Bush seeks budget support

President says 'plan realistic one'

MANCHESTER, N.H. (AP) — President Bush opened a campaign for public support of his new budget today by returning to the state that propelled him to his White House victory and declared, "our plan is a realistic one."

Bush

"It is a budget plan that will work, but not with business as usual," Bush said in a speech to the Business and Industry Association of New Hampshire. Meanwhile, Bush's budget director, Richard G. Darman, prepared for talks with congressional leaders on the $1.16 trillion plan the administration unveiled last week.

Bush mixed words of backing for that plan — already encountering Democratic resistance in Congress — with a sentimental thank you to the state that almost one year ago gave him his first victory in the race for the Republican presidential nomination.

"It's no coincidence that my very first stop is here in New Hampshire," said Bush, who came here after a weekend of relaxation at his seacoast retreat in Maine.

His speech was the first in what aides said would be a series of talks around the country as the administration presses for agreement with Congress on spending cuts.

Bush scored a decisive comeback win in New Hampshire's Feb. 16, 1988, primary election that restored momentum that had been halted with a defeat in the Iowa caucuses.

"The steadfast support I received gave me the chance to pick myself up off the canvas. And the rest, as they say, is history."

"A year ago about this time I came to New Hampshire under quite different circumstances. I had just lost in Iowa. I was up at 6:50 a.m., my first morning here, holding my coffee in one hand and shaking the hands of factory workers with the other.

"The columnists had begun to write my political obituary."

Bush's speech highlighted the major features of his budget plan, which calls for restraint in defense spending with a call for increases in education, aid to the homeless, child care and environmental cleanup.

However, Bush's plan has already been criticized by congressional Democratic leaders for failing to specify what programs would be cut to pay for new humanitarian initiatives.

Swaggart says ministry needs funds

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) —

Evangelist Jimmy Swaggart, who admits he sinned but accuses "pornographers" of trying to ruin him, says his once-thriving TV ministry will end this month unless he receives an influx of donations.

"If for whatever reason this week, you close the door in my face or you pass me by...Feb. 26 will be the final telecast for this ministry," Swaggart said in his television program distributed for broadcast this weekend.

"You are making a choice today, a choice between the pornographers that are working more diligently than you will ever know...or it's us. It's either the devil or darkness or it's God and light," Swaggart said.

Swaggart did not give any figures of how much money he needed. A guard who answered the phone Sunday said he could not contact Swaggart.

He has not released any hard figures on the ministry's financial problems.

Police say it's possible vehicle shootings copycat

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

The weekend shootings of dozens of vehicles may be a copycat incident of a spree last September that left more than 200 windows smashed, a police spokesman said today.

"That is always a possibility," Cpl. Jim White said when asked about the "copycat" scenario. "We don't think the two are related."

White said detectives would question three men indicted in the Sept. 12, 1988 incident "as a matter of routine."

The latest shootings apparently began before midnight Friday. One of the first reports police received was at 12:14 a.m. Saturday, when a resident at 3307 Durant Drive called. Other reports quickly followed, and by early today numbered about 30 separate reports, White said.

One business, Performance Honda, 440 W. Wall Ave., was also damaged in the spree, according to reports.

The broken windows were found in a wide area of town, roughly north of Wall Avenue and west of Midkiff Road, according to police. At least two of the reports were made by residents who live north of Loop 250.

Two shootings were reported on the same street twice, in the 2400 and 3800 block of West Kansas Avenue, and the 2600 and 2300 block of Terrace Avenue, according to police.

The shootings on Terrace were reported less than 30 minutes apart. At least one motor home also was damaged, according to police.

Although some of the damaged vehicles look like windows were broken with a baseball bat or heavy object, they likely were shot out, White said.

"Right now we are thinking it was possibly a BB gun," he said.

On Sept. 20, 1988, three Midland men were charged with felony criminal mischief for the shootings a week earlier. According to police, the trio, each armed with a BB rifle, were going hunting but instead began shooting at cars.

Hearing set on security safeguards in North trial

WASHINGTON (AP) — The judge in Oliver North's Iran-Contra trial today sent the jury home and scheduled a hearing for Tuesday on a proposed agreement for additional national security safeguards that could allow the case to go forward.

U.S. District Judge Gerhard A. Gesell indicated he is in no hurry to rush to trial, referring to the administrative stay issued at the Justice Department's request Sunday by Chief Justice William Rehnquist.

The full Supreme Court on Friday is to consider the Justice Department's request to delay the trial.

"You're still jurors in this case, of course," Gesell told the panel. "You will be advised as soon as the court knows whether the case is allowed to go forward or not. I regret the inconvenience this will cause you."

Hours after Rehnquist issued the stay, the Justice Department announced it had reached an agreement with independent counsel Lawrence Walsh to seek additional controls from Gesell designed to protect the government against disclosure of sensitive national security material by North, a former White House aide.

The Justice Department said it will ask that Rehnquist's stay be vacated immediately if Gesell approves the agreement.

Gesell scheduled arguments on the agreement for 1:30 p.m. Tuesday. He told the jurors to "call in (Tuesday) after 4" to see whether they are to be given a reporting time for court.

The judge and lawyers for North and the independent counsel's office, which is handling the prosecution, then went into a closed session to discuss an undisclosed matter touching on national security.

Walsh and the Justice Department had been in conflict since last Wednesday, when the department began seeking an order that would impose tight restrictions on classified material that North wanted to present at trial.

Gesell rejected the proposal and accepted more moderate controls offered by Walsh, who said he wanted to proceed with the trial immediately. On Thursday, the Justice Department went to court to try to delay the trial.

The department said it had concluded, and that Walsh concurred, that "the trial could not go forward without an additional protective order."

Walsh had initially opposed further restrictions on evidence in the trial, but the department had countered with a threat to invoke the Classified Information Procedures Act, which gives the attorney general broad power to prevent disclosures. Such a move could make any trial of North impossible because his lawyers argue they could not present an adequate defense.

MISD board to consider boundary plan for Bush school

From Staff Reports

Midland school board members Tuesday will consider a proposed boundary plan for the yet-to-be built George Bush Elementary School and an exception to the boundary rule for certain Rusk and Parker students affected by the new lines.

According to the Midland Independent School District board meeting agenda, the proposed boundary begins at the intersection of An-draws Highway and Midland Drive and proceeds north to Wadley Avenue.

The line would travel west on Wadley Avenue to Mark Lane and be drawn north to Fairmont Drive. Continuing east on Fairmont Drive, the boundary would extend to the extension of the alley between Fairmont Drive and Westmont Court.

From that area, the boundary would be drawn north on the alley to Loop 250 and continue west on the Loop to Andrews Highway. At that intersection, the boundary would travel east to the intersection of the highway and Midland Drive.

MISD staff members said the boundary would relieve Parker Elementary by about 30 students for the 1989-90 school year and Rusk Elementary by about 270 students in kindergarten through the third grade.

Projection figures show that about 304 students in grades kindergarten through three will attend Bush next year. Also next year, the number of students attending Parker is estimated at 631 and Rusk is estimated at 587.

Bush is to become a part of the Lamar-Rusk-Crockett cluster. Students in the Bush boundary would attend that school until third grade while fourth-grade students would attend Lamar, fifth-grade students would attend Rusk and sixth-grade students would attend Crockett.

Staff members will also propose, however, a "grandfather" clause for changes to the current Rusk and Parker boundaries brought on by the inclusion of the Bush boundary.

Students enrolled in the second grade at Parker and Rusk and in the third grade at Parker during this school year will have the option to remain in that school and cluster until they finish the sixth grade.

In addition, those students' younger siblings already enrolled in school will have the option of attending the same school as their older brother or sister.

MISD officials say this clause is intended to be a one-time option and that students wishing to take part in the change would receive approval by the end of this school year.

School board members will hear the boundary proposals Tuesday in the afternoon session of the meeting at administration headquarters at 702 North N St.

Italian town wants saint to be its valentine

TERNI, Italy (AP) — Led by their Communist mayor, the people of Terni have launched a crusade to reclaim St. Valentine, the patron saint of lovers who has attained greater fame abroad than in his native country.

On Sunday, the city in central Italy's Umbria region launched a yearly award ceremony dedicated to acts of love around the world. Next year, it plans to offer free honeymoons to newlyweds.

This steel town wants its decapitated 3rd century bishop to really be its valentine.

The Roman Catholic saint for lovers has been as much a mixture of myth, religion and tradition as Easter bunnies or St. Nicholas, who eventually became a jolly red-suited Santa Claus.

The Vatican Congregation for the Causes of Saints says 17 Valentines are listed in the official encyclopedia of saints — including ones from Italy, France, Spain, and Germany.

WEATHER SUMMARY

Cooler weather forecast

From Staff and Wire Reports

Clear skies and cooler temperatures are in the forecast for tonight, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport. Winds will be westerly 5-10 mph.

Tuesday will be sunny with the high near 60 and winds continuing westerly 10-20 mph.

Sunday's high of 59 was 27 degrees cooler than the record high of 86 set for that date in 1962. The overnight low of 43 was 30 degrees warmer than the record low of 13 set for this date in 1963.

STATE

Dense fog formed over western and southeastern parts of the state early today as a warm front that stretched across central Texas Sunday retreated northward.

Dense fog advisories were posted for the South Plains, Permian Basin, Concho Valley, Abilene and at Galveston along the upper Gulf coast.

Scattered light rainshowers developed over the western part of the Red River valley from Childress to Wichita Falls. Some light drizzle fell in other parts of North and South Texas.

Otherwise, skies were clear over Far West Texas and the northern part of the Panhandle while cloudy skies covered the rest of the state.

The frontal system that began moving northward during the night was just about stationary as it extended from the red river near Sherman across north central Texas into the Davis mountains near Marfa this morning.

Warm and moist air had spread northward across Texas from the Gulf and covered most of the area south of the front.

NATION

Heavy snow blanketed much of the nation's midsection today as dry conditions prevailed in the West and along the East Coast.

Southerly winds across the Mississippi Valley and eastern parts of the Great Plains brought rapid weather changes after several days of dry weather. In Iowa, 4 inches of snow fell in two hours at Des Moines, and Ottumwa and Cedar reported snow at the rate of 2 inches an hour.

In southeast Nebraska, 5 inches of snow fell at Lincoln and 4 inches at Omaha. One to 4 inches fell from central Kansas across the northeast corner of Kansas to extreme northern Missouri. Snow was moving into central and northern Illinois this morning, with up to 6 inches expected in some areas.

A mixture of snow, sleet and rain moved across central Missouri and southern Illinois, and into western Kentucky and southwest Indiana.

Light snow fell today in parts of South Dakota, North Dakota and Minnesota, while thunderstorms struck northeast Arkansas and rain extended across parts of Louisiana, Tennessee and Kentucky.

Today's forecast called for showers and thunderstorms from eastern parts of the southern Plains across the lower and middle Mississippi Valley, and the Tennessee and Ohio valleys to the lower Great Lakes; snow from northern Michigan across much of Wisconsin to northern Illinois, and snow ending in Iowa and Minnesota; light snow in North Dakota, and from the northern and central Rockies to the central and southern Plateau; and strong, gusty winds across much of the northern Plains.

Midland statistics

Tonight: Clear, low in the middle 30s, westerly winds 5-10 mph. Tuesday: Sunny, high near 60, westerly winds 10-20 mph.

Panel says institutions fail to discourage sloppy research

WASHINGTON (AP) — An "excessively permissive" attitude by institutions tends to allow careless and sometimes even fraudulent medical research, a national Institute of Medicine committee reported today.

The committee, empaneled to study misconduct in biomedical research, said better research standards and systematic ways of investigating laboratory irresponsibility are needed.

"Although the committee believes that serious misconduct in science is rare, it concludes that institutions fail to detect and correct early deviant behavior primarily because of an excessively permissive research environment that tolerates careless practices," the committee report said.

Funding pressures and an overemphasis on publication of research in scientific journals also encourage what the committee called "substandard practices."

The Institute of Medicine, one of the National Institutes of Health, organized the 17-member committee in 1987 after a series of fraudulent and careless laboratory reports had come to light. The committee was charged with developing proposals to strengthen professional standards in the nation's federal and academic laboratories.

Few institutions, the report said, have explicit research guidelines and this allows the system "to tolerate substandard activities by a small number of individual investigators who fail to observe generally accepted practices."

The committee said that in the past decade there have been incidents of serious research misconduct at Massachusetts General Hospital, Yale University, Cornell University, Harvard Medical School and Boston University.

These incidents, the study said, "raised new questions about the ability of academic institutions to conduct objective investigations of misconduct by their own faculty members or research staff."

A system of peer review and replication of research findings has been a standard way to guard against science error in the past, the committee said. But it said this system has failed because findings often aren't checked by replication in other laboratories, and the peer review system depends on trust which can be misplaced.

The committee noted that researchers are pressured to build up a list of publications to which they have contributed. Academic advancement and salary increases can depend upon publications.

Media General-AP Poll

Do you approve or disapprove of the United States holding talks with the Palestine Liberation Organization?

Do you believe that the PLO has given up terrorism, or do you think it's only saying that for political advantage?

Based on interviews with 1,162 adults. The poll has a three-point margin of error.

Public disbelieves PLO, favors talks, poll shows

NEW YORK (AP) — Americans widely disbelieve the Palestine Liberation Organization's claim to have abandoned terrorism but favor the U.S. dialogue with the PLO and the establishment of a Palestinian state, a poll shows.

Nearly seven in 10 respondents to a Media General-Associated Press survey approved of the United States holding talks with the PLO, and six in 10 said Israel should follow suit.

But just 6 percent of the 1,162 adults said they believed the PLO's recent renunciation of terrorism, and 74 percent said they thought the group only made that claim for political gain. The rest were unsure.

The poll indicated other misgivings about the PLO. Respondents were split on whether the organization would coexist with Israel or still seek to destroy it, regardless of its recognition of the Jewish state in December.

Still, the public endorsed the basic tenet of the Palestinian cause: Sixty-two percent said the Palestinians should have their own country. Eleven percent disagreed. Twenty-seven percent had no opinion.

The national poll was conducted Jan. 4-12, the month after PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat said his group was recognizing Israel and renouncing terrorism. The United States responded to Arafat's move by opening its first official talks with the PLO.

Israel rejected the PLO declarations as a ploy and continued its refusal to negotiate with the organization. The poll found acceptance of that position: Although most favored such talks, 67 percent said the United States should not try to force Israel to talk with the PLO.

But the survey also found some frustration with Israel's supporters in the United States: 35 percent said they had too much influence on U.S. policy. Twenty percent said pro-Palestinian groups had too much influence.

Roughly a quarter of the respondents had no view on many of the questions, reflecting the distance of Mideast issues from the daily concerns of many Americans. Significantly more men expressed opinions than did women.

Better-educated respondents were more likely to favor dealings with the PLO. While 67 percent overall approved of U.S.-PLO talks.

Teens' beliefs about alcohol may predict problem drinking

NEW YORK (AP) — A questionnaire assessing beliefs about alcohol can identify adolescents who are likely to drink excessively within a year of taking the survey, a study says.

The 90-item test also may indicate what steps would best help each individual avoid problem drinking, researchers said.

Junior high school students who believed alcohol could help them think or improve their physical coordination tended to be at particular risk, said Mark Goldman, a psychology professor at the University of South Florida in Tampa.

His study in this month's Journal of Consulting and Clinical Psychology is the first demonstration that a measure of psychological dependency can predict later alcohol use and tendencies toward problem drinking, said G. Alan Marlatt, director of the Addictive Behaviors Research Center at the University of Washington in Seattle.

"It's certainly a very exciting development," he said.

Peter Nathan, director of the Rutgers-affiliated Center of Alcohol Studies in Piscataway, N.J., said the study represents an advance in identifying "what looks like a rather important difference" that distinguishes early adolescents at risk of an alcohol problem.

The predictions were not perfect, but Nathan said their accuracy was "pretty impressive."

Since writing the paper, Goldman said, researchers have found the questionnaire also indicates risk of problem drinking within two years and possibly three.

The questionnaire measured how strongly students believed that alcohol could help them relax, be sexier, think better, enjoy social gatherings more, or perform better socially or athletically.

Prior research shows that such expectations strongly affect the way a person behaves after drinking, quite apart from chemical effects of alcohol, Goldman said.

The research followed the theory that "the stronger they believe that alcohol has those positive effects, the more at risk they are for problem drinking," said Goldman.

But if such beliefs can be undermined early, it might reduce the attractiveness of alcohol and prevent problem drinking, he said. The questionnaire may help by pinpointing the key beliefs that put individual teenagers at risk, he said.

For example, a teen who looks to alcohol for relaxation can be taught other methods, or perhaps stress in his life can be removed, Goldman said.

The most predictive part of the questionnaire measured the belief that alcohol improves social performance.

"It's what you'd expect an adolescent to find important, which is how you get along in the social scene," Goldman said.

Another risky belief was that alcohol "makes you think better and maybe perform better" physically, he said. "Believe it or not, these kids think you might drive better under the influence of alcohol. Those are the kids who are really seriously at risk."

The researchers gave the questionnaire and a confidential survey on drinking to 671 students in seventh and eighth grades, ages 11 to 14. A year later, the researchers were able to collect data on the drinking habits of 637 of them.

In that intervening year, the percentage of students who got drunk at least twice jumped from 10 percent to 25 percent. And while 7 percent said in the first survey that they had consumed 12 beers or more at a single sitting, the number rose to 20 percent a year later.

Those measures and others such as alcohol-related fights, crimes and trouble at home or school were used to define problem drinking. Analysis showed that the incidence of problem drinking by the students was significantly related to how they had answered the questionnaire a year earlier.

The relationship also appeared for the 550 of the 637 students who had not reported any sign of problem drinking at the beginning of the year.

No Change? No Problem!

Placing your 0+ calls with your Calling Card costs less than other 0+ calls.

"0" Plus.

Some people still think, when they're out of change for the pay phone, they're out of luck. Which is unfortunate. Because there's 0+ dialing, from Southwestern Bell Telephone. It will cost more, but 0+ dialing lets you make all the local calls you want from the pay phone without any coins. Just use your calling card. Or, bill to another number, call collect or person-to-person.

So the next time you need to make a call but you don't have spare change, dial 0+ the number you want.

0+ dialing. Another service from Southwestern Bell Telephone.

Consecration of woman bishop called turning point in church

BOSTON (AP) — Religious leaders say there's no turning back from women in the Episcopal Church hierarchy now that a 2,000-year, all-male bastion has been broken by the Rev. Barbara C. Harris' consecration as a bishop.

Presiding Bishop Edmond Lee Browning, spiritual leader of the Episcopal Church, said Harris' consecration Saturday "means that this church is realizing the wholeness of ministry, the totality of ministry, and I'm sure that others will be following Barbara in the days ahead."

The Rev. I. Carter Heyward, one of 11 women "illegally" ordained in a 1974 service in Philadelphia that paved the way for the Episcopal Church's approval of women clergy two years later, said Harris' consecration was "a major step" for the denomination.

"I think we still have a long way to go," she added. "My experience in the Episcopal Church is that it really does take some pushing, and I doubt that that's over."

The ceremony made Harris the first woman bishop in the three denominations that believe in apostolic succession, that church leadership can be traced to the apostles commissioned by Jesus. The denominations are the Roman Catholic, Eastern Orthodox and Anglican churches. The Episcopal church is one of 28 national branches of the Anglican communion.

In her first sermon as a bishop, Harris told 400 worshippers at the Cathedral Church of St. Paul on Sunday to resist the temptation to shut their eyes to issues such as racism and AIDS.

"If Jesus had not taken risks, we would not be saved," said Harris, who became a priest in 1980 in Philadelphia. "If the Diocese of Massachusetts had decided to play it safe, I would not be here wearing a broche and a chimere and a pectoral cross."

While nearly all of the more than 8,000 people who packed the convention center shouted their approval, others fought to the end to preserve the all-male tradition.

Bishop Barbara Harris embraces Charles Coleman, 12, of Dorchester, Mass., after giving her first sermon Sunday in Boston since being ordained as bishop in the Episcopal Church.

John Jamieson, representing a group of conservative Episcopalians called the Prayer Book Society, said her "pretended consecration" holds church laws "in contempt."

The Rev. James Hopkinson Cupit Jr. of New York City said the election of a woman may represent an "intractable impediment" to relations with other the Roman Catholic and Eastern Orthodox churches.

The election of the 58-year-old Harris as suffragan, or assistant bishop, of the Episcopal Diocese of Massachusetts in September has been the church's most controversial one in recent years.

In addition to being the first woman bishop, Harris, who is black, is thought to be the first bishop elected after a divorce and the first U.S. bishop, at least in modern times, to lack both a seminary degree and an undergraduate college degree. She studied theology through correspondence courses and with tutors, and worked in corporate public relations.

While approval of a locally elected bishop is usually perfunctory for the national church, Harris barely won approval from the majority of standing committees and head bishops of the 118 dioceses. By Saturday, only 61 standing committees and 66 bishops had given their consent.

Tulsa seeks to change at-large election charter

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — Every few months, David Breed leads a bus with white people, many of whom have lived in Tulsa all their lives, and takes them on a tour of the city's northside.

This is the other Tulsa, where most of the city's poorest families live, most of the city's low-income housing is located, much of the city's crime occurs and many of the city's vacant buildings crumble under neglect.

This is also where most of the city's blacks live.

"The tour is really designed to take people out of their way to show them a part of Tulsa they otherwise would never see," said Breed, who is a white volunteer in several groups working on problems in north Tulsa. "These problems really do exist here."

City officials and black leaders hope a proposed change in government that residents will vote on Tuesday will open City Hall to north-side blacks for the first time and begin redressing some of those problems.

Tulsa was once referred to as a "promised land" by freed slaves escaping the South, but a 1987 civil rights lawsuit filed by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People claims the city has discriminated against blacks for decades.

The city's 1908 charter established a commission form of government, with commissioners elected at-large. A black from the northside has never been elected.

The lawsuit, filed after the NAACP won a similar case against officials in Springfield, Ill., claims Tulsa's 42,000 blacks are ignored in this predominantly white city of 380,000. That lawsuit could become moot if voters approve a new charter calling for a stronger and a council with members drawn from nine districts, including one majority black district.

Quakes shake California

BERKELEY, Calif. (AP) — A mild earthquake early today shook a wide area of San Francisco, the sixth tremor in Northern California within 24 hours, officials said.

No damage or injuries were immediately reported from the quakes, whose magnitudes ranged from 2.4 to 3.0 on the Richter scale.

The sixth quake struck at 12:01 a.m. and had a magnitude of 3.0 on the Richter scale, according to the United States Geological Survey's National Earthquake Information Center in Golden, Colo.

It was centered west of the Golden Gate Bridge, the same area as two earlier ones, said seismologist Anthony Lomax of the University of California Seismology Station.

"We had several calls from all over the city but so far no reports of damage," said a San Francisco police dispatcher who declined to give his name.

The first quake, which measured 2.7 on the Richter scale, struck at 11:49 a.m. Sunday and was centered about five miles west of the bridge.

Thousands Iranians rally

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Thousands of Iranian emigrants marking the 10th anniversary of the Islamic revolution shouted "Death to Khomeini" and cheered as the shah's son's called for restoration of the Peacock Throne.

"This is the day to honor the memory of all our compatriots who lost their lives in war, in prisons and in the torture chambers of this blood-thirsty regime," Prince Reza Pahlavi told the crowd of about 12,000.

The rally inside the Los Angeles Sports Arena came a day after a massive demonstration in Tehran, Iran, where up to 4 million people celebrated Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's leadership, who overthrew the U.S.-backed Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi, and chanted "Death to America."

The pro-shah rally was staged in Los Angeles because the city has the largest Iranian population outside Iran, with an estimated 500,000 expatriates living here. Several thousand Iranians marched through central London on Saturday to support the prince's restoration.

Pakistanis riot at U.S. cultural center

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — Helmeted police guarded an American cultural center today after five people were killed and 83 hurt in a riot by Moslem fundamentalists against U.S. publication of a book they consider blasphemous.

Prime Minister Benazir Bhutto ordered a probe into the Sunday's storming by nearly 3,000 Moslem fundamentalists of the building housing the U.S. Information Center, official media reported.

A U.S. official said the center's staff members were traumatized, and the U.S. Embassy urged "extreme caution" for Americans living in the capital.

Police repeatedly fired semi-automatic weapons, rifles and shotguns at charging protesters who burned an American flag, yelled "God is great!" and hurled rocks and bricks during three hours of fierce clashes. All of the dead suffered gunshot wounds, hospital officials said on condition of anonymity. Hospitals reported 83 injuries and police said they arrested at least 65 protesters.

The protesters had tried to march to the American Center in central Islamabad to demand the United States ban "The Satanic Verses," an acclaimed novel by Salman Rushdie.

Pakistan banned the novel on grounds it offends Moslems by suggesting the prophet Mohammed was fallible. India also banned the novel, which has been published in the West.

Protesters set several small fires and burned effigies representing the Indian-born Rushdie and the United States.

"Hang Salman Rushdie!" one man yelled.

Three U.S. diplomats and 15 Pakistanis employed at the center were in the building at the time but were not hurt, U.S. diplomats said.

"The staff is traumatized," said a

U.S. diplomat at the center, which houses a public library and U.S. Information Service offices. The center and the U.S.-run International School of Islamabad were closed today.

Officials said the center's library did not stock editions of Rushdie's book as protesters alleged.

The U.S. Embassy advised Americans in the capital to exercise "extreme caution" in the wake of the disturbance.

Blue-uniformed police were deployed by the hundreds in Islamabad and adjacent Rawalpindi. Grieving relatives buried the dead and mosques held prayer services.

Ms. Bhutto, on an official visit to China, ordered an investigation of the incident, official Pakistani media said.

"My heart is bleeding for Pakistanis who fell victims to the conspiracy of forces which are bent upon weakening the democratic government on the one hand and on the other hand for those who lost their lives due to an unwise administrative action," the official news agency, Associated Press of Pakistan, quoted her as saying.

The official English-language newspaper, the Pakistan Times, questioned the motive of the protesters.

"It is hard to see how (the United States) became the prime object of mob anger in the present case when both the author and the first publication of the book belonged elsewhere," an editorial said.

Rushdie lives in London where "The Satanic Verses" was first published in September.

The novel takes its name from the verses the Prophet Mohammad removed from Islam's holy book, the Koran, on grounds they were inspired by Satan.

British crowd gets glimpse of North American bird

LONDON (AP) — More than 2,000 people invaded a housing development to see a little American bird, the first golden winged warbler recorded in Europe.

At one point Sunday, police with bullhorns had to control the crowd as the birdwatchers, equipped with binoculars, telescopes and cameras, strained for a glimpse of the warbler at Maidstone, Kent, 40 miles south-east of London.

Some of the visitors were from Belgium and the Netherlands.

Ian Mills, a British visitor who traveled 270 miles to be there, said, "I've been all over the country to look at rare birds and a crowd of a few hundred is not unusual but I've never seen anything like this."

"There were well over 2,000 people present when I was there and at times roads were choked and traffic could hardly move," he said.

"This must have been the largest gathering of birdwatchers to look at one bird there has ever been," said Richard Millington, a spokesman for the Birdline telephone information service, whose report about the warbler drew the crowds.

The warbler is thought to have been blown across the Atlantic in the fall of 1988 while migrating from its breeding territory in the north-eastern United States and southeast Canada to Colombia and Guatemala for the winter.

Cultural center opens

MOSCOW (NYT) — Elie Wiesel looked out at an audience of Jews from Kiev, Tbilisi, Leningrad, and Moscow — and from Jewish organizations around the world — as he inaugurated the first officially approved Jewish cultural center in the Soviet Union. As he looked out at the faces in the audience he recalled his first visit to Jews in the Soviet Union.

"If anyone would have told me then that I would be here, 25 years or so later," he said Sunday night, "I would not have believed it. But that means I did not have enough faith in you."

The opening of the center comes at a time when official Soviet policy toward Jews and Israel appears to be changing, with a rise in the rate of emigration and an exchange of Soviet and Israeli consular delegations for the first time since Moscow severed diplomatic relations in 1967.

Italians pray for rain

ROME (AP) — Thousands of people prayed for rain in northern Italian churches and some parched communities planned religious processions, hoping to bring an end to one of the worst droughts in years.

At 1,300 Roman Catholic churches in the diocese of Milan on Sunday, priests invoked "the rain that restores the earth and air," according to the diocese.

Churchgoers in Bergamo and Genoa have also been praying for rain as sunny, dry weather threatens crops and left ski slopes bare.

Several parishes in small towns south of Milan were planning processions along the Adda river if rain did not arrive in the next few days, the Italian news agency ANSA reported Sunday.

Italy has received only half the precipitation it usually gets in the September-January period. The Milan area has had one rain shower since November 24, while Genoa has been dry for four months.

The lack of rain has prompted limits on private water use and contributed to brush fires that have scorched thousands of acres in northern Italy.

Concorde porthole cracks

PARIS (AP) — A supersonic Concorde jet en route to New York with 69 passengers returned to Paris after cracks appeared in a porthole as the plane was about halfway across the Atlantic, Air France said today.

Air France Flight 001 was at 59,000 feet and had just reached supersonic speed on Sunday when the cracks were noticed at the top of the outermost of four glass plates in one porthole, said Air France spokesman Laurent Kressman.

After the crack was noticed 90 minutes into the 3 hour flight, the pilot slowed the jet, dropped to 32,000 feet and returned to Charles de Gaulle airport, he said.

Passengers were put aboard another Concorde, but the plane was delayed and travelers arrived about nine hours after the normal trans-Atlantic Air France flight to New York.

"They were not very, very happy," said Kressman.

The crack in the window was repaired and the jet was scheduled to make its regular flight today, he said.

Cold helps some crops

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The cold wave in northern Mexico that caused some worried citrus farmers to harvest their crop early may be beneficial to other crops, according to a report published Sunday.

The Agriculture Department issued a report saying the unusual freezing temperatures "destroyed some winter plagues. Furthermore, they have helped some crops, such as wheat and fruits such as peaches and apples that need a certain amount of cold weather," according to La Jornada.

According to the report, in Chihuahua, where temperatures plunged to as low as 21 degrees, 123,500 acres of wheat crop could benefit from the cold snap; in Coahuila, the fruit industry could expect an earlier crop; but in Nuevo Leon, where 45,000 acres are planted with wheat, there were no reports of crop damage.

Two transvestites fined

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia (AP) — Two men who dressed and behaved like women in public were both fined by the Moslem Religious Court under a law that took effect this year, a newspaper reported today.

The Star said Ismail Awang, 31, and Amdan Osman, 42, were the first to be convicted under the law, which applies to Moslems in Kedah state.

Under the law, a transvestite caught in a public place can be fined up to 1,000 ringgits ($366) or jailed for six months. The two men each paid $183 fines in lieu of spending four months in jail.

The two were wearing skirts and T-shirts and were soliciting on a street in Alor Star when arrested Feb. 4, the paper said.

British minister blamed for lawyer's death

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Irish nationalists today blamed a British government minister for remarks that they said could have led to the slaying of a prominent Roman Catholic lawyer.

Patrick Finucane was slain Sunday by three men who stormed his home in north Belfast. His wife Geraldine was wounded in the ankle by a bullet and was hospitalized in satisfactory condition.

No claim of responsibility was reported, but suspicion fell on Protestant extremists.

Press Association, the British domestic news agency, said Finucane was the first attorney killed by extremists in 20 years of violence.

Danny Morrison, vice president of the IRA's legal political arm, Sinn Fein, said junior Home Office minister Douglas Hogg provided the "pretext for the slaying of Mr. Finucane."

Hogg told a parliamentary committee discussing an anti-terrorist bill that certain Northern Ireland lawyers were "unduly sympathetic" to paramilitary organizations. His remarks were raised in the House of Commons on Jan. 31.

Seamus Mallon, deputy leader of the Social Democratic and Labor Party, said he had warned Hogg that his words could compromise the safety of lawyers in the province.

Members of the Northern Ireland Association of Socialist Lawyers called for Hogg's resignation, accusing him of making lawyers targets. Kevin McNamara, spokesman on Northern Ireland for the Labor opposition, said: "I think Mr. Hogg has got to consider very carefully what he said. This death must be a tragedy for the legal profession in Northern Ireland as well as for the family of the deceased."

Only few Soviet troops remain in Afghanistan

KABUL, Afghanistan (AP) — The Red Army bid farewell to Kabul at a ceremony today, but some Soviet soldiers stayed behind.

At an airport ceremony staged for 150 foreign journalists, Lt. Col. Pytor Sardarchuk praised 15 young paratroopers who stood in front of their An-12 transport plane.

"We have helped Afghanistan create order and provided economic supplies and other goods. Now you are leaving Afghan soil and I want to say thank you very much for your service and to wish you all the best, happiness and health and a safe return home," he said.

Capt. Alexander Yhadan added, "The medals on our chest — Afghan medals — bear witness to what we have accomplished. We would like to hope that there will be peace in Afghanistan and that the people of Afghanistan will remember us fondly."

At least one departing soldier, a 20-year-old, questioned those accomplishments.

"I think it could have been done peacefully. I think it (Soviet intervention) was all a big mistake," he said in answer to a question as he boarded the plane, which took off for Tashkent.

The paratroopers waved as their aircraft taxied down the runway and climbed in a tight spiral above the mountains. Some 450 Soviet soldiers quietly left the besieged capital during a snowstorm Sunday.

Sardarchuk said remaining troops are overseeing the Soviet food airlift and will be gone by Wednesday, the U.N.-negotiated deadline for the last Soviet soldiers to leave Afghanistan. Sardarchuk refused to say how many soldiers stayed behind after today's ceremony, which had been billed as the departure of the last Soviet soldiers.

After the ceremony, Soviet troops manned armored personnel carriers posted around the military section of Kabul airport and along the perimeter of the facility.

The Soviets completed a food airlift to the capital Sunday, but a United Nations relief operation halted when a second airline refused to fly to Kabul from Pakistan.

Ethiopian Airlines delivered 32 tons of wheat and dried milk Friday in what was to be the first of 10 U.N. emergency shipments, but backed out of the contract.

Last week, EgyptAir refused to fly to Kabul, saying security was inadequate.

U.N. agencies had hoped to airlift another 360 tons of food, medicine and blankets by Wednesday for the poorest residents of Kabul, which refugees from the 10-year war have swelled to twice its normal 1 million population.

U.N. officials say the airlift was called off for technical reasons. But sources say nations that oppose the Kabul regime are pressing others not to help the airlift.

"These people are not the ones who will carry the guns," one source said of the women and children lining up for food.

White's selection long-overdue move

The selection of Bill White as the National League's next president is a significant, long-overdue step up for blacks into the higher echelon of major-league baseball. He succeeds Bart Giamatti, who will replace Peter Ueberroth as commissioner of baseball on April 1.

It's been 42 years since Jackie Robinson broke the color barrier by becoming a Brooklyn Dodger, paving the way for hundreds of blacks to play in the major leagues. Even though blacks currently account for 25 percent of players in the big leagues, few have risen to top administrative positions.

This glaring discrepancy became front-page news two years ago when Al Campanis, former Dodger vice president, suggested on national television that blacks lack the discipline and mental capacity for high-level jobs in baseball. Campanis' insensitive remarks not only cost him his job; they prompted greater awareness of the problem.

To date, Frank Robinson, Larry Doby and Maury Wills are the only blacks to manage major-league teams. Apart from Bill Lucas, who briefly served as general manager of the Atlanta Braves, Hank Aaron is the only black to hold an important front-office job.

White's appointment should help overcome the longstanding fact that big-league baseball is essentially a white man's game beyond the foul lines. It also should encourage other talented minorities to rise through the ranks in America's favorite pastime.

What White lacks in administrative experience, he should make up for in hard work and determination. He was a six-time all star during his 13-year career as a National League first baseman. During the 18 years he was a broadcaster for the New York Yankees, he consistently demonstrated an incisive knowledge of and love for the game. Those qualities, combined with his disdain for the designated-hitter rule, suggest the National League is in good hands.

Like Jackie Robinson before him, Bill White has a unique opportunity to help change the course of big-league baseball. We hope the team owners will respond by giving qualified minorities a chance to succeed in the front offices as well as on the field.

Behind Tower's smoke

John Tower's nomination to be secretary of defense is now in serious jeopardy. The cloud of rumors about his private life still appears to be mostly smoke. Yet even some former colleagues on the Senate Armed Services Committee have come to doubt his fitness. The White House and the committee have now agreed to postpone voting on the nomination, which gives time for reflection on Mr. Tower's candidacy.

Wholly apart from the smoke, his stance and policy views made him a dubious choice. What makes him even more dubious now is the frosty reaction of senators. Customarily, they acclaim the nomination of a former senator. But in this case Sam Nunn, chairman of the Armed Services Committee, promised thorough hearings; these have raised three categories of questions, denotable as wine, women and contractor fees.

Asked by Senator Nunn if he had a drinking problem, Mr. Tower replied: "I have none, Senator. I am a man of some discipline." Yet Mr. Nunn, with the facts at his disposal, is evidently unsatisfied. "If there has been a problem (of alcohol abuse) in the past," he said yesterday, "is there a point where it has been recognized by the nominee and dealt with effectively? That is to say, is it a continuing problem? I do not have an answer to that yet."

Sen. James Exon has said of the rumors that 90 percent are "sheer, unadulterated garbage." The allegations about womanizing may well fall into this category. Unless Mr. Tower's private life opens him to extortion, it has little bearing on his competence for office.

The nominee's relations with defense contractors are harder to assess. His consultancies earned him $750,000 over two and a half years. That could be disturbing for several reasons.

The relationship between the Pentagon, its contractors and their many consultants has been extremely unhealthy and in need of reform. Can Mr. Tower, a beneficiary of this relationship, be relied on to reform it with vigor?

The president wants appointees to avoid even the appearance of conflicts of interest. Mr. Tower insists that he would avoid even "the appearance of a perception" of favoritism to those who paid him. Yet the sheer number of his clients would make it difficult for him to avoid all decisions that might concern them.

Industry executives often bring valuable management experience to running the Pentagon, which may outweigh conflicts of interest. Mr. Tower's consulting experience belongs in a less useful category.

Mr. Tower may yet dispel the smoke about these three issues, but the strongest reasons to challenge his nomination remain: As the principal backer in Congress of Mr. Reagan's undisciplined defense buildup, he is hardly the best person to cope with the problems of waste and excess that the buildup caused. He has no record of looking critically at the services' demands. He gained a reputation in Congress for partisanship, not conciliation.

Even if Mr. Tower can prove himself clean, there are other candidates who are both better prepared and more disposed toward seizing the unique opportunity to reform the Pentagon.

Union leadership due for a change

WASHINGTON — Organized labor has a chance to retire one of its old-school bosses when the board of the Laborers International Union of North America convenes its annual pow-wow this week.

LIUNA represents the men and women who do some of the most dangerous, tedious and grimy jobs in America, ranging from demolition and excavation to mail handling and garbage collection. More than soft tropical breezes will be blowing through the scandal-plagued union when its general executive board meets in Bal Harbour, Fla. Reform-minded labor leaders across the country are cheering at the possibility of a palace coup that would displace LIUNA's tainted leader, Angelo Fosco, and his unpopular lieutenant, Robert Connerton.

Like the aging potentate of a banana republic, LIUNA president Fosco has clung to power too long. Fosco's loathed general counsel, Connerton, has enriched himself over the years serving as the LIUNA's lawyer. Sources close to Fosco consider Connerton to be the power behind the throne — or what some in the union cynically call the tail that wags the dog.

Jack Anderson

The inside story is that while Fosco is willing to abdicate, Connerton would find himself out in the cold if his old protector retires.

The FBI has been investigating possible Mafia control of LIUNA for 11 years, according to FBI Director William Sessions. In 1986, the President's Commission on Organized Crime spelled out some of LIUNA's seedy exploits. Fosco was indicted in 1981 in a case involving alleged benefit plan swindles. He was later acquitted. Arthur E. Coia, LIUNA's secretary-treasurer, has been indicted and acquitted of racketeering charges involving union benefit funds.

The president's commission reported, "Although LIUNA has not achieved the notoriety of the Teamsters union, it is nevertheless a union with clear ties to organized crime."

We reported last year that one Mail Handlers' Union local in New York City, a division of LIUNA, had begged Sessions to put the local in a federal trusteeship to keep it out of the clutches of organized crime.

Labor leaders are increasingly embarrassed over the way Fosco has run LIUNA as if it were a family business. He inherited the job from his father, and now would like to pass it on to one of his two sons.

Connerton has spent more than three decades in Washington, D.C., as a labor mover and shaker and as chief lobbyist for the union. He is credited with blunting the impact of anti-racketeering laws and enforcement.

"Connerton needs Fosco to stay," one labor source told us. "He's privately urging Fosco not to do what he has said he wanted to do (retire)." Another union source criticized Connerton as "someone who has never been elected to anything," yet finds ways to "run the union through his law firm."

Connerton raised some eyebrows when he became a millionaire courtesy of LIUNA, creating what some detractors call a "one-client law firm." He represented mail handlers in a claim against the U.S. Postal Service for back pay and overtime. In that case, he convinced 90,000 postal workers to sign consent forms allowing Connerton to represent them in a private capacity, independent of LIUNA. Then Connerton negotiated a settlement with the Postal Service and took $1 million as his cut — for representing union members who were already paying his salary with their dues.

It's time for Fosco to go, and for Connerton to find himself another client.

FOX IN THE HENHOUSE — President Bush is one commissioner short on the Consumer Product Safety Commission. That's the independent agency that is supposed to protect Americans from faulty products. Among those mentioned for the job is Jeffrey Perlman, a Capitol Hill lobbyist for the U.S. Chamber of Commerce. Perlman works hard for his business clients, which has put him at odds with the safety commission. In 1981, he reportedly helped wage a campaign to abolish the commission. He now insists that the Chamber of Commerce never took a position on that issue. If Bush chooses Perlman for the commission, it would be an announcement that the new president is no more concerned about consumer safety than Ronald Reagan, who left a legacy of lax oversight.

MINI-EDITORIAL — The Nicaraguan Contras may have an ally in the first family. First son, Jeb Bush, is close to Contra leader Adolfo Calero and has supported the rebels' cause. While Washington is trying to anticipate who Bush will appoint as his policy-makers on Latin America, the president may be getting the most potent advice through unofficial channels.

Brownie Stephens was more than a friend

Brownie Stephens is dead. He was 59. The woman at the hospital said she went in to shave him and he said, "Don't shave me yet. Let's just talk."

And she said as they talked, Brownie went to sleep and then he stopped breathing. He had cancer.

There's not enough room in a thousand columns to say what there is to say about Brownie Stephens. He was the best human being I ever met.

He was my friend. He was my older brother. Often, I wished he were my father.

I met him when I was 18. I never saw him angry. Not once. I never heard him make a disparaging remark about another person. Not once.

Brownie taught me a lot of what I know about newspapering. The other day, as we visited, he said he had tried to remember and he thought he had worked for 47 different newspapers, from his native Tennessee to Georgia to Alabama, to Texas, to Ohio and even to Montana.

Most of those papers were small and Brownie routinely worked 18-hour days for rotten pay and little gratitude.

Brownie also taught me my regard for the out-of-doors. We went all over this country — mostly in that old blue VW van of his — in search of white-water rapids.

We ran the Nantahala River in N.C. together maybe a hundred times. And we ran the French Broad River (N.C.) and the Chattooga (Ga.-Ala.) and the Ocoee (Fla.), and we even went to Idaho and put in eight days on the Middle Fork of the Salmon.

One day out in the wilderness in Idaho, Brownie said, "I never got much out of going to church. But here on this river, looking at this sky, I lose any doubts there is a God."

Brownie was one of the few of my friends who knew all three of my wives. He also met the candidate for fourth when we added her to our entourage and went for one last camping and river adventure.

Skunks got into our campsite, and the rain put out our fire. But we laughed at it all and sang some Merle Haggard and had us a time.

The last years of his life Brownie was an egg-and-poultry man. He was managing editor of something called the Poultry Times. And he knew every other egg-and-poultry person in the country.

The last time we talked, the egg-and-poultry folks, thousands of them, were gathered for their annual convention and because they loved him, too, they scheduled a benefit for Brownie.

Hearing that, Brownie said, "I'll be with more of my friends and family at one time than at any other time in my life.

"I'm going to try to talk for 20 minutes. I hope I can last that long. I'm just going to look around that room and find a face and talk about what that person has meant to me."

The benefit was scheduled for 5 p.m. An ambulance was going to bring Brownie to the party. A little after 3 p.m., Brownie died.

We held the party anyway. Brownie's son and his daughter got up and talked about him. His son told how much he had loved his daddy, and his daughter said to appreciate the out-of-doors and don't litter because that's the best thing we could do in remembrance of her father.

As sick as he was, I just never thought Brownie would die. He would have said to me, "Take some time off and get back on the river."

But I don't think I ever will again. I couldn't. Brownie always put up my tent for me and I never learned to do it by myself.

CHARLEY REESE

Lawyers' business doesn't involve justice

One is led by facts to the conclusion that lawyers, as a trade group, are no good, having corrupted themselves in intellectually depraved redemption, so that they can no longer recognize the difference between reality and the word-worlds they create and live in. They have forgotten that the function of the law is to produce justice. To them, the law has become their private vocation, a game they play by rules they write for their own purposes, to pursue their own ends.

The people have been left standing on the streets outside the courthouse. What was once their system of justice, their courthouse, has been taken away from them. What was once an honorable profession has become a business; and, like all businesses corrupted by monopoly status, it is marked by greed and ambition. Having no substance left, it depends on public relations and advertising to hide the ugly truth of what it has become.

That is not to say there are not still honorable men and women who practice law. There are. They are a minority.

The ugly amorality of the lawyer's world was revealed by Daniel Coleman, an expensive Washington lawyer, who for reasons of his own or perhaps of his seniors' in the firm, tried to prevent the execution of Ted Bundy.

Now Coleman knew, of course, Bundy was guilty. Bundy, in fact, wished to confess his murders but Coleman, for purely tactical reasons, tried to keep him silent.

Let us lay this bare. To Coleman, winning the game — in this case preventing a lawful execution — was more important than justice. It was more important than the ability of law enforcement officers to clear up unsolved murders. It was more important than easing the psychological torment of survivors whose loved ones, in some cases, had simply vanished. It was more important than truth. It was more important than justice.

Coleman freely admitted that if Bundy told the truth about his other murders, then some judge might be less inclined to be swayed by Coleman's arguments as he tried to prevent Bundy's execution for a murder he knew Bundy committed.

In short, the game is winning and of course the gurus of the legal trade anoint Coleman's actions with the blessings as meeting the highest ethical standards. Of course, ethics for lawyers are what lawyers decide are ethics. Thus, they self-validate their own actions.

The criminal defense attorneys, of course, claim they are merely seeing to it their clients receive their Constitutional rights. That, too, is sophistry and they know it. They know the difference between assuring a fair trial and badgering witnesses, making emotional appeals to jurors, seeking tactical delays, and all the other little tricks of the trade. They know it is their saying, not a non-lawyer's. "If your client is innocent, argue the facts; if he's guilty, argue the law." It is not unconstitutional for a criminal to admit his guilt, if he chooses to do so freely, yet they routinely dissuade clients from doing that.

Like journalists hiding behind the First Amendment, claiming it as a license for any behavior their ambition dictates, lawyers claim their duty to the client is a license to exclude themselves from the larger family of human beings and to relieve themselves of the moral obligations all humans have toward each other... such obligations, for example, as not turning a rabid dog loose on a children's playground.

Lawyers, however, are not unique in this respect. It is a common characteristic of our society today that amorality has replaced morality. Whatever one can get away with legally is okay and the law, of course, can be argued forever. It is as flexible as a snake.

The lawyer industry should be stripped of its power to self-regulate itself, denied the hypocritical claim that lawyers are officers of the court. They are not. They are in a business that has nothing to do with justice.

automobile — (noun) Henry Ford of Detroit was the inventor of the first mass-produced "automobile." When the automobile first came out, many people looked at this strange, noisy motor-driven carriage and were confused as to what to call it. The French decided to call the vehicle an "automobile" to describe how it was self-propelled — a great change to people who were used to hitching their carriages and wagons behind horses, donkeys or oxen. Today we often call an automobile a "car" after the British term "motor-car" and the abbreviated form of carriage.

Kermitterrand turns French TV screens green

By MARILYN AUGUST

PARIS (AP) — For millions of French television viewers, the night news begins when Kermitterrand the Frog discusses the day's events over aperitifs with a long-haired pig in pearls and an anxious eagle called Black Jack.

This is the Babete Show (Dumb Animals Show), five minutes of Gallic wit and sarcasm broadcast nightly on the private TF1 station before the 8 p.m. news and featuring France's favorite political puppets.

The takeoff on Sesame Street's Muppets is not intended for children only.

The undisputed star of the show is Kermitterrand, a wide-mouthed bright green frog, who combines the face of President Francois Mitterrand with the body of the Muppets' Kermit. He also is known as God.

The show has become a must for some 36 percent of the television audience — 7.2 million homes — making it France's most-watched show. Taxi drivers and doctors tune in, but no one follows it as closely as politicians.

A single episode can touch on a half-dozen news items ranging from the firing of Daniel Barenboim as artistic director of the new Opera-Bastille to an insider trading scandal.

"We take the news, then twist and torture it," Jean Amadou, a well-known satirist and one of the show's creators, said in an interview.

"By having the puppets talk in down-to-earth, everyday language we show that the coded, esoteric talk of politicians is worn out."

Mitterrand, who is a Socialist, reportedly is amused by Kermitterrand's ranting and raving and has aides record his antics when he can't watch them himself. The president has also been known to regale intimates with imitations of Kermitterrand, and references to the show have crept into his speeches.

The anxious eagle, Black Jack, is a play on former Premier Jacques Chirac. The long-haired pig in pearls (Miss Piggy in the Muppets) is supposed to be Georges Marchais, the French Communist leader.

Their colorful cohorts include Rocco the crow (Premier Michel Rocard, also a Socialist); Barzy, the kind, cuddly, bear (former Premier Raymond Barre), and a curly haired goat (Culture Minister Jack Lang).

"Please excuse this question which might seem idiotic. Oh Great Monarch of Triumph, but weren't you supposed to be in Bulgaria today, bah-bah," Lang-the-goat asked Kermitterrand in a recent episode.

"Of course I'm in Bulgaria, puerile lamb," Kermitterrand snaps. "What's the point of being God, if you can't be in two different places at the same time, eh?"

Another memorable segment found humor in the release of the last three French hostages from Lebanon a few days before the first round of presidential elections last May.

Charles Pasqua, interior minister in Chirac's conservative government then in office, took the credit. Chirac was criticized on grounds he was trying to manipulate voters.

"How did you get them to release the hostages?" one incredulous puppet asked a long-tusked walrus (Pasqua).

"Simple," the walrus replied. "I promised to give them back on Monday." Amadou said he never dreamed the show would be so successful.

Kermitterrand has graced magazine covers, Babete watches are the latest chic souvenir and co-creator Jean Roucas, who appears on the screen with the puppets, is stopped frequently for autographs.

"People realize more and more that politicians are conniving wheeler-dealers, on the left and the right, and we say so on the show," said Roucas, 38, who does the voices for all the puppets.

"The political press in France is at the service of politicians. We're saying things the way they are."

The Babete Show — its title plays on the twin meanings of the word "bete," stupid and animal — is written the same day it's broadcast, taking final form in midafternoon. By the time they meet, Amadou and Roucas have already combed the newspapers and the jokes fly.

Toxic Death Cap mushroom found for first time in Texas

HOUSTON (AP) — A Victoria physician and mushroom hunter is certain he has found the first evidence that the lethal Death Cap mushroom is growing in Texas.

The president of the Texas Mycological Society also is convinced the discovery is correct and has sent one of the two discovered mushrooms to laboratories to be absolutely certain.

"The thing that scares me about this mushroom being here is that historically it has killed more people than any other mushroom," says Susan Metzler, of Houston, president of the 120-member society. "Although we now have techniques to save lives — generally through liver transplants — it's an extremely dangerous mushroom."

Dr. Robert Harvey, who specializes in allergies and immunology and who made the discovery in late January, said it's likely more of the mushrooms are present. "It's like apples on a tree," he said. "That's the fruiting body of a plant. There's got to be more there."

Harvey said when he found the two mushrooms near the base of an observation deck in the Aransas Wildlife Refuge north of Rockport, he strongly suspected their identity.

"I went to my car and checked a text," he said. "Then I went back to my office, made a spore print where I lay it on a microscopic slide and stain it with agent and look under a microscope. They have certain characteristics."

"They also developed a very bad odor, which is very characteristic of this mushroom."

Harvey said he also tested the mushroom for toxicity by putting concentrated hydrochloric acid on it, prompting the mushroom juices to turn blue-black.

"It was a positive reaction for the toxin," he said.

Two people in Oregon required liver transplants in October after eating the Death Cap, said Harvey, who noted the cases were the subject of an article this month in the American Medical Association Journal.

Experts say the mushroom, which first came to this country on the roots of trees shipped from Europe, is more prevalent on the East and West coasts. It has been suspected the fungi grew in Texas, but no record existed of anyone finding it, Harvey said.

Harvey sent one of the mushrooms to Ms. Metzler, who is writing a book about Texas mushrooms. She has shipped the specimen to a researcher in New York and expected to hear the results later this week.

The mushroom species is known as "Amanita phalloides" and actually is of benefit to trees, enabling them to survive extreme drought and low nutrients by breaking down nutrients in the soil and releasing them to the plant. In exchange, the plant provides sugar to the mushroom, allowing it to grow, Ms. Metzler said.

She said the prolonged drought in Texas has changed the makeup of mushrooms her group generally finds during hunting trips.

"We're finding an entire subculture of mushrooms that likes the dryer weather," she said. "We're still finding mushrooms, but this year we only found 110 species at our annual foray, and 39 were new to Texas. We usually have 200 species but see the same ones over and over again."

The Death Cap contains high concentrations of the poison amanitin. One cubic centimeter of the poison — about the weight of a penny — could kill an adult, Ms. Metzler said.

Pharmacist Answers Questions About... WRINKLES

ADVERTISEMENT

Robert Heldfond, internationally famous pharmacist helps clear up confusion in minds of millions about wrinkle creams. Here are the questions he is most frequently asked.

Q: My wrinkles make me look old. What can I do about it?

A: Three things... a face lift, drugs, or cosmetics. The first requires surgery. The second, drugs like Retin A, need a doctor's prescription. Cosmetics help the skin appear younger without surgery or prescriptions. I chose the cosmetic approach when I developed my EB5 Wrinkle Cream.

Q: Why is your EB5 Wrinkle Cream different from other creams on the market?

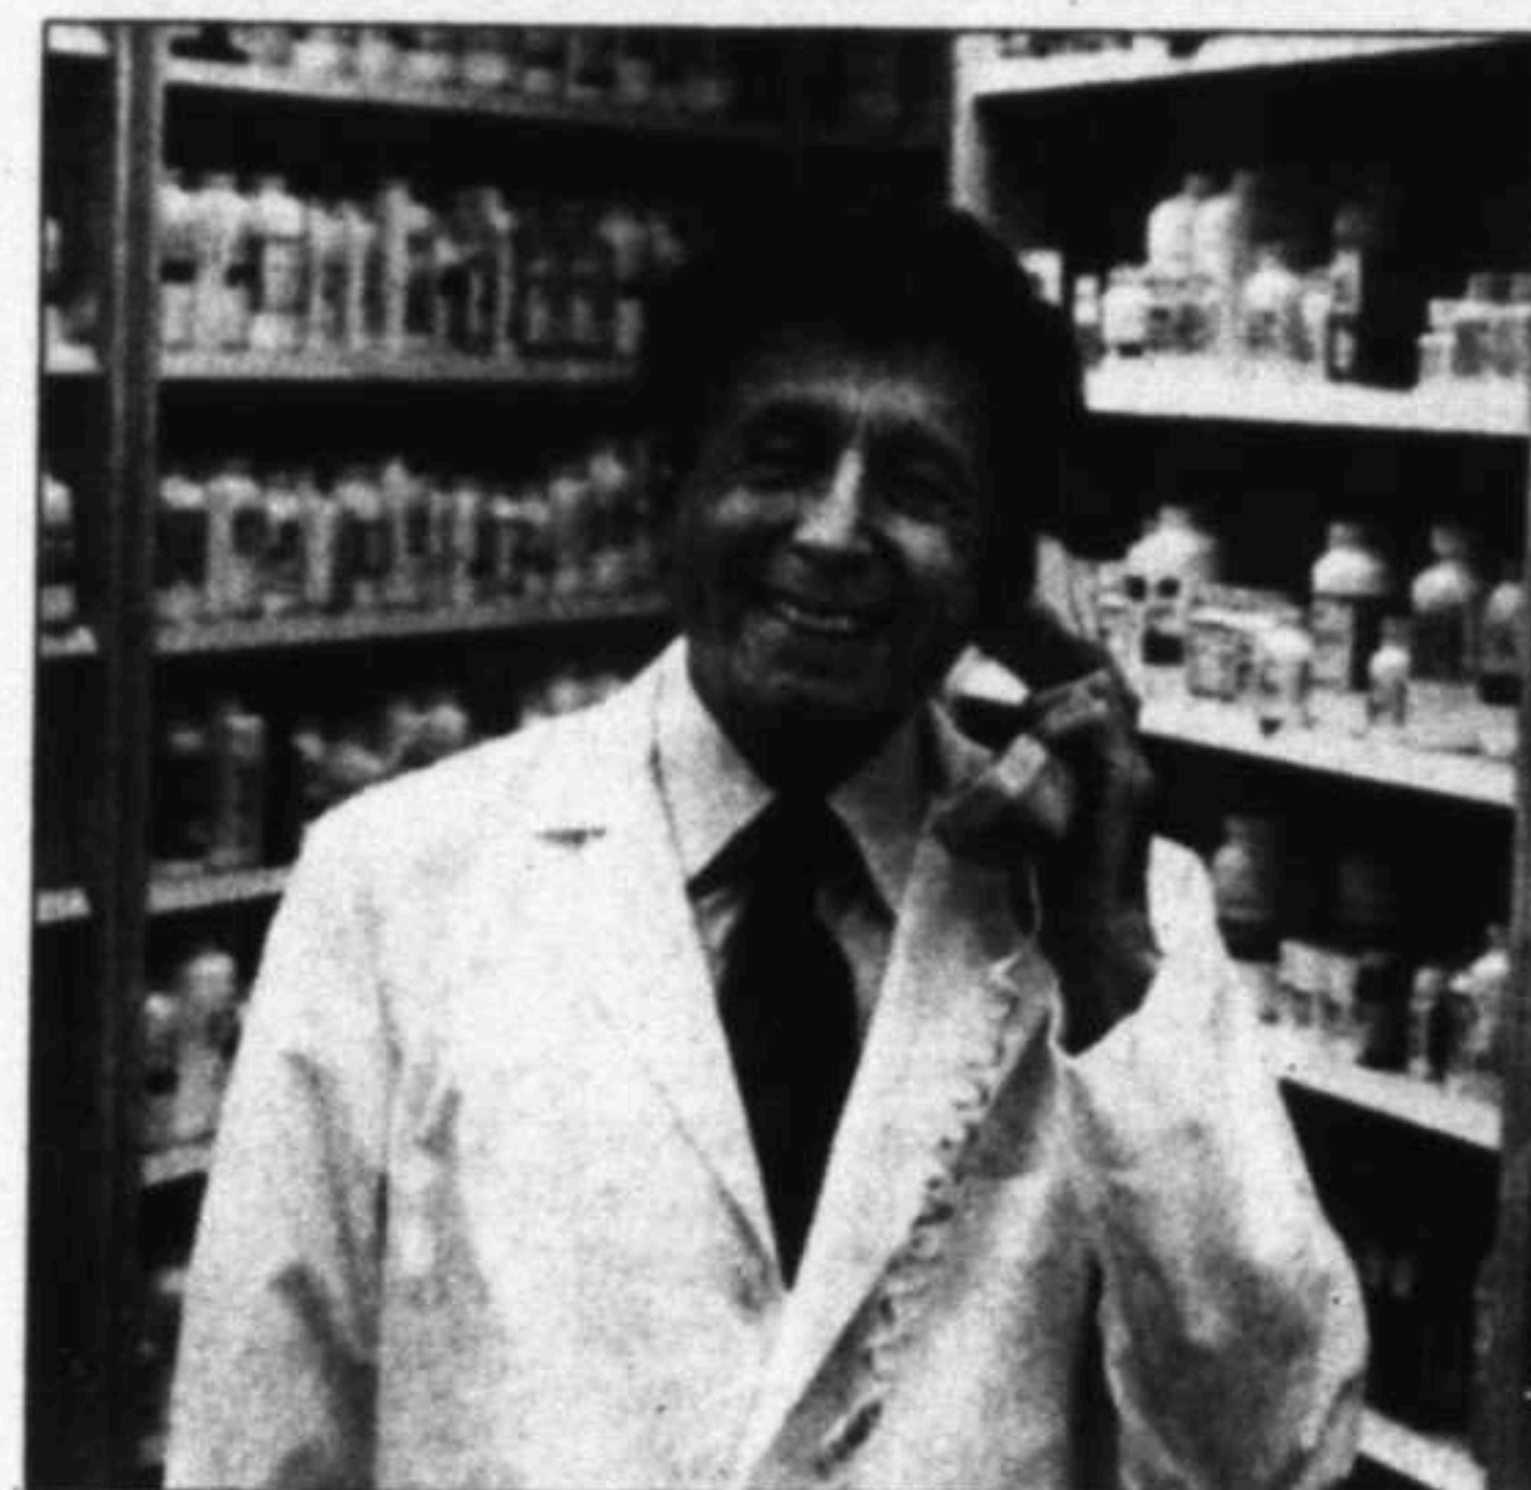

A: EB5, as a cosmetic, helps facial lines appear smoother and my special formula works like 5 creams in one jar... a wrinkle cream, moisturizer, day cream, night cream, and makeup base... all in one.

Q: How do I know EB5 will work for me?

A: Millions of satisfied customers have learned that my EB5 Wrinkle Cream is an effective cream to help their skin look and feel younger. This is due to its M L P action, which is: Moisturization, Lubrication and Protection.

Q: Is EB5 expensive?

A: Absolutely not. One jar lasts for many months and you need to use no other creams along with it.

Also, EB5 carries a money-back guarantee of satisfaction.

Q: How may I learn more about EB5 Wrinkle Cream?

A: Hear directly from Pharmacist Heldfond. Just dial 1-800-356-4798 (THERE IS NO CHARGE FOR THE CALL) and learn more about this exciting wrinkle cream, EB5, and how you may have younger-looking skin.

Note: EB5 Cream is available at most large JCPenney stores. Sold with a money-back guarantee. (Complete details available in store.)

Pipe bomb in abandoned VCR explodes, injures one

HOUSTON (AP) — Arson investigators were trying to determine who planted a pipe bomb inside an abandoned videocassette recorder that exploded when a woman plugged the machine into an electrical outlet.

Dorothy Lee Gipson, 52, suffered a broken ankle and cuts to her legs and right arm in the explosion. She remained in fair condition Sunday at Ben Taub Hospital, officials said.

The rigged VCR exploded Saturday in the beauty salon Mrs. Gipson operates from her Houston home. She was alone in the salon at the time.

Mrs. Gipson's son had found the VCR early Saturday morning outside an adult newsstand but had not been able to make it work.

Arson investigators were continuing their probe into the explosion and had not yet made any arrests.

Adrian Gipson, 23, said he found the recorder on the ground beside his car when he and a friend left a 24-hour newsstand about 3 a.m. Saturday.

Gipson took the VCR home where he tried unsuccessfully to plug it into his extension cord. He then shook the recorder only to find it was filled with water.

"I thought I might get electrocuted so I quit trying," he said.

Gipson discarded the machine at the curb for garbage pickup and went to work. Mrs. Gipson found the recorder sometime later that morning and plugged it inside her beauty shop, triggering the explosion, authorities said.

"You can't find a whole piece (of the recorder) anywhere. It was blown to bits," her son said. Gipson said he couldn't think of anybody angry enough at him to try to hurt him.

Damage to the Gipson home is estimated at $15,000 to $20,000. Houston arson investigator Butch Lewis said.

"This was a big pipe bomb," Lewis said, adding that whoever was responsible did not have to be an expert.

Waiting

for the plane

Dennis Wainright, Midland, spends time with a book.

In this fast-paced world in which we live, the slow, leisurely way of traveling has gone by the wayside.

So long, covered wagons and goodbye Amtrak. We are now in the age of the airplane.

But wait.

All is not sugary-sweet when it comes to traveling in the big bird. There are drawbacks. There are hidden obstacles ... there is the terror of the airport lobby.

How many jolly faces do you see waiting for a flight? Where is the joy of modern technology?

The truth must be realized.

The facts must be confronted.

When it comes right down to it, there aren't too many things higher on the dull scale than waiting in the airport.

And Midland International Airport is no different. Midlander Sanita Simmons was found there recently, waiting to board a flight to Albuquerque. "I really don't like (waiting)," she said. "I just think about what fun I'm going to have when I get there. Oh, but I did see a professional wrestler once."

Well, then, maybe there are a few advantages.

And then again...

Nick Engel of Odessa is an experienced flier who finds himself in the air about 40 percent of the time while working for the State Comptroller's Department.

"You see your typical weirdos (while waiting around), but I haven't seen anybody drop their pants yet," Engel said.

Engel even mentioned that he didn't mind waiting, as long as it wasn't over four hours. But, then, Engel knows how to spend his time.

"I have a few brewskies," he said.

On a recent weekday at the airport, Ray Maples of Dallas was trying to pass the time while waiting to get home by reading the newspaper.

Please see WAIT, page 2B

Midland's Drew Johnson bides his time at Midland International Airport by playing a game of pinball.

A.T. Fry

Services for A.T. Fry of Midland were to be at 2 p.m. today at Means Memorial United Methodist Church in Andrews with Rev. Milton Jochetz officiating. Interment will follow at Andrews Cemetery with Ellis Funeral Home in charge of arrangements.

Fry died Friday afternoon at a Midland hospital following a brief illness.

He was born on June 1, 1928, in Spur and was reared there. After graduating from Spur High School he spent several years in Farmington, N.M. and Fort Morgan, Colo., before moving to Andrews.

He married Melva J. North on June 17, 1953, in Spur. He was employed with Union Texas Petroleum for 20 years. Following his retirement in 1982 he moved to Midland where he began to work again with Henry Petroleum.

Survivors include his wife; one son, Stephen N. Fry of Hobbs, N.M.; one daughter, Judy Lynn Fry Allbright of Andrews; five brothers, Tedford Fry of Spur, Alex Fry of Garden City, Dale Fry of Hobbs, Bill Fry of Lubbock and Mack Fry of Austin; two sisters, Lucille (Willis) Smith of Spur and Nada Ivy of Powell, Wyo.; six grandchildren and several nieces and nephews.

Pallbearers were to be Tommy Thomas, Henry Maxwell, Robert Beeson, Dale Thompson, Bob Howard and Mike McConaughy.

The family requests that memorials be directed to the American Heart Association.

Glen W. Johnson

Graveside services for Glen W. Johnson of Midland were to be at 3 p.m. today at Resthaven Memorial Park with Rev. Bob Porterfield of West Kentucky Street Baptist Church officiating. Ellis Funeral Home is in charge of arrangements.

He died Friday evening at a local hospital.

He was born Dec. 6, 1914, in Wichita, Kan., but grew up in Tyler. He married Dorothy Purvis on June 21, 1958, in Lubbock. He had been a resident of Midland since 1960. He was district manager for National Photographers for more than 20 years. He retired in 1982.

A veteran of World War II, he served in the second division of the U.S. Marines in the South Pacific. He was a Baptist.

Survivors include his wife; one stepson, Ronald Chandler of Austin; three grandchildren and several nieces and nephews.

The family requests memorials be directed to the Alzheimer's Foundation or the Allison Diagnostic Cancer Clinic of Midland.

Thomas Henry Burton

Thomas Henry Burton, 74, of Midland died Friday at a local hospital.

Services will be at 2 p.m. Wednesday at Mt. Calvary Baptist Church with Rev. R.E. Latham officiating. Interment will follow at Fairview Cemetery with Jackson Funeral Home in charge of arrangements.

He was born July 12, 1914, in Caldwell. He married Jessie Sarah Burton.

A veteran of World War II, Burton had been employed as a mechanic.

Survivors include one son, Thomas Wayne Burton and three grandchildren.

Pallbearers will be Wallace Davis, Yancy Batie, Dempsey Rosser, Morris Cornett, Thurman Thomas and Jocelyn Solomon.

Alice Wright

Services for Alice Wright of Midland are pending with Ellis Funeral Home.

She died early this morning at a local nursing home.

LULAC commemorates 60th anniversary

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP) — Members of the League of United Latin American Citizens gathered at the gravesite of the group's founder to reaffirm the goals of the man who began the fight for equality for Mexican-Americans 60 years ago.

Community and Hispanic leaders joined family members for the graveside memorial Sunday in honor of Ben Garza and other LULAC founders.

"I'm not crying so much for Daddy as I'm crying because people don't realize how hard Daddy fought for us to even go swimming," Garza's daughter, Mary Guerra, told the Corpus Christi Caller-Times. Garza died of tuberculosis in 1937 at the age of 44.

The first chapter of LULAC was formed in 1929 at a Corpus Christi dance hall. The organization, which began with 25 charter members, today has a membership of more than 100,000 from every state and several foreign countries.

When the organization was founded, Mexican-Americans were considered neither black nor white, attended separate schools and were refused service in restaurants.

"Sixty years ago, the pain and outrage of Hispanics in Texas resembled a lost cause," Victor M. Gonzalez Jr., president of LULAC Council No. 1, said in opening the service that drew about three dozen people. LULAC was started "to ensure parity of social, economic, educational and political opportunities for Hispanics."

LULAC leaders say that battle is fought through a new round of problems.

Gonzalez singled out the English Only movement — a campaign to make English the nation's official language; a recent Supreme Court decision against set-aside provisions for minority business owners, and immigration issues.

The group has joined a lawsuit aimed at adjusting the 1990 census to correct what it fears will be an undercounting of minorities.

Within Texas, the group was active in criticizing Gov. Bill Clements for failing to include a Hispanic or South Texan in his appointments to the University of Texas System Board of Regents.

"We must resist any erosion of the goals of LULAC's founders," Gonzalez said. "LULAC can and will strive for the seemingly unattainable goals of equality for all."

LULAC President Jose de Lara of San Antonio says the organization is in the midst of redefining its mission and moving away from a social emphasis. "There have been occasions when the league has held back," he told the Caller-Times. "Today I think we are in more of an advocacy role. I don't think you can characterize the club as a Hispanic Rotary Club."

Arnold Torres, LULAC's national political adviser, said one of the group's main goals is gaining recognition from politicians.

"We must not have the attitude that the political parties are doing us a favor, and they cannot have an attitude that they are doing us a favor."

A final battle the group faces is within itself. Past president Ruben Bonilla says LULAC is losing some of its potential constituency.

"I don't see LULAC recruiting young people into its ranks like it used to," he said. "We have not aggressively attracted or pursued the young professionals and entrepreneurs who form the nucleus for a very strong presence in the Hispanic community."

Freedom of Information has national meeting

DALLAS (AP) — Reporter Kevin Ann Willey of The Arizona Republic told of the battle in her state to open grand jury transcripts pertaining to former Gov. Evan Mecham's indictment.

John Kuglin, Montana chief of bureau for The Associated Press and chairman of the Montana Freedom of Information Hotline Inc., described a lawsuit filed last week against the state Board of Public Education. The Montana board met privately, then convened and voted to sue the governor.

But the conversations at the Dallas conference Friday and Saturday also covered instructional tapes, manuals and hotlines. Participants represented long-established and newly formed groups.

The focus of the first National FOI Assembly was on freedom of information efforts nationwide.

"The goal of this one was to share what has happened with the different states and around the country," said Nancy Monson, executive director of the Freedom of Information Foundation of Texas, which presented the assembly. "It's kind of a nuts-and-bolts workshop."

About 80 people attended, representing organizations in 12 states and Washington, D.C. Student Media Co. Inc. and the Center for Communication Arts at Southern Methodist University co-sponsored the event.

Ralph Langer, president of the Freedom of Information Foundation of Texas and vice president and executive editor of The Dallas Morning News, said plans for the assembly began last year, when questionnaires were sent to other state organizations.

"Bang — people started calling and asking about it," Langer said. The conference was not the only one the Texas foundation has held. Last year, it sponsored eight seminars in the state.

But this was the first national assembly at which freedom of information group leaders have exchanged ideas on topics such as fundraising, tax information, legal aid and access to records and meetings.

Other assembly programs were a speech Friday night by John Seigenthaler, president of the American Society of Newspaper Editors, who urged opposition to a proposed return of the Fairness Doctrine for broadcasters.

On Saturday, Michael Precker, an assistant national editor for the Morning News, discussed his past experiences as a foreign correspondent.

"Nothing helps an outsider more than a vigorous corps of local journalists" pushing for press freedoms, Precker said.

In one panel discussion, FOI group leaders stressed that officials are more likely to comply with freedom of information laws if they know a court battle might result if they don't.

"They've got to understand you'll spend the money to go to court if you have to. You can't be bluff," said Pete Weitzel, managing editor of The Miami Herald and president of the First Amendment Foundation of Florida Inc.

Mel Opatowsky, senior managing editor of The Press Enterprise in Riverside, Calif., and president of the California First Amendment Coalition, said if public agency attorneys know litigation is likely, those lawyers probably will counsel against open records and meetings violations.

Group leaders highlighted some of their states' legal battles.

Ms. Willey, president of the First Amendment Coalition of Arizona Inc., said her organization went to court to force a city council to release a copy of its proposed budget — something officials claimed was not public record.

Opatowsky said his California group assisted a college newspaper staff after its office was broken into during the night by campus police.

The First Amendment Foundation of Florida, Weitzel said, has become involved in appealing a libel suit verdict by the Florida Star, a small newspaper in Jacksonville.

The suit stemmed from the use of a rape victim's name in a news story, which a state law prohibited.

Texas Parks and Wildlife director target of probe

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas Parks and Wildlife Department staff members may have gone too far when they chased and trapped three antelope for a West Texas rancher.

Department officials are investigating whether the trappers crossed the border into New Mexico in pursuit of the antelope on Jan. 30, the Austin American-Statesman reported.

TPWD Executive Director Charles D. Travis said the incident might constitute a violation of the Lacey Act, a law prohibiting the transfer without a permit of animals or animal parts across state lines or national boundaries.

Travis said retained a former Texas Ranger to head an independent investigation and said federal officials in the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service's regional office in Albuquerque, N.M., also are investigating.

"If it is a Lacey Act violation, that's a federal offense, and any type of criminal prosecution would be up to them," Travis said.

Penalties can involve stiff fines and jail terms.

The antelope capture was conducted on the Cornudas Ranch, a University of Texas land holding east of El Paso and lying against the southern New Mexico border. "It's hard to tell from up there if you've crossed the border," Travis said.

During helicopter trapping procedures, the pilot maneuvers the craft into position above the quarry so a gunner can fire a specially built net gun. A "mugger" is placed on the ground to blindfold and restrain the animal, then place it in a bag for pickup and flight back to a loading and transport staging area.

Charles Winkler, big game program director, said the capture was a routine stocking operation to meet a 1987 landowner request for antelope on the Lado Ranch.

Travis said a number of TPWD staff on the ground took part in the handling, loading and transport of the 40 antelope that were moved.

Charles Allen, TPWD wildlife division director, manned the net gun on board the helicopter hired by the department for the operation.

Court to hear AIDS discrimination case on Tuesday

AUSTIN (AP) — A state district court in Austin will hear arguments Tuesday on whether people with the AIDS virus may sue for discrimination under state law.

The case focuses on an Austin man who says he was fired from his job at an law firm after being diagnosed with AIDS-related complex, but is expected to have important implications for thousands of people in Texas with AIDS-related conditions.

At issue is whether such a firing constitutes a violation of the Texas Commission on Human Rights Act, which bars employers from discrimination based on disability.

The Legislative Task Force on AIDS concluded last year that discrimination against such individuals is common in Texas and is increasing the financial impact of acquired immune deficiency syndrome on local, tax-supported health and human services.

Gilbert Nieto sued the Austin law firm of Clark, Thomas, Winters & Newton in 1988, saying he was fired from his paralegal job after the AIDS diagnosis in August 1987.

Barry Bishop, a partner in the firm, has said Nieto was fired for taking off from work against the instructions of his immediate supervisor.

The case has not been assigned to a specific judge's court, but is set for jury trial on Feb. 27.

The law firm asked for the Tuesday hearing, seeking summary judgment to dismiss the suit. The firm cites a 1987 case, Chevron vs. Redmon, which narrowly interpreted the state act to provide protection for disabled persons only if they are so severely disabled they could not work anyway.

"We expect a ruling Tuesday," said Phil Durst, Nieto's attorney, "on whether a person with AIDS or AIDS-related complex is quote handicapped unquote as that term is defined by statute."

Nieto seeks reinstatement to his job, restoration of his health insurance benefits, back pay, attorneys' fees and an unspecified amount of damages for "severe mental and physical anguish."

WAIT

His son, Steve, 28, was slumped over a couple chairs away in dreamland.

"I'm an impatient person and the world's worst when it comes to waiting around," the older Maples admitted. "But, Steve ... nothing bothers him. He just goes to sleep. He'll start snoring somethin' awful and he sounds like a truck's a comin'. It can be darn right embarrassing sometimes."

Now, being that this is America, it must be noted that there are a few people that don't mind waiting around. They think that, heaven forbid, it is actually an opportunity to get some work accomplished.

"It's a good place to get work done," claimed Drew Johnson of Midland, who gets airborne two to three times a week in his work. "There are no phones ringing and few distractions."

Except, that is, if there is a video game nearby.

"I do enjoy playing pinball," Johnson admitted, as he put another quarter into the machine he was trying to beat. "And the key to good pinball is clean living."

If you are a people watcher, an airport lobby can be a good place to hang out, especially if you are in a larger, metropolitan airport, claims

Johnson.

"People in general are pretty funny to watch," he said. "The L.A. airport has quite a few sights."

And you never know who you might see.

Claims Johnson: "I saw Elvis impersonating a baggage handler."

Many young professionals find career, romance do mix

Copley News Service

For the young, single professional, it's hard enough to carve out a niche in the business world, let alone find time to pursue romantic interests. Maybe that's why Cupid seems to be making more and more office calls these days.

"It doesn't surprise me that people end up dating somebody in the office," said Betty Deverling, who, with her husband, owns and operates a public relations and advertising firm. "If I didn't work with my husband, we probably wouldn't see very much of each other."

Deverling met her mate outside the office and later began working with him. Others meet their mates at work and then find out the romance runs more smoothly if one or both leave the company.

"I met my husband when we were both working at a radio station," said Deborah Newman, who runs her own marketing and special events company. "At the time, work was just about the only outlet, the only place to meet a man."

If the office has become the new hunting ground for romance and prospective mates, changing demographics is probably the main reason. In 1960, the U.S. work force was 66 percent male and 34 percent female. By 1980, women made up 42 percent of the work force, men 58 percent.

AND, WOMEN today are more often the professional equals of men. They are more likely to take business trips, plan and confer with their male peers. When men and women share the same career interests, occupy jobs of similar status and work closely and successfully together, it often is natural that romantic liaisons occur.

However, in many businesses, office romances are still frowned upon, and business managers admit that romance in the workplace sometimes can lead to trouble.

"It can be a dangerous situation for the manager," said Christine Rosenbach, the former head of a human resources committee.

"It puts (managers) in the middle of a situation that they shouldn't be involved in," she continued. "If it's a case of an employee and a boss, you run the risk of favoritism, or the appearance of favoritism. If it doesn't work out, there could be all sorts of negative repercussions in the workplace."

Even Newman, who found the man of her dreams at work, agreed that office romances can complicate the work situation. When she and her spouse (David Row, now a news anchor) were dating and working together, both were very careful to keep the relationship a secret.

"When we started seeing each other, we didn't want anybody in the office to know," she recalled. Newman even used a code name (Buellah) when she called Row in his office.

"He was news director, and we didn't want anything to jeopardize his reputation," she said. "In the workplace, you have to be a professional first. You can't give people the chance to judge you on anything except your professional skills."

KEEPING THE romance quiet until both left the company for other jobs probably helped their relationship in the long run, according to Newman. "We didn't have people judging us and giving us advice." Most business managers and psychologists would agree that Newman and Row had the right approach. Office romances lead to tension and disruption in the office when the couple fails to separate their work life from the private life.

"I would think a romance at the office becomes a problem when you begin to confuse the boundaries between your professional life and your personal life," said Edna Groves, a psychologist. "The key is to keep the two separate. It also helps to look at the possible consequences when you're entering the relationship."

From a manager's standpoint, Rosenbach said there is nothing wrong or unethical about finding a flame among the ranks of fellow-employees — providing the two lovebirds are discreet about their liaison.

"There is certainly no way an employer can have a policy that forbids employees from dating each other, although they can say something or transfer someone if it's affecting job performance."

Rosenbach said she knows of no such cases. "Most managers don't have much to say about office romance because, most of the time, the employees keep it quiet. So (bosses) don't know about the relationship."

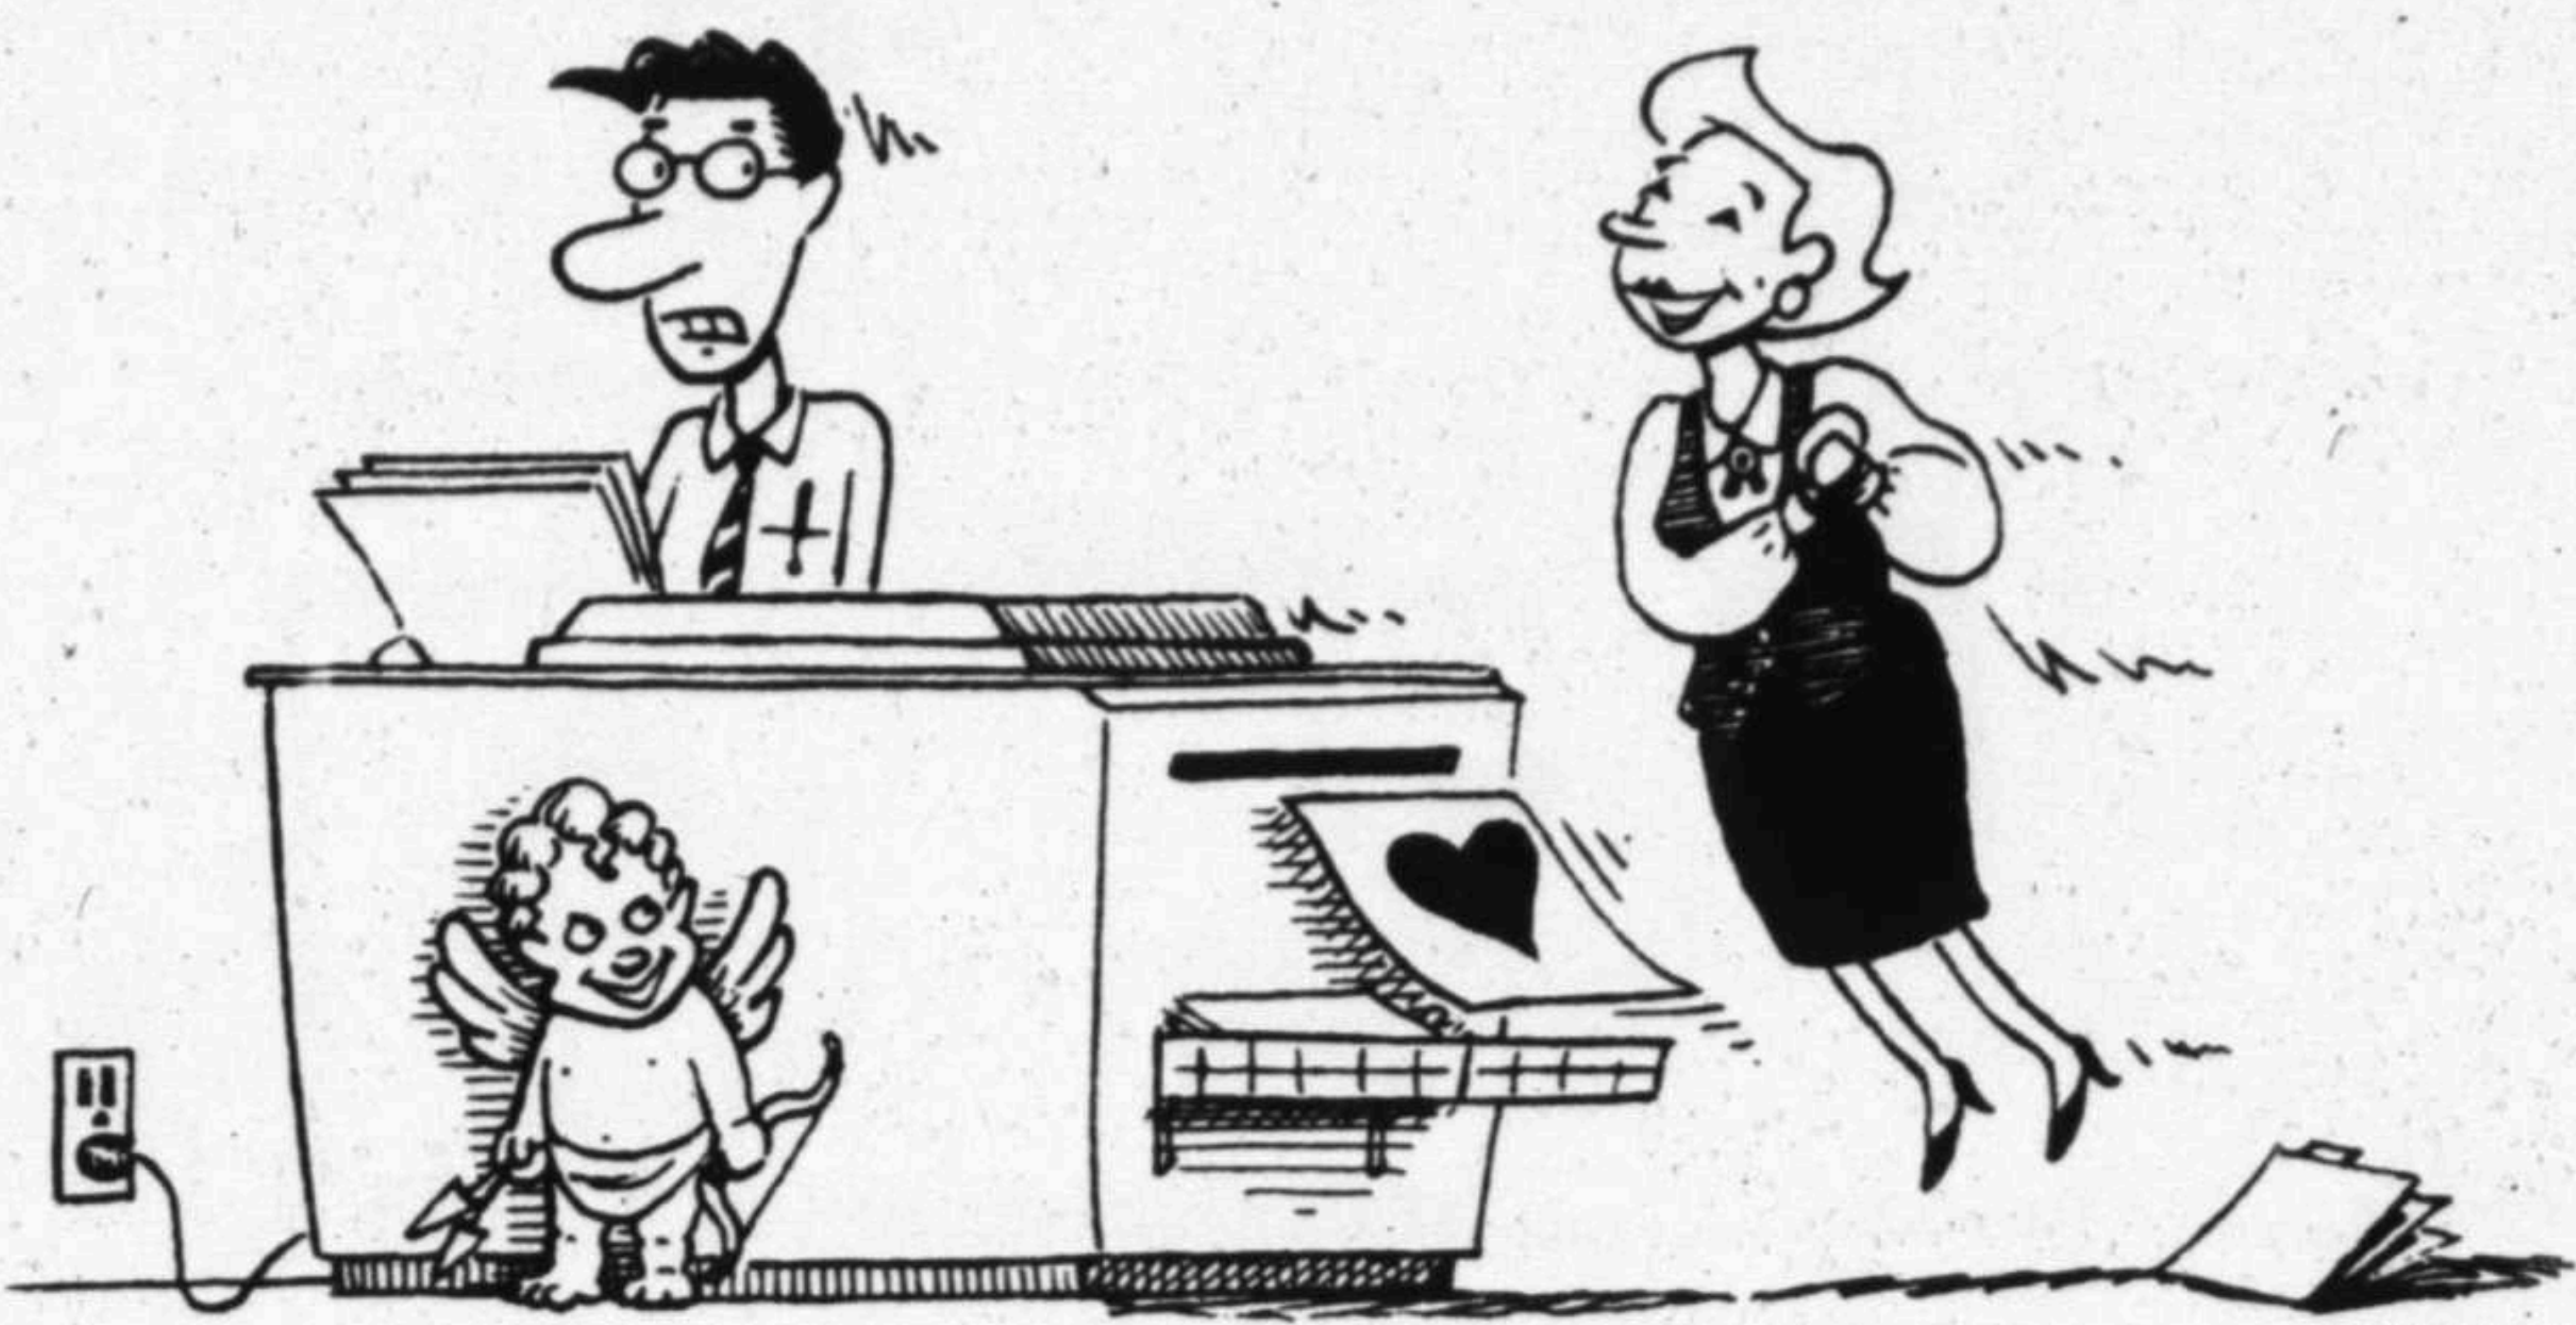

Deverling said she also believes that most office romances occur without the knowledge of anyone else in the office.

"Women don't want to run the risk of damaging their credibility. And, like it or not, a relationship can damage your credibility in the eyes of your peers," Deverling said.

"Professional people at work are not primarily interested in socializing. They are professionals. Business and making a profit come first; socializing comes later."

NEWMAN AND Row let their co-workers in on their romance when they announced their engagement. By that time, both were leaving the company, and their fellow-workers were delighted to learn of a case of true love that blossomed in their office.

"It worked perfectly for us," said Newman, although she added that she and her husband would not work

Expert claims full-time mothering coming back 'in'

Copley News Service

If you think full-time mothering is on its way out, think again. More working Moms are giving up the 9-to-5 routine and returning to the nest to care for their kids.

At least that's the claim of market analyst, Phil Lempert.

He says the latest Census Bureau statistics suggest that the trend in women working while their children are very young might have peaked.

According to Lempert, the number of working women with children under 18 years old hit 65 percent last March.

And while that was a slight gain from the year before, it represents less than half the average annual gain between 1970 and 1987.

In addition, Lempert says the number of working women with infants actually decreased during 1987. So are ladies going to give up working entirely while their kids are at home?

Lempert says no, but he thinks many women will choose to work part time instead.

together now because radio and the media "are too competitive; you're too often competing with each other."

After six years of marriage, one child and a second on the way, would Newman recommend the office as the best hunting ground for a mate?

For most single women today, she said, there are few other places to meet eligible men. Many single people, both men and women, shun the shallowness and the "meat market" atmosphere of the singles bars. Others simply don't have the time to go to bars.

"For a while when I was single and just starting off, I didn't meet anybody except the people I met at work," said Newman. "Work was the center of my life."

"Either you have blind dates or you meet people to date at work. At least with people from work you know you'll have some similar interests and something to talk about."

'Bubbly' advice given just in time for Valentine's Day

NEW YORK (AP) — Millions of romantics wine and dine their sweethearts in celebration of Valentine's Day. But remember, when it comes to champagne, what holds true for Valentine's Day also applies to other special occasions.

"A glass of champagne at a certain time of life is a most precious friend," says Claude Taittinger, president-director-general of Champagne Taittinger. "The sky becomes bluer, life seems more pleasant."

He adds, "I have calculated that over my lifetime, I have enjoyed over 25,000 bottles!"

The following are some of Taittinger's suggestions on selecting, storing and serving champagne:

BUYING AND STORING

■ Selecting a bottle of champagne is easier than choosing a bottle of still wine.

Aside from price, simply consider what style best suits your personal taste — from dry (brut) to sweet (demi-sec), light and fruity, to full-bodied and toasty.

Taittinger says non-vintage champagne tends to have a fresh, fruity aroma, while vintage champagne has a deeper, more intense bouquet.

■ Always buy champagne from a busy shop with a lot of turnover. This ensures that bottles are not left on the shelf for long periods of time.

Beware of dusty and faded labels; this indicates that the wine has been in the store too long, and has also been overly exposed to light.

Champagne can lose its zest rapidly, often in as little as 24 hours, if stored in hot, bright conditions.

Taittinger recommends storing it in a dark, cool place (approximately 50 degrees F).

■ Champagne should be stored horizontally so that the cork is kept moist, creating an airtight seal.

Since all wine is filled to slightly below cork level, if bottles are left upright the cork will dry. The resulting deterioration can allow air to enter the bottle, which in turn oxidizes the wine.

A "corked" champagne takes on the distinct, slightly unpleasant flavor and the aroma of the cork.

SERVING AND ENJOYING

■ Champagne should always be enjoyed immediately after opening, and should be served cool, not cold, at a maximum temperature of 45 degrees F.

Store the bottle in a refrigerator door for about an hour, or in a bucket with ice and water for 10 minutes or so. Allowing the champagne to get colder can rob it of its bouquet and numb the palate.

■ The "bead" refers to the size and quantity of the champagne's bubbles. Generally, the finer the bubbles, the more expensive the champagne.

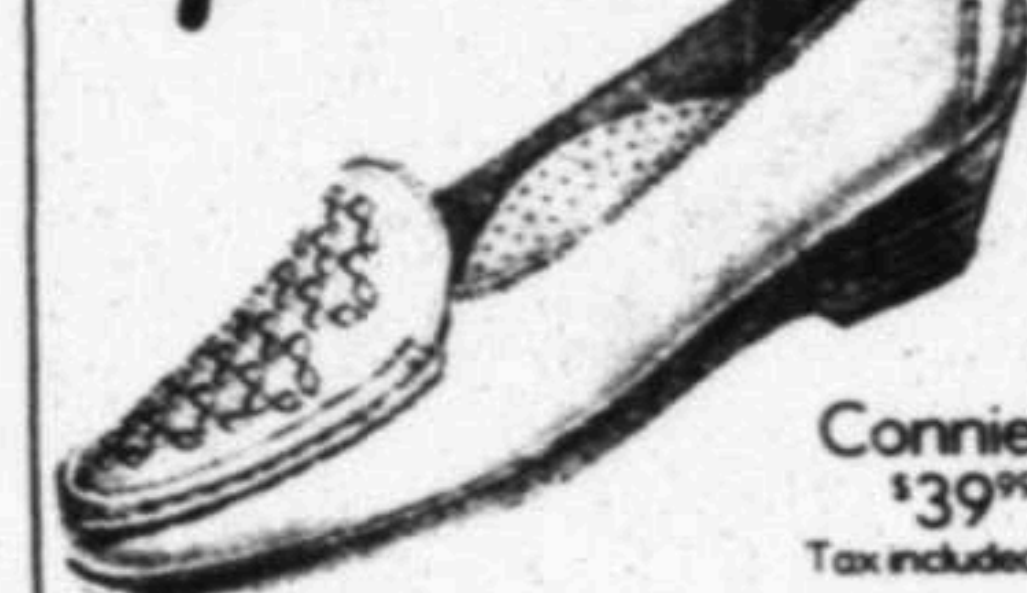

■ The shape of the glass is very important when serving champagne. Never use a coupe or saucer-shaped glass. These types of glasses don't allow maximum enjoyment of the bouquet or bead.

Taittinger recommends a tulip-shaped champagne glass that holds the bead once poured into a glass.

■ Champagne makes a perfect aperitif, but if sparkling wine will be poured throughout a meal, Taittinger recommends saving the richer, more full-bodied wines to drink with food.

Champagne Taittinger of Reims, France, is a privately held champagne house. Champagne Taittinger's marques include Brut La Francaise (non-vintage); Brut Milleime (1982); and two tates de cuvee, Comtes de Champagne Blanc de Blancs and Comtes de Champagne Rose.

DEAR ABBY

Little gifts of love make Valentine's Day sweeter

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR READERS: Don't tell me tomorrow is St. Valentine's Day already — we just finished with Christmas! Well, it is, so be a sweetheart and call someone you love and say, "I love you." Make two or three calls. Who said you can't love more than one person? — in different ways, of course.

Go through your closets and part with those clothes you've been saving until you lose 10 pounds. Your favorite charity can turn those good-as-new garments into cash.

Call someone who's lonely and say, "I'm thinking of you." Or better yet, say, "I'll be over tomorrow to take you to lunch, run some errands or give you a ride."

Arrange a date for someone who doesn't get many.

Take an oath never to drive if you've been drinking — and don't let anyone who's been drinking drive.

Forgive an enemy, quit smoking, count your calories, return that book

(and everything else) you've borrowed, update your will, donate your eyes, your kidneys and all usable organs to someone who can use them after you're gone. Spay your dog, neuter your cat, pay your dentist, hug your teen-ager, listen to a bore and stop littering.

Always drive carefully, and if you're walking, thank God you're able to, and watch where you're going. And don't wait until next St. Valentine's Day to be a sweetheart again.

DEAR ABBY: I'm sure my problem isn't too uncommon, but even at my age (I'm a senior citizen), it has me somewhat baffled.

I was asked out to lunch by a gentleman who made it rather clear that we should order the "special" of the house. (It was not an inexpensive restaurant, by the way.)

Abby, I'm not used to having to order the cheapest thing on the menu, and I resent it. I believe that when a gentleman asks a lady out, he should be prepared to allow her to order whatever she pleases. Am I wrong?

Well, he has asked me out again. I really like going to nice restaurants, and this man can well afford it. He seems to want to spend some time with me (he calls me every day), but how can I let him know I enjoy the finer things of life without seeming greedy or grabby?

At my age, I really don't need someone who is always looking for the cheapest way to go. I'd rather pay my own way, but it's nice to have a male companion. We get along very well, by the way. What do you suggest? — LIKES TO GO FIRST

DEAR LIKES: If you get along well and enjoy the gentleman's company, insist on going Dutch. That way you may order whatever you want, and he can see firsthand that you are a lady who enjoys the best. If that doesn't loosen the old boy up, he's hopeless.

The facts about drugs, AIDS and how to prevent unwanted pregnancy are all in Abby's new, expanded booklet, "What Every Teen Should Know." To order, send your name and address, plus check or money order for $3.50 ($4 in Canada) to: Dear Abby's Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. Postage is included.

'Driven' behavior reflects individual's outlook on life

By LYNNE KORNECKI
Copley News Service

For most of us, driving is a fact of daily life. Our cars are practically part of our families, even rating their own special room in our homes — the garage. We rely and depend on them to get us where we're going, and feel stressed and stranded when repairs send them to the shop.

But what happens to your personality when you get behind the wheel? Are you a soft-spoken Dr. Jekyll at home and a raving Mr. Hyde in your car? Do you roar out of the driveway, impatient to reach your destination — tail-gating, speeding, running yellows and in general driving everyone else on the road crazy? Are you ready to blast your horn and blow your stack when someone cuts you off? Or are you entirely the opposite — feeling intimidated, threatened and nervous when confronted with those who have bad driving habits.

Picture the following scenario: It's 3 p.m. and you're driving your children home from school on a narrow, winding, pock-marked street that has no shoulder and a speed limit of 35. Glancing in your rear view mirror, you suddenly see a little red sports car zoom up behind you. It's so close that you can see the driver and his passenger making obscene gestures at your law-abiding speed. They're riding your rear bumper so closely that you can't even see the front end of their car in your mirror. As the driver, responsible for the safety of your young passengers, you feel edged and threatened into going faster.

What do you do? Do you rise to the other driver's baiting or pull over and let the road hog have his or her way?

IMPROPER DRIVING, according to National Safety Council statistics, accounted for 62 percent of fatalities in motor vehicle collisions in 1987. The council defines improper driving as: speeding, disregarding various rights of way, driving left of center, passing improperly, following too closely and making inappropriate turns.

Ronald Nelson, a clinical social worker with a private practice in Wheaton, Ill., says our psychological reactions on busy expressways are comparable to those we may have in other hectic, crowded places, such as Saturday mornings at the grocery store. Shoppers are pushing their carts around, mindlessly stopping in front of others, or stopping unexpectedly, meandering in the center of the aisle — mindless to others who are shopping faster and who may want to pass.

"In these circumstances, whether it's the highway or the grocery store, our internal needs set us up as either capable or powerless — winners or losers," Nelson said. "Our past fears, past experiences and personal biases are projected into what is going on around us."

Unfortunately, in our culture, he observed, people have the mindset that someone has to win and someone has to lose. This perspective gives rise to a flurry of emotions as we all jockey for position in our daily life determining winners and losers.

"Cars, therefore, are an extension of our personalities," continued. "Their styling and the power they represent can be very important to some people. And if we accept that our cars are an extension of ourselves and the image we project, so too, is the way we drive."

NELSON GENERALIZED that those who go through life with feelings of inadequacy can buy a powerful, fast sportscar and feel as though they are projecting a new image to the world around them. Those who feel perfectly adequate can drive a practical, economical car because it is no threat to how they feel about themselves.

So now there are all these people with various internal needs and desires placed in a powerful, artificial extensions of themselves. What happens? They hit the road and face driving conditions the same way they do social conflicts, contends

Nelson. When they're cut off by another car, they view it as a personal attack, feeling justified in protecting themselves by fighting back with another unsafe maneuver.

Our driving styles, Nelson says, are merely continuations of our personalities, similar in style to our other areas of social interaction. For instance, if we are aggressive in our dealing with others, than we'll be aggressive on the roadways. If we are passive and slow at the office, chances are that we're the same behind the wheel.

Our competition with one another extends to driving. "There's always that impatient driver behind the car doing the speed limit, tail-gating and thinking, 'Don't you know you can go 40 in a 35!'" said Nelson.

THERE WILL always be those who love a challenge. They drive recklessly because they're confident that their four-wheel drive can handle the road, no matter what the weather conditions.

"We like to assume that we're all functioning at a logical, rational level of understanding," Nelson said. "However, no one is really totally rational — we have bouts of it from time to time, but in general, humans are subjective beings. Everyone has a different reality and different perception."

He added that those who complain about women drivers are projecting their prejudices onto the highways. It is merely an extension of the male/female conflict that already exists in the individual's life.

"These persons will tend to seek out examples of their biases so that they can say, 'See what that woman just did in front of us — what did I tell you about women drivers?'"

Accident, DUIs, and speeding tickets are not necessarily a reflection of driving problems, but of a personality problem, Nelson says. These people lament that they were in the wrong place at the wrong time. They are oblivious to how their behavior contributed to their own downfall.

"It's always easier to point the finger at someone else, saying the problem is out there somewhere, certainly not within me," Nelson explained.

There is also a type of pecking order on the highway, Nelson observed. Those same human traits and characteristics that are present in the office are on the roadway, as well. Picture the man driving his new Rolls Royce impressing the middle class family in their humble Chevette, as he proudly passes them by. Then there's the intimidation that the Pinto driver feels as the big semi zooms up behind him and around. "This pecking order is merely an extension of the winner/loser approach to life," he said.

SO WHAT is the psychologists' answer to improving bad driving habits? "Court ordered driving classes don't get to the root of the problem within an individual's driving," Nelson said. "The key is for people to find peace within themselves — not to feel personally attacked if someone does something on the road they don't like."

Understanding others, not burdening ourselves with unrealistic expectations, and avoiding the win/lose approach to life will contribute to a more rational driving style, Nelson says.

"Everyone has the right to be on the roadway — to get to where they're going. We need to feel that we are all winners."

Anger, cynical mistrust may raise risk of death

Copley News Service

MONTEREY, Calif. — People who immediately become angry, and show it, when someone is holding up traffic, an elevator or an express checkout lane are most likely to die of heart disease or certain other causes, a psychiatry researcher reports.

Anger, aggression and cynical mistrust of others are the only personality traits that can be linked with poor health and higher death rates, new research suggests.

On the other hand, no evidence exists of increased health risk for people with other components of the traditional "Type A" personality, such as competitiveness, impatience and always being in a hurry, said Dr. Redford Williams Jr. of Duke University Medical Center in North Carolina.

Speaking at the American Heart Association's annual science writers forum, Williams said the phrase "Type A" and its broad definition should be abandoned. Psychiatrists for years have linked the driven, workaholic personality category to higher risk of heart disease.

In the personality research, several recent studies have shown that coronary artery disease and death rates are more strongly related to hostility, as measured by a widely used questionnaire, than to Type A itself, Williams said.

In his most recent research, which has not yet been published, the risks were further narrowed to only certain aspects of hostility: frequent anger, open expression of that anger and "a cynical mistrust regarding the motives of people in general."

By contrast, no higher risk was associated with the hostility test questions indicating paranoia, social avoidance or general neurotic personality, Williams said. The study compared the death rates of 118 male lawyers with their answers on the test 25 years earlier in law school.

Williams said he plans to extend the study to women and believes that they may not respond to harassment as aggressively as men.

The kind of hostile anger that can be deadly is not just anxiety caused by delays or difficulties, Williams said. He described it this way:

"If you're in a bank line that's moving too slowly, you immediately begin to have thoughts such as, 'Why don't people have their bank slips ready?' It's a negative view of human nature."

Those with higher death rates also had said on the hostility test that they did not try to hide their anger, displaying aggressive reactions that might be as simple as facial expressions, Williams said. However, he said suppressing anger is not necessarily more healthful.

Hostile personalities probably are inherited and apparently have biological effects and causes, Williams said. For instance, spurts of high blood pressure have been measured in high-hostility people when they are hassled.

The personality difference may be caused at least partly by an imbalance in the nervous system that controls and calms adrenalin production, he said.

However, Williams said, behavior changes can lower the risk. He recommended that people who feel angry or irritated try to stop and reason through cynical thoughts, consider others' viewpoints, learn to laugh at themselves and practice listening and forgiving.

Diabetes silent

KALAMAZOO, Mich. (AP) — Barely half the nation's adults have been tested in the past year for diabetes — the third leading killer disease.

A survey by the Gallup Organization — commissioned by Upjohn Co. — found that 48.5 percent of the 1,004 adults questioned had not followed the call for annual blood screening made last year by the American Diabetes Association and the National Institutes of Health. People over 40, overweight and with a family history of diabetes are targeted as most at risk.

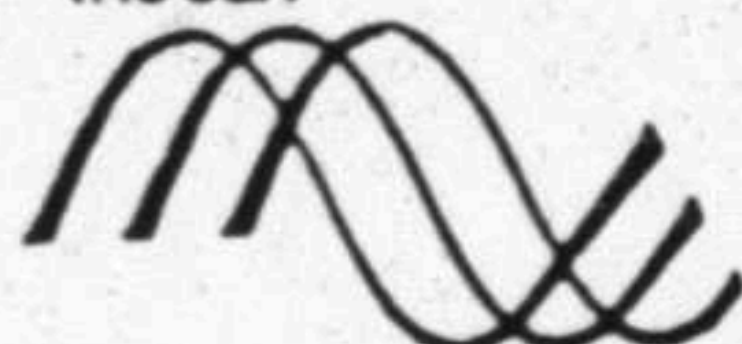

An estimated 12 million Americans have diabetes but only half know it. Left untreated, diabetes can damage blood vessels and nerves, leading to kidney disease, gangrene and blindness in addition to heart attack and stroke.

Dr. Arthur Krosnick, editor of Diabetes Forecast, says, "Non-insulin-dependent diabetes, which accounts for 80 to 90 percent of all diabetes, commonly develops in adults slowly and without symptoms."

Chaps get another shot at No. 1 OC

From Staff Reports

When Midland College and Odessa College met last month in Midland, the Chaps pushed the nation's top junior college team to the limit.

MC hopes to push that a little more to a victory when the teams battle again today at the OC Sports Complex. But the Chaps will have to do it with little fan support, as just 140 tickets were allocated to Midland for the 8 p.m. game in the Odessa College Sports Center.

In contrast to last season when the teams met five times, this is just the second meeting of the season between the neighborhood rivals. OC took the first game 84-82.

Midland is somewhat different than it was in January. For one thing, Tim Owens is back with the team after regaining his academic eligibility. And the Chaps are playing with a lot of confidence, which they showed Thursday in a 116-92 win over New Mexico Junior College.

Undeclared for the year, the Wranglers have been pushed to the limit on occasions and in other games have been brutally dominating. South Plains College, with just two losses for the year, lost by a point, 81-80, at Odessa earlier in the season.

OC is led by All-American and probably All-World Larry Johnson, who is averaging more than 23 points per game. Johnson got 27 against the Chaps in their first meeting.

Midland's leading scorer, Charles "Smokey" McCovery, hit for only six points against Odessa last month but MC got strong efforts from Fred Campbell, Troy Taylor, Kethus

Hanks, and Darryl King.

Tonight's game is the first of three on the road for the Chaps in a six-day span. They go to Clarendon Thursday, then travel to Roswell on Saturday for a make-up game with New Mexico Military Institute. The last regular-season game is at Chap Center on Feb. 23, when the Chaps host Frank Phillips College.

FPC handed OC a walk-over Thursday night, forfeiting its scheduled game in Odessa because most of the FPC players were down with the flu. South Plains sits solidly in second place and could have a chance to gain a tie, or even the conference lead if the Chaps could upset the Wranglers and South Plains could win at home over OC Thursday night.

Midland currently owns third place with an 8-4 conference mark, a game ahead of Howard College. Three of MC's four conference losses have been at home. To date, they've dropped only an overtime game at South Plains College in conference road action.

Mailman stamps out East chance

HOUSTON (AP) — The Mailman finally got his stamp of approval.

Karl Malone is not considered a superstar in the class with Magic Johnson, Larry Bird, and Michael Jordan. But he's a lot closer to that status today after delivering a powerful performance in the NBA All-Star Game on Sunday.

Malone's effort put a national spotlight on him that he doesn't receive that often playing in Salt Lake City for the Utah Jazz.

He contributed 28 points, three coming on resounding slam-dunks, and had nine rebounds for the West in a 143-134 victory over the East.

It didn't hurt Malone's bid for superstardom that the game was on national television and an All-Star game record 44,735 were in the Astrodome.

"I read a story that said this game wouldn't be the same without Magic and Bird (both injured)," Malone said. "I cut that article out. It inspired me because I disagreed with the article totally. The NBA has a lot of great athletes."

Malone knows he isn't a household name yet although he is starting to make the covers of some national magazines based on his play in the NBA playoffs last year.

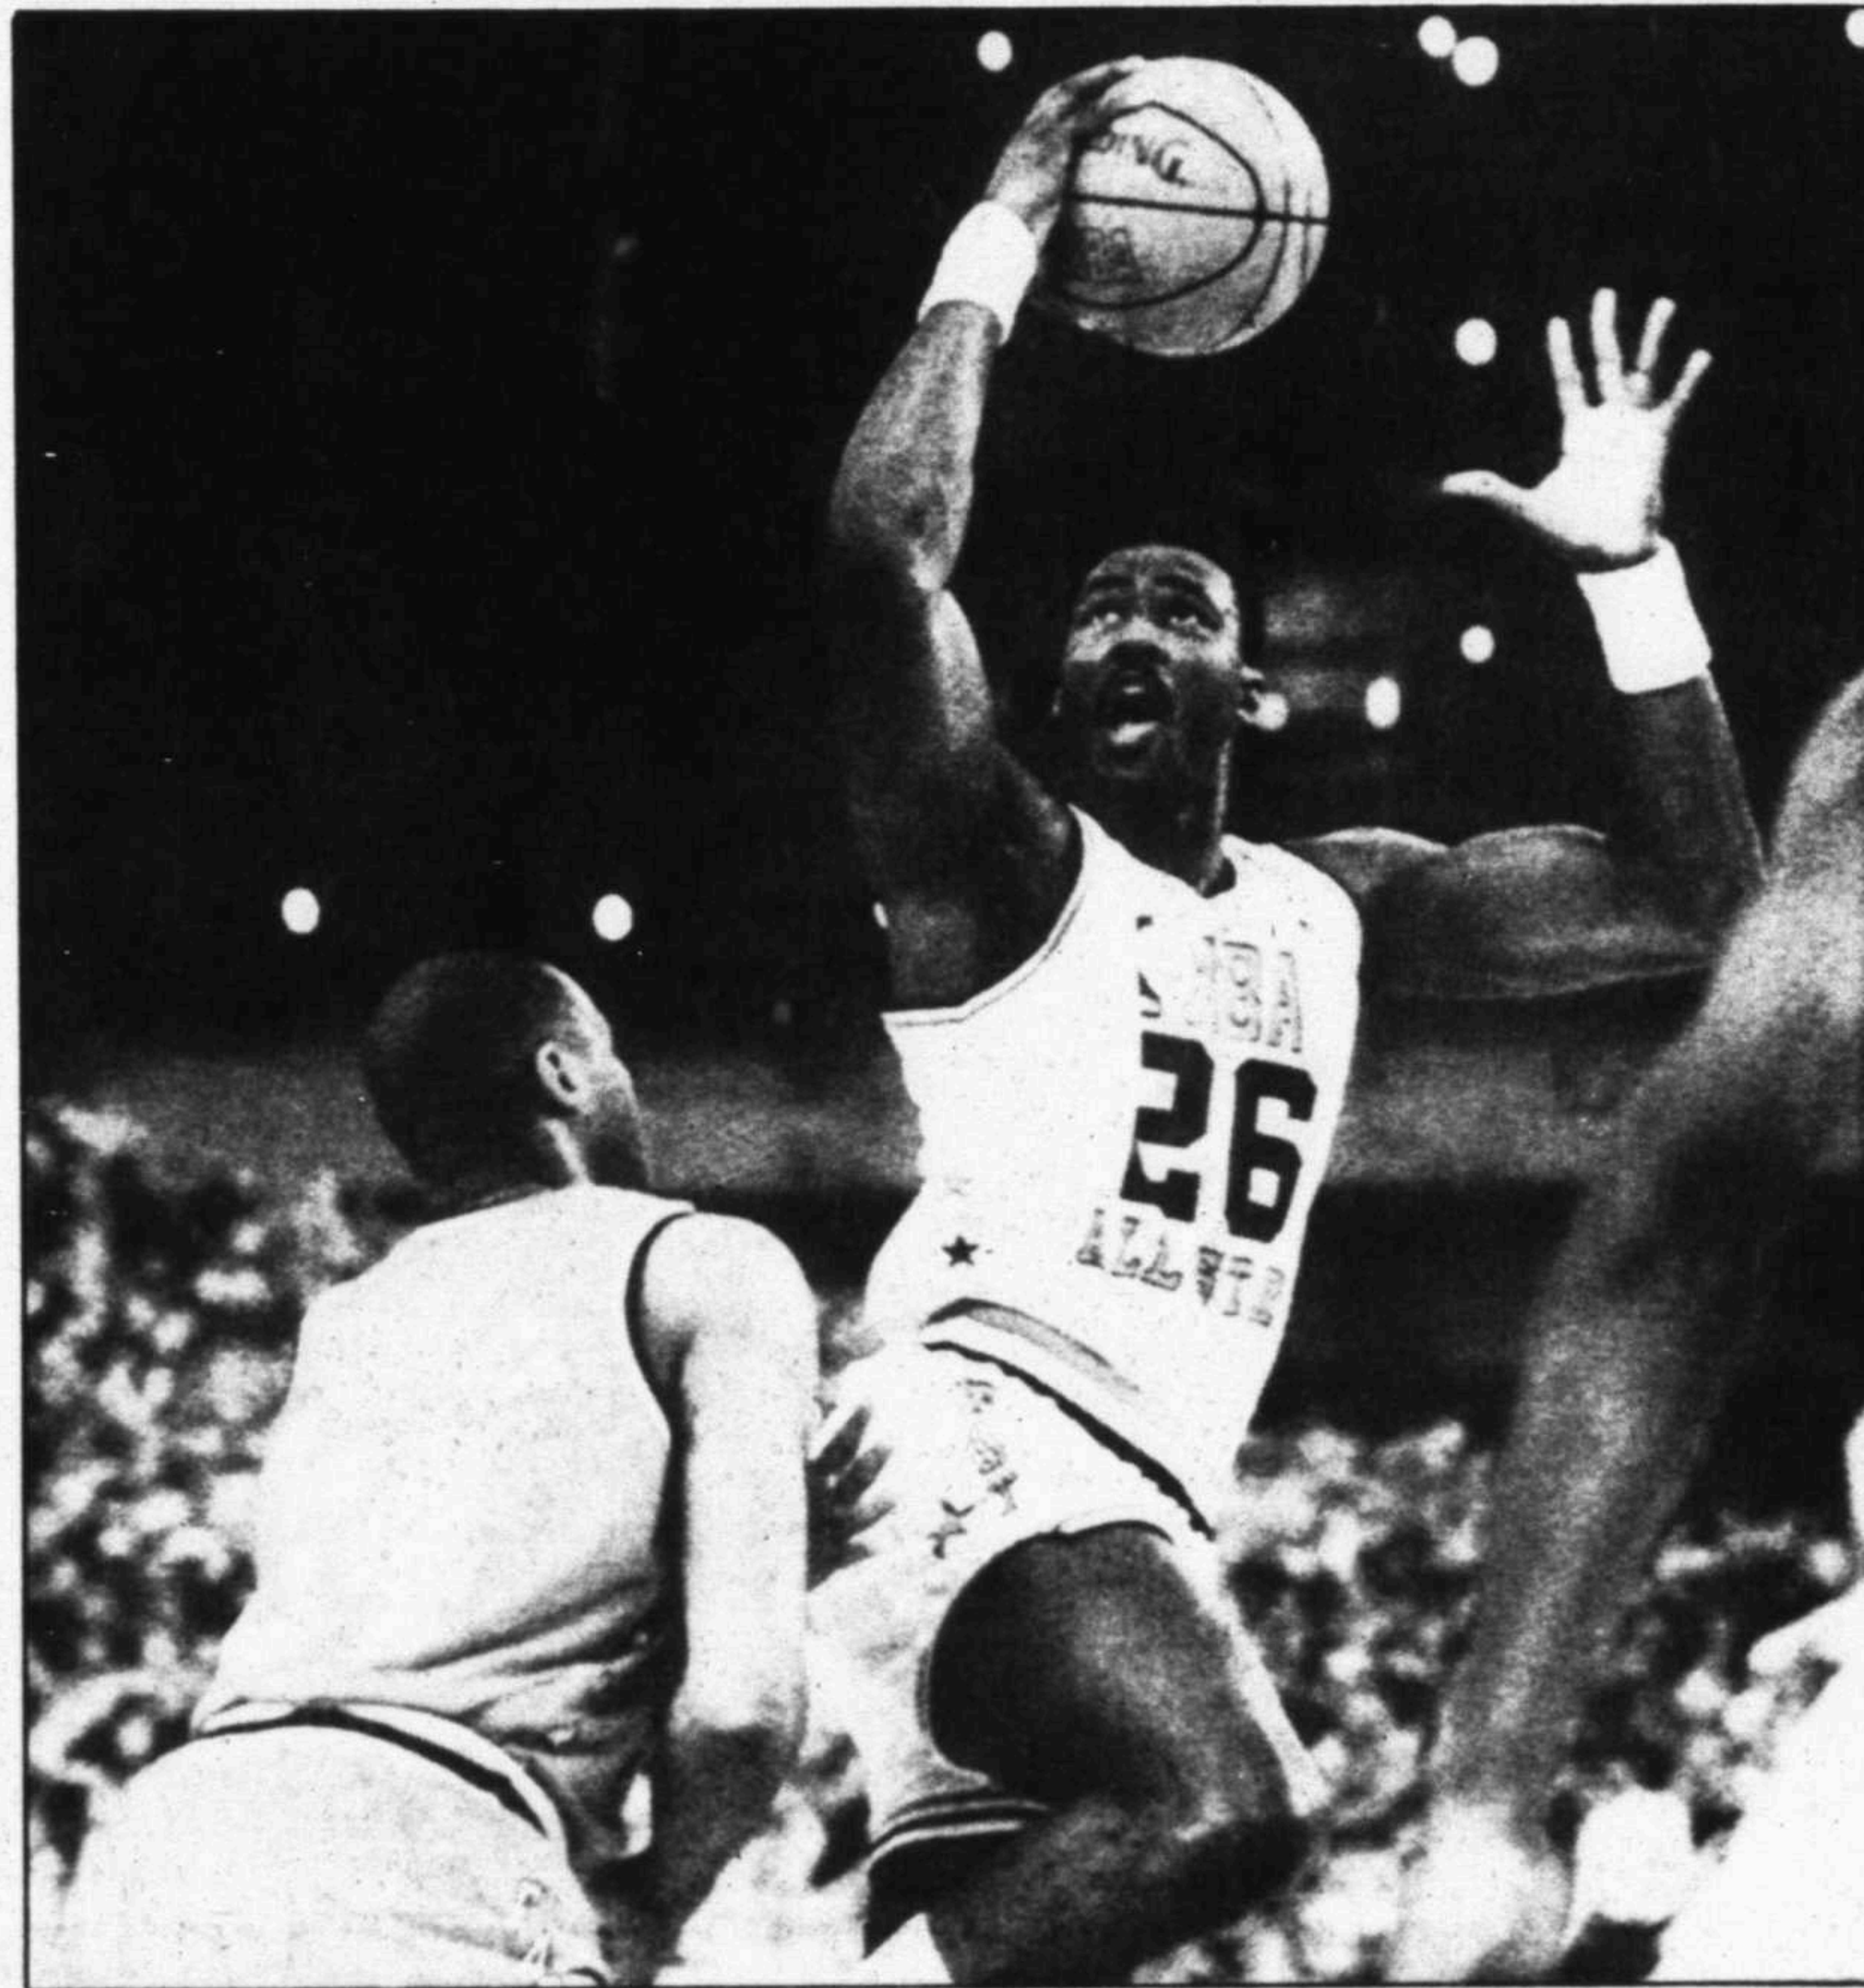

He's not in a television market like New York, Los Angeles, and Chicago.

"I may be from the big country but for one day, I'm king of the city," he said. "There are probably a lot of people saying 'Who is that guy?'"

Malone was magnificent in the NBA playoffs last year as the Jazz took the Los Angeles Lakers to seven games in the Western semifinals before losing.

He averaged 29 points per game and drew the respect of the Lakers' Pat Riley, who was also the West coach in Sunday's game.

New generation leads West win

HOUSTON (AP) — Coach Pat Riley had the best seat in the house for watching the next generation of superstars in the NBA.

He saw the new wave, led by Utah's Karl Malone and John Stockton, take a few plays from the Jazz playbook as the West beat the East 143-134 Sunday in the NBA All-Star game at the Astrodome.

"Stockton, Dale Ellis and Malone are showing us that we are seeing the changing of the guard in the league," Riley said. "The young stars are really making their impact."

The West started the game in a gallop and had taken control by the second quarter with Stockton feeding passes to Malone.

Riley also gave the record crowd of 44,735 what they wanted by sending retiring Kareem Abdul-Jabbar onto the floor for the final time in an NBA All-Star game.

Abdul-Jabbar played 13 crowd-pleasing minutes and it didn't matter to the fans that he didn't score until two seconds remained in the half and he connected only once with his famous sky hook.

"I just wanted to see him hit that sky hook before it was over," Riley said. "He thought it might be his last chance."

Abdul-Jabbar replaced Akeem Olajuwon of Houston in the final minutes of the game and finally hit a hook, his only field goal of the game.

"I wanted to see me get a field goal too," Abdul-Jabbar said. "It might be my last chance."

Malone, voted the game's most valuable player, scored 28 points, including 8-for-9 shooting in the first half.

Isiah Thomas of Detroit scored 19 points and Philadelphia's Charles Barkley added 17 points for the East.

Ellis, $20,000 richer after winning the long distance shooting contest on Saturday, scored 27 points for the West.

Stockton scored 11 points and had 17 assists for the game, including an All-Star record nine assists in the first quarter.

Stockton finished second to Malone in balloting for MVP after replacing Magic Johnson as the West's starting point guard.

"Magic is the best point guard in the league," Stockton said. "None can ever replace him. Today was just one of those days when I saw the floor real well and everybody just anticipated the passes."

After Johnson had to withdraw from the All-Star game because of a hamstring injury, Riley decided to take a few pages from Utah's play book.

"As soon as I learned that Magic wouldn't be there, I switched to the Utah Jazz offense," Riley said. "Stockton really did a good job of running the team."

The West took control over a two minute span of the first quarter.

Starting from a 12-12 deadlock, the West outscored the East 13-2, jumping to a 25-14 lead.

In that run, Stockton had four assists and Malone hit three baskets in a row.

The West led 47-31 at the first quarter and its biggest lead was 76-45 with 3:53 left in the first half.

"In the locker room yesterday (Saturday) before practice, most of the team had that look in their eye," Malone said. "Last year, a lot of us were just happy to be on the West squad and a part of the All-Star game."

"But this year, we wanted to win it. We were determined to give it our best shot."

The East rallied in the second half to make the final score respectable, led by Chicago's Michael Jordan, who scored 16 of his 28 points in the second half.

The East reduced its deficit to 123-116 with 5:56 to go in the game, setting the stage for a close finish.

Cowboys plan coaching staff shakeup

IRVING (AP) — The anticipated shakeup of the Dallas Cowboys' coaching staff is expected to begin today when George Hill is named to replace longtime assistant Ernie Stautner as defensive coordinator, according to published reports.

Hill, defensive coordinator with the Indianapolis Colts for the past four seasons before he was released, will be introduced at an afternoon news conference, The Dallas Morning News and the Fort Worth Star-Telegram reported in today's editions.

Dallas Coach Tom Landry declined comment, but Hill confirmed from his home in Indianapolis that he would fly to Dallas today for the announcement.

"I'm excited about being part of the Dallas organization," Hill told The News. "I've got great respect for

Bright looks for buyer

DALLAS (AP) — H.R. "Bum" Bright is finding it's not as glamorous to own a professional sports franchise as it once was. Almost one year after putting the Dallas Cowboys on the market, Bright is still seeking a buyer for his National Football League franchise.

"Teams for sale have sat there for a long time," said Art Modell, who owns the Cleveland Browns and believes selling an NFL franchise is a "matter of timing."

"Not everyone wants a football team."

Tom Landry, and I want to help the Cowboys turn things around."

Stautner, 61, joined Landry's staff in 1966 as defensive line coach. He has held the title of defensive coordinator and defensive line coach for the past 20 seasons. It remained unclear how Hill's addition would affect Stautner.

Stautner could not be reached for comment. But sources said it was their understanding that he would not be fired. They said several possibilities had been discussed, ranging from keeping his job as defensive line coach to moving into another position, such as quality control or scouting.

Landry also declined comment on Stautner's status.

"Whatever we're going to do, we're going to release tomorrow (Monday)," Landry said. "That will tell the complete story."

Hill was one of six assistants released by Indianapolis Coach Ron Meyer at the end of the season. Meyer, who reportedly wants to go with a more gambling, blitzing defense in 1989, cited a difference of philosophy between himself and Hill in explaining why Hill was not asked to return.

Hill began his NFL coaching career in 1979 with the Philadelphia Eagles. He worked as the team's line

Cocaine use by horses investigated

ARCADIA, Calif. (AP) — D. Wayne Lukas and Laz Barrera can continue to enter horses at Santa Anita while the California Horse Racing Board investigates positive tests for cocaine in the systems of horses they trained at Del Mar last summer, officials said Sunday.

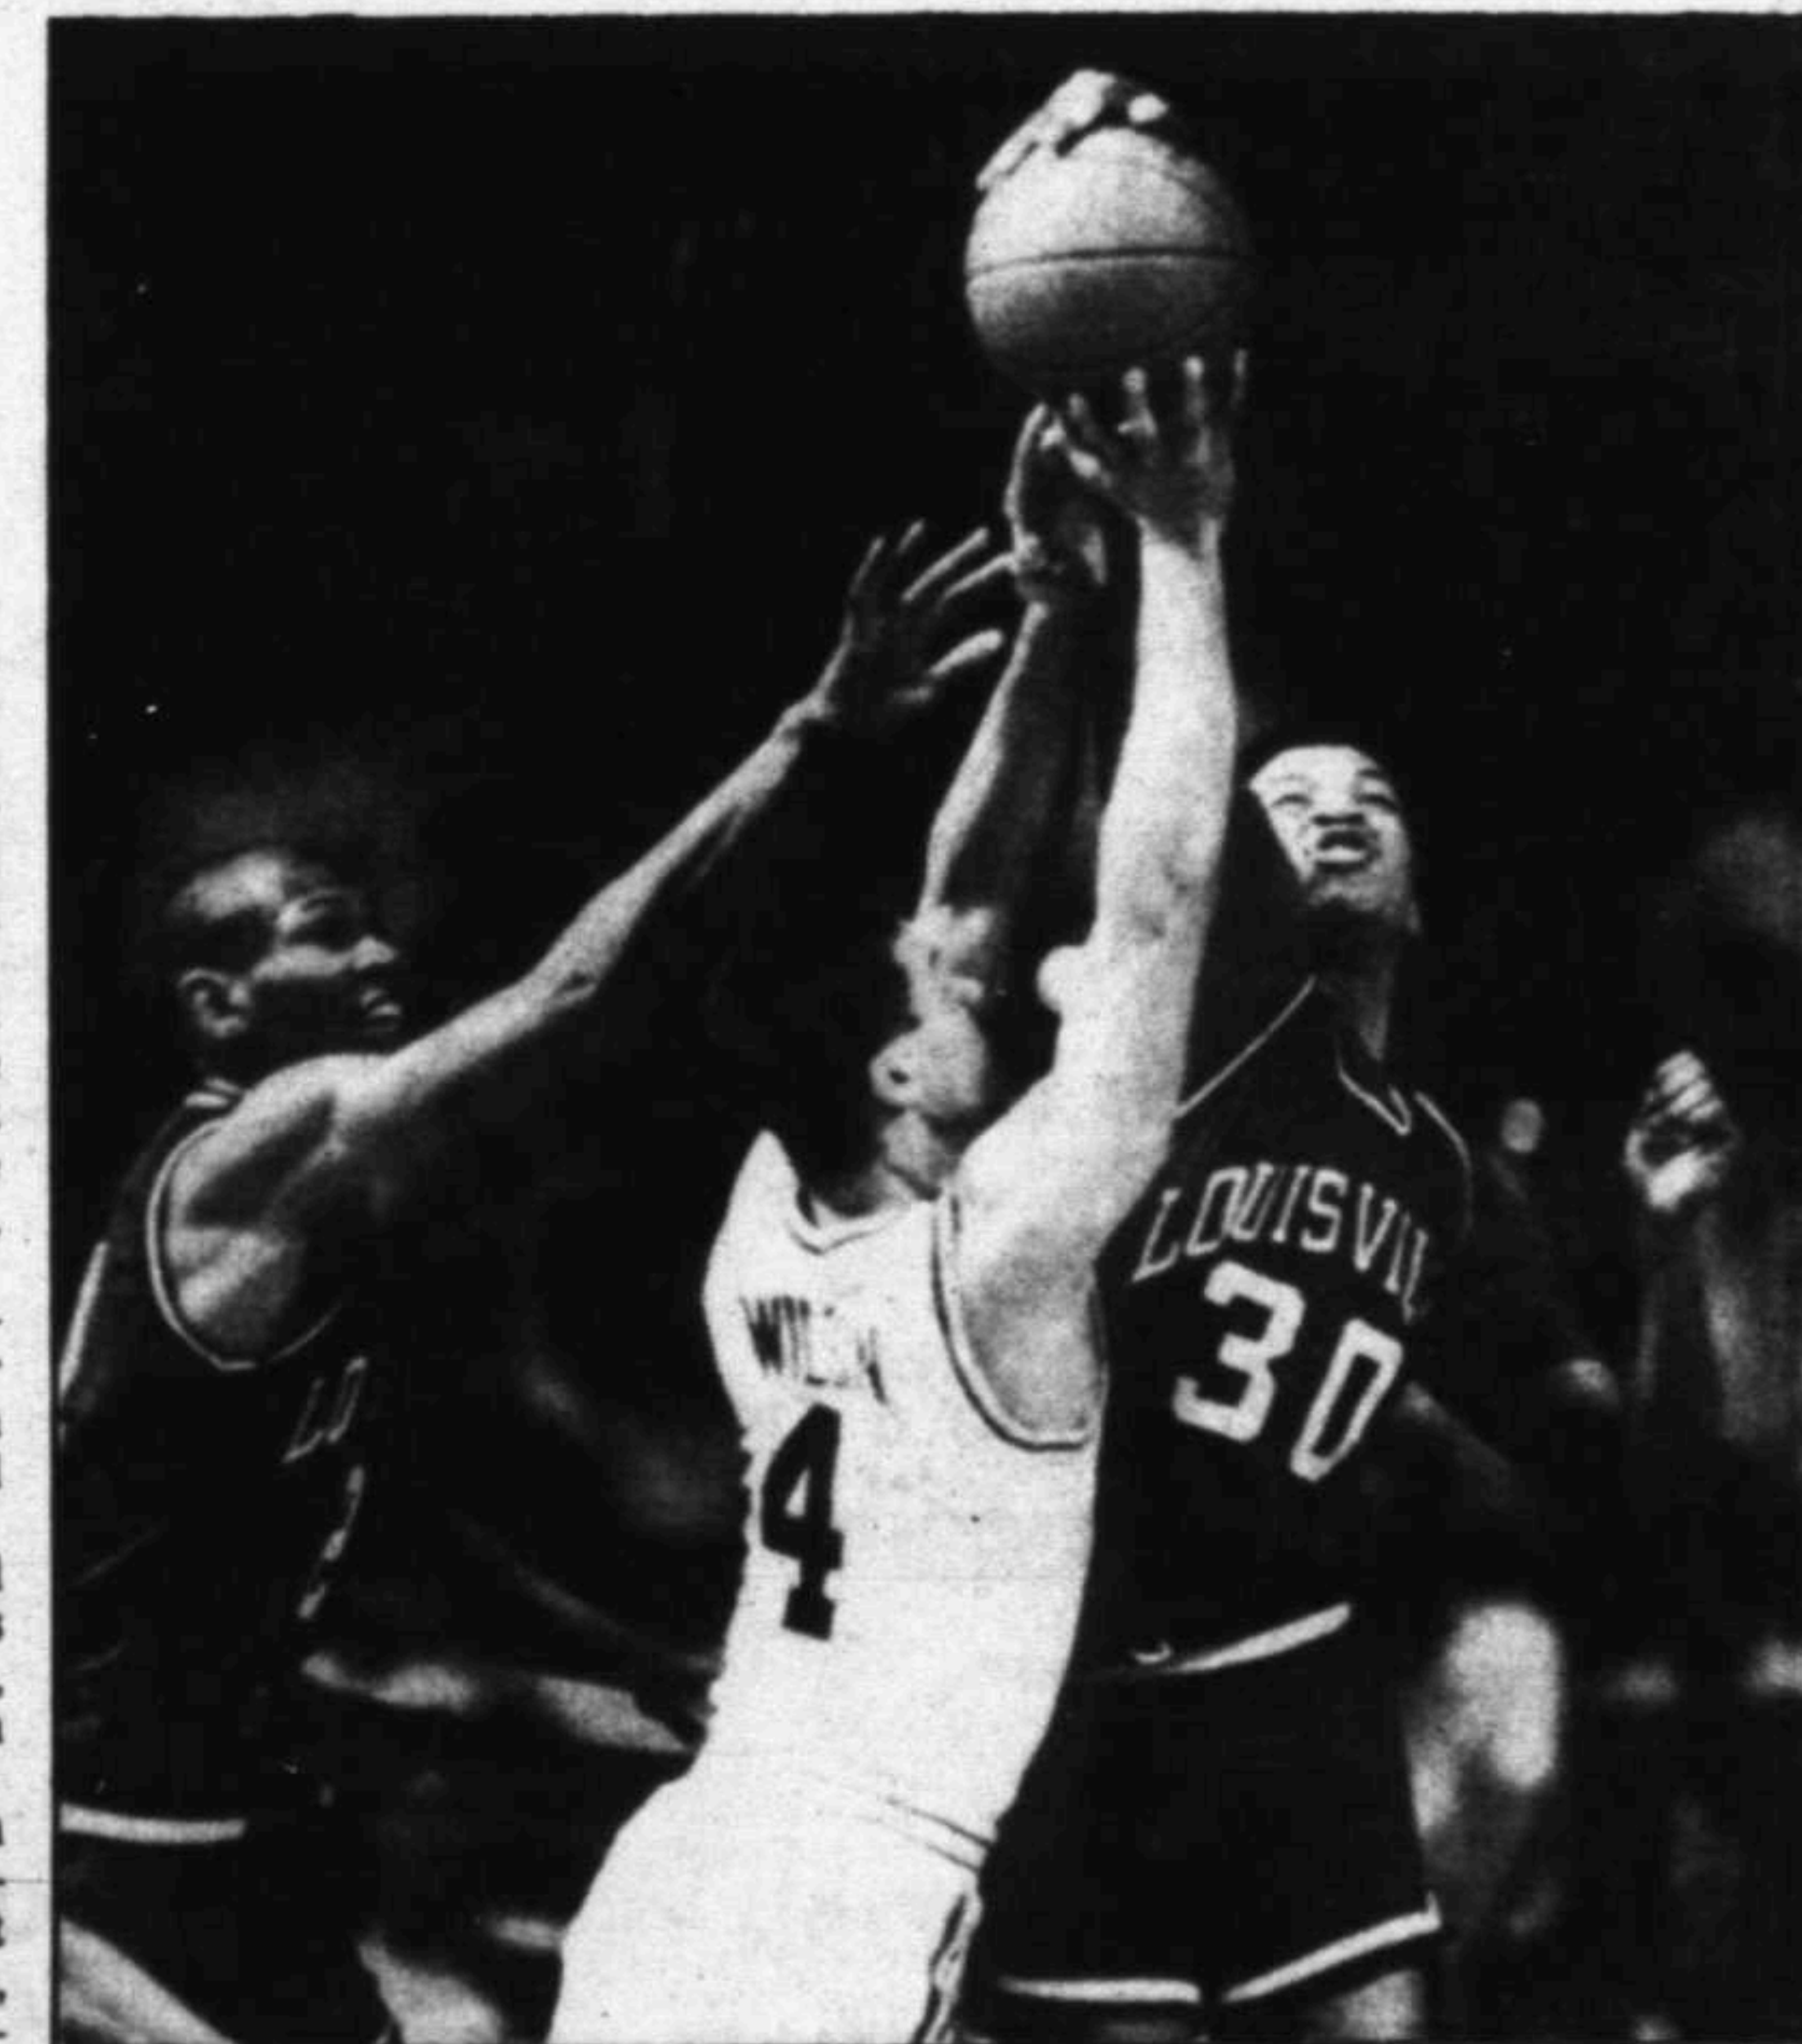

Lukas and Barrera will be allowed to enter horses pending the outcome of formal hearings, which have not been scheduled, Leonard Foote, the racing board's executive secretary, said Sunday.

Santa Anita stewards had said Saturday that Barrera couldn't enter horses in any race in California pending the outcome of formal hearings.

Because written confirmation had not been received by the stewards regarding the tests on Lukas' horse, no action was taken against him Saturday.

Traces of cocaine were found in the urine of Endow, Barrera's 2-year-old colt who won in his first start Aug. 31 at Del Mar, near San Diego, and Crown Collection, a Lukas-trained colt who won an allowance race Aug. 29, the racing board announced Friday.

No. 1 gets beat—again

Associated Press

Ickey Woods has his shuffle, and so does college basketball. For the fifth straight week, there's a new No. 1.

"When you really got down to it, and I had to be fair, I'd probably put us in there," Coach Billy Tubbs said after No. 5 Oklahoma beat top-ranked Arizona 82-80 Sunday.

Today, the Associated Press poll did, too. With then-No. 2 Georgetown, No. 3 Missouri and No. 4 Louisville all losing in the last few days, the Sooners moved back on top.

"We volunteered last week," Tubbs said. "Any time you need us for No. 1, we'll do it. Someone's got to do it."

Arizona, Duke, Illinois and Oklahoma have been bounced from No. 1 in four consecutive weeks. For three straight weeks, the nation's three highest ranked teams have each lost.

In other games Sunday, UCLA beat No. 4 Louisville 77-75. No. 6 North Carolina defeated Virginia 85-67. No. 13 Indiana got past Purdue 64-62. No. 19 Nevada-Las Vegas downed No. 17 North Carolina State 79-70 and No. 18 Stanford beat Washington 82-74 in overtime.

On Saturday, Pittsburgh stopped No. 2 Georgetown 79-74. No. 3 Missouri beat Kansas 93-80. No. 7 Illinois topped Northwestern 86-69. Wisconsin surprised No. 8 Iowa 65-54. No. 9 Syracuse trounced St. John's 92-69. Minnesota tumbled No. 10 Michigan 88-80. No. 11 Seton Hall defeated Villanova 83-77. No. 14 Duke routed Maryland 86-60. No. 15 West Virginia beat Penn State 100-67. No. 16 Ohio State held off Michigan State 81-75, and No. 20 Georgia Tech topped Wake Forest 75-70.

Oklahoma, 21-3, won its 27th straight home game. That includes a 112-105 victory over third-ranked Missouri earlier in the week. This week the Sooners play at Kansas and Colorado.

Arizona slipped to 18-3. Last season, Oklahoma beat the Wildcats 86-78 in the NCAA semifinals.

"They're a Final Four team," Tubbs said of Arizona. "Any team that can come in here and play us that close has got to be a Final Four team."

Sean Elliott, who scored 26 points for the Wildcats, thinks so. "When we play Arizona basketball, we're as good as any team in the nation, if not better," he said. "Obviously you want to win, but we earned some respect for our team and our conference."

Oklahoma went into the game averaging 121 points at home. The Sooners were held to 35 in the first half and trailed 44-37 with 16:33 remaining.

UCLA 77, No. 4 Louisville 75
Louisville's Pervis Ellison was called for goaltending with one second left as UCLA rallied to beat the visiting Cardinals.

UCLA 165, scored the game's final five points in the last 1:10. Ellison was called for illegally stopping Pooh Richardson's eight-foot shot.

No. 6 North Carolina 85, Virginia 67
Steve Bucknall scored 19 points and North Carolina avenged a 106-83 loss at Virginia last month. The Tar Heels, 19-5 and 6-3 in the Atlantic Coast Conference, made eight of its first 11 shots and won easily.

No. 13 Indiana 64, Purdue 62
Jay Edwards made an 18-foot jump shot with four seconds left, capping Indiana's rally from an 11-point deficit in the second half.

No. 19 Nev.-Las Vegas 89, No. 17 N. Carolina St. 80
David Butler scored 21 points, including 15 in the first half when UNLV took control. The Runnin' Rebels raced to a 26-9 lead and were ahead 49-34 at halftime. Stacey Augmon had 20 points for Nevada-Las Vegas, 16-6. Rodney Monroe scored 37 points for the host Wolfpack, 15-5.

No. 18 Stanford 82, Washington 74
Todd Lichti scored 19 points, including eight in overtime, as Stanford got past visiting Washington. The Cardinal is 19-5 and 10-3 in the Pacific-10.

Abdul-Jabbar makes last All-Star trip

HOUSTON (AP)—For 20 seasons, it's been quite easy to get hooked on the talents of Kareem Abdul-Jabbar.

Style. Grace. Power. And, there were lots of great memories, too.

Power Memorial. UCLA and winning, winning, winning. A championship in his second year in the NBA with the Milwaukee Bucks and Oscar Robertson. And five championships in the 1980s with the Los Angeles Lakers.

Sitting on the bench in the fourth quarter Sunday, with those memories and a pair of free throws, Kareem decided he didn't want his career as the all-time leading All-Star scorer to end that way.

There was definitely something missing here.

He had played just 11 1/2 minutes, shot 0-for-5 from the field, including four misfired sky hooks.

"I asked him if he wanted to take another shot at it," said West coach Pat Riley, who has experienced first-hand the legendary center's woes this season at age 41.

"He said he did."

So Abdul-Jabbar, a last-minute replacement for his Laker teammate Magic Johnson, began stretching his tired 7-foot-2 frame and entered the game with 1:31 remaining and the West leading the East, 141-128.

After looking frustrated earlier in the game, he ran down the court a little faster, looked a little more eager to make a contribution before his 18th — and final — All-Star game was history.

He took a pass from Clyde Drexler and flipped a sky hook over the head of center Brad Daugherty with 14 seconds remaining. Swish. His last basket added the final points scored, a 143-134 victory for the West.

The plastic sky over the Astrodome seemed a little brighter.

"I wanted to see that last sky hook in an All-Star game go in, and it did," Riley said.

After a troubled season and a lackluster All-Star performance, Abdul-Jabbar was hungry for a shot.

"I would have been disappointed if it hadn't dropped," he said.

A game where he played just 13 minutes, scored just four points and had three rebounds was disappointing enough for a player who's participated in more All-Star games, than any other and amassed more minutes, blocked shots and field-goal attempts.

Abdul-Jabbar has scored 251 points in All-Star games, five more than Robertson had in 12 games. He's played 449 All-Star minutes and dished out 51 assists.

In his final showing, Abdul-Jabbar blocked two shots to give him a record 31 in his All-Star career and had three rebounds, bringing his third-place total to 149, 29 fewer than Bob Pettit.

But unlike previous All-Star outings, frustration showed on Abdul-Jabbar's face as he missed shot after shot. He even attempted a fling from behind the 3-point stripe.

And after picking up his third foul while attempting to block Isiah Thomas' shot, he protested loudly to the referee: "I hit the ball, man."

Except for that last 1:31, Abdul-Jabbar's play seemed to lack what he calls a sense of purpose, a problem he says has plagued him this season, during which he's averaged less than 10 points per game.

"Your sense of purpose is really what makes everything happen on the court, and if you don't have a very definite sense of purpose and intensity, your game suffers," he said. "And as everyone has taken note, my game definitely suffered."

Physical conditioning wasn't the problem, he said, although he reported to a fall training camp with more body fat than he's carried in past years.

"Mentally I really wasn't ready for the season," Abdul-Jabbar explained. "I had a lot of things on my mind that had nothing to do with playing the season. I had my retirement on my mind. I was wondering what it was going to be like at the end of the season and you can't do that."

Being named to the All-Star team wasn't an honor Abdul-Jabbar earned in the first place. He thought he didn't deserve it.

Bowman wins 1st U.S. title

BALTIMORE (AP) — Chris Bowman has answered his critics, and he's reached a new level with his response.

Bowman, rapped as not being dedicated enough to figure skating, landed his recently perfected triple axel and won his first national title Sunday at the U.S. Figure Skating Championships.

"The skating speaks for itself," Bowman said after finishing first in Sunday's free skate to clinch the overall title.

"The national men's title has been a goal of mine since I was a little boy ... Through all the ups and downs, I never lost focus."

Bowman nailed the triple axel 20 seconds into his 4 1/2-minute program. He hit six of his seven triple jumps and was awarded scores of 5.8s and 5.9s by the nine judges.

"It wasn't like I had an out-of-body experience and was flying around the room," said Bowman, who overcame headaches, a minor leg injury in warmups and a bad case of nerves.

"The leg and other things weren't 100 percent solid," Bowman said. "Those are the things you have to overcome. Nobody's going to care. The crowd isn't. The judge's aren't."

Danny Doran finished second ahead of Paul Wylie, who scored a perfect 6.0 for the first time in his career in the long program, but finished third overall.

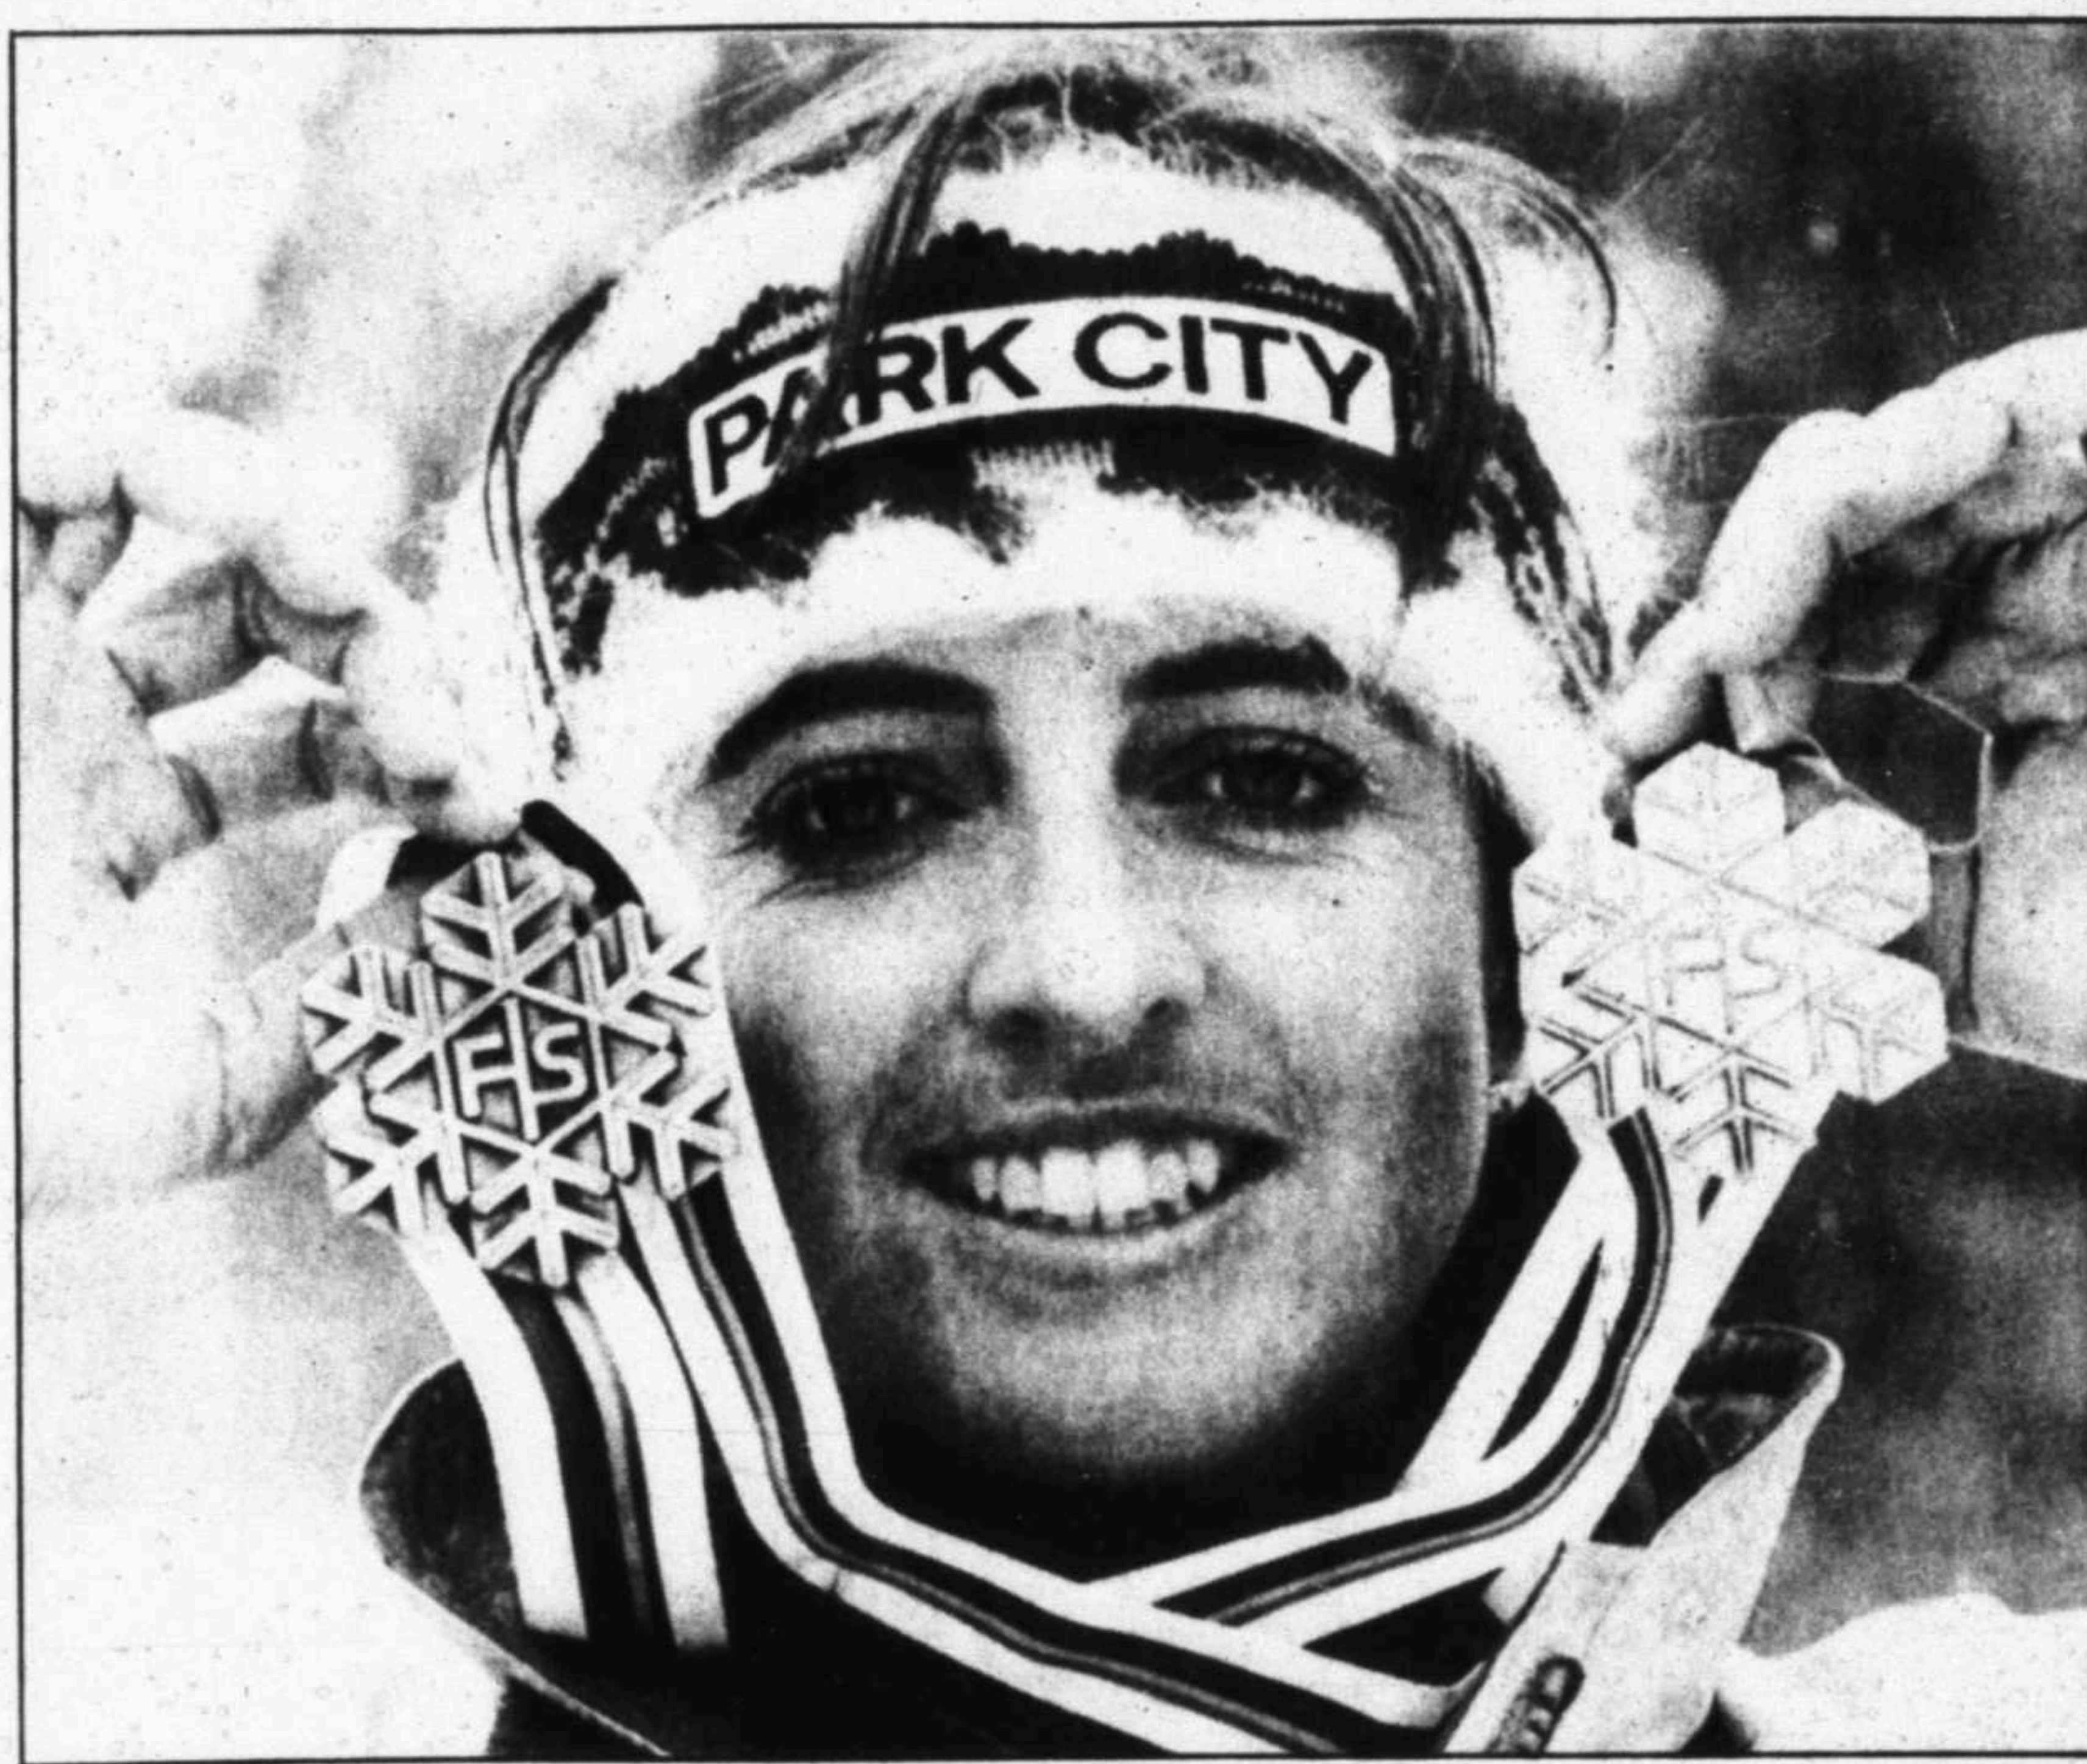

Bowman's triumph came 24 hours after Jill Trenary won her second national title. Trenary, who finished fourth in last year's Olympics, added this year's title to the one she won in 1987.

Trenary was overshadowed in the women's long program by 17-year-old Kristi Yamaguchi, who won the free skate to finish second in the women's standings.

Combining her runner-up finish in senior women with the national championship Yamaguchi won Friday night with Rudi Galindo in pairs, the rising skating star became the first woman to qualify for the world championships in two events since 1953.

The victory by Yamaguchi and Galindo followed the most controversial moments of the five-day championships. Near the end of a disappointing long program, the pairs team of Kim and Wayne Seybold, the top-ranked U.S. couple, stopped when Kim loosened a skate lace in a fall.

The referee allowed the Seybolds, after Kim tended to the lace, to continue from that point and finish their performance. The rulebook does not have a provision for when a skater.

Tamara McKinney poses with her two medals from the recently-concluded World Ski Championships. McKinney won a gold in the combined slalom and bronze in the slalom.

Mowry caps resurgence

PALM BEACH GARDENS, Fla. (AP) — Larry Mowry buried an unhappy period of his life a few years ago and is eyeing an even brighter future than he imagined possible.

Mowry won the 50th PGA Seniors Championship Sunday, making a five-foot putt to save par on the last hole to capture the most significant victory of his career since completing a 90-day treatment program with Alcoholics Anonymous 10 years ago.

"This whole thing probably won't sink in until they send me off the tee in Tampa and announce me as the PGA Seniors champion," Mowry said, looking ahead to next weekend's tour event.

"Nothing like that has ever happened to me. I've been announced as Colorado Open champion, Florida Open champion and some others, but this is a major," he added. "This gets a big monkey off my back. I think a lot of people will recognize me now."

The former mini-tour standout doesn't talk a lot about the drinking problem he had in the days when he carried liquor onto the golf course in a soft-drink bottle. Instead, he speaks with optimism about what's ahead for a 52-year-old who says his game is just beginning to blossom.

Lendl beats Gilbert for nth time

CHICAGO (AP) — Brad Gilbert had the sinking feeling he was at mid-level yet another screening of "Ivan the Terrible" and helpless to change the ending of a movie he'd already seen too many times.

"His backhand passing shot always gives me trouble. I saw a lot of those go by," Gilbert said after Ivan Lendl overcame a rocky start and the 20th-ranked American 6-2, 7-6 (7-3) to claim the championship of the $350,000 Volvo-Chicago Tennis tournament Sunday.

"Unfortunately, the forehand to most guys' backhand is my best shot," Gilbert added. "But then, most guys are not Ivan Lendl."

And even on his worst days, Lendl, the world's No. 1 player and already victorious in last month's Australian Open, 1989's first Grand Slam tournament, is better than most guys on their best days.

He definitely began as though Sunday was an off day, lethargic and still obviously feeling the effects of having had to stave off two match points in a late Saturday night semifinal win.

But he also came in having subdued Gilbert in all 14 of their previous meetings.

Tomba troubled; Nierlich wins big

VAIL, Colo. (AP) — It took 15 days of racing for the world to discover that Alberto Tomba is only human. It will take more to determine if the same is true of Rudolf Nierlich.

Skiing's superman in the World Alpine Championships, that concluded on a snowy Sunday, wasn't Italy's bombastic Tomba "La Bomba." The Bomb had a faulty fuse in three races, and on Sunday finally went off in the face of the Italian Ski Federation.

Tomba went down in the morning run of slalom. Two hours later, Italian head coach Josef Messner also took a tumble, the first falling boulder in what promises to be an avalanche of changes in the Italian hierarchy.

Such is life in the high-tech, high-cost world of ski racing. Rudi Nierlich knows how the game is played, having survived a similar purge involving the Austrian team a couple years ago.

Whether the Italians can be improved through changes at the top remains to be seen. The Austrians may have benefited most by hiring the someone who turned Nierlich into a double world champion.

Nierlich, as quiet as Tomba is outrageous, served notice by impressively winning the giant slalom that the country of the downhillers is now the home of the best race racers. He punctuated the point by winning a spill-filled slalom on Sunday, his second gold and Austria's third of the two-week ski circus.

"I hope my life won't change too much now that I'm a world champion," Nierlich said, trying his new title on for size. "I'm sure they'll throw a party for me back home."

Be careful, Rudi. Those parties are what Italian officials and fans are blaming for the misfiring of Tomba. Winner of two Olympic gold medals and nine World Cup races last season, Tomba accomplished little in these World Championships. He fell in the first run of slalom, dropped out of contention by nearly falling in the giant slalom, and produced his best finish in his worst event by placing sixth in the super giant slalom.

"In slalom, you have to stay concentrated from top to bottom," Tomba said after dusting himself off. "This season I have not been able to keep that concentration, so things have not worked out very well for me."

"After my disappointments in Vail, the only thing left for me to do is to concentrate on the World Cup events."

And trying to get along with a very angry Carlo Valentino, the embarrased president of the Italian Ski Federation. Italy failed to win a world championship medal for the first time since 1970.

"The team must be rebuilt. Tomba can play the role of a leading athlete and as an example for the younger skiers who will be involved in the team next season," Valentino said.

"But we have given up the idea of having a personal coach for Tomba. He must be part of the team."

'Horns hope Hogs fall flat on road trip

Associated Press

The Texas Longhorns hope the Arkansas Razorbacks' reputation as a shaky road team holds true this week in visits to Dallas and College Station.

If Coach Nolan Richardson's Hogs can defeat Southern Methodist and the Texas Aggies on the road this week, they will be in great position to earn the top seed for the post-season tournament in Dallas.

Arkansas has lost to Texas Christian and Texas Tech away from the friendly confines of Barnhill Arena.

The Hogs and Longhorns each reached the century mark on Saturday in staying locked atop the SWC ladder with 9-2 records.

Arkansas whipped TCU 100-60 to extract a measure of revenge for an earlier loss in Fort Worth.

TCU lost Reggie Smith, Tony Edmond and Rich Antee to fouls.

"The crowd put pressure on the officials and it went from there," said TCU coach Moe Iba.

Texas' Lance Blanks and Travis Mays scored 33 points each in a 116-74 victory over the Rice Owls, who are 3-8 in SWC play.

"When both Lance and Travis are tracking, we are an awfully tough team to beat," said Texas coach Tom Penders.

In other games, Houston finally won a close one, nipping Texas Tech 71-67 and SMU pounded Baylor 64-51.

Tuesday, the locals open District 4-5A play against each other in a 5 p.m. start at the Hogan Park Soccer Complex.

Both local teams come off decent showings in a weekend road trip to Wichita Falls. Midland Lee, 4-2, posted consecutive 2-0 shutouts over Wichita Falls Hirschi and Burk Burnett Friday and Saturday, respectively, while Midland High split a pair, losing to Wichita Falls 1-0 Friday and beating Hirschi 6-0 Saturday.

CHAPS—

The Region V tournament, which places the top four teams from the Western Junior College Athletic Conference and the top four from the Northern Conference, takes place at McLennan Community College, Waco, March 2-4. The Region V winner meets the Region XIV winner in the 16-team NJCAA Tournament at Hutchinson, Kansas, March 13-18. Odessa defeated Midland at Chap Center in the 1988 Region V title game, then fell to Jacksonville College in the bi-regional contest. South Plains' other loss this season was by two points to Jacksonville in last fall's Chaparral Classic. Jacksonville is undefeated and ranked second behind OC.

The week's conference schedule includes: South Plains at Western Texas, Clarendon at NMJC, Frank Phillips at NMJC Wednesday; Odessa at South Plains, NMJC at Western Texas, Frank Phillips at NMJC, and Midland at Clarendon on Thursday; Frank Phillips at Odessa Friday; and Midland at NMJC Saturday.

backers coach six years before leaving to become the defensive coordinator of the Colts.

Hill is known to favor a conservative defensive approach. Indianapolis used that approach to allow a league-low 238 points in 1987.

In another development, the Star-Telegram reported that Billie Matthews will interview today for the job of Cowboys running backs coach.

MALONE—

"You can see the changing of the guard in this league and Malone is certainly one of those coming on," Riley said.

Malone did it the hard way. His family couldn't afford a hoop during childhood days in the rural community of Mt. Sinai, La. Karl was the second youngest of nine children.

His mother, Shirley, improvised by holding her arms in a circle so Karl could practice shooting baskets in the backyard.

Her reward on Sunday was sitting on the MVP podium with her son.

"I brought my mother to sit up here with me today for a reason," Malone said. "When she was serving as a basket by holding her arms to her chest a lot of people would pass by and laugh."

"They would say 'what is she doing, he's never going to amount to anything.' Well, I guess they were wrong."

The 25-year-old Malone wasn't a highly sought player coming out of high school. He attended Louisiana Tech where his power game caught the eye of NBA scouts.

It was so powerful that Malone twice shattered glass backboards.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Friendships will pay huge benefits, especially in May and October. Summer will be a critical time for a new romantic relationship. You will need to make some decisions about your lifestyle, savings and investments in order to move up the career ladder or increase your happiness in retirement. College holds special opportunities. Do not try to do everything yourself; learn to delegate less important duties.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: comedian Jack Benny, sportscaster Mel Allen, TV host Hugh Downs, actress Molly Ringwald, coach Woody Hayes, astronomer Galileo.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A generous friend may surprise you today. Recognition will come if you keep your nose to the grindstone. Resolve your differences with partner before your relationship explodes. An intelligent compromise works wonders.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): The balance of power within a partnership is not as clear as it once was. It is time to take some performance pressures off yourself. Love is everywhere now. Pursue shared goals.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A question of work vs. home has you on edge. Better communication will help resolve conflict. Your finicky attention to detail improves the product's quality but irritates your associates. Keep any criticism impersonal.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Listen to your intuition and change your plans. You benefit from knowing the right move to make. Money talks get bogged down today. You can have your way if you refrain from pushing.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You are glad you used caution when making a purchase. Your need to be alone is understood by those who really count. Ignore petty comments. A romantic relationship grows in its intensity.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You may be in a restless mood. Take a walk, or if you want to unload, find someone you can talk to in confidence. A child needs your support. Give a relationship time.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You could find a gold mine in the attic or garage. Do not get discouraged if others seem to be zooming past while you plod along; remember the tortoise and the hare.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You enjoy special rapport with an important group today. New associations will be lucky. As the day ends, new guidelines are announced. Your dreams are prophetic.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You may be asked to deliver a message you would rather not. Be tactful. You are in a good position to teach children some pertinent lessons about money management. Set guidelines.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Consult with a variety of experts today — the more the better. Secret worries could make you sound abrupt at work. Let others take your phone calls. Spruce up your wardrobe with clever additions.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): If thinking of pursuing a favorite fantasy today, remember that you might prefer the illusion. A new financial arrangement is possible in late afternoon. Push for the best deal you can get.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Go along with partner's plans for this Valentine's Day. Your children and mate need special reassurance now. Reach out with understanding and affection.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A762 ♥932 ♦K ♣J10652
The bidding has proceeded:
North East South West
1 ♦ Dbl ?
What action do you take?
A.—Since East's double is primarily a takeout for the major suits, there is no point to showing your weak spade suit. And why venture two clubs? Although you have the values for one no trump, your hand is unbalanced, so all you can do is pass to see how the auction develops.

Q.2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AQ4 ♥AKJ762 ♦73 ♣Q9
The bidding has proceeded:
South West North East
1 ♥ Pass 2 ♦ Pass
What do you bid now?
A.—This is borderline. If you have a partner who might drop the bidding in two hearts, jump to three. However, if partner can be trusted to bid again, then two hearts is sufficient—your queen of clubs is of doubtful value.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AQ4 ♥AKJ762 ♦73 ♣Q9
The bidding has proceeded:
South West North East
1 ♥ Pass 2 ♣ Pass
What do you bid now?
A.—The fact that your queen is now in partner's suit makes a world of difference—it is probably worth a full trick. Now a jump to three hearts (or a reverse bid of two spades, if you like the fancy stuff) is clear cut.

Q.4—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠762 ♥AQ6 ♦Q5 ♣AJ1092
The bidding has proceeded:
South West North East
1 ♠ Pass 1 ♠ Pass
1 NT Pass 2 ♥ Pass
What action do you take?
A.—The fact that you have a minimum opening bid and excellent three-card support for partner's second suit doesn't relieve you of the obligation of finding your side's best spot. Partner's first-bid suit is at least as long, and probably longer, than his second, so you must correct to two spades despite the disparity in the strength of your holdings.

Q.5—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠KQ5 ♥AQ ♦AKQ1087 ♣63
The bidding has proceeded:
East South West North
1 ♥ Dbl Pass 2 ♣ Pass
What do you bid now?
A.—We suppose that the theoretically correct bid is a jump to three diamonds. However, if you are going to play for nine tricks, why not at no trump? There is no guarantee that you can make three no trump, but it's certainly worth a shot—especially since you're likely to get a heart lead.

Q.6—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠6 ♥A105 ♦AKJ ♣AQJ762
Your right-hand opponent opens the bidding with three spades. What action do you take?
A.—Not an ideal hand, but who promised you that life would be a bowl of cherries? Double, despite the fact that you lack a fourth heart. Ideally, you hope partner will pass or bid three no trump. Should he bid four hearts, pass and hope for the best. At least the spade ruffs will come in the hand with short trumps.

Paul Simon, Robin Williams will perform at concert for homeless

NEW YORK (AP) — Singer-songwriter Paul Simon's "Graceland" album will be reprised this week as musicians, comedians and politicians get together in a fund-raiser for charity.

Hugh Masekela, Ladysmith Black Mambazo and other musicians will join Simon on Thursday night in a benefit performance for the homeless. Tickets start at $1,000.

Simon

Robin Williams and rhythm-and-blues singer Ruth Brown also will perform, and Gov. Mario Cuomo is scheduled to speak.

Proceeds will be divided between Simon's Children's Health Fund, which provides health care for homeless children in New York City, and the HELP Organization, which builds transitional housing for homeless families.

ROCK HILL, S.C. (AP) — Jim and Tammy Bakker's daughter gave birth to a son during the weekend — a 6-pound, 10-ounce boy named partly after his famous, television evangelist grandfather.

The Bakkers' first grandchild, James Martin Chapman, was born at 1:32 a.m. Saturday, to Tammy Sue Chapman, 18, and her husband, Doug Chapman, 28. Mother and baby were in good condition Sunday at Piedmont Medical Center, hospital officials said.

"I had been praying for a boy, and the Lord gave me what I wanted," a tired but happy Mrs. Chapman said.

The couple named their son for Bakker; Chapman, whose middle name is Martin; Chapman's father, who also is named Martin; and Chapman's stepfather, James.

PLAINFIELD, N.J. (AP) — Nobel Peace Prize-winning Mother Teresa helped to reopen a convent that had been closed for 17 years, saying she saw the nuns there doing "something beautiful for God."

Closed because of declining membership, St. Mary's Convent is now home to 13 nuns who belong to Mother Teresa's Missionaries of Charity, Contemplative Order, said the Rev. Joseph J. Mirandi, pastor of St. Mary's Roman Catholic Church.

About 1,500 people packed inside the church shoulder-to-shoulder to listen to the 78-year-old Mother Teresa, who has become known as the "Saint of Calcutta" for her work with the poor in that Indian city.

"I hope they're going to do something beautiful for God," she told the congregants at Sunday morning Mass. "It is very important to help each other and share with each other. I will pray that God's blessing be with you all."

Mother Teresa founded the Missionaries of Charity, an order of 3,000 nuns in 87 countries, in 1950. She became known as the "Saint of Calcutta" for her work with the poor in that Indian city.

The three-story convent in this northern New Jersey city was built in 1910 and previously had been used by the Sisters of Charity.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Sir David Lean, director of the Oscar-winning epic "Lawrence of Arabia," has urged Hollywood to take risks on quality films.

"Spend some money on risky subjects," said Lean, who won the director's Academy Award for the 1962 movie. "It's no good being safe in this business. We've all got to be gamblers."

Lean made his comments Sunday at the Los Angeles premiere for the recently restored three-hour, 40-minute director's cut of "Lawrence of Arabia." The premiere benefited the American Film Institute and its campaign to restore and preserve classic films. The new version already has been released in New York and Washington.

Joining Lean here were composer Maurice Jarre, director of photographer Fred A. Young and film editor Anne Coates. All three won Oscars for their work on the movie, which won seven Academy Awards, including best picture.

Actors Anthony Quinn and Omar Sharif, who both starred in the film, also attended the screening, along with director Steven Spielberg, actors Michael Douglas, Gregory Peck, Rob Lowe and Alan Alda.

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (AP) — Actor James Caan suffered broken ribs after he lost control of his motorcycle and it crashed, police said.

Caan, 49, wasn't wearing a helmet but suffered no serious head injuries in the crash, which occurred shortly before noon Sunday, said police Lt. Barney Melekian.

The crash were under investigation, but there were no sign that Caan was intoxicated, Melekian said. Weather conditions were clear and no other vehicles were involved.

Besides fractured ribs, the actor suffered minor facial cuts and bruises, said Corinne Rogers, nursing supervisor at St. Johns Hospital and Medical Center, where Caan was listed in good condition.

Caan played Sonny Corleone, the hot-headed son of the Mafia chieftain in the Oscar-winning film "The Godfather," and portrayed terminally ill Chicago Bears football running back Brian Piccolo in the TV movie "Brian's Song."

His other credits include "Rollerball," "Cinderella Liberty," "A Bridge Too Far," "Freebie and the Bean" and "Rabbit Run."

The crash came two months after actor Gary Busey crashed his Harley-Davidson while riding without a helmet.

He suffered serious head injuries but is improving. Like Busey, Caan was riding a Harley.

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Kellye Cash, Miss America 1987, will marry a California high school mathematics teacher July 8, she has announced.

Cash

Miss Cash, 24, and Todd Sheppard, 25, of Escondido, Calif., will be married at First Evangelical Church, and plan to in Escondido following the wedding, the announcement said.

The two grew up together in California, but never dated as teenagers. Their paths crossed again in 1987 when she made an appearance as Miss America on the West Coast and gave him a picture.

Sheppard, who also coaches football, basketball and baseball, flew to Memphis last Oct. 22 and proposed.

Miss Cash, a spokeswoman for the Drug-Free Tennessee program, is the great-niece of country singer Johnny Cash, known as "the man in black." She said her five attendants "will be wearing the traditional Cash black."

For the past few months, one of the reasons analysts have cited to explain why long-term interest rates have remained fairly stable even as short-term rates have risen has been investor confidence in the Fed's role as an inflation-fighter.

The combination of unattractively low yields and no sign from the Fed sent potential buyers of the 10-year and 30-year issues running for cover and forced authorized dealers to buy far greater amounts of the securities than anticipated.

The weak demand also sent prices of the new issues sharply lower and pushed yields well above the average bid rate at the auctions.

By late Friday, for example, the new 8 percent 30-year bonds due in 2019 were offered at a price to yield 9.03 percent, the highest yield level on a 30-year bond issue since mid-January.

"I would guess that the Street ended up with $5 billion to $6 billion" of the $9.5 billion worth of bonds sold last week, said William N. Griggs, a managing director at the financial consulting firm Griggs & Santow Inc.

"I would think that a substantial portion of the takdown was hedged in the futures market," he added. "But some big money was lost."

The chances that bond yields will move higher are great unless the Fed makes a tightening move soon, traders and analysts said.

"The long end needs a Fed tightening to hold it in," one government bond trader said late last week. "If they don't do it, the Fed will lose a lot of credibility and you won't be able to give these things away."

regulators and make the thrifths appear to be in better financial shape than they actually were.

Ms. Stewart said those actions — if taken — could be illegal, depending on the particular circumstances.

"Selling REO (real estate owned) can be perfectly lawful under certain circumstances, but if they were selling REO (to fool the regulators), that would be a violation of Federal Home Loan Bank Board rules and very likely a criminal violation — willful misstatement of the books and records," she said.

"I remember them talking about selling REOs," said B.G. Wylie, former chairman of American Savings and Loan in Lake Jackson and the father of David Wylie.

"If something was done, it was after I left. I don't know whether any of them got together on the REOs," Wylie said.

Another source who attended said the sale of REOs was discussed, along with evasion of loan limits and growth limits. Wylie said he didn't remember anyone at the meeting discussing loan limits to one borrower.

Industry sources familiar with the meeting said the effect of those actions would have been

Austrian ambassador's wife fights war against drugs

WASHINGTON (AP) — Claire Hoess, wife of the Austrian ambassador, does her share of tea-pouring at diplomatic receptions, but her real passion lies elsewhere: she's determined to fight the war on drugs.

"You can't beat this problem from above...you have to shock the kids," says the English-born Mrs. Hoess, a lanky woman who wears her blonde hair cropped short and likes to relax in jeans.

Hoess

Soon after she moved here about a year ago, Mrs. Hoess vowed she'd do something constructive to fight drugs in a city which last year had the highest murder rate in the country.

Police blame much of the crime on the drug dealing that takes place in neighborhoods just a few miles away from Mrs. Hoess' residence.

On a trip to New York, Mrs. Hoess visited Daytop Village, a leading drug treatment center where former addicts performed a gritty, improvisational play based on their experiences in the depths of a depraved drug world.

So impressed was Mrs. Hoess with the play, entitled, "The Concept," that she decided to bring it to Washington for two performances.

"I'm not doing this as a social event," Mrs. Hoess said in an interview. "I want it to have an impact."

To that end, Mrs. Hoess arranged for the District of Columbia school system to have high school seniors attend a scheduled performance Monday at a local theater.

Members of the diplomatic corps and other Washingtonians have been invited to a second performance.

"We think it's a great idea," said Marilyn Tyler Brown, an assistant school superintendent. "The students will get to see people who have been through a substance abuse program."

Mrs. Hoess' initiative is "more unusual than typical" in the diplomatic circuit where some women do volunteer work, but few launch out in their own projects, according to Phyllis Moyer, executive director of The Hospitality and Information Service, a non-profit group that helps foreign diplomats adjust to Washington.

Mrs. Hoess, who sometimes spends her free time driving around the city to get a first-hand look at the seamy parts of town, raised money to bring the troupe to Washington and then convinced a hotelier to donate rooms for two nights. She even got inmates at a local prison, the Lorton correctional complex, to print the invitations.

Mrs. Hoess was awakened to the drug problem in the early 1970s.

"I saw what was happening to the friends and their children," she said, citing one case in which a 12-year-old walked through a window.

Back in Vienna, headquarters of the U.N. narcotics bureau, Mrs. Hoess plunged into fighting drugs on an international level. She studied the problem and learned about the drug culture.

Since coming to the United States, she has toured drug rehabilitation centers in New York and Atlanta, and talked to business leaders and bankers about devoting more money to such facilities.

Mrs. Hoess said she likes to be personally involved in issues. While visiting Zaire once, she traveled to a leper colony in the bush that had been set up by Albert Schweitzer.

The staff wanted to give Mrs. Hoess the hands-off tour for dignitaries, but she rejected that idea.

"I put on my dirty old jeans and started cleaning the floors like the other people," she recalled.

Lawyer: Mandela involved in events surrounding alleged beatings

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — A lawyer for three black men said today his clients have told him Winnie Mandela was "involved in the events" when they and a friend were abducted from a church home and beaten by her unofficial bodyguards.

The statement by prominent anti-apartheid lawyer Geoff Budender came one day after a newspaper reported that Mrs. Mandela, the wife of jailed African National Congress leader Nelson Mandela, took part in the alleged beatings.

One of the four, 14-year-old Stompie Seipei, has been missing since Jan. 1 and is feared dead.

Mrs. Mandela, 54, has denied the accusations contained in the Sunday Star, a Johannesburg newspaper that opposes apartheid. She has implied they were fabricated to hurt her husband.

Later today, an attorney who had been acting for Mrs. Mandela, Krish Naidoo, announced that he had resigned as her representative. He did not give a reason when reached by telephone by The Associated Press.

However, The Star quoted him today as saying "I felt it was not within the scope of my work to deal with the Mandela crisis."

The three men, who are considering legal action, gave Budender statements about what happened to them but have not authorized him to release details, he told the AP.

Rescuers find bodies of 3 mountaineers

GRANADA, Spain (AP) — Civil guardsmen today found the bodies of three French mountaineers trapped by an avalanche in southern Spain and continued the search for three others believed dead, officials said.

Pedro Barrionuevo, a spokesman for the civil governor's office, identified one of the recovered bodies as that of Jean Arnedo, 58, of Cannes.

A seventh member of the group, Nicole Esaly, 47, escaped the avalanche Sunday in the Sierra Nevada mountains north of Granada.

Barrionuevo said the avalanche covered a surface of about 240 square yards on a slope below Mulhacen peak to a depth of about 980 feet.

More than 20 civil guard workers, aided by a helicopter, searched the area today.
