Reagan orders another round of budget cuts

LOS ANGELES (AP) — President Reagan, struggling to control the federal deficit in the face of persistent high interest rates, is ordering a new wave of budget cuts which may wipe out whole government agencies.

The new cuts for the 1982 fiscal year, which starts next month, would be over and above $35.2 billion in reductions already approved by Congress, $14 billion still being sought by the administration and $75 billion planned for 1983 and 1984 in the drive to balance the federal budget.

And that still may not be enough to hold the 1982 deficit to the $42.5 billion promised by Reagan, administration officials say.

"That is still our goal," deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes said Tuesday as Reagan prepared to end his month-long California vacation and fly east today. "But we have to face reality."

Some senior administration officials, who declined to be identified, said that without further cuts the deficit could soar above $60 billion.

In Milwaukee, budget director David A. Stockman said the administration would unveil its latest plan in a week or so.

He said a possibility was the wholesale elimination of federal agencies and further cuts in the federal work force. CBS reported Tuesday that 70,000 to 80,000 federal jobs would be eliminated.

The Chicago Tribune quoted administration sources today as saying that from 80,000 to 100,000 positions would be cut, with the departments of education and energy bearing the brunt.

Responding to a question from South Dakota Gov. Bill Janklow at a Midwestern governors meeting, Stockman said, "We are going to announce some changes in federal employment levels and agency termination levels that will warm your hearts, even in the middle of winter in South Dakota."

Ed Dale, an Office of Management and Budget spokesman, refused to say how much more would be cut from the budget but said every agency would be vulnerable.

"The president is going to take a sharp knife on these 1982 budgets in order to hold the line," Speakes said. "We realize it's going to be a difficult job."

He said Reagan would be looking for further savings in already hard-hit social programs and probably would make cuts "across the board" in every department and agency.

Earlier, White House chief of staff James A. Baker III said Reagan had agreed to trim $20 billion to $30 billion from his record military spending plans for 1983 and 1984. Another $45 billion would be cut in those years from already-pared social programs.

Speakes said Reagan will hold a Cabinet meeting in Washington on Sept. 10 to consider the budget cuts.

The flaw in Reagan's budget plans, Speakes said, is the persistence of higher-than-expected interest rates.

He said the Office of Management and Budget has not formally changed its projections, but "certainly we recognize that the assumptions that OMB made with regard to interest rates are under-estimated and that the interest is making it difficult to meet that $42.5 billion goal."

While the administration estimated an average interest rate of 13.6 percent this year, the rate on three-month Treasury bills now is 15.6 percent. For 1982, the Reagan administration is predicting a 10.5 percent rate on the three-month bills, but congressional experts say it will be closer to 12.8 percent.

For every 1 percent increase in interest rates, the government spends an estimated $4 billion to pay off its debt.

Reagan spent a quiet day Tuesday at the Century Plaza Hotel and prepared to leave today for Chicago to address a convention of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners, an AFL-CIO affiliated union. He is due to return to Washington on Thursday.

Soviets captured, killed in Angola

CAPE TOWN, South Africa (AP) — South Africa captured a Soviet sergeant major and killed two Soviet lieutenant colonels during its Angolan invasion, a Defense Ministry spokesman said today.

In a telephone interview from Pretoria, the spokesman said Sgt. Maj. Nikolai Fyodorovich Pestretsov, who was earlier identifed as a warrant officer, was captured during a skirmish in Angola about 30 miles north of the South-West African border.

The spokesman, who asked not to be identified, did not provide names of the slain Soviet officers or details of their deaths.

He said more than half of the South African forces in Angola had been withdrawn and the rest would be pulled out "according to schedule." He could not say when the troops would return to South-West Africa because they were "still having problems with land mines."

An informed source estimated that the force totaled 4,000 when the invasion began Aug. 24.

South Africa's defense minister said Tuesday that the Soviet casualties in Angola prove the Namibian guerrillas are controlled and supported by the Soviet Union.

"There can be no doubt that the terrorist organization SWAPO is controlled by and given ideological and material support by the Soviet Union," said Defense Minister Magnus Malan in a statement.

"Earlier, it was generally believed and acclaimed that Soviet Russia was only indirectly involved, but now the opposite has been proved, namely the direct involvement of military personnel on the lower levels of terrorist movements."

SWAPO is the South-West Africa Peoples Organization, which has been fighting a bush war for 15 years to try to end South Africa's control of South-West Africa, or Namibia, as the big territory between South Africa and Angola is called by black Africa and the United Nations.

South African forces make periodic raids into Angola to attack SWAPO bases there.

U.S.S.R., East Germany have 'advisers' in Angola

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Soviet Union and East Germany have established a "heavy presence" in Angola with 1,000 advisers assisting both the Angolan army and Namibian rebels, a senior Reagan administration official says.

The official said he has no reason to doubt a report by South African military authorities that their soldiers killed and captured Soviet military advisers during a raid last week.

While the advisers have been in Angola for some time, the official said the encounter with South Africans is the first indication that the Soviets are advising Angolan troops and Namibian rebels of the South-West Africa People's Organization at the "platoon level."

"I think 1,000 advisers, Soviet and East German advisers, is a fairly heavy presence in the context of that country and the situation," said the official, who briefed reporters Tuesday on condition he not be identified.

He said the presence of the advisers, coupled with a South African military buildup in the region, creates "an explosive combination."

The advisers are in addition to between 15,000 and 19,000 Cuban troops who have been entrenched in Marxist-oriented Angola for years, despite intense U.S. pressures to have them withdrawn.

The Soviets clearly are trying to take advantage of the turmoil in the region caused in part by the fighting over Namibia, a predominantly black territory under the control of South Africa, the official said.

He said the Soviets are a major arms supplier to Angola and some of the arms are turning up in the hands of Namibian rebels.

The Reagan administration, which has been accused by some black African nations of scuttling an earlier agreement for Namibian independence, plans to introduce "concrete proposals" soon for a new independence formula, according to the official.

Strikers to pay visit to Midland control tower

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Midland's 15 remaining members of Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization returned to the Midland Regional Airport control tower this morning, but only to pick up their personal belongings.

Almost a month has passed since Midland's controllers walked off their jobs from the tower to join PATCO's nationwide strike which President Reagan declared illegal. Reagan gave an ultimatum to all PATCO members to either return to work or be fired.

Of Midland's original 18 PATCO striking controllers, two returned to the tower, 15 have received their official notices of dismissal, and one controller, who was eligible, opted to retire. All those who have received the dismissal notices are currently appealing the decision.

"Today, the controllers, who have been dismissed from their jobs, will be returning to the facility to turn in their accountable property and remove their personal effects," said Bill Hill, Federal Aviation Administration control tower chief.

According to Tommy Urps, secretary-treasurer of PATCO Local 428, this is the final process "as far as checking out goes."

"We're giving back our I.D. cards, government driver's licenses, sunglasses and other stuff," Urps said.

He added this was also a time to do the necessary paperwork for accumulated annual leave and retirement compensation.

"In my case, they (FAA) owe me for 18 back-hours of annual leave, worth about $280," Urps said. "But some guys have several hundred hours coming to them."

In updating the rebuilding of the tower work force, Hill said the facility will be receiving four more controllers, bringing the number to 14 in the tower.

When the strike began Aug. 3., Hill and his FAA three-member staff operated the tower until additional work force was available.

Within a week after the strike and since that time, the contingency plan to rebuild the work force has been active, according to Hill.

In addition to the four FAA supervisors plus two returning Midland PATCO striker-controllers, more controllers, who were part of the bargaining unit but chose not to strike, have been brought in — two from Lubbock, four from Amarillo and two from Plainview.

"In the future, we will be receiving four military air traffic controllers, but the duration of their assignment is unknown at this time," Hill said.

He added the tower crew is "gradually getting back to a normal schedule," with the current controllers working six days a week and eight-hour shifts

Khadafy threatens to attack depots

TRIPOLI, Libya (AP) — Libyan leader Moammar Khadafy threatened to attack American nuclear arms depots around the Mediterranean if the U.S. Navy again challenges his control of the disputed Gulf of Sidra.

"We are warning the peoples of Sicily, Crete, Turkey and all the states of the Mediterranean that if America again attacks the Gulf of Sidra, then we will intentionally attack the nuclear depots in their countries and cause an international catastrophe," Khadafy declared in a speech Tuesday on the 12th anniversary of his overthrow of King Idris.

"We are willing to die for the Gulf of Sidra," he declared. "We will make the Gulf of Sidra into a new Red Sea with our blood."

It was over the disputed gulf some 50 miles off the Libyan coast that two U.S. Navy jet fighters shot down two Libyan fighters that fired on them during Navy maneuvers on Aug. 19. The Reagan administration held the maneuvers in the northern part of the gulf as a challenge to Khadafy's eight-year-old claim, which no other nation recognizes.

Khadafy also told a crowd of 25,000 in Tripoli's Green Square Libya will not lower its oil price under any circumstances, even though its production and revenues are way off because of the worldwide oil glut.

"Maybe we won't sell our oil for one, two or three years," he said, "and we will live in austerity for this period, but we will never kneel."

Diplomatic sources estimate Libyan oil revenues for the second half of 1981 at $4 billion to $5 billion, compared to $8 billion in the second half of 1980.

The North African nation, which sells about 475,000 barrels a day to the United States, charges $40 a barrel for its high-grade oil, the highest price in the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries. Algeria and Nigeria also charged $40, and there were predictions that Libya and Algeria would be forced to come down after Nigeria cut its price to $36 a barrel last week.

Khadafy also attacked President Reagan in his speech, saying "He was a failure as an actor, and now he is a failure as a president. I am surprised he leads the greatest state in the world."

The anniversary celebration included a three-hour military review during which Soviet-built tanks and missiles rumbled past the reviewing stand and air force planes bought from the Soviet Union flew overhead.

23 appeals court justices sworn in

By GARTH JONES
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Texas' new court system of appealing criminal cases to 14 Courts of Appeals throughout the state began Tuesday with the swearing in of 23 new justices for the intermediate courts.

The new justices, all appointed by Gov. Bill Clements as authorized by the 1981 Legislature, join the justices already serving on the 14 former Courts of Civil Appeals.

Texas Supreme Court Chief Justice Joe Greenhill told the appointees the new appeals system was "the most advance step forward for the Texas judiciary in 100 years."

Greenhill administered the oath.

"I assure you, you were chosen on your merit, on the quality of the person involved," said Clements.

Clements said he knew only two of the judges before they were appointed. All must approved by the Texas Senate when it meets again.

Making Texas' 14 Courts of Civil Appeals into a system of intermediate courts of appeals was approved by voters in a 1980 state constitution change. Formerly, all appeals of criminal cases went direct from district courts to the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals, which is swamped with a backlog of more than 3,000 cases.

Under the new system, approved by the 1981 Legislature and effective Tuesday, all appeals of both criminal and civil cases, except those punishable by death, will go to the new Courts of Appeals. The 14 courts are located in Amarillo, Austin, Beaumont, Corpus Christi, Dallas, Eastland, El Paso, Fort Worth, Houston (2), San Antonio, Texarkana, Tyler and Waco.

Appeals justices sworn in Tuesday included; James D. Baskin, San Antonio; Sam Bass Jr., Freeport; John T. Boyd, Plainview; Richard Lee Brown, Fort Worth; Shirley W. Butts, San Antonio; Antonio Cantu, San An Antonio; John E. Clark, San Antonio; Lee Duggan, Houston; Joe Fish, Dallas; Raul A. Gonzalez, Brownsville; Patrick C. Guillot, Dallas; Dixon W. Holman, Arlington; Walter E. Jordan, Fort Worth; Noah Kennedy, Corpus Christi; Robert E. Morse, Houston; Charles E. Price, Houston; Sam Robertson Sr., Houston; Charles R. Schulte, El Paso; Jon Sparling, Dallas; Allen Stilley, Houston; Norman Utter, Corpus Christi; John Vance, Dallas, and Warren Whitham, Dallas.

Justice James K. Allen, Dallas, was unable to attend Tuesday and was sworn in separately.

Welsh solicitor administer's Judge Allen's oath of office

LONDON (AP) — Judge James K. Allen of Dallas was sworn in Tuesday at Holyhead, North Wales, as a judge of the fifth district of the Texas Court of Appeals.

The oath was administered by a local solicitor, Daffyd Cwyfan Hughes.

Judge Allen was to have joined other judges in Austin for the swearing in. But he was carrying out a long-standing engagement in Holyhead for the Episcopal Church.

The judge told the London Times "The trouble is, my successor in the district court is unable to take office until I am a member of the court. And I cannot be a member of the court until I have taken the oath."

The oath may be heard by a foreign solicitor recognized by the U.S. Embassy and the only one in North Wales was Hughes' office in Holyhead. So in walked Judge Allen, with the legal papers in his pocket.

Hallettsville resident, Mrs. Thomas Galbreath begins clean-up operations in the town's business district Tuesday afternoon. At least five people lost their lives in the violent storms that swept across regions of South Texas Monday.

Rainfall ends, but flooding continues

The rain-swollen Lavaca and Guadalupe rivers chased South Texans to higher ground for a second day as they churned over their banks downstream from where floodwaters claimed the lives of at least five people.

In Cuero, the steadily rising Guadelupe River Tuesday flooded parts of the city about 80 miles southeast of San Antonio.

The National Weather Service said the Guadalupe River had fallen to 41.5 feet at Cuero early today. The river is at or near crest and should remain at or near 41.5 feet today.

At Victoria, the Guadalupe reached 30 feet early today and was expected to crest at 30.5 feet sometime Thursday.

Most of the heavy rainfall had ended before dawn today, but forecasters said the flooding would continue for some time.

"Several river additions are completely under water," said Dewitt County Sheriff Bob McMahan. "And some livestock have been lost down the river."

No injuries were reported and residents were warned in time to evacuate their homes and save most of their property, officials said.

Rampaging floods, triggered by a tropical depression that dumped up to 18 inches of rain over parts of South Texas, claimed five lives Monday, including three teen-age brothers.

Hundreds of evacuated residents in Gonzales and Lavaca counties returned home Tuesday to start massive cleanup operations and survey the damage from the muddy torrents.

Lavaca County Sheriff Hilmer Woytek said evacuated residents of a nursing home and county jail inmates remained in temporary shelters Tuesday in Hallettsville.

"We had 6 feet of water in the jail. It's the worst we've ever had," he said.

Cuero officials opened a center for evacuees early Tuesday afternoon, although most schools were able hold classes, said McMahan.

He said county jail inmates accompanied sheriff's officials to help families move valuables and furniture.

Most residents in Lavaca County, where flooding was most severe, had no flood insurance, officials said.

"Fifty or 60 homes were flooded here," said Shiner city secretary Ila Stratman. "That water's a bad thing. Flood insurance is so terribly high anad hardly any company will write it (for areas near rivers).

Three Shiner youths drowned Monday when fast-rising waters swept away a home where they had taken refuge, officials said.

Gregory Hights, 16, said his three brothers were carried away by swirling waters that demolished their mobile home.

Hights said he and his brothers, Glenn, 17, Johnnie, 15, and Bradford, 12, had gone to a nearby frame house after their mobile home was flooded out early Monday morning.

Hights and his 15-year-old brother crawled onto the roof before the murky water carried the house downstream, tearing it apart, he said.

"I was with Johnnie on the roof when he fell off," Hights said. "He was calling my name. He said, 'Greg, Greg,' — I couldn't do anything."

The 16-year-old survivor was found clinging to a tree by rescuers who had tried in vain to reach all four youths before the house was swept away.

Authorities said the bodies of Samuel Goode, 27, of Hallettsville, and Herman Rayne of Yoakum were discovered Tuesday morning near flooded Rocky Creek.

Lavaca County Sheriff's officials said the two men were in separate vehicles and were swept away while trying to cross the rain-swollen creek on U.S. Highway 77.

Forecasts called for mostly cloudy skies over the state today with scattered showers and thunderstorms expected over Southwest Texas, South Central Texas and East Texas.

Highs were to be mostly in the 80s and 90s except in the Big Bend area where highs were to be near 100.

Most of the heavy rainfall in southern and southeastern sections of the state ended before dawn today, but a few showers lingered in Southwest Texas near San Angelo and heavy thunderstorms developed in North Texas, north of the Dallas-Fort Worth area. Dense fog was reported in Northeast Texas.

Midland escapes heavy rains

The chance of rain for Midland and the surrounding area has dissipated for the next couple of days. With only a trace of rain recorded Tuesday night at the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport, the area has escaped the heavy rains that plagued much of the state during the past few days.

The forecast calls for partly cloudy skies tonight and Thursday with a little warmer temperatures on Tuesday afternoon. The low tonight will be in the middle 60s with the mercury climbing into the lower 90s on Thursday.

Winds will be southeasterly 5-10 mph tonight, becoming southerly 10-15 mph Thursday.

Tuesday's high of 86 was almost 20 degrees cooler than the record high of 107 set on that date in 1959. Wednesday's low of 68 was 12 degrees warmer than the record low of 56 set in 1968.

Jewelry taken from residence

Police Roundup

In theft and burglary complaints to city police during the past 24 hours, Pat Black of 3043 Fredna Place said a camera, assorted jewelry and four cassette tapes were taken in a burglary of his residence. There was no sign of forced entry.

An employee of Gulf Service Station, 3301 W. Illinois Ave., told officers $300 was missing from a safe at the station. The theft occurred sometime over the weekend.

And Ralph J. Brown of the Midland Inn, 3302 W. Front St., reported the disappearance of four guns from his room. There was no sign of forced entry. Total loss was placed at $1,030.

Midland chapter of Red Cross sends disaster team to Texas flood area

Midland Chapter of the American Red Cross is sending its disaster canteen to Hallettsville in South Texas to aid victims and workers in the flood area.

The canteen was to leave at 5 a.m. today, driven by Donna Curb, who has experience as a Red Cross worker in disasters.

The vehicle is equipped to serve food and beverages to large numbers of people, according to Elvis Curb, director of the Midland Red Cross chapter.

Midland County, he explained, is part of the North Texas Division, which is centered in Dallas. "They called us asking for the canteen and for someone to take it down there. There's a fairly large Red Cross operation being geared up for South Texas."

Red Cross, a United Way agency, will accept contributions to aid the South Texas disaster relief effort at the office, 2306 Elizabeth, or P.O. Box 1706, 79702.

Tropical storm hits Bermuda

MIAMI (AP) — Tropical storm Emily brought thundershowers, rough seas and squalls to Bermuda today, but forecasters said the storm posed no threat to the U.S. mainland.

The fifth tropical storm of the 1981 hurricane season, which was born Tuesday over the Atlantic Ocean southwest of Bermuda, moved northeasterly at less than 10 mph.

"The storm is out at sea and is moving very slowly. It's out in the middle of the ocean, affecting only Bermuda," said forecaster Joe Pelliser at the National Hurricane Center here. He said the storm "could get a little stronger," but was not expected to.

Emily's top winds were about 55 mph. The Hurricane Center said the tropical storm's gale winds and rain covered a broad area spanning several hundred miles.

At 6 a.m. EDT today, the center was just north of Bermuda near latitude 33.0 north and longitude 65.0 west.

Emily began forming from a low-pressure system in the western Atlantic on Saturday and slowly strengthened over the weekend.

U.S. Rep. Jim Collins

Collins likes West Texas political waters

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Congressman Jim Collins, R-Dallas, came to the Midland-Odessa area Tuesday to "test-the-water" for a possible bid for the U.S. Senate.

The senate seat is now held by Democrat Lloyd Bentsen, but according to Collins, "It's time for a conservative to challenge a liberal."

Collins, an eight-term Republican lawmaker, has been touring Texas cities in an effort to gain support for this challenge. In an interview at a reception in the home of Frances Metcalf on Tuesday afternoon, Collins said he would have more flexibility on the national level in the Senate, and "in order to maintain control, Republicans need to win more seats in the Senate."

He cited the liberal 1960s and '70s as the key to making America realize that spending has skyrocketed, resulting in 15 percent inflation and 21 percent interest rates.

He added that Bentsen has been the "biggest spender Texas has ever had in Congress," and he plans to change that.

"Texas needs to lead the way; we're the progressive state, the private enterprise," Collins said. "And for this reason, this is the time for a conservative to challenge a liberal."

Collins said there has been an excellent reaction to his tour across Texas. And he added that he was "really excited about being in Midland — oil country."

The former insurance company executive said he believes in the free enterprise system, and he visited with Midland Republican leaders and independent conservatives to explain his future plans.

He has been elected from his Dallas district for the past 16 years on his consistent platform: less government, less regulation and less taxation.

"We've got more government than we need. We've got more regulations than we want, and we've got more taxes than Americans can afford to pay," Collins said.

East Texas land bids stir up local controversy

By LEE JONES
Associated Press Writer

BRENHAM, Texas (AP) — Bidding to lease 12,700 acres of West Texas land dedicated to Washington County schools has stirred up a controversy involving a number of local officials, including County Judge Gus Mutscher, the former Texas House speaker.

District Attorney Charles Sebesta said Tuesday he figures a grand jury investigation into the leasing should conclude by the end of September.

Mutscher calls the investigation, sought by a potential opponent in next year's elections, politically motivated.

"The main thing I am concerned with is to see everyone involved gets a fair shake," Sebesta said in a telephone interview.

The controversy arose when the county commissioners court voted in July to lease the county's school land in Tom Green County to somebody other than the high bidder.

"The mechanics of the way the thing was handled are the greatest problem. Whether it was intentional or criminal, I don't know. That's what the grand jury is for," Sebesta said.

He said a minimum of 10 or 12 people would be called to testify, including bidders on the land lease.

"I would like to wrap it up by the 30th of the month," he said.

Republican lawyer Bill Neinast, who plans to run against Mutscher for Washington County judge next year, requested the investigation, Sebesta said.

San Angelo cattleman Hanie Ivey, who had sub-leased the land from the current lease-holder, won a seven-year grazing lease for $433,054. San Saba Mayor Jack Miller said he entered a higher bid.

"I think it was the second highest bid," Sebesta said of the winning bid.

Mutscher, who became county judge after completing probation for a felony conviction of conspiracy to accept a bribe when he was House speaker in 1970, called the investigation "a poisoning of the judicial system" for political purposes.

The Brenham Banner-Press quoted Mutscher as saying, "Some people may not agree with our decision but that doesn't mean anything was illegal or the grand jury has any role in the matter."

Sebesta said it would be unfair to say Mutscher was a particular target of the inquiry. He said he did not know whether Mutscher even cast a vote on the lease.

"There's just a bunch of people involved — school boards, bidders, the county attorney. ... Gus is just one person involved in the process," he said.

Sebesta said the Washington County school lands in Tom Green County are worth anywhere from $12 million to $20 million, and some people in Washington County think the acreage should be sold and the money invested.

He said part of the problem in the lease to Ivey was the commissioners issued no specifications for bidders to follow — "One could bid on it for seven years, five years, three years. You could bid on cultivation, grazing, hunting rights."

Woman loses custody, found unconscious

HOUSTON (AP) — A woman found unconscious just hours after a judge ordered her sons returned to their father in New York was listed in critical condition at a Houston hospital early today from an apparent drug overdose, hospital officials said.

Family Court Judge Bruce Wettman ordered Harriet Berne to surrender custody of her two sons Tuesday in a case that may have been the first test of a new federal law controlling the interstate flight of estranged parents with their children.

Houston fire department paramedic Walton Segree said he found the woman lying unconscious on her living room floor with three empty pill bottles nearby. Fire department dispatchers said they received a call from a man who reported an overdose.

Mrs. Berne had left Rochester, N.Y., with her sons two years ago despite a ruling by a New York court that gave custody of the children to her ex-husband, Dale Berne, 43.

Mrs. Berne, 37, was free on $5,000 bond pending an extradition hearing Thursday. She faces a state charge of custodial interference in New York and a federal charge of unlawful flight.

She was arrested last week in Houston, where she has lived and taught school since 1979 using the name Judy King, when police acted on a tip from a babysitter who recognized the boys' pictures in a magazine article about children kidnapped by their parents.

Berne said the arrest ended his two-year search for the couple's two sons.

Wettman said Tuesday he felt he had no choice but to return the children to their father.

"I felt like my hands were pretty well tied in what direction I had to take," he said.

Scott Berne, 11, tried to reassure his 7-year-old brother, Mark, who asked, "Can I say bye to my mother."

Scott asked the judge, "Are we going to see her again?"

"Obviously the boys were upset," Wettman said. "It was probably the hardest job of the whole mess to see those kids. It will take time, but I feel they understand what happened, even though they are not real happy with it."

Income limit set for student loans

WASHINGTON (AP) — A public college student whose family earns more than $33,875 a year will be denied guaranteed federal loans, for the most part, under new curbs which take effect Oct. 1.

The income cutoff for loans for students attending the average four-year college is $46,375, according to figures obtained Monday from the Education Department.

In both cases, the figures assume the student comes from a family of four and is the only child in college. If more than one child is in college or the family is larger, the income eligibility limits for the loans are much higher.

The College Board on Sunday reported that the average cost this fall of tuition, fees, room, board and other expenses will be $6,885 at private four-year colleges and $3,873 at public four-year colleges.

Since 1978, students have been able to borrow up to $2,500 under the Guaranteed Student Loan program regardless of family income or college cost. Congress recently reimposed an income limit to hold down the spiraling costs of the program.

Starting Oct. 1, students whose adjusted gross family income is $30,000 or more — including the students' and parents' salary, interest and dividends — will have to pass a needs test to be able to get one of the subsidized loans.

The Guaranteed Student Loan policy office in the education department gave the following examples. All apply to a family of four:

—At the public college costing $3,873, with one child in college, the maximum loan for a student with family income of $30,000 is $1,373; those from families below the $30,000 ceiling can borrow $2,500. The minimum loan of $1,000 is limited to those with income between $30,000 and $33,875. Families earning more than that figure are ineligible for the program.

—If both children attend that public college, each can borrow the maximum $2,500 if the family income is no more than $31,375; each can borrow the minimum $1,000 if the family income is no more than $47,625.

—At the private college costing $6,885, with one child in college, the student can borrow $2,500 if family income is less than $37,875; the cutoff for the minimum $1,000 loan is $46,375.

—With both children attending that private college, each can borrow $2,500 if the family income is less than $57,626. The cutoff for the minimum $1,000 loan is $79,375.

Guatemalan says communism ruining nation

WASHINGTON — Guatemalan Ambassador Felipe Doroteo Monterroso says his country is slowly defeating a 2-year-old guerrilla offensive, but the Guatemalan economy is staggering under an internal and external communist assault that has shattered tourist trade, depleted reserves and curbed economic growth.

"They are trying to isolate us and destroy our economy and are succeeding," he said. "They are getting what they want. They are destabilizing our country."

As evidence of the decline, he cited the rapid drop in Guatemala's external debt to $931 million, the skid in foreign exchange reserves from $900 million in 1979 to $700 million in 1980 and $538 million -- only a three-month reserve -- in January of this year, and a decline in the economic growth rate from 7.1 percent in 1979 to 4.1 percent in 1980.

"The tourist industry is also way off," he said in an interview.

"Three years ago our hotels had 90 percent usage, particularly by U.S. tourists. Now we are down to 60 percent."

He blamed the worldwide economic slowdown for part of this but maintained the atmosphere of political instability -- which he said was created by the military situation, insurrection and worldwide propaganda campaign against his country -- was the main cause.

Guatemala, largest of the five Central American nations, has had problems with Marxist guerrillas since 1960, had them virtually stamped out several times, began to suffer from increased activity in the mid-1970s and was hit with a slowly accelerating offensive two years ago that now has become a full-fledged insurrection.

Monterroso, calling this a "well-planned, professional, coordinated effort," charged the offensive was created in Cuba with the help of the Soviet Union and the new Marxist government in Nicaragua. He said Guatemala has the documentary evidence to prove it.

As in El Salvador, also under Marxist guerrilla attack, he said, the communist master plan was captured in a clash with insurgent forces in the Department (province) of Quiche in western Guatemala in February.

Copies of the document, made available in March, told of plans for three previously warring guerrilla groups, the Guerrilla Army of the Poor, the Armed Rebel Forces and Guatemala Workers' Party, to join forces in an all-out effort to topple the government and establish a communist regime.

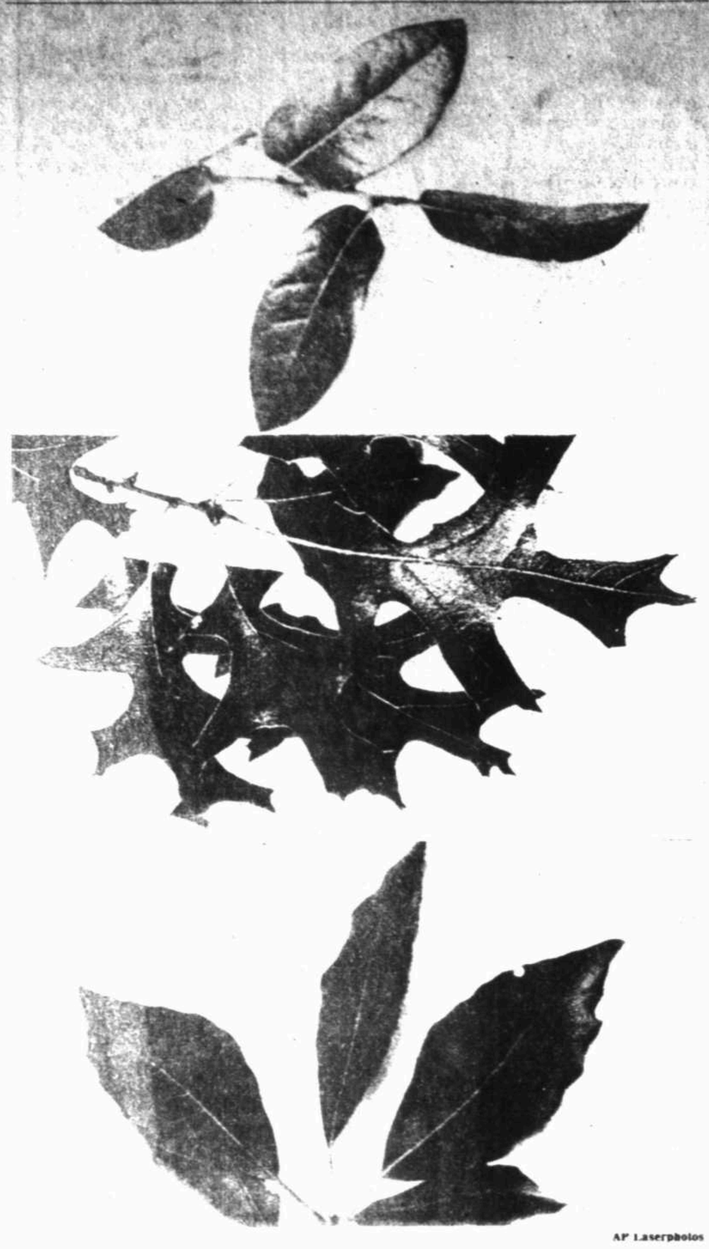
Diseases threatening oaks



AP Laserphotos

These leaves represent the varieties of oak in the Texas Hill Country threatened by oak wilt and oak decline. From top are Live Oak, Spanish Oak and Holly Oak. Horticulturists say the two virulent disease could spread in coming years.

By ALLAN TURNER
San Antonio Light

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Two virulent tree diseases are reaching epidemic proportions in the Texas Hill Country, stripping hillsides of oaks and live oaks, threatening real estate values and endangering magnificent shade trees in the San Antonio area.

Experts liken the diseases — oak wilt and oak decline — to Dutch elm disease, which killed more than 90 percent of the elm trees in the East and Midwestern United States. They have warned San Antonio residents to limit the planting of vulnerable species.

"Some of these oak trees were here when Columbus was still sailing on the ocean," said Rein Vander Zee, county judge of hard-hit Bandera County. "Some people say that these trees dying is God's will. Well, if God willed them to live 200 years, why should they die now?"

Kerr, Bandera and Gillespie counties are most seriously affected by the fungus diseases, but cases have also been reported in Bexar, Comal and Medina counties. And, said Bexar County Horticulturist Steve George, within five years "we'll all be sickeningly familiar with oak decline."

Already, near Comfort, said Dr. Jerrall Johnson, a plant pathologist at Texas A&M University, entire hillsides have been stripped of living trees. "Without the trees," he said, "all real estate people have to sell is a lot of short grass and caliche."

The diseases have been delivering a one-two punch to the oak and live oak population, experts say.

Oak wilt can kill a red oak tree in little more than a week, a live oak in about six weeks, Johnson said. It primarily victimizes trees which have been weakened by drought or nearby construction. And it has been particularly vicious this summer because of a long, mild spring, Johnson said.

Texas Topic

Dr. Robert Lewis, a research pathologist with the U.S. Forest Service's Southern Hardwoods Laboratory at Stoneville, Miss., has been involved in research to control the disease, caused by the fungus ceratocystis fagacearum. Thus far, he said no certain cure has been found.

Oak decline is a slow killer, taking several years to destroy an afflicted tree. Although the disease can be treated, medication must be started early and is expensive.

Treatment, which should be started before 15 percent of the tree's canopy of leaves has died, consists of boring a series of holes in the trunk and injecting a medication called Arbotect. But, George noted, treatment of a medium-sized tree costs about $60 for the chemical alone. And the process must be repeated frequently.

"After four or five years," he said, "the holes you bore probably would become detrimental to the tree." And some researchers described Arbotect's experimental performance as "erratic."

Horticulturists say the best cure for oak decline — if not prevention — is precaution.

Nixons' imprint on town disappeared

By CARL McGRAW
The Los Angeles Times

SAN CLEMENTE, Calif. — Former President Richard M. Nixon's personal imprint, like footsteps on a beach at high tide, has all but disappeared from the small seaside town of San Clemente, once known grandly as the home of the Western White House.

Nixon's presence at the 25.4-acre La Casa Pacifica estate from 1969 to 1980 gave worldwide recognition to the community, but the community has not seen fit to reciprocate.

There are no marble monuments to Nixon there. No "Nixon slept here" billboards on the outskirts of town. No souvenir shops crammed with ashtrays and spoons bearing his face.

Nor are there any future plans to officially recognize Nixon, and promote the history of his stay there, as other presidential towns have done, said Bob Limberg, mayor of this town of 28,000.

What little glamour and attention the town received with the Nixons as residents has all but disappeared.

"People never ask me about Richard-baby," said Deanne McFann, a desk clerk at the San Clemente Inn where Nixon's bustling entourage once held court. "They are more interested in where the ice machine is."

The fading memory seems surprising to those who know the community as a conservative bastion of upper-middle-class retirees and young Republican executives — a place where the Veterans of Foreign Wars still reigns supreme, and the annual La Cristianita religious pageant is the biggest show in town.

Ten years ago when the presidential helicopter began buzzing in and out of town, many predicted that Nixon's imprint would be significant — that land values and the local economy would soar because of his presence, that many tourists would come searching for a bit of history, that things in San Clemente would never be the same again.

Things were never the same again, but it was because of the big industrial expansion in Orange County, not the president, city manager George Caravalho said.

Local businesses say they profited only mildly from the temporary influx of presidential aides, Secret Service agents, national press corps and other accoutrements of Nixon's office.

By the time he resigned in the face of Watergate in 1974 and went into seclusion behind the tall eucalyptus, palm and citrus trees at La Casa Pacifica, the town was reaping heftier benefits from the many young well-to-do executives who moved in and commuted to nearby industrial areas.

And by 1980, when the Nixons moved to New York City, the town had weathered a vicious land development battle that pitted neighbor against neighbor and friend against friend, and resulted in the recall and resignation of at least seven public officials. In the end, the city gave the go-ahead to a gigantic 6,000-acre development that is expected to double the population of San Clemente by the early 1990s.

While this turmoil raged, the Nixons came and went with little notice.

"I guess you could say the town didn't and doesn't need Richard Nixon," said Doris Hanson Denison, daughter of Ole Hanson, who founded San Clemente in 1925 and made it the state's first planned community.

"All we ever saw of him was a glimpse through the window of his black limousine," she said.

Most of the time, people knew he was in town only because they would see the helicopter hovering over the compound. Or he would make a rare stop at Taylor's Phgarmacy on picturesque Avenue Del Mar to buy Russell Stover candy for Pat. Sometimes townfolks would get a glimpse of him riding in his golf cart at the Shore Cliffs course.

San Clemente Woman's Club made Pat Nixon a lifetime member, but she never showed up at a meeting, Denison said. "We would have liked to have them as part of the community, but they didn't socialize."

Others have similar stories of brief encounters with the Nixons, but no solid social contact. Even the Old Guard — people with Republican prestige and money — were rarely invited to the compound.

Today the San Clemente Chamber of Commerce sees no need to capitalize on the former president's name. Only one out-of-date brochure fleetingly mentions Nixon as "our most famous year-round resident."

Occasionally an Amtrak hostess or transcontinental bus driver will tell passengers that San Clemente was the site of the Western White House. But there are no special tours to detail those days.

The general feeling of businessmen is that the town's beaches, its nearness to Disneyland, Sea World and many other tourist attractions are enough to ensure a healthy local economy.

The tourists who do take time to find the gate to La Casa Pacifica are "diehard Nixon fans who really loved the guy," said Richard Phillips, a security guard at Cyprus Shore on the Avenue del Presidente, which leads to the former Nixon estate. (The home was sold to three businessmen. One of them, Gavin Herbert, lives in the home. Twenty acres of the estate were subdivided for 16 additional homes.)

Even Nixon's street — Avenue el Presidente — does not bear his name.

The only view of the house where Nixon hosted such dignitaries as the Japanese prime minister and Mexico's president, is scanty at best.

New era for space

When the space shuttle Columbia glided back to Earth last April, a new era began for America's space program — a new era filled with more challenge and more promise than the early years of the space program.

The excitement and anticipation generated by the flight and picture-perfect descent of Columbia may have diminished now, slipping just below the consciousness of Americans. But there's little doubt that when Columbia blasts off in October for her second space mission, the adventurous spirit of the Ameican people will again be rekindled.

That's not to imply that the space program does not have its critics. It does. There are those who believe — and aren't afraid to say — that the money being spent on the space program would be better spent helping relieve problems here at home.

And the austerity program launched by President Ronald Reagan threatens to impede the progress made thus far in the exploration of space.

But critics of the space program should realize that benefits from the program may not be realized for years to come even though some benefits such as new products and information can benefit mankind immediately.

Since this planet has been practically completely explored and since its resources are finite, the new world for man to explore is the world beyond the limits of his own planet. He can look for new challenges — and new discoveries — in the depths of the solar system and beyond.

Space shuttle flight offers the opportunity for realization of that dream, both the immediate and the future.

Junking the jeep

Famed World War II correspondent Ernie Pyle once wrote a column dedicated to that remarkable little vehicle that carted G.I. and general alike through the mud of Europe, the sands of North Africa and the jungles of the Pacific.

"Good Lord," wrote Pyle, "I don't think we could continue the war without the jeep. It does everything."

And for 40 years it has. It is light, as maintenance free as a vehicle can be and has the stamina of a herd of oxen. But it is about to be mustered out of the Army and replaced with a high profile High Mobility Multipurpose Wheeled Vehicle.

The Army hopes the HMMWV will replace the jeep, the half-ton truck and the one and one-quarter ton Gamma Goat. The jeep's weapons platform isn't up to some of the heavier firing systems, the truck doesn't do well on battlefield terrains and the Goat lumbers on the highway.

The HMMWV will, naturally, be much more sophisticated and have a diesel engine and automatic transmission — which the Army says will be great because nobody will have to learn to shift gears.

Aw, come on. Any little old lady in tennis shoes can learn the stick shift in a half hour. And it doesn't take the greenest recruit much longer to learn to change the jeep's plugs and points.

More than 60 companies were asked to submit prototype vehicles and the multibillion contract is expected to be made soon. There is some comfort, however, in the Army's decision to award the initial contract for only 15,000 vehicles, not the 100,000 replacement anticipated.

The Army may well find it will have to reinvent the humble jeep. Vietnam should have taught us that the more sophisticated the weapon, the less utilitarian it may prove to men in the field.

The phasing out of the proven, reliable jeep seems to confirm what some critics fear: If it doesn't control itself, the Defense Department could sophisticate us into extinction.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Wednesday, Sept. 2, the 245th day of 1981. There are 120 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Sept. 2, 1945, the Independent Vietnam Republic was proclaimed by Ho Chi Minh, who became president.

On this date:

In 1666, the Great Fire of London started, virtually destroying the city in five days.

In 1962, the Soviet Union agreed to send arms to Cuba.

In 1967, Ilse Koch, serving a life term for atrocities at the Buhenwald concentration camp, hanged herself in a Bavarian prison.

In 1968, officials place the death toll from an Iranian earthquake at 10,000.

Ten years ago: Britain slashed its bank rate in an effort to keep the pound from floating too high against the dollar.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Federal budget cuts hurting the disabled

WASHINGTON — This is the International Year of the Disabled. But in the United States, it's a bad year for the disabled.

Jack Anderson

The Reagan administration is tightening up the eligibility requirements for those who seek disability payments from the government. This has created a bureaucratic nightmare for many legitimate recipients trying to collect the money that keeps them alive.

I don't quarrel with President Reagan's intentions. I have been far ahead of him in exposing the cheaters who draw disability benefits they don't deserve. I also applaud the president's efforts to curtail reckless government spending.

But Reagan's money managers have been scrutinizing the federal budget with eyes as cold as the marble around them. They should not lose sight of the human toll that their budget cuts can cost.

Tales of tragedy have reached my office from all sections of the country. Some people even committed suicide when they fell through the president's "safety net" and had their disability checks cut off. I have published a few of their stories. Here's another:

It concerns Helen Mary Carlton, a 54-year-old Detroit woman who was denied government disability benefits even though she had undergone a triple-bypass heart operation. According to her husband's attorney, Clifford Weisberg, Mrs. Carlton was denied the benefits because "she didn't meet the proper requirements" as laid down by the federal bureaucracy.

The reason Weisberg now represents her husband is that Mrs. Carlton died of her disability shortly after she had appealed for reconsideration of her disability claim. Incredibly, even when presented with the woman's death certificate, Social Security officials still refused to acknowledge that she had been disabled. Her family eventually was granted survivor benefits, but never got the disability payments for which she had applied.

"That was one of the strangest cases I ever came across," Weisberg told my reporters Vivian Marino and Indy Badhwar. "They didn't believe the poor woman was disabled even after she was dead."

Weisberg entered the case only after Mrs. Carlton died. She might have had a better chance to collect on her disability claim if she had hired an attorney to start with; perhaps for this reason, Social Security officials do not encourage claimants to retain counsel.

"Many people are made to feel like criminals if they have to hire an attorney," said Phoenix attorney Richard Gibson.

There is also the expense factor. Appealing a decision of the Social Security bureaucrats can cost $300 to $500 or more. Some attorneys take cases on a contingency fee basis, taking about 25 percent of a claimant's yearly benefits if he or she wins the case.

Even with a knowledgeable attorney, disability claimants often find it hard to obtain the medical evidence that could support their claim. Rarely do patients see the same doctor regularly at a public health facility, where many claimants are examined.

"A physician will continue to see one patient only if he or she has a strange, exotic disease," Gibson explained. It's hard for a claimant to get substantiation of a disabling condition from a doctor who may have spent only a few minutes with the patient.

Ironically, red tape sometimes works in a claimant's favor. Administrative law judges who decide on claimants' appeals must prepare a seven- or eight-page opinion explaining why they have decided to deny a particular claimant's petition. But if they accept the claimant's case and approve the benefit, they need only fill out a short form.

Most of the time, however, the overworked Social Security offices don't have enough manpower to check out thoroughly the two million yearly claims. And as a result, people like Helen Mary Carlton often fall through the safety net.

●

REGULATORY RIDDLES: Here are some examples of conflicting, overlapping or just plain silly government regulations as compiled by my reporter Donald Goldberg:

— In meat-processing plants, the Agriculture Department requires frequent washing of floors for sanitation; the Occupational Safety and Health Administration requires that floors be kept dry for safety.

— The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission forbids employers to ask job applicants questions about sex, religion or age, to prevent discrimination; the Federal Contract Compliance Program requires answers to these questions, to ensure that the work force is representative of the area.

— Jar lids are considered "food additives" by the Food and Drug Administration, "consumer products" by the Consumer Products Safety Act, "hazardous substances" by the Hazardous Substances Act and "consumer commodities" by the Federal Trade Commission (which also considers the lettering on jars and lids to be "consumer warranties").

— The Environmental Protection Agency requires certain gas emissions in work areas to be concentrated in a way that is unacceptable to the Occupational Safety and Health Administration.

— Because OSHA requires workers to wear respirators when exposed to hazardous fumes, some employers require their workers to be clean-shaven; according to EEOC, this is discriminatory.

●

GUNS UNDER CONTROL: There are more than six million small arms in the various military installations around the country, and it hasn't always been easy to keep track of them. In the 1970s, several thousand weapons were stolen or lost. But tighter security measures have reduced the losses to only 181 last year.

ART BUCHWALD

Biltmore's fantasy has ended

Well, they went and tore down the Biltmore Hotel lobby in New York the other day — clock and all. For you young whippersnappers, the Biltmore was the most preppie place in the whole wide world, and this was when it REALLY counted to be a preppie.

Art Buchwald

I wasn't a preppie in those days but I used to sit in the lobby of the Biltmore and pretend I was, which was the next best thing.

What happened was that all those gorgeous young Barbie dolls used to come in from Smith and Vassar, and Mount Holyhoke and heaven knows where and meet their dates under the clock. The co-eds wore fuzzy angora sweaters, and tartan skirts and silk stockings and high heels and pearls around their necks. A guy could just die in the lobby of the Biltmore staring at them and dreaming a Barbie doll's date would not show up, and that she would break into tears right there under the clock.

It never happened, but I was prepared if it did. Every weekend — I took a seat in the lobby waiting for a dumb jock from Harvard, Princeton, Yale or West Point to stand up one of those perfect creatures so I could make my move.

My plan was quite simple. I would get out of my chair and saunter over to the sobbing lady and offer her a clean handkerchief. "First," I would say, "you need this, and then I believe you need a drink."

I was prepared for an answer.

"But I don't know you." To which I would reply: "I am the man who winds the Biltmore clock every time it stops when a virgin stands underneath it. Now for that drink."

The way I had it worked out she would say, "Well, just one pink lady — but I insist we go Dutch." I would grin and say, "I like a girl with pride."

From there it would be just a matter of time before we told each other our life's stories. She would reveal her father was the chairman of the New York Central Railroad (don't laugh — it was a big deal in those days), and I would tell her my family was in textiles (my father made draperies and slipcovers, so I really wasn't making things up).

She would then tell me the boy she was waiting for was really a dunderhead and the only reason she had made a date with him was to get away from school.

"I would tell her I was just killing time in the lobby of the Biltmore until I got my acceptance papers from the Royal Canadian Air Force. I would explain that although the U.S. hadn't gotten into the war yet, it would just be a matter of time, and then America would need every trained fighter pilot it could get."

Obviously, in my fantasy when she heard I was about to go off to a war, all reason would leave her and we would both remember the Biltmore Hotel (Room 345) for the rest of our lives.

As I said before, nothing like this ever happened, but the fantasy did manage to get me through some hot days and cold nights.

So, when I read about the Biltmore Hotel clock being torn down and destroyed, it really teed me off — not just because they wrecked my teen-age dreams, but I always hoped to get back to the Biltmore lobby when I started collecting Social Security and try my luck again.

A CHANGING WORLD

Hostility pushing Khrushchev's statement toward reality

The former air traffic controllers are the worst of all examples but they are only the most recent manifestation of a thrust of hostility that is engulfing millions of Americans across the nation.

John Pinkerman

It will be a long time before some of us will forget the televised un-American fist-shaking and "strike" chanting of these men and women averaging nearly $40,000 a year in salaries — men and women who had raised their right hand and signed affidavits vowing they would never strike.

They were defying the law — until they were fired — but that meant little or nothing to most of them. However, they were not doing much different than many others, mostly egged on by labor union leaders whose motives in defiance of the law must be questioned.

Post office workers behaved similarly (though without no-strike pledges) before a last-minute agreement was reached that avoided paralyzing mail service to 220 million American citizens.

It was clear in their case as it was with the controllers, that anger and, most of all, hostility against authority, law and order, common sense, plus a complete lack of concern for their well-paid public trust was behind their disruptive tactics.

All of them are properly and even over-paid. If they weren't they wouldn't be so anxious to strike. A strike for many of them, and for industrial workers everywhere in America, is just another vacation, similar in nature to the abuses of sick leave that provide second and third vacations for many millions of workers.

This same hostility motivates others who once enjoyed the esteem and admiration of most of the public. Baseball players are an almost laughable example. They, in many cases, hate their bosses, have little or no regard for fans to whom athletes once showed some loyalty and so they cry "slavery" — if you can believe that an average pay of $150,000 a year represents slavery.

Police and firemen, once at the very top of the list in the category of public respect, are no better in many cities. They literally breathe and shout hostility against city leaders fighting incredible budget problems and tax limitations — and they take out their hostility by deserting jobs that are some of the best in the nation.

Doctors do the same in hospitals where they are dearly needed, spitting in the eye of oaths they had taken to care for sick and needy. Nurses are no better in many cases, and they once were on the public's highest pedestal in public affection.

Schoolteachers are among the worst offenders. They have some of the softest jobs in American life (three months vacation) but they have replaced devotion to children with hostility toward their bosses and contempt for responsibility. Then, there are grocery store clerks, undereducated, under-motivated and over-paid. And street cleaners. And bus drivers, and taxi operators. Even lawyers working for public agencies.

Beyond these mostly public employees, whose initial demand for instant gratification vs. serious attention to their jobs has turned to hostility plus sometime violence and sabotage, other segments of American life have been seized by this attitude of hatred and vindictiveness.

Neighbors in all kinds of environments are quick these days to sue each other over the most minor matters that once were settled by a discussion and handshake over the back fence. Some newsmen, mostly the increasing horde of left-wingers populating city rooms, take out hostility toward publishers with slanted antiestablishment stories — which editors fail to discard or return for rewriting.

Children in too many homes have contempt for their parents and the result is an inbred and growing attitude of hostility toward society in general, one that increases as these youngsters progress through adolescence into adulthood.

The late Soviet boss Nikita Khrushchev, in a United Nations speech in the mid-1950s boasted that communism would bury America, that this would come about not through Red aggression but through internal U.S. collapse.

It would be most unfortunate if such a rascal's boast should come to be. However, the hostility that is growing, fed generously by some labor union leaders and those who follow them like sheep, plus many others of us who are in effect "mad at the world," is leading America down a path that would make Khrushchev jump out of his grave with the greatest of glee and a chorus of "I told you so."

Several political factions operating in, out of Iran

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — At least a dozen Iranian political groups are now operating in and out of Iran.

Most of the moderate and leftist groups that helped bring Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini to power in February 1979 are now opposed to his clergy-led regime of religious fundamentalists.

But the moderates are keeping quiet while the leftists battle Khomeini's forces.

Here is a lineup:

Islamic Republican Party (IRP): founded by Ayatollah Mohammad Beheshti who was killed in the bombing of the party headquarters in Tehran June 28, it controls Parliament and the government and is dominated by fundamentalist clerics and laymen loyal to Khomeini. Prime Minister Mohammad Bahonar succeeded Beheshti as party chairman, but he was assassinated Sunday. Hojatoleslam Hashemi Rafsanjani, the speaker of Parliament, or Ayatollah Musavi Ardabili, the chief justice, will probably succeed him as head of the party.

Hezbollah (Party of God): Linked with the IRP and made up of pro-Khomeini fanatics, its leaders are not known. It organized marchers to confront groups protesting President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr's impeachment last June. Hezbollahis police the streets of Tehran, riding motorcycles and often wearing black shirts. They search out behavior they consider anti-Islamic, such as smoking cigarettes during Ramadan, the holy month of fasting.

Tudeh: The 40-year-old, pro-Soviet communist party led by Nooreddin Kianoori, it is aligned with the government and attracted several leftist factions from major groups now in the opposition. Kianoori tried to run for president after Bani-Sadr was deposed but was stricken from the list, an indication that the clergy has no intention of giving the communists any power.

Mujahedeen Khalq (People's Warriors): The largest and best-armed of the opposition groups, with an estimated 50,000 or more guerrillas, it is the most serious threat to Khomeini's regime. Led from exile by Massoud Rajavi, who fled to Paris with Bani-Sadr in July, it was formed in the mid-1960's, blends Islamic rhetoric with Marxist principles and was a significant factor in the street demonstrations that put Khomeini in power and brought down Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi.

Fedayeen Khalq (People's Guerrillas): Describing itself as Marxist-Leninist, the Fedayeen like the Mujahedeen broke with Khomeini when Bani-Sadr was impeached. Some factions switched to the Tudeh; others defected to the Mujahedeen. The leader of what's left is Hemad Sheibani, and there is a student faction called Pishgan.

Peykar: another Marxist-Leninist group allied with the Mujahedeen Khalq in the terrorist campaign against Khomeini.

The National Front: A moderate socialist party founded by the late Prime Minister Mohammad Mossadegh who nationalized the oil industry in the 1950s. It is led by Karim Sanjabi and is opposed to clerical rule, but there is no indication that it is making any contribution to the fight against Khomeini.

The National Liberation Movement: Similar to the National Front although more oriented to Islamic thought, it is led by the first post-revolution prime minister Mehdi Bazargan. Khomeini broke with him when he advocated early release of the U.S. hostages, and Bazargan and his party now stay out of the limelight.

The Moslem People's Party: Led by Ayatollah Kazem Shariat-Madari, the Tabriz clergyman who was considered the highest religious authority in Iran before Khomeini's return. He is believed to be under house arrest in his theological school in the holy city of Qom. Shariat-Madari advocates a lay government supervised by the clergy. Most of his followers are in and around Tabriz, in western Iran.

Azadegan: A rightist, military-oriented group of exiles led by a general in the shah's army.

Fees for high school athletics alternative to tax increases

By JOHN BRONSON
Associated Press Writer

PITTSBURGH (AP) — High school football teams will soon be defending the athletic honor of Lions and Tigers and Bears across the land. At halftime, marching bands will swarm on the gridiron in high-stepping splendor.

Off the field, math club members will twist Rubik's Cubes, and choruses will begin practicing for Christmas concerts.

Extracurricular activities are the icing on America's academic cake. In most communities, they are taken for granted.

But in suburban Bethel Park, students this year will pay to play. For the first time, kids who want to participate in various activities are being charged users' fees.

"Why? Our taxes are very high and we're trying to do anything we can to avoid raising them further," athletic director Joe Lodge said.

"Some school districts have flat out eliminated their extracurricular activities because they simply don't have ways to fund them," he added.

Lodge was referring to Massachusetts, where voters approved Proposition 2½ last November. That tax-cutting measure has reduced municipal revenues by $500 million this year. In the schools, non-academic activities and courses are bearing the brunt.

"We're trying to avoid that panic situation. We thought it would be a good idea to get a jump on what appears to be a trend," Lodge said in a telephone interview.

The fee varies with the activity. Football is the most expensive at $35 per student. Boys' basketball is $32, girls' volleyball $10. Most non-athletic programs, like the astronomy club and the student newspaper, cost a nominal $1 or $2.

Lodge said the amount of equipment and supplies used was the criterion for setting the rates.

Frank Lavalle, director of business affairs, said Bethel Park spent about $265,000 on non-academic activities last year. The figure includes salaries and supplies.

The fees will bring in an estimated $15,000 to $18,000. "That was enough to be significant, but not so much in an opening year that it would be outrageous," Lodge said.

The Bethel Park School District, which has a student population of 6,400, is located in an affluent community in the rolling hills south of Pittsburgh.

Parents look upon the district's education and recreation program with pride. The school also excels in athletics. The football team, 9-3 last year, was the western Pennsylvania runner-up in its category. The basketball and baseball teams won their conferences and both the boys' and girls' swimming teams won the state championships last year.

The new fees have caused hardly a ripple among students, probably because most parents are picking up the cost. But even among the adults, there's been little negative reaction, school officials said.

"I can understand what they're trying to accomplish," said John Stilley, president of the Bethel Park Athletic Association, a local booster club.

"It's a sad thing when people work all their lives and can't afford to stay in their homes when they retire because of the tax structure. I'm not convinced my elderly neighbors should have to pay for my son to play football. But on the other hand, I'm concerned that they may want more and more in fees later," he said.

Jim Treher, president of the Bethel Citizen Association, a loosely organized civic group that keeps a sharp eye on taxes, is delighted with the idea.

"If we want these extravaganzas every Friday night for football and the debating society and so on, that's fine, but I don't think citizens should have to pay for that," he said.

Education is big business in Bethel Park. The district budgeted $19.4 million in 1980 and plans to spend $20.6 million this year. The 1981-82 tax rate is a hefty 69.5 mills, up by 5.85 mills in 1980.

That means the school tax bill for a typical homeowner with a house valued at $100,000 will be about $1,750, Lavalle said.

Lodge said the new fees haven't caused any drop in the number of students reporting for fall sports.

Weekend warriors still prospecting

BY JAMES MARNELL
Hearst Feature Service

Gold prospecting -- the very idea conjures up images of grizzly oldtimers crouched down in a stream digging into the water's bottom with their pans.

They sought quick fortunes during those early days in the latter part of the 1840s in Northern California but, very often, all they found was a heap of trouble from marauding Indians.

And for many of the successful prospectors, other kinds of trouble abounded. Examples are numerous of silver-tongued con artists who finagled fortunes from those hard-working folk with promises of easier ways to even greater riches.

Today, Indians pose no threat to gold prospectors, and con artists have moved on to more lucrative ventures.

But modern-day prospectors still crouch down in their streams with pans scouring the water's bottom for the valuable sand (it's processed by companies for $100 a pound) or precious pebbles. Basically, little has changed for the small, part-time miners.

Now they have access to sophisticated metal detectors and dredging devices to help them discover the billions of ounces of gold remaining in California (or any of the states west of the Mississippi) on the desert, on the beach or in the bottom of a lake.

So the range of prospecting for the "weekend warriors," as part-time prospectors are often called, is varied, posing a number of options should you decide to stow away the golf clubs and swim trunks for more adventuresome pursuits.

However, even on the most elementary level, a pan is merely a starting point.

Other requirements? According to prospector Tom Payne, president of the Los Angeles County Chapter of the Western Mining Council, one should have "a sluice box, a whole lot of information as to where the gold districts are, how to gain access to public lands, a little something about geology (although that's not a prerequisite), and how to stake a claim."

Payne's grandfather traveled to California during the Gold Rush of 1848, and to this day Payne works the same claim "perhaps two or three months out of the year" in Northern California.

He's as enthusiastic about gold prospecting as was the Australian who happened upon a $1 million nugget on a beach a few months ago.

"Gold is just about everywhere in California. Virtually every stream running through Los Angeles has gold deposits. And where gold is found, you're likely to find platinum and silver, too," Payne says.

The mining accomplished by those "weekend warriors" is called placer, which denotes gold that has been freed from rock formations by weathering action. It's pulled by gravity to various points and is concentrated.

And since gold seldom travels far from its source, knowing where the lode deposits are offers a clue to where the placer type particles can be found.

As in any endeavor, says Payne, the trick is in being informed.

"You don't have to be an expert geologist to find gold," he says.

According to Payne, the number of small miners in California alone hovers between 25,000 and 30,000 and it's growing all the time, no small surprise considering the price of gold today. During the Gold Rush of 1848, the price was under $20 an ounce; today, it's a bit over $400. In January of 1980, the price nearly reached $900.

Many small miners, Payne says, are exceedingly successful.

"A lot of them go out, find an ounce or two and make jewelry. The markup is fantastic, whether selling by wholesale or retail, and it's a lot of fun to do. Or you could just take the gold to a jeweler. The California Mining Journal is an excellent publication, found on virtually any newsstand, that tells where a prospector can dispense with his gold, as well as where he can get the equipment he needs."

Payne's advice to would-be prospectors is to get a good metal detector. They run anywhere from $60 to $600 and can spot underground deposits from an inch to 12 inches.

That well-heeled Australian who found his once-in-a-lifetime nugget used a detector.

"It's probably the best way to go for the 'weekend warrior,' " he adds.

Attempts to cure homosexuality are 'ethically questionable'

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Homosexuality is as healthy and biologically normal as heterosexuality, and attempts to "cure" gay people are "ethically questionable," says a report approved by an American Psychological Association division.

The four-year study by a team of 31 natural and social scientists characterizes America's gay community as a kind of religious minority at odds with social mores. But the study also noted an increasing acceptance of homosexuals, despite strident opposition from groups like as the Moral Majority.

"You have to say homosexuality is biologically natural since it appears spontaneously all over the natural world," one of the study's originators, Harvard-based psychology professor William Paul, said. "Among some animal groups it leads to bonding by cutting down aggression among males and helps the gene pool survive simply because they're not killing each other."

Although the APA decided eight years ago that homosexuality was not a mental illness, Paul said the new study "is important because it's based on documented, scientific research, not just the opinion of psychiatrists."

"This should put the sickness theory to rest forever," he added. "The evidence is overwhelming that you just don't have any relationship between sexual preference and mental health.

"People in lesbian and homosexual relationships are just ordinary folks, a lot more like straight people than different," Paul said, "so trying to change someone runs into very grave problems. This whole idea of conversion (from homosexual to hetersexual) runs into questions of whether the person (seeking psychiatric help) is acting freely or just reacting to traditional societal pressure."

Scientific evidence doesn't support the theory that hormone imbalances lead a person into same-sex relationships, the study concluded, but researchers suggested further study of a view of homosexuality as an interaction between genetic factors and environmental influences.

"Gay people are a religious minority in the sense that they dissent from a dominant religious belief system, which often seeks to punish them for their defiance of religious sexual taboos," the study said. "This sexual taboo is a major source of discriminatory laws and oppressive majority actions."

Yet, "After each apparent victory in overturning a local gay rights ordinance, there remains a huge increase in public awareness that there is an important social issue involved. These battles also tend to expose the public...to images of gay men and lesbians that are visibly compelling contradictions to the exotic stereotypes."

ACT plays big role in students' plans

The 1981-82 school year is just beginning and juniors and seniors at both of the Midland high schools and other high schools across the country are facing some big decisions.

One of those decisions is what to do after graduation — whether to go on to college, get a job or try to do both.

An important role in students' planning will be played by guidance counselors, parents, friends and the American College Testing (ACT) Assessment Program.

Designed to provide guidance information for education and career planning, this national program is recommended for use by student applicants at more than 2700 colleges and universities.

Students at both of the senior high schools will have five opportunities during the school year to make use of the program, which consists of four tests and a two-part questionnaire.

Students complete the questionnaire at home as part of the registration process. The tests are then administered at area centers on any of the five weekend national test dates, explained Mrs. Dorothy Sanders, senior counselor at Lee High School.

Registration deadlines for the 1981-82 national test dates are Sept. 18 for Oct. 17 testing, Nov. 13 for Dec. 12 testing, Jan. 22 for Feb. 20 testing, March 5 for April 3 testing and May 14 for June 12 testing.

All tests will be administered at Midland College. The basic student fee for using the ACT Assessmeent is $8.50.

It takes students about three hours to complete the ACT Assessment's four exams (English, math, social studies and natural sciences).

A copy of a full-length test booklet has been sent to all high schools in order to familiarize students with the character and format of test items and responses. This booklet is available to interested students through the counseling offices at both high schools. Students wanting copies of additional tests may obtain them upon request from ACT at cost.

L'Artre evolved from hang-out to eatery

By EVELYNn KIERAN
Copley News Service

The cottage was built in 1890 — near the little village of Ste. Famille. It sits high on a bluff that runs for miles along the St. Lawrence River, on the Isle d'Orleans. It is a fertile island, secure from possible marauders, named for the home province in France.

No one is certain which of the French immigrants to Canada first cleared the fields and, using the stones, built the simple structure to shield his family from the icy winds blowing off the river. Local folk claim the place was inhabited, and farmed, as long as anyone could remember.

The peacefulness and stability of Ste. Famille were a magnet for a young 20th century woman — Suzanne Demers. Artist, musician, poet — she looked for a haven and the little house beckoned. Thick walls, dark beams, random, sloping floors and a hearth. L'Atre in French. The heart of a home.

And that's what she called it.

She cleared the grounds, repaired the house, excavated the old wine cellar and gradually made the place habitable. Originally, she planned to use it as a studio — a workshop for other artists, artisans, craftspeople as well as herself. It would be a gathering place for work, pleasure, exchange of ideas, creative expansion.

Word went out swiftly and people came to see, hear and sometimes to buy. But they came long and often cold distances and seemed to be universally hungry.

Suzanne began to bring great pots of soup to The Hearth, keeping it hot over the open fire that kept the cold and dampness away. Big bowls were served right from the black iron cauldron swinging over the fire. (There was no kitchen in the house.)

Then she added homemade breads and a few hot dishes which could be transported easily from a master kitchen some 12 miles away. Beef so tender it almost falls apart in a strong sauce of red wine, pork pies from an old Quebecois recipe, local pates wrapped in laurel leaves.

A restaurant had not been part of Suzanne's plan, but it was evolving. Then, from local kitchens and gardens came fresh asparagus, crisp lettuce, subtle chutneys and family-style relishes.

And maple sugar — for mousse, tartin, ice cream.

Demers bowed to the inevitable — besides it was a great way to support her three children. But she was determined to keep the place in perspective. She scoured the countryside for old, real furnishings. She found great hutches and serving pieces. Oil lamps cast a mellow glow. Wild flowers and roadside weeds soften the corners and deck the tables. The hearth is still the central warming and serving place.

Tables built for shorter generations still crowd long-legged visitors. (One wag remarked: "Never have I been so uncomfortable and so happy.") She designed costumes for the help based on the dress of the original Quebecois — navy with red and green striped skirts, charming bonnets framing the pretty faces of her three daughters who work with her.

In the attic, she set up a small museum waiting room, where guests glance through old albums and play a game of guessing to what use the wonderful collection of ancient, handmade tools were put.

Suzanne's idea, and now her motto is "to agreeably forget the 20th century."

And she succeeds. The charm of the place is immeasurable.

When you arrive at the sign on the road from Quebec City, you park your car. Shortly, a handsome young man in full costume, lace frills covering the strong, workman's hands on the reins, pulls up in an ancient fiacre carriage. Ladies are driven across the road, down to the quiet farmhouse.

Aperitifs are ordered, then guests repair to the garden to enjoy the sunset, or the antics of a family of cats. Gentle music wafts from a superb recording system. Peace fills the air, blending with the subtle aromas of fine food simmering on the hearth. Cares slip away.

The food is FrenchCanadian — country-fine. Suzanne has added a terrine du lapin and a pheasant salamis as well as fruits in season and sorbets. When wine is ordered, madame, candle in hand, opens the door in the floor of the main room, descends to the cellar and returns, blowing the dust off the chosen bottles. It's almost Hollywood. But it isn't. It's real.

Certainly the decor, costumes, menus will never be franchised.

L'Atre, as the menu says, is unique. And it plans to stay that way.

Israeli dwarf trees thrive in south Texas

HONDO, Texas (AP) — A successful experiment with a dozen dwarf apple trees from Israel's Negev Desert has prompted optimism that the low chill plants could thrive throughout warm South Texas.

"They've done so well that I decided to put in another 400. Some of them will be ready to harvest next year," beams Medina County cattle and chicken rancher Tony Zerr, who recently finished harvesting 12 trees heavy with the fruit.

Zerr planted the first dozen dwarf trees three years ago on recommendation of County Extension Agent Eddie Holland and Dr. Loy Shreve, Texas Agricultural Extension Service horticulturist in Uvalde.

"I'm amazed at this apple crop," Zerr said. "I really didn't expect them to produce very well here, especially so soon, but I'll try anything once. I think this orchard will raise some eyebrows in the area when it reaches productive potential."

Zerr's miniature trees now measure just under six feet in height and have their branches tied to stakes to hold up apple-laden limbs.

He said the small size of the trees have two advantages — a person can stand flat-footed and pick the apples to hold harvest costs down, and more trees can be planted in a small area.

"You put them on a trellis like a grape vine. I plan on letting people who want to buy them harvest them," Zerr said.

Zerr runs 200 head of cattle and has 20,000 laying hens. He uses chicken manure to fertilize the trees, which are watered mostly by drip irrigation although bountiful rains this year eliminated that need.

Shreve personally selected low chill apple trees that were developed in the Negev Desert of Israel and are adaptable to the mild South Texas climate.

The horticulturist said Hondo, located 40 miles southwest of San Antonio, was about the northernmost area the trees should be grown because they could be placed in jeopardy by late freezes that sometimes occur in the Texas Hill Country to the immediate north.

"Ordinary apples require 800 to 1,000 hours of chilling, which is the accumulated time when temperatures are 45 degrees Farenheit or less," Shreve said. "Yet, by comparison, these Israeli varieties require only about 300 hours of chill, and maintain a certain amount of disease-insect resistance."

The short Israeli trees can easily be covered to prevent freezing and are noted for early production, often in the second or third year, Shreve said.

Varities he recommends for this climate include Anna and Ein Shemer from Israel, and Dorsett Gold, a variety originating in the Bahama Islands. Other newer Israeli varieties are Elah, Adia 17, Ben Dagen, Michael and Maayamand Slor, but they are not yet available, Shreve said.

However, the fruit specialist warned that more work must be done to ensure the trees will thrive throughout the region.

"There's definitely a future for low chill-requiring apples in South Texas, but that means more experimental work is necessary," Shreve said. "Producers in the Hill Country may be flirting with trouble by growing these varities exclusively, because a late freeze will wipe them out. Israeli varieties are adapted to South Texas which has a climate similar to Israel."

Holland said Zerr has economics on his side for commercial production of applies from the dwarf trees.

"One tree produces about a bushel of applies and the plot Tony has selected can accomodate about 800 trees," the extension agent said. "That adds up to 800 bushels of apples and I've never known apples to sell for less than 40 cents a pound.

Celebrities-Look-Alikes offers the next best thing for less

By HARRY DEDERICHS
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — You want Woody Allen to pitch your toothpaste, or Katharine Hepburn to pep up a sales meeting?

The reclusive stars would almost certainly refuse, even supposing you could afford them. But a Hollywood-based company, Ron Smith's Celebrity-Look-Alikes, offers "the next best" for far less.

"There is only one Burt Reynolds, but we can offer the next best thing," says Smith, who was in New York recently, auditioning look-alikes for Prince Charles and the Princess of Wales.

"Almost everything a star can do, we can do, but for a reasonable price," says Smith. He describes his work as "selling an illusion of an illusion."

Smith, who looks strikingly like a bearded, 34-year-old former actor named Ron Smith, keeps a roster of 1,200 housewives, doctors, actors and others who just happen to look like somebody else, and are eager to captalize on the coincidence.

Charging 1 percent of a celebrity's fee, Smith says, a double can earn as much as $50,000 a year, depending on the popularity of the real thing.

Adolf Hitler, Anwar Sadat, Yasser Arafat and Ayatollah Khomeini are on the roster, and find work mostly in documentaries. The list, which runs from Edie Adams to Robert Young, also includes an Albert Einstein, a Marlene Dietrich, and Lassie.

Smith always has an eye out for new faces.

He once met a man who looked like actor George Segal in a New York department store. He said he offered him a contract but was turned down, because it really was George Segal.

Stopped for a speeding violation, Smith said he was confronted with a policeman who looked like Elliot Gould.

The ties that bind also decorate

By CATHERINE WILSON
Associated Press Writer

MADERA, Calif. (AP) — The ties that bind also decorate — railroad ties, that is.

When the heay wooden beams have served their time on rail beds, many ties have 50 to 75 more years of durability left in them. Some companies like Gammel & Oppendick, based in this central California community, hve begun to recycle old ties that are replaced or discarded hen a railroad abandons a line.

Bundles of 25 ties secured with steel bands are sold primarily to lumber companies and home improvement centers for landscaping and fencing. Public agenies also purchase them or retaining walls, bumper posts and flood control proects that retain a rustic look.

"The cost to the buyer is so much less than new," sai Gail May, sales and marketing direcor for Gamel & Oppendik. "We're talking 50 percent les."

Irene Clark, who manages th company's only permanet sales yard, usually has 20,000 ties on hand.

When bargain hunters ask her about the longevity of ties, Ms. Clrk said she tells them, "Usually the ties are going to last longer than some of us."

Ms. May said selling used railroad ties "has not just been a fad. Ties are very, very much in demand. Fo landscaping, ties are really desirable."

The company also sells steel rails and ships about 40 percent of them oversas, primarily to China and Taiwan. Most buyers plan to lay the track again or use it for scrap.

The company, which moved here from Colorado eight years ago, handles between 50,000 and 900,000 ties each year, and 10,000 to 15,000 tons of steel rails, making it one of the nation's biggest of is kind.

"There are railroads all over this country, in the most unusual places," Ms. May said. An average of six or seven of the company's crews are obtaining rails at any one time in 15 western states.

When Gammel & Ollendick is awarded an abandonment contract, crews remove "from the first bolt to th last trestle," Ms. May said.

When lines are replaced, railway workers install the new ties, and "our crews move directly behind them to stack them by hand," she said.

The standard tie measures seven inches by nine inches by eight feet, and weighs about 150 pounds.

Ties, generally made of Douglas fir, are sorted for quality before sale. Some are in such good shape that they can be used again on rail and spur lines.

Albert Speer dead at 76

By GRAHAM HEATHCOTE
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) — Albert Speer, the Nazi slave-labor boss who spurred German war production despite massive Allied air raids, died during a visit to London, the city blitzed by the bombs and rockets of the war machine he ran. He was 76.

Speer, whose post-war memoirs provided the most detailed account of the inner working of the Third Reich and made him a rich man, died Tuesday of an apparent stroke.

The man who once said he was "mesmerized" by Adolf Hitler and served him as chief architect and production chief, was in Britain for a television interview with the British Broadcasting Corp.

After recording the first segment of the interview Tuesday morning, Speer returned to London's Park Court Hotel, where he collapsed in the afternoon. He was taken unconscious to St. Mary's Hospital and died there at 8:30 p.m., 2:30 p.m. EDT, the hospital said.

The BBC said Speer was being interviewed for a documentary about Hitler's proposed cultural center in the dictator's hometown of Linz, Austria. Speer, the project's chief architect, was questioned by Cambridge University historian Norman Stone, who said the ex-Nazi "showed no sign of strain."

Speer, who engineered Hitler's rise to power and later put his organizational skills to work running the Third Reich's enormous industrial complex, was convicted by the Nuremberg War Crimes tribunal in 1946 of crimes against humanity.

Described at Nuremberg as one of Hitler's "closest personal confidants," Speer was convicted for his expansion of the slave labor system, using civilians from occupied countries to power the Nazi war machine. The only senior Nazi to admit responsibility for his crimes, Speer served a 20 year sentence at Spandau Prison in West Berlin.

Speer was born March 19, 1905, the son of a prominent architect in Mannheim. As a young architech in 1931, two years before Hitler rose to power, Speer joined the Nazi Party and rose quickly through the ranks on the basis of his expertise in organizing the giant rallies that marked Hitler's ascension.

Layton trial continues

By JACK SCHREIBMAN
Associated Press Writer

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The prosecution is expected to rest Thursday in the murder-conspiracy trial of former Peoples Temple member Larry Layton, charged in the slaying of U.S. Rep. Leo Ryan on a jungle airstrip in Guyana.

A former lawyer for the Temple testified Tuesday about a thwarted knife attack on Ryan at the Temple compound.

Jurors also heard a grisly description of the bullet wounds that killed the congressman during an attack Nov. 18, 1978, at the Port Kaituma airstrip, just before a mass murder-suicide claimed 913 lives at the cult's compound.

The attack on Ryan's party claimed the lives of Ryan, three journalists and a woman defector from the cult.

Layton is accused of conspiracy in the slaying of Ryan and the wounding of State Department official Richard Dwyer, who was injured in the attack.

U.S. District Judge Robert Peckham canceled today's session since a witness was unavailable.

San Francisco attorney Charles Garry, who once represented the Rev. Jim Jones and his doomed Peoples Temple, testified that Ryan was attacked by a knife-wielding man in Jones' presence, but that Ryan told Jones he would not let the assault affect a report he had come to Guyana to prepare on the cult at the request of worried relatives.

He said Jonestown resident Don Sly walked up to Ryan, wrapped his arm around his neck and pulled a knife. He said he and another People's Temple lawyer, Mark Lane, leaped on the pair to stop the attack.

All the while, Jones stood "one or two steps away, passive, as if nothing was happening," Garry said. Sly later died in the mass suicide ritual.

Former president of AMA dead at 74

LANCASTER, Pa. (AP) — Dr. James Z. Appel, a former president of the American Medical Association who was instrumental in getting doctors to accept the Medicare program, is dead at the age of 74.

Appel, who died Monday, had been ill several weeks, according to officials at Lancaster General Hospital.

The surgeon and general practitioner was president of the AMA in 1964-65, when Medicare was on the verge of passage.

Although he staunchly opposed the legislation creating the health care program for the elderly, he later changed his stance and helped to win over physicians critical of Medicare. It went into effect shortly after Appel left his AMA post.

Appel, an outspoken critic of rising costs of health care, received his medical degree from the University of Pennsylvania School of Medicine in 1932. He went into practice with his father, Theodore, the next year.

He is survived by his wife, Florence, and five children.

Crewless train

SHELLEY, Idaho (AP) — A crewless train slowly rolled 10 miles before a Union Pacific Railroad agent chased it in his car, hopped aboard and set the brakes.

R.D. Tincher, UP regional public relations director in Salt Lake City, said the four locomotives were parked in the train yard at Idaho Falls Tuesday morning, with the engines off and the brakes on.

The brakes apparently slipped off and the train rolled out onto the main line, moving south to Shelley.

UP agent Kenneth Marler, 53, called the dispatcher to report the four-engine train had passed his depot at 10:30 a.m., minus a crew.

Tincher said Marler then ran to his car and chased the runaway train to about one mile south of Shelley, where he was able to get ahead of the train, board it and set the brakes.

Dilemma of under or over watering garden

By TOM STEVENSON
(c) 1981, The Washington Post

Last summer, dry weather caused considerable damage to vegetable gardens, trees, shrubs and flowers in many areas. The quantity and quality of the yield from vegetable gardens was much less than it should hve been.

Many, perhaps a majority of, and particularly new gardeners watered their vegetables but did it improperly, applying too little or too much.

Watering too little or too much is happening again this year in some areas, according to a rather extensive survey.

When soil is nearly dry, the plant begins to wilt, because the roots are unable to replace the moisture that evaporates from the cells (transpiration), and the plant is in trouble.

Sprinkling for 5 or 10 minutes does very little good; as a matter of fact, it may actually have a harmful effect. It could cause plant roots to come to the surface for water. There they will suffer even more unless they are constantly watered.

Cabbage and spinach may have root systems 6 to 10 inches deep, beans about 12 inches, sweet corn about 2 feet, and tomatoes and asparagus 3 feet or more. However, in gardens with a clay hardpan not far below the surface, tomatoes and other plants have a root system less than 1 foot deep.

Tomatoes and sweet corn need about 1½ inches of water weekly; cauliflower, lettuce, beets, turnips, potatoes and onions do best with about 1 inch of water every week or 10 days; sweet potatoes, watermelons and pumpkins suffer less from drought than most of the others.

If too much water is applied or drainage is poor, it is likely to prevent oxygen from reaching the roots, and the plant is in serious trouble.

Because roots do most of the absorbing, the moisture should be available to them about 6 inches deep. In sandy soil, ½ inch of water will soak down to 6 inches; in clay soil it will take from 1 to 1½ inches of water to soak down 6 inches when the soil is dry.

If you use a sprinkler, set out four same-size cans within the sprinkling area. Turn on the water for 30 minutes, Pour the water from all the cans into one can. Measure water depth with a ruler. Divide by 4 to get average. Then adjust your watering time accordingly (if measurement is ¼ inch, run sprinkler for 60 minutes to deliver ½ inch).

If the water is applied faster than the soil can absorb it, there will be runoff. To avoid this, reduce the flow of water, and also put a small mound of dirt around each plant to hold the water.

The best time to water is early morning or late afternoon. From midmorning until mid-afternoon the hot summer sun and drying winds will rob you of part of the water you are applying.

Treatment of wood finishes—Texas style

By SHARON A. HILLIS
County Extension Agent
Home Economics

A part of "living Texan" means understanding the care of your wood furniture needs to co-exist with our West Texas winds and ways. Your furniture's condition, value and character can be retained by a very inexpensive cleaning process. It does, however, require a little more of your time and elbow grease than the usual dusting or polishing, the the results are well worth the effort.

FURNITURE CLEANSER-CONDITIONER

USE IT TO:

- restore natural grain and color of wood
- conceal scratches
- retard crazing or checking
- remove cloudiness caused by smoke, grease and dust
- recondition dry woods caused from overheated atmosphere of rooms (should be done approximately every six months)

CAUTION: Use cleanser conditioner sparingly on shellac finish. To determine if finish is shellac, rub alcohol on an underside spot. The finish will soften and peel off if it is shellac.

EQUIPMENT:

Glass container with tight fitting lid
Gum turpentine (pure spirits is best)
Boiled linseed oil
Dish or small flat can
Saucer or small pie tin
3/0 steel wool pad
Old toothbrush
Old cloths
Newspapers

PREPARATION OF CLEANSER-CONDITIONER

- In bottle, mix one part gum turpentine with three parts boiled linseed oil.
- Cover tightly and shake well. (Mixture keeps indefinitely.)
- Spread thick layer of newspapers on floor.
- Heat some water and pour into dish. Set dish on saucer.
- Shake cleanser-conditioner and pour enough into dish to cover surface of water. Do not stir.

CAUTION: Cleanser-conditioner is flammable. Keep away from hot surfaces or open flames.

APPLICATION OF CLEANSER-CONDITIONER

- Dip cloth into floating oil mixture.
- Apply on small area. Avoid getting excess moisture in joints or glued areas. (Glue will soften.)
- If there is a buildup of dirt, dip 3/0 steel wool into mixture and rub lightly.
- Wring out clean cloth with clear, warm water and wipe furniture surface. (Wring dry for shellac surfaces.)

NOTE: Discard mixture when water becomes cold. Do not reheat because mixture is flammable and also becomes gummy. Go to final rub if luster needs restoring. Ask for fact sheet "Wood Finishes — Final Rub: Pumice and Oil, L-1023.) See address and phone number below to obtain this fact sheet.

DUSTING

Use a tack rag (treated cloth which removes fine dust) for regular dusting. This may be purchased at a hardware store.

POLISHING

Since occasional polishing helps to restore the finish, select a good quality polish or make your own inexpensive polish. To obtain a copy of directions for making a good quality furniture polish call or write to me in the following manner and ask for Fact Sheet number L-1020, "Cleaning Wood Finishes" Sharon A. Hillis, Midland County Extension Agent, P.O. Box 1070, Midland, Texas 79702. For more information, call 682-9481, extension 436. (Note: Our regular extension 433 is STILL inoperable at this time.)

Plastic surgery on the uprise

By LUCRETIA STEIGER
Copley News Service

Appearing on prime-time television while you're living through a "nose job" might have been impossible at one time.

But not today. Now it takes about two weeks of vacation time, a couple of weeks of a snuffy nose, and you're remodeled enough so that everybody thinks you look "better," not different.

That's the way it was for one of San Diego's TV news reporters who broke her nose at age 10, and finally had the resulting bump on the bridge removed several weeks ago.

"I think that I look a lot better now," the young woman says, asking that her name not be used, "but people still don't know I had it done. I look the same from the front, but different from the side now. And on television, you don't do much from the side. The most reaction has come from photographers, they think I look much better now.

"I took two weeks off from work and when I came back I had some swelling about the nose, but I could still do my 'stand-ups,' where you stand and talk into the camera. The first week after surgery I was up and walking around with a bandage on my nose, the second week, I was out and exercising."

That's the way it is today, says Dr. Tom Vecchione, president-elect of the San Diego International Plastic Surgery Society. Today nose remodeling doesn't take much time in surgery or in recovery.

That's a definite change from 6th century India when surgeons first used a flap of skin from the forehead to rebuild noses which had been amputated, the penalty paid by wives suspected of being unfaithful. They used a nose structure formed of silver, then covered it with tissue. The straight line scar on the forehead eventually filled in, Vecchione says.

Styles in nose remodeling keep changing, too. Fifteen years ago, common practice was to "thin out the nose at the top and pick it up at the tip so that it looked like a pug nose," Vecchione says.

But now plastic surgeons favor a more conservative approach, making each nose as individual as its owner, or "like the original nose, but more pleasing in contour."

And the old idea of remodeling a nose to a movie star ideal, or to a certain surgeon's style ("you can tell his noses anywhere") is not valid anymore, he says.

Work on the nose is often done to facilitate breathing.

"Breathing is the nose's No. 1 function," Vecchione says, "don't forget that." Such problems as constant sinus trouble, which may mean that the tissues at the outlet of the sinuses in the nose are too thick or that the nasal cartilages are twisted, can be corrected surgically. Reconstructive surgery on the nose is often necessary after an accident and sometimes after extreme dental work.

A rhinoplasty, or nose remodeling, is the second most common plastic surgery performed in this country, the doctor says, with the first being mammaplasty, or augmentation of the breasts. And a new cosmetic procedure, cheek implants for a more visible "high" cheekbone, is being performed.

That's a case where a plastic surgeon must be "very selective," Vecchione says, because the implant can move and change position in the cheek or start to work out of the face.

For a cheek implant, the surgeon cuts a tunnel in the cheek area and inserts a silicone or plastic block, suturing it in place. But if the patient is "not a good candidate for such work," the surgeon may be unable to do the surgery.

Usually the prospective rhinoplasty patient visits the doctor with the idea of getting his or her nose whittled down to a smaller version, but what the plastic surgeon can do is "limited to working with what you've got there," Vecchione says.

Working from the inside with tiny rasps and saws, the surgeon can recontour or rearrange tissues. Files and chisels are used to pare down the cartilage, or remove extra tissue inside the nose to "reshape the scaffolding of the nose."

Local anesthetic is used. Shots are given around the nose and it is packed with anesthetic after the work, which takes about one or two hours. Vecchione compares it with "a dentist working on molars." Most nose remodeling jobs are done in a medical office facility with equipment to monitor the patient's recovery time of several hours.

A splint is put on the nose for three or four days after surgery. Work on the nose sometimes is included with a face-lift "if there's not a lot to be done," the surgeon says. He begins his study of possible nose work by considering the person's facial structure and body build. The nose must fit in with the general image.

"Consider the nose itself. When we look at someone, we first see their eyes, then our gaze slides down the nose to the mouth.

"After puberty is almost always the youngest age at which nose remodeling can be done. The size and shape of the nose during the before-puberty growth period cannot be adequately predicted. Girls usually are 15 or 16, with boys around 17 or so before nose work can be successfuly undertaken.

"Fifteen years ago, remodeling of the nose was more radical, and most noses were made into pug noses. But today the good surgeon shapes the nose into its own best individualistic look."

In cases where the nose is too flat, or has a squashed-down look, bone, cartilage or plastic grafts can be used. Nostrils can be made smaller, and the tip of the nose can be turned up. Sometimes the entire nose is "too high" or too large, and this can be cut down.

Having such work done usually results in changes in the person's attitude toward himself or herself, he says. They become "confident, happy with themselves. They feel good about themselves."

Most insurance plans will not pay for the cost of cosmetic nose remodeling, which ranges from about $1,000 to $2,500, but will pay for work necessary for "genuine breathing problems," Vecchione says.

Updated techniques in denistry improving teeth care without cost

CHICAGO (AP) — Improving your smile no longer automatically means extensive dental treatment with crowns or caps placed on your front teeth. Instead, there are other dental techniques which offer affordable and practical alternatives, an American Dental Association scientist suggests.

Modern aesthetic procedures may be the answer if your problem is teeth that are seriously stained, or gaps or chipped areas, or defects in the tooth's enamel, according to Dr. John Stanford of Chicago, secretary of the ADA's council on dental material, instruments and equipment.

When teeth are badly discolored, perhaps as the result of childhood use of certain antibiotics for high fever treatment, bleaching may be an effective therapy. Lightening teeth darkened by age or hereditary factors can also be accomplished through bleaching, and in many cases even dark-yellow or orange-brown teeth can be improved, he said.

If imperfections of your front teeth such as cracks or chips bother you, a technique called "bonding" is gaining increasing popularity. In this process, color-matched composite resin plastics are used to fill in or paint over imperfections to the point of totally reshaping the tooth. It's a relatively quick and inexpensive procedure, Stanford said.

Although bonding, also known by its scientific name as "acid etch technique," has been in use for about 10 years, its value was formally recognized in 1972 when the ADA first granted provisional acceptance of plastic resin materials. These materials, known as pit and fissure sealants, were used on children's back teeth to seal them off against cavities, he explained.

When bonding is used to improve the aesthetics in certain patients, it offers three key advantages over the conventional crowning technique, Stanford points out.

First, the average fee for bonding generally runs about one-third to one-half the price of a crown. Second, with bonding, four of a patient's front teeth could probably be treated in a single visit, compared with three or four visits for just one crown. Third, bonding may not involve drilling and therefore would not cause any discomfort.

On the other hand, the resin material may wear off or discolor and the process may need to be repeated in a few years, Stanford said. It is also sometimes difficult to achieve the right color match.

While more expensive and requiring more visits to the dental office, crowns are more permanent and may still be the recommended treatment in many cases.

For very badly misshapen front teeth, still another technique using thin acrylic shells or veneers may hold promise in certain cases, Stanford notes.

The tooth-shaped acrylic shells are shaded to match adjoining teeth or to blend with the patient's complexion. The shells are attached to the front surface of the tooth using the bonding technique and a composite resin material, Stanford explains.

Although this technique provides a minimum of discomfort and chair time for the patient, Stanford cautions that it may not be a long-lasting restoration, and the process may have to be repeated.

Remembering: Hints on storing trivia in memory

By JOANNE RODGERS
Science Writer, Hearst Feature Service

With summer's end, most of us must get our minds out of vacation neutral and restart our learning and memory engines.

Brain chemistry may one day give us a "memory pill" to swallow with our orange juice. But for now, say memory experts, we all have to work at remembering what's important to us. These tips may help.

Pay attention. Ferociously. "Probably the most important thing a person can do to improve memory," says University of Washington psychologist Elizabeth Loftus.

But concentration is a faded skill for most adults. Consider the ordinary telephone dial, seen and used thousands of times. Which letters are missing? Which numbers have no corresponding letters? The answers: Q and Z, and 1 and zero.

Typically, such information has been backgrounded into memory oblivion. Focus hard on what you want to remember.

Put a personal stamp on impersonal information. This also makes what you remember more resistant to distortion and deliberate manipulation. If you see an accident involving a red-haired driver who runs a stop light and your daughter has red hair, think about that and the chances are good you'll remember all the details of the accident better.

Walk through a situation when possible. In a hotel for the first time? Take a trip from your room to the fire escape, touching each door and wall, counting steps and repeating the process in your head. If there's a fire, your recall is far more likely to get you out fast than instructions on a wall. Your body will remember the walk.

Repeat and rehearse. Robert Bjork of University of California at Los Angeles and Tom Landauer of Bell Laboratories developed this technique for learning new names. After meeting Jim Jones, say "Hello, Jim Jones, glad to meet you," including the full name in the greeting. Moments later, look at the person and say the name and repeat several times within the next few minutes.

Exercise your memory. People become so used to writing ideas down, memory skills go to flab. Make a point of using memory.

Store items in your memory in an order that will aid recall. UCLA's Bjork has found that people recall a whole list of things better — as well as more things on the list — when they report first the items learned last and recall the easy things in a list first.

Rehearse new information to be remembered in an uneven fashion. For a new name, rehearse it the first time within a few seconds, the second time four or five minutes later, the third time 15 or 20 minutes after that. This is in contrast to even rehearsal (every five minutes) or contracting rehearsal (in 15 minutes, then 10, then five and so on). The uneven technique seems to work best.

Take breaks when studying. Experiments suggest that somewhere between 15 and 45 minutes is the best amount of time to spend at any given memory task without a break.

Breaks should last five to 10 minutes and should be a total rest from study. Also, warm up to new material, even when you come back from a break. Review previous knowledge and gradually shift into the new material.

Keep stress low, but don't try to eliminate it. Stress improves memory but heavy anxiety fades it. Just before a test is no time to cut your long hair to a crew or sue your spouse for divorce.

Carbon black

AKRON, Ohio (AP) — Carbon black is an unglamorous commodity that makes rubber tires perform better, helps print the news and is essential to hundreds of other products, from mascara to microprocessors.

According to Morris Speck of Phillips Chemical, "Carbon black also goes into plastics, flashlight batteries, carbon paper, polishes, greases, paints, fertilizers, propellants, deodorizers, leather finishes, chemical catalysts and a seemingly endless list of other applications.

"The rubber industry consumes 94 percent of all carbon black, mostly in tires and other automotive applications," he said.

Hawaiian pineapple

HONOLULU (AP) — Pineapple farming was introduced commercially on the island of Oahu 78 years ago.

Today pineapple growing in Hawaii is a $154 million-a-year buiness and employs 12,000 people in this 50th U.S. state, reports Del Monte.

Del Monte's Hawaiian plantations now grow 60 percent of their pineapple crop for canning and 40 percent for the fresh market.

Dreams, biofeedback used to fight cancer

By ALLEN K. SHORT
Associated Press Writer

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — It was more than a dream to the 53-year-old physicist. It helped him climb mountains and, for a time, survive the ravages of cancer.

Every day he dreamed the dream: The heros were knights in armor, mounted on white steeds and armed with long white lances. A column of knights stretched as far as the mind's eye could see. White banners affixed to their spears fluttered in a steady breeze.

In his meditation, a trumpet sounded, lances were raised. Then a second trumpet, and the knights charged and the thunder of thousands of hooves resounded through the physicist's imagination.

They lowered their lances and speared millions of small, furry creatures who lived in a land the physicist called the "Cancer Plain."

After retreating, the knights, their lances heavy with the slain creatures, dropped their quarry into a swift, green river that flowed along the edge of the plain. The dead animals popped and disintegrated when they hit the surface. Their remains were carried away by the current.

One day, his knights failed to return with their quota of creatures. The physicist worried. Something was wrong, he told his physicians.

In fact, nothing was wrong. The malignant tumor in the physicist's pancreas had decreased in size after radiation and chemotherapy. The reason his knights — white blood cells — weren't killing their quota of cancer cells was that there weren't many left to kill.

The physicist relaxed and promised to lower his knights' quota. His cancer remained in remission for the next two years as he resumed a near-normal life at his home in Boulder, Colo.

No longer an invalid, he could again rappel and traverse the snow-capped Rocky Mountains, his favorite hobby. He lived three years after doctors told him he could expect only 12 more months.

The physicist is perhaps the most poignant example of the success of an unconventional cancer therapy program devised by Fort Worth psychotherapist Stephanie Matthews-Simonton. She declined to name her patient out of concern for his family's privacy.

Working with oncologists — physicians who specialize in the diagnosis and treatment of cancer — Ms. Matthews-Simonton encourages her patients to visualize the battle taking place in their bodies between cancerous cells and white blood cells during radiation and chemotherapy.

Imagery is a major part of the therapy. For the physicist, the white lances represented radiation that pierced the tumor in his pancreas. The toxic green river was symbolic of the drugs administered to him during chemotherapy. The "Cancer Plain" was the flat, oblong surface of his diseased pancreas.

The program isn't intended as a substitute for traditional cancer therapy, but as an adjunct to radiation and drug treatments, said Ms. Matthews-Simonton. An outgrowth of the biofeedback research of the early and mid-1970's, it is designed to unleash a patient's mental powers against the onslaught of cancer.

Ms. Matthews-Simonton and her associate, Fort Worth radiation oncologist Dr. O. Carl Simonton, began to suspect 10 years ago that phsychological factors influence a person's susceptibility to cancer.

"We asked ourselves, 'If we intervene emotionally, can we turn that susceptibility around?'"

Biofeedback researchers had already discovered that people could exercise limited control over certain aspects of the human physiology, such as heart rate and blood pressure.

But in biofeedback, a major tool was the heart rate monitor, a mechanical means of allowing a patient to check his success. No such devise existed for monitoring a patient's control over his immune system, a crucial part of the body's defense against cancer. Oncologists believe a person's susceptibility to cancer increases when the body's immune system fails to function or is overcome by unknown factors.

One of those factors, Ms. Matthews-Simonton believes, is the psyche. She decided to use X-rays of the affected tumor as a monitor by which the patient could follow his progress.

Most of her early research was conducted at the University of Oregon Medical Center in Portland. There, her first patient, a 61-year-old man with terminal throat cancer, was asked to use imagery three times a day as part of his six-week radiation therapy. Picturing them as a pack of starving dogs, the man unleashed his "hungry" white blood cells on a chunk of raw ground beef — the tumor in his throat.

The man's life expectancy was short — less than a year. Near the end of the therapy, however, his physicians noticed that the normal side effects of heavy radiation were absent. The patient's life expectancy was increased. He asked his doctors to administer the radiation earlier in the day so he could spend his afternoons fishing.

"I suppose if he hadn't responded, we might have dropped the theory right there," said Ms. Matthews-Simonton.

But the notion that one can affect the outcome of cancer — that cancer may be partly the result of a person giving up on life and thus weakening his body's immune responses — is often a difficult one to swallow, she said.

Imagine the feeling among family members who are told that Grandma Emma's cancer stems in part from her will to die. "No one wants to admit that they might be part of the reason for her inability to cope," said Ms. Matthews-Simonton.

Yet, she said those who struggle with their disease, refusing to accept death as inevitable, are also those who respond best to imagery therapy. Ironically, physicians frequently describe this kind of cantankerous patient as ill-adjusted to his fate.

"The sweet, nice, giving person is the one who has the most difficulty overcoming the disease," she said.

Frequently, she said, the will to live subsides after a person suffers a major trauma, such as the loss of a loved one, a perceived failure to reach career goals, or a divorce. This is especially true among people who fit a "cancer profile" produced 10 years ago in a study at Johns Hopkins University Medical School in Baltimore, Matthews-Simonton said.

Typically, the profiled patient perceived a lack of closeness to his parents as a child. The patient reacted to the problem by becoming docile in an effort to become a model child. As an adult, the patient tends to fixate upon one primary love object — symbolic of his mother, Matthews-Simonton believes — whether that object is a mate or another loved one or even a career.

A study of 250 patients who underwent Matthews-Simonton's therapy at the Cancer Counseling and Research Center in Fort Worth showed an average life expectancy of twice the normal prognosis, she said. That is, if a patient was expected to live no more than two years at the outset of therapy, he usually lived for four years after the use of imagery.

Matthews-Simonton's work has attracted interest from groups such as the American Cancer Society and has spawned at least one other, similar cancer treatment center at Denver's Presbyterian Medical Center.

The American Cancer Society has invited her and Simonton to present their work to a gathering of medical writers. The Denver hospital consulted with them extensively before setting up its "Cancer Self-Help Center."

Ms. Matthews-Simonton said the therapy isn't for everyone.

"Taking responsibility for your life on a physical level is too much for some people to handle," she said. "Cancer is a disease of our society. One of its components is a person's inability to cope."

HINTS FROM HELOISE

Repeat of biscuit mix recipe requested

DEAR HELOISE:

I am hoping you will help me out as I am in need of the recipe you published for a biscuit mix.

It can be prepared ahead of time, then liquid added as needed.

I made a batch of it and really liked it — the biscuits were great — but I've misplaced the recipe.

Which is why I'm saying, "Help!" — Joan Bowen

+ + +

Can't say that I blame you for hollering for help if that recipe is nowhere to be found, 'cause once you've tasted these delectable delights, they're hard to give up. Which might serve as a warning to all those who are watching their waistlines.

Oh, well, we'll think about that tomorrow — after breakfast! Here 'tis:

Mix together eight cups all-purpose flour, one-third cup baking powder, two teaspoons salt and eight teaspoons sugar (optional).

With a pastry blender, cut in one cup shortening to a very fine consistency.

Store in covered airtight containers. This mixture will stay fresh for quite some time in your cupboard or, will stay fresh for months if refrigerated.

To make the biscuits, just add one-third cup milk for every cup of biscuit mix. Mix well, roll out on a floured board and cut. Bake in a 425F oven until lightly browned. You can also use this mix for pancakes, etc.

That's all there is to it, luvs. See you tomorrow. — Heloise

POLISH PALAVER

Dear Heloise: Instead of using a more expensive product made especially to dry nail polish in a hurry (it's used in most salons) use a non-stick cooking oil spray instead.

I have tested the spray several times and the results were always satisfactory. — Gail Palma

+ + +

I agree that the spray is an excellent substitute. Plain ol' cooking oil works well, too.

Put it into a clean fingernail polish bottle and brush it on after allowing your polish to set one minute.

T.V. TRAY TRICK

Dear Heloise: Put a small piece of adhesive tape on the side you would pull to open a T.V. tray. (Place it on the leg.)

No more opening the wrong side and having the legs fall to the floor. — Mrs. Pauline Dalton

DUST DUSTER

Dear Heloise: Toothbrushes are handy cleaning aides, but so are one or two-inch-wide paint brushes.

Great for brushing dust from plants (especially cactus), those hard-to-clean window crevices, or furniture carvings. Plus, they have so many more uses! — Gwen

HOLEY SOCKS

Dear Heloise: Stitch up holes in socks on your sewing machine, trimming off the excess seam.

Easier and quicker than sitting and darning. Works especially well on thick tube socks. — G.

GRATING CHEESE

Dear Heloise: When grating cheese, put the grater into a plastic bag, and grate the cheese into it. There is no mess, no extra bowl to wash, etc.

The bag is also a convenient place to store the grated cheese. This also works well when making bread crumbs. — Mrs. J.W. Swanson

NYLON NET AGAIN

Dear Heloise: When potting plants and you don't have access to pebbles or such to keep the soil in, just cut a few thicknesses of nylon net — a little larger than the bottom of the pot. Push down and hold it in place with a small amount of soil, then go ahead and pot your plant.

This is especially good for those plastic pots with large holes or slots around the sides. The net keeps the dirt from leaking out, but excess water drains readily.

The roots can grow through the net too, and the net doesn't rot or get moldy. — Mrs. B.D.

COOKIE CUE

Dear Heloise: For round cookies, pack the dough tightly into clean, frozen orange juice cans. Cover the opened end and refrigerate.

After chilling, open the other end with a can opener and use this cut-out end piece to gently push out the dough, then cut the dough to the desired thickness as it is pushed from the can.

The cookies are perfectly round and perfectly beautiful. — Carmelle Monette

CLEAN SHOWER CURTAINS

Dear Heloise: When plastic shower curtains get grimy-looking, and develop a film and mildew spots, toss them into the washing machine with some white terry towels.

Just fill your machine with warm water, add detergent and about a half-cup of liquid chlorine bleach. Let the machine run a few seconds, then put in the shower curtains and three or four bath towels to help buff the curtains.

The grimy build-up and mold will be gone by the time the wash cycle is finished. — Missy Malone

+ + +

Pop the curtain into the dryer for a few minutes on a low setting to get out any wrinkles. — Heloise

HANDS HELPER

Dear Heloise: Those blisters us softies get from raking leaves, dethatching lawns, etc., can be eliminated by wearing two pairs of gloves.

I wear an old pair of pigskin ones, with cotton garden gloves over them. No blisters on the palms of my hands — not even a red mark!

Apparently the two gloves prevents friction on the skin.

But, my arms still hurt... — Myron Chard

Valium ads feature 'talking pill'

By ALLAN PARACHINI
(c) 1981, The Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — When the makers of Valium decided a few months ago to launch an advertising campaign in which they made their pill "talk," they hoped then that they could convince doctors that a great deal of bad publicity about the popular tranquilizer was untrue.

Here would be Valium, pleading for better understanding — appealing to physicians for another chance, imploring the medical community to end the pill's anxiety over whether it is truly accepted.

The ads have never been seen by the general public because advertising prescription drugs directly to the public is illegal.

Nevertheless, they have been widely circulated in trade magazines and newspapers catering to physicians — the people who generally decide what to prescribe for the drug-buying public.

Within the last eight weeks, however, the U.S. Food and Drug Administration has told Valium's manufacturer, Hoffmann-La Roche Inc., that it made erroneous and "selective" claims in the controversial ads, which are written in the first person singular as "letters" from the pill itself.

The FDA, the Los Angeles Times has learned, has ordered Hoffmann-La Roche to:

—Stop implying, in an ad headlined "Feelings vs. Facts," that Valium is incapable of causing addiction when used across the full range of recommended doses. The FDA and other authorities say Valium can be addicting, even at some recommended dosage levels.

—Start inserting in detailed copy blocks that accompany the "talking pill" letters a sentence conceding that the kind of anxiety and tension normally associated with the "stress of everyday life" usually requires no treatment with tranquilizers at all.

Although it says it stands by the ads as they were originally written, Hoffmann-La Roche — better known in the industry as Roche — has agreed to comply with the FDA orders. The FDA rejected Roche's first revision to clarify the addiction reference, although the advertising agency handling the account and the company have come to terms on a second draft.

Behind the controversy is, again, the question of how much tranquilizer medication is too much for the American public. The controversy touches, as well, on drug industry economics.

Since it was patented in 1963, Valium has emerged as the most widely used prescription drug in the United States. While it still clings to the No. 1 position in sales, Valium has been in a precipitous commercial and medical decline since about 1975, when the federal government imposed some restrictions on its marketing.

Those restrictions came in response to growing concern that Americans were popping far too many of the whole family of pills called "minor tranquilizers." As a result, Valium sales have slipped, a Roche official said, from $280 million just before the federal crackdown, to $203 million in 1980.

The skid, analysts pointed out, is ven larger than the money figures imply because several price increases have been instituted for Valium durng the same period.

The total number of prescriptions written for Valium tumbled from 61.5 million in 1975 to 39 million in 1979, according to private and government analysts. Some estimates for 1980 are as low as 33.9 million.

The trend has not come as welcome news for Roche. The company believes, said Dr. Bruce Medd, Roche's assistant vice president, that many doctors are now afraid, because of the bad publicity, to prescribe Valium for patients who could benefit from it.

Early this year, Medd said, Roche decided that what was needed was an imaginative ad campaign directed at physicians. It would try to clean up Valium's tarnished image. Sales could be bolstered in the process.

Roche decided to have the ad copy written in the first person, as if Valium itself was talking to the nation's doctors. Three ads were developed, headlined "Examine Me," "Think About This" and "Feelings vs. Facts."

"During the past several years, I have heard my name mentioned in movies, on television and radio talk shows and even at Senate subcommittee sessions," reads the opening paragraph of "Examine Me." "Lately, whenever I see or hear the phrases 'overmedicated society,' 'overuse,' 'misuse' and 'abuse,' my name is one of the reference points. Sometimes even the reference point."

The reference to Senate subcommittee sprang from a 1979 hearing in which a widely known psychiatrist told a Senate health subcommittee that Valium was "addictive." The physician, Dr. Joseph Pursch, was at the time head of the drug and alcohol ab7se treatment program at the Long Beach, Calif., Naval Hospital.

Pursch, who enjoys a nationwide reputation in his field, asserted that alcoholism and use of tranquilizers — the two are often used together by patients who are unaware they form a deadly combination — makes up the nation's top health problem.

In each of the three ads, Valium, "speaking" in the first person, tells doctors that it's a bad rap.

"The FACT is that approximately 8 million people, or about 5 percent of the U.S. adult population, will use me during the current year," the copy for the Valium ad, "Feelings vs. Facts," says. "An extensive national survey conluded that Americans who do use tranquilizers have substantial justification as evidenced by their high levels of anxiety.

"So," concludes the ad "Think About This," "when you read or hear sensationalized reports about me, or when patients express unwarranted fear about taking me, think about this: No other tranquilizer has been proven more effective or safer for your patients than I, Valium."

Roche placed the ads in publications like Medical World News, a magazine catering to physicians, and American Medical News, the official weekly newspaper of the American Medical Association.

Medd said the ads were "part of a series of educational advertisements that we have been running for the last few years dealing with the appropriate use of minor tranquilizers, and specifically Valium.

"It is only unique in the sense that it (the campaign) takes a little bit of a different approach, being in the first person singular."

Before long, however, the ad campaign was involved in a dispute over whether the attempt to clean up Valium's image had itself indulged in misstatement, omission and false claims.

In April, the FDA's division of drug advertising and labeling formally notified Roche that a required supporting text — called the "brief summary" — was unacceptable because it neglected to mention that tranquilizers are inappropriate for use in cases of anxiety and tension associated with everyday stress.

Then in June, the Valium ads caught the eye of Dr. Sidney Wolfe, who heads the Ralph Nader-affiliated Health Research Group in Washington.

Wolfe filed a formal, 16-page protest with the FDA contending that the entire Valium campaign was "false and misleading." Moreover, Wolfe accused Roche in the complaint of becoming "a white-collar dope pusher seeking new victims."

Medd replied to Wolfe's characterization of the company: "My attitude about that statement is obviously very negative. The messages are accurate." Chief among Wolfe's complaints was a paragraph in the "Feelings vs. Facts" ad that contends:

"Mor3over, I do not cause physical dependence if the recommended dosage and therapeutic regimen are followed under careful physician supervision. However, I can produce dependence if patients do not follow their physicians' directions and take me for prolonged periods, at dosages that exceed the therapeutic range."

"These statements are manifestly untrue," contended Wolfe's complaint. His letter, to Dr. Arthur Hayes, the FDA commissioner, cited a plethora of medical studies of the addiction potential of Valium and other members of the tranquilizer family known chemically as the benzodiazepines. The group of drugs includes diazepam (Valium's chemical name) and such familiar preparations as Librium and Tranxene.

Eventually, the FDA's Bureau of Drugs called a special meeting at FDA headquarters in Rockville, Md., to consider Wolfe's complaints and the Valium ad campaign in general.

The agency agreed that the ad "gave the impression that it (Valium) was not physically addicting," said Kenneth R. Feather, the bureau's assistant director. So, in July, the FDA told Roche to change the offending ad.

Roche offered a revision. The FDA, Feather said, rejected it. Then, just over a week ago, Roche proposed a second change that the FDA, Feather said, intends to accept. The corrected ads, Feather said, should begin to appear "rather quickly."

Roche is clearly concerned that the controversy over the Valium ads might compound the very public relations image problem the talking pill ads were intended to correct. Medd, interviewed by telephone from Switzerland where he was attending a medical meeting, declined to parry Wolfe's sarcasm.

"I think we would have stayed with the ('Feelings vs. Facts') ad if the attention had not been brought by Sidney Wolfe," Medd commented.

"The original wording was accurate, but in advertising, you don't go into the depth that you would in a package insert (labeling that sets forth all FDA-required data for a drug). What we say is supported by fact.

"But the FDA has requested that a modification be made and we've agreed (to make one) that we have been able to write so that it's still in that first person singular. It's still Valium talking."

Medd said that the downturn in Valium sales is part of a trend in medicine and one that follows the normal pattern for the s$les life of a drug. "I think a lot of it has to do with improved understanding and knowledge of the management of patients with anxiety," he said.

Among techniques that Medd said have emerged as useful are better communication between doctor and patient, r3ligion, athletics and even biofeedback. However, Medd said, Roche still believes that about a quarter of all patients who seek medical care suffer from anxiety.

In all, Medd characterized the criticisms of Valium and its potential for abuse as largely anecdotal — not based on scientific study. "We have spent a lot of time and a lot of effort trying to document the actual abuse of Valium," he said. "The actual number of documented cases is extremely small."

But other medical authorities take a different view.

The government's national Drug Abuse Warning Network, for instance, which surveys hospital emergency rooms and coroners' offices for involvement of drugs in abuse and death said that, for 1979, Valium ranked number two on the list of the top 20 drugs reported as resulting in hospital emergency room visits and number five of the top 20 related to deaths handled by coroners.

The network estimated that Valium was involved in 930 drug deaths in 1979.

The rankings are only slightly below those for 1976 and 1977, when Valium was number one in emergency rooms and four in coroners' offices. However, the number of em3rgency room visits more than doubled by 1979 and the number of deaths nearly tripled — a trend, experts said, reflecting not necessarily decreasing Valium abuse but increasing misuse of all manner of drugs.

Medd said Roche "cannot, obviously, be there every time a physician is prescribing Valium. "You really get to a certain point where if the physician is in control of prescribing it, that is his or her decision."

Pottery piece is nice collectible

By JAMES G. MCCOLLAM
Copley News Service

Dear Mr. McCollam: Would you please identify and evaluate this piece of pottery which came from an old home in North Carolina?

It is 24 inches long and 10 inches wide. The color is yellow green on top and a red clay color on the bottom — A.W., Parsippany, N.J.

Dear A.W.: This is an Art Nouveau piece modeled by hand in a small ceramic studio in this country. Apparently, the upper surface was yellow green glaze over terra cotta.

This is an exceptionally nice collectible and appears to be in good condition. The value would be in the $200 to $300 range. It dates back to the 1900 era.

Dear Mr. McCollam: This chair was bought at an auction and represented to be 19th century Burmese. It is solid teak and elaborately hand-carved with an upholstered seat cushion.

Can you confirm the source of this chair and tell me what it is worth? — N.W.L., Palm Springs, Calif.

Dear N.W.L.: This looks like other furniture made in Burma for export to the Western world.

It was probably made in the late 1800s and should be worth from $500 to $1,000.

Groom plays golf before ceremony

WESTON, Mass. (AP) — Carol Anthony got to be a golfing widow before she was even married.

Her bridegroom, Andy Meyer, and three others in his party, all togged in tuxedos, played a fast nine holes before the wedding ceremony Saturday.

"When we got up, we decided there was time for a quick nine," said Paul Duddy, one of Meyer's ushers.

Meyer, 30, formerly of Waltham and now an office manager in Dallas, usually shoots a 45 on a nine-hole course, but hit 41 on Saturday, Duddy said.

Meyer's 25-year-old bride was at her mother's house during that final bit of bachelor carousing.

"We didn't tell her," said Duddy. "She can't stand golf and we didn't want her to worry that we'd get our tuxedos dirty."

Best man Dan Richardson of Norwell won with a score of 37. The other member of the foursome was Rob Wilber of Swampscott.

And, yes, said Duddy, they all made it to the church on time.

Garwood seeks back pay

By ESTES THOMPSON
Associated Press Writer

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. (AP) — Robert Garwood, the Marine private convicted of collaborating with the enemy in Vietnam, is seeking payment of $147,000 in back pay on grounds he wasn't a deserter.

Garwood's attorney, John C. Lowe of Charlottesville, takes the case to a military hearing officer here today in a two-year-old effort to collect the pay held for Garwood for nearly 14 years.

Lowe said the case will be presented formally to the hearing officer at the Army Judge Advocate General's School at the University of Virginia Law School.

Although Lowe expects the procedure to be routine, the Pentagon has said it expects the closed hearing to last two days.

"There's not going to be any witnesses or anything like that. ... We're saying basically the trial record shows he's entitled to his back pay," Lowe said.

Although the hearing may be a short affair, Lowe said, it may be months before Garwood, 35, learns whether he will recive his back pay.

After the hearing officer reviews some 4,000 pages of testimony from Garwood's court-martial earlier this year, a recommendation will be made to the secretary of the Navy.

Vaughan Taylor, a Jacksonville, N.C., attorney also involved in the case, said Garwood applied for the back pay two years ago.

"The legal issue is whether or not under a federal statute he is entitled to his back pay," Taylor said. "The whole issue is whether he is a deserter or was absent without leave."

Garwood, an Indiana native who came here shortly after his trial for psychiatric treatment, was captured by the North Vietnamese on Sept. 28, 1965, and released March 22, 1979.

He learned on his return to the United States that other U.S. prisoners had accused him of collaborating with the North Vietnamese and of verbally and physically abusing fellow prisoners of war.

After months of pre-trial hearings and a 13-week military trial at Camp Lejeune, N.C., a jury of five Marine officers convicted Garwood Feb. 5 of five counts of collaborating with the enemy and assaulting a fellow prisoner.

Other charges against Garwood, including desertion, were dismissed during the court-martial.

The jury dishonorably discharged Garwood from the Marines, reduced his rank from private first class to private and ordered him to forfeit all pay and allowances from the date of the conviction.

Garwood is on leave pending an appeal of the Marine Corps conviction and retains his rank and status until the appeal process is exhausted.

His lawyers never disputed testimony by POWs during the trial. They claimed, instead, that Garwood was driven insane by his captors through years of torture and brainwashing.

After the military trial, Garwood was acquitted of a civilian charge in Jacksonville, N.C., of sexually molesting a 7-year-old girl, the daughter of a family that befriended him.

MENTAL HEALTH UPDATE

Counselors to be licensed by 1982

By KENNETH H. WOLF, MSSW, SP

QUESTION: What are the legal qualifications for counselors and psychologists? Is it true that just about anyone can call himself a counselor or psychologist? If so, how is the public protected from untrained or unethical people?

ANSWER: The legal regulation of counselors and psychologists is up to each individual state. In Texas, before a person can call himself a psychologist, he must be licensed by the Board of Examiners in Psychology. To be licensed as a psychologist a person must possess a certain degree of training and supervised experience, as well as passing a licensing examination. In Texas licensed psychologists generally have the Doctor of Philosophy (Ph.D.) or Doctor of Education (Ed.D.) degree. There are a few fully licensed psychologists with only a Masters Degree.

Texas also regulates the practice of social psychotherapy. Before a person can call himself a social psychotherapist, he also must meet certain training and experience requirements, together with passing a licensing examination.

Licensing laws generally protect the public by weeding out the untrained person and by providing a system of control over the licensed person's professional behavior. Members of the public can communicate with the licensing boards to express grievances and complaints against individual licensees. These complaints are then investigated and appropriate actions are taken.

Texas does not regulate the activities of "counselors." This means that virtually anyone can call himself a counselor, or anything else which is not regulated by a licensing law. Examples of non-regulated terms include counselor, therapist, family therapist and marital counselor. The fact that these people are not licensed does not mean that they are unqualified to provide the services that they offer. What it does mean is that the state has not seen fit to subject these servies to state licensing. If non-licensed personnel practice in agency settings, the agencies involved provide a degree of protection to the public from incompetent or unethical practitioners. If non-licensed personnel are in private practice, the consumer should carefully inquire into the person's training and experience.

During the recent sessions of the Texas legislature, bills were passed which will certify social workers and counselors in the state beginning in 1982. At that time, these two professional labels will also be under some form of state licensing control, such that non-licensed people will not be able to use these terms.

There is a certain difficulty with licensing professions such as counseling, psychotherapy, social work, and psychology because the licensing law has to be written in such a way as to clearly define the practice which it is supposed to be regulating. Since there is a great deal of overlap in the functioning of counselors, therapists, social workers, and psychologists, many of the licensing laws have been written to regulate only the use of the professional title, rather than attempt to define and regulate the practice of the profession itself.

Even when a person is licensed to practice his speciality, the consumer should be aware that there are going to be a certain number of "bad apples" with licenses. The number of these is not large, but the consumer can best protect himsef by asking questions about the person, his training, and his experience.

Future of afternoon papers in U.S. called into question

By BENJAMIN SHORE
Copley News Service

Washington - The death of the Washington Star after 128 years of publication and threat to quit publication by the Philadelphia Bulletin have raised many questions about the future of afternoon newspapers in the United States. There are few pat answers.

Time Inc. bought the ailing Star in 1978 for $20 million. When the publishing conglomerate finally threw in the towel with its last press run on Aug. 7, it had lost $65 million more trying to make the Star financially successful.

The word went out that afternoon newspapers cannot be saved, especially in large cities that also have morning papers. But enough examples abound across the country to provide exceptions to that premise.

The Times Mirror Co., for example, spent $95 million earlier this year to buy the Denver Post, the afternoon competitor of the city's morning Rocky Mountain News.

Afternoon newspapers in Houston, San Jose and elsewhere are doing very well.

YET THEIR counterparts in Philadelphia, Cleveland, St. Louis and other major cities are struggling.

Taken as a group, they reflect a general decline, if not in circulation, then in advertising revenue (the lifeblood of a newspaper) or profitability.

But this is where easy comparisons end, for each newspaper exists in a unique situation. Financial troubles for newspapers are like cancers in humans: The types are quite varied, the threat often depends on how early the cancer is detected, and the success of the cure can turn on such things as the skill of the doctor, the treatment that is available and the overall condition of the cancer's environment -- the patient's body.

In Minneapolis, when the afternoon Star lost its dominance to the morning Tribune, the Star responded by spending millions on improving its presentation of news. A new editor was brought in, a new appearance was designed, a new style of reporting and writing was adopted. Yet, despite this "cure" and the talented "doctors" who applied it, the afternoon paper is no better off financially.

BUT WHILE THERE is both death and life in the afternoon newspaper field, the trend of the past decade has been toward a generally unhealthy condition. Most large metropolitan afternoon papers must work harder to stay healthy, and most of the spectacular failures have been "PM" papers, as they are called in the trade.

Some PMs quit fighting and switched to morning publication, even where it meant head-to-head competition with another morning paper. Others, by proving they were on the brink of failure, have merged expensive printing operations with their rivals, a financial arrangement permitted under a federal law for which the newspaper industry lobbied mightily.

When the Star died, word went out that afternoon papers cannot be saved.

Although there are three times as many afternoon newspapers as morning ones, most of the PMs are small and medium-sized. Over the past decade, total afternoon circulation has dropped 10 percent to 32.7 million copies a day, while circulation of the AMs has risen 13 percent to 29.4 million.

The successful (meaning profitable) afternoon newspapers tend to be either monopolies in their areas or else serving suburban communities that are overlooked editorially by their metropolitan dailies.

Newsday, the afternoon newspaper on Long Island, is content to leave the morning to the New York Times. By covering closely and well the people and issues of Long Island, Newsday has become the nation's largest PM, with over a half-million circulation, and one of the most prosperous.

OTHER DAILIES IN suburban New Jersey and New York have done well as the Manhattan-based dailies fought over a declining readership that since World War II had been migrating to the suburbs, followed by the retailers who buy newspaper advertising.

But there still is something basically difficult about being a successful afternoon newspaper.

In many cities, it begins with the once simple process of getting the papers from the presses to the readers. In the afternoon, it's not so simple anymore. A newspaper located in the downtown area finds the afternoon rush hour playing havoc with delivery trucks.

The Washington Star may have failed for just that reason. The postmortems suggest that while the editorial changes -- both content and format -- made by the Time Inc. editors were attracting new subscribers, the delivery problems were losing readers at a faster rate.

There are also fewer people who want to read a newspaper when they get home. As the nation's work force becomes more white collar than blue, more want to read a newspaper before they go to work and then watch television news and news features in the evening.

BECAUSE OF DELIVERY problems, many afternoon newspapers are being printed earlier and earlier, thus offering readers little fresh news that they didn't see on the previous evening's television news or could not find in the morning newspaper.

And as circulation declines, advertising rates, which are based on how many potential consumers can be reached, are forced down, which means reduced revenue for the newspaper. A publisher's initial reaction often is to trim his editorial staff and drop certain purchased features, frequently resulting in a less-appealing newspaper.

Advertisers also are quick to shift their spending to other media when they perceive declining return on the money with which they are buying space in a particular newspaper.

And since many readers buy newspapers as much for the advertisements as the news content, the paper with more ads is likely to attract more readers.

When Time Inc. bought the Washington Star, the paper had only 28 percent of the total advertising carried in it and the Washington Post, its morning rival. When the Star died, its share of advertising had dropped to 25 percent, despite the investment of millions of dollars to improve its editorial content.

BUT BECAUSE it had to offer lower advertising rates to match its lower circulation, the Star was getting only 15 cents of each newspaper advertising dollar. The Post got the 85 cents.

With the rapid development of cable television and the technology for putting more useful information into the home on screens and printers, publishers of morning newspapers do not take their future for granted.

Procrastination hard to change

LOS ANGELES — You barely made the deadline, passed the test, caught the plane, averted the disaster you courted by waiting too long to do what would have been quite manageable if you hadn't put off getting started.

So, lamenting your laziness and lack of discipline, you vow to get organized — and get as far as listing the things you must do immediately and outlining a jampacked time schedule.

But if you are a genuine procrastinator, good intentions won't be enough. Your carefully planned schedule will be blithely ignored as you fluctuate between savoring the delicious feeling of doing what you, not "they," dictate, and heart-thumping panic over the anticipated consequences.

Changing such a pattern is not that easy, say two Berkeley psychologists, self-confessed procrastinators who are thought to be the only researchers in the United States focusing exclusively on the causes and treatment of procrastination.

Burka and Lenora Yuen explained the underlying dynamics of the problem and described their unique treatment program for college students last week at the annual meeting of the American Psychological Association here.

Nearly everyone — men and women equally — procrastinates sometimes or suffers from related problems such as being chronically late or overscheduling activities, they said.

The pure version of procrastination involves the knowledge that some piece of work is hanging over your head — a feeling, a distraction in which you can neither work nor forget it and enjoy what you're doing instead — and a rising panic as the deadline approaches. For some, it culminates in a late start; others find relief in having let all slide by. Either way is accompanied by a resolve never to do this again. Ever. Until the next time.

But for those who make procrastination a way of life, whether they actually flunk out or get fired or merely experience a constant stomach-churning anxiety over unmet demands, much more than laziness or bad organization is at work.

Procrastinating is a strategy, a defense, that people use to cope with certain fears and anxieties, the psychologists say.

Procrastinators are afraid of failing. They are afraid of succeeding. Their self-esteem is shaky. And they are resisting authority by saying, "No, I won't do it."

Fearing failure, procrastinators avoid any realistic test of their abilities. If you wait too long to start, the result never represents your best effort. All you can be judged on then is your skill at "brinksmanship," and you can chastize yourself for being weak or lazy, but not stupid.

New magazine offers different view of TV

BY ED FISHBEIN
Hearst Feature Service

Ask most people if they think television has a negative impact on children and chances are they'll say yes. Television, the public tends to feel, fosters passivity, dulls creativity and appeals to children's worst impulses.

However, in a recent article in the new television magazine Channels of Communication, noted child psychiatrist Robert Coles offered a different perspect.

Yes, he acknowleged, the tube is filled with junk. But he wondered if it's actually affected children as much as people believe.

What really influences children today, Coles wrote, are the same things that shaped them in earlier eras: the quality of their family lives and the nature of the society they live in. And for many children stuck in empty and emotionally sterile worlds, the banality on the tube is one of the few things that provides them with any comfort, Coles believes.

In its originality and depth, the psychiatrist's article was quite a departure from most television journalism. And that's what Channels, as its editors call it, is trying to provide. It is not built around program listings or reviews or industry gossip. It focuses on television as a social phenomenon.

It's editor-in-chief is Les Brown, who might be the most experienced television journalist in the United States. He spent nearly two decades writing about the medium for the trade paper Variety and covered it for seven years at The New York Times.

Brown loved working at the Times, and would probably still be there were it not for a series of circumstances growing out of the 1978 New York newspaper strike. The strike put him temporarily out of work. And the Markle Foundation, which specializes in communications, asked him to use the time to do a study of print media coverage of television.

The study concluded that the coverage had some serious short-comings. The trade press, Brown said, "in a sense belonged to the industry." And the big newspapers were "hostile."

"Because newspapers are competitive with television," Brown said, "they're much happier with articles that put television down." The result is "television and the Mafia are the only two beats you can cover irresponsibly with impunity," Brown quipped.

The Markle Foundation decided there ought to be a magazine doing things differently. They began putting together Channels, and hired Brown as editor-in-chief.

The bimonthly magazine that's resulted published its first issue this spring. As opinion magazines go, it is graphically slick, with most of its space devoted to think pieces and investigative stories that often treat television as harshly as the newspapers Brown criticizes for being excessively hostile.

The first three issues, for example, devoted a good deal of space to taking on television news. A lengthy article criticized the networks' El Salvador coverage for being preoccupied with flashy battle footage and indifferent to the important social roots of the conflict. Another piece took on "60 Minutes" for going into stories with predetermined conclusions, ignoring any contradictory facts it might discover along the way.

Two of the more powerful people in public television were also the objects of less-than-flattering portraits. Channels' initial issue included a critical article on Robert Chitester, a conservative producer who has become a force in public TV by attracting the financial backing of large corporations to turn out documentaries celebating the free market.

An article in the current issue deals with how television's ability to broadcast worldwide has changed international relations. Today, the story pointed out, foreign leaders use news broadcasts to sell their policies to the American people. And the impact of international events, it continues, is influenced by the kind of television coverage they get. The Iranian hostages were good theater. And at least partly because of that, they became a huge story. Afghanistan bars cameras from covering its conflict. And that's one of the reasons that war hasn't attracted much interest here.

Obviously, these are not the kinds of stories that are going to appeal to the masses rushing out to buy the Bo Derek issue of Playboy. Channels, Brown knows, will never attract large numbers of readers or advertisers. The question is whether it will draw enough of them to survive beyond the three years the Markle Foundation has aged to underwrite it.

Pickle says Amtrak ridership too low

By CHARLES RICHARDS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Ridership climbed in recent months on Amtrak's Inter-American line in South Texas, but not enough to justify continuing the railroad passenger service, says Rep. J.J. "Jake" Pickle, D-Texas.

As part of a 10 percent national cutback in passenger rail service, Amtrak has recommended that the Inter-American, which now stretches from Chicago to Laredo, be cut to thrice-weekly service south of St. Louis.

Two legs in Texas will be eliminated altogether, Pickle noted — the Temple to Houston line which stops at Brenham, and the San Antonio to Laredo segment.

"One bright spot promised is connecting service in San Antonio to the Sunset Limited, for more direct service to California," said the veteran congressman from Austin.

"Naturally, I am quite disappointed with the Amtrak cuts. Many of us have said for a long time — and even the president of Amtrak agreed when we met in my office — that thrice-weekly service certainly does not serve to encourage regular ridership, if the riders feel they cannot depend on daily runs."

The cutback, Pickle added, "might be the start of a slow death for the Inter-American."

Pickle, one of those who pushed in Congress for establishing Amtrak, said the picture is bleak, however. The recent disappointment, he said, is only the latest in a series that has been encountered almost since the beginning of Amtrak.

"I was instrumental in getting the system established. A semi-public corporation seemed preferable to the loose-knit, often poorly-run and financed system of private train routes. Lack of ridership had caused facilities to deteriorate. With government subsidies we felt that in time, the system could become profitable."

But, Pickle said, things never really worked the way he and others hoped they would.

A main goal for the Inter-American — through service to Mexico — was scuttled, Pickle pointed out. The Mexican government and U.S. Customs couldn't agree on clearing the trip for through service at Laredo for hookup with Mexican trains.

"Until quite recently, equipment was obsolete and dirty. The Inter-American has one of the worst records for running on time. Some of the track is so bad the train must crawl along at 20 miles per hour. The station in San Antonio is not one; the train stops in the middle of nowhere."

It is hard to maintain enthusiasm for such a project after so many disappointments, he added.

"Amtrak has tried to make improvements, and in some cases, we have seen progress. Ridership has climbed in recent months, but still not enough to make the grade," Pickle said.

With budget cuts hitting all areas of government, and people questioning the role of government in transportation and other services, the Reagan administration has served notice that it expects the Amtrak system to eventually pay its way and that it plans to further reduce the government's subsidy.

Investigation to begin into illegal alien crime

WASHINGTON (AP) — The problems caused by Mexican teen-agers crossing into the United States to commit crimes "are as complex as they are disturbing," says a State Department official, who has asked for help from the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

A letter from Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, co-signed by 14 other congressmen, prompted Richard Fairbanks, assistant secretary to Secretary of State Alexander Haig for congressional relations, to begin an investigation into the matter.

From 3,000 to 6,000 juveniles will illegally cross the border from Mexico into Texas, New Mexico, Arizona and California over the next 12 months "and comm numerous crimes (and) in most cases U.S. authorities cannot prosecute these youthful offenders," Bentsen and the other lawmakers complained in an Aug. 11 letter.

They asked Haig to negotiate an international agreement with Mexico as a first step toward solving the dilemma.

"Before considering possible discussions with the Mexican government, it would be necessary to identify the range of substantive solutions which might be possible, taking into account the intricate legal and factual background," Fairbanks said in a letter to Bentsen that was made public Tuesday.

"Since that type of expertise is to be found primarily within the Immigration and Naturalization Service and its parent body, the Justice Department, ... we have referred your letter to the INS for their assistance."

Fairbanks added, "I know that you fully appreciate the difficulty in working out a viable solution and realize that it may take considerable time."

Local YMCA developing cardiovascular program

Midland YMCAs are following a nationwide movement of its organization's National Cardiovascular Health Program, designed in close cooperation with the medical professional and allied health personnel.

According to Rowland Wong, metropolitan director of health and physical fitness of the Midland YMCA, high costs of medical care throughout the U.S. is just one of the reasons YMCAs across the nation are developing cardiovascular fitness programs.

"The effort has been to decrease the risk of coronary disease," Wong said. "Preventive measures are much cheaper than medical treatment these days. Of course, YMCA cardiovascular fitness programs can't totally prevent coronary heart disease problems, but they are designed to help alter some of the risk factors associated with such diseases."

Among the cardiovascular fitness programs offered by the Midland Y's are: starter fitness, jogging aerobics, Y's way to fitness testing, co-ed aerobic fitness, run for your life, fitness fantasia, fitness swim and body control.

The starter fitness is a 10-week program designed for beginners with emphasis on a painless approach to fitness. The concentration is on a gradual progression to fitness, as well as other health information.

Run for your life program is for those who are interested in running. Co-ed aerobic fitness is another way to get a good workout in a group setting with jazzy music. The Y's way to fitness testing is recommended for everybody before they start a fitness program. Participants should have one every year to ensure progression. Body control and fitness fantasia are classes designed to fit the special needs for women.

Wong pointed out that some of the Y's more traditional programs are also useful in the Y's over all effort to build cardiovasuclar fitness. He cited the Y's swimming program as one example.

"Swimming is one of the best all around body conditioners available," he said.

Wong commented that almost 90 percent of the population is aware of the importance of exercise to our health. However, it is difficult to find time from busy schedules to exercise.

Midland Y's will be open from 6 a.m. to 10 p.m. beginning Sept. 8. There will be exercise classes scheduled for the morning, noon and evening hours. For more information on the Y's Cardiovascular Fitness Program, call 682-2551.

Weapons inspection a must

NEW YORK (AP) — Sources say the Reagan administration has informed the Soviet Union that the Soviets must allow on-site inspection of weapons and other direct forms of verification of any future arms-control treaty, the New York Times reported today.

The director of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, Eugene V. Rostow, informed the Soviet charge d'affairs in Washington of the administration position in a meeting on Aug. 21, unidentified officials told The Times.

The paper quoted an unidentified high administration official as saying the administration was waiting for a response to the proposal to begin meetings immediately on verification.

But when the Soviet diplomat, Alexander A. Bessmertnykh, asked Rostow whether the discussions on problems of verification were a precondition to talks on medium-range missiles in Europe and strategic arms, Rostow is said to have replied they are not.

The Soviet Union has opposed past attempts to allow on-site verification as an intrusion into Soviet territory and a pretext for spying.

Compliance with arms control agreements is now verified by spy satellites, with photography and radar, and by listening posts. These techniques could count missile silos, submarine construction bays and bombers in airfields.

But these means of verification are considered inadequate by some intelligence experts to monitor agreements that limit the quality as well as the quantity of weapons. It is more difficult to verify the characteristics of weapons than the number of weapons.

Murder suspect's wife arrested

By ANDREW M. WILLIAMS
Associated Press Writer

HOUSTON (AP) — The wife of a man targeted as a suspect in the slaying of of a federal judge has been arrested on a charge alleging she used a fictitious name to purchase a rifle 12 days before the assassination.

Jo Ann Starr Harrelson, 41, wife of convicted hit man Charles V. Harrelson, was arrested here Tuesday just hours after she was indicted by a federal grand jury in Dallas.

Federal authorities have identified Harrelson, jailed here on unrelated state charges, as a key target of the massive investigation into the May 29, 1979, slaying of U.S. District Judge John H. Wood Jr.

Don Ervin, Harrelson's Houston attorney and Mrs. Harrelson's former lawyer, labeled the indictment a ploy by the FBI.

"I knew they would do something to try to get her over a barrel. ... They wanted her testimony and one way to get it is to put a case on her and start working on her," said Ervin.

Mrs. Harrelson was advised of her rights Tuesday by U.S. Magistrate H. Lingo Platter and then jailed in lieu of a $500,000 bond set by U.S. District Judge Sarah Hughes in Dallas.

She could be sentenced to 5 years in prison and fined $5,000 if convicted on the charge that alleges that on May 17, 1979, she "made a false and fictitious written statement and misrepresented her true identity to purchase a firearm, a Weatherby model V rifle, from an authorized dealer in Dallas."

Ballistic experts have said Wood was killed by a single .243-caliber bullet a rifleman fired from ambush outside the judge's San Antonio townhouse.

Hank Shultise, a spokesman for Weatherby in California, said although the Mark V uses .240-caliber bullets, it is perfectly capable of firing a .243-caliber bullet.

The FBI would not comment on whether they had the rifle or if agents believed it was the same weapon that killed Wood.

A spokesman for Hunter Bradlee, a Dallas sporting goods store, said FBI agents came into the store three weeks ago asking to see "all the forms on Weatherby guns."

Lee Spencer said the agents confiscated records of a May 17, 1979, purchase by someone identifying herself as Fay King.

He said the woman purchased the rifle, which sells for about $600, a scope and a box of .240 caliber amunition.

Homer R. Howard, special agent in charge of the Houston FBI office, said the Mrs. Harrelson was indicted as part of a "major, ongoing investigation."

But Ervin said the indictment was the "latest move in a chess game" staged by federal agents.

He said he suspects Mrs. Harrelson was charged because she claimed marital privilege and refused to answer questions about her husband posed by a federal grand jury investigating the Wood assassination.

Prison officials prepared for another show of force

ATMORE, Ala. (AP) — Blacks and whites have resumed living together in inmate dormitories in the strife-torn Holman Prison, but officials at the maximum-security prison are poised for another show of force if racial tensions flare again.

The prison's 250 black inmates and 130 white inmates were segregated Sunday night when a brawl turned into what was described by prison officials as a "near riot." Four inmates suffered stab wounds.

Warden J.D. White ordered the dormitories reintegrated Tuesday night after the transfer from the prison of eight white and 13 black inmates whom state Department of Corrections spokesman Ron Tate described as "troublemakers."

Tate said an additional 16 inmates would be transferred today, bringing to 37 the number of prisoners removed from the troubled state prison near this southeast Alabama community.

"We were going to have to re-integrate the dormitories sooner or later," Tate said Tuesday night.

A federal judge has ruled that Alabama's prisons are overcrowded and ordered relief, but Tate said overcrowding had nothing to do with the disturbance.

Earlier Tuesday, white inmates at Holman tore into beds and walls to find metal for weapons until 140 riot-equipped state troopers and local police put down the disturbance without incidence, authorities said.

Tate said black and white inmates were marched into the prison yard and strip-searched for weapons. He said a large number of weapons were confiscated.

The confrontation was the second time troopers were used as a "show of force" since the Sunday brawl.

Midland County jail passes inspection

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The Midland County Jail moved up a notch on Monday to become a member of an elite minority: Texas county jails which measure up to the Texas Commission on Jail Standards.

The jail passed the scrutiny of Joe Slater, supervising inspector of the commission, on Monday for the first time in several inspections since the commission began enforcing jail standards three years ago.

"It (the jail) was in compliance yesterday, and it (the compliance) covers only yesterday," Slater said Tuesday after he presented a certificate of compliance to County Judge Bill Ahders and Sheriff's Capt. Richard Sexton.

The Midland County Jail thereby becomes one of 96 of the state's 265 county jails to comply with the commission's standards on jails.

"Some counties have more than one jail," Slater digressed. "Some counties have none." The state has 254 counties.

Slater, who views a jail as a "community where people live inside security," commended Midland County officials and jailkeepers for an efficient and orderly jail on the day of his inspection.

"Judge Ahders, the county commissioners, Sheriff Dallas Smith and his staff are to be commended on his accomplishment," Slater said. "The taxpayers should appreciate their elected officials who are able to achieve this result at minimum costs."

Slater's inspection covered virtually every aspect of the 88-bunk jail, which now houses 65 inmates for up to a year on the fifth floor of the Midland County Courthouse.

"Having achieved compliance with the Texas Jail Standards and with continued operation at this level," Slater said, "you (taxpayers) can be assured frivolous complaints and lawsuits will not be looked upon favorably by the federal courts."

"Compliance with the laws of the State of Texas serves to protect you (citizens), as these rules and statutes have been tested and upheld on numerous occasions by federal courts."

Slater expressed concern over prospects of an overcrowded jail here.

"Midland County is growing," he observed, "and it's only a matter of time when the capacity of the jail will be reached. It's anybody guess when it's going to be too small."

Though the county jail has cells and bunks for 88 inmates, "you can't legally house 88 inmates, because you've got to house inmates by classifications," he said. Those include padded ioslation cells for disturbed inmates, separate cells for juveniles, women and men, cells for those accused of violent crimes, and cells for prisoners returned to the county jail from the Texas Department of Corrections for court hearings or re-trials.

Virtually every facet of the jail was inspected and checked, Slater said. Included were ventilation, food, fire escapes, fire extinguishers, bedding and cells, exercise area and security.

AP marketbasket survey reaveals substantial decline in food prices

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

Shoppers are finding lower prices at the supermarket — particularly for pork chops, according to an Associated Press marketbasket survey which shows grocery bills dropped by six-tenths of a percent during August.

More than one-fifth of the items checked by the AP declined in price last month and many of the decreases were substantial. In part, the price trends at the supermarket reflect what's happening on the nation's farms: The U.S. Department of Agriculture says farmers are getting paid less for many key crops than they were a year ago.

The AP drew up a random list of 14 commonly purchased food and non-food items and checked the price at one supermarket in each of 13 cities on March 1, 1973. Prices have been rechecked on or about the start of each succeeding month.

The latest survey showed that the marketbasket bill increased at the checklist store in four cities last month and decreased in eight cities. It was unchanged in the 13th city. Overall, the marketbasket bills decreased an average of six-tenths of a percent.

The marketbasket bill as measured by the AP has declined in five of the first eight months of 1981, dropping in February, March, April and May, as well as in August. It increased in January, June and July.

Looking at prices for the past year, the AP found that the marketbasket went up at the checklist store in five cities over the last 12 months and decreased in eight cities. Overall, it was an average of 1.6 percent lower at the start of September than it was a year earlier.

Pork prices were responsible for much of the August drop. The price of a pound of center-cut pork chops decreased at the checklist store in nine of the cities surveyed. Special sales added to the declines; decreases ranged up to 50 percent.

The gloomy news came at the dairy counter. The price of a dozen eggs increased at the checklist store in nine cities.

Large grain crops have helped keep meat prices — and therefore food prices — down. The good news for shoppers, however, is bad for farmers. The USDA said that prices paid to farmers for all items dropped 2.1 percent from mid-July to mid-August, while the prices farmers have to pay to cover their expenses rose seven-tenths of a percent in the same period.

A look at the overall number of items in the AP survey showed during January than during December. Here are the percentages of increases and decreases:

	July	Aug.
Up	27.5	30.2
Down	22.0	22.0
Unchanged	44.5	41.8
Unavailable	6.0	6.0

The AP did not try to weight survey results according to population density or actual family expenditures. The day of the week on which the check was made varied depending on the month. Standard brands and sizes or comparable substitutes were selected. Items temporarily out of stock on one survey date were not included in overall totals.

The AP did not try to compare actual prices from city to city — to say, for example, that eggs cost more in one area than another. The only comparisons were made in terms of percentages of increase or decrease — saying a particular item went up 10 percent in one city and 6 percent in another.

The items in the AP survey are: chopped chuck, center-cut pork chops, frozen orange juice concentrate, coffee, paper towels, butter, Grade-A medium white eggs, creamy peanut butter, laundry detergent, fabric softener, tomato sauce, milk, frankfurters and sugar. A 15th item, chocolate chip cookies, was dropped from the list when the manufacturer discontinued the package size used in the survey.

The cities checked were: Albuquerque, N.M., Atlanta, Boston, Chicago, Dallas, Detroit, Los Angeles, Miami, New York, Philadelphia, Providence, R.I., Salt Lake City and Seattle.

ALBUQUERQUE: The marketbasket dropped 1.1 percent, from $22.27 to $22.03. Chopped chuck, paper towels and fabric softener went up, while pork chops, orange juice, butter and tomato sauce went down. Everything else was unchanged.

ATLANTA: The bill went from $20.28 to $19.82, down 2.3 percent. Increases in the price of sugar, eggs, chopped chuck, coffee, paper towels, peanut butter, fabric softener and detergent were offset by a sharp drop in the price of pork chops and a small decline in the price of milk. Orange juice, butter, tomato sauce and frankfurters were unchanged.

BOSTON: The total dropped 1.5 percent, from $19.10 to $18.81. Orange juice, eggs, peanut butter, detergent and tomato sauce went up, while chopped chuck, pork chops, paper towels, coffee and sugar went down. The remaining four items were unchanged.

CHICAGO: The marketbakset total for 12 available items went up 1.1 percent, from $16.15 to $16.33. Chopped chuck, eggs, tomato sauce, frankfurters and sugar went up; pork chops, orange juice and paper towels went down.

'Sticker shock' could curb car sales surge

DETROIT (AP) — Steep price increases scheduled for 1982 model cars have auto dealers and Wall Street analysts worried that "sticker shock" could bring the current discount-inspired sales surge skidding to a halt.

"The real question is whether — with the end of the promotion programs and then the 1982s with higher prices — the price gap (between the old and new models) will be a real deterrent for people to come out and buy cars," Frank E. McCarthy, executive vice president of the National Auto Dealers Association said Tuesday.

Sticker shock is a term coined by auto industry observers to describe consumer resistence to rapidly increasing new car prices.

Mary Ann Keller, an auto industry analyst with Paine Webber Mitchell Hutchins & Co., said consumers are growing accustomed to the rebates and other discounts automakers have used several times this year to boost lagging sales.

Consumers have become "extremely price sensitive," she said. "When you look at paying $11,000 for a new car, spending money on a clutch job doesn't sound all that bad.

"Nobody on Wall Street can predict what is going to happen (when the more expensive 1982 models are introduced), but I'm not sure they (the automakers) have struck an appropriate balance," Mrs. Keller said. "An increase of around 4 percent would be more tolerable."

In recent weeks General Motors Corp. has announced a 6 percent price boost on new models, Chrysler Corp. said its prices will go up an average 7.7 percent, and Ford Motor Co. said four car lines will cost between 4.7 percent and 7 percent more.

The increases come on the heels of a month's worth of sales promotions — rebates at Chrysler, dealer incentives at Ford and lowered interest rates at GM — that pushed sales up 22.6 percent in the first 20 days of August.

Automakers say the higher prices are needed to offset inflation. Analysts acknowledged that the industry remains severely depressed and that the price boosts are not unwarranted to get the companies back into financial health.

Arvid Jouppi, an independent Detroit-based analyst, was more optimistic than Mrs. Keller.

Pointing to the large number of older cars on the roads, he said consumers will be forced to buy the 1982 models, even with higher sticker prices because they will not want to fuss with the repairs and costs of the old ones. But he added more people will be pushed out of that new car market and will buy up what is left of the 1981s and used cars instead.

A survey on consumer attitudes by the University of Michigan bears that out. Conducted in the first half of 1981, it showed that nearly one-third of all consumers said high car prices were what kept them from buying new cars.

During that time, domestic auto sales were down 2 percent from the already depressed sales figures of 1980.

Gold prices sharply higher on foreign financial markets

LONDON (AP) — Gold prices were sharply higher on foreign markets today, pushed upward by the decline of the dollar against all world currencies.

Gold opened in London at $430.50 an ounce, up $6 dollars from the overnight close, and gained another dollar by mid-morning when the five major bullion houses pegged the "fixing" price at $431.50 an ounce.

Gold traded in Zurich at $429.50, up $5 from Tuesday's close.

Silver prices also improved, with the price in London pegged at $9.44 an ounce compared with $9.12 at the close Tuesday.

Gold closed in Hong Kong at $433.18 an an ounce, up $8.93 from Tuesday.

The dollar slipped in Tokyo, where trading ends before it begins in Europe, to close at 230.05 yen, one yen down from Tuesday.

In London, the dollar eased against the British pound, which cost $1.8450 in early trading, compared with $1.8365 at the close Tuesday.

Early dollar rates against other key currencies compared with late rates Tuesday:

— 2.4350 West Grman marks, down from 2.6600.

— 2.1387 Swiss francs, down from 2.1580.

— 5.8365 French francs, down from 5.8750.

— 2.7062 Dutch guilders, down from 2.7322.

— 1,217.50 Italian lire, down from 1,227.25.

— 1.1962 Canadian dollars, down from 2.208.

In the Supreme Court, there are only eight of them against all of her.

Gohlke returns home after transplant

By WALTER BERRY
Associated Press Writer

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Mary Gohlke, the world's longest surviving heart-lung transplant recipient, says she is "grateful for a second chance at life" even though doctors have yet to call her operation a success.

"I was told that if I got off the table in the operating room, the first year was the critical year," the 45-year-old newspaper executive said Tuesday at a news conference here. "The doctors can't say this has been a success because it hasn't been a year yet. When that happens, I guess you can plan your retirement home."

Mrs. Gohlke was greeted by her husband, two sons, a barrage of reporters and dozens of wellwishers at Sky Harbor Airport following a 1½-hour flight from San Francisco. Her operation was performed at the Stanford University Medical Center in Palo Alto, Calif.

"I told you I'd come back," the Mesa Tribune advertising executive said. She said she hopes to be back on the job part-time soon.

Her husband, Karl, said there were times "when it seemed like this day would never come."

Mrs. Gohlke had spent the past 86 days at Stanford. Her survial has been attributed to pioneering treatment with cyclosporin A, a drug derived from a fungus that fights organ rejection.

She was operated on March 9 after doctors decided her heart and lungs were damaged irreparably by pulmonary hypertension and smoking. The surgery that replaced her failing organs with those of a 15-year-old boy killed in a traffic accident was only the fourth in history and the first in more than a decade.

"At this time last year, there wasn't a heck of a lot of hope for me to be around now," Mrs. Gohlke said. "It was an ordeal, but I would do it all over again if I had to. The biggest thing I learned through all this is to trust people."

She noted that she will "have to take medication every day for the rest of my life...."

"I'm limited by strength to what I can do," she said. "Right now, I can walk, ride a stationary bicycle for up to a mile, swim and do 23 different exercises with 2- to 3-pound weights.

"Oh, there are still times when I say that phrase, 'God I'd love a cigarette,'" she added. "But I know I can never smoke again."

Blind woman gains sight after risky operation

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Debra Kramarich, blind since birth, always loved her infant son but says "we seem so much closer now that I can look into his eyes."

When the surgical bandages were removed from her eye, the 28-year-old housewife also saw her blind husband and exclaimed that he is "just as handsome as I always thought he was."

All her life, Mrs. Kramarich saw the world as it might appear through an opaque shower curtain. As a child, one of her eyes was removed. She was legally blind.

But in May, she and her eye surgeon decided to gamble on a cornea transplant and cataract removal to reverse the effects of Peter's Anomaly, a congenital deformity that leaves scars in the eye's central field of vision.

Had the operation failed, she would have been plunged into total darkness for the rest of her life.

One day after receiving a cornea from an 18-year-old dead woman, the bandages came off. She saw her 9-month-old son, Ryan.

"Our little boy — people used to tell us about all the cute things he was doing. I never could see those cute things, and now I see all of them. That's the biggest joy of all," she said.

"The thing that surprised me most was how messy my house was," she said with a laugh. "Before, I could ignore it. Now I have to clean it once in a while."

Her surgeon, Dr. Lee Todd Nordan, was present when Mrs. Kramarich saw another unforgettable sight.

"We were standing on the sixth floor at Scripps Hospital, getting ready to use the Eye Center's facilities when she stopped and said, 'Wow, that must be a sunset,'" he said.

Mrs. Kramarich, her husband, Charles, and the baby, who has normal vision, live in Normal Heights, Calif. She credits a visit to the doctor's office for the baby as leading to her "miracle."

Doctors, nurses victims of stress, job fatigue

By WARREN E. LEARY
AP Science Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Doctors, nurses and others in health care often are victims of job fatigue, working under stressful conditions that affect their health and that of their patients, a psychologist says.

Dr. Pamela Patrick said Tuesday that worker "burnout" is epidemic in the health field, causing not only job dissatisfaction and high absenteeism but also shortchanging patients.

"If a hospital staff has a burnout problem, all the technical aspects of patient care may be OK but staff people are less likely to spend time with the patient to help with the emotional and personal problems that can affect him getting better," she said in an interview.

"This can slow recovery and add days to a hospital stay, which these days can be very expensive," she added.

In the worse case, burnout impairs judgment and decision-making ability, which can lead to increased medication and treatment errors, she said.

Ms. Patrick, a St. Petersburg, Fla., clinical psychologist who consults with hospitals on the burnout problem, said she was a victim of burnout when she worked as a registered nurse.

She was in Washington to speak about her new book, "Health Care Worker Burnout: What It Is, What To Do About It," published by Inquiry Books, a division of the Blue Cross Association.

Although job burnout in school teachers, business executives, police and others has been addressed before, this is the first book to deal with the phenomenon in health care, Blue Cross said.

Walter J. McNerney, president of the Blue Cross and Blue Shield Associations, said in the forward of the book that burnout is an "insidious, pervasive, growing condition (that) is the often unrecognized response to continued severe job stress."

Noting that there is a serious shortage of nurses, McNerney said that in many surveys "stress and burnout are given as leading causes for nurses to quit their jobs or leave the profession."

Ms. Patrick said burnout is characterized by fatigue, frustration, emotional exhaustion and feelings of failure. It is the end-product of long-term chronic stress brought on by work-related problems rather than by personal difficulties.

People in the "helping professions," such as teaching, social work and law, are especially vulnerable to burnout because they get deeply involved in the problems of others, she said.

Goff's story of shooting has not been contradicted

By KEN HERMAN
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Charles Goff's story about shooting his cousin Rep. Mike Martin in a "controlled hit" has not been contradicted by any testimony grand jurors have heard, an investigator said.

Austin Police Lt. Pete Neal said Tuesday it "was a possibility" grand jurors would return a felony indictment in the case, and it would "more than likely" name only one defendant.

He said the indictment probably would stem from the investigation — not the shooting — indicating it could be a perjury charge.

Neal said Goff probably would not be charged in Travis county.

Grand jurors have looked at Martin's financial records, but Neal said, "I don't think right now there is going to be anything come out of the investigation of the finances."

Martin, 29, R-Longview, was wounded in the elbow by shotgun fire on July 31 near his recreational vehicle here. At first he said he did not know who shot him or why. Later he said he was the target of a hit man for the "Guardian Angels of the Underworld," a satanic cult.

Now Martin says the shooting is related to Gregg County politics.

Goff, who testified to the grand jury last week, said Martin asked him to be the gunman in a "controlled hit" intended as a political stunt to gain publicity for Martin.

Neal, who has worked on the case since the day of the shooting, emerged from the grand jury room Tuesday and said investigators had found "nothing" to disprove Goff's claim.

"His story was the thing that brought the investigation to an end," Neal said.

The lieutenant said there were some problems with Martin's story about the shooting since the first day.

"I think we all probably kind of felt that way. ... There were things that just didn't make any sense," he said.

Assistant District Attorney Allen Hill would not comment on the possibility of an indictment. He agreed with Neal that there was no felony committed at the trailer park where the shooting occurred.

Hill said any indictment would be returned on Thursday at the earliest.

The prosecutor said he has not offered to drop the case if Martin would resign his House seat.

"Because of all the confusion, statements and misstatements ... and the doubts raised by some about the adequacy and integrity of the police investigation ... it would be in everybody's interest for this matter to be fully resolved," Hill said.

Martin, who ignored one subpoena and avoided another, testified before the grand jury last week. Neal said Martin answered some questions. The investigator would not say if Martin invoked his Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination to avoid any questions.

Swastikas litter cemetery

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Swastikas cut out of paper were dumped on Vienna's Jewish cemetery shortly after the Jewish community buried a young woman killed in a terrorist raid near the synagogue, police said today.

Ulrike Kohout, 25, was killed last Saturday by terrorist gunfire as she shielded a small boy in the attack on the synagogue. The remains of another victim were flown to Israel for burial. Two Arabs have been charged in the attack.

A police officer said the swastikas, cut from newspapers, were found Tuesday morning and that investigations continued. The officer said the swastikas were dumped at different sites of the cemetery.

Although the cemetery is patrolled by police with dogs, it is occasionally breached by vandals. Five months ago some 70 tombstones were overturned.

Dissident's trial starts

MOSCOW (AP) — Veteran Soviet dissident Anatoly Marchenko, who has spent 15 of his 43 years in prison camps and exile, went on trial Wednesday on charges of anti-Soviet agitation, the official news agency Tass announced.

Marchenko, who in 1969 wrote the first post-Stalinist account of Soviet Prison camps, "My Testimony," was arrested March 17 at his home in Karabanovo, near Vladimir, about 60 miles east of Moscow. The Soviet news agency said his trial was being held in Vladimir.

Marchenko, who has previously been convicted on similar charges, faces a maximum sentence of 15 years under article 70 of the Soviet Union's criminal code.

One of the original members of an unofficial Moscow-based group formed to monitor Kremlin compliance with the 1975 Helsinki accords, Marchenko is considered to be among the founders of the Soviet human rights movement.

Born in 1938 in Barabinsk, a small town in western Siberia, Marchenko was first arrested in 1959, apparently in connection with a workers' brawl.

Changes coming for District 5-5A in 1982

The 1981 football season begins the end of an era for District 5-5A because high school football, as we have come to know it, will face radical changes in 1982.

Next season the University Interscholastic League will install its new playoff format where all districts can send their first and second place teams to the playoffs — two berths instead of one and two positions in every district up for grabs.

TERRY WILLIAMSON

That is radical enough, but the UIL has also said that any team who doesn't like its district schedule in 1982 may ask for a district draw. San Angelo has already asked for a new schedule for 1982, which means that inter-city rivalries (Midland-Lee, Permian-Odessa and Abilene-Cooper) will not be played during the last week of the season — another tradition by the boards.

IT SEEMS unfortunate that the UIL decided to implement both rulings for the same year. With two berths up for grabs in each district in 1982, the Midland High-Midland Lee confrontation would appear to a bigger game more often than in the past if played during the last week of the season. With double opportunity to make the playoffs, it seems resonable that at least one of the local schools would still be in the running during that last week of the season, which would make for an interesting game. In fact, it is reasonable to think that in many years, both schools could be in contention on that final weekend.

However, if San Angelo doesn't want to play Big Spring the final week of the season (as they have for many years), the inter-city games are gone unless a draw produces the matchup. None of the schools appear ready to let the schedule be determined by a draw, so there will have to be some give and take along the way.

A Midland High-Lee meeting earlier in the year will not be a title deciding factor for the most part, but it does have some advantages. For instance, if the two teams met in the third district game, both teams would most likely be in the thick of the race. It would have to be a big game almost year-in and year-out. It would, however, take some hindsight to determine just how important that game really was over the course of the season, and it also means that one of the local schools will be hurt by a loss early in the race at the hands of a cross-town rival. In that last respect, an earlier meeting could serve to make the game a nastier rivalry than is presently the case.

IT HAS been my observation over the last few years that the two Midland schools have more of a rivalry against the Odessa schools than between themselves. For one thing, the Midland-Lee game has held little importance, for the most part, in the scheme of the overall district race. The City Championship is usually the only major concern. With two playoff berths now open, that also could change the outlook of the contest.

Midland High has not been to the playoffs since 1951, long before Lee was a school. Other playoff appearances by MHS were in 1927, 1929 and 1936. The Bulldogs have never won a 5-5A title. Lee has been to the playoffs only twice in its 21 years — in 1974 and 1976. The future for both schools, however, look bright in view of the fact that another playoff berth will be available. Every game will have much more importance, regardless of what stage of the season a game is played.

THIS YEAR only one 5-5A team will go to the playoffs and the schedule is the same as has been in the past. But as the era nears its end, here are a few facts.

Since 1920, 5-5A teams have gone to the playoffs 59 times with 11 state championships. Of course, the loop as it is now composed has not been in existence near that long. For instance, all of Midland High's trip to the playoffs were as a member of another district.

Abilene High leads the district members with 16 playoff trips and six state titles. However, the Eagles were last in the playoffs in 1959 and their last state title came in 1956 after dominating the state for three straight years.

Odessa Permian and San Angelo have both been in the playoffs 10 times, but Permian, the defending state champion, has won three state titles to the Bobcats' one. San Angelo's state crown came in 1966, the last time they were playoff bound.

Odessa High has been in the playoffs nine times and won a state crown in 1946. Abilene Cooper, Big Spring and Midland High all have been in the state playoffs four times without a state championship to show for it. Cooper's last playoff outing was in 1979 while Big Spring last made the playoffs in 1953. Lee has been the fewest times with two trips.

It's easy to see that the local schools have some catching up to do, and it would be nice if the last game of the year was for more than a City Championship as era comes to an end.

Former heavyweight champion Muhammad Ali raises his arms in triumph Tuesday after announcing he will return to the fight game Dec. 2 when he battles Trever Berbick in the Bahamas

Muhammad Ali toreturn to ring Dec.2

NEW YORK (AP) — In a press conference subdued compared with the previous circus-like shows that have marked his career, three-time heavyweight champion Muhammad Ali said Tuesday that he will return to the ring Dec. 2 to fight Trevor Berbick in the Bahamas.

Ali, 39, has been unable to get a boxing license from any state commission except South Carolina since being stopped in 11 rounds in a title fight against World Boxing Council champion Larry Holmes last October in Las Vegas. After beating Ali into apparent retirement, Holmes outpointed Berbick in 15 rounds last April.

ALTHOUGH NO formal contracts have been signed, Bahamian officials said Berbick had agreed verbally to the fight. According to Michael Phenner, Ali's Chicago-based attorney, the former champion's purse will be "in the millions." Phenner would not disclose the exact figure, saying "That's between Mr. Ali and the Internal Revenue Service."

The Holmes fight was Ali's first in more than two years. He had announced his retirement after regaining the heavyweight crown from Leon Spinks Sept. 15, 1978. After losing decisively to Holmes, it seemed Ali would retire for good. But he is determined to fight again and to win the title for a fourth time. He will have been idle for 14 months by the time he faces Berbick.

"Everybody asks me why," Ali said, speaking in a thick voice. "Why? Because it's there, that's why. Why did we go to the moon? Because it's there. They say, 'You've won it three times. Be satisfied with that.' But we weren't satisfied with the moon. Now we're going to Mars and Venus and Saturn, because they're there.

"This is something I've got to do. I know I can do it ... because Holmes is getting old."

BERBICK, A Canadian, has a 16-2-1 record and gained wide attention for the first time when he knocked out former World Boxing Association champion John Tate on the undercard of the first Sugar Ray Leonard-Roberto Duran fight in Montreal June 20, 1980.

That set him up for the shot at Holmes and by going the distance, he ended the champion's string of eight consecutive knockout defenses.

"I've picked the toughest guy I can, a guy who went 15 rounds with Larry Holmes," said Ali.

"I've shocked the world ever since the Sonny Liston fight. Now, 21 years later (actually, it's 17 years since he beat Liston to win the title for the first time), I continue to shock the world."

Ali said he weighs 241 pounds now and would weigh 230 for the Berbick bout. "I'm 241 now and I can do better now than I did the night I fought Holmes," he said. "There was something terribly wrong with me that night."

Mandlikova is unhappy with U.S. Open seeding

NEW YORK (AP) — Hana Mandlikova is seeded fifth in the U.S. Open tennis championships, and she's not the least bit happy about it.

"Everyone sitting in this chair thinks I should be No. 2," the 18-year-old Czechoslovakian star said with conviction during the traditional post-match interview following her 6-7, 7-6, 6-3 first-round struggle against unseeded Mary Lou Piatek Tuesday night.

"I WAS in the finals here last year, I was in the finals at Wimbledon and I won the French Open," said Mandlikova, ticking off her most impressive performances. "Even Chris (Evert Lloyd, the defending champion and top seed) says I should be No. 2. It's not fair to me to be No. 5, but I can't do anything about it. I just have to beat them all."

Mandlikova was near tears as she left the interview room after discussing the seedings, which follow the computer rankings of the Women's Tennis Association. An hour earlier, she had come perilously close to a first-round defeat that would have lent credence to her seeding behind the top four of Lloyd, Andrea Jaeger, Tracy Austin and Martina Navratilova.

"I DON'T think I was serving well or moving well," she said. "I don't think I played very good tennis. But for me the first match is always the most difficult. I usually play every match better and better."

If she hopes to win here, she'll have to play better than she did against the 20-year-old Piatek, who won the first-set tie-breaker 7-2 and got as close as match point in the second set. But the lithe, athletic Mandlikova, who had been wildly erratic for most of the first two sets, recovered to win the second tie-breaker 8-6 and then, after losing the first two games of the third set, reeled off five games in a row to finally take command.

"On that match point," Piatek recalled, "she was serving and I floated up a return that she hit back for a winner. It seems like she can get things going when she's down. She comes up with good shots when she needs them."

MANDLIKOVA, WHO lost 5-7, 6-1, 6-1 to Lloyd in the 1980 Open finals, is playing her 16th tournament of the year.

San Antonio deals Cubs setback

SAN ANTONIO—San Antonio handed the Midland Cubs a 6-3 loss here Tuesday night, staving off a bases loaded threat in the ninth to preserve the win when relief pitcher Orel Hirschiser got Fritz Connally on a fly to right and Joe Carter on a grounder to second and, finally, Dave Owen on strikes.

The Dodgers scored twice in the second when Greg Schultz doubled home a run and scored on a passed ball. Jerry Bindorf singled home a run in the third while Schultz reached first on an error and scored on a sacrifice fly in the fourth. Leo Hernandez powered his 25th homer for another run in the fifth while Ed Ameling singled home a run in the sixth.

Midland scored twice in the fifth when Carmelo Martinez singled, Connally doubled and Carter knocked in both runs with a two-bagger. The Cubs other run came in the sixth when Dave Owen walked and scored on Dave Pagel's double.

Lefthander Norm Churchill was tagged with the loss while Rusty McDonald, who retired the first 10 Cubs before yielding a single to Pagel, notched his fifth win in 11 decisions. The save was Herschiser's 15th of the season.

The teams end the regular Texas League season here tonight.

Pep rally ushers in grid season

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Sports Writer

One finally got the feeling that the high school football season has arrived after Tuesday night's annual Midland Lee "Chicken Feed" pep rally at the Lee Field House.

Not only did the Lee band, Rebelettes, cheerleaders and drill teams fill the air with sounds famaliar to West Texas football, but a cool breeze and overcast skies also gave the illusion of a real fall day — even if it is too early in the year to be fooled.

But there is no fooling around when Rebel fans point to the football season and the annual rally and "chicken on the ground" serve the purpose of kicking off the 1981 grid season. So to speak, it is the first event of the year for the Rebels where the "feeling" is there. All that is left now is to face an opponent where all the scores really count.

Spike Dykes' Rebs have waited a long time for this week. At times there was a feeling that it would never come. This year's Rebels have gone through the spring training grind and the pre-season sweat shop — all with little notice by an adoring public.

But all that ended Tuesday as the Rebels got their first real feeling that all that work was now about to pay off. The sore and tired muscles seem to fade when people start noticing.

And Lee has all the ingredients to make their football heroes feel wanted. Dykes did not miss the point either, "The Rebelettes, cheerleaders and drill teams all do a great job for us every year. And we have a band that is one of the best in the nation. They do their job well and now it's up to us to keep our end of the bargain. I'll be disappointed if we don't."

So if the Rebels are to hold up their end of things, they must start Friday night when they make the longest road trip of the year to Killeen, a team always known for its outstanding speed.

It will be a time to make amends for last year when the Kangaroos spoiled Dykes' Lee coaching debut in Midland with a 13-7 victory over the Rebels. But really that is in the past and if Tuesday was for nothing else, it was to say that this is a fresh start — a new beginning with highest hopes. Midland started noticing the Rebels for real.

The Rebs could produce a solid unit in 1981. They defeated Andrews, 2-1, in a scrimmage session last Friday, but Dykes thinks they will have to improve a great deal as time goes by.

But that may be the trait of Dykes' squads. The Rebs got off to a 2-2 start last year before finishing with a 6-3-1 record. The one thing you can say about that team is that they improved nearly every week of the season.

"We are not a very good football team right now, but we have seen some encouraging signs," Dykes said after the scrimmage. "The kids give a lot of effort and we are pleased with the way the defensive line has played so far. There is always room for improvement and we will have to continue to improve."

Landry advises caution in opener

DALLAS (AP) - Dallas Coach Tom Landry warns that the Cowboys' streak of winning 16 consecutive openers could be in danger this Sunday against the Washington Redskins because his team doesn't have a psychological advantage this year.

The Redskins were fired to a fever pitch in 1980 by Coach Jack Pardee for the Monday night opener and the Redskins fell flat, losing 17-3.

They were never quite the same the rest of the year.

The Cowboys were big underdogs with Danny White starting at quarterback for the first time.

"We had a tremendous psychological edge last year but it won't be so this time," said Landry. "There is a different climate this time."

Under new Coach Joe Gibbs the Redskins are low-keying the game.

"Too much emphasis on one game can hurt you later," Gibbs said Tuesday.

Landry said the biggest change in the Cowboys in a year's time is confidence in White.

"We know what Danny can do," said Landry.

Landry announced his starting lineup Tuesday and it included Rice rookie Mike Downs at free safety.

Haden firmly entrenched as LA's quarter back

Rams, Cowboys, Lions favorites in National Conference

An AP Sports Analysis
By BRUCE LOWITT
AP Sports Writer

Pat Haden has spent virtually his whole professional football career looking over his own shoulder. What he used to see was James Harris, or Ron Jaworski, or Joe Namath, or Vince Ferragamo. What he never saw was security.

But he sees it now. And as the firmly (and finally) entrenched No.1 quarterback of the Los Angeles Rams, what he can look over are the shoulders of his offensive line — in the distance he can see another National Conference West championship.

The sometimes overwhelming depth of the Rams is missing in Atlanta, which is why the Falcons will fall just short of another title.

Like the Rams in the West, the Dallas Cowboys figure to return to the top of the heap in the East, edging out Philadelphia, the conference's defending champion. Danny White didn't make everyone instantly forget about Roger Staubach, but he established himself with the Cowboys' fans as a fine quarterback in his own right.

Jaworski, the Eagles' quarterback, also proved himself a first-rate leader, but with a slowing aging line in front of him and a slightly skimpy running game behind, it's doubtful the Eagles can repeat as division champs.

Detroit roared from 2-14 in 1979 to 9-7 last year. The improvement will continue (albeit not as dramatically) and the Lions figure to edge out the Chicago Bears for the NFC's Central title. And this may be the year that the former black-and-blue division, in recent years the laughingstock of the league, shucks its tarnished image.

As we begin the long trip toward the Super Bowl, here's what we expect down the road, when the division's 14 teams are pared to five in the playoffs:

West Division
Los Angeles Rams
x-Atlanta Falcons
New Orleans Saints
San Francisco 49ers

East Division
Dallas Cowboys
x-Philadelphia Eagles
Washington Redskins
St. Louis Cardinals
New York Giants

Central Division
Detroit Lions
Chicago Bears
Minnesota Vikings
Tampa Bay Buccaneers
Green Bay Packers
x-probable wild card

The problem Rams Coach Ray Malavasi has is the kind of problem every coach dreams of: what to do with all the talent on the roster. Assuming Cullen Bryant is the fullback and Elvis Peacock and Wendell Tyler are the established speed backs, what does he do with Jewerl Thomas, who burst onto the scene late last season? And can he keep everyone happy alternating Billy Waddy, Drew Hill, Preston Dennard and Willie Miller at wide receiver?

And on the offensive line, who can break into the unit of center Rich Saul, tackles Doug France and Jackie Slater and guards Dennis Harrah and Kent Hill? On defense, there are the slightest signs of age. But here, too, the Rams are stockpiled with talent.

The Falcons didn't exactly sneak up on the rest of the league last year, although they did win the division with some relatively "anonymous" talent.

For example, there's William Andrews, who for the second consecutive year quietly exceeded 1,000 yards (he had more yards than hotshots like Billy Sims and Tony Dorsett). And teammate Lynn Cain came within 86 yards of 1,000.

Andrews also caught 51 passes from Steve Bartkowski (who has finally learned how to temper his desire to bomb away) and Albert Jenkins, Wallace Francis and Junior Miller caught more than 45 apiece.

On defense, the linebacking corps is super-strong, and the secondary, picked clean by Dallas in the playoffs, may be strengthened by No.1 draft choice Bobby Butler. But the question remains: is there enough depth?

Bum Phillips built himself a contender in Houston with one draft choice — Heisman Trophy winner Earl Campbell — in 1978. He's trying to do the same in New Orleans with Heisman Trophy winner George Rogers. But while he was filling one of the few holes he had with the Oilers four years ago, he's only filling one of many with the Saints.

Look for New Orleans to jump up from its 1-15 record of a year ago — not quite high enough to reach .500, but enough to get past San Francisco. The 49ers' offense needs balance. Earl Cooper can't be both the No.1 rusher and No.1 receiver forever.

Defensively, Dallas is no longer quite as doomsday as it used to be, and with the loss of safety Randy Hughes, the secondary may be severely tested. But when the front four plays up to its potential, it is close to being unrivaled. The Cowboys' offensive line, too, is rock-steady.

Granted, there's no such thing as momentum from season to season, especially when one ends on a low note as Dallas' did in Philadelphia. But if Danny White can perform the way he did in general in 1980, and especially the way he did against the Falcons in those thrilling closing minutes, the Cowboys' fans will have plenty to shout about.

The loss of fullback Leroy Harris with a broken arm puts even more than the usual pressure on Wilbert Montgomery to carry the major share of the Eagles' ground game. Up front and at linebacker, the Philadelphia defense is formidable, indeed. But the deep secondary (few teams play as deep as do the Eagles) can be exploited.

Coach Joe Gibbs hopes to open up the Washington offense the way he did San Diego's, and with Joe Theismann throwing to his variety of backs as well as the wide receivers, plenty of fireworks are guaranteed. But can it overcome a defense which will be either too old or too young?

With the exception of Ottis Anderson, the St. Louis backfield is an aging one, and the line in front of it is nothing like it used to be. The Giants are sorely in need of a breakaway runner and solid blockers on the line.

The continued improvement of the Lions can be attributed to an improving offensive line, and that's Coach Monte Clark's specialty. Besides, behind that line is Billy Sims, who broke loose for 1,303 yards as a rookie.

Oiler GM would like team to discuss football

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston Oilers, General Manager Ladd Herzeg, saying he feels good about the National Football League's investigation of Oiler quarterback Ken Stabler, hopes the team can turn now to talk of football.

"I feel very good about the way the league office has handled the situation," Herzeg said Tuesday after Warren Welsh, chief of NFL security, questioned Stabler about his alleged association convicted bookmaker Nicholas Dudich, Perth Amboy, N.J.

"THEY ALREADY had conducted an investigation and found nothing wrong," Herzeg said. "They acted very promptly on the most recent events. I just hope we can finally concentrate on football."

Herzeg and Coach Ed Biles joined Stabler for the interview.

"Kenny answered the questions without hesitation or reservation," Herzeg said. "Welsh was here as a routine followup to Sunday's story in the New York Times."

But National Football League spokesman Jim Heffernan said late Tuesday night: "I wouldn't say it (the investigation) is completed but Welsh did meet with Stabler and he has to make a report to the commissioner."

The Times story reported that Stabler had been seen with Dudich, on a number of occassions beginning in 1976.

HERZEG SAID Stabler had been offended by the article and did not want to talk about the situation.

"The most unfortunate part about this situation is that when Kenny throws an interception inside the 20-yard line, these questions will pop up," Herzeg said. "It's extremely unfortunate."

Herzeg said an earlier investigation of Stabler's associations had turned up no improprieties.

"Kenny's extremely hurt by the insinuations and allgations," Herzeg said. "He feels he's contributed an awful lot during his football career and now his image has been tarnished somewhat."

Herzeg added that Stabler did not want to talk about the allegations.

The Oilers, meanwhile, continued preparations Tuesday for Sunday's season opener at Los Angeles.

THE OILERS got down to their 45-man roster Tuesday by placing injured quarterback Gifford Nielsen and wide receiver Tim Smith on injured reserve, and cutting wide receivers Rich Caster and Jeff Groth.

Nielsen had been the Oilers' starting quarterback until he suffered a shoulder injury two weeks ago. Smith suffered a broken finger.

Title to Careys

Pat and John Carey teamed with Phil and Sylvia Roberts to win the Midland Country Club's Ladies Golf Association's Mixed Foursome golf tournament over the weekend.

The winning team posted a 194 score along with the team of John and Rusty Euston and Betty and Poo Sappington, but won the event on a card playoff.

The best three balls of the four person team were used for scoring.

Montreal and Cincinnati players gather at the pitching mound during a bench clearing argument in the sixth inning Tuesday in Cincinnati. It all started when Expos batter John Milner was forced to hit the deck by a Frank Pastore pitch. The situation was quickly brought under control by the umpires.

Lone Star Conference expected to be wide open battle in 1981

COMMERCE, Texas (AP) — Angelo State's football stars of last season return with a No. 4 NAIA Division I ranking this year in a drive to wrest the Lone Star Conference's championship from Southwest Texas State.

SINCE LAST SEASON, all LSC teams have assumed dual membership in the NAIA and in Division II of the NCAA.

The Rams, who reached the NAIA quarter finals last season with an overall 8-2-1 record and 5-1-1 in the conference, get their first chance Saturday night when they host Alcorn of the Southwestern Athletic Conference.

The returnees include NAIA All-America Clayton Weishuhn, voted the LSC's most valuable lineman in 1980, and quarterback Doug Kuhlman, ranked the conference's No. 2 passer with 1,533 yards.

But Angelo State also must contend with East Texas State, ranked No. 9 nationally this year. East Texas opens the season Sept. 12 against No. 5 Cameron (Okla.).

MEANWHILE, SOUTHWEST Texas State football coach Jim Wacker is counting on quarterback Mark Miller to lead his team to a second consecutive Lone Star Conference championship this year.

Southwest Texas, which finished last year 6-1 in conference play and 8-3 overall, has been ranked No. 14 in the NAIA.

Miller, 6-2 and 188 pounds, will start in a home game against the Southwestern Conference's Prairie View A&M Saturday night, said Wacker, who added his veer quarterback is "mistake-proof at running the option."

Only two spots behind Southwest Texas in the NAIA poll, however, is another LSC team, Texas A&I, which will test a new quarterback in its homestand season opener Saturday against Northern Arizona of the Big Sky Conference.

NFL wants antitrust case out of LA

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The National Football League wants its antitrust case moved out of Los Angeles, saying a retrial in Southern California would be a "travesty" because of the publicity generated by the first trial.

Publicity about that trial, which ended in a hung jury, created "an atmosphere of hatred and misinformation," the NFL said in a memorandum filed Tuesday in Los Angeles federal court to support a motion for a change of venue.

The retrial is scheduled to start Sept. 30. A mistrial was declared Aug. 13 after the jury deadlocked 8-2 in favor of the Los Angeles Coliseum Commission and the Oakland Raiders, who had taken the league to court over its refusal to let the Raiders move to Los Angeles.

The NFL memorandum also said the lawyers for the Raiders and the Coliseum Commission had "made a cruel and utterly irresponsible attack," on retired Anaheim businessman Thomas Gelker, one of the two jurors who sided with the NFL. As the jury was deliberating, it was learned that his cousin was a former World Football League club owner.

Marshall suffers first defeat

Houston nips Mets 3-2 on passed ball

By Associated Press

Mike Marshall didn't want to make the pitch too good — and it wasn't.

With Houston and the New York Mets tied 2-2 in the bottom of the ninth inning Tuesday night, the Astros had pinch-runner Scott Loucks on third base with two outs, with Marshall on the mound for the Mets.

"I HAD two open bases and I wanted to make certain I didn't throw it down the middle if the plate," said Marshall. "I wasn't worried about throwing strikes; I just wanted to make quality pitches."

Not only was his fourth pitch to Harry Spilman not down the middle, it was low and far outside, and Loucks scored easily when the ball rolled away from catcher Alex Trevino. The run gave the Astros a 3-2 victory, their sixth in a row, all at home.

In other National League games, Philadelphia blanked Atlanta 3-0, Montreal edged Cincinnati 4-3, San Diego trimmed Chicago 3-2, San Francisco beat St. Louis 4-2 and Los Angeles edged Pittsburgh 3-2 in 14 innings.

Loucks was running for Alan Ashby, who doubled off Marshall with one out in the ninth. He advanced to third on a groundout.

Loucks actually had another chance to score when Marshall's first pitch to Spilman got away from Trevino.

"I DIDN'T think it got far enough away to make it on that first one," Loucks said. "I couldn't take the bat out of Harry's hand. He was up there to drive me in."

Three pitches later, Loucks waltzed home on the wild pitch. For Marshall, it was his first loss of the season after winning his first two decisions over the Astros in New York last week.

"There aren't many who have learned to handle my pitches effectively, but I'm sure Alex will get better as time goes on," Marshall said. "I just can't concern myself whether the catcher can handle my pitches or not."

Joe Sambito, 4-5, who lost twice to the Mets and Marshall last week, was the winner with two innings of one-hit pitching.

"Today I was better but I know I'm still not all the way back," said Sambito. "I haven't let it bother me. The only way you can get out of a slump is to go out there and do the job."

Houston took a 2-0 lead in the fourth inning when Art Howe doubled home a run and Luis Pujols got credit for an RBI when Howe scored as third baseman Huble Brooks booted Pujols' grounder.

HOUSTON STARTER Joe Niekro baffled the Mets on two hits through six innings, but he yielded two runs in the seventh.

Niekro walked Brooks to open the seventh and left the game after Lee Mazzilli's double to center field ycored Brooks from first base.

Dave Smith replaced Niekro and yielded a run-scoring single to pinch-hitter Rusty Staub.

Phillies 3, Braves 0

Steve Carlton pitched a three-hitter for his first shutout of the season and Gary Matthews drove in all of Philadelphia's runs with a two-run single and a homer.

Carlton, 11-3, didn't allow a baserunner past first after the first inning, when Rufino Linares drew the only walk of the game off the veteran left-hander and went to second on a sacrifice. Linares went on to get two of the three hits by the Braves.

Matthews drove in the Phillies' first two runs with a single in the third inning and the other with his third homer of the year leading off the sixth.

Expos 4, Reds 3

Warren Cromartie singled in the go-ahead run to climax a three-run seventh inning for Montreal against Cincinnati.

Two of the Expos' runs in the seventh were unearned after third baseman Ray Knight booted a ground ball. One run scored on the error and the tying run came home on Gary Carter's sacrifice fly before Cromartie knocked in the game-winner.

Charlie Lea, 5-4, was the winning pitcher and Jeff Reardon earned his fourth save with three innings of hitless relief.

Padres 3, Cubs 2

San Diego, which has won only six of 23 games in the second season, won its third in a row as Ruppert Jones drove in two runs with a homer and a sacrifice fly.

Jones, who has 10 RBI in the last 11 games, had a sacrifice fly in the first inning of Mike Krukow, 4-6, and homered in the fifth off reliever Jay Howell.

Giants 4, Cardinals 2

San Francisco won its fifth in a row and stayed only a half-game behind Houston in the West by defeating St. Louis, whose lead in the East was cut to a half-game over Montreal.

With the Cardinals ahead 1-0, Darrell Evans' fifth-inning single tied the score, and George Hendrick bobbled the ball on the hit, enabling Jack Clark to take third and Evans to reach second. Sixto Lezcano then dropped Larry Herndon's fly near the right field bullpen, and Clark and Evans both scored.

Vida Blue, 7-5, pitched six innings, allowing two runs on four hits, and got sterling relief from Al Holland, who allowed only one hit and struck out four in the last three innings.

Dodgers 3, Pirates 2

Ron Cey crossed up Pittsburgh's strategy of walking Steve Garvey intentionally when he singled home Ken Landreaux with the winning run in the bottom of the 14th inning.

The Pirates had taken a 2-1 lead in the top of the 12th on Omar Moreno's sacrifice fly, but the Dodgers tied it again on Garvey's single.

Fernando Valenzuela, bidding to become the major leagues' first 12-game winner, gave up only one run on eight hits in 10 innings before leaving.

Weather takes toll on amateurs

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The fog rolled in on a wind that rolled the scores up at the opening of the 81st U.S. Amateur Golf Championship.

"It was so windy on some holes, I had to aim my tee shots into the trees and count on the wind blowing the ball back in," said Jim Holtgrieve, whose 1-over-par 71 placed him third after Tuesday's play on the Olympic Club's two courses.

THE 36-HOLE qualifying ends today, and those hoping to come back from opening rounds of 80 or higher included former champ Bill Campbell of West Virginia, 1981 British Amateur finalist Joel Hirsch of Chicago, and Walker Cup player Roger Chapman of England.

The leader after 18 holes was Corey Pavin, the 21-year-old UCLA student who posted a 69 on Olympic's Ocean course. Holtgrieve also played that course, which is considerably shorter than the 6,679-yard Lake course but more exposed to the winds off the adjoining Pacific.

ALL THE golfers assigned to the 6,103-yard Ocean course Tuesday teed off later than scheduled, being forced to wait until the fog lifted and allowed adequate visibility.

"It was cold out, and we were waiting and waiting. That's about the last thing you want to do when you're trying to qualify for the U.S. Amateur," said Pavin. "You want to go out and get it done."

Once Pavin hit the course, he posted three birdies and two bogeys for his pacesetting score among the 282 players trying for the 64 spots in match play, which begins Thursday.

Wake Forest University golfer Bob Wrenn from Midlothian, Va., matched par on the Lake course and, with his 70, was second to Pavin. The next best score on the Lake course was a 72 by Walker Cup team member Joe Rassett of Turlock, Calif.

"I'M SURE you've got the upper hand on being the medalist, shooting a 70 over there," Holtgrieve told Wrenn, whose round featured a 35-foot birdie putt on one hole.

Rassett, although he also had the tougher course behind him, finished the first round with a sore right wrist, which he jammed on a shot at the Lake's 16th hole.

The seven players at 72 also included the oldest man in the tournament, 65-year-old Bill Hyndman of Huntington Valley, Pa., who won the U.S. Seniors title in 1973.

Defending champion Hal Sutton, 22, of Shreveport, La., opened with a 73 onlthe Ocean course.

Campbell, current U.S. Seniors champ, and Hirsch shot 81s Tuesday but had a shot at the Ocean course today. Chapman of England needed a low score today after his opening 83 on the Lake course.

Jackson's bat gaining life

By Associated Press

Manager Gene Michael of the New York Yankees stayed with Reggie Jackson for a long time while he was in a slump.

Now that he's hitting, he can say he told you so.

"Reggie's one of the big reasons we're going the way we are," said Michael after the red-hot Jackson helped the Yankees rout the Minnesota Twins 11-6 Tuesday night.

Jackson hit a towering three-run homer and a single and has now hit safely in the Yankees' last five games, which incidentally have all been New York victories.

In other American League action, it was Detroit 2, Chicago 1; Baltimore 1, Seattle 0; California 3, Boston 2; Kansas City 3, Milwaukee 1 and Toronto 9, Texas 3. The Oakland-Cleveland game was postponed by rain.

Jackson hit a 3-0 pitch off reliever John Verhoeven over the 416-foot barrier in right field, his 19th career home run at Minnesota's Metropolitan Stadium.

Rick Reuschel, 2-1, checked the Twins on just five hits in seven innings before leaving in favor of relievers Ron Davis and Dave LaRoche, who pitched one inning each. Pete Redfern, 4-8, was tagged with the loss.

Tigers 2, White Sox 1

Steve Kemp's tie-breaking single with two out in the ninth inning off newcomer Jerry Koosman lifted Detroit over Chicago and sent the White Sox to their fifth straight defeat.

Koosman, acquired from Minnesota over the weekend, took over for starter Britt Burns at the start of the ninth. Lou Whitaker drew a walk and went to second on a sacrifice bunt by Ricky Peters. Alan Trammell flied out before Kemp singled to score Whitaker with the lead run. Koosman's record fell to 3-10 while Detroit starter Dan Petry, 7-6, gained the victory.

Orioles 1, Mariners 0

Cy Young Award winner Steve Stone (3-4), in his second start after 2½ months on the disabled list, combined with Tippy Martinez to hurl a two-hitter as Baltimore blanked Seattle.

Loser Glenn Abbott, 2-5, also allowed two hits but gave up a run in the fourth when Rich Dauer doubled and came around to score on infield outs by Ken Singleton and Eddie Murray.

Angels 3, Red Sox 2

Bobby Grich and Don Baylor each singled home a run and reliever Don Aase pitched out of a tough ninth-inning situation as California beat Boston. Grich's RBI hit keyed two-run seventh and Baylor's single drove in the Angels' eventual winning run.

Winner Ken Forsch, 11-6, scattered eight hits, but left the game with the bases loaded and none out in the ninth and his team leading 3-1. Aase came into the game at that point and gave up a run-scoring grounder to Rich Gedman before pitching out of the jam and recording his ninth save. Bob Stanley, 7-5, who wild-pitched a run home in the seventh, was the loser.

Royals 3, Brewers 1

Frank White drove in two runs with a seventh-inning single and Larry Gura won his fifth straight game as Kansas City beat Milwaukee.

Kansas City, winning its first game for new Manager Dick Howser, opened the seventh with an infield single by Darrell Motley. Bunt singles by U.L. Washington and Willie Wilson loaded the bases, then White drilled a ground ball through Milwaukee's drawn-in infield to score Motley and Washington and extend his hitting streak to 11 games.

Gura, unbeaten in the second season, scattered eight hits, struck out two and walked one to raise his record to 9-5.

Blue Jays 9, Rangers 3

Lloyd Moseby drove in four runs with a single and a homer and Jim Clancy scattered nine hits to lead Toronto over Texas. Clancy, 4-8, who walked three and struck out five, pitched shutout ball until Bobby Jones slugged a two-run homer with two outs in the seventh.

Danny Darwin, 8-7, was the loser for Texas.

Santos pulls out of title bout

By Associated Press

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Challenger Carlos Santos has pulled out of Saturday's scheduled title bout against World Boxing Council junior middleweight champion Wilfred Benitez because of an injured hand.

A SPOKESMAN for promoter Don Chargin said Tuesday he is hoping to find a "suitable" opponent to take the place of Santos in the fight, scheduled to be televised by ABC.

Santos' manager, Yamil Chade said the challenger formed a blister in the index finger of his left hand Saturday and the blister became inflamed.

Santos, from Puerto Rico, is the WBC's No. 1-ranked contender with a 14-0 record.

Team Canada, U.S. post Canada Cup wins

By The Associated Press

Only Team Canada and Finland did as expected on the opening night of the Canada Cup.

The Canadians, all of whom are stars in the National Hockey League, bombed the Finns 9-0 Tuesday night as the six-team international hockey tournament got under way in Edmonton and Winnipeg. In the first game of a doubleheader in Edmonton, the United States surprised Sweden 3-1.

AT WINNIPEG, the vaunted Soviet Union was held to a 1-1 tie by a young Czechoslovakian national team which is in the process of rebuilding.

Team Canada, heavily favored to repeat as Canada Cup champions — Canada won the inaugural event in 1976 — took nearly 17 minutes to get started before 8,991 fans in Edmonton. But when the Canadians got untracked, the outmanned Finns didn't stand a chance.

Mike Bossy, the NHL's top goal-scorer last season with 68, connected on a power play at 16:43 of the first period, just five seconds after Finland's Matti Hagman was penalized. In the second period, Bossy, of the Stanley Cup champion New York Islanders, scored again, one of five goals in that session for Canada.

Wayne Gretzky, who set an NHL record with 164 points in 1980-81, had a pair of goals, Gilbert Perreault assisted on four of the second-period tallies and Guy Lafleur set up three.

PERREAULT WAS happy to make the switch from center.

"When I was invited to camp, I was worried about getting cut," he said. "I looked at the centers and there were so many good ones. I didn't know they'd want me to play left wing. I thought I'd probably play only a few shifts."

Perreault, Lafleur and Gretzky combined for a goal on their first shift of the second period, with the latter deflecting Lafleur's shot under Finnish goalie Markus Mattsson.

GRETZKY THEN sent Lafleur and Perreault away with a perfect pass and Perreault hit defenseman Ray Bourque, who made it 3-0 with a short drive.

Gretzky and Perreault combined to set up Danny Gare's tally at 12:25 of the period, then Bossy got his second of the night by skating out of the corner and rifling a wrist shot home.

With only six seconds left in the session, Gretzky skated from behind the Finnish net and tucked the puck behind Mattsson to end the 20-minute scoring barrage.

All-star goaltender Mike Liut of the St. Louis Blues stopped all 24 shots he faced, while the Canadians peppered Mattsson — a member of the Winnipeg Jets — with 42 shots.

United States 3, Sweden 1

The Swedes sent the strongest team ever to represent them in international competition to the Canada Cup. But it was humbled by the aggressive Americans, who got goals from Reed Larson and Dave Christian in the first period and Mike O'Connell in the third.

Goalie Tony Esposito, an NHL All-Star with the Chicago Black Hawks, stopped 28 shots for the United States.

"Espo made some real big saves," said American defenseman Mark Howe. "They had five or six good scoring chances but we defended them well. We had three guys back and our defense set up most of the game. We stopped them at the blue line and didn't let them get going."

"We didn't skate well because of the stress on us," said Anders Parmstroem, Sweden's coach. "We're not used to the pressure and the U.S. was very disciplined."

Czechoslovakia 1, Soviet Union 1

There had been some doubts entering the tournament about the quality of Czechoslovakia's goaltending but 23-year-old Karel Lang was steady as his mates held the dynamic Soviet attack to only 16 shots. Soviet goalie Vladislav Tretiak, one of the world's best netminders, was tested 24 times.

Peace move by NCAA toward CFA in dispute

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — The NCAA was making moves aimed at a settlement with the College Football Association in their dispute over a potential TV contract between the CFA and NBC, NCAA sources say.

The recommendations, prepared by a subcommittee of the Governance Committee of the National Collegiate Athletics Association, specifically recommend many of the changes in NCAA rules and procedures that the CFA schools have sought for years, The Daily Oklahoman reported in today's editions.

NCAA Executive Director Walter Byers is prepared to talk about the recommendations at a meeting of the Big Eight in Kansas City today, and subcommittee member Charlie Scott of Alabama will report on them at a meeting of the Southeastern Conference in Atlanta, Ga., today and Thursday, sources told the newspaper.

A member of the subcommitee said the changes "are intended to give more voice to the football interests in Division I," although he declined to reveal the precise text until the proposals are forwarded to the entire committee.

"They are a signal that the kinds of the things they (the CFA schools) want to hear are the recommendations that are being made," he said.

The recomendations, generally worded, are to restructure Division 1A into a group that would include about 80-90 schools with major football programs, change the method of voting on the NCAA football TV contract, and halt the proliferation of basketball schools in Division I, the newspaper reported.

The NCAA source insisted that the recommendations are no different than they would have been if the subcommittee had gotten around to them a year ago, but admitted that a "crisis situation" now exists.

The CFA has already approved a four-year, $180 million football TV contract with NBC that would be in direct conflict with a $263.5 million contract negotiated by the NCAA with ABC and CBS for the same period. However, the CFA schools have until September 10 to individually withdraw from the contract.

The CFA is comprised of most major indepenents and members of all major conferences except the Big Ten and the Pacific 10.

O'Grady stripped of lightweight title by WBA

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Sean O'Grady, who was stripped of his World Boxing Association lightweight title, will fight Sept. 26 under sanction of a new organization formed by his father and manager.

THE WBA was ordered by a federal court judge to strip him of the title he won April 12 when he scored a unanimous decision over Hilmer Kenty in Atlantic City, N.J. The O'Gradys have opposed the stripping, saying boxing promoter Bob Arum was trying to force Sean into a fight he (Arum) would promote.

Murray Sleep, a member of the WBA championship committee, said Tuesday in an interview in Halifax, Nova Scotia, he has received official word from the WBA that O'Grady is no longer considered champion.

SLEEP ALSO said two WBA lightweight contenders will meet in September at undisclosed location for the vacant title.

Pat O'Grady wasn't ready to believe that his son was stripped of his title.

"Any stripping has to be done by the WBA," said an obviously angry Pat O'Grady. "The only guy that can strip Sean O'Grady is Rodrigo Sanchez of Panama because he's the president of the WBA.

BOTH O'GRADY and promoter Michael Gass, president of the Empire Sporting Club in Oklahoma City, said they have received no official word of the title stripping.

"We've had 10 wire stories that had Sean O'Grady stripped and none of them has been true," the elder O'Grady said.

Gass said "until we're notified, we're not stripped as far as we're concerned."

O'Grady's handlers in Oklahoma City have had "no notification," he said. "We haven't had any telegrams or nothing."

As soon as official notification of the stripping is received, "we'll either appeal it or bring it to a higher court," Gass said. "I think we'll pursue it and expose Arum and the WBA for what they've done."

MANAGER PAT O'Grady said the new organization, the World Athletic Association, will hold a general convention the night of the Sept. 26 fight and elect permanent officers.

J.C. Thomas of Denver, temporary president of the WAA, wrote in a cover letter that the new association "will be run by promoters and managers, the people who are affected by the rules."

"Other sports are controlled by the owners, players, tr: ... so why should ...xing be controlled ... people who are only interested in the money that can be derived from a sport?" he wrote.

Empire Sporting Club will promote a card Sept. 26 in Oklahoma City with the younger O'Grady tentatively scheduled to meet Mexican lightweight champion Jose Louis Ramirez, who is ranked eighth by the WBC, in a 15-round bout for the WAA lightweight title.

MHS jvs only team not to feel sting of defeat

The Midland Lee High School Rebel volleyball teams dropped a pair of games to the Seminole Maidens last night with the varsity falling 4-15, 3-15 and the JV going under 4-15, 3-15.

About her team's performance, Coach Janice Baulch said "It's going to take some time to get them playing like they need to, but they'll come around."

Lee's next game will be a doubleheader homestand against Denver City. Lee will play DC at 4 p.m. followed by Midland High School against DC at 5.

THE MIDLAND High School Bulldog varsity volleyball team had its problems last night against Plains while the junior varsity had a relatively easy time at the MHS gym.

"We didn't play up to our potential," said coach Linda Jolley about her varsity squad's 12-15, 8-15 loss to the Cowboys. "All of us looked bad and played in spurts."

The loss dropped the Bulldogs to 2-3 on the season.

Margie Marmolejo led the JV to victory with a strong serve that scored 12 points in the first game and six in the second for a 15-5, 15-3 victory, upping the season record to 4-1.

MHS and Midland Lee will be on the Rebel courts Thursday night for a doubleheader against Denver City. Lee will open the action at 4 p.m. and MHS will follow at 5.

Oil minister forecasts downward trends in prices

By ALY MAHMOUD
Associated Press Writer

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — Saudi Arabia's oil minister said OPEC's failure to set a unified price for oil and the current worldwide glut will force petroleum prices to continue dropping, the Saudi state radio reported today.

Sheik Ahmed Zaki Yamani, in a briefing Monday night for the Saudi Cabinet, explained his resistance to higher prices at last month's Geneva ministerial meeting of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Counties, the radio said.

The 13-nation cartel was unable to set a unified price for oil because Saudi Arabia, the largest and cheapest producer, refused to raise its price more than $2 to $34 for a 42 gallon barrel. The compromise proposal would have requried other nations to lower their prices from a high of $40 a barrel, but several of them balked at the plan.

As a conciliatory move, Yamani agreed to cut back production by 10 percent — or 1 million barrels a day — to reduce a world oversupply of oil estimated at 2 million to 2.5 million barrels a day.

The production cut was to have taken effect today, but industry sources reached by telephone in Saudi Arabia said they did not know if the new policy had been instituted.

U.S. gasoline prices, since peaking in March, have gone down several cents a gallon because demand has declined and because of the oil glut.

Yamani told the Cabinet that prior to the Geneva meeting, the Saudis had resolved to raise their selling price from $32 dollars to $34 dollars a barrel.

"We deemed the $34-a-barrel price was in line with market conditions," the radio quoted Yamani as saying. "The $35-a-barrel price (demanded by some OPEC ministers) would have meant an increase in actual costs of buying oil, an increase of billions of dollars. This would encourage investment in alternative energy sources and precipitate a (drop in demand and, therefore) glut in the market."

Yamani said there was a steady trend in world markets toward reducing oil price well below $34 a barrel.

"Some OPEC members had refused that ($34) price level and are now selling their oil at prices lower than that," the broadcast quoted him as saying. He did not elaborate.

Yamani indicated that Saudi Arabia will stick to its original $32-a-barrel price, at least till the OPEC ministers hold their next price fixing conference at Abu Dhabi in December.

Striking Redstone Coal Miners return to work

REDSTONE, Colo. (AP) — Union coal miners ended a seven-week strike and began returning to work as their president admitted that Mid-Continent Resources Inc. had broken the union.

Picket lines went down with Monday's 7 a.m. shift, company officials said. The company had won a recent court order restricting strike activities.

"We're still alive," Redstone Workers Association President Charles Corey said Monday, "but we're going to go UMWA (United Mine Workers of America). Hopefully, we'll have a representation election soon."

Asked if the company had broken his local union, Corey replied, "Effectively, yes. For several different reasons. Legal expertise, finances, the whole spectrum."

Corey said the strike cost the average miner about $3,500 in lost wages. The union last week asked the National Labor Relations Board to hold an election to ask Mid-Continent workers if they wanted to join the UMW.

"We will abide by the results of the election but we'll urge the men to vote for no union," said Bob Delaney, vice president and general counsel for Mid-Continent. The election is expected later this month.

At the start of the strike, membership in the union was about 340, Corey said. He estimated it fell to about 280 by Monday morning.

The local union had voted Sunday to accept the company's terms and return to work. Terms of the agreement were reached last week with a federal mediator and company officials.

Corey said the returning miners gave in on the key reason for the strike — the 6-and-3 work week. In that plan, miners work six days and have three off. The company wanted the 6-and-3 schedule so the mine could stay open continuously, rather than closing on weekends.

Corey also said the miners would get about a 9 percent initial pay raise under their individual agreements with the company. In the previous contract, miners made a minimum of $9.97 an hour for work above ground and $12.20 an hour for underground work.

Delaney said the company's two active mines had been kept open by salaried employees and miners who returned to work during the strike.

The Redstone mines made national news last spring when an explosion in the company's Dutch Creek No. 1 mine killed 15 miners on April 15. That mine has not reopened, Delaney said.

Lowly desert plant may bolster rubber supply

By STEVE BREWER
Associated Press Writer

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — The lowly and ugly guayule plant, isolated for centuries in the deserts of West Texas, is the subject of research in four states, experiments by companies like Goodyear and Firestone and discussion in the Reagan administration.

Why? Guayule, pronounced why-oo-lee, produces natural rubber in its stems and branches.

With the world's natural rubber supply endangered by instability in Southeast Asia, where most of it is produced, government officials are turning to the squatty, silver-green guayule plant as a possible solution to the nation's needs.

Natural rubber is second only to oil as an import into the United States, with 1 million tons imported annually, said Wayne Whitworth, an agronomist at New Mexico State University in nearby Las Cruces.

Forty percent of the rubber in radial tires is natural rubber and airplane tires are made exclusively from natural rubber because it is more heat-resistant that its synthetic counterpart, Whitworth said.

Plus, synthetic rubber is made from petroleum, another product that the United States is not self-sufficient in.

RUBBER IS CONSIDERED by the U.S. government to be a strategic material that should be stockpiled in case war or political upheaval should cut off the supplies from Asia.

"We have less than one half of the natural rubber we're supposed to have," Whitworth said. "If we could develop guayule as a crop, it would help us in two ways — give us an industry and give us a stockpile.

"We could have living rubber reserves so that when we needed it, we could go out and get it."

Whitworth was involved in a government-funded guayule project at Crystal City, Texas, in 1951, when the Korean conflict threatened natural rubber supplies. The crop was plowed under when the situation stabilized.

During World War II, guayule was planted by the government in California because of the Japanese threat to rubber-producing countries. That crop was burned when the war ended.

But guayule has gained the attention of government again and currently $1.7 million in government funds is being used for research projects in Texas, New Mexico, Arizona and California, said Dick Wheaton, program manager of the Joint Guayule Commission in Washington, D.C.

ONE OF THOSE RESEARCH projects is Whitworth's 30 acres of guayule at New Mexico State.

Much of the research is being conducted in West Texas, the only area in the United States where the plant, which needs less than 15 inches of rainfall a year, grows wild. Texas A&M University has a seeding project near Pecos. Firestone Tire and Rubber Co. is growing nearly 200 acres of guayule near Fort Stockton.

Firestone also is experimenting with extracting rubber from the plant at laboratories in Akron, Ohio, said Joe Nivert, production manager of the company's plantation division.

"We have a small developmental laboratory that can make about two pounds of rubber per day," Nivert said. "We are looking at a number of alternative processes for getting the rubber. We're scheduled to come up with a process by mid-1982."

Nivert said the company also is investigating methods of using guayule byproducts such as bagasse, a woody fiber that burns very hot. It is believed that bagasse could be used to generate the energy needed to operate a full-scale processing plant.

Resin from the plant can be used for adhesives and varnishes and the plant's oils might even be used for perfume, he said.

"For guayule to be profitable, we know we will have to use the byproducts," he said.

THE PROFITTABILITY of guayule has been the major question mark in the production of a domestic rubber crop, Nivert said.

"There are too many risks," he said. "There's no proven process so far. For that matter, there's no proved method of growing. There has to be a lot of development in the field before it could be a big money-making project."

There is a "chicken and egg situation" that is preventing private entrepeneurs from jumping onto the guayule bandwagon, Ross Clanahan of the Federal Emergency Management Agency said.

Potential growers won't plant a crop until they are assured that there is a processing plant to buy it. Rubber companies are afraid to build such a plant because they may not be able to get adequate guayule supplies.

Everyone interviewed about guayule said government support will be the key to development of the rubber source.

"In 1980, natural rubber cost an average of 74.5 cents per pound," Wheaton said. "Our best educated estimate is that the cost of guayule natural rubber is 83 to 84 cents per pound. We have to get a government subsidy to balance the difference between natural rubber and guayule rubber."

GOODYEAR has submitted a proposal for a pilot program to FEMA in hopes that the administration will invest in guayule because of its strategic value as a defense stockpile. Firestone is preparing a proposal of its own, Nivert said.

Meanwhile, FEMA officials have taken the initiative and suggested such a program to the administration for fiscal year 1983, Clanahan said.

Clanahan said the proposal for a goverment-subsidized 10-year program currently is being considered by budget experts in the administration. If it is approved, President Reagan would submit the proposal to Congress, where Wheaton thinks it has relatively strong support.

BLM lease drawings begin

SANTA FE, N.M. (AP) — The U.S. Bureau of Land Management's New Mexico office said it would begin a public drawing Tuesday to establish priorities for oil and natural gas leases on military reservations in New Mexico, Texas and Oklahoma.

The BLM said Monday it has received 3,070 applications to lease the military lands.

Leasing of acquired military land was suspended by the secretary of the interior in November 1979, but the areas were reopened to lease aplications Aug. 10.

The BLM said all applications received between Aug. 10-28 are considered as "simultaneously filed" and will be entered in the drawing to determine which leases will be processed first.

There are several million acres of acquired military land, purchased by the Department of Defense from private owners, in the three-state area. Most of it is in Texas, and a majority of the applications received by the BLM are for Texas lands.

The drawing to determine the leasing priority is to begin at 10 a.m. Tuesday at the BLM offices in Santa Fe. The bureau said it expected it would take several days to complete the drawing process.

A $10 filing fee and advance rental payment of $1 an acre must be paid with each application. The BLM has collected about $5.4 million in fees and rental with the applications.

D&D mini-seminar Wednesday

The Desk and Derrick Club of Midland will conduct a "mini-seminar" on the duties of the geological technicians, during the noon hour tomorrow, in the Ready Room of the Texas Electric Building, at the corner of Texas and Colorado streets.

The meeting will be the first of four training sessions for D&D members,scheduled each Wednesday this month.

Hottest energy issue

Policy decision awaiting Reagan

By STERLING NOEL
Hearst Feature Service

Awaiting Ronald Reagan's return to the Oval Office is today's hottest energy issue: whether to deregulate natural gas now.

Under the Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978, controls on about half of natural gas production will be lifted by 1985. The other half will be kept under control indefinitely.

It is a mean sort of compromise measure, achieving neither deregulation nor consumer protection. What the Reagan administration wants is full decontrol.

But that brings up the question of how fast — whether the consumers and the economy can stand the sudden price escalations of immediate decontrol, or whether it should be gradual and possibly less destructive.

The administration is divided on that. Natural gas is not comparable to oil. Gas prices have been under controls for 40 years, possibly longer than any other commodity and, as a result of low costs, there has been built up a vast network of pipelines and storage tanks and special furnaces.

Nobody knows what decontrol would do to these costly installations. A worst-case scenario is that expensive natural gas would make them obsolete, despite the presumed economic efficiency of a free market.

Some analysts say natural gas prices would, at first, soar above the equivalent price of oil and remain there until new supplies were brought on line.

But in the end, in a free market, natural gas prices would presumably be forced down to a competitive level and the advantages of decontrol would become apparent. These advantages are, according to the free market experience, incentives for increased production and promotion of conservation because of higher prices.

The arguments against decontrol are principally, that households will have to pay twice as much for natural gas; inflation rates will be forced up because of higher energy costs to industries; and manufacturers of such items as textiles and chemicals will have to raise prices and jeopardize competitive positions in world markets.

A principal argument against decontrol at this time, assuming Reagan can continue his successes with congressional persuasion, is that the gas price hikes would most likely come in the midst of the 1982 election campaigns.

It would not only take time for new gas to come on line, but the complicated contract structure of the gas industry would cause further delays, all of it adding up to possible sudden gas price boosts uncomfortably close to November, 1982.

Further, decontrol whenever it would take place, involves an enormous transfer of income, from consumer to producer and from consuming states to the relatively few producing states. This is put at some $40 billion a year.

This is considered to be a significant incentive for blocking decontrol, regardless of any possible economic advantages. There is also the matter of "windfall" profits that would accrue to the industry, which could give many congressmen second thoughts about supporting such a program.

Bergman will retire after one more film

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Swedish film director Ingmar Bergman says the next film he shoots "will be my absolutely last one."

Bergman said the screenplay for the film, to be shot in Munich in 1983, is completed and is experimental and "a very controversial film."

"I have made so much film. Since 1941. And now I am growing old. Film-making is something for young people to pursue," Bergman, 63, told the daily newspaper Dagens Nyheter on Tuesday.

Bergman's internationally acclaimed films include "Wild Strawberries," "Persona," "The Seventh Seal" and "Cries and Whispers."

●

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Actor James Garner, recuperating from broken ribs he suffered while filming his new "Bret Maverick" television series, is anxious to get back in the saddle, his publicist says.

Garner

Garner, 53, was at home with his wife, Lois on Tuesday. He was hospitalized for a week following the accident at Burbank Studios Aug. 20, when he fell from a machine that simulates the movement of a horse during close-up photography.

"He's looking forward to getting back to the show," said Garner spokesman Jerry Pam. The publicist said recovery will take several weeks. Garner created the role of Bret Maverick in 1957 on the old "Maverick" TV series.

●

NEW YORK (AP) — Former NBC president Fred Silverman, a 1958 graduate of Syracuse University, will teach a graduate course in TV programming there beginning in January.

Silverman will be a visiting professor in the university's S.I. Newhouse School of Public Communications.

Silverman resigned as NBC's chief executive officer June 30. He is the man generally credited with engineering ABC's rise to dominance in prime time before taking the NBC post.

Silverman's course at Syracuse will be called "Television Programming, Today and Tomorrow."

PITTSBURG, Calif. (AP) — Actor Donald Sutherland was recovering from a broken arm he suffered when the mast on his grounded sailboat snapped and hit him during an effort to free it.

Sutherland was listed in stable condition Tuesday at Los Medanos Community Hospital in Pittsburg, a nursing supervisor said.

Cronkite says he's still 'got plenty to do'

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Television Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Walter Cronkite misses his anchor seat, but says he is happy with his semi-retirement six months after he told the nation for the last time that "that's the way it is."

"I miss the broadcast, but no more than I anticipated," said Cronkite, who anchored CBS' Monday night special on the late broadcaster Lowell Thomas. "I don't think there's going to be any trauma. I don't regret my decision. It was time to move on and do other things. I've got plenty to do."

The 64-year-old former anchorman of the "CBS Evening News" said the change in his life is just hitting him now since he worked fairly regularly in March, April and May and then took the summer months off, as he had done in previous years.

"Thirty-six hours after retiring, I was on an airplane to Houston to do a story," he said Tuesday, adding that he was busy in the spring with his Soviet Union segment for CBS' five-part defense series and his weekly "Universe" program on science.

"There was no time to go and have afternoon cocktails, as I always dreamed it was supposed to be," he said. "It is a bit odd now, though. It's 5:30, I'm in New York and I'm talking to someone casually."

During the summer, Cronkite did a lot of sailing and took trips to Maine and Bermuda. "I feel great, absolutely wonderful. I've never felt better."

He's kept up with the world events by reading newspapers and watching the network newscasts, during which, he says, "I flip back and forth during the commercials. But I face the same frustrations about commercials. They seem to hit about the same time."

Alcoholism, alcohol abuse to be discussed by planning commission

Alcohol abuse and alcoholism will be discussed in an open meeting at 7 p.m. Thursday in the conference room of the Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission's offices at the Midland Air Terminal.

Issues to be dicussed include drinking while intoxicated (DWI) programs, the need for treatment services, problems relating to alcohol abuse among the youth and the elderly, and other special population groups.

Input received from the public will be considered in the formulation of the goals and objectives relating to alcohol abuse and alcoholism in the 17 county Permian Basin Region. These goals and objectives will become part of the 1982-84 Regional Alcohol Plan update.

Anyone desiring additional information should contact Cathy Clayton at the PBPRC at 563-1061.

Convicted spy Christopher Boyce was being transferred to a Missouri prison Tuesday morning. U.S. Marshal Robert Chritsman looks on.

Boyce prefers death to prison

SPRINGFIELD, Mo. (AP) — Convicted spy Christopher Boyce said he would rather die by fasting than spend his life behind bars, but he may not be given that choice.

Boyce, 28, was transferred Tuesday night from a jail in Everett, Wash., to the Medical Center for Federal Prisoners in Springfield.

The transfer was a "tactical move" that could allow Boyce to be force-fed without a court order, said Robert Christman, deputy U.S. marshal in Seattle.

The move returns Boyce to the custody of the Department of Justice and the U.S. Bureau of Prisons, Christman said.

Boyce — chained, handcuffed and wearing a hooded sweatshirt — was whisked from Springfield Municipal Airport across town to the prison after his arrival.

He will be kept under close medical observation, said Joseph Crabtree, executive assistant to the warden. Crabtree said doctors would thoroughly examine Boyce before deciding whether to force-feed him.

"Nobody wants to die, but I don't want to go back to prison," Boyce's lawyer, William Dougherty of Tustin, Calif., quoted him as saying.

A federal magistrate in Los Angeles on Monday dismissed an escape charge against Boyce, who had fled a federal prison in California 19 months ago. He was serving a 40-year sentence for selling secret satellite documents to the Soviets.

Dismissing the charge allowed authorities to move Boyce without having to obtain court permission.

Boyce has refused to eat since he was recaptured in Port Angeles, Wash., Aug. 21, although he has been taking some liquids.

A doctor who examined him Monday said he was in good condition. Christman said the doctor reported "there was no reason for worry."

Hinckley ordered to stay in jail

AP Laserphoto

John W. Hinckley, awaiting trial for attempting to assasinate Pres. Reagan, is denied bail.

WASHINGTON (AP) — A federal judge says John W. Hinckley Jr. must remain in jail to be sure he shows up for trial on charges of trying to kill President Reagan.

"The court has concluded that no set of conditions could be imposed which would reasonably assure that the defendant would appear at further proceedings in this case," U.S. District Judge Barrington D. Parker said in a written order Tuesday.

Defense attorneys had asked that Hinckley be released to a private mental institution near his parents' home in a Denver suburb and be kept under the watch of federal marshals.

Hinckley, who has pleaded innocent to charges of shooting Reagan and three others outside a Washington hotel March 30, now is being held in the stockade at Fort Meade, Md.

Chief defense attorney Vincent J. Fuller said Hinckley could be released in the legal custody of his parents on a promise that he would appear in court when needed. No bail money would be necessary, Fuller said.

In rejecting the request, Parker cited "the gravity of the offenses charged in the indictment and the considerable evidence proffered by the prosecution."

The judge said he took into account the extensive media coverage of the attempted assassination, Hinckley's history of wandering, his lack of financial assets, his mental condition and the fact that he gave false information to police after his arrest on weapons possession charges last Oct. 9 in Nashville.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Roger M. Adelman also argued that Hinckley, 26, "might possibly be in jeopardy if released."

"There's no way a private institution could guarantee Mr. Hinckley's safety," Adelman said.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Taking oxygen may help athletes

Dear Dr. Solomon: During the Olympics, I read about athletes getting blood transfusions so that they would do better. Is there anything to this? Also, what about taking oxygen? Would that help an athlete's performance? — Frank, Miami

Dear Frank: Dr. E.C. Percy, of the University of Arizona Health Sciences Center, reports that an athlete may improve his or her performance by taking oxygen within two minutes of an event that lasts less than 30 seconds. As for blood doping — that is, reinfusing an athlete's own blood — the risks involved, such as infection, make this practice inadvisable.

Dear Dr. Solomon: What bothers me most about the hot summer months is not the physical discomfort so much, but the fact that people seem to be more difficult to get along with. I thought I'd relax last night by going to a baseball game, but there were at least three really heated arguments in the stands among those watching the game. Why should hot weather cause people to become argumentative? — Hal, York, Pa.

Dear Hal: Excessive heat over an extended period of time does produce irritability and results in a higher-than-average incidence of violence and interpersonal problems. Dr. Fred Guggenheim, associate professor of psychiatry at the University of Texas Health Science Center at Dallas, explains that we all have hostile feelings, but that people ordinarily are able to keep them in check; however, the hot weather may cause a breakdown in the person's control system since it reduces his or her ability to cope.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My mother is 84 years of age. At her last visit to her doctor, she was told she should start taking a vitamin supplement. I can't understand why this is necessary since I am well aware of the kind of diet she has, and I know she eats nutritionally well-balanced meals. Do all older people require vitamin supplements, or is her doctor being overly cautious in his approach? — Mrs. H.P., Medford, Oregon

Dear Mrs. P.: You are overlooking the fact that an individual may enjoy a perfectly adequate vitamin intake and yet suffer from a vitamin deficiency. This can occur for a variety of reasons.

For example, a person may have a stomach or small intestinal disease that interferes with the absorption of vitamins. Also, liver disease may cause a vitamin deficiency since it is the liver that stores and converts vitamins into their active forms. Other possible reasons for the malabsorption of vitamins include the use of drugs, both those available with prescriptions and over the counter as well as illegal drugs; pregnancy, since the fetus may deplete the mother's supply of vitamins; and, as in your mother's case, aging.

Even though your mother has a sound diet, she may not be able to make efficient use of certain food as sources of vitamins. I would speculate that this probably accounts for her physician's recommendation that she take a supplement.

Private colleges face decline

Community colleges and two-year technical schools in the United States can expect more than 5 million students to sign up for college-credit classes this fall — 5.5 percent more than last year. But private colleges and universities may face an overall drop in enrollment of 2.2 percent.

The projected enrollment figures for the coming academic year, though far from final, are based on data obtained from state directors of community college education and admissions officers at 581 private institutions. The surveys were conducted by the American Association of Community and Junior Colleges and the National Institute of Independent Colleges and Universities.

No projections are available for state universities, although earlier estimates in many rgions suggested that enrollments would remain at about the same level as they were last year.

Although final figures for private colleges and technical schools will not be available until later this fall, the anticipated changes in the number of students attending the two types of institutions can be attributed to a weakened economy, declining government support for education, and rising tuition costs, spokesman for the two groups that conducted the surveys said.

While private college costs may be prohibitively high for many students, the low costs of attending community colleges, coupled with the job training they can provide, are very attractive to many students, Dale Parnell, president of the community college association, said.

"One simple fact of life seems to escape the national economistsand budget makers," said Purnell, who has been superintendent of public instruction in Oregon and a community college president in California. "During times of economic recession, community and technical college enrollments increase."

Tne increases have been particularly large in the Northeast and Midwest, where inflation has hit particularly hard. Maine, Minnesota and Kansas have each projected 10 percent increases in community college enrollment. Michigan reports that it will have a 9 percent increase.

Reagan hardly noticed at resort community

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. -- This coastal resort city of 75,000 is so accustomed to tourists and celebrities that one more -- even if he is president of the United States -- hardly makes a ripple in the peaceful life of the community.

It didn't take tourists or residents long to find out that, even if they found the road leading up into the Santa Ynez foothills where President Reagan has owned his 688-acre Rancho del Cielo since 1974, there wouldn't be much for them to see.

So, except for more frequent mentions of Santa Barbara in the national news media and for the trouble some tourists have had finding a vacant hotel room, life goes on much as it did before the 1980 presidential election.

About the only reaction to Mr. Reagan's residency here comes either from ardent admirers or from Democratic detractors who say they pay no attention to the president, whether he is at his ranch 28 miles north of the city or in Washington, D.C.

Among the admirers of the chief executive is Santa Barbara County Sheriff John Carpenter, who says it is "double fun" to be charged with security for a man he has known and respected for years.

After Mr. Reagan was elected president last November, Carpenter and his 260 deputy sheriffs deployed at six stations around the county "went through a trial-and-error period" figuring out what needed to be done to ensure that security requirements would be met.

Carpenter, early after the election, placed traffic counters on the road leading up to Rancho del Cielo to monitor traffic. Except for an initial flurry of vehicles, he said, traffic on the road "has not increased significantly. We've pretty well publicized that you can't see anything from the road anyway."

The Sheriff's Department, in concert with the District Attorney's Office and other agencies, has checked out reported threats, written and oral, to the president in the last nine months. But none was serious enough to create problems, both Carpenter and District Attorney Stan Roden said.

Roden, a Democrat who was not a supporter of Mr. Reagan, said he has detected no difference in the life of Santa Barbara since the president has visited.

"I don't think anyone cares too much," he said.

Until his month-long vacation here this summer, Mr. Reagan had spent only a couple of days at a time at Rancho del Cielo.

Nora Erickson, a public relations employee whose firm works with the Chamber of Commerce, said there were some initial fears of what a presidential residency might mean.

Her agency just compiled a list of celebrities who either live or own second homes in the county. They range from rock musician Kenny Loggins to Fess Parker of TV's "Davy Crockett" fame.

"There are oodles (of celebrities)," said Erickson. "You can walk into Presidio Cafe or somewhere, almost any night, and see a Robert Mitchum."

And, she noted, "Santa Barbara was already on the map." As a well-known resort community, it is unlike Plains, Ga.

Nothing is sure but death and taxes. The defenders learned that on this deal from the Mixed Teams championship of the American Contract Bridge League's Summer North American Championships, held at the end of July in Boston. A seemingly sure trump trick simply vanished into thin air.

The auction was routine. North's one no trump overcall showed the equivalent of a one no trump opening bid. South was a touch too weak to do anything more than show his five-card major suit. With a maximum overcall and a heart fit, North was free to bid again.

West led the ten of spades, and it would seem that declarer must lose two diamond tricks, a spade, a club and a trump, but watch what happened when Henry Bethe of New York held the South hand.

West led the ten of spades, covered by the jack and queen and won by the ace. Declarer led a club and, when West played low, dummy's king won. The club return was taken by West's queen, and the spade return was won by dummy's king.

Declarer ruffed a club, crossed to the ace of diamonds in dummy and ruffed another club. Declarer had scored six of the first seven tricks, and it seemed that he could make only two more. But declarer simply exited with a spade, and the defenders were in trouble.

It would not have helped West to ruff, so he discarded a diamond. East won, and he was down to a spade and four trumps. If he led a spade, declarer would sluff a diamond from his hand and dummy would ruff as low as possible, and declarer would be sure of two more trump tricks regardless of how the cards were distributed.

So East elected to lead a trump. Dummy captured West's queen with the ace and declarer called for a diamond from the table. West won the queen, but East was forced to ruff the king and exit with a trump. Declarer finessed the ten, and the defenders had no trump trick.

For making nine tricks, declarer earned 140 points. At the other table, North-South played in one no trump, making eight tricks for a score of 120. Had Bethe made only eight tricks, his side would have collected only 110 points and so would have lost the board instead of winning it.

There is labor peace among teachers

By LEE MITGANG
AP Education Writer

Public schools around the country this year appear to be opening with something perhaps more basic than even the three R's: labor peace with their teachers.

There are big exceptions. Philadelphia, where teachers struck last year for 22 days, faces a strike threat next Tuesday. In six smaller Pennsylvania districts, 900 teachers are already on strike in this first week of the new school year.

And in Boston, where there have been frequent close calls but no actual strikes in six years, the city's 5,500 teachers may walk off the job Monday to protest the laying off of 1,000 fellow instructors, mostly because of the budget pinching effects of Proposition 2½.

But elsewhere, union leaders and school officials alike predict a continuation of a trend of fewer teacher strikes since the 1979 peak of 242 strikes.

The number of teacher strikes declined to 191 last school year, and the early betting is for even fewer this school year.

Chicago, which suffered a two-week strike last school year and whose finances are so shaky that schools may not even open on time this year, reached a tentative accord with teachers Monday.

St. Louis, where teachers struck for 56 days in 1979, settled tentatively over the weekend, and teachers reported to work Monday with a salary boost of about 11 percent this year.

Minneapolis teachers recently accepted a contract providing for 21 percent pay increases over two years.

Michigan public school districts have a long history of financial problems and labor strife, but state school Superintendent Phillip Runkel said, "This year could be the first in many years that we open schools without a strike."

Detroit's teachers are not negotiating a contract this year, and other hard-pressed Michigan districts like Pontiac, Taylor and Port Huron also have contracts running through 1982.

"The major thing is that labor unions are realizing there's not that much money to go around," said Dr. Louis Zeyen, deputy executive director of the American Association of School Administrators.

Two examples: New Orleans teachers last Wednesday averted a strike threat and overwhelmingly approved a 1982 contract with no pay increase. And Akron, Ohio, teachers last Thursday accepted a one-year contract giving them raises of only 1.67 percent.

Said Karl Goudy, president of the Akron teachers union: "I wish there had been more money. I wish there had been a significant improvement in teacher salaries. I guess teachers realize that there simply wasn't any money this year."

On the labor side, John Dunlop, manager of negotiations for the 1.7 million-member National Education Association, cites "more realistic (contract) offers" by school boards, adding that last year had produced relatively good teacher contracts nationwide.

Scott Widmeyer, spokesman for the American Federation of Teachers, cited some recent labor triumphs: Oklahoma City, where starting teachers' pay is jumping from $14,200 to $16,100; Jefferson Parish, Louisiana, where teachers have a 13 percent salary increase, and West Virginia, where teachers will get a 14.2 percent boost to an average salary of $16,848.

A check of other states found some sizable pay boosts. The Florida Legislature is pushing to improve teacher salaries, and pay this year should increase an average $1,500.

New Mexico teachers received salary increases averaging 12.3 percent for 1981-82, following a 13.6 percent increase last year. Their salaries now average $18.905.

North Dakota, where teachers' salaries ranked 45th among the states last year, is giving teachers 19 percent pay hikes, aided by tax revenues from the state's new oil boom.

Dunlop says the big pay increases some teachers are getting follow a decade where average salaries lagged well behind the nation's inflation rate. Nationally, the average paypacket for a teacher held $9,269 in 1970 and grew to $17,264 by 1981, an 86 percent increase. But the Consumer Price Index rose by more than 130 percent during that period.

Teacher strikes are illegal in all but six states: Pennsylvania, Vermont, Minnesota, Oregon, Hawaii and Montana. But as yet there is no indication that any illegal strikes would be met with the sort of tough action that President Reagan meted out to the illegally striking air traffic controllers.

Boston Superintendant Robert Spillane has threatened to "replace" anyone who doesn't report to work next week, but he didn't indicate he was influenced by Reagan's firing of 12,000 air controllers.

In the past several years, says AFT's Widmeyer, cities including Kansas City and St. Louis have fined teacher unions that struck illegally, but instances of teachers being fired for striking are virtually unheard of.

School districts, he said, generally see wholesale firing of teachers as too drastic a measure because trained replacements would be hard to find.

"It's probably fair to say that the school boards have been more practical than Reagan has been with the controllers," Widmeyer said.

NEA's Dunlop said he doesn't think Reagan's actions would have much impact on actual teacher negotiations but might affect later court rulings in the event of teacher strikes.

Dunlop said he is concerned about the longer-term impact of the public climate created by those firings — especially next year when severe cuts in federal funds to education could mean an end to school labor calm.

Mail-order company president will fight FTC

By JEFFREY MILLS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The president of a mail-order company, accusing the Federal Trade Commission of "conducting a vendetta against me," says he will fight charges that he violated FTC rules requiring prompt action on mail-order sales.

Joseph Sugarman, president of JS&A Group Inc., bought newspaper and magazine advertisements two years ago to cite his case as "one example of how the Federal Trade Commission is harassing small businesses.

"But I'm not going to sit back and take it," he vowed at the time.

The government took Sugarman and his company to court Tuesday, charging him with "numerous and widespread violations" of an FTC rule on mail-order sales.

Promising to fight the action, Sugarman accused the FTC of "conducting a vendetta against me."

Sugarman started his business in his basement a decade ago, selling pocket calculators by mail. Now, the company, JS&A Group, Inc., sells digital watches and other microelectronic products.

The Justice Department, acting for the FTC, accused the company and Sugarman of breaking a 1976 FTC rule requiring companies to fill orders within 30 days or write customers offering them a refund. It was issued after numerous consumer complaints about late delivery of products.

In his ads, Sugarman acknowledged that the company had failed to fill orders promptly. But he said the delays resulted from three blizzards in January 1979 in the Chicago area, where the company is located, and failures by its computers.

The Justice Department contended that at least 22,000 of 50,000 orders between February 1976 and December 1978 were not shipped within the required time.

The government complaint charged JS&A with soliciting orders when it had "no reasonable basis" to expect it could ship merchandise within 30 days.

Furthermore, the company repeatedly failed to inform consumers of their right to cancel and receive a refund, the government said. Even when buyers wrote JS&A to cancel, the company failed to make prompt refunds, the complaint said.d

When notices about delays were sent to consumers, the company did not tell them about the right to cancel and did not give a definite shipping date, the government said.

Salvage ship docks

By RICK HAMPSON
Associated Press Writer

MONTAUK, N.Y. (AP) — The Sea Level 11 arrived in Montauk harbor today, carrying a Bank of Rome safe salvaged from the sunken Italian oceanliner Andrea Doria.

The safe sat in a pool of salt water on deck as the ship arrived back in this fishing village at the eastern tip of Long Island just before 8 a.m. EDT.

The safe's contents were a mystery, and expedition leader Peter Gimbel said it would not be opened until his documentary on the diving expedition is broadcast on television.

Another question Gimbel set out to answer — why the ship sank so quickly after being rammed by the Swedish freighter Stockholm — may have been answered by the expedition.

According to one theory, a crucial watertight door was either missing or open when the ships collided, allowing water to pour into all three key compartments.

But divers discredited that theory last week when they found a hole in the Andrea Doria's side so wide and so deep that the watertight door would not have made any difference.

The finding tended to uphold the conventional reason for the liner's demise: Because it was at the end of her voyage and had not filled its fuel tanks with seawater for ballast, it was riding high in the water and therefore was less stable when it was hit.

Dennis Murphy, spokesman for the U.S. Customs Service, said special agents would inspect and appraise the plates, silverware and other artifacts that divers salvaged during their month-long search of the Andrea Doria's debris-strewn wreck.

The appraisers' job is difficult, he said, because "plates that were shipped from Lisbon in seven days don't have the same value as ones that have spent the last 25 years on the ocean floor. It's like the Hope Diamond: The history is part of the value."

The items — and whatever is found in the Bank of Rome safe when it is opened — will be taxed as imported goods, he added.

Solidarity asks for greater role

By THOMAS W. NETTER
Associated Press Writer

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Poland's communist regime reluctantly gave Solidarity 20 minutes of national TV and radio time, and Lech Walesa used it to say his 10 million union members want to serve their country, not take over the government.

"If there are problems we should sit down and talk," the chief of the independent labor federation said in the prime-time broadcast Tuesday night. "There is no time for stupid polemics, no time for accusing us of wanting to take over power, because we don't want power, we want to serve the community."

The labor leader said Solidarity is demanding its own regular TV and radio programs and newspaper columns not to attack the government but to "explain things."

"We are not concerned about taking over power," he declared. "We want fast communications....We have plenty on paper but in life we have less and less....(there is) nothing in the shops, and life is becoming worse. We are not steering toward confrontations, we want to dominate this disquiet."

This was in line with Solidarity's contention that it should be given a voice in the formulation of plans to meet the grave economic and food crises confronting the government and the Polish people.

In an interview published Monday, Walesa told the Roman Catholic newspaper Slowo Powszechne: "The authorities are losing social acceptance and social support. This situation forces us to take upon ourselves responsibility for the fate of the nation."

The government gave Solidarity the TV and radio time after a printer's strike two weeks ago kept newspapers off the streets for two days and the union threatened to black out the mass media.

The broadcast Tuesday night was demanded as a prelude to Solidarity's first national congress, which begins Saturday.

Senators pushing anti-abortion compromise

By MIKE SHANAHAN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate conservatives, hoping to hasten a halt to legalized abortions, are pushing a compromise constitutional amendment that would allow each state to set its own guidelines on when — or if — a woman would be permitted to end a pregnancy.

"We are working on something new," said a knowledgeable congressional source who asked not to be identified.

The new proposal, which the source said will be introduced by Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, before the congressional recess ends Sept. 9, is likely to become the focus of the abortion debate this fall, in part because Hatch chairs a Senate Judiciary subcommittee on the Constitution.

In an appeal to a broad spectrum in Congress, Hatch is trying to turn the issue into a states' rights question, allowing reluctant senators and House members to avoid a direct vote on abortion.

Until now, the abortion debate has centered on two competing proposals: a constitutional amendment reversing the 1973 Supreme Court ruling that legalized abortions in the first trimester of pregnancy and legislation redefining life as beginning at conception.

A Supreme Court ruling, such as the 1973 abortion decision, can be reversed only by a subsequent ruling of the court or a constitutional amendment. To take effect, an amendment must be approved by two-thirds of both houses of Congress and 38 of the 50 states.

Abortion is one of several social issues that conservatives, especially those in the Senate, are likely to address now that President Reagan's economic programs have cleared Congress.

If approved, the new Hatch amendment would take the abortion issue out of the hands of federal judges and give it to state legislatures.

Congress also would be empowered to set general guidelines on abortion, but the emphasis would be on making each state responsible for its own abortion policy.

Some abortion foes say state legislatures are more likely than Congress to restrict abortions.

Reagan has urged returning many powers of the federal government to the states. Although Reagan favors some form of anti-abortion legislation, his views on a states' rights abortion proposal are not known.

Last spring, a Judiciary subcommittee voted 3-2 to approve anti-abortion legislation that would define life as beginning at conception, thus giving fetuses full rights to life under the 14th Amendment to the Constitution. The legislation was sponsored by Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C.

Sen. John East, R-N.C., the subcommittee chairman and an ally of Helms, held several days of controversial hearings at which doctors and lawyers debated when human life actually begins.

Critics say that if the human life bill becomes law, some forms of birth control would be illegal and women could be prosecuted on murder charges for having an abortion, even if it were necessary to save their lives.

Indians used to talk codes

By MIKE FEINSILBER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — In the years before World War II, German and Japanese experts studied the languages of American Indians to forestall the use of Indians as U.S. "code talkers" in warfare, newly declassified military records show.

But the attempt was foiled when combat broke out. The Marines recruited 420 Navahos whose language was known to only 28 non-Indians, and the Indians helped American forces advance from the Solomon Islands to Okinawa.

The Navahos made up words for military terms — "big gun" for artillery; "little gun shoot fast" for machine guns.

The report spells out in fresh detail how Indians in both World Wars I and II relayed battlefield secrets and bewildered eavesdropping enemy codebreakers.

The documents recently were declassified by the National Security Agency and sent to the National Archives, storehouse of official American records.

The need for code talkers was demonstrated by an incident in the South Pacific in World War II, the documents say.

A battalion commander and his company commander were talking over field radios about the position of a reconnaissance patrol. The company commander reported the position in map grid coordinates.

"Thank you," cut in a third voice with a Japanese accent. "Our patrol will be there, too."

Volker says Fed to continue tight money policy

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal Reserve Chairman Paul Volcker says there are no magic solutions to inflation, just a disciplined tight-money policy and altered behavior and expectations by the American people.

Murray Weidenbaum, chairman of President Reagan's Council of Economic Advisers, agrees.

"There is no laetrile to cure this problem of this inflation," Volcker said Sunday. "It has been a kind of a cancer on the economic scene. Disciplined policies, yes; but magic solutions, no.

"I have never said that this process is a painless one. People have to change their expectations and change their behavior," he said on ABC-TV's "Issues and Answers."

"You can't have inflation coming down, being eliminated, and have wage rates, which are two-thirds of the costs, increasing at 10 percent or so the way they are," Volcker said.

He said the Federal Reserve Board will stand by its tight-money restrictions because they are considered essential to Reagan's economic program and to the battle against inflation.

"We have communication with the administration all the time," he said. "And I think in broad terms we have been on the same wave length on monetary policy."

Volcker said that although tight money is blamed for inflation, he believes Reagan supports the policy. He was supported by Weidenbaum, who appeared Sunday on NBC-TV's "Meet the Press."

"I think the Federal Reserve is on target, and surely fighting inflation through monetary restraint is essential to the success of our economic program," Weidenbaum said, adding that the Carter administration left a "legacy of inflation and high interest rates."

Volcker said the Fed's policies and Reagan's fiscal program can coexist if the administration reduces spending enough to make up for revenue lost through its tax cut.

Last Thursday, Reagan said his economic program is being hurt just like everybody else by high interest rates stemming from the Fed's policies. He attributed the problem to economic conditions inherited from the Carter administration and predicted rates would fall by the end of the year.

Rates have been hovering at 20 percent for short-term borrowing and at 17 percent for home mortgages.

Volcker said inflation is the nation's No. 1 economic problem and was responsible for high interest rates. Lenders keep rates high because they are don't believe inflation will abate, according to Volcker.

"It's not a pleasant situation," he said. "All I would claim is it is part of the process by which inflation eventually will be dealt with. But we have a rough period to go through here."

Volcker would not rule out the possibility of a recession, which is considered to occur when the gross national products declines for two consecutive quarters. A decline was reported for the second quarter of this year.

Meanwhile, Charles Schultze, chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers under former President Carter, predicted that interest rates would remain in double digits for the next few years, the unemployment rate would stay about where it is now and inflation would fall to the high single digits.

Schultze, appearing on CBS-TV's "Face the Nation," said he believes the Reagan administration's 25 percent tax cut over three years was too large and would make balancing the budget difficult. He predicted the fiscal 1982 deficit would be at least $15 billion above the administration's estimate of $42.5 billion.

Rev. Clements walks with his adopted son outside his church.

Rev. George clements and his adopted son Joey pose in Clements's santuary. For years Rev. Clements was a father to hundreds of his parishioners, but it wasn't until he adopted Joey that he discovered being a "dad."

Priest turns father

CHICAGO (AP) — For years, the Rev. George Clements was a father to hundreds of his parishioners.

Clements, a 49-year-old civil rights activist, is the adoptive father of Joey, a 13-year-old who was abandoned as an infant and spent most of his years in an institution.

Clements decided to adopt the boy last fall and in July, Joey officially became the priest's son.

Clements had originally launched a one-man campaign to find adoptive homes for unwanted black children. But when that crusade seemed to be faltering at his Holy Angels Church on the city's South Side, the priest decided to take a bold step.

He initiated the adoption proceedings for Joey and the boy moved in the Holy Angels rectory several months ago.

The adoption has made both Joey and Clements celebrities and they're often stopped on the street by people who've heard about them. At least seven film poduction companies have made pitches about a movie and both father and son have traveled from Los Angeles to New York.

Clements says all the publicity can intrude on their lives but the priest has his own way of preventing his son from developing an inflated ego.

"I keep bringing him down to earth and I know how to do it in my own private way," he said. "I'm not really concerned because I have enough moxie to keep him from getting a big head. I remind him where he came from."

But Clements also admits the international publicity helps him spread his message — with his son voluntarily helping out.

"Joey is a lad who was destined for hard times," Clements said. "He was just one little dot in a sea of faces with no prospect or not much hope of someone adopting him."

"Taking Joey out of the situation gives him an opportunity," Clements added. "At the same time, it is blown up in front of the public. Given the two opportunities (living in an orphanage or becoming a symbol for black adoptions) — this is better."

Man with a failing business faked own death

By BOB ROBINSON
Associated Press Writer

CLARKSBURG, W.Va. (AP) — The owner of a failing car dealership tried to convince authorities he was dead by faking a fiery car wreck with a stolen corpse planted inside the auto, an alleged accomplice has testified.

Grisly details of the plan, including use of a joking reference to the corpse as "George," were recounted in a statement by Harry A. Wiant, 25, who is accused of torching the car. Wiant made a magistrate court's appearance Tuesdav.

Wiant, of Gilmer Station, said the scheme was concocted by Jerry Miller, owner of the Royal Chrysler car dealership in Shinnston.

Miller had been having marital and financial problems and wanted to make it appear he had been killed in an accident, Wiant said.

The 40-year-old auto dealer has been charged by state police with stealing the body of Timothy Fitzwater from a grave and being an accessory to arson. He also is charged with writing a bad check for $7,500 to a Michigan auto broker.

State police also charged John Molisee, 24, and his long-time friend, Ronnie Johnson, 20, with digging up the corpse, a felony in West Virginia punishable by a five-year prison term.

Wiant, who is unemployed, said he was was paid $100 to set the car afire on the night of Aug. 16. Inside was the body of 21-year-old Fitzwater, who was killed in a motorcycle accident July 19.

The corpse was wearing Miller's ring, watch and chain. Fitzwater's mother and half-brother live above Miller's dealership.

When police opened Fitzwater's grave at a Taylor County cemetery on Aug. 18, they found only a beer bottle, cigarette package and gum wrappers in his pine coffin.

Wiant did not take the stand Tuesday, but state police Trooper Boyd K. Vanhorn read his statement. Miller also was at the hearing, but did not testify.

Wiant said he had no knowledge of the scheme until the night before it took place. He had gone drinking with Molisee; Molisee's sister, Brenda, and Molisee's wife, Theresa. He said the two women joked about someone they called "George."

"They were telling me I was going to like 'George,'" Wiant said.

On the night of the Aug. 16, he said, he and the Molisees went to the Chrysler dealership where they met Miller. On the way there, Molisee dabbed "Vick's salve" on his nostrils and said it was to "keep the smell away," Wiant said in his statement.

"They asked me if I wanted to go along and make some money," Wiant said. "I asked what they were going to do and they wouldn't tell me. They just said I'd meet 'George.'"

Wiant said Miller's ring, watch and chain were put on a body that had been stashed in the trunk of a car. The body was then transferred to the car in which it was later found.

"The plan was for me to set the car on fire and let it go down Drain Hill and explode," Wiant said, but his arms and face were burned as he set the auto ablaze.

"I was about blinded and in a lot of pain," he said. He said he ran through the woods, tearing off his burning shirt as he went. Three days later, Wiant surrendered to authorities.

Miller was arrested the same day, found by police as he was hiding in the rafters of a Morgantown nightclub. He had cut and dyed his hair to change his appearance, said trooper B.K. Vanhorn.

ADIOS APT. LIFE!!!
I'm setting myself free of foolish rent payments and itelligentrly investing in my very own home. Of course I can't afford a mansion yet, so that's why I'm going to purchase this 3 bdrm., 2 bth., home that's just right. It has a fireplace, 19'x16' living area, 10'x8' dining room, 10'x9' kitchen, plus a 12'x16' master suite and best of all no one living above me! It's priced just right at $66,400 and that means I can afford it. I'm so proud I finally decided to quit paying rent. In fact, I'm going to pick up the nearest phone and call Marcus Strother right now at 563-4480 oir eves. 684-6710 and tell him right now!! (MS802)
