Syria says they will take hostages

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — An authoritative government source said today that Syria had agreed in principle to take the 39 American hostages, and said they could leave 48 hours after an agreement is reached on freeing Lebanese held in Israel.

A Lebanese government source, who spoke on condition he not be identified, told the Associated Press that Syria had agreed in principle to arrangements to end the crisis worked out by Jean-Claude Aime, a special envoy of U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar.

Aime has been shuttling between Beirut, Jerusalem and Damascus, Syria, during the past few days. On Thursday night, he flew to Beirut from Damascus and met with Nabih Berri. He is the leader of the Shiite Moslem militia, Amal, and has taken responsibility for the hostages, held in captivity since Shiite gunmen commandeered a TWA jetliner June 14 after takeoff from Athens, Greece.

Berri met today with three of the hostages — Allyn Conwell of Houston, Texas; Simon Grossmayer of Algonquin, Ill.; and the Rev. James McLoughlin of Geneva, Ill.

Grossmayer has only one lung and has been taking medicine. Conwell, told ABC-TV's "Good Morning America" that the three hostages had asked for the meeting at Berri's home because of concern "about possible fragility of Simon Grossmayer's condition."

The Lebanese government source did not mention, in the brief interview, whether the agreement to transfer the hostages to Syria would apply to seven other Americans kidnapped in Lebanon in the past 15 months. The U.S. government has demanded that they be freed as part of any arrangements.

In an interview today on "Good Morning America," Berri said anything he can do involves only the hostages from the TWA jetliner.

"I don't have control for the 39, but I have responsibility," Berri said. "About the seven, I don't have any interfere. This is not my problem, about the seven before."

Berri said Thursday that the 39 hostages could be freed within days, but said he lacked agreement on a key point — where to send them while Israel releases Arab prisoners.

The Shiites are demanding the release of 735 prisoners held by Israel. Berri has offered to move the hostages to a Western embassy in Beirut if the embassy agrees not to free them until Israel releases its prisoners.

Budget talks on hold

WASHINGTON (AP) — House-Senate budget talks are on hold while House negotiators use the Fourth of July recess to consider an unexpected Senate proposal for a $59 million tax increase to help trim deficits.

A bipartisan group of Senate negotiators offered the three-year tax hike Thursday, despite President Reagan's repeated insistence that he will veto any proposed tax increases this year.

Their proposal was part of a package to trim deficits by $89.9 billion next year and $358.8 billion over the next three years.

Rep. William H. Gray III, D-Pa., chairman of the House Budget Committee, said, "I'm going to look at this as a serious proposal."

He said the House would have a response after Congress returns from its recess on July 8.

While Reagan may oppose tax increases, White House Budget Director David Stockman is quoted in today's editions of The New York Times as saying they may be the only solution to high federal deficits "consistent with fiscal sanity."

Stockman was also quoted as saying in an off-the-record speech June 5 that the Reagan administration and congressional leaders of both parties have not "come clean" with figures used to determine how much money would be saved in budget proposals.

We have increasingly resorted to squaring the circle with accounting gimmicks, half-truths and downright dishonesty in our budget numbers, debate and advocacy," Stockman was quoted as saying.

The new Senate proposal appeared to be aimed mostly at drawing a counterproposal from the Loeffler seeks Midlanders' monetary, verbal support

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

"If that wasn't an announcement for governor, then what was it?" remarked one Midlander after Congressman Tom Loeffler spoke to a group of local hard-core Republicans during a rally at ClayDesta National Bank Building Atrium Wednesday afternoon.

The Republican from Hunt came to Midland seeking sources of support — verbal and monetary — and to talk about the hostage crisis. Loeffler said in May he was considering seeking the Republican nomination for governor. Win or lose, he said, he was coming back to Texas. But the official announcement won't come until late August or early September after he can determine if there is enough support statewide for him to make a bid for the governor's seat, now held by Democrat Mark White.

Coming from a noon briefing in Washington, D.C., concerning the Americans being held hostage in Lebanon, Loeffler said moving the people to a neutral ground (such as the French embassy which was suggested at one time) was a positive sign. He denounced the Shiite Moslem terrorists for taking the hostages, calling it a "deplorable act committed by individuals who have no respect for human life."

President Reagan has been "deliberate, firm, certain and careful" in applying pressure to the Lebanese and Loeffler contended the president had made the right move by sending the 6th Fleet to international waters near the country.

"Once we resolve this, we as a nation must give absolute consideration to terrorists. We should take whatever action is necessary so they'll know it's (hijacking) not worth the risk."

He contended the United States is applying pressure to Lebanon to release the Americans, as is the Soviet Union and other Arab countries.

Since announcing his interest in the gubernatorial race, Loeffler, the 19th District congressman who represents Midland, has been crisscrossing the state to determine how much support he would have from Republicans.

"You have to have the grassroots in place and raise the seed money," he said. One report has placed contributions for his race at $600,000 by today, which he said would be a record for a statewide office 16 months before the election.

The rally Wednesday was hosted by Deane Stoltz and Clayton Williams, and varying reports placed the turnout between 60 and 100 persons. Williams said he was one of the people who had talked to Loeffler about running for governor. "Tom, we have such a mess in Austin, why don't you run?" he said.

Loeffler said he has been asked to "reach out to the people. Don't just be a Republican, but be an individual. There's no question that I believe in the state of Texas. By the year 2000 it will be larger than the state of New York. This would be a candidacy that would be a people's campaign for a greater Texas."

He said it wasn't the right time yet to begin speaking on issues, but the congressman did criticize Mark White's job performance. Texas can't be a great state, he said, if it allows the same problems as New York.

Whoever is governor "should be committed to excellence. Have someone in that office who has political integrity. Mark White lacks in that category. The people of the state of Texas didn't elect you to raise taxes and to lend support to people like Walter Mondale or Geraldine Ferraro or Lloyd Doggett."

He declined any criticism, however, of a potential opponent — Kent Hance. Hance, who ran for the U.S. Senate on the Democratic ticket in 1984 and lost in a runoff to Doggett, switched to the GOP in May and has said he is "95 percent sure" he's going to run for governor.

United Way 1985-86 goal set at $2.12 million

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The United Way of Midland's campaign goal of $2.12 million for 1985-86 is an 8 percent hike over last year's effort and represents expanding agency programs even in a non-booming economy.

"We are extremely hopeful that we can follow the tremendous history" of previous campaigns, Tom Madonna, an accountant who is United Way's campaign chairman, said today.

The seven-week campaign will begin Sept. 11 and will conclude Oct. 24. However, the United Way's pilot campaign which involves 32 companies will be held July 17 through Aug. 30.

The United Way serves 30,000 Midlanders through its 16 member agencies, which include the American Cancer Society, American Red Cross, Big Brothers and Big Sisters, Boy Scouts of America, Boys' Club of Midland, Petro-Plains Camp Fire, Casa de Amigos, Midland Council on Alcoholism, Family Services, Midland Rape Crisis Center, Palmer Drug Abuse Program, Permian Basin Center for Battered Women and Their Children, Permian Basin Girl Scout Council, Salvation Army, the Young Men's Christian Association (YMCA) and the United Way.

"We have some showcaseable agencies," said Bob Smith, United Way executive director.

Madonna said United Way and its agencies are "attempting to control costs." For instance, he noted that the Salvation Army is re-organizing to keep its budget under control and is planning to increase sales in its thrift store.

"Each year, the goal becomes tougher and tougher the way the economy is in Midland," he said.

Approximately 700 volunteers will be assisting the United Way in reaching its $2.12 million goal. Unit campaign chairmen under Madonna's direction are Judy Devenport, special support unit; Jeff Noble, oil unit; Darryl Pounds, industry and commerce unit, and Bob Irvine, public and professional unit.

Midland is No. 3 nationwide in per-capita giving of $21 to United-Way and is No. 2 statewide. No. 1 in Texas is Donna, a small (population, about 200) East Texas community which averages $37 per person in giving to United Way, said Jerri McAlpin, United Way communications director. Candy Stoltz is campaign director.

"Midland is very generous," said Jane Wolf, United Way president.

"Midlanders are generous even in hard times when the economy is flat. They care about their neighbors" and the community.

Astronomer: More stars will be found orbited by planets

FLAGSTAFF, Ariz. (AP) — A NASA astronomer says he has evidence eight more nearby stars are surrounded by material that could hide planets and he predicts scientists eventually will discover 1,000 such stars orbited by planets, asteroids, comets or the dust that could form them.

The evidence comes from a new analysis of observations of 500 nearby stars by the orbiting Infra-red Astronomical Satellite, or IRAS, said Hartmut H.G. Aumann, of the agency's Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena, Calif.

The stars are known as nearby stars because they are within 75 light years of Earth. That's about 441 trillion miles — considered close to Earth by astronomical standards.

Aumann outlined his findings Thursday at the annual meeting of the Astronomical Society of the Pacific.

Astronomers believe that our solar system formed when a giant cloud of dust and gas collapsed into clumps of material to create the sun, the planets and orbiting asteroids and comets.

Many also believe it is reasonable to expect that solar systems formed the same way around other stars under the proper conditions. Under less favorable conditions, the initial dust-and-gas cloud might not congeal into planets, but simply remain in the form of dust or small bodies.

Aumann's conclusions increase to 12 the number of nearby stars studied by IRAS that are believed to be surrounded by so-called proto-planetary material.

Non-IRAS studies have indicated two other stars — HL Tau and R Monceritos — may be surrounded by dust or larger bodies. And last December, astronomers observed what may be a Jupiter-like planet around the star Van Biesbroeck 8.

So astronomers now believe 15 stars are orbited by at least dust, and possibly by asteroids, comets and planets.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration announced in June 1984 that Aumann had identified more than 40 stars he suspected might be surrounded by proto-planetary material.

Lack of patriotism cancels celebration

BRAINTREE, Mass. (AP) — Just a stone's throw from Concord, where the embattled farmers fired the shot heard 'round the world, the town of Braintree has canceled its official Fourth of July celebration this year.

"The underlying cause is a lack of patriotism, a lack of civic pride; the town doesn't have a deep strain of people who care," said Charles A. Knowles, editor and publisher of the weekly Braintree Star and a resident for 19 years.

The town's eight-member July Fourth Committee voted unanimously Wednesday night to cancel the privately funded celebration because it has only half the $9,000 needed to stage it. Last year's celebration attracted 15,000 revelers.

The town had scheduled its party for July 6 because Independence Day falls on Thursday.

"America's birthday is going to be a pretty silent celebration," said William Hedlund, committee vice chairman. "What's really pathetic is that this year independence means so much."

"We've got hostages held against their will. What better way for a community to rally together?"

Gerald Darsch, brother of Beirut hostage Stuart R. Darsch, 29, of Boston, lives in Braintree with his wife, Beverly.

"I'm absolutely mystified why people have not come to support the program," Hedlund said.

But Knowles said the cancellation is "a sign of a much deeper cancer that goes right across the nation."

"Two years ago during the fireworks, beer bottles were crashing in the parking lot from kids drinking in the woods."

"I've watched the young and middle-aged parent just withdraw. They say, 'I cannot fight and argue with these young punks on the sidewalk.'"

"The astounding thing is that people...are so conditioned to bad stuff...nobody complains," Knowles said. "People do not want to hear what's wrong. They would prefer to say it's a sign of the times."

Committee chairman John Panepinto said he didn't believe rowdy young people were the cause of lack of interest. "But how do you put your finger on the cause? I would not have a complete answer."

"It's the children of the town who will suffer the most. When you see the little kids' eyes and you watch them looking...Those are the things you miss."

Braintree, a town of 36,000 about 15 miles south of Boston, was founded in 1640, 20 years after the Pilgrims landed at Plymouth Rock, another 15 miles south of here. The town was 136 years old on Independence Day in 1776.

Hijackers demand U.S. not retaliate

By R. GREGORY NOKES
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — A demand by hijackers that almost surely will be met by the Reagan administration is that the United States not retaliate after the 46 American hostages are released.

The hostages probably wouldn't otherwise be freed.

The demand will not be met publicly, and possibly not even explicitly in private. But if past practice is a guide, it will be met.

The United States did not retaliate against Iran after the 52 American hostages were finally released after 444 days of captivity on the day Reagan took office.

Nor did the administration retaliate against Iran after the December, 1984 hijacking of a Kuwaiti airliner during which two American officials were murdered. Iranian officials promised to put the hijackers on trial, but there is no evidence they ever did.

Nor has there been any retaliation for the other terrorist attacks on Americans in Lebanon.

Nabih Berri, the Shiite leader who is negotiating on behalf of the hijackers for the 39 American hostages from TWA Flight 847, demanded Wednesday that the United States pledge not to retaliate against the hijackers after the hostages are released.

He said it was a third condition for releasing the hostages. The first was the release of the 735 Lebanese prisoners remaining in Israel. The second is the withdrawal of American warships from near the coast of Lebanon.

The administration appeared to set a condition of its own on Wednesday, insisting for the first time that all 46 hostages in Lebanon be released immediately and unconditionally. The number includes the 39 hijacking hostages and seven Americans kidnapped prior to the hijacking.

Two of the seven have been held more than a year.

The administration has insisted from the outset that it won't negotiate and it won't give in to terrorist demands. But the reality is something different.

The administration has put subtle pressure on Israel to release the Lebanese prisoners, which Washington already had said were being held in contravention of international law.

When Vice President George Bush

publicly said in Europe on Wednesday that Israel ought to release the prisoners, it's inconceivable that his statement wasn't timed to influence the sensitive diplomatic contacts then under way.

Israel has said it would release the prisoners — which it says it planned to release anyway — as part of a hostage exchange, but wants to be asked. The administration would like Israel to do it without being asked.

But however it is accomplished, release of the American hostages will come in some sort of exchange for the prisoners in Israel.

Moving American warships further off the coast of Lebanon wouldn't be a problem, officials suggest privately.

Regarding retaliation, a senior State Department official with experience in terrorist matters said it would not be legal under international law for the United States to retaliate with a major attack on Lebanon without first declaring war, an unlikely step.

Reminded that hijackings are not legal either under international law, the official nonetheless insisted, "I think the United States is a law-abiding member of the international community. I believe people will look at the rule book and conclude they should obey the law."

Preemptive strikes to blunt terrorist attacks before they occur, or to stop them while they are occurring, would be lawful, he said.

Hodding Carter, the State Department spokesman during the Iranian hostage-taking, said there was never an explicit commitment by the United States that it wouldn't retaliate against Iran, but it was understood from the agreement for release of the hostages there could not be retaliation.

He said the complex agreement that involved unfreezing Iranian assets and payment of debts to American businesses would have unraveled had there been retaliation. He noted in an interview that the Reagan administration honored the agreement worked out by the Carter administration "line-by-line."

That has to be done, he said, and will be done for Lebanon as well. "If you undercut a deal of whatever sort, direct or indirect," he added, "the next time, who is going to make a deal?"

HOSTAGES

But the French and Swiss governments said they would accept the hostages into their embassies only if there were no conditions.

Berri said in a Thursday interview with CBS News he favored sending the hostages to neighboring Syria until the crisis is resolved. Syria, the main powerbroker among Lebanon's feuding religious factions, said it was "concerned about finding a suitable solution."

Berri told NBC News on Thursday: "I'm more optimistic now...and I think in 72 hours it will be ended for this affair...with American help." He told reporters that "many positive steps" had been taken in the previous 24 hours, but did not provide details.

Thirty-six of the hostages have been split up and spread throughout Shiite strongholds of Beirut. Three crew members remain aboard the plane at the Beirut airport.

The hijackers killed one of the 153 people originally aboard the TWA flight, a U.S. Navy diver, and released the others.

A terrorist group that calls itself

Islamic Holy War, believed to be made up of Shiite extremists with ties to Iran, has claimed responsibility for the kidnappings of the seven Americans and other Westerners.

A leader of Berri's Amal militia, security chief Ghassan Sibiani, told the AP his militia would like to help solve the kidnappings, but has had no formal request from the U.S. government.

"All we've had is a speech by Secretary of State (George P.) Shultz that he wants the 46 Americans released, but that was not a request," Sibiani said. "We have worked for it before (freeing kidnap victims) and we're more than happy to work on it now and approach the other side," he said.

In Washington today, David Satterfield, a spokesman for the State Department group monitoring the hostage situation said: "We'd like to have all the hostages back, as Shultz said, but beyond that we don't have anything to say. The best possible solution would be return of all of the hostages without conditions."

Sibiani said the kidnappers still demanded Kuwait release 17 people convicted of bombing the U.S. and French embassies in December 1983. Kuwait has refused repeatedly.

Sibiani said Amal would make every effort to "make them soften their demand...in these new circumstances...and resolve the dilemma of the hijacking."

Amal was disappointed with the lack of flexibility in the U.S. stance on the hostage issue, he said. "We are working for the hostages more than the United States government is. We want to solve this problem, finish this drama. We're disappointed because we're not seeing any sign of help coming from the other side," he said.

The seven kidnapped Americans are William Buckley, a U.S. Embassy political officer; the Rev. Benjamin Weir, a Presbyterian minister; Peter Kilburn, a librarian at the American University of Beirut; the Rev. Lawrence Jenco, a Roman Catholic priest; Terry Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press; David Jacobson, director of the American University Hospital; and Thomas Sutherland, dean of the university's school of agriculture.

In Israel, Prime Minister Shimon Peres said in a speech broadcast today that Israel feels as strongly about the American hostages as it would about its own citizens, and that it will do everything it can to free them, short of giving in to terrorism.

Israel television said Thursday the United States and Israel had reached an understanding that Israel will not release its 735 prisoners until the 39 Americans are freed. But Israeli officials today denied the report, saying the government would continue its policy of gradual, staged releases.

Israel released 31 of the prisoners Monday, but said the release was unrelated to the Shiites' demands.

Israel has accused the prisoners of planning or carrying out attacks on its army in southern Lebanon.

There were conflicting reports Thursday on the whereabouts of two kidnapped Frenchmen, Michel Seurat and Jean-Paul Kauffmann, who Berri said would be released with the Americans.

Kauffmann's wife said French Foreign Minister Roland Dumas had told her that her husband and Seurat had been turned over to Berri's Amal militia. Earlier in the day the first secretary of the French Embassy in Beirut, Marcel Laugel, said a similar report was "absolutely not true."

BUDGET

House, since it lacked the public backing of either Senate Budget Committee Chairman Pete V. Domenici, R-N.M., or Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole, R-Kan.

Domenici said the package lacks "the political muscle to get it done." When a reporter told Dole the size of the tax increase being proposed, he muttered, "It's worse than I thought."

Dole added, "It's obviously not going anywhere downtown," which was a reference to Reagan's veto threats.

The bargaining session Thursday was the first time the negotiators have gotten together since Tuesday. Domenici broke off talks in the last session when bargaining deadlocked over a Senate proposal for a one-year freeze on Social Security cost-of-living increases.

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., has said he will not agree to a freeze, but on Wednesday, the speaker suggested he favored increased taxes for higher-income Social Security recipients.

Domenici then reconvened the budget talks Thursday saying he was prepared to consider O'Neill's suggestion and build a compromise around it.

However, O'Neill and his aides have said the Social Security tax idea was never intended as a way to get the budget talks moving again.

Gray told Domenici it was "inaccurate to describe the speaker's comments as a proposal."

House Majority Leader Jim Wright, D-Texas, one of the conferees, said O'Neill "didn't offer this as an attempt to break a logjam here."

Gray, echoing an earlier remark by O'Neill, said the House's current offer was to accept increased military spending sought by the Republican-led Senate if the senators will give up their plan to freeze Social Security benefits.

Domenici rejected that. Then, a bipartisan group of senators led by Sens. Slade Gorton, R-

Wash., and Lawton Chiles, D-Fla., the top Democrat on the Budget Committee, offered their plan.

Chiles said there may be no solution to the budget impasse unless "the president and the speaker...become participants in the process now." He said he hoped Thursday's Senate proposal "makes them respond."

The proposal would raise $59 billion over three years — $10 billion next year, $19 billion in 1987 and $30 billion in 1988 — through a 5 percent minimum corporate tax, tightened enforcement of tax laws and repeal of the investment tax credit.

It also would retain the Senate's call for a one-year freeze on Social Security cost-of-living increases but make provisions to compensate low-income retirees for any loss of benefits.

The senators also retain the Senate position on military spending but scale back slightly the amount of spending authority it would provide. Joining Chiles and Gorton in support of the proposal were Sens. Rudy Boschwitz, R-Minn.; Ernest Hollings, D-S.C.; J. Bennett Johnston, D-La.; and Nancy Landon Kassebaum, R-Kan.

The level of military spending authority and the Senate proposal — backed by Reagan — for a one-year freeze in Social Security cost-of-living increases have been the major obstacles to progress in the talks.

The negotiations are aimed at drafting a compromise version of spending blueprints passed by each chamber that would have achieved about $56 billion in deficit reductions in the 1986 fiscal year.

The House has proposed freezing military spending authority at its current $292.6 billion level for next year. The Senate has called for military spending authority next year of an estimated $302.5 billion, which allows for an increase to cover inflation.

The new Senate proposal would peg military spending authority at $298 billion.

Hance and Loeffler each were elected to Congress in 1978.

"Whatever decision he makes will be his own," said Loeffler of Hance's consideration of the governor's race. "I always campaign in a positive way. If I can't win in an upbeat way, then I shouldn't be there."

Before he left, however, the envelopes printed with "Loeffler for Governor" and a mailing address were handed out along with the appeal, "I need your support, particularly your financial support."

STARS

At the time, he and other scientists were nearly certain such material orbited four of those stars: Vega, Beta Pictoris, Epsilon Eridani and Fomalhaut.

Another analysis by Aumann showed IRAS would be unable to detect material that might surround dimmer stars, suggesting many more "proto-solar systems" might exist than can be detected with current technology.

"There's a good chance that half the (2,000 known) nearby stars eventually will be found to have material around them in significant quantities that's either dusty or has accreted into planets," Aumann said.

Don McCarthy, a University of Arizona astronomer who last year observed the possible planet around Van Biesbroeck 8, said he agreed with Aumann.

"It's a fair prediction that most stars have material around them in the form of debris or planets," he said. "It could easily be the result of a common process."

IRAS is capable of detecting such material, particularly dust, because it measures infrared radiation, or heat, emitted by the material as it is warmed by the central star.

Homeless man lives under Capitol steps

By JOAN MOWER

WASHINGTON (AP) — A 74-year-old homeless man named Stacy Abner has lived for a decade under the steps of the U.S. Capitol, sleeping and eating within feet of where the country's leaders carry on the nation's business.

"He's like anything on Capitol Hill for a long time — it gets to be kind of a fixture," said Capt. Bob Howe, a spokesman for the U.S. Capitol police.

Abner keeps a bedroll, two folding chairs and cardboard boxes covered with black plastic under the portico at the Capitol's carriage entrance. His possessions are stacked neatly near a vent that spews warm air in winter.

By day, Abner, a World War II veteran, sits outside with two handwritten cardboard signs stating he seeks redress from the Veterans Administration for "war-inflicted diseases" of gout, rheumatic fever and hypertension.

Abner said he lives from handouts people give him — House Majority Leader Jim Wright, D-Texas, has provided shirts; goes to the bathroom in the Capitol building, and takes showers at various places he wouldn't name.

"I'm just like the rest of the wild animals," he said. "Whatever I can find, I take; whatever I can't, I do without."

While many people on Capitol Hill know Abner, others were shocked to learn of his 10-year presence, confirmed by police officers and workmen.

"That's amazing," said Rep. Ted Weiss, D-N.Y., a congressman with a long interest in the plight of the homeless.

As Abner lounged on the stairs facing the Supreme Court one sunny morning, Sen. Mack Mattingly, R-Ga., bounded past him. Mattingly said he'd never heard of the homeless man.

But Sen. Charles Mathias, R-Md., chairman of the Senate committee that oversees the Capitol grounds, said he was familiar with Abner's situation. "As you know, there are other places he could go, other arrangements could be made."

Forcibly removing Abner, however, is not the answer, Mathias said. "Letting him stay turns out to be a compassionate thing to do," he said.

In fact, Abner said he has been jailed 28 times since he came to Washington, and his most recent arrest was last January "because I wouldn't leave the Capitol."

Authorities said Abner's arrests have stemmed from his refusal to move from the Capitol's east front when that area has been closed as a special security precaution, such as a presidential appearance.

Day to day, though, Howe said, "Stacy's not a nuisance at all."

Abner insisted he is unhappy with his situation, but VA officials and police officers are perplexed by his behavior.

"I'd like to live wherever I please and I don't have the choice," said Abner, dressed in a unmatched cotton shirt and trousers, leather shoes with no socks and a knit ski cap. His family is "scattered all over the country," he said.

Abner said he has been unsuccessful in his attempts to receive what he believes is fair compensation from the VA for his illnesses.

But VA official Mary Brown said Abner qualified in 1982 for benefits of $114 a month. Those benefits ceased in October 1984 because Abner refused to cash any of the checks, she said.

"He's a problem at times," said VA spokesman Chuck Lucas, adding that VA counselors have tried, unsuccessfully, to work out a compromise with Abner.

Meantime, Abner continues his daily routine, which probably varies only slightly from that of the estimated 5,000 to 15,000 homeless people in the nation's capital.

Stacy Abner, a 74-year-old homeless man, sits on the steps of the Capitol in Washington holding his signs earlier this week. Abner has lived for a decade under the steps of the Capitol, sleeping and eating within feet of where the country's leaders carry on the nation's business.

Researchers inject animals with human growth gene

NEW YORK (AP) — Researchers have for the first time inserted a human growth gene into rabbits, pigs and a sheep in a controversial step that could lead to bigger, more feed-efficient and disease-resistant livestock, a report says.

It is the first demonstration that a foreign gene injected into a fertilized egg of a large mammal will be taken up by the growing animal. Robin Lovell-Badge of London's Medical Research Council Mammalian Development Unit wrote in an article accompanying the report in the British journal Nature.

The report deals with research at the University of Pennsylvania, the University of Washington and the United States Department of Agriculture. The USDA was sued in October by groups opposed to research on transferring human genes into livestock. The suit is pending in U.S. District Court.

A gene is the basic unit of heredity that issues marching orders to plant and animal cells.

The researchers worked with the gene that orders production of growth hormone in humans, joined to a portion of a mouse gene that can turn the human gene on. That combination gene had already been shown to "express" itself, or settle in and go to work, in laboratory mice.

Summertime brings lawn problems

Along with hot temperatures, the summer season in Texas may bring special lawn problems — drought, weeds, insects and disease.

These lawn problems can cause concern for homeowners unless accurate diagnosis and proper treatment takes place before they become severe.

Dry spots, thin turf and weeds can result from improper watering, fertilizing and mowing practices. Follow recommended cultivation practices before applying a chemical to correct lawn problems.

Drought stress most often occurs in mid-summer and shows up as wilted, discolored turf. Adjust watering schedules to wet the soil to a depth of 8 to 10 inches, and water only when grass shows symptoms of moisture stress.

Also, raise mowing heights one-half inch to improve drought tolerance in mid-summer. Lack of nitrogen or iron often creates a lawn problem. Grass with a nitrogen deficiency may have a pale color and be heavily infested with weeds. A light application of a nitrogen fertilizer will improve the lawn's appearance.

Grass leaves that have yellow stripes paralleled to the leaf margins may be deficient in iron. A foliar application of iron sulfate at six ounces per 1,000 square feet will usually solve this problem.

White grubs feed heavily on lawns during mid-summer, and their damage resembles drought injury. If turf does not respond to applications of water, suspect these insects. Grubs can damage all lawns.

White grubs can be controlled with insecticides. Water the lawn thoroughly prior to applying an insecticide for white grub control and follow with another watering, as grubs feed in the soil.

Farmer fights rising costs, stable prices

FLOYD, Texas (AP) — Maynard Cheek and his wife, Hilda, have farmed for 30 years on his old family farm near his Hunt County town. They have raised cotton, milo and wheat on the 1,300-acre spread owned by his family since 1872.

And Cheek says he has seen iron prices stay virtually the same during these decades, while expenses have skyrocketed.

"In 1962, I had the second best cotton crop of all my time in the business. After it was over, I sat down with the calculator and I found that it cost me $265 an acre, and I got $258 an acre, losing $7 in the process."

"Even in this good year, I had to depend on a government subsidy to break even. My greatest cost per acre was interest on borrowed money," Cheek said.

The vicious cycle of rising costs and small increase in price for farm products has forced Cheek and others into a credit-based existence, a downward spiral that gets worse each year he says.

"This is a credit-based life. In my mother's time, if you made your crop with a profit and no loans from the bank, you were successful. Now, virtually every farmer and rancher bases his life on credit," Cheek said.

"I ONLY know one or two farmers who have surplus cash at harvest time now. Harvest time comes, and you pay the notes and hope you can pay them off. We do not save money for the next year anymore because we never get our loans paid off from the last year. It's a downward spiral for most of us. No bank wants the farmer anymore."

He says the increased prices consumers pay for farm goods have not trickled back to the farm to any great extent.

"Wheat is the most dramatic example, since 1954, wheat prices are still about the same now. With wheat, five percent of each dollar spent on a loaf of bread goes to the farmer. You could give your wheat to the store, and it wouldn't make any difference in the consumer's price. A man's cotton dress shirt goes for about $40 now, and the farmer gets maybe 15 cents of that. Somebody is making a killing, not the farmer."

"We farmers keep hearing about free markets, but there is no such thing anymore. I believe 15 percent of the Department of Agriculture's budget goes to the farmer, all the rest of it goes to many other such programs such as food stamps. I do not want to specifically pick on the food stamp program. The main point is that the farmer gets so little."

He says in recent years the financial strain has begun to tell in his family's lifestyle.

"WE DO not have a boat or a recreational vehicle. We used to take a trip every year or so, but in the last five years it has been impossible. We rarely go out to eat," Cheek said. "If things continue like this, in 15 or 20 years, farms will be taken over by the big corporations and it's anyone's guess what will happen to food prices in the super market then."

City dwellers often see the farm as a place of quiet solitude, where the pace is slow and life is good.

But Cheek says the farmer in today's business climate is under stress — worrying about the bills, even taking the ultimate step, suicide, in the face of pressure.

"Living with the constant stress of paying back loans is taking the joy out of farming today. I get real depressed at times, but come out of it later. I know one man, four or five years ago, who took his life over debt," Cheek said.

For more than a century, the Cheek farm has been a family tradition carried through the generations by a love of the land and of the practice of farming.

"I care for the soil. I want to leave it in a better condition than I found it. After generations of farming it gets to be a part of you," Cheek said.

WHETHER THE Cheek legacy continues is not yet certain. There is a daughter, Jennifer, but a son died in an auto accident several years ago.

Perhaps the depth of Cheek's feelings on the farming situation might be understood by his answer as to whether or not he would have wanted his son to take his place on the farm.

"I have been a farmer my whole life, and I inherited this way of life from several generations of my family, however, the way things are going, I could not ask my son to follow in my footsteps."

"This type of life is a good profession, but you have to make a living."

Corpus Christi may win USS Wisconsin

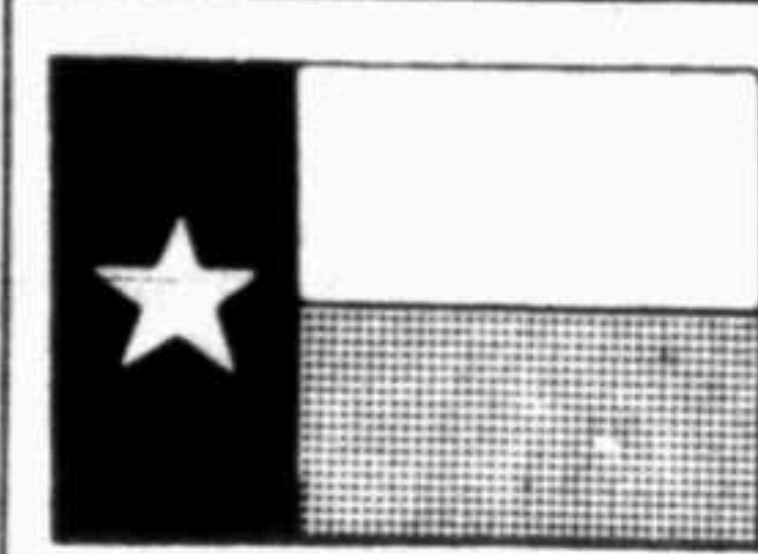

HOUSTON (AP) — The Houston-Galveston site has been dropped from consideration as the home port for the battleship USS Wisconsin but Corpus Christi is still in contention, according to reports published today.

In a copyrighted story, The Houston Post reported that unidentified sources in Washington said the competition for the multi-million dollar battleship sweepstakes centers around Corpus Christi, Pascagoula, Miss. and Pensacola, Fla.

"Unless some dramatic change is made at the presidential level, at the secretarial level this is the way the deal is," one source said.

All Texas congressmen contacted said they have not been informed as to the Navy's final decision.

But U.S. Rep. Solomon Ortiz, D-

STATE

Corpus Christi, told the Corpus Christi Caller-Times that city had been chosen.

Navy Director of Public Affairs, Captain James B. Finklestein, however, said:

"The decision has been made and the only thing remaining is to tie up some loose ends. The Navy has not released anything on Corpus Christi or anything else."

The Navy had previously said the announcement would be made around the Fourth of July, but a source in Washington Thursday said that the announcement would come Tuesday.

The winner has been chosen by Navy Secretary John Lehman, sources said, but a formal announcement will not be made until Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger "signs off" on the decision — delaying any announcement until next week.

The Post reported the Houston-Galveston port lost the home port bid because of problems in reaching solid ground to set a foundation at Galveston's Fort Point and because of the site's distance to deep water.

The six Gulf Coast ports that have been considered for the new naval base, which is to be the home of the refurbished battleship Wisconsin and its five support ships include: Corpus Christi, Houston-Galveston, Lake Charles, La.; Pascagoula, Miss.; Mobile, Ala.; and Pensacola, Fla.

The finalists were selected from 16 sites that submitted proposals.

Gunn will quit TDC chair; Boost Loeffler for governor

AUSTIN (AP) — Robert Gunn, alleging Gov. Mark White interfered in the selection of a new prison director, has said he will quit as chairman of the Texas Board of Corrections.

Gunn, a Republican, also said that after resigning he will support U.S. Rep. Tom Loeffler, who is considering a run for Texas governor next year.

A majority of the nine-member board was believed to have favored Steve Martin, the Texas Department of Corrections' former general counsel, to succeed Raymond Procnier as director, the Houston Chronicle reported.

Procnier resigned earlier this month to retire.

But the panel voted unanimously last week to promote Lane McCotter, Texas Department of Corrections deputy director for operations, to the top job. The vote came after White met with four members he had appointed to the board.

White last year unsuccessfully tried to convince the board to hire McCotter as director instead of Procnier.

"I feel that prisons and politics don't mix," Gunn said. "It's the role of an executive (governor) to take the advice of his advisers and experts, which should be the board of directors."

STATE in brief

NAACP convention ends with cheers

DALLAS (AP) — The 76th annual NAACP convention ended on a jubilant note with delegates cheering the news a Senate panel had rejected the nomination of William Bradford Reynolds to a top Justice Department post.

As the organist in the convention hall pounded out a rousing chorus of "We Shall Not Be Moved," more than 2,000 delegates rose from their seats en masse, clapping and cheering at the defeat Thursday of a man they consider an arch-foe of civil rights.

The Judiciary Committee on Thursday refused to send the nomination of William Bradford Reynolds to the No. 3 post in the Justice Department to the full Senate, a move that likely dooms his appointment as associate attorney general.

"His promotion would not have served the interests of justice, nor morality, nor logic nor truth," Benjamin L. Hooks, executive director of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said at a press conference later in the day.

The NAACP regards Reynolds, the director of the department's civil rights division, as one of the Reagan administration's chief hatchet-men in a campaign to "erode" the civil rights gains of the past 20 years and made the denial of his promotion its top priority.

Editors subpoenaed

EDINBURG, Texas (AP) — A grand jury looking into claims that some Edinburg Consolidated School District funds may have been mishandled has heard from the publisher of a newspaper that attributed the alleged mishandling to an unidentified source.

James V. Mathis, editor and publisher of the Edinburg Daily Review, testified before a Hidalgo County grand jury Thursday afternoon.

Mathis had feared before he went into the grand jury room that he would be asked to reveal the unnamed source in the March 31 article, but said he was not asked.

Mathis and Managing Editor Gilbert R. Tagle, who wrote the article, were subpoenaed, but only Mathis testified and was not asked to reveal the source.

The story in The Review dealt with Superintendent Jose Peralez giving the newspaper expense receipts and records for some teachers who attended a bilingual conference in San Francisco March 13-17.

Peso plunge puzzling

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — Bankers say they are baffled at the Mexican peso's latest plunge along the U.S.-Mexico border, where the currency is being exchanged for as much as $22 to the dollar.

From California to Texas, the peso's value has decreased by as much as 60 pesos in about six weeks, with exchange rates going from about 250 pesos to the dollar in mid-May to an average of 315 to the dollar this week.

"There's not a lousy explanation of any kind," said Don Shuffstall, vice-president for international banking and industrial development at MBank in El Paso, which was buying pesos Thursday at 314 to the dollar.

In the past, when border exchange rates have increased, fears of another peso devaluation by the Mexican government or of an oil price change have been blamed.

But Shuffstall said this decline has "really got a lot of people mystified."

Saying he had spoken with other bankers and with a U.S. Embassy officer in Mexico City, Shuffstall said, "No one knows what's behind this."

Gifts to rebuild mosque

HOUSTON (AP) — A coalition of Houston-area religious leaders condemned the recent bombing of a Moslem mosque and called for religious groups to help pay for repairs.

The bombing is believed to be in retaliation for the TWA hostage incident in Beirut.

"We...join together to express our deep sorrow at the recent bombing of the Islamic mosque," the religious leaders said in a statement released Thursday. "This act is repugnant and violates the central thesis of American democracy, that we are one nation under God."

"We of the Christian, Jewish and Muslim communities view an attack on any house of worship as an attack on all of us."

Swedish mothers find it difficult to stay at home

By JOHAN RAPP

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Monica Kullman, 29, wanted to stay at home as a housewife and mother. But this is Sweden, and Mrs. Kullman complains that the socialist government, intent on achieving what it sees as equality of the sexes, is pressuring her to look for work.

Mrs. Kullman's campaign to remain a housewife went public when she appealed to the courts to try to obtain welfare payments to supplement her husband's below-subsistence-level salary. She was turned down, told that such support is given only on condition that the applicant is "at the labor market's disposal."

Welfare officials told her to find a job and put her two small children in day-care centers, Mrs. Kullman says.

But, she says, "I did not have children to give them away."

Her case points up a simmering controversy in Swedish society, where opinion polls indicate most women would prefer to stay at home with their children, but if they did many of their families would fall below the Swedish poverty line, estimated at 125,000 kronor, or $13,500, in annual income.

Because of an economic and tax system long geared toward leveling out individual wealth, the salaries of many Swedes hover just below or above that level.

Since equal-rights measures were legislated in the 1970s, Swedish women have been leaving their traditional household domain in large numbers.

A recent government study said this nation of 8.3 million people now has the highest proportion of gainfully employed women in the Western world. Almost 80 percent of working-age women have jobs, compared with 61 percent in the United States and 35 percent in the Netherlands, another small European country often considered socially progressive.

At the present rate, some experts calculate, the era of the Swedish housewife will be history within 10 years.

Sweden's political leadership praises the trend.

"Families with one bread-earner have almost disappeared in less than 20 years," one top woman politician, Immigration Minister Anita Gradin, said on International Women's Day, March 8. "Two supporters per family has become the norm in our country."

But the success of the women's liberation movement here discourages some Swedish wives.

"Most female politicians are careerists with no urge to stay at home," said housewife Catarina Runke, a leading member of Familjekampanjen, a politically independent organization struggling for its version of the Swedish family's best interests.

"They of course find it hard to represent us," Mrs. Runke told The Associated Press.

Said another group member, Barbro Wass, "Our arguments are discarded with negative terms, such as 'reactionary talk,' or that we strive for a return to the 'traditional female role.'"

The Swedish Parliament defines the poverty level not as an income total, but in terms of the housing, food, clothing and other necessities it considers adequate for subsistence.

A family whose resources are deemed to fall below that level is eligible for public-assistance payments beyond the standard government grants, such as the $520 annual per-child allowance everyone receives here.

The conservative Moderaterna party currently estimates that in high-priced Sweden a breadwinner has to earn the equivalent of at least $13,500 annually, on top of government grants, to support a family above the poverty line.

This means, for instance, that a teacher or an average industrial worker cannot support a spouse and two children on one salary.

A 1983 Moderaterna report concluded that even Sweden's prime minister, Olof Palme, would qualify for welfare payments on his prime ministerial salary at that time, $24,300, if he had to support a family with four children.

Replica of Greek trading vessel to sail Aegean

PERAMA, Greece (AP) — Greek officials and American archaeologists last week launched a full-size replica of a 2,200-year-old trading ship discovered buried in silt off northern Cyprus. The replica will sail the Aegean this summer to give clues about ancient sailing methods.

Culture Minister Melina Mercouri and American archaeologist Susan Katzev swung a bottle of Greek champagne against the bow of the replica of the vessel that had sailed the Aegean Sea in the time of Alexander the Great.

"This is a pioneering experiment in archaeology... We wish the Kyrenia II success in her scientific purpose and her voyages in the Aegean," Ms. Mercouri told a crowd gathered for the launching ceremony in this suburb of Athens' port of Piraeus.

The broad-beamed boat, its wooden hull gleaming with black pitch to keep it watertight, slipped into Saronic Gulf while a flotilla of yachts and tugboats tooted their sirens.

The ship's square cotton sail billowed in a light breeze as it was towed to a nearby marina.

Mrs. Katzev and her husband, Michael, vice president of the Institute of Nautical Archaeology at Texas A&M University, were members of an international underwater archaeology team that raised the original Kyrenia ship from the seabed off Cyprus in 1969.

"We want to work out how the ship was handled by ancient sailors," he said.

The vessel is a faithful copy of a ship that was sunk "probably by pirates" off northern Cyprus around 300 B.C. at the end of a voyage south through the eastern Greek islands carrying a cargo of wine, said Katzev, from Arlington, Va., in an interview with The Associated Press.

About 6,000 fragments of the hull were painstakingly pieced together before the vessel and its cargo of 46 amphorae, or terracotta wine jars, went on display in Kyrenia Castle now in the Turkish-held sector of the divided island.

"We think it was the equivalent of a modern tramp trader picking up cargoes around the Aegean islands," Katzev said. About 75 percent of its hull had survived in the seabed silt. Built in a commercial shipyard in Perama, using ancient shipwrights' methods, the Kyrenia II is 44.7 feet long with a 13.65-foot beam.

"That broad beam made it remarkably stable. It could carry about 20 tons of cargo, stowed between two small decked-in areas between prow and stern," Katzev said.

Made of Greek island pine and beech, with its keel cut from a single curved pine log 29 feet long, the replica took 32 months to construct and cost more than $80,000.

The planing was joined with tongues of beech slipped into grooves in the 2-inch thick timbers, but more than 4,000 thick copper nails were used later to attach internal wooden supports.

Katzev said the ship probably could sail at "four or five knots with a good wind." It is maneuvered in harbor with giant oars and is steered by two rudder oars at the stern.

"The only remains of the sail we found were a few lead reefing attachments," he said, so the mast and rigging of the replica was based on ancient vase paintings and classical literary sources "and we'll have to experiment."

Hopeful salesman sandwiches in resume

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Peter Golden was new in town, unemployed and inexperienced. Then came the sign.

He's still relatively new in town, still unemployed and still inexperienced. But the sign made a difference.

Early in June, Golden pounded the pavement for three days in the heart of Los Angeles' financial district. Strapped to his shoulders was a wooden sandwich board, advertising his qualifications as a salesman.

He started setting up interviews promised by employers who had stopped to read his sidewalk resume. On it, the 27-year-old college graduate described himself as dependable, creative, personable and aggressive.

By Monday, Golden had been on 17 interviews, pitching his qualifications in more traditional arenas. He's been offered two jobs, but turned them down because they weren't in the telecommunications or computer field, he said.

Second interviews have been scheduled on some of the jobs he is more excited about.

De la Madrid urging border development

CIUDAD JUAREZ, Mexico (AP) — President Miguel de la Madrid has launched a "wide ranging" project along Mexico's 1,760-mile northern border with the United States to promote economic and social development in the region.

Meanwhile, the families of two Laredo, Texas, men held hostage in Beirut hope to meet with the president today in Nuevo Laredo to urge him to make a strong plea for the freedom of the hostages.

"It seems that everything is going for a meeting tomorrow," Javier Santos, brother-in-law of hostage Vicente Garza said Thursday evening. "We have met with his advance people."

Although he mentioned no specific figures, de la Madrid said Thursday in Ciudad Juarez the government will provide financial aid to help in developing the region. He said the project is going to be carried out on three levels — the federal, the state and the municipal.

WORLD

"I call on the enthusiastic participation of all northern border people so that in solidarity and united we can achieve the ambitious goals that we propose today," he said in a speech at a rally in the Convention Center here.

De la Madrid's Institutional Revolutionary Party, which faces congressional elections and elections for governors of seven states July 7, has been in power in Mexico for more than 50 years.

He claimed the Mexican political system "not only is a political-electtoral democracy, but a social democracy in that we advocate the participation of majority groups in the daily process of decision-making, in a climate of absolute respect for individual and group freedoms."

"That is why, we Mexican, do not need to be taught lessons on democracy from abroad," he said.

During his two-day trip, de la Madrid was also visiting Tijuana and Nuevo Laredo.

Earlier Thursday in Tijuana, de la Madrid said the region of northern Mexico can be a key platform for exports to the American market.

The president noted that the zones on both side of the border are interdependent. "We depend on it (the southwestern United States), but they also depend on us," he said.

De la Madrid said Mexicans working in the United States help the American economy to be more competitive and to develop.

He also said there is a need for the northern border zone to become better integrated with the rest of Mexico.

Problems in the supply system for basic goods that had been acquired in the United States became evident after the 1982 devaluation of the peso suddenly made it more difficult for Mexicans to shop outside the country.

The trip came as exchange houses on the U.S. side of the border sold the peso for record low values.

Mexican president Miguel de la Madrid stands at attention as the Mexican national anthem is played at the Juarez National Airport after he landed at the border city Thursday.

Maria Elena Heyes, administrator of Chapultepec Park Zoo in Mexico City, holds the body of one of the twin pandas, which died Thursday.

Two-day-old panda dies

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The tinier of 2-day-old twin pandas, a pink furry baby that had been ignored by its mother, has died in Chapultepec Park Zoo, the zoo's administrator said.

The baby, which fit in the palm of a hand, lived for 37 hours in the care of zoo employees, who held it around the clock and caressed it.

Ying-Ying, the mother, who was in fine condition Thursday, had focused all her attention on the firstborn, administrator Maria Elen Hoyo said at a news conference.

"She's a sensational mother," Ms. Hoyo said Thursday. She said Ying-Ying probably did not even realize she had a second baby, which was born two hours and five minutes after the first on Tuesday afternoon.

"When she saw the second one it seemed like a strange thing," Ms. Hoyo said. Ying-Ying has been holding the first baby continuously to her chest and licking it, Ms. Hoyo said.

She said the firstborn, about twice the size of the one that died, seemed to be doing well.

Ms. Hoyo held in her palm the dead baby panda, which was covered with fine white hairs and looked like a little pink rat. She pointed out its minuscule but completely-formed claws and ears.

"This was not a case of prematurity," she said.

She said the zoo would conduct an autopsy to determine the cause of death but a definite answer was not expected for about a month. Samples will be sent to the U.S. National Zoo in Washington to compare results, she said.

The smaller panda weighed 2.4 ounces and measured 5.6 inches at birth.

Ms. Hoyo said it suffered a "respiratory crisis" early Wednesday night, during which it was gulping air through its mouth instead of breathing through its hair-breadth nostrils. It died quietly at 4:10 a.m. Thursday, she said.

She said the baby was believed to be male, although it was impossible to determine the sex with complete accuracy this early.

Neither of the twins had a name yet.

Eight members of a medical team at the zoo had taken turns holding the baby and feeding it serum, formula milk and dog's milk through a tiny plastic tube.

The baby was held against the person's chest and caressed when it was awake. When it slept, it was held with both hands in an apron pocket.

"It needs the warmth of the mother and when that is lacking, human warmth," Patricia Reyes, a zoo veterinarian, had said Wednesday, explaining the procedure.

An incubator was on hand for emergencies, in case extra warmth was needed, but Ms. Hoyo said it was never used.

Ms. Reyes said that in Madrid, the other case of panda twins born in captivity outside China, one of them also died.

Ying-Ying was in isolation Thursday with the other newborn and zoo officials were leaving the experienced mother alone. Ms. Hoyo said it would be six months before zoo doctors touch it.

Ms. Reyes said the panda father, Pe-Pe, would not be involved at all in caring for the baby, but that he seemed to take notice of the birth.

"When he heard the baby's cries, he started walking round and round in circles," she said.

Pursuing peace

The search for peace never follows an easy path. On the contrary, it's often difficult to follow and to achieve, and there are numerous obstacles. But the willingness to try should always be cherished.

Hand-in-hand with that reality is the knowledge that one of the time-honored prescriptions for achieving accord between two nations is first to find an area or two of conceded agreement and to progress from there to the divisive issues.

The Reagan administration has been pursuing that course of late — notably with a measure of success — in America's dealings with Soviet Russia although the two camps are still miles apart on arms limitation policies.

After six months of negotiations, the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. have agreed to resume the agricultural cooperation which was broken off in 1979, when Soviet forces invaded Afghanistan. The revived accord, announced in Moscow, provides for the exchange of scientists and crop information. It's a small step, but a progressive one nevertheless.

Meanwhile, the Afghanistan issue itself has undergone discussions in Washington between U.S. State Department and Russian Foreign Ministry specialists. The little-heralded meeting gave some impetus to explorations of possible solutions to the Near East conflict.

By way of his encouragement of these moves, regardless how minor in scope, President Reagan has affirmed his convictions that the doors of communication must be kept open to all if nations are to survive and prosper.

Who knows? Down this rocky path the world may find that elusive peace.

Another View:

Latin debt danger

Chances are, if you checked the administration's public statements on Latin America, you'd find that an overwhelming majority dealt with radicalism in El Salvador and Nicaragua. It's an important subject, but there is a risk that the administration will become so preoccupied with it that less spectacular but more dangerous problems in the hemisphere will be neglected.

High on the list of dangers is foreign debt. Last year, Latin American nations forked over $27.6 billion in debt payments to foreign banks. Some of these countries are up to their ears in red ink. Brazil, for instance, the world's largest debtor nation, owes $100 billion; Argentina $47 billion.

Heavy debt threatens the security of these large, important countries at least as much as ideological struggles threaten stability in Central America. Countries that can't pay their bills eventually become sick and weak, vulnerable to right-wing generals or left-wing rebels who offer alluring (but defective) "rescue" programs. At the moment, Argentina's fragile democratic government is struggling to honor the country's debts, but the effort requires painful austerity measures that political opponents are exploiting.

In some countries, debt produces other woes. The Washington Post recently quoted one Latin American official as warning that some Andean nations such as Colombia were becoming so dependent on illegal drug exports that they might become corrupted and controlled by criminal syndicates.

The possibility of a drug-producing country coming under the control of a crime syndicate poses extraordinary and perhaps unique dangers to the United States. But even economic privation in Latin America can be costly to U.S. citizens. If the nations are shelling out nearly $28 billion a year to pay off foreign banks, they won't have much to develop their own economies or buy U.S. goods.

The debt problem is greatly worsened by overpopulation. Experts have estimated that the population of Central America is doubling every generation. That means the region will have to produce twice as many jobs, twice as many schoolrooms, twice as much of everything — or perhaps unofficially export a lot more people to the U.S. as illegal aliens.

In 1983, the Kissinger Commission on Central America recommended an $8 billion aid program to that region. But important help could be provided without increasing direct economic aid. For instance, Latin American countries should be given freer access to U.S. markets for goods like sugar, textiles and beef. Congress and President Reagan should get budget deficits under control, thereby reducing both domestic and foreign interest rates. Family planning assistance should be stepped up, to help these nations control the enormous demands on their social welfare systems.

Unless the imperiled countries can earn more money and cut their debts, they may fall prey to extremist reformers, no matter how much they wish to preserve or expand their democratic institutions. It's therefore time that administration and congressional leaders gave this problem more conspicuous and intense attention than it has thus far received.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Friday, June 28, the 179th day of 1985. There are 186 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History: On June 28, 1914, Austrian Archduke Francis Ferdinand and his wife, Sofia, were assassinated in present-day Sarajevo, Yugoslavia, by a Serbian revolutionary — the event which triggered World War I. Exactly five years later, the Treaty of Versailles was signed in France, officially ending the international conflict.

On this date: In 1778, Mary Ludwig Hays gained the name "Molly Pitcher" and a place in history by aiding American forces at the Revolutionary War Battle of Monmouth in New Jersey.

In 1836, the fourth President of the United States, James Madison, died.

In 1838, Britain's Queen Victoria was crowned in Westminster Abbey.

In 1939, Pan American Airways began regular transatlantic air service as the "Dixie Clipper" left Port Washington, New York, for Portugal.

In 1960, North Korean forces captured Seoul, South Korea.

In 1983, a section of bridge along Interstate 95 in Connecticut collapsed, killing three people.

Ten years ago: Argentine president Isabel Peron denounced labor leaders in a radio-television address for their growing opposition to her government's austerity plans.

Five years ago: Officials at Pennsylvania's Taree Mile Island nuclear plant began venting radioactive gas from the containment building of the damaged reactor. (The venting process, which lasted nearly two weeks, prompted the evacuation of hundreds of nearby residents.)

Thought for Today: "War would end if the dead could return." — Stanley Baldwin, British prime minister (1867-1947).

Finding Mengele not top priority

WASHINGTON — The most puzzling aspect of the Josef Mengele story was the strange reluctance of Israel to track down the death-camp doctor and bring him to justice.

Israel, after all, is the principal refuge of Holocaust survivors, including that pitifully small number who encountered the Auschwitz "Angel of Death" and lived to tell about it.

Likewise, the West German government did not exactly cover itself with glory in the 40-year search for Mengele. The Germans would undoubtedly be delighted to have the case officially closed.

Our associate Lucette Lagnado has interviewed officials of Mossad, Israel's respected intelligence service, who made clear that for two decades the search for the war criminal had a low priority.

Even after Mengele became the world's most wanted fugitive, with a price of $3.5 million on his head, the Israeli manhunt rested on the shoulders of a lone investigator. His name is Menachem Russek, and he works out of a tiny office in the Tel Aviv police headquarters.

For various reasons, the Israeli government made a conscious decision to leave Mengele in peace more than 20 years ago. Here are the curious details of the lukewarm Israeli search for the man who was held responsible for the deaths of 400,000

Jews:

— In the early 1960s, Israeli agents in Argentina were ready to grab Mengele after capturing Adolf Eichmann. The agents had Mengele's address in Buenos Aires and had studied his daily routine. But the successful kidnapping of Eichmann alarmed Mengele, and he skipped across the border into the Paraguayan jungles.

— In 1962-63, teams of Mossad agents scoured Europe and South America for clues to Mengele's hiding place. They located him in Paraguay. But Mengele's hideout was too remote and too heavily guarded.

— After 1963, with the resignation of Mossad chief Issar Harel, the Mengele search was all but called off, as the secret service concentrated on the growing threat of the Palestine Liberation Organization.

— In 1977, with the non-sense Menachem Begin as prime minister, Mossad was asked once again to find Mengele. But the doctor's trail had grown cold.

Israel concluded, meanwhile, that it needed all the friends it could get in the United Nations, even if it meant courting Latin American governments that might have harbored Mengele or known his whereabouts. The Israelis were also reluctant to pursue Mengele so aggressively that the Jewish communities in countries like Paraguay would be hurt by an anti-Israel backlash.

All these factors combined to bring the Israeli effort where it is today: in the hands of Russek, an aging and determined Tel Aviv cop and Auschwitz survivor. Most Israeli officials would be happy to have the Mengele case closed for good — the embarrassment of their efforts through the years buried along with the Nazi arch-criminal.

The West Germans obviously have even less reason to want Mengele alive, captured and brought to trial. Perhaps that's why West German prosecutor Hans Eberhard Klein was so eager to proclaim his belief that the skeleton exhumed in Brazil was probably Mengele. Throughout Bonn's halfhearted effort to bring Mengele to justice, Klein has taken refuge in the West German law that forbids him to search outside the country's borders.

The story of our own 25-year search for Mengele will appear in Parade magazine on Sunday, June 30.

FUDDLE FACTORY: You may have heard the adage that if you build a better mousetrap, the world will beat a path to your door. The federal bureaucrats, accordingly, tried to build a better mousetrap. They called it a "rodent elimination device." They wrote specifications that went on and on and on for 102,000 words.

...
THE REAGAN WAY: President Reagan is determined to break the back of the Sandinista regime and force free elections in Nicaragua. Secret intelligence reports claim that Nicaragua is on the brink of economic collapse. Reagan, therefore, believes this is a time to increase, not lessen, pressure on Nicaragua. He has offered what he believes were reasonable peace overtures.

Early Bush nod isn't likely

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. — By the time Vice President George Bush arrived at last weekend's Midwest Republican conference decrying premature attention to 1988 politics, his agents here had spent 24 hours pursuing an audacious but perhaps unattainable goal: getting him nominated for president without a contest.

Their avowed goal is to duplicate the 1960 feat of another vice president, Richard M. Nixon, in clinching the nomination before the primaries. Bush strategists count on drowning their only serious challenger, Rep. Jack Kemp, in a sea of endorsements — repeating the fate of his fellow New Yorker, Nelson Rockefeller, 28 years ago.

That may explain the unseasonal urgency with which Midwestern party leaders were summoned to be courted in Bush's suite on the 26th floor of the luxurious Amway Grand Plaza Hotel.

But Bush's reach may exceed its grasp. While the Midwest is "Bush Country," the vice president is not close to Nixon's 1960 party domination in an era when control of the apparatus is much less important anyway. Kemp, a familiar figure on the Republican hustings, is incomparably stronger than was newcomer Rockefeller. Indeed, the eye-opener here was not the fact that Bush leads but that Kemp is not hopelessly behind.

That was not the impression Bushites sought to convey in Grand Rapids. They claim Great Lakes domination in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota and especially Michigan — which is trying to edge past Iowa as the first delegate-selecting state. Michigan conservatives are coming into the Bush camp. Ronna Romney, Republican National Committeewoman (and the ex-governor's daughter-in-law), endorsed Bush recently after having been considered likely for Kemp. Bush's old liberals, typified by Peace Corps Director Loret Ruppe, are in the background.

Kemp's Michigan embryo, built by Detroit lawyer W. Clark Durant (head of the Reagan administration's Legal Services Board), is brushed off by the vice president's men. "Let Clark have his fun running around for Kemp," a Bush operative told us. "Everybody here will be together before long."

For now, however, the state's district chairmen are divided evenly between Bush and Kemp — reflecting division elsewhere in the Midwest. The party structure is not nearly so monolithic as it was even as recently as 1976.

State Rep. Penny Pullen, elected National Committeewoman from Illinois as a conservative insurgent last year, was wearing a Kemp button here. National Committeeman Frank Graves of Minnesota says he is neutral but is closely allied with Rep. Vin Weber, one of Kemp's closest allies. Graves described Kemp's stem-winding speech closing the conference as "magnificent."

By the judgment of his own handlers, Bush cannot measure up to Kemp as an orator. But he does have the vice presidential mantle, important in a party always partial to authority. Arriving here a day late because of the hostage crisis, he was obviously fatigued and burdened by a speech that read like im-tation Reagan.

Nevertheless, Bush had the Saturday night audience's rapt attention as he told them of how "the president has asked me to head up a group to develop responses to this scourge of terrorism" — reminiscent of (and more genuine than) the 1960 Nixon playing the president's trusted lieutenant. Even Clark Durant was seen clapping feverishly when Bush finished.

As vice president, however, Bush is a little restricted. He selected Midwestern leaders for a series of private meetings that were cancelled because of his late arrival, causing complaints from politicians excluded from sessions that were never held. In contrast, Kemp shook hundreds of hands at two crowded receptions, one at the Peninsular Club down the street from the hotel which conference organizers in vain urged the party faithful not to attend.

In this preliminary cattle show, Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole showed why his 1980 campaign was a fiasco. Accepting the Grand Rapids invitation too late to speak at lunch or dinner, he cooled his audience with extemporaneous hand-wringing about "a big, big, big growing problem in rural America" and the budget deficit.

The fourth prospect here, ex-Delaware governor Pierre du Pont, delivered the conference's most graceful and thoughtful speech. But he hardly swayed Midwestern skepticism of his presidential viability.

Du Pont did signal where the vice president's potential troubles lie. He warned that Richard Nixon's call for "eight more years" in 1960 was "a message of the past" and "not a message of hope," adding that a similar appeal would not work in 1988. There was a shot across George Bush's bow, previewing perils facing his campaign team's audacious quest for an uncontested nomination.

Rallying against bigotry

Let me express a disagreement with some Jewish organization or spokesman on a single issue, as I did recently on President Reagan's trip to Bitburg, W. Germany, and I get a flurry of letters from anti-Semites. They apparently are desperate for recruits. Well, such characters should save their stamps.

It is, of course, a characteristic of anti-Semites who are guilty of collectivist thinking, as all bigots are, that they think to be "for" or "against" a group means to agree or disagree 100 percent of the time on 100 percent of the issues. They also think that all Jews think identically on all issues. What stuff and nonsense. Who agrees with anybody on every issue? The simple-mindedness of bigots is amazing to behold.

Listen, anytime somebody starts a conversation by saying, "The Jews think this or the Jews believe that..." you can mark them down as someone who is ignorant of both Jews and Jewish thought.

I'm not sure Jews have any common characteristics but if they do, unanimity of opinion on almost any subject is not one of them. The diversity of thought is celebrated by Jewish humor. An old joke in Israel, for example, is that whenever three Israelis meet on a street corner, they end up forming five political parties. Jerusalem's mayor, Teddy Kollek, once wryly observed that after 3,000 years, Jews still cannot agree on who is a Jew.

Likewise, some Jews are religious and some are not. Like non-Jews, religious Jews differ with each other in their religious beliefs. Politically, Jews run the same gamut as non-Jews, from communist to libertarian. Some Jews are Zionists and some are not. As a matter of fact, Zionism has been a minority viewpoint among Jews which is why, when Palestine was first opened for Jewish immigration after World War I, relatively few European Jews went there. And even among Zionists, there is a split between the socialist Zionists and the Revisionist Zionists.

Jewish organizations, like non-Jewish organizations, frequently speak only for their officers and directors, sometimes for their membership, but never for non-members. Like all organizations, however, organization officers frequently claim to speak for all Jews. But in fact there is no single voice which can legitimately speak for all Jews, not in Israel, not in other countries, and certainly not worldwide.

About the only thing I can think of on which all Jews would agree is that, like everybody else, they do not wish to be persecuted or discriminated against.

The worst of the anti-Semites are the neo-Nazis some of whom try to peddle the lie that the Holocaust never happened. That's the equivalent of someone telling you the American Civil War never occurred. It is an example of the Nazi big lie — a lie so patently ridiculous on its face, so preposterous, that some people will believe it because they think no one would have the nerve to tell it.

These people know they are lying, though, and they are doing it with malice. There aren't many of these creeps around and not a single one in West Germany. You would think American neo-Nazis would be embarrassed to deny something that real Nazis have never denied.

So there will be no mistakes, even among the simple-minded, let me say again explicitly that if you are an enemy of Jews, you are my enemy, too. My Jewish friends and I may argue over various issues, as we have many times before, but we'll face you together. We'll face you together, not just as Jews and non-Jews bound together by our common humanity, but as Americans who despise a damned bully and a bigot.

No American, Jew or non-Jew, black or white, should ever have to live in fear of bully boys or hate mongers. If all Americans cannot at least agree on that and rally to the side of any fellow citizen threatened by such un-American slime, then we have indeed betrayed our heritage.

WORLD IN BRIEF

RAF helicopter, plane collide; Four believed dead

LONDON (AP) — A Royal Air Force Sea King helicopter with four people aboard collided with a C-130 Hercules plane on patrol 75 miles north of the Falkland Islands, the Defense Ministry said. The plane landed safely, but all aboard the helicopter were feared dead.

One body was recovered from the icy waters of the South Atlantic, ministry spokesman Eric Speakman said Thursday. An air and sea search for the other three was continuing, he said, but there was little hope of finding any of the three alive.

Speakman said the Hercules was on "normal patrol" of the Falkland Islands Protection Zone, which Britain has maintained around its 150-year-old colony off the coast of Argentina since the end of the 1982 Falklands War. The helicopter was on "routine operations" when the collision occurred, Speakman said.

Brazilian plane crashes

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — A Brazilian air force twin-engine turboprop crashed in northeastern Brazil, killing all four crew members on board, the air force said.

The Brazilian-made Bandeirantes plane crashed Thursday off the coast of Fortaleza, 1,694 miles north-east of Rio de Janeiro, during a routine maritime mission, an air force statement said. It said the cause of the accident was not known.

On Sunday, a Bandeirantes flying for a civilian airline crashed in the Amazon state of Mato Grosso, killing all 13 passengers on board.

Noblewoman abducted

ROME (AP) — Three masked men armed with submachine guns kidnapped an Italian noblewoman from her estate north of Rome, police reported.

Marchessa Isabella Guglielmi, 37, was abducted Thursday as she returned with a companion in the early morning hours to her home at Montalto di Castro, about 55 miles northwest of Rome.

The kidnapers struck her companion several times and drove off with the marchessa in her car, the report said.

Police found the car and one submachine gun near Montalto di Castro, where investigators believe another car had been waiting.

Depots opened for civilians

PEKING (AP) — China's army has opened 40 fuel depots and 145 military railway lines for civilian use under a campaign to reduce the size of the armed forces and intensify economic development, the official news agency Xinhua said today.

It said army oil depots in Peking and Canton "have provided large quantities of gasoline for local vehicles since the start of this year. In addition, army oil depots are now storing oil for local companies and leasing oil unloading facilities."

It said the opened rail lines, all in northeast China, are helping ease transport strains.

The Central Military Commission announced earlier this month that 1 million soldiers will be demobilized in the next two years. The army is believed about 4 million strong.

Rains trigger landslides

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Torrential rains triggered landslides and collapsed houses in southern coastal state of Kerala, killing at least 45 people and injuring more than 75 this week, news reports said today.

The rains, which began lashing the area last Sunday, rendered thousands of people homeless and submerged thousands of acres of farm land, the Press Trust of India reported.

The rain inundated at least two towns.

Man alleged to have aided Agca testifies

New York Times News Service

ROME — The former leader of an organization of Turkish migrant workers in West Germany, accused of conspiring with Mehmet Ali Agca to assassinate Pope John Paul II, said Thursday that he was "never the head of a terrorist organization called the Gray Wolves."

Musa Sedar Celebi, testifying for the first time in the five-week-old trial, said of the Gray Wolves organization: "I don't know if it exists. And if it does, it cannot be identified with the organization" in West Germany.

Celebi, 33 years old, was the head of the Federation of Turkish-Democratic Idealist Associations, a Frankfurt-based umbrella organization for Turkish migrant worker groups throughout Western Europe, until he was arrested in 1983 and charged with complicity in the 1981 attempt to assassinate the pope.

The federation says it is a cultural organization. European police officials say it is a front for right-wing extremist activities. Numerous Turks closely linked to it have been convicted in recent years of crimes such as drug trafficking.

Celebi took the stand Thursday after Agca, the prosecution's chief witness, who said Tuesday he would no longer testify, petitioned the court in writing to absent himself Thursday "to think things through further."

His lawyer, Pietro d'Ovidio, noted that Agca has disregarded similar declarations twice in the past.

Celebi is a central figure in the trial. He is charged with mobilizing groups in the Idealist Federation to give support to Agca, including transportation, housing and money, during Agca's travels in Europe in the months before he shot the pope.

Celebi is also charged with having met Agca twice, in December 1980 in Milan and in March 1982 in Zurich, to plan the shooting. He is also charged with having received 3 million German marks, about $1.2 million at the time, from the Bulgarian secret service, through another Turk, for the assassination effort.

Omer Bagci, a member of the federation's chapter in Olten, Switzerland, is accused of having acted as a courier to deliver the weapon to Agca that he used in the shooting.

The prosecution charges federation leaders like Celebi with abetting the assassination effort at the behest of Bulgaria, and thus of the Soviet Union. Their contacts with Bulgaria were said to have stemmed from what was described as that country's role as a clearing house for gun-running and drug trafficking by the Turks.

The federation is said to have extreme Islamic and Turkish nationalist views, which portray the pope as the spiritual leader of Western forces inimical to the interests of Turkey, which they seek to put in the Islamic sphere of the Middle East.

The idealist organizations first sprang up in Turkey under the aegis of the extreme right-wing National Action Party. When the military junta that seized power in Turkey in 1980 banned the party and associated groups, its center of activity shifted to migrant workers in Western European countries like West Germany, Switzerland and the Netherlands.

Agca has frequently altered details of the version of Celebi's actions he gave in pretrial testimony, prompting Celebi to petition the court to postpone his testimony until after Agca finished. Chief Judge Severino Santapichi denied the petition.

Santapichi questioned Celebi, who spoke alternately Italian and Turkish, through an interpreter, about the federation. The judge also questioned Celebi about money-raising activities.

County forecasts

Midland, Ector, Crane, Upton, Reagan, Glasscock, Andrews, Garza, Howard, Martin, Borden and Dawson: Tonight and Saturday clear. Low near 60 and high in upper 80s. Southeast wind 5 to 10 mph.
Sterling, Tom Green, Irion and Coke: Tonight and Saturday clear. Low in the lower 60s and high in the upper 80s. Light wind becoming south 5 to 10 mph Saturday afternoon.

Weekend forecast sunny, warm

From Staff and Wire Reports

Outdoorsmen planning weekend activities will not have to worry about the weather as the Midland area forecast calls for sunny skies and warm temperatures, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

Clear skies with a low near 60 tonight are expected to become sunny with a high in the upper 80s Saturday. Winds will be from the southeast at five to 10 mph through Saturday.

Thursday's high of 80 was 26 degrees below the record set in 1980. This morning's new record low of 52 degrees was nine degrees below the previous record set in 1983.

STATE

A cold front that pushed through most of Thursday continued to move very slowly over the southern tip of the state early this morning.

The front was over the northern sections of the lower Rio Grande Valley at 4 a.m. As it sagged southward, scattered showers and thunderstorms were developing over the southern sections of the state and also the Coastal Bend region.

Isolated showers occurred over Southeast Texas. High pressure had moved into west central Texas producing fair skies over the northern half of the state.

Winds were light and northerly over much of Texas early this morning. However, south winds of 5 to 10 mph had already developed again over the Panhandle and the northern High Plains.

At 4 a.m., temperatures were on the cool side with 50s and 60s being reported over the northern half of Texas. Towns along the Oklahoma border were reporting near-record lows for the date.

The National Weather Service said skies should be sunny today and Saturday for most of the state, with cloudy skies and scattered thunderstorms in South Texas.

NATION

Rain was widespread today across the South, New England and the nation's midsection while temperatures were below normal across the Plains.

Showers and thunderstorms spread across much of Louisiana and southwest Mississippi and were scattered across northern Florida, southern Georgia and along the mid-Atlantic Coast.

Rain was widespread across New England and showers were scattered across western Kentucky, Illinois and Wisconsin.

Evert-Lloyd fears not the mighty Martina

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — There was a time when Chris Evert Lloyd stepped onto a tennis court to face her great rival Martina Navratilova and knew instinctively she was going to lose.

Not any more.

Through what she described as "sheer hard work," Lloyd recently regained her No. 1 world ranking and now feels she could challenge Navratilova on any court, any surface.

Lloyd, going for her fourth Wimbledon singles crown, crushed Mary Lou Piatek in the first round of the All England championships Thursday and was due to return to the center court late today for her second match against Susan Mascarin.

"One thing that has changed in the last two years is that when I walk out and play Martina nowadays, I do not walk out there knowing I'm going to lose like I used to," she said. She beat me 13 times in a row and that gets to become a psychological disadvantage after a while. That went on for two years. This year, our records are 2-2. Now, I have to think I've got a good shot at her.

"IN A WAY, Martina herself has been my inspiration. When I was No. 2 in the world for all those years, I saw Martina improve her groundstrokes and mental approach. Instead of burying myself in the sand, I was determined to work just as hard. It hadn't been easy getting beaten all those years."

Before Lloyd was to appear, No. 3 men's seed Jimmy Connors of the United States was due to open up the day's center court proceedings against New Zealand qualifier Kelly Evernden, to be followed by John

Wimbledon

Lloyd, Chris' British husband, playing No. 13 Elliot Teltscher.

Lloyd then was to face Mascarin, with Ivan Lendl, the No. 2 men's seed, up next against Mike Leach of the U.S. in the day's fourth center court encounter.

Betsy Nagelsen was due to open the show on Court No. 1 against sixth-seeded Claudia Kohde-Kilsch of West Germany, with the two defending champions next up.

JOHN MCENROE was due to continue his defense of the men's crown against Nigerian Nduka Odior, who made a name for himself here two years ago when he reached the last 16 as a qualifier.

Co-top seed Navratilova then was slated to meet Australian Anne Mintner, to be followed by No. 5 Anders Jarryd of Sweden against American Scott Davis.

After hammering Piatek to a 6-1, 6-0 defeat, Lloyd spoke about her new approach to the pro game which she has graced for 13 years.

In addition to Lloyd's easy win over Piatek, there was a similarly overwhelming victory Thursday for Czechoslovakia's Hana Mandlikova, who won 6-0, 6-1 against countrywoman Iva Budarova.

IT WAS A far cry from last week's Eastbourne championships when Mandlikova suffered a shocking first-round defeat by Carina Karlsson of Sweden.

"I think that defeat helped me because now, I am more eager and was able to practice the things I did not do against Karlsson," said Mandlikova.

The major upset of Thursday's play came in the men's singles when Tom Gullikson edged 12th-seeded Miloslav Mecir of Czechoslovakia 4-6, 6-3, 6-4, 6-7, 6-3.

Other victorious seeds in the men's draw Thursday included No. 6 Pat Cash of Australia, No. 8 Kevin Curren of the U.S. and No. 15 Tomas Smid of Czechoslovakia.

Seeded players in the women's singles advancing to the second round were Manuela Maleeva of Bulgaria (4), Helena Sukova of Czechoslovakia (7), Steffi Graf of West Germany (11), Carling Bassett of Canada (13), Wendy Turnbull of Australia (14) and Kathy Rinaldi of the United States (16).

Connors advances easily

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Jimmy Connors swept into the third round of the men's singles at the Wimbledon tennis championships Friday with a 6-3, 6-2, 6-1 victory over Kelly Evernden, a qualifier from New Zealand.

Connors, the No. 3 seed from the United States, needed only one hour, 22 minutes to crush his 23-year-old opponent on Centre Court and become the first player to reach the third round.

Angels rumble, tumble again, is panic setting in?

From Staff Reports

The Midland Angels had just put three quick runs on the board on a pair of home runs in the first inning of their Texas League game with El Paso, but Diablos pitcher Chris Bosio said the pitch that then hit Kevin Davis in the ribs wasn't intentional.

Bosio said he was not aiming at Davis, "just trying to come underneath his hands." But he added, "That's baseball. If a guy doesn't like to get hit, he shouldn't be playing."

After the rhubarb, the Diablos pushed across three home runs of their own and a half-dozen doubles in a late-inning explosion that catapulted El Paso to a 14-7 victory over the Angels before 3,746 fans at Dudley Field in El Paso.

The loss was the Angels seventh straight in the second half, all on the road, after opening with a win over Beaumont. The win raised El Paso's second-half record to 6-2, and was the Diablos' 14th in 17 games to give them a one-half game lead over Beaumont in the Texas League West. El Paso won the first-half championship.

MIDLAND'S JAMES Randall started the first-inning action in El Paso. He cleared the center-field green monster for a two-run homer, and Reggie Montgomery followed with a solo shot to left, his 12th of the season.

Bosio didn't like the pattern and broke it with a slider to the ribs of Davis, who charged the mound with a Louisville slugger in his hands.

Davis faked a swing at Bosio's head then tackled him with a shoulder to the waist. Both benches cleared, including Midland second baseman Mark McLemore, who took hold of Bosio's upper body. After a long delay, Bosio, Davis and McLemore all were ejected.

Midland starter Doug Banning put a bubble around his three-run lead for three innings, allowing the Diablos only one hit. But El Paso's Glenn Braggs hit a home run in the fourth inning, and in the final four innings El Paso scored 13 runs on 14 hits including two left-field homers by Billy Joe Robidoux.

IN OTHER Texas League action Thursday night, Beaumont lost to San Antonio 4-3 but came back to win the second game of a double-header, 5-1; Jackson drubbed Tulsa 17-3 and Shreveport edged Arkansas 8-7.

ANGEL NOTES: In an attempt to bolster their sagging fortunes, the Midland Angels Thursday sent slumping starter Bryan Price, 24 with a 5.59 ERA in 12 starts, to Class A Redwood of the California League.

To take Price's spot on the roster, the Angels called up righthanded pitcher Ray Chadwick from Redwood.

Chadwick was on the disabled list since spring training for the Pioneers and made just one start, after spending all of last season with Class A Peoria of the Midwest League. He was 11-9 with a 3.99 ERA in 1984. He was a 16th-round selection in the 1983 free agent draft.

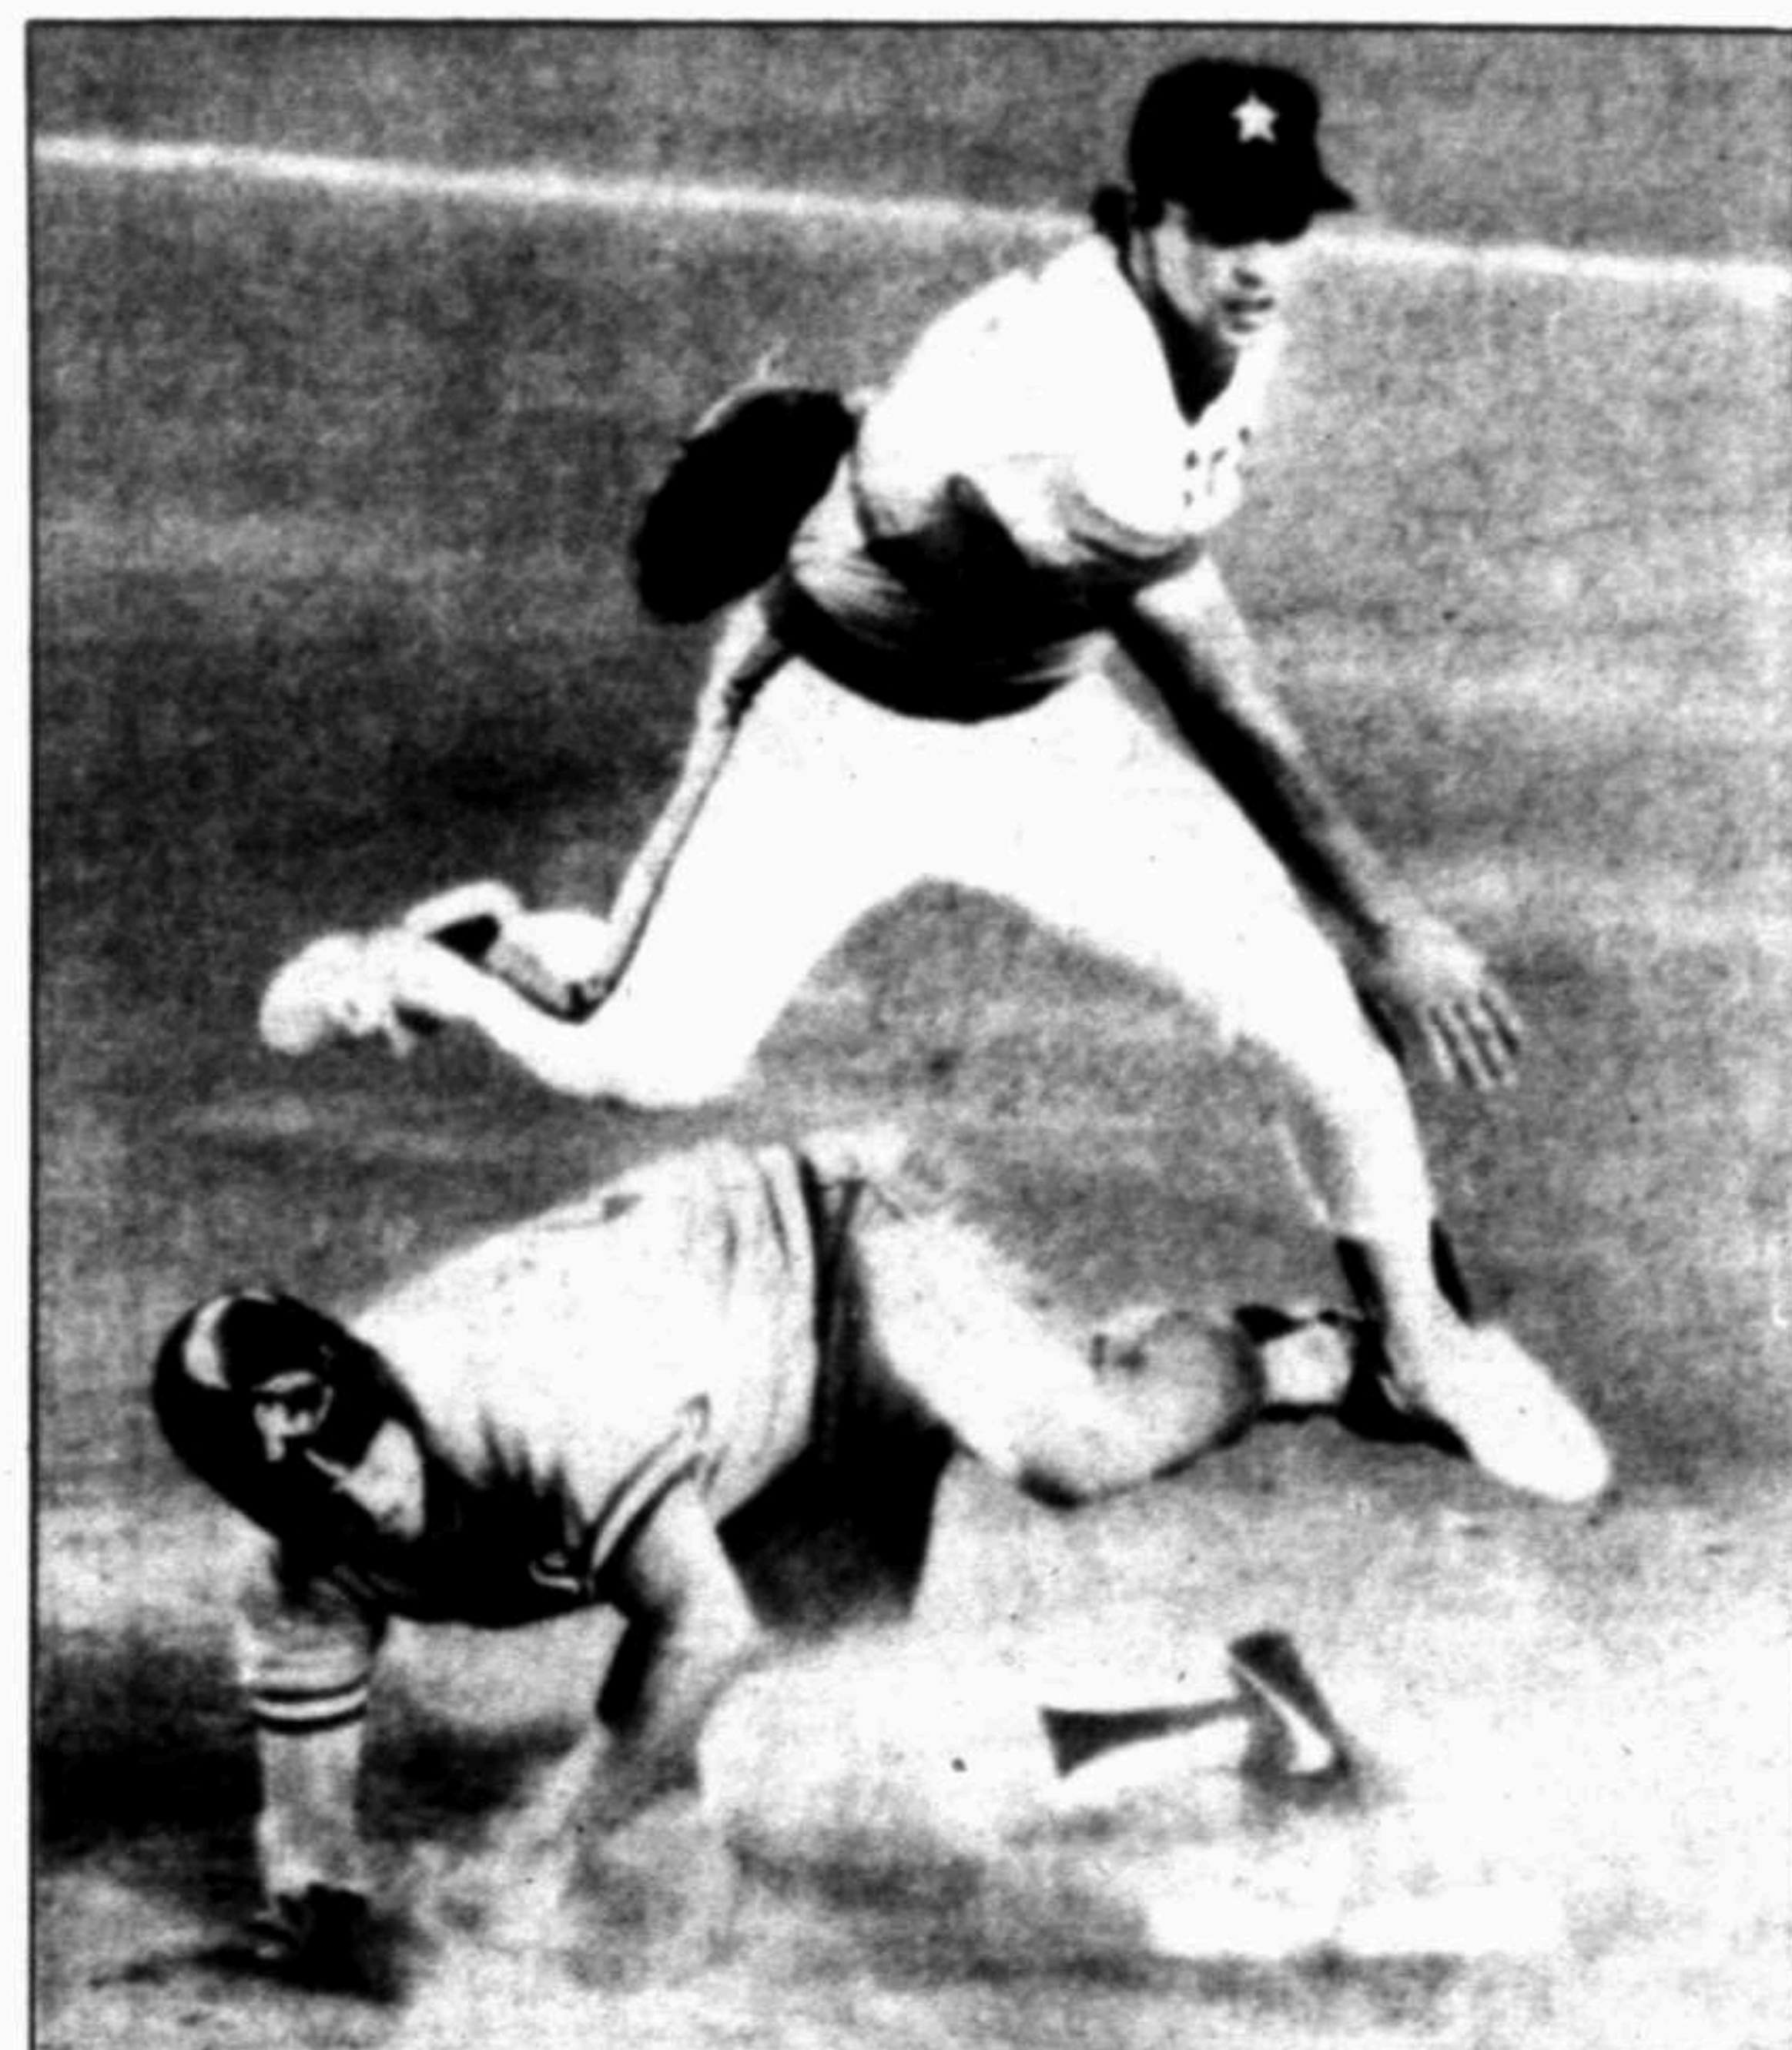

With starters Don Timberlake and Ken Angulo on the disabled list and Bob Kipper on a day-to-day basis because of back spasms, Maddon expects Chadwick, "a power pitcher with good breaking stuff," to take his first turn in the rotation on Saturday in El Paso.

REGULAR SECOND baseman Mark McLemore took a few days off after taking a ground ball on the side of his head in Beaumont. Newly recalled utility infielder Greg Steen stepped in to take his spot. Steen, the Angels' 24th pick in the 1983 draft from Arizona State, can play both middle infield positions.

Maddon was hoping to pick up some batting punch to replace the

The Braves' Bruce Benedict trips up Houston second baseman Bill Doran preventing the double play in Thursday night baseball action.

Ryan: slumbering Astros must wake up

NL Roundup

HOUSTON (AP) — Nolan Ryan says the 1985 season will be a thing of the past unless the Houston Astros shake off their doldrums soon.

Ryan, 8-5, gave up three runs on eight hits while walking four and striking out seven in a seven-inning stint Thursday night, when the Atlanta Braves were beating the Astros 4-1 for a sweep of a three-game series.

"If we continue to play the way we have the last 10 days, this will be a short season," Ryan said. "The team has been flat, and we can't afford to get 8 to 10 games down with three teams ahead of us."

On the other hand, the sweep was beautiful for Atlanta, which was mired in a dismal losing streak of its own earlier in the season.

Bruce Sutter recorded his 14th save of the year and second in as many nights and Claudell Washington slammed his eighth home run of the year to lead the Braves, who won four in a row for the first time since June of last year.

The Astros now have lost nine of 13, including consecutive three-game series in the Astrodome to Los Angeles and Atlanta.

The Braves grabbed a 3-0 lead after three innings with a single run in the second and two more in the third.

Consecutive singles by Terry Harper and Ken Oberkell and two infield groundballs netted the second inning tally. A single by Rafael Ramirez, a double by Dale Murphy, a sacrifice fly by Bob Horner and an infield ground out accounted for two runs in the third for the Braves.

Washington completed the Braves' scoring with a lead off homer off Astros relief pitcher Bill Dawley.

Left-hander Zane Smith upped his record to 4-4 going the first five innings.

An RBI single by Bill Doran in the fifth inning, scoring Mark Bailey, who had doubled, gave the Astros their lone run.

Smith gave way to Jeff Dedmon, who pitched two scoreless innings, and Sutter went the final two innings.

Expos 4, Pirates 2

Tim Burke pitched two innings of scoreless relief and Jeff Reardon came on in the ninth inning to record his major league-leading 22nd save as Montreal defeated Pittsburgh.

Nicknamed "The Terminator," Reardon has blown only one lead this season in 31 appearances.

Tim Lincecum hit a two-run home run to pace the Montreal attack as the Expos made a loser of Larry McWilliams, 4-6. David Palmer, 6-6, got the win going the first six innings before tiring in the seventh.

Cardinals 4, Phillies 3

Willie McGee, the National League's leading batter with a .355 average, hit a triple, two singles, walked and scored three runs to pace St. Louis over Philadelphia and halt the Phillies' five-game winning streak.

Winner Kurt Kepshire, 5-5, pitched 6 2/3 innings, giving up four hits, striking out five and walking four. Loser Shane Rawley, 5-6, worked six innings.

Cubs 4, Mets 2

Ryne Sandberg, Billy Hatcher and Leon Durham homered and Rick Sutcliffe hurled a five-hitter to lead Chicago over New York. It was the Cubs' second straight triumph after suffering a 13-game losing streak which included five losses to the Mets.

Sutcliffe, 7-6, turned in his sixth complete game but was touched for home runs by George Foster and Clint Hurdle. Ron Darling, 6-2, who had shut out the Cubs and Sutcliffe 2-0 on June 17 in New York, was the loser.

Padres 5, Dodgers 4

Kevin McReynolds drove in three runs with a homer and a two-run single and Jerry Royster singled in the game-winning run in the sixth inning as San Diego edged Los Angeles.

Royster's hit, his third of the day, came against Fernando Valenzuela, 7-8, and drove in Garry Templeton, who had singled and stolen second.

The Padres beat Valenzuela for the second time this year, reaching the Dodger left-hander for nine hits and six walks and all five runs in the six innings he worked. The victory went to reliever Craig Lefferts, 4-2, with Rich Gossage earning his 17th save.

Reds 7, Giants 6

Wayne Krenchicki cracked three hits, helping Cincinnati hand the Giants their seventh consecutive loss despite some heavy hitting from Jeff Leonard.

Krenchicki hit his second homer in the second inning, and doubled and scored to start a two-run fourth off Jim Gott, 3-5, who took his fifth loss in his last six decisions. Krenchicki also singled home a run in a two-run fifth that put the Reds ahead 7-4 and helped reliever Ron Robinson improve his record to 2-0.

Leonard hit for the cycle for the Giants, including a ninth-inning double with two out that put the tying run on second base. But Ted Power, the fifth Reds pitcher, came on to get Bob Brenly to pop out and end the game, giving Power his 12th save and his fourth in five games. Leonard hit his eighth homer, a two-run shot, for the Giants' final runs in the seventh.

Sour no more, Blake ready for title

By TIM DAHLBERG
AP Sports Writer

LAS VEGAS, Nev. — "Rockin'" Robin Blake, whose once bright career was jolted by two consecutive losses, finally gets a shot at a title Sunday when he meets International Boxing Federation lightweight champion Jimmy Paul in a scheduled 15-round bout.

Blake, a former No. 1 contender in the 135-pound division, has won his last five fights and appears over the brief slump that temporarily derailed his career.

"I went a little sour but I'm ready now," said Blake, who fights out of Fort Worth, Texas. "I lost a couple of fights but, then again, I'm only human."

BLAKE FOLLOWED, an outstanding amateur career where he piled up a 250-10 record with 22 straight wins as a pro before dropping a 10-round decision in October 1983 to Tyrone Crawley, who is now ranked No.

1 by the World Boxing Association.

He followed that three months later with another 10-round decision loss to Harry Arroyo — the fighter that Paul beat in a unanimous 15-round decision April 6 to win the title.

"It's hard to come back after those two losses, his attitude was down," said Gene Hatcher, the WBA junior welterweight champion who is Blake's stablemate. "It takes a while to build yourself back up but now he's looking like he was."

Ironically, it was Blake, not Paul, who was scheduled to fight Arroyo for the title, but Blake was forced to pull out because he reinjured his left hand in his previous bout.

PAUL TOOK full advantage of his opportunity but also had to agree to fight Blake in his first title defense if he beat Arroyo.

NCAA 'death penalty' lists to be kept under wraps

MISSION, Kan. (AP) — The NCAA, citing traditional policy, has decided not to release the names of schools whose athletic programs were put in jeopardy of suspension by last week's special convention on integrity. Most of the estimated 18-20 are known.

David Cawood, an assistant executive director of the NCAA, said the decision was made in a conference call Thursday by the six-person administrative committee, chaired by NCAA President Jack Davis of Oregon State. There had been numerous media requests for a list of the affected schools.

"The NCAA plans to write each involved institution and notify it of its status," said Cawood. "The NCAA has had a long-standing policy of not providing information on past cases that are closed. This policy basically exists because the NCAA Council traditionally has felt that the national office should not be in a position of providing negative information related to past infractions cases that would result in singling out a particular institution or a group of institutions.

"AN ADDITIONAL concern," Cawood said, "is that publishing such a list could be used as a negative recruiting device."

The toughened penalties for recruiting and academic abuse are aimed at schools convicted of major violations twice within five years. In those cases, the minimum punishment will include termination or reassignment of coaches or other university employees involved and a two-year ban on scholarships or recruiting.

Most significantly, the Infractions Committee which hears the case will suspend the program for any period up to two years.

With only three dissenting votes among almost 300

Division I schools, delegates agreed to make the so-called "death penalty" measure retroactive to Sept. 1, 1980. Any school which has had a program put on at least a one-year probation with sanctions against either post-season or television appearances is immediately vulnerable to the unprecedented penalty.

THE SANCTIONS will apply to the last sport penalized even if the first case involved a different sport. A list of schools which have received one-year sanctions against either post-season or television appearances since Sept. 1, 1980 would include:

Akron; Arizona; Arizona State; Florida; Illinois; Kansas; Southern Cal; Southern Mississippi; Tennessee State; Wisconsin; Clemson; Wichita State; Oregon; Colorado; UCLA; Southern Methodist; and New Mexico.

The key dates in the death penalty provisions are the date the first penalty was begun and the date the second infraction occurred. Delegates decided that the second major infraction must occur after Sept. 1, 1985. Thus, a school assessed a one-year football probation in 1982 would not be subject to suspension of its program if a major violation was found to have occurred in 1984. If the 1984 violation resulted in a probation, the five-year period would begin with the imposition of the penalty for the 1984 infraction.

THE UCLA basketball program, to use an example, was put on probation in December 1981. Thus, any Bruin program would be subject to suspension if convicted before December 1986 of committing a major infraction after Sept. 1, 1985.

A school cannot escape the five-year clause by delaying the effective date of a probation through the NCAA appeal process or through the courts.

Jays strand Brew crew, in 7-3 win

TORONTO (AP) — The left-on-base bug that bit the Toronto Blue Jays two days ago returned to Exhibition Stadium, but this time it pestered the Milwaukee Brewers.

The Blue Jays stranded nine baserunners in a 5-4 loss to the Brewers on Wednesday. Thursday night, it was Milwaukee's turn to leave runners aboard, and it resulted in a 7-3 loss as Toronto opened a 2½-game lead over idle second-place Detroit in the American League East Division.

AL

"Tonight it was their turn to get the key hits, just like we had done the night before," said Milwaukee Manager George Bamberger, whose club left eight runners on base. "We had them loaded in the fourth, but couldn't get the clutch hit."

Toronto right fielder Jesse Barfield supplied the key hits and added some aggressive baserunning, driving in two runs, scoring three times and swiping his 10th and 11th bases of the season.

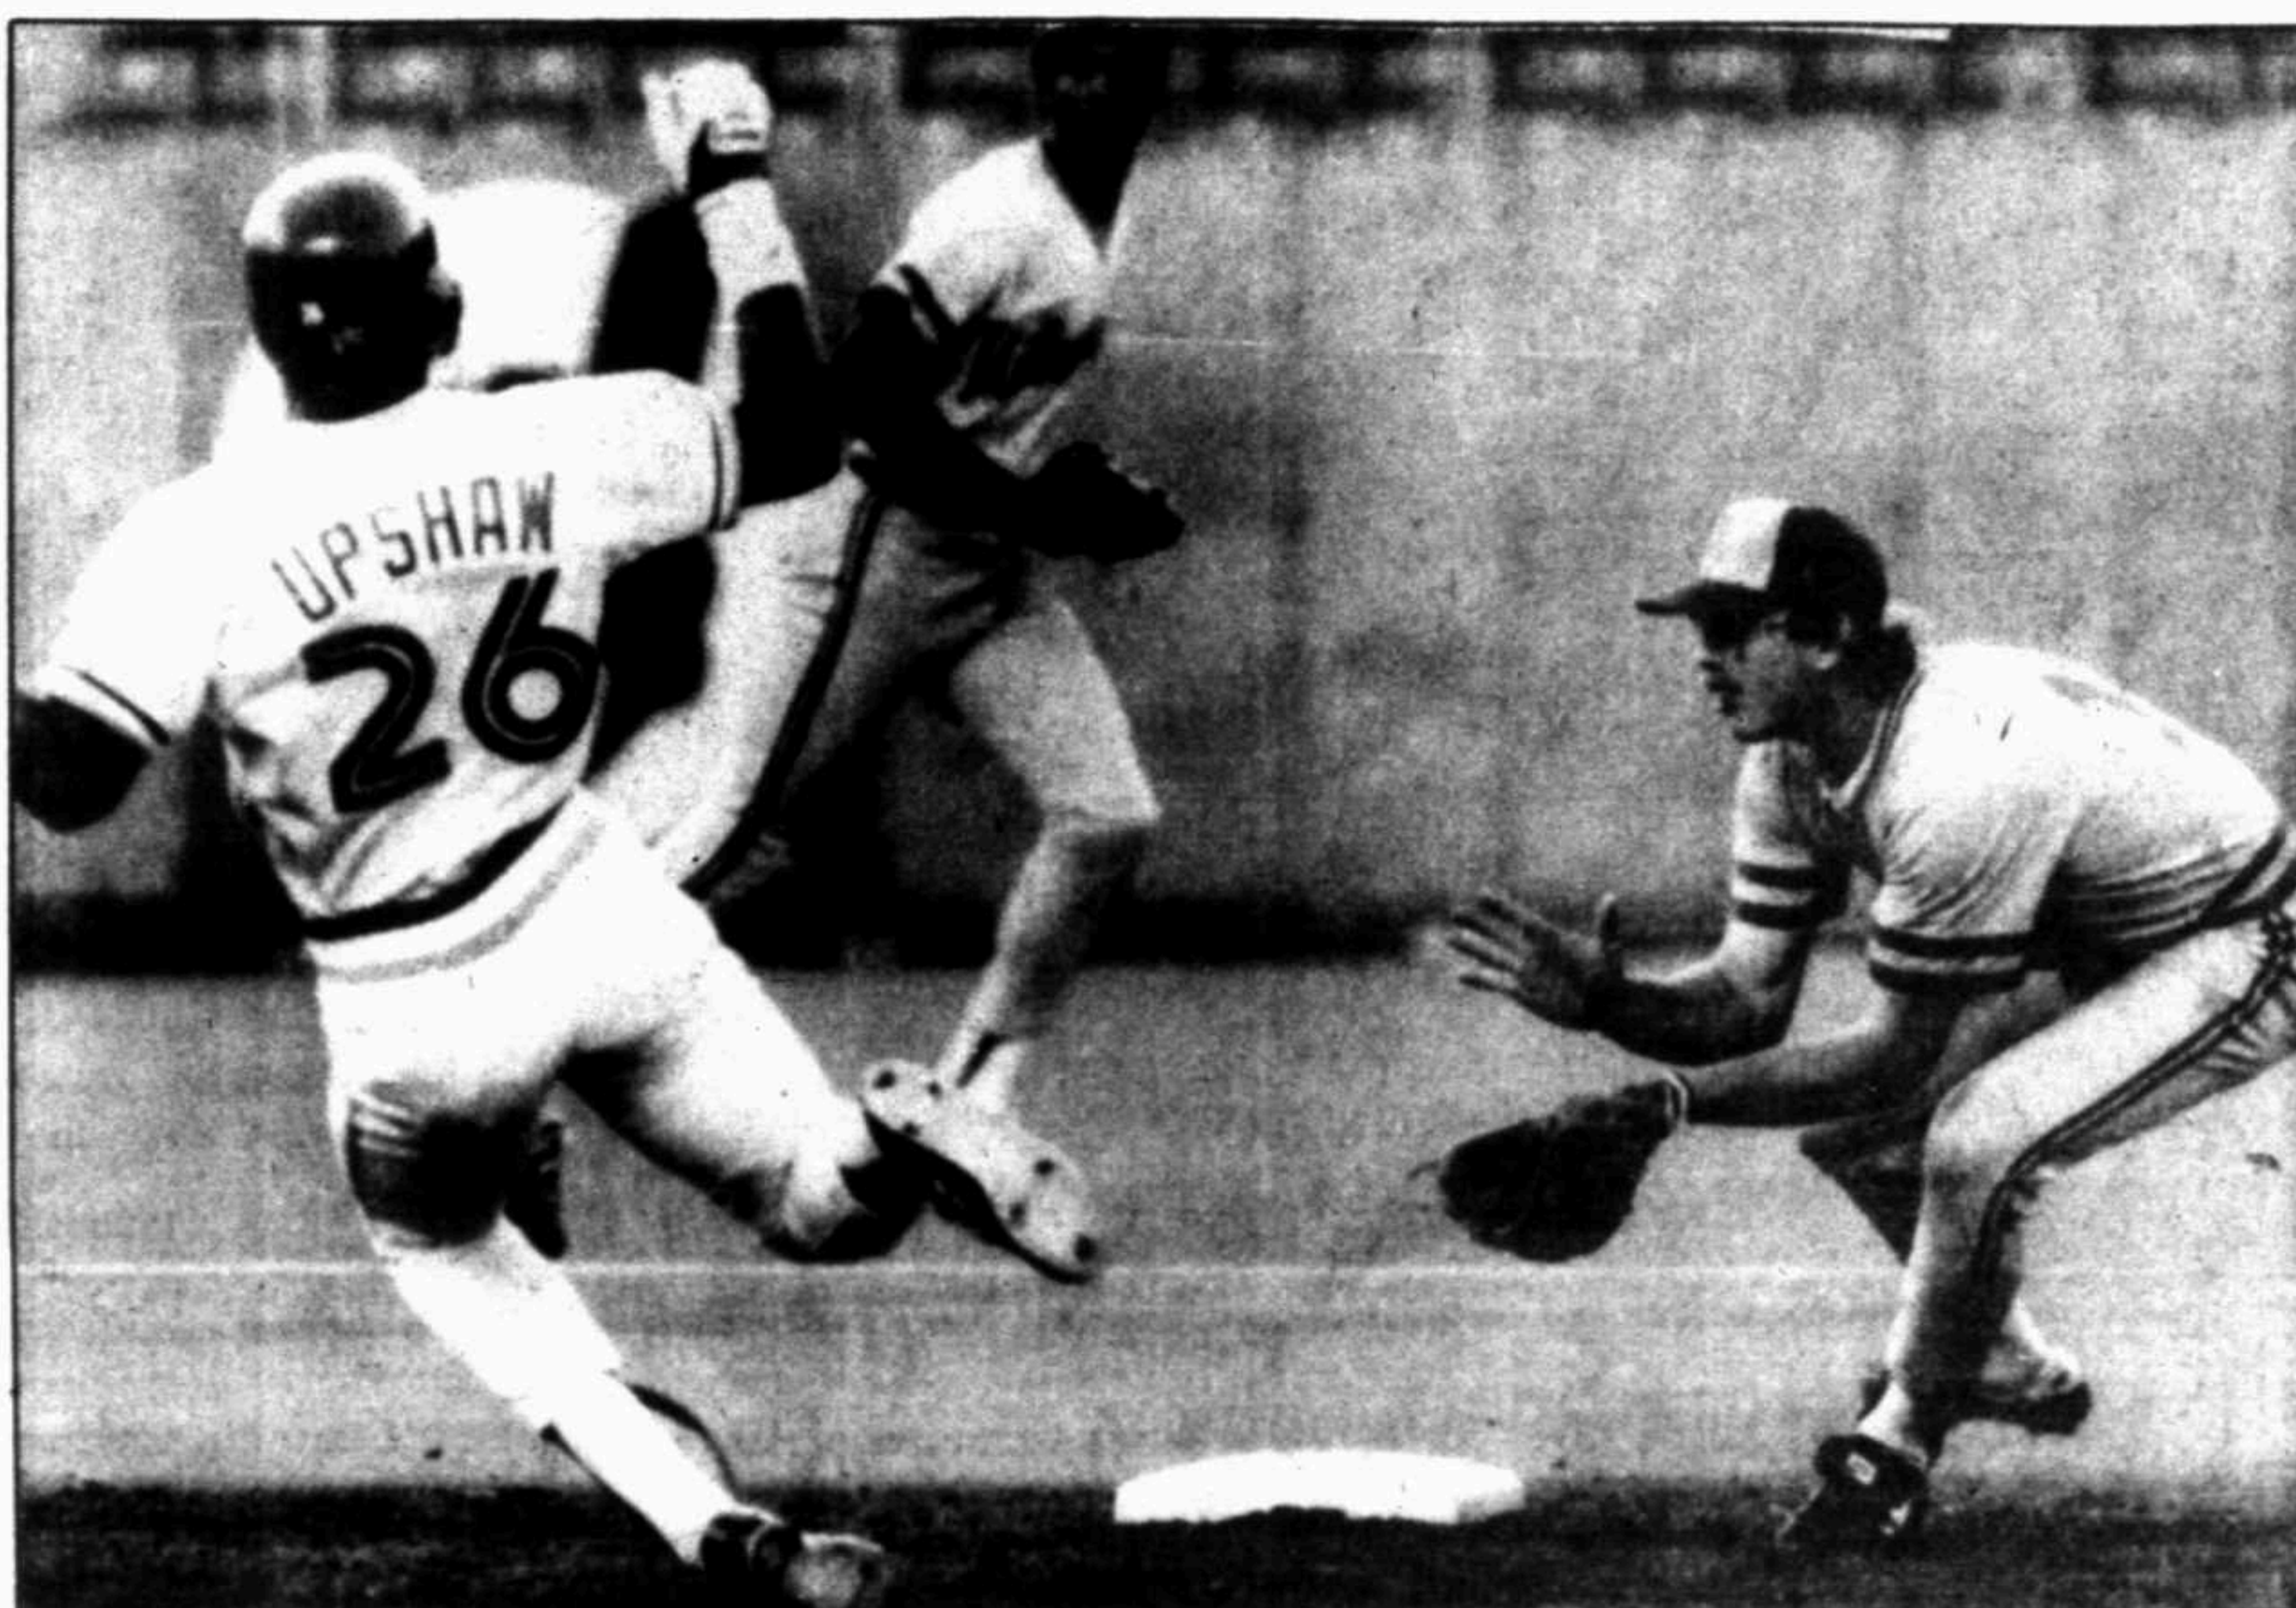

WILLIE UPSHAW also sparked the attack with three hits to keep rallies alive and help make left-hander Jimmy Key, 6-2, a winner.

Although the three-game series beginning tonight against the Tigers in Detroit was on their minds before Thursday night's game, the Blue Jays quickly focused their attention on the game at hand.

"We were standing around the batting cage and somebody said it was time to find our Detroit stroke," said Barfield. "But we caught ourselves in time and said we'd better find our Milwaukee stroke."

"Milwaukee is never a pushover for us."

The Brewers won 10 of the 13

Toronto's Willie Upshaw was caught stealing managed to win the game, 7-3, here as Jim Gantner applies the tag, but the Jays games they played against Toronto last season and took two of three in a recent series at Milwaukee.

"We just can't take them lightly," said Barfield, who singled off loser Ted Higuera, 4-5, to drive in one of Toronto's four runs in a fifth-inning rally that blew a 2-1 game wide open. He also doubled in the first inning to tie the game 1-1.

AND ON two occasions he moved into scoring position with his steals and scored each time.

"I'm no speedster, but I am learning to run the bases better," said Barfield, who had only eight stolen bases last season. "That just comes from being on base more."

"I feel good about the stolen bases, but it's always nice to drive those runs in."

Steel City still ideal without the Pirates?

PITTSBURGH (AP) — The city of Pittsburgh is running out of potential buyers for the financially troubled Pirates at the same time team President Dan Galbreath is running out of patience.

James M. Roddey, an advertising company executive and chairman of the Allegheny County Port Authority Transit, said Thursday he would no longer try to buy the troubled team. Roddey had contended for weeks he would assemble an ownership package that, if successful, would assure that Pirates remain in Pittsburgh.

Roddey's abrupt pullout leaves a so-called "study group" of corporate executives, including Westinghouse Electric Corp. President Douglas D. Danforth, as the only potential local buyers for a team that has baseball's worst attendance and nearly its worst record.

Danforth is the only member of the group to be identified, although U.S. Steel Chairman David Roderick, Alcoa Chairman Charles Parry and Oxford Development Corp. President Edward Lewis are said to have lent advice and support, even if they have made no promises of financial participation.

BUT GALBREATH, who has been trying to find a buyer for eight months, said he understands the Danforth group isn't ready to make an offer.

"I want to sell the team and sell it soon," Galbreath said. "I don't mean next fall. If that means selling to someone from out of town, then so be it. They (the corporate leaders) should make me an offer in a hurry."

Galbreath, contacted Thursday by ABC Radio Sports at his home in Columbus, Ohio, commented further on his dealings with the local group.

"I've been talking to Mr. Danforth for the last three to four months," Galbreath said. "But because of his request for not being discussed in public, I've respected that, and so we haven't discussed it publicly."

"About Mr. Danforth, I know he's sincere and that he has a great interest in Pittsburgh. And Mr. Roderick is one of the great leaders of our country."

Despite his interest in selling the team as quickly as possible, Galbreath added that he would allow Danforth and Roderick extra time to forge a deal.

"I would do it because I know that Mr. Danforth's integrity is impeccable and so is Mr. Roderick's," Galbreath said. "But it's been seven months or more since we've talked about the sale of the club, and there's been no single offer ever presented to me."

The Pirates almost assuredly would have been sold by now, and for a healthy sum, if it hadn't been for the stadium lease, Galbreath said.

O's gamble, get Wiggins

SAN DIEGO (AP) — The Baltimore Orioles, admitting they are taking a "considerable risk" to fill holes at the top of their lineup and at second base, have traded for drug-troubled Alan Wiggins of the San Diego Padres.

"Alan Wiggins is a quality player who can provide several of the offensive ingredients we have been lacking," Orioles General Manager Hank Peters said Thursday after acquiring Wiggins for minor-league pitcher Roy Lee Jackson. "Defensively, he can cover a lot of ground."

"We recognize the considerable risk we have taken in concluding this deal," Peters said. "Wiggins has twice fallen victim to drugs, and they have very nearly ruined his career. We are well aware that there is no guarantee he is completely recovered from his dependency."

Wiggins, who stole 70 bases and scored 106 runs while batting lead-off for San Diego last season, recently completed his second rehabilitation in three years for cocaine addiction. After that treatment — which began after Wiggins failed to show up for a game in Los Angeles on April 25 — Padres President Ballard Smith vowed Wiggins would never again play for the team. Wiggins spent the last week at San Diego's Class AAA Las Vegas club.

"IT TAKES time to get back in the rhythm of playing, but it won't take me long," Wiggins, 27, told the Los Angeles Times. "The big thing is that I'm going to a team that wants me."

Wiggins was assigned to Baltimore's Class AAA team in Rochester, N.Y., and was to play his first game there Saturday. Peters said he expected Wiggins to join the Orioles next Thursday in Kansas City.

"(Owner) Edward Bennett Williams, Dr. Jim McGee, chief of psychology at Shepherd Pratt Hospital, and I have interviewed Alan extensively, and we believe that he has an intense desire to rehabilitate himself," Peters said. "Wiggins, incidentally, was particularly anxious to resume his career in Baltimore, in large measure because of our reputation for helping young players rehabilitate themselves."

Warriors want Carroll; will match Bucks offer

OAKLAND (AP) — The Golden State Warriors announced Thursday night that the National Basketball Association club has decided to match a multi-million dollar offer from the Milwaukee Bucks in an effort to keep 7-foot center Joe Barry Carroll.

At a press conference in Oakland, Warriors' general manager Al Attles made the announcement along with coach John Bach. Neither Carroll nor Warriors' owner Franklin Mieuli were present.

Attles said Mieuli told him earlier in the day that the team would be willing to match an offer from the Bucks calling for Carroll to receive a reported $7.5 million over five years, along with a $2 million bonus for signing that is due by July 1.

"I was happy when I got the call from Franklin," Attles said. "We won 37 games with him (Carroll) two years ago and only 22 without him last year."

Carroll, however, has said he doesn't want to play with the Warriors and last year played in Italy rather than accept an $800,000 salary the team offered.

CARROLL WAS the first pick in the 1980 NBA draft and in his first four seasons with the Warriors averaged 20.1 points a game and was a strong defensive player.

The Warriors had until Saturday to match the Bucks' offer to Carroll or relinquish the star in exchange for compensation from Milwaukee.

Attles discounted Carroll's apparent unwillingness to play with the Warriors.

"I'm pleased," he said. "I think Joe Barry will find the team will welcome him back."

Attles said Carroll had no comment when the general manager spoke with him about the Warriors plans.

Mieuli secured a loan worth a reported $4 million at this week's NBA meeting from James Fitzgerald, a former Bucks' owner, that may have made the difference in the Warriors being able to match the offer to Carroll.

Baseball

Mike Stanton, who graduated from Midland High in May, has signed a scholarship agreement to play baseball for Southwestern University in Georgetown.

Stanton, an outfielder and pitcher for the Bulldogs, is currently in Houston playing in the Carl Young College League. The league features a 46-game schedule during the summer and plays three doubleheaders a week over a 10-week span.

Southwestern is interested in Stanton as a pitcher and possible designated hitter.

Stanton hit .354 with 29 RBIs and three homers for Coach Tim Whalen's Bulldogs this spring and had a 2.2 pitching record with a 7.00 ERA. He earned second team All-District honors as an outfielder.

Opening lead: Queen of ♦.

The order in which you elect to do things at the bridge table can have a tremendous bearing on the result. Look what happened on this hand from the Caribbean Team Championship.

When declarer elected to play four spades he knew he was choosing a 4-3 fit. As the cards lie, three no trump is the laydown contract even if the clubs don't run. Note South's bid of two hearts; that couldn't be a genuine suit, since if he had held four hearts and four spades, he would have rebid one heart.

West led the queen of diamonds, and declarer devised a reasonable plan that depended only on finding no worse than a 4-2 break in either black suit. He won the ace of diamonds, cashed the ace-king of clubs and ruffed a club high. Now he took dummy's remaining spade honor and led a trump to the queen. Had both defenders followed, declarer would have cashed his remaining high trump and then started to run clubs. The defenders would eventually get two heart tricks and a trump.

Unfortunately, East showed out on the second trump. Now declarer had to lose two trump tricks and two hearts.

Declarer went about his business in the wrong order. It costs him nothing to draw two rounds of trumps first, leaving a high trump in dummy. If both defenders follow, declarer proceeds to ruff a club and then he has only three losers. However, when East shows out on the second trump declarer needs either a 3-3 club break or else to find East with a doubleton jack of clubs. He abandons trumps and starts to run clubs. When West ruffs, declarer overruffs in dummy, comes to hand with the ace of hearts and continues with his last club. That limits his losers to the same three he would have if trumps had behaved more kindly.

Oak Ridge Boys, Beach Boys join forces

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — The Beach Boys and the Oak Ridge Boys, scheduled for joint performances in Fourth of July concerts in Philadelphia and Washington, are also considering recording together, says Joe Bonsall of the Oak Ridge Boys. "We may get these rock 'n' roll boys and these ol' country boys together," he said Thursday. Bonsall said the two groups may also do three or four concerts together in November. He said the chances of recording together are "interesting, fascinating."

The Oak Ridge Boys may record with the Beach Boys soon, according to Oak Ridge singer Joe Bonsall.

BOSTON (AP) — A planeload of textbooks and other school supplies bound for Cambodian refugee camps in Thailand got a sendoff from Kitty Dukakis, wife of the Massachusetts governor.

"Massachusetts is once again leading the nation in demonstrating its concern for a people who are among the most oppressed in the world," Mrs. Dukakis said Thursday as the plane left Logan International Airport.

The governor's wife visited the refugee camps in January and arranged the reunion of a Cambodian boy with his sister in Massachusetts. Many of the children and adults in the camps speak English or are learning it, she said.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Corporation For Public Broadcasting is being asked again today to provide money to continue production of the weekend editions of National Public Radio's "All Things Considered" news magazine program.

"My listeners have sent me to Washington with a mandate to help save" the shows, Ruth Hirschman, general manager of KCRW, Santa Monica, said in remarks prepared for delivery to the CPB board. "Our listeners are deeply committed to NPR as a primary news source."

The weekend programs, which have the fourth highest audience on public radio, are vulnerable to cancellation Oct. 1, the start of the new fiscal year.

CLEARWATER, Fla. (AP) — Organist Wilbur Snapp faced the music at a baseball game after he made a tuneless observation about the umpire's eyesight.

Home plate umpire Kevin O'Connor bounced Snapp from the game when he played "Three Blind Mice" following a disputed call against the home team.

The song may have been over, but the melody lingered on as the almost 400 fans sang and whistled the ditty throughout the rest of the game Wednesday.

CUXHAM, England (AP) — William Clark, a diplomat, novelist, journalist and former World Bank vice president, died Thursday. He was 68.

His first novel, "Number Ten," about life at 10 Downing Street, official residence of British prime ministers, was published in 1967. "Catalyst" was published in 1984 and forecast a collapse of the world's economic order in 1987.

Upcoming Events: The Developmental Disabilities Center will be the recipient of proceeds from the Dellwood and Fairmont Park lanes bowling lane on display during the Centennial Celebration, July 6-7. The lane and automatic pinsetter will be located at Wall and Main in front of Midland Center. Persons who have items pertaining to bowling of historical interest and relating to bowling in Midland should contact Emory Isenberg at 689-9725 if interested in displaying them during the festivities. Others who can be contacted are Guy Conley, 689-9725; Randy Isenberg, 697-7871; Al Benson, 697-7871; Al Benson, 697-7871; or Ilene Gould, 697-7871.

MONEY

Dollar mixed

LONDON (AP) — The dollar was mixed but steady against major hard currencies in early European trading today with little major movement expected before the weekend. Gold also was mixed.

In Frankfurt, dealers said no attention was being paid to Thursday's news that the U.S. money supply declined $1.5 billion in the week ending June 17.

The May U.S. index of leading, coincident and lagging economic indicators, scheduled for release later in the day, could give some direction to trading, dealers said.

In Tokyo, where trading ends before Europe's business day begins, the dollar rose to a closing 248.95 yen from Thursday's 248.45. Later, in London, it was quoted at 249.07 yen.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $316.50 an ounce, compared with late Thursday's $316.75. At mid-morning Friday, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $316.50.

In Zurich, the bid price was $316.40, up from $316 late Thursday.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold fell 43 cents to close at a bid $317.04.

In New York Thursday, gold rose 90 cents to close at $316.90.

Silver was quoted in London today at a bid price of $6.13 an ounce, down from Thursday's $6.15.

Governors: Tax proposals threaten industry

AUSTIN (AP) — Govs. Mark White of Texas and George Nigh of Oklahoma say federal tax proposals, whether or not they become law, have hurt the oil and gas industry and threatened national security.

"Everyone who benefits from a healthy oil and gas economy, which I think is the entire United States, must understand that a stable tax base is vital to the industry and vital to our national defense," White told the Interstate Oil Compact Commission.

White said the uncertainty in the tax impact has already done in Texas is to decrease the utilization of drilling rigs by 33 percent during the first six months of 1985 and decrease by 33,000 the number of industry-related jobs in this state," White said.

Nigh said, "The treasury (department) proposal in itself, as was pointed out very adequately by Gov. White, damaged the industry — just the fear, waiting for the other shoe to drop — created problems within the industry, within the economic development of our state, within the national security of our country."

White and Nigh were co-hosts for the 50th anniversary meeting Thursday of the IOCC, which has 36 member states.

The governors delivered similar messages — the industry needs tax incentives to explore for oil and gas so the United States can reduce its dependence on petroleum imports.

White said last year the United States imported 31 percent of the crude oil it consumed, and the $65 billion price tag accounted for half of the nation's total trade imbalance.

"Isn't it obvious that this nation simply cannot run without adequate supplies of oil and gas, that America couldn't even get up and go to work in the morning without it?" said White. "Isn't it obvious that any reduction of the industry's momentum would be a severe setback to the entire nation?"

"We have spent literally hundreds of billions of dollars (on defense)," White said, "and I think people throughout this country and particularly in Texas recognize the need to build a strong national defense, and yet I will suggest to you that the treatment given to the oil and gas industry by this current administration's tax proposals would suggest to you that there are alternative fuel sources for the operation of a B-1 bomber and an M-1 tank."

"They don't run on coal or cord wood, and the sooner our Congress and our administration understands that, the sooner, I think, they will understand the ingredients we speak of — for national security, we must have a secure energy policy."

Nigh said, "If we can't have energy independence, we can't be independent — it's that simple."

He said he had personally asked President Reagan for a meeting to talk about oil and gas and had written him five times requesting a meeting. "No meeting has yet been held, and most letters go unanswered," Nigh said.

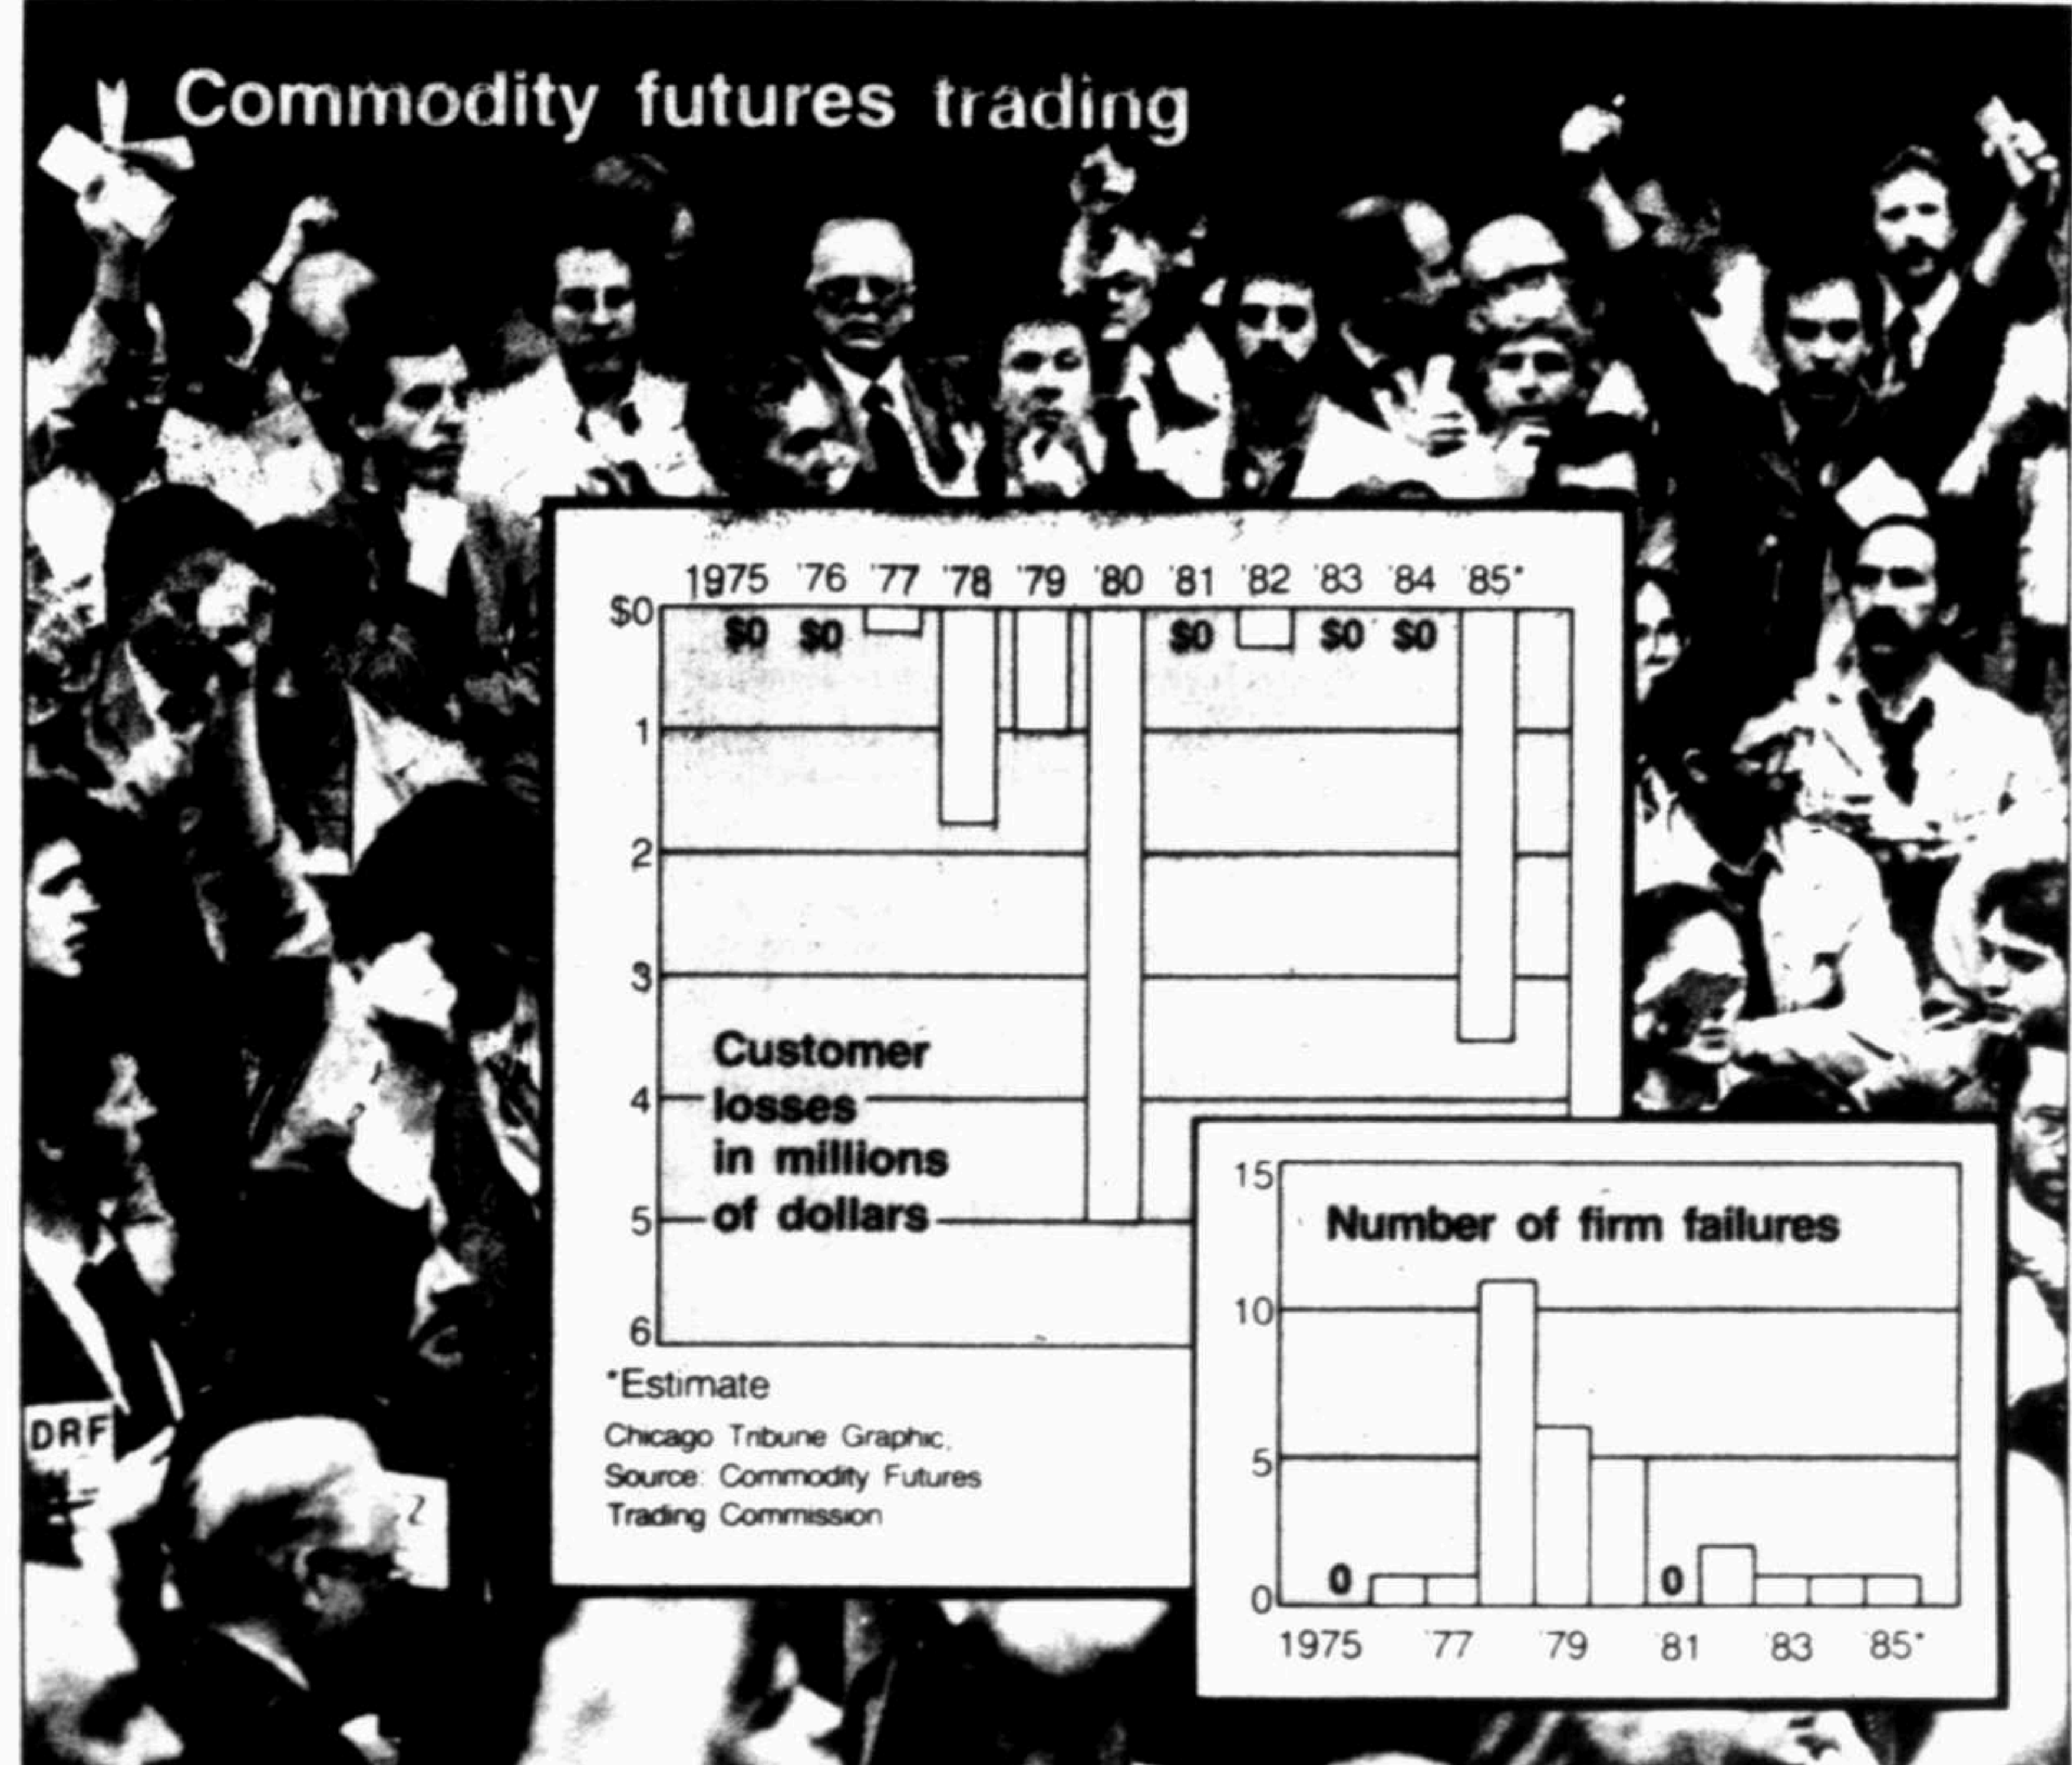

He also said Reagan told the National Governors Association in February that "his administration would meet with (oil) producing governors" but "no meeting has ever been held."

Nigh credited the IOCC with blocking the treasury department's original tax proposals for the industry.

"If you want to affect legislation, we must do it not in Austin but in Washington, not in Boise, not in Juneau, not in Little Rock, not in Topeka but in Washington — that's where the battleground is, in my opinion, and we must be there, and we must collectively be there," Nigh said.

Heavy trading

In commodity futures trading, customer losses are estimated about about $3.5 million in 1985, compared to no losses reported in 1984. However, the number of firm failures is estimated to stay steady with 1984's $1 million figure.

Leading indicators rise sharply in May

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government's main forecasting barometer of future economic activity rose sharply in May, but in less positive news, the government also reported today that the nation suffered its second largest trade deficit in history.

The Commerce Department said its Index of Leading Indicators climbed a solid 0.7 percent last month, reversing two months of declines. The index, made up of a dozen forward-looking business statistics, is supposed to foretell the course of the economy six to nine months in the future.

Despite today's increase, the index has been giving decidedly weak signals in recent months. In revisions today, the government said that the index dropped 0.1 percent in March and 0.6 percent in April.

If the May number had also been negative, it would have meant the index had dropped for three straight months — often a signal in the past of an impending recession.

Even with the strong May gain, the index has declined six months out of the past 12, showing how sluggish the economy has been in the past year.

A key reason for the weak performance has been the country's deteriorating trade performance. The nation's manufacturing sector has been hardhit as U.S. industries have seen sales evaporate under an onslaught of foreign competition.

That problem grew worse in May, the government reported, as the nation suffered a $12.7 billion merchandise trade deficit — the difference in the amount of imports versus U.S. exports.

It was the largest deficit since a record $13.8 billion imbalance last July.

The deterioration in May came from a 1.5 percent increase in imports, which left them at $30.1 billion, also the second highest total on record.

In addition, exports fell an even sharper 2.1 percent last month to $17.4 billion, their lowest level since February 1984.

The country's trading problems have been blamed primarily on the high value of the dollar, which makes imports cheaper and more attractive to U.S. consumers while making American goods more expensive and harder to sell on overseas markets.

In May, declines in exports of agricultural products, automobiles and power-generating equipment offset increases in sales of aircraft, electric machinery, chemicals and coal.

Continental hoping to file reorganization plan on time

HOUSTON (AP) — Continental Airlines, operating under the protection of a federal bankruptcy court since August 1983, says it is negotiating with its creditors and should file its reorganization plan with the court by Sept. 5.

"We won't ask for another extension," airline spokesman Mike Cincelli said Wednesday.

The airline has been granted several extensions of the time period in which it can file an exclusive plan of reorganization.

Bankruptcy Judge T. Glover Roberts this week ruled the Houston-based airline would lose its exclusivity rights Sept. 5 if it did not file a plan to show how creditors will be paid an estimated $1 billion.

Once the exclusivity period would expire, anyone could file a reorganization plan for the court to consider. "This deadline gives me some cause for hope that we'll get out of Chapter 11 quickly," Hugh Ray, a Houston attorney representing some of the creditors, said. "Until this week, it's just been the creditors pushing, but now there seems to be pushing from both sides."

Continental filed for reorganization on Sept. 24, 1983. Its parent firm, Texas Air Corp., announced earlier this month it was buying Trans World Airlines for about $725 million.

"I have a visceral reaction that Texas Air is cleaning house with Continental so it can focus on the TWA acquisition," according to Jim Babcock, another Houston attorney who represents unnamed creditors.

MONEY FUND TABLE COMMENTARY: Assets of the 282 taxable money funds reported by Donoghue's MONEY FUND REPORT (r) of Holliston, Mass. 01746 decreased $2.8 billion to $205.1 billion during the week ended June 25, 1985. The taxable funds' 7-day average yield decreased to 7.01 percent from 7.28 percent. The taxable funds' 30-day average yield decreased to 7.28 percent from 7.41 percent. The taxable funds' average maturity remained at 48 days for the second week.

William E. Donoghue says, "Led by a $1.5 billion asset outflow from the institutions-only money funds, the total taxable money fund asset decrease was $2.8 billion this week. Higher short-term money market rates lured active institutional investors out of the money funds. Some individual investors may have decided to move to the equity funds or directly to the stock market to earn higher returns. The Donoghue's 7-Day Average Yield dropped to its lowest point since Aug. 30, 1978. This yield reflects the lower short-term interest rates available during the past two months."

Imports surged with higher shipments of clothing, chemicals, aircraft and Canadian automobiles.

Many forecasters are predicting the trade deficit for the entire year could easily top $140 billion, far above last year's record of $123.3 billion.

The increase in the Index of Leading Indicators left the index at 167.8 percent of its 1967 base of 100.

The gain had been expected by most forecasters, although economists are divided over just how well the economy will perform for the rest of the year.

Economic growth slowed to a virtual standstill in the first three months of the year, with the gross national product advancing at an annual rate of 0.3 percent, the slowest pace since the end of the last recession.

However, last month the government projected that growth was picking up in the current April-June quarter to an annual rate of 3.1 percent — more in line with the administration's forecast of growth for the year of 3.9 percent.

Some economists believe that the sharp increase in second-quarter growth will continue for the rest of the year as declining interest rates spur consumer and business spending.

Michael Evans, head of Evans Econometrics, a Washington forecasting firm, predicted that growth in the second half of the year would expand to an annual rate of 4.5 percent.

"The declines in interest rates, which started last fall, are beginning to have an impact. They should give us a good third quarter of above-average growth," he said in advance of today's reports.

But other economists are not so optimistic, with many believing that the beneficial effects from declining interest rates will be overshadowed by the country's disastrous trading performance.

Roger Brinner, senior economist at Data Resources Inc., said he expected growth in the second half of 1985 would be a sluggish annual rate of between 2 percent and 2.5 percent.

The 0.7 percent gain in the May index stemmed from a positive contribution from eight of the 10 indicators available for inclusion.

Mexican delegation leaves for Caracas, Middle East

MEXICO CITY (AP) — A Mexican delegation left Friday for Venezuela and the Middle East to discuss the situation on the international petroleum market.

A statement from the Energy, Mines and Government Industry Department said the delegation would leave later in the day from Venezuela to visit Libya, Algeria and Egypt.

It said Energy Secretary Francisco Labastida Ochoa had planned to lead the delegation but had to remain at home to take care of pressing budget cuts. The delegation is being led in his place by Deputy Energy Secretary Jose Luis Alcudia Garcia and Jorge Eduardo Navarrete, the Foreign Ministry's deputy secretary for economic affairs.

The Mexican delegation is traveling with officials from Venezuela and Kuwait. The department's statement said the trip is intended "to persuade other producing countries of hydrocarbons, members or not of OPEC, to adopt solidarity in solving the problems currently affecting the world petroleum market."

The trip is planned for consultations before the July 5 meeting of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries in Vienna, Austria.

Mexico is not a member of OPEC but generally follows its price guidelines. Last week, however, it cut the price of its heavy-type Maya crude by $1.50 to $24 a barrel.

The world's fourth largest producer of crude oil, Mexico is concerned that it also may have to slash the price of its lighter-type Isthmus, currently selling at $27.75 a month.

Agency to buy AT&T computers

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — The National Security Agency chose the American Telephone and Telegraph Co. Thursday to supply it with up to $946 million in minicomputers and services for a new, classified project.

The contract appeared to be one of the largest for the purchase of sophisticated computer systems by the intelligence community. Officials of the NSA, the largest and most secretive intelligence agency in the United States, did not say how the computers would be used. But industry sources and intelligence analysts suggested that the NSA would deploy the machines at its headquarters in Fort Meade, Md., and in field offices around the world and would use them to help encode and decode data flowing through the government's communication networks.

A spokesman for the NSA, Mike Levin, said Thursday that the machines were for a "new purpose" and would involve "many units, spread out over a number of places." AT&T said that the contract extended through 1988, and sources indicated that it called for up to 250 of AT&T's most advanced 3B line of super-minicomputers.

The award seemed a major victory for AT&T, which began commercial sales of its computers less than two years ago and has been unable to make significant inroads against the International Business Machines Corp., the Digital Equipment Corp. and other competitors. IBM said Thursday that it had bid on the NSA project, and it appeared that many makers of minicomputers — mid-sized machines used for a variety of scientific and office automation tasks — had also bid.

It appeared unlikely, however, that the selection of AT&T would greatly aid the company's efforts to win acceptance of its computers in corporate environments.

Still, the award brought jubilation to AT&T's executive offices because it was an endorsement of the computer technology the telephone giant developed years ago for the switching systems used by local Bell operating companies. In a statement, Warren Corgan, vice president of AT&T's Federal Systems division, said, "We intend to demonstrate that the confidence in us was deserved."

AT&T said that the 3B machines would be manufactured in Oklahoma City and that the NSA project would be managed by Federal Systems, which is based in Greensboro, N.C. The contract limits the NSA's expenditures to $946 million, including several options, but officials expect most of the options to be exercised.

AMC, union recess talks on deadline

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Representatives of American Motors Corp. and top union leaders recessed concession talks on the eve of a company-imposed deadline for a settlement to keep its Wisconsin plants open.

United Auto Workers officials, saying they were tired, discontinued discussions among themselves early today. They said they planned to reconvene this morning, but no time was set for resuming talks with AMC officials.

Rudy Kuzel, president of Local 72 at Kenosha, said he assumed the company would contact the UAW when it was ready to come back to the bargaining table.

Union representatives said initial signs of progress that were reached Thursday afternoon had failed to produce an agreement.

Nick Romano, head of United Auto Workers Local 75 of Milwaukee, said there had been "some progress," although details of the union's reaction to the company's latest proposal on job security — a key issue — were not discussed.

"We've bitten the bullet in a lot of cases," he said.

The meeting broke up around 2 a.m., with union officials saying they were to meet later in the morning. No time was set for resumption of talks.

AMC had threatened to begin closing its Wisconsin plants today, but agreed to extend the deadline if some sort of agreement could be hammered out to present for a union membership vote. The plants employ 7,400 people.

Man assaulted in apartment lot

From Staff Reports

A 26-year-old Midland man was assaulted by three men Wednesday in the parking lot of the Ye Olde English Village Apartments, 4303 Andrews Highway, according to police reports.

Alton Kenneth Samples, 5009 Rio Grande, told police he had just gotten out of his pickup about 8:30 p.m. when the three men attacked him. He was able to identify one of his assailants, reports said.

In other reports, a 31-year-old Midland man charged with injury to a child and aggravated assault with a deadly weapon remained in Midland County Jail this morning in lieu of a $40,000 bond.

Scott Arlen Morris Jr., of northeast Midland County, was arrested Wednesday after an incident where he allegedly threatened a 13-year-old girl with a pistol, according to Sheriff's Office reports.

Among burglaries reported Thursday was that of a 1980 Honda Prelude belonging to Donna Marie Leigh, 4700 Polo Parkway. Taken was an $1,895 stereo system, reports said. The burglary occurred sometime Wednesday afternoon.

John Bullard, 900 Citation, reported the loss of between $200 and $400 in currency from his locker at the Midland Country Club. The money was taken about 6:20 p.m. Wednesday while Bullard was taking a shower, reports said.

Financier found not guilty of defrauding Midland bank

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The international financier who was accused of bank fraud by not providing promised collateral after he had borrowed $325,000 from Midland's Security National Bank in 1983 was found "not guilty" Thursday by a federal jury in Midland.

The jury deliberated 3 1/2 hours in climaxing the three-day trial.

Defense attorney Bill Alexander said the jury in setting the defendant, Eftim Pandeff, free simply used "common sense" in arriving at the verdict.

"I really don't think there was anything criminal on Mr. Pandeff's or David Covey's part," Alexander said.

Covey was president of the bank in July 1983 when he loaned Pandeff the funds to pay income taxes for Tred II, a financially-troubled athletic-shoe manufacturing company in De Queen, Ark., and to give a financial boost to the company. Pandeff is president of Axa Capital Corp., which is a managing financial consulting firm for Axa Finance Corp., a European investment company which was trying to make Tred II a profitable company.

A group of European investors known as Acor was behind the shoe company, which eventually failed.

Trial evidence indicated that Pandeff and Covey had struck up a friendship earlier in the 1980s when Covey was executive vice president of Red River National Bank in Clarksville in Northeast Texas.

After Covey had moved to Midland during the recent oil boom to head up the 1982-founded bank, Pandeff contracted him to arrange $1.8 million in Tred II financing to keep the company afloat. The bank secured liens on the company to arrange financing but Covey only put together $574,000 in loans by participations with banks in Clarksville and Belts.

That was in 1982. In July 1983, Pandeff secured the 90-day $325,000 personal loan to satisfy Tred II's tax liability and to give the company a boost. By Aug. 15, 1983, Pandeff was to furnish the bank almost $4 million in common stock to collateralize the loan, according to testimony. Covey said Pandeff had pledged the stock, which he said Pandeff owned but that Pandeff would have to fly to Switzerland and Paris to get the stocks out of banks.

"He (Pandeff) assured me he had the stock," Covey said. "He owned all the stock, and he was willing to pledge it in order to secure the $325,000," Covey said. "He was the owner of the stock." Covey said. "I never distrusted him."

Pandeff, however, said he never claimed he or his Axa Capital Corp. owned the stock but that he would have to get release of the stock from his business associates. However, the associates would not release the stocks as security, he said, since Security National Bank already held liens on the Tred II plant and land but that the bank had not fully funded the $1.8 million loan.

Civil lawsuits initiated by the bank and Tred II's investors followed but have since been settled.

In mid-August 1983, Covey resigned from the bank to enter Catus Corp., a cat-litter business in Midland. He was succeeded by Ray Moudy, one of the bank's organizers.

Alexander said the bank's troubles with Pandeff were rooted in a communications breakdown.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Wayne Speck, the prosecutor, said the bank got "rooked."

"It was just a failure to communicate," Alexander said. He said the dispute was a "civil matter" involving Security National Bank, Pandeff and Axa Finance Corp., that the debts had been satisfied, that Security National Bank had recovered its money, and that the parties apparently all were satisfied.

The Federal Bureau of Investigation, which had prepared the case for prosecution, had investigated the case. In a letter, dated Oct. 31, 1983, to Pandeff, Moudy as president of the bank wrote Pandeff a "demand" letter and said that an FBI special agent had viewed Pandeff's failure to deliver the collateral on the $325,000 loan as possible "fraud, embezzlement and false statements within the meaning of banking laws."

Judge expects hearing for Skelton's new trial motion

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — District Judge Tryon Lewis Thursday said he expects a hearing on a motion for a new trial for convicted murderer John C. Skelton will be held in about a month, though he has not yet received a request from Skelton's Austin attorney to set a specific hearing date.

In addition to being sentenced to death for the April 1982 bomb death of 46-year-old Joe Lee Neal, Skelton faces trial on four charges of capital solicitation of murder.

Following a June 5 pretrial hearing on the capital solicitation charges, Skelton's attorney, David L. Botsford of Austin, filed a motion for a new trial in 161st District Court on the capital murder charge.

MMH will implement program as Texas Tech nursing satellite

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

College courses geared toward associate degree nurses who wish to complete requirements for a bachelor of science degree will be implemented at Midland Memorial Hospital beginning Sept. 1.

The "Texas Tech University Satellite Nursing Program for the Permian Basin" will provide college-level course work in hopes of alleviating the shortage of registered nurses across the region, according to MMH President Ray Branson.

The program, provided exclusively through the Texas Tech University School of Nursing "will do a lot for the entire Permian Basin," Branson told members of the MMH Board of Trustees Thursday.

MMH received official notice of the program's implementation last week. The University received an estimated $584,000 to fund the program. An anonymous Midland foundation also donated $150,000 for the program's establishment.

Housed in the MMH education

annex, the two-year program will offer course work at various times during the day, according to Branson. The total number of students allowed to enroll in courses has not been determined.

"I want to emphasize that this is not a Midland program, it's a Permian Basin program," said Branson. "Hopefully, it will help alleviate the shortage of nurses in the area."

Trustees also heard reports concerning the June 12 combined meet-

Through Peace Corps, Midlander achieves teaching dream

From Staff Reports

James F. Dwight had to wait almost 20 years, but, thanks to the Peace Corps, he finally achieved his dream of being a teacher, in the Central American country of Belize.

A native of Midland, Dwight earned undergraduate degrees in biology and chemistry at Austin College in Sherman, and then went on to a master's degree in biology, in 1963, from the University of Texas Medical Branch in Galveston.

By that time he had also acquired a wife and more expenses than seemed likely to be satisfied by a teacher's starting salary. So the dream was deferred. For the next 14 years Dwight worked in the commercial accounts departments of three large corporations, first in Houston, then in Jacksonville, Fla.

In 1977 he moved to Traverse City, Mich., and went into business for himself, doing research in environmental and commercial law. He says he enjoyed living in Michigan, but by 1981 the economy was showing signs of slowing. He sold his business and decided the time had come to take his old dream off the shelf.

Of the three international volunteer organizations to which Dwight applied, the Peace Corps was the first to respond. In June, 1982, he found himself in Belize, which was called British Honduras before independence. His volunteer assignment: general science teacher.

Jump ahead almost three years to a bright May morning in Belize City. The bell sounds for the start of the first period at Pallotti High School. Dwight walks briskly into a large, first-floor classroom buzzing with conversation. The 36 First Form students in their white uniforms jump to their feet and unite in a ringing "Good morning, sir!"

Dwight returns the greeting, tells the girls to take their seats, and outlines the written exercises they are to do while he shows a visitor the biology lab in the nearby science building. "If I can hear you from the lab," he says, "there'll be an added assignment when I get back. And remember, the principal is right next door."

Before he can leave, several girls run up to question him on individual concerns. Dwight, smiling broadly now, is obviously in his element.

Pallotti, founded and run by the nuns of the Pallottine Order, is a good school, one of the best in Belize. The current enrollment, all girls, is around 350, taught by a faculty of 24, evenly divided between lay and religious. "The school is well organized, with excellent facilities, and the discipline is strict," Dwight said.

His classroom load has averaged 30 hours a week, which is a lot of teaching. General science, chemistry and biology he expected. Not so with classes in religion and in English as a foreign language, the latter for the school's Spanish-speaking Honduran students. But he quickly mastered the new subjects.

On the extracurricular front, Dwight has served as advisor for the school's Science and Apostolic Clubs, as a coordinator of the annual fundraising fair, and as chairman of one of the four "houses" into which the girls are divided for intramural sports competition.

One of the reasons he elected to extend his tour a year was to bird-dog a grant application, for support of Science Club activities, that he had submitted to USAID. The $5,000 grant came through this year. (Another reason for the third year was that the school asked him to stay.)

Dwight feels particularly good about a counseling system he and an American colleague, Jim Lee, helped set up during the 1984-85 school year. "Now that the girls know they can talk to someone," he said, "they do. They have a lot of problems."

As he prepared to leave Belize, Dwight put some of his thoughts in writing. He noted how he had gradually developed a deep affection for the country, a transformation he attributed to the hundreds of stu-

Mysterious seepage discovered in downtown office basements

From Staff Reports

Small quantities of a mysterious gasoline-like substance have been seeping into the basements of several downtown office buildings near the intersection of Big Spring Street and Louisiana Avenue, and fire officials say they don't know exactly what the substance is or where it's coming from.

"We do have some sort of fluid leaking into buildings," said Fire Inspector Eric Metzger this morning. "We're not sure what it is. It's unusual simply because we can't find a source."

Though analysis of the substance showed it to have a flashpoint similar to that of gasoline, there is no danger of explosion, said Metzger, because daily seepage is "less than a gallon," the fumes are being ventilated, and the substance is being removed as it comes in. He declined to identify the buildings involved.

"We don't have it in our basement," said Leslie Ringgold, manager of the Paragon Building, 600 N. Marlenfeld. "We're clear here."

The fumes were first noticed early last week, according to Deputy Fire Chief Dean Williams.

"At one time we picked it up in a manhole cover," he said. "We've opened up the sewer system and it's not in there."

Williams said investigators have been baffled by the inconsistent nature of the seepage.

"It's never been in the hazard range and it's not constant. If it was a constant source, maybe we could check it back," he said, but added, "We're not concerned about it."

A check of the inventories of nearby gas stations has revealed no missing quantities of fuel. Metzger said the substance might have leaked from a tank years ago, and Williams suggested last week's rains may have raised the water table, flushing the substance from the aquifer.

"But that's not even an educated guess. We're grasping for some sort of explanation," he said. "There's nothing we can go put our finger on."

"It could be just about anything," Metzger said.

Andrew Briscoe joins Texas governor's race

HOUSTON (AP) — Andrew C. Briscoe III, second cousin to former Governor Dolph Briscoe, announced he will be a Democratic contender for governor.

The Dallas businessman, who may be opposing Democrat incumbent Mark White, said Thursday he plans to use his business experience "to restore efficiency and honesty to Texas government" if elected.

Briscoe is the first Democratic opponent to declare against White, who has not yet announced whether he will seek re-election in 1988.

Briscoe, 33, is an officer in a Dallas development company. He also has worked as a wildlife biologist in Kerrville and as publisher of several suburban newspapers in the Dallas area.

Botsford, in his motion for a new trial, included an affidavit indicating the state had access to certain "exculpatory evidence" that would have created "reasonable doubt" concerning Skelton's involvement in the death of Neal.

In the affidavit signed by Bob Byard, he related how he had been at Furr's Cafeteria picking up a food order April 23, 1982, the night before Neal was killed when he apparently tried to start his pickup truck.

Byard relates that he observed a man near a two-toned red pickup truck and talked to another man, both of whom were acting suspiciously. He goes on to say in his affidavit that he attached no significance to the incident until he heard about the explosion that killed Neal.

He said he didn't do anything about his information until two to three weeks later because he and his wife "were hesitant and scared." Byard said he finally called the FBI office in Midland and someone told him the federal agency had no jurisdiction in the case, but the man he talked to said he thought Odessa police had a suspect and suggested Byard contact the Odessa police department.

Byard said the agent was reassuring and he forgot about it until Skelton was about to go to trial and he saw a picture of him and realized that Skelton was not one of the men he had seen the night before Neal was killed. He said he contacted the Odessa police department and related his information, but no one ever got back to him.

Botsford contends "the State of Texas was in constructive, if not actual, possession of material evidence exculpatory to defendant (Skelton) prior to the trial" and that this information was "critical in light of the rigorous attack leveled at defendant's alibi defense" during the trial.

Botsford cites several precedents in asking Lewis to order a new trial for Skelton. The case was originally heard before District Judge R.L. McKim, who has since retired.

District Judge Gene Ater Thursday said he has reset Skelton's capital solicitation of murder trial from Aug. 5 to Sept. 16 because of scheduling conflicts and a judicial conference. Ater has transferred the case to Fort Worth on a change of venue, where it will be heard in 213th District Court.

In the capital solicitation indictments, Skelton is alleged to have attempted to hire his stepson and another man to kill two former business associates. The grand jury indictments against Skelton were handed down the same day he was sentenced to death in the killing of Neal.

Committee chairman Tom Bruner reported an agreement had been reached to seek proposals from "noted providers" of cancer programs and services to manage, market and staff the Radiation Oncology section of the center.

Committee member Roy Campbell reported the Source of Funds Policy shows the hospital has progressed from a "large" deficit from opera-

In a regular monthly meeting of the Midland County Hospital District, members of the board of directors:

— Approved partial payment of contracts involving construction projects in progress.

Sabbath-work ruling may affect blue law repeal

AUSTIN (AP) — A U.S. Supreme Court ruling against requiring employers to give a day off to observe the Sabbath "has some bearing" on the Texas Blue Law repeal and a possible chilling effect on religion, says Gov. Mark White.

The high court Wednesday tossed out a Connecticut law forcing employers to give workers a day off for worship. The Texas Legislature this year repealed the Blue Law that had effectively banned most Sunday shopping since 1961.

The repeal includes a guarantee that workers would get time off to observe their Sabbath. The Supreme Court decision, based on separation of church and state, "obviously has some bearing" on the repeal move, according to White.

"To me it seems absurd that the separation of church and state principle would mean you have to, in a sense, ignore certain religious principles and opportunities for (employees) to practice those principles," White said at a Thursday news conference.

"That, to me, is the foundation of the destruction of the church and the opportunity to worship," the governor added.

Sidney Buchanan, associate dean at the University of Houston Law Center, says there is no difference between laws that stipulate time off or a day off to celebrate the Sabbath.

Indictments handed down

From Staff Reports

A 32-year-old Midland woman was indicted Wednesday for the April 27 murder of Johnnie Mae Saddler, and the 23rd District Court Grand Jury also indicted a 41-year-old Midland man for the June 7 murder of Donald Ray Holloway, according to the Midland County District Attorney's Office.

Billie Jo McGruder, also known as Billie Jo Jackson, 1103 E. Pecan, was indicted for an incident at 2100 Butternut Lane, April 27, in which Ms. Saddler, 29, was fatally shot in the head, apparently after a scuffle, according to police reports. She was pronounced dead by Justice of the Peace Robert H. Pine.

David Lawrence Jenkins Jr., 201 S. Jefferson, was indicted for the June 7 shooting of Holloway near the railroad tracks across from the 900 block of Front Street. The 23-year-old Holloway's body was found about 1:30 a.m., and Jenkins was arrested at his house about 3 a.m., according to police reports. The shooting apparently followed an argument between the two men, reports said.

Robot promising, but don't trust it with baby

Copley News Service

David Grossman is still celebrating the industrial robots' newfound ability to pick up an egg, gently but firmly and then break it on command.

So to talk of a future where robots perform all of our most abhorrent chores — grocery shopping, scrubbing the floors, rocking the baby to sleep — is a little like choosing a university for a child still learning to crawl.

"Ultimately, in the far distant future, Aristotle's dream will come to pass. What did he say? 'When the lyre plays itself, we will all be truly free,'" said Grossman, 45, one of the world's foremost authorities on robotics. "But to think that we will see the day when a home robot comes to your door like a butler, takes your jacket and asks if you had a hard day at the office, or is smart enough to take the baby off the top of the trash container before throwing the trash out, or is bright enough to pick up the wallet you dropped on the floor before it begins vacuuming, is wrong."

GROSSMAN, NEVERTHELESS, admits to a longtime fantasy of replicating himself mechanically.

As manager of the automated research laboratory at International Business Machine Corp. in Yorktown Heights, N.Y., for 15 years, his mission has been to build the better robot.

So far, at least, progress has been slow and tedious.

One of IBM's recent newcomers to the burgeoning robotics market, for instance, is the $35,000 IBM-7540, a programmable robotic system designed for assembly and material handling.

It has a robotic arm that can move in four directions and lift up to 60 pounds, and has a programmable memory that can hold five functions.

"There are four basic problems in designing a robot," according to IBM's David Grossman.

The 7540, among other IBM robot models, is now at work on the production lines at General Dynamics, Boeing and General Motors doing such task-oriented work as assembling electronic components, spray-painting and spot-welding.

"THERE ARE four basic problems in designing a robot," said Grossman. "Making it cheaper. Designing it to be precise, fast and easy to program."

The most difficult component has always been that of precision, he added.

"It is fairly easy to get a robot to take a flat integrated circuit, to put it on a board and to solder it in place. That task is being performed on assembly lines right now. It's quite another thing to get a robot to, say, tie shoelaces," he said. "There are so many things that can go wrong in the latter task. It's a matter of finding out how to program everything that can go wrong in the input data."

So the idea in some scientific circles that robots might one day be controlled by their own artificial intelligence is wrongheaded, Grossman said.

"ARTIFICIAL INTELLIGENCE is a bottomless pit. The proper direction in robotics is improving on practical, programmable models," he said.

Grossman gently chided some scientists who promised in the early 1970s to create within 10 years robots that would be able to challenge humans in games of chess and pingpong.

"They didn't," he noted flatly. "Hand-to-eye systems remain technically primitive."

He also frequently sent pointed barbs in the direction of his own profession, using slides depicting Robbie the Robot of B-movie fame, and Boris Karloff's "Frankenstein" to illustrate how science has influenced science fiction, and vice versa.

"Most people are like small children when it comes to robots. They still see robots as metallic, clanking monsters — unfeeling things out to take over the world. In reality, robots simply reflect their designers," he said.

THE TERM robot — meaning forced laborer in Czechoslovakian — was first introduced into the English language in 1920 by Czech playwright Karel Capek in his melodrama "R.U.R.," which portrayed a group of mechanical beings made of artificial protoplasm that eventually turn on their human masters and destroy them, explained Grossman.

"There weren't many benevolent robots until R2D2 and C3PO came along," he said.

Grossman turned solemn only once, when addressing the social impact of an expanding robotics market.

"The ultimate aim in building robots is, of course, to create more leisure time for human beings," he said, adding that the initial side effects to society of robots in factories will be some suffering and dislocation of a part of the work force. "But there may be a lesson for us in Japan's experience. Where the use of robots is much more extensive, there is also a much higher employment rate than in the United States."

Computers work together

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — It may be hard enough to get your personal computer to do what you want it to, but how would you make over 100 of them work, in parallel, on the same problem at the same time?

That's the task faced by University of Rochester researchers as they work to develop ways to program the university's BBN

Butterfly multiprocessor, a computer containing the equivalent of 128 separate personal computers.

Researchers think its parallel structure will make it perfect for applications in artificial intelligence, computer graphics, and various types of true-to-life simulations.

Running shoes computerized

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Feeling fat? An ordinary bathroom scale can confirm your suspicions, but for a true measure, try the Skydex. The $399 caliper gently pinches an inch or so of your midriff and then, thanks to its tiny built-in computer, calculates your overall body fat in just 30 seconds.

Want to jog off some of that fat? The microprocessor built in to the right heel of Puma's new $200 running shoes will tell you exactly how many calories you burned on your latest run. In fact, just plug the sweaty shoe into your home computer and you'll learn all about your trip: how far, how fast, the number of steps you took and how it compares to your earlier performances.

And if you want to know how fast your heart is beating during your workout, you can wear AMF's $295 Quantum XL. Its pulse-sensing belt straps around your chest and transmits electrical signals to a radio you wear on your wrist, right where your watch should be. The radio flashes your heart beat rate and sounds an alarm when you're sloughing off.

As bizarre, or even comical, as it may seem, this is the state of the art these days in exercise equipment. And Americans, led by affluent, body-conscious young professionals, have turned these newfangled electronic exo-gadgets into a market that analysts expect will generate more than $100 million in annual sales within two years.

Last year, reports the National Sporting Goods Association, retailers sold $1.2 billion worth of exercise equipment for the home, where a personal exercise spa has replaced the gourmet kitchen as the symbol of success. Although analysts estimate that less than 5 percent of the equipment contained silicon chips, manufacturers and retailers agree that high-tech workout gear is the most rapidly growing segment of this exploding market.

The shift from iron to silicon as a key element of the gym represents an increasing effort to make exercise more user-friendly. And manufacturers say that as the prices of electronic components continue to drop, they'll be doing even more to jazz up their machines.

"We're basically going to see exercise equipment combined with arcade games," predicts Michael Hairston, a physical therapist. "The bells and whistles don't do anything for the actual training, but they do make exercise seem more fun than it really is."

Already one weight lifting machine has a Pac Man-like figure gobbling cheesecake in amounts equivalent to the calories burned by the user. And a soon-to-be-released rowing machine for health clubs allows high-scorers to leave their initials behind, just as kids do on the video games.

However, most equipment these days concentrates on detailing what's happened during the workout. Take, for instance, the ultraleak, ultraslick Dynavolt. This $3,500 stationary bike has electronic sensors that monitor pedal speed, work load, oxygen intake, distance traveled and calories burned. Just punch a few buttons and whatever data you want is displayed on a panel attached to what passes for the bike's handlebars.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Depression can be shown in different ways

Dear Dr. Solomon: One of my girlfriends went to a psychiatrist because she was depressed. I remember that she would cry a lot and pretty much stayed at home most of the time. The reason I thought about this is that my husband has been depressed since he lost his job, but he doesn't cry and we still go out once in a while. Is it simply that depression can be shown in different ways? — Mrs. A.K., Macon, Ga.

Dear Mrs. K: The differences you cite may reflect differences in the way men and women show depression. According to Dr. Mark Zetlin, of the University of California, Irvine, College of Medicine, the symptoms of depression in men and women may differ. He notes that women cry more easily and are more socially withdrawn and agitated than men, while men tend to have lower self-esteem and levels of concentration.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Aside from the fact that exercise is considered to be good for practically everyone, does it give any advantage to a pregnant woman compared with pregnant women who do not exercise? — Mrs. K.J., Pittsburgh.

Dear Mrs. J: Studies have shown that exercise not only creates a feeling of well-being in pregnant women, but can alleviate backaches and the feeling of chronic fatigue that many of them experience.

Dear Dr. Solomon: After reading about how heart attack patients are getting into exercise programs, I began to think that those who don't exercise are the exceptions. Can this be true? — Leroy, Newark, N.J.

Dear Leroy: In some respects, it is becoming simpler to define which heart attack patients should not be involved in an exercise program than to say which should be. Two important contraindications are heart failure and angina, and these may respond to treatment with medication.

It has become increasingly evident that many patients can return to their normal activities within a few weeks following a myocardial infarction. Moreover, some of these patients may achieve a level of physical fitness that is higher than they had enjoyed before their illness.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My daughter complains of stomach aches a couple of times a week, and both the school nurse and the school counselor say that the reason is psychological. But I know my daughter, and if she says that something bothers her, I know she is telling the truth. The nurse and the counselor are usually very considerate people. How do you account for the difference of opinion? — Mrs. T.R., Newark, Del.

Dear Mrs. R: There is really no conflict in the situation you present. The fact that your daughter's discomfort has a psychological basis does not mean that she is not experiencing any pain. The pain undoubtedly is very real, regardless of the reason or the cause. It appears that what the nurse and counselor are telling you is that your daughter's symptoms are brought about by stressful events, such as anxiety.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Is there any way for a person who finds it difficult to take morphine orally to still be able to use it? — Ms. J.T., Los Angeles

Dear Ms. T: A morphine suppository is available.

For Gertrude, Brooklyn, N.Y.: If a person's intake of calcium is insufficient, the body will use the calcium in the individual's bones. This loss of calcium weakens the bones and they become more susceptible to fractures.

Youth 'bleeds to death' but survives

Copley News Service

SAN DIEGO — At a recent $200-a-plate benefit dinner, a young man dressed in a white dinner jacket and black bow tie, his dark curly hair cut short for the occasion, approached the podium.

His family and others who love him know the 19-year-old as one who is rarely at a loss for words. That night, with characteristic showmanship, Christopher Valva thanked the police officers, paramedics and Mercy Hospital trauma team surgeons who had brought him back from death four months before.

Valva bled to death — by medical definition — after he was stabbed in the heart Feb. 1 in a confrontation outside his mother's home.

Only a slight tremor in his hands betrayed the severity of the ordeal he had withstood, a nightmarish injury that many people would not have survived.

Because of his status as a medical miracle, Valva has become "quite a veteran at the celebrity thing," said Dr. Eugene Rumsey, Jr., the trauma team surgeon Valva credits with saving his life.

"I'm the only 19-year-old I know that's got a fund in their name," Valva said of the fund and dinner his father, John Valva, a New York actor and producer, organized to benefit the trauma center. "If it weren't for the trauma center, I'd be pushing daisies right now."

While young Valva clearly remembered certain things about that Friday night incident, others remained but a blur. Most of his memories are tinged with his dauntless sense of humor.

"I kept falling helplessly, endlessly," he said of his experience with death, a sly smile spreading across his face. "I saw the devil and a bunch of flames. No, not really. My PR man told me to say that."

Facial pain may mask depression

DALLAS (AP) — An incapacitating facial pain that resists diagnosis can stem from depression, and dentists, psychiatrists and other physicians can ease victims' suffering if they learn to spot it, a psychiatrist says.

Psychotherapy and anti-depressant drugs can often stop the pain that drives some victims to see 25 or 30 physicians who can't help, and may make the problem worse, said Dr. Stanley Lesse, a psychiatrist and an attending neurologist at the Columbia-Presbyterian Medical Center in New York.

Speaking at the annual meeting of the American Psychiatric Association in Dallas, Lesse said the condition called faciospasmalgia can be easily diagnosed by an informed professional.

Lesse said it is not common in the general population but tends to strike mainly middle-aged women. They are typically very intelligent, hard-working, dominant and ambitious, said Lesse, who presented data on 602 patients referred to him over 22 years. The syndrome is rare in lower socioeconomic groups, he said.

The pain often begins intermittently in the area of a dental procedure or minor facial injury, he said. Within a few weeks, it sharpens and begins to burn. Eventually it becomes more persistent and begins to spread, he said.

"It increasingly preoccupies the patient," Lesse said. "It becomes the sum total topic of their discussions."

"The patient is in agony. They can't function. Sleep becomes a problem. Talking, chewing becomes a problem."

In their attempts to stop the pain, patients may have their teeth capped, undergo dental or other surgery, or have narcotics prescribed. But such steps work only briefly at best and later make anti-depressive therapy less effective, Lesse said.

Even psychiatrists may not spot the underlying depression, and refer victims to other doctors who will continue to seek a physical problem in vain, Lesse said.

More than half the patients in his study had suffered the condition more than two years. About forty percent had thought about suicide by the time they reached him, he said.

The condition's characteristics should alert a health care professional, he said.

Apart from its lack of an apparent physical cause, its concentration in middle-aged women and the typical personality traits associated with it, its victims are far more obsessed and disabled by the pain than sufferers of physically caused pain are, he said.

It all began when Valva and a friend, Tom Bowman, arrived home after working the evening shift at a local print shop. It was payday and the two were planning to head for the mountains.

"It was a quiet night, and it looked real normal," he said of the older neighborhood where he had lived with his mother and four younger siblings for nine years. "We saw a bunch of people in the next block north breaking bottles and making noise, causing trouble. Like idiots, instead of calling the police, we went out there ourselves."

"I was yelling at them to get the hell out," he added. "I was trying to tell them, man, just do it someplace else."

Valva and Bowman confronted three of the youths — who had split from the larger group — in the street near Valva's house. It looked like a fight would ensue between Valva and one of the youths.

"I had decided to back off when he came at me," Valva said. "He said, 'You've just been stabbed.' I felt no pain. I felt like I had just been punched in the chest."

The knife entered the left side of Valva's chest and pierced his heart and left lung. Valva said he didn't remember what his assailant looked like, except that he was black and had spiky punk hair.

Valva then ripped back his shirt and began running toward his house, blood streaming from the wound. His mother, Irene Ferguson-Maltman, had just returned from putting her youngest child to bed and resumed watching an ABC television "Nightline" segment on the New York subway vigilante deaths when she heard her son pounding on the door.

"When I think of that night, it was like time stopped," Ferguson-Maltman said. "I said to him, 'Oh, it's not very bad, honey.' I didn't want it to be bad." Police arrived within minutes after Ferguson-Maltman dialed the 911 emergency number, and she said Valva shouted out orders to remove his boots and call his girlfriend before he passed out.

Valva's heart stopped soon after paramedics arrived, Ferguson-Maltman said. He was given cardio-pulmonary resuscitation for almost 10 minutes on the way to the hospital's Shock Trauma Resuscitation Room, where Rumsey shoved tubes into his chest and ankles to replace the lost blood.

The surgeon opened Valva's chest and began massaging the heart in an attempt to restore a beat. The team poured into Valva between 20 and 25 pints of blood, roughly twice the amount normally in the human body, Rumsey added. He was losing blood as quickly as it was replaced until Rumsey could find the hole in his heart.

"While I was dead for that 20 minutes, it felt so weird," Valva said. "But it (the feeling) was nothing that can't be explained." It was a surreal feeling of warmth and relaxation, he added, "like sun through a window."

"I knew I was dead, but I could still see what was going on," he said. "I was going, 'Wow, this is weird.' I remember trying to tell them, 'Man, just keep working on me.' I remember them saying something about motor functions. I think I was trying to motion to them to keep working. I remember them saying, 'We're losing him.'"

Rumsey attributed Valva's recovery to his youth, healthy condition and "the grace of God."

"I told her (Valva's mother) he was in extremely critical condition and had had an injury most people would have died from," Rumsey said. "I had never seen a patient come in with a full cardiac arrest from blood loss before they even got to the emergency room and survive."

Study: Aspirin best arthritis drug

HOUSTON (AP) — Aspirin-like drugs are as effective as more expensive and risky drugs for treating arthritis, a 10-year U.S. Soviet study on the illness shows.

The study involved 162 children — 66 from the United States and 96 from the Soviet Union — suffering from juvenile rheumatoid arthritis, which afflicts about 250,000 American children.

"We are hopeful this joint study will be appreciated the world over," said Dr. Lev S. Alexeev, senior researcher at the Children's Department of the Soviet Institute of Rheumatology.

"The studies are particularly significant because they represent 10 years of successful, productive and cooperative research between the United States and the Soviet Union," added Earl J. Brewer, Chief of the Rheumatology Department at Houston's Texas Children's Hospital.

"It's the first time anything of this sort could be done. It also showed we could work together. In the 1970s, this was not always easily done."

Ludmila A. Issaeva, head professor in the Department of Children's Diseases at the First Moscow State Medical Institute, said the task of the group was to "try to find the best drugs, the most compatible drugs, for treatment."

The results showed aspirin-like drugs as effective as the disease-modifying drugs d-penicillamine and hydroxychloroquine, the physicians said.

Brewer said the study was set up to determine whether the use of the specialized drugs "was truly effective or not."

"Our joint work, dedicated to helping children, ended quite successfully," Ms. Issaeva said. "We would like to believe this work, begun 10 years ago, will have many positive results toward alleviating this disease in children."

Juvenile rheumatoid arthritis primarily affects internal organs or is marked by inflammation of the joints.

Ms. Issaeva said involving two countries in the study lessened the time required and included more people, resulting in better and more significant conclusions.

"The joint work has shown that although we have linguistic problems, basically we both speak the same language," said Nina Kuzmina, professor in the Children's Department at the Soviet Institute of Rheumatology.

Few victims 'belted'

Copley News Service

Seat belts save lives, data indicates. Only about 1,420 — or 3.3 percent — of all the motor-vehicle occupants who were killed in traffic accidents in the United States during 1982 had been wearing a safety belt, according to the latest data from the Fatal Accident Reporting System.

DEAR ABBY

Mother shocked by daughter

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Three weeks ago I accidentally found my daughter's birth control pills, and I haven't been able to sleep since. She's 18, a straight-A student and active in our church. She's worked since she was 16 and saved every penny for college. She was a perfect child (we thought). She's planning to go away to college in the fall.

When I found those pills I hit the ceiling, and told her since she's having sex, she should get married and forget about college. I didn't really mean it, but she hurt me so bad I wanted to hurt her.

Her steady boyfriend is in his second year of college. He still picks her up but doesn't come in the house. We used to think he was tops. He doesn't drink or smoke and he goes to our church.

My husband was heartsick when I told him, but he hasn't said anything to our daughter. He's too embarrassed. I guess maybe we should be thankful that she was smart enough to go to a doctor for pills, but I cannot condone premarital sex. What should I do? — DISAPPOINTED MOM

DEAR MOM: You shouldn't "do" anything other than accept the fact that your daughter is no longer a minor and you can't control her actions.

I am not asking you to condone premarital sex, but I urge you not to destroy your once wonderful mother-daughter relationship because you don't see eye to eye on this one issue.

Be thankful she's not risking pregnancy, and love her for her admirable qualities. She appears to have many.

DEAR ABBY: Amy and I are getting married next month. We are both 23 and very much in love, but we're having a minor disagreement we can't seem to settle. I have never smoked, but Amy has been a heavy cigarette smoker since high school, and she's made it very clear that she plans to smoke at our wedding reception. She says that after the ceremony she will "need" a cigarette to calm her nerves, and she's sure our guests will understand.

I told her that the sight of a bride smoking a cigarette in her bridal gown and veil would be disgusting, and probably a breach of etiquette. I've sadly accepted Amy's addiction to nicotine, but is it unreasonable to ask her to refrain from smoking on this very special occasion? — SMOKED OUT

DEAR SMOKED OUT: Yes. Nicotine addicts "need" a cigarette when they are under pressure. I agree, a bride in gown and veil does not a pretty picture make with cigarette in hand, but since you so strongly object, ask her to excuse herself and smoke in private when she feels the "need."

DEAR ABBY: For years I've been trying to find the answer to this question: How did "Peggy" come to be the nickname for "Margaret"? I hope you or one of your readers can come up with the answer, as I have been trying for years to find out without success.

My given name is Margaret, but I have always been called Peggy. I like the name of Peggy, but when people ask me how Margaret came to be Peggy, I don't have an answer. — PEGGY (REALLY MARGARET)

DEAR PEGGY: If someone out there knows the answer, I'll pass it along. Readers?

Study links genes to heart disease

Associated Press

Healthy living can help guard against heart disease, but genetic factors and possibly the ubiquitous herpes virus also may be factors.

The American Heart Association says diseases of the heart and blood vessels kill nearly 1 million Americans every year and, according to an article in the July issue of Science Digest, cardiovascular health is not entirely a matter of lifestyle.

"For 80 percent of the population," said Rockefeller University geneticist Jan Breslow, "who gets a heart attack and at what age is a balance between the kind of life-style we lead and genetic factors."

For the rest, genes dominate the health picture.

Breslow is studying the genetic makeup of the 5 to 10 percent who, he estimates, are highly susceptible to heart disease. An equal percentage of people are highly resistant.

A key to the matter is the balance between two kinds of lipoproteins, envelopes of protein, that carry cholesterol through the body. Low-density lipoprotein (LDL) delivers cholesterol to the cells. High-density lipoprotein (HDL) sweeps up unneeded cholesterol and delivers it to the liver for excretion.

High levels of LDL can trigger heart disease; high levels of HDL reduce the risk of heart disease. A ratio of 65 percent LDL and 25 percent HDL is considered normal.

In most people, a diet low in fat and high in fiber reduces LDL, while exercise increases HDL. But, Breslow said, genetic factors also play a role and "there are maybe 15 or 20 genes that control the many aspects of lipoprotein metabolism."

Cholesterol is the culprit in atherosclerosis, accumulating on the inner walls of the blood vessels to form fatty plaques that can cut off blood flow and cause a heart attack or stroke.

What triggers atherosclerosis is not clear, but many scientists believe it begins with an injury to the smooth lining of artery walls.

They theorize the injury can come from high blood pressure, elevated level of blood fats and components of cigarette smoking.

Evidence also is growing that the herpes virus may be another underlying cause.

Microbiologist Catherine Fabricant of Cornell University made the connection more than a decade ago, and has been working on it with her husband, Julius, and Pathologists C. Richard Minick and Maria Litrenta of New York Hospital-Cornell Medical Center.

For years the scientific community was reluctant to accept Fabricant's findings. Recently, however, heart surgeon Michael DeBakey and his colleagues at Baylor College of Medicine in Texas have found evidence of herpes infection in arterial tissue taken from patients with severe atherosclerosis. Pathologist Earl Benditt at the University of Washington reports similar findings.

Some of the underlying causes of heart disease may not be under your control, but the factors that heighten risk are.

Sharing helps keep relationship with in-laws healthy

STILLWATER, Okla. (AP) — To maintain a good relationship with your in-laws, share with your mate the responsibility for maintaining contacts on both sides of the family, suggests Dr. Wayne Matthews, Extension family life specialist at Oklahoma State University.

Both you and your spouse should write letters, make phone calls, send gifts and plan visits, holiday observances and reunions, he suggests adding that maintaining contacts helps build a total feeling of family acceptance.

TDC inmates weep after being allowed to touch their loved ones

ROSHARON, Texas (AP) — Many of the best-behaved inmates at the Texas Department of Corrections Darrington Unit wept last weekend as they were allowed to touch their loved ones for the first time since their imprisonment.

Under an agreement in a recently settled prison reform lawsuit, TDC must allow the "contact visits" for top-level trustees at all 27 of its units by Sept. 1.

"It will help out a whole lot with things that are happening here because it will give people something to look forward to," Juan Garcia, one of the Darrington trustees allowed the new privilege, said. "A lot of them will try to do good so they can have this, too."

Darrington officials last Saturday permitted the trustees to meet with family members in a shady, grassy spot outside the barbed wire instead of the usual visiting place — a dingy room where the inmates and their visitors were separated by a screen of metal and glass.

"I just think it's much more humane, that's all," said former prison Director Raymond Procnier, who retired earlier this month. "I just believe in my heart that the more humane you are to people, the less violent they will be and the better they will see the world."

Procnier, who came to Texas in May 1984, had experience with contact visits as director of the California, Virginia and New Mexico prison systems.

He said he doesn't know if such a privilege helps lower prison violence or cut down on recidivism, but added that TDC's new policy is "very conservative." Conjugal visits are not allowed in Texas.

The Texas prison system was one of the last holdouts against contact visits.

"Common sense finally prevailed," said state Rep. Ed Emmett of King-wood, a conservative Republican who for several years had championed the cause of inmate contact visits.

In 1983, Emmett co-sponsored an unsuccessful bill that would have allowed such visits. The measure was vehemently opposed by W.J. Estelle, then head of the prison system.

Emmett said he became interested in the issue when he made a commencement speech to a college graduation class for inmates. After the speech, the graduates were allowed contact visits with their families.

As he wandered about, Emmett said he spotted a man, a woman and a small boy. The man, dressed in inmate whites, and the 4-year-old boy, were crying. Emmett said he asked the woman why.

"She looked me dead in the eye and said, 'This is the first time he's ever touched his son,'" Emmett recalled.

Aged artists create Living Treasures show

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Nathan Young didn't pick up a paint brush until he was 70. Now 89, he has completed more than 400 paintings.

"I'm knocking on wood but I'm still going along," Young said as he finished touching up one of 18 paintings he has on show in a folk art exhibit at the St. Louis Art Museum. "I like to stay busy," he said. "Why live if you don't do anything?"

His paintings derive their themes from St. Louis history. "Black history has been my habit for about 20 years, when I started painting my black heroes," he said. "All I do is people. No landscapes, no abstracts — only people."

The show of works by 25 artists and craftsmen who are 55 or older was sponsored by a senior citizens' program known as OASIS (Older Adult Service and Information System). Called Living Treasures, it features craftsmen and artists who still actively create works.

The OASIS members searched for traditional artists. However, they also found some original talents such as Young who did not fit neatly into any category.

There's Isidore Gordon, 90, who paints famous rabbis; Anna Kuehner, in her 80s, who paints traditional Hungarian folk designs on eggs; William Pepmuller, now in his late 80s, who has been a church stenciler for seven decades; and Dr. Nelson Wu, in his mid 60s, who paints traditional Chinese art.

OASIS member Gladys Barker, 68, a retired occupational therapist, interviewed Wu, a retired art history professor at Washington University in St. Louis, as part of the project.

"It was a fascinating interview," she said. "He does his paintings on a long roll of paper and he never throws anything out. The Chinese philosophy is that art is continuous, there's no beginning or end."

Wu learned how to paint when he was in China, she said. "He even grinds his own ink."

The "Living Treasures" project is only one of dozens of programs offered by OASIS, a nonprofit organization that was started in 1982 with grants from the U.S. Department on Aging and the May Department Stores Co.

Marylen Mann, director of OASIS, said she hopes the art exhibit will be copied by OASIS branches in other cities and will encourage folk artists to teach their crafts to younger people.

"Many of these people don't consider themselves artists," she said. "They don't realize that they are the conservators of culture. If they don't pass it down, it will be lost forever."

One hundred years of storms can't break 'The Breakers'

AP Laserphoto

J.B. Gordon examines old railroad spikes he still finds in the front yard of his house in Caplen, approximately 25 miles northeast of Galveston. The house has withstood several hurricanes and storms in the past 101 years.

By JERRY LYNAS

CAPLEN, Texas (AP) — They don't make beach houses like they used to.

Not like "The Breakers," owned by J.B. and Marie Gordon of Beaumont, which for 101 years has stood near the base of the Bolivar Peninsula, some 25 miles northeast of Galveston.

"The Breakers," survived the 1900 hurricane that killed 6,000 in Galveston. It survived the 1915 hurricane that swept the coast. It lived through Hurricane Carla, which wiped out most other Bolivar Peninsula homes. Two years ago, Alicia hardly bothered it.

A history of the house written in 1941 by W.D. Gordon, J.B.'s uncle, says Terrence Meche, a ship carpenter, built the house of heartpine and cypress.

"He loaded it on a schooner in 1884, and there being no other method of transportation to the land, unloaded the material in the Gulf, a short distance from the shore, and the tide brought the lumber into the shore and scattered it up and down the beach for approximately a mile," the account says. "It was then gathered up and brought to the place where the house was to be built."

W.D. Gordon bought the house and 150 acres of land from Meche for $2,000 in 1905.

The 1915 hurricane tried its best to hurt the house. The storm tore up railroad tracks and wrapped them around the building. It moved the house 20 feet from its foundation. But it survived.

No weather service existed then to warn of hurricanes, and three men and a dog spent the night in the house. One was Marris McLean — the brother of Ruth Gordon, W.D. Gordon's wife.

Water entered the house and rose several feet. McLean and his companions, Monroe Carroll and August Borsum, moved to the second floor as the storm raged. McLean returned to the flooded lower level and brought back an ax to use in case they had to chop out of the house.

After the storm passed, they had to wait two days before wading and swimming to High Island, about 12 miles north, across East Bay.

Operators of the railroad rebuilt the tracks 300 yards farther away from the Gulf. When the storm hit, the tracks had lain between the house and the Gulf.

Marie Gordon still finds rusted railroad spikes nearby and keeps a collection of them.

The elder Gordons decided they would stay in the house when Hurricane Audrey aimed squarely at the upper Texas Gulf Coast in June 1957. They refused to budge despite four warnings from the U.S. Coast Guard.

Gordon remembers finally carrying his uncle, crippled by arthritis, out of the house and bringing him and his wife back to Beaumont about midnight, a few hours before the storm hit the coast.

THEY'RE HERE!

For The Price Of What Most People Think An Alfa Romeo Costs, They Could Actually Buy Two.

Considering the sophisticated technology and engineering that go into every Alfa Romeo, it's not surprising people have a misconception about the price. For example, the DeDion suspension on our GTV-6 can only be found on a $140,000 Aston Martin.

So go see your Alfa Romeo dealer. You'll be so impressed by our affordable 1985 cars, you just might decide to buy two. The 1985 Alfa Romeos start at only $13,495.*

Alfa Romeo
The most passionately engineered cars in the world.

GTV-6
Mfr's suggested retail price at P.O.E. Actual prices may vary. Destn. charges, taxes, dealer prep., if any optl. equip. and license fees are extra.
