Shuttle crew cooling off cargo bay

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — The shuttle commander turned Challenger's cargo bay from sunlight to shadow and back today, seeking thermal protection for a satellite needed during Wednesday rendezvous maneuvers. As the mission hit its midpoint, ground crews began landing rehearsals in Florida.

A NASA pilot traced the shuttle's approach path across the state and controllers told the astronauts: "We've got some (bad) weather at the Cape today. We think that's a good omen you'll have good weather on Friday."

Today was an unusually quiet day in orbit, with the astronauts preparing for Wednesday's attempt to steer the shuttle to a rendezvous with the West German scientific satellite known as SPAS.

A satellite computer registered a high temperature early today, and Mission Control directed the crew to shut down several experiments and turn the shuttle belly-up, placing the payload in the cold shadows.

After several hours, West German payload managers reported that one of the SPAS instruments was getting too cold, and controllers instructed commander Robert Crippen to again face the cargo bay toward the sun.

"We're sure it will work okay tomorrow," ground communicator Terry Hart told Crippen earlier.

In the last important test of the mission, astronauts Sally K. Ride and John Fabian are to grasp the 3,300-poind satellite with the shuttle's robot arm and release it overboard as a free-flying spacecraft on Wednesday. While it is free, Crippen and pilot Rick Hauck will practice approaching it in a rehearsal for a satellite retrival and repair mission planned next year.

The computer apparently overheated while operating for hours in the sunlight of space, where temperatures reach 250 degress Farenheit. In the darkness, readings drop as low as 215 degrees below zero.

Without the computer, the Wednesday exercise would have to be sharply curtailed.

Fabian and Ms. Ride, meanwhile, were busy running samples through a pharmaceutical experiment that could eventually produce new drugs for treating disease. Ms. Ride explained how protein is electrically separated from certain substances as they are passed from the bottom to the top of a six-foot tube.

"Of course, up here, I'm not sure which is the top," she said.

The ship was flying upside down at the time, and Hart remarked: "In this case, it's from the top to the bottom."

"Isn't science wonderful," said Ms. Ride, a 32-year-old astrophysicist who gave up her own research to conduct experiments for others as an astronaut.

There were a couple of minor equipment problems. Otherwise, Commander Robert Crippen reported, "everything is going fine up here."

At 1:40 a.m. EDT today, the five astronauts got a rude awakening — Mission Control beamed up a blaring brass reveille — followed by a Dixieland version of "When You're Smiling."

The astronauts responded with the song "Tequila Sunrise" and one of them said, "Maybe that's why we're such a happy crew."

Two of the flight's major tasks — deploying a Canadian satellite and an Indonesian satellite — were accomplished in the first two days. Just after midnight today a rocket fired aboard the Indonesian satellite sending "Palapa B" toward its operational orbit.

Reagan says he will veto spending bills

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan told members of Congress today he strongly opposes the compromise $859 billion budget approved by House and Senate negotiators, and made clear he will veto spending bills he considers excessive.

"I simply must oppose it vigorously," Reagan told congressional Republicans. "It doesn't control spending. It raises taxes as the recovery gains force and it shortchanges our defense rebuilding."

The president met with the Republicans the morning after the conferees approved the compromise package, which includes multibillion-dollar increases in taxes and spending.

Deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes, relaying the president's comments in the private meeting, said Reagan also sharply criticized a Democratic plan to put a $700 limit on the 10 percent tax cut due to take effect July 1.

The president called the opposition plan "a permanent tax increase (that) would significantly hit millions of middle-income taxpayers, two-earner married couples and 2.4 million small businesses, including 350,000 family farms."

"I hope this unfairness bill will be stopped in the House," he added.

Speakes said that Budget Director David Stockman told the session that the proposed reductions in the president's defense budget could not be met "without major, programatic and weapons changes."

As for tax increases proposed by the conferees, Stockman said, "We can't agree to that."

After the session, House Republican Leader Robert Michel said he sided with Raegan in opposing the plan. Asked later if the president liked the budget proposal, Michel said, "Of course not. Neither do I."

Rep. Barber Conable, R-N.Y., said Reagan "thinks it's a little too much. I think he'll take the various elements of it that are excessive and deal with them one at a time by using his veto power. He's determined to get government costs under control."

But Sen. Pete Domenici, R-N.M., chairman of the Budget Committee that helped produce the plan, said Reagan "has his views and we have our views."

The spending blueprint now goes back to the House and Senate amid concerns that Reagan's opposition and bickering in both chambers will sink the plan, making it impossible for Congress to adopt a budget for the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1.

Under the compromise adopted by voice vote Monday night, taxes would be increased by $73 billion over three years: $12 billion in 1984, $15 billion in 1985 and $46 billion in 1986.

Reagan already has ruled out any tax increases until 1986.

The plan also offers an estimated $15 billion more for domestic programs than Reagan wants.

That figure does not include up to $8.5 billion set aside for a so-called "contingency fund" for recession relief legislation such as a new jobs bill and mortgage foreclosure relief — measures which have not yet been authorized by Congress.

The compromise budget carries a maximum deficit of $179 billion, if all the contingency money is spent.

Meanwhile, the compromise calls for $268.6 billion in new military spending authority — about a 5 percent increase after inflation. Reagan had asked for a 10 percent boost.

Domenici said the measure had a "reasonably good" chance of passage.

"I don't say it's going to be a cakewalk. In fact, it will be very hard to do, but I feel it's a good product," he added.

Even before the conferees finished their work Monday night, Reagan was telling a Republican fundraiser in Jackson, Miss., that he is eager to battle Congress over spending and taxes.

"Those who think they can pull the wool over the eyes of the voters and return to the tax-spend-and-inflate policies of the past are badly mistaken," the president said. "For my part, if confronted with budget-busting spending bills or any attempt to take away the people's tax cuts or (tax) indexing, I will not hesitate to veto — in fact, I look forward to it."

In the House, Republicans are expected to be virtually unanimous in their opposition to the compromise.

NASA not known for hiring women

WASHINGTON (AP) — NASA is riding a considerable publicity bonanza by finally putting a woman in space, but the agency has had a checkered history when it comes to placing women in its work force.

Nine years ago, the agency was criticized by its highest ranking woman employee for "the worst record statistically in government" in hiring and promoting women and minorities. The executive, Ruth Bates Harris, was fired in a flurry of controversy.

Before that, in the 1960s, the very existence of a female engineer — just one — on the team that helped plot Apollo flights to the moon made the woman so much of a celebrity that she eventually had to cut down on interviews to find time for work.

And 21 years ago, when the Soviet Union had been training women cosmonauts for three years, ace American flier Jerri Cobb complained that she and 12 other women — out of 25 tested — had been found by NASA qualified to be astronauts. She didn't make it, however, because the space agency required each astronaut candidate to be a test pilot.

"I think they've totally changed that around," says Virginia Hughes, a former women's program manager at NASA's Johnson Space Center in Houston.

Court orders 'equal' medical benefits

WASHINGTON (AP) — Striking the latest blow for on-the-job equality of the sexes, the Supreme Court says employers cannot offer male workers family medical plans that don't stack up to those available to female employees.

A decision announced by the court Monday does not mean employers are legally obligated to extend the same pregnancy benefits to employees' wives as those extended to women on the payroll.

But some employers may now come under added pressure to do so.

The court said a 1978 federal law, the Pregnancy Discrimination Act, prohibits a boss from giving "married male employees a benefit package for their dependents that is less inclusive than the dependency coverage provided to married female employees."

Nothing in the decision, however, bars employers from limiting pregnancy benefits for employee's wives if, at the same time, they impose the same overall limits on coverage extended to employees' husbands.

For example, an employer legally could limit all hospitalization benefits for employee spouses to 50 percent of the total bill and pay all hospital costs for employees. That would mean a female employee hospitalized to have a baby would get twice as much financial help as male employee's wife hopitalized for the same reason.

That's not why John McNulty, a Virginia shipyard employee, complained that he was the target of sex discrimination. His company's medical plan limited benefits for pregnant spouses, but featured no similar limits for other conditions for which employees' spouses might require medical attention.

Protests follow pontiff's Wroclaw visit

WROCLAW, Poland (AP) — Police routed demonstrators in the southwestern city of Wroclaw today, hours after Pope John Paul II blessed the "thirst for justice" of Poland's workers and their struggle for rights.

After the pope spoke at the Wroclaw hippodrome, several hundred young people marched through the city center, where they were intercepted by helmeted riot police backed by a water cannon.

A line of police vehicles, sirens wailing, spilled riot troops in front of the line of marchers as a helicopter circled overhead barking orders to "go home peacefully."

As the helmeted police jumped from their vehicles, people watching from high-rise apartments showered them with verbal abuse, shouting "Gestapo" and whistling derisively.

The marchers dispersed peacefully, but a heavy concentration of police remained in the area.

Meanwhile, in Gdansk, a spokesman for Lech Walesa said the chief of the outlawed Solidarity labor union was given a three-day leave of absence from his job at the shipyards to meet the pope in Krakow on Thursday, the pontiff's last day in Poland.

The police encounter with the demonstrators came as the pontiff visited the Wroclaw cathedral. In his sermon at the hippodrome, the pope said, "I would like to preserve this just hunger and thirst of the great multitudes of my compatriots from all that would distort and weaken it.

"This cannot be destroyed or suppressed," the pope told worshippers from Wroclaw, capital of Lower Silesia and a stronghold of the outlawed Solidarity labor federation.

The pontiff's political comments have angered the Polish authorities, who agreed to the papal visit after the nation's powerful Roman Catholic church said it would be strictly religious.

One million people — according to the official Interpress news agency — jammed the Hippodrome horserace track under a baking sun to hear the pontiff on the sixth day of his eight-day Polish homecoming.

Police were out in force, and just one Solidarity banner was in evidence — "Wroclaw Solidarity," it read — compared with the dozens that have fluttered other papal masses during his visit.

John Paul spoke from a huge altar built between grandstands where two weeks ago bettors were cheering horses to the finish line.

"Blessed are those who hunger and thirst for justice," he said, his voice rising emotionally at the New Testament words.

Walesa to meet with John Paul on Thursday

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Lech Walesa, head of the outlawed Solidarity labor union, has been granted a three-day leave to allow him to meet Pope John Paul II on Thursday in Krakow, a Walesa spokesman said today.

Walesa, who works as an electrician at the Lenin shipyard in Gdansk, where Solidarity was born in August 1980, had earlier been denied time off to meet with the pope during his visit. But the government announced Friday it would allow a meeting after the pope conferred with Polish leader Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski in Warsaw.

"At work, Walesa was handed a letter signed by the shipyard manager saying he had been granted Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday off to be able to meet the pope," spokesman Jozef Borowczak said by telephone from the Walesa family apartment.

Walesa could not come to the telephone, Borowczak said, because he was meeting with a senior church official to work out details of the visit.

The Polish-born pontiff, who began his second pilgrimage to Poland last Thursday, is due to leave Krakow for Rome on Thursday night. His schedule that day is virtually open, except for an early morning Mass and his late afternoon departure.

Visitors watch as water pours through the floodgates of Parker Dam, near Parker, Ariz., on the Colorado River. Thousands of gallons of water was released Monday, the first time since 1941, to relieve overfilled reservoirs.

River swelling to record levels

By The Associated Press

Riverbank dwellers and business owners today fought to hold back the fast-rising Colorado River, which was swollen to record levels by water released from bulging reservoirs in the mountains.

About 300 people in Grand Junction, Colo., were "packing their stuff" and preparing to evacuate following warnings that a nearby earthen dike was threatened, officials said.

Hundreds of miles downstream, residents in the Parker Strip recreational area of Arizona and California stacked sandbags or moved mobile homes to higher ground in preparation for the snow-fed waters.

The residents were hoping to stay ahead of the Colorado River, which rose nearly 2 feet on the first of three days of planned water releases from dams between Arizona, Nevada and California.

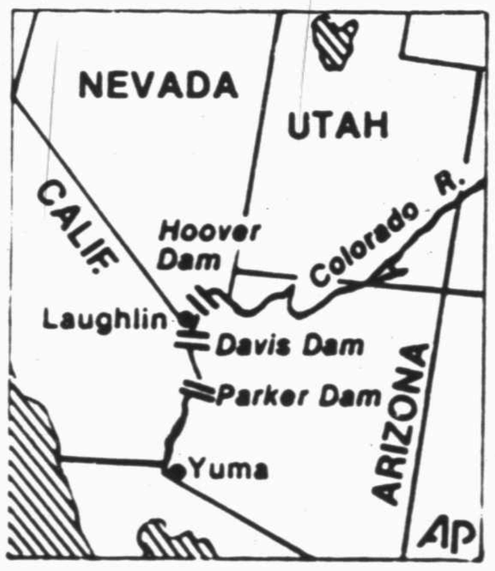

"People are sandbagging, putting putting up retaining walls, putting plastic sheeting on embankments, using every conceivable trick," said George Pond, fire chief for the Colorado River region in San Bernardino.

Federal officials were forced to lift floodgates at three dams early Monday because their reservoirs were filled to the brim by record snowmelt and heavy spring rains.

The San Bernardino (Calif.) Sun reported that U.S. District Judge Manuel Real in Los Angeles late Monday issued an order limiting the amount of water that can be released into the river by the Bureau of Reclamation. But Harlan Moore, a spokesman for the bureau, said the flow could not be reduced.

"Snow is melting and we have a limited time to get rid of it," Moore said.

Hoover Dam, east of Las Vegas, Nev., is the northernmost of the three dams. Davis Dam is about 60 miles to the south near where the three states converge. Parker Dam is another 60 miles below that.

The spring rains and runoff were creating scattered flooding across the West, from Canton, S.D., to Southern California.

Mesa County Sheriff Dick Williams urged the evacuation of the Connected Lakes area of Grand Junction after the U.S. Geological Survey warned that the Colorado was expected to rise at least a half-foot overnight. Williams said he expected the river to climb an additional 2 feet by next week.

The residents were warned to move because an earthen dike separating their homes from the river was crumbling. Concern over the same dike forced a one-day evacuation three weeks ago.

"We have not issued any orders to move out. There have been a few who have moved out, but most are watching the river," the sheriff said. "They're packing their stuff, being ready."

The Parker Strip, a 14-mile area of mostly summer homes between the Parker Dam and the community of Parker, Ariz., is expected to bear the brunt of the flooding, the worst along the Colorado River in more than 40 years, officials said.

La Paz County Sheriff Raybur Evans said property damage projections ranged up to $5 million for the area. As many as 200 homes and businesses along the strip could be affected by the flooding, Evans said Monday, although "we don't expect any major emergencies."

"This is slowly rising water and (there is) a lot of time to get out if you have to," Evans said.

A dozen residents evacuated their trailers Monday at El Mirage Park, about a dozen miles from the Parker Dam, officials said.

On the California side, the Colorado River was 2 feet higher than normal and ripping away private docks, flooding campgrounds and destroying retaining walls, said George Pond, a spokesman for the San Bernardino County Fire Department.

In eastern Utah, near Vernal, Ashley and Dry Fork creeks were running at the highest levels ever recorded, and water from the Beaver River, in the southwestern part of the state, was threatening 15 homes, authorities said.

Flood control workers set off dynamite blasts today to try to divert Ashley Creek which was threatening bridges and irrigation systems.

News Council issues its opinions

NEW YORK (AP) — The National News Council says the San Francisco Chronicle treated a group of people in India unfairly in one of the paper's columns and that a complaint against a New York Times story on a gun-running trial was unwarranted.

The council issued opinions Monday that also cleared the New York Daily News and the Roman Catholic Archdiocese of New York of complaints against them, and criticized NBC News for a delay in broadcasting a correction on a story.

The news council is an independent, non-profit group which generally meets to consider complaints about the news media and to issue nonbinding opinions.

Warren Hinckle, a columnist for the Chronicle, was criticized for columns published last December in which he attacked members of the Patel family of the Gujarat state in India for operating cheap, ill-heated "cockroach palace" hotels in which many of San Francisco's poor live.

But the council found that the family name, Patel, applies to "hundreds of thousands, perhaps millions of people, when what (Hinckle) was talking about were a couple of hundred people."

The council also found that the Chronicle failed to treat the family's protest fairly when it allowed Hinckle to respond in his column. "He saved the last word for himself and used the protests as a kickoff for a new set of charges against Patel hotel owners as a group," the council said.

"In this case, the San Francisco Chronicle marred a commendable job of exposing the exploitation of the poor ... by stigmatizing an entire group of people," the council concluded.

Jerry Burns, city editor of the Chronicle, said, "We have no comment. We've just received the council's decision, and the man who normally would review it, our executive editor, William German, is out of the country." Burns said that Hinckle was not in the office to comment.

In another case, the council found that a complaint by the Irish American Unity Committee about the alleged inaccuracy of a New York Times report of a gun-running trial in Brooklyn U.S. District Court was not warranted. However, the council said the Times report was misleading because it did not put one facet of the trial testimony into context.

The story, which appeared Nov. 6 1982, reported that five men charged with conspiring to smuggle weapons to the Irish Republican Army were acquitted.

The Times report said the jury acquitted the men because it apparently believed their assertion that they thought the man they were buying guns from was a CIA operative. The defendants said they thought the CIA was cooperating with them in order to monitor the flow of arms to the IRA and to see that the gun business did not fall into the hands of the Soviet Union.

The Irish group objected to one sentence in the Times story, which said that the alleged operative's purported relationship to the CIA was not established during the trial as anything but his boast.

The committee said there was other evidence presented at the trial which substantiated that claim.

The council called the committee's complaint of inaccuracy "unwarranted," but said that "standing alone," the sentence "left the reader to conclude that the jury was unreasonable to have acquitted the defendants of the gun running charge. A study of the trial transcript shows that the jury's not guilty finding was not so unreasonable as the Times story suggested."

Elliot Sanger, the Times' manager for corporate relations, said, "I haven't seen the decision yet, and I couldn't possibly comment until I go over it in detail with our editors."

The Times sentence was based on news service copy, according to the council.

"The Associated Press report on which that particular part of the Times story depended provided additional context that made the jury's finding more understandable," the council said.

In a separate complaint, the American Irish Unity Committee complained that on Feb. 9 Roger Mudd, anchorman on the "NBC Nightly News," reported incorrectly that the IRA had used kidnapping as a tactic to raise money.

The Irish group provided intercepted British intelligence documents that said the IRA had not used this tactic, and NBC News broadcast a correction May 24.

The council commended NBC for the correction, but noted that "the error was called to the network's attention immediately after the broadcast. Yet it was not until May 13, after the news council had intervened, that the network acknowledged the error, and not until May 24 that the network broadcast a correction."

The council noted its own tardy response in the case. It received the complaint on March 21 but did not forward it to NBC until May 4.

Mary Lou O'Callaghan, director of news information for NBC, said of the network's report, "We corrected it on the air. With stories like this, there are frequently differing opinions coming in after the broadcast. It takes time to look at all those and investigate them and weigh them. The delay was caused by looking at what the organization was saying."

In a third complaint by the Irish group, the council cleared both the New York Daily News and the Archdiocese of New York of blame for an article that appeared on the newspaper's op-ed page March 15.

The News published the article about terrorism in Ireland under the byline of Don Carroll, who was described at the end of the story as "a Catholic priest serving in a New York area parish."

The Irish committee could not find a priest with that name in the area, and on March 17 the News published an editor's note acknowledging that Don Carroll was a pseudonym used to protect the writer's relatives in Ireland — a fact the News said it did not know when the article was published.

The story was a priest's memoir of a visit by the British "Black and Tan" constabulary years ago to his family farm and a similar visit by IRA members to the same farm four years ago.

The News told the news council it had received the article from the head of the archdiocesan office of communications, the Rev. Edwin F. O'Brien, who later said he thought he had told News Associate Editor John J. Smee that the name was not real.

Correction

The resignation of the Rev. P.D. Peterson, headmaster of Trinity School, was incorrectly reported in Monday's Reporter-Telegram as being effective June 30.

His resignation will be effective June 30, 1984.

The Midland Reporter-Telegram regrets the error.

Texas journalist named to SDX hall of fame

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Texan Sarah McClendon, famous for her questioning of eight different presidents, has been selected along with four other reporters for the Washington Hall of Fame of the Society of Professional Journalists, Sigma Delta Chi.

McClendon is a staff member of States News Service, which serves as Washington Bureau of the Reporter-Telegram.

McClendon, who started her reporting career in 1931 at the Tyler Courier-Times-Telegraph, was honored with George Herman of CBS News, Neil MacNeil of Time, Henry Brandon, the long-time Washington correspondent for the Sunday Times of London and Stanley Cohen of Advertising Age.

The journalists joined 76 other members, including David Brinkley, James Reston, Walter Lippmann, Arthur Krock, Peter Lisagor, Mary McGrory, Eric Sevareid, Howard K. Smith and Helen Thomas. Ms. McClendon is the seventh woman to be chosen by the society.

Ms. McClendon became part of a national news story herself in July 1982 at a White House press conference when she went back and forth with President Ronald Reagan nearly a dozen times insisting the president was aware of a preliminary report on government sex discrimination that he claimed he knew nothing about. Within days the report was released to the press.

In accepting the award at ceremonies at the National Press Club in Washington last Friday night, Ms. McClendon told the journalists "I don't think this president is doing much for women."

Besides Reagan, Ms. McClendon has covered Jimmy Carter, Gerald Ford, Richard Nixon, Lyndon Johnson, John Kennedy, Dwight Eisenhower, Harry Truman and Franklin Roosevelt. Ms. McClendon says she was "too timid" to ask Roosevelt questions at his press conferences.

She told the gathering of journalists that Johnson convinced one of her publishers to fire her saying "I just can't stand it. I can't do my job with that woman covering us every day."

Ms. McClendon has been the recipiant of many other awards through her career, most recently, the American Legion Public Relations Award, the National Federation of Press Women/Presidential Award and the National Association of Government Employees Communicator of the Year award and the National Headliner award given by Women in Communications. Texas Press Women chose her as their Woman of Achievement in 1978.

Reporter-Telegram emblem winner Tom Griffard, right, and publisher George Irish exhibit the winning entry in the contest. Griffard received $600 for the design.

Jeri Sue Hunt, left, and Gabe Lewis display the winning entries in divisions for grades 7-12 and 1-6, respectively, of the Reporter-Telegram emblem contest. Each received a $100 award for their designs, chosen from more than 200 entries.

MIDLAND REPORTER-TELEGRAM

The offical Reporter-Telegram logo consists of the newspaper's stylized initials in red outlining in silhouette symbols which depict the city's skyline, oil industry and ranching. Interior of the letters is in shades of blue.

Logo contest winner named

Tom Griffard, an Odessa beauty shop co-owner and artist, was announced as winner of the Reporter-Telegram's emblem contest Friday and presented with two checks totalling $600.

Griffard's emblem design was the newspaper's initials, MRT, in colors of red, dark blue and light blue. Red outlines each of the letters and the interior of each letter is in shades of blue. The interiors of the letters also depict important aspects in Midland's heritage in silhouette — the city's renowned skyline, an oil industry pumpjack and a steer.

"I had no idea I would win," said Griffard, who originally heard about the emblem contest on an Odessa radio station.

Griffard also was winner of the adult category. Winner of the category for students in grades seven through 12 was Jeri Sue Hunt and winner of the category for youths in grades one through six was Gabe Lewis. Miss Smith and Gabe each received $100 checks from Reporter-Telegram Publisher George B. Irish.

A large number of spectators was on hand at Midland Park Mall for the announcement. Irish told those present the emblem contest was important to the newspaper and that a panel of 10 judges spent 40-50 hours making selections. The decision was not easy, Irish noted, because of the quality of numerous entries.

Irish announced the 31 finalists, by categories, and Editor Jim Servatius and Advertising Director Dick Hardin presented each of the finalists with certificates of recognition.

Griffard's award-winning emblem is now the official symbol of the newspaper. It will be used by the newspaper in several different ways, Irish noted.

The winner holds the master's degree in sculpture from Southern Methodist University. He has lived in Odessa about 10 years and along with his wife, Pamela, owns Shear West. He taught sculpture at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin for three years.

THE BETTER HALF

"I just did 20 laps in the bathtub. Do I look any thinner?"

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Wednesday, June 22, 1983

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Academy Award-winning actress Meryl Streep, writer-director Billy Wilder, fashion designer Bill Blass, Kris Kristofferson, author Anne Morrow Lindbergh, "60 Minutes" Ed Bradley and San Francisco Mayor Dianne Feinstein celebrate birthdays today. Financial arrangements can be improved this year if you have an expert scrutinize them. Contact a former romantic partner. The flame could burn brightly again. A reconciliation between two warring relatives brings happiness to the whole family. Do not let an old debt be forgotten. Repay favors and expect others to do the same. Someone who has helped you in the past is about to do so again.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Spend money for something that will bring you greater peace of mind. You need to protect mate's feelings. Lost items will be recovered. A free-lancer gets a lucky break.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Investment income grows. Settling into a new environment or job is easier than you expected. Mate is supportive if you are honest about your intentions. The media affect some of your decisions.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You tend to idolize a family member. Recognize that he or she is wonderful, but also human. Your wit and intelligence bring you great business success. Adopt a more realistic approach to finances.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): An expanded social life will provide valuable business leads. Keep your romantic intentions to yourself, especially when the office snoop is around. A financial burden will soon be lifted.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Get agreements in writing even when they are with friends or relatives. It is not a matter of trust, just good business. You learn a valuable lesson from observing a child.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A business partner has hidden obligations that could affect your future as well as his own. Better investigate! Examine all financial schemes before agreeing to them. You are ready for new responsibilities.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Take action on important matters only after consulting with your partners. It pays to know when to push others. A social affair may have to be postponed. Mate will understand.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Your dynamic personality and charm work miracles today. Soften up a difficult member of sex with flattery, but back your statements with facts. Keep loved one's confidences.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A wonderful day to pursue self-improvement activities. Detail work requires more time and attention than you thought possible. Ask for an extension—you are likely to get it.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Business looks promising but demands great tact and patience. A stranger is testing you. Keep everything on a professional plane. Wait for a sign from romantic partner before revealing your feelings.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A good day for negotiating contracts or expanding a business. Your social life is in the spotlight. Get out and about. A new acquaintance has ideas that delight you.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Be prepared to pay for expert advice—it is money well invested. A shopping expedition uncovers some fine bargains. Apologize to someone you may have slighted in the past.

'Orient' colorful, exciting

NEW YORK (AP) — Say this for "Savage: In the Orient," tonight on CBS: the the Philippine Islands setting is exotic, and there is, indeed, lots of action.

The hour-long show, despite those and other attractions, has the look and feel of a pilot that will never make it to series.

Joe Penny, who played "Bugsy" Siegel in NBC's short-lived "Gangster Chronicles," is Peter Savage, a private eye with connections everywhere but police headquarters. Capt. Saprido would rather Savage stick to his more respectable enterprise, Asian art.

So imagine Saprido's distaste when "terrorists" — remember the quotation marks — kidnap a man named Cord and pick Savage to deliver the ransom. Savage makes the swap, but Cord, who represents Allan Clydesdale's American oil company in the Far East, is blown to bits before he is set free.

"I'm not going to give up, Costa," Savage promises Clydesdale's director of security. "Why?" Costa asks. "You had no stake in his life." "I had a stake in his death," Savage replies.

The dialogue is like that. So is Savage, and the rest of the show, for that matter.

John Saxon, who was Dr. Ted Stuart in NBC's "The New Doctors," 1969-72, is Costa, and the remainder of the cast is made up of old-time movie actors and a group of unfamiliar, presumably local, players.

Leif Erickson, a deep-voiced, John Huston-like character whose film credits include "Sorry, Wrong Number," "Show Boat" and "On the Waterfront," is the Major, Savage's sidekick, and Lew Ayres, best known for the "Dr. Kildare" series of motion pictures, is the incredibly feeble Clydesdale.

Gayle Hunnicutt, looking half Ayres' age, is Clydesdale's wife, Julia.

Irene Yah Ling Sun plays Tap Lee, a drug-runner in a slit skirt who helps Savage track the killer, with Butz Aquido as Saprido, Anthony Castelo as Cord and Jose Maria Avellano as the tattooed Philippine bandit, Papa Bajao.

The story itself is rather standard stuff, helped along by a car-chase and a couple of spectacular explosions. But there is a twist at the end, and our hero's close relationship with the kids at the orphanage where he was raised is marginally heartwarming.

Getting to a good contract is only half the battle. You have to bring the contract home to earn points.

This hand is from Greece's match against Indonesia at the last World Bridge Olympiad. Our reporter failed to explain the reason for West's rebid, but the rest of the auction was natural. The final contract was sound.

West led a trump rather than open up a side-suit. Declarer won in dummy, came to hand with the ace of spades and led a diamond. West pounced with the ace and shifted to a club, and declarer had no way to avoid defeat.

Declarer had gained a tempo with the trump opening lead. Since West, for his opening bid, was likely to hold both the ace of clubs and king of hearts, declarer could have got home by remaining a trick ahead.

Declarer should simply draw all the trumps and then lead the jack of hearts! If West does not win, declarer can continue with ace of hearts and another, and a heart is set up in dummy. If West does not cash the ace of diamonds, declarer will sluff his diamond loser on the good heart. But when West takes the ace of diamonds, he sets up dummy's king. When the king of clubs wins a trick, declarer can take two club discards in his hand on the table's high heart and king of diamonds. Either way, the defenders can get no more than the king of hearts and two tricks in the minor suits.

Rubber bridge clubs throughout the country use the four-deal bridge format. Do they know something you don't? No place to sue

The special requirements of military discipline have always imposed essential restrictions on men and women of the armed services. These may offend some civil libertarians, but they are indispensable to an effective military capable of defending the nation's vital interests.

Last week, the U.S. Supreme Court took that same sensible view in a unanimous ruling that denied enlisted personnel the right to sue their superior officers for alleged violations of constitutional rights.

The case in question involved a $10 million damage suit brought by five black sailors against their commanding officers. The sailors, then crew members on the San Diego-based USS Decatur, charged the ship's captain and other officers with discriminating against them on the basis of race.

The suit was dismissed by a U.S. District Court judge in 1981 but that decision was subsequently reversed by the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals.

In reversing the court of appeals ruling, the Supreme Court left no room for doubt that it would continue to oppose civilian court review of most military matters. Chief Justice Warren E. Burger, writing for the entire court, argued that, "no military organization can function without strict discipline and regulations that would be unacceptable in a civilian setting ... (military discipline) would be undermined by a judicially created remedy exposing officers to personal liability at the hands of those they are charged to command."

It should be noted that the Supreme Court's decision does not leave members of the armed forces helpless in the face of mistreatment by their superiors. The military's own judicial system, codified under the Uniform Code of Military Justice, operates to protect all service personnel. Moreover, members of the armed forces have a recognized right to complain directly to their representatives in Congress, to the individual service secretaries, and even to the president.

What the Supreme Court said is that military discipline would suffer unacceptably if every commander had to risk a personal liability suit brought in civilian courts every time he gave an unpopular order. We certainly agree.

Another View:

Baker ought to know

As retiring majority leader of the U.S. Senate, Republican Howard H. Baker Jr. of Tennessee ought to be listened to respectfully when he admonishes members of Congress that they have become "elected bureaucrats" who are out of touch with the world outside Washington.

While he is not seeking re-election to the Senate in 1984, Baker has made no secret of his aspirations to the presidency. His candid views on what ails Congress may not set so well with his colleagues, but the folks back home are apt to share at least some of the senator's sentiments.

Baker says members of Congress have abandoned their roles as citizen legislators and that they spend far too much time in Washington.

"We will not in our lifetime really know what the range of those desires and demands and dissent may be if we stay on the banks of the Potomac 12 months of the year," Baker said. He made his remarks as the Senate prepared to take up the issue of its own pay and decided whether to retain a lid on outside income.

Baker proposed a constitutional amendment to establish an independent pay commission to set salaries for Congress. He favors lowering pay and forcing members to earn their living outside politics. In doing so, he would remove limits on the amount of income that could be earned, but he would apply stringent conflict-of-interest laws and require "absolute, full disclosure" of earned and unearned income.

The veteran senator said members of Congress ought to serve in Washington only about half the year, spending the rest of their time with their families and in their home communities furthering their careers.

"I would like to see us once more to be an aggregation of lawyers and doctors and farmers and architects," he said. "I would like to see us once again immersed in the business of our country so that we understand what it is about and what we are legislating about. I would like to see us encouraged rather than prohibited from taking an active role in our communities' affairs."

Baker said it was wrong for members of Congress to think of themselves as permanent full-time employees of the federal government instead of the elected representatives of the people.

The senator is so right!

Contrasting his own experience with that of his father, who was a member of the House for 14 years until his death, the senator said that the elder Baker saw himself as a Tennessean, temporarily in Washington to speak for the people of his district. He said his father never considered moving to Washington and abandoning his role at home.

Baker ought to know what he's talking about when he says that Congress had passed "silly rules and regulations and statutes that say we are forbidden to do anything except come up here and legislate 12 months out of the year.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Sheiks leave firm holding bag

WASHINGTON — For a dizzying decade, the oil-rich Arab sheikdoms have been scattering petrodollars to the wind like autumn leaves. Eager American businessmen have scrambled to rake in their share.

Jack Anderson

They have offered the Arab rulers everything they wanted, from schools and hospitals to private jets and fancy limousines. Now many businessmen can't collect the money that's owed them. The drop in world oil prices has forced the Arab producers to cut back on their extravagant spending. Some sheikdoms have simply refused to pay their bills.

Perhaps the worst of the desert deadbeats, according to State Department sources, is the United Arab Emirates. It's still one of the wealthiest Arab states, with billions of dollars in reserves. It should be able to pay its creditors.

But the situation has become so acute that the American ambassador in Abu Dhabi complained to the crown prince. As a confidential cable tells the story, the ambassador explained "that he was taking the unusual step of elevating this basically commercial matter to the level of bilateral discussion between governments because of potential political implications...."

The cable identified these "political implications" as the "burgeoning ranks of individual, unreimbursed 'smaller' creditors... who were becoming increasingly alienated...."

One such creditor is a family firm, DeAlmeida Construction Co. of Old Bridge, N.J., founded by Lino DeAlmeida Sr., a Portuguese immigrant. Over the years he built the company to the point where, in 1977, he felt able to take on a multi-million-dollar contract to build an extensive sewer system in Abu Dhabi.

Although inexperienced in the business methods of the Middle East, DeAlmeida was at least savvy enough to acquire as a business partner the brother-in-law of Sheik Zayed bin Sultan Al Nahyan, the UAE president. That, DeAlmeida figured, would assure fair treatment.

But there was a hitch — a colossal one. DeAlmeida was relying on an earlier study by a British firm, which showed that the sewer system excavation would be in sand and soil. It turned out to be mostly solid rock, which led to a $30 million cost overrun on the original contract.

Assured orally by various figures in the UAE government and business circles that the $30 million would be paid, DeAlmeida went ahead with the project. But the company has been unable to collect.

As for the supposedly influential brother-in-law, Suhayl Bin Mubarak, he turned out to be even less trustworthy than the British firm's soil sampling.

When the DeAlmeidas pressed their case for payment, they and their American employees were harassed and threatened. Some employees — including Lino DeAlmeida Jr. — have been thrown in jail on occasion. The younger DeAlmeida's life was also threatened by the sheik's brother-in-law. In March, Lino DeAlmeida Sr. died. His family told my associate Lucette Lagnado the strain of the UAE mess had a lot to do with his death.

Rep. James Howard, D-N.J., has complained to the State Department, which has tried to persuade the UAE government that it must honor its obligations. State is also warning other American business firms that it's risky to deal with the UAE sheiks.

But the diplomatic pressure may not save the DeAlmeidas. The company is on the verge of bankruptcy. Recently, many of their local employees in Abu Dhabi quit because they weren't getting paid.

The DeAlmeidas suspect the UAE wants them out of the country altogether. Then the Arab partners, including the brother-in-law, might be able to collect money owed to the company — and keep it themselves.

CUTTING OFF ESCAPE: Fresh from their victory in the fight over withholding savings-income taxes, the banking industry is now going after the last resort of borrowers who have gotten in too deep — in many cases thanks to the ease with which they have been able to get in over their heads through heavily promoted credit cards and other buy-now-pay-later plans.

The bankers' target is the bankruptcy law, which allows a consumer who has overextended himself to start over again with a clean slate. The American Bankers Association, joined by the Credit Union National Association, the National Consumer Finance Association, Sears Roebuck, Household Finance Corp. and Beneficial Management Corp., wants to amend the bankruptcy law so that those who file will have to pay pre-bankruptcy debts out of future income. This will effectively kill the fresh start they now get by going into bankruptcy.

The proposed legislation will affect only individuals, not corporations. It would hit low-income borrowers hardest.

The powerful interests behind the amendment have contributed heavily to their friends in Congress — more than $1.6 million in the 1982 campaign alone. Of the 100 House members who co-sponsored the bill, 92 got contributions from the five leading credit-industry political action committees.

The top 10 recipients of the credit industry's largess were Reps. Bill McCollum, R-Fla. ($13,050); Stan Parris, R-Va. ($12,050); Les AuCoin, D-Ore. ($11,750); Stephen Lybrook Neal, D-N.C. ($9,600); Butler Derrick, D-S.C. ($8,250); Robert Freeman Smith, R-Ore. ($7,300); John Spratt, D-S.C. ($7,050); George Hansen, R-Idaho ($7,050); Barney Frank, D-Mass. ($6,507); and Hal Daub, R-Neb. ($6,500).

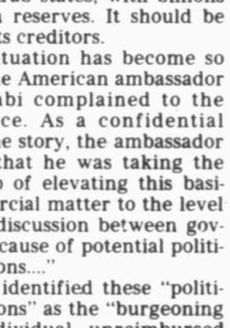

The Senate passed a similar amendment in April on a voice vote. Only Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, spoke out against the proposal, charging that it "tips the scales in favor of creditors." Metzenbaum got no campaign contributions from the credit industry.

INSIDE REPORT:

Mideast plan in dangerous sleep

WASHINGTON — President Reagan has unexpectedly and quietly revealed to the American Jewish community that Israeli settlements on the West Bank no longer pose an "obstacle" to peace, a policy change avidly sought by Prime Minister Menachem Begin that signals pre-election hibernation for U.S. Mideast policy and grave dangers for Egypt and Jordan.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

Such hibernation has become the norm as the American presidential election approaches, given the importance of the Jewish vote. But in contrast to the past, this year's abrupt switch from dynamic to passive attention toward the explosive Mideast could prove costly.

The switch certifies that the president's bold Sept. 1, 1982, peace plan is dead. With Begin due here for a triumphant official visit next month, Israel is exonerated from last year's global condemnation over the invasion of Lebanon. Ronald Reagan, whose own harsh criticism of Israel last year angered Begin, hopes that the 1984 Republican presidential campaign now can be conducted against a backdrop of solid U.S.-Israeli relations.

The president's surprising switch on new Jewish settlements on the Palestinian-populated West Bank came in a recent dialogue not yet generally reported. Unable to attend a national convention of editors and writers for Jewish newspapers in Coral Gables, Fla., May 26, Reagan did an amplified question-and-answer session over the telephone. "Do you now see the settlements ... as any obstacle to peace?" he was asked. Reagan tried to duck the question, but when Al Bloom of the Pittsburgh Jewish Chronicle repeated it, the president replied: "No, I don't, I really don't."

Although Reagan added a little later that he was hopeful for a "moratorium" on settlements during West Bank political negotiations, he had unmistakably junked the "obstacle to peace" formulation. That careful phrase has described the U.S. settlements policy throughout the Reagan administration.

At about the same time, a private warning to Washington was coming from Cairo: Even under the most promising of circumstances, the Soviet Union could not be excluded indefinitely from the Middle East. That warning was issued behind closed doors at a Manhattan seminar by Osama el-Baz, the political adviser to Egyptian president Hosni Mubarak, Reagan's most important Arab friend. It reflected Cairo's new outlook in the face of U.S. passivity.

Mubarak worries that this American hibernation over the next 18 months not only will confirm and expand the growing Soviet role in Syria but pose a dilemma for Egypt quite apart from the Kremlin's reentry into the region. Cairo can renew cordial relations with Israel despite continued colonization of the West Bank, inviting a political storm at home; or it can keep the Egyptian-Israeli connection in a freeze, provoking retaliation from the U.S. Congress.

If Mubarak is compelled to normalize Israeli relations without compensating concessions on the West Bank question, the threat to the Egyptian leader will not be merely political. U.S. intelligence specialists have warned Reagan's policymakers that Mubarak might follow Anwar Sadat as an assassination target of Moslem extremists.

Pre-election hibernation of U.S. Mideast policy also carries grave threats for Jordan. If Begin's government rushes ahead with settlements and Reagan does nothing, thousands of Palestinians will, in fact, be driven across the Jordan River into Hussein's kingdom. It would then be only a matter of time before Hussein is overthrown by dissident Palestinians.

Hussein has been forced publicly to threaten that he will close Jordan's borders if the Israelis drive Palestinians out of the West Bank. But U.S. policymakers know that Hussein could never carry out such a threat. Palestinians in his kingdom, numbering well over half the population, would not permit it.

One final danger arising from a free hand for Israel over the next 18 months lies in Lebanon, where Syria holds the trump card on withdrawal of Israel's invasion force. The swift post-invasion buildup of Soviet missile forces in Syria is certain to continue so long as Israel's army remains in Lebanon.

Withdrawal of Syrian and Israeli forces from Lebanon, the heart of Shultz's Lebanese policy, was most difficult even before the American presidential campaign intruded. With Mideast policy in Washington adjourned for the duration of that campaign, troop withdrawal will be impossible and Soviet influence will grow. Such is the high price of American politics.

CHARLEY REESE

U.N.'s goal would mean less liberty

When you look at people who persist in supporting the United Nations as a device for achieving peace, you have to conclude they are either naive or unconscious. I opt for the latter.

Charley Reese

When I say that it is foolish to suppose that the United Nations can achieve a world without war, I'm not even referring to the fact that the United Nations is a collection of murderers, dictators and pretentious frauds and is guilty of stomach-churning hypocrisy, double-standards and blatant disregard of its own charter.

I'm not even referring to the fact that it has become such a corrupt organization that not even the data collected by its allegedly humanitarian organizations can be trusted.

No, for the sake of argument, let us assume that every member nation is represented by an idealist of impeccable personal morals. Then, let's look at the charter, and see how the United Nations was intended to work "to achieve peace."

If you look at the charter, which few supporters of the United Nations ever do, you will see that what the United Nations was intended to be was merely a device by which the five World War II major allies would rule the rest of the world at the point of a gun.

Look at the charter. The General Assembly has no power. A resolution by the General Assembly and 75 cents will buy you a cup of coffee. The charter gives the General Assembly no power whatsoever to enforce its wishes on anyone.

The Security Council — in which the five World War II allies were given permanent seats and the veto — has all the power. And what does that power consist of? The power to raise an army and to wage war as it did once in Korea and later in Katanga.

What has made the United Nations ineffective (and by effective, I mean able to wage war to enforce its will on others) is that the five World War II allies had a falling out. The Soviet Union opted out of the alliance. The Nationalist Chinese were replaced by the Red Chinese. Consequently, with the two exceptions, Soviet and U.S. vetoes have prevented the Security Council from waging war and thus enforcing its orders.

Nevertheless, the point is that a world government is just like any other government — its power comes out of the barrel of a gun. No gun, no power; no power, no government. No less divergent authorities than George Washington and Mao Tse-tung have made this point.

Therefore it is naive and/or stupid to argue that a world government would mean an end of war. It would mean no such thing. It would simply mean wars would be fought by a multinational army under control of a world government against any nation or combination of nations which resisted its rule.

Furthermore, you cannot be a part of a world government without sacrificing your independence. The question for Americans is simple: Do you prefer to be ruled by an international government and its charter, enforceable by an international police, international courts and international army?

If the answer is no, then you don't want any part of the United Nations. The only way to make the United Nations effective is to trade off the independence of the member nations. As long as this festering relic sits there, it represents a potential threat to the sovereignty and independence of the United States and of every other nation.

An alliance among sovereign nations and a world government are two entirely different creatures. We have seen in our country how a federal union of "sovereign states" has become a central government which has all but reduced the states to mere branches of the federal government. The issue was settled with a war at a cost of nearly 500,000 American lives.

No doubt the number of lives necessary to establish a world government would be measured in the millions. There is no logical reason whatsoever to suppose that a world government would be any more idealistic than a national government. Force rules the world regardless of what flags the armies carry.

Rebels attack Nicaraguan camp

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — Rebels based in neighboring Honduras crossed the border and attacked a highway-building camp in northern Nicaragua, dynamiting more than 30 tractors and other pieces of Soviet-made heavy equipment worth $2.3 million, the Defense Ministry said.

A ministry communique Monday said no one was injured during the attack Saturday on the camp near the village of La Dalia, 125 miles north of Managua. It said there were 120 workers there at the time.

The camp was set up to building a new road linking the eastern part of the country, mostly isolated by jungles, with the populated western half. The road is being built with Soviet help, including trucks and other heavy equipment.

Exiles based in Honduras and in Costa Rica, to the south, have been intensifying corss-border raids in recent months in an effort to overthrow the ruling leftist Sandinista junta.

Guatemalans claim 14 killed

GUATEMALA CITY (AP) — The army says a patrol killed 14 guerrillas on a search-and-destroy mission in northwestern Guatemala.

A statement issued Monday by the army's public relations office said the fighting took place Saturday in the mountainous region of Nebaj in Quiche province, 165 miles northwest of Guatemala City.

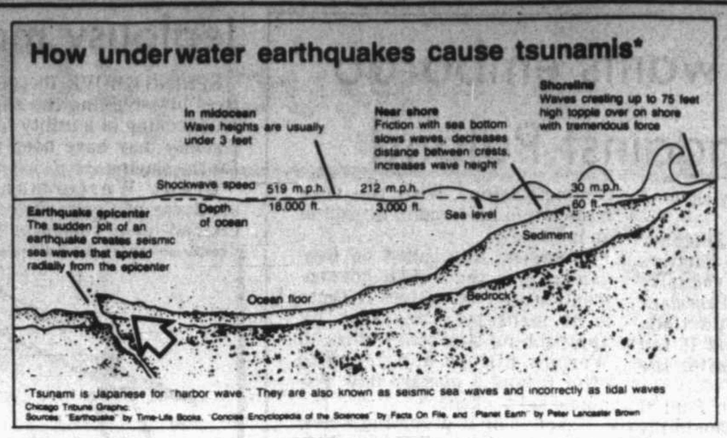

It said without elaboration that M-16 rifles and Soviet-made grenades were captured in the fighting with the guerrillas.

Four major guerrilla groups are fighting, mostly in the northwestern highlands and in the southwest, against the conservative military regime of President Efrain Rios Montt.

UN head supports free press

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar reaffirmed Monday his support for an "entirely free press," but urged the Western news media to give more prominence to Third World issues.

"A free press is a must in any civilized country," Perez de Cuellar told a delegation of news executives at a meeting organized by the Washington-based World Press Freedom Committee — WPFC.

Undersea quake strikes off coast of Japan

TOKYO (AP) — An undersea earthquake struck off the northern coast of Japan today, and officials warned of the threat of high waves along the coast, including stretches devastated by quake-triggered swells last month.

Two hours after the quake occurred in the Sea of Japan, Japan's Central Meteorological Agency said waves as high as six feet had been sighted in some areas, but it had no reports of serious damage along the coast.

Kyodo News Service said some utility poles had fallen in one area.

The Central Meteorological issued a tsunami (high wave) warning for the entire west coast of Japan, a distance of more than 800 miles.

The same west coast region on May 26 suffered a major quake, which triggered tsunamis causing extensive damage and killing 106 people in Japan's worst earthquake-related disaster in 15 years. Among the victims were two who perished on the Korean coast.

A tsunami alert was posted today along South Korea's eastern coast, officials said.

The quake was measured at 6.9 on the Richter scale, the U.S. Geological Survey reported in Golder, Colo.

The Central Meteorological Agency said the quake today apparently occurred along the same fault involved in last month's quake.

The Japan Broadcasting Corporation said all fishing boats and coastal vessels were told to leave various ports and head to the open sea. Experts say boats can ride the swells of a tsunami rather safely, but it is when the giant waves approach shore that they become dangerous.

Authorities ordered the evacuation of four coastal towns in Aomori prefecture (state), while police in other areas were warning people to seek shelter, the network said.

The meteorological agency said an urgent tsunami warning was posted for Aomori and Akita prefectures in northern Honshu, Japan's largest island, and for the southern part of Hokkaido, while a general warning was issued for Japan's entire west coast from Hokkaido southwest to Kyushu.

The quake's epicenter was put at 140 miles northwest of the city of Akita on the island of Honshu, the USGS said, adding that the quake struck at 3:25 p.m. local time (2:25 a.m. EDT).

Japanese government expels high-ranking Soviet diplomat

TOKYO (AP) — The Japanese government has expelled a high-ranking Soviet diplomat suspected of engaging in high technology espionage, the Foreign Ministry announced today.

Arkadii A. Vinogradov, a first secretary in the Soviet Embassy, left Japan Sunday after the Foreign Ministry conveyed a "strong request" that he leave, ministry officials said.

It was the first time a Soviet diplomat had been asked to leave Japan, officials said.

A ministry spokesman who asked not to be identified said the incident had nothing to do with recent moves among Western countries to expel Soviet diplomats on spying charges.

"We don't think this will affect Japan-Soviet relations," a ministry statement said. "We expect relations will further develop on a stable basis."

Vinogradov, posted in Japan since 1980, and a civilian engineer identified as B.N. Kakorin had been linked by the National Police Agency to a 1978 industrial spy case involving a "large computer company" located in Kanagawa prefecture, south of Tokyo, the officials said.

A police report in late May described the two as KGB officers and detailed a scheme in which they allegedly tried to obtain technical information from a retired executive of the unidentified computer company, the officials said.

Fujitsu Ltd, Japan's leading computer manufacturer, has its headquarters in Kanagawa, while Hitachi Ltd., NEC Corp. (Formerly Nippon Electric Corp.), and Toshiba Corp., also major computer firms, have installations there. All four companies, contacted by telephone, denied any involvement in the spy case.

Police said they questioned the two men before turning the matter over to the Foreign Ministry, and declined to comment further.

Kakorin resided in Japan from 1978 to 1982, the Foreign Ministry officials said. They said they did not know who his employer was.

Soviet Embassy spokesman Pavel Kotsuba, reached by telephone, said he had no knowledge of the reported expulsion.

Since January 1982, at least 75 Soviet diplomats, journalists and trade officials have been expelled from 13 other countries for alleged espionage activities, the largest groups being 47 thrown out of France and seven from Britain.

Lebanese report fails to identify killers

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — In a report based on a nine-month investigation, Lebanon's military prosecutor fails to identify the killers who massacred hundreds of Palestinians last fall at the Sabra and Chatilla refugee camps.

Prosecutor Assad Germanos, in a report submitted Monday to President Amin Gemayel, recommended no prosecutions for the time being and said the Israeli army bore legal responsibility for the massacre because its forces surrounded the two south Beirut camps during the Sept. 16-18 slaughter.

The report said "armed elements not from the Israeli camp participated" in the massacre and implied the killers may have been members of the militia of Maj. Saad Haddad, a right-wing Christian allied with Israel, based in south Lebanon on the border with Israel.

"Perhaps they (the killers) are from the border element or from among those who suffered from Palestinian excesses in previous years," the report said.

Germanos said the leadership of Gemayel's Christian Phalange Party were not responsible for the massacre.

An Israeli judicial commission that investigated the massacre last February said Phalange militiamen carried out the killings. It also said Defense Minister Ariel Sharon bore "personal responsibility" for allowing the militiamen into the camps.

Survivors of the massacre told reporters at the time the killers were members of the Phalange militia.

"There is no evidence that the leadership of the Phalange Party or the command of the (Phalange-led militia known as) the Lebanese Forces were aware in advance of what happened," the report said.

"The investigation did not establish that any of these two commands had issued orders to their fighters to support or take part in these (massacre) operations," the report added.

Germanos maintained previously that his investigation would not be a coverup, but sources close to the investigation predicted repeatedly that the final report would not blame any specific group.

Excerpts from the report were carried by the private Central News Agency, which is close to Gemayel and the Phalange Party.

Germanos, a Maronite Christian, told The Associated Press the summary of the report carried by the news agency was accurate but declined further comment. The agency did not indicate when or if the report would be made public.

"Since no line could be drawn to separate between military operations and individual acts that led to the massacre, we recommend a delay in judicial prosecutions for the time being, pending the definition of the competent judicial authorites," the report added.

Germanos was apparently referring to the killing of guerrillas as a "military operation" and the slaughter of women, children and civilian men as "individual acts."

Sharon told the Israeli Parliament after the massacre that Phalangists were allowed into the camps to "purify the area of terrorists," the term the Israelis use to refer to Palestinian guerrillas. He said they were told not to harm civilians.

Unlike Israel, where the massacre inquiry provoked an emotional self-examination and led to Sharon's removal as defense minister, Lebanon had no public outcry for an investigation. Even criticism by Palestinians and their Lebanese Moslem sympathizers was short-lived.

Germanos said in his report that 460 people died in the massacre, the highest confirmed death toll reported by the government. Germanos said last winter that 328 bodies had been found, while 991 persons were missing.

Israel offers doctors compromise

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — The Israeli government has come up with a new wage offer to entice striking doctors back to work. Some of the doctors, weakened by hunger strikes, have replaced other patients at understaffed hospitals.

Israel television said Monday that Health Minister Eliezer Shostak and Finance Minister Yoram Aridor agreed on a proposed wage scale for doctors in the public health service.

Prime Minister Menachem Begin met twice Monday with the two ministers to help them resolve differences and come up with a proposal.

At some hospitals, doctors said they were starting to discharge patients to make room for hunger strikers in need of treatment.

By late Monday, more than 1,500 public-service doctors — about one-third of those involved in the wage dispute — were on a hunger strike.

The two Cabinet ministers, with the new salary offer in hand, urged doctors to end their fast-spreading strike and start negotiating again.

In response, Dr. Ami Amit, a strike leader, said that if the proposal had merit, organizers would ask that doctors go back to work immediately.

Begin became directly involved for the first time in the 112-day-old wage dispute. He met a delegation of hunger strikers from Soroka Hospital in the Negev Desert city of Beersheba, who said they told him, "The situation is approaching absolute catastrophe, and it's a question of hours, not days."

Their spokesman, Dr. Naftali Shani said they gave Begin a petition signed by 10,000 Beersheba residents supporting the strikers.

Mondale favors boost to school aid

WASHINGTON (AP) — Accusing President Reagan of trying to make teachers the scapegoat for trouble in the nation's schools, former Vice President Walter Mondale says federal aid to education should be substantially increased.

Mondale, who is seeking the Democratic presidential nomination in 1984, said Monday that at least $11 billion in federal aid is needed to achieve the higher standards recommended by President Reagan's National Commission on Excellence in Education.

He also criticized a Reagan-backed proposal to give teachers merit pay.

Mondale predicted the education issue will stay at the forefront of the 1984 presidential campaign.

Grandmother fends off attacker

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — A 79-year-old grandmother hid in the dark, then used a cane to foil an armed robbery at her home, police said.

Police said the incident began at about 9:50 p.m. Sunday. The doorbell rang at the elderly woman's southeast Portland house, and her 59-year-old daughter answered the door.

The daughter said a man and woman rushed in, and the man pointed a gun at her — pushing her to the ground.

"He came into the kitchen, but it was dark and I don't think he saw me," the grandmother said. "I waited until he came in reach and then I hit him with my cane.

Judge keeps tortoise from owner

SAN DIEGO (AP) — A Municipal Court judge has ruled that there is probable cause to keep a 250-pound tortoise nicknamed "J.P." in the custody of the San Diego Humane Society.

Judge Manuel Kugler said Monday that evidence indicated the tortoise had suffered from dehydration and lack of shelter from the sun at its former home.

The reptile was removed from Jett's Petting Zoo in College Grove shopping center this spring after public complaints that it was being mistreated.

Gene Jett, the zoo owner, has been charged with misdemeanor animal cruelty and neglect.

Donor buys Mustang for mother

DAYTON, Ohio (AP) — A woman who says she spends her money anonymously to help others has purchased a 1974 Ford Mustang for a single mother of three.

Karen Pierce received the automobile June 2.

Because of uncertainty over how friends and acquaintances would react, the donor consented to a telephone interview only if her name was not used.

"I don't act on a whim or a fancy," she said. "I definitely believe God uses people." She said the purchase of the $2,300 car for Ms. Pierce was the most expensive gift yet, and the cash came out of her savings.

Ms. Pierce, who has not had a full-time job for three years, said she doesn't know why she was chosen but "it sure made me feel very special."

Campaign to elect delegates

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National New Democratic Coalition has announced plans to spend $100,000 in a state-by-state campaign to elect liberal delegates to the 1984 Democratic National Convention.

Billie Carr, a Texas member of the Democratic National Committee and head of its Liberal-Progressive Caucus will direct the special delegate selection campaign, Harry D. Offenhartz, the coalition's chairman said Monday.

Ms. Carr said the coalition will encourage its 80,000 members along with representatives of labor unions, environmentalists, supporters of the nuclear freeze and others to run for seats at the San Francisco convention.

Support wanted for pension bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Mark O. Hatfield, R-Ore., says Equal Rights Amendment foes who contend that sex discrimination can be handled with separate legislation should support a bill designed to eliminate economic inequities.

But so far, ERA opponents have not come forward to support the Economic Equity Act, Hatfield said Monday at a Senate Finance Committee hearing on pension law reform.

Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kan., chairman of the committee, said that while the Reagan administration has taken no formal position on the specific legislation, it has indicated "strong support for the goal" of eliminating inequities.

The administration opposes the Equal Rights Amendment.

Anne Moss of the Pension Rights Center told the Senate panel that "statistically, a wife can expect to outlive her husband, but statistics also tell us she probably won't get a pension once he's gone. For example, less than 40 percent of retirees choose to provide survivors pensions for their spouses."

The Economic Equity Act would require pension plans to provide a survivor's pension to a spouse whose mate worked at least 10 years under the plan, no matter when the working spouse dies, unless both partners agree in writing to give up the survivor's pension.

This provision is aimed at widows who are most likely to be in need of protection — lifetime homemakers, Ms. Moss said.

Theresa B. Stuchiner, representing the Association of Private Pension and Welfare Plans, said the provision requiring written consent to waive survivor benefits probably would not protect a surviving spouse's interest.

"Spouses who are not accustomed to participating in family financial decisions probably will merely sign the consent form at the participant's request without making an informed judgment on the matter," she said.

Ex-aide wants embargo lifted against Poland

Hearst Feature Service

WASHINGTON — Dr. Zbigniew Brzezinski, President Carter's Polish-born national security adviser, today called on President Reagan to begin lifting the trade embargo against Poland if the country remains calm after the pope's visit.

As soon as Pope John Paul II leaves Poland, Reagan should lift selective sanctions, including the ban on air travel, to encourage the communist regime there to cancel planned political trials and begin moving towards "genuine reconciliation" with the free trade union movement, he said in an interview.

Brzezinski also called on Reagan to give the Polish government further incentives if there is no military crackdown by approaching America's allies in Western Europe and Japan to offer Poland a massive new economic aid package.

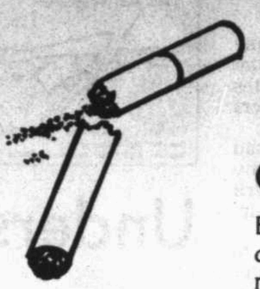

Asked if he is proposing a new carrot-and-stick-type policy, Brzezinski said: "If it buys them (Poland) Western acceptance for a policy of reconciliation rather than a policy of martial law."

Jealousy may be motive in killing

SPRING GROVE, Ill. (AP) — Detectives investigating the shooting and bludgeoning of a utility foreman say jealousy may have been the motive for the slaying.

Brent Westerman, 29, an employee of Commonwealth Edison Co. had many romances in the past few years, Lake County Sheriff's Investigator Michael Blazincic said Monday.

Westerman was found dead June 14 in his rural Spring Grove home, a few hours after he returned from work at the utility's Zion nuclear plant.

Larry Nelson holds up his trophy after winning the 83rd U.S. Open Monday when he beat out defending champ Tom Watson for the title. A check of $72,000 went along with the trophy.

It's elementary Watson

Larry Nelson finally stands out from crowd

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

OAKMONT, Pa. — With the United States Open Golf Championship hanging in the balance, sitting out there, waiting for somebody, anybody, to take it, Larry Nelson bogeyed the final hole at Oakmont Monday.

It was the kind of mistake you simply don't make when you're dueling for one of the major titles with as efficient a golfer as Tom Watson.

Here was Watson, winner of 28 American tournaments and four British Opens, Player of the Year in four of the last five years and seeking to become the first man since Ben Hogan in 1950-51 to win consecutive Opens.

And here was Nelson, a soft-spoken, slender 35-year-old Georgian with just five victories in nine years on the tour and only one major, the 1981 PGA at Atlanta, to his credit.

Clearly, this was David and Goliath. And David couldn't afford any blunders.

It would be easy to lose Larry Nelson in a crowd. No trouble at all.

He is 5-foot-9, 155 pounds, a soft-spoken, slight man, 35-years-old and fighting a receding hairline. He looks like your next-door neighbor.

Except for one thing. Your next-door neighbor isn't the reigning United States Open Golf Tournament king.

Larry Nelson is.

They had come into Monday's rain-delayed final holes tied at 4-under par for the tournament. Nelson, the underdog, had seized the advantage with a marvelous 62-foot roller coaster putt that had glided over a couple of terraces in the green and into the cup on the 16th hole.

"I wasn't thinking about anything except getting close enough to the hole to make the next putt," he said. "You can't make it from 60 feet."

Nelson putted and the ball started its roller coaster ride toward the hole.

"Close to the hole, it started slowing down, but it had the right speed over the last rise," said Nelson.

As the ball slid smoothly over the grass, Nelson's caddy, Russ Craver, shouted "Break! Break!"

The putt obeyed, dropping softly into the hole as both Craver and Nelson did a little dance.

Your move, Dr. Watson.

The defending champion answered with par golf, not good enough as long as Nelson stayed even the rest of the way.

But Watson is like a panther on the golf course, poised to strike, waiting for an opponent to give him the opening. And Nelson spread a welcome mat at a most inappropriate time, the final hole of the tournament.

Clearly this was a disaster, the kind of anguish duffers have lived through since the first putt failed to fall. Clubs have been broken over knees or tossed angrily into water traps for less serious misdemeanors.

But Larry Nelson just shrugged it off.

"It was up to him," he said rather matter-of-factly. "I had finished 72 holes at 4-under par. If he finishes 5-under, he beats me. Four-under, he ties me. Three-under, I win."

Simple, huh? Your move, Dr. Watson.

"I was aware he had bogeyed," said Watson, his sun visor — a most inappropriate piece of equipment for this soggy Open — shoved back on his head. "I had an opportunity when he opened the door. I couldn't step through it."

Par golf by Watson on the final two holes would have caught Nelson. Instead, the defending champion got into trouble on No. 17. After driving into the fairway, he hit his second shot into the right hand bunker.

Now Watson has been in bunkers on No. 17 before in the Open. See Pebble Beach, 1982, when his incredible chip shot gave him the tournament.

"I thought, 'Why not hole it?'" he said. "I was in a down slope in some sand. I had to get it up in the air. I hit a good shot, but it was not good enough."

Watson's ball came to rest about six feet from the cup. He missed the putt for par, leaving himself a shot of almost that same distance for the bogey. This time the ball dropped.

Nelson had survived the crisis.

Watson had one last chance — No. 18. A birdie there would have forced a playoff.

"That's like the bottom of the ninth inning and having to hit a home run," he said. "I didn't do it."

Instead, he made par, including a meaningless last-shot putt that was merely 50 feet long. Routine for the good doctor.

Did the champion feel the pressure?

"It's not a lot of pressure," he said softly. "When you can hit the shots, there's no pressure at all."

Elementary, my dear Watson.

Cubs back in last place

BEAUMONT — The Midland Cubs finished last in the first half Texas League West race and Beaumont's Gators finished first. After the first game of the second half, the two teams are back in familiar positions.

The Gators ripped Midland 14-3 here Monday night in the second half opener, putting Beaumont back in first place and Midland back in last, but it was nice being tied for the league lead for one full day when nobody played Sunday.

Beaumont's Pat Casey was the tyrant on this day as he knocked in six runs on two hits and a sacrifice fly.

Jeff Ronk added a solo homer, his seventh round-tripper of the year, in the fourth for the Golden Gators.

Midland's Don Hyman drove in two runs with a double in the sixth.

Mark Vanderbush, 8-4, was the winning pitcher. Stan Kyles, 2-7, was the loser.

Vanderbush tossed seven innings of eight-hit ball to get the win. He had a no-hitter going through three innings and worked out of jams in the fourth and fifth when the Cubs got two runners on in each frame.

The Cubs got all three runs in the sixth on a one-run double by Tom Lombarski and a two-run double by Don Hyman.

But Casey was too much for the Cub pitching. He got a sacrifice fly in the third, a three-run triple in the sixth and a two-run double in the seventh.

Despite the loss, Midland's A.J. Hill ran his hitting streak to 11 straight games with a single in the seventh. The Cubs also stole five bases in the game, including two by Rick Baker.

The El Paso Diablos, who finished second in the first half race behind Beaumont, also got off to a fast second half start Monday with an 8-7 win over San Antonio.

Beaumont's win over Midland ended a two-game winning streak by the Cubs. The two teams play again today at 7:30 p.m. The Cubs don't return home until July 2 against El Paso.

Michigan, Stars take USFL wins

By The Associated Press

Michigan's Novo Bojovic didn't need to have a lot of time to contemplate the consequences of a missed field goal in the final minute against the Washington Federals.

Trailing 25-24 with 52 seconds to go, the 22-year-old place-kicker knew the Panthers couldn't afford to lose if they wanted to stay in contention for a playoff spot in the United States Football League.

Bojovic responded with an 18-yard chip shot to give Michigan a 27-24 victory, and a 10-6 record in the tight Central Division race.

The Panthers and Tampa Bay trail Chicago by one game in the division. And both teams, along with Boston at 10-6, are still in the race for the wild-card spot with two weeks remaining in the season.

"I was trying not to put too much pressure on myself," Bojovic said of the winning kick. "But everything was on the kick. Even though it was a short one, it was the biggest kick of my life."

In the only other USFL game Monday night, Philadelphia turned back Oakland 12-6.

Other results in the 16th week of play were Chicago 29, Birmingham 14; Denver 32, Arizona 6; New Jersey 20, Los Angeles 13; and Boston 24, Tampa Bay 17.

Michigan led 17-9 at the half on Bojovic's 19-yard field goal, Bobby Hebert's 37-yard pass to Anthony Carter and John Williams' 1-yard run. The Federals got their first-half scoring on Kim McQuilken's 4-yard pass to Billy Taylor and Sandro Vitiello's 51-yard field goal.

Washington, 2-14, cut the deficit to 17-15 in the third period on Doug Greene's 35-yard interception, but the Panthers went back out 24-15 on Ken Lacy's 1-yard run. The Federals took the lead 25-24 on Taylor's second TD, a 1-yard run, and Vitiello's 45-yard field goal.

Lacy finished the game with 81 yards on 22 carries while Craig James topped the Federals with 13 yards for 89 yards.

David Trout kicked a career-high four field goals, including two in the final period, to lift the Stars in the battle of place-kickers. Oakland's scoring came on Kevin Shea's field goals of 24 and 47 yards.

The Stars, already assured of a playoff spot with the Atlantic title, are 14-2. Oakland fell to 8-8, but still hold a one-game edge of Denver and Los Angeles in the Pacific.

In games this weekend, Boston is at Oakland and Arizona visits New Jersey on Saturday.

Switzer, Dupree denounce story

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Douglas S. Looney's article originally was entitled "Storm Clouds Over Oklahoma," but it was Looney, not his subject, who was accused of creating the thunder and lightning.

Sports Illustrated magazine's June 20 editions had not even reached the newsstands last week when Oklahoma Coach Barry Switzer and star fullback Marcus Dupree denounced Looney's story about them, accusing the writer of deceptive tactics and unfair reporting.

"I'm totally apalled and shocked," said Switzer.

"I think he has something against Switzer," said Dupree.

"It's just another story," said Looney.

A picture of Dupree, a sophomore-to-be who is considered by many the leading candidate for the Heisman Trophy, is on the cover. The headline, which was rewritten before publication, reads: "Clash of Wills at Oklahoma ... Heisman Hopeful Marcus Dupree: Can He Coexist With His Coach?"

Looney wrote of what he found to be a dismal relationship between Dupree and Switzer, the young star's unhappiness at Oklahoma and Switzer's bumpy ride as the Sooners' head coach. Dupree is quoted several times, although he has denied saying most of the things attributed to him.

Reaction to the story at the school and throughout the state has been defensive, with school officials and some sports writers accusing Looney of wanting to "get" Switzer and the program after Switzer asked the writer not to do the story.

"It was a needless article," said Mike Treps, director of sports information at Oklahoma. "Doug was trying to show us who was boss. We got the impression he published that article simply because Barry asked him not to."

In fact, Looney says it was Switzer's reluctance to help him with the story that piqued his curiosity.

"It's ironic that anyone would talk about a vendetta against Barry by me. Barry Switzer and I have been friends for eight years ... we've exchanged Christmas cards for the last several years. He knows and I know this is not a personal thing."

The idea for a story on Dupree began when Looney was asked by members of the magazine's staff who he thought was the premiere college football player this season.

"I said, 'Well, I think Dupree down at Oklahoma probably is the best,' and they said, 'Fine, go on and do a piece on him.' So originally it was going to be one of those, 'Here's the best player of the year, good for him' type stories.

"But everyone at the school almost immediately tried to keep me from doing it. Barry called to ask me not to do it ... he was so mad at Marcus at the time that he really didn't want an article written about him."

Switzer had been upset at Dupree since the Fiesta Bowl, when the freshman ran for a record 239 yards but was caught from behind twice. The coach said his star pupil was out of shape.

He was unhappy again this spring because Dupree sat out the entire practice season with a pulled hamstring, the same problem that caused him to pull up lame during the bowl game.

Looney listed those problems, among others, as reasons Dupree was considering leaving the school after next season — one of the statements the player denies making.

Navratilova, Lloyd seek to keep streaks

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Martina Navratilova and Chris Evert Lloyd are the top seeds in women's singles of the 1983 Wimbledon — and the title for either would keep a very important streak intact.

Navratilova, the defending champion, is attempting to become the first repeat champion in the women's singles since she turned the trick in 1978 and 1979.

The woman she defeated for both those titles, and for last year's coveted silver plate, was Lloyd.

Lloyd is seeking her fourth consecutive Grand Slam tournament title, as she won the 1982 titles in the U.S. and Australian Opens and was victorious in last month's French Open.

THE GRAND Slam can be achieved only by winning the four titles in the samme calendar year.

Navratilova and Lloyd hope to duplicate the winning ways of their male counterparts, top-seeded Jimmy Connors, who captured this title a year ago, and No. 2 John McEnroe, both of whom advanced to the second round with straight-set victories on Monday.

Navratilova was scheduled to take on Beverly Mould of South Africa, while Lloyd was to meet Alycia Moulton.

Also scheduled for first-round action today was be third-seeded Ivan Lendl of Czechoslovakia in the men's singles, and No. 3 Andrea Jaeger and No. 4 Tracy Austin in the women's singles on the famed courts at the All-England Lawn Tennis and Croquet Club.

Connors eliminated Eddie Edwards of South Africa 6-4, 7-5, 6-3, while McEnroe stopped fellow American Ben Testerman 6-4, 7-6, 6-2.

But opening day did see several shockers. Nduke Odizor of Nigeria upset No. 4 Guillermo Vilas of Argentina 3-6, 5-7, 7-6, 7-5, 6-2, and Italy's Claudio Panatta easily ousted No. 7 Jose Luis Clerc, also of Argentina, 6-1, 6-4, 6-2.

Chris Lewis of New Zealand pulled off the third upset of the day, eliminating hard-serving Steve Denton, the No. 9 seed, 6-4, 4-6, 7-6, 4-6, 6-3 as darkness began to fall at the All-England Championships.

"I was certainly not 100 percent out there," Vilas said after Odizor staved off one match point before battling his way to victory. "It was at the back of my mind," the left-hander said, referring to the one-year suspension from Volvo Grand Prix tennis handed him by the Men's International Professional Tennis Council for allegedly accepting appearance money.

Vilas had denied the charges and is in the process of appealing the MIPTC's action.

"A year out of tennis can ruin a player's career," Vilas said. "It would put me completely out of the rankings and I'd have to qualify for every tournament."

VILAS HAD match point at 6-5 in the third-set tie-breaker. But Odizor, the only black African on the pro tennis tour, battled back to capture the tie-breaker 8-6. He then wrapped up the fourth set with a love game, including two aces, and raced out to a 5-1 lead in the fifth set.

Odizor closed out the match with an ace and three winners, then thrust both arms into the air on the final point as 14,000 fans at center court gave him a standing ovation.

Clerc was never in the match against Panatta, who has been overshadowed by his older brother, Adriano, a former French and Italian Open champion.

Both Argentinians, however, are much more at home on slow clay courts instead of the fast grass courts of Wimbledon. It was their first appearance here since 1981. They missed last year's tournament because of the conflict between Britain and Argentina over the Falkland Islands.

Another popular winner was 10th-seeded Billie Jean King, at 39 the "Old Lady" of the women's tennis tour. King, who has won a record 20 Wimbledon titles, delighted her fans with a 7-5, 6-3 victory over Elizabeth Sayers of Australia.

Neither Connors nor McEnroe had a smooth path to their victories.

"I didn't think this was a great match," McEnroe said. "There were parts where I played pretty well and parts where I didn't play well. I was getting lazy on my volleys."

THE WINNER here in 1981, McEnroe was called five times for foot-faults, while Testerman was called four times for the same infraction. At one point in the match, McEnroe asked the foot-fault linesman:

"Sure you're watching the right match, pal? Do you know what a foot fault is? I haven't had a foot-fault called on me since I've been in Europe and you've called five so far already."

Later, the left-hander from New York turned the the crowd and said, "Quiet." The response from the fans was applause.

Connors, who defeated McEnroe in the championship match here a year ago, was down in the second set before roaring back.

"When he led 4-1 in the second set, I just kept going for my shots," Connors said. "I always believe in going for my shots, no matter what is happening. I hit some good ones, he missed a few and I got out of trouble."

Among the other winners in the women's draw Monday were No. 11 Barbara Potter, No. 15 Kathy Rinaldi and 1977 Wimbledon champion Virginia Wade of Britain, while among those advancing to the second round in the men's draw included No. 12 Kevin Curren of South Africa, No. 13 Brian Gottfried, No. 14 Bill Scanlon, No. 15 Hank Pfister and No. 16 Tim Mayotte.

Cunningham reaps reward

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Billy Cunningham has reaped his reward for leading the Philadelphia 76ers to the National Basketball Association championship — a three-year contract making him the highest paid coach in the history of the league.

Cunningham has signed a contract estimated at $400,000 per year, which ended speculation he initiated that he might give up coaching.

Club owner Harold Katz told a news conference Monday, "Billy is the highest paid coach in the NBA, and probably in the history of the NBA."

Katz said the only reason it took so long to agree on the contract was Cunningham's decision on whether he wanted to come back and devote another three years to basketball.

"He took his time and as far as I'm concerned the best thing Billy does is coach, and I told him that people should stay in the profession that they do the best ..."

Cunningham, 40, said that the most important thing in his deciding to return was Katz.

"I sincerely was thinking about leaving coaching. Harold was very flexible with me. It was a situation where a lot of coaches were moving around and there were a lot of people available, but Harold was willing to let me clear my head and come to a decision."

Now that he's back, Cunningham lost no time talking about the future.

"I just think we have put a group of men together that will come into training camp with as good or better an attitude concerning the upcoming season and will be mentally prepared and ready to go," Cunningham said.

"We realized our goal and it was just such a great thing to achieve, why not try and do it again."

"The 76ers cannot become complacent," Cunningham said. If we do, we won't have a chance to repeat as champions. And we have all intentions of repeating. We can improve as a defensive team and we surely have a lot of room to improve as an offensive team."

Grand slam highlights American LL tourney

Zane Ledbetter of the Tower Diablos proved Monday night that there is always hope as long as you have one out to work with.

Ledbetter hit a grand slam homerun with two out in the bottom of the sixth inning Monday at Sparks Park to give the Tower Diablos a 9-7 come-from-behind win over the Western Orange Crush in first round action of the American Little League City Championshmp playoff tournament.

Tower entered the sixth inning trailing by a 7-5 count to Western. With two out and the bases loaded, Western had e chance to preserve the win but Ledbetter connected off Wayne Hollingshead to produce four runs and the victory.

Mike Pearson picked up the win for Tower while Kraig Linbille and Jerry Delk both doubled in the Tower victory.

In the only other tournament game Monday, the Mid City Angels produced a 4-1 win over the North Central Braves as Crawford went the distance. Mid City runs came on homeruns by Thompson and Mowles while the lone North Central tally came on a homer by Lucky.

Tower and Mid City move to the winner's bracket of the double elimination tournament while North Central and Western will have to fight for survival in the loser's bracket. A loss by either team will drop them from tournament play.

Action picks up again today with two games at Sparks Park, beginning at 6 p.m.

Carter to give up football

DALLAS (AP) — Michael Carter, Southern Methodist's all conference middle guard, says he will give up his last year of college football to concentrate on the shot put and winning a place on the U.S. Olympic team.

Carter holds the high school world record in the shotput — 81 feet, 3½ inches — and has won three indoor and three outdoor NCAA titles. He helped the Mustangs to win both indoor and outdoor NCAA track titles this year.

"My goal is the Olympics and making the U.S. team," said the 6-foot-2, 275-pound Carter. "I've never been able to concentrate solely on one sport and I feel this will help me reach my goal."

"I wish him well in whatever he does," said SMU football coach Bobby Collins.

Hernandez comes back to haunt Cards

Pittsburgh sweeps Chicago Cubs

AP Laserphoto

The Atlanta Braves hold a reunion at home plate Monday night after a grand slam homer by Glenn Hubbard, second from right. Hubbard connected off Houston pitcher Frank LaCorte in a 7-1 victory.

By The Associated Press

It was just last week that Keith Hernandez was traded from the St. Louis Cardinals — and already he's hitting like he owns New York.

Wearing a Mets' uniform for only five days, the first baseman has nine hits in 19 at-bats with his new club, including a two-run homer Monday night that helped the Mets beat his former team 6-4 in the second game of a doubleader. The Cardinals won the first game 3-1, and it was none other than Hernandez who drove in the Mets' run with a groundout.

"I feel that I have a new lease on life," said Hernandez. "The change in atmosphere has been great. It's a complete new challenge. I was in a slump and not swinging the bat good at all.

"The biggest thing was my inconsistency. I wasn't able to put back-to-back games together. Tonight I felt great."

What was it like to be playing against his teammates of eight seasons?

"It was like any other game up to a point," replied Hernandez. "It was a strange feeling, but once you go between the white lines, it's you against the pitcher. I'm a Met now and my job is to try to help them win as many games as possible."

Following Hernandez' home run, his fourth of the season, the fans at Shea Stadium cheered loud and long until the Mets' new first baseman stepped out of the dugout to acknowledge them.

"That was a great feeling," said the two-time NL All-Star. "It's only happened twice in St. Louis. The fans are a lot more subdued than in New York."

Hernandez also had a single in the nightcap to help Walt Terrell win the contest in his first start of the season for New York. Terrell, recently recalled from Tidewater, pitched 5 2-3 innings, giving up all four runs.

The Cardinals won the opener on the combined pitching of rookie Kevin Hagen and veteran Bruce Sutter.

Pirates 5-6, Cubs 4-5

Richie Hebner's pinch-hit home run in the 10th inning lifted Pittsburgh over Chicago in the opener of their doubleheader.

Hebner put a 1-1 pitch from Bill Campbell over the right field fence at Three Rivers Stadium for his first homer since September 14, 1982. Kent Tekulve, 3-1, got the win in relief.

The Pirates had tied it at 4-4 in the seventh on Bill Madlock's two-out double that scored Marvell Wynne from second.

The Pirates won the second game on Marvell Wynne's bases-loaded single in the 13th inning.Don Robinson, 1-0, won the second game in relief while Campbell, 2-4, became the loser for the second time during the evening.

National League Roundup

Expos 5, Phillies 0

Ray Burris fired a three-hitter and Andre Dawson knocked in three runs with a pair of singles and a solo homer to lead Montreal over Philadelphia.

Burris, 3-2, making only his third start of the season, walked two batters and struck out three in going the route for the first time this season. The shutout by Burris was his first since October 14, 1981, against the Los Angeles Dodgers in the National League Championship Series.

The loser was Steve Carlton, 7-8, who only lasted until the fifth inning and struck out three to boost major league career high 3,545, four more than Houston's Nolan Ryan.

Padres 4, Dodgers 1

Ed Whitson and John Montefusco combined on a three-hitter and Sixto Lezcano hit three singles and scored twice as San Diego downed Los Angeles.

Whitson, 2-4, struck out five and walked one batter before getting relief help with none out in the ninth from Montefusco, who recorded his second save. Jerry Reuss, 6-6, took the loss, the fifth in his last six decisions.

Steve Garvey, a former Dodger, actually delivered the winning run with a sacrifice fly in the third, giving the Padres a 2-0 lead at the time.

Braves 7, Astros 1

Atlanta second baseman Glenn Hubbard slugged a grand slam and Pete Falcone fired a four-hitter to pace the Braves over Houston.

Falcone, 5-1, gave up a run on Phil Garner's first-inning RBI single, but allowed only four baserunners the rest of the way while completing his first game this year. Falcone struck out five and walked two.

Thanks to Chris Chambliss' three RBI on a double and a single, Atlanta had built a 3-1 edge before the second grand slam of Hubbard's career put the game out of reach in the fifth. Hubbard also had a double in the game.

Giants 4, Reds 3

Jeff Leonard lined a two-out single in the 10th inning to lift San Francisco over Cincinnati. Darrell Evans started the winning rally with a one-out single off reliever Ted Power, 1-4. After Jack Clark flied out, Evans stole second and Chili Davis was walked intentionally.

Leonard then delivered the game-winning hit to score Evans from second and make a winner of Greg Minton, 2-3.

After Eddie Milner sent Cincinnati ahead with a run-scoring single in the the eighth, the Giants tied it in the ninth on Leonard's leadoff double and Bob Brenly's two-out triple.

NRC, House committee investigating Texas nukes

By TOD ROBBERSON
WASHINGTON BUREAU

WASHINGTON — The Nuclear Regulatory Commission and a House Interior and Insular Affairs subcommittee are investigating use of potentially defective equipment and other potential violations of NRC standards at the two partially built nuclear power plants in Texas, a congressional staff member close to the investigation said Monday.

The full scope of the investigation will not be made public until later this month, according to an Interior and Insular Affairs staff member, because the investigation still must be reviewed by the NRC.

But the investigation is part of a broader survey disclosed Monday during an oversight and investigations subcommittee hearing about NRC leaks of draft inspection reports to utilities and nuclear power companies targeted for review for violation of NRC guidelines.

During those hearings, subcommittee chairman Edward J. Markey (D-Mass.) criticized NRC administrator John Collins, head of the commission's regional headquarters in Arlington (Texas), for leaking the findings of a draft inspection report about potentially defective nuclear plant pumps to the manufacturer of those pumps.

Markey said the leaks were "in clear violation of the (NRC) manual of operations," which forbids circulation of NRC draft inspection reports outside of the agency. Markey said it was "extremely disconcerting" that no disciplinary action had been taken against Collins.

The NRC is investigating pumps madEhq⅞X:e Hayward Tyler Pump Co., of Burlington, Vt., for defects in quality as alleged by Hayward Tyler employees who helped build the pumps.

The pumps in question were installed in both the Comanche Peak and the now canceled South Texas nuclear power plants, both of which are only partially built. The pumps also were installed in operational plants throughout the nation, but NRC officials said during the hearing that they are not yet certain how many nuclear power plants currently have the pumps in operation.

NRC officials acknowledged that Collins and another NRC staff member prematurely released the findings of their investigation to the pump manufacturer. Markey questioned NRC Chariman Nunzio Palladino and other commissioners about the possibility that the leaks compromised the investigation.

Texan thinks he has found proof of promise

By SARAH MCCLENDON
Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The mad scramble to find the exact quotes which President Reagan used in 1980 to say he would help get rid of the Windfall Profits tax on oil has resulted in one Texan finding what he thinks is proof that Reagan promised to abolish the tax.

Dr. R. L. McDonald of Laguna Vista, Texas wrote Rep. Kent Hance, D., Lubbock, who set off this search to say he has found proof in three references. The search started after the Supreme Court recently ruled the Windfall Tax was constitutional.

In Citizens for the Republic, News letter, with Ronald Reagan as founder and chairman Emeritus and with Lyn Nofziger as chairman, on November, 1980, there appeared an article headed "Reagan Committed to GOP Platform", and one of the "major planks", according to the article, was "Seek repeal of the Windfall profits tax as it applies to small-volume royalty owners, new oil, stripper wells, tertiary recovery and heavy 'crude' and accelerate the 'phase-out of the tax on oil oil.'

In another printed copy of the Republican Platform dated July 14, 1980, at Detroit, pages 42 and 43 read: "We (Republicians) believe that the so-called Windfall Profits tax (which is unrelated to profit) should be repealed as it applies to small volume royalty owner, new oil, stripper wells, tertiary-recovery, and heavy crude oil and that the phase-out of the tax on oil oil should be accelerated."

Dr. McDonald also enclosed an article from the Valley Morning Star of June 14, 1983 saying that Hance's office and the Permian Basin Petroleum association acknowldged they were unable to locate any statement in which Reagan flatly promised without qualification to try to eliminate the tax.

Dr. McDonald said the above quotations from the Republican platform constituted "an unqualified statement calling for repeal of the windfall profits tax in my opinion...I hope this information will help...I sincerely believe that the windfall profits tax should be repealed."

Ranger kills two more

ST. JOHN'S, Newfoundland (AP) — The offshore oil rig Ocean Ranger sank in a storm 16 months and took 84 men to their deaths. On Monday, an underwater explosion erupted from the rig and claimed two more lives.

The explosion, about 100 yards below the surface, killed two Dutch divers who were part of a team trying to refloat the giant rig, now upside on the ocean floor. The men's identities were not immediately released.

Man held in connection with bomb threat against airline

GRAPEVINE (AP) — A 36-year-old San Diego man was jailed in connection with a bomb threat against a Jet America flight, according to Dallas-Fort Worth Regional Airport police.

The man was being held in an airport jail while police continued their investigation, said Airport Police Chief Tom Shehan.

Jet America Flight 201, en route from Dallas-Fort Worth to Long Beach, Calif., was ordered to return to the airport at 8:30 a.m. Monday, 30 minutes after takeoff, police said.

A rental car agency at the airport received a call that a bomb had been placed on the flight, which was carrying about 90 passengers, Shehan said.

Dallas police kill Sunnyvale man

DALLAS (AP) — Police shot and killed a man outside an east Dallas bar after the man pointed a pistol at officers, police said.

Police responded to a disturbance call about 9:36 p.m. Monday at a bar when a man carrying a .25-caliber revolver emerged from the club, Lt. Mel Southall said. Police ordered him to drop the weapon, but officers opened fire after he raised his arm, Southall said.

The dead man was identified as William Gregory Smith, 32, of Sunnyvale.

Fire's cause still undetermined

FORT WORTH (AP) — Laboratory tests have failed to pinpoint what started the June 14 fire at the Ramada Inn that killed five people and injured 34, although there were "suspicious" elements to the blaze, fire officials say.

Tests at a federal laboratory in San Francisco found no trace of accelerants, said Fire Marshal Don Peacock.

He said fire investigators are being slowed in their efforts to determine the cause of the Ramada Inn fire because of additional "suspicious" fires at another Fort Worth hotel and at a hospital.

Testimony to start in Skelton case

ODESSA (AP) — Attorneys have to select just two more jurors and two alternates to clear the way for next week's scheduled start of testimony in the trial of John D. Skelton, who is accused of capital murder in the bombing of an Odessa man.

The 10th member of the jury was selected Monday, giving attorneys the rest of the week to pick the remainder of the panel and alternates. The testimony is expected to start next Monday.

Skelton, 53, is accused of capital murder in 46-year-old Joe Lee Neal's death. Investigators said a dynamite bomb apparently was rigged to the ignition system of Neal's truck.

LIVINGSTON (AP) — The shooting death of a Death Row inmate killed after stabbing a law officer during an escape attempt will not damage the state's case against his alleged accomplice, a prosecutor said.

Joe Dugas, 37, staggered about eight feet and died outside a grocery store after the scuffle Monday, police chief Bill Smith said. Officials said Dugas was being returned to a Huntsville prison unit after being questioned by prosecutors in Beaumont.

Smith said Russell Landry, an investigator for the Jefferson County district attorney's office, shot Dugas twice with a .357-caliber Magnum pistol.

Dugas and Linda May Burnett were convicted and sentenced to death in the July 1978 kidnapping and slaying of 2-year-old Jason Phillips of Woodward, Okla. The child was visiting his grandparents in Winnie, about 30 miles from Beaumont.

The boy's body was found in a shallow grave with his parents, Elmer and Martha Phillips, and his grandparents, Bishop and Esther Phillips.

Jefferson County District Attorney James McGrath said he had planned to subpoena Dugas to testify against Ms. Burnett, whose 1979 conviction was overturned. Her trial begins July 18 in San Antonio.

Prosecutors have said they intend to try Ms. Burnett in the death of Martha Phillips in the San Antonio trial.

McGrath said Dugas' death will not damage his case against Ms. Burnett.

"The prosecution has ample evidence to convict Burnett again with or without Dugas," he said.

Smith said Landry had stopped to use a grocery store's restroom about 10:45 a.m. and intended to put Dugas in the front seat with driver Pat Hayes.

Dugas, who used a key to free one hand from the cuffs he was wearing, leaped from the back seat of the car when Landry opened the door to let him out, Smith said.

Dugas stabbed Landry once with a spike and tried to snatch the lawman's service revolver, Smith said. But Landry grabbed the gun and killed him.

Landry was in stable but guarded condition after a 1½-hour operation to repair a cut to his liver, said Ann McLain, spokeswoman for St. Elizabeth Hospital.

McGrath said Jefferson County Sheriff Dick Culbertson was trying to learn where Dugas got the spike and the L-shaped key.

Cranston believes economy can't be revived until arms race ends

DALLAS (AP) — Sen. Alan Cranston of California, a candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination, says the economy cannot be revived until the arms race is ended.

Cranston, in Dallas for a fund-raiser Monday that brought in an estimated $30,000 for his campaign, said he supports a "strong national defense," but believes a "verifiable" nuclear freeze is needed.

"I don't think significant reductions can be made (in the defense budget) until we negotiate with the Soviets," said Cranston.

Cranston, who announced his candidacy Feb. 2, also said he is rapidly gaining ground on former Vice President Walter Mondale of Minnesota and Sen. John Glenn of Ohio in the early race for the Democratic presidential nomination.

"I believe the strength of my message is responsible for my progess," said Cranston.

Cranston also said he believes U.S. Sen. Gary Hart of Colorado is no longer a strong contender.

However, he said he did not think Hart or the other two declared contenders — former Florida Gov. Reubin Askew and Sen. Ernest Hollings of South Carolina — would drop out of the race before next year.

Indians opposed to bones exhibit

FORT WORTH (AP) — Human remains from an exhibit at the Fort Worth Museum of Science and History were removed at the request of an organization of American Indians opposed to the display of Indian remains, museum officials said.

The museum agreed Saturday to remove the skull and bones from the two displays after meeting with representatives of the American Indians Against Desecration, officials said.

A 1,000-year-old skull of a woman was removed Saturday and a pre-Columbian skull and fragments of vertebrae were taken off display Monday after non-Indian bones were found to replace them, said Pat Norris, the museum's history curator.

After the decision to remove the bones was announced, the Indian group performed a ceremony at each display, blowing smoke from sage into the cases, Norris said.

Missionary in El Salvador views violence as way of life

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

When Jeff Adams arrived in El Salvador seven years ago, there weren't more than a few demonstrations in the square of the country's capital.

Today the story is different.

Since 1978, the "demonstrations have gotten bad," said the 34-year-old Baptist missionary. "A hotly-contested election brought killings to the demonstrations in the capital square."

Adams remembers the election well.

"We lived down the street from the election center. There was firing all night. It's ludicrous to say that the army forced the Salvadorans to vote.

"They wanted to. The people waded through pools of blood to vote, but they weren't necessary for the government or the leftists. The leftist movement is not a popular movement like the media would like you to believe."

Jeff Adams

Adams, pastor of the Miramonte Baptist Church in San Salvador, said he wasn't aware of El Salvador nine years ago, but now "there are times that you're fearful; times that are kind of rough."

Adams recalled one of those "rough times" during an interview with The Reporter-Telegram Saturday.

"One of our church members was assassinated coming to church," he said. "He was a son of a general. It was a political assassination. A couple of kids walked up and took out their machine guns and killed him."

Although Adams said he's not immune to the violence, he has grown to accept it as a way of life in the tiny Central American country.

Because Adams is in El Salvador as a Baptist missionary, he preferred not to comment on the political situation. But he did say the "extreme left doesn't want participation in the government, they want control. This is what happened in Nicaragua and I think that this is one of the problems.

"But you can't make a general statement about something that has been going on for 400 years," Adams added. "There are several factions within the leftist movement and not all of them are harmonious.

"Because the church is not involved in the politics — we are neither neutral nor particpating in politics — I've never been bothered by anyone there. You see, we're (Baptist Church) not trying to walk the tight rope between two sides. Our job, by prayer, is to transform lives and bring God's word to these people."

Adams, who left the United States in 1974 to "spread the gospel" in Central America, spent a year in Costa Rica, another year in Nicaragua and then traveled to El Salvador. This weekend, Adams was in Midland to speak at the Kelview Heights Baptist Church.

Despite "the situation," Adams said he intends to live out his life in San Salvador, the capital of El Salvador.

"Violence has never made me want to leave," he said, explaining that he and his family are "perfectly happy where we are. We love the Latin American culture. They want what Americans want — a job, a home and security."

Adams said the violence has slowed down in San Salvador, but he never did shelter his two daughters and wife from the violence.

"We'd go to bed every night under open fire — bombs, but violence in the captial city has begun to diminish this last year.

"We've been concerned and take the necessary steps to stay away from problem areas. We couldn't go out after dark at one time. You learn to adjust. These are dedicated people. They're not going to roll over and play dead. I've seen an outbreak of violence where everybody hits the floor and when it's over they go back to their business."

Adams contends that the media accounts in El Salvador "are just not so." He said he doesn't deny the violence, the killings.

"A revolution usually begins in a country and moves to the capital, but in this case it began in the capital and moved to the country — the eastern part of the country.

"A repressive oligarchy and a leftist movement is romantic, but it's just not that simple" he said, explaining "many of the journalists there are from the 60s generation. And the leftists are sophisticated. They know how to get the media attention, while the government has been clumsy with their relations with the press.

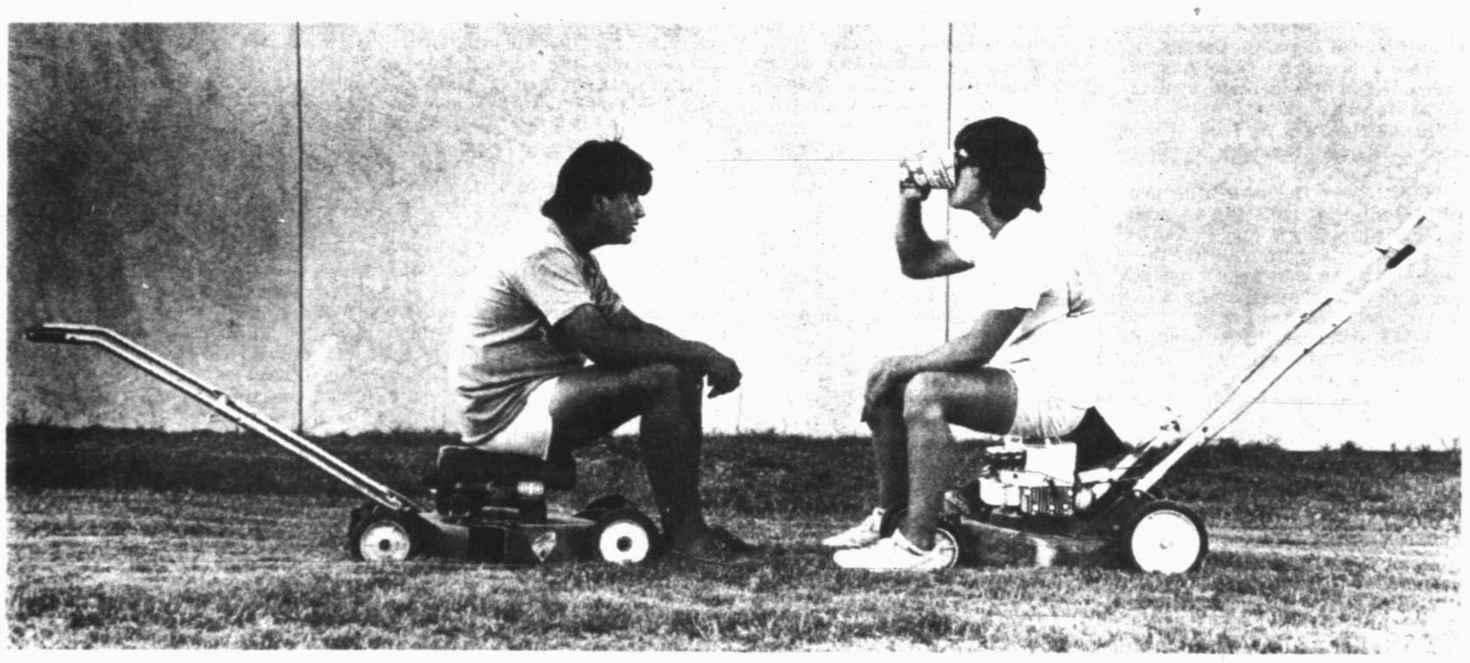

"The stories we've gotten (in the United States), although not entirely untrue, are exaggerated."

Adams said living in San Salvador with his wife and two children is no more dangerous than living in New York, Washington, D.C., or even Dallas.

"Instead of the CBers in town telling you where the smokies are (in San Salvador), they tell you where the trouble is. You learn to live with it, but not necessarily accept it.

"You assume we are constantly under the table, but it isn't so. Life goes on. We buy groceries and take the children to piano lessons.

"Obviously, we're moved when we see people killed, but we don't choose sides. The answer is not to change one group of corrupt men with another group of corrupt men. The majority of these people want what you want."

Officer hits Midlander in attempt at suicide

From Staff and Wire Reports

DIMMITT — A Midland man and his 13-year-old nephew are in critical condition today in a Lubbock hospital, following a head-on collision involving a police officer Monday morning on U.S. 385 near Dimmitt.

Robert Young Jr., 47, of Midland and his nephew Michael Stephenson of Clayton, N.M., were injured when they collided head on with the police officer who initially failed an apparent suicide attempt, authorities said.

Young's wife, Jane, 45, girls basketball coach at Midland High School, was treated for minor injuries and released at Lubbock Methodist Hospital.

Department of Public Safety officials said the officer, Vaughn Allan Maddox, 30, was trying to kill himself when he drove into the oncoming vehicle early Monday morning. Maddox then shot himself through the heart with a .38 caliber pistol.

DPS spokesman David Wells in Austin said Maddox left a note inside his patrol car, but Wells would not divulge the contents.

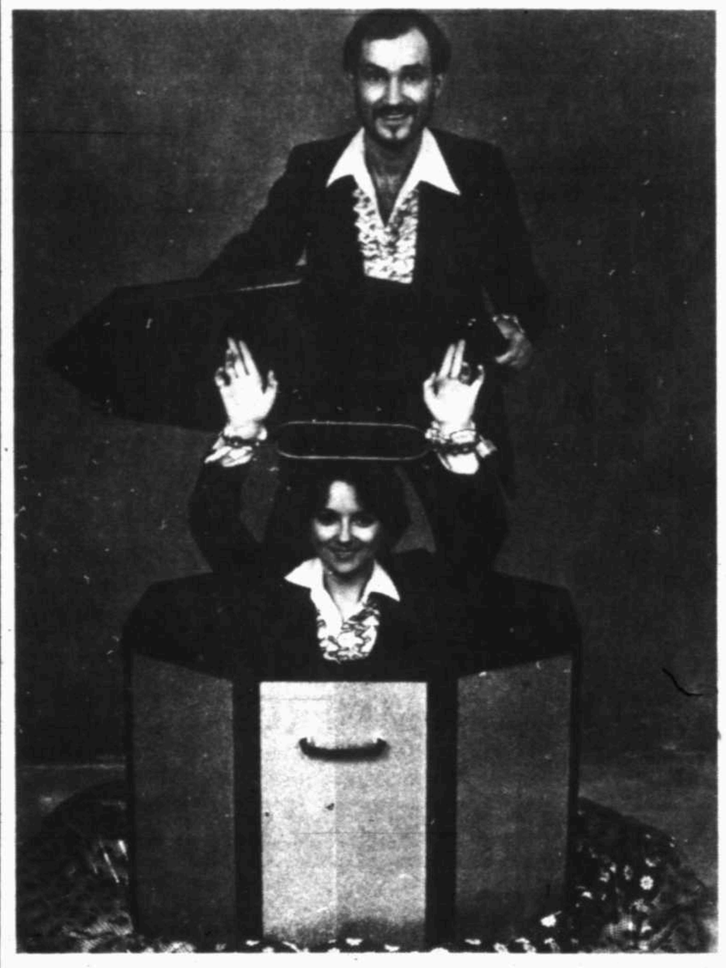

An autopsy conducted in Amarillo indicated Maddox died from a bullet wound to the heart.

According to the DPS, Maddox had been currently under investigation for burglary in Dimmitt.

Maddox, a former policeman in Plainview, Odessa and Dumas had been on the Dimmitt city police force for three months, according to Dimmitt police chief Don Franklin.

He was suspended from the Dumas police force on Dec. 18, 1981, following an arson investigation into eight Dumas fires. He had been with the Dumas police force for six weeks at the time of the suspension.

According to the DPS, he had discovered three of the fires and had apparently arrived early enough to prevent extensive damage. All eight fires took place during the early morning hours while Maddox was working the midnight shift.

Magic and mystery are coming to Midland July 31 with the 2nd Annual Magic Show. Sponsored by the Brotherhood of Vietnam Veterans, the show will begin at 2 p.m. in Midland High School and feature a multitude of magic for all ages.

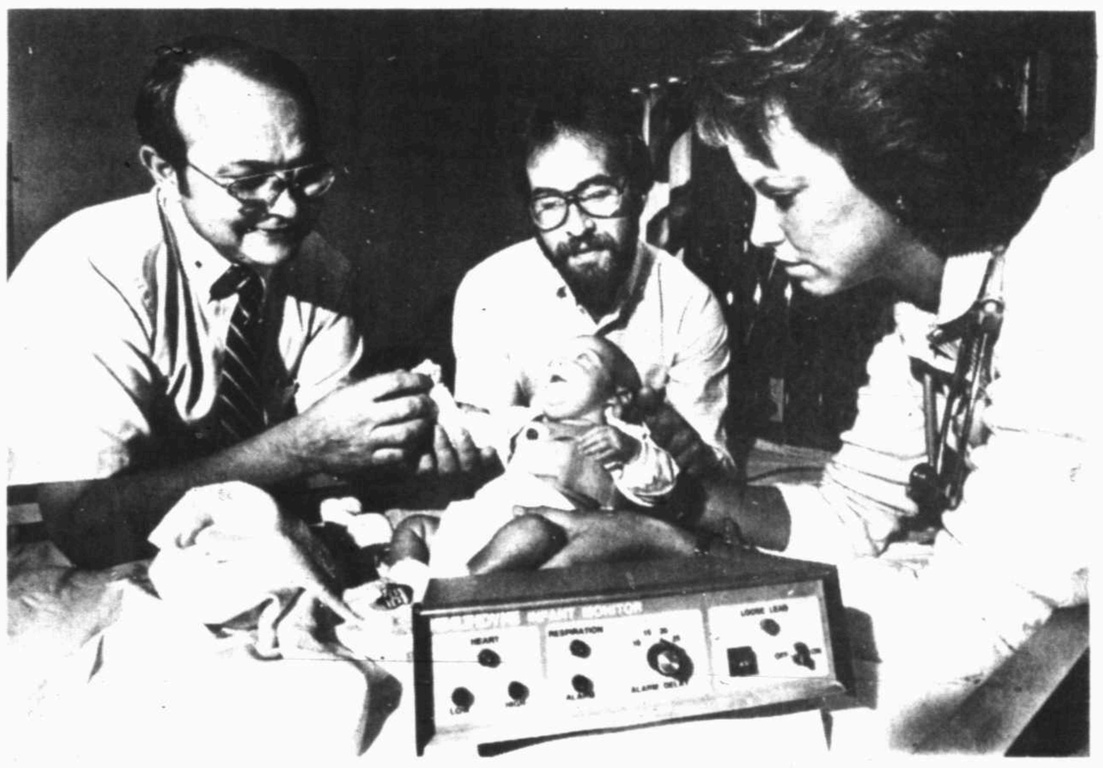

Veterans to sponsor magic show

Magic and mysticism are coming to Midland at the end of July in the form of Bobby Cordell, master magician.

Spotlighted in the 2nd Annual Magic Show sponsored by the Brotherhood of Vietnam Veterans, Cordell will exhibit a wide variety of magical feats, from slight-of-the-hand tricks to his own version of Houdini's Substitution Trunk Trick, assisted by his wife Valarie.

Cordell, a magician since he was 8 years old, has won awards from the Texas Association of Magicians and from the International Brotherhood of Magicians, and holds the world's record for continuous magic, executing card tricks for a solid 36 hours. The Annual Magic Show, begun last year by the BVV, is a fundraising event which assists Vietnam veterans suffering from exposure to Agent Orange.

The performance will begin at 2 p.m. Sunday, July 31, at Midland High School. Tickets are $3.50 and may be obtained by calling 694-2970.

Tender loving care

Three-month-old Cecile Pratt, pictured, is the second premature baby to receive care through Midland Memorial Hospital's new portable apnea monitor, used to monitor respirations of infants. First used by Amanda Stevens, a 27-week premature baby born Nov. 12, 1982, the machine was partially financed through a $1,285 donation made by La Leche League of Midland, Childbirth with Preparation teachers and mothers, and the Morning, Downtown and Southside Lions Clubs. Some of the medical care costs for Amanda will be defrayed through the donation. Cradling Cecile are, from left, Morning Lions Club President George Thomas, Director of Social Services at MMH Alan Schroeder and MMH registered nurse Janet McKown.

For some veterans, Vietnam experience is brain implant

After a decade of trying to sweep the memory of Vietnam under the rug, America finally seems willing to listen about the horrors, mistakes and lessons learned from a war nobody seemed to want.

The existing turmoil in Central America may have something to do with the willingness of the American public to open its ears about the "Forgotten War". After all, no one wants another Vietnam after the rug has been cleaned. It took a decade of spring cleaning to get the smell out of the house.

The truth of the matter, however, is that some of us never forgot Vietnam in the first place. For some of us who lived through the Vietnam experience, Southeast Asia is a brain implant that will only pass with death.

I have itching memories of 'Nam, many of which scream questions where there are no answers. I am not bitter for having served a tour of duty in Vietnam because there is no one to be bitter with. But it is a past that I would like to forget and there is no forgetting.

My memory of a United States Army "grunt" is flooded with the images of 1970 — 125 degree heat, more rain in a week than I had seen in my lifetime, 60 days at a time without a bed or bath, "humping" through the jungle with every step a booby trap horror show, missing a bride of three weeks, blood-sucking leeches, mosquitos the size of B-52 bombers and Vietnam's own special version of "Turista".

That brief list, of course, comprises the unforgettable daily discomfort of war. Memory has a way of soothing those pains. Memory does nothing to soothe the other pains.

My mind will never erase "Dink" Pomerinky. I can still see him lying face up in a rice paddy, dead at 18 years old from one of our own claymore mines which had been turned on us during the night by the Viet Cong. Only an hour before, fun-loving "Dink" was pitching pennies to see who got the extra can of C-ration fruit, one of the real pleasures of "bush" life. I beat "Dink" out of that fruit and I'll never forget it. I put the fruit in his backpack as a helicopter came for his body.

I remember all the medi-vac helicopter pilots who risked everything to get the wounded out of battle. Once a kid in my platoon got a wound in the shoulder and was having trouble breathing. I got on the "horn" and explained to a helicopter pilot, "I've got a man down and he's hurting, but we are receiving heavy fire." He replied, "Don't worry, we're coming in on the wings of prayer."

The helicopter was hit 17 times, but flew off with a badly hurt private, who eventually returned to the states. I don't know who that pilot was, but I'll never forget him and his power of prayer.

But the most memorable man I ever met was "Doc", another who gave his life at age 21. I don't think I ever knew his real name, but "Doc" was our platoon medic for five months. But what was unique about him was the fact that he was a conscientious objector.

"Doc" never carried a weapon of any kind — except a surgical knife which he used to cure every minor ailment known to man. The fear of being unarmed haunted me the whole time I was in Vietnam, but "Doc" wouldn't touch a weapon.

I once asked "Doc", "Why didn't you just go to Canada instead of going to the Army?" He replied, "This may sound silly in this day and age, but I love my country. I don't believe in this war, but Americans are dying here and this is the only way in good conscience that I can serve."

"Doc" died a few weeks later while trying to get to a wounded soldier during a brief "fire fight". I got to talk to him before he died, and he told me, "Everything's A-OK, but I think it's all over now. I've done what I had to do and I have no regrets. Check to see if everyone is OK."

The ~~first day President~~ Carter took office he welcomed back all the "objectors" who fled the country to bind the old wounds. That act wounded me because I knew a conscientious objector who remained an American every day of his life.

Vietnam was never forgotten, at least not by those who were there. The memories will always remain — and the questions.

Minorities will be future scientists

WASHINGTON (AP) — Hispanic and black children, a significant portion of the school-age population in a number of states including Texas, may provide one of the best pools from which to draw the nation's future scientists and mathematicians, according to recent congressional testimony.

Existence of this pool was portrayed as one of the few bright spots in an otherwise ominous national educational picture, which has sparked a new debate over how to produce the engineers and scientists America needs to compete with foreign countries, particularly Japan.

Dr. William W. Turnbull, former president of the Educational Testing Service in Princeton, N.J., told the Joint Economic Committee last week that, nationwide, population trends would result in a steady decline in the number of high school students.

"We are headed for a drought of new talent — a steady drop in the numbers of young people we must count on to develop the expertise we need for the future," Turnbull told a hearing called by Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, to explore the problems of educating future scientists.

"THESE TRENDS point to a shrinking labor force in which people with highly developed skills will be at a premium, underscoring our need to make the most of the talent resources available to us," Turnbull said.

However, Turnbull said the decline would be most severe in the number of high school students from white, middle-class families, traditionally the greatest source of graduates.

There will be little or no decline in the number of children from "the historically disadvantaged subgroups whose birthrates are higher," he said.

However, traditionally, such children have been least likely to continue in school and receive a high school diploma, especially in academic fields, Turnbull said.

While more than 30 percent of white children receive diplomas with "academic" concentrations, as opposed to vocational or more general fields, only 20 percent of black and 10 percent of Hispanic or American Indian children do, Turnbull said.

BUT HE said the national decline in the number of high school students "may create a climate unusually favorable" to persuading minority students, their parents and educators "that much larger numbers of these young people should continue in school, especially in quantitative academic fields.

"Their present under-representation is an educational and social tragedy," said Turnbull. "We are likely soon to see that it is also an economic threat both to educational institutions that are short of students and to corporations that are short of well-educated entry-level people."

In Texas, Hispanics and blacks comprise more than 43 percent of the students in Texas' public schools, according to the Texas Education Agency — students who might be expected to take special advantage of the growing nationwide demand for trained scientists and technicians.

But at the hearing, educators from Texas echoed warnings heard in other states, that there are not enough qualified teachers to teach the math and science courses so desperately needed for all students, white, black and Hispanic.

Barbara O'Neal, president of the Texas State Teachers Association, told Bentsen that Texas would experience a shortage of about 4,300 qualified teachers each year for the rest of this decade.

FURTHER, SHE said, many positions are "being filled by inadequately trained teachers;" teachers who because of shortages are given emergency teaching permits to conduct courses which they are not regularly certified to teach.

"It is clear that the shortage of teachers — not to mention equipment and other resources — is now acute in the area of math and science," she said.

"But all the available evidence indicates that the problem confronting public education and, therefore, this nation, is much broader than that," she said.

Her sentiments were echoed by Betty Pyle, president of the Texas Classroom Teachers Association.

"We do have some very serious problems in public education, and if we are to prevent social and economic deterioration of our nation, we cannot wait any longer to resolve these compelling issues," she said.

Hearing slated on TESCO's rate hike request

The Public Utilities Commission has scheduled a public hearing in Midland Thursday on Texas Electric Service Co.'s 16.1 percent system-wide rate hike request.

The hearing will be from 3 to 6 p.m. in City Hall Council Chambers, 300 N. Loraine St.

TESCO filed the rate hike proposal June 9. It calls for an additional $195 million a year in annual revenues. Customers' average monthly bill would go up by 16.7 percent. A customer paying $50 a month likely would pay $60.

Fort Worth was the only other city selected for a hearing. Sarah St. Clair, spokesperson for TESCO, said the PUC possibly chose these two sites because they are located at opposite ends of the electric company's service area. TESCO serves almost 600,000 customers in 48 counties in north and west Texas.

Presiding over the hearing will be PUC Commissioner Peggy Rossen, an El Pasoan appointed by Gov. Mark White in March. Also attending will be a PUC hearing examiner, PUC attorney and someone from the commission's public information office.

Attending from TESCO but not participating in the hearing will be C.W. Barclay, western division manager of Midland; Bob Browder, manager of regulatory services; and a TESCO attorney.

Ms. St. Clair said these TESCO representatives will be there to hear the public's comments and to answer questions if requested by the PUC. "This is not our hearing; it was called by the PUC," she said. "We don't have a part on the program."

This marks the second time a series of hearings on a rate hike are being held outside Austin, where the PUC is based. The first centered on a rate hike by General Telephone.

"We think it's a good idea," added Ms. St. Clair. "It will give customers a chance to participate in the regulatory process. People can go down (to the Council Chambers) and say how they feel about TESCO."

A spokesman in the PUC office said these public hearings are still in an "infant stage. On the more major rate cases it will be a standard practice. This TESCO proposal is a major case."

The Thursday session is a non-evidentiary hearing, said the spokesman, which means there will be no formal testimony or evidence recorded. But in keeping a semblance of order, he said the PUC representatives probably will require the people to register their name and address before they speak.

Public hearings on General Telephone's rate increase were successful, said the PUC spokesman, noting that more than 100 persons turned out for one of the sessions. "Problems with service were discovered," he said.

Although new to the commission, Ms. Rossen has had experience in rate hike cases, said the PUC spokesman. She was a member of the City of El Paso's Public Utilities Regulatory Board and served a term as chairman.

Man who allegedly ran into couch charged with murder

Bond of $50,000 has been set on an eastside man accused of murder after he allegedly ran his car into a couch on which four men were sitting Saturday night.

Justice of the Peace Charlie Sprayberry set bond Monday on Willie Joe Brown, 24, of 1321 East Cuthbert. He is charged with the death of 43-year-old Homer Ray Taylor of 1301 E. Chestnut Ave.

Taylor and three other men were sitting on a couch behind the Workman's Club at 1108 E. Illinois Ave. when a car came down the alley and rammed the couch about 8:30 p.m. Saturday, according to police. Brown was arrested at the scene.

Two of the other men suffered broken bones and were in satisfactory condition at Midland Memorial Hospital today. The third survivor was not injured.

Brown remained in the city jail this morning. He is also charged with two counts of aggravated assault with a deadly weapon. An earlier argument apparently prompted the incident.

Services for Taylor are set for 11 a.m. Wednesday at the Greater Ideal Baptist Church.

Prison escapees face charges in woman's abduction

PASADENA (AP) — Two recaptured prison escapees face new criminal charges in the abduction of a 28-year-old woman who was tied and left in her car, officials said.

David McIntosh, 25, and Rex Edwin Marts, 24, were charged with aggravated robbery and aggravated kidnapping Monday after they were arrested.

The two men were among four who escaped from a prison unit in Sugarland Saturday night, prison officials said. Authorities are still searching for Thomas Bryan Roy, 26, convicted of aggravated robbery. The fourth escapee, convicted murderer Michael Basham, 29, was captured Sunday morning.

Pasadena Det. Sgt. J.T. Brewton said McIntosh and Marts were arrested about 1:15 p.m. They are accused of abducting Jo Ann Pollock of Alief as she was getting into her car about 6:30 a.m., Brewton said.

"They came up behind her and put a piece of metal in her back," Brewton said.

The two tied Ms. Pollock, put her in the back seat, then drove around Houston for several hours, Brewton said. He said they stopped several times to buy gasoline before leaving the woman and the car in a convenience store parking lot.

Woman reports burglary of rifle, jewelry worth $2,840

In one of several burglary complaints lodged with city police during the past 24 hours, Olga Bustamente of 4508 Neely said her house was broken into Monday. Taken were a 30-30 caliber rifle and jewelry worth a total of $2,840.

Assorted items, including car tires and stereo equipment, valued in excess of $2,400, were taken from a storage unit at Midland Drive and Loop 250, according to Phillip Stokes of 3505 Cardinal Lane. The burglary occurred sometime over the weekend.

Video equipment worth $1,763 was reportedly taken from the Curtis Mathis Home Entertainment Center, 4366 W. Illinois Ave. Officers responding to a burglar alarm about 2:45 a.m. today found that a glass door had been broken to gain entry.

And Phyliss Sue Henderson of 1300 Cottonflat Road told officers stereo equipment and two TV sets were taken in a break-in at her residence sometime Monday night. Total loss was placed at $832. Entry was gained by prying open a rear door.

Revenues have increased since last year for CRMWD

BIG SPRING — Through five months, the Colorado River Municipal Water District is above target on finances.

Revenues of $4,782,451 were up by $590,955 over the same time a year ago. And operational expenses of $2,656,477 were up by $302,767.

Bulk of the increase in operations came from greater costs for energy.

The figure through the first five months of 1983 was $1,770,783, an increase of $219,172 over the same period last year. Much of this occurred in May, which rallied sharply over May last year. But it pushed energy charges up to $414,999, a gain of $124,290 over May 1982.

Excess revenues over operating expenses for the initial five months of the year stood at $2,125,973, of which $1,866,087 was transferred to debt service.

Most of the 1,842,864,000 gallons of water produced in May came from Lakes J.B. Thomas and E.V. Spence, or 1,402,451,000 gallons, which was 80.6 percent of the total. Through May the lakes have produced 5,792,412,000 gallons, or 82.3 percent of the total. Ward County wells jumped to 352,775,300 gallons in May after being given a winter's rest, and was 19.1 percent of total output.

At the end of May, Lake Thomas was at elevation 2227.39 and contained 46,000 acre feet of water, little over one-fourth of capacity. Lake Spence was at elevation 1880.62 and contained 288,000 acre feet of water, slightly less than 60 percent of capacity.

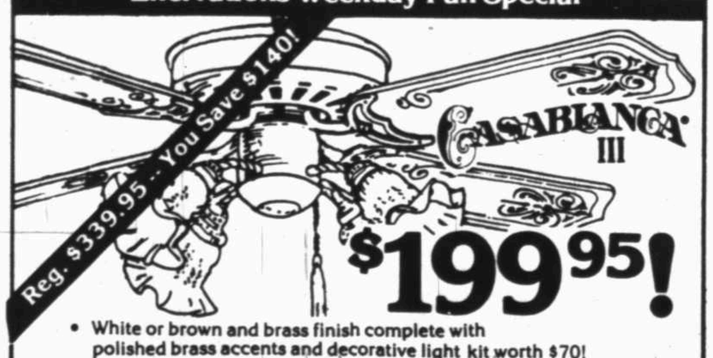

Immigration law to be considered

From Wire Reports

WASHINGTON — The House Agriculture committee will write its views on admitting foreign laborers to harvest crops when it finally marks up the immigration bill in session today.

Recently the House committee heard from only one Texan, Doug Waldrip of Lubbock, president of the National Cattlemen's association, the nation's largest stock organization. He asked for the legal admission of more temporary working forces. But Waldrip thinks it would be unfair to penalize the employer who gives jobs to illegal aliens. That would be making the grower administer the law, he said. Instead, he suggests the federal government provide more money and manpower for the Border Patrol.

'80s bring demand for boardroom tailoring

MEN'S FASHION

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Clothing industry leaders attending a men's fashion convention say they are encouraged by the "baby boom" generation's switch from the tattered street clothes of the '60s to the boardroom tailoring of the '80s.

"We're expecting a good year for the industry," said Norman Karr, executive director of the Men's Fashion Association of America, sponsor of the week-long convention.

"I think that for the first time in a good while, there is a distinct interest in tailored clothing or dress-up wear and business wear," Karr said.

"The baby boom generation is in middle management and management positions and they are looking to establish the look of businessmen. At an earlier time the didn't respect the establishment, and those were the years of the long hair and tattered clothes. Now they're just recognizing this is the look of the executive."

Among the items to be on display, Karr said, are lines of double-breasted suits, out of vogue since the 1940s but showing signs of a comeback.

He predicted double-breasteds, in new colors, patterns and fabrics, could take 15 percent of high-priced men's suit sales and may account for 5 percent to 7 percent of the middle range.

Another trend in mens suits is to accentuate the shoulders, using what tailors call the "7-inch drop" a trade term designating suits, generally for younger men, with chest measurements 7 inches larger than their waist measurements.

Karr said another of the industry's bright spots is sportswear, which didn't exist until after World War II.

Among the established sellers are jogging outfits, tennis clothes and golf garb, with warm-up suits coming on strong.

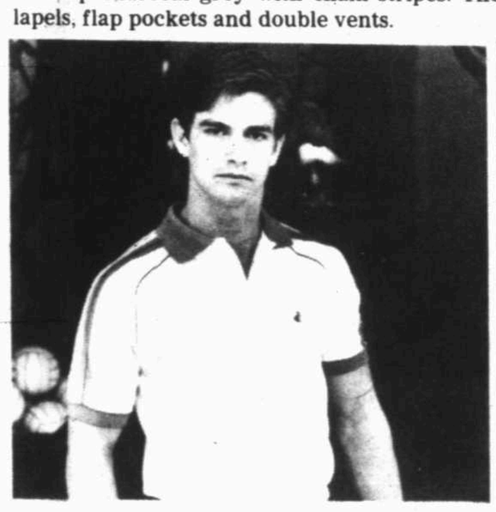

He said the suits, in colorful velours, are emerging from gyms to be used as leisure wear.

Shirts with contrasting collars have an established clientele and show strong sales growth potential, Karr said.

"The solid body with white collars has caught on without question," he said.

A lively mix of colors brightens this cotton and polyester jersey. The polyester cotton twill athletic short has a self-waistband.

Winter white is styled for the tennis enthusiast in a polyester and cotton white knit shirt featuring a khaki collar, cream/khaki, navy shoulder stripes and navy seam piping.

DEAR ABBY

Mother's poem still touches daughter

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: You can imagine my surprise and great joy when I read your column in the Los Angeles Times and saw the poem entitled, "The World Is Mine." It was written by my mother, Dot Aaron, some 35 years ago.

Through the years we have heard from so many people around the country who have found inspiration from it, as did "Marti" from Aurora, Colo., who sent it to you asking who wrote it. It has been a long time since I have seen it in print, and you can't imagine how deeply touched I am to know that my mother's words continue to live on. She was a super, multi-talented lady who passed away in 1969 — much too young, and with so much more to do.

I am newly widowed at age 53 and have recently moved to California from St. Louis. Thank you for printing my mother's poem. It meant so much to me. — SUZANNE AARON MATHES

DEAR SUZANNE: Aha! Your letter is the conclusive verification I had hoped for. To date I have heard from readers in nearly every state (and Canada, too) informing me that Dot Aaron had written that lovely poem many years ago. And shame on those few who themselves claimed authorship.

DEAR ABBY: I have been doing a lot of reading lately and I just found out that my husband is no bargain (in bed, I mean). We've been married for 11 years, and I never thought I had anything to complain about until I read up on how other men performed.

According to some of these sex surveys, my husband is at the bottom of the list, and I feel cheated.

I wonder how many other women feel the same? — CHEATED IN YPSILANTI

DEAR CHEATED: Don't believe everything you read. If you've never had anything to complain about, you weren't "cheated."

Sex surveys can be tricky. I suspect that more people lie about their sex lives than the combined total of those who lie about their age and weight.

CONFIDENTIAL TO ANYONE WHO LOVES TO LAUGH: Get George Burns' book, "How to Live to Be 100 or More: The Ultimate Diet, Sex and Exercise Book" (Putnam). It's the perfect gift for someone who could use a lift right now.

(If you hate to write letters because you don't know what to say, send for Abby's complete booklet on letter-writing. Send $2 and a long, stamped (37 cents), self-addressed envelope to Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

Impaired vision can be treated

NEW YORK (AP) — The 10-year-old boy had trouble reading the blackboard at school even though he sat in the front row....

An attorney, 64, who practiced out of his home, faced involuntary retirement because he couldn't read legal small type and was totally dependent on his secretary....

The 34-year-old music teacher's blurred vision was giving her problems in reading sheet music....

Man, woman and child — young and old alike — all suffered from impaired vision, an affliction shared by as many as 11 million Americans, according to the National Institutes of Health.

But through the use of optical and other aids, the pupil, the lawyer and the music teacher all were able to improve their vision.

One of the unfortunate aspects of the situation, says an award-winning optometrist who specializes in low vision, is that "only about 10 percent of those who could possibly be helped are getting help."

Impaired vision can result from a wide variety of causes, Dr. Charles S. Hollander, director of New York's Sight Improvement Center, said in an interview. Among these are diabetes, glaucoma, retinal deterioration and corneal disorders.

"Some persons with congenital eye disease have reduced vision from birth," the doctor explains. "Others may experience visual impairment late in life due to injury or disease."

Hollander says relatively few of the partially sighted are aware that 80 percent can get improvement from the use of a variety of optical aids such as clip-on telescopes, magnifiers and such non-optical devices as visors, filters, lamps and reading slits.

"Such aids are not a cure, however," Hollander emphasizes. "Their main purpose is to supplement their vision or improve the remaining sight they have."

Frequently, psychology plays an important role.

"Let's assume your mother is living with you and has deteriorating sight," Hollander says. "You bring her in for an examination, and say 'If you can just get her to read or watch TV for 10 minutes a day, I'd be happy.'

"But the parent turns around and says, 'Why should I bother? They go shopping for me. They cook for me. I don't have to do anything....'

"This is where psychology enters the picture — the patient has to be motivated."

Hollander, who received a biological achievement award in college and the Bausch & Lomb Achievement Award for contact lenses, says he always has a relative or friend of the patient watching when he does an eye examination.

"The relative or the person the patient is living with usually is amazed to see what the patient is still capable of doing," the doctor says. "The patient may be groping around the house, and asking assistance going from the bathroom to the bedroom, yet in the examination can read all the headlines on a newspaper."

Blindness is defined as a total lack of vision, but 85 percent of those classified as legally blind actually have some usable sight, Hollander points out.

"Most low-vision persons can improve and better utilize their sight with help," he says.

As a public service, Hollander has prepared a pamphlet, "Patient's Guide to Vision Rehabilitation for the Partially Sighted," which he offers at no cost.

One of the most unusual devices described in the pamphlet is the reverse telescope. By reversing a telescope, the patient perceives a miniaturized world, allowing more object space to be focused on the usable part of the eye, he explains. Its major use is for people who have lost side vision.

Other patients with a need to see distant objects may be fitted for regular clip-on telescopes which slip over the rim of their glasses.

Yet still another system uses regular prescription lenses in a pair of glasses, but a miniature telescope is mounted slightly above center.

School eye tests miss problems

Copley News Service

Don't wait for a school vision screening to tell you if your child has a vision problem.

All too often, warns the American Optometric Association, school vision screenings rely on the familiar eye chart — which is about as adequate for examining vision today as a horse-drawn buggy is for interstate travel.

Moreover, no school vision screening will spot preschool-age children with vision problems that may later cause learning difficulties.

The trouble with the eye chart, says the association, is that it only tests one vision skill — the ability to see sharply and clearly at a distance. As a result, a child can "pass" the eye chart, yet still not be able to see clearly to read or do other close work. Or the child might have an eye disease that won't be detected, or a perception problem that makes it difficult for the brain to interpret what the eyes see.

Many children's learning problems are really caused by just this sort of visual-perceptual difficulty, says optometrist John Pierce, a professor at the University of Alabama School of Optometry.

Lose inches and pounds at Pat Walker's

Physical fitness, self confidence and good self image are important to women today. All these can be achieved through determination and help received at Pat Walker Figure Salon located at the Oakridge Square.

Pat Walker's is a unique weight reduction method. The exercising unit, designed to improve circulation and "melt fat" from the body, has been in use 32 years. Along with the unit, there are three eating programs - the quick loss (where you can lose from three to 10 pounds a week), the intermediate program (losing two to four pounds a week) and the "regular" eating program, which will help you lose one to three pounds a week.

The loss of inches is stressed rather than weight loss. Patrons lose one to three inches for every pound lost.

The eating program allows you to make a food choice from a wide number of meats and vegetables, and even allows bread and dessert periodically.

The key to weight and inch loss, however, is the exercise unit which has five different positions, each undulating the back and under part of the body.

*Position 1 begins to relax you and starts to work on circulation in the upper back area. It also works on the upper arm and helps correct the posture.

*Position 2 continues the motion of the first position, but begins the same undulating procedure to work on waist and abdominal area, and also is great for hips and thighs.

*The third position begins working on the hips, abdomen and thighs.

*Position 4 is designed for the legs and thighs, a difficult area to lose inches for most women. This part of the unit is great for toning and firming legs.

The first four positions gradually increase circulation, promoting body heat which melts fat.

The final position, number 5, helps cleanse the melted fat out of the body and is essential for toning and firming.

The staff spends time working with clients in various methods of toning facial muscles and eliminating double chin problems. A combination of diet, exercise and instruction by the staff makes Pat Walker's a unique weight-loss program.

Two basic misconceptions exist in the minds of some regarding Pat Walker's program. One, that it takes too long; and two, that it is too costly.

Both are really untrue. When you consider the results obtained, the ease with which you cna participate, the convenience of not having to change clothing and the pleasant surroundings in which you spend your time, the cost is not excessive at $5 for each half-hour treatment.

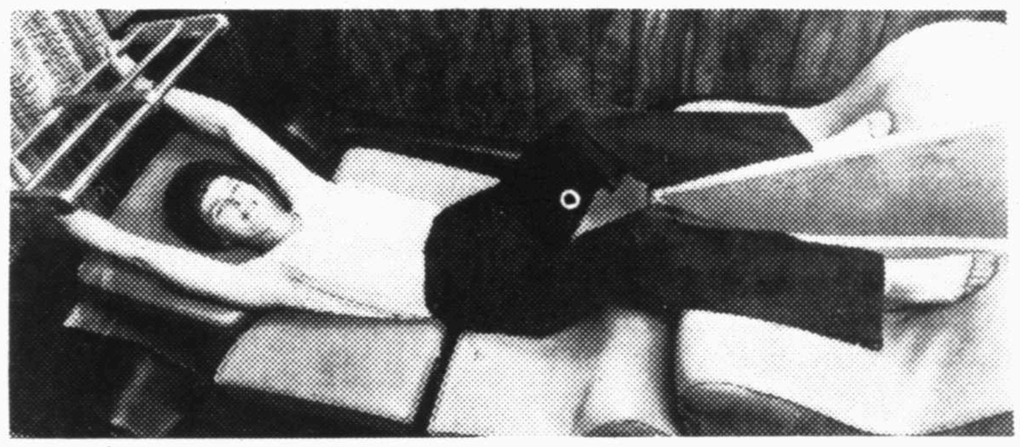

Nationwide, Pat Walker Salons have been working to make their programs cost effective by offering more for your money, and are working to involve their clients in more than the use of an exercise unit. The programs are more flexible and there is one that will suit each individual need.

Some patrons have received added medical benefits from the unit which as helped reduce high blood pressure, reduced pain from arthritis and bursitis and has helped promote healing.

The staff of Pat Walker's Salon is ready to show you their unique program. Why not stop in for a complimentary treatment, explination of the program and free figure analysis? You are the one who will benefit by obtaining better self image and self-concept.

If you are interested in tanning, without the discomfort and skin problems associated with too much sun, Pat Walker's has tanning facilities. They employ the "A-Ray" which does not burn or have the adverse side effects some tanning units have.

Pat Walker Salon is located at the Oakridge Square in Midland. Call them at 683-6278 and let them know you want to come in for a treatment and figure analysis.

The unique exercise unit at Pat Walker Figure Salon helps to improve circulation and weight loss for patrons. Pat Walker's is located at he Oakridge Square in Midland.

James Coco's trip to the mat has wrenching consequences

James Coco

NEW YORK (AP) — Actor James Coco was forced out of the Broadway revival of "You Can't Take It With You" by an all-too-realistic wrestling scene.

Coco, 53, injured his leg during a wrestling scene in a performance at the Plymouth Theater on Saturday night. Spokesman Keith Sherman said the leg was not broken but that the injury was extremely painful.

Page Johnson, Coco's understudy, performed Sunday's matinee. Ellis Rabb, director of the show, takes over the role tonight for a three-week engagement, during which a permanent replacement will be sought.

Others starring in the show are Jason Robards, Elizabeth Wilson and Colleen Dewhurst.

"You Can't Take It With You," by the late George S. Kaufman and Moss Hart, won the Pulitzer Prize for drama in 1937.

Yoko Ono

NEW YORK (AP) — Yoko Ono, the widow of John Lennon, says she has "come to terms with the fact that it's all right to be alone."

"The precious part of my day is when I'm alone," Ms. Ono wrote in Monday's New York Post. "When everybody goes home and (son) Sean's asleep and I'm just watching the night lights out of my window or something.

"I like silence, you see. I've finally come to terms with the fact that it's all right to be alone."

Since the former Beatle was slain in 1980, Ms. Ono said she is "a busy woman," spending long hours on the work she began with her late husband.

Ms. Ono, 50, also wrote that after Lennon's death she had qualms about hiring bodyguards, but decided to do so for her son's sake.

"When I first had to hire bodyguards, all sorts of things went on in my mind. We were 'peaceniks' and so we believed in people. But I just think that it's practical for me now. I have to think of Sean.

"I have this constant guilt that I've never been a good mother-type," Miss Ono also wrote, "but I respect Sean and the surprising thing is that the respect is returned. I still can't get over the fact that to be a good mother, it is all right to be myself."

Pia Zadora

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Entertainer Pia Zadora says there's "no question" that her husband's millions have helped her career, but she says the bucks only helped speed her talent along.

"All the money in the world can't keep you on top," she said in an interview published Monday.

The 26-year-old Golden Globe winner studied at the American Academy of Dramatic Arts and at Julliard and acted on Broadway before she met her multimillionaire husband, Meshulam Riklis, whose Par-Par Productions financed her first three films, including "Butterfly."

Riklis' Rapid-American corporation owns Schenley, which owns Dubonnet — the company whose commercials she has been doing for several years — and he also owns the Riveria Hotel in Las Vegas where she performs a nightclub act.

"There's no question that his support and money have enabled my career to move along faster than it might have without him," she said.

Her single, "Clapping Song," has been a hit overseas.

"They love me in Europe. I'm bigger there than I am here. And they love the fact that I have a rich husband," she said.

NEIL SOLOMON, M.D.

Parent's depression can affect children

Dear Dr. Solomon: My sister-in-law (my brother's wife) has been very depressed since she gave birth to her third child several months ago. She is not going for treatment and my brother says he is waiting for her to snap out of it. But I'm worried about the children. It seems to me that her mood must be having some effect on them. Would you recommend that she see a psychiatrist? — Ms. E.D.M., Portland, Ore.

Solomon

Dear Ms. M.: In general — and I can only speak in general terms — a person who has been very depressed for several months would appear to be in need of assistance. If she is not amenable to a psychiatric referral, possibly she could be encouraged to speak with her minister.

As for your concern about the effect of her depression on her children, there is some validity to what you say. The results of a study conducted at Yale University in New Haven indicate that children of depressed parents are more likely to suffer from depression themselves than are children of parents who are not depressed. Moreover, the risk of depression in the children is increased when both parents are depressed. The children studied ranged in age from 6 to 18.

Dear Dr. Solomon: It makes sense to me that it is important to see a doctor regularly because the earlier a disease is found, the earlier treatment can be started. And it makes sense to me that the earlier treatment is started, the better the chances that a person will be cured. But then I read that there are some diseases, like some cancers, that can't be found until it's too late to do anything about them. Do doctors have any answer for this? — Bill, Miami

Dear Bill: A number of cancerous tumors can be detected by such methods as X-ray or biopsy examinations. These tumors, if found and treated early, obviously have a better chance of being cured. That is why a procedure such as breast self-examination can be so valuable.

As you indicated, however, some cancers remain hidden until treatment and cure are virtually impossible. For these diseases, scientists are attempting to identify chemical traces in the body that will reveal the presence of the disease before the tumor itself becomes visible. If they are successful, tests can be developed that will show the presence of a malignancy before the patient or the physician is even aware of it.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I remember that when I was a kid and we wanted to play ball, we'd get a bat and a ball that usually was covered with tape so that it wouldn't come apart and we'd go to an empty lot and we'd have a game. Today there are leagues and uniforms and rules, but I don't know if the kids are having as much fun as we did. And very often I think they don't enjoy the game at all. Is all this organization good for a bunch of children? — George, Port Arthur, Texas

Dear George: The organization of children's athletic activities into leagues, such as Little League baseball, is not inherently bad; however, there is the possibility for abuse. The attitude of the adults who take an active part in the operation of these leagues probably varies from one community to another.

From a medical standpoint, I would be concerned that an increased emphasis on winning may lead to both physical and emotional problems. Dr. Philip D. Alburger, of the Temple University School of Medicine in Philadelphia, says that the elbow problems and pitching stress fractures that we occasionally hear about are probably attributable to the introduction of adult supervision into children's baseball. The intensity of the game also results in additional emotional stress.

Playing ball should be fun; yet children may be subjected to training and playing schedules for which they are neither physically nor emotionally prepared. This is something that concerns me both as a physician and as a parent.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I would like to know if sleep can be compared to sex in some ways. What I mean is that there is often a question about whether a sexual problem is physical or mental. What about a sleep problem? Is it all in the mind? — Mr. D.G., Niagara Falls, N.Y.

Dear Mr. G.: According to Dr. Peter Hauri, director of the Dartmouth-Hitchcock Sleep Disorder Center at Dartmouth College, Hanover, N.H., about one-third of sleeping problems are psychological in nature, and about one-half may be the result of chronic drug use, exaggerated efforts to fall asleep, or the bedroom environment. The remaining cases of insomnia appear to have some physical basis.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Is inflammatory bowel disease inherited? It often seems to affect more than one person in the same family. — Douglas, Toledo, Ohio

Dear Douglas: Inflammatory bowel disease, which includes Crohn's disease and ulcerative colitis, does tend to run in families; however, a clear-cut pattern of inheritance has not been established.

If you would like more information on inflammatory bowel disease, contact the National Foundation for Ileitis and Colitis, 295 Madison Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10017.

(If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column).
