meeting of the Northwest Texas Legislative Council. The Council meeting in Lubbock brought together views from Armarillo, Lubbock, Midland and Odessa Chambers of Commerce as well as from chambers representing other towns in the area.

The council agreed on five areas of common concern and targeted them for closer definition and action in the months ahead. These priorities include: a statewide water plan, highway funding, energy, agriculture and gubernatorial appointments. The council will provide a unified approach to legislation in these categories.

The area represented by the council is served by three senators and 12 represenatives. While the region sends 21 percent or ($1.8 billion) of the state's taxes to Austin, second only to the Gulf Coast region which sends $2.4 billion, the benefits received for the taxes are far out of balance, according to the Midland Chamber of Commerce.

The region also represents 7.6 percent of the state's population but receives only 2.9 percent of the appointments made by the governor during the last session.

Attending the meeting from Midland were Charles Coffman, Chamber director and Chairman of the Chamber's Governmental Affairs Committee, and Grant Billingsley, executive vice president, Midland Chamber.

Billingsley will serve on the executive committee of the council along with chamber represenatives from Amarillo, Lubbock, and Odessa. Tommie Steven of Lubbock is chairman.

Dollar has mixed performance, gold prices steady

LONDON (AP) — The dollar turned in a mixed performance in thin European trading early today. Gold bullion prices were little changed.

Dealers in Frankfurt, West Germany, said the dollar held steady through the morning session. They said market activity was sapped by the upcoming weekend and holidays in the United States on Thursday and Japan today.

In addition, dealers noted investor caution over possible intervention by the Bundesbank, West Germany's central bank.

Midmorning dollar rates compared with levels in Europe late Thursday included:

–2.49125 Swiss francs, down from 2.4995.

–9.2315 French francs, up from 9.2100.

–3.3950 Dutch guilders, down from 3.3960.

–1,869.00 Italian lire, up from 1,862.50.

–1.31785 Canadian dollars, up from 1.3165.

The value of the British pound declined to $1.224 from $1.2293.

Japanese markets were closed for a public holiday. The dollar was quoted in London at 243.975 yen, up marginally from its 243.45 yen closing in Tokyo Thursday.

Silver was bid in London at $7.53 an ounce, down from $7.55.

Adair crew extinguishes well fire

GIDDINGS, Texas (AP) — Paul "Red" Adair's famed team of gas and oil well firefighters have extinguished a natural gas well fire near here, but gas continued to spew dangerously from the wellhead, officials said.

A crew from the Red Adair Co. was watching the situation today after the fire was put out Thursday, said Clarence Cheatham, district operations manager for Santa Fe Minerals, a Dallas company that owns the gas well.

Three workers were injured when he gas well fire erupted. Only one required hospitalization for burns on his face, authorities said.

"The slightest spark of any kind would set it off again," Cheatham said. "The situation is nip and tuck right now. I'm not going to take a chance right now on sending anyone else back in there and getting them hurt," he added.

The fire began in the 8,700 foot deep well Wednesday morning about seven miles northeast of this South Central Texas town.

Cheatham said pressure from underground natural gas might have blown a hole in the drill pipe and forced the gas to the surface. The gas ignited when it blew onto the hot engine of a nearby crane.

A fire at the same well burned out of control for 32 hours in August and destroyed a drilling rig, Cheatham said. He estimated the cost of both fires at $2 million and said the more recent blaze was costing Santa Fe Minerals $100,000 a day.

Repairs on the drilling rig could begin as soon as today if the gas leak is stopped, Cheatham said.

Oklahoma's oil show to be in February

Oklahoma's only major oil and gas show for 1985, the Oklahoma Oil & Gas Expo, will be held Feb. 28 and March 1, 1985. The expo will be held at the International Trade Center at the State Fairgrounds in Oklahoma City.

With the demise of the smaller oil and gas shows, the expo has become the state's major showcase for the oil and gas industry, according to Jerry Brewer, whose company produces the show.

"We began the Oklahoma Oil & Gas Expo in 1982 with the philosophy that the oil and gas industry deserved a first class showcase in our part of the country," he commented.

"The bottom line for the industry is contacts and sales. That's our aim in having the show. For that reason, we have restricted attendance to the oil and gas industry only. We expect an attendance of between ten and fifteen thousand," he added.

The expo has 250 booth spaces available. The International Trade Center was opened for the State Fair of Oklahoma in September of 1984. The building sports an air-supported vinyl dome roof that rises from 20 feet on the sides to 65 feet in the center.

"Our move to the fairgrounds accomplished two breaks for the industry," Brewer noted. "We were able to reduce the price of booth space and also provide free parking for attendees and exhibitors."

The first two Oklahoma Oil & Gas Expos, held in 1982 and 1983, were held at the Myriad Convention Center in downtown Oklahoma City.

Fannie Mae reports yield on mortgages

WASHINGTON, DC — The Federal National Mortgage Association has reported that its minimum yield required for conventional fixed-rate mortgages is 12.85 percent down from last week's rate of 13.150 percent.

The rate for five-year, adjustable-rate mortgages is 13.05 percent, down from last week's rate of 13.25 percent.

Harken total revenues increased 50 percent

The major component of the increase in revenues for the third quarter is the gain of $1,296,000 recorded in the sales of a wholly owned subsidiary, Earth Energy, Inc. These figures compare to third quarter 1983 revenues of $883,000 and a net loss of $192,000 or 4.5 cents per common share. Earnings per share in 1984 and 1984 for Harken Oil & Gas, Inc. are based on 4,591,739 and 4,256,933 average shares of common stock outstanding, respectively.

For the nine months ended Sept. 30, 1984, total revenues of $7,373,000 represent an increase of 95 percent for the same period of 1983.

Energas directors reveal operating results

Directors of Energas Co. have announced fourth quarter and fiscal year operating results and declared a quarterly dividend.

The company earned $257,000 or 14 cents per share on operating revenues of $68,848,000 for the fourth quarter ended September 30. The reduction in net income for the quarter as compared to the third quarter of this fiscal year is due primarily to decreased sales volumes attributable to the seasonal nature of the gas distribution business.

Net income for the period Oct. 19, 1983 through Sept. 30, 1984 was $4,867,000 or $2.58 per share on operating revenues of $314,379,000.

Directors declared a fourth quarter dividend of 40 cents per share, payable December 19 to shareholders of record on Dec. 3, 1984.

Christmas shopping season opens today on note of uncertainty

By ISADORE BARMASH
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — The 1984 Christmas shopping season, which only a few weeks ago seemed full of promise and glad tidings, opens today on a note of uncertainty bounded by recent slow retail sales, reduced profits and several unfavorable economic indicators.

While two days longer than 1983s, the 32-day selling season looms more importantly than last year because of the greater need to offset retailers' mixed results of the two prior quarters.

Last year, although the sales trend wavered at midpoint it picked up earlier in the fall than it has this year. Retailers may need all of the 25 percent of the year's sales and as much as 50 percent of profits that the season may bring to turn in a successful 1984.

But they remain typically hopeful about the new season's prospects. "We're very optimistic because November has been most encouraging and we think that it will continue on through," observed Sam G. Leftwich, president of the K Mart Corp., the nation's second-largest retailer, in Troy, Mich. "We think that generally it will be a more price-promotional Christmas than last year because inventories are heavier than usual and there's profit pressure."

Philip M. Hawley, chairman and chief executive officer of Carter Hawley Hale Stores Inc. in Los Angeles summed up his forecast simply: "A good season but another slow starter." November sales started off slowly but have intensified each week, he said. "We expect a year-to-year gain in the mid-teens in sales," Hawley added, "and we have built up our inventories to that level in anticipation."

But Allen Sinai, chief economist for Shearson Lehman-American Express in New York, said that he expected an "average" Christmas, with consumers showing perhaps greater caution than last year.

In 1983, consumers demonstrated strong buying in the Christmas season but so far this year, he said, "big-ticket merchandise cutbacks haven't yet run their course so that furniture, appliances and home furnishings sales may be weak."

Americans are in "good financial shape," said Sinai, "but recent softness in the economy and selective layoffs in numerous industry sectors will keep the public cautious." He predicted concern over jobs already foreshadowed by rising unemployment insurance claims.

However, Thomas M. Macioce, president and chief executive officer of the Allied Stores Corp. in New York, scoffed at the concept that the bulk of gift-oriented shoppers will be troubled by such things as federal deficits, the gross national product or monetary policy.

"In the month before Christmas Day," he observed, "these things aren't much of a topic of conversation in the household. I think Christmas will be a lot better than some think and this week I already detect the presence of a holiday aura."

A leading consumer economist, Fabian Linden of The Conference Board in New York, agreed. "We see a 7 percent sales increase in the season, or 4 percent real, which is already sustained by the Board's consumer confidence surveys. After dropping in the first half, they've since leveled off. No, I don't think it will be a troubled Christmas," said Linden, who heads the Board's Consumer Research Center.

Despite their optimism, merchants are not taking any chances on a slow start. Many already have advanced the season with early sales, are keeping stores open longer or are offering "frequent purchase" bonuses to loyal shoppers.

This week, the two largest Los Angeles department stores, The Broadway and the May Co., cut prices 20 percent to 50 percent on selective items during a 14-hour day. Gimbels New York, a persistent promoter, added a sweetener by staying open a 16-hour day, starting at 8 Friday morning. K Mart flashed all its 2,100 stores across the country to open at 7 Friday morning, two to three hours early depending upon the area. And Fifth Avenue Card Shops joined Neiman Marcus and Mark Cross in offering discount bonuses for accumulated purchases.

In New York where retail business has been only minimally better than 1983's for the last four months, leading merchants appeared to be undisturbed.

Marvin Traub, chairman of Bloomingdale's, declared, "The signals seem to be a little bit mixed, especially with the varying third-quarter reports. But as the weather got colder, business improved. I look for a strong Christmas."

Investors need to monitor economy

By DAVID DIETZ
Hearst Feature Service

Many investors ignore the responsibilities of buying stocks, bonds or other securities. Despite the intrinsic hazards, investing is often practiced in a careless and negligent manner, even to the point that people bet small fortunes on products they don't understand at all.

One key area of investor lassitude is monitoring the forces that affect the value of their holdings. Like a farmer who fails to heed the gathering storm at harvest, investors who don't watch economic trends might wind up with ravaged portfolios.

For instance, high interest rates are traditionally poison to stocks, and investors should consider at least easing share holdings during such periods. Too, you would invest differently during inflationary times than when prices are restrained, as they generally are now.

How to keep up? Your first source of information should be your broker, and staying in touch with him or her is a critical part of investing. Through his firm, which may employ a platoon of analysts, your broker has ready access to a wide variety of economic information. If your broker can't give you a fresh briefing on conditions, find another.

But you shouldn't rely solely on your broker. I endorse getting another opinion: Your own. You can't be a well-informed, decisive investor unless you watch what's going on yourself. I'd also argue that you won't be a terribly successful one, although there are many prosperous money managers with buy-and-hold sympathies.

Monitoring the economy isn't difficult. Plenty of information is available to you, much of it clearly written and cheap. Here's a review of your best bets:

BANK LETTERS: Major banks publish periodic economic reports, and the material, accompanied by charts and tables, is generally free.

The Bank of America's economics department prepares free annual workups on international, national and state economies. Write to the Bank of America, Corporate Communications/Planning and Administration 3401, Box 3700, San Francisco 94137.

Crocker Bank's monthly Economic Report is a notably thorough production. A recent issue, on Asian economies, was 15 pages. You can get on the mailing list by writing to Crocker's economics department at 1 Montgomery West Tower, 17th Floor, San Francisco 94104.

Wells Fargo's bimonthly Business Review also spotlights a single issue. A recent report examined the lull in California housing. Issues are obtained by writing to Business Review, Wells Fargo Bank 8405, 5th Floor, 475 Sansome St., San Francisco 94163.

More material may be available from banks for a charge, but you may be able to get it all free if you're a corporate or preferred customer. Major customers may even be entitled to consultations with bank economists.

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES: I find it hard to believe that any investor can cope without the Wall Street Journal ($101 a year), the paper of record on business and the economy.

If the daily package is more than you need, try buying just the Monday paper. Read the "Outlook" column on the front page for a glimpse at a major economic trend; the "Credit Markets" feature, which analyzes interest-rate patterns, and "Abreast of the Market," the Wall Street outlook.

Business Week, Forbes and Fortune magazines all have regular economic summaries. Under the guidance of staff economist Todd May Jr., Fortune compiles its own forecasts. May, incidentally, mentions The Economist ($85 a year) as important reading in his library.

BROKERAGE HOUSES: Watch for the stock hype, and you'll most likely have to buy the material from investment firms unless you're a good customer.

I'd recommend Goldman Sachs & Co.'s monthly Pocket Chartoom. It's pricey ($275 a year), but filled with solid, well-illustrated analysis on the overall scene and areas ranging from consumer psychology to factory use. To get on the mailing list, send your check to Gary Wenglowski, Director of Economic Research, Goldman, Sachs & Co., 85 Broad St., New York, N.Y. 10004.

GOVERNMENT: If you want, the government -- the Commerce Department and Federal Reserve, in particular -- will drown you in data. The average investor can forget most of the stuff; it's boring and irrelevant.

Economists rely principally on the Commerce Department's monthly Business Conditions Digest (mainly tables and graphs, $44 a year) and the monthly Federal Reserve Bulletin (dry, statistic-laden economic update, $24 a year).

Crompton sales unable to keep business alive

By PAMELA G. HOLLIE
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — When consumer spending surged last Christmas, the Crompton Co., America's oldest weaver, took it as a sign of good times to come and rejoiced. After three years of losses, the company assumed that consumers were in the mood to buy more clothes and that it would therefore sell more fabric.

But Crompton was wrong: Orders poured in last fall, then stopped. Like the rest of the industry, Crompton had hoped Washington would restrict imports of fabric and apparel — but it did not. And with the stronger dollar making foreign goods even cheaper, Crompton sadly concluded that it could no longer compete.

"At this time last year we were on a roll," said William G. Lord 2d, president of Crompton, a corduroy and velveteen maker. "Then it was like cutting us with a knife."

A few weeks ago, Crompton filed for protection under Chapter 11 of the federal bankruptcy law. After 178 years in the fabric business, the company said, it could not reverse its losses. Crompton, which has assets of $73 million, owes its creditors $37 million.

"This is the end of the company as we know it today," Lord said. "We were a small, specialized family company."

Lord, 61, joined Crompton for the first time in 1961, then went to Burlington Industries, another textile producer, in 1963. He returned to Crompton in 1972.

Crompton has closed its mills in Alabama, Arkansas, Virginia, Georgia and North Carolina. Its work force has been cut to just 110, from a high of more than 4,100 in 1980. Its headquarters staff members in New York are clearing out their desks. Its customers, which include Polo by Ralph Lauren, Calvin Klein, Yves Saint Laurent, Healthtex and Levi Strauss, are finding other sources for corduroy and velveteen.

Lord now acknowledges that it was Crompton's reluctance to change its basic two-product mix, along with its failure to diversify and its refusal to market aggressively, that left the company vulnerable to competition from abroad.

But Crompton, like many other textile companies, places the principal blame for its troubles on imports. The American Textile Manufacturers Institute, which can cite a litany of plant closings, layoffs, failures and disappointments, has taken up Crompton's case as an example of the harm imports can do.

Textile executives say that the 41 percent increase in the yardage of textile and apparel imports this year has destroyed the market.

"Business is lousy," said James C. Turner, director of trade relations at J.P. Stevens & Co., a large fabric maker.

Textile imports this year are expected to reach a record 3.2 billion pounds. Total fiber consumption of domestic textile mills is expected to be 10.9 billion pounds this year, according to the Department of Agriculture.

As a result, the fabric pipelines are full and inventories are high. In addition, consumer spending did not remain strong, as the industry had expected.

"This industry is in a very vulnerable spot," said Emanuel Weintraub, president of Emanuel Weintraub Associates, a management, marketing and engineering consultant to the apparel and textile industry.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Saturday, November 24, 1984

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Beloved Kentuckian and U.S. Vice President Alben Barkley, pianist-composer Scott Joplin and lecturer-author Dale Carnegie were born on this date. Also sharing your birthday: "Fame's" Carol Mayo Jenkins, William F. Buckley, Jr., Los Angeles Dodgers catcher Steve Yeager. A more cooperative attitude is the key to career advancement. Curb a tendency to be defensive. Local trips prove more helpful than foreign travel. Build your network of contacts. Romance receives a big boost. A long-sought goal moves within reach. Be yourself when introduced to influential people. Your charm and cheerfulness bring quick acceptance. Others long to know you better.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): The spotlight is on a career or domestic decision that could cause conflict unless handled tactfully. Be willing to compromise. Even if you do not see immediate results, a financial plan is working.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A loving couple firms up their wedding plans. Keep a record of what is agreed on today. A Sagittarian plays a major role in a business or romantic decision.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Travel is favored. Get on with your work. A promotion or raise is a distinct possibility. Seize a golden financial opportunity. An old friend does you a wonderful favor.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Your relationship with a member of the opposite sex is strengthened by today's events. A chance meeting could have a profound effect on your professional or personal life. Move ahead with confidence.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Recent events have brought your professional and personal lives together in a unique way. Splurge a little: buy a terrific outfit. Someone's thoughtfulness delights you. Spend more money on home repairs.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A letter or message brings welcome news -- perhaps a check or windfall! A romantic mix-up has unexpected results; you begin to see the one you love in a more realistic light.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Financial pressures subside. Smile if someone is overly critical and you win a new friend. An authority figure or older man offers reassurance. Love is not blind! Put your best foot forward.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Lucky you! Friends and relatives stand ready to help out in a crisis. Get out and be seen. Your career receives a nice boost from a Leo. Show your appreciation in tangible ways.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You begin to appreciate the magic of your personality. The friends you make while traveling can be very important. Think twice before going on a shopping spree. Write letters home.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You could easily lose your temper today. Reading or another quiet activity will restore your good humor. Small gatherings are favored over one-on-one encounters this evening.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Quarrels could arise with loved ones. You may have to hunt for someone's good points. Do not hesitate to call an old friend in another city. He/she provides a sympathetic ear.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Travel enjoys highly favorable influences. If your love life has been dull lately, get out and socialize more. Express your ideas creatively. You have special gifts that nobody else shares.

AVOID BEING EMBARRASSED

Both vulnerable. North deals.

	NORTH ♠ K 10 5 3 ♡ J 8 6 3 ◇ A K 5 ♣ 10 3
WEST ♠ 7 6 ♡ 7 ◇ Q 9 6 4 3 2 ♣ Q 9 7 2		EAST ♠ 9 8 2 ♡ A Q 10 9 ◇ 7 ♣ K J 6 5 4
	SOUTH ♠ A Q J 4 ♡ K 5 4 2 ◇ J 10 8 ♣ A 8

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
Pass	1 ♠	Dble	2 ♣
3 ♣	Pass	3 ♠	Pass
4 ♠	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Seven of ♡.

Don't submit tamely to an end play. Sometimes you have the wherewithal to avoid it.

The bidding doesn't find favor with this department. We would prefer a preemptive jump to three clubs with the West hand, and a cue-bid of four clubs rather than unilaterally picking a major with the South hand. The final contract, however, was eminently reasonable.

West elected to lead his singleton heart. East rose with the ace and returned the nine. Declarer played low, West ruffed and shifted to a club. After capturing East's king with the ace, declarer drew two rounds of trumps, cashed the diamond ace and returned to hand with a trump for the diamond finesse. When that succeeded, declarer cashed dummy's remaining diamond winner to reach this position:

	♠ 10 ♡ J 8 ◇ - ♣ 10
♠ - ♡ - ◇ Q ♣ Q 9 7		♠ - ♡ Q 10 ◇ - ♣ J 6
	♠ J ♡ K 5 ◇ - ♣ 8

Declarer exited with dummy's club, and he didn't mind who won the trick. If East took it, he could either lead away from his queen of hearts or give declarer a ruff-sluff; if West wins the club, he is forced to yield a ruff-sluff. Either way, declarer could lose no more tricks.

East could have prevented the end play. At trick two he should return the queen of hearts, and West ruffs away declarer's king. Now when declarer tries the throw-in play in clubs, East can rise with the jack and exit with the ten of hearts, and he must still come to a heart trick for down one.

This contest's just ducky

Associated Press

STUTTGART, Ark. — Quack, quack.

Now, that wasn't so hard, was it?

Hunting enthusiasts at this weekend's Wings Over the Prairie Festival will tell you that duck calling is a bit more involved than that.

The 49th annual festival festival features the world championship duck calling contest, which draws duck callers from across the country. Many of them have won state or regional contests.

Competitors must master several calls: the hail, which calls ducks from afar; the feeding call; the mating call; and "the regular old quack," says Bryan Hancock, 15, of Stuttgart, who first accompanied his brother and father on a duck hunting trip at age 4.

The feeding call is the hardest, he says. "It takes a lot of practice to get your tongue just right," Bryan says. He should know; last year, he won first place in the intermediate contest for duck callers 14 to 16 years old. He also has won regional competitions.

Stuttgart is in one of the continent's few surviving hardwood swamp areas and is a natural wintering place for tens of thousands of mallards and other migratory waterfowl.

The festival, which starts today and ends Saturday night, also includes a duck gumbo cook-off, a duck race 10K run, carnival rides, arts and crafts, and the Grand Prairie Classic Trap Shoot.

Santas take to city streets

NEW YORK (AP) — With 31 shopping days remaining until Christmas, a squadron of sidewalk Santa Clauses hit the streets today in the annual Volunteers of America fund drive.

Between 45 and 50 Santas will take to the street to raise money for Christmas dinners and other holiday comforts for the poor and homeless, old and young, the group announced Thursday. The Santas will get a hearty breakfast of steak and eggs before kicking off the 88th annual Yuletide solicitation drive.

Their breakfast at a midtown steakhouse is to be a prelude to a gathering of the red-suited, white-whiskered sidewalk Santas at Times Squares, from whence they will be dispatched to their stations throughout Manhattan.

The announcement said their last-minute instructions were to include this advice:

"If little children ask why there are so many of you around, just say, you got a lot of helpers this year. And don't promise them Cabbage Patch dolls."

Collins

FRANKFORT, Ky. (AP) — The jagged piece of glass removed from Gov. Martha Layne Collins' intestine during emergency surgery in London may have been ingested during dinner on her trans-Atlantic flight, her husband says.

Mrs. Collins, 47, spent Thanksgiving Day in "a great deal of pain" after 3½ hours of exploratory surgery Wednesday to remove a four-inch section of small intestine containing a glass shard measuring 1.3 inches by 0.2 inches, said Dr. Bill Collins, a dentist.

Collins, who flew to London on Thursday, told his wife's press secretary in Frankfort that surgeons at the private London Clinic believe she swallowed the glass "when she was eating some food because when they removed it there was carrots and beans wrapped around it. And that's what she ate on the plane."

Collins said his wife "looked good" but was groggy from injections for pain, which was expected to continue for two or three days after intestinal surgery. Doctors "expect her to make a full recovery," he said.

Mrs. Collins, in Britain with other governors for the start of a European tour to study acid rain, first complained of pain about eight hours after eating the airline meal.

Collines said he and his wife talked with their children, Steve, 23, and Marla, 21, who spent Thanksgiving with the governor's family in Shelbyville.The governor is expected to spend two weeks in the clinic and another week recuperating in London before returning to Kentucky.

• • •

HOUSTON (AP) — Dr. Michael E. DeBakey, a heart surgeon who pioneered the development of the artificial heart, was in "fine condition" after undergoing surgery for a bleeding ulcer, a hospital spokeswoman said.

The 76-year-old DeBakey spent two hours in an operating room Wednesday night before returning to his hospital bed early Thursday, said Methodist Hospital spokeswoman Susan Russell.

"Dr. DeBakey is in fine condition," Miss Russell said Thursday. "His blood pressure and vital signs are stable. He is awake, alert and talking, and his physicians are delighted with his progress."

During the operation, doctors confirmed an earlier diagnosis of a benign ulcer in the duodenum, the upper section of the intestine that joins the stomach, Miss Russell said.

• • •

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — An attorney for several news organizations says he will not seek release of photographs and a videotape of the scene of David Kennedy's death of a drug overdose.

"My clients just wanted to make absolutely certain these photographs contained nothing that is of legitimate interest to the public," said Martin Reeder, who viewed the tape and the 69 medical examiner's photographs showing all or part of Kennedy's body in the Palm Beach hotel room where he died.

The body of the son of the late Sen. Robert F. Kennedy was found April 25 on the floor of his $250-a-day suite at the Brazilian Court Hotel.

Coleman

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Gary Coleman, the little guy who became a big star on the television comedy series "Diff'rent Strokes," was able to spend Thanksgiving at home less than two weeks after a second kidney transplant.

Coleman, who underwent the operation on Nov. 10, was released from UCLA Medical Center a day earlier than planned so he could "be home with his family for the holidays."

The 16-year-old star of the NBC-TV series was discharged Thursday, said spokesman Larry Goldman. Goldman said Coleman probably will return to the "Diff'rent Strokes" set after Jan. 1.

Coleman was born with a defective bladder, which damaged his kidneys. He underwent his first kidney transplant in Chicago in 1973, when he was 5, but that kidney failed about 1½ years ago.

He entered UCLA Medical Center for a second transplant in February 1983, but the surgery had to be delayed because doctors found an abcess surrounding scar tissue from the 1973 transplant.

• • •

CHICAGO (AP) — Actresses Jennifer Beals of "Flashdance" and Darryl Hannah of "Splash" both were launched by drama teacher Dan Reichel, who says he doesn't believe in stars, even though he keeps turning them out.

"We're getting the reputation of being a star school because of Darryl and Jenny," said Reichel, who has taught at the private Francis W. Parker School on Chicago's North Side for 10 years.

"They're very talented young ladies," Reichel said. "I'm very proud of them. But we don't try to produce stars here.

"What we try to do is give kids a total experience, make them secure in who they are."

• • •

NEWPORT BEACH, Calif. (AP) — Two prototypes of the stainless steel, gull-winged sports car developed by John Z. De Lorean will be auctioned this weekend to pay debts from the bankruptcy of the De Lorean Motor Co.

"These cars were the beginning of the dream and are the only remaining prototypes known to exist," said auctioneer Rick Cole. "With all the interest in the De Lorean saga, I expect these cars to go upwards of $30,000 each, but you can never tell at this event."

The cars were the first models De Lorean used to attract interest and investment in his now-defunct auto company in Northern Ireland. The sports car sold for $26,000 new, and current prices range from $14,000 to $18,000.

• • •

MOSCOW (AP) — Alexei F. Vatchenko, president of the Republic of the Ukraine and one of 15 deputy presidents of the Soviet Union, died Thursday. He was 70. The news agency Tass said Vatchenko died after an illness, but did not specify the exact cause of death.

Former POW and wife find strength through hardship

Copley News Service

He spent seven and one-half years in the brutal "Hanoi Hilton" prisoner of war camp, where torture was so much the order of things that he attempted suicide — chopping his wrists with a shard of window glass — to avoid being forced to tell on fellow prisoners.

She spent seven and one-half years of frustration and despair trying to force the American government to speak out about the flagrant violations of the Geneva Convention prisoner of war agreements being practiced by the North Vietnamese.

His hair turned white, his left leg is frozen stiff and his eyesight is bad from years of being blindfolded in solitary confinement.

Her depressions became so severe during his absence that she sought psychotherapy, and at one point thought she was dying of cancer and told her sons where to bury her.

The Vietnam conflict ordeal of retired Vice Adm. Jim Stockdale and his valiant wife, Sybil, wasn't exactly what this tough, honest couple thought they'd spend the best years of their lives facing.

And yet, when they looked back on it, the authors of "In Love and War," a new book on their experiences published in October by Harper & Row, discovered something astonishing:

THOSE YEARS that called forth every moral instinct, every fiber of integrity, every shred of self-respect, may just end up having been the best years of their lives, after all.

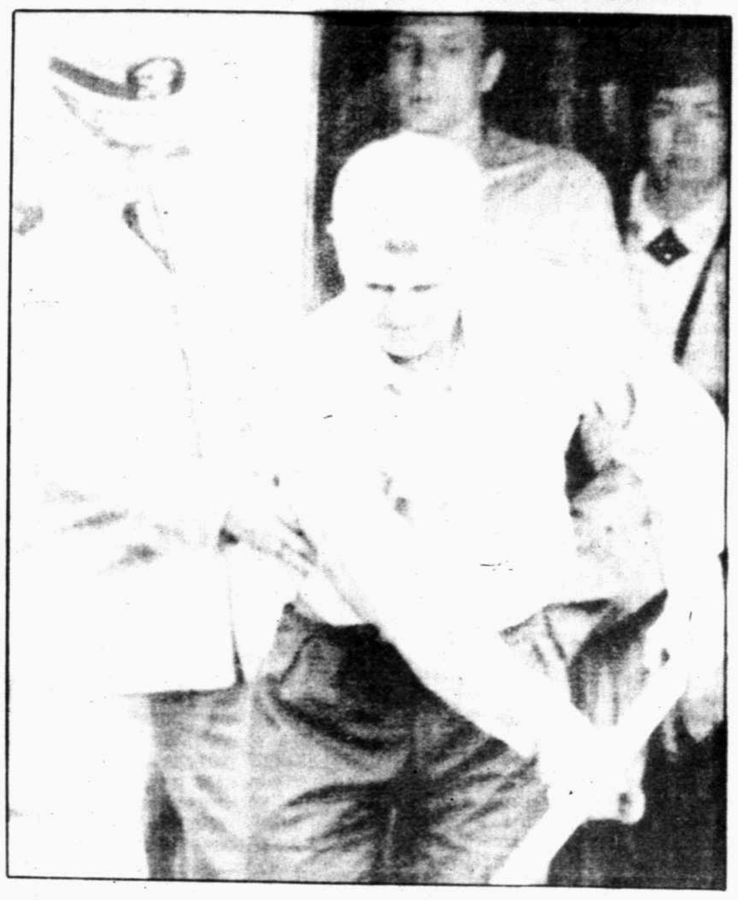
As Jim Stockdale put it in a recent interview: "It's only in crisis that you bring your whole being out and get acquainted with it."

His experiences of capture from Sept. 9, 1965, when he was shot down leading a bombing mission, to the minute he stepped onto the pavement at Miramar Naval Air Station in Southern California on Feb. 15, 1973, resulted in Stockdale being awarded the Medal of Honor, the nation's highest award for bravery, along with 25 other medals.

He returned home one of this country's great heroes, with a Navy inspirational leadership award named after him, was quickly promoted to rear admiral, then vice admiral, and in 1977 became president of the Naval War College in Newport, R.I.

But it was not, ultimately, a satisfying life.

Said Stockdale, a feisty little bantam, "Being a manager and an administrator was a big comedown from being kingpin of a prison underground organization. There, you made decisions of tactics, thrust and counterthrust, life and death, that are really the chores that a vigorous man is designed to perform. To preside over a bureaucratic organization, by comparison for me, was a monstrous bore."



Capt. James B. Stockdale arriving at Clark Air Force Base in the Philippines after his release by the North Vietnamese.

CNS Photos

Sybil and Jim Stockdale as they are today.

LIFE IN PRISON, Stockdale said, "gave me the satisfaction of looking back and saying, 'There I was, and what I decided made the difference.' A lot of people don't have that opportunity. They get on the treadmill and go to retirement and have no opportunity of steering it."

To her surprise, the self-sacrificing Sybil Stockdale found the same was true for her.

"I really think I did the best I could have done," she said, recalling the years when she founded the National League of Families of American Prisoners and Missing in Southeast Asia, met with heads of state, and eventually became the only wife of an active-duty naval officer ever to be awarded the U.S. Navy Department's Distinguished Public Service Award.

But for her, too, "There wasn't any pot of gold at the end of the rainbow.

"I did not find being a flag officer's wife satisfying. That was a real letdown when you found out life in the castle wasn't what you thought it was going to be. All I did was flibbertigibbet around. When Jim traveled, I wasn't invited to go along. I was expected to stay home."

RELIEF CAME for both four years ago when Stockdale accepted an assignment as senior research fellow at the Hoover Institution on War, Revolution and Peace at Stanford University, Stanford, Calif., where the couple now lives.

Writing "In Love and War" became an activity that renewed the Stockdales' fighting spirit and sense of purpose.

The book is full of mind-boggling details about prison life. (At one point, Stockdale spent nights pulling threads from his pajamas into which he would then tie tiny knots, spaced in the rhythm of the "tap code" with which prisoners used connecting cell walls to communicate. He would then hide the string in a bottle under the sink in Bath 6 to be picked up by other prisoners.)

The book documents Sybil's success at mailing Stockdale hidden Navy instructions for sending covert messages. (She sent a beachside photo of a woman who looked like Stockdale's mother, cheerily announcing for the benefit of North Vietnamese intelligence personnel that the woman uncharacteristically appeared in Coronado, Calif., one day announcing that "All she needs is a good soak." Stockdale eventually got the message to wet the photograph, and in so doing, discovered the secret code.)

More important, said Stockdale, "The book is an honest book, and it takes a lot of people to task. ... As one of my colleagues at Hoover said, 'You've upset a lot of outhouses, and there were men in those outhouses.'"

ONE OF THE assertions concerns the Tonkin Gulf incident Aug. 4, 1964, when, Stockdale says, the Johnson administration used false information about an alleged North Vietnamese attack on U.S. destroyers to justify reprisals. The incident led to the famous Tonkin Gulf Resolution of Aug. 7, which became the chief constitutional authorization for escalation of the U.S. military involvement in Vietnam.

The truth, according to Stockdale, however, who flew closely behind the destroyers in question, was that there never was any enemy attack that night. After two hours of shooting rockets at nothing, he was convinced the incident was a "Chinese fire drill" brought about by "spooked operators and spooked equipment."

Throughout his imprisonment in North Vietnam, Stockdale never revealed his belief that the war had been launched "under false pretenses."

Another revelation is Stockdale's criticism of Ambassador-at-Large W. Averell Harriman's decision to keep quiet for two years the information about prisoner tortures that Stockdale had transmitted via secretly coded letters to Sybil. In 1968 and 1969, Harriman was conducting peace negotiations with the North Vietnamese and did not want to damage the talks.

SYBIL FINALLY went to the press with the story in 1968 and in May 1969, along with other POW wives, forced Melvin Laird, secretary of defense to President Richard Nixon, to publicly complain to the North Vietnamese.

Within six months, Hanoi had made a scapegoat of its prison commissar, relieved him of command and began operating generally within the dictates of international law. For Jim Stockdale's last three years in prison, the torture finally stopped.

Well, struggling with students at Stanford now, where Sybil teaches dyslexic youngsters and Jim will lecture this winter on "Moral Dilemmas of War and Peace," is a satisfying life, but it isn't quite the same.

Which is why the Stockdales say that among the lessons they have learned is this important one: Don't flinch at hardship. Nothing is more important than your own self-respect.

Young women alcoholics often 'isolated' drinkers

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Two years ago Barbara T. of San Francisco drank a pint of vodka a day. "My relationships with my family and friends suffered because all I thought about was drinking," said Barbara, who is now 21. "I lost my part-time job, and my college roommates refused to speak to me because their patience had worn thin."

Experts on alcoholism among women in their teens and 20s say that Barbara's experience is not unusual. Pam Miller, administrative director of the Women's Alcoholism Center in San Francisco, said that "a young man who gets drunk frequently is regarded as a good-time Charlie or as a novice" but "a young woman is considered a disgrace."

It has been many years, however, since drinking was regarded as a male prerogative. And today more young women are seeking treatment, Miss Miller said, partly as a result of the liquor advertising that encourages their drinking. Miss Miller said some girls start drinking at the age of 12 and are alcoholics by the time they turn 20.

Younger female alcoholics are less likely than young male alcoholics to attract the attention of employers or college authorities, according to Stephen J. Nelson, director of the Alcohol Concerns Committee of Dartmouth College in Hanover, N.H.

"Younger women tend to be more isolated drinkers," he said. "Men start drinking in bars and then move into isolated settings because they don't want anyone to know how much they drink. On the other hand, young women often start drinking alone, so that sometimes only their roommates or closest friends are aware that they have a problem."

The experts say close relatives are more likely to cover up for younger women, toward whom they feel protective, than they are for younger men who are alcoholics; the men are often simply told to "shape up." Such covering up was done for Barbara by her younger sister, Caroline (they asked that their full names not be used). Caroline used to lend her money, clean her apartment and type her term papers. She also substituted for Barbara at the restaurant where Barbara worked and lied to their parents, saying that some of the bottles they had found in the daughters' shared room belonged to her.

After four years of trying to protect Barbara, Caroline, who is now 20, could no longer deal with the situation and joined Al-Anon, an organization of relatives and friends of alcoholics who try to find solutions to their problems by talking about their experiences. Other members of the group told Caroline she had enabled Barbara to engage in self-destructive behavior by assuming Barbara's responsibilities and that the best way she could help her sister was to stop doing so. The next time Barbara got drunk, she asked Caroline to substitute for her at the restaurant. Caroline refused, and Barbara lost her job.

Barbara accused Caroline of being selfish. Caroline felt hurt. But every time Barbara tried to foist her responsibilities onto her sister, Caroline insisted that Barbara seek professional treatment for her drinking. Six months later, when Barbara was in a hospital emergency room with a broken leg, a physician asked about her drinking habits and she admitted she had a problem. She entered a treatment program for a month and stopped drinking. When the treatment ended, the first person she got in touch with was Caroline. Today the sisters are closer than ever, and Barbara has a job and plans to re-enter college.

Parents are even more likely than brothers and sisters to cover up for younger women who are alcoholics, according to Migs Woodside, president of the Children of Alcoholics Foundation in New York.

Giving money is one man's job

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. (AP) — Jack Burcham has money to give away, that's what he does for a living.

Burcham, manager of the suggestion unit for R.J. Reynolds, gives cash awards for money-saving suggestions made by company employees.

The firm began its suggestion plan in 1954 to save money.

Since that date R.J. Reynolds has awarded more than $1.2 million to its workers.

DEAR ABBY

Walkathon participants spinning their wheels

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: It seems that walkathons are becoming increasingly popular. This has bothered me for a long time, so I decided to get it off my chest.

I cannot see the relationship between charity and how far a person can walk. On the other hand, I could see some relationship if the volunteer walkers were sponsored for performing a meaningful service instead of walking.

For example: How about a "trashathon" to see how many bags of litter the volunteers could pick up off the land? Or how about a "windowathon" to see how many senior citizens' windows could be washed by volunteers? Or "readathons" to see how many pages volunteers could read to nursing home patients whose eyes have failed them? Or how many letters they could write for nursing home patients? Or how many senior citizens' yards could be raked or otherwise cleaned up?

I think you see my point. Why should walkers expend all that energy just to wind up with sore feet and aching muscles from walking until they're ready to drop?

It seems to me that if people want to volunteer their energy for charity, they might as well do it in an activity that's both productive and charitable. — ENERGY CONSCIOUS, GODDARD, KAN.

DEAR CONSCIOUS: Right on!

DEAR ABBY: "Indiana Mason" asked you to reprint the letter about the wife who kept nagging her husband to tell her all the secrets of the Masonic lodge of which he was a new member.

You told him you couldn't accommodate him unless he could pinpoint the year and month that letter appeared in your column.

Well, I am the editor of the Aaron Lodge No. 49, Free and Accepted Masons, in Tucson, Ariz., and I would like permission to run that letter in our newsletter. And I can pinpoint the date it ran: It was Nov. 17, 1968. Gotcha! How about it, Abby? — MORRIS SEGAL, TUCSON, ARIZ.

DEAR MORRIS: You win. Here it is:

DEAR ABBY: My husband recently joined the Masonic lodge. Naturally I was very proud of him, but now it has presented a problem to us.

He tells me that this is a "secret organization" and he has given his word that he will tell no one about the secrets of the lodge.

Abby, in all the 18 years we have been married, we have not kept any secrets from each other. I have cried, begged, threatened and tried everything I could think of to make him tell me these "secrets" of his lodge, but he refuses.

How can an organization that is supposed to be dedicated to such high ideals create a barrier between a man and his wife? I'd appreciate your views. — WIFE OF A MASON

DEAR WIFE: Consider yourself fortunate to be married to a man whose word means something. And quit pestering him to reveal the lodge secrets or you'll lose your Mason by degrees.

DEAR ABBY: "Grandma" says, "Marriage is the price a man pays for sex, and sex is the price a woman pays for marriage."

Well, she's all wet. I say, "Men give love in order to get sex, and women give sex in order to get love. And marriage has nothing to do with it." — ANOTHER GRANDMA

(Every teen-ager should know the truth about drugs, sex and how to be happy. For Abby's booklet, also available in Spanish, send your name and address clearly printed with a check or money order for $2.50 (this includes postage) to: Abby, Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

AT WORK

Lawyer-to-be should practice 'trail and error' job hunt method

By ADELE SCHEELE, Ph.D.

Q. I had been a teacher and married for 12 years before investing in law school. Now I am $30,000 in debt and divorced. I graduated from law school, all right, but I have failed the California Bar Exam two times. I am beside myself and hope you can provide me with some alternatives since you studied successful lawyers in your book, "Skills for Success."

A. If there is any comfort in it, you are not alone. So many women, trapped by a bad marriage and job look to law school to provide a ticket to the big world without considering whether law is right for them. Your case is more extreme. The numbers show that more than 60 percent fail the California Bar and chances diminish to 1 in 9 for passing the second time and 1 in 11 the third. These falling rates are due to being away from school, being overcome with negativism, and having little or no support.

Here are two suggestions about staying in the law. First, try again but this time be smarter about how you study for the exam. Look over what you did poorly in and get specific help in either writing or in the law. Sign up not only for bar review courses but also for a support group of others who have failed before. Meet once a week and share progress notes in studying and find ways to allow people to get out their depression while finding someone to provide motivation. You might choose a buddy to call each day and cheer each other on with studying and with a rededication as to why you are going through this trial, in the real sense of the word.

Or, if you are committed to practicing law and feel you cannot pass the California Bar, find out which other states are less demanding. You will be surprised at the number. Write to their state bar associations for information. And prepare yourself to move after taking and passing another state's exam. Then after three to five years of practicing law somewhere else, you can decide whether to retake the California exam. Chances are you'll have taken a liking to your new community.

The old maxim, "If at first you don't succeed, try, try again" needs amending: "another way each time." Don't waste your years studying and drown in debt. Take another chance. You deserve it.

Q. This past month I've gotten a job with a telecommunications company. The training program is not bad, but the company insists on my taping the telephone survey work so they can tell how I'm doing. I read that it is against the law to do that unless I tell the people I'm calling. So I quit. I'd now like to sue the company and like to know what my chances are.

A. Nil, I think. If you believed what the company was asking you to do was illegal, why didn't you say something while you were working there? You are right; taping both ends of a conversation without telling the other party is illegal, but taping just yours for training purposes is not. If you were sure both were being taped, you might have pointed that out and asked for an alternative approach.

Quitting unceremoniously is not effective and brings up the issue of why you are so angry and looking for trouble. In Shakespeare's words, "The lady doth protest too much, methinks." So take an internal audit and ask yourself what really went wrong. Maybe you hate being so openly evaluated and criticized. If so, then you'd better look for another field besides sales and marketing. Maybe you have to have everything your own way. If so, you might consider getting some therapy because you are only going to hurt yourself most of all.

Keep dieting during holidays

From Staff Reports

To prevent looking like a stuffed turkey after all the holiday celebrating is over, Diet Center Inc. offers the following tips:

— Chew sugarless gum to reduce temptation to "sample" when preparing food. Eat an apple before dinner and drink a large glass of water to take the edge off hunger and allow satisfaction from smaller portions.

— Stick to raw vegetables, such as celery sticks, radishes, peppers and raw cauliflower, if appetizers are necessary.

— Alcohol can set a dieter back three days. Non-alcoholic punch made with fresh or frozen fruits and diet soda is better. After dinner sip ice water with a twist of lime.

— Chicken and fish seasoned with herbs can be a welcome change from traditional ham and turkey. Turkey should be avoided because of the higher sodium and larger amounts of steriods used in fattening them.

— Stuffing can be used with chicken breast or fish instead of turkey. Make stuffing from melba toast or Wasa Crisp Bread seasoned with the usual spices. Dressing should be reasonably moist but not sticky.

— Properly cooked potatoes need not be fattening. Top baked potatos with low fat cottage cheese run through a blender instead of butter or sour cream.

— Use fresh vegetables whenever possible. If not possible, use frozen ones. Canned vegetables may contain large amounts of sodium, sugar or preservatives. Steam cook vegetables to prevent loss of vital nutrients.

— If celebrating in a restaurant select one serving foods desired for sensible eating and dieting. Do not be tempted by the menu.

Single mothers of sons face special problems

Hearst News Service

Between fights to get their sons to clean their rooms, take out the garbage and honor curfews, single mothers of sons are plagued by fears that without a male role model their sons may become homosexuals and that some underlying defect in the single-mother household dooms their sons to depression, school failures and delinquency.

Nonsense, say the authors of "Raising Sons: Practical Strategies for Single Mothers," Joann Ellison Rodgers and Dr. Michael Cataldo. They want to dispel the widespread myth that because boys don't have a live-in male role model they are susceptible to a myriad of ills. They stress that women can be good, loving parents if their goals are clear, if they know what kind of person they want to raise, if they have the skills to guide their efforts.

Rodgers, an award-winning science writer for Hearst newspapers for the past 18 years, recently joined the staff of The Johns Hopkins Medical Institutions. Cataldo, with 15 years of experience in family counseling, is an associate professor of psychology at The Johns Hopkins University.

The 43-year-old Rodgers speaks from experience. Divorced seven years ago, she faces many of the same pressures as other single mothers as she steers a course for her two sons, Adam, 17, and Jared, 15. But the book casts its net beyond her personal experience. She draws upon anecdotes and interviews with 40 well-educated single mothers from the Baltimore-Washington area, as well as from interviews with colleagues across the nation.

The authors see "Raising Sons," which applies long-standing principles of behavioral psychology, as a guidebook to raising caring, responsible independent sons. Unlike a psychoanalytic approach, which is concerned with feelings and motivations, "behavioral parenting" is primarily concerned with setting behavioral goals and modifying behavior to meet them.

"We're not dealing with emotions in this book. We're dealing with what my grandfather used to call 'what is' — what you can see, touch, feel and do," Rodgers says. "All you can do anything about most of the time is the behavior, not the feelings and motivations. When you're a single mother putting out fires all day, holding down a job, trying to get dinner on the table and making sure your kid did his homework, you don't have time to be analytical about it. Is he acting out, not doing well in school, kicking his brother, punching you? Listen to the behavior. What do you want to do about it? Change the behavior and you change what's going on inside.

"It has been been shown in two generations of behavioral research that to get people to change their behavior on the basis of changing their attitudes is almost impossible. I can go out on the street and ask 10 people, 'What's your attitude about cigarette smoking?' They say: It's terrible. Terrible.' And then they'll light up a cigarette."

"Raising Sons" offers a strategy, not a "quick fix," says Rodgers, and applying the principles takes thought and effort. The technique is based on the concept of "basic due" mother-son contracts and several fundamentals.

In talking to single mothers, Rodgers found they worried there weren't enough male role models around, wondered if they should send their sons to all-male schools or camps, and were concerned that asking them to clean floors, cook, iron or sew might make them too feminine. She also found the women were quite sensitive to their sons' need for privacy and security.

"I had mothers tell me, 'I'm really upset because my son doesn't want me to kiss him goodnight anymore and tuck him in,' Rodgers says. "Celebrate, celebrate. When he walks down the aisle one day, do you want him to come home and you tuck him in? That's absurd. You want him to develop these kind of independent things."

Conflict solving family affair

Hearst News Service

Mother: Don't forget to take the garbage cans down to the curb on your way to school this morning.

Son: Why do I have to do it? Why can't you?

Mother: Because we all have our jobs around here. This is yours. You know that.

Son (caustically): Big deal.

Mother: Did you hear me? I said do it now or you can forget the movies this weekend.

Son: All you do is read the paper in the morning.

Mother (enraged): How can you say that? After all I've done for you and your brother.

Son: Great. Now you can lay the guilt trip on me."

Depending on the size and age of the son, an episode like the one above may be accompanied by threats, promises, tantrums, multiple bargining sessions and statements such as "Who cares?" or "You can't make me," say the authors of "Raising Sons: Practical Strategies for Single Mothers." And although all parents are susceptible, single mothers with sons are especially prone to the "who-owes-whom-what" trap.

The way out of this trap, they maintain, is "basic due," which acknowledges that everyone in the family is entitled to certain things, such as meals, clothing, shelter, medical care, some leisure time and privacy. But beyond those basics, "nothing else is 'coming to you' without some investment of resources."

Rodgers and Cataldo offer the following guidelines to implement "basic due."

— Make a list of family resources. The list might include time, strength, agility, outside income from part-time jobs and talents ranging from carpentry to embroidery, as well as income from child support and alimony, support from relatives and institutions — even visits from dad.

— Make a list of responsibilities to oneself — time for work, school, personal hygiene, adequate rest, privacy, recreation and personal relatonshps outside the home.

— Make a list of collective family needs and responsibilities and those needs voiced by all family members, such as household chores, care of the sick or of pets, repairs and maintenance, meal preparation, financial stability, peace and quite, time to be alone, time for the extended family.

— A mother should make a separate list of items that are appropriate for males and females, which provides opportunities for her son to learn what she believes is important in male behavior and female behavior.

— Make a list of rewards and desired activities each family member wants.

— Get everone familiar with the lists. Set aside time to discuss them, add to them.

— Negotiate and agree what the "basic due" of each member is, such as an uninterrupted hour of television, an hour on the telephone without comment or a basic allowance given no matter what.

— Make clear that in order to get more than "basic due," sons as well as mothers will have to deposit some of their resources in the family bank.
