

At least 41 die on Texas highways

By The Associated Press
At least 41 people died in traffic accidents in Texas during the Labor Day weekend, and law enforcement officials said the grim toll probably would rise as travelers headed home.

The counting period for the holiday death toll runs from 6 p.m. Friday to midnight Monday. The Department of Public Safety had predicted that 47 people would be killed in motor vehicle accidents in the state during that time.

Fifty people died in accidents last year during the Labor Day weekend, and eight more died later from injuries suffered during the holiday period.

The DPS said the deaths this year included:
—Fred Wall, 17, of Plano, killed when the car he was driving rolled over in Plano at 1:15 a.m. Monday.

—William Strozier Routh, 50, of Houston, killed when the car he was driving ran off the road at 5:40 a.m. Monday about one mile south of Boerne on Interstate 10 in Kendall County.

—Burl Lee McNew, 17, of Kennett, Mo., killed when the car he was driving was involved in a three-vehicle crash at 8 a.m. Monday five miles south of Carthage on U.S. 59 in Panola County.

—Roberta B. Rosenberg, 43, of Miami, Fla., killed when her station wagon rolled over at 9:10 a.m. Monday about 11 miles east of Sheffield on I-10 in Pecos County.

—Mamie B. Turpin, 75, of Dalhart, killed when her car struck two other vehicles on a city street in Dalhart at 2:34 p.m. Monday.

—Lawrence Stanley Medlock, 2, of Houston, who died when the car he was riding in turned over on an unmarked county road about 3 miles south of Groveton in Trinity County at 3:55 p.m. Monday.

Chautauqua: They came in droves, had fun, and began tradition

There was flippin' ...

From sheer exuberance, Benny Bell, a 15-year-old student at Pampa High school, turned a flip over seven youngsters at the Chautauqua, above, and Explorer Scout Kenny Ramey, 17, below, demonstrates the Hopi hoop dance for the thousands of spectators that thronged Central Park. "Chautauqua '82," the Labor Day arts and entertainment festival in Central Park, will be repeated next year.

That's good news to the estimated 8,000 to 9,000 people who came to the event Monday.

It's also good news to F. Lee Cornelison of the Pampa Fine Arts Association, who organized the event.

The association was only expecting about 3,000 people to attend.

Because the numbers were unexpected, Cornelison said today, the crowd was "uncontrollable — but cooperative."

According to police assigned to the event, he said, there was not one report of a disagreeable incident there.

"I've never seen such a mix of citizenry, a conglomeration of income levels and so forth, at one function," he said. "I've never heard of eight or nine thousand people getting together anywhere without even one little fight or something."

Cornelison credits the good weather and the lack of other Labor Day entertainment for the size of the crowds — "we've always been pretty dead on Labor Day," he said — and said the variety of entertainment brought the variety of people.

Chautauqua offered everything from bronze sculptures selling for thousands of dollars (some of which were sold) to free bluegrass music, he said.

And the people didn't even leave a mess.

Cornelison said at closing time he asked attendees to help pick up litter in the park, and "by six o' clock it was cleaner than when we started."

The association "learned a lot" from the event, he said, including ways to eliminate some problems for next year's celebration.

Chautauqua will "allow for more people, more food, and more types of entertainment" next year, he said.

Money from the event will go to the park beautification fund, and help replace some trees on Pampa's public land.

The Fine Arts Association will be "a little over the top" financially after this year's event, Cornelison said, but payment for bands and other groups will cut into that money.

"We can bear the expense this year," he said, "but next year we'll have to have financial help from other organizations."

The main thing missing at the park Monday was more activity for children, according to talks he had with people there.

He said activity on the park's footbridge may be replaced with games for kids next year.

The emphasis next year will still be on arts and demonstrations of art techniques, he said.

He said these exhibitors generated a lot of interest Monday, even though there were more spectacular things going on, like an Indian dance show, a martial arts exhibition, a bluegrass concert.

Cornelison said he would like to "stress the artists, and really keep it an arts festival. The rest of the things are just to fill out the day and provide something for everyone."

One artist who didn't sell anything was still excited about the exposure, he said, and many visitors who came for other reasons found themselves getting interested in demonstrations of painting, woodcarving, glass etching, and wool spinning.

One project that didn't work out was the community painting project under the park's road bridge.

Association members started work on a rainbow design under that bridge to cover up obscene graffiti, and left the rest to kids who could rent brushes and paint Monday.

"It was supposed to be a very neat and orderly signing, but it just got crazy," he said. "But it was still a fun project, and it kept a lot of people entertained."

He said he'd probably work on the mural himself to clean it up a bit this weekend.

Whaley hospitalized; can't go to Austin

By JEFF LANGLEY
Staff Writer

Pampa State Representative Foster Whaley is not in Austin for the special session of the legislature today — he spent Labor Day "laboring with a kidney stone," and is in the hospital today.

The special session was called because the state's unemployment benefits fund is expected to go broke by November, unless the legislators take action to solve the problem (see story page three).

Whaley joined fellow Democrats today in blaming the fund crisis on Texas Governor Bill Clements.

The 66th District Representative from Pampa said state officials warned the governor about the need for action to bolster the fund as early as last November.

Whaley said the special session will cost taxpayers "hundreds of thousands," and he said the session could have been avoided, if Clements had acted sooner.

Terrorists release two hostages in standoff

BERN, Switzerland (AP) — Armed terrorists who are threatening to blow up the Polish Embassy released two elderly women hostages today and met face-to-face for the first time with a government negotiator, a federal police spokesman said.

The raiders, calling themselves "The Polish Revolutionary Home Army," still are holding nine people in the police-encircled embassy, according to federal officials, and are demanding the Polish government lift martial law and release all political prisoners.

They have set a deadline of 10 a.m. Wednesday (4 a.m. EDT).

Ulrich Hubacher, spokesman for the federal Justice and Police Ministry, said a member of the special 24-man crisis team met for an hour with the gunmen in the embassy after nightlong telephone contacts with the terrorists.

He refused to discuss the meeting in detail, but said more face-to-face negotiations were likely.

Late Monday night, the terrorists released a pregnant woman from among the hostages in the white stucco mansion in the middle of Bern's diplomatic sector. The woman, identified by Poles in Bern as Malgorzata Luczak, a clerk-typist at the embassy, was hospitalized for treatment for shock.

Hubacher identified the latest freed hostages only as embassy employees.

"The Swiss government is committed to ending this siege as soon as possible and saving the lives of the hostages," he said. The spokesman refused to say what tactics might be used against the terrorists.

Police have agreed to bring food and water to the door of the embassy building, he said. This morning, a doctor was permitted into the embassy to treat a hostage with hypertension, Hubacher said.

Hubacher scoffed at reports that the Swiss have received permission from Warsaw to storm the embassy, characterizing the claims as "pure interpretation of (Monday's) communique" from the martial-law regime urging Bern to "ensure the security" of Polish diplomats.

The communique, carried by the official Polish news agency PAP, said, "The Swiss ambassador in Warsaw has promised in the face of this act of terrorism, the authorities of his country will take all indispensable measures to restore normal working conditions to the embassy and the security of its staff."

The leader of the terrorists, identifying himself as "Col. Wysocki," told the Associated Press in a telephone interview Monday that his group has 55 pounds of explosives, and machine guns.

He said they would "blow away this shack and everyone in it," if their demands were not met within 48 hours — by Wednesday morning.

Wysocki did not say how many people were in his group. Another member of the band, in an interview with the British Broadcasting Corp., said there were 13. Hubacher said there were at least two gunmen and "probably more."

The Polish government in Warsaw refused to comment on the demands. But the official news agency, PAP, was quick to tie the terrorists to the suspended Solidarity union and its supporters in the West.

PAP said the terrorists' demands were "similar to those addressed to the Polish authorities by Solidarity extremists and by some NATO states which are interested in continued tension in Poland."

Solidarity spokesmen in exile in Europe disclaimed any knowledge of the group. Jerzy Grebski, a spokesman for 13 Solidarity members who have been living in Switzerland since martial law was declared last Dec. 13, issued a statement "deploring this act of terrorism, contrary to the basic ideals" of Solidarity.

Grebski said the Solidarity members were "prepared to help in any way possible" in the negotiations with the terrorists.

But the Swiss government decided, for the time being, not to accept the offer, according to Hubacher.

The terrorist group garbed itself in the rhetoric of Polish patriotism. Its name appeared to be derived from the Home Army, the underground guerrilla group which resisted Nazi occupation during World War II.

Wysocki said the group has 250 members who are preparing attacks against other Polish embassies and missions if their demands are not met.

The big balloon sendoff at closing time didn't work out well, either. With only a "couple dozen" people left to let the balloons go, he said, it was a "token sky painting."

The balloon concession, like almost every other booth at the park, had a waiting line all day, he said.

"Our balloon people couldn't keep the balloons blown up as fast as they were selling them."

The Freedom Riders, a group of five bicyclists who are traveling through all 50 states and collecting letters from local governments for President Reagan, didn't make it to the park until 6:30, he said.

The group "ran into headwinds on I-40 in New Mexico," according to Cornelison. "There were a couple dozen people still around," he said, when the presentation of a letter from County Judge Carl Kennedy was made.

As for the event as a whole, he said, "I'm sure it will grow," partly because of the nature of it — most of the events and exhibits will continue to be free or inexpensive.

"We wanted to fill the park and we didn't want to rip anybody off."

There were problems, too. Things grew tight financially, the couple said, and morning, Cantwell took matters into his own hands. Evelyn said Cantwell called and announced, "Pack your bag; we're going to my folks' in Oklahoma and get married."

In Duncan, Okla., the couple went to his parents' home, and called the preacher out of a movie to read their vows in the sanctuary of the First Baptist Church.

Eight days later, the Cantwells returned to Dallas.

"Mother and Daddy met us and were ecstatic," Evelyn said. "Mother covered us with hugs and kisses. You'd have thought the wedding was all her idea."

The couple moved into an apartment and Cantwell brought home $25 every two weeks. Over the next 13 years, the marriage produced a son, Harold Wayne, and a daughter, Diane.

There were problems, too. Things grew tight financially, the couple said, and

For my next trick, I'll make a clerk and $671, 802 disappear

By LARRY MARGASAK
WASHINGTON (AP) — Soon after John Ian Cowling quit his job at the Australian Embassy last Dec. 11, the Australians discovered they had lost not only a $12,000-a-year clerk, but also $671,802.

A check for that amount was made out to a Florida defense contractor who never received it. The man who processed payment vouchers for the embassy was John Ian Cowling. U.S. prosecutors and the Australian government charge Cowling opened a bank account under the contractors name, diverted the check to it and then withdrew the money, held a farewell bash for his friends in Washington, and lavishly gave away large amounts of cash. Then Cowling bought airline tickets and traveled with a male friend to Mexico and Brazil and later went alone to the Greek island of Rhodes, where he invested in a discotheque.

There, his luck ran out. He was arrested on request of the U.S. and Australian governments and eventually extradited to the United States. He is being held without bail while awaiting trial in U.S. District Court in Washington.

A federal grand jury has charged Cowling with interstate transportation of money taken by fraud; false pretenses; and grand larceny by fraud and trick. If convicted, he could receive up to 23 years in prison.

Cowling's lawyer, Michael P. Goldenberg, is asking the court to dismiss the indictment on grounds that Cowling's constitutional rights were violated in Greece.

According to Goldenberg, Cowling's Greek lawyers charged him thousands of dollars but provided little assistance. He nearly starved during eight months in Greek jails, and a guard beat him once when he asked for water, Goldenberg said.

"He was in fear of his life and had no one to turn to," Goldenberg said in an interview. "During a court proceeding there was no translator and his mother got a cab driver to translate."

At the very least, Goldenberg said, these violations should make inadmissible a statement Cowling gave Greek authorities after his arrest. Prosecutors said in court the statement was a confession.

While the criminal case moves through the U.S. court system, the Australians have undertaken legal efforts to recover their money.

Sources said that $420,000 Cowling left behind in a Brazilian bank has been returned to Riggs National Bank in Washington — where the defendant originally deposited the $671,802. However, only $316,000 has actually come back to Riggs because of a change in the value of Brazilian currency.

The Australians are trying to block funds from leaving bank accounts originally opened by Cowling on Rhodes and later turned over to his mother. And they are asking that the disco and its contents be seized.

The British-born Cowling, 35, had the job of reviewing "claim for payment" forms at the embassy. He would forward the claims to a computer, which issued checks.

Sentencing starts in torture trial

HOUSTON (AP) — A state district judge will consider today what punishment to give a woman convicted of letting her boyfriend kill her 3-year-old son.

State District Judge Dan Walton will set the sentence for Eva Lott, 27, who was convicted last week of murder by omission. Ms. Lott asked that the judge, rather than the jury, assess her punishment.

Jurors deliberated for 3 1/2 hours

Friday, then found Ms. Lott guilty of letting Gary Ray Barber torture her son, Tommy, to death. Barber has been convicted of murder and is serving a life sentence in the slaying.

Ms. Lott faces a maximum penalty of life in prison and a $10,000 fine.

Paramedics were unable to revive the child when they were called April 30, 1981, to the apartment Ms. Lott and Barber shared.

Testimony showed the boy had suffered injuries to his scrotum and rectum; scalding burns over 25 percent of his body; a gash that separated his nose and his upper lip; and cigarette burns, puncture wounds, bruises, cuts and rope burns.

Dr. Ben Raimor, a pediatrician who has researched child abuse cases since 1974, testified that the Lott boy's injuries were the worst he had ever seen that resulted from mistreatment.

"Somebody in the governor's office slipped up. They warned him," the local representative said today.

Whaley said there is a state constitutional question as to whether or not the state can borrow money from the federal government to temporarily add to the unemployment fund.

Borrowing from Washington is the solution favored by most legislators and Speaker of the House Billy Clayton.

Whaley said Texas Attorney General Mark White is expected to issue a ruling on the constitutional question soon.

Clayton's proposal suggests the state borrow funds from Uncle Sam, in order to continue paying benefits to Texas's jobless workers.

Under Clayton's proposal, the loan to the state fund would be repaid through increased employers' tax payments to the unemployment fund.

The proposal would increase the minimum $6 per employee state tax paid by most Texas businesses to $24 per employee, per year, in 1983.

A record number of unemployment claims in Texas is rapidly draining the fund, requiring the special session of the state's elected officials.

Whaley is in Coronado Community Hospital today, undergoing tests to determine the cause of his intense pain.

The representative said preliminary tests indicate kidney stones.

He said he was examined at the hospital, but not admitted, Monday afternoon. However, Whaley said his pain increased after the hospital examination, and he was admitted to the hospital Monday night.

The local representative's district includes all of 11 counties and part of 12th, including Gray County.

New budget (?) discussed tonight

By JEFF LANGLEY
Staff Writer

Though the budget and tax rate for the current year were officially approved by the board August 17th, consideration of the "published tax rate" is again on the agenda for tonight's meeting of the Pampa school board.

Superintendent James Trusty said Thursday he would have "no comment" about the board's new consideration of the previously approved school budget and tax rate.

"I will make a statement at that time," the administrator said then about the need to again discuss school taxes and spending.

However, the school board violated state law in the procedure used to adopt the current tax rate, according to a spokesman with the State Property Tax

Board, and the violation may require the board to start all over in its adoption of the current year's budget and tax rate.

Due to the invalid budget and tax rate, the school district is apparently operating without an official spending plan during the new school year.

The board meeting at 5 p.m. tonight in the Carver Educational Center is open to the public.

Chet and Evelyn try it again after their 44-year divorce fails

DALLAS (AP) — Once wasn't enough for Evelyn Anderson Foster and Chester Cantwell, who remarried 44 years after they exchanged nuptials for the first time and 31 years after they divorced.

"It's a fairy tale," said the bride.

"The best thing that has ever happened to me," said the bridegroom after the Friday night ceremony.

The couple first met in East Dallas in January 1938 when Cantwell ran a Texaco service station. Evelyn, then 19, had graduated from Mesquite High School the year before and often bought gasoline at the station.

The pair only exchanged pleasantries until the morning she went into the station to pay for a soft drink.

"He followed me in, took my money, closed the door and kissed me," she said. "Then he asked me for a date."

After numerous 25-cent movies and late night strolls, the young couple decided it was love. But her parents, the late Nina and Millard Anderson, opposed it. One Monday morning, Cantwell took matters into his own hands.

Evelyn said Cantwell called and announced, "Pack your bag; we're going to my folks' in Oklahoma and get married."

In Duncan, Okla., the couple went to his parents' home, and called the preacher out of a movie to read their vows in the sanctuary of the First Baptist Church.

Eight days later, the Cantwells returned to Dallas.

"Mother and Daddy met us and were ecstatic," Evelyn said. "Mother covered us with hugs and kisses. You'd have thought the wedding was all her idea."

The couple moved into an apartment and Cantwell brought home $25 every two weeks. Over the next 13 years, the marriage produced a son, Harold Wayne, and a daughter, Diane.

There were problems, too. Things grew tight financially, the couple said, and Cantwell was drafted into the Army during World War II and sent to Europe. Upon returning home, he worked nights, while his wife worked days.

"We were under too much of a strain and we didn't know how to cope," she said. "We made each other miserable."

In 1951, the couple divorced.

"It took a year and a half," Evelyn said. "In those days divorce didn't come easy."

The next year, Evelyn married Gerald Foster. He was 24 years older than she, the same age as her father. He died in 1980.

Cantwell lived in Oregon for 12 years before moving to Oklahoma City, where he now resides. He remarried twice. Both wives died.

Neither couple had more children.

Early this spring, Cantwell called his son in Little Rock, Ark. and asked for Evelyn's phone number.

"I picked up the phone," Evelyn said. "and this voice said,

"Do you know who this is?" and I said, 'Chester Cantwell.'"

After 40 phone calls, a reunion in Oklahoma City and approval from various family members, the couple decided to retie the knot Friday night in Dallas.

"They were never out of love," said son Harold Wayne, who served as an honor attendant with his wife, Judy.

Daughter Diane English had left her Austin home for a Colorado vacation and the Cantwells were unable to contact her.

"Is she ever going to be surprised?" said Evelyn.

The Cantwells obviously were happy.

"I just wanted us to get married," said Cantwell. "Here we are with music and flowers and a three-tiered cake and 50 wedding guests!"

"And me in a rose-colored dress drinking pink champagne," said the bride. "I guess we're wearing rose-colored glasses. Isn't it great!"

Wednesday private rocket launch on schedule

MATAGORDA ISLAND, Texas (AP) — Workers are "right on schedule" today for the Wednesday morning launch of the first U.S. rocket to be assembled and launched by a private firm, officials of the company said.

"They've made up the lost time and everything now is right on schedule," said Glen Cole, the daughter of Space Services of America Inc. president David Hannah.

Crews early Monday successfully fired the sixth of a series of small test rockets to check radar and radio communications that will be used when they attempt to launch a 37-foot solid-fueled rocket called Conestoga I. An seventh small test rocket is set for launch today.

The Conestoga will be launched Wednesday morning from the southern tip of this island and roar upward to a point 192 miles over the Gulf of Mexico, carrying a payload of 1,097 pounds. The payload will be sent into a spin and eject about 400 pounds of water, carried as ballast, which will fall as a cloud of ice crystals.

The rocket will splash into the Gulf about 259 miles from the Texas coast after a flight of 10 1/2 minutes.

Mendgen governor for day

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — U.S. Sen. Jesse Helms used ceremonies honoring Texas' governor for a day to lobby for an end to abortion, while 150 protestors marched outside with signs reading "Keep your laws off my body."

Helms, a conservative

Republican from North Carolina, was the keynote speaker at a public reception Monday honoring Walter Mendgen, R-Houston.

Mendgen is the Senate president pro-tempore and serves as governor when Gov. Bill Clements and Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby are out of the state or make themselves scarce.

Wait Pennino, spokesman for the Houston firm, said workers fell slightly behind schedule over the weekend when they discovered a "spurious signal" from some of the electronics aboard the rocket. The problem was corrected and Mrs. Cole said late Monday the launch plans were on schedule.

Conestoga I is built around the second stage motor of the solid-fueled Minuteman missile. Space Services bought the rocket motor earlier this year from the National Aeronautics and Space Administration. The firm then hired an engineering firm to assemble the rocket and to launch it at a total cost of about $2.5 million.

Hannah said last week he thought his company was "on trial" because of a spectacular failure in the first rocket it financed. That rocket, called Percheon, was a liquid-fueled device much more complicated than the Conestoga I.

The Percheon exploded during a pre-launch engine test on the Matagorda Island test pad. The keorsene and liquid oxygen propellant ignited and enveloped the pad in a fireball that shot 200 feet into the air.

Hannah said the accident set his company back by six months and led the firm to select another type of rocket and a different launch team.

The Houston company has 57 investors who hope to develop a launch system capable of putting satellites into low Earth orbit for commercial customers. So far, said Hannah, the company has spent about $6 million and has yet to attract a customer.

Work underway to patch ailing unemployment fund

By GARTH JONES
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Texas lawmakers met today in an attempt to patch up — either temporarily or permanently — the state's jobless tax fund, which has been hard hit by recent layoffs.

The special legislative session was called for 10 a.m., with 181 senators and representatives expected to dispense with most opening ceremonies and go straight into committee hearings.

Gov. Bill Clements, who has asked only for a quick and temporary cure for the expected jobless benefits shortage, says he hopes the session will last only two or three days.

Others, mostly Democrats who would like to embarrass the Republican governor with a hot controversy just before election, want a permanent solution that would not pass the problem on to the 1983 Legislature.

Still others would like Clements to open the session to other subjects.

Rep. Ralph Wallace, a Houston Democrat, said he and about 50 other lawmakers want the session expanded to include utility rate relief. He said legislation has been introduced to prohibit Houston Lighting & Power from charging its customers for a $362 million investment on the canceled Allens Creek nuclear project. Wallace's legislation will get no action unless Clements expands the session.

State Education Commissioner Raymon Bynum has asked Clements to let legislators amend a law that prevents school districts from borrowing money until their property tax rolls are certified and tax rates set. Bynum said numerous school districts, including Houston and Fort Worth, may run out of money because the new property reappraisal program has delayed preparation of tax rolls.

The special session will be the third since the Legislature adjourned its 140-day regular session June 1, 1981.

Clements called the special session because Texas Employment Commission officials said the fund that pays jobless benefits could run dry by November. The fund has been drained at a record rate by layoffs resulting from the recession.

If the present law is not changed before Oct. 1, the minimum $6 per employee state tax paid by most Texas businesses will automatically jump to at least $174 in 1983.

The House Employment Practices Committee conducted public hearings the past week, but made no recommendations since it will handle the same bill after today's opening.

Two bills out of about half a dozen offered seemed to attract the committee's attention — one a "committee substitute" or compromise pushed by Speaker Bill Clayton and a bill by Rep. Lloyd Criss, D-LaMarque. Criss has been an outspoken critic of Clements' handling of the employment tax situation.

Clayton's bill, which was endorsed by the powerful Texas Association of Business, would appropriate $45 million in state funds to pay the interest on loans from the federal fund until a new tax increase could become effective, next April 1. The loan then would be paid back by increasing the $6 minimum to $24 a worker in 1983.

The Texas Legislative Budget Board estimated that, under Clayton's bill, it would take about $370 million in federal loans before the new tax increase would be effective.

Criss' bill, which was opposed by TAB, would levy before Oct. 1 a special surcharge equal to 150 percent of the 1982 payments de by employers. He estimated it would raise $390 million, increasing the present $6 per employee to $9. That would be enough until a tax increase, similar to that in Clayton's bill could become effective, he said. There would be no federal loan.

"If the economy improves in 1983," Criss said, "we would get by with one quick surtax."

Texas AFL-CIO President Harry Hubbard joined the controversy in a Labor Day speech when he urged legislators to act quickly by raising taxes paid by employers.

Union president likens Reagan to Coolidge, Hoover

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — A labor leader contends President Reagan wants a return to the 1920s programs of Calvin Coolidge and Herbert Hoover that spawned a depression, when unemployed workers actually need policies such as Franklin D. Roosevelt's New Deal.

"His prescription is to return to the policies of the 1920s, the policies of Calvin Coolidge and Herbert Hoover that reached their logical conclusion in the Great Depression," national AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland said Monday.

Kirkland and other labor leaders, in town for a Labor Day celebration honoring American trade union pioneer Samuel Gompers, assailed Reaganomics and asked unionists to register their dissatisfaction at the polls on Nov. 2.

"We're seeing 50 years of progress lost. The same forces that Sam (Gompers) was fighting are still around today," said Kenneth Blaylock, national president of the American Federation of Government Employees.

Kirkland and Blaylock spoke at a Labor Day ceremony dedicating a 20-foot-tall statue of Gompers, the founder of the American Federation of Labor who died here in 1924 after becoming ill in Mexico City during an international labor meeting.

Referring to the general election as "Solidarity Day, No. 2," Blaylock said the 15 million AFL-CIO members should go to the polls on Nov. 2 and "take another person with them" to make labor's voice heard.

"Mr. Reagan and his advisors have brought the art of the confidence trickster to the highest councils of government," Kirkland said Sunday night in another prepared speech honoring Gompers.

"First, they pick our pocket and then berate us for stupidly and carelessly losing our wallet. They divert hundreds of billions of dollars from the public treasury into the pockets of private business, and then tell us we cannot afford the basic government programs and services that make us a civilized society," he said.

"They manufacture a recession, and then tell us that business cannot afford affirmative action programs to redress injuries to minority workers and women. They bring us the highest unemployment in 48 years, and then tell us we cannot afford to pay extended unemployment benefits."

Kirkland said Roosevelt's New Deal stabilized the economy, created jobs and restored dignity, but that "Mr. Reagan tell us that these humane and liberating programs are the cause of our economic troubles."

Kirkland said San Antonio's Riverwalk and its zoo — two steady tourist draws — were built by Roosevelt's Works Progress Administration during the New Deal in the 1930s.

"Today, there are as many unemployed Americans as there were in 1934. The minds and muscles and skills that built the Riverwalk are still available, ready, willing and able to enrich their communities and the nation with their work in return for a chance to support their families."

"This priceless asset — what Gompers called 'the manhood and womanhood of our country' — is being squandered by an administration that knows the price of everything in dollars and the value of nothing on the scale of humanity," Kirkland said.

Labor officials and several politicians attended the dedication of the 20-foot tall statue of Gompers, surrounded by 12 seven-foot tall workers, all created by local sculptor Bette Jean Alden.

Police union petitions against hiring of gays

HOUSTON (AP) — A ruling that declared a Texas sodomy law unconstitutional probably inspired a police officer's union here to circulate petitions opposing the recruitment and hiring of homosexuals, says a Houston Gay Political Caucus leader.

Ray Hill, a founder of the local Gay Political Caucus, said Monday the petition probably was drafted in response to last month's ruling in Dallas by U.S. District Judge Jerry Buchmeyer.

The judge struck down the law because it prohibited sodomy between members of the same sex but not between members of the opposite sex.

Mike Wood of the Houston Police Officers Association said the petition was drafted because "we believe that the city is now formulating policy" to recruit and hire homosexuals to this city's 3,000-member police force.

However, Hill said he had heard nothing of plans to recruit gays, and efforts to contact city officials at their homes and offices on the Labor Day holiday were unsuccessful.

Several cities, including Los Angeles, San Francisco and Minneapolis, already are recruiting gays for their police forces, Hill said.

The police union voted unanimously in favor of the petition drive at a meeting Thursday night, Wood said. However, he declined to estimate how many of the union's 2,500 members cast ballots.

The document probably will be presented to Mayor Kathy Whitmire and to city council members, he said.

EVER STRIVING FOR TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessing. For only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that all men are equally endowed by their Creator, and not by a government, with the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property and secure more freedom and keep it for themselves and others.

To discharge this responsibility, free men, to the best of their ability, must understand and apply to daily living the great moral guide expressed in the Coving Commandment.

Those rolling logs continue their pace

It's nice to know in a world where old values are constantly in danger of extinction, where the only constant seems to be change that some practices and institutions endure.

Come budget crunch or military buildup, come tax cut or tax revolt, come changing of the guard in the executive branch or turnover in membership, logrolling continues to be the way Congress does much of its business.

For as long as the memory stretches, members of the armed services committee of both the House and Senate have seen to it that a good deal of the military spending they authorize gets spent where it will do the most good — right back in their home districts.

Some might have thought that the election of Ronald Reagan would change some of that. After all, he promised belt-tightening and an expensive military buildup all at the same time. With the enthusiasm his administration brought to military spending proposals, it might have seemed unlikely that the Armed Services Committee members could discover even more mysteriously unmet needs back home. Surely efforts to increase Reagan's generous proposals would meet with suspicion and public outcry about waste.

Back in 1981, when the fiscal year 1982 military construction bill was being considered, the House Armed Services Committee added $145.5 million over and above what the president requested. By a strange coincidence, $72.3 million was for projects in the districts of the 44 committee members.

The Senate Armed Services Committee, not to be outdone, added $151.63 million to its FY 1982 military construction authorization. All but $18.65 million of this was for projects in states represented by committee members. The Senate appropriations was unkind to these devoted public servants, however, cutting to the very sinews of national defense by denying a total of $48.38 million of these essential projects.

This year, considering the FY 1983 budget, the House Armed Services Committee added $296 million above and beyond what the president had requested for military construction. National interest and self interest were found to coincide with remarkable precision. Almost $172 million of this additional authorization (58 percent) was for projects in the home districts not just of the whole committee, but of the 14-member subcommittee on military installations and facilities.

Presidents may come and go, but Congress keeps its logs rolling along. That may be small comfort in our role as taxpayers. But as sometimes troubled observers of a changing world, we're tempted to take whatever comfort we can get.

Which is better, taxing or reducing?

U.S. Chamber of Commerce president Richard L. Leshner is conducting a private readers' survey to determine how well America agrees with policy direction in Washington. Preliminary results of his unsentimental poll indicate general disagreement with the wisdom of increasing taxes, as Congress did, to reduce budget deficits.

To summarize, respondents told Leshner deficits should be reduced by cutting spending rather than increasing taxes. That business tax incentives are important to spur growth and jobs in the private sector, that environmental regulations can be streamlined without sacrificing health standards and that a constitutional amendment requiring a balanced budget should be passed.

Of several questions posed by Leshner, the two drawing overwhelming agreement involved taxes and spending. To the question, "Which course should Congress pursue to reduce large budget deficits that have been projected for the next several years?" 82.4 percent favored higher taxes, 13.7 percent thought both should be done and less than 1 percent said neither should be done.

Concerning budget cuts, 94.6 percent of the 4,000 respondents believe much deeper spending cuts are possible without jeopardizing the "safety net" of government assistance programs.

Leshner's results are admittedly not scientific, but they carry a message: The majority of Americans do not favor higher taxes. That is especially true when the economy is less than robust.

Renewal of GI Bill must be resisted

Citing the conventional wisdom that educational benefits are good for both the armed services and the nation, many congressmen are now trying to revive plans for a new GI Bill this summer.

01579 Two years ago, it looked certain that a new GI Bill would be adopted. Then, the military services were complaining loudly that the all-volunteer Army was suffering because of inability to attract enough high-quality, well-educated recruits.

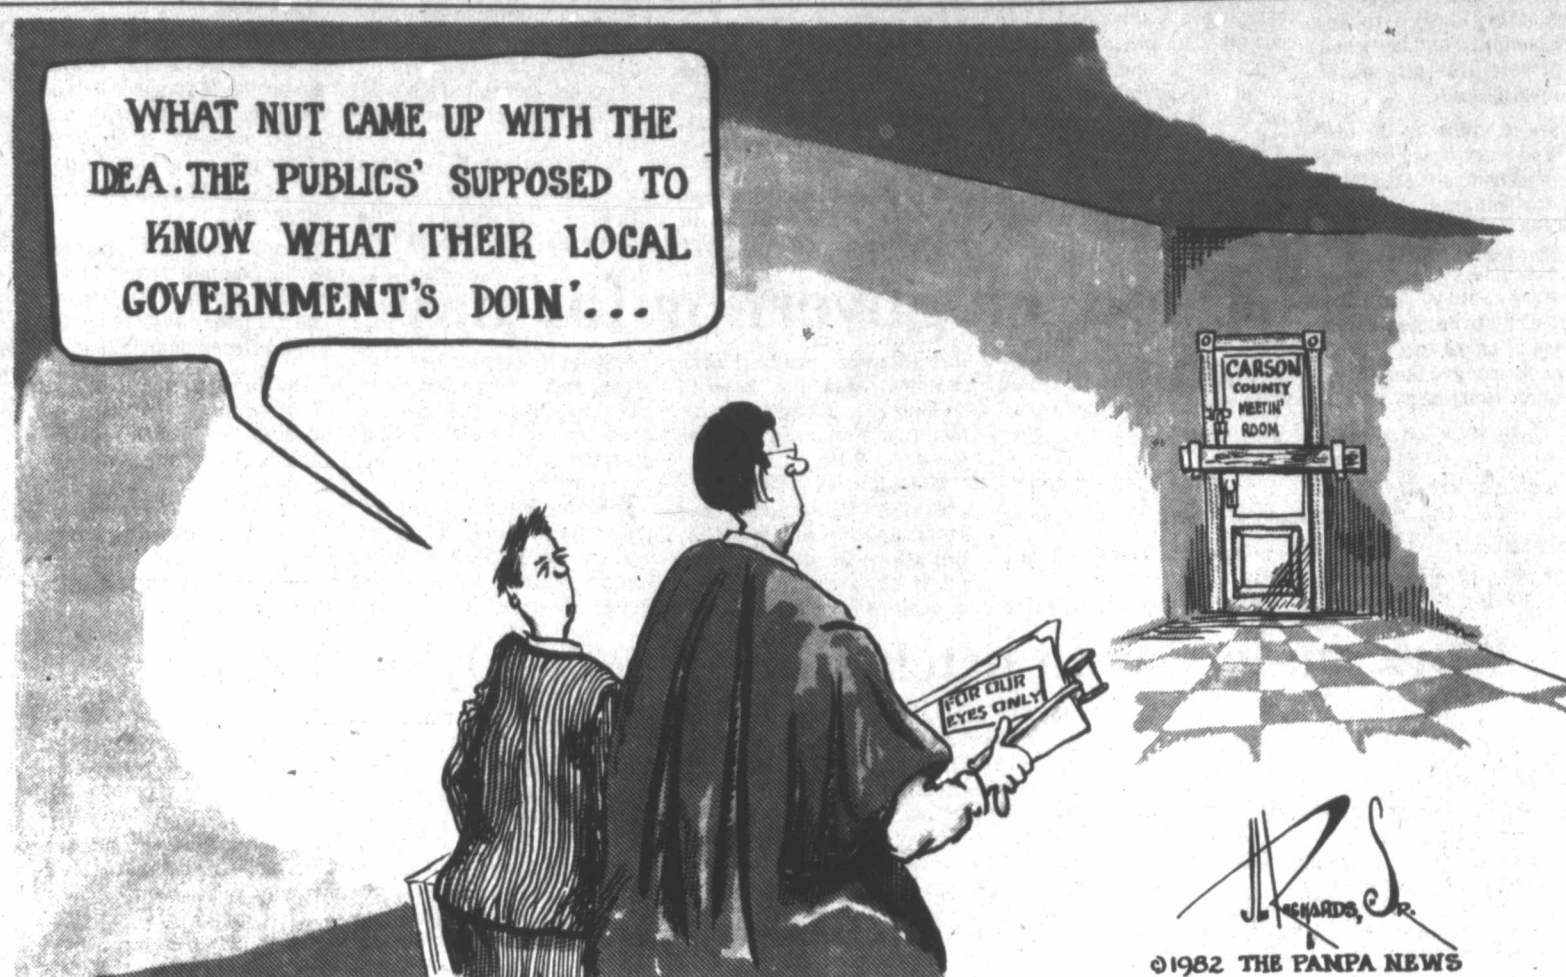

But since then, the military recruiting picture has brightened considerably. Partly because the services are offering higher pay and partly because of the scarcity of jobs nationwide, the military services have all the recruits they can handle. This turnabout has dimmed the GI Bill's prospects: President Reagan has now withdrawn his all-important support from the program.

And rightly so. A new GI Bill would unquestionably be nice and would be a boon to the military. But it is time for legislators to remember that the original and most important role of the GI Bill — to aid veterans of World War II, the Korean War and the Vietnam War — is irrelevant in peacetime. And the other role — to provide educational benefits — is already being filled by the Veterans' Educational Assistance Program. Although VEAP is not as generous as the GI Bill, it still is an attractive incentive that will help draw recruits into the service.

As Sen. Alan Simpson, R-Wyo., put it, the GI Bill "would be great to have, but we can't be that generous when we're cutting the budget."

A double whammy

By DON GRAFT

Today's subject is Subsidiary Communication Authorizations and we'll start at the very beginning with a definition.

A Subsidiary Communication Authorization — or SCA, as it hereafter will be referred to — is the portion of the frequency channel assigned to an FM radio station that is not used for the station's own transmission and can be utilized for specialized programming. For example, the ubiquitous Muzak, religious and foreign language programs, financial reports and services for the blind.

The subject comes up because the Federal Communications Commission has in the works rule changes that would significantly affect who uses SCAs, for what purposes and — most significantly — at what price.

The changes apply in general to both commercial and public stations, but it is the effect on the latter that is of concern here. Restrictions on advertising and other remunerative activities in public broadcasting's regular programming already have been loosened, and it is proposed to extend this tilt toward commercialization to the SCAs.

This development does not distress the public broadcasters, for reasons to be discussed later, but it greatly alarms various organizations involved with services for the blind because most utilize public radio SCAs, either as part of a station's own programming or leased. In fact, reading services at present are by far the largest user of public SCAs.

The fear is that once these are opened to commercial interests, escalating rates will make continued use prohibitive for the blind services, most of which operate on minimal budgets with volunteer staffs and are already pinched for adequate funding.

"It's like double whammy," a spokesman for the American Association for the Blind says.

Too true. Public radio is also in a financial bind. Federal underwriting, upon which it has been heavily dependent, is being cut back. In five years, it will be eliminated entirely.

National Public Radio, with which some 270 of the thousand or so non-commercial FM stations in the country are affiliated, is conducting a vigorous corporate underwriting campaign. But it isn't finding private enterprise as forthcoming as President Reagan has forecast.

New money has to be found somewhere else. NPR sees cashing in on the SCAs for, among other uses, a new satellite data transmission service as the only realistic source.

Not at the expense of the blind services if it can be helped, however. The stations now participating have indicated they wish to carry on.

There are in the United States a half-million legally blind individuals — those with vision that is 10 percent or less of normal. But the potential audience for the service is much larger.

Some 3.2 million sufficiently handicapped in reading through poor sight or inability to hold printed material are also dependent upon radio services.

It is essentially a situation in which both parties are the good guys.

The visually handicapped are dependent upon the radio services and legitimately concerned about being priced out of the market.

But public radio has to find a replacement for federal dollars that already are in short supply and will be nonexistent in five years.

The most promising potential solution is yet another proposed FCC rule change that would widen the present frequency bands assigned to FM stations. This would permit each FM band to carry two SCAs, one of which could be revenue producing and the other available for public purposes. Although there still may be some question as to whether both would be voice quality and who should have prior access to which.

The proposed rule change on commercial use of SCAs is titled Docket BC 82-536.

Both the radio needs of the blind and financially healthy broadcasting services are of public interest. And public input can make a difference. The address is:

Dangerous Paradox of the times

By OCSAR COOLEY

If it has not occurred to you that this is the strangest of all possible civilizations, conjure for a moment over the fact that in Chicago — "hot butter to the world" — thousands of people line up on the sidewalk in front of a church to get free potatoes, onions, spaghetti — anything to stave off hunger. And Chicago is but one American city where there is dire want.

So much is being paid out to so many people in unemployment compensation that many of the states are going in deep debt. Ohio is borrowing some billion dollars a year to keep up its unemployment payments.

In Great Britain, 13.8 percent of the work force are out of work. The unemployment there is the worst in 34 years. Other countries of western Europe are in like distress.

Meanwhile, American farmers complain of the surpluses of grain that hang over their markets, depressing the selling prices to the point that the people who produce it are losing money and calling on Washington for more farm relief.

Are we resigned to the thought that there is bound to be want amid glut?

Some years ago I wrote a book warning readers that the economic system of which we boast was "Paying Men Not to Work" (Caxton Printers, Caldwell, Idaho) and that they were not working. We still are, and they are not.

In fact, we are paying them more liberally than then. How much longer and further can this go on? How long will the worker bees feed the drones before they lose patience and shoot them out of the hive?

No one is to blame. There are bound to be times when some are laid off their jobs at certain gates and do not find other gates open. Hence, unemployment. But are the idle ones doing their utmost to find other employers and to sell their services to them? Or are they being so well taken care of that they are not in a sweat? Are they making frequent trips to possible places of employment, maybe at considerable distances? Are they adapting themselves to the kinds of work available even if none of these are not precisely their specialty? Are they signing up with more than one private employment agency, that is, hiring the best professional help in getting placed?

When ones present condition is tolerable, he may not exert himself to change it, especially if it seems that he must make a radical change. Sometimes one has to give up in line of work and for himself for another. Producers have to supply the goods and services that are in demand. The customer is always right.

Soviet Russia is reported to be short of food. Consequently, we are selling the Russians a lot of corn and wheat (of which we have a plenty). The Soviets shortage is said to be due to drought, but this is the fourth consecutive year of reported crop failure there. It is highly unlikely that their weather has been disastrously bad for four years. One suspects that the inefficiency of state and collective farms under Communism is actually responsible. Individualist America is feeding Communist Russia.

When individualism ruled the American labor market and there was no unemployment pay to fall back upon, unemployed workers had to depend on themselves to find jobs and do so quickly. Today's compensation has greatly reduced their motivation.

To extend the period of compensation weakens that motivation still more. How much weakening will it stand?

Isn't anything worth anything any more

By PAUL HARVEY

There is no currency in the world which is not shrinking. Gold and silver prices are depressed from their peaks, "collectibles" — paintings, artifacts, coins and stamps and books — are not as dear as they were.

And now the world is oversupplied with food, oil and diamonds. Isn't anything worth anything any more?

One thing is.

In FORTUNE magazine's listing of the world's TOP FIVE HUNDRED CORPORATIONS, one of the giants has fallen — from number 169 to number 339 — De Beers.

De Beers for generations has dominated — monopolized — the diamond business. Controlling the supply it could keep prices high. But De Beers is losing its grip.

As recently as 1980 De Beers harvested $2.8 billion from diamond sales; almost half of that clear profit. Last year sales dropped to half and profits were off by 34 percent.

Today De Beers is sitting on a mountain of already-mined and unsold diamonds — is shutting down diamond mines.

De Beers, in a valiant effort to support diamond prices, has depleted cash reserves.

The company is not on the brink of bankruptcy, by any means.

FORTUNE computes De Beers' assets at something in excess of $5 billion and half of that is outside the depressed diamond business.

The company's profit margin last year remained in the neighborhood of 50 per cent of sales, which is a very elegant neighborhood.

So De Beers can afford to continue to stockpile diamonds in its own vaults until prices rebound.

And even as other diamond mines are discovered elsewhere in the world, De Beers has been phenomenally successful in bringing them under its own umbrella of price protection.

But Botswana, the most important diamond find since Kimberley, is now "independent," and that thinly populated country in the decade ahead could produce more big diamonds than either South Africa or the Soviet Union.

Will nothing hold its value?

Something will.

Something which the United States alone of all the world has in abundance and treats like dirt.

The black gold of the 1990s will be whatever is left by then of our nation's verdant, arable, incomparable farmland.

Martin, Gaynor are recovering

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Actress Janet Gaynor was breathing through a respirator today to allow her broken ribs to heal and Broadway star Mary Martin was expected to walk only painfully after the auto accident that killed Miss Martin's longtime companion.

Meanwhile, the driver of the taxi that was carrying the two actresses said the van that rammed the cab broadside Sunday night came through the intersection "like a bat out of you-know-what." Police said the van driver, Richard Cato, 36, of San Francisco, was booked for investigation of drunk and reckless driving, investigation of vehicular manslaughter, investigation of drunk driving, speeding and running a red light.

Miss Gaynor, the 75-year-old screen veteran whose work in three silent films earned her the first Oscar for best actress, underwent four hours of surgery Monday.

Afterward, her vital signs were stable, but "the outcome...will not be decided for many days," said Dr. Frank Lewis, assistant chief of surgery at San Francisco General Hospital.

"She had multiple trauma and has needed nine pints of blood and she's likely to need more. In a lady her age, the magnitude of the injuries is very critical."

She was listed in critical but stable condition today, said nursing supervisor Leonard Jones.

Miss Gaynor was fully conscious but unable to speak because of the respirator, said Lewis. Because of Miss Gaynor's age, he was reluctant to say when she might be out of danger.

Surgeons repaired Miss Gaynor's torn bladder. After the operation, she continued to bleed from pelvic injuries, Lewis said. She also had 11 broken ribs.

Miss Martin, 68, broke two ribs and her pelvis and had a bruised kidney. She will be in the hospital at least two weeks, Lewis said, and her injuries will "make it uncomfortable for her to bear weight for some time" when she walks.

Producer Paul Gregory, Miss Gaynor's 62-year-old husband, suffered broken legs in the crash, Lewis said. Both Miss Martin and Gregory were "stable, awake and doing well," he said.

Killed was Ben Washer, Miss Martin's longtime personal manager and companion.

Police said a van Sunday night drove down hilly Franklin Street, apparently through a red light, and barreled into the right side of a cab driven by Ronald Drury. Miss Gaynor, Miss Martin, Gregory and Washburn were passengers, going to dinner at a Chinatown restaurant.

Cato posted $3,500 bail and was released pending an appearance Friday in Municipal Court, said Sheriff's Deputy Joseph Getz.

Miss Martin became an overnight sensation when she sang "My Heart Belongs to Daddy" in the 1938 musical "Leave It to Me," and stopped the show.

Teacher strikes are continuing

By The Associated Press

Detroit's 11,000 teachers threatened to join 5,000 colleagues already on strike in four states as new walkouts were called today for schools in Bucks County, Pa., and Kalamazoo, Mich.

More than 110,000 students were affected by the scattered strikes.

Detroit teachers were deciding today whether to accept the school board's latest wage offer or to strike Michigan's largest school district, with 200,000 students.

The board, facing a $25 million budget deficit, asked teachers to accept an average 9 percent pay cut. The teachers' union is seeking an extension of their current contract.

Annual salaries for the Motor City's teachers range from $15,000 to $30,000. The district's proposed contract would cost each teacher $52 to $60 a week, pushing salaries back to 1980-81 levels.

In Kalamazoo, with 12,500 students, 750 teachers who postponed a strike last week vowed Monday night to walk out today. But schools were being kept open so administrators could gauge how many of the teachers were striking, said Superintendent Frank Rapley.

Fears of Mexican bank run fade

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Fears of a run on Mexico's newly nationalized banks have faded after the banks made it through their first day of operations without any sign of panic withdrawals.

The newly-appointed director of the central bank, Carlos Tello Macias, hailed the apparent normality Monday, when the banks reopened after a five-day shutdown, as "the people's very favorable response to a popular measure."

The closure was ordered last Wednesday when President Jose Lopez Portillo announced the nationalization of all private banks as part of a drastic program aimed at solving Mexico's worst economic crisis in 70 years. Lopez Portillo accused the private banks of funneling Mexican cash out of the country.

Tello Macias, who had urged Mexicans in a televised speech over the weekend to leave their money in the banks, said "there was no excessive demand for resources" when the banks opened their doors.

Banks in the capital district, which handle about 50 percent of the country's over-the-counter operations, recorded a 25 percent increase in transactions over average days. But government officials attributed the increase to the need for cash after the shutdown and not to a lack of confidence in the nation's debt-plagued economy.

In addition to the nationalization, the government is trying to halt the decline of the peso with a two-tier foreign currency exchange system. It pegs the peso at 50 to the dollar for importers of basic foods and other essential goods and 70 to the dollar for everyone else.

The new official exchange system sets the value of the peso higher than international money markets have been doing. The peso traded at 115-120 to the dollar in New York on Friday. The New York market was closed Monday for the Labor Day holiday.

Exchange rates will be watched closely today in Mexico as an indicator of whether the government can maintain the value of the peso.

The government is trying hard in other ways to shore up the currency. New regulations prohibit Mexicans from taking more than $250 out of the country. Tourists are required to change all their money into pesos when they arrive in Mexico, although that regulation is not being rigidly enforced. Tourists can change their money back as they leave.

Carlos Sales Gutierrez, the ministry's credit director, told a press conference Monday that at 70 pesos to the dollar, the Mexican currency is undervalued, not overvalued.

"If you, especially those of you who live on the border, look at the buying power of a dollar at 70 pesos, you'll find that the dollar is terribly overvalued at that parity."

If the fixed rate of 70 stands, the government will have an easier time paying its $81 billion foreign debt — the largest in the developing world — but visiting Americans will find prices higher than they were in August when the peso was devalued for the second time this year.

The nationalization and exchange controls confront the government with complex administrative problems, not the least of which is the 1,760-mile border with the United States, where mechanisms will have to be created to control how much money enters and leaves the country.

Sales Gutierrez said complete regulations for border areas would be issued by Friday but admitted "we're encountering many problems."

Communist Party Congress adopts constitution

Delegates raise their hands to adopt a new Chinese constitution Monday that bans one-man rule at the Communist Party Congress in Peking. The 1,600 delegates also approved the work report of Chairman Hu Yaobang, which called for continued modernization and a purge of party members opposed to reform. (AP Laserphoto)

Congress returns to face issues of money, abortion, school prayer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress returns this week for the final month of an election-year session, still struggling with controversies over federal spending and social issues such as abortion and school prayer.

The most pressing item on the agenda when both the House and Senate return from a summer break on Wednesday is a presidential veto of a $14.2 billion money bill.

President Reagan rejected the measure after Congress left town last month, saying it included nearly $1 billion more than is needed on domestic programs for the current fiscal year.

Although the measure was approved with ease by a Congress eager to begin a vacation in August, congressional leaders predict the veto will be sustained if it comes to a vote.

In California with the vacationing president Monday, deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes said the administration is "cautiously optimistic" about the outcome.

An attempt to override the veto could take place in the House as early as Wednesday. If that fails and the veto is sustained, Congress will have to draft a second measure, since new legislation is needed to meet civilian and military payrolls.

In addition, about 19,000 employees of the Internal Revenue Service face a midweek layoff if the issue isn't resolved. Those layoffs also could be avoided by an internal agency money transfer, which requires authorization by the chairman of congressional budget committees.

Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., one of the most economy-minded members of the Senate, announced today he would vote to override the veto. Proxmire, ranking Democrat on the Senate Appropriations Committee, denied that the emergency money bill "would bust the budget as claimed by President Reagan."

But however that issue is resolved, it is only prelude to debate over the 13 money bills needed to keep the entire federal government running for the 1983 fiscal year, beginning Oct. 1.

None of the measures — each of which traditionally consumes hours of debate in both the House and Senate — has been approved. Reagan has indicated he is prepared to veto any bill that spends more than is called for in the budget plan Congress approved last June.

Some congressional officials predict the House and Senate will agree on only one or two of the 13 bills by the end of the current fiscal year on Sept. 30. That, in turn, would require drafting an emergency catch-all bill to keep the entire government running on Oct. 1.

It is precisely that type of measure that Reagan vetoed a year ago, ordering parts of the government shut down for a day in a dramatic confrontation that kept Congress in session for most of a weekend.

Another pending proposal calls for a constitutional amendment to balance the federal budget.

The Republican-controlled Senate already has approved a plan, but it is bottled up in the House Judiciary Committee.

Republicans, convinced they have a valuable campaign issue as well as an effective plan to hold down federal spending, are expected to mount a full-scale attempt to secure passage of the proposal in the House.

As for the social issues, time is running out on Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., and other conservatives struggling to overcome a liberal-led filibuster against efforts to sharply restrict abortions and permit prayer in public schools.

Autumn means work in capital

By WILLIAM KRONHOLM
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — With a few leaves beginning to turn color, a slight nip in the morning air and the haunting call of the voter-wary congressman lilting through the marble columns, autumn is coming to the nation's capital.

Congress returns from its August recess on Wednesday for a last flurry of work before the November election. For many here, it is a relief for the lawmakers to return, if only because it means that August is over.

August traditionally is Washington's deadliest period for reporters. With Congress in recess, the Supreme Court out of session and the president and much of the bureaucracy on vacation, there just isn't much news.

For some, however, the doldrums are a golden opportunity. Public relations experts, drooling over the fresh scent of unfilled news pages, eagerly cast out items that ordinarily would be scorned by reporters throughout the city.

Courageous and strong-willed reporters dump these items even in August, scrupulously maintaining their high standards. Without such standards, you would be reading items such as these, all of which were carefully delivered to reporters last week:

—Hill and Knowlton Inc., one of Washington's most prominent public relations firms, announced that the president of Florida Columbus Exposition Inc. would be available to brief reporters on plans to commemorate the quinquennial of Columbus' landing in the New World.

That event occurs 10 years from now, in 1992.

—Rep. Don Ritter, R-Pa., defending champion among the ranks of U.S. representatives, offered a status report on his training for this week's three-mile Capitol Challenge foot race in Washington.

"I'm in good shape," he told reporters who were interested, and many who weren't. "I've been running regularly, and I've just completed a 150-mile bicycle trip through my home district, so I'm not worried."

—J. Erich Evered, administrator of the Energy Department's Energy Information Administration, announced that the EIA's estimates of U.S. reserves of crude oil, natural gas and natural gas liquids have not changed.

The Energy Department's press release listed the names and telephone numbers of two specialists who could help reporters with any questions.

PUBLIC NOTICE

BRIEF EXPLANATORY STATEMENTS OF PROPOSED

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS

GENERAL ELECTION
NOVEMBER 2, 1982

PROPOSITION NO. 1 ON THE BALLOT

House Joint Resolution 1 proposes a constitutional amendment that prohibits any state ad valorem tax. Receipts from previously authorized state ad valorem taxes that are collected after the effective date of the proposed amendment shall be deposited to the credit of the general fund of the county collecting the taxes and may be expended for county purposes. Taxes collected before that date shall be distributed by the legislature among educational institutions eligible to receive those funds under prior law. The proposed amendment also repeals a section of the Constitution levying an ad valorem tax for a construction fund for 17 state colleges and universities.

The proposed amendment will appear on the ballot as follows:

"The constitutional amendment repealing the state property tax."

PROPOSITION NO. 2 ON THE BALLOT

House Joint Resolution 62 as amended by Senate Joint Resolution 10 proposes a constitutional amendment that would eliminate the $80,000,000 ceiling on state welfare aid during any fiscal year.

The amendment would set the state welfare spending limit at $160,000,000 for the 1982-1983 biennium.

The amendment further provides that, for each subsequent biennium, the maximum amount spent for state welfare shall not exceed one percent of the state budget.

The proposed amendment will appear on the ballot as follows:

"The constitutional amendment to authorize the legislature to provide assistance through the appropriations process to needy persons and to place a ceiling on payments for needy dependent children at one percent of the state budget."

PROPOSITION NO. 3 ON THE BALLOT

Senate Joint Resolution 8 proposes a constitutional amendment that would exempt machinery and equipment used in the production of farm and ranch products from taxation. No dollar limits would be imposed and the exemption would apply to corporations and partnerships as well as to families and individuals.

The proposed amendment will appear on the ballot as follows:

"The constitutional amendment exempting implements of husbandry (agricultural machinery and equipment) from ad valorem taxation."

PROPOSITION NO. 4 ON THE BALLOT

House Joint Resolution 77 proposes a constitutional amendment that would authorize the Legislature to set a four year maximum term of office for board members of certain water districts and conservation and reclamation districts.

The proposed amendment will appear on the ballot as follows:

"The constitutional amendment authorizing the Legislature to provide terms not to exceed four years for members of governing boards of certain water districts and conservation and reclamation districts."

PROPOSITION NO. 5 ON THE BALLOT

House Joint Resolution 119 proposes a constitutional amendment that would authorize Tarrant and Bee counties to hold county-wide elections to abolish the county treasurer's office by majority vote.

Should the county treasurer's office be abolished, the duties, powers, and functions of that office would be transferred to the county auditor or the successor to the auditor's functions.

The proposed amendment will appear on the ballot as follows:

"The constitutional amendment to abolish the office of county treasurer in Tarrant and Bee counties."

PROPOSITION NO. 6 ON THE BALLOT

Senate Joint Resolution 6 proposes a constitutional amendment that would raise the constitutional interest rate limit on state general obligation bonds from 6% to 12%. The new 12% ceiling does not, however, apply to bonds issued by the Veterans' Land Board.

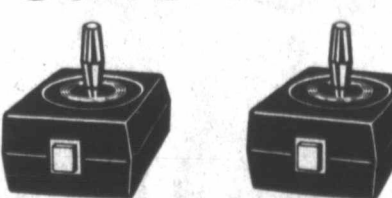

The proposed amendment will appear on the ballot as follows:

"The constitutional amendment increasing the maximum interest rate allowed on state general obligation bonds to a weighted average annual interest rate of 12%."

LOTTIE LANCE, R.N.

Lance to address American Business Women

Lottie Lance, R.N., with the Panhandle Home Agency will be the guest speaker for the American Business Women's Association Sept. 14, at the Stroud Restaurant, 7 p.m. Ms. Lance will speak about the availability of home care service, and give sources of information to meet the needs of individuals.

The Panhandle Home Agency is located in Room 430 of the Hughes building. It has served the elderly and disabled in twenty counties since 1969. Although the District Headquarters are located in Dumas, Lottie has worked locally for about ten years.

As the demands for this program increased, the need for professionals increased. The office now staffs Kay Nations, R.N., supervisor, Geneva Gobin, R.N., one L.V.N. and one nurse aid. The entire staff works out of Ms. Lance's office and are assigned to patient care.

The patients the staff serves are under physician care and require an up-to-date nursing care plan to improve their progress. In addition to health services, nurses give emotional support and help in various ways with the patient's daily needs.

Ms. Lance attended Frank Phillip's College in Borger and Northwest Texas Hospital School of Nursing in Amarillo. She and her husband, Ardel, have two daughters, Barbara and Brenda Kay. In addition to her hobbies of crocheting and quilting, she volunteers her time to the American Red Cross.

For reservations please call 669-7574.

Fixing the fireplace

Q — Our fireplace has been smoking a little. It seems to occur only when we have an exhaust fan on in the kitchen, which is a considerable distance from the fireplace, which is in the living room. How can this be making the fireplace smoke?

A. — Because the fan is drawing air out of the house and, when the fireplace is operating, this brings air down the chimney. That air, in turn, pushes smoke out of the fireplace opening. It's what is known as reverse air flow and can take place for any number of reasons. You are fortunate in knowing what the reason is. Just be sure that, before you start a fire, the exhaust fan is off.

Sewing your own well rounded wardrobe

BY DONNA BRAUCHI
County Extension Agent

Does your busy lifestyle demand a well-rounded wardrobe? During this month - National Home Sewing Month - the Gray County Extension Service suggests the perfect solution to keep a woman on a budget and well dressed - sit down and sew!

"Easy for them to say," thinks the woman who hasn't dared consider sewing since her "last" serious project - the apron she had to make in the seventh grade. And what about the woman who owns a sewing machine, but doesn't think she has the ability or time to sew? Her misguided energy may be spent on repairing weak seams she has discovered on her very expensive store-bought suit.

Home sewing has changed considerably since the apron. Anyone who fumbled over the fundamentals so long ago should take a second look: sewing can be enjoyable, easy, efficient, and a tremendous money-saving proposition.

CHANGES IN FABRICS

Fabric companies have concentrated on blending natural and man-made fibers to make fabrics easy to work with, care for and wear. Today's home sewer can choose natural fibers like silk or linen, or fabric look-alikes in more economical man-made fibers or blends.

SIMPLIFIED PATTERNS

The pattern companies have developed fashion patterns that can be made in a few hours or a day or two and can easily fit into a working woman's schedule. Each pattern uses simplified construction, requires limited sewing time and is a welcome addition to any wardrobe.

NOTION NEWS

The notion companies have been busy, too. Following are just a few sewing aids to help whittle down sewing time and make projects effortless: Fusible interfacing - quick to use; gives excellent results. Topstitch tape - perfect guide for perfect topstitching. Fusible mesh - Cut in strips for quick hemming, team basting pockets before topstitching, and fusing trim or garments. Glue Stick - eliminates pinning and basting zippers, patch pockets, trims. Erasable Tracing Paper, Pens, and Pencils - Trace pattern markings on fabric; they disappear with water.

SEWING OUTERWEAR AT HOME

A growing quest for quality and economy is spurring many Americans to try their hands at sewing jackets and coats. Investment dressing is the key this year.

People are looking for longlasting good looks and quality that may be lacking in ready-to-wear. Prices are up and workmanship is down in some ready-to-wear, and that means we will see an upswing in homesewing for the coming year. Financial savings in outerwear are significant for homesewers. They save 40 to 50 percent over the cost of ready-to-wear.

TAILORING FOR TODAY

Almost too busy to sew, much less tailor? Don't worry - today's tailoring techniques make tailoring fast and easy.

BLAZER SHORTCOURSES

The Gray County Extension Service will be teaching two Blazer Shortcourses in October. There will be a morning class and an evening class. Each class will be limited to twelve (12) people. Fusing and machine techniques for tailoring will be taught. Each participant will make a blazer during the shortcourse. Participants must be intermediate to advanced seamstresses.

Dates for the two Blazer Shortcourses are: Morning Shortcourse - Monday through Friday - October 11-15 - 9 a.m. till 12 noon; Evening Shortcourse - October 18, 19, 21, 26 and 28 - 7 p.m. to 10 p.m. Both shortcourses will be in the Courthouse Annex. Orientation sessions and pattern alteration sessions, will be held prior to the shortcourses.

To enroll, contact the County Extension Office, 669-7429, Star Route 2, Box 33, Courthouse Annex, Pampa. Participants will be enrolled on a first come - first serve basis. There is no charge for the shortcourse.

THOUGHT FOR THE DAY

Yesterday is a cancelled check. Today is the only cash you have. Spend it very wisely.

Remembering the 'good old days'

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

If you are a home owner or a do-it-yourselfer or both, what you are about to read may amuse you or spoil your day, depending on whether you are easily amused or have your day spoiled rather easily.

I have just finished going through a 1908 Sears Roebuck catalog, giving particular attention to things concerning the home or do-it-yourself materials.

The first thing that caught my eye was an advertisement for mail boxes. This one, approved by the Postmaster General, was made of heavy galvanized steel painted with rustproof aluminum. It was 18 inches long, 6 inches deep and 6 inches wide, typical of the kind you see outside of thousands of houses in your state. How much? The ad said: $6.95, which seemed inexpensive but not that big a deal.

Then a closer look revealed the words, "per dozen." That's right, $6.95 for 12 heavy galvanized steel mail boxes weighing 6 1/2 pounds each. That's not all. When requested, the company said that it would put your name on the box free. If you wanted only a single mail box, as most people probably did, it would cost 49 cents. Of course, you would have to pay the freight charges unless you lived in Chicago, but Sears advised everyone they would be very small and, from what I was able to figure out from a rather complicated chart, a dozen mail boxes shipped from Chicago to Charlotte, N.C., would cost less than $1, a rate applicable to anything up to 100 pounds.

For $7.97 you could get a tool box made of hardwood and fitted with hinges and a lock and containing the following items:

A 24-inch handsaw ... a solid steel compass saw ... a lever saw set ... a set of six "high grade" chisels of different sizes ... a "rapid cutting" oil stone ... a screwdriver with a 5-inch forged steel blade ... a carpenter's steel square ... a soldering outfit ... a package of mending rivets ... a 12-inch level ... four steel auger bits ... a knurled nailset ... a bit brace with a 10-inch sweep ... a steel marking awl ... a hatchet ... a forged steel nail hammer ... two planes, one 5 1/2-inch block and one 14-inch jack ... a set of frame clamps ... and one spoke shave, with a cast-steel blade and enameled handle.

A 100-pound keg of standard wire nails was priced at $2.20.

A workbench made of solid maple, 6 1/2 feet high, 20 inches wide and 42 inches long, went for only $9.94. You could buy a complete bathroom outfit, including a bathtub, toilet tank, toilet bowl, sink, supply pipes and the works, for $43.80; reduced from $46.78, the ad said. Wallpaper was so cheap that the company guaranteed, you could wallpaper a room 11 feet by 11 feet, with a ceiling 9 feet high, for 26 cents; cents, that is.

Sound interesting? Listen to this. The catalog offered free building plans for a house that could be "built, painted and completed, ready-for-occupancy" for - hang on - $725. A small barn? No. A two-story, six-room house.

On the first floor, a kitchen 14 feet by 11 feet 9 inches; a bedroom 11 feet 9 inches by 8 feet 6 inches; a parlor 12 feet by 10 feet, 6 inches. On the second floor, a bedroom 10 feet, 6 inches by 8 feet, 3 inches; a bedroom, 11 feet, 9 inches by 8 feet, 6 inches; and a large attic room for whatever use desired, 14 feet by 11 feet, 9 inches.

A Morris chair, adjustable to "four reclining positions" and made "almost entirely" of oak, was touted as "strong, durable and comfortable" and sold for $3.65.

If all this makes you sigh, forget it. If you earned $10 a week in those days, you were doing very, very well.

(Handy around the house? You can get a big assist from Andy Lang's handbook, "Practical Home Repairs," available by sending $1.50 to this paper at Box 5, Teaneck, NJ 07666.)

Mending Mature Marriage

It's never too late to declare your independence

BY LOUISE PIERCE

Several articles have been written lately about the "sandwich generation". They are the young or middle-aged couples who are torn between their children's welfare and care of their elderly parents. A letter came to me on this subject expressing real anguish:

"DEAR LOUISE: Our son and his wife are killing themselves trying to take care of us and also give their five children all the time they need. Nobody's happy and it's getting worse."

"Seems like every time we need to go to the doctor or any place else, the youngsters need to be carted to ball games or school activities or something. Our son's wife acts distracted when it happens and I guess she has a right to be. We don't have a car and so depend on her to take us places."

"We aren't rich at all but we have enough to get by on if we had to. But every time we say we'll manage without the family's help, our son blows up and says they're not going to let anybody say they didn't take care of their old folks. He says we took care of him when he was growing up and it's his duty to do the same for us now that we're over 70. He didn't add 'if it kills me', but I think he thought it."

"What can we do to lighten the load of our son and his wife?"

B.H.

DEAR B.H.: It seems to me your son and his wife are insisting on keeping you dependent on them because of appearances and a sense of family duty. Since you don't seem to require the constant attention they shower on you, I think you should set them free of this burden.

You say you could manage without them financially. So do it. You can get taxis or city buses, or perhaps hire someone to take you where you want to go. You need to live your own lives and let your children and grandchildren do the same.

If you can possibly move to another part of town or even a few blocks up the street, the friction should lessen and everybody's sense of duty should be lightened because you wouldn't be under each other's feet all the time.

Old folks are seldom incapacitated. They should be independent of family assistance if they can be. If your health is reasonably good, declare your independence and make everybody happy.

"DEAR LOUISE: We're five years away from retirement but can't agree on where we'll spend our after-retirement years."

"We know a lot of people who stayed in the same town where they'd lived all their married lives and then said their lives had got monotonous and they wished they'd left town but now can't afford to because they'd put so much money into fixing up their old houses."

"We've known about as many people who moved away from their homes and then wished they were back where they'd lived before."

"We want to have a happy old age. How can we decide where to have it? K.W."

DEAR K.W.: Many pre-retirement couples have asked many authorities that question. The usual answer, and the one that seems to work in the majority of cases, is to hang onto the old house and the old home town while you try out a new location. Most advisors suggest you spend a year in a place you think is a possibility for a happy older life, before you consider moving there.

If you can't afford a year's time, spend at least a few months or weeks in a new environment. But, don't sell your present home or tear out your roots until you are sure you want to go.

My suggestions are three: (1) Do you make new friends easily? If you don't, you could be very lonely in a new location. And how important are your present friends to you?

(2) Is the proposed new location in the kind of climate that would be better, or worse, for you to live in? Some people like snow while others prefer a near-desert temperature.

(3) Are you now enjoying social groups and activities where you live? If so, would the new location provide the same amount, or more, of that pleasure?

Retirement location isn't something any couple should rush into. Before you make an irreversible decision, be sure you know it's what you want to live with for the rest of your lives.

Write problems to DEAR LOUISE, Box 616, Pampa, Texas 79065.

Dear Abby

New way to wet your whistle

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1982 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: I am writing to thank you for an article that you ran recently that has given me more relief and comfort than I can describe.

I am 83, male and reasonably healthy, but in recent years I've been terribly troubled with a dry mouth — especially at night. I complained to my doctor. He just shrugged his shoulders. Then I read your column in the San Francisco Chronicle, and my prayers were answered! In response to a letter asking why a person would use a mouth spray in public, you quoted a dentist who said that as a result of disease, medication, radiation therapy or simply aging, a number of people suffer from "xerostomia" (dry mouth), causing acute discomfort, tooth decay, inability to eat, swallow or talk, as well as difficulty in wearing dentures. He suggested a "saliva substitute" — available at drugstores.

I immediately phoned my druggist, and he had never heard of a "saliva substitute," so I told him to call his supplier and order it. He did, and the next day I picked it up and used it. Abby, I will be eternally grateful to you and that dentist. No more dry mouth! God bless you. Sign me, GRATEFUL IN PARADISE, CALIF.

DEAR GRATEFUL: I'll print your letter for the benefit of others who suffer from dry mouth and are not aware of "saliva substitutes."

DEAR ABBY: Recently I attended a lovely wedding and reception. I was invited by Nancy, a cousin of the bride. I had never met the bride or groom, but I accompanied Nancy because she needed an escort.

I didn't know whether a gift was expected of me, or even appropriate. Under the circumstances, should Nancy have provided the gift from both of us? Should I have offered to share the cost of Nancy's gift? Or should I have sent my own gift? Please give your opinion for future reference. EMPTY-HANDED ESCORT

DEAR ESCORT: A note of appreciation and good wishes would have been appropriate, mannerly and adequate.

DEAR ABBY: Now I've seen everything: a letter from a man who bathes too much! He claims his wife likes him better when he is not freshly bathed, so he bathes only two or three times a week and everybody's happy.

What do you want to bet that she hates to bathe, and if she can get her husband to bathe less, he won't notice how bad she smells.

SQUEAKY CLEAN IN KENT, OHIO

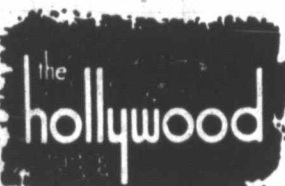

DEAR SQUEAKY: The response to that letter was nothing to sniff at. Read on:

DEAR ABBY: I can understand the wife who didn't want her husband to bathe too much. My husband has a very special, subtle scent all his own, which I love. He works out with weights on alternate days, and bathes afterward. He rarely bathes in between unless he's gotten overly warm or dirty. Yet in the four years we've been married, I've never noticed an unpleasant body odor. When he's away on business, I sleep on his side of the bed in the comfort of his scent. Not only does his skin have a lovely fragrance, he has a very sweet breath, with kisses sweeter than strawberries and cream.

And lest you think I am somehow insensitive to unpleasant body odors, I work with a man who could wilt an artificial plant at 20 paces.

SCENT-SITIVE IN SEATTLE

Astro-Graph by bernice.bede osol

This coming year there are strong possibilities you'll turn an avocation or hobby into something rather profitable. Your labor of love has potential dollar signs.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) If you tell any tall tales or brag a bit today, the only who is likely to be interested will be you. Predictions of what's in store for you in the seasons following your birthday and where to look for your luck and opportunities are in your Astro-Graph. Mail $1 for each to Astro-Graph, Box 489, Radio City Station, N.Y. 10019. Be sure to specify birth date.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) If someone is advising you on what to do with your finances or resources today, be doubly certain this person really knows what he or she is talking about.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) You must be very selective of associates today, or you could team up with someone who may merely try to use you to advance personal interests.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Take extra pains with your work today, or you could have little to show for your efforts when you try to fit the smaller pieces into the big picture.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) In social situations today don't go out of your way to cater to persons whom you deem to be important. They may become unduly suspicious and back away from you.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) This is not the day to measure what you have against a person who may have more. Instead of being content with your circumstances, it could put you in a bad mood.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) You could be a bit more restless than usual today and try to do so many things that, in the end, nothing will be accomplished. Minimize your objectives.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Scrutinize joint ventures with considerable care today. Enticing propositions could promise much, yet be of little substance. Ask questions.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Be realistic when making important judgments today. See the alternatives for what they truly are, not what they might be under the best conditions.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) It would be nice if you could wave a magic wand and all of your responsibilities would take care of themselves. Unfortunately, this will not be the case today.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Your self-discipline could be put to the test today regarding overindulgence. If you let your guard down even a trifle, your bedtime may emerge the victor.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Persons you normally can depend upon to back you up careerwise might be looking the other way today when you beckon for help. Stand on your own.

Ellis wins playoff for fourth consecutive TOT championship

By L.D. Strate
Pampa News Sports Writer

No one will ever know, but a last-second change in clubs may have given Richard Ellis his fourth consecutive Top of Texas Invitational Golf Tournament title Monday at the Pampa Country Club course.

After a 72-hole total of 4-under-par 280 that left him deadlocked for first with scrappy Adam Kase of Texas Tech, Ellis won a sudden-death playoff on the second hole.

Ellis, a Pampa native now living in Plano, sent his drive straight up the fairway, 125 yards from the second playoff hole. Kase, who seemed to get better as the day wore on, made one of his few mistakes when he sliced his tee shot into the deep rough 130 yards from the sloping green. Kase made a nice recovery shot, but his 15-foot putt was two-feet short and he had to settle for par.

Ellis, who was going to hit his second shot with a 9-iron, changed his mind after Kase hit and pulled out an 8-iron.

"I thought he was probably on the green, so I thought I'd better soften my shot and try and let it roll close to the hole," Ellis said.

That's exactly what happened as his 8-iron shot rolled to within three feet from the cup. Ellis holed out for a birdie and his fifth TOT championship.

"To tell the truth I just didn't think I would win it," Ellis said. "I haven't been playing that well and there's a lot of good, young players here."

Mike Stewart of Cameron University held a two-stroke lead over the rest of the field going into yesterday's final 36 holes, but he slipped to third with a two-under-par 284 when it was all over.

Meanwhile, Ellis was four strokes back going into the final 36 holes, but consecutive 67's deadlocked him with Kase to force a playoff.

"I got off to a good start today (Monday)," Ellis said. "I made a couple of short putts for par and had a couple of birdies in this morning's (Monday) round."

"I think the turning point for me was when I had three birdies in a row after I bogeyed No. 11 in the third round."

Both Ellis and Kase, who was tied for second after the first 36 holes, moved into a tie with Stewart going into the final 18 holes Monday.

Kase held a two-stroke lead after the first five holes on the final 18 while Ellis and Stewart were at even par. Ellis birdied No. 9 to tie Kase and went in front for the first time with a five-foot birdie putt on No. 11.

"I was putting real well in the final round," Ellis said. "I was rolling those long putts up close to the hole. I didn't want to have those three-foot putts coming down the stretch."

Kase tied Ellis at 3-under on No. 15 when he rolled in a 5-foot putt for a birdie. Ellis missed a 4-foot putt for a birdie that would have kept him in the lead.

The score remained tied until the second playoff hole.

Ellis, the 1980 Texas State Amateur champion, has won the TOT title a record five times, his first championship coming in 1969.

"I never 3-putted today (Monday)," Ellis said. "That's something that really helped me. When you can play 36 holes on this course and not 3-putt, you're doing pretty good."

Knowing when to select the right iron, like on playoff hole No. 2, is one way of avoiding those 3-putt greens.

Cowboys cut veteran players as Landry starts youth movement

DALLAS (AP) — Once again, the Dallas Cowboys have pumped some youth into their organization.

On the day the roster-cutting "Turk" came calling with his heavy blade, Coach Tom Landry chopped away some veteran deadwood and kept six rookies on the active 49-man squad.

"It's tough to let the veterans go, but you can't stand in the way of better talent coming along," said Landry, who had to make the cold but calculated decisions Monday.

It wasn't as big a rookie infusion as 1974 when Landry kept 12 rookies and rolled into the Super Bowl with them.

Landry kept No. 1 selection Rod Hill, a Kentucky State cornerback, No. 2 pick Jeff Rohrer, a Yale linebacker, No. 4 selection Monty Hunter, a Salem College (West Virginia) safety, No. 5 rounder Phil Pozderac, a Notre Dame offensive tackle, and No. 8 round choice Auburn fullback George Poles.

Also making the team was Duke free agent center-guard Brian Baldinger.

The biggest surprises were Hunter, who played at a small college, and Baldinger, who was totally unheralded.

Feeling the ax were six-year offensive tackle, Andy Frederick, four-year defensive end Bruce Thornton, four-year wide receiver Steve Wilson, and second-year linebacker Bill Roe.

Also sliced off the roster were Brian Carpenter, a fourth-round draft choice from Michigan; free agent rookie safety Bobby Johnson of Texas; rookie fullback Dwight Sullivan, an eighth-round pick from North Carolina State; rookie free agent quarterback Brad Wright of New Mexico; and first year defensive end Ron Spears, who spent last year on the injured reserve.

Linebackers Scott McLean, a free agent, and third-round selection Jim Eliopoulos of Wyoming were placed on the injured reserve list because of knee injuries.

"It was a tough decision to let the veteran players go," said Landry. "It wasn't because they didn't hustle or give their best effort. It just became a situation of numbers and better talent coming to us through the draft."

The Cowboys also announced that backup quarterback Glenn Carano, offensive guard Herb Scott, center Robert Shaw, and tight end Jay Saldi will miss the season opener Sept. 13 against the Pittsburgh Steelers in Texas Stadium.

None of the new rookies is expected to start for Dallas, although Hill is a prime candidate as the No. 1 punt returner. Hill also could be used to return kickoffs, although Landry seems satisfied with wide receiver Doug Donley's performances during the pre-season.

Boosters to meet

The Pampa Harvester Booster Club will meet at 7:30 p.m. tonight in the film room of the high school football fieldhouse. Harvester head coach John Kendall will be available to answer questions. The public is invited to attend.

Clemson falls

ATHENS, Ga. (AP) — A shaky beginning turned into a winning night for John Lastinger, Georgia's untested junior quarterback who faced college football's defending national champion in his first starting assignment.

"We reached down and found a way to win," Lastinger said Monday night after seventh-ranked Georgia ended No. 11 Clemson's 13-game winning streak 13-7 with two-time All-American Herschel Walker seeing action despite his broken thumb, but mostly as a decoy.

"It was not a picture perfect game by any means, but the main thing is we won the game," said Lastinger.

U.S. alone in predicting economic rebound

TORONTO (AP) — The United States is standing alone in predicting a quick rebound for the world economy and discounting the need for major steps to avert an international financial crisis.

Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan told bankers and government officials from 146 nations Monday that President Reagan's economic policies are about to spark a worldwide recovery.

Nearly every other speaker at the opening session of the four-day joint annual meeting of the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank described the state of the global economy as grim. Some suggested that strains on the world financial system were becoming dangerous.

They called for immediate action as dramatic as a new conference to consider replacing the IMF and the World Bank, redoing the work of the landmark 1944 conference at Bretton Woods, New Hampshire, where a new world financial order was erected from the ruins of World War II.

Regan said recent declines in U.S. interest rates and inflation "provide only the first inkling of the real benefits that the U.S. and world economies will realize from the president's economic program."

Because of U.S. policies, Regan said, "The stage has been set for a strong recovery that is becoming more probable and more imminent with each passing day."

Other speakers presented a gloomier view.

Finance Minister Ernan Galveas of Brazil, designated to speak for all Latin American countries, blamed the policies of the developed nations for widening the gap between rich and poor.

"In the face of this dismal picture the industrial countries, who determine the economic fate of the world, sit as if paralyzed," Galveas said.

Danish Economic Affairs Minister Ivar Norgaard, representing the 10 nations of the European Common Market, said that since 1980, "Hopes of a revival in growth have been repeatedly disappointed and at present the growth performance of the world economy is still discouraging."

Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau described economic conditions as "worse than any since our beginnings," when the government-sponsored financial organizations were created at Bretton Woods.

"These hard times, and these perceptions of looming crises, are generating fear in the minds of some of our people," Trudeau said.

Robert Muldoon, Prime Minister of New Zealand, said the global economy was so bad that "growing numbers of countries and some private banks are clearly at risk."

Developing countries owe more than $500 billion to foreign banks, governments and organizations including the IMF and World Bank.

In the weeks before the annual meeting opened, the world's bankers were rocked by the disclosure that Mexico — whose foreign debt of $80 billion is the largest of any country — couldn't meet its payments and by Mexico's decision to nationalize its banks.

Mexican Finance Secretary Jesus Silva Herzog said Monday that his country expects to reach agreement with the IMF by early November on a $4 billion loan to help meet $14 billion in interest payments due through the end of 1983.

He also told reporters his country is negotiating simultaneously with private bankers on a plan that would postpone any repayment of principal until 1984. Mexico owes $20 billion to private banks and the remainder to government agencies.

Although the Mexican situation is causing the biggest worries, bankers are also concerned about other big debtors.

Is stock market turn for better or worse?

By JOHN CUNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — Whatever it is that is going on out there in the marketplace, it is being interpreted by millions as a turning point, for better or worse, but don't be too certain of it.

Those who believe the turn is for the better are pawing and pushing their way through the crowds in order to turn their money into stocks, and they aren't all that particular either.

That much is indicated by the rise of all but one of 66 industries in the Standard & Poor's 500-stock index during August, when the big rally began and in 16 trading days advanced the Dow Jones industrial average 149 points.

Stocks rise, it is said, because people see a better economic future, but that isn't necessarily true about gold or silver, and they too are racing to the skies.

Gold closed here last week at $458 a troy ounce, its highest price in nearly a year. And silver, which had been falling for a long while, leaped 81 cents to $8.78 an ounce in just one day, Friday, Sept. 3.

Why are both stock prices and the prices of these metals rising? Aren't stock-price increases supposed to mean good news ahead? And aren't gains in gold and silver supposed to indicate insecurity?

Until lately, that has been the general notion about the relative merits of these investments, but apparently it holds no longer. Now, it is said, foreign investors are so shaken they'll take either rare metals or U.S. stocks.

The feeling among some foreigners, especially Latin Americans, it is said, is that either rare metals and U.S. stocks are preferable to investments in their own countries, where economies are in such deep trouble.

That they view the U.S. economy as a secure haven suggests the depth of their insecurities, because the U.S. economy, as nobody could be unaware, is beset by some of the worst times in many decades.

The U.S. automobile industry is depressed, and so is housing. Farmers are scraping to stay alive, small businesses too. Steel is in deep trouble. Some banks are failing or being merged. Inflation hasn't been conquered, nor have interest rates returned to a level that makes recovery a certainty.

It isn't a pleasant scene, but it is infinitely brighter than that facing some other economies. Debt, in extraordinarily high amounts and at extraordinarily high interest rates — so high, in fact, that some authorities believe the debts never can be repaid — is commonplace. Brazil, Argentina and some of the socialist nations are in precarious shape. Mexico, which only weeks ago presented an appearance of strength, has just nationalized its banks to prevent the flight of capital, mainly to the United States.

Lost boy tracked by sandal tread

CASTAIC, Calif. (AP) — A 2½-year-old boy was reunited with his parents after a search team tracked his sandals' tire-tread print three miles from where he had been lost in the woods.

Ricardo Diaz, who had disappeared Sunday afternoon, was found thirsty but safe early Monday morning after 11 hours in the brush near Castaic Lake, 40 miles north of Los Angeles.

Although hundreds of people had been at the lake over the holiday weekend, the volunteer team was able to pick out the boy's tracks from the many footprints.

"We were able to pick up his tracks along a channel that extends from the lake," said Jerry Hicklin, captain of the Sylmar-Santa Clarita Valley Search and Rescue team.

"We were lucky in that the boy was wearing sandals with a tire tread," he said. The boy was found sleeping under a bush and returned to his parents, Loretta and Rodrigo Diaz.

"That sure was a good feeling watching Mrs. Diaz bury her head against that little boy," Hicklin said.

He said the team had been trained in tracking by the U.S. Border Patrol.

Unemployed join ranks of Labor Day marchers

By GRAHAM VINK
Associated Press Writer

Unemployed workers helped swell the ranks of Labor Day marchers around the nation, while union leaders kicked off the autumn campaign season with blistering attacks on President Reagan, blaming him for the highest jobless rate since World War II.

But millions of other Americans simply gave themselves a holiday on Monday's 100th anniversary of the annual salute to labor, jamming beaches from California to Connecticut, rafting down the Arkansas River, watching auto races in Indiana and South Carolina, and chomping a few hot dogs before the season of falling leaves and football.

At least 428 people died in traffic accidents around the nation during the three-day holiday weekend. In Arizona, where state police set up controversial roadblocks on major highways, more than 200 motorists were arrested for drunken driving.

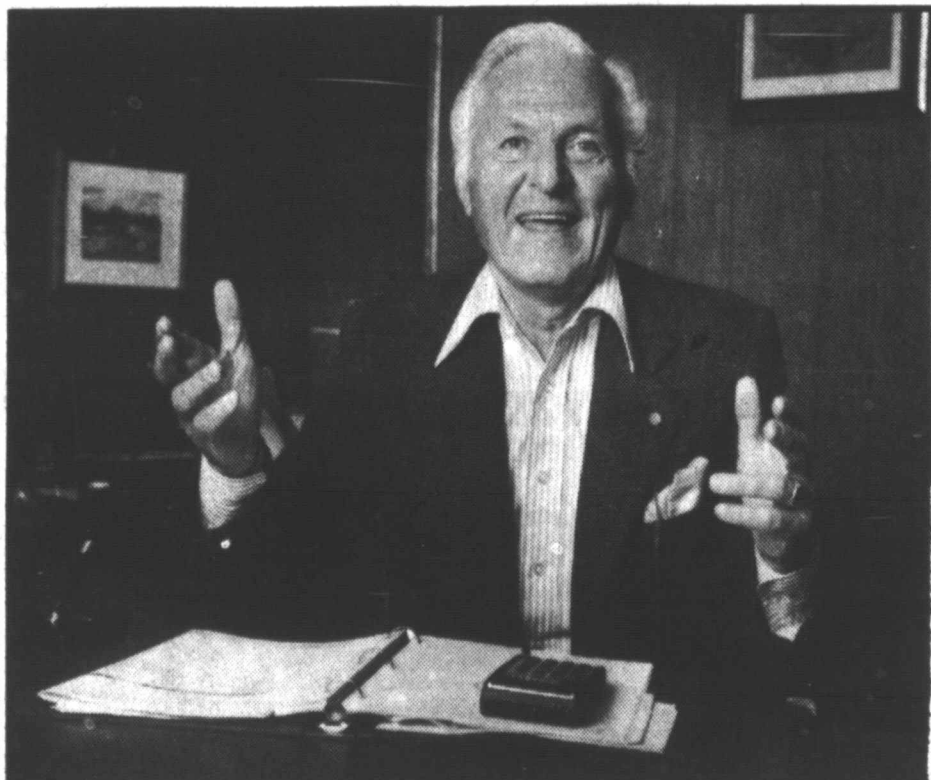

More than 100,000 people marched down Michigan Avenue in Chicago for the city's first Labor Day parade organized by unions in 40 years, although sentiments were no brighter than the gray skies.

The national jobless rate stood at 9.8 percent in July and August, and labor leaders used the occasion to slam Reagan's economic policies.

"Not since the Great Depression of the 1930s have there been so many workers unemployed, so many houses threatened with mortgage foreclosures, so many farmers and small businesses being pushed into bankruptcy and so many families with no place to turn," said James J. Wengert, president of the Iowa Federation of Labor in Des Moines.

An estimated 400,000 people marched up Fifth Avenue in New York, where the first Labor Day parade was held Sept. 5, 1882. One sign defined Reaganomics as "rich get rich, poor get poorer, workers get the shaft," and a hearse carried a drawing of a tombstone labeled "PATCO, 1968-1981," referring to Reagan's firing last year of striking air traffic controllers.

Coming to the president's defense was Labor Secretary Raymond Donovan, who said in an interview that Reagan was sensitive to "the ills of unemployment" and predicted the jobless rate will improve this fall.
