Bush Elementary readied for its first day of school

By BRIAN PEARSON
Staff Writer

Three Midland educators walked about their new stomping ground Wednesday, casually examining the inside of the almost completed edifice.

They were greeted by untrampled carpets, virgin chalkboards and a paint job just fresh enough to make Bush Elementary School's rooms and hallways smell like the inside of a new car.

"It's exciting," said Toby Ward, who will be principal of the school when classes begin Sept. 5. "It's also scary. I want everything to be ready at the right time.

"I think we've got a good building and a rip-snorting staff that's ready to go."

Ms. Ward said she hasn't given her teachers their classroom assignments yet, for fear they will begin moving in before the the building is completed.

But that didn't stop her and two of her teachers, Joy O'Hara and Kerri Marsh, from getting a sneak preview.

The 5001 Preston Drive school in northwest Midland doesn't have a mascot yet, but it has its colors — Lee High School maroon and white. A contest for the school's estimated 350 pupils will determine the mascot, Ms. Ward said.

Official opening ceremonies for the school will be scheduled for sometime in the fall.

The man for whom the school was named, President George Bush, declined an invitation to attend the ceremony. However, an invitation to Barbara, the first lady, is still pending.

Wilson Heidelberg, executive director of Midland Independent School District auxiliary services, said construction workers are putting the final touches on the school, with completion set for mid-August.

"Everyone of the buildings will be ready by the time school starts," Heidelberg said of Bush and additions to 11 other MISD elementary schools. "We've been right on schedule."

The construction was made possible through a $12 million bond issue voters passed year. Workers had only about nine nths to complete the projects.

Rain, high winds less likely today

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Tonight's weather is not expected to pack the tornadoes, severe thunderstorms and high wind gusts to which the Permian Basin and eastern New Mexico were exposed Wednesday.

The storms were due partially to the atmospheric moisture from the now-deflated Hurricane Chantal which has traveled into northern Texas and Oklahoma, a weather department official said today.

Two tornadoes were reported east and northeast of Hobbs, N.M., shortly before 5 p.m., a Gaines County Sheriff's Department dispatcher in Seminole said this morning.

Minor damage was reported at a fireworks stand near the state line, the dispatcher said.

A National Weather Service (NWS) meteorological intern in Midland said this morning he received a report that a roof had been torn off a Hobbs home during the storm.

Although the NWS reported the tornado sightings to the Gaines County Sheriff's Department, which is east of the New Mexico city, Hobbs lawmen said today they knew nothing of the incidents.

Lightning grounds flight in Midland

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant City Editor

Mother Nature's pyrotechnics forced an America West jetliner to make an unscheduled West Texas layover Wednesday, according to officials at Midland International Airport.

The Boeing 737 en route from Lubbock to Midland, scheduled to continue to Phoenix, "experienced a midair lightning strike" and made a routine stop at the local airport as a result, said Ken Day of the airport's operations department.

The continuation of flight 556 was cancelled by America West shortly after 8 p.m., according to the airport operations log.

The plane had already been ferried to Phoenix for repairs by midmorning, Day said.

Twenty of the 48 passengers booked into local hotels overnight departed on America West's first flight out to Phoenix this morning, according to Dick Shimizu of America West's corporate communications staff.

Remaining passengers were expected to fly out on other airlines or on later America West flights today, he said.

Shimizu said no report of the type or extent of damage had been filed, although the plane was in the company's Sky Harbor hangar. The plane was grounded "as a precaution," after in-flight weather radar stopped functioning, as a result of being struck by lightning, he said.

Captors extend Cicippio threat deadline

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — The kidnappers of Joseph Cicippio extended the deadline to kill him by four hours today and released a videotape on which the American hostage read a statement urging freedom for a Shiite Moslem cleric held in Israel.

The Revolutionary Justice Organization, which holds Cicippio, said the deadline was postponed until 10 p.m. (3 p.m. EDT), at Cicippio's request.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said, "Any delay is good news." U.S. warships were reported moving toward the Mediterranean, but the Pentagon said today the moves were nothing unusual. Asked Wednesday if they signaled possible military action, President Bush said only, "We're prudently planning."

A Shiite Moslem leader threatened a "ruthless" reprisal in the event of a U.S. attack.

U.N. envoy Marrack Goulding was in Lebanon searching for the body of U.S. Marine Lt. Col. William R. Higgins. Goulding told ABC's "Good Morning America" that some people told him Higgins may still be alive.

A Shiite Moslem group claimed it killed Higgins on Monday to avenge Israel's refusal to release Sheik Abdul Karim Obeid, the Shiite Moslem clergyman it kidnapped Friday.

■ Bush pursuing all diplomatic avenues; Related stories — 5E

There has been speculation Higgins was killed last year, but Israel's Defense Ministry today quoted Obeid as saying Higgins may have been alive a week ago.

"I appeal to each person having honor who can move to release Sheik Abdul Karim Obeid. ... Don't be late, because they (the captors) are very serious," said the statement read by Cicippio.

Cicippio, with a bushy beard, was shown from the waist up. He was wearing eyeglasses and a blue track suit and looked haggard and distressed. The statement's poor English suggested his captors wrote it.

"My dear wife and people and all the human society and especially the Red Cross, don't leave me," Cicippio read.

"So to help me move, I demand from the American people, oblige Israel to release Sheik Abdul Karim Obeid immediately because his kidnapping is not human," he said, reading slowly.

"We the American people are always the victims of Israel's politics, and President Bush has not helped to free us."

Local bank deposits likely reflect stabilization

By JULIE JEROME
Business/Oil Writer

Total deposits at the seven of Midland's eight banks which report quarterly figures were down less than 1 percent during the second quarter of 1989 from the first quarter, reflecting a stabilizing local economy, bankers say.

Loan portfolios at the seven reporting institutions increased nearly 10 percent from the first quarter to the second quarter. Local bankers say this illustrates that people are pulling their money from deposits, and putting it toward personal and business loans.

Citywide totals are not available because of an NCNB-Texas corporate policy of not releasing deposit and loan figures for individual banks.

Though the Texas banking industry has undergone extreme changes during the past year — some of those changes affecting Midland banks — local bank representatives are eager to get on with "business as usual," and report morale in the Midland banking community is very good.

In April 1988, First City Bancorporation underwent a $1.6 billion federally assisted reorganization plan led by Chicago investor A. Robert Abboud. In late July 1988, NCNB Corp., of Charlotte, N.C., purchased First RepublicBank, following the closing of 40 of First RepublicBank's banks by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., (FDIC). And in mid-July, Dallas-based Deposit Guaranty agreed to purchase the ailing Texas American Bank.

"There has been a cleansing of the banking market, and a heightening of confidence in the banking community," said David Jones, president of ClayDesta National Bank. "The problems are behind us, and we're eager to get back to business as usual. A sick banking community is disheartening for us all."

Jones is encouraged by the healthy competition in the Midland banking market. "A healthy banking climate equates good for all of us," he said.

ClayDesta reported an increase of nearly 2 percent in loan demand during the second quarter over the first quarter, "a couple million dollars worth," Jones said.

He attributed most of the increased loan activity to personal loans such as house purchases, vehicle purchases and home improvement loans.

"We are the largest originator in Midland of loans for single-family residences so our numbers are a good barometer of loan activity," he said. "And our loan demand is up somewhat significantly."

Jones attributed the declining deposits to the time of year and the general Permian Basin economy.

Lost 10-year-old helped save his great-granddad

CENTRALIA, Wash. (AP) — The 10-year-old boy's voice dropped to a tired whisper as he told how he helped keep his great-grandfather alive in the woods after their truck ran off a remote logging road.

"I picked berries. I snuggled up by him," Mike Combs said from his hospital bed, where he was being treated for dehydration and exposure.

Mike and his 84-year-old great-grandfather, John C. Eveland, were lost for 4½ days in a remote area in southwestern Washington state. The pair was found by searchers early Wednesday.

Eveland was listed in serious but stable condition after suffering dehydration, and possibly a stroke.

Williams defends campaign funds

By RICK BROWN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Clayton Williams considers the half a million dollars he gave his own gubernatorial campaign during the first half of the year a necessity for building a creditable organization, his advisors and staff say.

To criticism that the Midland businessman is trying to buy the governorship, they say Williams is only trying to level the playing field.

The candidate has had no policy forum with which to express his views, as Railroad Commission Chairman Kent Hance and recently resigned Secretary of State Jack Rains have had, they point out.

"There ain't nobody gonna buy it," Williams' campaign treasurer and former House Speaker Billy Clayton said Wednesday.

"You spend money to let people know who you are and what you're qualifications are," he said. "And if they buy, fine."

Williams press spokesman, Frank Walter, said much of the expenditure has gone toward setting up an Austin office.

The candidate has said he would commit as much as $3 million of his own money to the primary campaign before voters go to the polls next May.

And with this initial spending, Williams has said he "made a substantial investment in my campaign early on to help assemble a professional, credible and highly effective campaign organization."

Included in that group is the addition this week of Sylvia Nugent of Amarillo as fundraising director. Ms. Nugent is a veteran of former Amarillo U.S. Rep. Beau Boiter's unsuccessful 1988 senatorial run.

Williams already had hired a slew of outside consultants to help in the race, including Dick Dresner and Jay Townsend of the Dresner, Sykes and Jorden consulting firm of New York and California.

WEATHER SUMMARY

Hurricane Dean veering from eastern Caribbean

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico (AP) — Hurricane Dean, packing 85 mph winds, veered away from Puerto Rico and the U.S. Virgin Islands today on a wobbly course in the Atlantic Ocean, forecasters said.

The National Weather Service lifted hurricane warnings for all the islands of the eastern Caribbean, including Puerto Rico and the U.S. Virgin Islands.

Forecasters said Dean was moving farther out to sea and that the worst affects of the storm would probably miss the islands.

A flash-flood watch remained in effect for the Virgin Islands, but it was lifted for Puerto Rico, where the National Guard earlier had been preparing to evacuate 2,000 people from flood-prone areas.

At 9 a.m. EDT, the hurricane's center was located at latitude 19.4 north and longitude 63.1 west, or 210 miles east-northeast of San Juan. The weather service in San Juan said if Dean remained on its current course it would pass 125 miles north of the Virgin Islands and 150 miles north of Puerto Rico.

Dean, the second hurricane of the Atlantic season, strengthened overnight as it moved irregularly in a west-northwest course through the Leeward Island chain, missing the nearest island, Barbuda.

By late Wednesday it began veering northwest, giving many residents and vacationers hope the hurricane would harmlessly go out to sea. But just as quickly, the hurricane darted back west and toward land.

"This is dangerous storm and should not be taken lightly even though it is a minimal hurricane," said an advisory from the National Weather Service in San Juan.

Police were on alert, and at least 60 American and Canadian vacationers were evacuated late Wednesday to hotels from a marina resort on the east coast of Tortola in the British Virgin Islands.

RAIN

Two funnel clouds were reported in West Odessa about a mile west of FM 1936 in the late afternoon and early evening, NWS intern Todd Shea said.

Odessa Fire Department Assistant Chief Freddie Gardner said today, however, he didn't think the reports were accurate.

"I got in my car and drove around in the area. We did have some high winds and quite a bit of rain.

"But people see the clouds moving some and it appears to them it's a tornado," the assistant chief said.

Winds gusts from 60-80 mph were reported to the Odessa Fire Department and also in Gaines County, Shea said. Winds of up to 30 mph were reported in Kermit.

Tornado warnings were issued in Dawson, Gaines and eastern Ector counties until shortly before 7 p.m, the NWS intern said.

Severe thunderstorm warnings existed during the same time period in eastern Gaines, western Midland, northern Dawson and Winkler counties.

Less than .2 inches of rain, however, was recorded Wednesday night at Midland International Airport, Shea said.

"The only influence Chantal would have had was the added moisture and instability, but it really didn't play a major role," the NWS intern said.

"The added moisture and just the afternoon heating made the atmosphere quite unstable. Everything kind of took off."

Locally, the thunder- and lightning-packed storms lasted until 1:30 a.m. today, Shea said.

The atmosphere is still moist, but cloud cover will preclude the high afternoon temperatures from which thunderstorms usually evolve, the intern said.

There is a 30 percent chance of thunderstorms today during the late afternoon and early evening.

STATE

Widely scattered showers and thunderstorms are possible across the western half of Texas and along the coast through tonight, but most of the precipitation generated by Hurricane Chantal is ending.

The remains of the minimal hurricane were moving northward from Oklahoma into Kansas early today.

Before departing Texas, rainfall from Chantal caused street flooding at Stephenville, Dublin in Erath county received nearly 5 inches of rain in about five hours and Waco had 1½ inches. Flooding was also reported at Ranger in Eastland County.

It will be partly cloudy statewide through Friday with warming temperatures.

Lows tonight will be mostly in the 70s, ranging from the 60s in the Panhandle to near 80 along the coast.

Highs Friday will be mostly in the 90s, ranging from the upper 80s along the coast to slightly above the 100-degree mark in the Big Bend area of Southwest Texas.

Midland statistics

FORECAST

Tonight: Partly cloudy, 20 percent chance of evening thunderstorms, low in the lower 70s, southeast winds 5-15 mph. Friday: Sunny, high in the upper 90s, southeast winds 5-15 mph.

WILLIAMS

The group, whose duties include polling for the Williams campaign, also is directing the gubernatorial campaign of California Sen. Pete Wilson, another Republican.

The organization in May conducted its first foray into Texans' views on Clayton Williams, Walter said, but the campaign is not releasing hard figures.

At that time, Williams was "in the middle of the pack," he said, noting that the candidate out-polled Rains in his home city of Houston.

With the media flurry that surrounded the candidate's entrance into the race, "we think we've improved considerably since then," Walter said.

Of other Williams consultants, Bill Miller and Associates of Austin are helping with direct mail fundraising, and Admarc, a Midland agency, is helping put together pamphlets, bumper stickers and commercials.

With Ms. Nugent's addition to the staff, the real fundraising will begin for the Williams campaign, Clayton said.

Even with no soliciting, the campaign garnerd $42,413.86 in contributions during the first half of the year, mostly from well-wishers, Walter said.

The contributions include 14 checks of $1,000 or more, including one for that amount from Midland attorney Tom Sealy, who has helped in Democratic campaigns in the past.

The largest contribution listed was for $5,000 from the MBank Political Action Committee. Williams was a director of the bank before it went into receivership with the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

All told, Williams listed loans and contributions of $633,699 during the first half of the year, against $618,787 in expenditures.

In addition to the $500,000 Williams loaned himself, contributions include about $91,000 in expenses Williams gave the campaign that represent use of his personal aircraft.

His opponents and potential opponents listed far less in both the expenditure and contributions categories.

Hance, who has not yet announced his candidacy, listed contributions of $1,995 against expenditures of $61,363, and Rains listed no contributions and expenditures of $78,464.

BANKS

"Deposits are slightly off this time of the year," he said. "Midland banks are off 6 to 9 percent, and we're only down 3.5 percent. And if you look at the economy, you'll know what we're dealing with."

Though the rig count is down dramatically, Jones said, the price of oil has been generally stable over the past seven months, as has the general business community.

Ed Jones, president of Texas Commerce Bank, attributed the increase in loan activity and the decline in deposits to the fact that, "we're seeing people putting their money back to work in the oil patch. That fact that rig count is up at all shows people are positive given the (stabilizing of the) price of oil over the past seven months."

Texas Commerce Bank's deposits declined nearly 6 percent during the second quarter of 1989 over the first quarter. But loans are up 9 percent over the same period. Compared to midyear 1988, loan and deposit totals are each up by more than 25 percent at TCB-Midland.

Bill Franklin with First City-Texas said that by the end of the summer most of the major banking acquisitions in the state should be settled, "and we can all get on with business."

Changes undergone by Texas American Bank and First City involved no change in personnel, Franklin noted, thus improving the banking community's morale.

"These people remain employed by the bank," he said. "So it is essentially the continuation of business. I think most of the scare is gone. Our bank was recapitalized by a financial group and there was no change in personnel. We are through our first year, and we are very proud of our performance."

First City's deposits grew 3.5 percent during the second three months of 1989, from the first three months of the year, and 6.2 percent from the same period of 1988.

Franklin said the bank is seeing loan activity in both residential financing and energy endeavors.

Inactive deposit and loan activity during the second and third quarter of the year is typical for banks, according to Wayne Merritt, president of United Bank.

United Bank's deposits shrunk 3.1 percent during the second quarter, compared with the first quarter. However, the loan activity was up a healthy 5 percent during the same period.

"Our loan demand is quite good," Merritt said. "We have been a consistent lender in this market for the past three or four years. The Midland housing market continues to be fairly decent."

Merritt said United Bank also continues to conduct a "considerable" amount of Midland's oil and gas lending.

Merritt is confident in the morale of the Midland banking community.

"Morale has reason to be good," he said. Three of the local banks whose parent companies were experiencing problems have been "fixed" by the government, he said, adding the strength of a community can be measured by the health of its financial institutions.

John Grist, president of Midland American Bank (MAB), is encouraged by the growth in loan activity during the second quarter of 1989. MAB showed the strongest percentage gain in loan activity from the first quarter to the second quarter of 1989. The bank's loans grew some $2 million, nearly a 12 percent quarterly increase.

Grist said the loan activity has been in the areas of small business, and some independent oil and gas endeavors.

Concerning the morale of the banking community, Grist mentioned that there has not been an independent bank failure recently.

"We are one of three or four independent banks in Midland," he said. "And that speaks well for the independents."

Bob Southerland, president of Community National Bank, said though the bank's deposits have declined nearly 16 percent from the first quarter to the second quarter of 1989, it is not unusual for this time of the year.

And the bank's loan decline of 21 percent reflects a slowdown in the oil community, he said.

"We're still profitable," he noted. "We're doing well as far as our own plan. We're within our parameters for this time of the year."

Charles Grimes, president Texas American Bank, now a "bridge bank," said he was looking forward to the bank's association with Deposit Guaranty of Dallas. He said the association would bring new economic strenth to the bank while putting past problems behind.

SCHOOL

"It has been a real tight schedule," Heidelberg said. "Normally you get a year or a year and a half for a building."

But new buildings are only part of what await MISD personnel and students as the 1989-90 school year looms only about a month away. Higher enrollment, a bigger teaching staff and numerous new programs will be part of the new year.

Even Superintendent Joe Baressi, who will see his 10th year in the district, said he views this year as special.

"This is the last year in the decade, and we want to make it the best year of the 80s," Baressi said Wednesday. "We're in the business for kids. You always look forward to seeing the kids come back."

Baressi said a primary goal of MISD teachers and principals this year will be to improve student academic achievement. Officials at each school will design an improvement plan for each grade level, he said.

New facilities, of course, mean attendance zone changes affecting hundreds of youngsters.

The Bush boundaries are as follows: Beginning at the Adnrews Highway-Midland Drive intersection, north on Midland to Wadley Avenue, west on Wadley to Mark Lane, north on Mark to Fairbanks Drive, east on Fairbanks to the extension of the alley between Fairbanks and Westmont court, north on the alley to Loop 250, west on Loop 250 to Andrews and east on Andrews to Midland.

The changes surrounding Bush, however, aren't the only ones in store for MISD elementary pupils this year.

School trustees during the summer also approved boundary changes affecting more than 300 mostly rural children. Some boundaries for Travis, Burnet, Bonham, Long and Houston elementary schools have been altered.

Larry Lusby, MISD executive director of computer and special services, said the changes were needed to relieve overcrowding at Houston and Travis elemenary schools.

Lusby also said the former boundaries fragmented the rural community, creating some hard feelings toward the district.

Baressi said the creation of more than 100 new classrooms opened up 70 new teaching spots, allowing MISD to meet the 22-to-1 pupil-teacher ratio required by the state for first through fourth grades. The district last year had to seek a waiver from the state until construction projects were completed.

Although not a part of districtwide building expansion projects, Midland High School is also undergoing a face-lift.

After a year of planning and fundraising, four MHS groups this summer embarked on a project to beautify the landscape and modernize the building's front.

This school year also will see a new face on the school board. Dr. Larry Rusk edged Dianne Anderson in a May election. Rusk replaces Bill Sewell, who chose not to run.

MISD sixth-graders this year will feel the strong arm of authority with the introduction of the Drug Abuse Resistance Education program.

Developed by the U.S. Department of Justice for use in Los Angeles schools, DARE is an educational program to thwart drug and alcohol use among children.

Three specially trained Midland Police Department officers will spend time in each MISD sixth-grade class to teach the youths about the dangers of drugs and alcohol.

Meanwhile, first-graders will not even need to "just say no" to a standarized skills test this year. Texas legislators approved a bill to eliminate administering the Texas Educational Assessment of Minimum Skills to first-graders.

All elementary pupils, however, may face stiffer discipline during the upcoming year.

Tired of seeing youngsters running amok on busses and in classrooms, a committee of parents, campus educators and central office administrators met in the spring. They came up with a list of 10 recommendations to improve elementary school discipline.

Some of the suggestions include a more uniform discipline policy between elementary campuses, bus monitors, more counselors and assigned bus seating.

Another community outcry resulted in the reorganization of the fourth-grade program for next year to insure more classroom consistency.

Rather than changing classes up to four times a day, the pupils will change twice and instructors will team teach. Instead of having one teacher for math and another for science, one instructor will teach both.

A four-tiered curriculum awaits secondary students this year. The system is designed to give high school and junior high go-getters a chance to rise above and underachievers a chance to catch up.

The program ranges from teaching basic skills to an elite curriculum for gifted students who may even use the courses to begin specializing for a chosen career.

For secondary students having trouble in the regular program, they could be scooped up by an alternative school program. The school will be expanded the school to accommodate more than 200 students.

Now taking in about 130 students during a school year, the school was created to curb a roughly 10 percent dropout rate. The program takes those who have the mental tools to get a GED or return to regular classes.

Not even adults who have no children in school will be unaffected by MISD changes this year. MISD officials have said they may hike taxes by 8 percent to fund new programs and teacher raises among added costs for 1989-90.

THREAT

Cicippio, choked with emotion, ended the statement with a message for his Lebanese wife, Elham.

"Goodbye, my wife. If you don't hear my voice and see my face again I want you to look after yourself and don't be sad and always remember me."

The handwritten statement from Revolutionary Justice Organization said in Arabic: "In response to Cicippio's request to delay the execution until 10 p.m., in the hope that his appeal would be fruitful and useful, it has been decided to grant a delay in the new deadline."

A Shiite source noted that Revolutionary Justice has threatened to kill hostages in the past but is not known to have carried out the threats.

A bearded man delivered the statement and the 90-second tape to a Western news agency in Beirut this afternoon.

Cicippio's captors had initially said they would kill him unless Israel freed Obeid by 6 p.m. Tuesday (11 a.m. EDT). The group then extended the deadline 48 hours.

Israel refused to free Obeid and offered to trade him for three Israeli soldiers and foreign hostages held in Lebanon. The pro-Iranian Hezbollah, of which Obeid is reputed to be a member, rejected a swap.

Hezbollah is believed to be the umbrella for factions holding most of the 16 foreign hostages in Lebanon. The captives include eight Americans.

Cicippio, 58, of Norristown, Pa., was acting comptroller of the American University of Beirut when he was abducted Sept. 12, 1986.

The hostage held longest is Terry A. Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent of The Associated Press. He was kidnapped March 16, 1985.

Shortly before the deadline was extended, U.N. envoy Marrack Goulding held a closed-door session in Beirut with Sheik Mohammed Hussein Fadlallah, Hezbollah's spiritual guide.

In south Beirut, where most of the hostages are believed held, Sheik Abbas Mousawi, a senior Hezbollah leader, said his group's response would be "ruthless" if the United States took military action.

"President Bush must think a million times before embarking on such a reckless adventure. I don't think he has forgotten the truck-bombing of the American marine base at Beirut airport," Mousawi said, referring to the 1983 attack that killed 241 U.S. servicemen, at a military base in Lebanon.

Higgins, of Lexington, Ky., was part of a U.N. observer force in Lebanon when he was kidnapped February 1988.

BOY

Eveland's great-grandson could be released today, nursing supervisor Molly Oster said Wednesday night.

"As far as I'm concerned, this little fellow saved my daddy," said Joy Norton, Mike's grandmother.

She stroked the boy's hand as he struggled to stay awake long enough to answer reporters' questions. "He's a hero in my book."

The two got lost Friday after Eveland finished a sheep-shearing job in the small town of Doty. They were found about 20 miles to the south, the opposite direction from the boy's home in Centralia and Eveland's in Rochester.

The elderly man backed his truck into a ditch while turning around on a remote road, Lewis County sheriff's officers said, stranding the two without food, water, or matches to build a fire.

When the pair tried to walk out for help, Eveland's knees gave out and he fell down a rock hill, the youngster said. After that, Eveland fell several more times and became increasingly disoriented, authorities added.

Their truck was found by bear hunters Tuesday and a bloodhound helped find the pair about a mile away before dawn Wednesday.

Mike said he remembered his father's advice if he ever got lost in the woods: " 'Stay close to the road and eat berries.' ... That's what I did."

"It rained lots," and the two were often cold and wet, the boy said. Overnight temperatures dipped into the 40s.

"I prayed that someone would come. Last night I prayed that the rescue mission ... would come," Mike said.

Searchers said the pair apparently walked in circles trying to stay close to the old logging road.

More than 100 volunteers helped in the search, family members said.

Garcia Marquez talks of 'dream within dream'

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The unity and freedom of Latin America is a "dream within a dream" that must soon become reality, author Gabriel Garcia Marquez said Wednesday as he accepted an award for his contributions to the fulfillment of that dream.

"In his prose, Gabriel Garcia Marquez presents the various facets of the vision of a single Latin America," Jose Juan de Olloqui, chairman of Banca Serfin, told 300 people at the Mexican presidential residence.

President Carlos Salinas de Gortari presented the Serfin Prize to the Nobel prize-winning author but made no remarks. The prize carries no monetary award, a bank official said.

Garcia Marquez grappled with the problem of Latin unity in his latest book, "The General in his Labyrinth," a controversial novel cast as a deathbed narrative by Simon Bolivar, a hero of South America's independence from Spain.

Bolivar's goal was not just independence but the creation of a united Latin American federation to compete with the United States in North America. That vision dissolved into the separate nations, including Bolivar's Greater Colombia, now Colombia, Venezuela, Ecuador, Bolivia and Peru.

The book has created a literary controversy because it deals with a sensitive subject and because of its demythologizing portrayal of the man known as "the Liberator" as a foul-mouthed libertine.

In his brief remarks, Garcia Marquez began by recounting a story by Italian author Italo Calvino in which an emperor of China asks a painter to portray a crab.

The painter replies that it will take five years and he'll need a house with 12 servants. When the five years are up, he asks for another five years.

When the emperor comes back again, the painter rises, snatches up his brush and in an instant paints the most beautiful crab ever seen.

"In this story from ancient China you can see a crude representation of artistic creation, the most incomprehensible and enslaving of human passions," Garcia Marquez said.

The 20th century, which has "unleashed the furies of the atom as a servant of death, and seen a flag planted on the windless wastes of the moon," might be just another of man's many lost centuries if if were not for a dream.

"Let us dream aloud, then. Let us dream that a fundamental change has started in the world, that the craziest concentration of power in the history of mankind is ending because the dogmas that sustained the two sides are breaking down, and we are headed for a new millennium dominated by the freedom of creative thought."

Inside those dreams, Garcia Marquz said, lies Bolivar's dream, the dream of a united Latin America, "finally part of the torrent of history, made up of our invincible culture, our inspired nightmares, our crazy magic, of the disasters that revive us, and the irresistible power of the imagination.

"Mr. President, ladies and gentlemen, Latin Americans all, I think it is time for us to draw the crab."

Ex-dictator backs former leftist as Bolivian leader

LA PAZ, Bolivia (AP) — Three months of political wrangling over who will be Bolivia's next president has ended, with former military dictator Gen. Hugo Banzer Suarez declaring his support for former leftist Jaime Paz Zamora.

Paz Zamora, who finished third among 10 candidates in May elections, and Banzer Suarez, who finished second, agreed to a coalition government Wednesday.

Under Bolivian law, if no candidate wins an absolute majority in the general election, Congress chooses the president. The congressional vote is expected this weekend and with Banzer Suarez' support, Paz Zamora's election is virtually assured.

The president is to be sworn in Sunday.

It will be the first time in 25 years that a government has completed its term and turned over the government to a democratically elected president.

"Our priority now is to consolidate democracy and the economic and financial stability of the country," Paz Zamora said.

Paz Zamora, a former Marxist who in recent years has described himself as a Social Democrat, served as vice president in the 1982-85 government of Hernan Siles Suazo.

He has said his government won't stray too far from the success of the free market economic program of President Victor Paz Estenssoro.

"I can assure everyone that I will not head a government that will make traumatic changes in the economic field," Paz Zamora of the Social Democratic Movement of the Revolutionary Left said Wednesday.

Paz Zamora, 50, also said his government will respect its commitments on its $4 billion foreign debt.

The decision by Banzer Suarez' Conservative Nationalist Democratic Action Party to support the Social Democrats assures Paz Zamora the 79 votes among the 157 Senators and Deputies needed to become Bolivia's 77th president.

In the May 7 election, Paz Zamora's party came in third with 19 percent of the popular vote. Banzer Suarez garnered 23 percent and Gonzalo Sanchez de Lozada of the ruling Nationalist Revolutionary Movement, 24 percent.

Under the accord, Banzer Suarez' party will receive 10 Cabinet posts, the vice presidency, and presidency of the lower house of Congress. Paz Zamora's party will receive the presidency, leadership of the Senate and eight Cabinet posts.

Anti-apartheid leaders expand campaign

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Elated anti-apartheid leaders pledged today to expand their nationwide defiance campaign after claiming victory in the first phase, an unprecedented challenge of segregated health services.

Future targets will include whites-only schools, parks and swimming pools, said Cassim Saloojee, a prominent Indian activist.

About 270 black and Indian patients received treatment at five white hospitals Wednesday in a well-organized, peaceful protest that drew a cordial response from hospital staff.

Law and Order Minister Adriaan Vlok had claimed in advance that the protest would disrupt health services and probably trigger violence.

"The historic defiance of hospital apartheid was an important victory ... for all South Africans," said a statement today from the Mass Democratic Movement, a coalition organizing the defiance campaign.

"The highly disciplined, dignified and peaceful actions of our people contrasted vividly with Minister Vlok's hysterical war-mongering and dire predictions," it said.

The statement said blacks and Indians would insist on being treated at the most conveniently located hospital, regardless of whether that facility was "whites-only."

Most white hospitals provide initial treatment to blacks with serious ailments, then transfer them to a black hospital. The Mass Democratic Movement urged medical personnel to defy this policy.

The movement said detailed plans for the next phases of the defiance campaign will be announced soon.

Health Minister Willie Van Niekerk said: "Sick people were used as pawns by a small group of radicals. ... Any changes in health legislation will occur inside and not outside Parliament."

Parliament has segregated chambers for whites, Asians and people of mixed-race, but it excludes the 28-million black majority. Parliamentary elections are scheduled for Sept. 6, and the defiance campaign is expected to intensify during the campaign.

The election technically began today with the opening of stations at which voters can cast ballots in advance.

The National Party, in power since 1948, is favored to gain the most votes in the white election.

However, several political analysts have suggested the election could produce a hung Parliament, with the Nationalist falling short of an outright majority because of gains by the far-right Conservative Party and the anti-apartheid Democratic Party.

Mariam Jagga is wheeled into the Addington Hospital in Durban, South Africa, Wednesday, by Mewa Ramgobin, who is married to the late Mohatma Gandhi's granddaughter, as the Mass Democratic Movement launched its defiance campaign to demand the admission of non-whites to the "whites only" hospitals.

U.S. jury indicts Thai official on drug charges

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — A U.S. grand jury has indicted a Thai police general on charges of smuggling heroin into the United States, an American government official said today.

The official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said a federal grand jury in Brooklyn, N.Y., indicted Assistant Police Inspector Maj. Gen. Vech Pechborom on four counts July 13. Vech denied the charges.

The indictment followed more than four years of investigation by the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration in cooperation with Thai police, the official said.

U.S. action against Vech is limited, however, because the law in Thailand forbids the extradition of a Thai national.

The U.S. official said the DEA charged that Vech was a part of a Southeast Asian ring that smuggled heroin into the United States at least 15 times. The drug agency said the operation was based in Chinatown in New York City and in Los Angeles, and that Asian-Americans controlled it.

The official said 22 members of the ring were arrested between October 1984 and July 1988 in Bangkok, Japan, South Korea, New Zealand, Hawaii, New York and Los Angeles, and that authorities seized 77 pounds of heroin.

Northern Thailand forms part of the "Golden Triangle," the source of more than 40 percent of the heroin reaching the United States, the official said.

He said that according to the indictment, Vech helped arrange shipments of heroin from Thailand, directed financial investment in a courier network and used his influence to get drugs through Bangkok's airport.

In a telephone interview today, Vech said: "I deny the charge and confirm that I am innocent. It has hurt me a lot."

Vech said he he did not know Suvit Taechaphana, the alleged ringleader, who was sentenced in a Los Angeles court last month to 30 years in prison.

Guatemalan agent allegedly caught with drugs in bags

GUATEMALA CITY (AP) — An official of the government's anti-corruption agency was arrested when he allegedly tried to board a Miami-bound flight with 97 pounds of cocaine in his luggage, police said Wednesday.

Jose Fernando Minero Navas, 27, was arrested at the international airport.

National Police spokesman Guillermo Mollinedo said.

The spokesman said Minero worked at the airport as an agent of the Presidential Department of Administrative Control, which was created by President Vinicio Cerezo's administration to fight official corruption. The unit at the airport handled agencies like customs and immigration.

Mollinedo said Minero was arrested Tuesday after police became suspicious of what appeared to be unusually heavy hand luggage. He said police inspected the bag and found about 97 pounds of cocaine.

Drug charges have been filed against Minero, he said.

Soviets agree to inspection of chemical weapons' stocks

GENEVA (AP) — The Soviet Union has accepted a U.S. demand that both countries inspect each other's chemical weapons stockpiles before a global ban on the weapons is agreed to, a Soviet official said today.

Moscow's shift was conveyed in a paper presented to U.S. Secretary of State James A. Baker III by Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze when they met last week in Paris, the official said.

The Soviets agreed with the U.S. position that joint inspections begin before the ban is initialed by the 40-nation Geneva Conference on Disarmament, said the official, a Soviet delegate to the conference who briefed reporters on condition of anonymity.

Moscow previously wanted to allow checks only after the ban was signed, and the shift was aimed at clearing the way for earliest possible inspections, he said. "It is just a matter of time. Initialing comes before signing," the official said, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The accord must be initialed by negotiators before its formal signing by each country's head of state.

The disarmament conference has been debating a comprehensive chemical weapons ban for more than two decades, but delegates have little hope of getting the draft accord ready for initialing in the immediate future.

Disagreements at the conference include how to monitor compliance with a future ban.

The Soviet shift in Paris was part of separate superpower talks since 1986 on chemical weapons. The United States and Soviet Union, who have the world's biggest poison gas arsenals, say their talks may help the 40-nation negotiations.

Both superpowers reported they agreed to on-the-spot inspection procedures in the latest round of bilateral talks, which ended in Geneva in late June. But they said an accord on exchanging chemical weapons data — which would precede the inspections — was not ready yet.

WORLD IN BRIEF

At least 11 killed as part of building falls

MOSCOW (AP) — Workers hunted for more bodies in the rubble of Kiev's main post office after a portico collapsed on a crowd below, killing at least 11 people, Soviet news reports said today.

Dozens of people were standing beneath the huge overhang to escape heavy rain when the structure collapsed, dropping stone columns and bricks on them, Lt. Gen. Ivan Gladush, the Ukraine's interior minister, was quoted as saying in the newspaper Krasnaya Zvezda.

Anatoly Gritsenko, a spokesman for the Kiev City Council, said in a telephone interview the rescuers finished their search early today after removing the bodies of 11 people and pulling out two injured. The site was cleared of rubble, he said.

State television's evening news program, "Vremya," said Wednesday the portico at the front of the building collapsed at 4:20 p.m.

"At this time, there were particularly many people here. Visitors to the post office, passers-by, and people hurrying to the nearby metro station were trapped under the rubble," the TV report said. It said the brown stone rubble pile was 16½ feet high.

The television showed the collapse occurred on the top, or seventh floor of the building, where two broad columns leading vertically up the length of the post office and the balconies between them crashed to the ground.

3 in Israeli patrol injured

JERUSALEM (AP) — A hand grenade thrown at a passing Israeli patrol today injured three Israeli soldiers and three Palestinian civilians in the occupied Gaza Strip, the army and Arab reports said.

Troops opened fire after the blast, wounding more than a dozen Palestinians on the main street in Khan Yunis town, hospital officials said.

In another development, the Supreme Court ruled today that the army's firing orders for plastic bullets are legal.

Use of the bullets, introduced in August as a less-lethal alternative to lead bullets, was challenged by Israeli attorney Felicia Langer.

A curfew ordering people off the streets was imposed on the town of more than 30,000 people, the army said.

Doctors at Nasser Hospital in Khan Yunis said 16 Palestinians were admitted with wounds, but they were unsure if the grenade victims were among them.

Ethiopian violations listed

LONDON (AP) — Thousands of suspected political opponents in Ethiopia have been imprisoned for months or even years without trial, and many have been tortured repeatedly, Amnesty International charged today.

The worldwide human rights organization, based in London, said Ethiopia has systematically ignored constitutional and legal safeguards for human rights and is among the worst offenders in Africa in failing to ratify international human rights covenants.

In a 13-page report on political imprisonment in the East African nation, Amnesty said some prisoners have been secretly condemned to death by a special government committee, or have vanished without explanation while in detention.

Stage set for clash over defense bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — In passing the $295 billion military authorization bill, the Democratic-controlled Senate sets the stage for a clash with the House over key elements of President Bush's strategic weapons programs.

The Senate, which approved the bill 95-4 Wednesday, left relatively intact the dollars and the structure of the strategic weapons programs. The House last week made deep cuts denounced by the White House as irresponsible both in terms of national security and arms control.

"In my judgment, this will be the most difficult conference in a decade," said Sen. John Warner of Virginia, ranking Republican on the Senate Armed Services Committee. "But I'm confident that we can emerge with a bill which will meet the president's basic policy goals."

"It's going to be very difficult," said Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., the committee chairman. "There are more profound differences with the House than we have had for a long, long time."

Nunn was asked how he will enter the conference that opens Sept. 8. "Well armed," he replied.

How does he expect to emerge? "Alive," Nunn said.

About the cuts made by the House, Nunn said: "We will be very interested in hearing their logic. It doesn't leap out at you."

The Senate bill, which conforms closely to Bush's recommendations, calls for a modest cut of $400 million in the $4.9 billion request for the Star Wars antimissile shield.

It endorses the B-2 stealth bomber if it meets flight test and radar-evasion standards. It takes only a token $300 million bite from the administration's $4.7 billion request for the bat-winged aircraft.

The Senate also backed the $1.1 billion request to make the MX missile a mobile rather than a stationary target by placing the weapons on railway cars.

And it left intact the $100 million earmarked for the single-warhead Midgetman missile.

The House took a sharply different course.

Members strictly limited production of the B-2 bomber, pressing the Pentagon to produce a program far cheaper than the $70 billion price tag for 132 planes now envisioned.

They slashed the Star Wars request by $1.8 billion and deleted $502 million intended to help make the MX a mobile missile. And they removed all of the $100 million for the Midgetman.

As the Senate completed work on the bill, Sen. Mark Hatfield, R-Ore., decried the ever-mounting spending for the military.

Pilots seek ban on release of cockpit tapes

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Transportation Safety Board voted today to oppose the public broadcast of airline cockpit voice recordings after crashes and indicated it would support legislation to keep the tapes secret.

The board said it was in the interest of safety to keep the tapes confidential and not made available for what one member called "the lurid entertainment of the public."

The five-member board voted unanimously to support the position of the Federal Aviation Administration and the Air Line Pilots Association in deploring the court-ordered release of a recording from a Delta Air Lines plane that crashed in Dallas a year ago.

The tape, whose release was sought by radio and television stations, captured the voices of crew members joking about politics and airliner accidents and also screaming just before the crash.

Both FAA and ALPA said they would seek legislation keeping the automatically recorded tapes secret, except for transcripts of material relevant to safety investigations. The safety board indicated it concurred.

The NTSB, which is still investigating the Dallas crash that killed 14 of the more than 100 people aboard the flight, said in a resolution: "We believe that transportation safety is better served by maintaining strict confidentiality of the actual audio recording."

Board member John Lauber said the recording are designed to be used only in safety investigations, and "certainly not for the lurid entertainment of the public."

NTSB member Jim Burnett said cockpit tapes are "painful things to listen to, and why anyone would entertain the idea of making either entertainment or drama out of them, I don't know."

The NTSB rejected a proposal to strongly condemn the disabling of voice recorders by air crews. Lauber said members opposed such action, which is illegal, but wanted to focus on the importance of the recorders in safety investigations.

The pilots union withdrew Wednesday a threat to order its 41,000 members to disable the recorders. Union president Henry A. Duffy said he was confident that Congress would correct the problem.

"No other workers in America are subjected to routine, constant tape recording of the performance of their duties, so the mere existence of the cockpit voice recorder is an invasion of privacy," Duffy said.

He said pilots have agreed to have the recorders installed on the condition that they be used only for the purposes of safety investigations and that they never be released for public broadcast.

"No pilot wants to hear broadcast to the public the agonized screams of his colleagues the moment before they die in a fiery crash," Duffy told a news conference. The crew of the Delta flight all survived.

Duffy said the Delta tape's release was insensitive and a violation of pilots' agreements with federal investigators. He said the public's right to know was not at issue since federal investigators release all relevant information from crash tapes.

The tape of Delta Flight 1141's last 30 minutes includes conversation and joking on the taxiway about news coverage of other crashes, Jesse Jackson's politics and Marilyn Quayle's looks.

The crew also joked that a plane wreck would one day expose their gleeful cockpit conversation to the public. The conversation involved the cabin crew and a flight attendant.

The tape ends with a scream and the sound of the plane breaking apart.

Duffy said scores of pilots called or sent messages to urge action. He said many indicated they were "ready and willing" to disconnect the recorders.

Piedmont jet makes emergency landing

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — A Piedmont Airlines jet carrying 107 people made an emergency landing with its left wing and engine scraping the runway today after its pilots were unable to lower the left landing gear, officials said.

No serious injuries were reported.

Passengers evacuated the Boeing 737 by emergency slides. The plane, bound for Charlotte, was diverted to Piedmont Triad International Airport after a warning light indicated the landing gear was not locked, officials said.

As the plane touched down, sparks were seen on the left side of the aircraft. The right wheels were down in position; the left wheels were not.

Flight 1489 had left Washington with 101 passengers and a crew of six, said Piedmont spokesman David Shipley.

Police convention divided over gun control issue

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Some members of the Fraternal Order of Police endorsed new restrictions on semiautomatic weapons. Others were sticking by their guns as the organization prepared to vote on gun control resolutions.

"It's a very emotional issue for this group and the delegates are really polarized," Steve Cain, president of the Oklahoma Fraternal Order of Police, said Wednesday.

Some delegates — many from Eastern cities — expressed support not only for restrictions but also for waiting periods on gun purchases. Other delegates, however, backed the National Rifle Association's blanket opposition to more gun controls. The NRA, a national gun lobby, has more than 3 million members.

One of the resolutions — which could go to a vote today at the organization's national convention — would direct the FOP's national legislative committee to support "sensible" legislation on the sale of semiautomatic weapons such as the AK-47, the Uzi and the AR-15.

Another calls for lobbying efforts against any attempts to liberalize laws on machine guns and silencers.

A third resolution supports the concept of waiting periods on gun sales.

Don Cahill, chairman of the legislative panel, said he was confident about the chances of the resolutions being passed by the 5,000 attending the convention.

He added that the FOP has been inaccurately portrayed as "anti-gun ownership."

"That is not the case," Cahill said. "We're sportsmen and we're marksmen. But some guns have no legitimate use other than to kill other people, including police officers."

RELIGION IN BRIEF

Abortion supporters cheer House vote

WASHINGTON (AP) — Abortion rights supporters are jubilantly predicting the House's surprise rejection of a new restriction on abortion signals a turnaround that will gather political steam.

In a dramatic roll call that stunned lawmakers on both sides, the House voted 219-206 Wednesday against banning public financing of all abortions in the District of Columbia. As the final tally became apparent, pro-choice lawmakers on the chamber's floor embraced each other and roared with emotion.

It was the first congressional showdown on the issue since the Supreme Court decision last month enhancing state authority to limit abortion, and a reversal of a 222-186 House vote on the same question last summer. Abortion rights advocates said it was the first time since 1980 that the House had rejected an effort to restrict public financing for abortions.

The House postponed until today a final vote on the legislation to which the abortion provision was offered as an amendment. The bill, which then would go to the Senate, provides $532 million in federal funds and allows local spending to form the district's municipal budget for next year.

The delay gave anti-abortion forces a final shot at recouping their loss, but it seemed unlikely they would find enough lawmakers willing to reverse themselves on such a high-profile issue within 24 hours.

The amendment would have banned the use of federal or district funds to perform any abortions during the 1990 federal fiscal year, which begins Oct. 1.

Instead, the bill now would liberalize current law by allowing the district to spend its own money for abortions and permitting the use of federal funds in cases of rape, incest or to save the mother's life. Current law forbids the use of federal or district funds in Washington unless the mother's life is at stake.

Caucus focuses on abortion

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — A national women's political group has learned lessons on protecting abortion rights from those on the other side of the issue, said the organization's head.

Natividad

The fight over abortion rights is expected to dominate the National Women's Political Caucus biennial convention, which runs today through Sunday, said Irene Natividad. She steps down this weekend as head of the 18-year-old, non-partisan organization which works for the election and appointment of women to public office.

Anti-abortion activists have taught pro-abortion advocates new rules to follow in the debate over the issue, she said.

"No. 1 is, don't allow your opponent to frame the dialogue," she said. "They have equated...abortion with murder, and we let them get away with that. They have shifted the focus from the mother to the fetus, and we let them get away with that.

"I keep talking about bring back the 'W' word — woman — into the discussion, because that is the person who must choose."

Natividad, who has chaired the 77,000-member organization since 1985, said the battle over abortion rights moves to state legislatures following a July decision by the U.S. Supreme Court allows states to restrict abortions.

She predicted the issue will galvanize the women's movement as no issue has since the 1960s.

Priest challenges others

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Richmond, Va. priest fired from his job by his Roman Catholic bishop for trying to set up a separate African-American Catholic congregation now seeks to "challenge other black priests."

The Rev. Bruce Greening announced Wednesday he would join the Rev. George A. Stallings in setting up a separate African-American Catholic congregation.

"What is happening at Imani Temple is in my opinion the right method to take," Greening said, referring to the congregation set up by Stallings, himself suspended by Washington Archbishop James Hickey.

Greening said he wanted "to challenge other black priests and other black sisters" to follow Stallings' example.

Greening, 38, was fired by the Catholic Diocese of Richmond, for which he had worked since 1988 as the principal of an elementary school in Norfolk. The priest, a member of the Society of the Divine Savior, in Milwaukee, Wis., had requested a leave of absence from his Virginia job to set up a separate congregation for blacks.

He remains a priest.

Church rules on AIDS

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — The Christian Church (Disciples of Christ) on Wednesday overwhelmingly approved a resolution calling for compassion and love for AIDS victims and their families.

The resolution said AIDS is not a punishment from God.

The action came on a voice vote during the group's General Assembly on the last day of a week-long convention in the Indiana Convention Center.

During debate that preceded the vote, about a dozen members and supporters of the Gay and Lesbian Affirming Disciples stood near the front of the Convention center and held up a banner which said: "The Body of Christ is Living with AIDS."

Conservatives in the 1.1 million-member church agreed that AIDS patients deserve love, but they held to their opinion that the Bible condemns homosexuality as a sin and that God could be punishing offenders by giving them AIDS.

Blazes threaten observatory, California nature sanctuary

Associated Press

Flames neared California's Palomar Observatory and threatened a nature sanctuary today as firefighters elsewhere in the West struggled to consolidate gains made against hundreds of wildfires with the help of cooler weather.

An estimated 220,000 acres of timber, brush and grassland have burned throughout the West in a bout of fires that began July 26, according to the federal Boise (Idaho) Interagency Fire Center. More than 20,000 firefighters were on the lines in Idaho, Oregon, Washington, Montana and California.

Cool, moist air slowed the spread of fires in Idaho and Oregon, but a warming trend was predicted this afternoon and through the weekend.

"Things haven't slowed down at all here," said spokesman Kris Long at the federal fire center. "With supplies and manpower coming in and out, it stays busy."

In Southern California, firefighters dropped water and chemicals and set fires of their own in a struggle to keep flames from a 9,100-acre wildfire away from the Eagle Crag nature sanctuary in the Cleveland National Forest today. The fire was within 5 miles of the Palomar Observatory, a mountaintop astronomy center operated by the California Institute of Technology.

Crews had cut lines around 60 percent of the blaze early today, but their chances of containing the flames would be hurt if fire got into the Eagle Crag area, about 90 miles southeast of Los Angeles, said Forest Service spokeswoman Audrey Hagen.

"No equipment is allowed in the area," Ms. Hagen said. Bulldozers might be authorized as a last resort, but the terrain is so steep they probably wouldn't be able to get in, she said.

In Idaho, a break in dry lightning that zapped the state in recent weeks was enough to prompt stepped-up efforts to hack containment lines around the worst of the fires burning 90,000 acres of timber and range.

An estimated $36 million in resources have been destroyed in the Boise National Forest alone, officials said.

Cooler, moister air eased the immediate danger to two small backcountry towns in west-central Idaho, which most residents evacuated earlier in the week.

Strategists called for at least 70 more 20-member crews to join more than 6,200 firefighters already committed in Idaho. Hundreds of Idaho National Guardsmen also were activated to support the effort.

In the forests, the first priority continued to be protection of small communities and pockets of summer homes and cabins.

6 crewmen missing from Gulf oil rig

MORGAN CITY, La. (AP) — Four bodies have been recovered from an oil rig that capsized in the Gulf of Mexico, with six crewmen still missing and feared drowned, the Coast Guard said today.

Three bodies were recovered Wednesday and another one overnight, the Coast Guard said. The Guard had reported earlier that divers found two bodies overnight but later said that information was incorrect.

Divers continued to search the submerged crew compartments today for the remaining six crewmen, said Coast Guard Petty Officer Matt McGovern in New Orleans.

The rig, about 20 miles south of Morgan City, fell on its side in 30 feet of water Monday while heading inland as Hurricane Chantal approached.

Four crewmen were rescued immediately.

Chevron spokesman Jonathan Lifa said the three bodies recovered Wednesday were found in the crew's quarters.

The identities of the dead men were being withheld pending notification of their families, Lifa said.

The names of the missing crewmen have not been released. They worked for Lafitte Welding of Lafitte, Global Divers of New Iberia, and Owensby Kritkos of Gretna, officials said.

Packer story supported

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — A 19th century gold prospector may have been telling the truth, according to a team studying the man's claims he only killed one of his five prospecting companions.

Alferd Packer was convicted in 1885 of killing the other five members of the party and was sentenced to 40 years in prison. But, although he admitted resorting to cannibalism to stay alive after the group became stranded in the snow, Packer maintained until his death that he had killed only one.

A study of the prospectors' remains support that claim, Walter Birkby, curator of physical anthropology at the University of Arizona, said Wednesday.

The remains were exhumed last month from their resting place in the Rockies near Lake City, Colo., and are being studied at the University of Arizona.

Body found in water tank

PRINCETON, W. Va. (AP) — Workers found a decomposed body in a water tank after residents complained their water smelled and tasted foul, authorities said.

Tap water stored in the 100,000-gallon tank posed no danger to residents, said Steve Edgemon, a manager for the West Virginia America Water Co.

"It was really, really bad," said 16-year-old David Woolwine. "Even when it wasn't looking bad, it smelled."

About 45 residents supplied by the tank were told to boil their water, Edgemon said Wednesday after the body was found. Test results received Wednesday morning showed no bacteria in the water to indicate something had died in the tank, he said.

Officials at the company's main treatment plant added extra chlorine to supplies and flushed the lines surrounding the tank, Edgemon said.

GTE gets $100 million

CLEARWATER, Fla. (AP) — Home Shopping Network libeled GTE Corp. when it blamed its phone system for lost sales, ruled a jury that awarded the communications giant $100 million in damages.

GTE argued that the television retailer's problems were the result of bungled management, not its phone system.

"We are very disappointed with the jury's verdict, and we will appeal the decision immediately," said Nando DiFilippo, Home Shopping Network's executive vice president and general counsel.

Home Shopping Network sued GTE in September 1987, claiming it lost millions of calls and $500 million in potential sales in 1986 and early 1987 because GTE telephone equipment could not handle the volume of calls.

Six killed in plane crash

ALBANY, Ga. (AP) — A twin-engine plane crashed on takeoff Wednesday at Albany's airport, getting barely aloft before tumbling to the ground and exploding in flames. Six people were killed, authorities said.

The Beechcraft Queen Air BE-80 was bound for Akron, Ohio, according to William Hoefer, an air traffic controller at Southwest Georgia Regional Airport.

The plane had climbed only about 10 feet off the ground when its right engine caught fire, witnesses said.

The plane's right wing then slammed into the ground, spewing fuel as the aircraft cartwheeled several times, the witnesses reported.

The plane, engulfed in flames, came to rest upside down and broken apart near the control tower.

Hearing explores dangers of hauling food, garbage

By JEFF BARKER

WASHINGTON (AP) — Hauling garbage in the same trucks that carry food to stores is like serving potato salad "from your cat's litter box," an educator says, but truckers say it's common and food manufacturers want to put a stop to it.

"The idea of garbage being hauled in food trucks seems more than disgusting," said Rep. William Clinger, R-Pa., who organized a hearing Wednesday by a House Public Works subcommittee. "It seems dangerous."

"Would you serve potato salad from your cat's litter box?" asked Penn State University food science professor Manfred Kroger.

Two truckers, testifying from behind a screen to conceal their identities, told the subcommittee they hauled garbage in refrigerated food trucks, which also are used to carry meat, poultry, dairy products, fresh fruits and vegetables to market.

Campbell Soup Co., Heinz U.S.A., Geo. A. Hormel & Co., and Hershey Chocolate U.S.A. are among at least a dozen food producers taking steps in the last two months to ensure that their products are not carried in the same trailers that haul waste to landfills, according to correspondence from the firms released by the subcommittee.

None of the food firms said it knew of such a practice, but all said they wanted to safeguard against it.

Investigations by the Food and Drug Administration "have, so far, not identified any contaminated food," said Richard Davis, an FDA official from the mid-Atlantic region.

The issue raises important chemical and microbiological concerns, said Kroger.

"Food trucks that back up into filthy dump sites presumably can easily be infected all over and later spread disease-causing bacteria into the truck bodies and into food factories during loading," he said.

The Interstate Commerce Commission confirmed the practice exists.

In one instance, a food truck emptied at an Ohio landfill "emanated powerful garbage odors" despite just being washed, Bernard Gaillard, director of the ICC's Office of Compliance and Consumer Assistance, said in a statement.

Before the garbage haul, the truck had carried avocados from California to New York City, Gaillard said.

Another time, he said, a trailer carried eight loads of meat, six loads of solid waste and 15 "miscellaneous shipments" between March 10 and June 30.

The vice president and driver for a small, family-owned trucking firm specializing in carrying meat products from the Midwest to the East told the subcommittee the practice appears widespread.

"Of the 10 largest carriers in my area that haul refrigerated food products to the East Coast, six of them I know have loaded it (garbage)," he said.

A woman trucker told the panel her firm hauled two loads of garbage on return trips by food trucks to the Midwest. She said she refused other loads because "I just didn't want to put it in the trucks."

Part of the problem is that trucks making trips East cannot afford to return to the Midwest empty, the male trucker said. He said garbage is "a dream commodity" to return home with because "you're not responsible for anything. How could you destroy it?"

Still, he said he believed there could be sanitary problems, even though his trucks are steam-cleaned. "I'm not a bacteriologist," he said.

The American Trucking Association, a trade group, said in a statement that trailers should have to be cleaned by steam or some other process before they leave a landfill.

Clinger said a new law is needed because existing regulations are ambiguous.

Bush's toughness, diplomacy needed

Confronted with his first truly difficult decision since assuming the presidency seven months ago, President George Bush is weighing various options to determine the U.S. response to the reported hanging of Marine Lt. Col. William R. Higgins by terrorists.

As he ponders that sticky problem, Bush also is faced with a second crisis: another group has threatened to kill more U.S. hostages unless a sheik being held prisoner by Israel is released.

Bush's dilemma is not unlike that faced by his predecessors, presidents Ronald Reagan and Jimmy Carter. He still faces a situation with very limited options, where his next moves could determine the future course of terrorists' actions involving Americans.

Bush ostensibly has one advantage — skills of diplomacy learned in his years in government before taking office as president. But as prior hostage crises have illustrated, countering the violence of terrorists is more than a one-nation job.

Without question, Higgins' reported hanging is an affront to this nation, whether it was actually carried out when he was first abducted, or on Monday as his captors claim or even if he is not dead and it is merely a ploy to undermine U.S. leadership. Such activity cannot be allowed. This obviously is intended as a "test" of George Bush and his willingness, or lack thereof, to resort to military means to counter terrorist violence.

For more than 10 years, terrorists have resorted to violence against innocents in order to accomplish their intentions. Bush must let them know now, with words, that he will not tolerate their acts. Like Reagan and Carter before him, President Bush no doubt is torn between taking action that would further endanger other hostages and doing nothing. Yet, if he capitulates to the terrorists, he will be at the mercy of their insane violence throughout his term.

Ironically, the United Nations Security Council unanimously approved a resolution condemning hostage-taking and calling for the release of all hostages. That action came on the same day the captors released information claiming they had hanged Higgins. The hanging must be viewed as an affront to the entire civilized world and, now, the U.N. should act to bring world condemnation down on the groups that have used innocent people tragically and ruthlessly to gain control over governments.

Bush should seek a U.N. resolution condemning the groups now holding hostages and carrying out acts of violence against innocent people. Thus, he can help build world outrage against terrorists, so that even the nations harboring them will feel pressured to end this hate. Such activity cannot be allowed in a world which considers itself civilized.

Peaceful Soviet scene not what it seems

ZAGORSK, U.S.S.R. — Thousands of Soviets make a pilgrimage here every year to drink from the sacred waters of a Russian Orthodox monastery. Unbeknownst to the pilgrims, one of the deadliest biological weapons plants on earth is just a few miles away.

Jack Anderson

We joined the crush of Soviet visitors to this city of about 85,000 which lies 40 miles northeast of Moscow. The faithful and curious come to see the Trinity St. Sergius monastery complex, which dates from the 14th century when a teen-ager, Sergius Radonezsky, had a vision to build a monastery on the spot.

A small building covers a well, out of which many Soviets believe healing waters flow — the Soviet equivalent of Lourdes. They flock to the building with bottles, cups and buckets to drink the water and carry some home to their friends.

It is highly unlikely that the pilgrims, or even the monks, know that former Soviet Premier Leonid Brezhnev, in the early 1970s, ordered the Soviet military to develop biological weapons nearby.

The facility is known benignly as "The Scientific Research Institute of Sanitation." Through access to sensitive U.S. intelligence reports given to the National Security Council, we have learned that what goes on there has little to do with "sanitation."

One recent classified report says the Sanitation Institute is "known to be under military control," specifically under a secret program in the Ministry of Defense called the 7th Main Directorate responsible for biological weapons — "BW" in military slang.

There are only two "confirmed" biological weapons sites in the Soviet Union, according to the intelligence reports — the Sanitation Institute at Zagorsk and the Microbiological and Virology Institute at Sverdlovsk.

But the secret report names seven other "suspected" sites — Malta, Omutninsk, Berdsk, Penza, Kurgan, Aksu and Pokrov. Another top-secret report notes that "ongoing construction at most of these facilities demonstrates continuing Soviet commitment of resources to their BW program ..."

We questioned several Soviet officials about the Zagorsk Sanitation Institute, but none of them admitted that they had heard of it. One person in Zagorsk said some of the people there seemed unusually concerned about "some kind of environmental accident," but he didn't know why.

They should be concerned. The only other "confirmed" biological warfare facility, at Sverdlovsk, was the scene of an accident a decade ago that left hundreds of civilians dead. The Soviets put a lid on information about the accident.

The most recent National Security Council report on the incident says, "An accident at Sverdlovsk occurred at Cantonment 19 in early April 1979, releasing anthrax into the environment. The number of deaths reported ranges between 40 and 3,000, with the best estimates in the 200 to 1,000 range. The symptoms of the victims were most consistent with inhalation of anthrax and were characterized by a sudden onset, very high fever and respiratory distress leading to death."

U.S. officials secretly protested the incident as proof that the Soviets were toying with biological weapons. The Soviets claimed the outbreak of anthrax was caused by bad meat bought on the black market.

The good news is information from Western intelligence sources that Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev has downgraded the importance of the biological warfare facilities, and there are indications he may shut some of them down in the near future.

Washington's call-boy scandal is not going to go away for a while. There still may be names named in the case that began Feb. 28, when police and the Secret Service raided a house in Chevy Chase. In June, the Washington Times started a series of stories about the "escort service" and the Bush and Reagan administration people who used it. But only small-fry and one prominent lobbyist were named as clients.

Sources close to the investigation told us that no bombshell names have turned up as clients, but we have been told that some well-known men were provided with male prostitutes by other men who were clients. It is these once-removed names that may produce headlines if garrulous clients talk under pressure from police.

We have learned that some of the escort service's papers and photos were missed or ignored by the police and some are in the hands of the media. This unpublicized data is salacious, but probably does not involve big names.

The Secret Service came into the case because of possible credit card fraud and is now checking out three uniformed officers, one of whom allegedly accepted an expensive watch from a client of the homosexual enterprise, and gave him some White House china.

Congressional efforts to censor misguided

Current congressional efforts, on the one hand, to pressure the television industry to reduce broadcast sex and violence and, on the other, to prohibit the use of federal funds for any art considered to be indecent or offensive, have more in common than the heavy hand of that great aesthetician, Sen. Jesse Helms. But Helms' role in each shows how what looked like a well-intentioned impulse can be exploited into something far more dangerous than what was originally intended.

There was — and is — ground for concern on both fronts. There is a surfeit of gratuitous violence on TV — violence and abuse in everything from so-called talk shows to the stream of brutality and sadism in prime time. And there is no doubt that the sadomasochistic pictures of the late, but now much too notorious, Robert Mapplethorpe, and the offensive "art" of Andres Serrano, who stuck a crucifix into a glass filled with his own urine, are not things, to put it mildly, for which the taxpayers should be required to pay.

But there are better ways than the heavy hand of Congress to make those decisions. What began as an attempt by Sen. Paul Simon of Illinois to coax the networks into writing a code to reduce violence on the air was quickly expanded by Helms to include illicit drug use and explicit sex, and accompanied by an ominous warning that either the networks are going to act responsibly on their own "or we will attempt to persuade them by any means that may be necessary."

And what began as understandable anger about federal support for Mapplethorpe's pictures has turned into a proposal, approved by the Senate, to bar the use of federal funds for anything that would promote or produce indecent or obscene materials or anything that "denigrates, debases or reviles any person, group or class of citizens on the basis of race, creed, sex, handicap ...."

Who, in such cases, defines responsibility or indecency? Is a painting of a nude woman obscene? Would Salman Rushdie's "Satanic Verses" pass muster or does it denigrate a class of citizens? What about the word "nigger" in "Huckleberry Finn" or the characterization of Shylock in "The Merchant of Venice"?

Just as worrisome, the kind of do-it-or-else warning Helms has issued against sex and violence on TV, however defined, can be used just as well for, say, "fairness" — meaning suppression of anything politically embarrassing to one or another politician, or, indeed, anything controversial — in news reports.

There is no perfect way of solving the problems these impulses deal with. In the case of dirty art, the National Endowment has a peer review process that, with a few ugly exceptions, has worked rather well. In the case of violent TV, the best hope is that in the long run the television audience will get sick of the garbage and just start turning it off — and, to a degree, that's already happening.

Government does have say in funding for arts

WASHINGTON — Sen. Pat Moynihan, D-N.Y., sent a two-sentence note attached to his statement opposing the legislation that would forbid the National Endowment for the Arts (NEA) from supporting art that is "obscene or indecent" or is hostile to almost any individual or group for almost any reason. Moynihan's note said: "The '20s are coming on fast? I knew we would regret the end of Cold War."

George F. Will

Perhaps that is it. Detente has relieved us from seriousness. We have returned to "normalcy" and do not remember how to act sensibly.

The legislation moved by Sen. Jesse Helms is a foolish reaction to two photographic exhibits supported by institutions receiving NEA funds, exhibits that included photos of sadomasochistic practices and a crucifix in a jar of urine. The amendment is a recipe for timidity, paralysis and, of course, litigation. But many of the arguments — or the hysteria and arrogance serving as arguments — against the amendment are intellectually incoherent, indeed anti-intellectual.

Opponents of the amendment say government is obligated to support art and equally obligated not to think about what art is, or is good for. They argue that government support for the arts serves the public interest, but that government cannot express an interest in the kind of art that is supported.

The argument for subsidizing the arts must be communitarian, not severely individualistic. It must be that it serves some social good, not just that it gives pleasure to individuals (artists, certainly, and perhaps viewers). Were that the argument, there would be as strong an argument — stronger on strictly democratic grounds — for subsidizing bowling or poker.

Artists who say art has a public purpose say that purpose can include discomforting the comfortable. Shocking the bourgeoisie is fun and, arguably, good for one and all, but it is cheeky of artists to say the bourgeoisie is obligated to subsidize the shocking. America's bourgeoisie has a remarkable record of generously subsidizing the ridiculing, despising and subversion of itself. If you doubt that, examine a public university's liberal-arts curriculum.

Another problem for the NEA is art that eschews all purpose, art that is not shocking but baffling to the common viewer. What of the post-minimalist artist who exhibited a pig in a cage? The artist who draped a curtain across a Colorado valley? The "environmental artist" whose "kinetic sculpture" was a bucket of fireworks atop the Brooklyn Bridge? The police called that a bomb.

A milestone in the liberation of art from the law was the 1928 court ruling that Brancusi's "Bird in Space" — a graceful shaft symbolizing flight, but not resembling a bird — was sculpture and therefore not subject to import duties. Customs agents would not be defining art.

But artists welcomed government into their world in the form of NEA subsidies. Subsidies require reasoning about public purposes. Yet some artists deny that art has any such purpose.

Abstract art and its degenerate progeny were once celebrated as "democratic" because purged of "academicism" and immediately "accessible" to "understanding" by everyone. But this was the egalitarianism of nihilism, art equally understood by everyone because it had no meaning. Having no content, it was immune to the charge of elitism. But the people don't like it, preferring art depicting the human condition and passions about it.

The artist Robert Rauschenberg, wanting no restrictions on his entitlements and no critical standards to inhibit his fun, says: "It is extremely important that art be unjustifiable." But government expenditures must be justified. Some years ago someone asked the NEA to support this work of art: He would dribble ink from Haley, Idaho, to Cody, Wyoming, birthplaces of Ezra Pound and Jackson Pollock respectively. The NEA refused. It must have had a reason.

If art has no improving power or purpose, it has no claim on the interest of government. So advocates of government support for the arts must say that art serves society. There is a long American tradition of support on the grounds that the arts elevate the public mind by bringing it into contact with beauty, and even ameliorate social pathologies. But if the power of art is profound, it need not be benign. And the policy of public subsidies must distinguish between art that serves an elevating purpose and that that does not.

The Helms amendment should be quietly killed. However, alarmists relishing the fun of faking great fear about the impending end of civilization say the ruckus over the amendment will have a "chilling effect" on the NEA. If that means the NEA may think more often about the public interest in the visual arts, then: good.

If, as some artists say, no one can say what art is (or, hence, what the adjective "fine" means as a modifier), then art becomes a classification that does not classify. Then the NEA should be the NEE — National Endowment for Everything. It will need a bigger budget.

HUD appointees found poverty good to them

The thing that you could almost always count on in Washington was that the Republicans were for less government and the Democrats were for more. The Reagan administration wanted the disenfranchised to help themselves, because social programs were just a waste of money and only made people slothful and dishonest.

Art Buchwald

What we didn't know at the time was that there were many Reagan appointees and ex-appointees who did not follow the party line.

I met one at the marina the other day. He was known around the HUD water fountain as Roger the Dodger. Roger was getting his 60-foot sailboat spruced up.

"That's a beautiful boat," I told him. "I didn't think you could afford one of those working for HUD."

He said, "Lower income housing has been good to me. I didn't know there was so much money in poverty. As a matter of fact, when I first started out in government I didn't have much respect for anyone who slept on a park bench."

"Neither did I," I said. "Is this why you've changed your attitude on government funding for housing?"

"I didn't change it because there was a lot of money to be made from poverty. I changed my mind because helping those who can't help themselves is the right thing to do. Those of us who are blessed have to make sure that everyone shares in the American dream."

"How do you do it?" I asked.

"You do that by becoming a consultant, dedicated to making sure that federal money goes where it was intended — into the hands of developers and builders. When I left HUD I vowed to make sure that every down-and-out contractor who wanted HUD funding would get it. This meant calling on friends at HUD who handed out the dough."

"Did you take a huge commission for yourself when the person you represented got his money?"

"A mere pittance. But without my consulting work there would be no poverty housing at all. Most poor people call me a saint."

"How far up the line did you go to get your dough?"

"Pretty far up. Would you believe on some projects I wound up pleading my case on my knees to the HUD secretary?"

"It was kind of him to see you."

"He was good to everybody. He thought nothing of throwing housing money out the window."

"I know this is a silly question, but did anyone in the Reagan administration break any laws and pretend that the poor got their housing?"

"How could they break any laws when practically everyone involved was a lawyer? The press is making a lot out of the 'you rub my back and I'll rub yours' type of doing the country's business. But they have yet to prove that Sam Pierce was anything more than just plain dumb."

I asked Roger why so many Reagan sleazeballs wound up involved in HUD.

He replied, "Like Willie Sutton said, that's where the money was."

Clements predicts high voter turnout despite young Bush not running

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements predicted a record turnout in the 1990 Republican primary, despite George W. Bush's decision not to run for Texas governor.

"I think we'll probably have a historic high, so far as participation is concerned," said Clements, a Republican. He projected Wednesday that more than 1 million Texans will vote in the GOP primary next March.

There were 545,745 voters in the 1986 Republican primary for governor, according to state party headquarters. In the presidential primary last year, more than 1 million Republicans voted.

Clements said the governor's race will be "very spirited," even without Bush, who said Tuesday he was not going to run.

GOP contenders for governor include Jack Rains, former Texas secretary of state, and Midland businessman Clayton Williams.

Other Republicans considering the race include Railroad Commission Chairman Kent Hance and corporate raider T. Boone Pickens, who recently moved part of his business from Amarillo to Dallas.

On the Democratic side, State Treasurer Ann Richards has announced plans to run for governor. A likely challenger in that primary is Attorney General Jim Mattox.

A skirmish in the gubernatorial battle broke out Wednesday between Rains and Mattox.

Rains blasted the attorney general for a study he said was critical of Houston law enforcement officials. The study was submitted in a jail overcrowding lawsuit.

"Your decision to use public dollars to attack some of our state's finest law enforcement and criminal justice organizations is nothing less than a gross abuse of taxpayer funds," Rains, a Houston lawyer, said in a letter to Mattox.

Rains demanded that Mattox apologize to Houston law enforcement officials and juries. He said the attorney general "blames strict law enforcement for the state prison overcrowding crisis he helped create."

But Mattox said Rains was making "a desperate attempt to win support for his gubernatorial campaign."

Court documents show that Harris County has 16 percent of the Texas population, but takes up 25 percent of the prison beds, according to a statement from Mattox's office.

Officials in a number of Texas counties have complained that their jails are crowded with inmates sentenced to state prison. The Texas Department of Corrections delays taking many of those prisoners because it is under a federal court order to prevent overcrowding.

"I like the fact that Harris County wants to get tough on crime, but they cannot expect other counties in Texas to pay for Harris County to send so many non-violent offenders to jail," Mattox said.

Rep. Kika de la Garza, D-Texas, looks at photographs of American migrant farmworkers on display at the Capitol Wednesday. The exhibit is sponsored by the National Migrant referral project in Austin.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Kika de la Garza says migrant farm workers are no longer "the forgotten people in agriculture," but a Capitol exhibit of photographs sponsored by the Texas Democrat shows migrants seeking shelter underground and in a cardboard shanty.

De la Garza, the chairman of the House Agriculture Committee, says the exhibit of black and white photographs "tells the story of the migrant farm worker at home, in the field and en route."

De la Garza said he hopes the traveling exhibit by photographer Alan Pogue of Austin will also tell the rest of the country the story of migrant workers and their children.

"The shacks are in the background, but there's a little boy on a bicycle," the Texas Democrat said Wednesday, the day after the exhibit opened, pointing to a photo.

"He's smiling. He's happy. So that's I think the thrust of all of this — is that little boy's smile continues as he's growing up, but we need to remove the shack so that he doesn't lose that innocent smile he now has. We can't let the surroundings erase that smile," de la Garza said.

Included in the exhibit is a photograph of a cardboard house, plunked on a huge tomato field, furnished with milk cartons, shelves of scrap wood, and a butane stove. Also pictured is an underground shanty furnished with a car seat, and a migrant river camp inside the San Diego city limits, where water used for drinking and bathing is pesticide-contaminated runoff from the fields.

Another picture shows a 15 year-old mother in her second trimester of pregnancy receiving her first prenatal care, and a woman from the Rio Grande Valley who left the hospital to return to her migrant camp the day of her baby's birth in Indiana.

While the photos tell the story of "the shack and the terrible conditions," the exhibit is also "telling the strength of the people, the joy of the people, the pride of the people, the success that they feel themselves," said Sonia M. Leon Reig, director of the migrant health program at the U.S. Public Health Service. "These are happy faces."

Ms. Reig said she hopes the exhibit can help establish "a dialogue" between federal and local officials to help improve the health and living and working conditions of the migrant worker.

"If we don't do something with the environment and become advocates for environmental changes — living, working conditions, education conditions, then I don't think we'll see improvement in the status of migrant farm workers," she said.

The National Migrant Referral Project in Austin commissioned Pogue's exhibit of photographs, taken in 1988 and 1989 in Florida, Texas, California, Michigan, Indiana and Illinois.

Director Bobbi Ryder said that while the migrants are "less forgotten" than 50 years ago, many people today still don't realize the occupational risks they face and that legislative protections have many loopholes that discriminate against the farm worker.

De la Garza, who is sponsoring the exhibit at the Cannon House Office Building, said he hopes it can eventually be seen in all 50 state capitols.

"The worst problem now that we have (helping migrant workers) is that the funds don't get cut. Just maintain what we have," de la Garza said. "We've got the minimum wage. We've got the migrant health program...It's not like you do something...It's what do you continue doing and how do you enhance it."

HUD funds finance racing, suit shows

DALLAS (AP) — More than $790,000 in federal housing funds allegedly embezzled by an Arlington escrow agent was used to buy race cars, parts and other equipment for three racing firms, a federal lawsuit says.

The lawsuit, an amended complaint filed by the U.S. Justice Department, says the racing firms and two men received $792,000 that was illegally diverted from the sale of homes owned by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development.

Irwin Cerf, James Daniel Peace, Ripit Racing Inc., D.P. Motor Sports Inc. and Goodyear Challenge Racing of Texas received more than a third of the money allegedly taken by the Arlington agent and used most of it for auto racing, the lawsuit says.

The original lawsuit, filed last month in U.S. District Court in Fort Worth, says Reba Louise Lovell, and her Fort Worth company, Kenlo Inc., diverted $2,527,369.65 from 55 home sales. The suit seeks triple damages, civil penalties, and additional unspecified damages.

The suit seeks a temporary restraining order to prevent Peace and the firms from transferring any assets to hide embezzled funds.

Ms. Lovell was indicted in June by a federal grand jury in Fort Worth on charges of diverting money from the sale of repossessed homes.

Gramm has $3,725,060 for campaign

Challenger Parmer has $175,043 in bank

WASHINGTON (AP) — Republican Sen. Phil Gramm has more than $3.7 million in the bank for his 1990 re-election campaign while his only announced challenger, Democratic state Sen. Hugh Parmer, had $175,043 in his campaign treasury on June 30.

"Unless we see a dramatic change in the fortunes of the opposition here, Gramm ought to coast," said Norman Ornstein, resident scholar at the American Enterprise Institute.

Gramm

Ornstein said both of Texas' senators, Gramm and Democrat Lloyd Bentsen, "have the ability to raise awesome sums of money," which has an "enormous chilling effect for any serious or significant opposition."

Parmer, in a statement released Tuesday, said that even though he started from scratch in March, he has met all his fund-raising goals.

"Phil Gramm will obviously outspend us, but his Gramm-standing and our fund-raising will be enough to overcome his attempts to buy the election," Parmer said.

Countered Gramm spokesman Larry Neal of Parmer's efforts: "It doesn't sound like a very successful fund-raising operation."

In campaign spending reports filed with the Federal Election Commission, Gramm said he raised just over $2 million and spent $684,410 in the first six months of 1989. The first-term senator listed no debts and cash on hand totaling $3,725,060.

Parmer said he has raised $218,316 and spent $158,465 during the reporting period, and has borrowed $64,900 from Landmark Bank of Fort Worth for his campaign. Parmer also transferred $50,100 from his state Senate account into his U.S. Senate campaign fund.

According to Gramm's 428-page filing with the FEC, the senator raised $138,275 from political action committees and almost $1.9 million from individual contributors. Parmer raised $7,000 from PACs and $211,316 from individuals.

Gramm's spending included more than $300,000 for direct-mail with one company alone, $17,187 for a "survey" by Houston pollster Tarrance and Associates Inc., and $5,000 for consulting with Ailes Communications, the firm owned by Roger Ailes, who was President Bush's media consultant during the 1988 presidential campaign.

Gramm's fund-raisers ranged from spending $1,815 at Stacy's Deli in Nacogdoches to events at the Waldorf Astoria on Park Avenue in New York and a $10,609 fund raiser at Loews L'Enfant Plaza in Washington.

Gramm also reported settling a dispute with the FEC stemming from his 1984 campaign with a $30,000 payment to the U.S. Treasury, and gave $8,980 in unrefundable campaign contributions to various charities as part of the settlement agreement.

Those charities included his wife's family's church, Waialua United Church of Christ in Waialua, Hawaii, and the Georgetown Day School, which at least one of his two sons attends, said Neal. Each received $2,000.

Neal said Gramm has not yet set a fund-raising goal for his 1990 campaign. In 1984, Gramm spent $9.4 million in his race against Democrat Lloyd Doggett, who spent approximately $6 million.

Parmer said he has raised $23,644 more in contributions during the Jan. 1 through June 30 reporting period than Doggett did in 1983.

Ornstein said he expects Gramm will have some vigorous opposition, but doesn't see prominent Texans "falling over themselves to run against him."

But Ornstein predicts Gramm will have a tougher race in 1990 than Bentsen had in 1988 with Republican challenger Beau Boutler of Amarillo.

Democrats, Ornstein said, "hate Gramm" a lot more than the Republicans dislike Bentsen, and even some Republican leaders would like to see Gramm "cut down a little."

"Some Republicans kind of resent the fact he has become such a dominant figure, especially because his tenure in the party is so slender," Ornstein said.

Texan whittles wooden menagerie

AVINGER (AP) — All Nan McGarity needs is a knife and a piece of wood and she's set.

And at 93, she's still perfectly happy sitting in the solitude of her bedroom, whittling away the time by carving wood.

One recent rainy day, she sat on her antique bed with her legs extended — like she always does, she says, — and whittled, letting small chips fall into her lap. A metal floor lamp provided extra light for her to work by.

The scales of an alligator slowly began to form as more and more chips fell.

The knife she uses is small, wrapped in cloth to cushion her hand. The blade is narrow, about three inches long, and very sharp. She clutched the knife with her arthritic hands and cut the soft pine. Baskets of tools — saws, rasps, chisels — sat on the bed next to her.

"This is my carving place," she said, referring to her bed. Her eyes glistened as she talked about her hobby for 20 years.

"I've been doing this since '69," she said. "I went to Vancouver (Canada), and they had one park there that was full of totem poles. I just saw one of those totem poles and I wanted one so bad. I just couldn't wait to get me a big totem pole." she said.

When she returned to Avinger, she set about carving an eight-foot-tall totem pole with a hatchet from a dead cedar tree in the front yard. Three months later, the grotesque faces on the pole were staring at visitors as they approached the house.

"I actually like carving better than most anything than I've ever done," she said.

Mrs. McGarity retired the alligator she was working on and walked back toward the living room, where most of her creations are displayed.

She said she has used myrtle wood from Oregon, mahogany, native pine, zebra wood and cedar to carve ducks, totem poles, quail, statues of pigs, bears and elephants. And the list goes on.

"I'll tackle most anything," she said. "I like mahogany better than most anything else. I use an awful lot of mahogany."

She also whittles pieces of western cedar.

"I make ducks. That duck over there is made out of western cedar. But it's painted, and I don't like to paint, so I don't make much I have to paint."

She pointed to another duck on the coffee table.

"That is a piece of red mahogany that duck is made out of," she said.

"I call that my piece because I don't let anybody have that — or have never sold it or anything."

Reading to your child is the best way to spark an interest in reading, says Claudia Cornett, associate professor at Wittenberg University in Springfield, Ohio.

Good book, soft touch way to teach reading

By JAMES HANNAH

SPRINGFIELD, Ohio (AP) — Many parents who try to teach their children to read should offer them a good book and a soft shoulder rather than flash-card drill sessions, says an authority on reading.

"We need to have better parent education," says Claudia Cornett, associate professor of education at Wittenberg University. "Parents do not understand what is involved."

Ms. Cornett says parents are sincere but often misguided when they emphasize what they think is the means to successful reading.

"They will pick out a little piece like phonics, for example, or drill the kids on the alphabet," she says. "That's such a limited view."

At the other extreme, she says, are parents who simply don't care.

"Theirs is a crime of omission," says Ms. Cornett. "They're not doing anything. They're not reading to their kids."

Ms. Cornett says parents must learn to lay the foundation for reading.

"They need to read to them, and I don't mean just to get it done," she says. "I mean they have to read with enthusiasm. This should not be a chore. Good children's literature should be just as enjoyable to an adult as it is to a child."

Ms. Cornett says parents must also interact with their children, discuss stories they read and ask them questions about it.

Even reading to children as young as 2 years old exposes them to the "music of the language" and allows them to pick up some concepts offered by the illustrations, she says.

"Probably the most important thing that's happening is that you're giving him a positive association with the act of reading," she says. "You're close, you're warm, you're hugging, smiling, you're together. If children came to school loving being read to, half the job of the teacher would be done."

Ms. Cornett was instrumental in setting up the Wittenberg Reading Center. The facility aims at teaching reading for meaning while keeping it enjoyable. The method involves drama, art, music, creative writing, riddles, jokes and the use of tape recorders.

Ms. Cornett says worksheets, dittos and other drill-like activities in the classroom can be deadly to children's creativity and blunt their interest in reading. The teaching method either "liberates" a child's creativity or "confines and kills it," she says.

She says learning to read is not grounded in printed symbols, but rather is the ability to listen to ideas.

"Reading is a thinking activity," she says. "You absolutely cannot read and understand things that aren't a part of your experience."

She says children must be permitted and encouraged to play, which allows them to learn about their environment and to discover relationships.

"Reading is grounded in thinking, so they have to have all of these experiences," she says. "It's about those kinds of experiences that eventually children will be reading. And unless they have that background, they cannot understand it."

Ms. Cornett received Wittenberg University's 1989 Alumni Association Award for Distinguished Teaching. She has delivered more than 200 speeches around the country and has written eight books on reading.

She says that even more than illiteracy, she is concerned about people who can read, but don't.

"That's very disturbing," she says, adding that recent statistics show that 90 percent of the library books are checked out by 5 percent of the population.

"We can't just teach people to read," she says. "We have to have people realize the purpose of it — to enjoy, to get information, to solve problems. That whole idea of purpose is so critical to motivation."

Ms. Cornett says that while television isn't generally an interactive experience, a certain amount of it can be educational for children. She cited recent studies showing that children who watch too much television and those that watch none at all are both at a disadvantage.

"An hour a day, really, can be an advantage," she said. "It's familiarizing children with a lot of things people discuss, common culture kinds of things. The concern is the extremes."

Fine arts programs offered at all levels

Students in Midland public schools are offered a comprehensive program of fine arts.

Fine arts instruction is incorporated into regular classroom activities in grades K-3. Beginning in the fourth grade, students receive daily instruction in the arts. These classes are taught by music, art and theater specialists. At the fifth grade level, students can enroll for instruction in stringed instruments.

In the seventh grade, students may choose from a wide variety of electives — art, orchestra, band, speech and drama, and choir. Such choices extend up to twelfth grade. On each secondary campus, instruction is led by certified teachers.

Approximately 76 percent of MISD students receive fine arts instruction each year.

Not only are students afforded the opportunity of taking classes in the arts, they also can participate in various competitive opportunities. Art students, elementary and secondary, participate each year in community contests — the Fire Prevention Poster Contest, PTA Cultural Arts competition, MISD Student Art Festival, Scholastic Art competition as well as numerous local, state and national competitions selected as appropriate by the individual instructors.

Additionally, the creations of visual arts students are frequently exhibited in the district's central administration building.

The two senior high schools feature art and music in their annual spring MHS' "Showcase" and Lee High's "Rebels in Review" extravaganzas.

Secondary music students compete in a number of contests — solo, ensemble concert, ensemble, All-Region and All-State auditions, and musical meets throughout the state and nation.

Drama students compete in invitational tournaments, UIL competition provides students with enriching experiences, evaluative feedback and sportsmanship.

A third dimension of the arts program in the public schools is community service.

Each year hundreds of school students present programs to Midland civic organizations, serve in seasonal promotions such as the Shriners' Christmas Parade, and perform free and low cost concerts and exhibitions to the general public.

The quality of life in the Permian Basin is enriched by the scope and quality of Midland's fine arts curriculum.

Proper innoculations essential for enrollment in MISD schools

Monette Burke, administrator for the Midland County Health Department, is urging parents who want to use the clinic to get their children immunized as soon as possible.

The department will inoculate children at the 501 Andrews Highway on Mondays from 8 a.m. to 11 a.m. and 1 p.m. to 4 p.m.

The cost is $12.50.

MISD requires children to have three doses of polio immunization, with at least one dose after the fourth birthday.

They must have three doses of diptheria-tetanus-pertussis vaccine with at least one dose after the fourth birthday and at least another within the past 10 years.

The students also are required to have a measles shot. A child under 12 years old must have a rubella vaccine, while those under 11 must be inoculated for mumps.

Ms. Burke said the health department recommends a DPT vaccine at ages two months, four months, six months, 15 months and again between ages four and six. Polio immunization, given through drops placed in the mouth, should be given at the same interval as DPT, she said.

A combination measles-rubella-mump shot should be taken at age 15 months, she said.

Safety rules for bicyclists make that trip to school fun, healthy

Bicycling to school is fun and healthful — as long as you obey basic rules of safety. For example:

- Ride in the same direction as other traffic, and stay close to the right edge of the roadway except when passing or making a left turn.
- Obey traffic signals and signs.
- One person to a bike — unless specially designed for two or more people.
- Keep at least one hand on the handlebars at all times.
- Never attach yourself or your bike to any vehicle.
- Don't weave from one lane to another, and don't turn around on hills or curves. Look carefully before you make a U-turn, and don't make U-turns if there is a sign prohibiting it.
- Wear protective, light-colored clothing or apply reflective tape to your clothing or to the bicycle frame or fenders.
- Watch out for people getting into and out of parked cars, and for cars pulling out from a curb or driveway.
- The most important rule of all: Watch out for other vehicles, and always stay out of their way. You may be legally in the right, but in any encounter between a bicycle and an automobile, the bicycle is bound to lose.

Study links health, level of education

Do you want your children to be healthy or at least to think they are? Then make sure they get a good education. That advice is based on an American Council of Life Insurance study showing that people with more education think they're healthier than those less educated.

The better educated, it found, give their health a higher rating and think they're doing a better job of taking care of themselves than do Americans with less schooling.

You can make school days count

The Midland Independent School District needs your help.

The attitudes of young people toward school attendance and learning are shaped primarily by their family, not by teachers or peers. We're asking you to help us help your children to "be in school, stay in school; to make every day count."

While regular school attendance is always important to student progress, it takes on particular significance during the month of October.

Under the terms of Texas' House Bill 72, the funding to public schools is based upon the average daily attendance (ADA) of students during October.

Therefore, student attendance not only affects learning, but also district funding.

Of course, any additional funding the district is able to obtain from the state translates to a lessened burden on the local tax structure.

A one percent increase in ADA means over $200,000 more in the district's coffers.

As always, Midland schools will offer your child excellent instructional services. However, during this campaign, district will also offer a variety of incentives for attendance.

Perfect attendance will make a student eligible to compete for a bicycle, or other valuable prizes.

Weekly drawings are also planned.

Even if your child must be absent due to illness or some other reason, every day he or she is present counts for many incentive awards!

Make every day count; help your child to "be in school, stay in school!"

Program for gifted students a 'GEM'

Gifted Education in Midland schools (GEM) has seen prodigious growth since its inception in 1981.

Begun with a staff of seven and 180 students, GEM now has an enrollment of 453, grades 3-6, and a staff of 11½.

GEM is a program designed to serve the needs of academically gifted and talented students — students who may be identified as having high general intellectual ability and consistently superior academic achievement.

Gifted third graders attend GEM classes one day each week while fourth, fifth, and sixth grade participants attend GEM classes two days weekly.

GEM students participate in in-depth studies which focus on the examination of broad-based issues, problems or themes. Through these studies, students learn and apply skills of critical thinking, creative problem solving, and defensible research design.

Students are identified for participation in the program by use of a matrix.

This matrix is designed so that no one factor or criterion will exclude a student from eligibility. Forty percent credit is given to the SOI Learning Abilities Test, 40 percent credit to the California Achievement Test (CAT) and 20 percent to grades and teacher recommendations. Teachers are asked to recommend students with a minimum of 120 CSI and a minimum of 90 percent in reading, math, and total battery on the CAT.

The matrix is structured to award maximum credit for scores within the top 5 percent on nationally normed tests of ability and/or achievement. Use of a top 5 percent cutoff on tests to determine eligibility is the standard almost all gifted and talented programs employ.

A new procedure is being developed to better identify minority students. A spring report on this new identification structure is expected.

For further information on Midland ISDs GEM program contact Pat Maurer, Carver Center, 1300 W. Wall, 682-4983.

MISD has strong goals for its talented pupils

The following goals have been established for the development of students enrolled in the gifted and talented program of Midland Independent School District.

- Students will complete units of study organized to include more elaborate, complex, and indepth exploration of major ideas, problems, and themes that integrate knowledge with and across systems of thought.
- Students will develop and apply creative and productive thinking skills to enable them to reconceptualize existing an/or generate new knowledge.
- Students will explore constantly changing knowledge and information and develop the attitude that knowledge is worth pursuing in an open world; developing methods and skills of consensus, compromise, and concession for the reconciliation of differences.
- Students will be exposed to, and encouraged to select and use appropriate specialized resources; acquiring specific techniques of investigation unique to various disciplines.
- Students will develop problem identification skills and learn time management skills necessary to effectively pursue self-initiated and self-directed study in both individual and group investigations.
- Students will gain self-understanding relative to the personal responsibilities of giftedness as it relates to other people, society, the environment, and culture.
- Students will develop the skills necessary to critique their own performance and products and those of peers; with the acceptance and ability to use critical feedback in a productive manner.

Concerned parents should visit in their children's classrooms

One of the best way parents can help their child academically is to visit their offspring's campus and classrooms.

A recent Maryland study revealed that less than 30 percent of parents polled had met their children's teachers during the school year.

Many parents interviewed felt uncomfortable in such settings, indicating they did not feel prepared or competent to ask meaningful and relevant questions about their child's academic progress.

A new government brochure can be helpful in making classroom visits productive. Request "Parents: Here's How to Make School Visits Work," Consumer Information Center, Dept. 183R, Pueblo, CO 81009. Enclose $1. Kindergarten Parents: Note School Schedule Change

Older students share insights with freshmen

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — "If only I knew then what I know now" are among the sadder words of school graduates.

But a group of upperclass University of Rochester students tried to ease that predicament for prospective freshmen recently by sharing with them what they had learned about the social and academic side of campus life.

One of the tips from the students involved organizing their time, making and keeping a schedule.

"Be prepared that it may take a while to learn what you can and can't fit in," said Patricia Singleton, 21, a junior from Walnut Ridge, Ark.

"And don't panic. You'll find a way of balancing your activities, but it does take time, effort and willpower."

Some found that having outside jobs while at school actually helped them in scheduling study time.

"Because I was busy working and participating in extracurricular groups, I had to allocate my time for each activity — working, studying, relaxing. If you have a lot of free time, it's actually easier to 'blow off' studying," said Caroline Chung, 20, a sophomore from DeKalb, Ill.

Organization key to keeping sanity during senior year

By GLENDA WINDERS
Copley News Service

Your senior year in high school is supposed to be one of the best years of your life, and for most people it is. But it's also one of the most difficult.

At the same time you are trying to make good grades, participate in activities and spend time with friends, you also have to look ahead to college.

There are achievement tests to take, application forms to fill out, essays to write and colleges to visit. And for most seniors these days, squeezing in a part-time job is also a necessity.

It is possible to get everything done, but it's going to take some serious time management on your part.

Realize there will be times when your school's basketball team is playing in a championship game, you need to study for a trigonometry test and the most exciting person in school invites you to a party — all on the same night.

Learn to set priorities so that you don't spend this special year overbooked and frazzled.

Budget your time to allow for nutritious meals, exercise and plenty of sleep. Taking good care of yourself pays off in huge dividends.

FIRST THINGS FIRST

Your studies have to be uppermost in your mind since colleges will look not only at your grades but also at the level of courses you elected to take.

Study catalogs from the colleges you are considering and make sure you're taking the classes they require.

Apply for honors sections. If time allows, include enjoyable electives that broaden you as a person, such as photography or marine biology.

Extracurricular activities are also an important part of senior life, but choose wisely since they do take up a lot of time.

Are you an athlete, a musician or a thespian? If you're planning a future career in politics or law, get involved in student government.

Volunteer work helps expand your horizons, makes you feel good about yourself and can enhance your resume. Look into hospitals, nursing homes, shelters for abused children and museums.

Colleges today are more selective than ever before, and most have spaces on their applications to list such activities.

Your willingness to give of yourself may be the edge that gets you accepted ahead of another applicant with a comparable background.

SENIOR MEMORIES

Since some of the friendships you're building now will last a lifetime, make time to attend athletic events and school parties with your classmates.

Try to make some contribution to your school paper or yearbook. Invest in a small camera and take the snapshots that will recall these good times in years to come.

Several companies now offer video yearbooks as a supplement to the printed version.

Gruenberg Video Group, based at the University of Pennsylvania, will provide a video camera and backup gear, staff members to train students, a manual and tips for producing a 60-minute tape of senior fun.

Yearbook Enterprises in Durham, N.C., is another organization that offers to "put your memories in motion."

One important memory will be prom night, which in recent years has become more of a spectacle than ever before. Plan early to make sure you get the clothes, flowers, restaurant reservations and other services you need to make this evening complete.

While in most states seniors aren't old enough to drink alcoholic beverages, alcohol does seem to appear on prom night and can lead to tragedy. Be realistic and arrange to be chauffeured if this looks like it might be a problem.

Help organize parties and all-night events that keep classmates off the highways. Finish off the night with a smashing sunrise breakfast.

In selecting clothes and jewelry, especially the all-important class ring, keep this principle in mind, too. Try to choose items you will be happy to wear throughout college.

LOOKING AHEAD

Organization is your only hope for surviving the tedious task of college application.

Start by developing a relationship with your guidance counselor. Let him or her know what your plans and goals are so that you can be kept informed of deadlines or changes in requirements.

Then collect catalogs from several schools in which you might be interested.

Many students must apply for financial aid and scholarships. Your guidance counselor can help you get the right forms and guide you through the application process.

To avoid panic and confusion, gather all the forms for government and private grants and loans at the beginning of your senior year. That way, you have plenty of time to wade through complex forms.

All students — not just those who need financial assistance — should investigate grants given solely on the basis of good scholarship. Many local philanthropic groups, as well as national special interest groups, have welcome dollars to give to smart students.

To keep all the applications straight, establish a system with a calendar and a file folder for each of the colleges to which you plan to apply.

On your calendar mark the application deadlines for each of the schools. Also mark the days you plan to take the ACT or SAT exams and the deadlines for making reservations. And don't forget to note the application deadlines for loans and grants.

Once you have applied, you will get back various materials from the schools — a letter acknowledging receipt of your application initially and later, when you are accepted, important information about registration and housing. Keep everything in its appropriate folder until you are definitely enrolled in the college of your choice.

Start early developing your application essay, since this is used by many schools as a way to decide between students of like grades.

Avoid a boring recounting of your life history. Instead, focus on the most exciting or unusual thing that has happened to you.

What sets you apart from other students? Use that as a point of departure for explaining what you would like to achieve. Write in positive terms rather than negative ones.

Entering students face 'tuition shock'

More colleges adopt two-tier pricing system

By LEE MITGANG
AP Education Writer

NEW YORK — Next fall's tuitions are soaring for the ninth straight year at many colleges and universities. And freshmen at a number of top-notch schools will get a double dose of bad news.

In a new twist, schools such as the University of Chicago, Johns Hopkins University, Duke University, Seton Hall University and George Washington University are setting tuition increases for freshmen roughly double those being imposed on upperclassmen.

The new, higher rates will become the base, and lower rates charged to upperclassmen will be "grandfathered," or phased out.

The schools give differing explanations for their decisions to hit freshmen harder.

Seton Hall will charge freshmen 19.6 percent more next fall, while upperclass tuition will go up 10.8 percent.

Johns Hopkins set tuition increases of 16.6 percent for freshmen, to $14,000, and 8.3 percent for returning students, to $13,000. Its school of arts and sciences is struggling with a projected $2 million deficit.

But John V. Lombardi, vice president and provost, said the primary drive was that Johns Hopkins found itself priced at least $1,000 below other top schools, and it wanted to catch up as quickly as possible without angering students.

"THE NEEDED increase is really larger than normal, and you try to be fair to existing students," he said. That's why his school spared upperclassmen double-digit rate hikes, but not freshmen.

Duke had a different explanation: a desire to hire more faculty and lower student-teacher ratios from the current 13-1 to 11-1.

Duke pioneered the two-tiered tuition system a year ago along with the University of Chicago. This year, Duke freshmen will be charged $12,800 for tuition, while returning students will pay $11,350.

"The idea was to fund academic improvements and enhancements," said Duke spokesman Dave Roberson.

"The thinking was that students who were here already wouldn't benefit in time for most of those enhancements to be in place."

At George Washington, for example, freshmen will see their fees rise by 20.1 percent, or $2,000, to $11,500. Returning sophomores, juniors and seniors will be hit with only a 10 percent hike.

Library acquisition costs rose 30-50 percent last year, said Robert A. Chernak, vice president for student and academic support services. Such costs, along with a 6 percent rise in faculty salaries, were key factors behind the $2 million operating deficit that led to next fall's mammoth tuition increase.

BUT THE LARGE freshman tuition increases also seem to be an effort by some schools to raise big bucks while keeping protests to a minimum.

Freshmen, after all, are paying tuition for the first time. For them, a big tuition increase isn't as likely to be perceived as a change for the worse.

Still, while it may be highly unlikely that students at Duke, Hopkins or other top private schools would stage angry tuition protests similar to those that greeted the University of Oklahoma and City University of New York recently, higher education spokesmen say there's increasing sensitivity to the issue of outrageous tuition hikes.

Tuitions at both public and private institutions had shot up in double digits from 1981 to 1984 but had moderated somewhat in the last three years.

In 1988-89, they were up an average of 5 percent at publics and 9 percent at privates, according to the College Board.

But signs are that the moderating trend may be over, at least for next fall. Schools are declaring tuition hikes ranging from 7-15 percent.

Tuitions at public research universities rose from an average of $549 in 1973 to $1,701 in 1988, a 210 percent increase, according to a just-published report by the Denver-based State Higher Education Executive Officers.

THE INCREASES during that 15-year period were greatest in the South — 234 percent — and smallest in the Northeast — 209 percent, the report found.

And economists see no signs that upward pressure will end any time soon.

"I see trends that have been going on for a decade that are not moderating: the need for financial aid, the rising cost of library acquisitions, the need to improve salaries," said Richard Rosser, president of the National Association of Independent Colleges and Universities in Washington.

At Cornell University, which has announced a tuition increase of roughly 7 percent for this fall, financial aid costs will reach $17.8 million, compared with just $5.1 million in 1981, according to spokesman Sam Segal.

Overall, the nation's private colleges are spending $3.5 billion on financial aid, compared with $900 million in 1979, a fact Rosser blamed on cuts in federal aid programs.

Meanwhile, public universities had moderated their average tuition hikes to 5-6 percent in the last several years, compared with increases that reached a high of 20 percent in 1982-3. But higher education officials note growing sentiment in many states, especially those with budgetary problems, to boost students' share of the cost of public college.

On average, tuition and fees cover just 25-33 percent of the cost of an education at a public university, compared to about 80 percent at a private college, said Robert Aaron, a spokesman for the National Association of State Universities and Land Grant Colleges.

"It is fair to say that states in fiscal stress are looking for ways to diminish their higher education burden and are looking for students and parents to pay a larger share," Aaron said.

Some state colleges offer Ivy League atmosphere without sky-high costs

Associated Press

It's possible to get an Ivy League education without Ivy League costs.

Good public colleges with private school ambience and advantages can be found, according to education experts.

"There are a number of small public institutions that are rapidly reaching the standards of the 'little' private Ivys," says Richard Moll, who has served in admissions administration at Harvard and Yale Universities and has written a book, "The Public Ivys."

These small public colleges usually have high-quality students and faculty, small classes, rigorous curriculum, an intellectual atmosphere and personal attention to students. Campus population averages about 3,000, which works out to about 22 students in each class.

Moll says tuition costs at these colleges range between $850 and $1,500 per year for in-state students, $2,500 to $4,000 for out-of-staters. Room and board typically come to about $3,000. This contrasts with private school tuition and fees which averaged $12,526 in 1988-89.

Nearly two thirds of public college students receive financial aid, averaging $2,800 a year, while the same proportion at private schools receives an average of $6,000.

Some of the schools mentioned by Moll and another author, Martin Nemko, include Evergreen State College at Olympia, Wash.; St. Mary's College of St. Mary's City, Md.; the University of North Carolina at Asheville; Northwest Missouri State University at Kirksville; Ramapo College in Ramapo, N.J.; Mary Washington College in Fredericksburg, Va.; the New College of the University of South Florida at Sarasota; the State University of New York at Geneseo; and the University of Minnesota at Morris.

Nemko, a former New York City teacher who is now an education consultant and author of "How to Get an Ivy League Education at a State University" cites St. Mary's College in Maryland as a "decent copy of an elite New England private liberal arts college that will cost you $80,000 less than the original."

The University of North Carolina-Asheville was rated in a recent survey by the Association of American Colleges as having one of the strongest humanities core curriculums in the country.

The National Governors Association has called Ramapo College a good example of a school with a good international focus, with cooperative education and internship programs with international corporations in the United States and overseas.

According to Joseph Olander, president of Evergreen State College, institutions like his stress critical thinking, communication and computation skills — "the three Cs of education for the 21st century."

Prom ride gains stature

For years on prom night parents handed over the car keys and spent a good part of the night worrying about their children's safety. Now there's a trend to pick some student who doesn't drink to do the driving.

And more and more parents are hiring chauffeured vans, buses and even limousines for that night. In fact, it has become a status symbol for prom-goers to ride in limos. (CNS)

Early failure expensive

Think of the price paid when a first-grader fails to learn to read. The school wastes the more than $3,000 it spent on the child's education that year and faces the prospect of paying for years of remedial instruction.

And the child faces the possibility of lengthy periods of emotional stress and even failure in his school career and his work later. (CNS)

On-site research beneficial when choosing best $50,000 investment

Associated Press

With an investment of four years and probably more than $50,000, choosing the right college is far from a trivial decision.

Alice Ilchman, president of Sarah Lawrence College in Bronxville, N.Y., has this advice for parents and aspiring collegians:

■ Sit in on a class or two. Are the students involved? Are you? Is there opportunity to participate?

■ Speak with the faculty. Look for faculty office hours or ask the admissions office to make an appointment for you. Ask why they chose to teach at this college and what they find rewarding about it.

■ Wander around the campus. Are the buildings well-maintained? Are they open and available to students? What is on the notice boards?

■ Check out the bookstore. Does it emphasize books, or just sweatshirts and beer mugs?

■ Look at the library. Are students using it? Are they awake?

■ Learn about the students. What are they talking and thinking about? Do they like being there? What percentage of students graduate?

■ Talk with your child. Listen to his view of himself and how he thinks a particular college will let or help him develop.

"One thing I've learned as a parent and educator is that our children probably know more than we think they do," says Miss Ilchman.

"Guide, discuss, question, but trust the final judgment of that budding student."

Computers become 'write' tool in fight against illiteracy

Associated Press

A prime weapon against illiteracy is the computer.

Far from being a rich child's toy, the machine is touching children in all reaches of society, freeing teachers for one-on-one attention for students and helping unlock the written word to many from illiterate backgrounds.

The state of Mississippi, with one of the highest rates of illiteracy in the nation, is putting computers into every school in the state in an effort to teach basic reading and writing skills to every child. The first computers will be in classrooms this fall, and all elementary schools in the state will be equipped within four years.

The state is using the "Writing to Read" program developed by a retired educator, John Henry Martin, and produced and marketed by IBM. The company says it has been put into at least 5,000 schools across the country, helping an estimated one million school children.

In designing the program, which uses computers, audio cassettes, and typewriters, Martin sought to replicate the comfortable interaction of the one-room schoolhouse.

His own experience as a young teacher and with his later research into how children learn convinced him that a less structured atmosphere, not bound off by age and set curriculum, encourages children to learn better, at their own pace.

AP Laserphoto

A kindergartner at West Corinth School in Corinth, Miss., practices phonemes, or letter/sound combinations, at a computer which will help her learn to read. Mississippi plans a statewide installation of IBM's Writing to Read labs to combat illiteracy.

Moving from one "work station" to the next, children first learn basic phonemes, or letter-sound combinations, through computers and earphones; familiar objects are illustrated and matched to written and oral words.

Audio tapes at the next work station reinforce what they've learned at the computer, and the following one, the library station, familiarizes them with written English.

They then use this knowledge to write stories based on their own oral language at the writing/typing station. At the final station, children experiment with new combinations of letters and words to develop word-building skills, using many media — pencil, chalk, clay, rubber stamps, and so on. The aim is to expose children to all ways of writing.

"We don't know from one child to the next which child learns best by seeing, by hearing, by feeling, or by holding, and we want to engage everything in the child," explains Martin.

Children are not intimidated by the computer, and because the program lets each one move ahead at his own speed, that child has no fear of failure.

"The children know they are teaching themselves."

They learn to type even as they learn to recognize the letter symbols. Martin says that, by avoiding the labor of forming letters by hand, children can concentrate on what they want to say.

He estimates that kindergartners have vocabularies of around 1,000 words when they start school.

"To reduce them to a hundred words in a primer is to ask them to go back to eating pablum.

"There are a half million words in English — a magnificent intellectual achievement. But when you mess it up with all the peculiar spellings we use in English as a way of having children learn — to have them encode to write, then have them decode to read — you take the logic out of the system and you confuse things."

The children go straight to writing for meaning, spelling phonemically. Later they easily learn accepted spellings.

The program has been adapted for Spanish-speaking students — Voy a Leer Escribiendo, or VALE — and for functionally illiterate adults — Principle of Alphabet Literacy, or PALS.

Martin, former chairman of the National Panel on High School and Adolescent Education of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare and the U.S. Office of Education, developed the program on a personal computer.

IBM agreed to produce and market the program, with Martin's stipulation to run field tests first, under direction of the Education Testing Service of Princeton, N.J.

The ETS evaluation, covering 10,000 students in 21 school districts in the first year and samples of students in the second year, showed that the computer-assisted children on average learned faster and excelled at writing performance.

Teachers interviewed in the study said that these students spent more time writing creatively and less time on phonic and structural analysis.

The Mississippi program is the most ambitious, but another large-scale use is in the New York City schools, which has set up 100 Writing to Read laboratories. It also has been used to teach English overseas.

"Mississippi will be the first state in the country, to our knowledge, to have such an extensive computer literacy system for its children," said Gov. Ray Mabus as he and his wife, Julie, announced the program last spring.

"Every child should, when this program is in place, leave the first grade knowing how to read and write."

About 400,000 adults in Mississippi — out of a population of 2.3 million — are estimated to be functionally illiterate.

Students able to tune in to world events via TV

By JILL LAWRENCE

WASHINGTON (AP) — Couch potatoes in the classroom?

It's a likely scenario this fall as more and more cable networks tout educational offerings specifically designed as teaching aids.

The competition took off in controversy with the debut of Channel One, a flashy 12-minute newscast with two commercials. Cable News Network soon weighed in with a news program minus the ads, followed by the Discovery Channel with a five-day-a-week documentary package available for taping.

And that doesn't include other school-oriented programs from C-SPAN, The Learning Channel and the Arts and Entertainment network.

The offerings range from live public events and congressional coverage on C-SPAN to nature films and historical documentaries on Discovery. The Learning Channel featured vintage films like "Oliver Twist" and "A Farewell to Arms" on a program designed to encourage reading of the classics.

And then there are the rival news programs from CNN and Whittle Communications, producer of Channel One.

Whittle conducted a $5 million, seven-week test run in six schools last spring, with candy bars, shampoo and jeans among the products advertised. Company officials are determining whether to launch the program in 8,000 schools in 1990 — a $100 million project.

The trial run drew fire for a number of reasons. Educators objected to inflicting ads on a captive audience. They also complained that the program, heavy on graphics and hip teen-age anchors, was superficial.

"Channel One is social studies by 90-second sound bites," charged Scott Thomson, executive director of the National Association of Secondary School Principals. Furthermore, he said, the program "allows special interests to reach kids through television commercials which they are forced to watch."

Christopher Whittle, chairman of Whittle Communications, says the ads are necessary to finance the $50,000 in satellite dishes, TVs and VCRs given to schools that promise to show his program daily.

"Were this a perfect world, we would agree that the government, not commercials, should provide this technology and programming," Whittle wrote in a New York Times op-ed piece. "But in today's real world of $20 textbook budgets and tough fiscal constraints, two minutes of appropriate advertising is not a bad solution."

Whittle suffered a blow in May when the California department of education said the state could not be billed for education funds for time students spent watching commercials in class. "Such time will be deleted from the certification," the department said in a legal opinion.

The department also said that "the imposition of forced commercial advertising" on schoolchildren may violate the state constitution.

Educators and TV watchdogs are reacting more favorably to the daily "CNN Newsroom," due to start Aug. 14 in time for the fall school term — a full year before Channel One would be available in classrooms across the country.

They note that CNN is a legitimate news operation, the 15-minute program would feature adult anchors, and use of it in the classroom would be voluntary and at the teacher's discretion. Perhaps most important of all, CNN founder Ted Turner decided at the last minute to ditch the commercials initially planned for the package.

Turner says "CNN Newsroom" will cost millions of dollars but CNN is profitable enough to absorb the expense. Whittle's venture would be a money-maker, while Discovery — with its daily, hour-long "Assignment: Discovery" — expects to break even by enlisting corporate and foundation underwriters.

The Discovery underwriters will be identified onscreen, but their names will never interrupt either of the two educational segments planned for each hour. Thus students will never have to see the sponsorship billboards.

The education community has reserved its highest praise for the Discovery series, which starts Sept. 18. For one thing, it is divided into systematic, teacher-friendly curriculum blocks. Social studies teachers, for example, will know that documentaries in their field are shown on Tuesdays.

Furthermore, the network is getting educational rights to each program so teachers can tape segments at their convenience and use them if and when they want. Teachers consequently remain in control of what happens in their classrooms, rather than being forced to show a daily program.

"If there are ways to provide this technology when, where and how the teacher feels it best enhances instruction, discussion and comprehension, then it is to be applauded," said Manya Ungar, president of the National PTA. "If it doesn't, it's a detriment."

Teen-age achievers stress importance of motivation

LAKE FOREST, ILL. (AP) — Some teen-age achievers say motivation and care are needed to help their less brilliant classmates learn more and prepare for life.

Class size and individual attention are seen as important, and the teens think that while more money for schools is needed, it's not as important as the other factors.

These attitudes were revealed by a poll of students listed in "Who's Who Among American High School Students" organized by its publishers.

"A lot of students in my school aren't motivated to learn," reports Matt Henry of Florissant, Mo., one of the students. Henry says motivating students is a shared responsibility of students, teachers and parents. "It's up to students to make an effort, but it's also up to teachers to present material in a way that's interesting and relevant to today's world."

Colleen Boyle of Twinsburg, Ohio, also thinks parental involvement is important. "My parents have always shown a lot of interest in my academic progress as well as my extracurricular activities, and it's been a big boost in helping me go forward. Some students aren't so lucky."

Large class size got poor marks from the students. "In a large school like mine, many students seem to graduate without the basic knowledge needed to succeed," says Lindsey Taucher of Plano, Texas. Adds Claudine Cangiano from Plandome, N.Y.: "In a large high school environment like mine, a student may feel like a number."

She also thinks schools rely too much on computers. "They can enhance the learning process, but they cannot replace teachers. Individual attention is still important."

Todd DiSimone from Lockport, Ill., says that money spent on higher teacher salaries will draw more and better candidates. "Then the overall quality of teaching might be higher."

But Ms. Cangiano disagrees, saying she thinks more money won't make that much difference.

Gov. Bill Clements greets lawmakers, Sen. John Whitmire, D-Houston, far right, and Rep. Dan Morales, D-San Antonio, right, prior to his signing bills into law Wednesday.

Clements signs bill OK'ing drug case property seizures

By RICK BROWN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Legislation signed into law Wednesday gives local police more power to sieze money or property used in illegal drug deals and allows the agencies more access to the fruits of the deals.

Gov. Bill Clements called the measure "the most far-reaching anti-drug legislation in our state's history," for its capacity to "take the profit out of drug dealing."

The bill was one of 12 that garnered the governor's signature during a public ceremony Wednesday. Another bill is intended to clean up supplemental health insurance scams.

While federal law already allows seizure of property related to drug offenses, its effect has had no significant impact on local authorities, said bill author Rep. Dan Morales, D-San Antonio.

Morales, who is running for attorney general, said the new state law broadens the federal measure by covering a wider range of offenses.

A civil court judge authorizes the seizure, which carries no requirement that the property's owner be convicted of a crime, Morales said.

State's attorneys only have to show "by a preponderence of evidence" that the property was used in the commission of a crime or was bought with proceeds of the crime.

The property could be money, vehicles or even a villa in Mexico, said the governor's general counsel, Rider Scott.

Scott was unsure how much the seizures would add up to in the first year, but he estimated that amount to be "in the millions."

Other legislation the governor signed Wednesday prohibits jurys from giving probation to convicted drug dealers who sell to minors and makes drug testing mandatory for drug offenders on parole or probation.

Medigap legislation the governor signed Wednesday is intended to clean up insurance rip-offs that purport to fill a gap in federal Medicare coverage for senior citizens.

With the new law, companies must submit their advertising to the State Board of Insurance at least 60 days prior to distribution to the public. The law also allows the board to regulate price comparison literature.

The bill includes limitations on the number of policies a company can offer and allows participants to get a full refund by returning a policy within 30 days.

The law has the support of consumers groups, including the Comsumers Union. John Heldreth, an organization spokesman, said the law sends a message that "unscrupulous operators will not be tolerated in Texas."

The governor also signed legislation that increases penalties for child abuse committed in the context or a ritual or ceremony.

Author Sen. Judith Zaffirini, D-Laredo, said she was confident that the measure's language would allow legitimate religious ceremonies like circumcision to continue.

Also signed Wednesday was a measure authorizing a merger between West Texas State University in Canyon and the Texas A&M System.

And the governor endorsed issuance of special license plates for former prisoners of war, Pearl Harbor survivors and Purple Heart recipients.

Juvenile rehabilitation program honored at consulate ceremony

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

U.S. and Mexican officials Wednesday in one of the first ceremonies conducted at the newly opened Mexican consulate in Midland offered hopes for the continued success of its two-year-old exchange program.

Mexican Consul Ecce lei Mendoza recognized the efforts of both governments, promising "to do whatever is necessary to make it a continued success."

Among the beneficiaries of the U.S.-Mexico exchange program are the Consejo Tutelar Para Menores in Monterrey, Mexico, and the Texas Youth Commission, which have similar missions in dealing with juvenile delinquent offenders.

For the next two weeks, Hermelinda Mendez Rodriguez and Moises Berumen, both psychologists from the Consejo Tutelar Para Menores, will join the staff of the West Texas Children's Home in Pyote to examine its methods of working with Mexican National youths who must serve out prison terms for offenses committed in the United States.

Meanwhile, TYC officials are in Mexico doing the same type of work.

Mario Garza, assistant superintendent of the West Texas Children's Home, said the objective of the program is to exchange ideas and management techniques.

"We'll share with them our information and they'll share information which is useful to us," Garza said. "That's especially important in the case of our working with Mexican national youth."

A government agency that oversees the rehabilitation of juvenile delinquent children, the Centro De Detencion Consejo Tutelar Para Menores — like the West Texas Children's Home — strives for the social readaptation of a problem child back into his or her community, Ms. Rodriguez said.

In addition, she said the facility provides psychological services, and nutritional and clothing needs to those families.

The West Texas Children's Home houses a maximum of 1,400 juvenile offenders. Currently, about 45 Mexican national youths who have committed crimes in the United States are incarcerated in its facility.

"We do not want to Americanize these kids," Garza observed. "We want to establish specific programs and have them re-integrate back into Mexican society. It is not our intent to reinforce that illegal migration process that got them here in the first place."

While most of the offenses committed by these youths are misdemeanor crimes against property, Garza pointed out that the presence of the Mexican youth in the West Texas facility often causes problems for the professional staff because of the language barrier and cultural value difference.

MPD needs funds for anti-drug program

By BRIAN PEARSON
Staff Writer

With thousands of donated dollars for an anti-drug program under its belt, the Midland Police Department is close to meeting its $100,000 financial goal.

But officers involved in the Drug Abuse Resistance Education project sent out a plea for additional funds Wednesday, with only $8,000 needed to close the gap.

"We're trying to get some donations from the private sector," officer Dale Seago said. "We need to try to get it as soon as possible."

Initially developed by the U.S. Department of Justice for use in Los Angeles schools, DARE is a law enforcement program to prevent drug and alcohol use among children.

Starting this school year, three MPD officers will spread out and spend time in each Midland Independent School District sixth-grade class and remain at the school throughout the day.

DARE will arm pupils with drug information, methods to enhance self-esteem, analytical and decision-making skills and the motivation to employ the skills, Seago said.

The officer said the additional $8,000 is needed to buy T-shirts, buttons, rulers, pencils and workbooks emblazoned with DARE slogans. The pupils who go through the program will receive the items at the end of the 17-week program.

So far, MISD has donated $20,000, the city gave $30,000 and $10,000 was received through private donations. The state awarded the program a $32,000 grant.

"We believe this program to be the most effective tool we have to prevent future drug problems," Seago said. "The main emphasis needs to be on education to not use drugs."

Seago said it is critical to educate children about drugs and alcohol before they hit junior high, when temptations sometimes abound.

Officer Dave Beatty, also a DARE representative, said it might be eight years before the program starts paying off significantly.

"If we're going to keep educating these kids, we're going to have to have the community solidly behind us," Beatty said, adding that community support so far has been "real positive."

Other officers in the program are Phyllis Blair and Lewis Britton. Britton will serve as an alternate.

The four are leaving Sunday for a the DARE regional training center in Phoenix, Ariz., where they will spend two weeks.

Those who want to donate funds to Midland's DARE effort can send them to: DARE donation coordinator, P.O. Box 1152, Midland, Texas, 79702.

Jury clears Odessa lawmen in civil rights violation suit

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Two Odessa lawmen, who had been accused by federal prisoner Charles Edward Curry of beating him following his arrest in 1987, were cleared by a federal jury of any civil-rights violations and abuse of Curry.

The 39-year-old Curry claimed that Randall Barrett and Robert Clanton had verbally and physically abused him on Sept. 3, 1987, when they arrested him on outstanding traffic warrants.

Additionally, Curry accused Odessa Police Chief Alan Stewart of failing to properly train the officers, who maintained that Curry resisted arrest, kicked them, and, as a declared homosexual, spat on them, claiming he had AIDS (acquired immune deficiency syndrome).

"This lawsuit should not have been brought to court," Stewart said Wednesday after the jury found in favor of Barrett, Clanton and the chief.

Stewart said the lawsuit was "an abuse of the taxpayers" and was "an abuse of the (judicial) system."

No evidence was tendered that Curry has AIDS.

Moments after the jurors submitted their verdict to U.S. District Court Chief Judge Lucius D. Bunton, Curry was ushered off to jail by the deputy U.S. marshal for his return to federal prison where he is serving time for credit-card fraud. Previously, Curry had served a federal sentence for mail fraud.

In his closing arguments, Curry, who was acting as his own attorney, noted that the Odessa defense effort, engineered by Odessa lawyer Jim O'Leary, had tried to "discredit" him by citing his many arrests and his state and federal criminal records.

"The issue is not my character or how many times I have been arrested," said Curry. "These officers beat me," he said, "simply because I am a black individual...and a homosexual. I called it a 'liberal beating.'"

Curry maintained that he "did not inflict the injuries to myself. I did not resist arrest."

Curry suggested that he was gentle person who, as a federal prisoner at Seagoville, helps needy children in the community, is a trusted prisoner, and works as a landscaper on prison grounds.

"I am not a bad individual," he said, "and I hold no prejudice against the defendants at all. They should be reprimanded for what they did."

When Barrett and Clanton arrested Curry in Odessa on Sept. 3, 1987, both lawmen were assigned to serving warrants for the Odessa Police Department. Clanton still is a warrant officer, but Barrett is an undercover officer for the Permian Basin Drug Task Force.

"The defendants did violate my rights," Curry said.

During the trial, O'Leary, in cross-examining Curry on his allegedly wishing AIDS on the officers, had asked Curry: "Is AIDS a horrible disease?"

"I would not know," Curry replied.

"Do you know how it is transmitted?" O'Leary asked.

"No, I do not," Curry answered.

In his closing arguments, O'Leary noted that Curry was "worried" about winning the civil lawsuit and collecting $275,000 in damages related to alleged physical and psychological injuries and to mental anguish.

"Mr. Curry ought to be worrying about AIDS and how it is transmitted," O'Leary said. Additionally, Curry "ought to be worried about" two federal prison sentences and a state-court conviction for theft, O'Leary said.

O'Leary said that he, as an Odessa citizen, is "proud" of the Odessa Police Department.

"They (Clanton and Barrett) are good officers," said O'Leary, who represented Odessa Police Department in the lawsuit. "They acted properly at all times" in their handling of Curry.

Farmer pleads guilty to gambling charge

Man charged with operating gambling business

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

A 52-year-old Seminole farmer and rancher who is charged with owning and operating an illegal gambling business pegged to professional, collegiate and high-school football games pleaded guilty Wednesday in federal court in Midland to operating a gambling enterprise during the 1986 football season.

Billy Wade Moore, was charged by information — formal complaint registered by the FBI — rather than by indictment by a 23-member grand jury.

"This is a continuation of the gambling investigation centered in Odessa," said Ron Butler, special agent-in-charge of the Midland FBI office which investigated the case.

Earlier, Odessa businessmen had been charged and convicted of operating football-keyed gambling houses where winnings and house cuts are tied to the games' point spread.

Butler could not speculate on the extent of illegal gambling in West Texas, since much gambling, similar to the clandestine importation of drugs and other contraband, goes undetected.

"There is more crime out there than we have the people to address," Butler said. Nevertheless, his message to those carrying out organized criminal schemes, including gambling, is this: "Illegal conduct will not be tolerated."

In the formal charge against Moore, Assistant U.S. Attorney Tom Beery noted that "at least five other individuals known" to United States Attorney Helen Milburn Eversberg were linked with Moore in operating several gambling places.

Butler noted that gambling, such as poker-playing among individuals, is not illegal as long as the money stays with the gamblers, and "the house" does not get a cut.

The FBI's interest in gambling is piqued when it becomes organized crime and is operated by individuals whose business is gambling.

Butler noted that some gamblers presume that they will be protected from prosecution if they report their gambling profits to the Internal Revenue Service.

"You are not going to cloak yourself in immunity because you paid your taxes," Butler said. "Some of these fellows did (report gambling income) as their defense, but that does not alter the fact that it (organized gambling) is illegal."

Moore is to appear in court with his attorney, Lubbock lawyer Mike Carper, for sentencing by U.S. District Court Chief Judge Lucius D. Bunton on Sept. 8 at 12:34 p.m.

The maximum punishment of operating illegal-gambling operation is a five-year prison term and a $250,000 fine.

In his appearance Wednesday before Bunton, Moore said he had lived in Seagraves before he moved to Seminole and has lived in Gaines County for 33 years.

Moore, who voluntarily surrendered following the levying of the gambling charge against him, assured the judge that he would show up for sentencing.

"Say when, and I'll be here," he told Bunton.

Among other defendants to appear before Bunton for sentencing on Sept. 8 is Don Burris, a 28-year-old Midland firearms importer who has pleaded guilty to possessing firearm silencers and mufflers which were without serial numbers and which had not been properly recorded. Burris is to be sentenced at 12:22 p.m.

Another Midlander, 28-year-old licensed firearms dealer Philip Mace Dolbow who was indicted for related firearms violations, is docketed for trial on Aug. 22.

Railroad will link Houston, Galveston

By STEVEN LONG
Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — Come September, Franklin Denson, who claims railroading is in his blood, plans to do what most railroad buffs only dream of.

On September 1, Denson will begin running his own railroad, linking Houston and Galveston by train for the first time since 1967.

Denson, whose great-grandfather was president of the Birmingham Southern Railroad during America's "Gilded Age," has faced an uphill battle in getting his "Texas Limited" on track.

For six years, Denson, 42, has been negotiating right of way with various railroads on whose tracks the Texas Limited will run. The rest of the time he has been raising money to purchase and refurbish equipment for the train, which can carry 250 passengers.

The attraction of his railroad between Houston and Galveston isn't transportation but tourism, Denson says.

"I began this project to give Houston an effective tool to promote itself as a tourist destination point," he said. "We are not like our sister city of San Antonio, which has thousands of tourists come through each year. We need to capture part of that market. We need a French Quarter or a Fisherman's Wharf. We've got one, and it is Historic Galveston."

Friends, family and fans gather at the First Baptist Church in Atoka, Okla., for the funeral service of bull rider Lane Frost. Frost, 25, was killed Sunday at a rodeo in Cheyenne, Wyo.

Bull rider eulogized as down-to-earth hero

ATOKA, Okla. (AP) — Friends say world champion bull rider Lane Frost, killed last weekend during a rodeo, was a down-to-earth hero.

"He was a gentlemen and was in awe of people that really were in awe of him," said rodeo announcer Clem McSpadden after Frost's funeral Wednesday. "He was so down to earth. He was a great champion and he wore the world's championship buckle with a lot of dignity, a lot of class."

Frost, the 1987 World Champion Bull Rider, died Sunday from internal injuries suffered when a bull nicknamed "Bad to the Bone" rammed him at a Frontier Days Rodeo in Cheyenne, Wyo. He was 25.

About 1,200 people gathered for Frost's funeral. Some waited outside the church, listening to the service on loudspeakers.

Dozens then drove 50 miles to Hugo, where Frost was buried beside another bull riding legend, Warren "Freckles" Brown.

Cowboys in boots and hats joined Frost's longtime friends at the church, where mourners had placed nearly 400 floral arrangements.

McSpadden and the Rev. Willard Moody eulogized Frost as the rodeo star of a generation.

"I think in only rodeo and Western life do lives become so close," said Moody, of Roswell, N.M., a former professional calf roper.

McSpadden also read a letter of sympathy from Gov. Henry Bellmon.

Richard Hedeman of Bowie, Texas, said of Frost's riding ability, "He was to his generation what Freckles was to his."

"He was everybody's idol," said local resident Bennie Welch. "He was a local hero. Everybody loved him."

"I've been crying all day," said Charlie Sampson of Casa Grande, Ariz., a noted bull rider of the 1980s who has survived extensive injuries from the sport. "The last thing I wanted to come to was a young fella's funeral who had been killed by a bull."

Although Frost lived in Quanah, Texas, he returned to the Atoka County community of Lane "every chance he got," said Jim White, whose high school son learned bull riding from Frost. White said Frost always took time for youngsters.

"He was really one of the most highly thought of persons around here," White said. "They could call him if they ever had a problem with riding or anything else. Wherever he was at, they were welcome to call him, and he would always take time for them."

Doctor proposes coyote birth control pill

By LESLIE SOWERS
Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — Coyotes have really got something to howl about.

First off, the coyote has become a pop culture totem, yowling up from coffee tables at track lighting instead of the moon, pinned in sterling silver on the blazers of trendy professionals and depicted on posters in pastel.

That would no doubt be humiliating enough for these animals who are still Public Enemy Numero Uno for sheep ranchers who think they enjoy too many lamb chops.

Now the latest coyote indignity is birth control.

It's a new plan proposed by a Texas A&M University scientist for controlling the coyote menace. He believes it's superior to poisoning, shooting or trapping the beasts, which have been expanding their territory as they are squeezed out of their traditional habitat on the Western plains.

Dr. Max Amoss is not sure that trying to kill off coyotes is a good idea. An endocrinologist in A&M's College of Veterinary Medicine, Amoss conducts one of the few continuing studies of coyote reproduction in the United States.

Coyotes are in the food chain for a reason, he said. They keep down the population of animals such as rabbits.

"If you have rabbits all over the place, you're not going to have any forage to pasture sheep on because the rabbits are going to eat the vegetation," Amoss said. "We've got to find some sort of a balance."

Amoss said even if it were desirable, eliminating coyotes may be impossible. Unlike red or gray wolves, which face extinction in many areas, coyotes aren't particularly threatened by humans and have been reported as far west as California and as far east and north as South Carolina and New York.

Amoss and his colleagues think learning to control the coyote population is a more promising way to deal with the collision between coyotes and civilization.

Using a colony of 20 coyotes maintained at Texas A&M's College Station campus, Amoss is investigating the coyote reproductive system, hoping to learn how to manipulate the size of the coyote population.

He said the animals are kept in large pens, grouped in family units of one male and two females. He said this containment is necessary in order to study the precise chemistry of the reproductive system.

So far, his findings suggest a coyote version of a birth control pill might be both possible and effective. Studies and behavior observation indicate that coyotes are sexually inactive most of the time.

"We know that we only have to look at the reproductive cycle for a very prescribed period of time, which might be just the months of February and March," Amoss said. "If we can deliver some sort of anti-fertility drug to the coyotes over this period of time, we probably won't have to worry about it for the rest of the year."

A birth control pill would also eliminate the risk of poisoning live stock and other animals, Amoss said.

Coyotes are able to adapt easily to changes man makes in the natural environment, and, in fact, Amoss said, seem to have no problems living in close proximity to man.

"Many other animals try to get away from man, but the coyote says, 'Hey, there's food there. I'm going to stay,'" Amoss said.

Stowaways being held in chains

BEAUMONT (AP) — Two stowaways being held in handcuffs and chained to a wall aboard a ship in dry dock at the Port of Orange are as close to being men without a country as is possible, says a Southeast Texas legislator who visited the men.

State Rep. Al Price, D-Beaumont, made the comment Wednesday after he and a minister of the Tanzanian embassy to the United States were among people who visited the stowaways aboard a Lykes Line ship.

The minister, Mathias P. Rwitunga, said he could not establish that the two, ages 19 and 17, were citizens of his country because they have no passports or other documentation.

Rwitunga said he will return to Washington today to try to gain more information about their status by using information they gave him during three-hour interview Wednesday.

Authorities say the ship had just returned from Dar-es-Salaam on the East African coast where the youths likely stowed away.

"Even if this ship went back to Dar-es-Salaam, they couldn't get off," Price said. "It's the closest thing to men without a country I've ever seen in my life."

The legislator said he felt revulsion when he visited the youths where they had spent most of their time since the ship docked nearly a week ago.

Maritime law requires that they be restrained while the ship is in port.

Price said they have been kept in a bathroom. When he first saw them, he said, they had been moved to a larger room and had just been allowed to shower.

The men were shackled to each other and their handcuffs led to a chain that was bolted to a wall. He said they had no bed but had to sleep on a mat on the floor. The only furniture is a urinal and a stool, Price said.

"There's no ventilation, no windows. They're like that 24 hours a day, at least while they are in port," Price said.

Rwitunga said he talked to the stowaways and obtained pictures of them that he will send to Tanzania in hopes of getting them identified.

"The embassy can only get them travel documents if they are citizens. We are trying to determine if they are Tanzanians," Rwitunga said. "I talked to the boys that's all. I am unable to establish their citizenship."

Price said he went aboard the ship to see the youths in hopes of finding a way to "break the logjam and get them ashore."

"The major problem is their lack of documentation," Price said. "They've given several stories. They have said in the past they were from Tanzania. Now, they say they're from Uganda."

Assistant U.S. Attorney John Stevens of Beaumont, who also visited with the stowaways Wednesday, said they appeared to be healthy and had no complaints, saying the crew was taking care of them.

Stevens said he told the crew members he disapproved of a rusty bucket used to supply the youths with water.

Midlander charged with sexual assault of child

From Staff Reports

A 59-year-old Midland man was released Wednesday on $3,000 bond after he was charged with sexual assault of a child, Midland police reported.

Police Roundup

Dee Arthur Sims was arrested about noon at a residence at 1310 New York Ave., police spokesman Cpl. Jim White said. The arrest followed a brief investigation by detectives, the spokesman said.

Few details of the alleged incident were available. White said the alleged assault occurred July 11 at a residence in southwest Midland. The victim who talked to police is 14 years of age, White said.

Bond for Sims was set by Midland County Justice of the Peace Keith Jobe.

In other reports, police are investigating two vehicle burglaries. According to reports, an AM-FM stereo cassette recorder, a tool box, and a zoom lens with a total value of $650 were reported stolen from a 1980 Mercury Cougar. The burglary occurred in the 4300 block of Garfield Street between 8 a.m. and noon Wednesday, according to police.

A radar detector valued at $85 was reported stolen from a vehicle in the 3800 block of Gulf Avenue, according to police. The burglary occurred between 8 p.m. Tuesday and 6 a.m. Wednesday, according to reports.

Police are also investigating the burglary of a home in the 300 block of East Cuthbert Avenue. A video-cassette recorder valued at $400 was reportyed stolen in the burglary, which occurred Wednesday between 1 p.m. and 5 p.m., according to police.

Trucker injured in wreck

A 41-year-old Big Spring man was listed in serious condition today at a Lubbock hospital, a day after the loaded gasoline tanker he was driving overturned near Grand Falls, 20 miles south of Monahans.

Cecil Edward Sumpter suffered internal injuries in the 9:35 a.m. accident and early today was listed in serious condition, a hospital spokeswoman said. Sumpter received preliminary treatment at Ward County Memorial Hospital, and was transferred by helicopter to the Lubbock facility Wednesday afternoon in guarded condition, the nursing supervisor said.

The accident occurred on State Highway 18, less than a mile south of Grand Falls, according to the Department of Public Safety. Sumpter was driving a 1981 Kenworth tractor and hauling a tank trailer owned by Tompkins Oil Co. of Big Spring to Fort Stockton when the accident occurred, the DPS said. The tanker contained a load of 3,500 gallons of gasoline, also owned by Tompkins.

Sumpter was driving northbound when he failed to negotiate a curve. The truck overturned, spilling about half the load of gasoline, the DPS said.

The fuel did not ignite, but traffic in the area was re-routed. The Grand Falls Fire Department and the Texas Water Commission were called to the scene, according to the DPS.

The remaining gasoline was transferred to another tanker, according to reports.

TRAIN

It has taken a modest fortune to make the wheels of the Texas Limited roll — "well in excess of $1 million," Denson said.

"I sort of exchanged a blue collar for a white collar," he said. Denson left the railroad years ago to work for a London merchant bank. The Texas Limited project brought him back to the railroad business.

The train will make one round trip on Thursdays and Fridays, two round trips on Saturdays and one on Sundays. Round-trip fares are divided into first class and coach, and range from $25 to $30 for adults and $17.50 to $21 for children.

The train will run on the most direct route from Houston to Galveston, with leased locomotives pulling five cars, two of which are owned by Texas Limited and the other three leased. Three of the coaches are club cars.

"The cars were refurbished. The trucks, or wheels, were rebuilt and inspected by Amtrak, and the interiors were completely refurbished," Denson said.

The train will run daily April-August next year, and Denson hopes to eventually expand the Texas Limited to regular, commuter-type rail service linking Houston, the NASA area and Galveston.

"People are going to ride this train, and people are going to say, 'Why don't you run this train more often so that I can spend more time with my family in Galveston?' I think it will eventually be just like in other cities, where people can live in Galveston and ride the train to work," Denson said.

During passenger railroading's heyday, four companies operated five round trips per day between Houston and Galveston. The last regular Santa Fe passenger train between the two cities made its final run across the Causeway in 1967.

The first train ever to run from Houston to Galveston arrived on the island Feb. 9, 1860. Denson's birthday falls on Feb. 9.

"Isn't it something," Denson said, "that the birthday of the guy who is bringing the trains back to Galveston falls on the same day that the first train ran there?"

"Many times they're not understood by our staff. In addition, many of our psychological testing is deficient in accurately measuring their abilities," Garza said.

Hopefully, that will change because of exchange programs such as this, he observed.

"These professional staff people from Mexico have come to help us diagnostically assess the kids, help raise the conscientiousness of our staff and set specific programming measures to handle the re-integration of these youths back into Mexican society.

"Maybe we won't waste our time and spin our wheels," he added.

Mammals ousted dinosaurs

If dinosaurs were still here, humans might not be, some scientists say, because mammals did not proliferate until after the dinosaurs vanished about 66 million years ago.

STATE IN BRIEF

Wichita Falls street signs being stolen

WICHITA FALLS (AP) — Wichita Falls authorities would like to put a stop to the thieves who are stealing the city's stop signs.

Jack Griffin, assistant director of the traffic and traffic signs for the North Texas city, said Wednesday that about 300 street signs have disappeared in the past month.

Officials are warning motorists that some residential intersections are no longer marked with stop signs.

Griffin said the thefts have depleted the city's inventory of replacement signs and 400 additional blank signs that have been ordered may not arrive until next week.

"These thefts have left some intersections without street signs," Griffin said. "So far we have been lucky that they are stealing from low-volume residential areas."

The city usually loses 15-20 signs a year to college and high school students, who use them for decorations in their rooms, he said.

Griffin, who said it will cost the city about $9,000 to replace the signs without included labor and installation supplies, said officials are not sure what is responsible for the rash of sign thefts.

But he said he assumes that some are stolen by people who steal aluminum and sell it to recycling centers.

Gator wanders onto farm

HAWKINS (AP) — Jewel McCalla served lemonade and refreshments to those who came to see her unusual visitor — an 11-foot-long alligator that created quite a stir when it ambled onto her father's farm.

Her husband, M.C. McCalla, discovered the giant reptile on Monday, lounging underneath an old swing suspended from a shade tree.

Vernon Phillips of Mineola, a licensed alligator handler, removed the alligator from the vacant farm and was treating it for what appeared to be a bullet wound, according to the Tyler Telegraph.

Before it was removed, the alligator became a local attraction.

"People were bringing their children by the truckloads to see the alligator," Mrs. McCalla said. "People were coming in their bonnets and with rollers in their hair because it was such a sight."

Texas Parks and Wildlife Game Warden Gary Dugan of Emery said alligators live in the area, but usually prefer to avoid humans.

The farm is six miles west of Hawkins, which is about 15 miles north of Tyler in East Texas.

Beaumont climber found

ESTES PARK, Colo. (AP) — A Baylor University coed missing overnight in Rocky Mountain National Park was found in good condition although cold, tired and hungry Wednesday morning by a search helicopter, authorities said.

Kristi Rodemacher, 18, of Beaumont, Texas, who had been a summer employee with the YMCA of the Rockies in nearby Estes Park, was part of a group of four people which set out to climb Chiefs Head Peak Tuesday, said park spokesman Jim Mack.

She was last seen Tuesday about 11 a.m. when her companions waved to her from the 13,579-foot summit. She had remained below because of a knee problem, Mack said.

When the climbers returned they could not find her. Park rangers began a search Tuesday afternoon, camping out in the rugged backcountry overnight and then resuming the search at dawn Wednesday.

The search helicopter found her at about 8 a.m. Wednesday, Mack said.

Two bodies identified

COMSTOCK, Minn. (AP) — Authorities have identified the bodies of two farm workers from Texas who were found dead in the wreckage of a car accident three miles east of Comstock, in western Minnesota.

The victims were Arturo Joel Cavazos, 41, and Jose Rodriguez, 42, both of Mission, Texas, the Clay County sheriff's office said.

A farmer working in the fields discovered the wreckage Tuesday in a drainage ditch under a bridge on County Road 52, Clay County sheriff's investigators said.

The wreck could not be easily seen from the road, the sheriff's department said. Authorities believe the accident occurred at least two days earlier, but within the past 72 hours of when the wreckage was found.

The sheriff's department said the car went off the road, fell off a small bridge, struck the bridge abutment and landed upside down in a drainage ditch.

Purse snatcher on the loose

ARLINGTON (AP) — Police warned women that a purse snatcher in Arlington probably is getting frustrated after running into hard luck in a couple of attempts at thievery.

"Tell them to watch their purses because this guy still hasn't gotten rich," Arlington police spokesman Dee Anderson told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram.

In incidents two hours apart on Monday, a purse snatcher grabbed a wallet from a women — only to have her snatch it back — then took a purse from a second woman, who said it contained no credit cards and less than a dollar in charge.

Police are seeking the theft suspect, who was described similarly by both women.

Lewis makes appointments

AUSTIN (AP) — House Speaker Gib Lewis on Wednesday made several appointments covering a variety of issues, ranging from criminal justice to Alzheimer's disease.

The appointments included:

■ Reps. Allen Hightower, D-Huntsville, and Barry Telford, D-De Kalb, to the Criminal Justice Policy Council.

■ Rep. Dudley Harrison, D-Sanderson, to another term on the Agricultural Diversification Board.

■ Rep. David Hudson, D-Tyler, to the Legislative Reference Library Board.

■ Charles R. Courtney of Austin to the State Preservation Board Permanent Advisory Committee.

■ Dr. Ed Lancaster of Grapevine and Janet Pacatte of Fort Worth to the Texas Council on Alzheimer's Disease and Related Disorders.

■ Rep. Jack Vowell, R-El Paso, to the Health and Human Services Coordinating Council.

Men held for non-support

AUSTIN (AP) — Three Collin County men who allegedly owe nearly $20,000 each in delinquent child support payments were arrested and charged with criminal non-support.

Attorney General Jim Mattox's office said Wednesday that the sheriff of Collin County, in north central Texas, arrested all three men at their homes after they were identified as "particularly delinquent" in making child support payments.

"These high-profile arrests are prodding absent parents to comply voluntarily with their court-ordered child support payments. The publicity convinces many parents that they'd better come in and pay on their own," Mattox said.

Wright says he enjoys quiet life

FORT WORTH (AP) — After 34 years of the hustle and bustle on Capitol Hill, Jim Wright is enjoying a slower pace.

Wright is going from Speaker of the House to speaker on the lecture circuit and isn't thinking about a return to politics.

"I feel good about myself and I feel good about life," Wright told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram.

"It's a more serene existence. It's not so hectic and harried...It's just a very nice feeling to have fewer deadlines," he said.

Wright said he plans to be a board member of at least two Texas-based corporations, which he declined to name.

He repeated his intention to stay out of the campaign to elect his replacement in the Fort Worth district he represented since 1952.

"I'm not taking a part in it," he said. "The people down there were kind enough to grant me their friendship and their favor for 34 years. I don't believe they expect me to try to tell them who to choose as my successor."

Wright, who resigned from Congress in June, said he has been spending time at Texas Christian University sorting through papers and mementoes of his political career. He said he plans to make the documents available to historians and researchers.

He showed some irritation when asked about former politicians who fall from grace and then capitalize on their public career.

"I don't feel that I've fallen from good graces," he said. "I've found that I'm warmly received wherever I go."

Wright told reporters he had decided to leave the House early last year, even before an ethics inquiry forced him to resign.

At the time, Wright was facing criticism for his handling of a proposed 50-percent pay raise for members of Congress and other top government officials.

"I had decided in January, I guess, that I wasn't going to seek re-election," Wright said. "The hubbub and all the misunderstanding and misinterpretation of my purpose with respect to the pay raise, I guess, was the final straw that told me I had served long enough."

Racist letters anger homeowners

WACO (AP) — A McLennan County civil rights leader says she is displeased by letters laced with racist statements that urged homeowners not to sell their houses to non-whites.

The letters, which blame minorities and homosexuals for many of the nation's problems, invite recipients to find out more about the Klan by sending $2.

"It saddens me to know that this type of organization is still functioning in our society today because it promotes hatred, and it is a historically violent organization," said Myrtle Thompson, president of the Waco-McLennan County chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. The chapter has about 500 members.

Several people have reported receiving the two-page unsigned letters, Thompson told the Waco Tribune-Herald Wednesday. She says she has received several calls from people outraged over the letter's content.

"I don't care if you know some good non-whites," the letter states. "The white race built this nation, and ever since we let the flood gates open to non-white immigrants and gave non-whites 'equal rights,' we have been declining."

"I'm not at all surprised by the letters," Thompson told The Associated Press. "I've been informed about newsletters and other letters that they've sent.

"The content of the letter is un-American and un-Christian. It just promotes ignorance. They're not dealing with facts. They're promoting ignorance."

Patricia Baker of Woodway told the Tribune-Herald that she found a letter in her mailbox when she returned home Sunday.

"I was so mad I couldn't see straight," Baker said. "I can't believe these people are still alive."

"My feeling was as if I had been molested or assaulted," Baker added. "It was like something very evil coming into the house, my home."

Jim Stewart, head of Jim Stewart Realtors Inc., said federal laws prohibit a seller from excluding minorities as prospective housing clients.

Notice of Effective Tax Rate
1989 Property Tax Rates in GREENWOOD IND. SCHOOL DISTRICT

This notice concerns 1989 property tax rates for GREENWOOD ISD. It presents information about three tax rates. Last year's tax rate is the actual rate the taxing unit used to determine property taxes last year. This year's effective tax rate would impose the same total taxes as last year if you compare properties taxed in both years. This year's rollback tax rate is the highest tax rate the taxing unit can set before taxpayers can start tax rollback procedures. In each case these rates are found by dividing the total amount of taxes by the tax base (the total value of taxable property) with adjustments as required by state law. The rates are given per $100 of property value.

| | |
|---|---|
| Last year's tax rate: | |
| Last year's operating taxes | $1,572,019.13 |
| Last year's debt taxes | $1,201,688.50 |
| Last year's total taxes | $2,773,707.63 |
| Last year's tax base | $170,769,555 |
| Last year's total tax rate | $ 1.615 /$100 |

| This year's adjusted tax base (after subtracting taxes on new property) | $160,972,900 |
| This year's effective tax rate | $ 1.7133 /$100 |
| 1.03 = maximum rate unless unit publishes notices and holds hearing | $ 1.7646 /$100 |

SCHEDULE A: Unencumbered Fund Balances

The following balances will probably be left in the unit's property tax accounts at the end of the fiscal year. These balances are not encumbered by debt obligation.

| Type of Property Tax Fund | Balance |
|---|---|
| Maintenance and Operation | $260,000.00 |
| Interest and Sinking Fund | 35,000.00 |

SCHEDULE B: 1989 Debt Service

The unit plans to pay the following amounts for long-term debts that are secured by property taxes. These amounts will be paid from property tax revenues (or additional sales tax revenues, if applicable).

Eating disorders rampant in UT swim program

AUSTIN (AP) — Former University of Texas swimming coach Richard Quick says he never encouraged his female swimmers to lose weight "in an unhealthy manner," but the school has diagnosed several of the athletes as suffering from eating disorders.

During the past 18 months, 12 UT female athletes, most of them swimmers, were diagnosed with a serious eating disorder, the Austin American-Statesman reported.

"I was aware of a few eating disorders on our team at the University of Texas," Quick said in Los Angeles Wednesday night in response to the report. "We did everything in our power to get them the kind of help they needed to handle the problem."

Two of the most common disorders are anorexia, where a person starves themselves, and bulimia, in which a person goes on an eating binge and then gets rid of the food through artificial means such as forcing themselves to vomit and taking laxatives.

Quick, who led the Lady Longhorns to five NCAA championships in six years, emphasized weight in training and competition and insisted that the swimmers remain under maximum weight limits. Those who failed to do so were required to participate in special workouts.

Quick is currently the women's swimming coach at Stanford.

Another 20 to 30 percent of the UT women athletes had shown symptoms of an eating disorder and from between 50 percent and 60 percent expressed tremendous concern about their weight, according to a survey of female athletes at UT.

Quick told the American-Statesman he was unaware of how serious the eating disorders had become while he was in Austin.

"It surprises me how many people have a problem in the population and how well it is hidden," he said.

Quick said at the beginning of each season he would meet individually with each swimmer and set a weight goal. "We never, ever encouraged them to lose weight in an unhealthy manner. We never wanted them to lose weight faster than it was medically safe because it wasn't beneficial to their training," he said.

Quick was with the Stanford swimming team at the U.S. Swimming Long Course Championships in Los Angeles Wednesday. He said there he doesn't think there's a similar problem with his Stanford swimmers.

"To my knowledge, we haven't had problems at Stanford. But I am not naive enough to think that I can say there's not one."

Stanford provides a nutritionist and psychologist for its athletes, he said.

Current and former UT swimmers said the pressure to meet Quick's guidelines was so intense that many routinely fasted, induced vomiting, used laxatives and diuretics, or exercised in addition to workouts. They did not want to be relegated to the group they called "The Fat Club."

Tiffany Cohen, who won two Olympic gold medals in 1984, said her fear of reporting to workouts overweight led her into the bulimic's cycle of binges and purges that finally put her in the hospital for nine weeks.

Rohrer faces fight for old job

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (AP) - About this time last year Jeff Rohrer was in a hospital bed being told he would never play again in the NFL.

The Dallas Cowboys' linebacker apparently wasn't paying close attention to his doctors' predictions.

Here he is in training camp delivering body-jarring tackles without a disc in his back.

"It (the disc) had deteriorated and slipped so bad that they just took the whole thing out," Rohrer said. "It had been hurting for three years. I was ready for it to go."

Rohrer has impressed the new Cowboys' coaching staff with his quick recovery.

"Physically he is at 100 per cent," coach Jimmy Johnson said of the 6-2, 222-pound six year veteran from Yale."In fact, he ran a 4.8 in the 40 which is pretty good for a linebacker.

"Now, it's must a matter of Jeff adjusting to our system. Jeff is in a battle to make this team because he didn't play a year ago. We also have a lot of linebackers."

Rohrer would like to make the team because he likes the aggressive style of defense the Cowboys will play under the new regime.

"It will be fun to line up and go after everybody," he said. "I love this type of football. The change couldn't be better for me. It's my kind of football."

Rohrer said he resisted any temptation to take it easy while he tests his back.

"I'm not messin' around," he said. "I'm not out here to play patty cake. I want my job back from Ron Burton."

Rohrer recalls the final hours before he operation as shot full of apprehension.

"My left leg was numb and my right leg wasn't working," Rohrer said. "Now, I've got all my feeling back. Still, at the time the doctors told me I'd be better off chasing women the rest of my life than running backs."

Rohrer is considered one of the more cerebral Cowboys' and quickly picked up the complicated flex defense of former coach Tom Landry.

"The flex was like being in a fist fight and doing Algebra at the same time," Rohrer said. "Sometimes we would switch defenses five times before the ball was snapped. In this defense we won't audible as much."

Now, Rohrer has to convince Johnson that he doesn't have a damaged linebacker on his hands.

"If they give me a strong chance I'll show 'em," he said.

Davis unfazed by touted rookie

SAN MARCOS (AP) — Bruce Davis could look at David Williams and consider the Florida rookie a threat.

But Davis, 33, the starting left tackle for the Houston Oilers, didn't feel such a twinge last April when the Oilers made Williams their No. 1 draft choice and spotted him for tackle duty.

"If you have been around the league awhile and you are secure in your own abilities, nobody else is a threat to you," Davis said.

"The fact is, we have no other backups and you had to fill that void with a quality player."

Davis said he too would have drafted an offensive lineman if he were conducting the Oiler draft.

"I didn't take it personally, I just go and do my job," Davis said. "They make the decisions and I don't have anything to do with that."

Davis, who has had to struggle for recognition since his rookie year, played a strong role in the Oilers' offensive line last season.

Davis reported to training camp overweight and was the butt of numerous fat jokes but when it came time to play, Davis started all 16 games and played one of his best seasons with the Oilers.

Oiler coaches said Davis had a Pro Bowl type season. But once again, Pro Bowl recognition escaped Davis' grasp.

"I've had four Pro Bowl years and for one reason or another I don't make the team," Davis said. "I think my level coming into the league may have had something to do with it."

The Oakland Raiders made Davis their 11th round selection in 1979 out of UCLA where he played his final two seasons in the offensive line.

"Being an 11th round draft choice hurts me," Davis said. "If a guy is a first or second round round draft choice and he does well, they all remember him. Consequently, I'm overlooked."

The Oilers acquired the durable Davis from the Raiders in 1987. Davis started 11 games for the Oilers that year but the player's strike ended his string of playing in 107 consecutive games.

Owners continue process

CHICAGO (AP) — A six-member search committee of NFL owners met behind closed doors for 10 hours on Wednesday to continue discussions on the selection of a commissioner to succeed Pete Rozelle.

The search committee is expected to come up with a list of candidates to be presented to all 28 NFL owners, according to NFL spokesman Jim Heffernan.

But participants in the meeting held at the O'Hare Hilton refused comment on the discussions held by the committee co-chaired by owners Wellington Mara of the New York Giants and Lamar Hunt of the Kansas City Chiefs.

Security on the floor where the owners were meeting was tight. Hotel telephone operators were instructed not to place calls to the meeting room.

Mike Lynn, general manager of the Minnesota Vikings who is one of four new members of the committee, said he would not discuss who was being interviewed and how long the selection process might take.

The Associated Press learned the meeting on Thursday would break up in the afternoon so members of the committee could attend Pro Football Hall of Fame ceremonies in Canton, Ohio, on Friday.

Congress tries to force expansion

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nearly two decades after their perennially woeful baseball namesake skipped town, the only senators left in Washington are still striking out in the major leagues.

In a semi-annual ritual that so far has produced nothing but vague promises and veiled threats, baseball's commissioner on Wednesday once again fended off congressional demands to expand major league baseball.

It was A. Bartlett Giamatti's second turn at confronting the special Senate task force representing the franchise hopes of at least a dozen cities.

And like his predecessors, he threw its score of members a gentlemanly curve and still shut them out.

"He stood there like a stone wall," Sen. John Warner, R-Va., said in mock disbelief.

The senators, joined by two House members at the closed-door meeting, pressed Giamatti for a commitment to expand the American League by at least two teams and the National League by at least four. The AL has 14 teams, the NL 12.

Giamatti would only repeat the commitment of NL owners to add two teams at some indefinite date in the 1990s.

"In our view, there are six or eight cities which are very strongly qualified" for a major league team, said Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., who has Phoenix uppermost on that list.

But Giamatti wouldn't budge.

Agents discuss new diamond league

NEW YORK (AP) — Representatives of the top six agents in baseball met Wednesday with those proposing to develop a new baseball league and listened to general outlines.

Richard Moss, former general counsel of the Major League Baseball Players Association and now a top agent, met with Randy Hendricks, Jim Bronner, Ron Shapiro, Tony Attanasio and representatives of Tom Reich. Those six agents control nearly half the players in the major leagues.

The meeting was called by Donald Fehr, executive director of the Major League Baseball Players Association and a supporter of the project.

Moss is the primary baseball person involved in the planning. The chief developer of the potential league is David Lefevre, a former minority owner of the Houston Astros and the Cleveland Indians and a partner in Reid & Priest, a New York law firm.

The new league is attempting to open in 1990 with between eight and 12 teams. So far, five or six potential owners have given the league $1 million each backed by $5 million letters of credit, sources familiar with the palnning say.

Moss and the other organizers want the agents to keep their minds open about signing their clients with the new league.

Several officials in major league baseball, all of whom asked not to be identified, said they believed the new league was intended to be used as pressure on major league owners

Will Pete come out smelling like a Rose?

Grimes

What does a guy do when he doesn't really have anything to say?

For starters, he can just shake his head and wonder what Pete Rose was thinking about when he admitted to placing football bets with a bookie. You have to wonder what's next in that mess, unless you're so sick of hearing about it that you've already pitched all your official Pete Rose memorabilia.

There's at least one local sportswriter who thinks Rose should be exoperated unless he bet on the Reds to lose. What difference does it make if a guy bets on his team to win — except for the fact that one must deal with illegal bookies.

Solution to Rose's legal problem: Hire on as manager of the Las Vegas Stars, Triple-A farm team of the San Diego Padres. There he can place all the legal bets he wants.

It appears that Rose is all but admitting "guilt" by resisting efforts at a quick judgment by Commissioner Bart Giamatti. If he's "innocent," why is he letting this drag on.

Here's another example of baseball magic: Name another sport in which so much in-season wheeling and dealing takes place. You can't hardly go through a season in which a pennant contender hasn't tried to help itself by swinging a deal for that one veteran to help them through the heat of the pennant race.

Sometimes it works (Johnny Mize, 1949 Yankees), sometimes it doesn't (Eddie Mathews, 1967 Tigers). Still, you can't help wondering: can Frank Viola make a difference in the National League East race. How about Jerry Reuss or Mookie Wilson in the AL East?

More baseball magic: Compare the going price on any Mickey Mantle trading card with the going price on a card for Jim Brown, Don Meredith or Bob Lilly.

Do trading cards even exist for the aforementioned oblong-ballers? My point exactly.

A group of North Carolinians are going to revive the football trading card concept sometime in the future. Wish 'em luck, they'll need it.

Maybe the Aussies have the right idea. Australians paid little heed to a recent group of Los Angeles Raiders visiting Down Under, while Aussie amateur baseball has advanced to the point that Craig Shipley has seen big league time with the Los Angeles Dodgers.

Think about it. If you grew up with footie (that's Australian rules football, mate) and rugby, would you go for something in which the fans can't even see the players' faces?

Still, there's nowhere else I'd rather be on a West Texas Friday night that a small town football game. There's a certain ambience to the proceedings that makes it special. The band, the cheerleaders, the frantic moms and dads in the stands...maybe even the "action" on the field.

At least there's a rule about taking too much time between plays in American football. What would big league pitchers do if a balk was called every time a pitcher took too long between throws? We wouldn't have time to go for hot dogs between pitches, for crying out loud.

O's head home with win

Finally, the Orioles are headed in the right direction. Back to Baltimore with a one-game winning streak.

The Orioles put a perfect ending to a pathetic road swing, rallying to beat the Boston Red Sox 9-8 Wednesday night and stay in first place in the American League East.

Baltimore finished 2-13 on its trip to Oakland, Kansas City, Minnesota and Fenway Park. Starting Friday, the Orioles play 17 of their next 20 games at home. Baltimore is 29-21 at Memorial Stadium, the best home record in the division.

Boston could have moved into first place by two percentage points with a victory. Instead, the Orioles opened a two-game lead and remained on top for the 70th straight day.

Trailing 6-0 and held to four hits through five innings, the Orioles erupted for a season-high 17 hits. Baltimore stopped its five-game losing skid and ended Boston's five-game winning streak.

"Mentally, this was probably the biggest win we've had all year. We really needed this as a ball team," Manager Frank Robinson said. "You just kept feeling that something was going to happen because this has been going on for so long we were due for something."

Mickey Tettleton's 22nd homer started Baltimore's three-run sixth. Randy Milligan's three-run homer made it 6-all in the seventh and Cal Ripken's RBI double keyed a three-run eighth.

Nick Esasky, who had already tripled and doubled, hit a two-run homer in the bottom of the ninth against Mark Williamson, 8-3. But Mark Thurmond relieved for the final out and his third save.

"This can get us on a roll and get us back to playing the kind of ball we're used to playing," Robinson said. "This was just the kind of game we were looking for."

Billy Ripken had his first four-hit game and brother Cal, Keith Moreland and Craig Worthington each got three hits. Wade Boggs had his fifth four-hit game of the season for Boston.

"The slump could be over," Cal Ripken said. "I hope that we'll be able to look back at this as a big game."

Tied at 6, Phil Bradley drew a one-out walk from rookie Eric Hetzel, 1-2, in the eighth and scored on Cal Ripken's double. Tettleton and Moreland walked, Milligan hit a sacrifice fly off Mike Smithson and Worthington hit a run-scoring single.

"This road trip took some of the wind out of us, but this gives us a big lift," Milligan said. "We needed to prove we could come back against a good team. Our confidence level is really up now."

Chicago White Sox baserunner Carlos Martinez dives back to first base Wednesday. He later stole second.

Angels 7, Mariners 0

Bert Blyleven pitched his 58th career shutout, tied for ninth place on the all-time list, and won his seventh consecutive decision as California won at Seattle.

Blyleven, 11-2, has not lost in 13 starts since May 20. He is 14-4 lifetime against the Mariners, including six shutouts, and overall is 265-228 in his 20-year career.

Tony Armas hit a home run and two doubles for the Angels. Bill Schroeder and Jack Howell also homered. Jerry Reed, 3-6, took the loss.

Athletics 2, White Sox 0

Storm Davis and two relievers stretched Oakland's scoreless streak to 21 innings as the host Athletics won their fourth straight game.

The Athletics got their 12th shutout, their most since pitching 13 in 1976. Chicago has lost three straight games and six of seven.

Davis, 10-5, gave up five hits in five innings to join Dave Stewart, Mike Moore and Bob Welch on the only staff with four 10-game winners.

Gene Nelson pitched 2 2-3 innings and Rick Honeycutt got four outs for his 12th save.

Jose Canseco hit an RBI single in the first inning off Melido Perez, 7-12. Perez balked home a run in the fifth.

Indians 1, Brewers 0

In Milwaukee, Tom Candiotti outdueled Chris Bosio and Jerry Browne homered in the third inning as Cleveland ended a four-game losing streak.

Candiotti, 10-6, won his third consecutive decision. He gave up six hits in eight innings and Jesse Orosco finished for his second save.

Bosio, 12-7, allowed six hits and struck out nine in his sixth complete game. Browne's third home run of the season came with two outs.

Blue Jays 8, Royals 0

John Cerutti pitched a two-hitter and recent New York Mets Lee Mazzilli and Mookie Wilson sparked the Blue Jays before 48,765 fans, the largest crowd ever in Toronto.

Cerutti, 8-5, did not allow a hit until George Brett doubled with one out in the seventh. Cerutti pitched his second major-league shutout, the other coming in 1986.

Mark Gubicza fell to 9-9 as Kansas City was shut out for a league-high 12th time.

Mazzilli went 3-for-3 with a home run and two walks. He drove in two runs and scored twice. Wilson was 2-for-5 with a double. Fred McGriff hit his league-leading 28th home run.

Yankees 7, Twins 6
Twins 4, Yankees 3

Kirby Puckett went 5-for-10 in the doubleheader and doubled home the go-ahead run in the 10th inning of the second game that gave Minnesota a split.

In the opener, rookie Bob Geren's homer keyed a five-run rally in the seventh inning that gave New York the lead.

Tigers 6, Rangers 4

Rookie Kevin Ritz became the first Detroit pitcher in seven weeks to win consecutive starts, beating Texas at Tiger Stadium.

Ritz, 2-1, gave up seven hits and struck out nine in his first major-league complete game. The Tigers had not had a complete game victory since May 23.

The last Detroit pitcher to win two straight starts was Frank Tanana on June 14 and June 19.

Gary Ward hit a three-run homer in the first inning against Mike Jeffcoat, 5-4. Mike Heath added a two-run homer for the Tigers.

Viola finds Met uniform a fine fit

Associated Press

The new uniform was a perfect fit for Frank Viola, and so was the ending of his first game with the New York Mets.

Viola won his debut with New York on Wednesday night when the Mets rallied for three runs in the ninth inning off relief ace Todd Worrell to beat the St. Louis Cardinals 4-3 at Busch Stadium.

"I felt very comfortable," Viola said. "When I put that uniform on, it felt part of me. I grew up a Met fan so the adjustment wasn't tough."

Until a trade Monday night, Viola had spent his entire career with the Minnesota Twins. He helped them win the World Series in 1987 and last season won the American League Cy Young Award with a 24-7 record.

Against St. Louis, Viola allowed four hits and two runs in eight innings. He struck out two and walked five.

One of his teammates on the 1987 Twins, outfielder Tom Brunansky, is now a member of the Cardinals.

"Frankie doesn't throw as hard as he did when we first came up, but he doesn't have to throw that hard when he puts the ball where he wants to," Brunansky said.

With two outs in the ninth and the Cardinals leading 2-1, Keith Hernandez delivered a pinch double off Worrell that was misplayed by left fielder Vince Coleman.

"It looked to me like Vince broke the wrong way," Cardinals manager Whitey Herzog said. "A cardinal rule is you don't let any hit get behind you unless it's going over the fence."

Mark Carreon pinch-ran for Hernandez and Juan Samuel doubled in the tying run.

The Cardinals walked Howard Johnson and Darryl Strawberry intentionally to load the bases and Kevin McReynolds, who hit for the cycle on Tuesday, broke the tie with a two-run single.

"What a way to welcome Viola to the National League," said Mets manager Davey Johnson, whose team is only 3-19 in one-run decisions on the road. "That's baseball at its finest right there."

Worrell, 1-3, fell to 2-5 lifetime against the Mets with a career 5.10 earned-run average.

Dodgers 7, Giants 4

First-place San Francisco lost two starting pitchers and fell to Los Angeles in Tommy Lasorda's 2,000th game as manager of the Dodgers. With the victory, Lasorda improved his lifetime record to 1,070-930.

Earlier in the day, the Giants placed 13-game winner Rick Reuschel on the 15-day disabled list with a strained right groin and starter Atlee Hammaker left the game against the Dodgers with a sprained left knee joint in the top of the third inning. Afterwards, the Giants placed Hammaker on the 21-day DL.

Expos 3, Pirates 1

Pascual Perez allowed one run in eight innings and Spike Owen hit a two-run homer as Montreal beat Pittsburgh at Three Rivers Stadium to take a three-game lead over Chicago in the NL East. It was the Pirates' sixth straight loss.

Montreal has won the first three games of the four-game series, giving the Expos 10 victories in their last 14 games and a 14-6 record since the All-Star Game.

Perez, 6-10, has been equally successful since the July 11 All-Star Game. After winning just four of his first 13 decisions, Perez is 2-1 and has allowed only four earned runs in 31 1-3 innings since the All-Star Game.

Phillies 6, Cubs 0

Ken Howell pitched a three-hitter for his first major-league complete game and Dickie Thon hit two homers and drove in three runs, leading Philadelphia past Chicago at Veterans Stadium.

Howell, a reliever with Los Angeles for parts of four seasons before coming to the Phillies this year, struck out nine and walked one.

Thon had hit only 34 major-league homers in eight previous seasons. This was the fourth time in his career, the last six years ago, that he had two in one game.

Scott Sanderson, 9-7, lasted 2 1-3 innings for Chicago, allowing four hits and five runs.

Reds 5, Astros 2

Ron Robinson, who spent more than a year on the disabled list, won for the first time this season and rookie Joe Oliver had a two-run single as struggling Cincinnati beat Houston at Riverfront Stadium. It was only the Reds' ninth victory in their last 29 games.

Robinson, 1-1, was making only his fifth appearance since returning from elbow surgery. The injury kept him out from June 28 of last year until July 7. He pitched 5 2-3 innings and allowed John Franco got his 25th save.

The Reds snapped a scoreless tie in the fourth with three runs off left-hander Jim Deshaies, 10-5.

Padres 9, Braves 7

Jack Clark, who has struggled most of the season, had his first four-hit game of the year, drove in four runs and capped a five-run seventh inning with a three-run homer, leading visiting San Diego past Atlanta. It was Clark's first four-RBI game since August 1987.

Clark entered the game hitting .236, but his 4-for-5 effort increased his average to .245 with 13 homers and 56 RBIs.

The victory went to Bruce Hurst, 10-8, who gave up four hits in six innings. Mark Davis pitched the final 1 2-3 innings for his 27th save in 30 opportunities.

Lynn belongs to a dissenting faction of 11 team owners who blocked the nomination of New Orleans Saints general manager Jim Finks last month as Rozelle's successor. Finks received 16 votes in the July 6 balloting, three short of the 19 needed to become commissioner.

The old search committee was disbanded after the July meeting, and a new committee was formed on July 19 by the owners to bring together two members of each of the opposing factions as well as two neutral owners.

Finks was the only candidate proposed by the original search committee. Owners belonging to the so-called "Chicago 11" said they did not like the way the search for Rozelle's successor had been conducted.

Finks, contacted Wednesday by telephone at the Saints' training camp in LaCrosse, Wis., said, "I have nothing to say about the situation."

He refused to say whether he planned to come to Chicago on Thursday to be interviewed by the new committee.

Besides Finks, the other candidates reportedly under consideration are former Democratic national chairman Paul Kirk; the NFL's Washington counsel Paul Tagliabue; Robert Mulcahy, executive director of the New Jersey Sports and Exhibition Authority, and former NFL lineman Willie Davis.

Tagliabue was reportedly interviewed on Wednesday.

Both Kirk and Davis had made reservations to stay at the hotel overnight Wednesday, and were expected to be among those interviewed Thursday.

The other members of the search committee are Seattle Seahawks owner Ken Behring, Los Angeles Raiders owner Al Davis and Washington Redskins owner Jack Kent Cooke.

EXPAND

"It is a fact that two is not six. It is not eight. It is not 10," he told reporters after the meeting. "Our disagreement is about the pace and about the number."

Several senators, including Democrat Timothy Wirth of Colorado, chairman of the Senate Task Force on the Expansion of Major League Baseball, alluded to the possibility that Congress could repeal baseball's special exemption from antitrust law if owners don't respond swiftly to expansion demands.

That threat has often been aired, but never enacted by members whose constituents don't live in prospective expansion cities.

In a letter presented to Giamatti at the meeting, Wirth said the task force "is preparing to pursue all available avenues to correct the inequities of the existing expansion procedure."

"Though we would prefer to develop a mutually satisfactory expansion plan with baseball, it is time to move this process out of discussions and into action," Wirth said.

TEXAS

"It bothered me because I am a perfectionist. Richard knew that and he knew who (weight) really affected. He played on that; he played on people's neuroses. He really bothered me," said Ms. Cohen, who now lives in El Toro, Calif.

Another former UT swimmer, Kim Rodenbaugh, a three-time all-American, spent six months in counseling for her eating disorders.

OILERS

Davis was a defensive lineman until his junior year at UCLA when a call went out for offensive linemen.

An injury meant Davis actually logged only about one year at his new position, hence his low draft status.

With Art Shell entrenched in the offensive line, the Raiders could make a project out of Davis.

Jackson Mets ponder move to Austin area

ROUND ROCK (AP) — The owner of the New York Mets' Double-A affiliate in Jackson, Miss., plans to meet with Round Rock officials to discuss the city's possible future as home for his team or another Texas League franchise.

Jackson owner Conn Moloney is vice president of the Texas League and chairman of its expansion committee.

Moloney said he would be in Round Rock within 10 days to scout the area as a site for either an expansion team or possible new home for his Mets.

More than two months ago, officials in the city about 20 miles north of Austin said they hoped to attract a minor league team.

About two weeks ago, an independent accounting firm hired by the city reported in a feasibility study that the Travis-Williamson county area would be a good region to support a Class Double-A team.

"Everyone I've talked to from the Texas League is favorable to the atmosphere in Round Rock," Moloney said.

"I think it would be a good place for an expansion franchise or an existing one looking to move," he added.

Major league baseball wants to expand by two teams, but no growth is expected until at least 1991, officials say. Each new major league team would create one Triple-A and one Double-A franchise.

City Manager Bob Bennett said attracting the Jackson team might be better than having an expansion team.

"The Mets are one of the best organizations in baseball. In order to build a stadium, we have to go to the voters for approval. Having a franchise like the Mets would help sell it," he said.

Moloney said he plans to keep his team in Jackson at least through the 1991 season and would like to stay permanently if parking problems can be solved.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 4, 1989

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Excellent money-making opportunities present themselves. Choose carefully! It may be time to reveal an unsuspected secret to your family or romantic partner. Expect a fairly quiet period in your career once the summer winds down. Be sure what you do is for love as well as money. Your good-natured manner goes over well in the workplace. You make valuable allies wherever you go.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: Mormon leader Ezra Taft Benson, poet Percy Bysshe Shelley, auto racer Joe Leonard, hockey great Maurice Richard, former Redskins running back John Riggins, conductor William Schuman, actor Kristoffer Tabori, celebrity biographer Kitty Kelley.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Lighten the mood at a business lunch and you will get the financial results you want. Forgo routine social plans for something more adventurous. Sharing fun times with partner strengthens your relationship.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Do not expect to make giant strides overnight. You will gain momentum as you go along. A recent self-improvement program could pay off handsomely now. Someone influential sees you in a new light.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You are bubbling over with conversation today. Be careful not to spread idle gossip. Welcome visitors, host a party or plan a reunion. Longtime friends need to know that you still care.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): It is time to bring an emotional issue to a head. Cut your ties with negative people. You have a good chance of meeting the ideal partner this month. Stay on your toes!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You are likely to hold center stage at an office party or school meeting. Go slow if you hear from a long-absent love. You do not want to make the same mistake twice.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You tend to get ahead of yourself and take too many chances. Slow down and assess a situation before rushing in. Others admire your courage, but may not follow your lead.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): New financial opportunities merit close scrutiny. Avoid putting all your eggs into one basket. Go out of your way to please others this evening. Create a special surprise. Romance thrives on consideration.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): The opposite sex could find you virtually irresistible now. Expand your business connections by using the telephone more. Someone who has seemed indifferent in the past suddenly shows real interest.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Work tensions could get you down if you do not get more rest. Find a hobby that helps you relax. Loved ones will be more understanding if you explain your intentions in advance.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Travel could be in store for you and your partner. Share any worries with someone who is truly sympathetic. A change of scenery will help you recharge your batteries. Show your romantic side.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Getting outdoors alone will let you clear the cobwebs from your mind. Seek expert advice before making an important financial decision. Travel holds even more appeal than usual. Contact friends living at a distance.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Try to finish your work early today. Weekend pleasures beckon. Attending a formal event could help your career. Wear something elegant. Dine out or in with the love of your life.

Dear Charlie:

One of my dearest possessions is a leather card case given to me by my mother. It is inscribed with an anonymous quotation: "Life ain't holdin' the good cards. It's playin' a bad hand well!" I was reminded of this at a rubber bridge game in New York arranged for me by Tannah Hirsch. In that game, I held the South cards and he was North.

We reached three no trump on a fairly normal auction. Had East seen my card case, I would not have made my contract. West made the normal lead of the queen of hearts, won perforce in dummy. I had to knock out West's entry, but did not have a clue which black suit to attack. Eventually, I decided to lead a club.

Had East put his bad hand to good use, he would have risen with the ace of clubs and returned a heart, and the defense would have collected five tricks before I had my nine. But the defender played low and my queen won. As a result, I decided West's entry was in spades, so I shifted the offense to that suit. West took the ace and persevered with a heart, but now it needed only routine technique to land the contract.

I ducked the jack of hearts, forcing West to abandon the suit. East won the club shift and reverted to hearts, but it was too late. I rose with the king and had nine tricks. Indeed, as the play developed, West discarded two diamonds, so I ended up with an overtrick.

As ever,
Omar

'Lonesome Dove' flies off with most Emmy nominations; 'L.A. Law' second

UNIVERSAL CITY, Calif. (AP) — The CBS miniseries "Lonesome Dove" dominated television nominations for Emmy Awards today, closely followed by NBC's "L.A. Law" and the ABC miniseries "War and Remembrance."

"Lonesome Dove," based on the Pulitzer Prize-winning Western novel by Larry McMurtry, received 18 nominations, including best miniseries and acting nods to Tommy Lee Jones, Robert Duvall, Diane Lane, Anjelica Huston, Danny Glover and Glenne Headly. The show also won two directing and three writing nominations.

Perhaps the biggest surprise was the omission of Roseanne Barr, star of the ABC hit series "Roseanne," in the comedy actress category.

"Murphy Brown" got the only other writing nomination.

Other nominees for best miniseries were NBC's "I Know My First Name is Steven," PBS' "A Perfect Spy" and ABC's "The Women of Brewster Place."

CBS' "Beauty and the Beast," ABC's "China Beach," ABC's "thirtysomething" and CBS' "Wiseguy" were nominees as best drama series along with "L.A. Law."

Nominated as best lead actor in a comedy series along with Savage were Ted Danson for NBC's "Cheers," Richard Mulligan for NBC's "Empty Nest," Michael J. Fox for NBC's "Family Ties" and John Goodman for ABC's "Roseanne."

FORT WORTH (AP) — Van Cliburn, who recently completed a triumphant tour of Moscow, got an official Texas-size welcome home Wednesday as he received the first platinum disc awarded to a classical pianist.

About 2,000 fans in Fort Worth witnessed the award presentation by RCA records. The platinum disc recognizes the sale of more than 1 million copies of his 1958 recording of Tchaikovsky's First Piano Concerto with conductor Kiril Kondrashin and the RCA Symphony. Cliburn received the gold disc honoring the sale of more than 500,000 units of Cliburn's My Favorite Chopinalbum.

The Guinness Book of World Records reports that Cliburn's album passed 2 million in sales in 1967 and 2.5 million copies in 1970.

NEW YORK (AP) — No sooner had Michael J. Fox finished playing a son on the last episode of the sitcom "Family Ties" than he became a father in real life.

Fox

"The last two months have been just wild," he told US magazine on the set of "Back to the Future, Part II" after the May 30 birth of Sam Michael Fox.

The 28-year-old Fox said he's "a pretty soft touch right now."

"I don't know what I'm saying because I'm still screwed up — in a really good way," he said in the magazine's Aug. 21 issue.

After Fox completes work on Brian DePalma's Vietnam drama, "Casualties of War," and several other projects, he'll take a break with his son and his wife, actress Tracy Pollan, at their 100-acre property in South Woodstock, Vt.

Researchers use liquid to help premature baby breathe

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — A new respiration technique that uses a liquid to deliver oxygen to a patient's lungs could save premature babies and affect the abortion debate, researchers said.

In May, a baby born after 28 weeks of gestation and within an hour or two of death from lung damage was kept alive 19 hours when doctors filled the infant's lungs with perfluorocarbon, an oxygen-carrying liquid, said Dr. Thomas Shaffer, a Temple University physiologist and pediatrician who led the team.

He and his colleagues are on call to attempt the procedure again when a candidate becomes available, Shaffer said.

The baby girl, born two months premature and weighing just under 2 pounds, was the first human to undergo the procedure, according to Dr. Michael Harrison, a pediatric surgeon at the University of California San Francisico. Harrison was not involved in the research in Philadelphia.

If the procedure could be shown to shorten the time a fetus is dependent on its mother, the technology could affect the abortion debate in the country, said Arthur Caplan, director of the Center for Biomedical Ethics at the University of Minnesota in Minneapolis.

In its controversial decision July 3, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled states may require doctors to determine through various tests whether a fetus at least 20 weeks old is capable of surviving outside the womb. Many states prohibit aborting a viable fetus, but the court's 1973 decision making abortion legal drew the viability line at 24 weeks.

Generally, premature babies delivered 23 to 24 weeks from conception stand a chance of surviving without major disabilities, researchers said.

If the liquid ventilation technique is successful, it could push that time period back to 20 weeks, Shaffer said.

However, it is still unclear whether organs other than the lungs would be developed enough to sustain life at 20 weeks, he said.

Aside from premature babies, the procedure holds promise for any kind of situation where a patient's lungs cannot be ventilated with gas, Shaffer said.

Dr. Leland C. Clark, a chemist at Children's Hospital Medical Center in Cincinnati who first discovered the technique, said perfluorocarbon acts as a liquid Teflon to gently separate parts of the lung that stick together after a collapse in a premature baby.

In adults, the body produces surfactant, which prevents the inside of a lung from sticking to itself. But in premature babies who have not yet developed surfactant or in babies who lack the material, normal ventilation runs the risk of bursting a lung or damaging it, he said.

The infant, whose lungs had been damaged by two weeks of conventional ventilation and had partially collapsed, was close to death May 10 when the experiment was performed, Shaffer said.

About a half ounce of perfluorocarbon, a liquid that carries oxygen, was poured into the baby's lungs through her trachea, he said.

Diabetics find needle disposal tricky

BOSTON (AP) — Girls at a camp for diabetics once tossed used syringes into empty milk containers that went to the dump. But fear of AIDS has changed that, and the federal government is considering how millions of other American diabetics should dispose of their needles.

"It's been a nightmare," said Shelley Yeager, director of the Clara Barton camp at Oxford in central Massachusetts. "We've really had to be very careful."

About 115 campers and counselors give themselves injections, some as often as four times a day, Yeager said. In addition, the camp uses about 600 lancets daily to test campers' blood sugar.

There are an estimated 11 million diabetics nationwide, of whom about 2.5 million give themselves insulin shots each day, said Richard Kahn, chief scientific and medical officer for the American Diabetes Association in Alexandria, Va.

The Environmental Protection Agency is working on a brochure advising diabetics of the best way to dispose of needles, said Robin Woods, a spokeswoman for the agency in Washington, D.C.

It will suggest that diabetics place "sharps" — the needle end of a syringe — in a hard plastic or metal container like a coffee can before throwing it in the trash, Woods said.

The association recommends people dispose of the needle and syringe "in a way that it can't be used again," Kahn said.

Acquired immune deficiency syndrome has heightened concern about medical waste because the disease can be transmitted through contaminated hypodermic needles, AIDS, which attacks the body's immune system, also can be transmitted through sexual contact.

The EPA drew up new rules on how hospitals dispose of medical waste after many U.S. beaches were fouled last summer.

The Massachusetts Department of Public Health has adopted new regulations on the disposal of infectious waste that take effect next week, but like the federal rules, they don't apply to household waste, said the department's Al Comproni.

The regulations require hospitals, doctors, funeral parlors and other generators of infectious waste to either ship used needles to certified waste disposal sites or sterilize them and grind them for disposal in a solid waste landfill.

The Clara Barton camp started changing its disposal methods about two years ago as AIDS became a concern, Yeager said.

All needles now are thrown in special plastic medical waste containers placed around the camp. This year, the camp built a shed on the soccer field just to house the disposable containers. Doctors pick them up periodically and take them back to a hospital where they are destroyed, Yeager said.

The Becton Dickinson Co. of Franklin Lakes, N.J., donates the needle containers, worth about $2 each. The camp uses about 20 containers a week, Yeager said.

Some companies are considering offering disposal services to individual diabetics.

Becton Dickinson sells needle containers to doctors and hospitals but may develop a container for home use, said Linda Schmitt, an assistant product manager.

Medical Waste Disposal Co. of Randolph is preparing to offer a home needle pickup service, said Debra Bornstein, a company official. It plans to charge $20 for door-to-door pickup and disposal.

Researcher says new drug promising for transplants

PITTSBURGH (AP) — An experimental drug that boosts rather than suppresses the immune system offers new hope in preventing rejection of transplanted human organs, a researcher said.

"If our initial hopes are proven, we are nearing a fundamental turning point in being able to keep transplant patients healthier and alive longer," said Dr. Randall Morris, director of the Laboratory for Transplantation Immunology at Stanford University.

Morris reported results of his early research on rodents to delegates at the triennial International Congress on Immunology in West Berlin today.

Morris is testing the use of lectins, proteins derived from plant tissue, to prevent rejection by stepping up the immune system rather than depressing it. He said lectins promote growth of certain white blood cells that help curtail rejection.

In experiments at Stanford, transplanted hearts in rats remained free of rejection for more than two years with no side effects after 50 days of lectin treatment, Morris said.

Morris, in an earlier telephone interview, said lectins will require extensive further testing, but may someday supplement and reduce the need for large does of cyclosporin, a potent drug now used to prevent transplant rejection by depressing the immune system.

"The central dogma has been that if you stimulate the immune system, that's bad," he said. "We're developing a new dogma that says it's possible to use the immune system as an ally."

Two other transplant experts — Dr. Thomas Starzl at the University of Pittsburgh and Dr. Robert Corry, chairman of surgery at the University of Iowa and president of the United Network for Organ Sharing — said the use of lectins is virtually untested elsewhere.

"The issue and the hope is that it would be less toxic than cyclosporin and at the same time more effective," Corry said.

Since human organ transplants began with kidneys about 35 years ago, doctors have been unable to prevent the rejection of transplanted organs without compromising the immune system.

Cyclosporin, derived from a soil fungus, helps prevent rejection by keeping white blood cells that attack transplanted organs from increasing in number. But the daily oral doses can lead to kidney failure and high blood pressure.

Study: Working women sleep less

EAST LANSING, Mich. (AP) — Working women sleep about 25 minutes less per night than their male counterparts, though the average woman sleeps slightly longer than the average man, researchers said Tuesday.

"Working women really take it in the neck. They sleep less," said Daniel Hamermesh, professor of economics at Michigan State University and one of the authors.

"One possible explanation is that a woman who works still has to maintain a lot of household duties," said Jeff Biddle, assistant professor of economics at the school.

"They aren't spending much less time doing those things, and their husbands aren't sharing chores with them, so the time has to come from somewhere and often it comes from sleep time."

Mothers of children less than 3 years old get less sleep than the average person, but being parents to children younger than 3 doesn't cut into the amount of sleep fathers get, Hamermesh said.

The study of the sleep habits of 1,500 people also found that people who work sleep less than people who don't work and that for every extra hour worked, a person sleeps 15 minutes less.

Economic gauge points to 'sluggish'

Leading indicators down fourth consecutive time

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government said today that its chief economic forecasting gauge fell in June for the fourth time in five months, providing fresh evidence that the U.S. economy is entering a period of sluggish growth.

The Commerce Department's Index of Leading Economic Indicators dipped 0.1 percent in June. While the amount of the decline was small, the weakness was widespread, with seven of the index's 11 individual indicators flashing negative signals.

The small decline had been expected by analysts, who are debating whether the economy's slowdown will worsen into a recession.

Traditionally, the signal for an economic downturn has been three consecutive monthly declines in the leading index. The index, however, rose in April, breaking the string of declines.

The forecasting gauge dropped in February and March, then rose 0.6 percent in April before plunging 1.3 percent in May. That was the biggest one-month setback since late 1987 following the stock market crash in October of that year.

Economists note that the index is not infallible. The index declined for five consecutive months in late 1987 and early 1988. But no recession followed and, in fact, economic growth accelerated to its fastest pace in four years.

Some forecasters, however, now believe the economy is on the verge of a recession, even if the index has not yet dropped for three consecutive months.

"We are seeing a mild recession developing in the United States right now," said Bruce Steinberg, an economist with the New York brokerage firm of Merrill Lynch.

Steinberg said he believed forthcoming data would show that the economy went into a slump in the current July-September quarter and the downturn will last until January.

But more optimistic forecasters believe the economy, while entering a sluggish growth period, will be able to scrap by without an outright recession, defined as at least two consecutive negative quarters for the gross national product.

The Bush administration is even more optimistic, forecasting that GNP growth, which weakened to an annual rate of 1.7 percent in the April-June quarter, will rebound in the second half of the year.

The index was held back in June by declines in seven of its 11 components.

The biggest drag came from a decline in prices for raw materials. While that is good for the economy in that it signals lower inflationary pressures, it is considered a negative for the leading indicators because it can signal declining demand.

Other negative forces in June were a rise in weekly unemployment claims, a drop in building permits, a change in business delivery times, a drop in the length of the average work week, a fall in orders for consumer goods and weakness in the number of unfilled orders.

Oil prices remain stable

From Staff and Wire Reports

Oil futures prices were flat after bouncing back Wednesday.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, September contracts for West Texas Intermediate were at $18.28, the same level it closed at Wednesday. The contract rose 25 cents after falling 28 cents Tuesday.

Contracts for later delivery were mixed.

Among refined oil products traded on the exchange, unleaded gasoline for September delivery fell 0.58 cent to 50.85 cents a gallon, while future contracts were mixed.

Domestic heating oil for September rose 0.34 cent to 49.54 cents a gallon and other contract months were mostly higher.

The market opened lower mainly on a report showing that oil and gasoline inventories are continuing to rise.

The American Petroleum Institute said supplies of crude oil, gasoline and heating oil increased in the week ended July 28. The API report was released after the close of trading on Tuesday.

Crude oil inventories rose 882,000 barrels to 331.4 million barrels from the previous week, while gasoline stocks increased by 4.6 million barrels to 225.96 million and heating oil rose by 2.1 million to 111.5 million barrels, the report said.

On a yearly basis, however, crude oil stocks were down 16.9 million barrels from the same time last year and heating oil was off 6.8 million barrels. Gasoline inventories, however, were 16.3 million barrels higher.

Later in the day, traders said oil prices recovered, partly on technical factors.

Analysts said nervousness about the U.S. hostage situation in the Middle East also helped boost prices. Traders have attributed some price strength in recent days to investor concern that political events involving U.S. hostages could disrupt oil shipments from the Middle East.

Justice indicts 46 commodity traders

N.Y. Times News Service

CHICAGO — The Justice Department announced Wednesday the indictment of 46 commodities brokers and traders, accusing them of repeatedly defrauding customers by stealing and skimming investors' profits.

The indictments grew out of a two-year investigation of the nation's two largest commodities exchanges, the Chicago Board of Trade and the Chicago Mercantile Exchange.

As part of the inquiry, agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation infiltrated trading floors and secretly recorded members' conversations.

"We are talking about hundreds of customers and thousands of trades," said Anton R. Valukas, the U.S. attorney for the Northern District of Illinois, who supervised the FBI's undercover investigation. "We are not talking about technical violations. It can be fairly described as wide-ranging activity."

There are more than 6,000 brokers and traders at the two exchanges.

Valukas declined to say how much money investors had lost because of the illegal trading, but he called the amount "significant."

Valukas said that both individual and institutional investors had been cheated and that a number of defendants had agreed to work with prosecutors in exchange for leniency.

"We do have substantial cooperation," Valukas said.

None of the 46 were arrested Wednesday. Valukas said they would have 10 days to surrender.

Attorney General Dick Thornburgh said the exchange members had been charged with a wide range of offenses, including racketeering, mail fraud, commodities fraud, filing false tax returns, lying to federal

Orbital engine plant opening near Detroit

N.Y. Times News Service

DEARBORN, Mich. — The founder of Australia's Orbital Engine Co. said Wednesday that his concern would lease a vacant plant from the General Motors Corp. to manufacture a compact, fuel-efficient engine.

Ralph T. Sarich, who also is Orbital's manager, said the plant is in Tecumseh, about 50 miles southwest of Detroit.

At one time, the plant had produced seat covers. Employment will reach about 700 by 1992, when production of engines for marine use will begin.

Sarich, who first announced the plan last week, said six companies in Detroit and overseas were interested in participating in the $250 million investment. He said Orbital was confident it couldsell 250,000 engines a year.

Gov. James Blanchard of Michigan said the state had agreed to provide about $8 million in incentives and that it would also invest $5 million in venture capital.

Orbital's engine is a refinement of a design that uses two piston strokes to develop power, rather than the four strokes of conventional engines.

It is able to generate as much power as a conventional engine more than twice as large and heavy.

Stocks climb 16.3 points

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market turned upward Wednesday, recovering much of its losses in the previous session.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, down 19.54 on Tuesday, rebounded 16.32 points to 2,657.44.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by about 5 to 4 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 866 up, 680 down and 460 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to 181.76 million shares, down from 225.28 million Tuesday. Nationwide, consolidated volume in NYSElisted issues, including trades in those stocks on regional exchanges and in the over-thecounter market, totaled 217.63 million shares.

The market's unsettled showing Tuesday was attributed partly to concern that the slowing of the economy might lead to something worse than the "soft landing" many economists have been predicting.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Bush threatens to veto S&L bailout

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush today threatened to veto the $157 billion bailout of the savings and loan industry nearing a final vote in Congress unless it is changed to exclude the cost from the federal deficit.

Bush sent his veto warning to congressional leaders a few hours before the House was scheduled to vote on the plan, which would close or merge hundreds of insolvent S&Ls.

The Senate was expected to vote on the same proposal later today, assuming the House approved it.

Bush's objection to the bailout plan centers on the method for calculating the cost in the federal deficit. The legislation would balloon the budget deficit but the bailout cost would not be included in calculations requiring automatic spending cuts in federal programs.

Bush favors evading the cuts by simply keeping the spending out of the deficit in the first place.

Six executives must forfeit $3.8 million

NEW YORK (AP) — Six white-collar professionals convicted of racketeering in a landmark securities fraud case must forfeit $3.8 million, a fraction of the $21 million federal prosecutors sought, a jury decided.

The government had asked that the defendants relinquish salaries and other interests in the Princeton-Newport Partners case, a prosecution that grew indirectly from the Ivan Boesky insider trading scandal three years ago.

The jury's decision Wednesday was seen as a litmus test of how juries might behave toward the other white-collar defendants who have been charged under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations law.

Avon target of another takeover attempt

NEW YORK — Investor Irwin L. Jacobs has made a roughly $2.85 billion takeover proposal to Avon Products Inc., the latest unsolicited offer for the cosmetics company that has spurned previous suitors.

James E. Preston, Avon's chairman and chief executive, said Wednesday that Jacobs' request for a meeting to negotiate a possible purchase of Avon — the world's biggest direct sales company — would be reviewed at the board's regular meeting Thursday at Avon's New York headquarters.

House votes to make smoking ban permanent

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House voted tentatively to make the smoking ban on most airline flights permanent, but decided not to consider extending the prohibition to all routes.

On a 259-169 vote Wednesday, lawmakers adopted language that would make permanent the current ban on smoking on flights of two hours or less, which otherwise will expire next April.

But the provision forbade consideration of a proposal to extend the ban to all domestic flights.

Rexene settlement approved

From Staff and Wire Reports

Employees of El Paso Products Co. in Odessa are $140 million richer today following a court settlement in Houston Wednesday.

The settlement averts a scheduled Sept. 5 trial in a lawsuit by former and current employees of El Paso Products Co., who claimed they were misled into believing the company would be employee owned, an attorney said.

State District Judge Dan Downey approved the settlement Wednesday between the employees of El Paso Products and its new owners, Rexene Products Co.

The settlement was paid into an escrow account after the settlement was tentatively reached June 8, in anticipation of Downey's approval, Jones said.

Officials with Dallas-based Rexene did not return telephone calls Wednesday from The Associated Press. But a local spokesman in Odessa said today he thought the settlement was best for all parties and Rexene was glad the matter was now behind it.

The employees of the former El Paso Products Co. filed suit in June 1988 claiming breach of contract, fraud, and misrepresentation on basis that the company was going to be employee-owned.

The El Paso chemical company was owned by Burlington Northern, but Burlington Northern decided to sell it in 1983. When a buyer couldn't be found, the company was left with the option of shutting it or selling it to the employees, Jones said.

A leveraged buyout in 1984 was intended to create an employee-owned company. But the lawsuit that ended in settlement claimed the 12 directors who purchased the stock did not distribute it properly.

"It was our allegation that only 100 mid-management employees became stockholders," Jones said. "In other words, the directors only distributed stock to those 100 and some 1,800 other employees got no stock."

In 1988, the company was sold to Rexene for $456 million. "The 100 or so employees shared in the bulk of the sale and our clients received nothing," Jones said.

Amax sets to buy Falconbridge

By JONATHAN P. HICKS
New York Times News Service

Amax Inc., the large aluminum and natural resources company, said Wednesday that it had reached an agreement to buy Falconbridge Ltd., the Canadian metals producer, for $2.4 billion, in a move that will take Amax back into businesses it has moved away from over the last five years.

The agreement created speculation that a competing bid might emerge from Noranda Inc., a Canadian mining and refining company, which has been steadily increasing its stake in Falconbridge, to the current 23.8 percent over the past year.

Falconbridge, which said that it had reached its agreement with Amax to foil a "creeping takeover" by Noranda, also announced a shareholder rights plan, better known as a "poison pill," aimed at dissuading Noranda from attempting to disrupt the deal.

Falconbridge, which is headquartered in Toronto, is the non-communist world's second-largest producer of nickel, after Inco Inc. of Canada.

The company also mines and processes numerous other minerals, including copper, zinc, and cadmium.

Amax, which is based in New York, produces aluminum, coal, goal, and molybdenum. It sold or closed its own nickel, zinc, and copper operations, which, unlike Falconbridge's had relatively high costs and poor market positions.

Bruce C. Bone, vice president and treasurer of Toronto-based Noranda, said that the company is "assessing its alternatives." He added that many of the company's top officials were vacationing and that a decision on how it would respond was unlikely to be reached this week.

Falconbridge's stock was up $5.50 in over-the-counter trading in the United States Wednesday, to $31.125. It was also up $6.375 (Canadian) on the Toronto Stock Exchange, to $36.525 (Canadian) a share.

IRS seeks $2 billion from Exxon, Texaco

NEW YORK (AP) — Texaco Inc. and Exxon Corp. said the Internal Revenue Service is seeking more than $2 billion in taxes from 1979 to 1982, when the companies purchased cheap oil from Saudi Arabia, published reports said today.

Texaco said Wednesday the IRS claims the oil company owns $1.79 billion in taxes from 1979 to 1981, when it sold oil to its affiliates at below-market value.

Exxon Corp. said the IRS has billed it $269 million for 1979 in connection with oil the government of Saudi Arabia sold to Exxon and Texaco in a bid to stabilize the world crude market. Interest on the Exxon payments could double the amount of money the IRS seeks.

Exxon said it had filed a petition in the U.S. Tax Court in Washington over the IRS bill. Texaco, based in White Plains, said it also would fight the IRS claim.

Texaco and Exxon said that for three years the Saudis sold the oil cheaply on the condition it be sold at $4 to $6 a barrel below market, The Wall Street Journal reported.

Stock certificate delays due to slow brokerages

By BILL DOYLE

Q. Before the October 1987 stock market crash, I received my stock certificates about 12 to 18 days after buying them. Now, it takes two to three months. I think the brokerage firm uses my money for that long period of time before buying the stock for me. Are my suspicions correct?

Doyle

A. No. Brokerages have to "settle" stock transactions, by paying for purchases and delivering for sales, just as fast at you do — within five business days. When you buy stock on, say, a Thursday, you must pay for it no later than the following Thursday. Saturdays, Sundays and holidays don't count. When you sell stock, you must make good delivery of the certificate within five business days.

The brokerage has the money you pay for a stock purchase from the minute your check arrives. But the firm has to pay for the stock you bought by transferring money to the person who sold the stock within the five-business-day settlement period, usually by sending the money to the seller's broker.

Stock is bought or sold for you on the "trade date" printed on the confirmation slip your brokerage sends you after each transaction. More often than not, that's the very day you give the order to buy or sell. There's no legitimate way the brokerage can delay the transaction two to three months past the trade dates.

That said, it should be stressed that you should receive a certificate no more than three weeks after buying stock. Delays of two to three months such as you mention are ridiculous, but they do happen — usually because of slow and/or sloppy work at brokerages.

Q. I bought 95 shares of stock listed on the New York Stock Exchange. My broker at the local office billed me at 521/8 per share — $52.121/2. For the same 95 shares, his New York City home office sent me a slip at 501/8. Wasn't this a crooked deal on my broker's part?

A. It makes no sense whatsoever. Even if your broker has turned crooked, he or she would have to be stupid to bill you for the purchase of stock, when billing is done through his firm's headquarters. The $2 per share difference in price further beclouds the issue. On odd-lot transactions of less than 100 shares there can be a "differential" of 121/2 cents or 25 cents.

Relying on the innate honesty of most people, let's assume this was just a paperwork mix-up. Visit your broker and try to get things cleared up. If you don't receive a satisfactory explanation, talk to the office manager and, if necessary, the firm's compliance department at the home office.

Q. I have been buying stock in my name and my adult daughter's name. My broker sent us a slip to sign, saying we won't sue him. How come he would do this, if he wasn't guilty of misusing our money?

A. My, you do have a suspicious mind. Your broker's request is not out of the ordinary. Most brokerage firms now ask customers to sign statements agreeing not to sue and, instead, submit disputes to arbitration. That is usually part of the "customer's agreement" an investor signs when opening a brokerage account.

This comes about because the U.S. Supreme Court has ruled twice that a customer who has signed an agreement not to sue a broker cannot sue but must settle differences with his or her broker through arbitration.

All stock and commodity exchanges have arbitration procedures and many customers feel they get short shrift at industry-sponsored arbitration. However, there is another avenue disgruntled customers can follow if the brokerage is a member firm of the American Stock Exchange, as most sizable brokerages are.

A clause in the American Stock Exchange constitution permits customers of member firms to have their disputes handled by the American Arbitration Association, which has a reputation for being impartial.

Coke ads target Hispanics

NEW YORK (AP) — Coca-Cola Co. said Wednesday it plans an advertising campaign recognizing Hispanic contributions to American culture and featuring such prominent Hispanic-Americans as actress Rita Moreno.

The campaign, which will be coordinated with local bottlers in five markets with large Hispanic populations, is being tied to the 1992 Quincentenary celebration of Columbus' landing in America.

The campaign is the latest example of the increasing importance major advertisers are placing on reaching the fast-growing population group.

Coca-Cola officials declined to say how much they planned to spend on the three-year effort but said it would be in the millions of dollars.

According to government figures, there are about 19 million Hispanics in the United States with buying power exceeding $130 billion a year.

Hispanic Business magazine, published in Santa Barbara, Calif., estimated the 50 leading Hispanic market advertisers spent $550.1 million to reach Hispanics in 1988, up 12 percent from $490.7 million in 1987.

The Atlanta-based Coca-Cola ranked 25th on the magazine's list with spending of $1.6 million aimed at the Hispanic market in 1988.

Pepsico Inc., the soft drink, snack food and restaurant company that competes with Coca-Cola in soft drinks, ranked 15th with $2.9 million in spending, Hispanic Business said.

Jeff Brown, a spokesman for the Pepsi-Cola Co. in Somers, N.Y., said Pepsi is currently running commercials featuring the Latin pop rock performer Chayanne on Spanish-language television. He deciined to say how much Pepsi is spending to reach Hispanics, however.

Top-ranked was Procter & Gamble Co., at $20.8 million.

The first ads in the Coca-Cola's "Discovery '92: Heritage and Future" campaign has debuts scheduled for Wednesday night in the New York market, where Coca-Cola Bottling Co. of New York planned to place them first on Spanish-language TV stations. English-language versions also are planned, as well as ads in both Spanish and English for the radio, print and outdoor media.

The New York ads feature one of five prominent Hispanics from the area who recount their difficulties and persistence in achieving success in fields such as classical music, ballet and state government.

In one ad, film scholar Richard Pena recalls how his grandparents took him to Spanish-language movies when he was young. He said he remains grateful for their guidance and thinks of them whenever he selects films in his role as head of the program committee for the New York Film Festival.

At the end of each commercial, an announcer says, "Coca-Cola Classic salutes all Latinos for 500 years of contribution to our America."

A specially-designed logo also appears at the end of each ad showing the outlines of three white sailboats against a blue background atop red and white swirls that evoke the distinctive design of the Coca-Cola Classic label.

Yvonne "Bonnie" Garcia, director of Hispanic Consumer Markets for Coca-Cola USA, said similar campaigns will be aired in the Chicago, Miami, California and Texas markets featuring prominent Hispanics from those areas starting next year and running through 1992.

agents and conspiring to defraud the Internal Revenue Service.

Thornburgh, at a news conference here Wednesday, said the government's investigation was continuing.

"This probe is part of an expanding Department of Justice crackdown on white-collar crime from Wall Street to LaSalle Street to Main Street with all stops in between," he said. "The activities uncovered at these exchanges, the largest of their type in the world, cannot be tolerated."

Thornburgh emphasized that the indictments did not implicate either brokerage houses or the two exchanges.

At a separate news conference Wednesday afternoon, Karsten Mahlmann, the chairman of the Board of Trade, said the exchange stood by its members. "We believe in the integrity of our markets and our membership," he said.

Mahlmann said four members had already pleaded guilty and would be denied access to the floor.

AMAX

The bid by Amax amounts to $36.125 (Canadian) a share, or $30.88 a share in U.S. currency.

Amax's stock also rose, finishing at $25.50, up 12.5 cents on the New York Stock Exchange. Noranda's shares rose 75 cents (Canadian) to $25.75 in trading on the Toronto exchange.

Other mining stocks also rose as analysts reassessed their value in light of the Amax offer. Inco Inc. was the most actively traded stock on the New York Stock Exchange Wednesday, finishing at $33.75, up $1.625.

The immediate spotlight, though, is on Noranda, which is 48 percent owned by Brascan Ltd., a holding company controlled by the Bronfman family of Toronto. It could profit about $220 million (Canadian) on the sale of its shares in Falconbridge.

Falconbridge announced that it had adopted a plan aimed at making a hostile bid prohibitively expensive. It would give stockholders the right to buy additional shares at a low price if another party acquires more than 15 percent of the company or increases its stake by more than 1 percent.

Also, Falconbridge has granted Amax an option to buy for $356.7 (Canadian) a debenture convertible into 9.8 million Falconbridge shares within 45 days of the issuance of the option. That debenture can be converted only if Amax acquires 56 percent of Falconbridge shares in the tender offer. The company said that the deadline will be extended to five days after approval of the deal by Canadian regulators, if approval takes longer than the period covered in the tender offer.

"Noranda can only sell its shares or make a premium bid for Falconbridge," said John Lydall, a metals analyst with First Marathon Securities in Toronto. "Whether Noranda will make such a bid is questionable because of the experience of Brascan paying a premium for Noranda in 1981," Lydall said. "I think that the cyclicality of metals led both of them to have some regrets about paying a high price at the peak of the last cycle."

The deal is a risky one for Amax for the same reason. It comes at a time of particularly high demand for nickel and zinc, which are heavily used by steel companies in making the higher. Amax is betting that it can secure long-term markets for its output and will not be hurt too badly by the next downturn in demand.

"The outlook for these metals is positive," said Peter Anker, an analyst with the First Boston Corp. "It adds a lot of debt to Amax's balance sheet, but the company does know these businesses and they are optimistic about what they can do."

The purchase of Falconbridge is the latest move in the turnaround strategy adopted by Allen Born, the chairman and chief executive Amax, who in his four years with the company has concentrated on selling high cost operations to reduce the company's debt and investing in areas of strength. After enduring five straight years of losses in the early 1980s, the company has managed to increase profits steadily and sharply.

Born's major thrust was to reduce the company's dependence on molybdenum, an ore used heavily as a hardener of steel, because of the contraction of the steel industry and build up its aluminum operations.

Checks: Medium carries message

New York Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Rock musicians do it. Actors do it.

And now regular people can do it with a check.

Corporate America has found a new way to raise funds for non-profit organizations by offering socially responsible checks.

Ordinary citizens can now donate to their favorite groups by ordering checks imprinted with the name of the charity or cause.

Every time a customer orders one of these special check series, 50 cents to $1 is donated to his or her favorite cause or group.

The printing firm Message Checks of Seattle, Wash., offers this service.

Priscilla Fenton began Message Checks four years ago after realizing the program would be a great marketing and public-awareness tool for non-profit organizations.

"The common theme for many of them is the problem of fund-raising," Fenton said. "So we thought, why not bank checks? Not only do organizations make money from this, but it also gives them great exposure."

Fenton believes the program's success can be attributed to a more socially conscious public.

"People like to make a statement," she said. "They believe they can make a difference in creating a better world by writing a check. In fact, their check-writing habits increase after getting involved with the service."

Check writing is also something a lot of people do.

The average American places one check order every seven months and writes 300 checks a year, Fenton said.

In addition, there is the time element.

"People's lives, especially women, are so full, and they're so pressed for time and energy now," said Patricia Ireland, executive vice president for the National Organization for Women in Washington, D.C. "To have such an easy way to have your views expressed and so clearly is a real nice thing to have."

From the non-profit organizations' standpoint, the service is a good way of getting their message out.

"It's very effective," Ireland said. "Your checks go through many hands. All along the way, they're seeing the visibility of your support."

The NOW checks support equality for women and pro-choice on the abortion issue.

"These checks give people the opportunity to talk to others about these issues," she said.

Since the National Audubon Society began its check program with Message Check six months ago, the organization has been besieged with check requests, said Nina Brennan, who works for the society in New York.

"When I write a check, people always look and make comments," Brennan said. "They always look confused because they are not used to seeing artwork on checks."

For each order or reorder of checks, Message Check contributes $1 to its list of non-profit organizations.

Last year, Greenpeace received $50,000 from Message Check, Fenton said.

In addition to Greenpeace, the National Audubon Society and NOW, 11 other groups use the Message Check service, including: Mothers Against Drunk Driving, Vietnam Veterans of America, the Women's Sport Foundation and the National Sclerosis Society.

Patricia Saunders has been signing Greenpeace checks for about two years. While she finds the checks (which depict the earth on a life preserver) attractive, it is the attention she receives that makes the service worthwhile.

"This is the perfect way to advertise what I believe in."

Frozen desserts individually packaged

By LINDA ANDERSON

Anderson

From the It's-A-Tough-Job-But-Somebody-Has-To-Do-It Dept. (yes, I know I've had several columns from that department lately, but it's summer and I'm indulging myself): Pepperidge Farm has recently introduced its "American Collection" line of individual-serving, frozen desserts. Enough said.

We sampled four of these sweet treats — Boston Cream Pie, Hot Fudge Chocolate Chunk Brownie, Hot Fudge Brownie and Strawberry Cheesecake — because those were the four flavors available when I made that particular shopping trip. Other flavors available include Mississippi Mud Pie, Chocolate Mousse and Apple Crisp.

The taste-testers and I checked out the new product for taste, price and advertising accuracy. And I have to say that when I bring something to the office to be taste-tested, I never lack for willing participants.

Each of the four single-serving desserts, which ranged in size from 3¼ ounces to 4¼ ounces, cost $1.29, and were packaged in tiny plastic containers which look re-usable (at least I plan to use them again — they are just the right size for lunchboxes).

All four can be eaten just thawed, but the two brownies were designed to be heated in the microwave as well. All four have label advertising that claims: "American Collection Desserts are single servings of classic American favorites, made with Pepperidge Farm's own special touch..." I guess when your name is Pepperidge Farm, your reputation doesn't need much clarification.

In the all-important taste-test, the overwhelming favorite was the strawberry cheesecake. I know this sounds weird coming from a choco-holic like myself, but the chocolate icing on the Boston cream pie and the two brownies (actually, the Hot Fudge Chocolate Chunk Brownie is a blondie with chocolate chips in it, not a true chocolate brownie) was almost too chocolate — almost to the point of bitterness. As one taste-tester said, the chocolate icing tasted almost like baking chocolate.

And once again, Pepperidge Farm has proven that if you want top quality (which Pepperidge Farm products usually are), you have to pay for it (and Pepperidge Farm products are expensive — at least for my budget).

But in spite of that, all four of the desserts were enjoyed and appreciated by the taste-testers. Now I have to come up with something for next week that will be almost as enjoyed and appreciated. It won't be easy.

Stair-free homes better

Copley News Service

Stairs are a nuisance for many senior citizens.

In fact, stairs are the most formidable barrier the elderly face in their homes, according to a gerontology study prepared by the University of California at Los Angeles and the University of Southern California.

Independent living is important not only for the emotional well-being of the elderly, but also to curb skyrocketing long-term-care costs.

Many older people can prolong independent living without sacrificing quality of life by moving to a stair-free home.

A safe senior's home should also feature good lighting, sturdy railings, grab bars, and non-slippery floor surfaces.

The study said that as the elderly realize stairs are a threat to their independence, the housing industry is likely to offer more stair-free alternatives.

'Splashies' water down children's noise

By MARIO FOX

CHICAGO (AP) — An art teacher turned product developer is making a big splash at restaurants with "Splashies," water-filled placemats designed to keep small fries from disrupting diners.

"I think we have a Hula Hoop here. We get hundreds of letters from people who are so excited about them," said Terri Pantaleo.

Ms. Pantaleo, 34, and Donald Perrin, another product developer, perfected the mat about three years ago. It contains about 4 ounces of water trapped between a thick layer of clear plastic and a foam base. A child's finger propels tiny trains, racing cars or cartoon bees over a watery racetrack inside the mat.

Ms. Pantaleo and Perrin formed Integra Development Inc., of Chicago, which has sold more than 60,000 mats to restaurants in the last few months, she said.

"Dining should be a pleasant experience and not leave mom worn out when she takes the little ragamuffins out to eat," Ms. Pantaleo said in a telephone interview from her suburban Chicago home.

"With these mats, everybody's happy. The kids are happy, the parents are happy, the waiters are happy, and people around them don't get disturbed. Restaurant owners are real happy. It's something else to sell other than hamburgers," she said.

The National Restaurant Association labeled the mat the "product of the year" at its annual show in Chicago last spring, according to its newsletter.

Restaurant operators said the mats are so popular they had to start selling them because families wanted to swipe them right off the tables.

"The kids enjoy them and we sold all we had," said Dee Drabak of the Royal Shield in suburban Darien.

"It keeps them quiet for a good 15 to 20 minutes," said Greg Scott, supervisor at Bob Knapp's Restaurant in Bloomington, Ill.

Bob Knapp's sells regular "Splashies" for $5.99, while smaller mats for highchairs go for $4.99.

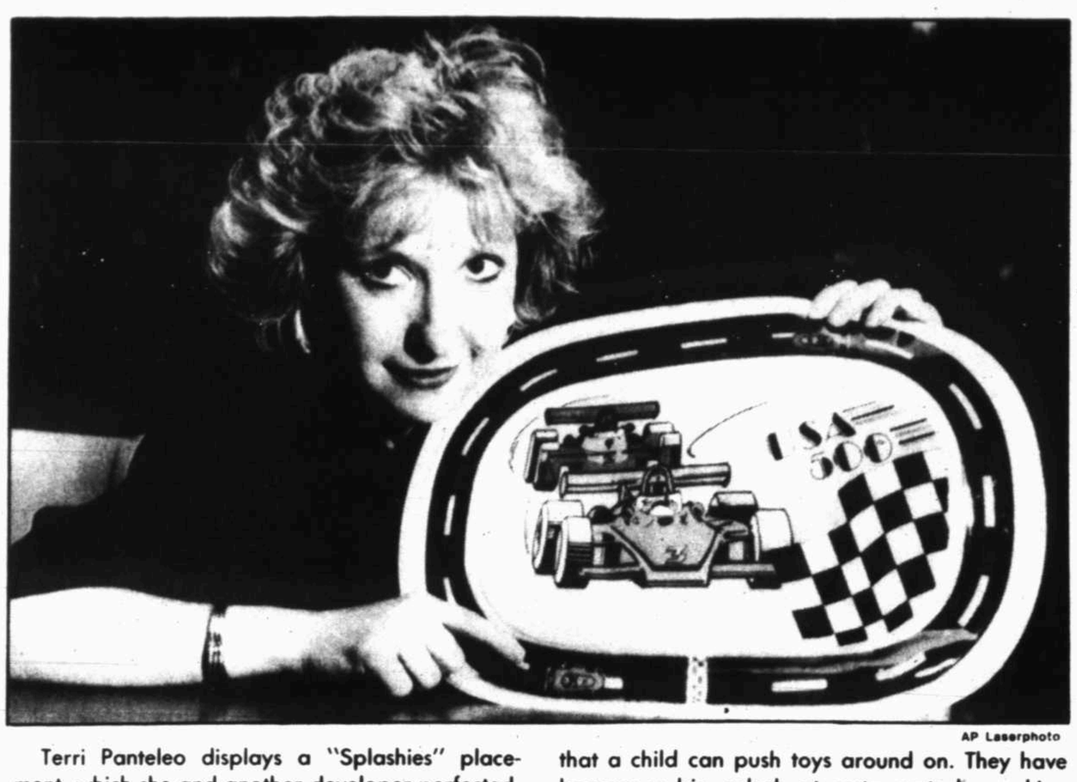
Ms. Pantaleo said gift and toy stores, schools, nursing homes and hospitals have shown interest in the mats.

Ms. Pantaleo taught art in high school and community college for a 1½ years after graduating from Northern Illinois University in 1977. When she was fired from her part-time job at an Orland Park high school because of declining enrollment, she decided to try product development.

She was showing a doll at a gift show 2½ years ago when she met Perrin, a former product developer for Gerber Products Co.

The pair now are working on a placemat for adults.

"Not something X-rated, but something with an adult theme," she said. "Kids write and complain their parents are playing with their placemats."



AP Laserphoto

Terri Panteleo displays a "Splashies" placement, which she and another developer perfected. The placemat contains water trapped under a layer of thick plastic, which forms a watery track that a child can push toys around on. They have become a big splash at restaurants by making young diners much happier and less disruptive.

Increased leisure time may be '80s myth

Copley News Service

Dreams of increased leisure time through technology have not come true. In fact, people are working longer, are highly stressed and are spending less time with family. Priority Management, a research group, found that, in a survey of 400 business people, 75 percent work more than 45 hours per week, 44 percent spend less than two hours per week looking after children, and almost 45 percent spend less than 30 minutes per week grocery shopping.

Humor in workplace found to be powerful tool

New York Times News Service

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. — For Michele Jackman, humor is not silly business. It's serious stuff.

Jackman, a management consultant and trainer for Santa Barbara-based Profit Systems International, offers seminars on humor in the workplace.

"Humor is not just joking and silliness," Jackman said. "Humor can be a positive, powerful tool to comment on the absurdity of a situation ... when everybody is tense, like piano wires, they aren't as productive."

Humor in the workplace cuts through a stressful situation, so employers and employees become more relaxed and can get a new perspective on the problem, she said.

Also, on occasions when employers are ready to fling an insult or beat a brow, Jackman suggests venting feelings with humor. It saves time, she said.

"You lose half a day's work from an argument. People stop working if they've been insulted, and then they tell five other people. That cuts down on productivity and efficiency," Jackman said.

"People have to re-awaken their humor in the face of a crisis," she said. "They shut off the flame instead of lighting it up. My job is to teach them how to turn up the flame. I'm like a gas man."

Jackman's method for igniting that flame under others includes having them hand a marble to a co-worker when that employee seems stressed out, and offering this comment, "You seem to be losing your marbles, have one of mine."

Another method is the use of penalty flags when employees break an agreement.

"Everyone gets a penalty flag for managing office rules. If one rule is you stop rambling during meetings and you don't, everyone gets to throw a penalty flag at you," Jackman said. "It makes the work place fun and gets the point across in a non-hostile way."

She suggests establishing a humor policy and offers these tips for humor in the workplace:

- Humor is appropriate if it is well-timed and not sarcastic or hurtful.
- When deserved, gratitude — a form of humor — should be expressed to employees and colleagues.
- When people are upset or down, try to lighten them up after allowing them to have the right to be upset.
- Efforts should be made to smile in the face of a stressful situation.
- Memos should frequently include good humor, a witty comment or inspirational quote.
- Designate one person each day to accept the blame for everything. This will eliminate the need to blame others or look for excuses.

New device stops recorded message

New York Times News Service

How can you make your answering machine stop talking if you pick up the phone after the recorded message begins? You trick it into thinking the person on the other end has hung up.

That is what the Message Stopper Telephone Line Guard does, its manufacturer says.

Design Tech International of Springfield, Va., is offering the Message Stopper, a $15 accessory that plugs into a modular telephone jack.

The telephone and answering machine are plugged into the accessory, which halts a taped message when any phone receiver in the house is picked up. Then you can talk to the caller.

The device is available at many major department stores and drugstores.

"With the stopper, the jack senses when a person picks up the phone and cuts power to the answering machine," said Alex Russin, the marketing manager of Design Tech.

Message Stoppers can also be used to prevent eavesdropping and interruption of computer or facsimile-machine transmissions when an extension is picked up.

The devices must be installed at all extensions except the one you want to protect; when an extension is picked up, the intruder gets a dead line but the transmission is not interrupted.

DEAR ABBY

Man seeks 'goods' on wife with nothing to hide

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: What do you and your readers think of the following situation?

My husband goes through my purse whenever the opportunity arises. (He usually does this when I am not at home.) He also opens and reads letters addressed to me.

Abby, I have absolutely nothing to hide, but I resent this kind of behavior. When I confront him, all he has to say is, "Big deal!" — TIRED IN ARIZONA

DEAR TIRED: Let him know that it IS a "big deal" to you, and you resent the invasion of privacy.

Regardless of what he says, he's behaving like a man who doesn't trust his wife. To paraphrase a French saying, "A man does not look under a bed unless he himself has been under one."

Furthermore, if your husband continues with this kind of boorish, insulting behavior knowing how you feel about it, hie thee to a marriage counselor, lady. Your marriage is in deep trouble.

DEAR ABBY: My wife and I recently stayed overnight with my parents at their country home. We had a good time, but something bothered me.

On one occasion, I spontaneously gave my wife a gentle kiss just to say, "I love you." My father said, "Please confine that sort of thing to the bedroom."

I suppose I should mention that both my parents are very uptight about showing affection publicly. (The only affection I've ever seen them show is to their young grandchildren.) Even hugging is not condoned unless someone is arriving or leaving.

My wife and I are quite affectionate, but we don't overdo it in public. We enjoy seeing other couples holding hands or walking arm in arm; it gives us pleasure to know that other couples are as affectionate as we are.

Abby, how do you feel about showing affection "outside of the bedroom"? Or are there some "rules" we're not aware of? — IN LOVE IN FLORIDA

DEAR IN LOVE: I see nothing wrong with showing affection publicly — within proper limits. But since you know that your parents are uptight about it, simply cool it in their presence.

It's said that "all the world loves a lover," but lovers should control themselves in public, lest some onlooker says, "Why don't you two get a room?"

DEAR ABBY: As the parents of three adopted Korean children, we would like to offer another way to handle questions from strangers who ask what nationality our children are, and where did we get them. (You said strangers who ask such questions are rude. We say they are naturally curious.)

When strangers question us, we explain how we adopted these children, how old they were when we got them, and how an international adoption works.

We have met some very nice people and welcome an opportunity to educate them. It's led to a better understanding of why and how some people choose to adopt children from another country.

We answer these questions in the presence of our children, and they have not suffered from it. They realize that they are of a different race, and they know that they are adopted. And since these conversations are always friendly, it assures our children that their adoption was positive and good.

So, Abby, our advice to adoptive parents of children of another race is: Don't be offended when strangers ask questions. Answer them honestly. You will meet some nice people that way. We have. — FRIENDS FROM IOWA

DEAR FRIENDS: Thank you. Whew! The things I learn from my readers!

"How to Be Popular" is for everyone who feels left out and wants an improved social life. It's an excellent guide to becoming a better conversationalist and a more attractive person. To order, send your name and address, plus check or money order for $2.89 ($3.39 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Popularity Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054.

Millions of vehicles under warranty

Copley News Service

Pssst. Your car dealer may know a secret that could be saving you hundreds of dollars over the life of your car.

Thirty million cars and light trucks are covered by one of 300 secret warranties, says the Center for Auto Safety. When manufacturers uncover problems with certain models, they send their dealers repair and maintenance instructions. But many consumers remain unaware that these repairs will be done free by the dealer.

To find out if your car is under a secret warranty, describe the make, model, year and problem, and send a self-addressed envelope with 45 cents postage to the Center for Auto Safety, 2001 S St. N.W., Suite 410, Washington, D.C. 20009.

Telephone 'boosts' high-frequency sounds

Copley News Service

If you've ever tried to eavesdrop on a conversation in the next room, you know how frustrating it can be to catch only every second or third word. For the hearing impaired, that is how a typical telephone conversation sounds. To help remedy this problem, a telephone has been developed that boosts the high-frequency sounds that are more difficult to hear.

The Walker Clarity telephone, developed by Walker Equipment Corp. of Santa Cruz, Calif., is unlike previously available volume-increasing phone equipment that increases volume on all sound frequencies.

"For the hearing-impaired person, conversations sound muddled when both high and low frequencies are boosted equally. This makes it difficult, if not impossible, to distinguish words and sounds," said Marv Tseu, president of the company.

Although the phone is designed for those with moderate to severe hearing loss, normal-hearing people can use the phone, too. The caller adjusts the sound frequency with a slide switch on the dial panel.

Besides improving the sound, the Walker Clarity offers other modern phone features, some that may be especially appreciated by the elderly. These include: a ringer that lights up so you can see and hear incoming calls; a large, lighted dial pad; easy-to-hear low frequency ringer; and a memory that can store three emergency and 10 personal numbers.

As is the case with most high-tech equipment, the Walker Clarity is not cheap. The telephone retails for $287 and is available only through an audiologist.

Home shopping networks try to broaden audience base

By NICHOLA ZAKLAN
New York Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — The camera zooms in on a 14-karat, 20-inch gold necklace.

It sparkles.

Eddie, the suited young host, calls it a bargain.

And the seconds, clocked in the right hand corner of the screen, tick off: 44, 43, 42.

It's early morning on the Cable Value Network jewelry show — and the pressure is decidedly low key. No tooting horns, no screaming and cheering.

Just Eddie. Quiet, soft-spoken, he fields a viewer phone call.

"I want to buy it for my daughter," said the viewer.

Eddie is wreathed in smiles. "Oh I am so glad you called because there were only 40 left." Time's up. Eddie gives a polite sigh.

Television shopping is trying to grow up. Prompted by a slowdown in the industry's initial growth spurt, several shopping networks are toning down their programming and spiffing up their merchandise selection to appeal to a broader range of buyers.

Only Home Shopping Network, the market leader infamous for its carnival-like format, balks at changing its style.

"Why should we?" said HSN spokeswoman Kathy Jurado. Even so, the company has added cosmetic and health care products and it has started segmenting product groups — such as jewelry — into specific shows.

It may be forced to take more drastic measures. The television shopping industry's years of quick and easy growth — when revenue went from zero to $1.7 billion — are over, said Mark Witmer, an analyst with Wessels, Arnold & Henderson in Minneapolis.

TELEVISION SHOPPING, now available in many American homes, is no longer a novelty.

"(The shopping programs) reached their initial markets — the heavy television watchers," said Michael Rosen, president and chairman of JC Penney Television Shopping Channel in Los Angeles.

There still is tremendous growth potential, but it will come from new converts — people who already have access to a shopping channel but who haven't bought any merchandise, said Witmer.

Of all the households that receive television shopping channels, only about 6 to 10 percent have actually bought something from one of the services, Witmer said.

That means new programming and merchandising must reach a broader audience, said Thomas Tashjian, an analyst with Seidler Amdec Securities Inc. in Los Angeles.

"They are going to have to begin appealing to the better customer, the one who would shop on television for convenience not for entertainment," Tashjian said.

"A wider assortment of goods, more assurance of the quality of the goods and convenience and ease of purchase and distribution — these improvements will catalyze the industry."

Certainly, the seven-year-old business has a tough act to follow.

It was started by HSN founder, Roy Speer who peddled wares left over from liquidations and buyouts on a cable access program in Florida.

The programming sparked national interest and was picked up by cable operators all over the country. By the mid-1980s it had spawned a host of imitators.

ITS TRADEMARK has been discounted, quick sell, non-essential gewgaws in an atmosphere of pure hustle. That means lots of fake diamonds (cubic zirconium), figurines, china and small appliances, accompanied by a steady stream of viewer call-ins.

Every sales pitch is clocked, leaving interested buyers minutes to phone in their order. It's not unlike phone mail-order shopping. Place an order by phone, charge it to your credit card and your purchase is delivered UPS.

The on-air format allows networks to carefully track sales. Based on the number of phone orders received, they know in minutes whether a product is a hot seller.

While HSN's programming may be popular among its loyal customers, it is offensive to some.

"Many people are turned off by that kind of marketing," said Dennis Nielsen, an analyst with Craig-Hallum Inc. in Minneapolis.

"It's very hucksterish, very high pressure. By being so strident, they lose potential customers. They should aim for a more middle ground. Right now, people either love it or hate it."

Indeed, the other shopping networks are increasingly moving away from strict adherence to the HSN formula.

The JC Penney network, acquired by the retailer last spring, is trying to capture a higher-end portion of the market than home shopping programs of the past.

"We want to be the department store of the industry," said B.D. Langford, director of television shopping for J.C. Penney.

"We want a balance of entertainment, information and product demonstration."

THE JC PENNEY network, formerly called Shop Television Network, turns its half-hour segments into a talk show type format.

A segment on books features author Sidney Sheldon; the hosts on a cooking show really cook.

The channel also boasts fashion shows, morning exercise shows and celebrities like Tommy Smothers.

It avoids the ticking clock, found on other programs. And it has veered away from the industry's mainstay, jewelry.

In fact, 40 percent to 50 percent of what it sells is clothes, much of that from Penney. The rest of the merchandise is made by other name brand retailers.

"Sure we could sell a lot of cubic zirconium jewelry, like HSN," Rosen said. "But we're making a long-term choice."

Other networks are following suit. QVC Network Inc., the West Chester, Pa. company with the third largest share of the market, is selling less jewelry and more clothes and electronics.

It also has added name-brand labels, with Sears, Roebuck & Co. merchandise available for on-air sales.

In addition, it is experimenting with its programming format — breaking the on-air hours into segments and toning down the carnival. Less noise and hoopla, more product information.

"They are trying to bring home shopping into the mainstream," said Witmer.

QVC IS shoring up its position with a recently announced $423-million purchase of CVN Cos., the Minneapolis televised shopping network with the No. 2 market share, Witmer said.

The move gives the new combined networks access to 37 million households and reduced costs for buying merchandise.

QVC also picked up the CVN credit card service.

Only Home Shopping Network, the granddaddy of them all, remains staunchly committed to its homespun product line.

In fact, the company blamed an attempt to introduce more high-priced merchandise for a loss of $5.9 million for the third quarter ended May 31.

Jurado takes exception to HSN's critics.

"A lot of people call us low-brow or low-rent," Jurado said.

"We have a call-in format. We have friendly hosts and sales persons.

"So we toot horns or something to make it a little more exciting.

"People from all over the country call in and talk to us. We have a very loyal following. We don't consider our loyal customers low brow."

Like it or not, HSN is considered responsible for the industry's early financial success.

After four years of building up its network of cable access, HSN made its first public offering in 1986 and wowed Wall Street with promises of riches.

At the time, no one really minded if it was an empire of fake diamonds and figurines.

The high-tech selling system, which could tell within three minutes whether a product was a hit, proved irresistible to investors.

How could such sure-fire proposition miss?

The stock climbed 800 percent the first year, going for as much as $47 per share. That's when the other companies like QVC and CVN sprang up. Initially, all but the JC Penney program mimicked HSN's style.

"I think the new technology generated a lot of initial excitement," Tashjian said. "But the demand hasn't caught up yet."

HSN ALSO suffered from the costs associated with a lawsuit with GTE Corp. HSN contends that GTE knowingly provided defective telephone and communications equipment that cut off million of callers in 1986 and 1987. The suit is currently in trial.

The GTE litigation, along with the slowdown in profits, quickly cooled off HSN to Wall Street. HSN stock dropped to 4.

"It's at the same place the mail order industry was 10 to 20 years ago," Tashjian said.

"People haven't adapted to the new way of shopping. And new way of shopping hasn't adapted to what people want."

As the industry matures, Tashjian sees it becoming more and more like mail order, with different programs aiming for specialized market segments.

Tips benefit at-home shoppers

New York Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Shopping by television has plenty of pitfalls.

Like catalog shopping, you don't get to inspect your purchase until after you buy. Plus, the high-pressure format lends itself to impulse buying.

The Direct Marketing Association and the Federal Trade Commission advise consumers to keep these tips in mind:

- Check the guarantee, satisfaction and return policy. Most television shopping companies allow you to return your merchandise within a set period of time. Make sure you're aware of that period and other rules.
- Jot down what you order, when you order it, the price and the date you expect to receive it. Ask the order taker to read back your request.
- If you're considering buying clothes, ask yourself if it's a good style for you. Make sure you know what the merchandise is made of and its dimensions.
- Ask about the shipping and handling charge. That could make a big difference in the purchase price.
- Be sure to find out all the information you want about a product — sizing, uses, etc.

If you have a problem, write the company and give them 30 days to respond. (Be sure to keep a copy of the letter.) If you don't get a satisfactory response, call the DMA, which has a consumer action line. Or you can try the FTC in Washington, D.C.

The Direct Marketing Association can be contacted at 6 East 43 Street, New York, N.Y. 10017 or (212) 689-4977.

Complaints made to the Federal Trade Commission must be in writing. Mail them to FTC, Enforcement Division, Washington, D.C. 20580.

Delay welcomed as diplomatic solution sought

WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House today welcomed the new delay in terrorists' threat to execute a second American in Lebanon as President Bush continued to pursue diplomacy while also "prudently planning" military action to resolve the crisis.

"Any delay is good news," said White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater, who said Bush had seen news reports of the four-hour extension of today's deadline by terrorists to kill hostage Joseph James Cicippio.

A Pentagon spokesman said there had not been any unusual changes in the deployment of the 6th Fleet ships in the Mediterranean today. "All units are conducting routine operations," said Lt. Col. Mel Sunden. The estimated 25 U.S. vessels deployed in the region "is usually what we have there," he said.

The terrorists released a videotape of Cicippio himself appealing for Israel to save him by releasing a kidnapped Moslem cleric.

The deadline extension, to 3 p.m. EDT, was announced in a statement delivered to a Western news agency in Beirut along with the 90-second videotaped appeal by Cicippio.

"I appeal to each person having honor who can move to release Sheik Abdul Karim Obeid ... Don't be late, because they (the captors) are very serious ...," said Cicippio, who appeared haggard and distressed.

"... So to help me move I demand from the American people, oblige Israel to release ... Obeid immediately because his kidnapping is not human."

NBC News quoted unidentified administration sources Wednesday as saying the president had made up his mind to take some form of retaliation if another hostage is killed. But a senior Defense Department official, asked about the report, said, "I know of no such decision."

Bush said Wednesday he was carrying out his duties "with a heavy heart" in the wake of terrorists' claimed hanging of Marine Lt. Col. William R. Higgins.

But the White House said Bush would not hold a special meeting today with top military, diplomatic and national security advisers, as he had in each of the past three days.

Bush's schedule included his regular weekly lunch with Vice President Dan Quayle, a meeting with drug policy director William J. Bennett and a ceremony to accept the credentials of new diplomats.

Shiite Moslem sources in Lebanon said they expected Cicippio's captors to spare him at Iran's behest to avert a confrontation with the United States.

The president, speaking with reporters at a meeting with the visiting foreign minister of the Persian Gulf nation of Bahrain, Sheik Mohammed bin Mubarak al-Khalifa, said, "We have exercised every diplomatic channel that I can think of ... We're leaving no stone unturned."

But Bush acknowledged that U.S. officials are still trying to piece together the facts.

"It is very hard when you're dealing with this kind of cowardice and this kind of dastardly act to get all the information that you need to make a decision," the president said.

The Bahraini minister decried the killing of Higgins and said, "Not only condemnation, but action should be taken to stop such acts."

Bush, asked if movements of U.S. ships in the troubled region signaled possible military action, said only, "We're prudently planning."

The aircraft carrier USS America cut short a visit to Singapore and the USS Belknap, flagship of the U.S. 6th Fleet, canceled a scheduled visit to the Soviet port of Sevastapol to be "at the beck and call" of Bush in case he needs them, Pentagon officials said.

But White House press secretary Marlin Fitzwater cautioned reporters against attaching "a lot of significance" to the military movements.

Bush's personal diplomatic efforts Wednesday included phone calls to British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and other world leaders.

They, too, are hampered by a lack of facts, Bush said, but "I've had assurance after assurance from world leaders that they want to help."

At the State Department, spokeswoman Margaret Tutwiler said "we are pleased" with a statement by Iran's President-elect Hashemi Rafsanjani condemning the killing of Higgins and all terrorist kidnappings.

She called on Rafsanjani to act "in accordance with the spirit" of his statement. "We remain convinced that Iran is in a position to bring significant influence to bear on those who hold the hostages and call on it to do so," Ms. Tutwiler said.

U.S. officials are neither "overly optimistic (nor) extremely discouraged" about the chances of resolving the hostage crisis through diplomatic efforts, she said.

Bush, asked if it would help matters if Israel released Sheik Abdul Karim Obeid, the senior cleric of the pro-Iranian Party of God kidnapped by Israeli commandos last Friday, replied:

"I have made clear the position of the United States that I think ... the release of everyone held against their will would be a good thing."

Shamir, Arens see 'good prospects'

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israel's premier and foreign minister both gave upbeat assessments on Wednesday for the release of foreign hostages in Lebanon, but no one was saying negotiations would be easy.

A Foreign Ministry spokesman said he had seen no positive response to Israel's offer of a prisoner exchange.

Other officials said that if negotiations did materialize, they could be lengthy.

Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir told reporters he is confident the hostages will be freed.

"It is very difficult to be optimistic, but I am confident that we will get our goal," he said.

Foreign Minister Moshe Arens said on Israel TV hope existed for the hostages because Hezbollah, the pro-Iranian organization believed to be the umbrella group for Shiite Moslem kidnappers, was under strong pressure "from all directions."

"I think that at this moment there is a good possibility that our activities will bring about the release of hostages," he said.

Captors of Lt. Col. William R. Higgins, a U.S. Marine abducted while on U.N. duty, announced Monday he had been hanged. Those holding Joseph Cicippio, another American, threaten to kill him Thursday unless Israel returns a kidnapped Shiite cleric.

Arens, who met earlier with U.S. Assistant Secretary of State John Kelly, said Washington was bringing pressure on Iran, which influences Hezbollah, and Syria, which controls the Lebanese territory where hostages are believed held.

Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir, right, gestures Thursday as he meets with U.S. Assistant Secretary of State John Kelly.

"The United States, with great justification and I hope in an efficient way, is putting pressure on these two states," said Arens.

He did not elaborate but may have been referring to the movement of U.S. warships in the region.

Israeli commandos abducted Sheik Abdul Karim Obeid, a Hezbollah spiritual leader, on Friday from his village in south Lebanon. Israel offered to trade him and other Lebanese Shiite prisoners for the three Israeli soldiers and 16 hostages held in Lebanon, including eight Americans.

Avi Pazner, spokesman for Shamir, said Israel would not be held to deadlines set by kidnappers.

"We do not negotiate with a stop watch in our hands and we do not take decisions under pressure and duress," he said.

"We are ready for a swap, and there are some contacts going on, but I think it would be a mistake to expect a quick fix. It is a complicated, lengthy business and no one should work under deadlines."

Israel is thought to hold up to 60 Shiites, and its surrogate militia in south Lebanon is believed to have 300 more.

The 12-member inner Cabinet met on Wednesday to discuss the situation, but there was no word on the outcome.

Foreign Ministry spokesman Alon Liel said he was not aware of a positive response to the prisoner exchange offer. Asked if there were encouraging signs, he replied: "Not that I know of."

Uri Lubrani, government coordinator for Lebanon policy, said "there are no signs" of progress.

Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin in an interview on Israel TV that the United States and Israel have serious policy differences over swapping hostages. He said Israel prefers to rescue hostages by force, but is willing to take prisoners and exchange captives, which is against U.S. policy.

He told Parliament earlier the government had realized foreign hostages might be endangered by Obeid's abduction but decided to act to break a stalemate.

Fatah group to open congress

TUNIS, Tunisia (AP) — The Fatah movement of the PLO opened its first general congress in nine years today with Chairman Yasser Arafat saying the goal of a Palestinian state may be realized soon.

"Fatah is entrusted with a historical responsibility that becomes more important as we approach the objective," Arafat told the congress, the fifth since Fatah was founded in Kuwait in 1959.

Independence is "a stone's throw away," he said, referring to the stone-throwing Palestinians who have been conducting an uprising in Israeli-occupied territories for 19 months.

Arafat said he would favor elections in the territories if they were a step toward creating an independent Palestinian state. Israelis officials have said they will not allow a Palestinian state in the territories.

Tunisian President Zine Abidine Ben Ali opened the congress saying "breaches have appeared in the Israeli consensus concerning the idea of the creation of an independent Palestinian state."

"The just Palestinian cause has won new victories even inside Israel, where the voices of some important forces have been raised to call for negotiations with the PLO," Ben Ali said.

Tunisian authorities took special security precautions to protect delegates. Helicopters and F-5 fighter planes of the Tunisian air force flew overhead today as they gathered at Congress Hall in Tunis. The date and precise location of the meeting were not made public until the day before it began.

In October 1985, Israeli jets bombed the PLO general headquarters in a Tunis suburb.

Five Fatah central committee members have been assassinated or expelled since the last Fatah congress in 1980 and are to be replaced. The most prominent candidate was Intissar Wazir, widow of Khalil Wazir.

Wazir, also known as Abu Jihad, was assassinated by Israeli commandos in Tunis two years ago.

Another leading candidate was Hakam Balawi, the PLO representative to Tunisia who has been the main Palestinian official in regular talks with U.S. Ambassador Robert Pelletreau.

Other major contenders included Sfar Habbash, or Abu Nizar — known as the "poet of the Palestinian revolution" — and two Palestinian officers, Gen. Mohamed Jihad and Col. Nasser Youssef.

The congress also will elect new members to the Fatah Revolutionary Council, a 100-member body which meets regularly under the Central Committee.

The congress is due to consider a report from the central committee on the uprising in Israel and propose ways to increase Palestinian pressure on Israeli occupation forces.

Arafat is president of the Central Committee. Despite some hard-liners objecting to his policies, his position is not likely to be affected.

U.S. 6th Fleet's flagship cancels Soviet port call

WASHINGTON (AP) — The flagship of the U.S. 6th Fleet canceled a ceremonial visit to a Soviet port, and it and other warships were put "at the beck and call" of President Bush on Wednesday in case they're needed in the hostage situation, Pentagon officials said.

The aircraft carrier USS America and eight escort ships also cut short a port call in Singapore, other officials said, but the Pentagon refused to reveal the carrier's destination or the reason for the battle group's early departure.

Military officials, speaking privately, emphasized that the ship movements were not "bellicose" actions and noted that the forces in the Mediterranean area remain at the normal peace-time level.

But the announcements highlighted the type of "show-the-flag" movements designed to give the impression that U.S. forces are ready to act if the president decides to use them.

"We're positioning ourselves at the beck and call of the president," said one Pentagon official familiar with the tactics. "These are not necessarily bellicose moves — but we want to be ready in case we are needed. ... These are prudent measures," the official said.

The Pentagon official stressed that "extensive on-scene diplomatic efforts" are under way, and that emphasis is not being placed on a possible military strike.

"We are just giving the president what he might need," the official said.

But, the official also pointed out, in case a strike is ordered, U.S. ships are ready with their long-range guns, aircraft and missiles, even if they remain some distance from a possible target.

"You don't have to be near the shore to do what may be necessary," the official said.

In a statement, the Pentagon announced that the USS Belknap, the Navy flagship in the Mediterranean, canceled a four-day call at the port of Sevastapol.

Two other ships, the USS Thomas S. Gates and the USS Kauffman, were slated to keep to the scheduled visit, set for Aug. 4-8.

The Belknap, a guided missile cruiser with fleet commander Vice Adm. James D. Williams aboard, had been scheduled to call at the Black Sea port as part of a long-planned exchange worked out between the superpowers.

Three Soviet ships just departed Norfolk, Va., after conducting the first such visit to a U.S. port in 14 years.

Williams and his ship "are required elsewhere and will not be able to visit Sevastopol," the Pentagon statement said.

The statement made no mention of the reported execution of Lt. Col. William Higgins, or of threats by Shiite Moslem factions to execute another U.S. hostage.

The cancellation of the Belknap's visit allows Williams to remain in the Mediterranean in case his services are needed there, said other officials, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

On Tuesday, the only U.S. aircraft carrier in the 6th Fleet, the USS Coral Sea, had left Alexandria, Egypt, "several hours earlier" than planned, Navy sources said.

The Pentagon, following normal policy, refused to divulge the destination of any of the carriers or their battle groups.

One official pointed out that if the America is headed in the direction of the Middle East, it will take nearly a week for the carrier to cross the Indian Ocean from Singapore.

Overall, there are between 20 to 25 U.S. ships in the Mediterranean at this time, with approximately 20 others in the Persian Gulf and Indian Ocean region, Pentagon officials said.

What was clergyman Obeid's role?

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israeli officials claim a Shiite Moslem clergyman kidnapped by Israeli commandos was a "central figure" in the Iranian-backed Hezbollah, providing guns and money for attacks and involved in car bombings and kidnaps.

But other sources in Israel and Lebanon minimize the importance of Sheik Abdul Karim Obeid, describing him more as a religious leader or a "cheerleader."

"If I were to name the 50 Hezbollah leaders who make decisions in south Lebanon, he (Obeid) would not be on the list," said a security source in Lebanon, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Since Obeid's kidnapping Friday, Israeli officials and the media blamed the 33-year-old sheik for crimes dating to 1983, including the kidnapping of U.S. Marine Lt. Col. William R. Higgins, whose death was announced Monday.

Obeid has been described by Israeli officials as a "big fish" and a "valuable property" for the possible swap of Israel's Shiite captives for Israeli soldiers and foreign hostages held in Lebanon.

The Defense Ministry today said Obeid told interrogators that Higgins may have been alive last week.

Despite Obeid's statements about Higgins, however, Israel officially has said it received word months ago that Higgins had been killed.

Obeid has been isolated since his capture and was unaware of the reports Higgins has been killed to avenge his abduction, the Defense Ministry statement said.

No body has been found and there is no way of knowing when the videotape showing Higgins dangling from a gallows had been made.

An Israeli official also said that during the interrogation, Obeid gave the impression that he was "afraid" to be extradited to the United States.

The Foreign Ministry issued a statement Tuesday blaming Hezbollah for killing more than 250 Americans in the 1983 bombings of a U.S. Marines barracks and U.S. Embassy buildings in Lebanon, more than 70 Frenchmen and dozens of Israelis, and then said "it is in this context" that Israel seized Obeid.

In a speech before Parliament on Wednesday, Rabin said Obeid was Hezbollah's leader in southern Lebanon and had been "a central figure ... in everything linked to attacks on Israel and incitement of these."

Obeid was involved in "terrorist activities, distributing money, transferring weapons, participating in and hiding means of attacks and above all approving nearly every act Hezbollah carried out in south Lebanon," Rabin said.

He said Obeid admitted under interrogation that "the planners" of the capture of two soldiers from Israel's self-declared security zone in southern Lebanon left from Obeid's house to carry out their attack in February 1986.

In the Higgins case, the three abductors were in Obeid's house the night before seizing the victim near Tyre, Lebanon, in Feburary 1988 and one of them returned there later, Rabin said.

He also said the car used in Higgins' kidnapping in February 1988 was later kept hidden in Obeid's garage.

Israel has "the basis to assume" Obeid was involved in a car bombing north of Israel's border that killed 12 Israeli soldiers in March 1985, Rabin said.

While no one is claiming Obeid is merely a clergyman, sources and some Israeli journalists draw a different picture of him.

Extension pleases hostage's brother

NORRISTOWN, Pa. (AP) — The brother of Joseph Cicippio said he was encouraged by a four-hour reprieve granted today by the American hostage's kidnappers in Lebanon.

"This means that perhaps there is something in the making — maybe to our liking — and they need a little more time to resolve whatever is going on," Thomas Cicippio said. "This is very good news to us," he said to reporters outside his home.

The Cicippio family then went to nearby Holy Savior Catholic Church, where hourly Masses are being held today for all the hostages as the fate of the Pennsylvania native hangs in the balance. Upon their return home, Thomas Cicippio received a short telephone call from a State Department official that he said increased his optimism.

He declined to reveal what the official told him, other than it agreed with news reports. The news and government reports taken together, he said, were enough to build up hope once again.

"I feel it won't be too long before all this comes to a happy conclusion," Thomas Cicippio said when asked to sum up the situation as he sees it.

He said he hoped Iran and its new president, Hashemi Rafsanjani, were behind the reprieve.

"I have a lot of faith in Rafsanjani," Thomas Cicippio said. "I fully believe that Rafsanjani and Iran hold the key to the hostage issue."

He said he believes Rafsanjani understands resolution of the crisis could improve relations between Iran and other countries.

When the family first heard audio tapes of the hostage's recorded plea with Israel to release a Moslem cleric it holds, the hostage's son, David, 27, couldn't believe it was Cicippio. But when the video was added and the tape replayed on television, he was convinced.

"It's the first time I've heard his voice in three years. I can't explain how I feel right now," said David Cicippio.

Saudi Arabia condemns violence, calls for U.S. restraint

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — Saudi Arabia on Wednesday denounced both the Israeli kidnapping of a Shiite Moslem cleric and the killing of U.S. Marine Lt. Col. William R. Higgins.

The official Saudi press agency quoted "a responsible source" as saying Riyadh "always condemns and denounces terrorist acts of all forms and of whatever methods ... These are despicable, inhuman acts."

Arab media criticized Israel for abducting Sheik Abdul Karim Obeid from south Lebanon Friday and urged the United States to show restraint amid reports of U.S. fleet movements in the Mediterranean.

The Dubai-based Al-Bayan wrote in an editorial: "Israel has flung the doors of hell wide open."

"What is the objective behind the Israeli act which can only be classified as organized state terrorism?" asked Abu Dhabi's state-run Al-Ittihad daily.

The hard-line newspaper Al-Khaleej, in neighboring Sharjah emirate, said "the Zionist terrorist operation in south Lebanon and its repercussions must be attributed to U.S. policy in the region and the full and unconditional U.S. bias toward Israel."

The Kuwait newspaper Al-Rai Al-Aam cautioned the United States against a military response to Higgins' purported hanging.

"The United States does not possess many effective means for a speedy revenge of the hanging of a Marine colonel by a group operating in a country with usurped sovereignty such as Lebanon.

"An effective military action is impossible in a country overburdened with rocket launchers, artillery, tanks, bombs, booby-trapped cars and suicide squads, which could be mobilized in any reaction to an American retaliatory strike," it wrote.

Oman's leading Al-Watan newspaper said "blame should be pinned on Israel as it is the instrument of violence in the region."

Al-Watan and other Persian Gulf newspapers, urged self-restraint in the crisis.

The newspapers noted that an Arab League committee announced an impasse in efforts to end Lebanon's 14-year-old civil war.

The Qatar newspaper Al-Raya said that Israel could exploit the situation "to direct a major blow against Lebanon" that could lead to its "partition into small states after internationalization of its crisis."

Syria voiced "surprise and outrage" at claims of Higgins' death but blamed Israel for abducting Obeid and refusing to free him. Israel offered to exchange Obeid and Shiite Moslem prisoners it holds for three Israeli servicemen and all 16 foreign hostages in Lebanon.

Egypt, a U.S. ally and at peace with Israel, urged "all parties concerned, whether regional or international, to exercise extreme self-restraint."
