DOE on crude oil

WASHINGTON — The Energy Department said Monday it will resume crude oil purchases on the international market to refill the Strategic Petroleum Reserve, the nation's emergency oil stockpile. Most of the oil to be acquired by the Defense Fuel Supply Center will be sent to the reserve's newest storage area, the Big Hill site 20 miles southwest of Beaumont, the department said in a statement. The Strategic Petroleum Reserve now holds more than 568 million barrels of crude oil in salt caverns in Texas and Louisiana, the department said.

Baker talks tough

WASHINGTON — Secretary of State James Baker said Monday he had given Israel a choice: stop settlements in occupied Arab land or forfeit $10 billion in loan guarantees. The ultimatum raised Arab hopes and Israeli nervousness as a fourth round of Mideast peace talks got under way. Baker testified on Capitol Hill as separate sets of talks began across town at the State Department between Israel and a Palestinian-Jordanian team, Israel and Syria and Israel and Lebanon. /7A

Poll on Clinton

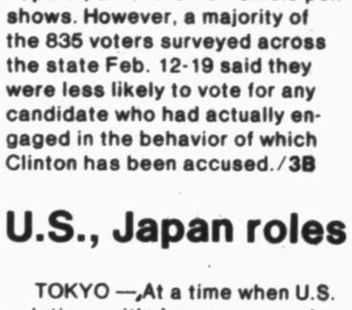

HOUSTON — Bill Clinton has been hit by questions of marital infidelity and about his draft status during the Vietnam War, but those controversies will not change many Texas voters' view of the Democratic presidential hopeful, a Houston Chronicle poll shows. However, a majority of the 835 voters surveyed across the state Feb. 12-19 said they were less likely to vote for any candidate who had actually engaged in the behavior of which Clinton has been accused. /3B

U.S., Japan roles

TOKYO — At a time when U.S. relations with Japan are growing more rancorous and fears are mounting that some sort of a crisis is in the offing, one American in Tokyo is urging that the situation not be seen as worse than it really is. "When people talk about a rapid deterioration in our relationship, I don't know quite what to make of it," said Michael H. Armacost, the U.S. ambassador to Japan. Among the trends cited by the ambassador is the fact that U.S. exports to Japan are growing, and the trade deficit has declined from a high of $57 billion to $43 billion. /4A

Sheriff 'unsure' of pact

Attorney probes Painter's authority for stings

■ Commissioners' Court-sheriff courtroom showdown begins.

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter admitted on the witness stand on Monday that he either had no "written local agreement" or was "not sure" if local agreements existed between him and prosecuting attorneys in Nolan, Ward and Grayson counties where his deputies conducted reverse-sting operations.

Painter, under cross-examination by Vann Culp — the Midland County Commissioners' attorney in the lawsuit Painter brought against the court — said he had not read the court's Dec. 19, 1991, "Amended Resolution, Policy and Order" that forms the basis of his lawsuit.

The 44-year-old sheriff, who is seeking re-election, contends that the Commissioners' Court is trying to control his office, to run his business and to prevent him from crossing the county line in pursuit of drug dealers and their illicit money.

"There's a lot of things that we do that require us to go out of the county," Painter said. I think they are trying to place restrictions on us that are not proper."

Additionally, Culp said Painter's in-county felony filings in district court have decreased since 1988 in the wake of Painter's reverse-sting operations and despite the increased number of vehicles for the Sheriff's Department.

Painter said the decrease in felony filings had no relation to his out-of-county reverse stings.

"We are either suppressing crime," Painter said, "or

Arlington wins high-stakes GM battle

New jobs to have multiplier effect on Texas economy

By Mede Nix and Cheryl Phillips
N.Y. Times News Service

ARLINGTON — The 1,000 jobs expected to be added at the Arlington General Motors plant next year will contribute $215 million annually to the state economy and create up to 3,000 additional jobs, economists said Monday.

From the Rio Grande Valley to the takeout chicken shop across the street from the plant, the news that the Arlington plant will remain open and add a third shift prompted expectations of new business and new jobs.

"It's great news," said Dallas economist Ray Perryman said. "An auto plant has very strong multipliers for creating jobs. That should mean 2,500 to 3,000 jobs. And we really need it with all the defense layoffs in this area."

Texas Department of Commerce officials said new GM employees will increase personal income in the state by $47 million, and local, state and federal tax rolls will grow

DETROIT — Arlington still has its General Motors assembly plant.

By the summer of 1993, Ypsilanti, Mich., will not.

Two months of intense corporate comparisons of the two plants, spiced with union promises of work rule changes and some attention-getting moves by high-level politicians from both Texas and Michigan, boiled down to a decision announced Monday by GM Chairman Robert Stempel: Arlington won and Ypsilanti lost.

More than 4,000 workers at the Willow Run assembly plant near Ypsilanti lose their jobs, but about 3,800 in Arlington will be spared.

"This was a very tough decision because our plants have been improving and getting closer and closer to each other in quality," Stempel said during a news conference shortly after laying out GM's restructuring plan in a na-

Mercury takes sudden plunge as storms hit

By Chris Van Wagenen
Staff Writer

A storm system that developed over New Mexico had dumped 1.1 inches of rain on Midland through Monday night, destroying any thoughts of extended spring-like weather as area temperatures plunged.

Today's forecast calls for cloudy skies through the morning, developing into mostly fair conditions.

According to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport, the low-pressure system transformed sunny 75-degree weather Sunday into a sopping 40-degree day Monday.

The bulk of the storm, which passed over Midland late Sunday night, dumped .83 inches of rain. An additional .27 inches of steady showers had been recorded by NWS as of Monday at 8:30 p.m.

The storm system was responsible for two lightning strikes — one forced TU Electric to cut service to 41 residential customers.

Pete Carhart, distribution superintendent for TU Electric's Midland Service Center, said crews cut the power to a neighborhood section bounded by Kessler and Ohio avenues, including residents living at Trinity Towers.

Court's unwilling to speed state's mapping review

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court refused Monday to speed up its review of a challenge by Texas officials to a legislative redistricting plan imposed by a three-judge federal court.

The justices, in a one-sentence order, said they will not expedite consideration of a formal appeal to the lower court's redistricting plan.

Texas officials say the redistricting plan should not have supplanted one devised by the state Legislature that had won Justice Department approval.

The state's formal appeal still is pending

Collections issue splits tax-assessor candidates

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the third of a six-part series looking at local races on the March 10 primary ballot.

By Debbie Lincecum
Staff Writer

In the race for Midland County Tax Assessor-Collector, the major bone of contention is the question of contracting with the Midland Central Appraisal District for tax collections.

Republican candidates James Devenport and Kathy Hodge Reeves disagree on that issue. While Devenport contends the contract would save the county money, Ms. Reeves says it would take away a valuable system of checks and balances that benefits taxpayers.

"The time is right to improve management strength in our government offices," says Devenport, who serves as City Council member for District 1. He said contracting with the appraisal district would save more than $100,000 a year. It's a position that has been supported by some County Commissioners.

Reeves

Devenport

But Ms. Reeves, an 8-year employee of the assessor-collector's office, follows the pledge of her supervisor, retiring Tax Assessor-Collector Frances Shuffield, who won't release the collections function.

"I believe in saving tax dollars," Ms. Reeves said. "Those are my tax dollars, too." But, she said, keeping the collections function is important, and she would like to see other local governmental entities contract the assessor-collector's office for collections, a change she said would save more than the other option.

"The appraisal district has (an annual) budget of $350,000," Ms. Reeves said. "We can do it for $200,000."

While such a change would take negotiation, Ms. Reeves said that if she's elected, "the door would be open."

Ms. Reeves said each entity — the assessor-collector's office and the appraisal district — should perform its own function, keeping in place a valuable system of checks and balances. The tax assessor-collector can protest or question tax appraisals, she said.

A native Midlander, Ms. Reeves is lead deputy in the assessor-collector's office. She said she already has completed some seminars that would aid her in the job if elected.

Devenport said contracting with the appraisal district would be more convenient — taxpayers would get just one statement — although splitting statements would be allowed. It also would end duplication of records by centralizing the appraisals and collections operations, he said.

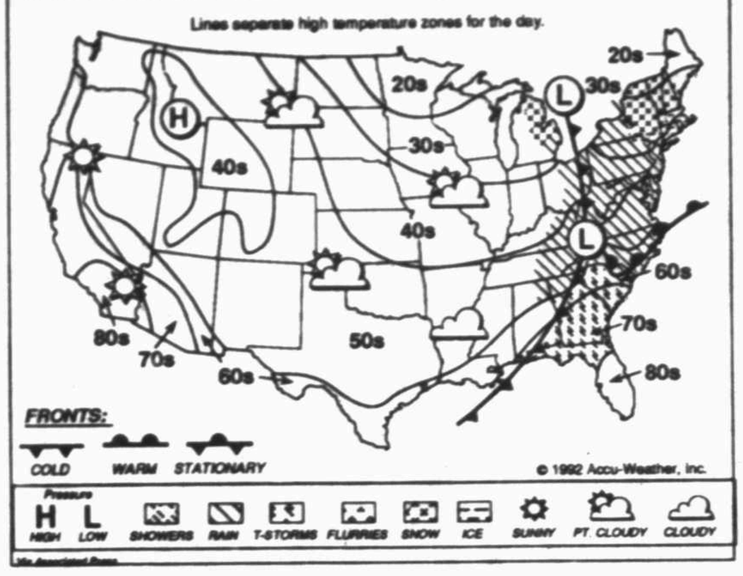

"At the very worst, I can save you $10,000 on postage," he said. But, through staff reductions and other changes, he expects the contract would save even more.

"It would be an assistance," Devenport said, emphasizing the assessor-collector would not give up ultimate reponsibility. But records about property would remain available, as would tax records —

WEATHER SUMMARY

The Accu-Weather® forecast for noon today.

Sleet pelts part of state

Associated Press

Gusty north winds on Monday knocked a rainy cold front into the Lone Star State that pelted regions with sleet and stripped South Texas of balmy conditions.

Flash flood watches and warnings were in effect across the state Monday night.

In Brownsville, severe thunderstorms were producing hail, heavy rain and winds in excess of 55 mph.

The Texas Department of Transportation reported road closures in parts of Central and South central Texas.

Up to 4 inches of rain fell over the Pecan Bayou and Jim Ned Creek watersheds near Lake Brownwood, causing both creeks to swell out of their banks. Brown County was under a flood warning.

Afternoon temperatures were in the mid- to upper 50s in North Texas. The mercury ranged from 39 degrees in Lubbock to 73 degrees in Corpus Christi.

The forecast for North Texas calls for mostly cloudy skies Tuesday with rain likely. Highs will be in the lower to mid-50s, lows in the lower 30s.

South Texas will see decreasing clouds late today as the rain ends. Lows will be in the 30s and 40s, highs reaching near 60.

In West Texas, the weather will be fair with a lingering chance of rain in the Concho Valley. Temperatures will climb into the mid-50s in the north to the upper 60s in the south. Lows tonight will be in the 20s and 30s.

NATION

Thunderstorms produced locally heavy rain and high wind Monday in parts of Texas, and heavy snow fell around the upper Great Lakes.

Showers and thunderstorms extended over much of Texas, with the strongest thunderstorms over southern parts of the state, the National Weather Service reported.

In south-central Texas, wind gusted to 63 mph during the afternoon at the Orange Grove naval air field. Morning thunderstorms produced wind gusts to 47 mph and 1.34 inches of rain at Del Rio.

In central Texas, a thunderstorm southwest of Fredericksburg produced hail as big as marbles and more than two inches of rain in an hour and 15 minutes. Lake Coleman got 3.30 inches of rain and Silver Valley reported 2.31 inches.

Abilene got 1.64 inches of rain in six hours.

Showers and a few thunderstorms extended from the central Gulf Coast to northern Florida.

To the north, an upper level weather system produced snow over parts of Minnesota, Wisconsin and Michigan.

In north-central Wisconsin, up to 5 inches had fallen by midday around Merrill and Medford. Up to 4 inches had fallen in northeastern Minnesota around Hibbing and Grand Rapids.

The snowfall total for the month at International Falls, Minn., reached a record 30.5 inches Monday. And that pushed the snowfall total for the three winter months to a record 69.5 inches.

Elsewhere, a mixture of rain and snow prevailed from Virginia to New York state.

Clouds and drizzle spread across the Northwest.

In Alaska, Kodiak accumulated 21.4 inches of snow from Saturday night to early Monday, the deepest snow cover since 1975.

LAWSUIT: Attorney cross-examines Painter

(From 1A)

we had an increase in misdemeanor cases."

He said he had not thoroughly read reports of sting operations carried out by his deputies.

In the district court trial, Painter is asking the presiding judge, Virgil Mulanax of Gilmer, to restrain the five-member Commissioners' Court from controlling his 156-member department, putting limitations on his jurisdiction, realigning his manpower and setting his vehicle policy.

Members of the Commissioners' Court contend they only want Painter to honor his budget, to confine his criminal investigations and sting operations to Midland County and to limit out-of-county travels to 10 statutory provisions that allow him and his deputies to go beyond their jurisdictions.

The provisions are listed in the order — filed on Aug. 20 in Midland's 238th Texas District Court — which is an expanded version of the original Aug. 12, 1991, order on which Painter based his lawsuit.

Mulanax is weighing the validity of the Dec. 19 amended order, which supersedes the original Aug. 12 order.

The amended order listed 10 statutory exceptions that give Painter authority to operate in other counties: pursuing criminal suspects, transporting prisoners, serving warrants, interviewing witnesses or criminal suspects, working with other law-enforcement agencies, testifying in court or monitoring cases transferred from Midland County and performing official duties.

The Commissioners' Court's stance, Culp said, is that "if the law doesn't authorize it (out-of-county travels and other expenses)," then the Commissioners' Court is not going to pay for it.

Culp, who presented a copy of the Dec. 19 amended order to Painter, asked the sheriff to read an explanatory paragraph.

The Commissioners' Court's order, Painter noted, said the order was not designed "to interfere with the right of any" county department head, including the sheriff, "to properly manage the affairs of his or her department or to interfere with the proper performance of the legitimate duties of county officials and employees."

With the exception of listed provisions for leaving the county, "no county official or employee should incur expenses for the county or subject the county to possible liability in connection with out-of-county activities without the express prior approval of the Commissioners' Court to engage in such out-of-county activity."

"Do you see anything wrong with that?" Culp said.

"I don't disagree with abiding by the law," Painter said.

Culp asked Painter if he could recall any reasons for a Midland County peace officer to be outside the county other than those 10 provisions listed in the order.

"I don't know of one specific (reason) right now," Painter said.

Since Painter launched out-of-county reverse stings under the direction of Clayton McKinney, captain of the sheriff's Operations Division and an ex-Texas Ranger, his office's Narcotics Fund (drug forfeiture fund) has been enriched by $985,000, Culp said.

Of that, all that remains is about $200,000 plus interest, Culp said. Ownership of the remaining cash is being contested by the sheriff, the Commissioners' Court and the Texas attorney general's office.

Forfeited drug money seized without benefit of a valid local agreement between a law-enforcement agency, such as the Sheriff's Office, and a state district attorney may belong to the state treasury, the attorney general contends.

Of the $985,000 forfeited to the sheriff, more than $300,000 has been paid to informants who assisted in stings; about $480,000 has been spent on law-enforcement equipment and tools, including computers; and $130,000 was spent on luxury cars for the sheriff's deputies, including a used Cadillac Sedan DeVille for McKinney.

Culp said that in the Commissioners' Court's Vehicle Policy on sheriff's cars, commissioners agreed to fuel, maintain and insure 40 cars paid for out of the taxpayer-fueled General Fund. But they would not underwrite expenses for most of the other 25 vehicles in the sheriff's 65-vehicle fleet.

Four of the 25 vehicles purchased with seized drug money or confiscated as contraband are grant-supported vehicles for use in the sheriff's crime-fighting programs, such as the Drug Abuse Resistance Education (DARE) project.

Painter had defied the Commissioners' Court's order to relinquish keys to those vehicles. Members of the department continued driving most of the vehicles and fueling them with gasoline paid for through the General Fund until the commissioners canceled gasoline credit cards on 21 of the vehicles.

"I believe the order to be unlawful," Painter said.

Similarly, the sheriff claims the Dec. 19 amended order also is unlawful, infringes on his authority and stymies his law-enforcement activities.

During Painter's testimony, County Judge Charles W. "Bro" Seltzer sat at Culp's table across the bar from the courtroom's gallery. Among those in the gallery were Seltzer's four co-defendants, commissioners Durward Wright, Guy McCrary, Louisa Valencia and Win Brown.

Outside the courtroom and waiting to be called as witnesses for the sheriff were deputies Clayton McKinney, Jose Primera, Tim Rogers, Rory McKinney, Ed Krevitt and Paul Hallmark.

Under questioning by his attorney, Marc Richman of Dallas, Painter testified that neither he nor his deputies left Midland County on sting operations to "try to stir something up."

Painter, whose deputies have worked 24 reverse stings elsewhere in Texas and in other states, said his out-of-county operations were rooted in Midland County.

"The crooks, a lot of times, determine where it (a reverse sting)" is to be carried out, Painter said.

"Our job is to suppress crime and to enforce the law."

In tracing out-of-state reverse stings involving the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration and the U.S. Customs Service, Painter said, "You never know where they are going to wind up."

"You can't just get to the county line and throw your hands up" and stop pursuing crime and criminals, Painter said.

His deputies have been on reverse stings in Illinois and Indiana in the pursuit of drug traffickers.

In his lawsuit petition, Painter is claiming that under his leadership, the Sheriff's Department "has gained a state and national reputation as a leader in the fight against illegal narcotics."

Further, Painter claims that his department, largely though the efforts of Clayton McKinney, who has engineered the sheriff's reverse-sting operations, "has assembled a team of highly trained undercover narcotics officers who pose as drug dealers" in a strategy termed as a reverse operation.

Those operations, Painter alleges, have "resulted in the arrest and prosecution of major suppliers of narcotics and in the seizure of and forfeiture of millions of dollars in drug money and drop properties."

Culp, a 62-year-old retired district judge, is scheduled to continue cross-examining Painter when the trial resumes today at 9 a.m. at the Midland County Courthouse.

STORMS: Mercury to rise

(From 1A)

According to Carhart, at some point early Monday morning, lightning struck a power pole in the area causing the top of the pole to catch fire. As a precaution, TU cut power in the area for a few hours.

Lightning also apparently struck a set of fuses on a power pole in an oil field south of town.

"Other than that, it was a pretty quiet night," Carhart said.

Emergency services, including police, fire and the Department of Public Safety, reported no unusual major activity related to the storm.

There were, however, some minor traffic accidents blamed on the weather.

At Midland International, a spokesperson said there were no delays or disruptions caused by the storm. All flights arrived and departed on time.

Today's forecast calls for cloudy skies through the morning, developing into mostly fair conditions by late afternoon. Today's high will be in the upper 50s, with winds out of the northeast at 10 to 15 mph. Tonight should be mostly fair with a low in the mid-30s, according to the NWS.

Wednesday should be partly cloudy with a high in the mid-60s. The warming trend should continue for at least three more days as the extended forecast calls for highs in the 60s through Saturday.

Monday's high of 52 was recorded at midnight and temperatures gradually decreased throughout the day. The low was expected to be reached late Monday night.

RACE: Candidates differ

from the appraisal district, he said.

Self-employed in the petroleum land business, Devenport is a former high school and college math instructor. Born in Alpine, Devenport has college degrees in math and history as well as a real-estate license.

He said he would consider tax assessor-collector a full-time job, and would effectively sell his business.

At the office both candidates want to run, computerization is now under way. It couldn't be more needed in the busy place — the flow of customers is constant.

As an agent of the state, the tax assessor-collector's office processes more than 100,000 motor-vehicle registrations and title changes, as well as collecting those fees.

In addition to ad valorem collections for Midland County, the office collects for Greenwood Independent School District and the Andrews-Midland County Education District. There are now about 130,000 tax accounts on $3.6 billion in appraised property.

Workers formulate projections for next year's collections, keep records on property ownership and historical information.

Because there are no Democratic candidates in the race, it will be decided March 10 with the Republican primary. Early voting is now under way.

MAPPING: Court won't speed review before the nation's highest court. But Monday's action means that, even if the appeal were granted review, no Supreme Court decision would be announced before the state's legislative primaries.

The high court last weekend refused to postpone the Texas Senate primary, scheduled for March 10, while the formal appeal by state officials was pending.

State Attorney General Dan Morales had told the justices that a postponement order was necessary because of an investigation into allegations of judicial impropriety in the drawing of at least one state Senate district boundary.

The three-judge federal court last month ordered state officials to conduct the primaries using its redistricting plan.

But Morales said a "dark cloud hovers" over the court plan due to allegations that one of the three judges, James R. Nowlin of Austin, gave a state representative "secret access to the court's computer plan and that he used the access to change the boundary of the very district in which he is now running as a candidate."

The Senate redistricting plan is opposed by Democratic leaders, who charge that Nowlin, a Republican appointee, had Republican state Rep. George Pierce of San Antonio secretly make adjustments to the court's redistricting map.

The 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals has ordered a committee of judges to investigate allegations that Nowlin acted in a partisan way.

State officials and minority groups, who favor a state Senate map that was drawn in a special session of the state Legislature, contend that the court-drawn plan increases Republican representation at the expense of minority voters.

Nowlin repeatedly has declined to discuss the allegations. Pierce has denied any wrongdoing, saying he made only minor adjustments on the Senate boundaries, including the district in which he is running this year.

In the appeal still pending before the justices, Morales said the three-judge court exceeded its authority under the Voting Rights Act of 1965 when it substituted its plan for the map drawn by the Legislature.

"A local three-judge federal court ... has no jurisidiction to substitute a court-ordered redistricting plan for a legislatively approved plan that has obtained administrative preclearance (by the Justice Department)," the state's appeal contends.

The case is Richards vs. Terrazas, 91-1270.

PLANT: Arlington wins GM battle; Ypsilanti, Mich., loses

Texas politicians line up to claim credit for decision

By Christopher Ave
N.Y. Times News Service

ARLINGTON — A couple hours after he learned that Arlington's General Motors plant was staying open, an exultant Mayor Richard Greene pulled a copy of a Detroit Free Press story from a beat-up file folder on his desk.

The story predicted GM would close the Arlington plant.

Greene grinned, raised the story over his head and struck his best "Dewey Defeats Truman" pose.

"Does this look like Harry Truman?" he asked several City Council members who had crowded into his office.

In Austin, after learning the news by telephone from a GM official in Detroit, Gov. Ann Richards hailed the decision as "a gold medal in the economic development Olympics" and a hallmark of the New Texas she has pledged her administration to serve.

From Arlington's City Hall — where 20 officials crowded behind a lectern at a news conference — to the halls of Congress, where fax machines cranked out a stream of news releases praising the decision, politicians lined up to claim a share of the credit for the corporate giant's decision.

But in political circles, no one stands to profit more than the Republican Greene and the Democrat Richards, who together spearheaded the effort to persuade GM that Arlington, Texas — not Ypsilanti, Mich. — should be the site of a plant consolidation.

Lisa LeMaster, a Dallas communications consultant most closely associated with Republicans, said the quick, high-profile response headed by Richards and Greene was a risky proposition that should pay off big for both.

"In my mind, she and Richard Greene had everything to lose and everything to win," LeMaster said. "It was a gutsy roll of the dice to be so high-profile and to respond so quickly."

Texas House Speaker Gib Lewis, D-Fort Worth, jokingly offered Richards a job on the sales force of his private business.

"After seeing the sales job that she did for General Motors, on securing this location and bringing these new jobs here and keeping the jobs that we have, she'll always have a position at Lewis Label Products," he said. "I could use a salesman like her."

County Judge Tom Vandergriff, the former Arlington mayor who helped bring the GM plant to the city 40 years ago, said Greene "is capable of doing anything he wants to do" now.

"Already he's one of the most respected local government officials anywhere," Vandergriff said. "I think that the recent efforts make it more obvious Arlington is indeed fortunate."

In a jubilant news conference before 100 people at City Hall after GM's announcement, Vandergriff drew the loudest applause when he gave Greene a hug and boomed, "I'm proud of you. I'm so proud of you."

Greene brushed aside speculation he would seek higher political office, but not completely.

"Who knows what the future may hold?" Greene said. "It's just kind of a 'We'll see' sort of an answer. ... I enjoy the role of serving this city, and perhaps there could be other areas of opportunity I could take an interest in. But right now, those processes are just not occurring."

Bigger rewards could go to Richards, who flew to Arlington on Jan. 10 to announce a wide-ranging offer of assistance to GM if the plant remained open. LeMaster said the governor's role shed national attention on her aggressive style. She noted Richards already is being mentioned as a possible candidate for vice president.

"It was pro-labor, but it also was for business; it was for economic growth," LeMaster said. "The governor took on one of the world's largest corporations — and won. It was muscle-flexing, Richards style."

Bob Slagle, chairman of the Texas Democratic Party, said the exposure has given Richards an improved national image that will help the state in future dealings with the federal government.

Richards credited the Texas Department of Commerce executive director, Cathy Bonner — whom she called "our Stealth bomber" — and other state and local officials, as well as Arlington's GM workers.

Her thoughts were echoed by politicians from the county commissioners court, the statehouse and the Congress.

U.S. Rep. Martin Frost, D-Dallas, said he, Sen. Lloyd Bentsen and other Texas lawmakers merely "succeeded in neutralizing the Michigan delegation" in talks with GM. Frost said the bulk of the credit should go to plant workers who last year voted to adopt new work schedules if needed.

U.S. Rep. Joe Barton, R-Ennis, agreed. "In the final analysis, it was the local workforce who won the right to continue to build automobiles here in Texas."

Ditto, Tarrant County Commissioner Marti VanRavenswaay of Arlington who issued a nearly identical statement, as did State Sen. Mike Moncrief, a Fort Worth Democrat whose new district includes Arlington.

JOBS: Plant expansion to have multiplier effect by $20.4 million.

Based on federal surveys, the 1,000 new workers' annual expenditures will include:

- $9.1 million on mortgage payments, rents and household supplies;
- $2.7 million on groceries;
- $1.5 million on entertainment;
- $788,320 on reading materials; and
- $104,000 on sweets.

Not only will new GM workers be pouring more money into the local economy, but their employer will spend about $30 million to complete its paint shop, said Mike Seiler, chairman of UAW Local 276.

Officials at Summers Group, a wholesale electrical supply company with offices in Fort Worth and Arlington, expect more business.

"Our share of the pie might get bigger," said Fort Worth branch manager Chad Kegans. "And after the closure of Lennox, the reductions at General Dynamics, the closure of Snapper, the loss of Motorola, should I go on? It looks like Tarrant County has finally won one. ... The emotional boost helps more than anything."

When the third shift is added in mid-1993, the plant will produce an extra 60,000 to 70,000 cars a year, union officials said. The plant turned out 129,000 cars last year.

Union Pacific Railroad may hire more people to handle an estimated 3,250 additional rail cars carrying parts into the plant and 3,600 extra rail cars carrying automobiles out.

In Brownsville, Valley Trucking may add as many as 30 drivers to its fleet, which brings parts to Arlington from Matamoros, Mexico. News of the decision was especially heartening for the Valley Trucking officials because last year they added 30 new trailers to ship parts to the plant, said parts dispatcher Joe Garcia.

At Dallas/Fort Worth Airport, Burlington Air Express expects more business as well. The air freight company makes $800 to $1,000 a day flying parts for the plant.

In Las Colinas, ARA Food Services has scheduled a meeting Tuesday morning to determine if GM's expansion will mean adding to the 20 workers who work at the plant cafeteria.

"We're very thrilled that they're staying open," said Tim Reed, district manager of the food service company that supplies $4,000 of food a week to the plant. "It's going to enable us to continue employing our people ... and we look forward to growing with them in 1993."

Arlington Disposal, the city's trash collector, could increase its revenues from GM by $15,000 a month because of extra trash created by 1,000 more employees and a third shift, said company owner Bob Duncan.

Retailers, restaurateurs and other service establishment owners also were expecting to pick up more business.

Tim Nquyen, who owns a convenience store across the street from the plant, said workers provide a big boost to his business.

"If they move a bunch of workers down here, I may open up a third shift myself," Nquyen said.

GM's decision is good news for the local housing market, too. Already, 2,656 GM workers live in Tarrant County and Grand Prairie, according to figures from the nation's largest automaker. At Van Zandt Realtors, Gloria Van Zandt said her office already has received inquiries from Michigan workers curious about relocation options.

"We're set up to relocate," Van Zandt said. "Of course, we're unhappy for the Detroit people. But Texas has had its share of market depletion. We've put in our dues."

GM's decision could be a boon for the city, city budget manager Richard Wiggans said Monday.

"Hopefully, not only GM employees, but related businesses in the area will see it as a very positive sign," he said. "People will be much more positive about their future economic condition."

More help could come from the new enterprise zone surrounding the plant and including the Great Southwest Industrial District. Monday, the Texas Department of Commerce officially designated the area as the Arlington/Great Southwest Enterprise Zone.

tionwide teleconference for the company's 390,000 employees.

"But in the end, you have to sit down and look at each one and decide which has the best opportunity for the future and make that decision."

Mike Seiler, shop chairman at United Auto Workers Local 276, which represents about 3,400 Arlington workers, said the plant may go to a three-shift production system in September if market conditions warrant.

He said moving to the three-shift system could add 1,000 workers to Arlington's payroll. If so, those workers would come from the ranks of those laid off from other GM plants.

"We're very proud here," Seiler said. "We feel bad for the people at Willow Run — their jobs are important, too — but everyone had been saying they would win since the beginning.

"I guess we proved them all wrong."

Arlington plant manager Art Hester took the announcement in stride.

"I wasn't surprised," Hester said. "I believed in our work force and our plan."

In all, GM said Monday it would close 11 factories nationwide and lay off 16,308 workers, with more than 9,000 of those coming from the state of Michigan, which already has the worst unemployment rate in the nation.

Besides the Willow Run assembly plant, the largest layoffs will come at North Tarrytown, N.Y., where 3,456 work at an assembly plant; Flint, Mich., where 4,036 work at a V-8 engine plant; and St. Catharines, Ontario, where 2,150 work at a casting plant.

Many of those to be laid off in the closings already have received pink slips. At Willow Run for example, more than 1,300 of the 4,014 listed as working at the plant were laid off last year.

Plans call for the plants to be closed by 1995.

Stung by shrinking market share in the 1980s and a rising flow of red ink so far in the 1990s, GM is taking the moves as a way of stemming the flood of bad results and reshaping the company for profitability.

Arlington overcame what many in the auto industry believed was a death sentence after Stempel said Dec. 18 that the work done at the two facilities would be consolidated at one.

But Arlington workers voted to go to a three-shift production system, and city and state officials offered up an estimated $30 million in tax incentives.

Stempel said tax abatements and other incentives offered by city and state officials did not play a role in GM's decison, but he praised the reaction the company received from its Arlington workers.

"Our decisions were internal," he said. "There was absolutely no outside influence on any decision. We had an extensive evaluation of the plants. It involved work rules, quality, cost, location and the workforce itself — their quality."

In Arlington — where workers have endured more than two months of waiting and worrying — the news brought workers a chance to prove they make up the most flexible workforce ever to man a GM assembly line.

Already producing the Chevrolet Caprice, Cadillac Brougham and Buick Roadmaster, they will now take on additional Caprice production, plus assembly responsibility for three full-size station-wagons now built at Willow Run.

Combined sales for those six cars in 1991 was about 180,000. The Arlington and Willow Run plants together have production capacity to build more than 220,000 cars a year.

Stempel said GM believes it can produce those cars in Arlington without problems and without expansion of the existing facility.

"We did not look at the plants with an eye toward expansion," he said. "We looked at the existing square feet, what was there and how we could better utilize it.

"We have two full-size car plants operating at partial capacity. By consolidating into one, we'll help ourselves."

Seiler said the 39-year-old Arlington plant's work force "can do whatever they want us to do. This work force has proved over the years that we can produce a high-quality car at a low cost, and that's what has given Arlington a future in GM."

He said union leaders would begin talking with plant management about moving to the three-shift system immediately, but did not expect plans to be made until later this year.

"Promises are cheap, but now we've got to live up to them," Hester said. "We're going to have to build our cars on time and build them better."

GM said it had lost $519 million in the fourth quarter of 1991 and $4.5 billion for the year. That compares to a fourth-quarter loss of $1.6 billion in 1990.

America has plenty of successes in Japan, U.S. envoy says

By Steven R. Weisman
N.Y. Times News Service

TOKYO — At a time when U.S. relations with Japan are growing more rancorous and fears are mounting that some sort of a crisis is in the offing, one American in Tokyo is urging that the situation not be seen as worse than it really is.

"When people talk about a rapid deterioration in our relationship, I don't know quite what to make of it," said Michael H. Armacost, the U.S. ambassador to Japan. "I'm concerned about these perceptions. At the official level, I must say that our relationship with Japan is good."

Among the trends cited by the ambassador is the fact that U.S. exports to Japan are growing, that the trade deficit has declined from a high of $57 billion to $43 billion, and that Washington and Tokyo agree on a host of political and diplomatic issues confronting the world today.

"People don't even comment on it, it's become so routine," he said of U.S.-Japanese cooperation. Citing Kodak, Microsoft, Merck and other U.S. companies that have done well in Japan, he said U.S. businessmen should not stay out of Japan for "fear that it's just too hard."

"It's important that success stories be known because there are plenty of them," he said.

■ More world news/8A

Armacost, of course, has a job requiring him to emphasize the positive, in part to defend his own record in one of the most sensitive diplomatic posts in the world. But the ambassador is also a tough critic of Japanese policies and practices.

Arriving here three years ago, he established a new tone of blunt advice to the Japanese and pressure to open up markets to U.S. businesses, in contrast to the friendly and deferential approach of his predecessor, Mike Mansfield, the former Senate majority leader.

In the Japanese press, Armacost became known as "Mr. Gai-atsu" — the word for "foreign pressure" — and it was hardly ever used as a compliment.

But he won widespread praise from U.S. business executives who felt that Mansfield had been a pushover for the Japanese economic juggernaut.

In a wide-ranging interview, Armacost said Monday that he did not feel especially torn over having to press Japan to do more, while defending Tokyo to Americans who feel that it has not done much at all.

"The Japanese market is a lot more open than many foreign critics are willing to acknowledge," he said. "It's not as open as many Japanese like to claim. So there's work yet to be done."

After President Bush's calamity-filled visit to Japan in January, many critics felt it was not surprising that the positive message got drowned out. Bush's decision to bring along a group of automobile company executives, they said, guaranteed that their carping would get most of the publicity.

Haitian army remains silent on Aristide, OAS agreement

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (NYT) — Haiti's military high command was officially silent Monday on an agreement that could restore President Jean-Bertrand Aristide to power, but there were indications that the exiled leader may face opposition from within the army if he tries to return.

Sunday's surprise agreement, signed by Aristide and six Haitian legislative leaders at Organization of American States headquarters in Washington, was concluded after Aristide gave up his insistence that Lt. Gen. Raoul Cedras, who he accuses of leading the coup, be removed as army chief. The accord also grants amnesty to all those involved in the coup.

Regardless, it was greeted with uneasiness and skepticism by Haitian military officers and soldiers.

Some political leaders said the army's top officer corps would embrace the agreement, but suggested these officers may not be able to — or want to — control anti-Aristide elements from within their ranks.

"The dossier is not closed. All the sides are not satisfied," a high- ranking Haitian officer said, referring to the accord that still must be ratified by Haiti's 107-seat parliament. His comments were echoed by other military officers who spoke privately.

There was also the question of whether the military would pressure the parliament not to accept the accord.

A Western diplomat down played the OAS agreement, saying "it is useless to negotiate with parliament. Parliament is not a real force. Either negotiate with the people who are blocking the process, meaning the army, or force them to leave."

Also Monday, about 200 anti-Aristide demonstrators protested outside parliament carrying placards condemning the OAS-brokered agreement.

Protestor Jean Fouchard hinted that the legislators who signed the agreement with Aristide in Washington might not be safe if they return as scheduled today. "They're going to have a problem," he said.

De Klerk sets March 17 voting date

JOHANNESBURG (NYT) — South Africa's whites will decide on March 17 whether they want President F.W. de Klerk to continue negotiating an end to apartheid on their behalf.

In setting the date of the referendum that he called last on Feb. 20, de Klerk on Monday also released the wording of the crucial question that he is putting to white voters. It asks:

"Do you support continuation of the reform process, which the State President began on Feb. 2, 1990, and which is aimed at a new Constitution through negotiation?"

De Klerk said, "I sincerely believe that this referendum brings us to a momentous moment in the history of our country."

The question refers to the day two years ago when de Klerk legalized the African National Congress and other banned anti-apartheid groups and set a course of political change away from apartheid.

Last year, de Klerk repealed the basic laws underpinning apartheid and opened negotiations with the ANC and other political groups on the future of South Africa, including a new constitution that would give the black majority political rights.

The white, right-wing Conservative Party and two radical black organizations, the Pan-Africanist Congress and the Azanian Peoples' Organization, have refused to join the negotiations.

At the negotiations Monday, the ANC offered a new blueprint for the transition to majority rule with more concessions to ease the concerns of whites.

The ANC proposed a 15-month transition to "full-blooded democracy," with an interim government drawn from parties that are taking part in the negotiations to oversee the existing Cabinet and Parliament, a constituent assembly requiring a two-third majority to reach decisions, and a transition period of up to five years until the new constitution goes into effect, to ease the adjustment for whites.

De Klerk called for the referendum after the Conservative Party trounced the National Party in a local parliamentary election in Potchefstroom.

GM closings, fish quota cuts slam economy for Canadians

TORONTO (AP) — Canadians got a double dose of bad economic news Monday: General Motors announced cutbacks in Ontario that will cost 2,300 jobs, and the government reduced cod-fishing quotas in Newfoundland by 35 percent.

The two announcements were heavy blows to an economy already suffering 10.4 percent unemployment. In the impoverished Atlantic province of Newfoundland unemployment is at 18 percent.

In Detroit on Monday, General Motors Chairman Robert Stempel announced plant closures in the United States and Canada after GM reported a loss of $4.5 billion last year.

GM's Canadian operations announced earnings of $323.3 million on sales of $19.3 billion. Nonetheless, GM said it needed cutbacks at an engine plant in St. Catharines, Ont., and the closing of a foundry there by the spring of 1995.

The closing of the foundry will put 2,150 people out of work and the engine plant cutback will cost 165 jobs.

George Peapples, president of General Motors Canada, called the plant and foundry "high quality operations." But he said the company had to cut back on plants that produce more equipment than needed.

Bob White, head of the Canadian Auto Workers union, called the move devastating and a shock to the community.

General Motors employs about 41,000 people at 12 plants in Canada.

The news was equally bad on the frigid Atlantic coast, where people look to the sea for their living. The northern cod fishery was worth about $595 million (U.S.) in 1991, employing 31,000 people, 90 percent of them in Newfoundland.

Fisheries Minister John Crosbie slashed 65,000 tons from the 1992 northern cod quota of 185,000 tons. He was responding to scientific studies that show a drastic reduction in the number of cod in Canada's Grand Banks fishing grounds off Newfoundland's coasts.

The new cutbacks certainly will lead to layoffs in the industry. Even before the quota announcement, a major fish processing company laid off more than 1,000 people.

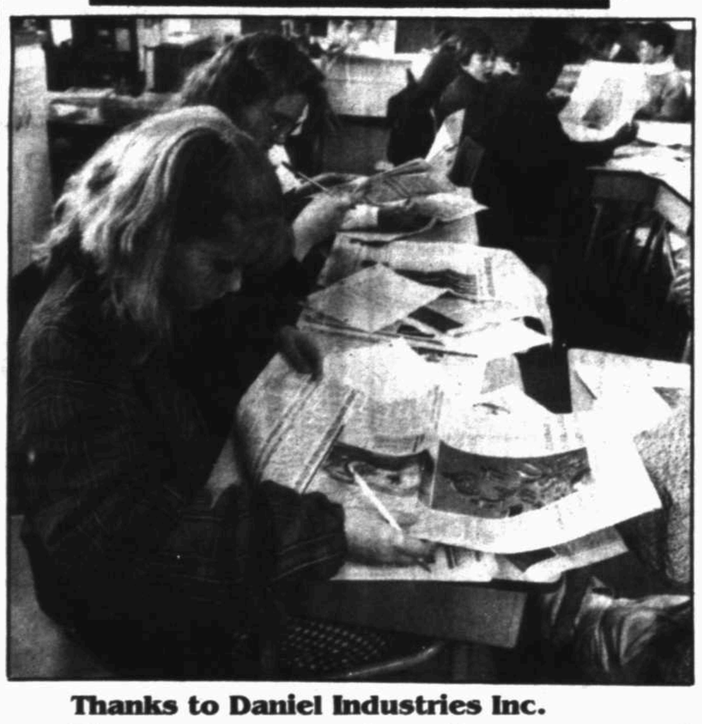

"The fishery is going to recover again if we approach it in the proper way," Crosbie told a news conference. "I hope what I have outlined is the proper way to go about this."

Many blame the loss of cod on the region's 3.5 million harp seals, which eat large numbers of fish, and European fishermen, who officials say vastly overfish in the area just outside Canada's 200-mile economic zone.

Crosbie said the government will set up a task force to study the seal problem and make stronger efforts to reduce overfishing.

The Power To Make A Difference.

The true power of a company is best measured by its ability to make a difference in the lives of the people it serves.

There is a young family in Richmond, Virginia, building their first home.

There is a proud mother and father in Rockville, Maryland, thinking about college for their son.

And in Midland, Texas, a man and his wife are planning for retirement.

We grew up with families just like these, in the towns and cities of Georgia, Texas and the Carolinas. We grew strong together in places like Nashville and Clearwater, in the neighborhoods of a nation.

Today, as a bank with the resources, the services and the locations to reach one out of every four people in the nation, we are still a bank of one vision.

We are still a bank that measures its success by the success of every person, every family, every community we serve: from Baltimore to Miami to El Paso.

It is no wonder that this bank, dedicated to making a difference in the neighborhoods of a nation, would today be called NationsBank.

Implant limits seem rational

During the last 30 years at least one million American women have undergone breast implant surgery. The figure is inexact, but then so is everything that's known, or suspected, about the procedure. In fact, the most important information arrived at during last week's Food and Drug Administration hearings on silicone implants was how little information there is. Which means that not one of those women made a truly informed decision.

Faced with evidence from plastic surgeons, implant manufacturers, oncologists, rheumatologists and other interested parties that neither proved nor disproved implant safety, the FDA's advisory panel decided to split possible recipients into two groups.

All those who want to correct a deformity or replace breasts lost to cancer would be able to do so, as participants in experimental trials that would help determine the medical risks of implants. Those who want implants only for cosmetic purposes (80 percent of all implant recipients) would have to apply to the doctors conducting the trials, with no assurance of getting in.

Kermit Campbell, group vice president for Dow Corning Corp., called the action "helpful to the women who really need access" to implants. In doing so, he threw into high relief an accusation that is certain to be leveled at the panel: that by limiting implants to the ill and deformed it stigmatizes and patronizes women who just want bigger breasts.

Given the shoddiness of the scientific studies done by implant manufacturers like Dow Corning, however, the limits seem rational. Although the great majority of cancer victims forgo breast reconstruction, those who've had it characterize the surgery as vital to their recovery.

That it's important to other women, too, is obvious. Even so, implanting silicone sacs to bolster breasts is a far more invasive and risky procedure (for some women at least) than transplanting hair plugs into men to forest bare scalps — how risky women are only beginning to discover.

David A. Kessler, the FDA's commissioner, will act on the panel's recommendation within 60 days. That's plenty of time for women to consider what is known about breast implants — that they leak silicone into the body even when they don't rupture, that they can compromise the ability of mammography to detect cancer early, that scar tissue around them can make breasts feel like marbles — and wonder "Are they worth it?"

Truly resignation leaves NASA hanging

The resignation of Richard H. Truly as NASA administrator is unfortunate, both in its timing and its substance. Most importantly, the country loses an able administrator with an understanding of the space program that will be hard to match in a successor.

The timing could not have been worse. The nation's space station is under continual attack by some in Congress and the space program is at a turning point. Some see the end of the Cold War as adversely affecting the program because of the Apollo-era technological battle it spearheaded against the Soviets.

Truly was an astronaut who flew two shuttle missions and helped bring the space agency back from the Challenger disaster after becoming administrator in mid-1989. Yet it is clear he had repeated disagreements with the White House. The primary opponent of the knowledgeable and experienced NASA administrator has been Vice President Dan Quayle, National Space Council head, whose reputation features neither of those qualities.

Given the choice, it might be tempting to have Truly stay on at NASA after April 1 and find somebody else to head the National Space Council.

Out of touch officials need 'halfway house'

Jaws dropped recently when President Bush visited a grocers' convention and seemed amazed by the price-scanning machine that his fellow countrymen see in their neighborhood supermarkets. "This is for checking out?" he queried. It was obvious that Mr. Bush hadn't run out for a gallon of milk and a loaf of bread in a little while.

The president's brush with everyday life pointed up a common problem among high-ranking government officials. No matter how much a politician may try to appear as though he or she has the common touch, the fact remains that, for reasons of both expediency and security, a politician often leads a life quite divorced from the mundane tasks that fill up many other people's days.

Maybe that's not so bad. As much as we may want our leaders to have some empathy for the plight of the common man, we probably would begin to wonder whether the president was spending his time productively if we bumped into him picking up his shirts at the dry cleaner's.

Perhaps what retiring politicians need is a halfway house to help them ease their transition to everyday life. You know, someplace where they could learn how to change the oil, or mow the lawn, or maybe even balance a household budget (what a novel idea). It might be awkward at first, but just think of the social good the house would do.

Please, though, not in our neighborhood.

WILLIAM MURCHISON

Buçhanan proves pragmatism fails

George Bush said he got the New Hampshire Republican voters' "message of dissatisfaction," delivered Tuesday with the force of a boot toe on the pants seat. If he didn't get it, he should go check into Walter Reed Hospital for hearing tests.

Murchison

The larger question is, does he understand the problem he faces? Does he know why a mere pundit, in three months of campaigning, managed to muss up the mightiest politician in the world?

New Hampshire's primary was, as we heard, about economic conditions — job loss and home foreclosures and a general feeling of despair over America's present course. These are symptoms. The disease is the lack of a healthy and consistent vision of how a free society, and its economy, should operate.

Political pragmatists drip contempt for "ideologues," the usual word for Buchanan and his conservative ilk. An ideology, to give it that questionable name, is a structured, coherent view of the world. You don't contemplate it, sitting in the lotus position. You use it to shape policy, get things done. When the right things get done, you've got a practical as well as an intellectual victory.

George Bush, by contrast, has virtually no ideology, which is why he has no policies and, in the end, no results in which to take pride. He's the pragmatist's pragmatist — a believer in whatever works. Boy, does Pat Buchanan have news for him: Political pragmatism doesn't work.

Buchanan made hay in New Hampshire with Bush's tergiversation on taxes. We read the man's lips; we believed he would not raise taxes; and he did anyway. It was the perfect issue for Buchanan, not just symbolic but substantive. On the symbolic side, it showed up Bush as a leader unattached to his own promises. All politicians backtrack from time to time — just not so visibly.

Or so wrenchingly. The 1990 budget agreement that produced the tax increase was a blow to the economic solar plexus: probably the major factor in the recession. Government spending wasn't cut — it soared at the highest rate since the 1930s, fueled by those new taxes that sucked money out of American families' hands and into the hands of bureaucrats and congressmen. The federal government rakes in one of every four dollars of the national wealth — yet the deficit is almost $400 billion. Federal regulations are at an all-time high. No wonder the economy wobbles. We're carrying government on our backs — with the active connivance, heaven help us, of Ronald Reagan's vice president.

Pragmatism fails not only economically but politically. The Buchananites were afire, but even Bush voters found their man as exciting as day-old bread. They voted for him more dutifully than enthusiastically.

Over on the Democratic side, the winner, Paul Tsongas, was the candidate with — given the choices — the solidest economic program. One conservative economist tells me that if you run the numbers on Tsongas' program it looks better, and more economically fruitful, than Bush's.

A chastened Bush promises to burn up the campaign trail in earnest. So? The question isn't how much ethnic food he eats or how many babies he busses, it's what he says and, most of all, what he does in Washington to back up what he says.

I say just this: Thanks to Buchanan, we're having the healthiest and most clarifying presidential race since 1980. This is good for us — good for America, good even for George Bush. We're talking about first principles; about ideas — good ones and bad ones and about likely consequences. Give that bulldog pundit a medal, if not a promotion.

CHARLEY REESE

Conviction doesn't erase damage done

After a jury convicted Mike Tyson of rape, one of the feminists crowed that it was a great victory.

Oh? For whom? The girl is still raped. Whatever pain or bruises, psychic or physical, she suffered will not heal any faster just because Tyson goes to jail. Furthermore, no woman in America is one iota safer after Tyson's conviction than before it. Rapists are convicted every day in this country.

Reese

What you have here is the intellectual and moral sterility of feminism. Their answer to women being raped is to ask the government to do what it has already been doing for centuries — punish the rapist.

Government, however, is a poor protector. It only acts after the fact. Arresting and punishing a rapist does not undo the damage already done. Executing a murderer does not resurrect his victim from the grave. Dancing a little jig after a jury has brought in a guilty verdict doesn't help women one bit.

What would help women is what feminists in particular and modern secularists in general hate and despise: advice on how a woman should behave herself. If this woman had not gone to Mike Tyson's room at 2 a.m., she would not have been raped by Mike Tyson.

Granted, even a worn-out streetwalker has a right to say no and the law should back that up. But that's playing word games. That's lawyer talk. Practically, how are you going to help women to avoid being raped? Teach them a code of behavior that will help them avoid dangerous situations.

Women who go to men's rooms in the middle of the night or pick up strangers in bars and leave with them are indeed asking for trouble. An old waterfront prostitute of my acquaintance long ago, put it quite well.

"You got to be careful who you go home with," she said and then pulled out a bridge of three front teeth.

"See these? An Air Force captain knocked them out. A captain, for God's sake. Who can you trust these days?"

Too many feminists, obsessed with their ideological belief that any suggestion of restraint on the behavior of women is a patriarchal plot to exploit them, lack even the common sense of a waterfront whore.

Sex is a matter of hormones, not of intellect or law. Among individuals, levels of hormones vary and so do the inclination and the ability to let reason or morality over-ride the impulses triggered by the hormones.

That's why sex education is virtually an oxymoron. If educating the brain could have much effect on glandular behavior, then the world would not be so full of unwanted children, aborted babies, raped women, wrecked marriages and sexually-transmitted diseases.

Secular societies, however, prefer failure to anything that smacks of religion and morality. They will defend their ideology in the face of contrary facts stacked as high as the Alps.

The old religious injunctions that women should dress modestly are grounded, like most morality, in pragmatism. When women dress in ways that stress their sexuality, when they act in a flirtatious and alluring manner, what is their objective? To appear to be sexually desirable, to attract and arouse the attention of a male.

That's fine in a safe situation, but when women, having done that, then go traipsing off with strangers or people whom they know only slightly, expecting that they can control the situation, they are acting in a stupid manner. Maybe they can; maybe they can't.

When you play Russian roulette with a revolver, you have a five out of six chance of surviving. Those odds, however, do not make it less stupid an activity.

WILLIAM SAFIRE

Overuse of prefixes creates multi-problems

Multi- is a prefix that has a special place in my heart. As a cub reporter for a column in the old New York Herald Tribune, I interviewed the Italian movie actress Gina Lollobrigida, then making her first splash in "Pane, Amore e Fantasia." I was then short of all three — bread, love and dreams — and treasured a picture she gave me, which shows her posing in revealing rags and pouting defiantly, and is inscribed "Molto simpatico."

Safire

Multi-, like the Italian molto, is from the Latin multus, "much"; Miss Lollobrigida was offering fans much affection. Stuck on the beginning of nouns, like multivitamin, it means "more than one, several"; on the beginning of adjectives, like multifaceted, multi- means "many."

"Multilaterals Raise Hopes" is the headline on a recent issue of the weekly Near East Report. The liberated modifier, multilateral, used to be part of multilateral discussions; now on its own, it was used here to refer to the talks between Israel and many Arab states about regional issues.

This figurative use of the adjective was started by Sir William Jones, the English jurist, in a 1784 letter to the conservative statesman Edmund Burke: "The charter of justice . . . makes me multilateral; it gives me an equity side, a law side, an ecclesiastical side, a crown side, an admiralty side."

For some reason, Jones was dissatisfied with many-sided. That early anti-manyism has caught on; although few is doing fine, many is in disuse. If Han Suyinwere writing her Hong Kong novel today, she would change the title (and the subsequent movie and song) to "Love is a Multi-Splendored Thing."

We used to be in a bipolar world, using a term Zbigniew Brzezinski popularized in the early 1970s after the term polarization was used to cluck-cluck at political partisanship. In fact, the world has always been bipolar, rotating as it does on an axis with north and south poles, but that geopolitical sense has led to the replacement of bi- (two) with multi- (count 'em).

With the dissolution of one of the two superpowers, the world has become multipolar, a word associated in the mid-70s with Henry Kissinger, whose clients today are multinational. (Such companies require multilingual interpreters, and hire multimarket executives who engage in multitasking rather than do anything themselves.)

The controversy raging on college campuses is about multiculturalism. The adjective form of that noun was coined in a July 3, 1941, book review in my old Herald Tribune, a decade before "Pane, Amore e Fantasia" was filmed. Some book — I don't know the title — was described as "a fervent sermon against nationalism, national prejudice and behavior in favor of a 'multicultural' way of life."

When proponents of cultural diversity gained attention derogating Western civilization in the 1980s, multicultural became a college curriculum code word for "not dominated by whites." The historian Arthur Schlesinger Jr., writing in The Wall Street Journal last year, blasted the views of "high-minded but wrong-headed multicultural zealots."

The former gossip columnist for The Washington Times, Charlotte Hays, reported in a recent New Republic article about her old employers that Arnaud de Borchgrave, now editor-at-large, was up-to-date on usage even in thank-you notes: "For something Arnaud particularly liked, there was a gallant 'multithanks.'"

In the general gentrification of inclusive words with multi-, beery Joe Sixpack, who used to watch the games on TV in his undershirt, went out and bought a multiband radio to listen to commentary about his team's multiflex defense, replaced his old cable system with a multidirectional antenna, snacks on multigrain cereals and has changed his name to Joseph Multipack.

As the use of the prefix multiplies, its meaning is demeaned. Like a hot stock with low earnings, it soon loses its multiple. (Poly- want a cracker?)

Nation in brief

■ Group almost 'guaranteed' lottery win

RICHMOND, Va. — There is a dream common among regular lottery players: to wait until the jackpot reaches an astronomical sum and then to buy every possible number, guaranteeing a winner.

Sure, it would cost millions of dollars. But the payoff would be much richer.

In Virginia this month, one investment group came tantalizingly close to cornering the market on all possible combinations of six numbers from 1 to 44.

State lottery officials say that the group bought 5 million of a possible 7 million tickets, at $1 each, in a lottery with a $27 million jackpot. Only a lack of time prevented them from buying the extra 2 million tickets.

On Feb. 15, the winning number, yielding a prize of $1.3 million a year for 20 years, was pulled. Officials checked their records and found that one winning ticket, with the numbers 8, 11, 13, 15, 19, and 20, had been sold.

■ Senate lawyer questions reporter on leak

WASHINGTON — A reporter for National Public Radio was questioned for more than four hours Monday by a special counsel on who may have leaked a statement last fall by Anita F. Hill, who accused Clarence Thomas of sexual harassment.

The reporter, Nina Totenberg, was one of two journalists who first reported Professor Hill's accusations during Senate hearings on Thomas' nomination to the Supreme Court.

After questioning by the special counsel hired by the Senate, Peter E. Fleming, Ms. Totenberg said she refused to answer any questions about who gave her the information.

She said Fleming asked her detailed questions about how she might have obtained information for her report, which senators or senate staff aides she may have spoken with, when she first heard about Professor Hill and whether she spoke with anyone in the White House about her.

■ Justice Stevens has prostate cancer

WASHINGTON — Supreme Court Justice John Paul Stevens has prostate cancer but will continue working and is expected to recover fully, a court spokeswoman said Monday.

Stevens, 71, one of the conservative court's most liberal members, was appointed by President Gerald R. Ford in 1975.

"Justice Stevens is expected to continue to participate fully in all cases to come before the court during and after his radiation treatment and to make a full recovery without any residual effects," spokeswoman Toni House said in a prepared statement.

She said he had begun treatment at Georgetown University Hospital.

■ Justices to hear impeached judge's appeal

WASHINGTON — Accepting an appeal from an impeached and convicted federal judge, the Supreme Court agreed to examine the shortcut the Senate has used three times in the past five years to remove federal judges from office.

The court's action on Monday was unexpected because all challenges to the procedure have been rejected in the lower courts. Both the Senate and the Bush administration opposed the latest appeal, filed by Walter L. Nixon Jr., formerly the chief judge of the Federal District Court for the Southern District of Mississippi.

Nixon was convicted in 1986 of lying to a federal grand jury when he denied discussing a marijuana case with a district attorney, and was sentenced to five years in prison. He was impeached by the House of Representatives and convicted by the Senate in 1989.

■ Group goes to court to save sea turtles

SAN FRANCISCO — An environmental group has filed a lawsuit in federal district court here to force the State Department to carry out a federal law intended to preserve five species of sea turtles from destruction by foreign shrimp fishing fleets.

The group, the Earth Island Institute, a not-for-profit environmental organization of about 35,000 members, is seeking the enforcement of a ban on importing shrimp and shrimp products from dozens of countries whose fishing fleets it claims are responsible for killing more than 150,000 turtles a year.

The suit also asks that the State Department be ordered to start treaty negotiations with those countries immediately in an effort to have them use devices used by many American fishing fleets that allow the turtles to escape from nets. Such special nets can reduce the mortality of sea turtles from fishing by more than 97 percent.

■ Stanford removes neurosurgeon from post

SAN FRANCISCO — A neurosurgeon who was accused of sexism by a female colleague at the Stanford Medical School said that he had been removed as acting chairman of the department and that he would not be considered for the permanent post.

Dr. Gerald Silverberg said Monday he was told of his demotion at a meeting last week with Donald Kennedy, the president of Stanford University, and Dr. David Korn, the dean of the medical school, after the two university leaders had reviewed the report of a committee assigned to investigate the accusations of sexism.

The investigation was prompted by the resignation last year of a prominent female neurosurgeon, Frances K. Conley, who complained of a quarter century of subtle sexism at the prestigious medical school and cited Silverberg as the primary offender.

Baker takes hard stance with Israel

Ultimatum raises Arab hopes, Israeli nervousness as peace talks begin.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State James Baker said Monday he had given Israel a choice: stop settlements in occupied Arab land or forfeit $10 billion in loan guarantees. The ultimatum raised Arab hopes and Israeli nervousness as a fourth round of Mideast peace talks got under way.

Baker testified on Capitol Hill as separate sets of talks began across town at the State Department between Israel and a Palestinian-Jordanian team, Israel and Syria and Israel and Lebanon.

The issue of the guarantees, which Israel needs so it can borrow money to absorb 350,000 Jewish immigrants from the former Soviet Union, has overshadowed the peace talks since they were launched last October under U.S. auspices.

Israel objects to links between the guarantees, which it regards as aiding a humanitarian cause, and Jewish settlements in the predominantly Arab West Bank and Gaza Strip. The United States, however, views the guarantees as leverage for stopping the settlements which it deems harmful to prospects for an Arab-Israeli peace.

Hanan Ashrawi, Palestinian spokeswoman at the peace talks, said Baker's remarks constitute "a glimmer of hope" that the United States understands the severity of the continued Jewish settlements.

The Palestinian delegation presented the Israelis with a lengthy paper detailing their objections to settlements and urging they be halted.

However, Israeli negotiator Yosef Ben-Aharon, a senior aide to Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir, said: "We will not capitulate on the settlements and we will not write off the loan guarantees. We believe a compromise can be found."

Baker said he had offered up to $2 billion a year in guarantees over five years if Israel would halt settlement work in lands it occupied after the 1967 Arab-Israeli war.

"The choice, from our standpoint, is Israel's," Baker told a House subcommittee in his first detailed public comments about the closed-door negotiations with Israel.

Israel's response, given Baker in private over the past few weeks, was loud and public Monday.

Housing Minister Ariel Sharon said Israel had begun 2,000 housing units this year and will soon start another 1,000. And Shamir told Jewish American visitors that he "cannot, under any circumstances, go along with the principle that Jews have no right to live in this or that part of the land of Israel."

Baker said the United States had offered to allow completion of housing units under construction on Jan. 1, 1992, but with a penalty reducing the guarantees by any amount spent on completing those units.

If it determines new settlement work is going on after the guarantees go forward, "the United States should have the right to end, terminate, suspend any provision for absorption assistance at that point," he said.

But the United States probably would not seek to reclaim money already loaned as a result of earlier guarantees, he added.

The Arabs, especially representatives of the 1.7 million Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza Strip where some 115,000 Jews have settled, have repeatedly pressed the administration to make the guarantees strictly conditioned on a halt to settlements.

The Palestinians argue that if Israel keeps up its current settlement pace, there won't be any need for talks.

Democrats make last-minute push in S. Dakota

SIOUX FALLS, S.D. (AP) — Democratic candidates scrapped for votes Monday on the eve of their party's second primary — a South Dakota showdown for Farm Belt Sens. Bob Kerrey and Tom Harkin. Each needs a win to get back in the thick of the race with front-runners Paul Tsongas and Bill Clinton.

Kerrey, atop the South Dakota polls, proclaimed the race "wide open," saying, "This is not a campaign that has people really knowing all of us very well."

Campaigning at a day care center in Sioux Falls, the Nebraska senator warned Democrats against trying "to rush to a front-runner without measuring that individual's capacity to take it to George Bush in the fall."

Tsongas and Harkin, too, were campaigning in South Dakota. During a speech at Augustana College, Tsongas criticized his opponents for engaging in "protectionist rhetoric" and Japan bashing that he said was designed to attract Eastern votes.

"If there's any state that's going to be increasingly dependent on foreign products it's South Dakota," he said.

Iowa Sen. Harkin, meanwhile, told senior citizens at a stop in Mitchell, S.D., his congressional record would show "I've been on your side for 17 years" and predicted he'd bring Democrats who voted for Ronald Reagan back to the party.

The two Democratic leaders overall, Clinton and Tsongas, blitzed the local airwaves in hopes of getting a toehold in the state.

Clinton began airing a new ad Sunday that brands criticism by Tsongas and Kerrey of Clinton's middle-class tax cut and farm record as "misleading, negative attacks." The ad promotes Clinton's record of family farm support and rural development in Arkansas.

Kerrey responded to Harkin ads airing in South Dakota that criticize him for voting to give President Bush authority to negotiate a free-trade agreement with Mexico.

"I think the people of South Dakota understand that their economic future is linked to trade," Kerrey said.

Bush opens Maryland campaign

BETHESDA, Md. (NYT) — President Bush drove seven miles to a financially comfortable suburb of Washington on Monday to open his Maryland re-election campaign, declaring that "the fight for the future has just begun and it will continue for four more years."

To a crowd of 2,500 people in a high school gymnasium, Bush offered what is becoming a stock campaign address. It is an upbeat melange of allusions to last year's military victory over Iraq, attacks on Democrats in Congress, calls for passage of his legislation to boost the economy and scornful comments on "professional pessimists" who fear that America's claim on world leadership is ebbing.

Drawing on a vein of tub-thumping patriotism that spurs applause even from tepid crowds, the president urged his audience at Bethesda-Chevy Chase High School "to send a message to those doomsayers and those pessimists": that "we are the United States of America, and we can compete with anybody."

On Monday night, the line appeared to be directed at Bush's Republican rival, the conservative columnist Patrick J. Buchanan, who was reared in the Chevy Chase section of Northwest Washington, a stone's throw from where Bush spoke. Buchanan favors erecting trade barriers to shield American companies from foreign competition and has opposed Bush's more activist foreign policy.

Without naming Buchanan, Bush attacked those who would "lock the doors and pull down the blinds and hope the world goes away."

"America is not that kind of country," he said. "Never before in this nation's history have we turned our back on a challenge and we are not going to start now by becoming an isolationist nation."

High court refuses to halt return of Haitian refugees

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court on Monday refused to halt the repatriation of Haitian refugees. Meanwhile, an apparent snag arose in talks on implementing an accord providing for the eventual return of exiled President Jean-Bertrand Aristide.

The high court's 8-1 ruling upholding the Bush administration's program to forcibly return Haitian refugees shifts the issue to Congress, which this week will debate emergency legislation to temporarily halt repatriations.

The political settlement reached late Sunday in Washington between Aristide and his rivals in Haiti's National Assembly would set up a "consensus government" before the president's return to power.

The deal, reached after three days of talks at the Organization of American States headquarters, set no date for Aristide's return.

It called for the appointment of moderate communist leader Rene Theodore as interim prime minister.

But doubts about whether the accord would stick arose Monday when Aristide and Theodore failed to settle all remaining unresolved issues.

Aristide emerged from the talks to say he did not want an amnesty provision agreed Sunday to include Haiti's military commander, Gen. Raoul Cedras, because of his role in the coup.

That would appear to be a retreat from what Aristide had agreed to on Sunday.

In Port-au-Prince, the Communist Party's second-ranked official, Max Bourjolly, said the army had accepted the agreement. But Foreign Relations Minister Jean-Robert Simonise said there was strong opposition to Aristide's return and the consensus government "will not be easy to set up."

A knowledgeable diplomatic source said Cedras was satisfied with the package.

Officials: State knew of escape plans by inmates

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (AP) — State officials had information seven months ago that six West Virginia Penitentiary inmates were planning to tunnel their way to freedom, law enforcement officials said Monday.

Three on the list were the murderers serving life terms who escaped last week through a 32-foot tunnel dug under the prison's stone walls from the prison greenhouse, said Don Bordenkircher, who served as warden from 1972 to 1975 and 1980 to 1984.

"I definitely mentioned names and I called the Department of Corrections," said Bordenkircher, now police chief in Moundsville, the northern West Virginia town about 80 miles southwest of Pittsburgh where the Civil War-era prison is located.

"They were told where the tunnel would be located and who would probably leave. What was done with that information I cannot begin to tell you," he said.

Musawi killing shows hostage release wrong, Iranians say

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — A hard-line Iranian newspaper said Monday that Israel's killing of a Shiite Muslim leader proved the release of Western hostages last year was a mistake, and raised the prospect of a renewed round of kidnapping.

The warning in the daily newspaper Salam — founded by a political leader of the U.S. Embassy hostage siege — highlighted the latest round of infighting between anti-Western radicals and pragmatists led by President Hashemi Rafsanjani.

It was difficult to assess how much of a threat it actually represented for the estimated 3,000 Americans and Europeans living in the Beirut area.

The Tehran Times, which reflects Rafsanjani's thinking, on Monday called the taking of hostages in Lebanon "undesirable," saying it would give the Israelis "justification for their crimes."

Yet on the domestic front, the radicals may have strengthened their hand by linking the release of the hostages to recent Israeli attacks on the Hezbollah group, which Iran founded and funds. The group publicly denies involvement with the kidnappers.

The radicals seized on Israel's Feb. 16 assassination of Sheik Abbas Musawi, leader of Hezbollah, to try to undermine Rafsanjani's efforts to seek rapprochement with the West.

Last year, Rafsanjani went against radicals' demands and played a key role in securing freedom for six Western hostages held by pro-Iranian zealots in Lebanon.

Salam, which reflects the thinking of the most anti-Western elements inside the Tehran hierarchy, in effect was saying that the hostages were effective human shields against Israeli or American attack.

"The release of the hostages was a mistake which in fact made Muslims vulnerable against their enemies," Salam said in an article carried by the Islamic Republic News Agency.

It said that Israel assassinated Musawi "as dictated by the United States," adding in a clear reference to hostage-taking that: "Muslims should once again demonstrate that such acts will not go unanswered, and perhaps the next response will be resorting to the successful tactics of the past."

In a separate dispatch, the state-run news agency IRNA said "the premature release of the hostages" had given "somewhat larger elbow room to the Zionists."

"Obviously both the Zionists as well as their supporters will soon have to suffer from the outcome of their plot against militant Muslims in Lebanon," it said without elaborating.

Ireland Supreme Court rejects plea for open hearing on girl's abortion

DUBLIN, Ireland (AP) — The Supreme Court heard arguments in private Monday about a 14-year-old girl who is barred from obtaining an abortion abroad, rejecting pleas to permit news coverage of the highly charged case.

Arguments were scheduled to continue today, with a ruling expected by week's end.

The girl's family is appealing a High Court order barring her from leaving the country for Britain to escape Ireland's abortion law, the most restrictive in Europe. The teen-ager says she was raped by a friend's father.

In a 1983 referendum, Irish voters decided 2-1 to amend the constitution to affirm the right to life of the unborn.

The recent case has revived the debate, and opposition parties have called for a new referendum — an option the government badly wants to avoid because of the divisiveness of the last.

"We're going to look at every other option between what we hear from the Supreme Court and indeed the possibility of a referendum — which I would not rule out, but nevertheless I look on it as a last resort," Prime Minister Albert Reynolds said Monday.

Reynolds has not said how he hopes the Supreme Court will rule, but has said that the issue is freedom of travel, not freedom to have abortions.

"We have a constitutional law in place, agreed to by the people, which bans abortion in Ireland, so how can that be the issue? The issue is that the family was prevented from going to England for an abortion," Reynolds said on Thursday.

The government is paying the family's legal costs for the appeal, and John Rogers, a former attorney general, represented her before the Supreme Court.

On Monday, Chief Justice Thomas Finlay rejected an application by RTE, the national broadcasting service, that it be allowed to report on the proceedings without identifying the family.

Earlier, lawyers for three national newspapers sought permission from the court to cover arguments in the case, which they said was of "unprecedented public interest and of acute private and public importance."

The court, however, limited the proceedings to parties directly involved in the case.

Castro to criticize appointment process

■ Former council member scheduled to speak after Bill Morrow takes oath of office to fill at-large position.

By Debbie Lincecum
Staff Writer

Midland attorney Bill Morrow will take his seat as at-large Midland City Council member today, but controversy surrounding the appointment still exists.

A few hours after Morrow takes the oath of office and joins the council, John Castro, former occupant of the at-large seat, is scheduled to speak. He's expected to contest the governing body's method of choosing its new member.

Morrow is scheduled to take the oath of office shortly after the meeting begins at 10 a.m. in the council chambers at City Hall. The long-time civic volunteer was appointed Feb. 11 to fill Castro's unexpired term after the two-term member resigned to take a job transfer to El Paso.

Castro, meanwhile, is scheduled to speak to the group at 1:30 p.m. The former councilman has been critical of the appointment process, largely because interviews with all candidates for the at-large position were not conducted before Morrow was chosen.

While Castro has said he believes Morrow is qualified, he said several other people who had applied for the position may not have had fair opportunity to achieve it. Before Castro's departure, he had submitted a list of prospective candidates, including minorities and women.

In fact, the council's appointment of Morrow drew criticism from the local minority community almost immediately, even sparking discussion of reopening a battle for more single-member districts. The current system — four single-member districts and two members and the mayor being elected at large — was ordered by a federal court judge in a lawsuit filed by minority groups.

Other persons may join Castro in his presentation before the council, but they are not expected to have any effect on Morrow's joining the group.

The new member has said he will serve and will attempt to represent the entire community, not a select segment.

According to city records, appointments to the council have been taking place since at least 1919, although whether interviews were granted is unclear. The city charter designates that vacancies on the council will be filled by a majority vote of the council, without specifying a process.

The charter does not, however, allow a special election to be called for filling a vacant council seat.

The Texas Constitution, meanwhile, requires such an election only for councils whose members serve more than two years per term. Midland City Council members serve two-year terms.

Another council agenda item for today includes the second public hearing about the annexation of a "windowpane" area south of Midland Freshman School. Few residents have opposed the city's proposal to annex the area, now partly improved under an earlier agreement with Midland County.

Annexation is not expected to be final until late May.

Woman accuses officer of rape

By Darren J. Waggoner

ODESSA — A 27-year-old, five-year veteran of the Odessa Police Department has been placed on administrative leave with pay after accusations of rape were leveled against him by a 30-year-old Odessa woman on Sunday.

Odessa police responded to Medical Center Hospital at 9:32 a.m. Sunday in reference to a sexual assault victim. The victim said an officer, whom she knows, raped her between 2 and 4 a.m. Sunday.

The officer was not on duty at the time of the alleged rape, officials said.

Odessa Chief of Police James H. Jenkins asked the Texas Rangers in Midland and the Ector County District Attorney's office to help with the investigation.

"We felt it was important for an outside agency, such as the Texas Rangers, to assist and monitor the investigation," Jenkins said.

In addition to the criminal investigation, an internal investigation will be simultaneously conducted by the police department.

Jenkins said the investigation may include a presentation before the grand jury.

"We're not only talking about a violation of the law, but also a violation of department policy, hence the internal investigation," Jenkins said.

Jenkins said the department was intending to conduct a "thorough investigation."

"As the chief of police, I think it's important to be up front about this. That's the type of organization we have here in Odessa," he said.

Jenkins said the incident occurred on the west side of Odessa, but he declined to elaborate any further.

"As you can understand with it being reported only (Sunday), we have not had time to acquire much information yet," he said.

Jenkins declined to set a timetable for the investigation.

Paper company gives Keep Midland Beautiful 3,000 seedling trees

By Debbie Lincecum
Staff Writer

With a gift of 3,000 seedling trees, a paper company hopes to heighten public awareness of recycling options in Midland.

Although paper is not accepted for recycling in the city, options exist for people interested in promoting recycling, Jeff Higgins, the local sales representative for Nationwide Papers, said.

He announced Monday that the company has donated the seedlings to Keep Midland Beautiful (KMB) and the city of Midland.

"What people need to know is that the cycle really begins with buying recycled products," Higgins said. He said Champion International, Nationwide's parent company, is donating seedlings to communities to increase awareness of its efforts.

Although paper is made from tree pulp, Higgins said paper companies plant 2.5 trees for each one they use.

Free seedlings will be given to anyone attending Keep Midland Beautiful's recycling seminar, scheduled for noon today at Midland College.

More trees will be given away during a lawn care and composting seminar at Alldredge Gardens on March 7 and 8.

Chuck Swallow, assistant director of community services, said the city of Midland will keep 1,000 trees to be grown in pots. After about three years of care and nurturing, the trees will be transplanted in area parks and public places.

"We're talking about a $5,000 investment in these trees for their care during that time, but coming up with a $50,000 product," Swallow said. "We're so grateful. It's a very valuable donation."

"The more we can do, the better off we are, the citizens are and the community is," Sharla Hotchkiss, director of KMB, said.

Higgins said unfortunately, many people don't know what they can do to promote recycling. In many places, recycling does not pay, but costs more than traditional methods of production, he said.

"While we're waiting to recycle products — waiting for a market for it, the most important thing to do is buy recycled products. That's where it begins," Higgins said. "It's the fastest, easiest way to participate."

He said using recycled goods, while good for the environment, will also save money.

"The U.S. spends $600 billion a year to dispose of our waste," Higgins said. "It may not save money right away, but in the long run, we're looking at some real savings."

INTRODUCING ...

Curt Wilcott/Reporter-Telegram

Kitty McClane, executive director of Midland's Goode Beginnings Child Care Center, is surrounded by some of the children in whom she tries to instill feelings of self-worth and self-esteem.

Center director starts at the beginning

■ Kitty McClane works to build children's self-esteem at Midland's Goode Beginnings Child Care Center.

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

Kitty McClane feels good about her job, which she thinks is helping make her "mark on the future."

She works with children at the Goode Beginnings Child Care Center in Midland.

"It's really rewarding knowing that I can make a difference," Ms. McClane said. "I am impacting the future. I take it very seriously, but it's also very rewarding. I feel like I'm making my mark on the future."

As executive director of the center, which is licensed to care for 140 children from infancy through 10 years old, Ms. McClane said that it feels good earning the trust of parents who "don't have to wonder what's going to happen" with their children at the center.

"They know they (children) are going to be taken care of" and can enjoy "peace of mind."

Throughout the center, which is governed by Midland Project Self-Sufficiency's board of directors, there are hand-printed signs that accentuate the positive: "Consistency in Everything" and "Positive Talk with Kids."

These represent the center's emphasis on building self-esteem and self-worth.

"That is (important) through all stages" of life, Ms. McClane said. "That's even true for adults. You go to work somewhere, and you want a place that builds you up and makes you feel good about who you are."

For children, building self-esteem is "especially important," she said.

By instilling self-esteem and self-worth in children and by helping them develop through their own creativity, children learn to feel good about themselves, Ms. McClane said.

They learn to respect their own talents and accomplishments and those of others. And they learn that a person can be humble and not conceited about his or her sterling qualities, she said.

"We want kids to feel comfortable and say, 'No, I am good at this,' and there's nothing wrong with that. 'I do have qualities, and I am a worthwhile human being.' "

Ms. McClane said that she wants the children "to feel that they have something to contribute." And they do "bring something special to the classroom, to the center, to the teachers, to me."

The center's curriculum includes an "I-am-special" program in which the children talk about things they think are special about themselves, she said.

Children who grow up without self-esteem and self-respect may fall far short of their potential and may even wind up in trouble, Ms. McClane said.

"A lot of the problems that kids get into is from a lack of self-esteem, a lack of policing themselves," Ms. McClane said.

Ms. McClane is developing a "High Scope" curriculum which teaches children through real-life experiences that reinforce creativity, she said.

"We believe that children learn through creativity," Ms. McClane said. "They do a lot of free art — making their own creations" and do not pattern their work after models that are beyond their grasp or attainment.

"If the teacher makes a picture and ... says 'make yours like mine,' that really stifles their creativity and, at the same time theirs isn't going to be as good as the teacher's. And they'll think, 'I didn't do it right.'

"That's why the teachers never make models of the art projects, so that the kids don't have any expectations to meet," she said.

After children create their art projects, teachers don't ask them what it is be-

Drug war must compete with other issues for attention, Bush says

Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — President Bush, host of the seven-nation anti-drug summit this week in San Antonio, acknowledged Monday that the war on narcotics has had to compete for his attention with U.S. economic ills and, earlier, the Persian Gulf War.

But he insisted that "my interest and concern" about the drug problem remain the same.

Bush, who declared in September 1989 that drugs were "the gravest domestic threat facing the nation," said drug use "still is a very major problem."

However, he continued, "as other problems arise, such as the economy, you know, it's hard to rank them all. But we've got to stay on this one until we can say everything has been done."

Looking to this week's drug summit, Bush was asked how he would respond if the leaders of drug-producing countries such as Colombia, Peru and Bolivia ask for more U.S. aid to help drug-crop farmers who are looking for alternative crops.

Bush said he will tell them, "We're doing what I think we can afford to do."

He said there "are no blank checks anymore, for this or for anything else," adding that he hoped the summit might produce ways of getting better results from the $2.2 billion aid program the United States already has programmed for the Andean nations.

The president made his comments in an Oval Office interview with the Hearst Newspapers.

Pressed on whether his administration is giving a lower priority to its anti-drug program, Bush replied, "All I'm saying is that when people are hurting economically, you can't say that one program supersedes one's concerns about that."

When a reporter suggested to Bush that he didn't talk about the problem as much as he used to, the president replied, "Well, I'm not aware of that. But maybe it's because of the election year," referring to the requirements to address a number of national issues on the campaign trail.

A survey of Associated Press news reports shows that in the first 19 months of his administration, from January 1989 to July 1990, the president gave at least 130 speeches or statements on drug issues.

By contrast, in the second 19 months of his administration from August 1990 to February 1992, Bush gave 29 speeches or statements on the drug war.

Speaking of the period after Iraqi President Saddam Hussein invaded Kuwait on Aug. 2, 1990, triggering the gulf war early in 1991, Bush conceded that "a lot of interests gave way to the demands of the time."

Official: Struggle isn't Desert Storm

Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — Those looking for quick victory in the drug war had better not hold their breath, a senior State Department official said Monday, adding that the anti-narcotics battle "is not going to be like Desert Storm. It is not going to be won in 100 hours."

In a White House briefing two days before the opening of the San Antonio anti-drug summit, the official said the war against drugs does not lend itself to swift and sure victory.

Under guidelines of the White House press office, the official's identity cannot be revealed.

At the same briefing, White House drug policy director Bob Martinez defended himself against critical press reports and statements by congressional Democrats.

Martinez pointed out that President Bush has proposed a 6 percent increase in anti-drug spending next year from the current level of $11.9 billion.

Lottery picks new consultant

AUSTIN (AP) — A consulting firm has been hired to review contract proposals for starting up the Texas lottery in response to the resignation of another lottery consultant amid potential conflict of interest charges.

Lottery officials on Monday awarded the $90,000 contract to the independent, not-for-profit firm of Battelle Memorial Institute of Columbus, Ohio.

Battelle has no connections to various lottery vendors that are seeking Texas' business, state Comptroller John Sharp said.

"We wanted an objective and experienced company that is not working today — and has not worked for the past two years — for any lottery vendor. In Battelle, we found a firm that not only meets those standards but also prides itself on that kind of objectivity," he said.

The lottery's first outside consultant, the Georgia-based Lottery Support Group, resigned after reports surfaced last month that its president was related by marriage to an official of Scientific Games Inc., which is bidding on multi-million-dollar state contracts.

Sharp said he is confident no such problems will be encountered this time.

Although Battelle has reviewed major purchases for 12 North American lotteries, it doesn't do business with lottery supply companies, he said.

"None of the Battelle consultants are former employees of lottery supplier vendors, nor are they former state or provincial lottery employees," the company said in its proposal to Texas officials.

Vendors are bidding to print scratch-ticket, instant-win games that are scheduled to begin July 1, a contract worth an estimated $5 million to $10 million; and for providing computerized lotto games, a contract estimated at $200 million.

Sharp said Battelle experts would spend the next two weeks studying contract proposals, evaluation criteria and method for selecting lottery suppliers.

Midland woman reports assault

Staff Report

An 18-year-old woman was sexually assaulted in her northwest Midland home early Monday morning, according to police reports.

Police are searching for a white male between 30 and 35 years old.

He entered the home through the unlocked front door at approximately 1:30 a.m., police said.

The woman was transported to Memorial Hospital and Medical Center after police arrived. She was treated and released, according to reports.

The public is invited to attend.

MCCLANE: Director reaffirms children's self-worth cause "a picture doesn't have to be anything but their creation," Ms. McClane said.

(From 1B)

To help children in their awareness of themselves and others, Ms. McClane said that each child is assigned a simply drawn symbol, such as a wagon wheel, fish or sailboat, next to his or her name.

"It makes them feel special," Ms. McClane said. "Because they are so young, they don't look at their names and the way their names are written as being unique."

The exercise is an aid in recognizing letters and in developing language.

The children are encouraged to read rather than watch television, Ms. McClane said. Television viewing at the center is limited to two 30-minute educational programs each month.

"Reading is the best way you learn," Ms. McClane said. The center's reading program is designed to help children develop a life-long habit of reading, she said.

Goode Beginnings' 1,600-book library was donated by the Junior League of Midland.

Ms. McClane said if children must be disciplined or corrected, the children are not attacked and faulted.

"We attack the behavior. A corrected child may be told, 'We don't like how you are acting' but is never told 'I don't like you' or 'You're being stupid.' We never do that."

Any time a child is brought into her office, the child knows that he or she is "really in trouble if they have to go see Miss Kitty. But, they always sit on my lap even when they are in here for being in trouble. I tell them what they are doing wrong, but I don't tell them that they are bad. We never use words like 'You are a bad boy,' or 'You are a bad girl.' It's always: 'What you are doing is ugly. It is wrong. It hurts other people,'" she said.

"I always give them a hug before they leave. They get that affirmation from me."

She said she tells a misbehaving child: "'I don't like what you are doing. It's my job to correct you, but I still love you, still like you.'"

Ms. McClane, who became the center's director in June 1989, holds a bachelor's degree in family studies and human development from Texas Tech University.

She and her husband, Curtis, an oil-and-gas company financial manager, are parents of three children: Kathy, 11; Molly, 9, and Cord, 7.

"He (Curtis) is my greatest support and my greatest inspiration," Ms. McClane said. "The children are one of the best things that has ever happened to me."

DRUG: Bush says drug war must compete for attention

(From 1B)

The president also defended White House drug policy director Bob Martinez, who has been criticized for his low-profile efforts in the wake of his highly visible predecessor William Bennett.

Bush said reports that Martinez doesn't have the same access to the Oval Office that Bennett had are "ridiculous."

He also said Martinez "can pick up the phone and get me. ... Please discount all this inside-the-Beltway stuff that somebody can't get me on the phone."

With Martinez sitting nearby and listening intently, a reporter asked Bush to give a performance appraisal for his drug czar.

"He has my full confidence," Bush replied. "He's doing a good job."

He also said his administration's anti-drug efforts are "making dramatic progress." He said the number of casual drug users "is significantly down," but said the problem of hard-core drug use was proving difficult to resolve.

A survey taken last year by the National Institute on Drug Abuse (NIDA), an agency of the Department of Health and Human Services, showed the overall number of drug users falling from 12.9 million in 1990 to 12.6 million in 1991. However, a separate NIDA survey also released last year showed that hardcore users — those taking cocaine at least once a week — rising by 29 percent to 855,000 in the same period.

Bush also said drug use among teenagers was on the decline. "I think we've seen figures as much as one-third lower," he declared.

During the interview, Bush sat at his desk against a backdrop of gray drizzly skies and the White House south lawn. Besides Martinez, those present were National Security Adviser Brent Scowcroft, White House Press Secretary Marlin Fitzwater and other aides.

Bush and First Lady Barbara Bush leave today for California and arrive in San Antonio on Wednesday.

The president said he's "certainly looking forward to coming back to Bexar County and San Antonio," adding that the other summit participants share a "genuine enthusiasm for coming to San Antonio" for the meeting.

When asked what he would say to communities ravaged by drugs, he responded: "Keep the fight going. Help us get some strong anti-crime legislation through the United States Congress. ... Get involved in your community action programs."

Bush said that Latin American leaders had expressed skepticism during the first hemispheric drug summit in Cartgena, Colombia, in 1990, about U.S. efforts to curb drug demand.

Legislator wants specifics of AIDS report released

Associated Press

A Northeast Texas lawmaker, upset by Texas officials' unwillingness to release specifics of an AIDS virus review, Monday asked Governor Ann Richards to reverse the decision.

But Richards said she won't comment on the issue until she talks to the Texas Health Department concerning the reports that some Northeast high school students have tested postive for the AIDS virus, known as HIV.

"I'd like to talk to the Health Department about it first, before I say anything," said Richards, when asked Monday about specific results from the investigation.

"But regardless, I think the schools of this state and the parents of this state are going to have to get serious about the fact that AIDS kills," she said.

State Sen. Bill Ratliff said a health department official told him Friday that an internal policy prohibited the agency from releasing community-specific information on HIV-positive or AIDS patients.

"If they don't say anything, the assumption is that the cases are there. But there will always be a cloud," said Ratliff, R-Mount Pleasant. "I can understand not releasing information in the beginning. But if a supposedly authoritative source says they are there, it won't do any harm in confirming them, but you do a lot more harm by not releasing the information at this point."

The state Health Department has completed an initial review of reports that some Northeast Texas high school students have tested positive for the AIDS virus.

But the agency said its report, expected later this week, will not be site-specific.

Health Department officials last week began reviewing case management files of Dona K. Spence, an AIDS/HIV counselor with the Ark-Tex Council of Governments.

She had reported that six students at Rivercrest High School in Red River County had tested positive for the human immunodeficiency virus that causes AIDS. Students at several other Northeast Texas were also reported infected.

"The Texas Department of Health never said it would not have a response following the review of case management files requested by the Ark-Tex Council of Governments," said Doug McBride, TDH spokesman in Austin.

"What we said is that we don't intend to comment on a school-by-school basis. We are not interested in doing what led to this thing in the first place," he said, referring to the Ark-Tex agency's information.

But Ratliff, who urged Richards and Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock in a letter to intervene, said unspecific data from the health department would be of little value.

"Those students, parents, school administrators and teachers have a right to know whether this was in fact credible information," he said.

Group reports civil rights abuses on border

EL PASO (AP) — Border residents and immigrants are assaulted, sexually harassed and endure civil rights abuse at the hands of federal officers who rarely are investigated and seldom disciplined, immigration groups say.

The American Friends Service Committee says it has documented more than 1,200 cases of abuse that occurred on the border between 1989 and 1991.

The committee will release the information in a 54-page report that will be unveiled in simultaneous news conferences today in Washington, D.C., Texas, Tucson, Ariz. and San Diego. The group will urge changes in the investigation, complaint and training procedures of U.S. Customs and Immigration and Naturalization Service and ask for creation of a civilian oversight panel.

"I think (the report) is particularly significant in light of the preoccupation in particular areas of the country with increasing the presence of immigration agents, Border Patrol or military troops on the border," said Maria Jimenez, Houston director of the American Friends Service Immigration Law Enforcement Monitoring Project.

She said policies such as U.S. Attorney General William Barr's recent announcement of a plan to beef up enforcement on the border are based on a mistaken premise that policing the border only affects foreigners.

"It negates the affect that border policing has on border communities, the fact that 17.9 percent of the border abuse victims are U.S. citizens tells us all parts of the community are effected," she said.

The report is the third to be released by the committee. But Ms. Jimenez said this report is more critical.

"When someone like (Republican presidential candidate) Pat Buchanan talks about bringing troops home and putting them on the border, it neglects to consider the effects on the entire border community," she said.

The committee's report is being issued as Alicia Rey Lambert, 40, a U.S. citizen, returns to federal court in El Paso to be sentenced for assaulting four U.S. Customs agents. She faces up to 18 months in prison. She insists she is innocent and during her trial turned down a plea bargain under which federal prosecutors offered to recommend a $200 fine if she plead guilty to a misdemeanor assault charge.

Messages left by The Associated Press with the INS in Washington and U.S. Customs in Houston were not immediately returned.

The U.S. Civil Rights Commission announced Friday it will begin investigating complaints of violence and human rights abuse on the border. But Jiminez said similar investigations were conducted in the 1980s with few changes.

"Serious abuses are going uncorrected," Ms. Jimenez said.

The immigration groups want a civilian oversight panel to investigate complaints, rather than the Office of Inspector General, which also is part of the U.S. Department of Justice.

The groups say once an investigation is taken over by the inspector general's office it becomes difficult to learn the outcome.

Police charge teen with murder for sibling slaying

GEORGETOWN (AP) — A teenager was charged with capital murder Monday after allegedly picking a house at random and gunning down two children inside, authorities said.

George Luis Vasquez, 17, was being held without bond in the shootings of 12-year-old Casey Shoecraft and her 8-year-old brother, Christopher, said Williamson County District Attorney Ken Anderson.

"He said he's felt for the past couple of months he wanted to kill someone. Yesterday (Sunday) happened to be the day," Williamson County Sheriff Jim Boutwell said.

Boutwell said Vasquez spent a sleepless Saturday night, then on Sunday morning, "He dressed, got his pistol and loaded it, walked through the neighborhood, said eeny-meeny-miney-mo (and) picked the house."

If indicted by a grand jury and convicted of capital murder, Vasquez would face either the death penalty or life in prison.

Officials said they knew no motive for the crime.

Asked whether he would seek the death penalty, Anderson said more investigation was needed.

Controversies won't hurt Clinton in Texas, poll shows

HOUSTON (AP) — Bill Clinton has been hit by questions of marital infidelity and about his draft status during the Vietnam War, but those controversies will not change many Texas voters' view of the Democratic presidential hopeful, a Houston Chronicle poll shows.

However, a majority of the 835 voters surveyed across the state Feb. 12-19 said they were less likely to vote for any candidate who had actually engaged in the behavior of which Clinton has been accused.

Fifty-four percent of the Texas voters polled said reports about the Arkansas governor will have no effect on their election decisions. Eleven percent said they were much less likely to vote for Clinton as a result of the reports, and 20 percent said "somewhat less."

Four percent said they were more likely to vote for Clinton. The rest were unsure, the Chronicle reported in a copyright story Monday.

And 69 percent said stories about Clinton's personal life have received too much attention.

The poll, conducted for the Chronicle by the University of Houston Center for Public Policy, has a margin of error of five percentage points.

According to the survey, 50 percent said they were less likely to vote for a candidate who had been involved in extramarital affairs in recent years. Forty-six percent said it would have no effect, and the rest were unsure.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: You have a chance to try something that has always intrigued you. Be bold! Putting your wonderful imagination to good use will boost your career. A direct approach will bring terrific results when dealing with prominent people next fall. Focus on romance and travel in October. A year-end vacation could lead to your adopting a healthier lifestyle. Family support makes a dream come true.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: nutritionist Adele Davis, Beatle George Harrison, tennis star Bobby Riggs, TV host Sally Jessy Raphael.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A stroke of luck awaits in the domestic or employment arena. New challenges or responsibilities may be involved. Hold the line on spending. Breathe life into romance by being more ardent.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Do not sit idly at home today. Channeling your energy into community work or athletic games helps you brush up on your skills. You will feel exhilarated by how much you accomplish!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A highly productive day lies ahead. You can make big gains at your job by focusing on good public relations. Someone you thought gone forever makes a dramatic reappearance.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Once you set your mind to something, your plans will fall into place. You feel drawn to someone who is very different from you. A lasting relationship will be difficult but not impossible.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Work tasks provide a wonderful outlet for your creativity today. Look sharp on the job — you are in for a run of good luck! Giving someone a helping hand lets you mend some fences.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Confidential chats could lead to a financial boon. A secret partnership may be part of the picture. Cultivate good relations with your co-workers. Stick to elegant simplicity when decorating.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Acting on impulse could land you in hot water today. Postpone making major financial decisions. Make sure your expectations about romance are realistic.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): An important work project can be easily advanced or completed now. A romantic lunch provides a nice midday break. Be more creative in your dealings with a stubborn relative.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Curb a tendency to clash openly with people in power — it could jeopardize your reputation for good sense. Seek out people who share your concerns and plot a common strategy.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): An excellent day for career discussions and financial decisions. A joint venture may be signed, sealed and delivered. Influential people will stand behind you. Salute them!

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You seem to know all the right things to say now. Why not vocalize your ideas and concerns to VIPs? Rave reviews and increased power could be yours before you know it.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A business venture is given the green light, helping to solidify a new partnership. Show your strong support for a loved one's efforts. Take a friend to dinner and talk candidly.

TODAY'S CHILDREN are affectionate, loyal and inclined to daydream. They treasure their friends and may be more susceptible to peer pressure than their parents would like. Set firm but fair guidelines for these youngsters and they will do just fine.

Bridge is a strategic and psychological, as well as a technical game. The latter aspect is more than adequately covered in the existing literature; the first two are relegated to an occasional chapter here and there. Now that gap is partly filled by Mike Lipkin's Invitation to Annihilation (Devyn Press, paperback, 144 pp., $8.95, available from The Bridge World, 39 W. 94th St., New York N.Y. 10025), which shows how declarer can make life difficult for the opponents and tempt them into taking losing options. We have seen most of the hands before, and are jarred by such terms as "lefty" and "righty" and some loose writing, but the material is well chosen, interesting and educational.

There is one helpful tip we've seen only once before in print: the "Rule of Seven" when declaring a no trump contract. "When the opponents have attacked your weak suit and you can afford to let them hold the lead, subtract the total number of cards you hold in both hands from seven. The difference is the number of times you should hold up before winning. If you are blessed with more than one stopper in the weak suit, then you can hold up one less time for each additional stopper."

Suppose that, after opening a weak no trump you arrive at three no trump. West leads a spade, East wins the ace and returns the queen. Applying the Rule of Seven, you have five cards in the suit which, subtracted from seven, means you must hold up twice. So hold up the king of spades until the third round, and the king of clubs is the only other trick for the defenders.

Don't write to tell us that East should have played the queen of spades to the first trick to foil any holdup attempt. We know, and so does the author.

Hollywood colony's not clubby anymore, Cesar Romero says

OMAHA, Neb. — Actor Cesar Romero, who turned 85 this month, says the Hollywood fraternity isn't as clubby as it used to be.

In his early days in Hollywood, Romero said, many of the big names — Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks, Marion Davies, Clark Gable, Gary Cooper — were likely to show up at social functions.

"That has all disappeared today," he told the Omaha World-Herald in a recent telephone interview from his California home. "There's no such thing as a motion picture colony here anymore. You never see (today's stars) anyplace. Half of them don't even live here.

"So, it's an entirely different atmosphere," he said. "There was a camaraderie in pictures years ago, it seems. Everybody knew each other. It was like a big family. And that has all disappeared completely."

Romero will serve as guest of honor Tuesday at a public screening of the 1955 musical "Guys and Dolls" at the Joslyn Art Museum's Witherspoon Concert Hall in Omaha.

One of Romero's first films was the 1934 production "The Thin Man" with William Powell, Myrna Loy and Maureen O'Sullivan. He has worked in more than 100 films and made appearances on numerous television shows.

Romero still acts and is host of the "Romance Classics" series on the American Movie Classics network.

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. — "Bugsy" photography director Allen Daviau and Sheldon Leonard, who helped launch such pioneering sitcoms as "The Danny Thomas Show," have been honored by the American Society of Cinematographers.

Daviau was awarded the society's 1991 award for outstanding achievement in cinematography. He won in the feature film category during the sixth annual presentation of the awards Sunday, said the society's spokesman, Chuck Warn.

"Bugsy" also was nominated for best cinematography last week in the Academy Award competition. It was one of 10 Oscars for which the mobster drama was nominated. The Oscars will be announced next month.

In the society's television cinematographers category, Isidore Mankofsky won for the ABC-TV miniseries "Love, Lies and Murder."

Donald M. Morgan won for the television movie "Dillinger" by ABC and Jack Priestley won for the "This Can't Be Love" episode of the CBS series "The Trials of Rosie O'Neill."

The Board of Governors Award for contribution to film and television was given to Leonard, producer of such shows as "The Andy Griffith Show," "The Dick Van Dyke Show."

In the 1950s, "The Danny Thomas Show" was one of the first situation comedies made with three cameras using traditional film editing techniques.

OAKLAND, Calif. — Five actresses were inducted into the Black Filmmakers Hall of Fame and Tempestt Bledsoe of "The Cosby Show" took home a special youth award.

Actresses Rosalind Cash, Madge Sinclair, Denise Nicholas, Helen Martin and Madeline Anderson were recognized Sunday night for their contributions to film and television.

In addition, actor Sidney Poitier announced creation of a fellowship program to award 10 young filmmakers with $10,000 each on a biennial basis.

Bledsoe was given the Clarence Muse Youth Award, and Anderson won credit for work as a producer and director of episodes of "Sesame Street" and "The Electric Company."

Martin played the role of Pearl in "227"; Nicholas, now a guest star in the TV series "In the Heat of the Night," performed in "Room 222" and the films "A Piece of the Action" and "Let's Do it Again."

Cash, an accomplished film and television actress, was part of the Negro Ensemble Company in the 1960s. Sinclair was nominated for an Emmy award for her roles in "Roots" and "Trapper John, M.D."

WASHINGTON — Leona Helmsley lost a Supreme Court appeal Monday to overturn her tax evasion conviction.

Helmsley

The 72-year-old billionaire hotel owner was convicted in 1989 and sentenced to four years in prison, fined $7 million and ordered to pay nearly $2 million in restitution for tax evasion from 1983 through 1985.

The court, without comment, let stand a ruling that Mrs. Helmsley received a fair trial and that her federal indictment was not tainted by immunized grand jury testimony she gave in an earlier, unrelated New York state investigation.

Her husband, Harry, was also indicted but was declared incompetent to stand trial.

Mrs. Helmsley was convicted of billing millions of dollars in personal expenses, including $1.1 million for a swimming pool enclosure at a Connecticut estate, to the couple's hotel and real estate empire.

Italians praise hero who forced Neapolitans to pay water bills

By Alan Cowell
N.Y. Times News Service

NAPLES, Italy — When people here dubbed Eduardo Ieno the Norman Schwarzkopf of Naples, it was because, by this city's standards, he had achieved something as decisive, bold and gutsy as the American general did in Kuwait: He forced Neapolitans to pay their water bills.

Ieno, the head of the municipal water utility, conducted his uncompromising offensive and press blitz in a city whose perils include organized crime and general resistance to authority — as hazardous a place, some northern Italians might say, as the sands of Arabia's deserts.

This battle also seemed part of a wider war in Italy that sometimes seems unwinnable as public services like health and sanitation crumble under the weight of inefficiency, political manuevering, neglect and, many suspect, penetration by the Mafia and other organized crime gangs.

The public-service conflict has preoccupied many Italians in recent days with increasing reports of bungled medical cases that have caused unnecessary deaths. In one case, no one could find thread for sutures, causing postponement of a vital operation in a Naples hospital. The patient died.

Being in the emergency room of one big, publicly financed Rome hospital "is like being in a trench in Vietnam, bombarded by napalm," Carlo Valenzi, the institution's director of health, said in a published interview, arguing that inadequate pay for paramedics and the lack of trained nurses lie at the root of the problem.

In theory, all Italian citizens are entitled to free treatment at public hospitals. But the public hospitals are so overcrowded and understaffed that the biggest in Naples declared a state of emergency last month and closed its doors to new patients. And Italians who can afford it take out private medical insurance to avoid the public hospitals.

"I pay around $4,000 a year in contributions to the state medical insurance," said a civil servant who spoke on condition of anonymity. "But I have a separate private insurance. If anything happens to me, I don't want to go to a public hospital."

In one recent scandal at a public hospital, Giovanni Silvestri, a 35-year-old heroin addict, died of an overdose in a hospital corridor in Rome and both doctors on duty at the time told reporters that they had been too busy treating other patients to tend to him.

The scandals have spread so far that the Vatican entered the controversy this month, using its newspaper, L'Osservatore Romana, to criticize the low standard of health care.

In response, Health Minister Franco de Lorenzo agreed with the newspaper and said that without a new sense of humility among hospital staff, "no law on earth can change the situation."

When it came to the city's water supplies here, Ieno decided things would be different.

"There were 80,000 people who were not paying for their water," he said in an interview. "And I'm not counting people who had only one or two reminders outstanding. Some of the bills went back to 1975." The unpaid bills, he said, totaled something like $110 million.

DEAR ABBY

Hopefully, we can, like, improve our language, OK?

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: What has happened to the English language?

The excessive use and misuse of the word "like" is an abomination! To utter the incoherent, "I was, like, you know, going home," incriminates the user; as does, "it was, like, Saturday." "Like" is a substitute for "about," "approximately," "similar to," "it may have been," or many other terms or expressions.

Van Buren

And "I go" and "he goes" are stupid contortions for "I said, stated, noted, observed," and other correct usages.

"Hopefully" is used far too often and invariably ungrammatically. And athletes, especially, seem incapable of stumbling and fumbling through even a half sentence without a "hopefully." This incorrect redundancy could be replaced with "I hope," "I would hope" or "we will attempt to."

The sports announcers are the worst. We can surely do without the "hey" and "guys" in every other sentence. They are so infuriating, I turn them off and walk the dog. — KENNETH F. EMERICK, SHIPPENVILLE, PA.

DEAR KENNETH: You have found a soul mate in Marcie Mitchell. Read on:

DEAR ABBY: Will you please make another attempt to improve the atrocious and horrid misuse of our language? Much of it is inarticulate, appallingly sloppy and infuriating to the listener.

It is maddening to hear "you know, you know, you know" from so many of the celebrities (and athletes) who are interviewed on TV talk shows.

One of the most annoying habits is ending every sentence with "OK?" Some people end every sentence with, "Right?"

I know you dealt with this problem several years ago, but it wouldn't hurt to print a reminder. And there are dozens of other speech irritants. — MARCIE MITCHELL, ROLLING HILLS, CALIF.

DEAR MARCIE: Over the years, I have invited my readers to send in their pet peeves with regard to the misuse of words and other speech irritants. Readers, what are yours?

DEAR ABBY: The letter from the nursing home administrator about families who ignore their mothers, fathers and grandparents who reside in nursing homes hit a sore spot I've had for years. I have cared for seniors, too, and some family members who "visit" do not stay for even 10 minutes. They come in saying, "I can only stay a few minutes — I'm on my way to my bridge club (or some other event) but I wanted to see you."

Abby, there is never an offer to take the person for a ride, or out to eat, or for an ice cream cone.

Some of these seniors had entertained their kinfolk in their homes for years, but of course that is all forgotten.

Parents care for their children for years, but these ungrateful children would not even consider taking their aging parents for a weekend. — CAREGIVER, U.S.A.

I don't miss sewing, but I sure miss the machine

By Erma Bombeck

I miss my sewing machine.

It used to be such fun spending afternoons poring over pattern books and yard goods. The family used to bring all the things they needed mended and put them in a basket next to the machine, and I'd tell them I'd set aside an entire day to fix them.

Bombeck

What I didn't tell them was that I didn't sew. Never did.

I took a few classes in high school and learned just enough to thread the machine and sew an apron and a headband, but how many calls do you get for those?

I bought the sewing machine right after we were married because a woman is not legally married until she has a sewing machine. Men had their rite of passage, too. The first Saturday after the honeymoon, they all went down to the hardware store and bought a set of drill bits. My husband still has them in their original box. He doesn't have a clue what to do with them.

I at least had plans for the sewing machine. I was going to make pot holders, a Christmas tree skirt and eventually winter coats for the kids.

It's all I ever talked about. I'd tell my friends, "I've got to get something to sew this winter or I'll go crazy," or "Have you seen the new spring fabrics? They're to die for." Actually, my sewing machine was the Siberia of my appliance chain.

I put it in our bedroom so I could "sew in peace." It held old newspapers, hangers that multiplied during the night, and clothes I was too lazy to put in the hamper.

Next stop for the machine was the kitchen so "it will be handy." There it supported stacks of schoolbooks, mail and groceries before we put them away.

It was even in the bathroom for a while, but no one recognized it under all the wet towels and robes.

When the kids moved away from home, I put the sewing machine in one of their bedrooms and called it the sewing room. It had a nice ring to it.

I suppose I should feel guilty for the deception, but phonies like me are no worse than all the people who own pianos, don't play a note, and tell everyone, "I just play for my own amusement." Besides, I got such respect when people thought I could sew. A sewing machine to me was an instrument of creativity ... membership in the good-ole-girls network ... a place to drop off my groceries.

I miss it.

Chaps lose again

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

NMJC's Greg Brown is hounded by Midland College's Chris McKinney during Western Junior Athletic Conference action Monday night at Chaparral Center.

■ New Mexico Junior College adds to the woes of a sliding Midland College basketball team, handing MC its third consecutive loss.

By Jimmy Patterson
Assistant Sports Editor

It took 15 games to accomplish, but New Mexico Junior College finally wrestled away first place from Midland College Monday night. And in the space of just one game, the race for first place in the Western Junior College Athletic Conference basketball is all but over.

The Chaparrals, who simply couldn't keep up with the T-Bird triumvirate of Pete Lewis, James Inman and Greg Brown, lost their third straight heartbreaker, 84-81. MC has lost those three games by a total of five points.

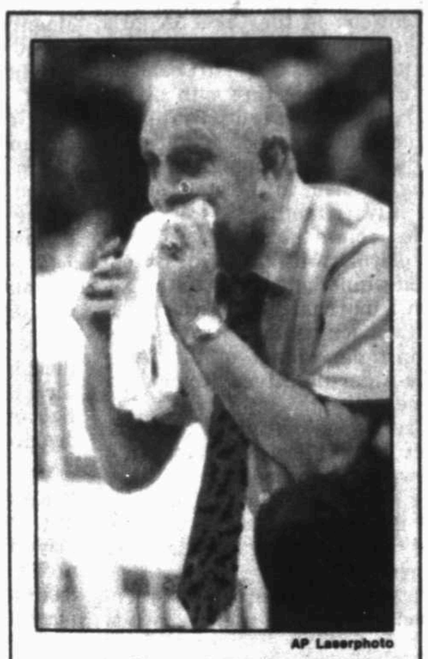

With just one game remaining, NMJC improved its record to 12-3 in conference play with only Frank Phillips lying in its path to the conference title. A win over the Plainsmen Thursday night would give the T-Birds top seeding in the Region V tournament in Waco, March 6-10.

The Chaps, who close the regular season against Odessa College, fell to 11-4 in league play. A win over the Wranglers Thursday would give the Chaps sole possession of second place in the conference. A loss, and MC would fall into a tie for third with South Plains. The Texans were upset by Howard, 74-70, Monday night.

For the second time in two home games, MC freshman guard Terrance Rone tried to single-handedly win the game for the Chaps — and for the second time, he almost did it. Rone, who sunk three three-pointers in the last 55 seconds last Monday in MC's 74-73 loss to Howard, ignited a second half MC rally that brought the Chaps back from a 10 point halftime deficit.

Rone scored 20 of his team-high 25 points in the second half, hitting four consecutive three-pointers to help bring MC back from an 11-point deficit at the 14:30 mark, to give MC a 63-62 lead — their first advantage of the second half.

UNLV's Jerry Tarkanian ...still a fighter

Tarkanian fights back

By Robert Macy
Associated Press Writer

LAS VEGAS — UNLV coach Jerry Tarkanian, scarred by years of battling the NCAA, is now taking on his own administration as he enters his final week at the school he put on the college basketball map.

Tarkanian told a rally Sunday evening he was rescinding a resignation he submitted last June in the wake of continuing problems with his high-profile program.

But school officials said the resignation is legal and binding, and will not be rescinded.

UNLV president Robert Maxson, asked Monday if he might fire Tarkanian if the coach tried to stay, said that would not be necessary.

"There's no need to fire him," Maxson said. "There's not going to be any problem. Jerry made a commitment in good faith."

Asked if he thought Tarkanian would walk away after the final game of the season, against Utah State here March 3, Maxson replied "Certainly."

Maxson said he had not talked with Tarkanian since Sunday's meeting.

"My position is that Jerry submitted a legally binding resignation and the university accepted it," Maxson said.

UNLV legal counsel Brad Booke produced a copy of a state personnel law which says three days after an employee's resignation is accepted,

Dickey has Tech's Raiders on rise

■ In nine months, James Dickey has Texas Tech on the brink of a post-season tournament bid.

LUBBOCK, Texas (AP) — Nine months ago, it seemed first-year Texas Tech basketball coach James Dickey was stopping by every local meeting this side of the Pecos River.

For 20, 10 or even two minutes, Dickey would try to convince area residents and Tech alums of a bright future for the Red Raiders.

After a 5-22 season in 1989 and an 8-23 mark in 1990, Dickey wanted to make it clear that this Tech team would be different.

Nine months later, Dickey has taken a team projected to finish near the cellar of the Southwest Conference to the brink of a post-season tournament bid.

But many were critical at first, saying that Dickey may have been part of the problem during his one year as an assistant under then-Tech coach Gerald Myers in 1990.

Even the Tech administration was lukewarm towards Dickey.

After Tech athletic director T. Jones recommended the former assistant under Eddie Sutton at Arkansas and Kentucky, the board of regents requested a more extensive search before finally offering Dickey a two-year contract.

While most major college coaches start out with at least a four-year deal, Dickey was unfazed, saying, "I am simply happy to have an opportunity."

Tech's 105-98 upset of Rice Saturday comes after crucial victories earlier this year against New Mexico, Texas Christian and then-undefeated Tulane.

Coaches in the SWC are calling Tech's rise a source of pride for the entire conference. And some are even saying it's time to reward Dickey with a contract extension.

"Unless you're an interim coach, you should get a four-year contract from the start," Texas coach Tom Penders said Monday. "I would think Tech is going to reward him with a long-term contract. He has proven himself under adverse conditions."

"He is one of the names you are going to hear in the 'hot young coach category,' and people are going to be after him," said Penders, whose Longhorns (18-9, 9-2) sit atop the SWC.

Jones said Monday he hoped a contract extension will be agreed upon by Dickey, the athletic department and the school's board of regents at the end of the season.

"He has exceeded all the early expectations we had for him as coach," Jones said. "The more I am around him, the more I see he is one of the bright young coaches in America."

Red Sox already off to shaky spring start

■ Pitcher Roger Clemens is a no-show while infielder Carlos Quintana breaks arm in an automobile accident.

Associated Press

Spring training for new Boston Red Sox manager Butch Hobson got off to a shaky start Monday when Roger Clemens didn't show up and it was learned that first baseman Carlos Quintana had broken his arm in an automobile accident in Venezuela.

With word only trickling in on Quintana, and the whereabouts of Clemens a mystery through much of the day, the Red Sox were loathe to discuss the baseball end of things.

"We just hope everybody's OK. That's my first concern," Hobson said.

Quintana, injured while rushing two brothers to a hospital after they were shot at a party, underwent surgery on his left arm for a broken humerus, the bone which extends from the shoulder to the elbow.

Quintana, who hit .295 last year, is expected to be out for several months. His spot will likely be filled by Mo Vaughn, a bright prospect who battled him for playing time last year. Jack Clark, generally a designated hitter, also is an experienced first baseman.

There was little the club could do about Clemens, a three-time Cy Young Award winner, except to wait by the phone.

He did not call, but his agent, Alan Hendricks, called late in the day.

"The agent said he's working out and in great shape and will be here soon," general manager Lou Gorman said.

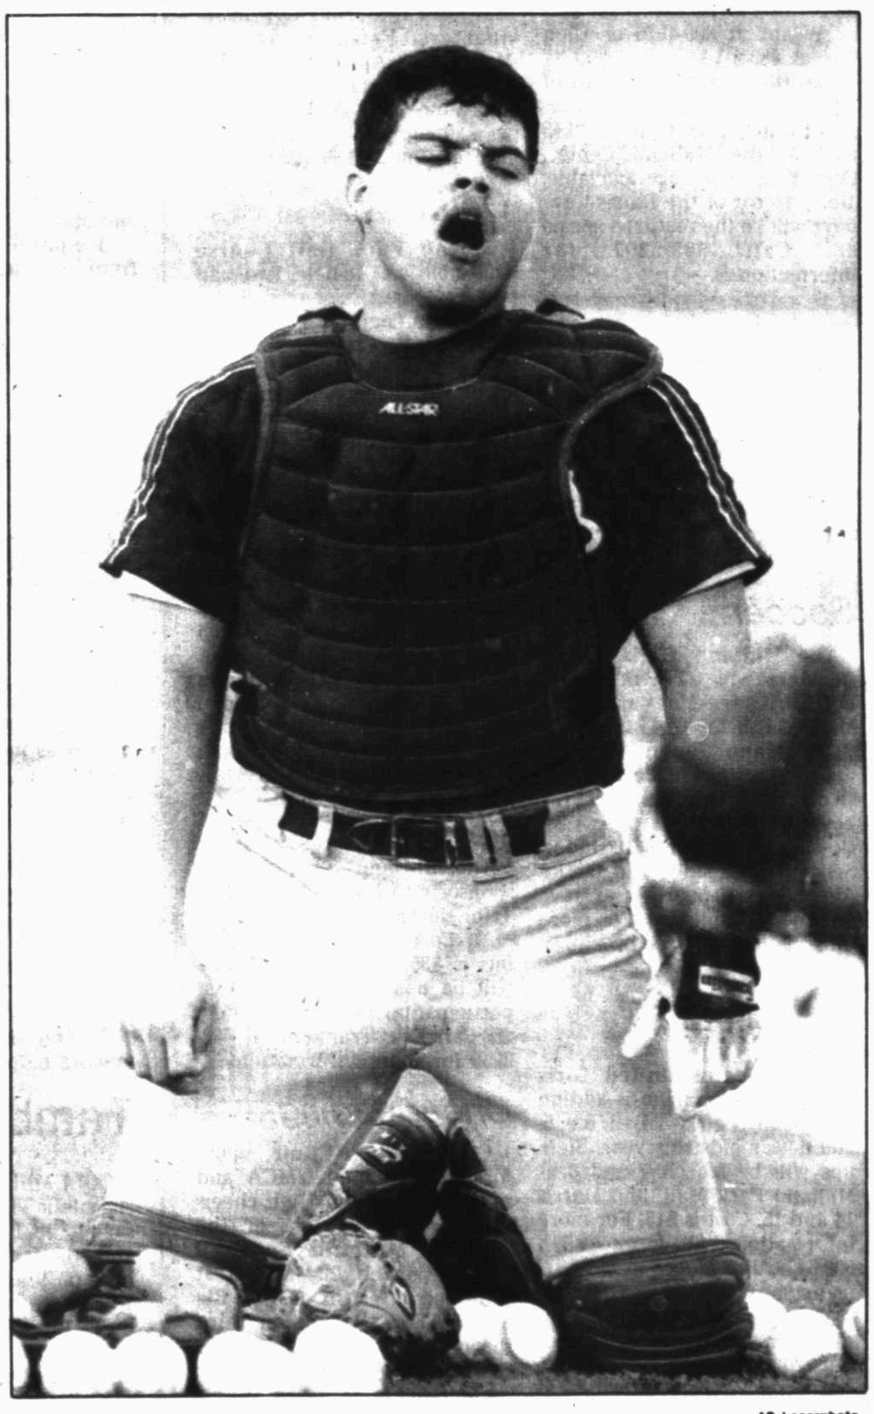

Gorman said he assumed Clemens was still at his home in Houston.

Hobson could say only that his "gut feeling is that (Clemens) had a very good excuse for not being here."

Baseball's collective bargaining agreement doesn't require players to report to spring training until 30 days before opening day.

Meanwhile, some other high-profiled

McMullen regrets convention move

KISSIMMEE, Fla. (AP) — Houston Astros owner John McMullen says he regrets allowing the Republican National Convention to come to the Astrodome this summer.

McMullen rented the stadium for the convention, scheduled for Aug. 17-20, but the necessary preparation time forced the Astros to be scheduled for an unprecedented 28-day, 26-game road trip.

"Looking back, I wish I had told them to go to hell," McMullen said. "Why not? All the agony I was put through — the adverse criticism, I got arbitrated. I got criticized by everybody in the league, and it was all instigated by the press in Houston. I thought the criticism of this organization over the Republican National Convention was so unfair, unreasonable and stupid."

McMullen claimed he will lose money with the convention, but during the grievance he refused to provide lawyers with all documents relating to the lease arrangements.

"Here's a situation where we singlehandedly brought the Republican Convention to Houston, at an influx of at least $100 million to the city," he said. "We don't make a dime — if anything we're going to lose from it."

McMullen, who put the team up for sale in late 1990, promised again this will be his last spring training as owner of the Astros.

"It's time for me to go," he said. "This is it. I know I said that last spring and I'm disappointed that it hasn't been accomplished. It's not baseball that I'm tired of. I'm just tired of the situation in Houston."

Rangerettes to meet Clyde in Coahoma

Staff Report

The road qets much tougher for Greenwood in the Class 3A girls basketball playoffs today when the Rangerettes travel to Coahoma for a 7 p.m. meeting with Clyde.

Clyde defeated Dripping Springs in bi-district action over the weekend, dropping the No. 5 Class 3A team in the state out of the playoff hunt.

Now comes the 3A area round of the playoffs with the Clyde-Greenwood winner advancing to the Region I tournament at Texas Tech in Lubbock at 8:30 p.m. Friday against the winner of the Seminole-Amarillo River Road area game.

Greenwood's girls won its bi-district encounter over Mountian View, 45-35, Saturday in El Paso. The road is shorter to Coahoma, but the opponent carries a glossy 24-4 record to go against the 16-12 Rangerettes.

Against Mountian View, Greenwood got a game high 12 points from Brandy Wright while Tricia Ross added eight points and Robin Wootan six. Cathy Delgadilla led Mountian View with 10 points.

Two Class 5A area games are set for Midland's Chaparral Center tonight. Amarillo High, the team that eliminated District 4-5A champion from the playoffs Saturday in Brownfield, will meet undefeated El Paso Hanks at 6 p.m.

The other contest features Plainview against El Paso Bowie at 7:45 p.m. Plainview eliminated Midland Lee from the playoffs, also in Brownfield Saturday.

The two winners will be back at the Chap Friday night as the 5A Girls Region I tournament begins. Half of the Region I field will be decided here tonight.

Meanwhile, the Greenwood Rangers are preparing for its bi-district entry into the boys state playoffs. That comes at 4 p.m. Saturday when the Rangers take on San Elizario in Alpine on the campus of Sul Ross State University.

MC, OC men netters set for battle today

Staff Report

The first team action of the semester for the Midland College men's tennis team is today in Odessa. The Chaps go against the Odessa College Wranglers at 2 p.m. on the OC courts.

Currently ranked third in the nation, the Chaps have a strong contingent again this year. Sophomore David Draper heads the group, playing No. 1 singles and doubles.

Draper was singles finalist at the ITCA National Junior College Indoor Tournament in Lubbock Feb. 16 and teamed with Toby Curtis to win the tournament bracket for men's doubles. It was the second consecutive national indoor title for Curtis, who won the 1991 crown with another partner.

MC coach Joe Williams added two players to his men's squad at mid-term, providing more depth for the already-strong group. For the past week, intrasquad singles and doubles matches have been long battles with 10 players seeking the top six singles and top three doubles positions.

Williams has a veteran team. Along with Draper and Curtis, his sophomores include Berhe Serekebrhan, Robin Van Beveren, and Tom Erik Brun.

Serekebrhan and Curtis also are recovering from leg injuries. Joining the Chaps at mid-term were two players.

Cyril Buscaglione is a sophomore who played last year for Palm Beach Community College in Florida. Carlos Huerta is a freshman.

The MC women's team, undefeated for more than two years in team competition, begins its spring team events on March 3, when it hosts the Odessa College women.

Yoder quits at Wisconsin

MADISON, Wis. (AP) — Steve Yoder, who has produced only one winning season in a decade as Wisconsin's basketball coach, said Monday he's quitting after this season because the school won't renew his contract.

Yoder has one year left on a contract that pays him a base of $89,500. The university, facing a budget deficit of $1.8 million, will give Yoder a buyout worth $250,000, the Milwaukee Sentinel reported.

The buyout will be funded through private channels and will give Yoder payments of $50,000 on April 1, $100,000 on July 1 and $100,000 on Jan. 1.

Yoder's annual income, including his base salary, camps and radio and television shows, is $243,000.

Yoder said he made his decision after athletic director Pat Richter told him he would not recommend extending the contract.

"I'm disappointed but it's his (Richter's) decision to make," a glassy-eyed Yoder said at a news conference.

"I submit my resignation now to facilitate the orderly transition of coaching staffs. He (Richter) told me he would like to change. I said I would cooperate in that transition."

Yoder, 52, will coach the Badgers for the final six games this season. His resignation is effective April 1. Wisconsin is 12-13, but only 3-9 in the Big Ten.

At Wisconsin, Yoder has a 127-160 record, including a 49-125 record against Big Ten teams since taking over in the 1982-83 season. Away from home, the Badgers are only 12-74 against league competition and seven of those road victories have come against Northwestern.

Under Yoder before this season, the Badgers had only one winning season and two at .500.

Kansas rips Oklahoma

Associated Press

LAWRENCE, Kan. — Eric Pauley had a career-high 23 points and 12 rebounds and helped key a 17-4 run Monday night that broke open a tight game and carried No. 3 Kansas to an 84-65 victory over Oklahoma.

Pauley, a 6-foot-10 junior, scored eight points in the 5-minute spree and Adonis Jordan, a 5-11 point guard, scored six as Kansas (21-3, 9-2) won its 15th straight Big Eight game at home and swept their two-game series with the Sooners for the first time since 1986.

Oklahoma (17-7, 5-6), boosted by Terry Evans' offensive burst, pulled back to 52-50 on Damon Patterson's basket. But then Pauley, working inside most of the night, made a basket and Jordan hit a 3-pointer to put the Jayhawks in control.

After Jordan's 3-pointer made it 62-54, Jordan stole a pass and fed the ball inside to Alonzo Jamison, who was fouled and made both free throws.

Oklahoma has lost 13 of its last 16 in Lawrence and left Kansas a winner only six times since 1951.

Jordan finished with 22 points while Rex Walters, who had been battling a shooting slump, had 18.

Evans, who had just three points in the first half, finished with 25 and Patterson had 19. Bryan Sallier, who had 29 points against Kansas in their first meeting, had one point.

Kansas grabbed a 29-23 halftime lead as Oklahoma registered its lowest-scoring half of the season. The Jayhawks quickly went up 38-26. But Price scored six points in a 9-0 run that sliced the lead to 38-35 at the 16:00 mark.

Top 25 Roundup

South Florida 81, No. 15 Tulane 76

NEW ORLEANS — Bobby Russell made up for a disappointment at home with a 3-pointer on the road with 10 seconds to play and South Florida beat No. 15 Tulane.

Russell missed a 3-point shot at Tampa that would have won that game in regulation when the Metro Conference teams met Feb. 6. Tulane went on to win 78-70 in overtime.

Monday night, Russell's 3-pointer broke a 76-76 tie and Radenko Dobras then hit two free throws with four seconds left.

Fred Lewis led South Florida (17-8, 5-5) with 22 points and played all 40 minutes.

Dobras had a string of 29 consecutive successful free throws broken on his first attempt against Tulane (19-4, 7-2) but he hit his remaining five attempts, including two that gave his team a 76-75 lead with 1:08 left.

No. 20 St. John's 72, Providence 68, OT

PROVIDENCE, R.I. — St. John's, which had missed 16 of its first 40 free throws, made all six it attempted in the final 2:55 of overtime and the 20th-ranked Redmen won their seventh straight game.

The Redmen (17-7, 11-5) moved into a first-place tie with Georgetown (10-4) in the Big East and have just two conference games to play — both at home against Georgetown and Seton Hall.

The Friars have lost all four overtime games they have played this season.

Indiana now No. 2 by default

Associated Press

Indiana's Hoosiers are back where they started the season, by default.

Seventeen of last week's Top 25 teams were beaten last week, and Indiana was the only one among the top 11 without at least one loss. On Monday, a nationwide panel of sports writers and broadcasters elevated the Hoosiers from seventh to second in The Associated Press college basketball poll.

UNLV, ineligible for postseason tournaments because of NCAA violations, matched Indiana's gain of five places, moving to seventh.

Indiana started the season ranked second to Duke, but a loss to UCLA in the Tipoff Classic dropped the Hoosiers to 10th, and they fell as low as 14th before beginning their climb.

Duke lost to Wake Forest on Sunday but kept its hold on the No. 1 ranking for the 15th consecutive week with 48 of 65 first-place votes and 1,595 of a possible 1,625 points, its smallest support all season.

Indiana and Kansas, which lost in overtime to Nebraska, each had seven votes for No. 1, and the Hoosiers captured the No. 2 spot by a single rating point, 1,489-1,488. UCLA, previously ranked second, was upset at Notre Dame and dropped to fourth with 1,473 points. It also spoiled a No. 1 vs. No. 2 matchup when Duke visits UCLA on Sunday.

The other three first-place votes this week went to UNLV, which has the nation's longest winning streak (21 games) and home winning streak (47 games).

Sunday's 86-80 victory over Ohio State gave Indiana a 1½-game lead in the Big Ten, snapped the Buckeyes' 30-game home winning streak and dropped them from sixth to eighth in the poll. Indiana also beat Michigan State by 30 points last week, dropping the Spartans from 11th to 12th.

The week's biggest gain was by Georgetown, which moved from 25th to 18th with wins over Connecticut and Syracuse. Two newcomers to the poll this week were DePaul at 21st and Nebraska at 25th.

CHAPS: T-Birds one win away from championship

(From 1C)

"Terrance has a lot of heart," MC head coach Steve Green said. "He busts his tail for us. Hopefully, someday, we can build a team around him."

Ari Rodriques added 23 points from the paint for the Chaps, and Kelon Haynie had a double-double with 10 points and 12 rebounds. But the Chaps' inability to keep up with NMJC's big three — in particular Lewis — was simply too steep a grade to climb.

"Pete Lewis has played great for two years for us," NMJC head coach Ron Black said. "He's been overshadowed by a lot of our players, but he's been our MVP."

Lewis weaved his way in, around and through the MC defense, be it a zone, man or pressure. The sophomore from Hobbs pumped in 9-of-14 from the floor and another 9-of-12 from the line.

"We just didn't have the defense from our guards to handle him," Green said.

Lewis (28 points), Inman (21), and Brown (17) accounted for 66 of the T-Birds' 84 points.

Soon after the Chaps had erased that 11 point deficit on Rone's trey, momentum changed hands as the T-Birds then outscored MC 19-9 to take an 81-72 lead with 1:42 left.

The Chaps didn't quit then, closing it to 83-81 on a Chris McKinney three-pointer with 33 seconds left.

That, though, was when the Chaps quit offensively. On their final trip down, the Chaps put up three shots, including a missed three-pointer for the tie by Rone, and an errant 10 footer from McKinney as he tried to draw a foul on the shot.

"We don't deserve to win the championship if we can't win those two games at home," Green said of the NMJC and Howard losses. "They beat us in front of our fans. They took it away from us and they deserve it (first place).

"I think our team is a group where ... they've got to have their candy before they're happy. They don't understand you've got to go to work before you can have your candy."

Freshman guard Shawn Morris, playing on a bad knee, didn't enter the game until the second half, and then saw limited action. Morris said he questioned whether he should've played or not, and said he did so only to help the team at the guard spot.

"I can't even tell you what's wrong," Morris said, trying to explain the turn south the Chaps have taken. "We're just not executing. The effort's there. We just needed this to win the conference championship."

Despite the easy task of facing 1-13 Frank Phillips, Black said his T-Birds can't let up if they want to win the title.

"If we can't beat Frank Phillips at home with their record," Black said, "we don't deserve to win the conference."

CHAP NOTES: If MC loses to OC Thursday and finishes tied with South Plains for third place, MC would likely go to Waco as the conference's No. 4 representative and have to face Top 10 ranked McLennan Community College in the opening round. Based on the power-ratings, the first tie-breaker in the WJCAC, SPC would likely finish the season with 46 power points while MC would close the season with 43. ... MC's current three-game loss streak is the longest skid by an MC team since February 1980. That year, the Chaps lost a trio of games in succession before closing the regular season with a win, and moving on to the Region V championship game. ... OC defeated New Mexico Military, 90-61; Western Texas at Frank Phillips was unavailable.

New Mexico Junior College (84) — Pete Lewis 9-14 9-12 28, James Inman 10-15 1-2 21, Greg Brown 6-17 5-5 17, Dell Savage 3-7 5-8 11, Ara Baten 2-5 0-0 5, Curtis Wren 0-2 2-2 2, Thomas McNight 0-0 0-0 0. Totals: 30-60 22-29 84

Midland College (81) — Terrance Rone 8-15 4-4 25, Ari Rodriques 10-15 3-3 23, Kelon Haynie 3-6 4-5 10, Bruce Patterson 4-6 1-1 9, Chris McKinney 2-7 0-0 5, Morris Conley 1-4 2-2 4, Bruno Baptista 1-6 0-0 3, Fabian Mina 1-6 0-0 2, Mauricio Gutierrez 0-0 0-0 0, Shawn Morris 0-3 0-0 0. Totals: 30-68 14-15 81

Halftime score: NMJC 46, MC 37. Three-point goals: NMJC 2-9 (Lewis 1-3, Baten 1-1, Wren 0-2, Brown 0-3), MC 7-23 (Rone 5-10, McKinney 1-6, Baptista 1-6, Morris 0-1). Total fouls: NMJC 13, MC 22. Rebounds: NMJC 33 (Savage 9), MC 22 (Haynie 12). Assists: NMJC 11 (Brown 6), MC 19 (Haynie 4, McKinney 4). Fouled out: Conley. Technical fouls: None.

Tamburo to leave AD post

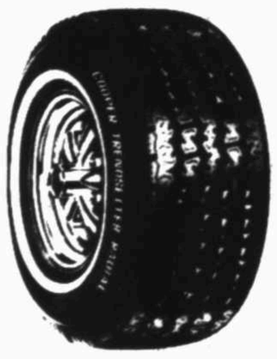

COLUMBIA, Mo. (AP) — Missouri athletic director Dick Tamburo, saying he is tired of negativism and "the scuttlebutt and what you hear on the street," said today he will retire when his contract expires June 30.

Tamburo, 62, did not offer specifics of the negativism and did not mention reports that the university's board of curators decided not to renew his contract.

"In considering the handling of the extension of my contract, I feel my effectiveness has been diminished by circumstances beyond my control, and in thinking of the University of Missouri and the athletic staff, I, therefore, will be taking the opportunity provided by the university for early retirement," Tamburo said.

Tamburo declined, however, to detail the negativism and circumstances that led to his decision to take early retirement.

Mavericks sink 131 points, lose

NBA Roundup

Associated Press

DALLAS — Chris Mullin scored 29 points and Tim Hardaway added 27, including five-of-seven from 3-point range, as the Golden State Warriors won their eighth straight game, 138-131 over the Dallas Mavericks on Monday night.

Hardaway scored nine consecutive points in the closing two minutes of the third period, including two 3-pointers, to give the Warriors a 104-94 lead.

Dallas, which was led by rookie Mike Iuzzolino's career-high 22 points, cut Golden State's lead to 133-126 with 23.8 seconds left on Brian Howard's three-pointer. Derek Harper hit a 3-pointer with 8.7 seconds left to reduce the Warriors' advantage to 135-130 but Dallas could come no closer.

The winning streak equalled Golden State's longest since January, 1989.

Sarunas Marciulionis, who had 22 points, scored 10 points in the third period, including a twisting layup at the buzzer, and the Warriors converted eight of their last nine shots of the quarter.

Dallas had an 86-85 advantage with 5:25 left in the third quarter before Marciulionis scored six points during a 10-1 run for a 95-87 advantage.

Golden State led at halftime, 73-69 behind Mullin's 22 points. Mullin was 10 for 12 in the first half as the Warriors hit 70 percent of their field goal attempts.

Mullin connected on eight of nine first quarter field goal attempts and scored 18 points, the most in a quarter by a Mavericks opponent this season.

Trail Blazers 110, Jazz 107

PORTLAND, Ore. — Clyde Drexler scored 24 points, including a crucial rebound of his own miss with 35 seconds to play, as Portland snapped Utah's six-game winning streak.

The Blazers nearly blew a nine-point lead in the final 4½ minutes but held on to remain in a virtual tie with Golden State for first place in the Pacific Division.

76ers 108, Kings 96

PHILADELPHIA — Armon Gilliam scored 29 points and Hersey Hawkins added 27 as Philadelphia built a 12-point lead in the final period and held off road-weary Sacramento.

Philadelphia led 82-70 with 10:31 left in the game, but the Kings pecked away to get to within 97-92 with 2:39 remaining.

But Ron Anderson made a 3-point shot, Gilliam a layup and Johnny Dawkins a pair of free throws to boost the 76ers to a 104-92 advantage with 51 seconds to go.

Charles Barkley scored 19 points and had 14 rebounds for the Sixers, who had lost five of their last six.

Dennis Hopson's 20 led the Kings, who played their fifth game in seven days. Mitch Richmond had 19 and Spud Webb 18 for the Kings, who have the worst road record, 4-26, in the NBA.

Gilliam scored 14 in the first quarter as the Sixers led 29-22. Philadelphia was in front 56-50 at halftime.

The Kings scored eight of the first 10 points in the third period to tie at 58 with 8:57 to play. But Philadelphia rallied 8-2 to build a 66-58 lead at the 6:04 mark.

Sacramento drew to within four, at 68-64, but again the Sixers responded on baskets by Anderson and Barkley to go up 72-64 with 2:25 left in the quarter and they hung on to lead 76-68 going into the final period.

Hawks 117, Nuggets 95

ATLANTA — Kevin Willis had 21 points and 12 rebounds before sitting out the fourth quarter as Atlanta built an early 20-point lead and coasted to victory over Denver.

Atlanta took a 9-0 lead in the first three minutes as the Nuggets missed their first nine shots. The lead reached 39-19 less than a minute into the second period.

Denver made a 16-6 run that cut the lead to 66-55 early in the third quarter, but they came no closer.

It was the fourth loss in a five-game road trip over the last 10 days for the Nuggets.

Marcus Liberty led the Nuggets with 21 points, inluding Denver's last nine in the game. Reggie Williams added 18, all in the first three quarters.

The Hawks led 91-64 at the end of three quarters and got their biggest lead of the night when Duane Ferrell converted a three-point play with 9:46 remaining for a 98-70 advantage.

Ferrell and Alexander Volkov each scored 17 points and Paul Graham had 13 points, four rebounds and career-highs of five steals and nine assists.

Willis' double-double was his 15th straight.

Sonics 106, Timberwolves 91

MINNEAPOLIS — Eddie Johnson scored 26 points and sparked a key third-quarter surge as Seattle broke open a close game with a 12-0 run and went on to defeat Minnesota.

Ricky Pierce's three-point play broke a 58-58 tie midway through the quarter and Johnson followed with seven of the Supersonics' next nine points. Minnesota hit only 6 of 20 shots in the quarter.

Benoit Benjamin added 24 points as Seattle won its fourth straight and 10th in 15 outings under new coach George Karl. The loss for the Timberwolves was their fourth straight.

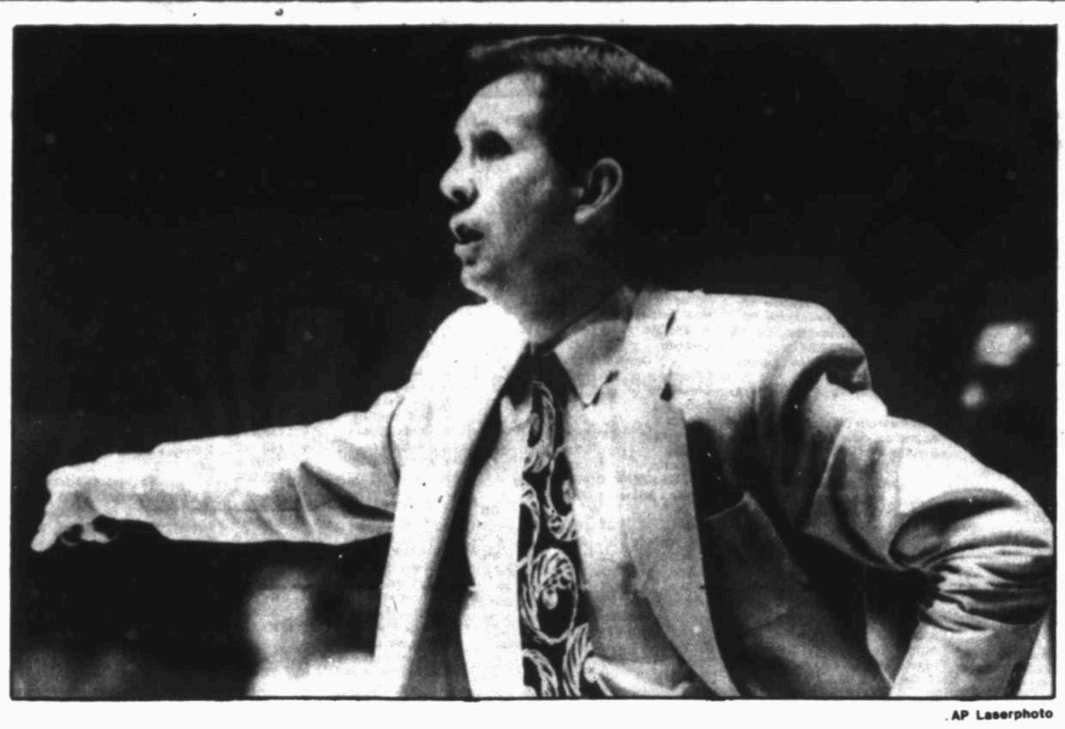

Sean Kemp chipped in 21 points and 15 rebounds for Seattle. Rookie Luc Longley scored a career-high 19 for Minnesota.

Suns 104, Knicks 95

PHOENIX — Jeff Hornacek ended a Phoenix cold spell by hitting a three-point play and a 3-pointer with just over five minutes to play to help the Suns defeat the New York Knicks 104-95 on Monday night.

Hornacek's long-distance shot put the Suns ahead 91-84, and the Suns made it an 8-0 run when Tom Chambers hit a pair of free throws with 4:36 remaining.

The scoring combination of Chambers, Kevin Johnson and Hornacek helped offset Patrick Ewing's 37 points and 10 rebounds.

DICKEY: Raiders face Houston today

(From 1C)

Dickey has preached poise to his team on its way to a 13-10 mark, which matches the Red Raiders' victory total over the past two seasons.

With a healthy Will Flemons, who is among the SWC's scoring leaders, and overachieving performances from a team without a starter taller than 6-7, Tech may be in the hunt for a berth in the National Invitation Tournament.

"We can't think about post-season play right now," Dickey said Monday. "We have to think about Houston and then each game at a time. We are not talented enough to be thinking about anything but the game at hand."

Tech, which is 5-6 in conference play, will be the underdog against Houston (18-5, 7-3) tonight in Lubbock. But the Raiders hope to finish strong in their final three games at Northern Illinois, at Texas A&M and home against TCU.

"We can't look ahead," said freshman Lance Hughes, who led Tech with 31 points against Rice Saturday. "Of course we would love to win the Southwest Conference Tournament and get into the NCAA Tournament. But right now we are just trying to get as many wins as possible."

Houston coach Pat Foster said the Cougars are not taking Tech lightly.

"James Dickey has done a great job with the team," Foster said Monday. "He has a great coaching background so his success thus far is no surprise to the people that know him.

"It may be a surprise that he could do it that fast, but he has the players playing well together right now. They are for real."

Penders said the entire conference should be proud of Tech's resurrection.

"I think it is great for the league to have that type of success story," he said. "Dickey has turned around a struggling program into a possible post-season tournament team. Anyone who does that is doing a helluva job."

Switzer libel trial nears jury selection

AUSTIN (AP) — Preliminary motions were heard Monday in a reporter's $30 million lawsuit against former Oklahoma football coach Barry Switzer.

Jury selection in the trial before State District Judge Joe Hart is set to start Wednesday and take two days. The trial will last from three to six weeks.

Jack Taylor Jr., a former reporter for the Dallas Times Herald, has accused Switzer of libel, slander, and invasion of privacy stemming from accusations made by the former Sooner coach in his autobiography "Bootlegger's Boy."

Taylor, now a reporter with the Los Angeles Daily News, and his wife Myrna Lee Taylor, seek $5 million in damages, and a $25 million punitive award.

Other defendants in the case are Austin writer Edwin Allen "Bud" Shrake Jr., a co-author of the book, and book publisher William Morrow & Co. Inc.

In the book, Switzer links Taylor, who had written investigative stories on Switzer and the Sooner football team, with a scheme to plant drugs on an Oklahoma football player after the 1988 Orange Bowl game.

Taylor says the accusation is false, while Switzer's attorneys claim the facts are substantially true. They also say that Taylor is a public official, and therefore to prove he was libeled must show that Switzer knew the allegations were false, but published them anyway.

The player, referred to as "Big Red" in the book, is Brad McBride, according to court documents. McBride was a reserve linebacker from Edmond on the Sooners from 1984 to 1987.

Attorneys on Monday argued whether McBride's mother, Donna Acree should be allowed to testify after having failed to show up for appointments with both sides to give a sworn statement.

Hart said if Ms. Acree appears in Austin then attorneys for Taylor and Switzer must have a chance to question her before he would allow her to testify.

On another matter, Hart said he would tell the jury that an assistant U.S. attorney did not allow an FBI agent Phil Shockey to answer numerous questions concerning the allegation against Taylor.

Shockey said Taylor's name came up in the investigation of the alleged drug-planting scheme, according to Switzer.

Roach asks for apology from Majerus

LARAMIE, Wyo. (AP) — University of Wyoming athletic director Paul Roach is demanding an apology from Utah coach Rick Majerus for screaming obscenities and punching the scorers' table during a game last month.

Roach also is indignant over Majerus' suggestion that the Western Athletic Conference call off its post-season basketball tournament so players can concentrate on their studies.

But Majerus said late Monday that while he was sorry for using profanity during a game last month at Wyoming, he took back nothing else he said.

"I think I may have used some inappropriate language, for which I am apologetic. That is never appropriate and was uncalled for. But beyond that, I don't think there's anything to apologize for," he said.

Majerus' outburst came Jan. 25. Upset that a 3-point field goal was initially recorded as a two-point shot by the scorers, the coach yelled at the scorers and pounded their table.

"The scorer's table made a mistake," Majerus insisted Monday. "It's either a question of imcompetency or dishonesty."

After the game, the Utah coach accused scorekeepers of trying to cheat his team. Following that, Majerus and Wyoming coach Benny Dees had a heated exchange.

But Majerus said he and Dees were on good terms, having a cordial lunch in Coffeeville, Kan., the next day. Both coaches were on a recruiting trip there, Majerus said.

"He said he didn't have a problem with me, and I have none with him," the Utah coach said.

While WAC commissioner Joe Kearney reprimanded Majerus for his actions with a letter, but Roach wants the coach to apologize publicly.

"I think at the very least he should have apologized to the officials at the scorers' table and our fans," Roach said, adding that a one-game suspension also would be appropriate.

Majerus, angry that what he termed was a "private reprimand" had been made public, said Roach's actions "goes to show you he's played too many football games without a helmet.

"I didn't know that the (Western Athletic) Conference was operating out of Laramie, Wyo., and that Paul Roach is now the commissioner," the coach said.

While Roach said he was promised by his counterpart at Utah, Chris Hill, that Majerus would issue an apology, Hill disputes that claim.

"I don't think that's what I said to him. I'm not sure," Hill said.

Prices slump

West Texas Intermediate for delivery in April settled at $18.43 per barrel, down 23 cents, at the New York Mercantile Exchange.

Traders said there was no news moving the market, but prices began falling on technical influences.

Oil has been moving mostly lower for a little more than a week, since OPEC announced spring production cuts that many traders believe are too small to prop up prices when world demand for oil falls for seasonal reasons in the second quarter.

Traders said Monday's session was a continuation of that trend, though they seemed divided on which way oil might move next.

Natural gas prices were mostly lower, with contracts for delivery in April settling at $1.175 per 1,000 cubic feet, down 1.1 cents.

T-bills gain

WASHINGTON — Interest rates on short-term Treasury securities rose in Monday's auction to their highest levels in 10 weeks.

The Treasury Department sold $11.3 billion in three-month bills at an average discount rate of 3.96 percent, up from 3.83 percent last week. An additional $11.2 billion was sold in six-month bills at an average discount rate of 4.08 percent, up from 3.93 percent last week.

The three-month bill rate was the highest since they sold for 4.14 percent Dec. 16. The six-month bill rate was the highest since they averaged 4.19 percent on that same date.

Record market

NEW YORK — Stock prices drifted through a mixed session Monday as the market absorbed the expected news of big losses at General Motors.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, after being modestly lower for most of the session, closed with a 2.23 gain at a record 3,282.42. The previous closing peak of 3,280.64 was reached last Thursday.

Declining issues outnumbered advances by about 10 to 7 in the overall tally on the New York Stock Exchange.

Dollar mixed

In Tokyo, the dollar rose 0.61 yen to a closing 129.26 yen.

In London, the British pound rose to $1.7473 from $1.7470 late Friday.

Economists: '92 recovery to be slight

■ Period from end of 1989 through 1992 will be worst 3-year interval centered on a recession since the Great Depression, poll summary says.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The nation's top economic forecasters have become more pessimistic about the strength of the economy's recovery and now suggest 1992 will bring little relief at the end of one of the worst three-year performances in 60 years.

A poll of 49 forecasters, released Monday by the National Association of Business Economists, showed 32 "agree that the recession is behind us." But the consensus projected just 1.5 percent growth this year, compared to 2.4 percent in a similar survey three months ago.

"That's a significant revision (and) helps to answer for us why we're feeling the economic malaise that we are," Lynn O. Michaelis, NABE president and chief economist for the Weyerhaueser Co., told reporters.

The economy has grown an average of 6 percent during the first years of recoveries since World War II.

The survey was conducted in late January and early February.

The 1.0 percent growth in 1990 was the slowest in any year preceding a recession since the 1930s, the survey summary said. The gross domestic product — the total output of goods and services produced in the United States — then fell 0.7 percent in 1991.

"Taken as a whole, then, the period from the end of 1989 through the end of 1992 will be the worst three-year interval centered on a recession since the Great Depression," the summary added.

"The sluggish recovery spells only grudging relief from unemployment," the association said. The panelists forecast that the jobless rate, which averaged 6.7 percent in 1991, would average 6.9 percent this year before falling to 6.5 percent in 1993. The figure stood at 7.1 percent last month, according to the Labor Department.

Still, a second survey of 230 members of the NABE economic policy panel showed 58 percent do not favor any stimulative fiscal package including various tax cuts now being considered by Congress and the Bush administration.

Although 61 percent of the policy panel said the Federal Reserve's recent easing of interest rates to revive the economy was "about right," 32 percent contended monetary policy remains "too restrictive" for growth.

But the forecasters' most-cited reason for the "lethargic recovery was the high level of consumers' indebtedness."

The lethargy will continue to keep prices down, the forecasters said. Inflation as measured by the Consumer Price Index was projected to rise 3.2 percent this year, down from 3.5 percent in the November survey.

Inflation rose 6.1 percent in 1990 before slowing to 3.1 percent last year.

The federal budget deficit was projected to jump to $383 billion in fiscal 1992, up from the record $268.7 billion in 1991.

Banks remain competitive, regulators say

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite a growing number of bank mergers over the last 10 years, competition in the industry will likely remain strong, regulators said Monday.

"After a decade of remarkable changes, ... it is notable that there has been almost no change in the concentration in local banking markets, the battlefield on which competition is measured and analyzed," said Edward C. Ettin, deputy director of research for the Federal Reserve.

"The fact that concentration in both urban and rural banking markets has remained largely unchanged ... is an indication of the continuing intensely competitive structure of the banking industry," Ettin told a Senate Appropriations subcommittee.

The hearing was called by Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., to examine the proposed merger of the San Francisco-based BankAmerica Corp. and Security Pacific Corp. of Los Angeles.

The Federal Reserve, which regulates bank holding companies, and the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, which oversees nationally chartered banks, have not yet approved the combination, which would become the nation's second-largest banking company, just behind Citicorp.

Both Ettin and Steven R. Steinbrink, senior deputy comptroller of the currency, refused to discuss the BankAmerica-Security Pacific merger.

Bank with energy loans loses appeal

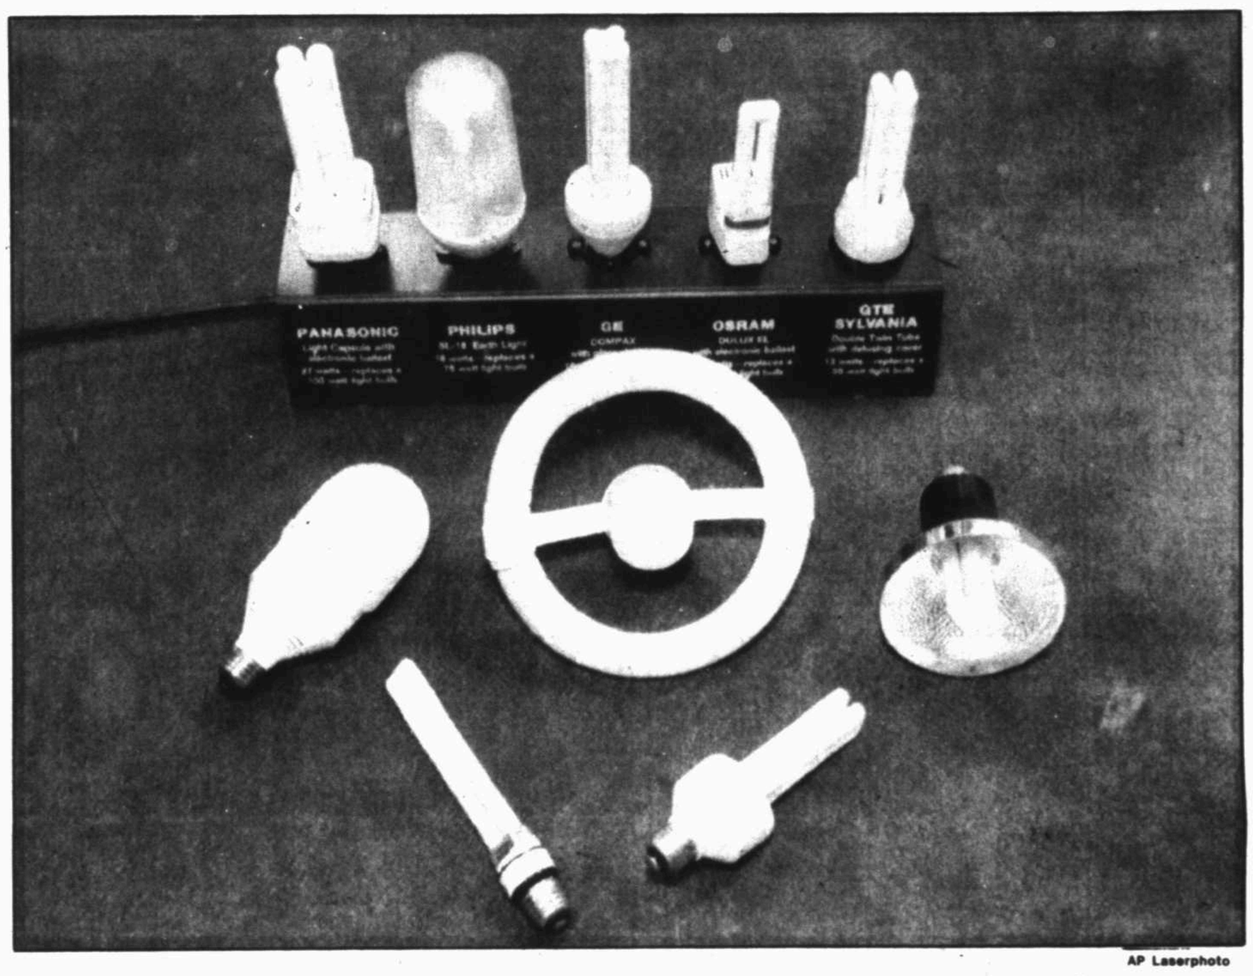

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court today refused to hear an appeal by a Texas bank that said it has been unlawfully saddled with an energy company's defaulted loans.

The court, without comment, refused to revive the bank's lawsuit against a British bank that originally agreed to make the loans.

A New Orleans branch of Barclays Bank PLC of London agreed in 1982 to provide a $5 million line of credit to ABCO Energy Corp, and later loaned ABCO $700,000. The loan rate varied and was set by Barclays at 1½ percentage points above the prime lending rate.

The energy company put up as collateral oil and gas properties in Texas.

Efficient bulbs

Several styles of compact fluorescent lighting are displayed in Washington Friday. Compact fluorescent lighting takes the technology used in long-tube fixtures found in offices and places it in convenient bulbs that can be used in the home. Experts admit that getting people to scrap cheap, energy-thirsty lights for more efficient and more expensive models will not be easy.

Apple unveils voice-activated PC prototype

By Laura Myers
Associated Press writer

SAN JOSE, Calif. — It's not quite the year 2001, but Apple Computer Inc. has developed a HAL-like voice-activated computer that recognizes spoken commands and, sometimes, talks back, the company said Monday.

Computer experts and even a key competitor who saw the prototype Macintosh praised the leap in technology, but said such sophisticated voice-activated PCs won't reach desktops for years.

"I think Apple has produced a superb demo that's ahead of the game," said Wayne Rosing, who heads the advanced research lab at rival Sun Microsystems Inc. "I was very impressed with how well the speech software had been integrated. But it's still a horse race to get a product to the market."

Apple spokesman John Cook said the product was publicly demonstrated for the third time on Friday in Monterey at a conference. Previously, the voice-activated Macintosh was demonstrated at meetings in Tokyo and Southern California.

"Right now, it's basically something out of our laboratories," Cook said. "But it has captured the imagination of people who have seen it. We're very interested in speech because Apple focuses on human interaction (with PCs) and speech is a very natural way to deal with your computer."

The voice-activated Macintosh was able to change the type size of a document, program a video recorder, pay bills, find a name in an electronic telephone directory, call the number and perform other functions that normally require typed in commands or the use of a computer mouse.

Once it completed the commanded operation, the Macintosh also talked back, saying it was finished or asking whether the user wanted something else.

"Talking back is trivial, a lot of machines can do that," said Marvin Minsky, a computer science expert at Massachusetts Institute of Technology, who was at the Monterey demonstration.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Joint, trust accounts extend FDIC coverage

By Bill Doyle

Q. My husband died last October. All his assets, including certificates of deposit in several banks, were left to me. Please write another column about how a person can have more than $100,000 in one bank and be covered by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. I cut out a column you wrote on this subject. But I lost it.

Doyle

I have four adult children and don't want to do anything dumb. The fellow now running my bank is not very cooperative. He doesn't make it his business to know us old people.

A. OK. Let's do it again. Questions similar to yours keep coming in from folks who have acquired some wealth and like to do all their banking in one institution.

The basic rule is that FDIC covers each depositor up to $100,000 at each bank or savings and loan association. Technically, the coverage limit applies to each "right or capacity."

However, under present rules, you can extend FDIC coverage by opening joint and/or trust accounts — CDs or otherwise — in your name and other names. Each is counted a separate right or capacity.

In your case, you could have $500,000 insured by having one account in your name alone and a joint account with each of your four children. Then, you could have four accounts in your name, each one in trust for one of the children.

For that matter, there could be four more accounts, each in one of your children's name in trust for you. Every account would have $100,000 FDIC coverage. So far, we're up to $1.3 million. If you want to include grandchildren and great-grandchildren in this, the possibilities go on and on.

Every bank and S&L worthy of the name has literature explaining this. Ask that guy who's now running your bank for a copy. He has to be at least that cooperative, especially with an obviously good customer.

The present multiple FDIC coverage probably won't last forever. Congress has been mulling over changes for a couple of years. However, there's no telling when alterations will be made or what they will be, considering the way our lawgivers cogitate. (I refuse to use the word "work" in that context.)

Q. Is the money in my checking account combined with my CDs to arrive at the $100,000 FDIC coverage limit?

A. Yes, assuming both are in your name alone. Every deposit you have in the same bank or S&L — in checking, savings, CDs or anything else — is totaled. Any amount in excess of $100,000 is not covered by FDIC.

Q. If my wife and I have two joint accounts in the same bank — one with my name first and her name second, the other with her name first and my name second — doesn't each account have $100,000 FDIC coverage?

A. No. The arrangement of the names — fore and aft, as old swab jockeys would say — doesn't matter. When two or more of the same names are used on multiple accounts at the same institution, the insurance limit remains at $100,000 for all the accounts.

Q. You described the Consumer Credit Counseling Service as a "nationwide organization that assists people with debt problems." You added, "CCCS is non-profit and does not charge consumers for its service."

I phoned the CCCS toll-free number, 800-388-227, for the office nearest my home. I found out there is a $35 initial consultation charge and, if needed, a $10 monthly fee. Also, the people there do not make arrangements with mortgage companies and banks holding mortgages. In my case, they could not help. Nor did they charge me.

A. I stand corrected. In the future, I'll call CCCS a "free or low-cost service." A CCCS spokesman says about one-third of the offices provide totally free services. At others, debt management service fees average $9 a month.

He also says many of the CCCS offices do work out mortgage problems between homeowners and lenders.

Ranch House Meats ham it up in an incredibly delicious way

Planning a get-together? Whether it be a large family reunion, small birthday party, office bash or just about any event imaginable you should think about calling Ranch House meats before planning the menu.

You might, for example, decide that Ranch House's incomparable honey glazed ham is just the thing to delight the palates of your friends, relative and co-workers. This very fresh bone-in ham is hardwood smoked. According to Ranch House owner Greg Golden, bone-in ham, since it is a natural and not a compressed product, offers superior taste.

After being smoked to perfection, a Ranch House ham is honey-glazed with a delectable combination of honey, sugar and secret spices (which Golden won't reveal). It is then spiral sliced, producing attractive uniform pieces of epicurean flavor. Ranch House, incidentally, is the only place in the Permian Basin that spiral slices their own meat.

And to meet specific appetites and group sizes, hams can be either purchased whole or by the half.

But you don't have to wait for a special occasion either to try some exquisite Ranch House meats. All of Ranch House's offerings are perfect almost any day for the busy working family.

And if ham doesn't strike your fancy on a particular day or for a particular affair you might considered a juicy, fully-cooked smoked turkey or turkey breast. Or, the very popular smoked brisket. Not to mention beef tenderloin, peppered beef, bacon or ham and dried sausage.

Most of Ranch House's meats are mesquite smoked. A process that's become a Texas tradition from when early cowboys discovered that the ugly little trees that grew on the prairies emitted a sweet, pungent aroma that permeated cuts of meat over its succulent smoke — and created an incomparable taste.

Ranch House also caters. They will deliver their special mesquite-smoked meats and scrumptious fresh-baked bread and set it up with a fresh vegetable tray. They also furnish mayonnaise, mustard, napkins, plates, etc. What a way to make an office party or get-together something to remember!

And, for parties of nine or more local delivery is free.

Looking for the ideal gift? Ranch House makes up baskets and boxes. What a delicious way to remember a special occasion!

Ranch House is so proud of the products they offer in their store, they sell them with unconditional guarantees.

Also, if you're anywhere near the Loop at lunch time, stop in for a delicious sandwich — and the home-cooked soup of the day. A real noontime pick-me-up!

Ranch House is located at 3001 W. Loop in Midland Plaza just south of Service Merchandise. Call 699-0695 for information.

Springtime is auto check time at Chaparral Wash & Lube

"They do good work, that's why I've been coming here for seven years," says satisfied Chaparral customer Bill Campbell. With Spring just around the corner, he recently stopped by Chaparral Wash & Lube for a basic maintenance check. Experienced technicians then scrutinized, hoses, belts, air conditioning system, antifreeze and freon levels and gave his automobiles a general check-up. If necessary they tighten hoses and belts and replenish fluids.

Since opening in 1984, Chaparral Wash & Lube Center has enjoyed a well-earned reputation for the best car wash and oil change service in Midland. A strong commitment to meticulous attention to detail from long-time employees are Chaparral trademarks.

The Chaparral Lube Center carries major brands of oil, including Pennzoil, Quaker State and Havoline. Prices for the oil change and lube range from $18.50 to $23.50. For those who prefer using synthetic oils such as Mobil One, the price is $36.50

A free car wash is included with each oil change. Those who are in a rush or notice threatening clouds overhead receive a car wash rain check for use at a later date.

Also included with the oil change is a thorough examination under the hood. Technicians check battery, power steering, transmission and windshield washer fluids.

As part of this service, these fluids are replenished, if needed. For an additional charge, technicians install transmission oil, freon, light bulbs and windshield wiper refills.

A regular maintenance schedule at Chaparral Wash & Lube is good insurance against expensive car trouble in the future. Owner Leon Jeffcoat recommends a minimum maintenance schedule of every 3,000 miles or every three months. A reminder sticker is placed on the inside of the windshield.

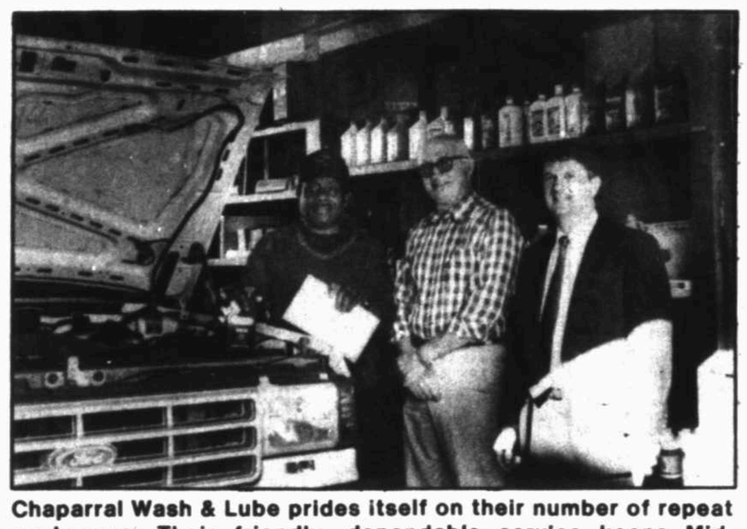

Visits to Chaparral also mean personal service from dedicated employees. Among them are lube center technician C.C. Banks, car wash detail supervisor Guillermo Portillo and detail specialist Gilbert Guiterrez. These men, who take pride in their work, have a combination of more than 20 years of experience with Chaparral.

A full-service car wash, which includes a wash by gentle cleansers, chamois brushes and soft water is just $7.95. Add wax for $2. Washes for standard vans and Suburbans are $2 more. Vacuuming, hand-drying and window cleaning are included in the low price.

A great timesaver: customers having their car washed can have the tank filled with Texaco gasoline and receive a discount toward the wash. More than 18 gallons means a free wash.

Chaparral also offers the advantage of a professionally administered detail job. It includes spraying the engine to remove oil and grime, a thorough cleaning under the hood, hand waxing, carpet and upholstery shampooing, interior dash and door treatment and tire treatment. Prices for this service start at $59.00.

Chaparral Wash & Lube Center is located at the corner of Big Spring and Scharbauer. Texaco, Visa, MasterCard, American Express and Discover cards are welcome. Hours are 8 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. Monday through Friday. On Saturdays Chaparral is open 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. Call 682-8013 for more information.

U.S. agency faults Oregon's touted health-care system

By Robert Pear
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — A congressional research agency has criticized Oregon's novel effort to ration health care by ranking all services according to their costs and benefits.

The agency, the Congressional Office of Technology Assessment, said in a confidential draft of a report to be issued this spring that the rankings were largely subjective and would deprive some low-income people of Medicaid services to which they are now entitled.

Overall, the OTA, which advises Congress on scientific questions, said it had "serious reservations" about Oregon's project.

Oregon's effort to restrain health costs and improve access to care has attracted more interest and generated more debate than any other state's efforts. It has been cited by Bush administration officials as an example of the state experimentation that they wish to encourage.

Sen. Al Gore Jr., D-Tenn., has described the debate over Oregon's plan as "the single most important debate on the future of health care in the United States."

Oregon's rationing plan is "superficially attractive to many state legislatures," confronted with soaring health costs and millions of people needing insurance, he said.

Oregon would expand Medicaid to cover all state residents below the poverty level, which was $10,857 for a family of three last year. But it would reduce the level of services, refusing to pay for medical treatments that rank below No. 587 on a list of 709 medical procedures.

The OTA said the technique used by Oregon to set priorities for health services was "not an especially promising approach." In ranking various treatments, Oregon considered their cost in relation to their effectiveness. It also weighed their contribution, if any, to a patient's quality of life and to the well-being of society.

Under current law, children under the age of 21 are entitled to all medically necessary services if they are enrolled in Medicaid. Under the Oregon plan, there is no minimum set of benefits.

The OTA said the lack of a guaranteed set of benefits was "the most disturbing aspect of Oregon's proposal."

For instance, the report said that under Oregon's plan the state Medicaid program would no longer have to pay for the treatment of viral pneumonia, viral hepatitis, chronic bronchitis, certain types of asthma or certain back sprains because the treatments rank below line 587 on the list.

Nor would it have to pay for treating cancer when doctors concluded that a patient had less than a 10 percent chance of surviving for five years or more.

"Some common medically necessary pediatric services would not be covered," and it is unclear whether children with ailments like viral pneumonia would receive the treatment they need, the report said.

Oregon's Medicaid director, Jean I. Thorne, defended the state's program and said the OTA's criticism was based on speculation about the worst possible consequences. She said the list of 709 services looked subjective because it "incorporates value judgments" of Oregonians.

State officials were allowed to review an earlier draft of the report, which was then revised to take account of their comments. The latest draft is still being reviewed by outside experts, with publication expected this spring.

The OTA was created in 1972. It operates under a bipartisan board composed of six senators, six House members and the office director, Dr. John H. Gibbons, a physicist who has led the agency since 1979.

The OTA, widely praised as technically proficient and politically neutral, has issued reports on such topics as nuclear weapons, cancer rates, toxic wastes, lie detectors and government computers.

Oregon wants to begin its new health program in July, but it needs permission from the federal Department of Health and Human Services to disregard certain requirements of the federal Medicaid law. Members of Congress from Oregon have been lobbying the administration to approve the state's request, formally submitted on Aug. 16, 1991.

The new report says Oregon underestimated the cost of its program and may have to reduce benefits in the future by eliminating coverage of many beneficial treatments, with "significant and measurable" harm to Medicaid recipients.

A minor change in the cutoff line could, for example, mean that Medicaid would no longer cover birth defects like spina bifida, for which there are well-accepted treatments.

The federal government and the states share the cost of Medicaid. In Oregon, the federal government pays 63 percent of benefit costs, and the state pays the remainder.

Oregon estimated that its experimental program would increase federal Medicaid spending by $110 million over five years because it would eventually add 119,000 people to the 220,000 now on the rolls.

A new Oregon law would protect doctors against lawsuits for failure to provide medically necessary services to Medicaid patients if the state decided not to pay for them.

The report said the state law could violate an indigent beneficiary's right to pursue legal remedies following the denial or termination of treatment by a doctor or a hospital.

Oregon plans to enroll most welfare recipients in health maintenance organizations and other forms of "managed care," under which doctors coordinate care for patients in return for a monthly fee, set in advance.

Oregon says this will save money by reducing hospital admissions and use of emergency rooms.

The OTA said this arrangement might create a financial incentive for doctors to provide too little care because they could keep money not spent on services to patients.

In his State of the Union message last month, President Bush said he would help states test new social welfare programs by "waiving certain federal regulations."

Thomas A. Scully, associate director of the Office of Management and Budget, commended Oregon for devising a "bold and innovative" program.

White House eases regulation of genetically altered products

By Philip J. Hilts
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — The White House on Monday issued a new government policy on biotechnology products, saying that genetically engineered products are not dangerous in themselves and should not get too much scrutiny from federal regulators.

The new statement is intended to spur the biotechnology industry and keep federal regulators from singling out these products for extra regulatory procedures.

It would put the stamp of policy on practices that have been evolving in the federal agencies for years, assuring that fewer and fewer biotechnology products need special approval to release new organisms in the world.

Bush said Monday: "I am announcing major new ground rules for regulation of biotechnology. This $4 billion industry should grow to $50 billion by the end of the decade — if we let it. The United States leads the world in biotechnology and I intend to keep it that way."

Federal regulations that govern genetically engineered pesticides and other toxic chemicals are being written, but have been stalled, at least partly because the overarching policy statement issued Monday was not final.

It contains few specifics but will serve as guidance to regulatory agencies and the basis for the Vice President's Council on Competitiveness to intercede if regulations of biotechnology companies get too "burdensome to business," in the language of White House staff.

The new policy covers all uses of genetically altered organisms or products, from crops to medicines. In the past it has taken many years — up to five or six in some cases — to pass these products through the unmarked and often shifting regulatory minefield.

Even after some years of trying to make the process quicker, the average time remains more than three years from the first notification of the government to its final approval.

Among the genetically engineered products now coming along is a tomato plant with a special gene inserted; the gene destroys one of the enzymes that makes the plant ripen, so that although tomatoes can be matured on the vine, they will not soften and shrivel until long after they are shipped to stores

Another promising product is a cotton plant that biologists have equipped with its own natural pesticide by inserting a bacterial gene that makes a product toxic to insects.

Despite the promise of such products, critics have worried about the dangers of introducing novel organisms into the environment, arguing that some might run riot if unrestrained by natural enemies, like the gypsy moth. Defenders of the policy have countered that adding a few genes of known purpose is unlikely to change a familiar species into an Andromeda strain.

Officials of the Environmental Protection Agency who asked to remain unnamed said that the new policy was better than previous drafts, which threatened to cancel current law governing biotechnology products.

The thrust of the new policy is that genetically engineered products should not be assumed to be inherently dangerous, and that regulation "should be based on evidence that the risk presented by introduction of an organism in a particular environment used for a particular type of application is unreasonable."

It also says that organisms that are only slightly different from their parent organisms — a category that includes the vast majority of products so far proposed — need not be regulated more than the parent organisms.

Read strictly, these rules could leave current regulation unchanged or provide companies grounds for challenging almost any regulation.

"If that is the best they can do, I'm disappointed," said Rebecca Goldburg, senior scientist at the Environmental Defense Fund. "The vagueness is enough for the Council on Competitiveness to do what it wants, to rewrite any regulation."

The new policy statement, written by the staff of the Council and of Vice President Dan Quayle, puts an official end to a federal debate on one major topic: whether biotechnology products need special oversight from the government because they fundamentally alter living organisms.

Allen Goldhammer, head of the Industrial Biotechnology Association, a major trade group for biotechnology companies, said the policy was "an important step after years of debate."

Industry has anxiously awaited new regulatory rules in the area so that companies can be sure of what products will be regulated and what safety tests will be required.

Important revisions of two major regulatory laws, governing pesticides and toxic chemicals, may be issued soon, now that biotechnology policy has been set.

Under these laws, a company introducing a new biotechnology product must notify the proper regulatory agency — the EPA, the Agriculture Department or the Food and Drug Administration — and then submit safety data.

Testing the first such products in the mid-1980s met with such opposition that a product called ice-minus, intended to increase strawberries' tolerance to frost, was sprayed by scientists dressed in protective "moon suits" under the glared of television lights.

That era is ended, and now the government would likely not ask for data on such products. It would merely accept notification of a small-scale experiment and look more closely when the product is ready for wider experiments.

Of the 70 or so new organisms or engineered products released into the environment over the past eight years, all had careful scrutiny and submission of substantial safety data.

Now, one federal official said, no more than three or four of those products would undergo such scrutiny. Monday's policy makes that posture official.

The new policy states: "Although the new biotechnology processes can be used to produce risky organisms, so can traditional techniques; it is the characteristics of the organism, the environment, and the application that determine risk (or lack thereof) of the introduction into the environment.
