Drug task force rounds up dealers

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

A first-of-its-kind operation in West Texas continued today as law officers rounded up dozens of suspected narcotics dealers in 14 counties, from teenagers dealing dope for adults to a booby-trapped speed lab in Howard County.

"The operation has been real successful," Art Van Dorn, commander of the Permian Basin Drug Task Force, said at a news conference today. "We got the small dealers and large dealers."

At 6 p.m. Thursday, 120 officers throughout the area fanned out to find those named in at least 175 state grand jury indictments, from charges ranging from misdemeanor possession of marijuana to first-degree felony delivery of heroin, cocaine, or methamphetamine.

By early today at least half of the persons indicted were arrested and in various West Texas jails. At least 20 vehicles, thousands of dollars in cash, an undetermined amount of narcotics, and firearms had been confiscated.

"The imformation is still coming in now," Van Dorn said.

The most indictments were returned in Dawson, Howard and Winkler counties. In Dawson, 15 indictments for delivery of cocaine and 15 for delivery of marijuana were issued.

In Winkler County, 39 indictments were returned, with 24 for delivery of marijuana, 12 for delivery of cocaine or speed, and three for delivery of heroin.

Papers passed 'important'

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — A former U.S. Army sergeant who allegedly led an international spy ring sold the Soviets secret documents on nuclear missile bases, military pipelines and NATO troop strength, news reports said today.

The Bild newspaper of Hamburg, which is known to have close contacts to intelligence sources, quoted an unidentified West German security official as saying Clyde Lee Conrad had sold "extraordinarily important information."

A special Supreme Court panel ordered Conrad held in prison pending further investigation following his arrest Tuesday. He was charged with "compelling suspicion of espionage activities in an especially grave case," according to the prosecutor's office.

Two men who officials said were part of the ring were arraigned today in Sweden.

Kurt Rebmann, the chief federal prosecutor, said Conrad also recruited a second American soldier who received a "five-figure sum" of money for supplying the ring with military secrets. Rebmann refused to elaborate.

Bild said information contained in documents that Conrad allegedly sold included "secret locations of nuclear missiles, classified documents about pipeline systems, defense plans of NATO and of U.S. divisions, and top-secret troop mobilization plans."

West Germany's ARD television network and The New York Times also reported that such information was sold by the ring, which allegedly had been operating since the late 1970s.

Bentsen favors adoption; Quayle faces questions

Associated Press

Democrat Lloyd Bentsen said today "I advise the adoption route" to women faced with unwanted pregnancies, a response that highlights his differences with ticketmate Michael Dukakis on the abortion issue. The Republican ticket struggled to break clear of a week's worth of controversy.

George Bush headed for another Texas-style rally, this one in Longview, after promising new jobs for minorities on Thursday. Rival Michael Dukakis accused the vice president of bungling the nation's war against drugs, and then returned to his Statehouse office to take care of Massachusetts business.

■ Related stories — 3, 4A

Bentsen toured a children's hospital in Jackson, Miss., where he was asked about his stand on abortion.

"I believe it is a woman's decision to make. (But) I strongly advise the adoption route," he said.

Abortion is one of Bentsen's several disagreements with his more liberal ticketmate. Dukakis supports a woman's right to choose as well as federal financing of abortions for poor women; Bentsen would allow federal funding only in the case of rape, incest or if the mother's life was endangered.

MCHD opts for slightly smaller tax hike

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Although it sounds like a hefty sum, the hospital district's increased 1988-89 tax rate is less than those adopted by the school district or the city.

Nonetheless, taxpayers will realize a 42.95 percent hike in their Midland County Hospital District (MCHD) levy next year.

Directors adopted a new tax rate of 12.48 cents per $100 of valuation at their regular meeting Thursday.

The increase is 4.34 cents over last year's MCHD tax rate of 8.14 cents per $100 of valuation.

Since 1985, hospital district directors have adopted only an "effective" tax rate or one that collects the same amount of money relative to the value of the sagging county tax roll.

But tax dollars levied by the district have not been covering the increasing costs of treating the medically indigent in Midland County, records show.

While that responsibility belongs solely to the district, Midland Memorial Hospital has been taking up the district's financial slack to the tune of $1.5 million for the past two years, directors said.

Hospital district directors feel that continually sapping Midland Memorial Hospital of revenues can hinder its ability to thrive, they said.

"We have been derelict in our duty," MCHD board president Gene Abbott said of his board's refusal to increase tax rates to fund indigent care bills. "We're impairing our hospital's ability to be strong and healthy."

A crowd of about 20 came to the board meeting Thursday; the group was split on the proposed tax rate.

Norma Jennings, who appeared Tuesday night to oppose the Midland Independent School District's 10.64-cent tax increase, handed Abbott a petition with 150 signatures of "elderly and out-of-work people" against the MCHD hike.

"Many of those who have been indigent...are not producing people," she said. Ms. Jennings advocated a system whereby medically indigent could perhaps work off their indigent medical bills via working free in the community.

State lawmaker seeks review of NCNB actions

AUSTIN (AP) — A state lawmaker is asking the attorney general to review whether NCNB is operating former banks of First RepublicBank in violation of the Texas Constitution, but an NCNB spokesman said the company has acted properly.

"On the basis of what little public information is available regarding the sale and subsequent actions of the bank ... it would appear that NCNB may be acting in a manner which is inconsistent with constitutionally permissable standards," said Rep. L.P. "Pete" Patterson, D-Brookston, in a letter to Attorney General Jim Mattox.

In the letter, released at a Thursday news conference, Patterson pointed to a section of the state constitution prohibiting out-of-state corporations from exercising banking or discounting privileges in Texas.

Mattox in a 1987 opinion said legislation allowing out-of-state bank holding companies to own banks in Texas did not violate that section of the constitution. The opinion was based on the distinction between bank ownership and bank operation, Patterson noted.

"As long as the foreign holding company or bank respects the corporate entity and operation of the acquired bank then the takeover is constitutional," Patterson said in the letter. "If, on the other hand, the acquiring bank took over management or operation of a bank in this state, the reverse would be true."

NCNB, based in Charlotte, N.C., in July acquired the former banks of First RepublicBank from the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. NCNB agreed to invest up to $240 million for the 130 Texas banking locations of First RepublicBank, which was declared insolvent.

NCNB at first will acquire a 20 percent stake in the bank. It has an option to buy the rest from the FDIC, which said it will pump $4 billion into the Texas institution.

"We believe that NCNB Texas is a locally managed bank. We are now operating in connection with the FDIC, and it is our intention to purchase over a period of time all the stock of the bank, but when we do, it will still be a locally operated bank with Texas management," said Joe Bowles, director of public affairs for NCNB Texas.

Criminal defense attorney Foreman dies

By ANDREW KATELL

HOUSTON (AP) — Famed trial attorney Percy Eugene Foreman once said he never was sorry he dedicated more than half a century to practicing law and even conducted business from the hospital intensive care unit where he died.

The king of Texas' criminal defense lawyers, Foreman was best known for bartering a guilty plea for the life of the man who killed Rev. Martin Luther King Jr.

Foreman died Thursday at Methodist Hospital. He was 86.

His courtroom theatrics, issue-clouding rhetoric, spotlight shifting and verbal attacks of prosecution witnesses kept law students and spectators spellbound.

Mike DeGeurin, Foreman's law partner, said Foreman was admitted to the hospital July 15. He was being released last week when he suffered a heart attack. On Thursday, Foreman suffered cardiac arrest at 4:30 p.m and died minutes later.

"He worked up until the day he went into the hospital," said DeGeurin, who worked with Foreman for 14 years. "He actually conducted business in the intensive care unit. He was shooing doctors away."

Bus line gives 72-year-old 'commuter' a year's free ride

By KEVIN MORAN
Hearst News Service

GALVESTON — Texas Bus Lines Inc. has set up the most exclusive frequent customer program in the country.

Its sole member is Galvestonian Helen Csontos, 72, who in 45 years has racked up almost 500,000 miles on the line's buses, commuting about 20 miles every day from Galveston Island to her mainland job in La Marque.

In honor of her approximately 22,000 trips on their buses, Texas Bus officials Wednesday presented Csontos with a pass good for a year of free rides to work.

"Oh, that's wonderful!" Csontos said when Texas Bus President Scott Keller announced the gift to his faithful rider.

Csontos, her arms filled with a big bouquet of flowers presented by Keller and Galveston Mayor Jan Coggeshall, found herself surrounded by photographers, camera crews and reporters as she stepped off the bus from work Wednesday.

Although the fuss was not entirely unexpected — one camera crew rode to work with her and another tagged along on the return trip — the white-haired Galveston native seemed just a bit flustered by all the attention.

Csontos began commuting on May 1, 1943, her first day on the job as a laboratory technician in a physician's office.

"It was pretty bad," Csontos said of her early busing years. "It was during the war and it was just like riding the San Francisco trolley."

Csontos said she started out paying $1 for the round trip that now costs $5.75.

"I haven't figured it out, but I imagine I have bought a bus in that many years," she said.

While most rides were uneventful, Csontos witnessed one of the most famous disasters in U.S. history from her bus window. The day was April 16, 1947, and a ship exploded in the Texas City Ship Channel, causing a chain reaction that killed 576 people and injured thousands more.

WEATHER SUMMARY

Partly cloudy skies forecast

From Staff and Wire Reports

Midlanders can expect partly cloudy skies tonight, with the low near 70, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport. Winds will be southerly 5-15 mph.

Saturday is expected to be partly cloudy and hot with the high near 100. Winds will shift slightly to the southwest at 5-15 mph.

Thursday's high of 96 was seven degrees cooler than the record high of 103 set for that date in 1936. The overnight low of 69 was 13 degrees warmer than the record low of 56 set for this date in 1966.

STATE

Light, early morning rains brought somewhat cooler temperatures to the Panhandle, Far West Texas and the South Plains early today, as forecasters called for widely scattered showers to continue through tomorrow across the state.

Predawn temperatures dropped into the 60s in the Concho Valley, the Panhandle and in the higher elevations of Far West Texas. Temperatures in the 70s and 80s were common over the rest of the state. Extreme temperatures ranged from 62 degrees at Marfa in the Davis Mountains to 82 degrees at Wichita Falls in the Red River Valley.

Forecasters from the National Weather Service predict partly cloudy skies and widely scattered showers and thunderstorms will prevail over much of West Texas through Saturday.

Widely scattered showers or thunderstorms in deep South Texas and along the Coast were to give way to isolated coastal thunderstorms on Saturday.

Otherwise, skies are forecast to be partly cloudy through Saturday.

Northeasterly winds blew over the Panhandle and the area west of the Pecos earlier today. South to southwest winds, at 5 to 10 mph, prevailed over the rest of Texas.

NATION

Thunderstorm showers inundated areas from the southern Rockies to the desert Southwest today after heavy rains caused flash flooding that washed out roads.

In Arizona, strong thunderstorm rains drenched the Chino Valley on Thursday afternoon, producing more than 2 inches of rain in just 30 minutes. Flash flooding was reported in the valley south of Flagstaff and north of Phoenix, and streets were washed out.

Mount Lemmon in southeast Arizona reported more than 2 inches of rain.

In New Mexico, showers and thunderstorms swept through much of the state Thursday night. More than an inch of rain falling on Albuquerque.

In central Oklahoma, showers and thunderstorms developed late Thursday. Winds gusted to 60 mph and were accompanied by nickel-size hail.

In the Northeast, showers were scattered along a cold front extending from New York to western Pennsylvania and southwest Ohio.

SPY

The Times quoted U.S. and German officials as saying Conrad guarded a safe that stored documents at the U.S. Army base in Bad Kreuznach in central West Germany.

Bild said Conrad lived in an elegantly furnished apartment near the base.

Officials have said the ring was believed to have stolen documents concerning NATO defense plans for Europe and U.S. Army contingency plans for a ground war with the Soviet Union in Europe.

Alexander Prechtel, a spokesman for the federal prosecutor's office, said Thursday that it's too early to determine what damage the spying caused the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

"We can't exclude the possibility that millions of dollars are involved," he said.

"It could take months before we know the full extent of the damage to NATO defenses," he added. He refused to release any further details about the probe.

In Goteborg, Sweden, a district court today arraigned two Hungarian-born brothers, who Prechtel said were part of the ring. Chief Prosecutor Sven-Olof Hakansson said the men, arrested Tuesday, acknowledged working for the Hungarian intelligence service.

Security officials said Sandor Kercsik, 48, and Imre Kercsik, 34, were suspected of "preparing unlawful intellegence activity and supporting preparations of criminal acts."

A third suspect, the wife of one of the brothers, was detained for questioning and released. Her arraignment was not immediately sought.

A U.S. Justice Department official, speaking on condition of anonymity, called the spy case "a serious encroachment on our national security."

Army records released in Washington said Conrad, of Sebring, Ohio, was born in 1947 and worked for the U.S. military for 20 years, first as an infantryman and then as an "administration specialist."

According to his service records, Conrad received the National Defense Service Medal, the Vietnam Service Medal, five Army Commendation medals, the Army Achievement Medal, three Meritorious Service medals and seven Good Conduct medals.

Pro-life protesters block the entrance to Atlanta's Hillcrest Clinic Thursday, preventing Dr. Edgar Jackson, right, from entering the abortion facility. Protesters denied staff members and patients access to the abortion chamber, according to a secretary who declined to identify herself. Sit-ins and other demonstrations against abortion — which began during July's Democratic National Convention — are continuing, with more than 700 arrests recorced to date.

NCNB

FDIC spokesman Steve Katsanos did not immediately return a telephone call from The Associated Press.

Because Patterson is not a committee chairman, he cannot ask the attorney general directly for a legal opinion. However, he said, he believes Mattox will conduct the review.

In the letter, Patterson asked Mattox to look at what the appropriate legal remedy would be to "protect depositors and creditors of the bank" if it is determined that NCNB actions are not allowed under the state constitution.

If Mattox finds NCNB to be acting properly, Patterson asked under what circumstances its actions would be impermissible. Patterson asked Mattox to respond before Sept. 30.

Elna Christopher, spokeswoman for Mattox, said Patterson's request will be considered.

ARRESTS

A Big Spring grand jury handed down 32 indictments, with most issued for delivery of marijuana or cocaine.

A group of ecstatic lawmen and prosecutors — many of whom were at the first organizational meeting of the task force over a year ago — joined Van Dorn for the announcement. The indictments come from the first operation of the Midland-based task force, which began operation on February 15 with $525,000 in federal funds.

Van Dorn, a former Beaumont police detective who was hired by the task force board in December 1987, called the announcement a "rewarding time."

"A lot of dope dealers have been taken off the streets during the last few hours," he said. He also noted "a number of professional people" were arrested, but he said he did not have details.

He also said officers were "disheartened" about the number of teenagers, some juveniles, who were found dealing dope in smaller communities.

"We are very pleased with the performance of the task force, and the cooperation of the agencies," said Joe Cook, Big Spring police chief and chairman of the task force board.

"Anytime you arrest this many people, there is going to be a slowdown" in narcotics trafficking, said Ector County Sheriff Bob Brookshire.

The task force operations went relatively smoothly given the newness of the unit and the number of agencies involved, Van Dorn said.

"The biggest problem we had was coordination," he said. "From a strictly logistical point of view it was ver difficult to do."

Bonds on the indictments ranged from a few thousand dollars to $225,000.

In Midland County, 11 indictments, for delivery of cocaine and marijuana, were issued against seven persons. Five were arrested late Thursday, Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter said.

Van Dorn said he did not know how many persons were arrested in the entire operation.

Ector County District Attorney Eric Augesen said "it was just impossible to determine" how many of those indicted would plead guilty, and how many would have to be tried.

Cook said in his region, task force investigators uncovered a speed lab that could produce nearly $200,000 of the illegal product. At the scene, officers found a booby trap and shell casings from automatic weapons, he said.

"And this year, in my budget I have only $20,000 this year," to fight narcotics, the Big Spring chief said. "If the task force doesn't continue, we're going to be in the same boat we've been for years and years."

Wayne Frost, a former law officer and now Midland County prosecutor, said he was pleased that the "long arm of the law" had reached so many suspected dealers.

"The task force staff worked endless hours," Frost said. "Without them, we couldn't have done this."

All of the participating counties and law enforcement agencies worked together "despite some initial reservations," Frost said.

Van Dorn said local agencies, the Department of Public Safety, U.S. Customs, the Drug Enforcement Administration, helped in the effort.

In Andrews County, eight indictments were issued; in Ector County, seven indictments, in Gaines County, 16 indictments, in Martin County, one indictment, in Pecos County, four indictments, in Upton County, three indictments, and in Ward County, five indictments.

RACE

GOP running mate Dan Quayle was campaigning in the Midwest, and his press secretary called "a cheap shot" a report from The (Cleveland) Plain Dealer reported that he exaggerated his job record in the Indiana Attorney General's office.

"He held that office. He worked his way up to that position and that's that," aide David Prosperi said today.

The new report surfaced as Quayle had just begun to shed some of the questioning about his military record and relations with a former lobbyist.

Quayle's Senate biography, which is being distributed as official background of the Republican vice-presidential nominee, says: "He was chief investigator for the Consumer Protection Division of the Indiana Attorney General's Office from 1970-1971."

The Plain Dealer reported that the Consumer Protection Division didn't even exist in 1970 and that Quayle spent most of the period as a low-level clerk. It said he put in less than three months in the investigator's job, and had already moved on to another job when the division officially opened for business in September 1971.

The new disclosure came just a few hours after Bush had declared the controversy over his running mate to be a thing of the past.

Campaigning in Texas with a Mariachi band and wearing a guayaberra, Bush promised in the sweltering late-summer heat of San Antonio "to help those minorities who haven't really had a shot at the starting line."

"The best way to do that in employment is to have urban and rural enterprise zones, a break in that tax structure that will encourage business to locate where those populations are."

MCHD

Added Paul Laverty, "I don't think it needs to be raised that much. Don't write a blank check without thinking."

But former hospital district director, Ed Magruder, told board members: "You people don't have any choice" but to raise taxes.

A member of the clergy, Rev. F.G. Ferguson, told hospital directors: "Some folks are less fortunate than us. We have to take care of them. I'd like to see this service for the needy continue."

Midlander Ed Vogler "commended" directors for cutting costs where they could.

"I'm not going to be like the lady at the school board meeting who thanked you for raising my taxes, but we have to face reality," Magruder said.

According to MCHD statistics, the district is short $1.7 million this year. That figure — to be paid for out of hospital revenues — is above and beyond the 20 percent discount the hospital gives the district via indigent patients.

The new MCHD tax rate — while lower than what directors had originally proposed — factors in a 12 percent increase in indigent patient volume and a 22 percent discount from the hospital, directors said.

Last year, however, directors witnessed a 24 percent increase in indigent patient volume, they said.

Projections show that the fiscal year 1989 indigent care budget should amount to $5.6 million, up nearly $500,000 from the current fiscal year tab.

A taxpayer with a $75,000 home will pay — excluding exemptions — about $93 next year in MCHD levies. That sum is up from this year's overall levy of $61.05.

RIDE

These days, Csontos, who never married, said she is just semiretired. She helps take care of the books of the Medical and Surgical Clinic of La Marque and is working shorter hours than in years past.

FOREMAN

Foreman estimated once he had tried 1,500 death penalty cases, but of his clients, only a restaurateur named Steve Mitchell was executed. Mitchell was convicted in 1952 of shooting his wife and Foreman, who consistently opposed the death penalty, said later Mitchell had "deserved to die."

"You can't win 'em all," Foreman said of the case, but later confided he blamed himself.

Foreman was a staunch opponent of the death penalty throughout his career. In 1965, he called for televised executions, blaming the death penalty's existence on the secrecy with which it was carried out.

He once told the State Bar of Texas, "I've never been sorry I dedicated my life to this area of the law. I am not a criminal lawyer but I am proud of it when people call me one. I am a trial lawyer."

Foreman persuaded James Earl Ray to plead guilty to the 1968 slaying of famed civil rights activist King in exchange for a 99-year sentence. Ray charged later that Foreman pressured him into the plea by saying the odds were "99 percent" certain he would go to the electric chair if he faced a jury.

Another of Foreman's well known cases was his successful defense of Candace Mossler, accused with her nephew, Melvin Lane Powers, of killing Mossler's millionaire husband, Jacques, in Florida in 1964.

Foreman, born in a log cabin outside Livingston on June 21, 1902, was the middle child in a family of 10. His father was sheriff of Polk County. So was his grandfather.

"I decided at age 8 to become a lawyer," he told The Associated Press during an interview last December. "I was operating a shoeshine stand on a principal corner of the courthouse. Lawyers would sit around the corner. They seemed to live better and work less. I thought it'd be an easy way to make a living."

He began studying law at the University of Texas after World War I and kept the $5 bill he received as the fee for his first legal case — drawing up a lease on a five-acre orchard.

Bush promises to revive oil business, create jobs

HOUSTON (AP) — George Bush is seeking support in Texas with promises to revive the faltering oil industry, oppose gun control and create jobs for minorities through business tax breaks.

Texas — which commands 29 electoral votes, 270 of which are needed to win the presidency — has become a key battleground with the selection of Sen. Lloyd Bentsen of Texas as the running mate of Bush's Democratic rival, Michael Dukakis.

Bush made no mention while campaigning Thursday of his beleaguered running mate, Sen. Dan Quayle of Indiana, but he predicted he will win in his adopted home state in November.

Bush seemed eager to get on with his campaign after many days of media focus on the background of Quayle. Asked by reporters if he thought the Quayle matter was behind him, Bush said, "Yes, I do."

However, a new report today in The (Cleveland) Plain Dealer says Quayle's official Senate and campaign biography contains inflated claims about his service in the Indiana attorney general's office. The newspaper reported that Quayle was an entry-level research assistant for most of the time he claims to have been "chief investigator for the Consumer Protection Division of the Indiana Attorney General's Office from 1970-1971."

Bush focused Thursday on his pitch to Texas voters, and after a warm reception from several hundred supporters at a San Antonio rally, he said, "There does seem to be forward motion."

On his four-day swing through Texas, the vice president was heading today to Longview for a rally, and on Saturday will go to Dallas for a speech to a Marine Corps group and a Republican fund-raiser.

"I will win in Texas but I will work hard to do that," Bush told reporters as he left the rally en route to Houston.

The campaign stop in San Antonio was tailored to appeal to the region's large Hispanic population.

Wearing a loose-fitting shirt called a guayaberra for the occasion, he was welcomed at the downtown San Antonio River front by a banner in Spanish and he was serenaded by a Mariachi version of "Hail to the Chief." In his remarks to the sweltering outdoor rally, Bush promised "to help those minorities who haven't really had a shot at the starting line."

"The best way to do that in employment is to have urban and rural enterprise zones, a break in that tax structure that will encourage business to locate where those populations are," Bush said.

"I support affirmative action so minorities have a better shot at the American dream," he said.

At the rally, Bush promised he would "put some incentive back into the energy business, into the oil business," and said he would resist gun control proposals.

In an interview published today by the New York Times, Bush appeared to back away from earlier promises to deploy the Star Wars missile defense system "as soon as feasible." He indicated that cost would be a factor in determining whether to deploy it.

"I don't think we yet know what the price tag will be," Bush said. "If you went to a full deployment of a full strategic defense, it would be very expensive. What I want to do is to continue research at the levels of funding, essentially, that we have requested."

It seems that John Rehkopf's efforts at dampening a baseball diamond on the Swanger Sports Complex in Texarkana are in vain as the water appears to defy gravity.

Five men may be linked to toddler's death

DALLAS (AP) — As many as five men may have been involved in the shooting death of a 21-month-old boy in a Dallas apartment complex, police say.

A Texas Ranger said the shooting occurred after the boy's mother, Rochelle Redicks, 21, and a companion, David Lee Lowe, 34, attempted to steal crack, a cocaine derivative, from a drug dealer outside the complex early Tuesday.

John Redicks was pronounced dead at Methodist Medical Center early Tuesday. He had been sleeping in the back of a car when he was shot in the head as the mother and Lowe attempted to drive away, authorities said.

The child's mother first told authorities that the child was the victim of a random highway shooting on Interstate 35 between Waxahachie and Dallas, but authorities were able to later determine that the story was false.

"We have some leads that we are following up," Dallas homicide detective Rick Silva said.

Lowe, who was arrested Tuesday at McKinney on an unrelated charge, said the shooting took place after he and Ms. Redicks attempted to steal crack from a dealer, according to McKinney Police Chief Kenneth Walker.

FBI accused of intimidation in discrimination trial

EL PASO (AP) — The FBI is using surveillance and unfounded investigations to intimidate attorneys for 311 Hispanic agents suing the bureau in a class-action discrimination suit, the lawyers say.

But the FBI's assistant director labels the allegations "outrageous and repugnant."

Thursday's flurry of charges and counter-charges punctuated the end of the nine-day trial before U.S. District Judge Lucius Bunton. Almost 100 witnesses testified.

Bunton said he hopes to render a decision by Oct. 1.

The 311 Hispanic agents joined in the class-action suit contend the FBI discriminates in the promotion, discipline and assignment of Hispanics. They seek unspecified damages and changes in FBI policies.

About 400 — or 4.3 percent — of the FBI's 9,400 agents are Hispanic, compared to about 8 percent of the general population.

The plaintiffs' attorneys, Hugo Rodriguez and Antonio Silva, complained Tuesday and Thursday that the bureau has kept watch on them and possibly begun an investigation to discredit them.

"This is the FBI," Rodriguez said. "You've heard witness after witness state that the first rule of the FBI is, 'Don't embarrass the bureau.' That's what this case is doing. It's bringing out the dirty laundry of the FBI."

About 40 agents testified that the bureau transfers Hispanic agents more often to undesirable locations, hands them assignments that are less glamorous or more dangerous, promotes them more slowly and gives them less recognition for their successes.

Witnesses called by the FBI denied the accusations.

Rodriguez and Silva were notified Thursday the FBI was concerned about a possible security breach in connection with the disappearance of an affidavit from Rodriguez' briefcase last month.

Rodriguez and Silva implied the FBI stole the document July 29 from a hotel room so it could start an embarrassing investigation. Someone mailed the affidavit to FBI headquarters.

Silva told Bunton: "The government is attempting to put us in jail, to ruin our legal careers, for representing these men and women of the FBI."

But Milt Ahlerich, FBI assistant director for Congressional and public affairs, said the charge was false and denied an investigation resulted from the affidavit's disappearance.

"They're the ones making a veiled allegation of a document being taken from them," he said. "The idea that the FBI would tamper with attorneys' papers is outrageous and repugnant to the FBI's mission."

Price Daniel hailed as Texas hero

LIBERTY (AP) — Price Daniel, who held the state's highest public offices, was hailed as a Texas hero.

Daniel died early Thursday at his ranch in Southeast Texas, a place he called his "Golden Pond." He was 77.

He is said to have held more elected positions in Texas than anyone else, having served in the state's executive, legislative and judicial branches.

His varied public career somewhat paralleled that of the 19th century Texas revolutionary hero, Gen. Sam Houston.

Daniel and Houston are the only people in Texas history to serve Texas as U.S. senator first, then governor, a position Daniel said he would rather hold than the presidency of the United States. Houston also was president of the Republic of Texas.

Daniel married Houston's great-great-granddaughter, Jean Baldwin Houston of Houston and, as a young man, opened a Liberty law office where Sam Houston had his law office.

The Daniels had four children. One — Price Daniel Jr., a former Texas House speaker — died in 1981.

Thursday, Gov. Bill Clements requested that Texas flags be flown at half-staff in honor of Daniel.

Services are set for Saturday at 2 p.m. at the United Methodist Church in Liberty, with burial in the Daniel family cemetery, near the ranch. A memorial service will be held at the First Baptist Church in Austin on Sunday at 4 p.m.

George Christian of Austin, former press secretary and executive assistant to Daniel, said Daniel suffered what was believed to be a massive stroke at his ranch and was taken to Yettie Kersting Hospital at Liberty.

Hospital spokeswoman Margie Hagan said Daniel was dead on arrival at 1:10 a.m. Paramedic Bill Wainscott said, "We went out there and we did all we could do. Unfortunately, we were unable to revive him."

Former Gov. Preston Smith said, "We're going to miss people of his caliber. I've lost one of my best friends."

Daniel was appointed by Smith to the Texas Supreme Court in January 1971, a job he held until his retirement in 1979.

"Gov. Daniel was one of our Texas heroes," said Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby. "No other Texan served with such distinction in all three branches of government. His accomplishments make us all humble."

Daniel, elected to the U.S. Senate in 1952, served only four years of a six-year term before making his successful bid for governor with a close Democratic primary victory over Ralph Yarborough.

He was governor for three two-year terms in 1957-63 but lost an unprecedented bid for a fourth term as he was beaten in the Democratic primary by John Connally, who also became a three-term governor.

Yarborough, who won a special election for Daniel's Senate seat and served 13 years, said Daniel's death is "a great loss to Texas."

Christian said Daniel's principal legacy would be the preserving of the oil-rich tidelands, or submerged offshore lands that have yielded so much revenue for Texas' public schools.

"He was a hands-on governor whose administration touched a wide variety of issues, and he was devoutly religious — a fine gentleman," Christian said.

Daniel, a native of Liberty County, started his public career as a member of the state House of Representatives in 1939.

Massachusetts children say pledge on voluntary basis

BOSTON (AP) — Teachers throughout Massachusetts continue to lead children in the Pledge of Allegiance each day, on the voluntary basis supported by Gov. Michael Dukakis.

"Every elementary school child has an opportunity to say the Pledge of Allegiance to the flag every day," Education Commissioner Harold Raynolds said in an interview Thursday.

Republican George Bush has attempted to make Dukakis' 1977 veto of a state law requiring teachers to conduct the pledge into a campaign issue in their presidential contest.

Dukakis, in vetoing the bill, cited advisory legal opinions and U.S. Supreme Court precedents that making the pledge mandatory would be unconstitutional. He says he supports saying the pledge itself.

Raynolds said Massachusetts schools observe that policy of encouraging the pledge on a voluntary basis.

"The law is clear (that) those teachers who do not wish to conduct it, or those students who do not wish to say it, are not compelled to do so," he said. But he added that such exceptions are "very, very, very few, one or two perhaps in a school, in most cases."

Bush has claimed that Dukakis was simply "looking for a reason" to refuse to sign the bill.

Dukakis responded this week that he recites the Pledge of Allegiance himself and would urge children to do so.

His 1977 veto was based largely on an advisory opinion from the state Supreme Court.

The court said the bill before Dukakis that year, to amend a 1935 law requiring teachers to lead the pledge once a week, violated the First Amendment rights of freedom of speech and religion. It also said the original law was unconstitutional.

The amendment said: "Each teacher at the commencement of the first class of each day in all grades in all public schools shall lead the class in a group recitation of the 'Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag.'"

Failure of a teacher over a period of two consecutive weeks "to salute the flag and recite said pledge..., or to cause the pupils under his charge so to do, shall be punished for every such period by a fine of not more than $5."

At Dukakis' request, the state Supreme Court studied the amendment and by a 5-2 vote issued an advisory opinion saying the entire law regarding the pledge violated teachers' First Amendment rights.

The court cited a 1943 U.S. Supreme Court decision, West Virginia Board of Education vs. Barnette, which held that requiring a student, under the threat of expulsion, to recite the pledge and salute the flag violated the student's First Amendment rights. The student, a member of the Jehovah's Witnesses, had objected on religious grounds.

"In our view, the rationale of the Barnette opinion applies as well to teachers as it does to students," the state court said.

"However commendable the Legislature's interest may be in imbuing young people with patriotic feelings, that interest can only be implemented through a precise and narrowly drawn provision which achieves the basic purpose without compromising First Amendment rights," the justices said.

Acting on the court's opinion, Dukakis wrote to the Legislature in 1977, "My oath of office, as does yours, requires me to uphold the Constitution of the United States. I cannot sign any bill that violates the Constitution, as this bill has been declared to do."

The Legislature overrode Dukakis' veto, by votes of 201-27 in the House and 24-7 in the Senate. The bill became law and remains on the books today.

But then-state Attorney General Francis X. Bellotti issued an opinion in 1977 saying that because of the constitutional question, the law "may not be enforced."

"So it has never been enforced, couldn't be enforced," current Attorney General James Shannon said Thursday.

Bush, in political speeches over the past week, has said he doesn't believe the framers of the Constitution would have considered it a violation of anyone's constitutional rights to be required to recite the Pledge of Allegiance. "I would have signed that bill" and let the U.S. Supreme Court resolve the issue, he says on the campaign trail.

But Shannon said, "The question really was, OK, do you for political purposes make people go through the expense and the trouble of having to strike down a clearly unconstitutional law, or do you go with the highest court's decision? He (Dukakis) did the right thing."

Laurence Tribe, a constitutional law professor at Harvard Law School, said courts in other states have ruled similarly to the Massachusetts court.

"The confusion that I think is created about it...is that many assume that if teachers have a right to kind of opt out of leading the class in the pledge, that therefore the Pledge of Allegiance will not be somehow an official part of the school day," Tribe said.

Quayle's campaign biography, inflated, newspaper reports

SIOUX FALLS, S.D. (AP) — Republican vice presidential candidate Dan Quayle is trying to stress agriculture and trade issues while campaigning in the Midwest, but he faces continuing questions about his background including a report today that his official campaign biography is inflated.

The (Cleveland) Plain Dealer reports that Quayle's official Senate biography contains inflated claims about his service in the Indiana attorney general's office.

The newspaper reported today that Quayle actually was an entry-level research assistant for most of the time he claims to have been "chief investigator for the Consumer Protection Division of the Indiana Attorney General's Office from 1970-1971."

The Plain Dealer said the consumer protection division didn't even exist in 1970, and Quayle had already gone to work in the governor's office when it was officially opened.

"He just helped set it up," said Robert E. Lybrook, a Martinsville, Ind., lawyer who became the chief investigator when the division officially opened for business in September 1971.

"He wasn't chief of anything when he went over there," added M. Stanton Evans, an editor at the Indianapolis News who arranged Quayle's job interview with then-Attorney General Theodore L. Sendak.

The Plain Dealer said state records show that Quayle went to work in the attorney general's office as a "legal assistant" in January 1970. It said the job is similar to that of a law clerk and involved drafting memoranda, performing research and writing letters.

The newspaper said Quayle held the investigator's job for 2½ months but that state records show he already was working for then-Gov. Edgar Whitcomb as an administrative assistant when the consumer division was officially launched.

Quayle had completed campaigning for the day when the Plain Dealer story appeared and neither he nor his aides were immediately available to comment.

Quayle's campaign moves west today to Montana, Utah and California.

Quayle's claim to have been chief investigator is contained in his Senate biography, which is being distributed as official background by the Republican campaign.

The latest disclosures came just as Quayle and Republican presidential nominee George Bush were seeing a week-long dispute about Quayle's military record begin to dissipate.

During his campaign appearances Thursday, Quayle aimed his pitch at farmers in Missouri and South Dakota.

In stops at state fairs in both states, Quayle met with farmers and told them: "Don't let anybody ever tell you that America is not still dependent on agriculture and the farmers for our quality of life."

Quayle's candidacy has been dogged by questions about whether he pulled strings to avoid the draft and enter the National Guard during the Vietnam War.

Newspaper urges Quayle to leave ticket

LONG BEACH, Calif. (AP) — As Republican vice presidential nominee Dan Quayle headed to California for a two-day campaign swing, the Press-Telegram joined the Des Moines Register in urging him to leave the ticket he shares with Vice President George Bush.

The Press-Telegram, in an editorial in today's editions, said allegations about the Indiana senator's military record and his link to a female lobbyist who appeared nude in Playboy are distracting voters from the real issues in the election.

"If Dan Quayle remains on the Republican ticket, neither Bush nor the nation will be well served," the editorial said.

The editorial went on: "Even when the candidates talk about these issues, they are not heard. Media and public attention focuses on J. Danforth Quayle, a handsome man with a short, undistinguished record in the House and Senate and an intolerable burden as a candidate."

Bentsen says he got message across to VFW

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Democratic vice presidential candidate Lloyd Bentsen says the booing he heard from the Veterans of Foreign Wars doesn't mean he failed to get across his message that Democrats are strong on defense issues.

"I tried in a dispassionate way to set the record straight. And they'll remember that," said Bentsen.

In his speech Thursday in Chicago before the VFW, the Texas senator called Republican attempts at painting the Democrats as weak and unpatriotic "scurrilous."

Bentsen planned to reinforce his defense message today with a visit to Atlanta and appearances with Georgia Sen. Sam Nunn, the Democratic chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee.

Bentsen, a decorated World War II bomber pilot, was greeted with a standing ovation from the VFW. But he was interrupted four times by boos and jeers from the crowd — three times when he talked about Democratic presidential nominee Michael Dukakis and once when he mentioned former President Jimmy Carter.

"It got my adrenalin up," Bentsen told reporters later. "I've done enough campaigning that I know you're going to have some of those along the way," he said of the unfriendly reception by some in the audience.

He said he was not surprised by the negative reaction to his mention of Dukakis, saying, "In part, you saw orchestrated response by some who were quite partisan."

But the loud boos that greeted Bentsen's assertion that Carter started the recent defense buildup "surprised me," he said.

"Jimmy Carter toward the end of his term began to appreciate...that our defense forces had deteriorated. He turned that around," Bentsen said. "That's not generally remembered and they really didn't want to remember that."

Bentsen, wearing his VFW cap, asked the veterans to consider Dukakis, also a veteran, as someone they could rely on to keep the nation protected. He recited a list of defense programs supported by the Massachusetts governor, including the cruise missile, the stealth bomber and a new conventional weapons initiative.

"The simple truth is this: Governor Dukakis is a veteran, a patriot, and an advocate of American strength and steadiness," Bentsen told the VFW. "He can be trusted as a defender of American security and as a champion of American values."

The VFW supported Ronald Reagan's presidential campaigns in 1980 and 1984 and warmly greeted Vice President George Bush and his running mate, Sen. Dan Quayle of Indiana, on Monday.

Bentsen was finishing up his campaign swing this week in the deep South, after spending most of the first three days in the Midwest.

Besides visiting Mississippi and Georgia, he was scheduled to address a state Democratic meeting in Hot Springs, Ark. today.

Bentsen originally had been scheduled to return to Washington tonight, but instead, he was heading back to his home state of Texas. Bush was campaigning in the state, and Bentsen said he wanted to respond to that.

Shuttle test firing successful

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Seals in a revamped version of the shuttle booster joint blamed for Challenger's destruction worked in a test firing despite intentional flaws, helping Discovery pass its "most significant milestone," the rocket's manufacturer says.

An analysis of the Aug. 18 test at Morton Thiokol Inc.'s northern Utah plant found that the aft seal, though the worst flawed deliberately, succeeded in preventing superhot gases from escaping, the company said Thursday.

The success of the test, the fifth and final qualifying firing of the new 126-foot solid-fuel booster, was vital to NASA's plans to resume shuttle missions grounded since the Challenger disaster on Jan. 28, 1986.

"This may be the most critical milestone as far as getting us back into space," said Morton Thiokol spokesman Rocky Raab. "It's certainly the most significant milestone we've had to pass in the solid rocket motor design."

If the positive evaluation of the test holds, NASA officials have said they expect to set a firm date late next month or in early October for Discovery's mission, the first shuttle flight since the Challenger accident.

Engineers who took apart the booster's aft segment "looked at the intentional flaws and were very pleased to see that hot gases had not blown by the primary O-ring, that it had sealed properly," said Ed Snow, another company spokesman.

A presidential commission blamed a faulty aft joint on one of Challenger's two boosters for the spacecraft's explosion shortly after liftoff. A plume of superhot gas burned through a rubber-like O-ring in the joint and caused Challenger's outside fuel tank to explode, killing all seven astronauts.

The redesigned joint incorporates a so-called "capture feature" designed to seal the rocket during liftoff, preventing hot gases from escaping.

Meanwhile, the FBI and NASA are investigating what appear to have been deliberate cuts in some O-ring seals destined for use in shuttle boosters, but none of the damaged O-rings had been shipped to Morton Thiokol, said James Dockstader, vice president of operations for Hydra-Pak Inc., the West Jordan, Utah, company that produces the O-rings.

None of HydraPak's 85 employees has been dismissed, Dockstader said, but he would not say if any had been disciplined.

Snow said Morton Thiokol and National Aeronautics and Space Administration engineers will continue tearing down the four-segment rocket over the next week and a half.

Earlier this week, Morton Thiokol workers completed the first stage of evaluating the test firing by disassembling the booster's nozzle section.

Engineers found no problems, declaring it "the best nozzle yet," Raab said.

Last week's $20 million test culminated Morton Thiokol's 2½-year redesign effort.

Thousands to rekindle King's dream

WASHINGTON (AP) — Organizers expect tens of thousands of people to gather Saturday to try to rekindle the dream that the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. shared with the nation 25 years ago during the march on Washington.

King's widow, Coretta Scott King, Democratic presidential nominee Michael S. Dukakis and civil rights leader Jesse Jackson plan to address the gathering.

But Republican presidential nominee George Bush did not respond to an invitation, said the Rev. Joseph Lowery, who succeeded King as head of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference.

"We have not heard from Mr. Bush," Lowery said at a news conference Thursday. A Bush spokesman, Dan McLagan, said the vice president plans to campaign in Texas on Saturday.

An estimated 250,000 people marched in Washington on Aug. 28, 1963, one of the great days in the civil rights movement and the occasion of King's moving "I have a dream" speech.

The same number of people commemorated the 20th anniversary of the march five years ago.

Lowery said he expects "throngs" to march Saturday, but he declined to predict the number.

The march in 1963 spurred Congress to pass the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

"Something magic happened there. A new vision was shared with the American people. Whether that happens on Saturday or not, I don't know," said Andrew Young, who in 1963 was a young minister working with King and is now the mayor of Atlanta.

Since 1963, said Lowery, "everything has changed and nothing has changed. We have come a long, long way. But we still have a terribly long way to go, particularly in the area of economic justice."

Thirty-one years after King, Lowery and Ralph Abernathy helped found the SCLC, the median income of blacks remains only 57 percent of the median white income, Lowery said.

"We won the battle about where you sit on the customer's side of the lunch counter, but the battle about the cash register side of the lunch counter is still raging," he said.

Amish 'battle' endangers lives

It isn't your typical traffic problem. But it's as ticklish as a 5 p.m. multi-lane jam.

Stories of the Amish and their quiet battle to resist the attractions of the modern world are sometimes moving, sometimes sobering, often inspirational. The latest Amish clash with Minnesota authorities is none of the three.

The Amish "plain people" object to many of the things other Americans take for granted — television, electricity, colorful clothing. They dress in subdued colors, decorate their homes in an old-fashioned way and in general reject what they consider to be fancy pretensions.

This desire for restraint has often clashed with traffic laws because the Amish also drive horse-drawn buggies, which are slow-moving vehicles and as such should be marked with the customary reflective orange triangle attached to the rear.

Some Amish accept the triangle as a necessary evil — their buggies, horses and families usually come out the losers when they tangle with more modern vehicles. Some compromise, using the triangle at night but a more sedate black-and-white sign during the day. Some refuse to use the safety reflector at all.

Minnesota's small Amish colony worked out a compromise with state traffic authorities to use the black-and-white sign during the day and the more visible orange one at night. The group's leaders agreed to the deal, but some of their followers have refused to use the orange signs. Minnesota police have begun issuing tickets, and judges have begun to find the Amish guilty and have sentenced them to community service or jail time.

Unfortunately, that is about the only thing left to be done by the authorities. The Amish might have a better argument for refusing to display the signs if they were the only potential victims of their stubbornness, but the kind of traffic accident they are courting involves two vehicles. The occupants of the cars that hit poorly marked Amish buggies are in danger, too.

If any compromise is that abhorrent to a few members of the Amish sect, their choices are limited. Continuing to break the law and endanger the public safety is not an acceptable option. These Amish dissenters should consider limiting their travels to the daylight hours. If they must sacrifice something to uphold their strict religious beliefs, it should be their travel options rather than their lives.

As candidate Bush proves outspoken

A dramatic transformation occurred last week behind the closed doors of the Republican convention. The cautious George Bush, who always kept one eye over his shoulder on Ronald Reagan, was transformed into a surprisingly forceful George Bush. As his son, George Jr., told us: "Dad's in charge now. He's making the decisions."

Jack Anderson

Campaign manager, Lee Atwater, wanted to hold up the announcement that Sen. Dan Quayle would be the running mate. Bush overruled him. There was powerful pressure on Bush to choose Sen. Robert Dole, because the polls showed he would bring the most strength to the ticket. Bush picked Quayle and announced it on Tuesday, Aug. 16. We reported the decision the previous evening in a radio broadcast.

The old Bush used to be cautious of what he said, even in private. But the new Bush suddenly became outspoken in the backrooms. According to witnesses who attended the meetings in which vice presidential possibilities were discussed, he called Jack Kemp arrogant. Said Bush: "Kemp won't listen. I want a vice president who'll listen — like I did."

Bush recounted several encounters with Kemp at White House meetings. Kemp expounded ad nauseum on his economic views but wouldn't listen to anyone else's ideas, Bush said.

Of Bob Dole, Bush said he wouldn't be happy as vice president. "And when Bob Dole is unhappy, he's really unhappy," Bush told members of his inner circle. He feared the media would get a negative impression from an unhappy Dole.

When National Security Adviser Colin Powell's name came up, Bush blurted: "Where the hell does that stuff get started?" It was pointed out that Powell would be the first black on a presidential ticket, that this historic first would inject drama into the campaign, and that Powell is an experienced, qualified leader who understands the world power game. In contrast, the Democratic Party's Jesse Jackson has had no government experience.

But Bush dismissed the idea. Just as the public perceived Walter Mondale's selection of a woman in 1984 as tokenism, Bush said he would create a similar impression if he chose a black.

Months ago, Bush had his first visit with another prospect, former Tennessee Governor Lamar Alexander, who rambled on about non-specifics. Afterwards, Bush asked an aide, "What is that guy? A flower child?"

Bush said he was looking for someone, in his own words, who was "more like George Bush" — a No. 2 man with "no confrontation potential." He said Dan Quayle would be "a vice president who knows his role" — not a yes man, but one who wouldn't upstage the president.

FREE ENTERPRISE — Perestroika, the liberalizing of Soviet bloc economies, is having an unexpected fallout. One of the free enterprises springing up under perestroika is organized drug trafficking.

During the tyranny of the Stalin years and the strict controls of the ensuring regimes, the drugs of choice in the West — cocaine, heroin and even marijuana — were hardly known in the Red Empire.

But with many small private businesses sanctioned in the Soviet Union and its satellites, drugs from Western Europe and the Middle East are crossing the borders in substantial amounts.

In Hungary and Poland, and to a lesser extent in other communist countries, black markets in currency have long been winked at by governments beleaguered with even greater economic problems.

Sleazy Budapest street merchants, for example, pay half again as much for American dollars as the legal rate. The racket is well-organized and is mirrored by more or less open illegal sales of valuable postage stamps and other goods.

Using the same efficient channels of import, evasion and peddling, drug traffickers have now begun getting their wares into the hands of young people, as well as to the new entrepreneurs who are already bored with their Mercedes and summer homes on the Danube.

The Soviets and several bloc countries have recently called on experienced American and other Western anti-drug officials for help, and consultations are now going on.

STEALING FROM THE STARVING — The United Nations has called on its members to send food to the starving people of Sudan, but tons of emergency supplies have disappeared on their way to the drought-stricken areas of that country. It appears that Sudanese soldiers have helped themselves to the food. The Sudanese army apparently has not sanctioned the theft. It promised to punish the thieves, but sources in Sudan doubt that the army can control its own troops. In some cases, the food has appeared on the black market, but the starving people are too destitute to pay for it there.

MINI-EDITORIAL — We're in the unusual position of throwing bouquets at the man who once had us at the top of his "enemies list." Perhaps we have mellowed along with Richard Nixon. In Newsweek, Nixon speaks convincingly about the presidential campaign when he says candidates and the media "should end their obsession with trivialities." The public deserves better, says Nixon. "The American people are canny enough to listen to what a man is saying instead of how he says it. The 1988 election is not about style any more than it is about competence or breeding. It is about two starkly different visions of America and how it should be led into the 21st century."

Anxious for debates

I am anxious for the debates between the Presidential and the Vice-Presidential candidates to start. It will remind of a little chihuahua barking at a large "trained" Doberman Pinscher. But "Poor George" will be so busy spitting the "Quayle" doo-doo out his mouth that his "Silver Foot" is stuck in, he may not be able to answer some of the questions about the Big D's and the Big S's.

Thanks to Midlanders

On Thursday, Aug. 11, between 5:00 and 5:30 p.m., my car broke down on Interstate 20 just after leaving the Midland Regional Airport. There were seven or eight cars and trucks who stopped to help us. Some were from Midland and some from Odessa.

I only got one name — Don Daniel with Dresser-Rand who stopped to help, went into town, and returned with two soft drinks for my friend and me.

I want to thank all the gentlemen. I wish I knew their names, but in particular I thank the student heading for a night class at the airport who called the wrecker service. Bobby Hennis of B&B Auto Recovery not only came promptly and towed us to Midland, but also took my friend and me to the Holiday Inn so we could call our relatives.

If I had to have car trouble, it couldn't have happened in a better place.

Diapers cause problem

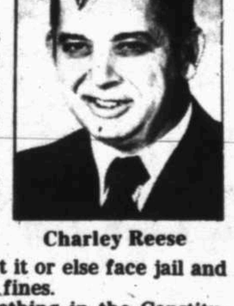

I have really been having problems with flies. Everytime you open the door to go in or out they swarm in the house. I live on the alley on Loraine St. I have been trying to kill them out, but was getting nowhere at it. The city finally came out and sprayed and also I had a man from one of the pest control companies come out. Both told me that our neighbors had been putting dirty diapers in the dumpster and not wrapping them up and that was the main thing attracting the flies. The man from the city told me that it is against the law for people to do this. So far it has cost me about $75.00 to try to get rid of them. The flies had chased our small kittens and kept us up at night. Can we get a petition up to let people know that it is against the law to dump things this way?

CHARLEY REESE

Civil rights no excuse for judicial tyranny

Leonard B. Sand, judge of the Federal District Court in Manhattan, should be impeached. Congress should launch an investigation of the Justice Department whose recommendations Sand is following.

Charley Reese

Sand's crime is usurpation of authority. He has developed a land-use plan, ordered the city government of Yonkers, N.Y., to adopt it or else face jail and bankrupting fines.

There is nothing in the Constitution or in federal statutes which give the federal government the authority to force cities to adopt land-use plans.

It's all being done in the name of civil rights, a subject in fact simple but in practice distorted beyond recognition.

The ideal of civil rights can be summed up in one word: fair. You don't deny a person a service or an opportunity simply because of the color of his skin. You don't allow anyone to make a person do that which they do not wish to do because of skin color — e.g. live in a certain neighborhood. You do not prevent a person from doing that which he would be legally entitled to do and could afford to do simply because of race.

That's all. No person of good will and common sense, liberal or conservative, can quarrel with that. It's nothing more than the basic premise of our Declaration of Independence re-stated.

In Yonkers, however, the issue is not discrimination. The City of Yonkers is not preventing anyone from living anywhere they choose. Nothing in the Constitution or in federal civil rights laws requires that private citizens, in their living habits, arrange themselves in a racial pattern to suit a federal bureaucrat.

What Judge Sands is ordering the City of Yonkers to do is build 200 low-income housing units in the areas of the city that he wants them built. Then he is demanding that the City of Yonkers require all future developers in certain neighborhoods to reserve 20 percent of their units for families earning under $32,000 a year.

This is nothing more than judicial tyranny. He has no legitimate authority to do that. This is nothing more than social engineering schemes being forced on a community by a federal dictatorship. It is as undemocratic as the Soviet Union.

Mind you, the issue is not whether sprinkling low income housing in middle and upper middle class neighbors is or isn't a good idea. The issue is that it is purely a social policy which properly should be left to democratic processes in Yonkers.

If I am black and wish to live in a neighborhood where all the houses are in the $100,000 range and I can't afford a $100,000 house, I'm not being discriminated against. I happen to be white and I assure you I don't live in a neighborhood of $100,000 houses.

Furthermore, Sands is holding city officials responsible for the private actions of private landowners and private developers over a period of decades. He is, in effect, subjecting the city of Yonkers to an ex post facto law which the U.S. Constitution prohibits.

An ex post facto law means that people are held liable under it retrospectively. In other words, something that wasn't illegal is now made illegal and people are prosecuted for what they did before the law was passed.

Sands is doing this to the people of Yonkers. He is saying, in effect, that land use patterns, developed over years, are racially discriminatory and therefore the current city commission is liable for the misdeeds of their predecessors.

The American people should no more tolerate a judicial tyrant than a military tyrant. The Constitution gives the Congress the authority to reign in wayward judges and we should insist that they not be too cowardly to do it.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Friday, Aug. 26, the 239th day of 1988. There are 127 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Aug. 26, 1920, the 19th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, guaranteeing American women the right to vote, was declared in effect. It says: "The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any state on account of sex."

On this date:

In 55 B.C., Roman forces under Julius Caesar invaded Britain.

In 1847, Liberia was proclaimed an independent republic.

In 1873, radio electronics pioneer Dr. Lee DeForest was born in Council Bluffs, Iowa.

In 1883, the island volcano Krakatoa began erupting with increasingly large explosions.

In 1957, the Soviet Union announced it had successfully tested an intercontinental ballistic missile.

In 1961, the official International Hockey Hall of Fame opened in Toronto.

In 1964, President Lyndon B. Johnson was nominated for a term of office in his own right at the Democratic national convention in Atlantic City, N.J.

In 1972, the summer Olympics opened in Munich, West Germany.

In 1974, Charles Lindbergh — the first man to fly solo, non-stop across the Atlantic — died at his home in Hawaii at the age of 72.

Ten years ago: Cardinal Albino Luciani of Venice was elected the 264th Pope of the Roman Catholic Church following the death of Paul VI.

Five years ago: Soviet President Yuri V. Andropov offered to "liquidate" any medium-range missiles, including advanced SS-20s, that the Soviets would remove from Eastern Europe through a superpower agreement on arms reductions.

One year ago: In an attempt to eliminate a superpower stumbling block, West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl said his country would destroy its 72 Pershing 1A rockets if Washington and Moscow scrapped all their intermediate-range nuclear weapons.

Today's birthdays: Former Attorney General William French Smith is 71. Washington Post Executive Editor Benjamin C. Bradlee is 67. Former Democratic vice-presidential nominee Geraldine Ferraro is 53. Singer Valerie Simpson is 40.

Thought for today: "The difference between politics and statesmanship is philosophy." — Will (1885-1981) and Ariel Durant (1898-1981), American historians.

LEWIS GRIZZARD

Who in the world can replace Dan Quayle?

Let's say George Bush has dumped young Sen. Quayle from the Republican ticket. The media, lathered to a frenzy over Sen. Quayle's questionable military and academic backgrounds, has looked further into his closet of skeletons.

Grizzard

It has been reported that not only did he pull strings to get into the National Guard, Sen. Quayle also never learned to clean his rifle properly, was frequently out of step while marching with his comrades, and once referred to the patriotic "When Those Caissons Go Rolling Along," as "a dumb song."

As for his academic career, reporters found out Sen. Quayle had a fellow student write his term paper, "What I Did on My Summer Vacation," in the fifth grade and paid the kid off from his $100 a week allowance.

So, we now find the Bush forces back in session trying to come up with a new vice presidential nominee to save the sinking ticket.

"By golly, guys," Mr. Bush began, "we've really stepped on our tails here."

"What's this 'we' stuff?" replied top aide James Baker. "I told you that kid was nothing but trouble, but you wouldn't listen."

"But, by golly, he was such a handsome young man," answered Mr. Bush. "What is it the ladies use to describe such a fellow? 'Hulk'?"

"'Hunk,'" corrected Mr. Baker.

"I simply thought he might get us some female votes, and, by golly, we could use some," Mr. Bush went on.

"He looks so much like — who's the actor he looks like?"

"Redford, sir," someone spoke out. "Robert Redford."

"Dan Redford, yeah, that's the guy," said Mr. Bush.

The group began going back over familiar names as possible replacements for Sen. Quayle. Even Pat Robertson's name came up.

"He is short enough so he'll make me look presidential standing next to me," said Mr. Bush.

"But," interrupted an aide, "he's got that premarital sex baggage with him, and he looks too much like a chipmunk."

"By golly, he does have those puffy cheeks, doesn't he?" said the vice president.

"What about Alexander Haig?" somebody asked.

"A loose cannon," said Mr. Bush.

Someone else suggested Bob Dole.

"Look what he did for Jerry Ford," said Mr. Bush.

Jack Kemp's name came up, of course.

"There's room for only one quarterback on my team," said the vice president, pleased with his phrasemaking.

Just then, the phone rang. A Bush aide answered. After listening to the caller for a few moments, he handed the phone to Mr. Bush.

"It's some guy who says he's the man you need as your running mate."

"Hand me the phone," said Mr. Bush.

"This is the vice president speaking," he said. "Who's calling? Is that you, Jesse? Well, by golly, what a pleasant surprise..."

NATION in brief

Three killed when plane hits stores

PEMBROKE PINES, Fla. (AP) — A small plane that crashed into a shopping center, killing three people and igniting a fire that destroyed four stores, had been unable to gain altitude after taking off, an investigator said.

"He didn't get very high, maybe 100 to 150 feet at the most," said Bruce Hill, an accident investigator with the National Transportation Safety Board.

The twin-engine Piper Aerostar broke through the roof of a print shop Thursday afternoon and sent workers and passers-by fleeing. One worker in the rear of the shop suffered severe burns and was in critical condition today.

According to witnesses and FAA reports, the six-seat plane piloted by Lewis E. Phillips of Fort Lauderdale took off about 3:30 p.m. and circled several times before clipping power lines and plunging into the strip shopping plaza, about a mile from the runway.

Phillips died in the crash; police did not immediately release the names of the two passengers killed. All three victims were burned beyond recognition, said police Lt. Tom Walsh.

Damage to the shopping center was estimated at about $1 million.

Residents and officials called for a probe into safety at North Perry Airport, which is surrounded by densely populated neighborhoods in this community 15 miles north of Miami. Four people were killed in 16 collisions linked to the airport since 1982, not counting Thursday's crash.

Reagan to have checkups

LOS ANGELES (AP) — President Reagan is undergoing a battery of annual health checkups, but White House officials say they'll keep the results private.

Reagan, who is spending a week of his August vacation in Los Angeles with his wife, Nancy, had a checkup Thursday with his allergist, Dr. Ralph Bookman, White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said.

The spokesman described the session as "his regular, annual allergy checkup," conducted in the privacy of the president's penthouse suite at the plush Century Plaza Hotel.

The president was to undergo eye, ear, nose and throat examinations before returning to his ranch near Santa Barbara on Saturday, the spokesman said.

Fitzwater said the president "takes weekly shots for desensitization to pollen. He has for years."

1989 budget avoids cuts

WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House is warning that if Congress wants to enact new spending programs for the coming fiscal year, lawmakers will have to find offsetting savings elsewhere or face unpopular, automatic budget cuts.

The Reagan administration's Office of Management and Budget projected Thursday that the fiscal 1989 federal deficit would come in just under the $146 billion target set in the Gramm-Rudman balanced budget law.

Under that legislation, if the budget office determines that the red ink will exceed $146 billion, spending on defense and domestic programs must be slashed automatically by whatever amount is necessary to shrink the deficit to $136 billion.

"In that case, congressional overspending will trigger across-the-board cuts that slash high priority programs every bit as much as lower priority programs," President Reagan warned from Los Angeles, where he is vacationing.

OMB estimated that, including programs enacted through Aug. 15, the fiscal 1989 deficit would be $144 billion. When figuring in programs signed into law over the last few days, the amount of red ink grew to $145.3 billion, just $700 million below the $146 billion budget-cut trigger.

White House budget chief James C. Miller III noted that when lawmakers return from their summer recess next month, they plan to consider a collection of popular bills — including hunger relief, anti-drug programs, welfare reform, child care and a minimum-wage increase — that would boost the deficit beyond $146 billion.

Defects still rank high

ATLANTA (AP) — Birth defects such as lung abnormalities, cardiovascular problems and chromosome disorders continue to rank as the nation's fifth leading causes of premature loss of life, federal health researchers say.

The national Centers for Disease Control, which tabulates "years of potential life lost" nationwide to determine the role of various conditions in premature mortality, reported Thursday that in 1986, birth defects robbed their victims of 651,523 years of life they would have lived before age 65.

That ranked fifth among all causes of premature life-years lost, the Atlanta-based agency said. Ranking first was unintentional injury, resulting in about 2.4 million lost life-years, followed by cancers, heart disease and suicide and homicide.

Birth defects have ranked fifth in all previous studies of premature mortality published as far back as 1964, said researcher David Erickson.

"As infant mortality due to other causes has been reduced (with advances in prenatal care and medical treatment), congenital anomalies (birth defects) have become the leading cause of infant mortality," the CDC said in its weekly report.

Several villages ordered to evacuate as flames near

Associated Press

Authorities ordered evacuation plans for several communities in Oregon and Montana as flames approached, while firefighters at Yellowstone National Park prepared for another blowup of a blaze threatening a hotel-campground complex.

Fire crews in Washington, Idaho, Utah and California also battled wildfires blackening thousands of acres Thursday.

In southern Oregon, a lightning-sparked fire shot flames 100 feet into the sky less than a mile from a subdivision north of Grants Pass, said Kathy Aplin of the Oregon Department of Forestry.

The blaze doubled in size Thursday to 1,200 acres, prompting state officials Thursday night to order evacuation plans for the subdivision of about 1,000 residents.

"There are ashes falling just like rain on our deck," said Helen McCall, who lives at the Grants Pass city limits, about two miles south of the fire.

In northeast Oregon, the growing Ward Canyon fire prompted officials to order evacuation plans for the tiny town of Troy, near the Washington line.

The blaze expanded to 5,000 acres Thursday, crossing the Grand Ronde River and burning 15 unoccupied structures, mostly hunting cabins, Aplin said.

Effie Rozier of the Red Cross said Troy is a "motel and a restaurant" with about 50 residents scattered nearby.

In both communities, either state fire officials or the county sheriff could order evacuations if conditions worsened.

Forest fires also were burning out of control just east of Grants Pass near the towns of Rogue River and Medford, in Crater Lake National Park and south of Pendleton in eastern Oregon.

Near Grants Pass, firefighters using bulldozers to clear a fire break early Thurday came upon the secluded home of Pam and Will Abbott, 200 yards from the flames.

"It was just like something out of science-fiction movie," Mrs. Abbott said. "At 3 a.m. the floodlights poured in from two giant bulldozers. We are scared out of our wits. We just took pictures of every room of our house and packed our clothes."

But the house was saved, Aplin said.

Residents of Maxville, Mont., a town of two dozen homes about 90 miles southwest of Helena, were told to prepare for possible evacuation as fire engulfed more than 5,000 acres of heavy timber and forced closure of the main road through the area, U.S. Forest Service officials said.

Firefighters battling another 30,000-acre fire in south-central Montana were trying to prevent flames from moving closer to Cooke City and Silver Gate, two Montana communities near Yellowstone.

In central Montana, a fifth 1,300-acre fire that edged to within a half mile of a Minuteman II missile silo Wednesday continued to burn out of control.

The Air Force on Thursday withdrew crews and equipment it had sent as a precaution. Capt. Donald Planalp of Malmstrom Air Force Base in Great Falls said there never was any danger to the underground silo.

Firefighters in Montana also battled two other blazes that covered 30,000 and 37,600 acres apiece.

In northwest Wyoming, the weather forecast called for more brisk winds today as Yellowstone officials prepared for another afternoon blowup of a 108,000-acre fire.

The blaze moved to within a quarter-mile of the Canyon hotel and campground complex Thursday, but firefighters turned the flames away using backfires, or fires intentionally set to burn up fuel.

Couple charged with conning victims with hard-luck stories

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A couple whose hard-luck stories of broken-down cars and helpless pregnancy squeezed up to $200 an hour from parking-lot Good Samaritans were actually apartment managers who moonlighted as con artists, authorities said.

Jeffrey Dwayne Allman, 31, and Tracy Chris Hartland, 24, described as aspiring actors, were each charged with 22 misdemeanor counts of petty theft for allegedly duping people in the scheme that netted them up to $200 an hour, the City Attorney's office said Thursday.

Among the alleged victims was Los Angeles Times writer Jack Smith, whose column recounting his suspicion and eventual surrender of $20 during an encounter with the seemingly forlorn couple brought at least 50 letters from readers who said they had been similarly taken in.

The couple, who have been dubbed the "Yuppie Panhandlers" by authorities, are scheduled for a Municipal Court arraignment Sept. 1.

City Attorney Jim Hahn said the couple approached people in supermarket parking lots and at service stations and told elaborate hard luck stories, asking for a loan which they promised to pay back.

The letters to Smith were turned over to police, and Hahn said they provided the leads needed to identify the couple.

"I'm pretty soft-hearted and I was skeptical throughout because there were some holes in their story. But then you wonder, 'What if it's true,'" said Smith, who was approached by the couple outside a Pasadena supermarket in April.

"I hate to think I looked gullible. When I thought about it, I said: 'What a dumbbell you are,' " Smith added.

He said he has since talked to the woman, who apologized.

Allman and Hartland, who were arrested Aug. 10 while making their pitch to a man at a West Hollywood car wash, were not at all down on their luck, Hahn said.

They were being paid for managing a West Hollywood apartment building and also received a free $776-a-month apartment as part of the deal, Hahn said.

He added that Allman admitted making about $200 an hour on the con game which had been running for three years.

Both Allman and Hartland have arrest records on drug related charges, and Hartland has a shoplifting case pending, Hahn said.

Explaining how the scheme worked, Hahn said the woman often would sit in a car cuddling a dog or cat while Allman approached the victims.

"Allman would spin elaborate tales of woe and misfortune about how their car had broken down and they had spent all their money to get it repaired, or about how the car had been burglarized and all their cash stolen," he said.

"One victim remembered how Allman dropped imploringly to one knee during his pitch to her," Hahn said, noting they would get the name and address of each victim and promise to return the money.

Often, the woman appeared to be pregnant, he said, and when the couple left with between $10 and $100 they would wave at their victims and say, "God bless you."

"That woman has been two months pregnant for two years," Smith quipped.

Those who helped the couple often went out of their way to do so, Hahn said.

A minister drove with the couple for 20 minutes in search of a store which would cash a check so he could give them $53 in food and cash. An elderly man took the couple home with him, fed them and gave them $100 to help them get home to Lodi, where they said they lived, Hahn said.

DeSillers dismissed of motions

MIAMI (AP) — Maria DeSillers is an unfairly maligned woman who handled donations for her dying son as best she could, according to the lawyer who successfully battled contempt motions that could have put her in jail.

The court-appointed curator for Ronnie DeSillers' estate sought a contempt ruling because Ms. DeSillers has refused to hand over financial records and items allegedly bought with some of the $690,000 in donations for the boy.

But Dade Probate Judge Francis Christie dismissed the contempt motions Thursday, saying that if Ms. DeSillers gave up the records they might "incriminate her" in criminal probes under way in Dade and Broward counties.

"I'm very happy," said Ms. DeSillers, who while awaiting the ruling gave her age as "33, the same as Christ when he was crucified."

Curator Karen Gievers, appointed by Christie in March after Ms. DeSillers' handling of the donations was questioned, contends that about $200,000 may have been misspent on such purchases as a used BMW worth $13,500, a diamond-and-sapphire ring, a diamond-studded gold cross, clothing, furniture and 18 gravesites.

Lawyers for Ms. Gievers had no comment after Christie's terse ruling but later requested an emergency hearing today on their requests to seize disputed belongings of Ms. DeSillers. Also, they want the judge to strike her $150,000 claim on her son's estate, said Frank Johnson, another of her attorneys.

Defense lawyer Roy Black argued during the two-day hearing that Ms. DeSillers enjoyed a Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination and shouldn't have to give up financial records or the disputed purchases.

He also said some of the donations were expressly for his client's personal expenses.

Striking Burmese workers halt train, air service to capital

WORLD

RANGOON, Burma (AP) — Strikers demanding democracy today halted all train and air service in the capital, and sources said rioting prisoners set several buildings ablaze in Rangoon's jail. Most government offices were deserted.

"Government control is eroding, but it has not disintegrated," said a Western diplomat in Rangoon. He spoke on condition of anonymity.

The influential daughter of Burma's late independence leader told 400,000 cheering protesters an interim government should be formed to bring about democracy and end 26 years of authoritarian rule.

Aung San Suu Kyi said this alone could ease weeks of unrest that has toppled one president and killed at least 112 people.

Soldiers and police have virtually disappeared from the streets since President Maung Maung ended martial law Wednesday. State-run Radio Rangoon since has reported looting, arson and other violence, and said today "hooligans" torched shanties in suburban areas.

In Taunggyi, 290 miles northeast of Rangoon, police and government employees joined about 100,000 demonstrators demanding an interim government. Witnesses said it was the largest rally ever in the Shan State capital.

Striking workers halted all rail services and Union Burma Airways domestic flights, officials said.

Strikes also crippled most factories under the Industries Ministry, and blue-uniformed factory workers riding in the ministry's trucks took part in the Rangoon demonstrations.

Strikes shut two oil refineries, in Syriam across the Rangoon River and in Mann in central Burma. A strike at Rangoon port also left scores of foreign ships waiting.

No newspapers appeared for the second day because workers at the six state-run dailies stayed away to demand democracy and press freedom. People were reported to be hoarding goods as the price of rice soared.

Aung San Suu Kyi has no political experience but wields considerable symbolic influence as the daughter of Aung San, who led the country's struggle for independence from Britain and was assassinated in 1947.

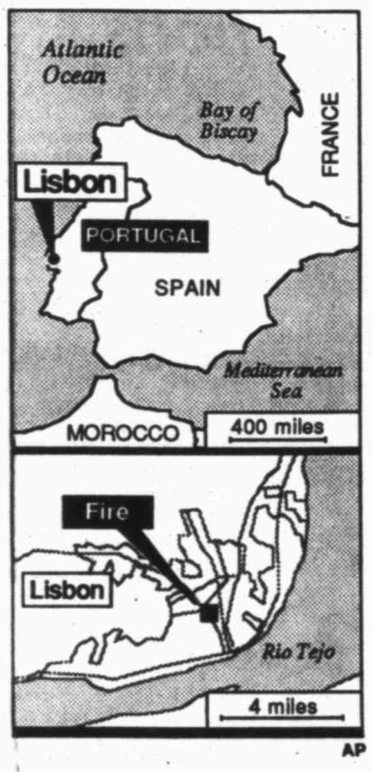

She spoke a day after the country's most outspoken dissident, Aung Gyi, also demanded an interim government. Aung Gyi spoke before 200,000 people after he was freed from jail following a month of detention on charges of "attacking the state."

Aung San Suu Kyi asked the military to be "the people's army" and look after the people's interests.

Western diplomats in Rangoon have cited reports of anti-government feeling in the military and said it may intervene to establish an interim government. In riots this month, security forces in some towns reportedly let demonstrators take over local administrations.

In an Aug. 18 letter, former teachers of the Defense Services Academy urged graduates to side with the people.

Lisbon mourns fire in historic area

AP

LISBON, Portugal (AP) — The city today mourned the loss of its historic Chiado district, devastated by flames that raged out of control while firefighters were hampered by narrow cobblestone streets and low water pressure.

Cultural landmarks in the 10-block area were reduced to smoldering ruins in the blaze that broke out before dawn Thursday in a 19th century department store and caused bottles of butane gas to explode.

Both the Armazens do Grandela and the Grandes Armazens do Chiado, the city's only department stores, were destroyed as were the Costa e Martins speciality grocery, the Eduardo Martins china shop and the 350-year-old Casa Batalha button store.

The stores were among the oldest in Europe, and their wooden floors, staircases and cashier booths dated from the late 19th century when the stores were built to cater to the Portuguese capital's emerging middle class.

Neither was fitted with a sprinkler system and firefighters complained about low water pressure.

Civil defense officials said a 60-year-old man died when flames engulfed his apartment and that 43 other people, most of them firefighters, were hospitalized for burns and smoke inhalation. Hundreds were evacuated.

The fire destroyed the offices of many lawyers and accountants who scurried down the slippery streets carrying files and documents. They were joined by fleeing residents carrying cats, dogs and caged parakeets.

Firefighters did not arrive at the scene until an hour after the fire was reported about 3 a.m. by a watchman at the 19th-century elevator built by Gustave Eiffel to connect the Chiado to streets in the area below. Fire equipment for the district had been called out to another, minor fire and became stuck in the narrow streets.

The Chiado was a favorite haunt of Portuguese writers and musicians with its cafes and shops selling fine leather gloves, buttons, books and records.

Its destruction was described by newspapers as the worst disaster to strike the capital since an earthquake and fire in 1755.

The cause of the blaze was under investigation. Police on Wednesday questioned Manuel Martins Dias, principal shareholder in the group that owns The Armazens do Grandela, the three-story department store where the blaze broke out, about a mysterious fire in another store owned by the group.

Investing in education pays off for state, UT head says

Doug Sehres/Reporter-Telegram

University of Texas Chancellor Hans Mark praised research at the university during a speech to members of the Midland Rotary Club Thursday.

By RICK BROWN
Assistant City Editor

Continued state investment in higher education is good for Texas, particularly when ongoing research attracts outside business and creates jobs, the chancellor of the University of Texas system told a service club Thursday.

Educator Hans Mark told Downtown Rotary members that a $200 million higher education budget increase approved by the Legislature last year has paid for itself with location of a high-tech manufacturing group in the Austin area.

The Sematech manufacturing plant now under construction — a project spurred in part by University of Texas proximity — has a projected annual payroll of $250 million, more than enough to offset the $200 million budget increase.

The Sematech project served as only the largest example of the university system's attractiveness as a resource for business.

Mark also mentioned recent start-ups in Houston of high-tech medical-related companies that aim to freeze tissue more quickly and identify cancer earlier — two accomplishments made possible by UT research.

In addition, UT Arlington's Advanced Robotics Institute — whose original $1 million funding the Legislature approved in 1985 — now boasts associated businesses that provide 8,000 jobs, Mark said.

Not to be forgotton is UT Permian Basin's Center for Energy and Economic Diversification, which was funded at the $2 million level by the Legislature.

"We have two resources out here — one is oil and the other is land. What we are trying to do is develop projects that lead to the development of these resources," Mark said.

Already, two projects are in the works for the center once construction is complete.

It should serve as a staging base for Pecos County range tests the U.S. Army will conduct on a new type of artillery: bullets driven not by explosives, but electro-magnetic impulses.

In a second project, the center will serve as a field station for a UT Austin professor's effort to identify more precisely and accurately Permian Basin oil resources, said Mark.

"We have two resources out here — one is oil and the other is land. What we are trying to do is develop projects that lead to the development of these resources."

— UT Chancellor Hans Mark

"I want to assure you we are actively seeking things to put in this institute," he said.

Once the projects come on-line, they should help put to rest persistent attempts to close the Odessa upper-level university because of hard economic times, Mark said.

However rosily the chancellor painted the system's role in giving the state a leg up, he did not discount two other objectives: educating youth and creating leaders.

He noted that four Nobel laureates teach in the system and credited the Legislature for funding continued recruitment of "absolutely first-class people."

"In terms of academic distinction, we have arrived," he said. "We're still not No. 1, but we're well on our way to getting there."

He noted that, of the state's 27 U.S. representatives and two senators, 17 are UT System alumni, mentioning in particular House Speaker Jim Wright of Fort Worth and vice presidential nominee Lloyd Bentsen.

On the GOP side, he said two Cabinet members who recently resigned — former Education Secretary Edward Bennett and former Treasury Secretary James Baker, who now directs the George Bush presidential campaign — also are UT system products.

Carol Everett, who has had an abortion and owned two abortion clinics in Dallas, now campaigns for the repeal of Wade vs. Roe, the Supreme Court decision that legalized abortions.
George Wolf/ Reporter-Telegram

One-time owner of abortion clinic now 'pro-life'

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Carol Everett's perspective on the abortion issue is somewhat rare.

Having had an abortion in 1973, Mrs. Everett owned two abortion clinics in Dallas where more than 35,000 such procedures were conducted from 1977-83.

She also assisted in performing abortions, including those done in the second and third trimester of pregnancy.

Abortion counselors are "paid to sell one product," asserted Mrs. Everett, referring to the $25 she earned for each abortion performed at the two Dallas clinics.

"The last month I was there we did 545 abortions and I put $13,625 in my pocket. I was on target in 1983 to make $260,000, with plans to make $1 million the next year.

"I will never make $1 million now," she added.

Mrs. Everett's attitude adjustment on the abortion issue came more than 10 years after her own abortion, which she said is to blame for the break-up of her marriage and her dependency on prescription drugs and alcohol.

The day was July 27, 1983.

"I really didn't believe that abortion was wrong. Then I came to realize that abortion was not only wrong, but I had been involved in the murder of over 35,000 babies.

"That was significant enough for me to take a deep breath," she said.

Mrs. Everett cited post-abortion studies that show a woman doesn't fully come to terms with abortion until five years after undergoing the procedure.

"In that period of time, she's involved in self-destructive tendencies such as drug, alcohol abuse, promiscuity and suicide attempts," she said, referring to her own behavior.

"I had an abortion because it was supposedly this safe, convenient, easy procedure. And what it did was destroy my baby's life, my life, my husband's life and my two children's life," she said.

Presently, the divorced mother of two grown children serves as public affairs director for the Texas Coalition for Life, a position she accepted last February.

In that organization, members are recruiting women who have had abortions to help educate lawmakers and the public about its dangers — the Right-to-Life movement's main agenda — said Mrs. Everett, who visited Midland Thursday as a guest of West Texans for Life and the Permian Basin Eagle Forum.

"These women go into clinics thinking they're getting a safe, legal procedure when there's no one telling the abortion clinic that they must keep it clean and have resuscitation and cardiac equipment.

"This is the most commonly performed surgery in our nation. It's just unbelievable that our legislators have looked the other way," she observed.

Mrs. Everett's crusade is to lobby for the repeal of Roe vs. Wade — the U.S. Supreme Court decision legalizing abortion.

"I am not in favor of cleaning up the killing chambers. I want to close them," she said.

Meanwhile, she's also pushing for laws regulating abortion clinics and for legislation requiring parental consent for minors seeking abortions, insisting that "the least we can do is regulate them the way we do our day schools, our restaurants and all of our hospital and medical care facilities."

One way Mrs. Everett plans to accomplish that task is to continue to speak from experience.

"Only the people who have seen abortions can tell the truth about it. I've been there, I know. I know from both sides what it is to have an abortion and what it is to kill babies for a living," she said.

Branson named to healthcare task force

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

The Midland Memorial Hospital president and the former president of the hospital district board of directors are turning to the state and federal government for help in curing the ailing indigent care problem.

Ray Branson, president of MMH, is serving on a 64-member charitable healthcare task force headed by Attorney General Jim Mattox.

The task force is composed of persons from tax-supported public hospitals, not-for-profit hospitals, the medical profession, state community leaders and elected officials.

"We hope the work of this task force will be extremely important in properly responding to the growing problem of people who do not have or cannot afford medical and hospital insurance," Mattox said last month.

Added the attorney general: "Our public hospitals are facing a crisis because they are being overrun with cases of individuals who cannot afford to fully pay for their care, and in some rural areas, public hospitals are closing their doors altogether."

Ray Branson

Branson, also a board member of the Texas Hospital Association, said Thursday the task force will serve a two-fold purpose.

Committee members will work to define "indigent care," a task that sounds simple, but is not always, Branson said.

"There is no national, regional or local definition," the hospital president said. "Poverty guidelines are adjusted to the situation. Different areas have different needs."

Once defined, the task force will address the appropriate and ethical boundaries that should comprise "uncompensated" care, Branson explained.

Branson told the public gathered at a Midland County Hospital District meeting the hospital has already been active in the passage of the Senate Bill 1, an indigent care healthcare act; the Maternal and Infant Healthcare Improvement Act and enhanced Medicaid reimbursements.

In addition, the hospital employs a firm, Texas Aries, to help identify and qualify needy individuals for financial coverage other than from the hospital district.

MCHD board member and former board president Frank Cahoon was given the responsibility Thursday of soliciting help on the indigent problem from other governmental sources.

Cahoon said today he has already been in touch with Midland's congressman, U.S. Rep. Lamar Smith, R-San Antonio.

While a Bexar County Commissioner, Smith saw that area's indigent care bill increase 300 percent, Cahoon said.

"Smith is willing to see what we can do on a federal level," Cahoon said.

Much of the indigent care bill is attributable to treating Mexican nationals, he added.

Cahoon said Smith suggested an "innovative" idea that would see the federal government hold back 10 cents for every barrel of crude the U.S. buys from Mexico to fill up domestic strategic reserves.

That 10 cents would be directed toward the federal government which could then disburse the monies to counties across the southern states who treat the Mexican national indigents, Cahoon said.

Though that may seem like a federal government intrusion into business the states should take care of, Cahoon said the federal government has already intruded into the problem by telling counties they are responsible for indigent treatment.

"The federal government just isn't helping us pay for it," Cahoon said.

Show shells out five first places to Midland pecan growers

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Midland County-produced pecans won five first places, including the grand championship, and rated second statewide in the number of winners in the recent Texas State Pecan Show in El Paso.

Overall, Midland County pecan growers took 10 prizes — the five first places, one second place, and four fourth places, according to Earnest Kiker, Midland County's Texas Agricultural Extension Service agent.

"Midland County has done quite well," said Morris "Dave" Davis, past president of the Midland County Pecan Growers Association. Midland County pecan fanciers David and Cathy Harris of the Spraberry territory "almost took the show" by winning three first places, including the showing of the grand-champion shelling pecan, the Cheyenne.

The Harrises also took first place in the collection of three varieties, the Shawnee, Cheyenne and Sioux, and won first places in the Western pecan variety, which is West Texas' favorite shelling pecan.

"I think Midland County is way above average on quality pecans," said Davis, "and I feel like pecans that we grow here have higher percentage shellout and are above average throughout the state."

And the Davis Pecan Orchard, operated by Davis and his wife, Lura, fared well in the state show. Their Chickasaw pecans won first place in that variety.

Another Midlander, Mrs. James D. Cobb, won first place with her John Garner pecan variety.

Midland and other West Texas pecan growers fared so well, Davis said, because of "the way we maintain them (pecan trees) and take care of them" through, in part, adequate watering by drip-irrigation and sprinkler systems.

Only Bell County pecan growers in Central Texas turned out more championship pecans than did Midland County pecan growers. Bell County pecan fanciers won eight first places and, all told, garnered 15 places in the statewide show.

Midlanders who fared well in the state show included C.E. Reams, whose GraZona variety placed third, M.A. Cappadonna, whose in-shell pecans took a third place; Ted McVey Farms, which placed third in the Onliwon variety; Jim Stanley, whose San Saba pecans placed third, and Charles W. Green, whose Tejas pecan placed second in that variety.

Other West Texans whose pecans from their 1987 crop stood out in the show included Tom Faulkenberry of Pecos County, third place in Barton pecans; Delbert Halfmann of Glasscock County, third place in Cherokee; Wilbur Gaede of Andrews County, first place in Cherokee; Margie Kellermeier of Concho County, grand champion Choctaw; Frank Heslin of Ward County, third place in Comanche; Don Gorman of Andrews County, second place in Grabohl; Ray and Pat Barrett of Upton County, third place in GraTex and second place in San Saba; Ray Barrett of Upton County, second place in Wichita; A.D. Freeman of Ward County, first place in Riverside; Warren Multer of Glasscock County, first place in in-shell variety seedling; John J. Sims of Ector County, first place in Ideal; R.A. White of Martin County, second place in John Garner; James Wilson of Andrews County, first place in Squirrel's Delight; W.L. Lockaby of Ward County, first place in Tejas; Don Gorman of Andrews County, third place in Western, and Julian Sanchez of Loving County, second place in Western pecans.

Houston-area oilman likes to spread his wealth around

Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — Oilman Albert B. Alkek, who thrilled local fund-raisers with his pledge to donate $25 million to Baylor College of Medicine, says he still lives in the $5,600 house he put up in a corn field near Victoria in 1934 as a present to his bride.

Alkek said people ask why he doesn't buy a $35 million mansion, and he gives them his philosophy about wealth:

"You can't wear but one suit, and you can't eat but three meals a day. What are you going to do with your money except help others?"

After the wedding, Alkek bundled the former Margaret McFarland of Houston into his private airplane and they took off for Galveston, the first stop on a long honeymoon. Today they have a daughter, Margaret Williams, a son, Bill, seven grandchildren and a great-grandchild.

At 77, Alkek says he has lost track of the sums he has given to schools, hospitals and good causes. He says he was always confident of his ability to make money, and told his parents he didn't need their inheritance.

Like his friend Michael DeBakey, chancellor of Baylor, Alkek is of Middle Eastern descent. His grandfather came to Texas from Beirut about 1895, changing his name from Kiek.

"Dad had a chain of grocery stores. He had the only one in Victoria at one time, a three-story red rock building that is still standing on the Missouri Pacific tracks. It was called a mercantile store and we sold gloves, barrels of molasses, and sugar and flour by the 100-pound sack.

"They ground fresh coffee and you could smell it all over town."

Alkek attended public school in Victoria and Peacock Military Academy in San Antonio, then enrolled at St. Mary's University there. But he says he was "anxious to make money" and didn't stay to graduate.

"I borrowed $250 from Dad and bought a little Chevrolet pickup and became a commissioned agent peddling gasoline, greases and coal oil for Pierce Petroleum Co.," he recalls.

"Sinclair bought Pierce, and I became a distributor because I was a go-getter and a hard worker."

In 1942, as the United States was building up its productive resources for the war effort, his work habits were noticed.

"The director of Sinclair called me from Washington and told me three limousines full of company executives were coming through Victoria to see the new refinery the government had helped them build in Corpus Christi," Alkek recalls.

"He said, 'You ought to kill them some ducks.'

"I got all my kin and some friends and shot the ducks, and when they pulled up to my filling station, Harry F. Sinclair opened the door and I gave him the ducks."

Sinclair invited Alkek over to Corpus Christi for lunch the next day. At the lunch, where the main course was duck, Sinclair took an interest in the scuffed-up boots Alkek was wearing. He tried one on and liked it. He also liked the young man's attitude.

"He said, 'Albert, after the war is over I am going to make you my partner.' And in 1946, he did it." They formed the Sinclair-Alkek Oil Co., which bought a number of properties in the area. Today, Alkek has producing wells all over the country and ranches in three Texas counties.

In 1979, Alkek got into trouble with federal authorities in connection with the complicated and shifting regulations that governed the sale of "old" and "new" oil. A sworn statement by DeBakey helped him with his defense.

Ellis Funeral Home is in charge of arrangements.

He died Thursday at a Midland hospital.

He was born on Nov. 28, 1961, in Odessa and was reared in the Odessa, Austin and McAllen areas. Clayton graduated from Grace Christian School in 1978. Following graduation, he entered the U.S. Navy. He returned to McAllen after leaving the Navy and moved to Midland one year ago.

He leaves behind the following family members, his parents, Mr. and Mrs. William T. Clayton and Mr. and Mrs. Bobby Dean; two brothers, Don Clayton and Curtis Clayton; one sister, Kym McMahon; his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Leon Baker, Mr. and Mrs. D.T. Clayton and Mrs. Lois Callahan; four nieces and four nephews.

The family requests memorials be directed to Midland Memorial Hospital.

Robert Grayson Smith

Services for Robert Grayson Smith of Midland will be at 11 a.m. Saturday at the Ellis Funeral Home chapel with the Rev. Bob Netherland of the Christ of Today Church officiating. Burial will be in Resthaven Memorial Park with Ellis Funeral Home in charge of arrangements.

Pallbearers will be Tom Crabtree, Dan Shackelford, R.B. Field Jr., Ed Todd, Rulen Hale and Jackie Erlich.

Executions slow down in 1988

Streetman only inmate killed so far

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — When the U.S. Supreme Court early this summer upheld the death sentence of convicted killer Donald Gene Franklin, capital punishment opponents feared the ruling would add to Texas' distinction as the nation's leader in executions.

So far that hasn't happened.

And now 1988 is shaping up as the most execution-free year for Texas since 1985, when three men — J.D. "Cowboy" Autry, Ronald Clark O'Bryan (the infamous "Candy Man," who poisoned his own child with Halloween candy) and Thomas Andy Barefoot — were put to death amid all the commotion that accompanied the then-relatively new procedure of lethal injection.

Only Robert Streetman this year has been belted to the gurney in the baby-blue death chamber at the Texas Department of Corrections Walls Unit, and even his death was controversial.

Defense attorneys contended they tried to halt the execution with last-minute appeals that either were ignored by or unknown to the state. The state argued all appeals were exhausted. Streetman himself vacillated between wanting to die and asking for relief.

Nationally, the execution situation is similar, with only eight convicts put to death so far this year, compared with 25 for all of 1987. Six of those 25 were in Texas. In 1986, when 18 convicts were executed nationally, 10 died in Texas.

Since the U.S. Supreme Court ruled the death penalty legal in 1976, 101 inmates have been put to death, 27 of them in Texas.

"It's kind of like everybody is saying: 'OK, let's wait a minute,'" says James Beathard, an inmate on the Texas death row.

"Texas has a great deal to do with it," Tanya Coke, research director for the NAACP Legal Defense Fund, says of the execution lull. "The courts heard major death penalty cases which challenge the constitutionality of the Texas law and essentially held them up."

Although the Supreme Court upheld Franklin's conviction and the Texas law, Franklin remains among the 277 men and three women who live on Texas' death row. But the attorney who heads the state's capital punishment efforts promises that Franklin, convicted in the notorious 1975 slaying of a San Antonio nurse, will run out of time later this year.

"I think you're probably going to see three or four by the end of the year," Assistant Attorney General Bob Walt predicts. "Franklin is an absolute certainty."

Nationwide, Walt notes that in the last year many court opinions in death penalty cases went against the states.

"There seems to be a little bit of fine-tuning in state statutes," he says.

About a half-dozen inmate names consistently have appeared throughout the year on the Texas Department of Correction's list of prisoners with execution dates. None, however, has come very close to death.

"We've been in touch with DA's (district attorneys) and have told them, 'Let's get it moving,'" Walt says. "We've had a situation where there have been some cases out of time. I think it will get up to snuff and probably will move a lot faster."

But death penalty opponents are shifting their emphasis to a new Texas case the Supreme Court has agreed to hear. In that matter, attorneys for Johnny Penry contend the convicted killer of a Livingston woman in 1979 should not be put to death because he is mentally retarded.

Arguments in the Penry case won't be delivered to the court until later this year with no immediate ruling likely.

"Franklin, although portrayed as a bad decision, was a good case," says Scott Howe, an attorney with the Capital Punishment Clinic at the University of Texas Law School. "People got a stay on the Franklin issue. We're hoping most people get a stay on Penry now."

On death row, inmates are just pleased the issue remains active in the courts.

"We're back eight months now when we were talking about Franklin," according to inmate Lester Bower. "Now we're talking about Penry and we have not even had a test case on it yet."

Of execution dates now pending in Texas, inmate Walter Bell's on Sept. 13 is considered the most serious. Bell was convicted of the 1974 slaying of a Port Arthur couple.

"He's on his second time through (the appeals process)," says Walt. "Historically, he has a greater chance" of being executed.

But Howe says questions raised in Bell's appeal are very good since they are similar to Penry's.

"He's mentally retarded," Howe says. "There's a question, if applied to Bell, whether the Texas statute is constitutional."

Those involved in capital punishment matters agree that regardless of which side of the issue they favor, election-year politics is really not a factor.

Racing schedule to lower revenues, Bullock says

AUSTIN (AP) — A schedule developed by the Texas Racing Commission staff for accepting racetrack license applications would lead to less-than-estimated racing revenue for the state in the next two years, according to Texas Comptroller Bob Bullock.

In a letter to commission Chairman Hilary Doran released Thursday, Bullock said, "As chief fiscal officer for the state of Texas, I am concerned the proposed 'Timeline' compounds the revenue problems already experienced as a result of the late start in getting racing under way."

Bullock is an ex officio voting member of the commission.

The racing revenue estimate was revised by Bullock on July 29 for the second time to show no racing income in fiscal 1988, $3.2 million in 1989 and $20.3 million in 1990.

"The commission's proposed schedule will yield state revenue of only an estimated $1.56 million in FY '89 with an associated cost to operate the commission estimated at $1.3 million — almost a break-even situation," Bullock said. "In FY '90, the commission's schedule would provide only some $7.44 million."

When the racing measure was approved, the estimate was that racing would raise $3.5 million in fiscal year 1987, $22 million in 1988 and $46.8 million in 1989, said Tony Proffitt, spokesman for Bullock.

In the letter, Bullock said the original estimate was based on assurances the commission would be appointed before Feb. 1, 1987. However, he said, Gov. Bill Clements did not make final appointments until March 1988.

Jay Rosser, deputy press secretary for Clements, said, "The governor believes that the comptroller may have been too optimistic in his earlier projections.

"The governor wants the commission to move at whatever speed is necessary to ensure pari-mutuel wagering in Texas is a squeaky-clean industry," Rosser said.

The schedule distributed at the commission's July 29 meeting in Lubbock would "put the highest revenue raisers at the end of the application process," Bullock said.

"The result not only delays construction, and the state revenue these tracks are expected to generate, but it also delays job creation and stimulation of local economies as well as increases in state sales taxes and local taxes," he said.

Nancy Fisher, deputy secretary for the commission, said the panel has not adopted the schedule. She said it was developed by the staff "for commissioners to consider."

The schedule sets out a staggered process for accepting and awarding track applications. Under it, the commission would accept applications from one part of the state for class 2 tracks in November. It would accept applications for class 1 tracks in Bexar County, class 2 tracks in a different part of the state and non-pari-mutual tracks in December.

Class 1 tracks, the largest, are provided for in Dallas-Fort Worth, Harris County and Bexar County. Class 2 and 3 tracks, which allow fewer racing days, are allowed anywhere in the state if approved locally by voters.

The first class 1 track license would be awarded in May 1989 under the time line developed by the staff. Licenses for class 1 tracks in Dallas-Fort Worth and Harris County would be awarded in June 1989.

Bullock also said, "as a matter of fairness," tracks in one part of the state should not be allowed to apply before tracks in another part of the state. He suggested the application process be "on a first-come, first-served basis."

The staff proposed the staggered application process in part to allow the commission to consider licensing smaller tracks initially, because applications for larger tracks are more complex, Ms. Fisher said.

In addition, she said, state law gives the commission 120 days to act on applications.

Ex-chancellor's daughter gets exclusive travel contract

KILLEEN (AP) — A Killeen travel agency owned by the daughter of former American Education Complex Chancellor Phillip R. Swartz won an exclusive contract to provide all travel services for the school shortly before Swartz resigned last month, the Houston Chronicle reported today.

Swartz reviewed and modified a list of requirements for proposals that went to his daughter and the owners of 13 other area travel agencies in May, AEC officials said.

Casa Blanca Tours and Travel Inc., owned by Swartz's daughter Kasey Morrarty, was one of three agencies that subsequently submitted a proposal and the only one that met all of the requirements, AEC contracts administrator Bill Beebe said.

Beebe said that after reviewing the proposals with an AEC board member, he selected Casa Blanca as the sole agency to arrange AEC's travel in a yearlong contract that began July 15. Casa Blanca previously did business with AEC, but never had a contract.

Some Killeen-area travel agents told the Chronicle they were discouraged from bidding by numerous requirements they believe assured that Ms. Morrarty got the lucrative contract.

The complex, which holds multi-million-dollar contracts to provide educational services for the U.S. military around the world, spends about $1 million annually on travel.

"I know this thing doesn't look good," Beebe said.

Ben Latham, a member of the Texas Higher Education Coordinating Board, said he was surprised to hear of the contract.

"I don't think it looks very good," Latham said. "It's one more negative aspect that reflects badly on the college. I don't know of any other community colleges that have that type of arrangement."

The coordinating board oversees the AEC, an educational consortium composed of the publicly funded Central Texas College and several related operating units.

"I can only surmise that it was cost effective," said AEC Acting Chancellor Jim Anderson of giving Casa Blanca the contract.

The Chronicle reported last September that Casa Blanca had gained the bulk of the complex's extensive travel business since Swartz's daughter purchased the agency in July 1986. Swartz was then president of the college and in April, became chancellor.

College officials defended the use of Casa Blanca, saying that personnel were free to use whatever travel agency they preferred.

A college memo to administrators last week, however, reminded them to use Casa Blanca and said the agency would arrange all travel, with the exception of trips taken between campus sites in Europe or the Far East.

Beebe said it is to the financial advantage of the complex to use Casa Blanca because the agency has agreed to begin giving the AEC a discount.

Beebe said Casa Blanca also has agreed to provide a 24-hour number for collect calls from AEC personnel overseas.

Ms. Morrarty, 29, refused to discuss the contract, saying she does not consider it public information.

Gisela Daley, operator of Aloha Travel in Killeen, said she received a 16-part questionnaire from the college in May and did not reply because she felt that some of the requirements were ridiculous.

"I looked at it and I laughed. In my eyes it was just made out to hand to one person," she said. "I had several calls from other agents and everybody laughed."

Travel business operators said they regarded the requirements of having a 24-hour hot line, an IBM-compatible microcomputer and voluminous record-keeping as ways to discourage other bids.

Odessa man indicted on heroin charges arrested

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — A 53-year-old south Odessa man, sought on two grand jury indictments charging delivery of heroin, was arrested early Thursday night on the indictments and a new charge of possession of heroin.

John "Sonny" Barrientes Jr., 609 Magnolia, was named in two sealed indictments handed down Aug. 15 by the Ector County Grand Jury. The indictments, alleging delivery of a controlled substance — heroin, were based on information gathered by members of the Permian Basin Drug Task Force.

Police spokesman Cpl. John McAhon said officers seeking Barrientes on the warrants issued in connection with the indictments searched him after locating him at the Flores Cafe, 612 Magnolia, and found "seven papers of heroin" at about 7:20 p.m. Thursday.

Barrientes was held overnight in the city jail in lieu of bonds totaling $30,000 set by 244th District Court Judge Joe Connally on the grand jury indictments and was scheduled to be arraigned late this morning in municipal court on the new charge of heroin possession.

Ector County Sheriffs Capt. Gene Kloss said today the indictments against Barrientes had remained sealed until Thursday morning to give grand juries in Midland and Andrews counties an opportunity to consider additional information gathered by the Drug Task Force.

According to Kloss, the apparent plan was to have officers in all three areas make simultaneous arrests on all indictments resulting from Drug Task Force investigations. The Midland and Andrews grand juries met Wednesday, he said.

Local club evaucated after fire

From Staff Reports

No injuries were reported but several patrons had to be evacuated from a local nightclub after supplies in a storage area caught fire Thursday, a fire official said.

Firefighters were called to the Bojangles Club, 3709 W. Wall Ave., just before midnight after a fire was discovered in an adjacent storage area.

Seven persons in the club were escorted out as a precaution, Assistant Fire Marshal Lon Dominguez said.

Heavy damage was reported to the storage area, with smoke damage reported throughout the club, reports said.

Investigators are looking for the cause of the blaze, which was believed to be accidental, Dominguez said.

People still cross border with small amounts of drugs

BROWNSVILLE (AP) — A federal prosecutor said he is surprised people keep trying to enter the country with small amounts of illegal drugs, despite a policy that allows the government to seize boats, vehicles and airplanes containing even traces of controlled substances.

"It's absolutely amazing to me that, knowing Customs inspectors all along the border are cracking down with zero tolerance in mind and seizing vehicles, and knowing that at the very minimum there will be administrative fines involved, that people continue to come across the bridge with small amounts of controlled substances," said Christopher Milner, assistant U.S. attorney in Brownsville.

The zero tolerance policy was initiated March 21 by U.S. Customs officials targeting individual drug users traveling with small amounts. The policy allows federal agents and Coast Guard officers to seize vehicles, boats and aircraft containing any detectable amount of drugs.

Milner this week filed 26 misdemeanor drug charges brought under the zero tolerance policy.

Amounts of controlled substances cited in the complaints ranged from 0.1 gram of marijuana or 0.1 gram of cocaine to 14.6 grams (about one-half ounce) of marijuana. There are 28 grams in one ounce.

The misdemeanor charges filed this week are classified as simple drug possession and carry a maximum penalty of one year in jail and a $100,000 fine for a first offender.

Customs agents are on special alert at international bridges and coastal ports.

Charles Conroy, Customs spokesman in Houston, said agents made 385 zero tolerance seizures through June in the Laredo district, which runs along the border from Del Rio to Brownsville.

The seizures included 4.6 pounds of marijuana; 836 dangerous pills or capsules; 140 items of drug paraphernalia; $255,636 in undeclared currency; and 263 vehicles, valued at $1,064,947.

Conroy said 97 suspects were arrested in the district under the policy since it began.

"It (zero tolerance) is successful in that it's accomplished its purpose in focusing attention on the individual violator," Conroy told The Brownsville Herald. "These people are the ones that cause the drug problem."

Texas Monthly writer hospitalized

AUSTIN (AP) — Writer Gary Cartwright, 54, was listed in serious condition Friday at Brackenridge Hospital after suffering a heart attack, said a hospital employee.

Cartwright, a contributor to Texas Monthly since the magazine began publication in 1973, is in the coronary care unit, said a hospital employee who asked that her name not be used.

He was taken to the hospital from his West Austin home Wednesday.

Numerous Texas Monthly cover stories were written by Cartwright, including the recent "Shearn Moody: The Sleaziest Man in Texas."

In 1979, Cartwright wrote "Blood Will Tell," the story of the Cullen Davis murder trial. His other books include "Confessions of a Washed-Up Sports Writer," published in 1982, and "Dirty Dealing," published in 1984.

Cartwright is on leave from Texas Monthly while writing a narrative history of Galveston, scheduled to be published next month. He also has written for Harper's, Life and Esquire magazines.

Most of state showing poor crops, no signs of letting up

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — Texas continues to scorch in a drought that shows no signs of letting up any time soon, says Dr. Zerle L. Carpenter, director of the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

Scattered rains during the past week have helped a little in the Panhandle, Northeast, East and Southeast Texas, and a few counties in the coastal bend, but the state as a whole is in sorry shape.

Carpenter said such major cash crops as cotton, corn and sorghum run the gamut from excellent in irrigated areas to very poor in dryland areas.

Carpenter said unusually high temperatures are causing cotton fruit shedding in many regions. Ranges and pastures are deteriorating rapidly in most of the state, and short hay supplies almost everywhere are worrying livestock producers about availability this fall and winter.

Livestock market prices, beef cattle in particular, are somehow holding steady to higher despite forced selling in some areas, the Extension director said. Calves are going at lighter weights but bringing good prices.

Much of the Panhandle cotton crop is shedding fruit because of hot, dry weather, Carpenter said. In the Rolling Plains, late sorghum and peanuts are stressing, and some cattlemen are obliged to haul water.

Hay supplies continue short in northeastern counties, he said, and a mostly poor corn crop nears completion. The pecan nut set, however, is abundant.

Pastures are declining in the San Angelo country and cotton is struggling under severe moisture stress and weevil onslaughts. Central Texas reports generally good yields of corn and sorghum but range and pasture forage is going down fast.

Hay supplies are scarce in East Texas and there is continued active marketing of cows, Carpenter said. The pecan outlook is only fair because of drought. Broiler growers worry about effects of high temperatures.

West and southwest of San Antonio, possibly the state's driest region for more than a year, no relief is in sight. Dryland crops produced very little or were abandoned, but irrigated fields of corn and cotton are doing well.

Carpenter said none of the 14 counties reporting from the coastal bend south and southeast of San Antonio has adequate soil moisture. Some stockmen are signing up on the government emergency feed program. Stock tanks are low or muddy and maintenance feeding is active. More cattle are going to market but prices are steady.

Extension Service directors reported the following specific crop and livestock conditions:

PANHANDLE: Recent rains have helped but pastures and cotton fields could use a general rain. Corn still looks good, sorghum is 75 percent headed but cotton is shedding fruit due to dry weather and high temperatures. Cattle remain in good shape. Most of the wheat land is ready for fall seeding.

SOUTH PLAINS: Hay is in adequate supply. Cotton is progressing but dryland fields need rain. Sorghum is coloring, corn is more than half dented and soybeans are growing well. Ranges and pastures are drying and could use rain.

ROLLING PLAINS: Dry, hot conditions are pressuring a struggling cotton crop, late-planted sorghum and native pastures. Livestock are holding up fairly well but calves are being sold at lighter weights and good prices. Some Knox County cattlemen are hauling water. Stonewall County peanuts need rain badly.

NORTH CENTRAL: Corn is excellent to poor and mostly harvested, cotton is excellent to poor and setting bolls, sorghum is excellent to fair and 90 to 100 percent harvested. Pastures need rain but cattle are holding condition well and bringing favorable prices. The drought has dimmed pecan prospects.

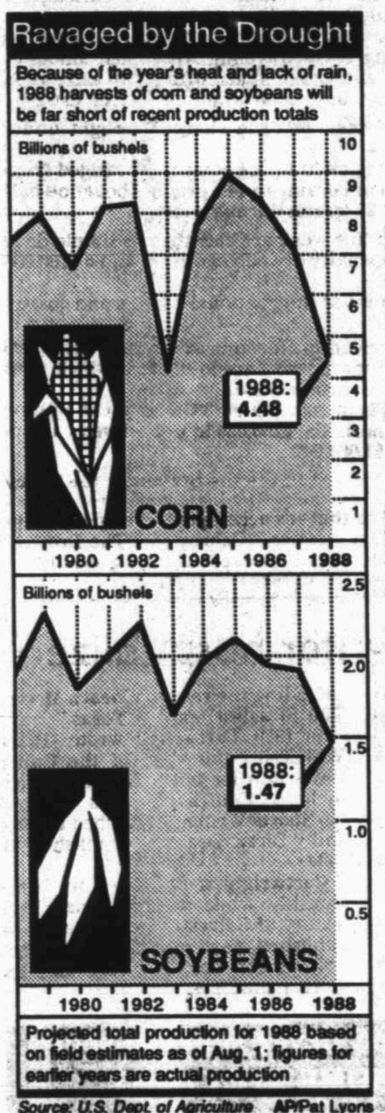

NORTHEAST: Soil moisture and hay supplies are short. Corn yields are generally low, cotton is normal and sorghum is fair. Pastures remain short, although spotty rains have helped. Cattle are in good condition. The outlook is for an abundant pecan crop.

FAR WEST: Hay supplies are short to adequate. Cotton is developing normally, and livestock are staying in good shape on adequate ranges and pastures. Late cantaloupes, green peppers and tomatoes are being harvested.

WEST CENTRAL: Scarce rain and scorching temperatures are stressing ranges and cotton. Fair to good sorghum yields are expected, however. Weevils are active in cotton. Livestock are in good condition despite the drought.

CENTRAL: Dryland peanuts need moisture, and ranges and pastures are deteriorating rapidly. Cotton harvest prospects depend on insect damage, mostly boll weevils. Limited planting of fall small grains has begun. Yields are generally good for corn and sorghum harvests, now complete.

EAST: Livestock producers are worrying about hay scarcity for winter feeding. Cattle range from good to fair, and there is continued heavy marketing. Drought is blamed for increased pecan nutlet drop. High humidity and temperatures are affecting commercial broiler production.

Iowa farmers to begin Idaho hay harvest

MOSCOW, Idaho (AP) — Despite a bounty of good will and aid found here, drought-afflicted Iowa farmers are worried that the Idaho hay they are cutting for hungry livestock back home won't be enough to make it through winter.

"A lot of us guys are just plain out of hay," said Albia, Iowa, dairyman Don Tibbals, one of the farmers who were to begin cutting today. "But when things are as bad as they are back home, every little bit helps."

The 64 men, women and teenagers who arrived late Tuesday after a 40-hour, 1,600-mile bus trip scouted fields Wednesday where they would begin harvesting hay near Deary, about 30 miles northeast of Moscow.

The farmers, from south and central Iowa, came to the Palouse region of northern Idaho to cut hay on lands set aside for a government erosion-control program.

Conservation Reserve Program land is normally not farmed, but the U.S. Department of Agriculture has released it for harvest by drought-afflicted farmers, said Mike Tracy, spokesman for the Idaho Farm Bureau, which is coordinating the hay project with the Iowa Farm Bureau.

At a dinner Wednesday night, the Iowans were assigned to fields and machinery. Plans were to work from field to field — like an assembly line — until hay is harvested from the 4,500 acres available.

The harvest could take 10 days, but cutting and bailing must be finished by Aug. 31, a deadline set by the Agriculture Department.

Depending on field conditions, the program was expected to produce 1,500 tons to 5,000 tons of hay, which will be shipped without charge to Iowa by the Burlington Northern Railroad.

The Iowans said that where usually there are three to four cuttings of hay a season, this year there was one poor harvest.

Number of farmworkers down

WASHINGTON (AP) — The number of workers employed by farmers this summer declined slightly from a year ago, but their wages are up, according to a quarterly survey by the Agriculture Department.

The survey taken last month indicated 1.2 million hired workers were employed by farmers, compared with 1.27 million a year earlier.

Those did not include 303,000 "agricultural service" workers provided by crew chiefs and labor contractors. A year ago 258,000 were counted.

"Temperatures soared to over 100 degrees throughout much of the nation during the survey week of July 10-16," the report said Friday.

"Winter wheat harvest was 82 percent complete by the week's end, 10 points ahead of the five-year average," the report said.

Average pay for all workers hired directly by farmers was $4.90 per hour, up 12 cents per hour from a year earlier, the report showed.

Soybean plants altered to prevent disease

NEW YORK (AP) — Researchers say they've inserted non-soybean genes into soybean plants, a first step toward helping the nation's No. 2 crop better resist disease, insect and herbicides and improve its nutrition value.

Some of the altered plants also passed on the new genes to some progeny, the research teams from Monsanto Co. and Agracetus reported in the Augus issue of the journal Biotechnology.

Altered soybean plants also have been produced at Iowa State University and Pioneer Hybrid International, Walter Fehr, soybean breeder and biotechnology coordinator at Iowa State, said in a telephone interview.

Monsanto researchers in St. Louis used bacteria called Agrobacterium to ferry foreign genes into soybean tissue cut from freshly germinated seeds. About 6 percent of the resulting plants took up functioning genes.

Agracetus scientists in Middleton, Wis., inserted genes into immature soybean tissue with essentially a scientific shotgun, which "shot" tiny gold particles coated with bacterial genes. About 2 percent of the resulting shoots showed evidence that the inserted genetic material was active.

The transferred genes were generally chosen because they were easy to monitor, although one gene in the Monsanto experiment confers resistance to a herbicide ingredient. Fehr said each gene scientists plan to insert for crop improvement will have to be evaluated for its effectiveness in soybeans.

The shotgun method may let researchers avoid complicated systems for regenerating plants from altered tissue and should work with all soy varieties — maybe even all plants, CIBA-Geigy researchers Michael Carnes and Martha Wright said in a Biotechnology editorial. The bacterial approach may be limited by the number of strains that can be infected, they wrote.

Soybeans are used to make ingredients in margarine, cooking oils, salad dressings and animal feed. The crop's value to American farmers ranks second to corn, with this year's harvest projected at $13.2 billion, according to the American Soybean Association.

Conservation program signup extended

Texas producers will have more time to consider effects of the drought because the signup period for the Conservation Reserve Program has been extended until Wednesday by the U.S. Department of Agriculture .

This should help producers who need more time to analyze the drought's impact.

Cropland which has been hayed in counties approved for drought relief is eligible during this signup for the CRP for the 1988 crop year, provided the land meets other program requirements.

Land deisgnated as Acreage Conservation Reserve and Conservation Use for the 1988 program year is not eligible for CRP.

Under CRP, producers receive annual payments to keep highly erodible land out of production and planted with a protective cover which can include trees. Besides the annual rental payments, CRP participants also receive up to 50 percent of the cost of establishing vegetative cover.

Filter strips, or cropland areas 66 to 99 feet wide with a permanent cover and located next to streams, lakes or estuaries, will be eligible for CRP in the extended signup even if the land does not meet the soil erosion criteria.

This provision was introduced in the sixth signup peiord last February to allow farmers to use CRP enrollment as a cost-effective option to control nonpoint source pollution.

If trees are to be planted, the land needs only ⅓ of its total area designated as "predominantly highly erodible" to be eligible for CRP. Producers are encouraged to plant additional cover to protect wildlife and serve as windbreaks.

For specifi details, producers should contact the local Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation and Soil Conservation Service offices.

Black actors no longer confined to 'street types' in TV roles

By FELIX GUTIERREZ

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — More blacks are appearing on prime-time television shows, and not just in stereotypical roles as cute kids, domestic workers, criminals and jive-talking comedians, according to industry researchers and observers.

"There has been an improvement in the employment of black performers and the range of character portrayals has improved," said Rodney Mitchell, affirmative action administrator for the Screen Actors Guild. "No longer are they confined to street types, non-professionals, crime victims and crime perpetrators."

Some credit the success of "The Cosby Show" for opening the doors to more positive black portrayals. A recent Howard University study of 58 black characters in 26 network shows last season found that, instead of the lower class roles that dominated the 1970s, "blacks on television are generally portrayed as belonging to middle and upper classes."

Women played nearly half of the black roles, compared to previous years when men greatly outnumbered them, the Howard researchers reported. The study also noted more middle-age and elderly black characters, fewer obese women and more characters portrayed as competent.

Some things haven't changed, the Howard scholars found. Blacks were still more likely to be cast in situation comedies than dramas and were most often supporting or minor characters. More than half appeared in shows with black themes, such as "Amen," "Cosby," "227" and "A Different World."

"Black characters continue to be cast primarily in all-black settings," wrote Howard communication researchers Carolyn Stroman, Bishetta Merritt and Paula Matabane. "Yet there is a notable difference in that these all-black settings tend to be upscale middle class rather than low income."

A 1987 study by the Center for Media and Public Affairs in Washington, D.C., found that the number of black characters on TV rose slowly from 1955 to 1965, when only one in 20 was black, and more rapidly since 1975, when one character in 11 has been black. Over the 31 years studied, blacks played 6 percent of all roles.

"The civil rights movement...opened up attitudes," said Dan Amundson, study co-author. "White audiences will watch black performers in a wide range of roles, based on the quality of the show, rather than the racial question."

SAG's Mitchell credits union affirmative action pressures, advocacy by minority rights groups and the success of black-themed shows for the increasing number of roles. And new shows such as "Frank's Place" and "In the Heat of the Night" provided dramatic parts for blacks last season, he said.

Black viewers have become more important in the 1980s as overall network audiences dropped in competition with VCRs and cable. But Mitchell said he had never heard industry officials say they were improving black roles to attract more black viewers.

More blacks watch television than do other racial groupings, according to Nielsen audience data. A recent Nielsen viewing analysis reported that television usage averaged 10.6 hours per day in black households, versus 7.3 hours daily in all other homes.

With just 11 percent of U.S. television homes headed by blacks, viewing patterns would have to change markedly to directly affect program portrayals, said CBS television research Vice President Arnold Becker.

Becker, instead of attributing gains in black roles to changing television economics, said white Americans were more receptive to mainstream black characters.

"The attitude of the world toward blacks has changed," he said.

Filmgoers feel 'Betrayed' by early ads

By JOHN HORN

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — It's one thing getting filmgoers to watch the make-believe violence of a "Nightmare on Elm Street." It's another luring them to witness a true-to-life racial lynching that mirrors the sickness of their society.

Yet that's the challenge facing the makers of the explosive movie "Betrayed," which opens in theaters across the country today but has already suffered one advertising snafu that left preview audiences steaming.

Filled with unbridled bigotry and an all-too-real racial murder, the film stands as a study in how — and how not — to market an earthshaker.

"This movie is enormously difficult," says Gordon Weaver, who is supervising the advertising campaign. "This is a very tough, tough film."

What makes "Betrayed," directed by Costa-Gavras, a hard sell is its explicit depiction of U.S. white supremacists — a topic audiences might want to avoid. So producer United Artists looked for another marketing hook within the movie.

Cut to Debra Winger and Tom Berenger, the film's stars. For United Artists, the popular pair made for a natural advertising angle. Thus, in the first "Betrayed" posters, or "one sheets" as they are called, Winger and Berenger were shown embracing.

From the looks of the poster, "Betrayed" appeared to be a steamy little film, perhaps an update of "Jagged Edge," which was, in fact, written by "Betrayed" author Joe Eszterhas.

But preview audiences expecting "Betrayed" to resemble an adventure-packed pulp romance were startled to see a band of hard-working Midwestern farmers who lead a double life as racist killers.

The white supremacists murder a talk-show host reminiscent of Denver radio personality Alan Berg, who was gunned down in 1985 by members of The Order. They hunt down and lynch a black youth and denounce homosexuals, Jews and various ethnic groups.

Debra Winger and Tom Berenger

In more than one instance, preview audience members spontaneously erupted in anger, either walking out or speaking out against the film while it was still on screen. Said one woman at a Century City screening: "All white people are not like that!"

The time was ripe, it seemed, for a new advertising campaign — the film's future hung in the balance.

"What we found out was that people didn't know how to react to this film," said Brenda Farrier, who with Weaver was called in to consult on the $6 million advertising campaign.

"We had to help the audience along and say, 'It is going to be an upsetting film. It is not going to be a musical,'" Farrier said. The decision was ironic: If the movie were to be popular, United Artists was saying, people had to be ready to hate what they saw.

"Powerful films do cause people to say, 'I don't want to see this...It makes me uncomfortable.' That's the risk that you run," said Tony Thomopoulos, chairman and chief executive officer of United Artists Pictures.

Costa-Gavras, a French director, has made a career specializing in disturbing films such as "Missing," "State of Siege" and "Z."

"When we first started screening the film for people," Thomopoulos said, "we found out that if people were not prepared for what they were going to see, their reaction was so shocked that they weren't able to digest it all, and they missed a great deal of the film. Now we are taking this approach of making people aware."

Among the first moves that Farrier and Weaver made was dropping the sexually tinged poster, which was to have been used as a newspaper advertisement.

The poster was replaced with an unusual, unillustrated full-page ad that ran in newspapers in Los Angeles, New York and Chicago — but in the hard-news, not entertainment sections.

The movie, the ad said, is "a profoundly disturbing and often shocking motion picture portrait of a hidden part of contemporary America. It will anger you. It will upset you."

A new television ad, which began the first week of August, was just as blunt: "It will change the way you think...forever."

Soon, United Artists introduced a television commercial built around interviews with average-looking moviegoers leaving screenings. Said one: "The movie was terrifying." Said another: "It will kick you in the rear end."

After that ad ran, United Artists finally began running commercials that addressed the entire storyline, and Winger and Berenger were finally revealed to be lovers.

While reviews and box-office receipts will ultimately prove whether "Betrayed" is an interesting movie, United Artists has, at least, set the stage.

Said Weaver: "All we can do now is wait."

'Graduate' author gave up good life for hard times

WILLIAMSTOWN, Mass. (AP) — His 1962 novel "The Graduate" became a smash-hit movie evoking the discontent of a generation fed up with materialism. Today, however, Charles Webb finds himself looking for a handout.

"The things he stands for and believes in are principles he can't live by any longer," said Webb's ex-wife Fred, who has accompanied him through two itinerant decades that have left the couple virtually homeless.

Webb, 49, says his abhorrence of material things led him to give away two houses during the good times. He says he is nearly destitute, living out of a van on a few thousand dollars a year.

"It's hard to make anybody believe the author of 'The Graduate' needs money," he said.

Webb said hard times have driven him and his 48-year-old ex-wife out of the southern California campground where they lived for the past decade to the Massachusetts town where Webb went to college 30 years ago.

He came East, he said, in hopes of finding a publisher for his latest project, a compilation of writings on prejudice.

His plight, however, has taken him to the welfare office in North Adams, which rejected him because he has no permanent address.

The novelist, whose hero in "The Graduate," Benjamin Braddock, struck a chord among young readers with his post-graduate misery at his parents' suburban home, has lived until now according to what friends consider impossibly high and even self-destructive standards.

"If he's hard up for dough, it's obviously due to...his inclination toward divestiture," said Eric Davis, who graduated with Webb from Williams College in 1961 and teaches at the private Commonwealth School in Boston.

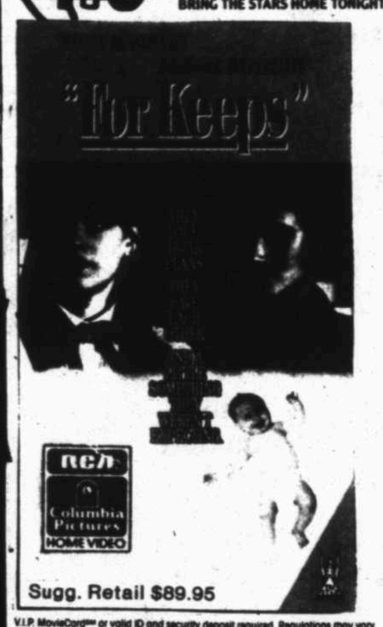

He said the couple's tendency to rid themselves of property explains why they gave their Hollywood house to a real estate agent in the 1960s and a home to the Massachusetts Audubon Society in 1970, when, Webb said, he felt the need for "getting free of things."

After the Webbs' marriage in 1962 in Fred's posh hometown of Lakeville, Conn., they sold their wedding gifts at a yard sale, many of them to the guests who had given them.

DEAR ABBY

Sleepwalker's dream is recruiter's nightmare

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I've been in the U.S. Navy for 13 years. Last year I was a Navy recruiter. My brother's son was considering joining the Navy when he graduated from high school last year. It is a well-known fact in our family that this nephew is a sleepwalker, so I told my brother and his wife that their son was not enlistment-eligible. His mom asked me to "overlook" the fact that her son was a sleepwalker, and I told her there was no way I would jeopardize my Navy career and her son's life by overlooking something like that.

If my sleepwalking nephew were to join the Navy without acknowledging that he was a sleepwalker, he could very well sleepwalk right over the side of his ship at sea, or if he were assigned to an aircraft carrier, he could walk into a piece of machinery and get killed.

Furthermore, if it became known that his recruiter knew of his condition and suppressed it, the recruiter could be court-martialed.

My nephew was all for keeping his sleepwalking a secret, but I would have no part of it, so he's not in the Navy. My conscience is clear and I know I did the right thing, but my family has been very cool to me and my wife, and we feel terrible about this.

Now I hear that this sleepwalking nephew wants to enlist in the Air Force. Is there anything I should do? — TRUE TO THE NAVY

DEAR TRUE: If your nephew is man enough to defend his country, he should be man enough to speak for himself. Talk with him, man-to-man, and impress upon him the importance of being 100 percent truthful about his sleepwalking. Tell him that if he either lies or knowingly withholds this information on his application or during his physical, he could be liable for a stiff fine and possibly a prison term.

DEAR ABBY: I never thought I'd be writing to you for advice at my age, but I've read your column for years, and have never seen a problem like mine. I need an answer.

What do you tell a bride who calls you after the wedding to tell you that she didn't like the wedding gift you gave her, and she'd like to have the sales slip so she can return it for something else?

Mind you, Abby, the gift was not a duplicate; she just didn't like it.

I have the sales slip, but I don't want to give it to her. I think such rudeness deserves to be ignored.

How should I handle this? — DISGUSTED SENIOR CITIZEN

DEAR DISGUSTED: Tell her the gift is hers to do with what she chooses, but you wouldn't feel comfortable giving her the sales slip, and let it go at that.

CONFIDENTIAL TO DISGRACED IN CHARLOTTE, N.C.: You cannot be disgraced by anyone but yourself, so hold your head high. Your son disgraced only himself.

The facts about drugs, AIDS, how to prevent unwanted pregnancy are all in Abby's new, expanded booklet, "What Every Teen Should Know." To order, send your name and address, plus check or money order for $3.50 ($4 in Canada) to: Dear Abby's Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

FAMILY MATTERS

Job woes make optimism shaky

By JIM MAY

May

DEAR FAMILY: When is enough enough? I have tried to be optimistic throughout the oil bust. I have tried to be very supportive of my husband as he lost one job and worked so very hard to find another. I have tried to be supportive of him in his new job even though we had to adjust our way of living downward to his new income. Whenever he came home "down" about his job and himself, I tried to cheer him up. I really did believe that things were getting better.

What am I supposed to do now with all the office closings going on because of the oil prices? He is very worried that he is going to lose his job again. He thinks that he is too old to be transferred.

What can I do that I haven't already done? I am ready to join him, maybe things really are going to be as bad as we have feared. I just don't have anything to give anymore. DEPRESSED

DEAR DEPRESSED: You and your husband have been through a lot together, working hard to face the difficulties and bring your family through the rough times.

In facing the possibility of new troubles, remember these facts:

- You have survived severe struggles. While that doesn't make such struggles easy, it does mean your coping skills have worked.
- The depression that you both feel is normal — no one would want to go through the experience again.
- One of the most difficult stages of unemployment is anticipation. Research shows anticipated job loss is more stressful than the unemployment itself.

You and your husband should create a contingency plan to use if he does lose his job. The plan should include as many alternatives as possible. Richard Bolles' book, "What Color is Your Parachute?" may be helpful.

After you have discussed possible alternatives, determine which of them are economically feasible. Then rank them in terms of desirability — and be honest. Don't agree to an alternative just because you think it's what your husband wants — he may be doing the same thing.

Having a plan can help ease the fear. Many people also have said that they felt better about economic tragedy when they believed God was in control of their lives. I believe that too. God will provide. Use this as an opportunity to discover God's plan for you and your family. It may surprise you!

DEAR FAMILY: My father drinks a lot and I am embarrassed to have my friends over. One of my friends has had me over to eat three times and I want to invite her over to my house, but I am afraid of what my father might be like. My mother said to write to you. What can I do? AFRAID

DEAR AFRAID: Talk to your mother about alternatives, like taking your friend out for a hamburger or pizza, or having your friend visit when your father is out of town. Perhaps you and your mother can prepare a meal for you and your friend, and then your mother can take your father out for the evening.

If all these suggestions sound as if they are avoiding your father's alcoholism, they are. You can't "fix" your father's problem with alcohol.

I urge you to attend an Alateen meeting. You are not alone in your struggle. Lots of other kids are going through what you are. Call 682-4721 for more information.

'Why Things Are' raises other questions

By DAVID GRIMES
New York Times News Service

The Miami Herald's magazine ran an interesting and amusing article recently on "Why Things Are."

The article answered a wide range of questions, such as Why American Cars Got So Bad, Why Women Are More Civilized Than Men and Why Credit Cards Have So Many Numbers.

The story was good, as far as it went. If the magazine does another "Why Things Are" article, I would like them to answer some of the questions that have been bothering me for a long time, such as:

- Why is it that every magazine you pick up nowadays is stuffed with approximately 439 subscription cards and other worthless junk that fall on the floor, interfere with your reading and otherwise infuriate you so much that you throw the magazine down in disgust and end up watching "I Love Lucy" reruns instead, which, as we all know, will eventually cause you to go insane and die?
- Why does Michael Dukakis jog in street shoes?
- Why does keeping score in tennis have to be so complicated?
- Why do Southerners get so rhapsodic about grits?
- Why don't blue pants go with brown shoes?
- Why do manufacturers make car radios so complicated that you couldn't operate them in your living room with the instruction manual spread out in front of you let alone in a speeding automobile during rush hour while trying to eat an Egg McMuffin with one hand and mop up the hot coffee you spilled on your lap with the other?

AT WIT'S END

Will today's Yuppies be tomorrow's Yeepies?

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

In a recent column I challenged people to come up with a cute name for today's Yuppies, who by the year 2010 will be well on their way to becoming the largest elderly population ever to live in America.

The response was underwhelming. Seven lousy letters.

Patrick O'Driscoll, who did a cover story on the aging of America in USA Today, referred to them as Elder-Boomers. A writer from Plainview, Texas, said columnist Harry Rosenthal called them MUPPIES: Mature Upscale Post-Professionals.

A woman in Elko, Nev., said that since they're the largest group ever, why not call them Baby Boom-Booms. Another suggestion came from a man in Los Angeles who said, "Why not call them Geriuppies?" And three readers sent word that a University of Florida gerontologist, Stephen Golant, labeled them YEEPIES: Youthful, Energetic, Elderly People Involved in Everything.

You don't seem to understand, people; this is important. Do you seriously want to go to the dog races and hear over the loudspeaker, "Will the person who lost his Yeepie pass please reclaim it at the information booth"?

My mother hates all those labels. For a while I called her a Love Boater because she was the only one who could name the cast every week.

I made it an issue only because I don't know a person over 55 today who does not blanch when he or she is referred to as a senior citizen. Golden-Ager is worse. Second 50s is too descriptive.

Let's apply ourselves here. Tomorrow's elderly are going to be well-educated, influential leaders (one of the Yuppies told me that). They're going to have a lot of political clout because there will be close to 30 million of them. They'll have robots to do their chores and take care of them if they become incapacitated. Thanks to cosmetic surgery and better eating habits, they'll look half their age. They're too sophisticated to go for Hormone Bashers or Wrinkle Buster. How about Seventysomethings?

Life, for lefties, is frustrating

By VERNE PALMER
Copley News Service

It isn't easy being green ...

On the other hand — no pun intended — it just may be easier than being left-handed.

Although the attitude toward southpaws has improved markedly since the days when left-handedness was considered a sign of the devil — "At least they don't burn us at the stake anymore," observes Maudette Bell, executive director of the Palos Verdes (Calif.) Art Center — frustrations still abound.

Lefties are condemned at birth to living in a mirror-image world. Handles all turn the wrong way, watches wind the wrong way, bladed instruments cut the wrong way, notebooks open the wrong way, ladles pour the wrong way, and knobs, dials and buttons are all positioned on the wrong side of practically everything.

"People have no idea how hard it is for left-handers to live in a right-handed world," summed up a schoolteacher. Unless they are one of the estimated 30 million left-handers in the United States.

The truth of the matter is that the rest of the world has never quite figured out what to think about left-handers.

OVER THE ages, lefties have variously been believed to be in league with the devil, unclean, clumsy, dull-witted, bright, creative, emotionally independent and non-conformist.

The reason why 10 percent to 15 percent of the populace consistently turns up left-handed is equally unclear.

Theories have ranged from heredity and brain damage to high testosterone levels and position of the fetus in the womb.

History offers unequivocal testimony as to their existence, however. Julius Caesar was left-handed, as were Ramses II, Alexander the Great and Benjamin Franklin.

Among the living, southpaws can claim kinship to George Bush, Queen Elizabeth II, Beatles Paul McCartney and Ringo Starr, and Goldie Hawn, among others.

Fairness would dictate, of course, that they also acknowledge kinship to Jack the Ripper, John Dillinger and the Boston Strangler — left-handers all.

Handedness is determined somewhere between the ages of 3 and 6, but the degree of people's dextral preference varies widely.

There are those southpaws who are not only left-handed but left-footed and who would, given the chance, both read and write from right to left. At the other end of the spectrum are the ambidextrous — those equally at ease using either hand.

The litmus test for determing handedness is the appendage chosen to write with; however, Gerald Ford flummoxed the experts by writing left-handed when seated but right-handed when standing.

MOST SOUTHPAWS write and eat left-handed but many use their right hands when playing sports. That may be more a matter of training than inclination, however.

"What 4-year-old whose dad is teaching him how to bat is going to say, 'Hey, I can't do it that way; I'm left-handed'?" asks Lisa Staber, 34, the manager at Fry's Left Handes shop at Ports O' Call Village in San Pedro, Calif.

Training can override natural inclination both ways, however. Left-hander Patrick Dunne, a 25-year-old sportswriter, uses his left hand for sports but writes and eats right-handed — thanks to his years in Boston parochial schools.

"I eat and write right-handed because of the nuns," he says flatly. "If I tried to use my left hand, they would hit me with a ruler and say, 'Don't do that, that's the devil's handiwork.'"

"Fortunately you don't hear too many horror stories about school kids having their left hands tied behind their backs or being slapped with a ruler anymore," says Kim Kippers, an executive assistant with Left-hander's International, a 14,000-member organization based in Topeka, Kan.

"The reason is education. By now people are pretty well aware of the consequences of forcing a child to switch his natural handedness," she says. "It can cause problems ranging from speech impediments to migraine headaches."

BEING FREE to choose doesn't eliminate the frustration of being a left-hander in a world whose orientation is single-mindedly right, though. That frustration can range from minor irritation to heartache.

Mayor Edward Vincent, 54, of Inglewood, Calif., recalls being raised in a family in which there was no money for buying baseball mitts. Not being able to borrow from kids who did have them because he was left-handed was a tremendous disadvantage, he says.

His left-handedness proved a problem later in life as well. "When I went into the Army, the rifles we used ejected shells to the right. That was all right for a right-hander, but they ejected into my face — it took some adjusting to," he says.

Bell, the Palos Verdes Art Center director, says that her biggest frustration was always having to use tools made for right-handers, always having to adapt things to her use and always being told she wasn't using something properly.

"But I've never seen it as a huge handicap," she says. "You won't find me on the analyst's couch saying, 'It all started with my being left-handed.'"

Thanks to the lefty liberation of the early '70s and the formation of such groups as Left-handers International, the League of Left Handers and Southpaws International, there is a great deal more interest in and attention being paid to left-handers these days. There are also a lot more products being geared to their needs.

Left-handed scissors are the biggest sellers, store manager Staber says, but notebooks with the spiral binding on the right and smudge-proof pens and pencils rate highest with students.

"We'll start getting a run on these pretty soon," Staber says. A lot of parents buy them for kids starting school so their teachers know right off he's a left-hander.

"A lot of right-handers come in the store out of curiosity. They've never really realized what a problem left-handers have in a right-handed world — that anything is different for them.

"I have them try to cut a piece of paper with a pair of left-handed scissors," she says. "They can't do it. The handle doesn't fit right, the blade's on the wrong side, and they can't see to follow the line because the blade covers it up. It's a perfect demonstration of what left-handers go through all the time."

While it's true that the dominance of right-handers can cause left-handers problems, it's also true that left-handers can, on occasion, return the favor.

When right-hander Gary Cooper filmed the baseball film classic "Pride of the Yankees," all his baseball scenes had to be photographed in a mirror — the movie traced the life of legendary lefty Lou Gehrig.

Father is part of past, present

By ANNA QUINDLEN
New York Times News Service

Sometimes the holes say as much about you as the fabric.

Over the years I've written half a dozen essays about my husband, too many to count about my children, a handful about my mother and one about my grandmother on the occasion of her death.

I've never written one entirely about my father.

There are lots of reasons for that, and the most important one may be, oddly enough, that my father is very much alive. It's impossible to imagine him any other way.

He is not cut out to be a wraith, a memory, a dream of life. He has a personality, which, couched in culinary terms, would be something like clam chowder — the kind with the tomatoes, not the cream, the kind that seems to have odd little bits of everything thrown together, with a good deal of pepper.

His most powerful character traits are a curious mind, an indefatigable sense of humor and a deep and abiding sentimentality beneath a veneer of brusqueness, rather like a mussel in its shell.

I suppose he's the kind of guy you either love or hate. Being his eldest child, I had no choice in the matter. I've done both.

It's worth mentioning that we are very, very much alike, and that I feel, correctly I believe, that a great deal of what I am today is because of what I thought he expected me to be.

It doesn't escape my notice that the more I am able to like and accept myself, the more willing I have been to like and accept him.

BUT MY father has suffered most by comparison with my mother, who is not alive and has not been for many, many years.

I don't believe enough has been written about the enormous burden shouldered by the remaining parent, not only in terms of duties and responsibilities, but also in terms of a strange kind of blame and comparison.

It's a standing joke between my husband and me that if he says something mildly critical about my mother — say, "You know, your mother was not the most perfect woman in the world" — he will be struck by lightning. I suppose that's the way it goes.

My mother was a decent person who died horribly, and very young, of cancer, and so her children have canonized her. St. Prudence of the veal parmigiana. But my father has remained earthbound. No danger of being struck by lightning if we criticize him.

The reality is that in most ways my mother was a very ordinary woman. (Hear the thunder?) Her most signal character trait was that she was genuinely nice, which is rare, I admit, but not extraordinary.

My father, on the other hand, is not a bit ordinary. He is eccentric and smart. But he was left behind.

In the usual way of these things, my mother was the force that held the family together. She also had custody of most of our childhood secrets. And so, over the years, our family has fallen apart.

And, over the years, we have alternated between needing to tell my father things he was never meant to know, about transgressions that were hidden from him and accidents he was supposed to be spared, and asking him questions to which he has no answers.

Now, knowing the tricks of memory, I suspect that those things might have slipped my mother's mind, too. But that is not how this arrangement has been set up.

WE HAVE lost the past because we have lost her, and he is an unsatisfactory custodian. The result is an unfair fight.

Usually, children grow up with the expectation that they will have two more-or-less equally flawed parents. That is disturbed when one of the parties dies.

It is difficult to give yourself permission to be critical and angry with someone who is no longer around, to fight battles or to pick them. Most often that person is reduced to a broad-strokes rendering of their most desirable traits, or even of the desirable traits of their role.

The perfect mother.

That left Dad, still firmly among us and so easy to fault. He stands alone for us as a monument to what children find most terrifying in their parents: he is human.

It is only as we grow older that we realize, covertly at first, that human is more compelling, in most ways that count, than celestial. That, despite the gorier martyrdom stories from the leather-bound books of my childhood, saints can be boring.

One obvious solution would be to construct a more realistic picture of my mother, but I do not know if that is what we really want, and I am not sure it is possible. Death is terribly transformative. Ashes to ashes, dust to dust, prototype to prototype.

None of us have realistic pictures of our parents, even if we have outgrown the childish stage in which we cannot picture them young, or in love, or raising hell. We never outgrow the habit of seeing them only in terms of ourselves.

WHEN I was a small girl, my father used to take me, long past my bedtime, to a place called Joe's Bar and Grill, where it was so dark inside that you couldn't see the pizza you were eating.

He gave me "The Many Loves of Dobie Gillis" after he had finished reading it himself.

He danced the twist for our first dance at my wedding.

He is no one's idea of the all-American father, of Ward Cleaver or Jimmy Stewart. Jimmy Cagney, maybe.

He is not milk. My mother was milk, my father clam chowder. It happens that I do not drink milk anymore.

And if that means an electrical storm is brewing — well, perhaps it's about time.

Court upholds retirement law

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — A federal appeals court voiced displeasure with a Texas law that requires state judges to retire when they reach the age of 75, but upheld the statute.

The ruling by the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals came in a melancholy birthday message from senior federal appellate judge Irving Goldberg, 82, to William Hatten, who wanted to run again for re-election in the 176th Judicial District of Harris County, Texas.

Hatten was a judge in the Houston-area district for over 20 years and filed suit to overturn the Texas law that creates an automatic vacancy when Hatten observes his 75th birthday today.

Hatten appealed when the U.S. District Court for South Texas upheld the retirement statute.

"I write today, at 82 years years of age, with a heavy pen and an even heavier heart," wrote Goldberg in the 3-0 5th Circuit opinion.

"The Honorable Judge William Hatten has served his district ably for over 20 years. His ample competence is stipulated by all parties. Yet today, we are compelled by precedent to inform Judge Hatten that he may not be a candidate for re-election, simply because, tomorrow, he will celebrate his 75th birthday."

Then, almost apologetically, the panel rejected Hatten's claims that Texas' mandatory retirement age for judges amounts to "invidious" age discrimination and violates Hatten's constitutionally-protected right to seel redress for his grievance.

Challenger Center continues mission of shuttle crew

HOUSTON (AP) — The scientific and education objectives of the space shuttle Challenger will continue at the Challenger Center, organizers say.

"The Challenger Center mission began with the Challenger crew. The idea to continue it was a mission by the families," said June Scobee, widow of Challenger commander Dick Scobee, at the center's dedication Thursday.

The center at Houston's Museum of Natural Science, paid for with a $150,000 private grant, will give students an opportunity to make a simulated space flight complete with a mission control center and scientific experiments.

"We knew we couldn't launch a satellite. Discovery will do that for us, but we could continue scientific and education objectives of that mission," said Mrs. Scobee, chairman of the board of the Challenger Center.

Mrs. Scobee and relatives of other Challenger astronauts conceived the center as a memorial to the crew killed when the shuttle exploded shortly after takeoff in January 1986. The Challenger carried Christa McAuliffe, a Concord, N.H., high school teacher who was to have conducted the first classroom experiments from space.

Throughout the summer, 580 Houston-area students have been training to fly the simulated flight.

"It's confusing. It's very complicated to memorize everything," said 10-year-old Lindsay Kemp of Houston, who sat in as captain of mission control during Thursday's simulated flight somewhere between Earth and Mars. "But I'm very interested in space and am learning things."

The Houston center is expected to serve as a model for dozens of similar centers, or mission sites, planned for science museums throughout the country.

The project will work in tandem with the Challenger Center Space-Life Station, to be built in Washington, and similar mission sites, training and research centers for teachers.

"This is a milestone event," said David J. Barram, vice president of corporate affairs for Apple Computer Inc., who donated computers to the center. "The center and its educational innovations, are giant steps down new pathways to knowledge for our children — and for us."

Already plans are being formed to train teachers who may later bring their students, said Carolyn Sumners, director of astronomy at the museum who also wrote the curriculum, developed the software for the program and trained the children this summer.

The simulator is called the "2061 Simulator" and gives children the impression they are on a mission in that year.

The year is significant, according to Kerry Joels, director of educational facilities for Challenger Center, because it marks the 100 anniversary of spaceflight, the 75th anniversary of the Challenger, and the next visit to our solar system of Halley's Comet.

The simulator experiment involves 30 students and their teacher, who will face problems and perform experiments astronauts likely would encounter aboard a space station.

Spitting nets man indictment for attempted murder

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — A prison inmate who tested positive for the virus that causes AIDS has been indicted on charges of attempted murder after he allegedly spit on a correctional officer.

Texas Department of Corrections inmate Curtis Weeks, 27, serving a robbery sentence, was indicted by a grand jury Tuesday.

Special Prosecutor David Weeks said that while Curtis Weeks was at the TDC Diagnostic Unit in June, he told several prison guards that he had AIDS and threatened to infect them with the virus.

"He carried it out by spitting on the officer," Weeks said. "This guy has a disease and he's using it aggressively against other people."

David Weeks said this is the first time a TDC inmate has been indicted under such circumstances.

The grand jury that handed down the indictment viewed a video recording of the prisoner's actions.

Curtis Weeks tested positive for the human immunodeficiency virus, or HIV, which causes AIDS, acquired immune deficiency syndrome. AIDS is a deadly disease that attacks the human immune system.

Not everyone infected with the HIV virus develops AIDS, which is spread through an exchange of bodily fluids.

David Weeks said he realizes that the chances of AIDS transmission by saliva are extremely low.

"But the crux of the matter is his intent, even though he may not be able to carry it out by that means," David Weeks said. "(The charges) really came about because he made it very clear what his intent was. The possibility (of spreading AIDS) is still there even though it is not a strong possibility. His expressed intent to do harm to the officer is the real reason for the case."

STATE in brief

Dallas ordinance assailed

DALLAS (AP) — A new ordinance that allows police to search people who look or act like drug dealers even if they aren't seen making drug deals may face a challenge from civil libertarians.

Joe Cook, president of the Dallas chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union, said he expected the group to fight the ordinance because it treads on due process and civil rights.

"This just allows the police to pick up anyone for any suspicious reason," Cook said.

The ordinance, passed Wednesday, also says loiterers may be fined $500 if they are known drug dealers or pass money, packages or written material to passers-by in an area known for drug sales.

Cash going to attorneys

FORT WORTH (AP) — Cash confiscated under a state law intended to combat drugs frequently is turned over to defense attorneys instead of law enforcement agencies in Tarrant County, a newspaper has reported.

Nearly 40 percent, or more than $500,000, of the money seized by authorities from drug suspects from 1984 to mid-1987 has ended up with the suspects' defense attorneys after settlements with prosecutors, county records show.

Texas authorities are empowered to confiscate money and other property, such as cars, that are thought to be part of a drug transaction.

If police intend to keep the confiscated property, the district attorney's office files a civil lawsuit within 30 days. If property owners want their money or goods returned, their lawyers must battle with prosecutors in civil court, or — as is more common — negotiate a settlement.

Two arrested for cocaine

QUEMADO (AP) — Two men were arrested on smuggling charges after law officers seized $95 million worth of cocaine believed to have been brought across the Rio Grande from Mexico, officials said.

The 371 pounds of cocaine, packaged in 1-pound bundles wrapped with surgical tape, were found Thursday in six military-type duffel bags in a ditch near the river, said Tom Herrera, Maverick County chief deputy sheriff.

Authorities refused to release the names of the two arrested men, but said they are ages 35 and 31 and are both from Quemado. A third man wanted in connection with the drug seizure is still at large, Herrera said.

Toni Wiesner blasts out of a sandtrap on No. 7 on way to the finals.

Wiesner, Haley in WTGA finals

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

Toni Wiesner ought to be used to it by now.

With the proliferation of younger players in the Texas amateur golf ranks, the veteran linkstress from Fort Worth has had to compete against several younger players this summer, including a decisive win over Stanford University golfer Stephanie Parel in the semifinals of the Women's Texas Golf Association tournament Thursday at Green Tree Country Club.

She'll have to do it again today, when he meets University of Texas golfer Cindy Haley in the championship flight finals.

Wiesner earned yet another trip to the finals with a 3 and 2 win over Stanford University golfer Stephanie Parel of San Antonio in Friday's semifinals. Wiesner started her round with Parel just minutes after outlasting Austin attorney Debbie McClung in a 24-hole quarterfinal marathon.

Haley, in her first WTGA tourney, defeated medalist Margaret Kelt in the quarters 2 and 1, before knocking off Pamela Behrens of Dallas 4 and 2 in the semis.

Wiesner, who won the WTGA meet in 1985 and was runnerup in 1982, finally got the better of McClung on the par-three 24th hole of their quarterfinal match by stroking a 40-foot putt within inches of the pin on her second shot. Meanwhile, McClung pushed her birdie putt attempt five feet past the pin and her try for par rimmed out of the hole.

The lefthanded Wiesner then went three-up on Parel in the first four holes of their semifinal match, as the former San Antonio Clark standout three-putted the second and fourth holes.

"I was just giving holes away," Parel said. Putting was not her strong suit Thursday.

"I had them on line, but I just had trouble with distance," Parel said. "I'd either leave it short or hit a mile past the hole."

Wiesner said she couldn't play it safe even after getting the big early lead over Parel.

"You can't sit back in match play," Wiesner said. "You can't just say you'll make pars, or you'll lose."

Even though Wiesner has been playing competitive golf for many years, she downplays the significance of competing against college-age golfers.

"Golf is a lifetime in which age doesn't matter."

Haley, a Dallas-area native who is a junior-to-be at UT after redshirting last season, had five birdies in her morning round against Kelt, the University of Tulsa golfer who shot a course-low 74 in Monday's qualifying round. She's not surprised at her high standing despite her relative lack of statewide tourney experience.

6-run Pilot burst jolts Angels' pennant hopes

From Staff Reports

If it hadn't been for the Famous Chicken, things would have been pretty grim at Angels Stadium Thursday night as the Midland Angels opened a do-or-die final homestand.

The Chicken, making his second appearance of the season her, kept some 3,000 fans smiling with his antics, but the Wichita Pilots dealt Midland's second half Texas League West pennant hopes a painful solar plexus blow with an 8-5 defeat.

What it means is that the Angels will have to sweep the season's final four games with the Pilots and get some help from the San Antonio Missions, who are playing El Paso's Diablos in the Border City.

A six-run first put Midland in a hole from which it could never extricate itself as the Pilots handed Phil Venturino, 3-1, his first loss since his return from the Pacific Coast League.

Pete Roberts went six innings to notch the win.

The Angels trailed 6-1 after the first and 8-1 after four.

The lone run was Jim McCollom's 20th homer of the season with two out in the first. L.C. Penigar had opened the first with a single and then a double play, one of three the Pilots pulled off, cleared the bases before McCollom connected.

The Angels made it close when Mike Knapp and Penigar singled home runs in the fifth and Erik Pappas tripled home one run and Knapp singled home another. But once again, a double play wiped out Jesus Alfaro's single before Jeff Manto started the rally with a base hit.

Carlos Baerga knocked in three runs for the Pilots, one in the third with his 12th homer. Big blows in the first were delivered by Bill Stevenson and Baerga, who hit two-run singles.

Venturino was charged with eight runs, but only four were earned.

In relief, Vinicio Cedeno, Marty Reed and Jeff Perry shutout the Pilots on two hits over the final 5 2/3 innings.

HALO HOOPS— Mike Fetters goes for Midland in tonight's 7 p.m. game and Kevin Brown will pitch for Wichita....Wiley Lee, who stole 53 bases at Quad City, is due to report to the Angels today. Lee was a fifth-round draft choice out of Old Dominion University in 1987 and batted .286 with 21 stolen bases in rookie league ball at Salem last season....

Plainview stuns Lee Rebels, 6-4

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

PLAINVIEW — When was the last time a Midland Lee football team gave up six touchdowns in less than two hours?

Well, you don't have to go back far to find the answer. The debut of the 1988 Rebels here Thursday night against the Plainview Bulldogs is the answer in a stunning six touchdown to four scrimmage loss.

Lee went into the scrimmage knowing that one of its defensive weaknesses was its secondary and those worst fears were given some credibility. Plainview scored three touchdowns on passes of 70, 70 and 61 yards, burning badly Lee's beleaguered secondary.

Plainview also scored two touchdowns on runs of 62 and 69 yards when the secondary failed to give support on runs that broke the front line. The other Plainview TD came on a 52-yard interception return.

IN FACT, the Lee team seemed to be near a state of shock during the scrimmage. A year ago in a scrimmage against Del Rio, the sidelines were full of talk and chatter. Things appeared to be oddly quiet on the Rebel sideline during this one.

"I don't think they (Plainview) made three yards except when we broke down in the secondary on all those scoring plays," said Lee coach Earl Miller. "It's the same area we knew we had some problems with going into the scrimmage and I can promise you we will lose a lot more than this if we don't improve.

"At least, we saw that we can stop the run. It could have been worse. We could have showed that we couldn't stop the run or pass."

OFFENSIVELY, Lee looked to be in top form, scoring the first two times they had the ball on consecutive 70-yard drives. Halfback David Whiteside scored on a one-yard plunge for the first Lee TD after his 54-yard run set up the score.

Junior halfback Ferris Strambler came back with a four-yard TD on a drive that was set up by the passing of junior quarterbacks Ty Chambers and Vince Henderson to tight end Quincy White and wide receiver Jason Sever.

"I thought the offense was exceptionally good the first time we had the ball and we came away feeling like we could move the football," said Miller. "We tried to work on some other things later in the scrimmage and didn't move the ball quite as well, but I was pleased with that area."

Plainview quarterback J.J. Smith threw three long TD bombs to Kelvin Wilson, Stan Robertson and Mike Jones in the next series of downs, but did give up a 29-yard TD interception return to linebacker Michael Pearson, Lee's only defensive returning starter.

Lee got its last TD with a another 70-yard drive early in the next series of offensive plays when Chambers scored on a one-yard run. The running of Chambers and fullback James Brown, a transfer from Odessa Permian.

But Plainview added a TD to knot the score at 4-4 when Dan Richardson intercepted a Lee pass just off the hands of Sever.

THEN the Bulldogs romped 62 yards with Gilbert Sanchez and 69 yards by Steve Johnson to get the margin of victory.

Still, Lee produced over 300 yards of offense in the scrimmage, averaging nearly six yards per play. Whiteside led the way with 81 yards on 10 carries. Strambler had 59 yards on 11 carries and Brown had 57 yards on eight carries.

Ags, Huskers take over the Big Apple

By TODD WOODARD
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW. YORK — From 6,000 to 10,000 well-heeled devotees of the Nebraska and Texas A&M football teams will begin painting New York red or maroon Friday night in advance celebration of a victory in the Kickoff Classic Saturday at Giants Stadium across the Hudson River in Rutherford, N.J.

As many as 5,000 red-and-white-clad Nebraska fans, and comparable numbers of maroon-and-white-loving Aggie fans, plan to live it up in their short stay in the area, according to their local alumni clubs.

To get the Aggies primed for what they hope is that big first step, the New York A&M Former Students Club has put together a few events for the traveling faithful.

At midnight, more than 1,000 Aggies will gather at Pier 16 at South Street Seaport for what they call "midnight yell practice."

"When I called the First Precinct police station," said Karen Creeser, who is coordinating the A&M activities, "and tried to explain that several hundred Aggies would be on a boat and on the pier yelling in unison, the department representative chuckled and said, 'You have to practice yelling?' I tried to make it sound as organized a chaos as I could, so I didn't tell him that members of the Corps of Cadets wanted to bring a cannon, the one that's fired when the Ags score, to midnight yell. I thought he might get the wrong idea."

There have been other small misunderstandings about New York. "One man who hadn't been able to get a room at the Hilton with the other Ags said he'd just bring a tent and find a place to pitch it," Creeser said. "Another woman driving up from Virginia wanted to know where there was a place to park her r.v. for an overnight stay.

"One man had heard of Sardi's and wanted to go to dinner there. I asked him what sort of money he wanted to spend, and he said about $10 ot $15 a head. I told him that would buy him a drink and cover the tip, and he'd be better off going to the corner to get hot dogs for what he wanted to spend.

"And I got a call from a guy in Nashville, who, I have to admit, asked 'What is there to do in New York?' Even I was amazed."

Misunderstandings have been kept at a minimum for the Husker fans, said Teresa Reinig, who graduated from Nebraska in 1985 with a degree in finance and now works for the British investment firm Kleinwort Benson in New York.

She's coordinating several Nebraska gatherings, all of which have a common ingredient.

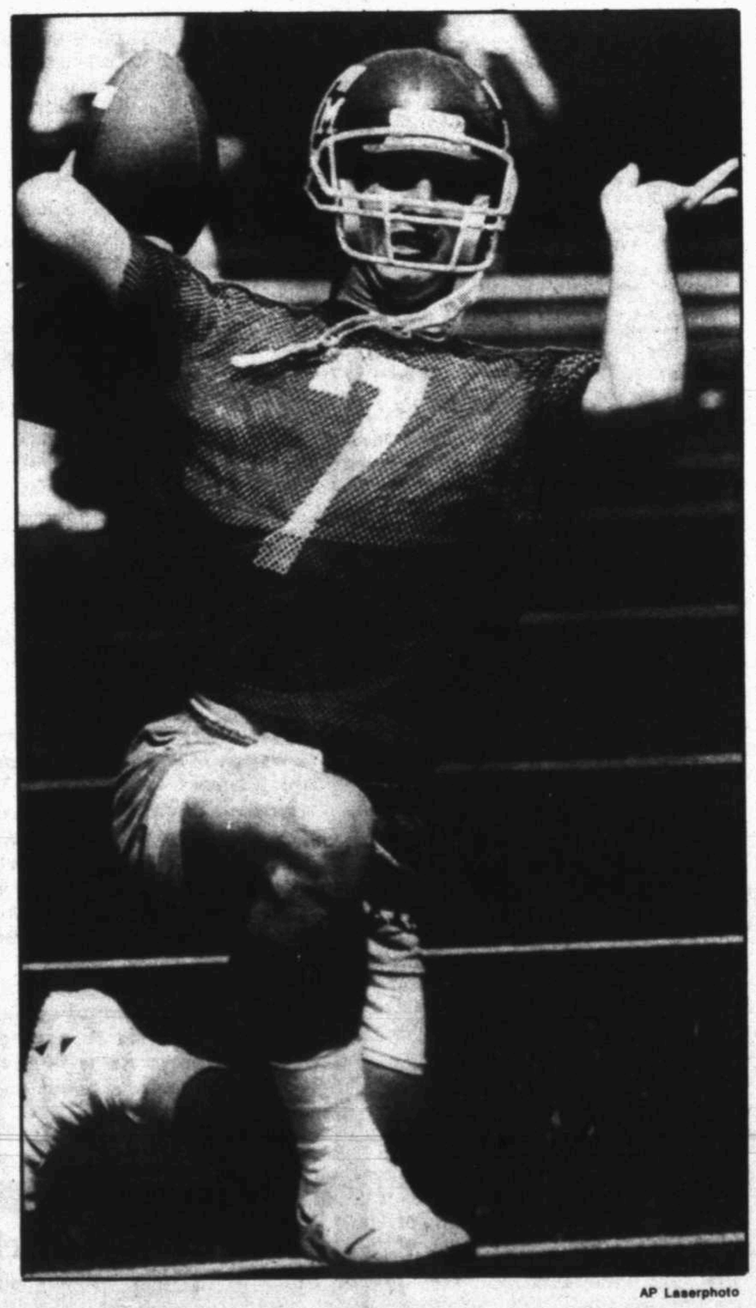

"The out-of-town fans are all traveling in groups; they seem to think that if they're in groups, they're much safer," Reinig said. She said about 400 fans showed up at a reception last night, and expected about the same at a cocktail party tonight.

"The biggest shock for most Nebraskans is the price of drinks," Reinig said. "A beer costs $1.50 in Nebraska. When I tell them beer is $3.50 and drinks are $5, they say they'll just have a soft drink. I generally don't tell them how much that will be."

The Aggies have had similar queries, mostly about a pregame barbecue to be held at the Meadowlands tomorrow. "I say the price for the barbecue is $15," Creeser said, "and people from Dallas and Houston are shocked.

They say, 'What is it, an all-you-can-eat deal?' When I explained to one man that he'd get two drinks, a good-sized piece of chicken, and lots of salads, he said, 'I can get three plates of real barbecue in Texas for that!'

"I said, 'This isn't Texas.'TH"

Steelers Art Rooney spanned pro football ages

By DAVE GOLDBERG
AP Football Writer

When Art Rooney came into the NFL, the players wore leather helmets, the fields were often more dirt than grass and the gates were closer to $500 than $5 million.

Rooney's death at 87 Thursday severed the final link with that era.

In a day when NFL franchises are worth between $60 million and $90 million, it's a bit disconcerting to realize Rooney prchased the Pittsburgh Steelers in 1932 with $2,500 he had won gambling.

For the next 30 years, he operated on that kind of shoestring in a league that before the days of billion-dollar television contracts was always on the verge of losing teams to bankruptcy.

As Rooney himself said before his death: "The thrill was not only winning or losing, but making the payroll."

Rooney became an NFL owner 56 years ago ...

— Thirty-four years before there was something called a Super Bowl.

— Twenty-eight years before there were Dallas Cowboys, not to mention Oakland Raiders, New England Patriots, Kansas City Chiefs and Miami Dolphins.

— Sixteen years before Terry Bradshaw was born; 15 years before there was a Joe Greene; 17 before there was a Lynn Swann — three of the players who turned Rooney's team into the only one ever to win four of those television-created NFL championship extravaganzas.

No, when Art Rooney bought the Steelers, they were an afterthought, even in Pittsburgh, to Jock Sutherland's University of Pittsburgh Panthers, just as pro football was an afterthought to college football everywhere in the United States.

FOOTBALL WAS Notre Dame, Army, Stanford — even Columbia and Yale.

It was not the Pittsburgh Steelers, nor the Chicago Bears, New York Giants, Washington Redskins or those other early teams. They became national attractions only after the television explosion in the late '50s.

For every Red Grange, who became the first big college star to turn pro and was showcased around the country by George Halas and his Bears, there was a Jay Berwanger, Heisman Trophy winner who made the first pick in the first NFL draft in 1936 by the Philadelphia Eagles.

Berwanger's reaction? He turned up his nose and said, in effect: "Me? Play pro football?"

With all that, Rooney and Halas and the others kept things going toward a success that was beyond their wildest dream; a success that only Halas and Rooney lived to see.

"When I came into the league, there was no question who the NFL was," said Tex Schramm, who joined the Los Angeles Rams as publicity director in 1947 before building the expansion Dallas Cowboys of the 1960s and '70s into a dynasty rivaling Rooney's Steelers.

"The league was George Halas in Chicago, Tim Mara in New York, George Preston Marshall in Washington, Curly Lambeau in Green Bay ... and Art Rooney in Pittsburgh."

"WITH all the big television contracts and all the exposure, we forget how it was," said Art Modell, owner of the Cleveland Browns. "These were activist owners who loved the game for its own sake.

Sometimes they had to pass the hat to break even. They'd make exhibition games into road shows, taking them into places like Omaha and Davenport to show the product."

Nor was the game itself the impersonal, precision-run instrument it now seems to be. There were no computers, few scouts and no "director of pro personnel" or "director of player personnel."

Instead, with little money to hire extra help, the businessman owners played those roles.

They called old players for recommendations on college stars or consulted Street & Smith's football annual for lists of top players. The Steelers did just that — in 1956, using the first pick in the draft on defensive back Gary Glick, who faded quickly both from the NFL and from the memory of all but trivia buffs.

"Once we traded him five players — I forget for what — but we had to play a preseason game and we couldn't trade until the game was over. One of the players we were sending him broke his hand, but we sent him along anyway. The next day, Art called and asked 'What are you doing? The guy's got a broken hand.' But he took him anyway."

"Back in the '50s when the Rams were loaded and Pittsburgh was pretty pathetic, I used to talk to Art and he would send one of his assistants out and spend a week at our training camp so he would know what players on our team were available and he would want to trade for.

It wouldn't happen today.

But that was Art Rooney's time.

What's wrong with NFL?...Got a day to spare?

Ratings drop raises some questions

By Allen Barra
Copley News Service

I observed with some amusement the National Football League's recent announcement that it was studying last year's disappointing ratings. What, NFL bigwigs were asking, might be done to make the game of pro football more accommodating to the fans? Of course, the NFL didn't actually ask the fans — if it did, it might find out what really is wrong with pro football.

I decided to do what the NFL wouldn't do: consult the fans. Well, at least a fan, in this case, myself. And maybe a few people I watch football games with. Here's the result of our survey; by all means make one up and send it to Pete Rozelle.

STUPID use of instant replay.

Sixty million people can see what happened on their home TV, and the poor jerks who have to call the play couldn't see what happened because they were standing behind William Perry. Then they wait till some idiot in the booth watches the play from different angles, who then consults the rules book. Then the officials mill around on the field trying to interpret the book. Hey, folks, donne moi une break: let the officials on the field watch the replays on the giant scoreboard, call the play right there, and get the game going.

Stupid divisions.

The NFC West features four teams (Atlanta, New Orleans, Los Angeles and San Francisco) in three different time zones. You'd think the Dallas Cowboys and Houston Oilers would be natural rivals, but the NFC has the Cowboys in the NFC East, while the Oilers, a good four-hour ride to the east, are in the AFC Central. The Indian teams (Redskins, Chiefs) are in different conferences, as are the Pirate teams (Bucs, Raiders).

STUPID highlights shows.

Like the ones on Sunday and Monday nights where they show you "highlights" from 10 or 12 games, all of them game-winning 1-yard plunges or last-minute 26-yard field goals, every one of which looks alike. Eric Dickerson breaks a spectacular 87-yard run to set up the winning score with two minutes to play, shaking off 13 tackles before being bumped out of bounds at the 1-yard line, and the "highlight" they show you is a third-string fullback disappearing into the middle of 10,000 pounds of blubber for the winning "run."

Length of games.

Do you know how much action you're really seeing in a professional football game? Somebody held up a stopwatch to a 1986 four-hour-plus "Monday Night Football" match between the '49ers and Redskins and estimated that the game itself took only seven minutes to play. Do you know why it takes four hours-plus to play seven minutes of football? The first 45 minutes of a football game takes about 22 minutes to play, but the last 15 lasts for about two hours, 45 minutes. Because when teams get behind late in the game they pass and pass and pass, and passes always fall incomplete — after all, if they could throw complete passes, they wouldn't be behind late in the game — and that stops the clock.

Know why? Back when football was oozing its way out of the prehistoric slime of rugby, someone, probably a player for Princeton or Rutgers, threw the ball downfield into the crowd, and the clock ran for almost 20 minutes while the game's only official battled the thugs who passed for fans in the 1890s for what passed for a football. Want to speed things up? Only one way: since the ball doesn't go into the crowd anymore, let the clock run after an incomplete pass.

TOO MANY specialists.

Strong-side inside linebackers, weak-side inside linebackers, nickel backs, U-backs, second tight ends — 30 years ago they didn't even have tight ends, now there are second tight ends. You don't even know what some of these positions are, do you, let alone who plays them. We'll bet you knew what positions guys like Ray Nitschke, Alan Page, Deacon Jones, Joe Schmidt and Sam Huff played, right? Well, those guys couldn't get jobs in football today — they wouldn't be "specialized" enough, they'd come off the field on, say, third-and-seven in favor of some $250,000 specialist who gets in maybe 200 plays a year.

Want to personalize pro football? Simple: cut the rosters from 47 to the 35 that was used in the early '60s. Bring back Ray Nitschke. While we're at it, let's go all the way back to one platoon football. Better still — let's rewrite the rules to rotate players at each position. Let's see if John Elway has what it takes to put his helmet down and rack Bo Jackson in the open field; let Brian Bosworth take a turn at quarterback and find out what it's like to be on the nasty end of a blind side cheap shot; make Lawrence Taylor come in and try his luck on a 39-yard field goal try with the game on the line!

Open up the betting.

Let's end the hypocrisy about the evils of betting: at least half the games wouldn't be of anv interest to

Please see NFL, Page 3C.

LEE

Chambers and Henderson combined for 63 yards passing, completing four of eight and one interception. White and Severs each caught two passes. Strambler also threw an interception on a halfback pass.

"Our defense did show some real fire late in the scrimmage and that was good to see," said Miller. "All in all, we saw some good things on both sides of the ball, but we also saw some negatives."

The fire, however, is just starting to burn as far as Lee is concerned. The Rebels face a long road trip to Killeen where an angry group of Kangaroos await Lee. Killeen is favored to win District 14-5A and have four offensive and six defensive starters back from a 7-1-1 team of a year ago that missed the playoffs with a loss and tie.

Lee hit the practice field again this morning and you can bet that the day's practices will center around the Lee secondary. They may get a lot of extra attention in the next couple of weeks.

"Golf is a lifetime in which age doesn't matter."

Haley, a Dallas-area native who is a junior-to-be at UT after redshirting last season, had five birdies in her morning round against Kelt, the University of Tulsa golfer who shot a course-low 74 in Monday's qualifying round. She's not surprised at her high standing despite her relative lack of statewide tourney experience.

"I knew if I came in here and played my game that I could get this far," Haley said. "But so much can happen in match play, that I just wanted to come down here and have some fun."

TOURNEY NOTES: Wiesner said the huge greens at Green Tree dictate a certain style of play.

"This is such a driver-putter course," she said. "I've played where there are one or two big greens, but not 18 of them.

"If you hit the ball on the wrong part of the green, you're dead."

Wiesner's not underestimating Haley by any means, but points out that there may be one advantage for a "mid-am" such as herself.

"She probably doesn't play as much match play as I do, but otherwise don't think there would be an advantage."

McCallister claims Series lead

By BOB GREEN

AKRON, Ohio (AP) — Blaine McCallister got away with one and Sandy Lyle didn't let one get away.

"In this wind, on this golf course, a 67, I feel like I stole one," McCallister said after converting a birdie-birdie start into a one-shot lead Thursday in the first round of the $900,000 World Series of Golf.

The fast start, of course, was the key to his 3-under-par effort on the long, hard Firestone Country Club course.

Lyle's round was from the other side of the coin.

The burly Scot who holds the Masters title got away bogey-bogey-bogey, then had to one-putt to save par on the next three holes.

"I wasn't swinging well and everything was wrong," Lyle said, "and at that time I thought if I could scramble in with a 75 I'd be doing well."

But he touched off a string of four consecutive birdies on the ninth hole, where his hooked drive hit a spectator in the back and bounded back into the fairway, and salvaged a 69.

"I bogeyed three in a row. I saved three in a row. I was at rock bottom," Lyle said. "Then it all turned around and I birdied four in a row. A 69 after the start I had, it's a real saved round.

"It's a daft game sometimes."

Ian Baker-Finch of Australia and Mark Brooks, who like McCallister is making his first appearance in this elite, international event, shared second with 68's.

Ken Brown of Scotland and Jay Haas, who were tied with Lyle at 69, were the only others in the 42-man field able to break par in the strong, gusty winds.

Curtis Strange, the U.S. Open titleholder and the defending champion here, was at 71. So were Joey Sindelar, who leads the money-winning race, and PGA champion Jeff Sluman.

Australian Greg Normam was another shot higher at 72.

Denver wins, Elway hurt

DENVER (AP) — John Elway threw two touchdown passes to Ricky Nattiel before leaving the game with a strained right shoulder, leading the Denver Broncos past the Indianapolis Colts 21-20 Thursday night in an NFL preseason finale.

NFL

The Broncos, who concluded the preseason 3-1, also got a 4-yard scoring run by Gerald Willhite in the final quarter to cap a 17-play, 80-yard drive and give Denver a 21-13 lead.

Indianapolis' Eric Dickerson, seeing his most extensive action of the preseason, rushed 17 times for 128 yards, including a 67-yard touchdown burst in the third period.

Bills 14, Buccaneers 7

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Jim Kelly leaving at halftime with a slightly sprained ankle. He had returned to action only last week after suffering elbow and ankle injuries during the offseason.

Cardinals 41, Chiefs 21

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Vai Sikahema scored on an 81-yard punt return and rookie Tony Jeffery had an 80-yard touchdown run to carry Phoenix to victokry.

Neil Lomax completed 12 of 15 passes for 92 yards while playing the ter and drove Phoenix 75 yards to a 28-21 lead, finishing the drive with a 10-yard pass to Jay Novacek with 7:40 left in the period.

Eagles 27, Lions 9

PONTIAC, Mich. — Randall Cunningham completed 19 of 25 passes for 225 yards, including a 49-yard touchdown to Mike Quick, as the Eagles handed the Lions their fourth NFL exhibition defeat.

The Eagles, behind the passing of Cunningham and the running of Keith Byars, scored on three of their first four possessions. Byars scored on a 17-yard run, Junior Tautalatasi had a 3-yard TD run.

"Traffic Increased 35% In Just One Day!"

Here's what Janice Black, owner of Second Skin, said about how newspaper advertising increases her business:

"Of all the media I have worked with, the newspaper is the most effective way to generate interest in my store. It's really apparent when our advertising works because of the consistently tremendous response."

"Our Memorial Day newspaper advertising was a huge success! With just one ad, traffic increased 35% in just one day! Nearly everyone was a buying customer, and many were brand new ones."

"We are so pleased with the quality of our Reporter-Telegram advertising. It really helped us draw attention to our new location, making our decision to go with the newspaper one of the best ones we could have made!"

This Day In Baseball

Aug. 26

1916 — Philadelphia's "Bullet" Joe Bush pitched a no-hitter to lead the Athletics to a 5-0 victory over the Cleveland Indians.

1934 — Detroit Tiger Schoolboy Rowe won his 16th consecutive game with a 4-2 triumph over the Washington Senators. Rowe singled in the winning run in the ninth inning.

1939 — The first major league baseball game was televised as NBC-TV brought their cameras to Brooklyn's Ebbets Field for a doubleheader between the Reds and the Dodgers.

1947 — Brooklyn Dodger pitcher Dan Bankhead debuted with a home run in his first major-league plate appearance, but didn't fare well on the mound. In 3 1-3 innings of relief, he gave up 10 hits and six earned runs to the Pirates. Pittsburgh won 16-3.

1961 — New York's Roger Maris hit his 51st homer of the year against the Kansas City Athletics. Maris' 51 homers is the most ever by a player at this point in the season.

1982 — Rickey Henderson tied Lou Brock's 1974 record of 118 stolen bases in a season as the Brewers defeated the Athletics 10-3.

1987 — Milwaukee's Paul Molitor went 0-for-4, ending his 39-game streak, and the Brewers beat the Cleveland Indians 1-0 in 10 innings on pinch-hitter Rick Manning's RBI single. With Molitor waiting in the on-deck circle for a possible fifth at-bat, Manning singled in the game-winner.

Today's Birthday: Jeff Parrett 27.

Minnesota at Kansas City (7:35 p.m.). The Twins Frank Viola goes for his 20th victory. Charlie Leibrandt (8-11) pitches for the Royals.

STREAKS

In his last four starts, Milwaukee's Teddy Higuera is 4-0, allowing five earned runs in 32 innings with 32 strikeouts. Higuera beat the New York Yankees 3-1 Thursday on a three-hitter. ... Jack Clark of the Yankees had an RBI single in the first inning of Thursday's 4-1 loss to Milwaukee to break a 0-for-20 slump.

STATS

Pedro Guerrero's first-inning single for St. Louis Thursday night against Cincinnati gave him hits in 10 of his last 13 games. ... Since coming from the San Francisco Giants in a trade, Jeffrey Leonard has hit only .194 in day games for Milwaukee.

SWINGS

Cincinnati rookie Chris Sabo was on the bench for the second consecutive game Thursday. Sabo, who made the NL All-Star team, is hitting just .189 since the break. His average has fallen from .312 to .273.

SLUMPS

Atlanta's Ron Gant is in a 4-for-37 slump.

STARTERS

Calvin Schiraldi pitched an eight-hitter and struck out a career-high 12 batters as Chicago beat Atlanta 6-1 Thursday night. Schiraldi (8-8) suffered a leg injury in New York on Aug. 4 and went on the disabled list until Aug. 20. It was his second complete game and he has 109 strikeouts in 127 2-3 innings.

SLUGGERS

Ron Gant's 15 home runs are most by an Atlanta second baseman since Davey Johnson hit 43 in 1973. ... Andres Thomas needs two homers to tie Denis Menke for most by an Atlanta shortstop. Thomas has 13 homers.

STATUS

The Cincinnati Reds announced Thursday that they didn't put starter Jose Rijo on the 15-day disabled list, as they had announced earlier in the week. Rijo is trying to overcome tendinitis in his right elbow. The Reds hope he can make his scheduled start Monday.

SIDELINED

Cincinnati announced Thursday that pitcher Ron Robinson has been moved from the 15-day to the 21-day disabled list. Robinson was disabled July 23 with a sore elbow.

SCOUTING

Lee Guetterman scattered six hits over 7 1-3 innings and Hensley Meulens drove in two runs as Columbus (Yankees) snapped an eight-game losing streak Thursday with a 3-2 International League victory over Richmond (Braves).

SPEAKING

"We think the Yankees could use Reggie's winning attitude and his experience in the tough pennant race. He may also be able to bring back some of the glory of past championship Yankee teams." — Reggie Jackson's agent Bill Goodstein Thursday on the possible return of Jackson to the Yankees as a player.

BLUEBONNET REPRIEVER— The NCAA plans to give the financially troubled Bluebonnet Bowl the option of suspending this year's game and extending the deadline for payment until April 1, 1989. UT AD DeLoss Dodds came up with the idea. "My bottom line was trying to save (the bowl)...." The Bluebonnet owes Texas and Pittsburgh $160,000 each from the 1987 game and Baylor and Colorado $40,000 each from 1986....

GRIDDERS 'SENTENCED'— Former UT football players Edwin Simmons, Everett Gay and James Lott, named with other former college athletes in a Chicago federal grand jury indictment, must each repay a portion of their athletic scholarships and perform 100 hours of community service. The athletes were named as unindicted co-conspirators that charges sports agents Norby Walters and Lloyd Bloom with multiple counts of racketeering, mail fraud, wire fraud and extortion in connection with their efforts to sign college athletes to contracts in violation of NCAA rules.

COE GIVES UP— Sebastian Coe, his final shot at a third straight Olympic 1,500-meter gold medal gone, said he probably has run his last race for Britain and that he no longer would consider national-team needs in his training. Wednesday, Juan Antonio Samaranch, I

SATURDAY, AUGUST 27, 1988

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Sweeping changes help you step into the mainstream. A new partner's philosophy gives you a fresh perspective. Put your mind to it and you will emerge a trailblazer in the fall. A relationship is strengthened when you can talk about the past without wallowing in emotion. Additional education could accelerate your career. It may take two jobs to give you the cash you want now.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: all-star third baseman Buddy Bell, actor Douglas Sheehan, Mother Teresa, Hollywood producer Samuel Goldwyn, President Lyndon B. Johnson, actress Barbara Bach, comedienne Martha Raye, actress Tuesday Weld.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You will do well once you resolve a difference of opinion about a relationship. You could be in a rut. An envious individual's comment will not hurt you.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Baseball captures your interest, but your devotion to the game could irritate mate. Exercise self-control this weekend. Do not let a taste for gourmet food and fine wine interfere with diet resolutions.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Criticizing a family member will not go over well this weekend. Stay silent. Time spent outdoors will teach you more about nature. Concentrate on improving your relationship with children. Admit past mistakes.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): What you have to say this weekend may surprise even you. It is time to clear the air. Financial support is available if you need it. An unexpected visit cheers you!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Travel plans could develop suddenly. Pack a bag. Expose a child to new environments and experiences. Be your usual decisive self. The way you handle an older person counts for a lot.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Do not attempt to conduct business today. Visit friends or relatives who live some distance away. Someone who was an enemy becomes a friend. Plan your next move together.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A good day for broaching touchy subjects. Bring something that has been bothering you into the open. Travel for business or pleasure. Women make especially nice financial progress this weekend.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A scholarship or grant is given to a deserving student. Logic helps you solve a sticky-wicket social problem. An older person's advice is very valuable now.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Your relationship with mate improves when you put work on hold for the weekend. Consider your pet if you are making vacation plans. A lovely social encounter can lead to romance.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Culinary creativity could lead to a new career. Enlist family members' help. Do not deny yourself all luxuries while spoiling loved ones. Enjoy the good things in life while you can.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Inexpensive entertainment will make this a red-letter day. Plan a sentimental journey. Being with young people both inspires and invigorates you. A friend sheds light on an old mystery. Be discreet.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Comparison shopping will let you buy more creature comforts. Control expenditures and credit card charges. Sports and group activities hold special appeal. Be careful not to overdo if out of shape.

Nothing at the table costs more points, or coin of the realm, than carelessness. On this hand from a rubber bridge game, South failed to take advantage of his spot cards, so he ended up failing in a contract that should have been brought home.

South's decision to bid game rather than three spades is commendable. First, a raise to three spades would have sounded competitive rather than based on values. Secondly, the king of hearts behind the overcall is worth a full trick, making the hand strong enough to contract for game.

West led his top heart, East took the ace and returned the suit to declarer's king. Two top spades revealed the unhappy news that there was a sure trump loser and, therefore, a potential loser in each suit. Declarer had to find either a fortunate club position or an endplay if he were going to bring home his contract.

Without giving the matter much thought, declarer tried ace, king and another club. West won the eight and returned the jack, forcing declarer to ruff. Now declarer tried for the endplay by cashing the ace-king of diamonds and then tossing East on lead with a trump, but East had a diamond to cash for down one.

Declarer should have paid more heed to the spots. Once East had dropped two club honors, declarer could almost have claimed his contract. All he had to do was return to hand with the ace of diamonds and lead a club up to the nine. If West follows low and the nine loses to the jack, the fourth club is set up for a diamond discard. And should East turn up with four clubs and has been indulging in some fancy falsecarding, you simply weren't making this contract anyway.

What if your job was to defend the Secretary of Defense?

Bernstein celebrates 70th birthday with nearly 12,000

LENOX, Mass. (AP) — Nearly 12,000 people and dozens of famous friends sang "Happy Birthday" to Leonard Bernstein in a four-hour tribute that left America's most famous living conductor, usually loquacious, nearly speechless.

Bernstein

Bernstein chuckled and wept as friends, including actress Lauren Bacall and composer-producer Quincy Jones, recalled the conductor-composer's life and work at Thursday night's 70th birthday gala at the Tanglewood music festival.

But words almost failed the maestro when he was pulled to the lectern for the finale.

As hundreds of performers and the audience of 12,000 stamped their feet, Bernstein shook his head "no."

He grabbed the microphone, said, "As Victor Borge would say...," then let out a wail characteristic of the comic pianist.

Most of the audience and 250 performers then sang "Happy Birthday" to Bernstein before he walked offstage ahead of Bacall, Jones and other celebrated pals.

The Berkshire Hills gala was billed as one of the music world's great events. The master of ceremonies was Beverly Sills, the former diva who is retiring as director of the New York City Opera in November.

"I love Lenny," she said. "The only thing I would not do for him is sing."

Besides the friends who volunteered their talents to honor Bernstein and benefit the music school where he cut his conducting teeth, performers, playwrights, poets and the New York Philharmonic — his old orchestra — videotaped birthday messages that were televised on huge screens at Tanglewood.

It was all in honor of a man who gained enormous popularity and fame with works ranging from Broadway classics like "West Side Story" to classical compositions like "Mass."

LONDON (AP) — A white Mercedes owned by George Harrison and used in the Beatles' film "Let It Be" sold for $29,740 at an auction of rock memorabilia, Christie's auction house said.

The 1969 car drew the highest price of any of the 426 items on sale Thursday, said Victoria Wolcough of Christie's.

Other auction highlights included handwritten lyrics to "Whatever Gets You Through the Night," John Lennon's first hit after leaving the Beatles, which went for $10,224; a pair of Michael Jackson's dancing shoes, which fetched $5,577; and the first major collection of clothing owned by the late punk rocker Sid Vicious to be sold, which went for more than $16,900.

"It was an enthusiastic crowd, a very busy auction," said Ms. Wolcough, adding that buying was dominated by Warren Stone of the Hard Rock Cafe in Los Angeles and by Brian Murphy of the London Hard Rock Cafe.

• • •

OAKVILLE, Calif. (AP) — Robert Mondavi, the dean of California vintners, celebrated the 1988 harvest with the annual blessing of grapes and the start of the crush in Napa Valley.

Beaming under a cloudless, sunny sky Thursday, the energetic, 75-year-old Mondavi told tourists and guests crowding the crushing area at his winery, "This is our 23rd vintage...thank you for coming."

The crowd applauded after the Rev. Andre Tournier of St. Joan of Arc Church in Yountville, wearing a 200-year-old robe, blessed the grapes with new juice and holy water.

After the blessing, Mondavi made a small speech, then wine was served from tables lining the rear of the crush area.

In 1966, Mondavi built Napa Valley's first new winery since Prohibition. He began a quality-building program that, less than 10 years later, helped California wine compete successfully with world-class European wines for the first time.

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — Lawyers for the Beatles' licensing company have filed suit over what they charge are pirated compact disc recordings of songs and interviews by the former rock group.

"It not only rips off the Beatles, it rips off the public," said attorney Paul LiCalsi, representing London-based Apple Corps Ltd.

The eight pirated CDs include a 1961 audition tape the Beatles made for Decca records and a 1962 live performance in Hamburg, he said Thursday.

The suit names Jay Chernow of Sayreville and two companies, San Juan Record and Tape Club Ltd. and Music Rent, both of Parlin, among other defendants.

Reached for comment, Chernow said he was the president of the companies, which only do licensing. He said the music and interviews were legally licensed and denied the allegations in the suit.

• • •

CARSON CITY, Nev. (AP) — A defamation lawsuit filed by a musician against rock star Billy Joel has been dismissed by the Nevada Supreme Court because the musician's lawyer failed to file a timely notice of appeal.

Joel

Carson City musician John Powers sued after Joel called him "a creep" and "a poor little schlump" and said he would like "to break his legs with my own hands" in a 1982 Playboy magazine interview.

The Supreme Court's dismissal of the case Wednesday ended a 10-year legal battle that began when Powers sued Joel, claiming Joel's 1978 hit "My Life" was originally recorded by Powers.

Joel settled that suit in 1980 for $42,500, later saying his attorneys and business manager told him to settle it as a nuisance suit because it would cost him more to fight it.

Part of the settlement was that Powers stop claiming the Joel hit was a song Powers recorded in 1974. But Powers allegedly continued to claim Joel's song was stolen, prompting Joel's comments in the magazine interview.

The state Supreme Court appeal was filed after a Reno judge ruled in April that Joel didn't commit slander or defamation although his remarks appeared to vilify Powers.

TORONTO (AP) — The Stratford Festival has named veteran English actor-director David William as its next artistic director, succeeding Canadian John Neville.

William, who emigrated to Canada in 1986, will work with Neville throughout the 1989 season and take over in 1990 under a three-year contract, the festival announced Thursday.

William, 62, has performed Shakespeare on London stages and played Richard II in the BBC-TV series "The Age of Kings."

New panel to help with thrift reforms

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements has announced the creation of a committee to seek public and legislative support for reforms in the savings and loan industry.

The Savings and Loan Legislative Committee is an outgrowth of the governor's task force on thrifts, Clements said in a statement Thursday. The task force presented its reform proposals to Clements in January.

The panel will help draft legislation based on task force recommendations, promote public awareness of the need for thrift industry reform and lobby the 1989 Legislature for approval of the package, Clements said.

The task force recommended changes in qualifications for the state's savings and loan commissioner and in the composition of the Finance Commission's savings and loan section. It also proposed stronger state regulatory efforts.

"Restoring stability to our savings and loan industry is essential," Clements said. "We must address this problem area of our economy so that the economic recovery in Texas can continue full speed ahead."

Wagner & Brown offer well-received

From Staff and Wire Reports

Wall Street reacted favorably to Midland oilmen Cyril Wagner Jr. and Jack Brown's offer for Insilco Corp. The Meridien, Conn.-based company's stock rose $1.125 to $31⅛ after Insilco's approval of the offer was announced Thursday.

"A major objective of Wagner & Brown has been to diversify beyond their core businesses by acquiring and building upon an industrial enterprise which is recognized as a leader in its markets," said Joel L. Reed, chief executive officer of INR Holdings, and chief financial officer of Wagner & Brown, in a prepared statement released late Thursday.

"Insilco fits perfectly with this objective. We are also attracted to Insilco by the operating management which is in place at the subsidiary companies and by the very qualified senior management at the corporate level," Reed said.

"There is no duplication of management between the existing operations of Wagner & Brown and Insilco, and we believe that an improved entrepreneurial environment, made possible by being a private company, will allow Insilco to expand on its position as a leader in its markets."

The 13 companies operated by Insilco include Rolodex, Red Devil Paints, DAC Software, Taylor Publishing Co., Stewart Stamping and Valentec International.

Neither changes in management and operations nor selling off Insilco operations to finance the deal are part of the plan, according to Reed.

MARKETS

Price drops below $15.50 mark

From Staff and Wire Reports

Oil futures prices finished sharply lower — below the technically critical $15.50 mark — in volatile trading Thursday, as the market hit a bearish downturn after reports of higher OPEC production.

By morning the bearish slide had apparently turned as prices were up a penny in early trading today at $15.32.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, contracts for October delivery of West Texas Intermediate fell 37 cents a barrel to close at $15.31 Thursday.

The October contract for crude oil tumbled on "reports that OPEC production has reached 19.5 million to 20 million barrels a day," said Chris McCormack, an analyst with Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. "The market also broke a key technical level."

Analysts said that once the market hit $15.50 a barrel, negative sentiment took over, sending prices even lower.

The oil futures market has been largely inactive in recent weeks, without much fresh news on supply and demand to guide it. Analysts said Thursday's reports provided the first sign of direction in some time, and speculated that prices could weaken further as the increased oil outflow reaches consuming nations.

"It looks like we're about to start a move to the down side," McCormack said.

Last week, the market focused on developments in the Middle East and a tentative cease-fire between Iran and Iraq. Analysts have speculated that an end to the fighting between the two OPEC nations could mean the fractious 13-member oil cartel would set production limits, thus helping to raise world oil prices.

But on Thursday, analysts said the market reacted to rumors that Iran had refused to go along with a quota proposed by other OPEC members.

Bank toll reaches 90

DALLAS (AP) — Two Texas banks that failed were scheduled to reopen today under new names, federal regulators said.

Federal regulators Thursday closed Highland Park National Bank of Dallas and BancFirst-Westlake, N.A. of Austin, bringing the total number of bank failures in the state this year to 90.

There were 50 bank failures in Texas in 1987. Of the 90 failures this year, 40 were subsidiaries of First RepublicBank Corp. that were taken over by North Carolina-based NCNB Corp. There have been 148 banks that have failed nationwide this year, regulators said.

Deposits and other liabilities of Highland Park National will be assumed by Deposit Guaranty Bank, Dallas.

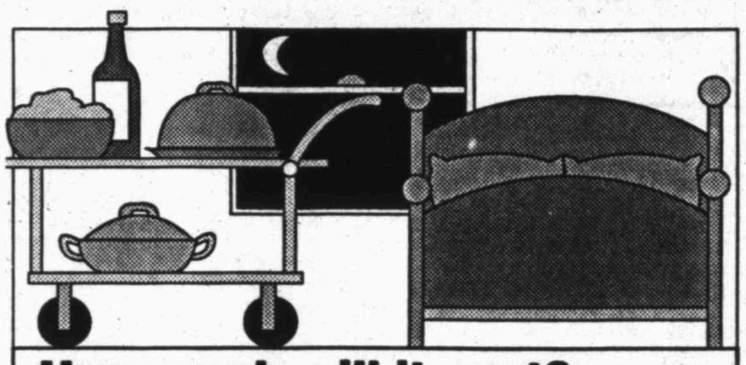

Regulators also approved the assumption of deposits and other liabilities of BancFirst-Westlake by Union National Bank of Texas, Austin.

Each bank's two offices were scheduled to reopen today and depositors of both banks will automatically become depositors of assuming banks, the FDIC said.

Highland Park National had assets of about $28.5 million. Deposit Guaranty will assume about $30.8 million in 3,000 deposit accounts and will purchase $27.8 million of the failed bank's assets at a discount of about $13 million.

BancFirst-Westlake had total assets of about $16.1 million. Union National Bank will assume about $17 million in 2,400 deposit accounts and will purchase $14.7 million of the failed bank's assets at a discount of about $4 million.

The FDIC's board of directors approved the bank assumptions after determining the action would reduce the potential loss to the FDIC than if the assets were liquidated, regulators said.

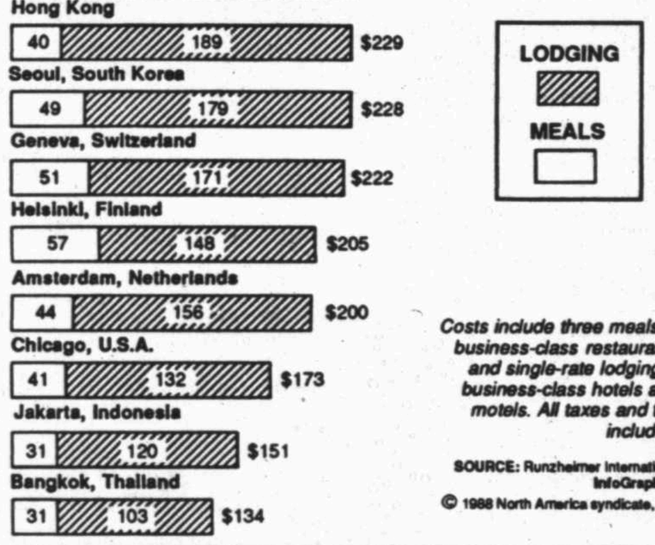

How much will it cost?

The cost of three meals and a night of lodging in business-class restaurants and hotels would cost $372 per day in Tokyo, Japan. On the opposite end of the scale, the same expenditures in Bangkok, Thailand cost $134 per day.

Fliers see return of $99 fare

By MIKE SHERIDAN
Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — The $99 air fare is back — at least temporarily.

That ticket price, a staple of the airline fare wars that ruled the skies several years ago, is being offered here for a limited time by two airlines and matched by a third.

Braniff Inc., which is resuming service in Houston for the third time in as many years, is offering $99 one-way fares from Houston to more than two dozen destinations, including New York, Los Angeles, and Boston.

United Airlines, which begins service from Hobby to Denver, Chicago and Washington on Sept. 7, is offering a similar $99 fare to those three cities.

And Continental Airlines, which controls 70 percent of the traffic at Houston Intercontinental Airport, said it was matching some of the fares offered by Braniff and United on some of its flights.

"We'll match the fares where we have similar service," said a Continental spokesman. "Where we both have non-stops or both have connections, we'll match the fares."

Braniff is offering the low fares to introduce people to Braniff's service, said Don McGuire, a spokesman for the Dallas carrier.

While the $99 fares are appealing, they come with a myriad of restrictions.

European interest hike helps dollar

LONDON (AP) — The dollar held steady against major currencies in calm European trading today as the market reassessed trends following a round of interest rate hikes. Gold prices rose.

Foreign exchange dealers said the dollar was weaker in early trading in Frankfurt but recovering later in European markets after short-covering and profit-taking on long non-dollar positions.

In Tokyo, the dollar fell 0.26 yen to a closing 133.50 yen. Later, in London, it was quoted at 133.75 yen.

Other dollar rates at midmorning, compared with late Thursday's rates:

— 1.8630 West German marks, unchanged from Thursday

— 1.5730 Swiss francs, up from 1.5715

— 6.3332 French francs, up from 6.3275

— 2.1042 Dutch guilders, up from 2.1030

— 1,385.75 Italian lire, up from 1,384.13

— 1.2365 Canadian dollars, up from 1.2342

In London, the British pound was trading at $1.6950, cheaper for buyers than Thursday's late $1.6995.

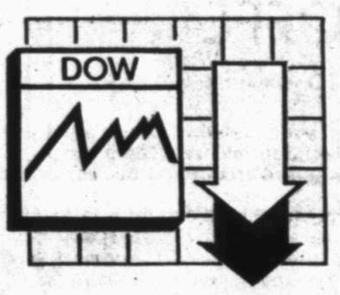

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $433.40 a troy ounce. At midmorning, the City's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $433.75, up from Thursday's late bid of $433.50.

In Zurich, the bid price was $433.80, up from $433.50 bid late Thursday.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold dropped 86 cents to close at a bid $435.24.

Silver was quoted in London today at a bid price of $6.72 a troy ounce, down from $6.77 at Thursday's close.

Stocks retreat on peak anniversary

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market retreated in sluggish trading Thursday, as concerns about rising interest rates resurfaced on the first anniversary of the all-time peak in the Dow Jones industrial average.

A round of interest rate increases overseas and a new U.S. economic report that contained an upward revision in one measure of inflation for the second quarter were cited by analysts as reason for the price slide.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, which climbed 37.34 on Wednesday, lost 15.82 to close at 2,010.85. One year ago, the market's best-known barometer had closed at 2,722.42, its record high.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by more than 2 to 1 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 453 issues up, 998 down and 501 unchanged. The NYSE index fell 0.99 to 146.94.

Volume on the floor of the NYSE came to 127.64 million shares, compared with 127.80 million in the previous session. Nationwide, consolidated volume in NYSE-listed issues, including trading at regional exchanges and on the over-the-counter market, totaled 148.23 million shares.

The Wilshire Associates Equity Index, the market value of NYSE, American and OTC issues, fell $16.52 billion, or 0.63 percent.

Texas among states investigating food claims

CINCINNATI (AP) — Are those products you see on television really fat-free, have no preservatives, contain no sugar? Eight states want to find out whether the claims made by dozens of food companies are misleading.

The states have been cooperating in a summerlong investigation, Norine Olson-Elm, a Minnesota special assistant attorney general, said Thursday. They have not decided how to proceed if they find evidence of false or deceptive advertising, but they ultimately could sue the companies.

"We are not challenging ingredients," Ms. Olson-Elm said from her St. Paul, Minn., office. "We are concerned about advertising and labeling, how products are marketed and promoted to the public."

The states started the investigation because the claims in some of the advertising are not covered by federal law, Ms. Olson-Elm said.

Fines would range from $2,500 in California to $25,000 in Minnesota for each violation, she said.

"Consumers interpret light to mean low in calories rather than light in color and texture," Ms. Olson-Elm said. "Light is not defined by federal law. Consumers have no clear perception other than it is a reduction."

Attorneys general in Minnesota, California, Massachusetts, New York, Missouri, Texas, Iowa and Wisconsin are examining advertising that could lead consumers to believe that some products are low in such substances as cholesterol, sugars and fats, The Cincinnati Post reported.

Five companies known to be under scrutiny are Procter & Gamble Co., of Cincinnati; Kitchens of Sara Lee, Deerfield, Ill.; Nabisco Brands, Inc., East Hanover, N.J.; Campbell Soup Co., Camden, N.J.; and Louis Rich Co., Madison, Wis, the newspaper said. Such diverse products as soup, cereal, cheesecake and meats are involved.

Procter & Gamble has been asked to provide information substantiating its claims that its all-vegetable Crisco shortening contains no cholesterol.

Spokesmen for the companies said they stand behind the advertising.

The investigation covers television, radio and print advertising regarding nutrition and such ailments as heart problems, cancer and osteoporosis.

Companies have been asked to provide samples of advertising, Ms. Olson-Elm said.

"We have set different deadlines for each company," she said. "There is no one target date."

One concern of the states is the use of palm oil, which Ms. Olson-Elm said is higher in saturated fat than many other oils.

Although soybean oil is the primary ingredient in P&G's Crisco shortening — advertised as being cholesterol-free — it contains some palm oil.

"Studies indicate that saturated fats in palm oil will increase cholesterol, and therefore we are concerned about palm oil being included in products that are otherwise lower in saturated fats," Ms. Olson-Elm said.

Cholesterol is a fatty substance in the blood that clogs arteries, often contributing to heart attacks.

Palm oil is added to Crisco to give it texture at room temperature, Procter & Gamble spokesman Don Tassone said.

Neimans to purchase Horchow

DALLAS (AP) — A tentative agreement has been reached for the parent of Neiman Marcus to buy Horchow Mail Order Inc., another famous Dallas retailer, officials of Neiman Marcus Group Inc. say.

The two companies announced Thursday they had reached a tentative agreement for the purchase of the $100 million-plus premier catalog sales company.

The final terms have not been settled, officials of Neiman Marcus Group Inc. of Chestnut Hill, Mass., a division of soft drink and cinema conglomerate General Cinema Corp., said.

"The mail-order business has a lot of potential for us, and we've said that about Neiman's mail-order business," said Peter Farwell, Neiman Marcus spokesman. "That's why we're investing in the new distribution center in Las Colinas (near Dallas)."

Neiman's previously announced construction of a 270,000-square-foot distribution center to be opened in May 1989.

Experts watch Farmers Group takeover

By ANDREA ADELSON
New York Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — In winning its bitter, protracted $5.2 billion battle to acquire Farmers Group Inc., BAT Industries has fulfilled its goal to lessen its reliance on tobacco holdings, while the deal may spur more takeover activity in the insurance industry, analysts said Thursday.

Analysts believe Britain's BAT will fulfill its promise to maintain the Los Angeles-based insurer's current structure, business lines and management, including retaining the insurer's chairman, Leo E. Denlea Jr.

Some expansion of Farmers' operations beyond its 26-state Western territory is probable, but it is unlikely that BAT would suggest an ambitious growth plan, they said.

Up to this point, BAT's goals for Farmers are nothing more specific than to "enhance and grow the business," the company's deputy chairman, Brian P. Garraway, said in an interview.

The takeover fight forced Farmers to postpone its own internal plans to expand its territory and improve sales of its life insurance lines, which make up 40 percent of its business.

As uncertainty surrounding the takeover dissipates, strategic planning will be revived with BAT's support, Garraway said.

"BAT doesn't have the knowledge to define the strategy for Farmers," said Roy D. Burry, a tobacco analyst at Kidder, Peabody & Co. in New York.

Frederick T. Sandberg, an analyst Legg Mason Wood Walker Inc. in Chicago, added: "I wouldn't be going in trying to change things around. Farmers has shown a growth rate that's above average and consistent. That's a very valuable statistic."

In fact, BAT's other insurance acquisitions had added little but volatility to its earnings stream.

"The U.K. market would not look favorably" on a purchase without more consistency, said Arend E. Dikkers, an analyst with Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. in New York.

After a week of negotiations, Farmers agreed Wednesday to end its nearly nine-month-long fight to remain independent.

The fight cost the insurer more than $7 million, but Farmers succeeded in obtaining $1 billion more from BAT than the tobacco, paper and retailing conglomerate had initially offered in January.

During the contest, BAT sweetened its offer three times, ultimately increasing its bid 25 percent, to $75 a share, from its original unsolicited $60 a share offer.

The deal requires the approval of Farmers shareholders as well as regulators in the primary states where the insurer does business.

Farmers is to become a subsidiary of Batus Inc., based in Louisville, Ky., the U.S. arm of BAT that owns Marshall Field's department stores and the Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., the cigarette maker.

The acquisition is the largest in California's history, surpassing the $5.1 billion acquisition of the Hughes Aircraft Co. in 1985 by the General Motors Corp.

The deal is also the third-largest U.S. acquisition by a foreign firm, after the purchases of major interests in Shell Oil and Standard Oil for $5.7 billion and $7.6 billion, respectively.

The merger agreement "is potentially signaling that the door's ajar for other foreign entities to buy U.S. underwriters," Sandberg said.

The stock prices of other major insurers that might be considered takeover candidates may well rise in a "sympathy move," he said.

However, the stock market's downturn Thursday obscured any indicationd that that might be the case.

Farmers stock rose 75 cents a share, to close at $69.825 in over the counter trading.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Corporate net profits highest since 1983

WASHINGTON (AP) — Corporations' after-tax profits shot up 11.5 percent from April through June, the biggest advance in five years, the overnment has reported.

The Commerce Department said Thursday that corporate profits rose to an annual rate of $166.6 billion in the second quarter.

The increase, which followed a 2.5 percent rise in the first quarter, was the biggest gain since a 14.5 percent rise in the second quarter of 1983.

Deficit expected below Gramm-Rudman level

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration estimated the budget deficit in the upcoming fiscal year would be low enough to avoid politically painful, automatic spending cuts under the Gramm-Rudman balanced budget law.

But the White House budget chief also warned Thursday that Congress had little room to enact new spending programs before the slashes, totaling at least $10 billion, would have to be invoked.

Agricultural exports up despite drought

WASHINGTON (AP) — The value of U.S. agricultural exports is expected to jump 22 percent to a four-year high of $34 billion this fiscal year, up from $27.9 billion in 1986-87, the Agriculture Department says.

In terms of actual quantity, shipments were forecast Thursday at 146 million metric tons in the year that will end Sept. 30, up 13 percent from last year.

Both the value and quantity estimates were up from the previous USDA forecasts on May 26 of $33.5 billion and 145.5 million tons.

Boeing sells single-year record of 466 jets

SEATTLE (AP) — Boeing Co. officials say the company has set an industry record for commercial jets ordered in a year.

Linjeflyg, a domestic Swedish airline, ordered six 737-500 jetliners and took options on six more, giving Boeing 466 jetliner orders for the year and breaking the old record of 461 planes Boeing set in 1978.

ACTIVITY HIGHLIGHTS

Glasscock reentry flows 229 barrels

From Staff Reports

A recompletion by TERRA RESOURCES, INC. has resulted in new Wolfcamp production in the Dewey Lake South field of Glasscock County.

Terra reentered the No. 4104 Currie, a Strawn producer in the field, recompleting it to flow 229 barrels of crude, 200 Mcfd, and no water on a 10/64 inch choke with a flowing tubing pressure of 650 psi. The well flowed from perforations 8,434 to 8,447 ft., which had been acidized with 4,000 gallons of acid. Gas-oil ratio is 837:1.

Originally drilled to 10,240 ft., where 5 1/2 inch casing was set, the well is plugged back to 8,560 ft.

Formation tops, on ground elevation of 2,650 ft., include the Clearfork at 5,585 ft., Lower Spraberry at 7,030, Dean at 7,860, Wolfcamp at 8,340, and Strawn at 10,105 ft. Pay was topped at 8,434 ft.

Location is 660 ft. from north and east lines of Section 41, Block 35, T-3-S, T&P survey, 11 miles west of Garden City.

★Glasscock plugback

A plugback project by Terra Resources has netted a 229 barrel Wolfcamp producer in the Dewey Lake South field of Glasscock County.

Hunt Oil recompletes Glorieta producer

Another recompletion project — this in Andrews County — has resulted in new Glorieta production in the Block A-34 field for HUNT OIL CO.

The No. 1 DeFord-White Oil Unit, a Lower Glorieta producer in the field, was recompleted to pump 204 barrels of crude, 1 Mcfd and 136 barrels of water from perforations 5,979 to 5,984 ft. The interval was acidized with 1,000 gallons of acid. Gas-oil ratio is 5:1.

Originally drilled to 6,139 ft., where 5 1/2 inch casing was set, the well is plugged back to 6,042 ft.

On ground elevation of 3,205 ft., formation tops include the Yates at 2,857, Grayburg at 4,295, San Andres at 4,620, Glorieta at 5,850, and Lower Glorieta at 6,047 ft. Pay was topped at 5,850 ft.

Location is 2,048 ft. from west and 624 ft. from south lines of Section 13, Block A-34, PSL survey, 13 miles north of Andrews.

Shell adds producers to Wasson (72) field

SHELL WESTERN EXPLORATION & PRODUCTION, INC., Houston, continues to add production to the Wasson (72) field of Gaines and Yoakum County. The company recently completed one new well in the Gaines portion, and three in the Yoakum portion.

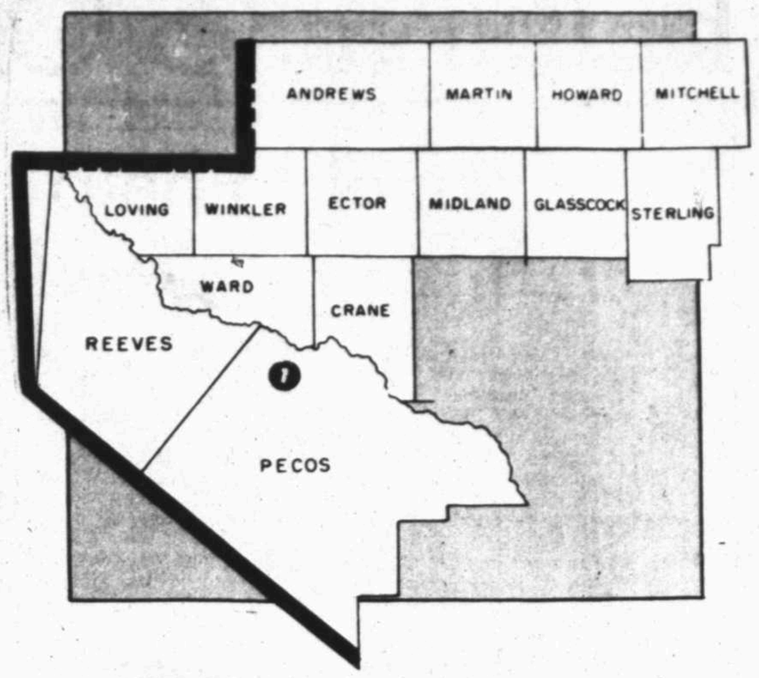

In Gaines County, Shell finaled the No. 6410-G Gaines Wasson Clearfork Unit to pump 16 barrels of 32.5 gravity crude and eight barrels of water from perforations 5,712 to 7,124 ft.

In Yoakum County, the No. 5512-G Gaines Wasson Clearfork Unit was tested to pump 47 barrels of 32.5 gravity crude and 17 barrels of water. Production is from perforations 5,852 to 5,928 ft.

The No. 5808-G Gaines Wasson Clearfork Unit was completed for 13 barrels of 33.6 gravity crude and 88 barrels of water from perforations 6,576 to 7,717 ft.

Shell also potentialed the No. 5809-G Gaines Wasson Clearfork Unit to pump 11 barrels of 33.6 gravity crude and 220 barrels of water from perforations 6,541 to 7,756 ft.

Under Braniff's restrictions, travel must take place between Sept. 12 and Nov. 15. Tickets must be purchased by Sept. 11 and they must be bought within 24 hours after reservations are made. No discounts can be applied to the fares.

"Seats are limited and tickets may be purchased for one-way or round trip travel," said Evie Holland, Texas district sales manager for Braniff.

United, on the other hand, states in its advertising that tickets must be purchased by Sept. 14 for travel between Sept. 7 and Sept. 23. Seats are limited and fares may not be available for all flights.

United is also offering connecting flights to a variety of cities – including Boston – for prices ranging from $109 to $139 one-way.

OFFER

"For a period of at least a year, we intend to maintain the principal offices and facilities of Insilco at their present locations and we intend to operate the businesses in a manner consistent with Insilco's past practices with respect to customers, creditors and suppliers.

"We recognize that the employees are a key to Insilco's future growth and we intend to create a working environment that encourages individual achievement and contributions to the success of Insilco's businesses," Reed concluded.

Under the arrangement announced Thursday, INR Holdings Inc. will pay $31.75 in cash for each of Insilco's outstanding 25.6 million shares. Including debt, the deal has an indicated value of about $1.1 billion, Insilco said in a statement.

The diversified company, founded as the International Silver Co. in 1889, got out of silver completely in 1985 and has concentrated on high-growth aspects of its core businesses — electronics/communications, precicion metal parts, paint, publishing and office products — since then.

In accepting the Wagner & Brown bid, Insilco's board of directors tossed aside a $980 million leveraged buyout proposal the groups had previously endorsed. That offer from present management was back by financing through First Boston Corp.

INR's financing is being coordinated the Merrill Lynch.

PANEL

The eight-member committee will be headed by John Wilson Kelsey of Houston, senior vice president of Drexel Burnham Lambert, Clements said. Kelsey was a member of the Savings and Loan Task Force.

Also named by Clements to the committee were Rep. Bruce Gibson, D-Godley, chairman of the House Committee on Financial Institutions; Sen. O.H. "Ike" Harris, R-Dallas, chairman of the Senate Economic Development Committee; Alan Myers Jr., chairman of the Olney Savings Association and immediate past president of the Texas Savings and Loan League.

Also Dan Matheson, partner in an Austin law firm; Charles Teeple IV, chairman of Windsor Savings in Austin and a member of the Savings and Loan Section of the Texas Finance Commission; William Sechrest, partner in a Dallas law firm; and Mike Toomey, the governor's deputy chief of staff and former House member.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Conservative approach is proper performance

By BILL DOYLE

Q. I participate in a "performance sharing plan" at work. I put 14 percent of my gross salary into the plan and have the choice of investing my contribution in either an equity mutual fund, a fixed-income mutual fund or a money market mutual fund. I am putting 50 percent of my contribution into the equity fund and 50 percent into the fixed-income fund.

Is this wise, considering that I have seven years before retirement?

A. Your investment choice has to be counted as wise and in line with general recommendations for people at your stage in life.

Equity mutual funds hold common stocks. Most such funds have shown good gains in value over the long haul, although they sometimes take drastic dips — as happened in 1987.

Fixed-income funds hold bonds, preferred stocks and other securities paying steady income. As such, they are less risky but have lower profit potential than equity funds.

Money market funds hold short-term, interest-paying securities and are virtually free from risk.

Doyle

By splitting your investment between equity and fixed-income you have a rather conservative combination. That's fitting for someone approaching retirement.

The rule of thumb is to take risks when you are young and gradually shift into conservative investments as the years roll by. In your case, I'd recommend moving some of your plan money into the fixed-income fund and/or the money market fund in about two years.

There's no sure formula, because no one can predict future prices of stocks and mutual funds holding stocks. However, when retirement time arrives, it's usually wise to have no more than 25 percent of your investments in equities.

Q. You have pointed out that tax-free money market mutual funds have lower yields than taxable money market mutual funds, because tax-free investments pay lower interest than taxable investments.

But why is there such a wide discrepancy between the yields on different taxable money market mutual funds? I see one with a 7.71 percent yield and others with yields of 7.24, 6.22 and 6.14 percent.

A. In many cases, it's because those with low yields are "government-only" money market funds. That type of fund limits its investments to U.S. Treasury bills and other short-term debt obligations guaranteed or backed by our federal government, its agencies or instrumentalities. Such securities pay lower interest than investments held by "general purpose" money market funds.

Past that, there can be two other reasons.

One has to do with the brains of the people managing each fund. If a particular money market fund's management is smart — or lucky — enough to pick the right investments at the right time it will collect high interest to pass on to fund shareholders as high yield.

The other has to do with fund operating expenses. Let's say XYZ Money Market Fund and QRS Money Market Fund hold exactly the same securities as investments, producing 8 percent annual interest. Let's also say annual operating expenses are 1 percent at XYZ Fund and 2 percent at QRS Fund. Shareholders will get a 7 percent yield from XYZ Fund and only 6 percent from QRS Fund.

Q. My broker claims I am too heavily invested in municipal bond mutual funds from which I collect tax-exempt income. He wants me to transfer into insurance company annuities. What do you think?

A. Your letter provides no details of your overall financial situation. We'll have to assume your broker knows how you're fixed, your investments and your tax situation. Perhaps you should move out of municipals. But why switch from sure tax-exempt investments into annuities, which might not retain their tax preference when Congress passes the next tax law?

My suspicious mind comes up with the thought that your broker's suggestion is influenced by the commission he would collect if you go along with him.

Iran-Iraq Cease-Fire Talks

Main issues at-a-glance to be discussed Aug. 25, 1988

Prisoners of War:
The release and repatriation of up to 80,000 POWs from Iraq and Iran immediately after the cessation of active hostilities.

War Guilt:
Establish an impartial body to investigate responsibility for conflict. Iran expects Iraq to be branded the aggressor for a Sept. 22, 1980 invasion, but Iraq says it acted after assassination attempts against its leaders.

Reparations:
A comprehensive and just settlement of reparations, which earlier this month an Iranian newspaper estimated at $600 billion. Iraq has no official assessment of war damages.

Borders:
Withdraw all forces to internationally recognized borders without delay. Iran holds that the 737-mile common border was delineated in a 1975 treaty concluded between the two countries during Shah Reza Pahlavi's rule.

Iran, Iraq continue U.N.-led peace talks

GENEVA (AP) — Iran and Iraq today returned to the negotiating tables for talks aimed at ending their 8-year-old war, but they abandoned face-to-face talks for the time being and met in separate chambers with U.N. officials.

Continuing direct talks, which began Thursday, still would be difficult, U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar said.

"It is too early for alone face-to-face," he told reporters before the meeting. "Even face-to-face with me alone ... still would be very difficult." Problems between Iran and Iraq have lasted centuries, "and then it is not in one afternoon that we can decide," he said.

The morning meetings with Iranian Foreign Minister Ali Akbar Velayati and Iraqi Foreign Minister Tariq Aziz lasted two hours and were to resume in the afternoon.

The session began Thursday with a joint session led by the secretary-general, and both sides addressed each other through intepreters. It was the first face-to-face meeting of foreign ministers since the Persian Gulf war began in September 1980.

But after two hours the session was suspended, and both sides met in separate chambers for three more hours, with U.N. officials meeting them and reporting to Perez de Cuellar.

The format of separate rooms was continued today, U.N. spokesman Francois Giuliani said. The secretary-general first met separately with each minister, then the delegations consulted in separate rooms, he said.

U.N. officials, based in another room, occasionally visited the delegations and Perez de Cuellar at times also met the delegations separately.

Meanwhile, a small group of Iraqi Kurds and other Iraqi opposition groups demonstrated outside the building and protested the Baghdad government's use of chemical weapons on its rebellious Kurdish minority.

There was no word on progress in today's talks, but on Thursday Giuliani denied that separate meetings indicated a snag in the talks.

Iraq had demanded the direct, face-to-face talks before a cease-fire to test Iran's intentions. Iran refused and both sides agreed on direct talks shortly after the halt in hostilities.

"I am sure the parties sincerely want to solve the problem," Perez de Cuellar said today. "(But) I think we have to be a little patient."

He said the arrangement was made at the request of the two countries. "I would prefer to have them all the time in the main room with me." But, he said, "I have to accommodate myself to the wish of the parties."

The talks began about one hour late. Velayati declined to answer questions from reporters waiting at the entrance of the building. The bulk of the Iranian delegation had arrived earlier, on time for the meeting.

Giuliani denied reports by U.N. officials that the secretary-general was considering appointing former Swiss President Kurt Furgler as his special representative to continue the Iran-Iraq talks.

He also dismissed a Swiss Radio report that Edouard Brunner, the No. 2 in the Swiss Foreign Ministry, would be appointed. He said if Brunner is appointed Swiss ambassador to Washington, "There is no question of the secretary-general appointing him as his personal representative," Giuliani said.

Brunner is being considered for the post, but if appointed, he would not take the position until next year.

The peace process is expected to be long and difficult, possibly lasting years. The direct talks were made possible after Iran and Iraq both accepted U.N. Security Council Resolution 598, calling for a cease-fire.

Before the talks began, Perez de Cuellar held several meetings with Aziz and Velayati in New York. The warring sides agreed to hold direct talks following a cease-fire that began Aug. 20.

Polish mechanics join strike

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Mechanics joined hundreds of other workers on strike at a steel mill in southeastern Poland, and police backed off after staging a massive show of force around a strikebound coal mine, labor leaders said today.

Poland's powerful Roman Catholic bishops urged the government to renounce force in settling strikes around the country and reiterated their stand that the government should allow free trade unions — a key demand of strikers.

Ewa Kuberna, a spokeswoman for the outlawed Solidarity free trade union, said about 3,000 workers were occupying the Stalowa Wola steel mill. She said the mechanics joined other strikers late Thursday and that the mill was shut down.

Workers arriving for the first shift today were turned away by management, Kuberna said.

In the coal mining region of Silesia, police briefly surrounded the July Manifesto mine near Jastrzebie late Thursday, Solidarity activists said. Robert Kozak, a Solidarity spokesman in Warsaw, said about 100 police vehicles, some equipped with water cannons, surrounded the mine where a strike spawned Poland's worst labor unrest since 1981.

Kozak said police drove up to the main gate and turned flood lights on the compound, which has been occupied by strikers for 11 days.

He said security forces made no attempt to enter the mine, where an estimated 600 workers remained holed up. Police left a short time later, Kozak said.

"Intimidation and force must be abandoned, and the reasonable voice of all the citizens of the country must be loyally acknowledged," the bishops said in their first statement on the strikes that began Aug. 16.

They implicitly criticized the government for not meeting agreements signed with workers during the 1981 unrest, saying "The social accords signed eight years ago and developed with such difficulty remain a task to be fulfilled."

Earlier Thursday, three strikes crumbled in Silesia and steel workers gave up an on-again, off-again strike in the Nowa Huta steel mill outside Krakow.

Strikes continued along Poland's Baltic coast, in the major ports of Gdansk and Szczecin, and at least two coal mines, in addition to July Manifesto, remained crippled by strikes.

The strikers are demanding legalization of the Solidarity trade union federation and better wages.

An 11 p.m. to 5 a.m. curfew was in effect in Jastrzebie, at the heart of the coal mine strikes. Provincial officials decreed Thursday that non-residents were not permitted in the town.

One strike committee member said riot police beat at least six miners when they forced strikers to evacuate three paralyzed mines Wednesday night, including the Borynia mine in Jastrzebie and the Morcinek mine in nearby Kaszyce.

But at least 20 people remained barricaded underground at the third mine, the Mosczenica, witnesses said.

The state news agency PAP said strikes ended Thursday at three other shafts — the Krupinski, ZMP and First of May.

Strikes continued in only three mines, down from 12 at the beginning of this week. Still strikebound were the July Manifesto, Jastrzebie and 30 Years of People's Poland mines, the first to declare strikes.

The Gdansk port, the country's busiest, remained totally shut down, according to reporters. But the state-controlled media said parts of the port were working.

Gdansk's port director issued an ultimatum that dockworkers would be fired unless they signed statements that they are not on strike.

At the 30,000-worker Nowa Huta steel mill, workers who tried to start a strike Wednesday idled various departments for 24 hours. The last strikers gave up Thursday afternoon, said Stanislaw Handzlik, a member of the plant's Solidarity organizing committee.

Tentative talks began Thursday at the strikebound Szczecin port between a strike committee and management.

But Jozef Kowalczyk, a spokesman for the strikers, complained that even while talks were going on, two ships containing security troops menaced the dockworkers by sailing near the docks, although the troops didn't land.

Official accounts made no mention of a police role in ending any strike, saying only that strikers gave up and reporting preparations to restart work.

Francinek Cichon, a member of the Morcinek strike committee, said six men at Borynia were beaten as well as men at Morcinek, but that no strikers needed hospitalization. There were some detentions, he said.

Also Thursday, U.S. congressional staffer Michael Hammond announced that the Congress would soon approve a $1 million grant to help Solidarity, which was outlawed by the Polish government in 1982.

Hammond was in Krakow, at a gathering of more than 600 activists from East and West.

600 activists discuss human rights

KRAKOW, Poland (AP) — More than 600 activists from East and West came together for an unofficial human rights conference Thursday, while the government confronted workers striking to legalize Solidarity.

Solidarity leader Lech Walesa was scheduled to give the opening address at the conference, one of the largest ever held in an East bloc country. But he sent his apologies, saying he could not come because he was holed up with other strikers at the Lenin shipyard in Gdansk.

"The highest necessity forces me to stay away," the 1983 Nobel Peace Prize laureate wrote to conference participants. "I am taking part in a strike to defend human and workers' rights.

"I believe that the epoch of totalitarian systems based on violations of human rights seems to be coming to an end in this part of the world."

Also at the conference Thursday, U.S. congressional staffer Michael Hammond announced that the Congress would soon approve a $1 million grant to help Solidarity, which was outlawed by the Polish government in 1982. Solidarity was the first independent labor movement in the East bloc.

Hammond, general counsel to the Senate Steering Committee, which does research and provides support for Conservative members of the chamber, said the United States already has provided two such grants to Solidarity.

He called on the Polish government to legalize the trade federation.

"Any improvement in relations between the U.S. and the government of Poland must be predicated on an improvement in the human rights situation in Poland," Hammond said. "I can tell you with authority that this means Solidarity must be legalized."

The conference opened in a church in Nowa Huta, an industrial suburb of Krakow in southern Poland, a region at the hub of the current strikes that began 10 days ago. Nowa Huta is also home of the sprawling Lenin steel mill, where police violently broke a major strike in May.

The conference was organized by Solidarity's Commission of Intervention and Lawfulness, which monitors human rights in Poland, and the outlawed peace group Freedom and Peace. It is scheduled to end Saturday.

Poland was represented at the conference by filmmaker Andrzej Wajda, literary critic Jan-Jozef Lipski and senior Solidarity adviser Bronislaw Geremek. Miner Adam Giera came to deliver a message from striking miners in the city of Jastrzebie, about two hours away.

American guests included Jeri Laber, executive director of the U.S. Helsinki Watch Group; and Boston Mayor Raymond Flynn.

Conference organizers invited government officials, including Interior Minister Gen. Czeslaw Kiszczak. But only a lower-level official from the ministry came, and he made no statements.

Students from Warsaw University demonstrate in sympathy with striking miners and coastal workers as a wave of labor unrest continues in Poland.

Survivor leads effort to remember Stalin victims

By ANDREW KATELL

MOSCOW (AP) — Pain and suffering were written on the face of Emmanuel Kotlyar as he stressed to prominent political and cultural figures the importance of building a center to chronicle the millions — like himself — who fell victim to Josef Stalin.

The frail man of 80 said he spent 14 years in a labor camp after being arrested in 1929 on trumped-up charges, and hoped he would live to see the building completed.

"We aren't doing it for us, but for the future generation," to prevent a repetition of the terror, the balding Kotlyar said, his body shaking, his voice trembling.

Kotlyar stood with a cane at a microphone Thursday night in a packed auditorium.

For 2½ hours, about 200 intellectuals at the Union of Architects headquarters brainstormed about what a monument to Stalin's victims should look like, where it should be built and whether it should be accompanied by a center that would study the repressions.

No formal program or plan came out of the session, which brought together the main forces behind the drive to put up a monument to Stalin's victims: the informal group Memorial; officials of theatrical, film and architect unions, Ogonyok; and the weekly newspaper Literaturnaya Gazeta.

There was no agenda, and those interested in speaking simply took the microphone.

"We are tired of monuments," said Kotlyar. "We have so many of them. We need a center."

One of the center's main tasks, he said, should be to answer the question of how many people were killed and imprisoned by Stalin from the 1930s to 1950s.

Those in the audience included Andrei Sakharov, one of the founders of the country's dissident movement. Seated nearby was Sergei Grigoryants, who publishes an unsanctioned journal called "Glasnost," named after Mikhail S. Gorbachev's policy of openness.

Groups in the Baltic republics and the Siberian city of Chita are raising money for local monuments to Stalin's victims.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Boy injured as man fires on Palestinians

JERUSALEM (AP) — A man opened fire on fellow Palestinians blocking a West Bank road and wounded a 14-year-old boy, witnesses and army officials said today.

Another 14-year-old, Aymen Yammen, died today from a gunshot wound he suffered Aug. 15 during clashes in the West Bank village of Tal near Nablus, officials at Jerusalem's Mukassed Hospital said.

His death brought to 254 the number of Palestinians killed since the uprising began Dec. 8. Four Israelis have died.

The army maintained curfews on six towns and refugee camps in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip.

It also closed a trade union in Arab east Jerusalem for a year, alleging its members held meetings to initiate anti-Israeli protests, a spokesman said. It was the 10th union to be closed since the Arab uprising began Dec. 8.

Chess player defecting

LONDON (AP) — Romania's top chess player says he has asked for political asylum, contending Romanian officials harassed him after he refused to play a tournament in a city he says is contaminated with radioactive waste.

"The (Romanian Chess) Federation wanted to force me to do things which were against the interests of my health and my family," Mihai Suba told a Thursday news conference in the British capital, where he is playing a tournament. "They tried to get to this point by blackmail, by threatening me."

"It's not a pleasure," the 41-year-old chess grandmaster said of his defection. He has also asked for asylum for his 14-year-old son Christian, who is accompanying him.

"It's a necessity. It was unavoidable. I think it was the last opportunity, at least with somebody of my family," he said.

His wife, Sanda, 39, and a 9-year-old son, Viktor, remain in the Romanian capital of Bucharest. He said he hoped his wife would eventually be able to join him in London.

He said Romanian authorities tried to punish him because he refused to compete in a tournament in the Black Sea resort of Eforia. He claimed the area was contaminated with major radioactive deposits that threatened the health of the inhabitants.

Korean talks collapse

PANMUNJOM, Korea (AP) — North Korea and South Korea today failed to clear the way for full-scale talks on sharing the Olympics and on a non-aggression pact, and both sides blamed each other for the breakdown.

The only agreement after more than three hours of talks was to meet again Oct. 13 after the Olympics to continue talks on easing tension.

The two five-member delegations of legislators shook hands and smiled before the meeting at the Panmunjom truce site, which straddles the neutral Demilitarized Zone separating the two Koreas.

But delegates later blamed each other for failing to resolve the dispute over the Olympics, to be held in Seoul Sept. 17-Oct. 2.

Cuba using poison gas

LONDON (AP) — Cuba is using poison gas to flush out South African-backed Angolan guerrillas from their rural strongholds, according to a U.N. expert quoted in a British defense publication.

Jane's Defense weekly quoted Aubin Heyndrickx, head of toxicology at the University of Ghent in Belgium and a U.N. expert on biological and chemical warfare, as saying evidence based on environmental samples shows Cuba is using the lethal mixture of mustard gas and nerve gases.

Soil, leaf and water samples taken from Angolan battle zones in April showed clear traces of the gases, Heyndrickx was quoted as saying.

Jane's Defense weekly is an authoritative publication dealing with military matters worldwide.

Lawmakers back at work

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Lawmakers facing a Sept. 1 deadline for certifying a new Chamber of Deputies returned to work early today before an empty public gallery following a stormy debate that one legislator said was proof of democracy.

Opposition legislators walked out just before dawn Thursday after a rowdy, all-night session of the chamber, sitting as an electoral college to certify results of the July 6 general election.

When the meeting resumed, the public galleries were closed, although the press was allowed in.

Opposition sympathizers earlier Thursday chanted, whistled, threw coins and other objects and rose to comment on what in the past have been staid sessions endorsing sweeping victories by the governing Institutional Revolutionary Party, or PRI.

Convoy's claims disputed

REYNOSA, Mexico (AP) — While the Veterans' Peace Convoy says it crossed five vehicles into Mexico at this port of entry last weekend, Mexican officials say it did not.

And a U.S. Customs spokesman says the agency does not know if the activist group crossed the border here en route to Nicaragua.

"No permit was granted for such a convoy to travel through Mexico en route to Nicaragua," Jorge Gonzalez Nassar, Mexico's Customs tourist development chief in Reynosa told the McAllen Monitor.

Convoy coordinator Gerry Condon told The Associated Press in a telephone interview Thursday from the convoy's Washington, D.C., office that the five vehicles did cross, and were in southern Mexico on Tuesday, when he last spoke with the drivers.

Swimmer crosses lake

MOSCOW (AP) — American endurance swimmer Lynne Cox crossed Siberia's Lake Baikal today in four hours and 20 minutes, the official Tass news agency reported.

In a brief dispatch from the city of Irkutsk near the crescent-shaped lake that is the deepest in the world, Tass said the 31-year-old resident of Los Alamitos, Calif., swam about 11.25 miles in 52-degree water.

She began at Tolstoy Cap and finished at the lakeside village of Listvyanka in good physical condition, the news agency said.

"It was the first time in history that such a long swim was accomplished in the icy waters of Baikal," Tass said.

Colombian base raided

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — About 300 leftist guerrillas destroyed a military base and police headquarters in a village attack that killed 39 people, the deadliest raid by guerrillas in several years, the Defense Ministry said.

A ministry statement said Thursday that 15 guerrillas, 12 civilians, 10 soldiers and two policemen were killed. At least 10 civilians and soldiers were wounded and an unknown number were missing after Wednesday's raid, the communique said.

Phoenician tomb discovered on Italian island

SANT'ANTIOCO, Sardinia (AP) — A Phoenician tomb from the sixth century B.C. has been discovered on this island off the southern coast of Sardinia, archaeologists say.

The tomb, untouched by grave-robbers, was located in the past few days during an excavation in the necropolis of the ancient town of Sulci.

The tomb contained the remains of five bodies, 60 vases, one golden earring, a number of glass necklaces and three stone scarabs, said archaeologist Paolo Bernardini.

NOTICE OF BOND ELECTION

THE STATE OF TEXAS

COUNTY OF MIDLAND

CITY OF MIDLAND

TO THE RESIDENT QUALIFIED ELECTORS OF THE

CITY OF MIDLAND, TEXAS:

TAKE NOTICE that an election will be held in the City of Midland, Texas, on the 17th day of September, 1988, in accordance with a resolution and order adopted by the City Council which is a part of this notice for all purposes and reads as follows:

A RESOLUTION AND ORDER by the City Council of the City of Midland, Texas calling a bond election to be held within the City of Midland, Texas, making provision for the conduct of the election and resolving other matters incident and related to such election.

50 LEGAL NOTICES

WHEREAS, the City Council of the City of Midland, Texas hereby finds that an election should be held to determine whether said governing body shall be authorized to issue bonds of said City in the amounts and for the purposes hereinafter identified; not, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED AND ORDERED BY THE CITY COUNCIL OF THE CITY OF MIDLAND, TEXAS:

SECTION 1: An election shall be held on the 17th day of September 1988 in the City of Midland, Texas, which date is not less than fifteen (15) nor more than ninety (90) days from the date of the adoption hereof and the holding of the election on such date rather than on a uniform election date is hereby found to be in the public interest. At such election, the following measures shall be submitted:

PROPOSITION NUMBER 1

"SHALL the City Council of the City of Midland, Texas, be authorized to issue general obligation bonds of the City in the principal amount of $5,400,000 for permanent public improvements, to wit: construction of street improvements including drainage incidental thereto, traffic signalization, and the acquisition of necessary rights-of-way; such bonds to mature serially or otherwise over a period not to exceed FORTY (40) years from their date, to be issued and sold in one or more series at any price or prices and to bear interest at any rate or rates (fixed, floating, variable or otherwise) as shall be determined within the descretion of the City Council at the time of issuance or sale of the bonds; and whether ad valorem taxes shall be levied upon all taxable property in the City sufficient to pay the annual interest and provide a sinking fund to pay the bonds at maturity?"

PROPOSITION NUMBER 2

"SHALL the City Council of the City of Midland, Texas, be authorized to issue general obligation bonds of the City in the principal amount of $3,500,000 for permanent public improvements, to wit: constructing, enlarging, extending and installing storm sewage drains and drainage facilities in and for said City; such bonds to mature serially or otherwise over a period not to exceed FORTY (40) years from their date, to be issued and sold in one or more series at any price or prices and to bear interest at any rate or rates (fixed, floating, variable or otherwise) as shall be determined within the descretion of the City Council at the time of issuance or sale of the bonds; and whether ad valorem taxes shall be levied upon all taxable property in the City sufficient to pay the annual interest and provide a sinking fund to pay the bonds at maturity?"

PROPOSITION NUMBER 3

"SHALL the City Council of the City of Midland, Texas, be authorized to issue general obligation bonds of the City in the principal amount of $4,200,000 for permanent public improvements and public purposes, to wit: acquiring or improving, or both, land for park purposes; such bonds to mature serially or otherwise over a period not to exceed FORTY (40) years from their date, to be issued and sold in one or more series at any price or prices and to bear interest at any rate or rates (fixed, floating, variable or otherwise) as shall be determined within the descretion of the City Council at the time of issuance or sale of the bonds; and whether ad valorem taxes shall be levied upon all taxable property in the City sufficient to pay the annual interest and provide a sinking fund to pay the bonds at maturity?"

PROPOSITION NUMBER 4

"SHALL the City Council of the City of Midland, Texas, be authorized to issue general obligation bonds of the City in the principal amount of $4,300,000 for public purposes, to wit: public safety facilites and equipment including radio and data center; such bonds to mature serially or otherwise over a period not to exceed FORTY (40) years from their date, to be issued and sold in one or more series at any price or prices and to bear interest at any rate or rates (fixed, floating, variable or otherwise) as shall be determined within the discretion of the City Council at the time of issuance or sale of the bonds; and whether ad valorem taxes shall be levied upon all taxable property in the City sufficient to pay the annual interest and provide a sinking fund to pay the binds at maturity?"

SECTION 2: Voting machines shall be used at the polling places on the day of the election and for absentee voting by personal apperance. Paper ballots shall be used for absentee voting by mail. The voting machines shall be arranged and the paper ballots prepared in accordance with V.A.T.S., Election Code, and permit electors to vote "FOR" or "AGAINST" the aforesaid measures which shall appear on the ballot substantially as follows:

PROPOSITION NUMBER 1

"THE ISSUANCE OF $5,400,000 GENERAL OBLIGATION BONDS FOR STREET IMPROVEMENTS"

PROPOSITION NUMBER 2

"THE ISSUANCE OF $4,200,000 GENERAL OBLIGATION BONDS FOR PARKS"

PROPOSITION NUMBER 4

"THE ISSUANCE OF $4,300,000 GENERAL OBLIGATION BONDS FOR PUBLIC SAFETY FACILITIES AND EQUIPMENT"

SECTION 3: The City shall be divided into nineteen (19) election precincts for this election and the polling places designated for each election precinct and the persons hereby appointed to serve as Presiding Judge and Alternate Presiding Judge for each polling place are shown in Exhibit "A" which is attached hereto and incorporated herein by reference as a part hereof for all purposes.

The Presiding Judge shall appoint not less than two (2) nor more than ten (10) qualified clerks to serve and assist in holding said election; provided that if the President Judge herein appointed actually serves, the Alternate Presiding Judge shall be one of the clerks.

On election day, the polls shall be open from 7:00 A.M. to 7:00 P.M.

Absentee voting shall be conducted at the County Election Administrator's Office at 709 West Washington Avenue, Midland, Texas 79701, in accordance with the provisions of V.T.C.A., Election Code.

For purposes of processing ballots cast in absentee voting, the following persons are appointed to the Absentee Ballot Board for this election:

Robert Paxton, Presiding Judge and Evelyn Gould, Alternate Presiding Judge.

SECTION 4: All resident qualified electors of the City shall be permitted to vote at said election, and on the day of the election, such electors shall vote at the polling place designed for the Election Precinct in which they reside. This election shall be held and conducted in accordance with the provisions of V.T.C.A., Election Code and Chapter 1 of Title 22, V.A.T.C.S., and as may be required by law, all election materials and proceedings shall be printed in both English and Spanish.

SECTION 5: A substantial copy of this resolution and order shall serve as proper notice of said election. Said notice, including a Spanish translation thereof, shall be posted at three (3) public places within the City and at the City Hall not less than fourteen (14) full days prior to the date on which said election is to be held, and be published on the same day in each of two successive weeks in a newspaper of general circulation in said City, the first of said publications to appear in said newspaper not more than thirty (30) days and not less than fourteen (14) full days prior to the day of the election.

PASSED AND APPROVED, this the 12th day of July, 1988.

Private Party Automotive Advertising

GUARANTEED RESULTS

Classified Means Advertising Results!

...and to prove to you the power of classified advertising, the Midland Reporter-Telegram is offering a limited time special for in-column private party automotive advertising with "Guaranteed Results" at a super low rate for a minimum 3 line ad or greater. We are so confident of the result-getting power of classifieds that we are offering a "Guaranteed Results Program" which assures the sale of your vehicle or we will run your ad FREE for 10 additional days.

Ad Prices:
3 Lines = $12.00
4 Lines = $16.00
5 Lines = $20.00
6 Lines = $24.00
7 Lines = $28.00
AND UP at .40¢ Per Line For 10 Days.

TO QUALIFY for the Guaranteed Results Program:
1.) The ad must contain no more than one (1) vehicle.
2.) The vehicle must be priced.
3.) Cancellations are allowed at any time, however, no refunds or rate adjustments are given for ads cancelled prior to the expiration date of the first 10 days scheduled.
4.) In the unlikely event that your vehicle does not sell within 10 days, call us within 48 hours and reduce the selling price of the vehicle 10% at which time your ad will be re-scheduled FREE OF CHARGE for 10 additional days. If the advertiser elects to re-advertise the vehicle at original price they may do so at the regular private party open rates.
5.) We reserve the right to determine fair market value of your vehicle.
*Guaranteed Results Program rates apply to private party, non-commercial, non-contractual advertisers of vehicles for sale. All other classifications such as pets, real estate, etc. are excluded. The ad must run a minimum of 10 days.

A NICE, CLEAN, QUIET PLACE to call "Home"...

We are a mid-size, well maintained apartment complex. Each unit (one, two, or three-bedroom) has a good floor plan, freshly painted walls, good carpet and drapes and modern appliances.

We do not have the fancy "extras" of a newer complex, because we were built before the big oil boom. This means that you won't find fireplaces, tennis courts, club houses, or many patios. But you WILL FIND a nice apartment, lovely pool, well landscaped grounds, plenty of private parking, and a maintenance crew that not only knows what it's doing, but is courteous while doing it!

You will not have to contend with screaming stereos or inconsiderate neighbors. Most of our residents are mature folks or young family types who enjoy a quiet life-style in a residential setting.

We have two spacious, easy-to-get-to laundry rooms with very reasonable coin machine rates. We have NO washer/dryer hook-ups in the apartments, but WITH THE MONEY YOU'LL SAVE ON THE ELECTRICITY THESE USE, (plus your free t.v. cable) you could easily pay for your own microwave oven, overhead fans, or a new television set.

Rents range from $195-$375 a month depending on the size and number of bedrooms, and we do give discounted rents to those tenants 50 years of age or better.

If you're looking for an unfurnished apartment where you can relax and enjoy your home, then give us a call.
