MARC will face cutbacks under new state rules

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

New rules from the Texas Department of Mental Health and Mental Retardation have the Midland Association for Retarded Citizens bracing for cutbacks.

Bob Rose, executive director of MARC, estimates that the new rates for Home and Community-Based Services (HCS), effective March 1, will affect 15 of its clients, force the closure of two of its six HCS homes and force staff reductions of six people or 24 percent of the staff caring for the clients.

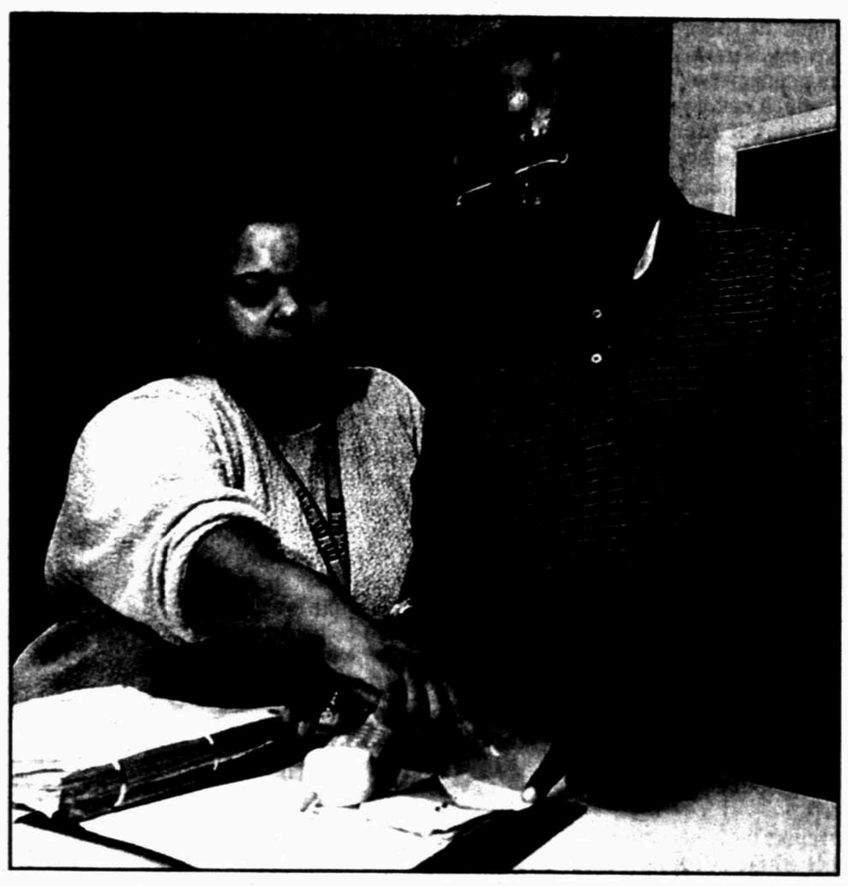

He said he has discussed the situation with other providers around the state and "at this point, the only alternative is to file a lawsuit. There is some discussion along those lines."

Charles Cooper, chariman of the Texas Department of Mental Health and Mental Retardation board of directors, said "I don't think we had a choice with the mandate we had from the Legislature to bring the cost down to different target rates they'd set for us over the next several years."

Laurie Lentz, public information officer at the department, said the Texas Legislature last year, in its appropriations, required that the department lower the monthly cost per person from between $4,000 to $4,200 to $3,346 per client each month. The Legislature also stipulated that per-month costs be reduced to $3,706 in FY 2000 and to 43,511 in FY 2001.

The Legislature appropriated $47.9 million to maintain current services at the reduced cost while adding $4.8 million from the settlement with the tobacco industry to bring those on the waiting list the longest into

New executive director wants MARC to be '911' for people who are disabled

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

If Bob Rose, the new executive director of Midland Association for Retarded Citizens has his way, MARC will soon be known as the "911" for families with disabled loved ones.

"I'm looking to raise awareness that MARC has many resources to serve people with disabilities and to communicate that we're here to help, that we accept calls for help," said Rose, who comes to Midland from Rock Island, Ill., where he served as regional manager for a four-state operation for Vethphage, a Lutheran service organization.

For example, he said, he was in the MARC office on a Saturday when a man came by interested in doing construction for the agency and mentioned he had a son with autism.

"He was unaware of a couple of resources to help him," Rose said. "If a family has a need, we want to be a resource, even if we don't directly provide that service."

Another role for MARC, he said, is to help the 20-year-old arrested in baby's death

■ Matthew Dewayne Burdick has been charged with intentional homicide in the death of 14-month-old Cameron Swaboda.

By Rick McLaughlin
Staff Writer

A 20-year-old Midland man was arrested Wednesday in connection with the death of 14-month-old Cameron Swaboda, according to Tina Jauz, Midland Police Department public information officer.

Matthew Dewayne Burdick, 20, was arrested about 4:45 p.m. by Midland Police Department officers and was booked into Midland County Detention Center where he is being held on a charge of intentional homicide.

Burdick is scheduled for a hearing this morning before Justice of the Peace Joe Matlock.

Burdick

The Medical Examiner's Office determined Tuesday the cause of Cameron's death to be head injury by force.

Burdick and his female companion were taking care of Cameron for the parents and brought the boy to the emergency room of Midland Memorial Hospital with head injuries at 7:30 p.m. on Saturday. Police did not disclose the name of Burdick's female companion or their relationship.

Detectives were called to the hospital Sunday morning in reference to a reported injury to a child, said Ms. Jauz. The parents, who are separated, were both out of town.

"Investigators now know that the injury occurred Thursday at a west Midland residence," said Ms. Jauz.

The boy died at Midland Memorial Hospital Monday afternoon, after life support equipment was turned off at the request of the family, according to Ms. Jauz.

After surgery, the boy was placed on life support, which was turned off Monday afternoon when the family returned, said Ms. Jauz. The baby's body was sent to the Dallas Medical Examiner's Office for an autopsy and was accompanied by detectives Ricardo Candelaria and Kay Therwhanger. Detective Alan Inman of Crimes Against Persons Division is in charge of the case.

The case is being classified as a capital murder case because of the age of the victim, said Ms. Jauz. "By law, any time a homicide victim is under the age of 6, the case may be carried as a capital murder," Ms. Jauz added.

Burdick and his female friend have three small children not related to Cameron in their home, Ms. Jauz noted.

Services are pending with Pipkin Funeral Home and Chapel.

Midland had one homicide in 1999, according to Midland Police Department statistics. Cameron's death is the second this month and the second in a week. The first homicide in Midland of the new year was that of Johnny Okrasinski, 60, who was shot to death Friday.

Bush: It 'feels a lot warmer' in S. Carolina

By Glen Johnson
Associated Press Writer

GREENVILLE, S.C. — George W. Bush said with a smile Wednesday that it "feels a lot warmer here" as he laid out a conservative message tailor-made for South Carolina. GOP rival John McCain said he'd gotten "a mandate" in the snows of New Hampshire and hoped for another here.

Bush, bruised by his trouncing a day earlier by McCain in New Hampshire, retooled his stump speech to focus on morality and the military as he addressed a student audience at a Christian college.

To make his point clear, he opened by using the word "conservative" six times in a minute.

Bush also picked up the support of former Vice President Dan Quayle, who said at a news conference with the Texas governor, "We know that we have prosperity today, but let us be very clear that prosperity without values is no prosperity at all. Governor Bush has the values to be president of the United States."

To Bush, South Carolina represents his political "firewall," a place where he hopes to stop McCain's challenge. The Arizona senator skipped the Iowa caucuses and focused for months on New Hampshire. He has spent most of the rest of his time campaigning here.

Steve Forbes, who finished second to Bush in the Iowa caucuses and third in New Hampshire, is also appealing to conservatives with a strong anti-abor-

Attorney considers running for at-large council seat

■ Mike Canon said people in the community have talked to him about candidacy.

By Ian Heald
Staff Writer

The list of potential candidates for City Council's two at-large seats continues to grow. Local attorney Mike Canon said he's "seriously considering" adding his name to that list.

"I've been approached by some folks to do it," said Canon.

Canon would run for City Council because, he said, "our community is at a juncture. There are some important decisions that need to be made. There's some planning that needs to be done."

Canon said Midland needs to start attracting businesses and employment options that aren't oil-related.

"I think the city has to play a leadership role in that process," said Canon. "There's a lot of turnover and transition in the oil industry. I'm hoping the outcome to all that will be beneficial to Midland. But, we can't continue to rely just on oil. It's a depleting resource. There are a lot of other things our community could be doing for providing income. It's obvious all these oil companies are giving Midland a good hard look — at whether they want to keep Midland as a base of operations."

He served as chairman of the board for the Midland Chamber of Commerce in 1996-1997 and has served as an organizer with Downtown Midland Inc.

Councilman Jose Cuevas described Canon as a committed family man who has gone out of his way to ensure the betterment of the community.

"I think Mike would make a wonderful candidate," said Cuevas. "He has a huge passion for Midland and the betterment of this community. I know his heart is in economic development and he approaches it with passion. Midlanders are winners. They'll have plenty of wonderful candidates to choose from. This is what the process is all about."

Canon

A Midland native, Canon attended Texas Tech University as an undergraduate, then attended law school at the University of Texas at Austin. Canon said he moved back to Midland from East Texas with his wife and four kids in 1987 because he wanted to raise his children in a smaller and safer community.

"This is a great community," said Canon. "We have a low crime rate. We've got very good community services and the city plays significant role in that process. As the com-

U.S. airmen patrol Iraq — safe, but no end in sight to mission

By Louis Meixler
Associated Press

NORTH OF THE TURKISH-IRAQI BORDER — Air Force 1st Lt. Chris McCarthy flashes a thumbs up and pulls his F-15 Eagle away from an aerial refueler and toward northern Iraq, where he patrols a no-fly zone with heat-seeking missiles tucked under the wings of his fighter.

Nearby, other F-15s gulp down a few more gallons of fuel from the tanker and prepare to prowl the skies of northern Iraq carrying 2,000-pound guided bombs. Those aircraft will pound any Iraqi anti-aircraft unit that dares threaten McCarthy or the other men in his Wild Boars squadron.

U.S. airmen have been guarding the no-fly zone over northern Iraq for nearly a decade. They have flown an average of 500 sorties a month for the past two years, setting out whenever the weather permits.

It's a mission that has been largely successful; Iraq rarely flies its aircraft over the zone and no U.S. aircraft have gone down. U.S. aircraft have also carried out some 90 strikes against Iraqi anti-aircraft targets during the past year.

But it is a strategy fraught with danger.

Iraqi gunners threaten U.S. aircraft an average of once or twice a week by opening fire or turning on targeting radar. The latest incident was Monday, when Iraqi gunners fired artillery at U.S. jets, which responded by striking a site near Bashiqah, some 250 miles north of Baghdad.

Iraq claims more than 100 civilians have been killed in attacks on Iraqi anti-aircraft positions, a number the U.S. military says is greatly exaggerated.

Politically, the patrols seem to have humiliated President Saddam Hussein by denying him the use of his own airspace, but the Iraqi leader appears to be firmly in power.

The patrols have maintained "a symbolic knife in the back of the dictator ... rather than effecting any great change on the ground," said William Hopkinson of the Royal Institute of International Affairs in London.

The no-fly zone was set up in 1991 to protect rebellious Iraqi Kurds from Saddam's forces. A similar zone was set up over southern Iraq a year later and is also patrolled by U.S. and British aircraft.

The job of patrolling the zones became far more dangerous in December 1998, when Iraqi gunners began routinely firing on the American and British jets.

But pilots say there recently has been a slight decrease in Iraqi attempts to shoot down planes, a development they say is mostly due to the poor weather. Iraqi gunners usually don't turn on their radar, which can be instantly detected by U.S. planes, but fire heavy machine guns or artillery that they aim by sight.

Although a few British planes fly refueling and reconnaissance missions, the vast majority of the sorties over the northern zone are flown by Americans.

"We just kind of tune out the 'It's been going on for 10 years,'" said Lt. Col. Mark Larson, an F-15 pilot with the Bold Tigers squadron. "We're focused on our mission."

U.S. pilots try to steer clear of anti-aircraft weapons in civilian areas and say they only drop precision weapons that are guided to their targets by lasers or television cameras.

At one point, pilots aiming at sites in populated areas tried to avoid civilian casualties by dropping bombs filled with concrete — meaning they didn't explode but crushed their targets. Concrete bombs have not been used since Brig. Gen. Bob DuLaney took command of the northern air patrols in October, he said. He refused to say why.

Most pilots are rotated out after 90 days, a move that officers says keeps morale high. Many are also volunteers.

"We want to be where the action is," said Larson of Mercer Island, Wash. "We drop bombs back home on the training range, but this is where it happens."

He quickly added, however, that "it would be a different perspective ... if we were losing jets every day."

McCarthy, of Midwest City, Okla., returned home to Incirlik air base in southern Turkey on Sunday after an uneventful mission.

Key former adviser talks to party about Kohl scandal

BERLIN (AP) — Germany's Christian Democrats said they received new details Wednesday from an adviser to former Chancellor Helmut Kohl about a web of secret campaign accounts at the center of a spiraling scandal.

The Christian Democrats' tax adviser Horst Weyrauch, considered a key figure in the scandal, was quizzed for more than six hours by party officials in Bonn, said the party's general manager, Willi Hausmann.

He said Weyrauch was "extraordinarily cooperative" and provided "substantial new knowledge" in the discussion Wednesday.

With Kohl refusing to talk about where the money came from, party leaders had threatened Weyrauch with legal action if he didn't help with unraveling the millions in covert accounts.

In an interview to be published on Thursday in Die Welt, the ex-chancellor admitted to knowledge of secret donations beyond the $1 million he had previously discussed. In the interview, Kohl said he already knew several years ago about a $50,000 donation that current party chairman Wolfgang Schaeuble received in 1994.

Independent Serb group releases report on atrocities in Kosovo

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — In the first public Serbian report on atrocities in Kosovo, a Belgrade human rights group has documented alleged crimes committed by Serb forces in the province and subsequent reprisals by ethnic Albanians.

The Humanitarian Law Center released its eight-page report following a seven-month investigation by director Natasa Kandic and a network of Serb and ethnic Albanian volunteers. The report focuses on atrocities committed around the Kosovo town of Orahovac.

"The Lesson of Orahovac" recounts — often with grisly detail — alleged crimes by Serb troops and paramilitaries against ethnic Albanians during the NATO air campaign last spring.

In June 1999, NATO-led peacekeepers arrived in the province and many Serb residents fled. The report goes on to document the subsequent reprisals by Albanians against the dwindling Serb minority.

Kandic's report identifies which Yugoslav army troops, volunteers and police forces — along with Russian mercenaries and Bosnian Serb volunteers — were active in the Orahovac area during NATO's 78-day bombing campaign.

"Orahovac became a profile for a setting where each and every crime against the ordinary person was allowed," Kandic told The Associated Press.

Authorities say many ethnic Albanians were killed by Serb forces during Yugoslav President Slobodan Milosevic's 18-month crackdown against separatists in Kosovo. After the NATO bombing forced the Serb troops to withdraw last spring, ethnic Albanians began attacking Serbs as revenge.

Although allegations of brutality in Kosovo are hardly new, the fact that such a study was produced at all in Milosevic's Serbia is remarkable. Most Serbs dismiss claims of brutality by their forces either as Western propaganda or as an unpleasant but inevitable result of armed conflict.

Most of the nearly 17,000 Albanians who remained in Orahovac during the NATO air campaign stayed hidden from Serbian forces. But the report details witness allegations of specific murders, abductions and expulsions of Orahovac Albanians from the start of the NATO campaign March 24 until the end in June.

According to the report, between 220 and 250 Albanian families were ordered out of Orahovac by Serb authorities during the bombing. About 60 ethnic Albanians were conscripted to work for the Serbs.

Atrocities in Orahovac did not halt once Milosevic accepted the international peace deal and pulled his troops out, Kandic said. Nor was NATO's arrival in the city a guarantee of protection for the Serb population there, she said.

The report recounts crimes by the rebel ethnic-Albanian Kosovo Liberation Army, which entered the city before NATO troops and allegedly began searching Serb houses and taking people away.

More than 40 Orahovac Serbs had disappeared by July 10, and all of the Serbs from the houses and the 142 apartments in the center of the town were evicted, the report said.

"The last abduction took place on January 3, 2000," Kandic said.

She said Orahovac is an example of how the international administration in effect applies a double standard, treating "every Serb" as "a war criminal."

"I strived to make one thing crystal clear: if one has international law and order, international principles must also apply," Kandic said. "A crime is a crime and must as such be punished in a court of law, nowhere else."

Albright supports European Union threat

ZAGREB, Croatia (AP) — Secretary of State Madeline Albright is backing the European Union on its threat to reduce contact with Austria to the technical level if the right-wing Freedom Party gains a role in a new coalition government.

Albright, at a news conference here Wednesday, said Austria should "make peace with its past," referring, apparently to Austria's role in World War II. Critics have alleged the Vienna government approved of Germany's annexation and contributed heartily to its anti-Semitic policies.

In Austria, the Freedom Party, whose leader Joerg Haider has questioned that there was a Holocaust in which millions of Jews were murdered, stands a good chance of joining a right-ward-leaning coalition.

Ex-sumo wrestler sets off media frenzy with bout-rigging allegations

By Ginny Parker
Associated Press

TOKYO — In Japan, the sumo wrestling ring is sacred ground, blessed by priests and purified with salt before each bout.

But a headline-grabbing scandal over a former wrestler's claim that Japan's national sport is rife with fixed contests has renewed suspicions that sumo is not as clean as its image might suggest.

"I regret what I did in the past," Keisuke Itai said Wednesday, acknowledging that he intentionally lost many bouts. "Sumo wrestlers are true athletes, so there should be no fixed matches."

Since Itai first made his allegations last month, saying he wants to revive flagging interest in the sport with a thorough cleansing, sumo officials have issued ardent protests denying any problem.

As for fans, they aren't necessarily ruffled by the allegations.

"This kind of thing probably happens in any sport, and I imagine it happens in sumo," said Mitsukuni Kida, 56, a ramen-noodle street vendor and sumo devotee. "What can you really do about it? As long as it's not every wrestler, I don't mind."

Some 2,000 years old and with roots in Japan's indigenous Shinto religion, sumo is, along with baseball, the country's most popular sport. Fans see it as more of a cultural treasure than a mere competition.

During bouts, behemoths in colorful silk loincloths and traditional high, bound ponytails stomp around the elevated clay ring and squat, glaring, before trying to wrestle each other down or out of bounds. Bouts usually last no more than seconds.

Solemn referees in spectacular kimonos and headdresses oversee the ritual, with its 70 winning techniques, including slapping down, lifting out and pushing out with alternating hand thrusts.

Star wrestlers are as famous as the best-known actors or pop musicians.

The 15-day tournaments are held six times a year in different cities and televised live.

It's easier to get tickets than it once was. Since the recession hit, the biggest companies aren't buying up the priciest seats, and tickets range from $28 to $143.

But the sport's image has taken a beating in recent years.

Four years ago, in a series of tabloid articles, Itai's stablemaster, the former wrestler Onaruto, talked about wrestlers who smoked marijuana, cheated on their taxes, hung out with gangsters, joined in orgies and frequently lost matches for money.

Officials denied it all. But shortly afterward, three members of Japan's top sumo family were hit with back taxes for failing to report more than $3.7 million in income.

Modernity, meanwhile, is chipping away at sumo's traditional power base — the training "stable," where junior wrestlers do the household chores and wait on senior fighters.

The stables, which subject wrestlers to rigorous practice sessions and strict etiquette, are finding it harder to recruit talent as more wrestlers come up through college sumo clubs.

Foreigners are trickling in, too. While they once had trouble winning acceptance from the tight-knit sumo establishment, they now occupy even the sport's top rank. The last tournament included wrestlers from the United States, Mongolia, China, Argentina and Brazil.

Fans are criticizing a loss of athleticism. Amid a rash of weight-related injuries last year, the sumo association forced wrestlers to take a test measuring their body fat — and told them to go on diets.

The sumo wrestler's staple fare is chanko-nabe, a calorie-rich stew of seaweed stock, chicken, pork, fish, tofu, bean sprouts, cabbage, carrots, onions and other vegetables.

Itai, now owner of a chanko-nabe restaurant, like many other former wrestlers, rose to the fourth-highest rank of komusubi but was not particularly famous or popular. At 5-foot-10, with a fighting weight of 306 pounds, he retired in 1991.

Although Itai accused several current stars of taking part in rigged bouts, sumo experts were not impressed.

Andy Adams, publisher of Sumo World, said that bout-rigging — usually arranged among the wrestlers themselves to help someone score the extra win he needs for promotion to a higher rank — goes back hundreds of years.

"There's an old tradition that if you rub my back this time, next time ... I'll rub your back," said Adams.

Russians claim more of Grozny, rebels flee toward mountains

GROZNY, Russia (AP) — Emboldened by news that many rebels had fled the Chechen capital, Russian soldiers on Wednesday pressed toward the shattered center of Grozny and fought to root out remaining militants.

The rattle of automatic gunfire and occasional explosions of tank and artillery shells echoed off ruined buildings. The troops appeared to be making faster progress than at any time over the past five weeks, when they moved block by block and often seized positions during the day only to abandon them before night.

Small groups of rebels were fiercely resisting the Russian advance in Grozny. Hundreds reportedly died as they fled the city.

The military said that much of the city was mined. On the ruins of some buildings was scrawled the warning, "Mines," while graffiti on others proclaimed "Death to Russians" and "Grozny Is Invincible."

But the morale among Russian soldiers seemed buoyed by the rebel flight and reflected their commanders' repeated predictions that they would soon take the Chechen capital.

"We blocked a group of Chechens in one building and kept up such a heavy barrage they couldn't even stick their noses out," boasted Maj. Vladimir Sobolev. "After a while, they shouted they were eager to surrender and came out, about 20 of them."

About 2,000 fighters escaped Grozny on Monday and Tuesday, although up to one-quarter of them were killed when they stumbled into a minefield and were mowed down by Russian artillery, rebels said. Several rebels alleged they were deceived by Russian promises of safe passage.

Defense Minister Igor Sergeyev said Wednesday that the bodies of 586 militants had been found, but it was not clear over what period they had died.

The military has tried to play down the breakout, affirming that smaller groups have fled the city but asserting that Russian troops have repelled most such attempts.

In fact, the rebel exodus has frustrated the Russian strategy of wiping out the Chechen fighters in Grozny and thereby ending the war.

If the rebels who escaped Grozny reach Chechnya's southern mountains, they could hook up with the estimated thousands of fighters there.

In an apparent sign that the campaign is not going as smoothly as Moscow hoped, acting President Vladimir Putin has signed a decree calling up 20,000 military reservists. The Russians have suffered heavy losses in Chechnya and the need for reservists suggests that front-line units are running short of soldiers.

The decree, issued Jan. 27 and effective Tuesday, does not say where the reservists would serve. Presidential aide Sergei Yastrzhembsky denied they would be sent to Chechnya.

Yastrzhembsky said Wednesday that rebels had tried again twice overnight to break out of Grozny.

"Both attempts were unsuccessful, and since then a large number of fighters' bodies are lying on the minefields" on the outskirts of the capital, he said in Moscow.

About 300-400 able-bodied rebels and several hundred wounded have taken refuge in Alkhan-Kala, on the western edge of Grozny, after breaking out of the capital, residents said.

Other militants have gone several miles further west, reaching the villages of Kulary and Zakan-Yurt.

But some who tried to flee early Wednesday were pushed back by Russian artillery ringing Alkhan-Kala.

Negotiations to allow some fighters to leave Alkhan-Kala in safety broke down Wednesday, and residents said the militants were preparing for combat.

"Those who can fight are likely to flee the village after it gets dark," said Arbi Visaitov, 41, who was carrying a 7-year-old boy with a head wound out of Alkhan-Kala.

ROSE: Agency is rooted in advocacy, services

state better understand how to better utilize the resources it provides disabled Texans.

"MARC has one foot firmly planted in advocacy," he said, "and the other is in providing services, actually doing the work, so we bring a unique perspective to the field."

MARC board member Mike Morgan said that Rose "comes to us with a long and prestigious background in providing services to people with mental retardation. He's managed programs across several states. We expect he'll bring a continuation of the prior good leadership and prior good will other executive directors have brought to the position."

Fellow board member Pat Henderson said "his real strong point, as I was told when I interviewed, some of his references, is that he's a team builder. He'll go in and look at what he's got in terms of employees, clients, volunteers, foundations and corporations, and he'll take their weak points and their strengths and team them with someone and equalize each other. This gives him strong committees and from there they can pinpoint the needs in MARC. He can pull together something from seemingly nothing and come up with a strong team that can really put you on the map, and that's what we wanted. We're real excited to have him."

A self-described military brat, the son of a man who spent 30 years in the U.S. Marines, Rose arrived in Illinois in the 1960s to attend school.

It was at Southern Illinois University that the course of his life changed and led him into recreational therapy.

"I was a recreational major, looking at working with parks or YMCAs," he said, when required courses teaching sensitivity to and awareness of the needs of the disabled led him into recreational therapy, a field he has been involved in since 1974.

"In those days, there was not the mainstreaming philosophy popular today," he said, "so people with disabilities were still kept out of sight. There were no curb cuts, no introducing disabled into regular classes. The university had a very progressive program of inclusion. It was a leader in accessibility, and I became friends with people with disabilities."

Two things about the field appeal to him, he said.

"To meet and get to know people with disabilities and know I can have as close a relationship as with people without disabilities is enjoyable. My wife and I would double date with couples with disabilities and find as much pleasure and enjoyment as with other couples," he said.

"The second thing is I found I could have some impact on improving the life of people with disabilities and that's personally rewarding. When I can work with legislators in Austin or Washington and help design legislation and make an impact, or when I work with a consumer and see them grow or achieve something they didn't think they could."

Arriving in Midland, Rose said he was impressed with the awareness and support of the agency.

His four children are scattered throughout the country — a married son lives in Mesa, Ariz., a daughter in Kansas City, a married daughter in Chicago and another daughter is studying psychology at the University of Texas at Richardson and working with autistic children while she completes her degree.

His wife, Linda, completing her 30th year as a teacher, is looking forward to the move to Midland, he said.

Noting that they have vacationed in Lajitas and Big Bend, in New Mexico and in Mexico, he said, "I'm drawn here. Perhaps it's because my grandfather came down from Missouri to Chihuahua and fought for independence with Pancho Villa."

MARC: Residents may be moved to four-bed homes

the program, and an additional $6.3 million to add additional slots to the program.

Also effective March 1, a new supervised living residential assistance service will be allowed, where staff will not be required to be awake during normal sleeping hours, and the residential support service, where staff will be required to be awake during normal sleeping hours.

Rose said that moving clients from the three-bed homes, to which they have grown accustomed, to a four-bed home will not only give support staff an additional person to feed, bathe, clothe and tend to without additional staff but could reawaken behavioral problems with the client.

"Everyone we serve in HCS has lived decades in state-run institutions, some 40 years," he said. "Advocates brought the issue before the Legislature, convincing them of the need to let the residents live in a home setting when they're able to do so, so we moved three into a home and let them pull together as a family. To some, this is the only family they'll ever have. Now, after six years, the state has decided to change the rules. This is like breaking up a family — it's going to be traumatic. This will affect people who can't understand why it's happening."

Too, he said, MARC will no longer be able to take clients out into the community for meals, shopping, recreational or leisure activities, "which is the reason they were placed in the homes, to be integrated into the community. Now the staff will just desperately try to maintain their safety, health and basic needs. They'll be isolated in a four-bed institution."

Not only will the HCS clients be affected, he pointed out, but MARC will have to refurbish the two homes it will close before they can be sold to a typical family. And, he said, adding a fourth person to the home brings into play new life and safety regulations, requiring a sprinkler system and smoke detector systems, which he estimates will cost MARC $15,000 per home.

Cooper said that "I think in life you can either choose to be a victim or you can choose to get on top of things and get it done. You may have to work a little harder, find some new partners, but there are ways to get it done."

Rose said that while he thinks the need to save money is ludicrous considering the large surplus the state reported last year, "if there was a need to save money, there are other ways to meet that need."

He protested the limits placed on the providers, saying "If the department had opened the full spectrum of services to review, we could have helped with budget cuts and more creative ways to meet the needs of the client."

Video camera captures DPS trooper delivering baby

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — What started as a traffic stop Wednesday for a Texas trooper ended with his delivering a baby — with a video camera and microphone rolling.

Department of Public Safety trooper Robert Turner had stopped a vehicle about 10 a.m. for speeding on Texas Highway 6, about four miles south of College Station, DPS spokesman Mike Cox said.

The video camera in the patrol car was on and facing forward. The officer was wearing a microphone and he had his radio with him, Cox said.

While Turner was out talking to the stopped driver, a second vehicle, with that driver frantically honking the horn, pulled up behind the patrol car, Cox said.

The video shows the trooper running off-camera toward the second vehicle, which carried the pregnant woman and was driven by her sister.

"The next thing he says is, "I need an ambulance, a lady's having a baby,"' Cox said.

Shortly after that, Turner is heard saying the child has been born.

Turner recently went through in-service training with the DPS, which included a refresher course on emergency child birth.

"The baby was not breathing when it came out. He (Turner) held it upside down and struck the baby on its feet, per his training. That started the baby breathing and discharged the fluid that was obstructing its airways," Cox said.

Dr. Carl Shirk said later that the trooper probably saved the life of the child. The cord was wrapped around the baby's neck, Cox said.

The people the trooper had stopped for speeding gave the officer a pocket knife, which he used to cut the umbilical cord.

Turner wrapped the baby in a sweater, put the child on the floor of his patrol car and turned the heater on, to keep the infant from going into shock, Cox said.

The mother, Christina Pickens, and baby were transported by ambulance to College Station Medical Center. The baby was 19 inches long and weighed 5 pounds 11 ounces. His name? Jordan Robert Pickens, with the middle name in honor of the trooper

The story also had a happy ending for the people in the car that Turner stopped for speeding. Turner let them off with a warning, no ticket.

GOP: Bush speaks to 5,000 students

tion and tax-overhaul message in South Carolina.

Alan Keyes, who came in fourth in New Hampshire, also was campaigning in South Carolina. Gary Bauer, who lagged badly on Tuesday, spent the day assessing whether he would stay in the race.

Bush, said, "I look forward to publicly defending my conservative philosophy, and I look forward to making it clear to the people of this state and other states that our conservative philosophy will lead to compassionate results." He addressed a crowd of more than 5,000 — his largest audience as a presidential candidate — in the cavernous auditorium at Bob Jones University.

The school lost its tax-exempt status in the 1970s for refusing to admit blacks. It now does accept black students but still bans interracial dating.

Across the same city, McCain was still reveling in his triumph in the New Hampshire primary, where he beat Bush 49 percent to 30 percent. The senator, a former Vietnam prisoner of war, hopes to win support among South Carolina's large military population in the Feb. 19 GOP primary here.

South Carolina voters are older, less well-to-do, more conservative and more likely to identify with the religious right than voters at large. One potential area for McCain to exploit: In 1996, voters here said their top quality for a presidential candidate was standing up for his beliefs, a quality that New Hampshire voters hands-down identified with McCain on Tuesday.

"I got a mandate last night and I'm going to get a mandate, I hope, in about 18 days," McCain said at a news conference. "If there's anything different here, it's that there's more concern about the military."

Later, in a speech to students and supporters at Presbyterian College in Clinton, McCain focused on his signature issue: campaign finance reform.

"Our victory last night gave me the megaphone," McCain told a packed gymnasium. "Gave me the opportunity to talk to millions and millions of Americans. Talk to them about how badly we need to reform, how badly we need to give the government back to the people."

One negative for McCain in South Carolina: his sponsorship in 1998 of a Senate bill that would have raised cigarette taxes sharply and given the federal government new power to regulate nicotine.

This state has a tradition of rejecting the verdict of New Hampshire voters, giving Bob Dole a win in 1996 after he narrowly lost to Pat Buchanan up north. In 1992, it voted for Bush's father, former President Bush, after Buchanan nearly beat him in New Hampshire.

A series of polls last month had Bush leading McCain by as many as 22 percentage points.

"As I said last night, there's bumps in the road" to the presidency, Bush said at his news conference. "There's not going to be a bump in the road here in South Carolina. There's going to be a long, smooth highway."

The governor said he planned to portray McCain as a liberal in the staunchly conservative South Carolina.

"He came at me from the left on the education plan and he came at me on the left on the tax plan — and it worked," Bush told reporters.

Time and again, the governor said his challenge in the South would be to "solidify our base," and he set out to accomplish that by making a beeline for Bob Jones University as soon as his plane touched down.

Bush's appearance opened with a hymn and the Pledge of Allegiance. The student body, whose attendance was compulsory, gave standing ovations to Bush and to former Gov. David Beasley, who focused on Bush's anti-abortion efforts in Texas.

The governor told the students it was important for the government to restore standards and discipline to American schools. He also pledged to rebuild the military.

"From the current administration, it seems like they think a strong defense is something they expect from their lawyers," Bush said. He said he would "restore honor and dignity to the White House," a comment that earned him his largest round of applause.

Albright unable to sway Putin on Chechnya

By Barry Schweid
Associated Press

MOSCOW — In the highest-level U.S. contact with Russia's new leader, Secretary of State Madeleine Albright failed to persuade Vladimir Putin during three hours of debate Wednesday to pull back in Chechnya.

"I don't think we are any closer to a political solution on Chechnya," Albright said after Kremlin meeting, originally scheduled for about 60 minutes. "Neither of us minced words."

She complimented Putin as a Russian patriot with a "problem-solving approach," while expressing frustration at her inability to convince the former security service chief that the blitz in Chechnya was isolating Russia diplomatically.

For his part, Putin said at a picture-taking session that "the United States is putting certain pressures on Russia," but that he remained committed to his policies.

"There have been ups and downs in our relationship," he acknowledged.

They debated the military offensive and Russia's suspicions about a space-based weapons program that President Clinton may approve in the summer. Meantime, Russian forces backed by tanks and artillery were battling to prevent Chechen militants from reaching rebel forces in the mountains south of Grozny, the capital.

Putin said he was interested in greater self-rule for the Chechens and for stability in the area, Albright said, "but I didn't hear how he intended to get from here to there."

Still, she told reporters, Putin authorized Foreign Minister Igor Ivanov to pursue a U.S. proposal to send a mission to Chechnya to make what Albright called a "humanitarian needs assessment." Putin also "took on board" her suggestion that more reporters be permitted to go to the embattled republic, Albright said.

Overall, she described the meeting as intense but pleasant.

"He was obviously on top of all the issues that we talked about," Albright said.

Putin tossed aside the cue cards customarily prepared for discussions of complex and sensitive issues and was "a very good interlocutor," she said.

That seemed to draw a contrast with Boris Yeltsin, whose last years as president were hampered by heart trouble and other problems. Yeltsin resigned New Year's Eve and named Putin his successor until elections are held in March.

"Everybody is engaged in psychobabble about him," Albright said. "Everybody ought to watch what he does."

A senior U.S. official who attended the meeting described Putin as "soft spoken and steely." He said the acting president promised to try to reform Russia's tax code, which has been the target of complaints by Clinton.

Also, he pledged to push for ratification by the Russian parliament of the 1993 START II treaty to make deep cuts in U.S. and Russian long-range nuclear warheads, Albright said.

Albright appealed in the meeting and earlier in a speech for Russia to do more to control its export of nuclear technology. She told future Russian diplomats at their academy that Russia had made a solid start, at least on paper, with a new export control program.

"Far more needs to be done to address this serious problem — a commitment at all levels to better implementation, better enforcement, better control of exports," she said.

Specifically, she said Russia and the United States shared an interest in preventing the spread of nuclear and ballistic missile capability in the Middle East and on the Korean peninsula.

Both countries, she said, should eliminate their stockpiles of deadly chemical weapons,

"I know we are going through a kind of strange period in U.S.-Russian relations," Albright said in a response to a question after the speech. "But I hope very much we will get through it."

Albright also offered assurances that "the United States is seeking partnership, not dominance," in its relationship with Moscow.

From Moscow, Albright met with officials in Croatia to signal U.S. support for some recent democratic trends in the Balkans country. She backed up the praise with a promise to boost U.S. assistance to $20 million this year from $12 million.

"Now every government of the world can have confidence that the Croatian leadership truly represents the will of the people," she told reporters.

Investigators probe cause of Kenya Airways jet crash

ABIDJAN, Ivory Coast (AP) — Ivorian authorities on Wednesday defended their response to the Atlantic Ocean crash of a Kenya Airways jet carrying 179 people, while acknowledging that the seaside airport had no rescue boats on hand.

Some of the 10 survivors clung to bits of wreckage for hours before being rescued, and at least one swam to shore. Many were saved by volunteers trawling the waters in their own boats.

Meanwhile, state television reported that the "black box" had been located, but search officials could not immediately be reached for confirmation. It wasn't clear whether the report referred to the flight data recorder or voice recorder, both of which could provide insight into the cause of the crash.

The director of the Ivorian civil aviation authority said the country had responded properly.

"I can assure you that all navy and military forces were mobilized within one-half hour" of the crash, said Jean Kouassi Abonouan.

The crash occurred Sunday night about 2 miles off the coast of Abidjan, just after the Airbus 310 took off, destined for Lagos, Nigeria. One survivor said more people would have lived if the rescue had come quicker.

"The accident happened at night, making the search very difficult, but I was informed and (rescuers) went to the site as soon as possible," Abonouan told reporters.

He also conceded that while the plane went down within sight of the airport, "unfortunately, we had no boats at the airport that could be ready to go to sea in case of such an accident."

He also added at one point: "You also have to take into account that this happened on a Sunday."

Abonouan said that the country did not have the equipment needed to located the airplane's flight data recorder and cockpit voice recorder, but that a team of French specialists were looking for them and the remains of the plane.

Striking Mexican students see government 'war' against them

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Radical students occupying Latin America's largest university accused the government Wednesday of declaring "war" against them after campus security guards and striking students fought a bloody skirmish with sticks, pipes and rocks.

Relatives and supporters of the strikers gathered inside the university's main campus to demand the immediate release of 251 students arrested during the fighting Tuesday between strikers, anti-strike students and university guards. Thirty-seven guards were wounded.

"A war has been declared, and it's against us," said a striking art school student who identified himself only as Carlos. He was manning the barricade of logs, wires and window frames that has blocked the campus gates for the last nine months.

Public pressure has been mounting for an end to the strike, in which a small group of increasingly radical students have prevented 260,000 of their classmates from entering the campus. The strike also has shuttered a dozen high schools operated by the university.

The battle Tuesday occurred at Justo Sierra High School, which is affiliated with the university and has been held by the strikers since April 20. About 200 students opposed to the strike forced their way onto the campus and, tossing rocks and waving sticks, forced the strikers out.

By late afternoon, more strikers arrived, retook the campus and battled security guards called in to hold it.

Police arrested 251 of the strikers and took them to jail or juvenile detention facilities, depending on their ages. Most were booked on disorderly conduct or riot counts. Prosecutors have 72 hours to file formal charges against them.

Crisis unit worthy of serving as model for others

One way in which a community program's worth can be measured is the notice it attracts from officials from other cities who come here to view what the program offers and how it is operated. The simple fact that other cities are willing to look at a program and copy some or all aspects of it underscores its value.

That has been the situation in recent days in Midland as two officials from the Grand Prairie Police Department Victim Assistance Program were in town to talk with Sue Slayton and other officials of Midland County's outstanding Crisis Intervention Unit. That is a well-deserved feather in the CIU's cap, thanks to the hard work of Ms. Slayton, the CIU coordinator, and others.

The people who make such immediate contact possible are the volunteers who are trained and can offer important assistance to the victims of crime — children who have been abused or subjected to other crimes, and adults who have suffered from crime.

In fact, in 1998 the Midland program was honored as the "Outstanding Victim's Service Program." That honor was primarily due to the fact that the CIU, which was started in 1989, has delved into some innovative methods of victim's assistance such as working with the victims at the scene of the crime rather than sometime later.

But the people who make such immediate contact possible are the volunteers who are trained and can offer important assistance to the victims of crime — children who have been abused or subjected to other crimes, and adults who have suffered from crime. Ms. Slayton appropriately credited the volunteers who work with the Crisis Intervention Unit for their outstanding work. Of course, the advantage of immediate contact, said Ms. Slayton, is that those individuals can relieve an officer or firefighter and allow them to return to their normal duties while the crisis team can stay with the victims for whatever time is needed.

This is an outstanding program worthy of serving as a pattern for other crisis intervention units throughout the state and nation.

Today in History

Today is Thursday, Feb. 3, the 34th day of 2000. There are 332 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On Feb. 3, 1959, a plane crash near Clear Lake, Iowa, claimed the lives of rock-and-roll stars Buddy Holly, Ritchie Valens and J.P. "The Big Bopper" Richardson.

On this date:

In 1690, the first paper money in America was issued by the colony of Massachusetts. (The currency was used to pay soldiers fighting a war against Quebec.)

In 1783, Spain recognized U.S. independence.

In 1809, the territory of Illinois was created.

In 1865, President Lincoln and Confederate Vice President Alexander H. Stephens held a shipboard peace conference off the Virginia coast. (The talks deadlocked over the issue of Southern autonomy.)

In 1913, the 16th Amendment to the Constitution, providing for a federal income tax, was ratified.

In 1916, Canada's original Parliament Buildings, in Ottawa, burned down.

In 1917, the United States broke off diplomatic relations with Germany, which had announced a policy of unrestricted submarine warfare.

In 1924, the 28th president of the United States, Woodrow Wilson, died in Washington at age 68.

In 1930, the chief justice of the United States, William Howard Taft, resigned for health reasons.

In 1989, Alfredo Stroessner, president of Paraguay for more than three decades, was overthrown in a military coup.

Ten years ago: The parliament of Bulgaria elected economist Andrei Lukanov to replace a hard-line Communist as premier.

Five years ago: The space shuttle Discovery blasted off with a woman, Air Force Lt. Col. Eileen Collins, in the pilot's seat for the first time in NASA history. At the O.J. Simpson trial in Los Angeles, prosecution witness Denise Brown wept on the stand as she described the humiliation and abuse of her sister, Nicole Brown Simpson, at the hands of the former football star.

America's politically open society is in danger

WIII

In an opinion written by Justice David Souter, who was nominated by President Bush, the court affirmed its 24-year-old ruling that permits government to regulate the right of Americans to engage in political speech. In dissent, Justice Clarence Thomas, another nominee of President Bush, argued correctly that the ruling is a perverse anomaly in First Amendment jurisprudence.

At issue was a Missouri law restricting, as federal law does for federal candidates, the size of campaign contributions to state candidates (up to $1,075 for statewide races). A lower court had ruled the restrictions, which the state justified as a means of reducing corruption, an unconstitutional abridgment of free political expression, absent evidence of corruption.

The case challenged the Supreme Court to revisit its 1976 holding that, although limits on candidates' expenditures are unconstitutional abridgments of free speech, limits on contributions are not. The court last week ruled 6-3 that Missouri's contribution limits are constitutional. Souter, writing for the court, said that if the public's "perception of impropriety" is "unanswered," cynicism will result.

Evidently the First Amendment means, to Souter and five colleagues, that government shall make no law abridging freedom of speech—unless governme[illegible] decides abridgment will limit cynicism. In a concurrence, Justice John Paul Stevens asserted that political contributions merely hire "speech by proxy," by "mercenaries" and "gladiators."

Thomas, joined by Justice Antonin Scalia, replied that "the proposition that speech by proxy is not fully protected" ignores the fact that "a contribution, by amplifying the voice of the candidate, helps to ensure the dissemination of the messages that the contributor wishes to convey." The court has held in prior rulings that the First Amendment protects students wearing armbands as protests, nude dancing, burning the flag, wearing a jacket inscribed "f— the draft," and pornographic telephone services and Internet activities. Nevertheless, the court says government can limit political speech, expressed through voluntary campaign contributions. This, even though the court in 1981 held that "placing limits on contributions which in turn limit expenditures plainly impairs freedom of expression."

When the court in 1988 struck down a state ban on payments to professionals who circulate petitions, it said the First Amendment protects people's right to give money to others to help get their message out, because government cannot impose "limits on the size of the audience they can reach." The author of that opinion? Stevens.

In the Missouri case the court allowed contribution limits as a means of combating the perception of corruption. But the court, and campaign finance enthusiasts like John McCain, claim to perceive, and urge the public to perceive, corruption in normal relations between politicians and citizens.

Furthermore, limits on contributions to candidates merely serve to relegate contributors to less effective modes of communication, such as issue ads by independent groups. But "reformers" like McCain want to break even those groups to the saddle of government regulation. Such government restriction of other people's voices is encouraged by many journalists because it will magnify the journalists' collective voice.

When it was revealed recently that the White House drug office had worked with television networks to implant anti-drug messages in entertainment programs, The New York Times said this should disturb anyone who understands the need for all media "to remain free from government meddling." But the Times applauded the court's decision in the Missouri case, which allows government to determine the proper amount and efficacy of political advocacy in the media.

The court, said the Times approvingly, has reaffirmed government's right to decide who is having "undue influence" through the political advocacy, primarily in broadcast media. To the Times, the First Amendment protects freedom of the press absolutely, freedom of other people's speech much less so.

This presidential election may decide whether the Supreme Court acquires a composition that protects political speech from those who believe government can dictate the "due" influence of speakers. So whether America remains a politically open society may depend on whether the next president nominates justices who, concerning the First Amendment, think as Thomas and Scalia do.

Those two justices are cited as exemplars by George W. Bush, who the day before the court ruled in the Missouri case, endorsed this Thomas assertion (from a 1996 case): "There is no constitutionally significant difference between campaign contributions and expenditures: both forms of speech are central to the First Amendment." If the court ever follows the logic of its own First Amendment case law, it will agree.

Take me out to the ball game with John Rocker

The great thing about baseball is that it is constantly changing. The latest innovation was when Baseball Commissioner Bud Selig ordered Atlanta relief pitcher John Rocker to have psychological testing for cussing out New York fans in Sports Illustrated. Everyone agrees that Rocker did not use politically correct language when describing the people who sit in Shea Stadium and Yankee Stadium.

Buchwald

His remarks tilted toward racism when they made fun of New Yorkers who have green hair.

The commissioner had to do something drastic to put out the fire. The real problem is that New York baseball fans are the most verbal of any in the world of sports. They pay big money to cuss and yell at the opposing team. They have even been known to pour draft beer on the visiting teams as they come out of their locker rooms.

That's not the least of the problem. The commissioner has now ruled that if a player retaliates against home fans, he has to go to a psychiatrist.

Almost everyone who has been there agrees that if the opposing player uses the same language as the fans, his sanity should not be questioned.

If a pitcher tells the fans where to go, then psychiatrists have to assume he is sane.

Only a baseball player who says nothing and rubs dirt on his uniform when booed should have his sanity questioned.

The Atlanta citizens who support Rocker maintain that if the players have to be tested, New York fans have to be tested as well.

These are some of the test questions fans would be asked as they go into the park:

Do you hate the Atlanta Braves as much as you do Lyme disease?

If the answer is yes, you're okay.

When was the last time you wanted to kill the umpire?

Any answer will make you sane.

Do you believe in the death penalty for someone who tries to steal second base?

This question doesn't deserve an answer.

The pitcher is on the mound. Bases are loaded. It's three balls and two strikes. Suddenly a voice from the stands yells, "Your mother can't even cook meatballs." Does he throw the ball at the plate or the person in the stands?

It's your call.

What would you do with the tobacco in your mouth when you wanted to say something to a person the stands?

Spit.

The man sitting next to you is a stranger. He says, "John Rocker not only doesn't know how to take the 7 train to get to Shea Stadium, he doesn't even know how to pitch when he gets there."

The correct response should be: "I can't comment about that. I'm his psychiatrist."

Lies continue with Gore's newest abortion policy

"If you lie about this, what else will you lie about?" asked Bill Bradley of Vice President Al Gore in a recent debate. He was talking about Gore's mischaracterization of his plan for universal health insurance. A few days later, Bradley got his answer. Gore would lie about his position on abortion.

Thomas

I've frequently quoted from Gore's 1984 letter to a constituent in columns and in public speeches, but apparently it isn't news until the big media boys decide it's news. In that letter, Gore said it was his "deep personal conviction that abortion is wrong." That sure is a lot stronger than the pathetic "personally opposed, but" rhetoric to which pro-choice politicians usually treat us. You might be justified in thinking that someone who holds a deep personal conviction would be unmovable, as most are on civil rights. How could anyone rationally favor civil rights, then become a segregationist?

As a senator, Gore voted to amend the Civil Rights Act to define the term "person" to "include unborn children from the moment of conception." By 1988, Gore had caught the political pragmatism virus. As a presidential candidate that year, Gore brazenly denied casting such a vote and claimed in his new incarnation as a pro-choice politician: "I have not changed .... I have always been against anything that would take away a woman's right to have an abortion."

Gore tried that line again in New Hampshire when reporters began inquiring about his 1984 letter and pro-life voting record, but this time it didn't work. After three days of denials and stonewalling, Gore was forced to acknowledge that he once held another position. In other words, he lied. Gore is in good (or bad) company on abortion. House Minority Leader Richard Gephardt once made persuasive pro-life statements until he decided he wanted to be president. So did Sen. Ted Kennedy and Rev. Jesse Jackson. So did Bill Clinton. You can't get the Democratic Party's presidential nomination if you are pro-life, so politicians are willing to sacrifice their supposed "convictions" on the altar of political expediency.

Now that Gore has been outed by the big media, the question reporters ought to be asking him is why did he switch? Most people who change their positions on abortion go the other way — from pro-choice to pro-life. And they give good reasons, often citing the disgust they felt when exposed to pictures of aborted babies, or, in the case of abortionists, when the carnage caught up with their consciences. But how does one go from pro-life to pro-choice?

Pro-choice politicians and women who seek abortions have to deny a lot of truth and believe the lies that the financially lucrative abortion industry tells them. There is no rational way someone who has developed "deep personal convictions" can so easily abandon them in favor of the opposite position. What does this say about the depth of anyone's convictions?

While Bradley gets no points for "always" favoring "a woman's right to choose," any more than a segregationist might receive credit for being a racist longer than his opponent, he has raised the central question concerning Gore's presidential candidacy. If Gore lies about this issue, what else is he lying about? What other lies would he tell, has he told, in order to enhance his career?

Investigation focuses on pilot tapes, recovery of recorders

PORT HUENEME, Calif. (AP) — Investigators said Wednesday they are looking into a report that the Alaska Airlines jetliner that plunged into the Pacific Ocean had problems with the aircraft's tail controls in a flight hours earlier.

Authorities also began analyzing recordings of the pilots' conversations with a Seattle maintenance crew made while the pilots tried to control the plane in the terrifying moments before it nose dived into the sea Monday, killing all 88 aboard.

The plane crashed after a pilot reported problems with the horizontal stabilizer, a wing-like structure on the tail that keeps the plane flying level.

Dozens of ships were ordered to abandon the search for survivors and shift their focus to recovering flight recorders and wreckage that could explain why Flight 261 went down about 10 miles off the Southern California coast.

The search was officially called off over the protest of some family members who held out hope that some of the plane's passengers and crew might still be alive in the chilly waters of the Santa Barbara Channel.

"We have far exceeded our estimate of survivability," Coast Guard Vice Adm. Thomas Collins said.

On shore, investigators interviewed airline employees about reports that a different crew of pilots complained of problems with the aircraft's horizontal stabilizer as they headed toward Puerta Vallarta, Mexico, on Monday.

The jetliner crashed hours later on the return trip to San Francisco and Seattle.

AP Photo

A U.S. Coast Guard officer directs a fishing boat out of the search area for Alaska Airlines flight 261 near Port Hueneme, Calif., Wednesday.

The Seattle Times reported Wednesday that the crew had reported problems with the stabilizer on the southbound leg of the flight.

An Alaska Airlines spokesman deferred questions to the National Transportation Safety Board.

"We don't know if it's true, we are investigating that," John Hammerschmidt, a member of the NTSB, said of the report.

The pilots who reported the problem will be interviewed, an anonymous source familiar with the investigation told the Times.

A jammed stabilizer forced an American Airlines MD-80 to land in Phoenix 20 minutes after takeoff Wednesday, said Phil Frame, a spokesman for the NTSB in Washington. The plane, which had been headed toward Dallas, is part of the same series of aircraft as the Alaska MD-83 that crashed. It wasn't immediately clear whether the jammed stabilizer was the horizontal stabilizer.

Federal investigators were having the flight data recorder from the American Airlines plane sent to them.

Frame knew of no link between the American Airlines incident and the crash investigation, but "it may have piqued their interest."

Investigators, meanwhile, interviewed pilots who were flying in the area of the crash and may have seen Flight 261 go down.

The audio tapes of the pilots and the Seattle maintenance crew apparently capture an exchange that took place as the pilots tried to troubleshoot what was going wrong, Jim Hall, chairman of the National Transportation Safety Board, said on morning talk shows.

"Obviously these pilots were struggling to maintain control of this aircraft for a significant period of time. It's going to be very important to this investigation to understand why they were unsuccessful in this effort," Hall said.

The tape was handed over Tuesday to federal investigators by Alaska Airlines in Washington, D.C., Hall said.

The search for survivors had gone on for 41 hours and included dozens of Coast Guard, Navy and civilian ships, boats and aircraft that combed a 1,100-square-mile area.

About 80 family members had arrived at an assistance center in the Renaissance Hotel in Los Angeles by Tuesday night and another 50 were expected to show up Wednesday, said Chris Thomas, an American Red Cross volunteer.

"Last night during a briefing led by the NTSB, family members, I think, began to come to grips with the idea that family members had most likely perished in the crash," Thomas said.

Many of those who had arrived at the hotel remained in a state of shock, he said.

"I just want to know that our family members didn't suffer and that it was just fast," said Janis Ost Ford, whose brother Bob Ost was on board the plane.

Alaska Airlines and Red Cross officials planned to take family members to the coast near the crash site Thursday.

"They will be able to deal with the emotional responses; they'll be able to see the search-and-rescue recovery process," Thomas said.

As the recovery entered a third day, several ships used for salvage operations arrived at Port Hueneme, including Navy vessels equipped with advanced sonar capabilities and one carrying a remote-controlled submarine.

The gear will be used to locate the wreckage of the airplane and the so-called "black box" flight recorders. Searchers on Tuesday said they had detected pinging from one or both of the devices. The wreckage is about 700 feet down, too deep for human divers.

If one of the plane's two recorders — the flight data recorder — was programmed to monitor the stabilizer, it might reveal the condition of the stabilizer when the jet went down. If not, officials would have to deduce what happened by studying how other systems performed before the crash.

Study: Children dying of cancer suffer needlessly

By Janet McConnaughey
Associated Press

Children dying of cancer often suffer needlessly because their doctors and families refuse to give up hope of curing them, researchers say.

It's entirely understandable: "The life of the child is so precious, it's hard to give that up," said Dr. Joanne Wolfe.

But that approach can — and should — be changed, said Wolfe, an instructor in pediatric oncology at the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute, Children's Hospital and Harvard.

Wolfe's study of suffering among children with cancer was published in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine.

The hard fact is that one-quarter of all children diagnosed with cancer will die of it. That is considerably better than it used to be — 30 years ago, the death rate was 90 percent.

But when the researchers talked to parents of 103 children who had died of cancer between 1990 and 1997, they were told that 92 had suffered "a great deal" or "a lot" from at least one symptom. More than half had suffered significantly from at least three symptoms.

Fatigue, pain, trouble breathing and poor appetite were the most common complaints. Nausea and vomiting, constipation and diarrhea were next. More than 80 percent of the children hurt. Most of them were treated for the pain, but only 27 percent of those felt better.

Fifty of the children were still getting cancer treatments, such as radiation, chemotherapy or a bone-marrow transplant, in their last month alive. Seven died in the bone-marrow transplant unit.

"For most children with cancer, the primary goal of treatment is to achieve a cure," Wolfe wrote. "Considerations of the toxicity of the therapy, the quality of life, and growth and development are usually secondary to this goal."

The findings indicate that doctors and parents "were pushing for a cure even to the end, not knowing exactly when to stop," said Marilyn Hockenberry-Eaton, an associate professor of pediatric hematology and oncology at Baylor Medical School and director of nurse practitioners at Texas Children's Cancer Center.

She praised the article.

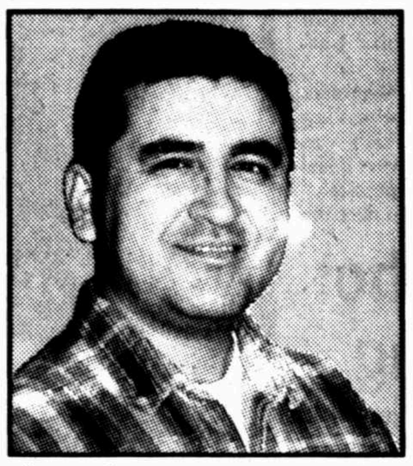

"We have created very successful treatments for childhood cancer, but on the way, something's had to go," she said. One of those things, she said, is a focus on relieving symptoms of terminally ill children.

"It's not like its overlooked, but it's not emphasized," she said.

Hockenberry-Eaton said parents often do not want their children to get opiates for pain, either because they are afraid of addiction, or because it seems to represent acknowledgment that the disease is terminal.

Early findings from the study prompted Dana-Farber and Children's to set up a team in 1997 to help parents, doctors and nurses ease the hurt for dying children.

Senate approves new increase to minimum wage

WASHINGTON (AP) — Teeing up for an election-year fight, the Senate approved a Republican bill Wednesday that would boost the minimum wage by $1 an hour over three years, a period of time President Clinton and Democrats say is too long to wait.

With many Republicans — especially in the House — eager to avoid repeated campaign-season attacks on the widely popular issue, some increase in the current $5.15 hourly minimum seems likely to become law before Election Day.

But with the White House and Democrats also objecting to the measure's $18 billion in tax cuts over five years — mostly for small business owners — it is unclear what the final version will look like. The GOP's desire to avoid making the proposal a campaign issue gives Democrats little incentive to quickly settle for anything less than what they want: a two-year phase-in, with a much smaller tax package.

"That's not the kind of legislation the president can sign," said White House spokesman Joe Lockhart, citing its three-year phase-in and "a bevy of unpaid-for tax cuts for the special interests."

The minimum wage boost was included in a bill that would overhaul the nation's bankruptcy laws that the Senate approved by 83-14. The House approved its own version of the bankruptcy legislation last May, but it lacked any minimum wage provisions.

Last November, the House Ways and Means Committee approved a separate GOP bill that would increase the minimum wage by $1 over three years and includes a $30 billion, five-year package of tax cuts. Some $16 billion of that price tag is a reduction in the estate tax paid by upper-income people who inherit substantial assets.

■ More nation news/4B

But the fate of the House legislation is unclear. With defections likely by moderate Republicans from urban, northeastern districts, GOP leaders so far lack the votes to move their version of the bill through the House. They hope to have a vote on the issue by late March and are insistent on including tax reductions that they say will offset businesses' costs of paying the higher wages.

"I hate it," House Majority Whip Tom DeLay, R-Texas, said Tuesday when asked about the minimum wage increase. "Obviously, we don't have the votes to stop minimum wage, so we ought to do something that lessens the burden on people that pay the wages."

About 11 million Americans are paid the minimum wage. About half of them are less than 24 years old, and many hold part-time jobs.

But more important to the politics of the issue is the proposal's popular appeal. In a poll taken last spring for the Wall Street Journal and NBC News, three-fourths of those questioned favored the $1-an-hour increase.

The potency of the minimum wage as a campaign issue was last illustrated in 1996, which was another campaign year. After initial opposition by many Republicans, Congress finally voted to raise the wage from $4.25 to its current $5.15 in two steps.

This year's Senate bill would increase the wage by 35 cents an hour in March 2000, by 35 cents more in March 2001 and 30 cents in March 2002.

The language was added to the bankruptcy bill last November, after Democrats tried — and failed — to force their own version into the legislation. The Democratic alternative would have raised the minimum wage by $1 with two 50-cent increases over 13 months, while also providing $9.6 billion in tax relief and raising other taxes.

In a dispute the two parties have fought for decades, Democrats argue that with many Americans flush from the booming economy, the time is ripe to raise the minimum wage.

They note that as is, it pays $10,700 a year for 52 40-hour weeks — $3,200 below the poverty line for a family of three. They also say the difference between their version and the GOP language would cost each minimum wage earner $1,200.

Prosecutors: Cops shot Diallo without warning

By Tom Hays
Associated Press

ALBANY, N.Y. — Four white New York City policemen accused of killing an unarmed black man unleashed a 41-shot barrage with no warning and kept firing as the victim was down on the ground, prosecutors said Wednesday as the officers' murder trial opened.

"They never called out commands like 'Stop, police!' or 'Don't move!'" before gunning down Amadou Diallo in an apartment house vestibule in the Bronx, prosecutor Eric Warner told a jury of four blacks and eight whites.

The officers — Sean Carroll, Edward McMellon, Kenneth Boss and Richard Murphy — "acted recklessly and with depraved indifference to Amadou Diallo's life," Warner said. "For that, they are guilty of murder."

The defense in the racially charged case disputed the prosecution's claim that the shots came without warning.

The defense attorneys said the officers were forced to make a split-second decision using rapid-fire weapons. And they portrayed Diallo's Soundview neighborhood in the Bronx as one of the city's most dangerous sections.

Diallo, a 22-year-old street vendor from West Africa, was shot 19 times a year ago by members of an elite street-crime unit looking for violent criminals. The officers said they thought he was holding a gun; it turned out to be a wallet.

"The officers identified themselves with their shields out, as they are trained to. Mr. Diallo doesn't listen to their orders to stop, which they are trained to give," defense attorney Bennett Epstein said.

By the time Diallo turned around, "he had taken them into the no-man's land that is every police officer's nightmare," Epstein said. Carroll, after realizing the mistake, tried to resuscitate Diallo, saying, "Don't die, please don't die," the attorney said.

"This is a case about five good men," Epstein said. "One of them was Mr. Diallo."

Carroll, 36, McMellon, 27, Boss, 28, and Murphy, 27, face 25 years to life in prison if convicted.

The shooting touched off protests alleging widespread brutality against minorities. The trial was moved 150 miles north to Albany after the judge ruled that the officers couldn't get a fair trial in the Bronx.

In his opening statement, Warner detailed how the 19 bullets tore through Diallo's vital organs. He alleged many were fired while Diallo was falling down and on the ground.

Defense attorney Stephen Worth asserted that the officers were only on trial "because there was a furor created by people who have their own agendas" — an allusion to activists who say the case exemplifies racism.

Detective Joseph Flannio, the only witness to testify Wednesday, described finding the sidewalk, stoop and vestibule where Diallo was shot littered with 41 bullet shells and 27 bullets.

One bullet had pierced the wall and was found inside Diallo's apartment, Flannio said. He said four more bullets fell from Diallo's body it was removed.

Photos of the scene, including ones showing Diallo's body, were passed among the jurors. None had visible reactions.

Outside the courtroom, the Rev. Al Sharpton accused Worth of trying to manipulate white jurors.

The civil rights leader also complained that the defense gave the impression that Soundview — located in a precinct where violent crime has dropped more than 22 percent in the past two years — is "the wild, wild West."

"That's insulting," he said. "It shows why this should have been a Bronx jury."

MISD to publish school attendance zones

District will hold press conference Friday for public

By Jeff Stevens
Staff Writer

The Midland Independent School District is set to end its silence regarding proposed boundary changes for elementary students.

The school board met at 12:15 p.m. in executive session Wednesday, discussing boundary proposals. The meeting lasted approximately two hours and ended without a vote.

However, at meeting's end, Baressi emerged with the announcement of a Friday press conference to present not one, but two proposed boundary maps.

"It's literally two different plans from that shown in the newspaper," said Superintendent Joseph Baressi Jr.

The Midland Reporter-Telegram published the district's preliminary boundary proposal in the Jan. 23 edition.

Under its agreed judgment settlement plan, MISD is required to redraw some of its boundaries to achieve racial integration in 14 of its 23 elementary campuses.

According to the settlement document, "at least six elementary schools shall each have an Anglo student enrollment percentage within 10 percent of the district-wide Anglo elementary school student enrollment percentage, and at least eight elementary schools shall each have an Anglo elementary school student enrollment percentage within 15 percent of the district-wide Anglo enrollment percentage."

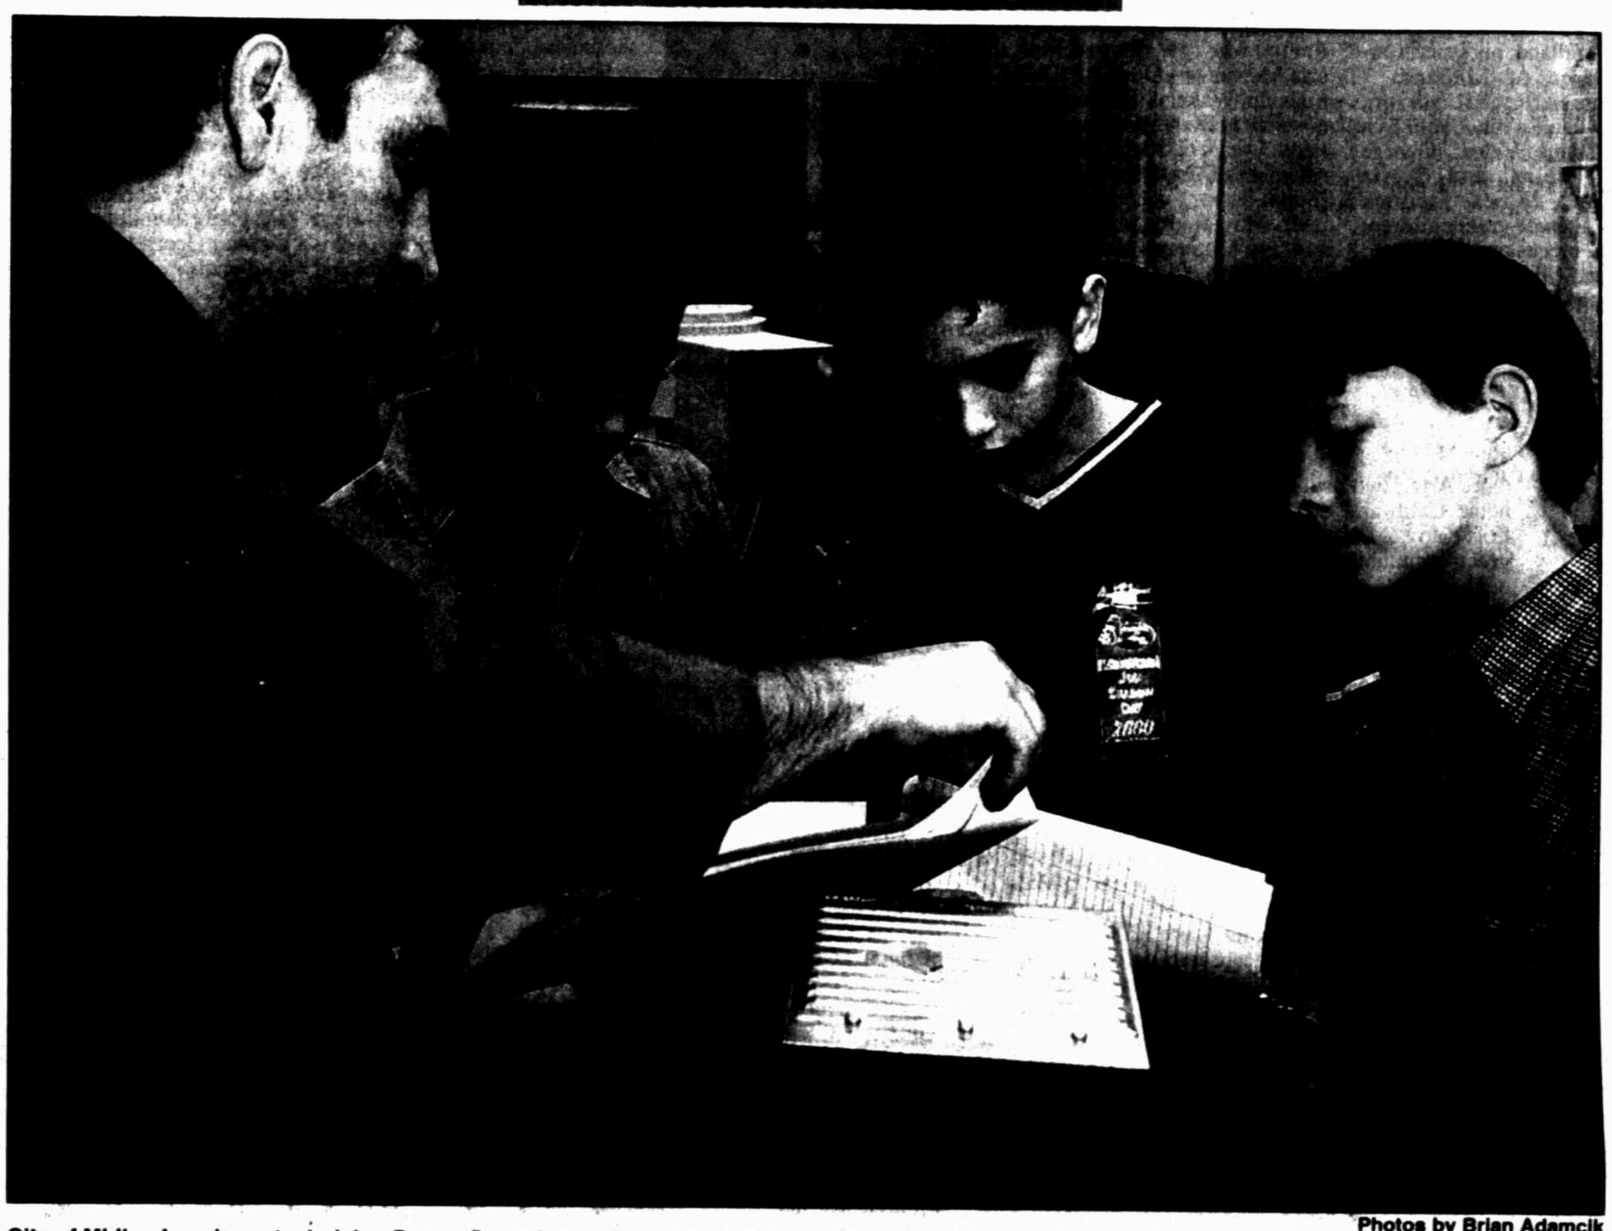

The district's Anglo student population is 45 percent, according to Milton Evitt, executive director of computer and pupil services. The desired result of all the changes is to achieve six schools with an Anglo population between 35 to 55 percent and eight schools with an Anglo population between 30 to 60 percent.

To accomplish that goal, the district will have to bus some of its students, thus the need for redrawn attendance zones.

MISD's initial attempt to meet that requirement called for about 1,100 students being bu sed away from what had been considered their neighborhood campus.

One motive for the district's fight for unitary status has always been based in abolishing the cluster system and returning Midland to neighborhood campuses. However, with any crosstown busing, there will be at least some children not participating in the neighborhood school

Students see city at work

Midland officials served as educators Wednesday as they gave City Hall tours to 28 students from De Zavala Elementary School. The event, the third annual Groundhog Job Shadow Day, is a nationwide event sponsored by Junior Achievement, School-to-Work Opportunities, America's Promise and the Society of Association Executives. Three hundred other Midland sixth-graders shadowed at Midland College, Midland County, Midland Memorial Hospital and various private businesses.

Midland's Management Assistant Willa Graff couldn't overstate the importance of children learning how large a role government plays in their everyday lives.

"It's important for students to learn about their city government, to understand its function and how it affects their lives everyday," said Ms. Graf. "I think all the city staff and the kids enjoyed their day together."

De Zavala's Shimira Warda shadowed Human Resources Coordinator Beth Mosley. Ms. Warda said City Hall was an interesting place and said Ms. Mosley's human resources job seemed like fun.

Assistant Director of Utilities Kay Snyder taught Melissa McGhee about the importance of maintaining the city's water supply and waste water plants and showed her how to use the departments various computer programs.

Director of Engineering and Development Marcus Johnston and Assistant City Engineer Renee Franks discussed all the aspects of civil engineering and showed four students — Logan Maxey, Sergio Borunda, Allen Baker and Jesse McDow — the city's GIS mapping system and how intersection signals operate along Andrews Highway.

"We talked about all the processes we go through in subdivision development and how we review engineering plans," said Johnston. "They were mostly interested in the maps and old aerial photographs."

After the engineering department tour Maxey said he was more interested in becoming an oceanoghrapher while the other boys expressed interest in becoming gunshop owners and demolitions experts.

Following the tour, the students were treated to pizza and and given a presentation by Fire Station No. 3 on the fire truck and ambulance operation.

Executive Director of Junior Achievement Jody Sneed considered the day a success. "From everyone I've spoken to, the day went extremely well." In addition to Midland, Odessa had 100 student participants and Lubbock nearly 1,000.

USDA threatens to close Farm Service Agency of Glasscock Co.

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

The U.S. Department of Agriculture has hit a political snag in rural Glasscock County, in its efforts to reduce the number of its offices nationwide.

In an effort to streamline operations and reduce costs, the USDA since 1994 has been closing lower-workload offices and using the "supercenter" concept — consolidating functions of the Farm Service Agency (FSA), the Natural Resources Conservation Service (NRCS) and Rural Development (RD, formerly the Farmers Home Administration, or FHA).

"In Glasscock County, they (the USDA) didn't want a supercenter," noted Clifford Hoelscher, a St. Lawrence-area cotton farmer and political activist is a delegate to the National Cotton Council. "But we (in 1994) were able to keep the (FSA) office open as a stand-alone office because of the size of the area and the people and the distances."

The 900-square-mile Glasscock County, with a population of about 1,340 people, is largely agricultural.

"We are getting our congressmen involved to keep the office open," Hoelscher said.

According to John Kinnibrugh, Glasscock County's 36-year-old FSA county executive director, about 80 percent of the people in the county are involved in agriculture and related work, such as ginning cotton.

Robert Springer, who heads FSA field offices nationwide, noted that in 1994 "reorganization legislation was passed for the USDA to eliminate a thousand USDA field offices nationwide" in a downsizing program.

According to U.S. Treasury figures, the USDA budget increased from $54.3 billion in 1996 to $62.8 billion in 1999. In a corresponding period, the nationwide FSA budget soared from $8.3 billion to $19.5 billion.

A fraction of FSA funds for the 1998 crop-livestock year were directed to the drought-crippled Glasscock County.

"We've experienced about seven years of continuous drought," Hoelscher noted.

In 1999, the FSA funneled $12.168 million in payments to Glasscock County farmers and ranchers in such programs as the Conservation Reserve Program (CPR), $100,300; the Livestock Assistance Program (LAP), $238,300; Non-Insured Assistance Program (NAP), $151,500; Loan Deficiency Payment (on Upland cotton), $154,000; Crop Loss Disaster Assistance Program (CLDAP), $5.8 million; Production Flexibility Contract (PFC), $2.8 million, and Marketing Loss Assistance (MLA), $2.8 million.

Scarborough-Linebery House prepares for community events

By Ian Heald
Staff Writer

The Scarborough-Linebery House has been bursting with activity over the last week in preparation for upcoming community events.

The house will host its second annual Heritage Reunion Art Show on April 29. Art produced by 20 West Texas artists will be on sale to the public. Professional fiddlers will roam the grounds of the Scarborough-Linebery property and a chuck wagon chef will provide the down-home meals.

Last year's art show generated $2,000 in revenue for the house despite the rainy weather that forced participants indoors.

Stapp

"It's a great time for everyone," said Linda Culp, a painter from Andrews. "It's great food and great entertainment."

Local artist Don Parks said Midland is one of the best places to sell art in West Texas. "It's a good place to be an artist," he said. "There are more buyers in this town than you'd normally find in a town this size."

In the fall, the West Texas Hall of Fame at the Scarborough-Linebery House will hold its second annual induction ceremony, commemorating those individuals who have had a lasting influence on West Texas. The hall of fame inducted its first members in September, Tom and Evelyn Linebery. According to curator Frances Stapp, three to five individuals will be inducted to the hall of fame each fall. Inductees are selected by a designated board of Midland residents.

Originated in September, the hall of fame's interior redesign was completed last week. The ceiling was raised and a new restroom was added. Next on the list is furnishing the room with West Texas memorabilia and a video system profiling influential West Texans.

Ms. Stapp says the hall of fame room will also be available to companies for day retreats and luncheons.

Any questions regarding activities at the Scarborough-Linebery House can be addressed with the curator, Frances Stapp, at 685-7368.

Realizing the American dream: comfortably at home at last

Todd

More and more, it seems as if we Americans are bringing the spaciousness of the outdoors into the indoors.

Houses seem to be getting larger and larger, to a point, even as households become more conservative in family numbers.

Perhaps that reflects affluence.

However, there's nothing new about the grandeur of mansions and castles with their parapets and grand yards and steepled churches and cathedrals with their towers and belfries and ark-like sanctuaries.

One speaks of power, wealth, and success of earthly endeavors. The other, while built by generous tithes and offerings, speaks of the omnipotence of God and of the humbled ones who would worship the Almighty.

In many houses, there is a sense of freedom in those broad rooms and high, tapered ceilings often accented by ceiling fans suggestive of that era prior to climate-control air conditioning. It is as if you are in a valley topped off by clouds.

High-ceiling rooms, such as those from the Victorian era, afford breathing space, and that is good. Therein is, or could be, resplendence.

But those humbled houses of the masses going into the 20th century spoke of adequacy — enough room to settle in the family. They were shelters more than showplaces and offered those dream cottages and picket fences for those couples who dared dream of a home of their own.

They were affordable dwellings designed to get families out of rental units and to realize that idealized facet of the American dream.

Millions already are there.

The primary advantage, it would seem, of that is a relatively safe haven, even a cubicle, a space of solitude (at times, at least). Therein, a person or family in harmony can relax and be free of the trials and stresses of the workaday and social-life routines which, of course, afford their own joys and rewards.

In truth, each person needs a quiet time, a time to reflect and to ponder whether that time is on the shore of a Walden Pond, underneath the splendor of a sheltering tree, or in the safety of a rocking chair and with the glow of a reading lamp in that haven within the American dream.

The plaintiff-intervenors — who, for the past 30 years, have been MISD's chief rival regarding desegregation — is concerned that the majority of students not participating in neighborhood schools will be Hispanic or African-American children.

In fact, upon reviewing the district's first proposal and four subsequent alternative boundary changes, the plaintiff-intervenors responded that no proposal was acceptable.

"The Coleman intervenors and the LULAC intervenors cannot accept the proposal you put forth on Friday," reads a plaintiff-intervenor response to the district. "Any increase in the number of racially identifiable schools with MISD is completely unacceptable."

Furthermore, the district's first proposal showed plans to primarily bus minority students.

"The intervenors cannot endorse any plan that does not comply with the settlement agreement and shares the burden of bussing at an equal level between the Anglo community and the minority community," said Robbyne Hocker Fuller, reading from the plaintiff-intervenor's attorney response to district proposals.

Baressi said input from both the U.S. Justice Department and the plaintiff-intervenors was considered and partially responsible for changes in the boundary proposals to be presented Friday.

"The premier plan we will be submitting is a modified version of one the Justice Department presented," said Baressi, adding that MISD is trying to be fair in its deliberations. "We are trying to be fair to the extent that we are trying to share the burden of bussing equally and trying to reduce the number of students who will be bused.

Baressi confided that one of the two plans on the table calls for 1,000 students to be bused and one plan would only require busing 700 students.

He added that no plan has been finalized. "They're certainly subject to input. We've considered input from the plaintiff parties and we will be considering the input of our parents," Baressi said, adding that the board is already considering input they've received from parent calls.

As for the board's opinion regarding the proposals: Despite, a detailed plan to publicize the proposed maps, board members weren't very talkative about the subject Wednesday.

All but two trustees declined an offer to comment.

Pat Hodges said, "Both of them (proposals) are good."

George Lara would only say, "I have concerns."

The district will present the proposals to the public Friday at a 2 p.m. press conference at 615 W. Missouri. Baressi said the entire community is welcome and encouraged to attend.

A public hearing on the topic is scheduled for 7:15 p.m. Tuesday at Alamo Junior High. According to Baressi, no board decision will be made regarding boundary changes until March.

sure)," Springer said. The USDA has "notified Texas that they need to proceed with getting caught up on the closings. It's time to clean up what you failed to do."

Glasscock County's Hoelscher, however, suggested that politicking and hard work kept the county's FSA office open from 1994 into 2000.

"We worked on it real hard, went to Washington, D.C., worked with the department (USDA), worked with the political pressures of our congressmen, and we were able to keep it open at that time," Hoelscher said.

This time, Hoelscher has helped enlist the help of U.S. congressmen Henry Bonilla and Lamar Smith to pressure the USDA to keep the Glasscock County FSA office open.

In a joint Jan. 27 letter to FSA Administrator Keith Kelly, the two Texas congressmen noted the Glasscock County FSA office is a "medium-workload office, not a small one, and the Texas State Food and Agriculture Council unanimously requested that it remain a stand-alone service center."

Bonilla and Smith wrote that closing the office "would put an enormous strain on the producers not only in Glasscock (County), but also those who live in the surrounding counties."

The FSA oversees farm commodity programs, emergency loans, conservation and environmental programs, and emergency and disaster assistance.

Midland County, which adjoins Glasscock County, is site of a USDA "supercenter" for FSA-NRCS functions.

According to recent Glasscock County figures compiled by Kinnibrugh, there are 727 producers, owners and operators on 340 farms. Crop land totaled more than 132,400 acres. Of that acreage, 85,407 acres was in cotton in 1999. Cotton production in bales ranged from 81,000 in 1992 to 34,800 in 1998.

In 1998, according to the Texas Department of Agriculture in Austin, the cash value of Glasscock County farm-and-ranch production was $14.9 million, and the average between 1995 and 1998 during the drought was $18 million.

However, the average cash value between 1988 and 1993 in more bountiful years was $27.4 million, according to Kinnibrugh's research. Cotton was the biggest agricultural money-maker at $14.5 million followed by livestock at $4.9 million. Other production brought $6.2 million. The county also produces grain crops.

Should Glasscock County lose its FSA office, Kinnibrugh, who is salaried in the low $40,000s, said that he has not heard where his staff would be relocated. His staff includes three technicians, two of whom are full-time workers. His annual budget is about $100,000.

Man pleads guilty to attempted murder of Border Patrol agent near Marfa

By Rick McLaughlin
Staff Writer

A California man faces up to 20 years in prison for attempted murder of a U.S. Border Patrol agent. He also faces a mandatory 10 years in prison on a weapons charge and up to five years more for attempted escape.

Shaun Michael Kane, 21, of Receda, Calif., appeared before U.S. District Judge Lucius D. Bunton III, Friday, and pleaded guilty to one count each of attempting to murder a U.S. Border Patrol agent, discharging a firearm during a crime of violence and attempted escape, according to Jeff Parras, assistant U.S. attorney in Pecos.

Kane "got into a shootout" with a U.S. Border Patrol agent west of Marfa on Nov. 22, firing three shots at the agent from a Colt .45. The agent returned fire. Neither man was hit during the exchange of gunfire, said Parras.

The shootout was the "end of the story" of a one-man crime spree by Kane, said Parras, adding that Kane is wanted for capital murder out of Elko County, Nev.

The day before the shooting, a Marfa Police Department officer attempted to stop Kane after discovering that the vehicle Kane was driving was reported stolen. Kane abandoned the vehicle and fled on foot about two miles west of Marfa, said Parras.

He was spotted about 16 miles west of Marfa and about 40 miles from the U.S. Mexican border. It was about 1:30 a.m. when the border patrol agent spotted him. The agent chased Kane for three-quarters of a mile, said Parras, when the gunfire was exchanged.

Parras said it appeared Kane was heading for the border. "That's the logical thing," he said.

The agent withdrew from the engagement and law enforcement officers waited until daylight, when Kane was spotted about five miles further west of Marfa, added Parras.

He was arrested and was awaiting prosecution in the Winkler County Jail in Kermit, when he attempted a solo escape through an air conditioning duct. Kane removed a table from the wall and used a sharp end to force the vent from the ceiling. However, sensors in the air ducts alerted jailers to a problem.

When they arrived at Kane's cell, they found him attempting to clean up the dust from the attempt, Parras said.

Kane remains in federal custody pending sentencing. Bunton scheduled sentencing for March 27.

"The sentencing will be stiff," in order to send a message," said Parras, because Kane shot at a Border Patrol agent. Additional charges include transporting a weapon across state lines and being a felon in possession of a firearm. Parras said those charges will not likely be prosecuted in light of the guilty pleas Friday.

Parras noted, that after sentencing, Kane will have to answer to a number of other criminal charges including the murder case in Nevada. "He has lots of legal holds," said Parras, who said Kane has been on a "one-man crime spree."

He faces grand theft auto charges in California and charges in Colorado and northern Texas.

The case was investigated by agents of the U.S. Border Patrol, FBI and the U.S. Marshals Service. Parras prosecuted the case.

School district says move to eliminate D's will benefit all students

DALLAS (AP) — A school district has eliminated the letter grade "D" to help the prospects of Cody Spencer to get a football scholarship at an NCAA Division I school.

The Grapevine-Colleyville Independent School District voted Monday to give a C to all students who scored between 70 and 79 in a course. Before, it took 75 to 79 to get a C, with a grade of 70 to 74 getting a D.

Most schools consider a score between 70 and 79 a C, which put Spencer at a disadvantage, said Spencer's father, who asked school officials to bring the grading system in conformity with other school districts.

Spencer is listed by some scouting services as among Texas' top 100 football recruits. His chief suitors as a running back and/or defensive lineman are Texas Christian, Texas Tech, North Texas and Midwestern.

"We are not lowering our academic standards," Jeanne Guerra, spokeswoman for the Grapevine-Colleyville district, said Wednesday. "We're simply changing the way outside organizations interpret our numeric grades."

Texas schools convert numeric grades to letter grades when reporting scores to the NCAA for the purposes of determining eligibility for scholarships.

Each letter grade for 13 core courses that count toward eligibility is worth a certain number of points: 4 points for an A, 3 points for a B, 2 points for a C and 1 point for an A. In Texas, there is no standard for the use of D's in reporting scores to the NCAA, officials said.

"We weren't asking for preferential treatment," said Wes Culver, Spencer's father. "We're asking for equal treatment. All we want is the opportunity for a scholarship."

The change in policy will lift Spencer's grade point average from 2.1 to 2.4 out of a 4.0 on the NCAA's scale.

"We aren't involved in what grading system a particular school employs," NCAA spokeswoman Jane Jankowski said. "If a school system changes its grading system, we ask them what they have done."

Julian Shaddix, with the Texas Association of Secondary School Principals, said the elimination of D's has not been a big trend in the state.

Several other school districts in North Texas don't use D's in their conversion system to the NCAA. Among those schools are Arlington, Birdville, Carroll, Dallas, Fort Worth, Keller and Lewisville. The Ector County school district in Odessa also doesn't use them.

But several other area schools continue to give a D for scores between 70 and 74 -- among them schools in Denton, Hurst-Euless-Bedford and Northwest. The Houston school district does also.

"We haven't had any problems with it," said Tony Swafford, executive director of school operations in Denton, about his school district's use of D's. "We make a strong effort to notify our potential college athletes early on what's expected of them."

FBI, MPD following leads in attempted bank robbery

From Staff Reports

The FBI and the Midland Police Department are working together "to follow a few leads" in connection with the attempt to rob the Bank of America branch in northwest Midland Tuesday morning, according to Kyle Bonath, FBI senior resident agent.

The investigation is continuing, Kyle added Wednesday.

Federal state and Midland law enforcement officers are seeking a man who used his white T-shirt as a partial disguise while attempting to rob the branch bank.

The suspect approached a teller, said, "This is a robbery," and walked off, said Midland Police Sgt. Ken Rogers.

The man did not display a weapon and wore surgical latex gloves, probably to avoid leaving fingerprints, Rogers said.

The attempted robbery of the bank at 10:24 a.m. in the 4300 block of North Midland Drive near Loop 250 is the third attempted bank robbery in Midland since 1992, according to published accounts. The two prior attempts involved Midland American Bank in 1992 and 1996.

No one was injured in this most recent incident, and in fact, there was no robbery, said Larry Burrow, the bank's president.

The suspect has "dirty blond" hair, was wearing a T-shirt pulled up to just below his eyes and was wearing a light-colored jacket and pants of no clear description, Burrow said.

It was not disclosed if a security guard was present at the time.

Midland police, the FBI and the Texas Rangers investigated the crime scene.

Region thankful for rain, would like some more

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A steady, soaking rain that has fallen over much of South Texas this week is a "godsend" for agriculture but won't end the long-running drought, a meteorologist said Wednesday.

"It's been a real boon for the ground moisture because it doesn't run off," said National Weather Service forecaster Joe Baskin. "It's an excellent way to receive rain."

But Baskin and others warn that the region's drought persists.

"This is not the end of the drought. This is actually the fourth year of a drought cycle," said Greg Ellis, general manager of the Edwards Aquifer Authority. "Everybody needs to conserve (water) every single day."

From Tuesday morning to noon Wednesday, 1.10 inches of rain fell at the San Antonio International Airport. Two to three inches fell in areas to the southwest between San Antonio and Laredo.

Most of South Texas below a line stretching from Del Rio to Houston received rainfall, Baskin said.

"It looked pretty bad until the last two or three days here. It's been turning around a little bit," said Maurice Rimkus, a farmer in Uvalde County. "I'm cautiously optimistic."

Rainfall amounts ranging from .9 inches to 2 inches fell in the Uvalde area since early Tuesday, Rimkus said.

By late Wednesday, the weather system producing the rain was moving out of the area southeast toward the Gulf of Mexico, the National Weather Service said.

The Edwards Aquifer, a natural underground reservoir and the source of drinking water for San Antonio, rose slightly to 664.9 feet above sea level Wednesday, up from 664.3 feet Tuesday.

That upward "bump" in the aquifer level cannot be attributed directly to the latest rainfall but to the decreased demand for water on Tuesday during the rain showers, Ellis said.

Rain that fell in the aquifer's recharge zone in north Bexar County, and in Medina and Uvalde counties may not be noticeable for days, he said.

The aquifer remains 3.4 feet below the monthly average for February.

Mandatory water conservation begins when the aquifer level drops to 650 feet.

The fact that this week's rain fell gradually and not in one brief storm means it soaked into the ground well, weather officials said.

"What this does is makes people really smile . . . It's a godsend," Baskin said, but added, "It's just a drop in the bucket for what we need to recover from the drought that we've had."

Texas Agriculture Commissioner Susan Combs has warned that farmers and ranchers are approaching a crisis because of dry conditions. Many in agriculture have not recovered from droughts in 1996 and 1998, when the industry lost $4 billion in direct income, Combs said.

Some ranchers have had to move or sell livestock, or haul in water for their herds, said Combs, who earlier this week toured drought-stricken areas of West Texas.

In South Texas, drought conditions have plagued the region since 1996. Heavy rains in October 1998 produced widespread flooding and improved rainfall totals for the year but didn't end the drought because the water came so fast that much of it was runoff.

Normal annual rainfall is 31 inches in San Antonio, but the city ended 1999 about 14 inches below normal, according to the weather service.

This week's rain should allow farmers in the "winter garden" farm area southwest of San Antonio to begin working on spring crops, Baskin said.

Rimkus, who grows corn, wheat, cotton and other crops on his 1,200-acre farm in Uvalde County, hopes his area will get enough rain this spring so that only supplemental irrigation is needed.

"If you have to irrigate from start to finish," he said, "you don't make a dime on this thing."

Prisoner confesses to 1969 murder case

DALLAS (AP) — Thanks to some divine intervention, Dallas police have filed murder charges in a case that is more than 30 years old.

In letters to Dallas police and to The Dallas Morning News, Robert Jimmy Young, 59, confessed to the Sept. 6, 1969, fatal shooting of 67-year-old Roosevelt Boston.

Young, who is serving a life sentence in a correction facility at Amarillo for another Dallas killing, said in his letters that his religious conversion allowed him to finally confess to the murder.

An arrest warrant on a murder charge for Young was filed Wednesday morning by authorities, said Diana Watts, a Dallas police spokeswoman.

"We never would have solved this if he hadn't come forward," homicide Detective Dan Trippel told the Morning News.

In his letter to The News, dated Jan. 13, Young said he was writing "in the name of Jesus to testify against myself to the glory of God."

"I committed a murder 30 years ago," he wrote. "Please look into the matter. It is a concerned (sic) to society."

Trippel said reports from 1969 indicate that two men walked into a repair bay at Boston's gas station and demanded money. Investigators said at the time that the men quarreled with him and chased him before shooting him in the face with his own gun.

The confession has provided a measure of relief for Thelma Boston, who was left a widowed mother of 12 foster children.

"I thank God he came forward," said Mrs. Boston, 76. "We finally have some answers.

"I still want to know why he did it. ... Was he watching him? Did he plan this? I have a lot of questions."

Roosevelt Boston was the father of nine, stepfather of eight others and foster parent to 12 handicapped children.

Boston became a minister and in 1965 helped his wife fulfill her dream of opening a children's home.

Although Young was not connected to Boston's slaying, he was convicted for a killing that took place eight days later.

Police said Young approached the warden at the Clements Unit in Amarillo with a letter saying he wanted to confess to a Dallas slaying. Young said he feared that someone else might have to serve time for his crime.

Young also gave police the name of his accomplice. Authorities believe the man died in 1985.

Texas Smart Jobs program board responds to critical audit

AUSTIN (AP) — Employees now will have to actually attend job training classes before their employers can receive reimbursement from a state job training program, the governing board of the Texas Department of Economic Development was told Wednesday.

Randall Riley, the agency's deputy executive director, said the Smart Jobs program might one day even begin testing to ensure the trainees learn something in the classes.

"That is one of the things we are looking at," Riley told the board.

With many such small reforms and reorganizations, the department's staff Wednesday addressed most of the findings in blistering report from the state auditor about the department's Smart Jobs program.

The audit found, among other things, that the department could not guarantee that people actually were being trained with the millions of dollars the agency was awarding to employers across the state.

The department distributes Smart Jobs funds by contracting with employers to train new employees or improve the skills of existing workers. Smart Jobs is the department's largest program.

The auditor also said the department owes the Texas Workforce Commission's Unemployment Compensation Fund up to $63 million because it has violated state laws or failed to keep adequate financial records of the $201 million in the Smart Jobs fund.

Mark Langdale, chairman of the agency's governing board, told the other eight board members that the department was seeking clarification on the law from Gov. Bush's office, key legislators and might seek an opinion from the attorney general.

Candidates prepare for primary deluge of a 'national campaign'

By Ron Fournier
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The snowy expanses and quirky electorates of Iowa and New Hampshire behind them, the presidential candidates recast their campaigns Wednesday for a broader horizon of big-state primaries.

"The warmups are over, the national campaign has begun," said Democrat Bill Bradley, reviewing his 0-for-2 record against Vice President Al Gore, including a stinging defeat in New Hampshire's lead off primary Tuesday.

Licking his wounds from a landslide loss in the GOP contest, front-runner George W. Bush said New Hampshire victor John McCain "had the luxury of picking and choosing" the states in which he would compete.

"I'm a national candidate," Bush said, knowing the GOP race will soon become a national campaign.

Working off wildly different primary schedules, the Democratic and Republican candidates set separate courses out of New Hampshire.

Gore and Bradley threw themselves into coast-to-coast travel to prepare for their next Election Day: March 7, when Democrats in 15 states award nearly 40 percent of the convention delegates.

Bush, McCain and the rest of the GOP field, meanwhile, will compete in a handful of February primaries that could reshape the race before their own March 7 showdown.

Strategists in both parties worked Wednesday to determine where to focus their resources.

Democrats have more time to prepare, but less money to spend. Advisers in both contenders' camps, speaking on condition of anonymity, revealed that:

■ Gore expects Bradley to spend $5 million on TV in the March 7 states, and the vice president will be prepared to match it. Bradley aides say their budget is several million dollars higher than Gore expects.

■ Both campaigns realize they don't have enough money to impact voters with widespread major-market TV ads. Gore plans to target his ads to reach Democratic constituencies. To a lesser extent, Bradley hopes to do the same. Shows that attract black viewers, for example, would draw the campaigns.

■ Both campaigns will rely heavily on "free media," news reports about the campaign, mostly on local TV. Gore has the advantage as the front-runner and sitting vice president.

■ Gore plans to beam his way by satellite into states where Bradley is visiting, hoping to piggyback on his rival's coverage.

For trips and TV ads, Gore plans to focus much of his attention on Ohio, California, Georgia and New York, four delegate-rich states loaded with traditional Democratic constituencies — such as minorities and labor members. Exit polls showed Gore doing well among those groups in Iowa and New Hampshire.

Gore strategists say they hope to force Bradley to spend his money on his political base, the Northeast. Polls show Gore doing well in New York, Massachusetts and Maryland.

Even before any bounce he'll get from the New Hampshire victory, the vice president led Bradley 2-1 in California, a state with 367 of the 2,170 delegates needed to clinch the nomination.

A top Bradley strategist said the March 7 campaign is not a state-by-state fight but rather a national effort with the media playing a central role. That's why Bradley abruptly switched position and called for weekly debates against Gore.

Bradley already had an uphill struggle against the party establishment, and his defeats in Iowa and New Hampshire make it even less likely that he can overcome Gore's huge advantages. Democratic strategists said it's time for Bradley to roll the dice, perhaps accepting Gore's offer for a joint agreement to not air TV ads.

On the Republican side, Delaware's primary next Tuesday offers Bush and publisher Steve Forbes a chance to recover from McCain's beating. Forbes, who has gotten little for his personal investment in the race, badly needs a win.

Bush can't afford another loss, thus he's splitting his time between Delaware and South Carolina, which is next up on the primary calendar. McCain is bypassing Delaware to focus on South Carolina's Feb. 19 primary.

Bush strategists plan to use surrogates, and perhaps their own TV ads, to question McCain's conservative credentials and criticize his support of tobacco tax increases.

Learning from their mistakes in New Hampshire, aides say Bush will be less scripted and more open to question-and-answer sessions that served McCain so well.

Bush himself promised to be tougher on McCain. "One of the things that he did a fine job of is making himself look like the outsider. He's the Washington, D.C., person," Bush said.

The Texas governor also plans to tailor his message for a more conservative electorate, as evidenced by his visit Wednesday to the Bob Jones University. Some aides privately objected to the visit, saying the school's segregationist past sends the wrong message from a candidate espousing "compassionate conservatism."

Exultant in victory, McCain's advisers promised no major changes in their message. They do hope to stuff his depleted bank account with donations generated by the New Hampshire victory.

He raised $500,000 from the Internet alone just hours after winning.

McCain needs to defeat Bush again to keep his campaign alive, but South Carolina will be harder than New Hampshire. The Arizonan led Granite State polls for eight weeks and benefited from the state's independent spirit.

McCain advisers suspect that Bush still holds a double-digit lead in South Carolina. And the state tends to back establishment candidates.

As McCain rode a wave of good feeling, a reporter asked Wednesday if he would consider Bush as a running mate.

"Of course," the senator replied. "But I think that doing that after winning one primary is a little presumptuous."

Gore tries to make abortion point after Bradley wins women voters

WASHINGTON (AP) — Under scrutiny for old anti-abortion views, Al Gore hustled off the presidential campaign trail Wednesday in hopes of casting a tie-breaking Senate vote demonstrating he's squarely in support of abortion rights. But Republicans denied him that drama.

The Senate passed a bill on a minor abortion-related matter 80-17, leaving the vice president with no vote to cast and nothing much to do.

"We're never going to let him break a tie vote again," Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott said, mindful of Gore's frequent campaign boasting about the vote he cast last year to pass a gun control bill.

The spectacle played out the morning after Gore's uncomfortably close Democratic primary win over Bill Bradley in New Hampshire. Bradley narrowed Gore's advantage with women by disputing his contention that he had always been for abortion rights and calling attention to dozens of anti-abortion votes or statements Gore made as a Tennessee congressman until the mid-1980s.

Gore's hectic trip to Washington left Bradley smiling. "How did the vote turn out?" asked Bradley, also campaigning in New York. "The vice president didn't cast the tie-breaking vote, I guess. I'd rather be in New York."

As president of the Senate, Gore could have voted to break a tie, and had rushed to Washington from New York thinking the Senate might be deadlocked.

The vice president left New York in such a hurry that he even beat Air Force Two to Washington.

Sleepless from a post-midnight flight out of New Hampshire and a predawn wake-up call for TV talk shows, Gore was glad-handing New York commuters in Grand Central Station when Senate Democratic leader Tom Daschle of South Dakota reached him by cell phone to tell him the vote looked close and could come in a little more than two hours.

En route to LaGuardia airport, aides called from the motorcade to book seats for Gore and a minidetail of Secret Service agents on a US Airways shuttle. Air Force Two's crew members, still at their hotel and not scheduled to fly until the afternoon, could not be mobilized that quickly in a non-emergency.

But Gore arrived on Capitol Hill to find Republicans lining up in favor of the bill.

"Theater," Sen. Bob Kerrey, D-Neb., a Bradley supporter, said of the day's stagecraft. "Just when you thought you've seen it all."

The bill in question would prohibit people found to have violated laws protecting abortion clinics from using bankruptcy proceedings to escape fines and civil judgments. Republicans denied they backed the bill merely to stop Gore from voting, even while making it clear they did not much like the legislation.

Gathering with nearly 20 Democratic senators and representatives before the vote, Gore said: "The larger point we want to make here is women must have the right to choose."

His lead among women was in the teens in some tracking polls a week before the New Hampshire primary but Bradley shrunk the gap as he criticized the vice president for being untruthful on his abortion record and other matters.

Exit polls found Gore won among women by 6 percentage points — 53-47 — and that women made up the biggest part of the Democratic electorate.

While Gore's record in the Senate from 1986 until he moved to the White House in 1993 was scored solidly in favor of abortion rights by activists, his earlier words and votes are at odds with his claim in New Hampshire that he has "always been pro-choice." Under questioning, Gore later admitted he has changed his mind on some abortion matters.

In the House, Gore supported amending the definition of "person" in civil rights legislation to include a fetus. He also opposed Medicaid financing of abortion in all cases — including rape and incest — except where the woman's life was in danger.

In 1984 Gore wrote "It is my deep personal conviction that abortion is wrong ... innocent human life must be protected." And in 1987 he equated abortion with the "the taking of human life," a statement he later retracted.

Rep. Louise Slaughter, D-N.Y., said Gore's previous stance is familiar to abortion-rights activists and she did not expect its resurrection now to resonate much in New York, where Bradley has a chance to wound Gore in the March 7 primary.

The right to abortion "is a very big issue up there, but whatever he used to be, I'm glad he's with us now," she said.

Bradley spokesman Eric Hauser said abortion rights are "such a fundamental principle, and given how strongly pro-life (Gore) was before, he should explain why he changed."

After the day's drama, Air Force Two caught up with Gore at Andrews Air Force Base in Maryland, and he then flew west to campaign in Ohio and California.

At Ohio State University, more than 1,000 students cheered Gore, who said his campaign was "in the end zone." He made no mention of his hectic morning efforts.

Gore accepted the endorsement of Columbus Mayor Michael P. Coleman, who took office on Jan. 1 as the city's first Democratic mayor in 28 years. Looking ahead to the state's March 7 primary, Gore asked students to help him organize in every county. "Right here in Ohio where the rubber meets the ground, where the grass roots begin ... you can make the decisive difference," he said.

Criminal prosecution possible in No Gun Ri case

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Army has begun interviewing Korean War veterans and has not ruled out criminal prosecutions as a result of its investigation of the alleged mass killing of South Korean civilians at No Gun Ri, Army Secretary Louis Caldera said Wednesday.

Likening the situation to war crimes trials following World War II, Caldera told the Associated Press, "We don't want to set a double standard." He added, however, that it is too early to conclude that any actions by American troops at No Gun Ri at the outset of the Korean War rose to the level of war crimes.

Caldera said Army investigators so far have questioned a few dozen U.S. veterans from units that were in the area at the time of the alleged killings, but have not yet talked to those who told the AP last year that a large number of South Korean refugees were gunned down at the hamlet of No Gun Ri.

Before the AP report, which was based on ex-soldiers' statements as well as declassified U.S. government documents, both U.S. and South Korean officials had insisted there was no evidence to support the claims. After the report, however, both the Defense Department and South Korea launched investigations.

Caldera said the Army needs to investigate further before deciding whether criminal prosecutions are warranted.

"We have not ruled that out," he said.

Caldera, the Army's top civilian official, made these other points in a wide-ranging interview with the AP:

■ In searching for more effective recruiting methods, the Army has begun trying to reach more young people who otherwise would move directly from high school into college. Recruiters also will seek out college students who, for financial or other reasons, are willing to leave school to join the Army. With these and other new approaches, the Army's recent slump in recruiting "will turn around for us."

■ The Army's budget for 2001, to be submitted to Congress on Monday, will include $1 billion for an ambitious effort to transform the service into a lighter, more mobile force. Caldera would not discuss specifics, but said some big weapons programs such as the Crusader mobile artillery will be scaled back.

■ Debate over whether gays ought to be allowed to serve openly in the military is unlikely to be settled during the final year of the Clinton administration. Caldera said he supports the current "don't ask, don't tell" approach of letting gays serve so long as they keep their sexual orientation to themselves. Those who say that allowing acknowledged gays to serve would undermine discipline in the military have "valid concerns."

The entire day's program will attempt to determine where our economy has been, where it is heading and what steps we need to take to improve our economic future.

It is our hope that this important forum will set the stage for key discussion and decisions about Midland's future economic opportunities. This conference is an important forum for businesses and key leaders in our community to come together.

The Stars Show the Kind of Day You'll Have: 5-Dynamic; 4-Positive; 3-Average; 2-So-so; 1-Difficult

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Thursday, Feb. 3, 2000:

You spend money easily, but you can also earn a lot of it this year. You are willing to bust your chops to get what you want. Intuition plays a strong role in your decisions, especially concerning funds and communication. You just know where and when to hone in. If you are single, romance could be spicy, but for some reason you might choose to keep it confidential. This summer is when you have the greatest potential to meet your next major heartthrob. If attached, you'll grow closer because of your increased willingness to express yourself. ARIES helps you tell it as it is.

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
★★★★ Maintain your present high profile. Clearly, others respond more than you expected. Your energy triggers all sorts of events. Stay focused on priorities. Your wonderful sense of humor comes out, delighting others.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
★★★★★ Take a gander at the big picture. Don't get locked into limited thinking. Pay attention to what is happening with a friend. Another is very clear about what he feels. Your responses could be all over the place. Understand your responses first.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★★ You gain in one-on-one situations. Others respond to your ideas and leadership. Make sure you have another's support before you approach a boss or someone in the know. You get what you want because of your excellent groundwork.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★★★ You are full of play and fun. Others seek you out for answers. You might have to do some research. Don't hesitate to reach out to others. Listen to a friend, even one with a stringent tone. Bosses load work on you. You can do it!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★★ Dig into work, and you'll succeed. You cruise through tasks because of a close associate's feedback. Be aware that you cannot color this person's thinking. Do your research. Don't necessarily settle for the easy-to-find information.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★★★ Your extremely playful side comes out with a child or loved one. He, however, could misread your animated style. Don't take his response personally. A partner comes through for you in a big way. You work well as a duo.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★ Listen to another's feedback. Be sensitive to a co-worker, even if you don't agree. A different perspective helps you build a better mousetrap. Be willing to start from square one. You'll like the end results.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★★★ Initiate talks; reach out for others. Conversations are animated and important. Your tendency to flirt draws another's jealousy. Be aware of how possessive someone really is. You can no longer avoid the situation. Make time for exercise.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★★ Deal with finances in a firm manner. Family demands an inordinate amount of attention. Stay in touch with what you need, as well. Check out a real estate investment carefully. Take a risk with romance or indulge a child.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★★★ Your actions cause others to be slightly combative, even if you aren't in the mood. Keep communication efficient. Avoid getting into big stories of what might or might not happen. Plan on an outing or adventure with family in the near future.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★★ Much is going on. You have your hands full dealing with others, who keep asking questions, wanting to know what is happening. Be careful with spending. What seems like a good bet right now could look very different in the near future.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★★★ Your high energy parts the waters and clears your path. Others find you extremely strong, but they will pitch in to help you get what you want. Don't do anything halfway. Show your natural sense of commitment. Bring others together.

Neither vulnerable. North deals.

	NORTH ♠ A 7 4 ♡ 6 3 ◇ 8 2 ♣ A Q J 9 5 2
WEST ♠ J 9 6 2 ♡ 8 5 ◇ A 9 5 3 ♣ 8 7 4		EAST ♠ 10 8 5 ♡ K Q J 10 7 2 ◇ 6 4 ♣ K 3
	SOUTH ♠ K Q 3 ♡ A 9 4 ◇ K Q J 10 7 ♣ 10 6

The bidding:

NORTH	EAST	SOUTH	WEST
1♣	1♡	2◇	Pass
3♣	Pass	3NT	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Eight of ♡

The language of defense is in signals. But beware — the enemy could have your line tapped.

The bidding was straightforward enough. Rather than attempt an 11-trick contract at five clubs, South tried three no-trump and everyone was happy with the contract.

West led a heart. East followed with the king to the first trick, which was allowed to hold, as was the continuation of the 10. To the third round of the suit East led the two, strengthening the suggestion that the lowest of the remaining suits was where the defender's entry lay.

However, South was also aware of what was going on. With only five fast tricks available, one of the minors would have to be developed for the extra four tricks, and both offered the chance for that. There was no room for error — if East could gain the lead, the contract would be doomed.

East was known as a pillar of the community, so declarer had ample reason to believe that defender's signals. If that were so, then a pure guess became a sure thing — unless, of course, East held both the ace of diamonds and king of clubs.

Spurning the club finesse, declarer immediately went for forcing out the ace of diamonds. West won and shifted to a club, but declarer rose with the ace and cashed out nine tricks — three spades, one heart, four diamonds and one club.

Ricky Martin meets with Clinton

WASHINGTON — Puerto Rican pop star Ricky Martin stopped by the White House for a tour, but he didn't limit himself to chatting about the books and paintings in the Oval Office.

Martin had a brief, private visit Tuesday night with President Clinton, then met with Clinton aide Maria Echaveste to express his concerns about Navy bombing exercises on the Puerto Rican island of Vieques.

"The substance of the conversation that he had was with Maria," said White House spokesman Joe Lockhart. "The visit with the president was social."

The singer, who has three Grammy nominations this year, paid his visit without fanfare.

MILWAUKEE — A new tune created from lyrics Buddy Holly scribbled in a notebook is being performed nearly 41 years after the rock and roll legend's death in a plane crash.

Milwaukee drummer Victor DeLorenzo, formerly with the Violent Femmes, said he first saw the notebook page in 1996, while visiting in New York with record executive Howard Thompson, who had bought the page at auction.

On a later visit, DeLorenzo said he took a closer look at the writing and decided it was Holly's attempt at lyrics to a song that was never completed.

Applying his own song-writing logic, he deciphered the repeated last line of the chorus as "You get me in dutch."

"My whole idea was not to add anything," DeLorenzo said. When he got home to his studio, he soon had the music for the lyrics written. "It was like my mind was in possession of Mr. Holly for 10 minutes."

DeLorenzo planned to perform it this weekend but said he has no plans to release a recording of the song.

TORONTO — Supermodel Naomi Campbell pleaded guilty Wednesday to an assault charge for beating her assistant while making a film in Canada in 1998.

The 29-year-old Campbell did not attend the court hearing, and her plea was entered by her lawyer, Brian Greenspan. Under an agreement worked out with the prosecution, she expressed remorse for the attack and was released without punishment or a criminal record.

An assault conviction can bring up to six months in prison or a $1,370 fine.

"It was a just disposition," prosecutor Calvin Barry said.

Ms. Campbell admitted beating assistant Georgina Galanis while in Toronto filming the movie, "Prisoner of Love."

Ms. Galanis, 39, briefly worked as Ms. Campbell's assistant during filming. She has filed a $2 million lawsuit against Ms. Campbell in New York that mentions the alleged assault in Toronto.

Supermodel Naomi Campbell pleads guilty to assault for beating an assistant.

Ms. Galanis, who is from the New York City borough of Queens, said in the lawsuit that she worked for Ms. Campbell for nine days. She said Ms. Campbell hit her twice in the head with a telephone, punched her shoulder twice, grabbed her neck and violently shook her head.

HONOLULU — George Harrison's neighbors are now free to cut through his Maui estate to get to the ocean.

The Hawaii Supreme Court upheld a 1993 lower-court ruling that said owners of two neighboring properties could use the easement on Harrison's 60-acre oceanfront parcel on the remote eastern end of the island.

Harrison said in 1993 he would sell the property if the ruling went against him.

"I have to protect my privacy, and there is my need to have security," he said at the time.

In December, a homeless woman was found inside the estate doing her laundry and eating pizza. Her Dec. 23 arrest came a week before Harrison was stabbed in the chest by an intruder in his mansion near London.

Area athletes sign on dotted line

MHS sends four to D-I

With three Division I signees in two years, the Midland High football team showed how far it had come entering this season.

With a District 4-5A best four Division I signees Wednesday, the MHS program showed it truly belonged as a college feeder

"The four signings speaks volumes for the program, how hard we worked and what coach (David) Browning did for the program," said Cotey-Joe Cswaykus, who along with punter Justin Smith, running back Jimmy Smith and tight end Randy Gardner, signed binding letters-of-intent on National Signing Day.

"It paid off, especially for the four of us."

The four made official what they committed to before — to play college football. Cswaykus, a center, will play football at Rice University, Justin Smith will go to Texas, Jimmy Smith to the University of Texas-El Paso and Gardner to the University of North Texas.

Four senior Rebels put pen to paper

By Stewart Doreen

State championships, national championships, Player of the Year awards. There were many reasons the 1999 football season was a special one for Midland Lee fans.

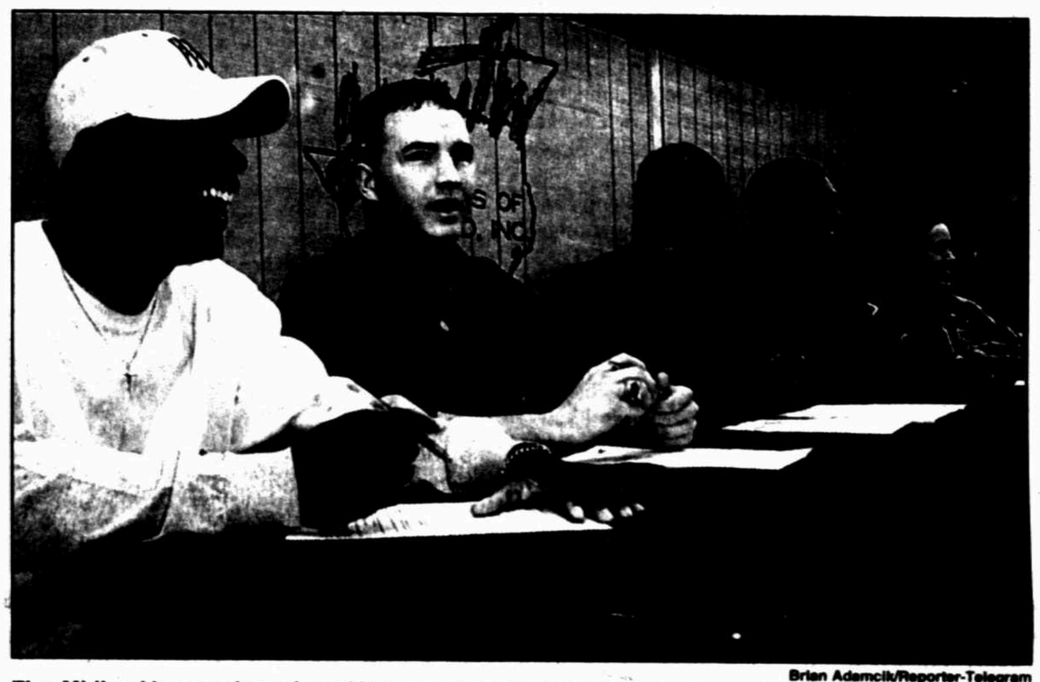

■ Rebs' 2000 opener set/4C

Four of those reasons — linebacker Joe Norman, lineman Steve Subia, defensive back T.J. Glover and running back Clint McNutt — took a another step toward furthering their football career Wednesday, signing official letters-of-intent as a part of National Signing Day.

Norman signed with Texas Tech, Subia with New Mexico State while Glover and McNutt both inked with Angelo State.

It means that Lee head football coach John Parchman has watched 16 players sign on the dotted line on National Signing Day since arriving on the Lee campus in 1995. Twelve of those signed with Division I schools.

"We looked back the other day and we have had 16 sign Division I scholarships and that many more sign with Division II, JCs (junior colleges) and whatnot," Parchman said. "We have a good record of our kids using football to further their education."

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram
Five Midland Lee seniors signed letters of intent on Wednesday to continue their athletic careers in college. Four are football players — from left, T.J. Glover, Clint McNutt, Joe Norman and Steve Subia — and Mario Nordt, far right, will play volleyball at Stephen F. Austin.

Parchman also said that there could be more in the near future. Jon Rogers, Andy Brewster, Jarred Calobreves, Matt Segulja and Colby Marcum are among the players still deciding on their future plans.

Of the players who did sign Wednesday, Norman used it to continue a family tradition. He became the third Norman brother in four years to sign with a Division I school. Older brothers John and Josh signed with Tech and Oklahoma, respectively. Joe was happy to follow in those footsteps.

"A lot of people didn't expect three in a row," Norman said. "I am excited, relieved and anxious at the same time."

"Definitely, it puts pressure on me, everyone wanting me to fill the shoes of my older brothers," Norman added. "There was a lot of pressure during the years for me to do the same thing. I had to do what I had to do to be successful."

Norman was moved to linebacker at the beginning of the season and earned Defensive Player of the Year awards from the Associated Press Sports Editors and the Texas Sports Writers Association.

Two Tall City volleyball stars ink their letters

By Stewart Doreen
Assistant Sports Editor

Midland volleyball players playing at the collegiate level are not a dime a dozen. Matter of fact, to find a dozen Tall City players in our nation's colleges, a person would probably have to go back years — a number of years.

Nordt

That is what made this year's National Signing Day so unusual. Not only did two players — Midland Lee's Marlo Nordt and Midland High's Tiffani King — have scholarship papers to sign Wednesday, but Nordt performed the rarest of feats from a player around this neck of the woods. She signed a Division I scholarship.

King

It made for interesting viewing for the second period class of Lee volleyball coach Connie Alexander.

"The neat thing is for them (her sophomore volleyball class) to see is that (a D-I scholarship) is obtainable," said Alexander of Nordt's signing. "All of these kids have watched Marlo play for a long

District 4-5A has nine players ink Division I letters

By Stewart Doreen
Assistant Sports Editor

For District 4-5A, things were back to normal this year on National Signing Day.

After slumping with a sub-par recruiting year in 1998, 4-5A was back with vengeance in 1999, totaling nine Division I recruits while producing a number of high quality players for other colleges.

Last year, 4-5A sent six players to Division I schools, which was a drop compared to 1996 and 1997 when nine was the total for the district.

The headliners were pretty obvious — Permian's Roy Williams and Abilene High's Arturo "Sneezy" Beltran. Both were big time blue chippers, and both signed with the University of Texas.

"It is exciting for us to have another (player) in the program at Texas," said Abilene High head coach Steve Warren. The first player Warren was referring to was Ahmad Brooks, a starting cornerback for the Longhorns. "They (the Longhorns) have a chance to win a national championship."

Williams was the No. 1 recruit in the district, and one of the top wide receiver recruits in the nation.

Backed by Texas' second straight top-ranked recruiting class,

Andrews sends Woods to Tech, McCain to SWT

By Lee Passmore

ANDREWS — The reputation of Andrews High as one of the more solid football programs in West Texas stayed intact Wednesday morning as two Mustangs signed national letters of intent to play college football.

Geremy Woods signed to play for Texas Tech while Chris McCain also opted to stay in the Lone Star state by signing with Southwest Texas State. While both were key players for the last two Andrews teams which finished a combined 18-4 with a pair of playoff berths, their roles in college could be different from what they played their senior years.

Woods, who decided to commit to Tech two weeks ago, was an All-District 5-4A tailback last season with 1,642 yards and 20 touchdowns. At 6-foot-3, 230 pounds, though, he's more suited to play linebacker, the position Tech wants him to play.

Woods

After visiting Texas A&M, which wanted him to play fullback, Woods made a visit to Tech in mid-January which changed his mind, and the school's honesty, among other things, sold him on going to Lubbock.

"They're not going to tell me I'm going to go in there and start," Woods

Top receivers lead Longhorns' class

By Jim Vertuno

AUSTIN — Staring at a glaring hole at wide receiver, Texas signed some of the nation's best high school talent at the position Wednesday.

Receivers B.J. Johnson of South Grand Prairie, Sloan Thomas of Klein and Roy Williams of Odessa Permian headed a class that includes four Parade all-Americans and six players selected among the nation's best by USA Today.

The group was a solid encore to the Longhorns' 1999 class, widely rated as the nation's best.

"I don't know if everyone expected them to follow up a top-five class with another top-five class, but they did," said Bobby Burton, a recruiting analyst for rivals.com.

It also helped Texas regain some momentum after ending last season with three straight losses, coach Mack Brown said. The Longhorns finished 9-5.

"The staff and I were really motivated when we were leaving the Cotton Bowl to make sure we had a good recruiting year," Brown said. "If we lost momentum in our program, we were going to get it back and I think we did."

Of the 23 players signed Wednesday, the receivers could make the most immediate contributions. All three are expected to compete for playing time next season to replace Kwame Cavil and Ryan Nunez, the Longhorns' top wideouts in 1999.

"All these guys have been successful," Brown. said. "They're really

Bulldogs' Nix commits to play baseball at LSU

By Lee Passmore
Sports Writer

While several of his Midland High football teammates signed their national letters of intent Wednesday to continue playing in college, quarterback Laynce Nix knew he was secure in another sport.

Nix, a two-time All-District 4-5A outfielder for the MHS baseball team, decided last week to commit verbally to Louisiana State University, one of the nation's premier baseball programs. The two-sport standout chose LSU over the University of Texas and Texas Tech to play his college ball.

"I really felt comfortable around the guys," said Nix of meeting his future LSU teammates. "I enjoyed the whole atmosphere. They've got a chance to play in the College World Series every year."

Nix

In his three years at Midland High, the senior has racked up one of the most impressive careers in school history, hitting .377 with 27 home runs and 119 RBIs, with the bulk of those numbers coming over the last two seasons. Nix has been a major figure in

Frank Phillips College at Midland College

When: 6 p.m.

Where: Chaparral Center.

Records: Midland College is 18-5 overall and 6-1 in the Western Junior College Athletic Conference. Frank Phillips College is 8-12 overall and 2-5 in the WJCAC.

Coaches: Midland College — Ron Jones (6th year). Frank Phillips — Cheree Monden (2nd year).

Notes & Quotes: The goal for the Lady Chaparrals going into the second half of conference play is to maintain a consistent level of intensity. MC is coming off an 87-70 win over New Mexico Junior College on Monday but Coach Jones feels that it wasn't his team's best overall performance. "I thought it was similar to Western Texas (an 82-56 win)," Jones said. "I don't think we're playing 40 minutes for whatever reason. I feel we've got to keep our intensity up through the entire game especially heading into Howard." What the Lady Chaps want to avoid in this game is overconfidence considering the first time these two teams played, MC walked away with a 101-53 win. "I think it will benefit us to play well in this game," Jones said... Despite winning their fifth straight game on Monday, the Lady Chaps are unranked for the first time this season. "I know we're one of the 10 best teams in the country," Jones said. "Our schedule has been tough and it should reflect that. But the polls go with the best records and we just kept falling and falling until we dropped out."

Next: The Lady Chaps travel to Howard College at 6 p.m. Monday.

Where: Chaparral Center.

Records: Midland College is 20-3 overall and 7-0 in the Western Junior College Athletic Conference. Frank Phillips is 6-14 overall and 3-4 in the WJCAC.

Coaches: Midland College — Junsie Cotten (1st year). Frank Phillips — Blake Brown (4th year).

Quotes & Notes: The Chaps are coming into tonight's game after one of their most impressive performances of the year with a 114-74 win at New Mexico Junior College on Monday. "That was our best game as far as intensity," said Cotten about the win at NMJC. "As a coach I couldn't have asked for anything better." MC is coming into this game with a national ranking for the first time this season. With the ranking and the fact that the Chaps are undefeated in conference, Cotten knows that everybody will be shooting for Midland College. "The second half of the season is very important," Cotten said. "We want to be the No. 1 seed going into the regional tournament and we have to continue to get better."... Frank Phillips comes into tonight's game off a 92-84 loss in overtime against New Mexico Military Institute. Of the four losses the Plainsmen have, three have come in overtime. "They (Plainsmen) are a scrappy team despite their low numbers," Cotten said. "It's not going to be an easy game. We're going to have to play every minute if not we could get beat. We can't afford any letdowns. I think we are finally starting to play up to our potential."

Midland Country Club honors golfer Rankin

Staff Report

The Midland Country Club Women's Golf Association honored former LPGA golfer and current ABC announcer Judy Rankin during its board meeting Tuesday morning.

Rankin, who started touring at age 17, remembered the time she used to practice on the grounds of Midland Country Club to get ready for the LPGA Tour.

"I knew if I could play well here I was ready for the Tour," Rankin said. "This course in the '70s helped me a great deal."

Rankin also expressed interest in bringing a Pro-Am to the Permian Basin although she said she doesn't want to get too ambitious just yet. She did say, however, that it would be possible to bring a Pro-Am to Midland.

"It's the kind of thing that requires a lot of lead time, probably more than a year," Rankin said. "It's not just something you put together in four months. It is very costly but there are also a lot of ways to raise revenue. I've talked about it for several years and I think it would be a good thing for the city of Midland."

Over the years, Rankin has received numerous awards, and most recently in December, she received the prestigious Patty Berg Award in recognition for her outstanding contributions to women's golf. The award is named after LPGA founder and Hall-of-Famer Patty Berg.

"This is the 50th anniversary year for the LPGA and it had a big gala celebrating the anniversary. The awards from the '99 season were given out during that gala and it was all pretty special," said Rankin, who was surprised about receiving the award.

"I greatly appreciated it and I'm surprised each time because there are a lot of people out there," Rankin added. "I think it attests to the visibility of television. I kid my family sometimes because it seems I'm more well known now for television than when I was a good player. Times have changed, too. We televise golf now and it makes people think they know you. Which is not a bad thing."

The next television broadcast for Rankin comes later this month in the Anderson Consulting World Match Play featuring the top 64 ranked golfers. Rankin said she still very much likes working as a television announcer although the traveling is never easy to get used to.

"If traveling weren't a little bit hard, it would be the best job in the world," Rankin said. "That's probably the only downside (about working in television) is being on the road so much. But I've been traveling since I was 17 years old, so it's a way of life."

Rankin has signed on for two more years with ABC so life as a television announcer will continue for this former LPGA golfer.

time, and they know how much work is involved. She has raised the bar and put that (a scholarship) out as a motivational carrot for them."

"In this area in volleyball, we have not had that many players go on to a Division I school," Alexander added. "We have had several go on and play, but not Division I. They (the younger players) know the work that's involved and the sacrifices involved, and they see it is possible, not just a dream."

The fact is that both players — North and King — lived out respective dreams Wednesday. Nordt signed with Stephen F. Austin. King signed with Central Oklahoma University.

Both realize how big their respective accomplishments were.

"Going to college on a volleyball scholarship in this town is a big opportunity," King said.

Even for Nordt, the District 4-5A Setter of the Year in her junior and season seasons, that was the case.

"In the back of your mind, you are always like, 'I want to go out and do that,'" Nordt said. "Up until the moment I signed, it was (only) a possibility.

"It is a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity to do something like that. To be part of a team in college and pay for your education like that is fantastic."

Nordt will go down as one of the best to play the game from the Tall City. She is that kind of player.

As a junior and senior, Nordt led the Lady Rebels to a 22-2 District 4-5A record, consecutive district titles and spots in the region quarterfinals.

"You could tell she was going to be something special," Alexander said. "The first time I walked into our freshman camp (and saw Nordt), I knew right away."

King was a three-year starter for Midland High, leading the team in kills as a senior and earning 4-5A's Outstanding Hitter Award.

"She does a good job on defense and is not afraid to hit the floor," Midland High volleyball coach Terri McColloch said, "but the fact that she jumps well, can hit the ball hard and hit it straight down is what attracted her to a lot of coaches. And she has had a lot of offers."

At Central Oklahoma, she will get the opportunity to play volleyball with her sister, Elecessya, and some other high-caliber players. King, though, is ready for the challenge.

"The biggest thing for me is it gives me a chance to play at a higher level," King said. "I know I will not stick out as much because the competition level is higher, but this opportunity means a lot, because not everyone has it."

Rangerettes force tie

CRANE — The Greenwood Rangerettes defeated Crane Tuesday night in a District 4-3A basketball game to climb into a first place tie with the Lady Golden Cranes.

Greenwood went on a 25-point scoring spree in the second quarter to race to an early lead. Sally Smith, Shanna Zachery and Elizabeth Havlak all scored 10 points in the win.

Both teams are now 8-1 in league play with only one game left to play. Greenwood will play Monahans at home Friday. If both Crane and Greenwood win Friday, as expected, there will be a district playoff game to determine the district champion, probably on Monday in Monahans.

HOUSTON — Midland's Blaine Hale had a solid weekend debuting his new Kawasaki bike at the Pro Stock Superbowl.

In his first outing, Hale rode the bike to a 7.38 second, 180.5 mph run. Those numbers pleased Hale.

"Even I was shocked at the results," said Hale. "The Kawasaki performed beyond expectations on its first time out this year.

"And the ride felt good. I was very comfortable with the way the bike is set up. The outlook for the season is very positive."

Strambler scores 18

YUMA, Az. — Midland Lee graduate Maurion Strambler came off the bench to score a career high 18 points to lead the Central Arizona College women's basketball team to a recent 70-56 win over Arizona Western Arizona College. The victory kept Central Arizona unbeaten with an 18-0 overall and 13-0 in the Arizona Community College Athletic Conference.

said. "People will tell you that to get you to go there. I just want to do what I can to help the team."

Woods was also among familiar faces when he visited Tech, particularly former Andrews teammate Shaud Williams, who Woods said helped sell him on Tech. Before going to Lubbock, Woods had also visited Purdue and A&M.

However, Woods felt a connection with incoming coach Mike Leach that wasn't there in his other visits.

"The guys up there are really great," said Woods of the Tech campus. "It seemed like I could talk to coach Leach better than I could (Purdue) Coach (Joe) Tiller or (A&M) Coach (R.C.) Slocum."

Woods says that finally putting his name on the dotted line relieves some stress, but that all the time he's spent at Andrews leading up to this has been worth it.

"I feel like I've worked hard and it's finally paying off," said Woods. "I'm going to go to Tech and I'll get a chance to play great teams like Nebraska and Kansas State."

McCain won't play in such a bright spotlight at Division I-AA Southwest Texas, but he doesn't seem to mind. He also considered Angelo State, Midwestern State and Fordham.

The only visit McCain made was to Southwest, though, and that was enough to sell him.

"I'm just relieved I get to go to college for free and I get to play four or five more years of football," said McCain. "We had a bunch of schools call the house, but (Southwest) came to visit. They're breaking new ground there and I want to be part of it."

What isn't certain is where McCain will be contributing, but that's due mainly to his versatility on the field. He was an all-district selection at free safety, where he established himself as the Mustangs' top defensive playmaker, and also started at wide receiver, where he was a threat running reverses. On top of that, McCain also returned kicks and punted.

McCain said he probably won't redshirt his freshman year and is even looking forward to doing as much in college as he did in high school.

"If I can (play several positions) I'm going to play and I think I'm going to do it," said McCain. "The coach who recruited me was real truthful and that had a lot to do with (going to Southwest)."

Another area player will also be attending a I-AA school. Midland Christian linebacker John Paul Usrey is expected to sign a letter of intent to play for Southeast Missouri State on Friday.

Usrey is a 210-pound linebacker and will be making the big move from his play at a private school to the college ranks.

In the only other area signing news on Wednesday came from Big Spring where offensive lineman Stephen Stokes (6-1, 292) signed with Eastern New Mexico.

NIX: MHS star still could be drafted

the team's rise from a district also-ran to a squad which will be shooting for its third straight playoff berth this season.

Those accomplishments were noticed by some of the top programs in the nation, and Nix also visited Texas and Texas Tech while canceling visits to Arizona State and the University of Miami after committing to LSU. Nix figured he could fit LSU's needs better than at some other school.

"They were needing an outfielder and some schools weren't," said Nix.

Nix visited Baton Rouge, La. back in September, but nothing happened in the meantime to change his mind over where to attend school. He can sign a national letter of intent to play at LSU in the second week of April.

Still, Nix mulled over his decision carefully before deciding to become a Tiger.

"It was a real hard decision because I was being recruited real heavily by Texas," said Nix. "I really couldn't make a wrong choice. They're all good schools who all have really strong programs."

The Bulldogs began practicing for their upcoming season on Monday, and prior to Wednesday's workout, Nix was showing his allegiance to his future school by wearing an LSU cap which he had purchased. With the college decision taken care of, Nix can now focus on contributing to an MHS team which has extremely high hopes this season.

"It takes a big load off my shoulders to get this out of the way," said Nix. "I'm not concerned about college or anything else right now, just on Midland High baseball and how good we're going to be this year."

Of course, it's possible that Nix might never set foot on the field at LSU. His numbers are also good enough to impress pro scouts, and a solid senior season at MHS would certainly lead to some organization selecting him somewhere in the June draft.

Nix isn't closing that door either.

"I've talked to a lot of scouts and the possibility is there," said Nix of signing a pro contract. "You've just got to see what happens and what the offer is."

Mavericks owner hosts Rodman in Dallas

DALLAS (AP) — Dallas Mavericks new owner Mark Cuban made Dennis Rodman his house guest during negotiations that could lead to Rodm

rs adjacent to his mansion in Dallas, then arrived late for the Mavericks' game Tuesday night with the Philadelphia 76ers.

Cuban said he didn't take Rodman to the game with him to ensure that nothing would "take away from Michael Finley's moment." Earlier in the day, Finley earned the first All-Star berth of his career.

Elliott exhausted after first practice back with Spurs

SAN ANTONIO — Sean Elliott was exhausted Wednesday after a short practice, his first with the San Antonio Spurs since his kidney transplant in August.

Coming off a 24-point victory over the Los Angeles Lakers, the Spurs practiced for only an hour and did not run full-court scrimmages. Elliott took part in 5-on-5 and 3-on-3 halfcourt drills.

"They took me out the first time I got tired," said Elliott, who is trying to make an unprecedented comeback. "I wanted to push through it, but right now they want to take baby steps."

Despite the team's caution, the clearance to resume full-scale practicing — coming on Elliott's 32nd birthday — marked a huge step in his recovery from a severe kidney disfunction.

Elliott received a kidney from his brother, Noel, last summer, in a transplant operation that has left a deep, 8-inch scar running from the top of his groin to the lower right side of his abdomen.

Doctors did not remove Elliott's own kidneys, which have ceased functioning since the transplant.

"Same old Sean, he just has another kidney," said teammate Malik Rose, who had one of his kidneys removed when he was a toddler. "He's real excited to be back and you could see it."

Elliott had to sign a waiver releasing the Spurs from any liability should he be injured during his comeback. He is making $6.2 million this season and is to make $5 million next season in the final year of his contract.

Team trainers ran tests on Elliott before and after practice and monitored his fluid intake.

Elliott said he did not absorb any hard hits during the drills, even though his teammates said they would not shy away from physical contact.

Morris' agent denies any wrongdoing by Bam

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Former Kansas City Chiefs running back Bam Morris "is an innocent party" in a federal investigation into an alleged widespread drug ring, his agent said Wednesday.

"If I thought my client was involved in criminal activity, we wouldn't be talking to the press," Terry Lavenstein said from his Baltimore office.

"I'd like to get his name cleared as soon as possible."

Morris, who unexpectedly announced his retirement from the NFL last month, and teammate Tamarick Vanover were mentioned in an affidavit filed last week in connection with drug distribution charges lodged against a Kansas City man, Gregory Burns. Vanover's representative didn't return calls from The Associated Press.

The affidavit said the distribution ring stretched from Missouri to California and Mexico. Burns, described in the affidavit as a personal assistant to Vanover, was alleged to be a major supplier of marijuana and cocaine in the Kansas City area.

MHS: Four Bulldogs sign

(From 1C)

"They are first-class kids," Browning said. "Every one of these guys are class individuals, top-notch students and will be a credit to the universities that they are going to. Two want to be engineers, one a doctor and the other is undecided."

They were also part of a MHS team which recorded the program's second best season since 1972, beat Odessa Permian for the first time since 1973, and took the state champion Midland Lee Rebels to the limit in the best game in the district.

Now, four players will go on to the next level.

"This is a big honor to have four kids from the same school at Division I colleges," Gardner said. "Coach Browning has been pushing us for three years to get us to this point."

Justin Smith was the first to commit, doing so long before the season started. Since then, it has been easy for him. Smith is going where he wants.

"It has been a long time sitting around and waiting (for Signing Day)," Smith said. "But it has been good. I probably would not have liked getting all the phone calls. This is the place I wanted to go. More than anything I wanted to go to Texas."

Smith joins two other former MHS greats — Jeremy Hernandez and David Leaverton — who have gone on as punters at the Division I level. Hernandez punted at Texas Tech and Leaverton is at Tennessee.

"I believe he will be one of the leading punters in the nation," Browning said. "He has that type of leg and that type of work ethic. He seems to perform well in bigger games."

That may be a good thing. Where he is going, there may be plenty of big games in the future. Smith is part of one of the more heralded recruiting classes in the nation, if not the best.

"It will be fun to be a part of that, to ride on the tail end of that," Smith said. "There will be some good athletes."

For Cswaykus, signing on the dotted line is not signing his life away.

To the contrary, Cswaykus is attending one of the top academic schools in this part of the country. He will major in biomedical engineering.

He will also play football, which he has done pretty well for MHS. This past season, he was a first-team all-district performer.

"He is probably one of the top three offensive linemen I have coached at the high school level, and I have been around some awful good ones who were all-Americans at colleges when they left," Browning said. "We tend to play the best athlete on the offensive line at center. He has to be smart and also have football savvy. He (Cswaykus) has got all of those things."

Cswaykus is just elated with the opportunity that is in front of him.

"It (signing) is always something that is in the back of your mind, but you really don't expect it to happen," Cswaykus said. "It is such a big honor."

For Jimmy Smith, hard work and a great senior season are the big reasons for his opportunity to play in El Paso.

"He is one of those kids who has been an overachiever all his life," Browning said. "He is a talented athlete, no question about it, but when he first came (to the program), he might not have been quite as big or quite as quick as some of the kids. He has worked countless hours to make himself what he is."

Smith, who will major in mechanical engineering, has dreamed of this day for a long time.

"You go through high school dreaming to play at the next level, especially if you love football that much," said Smith, who will be the fourth Midlander on the UTEP roster. Former MHS standouts Weldon Cooks and Camar Jackson and former Rebel Derrick Walker are currently playing for the Miners. "I want to play football and want to go get my education, so I will be ready when I am through with college."

Gardner was a very recruitable player. At least the Dallas Morning News and Houston Chronicle thought so, making him one of the top 100 recruits in the state. A reason was his athleticism.

"He is a good all-around athlete," Browning said. "He plays football, basketball, is a 6-foot-6-inch high jumper and played baseball through his junior year.

"He turned into a lot tougher football player, never shied away from contact and made some big plays for us during the course of his career."

Gardner was the last Bulldog to commit, picking Denton as his home for the next four years. He will join a few Midlanders — former teammate Luke Conder and Lee standouts Fred and Corry Pertile and Brian Boyd — there.

"It (the recruiting process) went good for me," Gardner said. "When you feel comfortable with where you are going, you will have a great time."

San Antonio MacArthur will meet Austin Westlake - the state's winningest program in the 1990s - in the first game of the tripleheader at 11:30 a.m. Class 4A state champions Texas City (Div. I) and Stephenville (Div. II) will play in the second game at 3:15 p.m., with USA Today national champion and two-time defending 5A state champion Midland Lee battling Victoria Memorial in the finale at 7:15 p.m.

Memorial High School will be the consolidation of Victoria High School and Stroman High School, which becomes effective with the 2000-2001 academic year.

Texas Football magazine announced the participants in the 2000 H-E-B Texas Football Classic Tuesday morning in conjunction with the UIL's Realignment Show on Fox Sports Net.

"It's truly a great honor and our selection to play in the Classic places us in an elite group," said Lee coach John Parchman, who was honored last month as USA Today's national Coach of the Year. "For our community and our kids, this is great exposure across the state of Texas to kickoff the upcoming season."

The inaugural H-E-B Texas Football Classic featured San Antonio rivals Churchill vs. Clark, Humble vs. Westlake and Converse Judson vs. Katy.

Participating schools in the H-E-B Texas Football Classic will begin reserved ticket sales in the coming weeks. Tickets to the general public will go on sale May 1 through the Alamodome Box Office and Ticketmaster outlets.

Kickoff times are tentative and may be changed to accommodate live television. Participants in the 2001 H-E-B Texas Football Classic will be Corpus Christi Carroll, Grapevine, Hays Consolidated, La Marque, San Antonio Madison and Schertz Clemens. Specific matchups for the 2001 H-E-B Texas Football Classic will be announced in December.

Parchman said that Lee still needs one game to fill a 10-game schedule. Lee now has non-conference games with Victoria Memorial, Longview, El Paso Franklin and El Paso Coronado, but has open dates for Week 2 and Week 3. The H-E-B Classic is played on Sept. 2, which is declared Zero Week for UIL schools, meaning that teams may elect to play on that date or not. Parchman needs to fill two of those three weeks and will have an open date on the other.

Tentative list of non-district games for District 4-5A teams. (Games are not necessarily listed in order of play).

Abilene High: Fort Worth Dunbar, Lubbock Monterey, Irving, Killeen Ellison and San Angelo Central.

Abilene Cooper: Lubbock Coronado, Killeen, Killeen Ellison, San Angelo Central and Amarillo High.

Odessa Permian: Del Rio, Carrollton R.L. Turner, Brownwood, Amarillo High and Lubbock Monterey.

Odessa High: Dallas Skyline, San Angelo Central, Lubbock Coronado, Copperas Cove and one to be named.

Midland High: San Angelo Central, Lubbock Monterey, Lubbock Coronado and two to be named.

Midland Lee: Victoria Memorial, Longview, El Paso Franklin and El Paso Coronado and one to be named.

LEE: Pair of Rebels get D-I deals

(From 1C)

"Joe was a surprise guy for us," Parchman said. "He had not grown and had some injury problems going into the year, and then he came back 20-30 pounds heavier and grown a couple inches. We made a position change with him and things fell right into place. We are proud that the position change worked good."

Subia is a 340-pound machine who devastated many a defensive lineman en route to first-team all-state honors.

"We have known all along (he would go Division I)," Parchman said. "He would have been a Division I prospect a year ago. He is a big tough lineman who brings a tough mentality to the game. We are proud he is going to New Mexico State. They run our style of offense and Steve is comfortable with it."

Subia joins the likes of other first-team all-state linemen like Jake Young, K.C. Jones and Rex Richards, who played at the Division I level.

"I just have the attitude that I wanted to be the best, and hopefully, when I get up there, I will be the best," Subia said. "If you are not a little scared, there is something wrong. However, if you want to be the best, you have go against the best."

Glover always planned on a collegiate athletic career. However, he assumed track, not football, was the sport it would happen in.

"I never expected to step on the football field after high school. Going into this year, I thought it would be track," said Glover, who qualified for state in the triple jump as a sophomore. "Now, it is football. That is something I love and live for. This is a big dream that every kid dreams of."

Glover, like Norman, helped fill serious holes in the Lee defense left by the graduation of 10 starters of the 1998 team.

"He was another surprise," Parchman said. "We moved that young man over there (to defense). He got off to a ragged start, but he turned into a spark plug that got us going."

McNutt also will play his college football in the Concho City, and coaches there can only hope they get the same type of weapon Parchman enjoyed.

"He could have probably started at five or six different positions for us and did play five or six positions," Parchman said. "He is one of the most versatile and enthusiastic players we have ever had at Lee. He would do anything to help the team win and is very unselfish. He was born to play the game."

McNutt, who was the last of the Rebels to decide on a school, figures Angelo State will be a good fit.

"This is a very happy time for me," McNutt said. "It is an honor to go to the next level and play after high school. Not every one gets the opportunity to do it, so we are the lucky ones."

'HORNS: Texas pulls in top receivers

(From 1C)

sharp and I can't wait to watch them play.''

Brown said it may be the greatest collection of talent he's ever signed at one position.

''To have three guys you feel are as good as anybody in the country is a positive,'' he said.

Brown was impressed all of them signed with Texas while knowing the others would, too.

''They never cared about the competition,'' he said.

Johnson finished his career at South Grand Prairie with 135 catches for 3,059 yards and 42 touchdowns. Thomas was the Houston Chronicle's 1999 offensive player of the year with 1,489 all-purpose yards and 17 touchdowns. Williams had 100 career receptions for 2,319 yards and 29 touchdowns for Permian.

''I think the fact that Texas was going to sign B.J. Johnson and Roy Williams made for a good class, but then they were able to add someone like Sloan Thomas,'' Burton said. ''That's just the kind of year they've had.''

The Longhorns signed five players from outside the state of Texas, the most since 1995 when eight players, including Heisman Trophy winner Ricky Williams, were from other states.

Even with the recent recruiting success, the Longhorns have not yet reached the depth of talent enjoyed by other programs such as national champion Florida State, Brown said.

''We're still trying to fill needs instead of building depth,'' he said.

Texas also signed five linemen and three others labeled as ends, four players listed as backs and athletes, three linebackers, two kickers and a quarterback — Parade all-American Chance Mock of The Woodlands. Mock passed for 1,441 yards and 16 touchdowns with six interceptions as a senior.

The other Parade honorees were running back Arturo ''Sneezy'' Beltran of Abilene, who rushed for 2,268 yards and 28 TDs in 1999, and Austin Lanier defensive lineman Sonny Davis.

Davis, who was injured part of last season, had 72 tackles in 1999 and 19 sacks over the last two seasons.

Two players, lineman Stevie Lee and back Phillip Geiggar, both of Shreveport, La., have already enrolled in school and will be eligible for spring practice which starts Feb. 29.

DISTRICT: 4-5A draws recruiters' eyes

Williams is ready to go.

"We will have (South Grand Prairie receiver) B.J. (Johnson), Sneezy, (Klein wide receiver) Sloan (Thomas), (Texas quarterback Chris) Simms, and a big line. I don't know," quipped Williams about the prospects of an explosive offensive future at Texas.

Beltran and Williams were not the only 4-5A players to pick Texas. Midland High punter Justin Smith also made UT his pick.

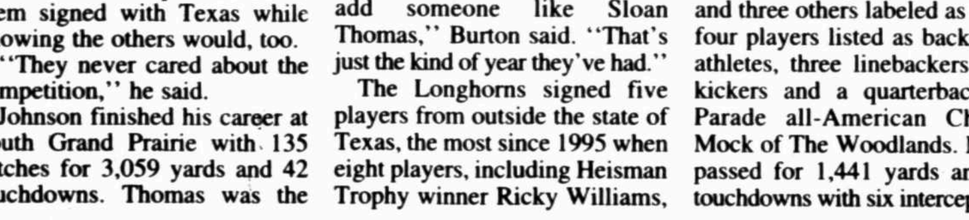

Other Division I signees included Lee's Steve Subia (New Mexico State) and Joe Norman (Texas Tech), Odessa High's Taylor Casey (North Texas).

Midland High added another three — Randy Gardner (North Texas), Jimmy Smith (Texas-El Paso) and Cotey-Joe Cswaykus (Rice). MHS' four D-I signees were the most in the district.

There is also quality to go with quantity. Beltran, Williams, Justin Smith, Casey, Gardner and Subia were ranked among the top 100 recruits in the state by the Dallas Morning News.

Crude oil slips

Crude retreated on concern that evidence of the latest drop in U.S. supplies would prompt a response by the United States or world oil producers to replenish inventories.

March intermediate crude fell 67 cents to $27.55 a barrel; March heating oil fell 1.66 cent to 75.53 cents a gallon; March unleaded gasoline fell .99 cent to 76.68 cents a gallon; March natural gas rose 6 cents to $2.759 per 1,000 cubic feet.

In London, March Brent crude fell 46 cents to $25.92 on the International Petroleum Exchange.

Metals surge

Platinum futures stormed to a nearly 10-year high and palladium hit its most expensive price ever Wednesday on the New York Mercantile Exchange as the clamor continues for metals kept in tight supply by Russia.

Prices for platinum and palladium, both in big demand for industrial use, have been building steadily during Russia's lengthy absence from the market for political and bureaucratic reasons.

Platinum for April delivery rose 3 percent Wednesday on the New York Mercantile Exchange, settling up $13.30 at $466.20 an ounce — the highest since 1990. March palladium rose $9.70 to $502.25, the latest in a series of all-time highs reached in recent weeks.

Dollar up

LONDON — The U.S. dollar rose against most other major currencies in European trading today.

The euro was quoted at 97.23 cents, down from 97.32 cents late Tuesday, but above its record low of 96.68 cents reached Tuesday in European trading. The euro traded at 97.58 cents at midday in the New York.

Other late dollar rates in Europe, compared with late Tuesday, included 108.40 Japanese yen, up from 107.66; 1.6561 Swiss francs, up from 1.6523; and 1.4450 Canadian dollars, down from 1.4469.

The British pound was quoted at $1.6041, down from $1.6142.

In midday trading in New York, the dollar bought 108.43 yen, and the pound was worth $1.6050.

Currencies of the 11 countries participating in the euro are no longer traded separately, though they remain in use. Based on late euro rates, the dollar was worth 2.0107 German marks, up from 2.0089; 6.7437 French francs, up from 6.7395; 2.2656 Dutch guilders, up from 2.2642; and 1,990.61 Italian lire, up from 1,989.39.

Gold rises

Oil industry hopes to make tax relief permanent

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

Emergency legislation passed by the Texas Legislature to eliminate the severance tax on oil production lasted only three months last year, but members of the industry hope to see it permanently eliminated.

The legislation, which temporarily eliminated the tax on wells making 15 barrels or less when oil prices fell below $15 applied to production last January, February and March, explained Morris Burns, executive vice president of the Permian Basin Petroleum Association, because oil prices began to rebound.

But local producers say the relief was beneficial, and permanent elimination of the tax would benefit not only them but the community.

"We got a reimbursement of the tax we had paid for 60 days, and that was beneficial to us," said Don Sparks, president of the independent production company Discovery Operating.

Such legislation, on a national basis, would most likely not be as beneficial, said Bob Gallagher, president of the New Mexico Oil and Gas Association.

"Certainly states have a better opportunity to affect the operations in their state," he said. "On a federal level, it would only affect federal leases. There are other mechanisms that would help."

The Texas Legislature last spring passed an emergency bill that temporarily eliminated the 4.6 percent severance tax on crude oil production and 7.5 percent tax on natural gas production on marginal or low-producing wells.

"A lot of the wells we operate are marginal wells, so that legislation had an impact on those wells," Sparks said. "In times of low product prices, operating costs can be more than your revenues, therefore that additional 4.6 percent revenue can make all the difference in the world."

State Sen. Teel Bivins will address the topic at the PBPA's monthly meeting in two weeks, Burns said.

Burns said Bivins has proposed reducing the tax on a sliding scale based on prices, while other legislators are looking at other ways to reduce or completely eliminate the tax.

"It produces such a small amount of the state budget, but when oil prices are high, eliminating it is hard to do," Burns said. "It's going to be difficult to pass a complete elimination in one bill. We in the industry have talked about phasing out the tax over several years, say a half percent over 10 years, to wean the state off that revenue. It's hard to completely chop off the tax because the state has to look elsewhere to replace that revenue."

Sparks said that the representatives from Dallas, Austin, San Antonio and Houston areas would be key to implementing any permanent severance tax changes.

Gallagher said that one national tool to help the oil industry would be tax incentives that states could also implement.

"The states have come to understand that by providing incentives, they have created new revenue streams," he said.

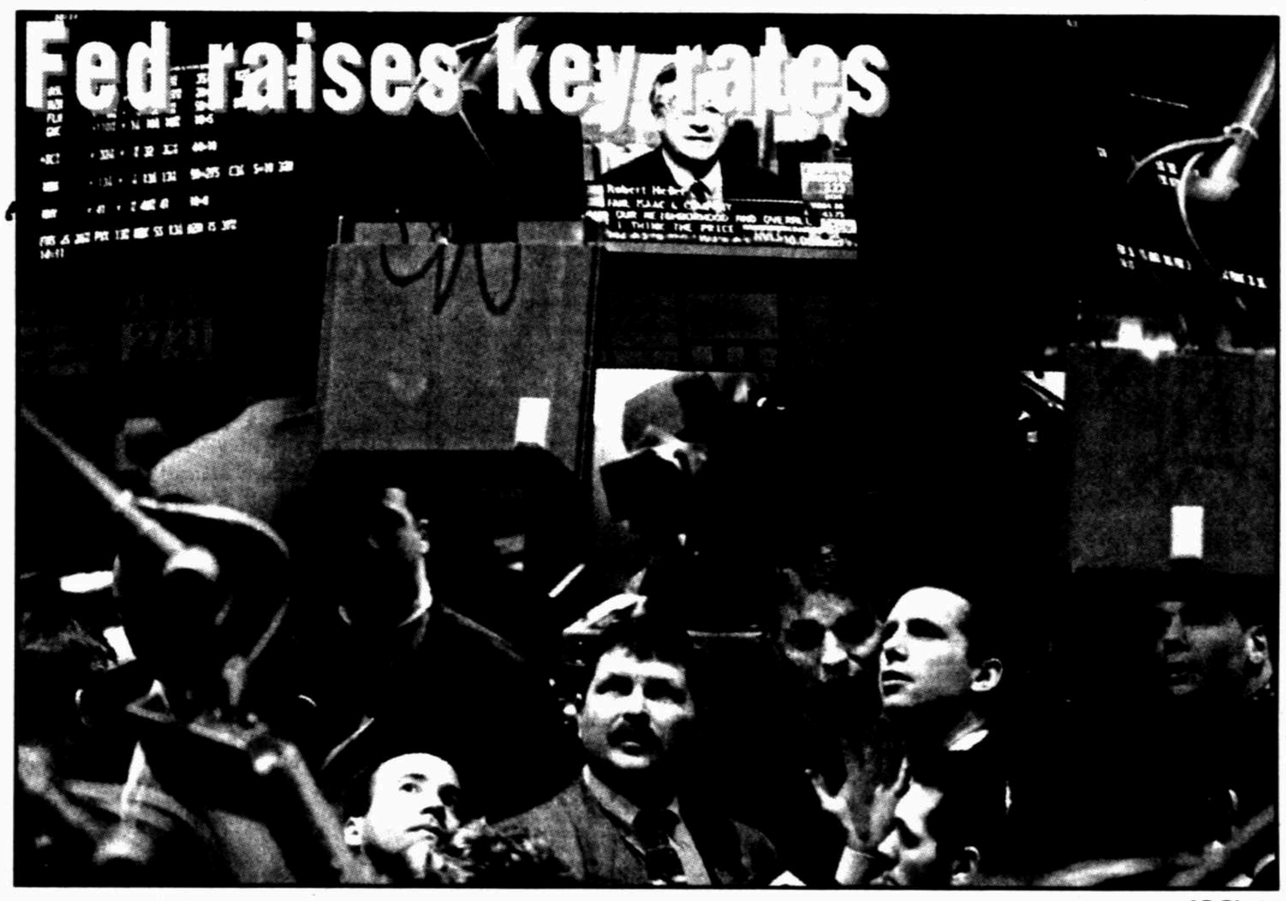

But getting Congress to understand that is another matter, he said.

"The decision makers in Washington are not as well informed about the industry as they should be," he said. "We all agree that $28-$29-$30 barrel oil may be too high for the economy, but $8 to $10 oil is too low. Congress needs to be educated that we need to end the highs and lows and have stability. It would be good for the industry and for the economy."

Permanently eliminating the severance tax, agreed Sparks, would be beneficial.

"That additional revenue could prevent certain wells from being shut in and enhance the dollars in the local community," he said.

"It would pass on the benefits the rest of the state is seeing from technology. It would be nice for the state's oil producing areas to get the boost to their economies that the rest of the state is seeing."

NYSE traders listen to a televised announcement Wednesday in New York that the Federal Reserve Open Market Committee raised a key interest rate up a quarter point to 5.75 percent in an effort to slow the economy and keep inflation from becoming a problem. The Fed action to boost its federal funds rate, the interest that banks charge each other, was quickly followed by announcements from major banks around the country that they were raising their prime lending rate a similar quarter point to 8.75 percent, the highest level for this benchmark consumer and business rate since late 1995. Wall Street, which had been worried that the central bank might feel the need to raise rates by a half-point, turned in a mixed performance Wednesday with the Dow Jones industrial average down 38.85 points at 11,003.20.

Odessa SWB center close to completion

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Southwestern Bell's Business Inquiry customer service center, being installed in the former AT&T building at 3901 Penbrook, is steadily becoming operational.

Southwestern Bell's area manager in Odessa, Guy Andrews, said 44 new employees already are in the building and training classes are ongoing. Three classes, of 10 people each, are being conducted simultaneously, he said.

Response to the new center, which is expected to create 250 new jobs, has been strong, Andrews said. "We held three job fairs before we started remodeling the building and had 500 applicants."

According to Andrews, the new employees will be phased into the building while it is being renovated. The remodeling includes all new furnishings and cubicles.

Dennis Clayton, director of economic development for the Midland Chamber of Commerce, said that such centers are one of the target industries he tries to attract to Midland, along with industrial manufacturing concerns.

"They have decent beginning salaries, they usually offer benefits and bonus plans or incentive plans for performance," he said. "The Southwestern Bell center has higher wage positions, so those are prime jobs to attract to a community."

Clayton estimated that between 30 to 50 percent of the business relocation or expansion inquiries he receives are from such customer service centers, and those inquiries are equally divided between in-state companies and out-of-state companies.

SWB is spending $2.3 million to establish the center, which will handle billing inquiries from customers in southern Texas. Employees also will be involved in the sale of company products.

Annual payroll for the call center is $6.8 million and Perryman Consultants estimate the economic impact of the new jobs is $63.8 million annually and will create 638.8 new and sustained jobs.

SWB received $1 million in economic assistance from the Odessa Development Corp. to buy the AT&T building. The building, previously housed 140 employees, before closing in November 1998 and moving its operations to San Antonio. SWB is spending $1.5 million with local contractors, including Cooper Construction and Permian Air Conditioning, to renovate the building.

Four of Ector County's taxing entities also have agreed to abate $55,222 in taxes over a five-year period, equaling $11,044 a year. SWB, which pays more than $2.5 million annually in municipal fees, county, city and school taxes, will pay the Ector County Independent School District $110,000 during that five-year period.

Consulting firms crop up to serve niche markets

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

The collision of the worlds of entrepreneurship and regulation is producing a rapidly growing number of consulting companies serving niche markets.

"According to HR Magazine, consulting is the fastest growing business of the decade, with a growth of 16 percent a year," said Melissa Zrubek, "and human resources is a important part of that trend."

Ms. Zrubek has founded HR Insights, a consulting company that existing businesses can contract with to perform their human resource needs. Her target customer is small business with a few employees to large companies, to corporations who have field or satellite offices in the area but HR departments at corporate headquarters.

Her company, said attorney Dusty Gallivan, who specializes in employment law, is an example of "as society becomes more specialized, more niche companies are forming to serve those who don't have the facilities or resources to have a human resources department."

He pointed out that specialized niche companies free up resources for their clients, letting the client focus on their core business. Small businesses are usually founded by one or two people or a small group with one product and they don't want to be burdened with these side issues, Gallivan said.

Ms. Zrubek said she comes from a family of entrepreneurs and has a background of working for small businesses and in personnel.

She founded HR Insights because "I saw how, if companies would take a more proactive approach to their employees, they could increase productivity and their profits," she said.

Don Klinkenberg, telecommunications manager for Access Technology Services, said the ability to outsource human resources tasks to another company would help his firm "since we don't have an HR staff per se."

Access Technology sells and services personal computers built to a customer's specifications and also provides telecommunications service and telephone systems.

The company has already expanded 50 percent, he said, as it tries to become a "one stop telecom shop offering computer, telephone, wiring, Internet and networking service."

He noted that "human resources is getting more important as employees become more important to a company."

Lee Wallace, human resources administrator for Henry Petroleum and a board member of the Human Resource Professionals of the Permian Basin, said, "People are the most important thing in a company. If you don't have the right people and if you don't take care of them, the company won't succeed."

Rather than paying a salary to a new employee or adding human resources duties to the workload of an employee, she said, companies can hire her to perform some or all of their human resources tasks, from conducting background checks to screening resumes and performing preliminary interviews to helping improve employee retention.

"For a sole proprietor like myself, if I were to hire someone I'd have to advertise the job, read resumes and conduct interviews. That's time away my work," Gallivan said.

Ms. Wallace pointed out that it is easier for consulting companies to stay current on rules and regulations affecting their particular niche.

"Things are so much more complicated now, with state and federal regulations like the Family Medical Leave Act and Equal Employment Opportunity Compliance," she said.

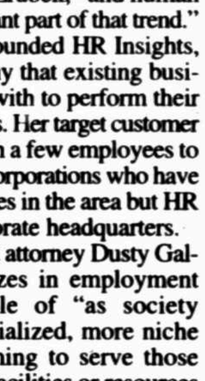

Ms. Zrubek noted that "one mistake can shut down a business. If you hire the wrong employee and you get sued because he hurt another employee or a customer, you can be shut down."

Communications at the speed of the Internet

By M. Ray Perryman

Reflecting over the many momentous accomplishments of the past century, I'm hard pressed to name any single invention of more potential importance for the next 100 years than the Internet. Over the last decade, this once dull, text-based network for college professors and computer nerds has exploded into a dynamic community encompassing 55 percent of Americans. With the click of a mouse, we become citizens of cyberspace; we access news, trade stocks, buy anything we want, send emails to friends, or even make new friends through myriad chat rooms.

Perryman

Internet use has grown in tandem with U.S. economic news. Current estimates of the size of the cyber-economy peg it at over $500 billion. Between 1998 and 1999, Internet revenues increased by 68 percent; if growth continues at just half this pace, the Internet economy will exceed the current value of the health care sector by the end of 2002. Such statistics show that the Internet is more than just an aberration of the '90s. It is a permanent fixture in our way of life, an invention with an increasingly profound role in reshaping the economy of this century — indeed, this millennium!

Like many other sectors and industries, telecommunications has found itself struggling to keep up with the revolutionary innovations of the Internet. The fiber optics and invisible airwaves of telecommunications comprise the essential backbone for Internet traffic. But, as many of us discover when we've taken the Internet plunge, the "information superhighway" often feels more like rush hour in Manhattan. Despite advances in technology, pesky busy signals and painfully slow connections are still a reality. These problems are compounded by the increasingly multimedia nature of the Internet, creating many challenges for telecommunications companies as they accommodate the digital age.

Such obstacles are not insurmountable, however. Technologies such as cable modems, fiber optics, and digital wireless access show tremendous promise as high-speed, high-volume connection methods. Already in limited use today, such technologies will draw millions more to the Internet as competition and growing demand lead to lower access prices. The continued merging of Internet service companies with communications and media companies (as in the recent AOL/Time-Warner merger) will also provide additional incentives for investment in Net technology.

As the worlds of telecommunications and cyberspace become more closely intertwined, possibilities for the Internet will skyrocket. With millions of consumers plugging in at the speed of light, high-tech dreams will become commonplace. High-quality video transmission will allow business people to collaborate with their partners around the world without so much as leaving the office. Long distance calls may eventually become an artifact of the past as the Internet, making distance irrelevant, brings even the farthest location right to our doorstep.

These are not the starry-eyed dreams of an idealist. Many of these developments are already taking place: some manufacturers incorporate email and web access into their cellular phones, and some Web sites allow long distance calls via the Net — for free. Such stunning innovations are undoubtedly forcing telecommunication companies to rethink their roles in the Internet Economy.

Those that succeed in this quest will be rewarded with great prosperity; those that don't may find themselves stalled on ramps of the information superhighway, testaments to the one true constant of our society — the relentless pace of change.

Dr. M. Ray Perryman is President and Chief Executive Officer of The Perryman Group (www.perrymangroup.com). He also serves as Institute Distinguished Professor of Economic Theory and Method at the International Institute for Advanced Studies.

Latino life in Huntington Park takes shape as new 'California dream'

By James Sterngold
N.Y. Times News Service

HUNTINGTON PARK, Calif. — At one time, Pacific Boulevard was where the residents of this hip-pocket city in southeast of downtown Los Angeles came to realize their fondest middle-class desires. The boulevard was the glorified ideal of the postwar California dream, an all-white working-class Beverly Hills with swank department stores, auto dealerships and first-run cinemas.

Jack Zagha recently sat in the home-furnishings store his family has run on Pacific Boulevard for nearly 50 years. He recalled those days as so distant as to be almost an illusion, all but blotted out by memories of how white flight and indoor shopping malls later turned the once-vital street into a cliche of urban despair.

Then he interrupted his reverie to exchange a few words in Spanish with a busy sales clerk and marvel at the new California dream taking shape around the racks of towels, curtains and bedspreads.

Today, thick crowds again stroll past his store, the Home Shop, but they rarely get past the maze of $2 and $5 tables clustered near the doors. The steady flow of sales is transacted almost entirely in cash. Conversations are in Spanish, still carrying the accents of the regions in Mexico from which most of Huntington Park's new residents emigrated.

"We're still in business, but just about everything else has changed," Zagha said. "Times aren't bad."

If there is a vantage from which to observe the concluding chapters of Los Angeles' transformation into the country's largest Hispanic-dominated metropolis, Huntington Park may be it. It provides a glimpse into the region's rapid ethnic makeover not because it is a reflection of the city as it will be, but because it is the gateway to that future.

Indeed, Huntington Park is not a perfect mirror of the Los Angeles region; incomes are generally lower and it is far more homogeneous — it is close to 100 percent Hispanic — than the diverse, increasingly affluent neighborhoods in the surrounding areas. But it plays a central role in the region because it is one of several neighborhoods where Mexican immigrants often come first, one of the places where they begin their pursuit of the dream that brought many here: a middle-class way of life. Huntington Park has become a sort of citizenship incubator.

Huntington Park is not a perfect mirror of the Los Angeles region; incomes are generally lower and it is far more homogeneous — it is close to 100 percent Hispanic — than the diverse, increasingly affluent neighborhoods in the surrounding areas. But it plays a central role in the region because it is one of several neighborhoods where Mexican immigrants often come first, one of the places where they begin their pursuit of the dream that brought many here: a middle-class way of life. Huntington Park has become a sort of citizenship incubator.

And the impact is being felt. As of 1998, Los Angeles County had 9.6 million residents, of which 44 percent were Hispanic and 33.5 percent white. Government experts predict that in 2010 the Hispanic population will make up slightly more than half of the expected population of 10.6 million.

"What you learn from looking at a place like Huntington Park, and I'm not sure people appreciate this, is how upwardly mobile most Latinos are," said Jack Kyser, the chief economist at the Los Angeles County Economic Development Corp., a nonprofit organization. "This city is where the newcomers learn how to do that. It is a stepping stone into the future of Los Angeles, and that's not something you would have expected if you looked at the city a couple of decades ago."

Jose Legaspi, a major real estate broker and developer in this part of Los Angeles, added: "This is a point of entry for the Latino population in Los Angeles, not a destination. This is where the education begins for a lot of people. Huntington Park has been where people aspiring to the middle class get a leg up."

Decades ago, Huntington Park thrived because it was the terminus of an electric streetcar line — since shut down — and had a wide downtown boulevard that and attracted shoppers from all over the region. It was where people, many of them white immigrants from the Midwest, spent weekend afternoons.

It was, however, a residential oasis amid one of the most heavily industrialized areas of Los Angeles County. Just to the west was the Watts section of Los Angeles, which was traditionally a large, and largely poor black community resting, literally, on the other side of a double set of railroad tracks that for years defined the borders of ethnic peace.

Then about 30 to 40 years ago, Huntington Park went into a steep decline, a victim of industrial cutbacks, white families nervously fleeing the proximity to a suddenly restive black community and the devastation on the boulevard caused by the emergence of indoor shopping malls. When the car dealerships left, the city's tax base went into a tailspin.

Tom Jackson, a resident for more than 40 years and a city council member for 31 years, said that many white families left reluctantly, but that when they did were often more inclined to find Hispanic home buyers, rather than black ones. "You're talking about 30,000 people who just pulled up and left," Jackson said. "It was a racism thing."

Huntington Park's subsequent phoenix-like rise has taken off with the soaring numbers of immigrants from Mexico. The city, which covers a little more than three square miles, saw its population swell to more than 70,000 people today from about 30,000 people two decades ago. It is perhaps 98 percent Latino. (Even nearby Watts is now dominated by Latinos, not blacks.)

The median age, which had risen to more than 60 in the 1970s, is now about 24, the city estimates. Reflecting its working-class status, the city's median household income is about $28,000 a year, below the county's average of $40,300. Its main elementary school and middle school each has more than 4,000 students. Pacific Boulevard has become a cut-rate retail bazaar of shoe stores, dress shops, travel agencies, taquerias and dental clinics.

"The boulevard is back again, even better than it used to be," said Frank MacLean, the president of the local merchants association.

Elena Martin, who said she had been a resident for six years, was strolling with her three young children on Pacific Boulevard recently, looking at the ostrich-skin cowboy boots she said her husband coveted, but probably would not buy. She said she had little interest in malls, in part because she has to rely on public transit and in part because she did not feel at home at them.

Jacob Givertz, who has owned a clothing store, Buy Rite, on the boulevard since 1974, agreed that the immigrants had provided a solid new retail base. "I don't think the malls are competition for me," he said. "This boulevard reminds them of the way things were in the old country."

Rosario Marin, the city's mayor, said: "The people who move here are often new arrivals, but they really want to make it. Truthfully, they don't want to stay here. It's their first stop."

Still, Mayor Marin conceded, the city's transformation has also created enormous challenges.

Ms. Marin estimated that perhaps 40 percent of the population consisted of people who had lived in the country less than 10 years, and that perhaps 20 percent were here illegally. That means that few vote, and many shield themselves from the authorities.

The number of new immigrants has also created enormous challenges for the city's schools. Ms. Marin said roughly 60 percent of the parents of the children in the city's schools read English at a level of third grade or lower.

"We've become a safe harbor for new immigrants, a place where they can come and feel at home right away," she said. "When it's time to move on, they move on, but I hope they remember Huntington Park and what they got from this place."

DEAR ABBY

Old-fashioned manners are not just page from the past, are appreciated

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I must respond to "Disillusioned in Dallas," the 22-year-old man with old-fashioned manners who said it was difficult to find women his age who are receptive to being treated courteously.

Van Buren

I am a single, 25-year-old female. Apparently "Disillusioned" is dating the wrong type of women. I have shared his letter with all my girlfriends, ages 22 to 27. We agree that manners do count.

Good manners have not faded in our generation. Being considerate and showing respect to a woman reveals class and a moral upbringing. A man with manners and respect for women is exactly what many other young women and I are looking for in both a casual date and in our soul mate. — AMY IN DALLAS

DEAR AMY: I have been deluged with letters from women who echoed your sentiments. However, I have also received a few pointing out there may be another side to the issue. Read on:

DEAR ABBY: I am a 21-year-old female. There are various reasons some women decline those gestures of chivalry: (1) a strong sense of personal space; (2) in some cultures those particular niceties are not the common way of communicating consideration to a woman; and — saddest of all — (3) some women fear that "old-fashioned" manners indicate that a man is also old-fashioned in his feelings about a woman's place in the world.

"Disillusioned," the right woman will accommodate you with pleasure, for your manners are an indication of your true self. I just don't want some gals to be thought of as "strange" for declining gestures they find alien or uncomfortable. — G.Z. IN CALIFORNIA

DEAR G.Z.: I have no doubt that "Disillusioned" will find someone who thinks he's terrific. I do, however, take exception to anyone who reacts with rudeness when a courteous gesture is offered. Read on:

DEAR ABBY: Men with good manners these days are hard to find. All I can say to "Disillusioned" is: Don't change a thing! Those same women will be banging on his door someday after they've kissed enough frogs. "Disillusioned" sounds like a true gentleman, and men all over should take lessons. He can open my car door anytime. — ANN S. (AGE 32)

DEAR ANN: You're right. Some women have to learn the hard way. Read on:

DEAR ABBY: I am 18 and feel fortunate when someone opens a door for me or pulls out my chair. My big brother (who's 30 now) always told me when I was younger to never date a guy who doesn't open doors for me. I followed his advice, and I confess, I haven't dated much, but he was right — there is a BIG difference. — COMMITTED TO COURTESY IN THREE RIVERS

DEAR COMMITTED: Keep listening to your brother; he's a smart man. Good manners are a measure of respect and courtesy — important qualities in a mate. Read on:

DEAR ABBY: In a time when people are becoming more preoccupied with themselves and in a greater rush, courtesies are getting lost along the way. I urge everyone to make an effort to keep manners alive. With booming populations, that is the only way we will be able to get along. — IN FAVOR OF MANNERS IN PORTLAND

DEAR IN FAVOR: It's true. On the one hand, courtesy is one of the things that bond society together. On the other, it's the social lubricant — the WD-40 — that keeps relationships from becoming abrasive.

WorldBestBuy.com lays a foundation for hispanic broadcasting network

SAN DIEGO (PRNewswire) — WorldBestBuy.com, owned and operated by parent company, International Brands, Inc. (OTC Bulletin Board: INBRE) formerly (OTC Bulletin Board: INBR), announces yet another significant marketing and advertising campaign and continuing efforts to create brand awareness and increase shareholder value. WorldBestBuy.com, a wholly owned subsidiary of International Brands, Inc. (INBRE), is to take advantage of an emerging Latin market and to secure its advertising program beyond year 2000.

On average, Hispanic-Americans watch more than four-and-a-half hours of Spanish-language television a day with close to an hour spent listening to Spanish-language radio.

With the United States Census Bureau projecting that Hispanics will overtake African-Americans as the largest minority group in the United States by the year 2010, International Brands, Inc. (OTC Bulletin Board: INBRE), a diversified technology company with global interests in the internet, entertainment, broadcasting and media fields, is leveraging their access to tens of thousands of hours of Eastern European television programming to create a unique opportunity for advertisers targeting the Spanish-speaking population in the United States and other Latin countries.

"As the new millennium dawns on January first, the Hispanic population of the United States will top 30,000,000," said Steven (Vladislav) Zubkis, CEO of International Brands. "According to the Census Bureau, this number will rise to over 40,000,000 by 2010. Los Angeles is already the third largest Spanish-speaking city in the world, behind only Mexico City and Buenos Aires. The average income of a Hispanic family living in the United States has more than doubled in the past 20 years, creating a community with a total buying power of $325 billion. The average Hispanic-American family owns two TV sets and 85 percent of Hispanic households have a VCR."

Because of the unusually rapid rate of immigration of Hispanics to the U.S. over the past generation, the majority of this unique demographic group has yet to be fully assimilated into the American-English speaking culture. According to a recent study, 79 percent of Hispanics living in the United States still use Spanish as their dominant language at home and close to 50 percent speak primarily Spanish to communicate with co-workers on the job.

On average, Hispanic-Americans watch more than four-and-a-half hours of Spanish-language television a day with close to an hour spent listening to Spanish-language radio. Not surprisingly, the Who's Who of major companies advertising in Hispanic media closely mirrors the list of major advertisers in the English media: Procter & Gamble, AT&T, McDonald's, Ford Motor Company, MCI, etc.

"International Brands already owns minority interests in Spanish-language broadcasting properties," says Zubkis. "We also have an interest in a company that translates and exports programming produced in Mexico to the U.S. and vice-versa. Russians, for example, are crazy about Mexican soap operas.

"Our new initiative will involve an export of Eastern European programming to which we have access to the U.S. and other Latin countries via a newly created television network, and provide it to over 60 Spanish-language television stations in exchange for advertising time during the broadcasts. The bulk of the ad time will be sold to multi-national companies seeking broad, cost-effective coverage of the Hispanic market, but at least two minutes per hour will be reserved for promoting our Internet MegaMall, http://www.worldbestbuy.com."

WorldBestBuy.com, a wholly owned subsidiary of International Brands, is a virtual one-stop department store, which features literally millions of products. Other elements of WorldBestBuy.com's site include an auto auction and free "Garage Sale" and "World Bazaar" areas; the former for individuals hoping to turn their trash into someone else's treasure and the latter for craftspersons and collectors seeking a global trading post in which to sell their wares.

San Diego-based International Brands, Inc., corporate parent of WorldBestBuy.com, is a publicly traded technology company (OTC Bulletin Board: INBRE) with majority or partial interests in Internet, media, entertainment, e-commerce and broadcasting enterprises.

According to a recent study, 79 percent of Hispanics living in the United States still use Spanish as their dominant language at home and close to 50 percent speak primarily Spanish to communicate with co-workers on the job.

"What?" you ask.

Yes, a machine will answer the phone; the sixth person to leave a message will be the winner. Your cue to call is when Ricky and Amazing Grace sign off for the day. The reason behind this is last time people said, "Well I called at 3 p.m. exactly and I don't see how I didn't win."

Well, I'll bet that you could not find five people whose watches hit 5 p.m. at the same time. However, everyone can hear Ricky and Grace sign off, so that is when you call.

In case anyone missed the big announcement, I will take part in the "All Male Fashion Show," at 7 p.m. on Feb. 12 at the Midland Center. Besides me, a ton of local celebrities will taking to the catwalk to earn money for scholarships given by the Women's Department of the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce.

This will be an wonderful opportunity to meet many movers and shakers of the Hispanic community, but most of all it's a chance to see me in a tux.

I have to confess I have been shocked at the number of people I have seen obeying yield signs around town. In a previous column, I mentioned the problems I've had taking the exit on the way to a friend's house because of the other drivers zooming past the yield sign. Recently, however, I have seen at least 10 cars slowing down or stopping where they are supposed to when I have exited the Loop.

I knew we could do it. I was in Corpus Christi recently and I saw them yielding to highway traffic. Their set-up was just like ours, and I was ashamed that they could do it but we couldn't. However, it would appear that some people have finally looked up and said to themselves, "Hey, that's a yield sign; maybe I should slow down."

If you have been watching television these last few days, you may have noticed the Census 2000 commercials. I would just like to say that it is absolutely necessary that everyone in Texas be counted.

Can you imagine trying to host a dinner party for what you thought would be 10 people and 30 showed up? That is how the census works. You would be amazed at how many programs distribute money based on population. So from now until the end of the count, we in the secret Que Pasa cave will have a note about what the Census does for the city of Midland and the community. You don't have to be smart, rich, married or even a citizen. But if you live in Texas, in particularly Midland, you MUST be counted.

This week's Census tidbit:

People who answer the census help their communities obtain federal funds and valuable information for planning schools, hospitals and roads. Census information also helps identify areas where residents might need service of particular interest to certain racial or ethnic groups, such as screening for hypertension or diabetes.

In 1988 Panamanian dictator Manuel Noriega was indicted in Miami on charges of allowing drug traffickers to do business in his country. He was later convicted in Miami and sentenced to prison.

In 1899 the Spanish-American War officially ended. The last Spanish troops had been withdrawn from Cuba and Puerto Rico on Jan. 1 and the United States instituted military rule.

Also in 1899 actor Ramon Novarro was born in Durango, Mexico. In 1913 his family moved to Los Angeles. Poverty forced Novarro to go to work to help support his family. He began with small roles in plays and movies. In 1923 he landed his first starring role in "Prisoner of Zenda." He became one of the leading romantic stars. His last film was "Heller in Pink Tights" in 1960.

In 1949 poet Victor Hernandez Cruz was born in Puerto Rico. When he was 5, his family moved to New York's Spanish Harlem. In high school, he began writing poetry. He later moved back to Puerto Rico. Cruz classifies his poetry as Afro-Latin and writes in both English and Spanish.

FEBRUARY 7

In 1833 writer Ricardo Palma was born in Lima, Peru. It was Palma who created the literary genre called "the tradition." It is a short story based on local legends, often pre-Columbian myth. He wrote 10 volumes of his stories. He also served as director of the National Library of Peru.

In 1986 Haitian "President for Life" Jean Claude Duvalier fled his country, ending 28 years of his family's rule.

In 1494 explorer Christopher Columbus began using Indians as slaves in the West Indies.

In 1536 Pedro de Mendoza of Spain founded the Argentine city of Buenos Aires.

In 1848 the Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo was signed, ending the Mexican-American War. It added 1.2 million square miles to the United States. Mexico gave up claims to lands north of the Rio Grande in return for $15 million. In all, Mexico lost 35 percent of its territory.

In 1851 Mexican artist Jose Posada was born. Although born into poverty, and forced to work with his father in the fields, he was able to study briefly with a local artist. He became an apprentice lithographer, and became one of the best lithographers in Mexico. In 1895 he introduced the technique of etching in zinc, and used it in more than 20,000 engravings. His greatest fame came for the drawings he did in opposition to the dictatorship of Porfirio Diaz. Despite his fame, he died in poverty.

Hispanic Community pleased with Menchaca appointment

By Richard Acosta
Staff Writer

It was the fulfillment of a childhood dream for a boy from Del Rio.

Rick Menchaca grew up seeing two powerful men – his father, a member of the clergy, and Richard Castro, now the McDonald's restaurant king of West Texas – playing the political game in their small border town.

Now Rick Menchaca has stepped into the role of the first Hispanic to hold the office of city manager in Midland. And at 35, he is one of the youngest to have the job.

"I never saw any barriers, but I knew there would be hurdles that could be over come," Menchaca said. "I've worked hard to get were I am and we plan to get going on several projects right away."

Menchaca earned his master's degree at 23 and became an assistant city manger at 26. He has worked for various cities for 12 years. Menchaca has been an assistant city manager in Midland for 10 years. He said he got into city government right after school because he knew the course he wanted to pursue.

"I love what I do," Menchaca said. "Everyday is a new challenge and I love working with the people and for the people. Our job is to make sure the city has fire and police protection and that the trash gets picked up, but the other side of that is making sure the city grows and is always improving."

A part of his job (although not spelled out in his job description), is serving as a role model for the Hispanic community. Menchaca said he understands and accepts that important responsibility.

"I never really considered myself a role model," Menchaca said. "But I do know that it is a responsibility I have, like Jose (Cuevas) and Juluis Brooks and some other elected officials and business people. Whether we accept it or not we do have a responsibility."

David Diaz, director of the Hispanic Chamber, said he sees Menchaca fitting the part as role model as well as he will the part of city manager.

"He is an ideal representative for the Hispanic community," Diaz said. "He has always worked toward the best interest of the city, and I think the young Hispanics of the community can look up to him and see how hard work and dedication can pay off."

'With youth comes new ideas. He (Menchaca) has the background and the love of the city that he needs to do a good job. We are approaching a time when Hispanics will no longer be the minority in this city and I'm glad to see that people could look past everything and pick the best man for the job.'

— Leticia Rendon,
director of Continuing Education for Midland College

Being bilingual is an advantage Menchaca has said he thinks will help people feel open about calling in their concerns about the city.

"We always receive a number of calls, and the buck does stop here," Menchaca said. "We try to let the people in different departments handle issues but there are times when they need to call us.

"My grandmother had limited English. And if my speaking Spanish helps someone feel more comfortable about calling … that is what we are here for. We work for the all the citizens. The city is a business and the stockholders are the citizens."

Maria Garcia, a counselor at Midland High School, said as a citizen of Midland she is glad to see Menchaca in the role of city manager.

"I think it is wonderful. He'll do a good job," Ms. Garcia said. "I know him socially and I know that he has a good head on his shoulders and has a general concern for the city. He has a big heart and I think he will do a wonderful job for Midland."

Leticia Rendon, director of Continuing Education for Midland College said she is glad to see a young Hispanic in that position.

"With youth comes new ideas," Ms. Rendon said. "He has the background and the love of the city that he needs to do a good job. We are approaching a time when Hispanics will no longer be the minority in this city and I'm glad to see that people could look past everything and pick the best man for the job."

Menchaca said though he is serious about what he does, he wants the ideas coming out of his office to be young and fresh.

"The days of the stuffy and stodgy older way of management have passed," Menchaca said. "You have to be open to change, new things and innovation. I'm trying to instill in my staff that you can't be afraid to take risks. I told them that they wouldn't be penalized for trying something new."

Republican forum concentrates on getting Latino vote

By Carla Marinucci
San Francisco Chronicle

SAN JOSE — Declaring the Latino vote to be the hottest political battleground in the war for the White House, Republicans met in San Jose last week to appeal to them on issues, at the ballot box — and even on the Internet.

The 165-member Republican National Committee gathered for its winter meeting at the Fairmont Hotel to hash out a game plan for the coming elections and address a range of issues, including congressional races, outreach to women, and technology. But GOP leaders made it clear that from now until November, their chief spotlight will be aimed at Latinos.

The Republican Leadership Council opened the week with a special focus group for 14 working-class Latinos to hear their views on a range of issues, particularly health care. Republican leaders are trying to talk up medical programs such as Fair Care, a limited tax-credit proposal by Republican House Majority Leader Dick Armey of Texas that serves as an alternative to those already floated by Democrats Al Gore and Bill Bradley.

"If we don't get the party talking about ideas, we're going to lose," said Scott Reed, who managed Bob Dole's 1996 campaign and now heads the Republican Leadership Council. "We're going to devise a strategy in a very targeted manner … and the way to do that is to talk about issues that matter in people's lives, like health care."

The RNC plans to unveil what it calls "a sweeping political and cultural poll" of Latino voters and a panel targeting Latino voters Thursday, and to debut a multimillion-dollar ad campaign to run in California and other key states. The campaign was described as "the first in a series … intended to broaden the party's efforts to earn the trust" of Latinos. But party leaders, acknowledging that more than 70 percent of the Latino vote in California went to Democrats in 1998, said aggressive moves will be needed.

RNC Chairman Jim Nicholson, in a press conference to unveil the new GOPnet.com Web site — which effectively makes the GOP an Internet service provider — argued that technology will be one critical way to reach out to women and minority voters in the 21st century.

But it was clear that there still is some work needed in the party's new efforts to reach out to new communities. At one seminar yesterday, for example, GOP women were instructed in how to speak on behalf of the party before community groups and to media.

The lecturer, telling the crowd that many Americans don't think Republicans are in touch with the culture, urged them to use keywords that would show them to be knowledgeable and sensitive. For Latinos, he said, a mention of Ricky Martin and "La Vida Loca" might be appropriate, according to one who watched the presentation.

But even as Republicans attempted to discuss the issues, it was also clear that Democrats didn't intend to concede the Latino vote.

Representative Loretta Sanchez of Orange County, who co-chairs the Democratic National Committee, came to the Fairmont to challenge GOP leadership directly, while issuing a letter to Nicholson charging that what Republicans have done for Latinos is too little and too late.

She pointed out that under President Clinton, Latino unemployment has been halved, business loans to Latinos have more than doubled and that Latinos now represent more Cabinet members — 12 percent — than ever before in history.

"We will not allow you to run away from your party record," Sanchez wrote, citing what she called "divisive" measures from the GOP, including English-only legislation and Prop. 209, which called for an end to affirmative-action programs.

In a clear jab at Texas Gov. George W. Bush, who has touted his outreach to Latinos in state campaign stops, Sanchez said, "We will not allow Latinos to be used as props at events or as photo opportunities by your presidential candidates during this election cycle." Bush, she later told The Chronicle, has been "particularly offensive" in that area, making a point to speak Spanish at events and surrounding himself with Latinos on stage. She said she will remind him and other Republicans that he will not be able to "rewrite history" in the coming election.

"Democrats are content leaving Latinos in their own poverty," countered RNC deputy press secretary Leslie Sanchez, who is no relation. "We are fighting for opportunity and prosperity."

Florida comes up big winner in 2000 recruiting battles

Associated Press

As Steve Spurrier likes to say, it's great to be a Gator!

Some of the nation's most promising prospects agreed with the Florida coach on Wednesday, becoming baby Gators on the first day high school stars can sign letters of intent.

"We did get most all the guys we went after this year," Spurrier said. "A few weeks ago, I didn't think we were recruiting enough players to sign 21 or 22. But it seemed like they all wanted to come play for the Gators this year."

With an incoming class led by quarterback Brock Berlin, USA Today's offensive player of the year, All-American linebacker Darrell Lee and a flurry of impressive last-minute signees, Florida came out the winner in Recruiting Wars 2000.

"A landslide for the Gators, an easy win," Allen Wallace, publisher of Laguna Beach, Calif.-based SuperPrep magazine, said. "What an incredible day they had."

"Florida was amazing — lots of big names on signing day," added Bobby Burton of Austin, Texas- based The National Recruiting Advisor.

Tom Lemming of Schaumburg, Ill.-based Prep Football Report also gave the nod to Florida, while Max Emfinger of Covington, La.-based National Blue Chips had Tennessee first with the Gators a close second. Alabama, Florida State, Penn State and Texas showed up in at least one of the four recruiting gurus' top-5 lists.

"Tennessee signed some of the most dominant players in the country," Emfinger said. "They have two top quarterbacks already getting ready for spring training and they signed two top wide receivers today in Tony Brown and Rashad Baker."

Quarterbacks Casey Clausen and John Rattay, brother of Louisiana Tech's Tim Rattay, made early commitments to the Vols and are set to take part in spring practice.

So is the 6-1, 190-pound Berlin, the Gators' prize recruit from Shreveport, La., who threw for 4,219 yards and 36 TDs in his senior year at Evangel Christian. In four years, his team was 60-0 with four state titles.

While Florida made a huge move Wednesday in signing 29 players, it paled by comparison to Florida State's surge. The Seminoles, despite a perfect season and national championship, weren't on many top 10 lists — until wacky Wednesday.

By the time the day ended, Florida State was third on Emfinger's and Wallace's top 10 list, fourth on Lemming's and seventh on Burton's. Burton said the Seminoles began the day rated 24th on his list.

Coach Bobby Bowden, that crafty recruiter who shows up at a prospect's doorstep for one last-minute pitch, came through again. He convinced Parade and USA Today All-American Travis Johnson, a 6-5, 240-pounder from Sherman Oaks, Calif., to head to the Sunshine State.

The Seminoles also grabbed two other All-Americans on Wednesday — defensive back Bryant McFadden from Hollywood, Fla. and linebacker Eric Moore from Pahokee, Fla. All-American defensive back Yohance Buchanan from Atlanta made good on an earlier verbal commitment.

Michael Boulware, brother of former Florida State All-American Peter Boulware, also signed with the Seminoles.

Linebacker D.J. Williams, the consensus defensive player of the year from Concord, Calif., was undecided late Wednesday, He was said to be considering Florida State, Michigan and California, but was unlikely to make a decision until later in the week.

Florida soared to the top when it landed highly regarded defensive backs Cory Bailey from Hialeah, Fla., and Trey Orr from Lake City, Fla.; offensive linemen Jonathan Colon (6-6, 285) from Miami, Max Starks (6-8, 340) from Orlando, and Kevin Deaton (6-4, 290) from Merritt Island, Fla.; defensive tackle Kenny Parker (6-4, 300) from Warner-Robins, Ga.; and wide receiver Kelvin Kight from Lithonia, Ga.

"I hope these guys will all stick together and last four to five years," Spurrier, whose Gators finished a 9-3 in '99, said. "If they can do that, we're going to have a chance for some very good teams in future years."

The four recruiting experts agreed it was a big year for Southern teams, specifically the Southeastern Conference. Alabama joined Florida and Tennessee with an impressive signing class.

"The South is cleaning up," Lemming, who had Florida, Tennessee and Alabama 1-2-3 on his top 10 list. "In Florida's case, they were No. 1 going in and got a bunch of stars today."

Lemming also cited the Gators' poor finish last season as a reason for their recruiting success.

"When powerhouses falter a little, kids get the idea they can come right in and play," Lemming said.

Michigan and Notre Dame, usually in the top 10, didn't fare so well. The Wolverines lost out on several players, including All-American wide receiver Charles Rogers from Saginaw, Mich., who chose Michigan State, and All-American offensive lineman Kwame Harris, who signed with Stanford.

The Irish didn't have a star player in their incoming class, says Emfinger. They didn't even sign Starks, the son of former Notre Dame star Ross Browner, who chose the Gators instead.

"They were about 15th — the problem is they don't have a difference maker, a 7 in my ratings," Emfinger said. "They have some 6s and 5s and they also signed four quarterbacks. What are they going to do with all of them?"

Irish coach Bob Davie said he planned it that way. Jarious Jackson is gone and Eric Chappell has been suspended.

"Quarterback, no question that was a priority for us," Davie said. The quarterbacks are Matt LoVecchio, Jared Clark, Carlyle Holiday and Abram Elam, who can also play defensive back.
