

Bankhead Cotton Control Bill Passed By House Monday

A rigid limitation of ten million bales for this year's cotton crop was set by the House Monday in passing a bill that would impose a tax of fifty percent of its value upon all additional lint ginned above that allotted to each farmer. The bill passed by the top heavy vote of 251 to 114.

The bill was sent to the senate where proponents said they expected early favorable action. It has the approval of both the administration and of the senate agricultural committee.

The measure is designed to prevent an increase in production by fertilizing and other methods under the voluntary acreage reduction program.

The bill, called an emergency measure, has two years of life, but power is granted the president to continue it for a third crop year if necessary.

Upon approval of two-thirds of the growers, the secretary of agriculture is authorized to fix the limit of production in the second and third years.

A tax of fifty percent of the market value is levied on cotton produced in excess of quotas allocated to farmers. These quotas are fixed according to the average production of the farmer over the last five years. The bill was amended to fix the average on four years in case a section had been hit by drought, flood, or similar disaster.

The tax is not applicable until the excess cotton is sold, that portion stored being exempt.

CITY WATER IS GOOD

Dr. Martin, city health officer, states that the city water is now good, but if anyone finds anything wrong with it he will appreciate it if you will let him know about it for he wants to keep informed on the matter.

WHAT CAN I PLANT ON ACRES RENTED TO THE AAA

Can I plant feed on my rented acres in 1934? Yes, if you have not been raising feed on your farm or if you have not been raising enough feed to furnish the farm livestock with plenty of feed.

Can I raise maize on my rented acres? No. You have shown on your contract that in 1932 and 1933 that you had a certain stated number of acres planted to maize. You agree in Section b of Paragraph 4 of the Contract that you "will not increase the total acres planted to such crops in 1934 over that planted in 1932 and 1933. In other words you state that you have been planning about 20 acres or 30 acres or 40 acres, or whatever the number might be in maize in 1932 and 1933. This year you will again plant the stated number of acres in maize on the regular feed land, and you will not increase this number of acres.

Can I sell the maize I raise this year on land not rented to the AAA? The answer would be No. By such action you would be selling the feed raised on the rented acres "indirectly." The contract states that feed raised on the rented acres will not be sold "either directly or indirectly."

What can I do with anything I might produce on my farm in 1934 that is covered by a contract? You may continue the usual farm practices and sales in 1934 and 1935 that you have always followed, but you can not increase any operation or sales over the years in which your land was not covered by a contract. Your usual sales of usual farm products will not be curtailed except in the case of cotton, but you can not substitute products of the rented acres and sell such products.

Why can't I sell the feed raised on the regular feed land? The answer to that question would be the question, "what is to take the place of such feed in 1934 and 1935 if you sell this feed?" If the maize sold is to be replaced by feed raised on the rented acres then you would be violating the contract that would be selling such feed indirectly. However if the land planted to feed should make a bumper crop, and you then should happen to have more maize than you need then I am of the opinion, personal opinion, that it would not be a violation of the contract to sell the excess tonnage of feed. But it will be a violation of the contract to sell any or all of it if you substitute any of the feed from the rented acres for such maize sold.

Then what can I do with the rented acres? You can use them to produce such feeds and feed as the farm has never produced or such feeds and feeds that the farm never has produced adequate supply thereof to make such farm self-sustaining.

Jim Lee and daughter, John Seown, Claud Peterson, Joe Davis and Charley Meek left Sunday for East Texas and Louisiana to visit relatives and friends.

USE OF RENTED ACRES

Mitchell County is renting over 43,500 acres of cotton land to the A A A in 1934. These acres are leased and controlled by the A A A for the period of the contract, and can not be re-rented or re-leased to anyone else. And only under certain conditions can they be used by the farmer. Wisely and legitimately used, these acres may mean much to farmers welfare this year. Indifferently and illegally cropped, these fields may bring losses. If handled with an eye to the future, it is possible that the re-adjustment in farming brought about by the problem of these rented acres may lead to better balanced long-time farm systems.

There are two points to bear in mind in retiring these acres. The first point is to get the acres out of competitive production. A mere shift to other crops or other livestock production is against the interests of the farmers as a whole, and also is just as illegal as contract-writing lawyers can possibly make it.

On the other hand, there are perfectly sound and legitimate uses this land may be put to. The chief of these in the case of cotton land is to use the land for making the home living and feedings can be done under two conditions. One of these being that the farmer has not produced his own food and feed in the past, and the other that the farmer has produced only a part of his food and feed at home and needs the rented acres to complete the job. He cannot, if already producing enough food and feed on his farm, merely shift that production to the retired acres and use the acres thus released to produce commercially in competition with cash feed crop raisers.

The production of feedstuffs on retired acres, especially pastures, is certainly encouraged in the national program, provided this feed is not sold or used directly or indirectly as the basis of increased livestock production. The spirit back of all A A A contracts is to prevent the creation of surpluses. Under no condition is any farmer to increase any farm operation in 1934 over those he has carried on in the past.

If the rented acres are taken this year to establish living at home firmly on every contracting farm, the foundation of a good will be greatly strengthened. If in addition a good many acres are put into an improved pasture adapted to this section and otherwise used as a feedstuff balance to cotton and other cash crops. Texas and Mitchell county farms will be shifting to a sounder basis. Also while all of this is going on many of these acres can be terraced and cover-cropped to fit same to compete again in the future when international trade will so permit.

If there are any farmers or anyone who want to hire help the relief office at Colorado or the local relief office will be glad to assist in the matter.

Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Jacobs and children and Gordon Renfro of Roscoe spent Sunday with A. Callahan and family. Miss Lola Fay Jacobs, who has been visiting here for some time, returned home with them.

The News appreciates such expressions as that handed us last week by Mr. Clyde Bennett regarding some advertising done through our paper for the Baptist Sunday School. Mr. Bennett offered as proof that it pays to advertise the fact that average attendance at the Sunday School had been 150, and the Sunday following the appearance of the advertisement 221 were present for Sunday school and a much larger number for church.

Some business men are skeptical about advertising. They say it don't pay. Such facts as presented above and many more that we could point out are proof enough that it does pay to advertise even for Sunday School and Church.

We grant you that advertising done by some firms is not effective. In some instances it may be the fault of the medium they use but most of the time the fault is with the merchant himself in the way he advertises or that people want to buy. Some merchants might do all kinds of advertising and then not get proper results. The why for not getting results might lie in the service rendered at the store; it might be that a proper display of the merchandise advertised is not made; the merchandise might be of inferior make; or the merchant may misrepresent the article. There are many things that might interfere with proper results of advertising. But those merchants who tell the about their merchandise and use the best methods of merchandising advertising will get the desired results.

We have said before, but with due respect to everybody we are going to say again, that Lorraine is not taking advantage of every opportunity to make it a bigger and better town. She has a better opportunity now than she has ever had to induce more people to trade in Lorraine. Her business men, however, are not cooperating with each other in an effort to realize on the opportunity. The best way ever known for business men of any town to cooperate is through an organization of their own. Things can be done through cooperation that cannot be started individually. Folks let's get together for an organization of some kind. Why not a Lions Club?

This newspaper has always tried to be at the forefront of every progressive movement for the betterment of Lorraine and surrounding community. It has likewise tried to be in the front ranks fighting against those things that are harmful. It will be the policy of the publisher to continue in these lines.

SYNOPSIS

Roberta Antrim, after she had been made to believe that her Uncle Bill had lost his fortune, borrowed money from her lover, Glenn Hackett, and made preparations to leave for Texas to see after her interests there since she is the sole heir of her Uncle Tom, who was killed.

Last week Roberta and her maid arrived at Los Algodones, Texas, and was met there by Bill Dingle, who was foreman of her Uncle's ranch. Don Jaime Higueneas appeared on the scene and later sent his car after Roberta, who was to stay at his ranch. Now go on with the story.

"All those poor, simple people are sheltered under the mantle of his philanthropy. He is the master of his philanthropy. He is the master, the gentle despot whose slightest wish is their law. He is a feudal baron. Roberta, you're trembling on the brink of a great adventure. How I would enjoy having Glenn Hackett meet and know a man like Don Jaime Miguel Higueneas!"

The car rolled across wooden bridges over irrigation canals; and on the borders of a distant field Roberta saw a long queue of teams drawing mowers. Dozens of hay wagons were loading and stacking the new cut alfalfa hay; perhaps a hundred men were raking and piling it. The fragrance of the harvest came pleasantly to the girl's senses and it occurred to her that this valley had once been dry and barren until metamorphosed into a vast garden by men of vision, courage and faith. To her it seemed a big, worthwhile thing to have done something Homeril. There was drama in it-poetry, too. She knew no little man had done this, and that none but a big man could carry on with it. And her impatience to meet Don Jaime Miguel increased.

They swept up through the Indian pueblo and were barked at and pursued by incalculable numbers of dogs of assorted breeds. "If Glenn Hackett were the overlord here he would banish those curs," Roberta thought, "and justify his act on the ground of efficiency and sanitation. But these peones must have their dogs and doubtless Don Jaime realizes that. Let them have dogs-millions of them. What affair is it of his? I dare say he has dogs of his own."

Assorted brown children, in varying degrees of nudity, stared and shouted at them; fat brown women, seated on door-steps or hanging over fences in homely gossip, bowed or curtsied; then they were through the pueblo and ushering up a gentle slope, through an avenue of oleanders, past great white barns and on to the ancestral home of Don Jaime Miguel Higueneas. They halted under a red-tiled porte-cochere, and Mrs. Ganby came out to welcome them. "Don Jaime begged me to present his excuse for his failure to meet you, Miss Antrim," she explained. "He has been working cattle with his men the past two days-they're shipping from Valle Verde station-and Don Jaime has only just gotten home and is busy making himself pretty. And this young lady with you is—"

"My maid, Migon, Mrs. Ganby. "You are fortunate to have brought her with you. Don Jaime has Mexican or Indian maids-I don't know which-to care for the house, but until I came he had nobody to train them and everything has been at sixes and sevens. I've been here about six weeks and am gradually getting order out of chaos. Do you speak Spanish, Miss Antrim?" "Unfortunately, no." "The servants understand nothing else. I am studying the language and am beginning to make myself understood. You have a modern bath with hot and cold water. Dinner is at six."

"Does Don Jaime dress for dinner?" "He puts on his coat, even when we haven't got company," Mrs. Ganby laughed. "In this part of Texas men readily acquire the comfortable shirt-sleeve habit."

"What a lovely room!" Roberta exclaimed, as she entered. It was a large room, and furnished in an old-world elegance. In fact, Roberta, who knew something about such things, was satisfied that every article of furniture in the room had come from Spain and was at least three hundred years old. The windows opened onto the patio, and the scent of flowers filled the room. A cluster of roses occupied a vase on the dressing table.

"Don Jaime plucked these and placed them here himself," Mrs. Ganby informed her. "He was in great distress at having you arrive a day earlier than we expected you. I fear you didn't figure your time-table correctly, Miss Antrim. Yes, this is the nicest room in the house. It was formerly Don Jaime's mother's room. Dinner will be served shortly after you have tidied yourself up a bit. Don't hurry."

that you were perfectly willing to believe the worst of Jim Higgins, while holding Jim Higueneas in a measure of respect."

"I can't believe you're a bad man," Roberta faltered.

"I'm not, I'm a lovely young fellow, and your cussed uncle did give me a flat tire and make a south-paw out of me for a while. And I did bust him, good and plenty, and have no regret for my action. I'm forgiven, am I not?"

Roberta eyed her host coolly. "I'll think it over. I'm sorry you deceived me-even by such innocent and undoubtedly amusing deceit. Your letters were so delightfully neighborly it seemed quite all right to permit myself to be under obligation to you. But if I had known that Jaime Higueneas and not Jim Higgins had killed my uncle I should not now find myself in the position of scolding my host, of regretting my acceptance of his hospitality."

"Say on, Miss Antrim. I would be the last man on earth to use his hospitality as a gag to free-speech."

"My Uncle Bill will think it very, very strange of me to accept the hospitality of my Uncle Tom's th-remover. How shall I explain it to him?"

"Don't," Don Jaime suggested weekly. "I'll do it. Give me Uncle Bill's address and I'll send him a wire tonight. That will give him an opportunity to register his kick tomorrow. If it seems to you then that you ought to leave Valle Verde my car will be at your disposal."

He called Mrs. Ganby and when she entered Bobbie was holding to her hand. "I rode all the way home with Ken, Jimmy," he shouted, "and I'm not tired." Then he saw Roberta and removed his hat. Don Jaime formerly presented the boy, then snapped his fingers at Bobbie and the little chap limped over to him.

"Well, old hoss," Don Jaime greeted him, and scooped the boy up in his great left arm. "We had a fine ride today, didn't we? But you disobeyed orders. Bobbie, I told you to ride home with the cook in the chuck wagon and lead your poney behind. You've overdone it, son. What are we going to do about that eh?"

Robbie looked distressed. "But I felt so good, Jimmy," he began. Don Jaime shook him and set him down. "I put you on the payroll at ten dollars a month. At the end of the month you'll collect nine. You are fined a dollar for disobedience of orders."

The boy threw his arms around Don Jaime's waist and looked up at him almost tearfully. "Are you angry with me, Jimmy?"

"Of course not. Do you think I'm a short sport? But an order's an order and given to be obeyed. You promised to obey me, son, and you must learn that a promise must be kept. Understand? No matter what happens a man must keep his promises. It's costing you a dollar to learn that, and the lesson would be cheap at double the money. Run along now and wash your face and hands and get ready for dinner."

Roberta caught the boy's mother's glance fixed on Don Jaime with a sort of maternal adoration. "That boy requires manhandling," Don Jaime assured her. "That atrophied leg must be built up with exercise, but we must proceed slowly. Good little lad, Robbie, but his dotting ma has given him an imperfect notion of the sacredness of a contractual relation. I fined him a dollar, and that's mighty hard on Robbie, but," he looked down at Mrs. Ganby with his kindly grin. "I have a wire-haired fox terrier pup coming for him tomorrow. If Robbie should ever lose confidence in me I'd be out of luck."

He poured cocktails and served them. "Ladies! To your beautiful eyes," he toasted, and added to Roberta. "And confusion to your old Uncle Bill!" "Idiot!" Roberta gasped, and struggled with laughter. She had suddenly visualized Glenn Hackett standing beside Don Jaime Miguel Higueneas and the comparison was well, Roberta laughed!

To be called an idiot by one's guest is not exactly a compliment, nevertheless it bulken Don Jaime Miguel Higueneas up considerably. "I've never been called an idiot before," he retorted gravely. "Yet, for some strange reason, I feel pleased." "I didn't mean you, of course, Don Jaime," Roberta hastened to assure him. "I was thinking of somebody else just then."

"An idiot?" "On the contrary a very intellectual, splendid gentleman of my acquaintance."

"Well, I'm glad you've pigeon-holed him at least, whoever he is. I don't like him. And I agree with you that he'd never do for Texas. Not flexible enough. What sort of fellow is your Uncle Bill?"

"Oh, Uncle Bill's human-very. He was born and raised in Texas. Spent most of his early life in this state, in fact."

"In what line of endeavor?"

"Cows."

"On a large scale?"

"Oh yes!"

"I should know him or of him, hen. What's his last name?"

"Latham. William B. Latham."

Don Jaime Miguel Higueneas set down his glass and stared at her. "Is Uncle Bill slightly lame in his off hind leg-just a suspicion of a limp?"

"Yes. Do you really know my Uncle Bill?"

"No I do not. But my late father knew him very well. They got into an argument once as to which was the best for the country-the gold standard or Bryan's sixteen-to-one silver idea. Your Uncle Bill was an outcast in Texas, at the time being a Republican. My father, of course, was a Democrat. In their argument they waxed personal, and finally your Uncle Bill called my father a d-d anarchistic greaser. So my father yelled: 'Hurroo! Fought-a-bal-lagh! and hit your Uncle Bill on the nose and canted it five degrees to the southeast. My parent then ran to his horse to get his gun, which he wore in a pommel holster, and on his way there your Uncle Bill shot his hat off. This was getting personal, so my father retaliated by shooting your Uncle Bill in the heel."

"Why, Uncle Bill never told me about that, Don Jaime!"

"Why should he? He came off second best, didn't he? He was drunk at the time and my father was intoxicated, otherwise there would have been two funerals. Father was heartbroken when he sobered up, and sent his lawyer to your Uncle Bill to apologize, so your Uncle Bill accepted the apology and sent back one of his own. When I was a very small boy your uncle sold out his ranch to old man Hobart, whose son, Kenneth, is now my general manager. Does Uncle Bill treat you with civility and decency?"

"Of course he does. He's adorable. He's a love."

"Very well, then, I'll not kill him. You must agree, though, that I did you a real service in bumping off old Uncle Tom."

"Uncle Bill says you did," Roberta admitted. "But then he's biased."

"My father always declared that Uncle Bill was all wool and a yard wide. Dinner's ready, thank God. That stout saddle-colored female who appeared in the door just now says

 "What an extremely old-fashioned young man you are, Don Jaime."

"Please do not call me Don Jaime. The don is really a title of respect, and is used by one's employees or social inferiors—rather like having a pullman porter address you as 'judge' or 'colonel.' You may call me Mr. Higgins, Mr. Higuenes, James, Jimmy or Jaime."

"Very well, Mr. Higuenes," the girl murmured in a very small voice. Then: "Hold everything, mine host. I must run to my room for a handkerchief. I forgot to fetch one."

Don Jaime gazed after her. There was no doubt but that he approved of her mightily. When his gaze shifted it met Mrs. Ganby's.

"How does she impress you?" she queried.

"Miss Antrim is physically beautiful and mentally alert. Yes, she's as smart a young woman as you and I will ever meet. Well raised, well spoiled, haughty, aware of her power over men and just loves to use it. Sound at heart, though, I think."

"Will she be here long, Dor Jaime?"

"I do not know. In all probability she will not be here long enough to please me. In fact if I hadn't run that Bill Dingle sealagw down the road she wouldn't be here now. She's a new note in life to me, but I'm not going to let her know she is."

KITE FLYING DANGEROUS AMONG ELECTRIC WIRES

The danger of flying kites in the vicinity of electric wires was explained today by officials of the Texas Electric Service Company, who are appealing to parents to warn youthful kite-flyers to keep away from wires.

"Several fatal accidents already have occurred this spring as a result of boys flying kites too near electric wires," according to district manager of the electric company and we want to impress on parents and children the dangers of letting kite strings come in contact with wires. Above all, children should be cautioned never to use metal wire in place of string when flying kites, for if the wire should fall across an electric line, the current would flash to the person holding it.

"Whenever kites become entangled in electric wires, don't climb poles or use long sticks to remove it. Call the company and a lineman will be sent to get it down, if possible. Another wise precaution is not to fly kites during a rain, as a wet string is almost as dangerous as a wire should it come in contact with an electric line. Kites with metal frames, or wood frames, braced with wire, should not be used. Employees of the company will visit local schools within the next few days and make a further explanation of the danger of flying kites near electric wires."

PROCLAMATION By the Mayor

The week of April 2 to 8, inclusive, has been designated as Spring Fire Prevention Clean-Up Week.

There are many reasons why the Spring Clean-Up Campaign this year should receive the enthusiastic support of every man, woman and child. First, because the Fire Prevention Clean-Up Campaign this year is of particular importance, as it can be combined with general welfare work, and be of particular benefit to the unemployed. Second because every dollar in property destroyed by fire, which so frequently is the result of "careless" housekeeping in the home and in the average place of business, is a serious drain upon our present economic condition. Third, every citizen should have a wholesome pride in his home city, its streets, playgrounds, parks and buildings. Home and surroundings freshly painted, with well kept lawns and gardens, increase property values and intensify community interest. Cleanliness creates cheer, courage and confidence. Fourth, because in the past ten years entirely too many of our citizens have lost their lives due to carelessness in their daily use of fire, and the preservation of human life is an important matter.

Now, Therefore, I, Alonzo Phillips, Mayor of the city of Loraine, do hereby designate the week of April 2 to 8, inclusive, as Spring Clean-Up Week and most respectfully call upon all departments of the city, the Chamber of Commerce, Civic Clubs, Patriotic Clubs and our people in general, to take an active part in this Clean-Up Campaign.

I further designate the Fire Marshal and Fire Chief as a committee of two to work with the city officials in selecting active committee to carry on this campaign and ask the cooperation of all of our people in this enterprising campaign for a clean city.

In Testimony Whereof, I here-to sign my name and seal of office, this the 19 day of March, 1934.

Alonzo Phillips, Mayor
Loraine Texas
