Reagan: World safer from threat of war

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan said today that increased fear about the risk of war between the superpowers "is understandable but profoundly mistaken" and that the world actually is safer now after three years of U.S. military buildup because the Kremlin is less likely to underestimate America's strength.

In a foreign policy address aimed at audiences at home and overseas, Reagan said, "I believe 1984 finds the United States in its strongest position in years to establish a constructive and realistic working relationship with the Soviet Union."

The president said the United States had been in a state of decline in recent years, and the Soviets "may have counted on us to keep weakening ourselves." But he said his administration had reversed the decline, and the turnaround was becoming apparent in Moscow.

"This may be the reason we've been hearing such strident rhetoric from the Kremlin recently," Reagan said. "These harsh words have led some to speak of heightened uncertainty and an increased danger of conflict.

"This is understandable but profoundly mistaken," the president said.

"Look beyond the words, and one fact stands out," Reagan said. "America's deterrence is more credible and it is making the world a safer place; safer because now there is less danger that the Soviet leadership will underestimate our strength or question our resolve."

Reagan spoke before an audience of administration officials and members of Congress gathered in the East Room of the White House. His appearance was beamed by satellite to Europe in time to be on evening newscasts.

The speech comes two weeks before Reagan's expected announcement that he will seek re-election. Speaking privately, White House advisers said beforehand the speech was intended to help erase any image of Reagan as being "warlike" or a "warmonger."

He noted the big increase in Pentagon spending during his administration, but added that "to say that our restored deterrence has made the world safer is not to say that it is safe enough.

"We are witnessing tragic conflicts in many parts of the world," he said. "Nuclear arsenals are far too high. And our working relationship with the Soviet Union is not what it must be. These are conditions which must be addressed and improved."

The president added, "Neither we nor the Soviet Union can wish away the differences between our two societies and our philosophies. But we should always remember that we do have common interests, and the foremost among them is to avoid war and reduce the level of arms."

Reagan said the United States and Soviet Union should make a major effort in three problem areas:

—Finding ways to reduce the threat and use of force in solving international disputes;

—Negotiating reductions in the huge stockpiles of arms around the world; and —Establishing a better working relationship that is marked by greater cooperation and understanding.

The president noted he will send Congress a report soon charging that the Soviets are violating arms control agreements and that the Kremlin is taking advantage of ambiguities in the accords. He said that was one example of how U.S.-Soviet relations are not what they should be.

Presidential debate 'lively give and take'

HANOVER, N.H. (AP) — Democratic debaters livened their presidential campaign by hurling charges of "gobbledygook" and "baloney," but they were uncertain today how just much their jibes slowed Walter Mondale's drive for the nomination.

"Nobody was sitting around keeping a scorecard," said Sen. John Glenn of Ohio after Sunday's three-hour debate.

"There were certainly no holds barred," said Mondale. "I think the audience understood what I was saying...My record is very specific."

It was a presidential campaign debate like no other in memory. Three hours long, moderated by two television hosts, the debate produced lively give and take, most of it between the candidates but occasionally directed at the moderators, particularly, Phil Donahue.

The sharpest exchange occurred when Mondale referred to his plan to cut budget deficits by more than half and Glenn snapped that he was offering "the same vague gobbledygook of nothing we've been hearing all through this campaign."

He went on to say, "We haven't heard any specific numbers except cut it by half.

"Is this going to be a Democratic Party that promises everything to everybody?...I'm disgusted and tired of all the vague promises. I wish the former vice president would get some figures down," Glenn said.

Mondale countered that "I've listened to about a six-minute speech — all of it baloney."

Glenn interrupted when Mondale countered by saying the senator had voted for President Reagan's economic program and had to accept responsibility for federal budget deficits.

Both men stood up and were speaking at once.

Mondale was shouting to Donahue, "Who has the floor? Who has the floor?"

He accused Glenn of using "voodoo numbers" and "baloney figures."

"They're both right in what they say about each other," quipped former Gov. Reubin Askew of Florida as the exchange came to an end.

After the debate, Askew said, "I survived it...I think I did a credible job."

Unemployed man builds memorial to slain Marines

OSCEOLA, Ark. (AP) — With $2,000 and used bricks, an out-of-work man who figured he should "do it myself" has built what the U.S. Marines say is the first memorial to the 241 servicemen killed in the bombing of Marine headquarters in Lebanon.

But that's just part of Allen Starr's plans for honoring the men killed in the Oct. 23 terrorist attack. In his will, he said, he has left his entire estate to the servicemen's widows "for their children's college education."

"This project came from my heart and from a low bank account," said the 49-year-old bachelor, who served with the Navy in Korea.

Prompted by bulletins read from church pulpits, about 500 people gathered for dedication rites Sunday afternoon in a park in this eastern Arkansas town of 8,371.

In attendance was Marine Col. R.B. Johnston, who was the commanding officer in Beirut when a suicide terrorist drove an explosives-laden truck into the Marines' headquarters building.

The memorial, a column-flanked brick wall 8 feet high and 4 feet wide, bears a bronze plaque which reads, "Lest we forget that peace has a price."

Starr, now unemployed, said he threw newspapers from a truck for the Memphis, Tenn., Press-Scimitar until it folded last year, then worked for a while for The Courier News in nearby Blytheville, Ark.

Because of his job, nearly everyone in town knows him, Starr said, and the community responded to his efforts. Businesses displayed flags and "every marquee in town said: 'Welcome Marines.'"

"It looked like a different part of the world if you came to Osceola this weekend," he said.

Starr knew none of the servicemen who died in Lebanon, but news reports inspired him to build the monument, he said.

"I saw it on television and I said to myself, 'My God, this looks like another Pearl Harbor.' I thought, I wish someone would do something about this. Then I thought, I'll do it myself," he said.

A Marine scholarship foundation in Princeton, N.J., is compiling names of the servicemen's children who would be eligible for aid for Starr's estate, and "there are about 25 so far," he said.

He did not say how large his estate is, but said his mother left an antiques-filled home valued at $225,000 when she died six years ago.

Johnston, who is commanding officer of the 8th Marines, 2nd Marine Division at Camp Lejeuene, N.C., said the memorial was the first in the country to be dedicated to the casualties in Lebanon.

Built in Florida Park with permission from the mayor and city council, the memorial is surrounded by dwarf pine trees and other plants from Starr's yard. Each column has a hole for a vase, where visitors can leave flowers.

Starr was especially proud, he said, that Marine Col. L.G. Clapp, one of the speakers at the ceremony Sunday, made him an honorary Marine.

"I'd rather have that than a handshake from the president," he said.

Soviet press uses novel '1984' to level attack against America

By ANDREW ROSENTHAL

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union, which for 35 years has banned George Orwell's classic satire of totalitarianism, is using the novel "1984" in an effort to portray America as Orwell's nightmare world of Big Brother and thought control.

The 1949 novel, like Orwell's "Animal Farm," still is taboo here and is regularly confiscated from tourists and Western stalls at the Moscow Book Fair. Last month, a Latvian dissident accused of having a copy of the novel and another banned work was sentenced to seven years' hard labor.

There is no hint that "1984" might be approved for general Soviet consumption.

But the official press has run at least four articles in the past two weeks that focus on the book, including two weekend pieces in the government newspaper Izvestia. One even contained praise for Orwell's artistry, although it attacked him on ideological grounds as a "socialist renegade."

In each case, the book was mentioned only to press a single argument: that Orwell's vision of a government which seeks total control of thought and action is a reality in the United States.

All four articles acknowledged Orwell's book has always been considered anti-communist satire, although the British author said it was not aimed solely at the harshly repressive Stalinist era.

Since "1984" was published, some critics of the Soviet Union have taken suppression of the book as tacit acknowledgement of parallels to Soviet life.

But all Soviet writers who have dealt with the book reject links between "1984" and the Soviet state in 1984. They insist the real parallels are to be found in America.

The first known mention of "1984" in an official Soviet publication was on Jan. 26, 1983, when the Literary Gazette charged Orwell's nightmare was becoming reality in the United States.

This month, the foreign affairs journal New Times ran a similar article claiming Orwell's newspeak, doublethink, thought police and other sinister inventions have their counterparts in America.

Nurse to go on trial today in infant's death

GEORGETOWN (AP) — After lengthy investigations by grand juries in two counties and months of pre-trial manuevers, a vocational nurse faced trial today on a murder charge alleging she killed a 15-month-old girl with a dose of a paralyzing drug.

Kerr County prosecutors said they planned to call about 70 witnesses in their case against Genene Jones, 33, in the September 1982 death of Chelsea Ann McClellan.

Ms. Jones also is accused of administering life-threatening injections to six other children during a two-month span at a Kerrville clinic. She faces trial now only on the murder charge.

In nearby Bexar County, she is charged with injecting a month-old boy with a dangerous blood-thinning drug while she was employed at San Antonio's Medical Center Hospital.

Although she faces a possible life sentence if convicted, Ms. Jones' attorney said she appeared to be anxious to begin the trial.

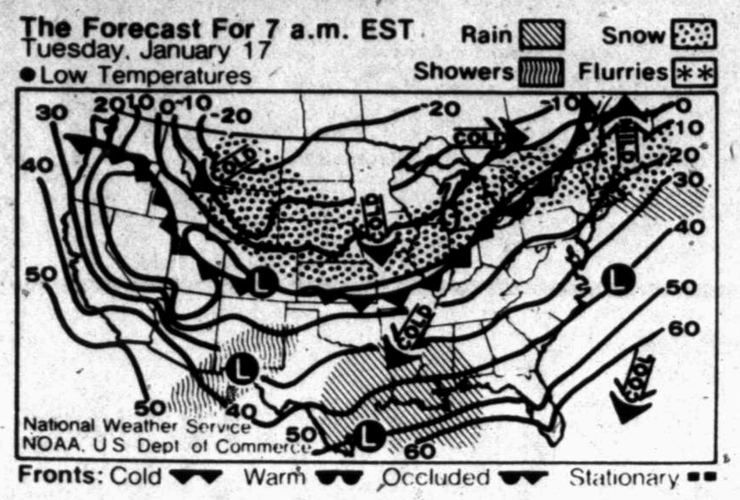

Ms. Jones has steadfastly maintained her innocence and her court-appointed attorney, Jim Brookshire of Georgetown, says she appears to be looking forward to the start of the trial.

"I've never killed any children," Ms. Jones said earlier.

"If I have done anything wrong, it's in fighting so hard for the welfare of those children," she said at a news conference before her indictment.

Shultz, Gromyko prepare to meet

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko and Secretary of State George P. Shultz expressed hope for improved East-West relations as they arrived today for their first meeting since arms control talks between the superpowers collapsed.

Shultz, who spoke to reporters at Arlanda International Airport, called for renewal of the arms control talks broken off by the Soviet Union last year after NATO's deployment of new nuclear missiles.

He plans to meet on Wednesday with Gromyko. Both are here for the 35-nation European security conference, which starts Tuesday.

"The United States hopes that the conference will achieve measures limiting the dangers of surprise attacks and miscalculation in Europe, by rendering military activities more open, more observable, more predictable and more subject to verification," Shultz said.

But he said the conference "cannot replace other essential" disarmament talks, such as those on medium- and long-range nuclear missiles and on conventional weapons. All are now suspended or in recess.

Gromyko, who arrived earlier at the airport, said the Soviet delegation to the conference "will do everything" to solve problems between Moscow and the West.

He also said resolving U.S.-Soviet differences was not up to the Soviet Union, but "depends also on Sweden and other nations" taking part in the conference, which is designed to lessen the possibility of war in Europe.

In London, before departing for Sweden, Shultz said he was neither optimistic nor pessimistic about the scheduled meeting with Gromyko. He said he was going to Stockholm like "a person with rolled-up sleeves ready to go to work."

He told reporters that the Reagan administration wants security and stability through contacts with Moscow, but that the president does not need such contacts to win the 1984 election.

The secretary of state was to meet tonight with NATO foreign ministers. In between, he and Gromyko have separate meetings scheduled with Prime Minister Olaf Palme of Sweden.

Officially, Gromyko and Shultz are coming to attend Tuesday's opening session of the summit. However, their planned encounter has taken on a significance of its own because of the breakdown of three other sets of U.S.-Soviet disarmament negotiations in Geneva and Vienna.

Shultz spent the weekend consulting with Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and other British officials, and a U.S. official said the United States wants "a broad and open dialogue with the Soviet Union."

The official warned, however, "You'd be mistaken if you thought the administration is going to make concessions on any front to get arms control started again."

Both sides signaled Sunday they won't be coming to Stockholm with any specific new initiatives.

The official Soviet newspaper Sotsialisticheskaya Industriya (Socialist Industry) said Sunday that U.S.-Soviet relations were at the "lowest point" possible and gave little hope of any improvement soon.

It also said the Shultz-Gromyko meeting "in no way can replace" abandoned talks on strategic arms and nuclear missiles in Europe and made clear that the Soviets feel the best chance to ease East-West tensions lies with the West Europeans.

The Shultz-Gromyko meeting will be their first since a Sept. 8 session in Madrid, Spain, which broke up in discord over the Soviet downing a week earlier of a Korean Air Lines jetliner with 269 people aboard.

After the medium-range missile talks broke down, the Soviets refused to agree to a resumption date for negotiations in Geneva on long-range missiles and in Vienna on reducing conventional arms levels in Europe.

Unlike the other negotiations, the Stockholm conference deals not with warmaking capabilities but with the intentions of the participants.

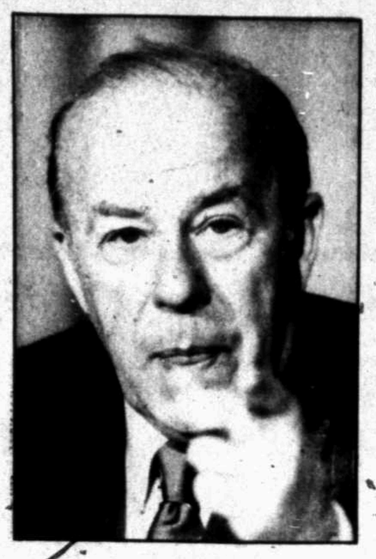

It is expected to last at least two years, with the next sitting, in 1986, of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe to decide if it should continue.

About 350 conferees representing the United States, Canada and all European countries except Albania are to develop systems for building mutual confidence between East and West, improving communications in crisis situations and lessening the chances for surprise attacks.

Its primary goal is to extend confidence-building measures drafted in 1975 at the first security conference in Helsinki. They include notifying the other side of planned military maneuvers involving at least 25,000 ground troops and inviting observers from the other side.

The meeting, called the Conference on Confidence and Security-Building Measures and Disarmament in Europe, is mandated to deal with measures that are militarily significant, verifiable and covering all of Europe.

NATO countries contend the mandate covers Europe from the Atlantic Ocean to the Ural Mountains.

George Shultz

American officials have said the meeting could be the Reagan administration's last move to ease East-West tensions before U.S. presidential elections in November.

Soviet negotiators walked out of the medium-range Pershing 2 and cruise missiles talks in Geneva on Nov. 23, the day after West Germany reconfirmed its commitment to accept U.S. missiles on its territory.

The North Atlantic Treaty Organization claims it needs to place 572 such missiles in Western Europe to counter Soviet SS-20 missiles in the East. Moscow says its missiles balance similar rockets in Britain and France and that the NATO arsenal would bring about an unacceptable imbalance.

Heated debate unlike three previous

By EVANS WITT

An Analysis

HANOVER, N.H. (AP) — The first debate between all eight Democratic presidential candidates may not have satisfied a sports fan wishing for a Sunday afternoon football game, but the three-hour confrontation had its moments of heat and excitement, unseen in previous presidential debates.

Former Vice President Walter Mondale and Sen. John Glenn of Ohio traded stinging barbs in person for the first time over Glenn's charges that Mondale is vague and Mondale's counter that Glenn supported President Reagan's economic policies.

Anyone looking for the "score" of the nationally televised debate and a clear winner and loser was probably disappointed, since each of the candidates made good in his chances to shine and no one stumbled badly.

For a voter trying to decide which of the eight to back in a primary or a caucus, the differences among the eight were laid out pretty clearly. The areas of agreement were well outlined, too.

With only five weeks to go before the Iowa caucuses and six weeks before the primary here in the Granite State, Mondale certainly suffered no direct damage in the debate. He faced Glenn's attacks and demonstrated that he is a politician who is not afraid to display his anger in public. "There's just been a six-minute speech, all of it baloney," he said to Glenn.

For a presidential candidate who has been accused of lacking passion, that was quite an outburst.

And since Mondale did not stumble, that meant his front-runner's position was not diminished.

The format of the debate — moderated by ABC News' Ted Koppel and then by talk show host Phil Donahue — encouraged the give-and-take that provided most of the interesting moments, especially in contrast to the carefully staged and limited presidential debates of 1960, 1976 and 1980.

If Mondale showed his anger, Glenn laid out in detail his charges against Mondale, as he has been trying to do since early November. Millions of potential voters saw Glenn tell Mondale to his face that the former vice president has promised too much and that his economic plans are gobbledygook.

But the other candidates had their moments. And for the six who are in the single-digits in the polls, the national exposure is what this debate was all about.

"People now know who I am and that's what we've been trying to do for the past year," said Sen. Gary Hart of Colorado after the debate.

For example, former Florida Gov. Reubin Askew had a moment when he fired back at both Glenn and Mondale after their shouting match:

"What I'd like to say is that you're both right. You're both right in what you are saying about each other," Askew said.

Askew also got a chance to defend his unique position among the candidates opposing abortion and his relatively hard-line views about dealing with communism in Latin America.

Hart stressed again and again that he offers "a new generation of leadership" for the party, as contrasted to the "establishment leaders" represented by Glenn and Mondale.

The Rev. Jesse Jackson made his points as well, firing back when talk show host Phil Donahue questioned the Democrats' as the party of big spending:

"It costs $20,000 to send a kid to college...It costs $140,000 a year for a penitentiary scholarship. The schools at their worst are better than the jails at their best."

Sen. Ernest F. Hollings of South Carolina exhibited his usual store of one-liners, commenting at one point on the U.S. exchanging ambassadors with the Vatican:

"Should we send an ambassador to Mecca in Saudi Arabia as well?" he asked, referring to the holy city of the Islamic religion.

Former South Dakota Sen. George McGovern defined his stance on defense spending in no uncertain terms.

"You don't measure a person's patriotism by how much he wants to spend" on defense, the 1972 Democratic nominee said, adding he wants major cuts in military spending. Only Jackson agreed with him on that position.

As the candidate who made arms control the centerpiece of his campaign, Sen. Alan Cranston of California made his case forcefully and then said he was pleased that a major portion of the debate had focused on that issue.

Presidential debate was 'lively give and take'

Sen. Gary Hart of Colorado said he "felt good" but added that "I don't think the candidates can judge. I think the public will judge."

The Rev. Jesse Jackson said after the debate he wasn't sure whether the Glenn-Mondale exchange hurt the party, "but it did not help to instruct the people."

The Glenn-Mondale exchange flared about 2½ hours into the eight-candidate debate sponsored by the House Democratic Caucus and Dartmouth College.

Before the debate, Mondale's staff had predicted the other candidates might gang up on the man acknowledged to be the front-runner in the Democratic field.

But until Glenn took him on, Mondale escaped with only occasional jibes from his rivals.

At one point, Hart turned to Mondale and said, "You cannot lead this country if you have promised everybody everything."

"America is nothing, if it isn't promises," replied the former vice president. "That is what America is about."

The first attacks were directed not at Mondale but at Sen. Alan Cranston of California.

George McGovern, the former South Dakota senator who was the party's 1972 presidential nominee, jabbed at Cranston for his support of the B-1 bomber.

Moments later, Sen. Ernest F. Hollings of South Carolina joined the attack on Cranston. Hollings said the Californian's commitment to getting an arms control agreement might lead him to "give away the store" in negotiations with the Soviet Union.

"I liked the format, it was pretty free-wheeling," Cranston said later.

McGovern was the most concerned about the possible impact of the attack on Mondale.

He condemned "this tendency that's developed to clobber the front-runner."

The first half of the nationally televised debate was moderated by television newsman Ted Koppel.

The moderator of the ABC late-night program, "Nightline," Koppel began by trying to get the candidates to say whether they would choose a woman for the vice presidential nomination.

Only Jackson was willing to make such a commitment, a promise he has made throughout his campaign.

The best the others were willing to say was they would give a woman "serious consideration."

The Koppel segment was relatively orderly. But the tempo picked up under Donahue's more free-wheeling style.

Jackson, bothered by Donahue's rapid-fire style, startled the talk show host by saying, "You guys come in with two pitchers in one ball game trying to intimidate. Just slow down."

Off camera, Donahue turned away from the candidates and made a face.

Later, Donahue said, "I was surprised by how aggressive they were toward me."

The McClellan girl was taken to a pediatrics clinic where Ms. Jones worked in September 1982 for routine immunizations. While there, the girl experienced a sudden seizure. She died during a frantic ambulance ride.

An autopsy performed on the girl's 18-pound body blamed Sudden Infant Death syndrome.

But a later indictment alleges Ms. Jones used a powerful drug, probably the muscle relaxant succinylcholine, to injure the children in August and September 1982.

Prosecutors say they plan to call Swedish toxicologist Dr. Bo Holmstedt, who they say developed a revolutionary test that can detect the hard-to-trace substance in embalmed human tissue.

But defense attorneys have attacked Holmstedt's procedure as a "magic wand technique."

Brookshire won't comment on defense strategy for the trial or indicate whether he will call Ms. Jones to testify.

The judge still must decide whether jurors can be told of the Kerr County child injury indictments pending against Ms. Jones. She is to be tried separately on those charges.

The dead child's mother, Petti McClellan, has testified in civil suit depositions that Ms. Jones gave the girl "immunizations" in each thigh that caused "respiratory difficulties" and seizures.

The seizures first occurred, Mrs. McClellan said in her sworn statement, after Ms. Jones took Chelsea into a back room during a Aug. 24 visit to the clinic. Mrs. McClellan said the girl recovered after several days in Kerrville's Sid Peterson Hospital.

During a Sept. 17 visit, Chelsea again suffered serious respiratory arrest, her mother said.

The ambulance that was racing the child for special treatment at a San Antonio hospital detoured to Comfort, where Chelsea officially was pronounced dead. She had suffered a heart attack.

Ms. Jones, who was certified in 1977 after completing a one-year course, worked at the pediatric intensive care unit in San Antonio's Medical Center Hospital until the spring of 1982 when she left to work at the Kerrville pediatrics clinic run by Dr. Kathleen Holland.

In a deposition taken for a $7 million wrongful death suit filed by the McClellans, Mrs. Holland testified that she fired Ms. Jones on Sept. 28, 1982, after discovering a bottle of succinylcholine that had been tampered with.

A specially empaneled Bexar County grand jury investigated unexplained infant deaths at Medical Center's pediatrics unit for almost a year before issuing the child injury indictment against Ms. Jones on Nov. 21, 1983.

Bexar County District Attorney Sam Millsap said the San Antonio investigation is continuing.

"We have a long way to go, but we are determined to try and try again," Reagan said. "We may have to start in small ways, but start we must."

In Moscow, the official Soviet newspaper Socialist Industry said in advance that the address was a campaign ploy to convince American voters Reagan was not "fanning up tensions." The newspaper said superpower relations had reached "the lowest point" possible.

The president noted that nuclear arms control talks now are in a state of indefinite suspension because the Soviets have refused to set a date for the resumption of the talks. Reagan said that U.S. negotiators are ready to return to the bargaining table and that, "whenever the Soviet Union is ready to do likewise, we will meet them halfway."

Reagan, who once called the Soviet Union an "evil empire" and said it was ruled by liars and cheats, put aside his tough rhetoric. Speaking in a conciliatory tone, he repeatedly talked about opportunities for progress in U.S.-Soviet relations.

"If the Soviet government wants peace, then there will be peace," Reagan said. "Together we can strengthen peace, reduce the level of arms and know in doing so we have helped fulfill the hopes and dreams of those we represent and indeed of people everywhere. Let us begin now."

He said, "We can't predict how the Soviet leaders will respond to our challenge. But the people of our two countries share with all mankind the dream of eliminating the risk of nuclear war. It is not an impossible dream..."

"We are working with our allies to develop practical, meaningful ways to reduce the uncertainty and potential for misinterpretation surrounding military activities and to diminish the risk of surprise attack," the president said.

A major problem in U.S.-Soviet relations, Reagan said, is the question of human rights. "Soviet practices in this area, as much as any other issue, have created the mistrust and ill will that hangs over our relationship."

Expressing concern over "prisoners of conscience" in the Soviet Union and the Soviet halt in emigration of Jews, Armenians and others, the president called on Moscow to live up to the Helsinki agreements on human rights.

Soviet press uses '1984' to attack U.S.

Writer Viktor Tsoppi said Orwell's novel "is a grim warning precisely to bourgeois society...In which as he feared the poisonous roots of anti-humanism, all-devouring militarism and oppression have today thrust up truly monstrous shoots."

Tsoppi said the U.S. president is the counterpart of Orwell's all-seeing Big Brother.

Writing in the weekly Moscow News, Gennady Gerasimov nominated the FBI as Big Brother and President Reagan as the embodiment of the fictional nation Oceania's motto: "Ignorance is strength."

"The American president's lack of knowledge has become the talk of the town in Washington and even the world," Gerasimov charged.

The two articles in the newspaper Izvestia depicted the U.S. National Security Agency as the Orwellian thought police, who enforced government-established norms in Oceania.

"This agency...is certainly a favorite candidate for the title of Big Brother," wrote Melor Sturua.

Sturua claimed Reagan's position on arms reduction is an example of Orwellian doublethink, through which the rulers of Oceania tried to change the meanings of words, and newspeak, which used acronyms and contractions to homogenize speech and thought. For example, the Ministry of War in "1984" became the Ministry of Peace — or "Minipax."

"The 'zero' and 'interim options' offered by (Reagan)...are a fruit of the doublethink policy of aggression and arms race," said Sturua, a well-known writer whose first name stands for "Marx, Engels, Lenin, October Revolution."

Just as Oceania conducted "hate rounds" against the enemies in Eurasia, Sturua claimed the United States created a "month of hate" after the Soviet downing of a South Korean passenger plane Sept. 1.

Leaning on the shoulder of a German policeman, Spec.4 Liam Fowler of the 56th Field Artillery "Pershing" Brigade in Schwaebisch-Gmuend, West Germany, leaves the hospital in Miesbach, West Germany, Sunday, after being treated for exposure.

U.S. Army officials investigate reported kidnapping of soldier

SCHWAEBISCH-GMUEND, West Germany (AP) — Police and U.S. Army officials were investigating "every possibility" today in the reported kidnapping of an American soldier by a group of German anti-missile activists.

The soldier, Spec. 4 Liam Fowler, 21, of Daytona Beach, Fla., was treated for exposure Sunday after a farmer and his mother discovered him huddled under a blanket in their barn near Rosenheim, in the Munich area.

In telephone calls to his wife, Fowler apparently had reported that he had been kidnapped by members of the Pacifist Initiative Group, a previously unknown organization.

U.S. Army spokesman Maj. Anthony Maravola said military police cooperating with German police investigators were treating Fowler's disappearance as a kidnapping.

Asked in a telephone interview whether military police had ruled out the possibility of a hoax, Maravola told The Associated Press, "We're investigating every possibility."

Fowler disappeared Friday afternoon after finishing guard duty at his base in Schwaebisch-Gmuend, the Army headquarters for a Pershing 2 missile battery.

His wife, Nikki, told police Fowler called her early Saturday and said he had been kidnapped by six Germans threatening to kill him unless the U.S.-made Pershing 2 nuclear missiles deployed here last month were dismantled.

A German-speaking man called the West German news agency DPA some 11 hours later to say the soldier had been abducted. He hung up without giving further details, police spokesman Gerhard Koller said.

Authorities said Fowler telephoned his wife again Saturday evening to ask if she had complied with the kidnappers' demands not to call police and to have relatives in Florida publicize German opposition to the new medium-range missiles.

He said the kidnappers were members of the Pacifist Initiative Group. The West German anti-nuclear movement denied any involvement in Fowler's disappearance and all knowledge of the group.

"Everything we have points to an actual kidnapping, but at the same time, the thing (the abduction) was handled in such slipshod fashion that it couldn't have been done by anyone who knew what they were doing," said one source close to the investigation, who asked not to be identified.

Fowler was treated for exposure at a hospital near the farm and escorted by German police back to Schwaebisch-Gmuend, about 140 miles to the northwest.

Few leaders attend Moslem summit

CASABLANCA, Morocco (AP) — Moslem nations and the PLO open a summit conference today, but the absence of many important leaders has dampened hopes it could produce significant moves toward peace in the Middle East.

More than half the 42 delegations gathered in Morocco's largest city are headed by officials below the rank of chief of state.

Moroccan officials, who earlier had expressed optimism that the summit could at least make a start toward ending the conflicts in Lebanon and within the Palestine Liberation Organization, said privately they were disappointed by the low-level attendance.

Among chiefs of state not participating were those of Syria, Iraq, Jordan, Lebanon and Algeria, whose countries are involved in conflicts in the Middle East, the Persian Gulf or the Western Sahara. The Moroccan officials — insisting on anonymity — said no meaningful progress toward a settlement of these disputes could be expected in the absence of the top leaders.

Three important Islamic nations were absent altogether: Afghanistan was kept away by its Soviet-imposed regime, Egypt is suspended from membership because of its peace treaty with Israel, and Iran announced it was boycotting the summit because of an alleged "bias" by the Islamic Conference Organization in favor of Iraq.

The 15 chiefs of state who had arrived on the eve of the scheduled three-day summit included the leaders of Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, Bangladesh, Turkey, Tunisia, Gabon, Guinea, Senegal, Qatar, Mali, Niger and the Maldives.

PLO guerrilla leader Yasser Arafat, recognized by the conference as a full-fledged chief of state, was expected to arrive today, but there was continuing doubt over the particiption of Libya's Moammar Khadafy.

President Amin Gemayel of Lebanon was represented by his prime minister, Shafik Wazzan, and Syrian President Hafez Assad by his foreign minister, Abdel Halim Khaddam.

Resolutions drafted for the summit at a four-day preparatory meeting of foreign ministers restated many of the traditional positions of the 15-year-old Islamic organization.

The resolutions denounced the continuing Soviet presence in Afghanistan and the "strategic alliance" between Israel and the United States.

They endorsed the Arab Middle East plan adopted in Fez, Morocco, in 1982, calling for a sovereign Palestinian state in Israeli occupied territories and the peaceful coexistence "of all states in the region" — though without explicitly referring to Israel.

The draft resolutions rejected President Reagan's Middle East peace plan calling for Palestinian autonomy "in association with Jordan."

Habib Chatty of Tunisia, the organization's secretary-general, said the Reagan plan ignored Palestinian rights and refused to recognize the PLO as "sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people."

The summit delegates are expected to approve the ministers' recommendation to admit oil-rich Brunei as the 45th member of the organization. All states with Islam as their official religion are entitled to membership, while three countries — India, China and the Soviet Union — which have large Moslem populations are excluded because the Moslems are in a minority.

Salvadoran troops repel leftist attack

CHALATENANGO, El Salvador (AP) — Government troops repelled a heavy mortar attack by leftist rebels against one of El Salvador's most important army garrisons during a seven-hour battle in which at least 12 guerrillas and seven soldiers were killed, military sources say.

"They (government troops) reacted immediately and triumphed over the subversives, who wanted to take the town," Col. Adolfo Blandon, armed forces chief of staff, said of the battle Sunday at Chalatenangno.

He called the fight against as many as 1,000 guerrillas a serious loss for the rebels fighting a four-year civil war to topple the U.S.-backed government.

Elsewhere in Central America, Nicaragua's leftist Sandinista government, under increasing pressure from critics, said it will conduct elections in 1985 for president, vice president and 90 representatives.

In Guatemala, Interior Minister Gustavo Adolfo Lopez Sandoval was quoted by a newspaper as saying he is "almost certain" Soviet weapons are being shipped to Guatemalan rebels through southern Mexico.

THE SALVADORAN rebels began firing mortar rounds into Chalatenango, a northern city of 50,000, at midnight Saturday, but the shells landed behind the garrison or in a commercial district across the street, damaging a few stores and killing an elderly woman, Blandon said.

At least seven soldiers died and 15 were wounded, a Defense Ministry statement said. Blandon said at least 12 guerrillas died.

The rebels also peppered dozens of army positions in the hills surrounding this mountain town, the capital of Chalatenango province, but they fled when government reinforcements arrived, Blandon said.

Blandon refused to say how many troops were at the garrison, which usually has about 1,000 soldiers assigned to it. At any given time several hundred may be away on patrol.

On Dec. 30, rebels overran the army's 4th Infantry Brigade garrison, 10 miles to the west, killing 140 troops. It was the single biggest loss suffered by government forces in the war.

In Nicaragua, opposition parties said they are adopting a wait-and-see attitude toward the promised elections. Cmdr. Carlos Nunez, president of the Council of State, announced Saturday night the proposed guidelines for 1985 elections.

SOURCES SAID campaigning would begin July 19 and elections would be in February, 1985. Nunez said former members of deposed President Anastasio Somoza's national guard, counter-revolutionaries and accused criminals would not be able to participate.

Opposition leaders hailed the election announcement but they said they also want the government to guarantee that opponents will be able to appear on state-controlled television. Moreover, they said they want the government to end a two-year-old state of emergency under which basic liberties are restricted.

In Guatemala, the newspaper La Palabra quoted Lopez Sandoval as saying of the rebel weapons, "It is almost certain that these weapons penetrate our country and reach the subversive groups through Mexico."

The minister based his conclusion on the fact Mexico has vast mountain ranges that "would facilitate this arms traffic" and that the weapons could not get through the tight security of other countries in the region.

A guard at the Mexican Foreign Ministry said no official was available to answer the Guatemalan charges.

GUATEMALA HAS been trying to get Mexico to either return to Guatemala or move from the border area the estimated 35,000 Guatemalan refugees. Guatemala claims leftist rebels are using southern Mexico as a base for their attacks.

Mexico, citing a tradition of granting asylum to exiles, has said the refugees are free to stay in the country as long as they want.

In his Sunday homily in San Salvador, Monsignor Arturo Rivera y Damas said 938 people were arrested for political reasons in El Salvador in 1983.

"The victims of violence reached 5,142, kidnappings blamed on the guerrillas were 43 and on-the-spot executions (by the rebels) were 67. Casualties admitted by the army are 1,430, though there are no figures for guerrillas who fell in combat," he said, referring to 1983.

South African troops withdraw from southern Angola, ending campaign

PRETORIA, South Africa (AP) — South African troops have withdrawn from southern Angola after a six-week campaign against black-nationalist guerrillas that left several hundred enemy dead, a military spokesman confirmed today.

The last unit of the 2,000-strong invading force completed its withdrawal Sunday from Angola to bases in South-West Africa, also known as Namibia, the spokesman said. He would provide no further details.

On Sunday, a military source said South African army tracker units would continue to operate in southern Angola to search for signs of movement by guerrillas of the South-West Africa People's Organization — SWAPO.

South Africa said its offensive into southern Angola was a pre-emptive strike against SWAPO forces said to be en route to Namibia for their annual rainy season infiltration into white farming areas. SWAPO has fought a 17-year bush war to try to end the white-minority South African government's control of Namibia.

The military said it lost 21 men in the incursion while killing 300 to 500 enemy forces. Of those, 100 were SWAPO members and the rest were soldiers of the Marxist Angolan government or their Cuban allies, spokesmen said. In previous South African operations against SWAPO in southern Angola, the Angolans and Cubans avoided contact with the South Africans.

Three schoolchildren killed in mishap

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Three schoolchildren celebrating the Children's Day national holiday were killed and eight others wounded when a policemen demonstrating the use of an automatic rifle accidentally fired into a crowd of 300 spectators, police report.

Police said two adults also were wounded in the incident Saturday in Kalarin province, 275 miles northeast of Bangkok.

According to police, Sub. Lt. Paisarn Samranchit, 33, was demonstrating how to handle an HK-33 automatic rifle when he lost control and accidentally pulled the trigger, firing into the crowd.

Police said Paisarn, detained at the provincial police station and charged with negligent manslaughter, could received a maximum 10-year prison term.

Fire damages relics from Auschwitz

BIRMINGHAM, England (AP) — A fire in a warehouse severely damaged a collection of relics from Auschwitz, the Nazi concentration camp.

Dr. David Rosenberg, who helped arrange for the collection to be brought from Poland, was quoted by the London Daily Mail as saying he believed the fire Sunday was set deliberately.

"There is a significant movement at present whose aim is to try to rewrite the history books, to pretend that the Nazi holocaust did not happen, that millions of people were not exterminated," Rosenberg was quoted as saying.

He said the relics included Jewish prisoners' uniforms, drawings, gas cylinders and torture implements and were being stored between exhibitions in other English cities.

Stolen Raphael painting recovered

ROME (AP) — A painting by Renaissance master Raphael, one of seven works stolen from a museum in Hungary, has been recovered and three Italians have been arrested in connection with the $28 million theft, authorities say.

Police said they had evidence a Greek industrialist commissioned the theft two months ago and had the other paintings in his possession.

Col. Gerardo de Donno of Rome's paramilitary police said Sunday that Hungarian authorities told him they found the Raphael, entitled "Portrait of a Young Man," in the vicinity of Budapest.

It was stolen Nov. 6 along with six other works by Italian artists from the Museum of Fine Arts in Budapest. Italian police have been cooperating with Hungarian authorities on recovering the stolen works.

Saudis create oil stockpile

WASHINGTON (AP) — The war between Iraq and Iran has prompted Saudi Arabia to load and ship an emergency, floating stockpile of 50 million barrels of oil out of the Arabian Gulf, The Washington Post reported in today's editions.

Iran has promised to impose the blockade if Iraq destroys Iran's principal refining and terminal facilities on Khark Island in the northwestern portion of the gulf.

Quoting an unidentified source, the newspaper said in a story from Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, that the Saudis are acting out of concern that the gulf may be blockaded by Iran.

Polish primate visits pope in Rome

ROME (AP) — Cardinal Jozef Glemp, the primate of Poland's Roman Catholic church, said today that efforts to establish Polish-Vatican diplomatic ties are "going well" but it is too early make predictions about eventual formal relations.

Glemp spoke to reporters after arriving for expected talks with Pope John Paul II and other Vatican officials. A church spokesman in Warsaw described the four-day trip as "religious" in nature.

The Polish government has made overtures to open full diplomatic relations with the Holy See. The two now maintain ties but do not exchange ambassadors.

Glemp said he couldn't make any predictions when asked if relations might be established this year but he added, "there are contacts under way and they are going well."

In a speech Saturday to diplomats accredited to the Vatican, John Paul expressed satisfaction over the establishment of full diplomatic relations with the United States last week. The Vatican has formal diplomatic ties with 107 nations.

"The Holy See would be happy to see [illegible] other ambassadors especially from those countries which to this end have upheld a secular tradition, above all those countries which must be considered as Catholic," the Polish pope said.

"We give them food and shelter all year. I wonder if we can claim them as dependents on our tax form?"

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Tuesday, January 17, 1984

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Benjamin Franklin, the Russian playwright Chekhov, "Keystone Kops" director Mack Sennett and Chicago gangster Al Capone were born on this date. Also sharing your birthday: actor James Earl Jones, puppeteer Shari Lewis, Muhammad Ali and actress Betty White. Travel does wonders for your morale. You tackle a difficult project and win big. Refuse to follow the crowd. Your instincts tell you the most profitable way to go. A new partner or ally has skills that complement your own. Give credit where it is due. Romance is a source of unending delight. Do not spring last-minute changes on an older family member.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Stop selling yourself short! Confidence is all you need to succeed. Accept the help of an associate who is skillful at raising money. Take the time to eat right.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Those who are observant find ways to make profits rise. Do not let one quarrel destroy a friendship. You have the advantage over a competitor. Refuse to start following the crowd.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Two heads are better than one. Offer to share your knowledge. A romantic relationship will bring lasting rewards. Make concessions in the name of happiness. Get better organized at work.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Work on your own as much as possible. Your instincts are sound. Romance will happen if you give it a chance. Keep in touch with a parent or older relative.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): An emotional confrontation will not produce the results you want. Save every dollar you can lay your hands on. Someone is very curious about your private life. Be discreet.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Travel is best postponed. Save your cash for investment purposes. A small gamble could bring you greater financial security. Call an old love. What you hear will surprise you.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Better adopt a more conventional attitude towards spending. Today's events have a big impact on your outlook. A college-bound student gets a last-minute application into the mail.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A business or financial problem demands immediate attention. Do not waste valuable time. Travel is best postponed. Your credit rating depends on your ability to pay bills promptly.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A weekend job is just one answer to a temporary cash shortage. A retired spouse could decide to reenter the job market. You receive great news from your grown offspring.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A visitor offers advice for someone who is unemployed or seeking a higher income. Be honest about your goals. A secret meeting to discuss fund-raising could prove very productive.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Mate or partner is your strongest ally today. Show your appreciation. Do not pass over a young person who has great ideas. He/she could add real pizazz to the executive suite!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A frank discussion with your co-workers should ease tension. Count your pennies if you want to take advantage of new investment opportunities. Some chances come only once in a lifetime.

TV movie strikes at old values

By FRED ROTHENBERG

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Willmar, Minn., described in tonight's NBC movie as a town that consumes more cups of coffee per capita than any place in America, had all the traditional values: safety, security and sexism.

Today, Willmar is still safe and secure, but this town is more enlightened because of the courage and nobility of eight women who struck the bank where they worked for two years, demanding equal pay and job opportunity.

"A Matter of Sex," starring Jean Stapleton and Dinah Manoff, is a touching and powerful film that captures the valiant, real-life struggle of the "Willmar 8" on the picket lines through two biting Minnesota winters.

It also shows how these women raised their own awareness while challenging what they regarded as the good-'ol-boy mentality of the all-male bank management.

"It's definitely been worth it," said Glennis Ter Wisscha, the leader of the strikers, played by Miss Manoff. "People today remember it and acknowledge it. They'll never be able to ignore it."

Ms. Ter Wisscha, 25, is now a full-time labor organizer, negotiator and grievance handler in Minnesota. "I couldn't go back," she said. "I'm in my movement now."

In the movie, Irene Wallin (Miss Stapleton), the bank's head teller, learns that a young male coworker she had trained has been made a loan officer, despite the fact he has less experience and smarts than her.

When Ms. Wallin complains to the bank president, Vern Dimmick (Tom Harvey), he replies: "We are all not equal." This incident, and others like it, spur Ms. Wallin and seven co-workers, backed by the free services of a lawyer (Peter Dvorsky), to form a union, strike the bank in December 1977 and file a sex discrimination grievance with the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

With that as backdrop, the film delves into the divisive effects the strike had on the town, Ms. Ter Wisscha's marriage and, in some stressful times, the eight strikers themselves.

These personal stories broaden the film beyond the "Willmar 8" documentary done for public television several years ago by actress Lee Grant, who convinced NBC that a TV movie would also be worthwhile.

Tonight's film was a family affair. Miss Grant was the director, her daughter, Miss Manoff, co-starred, and Miss Grant's husband, Joseph Feury, and friend, Mary Beth Yarrow, were the producers.

As director, Miss Grant said she viewed her daughter as just another actress.

ANSWERS TO BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠A1076 ♡Q9852 ◇KJ72 ♣Q105
The bidding has proceeded:

West	North	East	South
1 ♡	2 ♠	Pass	?

What action do you take?

A.—You were not invited into this auction — had partner wanted to hear about your spades or diamonds, he could have doubled. Partner must have a good suit for his vulnerable two-level overcall, and you have useful values for him. Pass, and pass again even if the opponents double.

Q.2—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠J6 ♡AQ954 ◇AKJ3 ♣98
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 NT	Pass	3 ♡	Pass
3 NT	Pass	?

What action do you take?

A.—Don't give up yet on slam. Your side could still have a 4-4 diamond fit, and if a suitable trump fit is located, you should have enough to contract for 12 tricks. Test the waters by bidding four diamonds, and see how partner reacts. If he simply signs off at four hearts or four no trump, pass — you have done your bit.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠Q105 ♡AQ3 ◇A98 ♣K765
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
Pass	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
1 ♠	Pass	1 NT	Pass
2 ♡	Pass	?

What do you bid now?

A.—Up to now, you have shown nothing but a minimum balanced opening with a club suit. In fact, you have a maximum for your bidding to this point, and your double fit improves the value of your hand. Take a jump preference to three spades. Since your one no trump rebid has limited your hand to 15 points, partner cannot expect you to have more than you actually hold.

Q.4—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AQJ103 ♡K954 ◇8 ♣765
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ◇	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
3 ♡	Pass	?

What do you bid now?

A.—Your hand has slam possibilities, but you have no convenient way to bid it. A jump to five hearts is a possibility, but partner might not realize that you have the ace of spades and extreme diamond shortness. Perhaps the safest approach is to rebid three spades now, with the intention of bidding hearts over game at your next turn. That will highlight the quality of your spades and put partner in a better position to make the right decision.

Q.5—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠6 ♡A105 ◇AJ984 ♣K852
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ◇	1 ♠	2 ♡	Pass

What do you bid now?

A.—You are not strong enough to show a new suit at the three-level, and certainly you don't want to rebid a mediocre five-card suit when you have good three-card support for partner. Raise to three hearts.

Q.6—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠6 ♡A105 ◇AQ984 ♣KQ85
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ◇	1 ♠	2 ♡	Pass

What do you bid now?

A.—This hand is considerably stronger than the previous example, and you cannot rule out slam possibilities. You are strong enough to show your second suit at the three-level before raising partner's suit — bid three clubs.

Changing families

Everyone who has watched in amazement the past several years as families broke up and the individuals re-established themselves in society may find a bit of comfort in a note from the Census Bureau.

American Demographics reported this month that after two decades of rapid growth in American households, moderation may be setting in.

In fact, the magazine said between 1982 and 1983 growth of American households was too slow to be statistically significant. During that time, the United States' total number of households grew by only 391,000, marking the first time the nation has gained fewer than a million households in a year since 1966-67. As such, it was the first statistically insignificant increase in two decades.

What does it all mean? Well, say the experts, figures indicate that the divorce rate is declining and that "the annual number of first marriages should decline before the end of the 1980s, while divorces and remarriages should rise somewhat."

It also means that while American society may be stabilizing somewhat, it still is different from the society of two decades ago. "Growing up in a home with two parents used to be considered universal among children," said the magazine. "But by 1990 only 69 percent of children will be raised by both parents.

Now that we have the demographics of the change, we can only hope the change in the social structure will be agreeable, and the pace of future change less chaotic.

Quotations to note

Here are a couple of quotations worth a second thought.

President Reagan marked the 25th anniversary of Fidel Castro's rule by addressing these words to the Cubans: "Doing without has not brought you a more abundant life. It has not brought you peace and it has not won freedom for your people."

And here is a quotation which, although not spoken last week, relates to the continuing controversy over income taxes. Sixty years ago President Calvin Coolidge, the Vermont gentleman farmer who was not as taciturn as history makes him out to be, defended his income tax cuts in a Lincoln Day speech. Said not-so-silent Cal:

"I agree perfectly with those who wish to relieve the small taxpayer by getting the largest possible contribution from the people with large incomes. But if the rates on large incomes are so high that they disappear, the small taxpayer will be left to bear the entire burden. If, on the other hand, the rates are placed where they will produce the most revenue from large incomes, then the small taxpayer will be relieved."

Mr. Coolidge may not have opened his mouth as much as modern day politicians, but what he said was worth hearing.

Another View:

Courage on trade

Former Florida Gov. Reuben Askew and the Rev. Jesse Jackson do not stand high in the polls among aspirants for the Democratic presidential nomination, but if political disappointment seems to be their fate then at least candor may be their forte. Consider, as a case in point, their blunt opposition to limiting imports of Japanese cars.

Adopting that stance, which is contrary to the views of the politically potent United Auto Workers union, has taken some political courage. More relevantly, it suggests that Askew and Jackson have a firmer grasp on economic realities than their Democratic opponents, all of whom have expediently embraced auto import controls to one degree or another. Askew and Jackson quite rightly think that trade barriers in the end only hurt America and Americans, and they have said so.

President Reagan also opposes auto industry protectionism, but sensing its appeal to Congress he has gone along with another year's extension of "voluntary" export limits by Japan. That's the lesser of two evils, but it's an evil nonetheless, and it harms consumers.

Japan's car makers, though able to sell fewer cars in the United States, charge more for what they do sell and so come out ahead. At the same time there is no evidence that the quotas have hyped sales of U.S. cars or led directly to the re-employment of American workers. The only discernible results of the quotas have been to raise the prices that Americans have to pay for Japanese cars and ease competitive market restraints on what U.S. manufacturers can charge.

A lot of nonsense gets spoken in every presidential campaign. Among the more transparent nonsense being uttered this time around is that protectionism, even a little bit, can be not only cost-free to the country but beneficial. Those who are peddling that line ought to be ashamed. Credit Reuben Askew and Jesse Jackson for having the good sense and the guts to say that protectionism is in fact a pernicious idea.

TODAY IN HISTORY

On this date:

In 1778, France recognized the independence of the United States.

In 1883, Congress passed a bill creating the civil service.

In 1942, actress Carole Lombard was killed in a plane crash near Las Vegas.

In 1944, Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower arrived in London to take command of the Allied invasion force.

And in 1964, "Hello Dolly," starring Carol Channing, opened on Broadway.

Ten years ago: The White House denied that President Richard Nixon had personally erased an 18½-minute segment of a key Watergate tape, either deliberately or accidentally.

Five years ago: The shah fled Iran after a new civilian government was approved by the parliament.

One year ago: Seven leading Democrats launched the 1984 presidential campaign with attacks on the Reagan administration at the state party convention in Sacramento, Calif.

Today's birthdays: Actress Ethel Merman is 75 years old. And auto racer A.J. Foyt is 49.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

USIA chief given pep talk

WASHINGTON — Charles Wick, the irrepressible director of the U.S. Information Agency, was discussing high strategy the other day with his No. 2 man, Leslie Lenkowsky, and the former head of French intelligence, Count Alexandre de Marenches.

Jack Anderson

It was a most solemn session, duly chronicled in a 17-page transcript intended for official eyes only.

Putting first things first, de Marenches brought up the Soviet Union. It should not be called the Soviet Union, he said. He told Wick the USIA "should always say the Soviet Empire." Then the problem came up of what to call Soviet Defense Minister Dmitri Ustinov.

"I don't like the word 'defense' when you are talking about the Russians ..." said de Marenches.

"Minister of war?" asked Wick.

"I was going to say that he would be called the 'minister of war, minister of global aggression,'" suggested the count. "That is what he really is." Speaking of "war," he reminded the USIA policy makers that their agency is responsible for the "war of ideas."

Declared de Marenches: "I would say that we haven't lost the war of ideas ... We haven't even fought it ... Now, what this kind of warfare tells us (is) don't worry too much about hitting the body, go in through the eyes and the ears..."

But the best place to hit the Poles, he felt, was in the stomach. The USIA should bear down on Poland's food problem, he said.

"Lack of food should be associated with communist ideas ..." urged de Marenches. "I think simple things like this, Charles, are absolutely of paramount importance. And if we don't do this, why do the rest? ... This is absolutely, I think, vital ... Do you agree?"

Lenkowsky quickly agreed. "I think you are absolutely right," he said.

Wick later made a comment which can only be classified as mystifying. "I think you can without bilaterals be provocative ..." he said.

De Marenches got back to nomenclature. The Voice of America's name should be changed, he announced. "I am not sure I would call it the Voice of America," he said.

"Too late now," interjected an unidentified voice.

Undeterred, the count suggested that the VOA be renamed the "Voice of Liberty."

Lenkowsky had something to say about the nature of the Soviet adversary: "I had a friend who said whenever you want to evaluate Russian behavior, you need not only a chess expert but a magician, a functional paranoid, etc."

Despite the perplexity and perversity of the Soviet Union, despite his dissatisfaction with U.S. nomenclature, de Marenches thought he saw a light on the horizon.

"One day," he said, "they will be Russia again."

Unidentified voice: "You mean, the historical Russia."

De Marenches: "The power will break."

Voice: "We have got to liberate those people. Let's."

THREE-MILE COVER-UP: the five-member Nuclear Regulatory Commission is trying to decide whether to allow the undamanged reactor at Three Mile Island back on line. Questions of "management integrity" have sharpened since the facility's owner, General Public Utilities, was indicted last fall on charges of falsifying safety data.

NRC Commissioner James Asselstine directed the agency's general cousel to draw up a list of the integrity questions involved, and then make the list public. But Chairman Nunzio Palladino quickly vetoed release of the list. He even refused to give Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., a copy of the list.

Asselstine turned over the list to Specter and is trying to persuade fellow commissioners to back public release of the document. So far he has convinced commissioner Victor Gilinsky. The issue — daylight or darkness — will be resolved by the full commission any day now.

CONFIDENTIAL FILE: Libyan strong man Muammar Khadafy might well be called "the desert cat," considering the number of attempts on his life he has survived. The latest coup plan was blown when an army general was involved in a car accident. Investigating police found documents in his car that disclosed the whole plot. Sources say executions may already have followed.

— At the time of the Falklands invasion, the Soviets were so eager to win Argentina's friendship that they sent two spy satellites up and relayed information to the right-wing military government in Buenos Aires. Intelligence sources say the Soviets continued to provide updates on British activities in the Falklands to Argentina at least as late as last summer.

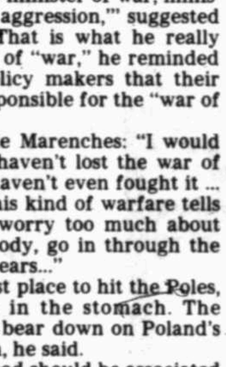

— Ignore reports that hundreds of Afghan rebels are surrendering to theSoviet-backed regime. It's true, but it's all cyclical. As the Afghan winter gets really rough, many guerrillas pose as penitents just to get food and shelter until spring. Then they return to their rebel bands when things warm up — often bringing valuable intelligence information with them.

INSIDE REPORT:

Union can't support Bentsen

WASHINGTON — AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland is putting out the word that Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, a moderate from all-important Texas who is first choice for vice president inside Walter F. Mondale's campaign, is simply not acceptable to organized labor on the national Democratic ticket.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

Bentsen's rating by COPE, the AFL-CIO's political arm, has been mediocre: ranging between 26 percent and 48 percent favorable since 1978. But what really makes him unacceptable to labor was his "wrong" 1978 vote on the AFL-CIO's labor reform bill. On Oct. 6, 1978, Bentsen voted against applying cloture to end the filibuster that defeated the labor bill.

Organized labor's humiliating defeat on that bill led to Kirkland's stepped-up political activity and his high-stakes gamble endorsing Mondale for president. Thus, disagreement over Bentsen could open a rift of major dimension between labor and the Democratic front-runner.

APPEASING JESSE

A Dec. 28 letter from National Chairman Charles T. Manatt suggests the Democratic Party will accept an out-and-out quota system for national convention delegates to prevent any black revolt led by the Rev. Jesse Jackson.

"I am reaffirming my personal commitment and that of the Democratic National Committee (DNC) leadership to total performance of our affirmative action goals," Manatt wrote to Jackson and his ally, Mayor Richard Hatcher of Gary, Ind. That was Manatt's answer to Jackson's query of what the chairman would do at the Jan. 20 DNC meeting to ensure that state Democratic parties meet "representational goals."

Those "goals" would include a proportion of delegates for racial minorities equal to their share of the party — well over 25 percent for blacks. To Democratic leaders, that is not too large a price to pay to prevent a Jackson-led rebellion, even though it would have a predictably damaging impact on the millions of voters who oppose quotas as a matter of principle.

DEAVER'S REVENGE

Michael K. Deaver, the powerful White House deputy chief of staff, is trying to block Peter Dailey, who ran Ronald Reagan's media campaign in 1980, from a repeat performance in 1984. Insiders trace this to old rivalry between two California public relations firms: one headed by Dailey, the other by Deaver.

No final decision has come out of the Oval Office. Deaver, backed by USIA Director Charles Z. Wick, appeared to have convinced the president late last month that Dailey's control over production and time-buying should be split among at least two other firms.

But Dailey counterattacked after Christmas. Having resigned his post as ambassador to Ireland to take over what he assumed would be 1984 Reagan media chores, he refused to walk off the set quietly despite Deaver's power.

KISSINGER VS. STATE

Henry A. Kissinger was furious at his old State Department colleagues when he learned that Deputy Secretary Kenneth Dam was responsible for the White House putdown of his Central America Commission's report on Jan. 9, two days before it was made public.

"Guidance" from Dam was the basis for White House spokesman Larry Speakes's statement to newsmen that President Reagan was "inclined" to ignore the commission's recommendation that aid to El Salvador be linked to human rights progress. Kissinger stormed that four hard months of work would go down the drain if this were the president's public attitude.

Kissinger Commission staffers promptly collared national security adviser Robert C. McFarlane, who reprogrammed Speakes to reverse himself. Furthermore, when the commission report was formally unveiled, Reagan's comments were suitably friendly.

CAP KNIFES STOCKMAN

Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger called on his experience as federal budget director a decade ago to belittle the present budget chief, David Stockman, at a closed-door debate over tax-budget policy in the White House Roosevelt Room Jan. 9.

At a working lunch attended by President Reagan, Stockman and economic adviser Martin Feldstein made an impassioned pitch for tax increases. But Weinberger recalled that future-year revenue estimates handed him in Nixon administration days were invariably off the mark, and he added Stockman's were no better now. Hence, Cap's advice: Neither raise taxes nor cut defense spending.

Weinberger's intervention helped confirm the president's own anti-tax-hike position. Only Secretary of Commerce Malcolm Baldrige supported the Stockman-Feldstein position over lunch.

CHARLEY REESE

Jackson trip didn't alter Lebanon

The Rev. Jesse Jackson does not have a chance to win the Democratic presidential nomination, be chosen as a vice presidential candidate, or even broker the Democratic convention. Yet such is big media's fascination with him that I, for one, am already bored with his candidacy.

Charley Reese

To put the Lieutenant Goodman affair into proper perspective, Jackson gambled that with his pro-Palestinian credentials, the Syrians might let Goodman, a black, go just to give Jackson a boost and to stick Ronald Reagan in the eye. Jackson won his bet and the positive outcome is that Goodman is free. We are all glad of that.

The negative is that Hafez Assad, one of the bloodiest dictators in a bloody area, has gotten an underserved public relations boost. Assad certainly had a hand in the murder of 241 Americans (many of them black), but he gets a kiss on the cheeks from an American presidential candidate.

As for Jackson, he is claiming a triumph when in fact he simply allowed himself to be used by the syrians to make a propaganda point against his own country. In return, Jackson is already trumpeting the line that if the U.S. would only treat "all the nations" in the Middle East even-handedly our diplomacy would be more successful.

This is an old, worn-out line of Arab propaganda that is false in several respects. One, the United States has gone out of its way to placate the Arab countries, despite their absolute lack of any reciprocal gesture. Two, it cleverly attempts to erase moral distinctions. It is immoral to treat virtue and vice even-handedly. Israel respects human life and human rights, even those of people who attack it; Syria does not. Israel, morally and politically, is allied with free nations; Syria is allied with the Soviet Union, Iran and Libya. Only a morally obscene opportunist would urge us to view those two nations equally.

Third, the even-handed ploy attempts to hide the fact that the roadblock to peace in the Middle East is not Israel, but Arab intransigence based on ideological and religious grounds.

Next to Jackson's opportunism on the scale of disgusting behavior is the uniformly cowardly response of the other Democratic candidates, not one of whom had the courage to suggest that what Jackson was doing was improper.

Naturally, they are afraid of alienating a black voter. That attitude reveals, in my judgment, a latent racism which many liberals retain, for it is based on the assumption that American blacks are a uniform lump which will quiver uniformly every time Jackson pokes it with his finger. If all American blacks were that gullible, Jackson wouldn't have had to rely on federal grants to finance his Operation Push.

The attitude of the other candidates also reveals a broad streak of yellow down backs aspiring to bear the major responsibility for the free world. As the Romans would say, it is a bad omen.

From a political point of view, Ronald Reagan finessed Jackson by doing what he does best — acting graciously. No doubt the Republicans plan to finesse the remainder of the Democratic candidates by extracting the Marines fom Lebanon before the campaign really heats up.

Amin Gemayel, titular president of Lebanon and ruler of East Beirut, will discover soon that today's breed of American politicians will pay any price, dump any responsibilities, avoid any hardship, abandon any friend, embrace any foe to assure the survival and success of their candidacies.

What I suspect will happen is that we will accept the partition of Lebanon, declare a success, and get out. We may even ask the Israelis to do in 1984 what we stopped them from doing in 1982. After treating Israel like an enemy initially, we will probably now demand that Israel's alliance requires it to sacrifice its interest and its soldiers to save our face.

Nobody ever said, however, that life is fair and it never is during an election year. It will be a good move to get us out of Lebanon no matter what excuse we use because we never should have gone in there in the first place.

The Israelis at least are proficient in the two languages Arab leaders understand — Arabic and gunfire.

Charley Reese writes for Sun Belt Syndicate.

Coretta Scott King, widow of the slain civil rights leader Rev. Martin Luther King, joins New Jersey Gov. Thomas Kean at a reception in Newark, N.J., Sunday to commemorate King's birthday.

Americans celebrate birthday of martyred civil rights leader

By The Associated Press

Black contractors led a dump-truck parade through Harlem and parishioners from Philadelphia's mostly white Main Line dedicated a race relations program in the name of Martin Luther King Jr., on what would have been the civil rights leader's 55th birthday.

But as Coretta Scott King admonished New Jersey residents to continue working toward her late husband's goal of racial harmony, a cross was burned Sunday in an Idaho field by members of a white supremacist group who called King "our enemy."

The observances were among dozens held around the country, including a tribute by 200 people in San Francisco's Golden Gate Park where a 3½-mile stretch of road was named for King.

Many more were planned for today, including dedication of a Martin Luther King Jr. Shopping Center in Los Angeles' Watts section and a memorial breakfast in Boston. Mrs. King and the Rev. Jesse Jackson were to be in Philadelphia for an ecumenical service and a parade.

A federal holiday marking King's Jan. 15 birthday, to be observed the third Monday in January, doesn't take effect until 1986, but state offices and schools were closed today in the District of Columbia and at least 18 states which already observe state holidays.

In New Jersey, where King visited public schools just a week before his April 1968 assassination in Memphis, his widow addressed 300 people at a reception Sunday night following a concert in his honor in Newark.

"I hope from this day we will recommit ourselves to the dream of equality and...freedom for all of God's children," Mrs. King said.

She said she was "sorry to say" that her husband's home state of Georgia has yet to observe Jan. 15 as a holiday.

But in hopes of changing that, 2,000 people in Atlanta, including actress Jane Fonda, comedian Dick Gregory and Atlanta Falcons football star Billy "White Shoes" Johnson" staged a mile-long march to the state capitol for a rally.

In New York City, the Harlem parade was sponsored by the Metro New York Council of Minority Builders Inc., who said they believed King's work helped make it possible for them to establish their businesses, buy equipment and to provide "at least a measure of employment for minority workers."

City Councilman Fred Samuel, grand marshal of the parade, said King helped get black people "to where we are now." But, he added, "there's still a great deal of racism in the United States and there's much to be done."

At Haverford College near Philadelphia, U.S. Rep. Bob Edgar, a Democrat and an ordained minister, told parishioners from 30 churches Sunday night that if King were alive, he would urge world leaders "to turn their swords into plowshares...their missiles into grain silos, their B-1 bombers into A-1 housing."

Edgar was one of several speakers at a ceremony dedicating a three-year race relations program.

Philadelphia City Council member Augusta Clark asked the audience to make King's holiday "not just another day to boost sales in the white department stores," but also a day "to implement his dream."

Pastor doubts state will alter laws

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — The minister in charge of lobbying in Lincoln for the Faith Christian School at Louisville says he doubts the Legislature can be persuaded to change laws requiring certified teachers.

About 20 Nebraska pastors who lobbied at the Capitol last week have concluded there is little chance state lawmakers will allow the Faith Christian School to operate free from government regulation, the Rev. Robert A. Woosley said in a telephone interview Sunday.

Instead of finding a legislative remedy, Woosley said, church sympathizers must rely on a public relations campaign to sway public opinion in support of the school.

Woosley, president of Churches for Christian Liberty based in Stone Mountain, Ga., is one of several church leaders who have been in Louisville the past several weeks to show support for the Faith Christian School.

The school, operated by the Faith Baptist Church in Louisville, has remained open despite orders affirmed by the Nebraska Supreme Court that it should be closed because it does not employ certified teachers.

School backers had originally viewed a bill offered by Sen. Howard Peterson of Grand Island as a possible resolution of the conflict, but now they won't support it without certain amendements, Woosley said.

Candidates denounce Reagonomics

HANOVER, N.H. (AP) — Here are highlights of the debate among the eight candidates for the 1984 Democratic presidential nomination.

The participants were former Vice President Walter F. Mondale; Sens. Alan Cranston of California, John Glenn of Ohio, Gary Hart of Colorado and Ernest Hollings of South Carolina; former Sen. George McGovern of South Dakota, the 1972 Democratic presidential candidate; former Florida Gov. Reubin Askew; and the Rev. Jesse Jackson.

ECONOMY — The candidates were unanimous in their denunciation of Reaganomics, but they differed over ways to handle the U.S. economy. Mondale called for a promotion of exports and making certain that nations with access to the U.S. market give U.S. producers open access to their markets. Hollings urged a one-year freeze in federal spending as a means of attacking budget deficits. Hollings also criticized Glenn and Cranston for voting for some of Reagan's tax and budget proposals. Askew criticized Mondale's support of union-backed legislation calling for a percentage of U.S. made parts on imported automobiles. He said this would boost the cost of a car by $1,000.

EDUCATION AND SOCIAL PROGRAMS — All supported increased federal aid to education, although Hollings favors spending $14 billion in increased aid on top of a freeze for all government programs. McGovern said money should be cut from the defense budget and be spent on education and social programs. Hollings urged a coast-to-coast network of federal day-care centers. Jackson said the government has a responsibility to ensure women receive pre-natal care. He also said parents have a responsibility for cutting the amount of time children watch television.

FEMALE RUNNING MATE — Jackson said he would have a woman as his vice-presidential candidate. Cranston said there is a "strong possibility or probability perhaps" of his selecting a woman. The other six candidates did not rule out putting a woman on the ticket.

CENTRAL AMERICA — Each candidate was critical of Reagan administration policies in Central America. Hollings said Reagan's "gunboat diplomacy" had reversed gains made by the Carter administration. McGovern called for immediate pullout of all U.S. forces in the region. Hart urged withdrawal of U.S. troops from Honduras. As a group, the candidates said poverty and human rights are central to the region's problems and that aid to El Salvador should be linked to improvements in human rights. Hart, Jackson and Cranston urged improved relations with Cuba.

LEBANON — The candidates joined in criticizing Reagan administration handling of the situation. Only McGovern called for an immediate pullout of U.S. troops. Mondale said a date should be set for a withdrawal of forces. Glenn, a retired Marine, said it was a mistake for the Marines to be sent to Lebanon without clear objectives, but he added that to follow Mondale's strategy would be to allow Syria to bide its time and move in after U.S. forces have left.

NUCLEAR FREEZE — None of the eight supported a unilateral freeze on the production and deployment of nuclear weapons. Generally, they urged greater dialogue and better relations with the Soviet Union in hopes of averting use of nuclear weapons. Askew said an effective deterrence, not a nuclear freeze, will guarantee peace. Hollings said that while he favors peace, he "would not give up the store" with a freeze.

Candidates show off at atypical debate

HANOVER, N.H. (AP) — Walter Mondale jumped to his feet, blasting John Glenn, who jumped to his, firing back. Reubin Askew remained seated, but stole his opponents' thunder, saying, "They're both right — in what they say about each other."

It was just one of many times that a forum of the eight Democratic presidential candidates brought guffaws from the audience at a Dartmouth College auditorium on Sunday.

The three-hour, nationally televised event was not typical of traditional candidate forums, and one spectator said it became a "circus" at times after talk-show host Phil Donahue took over the emcee duties.

The first 90 minutes, moderated by ABC newsman Ted Koppel, opened with his joking warning that the candidates go easy on the water because they would be on stage for three hours.

The mood, as candidates discussed economics and other policies, was serious, but the mood was convivial.

Lots of body language accompanied the verbal chatter.

After the Rev. Jesse Jackson made a point, Askew, a former Fiorida governor, leaned over and patted the civil rights leader on the back.

Jackson jumped up to intervene as a referee during an exchange between Askew and Sen. Ernest Hollings of South Carolina.

Candidates satisfied with performances

HANOVER, N.H. (AP) — The Democratic presidential candidates all say they're satisfied with their performances in a lively debate that saw some stinging jabs directed at front-runner Walter Mondale.

"It is probably the most thorough airing of positions of the candidates we have had yet," former Sen. George McGovern said following Sunday's nationally-televised debate. "All in all, it makes good political fare for the people of this country. Since we didn't have a football game today, it was pretty good substitute."

But McGovern, the 1972 Democratic nominee who lost the election to Richard Nixon, said he did not like Mondale and Sen. John Glenn — the two leaders in the polls — "cutting each other up."

"One of those two guys might be the nominee, and I don't want to see them too cut-up," McGovern said.

Mondale described the debate as "good and sharp and important," with one comment directed toward the wide-open format: "There were certainly no holds barred."

Mondale was attacked by several of the other candidates, including a particularly vocal exchange with Glenn that brought both men to their feet.

Explosion, fire destroys condominium complex

BROOKLINE, Mass. (AP) — An avalanche of debris crashed down as an explosion crushed the rear of a three-story condominium, sending fire roaring through the complex "in a matter of minutes" and leaving two people hospitalized today and two others missing.

Residents of upper floors in the condominium's two adjoining brick buildings used sheets and ropes to escape from windows Sunday night. Dozens of people were treated at the scene for smoke inhalation, cuts and bruises.

"The whole (rear of the) building collapsed," said Deputy Fire Chief Albert Sweeney. The rubble, including bathtubs, radiators and pieces of furniture, buried four cars parked outside, and dense smoke filled the front units.

The cause of the 8:30 p.m. explosion had not been determined by this morning, but Fire Chief James P. Fallon said authorities had not ruled out the possibility of a natural gas leak.

"But there had been no complaints of a gas leak, And there was no odor of gas when the men got here," Fallon said.

Crews from Boston Gas Co. were sent to the scene, near Cleveland Circle in the suburb of Brookline, but spokesman Frank Arricale said he had received no information from them by early today.

All 12 condominiums in the two buildings were fully occupied, but the total number of residents wasn't immediately known.

The two missing people were believed to be an elderly man confined to a wheelchair and his daughter, who were thought to live in a second-floor apartment, Sweeney said.

Court rules media not protected from charges of trespassing

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court today left intact a ruling that news reporters and photographers may be convicted of trespassing for covering a protest demonstration on the site of a proposed nuclear power plant.

The court, without comment, turned down the appeals of six newspaper, radio and television journalists fined $25 each for trespassing on utility company land near Tulsa, Okla.

The journalists contended that the news media were barred from the plant site to minimize unfavorable publicity for the proposed plant.

"The issue in this case is clearly defined as whether officials of a federally and state regulated nuclear power plant, acting in concert with local law enforcement authorities, may manipulate the flow of information to the public," lawyers for the journalists said.

The incident occurred June 2, 1979, when the Sunbelt Alliance, an anti-nuclear group, staged a demonstration at the fenced-in Black Fox Station, a 2,200-acre tract of land in Rogers County, Okla.

Three full sized homes will be on exhibit Jan 31- Feb. 24 by U.S. Home Manufactured Housing Corporation to demonstrate the 'livability' of its pre-built home at the 40th annual National Association of Home Builders show.

Home building industry predicts healthy business

HOUSTON (AP) — The home building industry enjoyed a year of recovery in 1983, says the president of the National Association of Home Builders, and he predicts that 1984 will be a good year for home builders and buyers alike.

"There's never been a better time to buy a home than now," said Harry Pryde, adding that interest rates and home prices are down now but are likely to rise again next year.

Pryde predicted a "a black cloud over the horizon" for 1985 in the form of a "tremendous federal deficit," which will be the topic of a panel debate when the association convenes in Houston this month.

Home sales in 1983 climbed 50 percent over those of the previous year, said Pryde, namely because of interest rates that fell from 17 to about 12 percent during the same period.

"It made housing affordable for a certain percentage of our population," he said. "There was a lot of pent-up demand from the last three years."

The number of home owners has decreased since the 1980s began in the first drop in homeownership since World War II, he said.

"The question of future housing in the decade is a serious one," said Pryde. "We need to be increasing home ownership in this country, not decreasing it."

First-time home buyers — whom Pryde calls "the forgotten group, the one that hasn't been able to qualify for a home in the past few years" — made up more than 50 percent of 1983 homebuying customers. And increased sales gave way to a 60 percent rise in construction of new homes in 1983.

"We had much better production in 1983 than in 1982," he said. "A lot of our builders that haven't been doing anything these past few years were able to do some building last year."

Construction began last year on about 1.7 million new homes, up from 1.2 million in 1982 and slightly more than the one million of 1981, he said.

Pryde said the production increase benefited not only home buyers and builders, but the national economy as well.

"We not only put people back to work," he said, "but we also generated income to help lower the deficit."

Home building will continue in 1984 at the about the same pace as last year if interest rates remain stable, Pryde said. More and more families are qualifying for home financing through adjustable rate mortgages, he said, but homebuyers are "still struggling to put together whatever they can in terms of financing."

At least one group that will still feel the pinch in an otherwise good year for homebuyers are young people, said Pryde.

"It will still be difficult for young people to buy homes. Interest rates are still high, and that creates an affordability problem," he said.

Pryde said he expects 55,000 to 60,000 delegates at the association's annual convention, which will be held Jan. 21-24 at the Astrodome complex. More than 800 exhibitors will display home building materials and other industry products.

The convention also will include educational programs on home building and a debate on the federal deficit and its effect on the industry. Participants will include former President Gerald Ford and Vice President George Bush.

Testimony resumes in suit over foreman's shooting

AMARILLO (AP) — A federal court jury faced a second week of sorting out testimony in a $5 million damage suit filed over the fatal shooting of a ranch foreman who police say was mistaken for a fugitive.

The first week of trial ended Friday with two police officers saying they were present when James Grandstaff was slain in front of his home in 1981, but that they did not know who fired the fatal shots.

Testimony in the case was scheduled to resume today.

According to the first week of testimony, a chase between Borger police and a fugitive triggered a series of events that resulted in the Grandstaff's shooting death in the front yard of his home on the Four Sixes Ranch east of Borger.

Grandstaff's widow, Sharon, filed the suit against Borger police officers involved in the shooting; the city of Borger; Gray, Carson and Hutchinson counties; and a Hutchinson County deputy.

Police officer John Gill Ray testified Friday that he doesn't know who fired the fatal shots. But another officer testified that Ray was the first lawman to fire at Grandstaff.

Ray testified that he was driving over 85 mph when he saw someone firing a gun at him from the pickup he was chasing.

"I started seeing flashes, some type of smoke and saw bullets reflect as they passed by the overhead lights," Ray said.

Ray said he returned the fire before the fleeing truck turned onto a side road. Three police cars followed, but the occupant of the truck disappeared into the darkness, Ray said.

Grandstaff, awakened by the shooting and noise, got his gun and went down to see what was happening, his wife testified.

Ray said he heard a truck engine start and saw headlights turn on. The truck drove down the road from a house to where the officers were crouching behind their patrol cars, said Ray.

Using loudspeakers, police ordered the driver of the truck to get out and raise his hands, according to testimony. Ray said the truck instead backed up to the house, but returned a short time later.

Ray said he called more than five times on a loudspeaker for the occupant of the truck to get out with his hands up. When someone did appear, it was just a silhouette and the person appeared to be running away from the truck, according to Ray.

John Wayne Turner, another Borger officer present when Grandstaff was shot, testified Thursday that Ray was the first policeman to shoot at Grandstaff. Other officers began to fire their weapons after Ray fired his revolver, Turner said.

Infant's remains to be studied

FORT WORTH (AP) — Authorities said the remains of an infant found in a small box seized during a Hood County drug raid last week would be examined today in Fort Worth.

Hood County Peace Justice George Smith said Sunday that Fort Worth investigators almost overlooked the remains because the box they were in was so small.

"When the investigators delivered them Friday night, they got set aside and nobody realized they could be in that small a box," said Smith.

Timothy Newsome, 19, one of three people arrested during the drug raid, said he was given the remains during a devil-worshippers' party in Lake Station, Ind., said Hood County sheriff's investigator Larry Carter.

Hood County Sheriff Edwin Tomlinson said that efforts to give Newsome a polygraph test in an effort to verify the story were fruitless Friday.

"He just couldn't take it ... He just wouldn't hardly respond at all," said Tomlinson, who added that authorities would try again to give Newsome a lie-detector test.

Carter said Sunday that a nurse who saw the remains before they were transferred to Fort Worth told him it appeared the box contained two bodies.

"We had a nurse down here who said there was too many bones to be one baby," Carter said.

But Tarrant County Medical Examiner Nizam Peerwani told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram on Sunday that it was his preliminary judgment that the remains belonged to only one infant.

The tiny remains were discovered Thursday in a locked, black-draped box by sheriff's deputies searching a rented rural house for drugs.

Newsome was jailed on a marijuana possession charge along with his twin, James Newsome; their father, Clyde Vernon Newsome, 43; and their stepmother, Patricia Marie Newsome, 29. Bonds were set at $3,000 each.

Mrs. Newsome and her stepsons were arrested during the drug raid. Her husband was arrested Friday in Fort Worth.

In addition to just over a pound of marijuana, officers confiscated 14 rifles and shotguns and pills described as "uppers" and "downers."

Carter said Timothy Newsome claimed that "the soul of the baby entered his body" when he opened the box. Newsome said the man who gave him the box broke a hand off the baby and kept it, according to Carter.

"He (Newsome) said there were more of them (dead babies)," Tomlinson said.

Blind woman fights with whistle, grit

HOUSTON (AP) — When a blind snack stand operator needs help against robbers, she just blows on her whistle and friends come running — the Army, Navy, Air Force, Marines and Coast Guard.

Vera Moody's chums, nearby recruiters at a Houston post office, have so far averted at least three thefts, resulting in two arrests and saving her about $100 and lots of worry.

"When we hear the whistle, we go to her aid," said Army Staff Sgt. Stephen Hobbs.

"I call them my track team," said Mrs. Moody.

Besides the recruiters for the five military branches, other federal employees in the building have helped protect her from robbers and money switchers.

In her 17 years of running the post office confectionery, Mrs. Moody said, she has been victimized many times.

Once, her money drawer was completely claned out. Finally, she had enough and decided to arm herself — with the whistle.

"One day, a guy said he had a gun and I blew the whistle," said Mrs. Moody. Marine and Army recruiters chased the man out the door and into a car with three others. The military men got the license plate number and the four were later arrested.

On another day, a young man snatched a pack of cigarettes and ran. A Marine chased him and was about to grab him when the thief dropped the cigarettes and ran on, she said. The merchandise was returned.

Still another thief grabbed a $5 bill and a fistful of quarters. Mrs. Moody's whistle brought a dozen helpers who chased the man for several blocks before he was tripped up and handcuffed by police officers.

"They got my money back," said Mrs. Moody, who describes her age only as "a little bit over 29" and who said she lost her sight to disease at age 14. Her husband, also blind, runs a concession stand at the Harris County Courthouse.

As for would-be money switchers, who have cheated the blind woman by claiming a $1 bill they hand her is a $10 or $20 bill, the whistle has caught them, too, she said.

Recently, she got a machine that verifies bills, screening them and announcing the denomination in an electronic voice. But if she has doubts, she'll blow her whistle for human confirmation.

"I've embarassed quite a few people," Hobbs said. "People realize she's blind and then try to take advantage of it."

The Army recruiter said Mrs. Moody recognizes the footsteps of some of the recruiters and will call to them as they pass through the post office lobby.

And, he said, all the military men have gotten into the habit of listening for her toots.

Company refloats tanker

GALVESTON (AP) — An offshore service company based in Galveston has refloated an oil tanker grounded in international waters — and now wants payment from the ship's owners.

Employees of the Viking Boat Service were occupying the 885-foot Aegean Sun today, while company officials demanded a salvage fee and planned to meet with the owners' insurers and attorneys.

Lyle Alzado (77) typical of the breed.

Raiders' bite as bad as their bark

By PAUL ATTNER
Los Angeles Times
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — When cornerback Mike Haynes joined the Los Angeles Raiders midway through this season, he was sure all those stories he had heard about his new team were exaggerated.

Wrong.

"I found a lot of verbal guys with short fuses," said Haynes, who had spent seven years with the New England Patriots.

The Raiders are more than a Super Bowl team. Much more.

"We're a halfway house for wayward players," said tight end Todd Christensen. "We've had plenty of people here better suited for jail than games."

The day before the American Football Conference title game against the Seattle Seahawks, Coach Tom Flores had to shorten practice. There were too many scuffles among the players and he was afraid someone was going to get hurt.

"That's the way we know we are ready," said defensive end Lyle Alzado. "What's wrong with fighting? I never knew a man I didn't want to fight."

ALZADD said he was traded to the Raiders from Cleveland because the Browns thought he had a mental problem. "They were right," he said. "I don't really trust a sane person. You can never depend on them."

John Riggins dressed up in top hat and tails and made a surprise appearance last week on Redskin Sidelines, a local television show. Alzado appeared on Johnny Carson's Tonight Show in a low-cut shirt, to show off his chest hairs, and proceeded to rip up a Redskins cap with his Paul Bunyan-size hands.

The Raiders know how to psyche up Alzado for games. They feed him quotes from opposing players. By kickoff, none of his teammates are brave enough to talk to him.

"I don't know if what they tell me is true or not," Alzado said. "But I can't take a chance that they are lying to me."

Flores, the quiet man among all the chaos, tries to dismiss the halfway house image with deadpan humor. He'll recite his raw-meat story ("I toss a piece of raw meat into the team meetings before I go in the door"), though the unsaid message is that the team is not that hard to coach and its image has been blown out of proportion.

STILL, THERE are enough Raiders players who disagree with him.

"The Raider organization is interested in what happens between the lines on Sunday," said linebacker Ted Hendricks. "Otherwise, they will leave you alone. As long as you are successful, no one should be able to say anything to you, except maybe pat you on the back."

Hendricks, who hates practice, once rode to the workout field on a charging horse, in full uniform, carrying an orange traffic cone as a lance. Other times, he has practiced with crow or ostrich feathers stuck in his helmet. One Halloween week, he substituted a pumpkin for his helmet. Another time, he put a table at midfield, set up a cafe umbrella and greeted teammates while sipping lemonade.

And by Raiders standards, Hendricks is tame.

"We have guys who are quiet who think they are loud and we have guys who are loud who think they are quiet," said linebacker Matt Millen. "We've got a good blend of youth and old guys and we've got guys from a lot of different backgrounds.

"It works because they allow you to be what you are and what you want to be. If you like to run with the guys and have fun, fine. If you don't, fine. No one says anything about it."

IT'S MILLEN who personifies what he calls the Raiders' three Ps: "Punching, pointing and pushing." On the field, he's a pugnacious, temperamental alley fighter who wouldn't back off from Andre the Giant. Take him away from Raider Mania and Millen couldn't be more pleasant: a homebody from Pennsylvania who dislikes the fast life of Southern California.

Yet Millen fits in nicely with the Raiders. Once he had a calcium deposit in his right elbow. He tried conventional treatments but the pain persisted. So he attempted some home remedies. He used weights to try to force his arm, which was locked at the elbow, to unlock. That didn't work.

McEnroe at best in Volvo

John ends four-year drought in Volvo Masters

NEW YORK (AP) — John McEnroe had the strongest aspects of his game working to perfection, leaving Ivan Lendl with little to do but shake his head and hope things would be different next time.

McEnroe used a laser-accurate service, quickness and deft touch at the net Sunday to break a four-year victory drought in the $400,000 Volvo Masters tennis championships with a 6-3, 6-4, 6-4 triumph over the powerful Czechoslovakian.

"I felt going in that getting in 50-55 percent of my first serves would not be good enough against Lendl," said McEnroe, who connected on 62.9 percent and never lost his service in the match. "Since I served well, I was better able to keep him off balance."

MCENROE ALSO won 55 of 85 points when he charged the net, a very high percentage considering Lendl's reputation for passing shots.

"My touch at the net was as good as I ever remember," said McEnroe, who won $100,000 plus a new car.

McEnroe, the world's top-ranked player though seeded third in this windup to the 1983 Grand Prix tour — the seedings were based on points collected on the tour — also effectively cut off Lendl's favorite shot, a forehand down the line.

"It's common knowledge that he likes to go down the line," McEnroe said. "So I wasn't going to just let him do it. I dared him to go cross-court, but he never did. But I definitely covered the line more than under normal circumstances."

LENDL, A winner of the Volvo Masters the past two years but a flop in Grand Slam events during his entire career, was not upset with his play.

"I've played better and much worse," he said. "I'm not discouraged by someone playing so well. It's very difficult to win without breaking service although I have done it once or twice by winning tiebreakers. McEnroe was serving so well. I only lost my serve three times in three sets, so I have nothing to cry about there. The problem was I couldn't break him."

Lendl said he has read articles criticizing his inabilty to win important tournaments "and there's nothing I can say about it. They are right. Hopefully one day I'll win one."

"It's very difficult to be confident when you're getting beat so badly," the Czech said. "But you shouldn't be discouraged by someone playing so well."

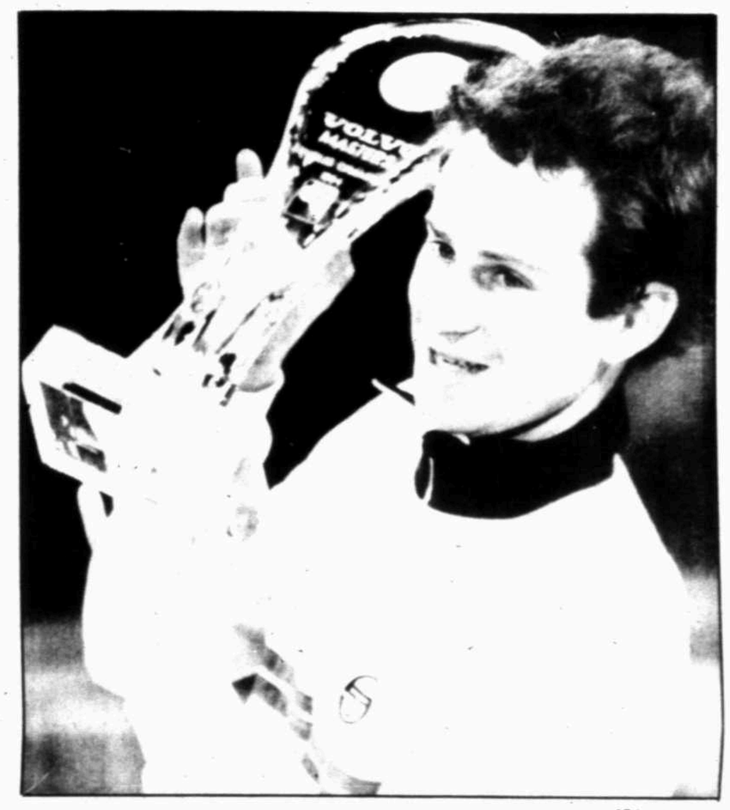

McEnroe, who lost to Lendl 6-4, 6-4, 6-2 in the Volvo Masters final last year, advanced to the title match with victories over Johan Kriek and top-seeded Mats Wilander of Sweden, while Lendl, who was seeded second, defeated Andres Gomez and fourth-seeded Jimmy Connors. The top four in the 12-man field had opening-round byes.

MCENROE WON all the important points on Sunday. Only six games in the match saw service break points — three on McEnroe's serve and three on Lendl's — and the New York lefthander McEnroe won them all.

The service breaks came in the sixth game of the first set, the third game of the second set and the third game of the final set.

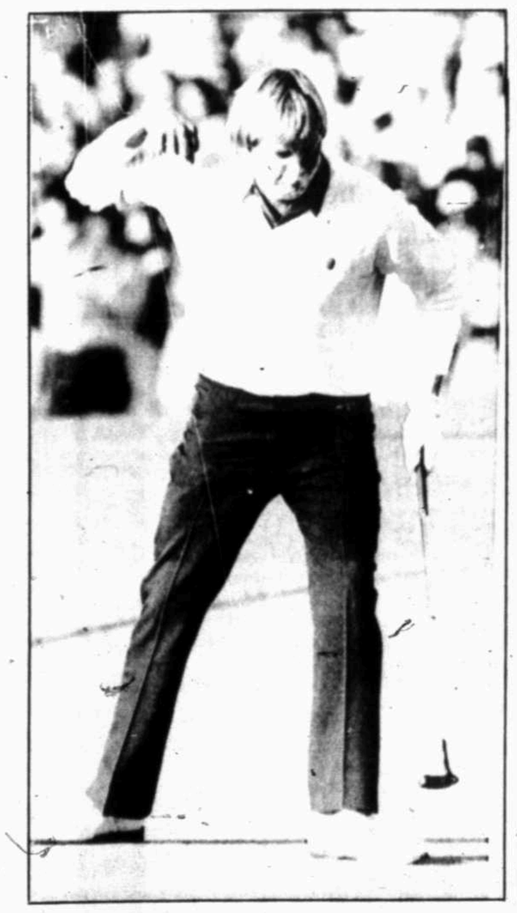

McEnroe had six aces and several other service winners. At the net, he had 21 putaways to three for Lendl.

In the first five games of the match, the service receiver never won more than one point, but in the sixth game McEnroe won four straight points falling behind 0-30. The game-winning point was a whistling forehand down the line on a second serve by Lendl, who got only 46.7 percent of his first serves in.

John Mahaffey uses body-English to help home a birdie putt on 18 to send the Bob Hope Classic into extra holes. Mahaffey won in overtime to pocket $72,000.

Mahaffey's wait ends

Copley News Service

PALM DESERT, Calif. — Clean-living John Mahaffey emerged the victor in the Bob Hope Desert Classic golf tournament Sunday when Jim Simons missed a dirty little 3-foot putt on the second hole of a sudden-death playoff.

The victory was the first in over two years for the 14-year PGA Tour veteran and was worth $72,000. Simons received $43,200 second money and Johnny Miller, a leader by one stroke entering the final round, settled for third place and $27,200.

Mahaffey came from four strokes off the pace with a 6-under-par 66 Sunday at Bermuda Dunes Country Club while Simons closed with a 69 and made a 20-foot birdie putt on the 18th hole to tie Mahaffey's 20-under-par 340 total and force the playoff. Miller struggled uncharacteristically with his iron shots, got no aid from his putter and could do no better than an even-par 72 on the final day.

THE BIGGEST loser in the tournament, however, may have been the American tobacco industry. After Mahaffey dropped a 10-foot par putt on the second playoff hole, and Simons missed his 3-footer, Mahaffey attributed his stamina through the 92 holes of the tournament and poise under pressure to breaking the cigarette habit 2½ months ago.

Hope Classic

"Last year I was smoking three packs of cigarettes a day, two (cigarettes) a hole if I was nervous or missing shots," Mahaffey said. "I felt like I played pretty well last year except I'd have one bad round a tournament, either Saturday or Sunday.

"My legs were feeling tired and my wife (Susie) suggested that I do it. She said 'You're playing one bad round, I guarantee you it's the cigarettes. You quit smoking, I guarantee you'll gain (driving) yardage, you'll feel better, you'll sleep better.'

"When I won the PGA (1978) and won the week after that I didn't smoke for those two weeks. Then I went back to smoking and I didn't win for awhile. I think there's a direct correlation for me.

"I feel so much better than I have the last couple of years and I don't feel as nervous under the gun."

MAHAFFEY cast away his smokes on the Monday following an invitational tournament in Hawaii in November and spent the next few weeks with his wife and other relatives vacationing in the islands. He says the non-stressful situation helped him maintain his resolve, and while he was at it he embarked on a couple other self-improvement projects.

Mahaffey said he now has an exercise regimen he performs nightly, and he has a changed attitude about competing.

"I've got a new philosophy. I was really kind of tired of laying back and trying for pars and playing very conservatively," said Mahaffey. "I've gained a lot of distance off the tee, I've worked hard to do it and there's no reason not to use it. I felt that if I could be aggressive and make some birdies I might force some things to happen today, and fortunately I did.

"That's the way (Tom) Watson and (Jack) Nicklaus and all these guys have been winning tournaments for all these years and hell, it's fun."

Using what he estimates to be 20 extra yards on his drives as a result of better physical conditioning, Mahaffey birdied all four par-5s and picked up extra birdies on a par-4 on both nines.

With Miller marking time at 18-under-par, Mahaffey — playing one group ahead of Miller, Simons and Jack Renner — tied Miller for the lead at the 13th hole.

Mahaffey, Miller and Simons remained deadlocked until Mahaffey stroked a 5-iron shot to 10 feet from the flag at the 16th and rolled in the birdie putt on the 446-yard, par-4 hole.

Houston and Arkansas, bullying their way to a Feb. 25 showdown, continue picking on their Southwest Conference opponents, all but one of whom have at least two losses already.

No. 7 Houston ran its league-leading record to 5-0 with a 70-64 victory over Texas A&M Saturday night, while Arkansas, a half-game back at 4-0, beat Texas Christian 70-62, despite a 32-point performance from the Horned Frogs' Dennis Nutt.

In a meeting of two also-rans Saturday, Rice trounced Texas 63-49. Southern Methodist, which has dropped one-point decisions to both Houston and Arkansas, took out its wrath on Baylor Saturday night, routing the struggling Bears 89-70. Texas Tech, 8-6 on the year and 2-1 in league play, took the night off.

Arkansas Coach Eddie Sutton said only Terry Teagle of Baylor, now with the National Basketball Association's Houston Rockets, and Larry Bird of Indiana, now with the Boston Celtics, had scored more points on his Razorbacks than Nutt did Saturday night.

"I though Dennis was outstanding," Sutton said. "I thought it was one of the best performances against Arkanasas in my 10 years as coach."

Arkansas, 13-2 on the season, led by seven points, 35-38, at the half but had to fight off repeated Horned Frog rallies. Joe Kleine led Arkansas with 15 points.

The loss dropped the Horned Frogs to 7-8 on the season and 0-4 in conference play.

Midland girls take on league-leading San Angelo

By BRUCE CASTLEBERRY
Sports Writer

All eight District 4-5A girls basketball teams resume action tonight, but the eyes and ears of each team will likely be interested in the events scheduled for 8 p.m. at Midland College's Chaparral Center.

Coach Jane Young's Midland High Bulldogs host district-leading San Angelo at Chap Center, and it is a key game for both schools.

For MHS, 13-7 and 4-2, a win would draw them to within a game of the district lead. A loss, however, would put the Bulldogs into an untenable position.

IF THE BOBCATS are able to beat MHS, it would give Angelo a win in a tough arena. A loss wouldn't seriously damage San Angelo, but a win would be quite a feather.

Angelo should have some things to worry about. The first thing would be Denise Lanz. Lanz, last year's sophomore of the year, has only gotten better and is the MHS floor leader. She is averaging 14.1, tops on the team. Behind Lanz is senior Orvetta Johnson. Johnson is a basket less than Lanz at 12.1.

MHS has gotten a big lift lately out of Terez Robinson. Robinson's average is up to 7.1. In her last three games, she has scored 45 points.

MIDLAND LEE has plenty of reasons to pull for an upset out of its cross-town rival. Lee's coach, Shirley Stephenson, has a family interest where Young, her sister, is concerned. But Lee also is the team with the most to gain from a San Angelo loss. The Rebs (16-5) are hot on the heels of the Bobcats. Lee had their off-night at San Angelo Jan. 5, falling 67-49.

That is Lee's only loss in district this year. Angelo is 6-0 in district, 12-6 on the year.

But first, the Rebels must take care of their own problems. Topping the list is Big Spring, which Lee takes on tonight on the road.

The Steers are still in the race and would love to knock off the Rebels. Big Spring is 10-9, 3-3, and a win would lift them into a second-place tie with Lee and possibly a few others.

The Steers were 64-50 upset victims last Thursday against Abilene Cooper. Lee is still a clear favorite to be in the playoffs, but the race is tightening up like a gathering thundercloud. Big Spring could win.

OF COURSE, THE Steers have to find a way to deal with the relentless Rebs. Thus far, people have stopped some players. But teams haven't even slowed down Felicia Farias or Tunya Mayberry.

That Farias is doing well is no surprise. But Mayberry's scoring punch has definitely arrived. Farias is hitting 16.9 a game, and Mayberry has scored 12.1. Stacy Harmon adds 10.3 per game.

That's 40 points right there, and Lee has a capable bench. Tuesday morning, Lee could be in first place.

The district's second division tips off tonight, with the battle of the beatens taking place when Odessa visits Abilene.

The Bronchos don't have the horses and are floundering at 5-16, 0-6. Abilene's Eagles are an endangered species, they've been killed so often. Abilene is 6-13, 0-6. At least one of them will get a district win this year, and it should happen tonight.

ABILENE COOPER visits Odessa Permian tonight in a key tilt for both teams. Cooper is 7-8, but evened their district mark at 3-3 with their win over Big Spring last week. Cooper could start a rally with a win over Permian.

The Panthers are also 3-3 in district, 8-12 overall. Lee blasted Permian last week and the Panthers would like to get back in the thick of the race. The loser of tonight's clash could find the road steeper, while the winner will move closer to the upper levels.

Gill sparks West win

Japan Bowl

YOKOHAMA, Japan (AP) — Turner Gill's passing and Alfred Anderson's running carried the West through three consecutive fourth-down gambles in a do-or-die situation at the Japan Bowl college all-star football game.

The result was a fourth-quarter touchdown today which enabled West to come from behind for a 36-21 victory over the East.

Gill, who played in the shadow of Heisman Trophy winner Mike Rozier at the University of Nebraska, connected on passes of 11 yards to Gerald McNeil of Baylor and 20 yards to Paul Bergmann of UCLA when confronted with situations of fourth and 10 and fourth and 15.

Then Baylor's Anderson came through on a fourth-and-two play, reaching the East's 7 yard line, and scored the winning touchdown on a 1-yard vault over the line after a pass interference penalty against the East.

West	7	12	0	7—26
East	7	0	7	7—21

East—Jackson 2 pass from Hostetler (Bennett kick). West—Nelson 1 run (Pavlich kick). West—Gill 1 run (kick failed). West—Fryar 6 pass from Gill (pass failed). East—Hostetler 1 run (Bennett kick). East—Hostetler 2 run (Bennett kick). West—Anderson 1 run (Pavlich kick).

INDIVIDUAL STATISTICS

RUSHING—West, Anderson 11-37, Nelson 7-29, Gill 6-16. East, James 14-76, Bell 9-55, Anthony 8-46. PASSING—West, Gill 12-25-1-147, Young 8-13-3-101. East, Bennett 6-20-1-71, Hostetler 2-6-1-23. RECEIVING—West, Bergmann 7-94, McNeil 3-49, Fryar 4-28. East, Militello 2-31, Thompson 1-21, Anthony 2-15.

Rozier, who has signed with the USFL's Pittsburgh Maulers for a reported $3 million, appeared in uniform and told the mostly Japanese audience of 26,000 before the game that he was sorry a sprained ankle suffered in the Orange Bowl kept him out of the game.

But teammate Gill was voted the game's most valuable player on offense,

"SOME PEOPLE HAD doubted me, whether I could throw the ball. But in the last two games I proved I can throw the ball. I want to play in the NFL and I hope someone gives me a shot," Gill said.

Gill completed 12 of 25 passes for 147 yards and teammate Irving Fryar caught four passes for 28 yards. But Bergmann was the favorite target for Gill and Steve Young of Brigham Young, who completed 8 of 13 passes but had three intercepted. Bergmann picked up 94 yards on seven receptions.

The West started miserably. But it took the East two fumble recoveries and a 17-yard sacking of Young before it opened the scoring late in the first quarter with a two-yard pass from Jeff Hostetler of West Virginia to Kenny Jackson of Penn State.

The West bounced right back with a 75-yard scoring drive on seven plays, including passes by Young of 23, 5, 12 and 31 yards. Kevin Nelson of UCLA, whose fumble at the East 2-yard-line had set up the East touchdown, scored on a 1-yard run.

The West then ran up a 19-7 halftime lead on drives of 67 and 28 yards, capped by a 1-yard end run by Gill and a six-yard pass from Gill to Fryar.

But the East's Chris Brown of Notre Dame intercepted a pass by Young and ran it back 41 yards, setting up a six-play, 27-yard scoring march, and Garcia Lane of Ohio State stopped the West's next drive with an interception in the end zone.

The East went ahead 21-19 on an 80-yard drive that actually required nearly 100 yards. It suffered four offside and illegal procedure penalties on the way before Hostetler ran the final two yards.

The East had one more chance in the fourth quarter, but lost the ball on downs at the West 22. After the West's final touchdown, quarterback Ben Bennett of Duke tried to mount a passing attack but twice was thrown for losses.

Although Bennett had passed for an NCAA record of 9,614 yards in four years, he completed only six of 20 passes for 71 yards, and Hostetler added 23 yards with two completions in six tries.

East coach Dick Crum of North Carolina, said, "Over the course of the game, we discovered we could run the ball better than we thought, and our passing was not as good as we thought it might have been."

One of his assistants, Randy Rodgers of Evansville, added, "Because we ran the ball so much, we kept their great passers on the bench and they could never really get warmed up. Steve Young is, in my opinion, the greatest quarterback to play American college football."

Don Rogers of UCLA was was named most valuable player on defense.

Potential buyers of Cowboys emerge

DALLAS (AP) — A group led by Dallas businessmen W.O. Bankston and Vance Miller has emerged as the leading candidate to purchase the Dallas Cowboys and plans to include Coach Tom Landry and General Manager Tex Schramm as partners, The Dallas Morning News reported Sunday.

Schramm has been put in charge of finding a new owner for the NFL club by present owner Clint Murchison, who is selling the team because of his health and a desire to settle the estate of his brother, John, who died in 1979.

"We will insist Tex and Tom be in the deal," Miller said. "They would have economic interest without significant economic risk."

Connors owns NY fans

McEnroe, Lendl envio us of popularity

By BOB GREENE

NEW YORK (AP) — On a tennis court, John McEnroe is feisty, tempetuous, talented and, as one opponent put it, an "artist with a racket."

He's also No. 1 in the world.

Ivan Lendl is power personified, his booming serve matched only by his fearsome forehands and whistling backhands. He's No. 2 in the world.

Yet, besides their winning performances on tennis courts around the world, there is another trait they share: both are trying to shake their images and become more like Jimmy Connors, the world's third-ranked player.

VICTORIES will continue to come for both. And neither wants the "bad boy" label that had been attached to Connors for years.

Still, McEnroe and Lendl would love to be loved by the fans — especially the fans in New York.

Both McEnroe and Lendl are the "heavies" as far as the crowd goes. Connors, on the other hand, always has the New York fans loudly pulling for him.

Ever since capturing his first Wimbledon singles title in 1981 after a tumultuous two weeks during which he broke or threw rackets and balls, and berated umpires, linespeople, opponents and officials, McEnroe was labeled "Superbrat" by the British media.

The crowds now anxiously await his temper outbursts, his pouting over calls, his scowling at linespeople, his confrontations with umpires. And they respond negatively, especially in New York, his hometown.

"I can't understand why they do that," McEnroe said of the crowd that watched him defeat Lendl on Sunday and capture the $400,000 Volvo Masters tournament at Madison Square Garden for the second time. "They holler out things like 'brat,' 'Superbrat' and 'McBrat.'

"It's important for me to show emotion. I can't keep my feelings inside, but I have to channel the emotion in the right direction. Rather than let comments from the crowd bother me, I'm trying to learn to get them to inspire me, psych me up."

WHENEVER CONNORS is on court, he plays the crowd, jokes with them, mugs for them — anything for a laugh and, sometimes, a fine. He was fined $500 this week for a "visible obscenity."

"I enjoy playing for them," Connors said of New York fans. "They seem to enjoy seeing the kind of tennis where you kill yourself, really grind yourself down in a match."

Where McEnroe's problems come from being too emotional, Lendl has been stone-faced on the court, his deep-set eyes, hollow cheeks and stoic demeaner when he's deep in concentration giving him a specter-like appearance.

Then there's his style of play. Where some players try to run down every ball, even if there's no chance of reaching it, Lendl doesn't if his opponent hits an obvious winner. It gives an appearance — albeit a wrong one — that he isn't trying.

Several years ago, in the first bid to change his image, the native of Czechoslovakia switched from all-black outfits to one that has a colorful diamond pattern circling his chest. And, as he has become more familiar with the English language, his joking during postmatch interviews have become received just that way — as jokes, rather than snide remarks.

During Saturday's semifinal victory over Connors, Lendl, what until recently has been very uncharacteristic, jumped up and down several times after he made a poor shot.

Finally, he was letting his emotion show. He is not the menacing mechanical man that many fans felt he was.

THE FACT he has reached the last four Volvo Masters finals, winning in both 1982 and 1983, demonstrates his dominance on indoor carpet surfaces.

Now quick to smile and unafraid to show his displeasure at his own mistakes, Lendl is slowly being accepted by the fans for what he is — one of the game's top players.

Whether he or McEnroe will ever become a crowd favorite like Jimmy Connors, however, remains to be seen.

Linebacker Matt Millen typifies Raider renegades

Then he dipped his arm in very hot water but only burned his skin. Recalling a scene from a Three Stooges movie, he went to a high school metal shop and put his elbow in a vise while a friend attempted to straighten his arm. That didn't work.

Finally, Millen ignored medical advice and lifted a 400-pound barbell. He heard a pop and the elbow unlocked. End of pain, return of mobility. His doctors were stunned.

"NO ONE tells you when you join this team that you are expected to be physical and tough," said defensive end Howie Long, whose arms resemble anvils and whose face resembles that of a Hollywood golden-boy idol. "There isn't a primer course on how to be nasty. They bring in players who fit the mold of what they think a Raider should be like."

Long, an outgoing man with a charming personality and a sharp sense of humor, said he plays as dirty "as I have to. I sink to the level of the opposition."

Said Christensen, a Mormon: "We're very close as a team, but that doesn't mean I necessarily ask Howie or Lyle over to dinner every night."

Yet Christensen, the team's resident philosopher, said he's more proud of being "the three-time air hockey champion in training camp" than of being named all-pro this season. All-pro, he said, "is a beauty contest."

A Raiders legend born from the boredom of training camp at Santa Rosa, Calif., the air hockey tournament has some 30 rules, including one that excludes Christensen from winning again, unless he changes religion. At the end of camp, the players hold a parade through the town, decorating their cars and selecting a queen from city residents.

"Since I've been on the team, we've had three or four strippers who have come out on the practice field during training camp to perform," Long said. "Right in the middle of practice."

On a corner of the training camp field is a facility called the "Bamboo Room." Beer is served in the Bamboo Room. Lots of beer.

"On light days, we call it a one-pitcher day, and on heavy days it's a three-pitcher day," Long said. "Yeah, we just go right from the field to the Bamboo Room. Don't even take off our pads on the bad days. It gets pretty rough in there some days."

AL DAVIS, the Raiders' reclusive owner, has created a refuge for the old, the rejected and, in some cases, the lame. He doesn't seemed concerned if players he acquires have reputations for being clubhouse lawyers or malingerers or malcontents. There is enough of a maverick instinct in Davis to allow him to take a chance, especially if it rubs against the conventional grain of the rest of the league.

Davis rescued Jim Plunkett from the NFL discard pile. Plunkett, a quiet, decent man who should retire the NFL comeback of the year award, has rewarded him by guiding the Raiders to two Super Bowls. Cleveland gave up on Alzado and Greg Pruitt, believing each was at career's end. Alzado, who trains as if he was competing in a triathalon but also has a reputation as the team's best barroom brawler, is the Raiders' best pass rusher; Pruitt is a Pro Bowl return man.

Dave Stalls was a free agent who had signed a USFL contract this season; Davis still asked him to play the last half of the year for the Raiders. The Patriots tired of Don Hasselbeck and Shelby Jordan and they couldn't sign Haynes; Davis traded for all three.

"Al tells us he pays us better than anyone in the league and then he shelters us from the distractions that could hurt us," Millen said. "He's created the perfect atmosphere for winning. I mean, he won even with John Matuszak."

"We've got maybe 20 guys from other teams," said Christensen, a failure as a running back both with Dallas and the New York Giants. "Those teams didn't want us anymore ... But Al saw something in all of us. He saw that we were all a little left of center."

San Juan seeks athletics

FARMINGTON (AP) — The head of the physical education department at San Juan College believes the school should have an intercollegiate athletic program.

Dexter Irvin said a committee has been formed to study the feasibility of establishing an athletic program at the school, which has been operating as an independent junior college since 1982. Originally, the school was a branch campus of New Mexico State.

Irvin said the committee wants to receive public comment which will in turn be forwarded to the college's board of directors.

"We're hoping that a good dose of public opinion from the county will give us some conclusions and recommendations that can be passed on to the college's board of directors," Irvin said.

If the public reaction is favorable and college officials agree, the school would then petition to the National Junior College Athletic Association for full-member status.

Irvin, who started a men's basketball team at the college last year, said it's possible the school could have an athletic program ready by next fall.

The school's basketball team, nicknamed the Suns, posted a 20-5 record last season.

Martina's win streak ends

From wire reports

TENNIS—Martina Navratilova's winning streak ended at 54 matches Sunday, two short of Chris Evert Lloyd's record, under a powerful assault by Hana Mandlikova 7-6, 3-6, 6-4 in the Virginia Slims of California finals. Mandlikova had lost nine matches in a row against Navratilova. But this time she survived three set points in the first set tiebreaker, overcame a fierce attack by Navratilova in the second set and broke Navratilova on her final service in the third set of the two-hour match...

FOOTBALL—AD Frank Broyles says the University of Arkansas doesn't owe former Coach Lou Holtz any money because Holtz accepted another job at the University of Minnesota. At the time of his resignation from Arkansas in December, Holtz had four years remaining on his contract. Broyles said then that the university would honor its contractual obligations...

SKI—Little-known Bill Johnson of Van Nuys, Calif. scored the first World Cup downhill skiing victory ever in the men's division for the United States at Wengen, Switz., Sunday, prompting an American fan to say, "The sleeping giant has awakened."
Johnson was timed in 2 minutes, 10.89 seconds on an abbreviated course over the Lauberhorn trail. The course was 3,499 meters long with a drop of 853 meters, about 800 meters shorter than usual because of harsh conditions...

MARATHON— England's Charlie Spedding lunged across the finish line to edge Italy's Massimo Magnani Sunday in the 15th Houston-Tenneco Marathon. Both completed the 26-mile, 385-yard course in 2 hours, 11 minutes, 54 seconds. The victory earned Spedding the $20,000 first prize and a $100,000 life insurance policy. Magnani got $12,000...

BOXING—Philadelphia lightweight Tyrone Crawley, ranked sixth by the WBA, floored Steve Romero of San Jose, Calif., twice and stopped him in the sixth round at Atlantic City. Crawley, 15-1 with four knockouts, knocked down Romero for the first time in the sixth with a seven-punch flurry capped by a straight right to the jaw. The second knockdown came as Crawley landed three right hands to the jaw. As Romero fell, referee Larry Hazzard stepped between the fighters and stopped the bout at 1:48 of the round. "I knew he was a brawler," said Crawley. "That type of guy makes me shine. I can dictate the pace a little better because I'm quicker. These guys are also the type of fighters who can knock you out with one punch, so I had to be careful."...

Bill Johnson...a boost for U.S.

Unranked middleweight Don Lee of Gary, Ind., stopped Britain's Tony Sibson, by ranked fourth by the WBC, in the eighth. The bout was stopped after Lee knocked Sibson down with a left with 2:13 remaining in the eighth. The 6-foot-2 Lee, who was knocked down in the first round with a left to the chin by Sibson, knocked Sibson down three times in the third round...

Weekend to remember

For Oregon's upsetting Ducks

By Associated Press

For the University of Oregon's basketball team, it was a weekend to remember. UCLA Coach Larry Farmer would rather forget it.

"The game was played on a very emotional level, especially by Oregon. We just didn't play at that level," Farmer said after Oregon upset his sixth-ranked Bruins 62-51 Saturday.

The victory was the first for Oregon over UCLA in seven years — a streak that covered 12 games — and ignited a wild celebration at MacArthur Court in Eugene. Oregon players and the fans cut down the nets, acting as if the Ducks had won a championship, and generally rocked the 58-year-old arena.

"It was a great afternoon for the players, the fans and the students, but expecially the players," said Oregon Coach Don Monson. "If nothing else, they gained a lot of respect for themselves and the Oregon basketball program."

Oregon's upset was one of three involving Top 20 teams Saturday, as 18th-ranked Boston College edged No. 10 St. John's 69-67 and Alabama defeated No. 15 Georgia 65-60.

In other action involving the nation's ranked teams, No. 1 North Carolina beat No. 12 Wake Forest 70-62; No. 3 DePaul routed Alabama-Birmingham 98-63; fifth-ranked Maryland beat Duke 81-75; No. 7 Houston defeated Texas A&M 70-64; No. 8 Texas-El Paso trimmed Hawaii 74-54, and No. 9 Illinois edged Ohio State 55-53.

Also, No. 11 Louisiana State drubbed Mississippi 93-70; No. 14 Nevada-Las Vegas beat Utah State 93-88; 16th-rated Oregon State downed Southern California 51-45; 17th-ranked Oklahoma overwhelmed Nicholls State 107-51; No. 19 Memphis State defeated Southern Mississippi 52-47, and No. 20 Tulsa outscored West Texas State 99-93.

Blair Rasmussen scored 18 of his 20 points in the second half, leading Oregon's victory.The game was tied at 45 with just under six minutes to play after a basket by UCLA's Gary Maloncon. But Oregon scored the next 10 points to take a 55-45 lead with 1½ minutes remaining.Rasmussen had six points during that stretch.

Oregon's halfcourt trap defense was a big factor in beating the Bruins. "That definitely was the difference in the game — the halfcourt defense," said Monson, whose team forced the Bruins into 10 second-half turnovers.

Michael Adams tossed in eight straight free throws, including two with four seconds remaining, boosting Boston College over St. John's.Adams' free throws with four seconds left proved to be the winning margin.

"We were trying not to foul Adams," said St. John's Coach Lou Carnesecca. "But he's so quick, so cute, so tricky, we couldn't stay away from him."

Craig Dudley hit four free throws in the final two minutes, clinching Alabama's victory over Georgia.Georgia never led after 8:12 into the first half, although the Bulldogs tied the score three times in the second half. The last tie came at 56 with 4:43 left, but Alabama's Darrell Neal scored on a dunk shot, putting the Crimson Tide ahead for good.

"The difference in the game was getting key rebounds, especially on offense," said Alabama Coach Wimp Sanderson.He added that "the Crimson Tide did a great job breaking Georgia's defensive pressure when they went to full-court press."

Top Ten

Sam Perkins scored 17 points, sparking North Carolina's victory over Wake Forest and extending the Tar Heels' winning streak to 12 games.

With the Demon Deacons trailing 58-57 after a Delaney Rudd jump shot with 5:42 left in the second half, Perkins scored on an alley-oop shot 20 seconds later. He also hit a hook shot with 4:52 remaining, giving North Carolina a 62-57 lead, and Wake Forest never got closer than two points.

"It feels good that we're capable of coming back," Perkins said. "We saw a lot of defenses coming at us.

Razorbacks battle handicap

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. (AP) — A day after telling the Pulaski County Bar Association that football recruits look at the University of Arkansas as a second-rate institution athletically, Athletic Director Frank Broyles told recruits that the Razorback program was unique.

Broyles told recruits on campus at the invitation of Coach Ken Hatfield that no other Southwest Conference school sells out all its football games each summer, weeks before the game dates.

"It is well known in coaching that a full stadium every Saturday is a great morale builder for the team, leading to motivation and momentum," Broyles said. "Conversely, a stadium with empty seats, or half empty, can demoralize a player."

On Friday, Broyles said the recruiting efforts suffered because of the size of the stadiums the Razorbacks use. Arkansas plays home games in the 41,200-seat Razorback Stadium in Fayetteville and the 53,500-seat War Memorial Stadium in Little Rock. He said expansions of the two stadiums were critical needs.

Broyles told the bar association members that recruits look at the school as second-rate athletically because of the seating capacities. "And the recruiting has suffered, and will continue to suffer," he said.

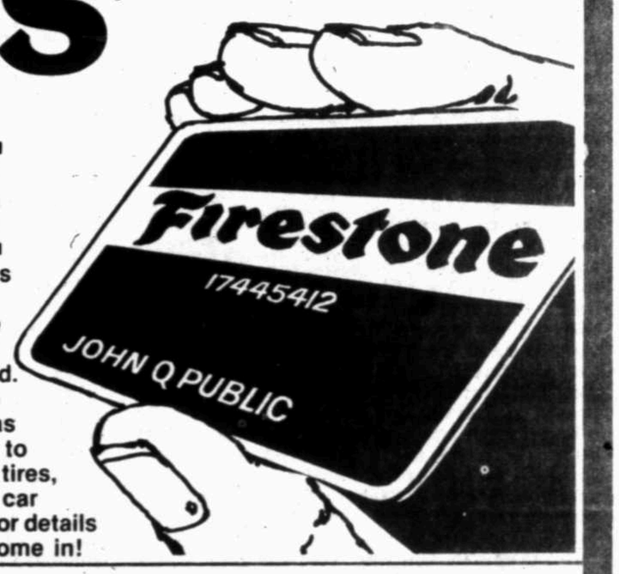

In Fayetteville on Saturday, Broyles told the recruits that there is no university that sells all its football and basketball tickets on reorders alone. "We never even have to announce that our season books are on sale," he said.

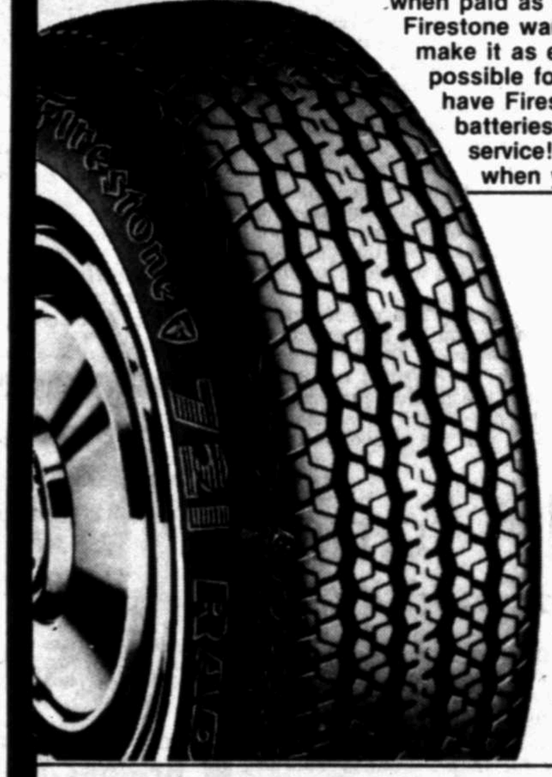

In Little Rock, Broyles said adding 22,000 good seats to War Memorial would cost between $16 million and $18 million."

Gays market target

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Increasingly mindful that homosexuals comprise a big and affluent market, purveyors of everything from banking services to pricey liquors are cashing in with ads and messages aimed at gay consumers.

These days, such established businesses as Seagram, Absolut Vodka, Simon & Schuster and Dean Witter Reynolds Inc. are sharing space in the Advocate, a national gay news magazine, with such advertisers as gay bathhouses, X-rated theaters and gay-owned shops.

For those who know how to tap a consumer group that favors entertaining, vacations and conspicuous consumption, the market is ripe, say the advertisers and leaders of gay communities.

"In our society, it seems like two things count: votes and money," Advocate publisher Peter Frisch, whose magazine has 89,000 subscribers and claims 450,000 readers, told the Los Angeles Times recently.

One recent ad campaign, for Boodles British Gin, a Seagram brand, offered a $19.95 bar mirror with etched portraits of six historical figures, including Walt Whitman and Oscar Wilde. Savvy readers would know all six were purportedly homosexual.

In a 1982 marketing survey of 1,275 gay men in 11 cities, four out of five said they were more likely to buy products or services from "national businesses ... (that) maintained a presence in the gay media or active involvement with the gay community."

Moreover, the survey by Walker & Struman of Los Angeles found that the income of the typical homosexual household, with two employed adults and no children, was $27,200 — 15 percent above the median family income reported by the 1980 U.S. Census.

Corporations are targeting the gay community in different ways.

Pernod Ricard, the largest distiller in France, hosted a series of Pernod-tasting parties at fancy gay bars in San Francisco last spring, hoping to popularize its anise-flavored cordial. Pernod also donated money to the San Francisco Gay Freedom Day Marching Band, which provided a string quartet to play at the parties.

"Eventually we want to get the best of the gay market," said Bud Fenzel, a manager with Austin Nichols & Co., a liquor distributor and distiller that is helping Pernod with its marketing.

He said marketers believe gay people are often trend-setters with products that later become popular among the general public.

"I don't think it could be documented," said Frisch, "but it seems to me gays were drinking vast quantities of white wine before white wine became de rigueur."

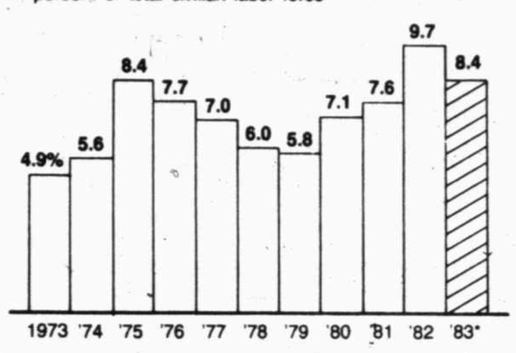

Bank of America recently circumvented its own policy against advertising in local publications by placing a series of full-page ads in the gay Castro Times of San Francisco.

The ads "afforded us a very efficient, cost-effective way of reaching an important market," said Charles Stuart, bank vice president for marketing.

The bank's philanthropic division also gave $25,000 to the Pride Center, a gay-oriented service agency.

Getty museum chief key player in takeover deal

By The Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

MALIBU, Calif. — As the dust settles after Texaco Inc.'s dramatic $9.9-billion takeover of Getty Oil Co., the enigmatic, behind-the-scenes figure of Harold M. Williams has emerged as one of the key players in the drama.

Williams, a former tax lawyer, corporate board chairman, business school dean and government regulator, is now chief executive of the fabulously rich J. Paul Getty Museum in Malibu.

As a result of the Texaco sale, the museum Williams runs will receive almost $1.2 billion for its Getty shares, boosting the museum's endowment to $2.1 billion and cementing its position as one of the world's richest museums.

Those close to the deal say that for months Williams played a central role in the events that eventually led to the largest corporate takeover in U.S. history. And, true to his reputation, he played his cards close to the vest, acting as his own best counsel.

Because the museum owns nearly 12 percent of Getty Oil's stock, making it the company's second largest shareholder, Williams held the swing vote when a power struggle broke out between the company's management and the Getty family trust.

Alternately peacemaker and agitator, Williams' role in the dispute was ever-changing. At times, he sided with Getty Oil's management to rein in Gordon P. Getty, son of company founder J. Paul Getty and trustee of the family trust that owns 40.2 percent of Getty Oil's shares. On other occasions, he lined up with Gordon Getty against company management.

The fence-straddling has led some observers to criticize him for vacillating. Sidney R. Petersen, chairman of Getty Oil and one of those most affected by Williams' chameleon-like shifts, says that Williams "made things more difficult" at times. But Petersen also adds, "Harold Williams was at all times on the museum's side."

That is precisely how Williams sees it. "My one interest was to represent the (museum) trust effectively, and to explore the various avenues (for enhancing the value of Getty Oil's stock)," he said in an interview late last week. "I wasn't siding with anyone. I was doing the best I could for the trust."

That the head of an art museum, even one as rich as the Getty, should play such a key role in a high-stakes game of corporate poker might be surprising were it not for Williams' record.

While most people have but one career, Williams, driven by restless intellect and boundless energy, is now working on his fifth.

He was only 18 when he was graduated Phi Beta Kappa from the University of California, Los Angeles, where he reportedly worked his way through school by preparing income tax returns, and only 21 when he earned his law degree from Harvard University.

By the time he was 26, "Harold knew more about tax law than most senior lawyers and more about accounting than anybody on our accounting staff," Norton Simon, who hired Williams, once said.

Williams was named president of Hunt Foods in 1968. Later that same year, he was named chairman of Norton Simon Inc. when that firm was consolidated with Hunt Foods, Canada Dry Corp. and McCall Corp. But Williams left the company in 1970.

Williams says that he left because he tired of corporate life. The departure came after executive shifts from which David Mahoney emerged as Norton Simon's undisputed leader. Williams went on to become dean of UCLA's Graduate School of Management.

It was at UCLA that Williams had perhaps his greatest impact. When he took over as dean in 1970, the school was languishing in regional mediocrity. But by the time he left to become chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission seven years later, the school was rated among the best in the country.

"He mobilized and energized that school in ways that have never been done before or since," said one former administrator at the business school.

Not everyone is a Williams fan, of course. Some associates depict him as stone-faced, tight-lipped and aloof.

That was the reaction of some staffers at the SEC when Williams arrived as chairman in 1977. "I never felt completely comfortable around him, even though I thought he was extremely competent," said one of his former subordinates at the SEC.

Because he kept a low profile early in his term and was not an expert in securities, Williams' tenure at the SEC became controversial as some critics started to suggest that he was not an able leader or qualified for the job.

Republic First to report loan buys

RepublicBank First National Midland has scheduled a press conference for 9 a.m. Tuesday to make public the amount of loans it has purchased from the portfolio of failed First National Bank of Midland.

Today marks the end of RepublicBank's second 30-day loan review extension.

Origianlly, RepublicBank was given 30 days to review and buy back loans from FNB's $1.2 billion portfolio, which was assumed by the Federal Deopsit Insurance Corp. when FNB failed. Unable to complete the task in the allotted time, RepublicBank has had to ask the FDIC for two extensions one in November and one in December.

All along Tom Wageman, RepublicBank president, would not say how many loans the bank would be buying back. Instead, Wageman said he wanted to take back as many loans as he could.

In December, in an interview with the Reporter-Telegram, Tom Procopio, FDIC liquidator in charge of FNB, said he expected RepublicBank to buy back between $300-400 million, leaving the FDIC with between $800-900 million in loans to liquidate.

FNB was declared insolvent and closed Oct. 14 and the FDIC was named receiver of the bank's loan portfolio. RepublicBank purchased the deposits of FNB and opened Oct. 17 in place of the failed bank.

Saudis putting oil on water

By The Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

RIYADH, Saudi Arabia — Over the last two months Saudi Arabia has taken the precautionary step of loading and shipping out of the Arabian Gulf an emergency, floating stockpile of 50 million barrels of oil.

According to an authoritative source, the action was taken out of concern that the gulf may be blockaded by Iran as an outgrowth of its war with Iraq.

Iran has promised to impose the blockade if Iraq destroys Iran's principal refining and terminal facilities on Kharg Island in the northwest reaches of the gulf.

Such an attack, it is reported by a Western source here, becomes more likely as the four-year war drags on. It has become a war of attrition, which Iran bears more easily than Iraq.

The Iraqis, it is reported here, "are very depressed. They can't win a war of attrition." Thus, a desperation strike against Kharg Island by the Iraqi air force has become a subject of speculation.

Its purpose would be to cut off or cripple Iran's oil exports, estimated at 1.8 million barrels a day. This possibility is presumed to have prompted Saudi Arabia to begin the buildup of a floating stockpile last month.

Saudi officials have not confirmed the action. But oil-industry sources said the Saudis began chartering supertankers last month from companies in Scandinavia, and from the Arab Maritime Petroleum Transportation Co.

By the end of December, 25 million barrels of oil had been loaded and moved out of the gulf.

This month the stockpile buildup has continued. Additional supertankers were chartered, and another 25 million barrels were loaded and put on the high seas.

Altogether, 30 tankers have been leased for the floating stockpile. The leasing charge for each tanker is $17,000 a day. Some of the vessels lie outside the entrance to the gulf; others are en route to the Caribbean, to Okinawa and to Bantry Bay in Ireland, where storage facilities are available.

None of the oil has been sold, because there is no demand for it now in a glutted market, and because that is not the Saudis' purpose.

If the gulf were blockaded, however, demand would become strong. There is speculation in Washington that one Saudi purpose in building the stockpile is to forestall American military action in response to a blockade.

President Carter enunciated a "Carter doctrine" in 1980, pledging that the United States would keep the gulf open under all circumstances. President Reagan has reaffirmed that commitment.

Some diplomats here regard the pledge as hollow.

"If Iran attacks only one or two tankers, they won't have to blockade the gulf," a Western embassy official said. "Lloyd's of London will do it for them. The insurance rates would become prohibitive."

Even a military operation by American and European forces would be difficult, according to an oil-industry source.

Access to the gulf is through the narrow Strait of Hormuz; the channel is less than 20 miles wide. Six strategic islands in or near the strait have long been occupied by Iranian infantry and artillery units. The islands are Abu Musa, Little Tunb, Big Tunb, Sirri, Larak and Forur.

Using a technique called pointalism, Lee High senior Michael Livingston worked for more than a month to create this drawing out of small dots.

Young artists at work

Eighteen-year-old Bill Hagerman specializes in oil painting, but sketches equally well with a pencil.

Hagerman, a senior at Midland High School, may have started drawing with crayons, but has now advanced to oil paintings.

While some seniors anguish over decisions that will affect their future, others seem always to have known what direction their lives would take. Bill Hagerman and Michael Livingston are two such students.

"I have always been interested in art," explained Hagerman, a senior at Midland High School. "I have been drawing since I was old enough to hold a pencil in my hand."

The 18-year-old has been taking art classes since sixth grade and began winning competitions as a freshman. A year later he was teaching art. He has had many of his works on display in various galleries, has sold dozens of paintings and has been commissioned to do others; one for more than $500.

Mostly a self-taught artist, Hagerman specializes in oil paintings and landscapes.

He devotes many hours a week to his art. A painting, he says, requires as much thought as labor. "Most of my art is done before I start painting."

He estimated he spends from 80 to 200 hours working on a single painting.

Both Hagerman and Livingston spend 2½ hours a day at Midland College taking a graphics art course. Both plan to use their talents as commercial artists.

Hagerman has already begun on a practical basis, printing his own business cards and graduation invitations. He plans to keep painting, though, and hopes to establish himself well enough to eventually make a living from his art.

Livingston bloomed a bit later. "I have been drawing since about fourth grade, but I haven't been in any art classes until my sophomore year."

He hopes to raise the $17,000 necessary to attend the Houston art institute for two years.

The soft-spoken 17-year-old Lee High senior prefers pen and ink works and calligraphic line drawings.

Livingston has had several works on display at the Museum of the Southwest. Since his sophomore year judges have selected his entries to appear in the Student Art Festival.

In addition to a high school art class and his college graphics class, Livingston says he tries to work at least three hours a day on his art.

"He's definitely an exceptional student," his art teacher, Herb Cooper, boasted.

Hagerman's art teacher, Larry Gilbert, says an artist needs not only talent, but dedication. "It's about 10 percent teaching and the rest just hard, hard work."

"I feel that most anybody can paint once they set their mind to it," Hagerman agreed. "Once you learn the basics, it's a matter of refining. It's up to the individual to decide how he'll progress."

"It's like playing the piano," Cooper added. "You can teach anyone the notes. But for someone to put them together and make beautiful music takes talent. Not anyone can do it."

DEATHS

Florence West

Services for Florence K. West, 78, of rural Midland, will be at 1:30 p.m. Tuesday in the Ellis Funeral Home chapel with the Rev. F. Ray Riddle, Hospice of Midland chaplain, officiating. Burial will be in Resthaven Memorial Park.

Mrs. West died Sunday morning at her residence following a lengthy illness.

She was born Sept. 23, 1905, in Lincoln, Neb., where she grew up. She moved from Lordsburg, N.M., to Texas in 1956. She married Robert W. West in 1956. She was a member of the Methodist church.

Survivors include her husband of Midland; a step-daughter, Margaret Woodard of Taft; two grandchildren and two great-grandchildren.

Herman Nunn

BIG SPRING — Services for Herman Nunn, 79, of Coahoma, were to be at 2 p.m. today in Nalley-Pickle Rosewood Chapel with burial in Coahoma Cemetery.

Nunn died Saturday night in a Big Spring hospital.

Pearl L. Riles

BIG SPRING — Services for Pearl L. Riles, 73, of Big Spring, will be at 2 p.m. Wednesday in Stephenson-Nelson Funeral Home chapel in Sebring, Fla., with burial in Pine Crest Cemetery, directed by Nalley-Pickle Funeral Home of Big Spring.

Ms. Riles died early Sunday morning in a Big Spring hospital.

Alex Bernard

BIG SPRING — Graveside services for Alex Bernard, 75, of Big Spring, were to be at 1 p.m. today in Mount Olive Memorial Park, directed by Nalley-Pickle Funeral Home.

Bernard died Friday night.

Mary SoRelle

ANDREWS — Services for Mary Katherine SoRelle, 52, of Andrews, were to be at 2 p.m. today at the Andrews Church of Christ with the Rev. Dwight Whitesett officiating. Burial was to be in Andrews Cemetery, directed by Singleton Funeral Home.

Mrs. SoRelle died Friday in an Andrews hospital.

She was born Feb. 8, 1931, in Megargel. She married Norman M. SoRelle Aug. 11, 1951, in Jacksboro. She was a clerk for the Western Auto store and a member of the Andrews Church of Christ. She had lived in Andrews for 22 years.

Survivors include her husband; two sons, Tommy SoRelle of Houston, and Stephen SoRelle of Andrews; four daughters, Mary Odom of Seymour, Norma Jo SoRelle of Pleasanton, and Dianna Lynn Dushane and Debra Evette Billig, both of Andrews; a sister, Edith Grogan of Corsicana; three brothers, Arthur Eaton of El Paso, Roy Eaton of Casper, Wyo., and Jim Eaton of Singapore; and eight grandchildren.

Clare Kellett

Servcies for Clare Kellett, 87, of 2002 Western Drive, were to be at 1:30 p.m. today in the First Baptist Church chapel. Burial was to be at Resthaven Memorial Park, directed by Ellis Funeral Home.

Mrs. Kellett died Friday night at a Midland nursing home.

Pallbearers were to be Prentiss Burkhart, Hansel Kincaid, Ed Clampitt, Chesley McKenzie, Fred Poe and Ray Carley.

Joe Hidgon

Services for Joe Hidgon, 65, of 1111 W. Indiana, were to be at 3:30 p.m. today in Fairview Cemetery with Doug Parsons of the Golf Course Road Church of Christ officiating, directed by Ellis Funeral Home.

Higdon died Saturday morning in a Midland hospital following a brief illness.

He was born Dec. 25, 1918, in Wellington, where he attended school. He worked at a local theater and as a musician. He served in the military in Egypt during World War II. He moved to Midland in 1955 and worked for Hodge Theaters, retiring in the 1970s.

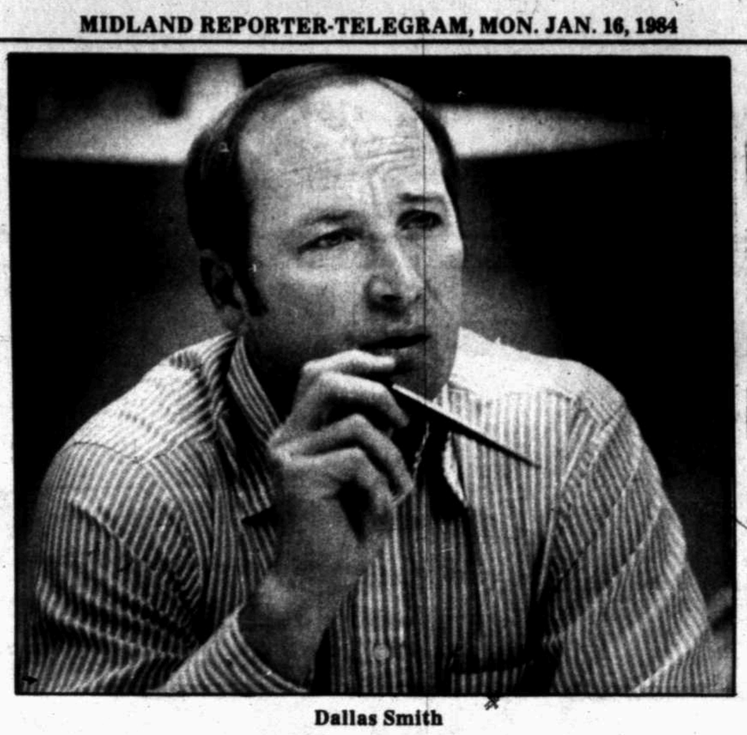

Survivors include two brothers, Rufus Higdon and Bud Higdon, both of Midland; and two sisters, Margaret Payne and Ione Dunn, both of Amarillo.

Florence Graham

Services for Florence Graham, 80, were to be at 11 a.m. today in Ellis Funeral Home chapel with Dr. Charles Lutrick of First United Methodist Church officiating. Burial was to be in Resthaven Memorial Park.

Mrs. Graham died Thursday evening in a Midland hospital following a brief illness.

Pallbearers were to be E.L. Good, Billy Rodriquez, Henry Baker, Carroll Puckett, Dan Linebarger and Don Hughes.

Dallas Smith

Smith seeks re-election

From Staff Reports

Sheriff Dallas Smith announced his candidacy for re-election during a brief news conference at the courthouse this morning.

Smith, a 41-year-old Republican, was first elected in November 1976 and is seeking a third term in office.

In the 1980 elections, he beat opponent Joe Carr, a detective with the Midland Police Department, by a 69 percent margin. Carr is expected to announce his candidacy later this week.

During today's news conference, Smith cited some of his major accomplishments as modernizing the department, instituting training programs for personnel and updating the jail and communications divisions.

"My goal as your sheriff is to have a community where citizens can live without fear, accomplished with well-trained and educated officers who recognize the priorities in their jobs, who conduct themselves professionally, and who never forget that you, the taxpayer, pay for this service and as a taxpayer you do indeed deserve the best."

Handgun trial resumes

DALLAS (AP) — Jurors hearing a 21-year-old man's lawsuit against the seller of the gun involved in the accidental shooting that left him paralyzed will be asked to make a landmark decision that could affect the future of the handgun industry, lawyers for both sides say.

Testimony in David Clancy's multi-million-dollar lawsuit was scheduled to resume today, and attorneys said they expected the case to wind up this week.

Windie Turley, Clancy's attorney, says the lawsuit will become "the biggest products liability case in the past 25 or 30 years."

Clancy was shot while standing in the parking lot of an Amarillo high school in 1977. A schoolmate said he was sitting in a car showing the gun to another student when the weapon discharged.

Clancy is paralyzed from the shoulders down and will need constant care for the rest of his life, Turley told jurors last week.

The defendants in the lawsuit argue that handguns are safe and useful when handled properly and say they cannot be responsible for misuse of the weapons.

Turley says if he wins the case the decision will make legal history and discourage the sale of handguns.

Clancy is seeking $20 million from Zale Corp., which owned the store that originally sold the gun to an Amarillo couple for $19 in 1971, and from the gun's Tennessee-based manufacturer and designer.

Clancy was awarded $50,000 from a homeowner's policy held by the parents of the youth who accidentally shot him.

Cowboys who fought cattle disease reunite

EL PASO (AP) — When John Hidalgo and his former comrades met in El Paso for their first reunion in more than 30 years, it was not just a time for reminiscing and retelling of war stories.

No, says Hidalgo, he and his buddies had a more important mission — they were trying to reconstruct "the last episode of the last cowboys of our nation."

The 63-year-old Willcox, Ariz. man was one of more than 8,000 men who, in typical western frontier fashion, rode horses, camped in strange lands and risked their lives while fighting the enemy in a battle unknown to many Americans today.

Hidalgo participated in the aftosa campaign of the 1940s — a fight against a potentially fatal virus that had infected cattle in central Mexico.

Because ranchers feared the hoof-and-mouth disease, known as aftosa in Spanish, would spread to this country, the United States and Mexico formed a joint commission to eradicate it.

After a six-year battle, the malady was effaced but not before more than 700,000 Mexican cattle were slaughtered and more than 7 million others were vaccinated.

"The work that we did was a real important type of work," Hidalgo said last week in a telephone interview. "The job we were sent out to do was dangerous. We were in the category of getting killed. We spent our time in a strange and wild land and we conquered a disease."

But because the commission's work has been forgotten by many, Hidalgo says, it's time to tell the story.

"I don't think we even got a thank you from the U.S. government," he said. "But our history should be recorded.

"Most of us that worked in this hoof-and-mouth disease were from the western states — Arizona, Texas, New Mexico. Those people are mostly the ones that appeared (at the reunion)," he said. But Hidalgo said a couple of Mexican fighters also were asked to attend the meeting.

"Our program was to have a reunion to where we can keep having a reunion every year from now on," Hidalgo said. "That way maybe we'll get people to know who we were and what we did for this country and for Mexico."

Aftosa first was detected in Mexico in December 1946.

The highly contagious disease affects only cloven-hoofed animals, such as cattle, sheep, deer and pigs.

It causes blisters to form on an animal's lips, tongue and hoofs and most animals who contract the virus die unless vaccinated every three months, Hidalgo said.

Researchers say the disease first was noticed in Mexico after more than 300 bulls were imported from Brazil.

When news of the disease hit the United States, ranchers demanded the border be closed to Mexican meat and a six-year quarantine was imposed.

Hidalgo said the governments of the United States and Mexico formed the joint commission to battle aftosa within six months of learning of the disease's dangers.

Some men died during the campaign, but Hidalgo said the number of human deaths was not high.

"What was lost was cattle. But we probably saved 173 million head of cattle in the United States and about 15 or 20 million head in Mexico," he said. "And, even at $10 a head, that's a lot of money we saved this country."

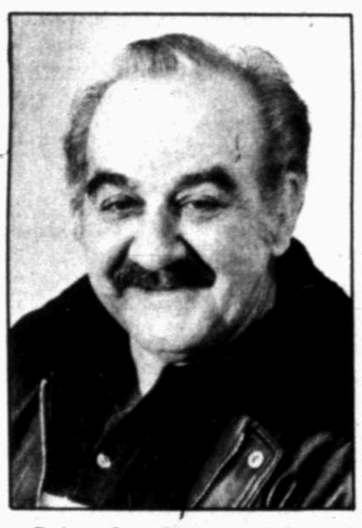

Hidalgo said he began planning the reunion five years ago, "when I decided I wanted to write a book on the whole thing. I thought we needed to get together to discuss it and remember it."

The reunion was financed by those who attended, Hidalgo said.

"I tried at one point to get the state to help finance it because I thought they owed it to us. But they weren't interested," he said. "So I thought, 'The heck with them, we'll just do it on our own.'"

Hidalgo said his group also wants to erect a monument "in memory of those who gave their lives."

"I don't know if we'll get any help on that either, but if our government doesn't have time to fool with us we'll just fool with ourselves," he said. "The last saga of the American cowboy should be recorded and that's what we were doing in El Paso."

Geter won't take test in Dallas

DALLAS (AP) — Lenell Geter, faced with a deadline today to take a polygraph test that could free him from a controversial robbery charge, said he did not plan to come to Dallas, but refused to say if he would take the examination.

Earlier, Dallas County District Attorney Henry Wade said he would not meet with Geter's lawyers to discuss an alternative way of administering the lie detector test.

Geter's attorneys, meanwhile, say they still hope to persuade Wade to meet with them.

Geter, 26, was convicted and sentenced to life in prison in 1982 for the robbery of a fast-food restaurant in Balch Springs. He was granted a new trial when his case gained national attention after supporters claimed his arrest was the result of racism and shoddy police work.

Wade agreed to grant Geter a new trial and dismiss the charge against him if he passed a polygraph test.

Geter, who was working for E-Systems Inc. in Greenville at the time of the robbery, was released from prison on $10,000 bond last month and has been at home in South Carolina.

Assistant District Attorney Gerald Banks said Sunday that Geter's decision not to come to Dallas today makes it unlikely that the test will take place.

"He (Geter) was supposed to have taken it (the test) by Monday, or accepted the test, or rejected it," Banks said.

Geter would not comment on whether he was willing to take the test, The Dallas Morning News reported.

"I can't take a position on that. I've been instructed (by defense attorneys) not to make any statement," he said.

Banks said that although today was the deadline for the test, Geter probably would be allowed to take it later in the week.

Prosecutors said their agreement with Geter's lawyers named a Dallas police sergeant as the polygraph examiner. Geter's lawyers last week proposed that a three-person team give the test, saying they feared the police officer, William Parker, would be biased by his law enforcement background.

Wade said one of Geter's lawyers called him Friday and asked for a meeting today to discuss the proposed polygraph examination.

"I said, 'I don't care anything about meeting with any of you,'" Wade said.

Man, women kidnapped

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — Three women and one man were released unharmed by a kidnapper who allegedly abducted the three females from the parking lot of an Odessa night club early this morning.

The women told police they were forced at gunpoint to leave the parking lot of Shampoux in the 600 block of N. Grandview at 1:55 a.m., Monday, in the car driven by one of the females abducted.

The suspect forced the women to take him to their apartment. While at the apartment, a boyfriend came to the apartment and was forced by the suspect to stay.

When the kidnapper forced the four to return to the car, one of the women escaped. The remaining two women and boyfriend were taken back out in the car, and the man was released later near the east city limits on E. Highway 80.

The two women were later released unharmed in Odessa and called police from a business on Meadow street near its intersection with 2nd Street at 4:05 a.m. The car was found at 5:15 a.m. at the nightclub.

Police are withholding the names of the people involved pending further investigation. The suspect is described as about 27-year-old white man, five-feet, eight inches to five-feet, ten-inches tall, with blonde hair. He was also described as skinny, wearing black cowboy boots, blue jeans and having a mustache.

Robbery suspects arrested

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — The Department of Public Safety arrested two suspects this weekend in an attempted capital murder that occurred Wednesday night in Odessa, with the suspects also being sought in armed robberies in Abilene and Tennessee.

John Lee Smith, 21, was arrested early Sunday morning at a trailer home near the west city limits of Midland after the DPS learned that Smith was being sought by Tennessee law enforcement officials on a fugitive warrant. He had reportedly jumped bond on Nashville robbery charges also involving an assault in August 1983.

Donald Wayne Dorries, 21, was arrested by the DPS in a northside Midland residence at 1:55 a.m., Saturday after Odessa Muncipal Court Judge Otis Moore issued a warrant for Dorries' arrest.

Smith and Dorries are also suspects in an Abilene robbery involving an assault January 9.

While no one was seriously injured in the Abilene incident, a 44-year-old Amarillo man was taken to Odessa Medical Center Hospital Wednesday night after robbers stabbed him and reportedly made off with $1,000 here. Listed in critical condition Thursday, James Edward Hill, 44, is now in stable condition at the hospital.

DPS Sgt. Bob Favor said he arrested Dorries on the Odessa warrant Saturday and used an informant's tip to obtain the warrant from Tennessee on Smith. Meanwhile, Odessa Justice of the Peace Jimmie Harris issued a warrant for Smith in Odessa Saturday.

The trailer had been under DPS surveillance and the arrest was made by a DPS patrolman as Smith attempted to leave the trailer house 3:55 a.m., Sunday.

No bond had been set on Smith, who is awaiting transfer from Midland to Odessa County. Bond was set by Moore at $50,000 for Dorries.

Dorries and Smith are suspects in Odessa and Abilene, while only Smith is reportedly being sought in the Tennessee robbery.

League to hold meetings

From Staff Reports

The Midland League of Women Voters will have unit meetings at 9:30 a.m. and at 7:30 p.m. Thursday at the Voter Registrars Office on the corner of Marienfeld and Front streets.

Janiece Builta will deputize league members for voter registration through 1984.

Voter registration will be conducted by league members from 11:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. Jan. 24 at Midland Memorial Hospital and from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. Jan. 25 at Midland Community Center.

Residence burglarized

From Staff Reports

In a burglary complaint filed with city police, Terry Pettis of 3100 N. Fairgrounds Road, P100, said assorted change, miscellaneous jewelry and a Canon A-1 camera were among the items taken in a break-in at her residence Sunday.

Total loss was placed at $1,800. Entry was gained by prying a bedroom window.

Hearst Feature Service

Three vibrant young women, each a star on a morning TV network news show, sparkle as they inform at an hour when most of us groggily struggle to wake up for the day ahead. The three are famous, successful and well-paid anchorwomen — and earn what they get.

Connie Chung of NBC News at Sunrise, Diane Sawyer of CBS Morning News and Joan Lunden of ABC's Good Morning America show each have found a way to cope. Here are some of the things they told Harper's Bazaar, as reported in the January issue:

— Connie Chung, 37: "I'm a night owl. I like to stay up until 4 a.m. and sleep until noon, but I'm usually up at 2:30 a.m. and at the office in less than an hour. I'm usually in bed at 8 p.m., except on Wednesdays and Thursdays when I do the 10 p.m. news digest.

"On those days I sleep three hours in two shifts, at 1 p.m. and 11 p.m. Friday is really the only day I can slip away by noon and have time for myself — if I can just stay awake. Monday morning is the worst. I've often thought of telling my producer I don't think I'm coming in, but I can't imagine following through. I really love what I do."

— Diane Sawyer, 37: "The hours are a tyranny of the job that we must live with. Often I get only two hours sleep...a triumph of will over instinct. I've gone for two days without any and survived.

"I rarely skip a dinner party and I attend theatre regularly. Everybody knows that at 9:01 a.m. on Friday they better not stand in the studio doorway or I'll mow them down. It's my one free day and I'm off to brunch with a frend, then an afternoon at the movies — one or two or three — then dinner. Movies are my tranquilizer.

"What does it take to do this job? Tremendous stamina — for me, a family trait — and not worrying, something I learned early on. You simply have to have a sense of your own limits. I don't make five-year plans. I'd love to get married and have a family, but I put trust in luck and destiny."

— Joan Lunden, 33, wife and mother of 10-month-old Lindsay and Jamie, 3: "Because I have children, I'm actually less uptight about my work schedule. I don't live and die for my job alone, as I might if I were single. Of course, the flip side is I'm also exhausted at times, so I've learned to say no to many social activities — I make my family my priority."

Joan, as had her two peers, told the magazine that she watches her diet: "I abuse my body all day with this hectic schedule, so I make sure I eat well at night — fresh vegetables, whole grains, less red meat than ever. I do my own cooking, with some help from the children's nanny. My husband (Michael Krauss, a TV producer) and I are new parents and most of our time is focused on the children. There's nothing else I'd rather do than stay home with them."

Researcher's violence study takes feminist slant

By The Los Angeles Times—
Washington Post News Service

LOS ANGELES — Women suspect his motives. Some men accuse him of being a traitor.

As a man undertaking the most detailed study to date on the causes of men's violence toward women, Neil Malamuth has let himself in for a lot of misunderstanding.

Currently an associate professor and vice chairman of the communications studies department at University of California, Los Angeles, Malamuth, 33, teaches courses on the link between media portrayals of women and violent impulses toward women. An internationally known expert in the new and small field of sex-violence research, Malamuth is sometimes called upon to testify in trials where the causes of violence are an issue.

AS CONTROVERSIAL AS is Malamuth's presence in the field, even more so are his findings: At least a third of the male population would consider rape if they could be assured of not being caught; violent pornography increases acceptance of violence toward women; a major cultural change must take place if women are to be safe from male attack.

Although Malamuth's arguments are those of a confirmed feminist, he didn't start out that way eight years ago when he wrote his first paper on sex and aggression for the University of Manitoba in Canada.

Raised in a liberal environment where Playboy and Penthouse magazines were displayed freely in the house, "I always thought of pornography as something relatively positive," he said.

THE TRADITIONAL VIEW subscribed to by Malamuth and many others at that time was that rape was the work of twisted minds, and if rapists could just be made more like "normal" men, the problem would be solved.

Feminist theorists, on the other hand, began contending that the tendency to rape existed in every man. "The problem as they saw it was to make a revolution in some sense in the way we socialize men and women," Malamuth said.

When women friends began quoting from such feminist treatises, Malamuth found the arguments intriguing, but felt the feminist theories had never really been tested. To get an introduction to the problem, Malamuth volunteered as a rape counselor at Cedars-Sinai Medical Center here. He said counseling rape victims made him realize that as a man he would be restricted in studying sexual assault as it affects the victim. Where he would have an advantage is in working with assailants.

MALAMUTH'S SUBSEQUENT studies resulted in a sharp disagreement with the findings of the President's Commission on Obscenity and Pornography which, in 1970, had exonerated pornography of any role in contributing to male violence.

In a 1979 study, Malamuth and a graduate student, James Check, recruited 271 college students. One group was shown movies involving erotica, but no violence — "A Man and a Woman" and "Hooper." A second group viewed "Swept Away" and "The Getaway." In both movies, men commit sexual violence against women, and are rewarded eventually with the victim's affections — themes that imply women welcome violence and that rape is justified.

SEVERAL DAYS LATER, both groups completed a 104-item questionnaire. The men who had viewed the violent-erotic films were shown to have a more accepting attitude toward sexual violence.

"Sexually explicit material that shows men and women in humanized ways produces no negative effects," Malamuth concluded. "But certain types of violent porn do encourage attitudes of violence against women."

Malamuth said that if a woman had come up with these same findings, she might have been dismissed as "another feminist with an ax to grind." Coming from a man, the study was harder to ignore.

THE CHAIRMAN OF the Board of Censorship in England cited Malamuth's studies as the first convincing evidence of the connection between porn and violence. On the strength of Malamuth's findings, he justified cutting four minutes from the Charles Bronson film "Death Wish II" (the sequence shows a maid being raped at knifepoint). In New Zealand, censorship of films also has occurred in response to Malamuth's research.

"In some ways it (the censorship) was gratifying," Malamuth said, "but the whole issue of censorship raises questions for me."

Malamuth was recently asked to testify before the justice commission in Canada in the trial of five women who were accused of firebombing a porn parlor as a protest against violent sex films screened there.

MALAMUTH SAID HE has given careful thought to what he would reply when asked by the prosecutor, "Do you condone what the women did?" Malamuth said he will answer: "I don't condone it, but I don't know how I would act if I were in those women's shoes." He said the women's outrage must be analogous to that of a black person who discovers a bookstore selling pictures of black people being hanged for someone's sexual pleasure.

In recent studies, Malamuth has delved into the character of the rapist. In one study, Malamuth found that at least a third of the male population believes there is "some likelihood" they would rape a woman if there was no possibility of being caught. Another third said there was a possibility they would force a woman into sexual acts against her will.

Victims still see future as bleak

Hearst Feature Service

SAN FRANCISCO — What the future holds for the 25 surviving victims of the 1976 Chowchilla, Ca., school bus kidnapping is anybody's guess, but a child psychiatrist who interviewed them has found that the children themselves regard the future as bleak.

Even four to five years after the kidnapping, when Dr. Leonore C. Terr went back for a second series of interviews, many of the children dreamed of their own deaths and "suffered from a severe pessimism, a sense that their futures would be greatly limited."

The 26 children (one has since died in an accident) and driver Ed Ray were kidnapped in 1976 when they were returning from a day's outing to Chowchilla, a small town in California's Central Valley. They were taken to a quarry in Livermore, 40 miles from San Francisco, and buried inside a moving van, finally escaping after 16 hours of terrifying imprisonment. Three young men were later captured and convicted of the kidnapping.

WITH A GRANT from the Rosenberg Foundation of San Francisco, Terr first did a series of inteviews in 1976 and 1977 with the young victims, who were aged 5 to 14 at the time of the kidnapping. The results of a follow-up study done in 1980 and 1981 were published last month in the American Journal of Psychiatry.

Terr, who is on the faculty of the University of California-San Francisco Medical Center, said the most lasting impact of the traumatic event "is this life attitude they have, the idea of living day to day, which is very unusual in a kid, and the idea of conceptualizing themselves as dead, early, or that they'll die of a disaster."

In the first study, Terr found 14 of the kids reporting dreams of death; in the second study, 12 of them still had them. "They actually die in their dreams. They fall off the building and bounce. They see themselves dead and buried and bound, while for some of them, the dreams stop at their deaths."

IN SIX OF THE 12 who had death dreams, she said, the dreams went blank after the child's death; in the other six, the children "would see the rest of it, the embalming and burial. All the death dreams were terrifying to these kids, and they would visualize them during the day and daydream about them."

Terr did a control study in two other small California communities, Porterville and McFarland, in which she asked randomly-selected children the same kinds of questions she asked the Chowchilla victims.

"I found kids who had this same sense of their future being curtailed, and each one of those kids had experienced a terrible shock in which they had completely lost control, like being in an auto accident, or one kid was raped by a stranger. So I turned up some cases of psychic trauma just by asking about that.

"ALSO, I FOUND eight kids in McFarland and Porterville who dreamed of their own death, and of those, six had either been unconscious or delirious or terribly sick where they had lost consciousness, or had been in an accident or a situation in which they had lost all personal control, just like the Chowchilla case. So the death dreams are definitely related to either trauma or unconsciousness, which is like trauma because you lose your personal control."

NINETEEN OF THE Chowchilla children told Terr that, in looking back at the kidnapping, they now believe they had been given some sort of sign beforehand, "that should have warned them away from it," she said.

"I am finding that people who have been traumatized don't really have a gift for prediction, but they need to think they have a gift. They need to think they can control things, so one way they do that is to believe they have some knowledge about the future.

"FOR EXAMPLE, in the dreams, eight of the children now believe their dreams predict things. I began to wonder if ordinary psychics and fortune tellers have had some sudden blow which makes them feel they need to control the future. A study of people like that would be very interesting."

Terr said she believes the childrens' families don't really know their kids are having these thoughts and dreams, that they came out only during her questioning and probing. She also believes none of the victims has had psychiatric care.

"I WAS TRYING to do brief therapy each time I went out there. I felt I had to help, even if it would spoil the study.

Theory links football to some wife beatings

Hearst Feature Service

SAN FRANCISCO — She can't remember who played, much less who won, but Rana Lee vividly remembers the Rose Bowl day when her husband gave her one of the worst beatings in their 3-year marriage.

"I can see him sitting in his big chair with a cooler full of beer next to him, watching football all day and getting drunk," Lee said. "His team lost and he threw a can of beer against the wall and then another one. The third one hit me. I got angry, and then he came at me. He hit me over the head with the phone.

"I love football and I couldn't root for my own teams because right away that would cause trouble. I was OK if I rooted for his team or as long as they won. Otherwise. . . ."

LEE, SINCE DIVORCED, now produces a monthly program on domestic violence for a Berkeley radio station. Neither she nor the counselors and psychiatrists who work with the estimated 14 million women who are involved in long-term, physically abusive relationships in this country believe football causes domestic violence.

But there is evidence that the game, especially an important one, and its usual trappings — drinking and gambling — may be catalysts for men who beat their wives or girlfriends.

Although police said they could not support or dismiss such a theory with statistics, women's shelters here almost uniformly report increases in crisis calls during "big game" days and weekends. Those that keep statistics say the calls may be double the normal volume.

"I KNOW OF five or six women who've mentioned a relationship between the beating and a game," Pat Kuta of the Marin County Abused Women's Service said. "A lot of drinking and betting are associated with football and there is often a big emotional investment for the man. Just look at a crowd watching a game in a bar. A lot of violent and aggressive behavior is stimulated.

"No one is saying football is the reason women get battered. Drinking doesn't cause violence either. Women get beaten to reinforce men's feelings of empowerment."

Fears about losing power and loss of self-esteem are essentials in the man who abuses his wife or girlfriend, research has shown. Those characteristics tend to support the correlation theory between intense football and domestic violence.

SAID PSYCHOLOGY Professor Emeritus Bruce Ogilvie of San Jose State University, who did an extensive study for the NFL about the behavior of pro football players in the late 1960s:

"There is a lot of hearsay, not empirical evidence, about this theory, but one could almost anticipate its validity. Considering the acting out and displacement phenomenon, football might be a catalyst for already hostile feelings toward women."

Ogilvie said part of the problem could lie in the type of man whose "only ego-sustaining experience in life" is identification with an athletic team. "What's sadder than to have your alter-ego collapse? The great danger is in seeking to fulfill oneself through an artificial identification with a team. When the team fails, the rage is childlike; it's a tantrum."

THE VIOLENT POTENTIAL of football and drinking, Ogilvie said, recently presented itself to him "when I went to see my beloved 49ers at Candlestick. My son and I had to keep three or four men in front of us from throwing a Los Angeles Rams fan over the edge of the stadium."

Dr. Lenore Walker, a Denver clinical psychologist and author of "The Battered Woman," said she and her associates "have tossed the whole idea around and, theoretically, it holds water. We have clinical studies that prove when people view violence, it lowers their inhibitions toward violent behavior. The real question is, is football a violent game? It contains violence, we know that. And we've found that violence escalates, it always gets worse."

OBVIOUSLY, MILLIONS of men cope with the ups and downs of their team as well as the lethal effects of the point spread and never lay a hand on their wives. Millions can get drunk, lose their jobs, survive middle-age crises and triumph over unhappy childhoods where their self-esteem was regularly attacked and still not beat women.

But many do.

Conservative estimates say one out of five women become involved in a long-term relationship in which they are severely, physically abused. According to Walker, 50 percent of American women will experience some time in their lives an incident of physical or sexual assault in a relationship.

Stroll covers half of nation

TEXARKANA, Texas (AP) — Eddie Owens has made it.

Owens left his parents' home in Roxboro, N.C., on a walking tour 89 days and three pairs of boots ago and ended up meeting relatives recently near New Boston, Texas.

"I couldn't figure out why I wanted to do it," Owens said, relaxing in the Texas home of his uncle and aunt, Estel and Sybil Pugh, eight miles west of Texarkana. "It was kind of a break for me" after completing a two-year degree in electronics and a four-year degree in religion, the 24-year-old Texas native said.

"Also, my grandmother lives here and I have several kinfolk here."

"When I left, it was hot, just unbearable," he said. "I was wearing cut-offs and a T-shirt."

The weather wasn't the only obstacle confronting Owens — he was stopped by police officers in North Carolina as a suspect in a robbery and almost met a black bear in Tennessee. After crossing the Tennessee-Kentucky state line, Owens said, he was warned that bears could be a problem, and that he should tie his food in a tree and sleep at least 100 yards away from where he cooked.

"About 2 o'clock in the morning, I could hear something scattering the pots, so I laid real still, so it wouldn't know I was there," he said. "My heart was just a-racing, though I was glad he left me alone."

From Roxboro, Owens went south on the Blue Ridge Parkway to Asheville, and then across the Blue Ridge Mountains into northern Tennessee, southern Kentucky and southern Missouri. He entered northern Arkansas and continued south along the Oklahoma border until reaching New Boston.

"The trip was safer than people think," Owens said. "It was a people-oriented trip, and maybe I'm a little naive, but I think that people are good if you give them half a chance. It was proved by the people who would take in a stranger and give him a meal and a place to sleep.

PLANTS IN THE HOME

Finding the right cabbage for your patch

By ELVIN McDONALD

It's obvious, the trend was there before the dolls were: More of us are growing cabbage and in greater variety than ever before.

On the other hand, it seems to me that if a certain kind of doll had been "born" into my home at Christmas, a real cabbage patch would be in order this gardening season. Here are the facts:

Cabbage is the most important and most widely used vegetable of the Brassica genus, which belongs to the Mustard Family, a grouping also called the Borecoles or "cole" for short. Like the others, it is a cool-weather crop.

Cabbage can be grown throughout the summer, but not if the heat is extreme. My favorite reference says, "Sow seeds indoors in early March and transplant outdoors in late April or early May." By seasons this translates to sowing seeds in late winter or earliest spring.

It is also possible to start cabbage seedlings in mid- to late summer for a fall and early winter harvest — provided you live in a mild enough climate to allow maturity. More tips for success:

Cabbage needs sun, fertile soil and plenty of moisture, with extra feedings of fertilizer high in nitrogen and potash. The ideal soil pH is 6.5, which is just slightly acid. For early crops a sandy soil produces better results; heavier soils that retain moisture are preferred in summer.

The rest is a matter of choosing the right cabbage for your patch. There's 'Baby Early,' for instance, an F1 hybrid that is ready for harvest in only 50 days. It has red leaves and forms a nice tight head. Source: Pinetree Garden Seeds, New Gloucester, Maine 04260 (telephone 207-926-3400).

Check your seed catalogs; there are plain and Savoyed cabbages, not to mention reds, purples, and the so-called ornamental or flowering types, and an ever-increasing number of highly edible and, at least to me, ornamental varieties from the Orient: Chinese cabbage and Pak Choi.

All cabbages are hardy outdoor types, not for growing as house plants — except in the seedling stage when my basic rule of the green thumb holds: Grow in high light and cool temperatures (about 60F.) to achieve stocky, sturdy seedlings.

Flowering cabbage

Cabbages also have a terrible attraction to worms. Some gardeners control such pests by using diazinon. Thuricide (Bacillus thuringiensis) is an organic control, considered completely safe. (It's offered in the 1984 catalog from Burpee, Warminster, Pa. 18974.)

Q. During the recent cold wave my trailer lost heat and my plants seem to have frozen solid. Is there any hope?

A. Immediately trim away any plant tissue that has obviously been frozen and killed. After temperatures have been in a growing range for a week or so, meaning above 60F., watch for signs of new green, either from the soil or along wood stems. If none appear, you'll know to clean out the pots and get ready for some new inhabitants.

It is always a sad experience to lose plants from freezing, or any other cause. The cloud can have also have a silver lining: A clean slate gives a chance to start over, to try something different, or to make long dreamt-of improvements

Q. My heating system dries out the air until my plants suffer and I can hardly breathe. Would a humidifier help?

A. Yes, definitely. I use several cool-vapor units among my plants. More details are in my notebook sheets: Send 50 cents coin and a stamped, self-addressed, long envelope with "Humidity" written on the back flap to Elvin McDonald Reader Service, Box R, Niagara Falls, N.Y. 14305.

Quick Take: Doc and Katy Abraham say in "Organic Gardening" magazine that this spray is safe and effective against aphids, mealybugs, scale insects and spider mites: 1 gallon water, 1 tablespoon Tabasco sauce, 1 tablespoon liquid dishwashing detergent and 1 quart rubbing alcohol.

Q.T.: As modern fuchsias become more heat-tolerant, they are also becoming increasingly popular for all shady to half-shady outdoor gardens in frost-free weather. Here are three major resources: The American Fuchsia Society (dues $9), 243 Pinehaven Way, Pacifica, Calif. 94044; the National Fuchsia Society ($9), 8137 Loyola Blvd. Los Angeles, Calif. 90045; and Hidden Springs Nursery, Rt. 14 Box 159, Cookeville, Tenn. 38501 (catalog, 40 cents, which includes warm-climate fuchsias).

Q.T.: "The Vegetable Gardener's Three-Year Record Book" ($4.50 from Auspicious Books, 49 Vantage Rd., Hamden, Conn. 06514) will help you repeat successes, not failures.

Florida landfill is source of electricity

Copley News Service

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — Every day, 750 trucks crammed to their rooftops with trash enter the gates of a county-owned landfill here and dump their loads into a deep pit.

That is the end of any semblance to a normal landfill operation, in which trash is buried under several feet of earth and compacted.

Instead, everything from normal household waste, such as paper, food and empty cans, plus scrap iron is incinerated to produce steam to generate 50 megawatts of electricity — enough juice to operate the plant and to meet the needs of 20,000 average-sized homes.

The Pinellas County trash-to-energy plant was built by UOP Inc. (now called Signal Resco Inc.), a subsidiary of The Signal Cos.

The plant, which handles 2,000 tons of trash a day, has been operating since June, but already there are plans to expand it to recycle 3,000 tons of trash a day. It also has come under fire from critics, who contend it stinks, is too expensive to operate and is already outdated. Also, an antitrust lawsuit has been filed by private trash collectors.

THE PLANT INCINERATES trash at a temperature of 1,800 degrees to produce steam to drive a turbine generator that produces electricity.

"It's just a power plant with what we call exotic fuel," said D.F. "Ace" Acenbrack, Pinellas County director of solid waste management. "Of course, the emphasis here is to get rid of garbage rather than generate electricity. We probably would just generate in-house power if we didn't need that income (from power sales) to offset expenses."

The "exotic fuel" — mounds of foul-smelling trash — is dumped into a pit inside an enclosed building that looks like a factory-warehouse. It is then picked up by two giant cranes and released into huge hoppers atop the incinerators. From there, it falls down a chute, where it is spread over iron grates and burned.

pPollutant emissions are controlled by two large electrostatic precipitors — devices with electrically charged surfaces that remove dust and ash particles before they can be released into the atmosphere.

There are still "a lot of emissions," such as dust and sulfur dioxide, because of the huge amount of trash that is burned, said Gary Robbins, acting chief of the Pinellas County Air Quality Division, which monitors the plant's compliance with air quality standards. But Williams and a spokesman for the Florida Department of Environmental Regulation, which granted a permit for the plant, said the emissions are within allowable limits and that no pollution complaints have been received from area residents.

DURING THE VISIT to the plant, the odor of decaying garbage was noticeable outside the county's Solid Waste Management office a block from the plant and adjacent to the landfill. But several hundred feet away, there was no odor.

"The only smell of the plant is where the garbage is"— where the trucks dump their loads and in the two large hoppers on top of the furnace units, Acenbrack said.

Large intake fans draw combustion air from outside the plant into the burners to eliminate odors, he said.

"At 1,400 degrees, all the smell just burns out," he added.

Acenbrack, a leader in the county's effort to build the $160 million plant, said officials are "very happy with the way it's going."

Signal Resco operates the plant under a 20-year contract with Pinellas County and receives 20 percent of the estimated $25 million in annual revenues, plus $9 per ton of refuse that is processed.

Although county officials are pleased with the new plant, it is not without critics. Among the more vocal is Jawdet Rubaii, a Clearwater, Fla., attorney who says he thinks the plant is "a boondoggle and waste of the taxpayers' money."

"The idea is sold as an environmental package, and on paper it sounds very good," he said.

But Rubaii said there are a few "very, very big" problems. He said the plant was outdated before it was built, and that refuse collection costs and dumping fees have increased sharply. He said the tipping cost — the charge for dumping at the plant — has gone from $8 per ton to $19 a ton.

"It won't end there," he said. "Once committed to the system, you're chained to that machine, and people don't get the benefit they say."

"It does stink, it will break down on a regular basis and you have to have a landfill operating as well," Rubaii said.

THE LAWYER HAS FILED an antitrust lawsuit against the county on behalf of a group of private refuse haulers who are unhappy because of the county's monopoly on refuse disposal.

Acenbrack dismisses the criticism, saying detractors are "so darn mad that it works so well."

The plant was built, he said, because the fast-growing St. Petersburg area was running out of space for landfills.

He acknowledged the tipping fee increase that went into effect on Oct. 1, and said refuse collection fees in the county and cities also were subsequently hiked between $1.50 and $2. Monthly pickup charges to residents now range from $7 to $11, depending on where they live.

"There's nothing cheap about one of these beasts," Acenbrack said. "In fact, if anyone thinks they can just slide by (with a less expensive model), they're just kidding themselves.

"Even though the cost is mind-boggling, you've got to look at it from the standpoint of over 20 years," Acenbrack said.

Eventually, the county and Signal Resco expect to make money on the plant, which was financed entirely through the sale of county-backed revenue bonds, without state or federal aid.

Acenbrack said the total cost of the plant and related expenses ended up being a lot higher than had been projected, going from $80 million to $160 million because planners underestimated debt-service costs.

But, so far, he said, the plant has been a moneymaker. Revenue from power sales to Florida Power Corp. has totaled $5.5 million since the plant began generating electricity. Annual revenues from electricity sales are estimated at $10 million to $12 million.

AS THE COST of electricity continues to rise in years ahead, dumping fees are expected to level off, or even drop, Acenbrack said. It's questionable, however, whether residents would see a cut in their garbage pickup charges, because labor and equipment costs are likely to continue rising, he said.

Total yearly revenues from the resource recovery plant are estimated at about $25 million, including dumping fees and revenue from the sale of by-products, such as aluminum, iron and steel.

DEAR ABBY

Salvation Army helps find relatives

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I was told that the Salvation Army locates missing relatives who haven't been heard from for years. Is that true?

I lost track of my brother 19 years ago. He was my only living relative and I would give anything to find him. He can't find me because I moved to another state, got married and now I go by my husband's name, which my brother doesn't know.

Please tell me if the Salvation Army can help me, and if so, how I go about requesting this service. — M.A.G.

DEAR A.A.G.: It's true. The Salvation Army is expert at finding long-lost relatives. Its Missing Persons Locator Service extends to 86 countries and will make a search for the modest fee of $5. (Yes, $5!)

Interested parties should be aware of the following basic guidelines:

1. The person you want to locate must be a close relative — not a friend.
2. You must be able to provide essential information about the missing person.
3. The Salvation Army reserves the right to reject any request based upon consideration of reasonableness, feasibility or motive. (For example, it will not track down people for the purpose of collecting debts; neither will it hunt for men or women who have deserted their families. And it will not search for people in adoption situations.)

To obtain information and/or a missing persons inquiry form, contact your local Salvation Army office or write to the nearest territorial headquarters: 860 N. Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill. 60610; 120 W. 14th St., New York, N.Y. 10011; 1424 Northeast Expressway, Atlanta, Ga. 30329; 30840 Hawthorne Blvd., Rancho Palos Verdes, Calif. 90274.

P.S. If the Salvation Army comes through for you, please let me know so that I may rejoice with you.

DEAR ABBY: Dudley and I are planning our wedding. It's going to be a formal church wedding and we want it to be perfect in every detail.

We agree on everything with one exception: Dudley hates to wear a necktie.

What do the fashion experts suggest as a compromise? — DUDLEY'S DARLING

DEAR DARLING: The tie that binds in a wedding has nothing to do with what the groom wears around his neck. If Dudley hates neckties because they're uncomfortable, he can leave the top button of his shirt unbuttoned. But the fashion experts say there is no compromise. A man is either formally attired or he isn't.

DEAR ABBY: I wrote to you last week regarding a very personal problem. Since then, I have been living in fear — if not complete terror — that my letter might be printed.

I requested a personal reply, but if for any reason my letter were to appear in your column, that would be the end of me and my husband's career. We live in a very small town and are well-known here.

Please reassure me. Thank you. — LOSING SLEEP

DEAR LOSING: Have no fear. If you requested a personal reply and enclosed a stamped, self-addressed envelope, you will receive a PERSONAL reply. Pleasant dreams.

(Getting married? Whether you want a formal church wedding or a simple, "do-your-own-thing" ceremony, get Abby's booklet. Send $1 plus a long, self-addressed, stamped (37 cents) envelope to: Abby's Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

Professional bodybuilder 'creates illusion'

Copley News Service

From Egypt, appropriately enough, comes the world's foremost walking, talking (four languages, no less) inverted pyramid: Mohamed Makkawy.

The shape is strictly "V" as in victory — an exclusive six professional bodybuilding wins in one year — with muscles mushrooming from a rubber-band waist like images from a genie.

But before you ask this chiseled Othello to get off his knees, be advised that in bare feet he rises to a modest 5 feet 3 inches. And after a typical pre-competition dinner of mineral water and green salad, he might weigh 154 pounds.

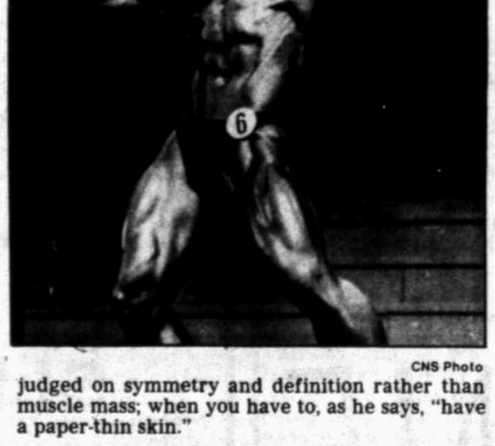

So what is 30-year-old Makkawy doing winning Grand Prix contests all over the world and flexing a miniature physique when everybody knows championship bodybuilders should look like Incredible Hulks?

It's simple, said Mohamed in an interview. "I create an illusion."

An illusion?

"I look twice as big as a 250-pounder on stage. We all have the same percentage of muscle, 10 to 15 inches between the shoulder and waist. But the sides and angles of the muscles create different illusions. My waist (25 inches) is smaller, and the shoulders and chest look bigger. So long as you have the structure, symmetry and definition you can always win."

So to Makkawy, being 5 feet 3 inches with 2 percent body fat is "a great advantage," especially during an era when bodybuilders are being judged on symmetry and definition rather than muscle mass; when you have to, as he says, "have a paper-thin skin."

CNS Photo

Makkawy's string of victories was broken in November when he finished second in the Mr. Olympia competition to Samir Bannout of Lebanon.

It is his grace, dignity and poise in the choreographed posing routine — his ability to project his flawless physique — that often is credited with enabling him to defeat his bulkier counterparts.

"Bodybuilding is presentation," he tells you. "You're marketing a product to the judges. A routine has to have a beginning and an end and tell a story. It's technique and showmanship. It has to be choreographed like freestyle figure skating."

Makkawy is one of those handful of professional bodybuilders who — due to numerous endorsements, personal appearances and competition winnings — has become a wealthy man. He has earned as much as $10,000 in one day, and often earns $400 an hour, he says.

But before he turned pro in 1979 after winning the amateur Mr. Universe and Mr. International titles, he was earning a handsome living as a translator for the Egyptian government.

Hearst Feature Service

After years of silence, Jan Tomey has finally found a voice. The wheelchair-bound woman is the victim of severe cerebral palsy; even her vocal cords are impossible to control. But she is talking anyway, with a computer's voice.

Thanks to a computer program developed at Toronto's Wellesley Hospital, a speech synthesizer has become her communications link to the world. The technology is expected to arouse wide interest; loss of speech can also result from throat cancer, stroke or neck injury.

Until now, Tomey communicated through a bulletin board covered with symbols representing words and phrases. As a therapist pointed, she indicated with her eyes which to use.

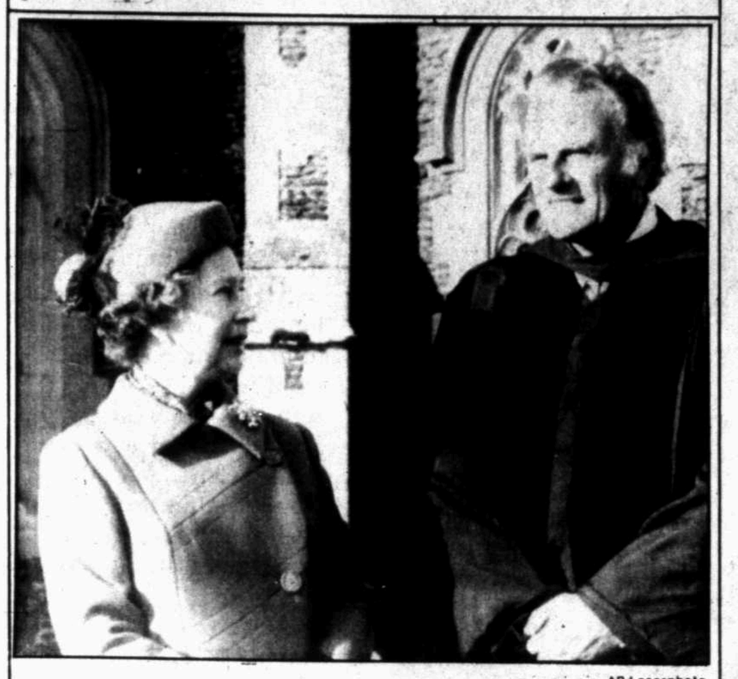

Now she types the message directly into a computer, using a stick attached to a headband rather than using poorly coordinated fingers. "She types either words or letters that represaent words," says Susan Scheueman, a research kinesiologist who helped develop the program. The synthesizer is a standard accessory, available for most home computers. "We've tried the system on ten people so far," says Scheuerman, "and they really seem excited."

The Rev. Billy Graham chats with Queen Elizabeth II at the Church of St. Mary Magdalene in Sandringham, England, Sunday where he preached by special invitation of the queen. Graham and his wife, Ruth, are in Britain for a 10-week tour.

Graham says he's thinking about death

SANDRINGHAM, England (AP) — Just turned 65, the Rev. Billy Graham says he's been thinking recently about death.

"How brief life is," the American evangelist said in a sermon Sunday before members of the British royal family.

"The average person lives as though he's going to live forever...When I was young, I used to think I had a million years out ahead of me. But now that I've turned 65, I've begun to rethink that."

Graham was preaching at the Church of St. Mary Magdalene, a tiny medieval church on the royal estate at Sandringham, 120 miles northeast of London.

He'd been invited by Queen Elizbeth II, a longtime friend who's had him as a houseguest a number of times since they first met in 1955 when he preached at Windsor Castle.

After his sermon, Graham said in an interview that for him, preaching before the royal family is like preaching anywhere else.

"I'm always preaching in front of the King of Kings and Lord of Lords," he said.

"I wasn't even conscious of the royal family being there. I was just looking at the people in front of me, the farm people, and they made me feel right at home."

Paul McCartney

NEW YORK (AP) — Two of the Beatles were back together — but there was no sign that a new musical group might be in the offing made up of Paul McCartney, Ringo Starr, McCartney's wife Linda ang guitarist Eric Stuart.

The four put together a videotape called "So Bad," featuring the 41-year-old McCartney's latest hit single by that name.

The taping was done in December in London, and plans for distribution are still being worked out, said Joe Dera, an executive with Rogers & Cowan, Inc., McCartney's publicist.

Asked Sunday if the four have formed or are planning to become a new group, Dera replied, "Your guess is as good as mine about that."

He said McCartney is wrapping up a feature-length film, "Give my Regards to Broad Street," described as a fantasy, to be released this summer.

February marks the 20th anniversary of the Beatles' arrival in America.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Not all the names in Gilbert's Book Shop are between two covers, as the store owner keeps alive memories of when Charlie Chaplin browsed at the shop and "Ginger Rogers and Lew Ayres used to smooch in the corner."

Edward Gilbert, 70, has put his famous shop at the corner of Hollywood and Vine up for sale.

"I delivered books to Ronald Coleman, Bette Davis, Joan Crawford, Greta Garbo and Bing Crosby," Gilbert recalled in an interview last week. Many moguls and stars would come by just to peruse his selection of used and rare books.

"In the mid-1930s, Henry Miller, who was always broke, used to come around to mooch money and talk books," said Gilbert.

The boulevard now is a conglomeration of bars, pornography shops and theaters, and for the storeowner the charm has faded.

Gilbert began his career at age 13, earning a few cents a day to unload, stack and deliver books for the store which then was located a few blocks away. It was moved to its present location in 1919. Gilbert became co-owner in 1950 and full owner in 1967.

William Chase, 65, who has worked at Gilbert's a quarter of a century, is trying to come up with $75,000 to buy the place.

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The son of ocean explorer Jacques Cousteau says if the United States wants to save the dirty lower Mississippi River, it will have to follow the example of England which 10 years ago passed stringent laws to clean up the Thames.

"I think the river is in bad shape, but not bad enough not to recover," said Jean-Michel Cousteau, in New Orleans on Sunday for the Diving Equipment Manufacturers' Association trade show.

"It is not as bad as the Thames River used to be," Cousteau said of the lower Mississippi. "The good news is that the Thames is recovering. I understand that people are now using the Thames to swim and fish, where they couldn't 10 years ago."

The Cousteau Society has finished work on a one-hour film of its voyage along the Mississippi in the fall. It tentatively plans to put together another program, with both to be ready for screening in September, Cousteau said.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Ira T. North, minister for one of the Churches of Christ's largest congregations, died of cancer Sunday afternoon at Memorial Hospital. He was 61.

North, who underwent surgery in 1982 to remove a cancerous kidney, was minister at the Madison Church of Christ here for 32 years.

He gained national recognition with his weekly appearances for more than 10 years on the television show, "Amazing Grace Bible Class," currently shown in about 250 cities.

Heart, blood vessel disease to cost country $64.4 billion this year

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. (AP) — Heart and blood vessel disease will cost the country $64.4 billion in 1984, including $12.4 billion in lost productivity because of disability, the American Heart Association says.

In the 1984 edition of "Heart Facts," released Sunday, the heart association says that heart disease afflicts approximately 42.7 million Americans, including 37.3 million with high blood pressure.

As many as 1.5 million Americans will have heart attacks this year, and 550,000 of them will die, according to the estimates.

In 1981, 559,000 Americans died of heart attacks — slightly more than are expected to lose their lives this year.

Heart disease is generally on the decline, for reasons that doctors do not completely understand, although they believe increasing awareness of the need for exercise and proper diet may be helping.

Bureau lists steps in using wood stoves

By The Associated Press

Sales of wood-burning stoves have soared in recent years and so have fires involving them. But you may have only yourself to blame if someone in your home gets hurt.

Studies at the Center for Fire Research in the National Bureau of Standards show that only 13 percent of the fires involving stoves and other appliances which burn solid fuels like wood were due to product malfunctions, construction defects, design deficiencies or worn-out equipment.

"Overwhelmingly, conditions related to the installation, operation or maintenance of the appliances were reported as responsible for the fires," said Richard Peacock, a chemical engineer with the bureau.

The U.S. Fire Administration says that wood-burning appliances were associated with 130,000 fires in 1981, a rise of 88 percent since 1978. There were 290 people killed and $265 million worth of property lost.

The Bureau of Standards says the most common safety rules are often the ones that are ignored and it recommends specific steps to take in installing the stove, using it and taking care of it. Here's what to do:

Installation:

Install the stove at least 36 inches — three feet — from unprotected walls. You can reduce the clearance to 18 inches if the walls are protected with 24-gauge sheet metal over one-inch glass fiber or mineral wool batts and to 12 inches if the batts are sandwiched between two plates of the sheet metal.

Do not stand the stove on an unprotected, combustible floor. Floors have to be protected not only from radiant heat, but also from glowing embers which may fall out of the stove. Mount your stove on an approved mat made of something like fiberglass batts covered with sheet metal, mortared bricks, stone or concrete. The mat should extend at least 18 inches in front of the stove. There should be a minimum of four inches of clearance between stove and floor.

Make sure the stove is not near anything that can burn; leave at least 36 inches between the stove and furniture, drapes, carpets, etc.

The stovepipe may connect directly to an existing masonary chimney or may have to pass through a wall to the chimney. A single-walled stovepipe passing through a wall should be protected by a thimble — a piece of metal which fits around the pipe. If no thimble is used, the hole should be covered by at least 18 inches of noncombustible material on all sides of the pipe. That means you would need a hole with a diameter of 42 inches for a stovepipe with a diameter of six inches. If you don't have that kind of clearance, look for a stove with a specially constructed double- or triple-walled pipe.

Operation

Do not put anything combustible near the stove, even temporarily. This includes newspapers you might use to start the fire.

Don't use flammable liquids to start or rekindle a fire and don't use coal in a wood-burning stove unless the manufacture specifically says it's OK.

Don't overload the stove with wood or use green wood and don't use artifical logs which can create a fire that is too hot and which contain wax which can clog up the air inlet.

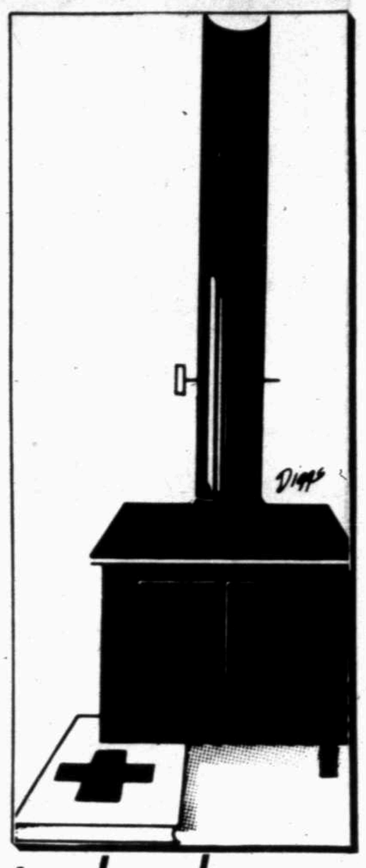

Don't touch the stove to see if it is hot and don't wear flowing clothing when you're near it.

If you're going to use the stove for a long time, keep a window open to get fresh air and avoid problems with pollution.

Maintenance

Take steps to prevent a chimney build-up of creosote, which is a by-product of wood combustion and is very flammable. When you begin using your stove, check the chimney every two weeks to see how fast the creosote accumulates and then work out an inspection and cleaning schedule.

Look at the stovepipe regularly to see that its components have not corroded and are connected tightly; creosote can eat through the connectors.

Women earn more than husbands, study shows

WASHINGTON (AP) — American women are continuing their rush to the workplace, and a new Census Bureau study shows that nearly 6 million of them now earn more than their husbands.

Women have become the primary wage earners in 12.1 percent of husband-wife households, the bureau reports. In 1981, it counted 3,997,000 couples in which both worked and the wife had a higher income, and 1,993,000 couples where only the wife was employed.

Suzanne M. Bianchi, who co-authored the report, said it was the first such study of women who earn more than their husbands. But, she added, with the growing participation of women in the labor market, it seems reasonable that the share of women who out-earn their husbands has increased.

The report by Ms. Bianchi and Daphne Spain notes that two views have been proposed to explain wives who earn more than their husbands.

The first is the so-called "female superstar," the highly educated women in a high-income professional job.

The second is the "underachieving husband syndrome," where the husband earns less because of retirement, illness, layoff or simply lack of initiative.

Ms. Bianchi said that the two possibilities are not necessarily opposites, as "the super-achieving wife may very well have demoralizing effects on a husband, and an underachieving husband may quite possibly provide the incentive for a wife to enter the labor force and discover talents she otherwise would not have discovered."

Women who out-earn their husbands do tend to have above average educations and to hold higher status jobs than women who earn less than their husbands, the report says.

But the authors concluded that while this "may be an interesting group" they account for only about 860,000 cases of wives out-earning their husbands.

"Rather, the emphasis on couples in which the wife works at a non-professional job but provides primary support for her family... because her husband has labor force difficulties appears to be the more common scenario," the report states.

In couples where both earned income, but the wife had higher earnings, more than half were cases where the husband worked less than full time, often because of layoff or job loss, the study said.

The report found that median family income was $30,112 in cases where both worked but the husband was the primary earner. When both worked but the wife was the primary earner median income dropped to $23,547.

When only the husband worked, median income was $22,800, and if only the wife had income the family median was $17,122.

While 12.1 percent of all U.S. households had females as the primary wage earner, that figure rose to 19.5 percent among blacks, but dropped to 10 percent for Hispanics.

LAND O'LAKES INTRODUCES A BETTER BUTTER IDEA

MINNEAPOLIS-- In the beginning there was butter. Then came margarine. Now Land O' Lakes, the nation's top-selling brand of butter, will be the first major marketer to offer a blended butter and margarine product called Country Morning® Blend.

The new product combines 40 percent Land O Lakes' Sweet Cream Butter with 60 percent pure corn oil margarine into a third generation product -- Country Morning Blend -- which looks, tastes, and cooks like butter, says Sally Sendmeyer, director of Land O Lakes Kitchens.

"We've spent a good deal of time and effort developing and testing this exciting new product, and making sure that it measures up to all of our rigid quality assurance standards," she said.

Country Morning Blend completed one full year of successful test marketing in June, 1981. Today it is available in 85% of the United States.

The new product is aimed at broadening the company's share of the $2.1 billion butter and margarine market, one of the largest food categories. This compares to the cereal industry which last year accounted for $1.9 billion; frozen vegetables $1.9 billion; and canned soup $1.7 billion.

Sendmeyer said the Country Morning Blend will be sold in lightly salted and sweet-unsalted varieties. Each one-pound carton will consist of four, quarter pound sticks individually wrapped in foil to prevent loss of flavor and moisture.

"It is not certain when butter was first discovered," she said. "However, this country's first creamery began commercial production of butter in New York in 1856. Margarine was first developed in France in the mid-1860's but did not become popular in this country until almost a century later."

Land O' Lakes Inc., was founded in 1921 as a dairy cooperative and soon became this country's leading marketer of butter.

The diversified cooperative, located in Arden Hills, Minnesota, is owned by more than 350,000 members in the Upper Midwest. In the packaged food category the company offers a full line of butter, margarine, cheese, milk, ice cream and poultry products.

Algae gathered on the bottom of a drained pond in the dying Kesterson wildlife refuge. The refuge in the western San Joaquin Valley near Los Banos, Calif., is in deep trouble. A pattern of declining biological activity has developed.

Poisons endanger wildlife area

LOS BANOS, Calif. — At the western edge of Kesterson Wildlife Refuge, a lonely dirt road stretches along the boundary of the federal marshland. On one side are the cattails and ponds of the preserve; on the other are the low wetlands of private duck hunting clubs. Gary Zahm, manager of the refuge, stops his truck on the road and sits quietly for a moment.

"If you're just driving along, everything here seems fine," he said. "But stop your car, keep looking, and pretty soon you begin to see it."

What Zahm wants his visitors to notice is the contrast between the two sides of the road. In the duck hunting grounds, hundreds of coots, widgeons and other game birds paddle through the shallows or stand high on tall legs, pecking at insects. But at Kesterson, the refuge designed to nurture wildlife, the vinegar-brown water is virtually empty of birds.

"There's no reptiles either," Zahm said. "No frogs, no snakes. No fish, except for mosquito fish. A while back someone asked for a permit to trap muskrats at Kesterson; I told them there weren't any muskrats. They should be here, but they're not."

Kesterson refuge in the western San Joaquin Valley is in deep trouble. For several years, Zahm and other federal biologists have watched as a pattern of declining biological activity developed here. That pattern alone has deeply disturbed the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, which manages the refuge, but in October the agency released the results of a breeding study at Kesterson that were more alarming yet.

Among the birds that have continued to use the waters of Kesterson, researchers found an extremely high rate of birth failures and deformities. Checking 350 nests of coots, grebes, and several varieties of ducks, the scientists discovered severe abnormalities in about 20 percent of the unborn young. The average rate for such birth defects in the wild is about 1 percent, they estimate.

In many cases, the defects were grotesque. Some of the chick embryos were missing eyes and lower parts of beaks; others had only small stubs instead of wings and legs. Of all the species, the coots — a bird that lives at the marsh year-round — were affected most severely. Among coot nests, the biologists found the deformity rate to be running at 42 percent.

At first the researchers were mystified by the biological carnage taking place. In the memory of the scientists involved, the rapid decline of life and the breeding failures were without precedent in the nation's 90-million-acre refuge system. But then the agency came across analyses of water samples taken from the huge agricultural drain that feeds Kesterson.

The tests showed that the water contained abnormally high levels of dissolved metals. Among them were arsenic, lead, copper and chromium, all of which can cause sickness and birth defects in wildlife if absorbed in sufficient quantity. More troublesome still, the tests revealed that the water contained concentrations of selenium, a trace element that is known to cause birth defects at relatively low levels.

The deformed embryo of a duck is born dead at the Kesterson refuge near Los Banos, Calif.

"After that, we sent some of the mosquito fish to a laboratory for analysis," Zahm said. "They showed high levels of heavy metals, but it was the selenium counts that jumped out."

The levels of selenium in the fish ranged from 43 to 52 parts per million, or 100 times higher than the counts found in similar fish taken from a nearby reservoir not fed by the agricultural drain.

Usually found in minute quantities throughout the food chain, selenium at very low levels is essential to animal and human health. Recent research has found that sufficient selenium may even help prevent breast cancer in women.

But at higher levels — the exact point varies from animal to animal — selenium can change into a powerful mutating agent. One study found that selenium injected into chicken eggs in amounts as low as .0005 milligrams per egg produced deformed embryos.

Harry Ohlendorf, one of the Fish and Wildlife Service researchers who conducted the tests at Kesterson, now says that there is "strong suggestive evidence" that selenium is the major culprit at Kesterson.

"We cannot be positive at this point," he said, "but everything is pointing to selenium and other components of the agricultural drain water."

Since selenium also concentrates in the food chain, some wildlife biologists have expressed fears that humans might be exposed through eating wildfowl from Kesterson or other marshlands in the vicinity.

Recent tests on 18 duck carcasses from Kesterson have showed that such exposure to humans is possible. The tests, conducted by the Fish and Wildlife Service, revealed that breast tissue from the ducks contains levels of selenium ranging from 3 parts to 9.5 parts per million.

These results have been forwarded to California's Department of Health Services for a determination of any possible danger to human health.

At present, there is no federal standard for human consumption of selenium in foods. However, for drinking water the Environmental Protection Agency has established limits of .01 parts per million.

If the Kesterson disaster clearly was an isolated event, it would represent a serious but not overwhelming threat to the region's wildlife, government officials said. But they noted that similar agricultural drain water is now applied to tens of thousands of acres throughout the San Joaquin Valley, and the implications for wildlife, and for much of the prime farmland in the western San Joaquin Valley, are enormous.

A recent Fish and Wildlife Service report, which has not been released publicly, says, "A review of (survey) data could easily lead one to speculate that up to about 300,000 acres (of the western San Joaquin Valley) could be infected with selenium."

Another federal agency, the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation, disputes that figure, saying that it is an estimate based solely on the similarity of soil types in the region. Actual water sampling, the bureau said, has turned up little evidence of selenium poisoning outside of Kesterson. Bureau officials conceded, however, that water sampling performed thus far is not comprehensive.

"Obviously it's a serious problem," said Jerry King, a spokesman for the agency. "It is entirely possible there are other pockets of selenium that we have not discovered."

Daniel Nelson, chairman of the drainage committee for the San Luis and Delta Mendota Water Users Association, said, "This thing at Kesterson has caught a lot of us off guard. We hope that Kesterson is an isolated case; if it's not, a lot of farmers on the western side of the valley are going to be in big trouble."

For many years the marshlands of the San Joaquin that serve as a stopover point for millions of migrating birds have used drain water from farmlands as a major source of supply. Until the Kesterson event it was believed that such water posed little or no threat to wildlife.

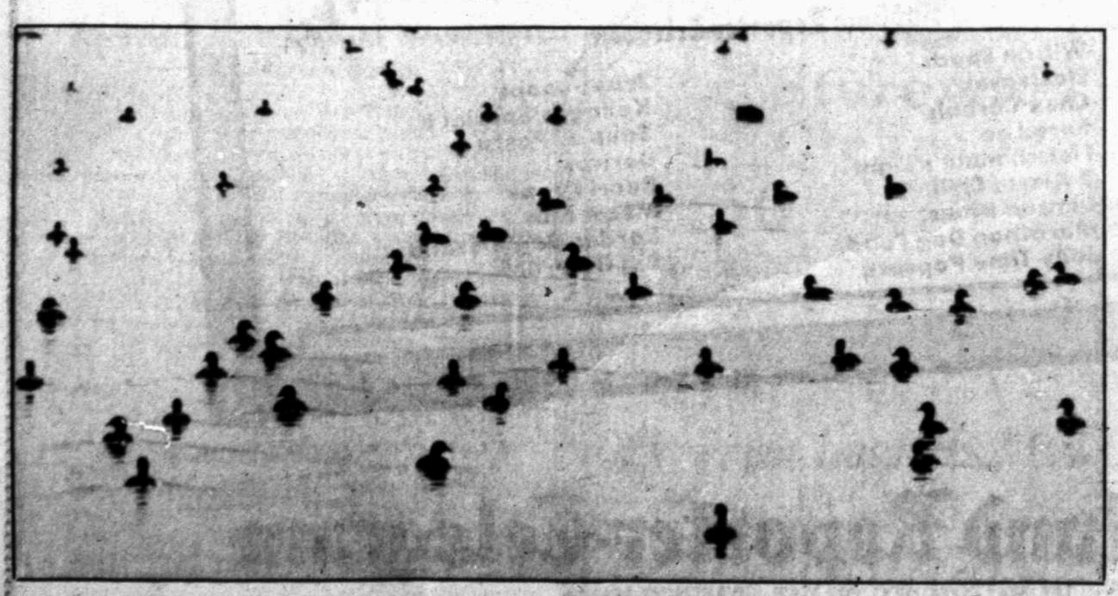

But in recent years farmers in the western San Joaquin, beset by growing salt content in their soil, adopted new methods to drain their lands. Instead of merely flooding the surface of their lands, the farmers allowed irrigation water to sink several feet into the ground, where it was collected in subsurface culverts.

The new system washed the salts from the soil, but another problem remained. What to do with the billions of gallons of salty drain water produced by the system?

The Bureau of Reclamation proposed an elaborate solution: Construct a canal that would wind through the valley, collecting the waste water, and empty into San Francisco Bay. In the 1960s, the canal, known as the San Luis drain, was completed as far as the Kesterson marshlands when the money ran out. Its terminus still stands at Kesterson.

Thus, when the first subsurface drains were connected to San Luis in the late 1970s, the water was not sent to the bay but allowed to collect in 1,300 acres of ponds at the refuge. During the summer, the ponds evaporated and the next year more drain water was delivered. Last year about 6,900 acre-feet were brought by the drain to the refuge.

In so doing, the Reclamation Bureau and the Fish and Wildlife Service unwittingly converted Kesterson into a biological experiment that tested the tolerance of wildlife to the new effluent being drained from farmlands.

Waterfowl are plentiful and thrive in the wetlands only 50 yards from the refuge.

Druse militia shell Beirut

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Druse militiamen bombarded Beirut's Christian sector today, killing at least two people, and the shelling reportedly shook the presidential palace while U.S. special envoy Donald Rumsfeld met with President Amin Gemayel.

Police said two civilians were killed and 10 injured by the Druse barrage, unleashed a day after U.S. warships pounded mountaintop positions of the Syrian-backed insurgents to quiet an artillery attack on the U.S. Marine base at Beirut's airport.

Reporters at the presidential palace in suburban Baabda said the roar of exploding shells and rockets shook the hilltop villa as the Rumsfeld-Gemayel talks were in progress.

Rumsfeld declined to speak to reporters after the three-hour meeting and there was no statement from the palace on the talks.

State-run Beirut radio said Rumsfeld, President Reagan's special Middle East envoy, briefed Gemayel on the outcome of his recent talks with Syrian and Israeli government leaders on ways of easing Lebanon's turmoil. U.S. Secretary of State George P. Shultz told reporters in London today that it was "not possible to report any real progress" from Rumsfeld's consultations.

Throughout the morning, radio broadcasts urged residents of Christian east Beirut to stay indoors as artillery shells and Soviet-made rockets crashed into several residential neighborhoods.

Police said a 60-year-old man and a teen-ager were killed and 10 other civilians wounded in the bombardment. The Christian Voice of Lebanon radio station said two of the 10 injured civilians were infants.

The Progressive Socialist Party of leftist Druse leader Walid Jumblatt said its gunners were retaliating for an ongoing bombardment of five Druse towns in the mountains near Beirut by Christian militiamen of the Phalange party.

Radio stations also reported Lebanese troops and Druse fighters were locked in artillery and rocket duels around the mountain town of Souk el-Gharb, overlooking the Marine base.

In southern Lebanon, Israeli troops tightened security today around the border village of Marjayoun as mourners — including Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir and other top Israeli officials — attended the funeral of Maj. Saad Haddad, leader of an Israeli-backed militia.

Haddad, 48, died of cancer Saturday. He had split with the Lebanese army during the 1975-76 civil war and formed a 1,000-man militia which was armed, financed and trained by Israel.

On Sunday, the battleship New Jersey and the destroyer Tattnall shelled artillery positions in the hills east of Beirut after an attack on U.S. Marines ignited a fuel depot and forced the closing of Beirut's international airport.

Nicaragua fears U.S. retaliation

An Analysis

By ELOY O. AGUILAR

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — The restrained tone that the Sandinista government took after its troops killed a U.S. helicopter pilot last week emphasizes its desire not to antagonize the Reagan administration further.

"Maybe they are learning something," a foreign diplomat in Managua said, adding he was surprised by the government's formal statement, which he believed to be apologetic. He spoke on condition he not be further identified.

"I wish the government would use the same language internally to achieve peace among Nicaraguans," said Maria Azucena Ferrey, vice president of the opposition Social Christian Party.

Officials in Washington and at the U.S. Embassy in Tegucigalpa, Honduras, said Chief Warrant Officer II Jeffry C. Schwab, 27, of Joliet, Ill., was killed by gunfire from Nicaragua after his helicopter made a forced landing Wednesday about 200 yards from the Nicaraguan border — inside Honduras.

The Pentagon said the United States made an official protest holding Nicaragua responsible for Schwab's death. Sources in Washington said some military retaliation was discussed, but ruled out, as a response to the shooting.

The Nicaraguan statement issued Wednesday night said its soldiers could not see any markings on the helicopter and did not know it was a U.S. aircraft. It also expressed hope that the incident would "not be used as an excuse to worsen the already critical situation in Central America."

The helicopter incident came at a time when the Sandinistas were trying to avoid a direct confrontation with the United States, easing some internal restrictions in a gesture to appease domestic and foreign critics.

A source who knew about the meeting of high-ranking Nicaraguan officials who prepared the government's statement, said, "They are concerned, almost afraid, that this would be taken in the United States as a provocation."

U.S. officials say the helicopter was "blown off course" by a windstorm that pushed it near the Nicaraguan border. Nicaragua claims the helicopter was flying over military installations inside its borders.

The Nicaraguan government deplored the incident, expressed condolences to the family of the dead pilot and said it hoped there would be no more U.S. blood spilled on Central American soil.

The helicopter was flying over an area that has been the site of intense fighting between Sandinista army units and CIA-supported Nicaraguan rebels, although American troops participating in joint military exercises with the Honduran armed forces were not supposed to come near the border.

In the past, the Sandinistas have used lurid language to denounce "U.S. imperialism" and the rebels.

Yet in speaking about the helicopter incident, Daniel Ortega, the Sandinista junta coordinator, said, "We were the first to be surprised to discover that it was a U.S. helicopter...I am sure our soldiers fired never imagining that it was a North American helicopter."

"We assumed it was one of the helicopters used by the counterrevolutionary groups," the statement said, noting that more than 54 rebels had been killed in the area since last Sunday.

Relations between the U.S. government and the Sandinistas have deteriorated steadily since they came to power here in July 1979, ousting the rightist dictatorship of the late Anastasio Somoza.

The Reagan administration accuses the Nicaraguan government of helping leftist revolutionaries elsewhere in Central America and of becoming a hard-line Marxist regime.

The effort to reassure domestic and foreign critics that the Sandinistas are not totalitarians began last fall. About 2,000 Cuban advisers — few of them military advisers — were sent home; amnesty programs were offered to the rebels and elections were promised for 1985.

The Reagan administration says it wants to be assured that the gestures are not merely cosmetic, but will bring about real change in Nicaragua.
